A: Yes. Any change in your education training time, dependents or address should be reported to the VA immediately.

Q: Is there a time limit for applying for VA compensation?

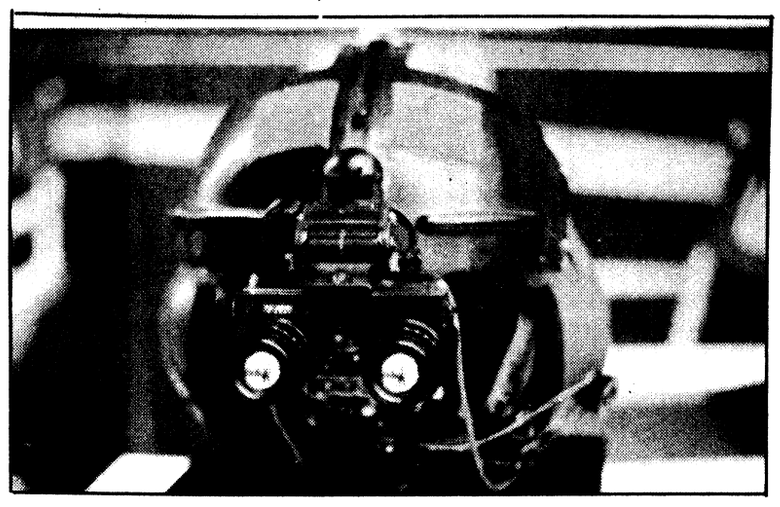
A: There is no time limit; however, the date of application is a factor in establishing the effective date of payment. It may also be more difficult to establish entitlement if a claim is filed long after the disability was incurred.

Conference features latest in weaponry

USAIC Public Affairs Office

USAIC conducted a conference between industry and the military, Oct. 5-7. The meeting was sponsored by the American Defense Preparedness Association (ADPA).

The ADPA ia a nonprofit organization consisting of senior corporate executives and former DOD and DA officials who donate their time to assist the military by suggesting new ideas for future research, development and acquisition efforts to enhance combat capability.



The three-day conference consisted of briefings, panel discussions and exhibits of new military weapons, technology and equipment.

Approxamatly 300 ADPA, DOD and DA representatives, along with several local VIPs and dignitaries, attended.

The conference concluded with a banquet at the Columbus Ironworks Convention and Trade Center.

A wide array of rifles and handguns attract a soldier's attention.

Night vision goggles were one item on display.

Army comes down hard on recruiters for violations

Army News Service

Twenty-nine recruiters from the Chicago Recruiting Battalion have been suspended for alleged recruiting violations, the Army announced from its Recruiting Command headquarters Sept. 22.

"The Chicago Battalion uncovered evidence that 28 Roseland/Englewood Community High School diploma holders did not meet Army enlistment-standards in May 1987," said Lt. Col. John Cullen, the public affairs officer for the Army's Advertising and Sales Directorate at its Recruiting Command headquarters at Fort Sheridan, Ill." All together the Recruiting Command investigated the records of 171 Army recruits who had indicated on enlistment applications that they had graduated from the school."

Cullen said that recruiter impropriety is rare. "We average one substantiated impropriety for every 10,000 people we interview or every 800 people we enlist. Still, we take each allegation very seriously. In fiscal year 1986, 131 recruiters were relieved for improprieties and 108 have been relieved so far for cases surfaced this fiscal year. That's less than 2 percent from a force of 9,600 recruiters. In other-words, the vast majority of our soldiers recruit the way we want them to recruit, by doing it honestly.

To speed up the investigation, a team headed by Col. Robert McKeen, a Deputy Brigade Commander in Atlanta, was charged with checking the records of every Army recruit who enlisted using a Roseland diploma or certificate.

"McKeen and his investigators took statements from soldiers all over the world," Cullen said. "He found that 62 Chicago recruiters appear to have improperly assisted applicants in obtaining Roseland education certificates which did not meet Army enlistment standards."

"Over 9,000 citizens of the Chicago area took advantage of the opportunities the Army has to offer during the period in question," Cullen said. "Recruiters are told from their first day in recruiting that if they are ever forced to choose between integrity and making their recruiting goals, integrity comes first. We have deterrence systems in place to identify cheaters and we pursue every allegation of dishonesty to a conclusion."

The allegations in McKeen's investigation will be referred to each person named as violating the rules to allow them to submit rebuttals. After rebuttal submissions and recommendations on disposition by the battalion and brigade commanders, decisions will be made on each individual case by the headquarters, Army Recruiting Command.

Recruiters or supervisors found to have committed improprieties or misconduct could receive adverse administrative action ranging from a letter of reprimand to relief-for-cause and removal from recruiting. Cullen said that it is very difficult to get promoted after being relieved-for-cause.

MARSHAL'S VIEWPOINT

Provost Marshal's Office

October has been designated as Crime Prevention month. Crime and fear of crime threaten a community's social fabric — people become afraid to use streets and parks, suspicion erupts between young and old and shops gradually leave. Crime, in turn, feeds on the social isolation it creates.

You and your neighbors can prevent or break this vicious cycle, and, in the process, build your community into a safe, friendly and caring place to live.

Some things you can do where you live are:

Get to know your neighbors. Areas of low crime are areas where neighbors interact frequently.

Keep an eye on your neighbor's children and ask them to keep an eye on yours.

Join or start a Neighborhood Watch, Block Watch or Apartment Watch.

When your neighbor is on vacation or late getting home, arrange to pick up their mail and the newspaper.

Keep each other alert and informed; i.e., a neighbor's garage door left open, keys left in the car, someone snooping around homes for no apparent reason. Remind your neighbor about the open garage door or keys left in the car, and call the MPs about the snooper.

Make sure neighborhood teens have something constructive to do and some place to go.

Make your neighborhood as "crimeproof" as possible. Organize a campaign to clear out debris and brush from parks and wooded areas, and clean up other things that attract crime, like litter, broken lights and windows.

To report a crime, call the Military Police Desk Sergeant at 545-5223/5224.

Remember, October is Crime Prevention month and you can help TAKE A BITE OUT OF CRIME.

Knowing rules helps CHAMPUS work for you

CHAMPUS

Let's say Jane Jones (a military spouse) received medical treatment from a civilian health care provider, then filed a claim with CHAMPUS for sharing the cost of the medical bills.

Let's also say that Jane happens to have a private health insurance policy — a Blue Cross policy or the like — through her civilian job.

Does Jane know that, under CHAMPUS rules, she must file a claim with her other health plan first (unles it's a CHAMPUS supplement or Medicaid), before filing the CHAMPUS claim?

Furthermore, does Jane realize that she must tell CHAMPUS about her other health insurance by filling in the proper block on the CHAMPUS claim form? And that she must also send to CHAMPUS a copy of the private health plan's explanation of what it paid for the medical care?

Too many CHAMPUS-eligible people don't understand the rules that apply when thay have a civilian health policy in addition to CHAMPUS health benefits. And, knowing the rules can be a money-saver. Coordination of the payment of health benefits so that there's no duplication between CHAMPUS and private health insurance saved taxpayers more than $270 million in unnecessary health care costs in fiscal year 1986.

Here's what to do if you have both CHAMPUS eligibility and health care coverage through an employer, an association or a private insuror:

1. After getting the medical treatment you need, file a claim with your other insurance before filing a CHAMPUS claim (exception: if your other plan is specifically designated as CHAMPUS supplemental policy, you may file with CHAMPUS first).

2. When your other insurance has paid everything it's going to pay, go ahead and file the CHAMPUS claim (or, your civilian doctor or hospital may do it for you).

3. When filling out the CHAMPUS claim form 500, be careful to complete Block 14.

4. After completing the CHAMPUS claim form, attach a copy of the itemized billing for the care and a copy of the other health plan's statement of how much it paid.

NOTE: Former military spouses who are eligible for CHAMPUS benefits are in a slightly different situation. They are NOT eligible for CHAMPUS if they have health care coverage through a civilian employer. If their other health insurance is an individual policy and is not employer-sponsored, eligible former military spouses may still receive CHAMPUS benefits.

Parents wear out, too!

Unresolved teenage conflicts cause extreme emotional wear and tear, destroying the adolescent as well as the family.

Our adolescent treatment program can help families rebuild torn relationships.

Tent city

In 1920, Camp Benning on Macon Road resembled a western outpost. When the first troops arrived 69 years ago to set up a training post, they were lodged at a temporary site three miles east of Columbus on Macon Road. Later the Department of theArmy purchased the 115,000 acre plantation of Arthur Bussey, where Fort Benning is located today.

Post office announces Christmas mailing dates

Army News Service

Washington — Soldiers and family members with plans to mail Christmas cards and packages need to begin making plans to do so now.

To assure timely holiday arrival to overseas destinations, all mail should be posted in the continental United States only on or before these dates.

Customers outside the continental United States need to check with their local postal officials to find out the exact mailing dates for these areas to insure timely delivery to the United States. Areas outside the United States are Alaska, Hawaii, Puerto Rico, trust territories and the Virgin Islands.

Soldiers living outside the United States need to mail holiday cards and gifts to the United States by the dates listed here.

Paul Corpening from the 1st Battalion, 58th Infantry Eagle Strike team, looks for a receiver during flag football action.

Players scramble in flag football action

By George Mingee
197th Infantry Brigade Correspondent

Pass! Pass! Pass! screamed the defensive line of Company A, 1st Battalion, 58th Infantry, as the "Alpha Gators" prepared to defend against a touchdown pass by the "Eagle Strike" of Company E, 1-58th Infantry, in 197th Infantry Brigade intramural flag football league play.

The "Eagle Strike" beat the Gators 14-0, bringing their win-loss record to 5-1 in league play.

"Run and Gun is Eagle Strike's rule of play," commented one of the players.

They proved this on their first scoring drive as quartback Paul Corpenins used the "quarterback option" to keep the ball and set up a critical goal line first down.

Wide receiver Ethan Young caught the touchdown pass, giving Eagle Strike a 6-0 lead. Then, a successful two-point conversion raised the lead to 8-0.

"I feel like a champ and I know we're going to win," said Young, who first boosted his team's morale with his touchdown catch.

The Gators made several first downs during the game, but they just couldn't keep the ball moving for a touchdown.

Eagle Strike's final touchdown came late in the game, clinching the game with a final score of 14-0.

Hunters now can call to check in, out

The call-in/call-out program replaces the physical sign-in/sign-out system of last year.

This program will start Oct. 24 and end Jan. 14, concurrent with the deer firearms season.

The telephone lines will be open 0400-2000, seven days a week.

All hunters hunting in Fort Benning between Oct. 24 and Jan. 14 must register and use this system.

To use the call-in/call-out system:

Obtain the numbered access pass when purchasing state and post hunting licenses/permits.

Hunters may call in as early as 1200 the day before they hunt. Hunters can also call in the day of hunting during operating hours.

The hunter calls Hunter Control at 682-1589.

When the call is answered, the hunter gives the access pass number and hunting area requested. Hunters should have a second choice of hunting areas in case the first choice area is full.

The telephone operator will verify the hunter's request and say: "You are signed in to area ————(requested) for ————(date); or "I'm sorry, that area is not available. Do you have a second choice?"

Once verified by the operator, the hunter may proceed directly to the hunting area. All hunters must have one numbered access pass on the dash of the vehicle and the second access pass on your person along with the other required hunting documents.

In cases where hunters carpool to a hunting area, each hunter must display his/her numbered access pass on the dash of the vehicle and carry the second access pass with the hunting documents.

To sign out of a hunting area OR change hunting areas, simply call Hunter Control at the number listed above. In addition, hunters may use the range safety phones and call Hunter Control at 545-7680.

If you are changing areas, give this information to the operator after you have given your access pass number (i.e., "I am signing out of area ———— and would like to sign on to area ———— .") Once verified, the hunter may proceed directly to the second hunting area.

If you are signing out for the day and once the operator has verified your request, you may proceed directly home.

Hunters are required by USAIC Regulation 210-2 to check range clearance maps before hunting. Be sure you do this, as the telephone operators will NOT furnish information on open hunting areas

The primary telephone number, 682-1589, is a four-line rotary system. This is the telephone number to call. The military number, 545-7680, is only one single line for use from range safety phones.

These telephone numbers will be posted on range clearance maps, in addition to this information flyer.

Pre-registration will be conducted Oct. 19 through 22 from 8 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. During the first weekend of the hunting season, registration will be conducted Oct. 23 from 8 a.m. to 8 p.m. and Oct. 24 from 4 a.m. to 8 p.m.

One change from last year is that mileage restrictions have been removed on guest hunting.

Think safety when in the woods

Installation Safety Office

Hunting season is upon us again. Each hunter should reacquaint himself with the basic rules of firearm and hunting safety. First, you should get yourself in good physical shape before you tramp off into the woods.

A few simple exercises now will save a lot of tired, aching muscles later.

Next, make sure the area you are going hunting in is approved for hunting. Check with Range Control or Provost Marshal to make sure that you're not going to stumble into an impact area.

Before you get into the field, clean your rifle or shotgun. Everything on the weapon should be clean and in a proper state or repair to assure your weapon does not malfunction.

When you're finally out in the field, keep certain basic rules in mind. These rules are often heard and more seasonal hunters know them by heart, but they still bear repeating.

- Treat every gun with the respect due a loaded gun.
- Watch that muzzle! Be able to control the direction of the muzzle even if you should stumble.
- Be sure the barrel and action are clear of obstruction and that you have only ammunition of the proper size for the gun you are carrying.
- Be sure of your target before you pull the trigger; know identifying features of the game you hunt.
- Unload guns when not in use. Take down or have actions open; guns should be carried in cases to the hunting area.
- Never point a gun at anything you do not want to shoot; avoid all horseplay with a firearm.
- Never climb a fence or tree or jump a ditch with a loaded gun; never pull a gun toward you by the muzzle.
- Never shoot a bullet at a flat, hard surface or water; during target practice be sure your backstop is adequate.
- Store guns and ammunition separately beyond the reach of children and careless adults.
- Avoid alcoholic beverages before and during hunting.

SPORTS SHORTS

'Boys of Autumn' face off Sunday

The "Boys of Autumn," will take to Gowdy Field Oct. 18 at 2 p.m. with nothing more at stake than bragging rights and the chance to prove which is better, Ben Gay or Absorbine Junior.

Colonels, those with eagles on their shoulders, and sergeant majors, the ones with all the stripes, will shake the dust off long-forgotten gloves, try to fit into an pairs of jeans and hopefully coax long-forgotten muscles in to moving in the right direction at the right time.

Chances are the medics will get more playing time than the post's top officers and noncoms. Martin Army Hospital will probably look like a geriatrics ward after the game.

That would be alright, but the winners of SMAJs vs SMAJs and Cols vs Cols next have to take on one another."We are declaring war," one Sergeant Major said, "and we figure it will probably take only two good practices to beat those guys."

Rumor has it that this won't be the last of the challenges between these gallant, yet over the hill warriors. Word has it that the guys with all those stripes would like to challenge those gallant eagles to a friendly game of football.

Regardless of the outcome of the softball game or if the football match-up ever takes place there will be one big winner, it'll be the combined federal campaign. The concession stand earnings will be donated to CFC.

Firing matches set for November

The annual USAIC Marksmanship matches are scheduled for Nov. 16-20, with a mandatory clinic Nov. 9 and 10.

The matches and clinic will take place at Easley, McAndrews and Phillips ranges with match headquarters located at Bldg. 2601. They will consist of three categories: combat rifle (M16A1/M16A2), combat pistol (9mm/45 cal) and the light machinegun (LMG, M60) with both individual and team competition.

All officers in the grade of 0-3 or below and all enlisted in the grade of E-8 or below and assigned to a Fort Benning unit the day the competition starts are eligible to enter both team and individual competition.

Individuals in grades of 0-4 and above and E-9s are only eligible to fire in individual competition. With this exception, individuals that want to fire individually must also be a member of a team if his/her unit is sponsoring one.

Eligible soldiers should contact their team representative or first sergeants if they are interested in participating and fill out FORSCOM/TRADOC Form 235-6-R, (Individual Registration and entry card), available at their unit or Bldg. 4, Room 624. Units must have the entry forms filled out correctly and returned to SFC Stewart Olson, Bldg. 4, Room 624, by the close of business Nov. 2, or the individual or team will not be able to participate.

Additional information may be found in the match bulletin, which will be available Nov. 15 from team representatives, or contact SFC Olson at 545-4252/2917.

YA sports offer Saturday fun

YA soccer will be played each Saturday begining at 9 a.m. on Gordon field. Football will also be played on Saturdays at 9 a.m. on Blue Field. Contact Ray Pierce at 545-3913 for more information.

Uchee area suspends hunting license sales

State licenses and post permits will no longer be sold at the Uchee Creek Recreation Area on weekends and holidays. This change is due to construction of the new bait shop. State licenses and post permits will be available fromthe Outdoor Recreation Administration Office, Monday-Friday, 8 a.m. to 4:30 p.m.

Signup underway for women's leagues

Women's basketball sign-up began Thursday at Doughboy Stadium. Teams will be made up by the Sports Office.

Coaches or coaching assistants are also needed.

The league is open to all active duty, retired military and DA Civilians.

For more information contact SSgt. Dimola or Mr. Dunham at 545-5777/2332.

CORRECTION

The headline on the Redleg Open Golf tournament on page B-6 of the Oct. 9 edition of The Bayonet, incorrectly refered to the 10th Field Artillery as the 19th Field Artillery. The Bayonet regrets the error.

"I snapped up $300 by spending $5."

Spending a little money in Ledger-Enquirer Classified to sell something can mean big money for you. For example, you can run a 3-line ad for 5 days for just $5 and sell items up to $300 in some classifications. Or, you can run a 3-line ad for 3 days for just $10.62 on big-ticket items. Either way, when you have something to sell, spending a little can help you snap up a lot!

Open house offers info, entertainment for retirees

USAIC Public Affairs Office

About 1,500 people are expected to visit Fort Benning this weekend, to attend the seventh annual Retiree Open House.

Although the open house officially begins this morning, retirees teed off yesterday for an golf tournament at the Follow Me Golf Course.

Retirees also toured the National Infantry Museum and the Fort Mitchell National Cemetery during the day.

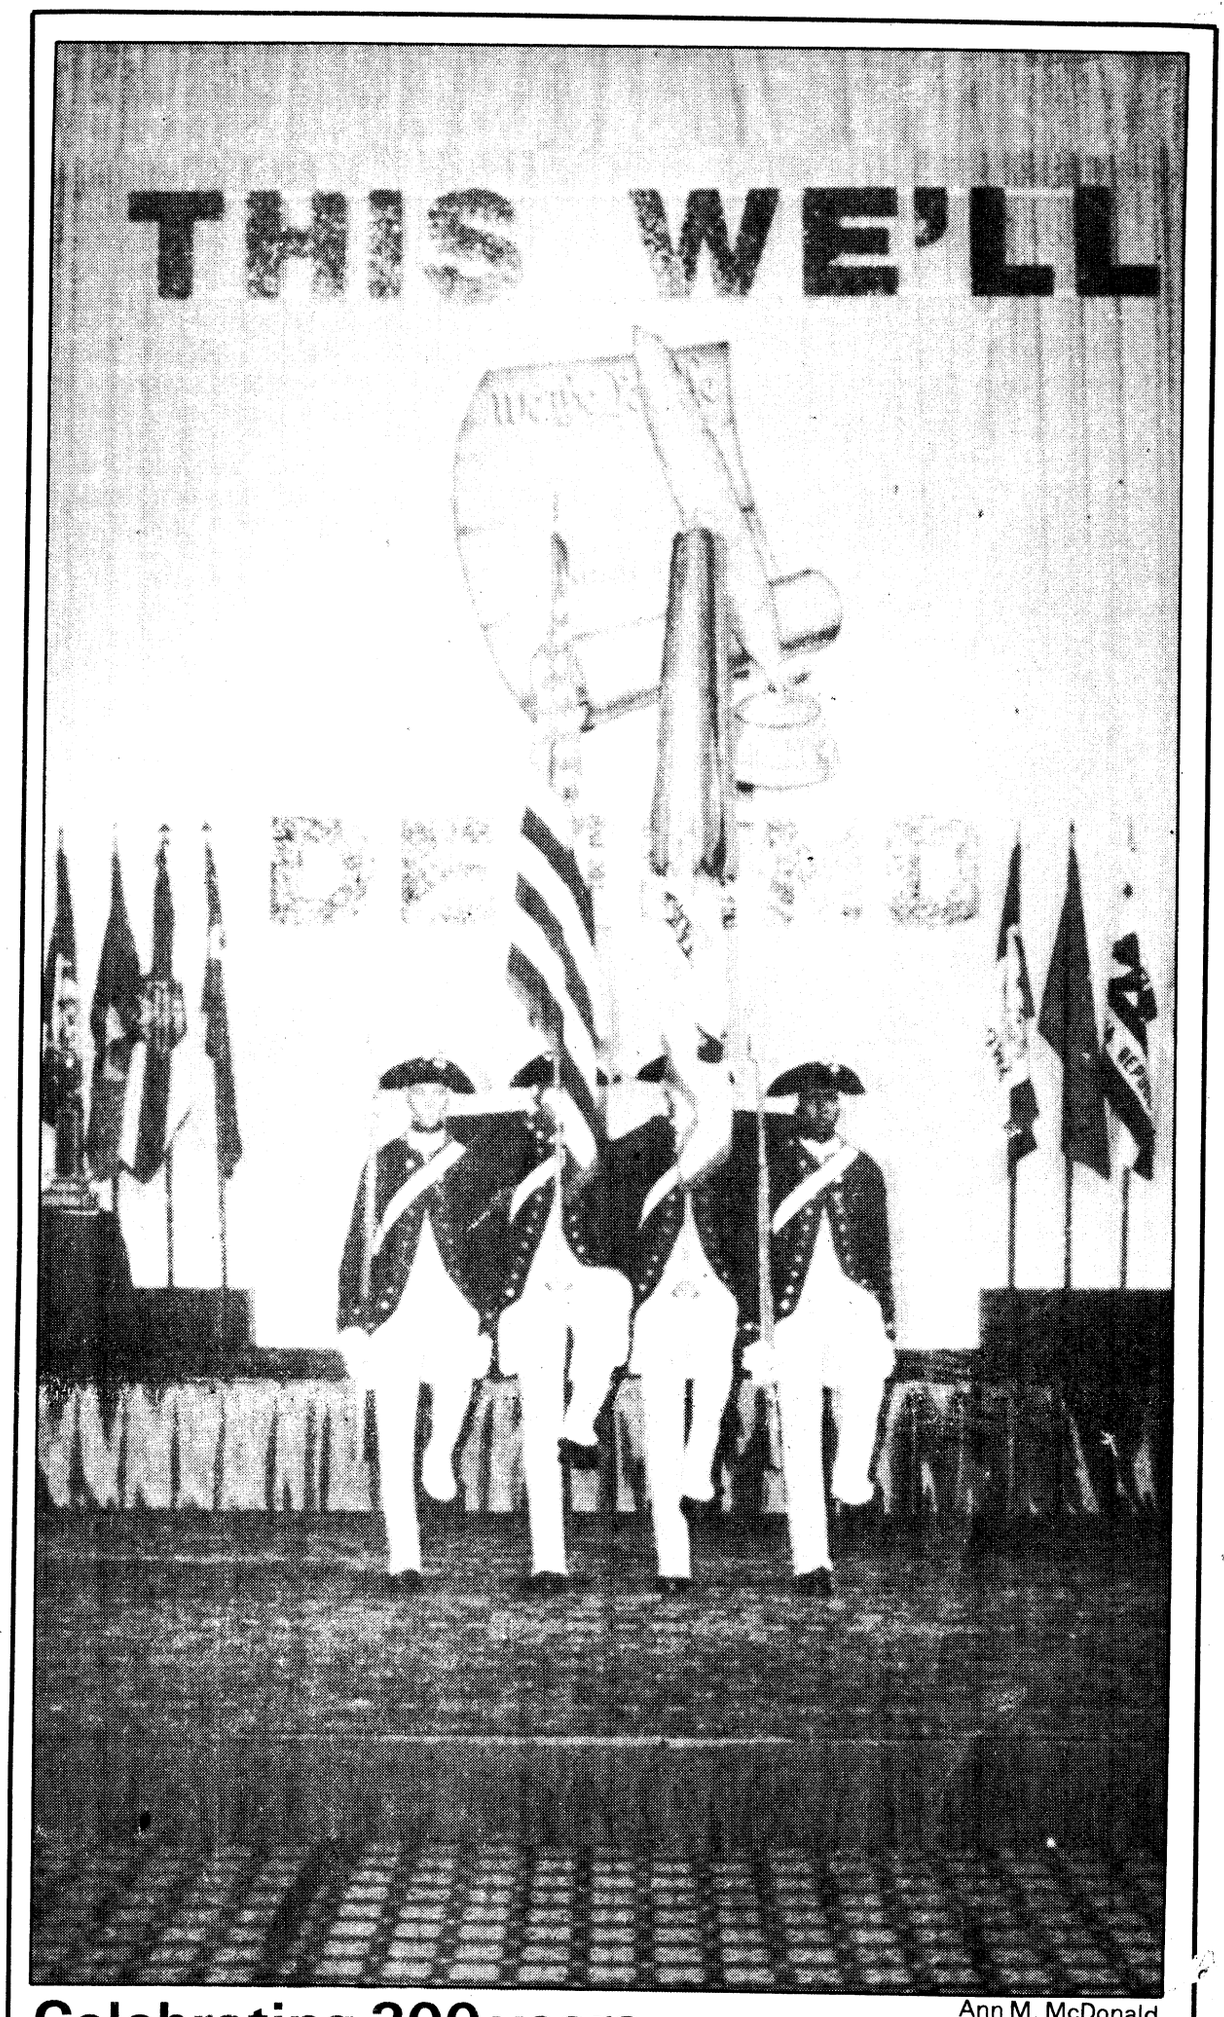
This morning, retirees are invited to attend an Infantry One Station Unit Training graduation on Wetherby Field at 9 a.m.

They will then be able to either tour the Reception Battalion, or one of the new "starship" battalion-size barracks.

Following the tours, retirees will have lunch with OSUT soldiers.

A Rangers-In-Action demonstration will entertain retirees at Victory Pondfrom 1:30 to 2:30 p.m. The group will then head to Red Cloud Range for a Bradley Fighting Vehicle demonstration at 3 p.m.

A social hour at the main post NCO Club begins at 6 p.m., with a cash bar, followed by a buffet dinner and dancing beginning at 7 p.m.



Saturday's activities will begin with breakfast at the Follow Me Dining Facility at 6:30 a.m. Following breakfast, retirees will be able to brouse through the booths at the County Fair in Infantry Hall, beginning at 7:30 a.m.

At 9:30, the group will move to Marshall Auditorium, where they will listen to several speakers on retiree benefits, and attend the Volunteer of the Year award presentation ceremony.

At noon, visitors will eat a lunch of field rations on Gardner Field.

The day will end at the Golden Park in Columbus, where retirees will attend the opening ceremony of the Moving Wall at 2 p.m.

Throughout the open house, retirees will have an opportunity to transact personal business related to their rights, benefits, privileges and entitlements.

Army and Air Force swap officers

Unique program encourages services to work together as a cohesive team

Army News Service

WASHINGTON — With their continuing emphasis on maintaining effective and efficient operations in the joint environment, the chiefs of staff of the Army and Air Force have embarked on the latest increment of the Army-Air Force Staff Officer Exchange Program — this being the exchange of several field-grade logistics officers.

Under the program, which began in 1984 with the exchange of 14 operations staff officers, the two services' logistics deputies (Army Lt. Gen. Jimmy D. Ross and Air Force Lt. Gen. Charles C. McDonald) have selected the following persons to serve on each other's staff for a one-year period beginning this fall: from the Army, Maj. Peter L. Mentis, a supply officer, will exchange with Air Force Maj. Richard M. Meinhart; while Army logistics planner Maj. Robert D. Besancon will exchange with his Air Force counterpart, Maj. Douglas P. Biard.

According to the logistics program's Army coordinator, Lt. Col. Needham N. Kelly Jr., "the exchange officers become full members of their host staffs and work the same actions as their host-service counterparts. Each receives a performance rating from his host organization's supervisory chain, after which he returns to his parent organization to share experiences."

For his part, Ross noted that, as was the case from the beginning, the program is proving to be an indispensable tool for strengthening the Army-Air Force team.

"We live in an age of joint operations and joint reliance," he said, "and this program helps us build — and retain — an atmosphere of mutual trust and confidence."

Army crime lab becomes a separate activity

Army News Service

WASHINGTON — The U.S. Army criminal investigation command's crime laboratory system celebrated its reorganization as a separate Army activity with an activation ceremony Oct. 1 at Fort Gillem, Ga.

Designated the USACIL, the Gillem facility will function as the primary forensic laboratory serving the Army and other federal law enforcement agencies worldwide and will directly support two subordinate laboratories, which are located in Europe and Hawaii.

Although it belongs to the U.S. Army Criminal Investigation Command in Falls Church, Va., the new lab will have unified command channels.

Col. Daniel Jackson Jr. commands the new lab. USACIDC commander, Maj. Gen. Eugene R. Cromartie, who had directed the organization in February 1985, was present to unfurl the new organization's colors and to present them to Jackson.

Cromartie said, "Bringing the disparate parts together for the first time will enhance professionalism."

He also said he designated Jackson as commander because of the latter's track record and of the need to provide the necessary attention to detail for the lab's success.

Lt. Col. William Pennington, commander of USACIL-CONUS; Maj.Leland Nakai, commander of USACIL-Europe; and Maj. Kenneth Silvernail, commander of USACIL-Pacific, also took part in the ceremony.

Chief Judge Robinson Everett from the U.S. Court of Military Appeals and his two colleagues, Judge Walter T. Cox III and Judge Eugene Sullivan, were honored guests for the event, which included a luncheon and tour of the laboratory.

Everett, guest speaker at the luncheon, pointed out the increasing role that forensics plays in detection of crime as evidenced by such events as the Atlanta mass-murder cases and the MacDonald family murders.

Forensic evidence was used to convict Wayne Williams of committing a series of murders in Atlanta and in convicting former Army Capt. Jeffery MacDonald of murdering his wife and children at Fort Bragg, N.C., in 1971.

Watson to assume command of 197th Inf. Bde.

197th Inf Brigade PAO

The 197th Infantry Brigade change of command begins at 10 a.m. Tuesday, at York Field in front of Infantry Hall.

Col. Harvey D. Watson will assume command of the "Forever Forward," Brigade from Col. William W. Hartzog.

Watson was formerly the president of the U.S. Army Infantry Board on post.

Hartzog will assume new duties as deputy commanding general of Fort Benning in December.

A visitor lays a wreath at the Moving Wall when it visited Atlanta. Ledger-Enquirer

Moving Wall comes to Columbus

Ledger-Enquirer

The Moving Wall, a half-size replica of the Vietnam Veterans' Memorial in Washington, D.C., will be in Columbus Oct. 24-30 at the city fairgrounds.

The Ledger-Enquirer and the Chattahoochee Valley Veterans' Council are joint sponsors of the Wall's appearance. The Wall was conceived, designed and built by John Devitt, a Vietnam veteran from California.

The Moving Wall will be available for public viewing beginning with opening ceremonies at 2 p.m. Saturday, Oct. 24, on an around-the-clock (24-hour) basis. Closing ceremonies will be held at 5 p.m on Friday, Oct. 30.

There is no admission charge for the Wall, and parking is free on the fairground lots.

The Moving Wall is a series of 70 panels, produced through a silkscreening process. The names of 58,132 servicemen and women killed or missing in action in Veitnam appear on the Wall exactly as they do on the memorial in Washington. The names are arranged in chronological order on the Wall, according to the date of the casualty. Within each day, names are alphabetized.

To assist visitors in finding particular names, volunteers will staff information tents outfitted with official directories. Visitors will recieve information sheets and shown how to locate individual panels and names. Volunteers will move about the Wall area to provide whatever additional assistance visitors might need.

There will be limited seating available for those wishing to remain near the Wall for a time.

Staffing the Wall will be handled by volunteers from the more than 30 area veteran organizations under the umbrella of the Chattahoochee Valley Veterans Council.

John Devitt, who will be traveling with the Wall, was aware that millions of Americans across the country would want to experience the memorial but would not be able to do so. The Moving Wall is John's answer to that situation. The idea for building it grew from discussions among veterans and nonveterans shortly after the memorial in Washington was dedicated. After two years of discussion and then construction, John took the Wall on the road in 1984.

Since January of this year, the Wall has been in 22 cities, coming to Columbus from Raleigh, North Carolina. It will go to New Orleans as its next stop, then on to other cities in the south, ending in Hollywood, Fla. in late December.

OPINION

Discipline vital to winning army

By Autrail Cobb
Post command sergeant major

The discipline of an army is the life blood of the organization. In the field or in garrison, an army with discipline is quickly recognized for what it is -- an efficient organization prepared to meet any crisis. Disciplined armies are winners, undisciplined ones are not.

At Fort Benning, the signs of disciplined soldiers and units abound. Whether it be wearing the uniform properly or conducting squad movement to contact with precision, soldiers here know that the fruits of discipline are most often reaped on fields far from where they are sown.

Discipline is a trait that must be worked at, day in and day out. But even after it's gained, it can still be lost if we don't stay on our toes.

Definitions of discipline may vary, but the common denominator is simple. It's doing what's right, at the right time — even when there's no one there to watch.

How easy it is to do what's right when the eyes of authority are there. But what about the times when no one will know whether you choose the right action, or take a shortcut. While it may save time, shortcuts teach the wrong lesson to those who follow.

In an army that instills initiative down to the lowest level, the shortcut approach to our profession is the quickest path to disaster.

Being disciplined and enstilling discipline requires asking ourselves a hard question: can and will our soldiers do whatever's right, without us being there?

If we can answer that question "yes," then our army will continue to find itself ready for any crisis.

Promise of democracy still unkept in Nicaragua

Association of the United States Army

To judge by the outpourings from recent editorials, the Sandinista's who control Nicaragua are hell-bent for democracy. Since the signing of a Central America peace accord, the leaders of Managua's Marxist dictatorship have made a number of symbolic gestures aimed more toward scuttling U.S. aid to the Nicaraguan resistence than they are to the restoration of liberty to the oppressed people of Nicaragua.

A Central America peace plan, signed in August, calls for cease-fires in the several guerrilla wars in the region, removal of rebel military bases in neighboring countries, amnesties, democratic reforms and guarantees of full political freedom in the signatory countries.

In effect, the plan restricts all U.S. military aid to the contras, while permitting the Soviets to continue to support the Sandinista military buildup over and above the $2 billion they have already poured into Nicaragua.

Before the ink could dry on this agreement, Nicaraguan President Daniel Ortega rushed to Havana to get advice from his communist mentor Fidel Castro. Upon his return, Ortega announced that he would be in Moscow on Nov. 7, the day the peace plan is to take effect. Within a week of his pledge of pluralism and democracy for Nicaragua, Ortega's police broke up a human rights demonstration, held to test that pledge, and promptly jailed the leader of Nicaragua's Human Rights Commisson and the head of the Nicaraguan Bar Association.

To placate anti-contra Congressmen in Washington, and thus block any further assistance to the freedom fighters, Ortega has attempted to create the illusion of freedom by revoking a law that was used to confiscate the property of Nicaraguans living abroad and he pardoned 16 citizens of other Central American countries who are imprisoned for rebel activity. He says he may permit the opposition newspaper La Presna to reopen and he may allow a Catholic radio station to return to the air.

Snide remarks send Snively scrambling

Clyde Snively
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Emma was out of town with the kids leaving me alone to batch it for a week.

Sarge must have felt sorry for me because he invited me over for supper. I was looking forward to the evening because Sarge's wife is an excellent cook, but also because he lives in government quarters and never having been in family quarters before, I was anxious to see what they were like.

Driving over, I passed by a set of quarters that had a sign out designating some spec 4's yard as "yard of the quarter."

"How nice," I thought, "what an ingenious way to get people to keep their quarters looking nice."

But I soon discovered this didn't necessarily work. Driving by broken down playground equipment, I noticed that many of the lawns apparently hadn't been mowed, others looked like they could stand some water and few had any decorative greenery.

Sarge's place looked like an oasis in the desert compared to the quarters surrounding him.

"People seem to be having some problems keeping up with their yards," I innocently commented when he met me at the door.

It was as though I'd let the lid off Mt. St. Helen's. In between epithets that can't be printed in this newspaper, I gathered that one person was at fault.

"You're blaming one person for turning this place into a desert?" I asked dumfounded.

"That's right," he bellowed. "Before that jerk down the street moved in, this was a nice area. People prided themselves in their yards, kept them watered and mowed. Most had flowers.

"Then that hot shot moved in. Began parking his motorcycle in the yard, never watered the lawn. Trash from his place blew into other's yards and people just gave up. First it was the next door neighbor, then the next one up from him. Before long the entire place had become Death Valley."

"But your yard is nice," I reminded him.

"Ayah, I guess I'm just more stubborn than the others," he said.

"I can't believe you can't do anything about it, like aren't there people like mayors who can make people live by the rules?"

"Pretty much powerless," he said. Most of them don't want the hassle. Unless the bum lives by them, they pretty much ignore them.

"Oh, once in a while, they'll see that a note to mow the lawn is posted, but they have other things to occupy their time."

After an excellent meal, Sarge and Mrs. Sarge and I were sitting aroung, chewing the fat, when a couple from next door dropped in.

"Been having some great weather, haven't we," Sarge greeted them.

"Great if you're a polar bear," Mrs. Neighbor said. "I can't believe they haven't turned the heat on yet."

"Seems to me you were the one who got someone to rig your air conditoner to get it turned on early and now you're complaining about the cold." Sarge tried joking.

But it didn't take.

"Damn straight," Mrs. N. spat between her teeth. "Army's always bragging about how it takes care of soldiers, but we can't even live comfortably.

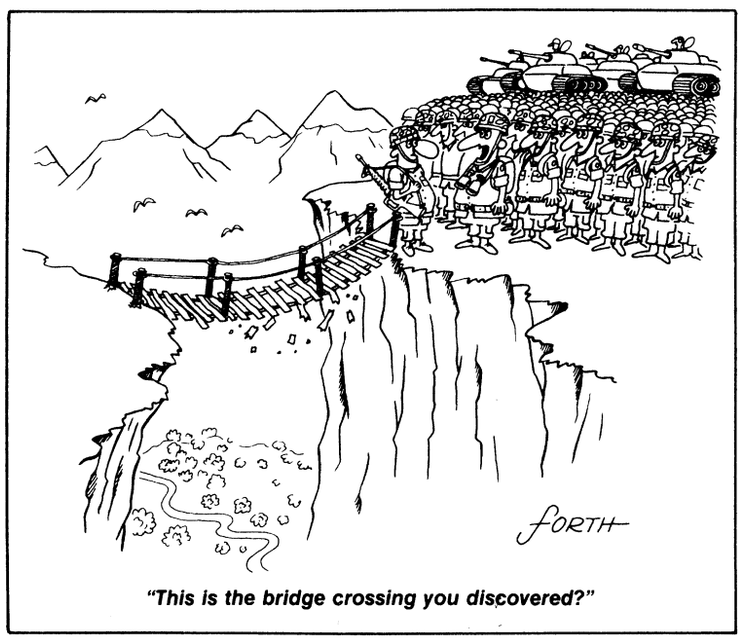
"Sounds like the Army's like me," I said, trying my hand at the lighter touch. "I was so insistent on keeping the thermostat at 62 degrees in the day and 55 at night at the last place I lived that I learned that my son was using a hair dryer to warm the bathroom in the mornings.

"Tell you what, when you're paying the bill yourself you keep an eye on those energy eaters. Come visit me this winter and we'll issue you a blanket.

"Standard uniform for watching TV at night is a wool sweater and blanket. Each of us has one, even the dog." ....I stopped, seeing that I wasn't making any points with the good woman.

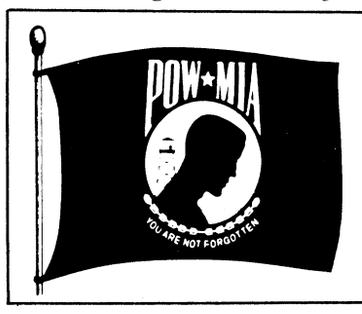
Her comment, "we may have only met, but I can tell I can't stand you," was my first clue.

Trying to change the subject (why didn't I just leave my mouth shut?) I noted how lucky they were to have an area for kids to meet and play.



Wrong statement.

"Lucky you say!" she screamed, "lucky! The place is falling apart. The equipment isn't safe! And you say we're lucky! Can't even get the engineers to come out and fix it."



Normally, I'm not this bold, but her screaming got to me. "Oh sure, the Army broke your equipment, not your little dears and now you want them to take good money and repair it so your brats can break it again. "You tried fixing it yourself? Ever try supervising your hoodlum kids?"

She was fast, but I was faster, I beat feet out of the quarters yelling my thanks to Sarge and Mrs. Sarge as I sped down the driveway.

Bet I don't get invited back there again.

"This is the bridge crossing you discovered?"

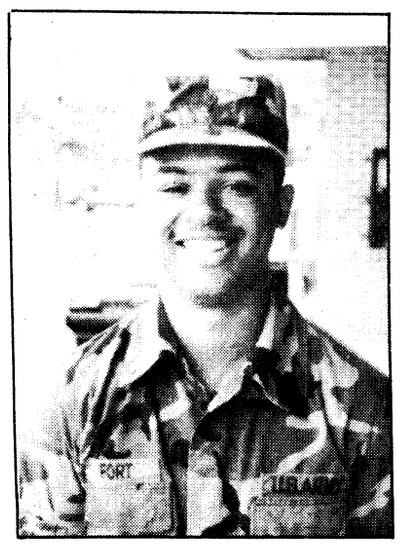
Legislation pending to fund military school districts

Association of the United States Army

There is currently pending in the US Senate, a piece of legislation that would insure continued financial assistance to those school districts across the country that are heavily impacted by the presence of large numbers of school children from military families and others who reside on federal property.



Federal installations produce both economic benefits and economic liabilities for civilian communities located nearby. While the economic benefits from the federal payroll and contracts awarded for goods and services are recognized and appreciated, there is an inadequate local tax base resulting from federal ownership of property, exclusive jurisdiction and other federal exemptions. Sicne 1950, this tax deficit has been somewhat offset by Impact Aid, which assists local school districts to meet the costs of public education provided military children.

All in the transient military community have witnessed firsthand the key role Impact Aid plays in obtaining comparable education for military children. Senior commanders in all the military services repeatedly emphasize to Congress and to local school officials alike that there is nothing more important to the continued high morale and welfare of our nation's volunteer military personnel than knowing that their children will be given the full measure of public educational opportunities, no matter where they are assigned to serve.

Approving legislation to continue Impact Aid, while essential, meets but half the requirement. Congress must also appropriate sufficient funds to meet the costs of public school education for military children. In the recent past, Congress has failed to provide adequate funds. The result: one school district in New Jersey recently attempted to bar children from a nearby Army fort when school began. Other districts sought relief in the courts. The problem is real and military personnel must not be made to suffer because of inaction by Congress.

Impact Aid is must legislation for Congress to authorize and to fund adequately. Impact Aid for the school districts which educate the children of our nation's military personnel is sorely needed and relates directly to the continued health, vigor and readiness of our Armed Forces.

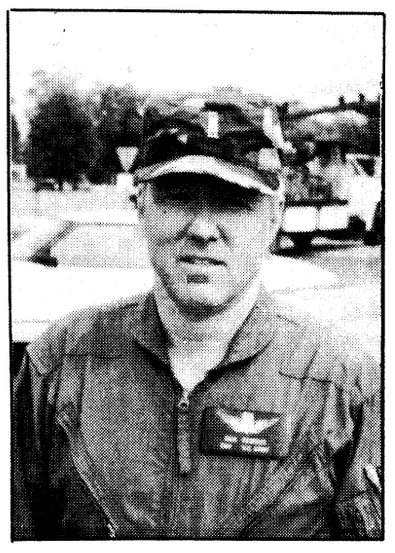
Sp4 Johnnie Fort, 598th Company, 67th Maintanence Battalion, 36th Engineer Group — "I think President Reagan made the right decision about fighting back if necessary because that first ship should not have been gunned down in international waters."



Maj. Randall Craven, HHC, 36th Engineer Group — "I think the U.S. is taking appropriate actions against the Iranians. It is international waters and we have a right to free shipping. I hope it doesn't escalate to anything more, but ,if it does I feel confident the U.S. can combat it."

SSgt. Ronald Veasey, A Company, 1-507th, Parachute Infantry Regiment — "I believe our present policy of terrorist aggression is right. And, I think we should continue with our present actions. We should not let terrorism go unchecked."

Gail Jones, family member — "I think the situation is kind of scary. Nobody has answers about what to do or how to solve the problem. I don't think the U.S. should be involved."

CW4 Dick Fegreus, DPTM — "I think something had to be done. It's a very strategic area and we have to protect the interests of the U.S. and our allies. It's open seaways and we have to maintain the freedom of navigation."

Post soldiers attend AUSA convention

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

Last week representatives from every major unit on Fort Benning traveled to Washington, D.C., for the Association of the U.S. Army's annual meeting.

Thousands of soldiers and civilians gathered for the annual meeting, which included guest speakers such as Army Chief of Staff Gen. Carl Vuono; Secretary of the Army John O. Marsh, Training and Doctrine Commander Gen. Maxwell Thurman and Sergeant Major of the Army CSM Bill Gates.

The meeting started on Oct. 12 with an opening ceremony featuring a grand display of pageantry by members of the 3rd U.S. Infantry (The Old Guard) and the U.S. Army Band, Pershings Own.

From then until the closing dinner, Oct. 14, post soldiers were kept busy attending luncheons and meetings, and visiting exhibits of major industrialists and Army posts. They attended a reception where each shook hands with the chief of staff of the Army, the secretary of the Army, the president of AUSA and the Ssrgeant major of the Army.

The meeting impressed post soldiers in many ways and each agreed they learned something that will be valuable to their military career and future.

1st Lt. Marc Kapsalis from Company C, 2nd Battalion, 14th Infantry Regiment, 2nd Brigade, 10th Mountain Division said he gained insight on how large AUSA is and the support it has from both civilians and the military. "I learned that many civilians know and appreciate the importance of the Army and its role of keeping the national defense strong."

He said he was personally able to see and speak to some high ranking enlisted members, general officers and a Medal of Honor winner.

"I'm going to apply the advice I was given into making myself a better platoon leader," Kapsalis said, "and I'd like to make a small presentation of the events that occurred and my views on them, to members of my unit."

He said he felt that there are some truly dedicated people in AUSA and advised that leaders who are recruiting new members give a small briefing to their soldiers before contributing to the association, so the troops have a true understanding of the mission of AUSA.

He added that the highlights of his trip were conversing with a Medal of Honor winner, who brought to his mind the true purpose of the Army of today, and visiting the monuments of our founding fathers.

Sp4 Wendy Wiseman of Company A, 1st of the 11th Infantry Regiment, The School Brigade, said the trip changed her entire view of the Army.

"I am not totally satisfied in my present career field," Wiseman said, "and I was seriously thinking about getting out of the Army after this enlistment; but I was able to talk to some people at the meeting who have sent me in the right direction."

Wiseman and many other soldiers agreed that the question and answer period with the sergeant major of the Army ranked high on their list of highlights of the meeting.

According to Sgt. Lanny Collins of Headquarters Company, 1st of the 11th Infantry Regiment, The School Brigade, the sergeant major conducted an open session with all ranks and answered many questions that soldiers had on Army policies.

Collins, who had never been to the Washington area before, said he was impressed with the top enlisted and officers he was able to meet.

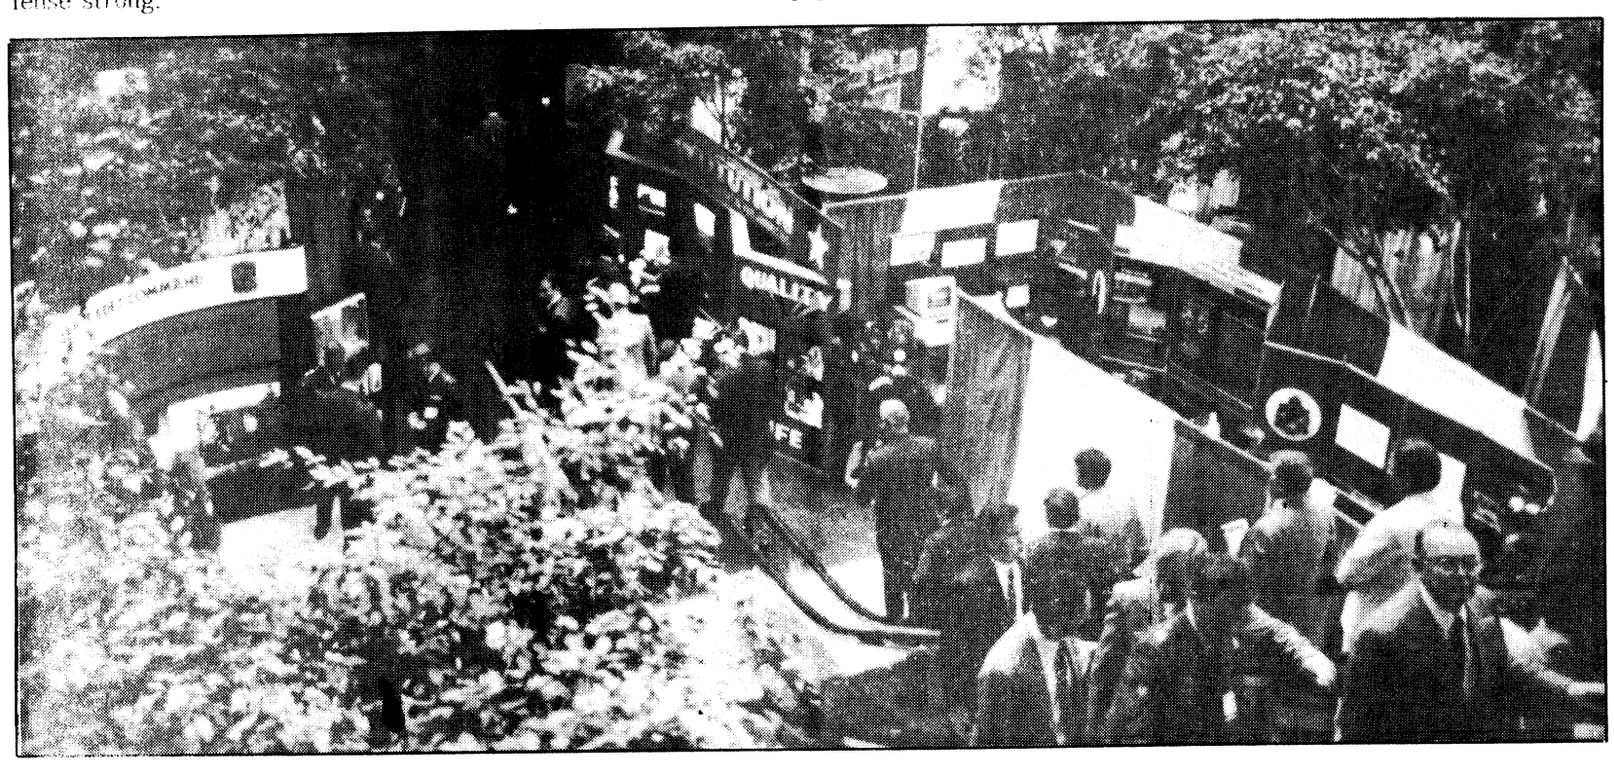
1st Sgt. Ralph Hart of Headquarters Company, USARSA, said that it was an awesome display of what the civilian community is trying to do for the military.

"Attending the convention will better enable me to give the average soldier a broader view of what AUSA does for us," Hart said. "I think everyone should be a member of AUSA because the more united we stand, the better we stand a chance of getting the things the military needs."

Many people who attended were amazed to see all the exhibits of weaponary that industrialist are inventing.

CSM Eddie Roberts, of The School Brigade, said "it's good to see all those companies trying to make equipment lighter and just as effective, which in turn makes our job easier during times of combat."

Other soldiers commented on how nice it was to meet soldiers from different posts — especially the ones representing the European and Asian commands.



Every soldier brought back memories that will last a lifetime and a greater appreciation of our national defense and AUSA.

AUSA was formed more than 37 years ago by the merger of the Infantry and Field Artillery Associations; since then AUSA has become the "one voice" for the entire Army; the retired, active, reservists, national guard, and the civilians.

Membership in AUSA is over 165,000 in 135 chapters around the world. Representatives from all chapters attended the meeting to discuss short- and long-term goals they have to aid the U.S. Army.

South American students graduate rigorous commando course

By Marco Morales
USARSA Public Affairs Office

Twenty-six El Salvadoran cadets, an NCO from Ecuador and one from El Salvador, braved the rigors of the 58-day "Commando" course at the U.S. Army School of the Americas recently.

They graduated from the course, which was taught by international cadre at USARSA, Oct. 7. The course is similar to Fort Benning's Ranger School.

"These soldiers gained small unit leadership experience under conditions that meet and often exceed those they will face in combat," said SFC Harry Ellifritz, NCOIC of th Patrolling Division, Department of Combat Operations, USARSA.

The course develops leadership skills by requiring individuals to perform effectively as small unit leaders in a realistic tactical environment, under mental and physical stress.

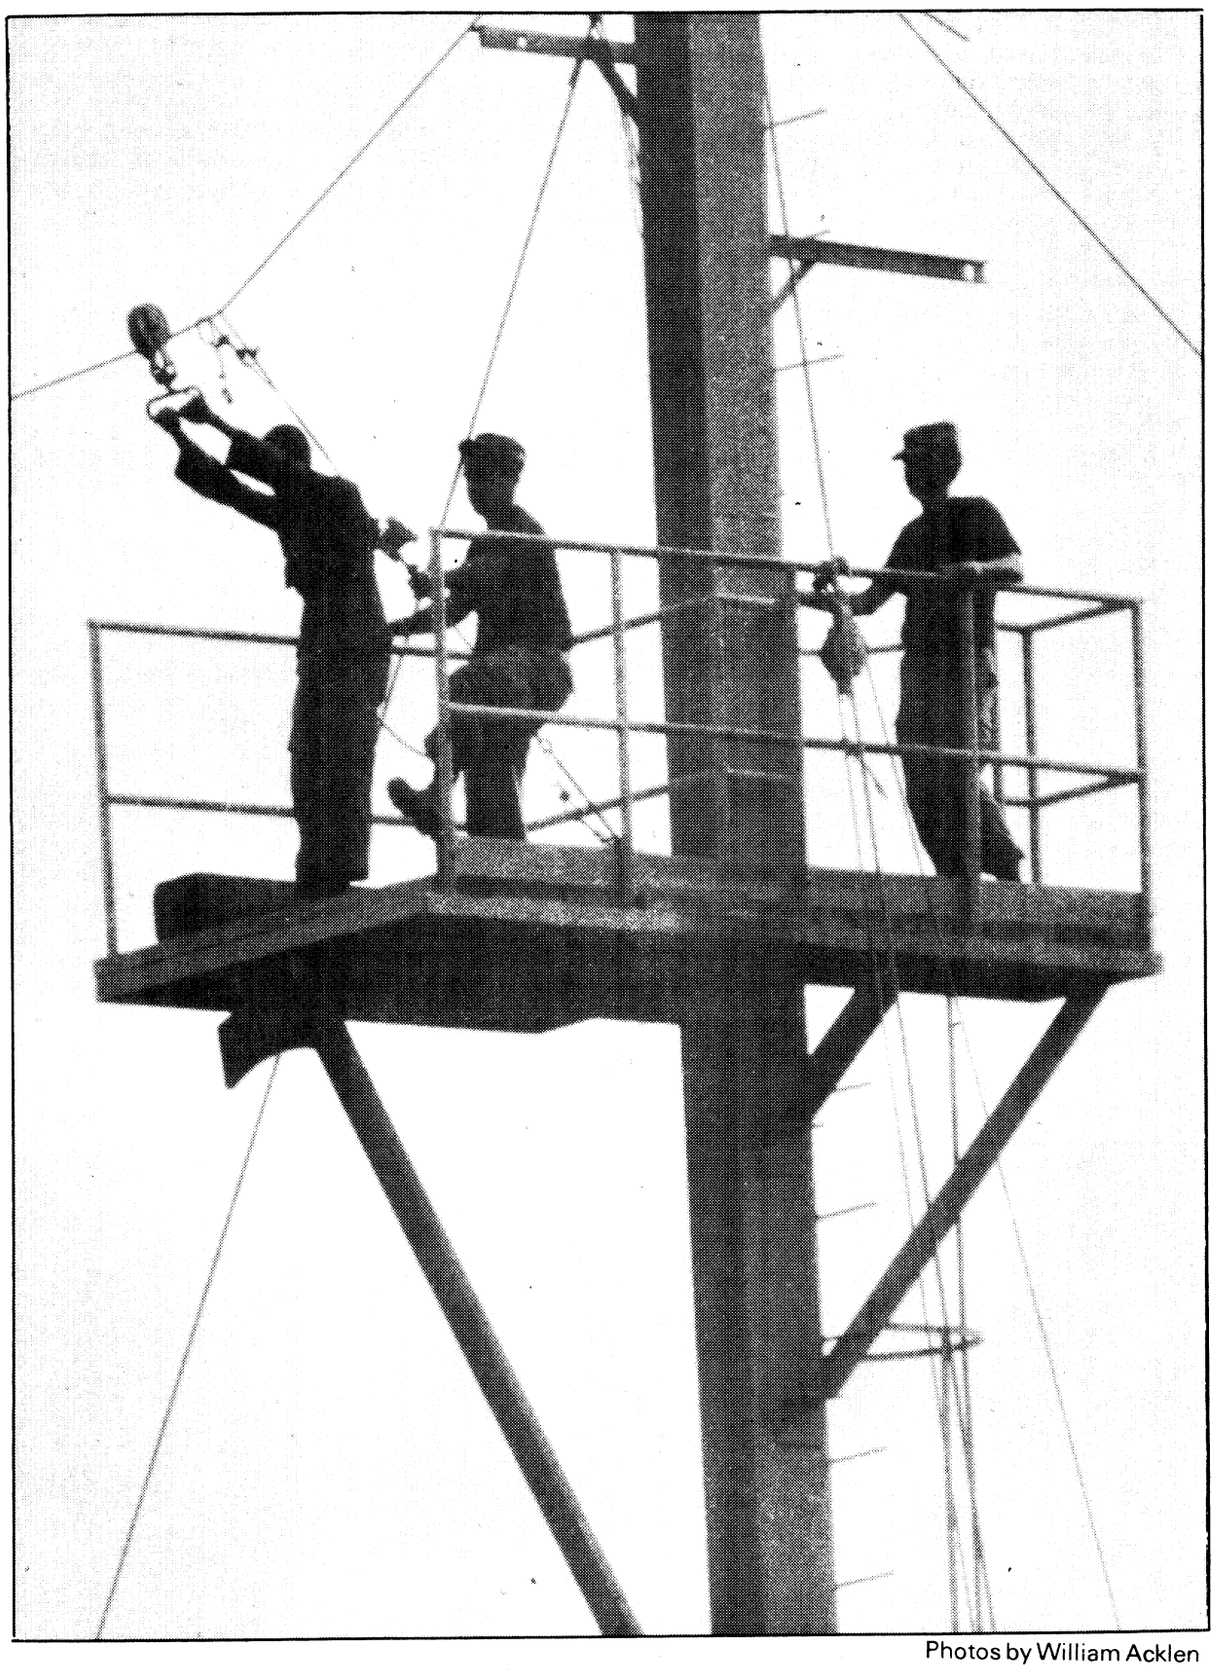
Students also learn light infantry techniques and tactics, airmobile and amphibious operations, and platoon-level patrolling operations.

Instruction in the course emphasizes the development ability by applying leadership principles during operations under varied and demanding situationS.

Ellifritz, who is a Ranger-qualified bilingual instructor, spoke about student perceptions during the course.

"The commando course exerts artificial pressure on an individual, such as time required to complete a mission and lack of food and sleep, increasing the level of difficulty during a mission analysis," he said.

"The commando and our patrolling operations courses are USARSA's most physically demanding courses," Ellifritz said.



Part of commando training includes a military mountaineering phase, where students conduct night rappeling from a 250-foot cliff. That phase also exposes students to a three-day patrol and four days of low-altitude mountaineering.

"This year's course went very well," Ellifritz said. "The mountain phase really expanded our training in the course."

This was the first class where students took the mountain phase in Dahlonega, Ga., he said. The training involved a "tension climb," where students scale a perpendicular 60-foot cliff.

Fatigued and wet from the slide for life landing, a commando student low crawls to the next obstacle.

Warrant officer exercises reenlistment authority for first time

By Marco Morales
USARSA Public Affairs Office

"I feel that Army warrant officers have always had the responsibility of a commissioned officer and still do, but did not have certain privileges that came with the rank," said CW3 John N. Dulanto, property book officer, U.S. Army School of the Americas.

Dulanto acted as the re-enlistment officer recently at USARSA for a subordinate non-commissioned officer. "This is the first time I've re-enlisted any soldier and is certainly a proud moment in my career," Dulanto said.

Before April this year, warrant officers in the U.S. Army did not have some of the authority commissioned officers already have. "Congress, however, passed a law which now allows warrant officers to act as commissioned officers in cases involving administrative procedures such as re-enlistments," Dulanto said.

Dulanto, 39, was born in Lima, Peru, and lived there until he was 13 years old. At that time, he emigrated from Peru to the U.S., completed his education here and entered the Army when he was 17.

He has been USARSA's property book officer since 1983. During USARSA's move from Panama, he was responsible for inventorying, storing and reeisuing equipment for the school.

MILPERCEN looking for enlisted troops to reclassify in CMF 98

Army News Service

WASHINGTON — The Alexandria, Va., based Total Army Personnel Agency career managers are looking for sergeants (not in promotable status) and below in overstrength military occupational specialties to re-classify into the enlisted career management field 98 (Electronic Warfare/Cryptologic Operations).

According to MSgt. Michael A. Callahan, senior career advisor for CMF 98, the Army has been unable to recruit enough persons to fill all the slots of the field's six specialties.

The requirements for high test scores and for possession of security clearances take time to process, and many qualified candidates choose to enter specialties having a relatively short sign-up period, Callahan explained.

This distinction has created a CMF 98 shortage of sergeants and below.

"To qualify for classification into one of these specialties, you must be a high school graduate," Callahan said."You also must have a standard test score of 100 or higher, and must qualify for a top secret special intelligence security clearance."

Interested soldiers who meet all the qualifications should call the TAPA enlisted military intelligence branch at; AUTOVON 221-0076/0141, or commercial 202-325-0076/0141.

USARSA students visit site of the Battle of Chickamauga

Steven Roy
USARSA Public Affairs Office

USARSA

The 124-year-old campaign and battle of Chickamauga, one of the most costly and decisive battles of the American Civil War, was the subject of study for the 41 officers of the U.S. Army School of the Americas Command and General Staff class recently.

The Latin American officers examined every aspect of the month-long campaign and the two days of bloody fighting during a tour of that area Oct.6-8.

The class was broken down into small groups, examining the actions of both Union and Confederate leaders and their units. This gave the Latin American students and understanding of the reasons some leaders and units were successful and why some failed.

Lt. Col. Angel R. Hernandez, a senior guest instructor at USARSA from Venezuela said, "The campaign and battle of Chickamauga have many worthwhile examples in studying military leadership and successes or failures of units in combat. Many lessons of this campaign apply in the conditions of war in modern times at tactical, operational and strategic levels."

The battle study took the class to Lookout Mountain, Tenn., where students were treated to a breath-taking view of Chattanooga, and the Tennessee River Valley--both vital to the study.

From Lookout Mountain, the students followed the Union army's path westward into hilly and heavily-forested northern Alabama, pausing to visit sites where Union forces surprised Confederates by crossing the Tennessee River behind Confederate lines at Bridgeport, Ala., and South Pittsburgh, Tenn.

At Stevenson, Ala., the class halted again to visit the still-active railway and rail yard where in 1863, Union forces established a major supply depot. Civil War etchings still hang on the walls of the Stevenson Railroad Museum and Restaurant, where the Union troops unloaded ammunition and supply trains.

Moving east across the Tennessee River and green hills of northern Georgia, the class stopped near LaFayette, Ga. In the fields where the first shots of the campaign were fired, the class analyzed the actions of Civil War leaders, missed opportunities by Confederates and coolness and steadiness by Union units.

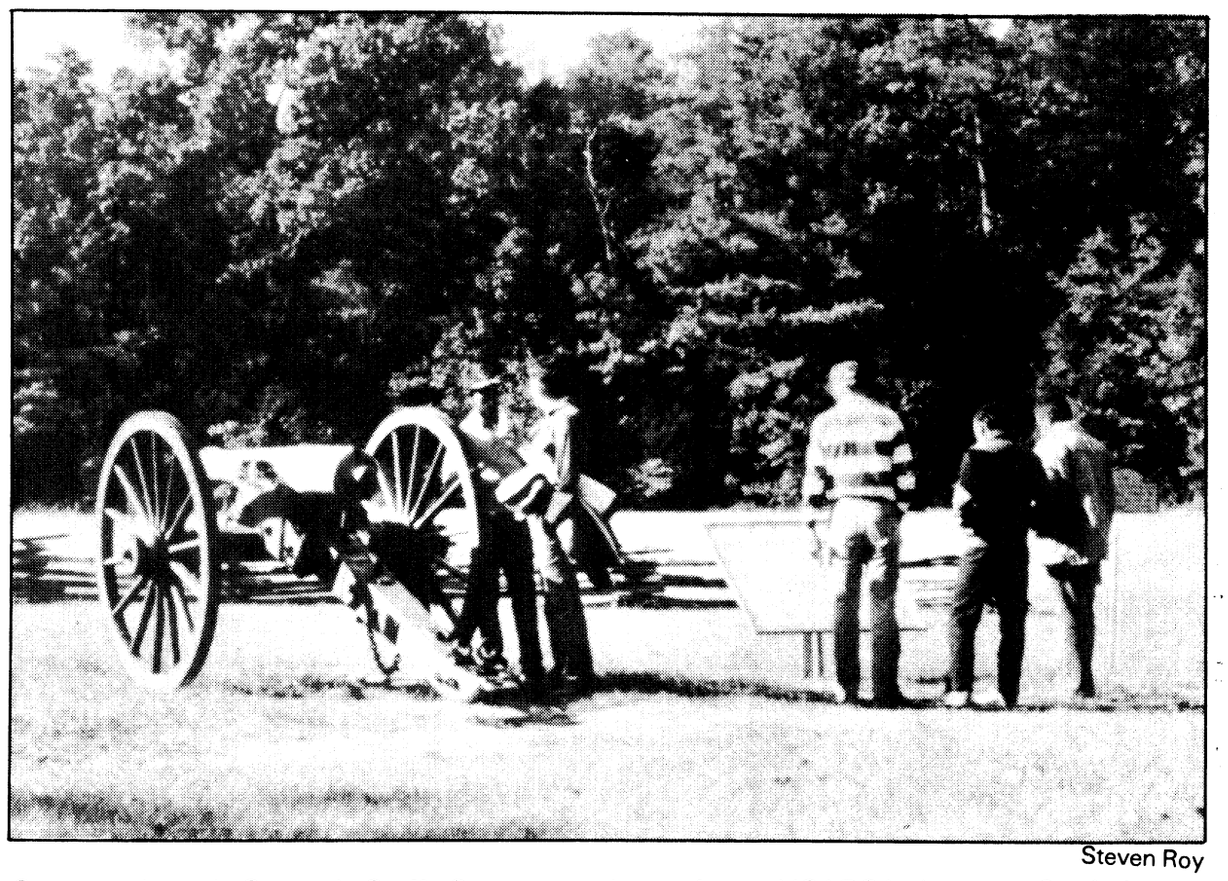
The final part of the trip found the class arriving behind Confederate battle lines at Chickamauga Battlefield National Park, south of Chattanooga, Tenn.

For two days, matching the two-day duration of the battle, the students crossed the fields, streams and woods of the battlefield examining the performance of leaders and of the armies' fighting units.

Time and again the students were surprised at the ferocious fighting, the heavy loss to the engaged units and courage displayed by soldiers of both armies.

Major George Ferris, a C&GSC student at USARSA, stated, "as a result of this study, I have a deeper and more profound understanding of the principles of war applied during the campaign and battle."

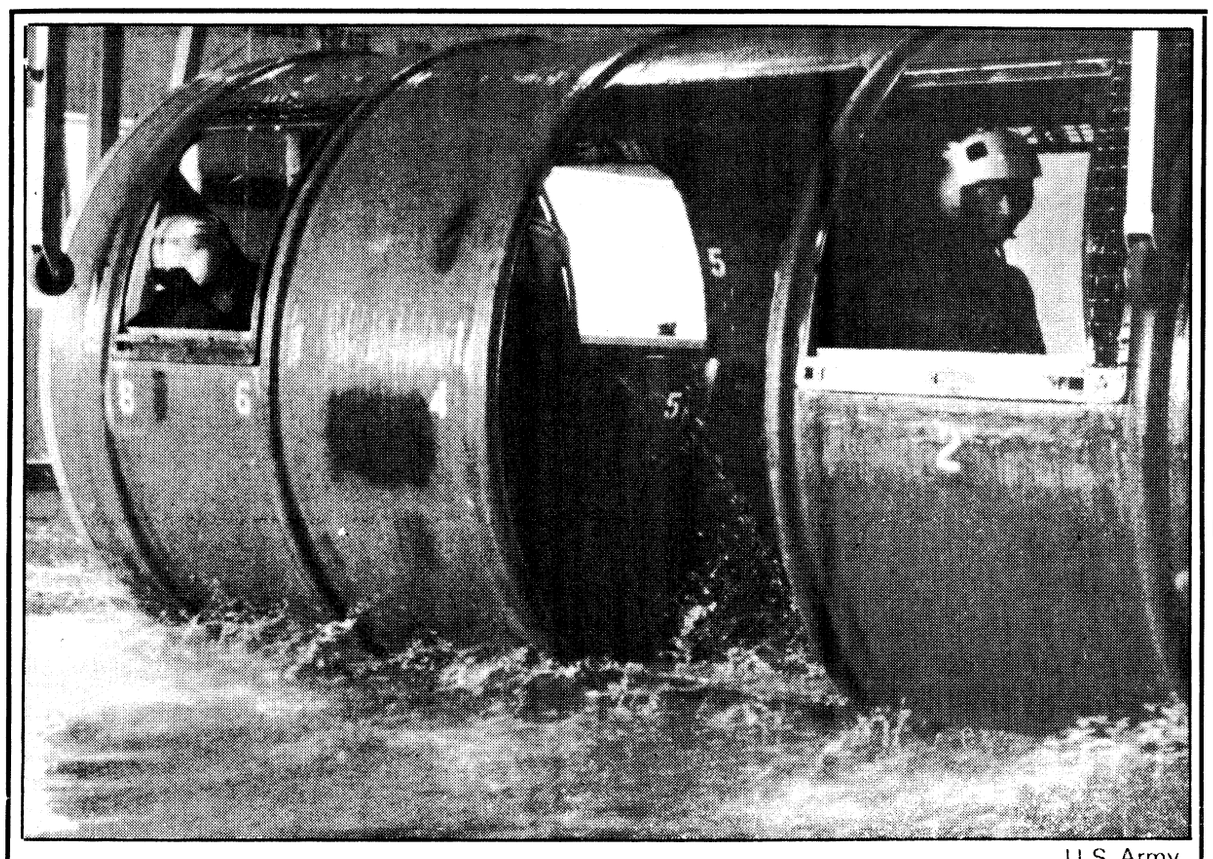
The final day on the battlefield began in near freezing temperatures with the sun barely visible through the dense foilage, much the same as conditions of the battle 124 years before.



Captain Victor Tise, USARSA instructor led the class across the road in LaFayette, where Longstreet's Confederate, broke through the Union center on the morning of Sept. 20, 1863, spelling defeat for the Union army at Chickamauga.

Lt. Col. Santos Pico, C&GSC student from Colombia said, "It is interesting how the many problems of communication in combat still remain to be resolved," adding, "in the American Civil War, especially in a battle like Chickamauga where the terrain is broken and covered with forest, the commander couldn't see his own forces and thus, controlling movement became very difficult. Even today, with the aid of radios and helicopters, in areas of jungle and mountains, the problems of communication, command and control continue to be a great challenge for the commander."

The USARSA visit to Chickamauga ended atop vital Snodgrass Hill, where Union forces rallied and held off repeated Confederate assaults enabling the bulk of the Union Army to withdraw to Chattanooga.



"Our study of the Chickamauga Campaign was patterned after the 'staff ride concept' of Fort Leavenworth's Dr. William Glenn Robertson," Tise said, adding, "Robertson designed the 'staff ride' as part of the Fort Leavenworth's military history of the Civil War, which is available to students attending the C&GSC there.

Editor's note: Two training battalions at the 1st Brigade, Infantry Training Center, recently were redesignated as parts of the 19th Infantry. The 3rd Battalion became the 1st Battalion, 19th Infantry and 7th Battalion became 2nd Battalion, 19th Infantry. It was at the Battle of Chickamauga that the 19th Infantry Regiment earned its motto, "Rock of Chickamauga."

Soldiers prepare for dunking in the helodunk apparatus.

Exercise prepares flight crews for making emergency exits over water

Anthony J. Intrepido
34th Medical Battalion

34th Med

Recently 14 soldiers of the 498th Air Ambulance Company's 2nd Flight Platoon experienced a Helo-Dunk training exercise, which prepares helicopter flight crews for emergency exits in over-water conditions at the Naval-Air Station in Pensacola, Fla.

The exercise begins with a swim test with each soldier swimming 75 meters in full flight gear without touching the walls or the bottom of a pool. All soldiers who pass the pretest advance to the dunk training. A big barrel-shaped apparatus with windows, doors, and seats is used to simulate the helicopter's body.

Each soldier experiences four different types of dunks or crashes. In the first dunk, the soldier exits the nearest opening while in the second dunk the soldier exits the main cabin door. The third and fourth dunks are the same as the first two with the addition of darkened goggles to prevent the use of sight.

The soldiers first brace themselves for impact, as the barrel is placed eight feet above the pool's surface. Upon hitting the water, each soldier is urged to grab a reference point for orientation purposes. As the barrel rotates upside down and sinks to the bottom of the 15-foot pool, the soldiers must count 8 to 10 seconds before they can release their safety belts.

"This is more of a help than a hinderance," said Specialist Four Dana M. MacLeod, 19, a crew chief, "in that if your try and exit a window or door while the aircraft is still sinking, you will find that your perspective of the aircraft is lost."

Sergeant Robin K. Lueck, a technical inspector, said that the two dunks using the darkened goggles were definitely the hardest. "Once you exit the aircraft, you have to orient yourself to swim to the surface." He then realized that this problem could be alleviated by allowing himself to just relax and let the padding in his helmet pull his head upward and his boots pull his feet downward. Then it was easy to determine in which direction to swim.

Staff Sergeant Kevin Raine, a technical inspector, thought the toughest portion was the fact that the seat belt latch was on the opposite side compared to the UH-1V helicopter. "It's easy to panic," he stated. However, he kept his cool and, although he was the last one to surface he successfully completed that dunk.

Sergeant Christopher Carreiro lost his reference point on the last dunk because his belt buckle was caught to his flight suit. After ripping free, he exited one window, but came back in through another. Finally, he got out the correct door. One of the frogmen stated that it was a classic case of total disorientation. Sergeant Carreiro is a flight medic.

All participants appreciated the stringent safety guidelines that were kept by the cadre. The pool contained two Navy frogmen and four lifeguards, who were prepared for any soldier's failure to reach the surface.

"I always had a slight fear of flying over water, but this exercise has built my confidence and lessened that fear," said MacLeod, one of the twelve to graduate.

Captain Marshall Scott, pilot, 2nd Platoon leader said, "as we continue to train in carrier-deck landings with the newly fielded UH-60 Blackhawk helicopters, it is imperitive that water survivability remains high among crew members."

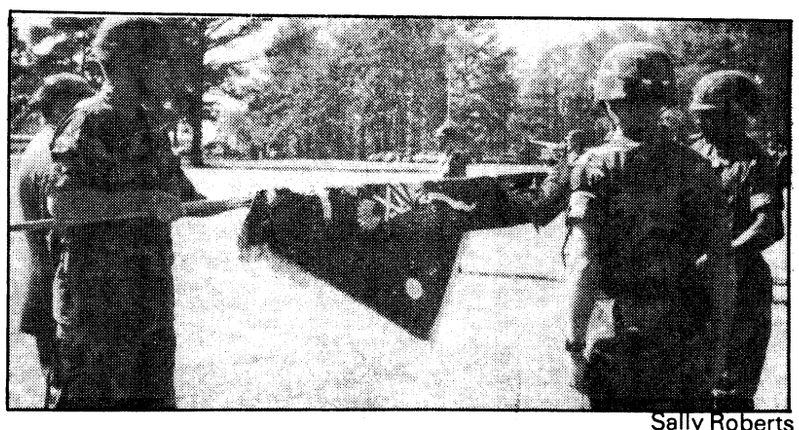
197th Infantry Brigade



Members of the 3rd Battalion, 7th Infantry, the most decorated unit in the U.S. Army, and guests gathered to commemerate the deactivation of the unit during a ceremony at Kelley Hill last week. The soldiers of this proud unit then began their service under the newly reactivated colors of the 2nd Battalion, 18th Infantry Regiment "Vanguards."

Among those attending were several former members of the 18th Infantry who came from as far away as California to witness the reactivation of this distinguished unit.

The 18th Infantry is one of the most highly decorated units in the United States Army. The 2nd Battalion, 18th Infantry has been awarded 51 battle streamers from historical battles dating back to the Civil War, the Indian Wars, The War with Spain, The Philippinnes Insurrection and both World Wars. The Battalion was ordered to Veitnam with the 1st Infantry Division's 2nd Brigade and fought in 11 campaigns before returning to Fort Riley, Ks.

The remaining battalions in the 18th Infantry Regiment are scheduled for reactivation in 1991, which includes the 1st Battalion, 58th Infantry, 197th Infantry Brigade.

The 3rd battalion, 7th Infantry has been scheduled for reactivation at Fort Stewart, Ga. in December of 1987.

New command will serve as coordinator of wartime movements

Army News Service

WASHINGTON — The U.S. Transportation Command was activated Oct. 1 at Scott Air Force Base, Ill., with a ceremony led by Deputy Secretary of Defense William H. Taft IV.

"We have neither the resources nor the political latitude to station forces everywhere they may be needed," Taft said. "Thus a force structure that deters war, or wins it if deterrence fails,requires that we have the ability to deploy forces far beyond our shores. Formation of USTRANSCOM aims to extend that capability."

Taft also added that USTRANSCOM streamlines the organization of America's forces, thus visibly demonstrating its commitment to defense — now and in the future.

The new organization, commanded by Air Force Gen. Duane H. Cassidy, combines global air, land and sea transportation to enhance deployment.

Unlike most unified commands, USTRANSCOM has functional rather than geographical orientation. It also has worldwide responsibilities that will be carried out by three components — the Army's Military Traffic Management Command, the Air Force's Military Airlift Command and the Navy's Military Sealift Command.

The command has several roles in peacetime. It will focus on strategic mobility planning, that is, planning to deploy our forces in the event of emergency.

Next, it will integrate the data processing systems of the services that deal with deployment information so that they can pass the information among themselves.

And, finally, it will exercise those plans and procedures so that they will be ready when needed in a real emergency.

The new command affects the Army in two ways. As the new command's largest customer, the Army will deploy the greatest number of units via the USTRANSCOM.

USTRANSCOM will oversee the Army's role in planning and managing wartime military traffic through the Army's MTMC. For example, in a deployment, MTMC would arrange for ocean transportation with the Military Sealift Command for a unit from say, Fort Hood, Texas on its way to Germany.

For air transportation, MTMC would also determine how the people and equipment would get from Hood to their respective air and seaports. At the other end, at a MTMC overseas terminal, MTMC officials would be responsible for discharging, or unloading, the ship.

Once the ship's cargo is discharged and documented, the MTMC portion of the mission is complete. Concerning the command's mission, Cassidy predicted that"the nation's newest unified command would set important precedents for the future of the armed forces," as well as improve interservice cooperation.

A small command nucleus had formed early last April at Scott to plan the command's operations. Officials expect that by October of next year, more than 300 workers will be on board.

This will include members of the deployment directorate of the command, formerly the Joint Deployment Agency, who will move to Scott and integrate into the USTRANSCOM headquarters by the end of September 1988.

According to officials at USTRANSCOM, its headquarters should be fully operational by the first of October 1988.

Each service will continue to organize, train and equip its assigned forces. Service managers also retain their functions.

A GOOD PART-TIME JOB IS HARD TO FIND.

If you're headed back to civilian life, reserve yourself an extra income one weekend a month.

Did you know that one out of three Americans now "moonlights" to help make ends meet?

But as a returning veteran, you don't have to "moonlight." If you want an extra income, just "weekend" once a month with your local Army Reserve unit.

For instance, an E-5 with four years' experience now earns over $130 for a weekend's work. Over $2,000 a year, counting two weeks annual training pay.

As a Reservist, you also get PX privileges, low-cost life insurance, and retirement points toward a pension which begins five years before Social Security.

Wouldn't it be nice to have an extra income waiting when you get home?

It can be arranged. See your unit commander, or talk to your in-service recruiter, listed below. Act fast. Good part-time jobs are scarce.

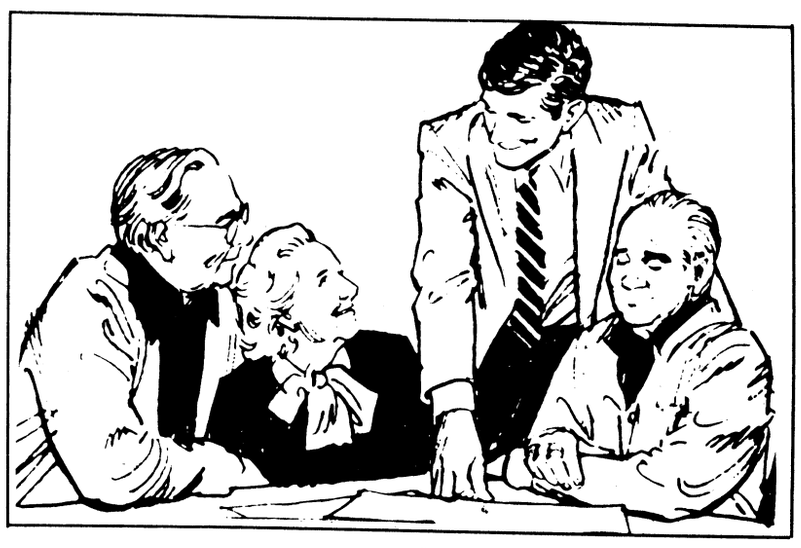
Encounter groups help make families stronger

By Harold P. Gott
USAITC Chaplains Office

In the Hebrew scriptures in the book of Genesis there appears the story of Noah, where all living creatures are sent out of the ark two by two — male and female. That is such a powerful image being sent out. In today's society there are so many demands made upon us in the workplace and in the home that cloud the image of being sent.

The relationship of husband and wife that becomes the institution of matrimony is important to us as a people. It is primarily in context of a family that our values both religious and secular are passed on to the next generation.



Some years ago, a Spanish priest, Father Calvo working in the Christian Family movement developed a series of conferences aimed at strengthening marriages and family life. This was the beginning of what today is known as Worldwide Marriage Encounter.

It took hold in the United States after a number of couples and some priests from New York attended a conference on the family at Notre Dame University in 1968. Under the guidance of Ed and Harriet Garzero and Father Charles A. Gallagher, S.J., the core of the Marriage Encounter weekend developed. The movement began by scheduling a weekend every month, then two per month. Couples who made a weekend urged their friends to experience the encounter to expand the possibilities of their relationships.

Worldwide Marriage Encounter's first overseas expansion came in 1971 when a priest from Belgium, Fr. Guido Heybrout, who was studying in the United States recommended Marriage Encounter to his bishop. An American team was sent to Belgium and from there Marriage Encounter continued to spread, so that today over 50 countries have the movement in their own language.

The Encounter weekends have always been open to couples of all faiths. But in 1971, the decision was made to introduce Marriage Encounter to the Jewish and Episcopal faiths. The movement supported them financially and with guidance while their programs began. Since then, Methodists, Lutherans. United Church of Christ, Church of Christ, Presbyterians and the Reoganized Latter-day Saints have added their own richness to the concept of Marriage Encounter.

Solving individual marital problems has never been the goal of Marriage Encounter. Instead, during the weekend a husband and wife are given the opportunity to share the feelings which so often are kept buried inside. They are taught how to make such communication a part of their everyday lives. While the modern world stresses individualism, Marriage Encounter teaches that marriage is a joyous celebration of God's plan for men and women, shared with the person chosen to be loved.

For those interested in making a Marriage Encounter Weekend, please phone Steve and Cathy Kuhn at (912) 354-7705 or Ch Gott at Main Post Catholic Chapel, 545-1452. In south Georgia, there will be a weekend in the Savannah area Nov. 13, 14 and 15 and Dec. 4, 5 and 6; in the Albany area Feb. 12, 13 and 14, 1988.

Classes to focus on relationships

Chaplain's Office

Improving relationships between parents and teenagers will be the focus of a series of discussion sessions beginning Oct. 28 at the Chaplain's Family Life Center, bldg. 2606, upstairs. The program is being sponsored by the Chaplain's Section according to Chaplain White. The discussions will be based on Systematic Training for Effective Parenting of Teens.

Our community's interest in parenting education is part of a nationwide trend. We're using discussion materials that include The Parent's Guide, which has helped parents throughout the country to communicate better with their teenagers. Some of the topics covered in the program are:

- Understanding behavior and misbehavior
- Understanding the emotions of both parents and teens
- Encouragement
- Skills for listening
- Exploring alternatives and expressing your ideals and feelings to teenagers
- Skills for listening
- Exploring alternatives and expressing your ideals and feelings to teenagers
- Developing responsibility
- Selecting the appropriate approach to discipline situations
- The family meeting
- Special challenges and developing confidence

The discussion group will give you a chance to share your experiences, meet new people, and have an enjoyable time while you learn and practice new ways of relating to your teenager.

To register for this program please call the Family Life Center at 545-1760.

PWOC group meets Nov. 5

Protestant Women of the Chapel will have a meeting on Nov. 5 at 9:30 a.m. in the Infantry Center Chapel Annex. Jackie Perkins, associate pastor of Edgewood Baptist Church in Columbus, will speak about America's Christian roots. All women are invited to attend. A nursery will be provided in the Religious Education Center, Bldg. 229.

Council hosts potluck supper

The Military Council of Catholic Women will host a parish chili potluck supper Saturday at The Infantry Center Chapel annex. All families are asked to bring a pot of chilli. All single soldiers are asked to bring crackers. Drinks and dessert will be provided. Come and join in the fun.

For more information, call Marianne Tennant at 687-0451.

Retreat offers food for spirit

The Military Council of Catholic Women will be sponsoring a retreat to Blessed Trinity on Nov. 6. The topic for discussion will be "Faith Within the Family."

Kelley Hill facilities get much needed face..ift

Professional services are offered at the newly relocated brigade clearing station.

By Clarence Pittman III
197th Infantry Brigade P AO

Cooperative efforts by the directorate of Engineering and Housing and the 197th Infantry Brigade soldiers is mainly responsible for the recent upgrading of Kelley Hill facilities.

Civilians and soldiers devoted countless days toward the architectural renovation of Kelley Hill.

"Over the years, much of the beauty has eroded, many of the facilities have decayed and much of the history has been lost," said Col. William W. Hartzog., 197th Infantry Brigade commander. "We've had to pursue both short and long-range plans to make this cantonment area the reflection of excellence that the Brigade continually demonstrates."

The majority of the commander's guidelines are completed for 1987, and the work is already ahead of schedule for 1988.

According to Robert L. Kelley, a Fort Benning engineer technical representative, the cooperation of troop man-hours with DEH has stretched DEH manpower and saved thousands of dollars.

"If a unit orders the materials and does the work themsleves," Kelley said, "it saves a great deal of money, which would otherwise go to contractors."

Besides making the best use of "taxpayers dollars," time is also a factor. 197th soldiers eliminate the extra time involved waiting for post engineer technicians to respond to the job order.

One of the first buildings which received a major facelift was the Non-commissioned Officer's Club, which was re-established as a brigade staff office building.

"Soldiers of the 72nd Engineer Co., and of the 43rd Engineer Battalion of the 36th Group, did a backbreaking and professional job with this building," said Maj. Chuck Brice, 197th Infantry Brigade engineer. "It involved tearing out disco lights to put in a completely different electrical system, scraping and re-painting walls, re-tiling floors and repairing latrines and locks."

A similar effort also produced the Tactical Training Center/Education Center annex. This large building, which once housed a bowling alley, was remodeled by workers from DEH, the 72nd Engineer Co. and the 43rd Engineer Battalion. Now the building facilitates a large, multi-use tactical training room for the simulation of many types of brigade exercises.

"As important, the establishment of this building has created classrooms to further expand our soldiers' academic programs," Aurie B. McCrary, Kelley Hill Education Center chief said.

Mrs. McCrary, who has been with the center since 1974, witnessed the growth of facilities from four trailers to three permanant structures, including six spacious classrooms.

"Positive results, due to these facilities, are already seen," Mrs. McCrary added. "Soldiers on Kelley Hill achieved the highest percentage rating in the Training and Doctrine Command on passing the college level examination tests (CLEP) this year."

Undoubtedly, the toughest remodeling prject was for the Troop Medical Clinic.

"A great deal of manhours and sweat was expended to restore six examination rooms, the records room, the clinical lab, the waiting room and the treatment room," CWO 2 John E. Donohue, brigade Clearing Station officer-in-charge said.

Before Donohue and soldiers of the 197th Support Battalion worked on the TMC building, he recalls the times when practically an entire morning was devoted to screnning soldiers during an average sick call.

"In the old building, we worked out of two rooms," Donohue said. "Now, with this spacious facility, sick call is usually completed by 9 a.m."

The Kelley Hill Physical Fitness Center has undergone major changes, including a complete overhaul of the basketball floor, a re-designed shower facility and the installment of a racquetball court. Soldier manhours completed a great deal of the work, however, DEH carpenters and plumbers contributed immeasurably toward the remodeling.

Initially, work was done on the racquetball court by the U.S. Marine Seabees of the Reserve Naval Mobile Construction Battalion.

"Work done by the soldiers themselves on the racquetball court cost a little over $17,000," Kelley, the post's technical engineer said. "If it was contracted out, it would cost approximately $35,000."

Soldiers from the 197th Infantry Brigade use the electric hoist in the new motor pool.

One of the recent improvements on Kelley Hill is the addition of building identification signs, which are standardized throughout Fort Benning.

Tot Town celebrates thirty years of service

The Daughters of the U.S. Army are celebrating 30 years of managing Tot Town next week, and plan to spend Wednesday partying.

As part of the celebration, Tot Town is rolling back prices for child care that day. The first child in each family will be charged 50 cents an hour, and each additional child wil be charged 25 cents an hour. Meal prices will remain the same.

Parents are invited to tour the facility with the DUSA Board of Directors as guides, and view the special programs given by the children at 10 a.m. and 3 p.m.

Birthday cake and punch will be served. All children are encouraged to come dressed in either 50's clothes or Halloween costumes.

Activities during the day will include apple bobbing (for older children only), throwing sponges at the witch, pinning the tail on the cat, a cake walk, worms in the witches brew, feeding the pumpkin and putting on the hits.

Prizes will be given for various contests. Come and join your children for the birthday celebration Wednesday.

Call 689-8698 for reservations. DUSA was originally founded as a way for daughters and granddaughters of service members to keep in touch with each other. It has evolved into a service organization, supporting child care services and awarding college scholarships.

Worker recalls years spent working with post children

By Becky Obert
Bayonet staff writer

Ann Roberson has seen a lot of changes in her 37 years at Tot Town.

She started working there in 1950 as a maid. "It was just called the children's nursery back then, and was only open on Sundays during church," she said.

Within a few years, the nursery had changed hands and was being run by the Youth Activities organization, and Mrs. Roberson had started working with the children.

The nursery continued to grow, expanding its hours of operation to meet the needs of the community, and was taken over by the Daughters of the U.S. Army in 1956.

Roberson said her favorite part of working at Tot Town was working with the children. "If you make one happy, you get a reward from them," she said. "I enjoyed playing with them, and I'd get down on the floor with them and have a ball."

She said working at the center has always been challenging. "It's the kind of job where you do whatever needs to be done. I might work the front desk, or work on the floor with the children; just wherever I was needed."

She said children today are a lot different from those in the past. "The children are more outgoing than they used to be, they know more about the world," she said.

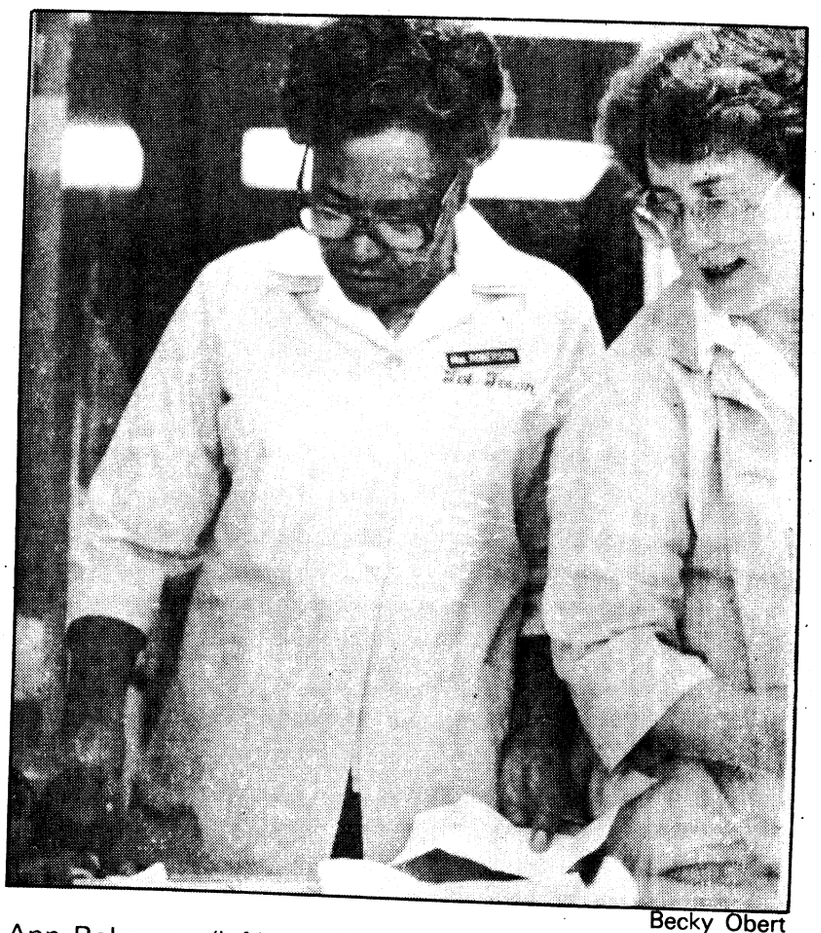
They're also not as well behaved as they used to be, she said. "We could never spank them, even in those days, but we'd isolate them from the group for punishment," she said. "Back then, that would bother them, but nowadays, it doesn't phase them."

Mrs. Roberson said that she couldn't help but get attached to some of the children. "It was just like losing one of your own when they left," she said.

Some of the children have come back to visit her as adults, which really made her feel good.

She's also had several bring their children to Tot Town. "I'd say, that little girl looks so familiar to me, and then find out that I had taken care of her mother when she was little," she said.

Since the late 1950s, Mrs. Roberson has worked the front desk, checking children in and out, making sure their medical and shot records are up to date, and making sure that their parent's membership card is current.



According to Barbara Baxter, one of Mrs. Roberson's coworkers, the front desk job puts Mrs. Roberson in the hot spot at times.

"It's her job to enforce the enrollment rules of the center, and sometimes she has to tell parents their child can't stay because their membership card has expired, or their records are not up to date."

Mrs. Baxter said that many parents vent their anger on Mrs. Roberson in these situations, because they don't understand. "She is just doing her job, enforcing the rules that make the center run well," Mrs. Baxter said.

Ida Barnes, manager of the the center, said Mrs. Roberson is a dedicated employee. "She is very reliable, and I can only remember one time she was out sick in the 26 years I have known her," she said.

"She worries about this place, and wants to keep it up right. And while she is strictly business in her job, she has a heart of gold if you need a favor," she said.

ACE renovates building

By Shawn Bryson
36th Engineer Group Correspondent

Soldiers from Alpha Company Engineers (ACE), 43rd Engineer Battalion, 36th Engineer Group, have received excellent training on three of their most recent construction projects.

Twenty-three soldiers from the 2nd platoon are currently renovating 1697 here according to 1st Lt. Powell, 2nd platoon leader.

Powell explained that the building is being renovated into a conference and lounge area for the workers of the Department of Resource Management here.

The building will tie into the brand new DRM building with a breezeway once the renovation is complete, Powell said.

"This project is being funded by the Department of Engineering and Housing and is expected to be completed by Jan. 15," said Powell.

The ACE soldiers began working on the project in late September with two carpentry teams, one plumbing team and one electrical team, according to Powell. "This is good training for the soldiers because it encompasses most of the aspects of constructing a building from scratch," he said.

Parts of the renovation include installing interior walls, insulating the walls and ceiling, re-shingling the roof, replacing the lighting and installing new plumbing.

Powell indicated that the Alpha soldiers are slightly ahead of scheduling and anticipate no problem in reaching the project deadline.

ACE soldiers from the first platoon recently completed a project for the United Baptist Church.

According to Staff Sgt. Gilbert non-commissioned officer-in-charge of the project, the soldiers put in a total of 200 cubic feet of drainage ditch and 10 cubic yards of concrete for the church.

"The ditch was put in to save a private road running past the church. It began to erode after some landscaping was done," said Gilbert.

Gilbert added that the engineers were called upon to do the project as kind of a swap. The church provided the funds and materials and ACE supplied the manpower, which gave the soldiers a good training experience, Gilbert said.

Another of its latest projects was performed by the Earth Moving Platoon.

These soldiers completely resurfaced the holding area at this Ammunition Supply Installation here, said 1st Lt. Pace, platoon leader.

Pace said the soldiers graded over 4,000 tons of gravel for the surface of the parking lot, only after grading 1,600 yards of fill, which was hauled in to level off the lot. Asphalt was laid to complete the four-month project, according to Pace.

PT test cause of PPTTSS

By David Johnson
Special to the Bayonet

OPINION

It's late in the afternoon and with no apparent provocation your stomach begins to violently churn. Having had your routine lunch of stale cookies and warm milk you begin to ponder the cause or your ailment.

Then you notice your plams are sweaty and your vision is somewhat blurred.

At home it only gets worse. Fear of having contracted a serious disease runs through your mind as you uneasily fall asleep.

Once asleep, images of your mother as a first sergeant run rampant in your dreams. Suddenly the alarm rings and brings you back to the reality of the day. It's time to take the P T Test!

How many times has this happened to you? These symptoms, along with shaking knees, runny nose and big feet are all signs of PPTTSS (pre-physical training test stress syndrome).

In it's early stages the malady is quite simple but as it advances it becomes noticeablely more complex. In the advanced stages symptoms such as asking your boss for a four day pass to prepare for the test, chronic oversleeping on the day of the test and activation of the gag reflex at the thought of PT could menace the victim.

PPTTSS threatens to be the major health hazard of non-motivated soldiers during the next decade.

It is a serious affliction that can strike anyone.

If you become a victim, seek help immediately. Get into the front-leaning-rest and stay there until your arms lose their noodled like consistency. Do sit-ups until your torso ceases to look like an overstuffed duffle bag and run until the sound of a sonic boom no longer frightens you.

ASK THE JUDGE

Staff Judge Advocate

Q: I have been having trouble getting credit because of some old items that are still on my credit record. I heard about a company that promises to fix your credit history. Should I give it a try?

A: The Fair Credit Reporting Act gives you the right to learn what is in your credit file. If you have been denied credit in the past 30 days, the credit bureau will provide you with a copy of your report free of charge; otherwise, there will be a small administrative fee, usually $5-$15. The names and numbers of local credit bureaus can be found in the yellow pages.

After you receive your credit record, check to see if any of the information is inaccurate. By law, a credit bureau must investigate and remove any items that cannot be confirmed. If the information is correct, no one, including the credit fixing company, can require the credit bureau to remove it unless it is outdated.

The law permits late payments to be recorded on your credit record for a period of seven years. Bankruptcies can be reported for up to 10 years. Anyone telling you that they can get this information removed before that time is making promises they cannot keep. If you discover information that is truly outdated, you can contact the credit bureau and have the information removed yourself, without paying a fee for someone else to call.

A number of credit "fix-it" companies have been the subject of complaints to the Better Business Bureau and the attorney general's Consumer Affairs office. If you intend to hire such a company, you should contact these offices first and determine whether you have chosen a reputable firm. It might also be wise to bring the contract to the Legal Assistance office before you sign it and have it reviewed by an attorney.

U.S. Armed Forces Days offered at Disney World

Walt Disney World

LAKE BUENA VISTA, Fla. — Military personnel and their families can take advantage of savings on Walt Disney World's theme park admissions as well as on lodgings, car rentals and airfares, while enjoying three spectacular new shows and all the world-famous Disney attractions during Armed Forces Days Oct. 31-Nov. 30.

Oct. 31 begins a year-long Walt Disney World salute to the Bicentennial of the United States Constitution in the Magic Kingdom with a special daily "All-America Parade" and "Spirit of America" stage show.

The Daredevil Circus Spectacular premiered Oct. 1 at Epcot Center in Future World's Communicore with a skywalker, aerial artists and thrill acts performing daily. On World Showcase Lagoon, Laserphonic Fantasy provides dazzling nighttime entertainment each Saturday and Sunday evening at 9 p.m.

A variety of special-value Armed Forces Days tickets is offered: A one-day admission to the Magic Kingdom ($18.50); a one-day admission to Epcot Center ($18.50); and a two-day ticket providing separate one-day admissions to the Magic Kingdom and Epcot Center ($35).

Armed Forces personnel also can enjoy specially-priced accommodations at the Walt Disney World Resorts and the Walt Disney World Hotel Plaza in Lake Buena Vista.

Savings of up to 50-percent off standard room rates are offered for Armed Forces personnel at the Contemporary Resort, Polynesian Village Resort, The Disney Inn, The Disney Village Resort and Fort Wilderness (except campsites).

Other savings include 20-percent off a car rental through National Car Rental and up to 50-percent discount on airfare through Delta Airlines for servicemen and women traveling to the Walt Disney World Resort during Armed Forces Days.

AFD guests will also have the chance to participate in the "Everybody Wins" bonus birthday bonanza each weekend Oct. 3-Dec. 13, when every guest entering the Magic Kingdom or Epcot Center receives a gift. Each Saturday and Sunday five cars will be given away — one 1988 Chevrolet each hour between 9 a.m. and 2 p.m. Other prizes given out on Saturdays and Sundays range from Disney collectibles to Premier Cruise Line vacations.

With Mickey Mouse as honorary ringmaster, the 30-minute Daredevil Circus features high-riders balancing their Space Cycles on thin wires that zoom nearly to the top of Spaceship Earth, a jet-speed trapeze act, an "astrobat" atop a swaying space needle and an equally-brave "interplanetary mechanic" who "repairs" a wildly orbiting space station antenna by fearlessly climbing about it as it hurtles throughout the atmosphere.

The Magic Kingdom's Constitution bicentennial celebration begins with the "All-America Parade," a coast-to-coast salute to the spirit of America, its colorful landmarks and its people. More than 100 singers, dancers and favorite Disney characters are led down Main Street USA by Mickey Mouse and Minnie aboard a "WE THE PEOPLE" float.

All along the parade route, performers will hand out American flags to guests to wave and join in the happy mood.

As another major part of the celebration, Tomorrowland Stage will be transformed into a huge stars-and-stripes bandstand for an unabashedly patriotic musical tribute to the nation. Four times daily beginning Oct. 1 "The Spirit of America" features Yankee Doodle tunes, brass bands, high-stepping dancers and prancing Disney characters.

The goose-bump-producing grand finale features Minnie Mouse in her Martha Washington blue gown and Mickey, Donald, Pluto and Goofy costumed in colonial finery. With the Spirit of America Chorale humming "America the Beautiful," Disney characters recite the preamble to the Constitution.

Liberty Square in the Magic Kingdom will display rare Constitutional artifacts, including an 18th century copy of the Pennsylvania Packet, the first newspaper to print the U.S. Constitution; original newspapers that covered the Constitutional Convention; the Brashear Doubloon; the first gold coin minted in America and the world's most valuable coin. Copies of the Constitution and Declaration of Independence, as well as a replica of the Liberty Bell cast from the original mold.

Premiering this fall in Kraft's The Land pavilion at Epcot Center is a display of high-tech plant-growing equipment that might one day be used to support life on the moon through a Controlled Ecological Life Support System.

For more information about Walt Disney World Armed Forces Days, contact local Special Services or SATO offices. For information about resort hotel discounts and reservations, call (800) 732-0100 in Florida, or (305) 827-2500 nationwide; or write: Armed Forces Days, Walt Disney World CRO, Box 10,100 Lake Buena Vista, Fla. 32830-0100. Parents should teach kids how to avoid sexual abuse

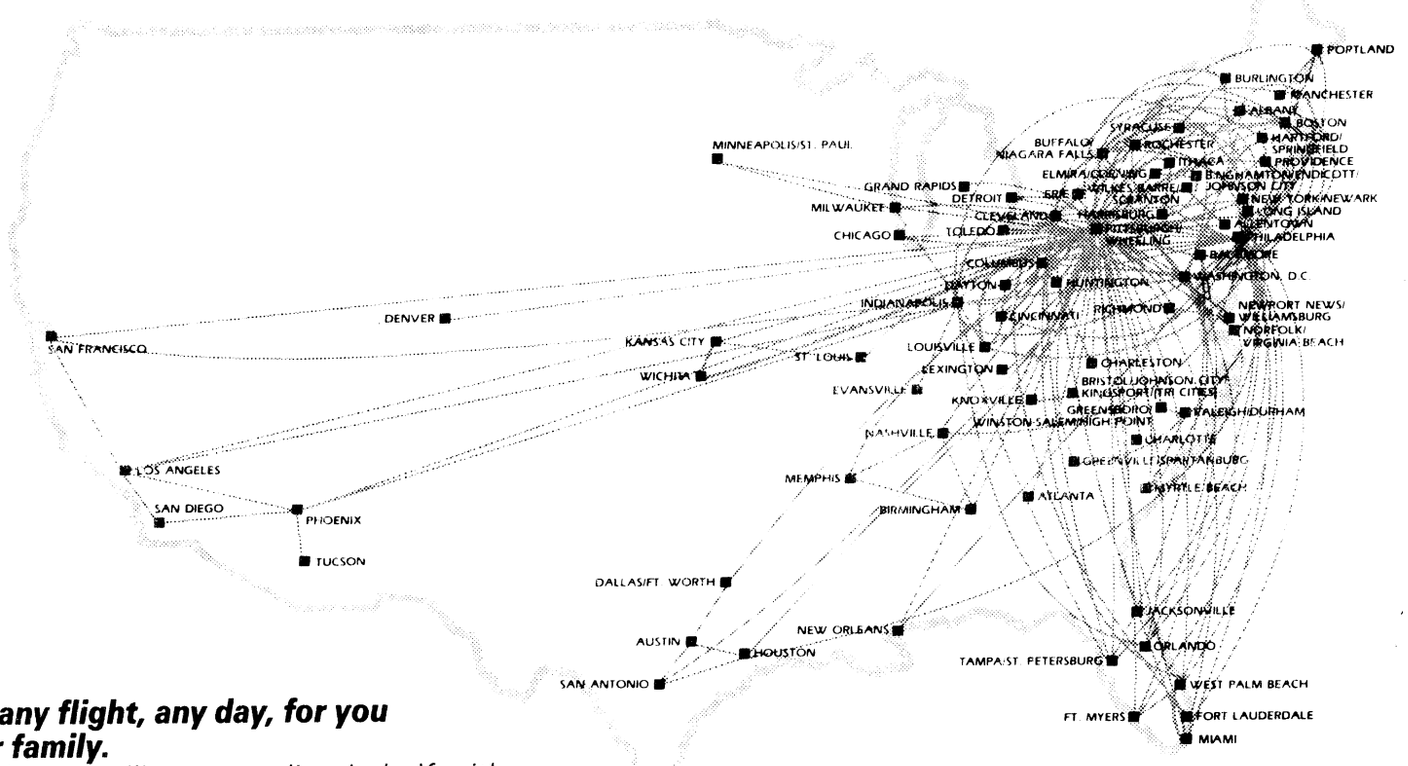
By Wendell D. Choate
Crime Prevention Office

Would your child know what to do if the babysitter or one of your friends wanted to play a "secret game" no one would know about? Would your child know where to get help if something frightening happened and you were not around?

Parents can take positive actions to protect their children and help them learn how to respond to threatening situations.



- Walk your neighborhood with your child or children. Show them safe places they can go in an emergency, like a neighbor's house, or an open store. Make sure they are taking the safest route to and from school.
- Rehearse with your children their full name(s), address and phone number (including the area code) and how to make emergency phone calls from home and public phone booths.
- Teach your children that no one — even someone they know — has the right to touch them in a way that makes them feel uncomfortable.
- Listen carefully to your children. Let them know they can talk to you about anything and you will always love them and want them with you.

Children bring us such joy. But caring for children also brings big responsibilities and bigger worries. With the coming of October comes Halloween. A time when children dress up as monsters, ghosts and witches. Halloween poses special problems, and dangers for children. Parents should discuss trick-or-treat with their children. Some rules to follow are:

- Accept only wrapped or packaged candy. Don't eat anything until the candy has had time to be thoroughly inspected at home.
- Use a pre-planned, well-lighted route.
- Watch for cars.
- Make sure costumes afford a clear field of vision, are short enough to prevent tripping and are visible to motorists.

These are only a few of the things that parents can do. A little common sense can make Halloween an enjoyable time for our children. Let us make every effort to make Halloween 1987 safe and incident-free. Remember, it is always best to accompany young children on any door-to-door activity. STRESS: you can learn to use it to your advantage

By Ben Hicks
Stray Shots

FORT MONROE, Va. — Without stress, the human race would have become extinct long ago. Our ability to react to stress has become our key to survival. But stress is a blessing only if we know how to use it, and how to stop it.

Our ancestors had only limited ability to reason things out. The development of the brain, and its ability to process information, was still basic, to the point of simplicity. The sole concern was, survive. The brain ws conditioned to recognize the basic needs of day-to-day life. If they were hungry, they ate, if they were cold or tired, they sought shelter.

Those same primitive ancestors were keenly attuned to physical danger. The brain had developed the ability to recognize physical danger and tell the body how to react. When the body received the signal, it automatically prepared for violent combat or desperate fleeing.

The heart beat faster and blood pressure increased; sugar was released from the liver, perspiring started (to cool the vigorously functioning body), muscles tensed, hormones and glandular juices were introduced into the bloodstream, breathing became rapid and shallow. The body had initiated its distress response.

The word stress is derived from "distress," meaning a state of danger or strain. Our lives are filled with stress. To cope with it, we must differentiate between real dangers (which require fighting or fleeing) and those we imagine.

For example, if you have an important project that is due, and you're running behind schedule, you may imagine all sorts of unpleasant things. The body then receives a mock danger from the brain. You begin to perspire, your blood pressure goes up...you become anxious.

If this happens frequently, your body will suffer from excess strain. The symptoms include: headaches, an inclination to infection, high blood pressure, digestive disorders, general nervousness, anxiety, unexplained aches, insomnia...etc. Such "stress" is the fashionable ailment of our time. No one is immune to the problem. It is a part of life.

The presence of stress symptoms may be a signal that you are on the road to developing health problems. In that case, it may well be time to inventory your lifestyle and make some needed changes.

To find out how well you cope with stress, ask yourself the following questions:

- Are you deliberate and unhurried in most of your daily activities?
- Are you able to wait patiently in line? Not just the chow line, but any line.
- Are you able to put your problems aside in order to sleep well at night?
- Do you solve interpersonal conflicts easily and in a constructive manner?
- Do you feel you have control over most things in your life?
- Do others see you as someone not easily upset?
- Do you normally express your feelings — both positive and negative — openly?
- Do you normally try to do one thing at a time?
- Do you feel you have the emotional support of your family and friends?
- Are you generally satisfied with your work?
- Are you, for the most part, a happy person?
- Are you able to relax once your work is finished?

If your answers to most or or all of these questions are "no," then you may not be handling stress well. Stress cannot be eliminated, but it can enhance and enrich your life; whereas, poor stress-coping skills can have disastrous effects.

Effective stress management skills are those by which an oyster, confronted with a grain of sand, creates a pearl. The ability to analyze problems, talking over fears with family and friends and using humor are examples of stress management skills.

Avoidance mechanisms, such as excessive drinking, smoking or eating during times of stress, might help to reduce some of the tension felt, but may only compound your physical health problems.

There are things you can do to enhance your ability to cope with stress.

- Set realistic and attainable long-term goals. This will help minimize the impact of changes in your life.
- Exercise regularly and pay attention to proper nutrition. This will increase your body's resistance to stress-related illness.
- Cut down or eliminate things like caffeine and nicotine.
- Learn to relax and enjoy your time off from work. Find a hobby or activity to involve yourself.
- Most important of all, take the time to identify the major stressors in your life, and take positive steps toward dealing with them.

If all this fails, it may be time to seek out professional help. A mental health facility is staffed with people who are trained to help you in matters of stress management. They'll help you discover, within yourself, the tools needed to bring things back into proper perspective. Note the way I said that: They help "YOU" discover the tools. Stress management is different for everyone. What works for one person may do little or nothing for someone else. There are no uniform cures. And, everyone reacts to, and handles, stress differently. Therefore, you have to find your own method.

As with anything you want to master in life, it takes determined practice to control the levels of stress in your life. Once you've learned to control the stresses, you will have more complete control over the quality of your life.

Canoeing can be an adventure

Georgia Department of Natural Resourse

Autumn brings bright colors, cool weather, and opportunities for wonderful canoe adventures in Georgia's state parks — from slow-moving "flat waters," to exciting mountain rivers, Georgia parks have a place for every canoeist.

This season, The Department of Natural Resources offers several guided canoe excursions for overnight or day trips.

"Fall provides the best conditions for canoeing in Georgia," explained David Ashley of DNR's Water Resources Management. "The weather is more comfortable, and water levels are lower, exposing riverbanks and sandbars for places to camp."

According to Ashley, planning a safe and fun canoe trip requires only a few simple steps. First, choose a river suited to your canoeing abilities. Beginners should stick to slow-moving waters, while advanced canoeists would enjoy a more challenging river speed. Another consideration when choosing a river is emergency access. Even the most experienced canoeist should always look for several places along the trip that might be needed for possible evacuation.

Safety remains the most important factor in canoeing. Ashley explains that canoeists should never travel alone and must always wear life-jackets. A canoeist himself for nine years, Ashley says his most important safety rule is: Alcohol and water do not mix.

After planning the trip, think of essential supplies for your particular excursion. For a day trip, you may only need sunscreen, a first aid kit, water and your camera. An overnight adventure calls for a few more items such as a sleeping bag, area maps, a light source, toiletries and food.

"Canoes can carry up to four times the amount a backpack carries," said Chuck Gregory, Interpretive Programming Coordinator for DNR. "Since weight in a canoe is not a major fctor, you can also have a lot of fun with the food you bring," he added.

Having your own personal canoe can add to the adventure. Gregory suggests the best places to shop for a canoe are boat marinas and outdoor specialty shops.

You can also rent a canoe for your trip. Many state parks have canoe rentals available: Fort Mountain, Unicoi, Vogel, Fort Yargo, Hamburg, Hard Labor Creek, High Falls, John Tanner, Watson Mill Bridge, George L. Smith, Laura S. Walker, Reed Bingham, Stephen C. Foster, Sweetwater Creek and Will-a-Way offer rentals.

Three state parks offer guided canoe excursions in October and November for the entire family. Pre-registration is required and the cost is $10 for canoe rental and $5 for personal canoes.

For further informaion about exciting canoe expeditions, write the Department of Natural Resources, 205 Butler St., S.E., Suite 1258, Atlanta, Ga., 30334, or call toll-free inside Georgia 1-800-3GA-PARK, or toll-free outside Georgia, 1-800-5GA-PARK.

Arts & Crafts — The Fort Benning Arts & Crafts, bldg. 2783, welcomes you to come by and see our woodshop. The shop has the best equipment money can buy and two school-trained cabinet makers. The instructors are available at all times to teach and assist you in making a plaque or a room full of furniture. We know that you will enjoy saving money by working in the wood shop, so come on by.

The woodworking area requires a qualification card prior to utilizing tools and equipment. This is required by regulation, and from our previous experience, we have found that time spent in the qualification safety class is well worth it. The safety class is offered every Saturday morning at 8:30.

We are located on the corner of Eckel Street and Sightseeing Road. We are very proud of our woodworking and cabinet-making capability, so join us Saturday, you will be glad you did. For more information, call 545-3677.

The Fort Benning Arts & Crafts Center Photo Lab — is like having your own photography school, and your own professional instructor. What can you learn? How to use your camera; how to use studio lighting; how to develop film; black and white negatives, color negatives and color slides; how to enlarge and print pictures.

What must I do to get started? Come by and see us and you will be fascinated by what you can do, and no experience is necessary, we will teach you step-by-step.

Now that the secret is out and you have gotten over the initial surprise of how quick and easy you can make your own pictures we hope you will spread the word. For the best pictures in town make them yourself at your Arts & Crafts Center, bldg. 2783, located on the corner of Eckel Street and Sightseeing Road or call us at 545-3677.

ITC soldier wins honors in U.S. Army Ten-miler

Army News Service

The Infantry Training Center's Lloyd McDonald was the top runner in the Association of the U.S. Army category of the annual Army 10 miler, "Run the River Bridges," held in Washington, D.C. recently.

The post team also faired well as they placed fourth in a field of over 88 military teams competing. Members of the team were Lloyd McDonald, Dan Sullivan, Michael Adams, Arcides Colon, Bradley Sievers, John Riley and Abdullah Bartula.

A Temple Hills, Md., man set a new course record at the Army 10-Miler in D.C., Darrell General finished the course in a blazing speed of 49:44.

Runner-up Dave Glidewell, a worker at the National Guard-Bureau, crossed the line in 50:06.

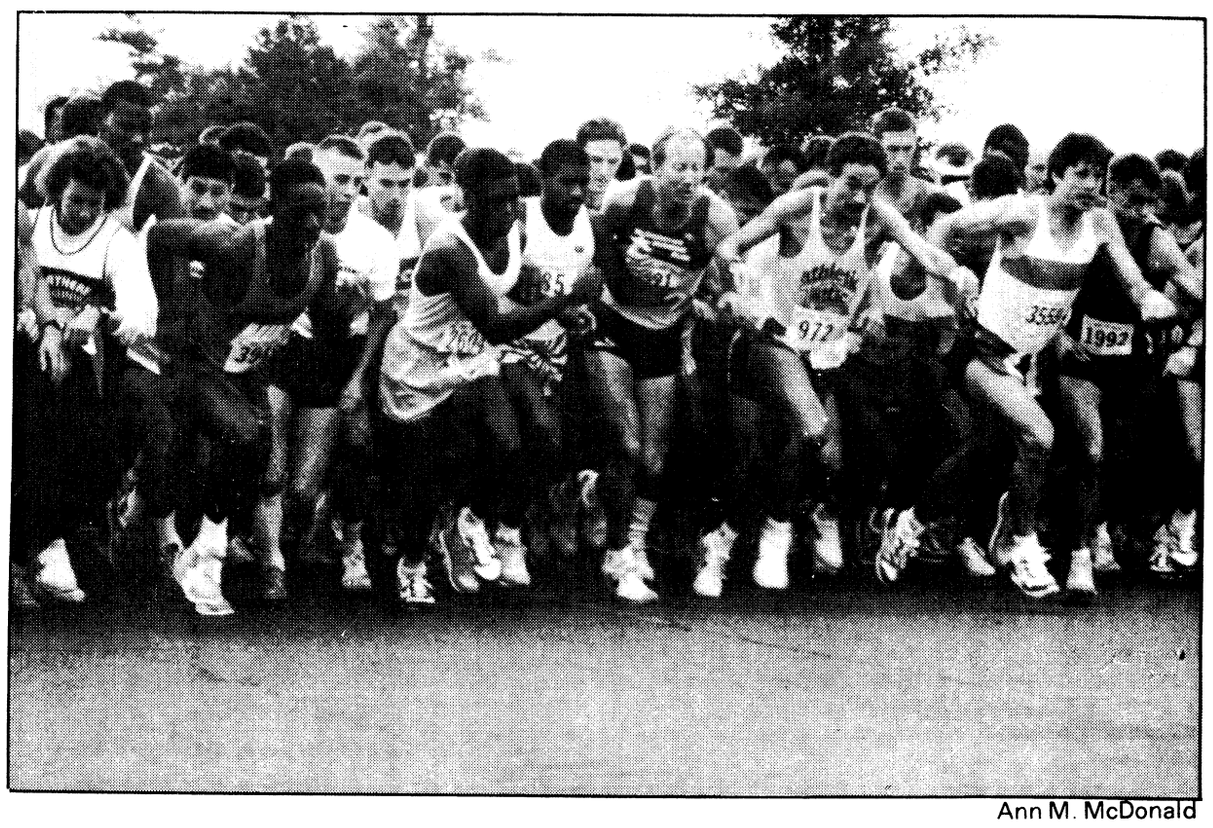
Pamela Briscoe, a research assistant at The George Washington University, won the women's competition with a time of 59:10.

In team competition, the Military District of Washington won the men's event while the "Life Liners" of the 101st Airborne Division won the women's.

More than 3,000 runners took off at about 8:10 a.m. Oct.11. A few speed burners moved out to lead the first mile; then Paul-Zimmerman of Adelphi, Md., who finished third, settled into the lead. The first mile was run in 5:09. Zimmerman took over the lead just after the mile marker.

As the leaders turned onto Memorial Bridge, Glidewell challenged and took over the lead. He opened about a 100-meter gap between him and Zimmerman, who was not ready to keep pace Glidewell.

At the end of the second mile, Glidewell was clocked at 9:55. Zimmerman started fading a bit, and General chugged past him. Still, Glidewell looked as if he had the lead well in hand.



Around the Tidal Basin, Glidewell at times had a lead of about 150 meters. But General hadn't made his move. Running easily, he ate up Glidewell's lead; and by the time the two went under the 14th Street Bridge (just before mile 5), General was in a position to challenge.

Through a remarkably calm Hain's Point, General and Glidewell ran shoulder-to-shoulder. Occasionally, one or the other would try to pull ahead, but the leads were always short-lived.

The finish for Glidewell came at the 8-mile mark. Both runners were moving easily. Both were running just under 5-minute miles. But General reached down deep and blasted ahead of Glidewell. "It wasn't as if he eased ahead of me," said Glidewell. "He just sprinted off. Before, I could put a little extra on and catch up, but not then. The next thing I knew, he was 50 yards ahead of me."

TOUCHDOWN! Once again the uarterback comes through in ıe clinch and pulls out the touch-own pass. The "Bears" from ompany A, 2nd Battalion, 18th ıfantry Regiment, beat the ervice Battery, 2nd Battalion,)th Field Artillery, "Desert .aiders" in 197th intramural)otball play.

'When the Alpha Bears took the eld, quarterback Gregory trafer took command and after everal critical first-downs, Sean Aulcahy caught the ball on the 20 ard line and darted in for a quick points. A successful run-in xtra point gave the Alpha Bears ın early 8-0 lead.

The Desert raiders fought with verything they had, with several ey interceptions closing down ıe Bears offense. The Raiders nswered the Bears points late in ıe second half when Alejundro ester caught a touchdown pass osing the gap to a 8-6. But, they ere unable to get the critical xtra point to tie the game.

Alpha Bears defense didn't low the Raiders to outmatch ıem in the second half. The ear's Wayne Burns played a ritical part by intercepting a aider's pass and returning it for touchdown. The score was now 14-6 in favor of the Bears.

The game was hard fought on both sides but the score of 14-6 held up, boosting the Alpha Bears to the record of 7-2, to keep them high in the standings of the 197th football league.

Run

Bridge, General lengthened his lead. His stride was longer than at any time during the race but his breathing remained the same. As he came to the north parking exit for the Pentagon, General was sprinting. He went down the incline toward the finish line and the crowd held its collective breath to see if he would break the course record. He did easily. The old course record of 50:03 stood no longer.

After the race, General, a Sears, Roebuck & Co. employee, said that his goal for the race was to come in under 50 minutes. "I knew if the conditions at Hain's Point were good and have a goodshot," he said. "You couldn't have asked for a better day."

Womens' winner Briscoe said much the same thing. "I wanted come in around an hour," she said. "But I knew a lot of it depended on how the weather was around Hain's Point. It was a bit humid, but there was hardly any wind. All-in-all, it was a good course and a good race."

SPORTS SHORTS

Marines plan D.C. marathon

The twelfth annual Marine Corps Marathon is scheduled for Nov. 8 in Washington D.C..

The event is open to all persons regradless of age or racing experience. However, the American Medical Joggers Association does not recommend marathon running for persons below the age of fourteen.

The Fort Benning Sports Office is putting together a team to represent the installation. Marathon runners should contact them at 545-5777/2332 with their latest marathon times.

Firing matches set for November

The annual USAIC Marksmanship matches are scheduled for Nov. 16-20, with a mandatory clinic Nov. 9 and 10.

The matches and clinic will take place at Easley, McAndrews and Phillips ranges with match headquarters located at bldg. 2601. They will consist of three categories: combat rifle (M16A1/M16A2), combat pistol (9mm/45 cal) and the light machinegun (LMG, M60) with both individual and team competition.

All officers in the grade of 0-3 or below and all enlisted in the grade of E-8 or below and assigned to a Fort Benning unit the day the competition starts are eligible to enter both team and individual competition.

Individuals in grades of 0-4 and above and E-9s are only eligible to fire in individual competition. With this exception, individuals that want to fire individually must also be a member of a team if his/her unit is sponsoring one.

Eligible soldiers should contact their team representative or first sergeants if they are interested in participating and fill out FORSCOM/TRADOC Form 235-6-R, (Individual Registration and entry card), available at their unit or bldg. 4, Room 624. Units must have the entry forms filled out correctly and returned to SFC Stewart Olson, Bldg. 4, Room 624, by the close of business Nov. 2, or the individual or team will not be able to participate.

Additional information may be found in the match bulletin, which will be available Nov. 15 from team representatives, or contact SFC Olson at 545-4252/2917.

Hunters must abide by post regulations

To hunt on Fort Benning,hunters must have a valid Georgia State hunting license, Georgia State big game tags (as required), Fort Benning post hunting permit, Fort Benning deer kill card (as required) and a valid Fort Benning vehicle registration sticker. Hunters must check the range clearance maps before entering any area and comply with both USAIC Regulation 210-2 and USAIC Circular 210-4.

Phone call-in makes checking in easier

A hunter call-in/call-out program will replace the physical sign-in/sign-out system of last year. This program will start with the 1987 Fort Benning deer firearms season.

The call-in/call-out telephone lines will be open seven days a week from 4 a.m. to 8 p.m..

The primary telephone number is 682-1589, a four-line rotary system. This is the number to call. The military number, 545-7680, is only one single line for use from rage safety phones. These numbers will be posted on range clearance maps located at Harmony Church, Uchee Creek and Building 247.

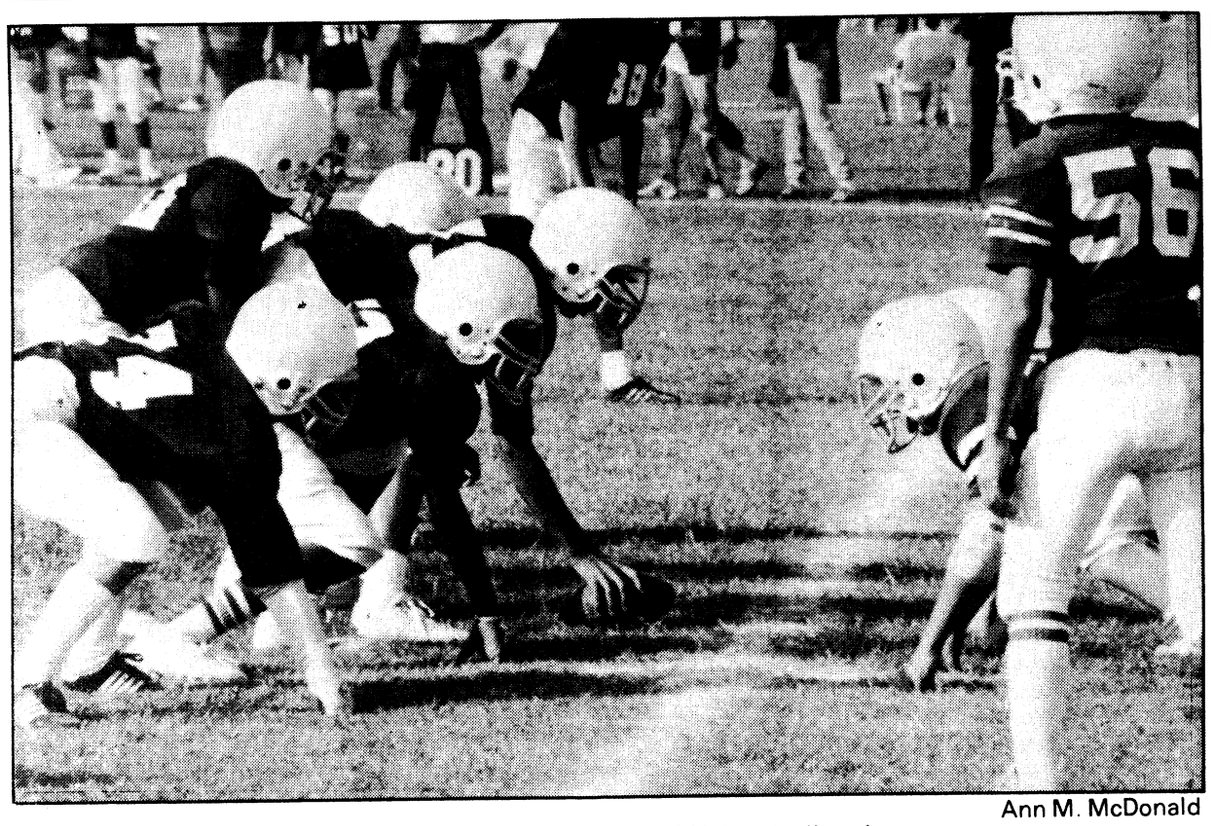
Uchee area suspends hunting license sales

State licenses and post permits will no longer be sold at the Uchee Creek Recreation Area on weekends and holidays. This change is due to construction of the new bait shop. State licenses and post permits will be available fromthe Outdoor Recreation Administration Office, Monday-Friday, 8 a.m. to 4:30 p.m..

Biathalon scheduled

The Fort Benning MEDDAC and DENTAC will host the Fort Benning Biathalon on Nov. 7.

The event will begin with a five-mile run followed by a 30-mile bicycle course.



Registration before Oct. 30 is $10. After Oct. 30 the registration fee is $13. All participants will receive a race T-shirt. Proceeds will benefit the Combat Medical Museum.

Information sheets with registration forms are available at the Martin Army Community Hospital, Building 4, all post gymnasiums, and troop medical clinics.

Golf club to be closed

The Golf course, pro shop, storage area and club house will be closed the first Monday of every month begining Nov. 2.

The Trojans prepare to do battle with the Broncos in YA football action.

Trojans remain undefeated

USAIC Public Affairs Office

The Trojans struggled to a 12-6 win over a tough Bronco team in YA Football action last Saturday.

With the win, the Trojans remain undefeated in the Pee Wee League at 5-0. The only other undefeated team in YA Football are the Wild Cats with a 3-0 record in the Grasshopper League.

In the first half of Saturdays Trojan-Bronco battle, Valdrin Smith turned in a 40-yard run that set up a 37-yard pass play to Kip Tillman for the TD.

The Broncós fought back and scored to tie the game up just before the half ended.

Defense was the key in the entire game as the offensive team struggle for yardage.

Late in the fourth quarter Lydell Beverly plowed into the endzone with a 3-yard run ending the only offensive drive of the half and grabbing the win for the Trojans.

Infantry Museum Run scheduled

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Military and civilian runners alike are invited to race in the National Infantry Museum Run on Fort Benning Oct. 31 beginning at 7:30 a.m.

The five-mile course, describe as flat and fast, will begin on Vibbert Avenue near Doughboy Stadium, the site for the Olympic-style finish.

Individual, team, and formation awards will be presented to men in 10 age groups and women in nine age groups.

Pre-registration is being held at the National Infantry Museum on Baltzell Avenue from 8 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. Monday through Friday until Oct. 31. Runners can also register on race morning prior to starting time. Entry fee is $6.

Registration forms are available at the museum, Columbus Bank and Trust Company, sporting goods stores and all Fort Benning gyms.

Race proceeds will go to the National Infantry Museum. The previous six races have raised over $67,733.

Some 4,659 participants ran in last year's race, one of the largest in the Southeast.

Tailgate party a football tradition

By Bert Randolph Sugar
PM Editorial Services

College football, it has been said, bears the same relationship to education as bullfighting does to agriculture.

Other more romantic observers have ventured the opinion that the college football season is the only time of year when a man can walk down the street with a blond on one arm and a blanket on the other without encountering raised eyebrows.

But however college football is defined, it is a tradition something greater than most laws, since nobody can repeal a tradition. One of those traditions that goes hand-in-hand with college football is the tailgate party.

In such diverse locales as Ann Arbor, Athens, Columbus, South Ben, Starkville, and all points north, east, west, and south, tailgate parties take place every Saturday afternoon in parking lots adjacent to giant football plants. Here, in a place that is at once a patch of land and a place in their hearts, the faithful gather, their lightest whisper like that of someone calling cattle home across the sands of time, as they get ready to whistle, hoot, stamp and cheer their heroes on to glory——and, more importantly, victory.

One such tailate party which bears a strong resemblance to any held across the football landscape can be found any Football Saturday in the valley at the foot of the Nittany Mountains in State College, Pennsylvania. There thousands congregate to form the third-largest city in the state——at least for the afternoon——and cheer for their pride, the National Champions.

Throughout Saturday morning ——though, truth to tell, some arrive as early as Friday afternoon——the caravans come. And all morning groups can be seen setting up their barbeque grills, tables, chairs, and other trappings of the good life——up to, and including, table cloths and candelabras.

Here can be seen, and smelled, such eclectic goodies as Polish sausages, elegant steaks, hamburgers and plain ol' hot dogs, all of which weigh heavily on one's midsection with pleasant effect.

While some attend to the business of food, others, dressed in the conservative blue-and-white of Penn State, their sweaters fitting them like pup tents over their strap-on tummies, can be found cavorting in and out of the other bivouacked vehicles, trading stories, drinks and hopes.

Occassionally listening to a group of traveling troubadors playing what passes for the Penn State Fight Song——a song echoed on some of the horns of the cars in the lot.

Everywhere is something indigenous to Penn State: a life-sized cardboard stand-up of the beloved leader of the Nittany Lions, Joe Paterno——called "Joe-Pa" by his followers.

With the foodstuffs disposed of, the pre-game "show" winding down, and the fires dimming, the crowd slowly moves toward the gates of Beaver Stadium, leaving the parking lot empty save for a few who came all the way to "watch" the game in the lot.

It is a ritual which will be repeated all over again the very next Football Saturday everywhere across the country. For this is what has replaced walking down the street with a blond on one arm and a blanket on the other as part of football's contribution to Americans.

Court okays release of AIDS test results in special cases

Army News Service

WASHINGTON — The Army Court of Military Review in Falls Church, Va., ruled Oct. 15 that positive HIV test results are admissible in Army courts-martial under some circumstances.

The ruling reverses the decision of the military judge in the case of "United States v. Morris."

Army Pvt. Adrian Morris Jr. of Fort Huachuca, Ariz., faces charges of sodomy and aggravated assault.

The prosecution alleges that Morris, while knowing he was infected with the AIDS virus, engaged in unprotected sexual acts with other soldiers.

The military judge had ruled that AIDS blood-test results were privileged and inadmissible as evidence. Morris' general court-martial was delayed while the prosecution appealed.

The Army appeals court's reversal of the military judge's ruling holds that Army policy is to protect a soldier from adverse action based solely on having AIDS, and that a privilege exists only for the statements of the soldier in the post-test epidemiological interview.

As a result of the court's ruling, the trial of Morris may resume, although he may appeal to the U.S. Court of Military Appeals in Washington.

"What the ruling means," said Brig. Gen. Donald W. Hansen, the Army's assistant judge advocate general for military law, "is that a positive test result can be used as part of a court-martial for post-test misconduct. No soldier is prosecuted simply because he has AIDS. But engaging in unprotected sex acts, when you know you can infect others, is criminal conduct and will be prosecuted when appropriate."

Vehicle collision leaves two people hospitalized

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Two people remain hospitalized after an early morning accident Monday on 101st Airborne Division Road.

According to a military police report of the incident, a Toyota van driven by SSgt. Edward James Petrie, collided with a Ford Escort driven by Grace G. Sears of Phenix City, at about 8:15 a.m.

The collision occurred on 101st Airborne Division Road on the Alabama side of the reservation.

Mona Petrie, a passenger in the van, was admitted to Martin Army Community Hospital with a fractured pelvis. She is in stable condition, a hospital spokesman said.

Mrs. Sears was initially treated at Martin Army Community Hospital for multiple trauma and was the transferred to The Medical Center in Columbus. A hospital spokesman said her condition is stable.

Petrie, the driver of the van, and his 4-year-old son Robert, were treated at MACH for minor injuries and released.

Petrie is assigned to Headquarters, 36th Engineer Group.

Military police have charged Petrie with driving on the wrong side of the road. Miss Sears was cited for driving with a suspended license.

Siegfried heads to command slot at Fort Polk, La.

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Col. Richard S. Siegfried, commander of the Infantry Training Center since January, will become assistant division commander of the 5th Infantry Division at Fort Polk, La., the Pentagon announced Wednesday.

Announcement of his reporting date is pending Senate confirmation of his promotion to brigadier general.

Siegfried, 49, enlisted in the Army in 1961 and was commissioned a second lieutenant in infantry upon graduation of Officer Candidate School in 1963.

A native of Elizabeth City, N.C., he served in Vietnam from 1967 through 1968 as a company commander and a brigade operations officer.

From 1977 through 1981, he was assigned to the 5th Infantry Division, where he served as a brigade executive officer, commander of a mechanized infantry battalion and as the division inspector general.

Siegfried has served at Fort Benning since June 1984 when he was assigned as director of the Light Infantry Task Force.

In August 1985, he assumed command of the 2nd Infantry Training Brigade.

He holds a master's degree from the University of Alabama, and is a graduate of the Armed Forces Staff College and the Army War College.

He has been awarded the Combat Infantry Badge, Parachutist Badge, and numerous medals including the Silver Star, Legion of Merit, Bronze Star and Purple Heart.

Siegfried's wife, Maggie, is the installation volunteer coordinator at Fort Benning.

Their son, Benjamin, whose two-year service with the 101st Airborne Division included peace-keeping duty the Sinai Desert, is a freshman at Columbus College.

The new commander of the ITC has not yet been named.

Reservists gearing up for 'Operation Golden Thrust' '87

Army News Service

WASHINGTON — The Army's largest peacetime reserve component mobilization exercise since World War II, "Operation Golden Thrust '88," will take place in November.

The exercise is scheduled for Nov. 6 through 22, by First U.S. Army headquarters at Fort Meade, Md.

According to Gen. Carl E. Vouno, chief of staff of the Army, "It offers us an opportunity to stress all mobilizationsystems and to examine the entire mobilization process."

Along with more than 24,000 Army National Guard and U.S. Army Reserve soldiers from 115 units, some 34,000 military and civilian support personnel at various headquarters, mobilization stations and armories will support "Golden Thrust" in the 12-state First Army region of mid-Atlantic and New England states.

1st Lt. Mary Ann Baldauf, the exercise's

The participating units will undergo a five-phase process designed to evaluate mobilization plans, policies and procedures and the administrative and logistical support systems for a large-scale call-up of reserve component units.

Once preparation for overseas movement is complete, the units will conduct field training at their mobilization station for the remaining portion of their two-week annual training period. No units or equipment will deploy overseas.

Watson takes reins at 197th Infantry Brigade

197th Inf. Bde. Public Affairs Office

Col. Harvey D. Watson assumed command of the 197th Infantry Brigade (M)(S) Tuesday during ceremonies at York Field. Col. William W. Hartzog relinquished command of the "Forever Forward" Brigade following nearly two years as commander.

Lt. Gen. John W. Foss, commander of the XVIII Airborne Corps, passed the 197th Infantry Brigade colors from Col. Hartzog to Col. Watson. Other distinguished guests at the ceremony were Maj. Gen Kenneth C. Leuer, post commander, Brig. Gen Barry R. McCaffrey, post deputy commander, Brig. Gen. Richard E. Haynes, commander of the 33rd Infantry Brigade, Illinois Army National Guard, and Brig. Gen. Kenneth R. Newbold, commander of the 30th Infantry Brigade (M)(S), North Carolina Army National Guard.

Watson was born in Rochester, New York. He entered active duty in 1966 for training and duty as an Infantry anti-armor crewman with the 3rd Battalion, 39th Infantry, 9th Infantry Division, Fort Riley, Kan. Upon completion of Infantry Officer School in 1967, he was commissioned as an Infantry Officer.

During his 20 years of commissioned service, Watson has served in a variety of command, instructor and staff positions. After commissioning and graduation from the Ranger and Airborne courses, Watson was assigned to the Infantry School as as instructor at the Florida Ranger Camp, Eglin, AFB, Florida.

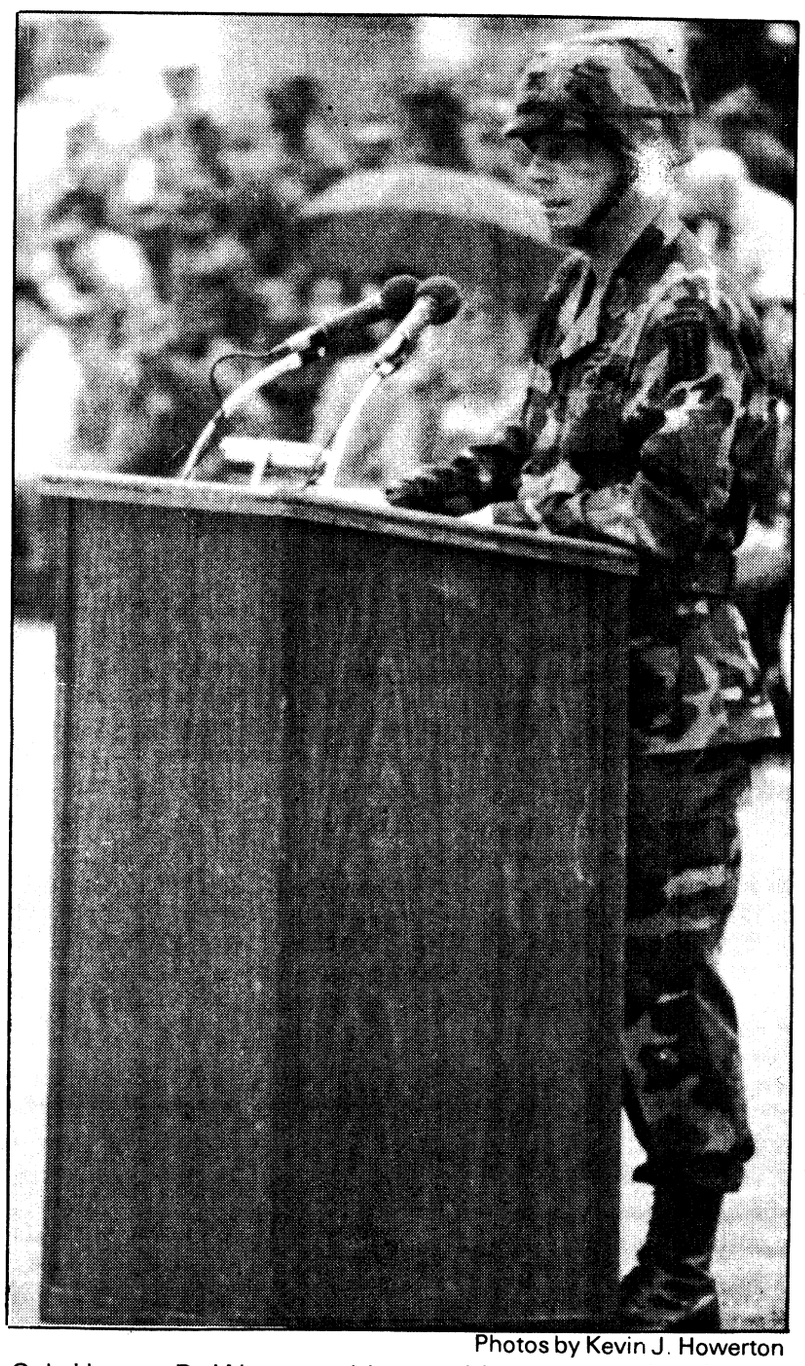
From the Ranger Department, Watson went to Vietnam, early in 1968, where he served with the 3rd Battalion, 187th Infantry, 101st Airborne Division, initially as a rifle platoon leader and later as a Company Commander.

Upon completion of his combat tour, Watson returned to the states and was assigned to the U.S. Army Engineer School, Fort Belvoir, Va., where he taught leadership and combat operations, and was the operations officer of the Combat Operations Division of the school. He then attended the Infantry Officer Advanced Course, followed by attendance at Auburn University where he earned a Master of Science degree in 1973.

He was then assigned to the 2nd Infantry Division in the Republic of Korea where he commanded the Combat Support Company, 1st Battalion, 23rd Infantry. His next assignment was to the 4th Infantry Division, Fort Carson, Colo., where he served as Adjutant, S-3 Air and Battalion Operations Officer in the 1st Battalion, 10th Infantry; Commander of the 2nd Battalion, 12th Infantry and Executive Officer of the 1st Battalion, 22nd Infantry.

Upon his completion of his tour of Fort Carson, Watson attended the Command and General Staff College, followed by a return to graduate school at Auburn University where he served as an Assistant Professor of Psychology on the faculty of the U.S. Military Academy.

Watson departed USMA in the summer of 1982 to join the 3rd Armor Division in Germany as commander of the 1st Battalion, 36th Infantry. Following this command, he was assigned as the division G-1, 3rd Armor Division. He then returned to the states to attend the U.S. Army War College.



During his attendance at the Army War College, Col. Watson completed a Research Fellowship where he conducted a study on the Measurement of Unit Performance. In the summer of 1986, Watson was assigned to Fort Benning as the President of the U.S. Army Infantry Board.

Watson's awards and decorations include the Combat Infantry Badge, the Silver Star, the Bronze Star Medal with "V" device and OLC, the Air Medal with OLC, Meritorious Service Medal, and Army Commendation Medal with 2 OLC.

Col. and Mrs. Watson, the former Dixie Folsom of Birmingham, Ala., have two children: Shannon, 14, and Auburn 8.

OPINION

Make sure kids know rules for safe trick-or-treating

Installation Safety Office

Fort Benning youngsters will be out trick-or-treating tomorrow from 6 to 8 p.m., and motorists are advised to use extra care during these hours.

Here are some "Safety Tips" to help make sure your child has a happy Halloween:

- Costumes should fit well and not cause a child to trip. Reflectorized tape will increase visibility. The mask should not restrict vision. Be sure a flashlight is carried and used. Small children should be supervised by an adult.
- Trick or treating should be restricted to familiar neighborhoods. Dark unlighted homes, and homes of known "cranks" should be avoided.
- Children without adults should trick or treat in groups.
- Children should be instructed not to eat their treats until after they have been inspected by mom. Some "cranks" have been known to insert needles, pins, and even fishhooks in candy or fruit. Fruit should be washed and cut into small sections before eating.

Parents, you can help by taking these safety precations. Light up your front porch. Remove obstacles from the lawn. Secure your dog. Even the friendliest dog can get agitated by the costumes and antics of children. Know where your children plan to go and insist they follow the plan.

Drivers be especially careful and alert for small, dark objects suddenly darting on to the roadway.

If you "older children" (over 21) plan on attending a party, don't drink and drive. If you do drink, use the designated driver or take a taxi.

Let's all, young and old, make this a happy night for all. Follow these simple safety precautions and Halloween will be a joyous rather than a sad occasion.

Know of any unsung heroes?

It seems like we always report the bad things that happen on post, while good news gets little space. We'd like to hear from our readers about some of the good things going on here. If you know someone who's an "unsung hero," write us a letter about it.

All letters must be typed, double-spaced and signed by the writer, including home or unit address and a telephone number. We will withhold a writer's name upon request, but please include it on your submission to us in case we need to contact you.

Letters are subject to standard editing and condensing depending on space available. Letters in which the writer requests that no changes be made will not be run.

Letters can be dropped off at The Bayonet office in Room 601, Building 4, or mailed to The Bayonet, Room 601, Building 4, Fort Benning Ga., 31905.

Snively makes it to the top — of a rappelling tower, that is

By Clyde Snively
USAIC Public Affairs Office

When Bry called to tell me that some soldiers at the 598th Maintenance Company had a "deal" for me, I figured they'd heard about my car woes and wanted to do a fellow soldier a good turn.

That's not why I was called.

It didn't take a whole lot of smarts to figure it out either. My suspicions were first aroused when I was told to report to Todd Field. I thought this a strange place for a maintenance bay, but knowing the 36th Engineer Group, one can never tell where they might decide to do just what.

Just what, as it turned out, had nothing to do with the car. Instead of mechanics' coveralls and wrenches, they had black gloves, snap links and ropes.

"Maybe this isn't the 598th," I thought hopefully to myself. "Maybe these are just some soldiers here for training and the maintenance folks are on the other side of that tower.

"You guys seen anyone here from the 598th?" I asked, hoping I wouldn't hear a, "that be us."

But I did. On top of that, they were expecting me. "You Snively? Been waiting on you," a big burly one said.

"Oh," I said cautiously.

"Yep," a skinny, gnarled one piped in, "we heard how you like to go to the field with grunts. Thought you might want to see what 'real men,' 'maintenance men,' do when they go to the field for training."

"If you're capable of fixing my car, that's all I need," I said, trying to challenge yet lure them into fixing the car and forgetting whatever it was they had in mind.

"Nah, we can do that stuff any day. Today we got these pathfinders from the 34th Med Battalion who are going to teach us to rappel. Just knew you'd love to join us," a Spec 4 said through wads of chewing tobacco.

"I think you may have mistaken me for someone else," I cried. "I know Airborne Annie would love to come out and cover this story for you. Do a much better job than me. I mean, like she'd even go up that tower with you, and ha, ha, if you had a helicopter, she'd go up in that too and get some really great shots by hanging out the door."

"We know," a sergeant said. "Tried to get her. But were told she's convalescing. Something about a deviated septum or something."

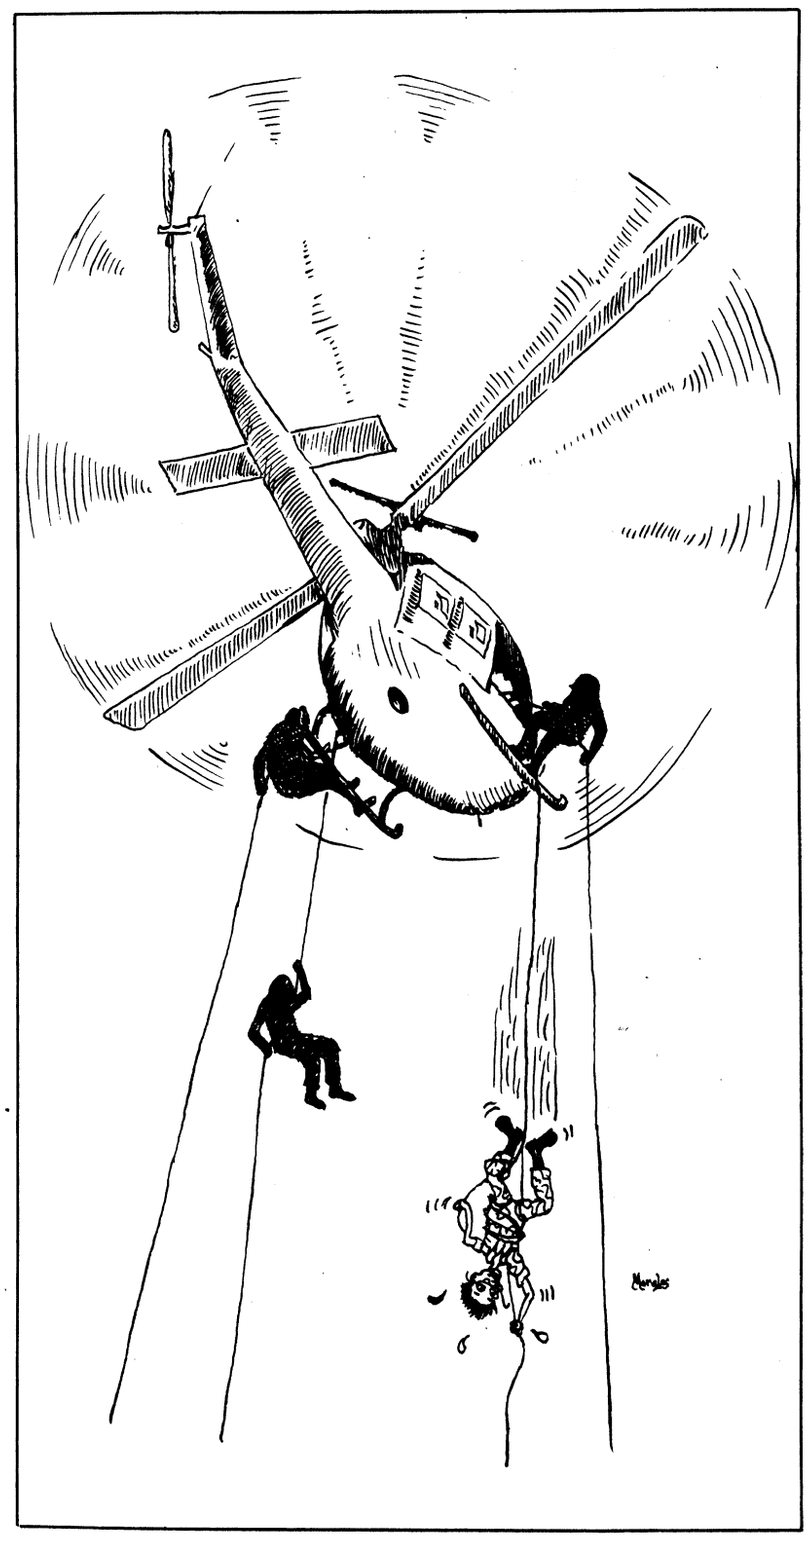
"Damn those airborne injuries," I muttered to myself.

"But your editor said you were available and would be able to do just as good a job," Bry chimed in.

"Woulda been nice if I'd been consulted," I grumbled as I followed them around to the back of the tower, figuring I'd climb to the top, take some shots from there, a few from the ground, then be outta there.

Wasn't in the plan.

First, they said for safety reasons, I should be tied into a Swiss seat. I went along with that. I even accepted the snap link, figuring that was part of the safety system.



I then climbed the ladder to take my pictures. Arriving at the top, I reached for my camera but was grabbed by a burly sergeant who twirled me around, jammed two ropes into my snap link and said, "your right arm is your brake arm. Keep it in the small of your back and you won't go nowhere, let it out and the rope slides through. Your left hand is your guide hand.

Okay, stand on the ledge, lean out, yell 'on rappel,' and start walking."

I was at the bottom, being told to yell "off rappel," before I realized what had happened, but I was only too happy to comply because all I wanted to do was get my shots and beat feet out of there.

Wrong again. After the pictures, I was told I'd earned lunch. Never one to turn down lunch, I stayed.

I was served a hearty meal of Menu 3, MRE, Beef Patty (dehydrated) Bean Component (we all chuckled over the next line, "not for preflight/flight use").

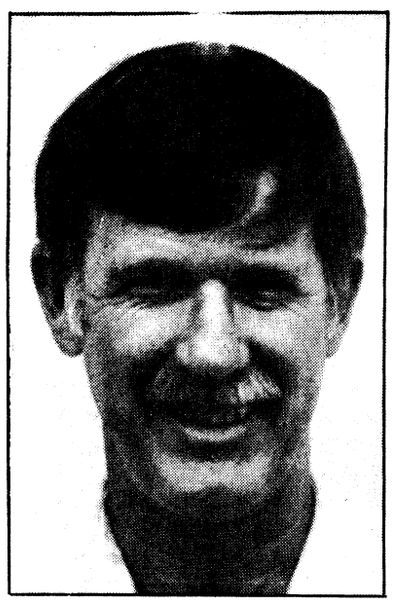
"Guess I'll have to drive my car back to work," I said. "No flights for me."

After lunch, the "Bull" said he wanted to show me "something." We went out to the middle of a field where four guys were putting on some strange harnesses. I looked to see if any parachutes were attached, but didn't see any.

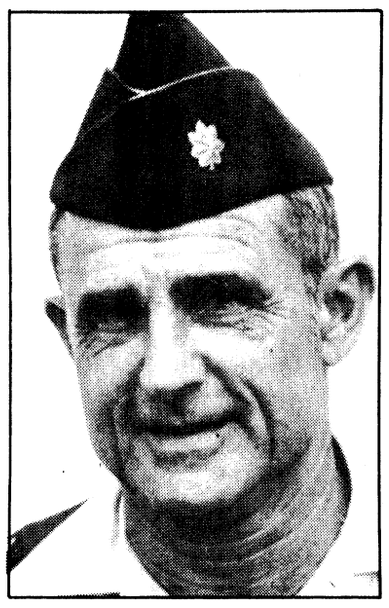
That's when Roger encouraged me to "try one on for size." I could see no harm in it, so I did.

I was trying to get comfy when I heard the "wop, wop" of helicopter blades beating the air above. I looked up in time to see four ropes drop toward us.



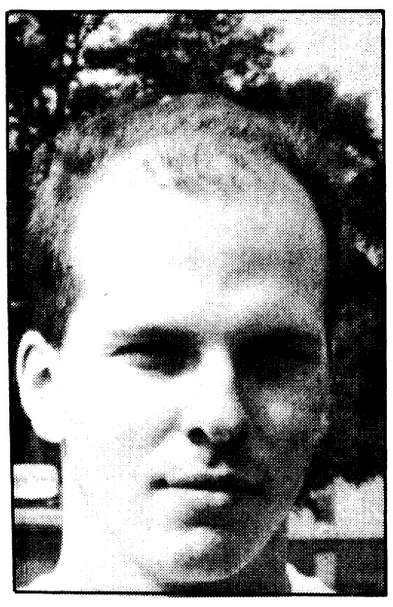
"Wow," I thought. "They're going to rappel right over us. I'll get some great shots."

But before I could reach for my camera under all the straps, Mat had latched one of the ropes onto me. "Must be getting ready to be a belay man," I thought when all of a sudden my head about jerked from my shoulders and all my bodily juices began to be squeezed out of me as the harness tightened about me and my feet left the ground.



I realized screaming would be of no use, so I prayed for what seemed to be an eternity until I was back on terra firma.

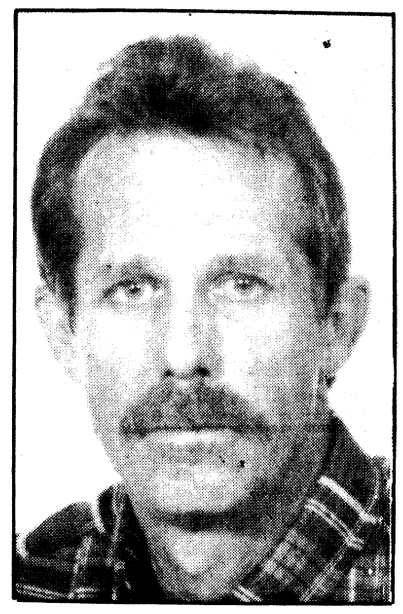
But guess who had the last laugh. Remember what the MRE packet said? Those maintenance men got some training they hadn't planned on.



VARIOUS VOICES / What do you think of the Moving Wall?

Lee R. Thomason, civilian employee, Training Support Center, DPTM — "At times I feel it's over played. It's a nice memorial, but the guys who died in World War I and World War II did not get this kind of thing."

Lt. Col. Tom Fluker, ROTC instructor, Baker High School — "I think it's excellent. It's something we need to remember, that time in history. It's an outstanding memorial to the Vietnam war dead."



Sp4 Steve Bowman, 690th Medical Co., 34th Medical Battalion — "I think it's a really good tribute to the casualties. The best thing about it is that it's good for people who won't ever get to see the real thing (in Washington, D.C.)."

Nancy Restrepo, Columbus resident — "I think it's great. My husband's name is on the Wall. I haven't had a chance to go to Washington, D.C., so I'm glad it came here.

Bill Stathura, retiree — "There is a lot of emotion behind it, a lot of feeling. I think it is one of the best things they have done for the veterans of Vietnam."

Roy Newman, civilian employee, TASC, DPTM — — "As a Vietnam veteran, I acknowledge the Wall as a living memorial, but it doesn't heal the wounds for the way we were treated when we came home. I hope it reminds people of the war and the price paid for freedom."

Moving Wall helps us all remember

By Becky Obert
Bayonet staff writer

I blew it.

My assignment was to go down to the fairgrounds where The Moving Wall is, and interview people visiting the memorial.

Do another one of those stories like the ones that have run in the local paper and on the six o'clock news this week.

But when I got down there Monday, I just couldn't do it.

For those of you who haven't visited the wall, it is an unassuming collection of black aluminum panels with white lettering.

It simply lists the names of the service members who were killed or missing in Vietnam, in the order of their death or disappearance. The panels are numbered and indexed, so that if you want to find a particular name, you can find it relatively easily.

And that's what people were doing down there Monday — looking for names.

It is a solemn occasion, kind of like attending a funeral.

Certainly not a time for some reporter hungry for a story to get in your face and ask questions.

Like asking some widow how it felt to see her husband's name there.

"I am glad the Wall came here," she said, her eyes bright with unshed tears. "I haven't had a chance to visit the one in Washington, D.C. I think it's about time they did something for Vietnam veterans."

After that, I didn't have the nerve to intrude on any body else there.

But it wasn't really necessary to ask people how they felt, because I could see it in their faces. They were sad, grieving for their loved ones.

Watching them, I couldn't help feeling sad too.

I don't think anyone can visit the Wall, look at all those names, and not feel an overwhelming sense of loss.

Before I visited the Wall, I talked to a friend who is a veteran of that war.

"Whatever you do, don't write a bunch of crap about people getting rid of their guilt over the war," he said. "We were professionals, doing our jobs in Vietnam, and we didn't feel guilty about it. We did the best we could, and some of us came home, some of us didn't."

Another veteran said he thinks the Wall is good because it reminds people of the price paid for freedom.

"I didn't know if the war was right when I went over there, and I still didn't know when I came home," he said. "But I met people there that I grew to love, ordinary people like you and me."

It is these people that we mourn for at the Moving Wall.

Editor's note: The Moving Wall exhibit ends today at 5 p.m. with a prayer and the playing of Taps.

COMMENTARY

AROUND THE ARMY

Officer wins slogan contest

WASHINGTON (ARNEWS) — "Tomorrow will be decided today. Vote."

That's the winning entry in this year's voting contest sponsored by the Office of the Secretary of Defense.

It was submitted by Army Maj. Jay B. Savage, a student at the Armed Forces Staff College in Norfolk, Va.

Second place went to another Army person, Donald Roberts, acivilian worker at Fort Monroe, Va. His slogan was "Vote — It's good for your constitution."

Henry Valentino, who directs the DOD Federal Voting Assistance Program, said, "There were so many exceptional entries this year that it was extremely difficult for the judges to choose a winner and runners-up."

Women wanted for drill sergeants

WASHINGTON (ARNEWS) — The Total Army Personnel Agency in Alexandria, Va., continues to seek women non-commissioned officers who have the mental and physical ability and sincere desire to be trained as drill sergeants.

"Drill sergeant duty offers a woman the chance to earn as much as $220 extra per month and to enhance her career," said SFC Charles L. Nunley of the TAPA drill sergeant team.

"But the most important thing is that it gives her the chance to train, guide and permanently influence young recruits entering the Army today," he said.

"The greatest need is for women in career management fields 71 (administration), 76 (supply and service) and 95 (military police)."

Women interested in applying should contact their local personnel service centers for details and assistance. They may also call the TAPA drill sergeant team at AUTOVON 221-8070 or commercial (202) 325-8070.

Marsh honors Yorktown spirit

WASHINGTON (ARNEWS) — As a "living legacy" symbolizing the victory 206 years ago at Yorktown, Va., a young oak tree found a new home Oct. 19 in the Pentagon's inner court.

Leading a delegation of senior Army officials, Secretary of the Army John O. Marsh Jr. planted the tree in a solemn ceremony featuring period music from the U.S. 3rd Infantry's Old Guard Fife and Drum Corps.

Marsh noted that the "victory oak," which now stands in the grassy area opposite the entrance to corridors 7 and 8, will help remind Pentagon workers and visitors alike that America's victory over the British at Yorktown "made our constitutional republic possible."

He echoed the sentiment that the tree, and others like it planted in comparable ceremonies elsewhere in the Army, will serve as a constant reminder of the price of freedom.

Marsh, accompanied by Army Vice Chief of Staff Gen. Arthur E. Brown Jr. and Director of the Army Staff Lt. Gen. C. M. Kicklighter, used his VIP shovel to mix into the ground a soil sample taken from the Yorktown battlefield.

At the close of the ceremony, he said that from now on, every Oct. 19th will, by regulation, be ceremonially observed Army-wide.

Soldiers wanted for special forces

WASHINGTON (ARNEWS) — High motivation, independence and innovation — that's what the Army's special forces need in soldiers volunteering to take the challenge to wear the "Green Beret."

"The Total Army Personnel Agency in Alexandria, Va., has more than doubled the number of soldiers authorized to undergo special forces training in fiscal year 1988," said Maj. Randel Weikle, who commands the recruiting teams visiting installations in search of volunteers. The figure went from 850 training slots in fiscal year 1987 to 2,100 in 1988.

Weilke explained that the increase in strength is needed to form a new unit, the U.S. Army 3rd Special Forces, to be headquartered at Fort Bragg, N.C.

"Once we determine that a candidate is qualified, we can give him a class date in three to five days," Weilke said. "He'll start training in the next available class."

New CHAMPUS deductible resumes

WASHINGTON (ARNEWS) — The new fiscal-year deductible for outpatient care with the Civilian Health and Medical Program of the Uniformed Services began Oct. 1.

This means that, from Oct. 1, 1987, through Sept. 30, 1988, service members pay the first $50 (for one person) or the first $100 (for a of their allowable outpatient medical bills.

CHAMPUS officials explain that you should send in your claims as you normally do, and that your state or area's CHAMPUS claims processor will keep track until you've met your deductible for the year.

If you have other insurance that pays part of your outpatient bills, attach a copy of the statement showing how much they paid toward your claim.

Army cracks down on travel fraud

Army News Service

WASHINGTON — Between December 1986 and September 1987, 102 service members in Europe were caught with duplicate leave forms in connection with space-available travel.

According to officials at U.S. Army, Europe, this practice clearly violates Article 34 of the Uniform Code of Military Justice (false or unauthorized pass offenses).

Violators are being prosecuted, officials say. When caught after travel has been completed, the service member has to pay the Military Airlift Command rate for distance traveled.

Potential loss of MAC privileges for one year, command notification and a military police blotter entry are also consequences for those caught abusing the privilege by submitting false leave forms.

Soldiers signing up for space-A travel must have a leave form with an effective date on or before the day they sign up, and must remain on leave during the entire period.

Some soldiers, to avoid using leave while waiting for their names to rise on the list, have their orders stamped by MAC terminal officials then return to their unit; there, they cancel it and return to work.

Later, when their names come near the top of the list, they have the unit cut new orders, but use the original stamped leave form and return to the terminal.

Overseas exchanges now take Discover Cards

Army and Air Force Exchange Service

DALLAS — Most Army and Air Force Exchange Service (AAFES) facilities overseas will begin accepting DISCOVER cards November 1.

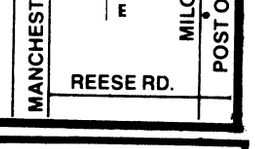
DISCOVER cards will be accepted in all main exchanges, military clothing sales stores, specialty stores, service stations (except for gas purchases) and in placing orders from the Exchange Mail Order Catalog. Some convenience stores and troop stores also accept the card.

VA home loan interest rate rises to 11 percent

Veterans Administration

The Veterans Administration is raising its maximum home loan interest rate from 10.5-percent to 11-percent, effective Oct. 5.

VA officials said the action is being taken to bring the VA rate closer in line with the mortgage market and to ensure that funds will be available to veterans seeking to buy or refinance homes.



The last change in the VA interest rate occurred on Sept. 8, 1987, when it went up from 10 to 10.5-percent.

Effective Oct. 5, the VA also will increase by one-half percent the maximum rates for Graduated Payment Mortgages to 11.25 percent, home inprovement loans to 12.5 percent, manufactured home loans to 13.5 percent, manufactured home lot-only loans to 13 percent, and manufactured home and lot loans to 13 percent.

VA home loans may be used to purchase, improve, or refinance a house or condominium, and to purchase or refinance a manufactured home.

Vuono speech explains his philosophy of the Army's future

Army News Service

WASHINGTON — Editor's Note: The following is a transcript of a speech given by Army Chief of Staff Gen. Carl E. Vuono Oct. 13, at the AUSA Convention in Washington.

Thank you, Mr. Caligiuri, Mr. Secretary, distinguished guests, friends and fellow soldiers. I am delighted to be able to talk with you today about our Army.

The Association of the United States Army is a special organization in our country which brings together concerned citizens, and men and women of industry, with active and retired members of all military components in a common cause. You are essential to telling the Army story.

This is the first time I have had the opportunity to report to you in my role as the chief of staff of the Army. I am happy to have this chance relatively early in my tenure — you know I'm at that awkward time in a new position.

When you first go in you can face the tough issues by saying "that happened before I got here" or "I haven't had time to get a round to fixing that one yet;" well, I'm at the point now where I can't say that anymore — actually, I never could.

Like many of you, I am a part of the Army's past. We have participated in the planning and the decisions which have shaped the present Army. Recognizing that helps us understand how yesterday's actions and today's plans shape the Army of the future.

The celebration of the bicentennial year of the Constitution has served to highlight the Army's historical role in carrying out our national security objectives. We have changed greatly as a nation and as an Army in the 200 years since the signing of our Constitution, but the need for a ready force, dedicated to support and defend, has never changed. It is as important today as it was so many years ago.

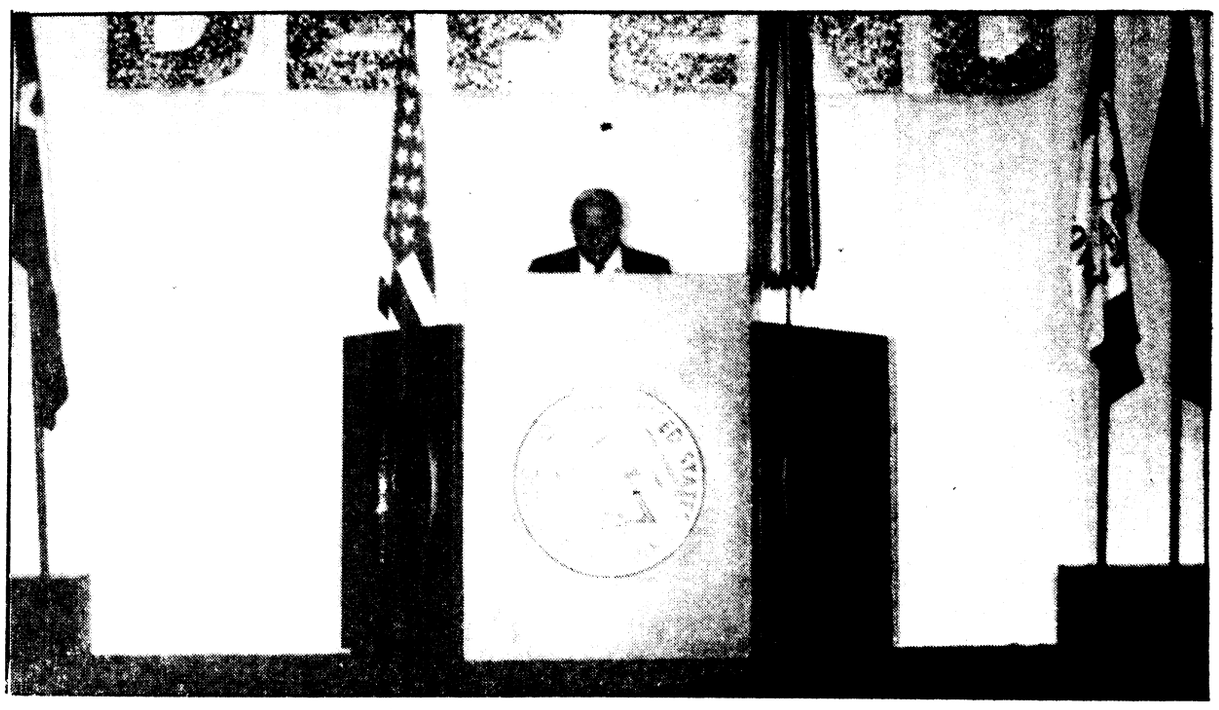
What I want to do is to give you a brief report on the status of today's Army, and what we are doing to maintain the current momentum and shape our future.

Our focus must be on war-fighting. The role of the Army is to provide to the combatant commands, worldwide, in support of our national security objectives, combat-ready ground forces who, in concert with our sister services and our allies, are prepared to fight, and to win.

These Army forces are focused on war-fighting. They know how to fight — are trained to fight.

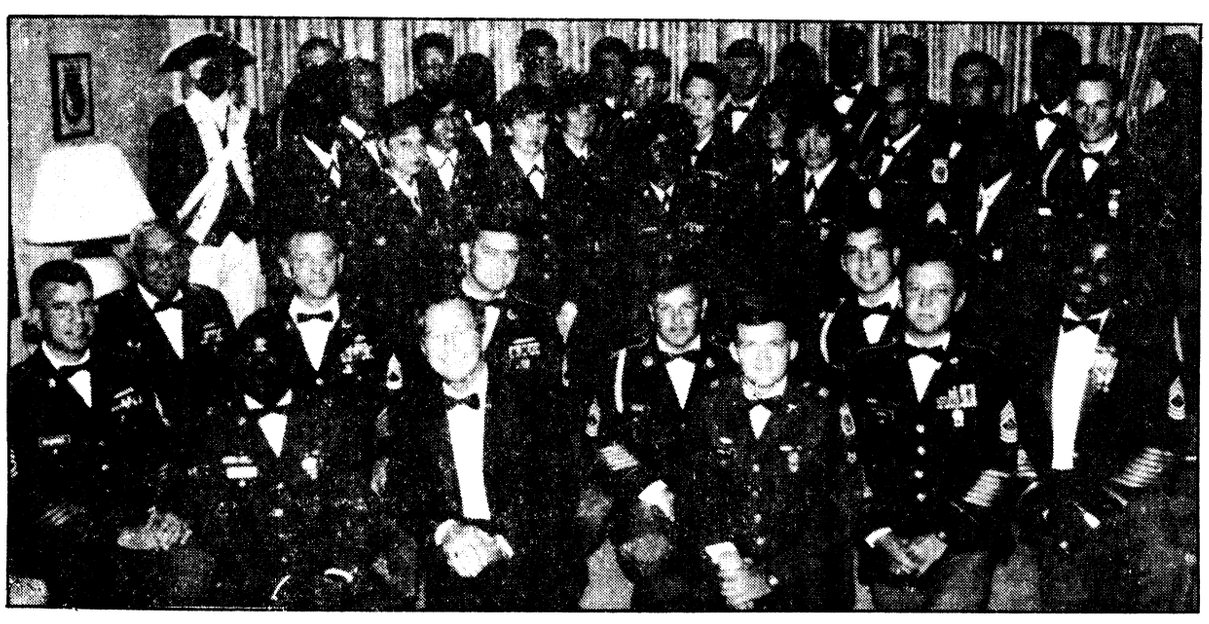
Above all, our total Army must be a ready Army. The active component, reserve components, and our civilians share the responsibility to ensure readiness, today and in the future.

We have built a ready force this decade — a quality Army that recruits and trains the best young soldiers and leaders our nation has to offer, that develops the most technically advanced equipment our industry can produce, and that conducts the most comprehensive education, training and leader development programs yet devised.



This is an Army that sees itself in terms of its wartime missions, from mobilization and deployment through sustaining combat. This is an Army that sees itself fighting as part of a unified force of all U.S. services and within an alliance framework.

We have much in our Army to be proud of. The state of the Army is excellent, but we can't rest on our laurels. To be relevant and do our jobs properly in developing the Army needed for today and tomorrow, we must improve our collective understanding and preparation for the future — linked to the needs of our nation and the responsibilities of our combatant commands.



It is clear that the threat is still growing, and the international environment is shifting. The growing economic and military power of many developing countries signals the possibility of more regional military conflicts. The probability of significant arms control agreements heightens the need to redress the conventional imbalance of forces in established theaters. Here, the preparation for the future includes a look at the past.

Thirty years ago, Gen. Maxwell Taylor, as chief of staff of the Army, was rebutting the Radford Proposal. (You may recall that Adm. Radford was chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff.) Radford wanted to greatly reduce the size of the Army because "We would never fight the Soviets in a conventional war."

What is interesting about Taylor's approach to the question of force structure revision is that he did not address the need for an Army for its own sake — his analysis simply addressed the role of the Army in support of national security objectives. That was sufficient to carry the day.

A decade and a half later we can find Gen. Creighton Abrams exploring The Army's appropriate response to the policy of detente by looking at the role of the Army in support of national security objectives.

We are doing the same thing today. We are deliberately fielding an Army capable of responding to our national security objectives within the context of the present world environment. Because that environment remains dynamic, in order to shape the future, we must continue to update our long range plans, based on our vision of that future. Without a long range plan, we cannot know where we are going and cannot adequately decide how to establish priorities and apply resources to current readiness and future development.

The nation is changing — as our economy moves to higher technology and to changes in our traditional industries, we have to assess our industrial mobilization capability and discover the necessary adjustments in order to meet our wartime requirements.

Emerging technology, some of which has a generational half life shorter than our acquisition cycle, calls for more than awareness on the Army's part; it calls for involvement — shaping and driving technology in the areas we most need it.

We have a continuing mission to shape our future by defining requirements. I consider this a primary duty of the Army chief of staff because requirements shape the Army of the future and are a necessary precondition to an effective acquisition process.

The results of the Packard Commission and the Department of Defense Reorganization Act have only highlighted this long-term Army responsibility — a responsibility that I take very seriously as I discharge my duties as chief of staff.

We face less-than-ideal budget environments over the next several years. Our approach will be a disciplined and clear presentation of requirements for the systems and programs which have the greatest payoff in terms of our war-fighting capability.

An organization such as the U.S. Army shows vitality by continuing to grow, not necessarily bigger, but always better.

We can be proud of the current status of our Army, and I fully realize that it represents the product of farsighted leadership decisions, and in some instances, efforts that have spanned many years.

Today, the Army does not require radical change. Instead, it needs to focus its efforts on those areas that result in readiness to maintain the current momentum and build the Army of the future.

Our first focus is on the recruiting and retaining of quality people — quality soldiers are not a luxury; they are essential. Quality soldiers enable the Army to be efficient in our preparation for war.

They achieve higher standards in training, they have few discipline difficulties, they complete their terms of service, they provide stability in units, and they remain the foundation of our readiness.

Why? Quality soldiers are a combat multiplier. They are the kind of soldiers needed for war because of the decentralization and rapid pace of combat. Our soldiers are key to being able to fight and win on future battlefields.

Challenges: despite demographic trends and an improving economy, we have succeeded in meeting and exceeding our recruiting and retention goals in both quality and quantity. We know that, given the financial tools, we can continue to provide the Army the quality soldier we need.

However, it appears our very successes have led to reductions in our recruiting resources.

Here's what we need to do: we have to make sure that others understand the need for quality soldiers — the foundation of Army readiness. We need the resources to reach potential recruits, and the incentives to attract them. We must make those readiness investments last through improved retention.

Retention is enhanced by a challenging and satisfying military service. A major contribution to retention is ensuring that our soldiers and families know we will take care of them. You see, family programs are not only the right thing to do for our soldiers — they also improve our readiness through retention.

Having the right kind of soldier is the first step toward the second area of focus: The design and fielding of the right mix of forces.

The changing world scene and the resulting adjustments in our national security objectives demand that we continue to field the proper mix of heavy, light, and special operations forces to meet our worldwide commitments.

As new technology becomes available, we may modify our force design — always with an eye toward enhancing the ability to conduct joint operations.

Why? The United States will remain a world power. In that role, we encompass the entire range of conflict intensity, risk, and probability. We simply cannot indulge in preparing for a single war against a single type of enemy in a single world region.

Challenges: we presently have a relatively constant Total Army strength. I don't see that changing. Our planning for the future must be realistic. We cannot solve problems by putting them off into the distant future.

Here's what we need to do: we must see the Army as a strategic force. There is one Army oriented on different theaters that span the globe, one single force to be optimized for our war-fighting missions.

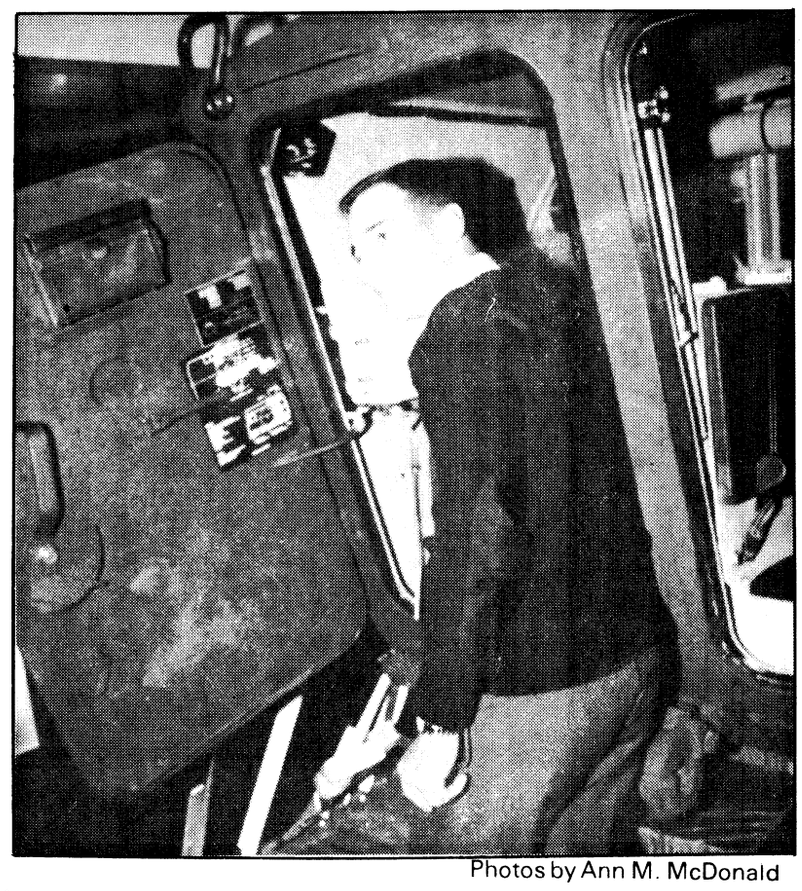
We will continue our efforts to maintain the right balance among heavy/light/SOF, AC/RC/CIV, and forward deployed/rapidly deployable elements. Our guideposts for this effort are always the security objectives of our nation.

Third, we will train as we will fight — training is the top priority for the Total Army. Training is clearly the responsibility of all leaders (officers and NCO's) throughout the planning, preparing, rehearsing, executing, and assessing of training. Leaders must determine appropriate unit and individual tasks from an examination of the unit's wartime missions, including mobilization and sustainment operations.

We must train as part of a unified force. We will never fight alone, so we must train with other services and with our allies. Always, training has to be done to standards.

Training should be exciting. It must be exciting. Soldiers know and respond when it is.

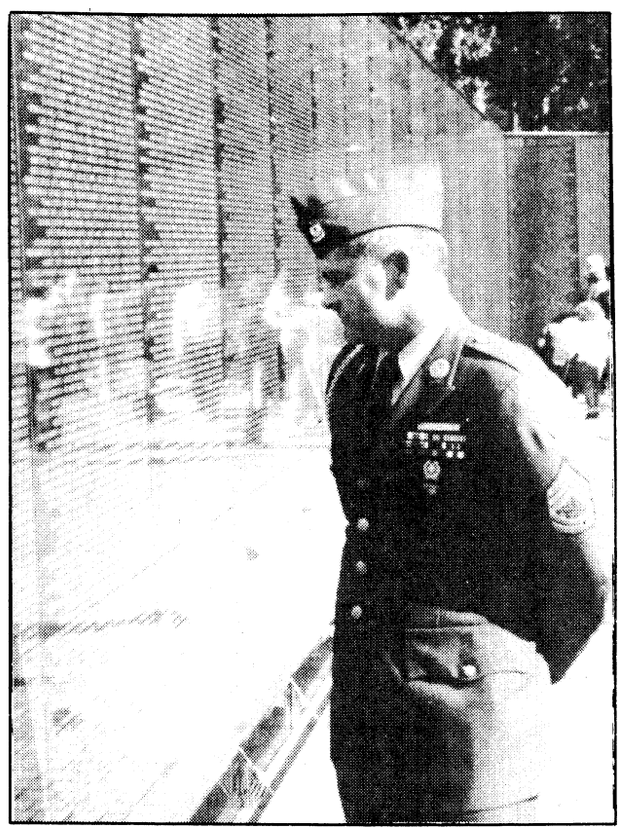
Why? Good training produces readiness for war. Further, realistic training is the test of the credibility of our deterrence. Potential adversaries take note of our training, a fact which demonstrates that we train as we intend to fight. Training is a team-building effort. Training tests concepts and equipment.



Challenges: the major challenges to training are constraints on resources — dollars, time, space and the characteristics of the environment.

Here's what we need to do: we have to improve the planning and executing of training so that none of our precious resources is wasted. We are expanding the use of simulations to prepare our staffs and our units for the constrained training opportunities.

This helps us get the most out of these efforts. We will continue to seek the occasions to include all our training in order to take advantage of the unique battlefield contributions they make.



Currently, our combat training centers provide the most realistic conditions in the world for our

ASK THE JUDGE

Staff Judge Advocate

Q: I am thinking about getting a consolidation loan in order to decrease my monthly payments and leave me more cash for the holidays. They sound like a good idea, but I don't understand how they work. Can you explain them?

Most consolidation loans work by combining several small monthly payments into one large payment. In order to do this, the loan company will combine all of your debts and arrive at a subtotal equal to the amount of all of your current bills. They will then add their administration fees, interest rate, and any other loan charges so that you end up paying more than you originally owed. In order to make the idea appealing, they will then divide the total amount over a long enough period so that the monthly payment is less than what you are used to paying, thus giving you the impression that you are saving money.

Once you sign a consolidation contract, the company will pay off the bills which you have consolidated and you will only make one monthly payment. The consolidation loan company may acquire all the rights of your original creditors when they make these payments, including the right to hold liens against your property if you should default on you new repayment plan.

Many people who have problems handling their credit are fooled into increasing their indebtedness through a consolidation program and end up in a worse financial situation than they started with. This happens because the consolidation company pays off the outstanding balances on your accounts, leaving you with a significant amount of your credit line available again.

Those who have had a difficult time resisting the use of credit cards before, may often continue to charge things until they find that have again accumulated a large number of new monthly bills. These will now have to be paid in addition to the consolidated loan payments.

The idea of consolidating all of your payments and increasing your extra cash every month may seem like the answer to your holiday spending problems, but in the long run, it will end up costing you even more money.

Teenagers need to be aware of danger from strangers

By Wendell Choate
Provost Marshals Office

Some straight talk to teens about street safety. All your life you've gotten warnings about being careful. "Don't do this", "Don't go there", "Never walk alone at night". It gets boring, but there are "whys" behind the "don'ts", and they have to do with more than keeping from worrying or giving you grief. The facts speak for themselves: there are over 2,000 violent crimes committed by strangers against teenagers every day.

Even if you think you know how to stay safe, review these reasons behind the warnings:

"Always let someone know where you're going and what time you'll be back." It may seem like and invasion of privacy, but it's plain common sense. If you're in trouble and no one knows you're missing, no one's going to look for you. If you have an accident, or get assaulted, an hour or two can make a life or death difference.

"Never hitchhike or accept a ride from a stranger." Your friends may do it "all the time" and never have a problem. Many hitchhikers aren't so lucky. Some get kidnapped, raped, even killed. There is no way to tell if anyone, old or young, male or female, good looking or not, can be a threat — and at 60 mph, there's no way out.

"Don't take deserted shortcuts — especially at night." You may go through the parking lot, the ball field, or the alley every day — but things are different at night. Who you can't see can hurt you. Criminals don't want to get caught — so they're much less likely to try something on a well-lighted street with lots of people around. Taking a few extra minutes to go the long way can save your money — or your life.

"Never walk alone at night." You know the old saying about safety in numbers. A single person is a much easier target for a thief or other criminal. It may seem easier to go on your own than to wait for a ride or find someone to walk with, but it's much more of a hassle to get robbed or hurt.

"If you do get mugged or robbed, don't take unnecessary risks." A few dollars, a radio, a bike, even a car — it's not worth risking your life. It has nothing to do with being chicken. It's a matter of being smart.

Lookout for yourself, your friends, and your community. To report a crime, call the Military Police Desk Sergeant at 545-5223/5224. You can help TAKE A BITE OUT OF CRIME.

AIDS virus not passed by casual contact

Acquired immune deficiency syndrome, or AIDS, is unlike the common cold or the chicken pox — it cannot be transmitted by being exposed to an infected person through casual contact, such as at work or at home.

AIDS is caused by a virus that does not survive well outside the body. It is often spread by sexual contact, exposure to blood containig the virus, or by sharing contaminated IV drug equipment. It is not spread by casual everyday contact, such as sneezing, shaking hands, or eating or working in an office with an infected individual.

Dr. Lewellys F. Barker, M.D., senior vice president for development at the American Red Cross, says studies have shown that doctors, nurses and medical technicians who have taken care of AIDS patients have not contracted the disease by ordinary contact. There are a few cases of health care workers who have become infected apparently by needle stick accidents or exposure through skin breaks and mucous membranes to blood containing the virus.

"A handshake and a hug won't transmit AIDS, but because the disease is often fatal, there is a considerable amount of public anxiety, especially in the workplace, about how one can and cannot get the disease." Barker added.

AIDS was first reported among five individuals merely six years ago. Since then more than 36,000 cases have been reported, and the Public Health Service projects that more than 270,000 individuals will be infected by the year 1991, with an estimated 179,00 deaths. Homosexuals and heterosexuals with multiple sexual partners, and intravenous drug abusers who share needles and their sexual partners have the highest risk of contracting AIDS.

"For individuals who don't engage in the high risk behavior, AIDS is an unlikely disease to catch. Yet recent surveys have shown that almost one third of the American population believes AIDS can be spread by casual contact, in spite of all scientific evidence to the contrary," Barker said.

According to the Red Cross medical expert, AIDS is not spread by the food one eats, no matter who prepared or served the food. People can't get AIDS by simply being near a co-worker who has the disease nor will they get it by having coffee, going to lunch or sharing toilet facilities with that person.

Besides sexual contact and contaminated needles, the virus can be passed on from infected mothers to their babies during pregnancy, at birth or shortly after birth.

Before blood tests were developed, in a small number of cases, the virus did spread through blood transfusions, but according to Barker, "today the chances that anyone will get AIDS from blood transfusions are extremely small because of improved screening of donors and sensitive blood tests that can detect antibodies to the virus. Further, there is no risk of contracting AIDS associated with the act of giving blood."

According to the Center for Disease Control, about three-percent of AIDS patients do not fall into any of the high risk categories, but scientists believe that the virus was spread to them in similar ways. Some patients died before complete medical histories could be taken.

"There is an urgent need to educate the American public about how one can and cannot get AIDS. Knowing the risk factors for AIDS and preventing risk-related behavior will reduce the spread of AIDS, and it can also help reduce the unwarrented fear of catching the disease," Barker said.

PARISIAN

Keeping good soldiers in the Army is part of every leader's job. Whether you're an NCO or an officer, your leadership can have a powerful influence on your soldiers, especially on their decisions to reenlist.

Nobody knows better than you that when soldiers are treated fairly, with respect, and with a true concern for their goals and accomplishments, they're more likely to find their Army experience a positive one. And more likely to want to continue that experience.

As you know, it takes a lot to develop a good soldier. Time, patience, and effort. But the end result is worth it. Not just for a proud soldier, or the Army, but as a credit to your ability as a leader.

Next time you stand in front of your troops, remember that they're not just in the Army, they are the Army. And they're yours to keep.

ARMY. BE ALL YOU CAN BE.

THEY'RE YOURS TO KEEP.

SPIRITUAL

Luther's thesis led to his excommunication from church

By Charles Canada
CPE Student

Saturday is Reformation Day. On the Eve of All Saints in 1517, a young Catholic monk, Dr. Martin Luther, posted 95 Thesis to the Whittenberg Castle Church door. It was an ordinary academic procedure which called for an "in house" debate.

What they said, however, was anything but ordinary and challenged the very fiber of the 16th century church parctice which we experience even today

These thesis spelled freedom. They placed the forgiveness of sins totally on the work of Jesus Christ. They spoke of a direct connection of man to God. These statements affirmed the importance of each person's daily work. Furthermore, they proclaimed the dignity of all people.

Luther's views were so widely and quickly published that he had to answer to Pope Leo X within 30 days. Luther stood firm and in 1520 was ex-communicated and a year later decreed and outlaw by Emperor Charles V and remained one until his death in 1547.

A man of intellect and faith, Luther translated both the New Testament (1522) and the Old Testament (1524) into German language. This began the translation of the Bible into modern languages and established the literary language of Germany.

His sermons, lectures, and commentaries filled volumes, but the work which had its most effect was the publication of his "Small Catechism", a handbook of basic Christian doctrine, so that parents could teach their children of faith.

Another particular point of reform, and important for us as we celebrate the 200th anniversary of the U.S. Constitution, was the separation of church and state.

Luther advocated that God has established two "kingdoms." The state, he says, is God's way to restrain the wicked and preserve the outward peace. God has also ordained the spiritual kingdom, the church, by which the Holy Spirit produces righteous under Christ. Each from God, but when mixed, the tyranny of the devil invades both.

Furthermore, the Christian is called to reponsible participation in the world's affairs. The separation of the two kingdoms does not mean withdrawal from civic life. Faith does not take us out of the social order but enables us to live within it with our neighbor. He expressed it this way, "Suffer injustice toward yourself as a true christian...and tolerate no injustice toward your neighbor."

Yet, reformation does not belong to one man or age of history. It's an opportunity for change that comes to all of us each day. Today God challenges us to examine our lives and find not only our failures but His forgiveness for us for the sake of His Son, Jesus.

May we let God's grace through His word reform our lives. Celebrate His love at your place of worship this Sunday as a group of Lutherans do each Sunday, at 9 a.m. in the Custer Terrace Chapel.

maneuver and support units. The National Training Center at Fort Irwin, Calif., and the Joint Readiness Training Center at Fort Chaffee and Little Rock Air Force Base, Ark., will be joined by the combat maneuver training complex at Hohenfels, Germany.

Additionally, a fourth center, the Battle Command Training program, will open in January at Fort Leavenworth, Kan., to train corps and division commanders and the battle staffs. These represent more than great training opportunities.

They will also allow us to evaluate our training programs and refine our doctrine. The experience develops our leaders, and the lessons learned are shared throughout the force.

We must preserve those opportunities to train which we now have that may be threatened if taken for granted. These range from overseas deployments to unique environments for the Total Army force, to the use of local training areas which are very close to civilian communities. An informed public is our best ally.

Finally, we have to read and understand Field Manual 25-100, titled "Training the Force." The expressed philosophy and methodology are tested and productive. We have to read it.

The fourth area of focus is the continuation of our modernization momentum. Force modernization is more than fielding equipment — it is the integration of concepts and doctrine, the personnel, training, operations, logistics, research, development, and acquisition functions necessary to organize, train, equip and sustain a ready force.

That's why our doctrine and our joint war-fighting concepts are the basis for force modernization.

Readiness demands continuous improvement. That's also why modernization is never complete.

Why? The threat continues to develop and adapt as we aim our modernization at key vulnerabilities of our potential enemies. The fielding of capabilities that enable the fullest pursuit of evolving doctrine ensure that necessary level of readiness, and thereby deterrence.

Challenges: technology continues to accelerate the pace of change, so that the life span of a technological edge may be very short indeed. This often makes long lead times on development and procurement ineffective as well as inefficient.

We have to continue to explore the use of "off the shelf" items to meet pressing requirements. On the other hand, our commitment to current readiness can tempt us to a short term view which imposes R&D trade-offs.

We must continuously enhance our conventional capabilities — for today and tomorrow.All of us share that responsibility.

Here's what we need to do: all of us should look together for the most effective and efficient systems -- systems that enable us to defeat potential enemies now and in "the future." "All of Us" means industry, Congress, and allies involved early on and for the long term. At the same time, we need to press forward with the "systems" approach. Modernization by groups of systems will keep the effort more reflective of warfighting concepts than will individual items of equipment. In some cases, this approach may reduce operations and support costs, and simplify requiremments.

As our final area of focus, we must address our responsibility for leader development — leader development is more than assignments of policies: it is commitment. Commitment by the Army to look at all the aspects of a soldier's professional development so that the result is a leader capable of contributing to our joint warfighting mission.

Why? Leader development is crucial to the ultimate success of our Army. There's no making up for lost opportunity to teach and to guide the professional development of our future leaders. Leader development is progressive, and at every level it must link all leaders involved in warfighting.

Challenges: We have to educate and train our Army's leaders so that each shall have the attributes essential to profesional growth, and to inspire each to a lifetime of service to the nation.

Here's what we need to do: the Army's schools and academies, and each of us in leadership positions, have the responsibility to teach and to provide the opportunity for subordinates to contribute and to grow. We can help junior leaders develop through guidance, coaching, encouragement, and listening. Then we should step back and allow them to expand their competence and confidence through experience. Leader development is an investment in the future of our Army. Tomorrow's leaders are our legacy to our profesion and our nation.

Conclusion: I began by describing the dynamic environment of our profession. There is simply no such thing as a final doctrine, a timeless force design, or an ultimate weapon. I've given you some challenges I think we have to meet together, and have outlined the principles to keep in mind as we pursue the solutions.

As I travel around our Army and see its soldiers and leaders, I feel immense pride in their commitment to our country and our Army. I see it in basic training at Fort Jackson, S.C., where bright-eyed young soldiers are learning the simplest form of bounding overwatch in live-fire "buddy team" exercises. I see it at the National Training Center, where brigade-sized combined-arms task forces are experiencing the challenge of integration of combat power — both in combined arms and in the unified action for Army and Air Force.

The Army is taking care of business.

Two hundred years ago, this nation drafted a Constitution which provided noble goals for man and sacred duties for the generations of service men who would swear allegiance. "To provide for the common defense" and "to secure the blessings of liberty" were understandable and identifiable thoughts with the revolution a recent memory and the enemy as close as the woodline.

Today, the threat is farther removed but no less real, and the nation continues to need men of character "to support and defend." Just as 200 years ago, many of today's great patriots are not in uniform.

The key to continuing the Army's positive momentum is the recognition of what is important. I believe we are doing that — what is important is preparing for battle, because that is the key to deterrence.

Everywhere we have the evidence of what can be accomplished when we can bring together the right doctrine and the right quality of soldier, equipment, training and leaders.

Ann M. McDonald

Old Man Whitley's ghost guards buried treasures

By Aimee R. Holden
Bayonet staff writer

Legend has it that somewhere on Fort Benning a ghostly figure stands guard over a buried treasure. But, for those eager to go in search of the hidden loot - eware. If you find it you may not live to enjoy it.

The story began in 1861, when the Whitley family had a horse racing track on the property that was someday to become the site of Fort Benning's Infantry School.

A week before the Civil War began, a huge race was staged. People came from everywhere and by the end of the race the Whitley family had aquired their largest winnings ever.

The uncle and his four nephews split the fortune. The nephews quickly spent their share celebrating, but the uncle saved his $150,000 in gold and silver coins.

That same week the Civil War broke out, and the boys left to fight.

A year later, one of the nephews came home to borrow money from his uncle. Uncle Whitley refused. Slaves reported hearing threats and curses shouted that night. The nephew left the next morning to return to his assignment, but his uncle didn't come out to say good-bye. Several days later the uncle was found dead in a field - shot through the forehead.

The old man's money was never found, and a rumor spread that he had buried it.

Some fifty years later, in 1916, Old Man Whitley's ghost made its first reported appearance. At that time, a large plantation called Riverside surrounded the house where Fort Benning's CG now resides.

The ghost was spotted by the plantation manager and his assistant near where the Officers' Club swimming pool is now located. He had the figure of an old man and was dressed in trousers, a white ruffled tie and a black string necktie. In the middle of his forehead was an odd-looking dark circle.

The men followed the mysterious figure for a short distance until it came to a large, skeletal tree on the side of a ravine. The ghost positioned himself under a giant black, overhanging branch and began counting his paces down a hill. The manager counted also, and found that the old man had gone 20 paces below and to the left of the tree.

There, the ghost stopped, beckoned to his followers, and pointed toward the ground beneath him.

He then returned to the old tree, circling it. He found a hollow bore on the tree and counted 45 paces from it. The old man stopped again, pointed to the ground beneath him, and disappeared.

The plantation manager and his helper never found what the ghost was pointing toward.

After World War I ended, Fort Benning made its home at Bussey Plantation, "Riverside." The plantation manager's helper was forced to find employment elsewhere, and became a milkman. Sometime in the early 1920's he recited his story to an army major who became enthralled with the idea of discovering buried treasure.

The major promised two members of Fort Benning's baseball team each a third of the bounty if they helped him in his search.

Armed with a metal detector, the men combed the side of the ravine for the hiding place. Soon the detector began to indicate that the treasure was near. The men dug, but didn't find anything.

The major didn't know that his cohorts had decided to double-cross him. The sergeant working the metal detector had told them to dig in the wrong place!

The two sergeants returned the next day - this time to the real spot - and began to dig.

The day was cold and damp, and they dug for a long while. Eventually they heard the clink of metal against their shovels, and soon they excitedly hauled a large chest out of the hole. It was filled with gold and silver coins.

When the major returned to the scene later, he instantly realized his buddies had deceived him. Enraged, he set out to investigate.

Before he could take action, however, one of the sergeants collapsed at home. He was rushed to the hosptital where his illness was diagnosed as pneumonia.

The same afternoon, the second sergeant became ill during a baseball game. He, too, was taken to the hospital and diagnosed as having pneumonia. Both men died shortly after.

While the sergeants were still in the hospital, the major saw his chance, and took the chest for himself. Within hours he was stricken with pneumonia and died.

The other half of Old Man Whitley's treasure is still buried somewhere out there. And maybe if you're lucky, he'll lead you to it. But before you begin digging, make sure it's a nice day out.

Haunted house

Children of all ages are invited to tour Fort Benning's Haunted House on Halloween Eve from 6 p.m. through 9 p.m.

The haunted house is located in Building 8 in Indianhead Terrace. Admission is twenty-five cents, and those brave enough to enter will receive a grab-bag filled with surprises.

The Dixie Dog Band will perform on the lawn from 6 p.m. through 9 p.m.

Prior to the opening of the Haunted House there will be a game room set up in the Indianhead gym, located directly across from Building 8. Games will cost a quarter and winners will receive balloons or candy.

At 5 p.m. there will be a judging for the scariest and the most original costume. Winners will receive a trophy.

Woman helps rescue orphans

By Lynn Barlotta
OWC Publicity chairman

"My name is Betty Moul, I work for U.S. Steel, and I can type." That's how Betty Moul Tisdale introduced herself to Dr. Tom Dooley, standing in the door of his New York hospital room.

Her life and her destiny, changed when she walked through that door. Betty had always had a comfortable life. She was a single career woman interested in fashion, the theater and single men.

She had been untouched by the desperate nations and people of the world, until she became a volunteer for Dr. Dooley.

In her hours before and after her salaried job, she would type, take dictation and learn about the culture and horrible conditions of the poorest people in the world, the refugees and orphans of India, Laos and Vietnam.

When Dr. Dooley died, Betty wanted to continue working for his cause and the orphanages and hospitals that he had established. She used all of her saving to buy a ticket to travel to the troubled countries that had been touched by Dr. Dooley's humanitarian work.

When she returned to New York, she took a new job as secretary to Senator Jacob Javits. It was from this office that Betty would solicit donations from major corporations for the orphanage of An Lac.

In April 1975, Betty and her army of friends and volunteers successfully airlifted 219 orphans out of South Vietnam just days before Saigon fell under communist regime.

With North Vietnamese forces twelve miles outside of Saigon, the Air Force plane lifted off with 219 orphans and Betty aboard. When she told Madame Ngai good-bye, Betty promised never to forget.

When the airlift landed at Lawson Field in the middle of the night, there was an army of volunteers waiting. The Post Commander had turned Wilbur School over to the volunteers and they had turned the school into an evacuation facility.

The post and the city of Columbus provided everything the children would need. There was a crib for every baby, doctors to take care of their medical needs and best of all, loving arms to hold them and nurture them.

Betty now holds a position with the Pacific Institute in Seattle, Wash., teaching people how to be successful. Her message to them is to visualize themselves attaining there goals, visualize each phase of the progression towards success. A positive attitude must permeate every aspect of their lives.

She tells them to set their goals and persist until the mission is accomplished. The prevailing attitude must be that everything is possible. Self-motivation, self-control and self-esteem are the powerful qualities that are the keys to success.

After speaking to the OWC last week, many waited to speak to her, to thank her. One woman slipped Betty some cash and said, "When you are ready to go back, this will help you get there."

Maybe she will go back, maybe she will take up a different cause, but whatever she chooses to do, it will be for the betterment of mankind and it will be sucessful.

ROTC Command searchs for song

ROTC Cadet Command

FORT MONROE, Va. — The Army's ROTC Cadet Command is "looking for a few good songs."

The Cadet Command headquarters is sponsoring a contest to choose an official song, and is seeking original musical scores from interested composers. The song chosen will be an official march, to be used by military bands at concerts and ceremonies.

The Reserve Officers' Association of the United States will award a $500 U.S. savings bond to the composer who submits the winning entry.

The contest is open to all military and civilian composers. The entries must be traditional military marches that will be suitable for concert and ceremonial play. They must be written in the performance-ready form of a score and individual parts. Music sheets cannot include names or any other information which could identify the entrants.

The United States Continental Army Band will perform and record all entries. These recordings will be used for the judging.

All entries must be accompanied by a written statement that acknowledges the composer's consent to transfer all rights to the song to Cadet Command. The winning entrant will be required to copyright the music and formally transfer all rights to the Cadet Command Headquarters. Entries will not be returned to originators.

A panel of musicians will judge the entries. Individuals who submit entries are not eligible to serve as judges. The judges will nominate the four best entries, and the commanding general of Cadet Command will choose the winner form among these four.

Entrants should submit sheet music and the statement of willingness to relinquish rights to: Commander, U.S. Army ROTC Cadet Command, ATTN: ATCC-CMPA, Fort Monroe, Va. 23651-5000. Deadline for submission is Feb. 5, 1988.

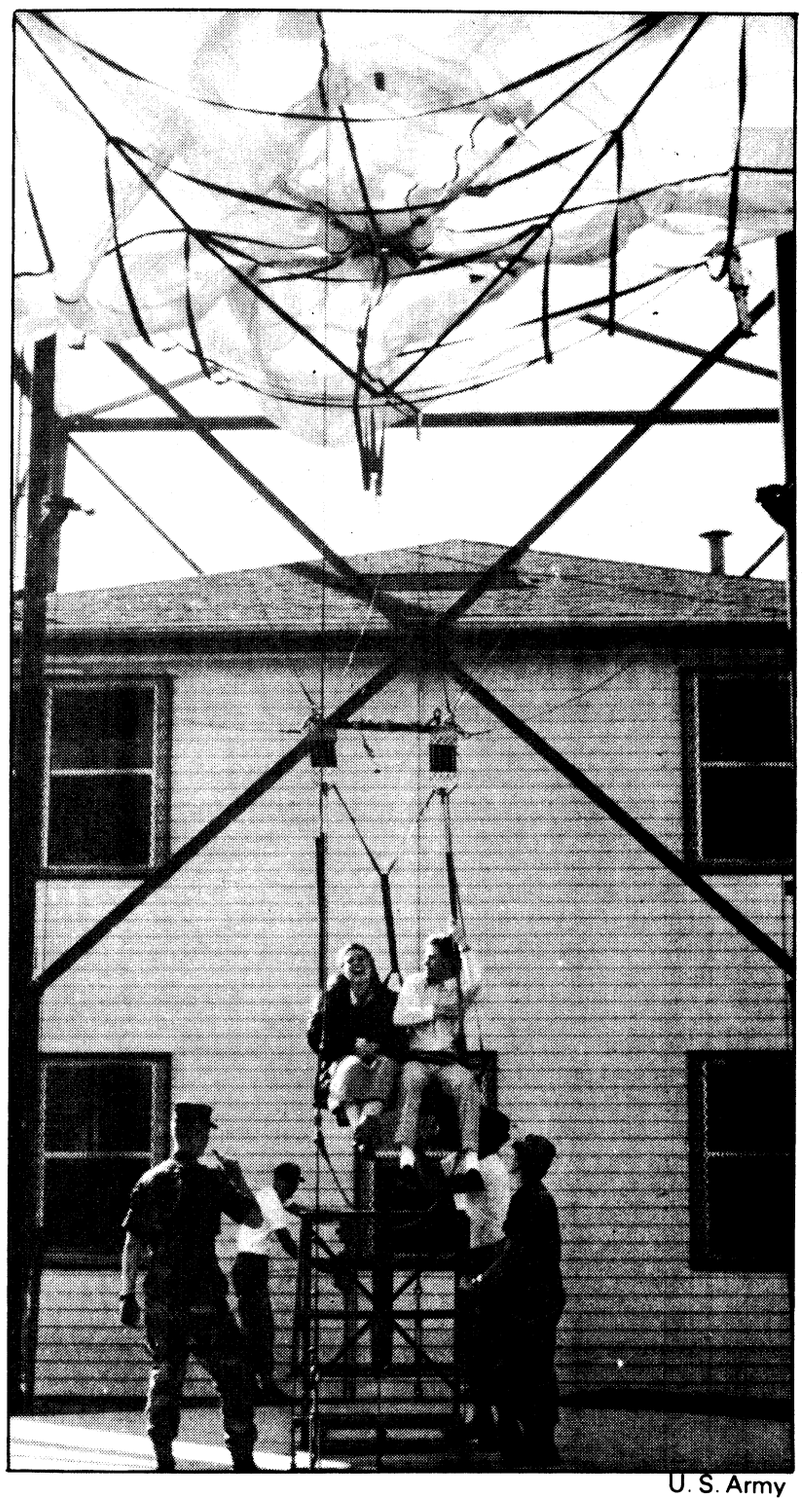
For further information, interested induviduals can call Ms. Terry or Mr. Wallace at Cadet Command headquarters, autovan 680-3865, Commercial (804) 727-3865.

West Germans visit Benning

By Charlotte Osterburg
ASTD

As a long-time resident of the Fort Benning-Columbus area, I was very proud that the members of the "Junge Union" (Young Wing of the Christian Democratic Party) of the Federal Republic of Germany (FRG) included us in their itinerary.

Following a full schedule of visits in Columbus with the editor-in-chief of the Ledger-Enquirer newspaper, the Chief of Police and the Superintendent of Schools a visit with the Mayor of Columbus and an extensive tour of the Historic District of Columbus, the group came to spend the afternoon at Fort Benning on Oct. 8 .



This being a U.S. State Department sponsored visit, they were escorted by Sophia Miskiewicz, a State Department employee, who also acted as their official interpreter. Due to their fluency in English, her services in this area were not required to a great extent.

In spite of rather short notice, officials at Fort Benning arranged a good program for their German visitors. The Public Affairs Officer, USAIC, Lieutenant Colonel Pilnacek, assisted by Captain McGlowery of DPT, presented the command briefing to them. It brought forth a number of pertinent questions which were a true indication of their genuine interest in Fort Benning and the role it plays in the training of both U.S. and Allied troops as well as its relationship with neighboring civilian communities.

The next stop was the National Infantry Museum, which really impressed our German friends. They commented on the fact that one does not see a black SS uniform with the swastika adorned armband displayed in Germany nowadays. This, and the WWII exhibits, were of special interest to them.

Courtesy of the Airborne Department, they got to experience the thrill of going up the tower on the buddy seat and returning to earth at a far greater speed.

Had their schedule permitted, I believe they would have tried to go back a second and third time.

U. S. Army

Members of the "Junge Union" ride the buddy seat at the Airborne towers.

I had the feeling that the jump tower portion was the highlight of their entire Fort Benning visit. They proudly showed one another the certificate the Airborne Department presented to each of them.

The group was joined by LTC Walter Conze, German Liaison Officer at the U.S. Army Infantry School, who extended his own welcome to Fort Benning and joined them in the tour.

The visitors will be spending the last four days of their two week U.S. tour in Madison, Wis., since their home state (Hessen) has formed a partnership with Wisconsin for cultural, educational and other exchange programs.

Expert Infantryman's Badge 'Earned' by the best

Sally Roberts
197th Infantry Brigade correspondent

The quest for the Expert Infantryman's Badge is not an easy one, and for a good reason. If you are going to apply the word "expert" to your job title, you had better be prepared to earn the honor.

The EIB is an award available only to soldiers in Infantry related Military Occupational Specialties. The requirements are rigid and the tests are tough.

More than 25 soldiers from the 197th Infantry Brigade recently joined the select group of Infantry "experts." These soldiers learned detailed information in a variety of subjects, tolerated blisters and ate dust in pursuit of this award. Each had a different reason for tasking his individual stamina.

"The EIB is a mark of excellence in your job," said EIB recipient Sp4 Bruce Manecke, from Company C, 2nd Battalion, 18th Infantry. "If I am going to do a job, I am going to do it right."

For others, the EIB is a goal to reach for before fulfilling a commitment to the Army.

"I have seven months left in the Army and I haven't made a decision yet on reenlisting," said PFC Philip Falcon, from Company A, 1st Battalion, 58th Infantry. "This was possibly my last opportunity to go for the EIB."

According to Capt. Thomas P. D'Alio, Test Standards Officer from the 197th Infantry Brigade Operations section, more than 400 Brigade soldiers tested for the EIB. Less than 30 were awarded the badge.

"The EIB standards are very specific and separate the experts from the non-experts," D'Alio said. "The soldiers who won the award concentrated on the details of each task that they performed."

The margin for error in the EIB test is minimal. Soldiers performed more than 40 tasks with near-perfect accuracy to get the award. Soldiers were allowed to retest on only two tasks, failing a third task resulted in dropping from the competition.

However, testing for the EIB also depends on the efforts of the testing cadre, a group of EIB, Combat Infantry Badge or Expert Field Medic Badge holders who ensure that the testing is consistent and according to regulation.

Every unit in the Brigade has supported this effort," said D'Alio. "We selected subject matter experts in their fields to provide some very professional training and testing.

"Each one of these soldiers is out here to earn the EIB and we are not here to give it away," said SFC Joseph R. Ault, EIB cadre. "The soldiers who have earned the EIB have really wanted it and paid great attentin to detail."

Col. William Hartzog presented these "experts" with the mark of their excellence as infantrymen, as one of his last duties as Commander of the 197th Infantry Brigade. The following soldiers were awarded the Expert Infantryman's Badge:

HHC, 2nd Battalion, 18th Infantry: 1st Lt. Glenn T. Steffenhagen, Sgt. Robert M. Grooms, Sp4 Bruce E. Manecke.

Company A, 2nd Battalin, 18th Infantry: Capt. Reuben W. Maynard.

197th has diverse mission

Sally Roberts
197th Infantry School Support

When the 197th Infantry Brigade was reactivated on Fort Benning, it's mission was to support the U.S. Army Infantry School. Today, the 197th's primary mission is one of combat readiness and deployability. However, support to the Infantry School remains a primary concern of the Brigade leaders.

In a repeating cycle of school support, the battalions in the 197th provide continuous support to the training of infantrymen on Fort Benning. According to the Brigade Operations section, the Brigade rotates on a six week "cyclic support" with other major units on Fort Benning. During this time, the 197th fulfills all the major taskings of the Infantry School. However, when another major unit is in cyclic support, the Brigade may still receive "spillover taskings."

"We support all the armor and artillery taskings on Fort Benning, because we are the only unit that has the armor and artillery assets," said Staff Sgt. Robert Bagley, from the Brigade Operations section.

Often, when the Brigade rolls out its heavy equipment for an Infantry School mission, their performance may attract the eyes of more than just the Infantry School students.

"One tasking that has a great impact is providing support for CALFEX (Combined Arms Live Fire Exercise), because of the VIPs who attend," Bagley said. "Another major tasking is to support the FTX (Field Training Exercise) for the Infantry Officer Advanced Course, because of the amount of equipment that goes out."

Whether the task involves a rollout of the 197th's mechanized infantry, armor or artillery; or a section of combat engineers to share their expertise in a demolitions demonstration, brigade soldiers continue to assist the Infantry School in training soldiers to be infantrymen.

LTs branched

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Thirteen OCS candidates were commissioned as lieutenants in Army Aviation at ceremonies conducted at Fort Benning on Oct. 16.

A special "branching" ceremony was conducted prior to their commissioning. On behalf of the Fort Rucker chapter of the Army Avaition Association of America (AAAA), Col.(P) Marvin E. Mitchiner presented each officer with a set of aviation brass.

Family members assisted in pinning the brass on the new officers. Each new officer was also presented a letter from Maj. Gen. Ellis D. Parker, welcoming them into the aviation branch.

The officers now continue their training at Fort Rucker, where they will attend the Aviation Officer Basic Course. All but three of the officers will also attend the initial entry rotary wing flight course, where they will be trained in either the UH-1, UH-60, OH-58 or the AH-1.

Three officers were formally aviation warrant officers who had previously completed flight training.

The thirteen commissioned officers were: Lts. William G. Beavers, Richard C. Carroll Jr., Rodney M.K. Chandler, Cecil D. Cauley Jr., Douglas J. Estay, Clayton M. Hutmacher, Gregory J. Janocik, Glen D. Jordan, Kelton J. Liston, Michael A. Madden, Hector L Mares, Raymond L. Wagner, and Sidney A. Wiggins.

LUPUS HAS EXISTED FOR CENTURIES

While it is known that the writer Flannery O'Conner died of lupus and it is presumed the poet Emily Dickinson also suffered from the disease, prior to the nineteenth century, lupus was not well understood by the medical community. Yet, today, many believe Hippocrates may have been the first to describe lupus in the medical literature as far back as 400 B.C.

If lupus has existed for that long, isn't it about time we found the cause and cure?

ACE wins Hamby award

By S.W. Winbush
A Co, 43rd Eng. Bn, 36th Eng. Grp

"For singular display of tactical excellence during rotation 87-13, 28 August to 9 September 1987, at the National Training Center, Fort Irwin, Calif."

The Order of Hamby is an internal award of the 32nd Guards Motorized Rifle Regiment and is intended to recognize the demonstrated tactical excellence and meritorious achievement of the soldiers and units of the regiment.

The award is named in honor of Colonel Jerrell E. Hamby, the 3rd colonel of the 32nd Guards Motorized Rifle Regiment, who died in a training accident. The award criteria reflect those values and standards of performance he espoused during his tenure as colonel of the regiment and which have become the norm for the regiment.

The Order of Hamby has three levels of distinction — 1st Class, 2nd Class and 3rd Class. The Alpha Company of the 43rd Engineer Battalion received the Order of Hamby 2nd Class — gold wreath with silver star. This level of award is for those soldiers and units who stand out in the accomplishment of challenging and difficult missions.

For Alpha Company, the real award was being selected to go to the National Training Center (NTC) to support the opposing forces (OPFOR) and perform missions that of combat engineers. The Alpha Company Engineers (ACE) pride themselves on its many accomplishments at NTC to include constructing more than two hundred tank positions, more than four thousand meters of tank ditches, approximately four kilometers of wire obstacles and four kilometers of minefields.

The Order of Hamby was well received by the ACE on Oct. 16, which was presented by Colonel Douglas R. Church, the 36th Engineer Group Commander. The uniqueness of this award is that it is a calvery award and only to be worn above the left breast pocket of the OPFOR uniform at NTC, Fort Irwin, Calif. The award is now displayed in the halls of Alpha Company for all the soldiers of the ACE to see and as a reminder of a difficult job well done.

67th Maintenance conducts FTX

By Sue Rudat
HHD, 67th Maint Bn

The Headquarters and Headquarters Detachament, 67th Maintenance Battalion, 36th Engineer Group conducted a six-day Field Training Exercise Oct. 14-19. The exercise focused on training on the Battalions Mission Essential Task List. The 533rd Transportation Company, 361st Trailer Transfer Detachment, and the 598th Maintenance Company also conducted FTXs as part of the Battalion exercise.

The HHD integrated their defense with the 598th Maintenance Company, which changed the detachment's defensive concept from defending as a separate unit to defending as part of another unit's perimeter. This more realistic approach was very successful and will continue to be improved during subsequent field training exercises.

NBC training conducted included a MOPP IV exercise for six hours. It was initiated by an enemy forces attack using simulated chemical munitions. The unit experienced continuous opposing forces air and ground attacks during day and night operations. Soldiers also had the opportunity to view the unit site through helicopter surveillance to observe how well they camouflaged the area.

43rd Engineer Battalion constructs new fire station

By Shawn Bryson
36th Engineer Group Correspondent

It has been labeled as the "hottest construction project on post" and the earth-movers from Company C, 43rd Engineer Battalion, 36th Engineer Group are up to their ears in dirt.

These soldiers are currently doing the horizontal construction of the new fire station to be located at the corner of Custer and Engineer Roads.

According to 1st Lt. Leslie B. Butler, Earth-moving Platoon Leader and officer in charge of the project, soldiers from Company C can be found working at the site 24-hours a day. "We received the mission Oct. 7 and have a deadline of Dec. 11," Butler said. "We are basically raising the surface of the site approximately 12 feet so that the contracted construction crew can come right in and begin constructing the fire station."

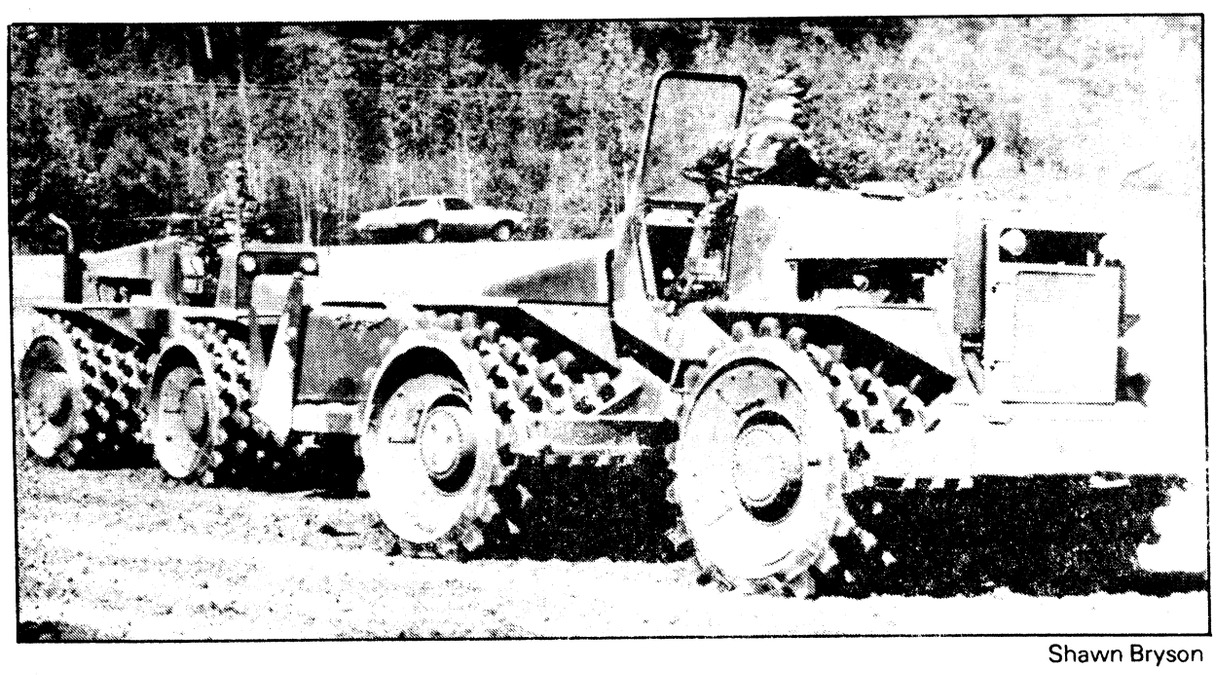
However simple that might seem, Butler explained that the work has involved planning and designing operations for taking 33,000 cubic yards of fill from a "borrow pit" and distributing it at the site.

Because of the magnitude of the project and the time element, much preparation and planning was conducted before the Charlie soldiers broke ground.

"First, we had to estimate the necessary equipment to be used as well as the total manhours," the OIC said.

With extra equipment and operators from Company B and the Headquarters and Service Company, a total work force of 60 soldiers began work on the project Butler said.

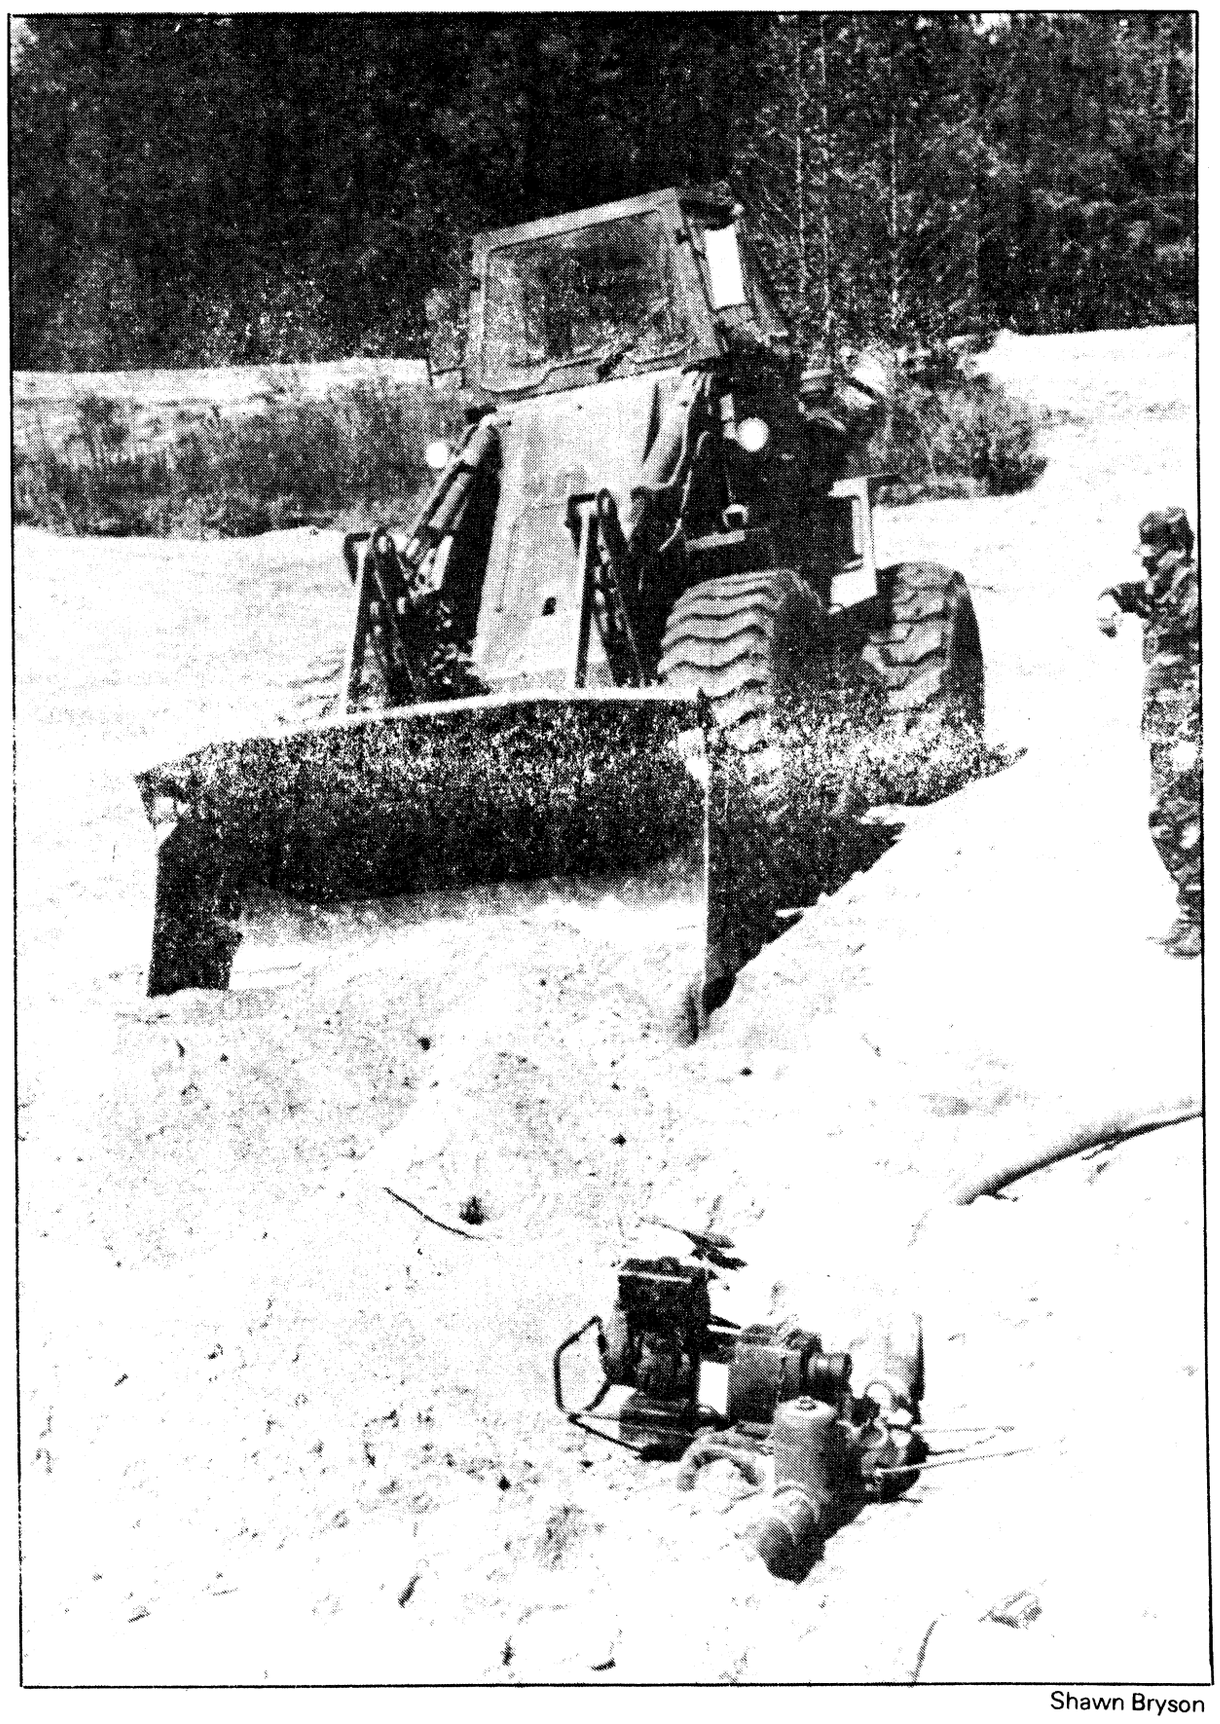
A reconnaissance of the site was performed and once the plan of attack was devised, the soldiers set up the area.



The soldiers set up a company maintenance area, equipment parking area and a drafting area by the Upatoi Creek from which water could be obtained for compacting the fill, Butler said. The soldiers continued preparations by grubbing over 500 trees and roots and removing 6,000 loose cubic yards of useless dirt and gravel from the site, according to Butler. He added that the soldiers then recut proper drainage ditches so foul weather wouldn't harm the site.

"A borrow pit was established one mile from the site on Santa Fe Road. Then, scraper operators began trasnporting the fill to the site," said Butler. He said that an average of 1500-1700 loose cubic yards, or 100-140 scraper loads of fill, are being transported and compacted each day.

The soldiers are conducting all hauling and packing operations during the day Butler said. At night, the equipment, including scrapers, graders, vibratory rollers, high speed compactors, water distribution trucks, dozers and scoop loaders, are washed at the maintenance area.



Preventive maintenance is then pulled on the equipment and it is guarded by soldiers at the parking area.

While operations have been routine thus far, Butler explained that motorists in the area are urged to watch their speed. "Our scrapers are driving on Santa Fe Road and crossing Custer Road, so we've posted road guards and lowered speed limits in the area," Butler said. "We have had a few close calls with speeding motorists and we ask that they obey the speed limits for their own safety and that of our soldiers.

Have you ever wonder why people volunteer? Consider the facts

By Maggie Siegfried
Installation Volunteer Coordinator

Have you ever wondered why people volunteer? Consider these facts: to be successful, to gain recognition, to sharpen skills, to try something new, to feel needed, to gain self-fulfillment, and to develop talents.

Many services offered by the Army to family members depend upon the help of volunteers to operate. Voluntarism is recognized as an important resource for the community. Soldiers, family members, civilians, and retirees provide the substance of the volunteer force and can expand available resources. If you are interested in what voluntarism is about, the following information will be helpful to you.

American Red Cross can fit you into one of many interesting areas. You might choose to work in a clinic, records room, pharmacy, emergency room, or on a ward. Red Cross can even fit you in a clerical/receptionist position, or as a caseworker in their main office. You may want to become a chairside assistant in the Dental Clinic or work with animals in the Veterinarian Clinic.

Army Community Service provides a professional and friendly setting whether you work with budget counseling, food locker, lending closet, Army Emergency Relief, Outreach, Exceptional Family Member Program, information and referral, publicity on spouse abuse program.

There are a variety of opportunities available through the religious activities at Ft. Benning. These range from Sunday school teachers, ushers, lay readers, choir members, pianists, bible studies, to conversational English.

If you are a history buff, the National Infantray Museum is for you. The museum has a volunteer tour guide group which has discovered they learn something new with every tour they take.

The Boy Scouts are seeking scoutmasters, troop, pack, den, or explorer leaders. The volunteers in these positions will assist in citizenship training, character building and personal fitness.

The Girl Scouts needs are similar to those of the Boy Scouts. Leaders and co-leaders for these girls will be instrumental in shaping them for the future.

You will have numerous vacancies to choose form at Santa's Castle. This year's operation collects, repairs, and distributes toys for children at Christmas time and in cases of disaster.

Youth activities provides an outlet for you to train, coach, and work with the young people at Ft. Benning. You may be an arts & crafts instructor, dance chaperone, team mom, or coach football, baseball, t-ball, basketball, soccer, cheerleading, or swim team.

Each on-post housing area has its own Community Life Program, which provides a vehicle to promote community involvement and improve the quality of life for the residents. If you are interested in planning new programs, re-modeling playgrounds, or planning social events, you can find your niche in your own backyard.

Ft. Benning has four wives' clubs offering a wide variety of volunteer possibilities. The International Wives' Club strengthens the ties and understanding for foreign-born spouses through citizenship and GED/English classes as well as presenting costume shows for various groups. The Noncommissioned Officers' Wives Club offers fundraisers, social and craft activities. The Meddac/Dentac Officers' Wives Club has many fun events throughout the year to provide an outlet for social gatherings. They also have numerous fund-raising events such as the Benning Bazaar and Festival of Running. The money goes to many charitable organizations and for scholarships.

Daughters of the U.S. Army (DUSA) are looking for new members to support their cause. They operate Tot-Town childcare center.

Ft. Benning Dependent Schools, including Patch Preschool, offer a variety of areas for their volunteers, either in the classroom or with the PTAC.

IOAC Wives' Workshop teaches leadership training to the wives of company commanders and works with family support groups. If you are interested in being a facilitator trainer, this might be for you.

Retirement Services Organization works year round assisting retirees with retirement, preparing active duty for retirement, and informing them of their benefits. Many volunteers are helping in the office and volunteer retirees make the Retiree Council.

The Thrift Shop is a complex consisting of a 2nd hand clothing store, furniture barn, and a craft cabin — with new hand-crafted items. Anyone interested in learning the retail business from consignment, tagging, inventory, cashiering to sales would be interested in this area.

The Volunteer Resource Center needs a volunteer in the office to assist with producing a quarterly information mail-out for volunteers and to write a weekly column on volunteering for The Bayonet. They also need a clerk/typist.

For more information on any of the above, phone the Volunteer Resource Center at 545-5602, or come by building 241, room 210 DPCA.

Spencer band grabs perfect score

T. Richard Cummings
Spencer High School

The Spencer High School's Mighty Greenwave Band, under the direction of Mr. Vincent Rosse, went to Phenix City, Oct. 24, for the Phenix Invitational Marching Festival.

After many tedious hours of practice, both after school and on Saturdays, the 70-member band performed well.

At the 7 p.m. awards ceremony, Spencer emerged with an over-all superior rating.

The drum major, Tyrone Monte, received a trophy for the bands perfect score and a gold medal for his own superior rating. The color gaurd and the drum line also received trophies.

Miss Greenwave 1986-87 was on hand to place the crown on Miss Nix

The runner-ups were: Tiffany Davis and Tonya McElderly,escorted by Andres Benton and Alexander Doson, also JROTC cadets.

Four other couples were also honored during the half time activities. They were Toby Richards and Miss Freshman, Sydelle Morse; Fredrick Barber and Miss Sophmore, Angela Taylor; Vallis Thacker and Miss Junior, Lupe McMoore; and Jose Delapaz with Miss Senior, Terri Johnson.

Each couple walked under the raised sabers of other cadets of the 7th Battalion.

The only down point of the night's homecoming activities came as the Hardaway Hawks defeated the Greenwave, 34-14.

Bradley Company supports team

By Aimee R. Holden
Bayonet staff writer

SSgt. LLoyd McDonald finished first out of all AUSA runners world-wide in the AUSA 10 mile race earlier this month in Washington, D.C. But, without the sponsorship of an AUSA corporate member, McDonald and his teammates may not have even been able to attend the race.

"We could not have put the team in the race without the support of the Bradley Company," said COL. Donald M. McKay, Jr.. McKay is the Secretary-Treasurer for the Chattahoochee Valley/Fort Benning AUSA Chapter.

McKay had originally intended to use non-appropriated DPCA funds to sponsor the team's trip. But, when he learned the funds couldn't be used for that purpose, he contacted Steve Butler, an AUSA corporate member and the Chief Executive Officer of the Bradley Company.

"I knew the quality person he was, and the quality of his organization," McKay said. " I felt really good about asking him. His immediate response was 'yes'."

Butler's company made a $1,300 contribution to AUSA and the money was used to transport the ten team members, two alternates and the coach to D.C.. Living expenses while in D.C. were also taken out of these funds.

"As far as I'm concerned this just reinforces the totally positive supportive environment between the military community and our surrounding civilian community," McKay said.

McDonald, the AUSA runner, was also grateful to the Bradley Company for its support.

"We all appreciate the support we got," McDonald said. "It was first class, and it couldn't have happened without them (Bradley Company). Everything was really nice and well-organized.

" They allowed us to show our talent. And, personally, it gave me a chance to see how I compare with other runners. That's an opportunity I wouldn't have without the backing of AUSA and its corporate members."

Spending a little money in Ledger-Enquirer Classified to sell something like a bass boat can mean big money for you. For example you can run a 3-line ad for 3 days for just $10.62 on a big-ticket item. Or, you can run a 3-line ad for 5 days for just $5 in some classifications. Either way, where you have something to sell, spending a little can help you pick up a lot!

Cav Rocks bury Cobras, 12-0, in USAIC play

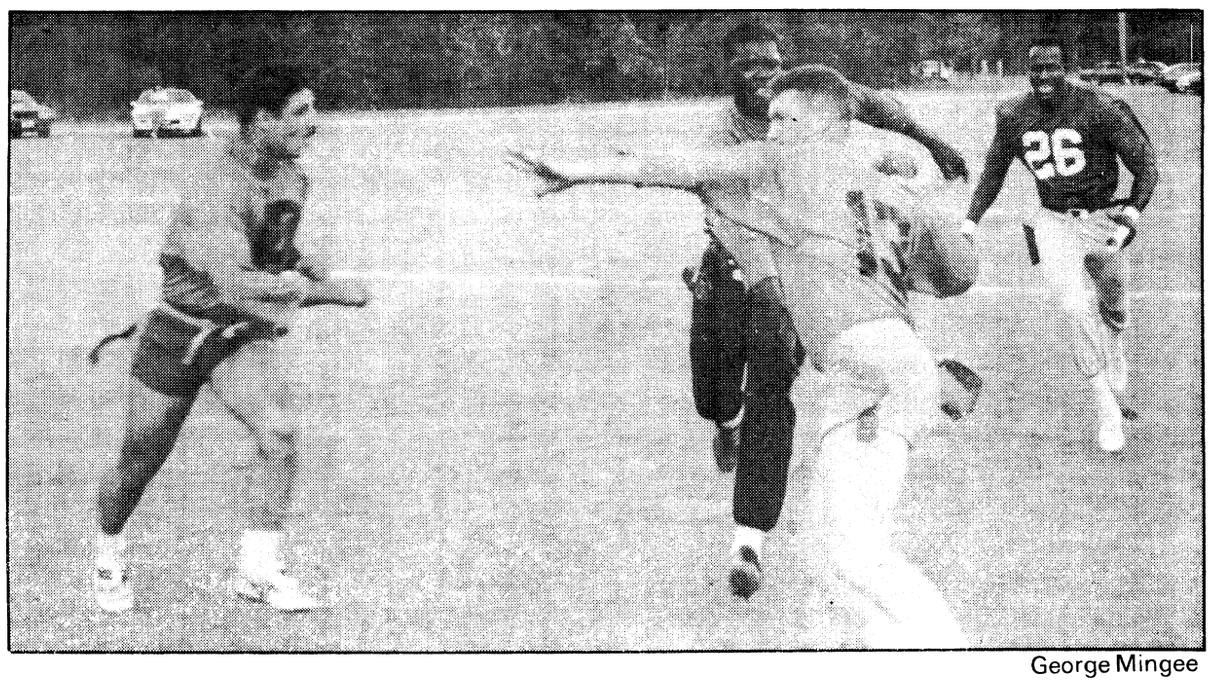
By George Mingee
197th Inf. Bde. correspondent

One, two, three, Cav Rocks! Troop A, 15th Cavalry, played the "Cobras" from Company E, 2nd Battalion, 18th Infantry Regiment, in 197th intramural football. The final score in the game was 12-0 in favor of the 15th Cavalry.

15th Cavalry started the game off by kicking to the Cobras who tried to take the ball down the field for a touchdown, but 15th Cav's defense quickly shut down the Cobra's offense to regain possession of the ball.

The entire first-half was a defensive battle between the two teams with the ball changing possessions many times.

When half-time came, the game was scoreless, but the tempo of the game was about to quicken. "Monster Man" Christopher Johnson of 15th Cav tipped a Cobras pass and it was intercepted by a teammate downfield, but 15th Cav was unable to convert the turnover.



The first score of the game came late in the third quarter when Tim Fair set 15th Cav up with his punt return to the 10-yard line, and teammate Michael Thomas caught the ball in the end-zone to make the score 6-0 in favor of 15th Cav.

The fourth quarter proved to be just as exciting when William Lucas of the 15th intercepted Cobra's Dennis Stanley's pass. Several plays later ,15th Cavs quarterback Wayne Jeffries ran the ball into the end-zone on a quarterback draw to give the 15th Cav a 12-0 lead and the final score of the game.

This win gave 15th Cav a record of 13-0 and keeps them in first place in the Red Division.

Benning Biathlon shaping up

By Mary Jo Corbett
DENTAC

Check your calender. On Nov. 7, the third Annual Ft. Benning Biathlon directed by MEDDAC and DENTAC will start and finish at Martin Army Community Hospital. The course terrain varies from flat to rolling hilis.

The running leg of the biathlon is a five-mile loop starting on Marne Road and proceeding to Stonewall-Baltzell-First Division Road-Davis Hill Road-back to Marne Road. The thirty-mile cycling loop starts on Marne Road proceeding to Davis Hill Road-Dixie Road-Sightseeing Road-Sunshine Road-Jamestown Raod-Eighth Division Road-First Division Road-Davis Hill Road-back to Marne Road.

Proper equipment and bike handling skills are necessary to minimize crashes and improve your time during the bike leg. Your proficiency in these skills will also increase your enjoyment of training rides.

Wear an approved hard-shell helmet. The majority of cycling accidents involve head injuries. Protect you brain and skull with a hard-shell helmet that will absorb shock. Bike crashes are never planned, but an accident that involves falling on your head could change your life forever.

Ride defensively. Be considerate of other riders, ride a straight line, look behind you before you turn, pass other riders on the left, use hand and verbal signals to indicate turns and slowing down. Keep out of any space into which another cyclist could steer or brake faster than you could react.

For the biathlon, no drafting is allowed. Two bike lengths between riders will be enforced. If your front wheel contacts the rear wheel of the cyclist in front of you, a nasty crash will invariably result. Bumped wheels means a hard fall, often a broken collarbone. No crossing the yellow center line.

Prepare yourself for whatever situation might arise while you are on the road , including potholes, gravel, glass, etc. If you keep a relaxed position on the bike, elbows bent and arms and shoulders loose, you can maintain control. If your arms are rigid, the impact will transmit directly to the handlebars, the bike will go one way and you another. Good bike handling skills will translate into greater speed.

Bike safety stikers are required, make sure your bike is in good repair before the race. Bike water bottles must be carried. No outside individual support will be allowed during the biathlon. Water will be available at several points along the course. Let's have a great race!

Hunter phone in/ out operational

USAIC Public Affairs Office

A new system for requesting hunting areas on Fort Benning is in use this year for those authorized to hunt on the military reservation.

Through Jan.14, 1988, a call-in/call-out system will be used, replacing last year's system of physically signing in and signing out.

In order to call in and out, hunters on Fort Benning must register at the Outdoor Recreation Administration, building 247 on Ingersoll Street, where they will receive the necessary information including regulations and a numbered access pass. State hunting licenses may be purchased there.

The new Hunter control call-in/call-out number is 682-1589 and will be operational from 4 a.m. until 8 p.m., seven days a week. The military number is 545-7680; however, there is only one line for use from range safety phones.

This is how the new system works: When the number is dialed and the call answered, the hunter gives his access pass number and hunting area requested. Hunters should have an alternate choice, should the first one be full. Once verified by the operator, the hunter may proceed to the hunting area requested.

Call-ins may be made as early as noon the day before the hunt.

When leaving the hunting area for the day, the hunter should again call Hunter Control for verification. This can be accomplished from a range phone or after arrival at home or other destination, providing the call is made before 8 p.m.

Infantry Center regualtions require Fort Benning hunters to check range clearance maps before hunting on post.

Packers thrash Trojans 12-0 in YA play

YA Sports Office

The Trojans suffered a 12-0 thrashing at the hands of Packers in YA Pee Wee Football last Saturday.

With the win, the Packers tie the Trojans for the lead in the league and the Trojans fall from the ranks of the undefeated. Both teams now have an identical 5-1 record.

The Packer defense forced fumble after fumble to shut down the Trojan offense.

The two teams will meet again on Nov. 12.

In other YA football action, the Bears blanked the Cougars, 16-0, in the Termite league. The Bears are now in a tie with the Giants in that league, both with 3-1 records. The Cougars fall to last place and have yet to score their first victory.

In YA Soccer action, the Cosmo dumped the Panthers, 6-0, and the Pythons sqeezed the Fireballs, 3-1.

Panola Mountain offers autumn hikes

Georgia Department of Natural Resources

Take a hike in autumn's crisp weather and meet one of Georgia's natural wonders — Panola Mountain.

Panola Mountain Conservation Park, one of the state parks operated by the Georgia Department of Natural Resources, provides the perfect afternoon getaway for children and adults of all ages.

Open daily for 7 a.m. until dark, this unique park offers visitors scenic picnic areas, two miles of self-guided trails, through a hardwood forest and a spectacular view of a 100-acre granite monadnock. Similar to Stone Mountain, Panola Mountain was formed millions of years ago when a huge bubble of molten rock rose to the earth's surface, cooled and solidfied.

Because it shelters countless rare plants and animals found in the Piedmont Region, Panola was named Georgia's first Environmental Conservation Park.

"We make it our top priority to protect the wildlife here," said Park Superintendent Robert Emery, "We think it's possible to enjoy the natural beauty of Panola without destroying it. We remind our visitors to take only photographs and leave only footprints."

The Interpretive Center at the park provides a topographic map of the mountain, a group meeting area and nature exhibits that include a honey bee colony and the park's pet snake. The center is open 9 a.m.—5 p.m. Tuesday through Friday and 12 p.m.—5 p.m. on weekends.

Every Saturday and Sunday at 2:45 p.m., park officials lead a 3½-mile hike around the mountain for everyone who attends — whether there is only one, or as many as 40 participants. After a fascinating slide show at the Interpretive Center, experienced guides take visitors to the mountain and point out Panola's special features and interesting facts.

With nature in full bloom, a walk in these woods is breathtaking. The Confederate Daisies that sneak out of cracks in the rock formations, the delicate Asian Day Flower whose morning blooms die by afternoon and blankets of Juniper Moss make Panola Mountain a floral showplace.

Spring and fall are the most beautiful seasons in which to visit Panola, as cooler weather brings life to this near-desert climate. Plants that remain dormant in the harsh temperatures of summer bloom in milder weather.

Scout troops, students, and church groups often take autumn field trips to the park. Volunteers and park staff offer programs on environmental education for various age groups.

Bicycling enjoyable, healthy-but do it safely

By Wendell D. Choate
Provost Marshals Office

Bicycling can be an enjoyable and healthy activity. It can also be dangerous. The bicyclist should always be alert and ride defensively. While collisions involving bicycles and automobiles are often the fault of the automobile driver, it's the bicyclist who is most prone to be seriously injured.

Nationwide last year, over 1,000 bicyclists were killed and over 40,000 were injured. The majority of these victims were between the ages of five and 15 years. Some of these accidents could have been avoided if the bicyclist had followed the safety rules.

It is imperative that both the parents and their children do everything in their power to prevent the likelihood of them becoming involved in an accident. Prior to purchasing a bicycle for a child, the parent, should be aware of the responsibilities that must be assumed. Several questions a parent should ask themselves are:

Is my child old enough to understand the traffic laws?

Is the neighborhood where we live safe for children on bicycles?

Do I have the patience to teach my child the traffic laws and rules

Bicyclists of all ages must understand that, just as in operating an automobile, knowing and adhering to safe riding practices is of the utmost importance. The following are some rules and pointers to help you and your child or children.

Obey all traffic signals. Bicycles must stop at all stop signs just as automobiles

Be seen at night. Bicycles that are operated after the hours of darkness, shall as a minimum, have a headlight, which is visible from a distance of 300 feet from the front, and a red taillight or reflector.

Bicycles will be ridden in single file only. Always ride with one bicycle behind the other and never ride side by side.

Keep to the right — ride in the same direction as automobiles, but keep as close to the edge of the roadway as possible.

Do not ride a bicycle that is not in good condition — its not safe. Always check your brakes and steering before you ride.

Remember most of these rules and pointers come from USAIC Reg. No. 190-5; teach them to your children. By working together and observing regulations and rules of the road, we can make Fort Benning a safer place in which to live, work and play. Accident prevention is everyones responsibility. For further information and assistance, call the Crime Prevention office at 545-7115/7154.

sensory awareness program where they learn to use sight, smell and touch to discover nature.

Biologists lead an in-depth pond study for high school classes, and college students can learn about the geological features of an outcrop.

The park welcomes all groups and requires only a nominal fee for special programs. The cost is 50¢ per child for kindergarten through second grade and $1 each for third graders and older. Bus drivers and teachers are admitted free and reservations should be made at least two weeks in advance.

During the summer, park staff members conduct an Environmental Discovery Program for youth, ages 4 to 14. Each class lasts two hours per day for two days, with a special three-day session and sleep-over for older children. The program offers three to four sessions per age group, limiting each group to 12 members.

The groups explore different aspects of the same topic — last year's theme was air pollution. Registration begins May 1st, and the fee is $7 per child.

Panola will offer several exciting special events this fall. Enjoy an "Early Bird Walks" from 8-10 a.m., Nov. 7th. A volunteer from Atlanta Audubon will identify resident and migratory birds along the way.

Another special day at Panola will be Fall Geology Day, Nov. 14 from 10 a.m. until 1 p.m. Take a 3½-mile hike while park officials point out and explain the geological features on Panola Mountain.

People who enjoy fresh air, shady picnics and quiet walks will find Panola Mountain refreshing. Designated as a National Natural Landmark, this park has remained unspoiled, becoming a home to animals like Canada Geese, beavers, fox and bobcats.

"Panola Mountain is a special place," Emery added. "It's living proof that with a little consideration, man and nature can survive together.')'

To find Panola Mountain: from Atlanta take I-285 East to the Candler Road/Highway 155 exit. Go south on Highway 155 approximately eight miles until the entrance sign comes into view on the left. From I-20 East, take Wesley Chapel/Snapfinger Road exit. Go south on Wesley Chapel Road, and turn left at the first light onto Snapfinger Road. Proceed about six miles and the park entrance will appear on the left.

SPORTS SHORTS

Marines plan D.C. marathon

The 12th annual Marine Corps Marathon is scheduled for Nov. 8 in Washington D.C..

The event is open to all persons regardless of age or racing experience. However, the American Medical Joggers Association does not recommend marathon running for persons below the age of fourteen.

The Fort Benning Sports Office is putting together a team to represent the installation. Marathon runners should contact them at 545-5777/2332 with their latest marathon times.

Hunters should use deer check station

The first either sex deer hunt for this year on Fort Benning will run until Nov. 1.

During this time, Wildlife Management personnel will be weighing, aging, and measuring deer at the Deer Check Station, bldg. 5883, Harmony Church. In order for proper management decisions to be made, as many deer as possible should be observed.

All deer hunters are asked to cooperate in this effort by bringing any deer killed during these dates to the Deer Check Station for examination. Hours of operation will be: 8 a.m. to 4 p.m. on normal work days and 8 a.m. to 8 p.m. on weekends and holidays. Phone 544-6120 for more information.

NIM race Saturday

Military and civilian runners alike are invited to race in the National Infantry Museum Run on Fort Benning this Saturday begining at 7:30 a.m

The five-mile course, described as flat and fast, will begin on Vibbert Avenue near Doughboy Stadium, the site for the Olympic-style finish.

Individual, team, and formation awards will be presented to men in 10 age groups and women in nine age groups.

Pre-registration is being held at the National Infantry Museum on Baltzell Avenue from 8 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. today but runners can also register on race morning prior to starting time. Entry fee is $6.

Race proceeds will go to the National Infantry Museum. The previous six races have raised over $67,733.

Some 4,659 participants ran in last year's race, one of the largest in the Southeast.

Firing matches set for November

The annual USAIC Marksmanship matches are scheduled for Nov. 16-20, with a mandatory clinic Nov. 9 and 10.

The matches and clinic will take place at Easley, McAndrews and Phillips ranges with match headquarters located in bldg. 2601. They will consist of three categories: combat rifle (M16A1/M16A2), combat pistol (9mm/45 cal) and the light machinegun (LMG, M60) with both individual and team competition.

All officers in the grade of 0-3 or below and all enlisted in the grade of E-8 or below and assigned to a Fort Benning unit the day the competition starts are eligible to enter both team and individual competition.

Individuals in grades of 0-4 and above and E-9s are only eligible to fire in individual competition. With this exception, individuals that want to fire individually must also be a member of a team if his/her unit is sponsoring one.

Eligible soldiers should contact their team representative or first sergeants if they are interested in participating and fill out FORSCOM/TRADOC Form 235-6-R, (Individual Registration and entry card), available at their unit or bldg. 4, Room 624. Units must have the entry forms filled out correctly and returned to SFC Stewart Olson, Bldg. 4, Room 624, by the close of business Nov. 2, or the individual or team will not be able to participate.
Contact SFC Olson at 545-4252/2917 for more information.

Golf club to be closed

The Golf course, pro shop, storage area and club house will be closed the first Monday of every month begining Nov. 2.

GSA to manage Benning's non-tactical vehicles

USAIC Public Affairs Office

An agreement between the General Services Administration (GSA) and the USAIC has been completed that will place the operation of Fort Benning's non-tactical vehicle fleet under the control of the GSA Interagency Fleet Management System.

Control of the fleet by GSA is scheduled to take place in the April-May 1988 time frame.

Approximately 1,276 vehicles plus 27 rental vehicles will be placed under GSA control.

GSA will be the fleet owners responsible for all maintenance, which will be contracted out. GSA currently plans on replacing Fort Benning's current vehicle fleet with new vehicles over a five-year period.

Under this program, Fort Benning will pay GSA a monthly utilization fee plus cost per mile on each vehicle.

In mid-October, GSA IFMS personnel, along with Fort Benning personnel, conducted a vehicle consolidation study. The study showed that annual savings to the government could possibly be $1 million under the consolidation program.

Twelve Full-Time Equivalency (FTE) positions will be transferred from the Department of the Army to GSA for management of the on-site Fleet Management Center.

About 50 maintenance employees will be affected by this conversion. The Director of Logistics, Dale Ellis, and Fort Benning's Civilian Personnel Office, have briefed these employees as to how this conversion affects each of them. Numerous options are available to these individuals, and each one will be worked with to ensure all possible support is provided to each individual. Actions ranging from reassignment or relocation, pay retention, pay adjustment and retirement are options that each person will have to consider.

A representative of the Civilian Personnel Office has been in contact with GSA, who assured them that Fort Benning employees who are interested in employment with GSA will be considered. Once a contract has been awarded, the Civilian Personnel Office will work with the contractor for possible job placements for interested employees.

Infantry officer expected to be security advisor

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Lt. Gen. Colin Powell is expected to be named President Ronald Reagan's national security advisor after Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger resigns.

Powell

Powell is an Infantry officer who has visited Fort Benning several times during his career.

He graduated from the Infantry Officer Basic Course in 1958, and also attended the Infantry Officer Advanced Course, Ranger School, Airborne School and the Pathfinder course.

Powell was commissioned through the Reserve Officer Training Corps from City Univerity in New York, in 1958.

He has served in Vietnam, South Korea, West Germany and the United States. He served as a top aide to Weinberger from 1983 to 1986.

Powell was serving as commander of the 5th Corps in Germany, when he was called to Washington to be deputy security advisor to current advisor Frank Carlucci. Carlucci is expected to replace Weinberger as defense secretary.

But Powell says his heart is still with the Infantry. He said that he is "first and foremost an infantryman," in an interview in The New York Daily News, shortly after assuming the deputy job.

Post employees get time off Wednesday for Veterans Day

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Fort Benning workers will take a day off Wednesday to celebrate Veterans Day. Only essential personnel will have to report to work.

The 2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment is planning a Veterans Day parade Tuesday. The parade begins at 4 p.m. at the parade field in front of Building 74. Spectators are asked to arrive at least 15 minutes before the ceremony and to be seated by 3:50 p.m.

Transportation to and from the event will be provided for veterans. If you need transportation, call Lt. Pierce at 545-1666.

The public is invited to attend.

Garbage pickup will not be affected by the mid-week holiday, since garbage is not picked up in the family housing areas on Wednesdays.

Some Army and Air Force Exchange facilities will be operating on a holiday schedule.

The mall service station will be open from 9:30 a.m. to 5:30 p.m., while the main post service station will be open from 9 a.m. to 2 p.m.

The military clothing sales store will be open from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m.

Other retail facilities will be open during their normal hours. These include the main exchange, the mini mall shoppette, the Custer Terrace shoppette, the Sand Hill mall PX and Electronics Unlimited.

Food facilities at the main mall will be open. The hot dog stand and Baskin Robbins will be open during their normal hours, while the mall snack bar will open from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m.

The Kelley Hill Snack Bar will be open from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m.; Burger King will open from 8 a.m. to 11 p.m.; The mall bowling alley snack bar and the main post bowling alley snack bar will both be open fron noon to 11 p.m. The Airborne snack bar will be open from 10 a.m. to 11 p.m.

The mini mall pizza pub, Sand Hill snack bar and the mini mall Baskin Robbins will be open during their normal hours.

All other retail and food facilities will be closed for the holiday.

All movie theaters on post will be operating during their normal hours, as will all main mall concessions.

The video rental shop (Building 1710) will be open during normal hours. The laundry/dry cleaning shop and barber shop, both in the mini mall, will be open from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m.

The laundry/dry cleaning shop in Building 1648 will be open from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m.

All other concessions will be closed for the holiday.

Reagan pledges to continue supporting contras

By W.T. Rash
and Hal D. Leathers
Army News Service

WASHINGTON — In a setting he chose as the most appropriate, President Ronald Reagan delivered a message of hope to the oppressed and warning to oppressors Oct. 28.

Standing in the spot General of the Army Douglas MacArthur occupied when he delivered his "Duty, Honor, Country" speech a quarter-century ago, Reagan praised the academy by citing past accomplishments of members of the "Long Gray Line," while assuring today's cadets that he had unbounded confidence in them, as well.

"West Point . . . has established and added luster to a proud story — a story of courage and wisdom, of heroism and sacrifice, and, yes, very often, the ultimate sacrifice," Reagan said.

The president focused on steps taken by his administration to reduce the chances of Americans being forced to make that "ultimate sacrifice" when he spoke of his impending summit meeting with Soviet General Secretary Mikhail Gorbachev.

Reagan made it clear, however, that his dealings with the Soviets would not be marked by an element of blind trust. In fact, the president termed the Soviets "expansionist" and "imperialists."

Reagan offered further explanation of what his attitude will be when he sits across the bargaining table from Gorbachev.

"As you know," Reagan said, "Soviets have an extensive record of violating past arms-control agreements. So, frankly, we're not going to take their word for it — any treaty I agree to must provide for effective verification, including on-site inspection of facilities before and during reductions, and short-notice inspections afterwards.

"All in all, the verification regime we have put forward is the most stringent in the history of arms-control negotiations. I will not settle for less," he said.

The President expressed hope for a series of visits to the United States by Gorbachev during the negotiations.

Bayonet living up to modern-day image

Army News Service

WASHINGTON— Traditional in appearance, light in weight and sturdy in blade strength — the newly issued M-9 multi-purpose bayonet system has lived up to its modern-day image, say officials at Picatinny Arsenal, N.J.

Their opinions stem from reactions by soldiers who have used the new weapon under field conditions and who are saying the new bayonet is a "cut above" earlier models.

Historically, the bayonet has been a standard weapon of the infantry soldier since its invention in Bayonne, France, in 1640. Since then, evolution has caused many changes.

As a utility weapon,the M-9 performs many different functions. Used not only as a bayonet, this model also can perform as a fighting or combat knife as well as a field knife and a wire cutter.

According to Peter J. Rowland, public affairs officer at Picatinny, the Army needed a new bayonet for several reasons.

"First, the soldier's need for a utility knife as an all-purpose tool increases continuously," Rowland said. "Some soldiers who carried the M-7 bayonet, the M-9's predecessor, would often carry their own personal field knives. Some even carried their own wire cutters as well.

"Second, the Army needed to reduce the weight and bulk individual soldiers carry. The multi-purpose bayonet combines several functions. The entire system, bayonet with scabbard, weighs less than 1.8 pounds. "And the third reason," he continued, "involved the changes to the bayonet blade shape. That modification increased its effectiveness in hand-to-hand combat. Unlike the double-edged M-7, the M-9 bayonet yields a single edge. This gives it a more traditional look."

ARDEC had awarded a $15.6-million contract to Phrobis III, Ltd., of Oceanside, Calif., in a procurement action to purchase more than 300,000 bayonets. Phrobis is known for its Buck-Master hunting knife. The new M-9 is derived from the Buck-Master.

Phrobis won the contract after the durability of its bayonet was tested by soldiers at the U.S. Army Infantry Center at Fort Benning, Ga.

The Phrobis model competed with five other prototype bayonets manufactured by other competitors.

Since the M-9 system qualified as what is known in the defense contracting business as a "non-development item," it was selected by a process appropriately referred to as an NDI acquisition.

Using this process, the Army looks at available domestic and foreign-made products to see if an item already exists to meet

Collections reach mid-point in this year's federal campaign

USAIC Public Affairs Office

With three weeks to go, the Combined Federal Campaign has collected less than half its goal for the year.

Patti Holstead, a spokeswoman at the Fort Benning CFC office, said that as of Nov. 2, five weeks into this year's campaign, $255,585.69 has been turned in. That represents 46 percent of Benning's $550,000 goal for 1987.

Approximately 9,030 people have contributed to the campaign so far, she said.

"We are urging people to turn in their funds as they receive them, rather than waiting until everyone in their activity or unit has given," she said.

"It makes it easier for us to tally the contributions if they are turned in on a weekly or bi-weekly basis."

The office is open from 8:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m., and closes for lunch from 12 to 1 p.m. They also ask that people turn in funds before 3:30 p.m. each day.

OPINION

Holiday honors veterans for service to our nation

For decades America has paused on the 11th of November, the anniversary of the armistice that concluded World War I, to remember and to honor our veterans of military service.

We do so in proud and grateful recognition of the hardships and sacrifices demanded from and faithfully accepted by the millions of men and women who have defended our land in war and in peace.

Our observance of Veterans Day this year, the Bicentennial of the Constitution, reminds us in a special way of the service men and women who have made liberty's cause their own.

Our fundamental charter lives on because through the years countless brave Americans have gladly willed to "provide for the common defence." No one is more responsible for securing the "Blessings of liberty to ourselves and our posterity" than our veterans.

That is why, this Nov. 11 and always, we let veterans know that their service is not forgotten, that their sacrifices are appreciated, and that America salutes its defenders.

In order that we may pay fitting homage to those who have served in our armed forces, the Congress has provided (5 U.S.C. 6103(a)) that Nov. 11 of each year shall be set aside as a legal public holiday to honor America's veterans.

Now, therefore, I, Ronald Reagan,president of the United Sta s of America, do hereby proclaim Nov. 11 as Veterans Day.

I urge all Americans to recognize the valor and sacrifice of our veterans through appropriate public ceremonies and private prayers.

I also call upon federal, state, and local government officials to display the flag of the United States and to encourage and take part in patriotic activities throughout our country.

I invite the business community , churches, schools, unions, civic and fraternal organizations, and the media to support this national ovservance with suitable commemorative expressions and programs.

Ronald Reagan

Life is full of opportunities for accidents

By Fred Young
Installation Safety Office

That's right, the accident that your were involved in was the fault of someone. It is extremely rare when an accident happens that the fault for the accident can't be attributed to some person.

About the only exceptions are acts of God, such as being struck by lightning or having a tree fall on you. Even some of these are avoidable. For example, the person struck by lightning on the ballfield who would't leave the field when the storm was approaching, ispartly to blame. This person should have been aware of the danger and acted accordingly.

What about the soldier who rides with his buddy and fails to use the seat belt? When this car is struck by an errant driver of another car and our guy is thrown out of the car and killed, did he contribute to his own death? You can bet your paycheck he did.

As you go through life working, playing and resting, you will be bombarded by opportunities for accidents. It goes with the territory. The person who exercises his smarts,

Snively discovers why some don't use signals

Southern co-worker says he doesn't use 'em because he doesn't know where he's going

By Clyde Snively
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Every morning I commute to work.

Every morning as I enter the post boundary, I heave a sigh of relief. It's the same sigh an infant might sigh after being lost in the woods for a couple of hours, before being finally reunited with his mother.

I'm not really sure why, but I feel so much safer on Fort Benning roads than I do when driving in the civilian community.

Sure, we have to dodge runners we don't see until the last minute because it's dark and they aren'twearing the proper reflective garb.

Or we might get held up by a convoy for a while. But, on the whole, people seem to drive saner when they're on post. Maybe it's because they're wearing seat belts and are more safety conscious.

Mabye it's because they know the MPs are not as forgiving as the off post cops, that an infraction of a couple miles per hour over the speed limit that might be overlooked in town, won't escape notice on post.

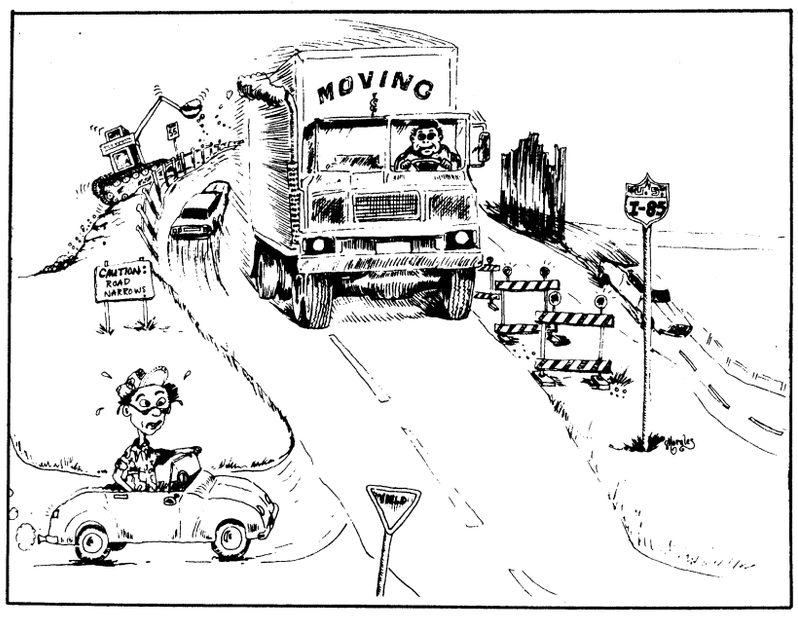
Or, maybe it's because they know their commanders or supervisors will come down hard on traffic violators, and that, horror of horrors, they'll have to go to another Defensive Drivers' Course.

Looking at MP blotters, my brain tells me that I can't get complacent about driving on post —especially if I'm a deer. Deer are always coming out the loser in deer-car accidents.

But post people do seem to drive with more discipline, more courtesy.

They, for the most part, seem to know where the turn signals lever on their cars are located and realized it is there for a purpose. Nor do they wait until they've stopped to begin using it, but instead, they'll actually signal their intention before applying the brakes.

Somehow, off post, be they local civilians or military with an out of state license, they seem to forget all this.



But then there are those who drive goofy no matter where they happen to be.

I was driving with Steve the other day and noted how he'd failed to signal any of his turns.

I jumped on him immediately: "You southerners (he's from North Carolina). Sweat must drip off your hairy wrists and rust the turn signals in place. How come you never use them?"

Your accusations are most unfair, suh," he said. (I love to talk to southerners, they call even specialists "Sir.") "The fact of the matter is, ah jest don't know where ah'm goin' until ah git there, so how can ah signal in advance?"

"You've got a good point there," I said, as I slumped down in the seat so no one would recognize me.

We finally got off post so I came up for air, noting we were now on the by-pass. But I also noticed Steve was now leading a parade.

"Er, Steve," I said. I realize you don't need any more of my constructive criticism, but you are in the passing lane, but not passing anyone. In fact you're holding up quite a few cars."

"Tsh, tsh," he said. "Ah', goin' the speed limit, fufty-fivah."

"That might be," I said. "but it's state law that if you're holding up traffic, you can be cited for obstructing traffic."

"Most unfair, suh," he said, pulling over to the right (without signalling and nearly driving someone into the ditch). Needless to say, we were greeted by several loud blasts of the horn and I could tell by the person's lip movement that we weren't being blessed to heaven.

Reaching Macon Road, Steve exited pretty much as I thought he would, by crossing two lanes of traffic to get onto the off ramp. "Ah was jest goin' straight," he said, as I dove for the floor amidst several more well deserved horn blasts.

Next Steve couldn't decide which lane to use to get to where we wanted to go, so he did the next best thing, he drove in both.

At this point I was wondering if I had enough money to take a taxi back to post.

In all fairness to Steve, we did manage to take care of our business and get back without and incident. Well, almost without an incident. Reaching Infantry Hall, Steve was confronted with an OCS company and their road guards.

Constitution strong because we're willing to defend it

By Ken Loser
Army News Service

WASHINGTON — Barely two months ago, the Constitution of the United States of America became 200 years old. It is the oldest viable governing document in the world today.

It got to the ripe old age only because of one reason — the American veterans who defended that splendid document and all that it stands for.

Think about that. If none of us had taken up arms in defense of our way of life, we would now be living a life of tyranny. No if's, but's or maybe's.

During the thirties and forties, there were at least three fanatical dictators who wanted and tried desperately to wrench that document of freedom from our grasp. Their names saturate history books around the world — Hitler, Mussolini, Hirohito. Remember?

Eleven years ago, Americans celebrated the bicentennial of our Declaration of Independence. Last year, there was much hoopla about the restoration and 100th anniversary of our symbolic Statue of Liberty. Then this year, the 200th anniversary of the signing of the Constitution.

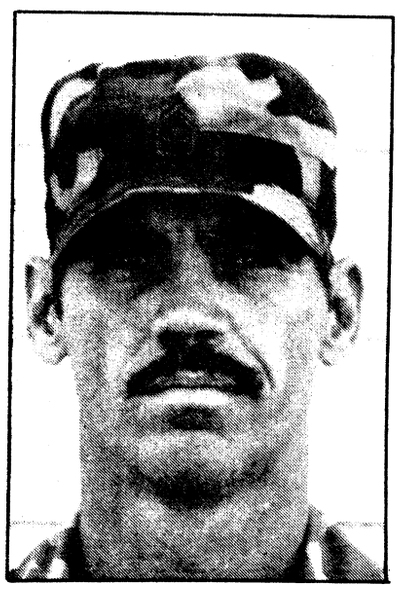
We were allowed to do all this celebrating only because Americans under arms fought, suffered and gave their lives in defense of that venerable parchment, which was with great deliberation constituted as the way we were allowed to pursue our way of life.

To paraphrase that great English statesman, Sir Winston Churchill, who stated it, perhaps, more eloquently than it will ever be said again: "Never before in the course of history had so much been owed to so few by so many."

American veterans do, indeed, represent only a small part of this country's 250 million population. They can — rightfully —take a great pride in being part of such a superb minority. Were it not for their extreme sacrifices, how would we be existing today, if at all?

More than 35 million loyal Americans answered the call to arms during four major conflicts in this century. Some 634,000 of them made the supreme effort and laid down their lives for us.

Another 92,691 remain missing in action, while 1,131,435 suffered wounds while defending our constitution. Many of those wounded have been confined to VA hospitals, where they've been bedridden for decades since their traumatic ordeals.



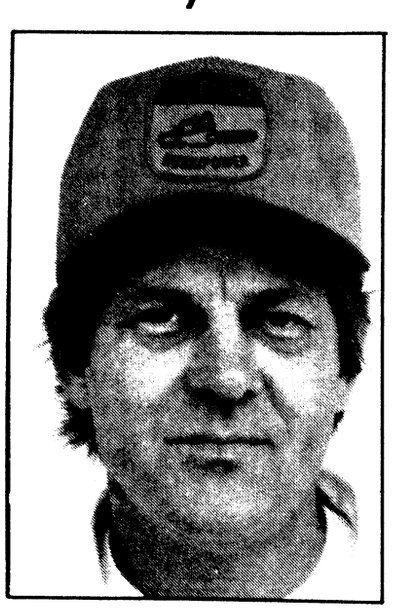
We shall never be able to adequately thank or repay our veterans for what they have done for us, but on this Veterans Day it would seem appropriate to at least give a few minutes of deep thought to what those relatively few Americans have done for themany of us.

Perhaps the greatest tribute we could afford our veterans would be to think of them and thank them when we hug our children or grandchildren.

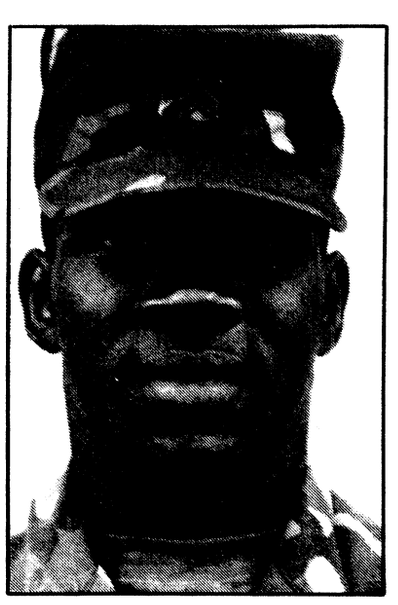
If our veterans had not made the sacrifices theydid, those children possibly would not have been born in a free society.

Editor's note: Ken Loser works for the U.S. Army Troop Support Command in St. Louis as a public affairs specialist.)

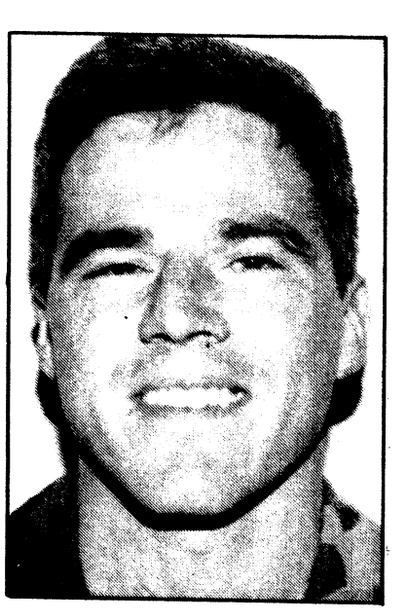
VARIOUS VOICES / What do you think is the best way to honor our veterans?



1Sgt. Thomas Gearlds, 43rd Engineer Battalion — "I think the best way is to teach the soldier what Veterans Day is all about. Then they will honor it themselves. You'd be surprised at how many people think it's just a day off."



SSgt. Alan L. Sprinkle, 10th Military Police Activity, Fort Drum, N.Y. — "I think having the units do special ceremonies is a good idea. Parades are also a good way to honor them."



Darlene Locke, Southern Amusement employee — "I think the things that we already do such as parades and special ceremonies show our honor. Declaring Veterans Day a national holiday is a great honor, I think."

Bob France, Transportation Motor Pool — "Special ceremonies, parades and awards are all good ideas. Anything that we can use to say 'thank you,' and 'you did a great job.' I think things like that would really mean a lot to them."

Sgt. Michael A. Dennis, 533rd Transportation Company, 36th Engineer Group — "The most important thing we can do is to treat them with the respect they deserve. They fought in a war and some were injured, and we should let them know that we respect that. Parades or something where they can be honored are always a good idea."

Capt. Todd Foreman, 3/14 Infantry, 10th Mountain Division — "I think we should hold a memorial ceremony on their behalf with full colors, laying of the wreath, taps and a 21-gun salute. One of the veterans should also give a speech. The ceremony should be held at a significant location such as the National Infantry Museum."

DoD campaign aims to convince people to quit

By Evelyn D. Harris
TRADOC News Service

Not all the results are in, but so far, the Department of Defense's anti-smoking campaign looks successful.

A lot of military people still smoke, and they'll be able to keep buying cigarettes on military installation. But the number of uniformed smokers is steadily headed in the desired direction—down.

The number of smokers in the Air Force in 1986 was 31 percent, a 20 percent reduction from 1985. The Army is down to 41 percent — compared with 52 percent in 1985. Final figures for the other services are not yet available, but monthly dollar sales of tobacco products in commissaries have decreased by 18 percent since November 1986.

In last year's report to congress on smoking in the military, Assistant Secretary of Defense (Health Affairs) Dr. William Mayer reported that 47 percent of military members smoked in 1985. Although that was a drop from 52 percent in 1982, it was still much higher than the rate for the general population — which is about 30 percent.

In March 1986, DoD published a health promotion plan establishing policy on smoking and other health risk behaviors. At the same time, Secretary of Defense Caspar W. Weinberger ordered an intense anti-smoking campaign to encourage "people who are now smokers to quit, and...to discourage people who are not smokers from becoming smokers."

At the time, Weinberger said he would continue to allow cigarettes to be sold in commissaries and post exchanges, but would review the policy after the anti-smoking campaign had been in effect for a reasonable period of time.

Tobacco sale policies will be re-evaluated following the release of the 1988 Worldwide Survey of Substance Abuse and Health Behavior among Military Personnel. The only change in the tobacco sales policy is that as of this October, commissaries will no longer sell tobacco products to anyone under 18.

But for now, tobacco prices should remain the same, recommended DoD's June 1987 updated report to Congress on smoking and health in the military. It also recommended continuing the current anti-smoking campaign.

Weinberger set a goal for DoD to reduce smoking rates by 10 percent per year and to get military use significantly below civilian levels within five years. Mayer believes that continued efforts will meet that goal.

The service smoking reduction programs all have three main components: information and motivation activities (anti-smoking education is part of many military training programs); smoking cessation assistance, and making smoking off-limits in all but a few designated places.

These messages appear in "commercials" included in Armed Forces Radio and Television programming for overseas troops and print and audiovisual materials obtained from voluntary and federal agencies.

In addition, DoD-wide information programs constantly remind DoD people of the department's anti-smoking stand.

Smokers now a minority, a fact employers appreciate

American Cancer Society

Smokers in the United States today are vastly in the minority. Today nonsmokers outnumber smokers by more than two to one.

Smoking costs to the U.S. economy are estimated at between $38 and $95 billion, by the U.S. Congress Office of Technology Assessment. This amounts to $2.17 in lost productivity and the treatment of smoking-related diseases for each package of cigarettes sold.

It costs an employer between $400 and $4,600 more annually to employ a smoker than a worker that doesn't smoke, according to the American Lung Association.

Cigarette smoking is the major cause of chronic obstructive lung disease (which includes emphysema and chronic coughs) in the United States for both men and women.

It is estimated by the Office of the U.S. Surgeon General that 60,000 Americans will die this year from chronic obstructive respiratory conditions such as emphysema and chronic bronchitis. Between 80 percent and 90 percent of these deaths are attributable to smoking, and therfore can be considered preventable and premature.

Recently released statistics show that only 16.7 percent of doctors, 14.1 percent of dentists and 23.4 percent of nurses now smoke.

Many former smokers report not being able to give up the habit on the first attempt but trying three or more times before finally succeeding.

In ever-increasing numbers, hotels around the country are "kicking the habit." Hotels and hotel chains now offering nonsmoking rooms — or even entire floors — to guests include: the Marc Plaza in Milwaukee; the Excelsior in Provo, Utah; Kansas City's Vista International; Chicago's Drake; Westin Hotels; Hyatt; Quality Inns and Holiday Inns. Dallas's Non-Smokers Inn was the nation's first smoke-free lodging facility, and Las Vegas's Showboat Hotel and Casino has remodeled an entire building for nonsmokers.

Studies suggest that smoking cessation programs can significantly reduce the number of relapses to smoking. Regardless of the type of cessation program, significantly more smokers "treated" (37 percent) maintain abstinence one year later than those who tried to quit unaided (18 percent).

Smoking is on the decline. Americans smoked 584 billion cigarettes in 1985, down from 594 billion in 1984, according to the U.S. Department of Agriculture.

Who smokes? In general, blue collar workers, high school graduates and men with lower incomes are more likely to smoke than men with college educations, white collar occupations and high-level incomes. However, women who work are more likely to smoke than housewives and women in households with low family incomes.

Consumption of snuff and chewing tobacco increased 31.6 percent between 1974 and 1984, with sales of nearly $1 billion annually.

The proportion of males smoking 25 or more cigarettes a day increased from 30.7 percent to 32.0 percent between 1976 and 1985. During the same period, females smoking 25 or more cigarettes each day increased from 19 percent to 21 percent.

The proportions of lighter smokers (less than 15 cigarettes per day) decreased between 1965 and 1983. For females the decline was from 46.2 percent to 34.3 percent, and for males 30.1 percent to 23.5 percent.

Black Americans tend to smoke less than whites. Only 11.6 percent of black males consume 25 or more cigarettes a day; the same proportion for white males is 36.3 percent. For black female smokers 5.2 percent smoke 25 or more cigarettes a day, whereas for white women the porportion is 21.7 percent.

Required for the first time in 1986, warning labels were added to all smokeless tobacco packaging and print advertisements. Also enacted was a ban on all radio and television advertising of chewing tobacco and snuff. A sample health label reads: WARNING: This product may cause mouth cancer.

Lung cancer now leading killer of women

American Cancer Society

Lung cancer now exceeds breast cancer as the leading cause of cancer deaths among women. Again in 1987, it is expected to be the number one cancer killer of American women.

The number of female smokers has almost caught up with men, largely because more men have given up the habit. While 31 percent of the men in a recent Gallup Poll were smokers, an additional 29 percent of those polled said they had given up smoking. The percentage of women smoking was 28 percent, but only 17 percent said they had kicked the habit.

In 1963, 6,588 American women died of lung cancer. In 1987 the disease will kill an estimated 44,000.

For a woman between the ages of 35 and 44 who smokes more than two packs a day, cigarette-related medical bills and lost work will add up to an average of $20,152 over her lifetime.

Between 1950 and 1984, the lung cancer death rate rose 418 percent for white women and 472 percent for non-white women. If lung cncer statistics are excluded, death rates for all other cancers fell 16 percent for white women and 13 percent for non-white women.

If a woman smokes, her chnces of developing lung cancer—once thought to be primarily a male disease—are 2-3 times greater than that of a nonsmoking woman.

The overall death rate of women—even young women—who smoke and use birth control pills is much higher than that of nonsmoking pill users. Women who use oral contraceptives and smoke have a much higher risk of strokes, heart attacks and blood clots in their legs.

Women who smoke heavily have nearly three times as much bronchitis and emphysema, about 75 percent more chronic sinusitis and 50 percent more peptic ulcers than women who do not smoke.

Adolescent and adult women are more likely than men to smoke low tar and nicotine cigarettes, smoke fewer cigarettes per day, and inhale less deeply.

A 1981 Gallup Poll showed that 70 percent of all women smokers would like to give up smoking.

After stopping smoking, the risk of a woman developing lung and laryngeal cancer drops steadily, equaling that of nonsmokers after 10 years.

Everyone should take time out to honor those who have served

Veterans Administration

President Reagan has proclaimed Nov. 11, as Veterans Day and has called upon all Americans to recognize "the hardships and sacrifices demanded from and faithfully accepted by the millions of men and women who have defended our land in war and in peace."

This year's Veterans Day theme is "Veterans, You are America," and the President urged Americans to let veterans know that their service is not forgotten, that their sacrifices be appreciated, and that America salutes its defenders.

Veterans Administration chief Thomas K. Turnage, who serves as Chairman of the Veterans Day National Committee, said "The foundations of American independence, liberty and freedom were built and preserved by those who served."

Turnage will preside at the 34th annual Veterans Day observance at Arlington National Cemetery, which begins with the tradition of honoring the Unknown Soldier on the 11th hour of the 11th day of the 11th month with a Presidential Wreath Laying Ceremony.

It was at that hour on Nov. 11, 1918, that the world celebrated the end of World War I hostilities, and which later became known as "Armistice Day."

In 1954, Congress renamed it Veterans Day to honor all those who have served in America's armed forces.

In his proclamation, the President said, "Our observance of Veterans Day this year, the Bicentennial of the Constitution, reminds us in a special way of the service men and women who have made liberty's cause their own.

"Our fundamental charter lives on because through the years countless brave Americans have gladly willed to 'provide for the common defense.' No one is more responsible for securing 'the Blessings of Liberty to ourselves and our Posterity' than our veterans."

The proclamation calls on federal, state and local government officials to display the U.S. flag and to encourage and participate in patriotic activities nationwide and to support the observance of Veterans Day with suitable commemorative expressions and programs.

Various Veterans Day observances will be held throughout the nation at many of the VAs 111 national cemeteries.

Golden Knights shine at Brazilian competition

FOZ DO IGIACU, BRAZIL (ARNEWS) — The U.S. Army Parachute Team, the Golden Knights, recently won a gold medal at the 1987 World Parachute Championships.

The Golden Knights won the eight-way event with a score of 119 points to France's 117 in relative work, where one point is scored for each completed maneuver a team completes in a free-fall.

The U.S. team also won a silver medal in the four-way category, a team category that requires the four-man team to exit the aircraft at 9,000 feet with only 35 seconds to complete its exercise.

The bronze medal in relative work was earned by the team from the Soviet Union with a total of 105 points. Australia took fourth with 97 overall points, and Austria came in fifth, justpassing Denmark with 77 points.

However, in the four-way category, the tables were slightly turned on the American team. France won the gold with 134 points over the United States' 128 points. Austria took the bronze medal with 118 points and Italy finished with 116 points for fourth place, one point above the fifth place Russian four-way team.

"It was tough," SFC Andy Gerber said, the team's leader, of the event. "The pressure was just tremendous, and it showed on bothteams (France and America)."

The 1987 world parachute championships was the seventh of its sort in relative work. This year's event began Oct. 3 and concluded with an award ceremony Oct. 11.

Relative work parachuting competitions are an odd year event, such as 1987. Even years feature style and accuracy competitions, which comprise individual-based events.

The Army Parachute Team, based at Fort Bragg, N.C., earned the right to represent America last July when the team took gold medals in national eight- and four-way competitions in Muskogee,Okla.

Academy to dedicate new education complex

WASHINGTON (ARNEWS) — Dedication ceremonies for the Sergeants Major Academy's new $18 million complex are set for Nov. 12 at Biggs Army Air Field at Fort Bliss, Texas.

Chief of Staff of the Army Gen. Carl E. Vuono will be the guest speaker. SMA Julius W. Gates also plans to attend and participate with Vuono in the official ribbon-cutting ceremony.

According to academy officials, training began in the addition Aug. 24. Beginning this fiscal year, plans call for doubling the number of senior non-commissioned officers trained annually.

Enrollment for the first sergeant course will rise from 720 to 810 a year. The academy will continue to train an additional 320 students at the course in Munich, Germany. The operations and intelligence course student load will increase from 240 to 448.

The six-month sergeants major course will begin training 928 senior non-commissioned officers each year, as opposed to the previous 500.

A new course for personnel and logistics non-commissioned officers will also be added to train another 480 students a year.

"The new buildings," officials say, "will help us tremendously in our mission of training non-commissioned officers for positions of greater responsibility."

The complex consists of six basic structures arranged in a circular manner around a central court area. A common interconnecting central ring provides covered access to the circle of buildings.

The six structures house the headquarters building, learning resources center, three classroom wings and an auditorium building.

Congress okays funds for NAF construction

WASHINGTON (ARNEWS) — The Army's requests for fiscal year 1988 funding of major construction projects for non-appropriated-fund activities met with a congressional approval rate of 87 percent (representing 53 of 61 proposed projects).

Congressional approval, say officials at the U.S. Army Community and Family Support Center in Alexandria, Va., amounts to more than $125 million in support of such NAF facilities as new youth activity centers, guest houses, skill development centers and consolidated clubs.

That figure could go higher if eight more projects now undergoing further study win Congressional go-ahead; — their approval would leave only four projects unfunded for the year.

Officials note that a sum of more than $33 million for these projects was pledged by the affected installations. The facility sites range in number from 25 in the Continental United States, 19 in Germany, to 9 in Korea.

This year's congressional approval, officials add, "represents a significant increase over last year, when only 35 percent of the Army's proposed construction projects were initially approved."

Food service staffers course upgrades skills

FORT MONROE, VA. (ARNEWS) — Club managers, food service supervisors, chefs and cooks can hone their skills by signing up for the Armed Forces Culinary Upgrade Program and the Armed Forces Culinary Course.

The upgrade program provides an overview of basic food preparation, kitchen management, and menu development. The class operates from a 40-percent hands-on approach and 60-percent classroom instruction.

The culinary course is designed for those directly involved with the day-to-day, hands-on food preparation in morale, welfare and recreation activities, Army clubs and other activities serving food.

Unlike the management-oriented AFCUP courses, the AFCC classes offer 70-80 percent hands-on experience.

For more information, contact Headquarters, U.S. Army Training and Doctrine Command, ATTN: ATPL-FO (Mrs. Curtis), Fort Monroe, VA 23561-5000, AUTOVON 680-3407 or commercial (804) 727-3407.

Reservists authorized to wear lapel button

WASHINGTON (ARNEWS) — Reserve component soldiers transitioning from troop program units are now authorized to receive the Army lapel button.

The issued button consists of a minuteman in gold on a red-enamel disk surrounded by 16 pointed rays with an outside diameter of nine/sixteenths of an inch.

Soldiers eligible include those transitioning with an honorable characterization of service (for non-adverse reasons); those on active federal service on or after April 1, 1984; or those having service in a Ready Reserve unit organized to serve as a unit on or after July 1, 1986.

Promotion boards set for top NCO slots

WASHINGTON (ARNEWS) — The annual Department of the Army selection/promotion board for command sergeants major and sergeants major promotion is set for Feb. 23 at the U.S. Army Enlisted Records and Evaluation Center at Fort Benjamin Harrison, Ind.

The board will also consider soldiers for retention beyond 30 years; and possible elimination of others under the qualitative-management program.

Rutgers downs Army in hard fought contest

WASHINGTON (ARNEWS) — Curtis Stephens ran for two touchdowns to lift Rutgers University to a 27-14 victory over the cadets of Army.

Army, which earlier in the year lost starting quarterback Tory Crawford for the season, played with ailing second-stringer Mark Mooney and fourth-stringer Morrell Savoy.

assesses the situations and determines the risks,consequences and the likelihood of occurrence. Finally the person excercises the options to continued living and makes a go or no-go decision.

Deciding in favor of doing it the safe way is the decision made by the person who enjoys life and wants to continue living with a healthy and whole body all in one piece.

Put yourself in the shoes of the young man, new in town, who decides to go swimming at the ol' swimming hole with some friends.They drive to a creek or pond, don their swim suits and survey the scene. There is a cliff overhanging the water hole, and one daring young soul decides to dive off the cliff. Ah' you're ahead of me. A simple risk assessment of this situation by you smart readers has already happened.

Now I have to say "Is it worth the risk of becoming a paraplegic or a quadraplegic?" Sure, diving would be thrilling and fun, but spending the rest of my life in a wheel chair is not my cup of tea. I decide to join in the swimming but not to dive. I'll be back to swim another day.

If I had dived into the water and suffered a broken neck, many would have said he had an accident he couldn't help.

There are lots of traps out there. You know what they are. Spare yourself the agony of an accident happening to you. Think before you act. Assess the risk and the possible consequences. When you do that, you will select the safe thing to do and be around later to enjoy many more things in life.

This too must have been a new experience to him as he originally seemed intent on breaking through the formation before finally hitting the brakes.

"What made you decide to stop?" I asked with relief.

"Those guys had guns," he said.

I'm thinking about sending an anonymous letter to the Safety Officer, recommending Steve for remedial driving with special emphasis on what to do when passing troops in formation, knowing in advance where you're going so you can signal your intentions and common courtesy for the road. I wonder if all that's part of the POI.

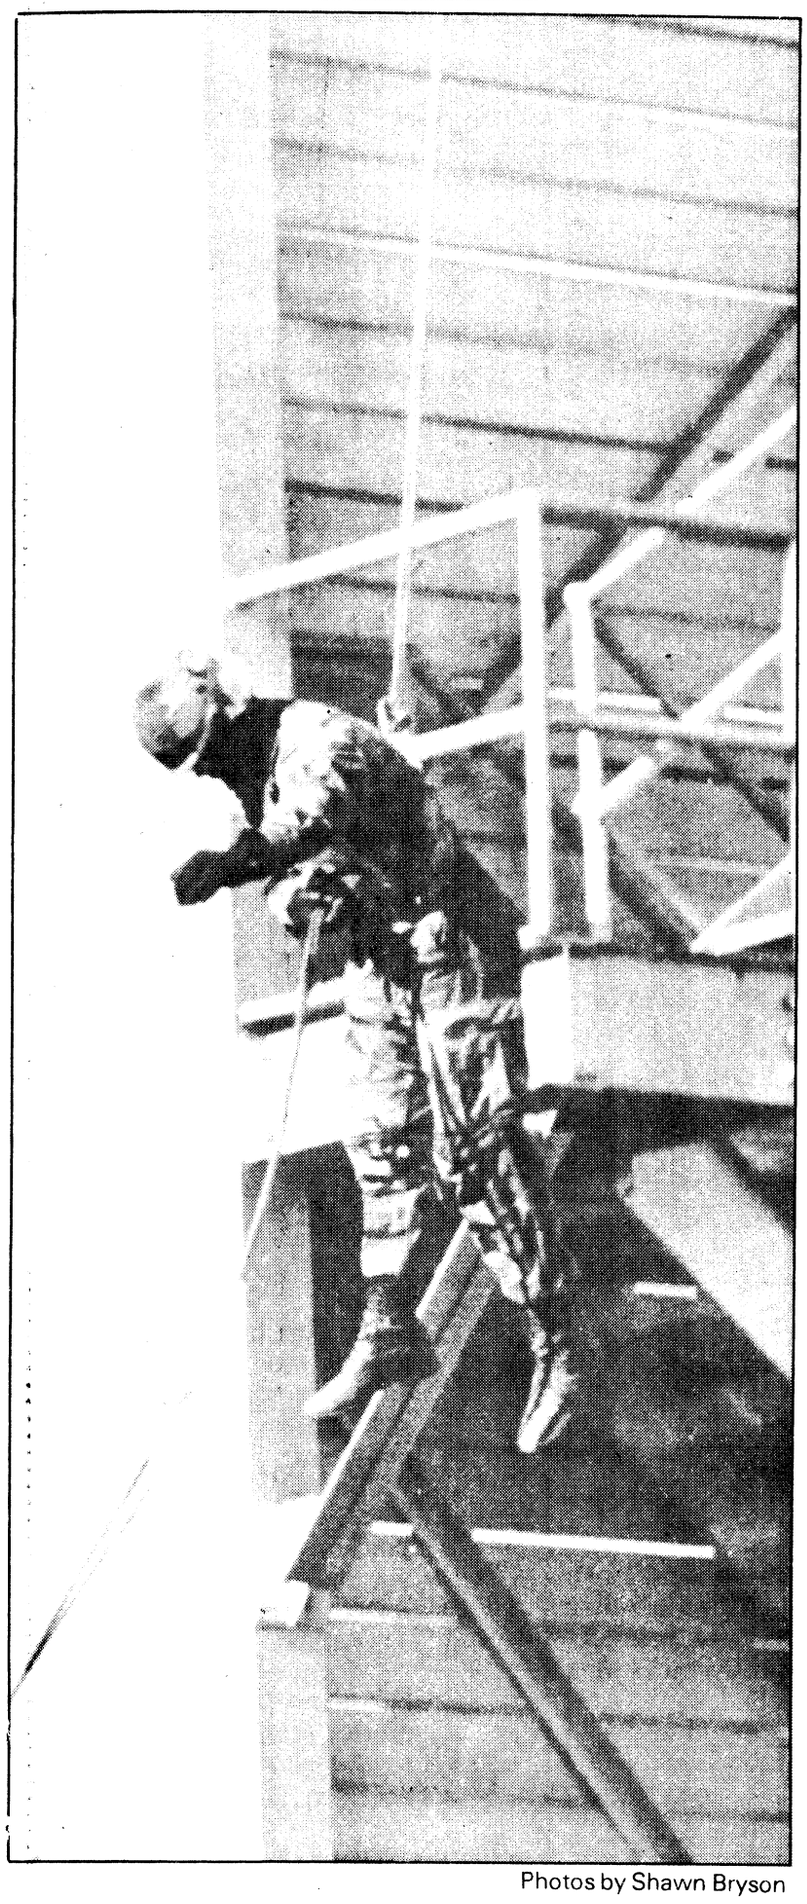
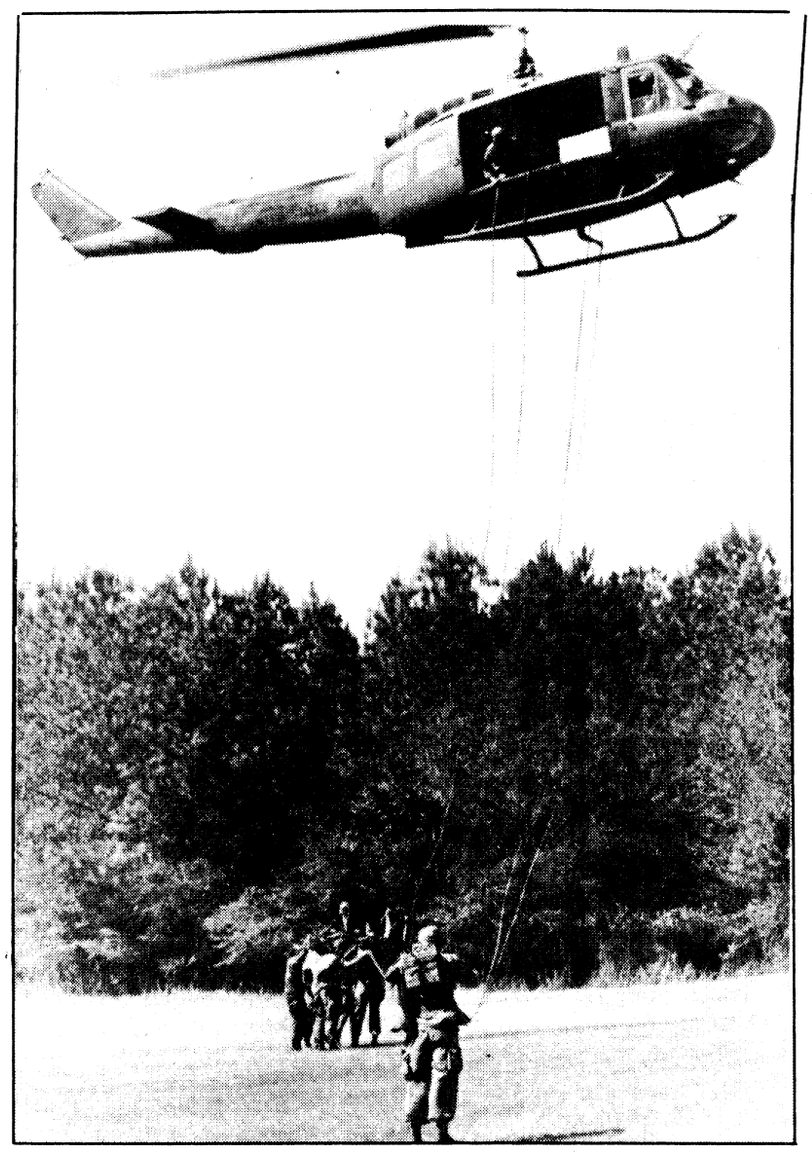
Maintenance soldiers take time out to learn a new skill — rappelling



By Shawn Bryson
36th Engr. Group

During a recent field training exercise, soldiers from the 598th Maintenance Company, 67th Maintenance Battalion, 36th Engineer Group took part in some unusual training for maintenance soldiers.

The 43 soldiers, used to 'hanging out' in a maintenance bay and repairing combat vehicles, found themselves literally hanging out during a class on rappelling.



The 598th soldiers were instructed by the Pathfinders from the 187th Infantry Platoon, 34th Medical Battalion in several areas of survival.

The soldiers spent one morning rappelling at Todd Field and an afternoon STABOing, better known as hanging from a rope attached to a helicopter in flight.

72nd Engineers support brigade during evaluation

36th Engrs.

By George Mingee
197th Inf. Bde. correspondent

KABOOM! The sound roars across the battlefield. An armored personnel carrier stops dead in the middle of a tactical minefield, disabled by the handiwork of combat engineers.

The 72nd Engineer Company (Combat) displayed their talents last week during operations in which they fought on both sides of the battlefield.

The engineers performed their missions in support of the external evaluation of the 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor.

In turn, they accomplished their annual unit external evaluation by digging tank ditches, laying minefields and building other battlefield obstacles.

According to Sgt. James D. Ray, engineers perform many support missions during combat operations, such as reconnaissance, locating avenues of approach and target sites. They also provide demolition for bridges and other important targets.

When the training began, the soldiers knew what was expected of them. The engineers do their battlefield work from combat engineer vehicles.

With this vehicle, the engineers can move earth as well as defend themselves against an attack. However, it takes teamwork to perform these missions with precision.

"It takes the whole crew. We have to work together to complete our mission", said Ssgt. Jimmy L. Baxter, a tank commander.

An armored vehicle launch bridge is one critical vehilce in the unit. It's capable of closing in a span of up to 60 feet. It allows men and vehicles to cross natural and man-made barriers at points where they may otherwise have to find another route.

However, combat engineers cannot always rely on vehicles to perform their missions. Soldiers, not vehicles, perform the difficult task of laying minefields and concertina wire. In these situations, the soldiers must rely on their skills to survive.

The 72nd Engineers play a vital role in support of the 197th Infantry Brigade.

Fort Knox team evaluates 2/69th Armor troops during field exercise

197th Inf.

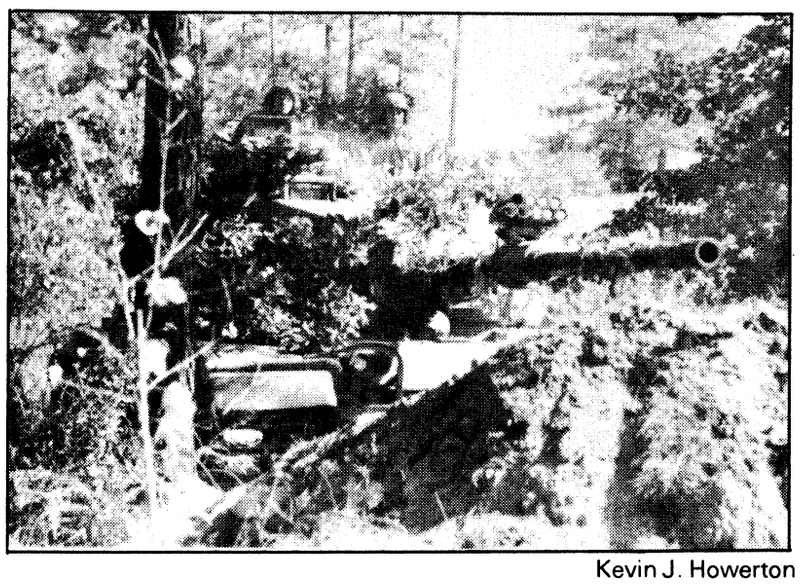
By Kevin J. Howerton
197th Inf. Bde. correspondent

Officers and non-commissioned offiers from the 194th Brigade at Fort Knox were at Fort Benning last week to evaluate the 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor's field exercise. The exercise consisted of defensive-position fighting, night attacks, and tactical roadmarches.

"External-evaluations are done to gauge our unit's weaknesses and strengths in our combat role," said SSgt. Timothy S. Jackson of 2-69 Armor's S-3 section.

Troop A, 15th Calvary, with the help of other elements from throughout the 197th Infantry Brigade, provided the opposing force for the evaluation.

"We don't get many chances to have graders from Fort Knox here," said SFC Willie A. Jones of Company A, 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor. "They can see what we can't see, and they sit down and talk with us about what we did right and what we did wrong.



"Having the external graders is also a big help to our soldiers," he added. "They get tired of hearing the same thing over and over from us, but when they hear it from someone else, they take notice."

The training also gave newer members of the unit a chance to try some interesting maneuvers, such as crossing a creek at Turkey Ford.

"I like doing stuff like that, if the water isn't too deep," said Sp4 Paul A. Ayres, a tank driver, who recently transferred into the unit from the 1st Armor Division in Germany. "In Europe the fords have softer bottoms, and when you hit one, the driver usually gets soaked. But here the bottom is rock and you stay dry."

This was the first major exercise that the 2/69th has been on since their deployment to the National Training Center in Fort Irwin, Calif. This gave them an opportunity to apply newly learned skills in the immensely different environment here at Fort Benning.

"Fort Irwin has a lot of open desert area where you can see what you're supposed to do," said 2nd Lt. Phil Wilson, of Company A, 2-69 Armor. "Fort Benning isn't the ideal tanking country; it has too many trees, forests and small winding roads for tanks to maneuver freely."

22 graduate from basic medical course

By Marco Morales
USARSA Public Affairs Office

Twenty-two noncommissioned officers from four Central and South American countries graduated Oct. 16, from the Basic Medical and Preventive Medicine Course at the U.S. Army School of the Americas.

Countries with number of graduates represented were: Bolivia 1, Colombia 4, Costa Rica 4, and El Salvador 13. Guest speaker for the graduation ceremony was Dr. Jose C. Serratos, Jr., an orthopedist of the Columbus Orthopedic Clinic.

The 10-week course trains selected medical officers and NCOs in basic medical and preventive medicine skills such as controlling environmental and medical factors affecting personal health and well-being.

The training included field medical service, emergency care, splinting, trauma, administration and medications, communicable disease prevention and awareness, personal hygiene, water purification and prevention of climate injuries.

Designed as a civic action or "nation-building" course at USARSA, the course is a combination of two courses currently offered at the U.S. Army Academy of Health Sciences at Fort Sam Houston, Tex.

To teach the course effectively, experienced NCOs and medical technicians from the Army's medical field are temporarily assigned here from posts Army-wide to teach the course under the General Subjects Division Department of Combat Operations, USARSA.

There are plenty of good reasons to quit smoking

American Cancer Society

The risk of developing lung cancer is 10 times greater for smokers than for nonsmokers. Those who smoke two or more packs of cigarettes a day are 15 to 25 times more likely to die of lung cancer than nonsmokers.

Lung cancer is largely a preventable disease. It is estimated that 83 percent of the cases of lung cancer could be avoided if individuals never took up smoking.

Compared with many other cancers, the survival rate for lung cancer is low. About 13 percent of lung cancer patients live five or more years after the diagnosis. Lung cancer is very difficult to detect early. Only 24 percent of lung cancers are discovered in a localized stage.

Lung cancer is the number one cause of cancer death among both women and men. An estimated 92,000 men and 44,000 women will die of lung cancer in 1987.

The six American cigarette companies spend $3 billion annually for advertising on billboards, in newspapers and magazines, and on numerous promotions, many of which are televised.

More than 320,000 Americans will die prematurely this year of diseases linked to smoking. That's as many Americans as have been killed in all the wars fought in this century. Worldwide, even the most conservative estimates place the number of avoidable deaths caused by smoking at well over one million a year.

About 54 million Americans still smoke. According to the American Lung Association, 90 percent of smokers would like to quit, and a great many have tried to quit at least once.

All forms of tobacco use, including cigars, pipes and smokeless tobacco, put the user at increased risk for cancer of any part of the oral cavity, from lip and tongue to mouth and throat.

In an 18-hour waking day, a two-pack-a-day smoker spends from three to four hours with a cigarette in mouth, hand or ashtray, takes about 400 puffs, and inhales up to 600 milligrams of tar.

Smokers of low tar and nicotine cigarettes find it easier to quit altogether than do high tar and nicotine smokers.

The number of people who have quit smoking is rising steadily. From 1978 to 1985, the ranks of former smokers increased from 31.5 million to almost 40 million ex-cigarette smokers in the U.S. today.

Lung cancer accounts for almost 28 percent of all cancer deaths in this country. This makes lung cancer the single largest contributor to the total cancer death rate.

There is no such thing as a "safe" cigarette. Studies show that the risk for smokers of low-tar/low-nicotine brands of cigarettes is still much higher than that for nonsmokers.

More men than women smoke but the percentage of adult U.S. smokers has dropped from more than 40 percent in the mid-1960's to about 32 percent today. The percentage of adult female smokers rose to a peak of 34 percent in 1965; since then it has fallen to about 28 percent.

During the 1986 Great American Smokeout, a record-breaking 23.8 million smokers tried to quit for the day. This represents more than 43 percent of the nation's 54.5 million smokers.

Teachers, doctors, dentists and pharmacists have had high rates of success in kicking the smoking habit.

Cessation of smoking reduces the risk of lung cancer mortality compared to that of the continuing smoker. Former smokers who quit 15 or more years ago have lung cancer mortality rates only slightly above those for nonsmokers.

Only one-third of smokers gain weight when they give up cigarettes. One-third actually lose weight as a result of combining a general fitness program with their efforts to quit.

A recent survey by the National Center for Health Statistics show that though smoking rates have declined significantly during the last decade among blacks, they are still significantly higher than for whites. According to the 1985 survey, 43 percent of black men smoke, as against 35 percent of white men, 33 percent of black women and 30 percent of white women.

The trend toward nonsmokers' discounts on life insurance -- more than 325 companies today offer reduced rates on annual premiums -- has extended to other forms of insurance. Nonsmokers often can expect to pay less for disability insurance, automobile policies and homeowners policies.

Two major reviews in 1986 by the Surgeon General and the National Academy of Sciences state that involuntary smoking is a health hazard. Although the currently available evidence is not sufficient to conclude that passive or involuntary smoking causes lung cancer in nonsmokers, the evidence does raise concern about a possible serious public health problem.

Cancer death rates would have declined over the last three decades in the United States if it were not for an increase in lung cancer and other cancer related to smoking.

Four new warning labels are now required to be rotated on cigarette packaging. These labels point out the hazards of smoking to pregnant women, the reduction of health risks by quitting, the causation of diseases such as lung cancer and emphysema, and the presence of carbon monoxide in cigarette smoke.

In 1986, the American Cancer Society joined the ranks of other health agencies, including the American Medical Association, concerned by the health hazards of smoking, by calling for a ban on advertising and promotion of tobacco products.

Chemical studies have shown that tobacco smoke consists of almost 4,000 compounds, many of which act as initiators, promoters and carcinogens. The major cancer-causing activity of tobacco smoke comes from the tar, or particulate portion.

Show support for friends trying to quit during the Great American Smokeout

American Cancer Society

On Smokeout Day, everyone tries to be especially kind to smokers who are trying to quit. It's a time of light-hearted fun. Preaching and scolding are taboo. Never-smoker or ex-smokers who are "adopting" current smokers for the day should offer moral support, encouragement and incentives to help get them through the day —and hopefully longer.

Show that you care—you have a vested interest in keeping your adoptee in good health.

Provide him or her with a survival kit of low-calorie nibbles—carrots and celery, sticks of cinnamon, sugarless gum, etc.

Don't nag or threaten!

Try to make yourself available either in person or by phone for the entire day.

Take your adoptee out for breakfast or lunch. Or promise a special dinner at his or her favorite restaurant.

Give him a special Smokeout "quitter's sticker" to wear.

Go public with your adoption. Enlist the help of others in giving moral support to your adoptee.

Especially if you're a never-smoker, consider giving up something for the day, too...e.g. candy, desserts, coffee, etc.

If you're an ex-smoker, share your experiences rather than lecture on the dangers of smoking. What worked for you may work for others.

Keep in contact.

Send flowers for a post-Smokeout celebration.

Offer a lift to work or home in the afternoon.

Schedule an evening activity that minimizes the temptation to smoke, e.g., see a movie in a theatre that prohibits smoking in at least one section...or try a strenuous activity like racquetball, bowling, or a swim at the local pool...or stage a get-together with fellow adopters and their "foundlings."

Be a cheerleader—offer praise, encouragement and finally, at the end of the day, congratulations!

Urge them to stay off cigarettes now that they've made it for a day

Give added assistance after the Smokeout with a special gift: the American Cancer Society's "Fresh Start" quit smoking course. It's available on audio and videocassette, as well in paperback. They're available in local bookstores and video outlets.

Women

Among employed women, white collar workers are less likely to smoke than those in blue collar occupations. Women earning more than $25,000 a year smoke less than any other group of working females.

According to a study conducted in Denmark, cigarette smoking may impair a woman's ability to breast-feed. Women who smoke tend to stop breast-feeding their infants at a much earlier stage than do nonsmokers. Researchers attribute this to the fact that heavy smokers have lower levels of prolactin (a pituitary hormone that stimulates the production of milk), probably a result of the nicotine they inhale.

The risk of sudden infant death syndrome is increased for infants whose mothers or fathers who smoke.

Adult women are beginning to quit smoking at rates comparable to adult men. As in the case of men, women most likely to succeed in quitting are those at higher education and income levels. Half of the college graduates who ever smoked cigarettes are now former smokers.

In 1950, women accounted for less than one in twelve deaths from lung cancer. By 1986, that figure had risen to almost one in three. If this trend continues, lung cancer is expected to strike more women than men by the year 2000.

Though among women during the years 1959-1982, the number of current smokers has decreased (from 27 percent to 21 percent) and the number of ex-smokers has increased (from 6 percent to 23 percent), the number of nonsmoking women has shown a decrease (from 67 percent to 56 percent). During the same period, males who said they had never been smokers increase from 23 percent to 26 percent.

From 1976 to 1985, adult male smokers dropped from 42 percent of the population to 21 percent, while women smokers decreased from 32 percent to 28 percent, according to the National Center for Health Statistics.

Reagan

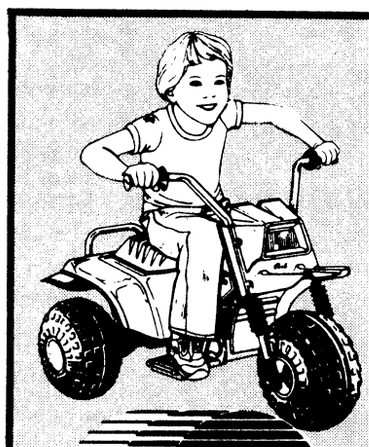
Turing his eye to another section of the globe, Reagan reaffirmed his position of undying support for the resistance fighters in Nicaragua who have been involved in a bloody struggle with communist Sandinistas for seven years.

"My friends, I know you agree: we must not abandon these courageous men and women, these soldiers," Reagan said. "Let me promise: Nicaragua will have its freedom, and we will help the resistance carry on its brave fight until its freedom is secured."

Securing freedom has been a hallmark of Reagan's presidentcy, and he expressed great appreciation for the Army's stellar performance in that area.

"As commander-in-chief these seven years, I have been struck again and again by the professionalism of our military officers and by the soldiers I have met in the field," he said.



Upon closing his remarks, Reagan paid the corps a stirring tribute. "Your youth, your optimism — they give us strength," he said. "As I look out upon your young faces, I feel as one who will depart the stage almost as you have made your first entrance. I feel in my heart a great confidence in the future of our country; for I know that you will defend that future. And it is true. The long gray line has never failed us. God bless you all."

Before his remarks, Reagan and Lt. Gen. Dave R. Palmer had reviewed the corps during a parade on the plain that was attended by hundreds of soldiers, civilians and family members.

Battle of AB Hill 180 proved value of bayonet in combat

By J.C. Bean
Army News Service

WASHINGTON — Most of the men of Company E, 2nd Battalion, 27th Infantry Division, probably knew how to play the game "King of the Hill." A popular childhood game back in the fifties, most who grew up during that era, at one time or another during their lives, had mimicked war.

From the bottom of a real or make-believe hill, they would try to dethrone a friend turned imaginary enemy king. Assaulting the hill's top, each sought to drag the imposter king to the bottom in victory. But not always in success. Sometimes, the attacker would find himself "heels up at hill's bottom."

Several years later, on an early bitter-cold February morning in 1951, soldiers of Company E found themselves in a real-life analogy as they approached AB Hill 180 near Osan and close-to Pyongtaek, Korea. In late 1950, Chinese communists had pushed United Nations forces from the Chinese and North Korean borders to the south of Seoul.

Numerous communist forces were entrenched throughout the territory that now includes Osan and Suwon Air Bases.

About 30 miles away, members of Company E moved toward 180 in an open-box formation. Two platoons formed the left and right sides of the box while a third formed its base as they approached a range of hills head on. The hills dog-legged right a mile or so to the rear. An open rice paddy stretched out in front of the hills for about 1,000 yards. Realizing this was no game, the intensity increased as the soldiers clutched their rifles and prepared to fix bayonets, if necessary, before meeting the enemy.

One of the bayonets belonged to then captain (now retired colonel) Lewis L. Millett. "I knew the enemy at the top of the hill carried orders to kill, just as I did," he said. "A company leader, I divided the group of 100 men into three platoons. 'Operation Ripper' was designed to destroy the communist troops holed up on 180. I also knew I was smarter than they, because they were at the very top, the enemy faced a strategic problem."

Unlike the child's game, when it comes to real war, real weapons with real bullets, one's location on the hilltop poses a distinct disadvantage. Because of the degree of the hill's incline, bullets fired from there travel in a straight line and above the heads of ascenders. Once the attacker gets above a certain level and within a zone of about 40 feet from the crest of the hill, he becomes most vunerable. Millett had found himself in that position, and that knowledge was foremost on his mind.

Another thought preyed on him. Millett said that word had come down that an enemy document put out and circulated by the Chinese was accusing American GIs of fearing cold steel and close combat. "Knowing that," Millett said, "we trained hour after hour, day after day, in the use of bayonets." Fierce determination melded their spirits, Millett acknowledged.

That determination proved a major factor to members of Company E a short while after they had reached the base of Hill 180. Unlike the earlier childhood games of imaginary enemies with conjured weapons, the enemy's fire popped all around them. Company E's Brownings and other weapons were real also, not plastic. And, their ammunition could kill. Those fixed bayonets at the ends of some rifles were made not of rubber, but of sharpened steel.

Once in that crucial 40-foot zone, Millett decided to proceed with the assault. "The whole thing went off so fast I don't remember everything that happened," he admitted. "I 've heard that happens during traumatic periods."

Millett remembers the aftermth quite clearly, however. "You know, nowadays guys with raised arms and clenched fists join to glean victory all the time. Back then, though, it was uncommon for a group of soldiers to stand together and cheer themselves for victorious efforts. But we did. We went to the top of that hill, raised our arms, shouted out loud, jumped up and down in excitement -- some even hugged each other for their efforts."

Several days after the event, Millett's troops told him some of the things he did during the bayonet assault. "We got together in a group to discuss the details."

According to Millett, an operations analyst for battle studies from a famous university in the U.S. had conducted interviews to find out what happened on Hill 180.

"As the soldiers repeated accounts of the battle," he said., "I was shocked to find out that I had actually swung my bayonet like a baseball bat."

With each swing, Millett and his comrades came closer and closer to victory. Some blows that didn't cause death, caused wounds. Regardless of death or wounds, the enemy scattered. "We stripped those dead lying on the ground to validate the cause of death. We discovered quite a few had multiple wounds."

Millett and other investigators also learned that some of the enemy dead had been removed from the battlefield. "Right after the assault, we surveyed the damages. We came upon a major lying dead on the ground. When we went back the next day, the body was gone. We figured the enemy had sneaked in during the night and removed the body."

Of the nearly 400 or so enemy fighters, 167 died and more than 200 were wounded. Millett killed 9 of 18 victims by bayonet alone. "One enemy soldier," he recalled, "held his gun so low in his foxhole that he couldn't respond to my thrusting bayonet quickly enough."

the needs of the soldier. If the Army finds an item it can purchase off-the-shelf, or one that needs only slight modification, it can equip soldiers with that item.

This method also saves tax dollars and allows the Army to equip its soldiers faster, since the Army need not research and develop the item from scratch.

The Army issued the M-9 to selected close combat troops, mainly infantry, special forces and combat engineers beginning in February.

Proponents of the bayonet say that with its serrated edge, it can saw through half-inch hemp rope, 2- by 2-inch pine boards and one-inch hardwood dowels, ice and aircraft fuselages. It can also cut through metal bands used on ammunition containers.

When coupled with its scabbard, the bayonet becomes a wire cutter capable of cutting double-twisted barbed wire. Its scabbard also contains a built-in whetstone for sharpening the knife's blade.

"The M-9 surpassed its competitors in tests by some of its toughest critics — the soldier," Rowland said. "These extensive and carefully controlled field tests resulted in overwhelming praise for the new M-9 system."

But underneath the bayonet's newly designed scabbard, field tests have revealed a "dull side" to the bayonet's performance. The 3rd Battalion of the 75th Ranger Regiment at Fort Benning, Ga., received more than 700 of the bayonet systems and fielded them last spring. Since then, they have had hands-on experience with the new bayonet systems and have experienced a few problems with them.

"Although the bayonet system has been well received generally and is considered a hearty knife that works well in the field, a few complaints have surfaced," said Capt. Mark Harris. As the 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment's civil military affairs officer at Benning, Harris has fielded questions about the new bayonet since its introduction into the Army's inventory.

"Under rough field conditions, the rivets on the bayonet's scabbard have a tendency to 'pop,' causing the scabbard to separate from the pistol belt. Of those bayonets actually used, 11 have experienced this separation problem."

"Overall, the Army is proud of its selection and believes the M-9 multipurpose bayonet system provides soldiers with a product that will enable them to get the job done," Rowland concluded.

VA Q&A

Veterans Administration

EDITOR'S NOTE: Following are representative questions answered daily by VA counselors. Full information is available at any VA office.

Q: If I make arrangements with a funeral home to pre-pay all costs for my burial, can my family receive reimbursement from the Veterans Administration at the time of my death?

A: No. Reimbursement cannot be made for pre-paid services or items pre-paid. Burial benefits are paid for expenses incurred after a veteran's death.

Q: I applied for a VA-guaranteed home loan. I was advised it could not be processed until I paid an outstanding debt for education benefits. Is that true?

A: Yes. It is the policy of the VA to reconcile all outstanding debts to the U.S. government prior to approving a home loan application.

Q: Is it possible for a veteran to be entitled to pension and compensation and receive both benefits?

A: Entitlement may exist concurrently for both benefits; however, payment can be made only for the benefit which provides the greater monthly allowance.

Q — Is it necessary for me to inform the Veterans Administration of my new address if my monthly benefit check is handled by "direct deposit"?

A — Yes. Failure to keep the VA notified of your current address could result in your missing important correspondence sent to your address of record.

A: No. If your spouse retired from the Armed Forces you must apply for CHAMPUS.

Q: I am a veteran and would like to start a small business. How can I obtain a Veterans Administration small business loan?

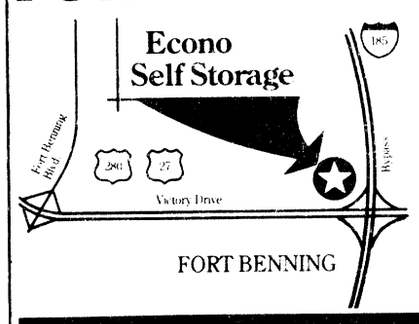
A: The VA does not have a small busines loan program. The Small Business Administration (SBA) has programs to assist veterans in obtaining small busines loans. In each SBA field office there is a veterans' affairs officer to assist veterans. Check the U.S. Government section of the local phone book for the address of the nearest SBA office to you.

Q: Can a veteran get a VA-guaranteed loan to pur chase a condominimum unit?

A: Yes. Provided the unit is located in a condominium complex approved by Veterans Administration.

Q: I am a veteran with a service-connected disability rated at 30-percent, is there an additional allowance payable for my dependents?

A: Yes. Veterans whose service-connected disabilities are rated at 30-percent or more are entitled to additional allowances for dependents. The additional amount is determined according to the number of dependents and the degree of disability.



Q: Can a veteran obtain a VA-guaranteed loan for the purchase of property in a foreign country?

A: No. Real property must be located in the United States, its territories or possessions. The latter includes Puerto Rico, Guam, the Virgin Islands, American Samoa and the Northern Mariana Islands.

Q: My wife and I are both veterans and meet eligibility requirements for the VA Guaranteed Home Loan Program. May we acquire property jointly and increase the amount which may be guaranteed by the VA?

A — Yes. The amount of the guaranty may be increased to an amount equal to the combined total of both your entitlements, however, the guaranty may not exceed 60-percent of the loan.

Thanksgiving season a time to count our blessings

By Dennis DeMond
CPE resident

As we enter the season called Thanksgiving, it is important for us to take some time to find out what Thanksgiving really means to us.

We are often led to believe that it is just a time of turkey, company, and football. Or, perhaps just a time that is designated as a transitional period from the hectic, ordinary, and mundane time of the year into the festive Christmas season.

The author of Colossians 4:2 tells us that it is much more than the aforementioned when he says, "Continue in prayer, and watch in the same with thanksgiving;" (K.J.)

I am told that the Greek word for thanksgiving in the New Testament comes from two words meaning "good and grace". Grace is a term that means receiving God's goodness and favor without meriting it, and goodness proclaims the generosity and love of God to His people.

Putting them together, we learn that thanksgiving simply means grace used well. Thanksgiaving is a spirit of appreciation and gratitude for all the good that God has done for us.

A poem from an unknown author speaks in a humorous way about God's goodness when he writes the following:

Thank God for the dirty dishes, they have a tale to tell; while others may go hungry, we've eaten very well. With home, health and happiness, I shouldn't want to fuss; by the stack of evidence, God's been very good to us!

In Colossians 4:2, Paul gives us two other words significant to Thanksgiving. The first is prayer, which means to be in dialogue with the God of heaven.

The second is watching, which means to keep one's attention fixed upon God. Here Paul is inviting us to open our happy hearts in continuous dialogue with God.

In this verse from the Scriptures, there are four simple words which help us to understand a more profound undestanding of the word Thanksgiving.

They are good, grace, prayer and watching.

May you watch, and from your happy heart be in continuous dialogue with God.

Learn how to make advent wreathes

An Advent wreath-making workship will take place Nov. 19 at 7 p.m. at the TIC annex. It is sponsored by the Catholic Women of St. Maurice Parish.

All supplies will be provided. Bring the whole family and learn how to make a wreath. Prayer booklets will be given out and it will be an opportunity to begin the Advent season with inspiration.

For information, call Marianne at 687-0451 or Sondra at 687-1518.

Enrichment classes to begin next week

The CCD Adult Enrichment program will begin a three-part program on families by Father John Powell Nov. 15 at 7 p.m. in the Religious Education Center.

This program is about building new and better lines of communications between couples, parents and children, and between siblings.

Powell insists the family is a "laboratory of life," that it is where people learn how to relate to other people and how to use their talents.

All adults are welcome.

Students go outdoors to learn about nature

By Beth Middlemiss
Fort Benning Schools

The classroom moved outdoors for Dexter School's entire fifth grade as 60 students and their teachers held classes Thursday and Friday in and around Victory Lodge at Harmony Church as part of the third annual Dexter Outdoor Education program.

On Thursday, students moved in groups of eight from one outdoor classroom to the next. In one area, students created art work from pinecones and berries. Another group used compasses and headed into the woods on a charted course.

One group sat underneath a tree looking at pinecones and discussing the mathematical progression that could be seen in their design.

A creative writing group sat in another wooded area, and across the path eight students giggled while walking along with arms in shoulder slings that they had just learned to tie in the first aid class.

CW3 George Vaillant returned for the third year to teach the first aid course and Sp4 Michael Baker joined him this year as a volunteer instructor.

Other groups went hiking, looking for specific natural objects or identifying trees and plants.

Another group fished and another sat in the lodge discussing the stars that they would be observing that night as they sat around the campfire.

That night, the students and ten of their teachers slept in barracks about a mile from the lodge after an evening filled with songs, games, toasted marshmallows and a star-gazing hike. Classes resumed again around the lodge on Friday morning.

"Our staff plans for two months to bring this program about, but we couldn't do it without the help of Col. Richard Seigfried and Col. Victor Stamey of the 2nd ITB, who provide the fantastic logistical support," said Del Hicks, Dexter principal.

"The first year we scheduled the program in May," said Hicks, "but we've found that the cooperative group spirit that develops within the classes helps students to learn and work together in the classroom more effectively for the rest of the year."

"When I grow up and remember all this, I think the thing I'll remember most is the all those stars," said fifth grader, Robert Barber. "I learned some new ones."

"Not me," said Bridgette Bell, "I'll remember going fishing. I never did that before."

Bicycles stolen at Faith Middle School

Fort Benning Schools

In recent weeks, bicycles have been stolen at or near Faith Middle School. The Military Police have worked with school officials to stop the thefts and to find those persons who are responsible.

Parents are urged to remind students who ride bicycles to any of the Fort Benning schools, that bicycles should be locked with a chain and that students should notify school officials immediately if unauthorized adults or students are seen at bicycle parking areas.

ASK THE JUDGE

By William Barrett
Staff Judge Advocate's Office

Q: I recently received a brochure from a company offering me access to unlimited amounts of interest free money if I became a member of their plan. It sounds like a great offer, but I am curious about how they can offer all this money without requiring anything except a membership fee.

A: It sounds as if the brochure came from a mulitilevel distribution company, or what is better known as a "pyramid." This sort of company markets its products or services through its members who are organized in different levels.

These members are paid commissions or bonuses based on their sales results or recruitment of new members (participants) in the company.

These pyramid companies lead people to believe that by merely joining and becoming a participant (for a fee) that a person will be able to gain large amounts of money with little or no obligation.

The amount of money a person is able to obtain may depend on such things as: the number of people a person can recruit to become participants, or how much of the company's products a person can sell.

These are the type of conditions, often referred to in such brochures as "desire," "ability," or "motivation," which control how much money a person can obtain through his membership.

One should be wary of statements contained in brochures from people who claim to have made large sums of money through their participation in the company.

Also, under Georgia law, these companies should not make representations of past earnings of their participants.

The state of Georgia has provisions in its code governing the operation of such businesses. If a person has questions concerning this sort of company, he might consider consulting a legal assistance attorney, the Better Business Bureau before he sends in a membership fee.

McDonald wins National Infantry Museum Run

More than 5,300 runners competed in the seventh annual National Infantry Museum Run Saturday, joining the Chief of Infantry, Maj. Gen Kenneth C. Leuer, in what has become one of the largest races in the southeast.

SSgt. LLoyd McDonald Jr., crossed the finish line first with a time of 25:14, breaking the record for the 30-to-34 age group.

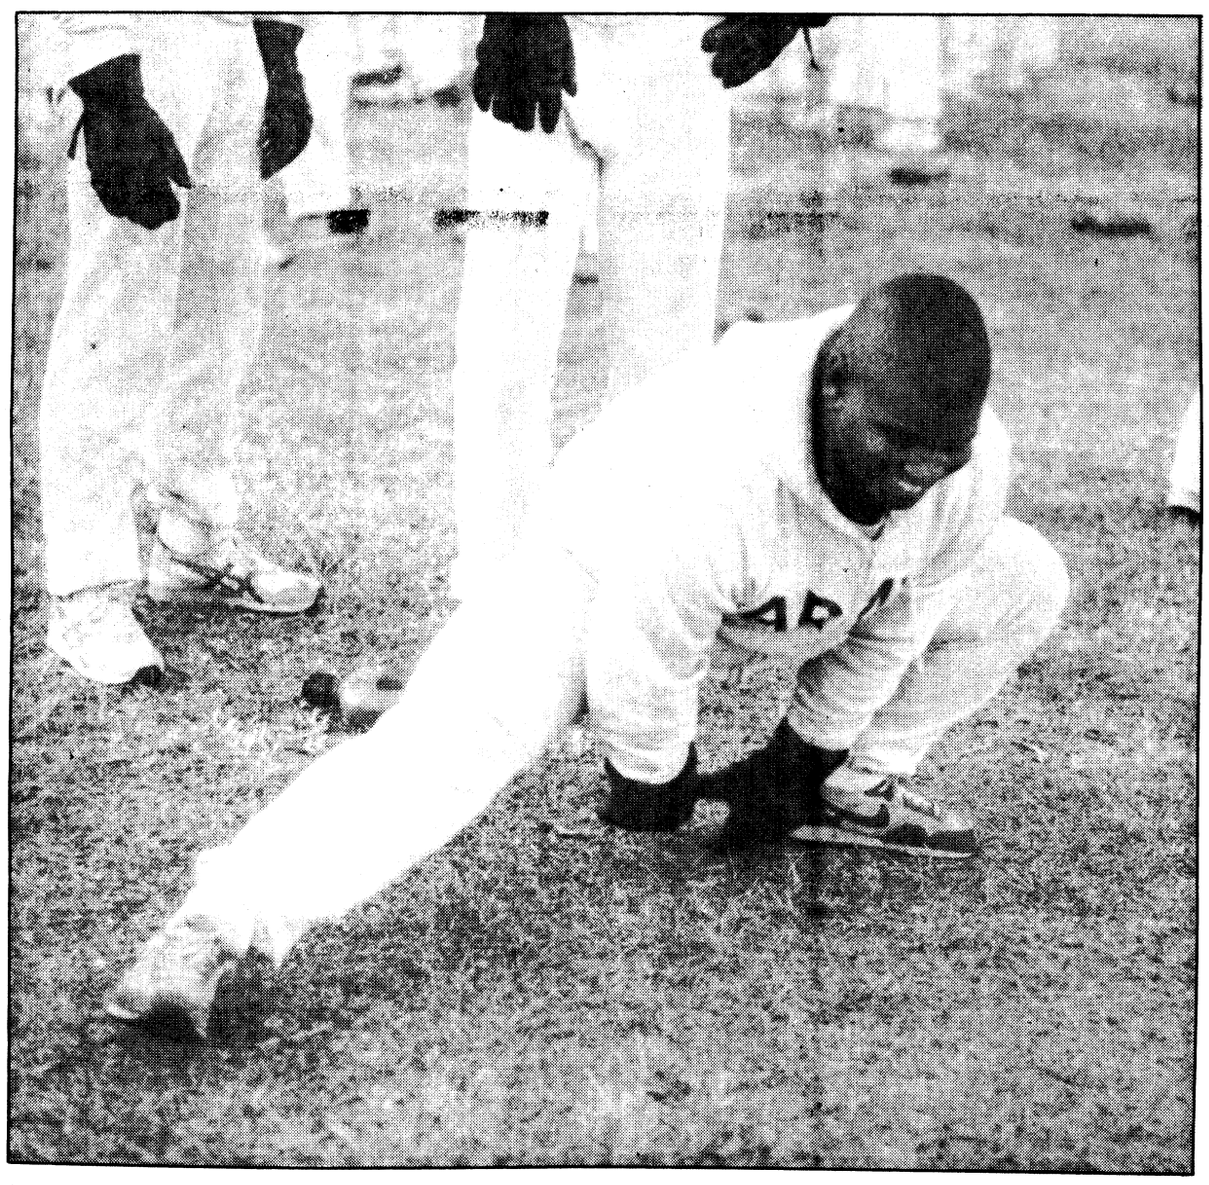
"For the amount of time I get to train, the time was respectable," said McDonald. "I had hoped to break 25 minutes."

McDonald, a supply sergeant in HHD, 2d Infantry Training Brigade, is no novice to mid-distance running. Recently he placed 14th out of more than 3,000 runners at the third Annual Army 10-Miller Run in Washington, D.C.. McDonald's time on this "Run the River Bridges" course was 52:41. Later this month, he will represent Fort Benning on the post team at the Marine Corps Marathon.

Finishing first among the women was Suzanne Lee with a time of 30:23, the third fastest women's time in the Run's history.

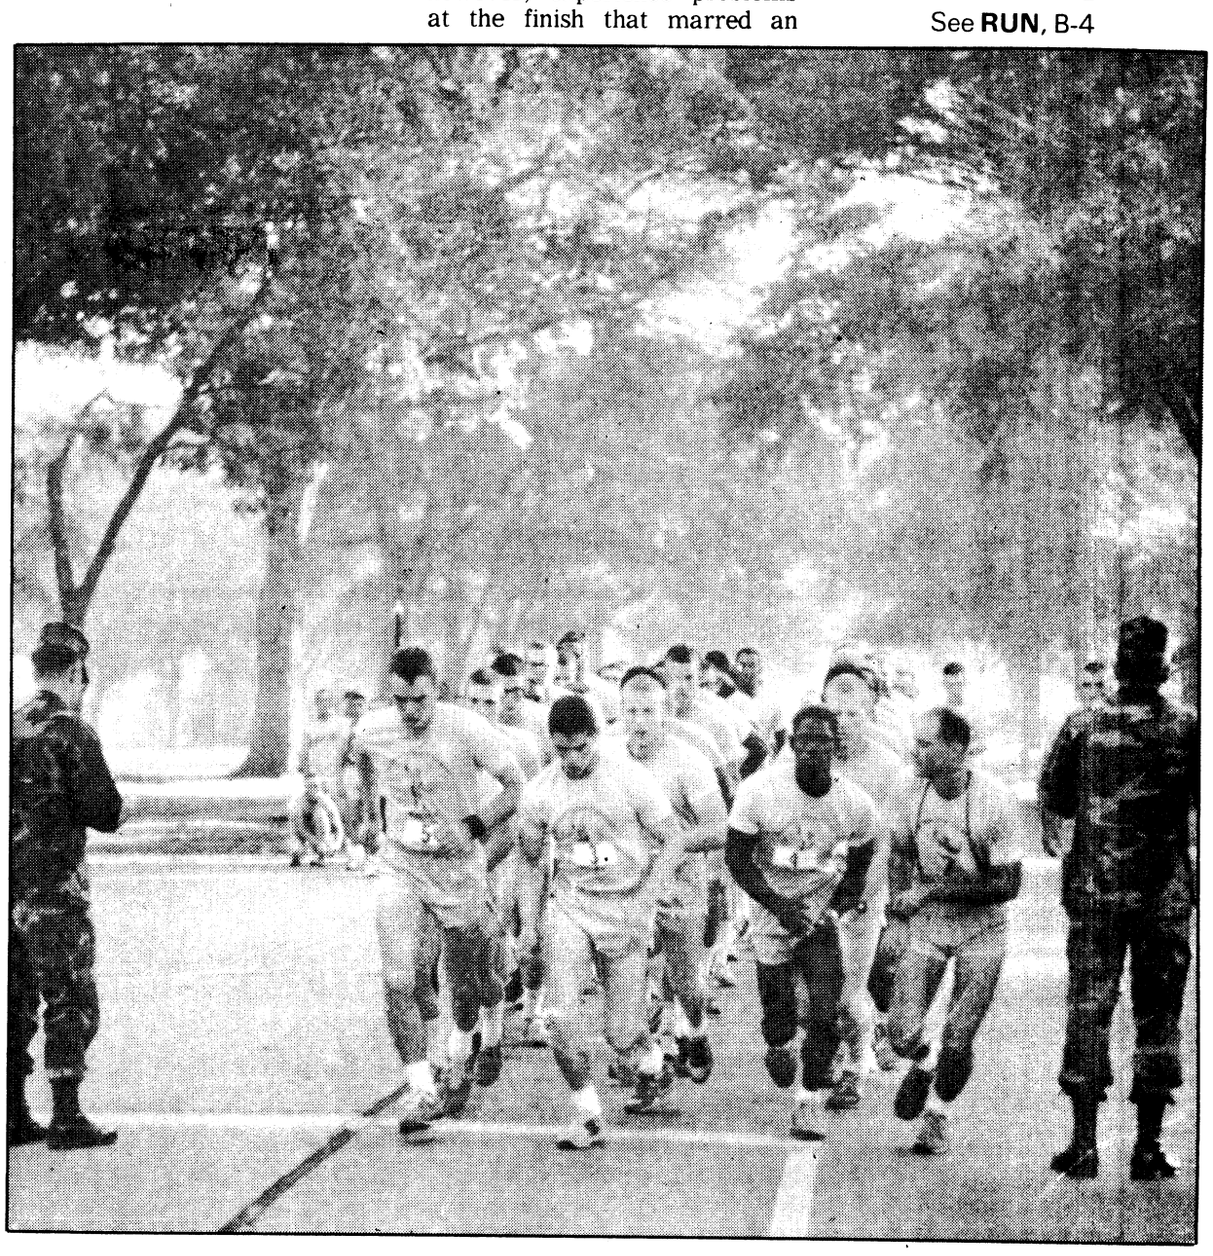
"In terms of organization and planning," said race coordinator Bernie Pfeiffer, "this year's race was the best ever. We did, however, experience problems at the finish that marred an otherwise perfect race."

The problem occurred with the mixup of runners' times. The Columbus Track Club, which has handled the finish line for all previous races, confused several batches of names.



"What is suppose to happen is that a finish line supervisor takes the bottom tab of a runner's pinned-on number," Pfeiffer said. "These tabs, which have the runner's idenfification informaton, are then placed in order on a wire spindle, thus keeping an accurate sequence within each spindle."

"The mix-up occurred when spindles 2, 3, 4, 5 and 6 were recorded out of sequence," said Susan Emerson, a member of the Columbus Track Club's executive board, who, on race day, was in charge of recording results.



In addition, she said some runners were incorrectly placed on spindle 2 who should have been on a later spindle.

According to Emerson, to help reconstruct the correct finish order, the Columbus Track Club is using pictures of runners finishing the race taken by spectators, showing the runner's number and finish time. It is also using known times of numerous other runners, which are then doubled check against spindle placement of those runners' tear-off tabs. This gives one

Benning Fire Department conducts hazardous materials course

By Aimee R. Holden
Bayonet staff writer

The Fort Benning Fire Department recently conducted a week-long Hazardous Materials Course. The course was designed to train people whose jobs require them to be among the first to respond to a hazardous materials incident.

Approximately 70 men and women were given hands-on experience in patching leaking valves in railroad tank cars and stablizing and controlling chemical spills. They also observed live-fire demonstrations.

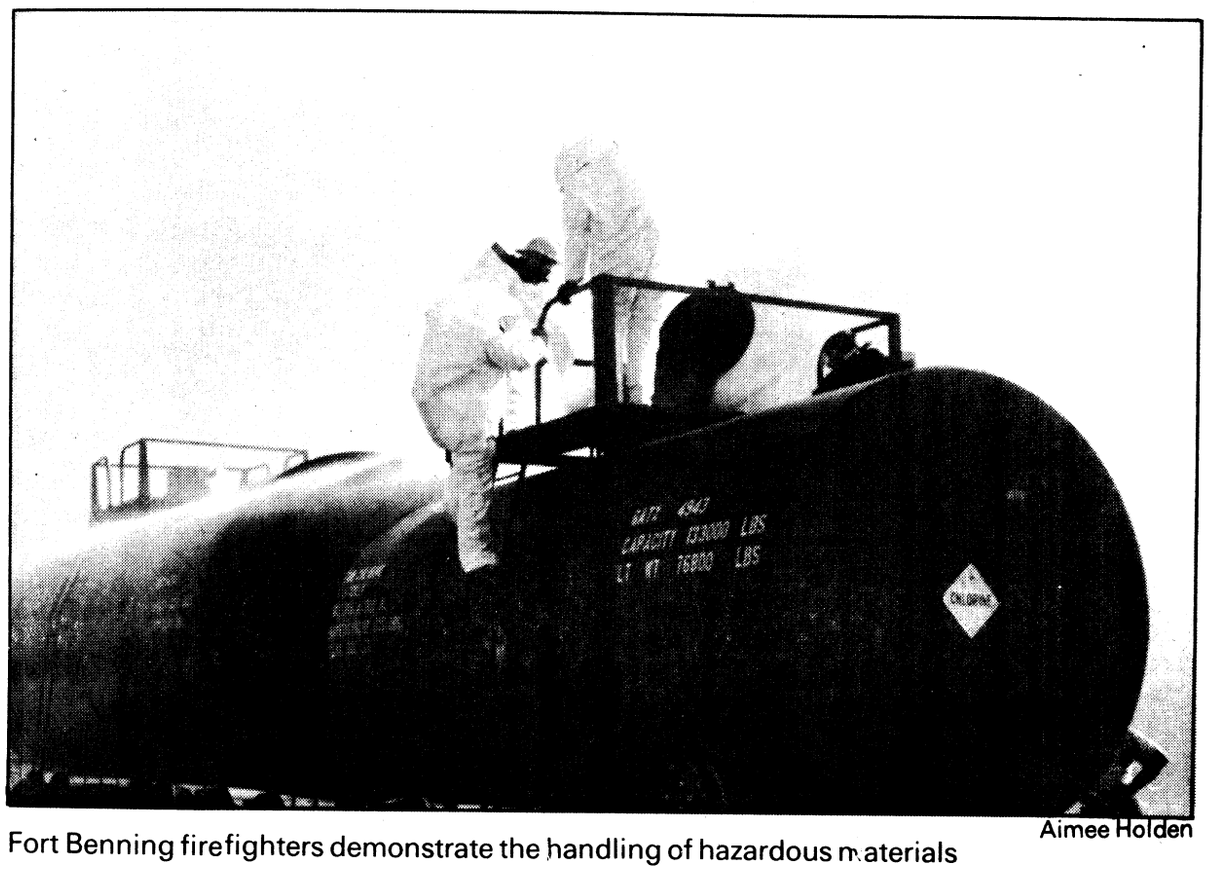
Participants came from many different TRADOC installations. They were personnel from the Emergency Medical Service, the Military Police, Environmental Protection Agency, and firefighters. Personnel from local businesses and industries also attended.

Jim Robertson, Fort Sill Environmentalist and Hazardous Waste Manager, was impressed with the course.

"They presented it from the firefighter's perspective, which is new to me. The course gave me a new respect for firefighters. Everytime they go out on a call they have no idea what the situation might be."

Because of the unpredictable reactions of many substances, Capt. Eddie Willis, of the Fort Benning Fire Department, stressed the importance of taking time to evaluate the situation before acting.

"He told us over and over again to think before we react," Robertson said. "That can be hard to remember because your first response might be to just jump in there and start getting things done. But when you don't know exactly what you're dealing with, and especially when chemicals are involved, you have to take time to evaluate."



Willis said that both the students and the instructors were highly motivated and that he was very pleased with the results of the course.

Herman Lewis, a Fort Benning firefighter who was part of the training, agreed that the course was a success.

"I think we do a good job," he said. "Everyone was very interested."

The Fort Benning Fire Department is responsible for all TRADOC hazardous materials training.

The next Hazardous Materials Course is scheduled from Dec. 7 through 11. For more information call 545-1967 or 544-6783.

VA physician to star in CBS movie

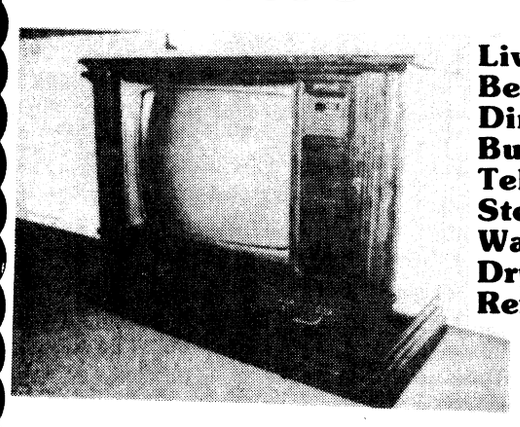
Veterans Administration

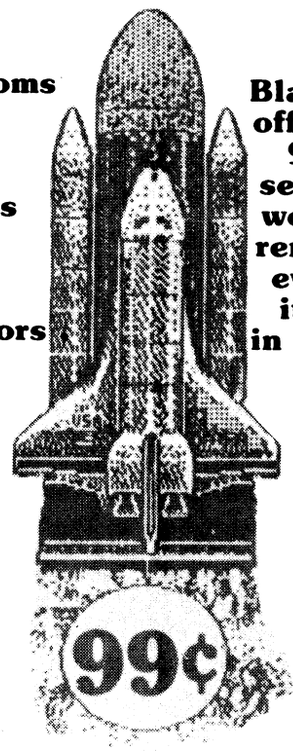
Sunday the CBS Television Network will features Veterans Administration physician Margaret J. Giannini in the "CBS Sunday Movie." Giannini will portray herself in a true story about the life of a severly handicapped child.

In "Kids Like These," which also stars Tyne Daly, Richard Crenna and Martin Balsam, Giannini designs and develops a management and care program for a child who is afflicted with Down's Syndrome. The movie is scheduled to air from 9 to 11 p.m. (EST) this Sunday.

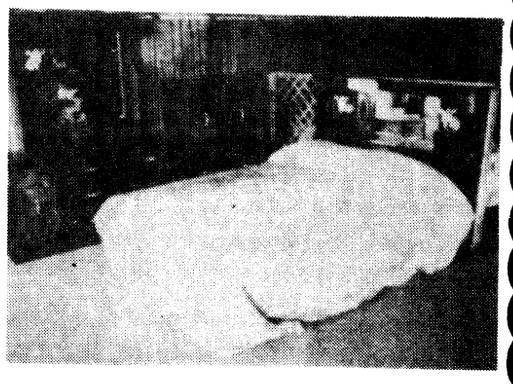
Giannini, director of VA's Rehabilitation Research and Development Service, is an internationally renowned expert in the field of rehabilitation of the physically and mentally handicapped.

Since 1950, she has been a pioneer in creating programs in diagnosis, treatment, education, research, training, and the human and civil rights and affairs of the mentally retarded and the handicapped at the national and international level.

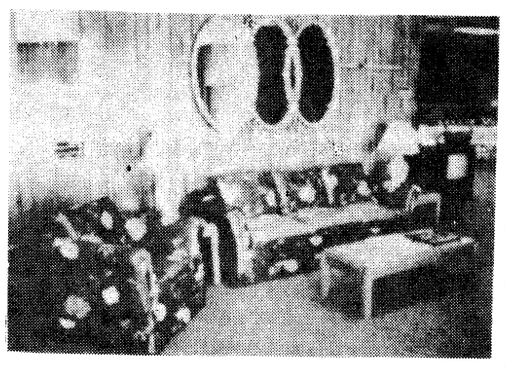




A pediatrician, Giannini was the executive director and founder of the Mental Retardation Institute of New York Medical College, a facility for the mentally retarded and developmentally disabled — the first and largest of its kind in the world.



In 1979, Giannini was appointed as the first director of the National Institute of Handicapped Research, a part of the U.S. Department of Education.



She came to the VA in 1981 as director of Rehabilitation Research and Development Service, which is responsible for helping to ensure the highest quality of life for America's veterans through research and development of rehabilitation devices and techniques.

REENLIST.
BE ALL YOU CAN BE.

What Specialist Hales has been aiming for during his off-duty time.

Specialist Four Jason Hales has been aiming for the best. As a soldier, and as a student. He's an Infantryman at Fort Myer, Virginia, as well as a B.S. candidate in Mechanical Engineering at Park College. And he's just one of the over 100,000 soldiers who are building brighter, smarter futures through the Army's Reaching for Excellence education program.

It's a terrific opportunity that's available to each and every soldier, at virtually every Army post around the world. Reaching for Excellence is everything from basic educational skills and technical skill development to undergraduate and graduate studies at the college level. And it's a chance to have at least 75% of your college tuition paid for by the Army.

Continuing your education is a commitment that's fully supported by the Army leadership. You can start taking advantage of this commitment at your post's Education Center. There, you'll find a professional education counselor who can help you set short- and long-range goals which fit both your educational and career plans.

Drop by your Education Center and find out, as Specialist Hales did, how you can turn some off-duty time into a lifetime of rewards. If you want to get ahead, now's the time to get started.

ARMY EDUCATION. BE ALL YOU CAN BE.

more point of reference to help reconstruct the finish order.

"The bottom line is that we will be able to reconstruct an extremely accurate order of finish," Pfeiffer said, "but the times may be slightly off."

The effect that this will have on team standings is negligible. "As far as the team results go, it is the order of finish that is crucial not the time," Pfeiffer said.

"We used a cross-country scoring system for the small team competition, where a runner's time is discarded but the order of finish is changed into points," Pfeiffer said. "Since we can get an accurate order of finish that means we can get an accurate reconstruction of team standings.

With this method, the team with the lowest number of points has a better order of finish.

The 3-mile and 5-mile unit runs were not affected by this problem since those races were handled by a separate ITC scoring system.

The Infantry Museum Run is actually three separate races. This year's run saw 600 more participants running than ran last year, making this the largest Infantry Museum Run ever.

The first race featured individual runners and small groups: seven-member for men and five-member for women. Beginning at the Main Post Catholic Chapel on the corner of Sigerfoos Road and Vibbert Avenue, more than 800 runners sprinted 5 miles toward a finish line in Doughboy Stadium.

The 3-mile unit-race followed. Each unit was required at to have at least 50 runners start and finish.

Designed especially for Infantry Training Center units, the 3-mile course enabled those units who were not ready for the 5-mile course to compete in the Infantry Museum Run.

All nine ITC 3-mile unit teams finished the first-time running of this category.

The 5-mile unit-race started last. All units competed in a post division while a separate ITC division had the training units competing on a company basis against one another.

Thirty-nine units competed in the post 5-miler, fighting for bragging rights as the fastest unit at Fort Benning.

Units competed with as little as the minimum number of 50 runners while other formations fielded more than 200 competitors.

Each unit team crossed the start line by itself, followed several minutes later by another unit. As teams waited their turn, runners continued to stretch out while others tried to catch a few extra moments of sleep.

"Whenever you feel yourself getting tired, tell yourself, 'I'm a stud," said one drill sergeant to his soldiers as they waited for their turn. "You can't enter a mule in the Kentucky Derby."

When the unit races finished, five of the 27 ITC teams and two out of 12 teams from other units were disqualified for falling below 50 runners. But in a sense, everyone was a winner -- with the big winner being the National Infantry Museum, which collected nearly $17,000, bringing total proceeds over the past seven years to nearly $84,000.

At day's end, one fact stood unchanged. The course record remained 24:23, set during the first Infantry Museum Run in 1981 by Theodis Abston, a former 800-meter specialist on the Auburn University track team.

The Infantry Museum Run originated to raise money for the National Infantry Museum, which houses Infantry artifacts dating back to the the mid-1750s.

Included in the museum's collections is a letter from Gen. George Washington signed shortly before his death in 1799, a portable field bar of Gen. Ulysses S. Grant and uniforms worn by Gen. Omar Bradley, who served as Infantry School Commandant from 1941 to 1942.

598th Maint grabs title

By Shawn Bryson
36th Engineer Group correspondent

The flag footballers from the 598th Maintenance Company have once again clinched the 36th Engineer Group championships.

The maintenance soldiers, who took the post championships in 1986, over-powered the Alpha Company Engineers (ACE) team at Engineer Field Oct. 29 and finished the season with 10 wins and one loss.

From the opening kickoff, the 598th showed no mercy toward the ACE soldiers.

A tight-end shuffle pass from 598th quarterback Calvin Deason to James McDowell Jr. during their first possession put the 598th on top by six.

The 598th continued to dominate the first half as Deason sprinted 35 yards for a touchdown and a commanding 12-0 lead over the ACE soldiers.

An Alpha interception near the two minute warning in the first half gave nothing but false hopes to the ACE fans as they failed to score while deep in 598th territory.

As the first half came to an end, the 598th defense had shut out the ACE offense.

During early second half action, the ACE offense came to life when a lengthy drive set up their first touchdown. The extra points attempt was given to the ACE team due to a blocking violation by the 598th defense making the score 12-8.

On the next possession, with only four minutes of gametime left, Deason again connected on a 15-yard tight-end toss to McDowell stretching the 598th lead to 10 points.

The remainder of the game was back-and-forth football as neither team was able to score and the 598th took Alpha Company 18-8.

"A Company had a really strong running game but our defense, which only gave up 24 points all year, was too much for them," said 598th Coach Arnold Benjamin.

Benjamin credited the superior performance of the 598th defense to its ability to adjust to any kind of offense.

"Our offense never quit and we'll take the post championship again this year, if we continue to play as strong as we have," he said.

Cav Rocks crush Dickey Boys

By Kevin J. Howerton and George Mingee
197th Infantry Brigade correspondents

The "Cav Rocks" of Troop A, 15th Cavalry, skunked the "Dickey Boys" of Company B, 2nd Battalion, 10th Field Artillery to win the 197th Infantry Brigade Championship Tuesday night. The 16-0 win brought the "Cav" team to a season record of 16 wins and no losses.

15th Cav scored on thier first possession of the game when halfback Bruce Edward ran in a touchdown from a few yards out. On the next play, Mike Finklin ran the ball in for two extra points. This made the score 8-0 in favor of 15th Cav.

Even with the Dickey Boys picking off three passes during the game, they weren't able to monopolize on the plays due to the leadership of Chris "Monster Man" Johnson of 15th Cav.

To the shouts of "Rock that hill, Cav," the second half started with an interception by the Cav's Michael Thomas, which stopped 2-10's scoring drive.

Late in the third quarter, Bruce Edward of 15th Cav made his second score of the game with a spectacular 85-yard run. "That's the game right there," said 15th Cav's coach, William E. Smith, as Joe Roberts darted in for the extra two points, bringing the score to 16-0 with Cav on top.

The Dickey Boys fought hard, but the score remained the same until the end of the game.

SPORTS SHORTS

Shooting matches set for November

The annual USAIC Marksmanship matches are scheduled for Nov. 16-20, with a mandatory clinic Nov. 9 and 10.

The matches and clinic will take place at Easley, McAndrews and Phillips ranges with match headquarters located in bldg. 2601. They will consist of three categories: combat rifle (M16A1/M16A2), combat pistol (9mm/45 cal) and the light machinegun (LMG, M60) with both individual and team competition.

All officers in the grade of 0-3 or below and all enlisted in the grade of E-8 or below and assigned to a Fort Benning unit the day the competition starts are eligible to enter both team and individual competition.

Individuals in grades of 0-4 and above and E-9s are only eligible to fire in individual competition. With this exception, individuals that want to fire individually must also be a member of a team if his/her unit is sponsoring one.

Eligible soldiers should contact their team representative or first sergeants if they are interested in participating and fill out FORSCOM/TRADOC Form 235-6-R, (Individual Registration and entry card), available at their unit or bldg. 4, Room 624. Units must have the entry forms filled out correctly and returned to SFC Stewart Olson, Bldg. 4, Room 624, by the close of business Nov. 2, or the individual or team will not be able to participate.

Contact SFC Olson at 545-4252/2917 for more information.

Hunter call in/out program in effect

A new system for requesting hunting areas on Fort Benning is in use this year for those authorized to hunt on the military reservation.

Through Jan. 14, 1988, a call-in/call-out system will be used, replacing last year's system of physically signing in and signing out.

In order to call in and out, hunters on Fort Benning must register at the Outdoor Recreation Administration, building 247 on Ingersoll Street, where they will receive the necessary information including regulations and a numbered access pass. State hunting licenses may be purchased there.

The new Hunter control call-in/call-out number is 682-1589 and will be operational from 4 a.m. until 8 p.m., seven days a week. The military number is 545-7680; however, there is only one line for use from range safety phones.

This is how the new system works: When the number is dialed and the call answered, the hunter gives his access pass number and hunting area requested. Hunters should have an alternate choice, should the first one be full. Once verified by the operator, the hunter may proceed to the hunting area requested.

Call-ins may be made as early as noon the day before the hunt.

When leaving the hunting area for the day, the hunter should again call Hunter Control for verification. This can be accomplished from a range phone or after arrival at home or other destination, providing the call is made before 8 p.m.

Infantry Center regualtions require Fort Benning hunters to check range clearance maps before hunting on post.

Deer bag limits enforced on post

The maximum number of deer that my be killed by any person by any means on the entire Fort Benning Military Reservation is three (3), one (1) of which must be antlerless.

It is legal to kill three does provided they are taken during dates on which either sex hunting is authorized.

Under no conditions shall any person take more than two (2) bucks during the entire season.

DEH announces changes to regs

All hunter should be aware that the following changes to paragraph 17a of USAIC Regulation 210-2, Installation Hunting and Fishing Regulation have been made pertaining to rifle areas:

1. Delete areas A-7 and A-8. These areas will remain shotgun hunting only.
2. Change A-3 to A-2. Area A-3 will remain a bow hunting only area.

For more information about these changes contact DEH at 544-6120.

Post hunters must obey regulations

To hunt on Fort Benning, hunters must have a valid Georgia State hunting license, Georgia State big game tags (as required), Fort Benning post hunting permit, Fort Benning deer kill card (as required) and a valid Fort Benning vehicle registration sticker. Hunters must check the range clearance maps before entering any area and comply with both USAIC Regulation 210-2 and USAIC Circular 210-4.

Auburn tickets on sale at ITT

The Information, Tour and Travel office is selling Auburn football passes for home games at $16 per pass. Call 545-4155 for more information.

Aerobics offered

Aerobics classes are conducted on Monday, Wednesday and Friday at 9 a.m. in Audie Murphy Fitness Center and on Monday, Wednesday and Friday at noon and 7 p.m. in building 4 Fitness Center. The cost is $12 per month. For more information call 545-1940.

YA basketball sign-up begins

YA Basketball registration will begin Nov. 30 and continue through Dec. 11.

Children 8-15 years old of active duty or retired military personnel may register. Birth certificates or ID cards will be required.

Sign-up will be conducted Monday through Friday from 8 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. at the Youth Activities, building 1056 on McIver Street.

Basketball coaches and cheerleders are also needed for the up-coming season. For more information on coaching requirements and player registration call 545-3070 or 3913

Follow Me course announces closing

The Golf course, pro shop, storage area and club house will be closed the first Monday of every month begining Nov. 2.

Post team picked for marathon

USAIC Public Affairs Office

The team to represent Fort Benning at the Twelfth Annual Marine Corps Marathon in Washington, D.C. this Sunday has been selected by the installation Sports Office.

This year's team will be headed by Lloyd McDonald of 2nd Infantry Training Brigade. McDonald also ran on the Fort Benning team that competed in the Army 10-miler last month. He placed first in the AUSA member competition.

Other members of the team are:
William Connolly of USAITC,
Anthony Cerri of 2nd Bn., 18th Inf,
Arcides Colon of A Co., 3rd Bn., 7th Inf,
James Evans of 3rd Bn., 75th Rangers.

Several of these runners traveled to the U.S. Army Strategic Defense Command's 30th Anniversary 10K Road Race in Huntsville, Alabama on Oct. 24.

McDonald finished that race with a 32:53, Colon clocked in at 34:14 and Evans ran a 36:50.

This year's Marine Corps Marathon will begin and end at the Marine Corps War Memorial. The 26-mile, TAC-cerified course is very flat, winding through Arlington, Georgetown and the District of Columbia. It passes many of the area's attractions including the Capitol, the White House, the Jefferson and Lincoln Memorials, the Pentagon, the National Museums and the Kennedy Center. The marathon is nicknamed the "Marathon of the Monuments."

Funding for the Benning team came from AUSA Corporate Member Cliff Livingston, Jr. of Livingston Storage and Transfer Company. His organization donated $1,600 to the team.

There is a field limit of 11,000 runners and that is expected to be filled by the start of the race..

All entrants will receive a t-shirt, commemorative patch and officeal program. In addition, all finshers will receive a commemorative finisher's medal and completion certificate.

Over 325 awards will be given in various categories of competition. The open winner is presented the Middendorf Trophy. Awards will also be given through tenth place for men and fifth place for women in all age groups categories.

The Benning team will not only be shooting for these individual awards but also for the team awards that will be presented.

Post deer present driving hazard

Installation Safety Office

It's a traumatic experience, generally coming without warning during the day or night. You're driving down the road in your car, when suddenly from the dense woods at the highway's edge, a frightened deer darts into your path. You brake quickly, hoping for a near miss, but it's too late. You've just been invovled in a wildlife automobile collision. It can endanger your life, heavily damage your car, and cripple or kill the animal.

Since 1985, on Fort Benning, there have been 160 automobile-deer collisions, resulting in six minor injuries to personnel and 44 deer killed.

Annually, in New York state approximately 20,000 deer are reported killed by autos, in Pennsylvania 28,000, Michigan 12,000, and Minnesota 6,000. Nationwide, more than 100,000 deer are reported killed. But those are just reported accidents. Many drivers do not report collisions if no one is hurt and their vehicles are not badly damaged. Many more deer may be injured and wander off into the forest, where they may or may not recover.

In many cases, the outcome is not good for deer, driver or vehicle. Thousands of people are injured each year — dozens fatally. The cost of car-deer accidents in the U.S. is about $200 million yearly. The average cost of repairs exceeds $800.

As the deer population on Fort Benning continues to grow, the number of car-deer collisions continues to rise. In 1985, there were 53 accidents, 58 in 1986, and there have been 50 so far this year.

Most accidents happen between sunset and sunrise and on heavily traveled roads such as Highway 27, but no area is immune, not even Main Post. There have been car-deer collisions near building 4, the pet cemetery and by the Marshall House.

There are a few steps you can take to avoid these accidents: Slow down in areas where deer may cross the road, look for movement or the reflection of light off the eyes of deer when it is dark, and do not panic. If you panic you may lose control of your auto, increasing the chances of serious injury.

There are devices on the commercial market that emit a high frequency sound that can be heard by animals. The device attaches to the front of your car and uses the air passing through the device to emit a sound, which is inaudible to you or your pets that may be riding in the vehicle. The device is designed to keep most wildlife off the highways, especially deer.

When traveling Fort Benning roads, be prepared for deer to cross the road, especially between sunset and sunrise. By being prepared, driving slower and not panicking, you may be spared from being involved in a car-deer collision.

We place the world at your feet.

Important events happen in foreign lands around the globe every day. Not-so-important but very interesting events happen in others. And although the events happen in other parts of the world, many will have direct effects on your life, like how much you pay for a gallon of gasoline next month or next year. We knows it's important to be as informed about world happenings as you are about your neighborhood, town or county. That's why we give you the world, every morning.

We bring indepth coverage of local and world events to your door. Call 323-1234 for convenient, daily home delivery.

Great American Smokeout

'Go Cold Turkey' sets the mood for annual observance

By Becky Obert
Bayonet staff writer

"Go Cold Turkey" is the theme for this year's Great American Smokeout, and eateries here will offer diners who quit just that.

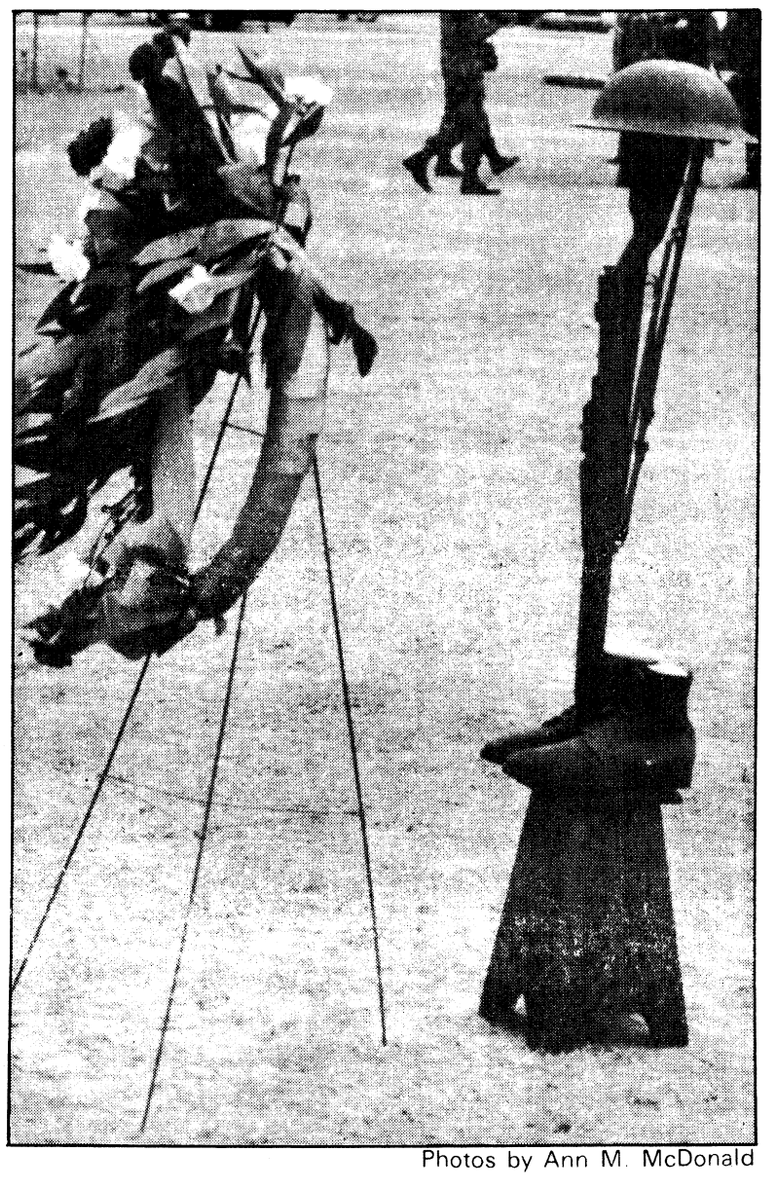
All dining facilities will serve cold turkey sandwiches Thursday, and the NCO Club will feature turkey on the menu. The Officers' Club will be selling its turkey special at half-price to smokers who take part in the smokeout.

The commissary will be giving away a free turkey.

Children at post schools will be encouraged to adopt a smoking parent for the day, and given information and handouts on how to help a parent kick the habit.

Martin Army Community Hospital is challenging employees to take part in a major stop smoking exercise Thursday. "They are challenging every single worker who smokes to "Go Cold Turkey" for this one day," said Yvonne Lisenbigler, chairperson of Benning's smokeout efforts.

Stationary bikes will be set up at strategic locations throughout the hospital, so smokers who get the urge can exercise away their cravings.



Booths will be set up at Infantry Hall, the main post exchange and the hospital, with information on how to quit smoking and how to adopt a smoker.

Every major unit on post will sponsor their own special programs for their employees, so check with your supervisor, she said.

MACH is also sponsoring a stop-smoking clinic Monday to help prepare people who want to go cold turkey Thursday.

"We're hoping this will be our biggest participation ever," Lisenbigler said.

Officials take action to prevent lay-offs of career employees

By Becky Obert
Bayonet staff writer

Fort Benning moved last week to implement cost-cutting measures directed by Training and Doctrine Command.

The biggest cuts will be felt by 21 temporary employees, who were notified that they will be out of work come Nov. 20.

The workers affected are employed at the Directorate of Logistics, the Directorate of Engineering and Housing, the Directorate of Personnel and Community Activities, the Directorate of Plans, Training and Mobilization and the U.S. Army Infantry School.

Their positions are being eliminated, which means that they will not be called back at a later date for those positions.

"It's possible that they'll stay on our hiring list and be offered a new appointment in the future," said Theresa Gunter, civilian personnel officer.

In a message from the TRADOC commander dated Oct. 14, Fort Benning officials were advised to take immediate action to make specific reductions in spending.

Dubbed the "5-10-5" plan, the message mandated a five percent cut in the civilian payroll, a 10 percent reduction in travel expenditures and a five percent reduction in contract expenditures.

The message specifically stated that cuts could not be obtained by a reduction in force, which would affect career civil service employees.

David Flo, Director of Resource Management, said Fort Benning had to take immediate steps to cut its operating budged by $10 million, Benning's share of the $170 million DA ordered from TRADOC.

He said that Benning's operating budget for FY 88 was $159 million, compared to $172 million last year. With the $10 million in additional cuts, their operating budget for FY 88 is now $149 million, a decrease from last year of approximately 13 percent.

The cuts did not come as a complete surprise to his office, however, since budgets are projected on a long term basis, Flo said.

"We knew that it was going to be a problem in fiscal year 1988 if something wasn't done about the federal budget deficits," he said.

"We have a $170 million cut in TRADOC because Congress hasn't totally appropriated the funds to pay for all the required programs.

According to the TRADOC message, the Department of the Army had to decide what programs to protect and which ones to cut. They chose to protect CHAMPUS and the cost of living increase for military personnel. Other reductions were necessary due to fluctuations in foreign currency markets.

Benning will save $228,000 as a result of doing away with 21 temporary slots. The larger portion of the savings in the civilian pay area will come from a hiring freeze that began Nov. 1.

Fort Benning loses about 30 employees each month through resignations and retirements, Mrs. Gunter said. If these positions are not filled, $3.7 million will be saved.

She said that firm commitments to employees that were made prior to Nov. 1 will be honored, and CPO will continue to process applications for openings as they occur.

CPO officials will stop short, however, of making a firm commitment until the freeze is lifted. "Firm commitments are those in which employees were given an entrance-on-duty date before Nov. 1," she said.

The decision as to which temporary slots to cut was made by program managers and directors, based on their mission needs. "They had to decide which functions could be cut out or reduced, and rank their requirements," she said.

The hiring freeze applies only to TRADOC activities on post, although Gunter's office also serves as personnel center for other tenant units here.

"Right now, Health Services Command is no freezing hiring or terminating employees, but I don't know what the future holds for them," she said. "We will keep civilian employees informed as information becomes available."

"We are very concerned when people lose their jobs," she said.

Flo said that while a RIF is not planned at present, it cannot be ruled out in the future.

"If Congress does not take action to reduce the federal deficit, and Gramm-Rudman takes effect, we may have no choice," he said.

The results of Congressional deliberations won't be known until the end of this month, and the effects on Fort Benning would not be known until January, Flo said.

"Our goal is to protect the civilian work force as much as possible," he said.

Army completes largest exercise since WW II

Army News Service

WASHINGTON — Some soldiers were happy just to get mail, and yet others worried about getting their tanks unstuck, while another soldier was concerned over burnt potatoes in his field rations—all this was part of "Certain Strike '87."

"Certain Strike '87" was the largest field exercise in an array of NATO maneuvers stretching from Iceland to eastern Turkey and occupying 230,000 soldiers, sailors and airmen as part of this year's Return of Forces to Germany. This year's REFORGER was the largest deployment exercise to Europe since World War II.

When it came to mail call, one soldier had discovered that the only mail he received was marked "Dear occupant," while PFC David Gilmore from the 2nd Armored Division shared his news with everyone. In the first days of his unit's 30-day field duty, Gilmore wrote his girl friend in Pensacola. Fla., and proposed. Her response was a 26-page "Yes."

It was Pvt. 2 James Felder, 54th Engineer Battalion, out of Wildflecken, Germany, who had discovered the burnt potatoes. He blamed it on the manufacturer of the TV-dinner style meals because he knows you can't burn food by boiling it.

SSgt. James Timmon's M-1 (Abrams) tank, along with three others, had been partially submerged in a wooded area during the exercise. The forest road they were traversing was marked on maneuver maps as capable of carrying tanks. An M-88 recovery vehicle also got stuck while trying to pull the tanks out. All the vehicles belonged to the 1st Battalion, 67th Armor, 2nd Armored Division, at Fort Hood Texas.

Reorganization clarifies chain of command

USAIC Public Affairs Office

An upgrade of the Army's Ranger Department to training Brigade status opens a brigade command, three battalion command and 11 more company command slots.

The redesignation effective Nov. 1, results in a more definable chain of command, according to Col. James E. Mace, Ranger Training Brigade commander.

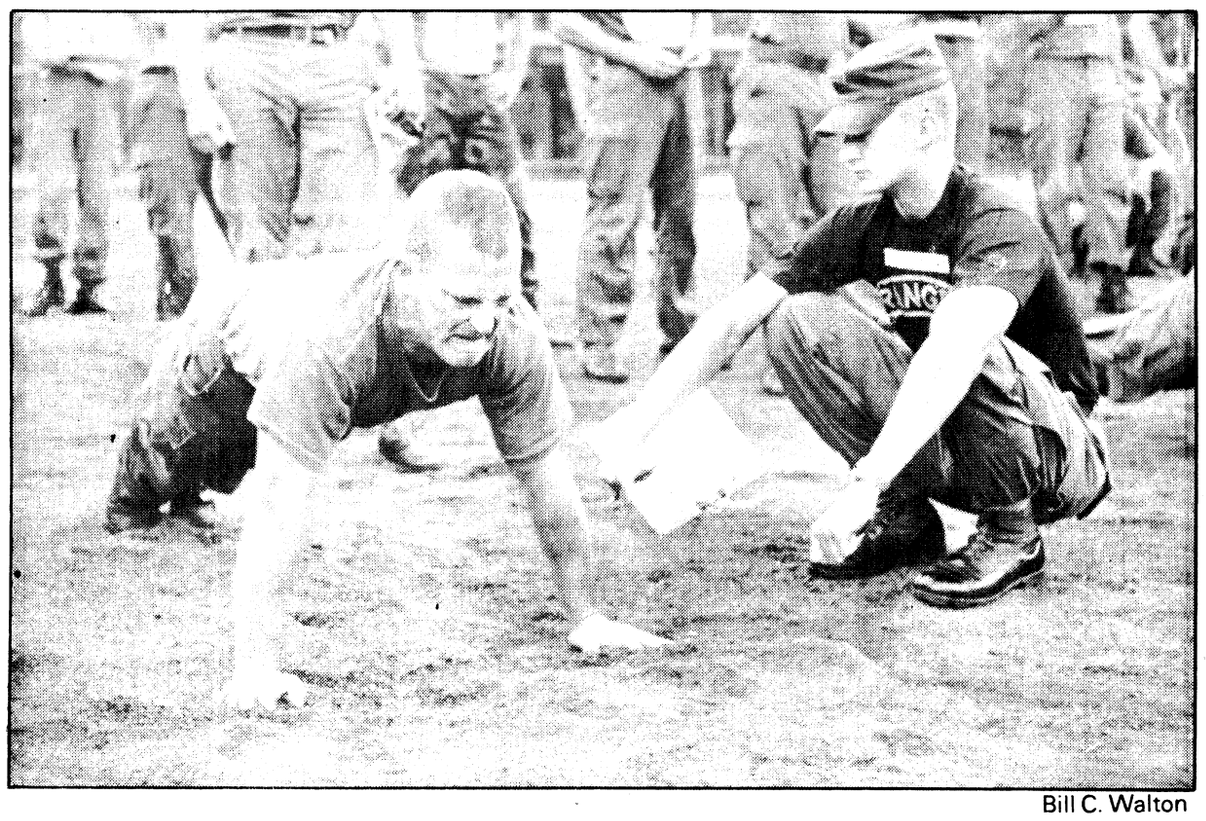
He said the need for a clear chain of command, while always there, came to a head as the number of cadre increased from 394 in 1984 to 649 in 1988 in order to support an increase in the ranger mission.

In addition to the number of ranger students increasing from 2,000 a year in 1984 to a projected 3,600 in 1988, two new courses were added, the Long Range Surveillance and the Light Leaders.

Under the new organization, ranger students will maintain company cohesion throughout the course, only changing commanders and cadre as they move from camp to camp.

"This will be more in line with the Army's philosophy of 'train as you would fight,'" CPT. Karl Horst, Ranger brigade S3 said.

He added the organization will also facilitate committee instruction.



Under the new organization, the brigade headquarters will be about the same as any brigade headquarters except there will be a deputy who will also command the desert task force when the troops move to Dugway, Utah.

The 4th Ranger Battalion will be located at Fort Benning. It will consist of a headquarters and headquarters company and three ranger companies plus the Long Range Surveillance Company and the Light Leaders Company, the latter two being commanded by majors.

Both the 5th Battalion at Camp Merrill in Dahlonega, Ga., and the 6th Battalion at Camp Rudder at Eglin Air Force Base, Fla., will have a headquarters company and three ranger companies.

Mace said the change is appropriate in that the responsibilities of those who were in charege of the Ranger Department and the camps were equal to or greater than that of those ofcommand selected lieutenant colonels and colonels, noting the span of control and isolation of the camps.

The redesignation ceremony is scheduled for Dec. 2 in front of Infantry Hall.

Facing the fact that a safe and effective AIDS vaccine is not expected to be available until the end of this century, the American Red Cross is meeting the critical need to inform the public about AIDS.

The Red Cross has traditionally played an important role in providing factual information surrounding epidemics, and has once again mobilized its network of nearly 3,000 chapters in an effort to help prevent the spread of this new and devastating disease.

Looking back through the 106-year history of the humanitarian organization, we find Red Cross has a long history of responding decisively in health emergencies.

Most of us are well aware of the assistance Red Cross renders during time of disaster — and servicemen and women far from home have received help from the Red Cross for decades. However, the Red Cross' significant contribution in health emergencies has often gone unheralded.

Clara Barton started involving the Red Cross in service beyond the field of disaster in 1888, using willing volunteers to nurse the victims of a Florida yellow fever epidemic. The Spanish influenza killed some 30-million people worldwide in 1918, and Red Cross nurses and volunteers met the emergency by setting up tent cities to handle the patients. Volunteers produced over 371 million surgical dressings and flu masks to help halt the epidemic.

The first Christmas Seal was issued by the Red Cross in 1907 in order to finance the battle against tuberculosis which, at the time, was the cause of one out of every ten deaths in the United States.

Red Cross teams of doctors and nurses were responsible for saving thousands of lives that might have been lost to the 1915 Typhus disease in Europe.

Many living today remember the horror of the polio epidemic of the late forties and early fifties. Before a vaccine was discovered, some twelve-thousand Red Cross volunteers served the victims of infantile paralysis.

Once again, without a cure or a vaccine, and as AIDS fatalities increase, public fear escalates. Health officials and individual citizens are just beginning to understand the total cost — both in human and financial terms — of this desease. While surveys show more public knowledge of AIDS, ignorance and myth are widespread.

The AIDS virus began just six years ago with only five reported cases in June 1981. Last year more than 13,000 new cases were added to the total. In June 1987, over 36,000 cases had been reported, resulting in more than 20,000 deaths. In this next year, another 23,000 new cases are expected.

Faced with this information, the Red Cross has, in just one year, implemented a program to provide reliable, factual information about the risk of AIDS to the public. Even before the AIDS situation reached a possible crisis status, the Red Cross was at the forefront of the situation, armed with videos, posters and brochures. In collaboration with the U. S. Public Health Service and the Ad Council, public service announcements have been produced.

Now in the second phase of the program, Red Cross efforts are targeted to educating youth, minorities, employers and employees in the workplace.

The caring continues, and each day brings with it new challenges. Your contribution to the American Red Cross through the Combined Federal Campaign will enable us to continue to meet these challenges.

Police call a dirty job thanks to smokers

By Clyde Snively
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Normally, police calls are high on my list of favorite activities.

Sure, some people complain now that winter is on the way. They say they don't like to be out there in the cold.

Others gripe about it being too dark to see anything, questioning the sanity of looking for bits of trash in the dark.

Not me. When you work in an office all day, any chance to get outdoors is welcomed. Even if it is at Oh-dark-thirty in the morning. I like the excitement of the hunt, wondering just what treasure I might find.

I do however, draw the line when it comes to picking up cigarette butts.

"Snively," Sgt. Rock bellowed the other morning.

"Yes sergeant," I answered back.

"You missed this cigarette butt. And this one and this one."

"No I didn't, sarge," I replied.

"What d'ya mean," he demanded. "Here are the butts. They are still on the ground. That means you missed them."

"I didn't miss them. I saw them. I just don't do butts," I said.

I could almost hear the words "lawful order" forming on his tongue, but instead he said, "just what do you have against picking up cigarette butts?"

They stink. And they'll make my hands smell like rancid cigarettes if I pick them up. Why should my hands smell like stale cigarettes when I don't even smoke?

"I mean what happened to the good old days when soldiers GI'ed their butts. You know, they'd kill the ash on their boots then pull out the biodegradable tobacco which blended with the ground and spread it, while rolling the piece of paper into a tiny ball and putting it in their pockets."

"Filters," Sgt. Rock said. "Probably ruined too many washers when the wife washed the fatigues with all those filter tips in the pockets."

"You know," I said. "The problem would resolve itself if people stopped smoking."

"Never happen." he said.

"Why," I asked.

"People like to smoke. They like the taste. It picks them up, calms them down. It helps them concentrate, it helps them day dream. It even helps them move their bowels," he said.

"Deep breathing will help them concentrate, relax and pick them up. And if they aren't breathing other people's smoke, it will be better for them."

"Did you know that when I breathe someone else's cigarette smoke, I'm breathing in 4,000 compounds, and that my lungs retain 90 percent of it. And in some cases we are talking real poisons here like sulfates, particulate, ozone, tar, nicotine and carbon monoxide."

"If cigarettes are all that bad for you, why don't they ban them," Sgt. Rock asked. "I don't think it's ever been proven that cigarette smoking is bad for your health," he said naively.

"Do you own part interest in a tobacco plantation?" I asked. "I'll tell you why they don't outlaw cigarette smoking, the tobacco companies are too powerful. They own too much. Including legislators.

"More than 350,000 Americans die from smoking related diseases each year. If we killed that many baby seals there would be a law, but all we're killing are people."

Do you realize the average smoker costs his employer an extra $400 to $800 a year more than the non-smoker in productivity lost, increased health insurance, fire insurance, absenteeism, not to mention all the diseases he's passing off to his non-smoking buddies?"

I was going to hit him with the $55.5 billion loss to this country a year from smoking. The 20 percent higher absentee rate of smokers over non-smokers. I was even ready to talk about lung cancer, or emphysema or even tell him the good news that unless the person had emphysema or lung cancer, the chance of his lungs restoring themselves completely were excellent.

But I could tell I'd lost him when he said, resignedly, "does this mean you won't pick up these butts?"

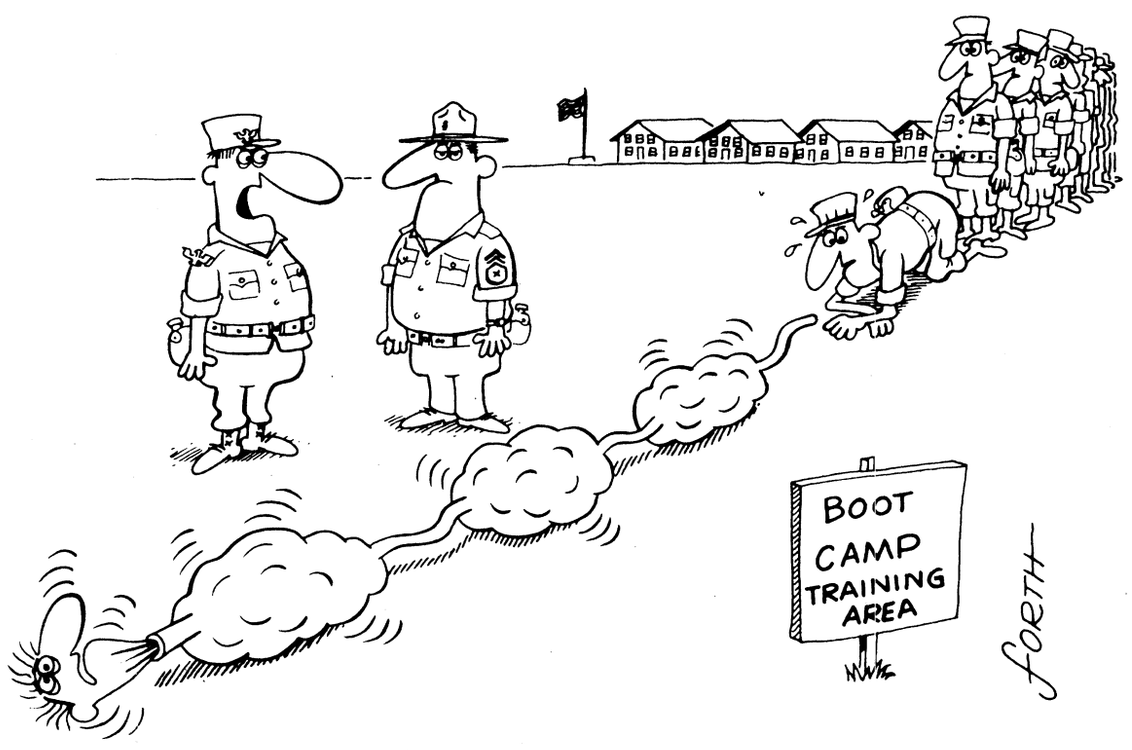
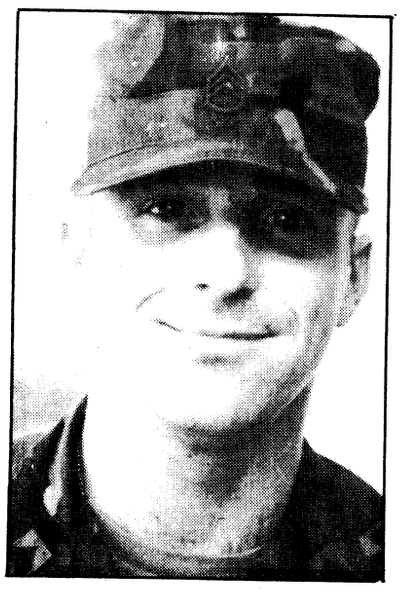
Writer complains about post drivers



Dear Editor:

I enjoyed Snively's comments in the paper about, "Don't know where he's going," and they still don't know. He was much too kind with his adjectives describing drivers. Some never learn, some are just plain lazy, some don't know the rules of the road (I wonder how they got a drivers license) and many should have their licenses revoked until they attend a remedial driving school.

I attend college at Building 4 at night, and have noticed that a large number of drivers still haven't learned to use their dimmer switch. They are a safety hazard. Sometimes I wish I had a 1,000,000 candle power advertising light and could turn it on those who won't dim their lights. But they would probably run straight into me.



Oh well, a little fantasy helps, nothing else does.

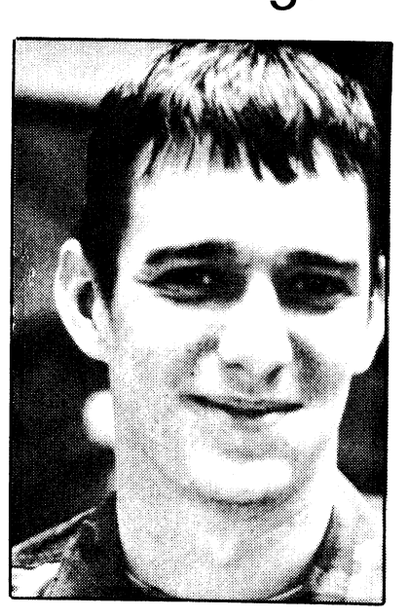
"You're pushing the men too hard, sergeant. Dispense with your garden hose crawl!"

VARIOUS VOICES / What is the best way to quit smoking?



SSgt. Charles Cain, Company A, 1st Battalion, 507th Parachute Infantry Regiment — "I think the best way to quit is to get enrolled in a nicorest program; it's a free course usually offered through the hospitals. That is the type of program they have at Fort Dix and I'm sure they have something similar here."

SFC David Lockett, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor, 197th Infantry Brigade — "I think the best way is to just stop cold turkey."

Sp4 Erika Broman, Company A, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, The School Brigade — "I think a person should try to redirect their interests; maybe pursue a hobby or something to take their mind off of smoking."

PFC Jerry Vankirk, Delta Support, 197th Support Battalion, 197th Infantry Brigade — "I think the biggest thing is for a person to set their mind on quitting. The rest is easy."

Theresa Martinez, Family Member — "I don't think there is one effective way, but by the numbers of people who have quit smoking, something is working."

PFC Samuel Scott, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 3rd Battalion, 75th Infantry Regiment — "I think they should keep their mouth busy with something else; a lot of times when someone smokes it is just a fixation and chewing gum or sucking on sugarless candy can help curb the urge to smoke."

Benning troop beats competition, wins FORSCOM Soldier of Year

Anthony J. Intrepido
34th Med. Bn. Correspondent

Sergeant Warren N. Richmond, 2nd Mobile Army Surgical Hospital, 34th Medical Battalion, was recently selected as Forces Command Noncommissioned Officer of the Year.

Richmond, a native of Hampton, Va., is presently assigned to the fourth platoon, 2nd MASH, as an operting room technician, providing assistance in preparing for and conducting surgical operations. He has been assigned to 2nd MASH for three and a half years and has recently re-enlisted for 91C school to become a Licensed Practical Nurse.

Richmond has attended college for three years. At the Primary Leadership Development Course he was selected on the Commandant's list and received the Leadership Award.

"My Battalion was very supportive," Richmond said. "At first I thought I might be a long shot by competing against some of Fort Benning's best combat arms NCOs. However, the Battalion Command Sergeant Major, Roy W. Needham built my confidence and taught me how to prepare for the board by studying the appropriate material." Richmond felt the FORSCOM board was based a lot on composure and presentation.

He plans to apply to Officer Candidate School and return to the Medical Services Branch as an active duty officer. "I believe soldiers need to take the initiative to care for their personal affairs and keep a positive attitude in order to obtain their goals," Richmond said.

In recognition of his achievement, Richmond received a $1,000 saving bond from FORSCOM and a letter of commendation from General Joseph Palastra, the FORSCOM Commander. In addition, Richmond was given several gifts and awards from his unit and the Association of the United States Army.

Education Office

Through the Army Continuing Education System Office, Directorate of Personnel and Community Activities, a broad spectrum of educational opportunities are available to Ft. Benning's active duty soldiers, retirees, civilian employees, military family members and the Reserve Components.

Five Branch Education Centers locted post-wide offer programs ranging from Basic Skills (to improve reading, math, and vocabulary skills; upgrade GT Score and/or earn a high school equivalency certificate) MOS improvement, foreign languages, up through collee programs with a variety of associate, baccalaureate and master degree offerings.

A good example of a soldier who has taken full advantage of the "Be All You Can Be" Army Education slogan is Command Sergeant Major Eddie L. Roberts, Headquarters, The School Brigade, who earned his high school GED, associate and two bachelor degrees, in addition to a master's degree since entering the Army — attaining a bachelor's and master's degree while stationed here at Fort Benning.

"I received my high school GED while serving in Vietnam in 1970. It was my first contact with the Army's Education System and its personnel — and where I was inspired to continue my climb up the educational ladder."

"There is no such thing as it can't be done, if you want a good education in today's Army it's there for the asking — and it doesn't come easily or quickly."

"Whenever I see a young soldier trying to improve him or herself educationally, I feel very proud to be a product of this System. If I were asked what advice I would give to all soldiers — that advice would be first, believe in yourself, let no one tell you that you can't."

"Secondly, if it's in your heart to do so, you can and by all means take the Army's Education System along with you, take it from me, it really works," Robert's said.

Some services rendered by the Education Center include Testing (Army personnel, HS GED, College Level Examination Program, College Admissions, Certification, etc.) Career Counseling, Financila Assistance (tuition assistance, GI Bill), and MOS Library activities.

Our mission is to provide quality education opportunities in support of the Total Army Goals, to enhance the quality of life within the entire military community; and to offer personal growth experience through career development and other voluntary educational programs.

ACES is eager to show you how we're prepared to meet your needs. We are observing American Education Week (Nov. 16-22) by inviting you to Open House, 8 a.m. until 5 p.m., Nov. 16-20. Visit your Army Education center. Invest in America invest in your future.

15,000 troops take part in reserve call-up

WASHINGTON (ARNEWS) — A Selected Reserve exercise designed to "test how well the call-up system" works took place Oct.23-25 with 119 units from 34 states, Puerto Rico and the District of Columbia, representing 15,000 reserve component soldiers, sailors, airmen, marines and Coast Guard members.

The secretary of defense had directed the call-up Sept. 17 to assess the speed of notification of the reserve components and to determine how quickly they can respond should there be a national requirement.

Units involved came from a cross section of Selected Reserve forces that are subject to recall by the President to augment the active forces, Super said.

Soldiers head to Australia for 'Diamond Dollar'

WASHINGTON (ARNEWS) — More than 860 soldiers from the 25th Infantry Division's 1st Battalion, 21st Infantry and supporting units deployed to Australia Sept. 26 to take part in the joint military training exercise "Diamond Dollar '87."

"Diamond Dollar '87" was one of the largest military exercises held in Cape York, Australia, since World War II. The five-week exercise was also one of the largest deployments of a 25th Infantry Division unit since its restructuring as a light infantry division in 1986.

The division's task force trained more than 4,000 Australian soldiers assigned to the 6th Brigade, Royal Australian Army, based in Brisbane. Their training was highlighted by search and attack operations, air assault operations, civilian and military rescue operations and extended-distance logistical support.

Medics awarded for saving life

ASCHAFFENBURG, Germany (ARNEWS) — Two medics assigned to Headquarters and Headquarters Battery, 3rd Battalion, 12th Field Artillery, in Aschaffenburg saved the life of a critically injured German motorcyclist on July 19, according to the"Aschaffenburg Forum."

Sgt. Julia Craighead and Sp4 Carmen Moreno were driving on Highway 469 near Obenburg when they saw a motorist flagging them down. They stopped to render assistance and found that the cyclist had an amputated lower leg, compound fractures and severe internal injuries.

Their quick administration of first aid probably saved the German's life, earning them the Army Commendation Medal.

Education funds available from AER

WASHINGTON (ARNEWS) — Army Emergency Relief has financial aid available for post-secondary-level undergraduate and vocational studies for spouses and other family members of active duty soldiers, retired or deceased soldiers.

Loans are available to the students themselves under the Guaranteed Student Loan Program. Loans are available also to parents of students under the Parent Loans Program. AER scholarships are available to children based on academic achievement and financial need.

Although loans are available anytime during the school year, applications for AER scholarships must be completed and mailed to AER headquarters by March 1, 1988.

Detailed information and applications are available by writing to the Education Department, Headquarters, Army Emergency Relief, Department of the Army, 200 Stovall Street, Alexandria, VA22332-0600.

Army testing new sling-load system

FORT CAMPBELL, Ky. (ARNEWS)— Army aviators and infantrymen at Fort Campbell, Ky., are testing a newly developed sling-load system designed by an 101st Airborne Division (Air Assault) aviation maintenance foreman, according to the Fort Campbell "Courier."

The new equipment is named after the designer, Philip Yohe (pronounced "Yo") and was made to carry tandem loads. It's now possible for a CH-47 (Chinook) helicopter to carry two TOW-mounted HMMWV's (high mobility, multipurpose wheeled vehicles) into combat.

Final tests of the design are being conducted by the Army's Natick (Mass.) laboratories at Fort Campbell. Additional design changes are also being made to improve the versatility of the equipment for Army-wide adoption.

Two officers awarded for management skills

WASHINGTON (ARNEWS) — Army Lt. Col. Charles A. Wilson II received the General Services Administration's 1987 award for excellence in administration for his work as manager of the Army's non-tactical vehicle program.

Wilson had developed, defended and implemented management initiatives resulting in verified savings of $9.5 million to date for the transportation management division in the office of the Army's Deputy Chief of Staff for Logistics at the Pentagon.

He received a certificate, a plaque and $7,500 in cash from GSA Administrator Terence C. Golden during a conference Nov. 3 in Baltimore.

Air Force Lt. Col. Erhard Buck, chief of transportation and shipping for the Defense Logistics Agency's Defense Depot Tracy (Calif.), also received the same award. The other recipients consisted of seven civilians and the facilities development and operations branch of the administration division, Bureau of Prisons, Department of Justice.

Program tests filing taxes using computers

WASHINGTON (ARNEWS) — Certain soldiers due a refund from future federal income tax return are being afforded the chance to use computer modems to file their federal income tax returns.

This service is being offered to soldiers stationed in Alabama, Arizona, Indiana, Kentucky, North Carolina, Virginia and Washington, as well as in parts of California and New York.

The Internal Revenue Service has begun a program allowing tax preparers for such organizations as Army installations to file returns via computer modems. A modem consists of a telephone linking computer terminals to a central computer.

IRS officials explain that the program ensures fast processing of tax returns, the early receipt of refund checks, and IRS confirmation of the return's accuracy. Under the program, taxpayers may have their refund checks deposited directly to their bank accounts.

According to Maj. Richard Totten with the Office of the Judge Advocate General of the Army in the Pentagon, the computerization saves soldiers about $25, which otherwise would go to commercial tax preparers for their services. It also would deter soldiers from taking out loans at high interest rates in advance of receipt of their refund.

Officials report that the XVIII Airborne Corps at Fort Bragg, N.C., used the program for the 1986 tax year. "We got on the bandwagon April 1, 1987, and still processed 160 1986 tax returns," said Maj. Richard McCall, chief legal assistance officer at Bragg. He said that these soldiers received their refund checks in about three weeks.

Communities win conservation awards

HEIDELBERG (ARNEWS) — Two V Corps communities took top honors in the 1987 U.S. Army, Europe Natural Resources Conservation Award selection, according to the Baumholder "Champion Times."

Baumholder received first-place honors, and Hanau placed second in Category A, which consists of installations or communities with fewer than 10,000 acres.

Army encourages employees to quit using tobacco for the day

American Forces Information Service

The American Cancer Society's 11th Annual Great American Smokeout will be celebrated on Thursday Nov. 19, and as in the past, it's success greatly depends upon the participation of the uniformed services. As part of the anti-tobacco use campaign, the army will adopt the national smokeout theme and call it the Great Army Smokeout.

On smokeout day, smokers agree to give up cigarettes for at least 24 hours. It is a good-natured, upbeat effort to allow smokers to prove to themselves that it is possible to kick the habit. Since the majority of smokers will be at work for at least part of the day, it's only natural that the smokeout receive attention throughout the army. Civilian businesses and army organizations of all sizes have enthusiastically supported previous smokeouts. Some hold quit smoking clinics or film and discussion programs for would-be quitters. The "Adopt-a-smoker" theme allows nonsmokers to participate in smokeout events by sponsoring and personally encouraging individual smokers to quit for a day.

Participation in the Great American Smokeout is one way to show concern for the health and welfare of our total army family — a practice that makes good leadership sense. Many organizations celebrate the smokeout as part of an overall health promotion program. Each year the army loses millions of dollars in medical costs and lost duty days due to smoking-related diseases. Increased awareness of the hazards of smoking, therefore, is beneficial to the individual and the army alike.

A smokeout coordinator from your local chapter of the Amrican Cancer Society can suggest appropriate activities and provide installations with a kit of smokeout ideas and materials. The national headquarters of the American Cancer Soceity has provided support materials to overseas commands through the AG publication centers.

Through our program of education, information and assistance, the army has achieved a significant reduction in the number of smokers in the past year. The Great Army Smokeout supports our anti-tobacco use campaign and provides a great opportunity to help our soldiers, army civilians, retirees and family members quit smoking — just for the health of it. I encourage you to participate and make the Great Army Smokeout a success.

Prior planning can help you succeed

Go Cold Turkey Join the Army Smokeout Nov. 19

Friday: Prepare. Circle Smokeout Day, November 19, on your calender—every calender. make a list of all the reasons you want to quit—your own personal reasons. After you've completed your list, circle your number one reason for quitting smoking. Write your number one reason on a card and put it in your wallet. Take it out and look at it often. Choose either to "cold turkey" or to prepare for Smokeout Day by cutting back on your smoking a little more each day of this week. Memorize your number one personal reason for quitting smoking.

Saturday: Picture Success. Imagine what Smokeout Day will be like. Will it be a workday? Will you be at home? Who will you spend time with on Smokeout Day? Imagine Smokeout Day in detail from the minute you wake up. Then picture yourself no smoking in each situation throughout the day. See yourself talking on the phone and not smoking. Finishing a meal and not smoking. Picture yourself assertively saying, "No thank you, I'm not smoking during the Great American Smokeout" when offered a cigarette. Imagine yourself relaxed and calm, breathing slowly and easily. Picture yourself alive, energetic and active. Picture success.

Sunday: Clean Up. Clean up your home, car and work space as though you were already a nonsmoker. For the rest of this week limit yourself to one ashtray and one pack of cigarettes at a time. If you have a carton of cigarettes, get rid of them, or give them to a friend fro safekeeping. Buy only one pack at a time. If your tables are strewn with matchbooks, tidy up. Put all your matchbooks in a jar to save for a power failure. Pawn your lighters, throw them away, or ask a nonsmoking friend to keep them for you. Cigarette smoking is becoming a smaller and smaller part of your life. Make that clear inevery way you can.

Monday: Pick Rewards. Becoming a nonsmoker is its own reward. There a few gifts you can give yourself as great as that of stopping smoking. Still, you deserve some "extra rewards" for such a major achievement. Think ahead about how you can celebrate getting rid of cigarettes. Make a list of special ways you can treat yourself during and after the Smokeout. Pick rewards that ae easy, fun and comforting, but low-calorie and within your budget! Use your imagination and make a long list of a variety of rewards. Look forward to a period of fun and celebration. You deserve it.

Tuesday: Plot Strategies. A key to success in stopping smoking is being prepared: Plan how you will handle the cravings, frustrations, interferences, petty difficulties and major obstacles that may occur on Smokeout Day. Practice deep breathing as a way of relaxing. Inhale strongly and exhale very, very slowly. Learn how to do a relaxation exercise. Begin a gradually increased physical exercise program now. Identify the people you think will be most supportive to you in helping you stay off cigarettes. Plan now to spend a lot of time with these people on Smokeout Day. Make a note of their phone numbers and keep it handy. Make a list of nonsmoking places to spend time. Schedule outdoor breaks to enjoy fresh air. Think of strategies to handle stressful situations. Imagine that you get a flat tire or your boss yells at you. What will you do or think to prevent yourself from reaching for a cigarette? A strategy can be a behavior or and attitude. Plot strategies for all obstacles you can imagine.

Wednesday: Stock Up. Stock up on all the treats that will make your success easier. Buy stick cinnamon, fresh fruit and vegetables, fruit juices or diet drinks. Review your strategies for quitting. Do any of them required special materials? (Yarn for knitting, rubber bands for snapping, a relaxation tape, chewing gum?) Stock up today on all the things you'll need tomorrow. Especially tock up on courage, commitment, and a lot of pride.

Thursday-Smokeout Day: Do It! Today, Smokeout Day, is the day you've been planning for. you may have tried to quit before—maybe many times. And you may have been thinking about quitting for years. But today is unique in one special way: Today's the day that you're leaving smoking behind you. You've done a lot of thinking about stopping smoking. Now you're ready to do it. Congratulations! Now that you've succeeded in staying smoke-free for one day, you can put the same strategies, effort and commitment to work to give up your habit for good.

Adopt a Smoker

Adoption Papers

I,_____, as a nonsmoker, will take it upon myself to help _____ on the path to smokelessness. For my part I will provide you with constant encouragement, fruit and peanuts if need be, and a shoulder to cry on.

It will be expected that _____ will assist me by adhering to the following suggestions:

1. Hide cigarettes, ashtrays, lighters and matches.
2. Tell all your friends that you have been adopted and will not smoke on the day of the Great American Smokeout (GAS), the third Thursday in November.
3. Call on your foster nonsmoker (me!) in times of weakness.
4. Refrain from frequenting smoke filled rooms.
5. Repeat to yourself over and over "not smoking is a GAS."

I,_____, the foster nonsmoker will try to cajole the aforementioned smoker to continue on the road to smokelessness following the Great American Smokeout, but this formal arrangement will conclude 24 hours after it began.

Signed: _____ (nonsmoker) Signed: _____ (temporary smoker) Date: _____

These tips will help you deal with 'nicotine fits'

• Throw out all cigarettes by breaking them in half and wetting them down. Clean out all ashtrays in your home, office or car and put them away. Discard matches; hide lighters, or give them all away.

• When the urge to smoke hits, take a deep breath. Hold it a second, then release it very, very slowly. Taking deep, rhythmic breaths is similar to smoking, only you'll inhale clean air, not poisonous gases.

• Exercise to relieve tension. Climb stairs rather than take the elevator, park the c ar block or two from your destination and walk the rest of the way. At home, practice touching your toe, jog in place, do jumping jacks.

• When tempted to reach for a cigarette, think of a negative image about smoking. Select your worst memory connected with the habit—the time you burned a hole in your suit or when you were left completely breathless running for a bus that pulled away. Imagine this experience for 15 seconds whenever the urge occurs.

• Reward yourself with oral substitutes in the same way you may have used cigarettes. Good examples: sugarless gum, lemon drops, pumpkin or sunflower seeds, apple slices, carrot sticks, unbuttered popcorn and stick cinnamon.

• Eat three or more small meals. This maintains constant blood sugar levels, thus helping to prevent urges to smoke. Avoid sugar-laden foods and spicy items that can trigger a desire for cigarettes.

• Scramble up your day and change havits connected with smoking. Drive a different route to work; eat lunch in a new place; leave the "scene of an urge." At home, avoid your "smoking chair" after dinner, reach for gum rather than a cigarette when answering the phone.

• Cleanse your body of nicotine. Drink liquids—lots of them. Water (6-8 glasses a day), herbal teas, fruit juices and caffeine-free soft drinks all fit the bill. Pass up coffee, caffeinated soft drinks and alcohol, as they can increase your urge to smoke.

• Keep your hands — and mind —busy. Work on a crossword puzzle, knit a sweater, balance your checkbook, fix something around the house, shampoo the dog.

Maintenance soldiers provide vital support

197th Inf.

By Sally Roberts
197th Inf. Bde. Correspondent

Sally Roberts

Pvt. Larry K. Grebner, of Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 2nd Battalion, 18th Infantry, repairs the brakes on a jeep.

Maintenance remains to be a vital part of combat readiness. The maintenance mission has become even more crucial and tedious as the amount of equipment that a soldier must maintain increases.

The mechanized infantrymen of the 2nd Battalion, 18th Infantry have a great responsibility in maintaining the armored personnel carrier which sustains them in battle as well as several different types of weapons and equipment.

In order to do that, the Battalion Maintenance Officer, 1st Lt. Robert Brunk, supervises a maintenance plan that he feels accomplishes the vital maintenance mission.

"In order to remain fully deployable," said Lt. Brunk, "we take a look at the total fighting system, right on down to the machine gun mounts, grappeling hooks and water cans."

Every six months, each company in the Battalion performs rigorous maintenance checks on individual equipment, weapons, and each piece of equipment on their vehicle. All preventative maintenance measures are completed, worn or damaged parts are replaced. The soldiers' work is checked by the battalion maintenance crews for technical assistance.

The final step in the maintenance plan is a complete layout of each vehicles Basic Issue Items (BII), from decontamination equipment to fire extinguishers, as well as soldiers individual equipment.

Lt. Brunk added that the soldiers' personnel, dental and medical records are also reviewed during this time to ensure that everything is in order for the soldier to deploy.

"Our objective is to be able to keep everyone and everything capable of deploying," Brunk said. "This also gives the soldiers faith and confidence in their equipment. They have taken it through a full service and they know it is combat ready."

Field evaluation puts the squeeze on platoon leaders

197th Inf.

By George Mingee
197th Inf. Bde. Correspondent

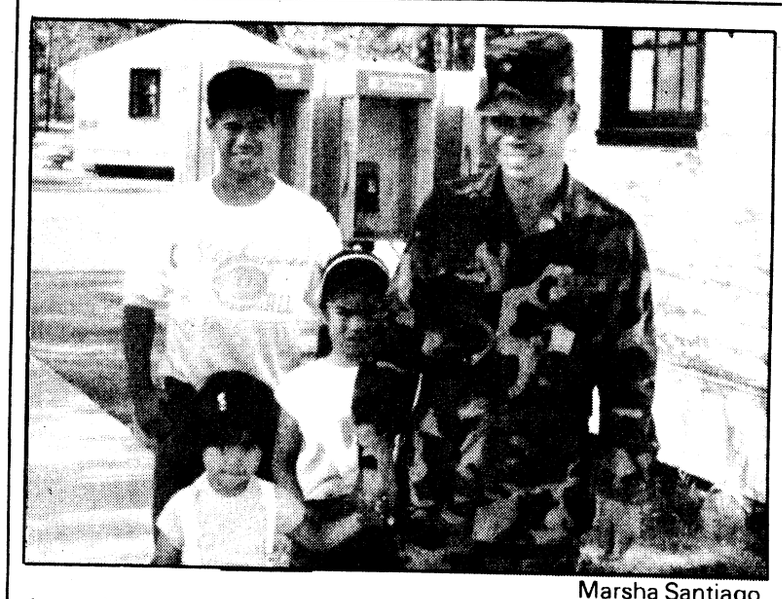
FIRE! A soldier, who is nestled with his crew in a M-60 machine gun fighting position, squeezes the trigger on the weapon in response to a main attack from the 1st Battalion, 58th Infantry.

This crew was a part of the Opposing Forces who maneuvered through the woods in and around Bush Hill recently as nearly 700 soldiers participated in the 1-58 External Evaluation.

"The evaluation is going well with a lot of good lessons being learned," LTC Gary W. Halstead, 1-58 Inf. Battalion commander said. "We're putting pressure on the platoon leaders and their men. So the information we learn can be used in future training to benefit the soldier."

The evaluation begins, when the soldier digs his fighting position, or camouflages his track, and prepares for the day's battle. Additionally, as expected, the individual soldier will be faced with many interesting situations. The decision the soldier makes could be the difference of simulated winning or losing in training; however, it could mean a more tragic outcome in a real time scenario.

"These battle missions, with instant feedback, give the soldiers a good idea of what they did right and wrong," said Sgt. Bobby L. Oliver. "Also, because we fight a great deal of the time at night, we've learned valuable lessons about night missions."



Fighting in the bush or in open country takes the whole team. The platoon leaders are the backbone of the team due to their responsibility to lead men successfully into battle.

"Squeezing the platoon leaders like grapes is our intent," Maj. James A. Egan, 1-58 Battalion executive officer stated. "Working under extreme duress in adverse conditions, analyzes their potential to conform to a similar situation in combat operations."

The infantrymen received much needed support throughout the operations from the 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor, and 2nd Battalion, 10th Field Artillery.

With all these lessons learned, it's good to know that an External Evaluation can show the individual soldier and leaders how much progress they've made and where their next goals should be set.

Family day gives spouses, kids chance to learn about drill training

By Marsha Santiago
ITC Correspondent

What happens when your soldier spouse spends nine weeks undergoing intensive training to become a Drill Sergeant? When the Cadre Training Center hosted a "Family Get Acquainted" day recently, the wives and children of the current Drill Sergeant candidates found out. Also attending were CSM and Mrs. Lee R. Little, USAITC command sergeant major, and SGM and Mrs. Sidney Oliver, CTC commandant.

For the Drill Sergeant candidates, a typical day begins at 4:30 a.m. and ends a 6 p.m. with the hours until 11 p.m. bed-check spent studying. The families were given tours of the classrooms and living quarters where the candidates spend the nine weeks earning the coveted Drill Sergeant badge and hat.

Little and Oliver addressed the gatheing and commented on the training program. MSgt. Donald D. Fenton, Chief Instructor, presented a broad overview of the training. Mrs. Little and Mrs. Oliver made brief remakrs geared to the candidates' wives. Additionally, Mrs. Marie Martinez and Mrs. Glenda Rodriguez, cadre wives, made comments on the demands of the course and the importance of family support.

Refreshments were provided for the families, candidates, and cadre attending the event.

Mrs. Ingrid Thomas, wife of Sgt. Malcolm Thomas, commented on her husband becoming a Drill Sergeant, "He has been really looking forward to this. If he likes it, I like it too."

MARSHAL'S VIEWPOINT

By Wendell D. Choate
Provost Marshal's Office

You have heard and read different advertisements on drinking and driving. But what about drugs and driving.

When you have a headache you take a couple of aspirins. If you have a cold, you take an antihistimine or a decongestant. If you feel down in the dumps, you reach for a tranquilizer.

There are pills to help you go to sleep and pills that will help you stay awake. You may have some of these in your medicine cabinet right now.

They say we're a country that moves on wheels and keeps healthy with pills. That's just fine except that under some conditions when the two of them get together, there's trouble.

Let's discuss some of the different kinds of drugs and how they can affect you and your driving.

Pep pills — Some drivers use them. These pills are supposed to relieve the symptoms of fatigue. This they do. Pep pills tend to increase mental alertness and they help you think a little better. But — and this is the kicker — they do these things at the expense of concentration.

Sometimes a false sense of self confidence and well-being takes over. Actually, these so-called pep pills merely stall off sleep. Becoming drowsy is nature's warning system that gives you a chance to do something about it — like pulling off and napping.

Tranquilizers — These affect attitude and outlook and reduce tension. But they can make you dizzy, drowsy, and cause you to lose track of what you're doing.

Antihistimines — They do a good job as cold symptom fighters and as allergy fighters, but they can cause inattention, confusion and drowsiness — all of which are dangerous to a driver.

Wonder drugs — These infection fighting medications — Stretomycin, for example — can bring on nausea, temporary deafness and, in some people, a loss of balance. You can guess what that would do to your driving ability.

I'm not knocking these medications. They do a wonderful job. They've saved a lot of lives and relived untold sufferings, but they can still have dangerous effects on your driving.

If your doctor prescribes a drug for you, ask him what the side effects are. He'll be glad to tell you. Find out how long it takes the effects of the drug to wear off. Some of these side effects that influence your driving can hang on for a long period of time.

Many people don't realize the dangers of combining certain drugs with other drugs or with alcohol. The reaction can be swift, potent and sometimes deadly. There are many other types of drugs that can have dangerous side effects. Know what you're taking, what's in it and what its contents can do to you. Remember that drugs and driving don't mix.

If you have questions about a drug, call Martin Army Community Hospital Information at 544-2041. They can give you the phone number of personnel who will be able to assist you.

Please remember that, like drinking and driving, drugs and driving don't mix. Help the Fort Benning Crime Prevention Office "Take a Bite Out of Crime," call 545-7154/7115.

ASK THE JUDGE

By Thomas Shoener
Staff Judge Advocate

Q: I recently traded in my used car for a new one. I wasn't quite sure what the pay-off on my old car would be, so the dealer and I tried to figure it out. I thought the pay-off was about $4,100, but the dealer's calculations showed it to be $3,700. I put down a down payment, signed a contract which used $3,700 as the estimated pay-off, and financed the rest of the car. The actual pay-off turned out to be $4,300.

Now the dealer says I've got to make up the difference between the estimated pay-off and the actual one. That comes to $600. I feel ripped off. I think that if the dealer messed up the pay-off, that I shouldn't owe him any money, because he should have known better than to extimate it so low. Do I have to pay the extra $600?

A: You probably will have to pay the extra money. Both of you understood that the allowance for your trade-in was subject to verification of the amount you still owed.

It may well be that some car dealers will intentionally misrepresent the amount of a pay-off when you trade in a car because that makes the price of the car seem lower. However, it would be very difficult to prove that the dealer did this on purpose.

Even with the new pay-off, the out of pocket costs will be higher than you thought. The best defense that a serious car buyer with a trade-in can have is to know the "book value" of his used car by consulting a used car guide, and to know the actual pay-off of the trade-in when you go to the dealer.

Don't let the dealer lure you into a false belief as to how much you are going to have to pay for the car. You may want to complain to the Better Business Bureau and the Armed Forces Disciplinary Control Board, which investigates businesses who are alleged to have defrauded soldiers.

The AFDCB is located in the MP Building. If a particular auto dealer has been involved in a pattern of abuse, it could lead to the dealer being declared off limits to soldiers. Additionally, you may want to discuss this problem with a legal assistance attorney who can further explain how to effectively complain about these kinds of incidents, and how to keep it from happening again.

If you want to make an appointment, call Legal Assistance at 545-3281 or 3282.

Troop sentenced to seven years for selling 'coke'

Staff Judge Advocate

A Fort Benning soldier was recently sentenced for using, distributing and possessing cocaine.

PFC Alain Boucherie, of Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 3rd Battalion, 14th Infantry, 2nd Brigade, 10th Mountain Division, was found guilty at a general court-martial Sept. 18.

Lt. Col. Douglas Andrews, the military judge, found Boucherie guilty to two specifications of using cocaine, two specifications of distributing cocaine to other soldiers, one specification of possessing a large amount of cocaine with the intent to distribute, and two specifications of breaking restriction.

He was sentenced to be reduced to the grade of E-1, to forfeit all pay and allowances, to be confined for seven years, and to be discharged from the Army with a bad conduct discharge. Boucherie will serve his confinement at the disciplinary barracks at Fort Leavenworth, Kansas.

VA Q&A

Veterans Administration

EDITOR'S NOTE: Following are representative questions answered daily by VA counselors. Full information is available at any VA office.

Q: My ex-husband says I am the beneficiary of his National Service Life Insurance policy. Can I verify this?

A: Verification is possible only with the husband's permission in writing. This does not preclude a change of beneficiaries at a later date.

Q: My husband died of a service connected disability and I have filed a claim for Dependency and Indemnity Compensation (DIC). My husband was a military retiree and was contributing to a monthly annuity for me under the Survivors Benefit Program (SBP). May I receive DIC from the VA and SBP from the military?

A: No. You may not receive both benefits. For every dollar of DIC you must waive a dollar of your SBP benefit. Should your monthly SBP exceed the monthly DIC benefit, you will be entitled to receive the difference. The premiums paid into the SBP fund during your husband's lifetime represent that portion of the SBP benefit which you must waive in order to receive the DIC benefit will be refunded to you in a lump sum. You are not required to elect the DIC benefit. You may elect to receive the total SBP benefit; however, SBP benefits are fully taxable whereas DIC benefits are exempt from taxation.

Q: I am a Vietnam veteran, and I believe I was exposed to Agent Orange when I was on active duty in southeast Asia. What does the Veterans Administration offer in the way of examinations and health care?

A: Since 1978, the VA has operated the Agent Orange registry Program for Vietnam veterans who are concerned about possible health effects of Agent Orange. Veterans who partacipate in this program receive a comprehensive physical examination and complete a questionnare about their service in Vietnam. The veteran is advised of the results which are entered into the Agent Orange Registry. The examiniation can help to detect any illness or injury the veteran may have, regardless of origin, and may provide a bases for follow-up. Vietnam veterans are encouraged to request an Agent Orange examination at their nearest VA health-care facility.

Q: I have questions about my recent Agent Orange examination. Whom should I talk to about my concerns?

A: If you have any questions about your Agent Orange examination, contact the environmental physician at the VA medical cebter where you had the examination.

Marine Corps celebrates 212th birthday

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

The Marine Corps, who historically have been characterized by "The First to Fight," celebrated their 212th birthday this week.

The Marine Corps liaison here honored their service with a picnic at the Uchee Creek Recreation Center.

Marines who are at Benning attending the different schools gathered for the traditional cake cutting and some fun and games.

According to Marine Sgt. Tab Brown of Marine Corps Liaison, their men are here attending several courses. Among them the Infantry Officers Advanced Course; Airborne, Pathfinder, Jumpmaster, Pre-Ranger, and Ranger Schools as well as IMPOC and the ITV TOW course.

All of these courses help the Marines maintain the high state of readiness they need to protect the United States.

As set forth in the National Security Act of 1947, their mission is to seize or defend advanced naval bases and to conduct such land operations as may be essential to the prosecution of a naval campaign.

They also provide detachments and organizations for service in armed vessels of the Navy or for protection of naval property on naval stations and bases.

Along with the rest of our forces, they develop tactics, techniques, and equipment employed by landing forces in amphibious operations.

Another mission of the corps is to develop doctrine, procedures, and equipment of interest to the Marine Corps for airborne operations, which is not provided for by the Army.

The Marines' mission and readiness has caused them throughout history to take part in many wars and conflicts in the defense of freedom.

An example of the high state of readiness maintained by the Marines is an operation conducted during the Korean War.

During the war Maj. Gen. Oliver P. Smith, commanding general of the 1st Marine Division, planned a series of retrograde operations which properly employed all ten imperatives contained in today's Airland Battle doctrine. This battle is known as the Chosin Reservoir Campaign.

The Marine Corps Motto "Semper Fidelis" which is Latin for "Always Faithfull" is fitting for this small force of men committed to preserve the freedom of America.

The display case in Building 4 highlighted the Marine Corps' birthday last week.

Attendees enjoy a friendly game of horseshoes.

More than 100 people turned out for the picnic celebrating the Marine Corps' 212th birthday.

Program looks for better ways to utilize civilian work force

Army News Service

WASHINGTON — The U.S. Military Academy at West Point, N.Y., recently joined six other installations in testing a program for "managing the civilian workforce to budget."

The other participants, whose programs got underway Oct. 1, consist of Fort Jackson, S.C.; Fort Irwin, Calif.; The North Pacific Division of the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers (five sites); the U.S. Army Reserve Personnel Center, St. Louis; and the U.S. Army Natick Research, Development and Engineering Center, Natick, Mass.

During a Pentagon ceremony Oct. 9, Army Deputy Chief of Staff for Personnel Lt. Gen. Allen K. Ono and the academy's superintendent, Lt. Gen. Dave R. Palmer, signed a memorandum of understanding that blueprints how the USMA personnel system will run during the next two years.

Referring to the test in its abbreviated and more common term, MCB, and as "an important Army mission," Ono said further that "this test represents a significant step within the Army toward modernizing the civilian personnel system." He also acknowledged that modernization would be a continuing and challenging process. Ono went on to say, "Concepts such as managing by the operating budget, delegating job classification authority to supervisors, and productivity gain-sharing will each require quality implementation and objective evaluation."

After briefly highlighting some of the program's objectives, one of which brings personnel management to the lowest practical level, Ono called upon the other military services to join in and support legislative reform of the civilian personnel system, particularly in the areas of classification and compensation.

In conclusion, Ono remarked, "A professional civilian workforce, with a high level of morale and commitment to service, is absolutely essential to supporting and maintaining the readiness of our Army."

After introduction of and remarks by the USMA superintendent, the two leaders signed the document. The six other Army installations or activities participating in the test program will sign similar memoranda detailing how each will carry out its individual MCB program.

Although some variations may occur, the main thrust of the program aims at getting the responsibility, authority and accountability for classifying and setting grade levels and executing personnel budgets down to the lowest practical management level.

Part of that management will involve job grading and classification. "At West Point, where about 2,100 appropriated-fund civilians work, that authority will eventually be delegated to at least division level, and in many cases, to the branch level," said Michael S. Heller, the academy's civilian personnel officer.

"Although supervisors and managers will have classification authority under the new system, the classification law hasn't changed. There still will be classification standards and performance standards, just as they exist now. The difference will be 'who' classifies positions. We don't expect this change will decrease the quality of standards classification. In fact, we expect the quality to increase. And, the civilian personnel costs, or what we in the personnel business refer to as CPC, will be reduced."

Parallel to this, supervisors will receive additional training in personnel management so that they can accept more responsibility in managing their organizations.

"At the end of two years," Heller concluded, "the test can be extended or changed. We are quite certain that whatever happens with this test, personnel systems in two years will not be the same as they are now."

Army making steady gains in cutting costs

Army News Service

WASHINGTON — For the third consecutive year, the Army this year is paying up to 30 percent less than it previously paid for its equipment and replacement parts, thanks to increases in the number of suppliers bidding and producing on its contracts.

Brig. Gen. Charles R. Henry, the Army Competition Advocate General, explained that the Army has achieved an all-time high by exceeding its goal of competing 56 cents of every procurement dollar spent in fiscal year 1987. More than $18.6 billion worth of competitive contracts were awarded out of the total $31.6 billion Army procurement budget. This represents a steady increase in savings since 1984.

Henry noted that competition between contractors diversifies the number of businesses involved in defense contracting, encourages innovation and discourages the types of contractor abuse widely reported by the news media. "Competitive contracts have the potential to save substantial amounts of money," he said.

"Cost-cutting is vital to the Army's vast procurement system, which must support 781,000 soldiers on duty around the world, plus more than 1 million other soldiers in the Army National Guard and U.S. Army Reserve. It buys items for the Army's complex supply system. In a normal year, the Army procurement system processes up to 3 million transactions with 60,000 suppliers, who earn the $30 billion spent by the Army in its procurement budget."

Henry cited competition as one of many business practices the Army is using to buy more intelligently, but the Army never relies on it at the expense of quality or when emergencies dictate otherwise.

"Competition at any cost is self-defeating," Henry said. "Future Army budgets are likely to become smaller. Competition in contracting will help offset budget cuts and help sustain essential modernization programs," he added.

As the latest figures show, competition is saving large amounts over what used to be the case for the single-supplier contracts, which had dominated Army buying. Examples abound from communications equipment to missiles.

Competition on one piece of high-tech communications equipment was driven down $29,000 a set, a total difference to the taxpayer of $103 million. Fifty-nine million dollars was the difference on a piece of equipment purchased for the Army's Patriot missile system through competition.

"Fair, open and effective competition can net quality equipment at a reasonable price that protects our soldiers and restores the faith of this nation in the military services and the defense industry. The public has the right to expect us to spend tax dollars wisely and effectively," Henry explained. "Today's goodnews helps us prove the Army can and will continue to earn the public's confidence," he concluded.

Stay well. The Army needs you.

OWC Bazaar offers variety of gift options

By Lynn Barlotta
Officers Wives' Club

The Benning Bazaar will be Saturday from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. at Faith Middle School on Ingersoll Avenue.

The bazaar, sponsored by the Officers' Wives' Club, is held annually to raise money for the OWC's welfare fund.

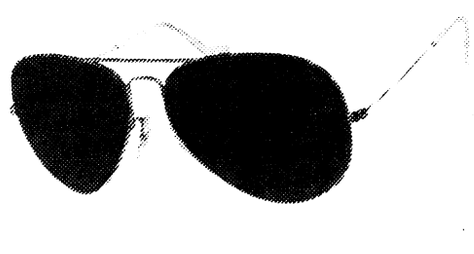
Last year, the OWC contributed $40,000 to more than thirty organizations from Fort Benning and the Columbus area.

Some of the agencies that are supported by the OWC welfare monies are: the ACS lending closet; food locker; exceptional family member program; Santa's Castle; the National Infnatry Museum; Tot Town; the Chapel Center; the Boy Scouts; Spencer and Pacelli High Schools; the Artist-in-residence program in the post school system and the scholarships available to college-bound family members graduating from high school.

This year's Bazaar will have more than thirty vendors selling a variety of items: country crafts, stenciled pieces, tole paintings, needlepoint, quilting, elts, pottery, jewelry, stained glass, painted scarves, water colors, Christmas crafts, wreaths, wooden crafts and furniture, hot dogs, funnel cakes, fudge, egg rolls and homebaked goodies in the Country Store.

There will be entertainment throughout the day: the Pacelli High band at 11 a.m., the Benning Belles at 12:30 p.m., a Karate demonstration at 1 p.m. and Jay Driver's Square Dance Group at 3 p.m.

Door prizes will be given away all day. Each vendor has donated a gift to be gaiven away in addition to the main door prizes. Prizes include a brass lamp from Zayre's, a Thanksgiving Turkey from South Star Foods, a fresh cut seven-foot Christmas tree from Lakeside tree farm, a $150 gift certificate to Williams Beauty Salon for an all day complete makeover, a dinner for two at the Diamond Mansion, and the grand door prize of a queen size Amish quilt, handmade in blues, gray and burgundy in a Lone Star pattern, donated by CB&T.



Santa Claus will be there in his sleigh, for the children. There will be clowns and ballons and a special shop where the children may shop for holiday gifts for their parents, whereall the merchandise will cost under $2.

The OWC hopes that all of the Fort Benning Community will support the Bazaar by attending and spending. Everyone in the community will benefit if the Bazaar is a success. Come join in the fun!

Presentation ceremony honors teachers for dedicated service

The Main Post Sunday School recognized its teachers on Sunday, with the presentation of pins for length of service. USAIC Chaplain Roy Mathis made the presentations, assisted by Director of Religious Education, Bill Putman.

Three teachers were recognized for more than 20 years service. Colleen O'Brian, now the Sunday School Secretary, 24 years; Edwina Redfoot, 22 years and Shirley Sines, 21 years Teachers with more than 15 years service are Helen Smith, Hungshia Tullia, Mary Phelps and Meredith Treude.

All other teachers were presented a pin in appreciation for their valuable contributions to the Sunday School program.

Total volunteer years at the Main Post Sunday School amounts to more than 160 years.

Main Post Sunday School gets new co-directors

Chaplains Office

The Main Post Sunday School is fortunate to have as its new co-directors, LTC and Mrs. Charles Thorton. The Thortons arrived at Fort Benning during the past summer. LTC Thorton is the Commander of the 67th Maintenance Battalion. Mrs. Amanda Thorton, who has had her own career as a science teacher, is currently involved with the many duties of a battalion commander's wife and is developing a family support system within the battalion. She also does volunteer work with the IOAC 'wives' workshops and with Santa's Castle.

Neither of the Thortons is a stranger to religious work, and both of them have made significant contributions to the religious programs where they have been stationed throughout the Army. LTC Thorton has served as a Sunday School teacher, Sunday School Superintendent and as a Lay reader. The daughter of a CME Minister, Mrs. Thorton has also taught Sunday School and is the co-organizer of the children's choir at the Sightseeing Road Chapel.

The Main Post Sunday School is located in the Religious Education Center, Bldg. 229, Crain Hall and meets every Sunday from 9:30-10:30 a.m. There are classes for all ages from two years through adults, and free babysitting is provided for those under two years of age whose parents are attending or teaching Sunday School.

Roots of liberty found in religious heritage

By Thomas W. Mitchiner
CPE Student

At the chapel where I started my military career at Fort Bragg, N.C., the following words from President John F. Kennedy can be read in a stained glass window, "we will pay any price, bear any burden, to assure the success of liberty." In our country, the roots of liberty are found in our religious heritage. More important than the tradition of Thanksgiving, the Pilgrims gave us an enduring tradition of liberty.

To quote Thomas Carlyle, the "beginning" of the "soul" of America does not date from the first permanent English settlement at Jamestown, Va., in 1607, but from the landing of the Pilgrims 13 years later. The Virginians came mainly to exploit the natural wealth of the New World. The Pilgrims came seeking religious liberty so they could practice their religious faith. Before landing on the New England coast, the Pilgrims drew up their own "covenant" or compact of agreement for self-government. Their "Mayflower compact" declared:

"We are knit together in a body in a most strict and sacred bond and covenant of the Lord, of the violation whereof we make great conscience, and by virtue whereof we do hold ouselves strictly tied to all care of each other's goods, and of the whole by every one, and so mutually."

Their first building was an Assembly House for meetings of the church and the democratically elected General Court. Prayers were always offered at the opening of the court and before voting on any important decision. The General Court was the forerunner of the New England town meetings from which the practice of American democracy grew.

The Puritans who came after the Pilgrims continued to advance the principal of democracy in religion, which meant that authority lay in the group as a whole and not in a privileged heirarchy or elite. When applied to politics, it meant that political authority, or sovereignty, rested with the people and that government was merely a servant of the people for the common good. It was liberty, as enjoyed within a democratic society, which allowed for the various capacities of the individual to be most fully developed, and for society to benefit the most from individual accomplishments.

Liberty, and the related value of democracy, have historically been the rallying cry for the fighting spirit of the American soldier. The pre-War of Independence forces that opposed the Stamp Act and other unjust British measures were called the Sons of Liberty. In a meeting of the Virginia Legislature at St. John's Episcopal Church on a Richmond hilltop in March 1775, a young lawyer named Patrick Henry declared, "I know not what course others may take, but as for me give me liberty or give me death."

Our liberty as commemorated in 1886 with the dedication of the colossal Statue of Liberty, which commands the entrance to New York City. The statue was originally known as Liberty Enlightening the World. The clear goal of securing liberty was our theme for our War of Independence and for two world wars. In the War Between the States, each side saw their cause as one of securing liberty. Our most unpopular wars have been those inwhich this theme was not creditable to the American people. On Nov. 11, in remembrance and gratitude, we honored those who have valiantly served and who serve today in defense of liberty.

By living in a nation where we enjoy the abundance of liberty, it is hard to realize that the exercise of this value through our political and economic freedom could be lost. Liberty is God given and it requires Divine help not only to secure our liberty but to maintain it.

Our leaders in the War of Independence recognized the necessity for the help of divine Providence in their struggle for liberty. On June 12, 1775, the Continental Congress dispatched messengers to the thirteen colonies with a resolution calling for a universal "day of humiliation, fasting, and prayer." The colonists were asked to confess their sins, plead for forgiveness, and entreat the great "Governor" to remove the calamities and avert the "desolating judgements" which threatened their existence.

The following month, at the request of General Washington, the Continental Congress gave the chaplains their official authorization. Nearly a year later he published a General Order to his commanders to procure chaplains so that the "blessing and protection of Heaven" would be on every soldier "defending the dearest rights and liberties of his country."

The "protection of Divine Providence" was again sought in the Declaration of Independence in order in order to secure "certain unalienable rights, that among these are Life, Liberty, and the pursuit of Happiness." These rights are "self-evident" and with which all people are "endowed by their creator." To proclaim the adoption of the Declaration of Independence by the Continental Congress on July 7, 1776, the Liberty Bell was rung in Philadelphia that day. The bell bears the biblical inscription, "Proclaim Liberty Throughout All the Land into All the Inhabitants Thereof", (Lev. 25:10).

After victory was secured with the surrender of the British forces under Lord Cornwallis on Oct. 19, 1783 at Yorktown, Va., the thirteen colonies faced the problem of drawing up a constitution for a stronger federal government. It was at the height of the bitter debating at the Constitutiional Convention that the venerable Benjamin Franklin, then 83, arose and addressed the President of the convention, General Washington. He asked, "That henceforth, prayers imploring the assistance of Heaven, and its blessings on our deliberations, be held in this Assembly every morning before we proceed to business, and that one or more of the clergy to this city be requested to officiate in that service."

The request was granted, the Constitution was agreed on, signed, and sent to the states for ratification. Recognizing a need for stronger protection of basic civil rights, the first ten amendments were added to the Constitution. The ten amendments were merely an extension of the right of freedom of conscience in religion. The practice of religious liberty in the colonies had led to the acceptance of freedom of conscience in religion. It is this freedom of conscience in religion that is protected by the first and most fundamental amendment which reads, "congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof."

The religious origins of the liberty of this nation and the continued need for the help of Divine Providence to secure and maintain liberty is reaffirmed in our pledge of allegiance to the flag and to the country for which it stands with the words, "one nation under God, with liberty and justice for all." Our national currency even proclaims, "In God we Trust."

Of all the blessings that we have to be thankful for, we need to give thanks for the tradition of liberty that we have inherited from the Pilgrims and farther developed in our political documents by our forefathers. They paid the price to secure our liberty. As we well know, the burden of maintaining that liberty against enemies, foreign and deomstic, falls on the members of the armed forces. There is probably no greater service that we can render to our veterans that serve today than to seek through our religious practice to bear the burden and to pay the price of maintaining our liberty.

CHAPEL BRIEFS

Enrichment classes to begin next week

The CCD Adult Enrichment program will begin a three-part program on families by Father John Powell Sunday at 7 p.m. in the Religious Education Center.

This program is about building new and better lines of communications between couples, parents and children, and between siblings.

Powell insists the family is a "laboratory of life," that it is where people learn how to relate to other people and how to use their talents.

All adults are welcome.

Learn how to make advent wreathes

An Advent wreath-making workship will take place Thursday at 7 p.m. at the TIC annex. It is sponsored by the Catholic Women of St. Maurice Parish.

All supplies will be provided. Bring the whole family and learn how to make a wreath. Prayer booklets will be given out and it will be an opportunity to begin the Advent season with inspiration.

For information, call Marianne at 687-0451 or Sondra at 687-1518.

Diet and Cancer Risk

YOU CAN CHANGE THE ODDS

Fat . . . it's a three-letter word that none of us like, whether we're talking about our waistlines or the fat in our diets.

High levels of dietary fat have been associated with higher risk for several serious diseases, including breast, prostate and colon/rectal cancers.

But reducing fat in your diet can be simple. Choose leaner cuts of meat and lower fat dairy products, avoid too many baked goods, and learn to recognize hidden fats in food.

Contest tests student's math skills, while increaing their vocabularies

By Beth Middlemiss
Fort Benning Schools

"Turkey," "Wednesday," "thirty," "acknowledge," "producer" — What do these words have in common? They are all legitimate entries in the Fort Benning Schools Dollar Word Contest.

The contest, sponsored by the school system's Mathematic Education Teacher Committee, challenged students to find words whose letter values added up to a dollar if A=1¢, B=2¢ and so on. Students were allowed to use any word found in the dictionary and any proper noun.

The Fort Benning mathematics curriculum focuses on real world skills including estimation, mental math, and problem solving.

This contest was designed to make students more aware of the world around them by thinking about words in a new way.

Contest rules were geared to the students' ages and experience levels with younger children computing values of words without targeting the dollar figure.

The finished product was class entry composed of words contributed by class members.

Each school conducted its own contest. Classrooms competed only with other classrooms in their school on the same grade level.

Teachers reported that as students became involved in the word search, strategies such as these evolved:
Calculator carrying kids computed the value of every word encountered at school, at home, and at local sporting events.
Intense dictionary searches began.

The result was that students quickly memorized the value of the letters and could instantly determine the approximate value of a word by looking at it.

The contest ran for three weeks, with some classes discovering more than 150 dollar words.

As anticipated, students and teachers increased their vocabularies.

A variety of prizes were awarded to the classrooms that won. ("Variety" is a dollar word)

With the success of this activity, the Mathematics Education Teacher Committee anticipates sponsoring future contests this year to maintain the heightened awareness in math around us.

Army shooters set new record at nationals

By Tommy Poole
USAMU Public Affairs Office

Army shooters set one new record and tied another while dominating this years National 300 Meter Rifle Championship held at Fort Benning, Nov. 6-9.

In individual competition, USAMU's Glenn Dubis, led from start to finish to capture his second consecutive national 300 meter rifle title.

Dubis fired rounds of 1,162-1,163 and 1,156 for a winning three day total of 3,481 out of 3,600 possible points. His final aggregate score was just three points off the current national record held by former USAMU shooting great, Lt. Col. (Ret.) Lones Wigger.

Second place and the silver medal in the championship went to team-mate, Kurt Fitz-Randolph, who finished with 3,453. Army reservist Ray Carter, Alexandria, Va., was in third position at 3,447.

In other individual events, Reservist Brad Carnes, Tulsa, Ok., scored a total of 1,790 out of 1,800 points to win the national 300 meter prone title.

USAMU members Dubis and Thomas Tamas, rounded out second and third place in the event with identical scores of 1,788.

Also in individual competition, USAMU's Stephen Goff tied the current national record in the 40 shot standing event, with a total of 384 out of 400 points during the final day of the championships.

In team events, the U. S. Army "Blue" squad swept both of the national team titles in close competition with the USAR and U. S. Marine Corps squads.

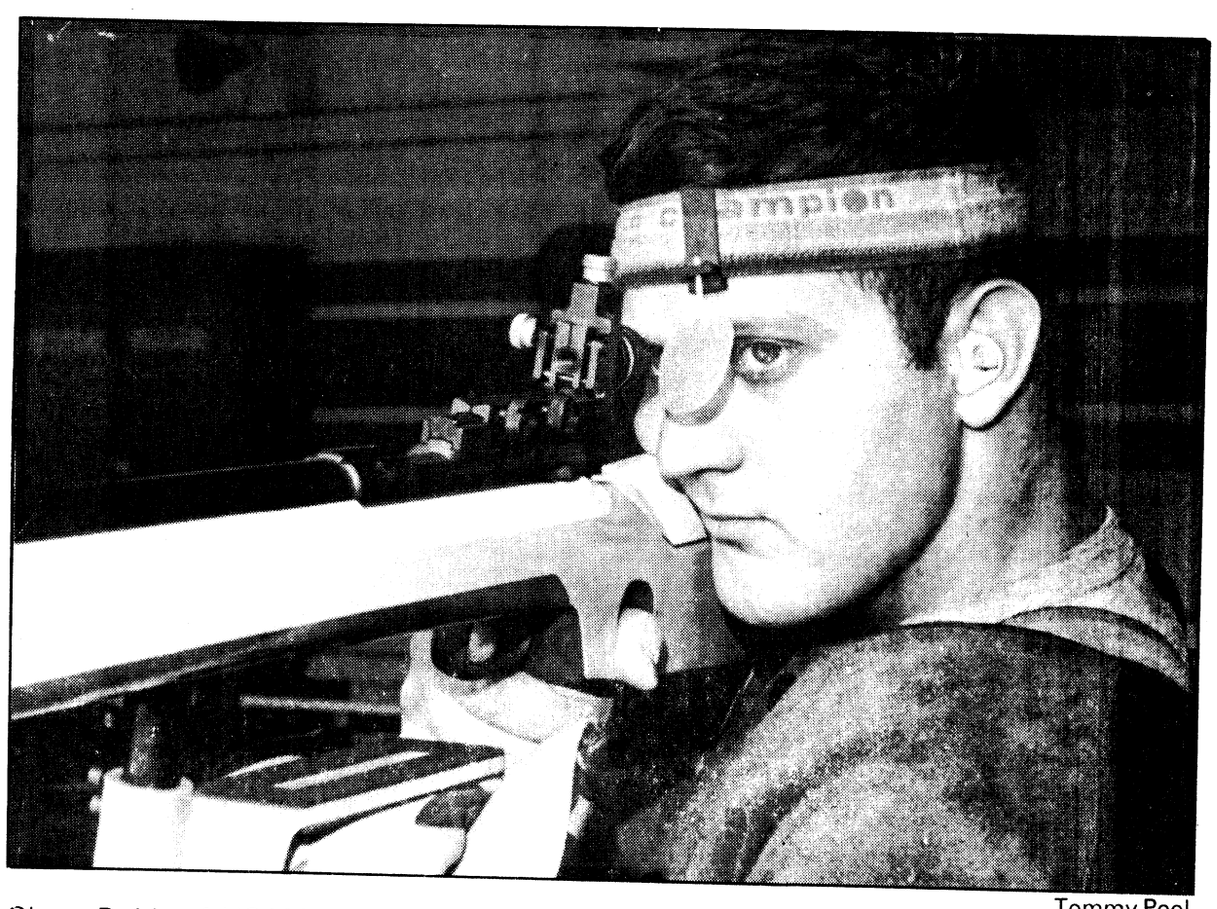
The Army "Blue" team edged the USAR by one point in the 300 meter prone championship with 1,784 to 1,783 while the USMC squad finished in third position only two points back at 1,782.

The Army's winning score also established a new national record for the event, breaking the old mark by two points. Team members included Dubis, Tamas and Richard Hawkins.

During the 300 meter position team championships, the Army "Blue" squad scored a total of 3,443 points to outdistance the USAR #1 team at 3,421. The Army "Gold" squad finished third at 3,414.

Winning "Blue" team members included Dubis, Robert Aylward and Hawkins. Members of the "Gold" squad were Goff, Mark Kauder and Fitz-Randolph.

The final standings are as follows:



Final National Standings

"Doughboys" snag fourth at Marine Marathon

The "Doughboys" receive a trophy at the U.S. Army Strategic Defense Command's 30th Anniversary 10K Road Race.

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Lloyd McDonald turned in a blazing time of 2:32:56 at the Twelfth Annual Marine Corps Marathon in Washington, D.C. last Sunday to help snag a 4th place finish for the Fort Benning "Doughboys" running team.

McDonald, of 2nd Infantry Training Brigade, placed 35th overall out of 12,089 runners competing in this years marathon.

All the team members and their times were:

Arcides Colon	2:53:34
James Evans	2:56:00
Anthony Cerri	3:10:10
William Connolly	3:57:10

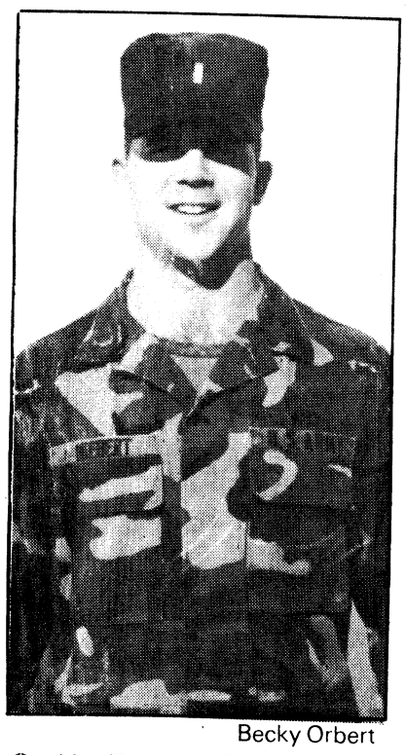
This year's Marine Corps Marathon began and ended at the Marine Corps War Memorial.

The 26-mile, TAC-cerified course was very flat, winding through Arlington, Georgetown and the District of Columbia. It passed many of the area's attractions including the Capitol, the White House, the Jefferson and Lincoln Memorials, the Pentagon, the National Museums and the Kennedy Center. The marathon was nicknamed the "Marathon of the Monuments."

All entrants received a t-shirt, commemorative patch and officeal program. In addition,. all finshers received a commemorative finisher's medal and completion certificate.

Over 325 awards were given in various categories of competition. The open winner was presented the Middendorf Trophy. Awards were also given through tenth place for men and fifth place for women in all age groups categories.

The Benning team received a team awards for their efforts.



Funding for the Benning team came from AUSA Corporate Member Cliff Livingston, Jr. of Livingston Storage and Transfer Company. His organization donated $1,600 to the team.

There was to be field limit of 11,000 runners but that was surpassed by 1,089.

Several of these runners traveled to the U.S. Army Strategic Defense Command's 30th Anniversary 10K Road Race in Huntsville, Alabama on Oct. 24.

McDonald finished that race with a 32:53, Colon clocked in at 34:14 and Evans ran a 36:50.

New lieutenant has long military background

Becky Orbert
2nd Lt. Thomas E. Hiebert.

By Becky Obert
Bayonet staff writer

2nd Lt. Thomas E. Hiebert looks like any other young soldier attending the Infantry Officer Basic Course. But unlike most of his peers, Hiebert has a leg up on what it takes to be a soldier.

His father served in the Infantry, retiring from the Army in 1980. But prehaps the most important job he held during those years was as a parent, along with wife Patricia, to their six children. Although they didn't know it at the time, the couple were raising six future service members.

Their oldest son Donald, graduated from the Air Force Academy in 1976 and was a pilot until his death in a plane crash in 1983.

Second son Gregory graduated from West Point in 1981, and is currently a company commander with the 82nd Airborne Division at Fort Bragg, N.C.

Third child Theresa completed Army Reserve Officer Training and is now a first lieutenant and nurse. She is presently in advanced training before going to her next assignment at Walter Reed Hospital.

Timothy, fifth-born, is currently a senior at West Point, while their youngest child, Julianne, is a sophmore there.

Thomas is their fourth-born, and graduated from West Point in June in the top ten percentile out of 1,050 students, with a degree in Russian history.
He graduated from IOBC Nov. 2, and started Ranger School last week.

Hiebert said there was no special reason, no grand scheme, that led he and his siblings to join the military.

"My oldest brother, Donald, was a big influence on all of us, since he was the 'man of the house' while my father was in Vietnam," he said. "Donald would have joined the Army if he hadn't been accepted at the Air Force Academy, his first choice."

The family lived in Okinawa, Virginia, Hawaii, Korea and Germany, ending up at Fort Devons, Mass., where his father was assigned when he retired.

"My mother really enjoyed that last assignment, because they'd been stationed at Devons when Donald was born, and because of his father's low rank at the time, they lived in a 'shack'," he said. "She always said she wanted to go back there and live in a big house, and she got her wish," he said.

Despite the frequent moves, Hiebert said he enjoyed his childhood. "Growing up in Korea and Germany was a lot of fun," he said.

And the traveling also gave him a wider range of experiences than most of his classmates in the States. After his father retired, the family settled in Tampa, Fla, and that's where Thomas graduated from high school.

"All the kids I went to high school with had been together since kindergarden and their attitude towards me was, 'who is this guy,'" he said. "But I had traveled more than anybody else, even the ones with wealthy parents."

He applied to West Point through a special application process designed for children of military families. "I also started the process of seeking a Congressional appointment, but didn't have to pursue it since I was accepted the other way," he said.

It was the same way his brothers and sister got into the academy, and he said none of them had any trouble being accepted.

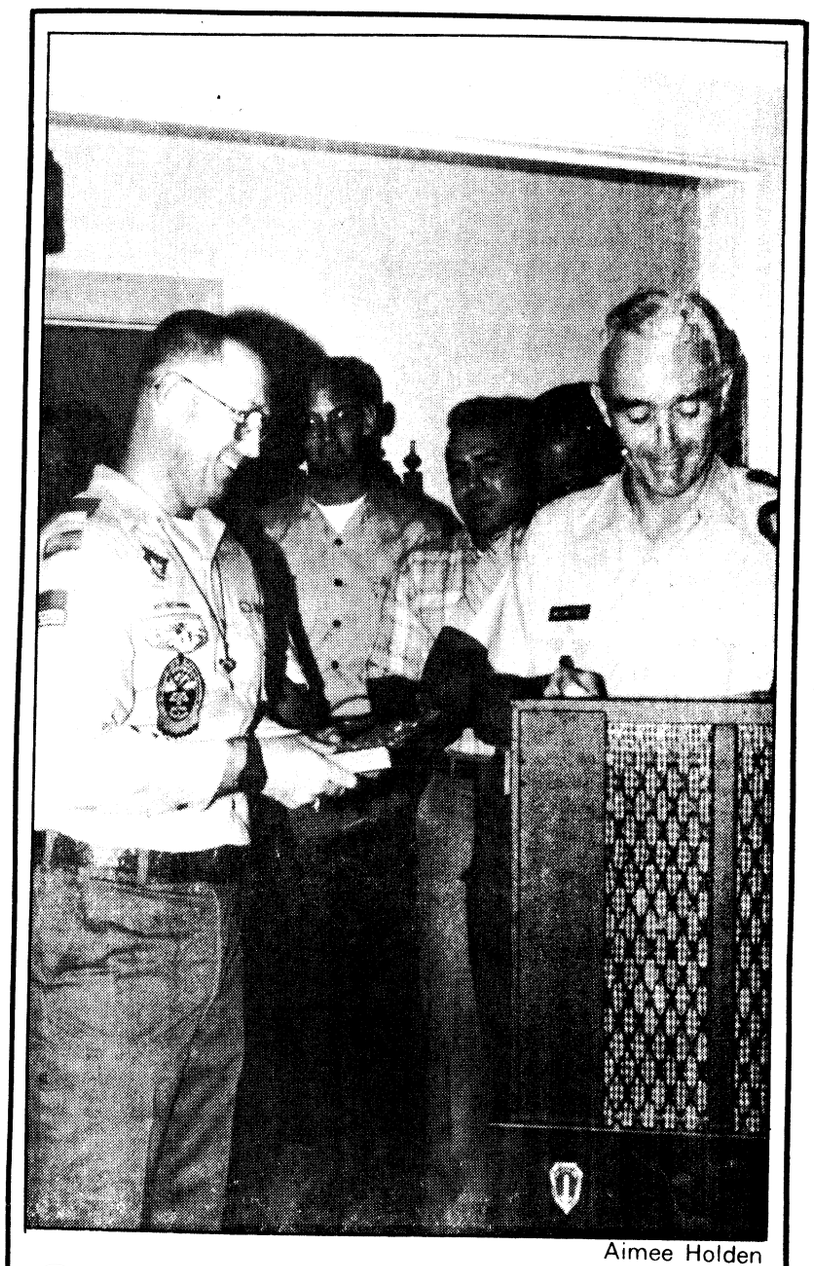
He said he really enjoyed his time at West Point, and that he didn't have that hard a time during his freshman 'plebe' year. "My older brother had given me the word on what to expect, so I knew what to expect," he said.

His brother had been the trainer of the class that served as trainer for Thomas, and unfortunately, they remembered his brother as being tough on them, so they were "kind of tough on me."

Hiebert said the family was brought up to be good Catholics, and that they are all religious in their own way. None of the children smoke or drink, and several have been active in Catholic youth groups.

He said he doesn't want to give the impression that they were perfect, though.

"We fought like cats and dogs when we were kids, but we're a close knit family because of the way we were raised," he said.



He said he joined the Army because he loved the military life he knew as a child. "I thought it would be a good life for me," he said.

"Anywhere you go, inevitably you're going to meet people you know. That's nice, to be part of the Army family," he said.

Hiebert said he had always been fascinated with the Soviet Union, which is why he majored in Russian history in school.

"I became interested because we were hearing about the Soviet threat, and now I'd really love to visit there," he said.

He hopes to attend graduate school and eventually teach history at West Point.

Heating season begins: save energy by preparing home

U.S. Department of Energy

For much of the United States, October marked the beginning of the heating season.

October was also Energy Awareness Month. The theme for this year's campaign was "Energy Security: Our Future Depends on It."

As we trade shorts for long pants and T-shirts for sweaters, each of us can make a personal investment in America's energy security by using energy wisely at home.

Heating our homes in winter and cooling them in summer accounts for about half of total residential energy costs.

Many home energy conservation measures cost nothing at all. Others require that we spend some money to make our homes more energy-efficient, but the money we spend now can help hold down energy costs this winter and for many seasons to come.

While not a comprehensive list, the following energy conservation measures are particularly useful as heating bills begin to rise:

•Reduce the burden on your heating system by limiting the flow of expensive heated air to the outside.

Use kitchen, bath and other ventiliation fans sparingly. In just one hour, these fans can blow away a houseful of warm air. Turn them off as soon as they have done their job.

Keep your fireplace damper tightly closed unless you have a fire going. An open damper in a 48-inch square fireplace can release up to eight percent of your heat out of the chimney.

When using your fireplace, open the closest window about ½ to 1 inch; air needed by the fire will be provided by the open window and the amount of heated air drawn from the rest of the house will be reduced.

You can test your windows and doors for air-tightness by carefully moving a lighted candle near the frames and sashes. If the flame dances around you need caulking and/or weather-stripping.

It's fairly easy to do the job yourself. Materials should cost about $25 for an average house having 12 windows and two doors. Savings in annual energy costs could amount to 10 percent or more.

•Consider installing storm windows and doors. Depending on the climate where you live and the way you heat your home, storm windows can be both energy-efficient and convenient.

Combination screen and storm windows (triple-track glass combination) can be opened easily when there is no need to run heating or cooling equipment.

Inexpensive alernatives range from a heavy-duty, clear plastic sheet on a frame (about $10-$15 each) to clear plastic film which can be taped to the inside of window frames (a total of about $10 for an average home). Savings in reduced space heating costs for any of these types of protection can amount to as much as 15 percent a year.

Adding storm doors in very cold (or warm) climates can increase these savings.

•Insulate your attic floor or top floor ceiling to reduce winter heat loss (and summer heat gain).

No matter how you heat or cool your home, you can reduce the load on your equipment by as much as 30 percent by investing in insulation.

Your exact needs will depend on your climate and the amount of insulation you already have. For guidance, consult with a reputable insulation dealer in your community or with your local building inspector or county agent.

Find out about "R-values" before you buy your insulation materials; they indicate the resistance, of and insulation material, to winter heat loss or summer heat gain.

Costs can vary from $100 to $1000; savings should range from five percent, if you are adding to current insulation, to as much as 30 percent if you have no insulation at present.

•Lower your thermostat to about 65-degrees Farenheit during the day and about 60 degrees at night. You will save energy and money for every degree you reduce the average temperature in your home.

Consider the advantages of a clock "set-back" thermostat for your heating system. The clock thermostat will turn the heat down automatically at a regular hour before you retire and turn it up again before you wake. While you can certainly remember to do this yourself, the convenience and comfort of an automatic clock thermostat may be worth the $40 to $90 cost to you.

Caution: When setting your thermostat back, remember that some older people may require higher indoor temperatures — avove 65 degrees at all times — to avoid accidental hypothermia, a possibly fatal drop in body temperature. Individuals with circulatory problems or those taking certain drugs (e.g. phenothiazines) may also be vulnerable. In such cases, follow a physicians counsel on thermostat settings.

•Keep your heating equipment operating efficiently. Clean or replace the filter in your forced air heating system each month, and check the duct work for air leaks about once a year. To do this yourself, feel around the duct joints for escaping air when the fan is on; repair leaks with duct tape.

Insulate heating ducts in unheated areas.

Keep the heating system well tuned with periodic maintenance by a professional service. Have your oil furnace serviced at least once a year. It can save you 10 percent in fuel consumption.

Be sure to ask the service person to determine if the "firing rate" is correct. Chances are that it's not. A recent survey found that a large majority of furnaces checked were overfired and wasting valuable fuel.

Remember: By saving energy you are making a personal investment in America's energy security.

Saving energy saves dollars and makes sense — for each of us individually and for all of us as a nation.

Spencer JROTCs conduct "Raider" training

By Carol Wells
Spencer High School

Trick-or-treaters were not the only ones out Halloween night. Spencer High School JROTC "Raiders" were also out, only they were not looking for candy.

The weekend of Oct. 30 - Nov. 1 marked the traditional survival training exercise for Spencer's elite group of JROTC Cadets.

Cadets desiring admission into the Raider program must undergo a series of tests and pass them all. All the cadets that showed up passed. They all stuck out the entire two days and two nights.

Some of the events which took place were: How to distinguish edible plants, procedure for making fires, preparing live game for consumption and night and day road marching.

These are just a few of the skills that are acquired by the cadets. But the most important thing learned was how to depend on ingenuity to survive on your own.

Rangers from Fort Benning showed up to teach eager Raiders a program geared toward learning many of the skills of a Rangers.

Barbecuing a goat was the highlight of the FTX and everyone learned how to skin, clean, and cook either a rabbit or a chicken.

Unlike the Rangers, Raiders are made up of both male and female participants. Out of the 51, 12 were females, with Melissa Baker is the current Raider company commander.

Sunday morning everyone gathered their gear and, after a short church service performed by Chaplin (Maj.) Langford, marched from the Columbus College Outdoor Education Center to Spencer High School.

All returned safely and look forward to the next test so they can be that much closer to receiving their tab.

"I worked hard to get my tab because I have pride in what it stands for," said David Wheeler, JROTC Raider, "It stands for dignity, pride, integrity and a lot more. But most of all it stands for the cream of the crop, the "Raiders."

Spencer High places sixth in Mercer math tournament

By T. Richard Cummings
Spencer High School

Mercer University sponsored it's annual math tournament on Oct. 31. The tournament began at 10 a.m. with 16 high schools participating. Each school was allowed up to eight members on a team.

Spencer High's Math Club, sponsored by Ms. Kay Warman and Mrs. Joycd Lee, attended the tournament.

Participants took a 45-question written test with a 90 minute time limit, and a ciphering exam which lasted one hour. Both parts consisted mostly of geometry, but ranged up to calculus.

Spencer's top scorer was Richard Eickler, who placed 7th out of more than 100 students, with a score of 150 out of a possible 225.

The team included Oliver Ackerman, placing 10th; Dan MacNeill, 14th, Scott Nunez, 20th, Besheivah Omar, Clay Davis, Lisa Roberts and Saul Hernandez.

After the judges averaged the scores of all the teams, Spencer came in 6th overall. Their next competition is the Woodward Academy Tournament on Dec. 12.

Baxter to speak at OWC luncheon

Officers' Wives Club

The OWC is having a brunch on Nov. 18 at 10:30 a.m. at the Fort Benning Officers' Club. The program titled "Williamsburg Arrangements for the Holidays" will feature Ms. Becky Baxter, floral designer for the Georgia Governor's Mansion.

Becky has been arranging flowers for over 20 years and is a national lecturer and leading authority on floral design and herb preservation.

Her unique creations are recognized throughout the state as a trademark that personifies the best in southern elegance and tradition.

Ms. Baxter is an exalted member at large of many botanical societies throughout the United States. Her designs at the Mansion have become known across the state as the hallmark symbol of the Mansion's reputation for true Southern hospitality.

Recently, since her appointment at the Mansion, she has limited her speaking engagments to a select few and we feel privileged that she is taking the time to add beauty to our lives.

During the Holiday season, a small staff of gardenders assist Becky in transforming the entire Mansion into a "Winter Wonderland".

Last year "Southern Accents" magazine featured Becky's creation in its holiday issue.

During the program, Becky will demonstrate her talents by making three traditional Williamsburg arrangements that best represent that early colonial look for the holidays. The arrangements will then be the door prizes.

The OWC will also say farewell to Jill McCaffrey at this function. Please join us in thanking her for the generous support and concern that she always gave to the OWC by your attendance.

"JIM WAS MORE THAN OUR SPONSOR. HE WAS LIKE A BIG BROTHER."

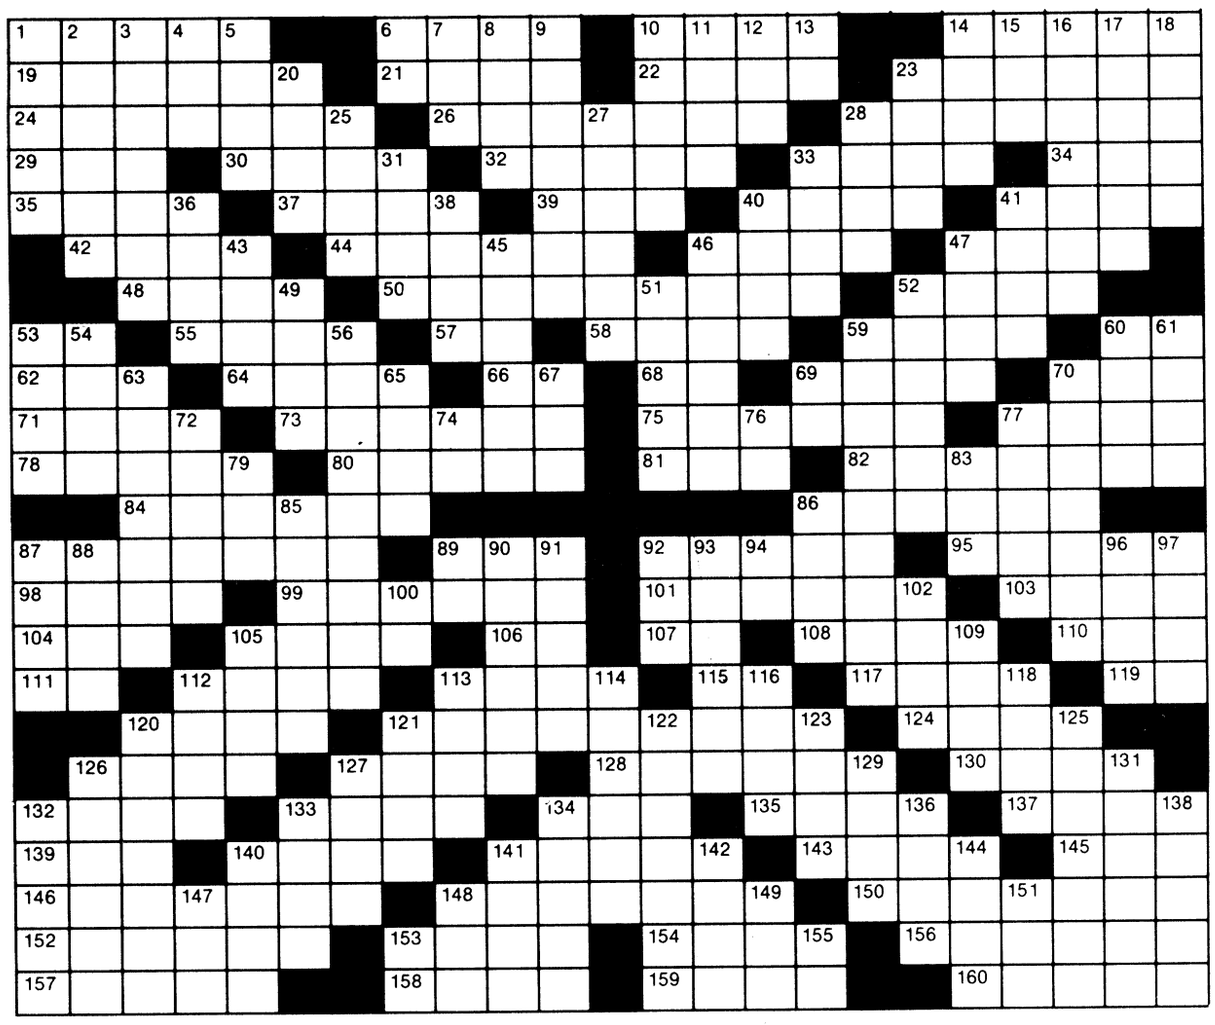
SGT Loyd Thompson, Jr. and his wife Belinda.

"The night we pulled into Fort Hood, Belinda was pregnant, and we were tired, homeless and low on funds. But thanks to Staff Sergeant Jim Perry, we weren't alone.

"Jim helped us out in so many ways. Finding a place to live. Moving in. Helping Belinda find a job. Getting Jessalyn into the child care center.

Straightening out my pay problem. He really pointed the way.

"He showed us how the system worked and what it was all about. And he never expected anything in return except for me to do a good job.



"I think if you've had a good experience, you want to repay it. When I become a Sponsor, I hope I can do as good a job as Jim."

The Army Sponsorship Program grows in scope and importance as, each day, new Sponsors join the Program and soldiers and their families who have been sponsored in the past reach out to help others. It's all part of the Army Family Action Plan in action.

Candido named volunteer of the quarter

By Aimee R. Holden
Bayonet staff writer

Aimee Holden

Kathy Candido is honored by Maj. Gen. Kenneth C. Leuer as the "Voluteer of the Quarter."

Kathy Candido, chairman of the Fort Benning Thrift Shop, was named post Volunteer of the Quarter at a ceremony Monday.

Maj. Gen. Kenneth C. Leuer, post commander, presented the award to Candido, and said he was very grateful for the help of all Fort Benning volunteers.

Jim Gallagher, president of the AUSA Chattahoochee Valley/Fort Benning Chapter, presented her with a $50 check from the chapter.

Candido will also be the first recipient of the award to make use of a parking place in front of the commissary designated for Volunteer of the Quarter.

"I'm getting this award because of all the volunteers," Candido said. "I should tear it into a thousand pieces and give a piece to everyone. They make me look good."

The award ceremony was combined with a ribbon cutting ceremony, which marked the official opening of the newly renovated Thrift Shop.

The renovation was a major project for Candido and the rest of the volunteers. Candido worked in conjunction with the Directorate of Engineering and Housing and several other groups to make much-needed improvements on the Thrift Shop facilities.

"The renovation allowed us to have better conditions for both the workers and the shoppers," Candido said. "Safety was a big concern during the project because the building was so old and the weight was improperly distributed. But the work was completed with no injuries. A lot of work and hours were put in by people who cared," she said.

Candido has been chairman of the Thrift Shop for about 18 months. She is also on the Tot Town Board and is a member of the Officers' Wives Club.

At the Thrift Shop alone, she logs over 100 hours a month. She says it is not quite that much at Tot Town.

"She puts in more hours than anyone I've ever seen," said Beth Light, a fellow volunteer.

Candido said her career as a volunteer began in 1973 at the Fort Jackson, S.C., Thrift Shop.

"I enjoy giving and learning," Candido said. "The Thrift Shop is a convenient place to get involved with people and the community. And I think once you get involved you find that you can't give it up. I love it here."

"She definitely deserves that parking space," said Maggie Siegfried, Fort Benning volunteer coordinator.

Cote top woman in Post Biathlon for second time

Runners begin the long race to the finish line in the Fort Benning Biathlon.

Ann M. McDonald

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet Staff Writer

Lise Cote of MEDDAC captured the women's crown in the Fort Benning Biathlon for the second year in a row last Saturday.

Cote, an intern at Family Practice, completed the grueling course with a time of 2:06:19.

She attributed her success to good training and making sure she did it for enjoyment. "When I stop having fun I won't do it anymore," she said.

"It was a good course," Cote added. "The weather was perfect, you didn't get so hot on the run that it made it uncomfortable when you got on your bicycle in the wind."

Johanna Gabbard with Occupational Therapy said that they experimented with the race this year by adding some miles and making it a five mile run with the additional 30 mile bike ride following.

"Most of the participants gave rave reviews of the race," Gabbard said, "so we consider it a success."

Gabbard said that over 200 people particpated in the third annual race, which is up a considerable amount from last year.

Overall winners are as follows:

Men's Division
Jeff Morales	1:45:32
Edward Strack	1:48:55
Richard Fawcett	1:49:37
Women's Division
Lise Cote	2:06:19

Hashing appears on post as new physical training activity

By Sally Roberts
197th Inf. Bde. Correspondent

Just when you thought that you have played every sport and that there are no more games to add variety to unit physical training, Hashing appears on the scene.

Hashing is a sport that has surfaced in the 197th Infantry Brigade, thanks to Capt. Dean F. Gemberling, a dedicated hasher in the 197th Support Battalion.

Gemberling learned the sport while stationed at Fort Eustis, Va., introduced it to several prospective hashers at work here, and carried on "a fun, social athletic event" within the Brigade.

The Hash legend goes back some 50 years and according to a set of Rules and Regulations smuggled here from Fort Eustis, the tradition began with the best of sports.

The Hash House Harriers were founded as a gentlemen's non-athletic running club in Kuala Lampur, capital of Malaya, in 1937. Some British ex-patriots, mainly government employees and plantation managers, became alarmed by their ever increasing girths and lack of breathable wind.

They were all members of the Selangor Club, the city's main club, and frequently ate their meals there. The club became known among them as the Hash House.

During a moment of post-prandial well-being, it was decided that they really should take some form of gentle exercise. Rather than just running, it was decided that the ancient British sport of Harrying (chasing hares with hounds) should be the basis of the exercise, with club members replacing the hares and hounds and a trail of paper in place of scent. So, the Hash House Harriers were born.

There was a sad lapse of Hashing in Malaya during 1941-45 because some Japanese gentlemen did not want to play. But in 1946, survivors of that particular war soon had the Hash going again and to this day it still flourishes.

Subsequently the sport spread through Singapore to Hong Kong and to Brunei and Kuching (in Borneo). It was taken back to Britain in 1968 and from there it spread again to Europe. It was brought over to the United States by a British Exchange Officer assigned to Fort Eustis.

HASHHOW

Hashers meet at a prearranged location each week. Hashes are never cancelled for weather, lack of weather, famine, pestilence, death or even cosmic cataclysm.

Having assembled at the H3 sign, the Hashmaster rules on the lead time to be given to the two volunteer (or sometimes pressed) hares. On his signal, the gallant duo scamper off leaving behind them a trail of arrows drawn on cards or marked in chalk. It is up to the judgement of the hares how many arrows will be laid, but they must never be laid more than 100 meters apart on roads or well defined tracks, nor more than 50 meters apart in close country.

They may lay up to five false trails, but the start of such deception must always be marked by a double headed arrow. The true trail must be started again within 100 meters of the double headed marker (50 meters in close country) never more, seldom less. Every change of direction must be clearly marked. Any aid to speed used by the hares must also be available to the hounds.

The hares normally finish at the start (or even start at the finish) but do not have to do so. They must always inform the Hashmaster of the point at which they intend to finish before laying the trail. This prevents cornered hares from declaring an instant and premature end of the trail.

Hares do sometimes lay inferior trails and they occasionally get caught. The penalty in either case is to be dumped into the nearest body of water; and that can be tough in mid-winter.

So much for the hares, now for the illustrious pack of hounds.

At the master's signal, the mad dash begins. The hounds abound upon the trail of the hares with swiftness of speed and to the strange accompaniment of unusual cries (see Hash-words).

It is the duty of all hounds to maintain verbal contact with the main pack and to help any stragglers having uncommon difficulties.

Hounds must follow the trail (but this does no preclude short-cutting) unless the hares are seen. In this case the shortest, most direct route can be taken in order to catch the hares.

HASH WORDS

ON—ON: The cry of the hound every time an arrow is found.

BACK—BACK: What you shout when you find the start of a false trail.

ARE YOU?: What you shout if you can't find an arrow.

CHECKING: Your answer to Are You?

BOAGA—BOAGA: Which means "Be off and go away; I'm up to something or someone, and the last thing I want is to be found."

HARE—HARE: What you should cry when you see a hare on the run.

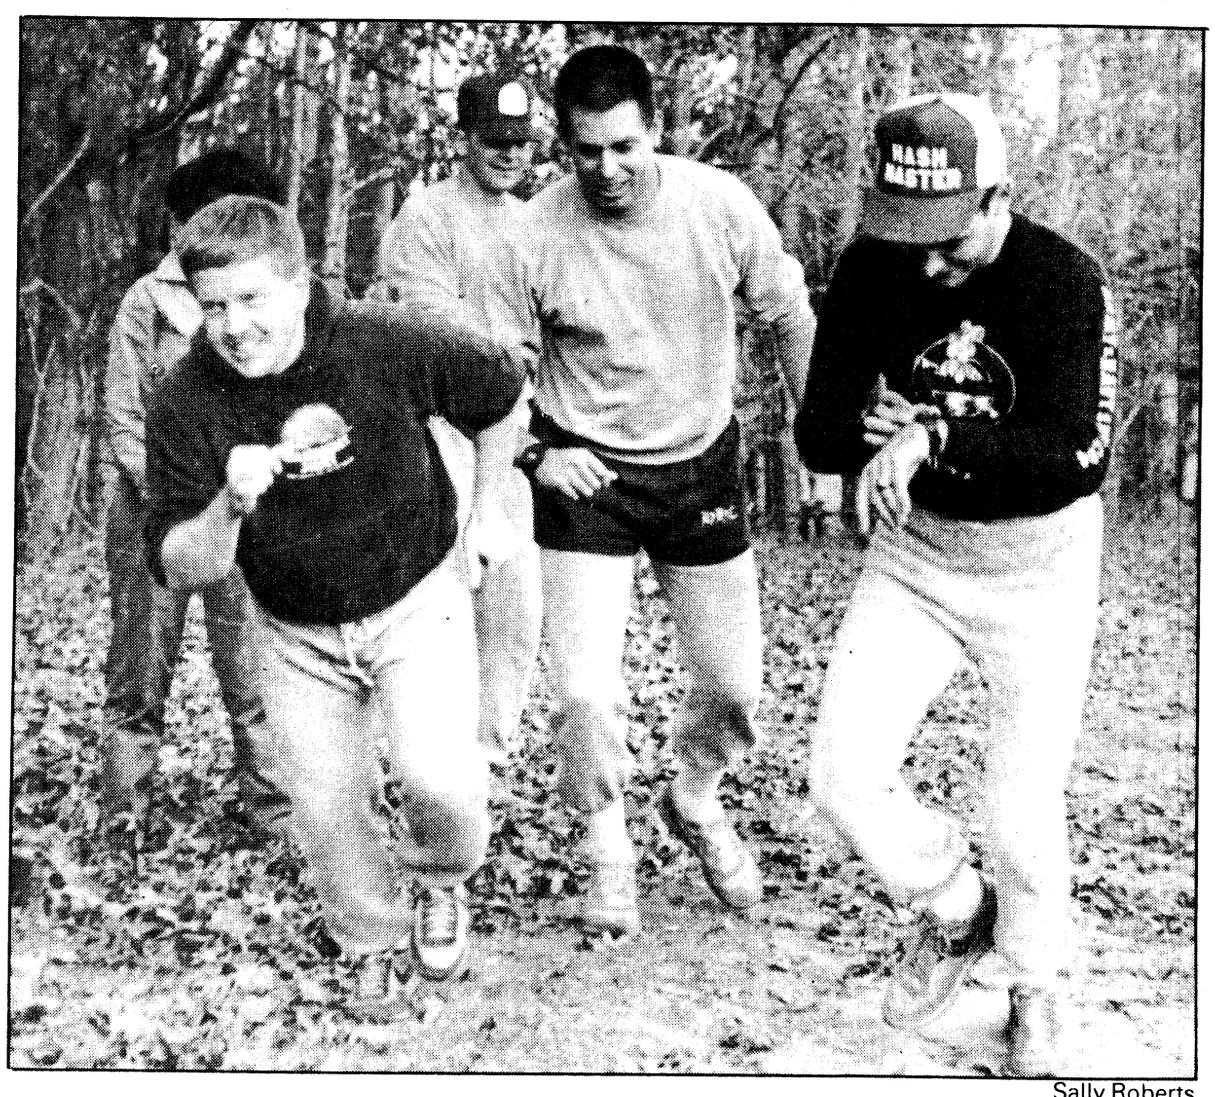
GASH: The little known God of Hashing

GNASH: The penalty of infuriating Gash, a dunking of hares by the pack into the nearest body of water. Hares infuriate GASH by: cheating while laying trail; laying a bad tail; being caught, or any other offense determined by the Trail-Trial.

TRAIL—TRIAL: Held to decide questions of approval or disapproval of hares' performance.

H3: Abbreviation of Hash House Harriers. The start point of the meet and usually the finish. Frequently indicates the location of refreshments.

HASH SPLASH: Noise made errant hare entering nearest body of water.



HASH CRASH: Noise made by errant hare when striking ice when entering nearest body of water in winter.

HASH RASH: Normally caused by poisen ivy or poisen oak.

HASH GASH: Not to be confused with afore said god. This is from which blood freely flows from unprotected Hash legs after moving through close undergrowth.

OH SUGAR: Utterance of Hasher wallowing up to eyeballs in unexpected shiggy pit.

The group of Hashers at last week's Hash on Kelley Hill feel that the sport is catching on and may soon become a weekly event. According to 1st Lt. Katie Jacobson, last week's hare, from the 197th Support Battalion, "the Hare gets to pick the Hare for the next Hash. Lt. Col. Wilson are you ready?"

"Long Rifles" shoot for turkeys

By Curtis R. Stables
Muscogee Long Rifles

Wait! Don't buy that Thanksgiving turkey or Christmas ham yet. Why pay good money for what you can win at the Muscogee Long Rifles' annual muzzle-loading turkey shoot?

The shoot will be held on Nov. 21 and 22 at a range located 30 miles from Fort Benning. The cost will be $3 for registration and $1 per shot.

You can win a turkey or a ham with every shot (if you want to bad enough).

The shoot will be conducted the same as the ones Great Granddad used to attend. Only muzzle loading rifles will be used. Yep, that's right, just like Daniel Boone, FSSSST—Boom!

You don't own a rifle? That's not a problem, we will loan you one.

You say that you don't shoot? Come out any way. Country McWilliams will be there demonstrating blacksmithing skills. Jan Stables will display her hand woven woolen goods. Many of the shooters will be wearing buckskin and living in pre-1840 shelters.

There is free camping on the site, but you must bring your own water.

The club will feed Bar-B-Q to all registered shooters on Saturday night. Entertainment will no doubt follow the feed.

All shooting will be done off-hand using traditional percussion or flint lock rifles. You will see many Kentucky long rifles, southern squirrel rifles, and Hawkins'.

The following matches will be shot:

Split the ball on an axe blade at only 25 yards and win a turkey.

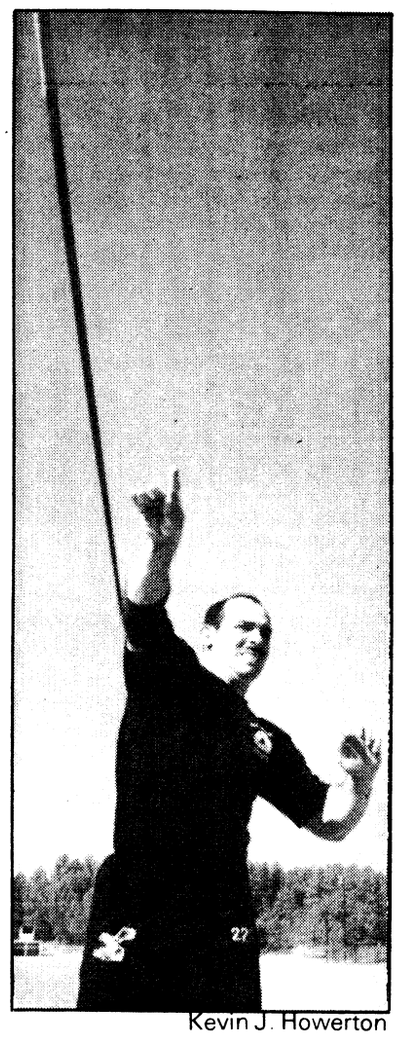
At 35 yards will be a Ham on a string. When you cut the string the ham is yours.

Shoot the Feather off of Tonto's head, with out hitting Tonto, and win.

There will be a 65-yard-over the-log match. This is a continuous re-entry match, shooting at an X.

Out at 75 yards will be a rotating turkey. The prize, of course, will be a turkey.

The turkeys and hams come clean and store packaged so you can spend all of your time having fun.



Come out for a day, or spend the weekend. Whether you come to shoot or give the kids a history lesson, you will experience a real old time turkey shoot. See those legendary American riflemen test their skills with the rifles that tamed this land.

To get there:

Soldier pursues title in All-Army Javelin

By Kevin J. Howerton
197th Inf. Bde. Correspondent

Kevin J. Howerton

Ernie J. Fradella takes a practice throw with the javelin at Essenbagger Field.

In ancient time, warriors competed to see who could throw a spear the farthest.

The spear has evolved into the modern javelin, a metal tipped, eight-and-a-half-foot shaft that weighs a mere 28.2-ounces. But as always, the competition is won not by what is thrown, but how it is thrown, and who does the throwing like PFC Ernie J. Fradella of Company E., 1st Battalion, 58th Infantry.

"Technique is the big thing in throwing the javelin," says Fradella, "you have to have strength as well as flexibility to get good distance."

Fradella knows what he is talking about. In the past four years, he has competed in dozens of track and field meets across the United States and Europe, throwing the javelin as far as 222.5 feet.

He has always been a good athlete. In high school, he was voted the most valuable player of his football league, and was a starting running back for Azusa Pacific University in southern California. It was while he was studying recreational therapy and social work at the university that he first got into javelin throwing.

"Football season had ended, and I saw some guys throwing a javelin one day and decided to try it," said Fradella. "I wasn't very good at it, and I had almost decided to quit."

Fradella went on to explain that Jim Wagner, a quadrapalegic that he was caring for, was the one who inspired him to continue throwing.

"He started building hope in me, kept telling me things like - If you believe you can do it, you can do it," he said, "I kept trying and trying. The first track meet I went to, I got the second farthest throw in the state of California at the junior college level."

During the summers of '85 and '86, Fradella was a member of the Summer U.S. Allstar Team. This was a team of collegiate athletes that toured Europe. He competed in Poland, Czechoslovakia, Hungary, Austria, West Germany, and Rumania.

"The Allstar Team was a great experience for me," he said, "the environment in communist countries is so different from our own, it seems shallow and blah. The people are skeptical at first, but once they get to know you, they become very friendly and outgoing."

Fradella continued to practice with the javelin after enlisting in the Army.

"When I joined the Army, my motivation went up to a different level, I've become intensely motivated toward reaching my goals," he recalls.

This motivation helped Fradella to qualify for the All Army Track and Field Team, and to go to the Armed Forces Championship last summer, where he placed forth.

"The games were highly competitive, and developed into a rivalry between the Army and the Air Force," he said. "Members on the team that I had never met before were helping me or cheering me on. In the end, it was Air Force 87 points, Army 86."

Fradella plans to go to the Armed Forces Championship again next summer.

"This year I hope to place first or second," he said. "It's going to be a grudge match between the Amry and Air Force, a grueling battle to the finish. But this time, I believe we can win."

SPORTS SHORTS

YA Basketball sign-up begins

YA Basketball registration will begin Nov. 30 and continue through Dec. 11.

Children 8-15 years old of active duty or retired military personnel may register. Birth certificates or ID cards will be required.

Sign-up will be conducted Monday through Friday from 8 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. at the Youth Activities, building 1056, on McIver Street.

Basketball coaches and cheerleders are also needed for the up-coming season. For more information on coaching requirements and player registration call 545-3070 or 3913.

Army soccer team picked

Thirty-three soldiers from around the world are vying for 18 positions on the all-Army soccer team at trials being held at Fort Dix, N.J.

Once selected for the team, members will travel to Camp Lejeune, N.C., to take part in the inter-service tournament Nov. 14-21.

If the Army beats the other services, the team will then travel to Orlando, Fla, for the U.S. Soccer Federation Senior Cup Tournament Nov. 24-27.

Cadets triumph over Temple

U.S. Military Academy cadet Otto Leone completed his only pass of the day, a 64-yarder to cadet Mark Charette in the third quarter, helping Army break a four-game losing streak with a 17-7 triumph over Temple University.

Leone had entered the game in the first quarter after cadet Brian McWilliams left the contest with a broken finger on his passing hand.

Golf tournament held in Eufaula

The Fort Benning Chapter of the Virginia Military Institute Association, held its' annual Founders Day Golf Tournament at the Lakepoint Resort Golf Course in Eufaula, Alabama recently.

Dick Vogel, of Fort Benning, won the overall low gross award, Hank Quizgnberry, of Enterprise, Alabama, won the low net awards, Stephen Chadwick was the low junior golfer, and Debbie Vogel and Lynn Chadwick were first and second in the ladies division.

The highlight of the tournament was the keen competition for the worst golfer award. This was a hard fought battle between Duane Williams, Steve Chadwick and Steve Tennant. Tennant won the dubious honor based on a scorecard playoff.

Hunter safety classes offered

Persons born on or after Jan. 1, 1961, desiring to hunt in Georgia or on the Fort Benning Reservation, must complete a State Hunting Safety class. DEH announces changes to regs

All hunter should be aware that the following changes to paragraph 17a of USAIC Regulation 210-2, Installation Hunting and Fishing Regulation have been made pertaining to rifle areas:

1. Delete areas A-7 and A-8. These areas will remain shotgun hunting only.
2. Change A-3 to A-2. Area A-3 will remain a bow hunting only area.

For more information about these changes contact DEH at 544-6120.

Deleted names added to NIM Run standings

The following names were not included in last weeks standings for the National Infantry Museum Run:

Men's 50-54
3rd Stan Shaneyfeld	33:52
Men's 55 and over
1st Gill Fagnon	35:55
2nd Mark Sternberg	1:16:03

According to Bernie Pfeiffer, race coordinator, Sternberg is the oldest active runner in the Columbus area at age 76.

Hunter call in/out program in effect

A new system for requesting hunting areas on Fort Benning is in use this year for those authorized to hunt on the military reservation.

Through Jan.14, 1988, a call-in/call-out system will be used, replacing last year's system of physically signing in and signing out.

In order to call in and out, hunters on Fort Benning must register at the Outdoor Recreation Administration, building 247 on Ingersoll Street, where they will receive the necessary information including regulations and a numbered access pass. State hunting licenses may be purchased there.

The new Hunter control call-in/call-out number is 682-1589 and will be operational from 4 a.m. until 8 p.m., seven days a week. The military number is 545-7680; however, there is only one line for use from range safety phones.

This is how the new system works: When the number is dialed and the call answered, the hunter gives his access pass number and hunting area requested. Hunters should have an alternate choice, should the first one be full. Once verified by the operator, the hunter may proceed to the hunting area requested.

Call-ins may be made as early as noon the day before the hunt.

When leaving the hunting area for the day, the hunter should again call Hunter Control for verification. This can be accomplished from a range phone or after arrival at home or other destination, providing the call is made before 8 p.m.

Infantry Center regualtions require Fort Benning hunters to check range clearance maps before hunting on post.

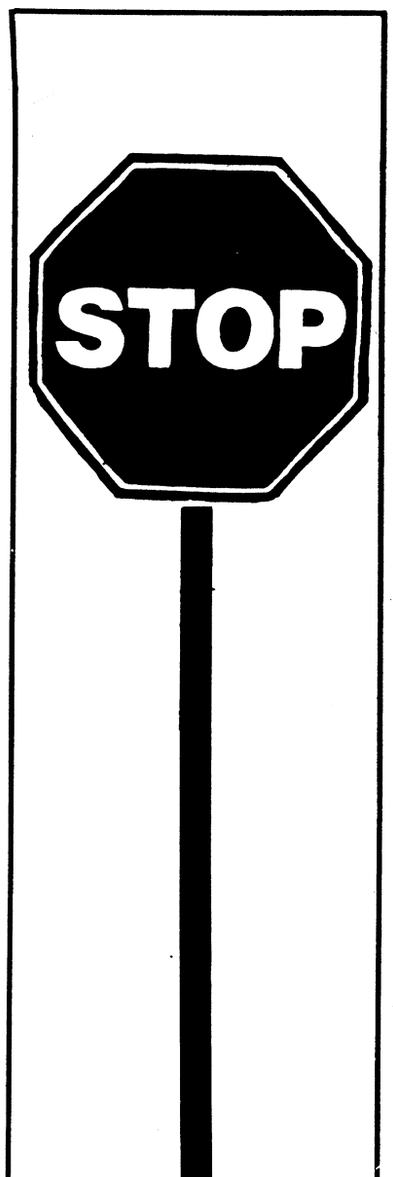
Hunters reminded of deer bag limit

The maximum number of deer that my be killed by any person by any means on the entire Fort Benning Military Reservation is three (3), one (1) of which must be antlerless.

It is legal to kill three does provided they are taken during dates on which either sex hunting is authorized.

Under no conditions shall any person take more than two (2) bucks during the entire season.

Uchee area suspends hunting license sales



State licenses and post permits will no longer be sold at the Uchee Creek Recreation Area on weekends and holidays. This change is due to construction of a new bait shop. State licenses and post permits will be available from the Outdoor Recreation Administration Office, Monday-Friday, 8 a.m. to 4:30 p.m..

Aerobics classes offered at Audie Murphy and bldg 4

Aerobics classes are conducted on Monday, Wednesday and Friday at 9 a.m. in Audie Murphy Fitness Center and on Monday, Wednesday and Friday at noon and 7 p.m. in building 4 Fitness Center. The cost is $12 per month. For more information call 545-1940.

The Follow Me Golf Course closes first monday of month

The Golf course, pro shop, storage area and club house will be closed the first Monday of every month begining Nov. 2.

Juvenile crime prompts action

By Becky Obert
Bayonet Staff Writer

One family has been ordered to vacate government quarters, and several more are scheduled to show cause why they should not do so, the result of not controlling their children.

At least one juvenile has been excluded from post for criminal activities, and more expulsions could follow, officials said.

The latest actions were the result of a rash of juvenile crimes in recent weeks, which range from shoplifting to assault.

"Parents are not controlling their children properly," said Col. Conrad Boterweg, Director of Personnel and Community Activities. "When children are repeatedly picked up by the military police, then they are not being controlled properly."

Boterweg said as a result of the latest trouble with juveniles, the military police are adding foot patrols and additional vehicle patrols in the housing areas.

They have instructions to pick up any juveniles who are caught violating Fort Benning's midnight to 5 a.m. curfew. The curfew applies to military dependents under the age of 18. Any dependents who are out after midnight must be accompanied by a parent or guardian. Those found violating the curfew will be picked up by the MPs and taken to the station, and their parents will be called.

Youths found to be frequent violators of the curfew could face stiffer action, Boterweg said, as could their parents.

On the second offense, the DPCA initiates action. "At this point, it is possible that the sponsor's commander will be notified, and failure to control dependents could lead to expulsion from post," he said.

Dependents who have a prior record for other offences, such as shoplifting or larceny, will be dealt with more severely, he said.

Juveniles who are repeated offenders can be turned over to civilian authorities at the Juvenile Court downtown. There they face penalties ranging from probation to jail time.

Lesser offenses are dealt with by the Adolescent Advisory Council on post, made up of representatives of Social Work Services, Community Life, MEDDAC, ACS, Schools, JAG and the MPs. They consider the case and recommend what action the commanding general should take.

For lesser crimes, they may recommend that the child spend so many hours working in community service jobs, raking leaves, mowing lawns, planting flower beds, etc.

More serious offenses are referred to the Juvenile Court.

Boterweg said that part of the problem is that children are not being taught that they are responsible for their actions.

"Many youth have never had to pay for the results of their actions, so we give them that opportunity," he said.

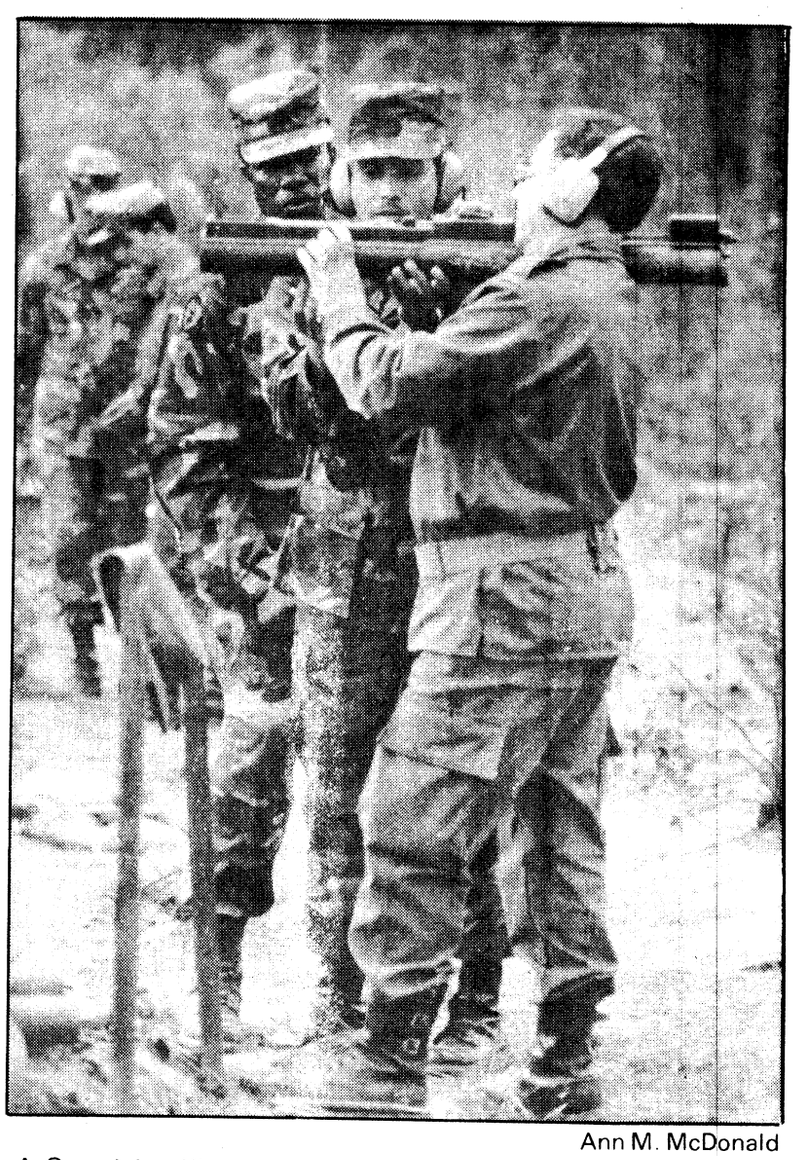
The bottom line is that this type of activity is not going to be tolerated on post, he said.

Capt. Richard McCaughey, officer in charge of the Military Police Investigations Section, said that his office is simply a reporting agency.

"We get involved with kids because of complaints by concerned citizens, or as a result of on duty patrols or information gained from investigations. Others are referred for shoplifting at the PX," he said.

Once they are involved, the child is brought in, the parents are called and then the child's right are read.

"We don't decide the child's innocence or guilt, we just investigate," he said. "If the child waives his or her rights, then we question him or her about the incident and then he or she is released to the parents.



Many parents deny that their children have done anything wrong. "Parents cannot believe that their children could do something bad, and they feel that we (MPs) are the bad guys," he said. "But we are simply investigating a complaint, trying to gather information."

Once a child has been released to his or her parents, the next step is to notify the commander of the sponsor, who may face disciplinary action under the UCMJ for failure to control a dependent.

"It's up to individual commanders to decide what actions to take at this point, whether a counseling statement or Article 15," McCaughey said.

The Adolescent Advisory Committee is also informed about the incident and may order the child to perform some type public service work, or recommend that the case be turned over to local juvenile authorities.

Youths who continually end up in trouble could be sentenced to a youth detention facility by local authorities, McCaughey said.

Companies waive deposits

By Becky Obert
Bayonet staff writer

Soldiers with good credit won't have to pay deposits to get utilities turned on when they move to the area.

Eloise Enke, chief of the Housing Referral Office, said "If you have never had credit or have a good credit history, they will waive the deposit."

The Housing Office is working on a plan to have a one-stop service office in Splinter Village, where soldiers can go to get their water, gas, phone and electricity turned on.

"Southern Bell is already here, located in Building 2637, and the other companies have expressed an interest in the idea," she said.

Enke said that plans include having full-service offices on post, where soldiers could pay their utility bills, have service turned on and have any problems they encounter resolved.

"It makes it better for the service member to have the office on post, where it's easy to find," she said.

The Alabama Gas Corporation recently notified Enke that they will not be locating a payment office on post, although they will waive deposits for soldiers who meet credit requirements.

Glenice Myers, chief of the Real Estate Section, DEH, who has also been working on the project, said that with the exception of the gas company, "Everybody else will be located here."

She said everyone has been very cooperative and interested in the idea, which is basically just a way to serve military customers better.

"It is a simpler, more efficient way to get checked in on post, a one-stop office," she said.

While the office had originally been projected to be open for business Dec. 15, Myers said it probably won't be fully operational until early next year.

Anti-armor capabilities discussed by U.S., Spain

By Aimee R. Holden
Bayonet staff writer

Five officers from the Spanish Army met this week with U.S. officers to exchange information about their armies' anti-armor capability.

The exchange was the fourth in the Spanish/U.S. Subject Matter Expert Exchange Program series, which began in May 1985.

Participants spent the mornings in classroom discussion. In the afternoon, they were taken to ranges where the Spanish officers were given a chance to fire anti-armor weapons.

"We wanted them to have the opportunity to fire a whole army of infantry anti-armor weapons," Maj. Jack Whalen, the program coordinator, said.

In addition to gaining hands-on experience with the weapons, the Spanish officers will witnessed a live-fire capability excercise.

Col. Garcia-Calleja, of the Spanish Army, said that he was very impressed with Fort Benning and the U.S. Army in general.

"It is magnificant," Calleja said. "We are pleasantly surprised about the size, activities and people of Fort Benning.

"Our short stay here has given us an idea of the U.S. Army, which, until now, we had only heard about. The readiness and capability of the U.S. has been proved to us," he said.The U.S. Army was represented by officers from the Infantry School, the Armor School, the Aviation School, the Combined Arms Center, the 29th Infantry Regiment and the School of the Americas.

The 29th Infantry Regiment hosted the SMEE. Previous exchanges have been held in Jaca, Spain; Fort Campbell, Ky. and Toledo, Spain.

The SMEEs are held every six months, and the topic is usually chosen by the visiting party.

Apollo astronaut pins Ranger Tab on son

USAIC Public Affairs Office

A former "smoke jumper" turned astronaut pinned the Ranger Tab on his son last week on Todd Field.

Retired Colonel Stuart A. Roosa, Apollo XVI command module pilot, was here to see his son, Stuart Jr., graduate Ranger School. The younger Roosa is presently assigned to Fort Polk, La.

Stuart Jr. is the fourth member of the Roosa family to choose a military career. His brother John is an Air Force Captain, while brother Christopher is captain in the Marine Corps.

According to Roosa, the fact that each of his sons chose a different branch of the service doesn't bother him a bit.

"As a matter of fact," he said, "I believe it shows that I didn't influence them in any way."

The newly pinned Ranger said their father's career didn't effect them much as children either.

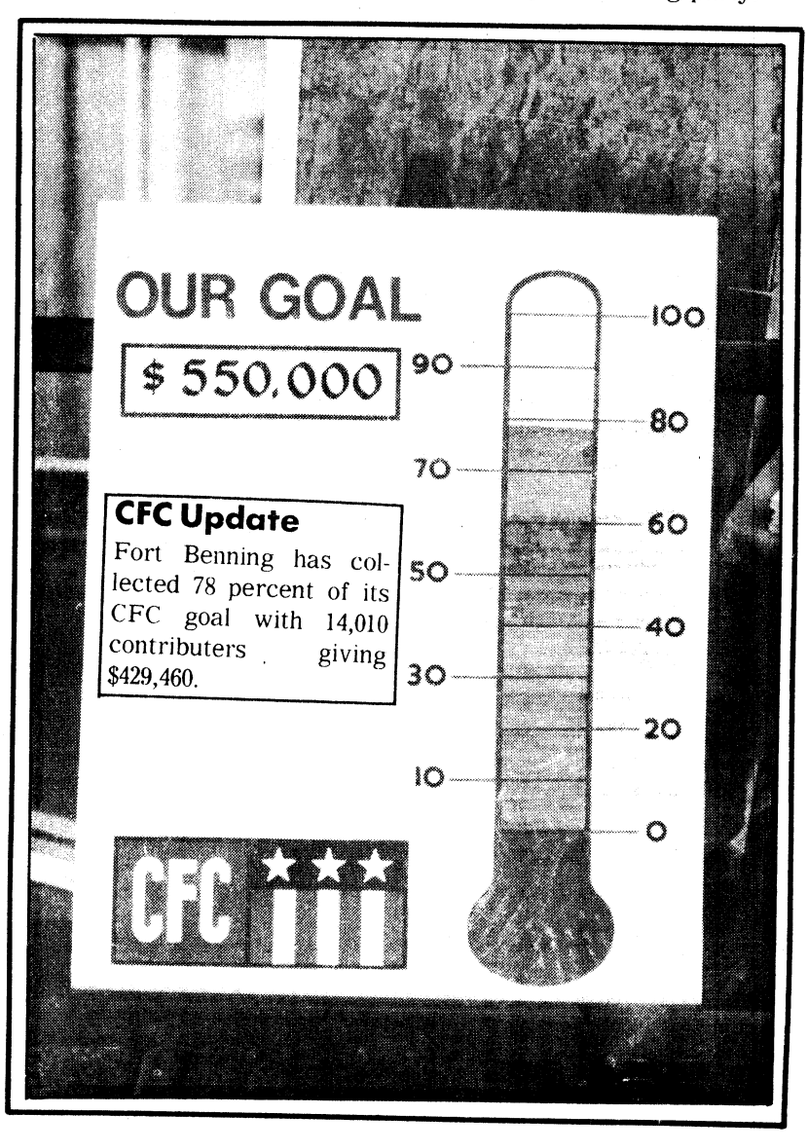
"All the families of members in the NASA program all lived in the same community," Stuart said, "so it really wasn't a big deal that your father was an astronaut.

"There were a few exceptions though," he said, "like being able to go the White House to meet the President, something most kids don't get to do."

Stuart Jr. and brother John both have aspirations of entering the space program, the eldest Roosa said.

Roosa made 12 parachute jumps as a "smoke jumper" with the forestry service before joining the Air Force in 1953.

After earning his pilot wings at Williams Air Force Base, Phoenix, Ariz., he served in fighter squadrons and as a test pilot before he was accepted in 1966 into the National Aeronautics and Space Administration for astronaut training.



As Apollo XIV command module pilot, Roosa orbited the moon in the Kitty Hawk while Edgar D. Mitchell and Alan B. Shepard Jr. landed the lunar module, Antares, on the moon's surface in January 1971.

He said, the most emotional part of the entire mission, "was looking down and seeing the Earth, knowing that was home and, at the same time, you were able to put your hand in front of your face and block it out with your thumb."

OPINION

Men's spirit gains victory

By Jimmie F. Holt
507th PIR

"Wars may be fought with weapons but they are won by men. It is the spirit of the men who follow and the man who leads that gains the victory."

General George S. Patton, Jr.

General Patton verbalized a fact known since recorded history but appreciated by only a few capable of recognizing it.

The fact is that the human spirit is an absolute essential ingredient in any activity for which winning is the objective.

This country of ours started as a result of a calling recognized by a few men dedicated to the idea that allegiance to God and human dignity trancended state and nation. This idea is captured in the opening words of our U.S. Constitution, "We the people...".

This idea has endured in the form of the U.S. Constitution longer than any previous governmental document in the world. But, it has done so only because brave men have recognized the calling and have been willing to die for it when necessary.

The U.S. Army has been the key element in this process from the beginning when 23 of the 39 signers were soldier — statesmen.

The spirit of those men is the same as that which caused Benjamin Franklin to comment: "Where is the prince who can afford to cover his country with troops for its defense as that ten thousand men descending from the clouds might not in many places do an infinite deal of mischief?

The Constitution of the United States had to be fought for. It's mission was to "pass the flame". The Revolution bought our freedom as defined in the Constitution but, soldiers enable us to keep it.

The Constitution is a road map of the unlimited powers of the good that is possible when a few dedicated men recognize a mission.

An example of the results of dedication to mission and purpose was set by the men of the 507th Parachute Infantry Regiment — formed as a unit in 1942 and moved to join the 82nd Airborne Division for Operation Neptune in 1944 (Normandy).

The 507th PIR took the place of the 504th Infantry which had been badly battered in Sicily.

It was the 507th PIR that led the relief forces to rescue the 101st Airborne Division at Bastogne.

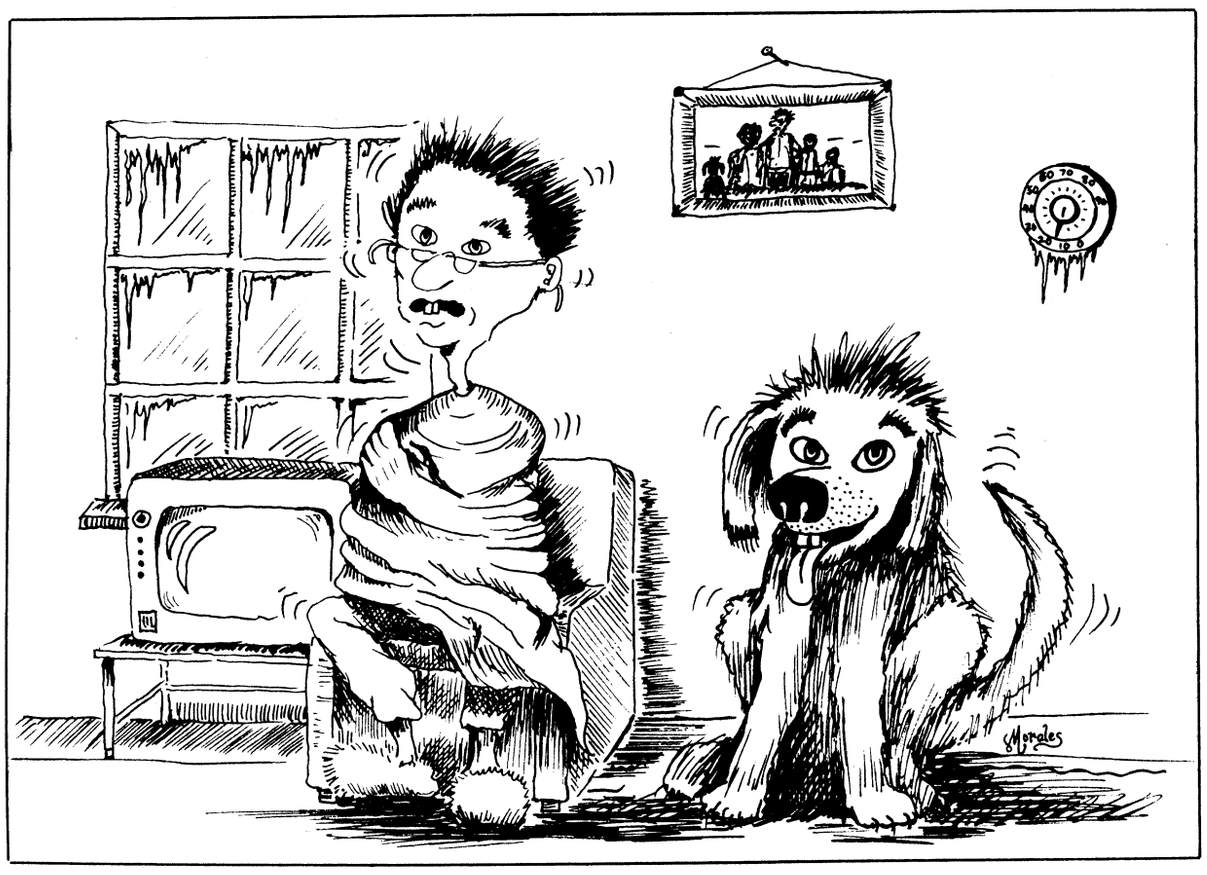
It was the 507th PIR that led the 17th Airborne Division and the Allied Airborne assault over the Rhine River in operation Varsity that signed the end of World War II.

It was the combat achievements of the 507th PIR that tipped the scales in favor of the 82nd Airborne Division as the Airborne unit selected to occupy Berlin, make the victory March in New York City at the end of World War II and be permanently stationed at Fort Bragg.

The 507th Parachute Infantry Regiment is a real life example of what has come to be accepted as the "Airborne" spirit responsible for perpetuating the mission of the U.S. Constitution for the last 200 years.

The Constitution has personal meaning for every American but it specifically is a history of vision. In the Army's newest leadership Manual FM 22-103; it says, "To make their vision a reality, senior leaders develop a game plan; establish standard rules, priorities and objectives; allow time to reflect and consider the influence of their personal factors." This is an accurate description of the process by which we have arrived at the bicentennial of the U.S. Constitution.

It has been given to us in relatively good shape. Our challenge is to see the vision and to strive to make it a reality. The 507th PIR is in a unique position to do just that.



Responsible each year for mental and physical conditioning of a division's worth of young Americans to develop leadership, self confidence and aggressive spirit necessary to do whatever is required on and off the battlefield to protect the vision of what it is to be an American.

The "Airborne" spirit and "warrior" spirit are the same — whatever the name, spirit is the business of the 507th Infantry today.

This call, mission and vision was reinforced in the October Regimental Reunion when 500 members of the "old" 507th PIR bonded with the "new" 507th PIR.

Cold spell freezes Snively, family

By Clyde Snively
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Things got a little tense around the Snively household during the recent "cold spell."

Emma, Bubba, Clydette, and even Ralf, petitioned me to turn on the heat in the house.

Did I say petitioned? Make that threatened.

"Turn on the heat or we'll build a fire under you," Emma said between shivers.

"It's not officially heating season yet," I said, flipping a small icicle from under my nose with my index finger. "Winter is still a month away."

"Calendars don't mean a thing. When the temperature registers 'cold,' it's cold," Emma said with all the logic she could muster.

"Ah, now you're talking scientific," I said, trying to remember the words of Big John, who told me what the DEH formula was for determining cold.

"Yep," I continued, remembering, "It's not officially cold until we have three straight days where the temperature averages below 60 degrees Farenheit, between 6 a.m. and 8 p.m. Emma, I'm putting you in charge of taking temperature readings every hour. That way we'll know when we can turn on the heat without fear of wasting my hard-earned money."

"Listen, Dad," Bubba spoke up. "Either we get some heat turned on around here or I call the newspapers and television stations and have them come out to interview me while I picket the house with a sign saying how stingy and cold-hearted you are."

"Yeah," Clydette piped in.

"Ralf," Ralf said, adding her two bits worth.

"Listen you wimps," I said, getting angry about being threatened by the family going to the media, which had no business butting into Snively business, "if we are going to meet our goal of making it through Christmas, we have to save now.

"Spend all the money on heat this early in the year, and there won't be any money for Christmas presents; either that, or we'll have to delay air conditoning season.

"You kids learn how to dress, and you wouldn't be complaining about the cold," I continued, adjusting my rabbit-fur lined gloves.

"You can always put enough clothes on to stay warm, but when it gets hot, there's not much you can do to cool off but turn on the air and, if we ain't got no money for air, because we spent it on heat when it was needed, then you'll really suffer."

"We'll take that risk when we come to it," Clydette said, tugging on another pair of socks. "I'm all for calling the media."

"Sure, call them in. Make a fool of me. But then when they interview me to get my side of it, how will you feel when I show them my BDUs with patches that I have to wear to work because I spend my money on clothing for my daughter so she won't be embarrassed when she goes to school. Or how about when I tell them I have to go without lunch in order to feed my son who eats every minute he's awake."

About then Ralf grabbed my ankle between her teeth and began to snarl.

Now that kind of argument I can understand. I turned on the heat. But only up to 62 degrees, just enough to melt the ice off the inside of the windows and to get Ralf to let go of my ankle.

Civilian "Use or lose" policy challenged

By Donna Miles
American Forces Information Service

Robert Hague, a civilian intelligence research specialist for the Naval Intelligence Support Center in Suitland, Md., isn't out to fight city hall. But he's challenging the leave policy that governs more than 3 million civilians.

A 17-year federal employee, Hague faces the end-of-the-year "use or lose" dilemma almost every year. Because government rules allow workers to carry over no more than 240 hours of annual leave from one year to the next, Hague often found himself kissing much of his hard-earned vacation time goodbye.

Hague's friend, Barbara DiPietrantonio, has just the opposite problem. Hard times have forced the blind, Department of Transportation employee to exhaust all the annual and sick leave she had. DiPietrantonio took leave to care for her father after his heart surgery, then to fight a bout of the flu. The real crunch came when she learned she would have to take a month or more of leave to train a new seeing-eye dog.

Hague came up with a novel idea now being tested by the Office of Personnel Management: Why not allow federal civilians to donate annual and sick leave to co-workers who could make better use of it?

He was disappointed to learn that laws governing federal employee's leave policy prohibited him from donating leave to DiPietrantonio. Undaunted, Hague took his case to Congress.

The result is a congressionally mandated five-year test program that allows certain employees to receive donations of leave from co-workers during personal or medical emergencies.

Three of 242 applicants were selected for the test. Among them: Karen Sefton, a computer programmer and analyst at the Army Personnel Information Systems Command in Alexandria, Va.

Sefton's 4-year old daughter, Jennifer was diagnosed in February as having neuroblastoma, a rare childhood cancer. Regular visits to the hospital for chemotherapy and follow-up treatments forced Sefton to use all the leave she had saved. Her husband, an employee of Arlington County, Va., exhausted all his leave as well.

After Sefton had used all the advance leave she could borrow, she was forced to take more and more leave without pay — at a time when mounting medical bills were driving her family into a severe financial crisis.

Before she was selected for the program, Sefton saw few alternatives.

"If I had not had leave-sharing, I would have probably had to quit and draw on my retirement," she said. "We were spending so much

Soviets expected to deploy new ballistic missile in 87

By Tom Joyce
American Forces Information Service

"Soviet Military Power", a detailed, frank and authoritative report on trends within the Soviet military, notes that the Soviet Union was expected to begin deploying a new, rail-mobile intercontinental ballistic missile during 1987.

The new missile "is in the process of being deployed, but it has not yet reached the point of full operational capability," said Robert Sims, former assistant secretary of defense for public affairs.

The Soviet Union's SS-X-24 missile is about the same size as the United States' Peacekeeper but is rail-mobile. The Soviets can deploy the 6,200-mile-range ICBMs, which can hit any target in 30 minutes, on railroad cars and hide them in more than 1,000 tunnels along 62,000 miles of Soviet railroads. Since the missile is deployed on railroad cars, its ability to survive a retaliatory attack is greatly enhanced. Also, detection is next to impossible.

The "X" stands for experimental and will be removed when the missile becomes officially operational. The same thing occurred when the United States' MX missile became operational. It then became known as the Peacekeeper.

Mark B. Schneider, director of strategic arms control policy for the assistant secretary of defense for international security policy, said the deployment of the SS-X-24 launchers represents "a significant increase in the threat. This missile is comparable to the Peacekeeper and we expect it will be deployed in far larger numbers than the 50 to 100 Peacekeepers the United States will deploy."

The SS-X-24 comes on the heels of Soviet deployment of the SS-25 road-mobile missile, an ICBM about the size of the Minuteman. Bases for the single-warhead SS-25 are operational.

Schneider said since each SS-X-24 can carry up to 10 independently targeted warheads, a very small number of launchers can be responsible for a large number of warheads. He added that the SS-X-24 launchers might have the capability to be reloaded rapidly, potentially doubling or tripling the force.

With the addition of the SS-X-24 and the SS-25 and other new types of ICBMs expected to follow, the Pentagon estimates that by the mid-1990s, almost the entire Soviet ICBM force will consist of new-generation systems.

The addition of the SS-X-24 into the Soviet inventory will be extremely difficult to negate and could also make cheating easier on arms control agreements.

"This deployment is a serious threat development," said Schneider. "The large numbers of strategic warheads that are possible with these missiles and the expected follow-on systems will make negotiations on arms control policies much more complicated."

The United States does not have mobile ICBMs. However, plans are under way to deploy 50, 10-warhead Peacekeepers on railroad cars. The small ICBM is also being developed for deployment on trucks.

Leave

time in the hospital and running back and forth, there was no way for both of us (Sefton and her husband) to keep working. It was inevitable that one of us would have to quit work."

Skip Campbell, the civilian personnel officer who services the Personnel Information Systems Command, explained how the Volunteer Leave Transfer Program is being administered in Sefton's case.

Federal employees at the Personnel Information Systems Command, Military Personnel Center, Civilian Personnel Center and Community and Family support Center, all housed at the Hoffman Center complex, are eligible to give leave to Sefton. The test is limited to employees paid by the finance and accounting office at St. Louis to aid recordkeeping, he said. Sick leave cannot be donated because Sefton's daughter, not Sefton, is ill.

"This was a brand new program with no precedent," Campbell said. "We pretty much had to invent the rules as we went along because they weren't laid our for us. We've tried to be as flexible as possible in getting the program off the ground."

Since Sefton's selection to the program in mid-June, 186 of her co-workers have donated 2,539 hours of annual leave. Some have donated a couple of hours, some a full week. One man, a friend of Sefton's mother, donated 80 hours.

"It makes you feel great," Sefton said. "It gives you new faith in your fellow man."

Sefton's co-workers appear to like the program as well. Wanda Damon said the leave-sharing program is popular because it lets people band together to help a co-worker in need.

"Everyone I talk to likes the program. It gives us a chance to help Karen out in a very substantial way," she said.

Full-time federal workers earn annual leave based on length of service. Employees with less than three years service accrue 13 days a year; those with more than three but less than 15 years earn 19½ days a year. Workers with 15 or more years receive 26 days a year.

Than means the workers most likely to need additional leave are employees new to government service. Senior employees, who accumulate leave the fastest, are most likely to donate.

"Watching this test program get off the ground has been a heartwarming experience," Hague said. "I'm really hoping it will result in a government-wide leave-sharing policy."

AROUND THE ARMY

Today Show airs life from Europe

WASHINGTON (ARNEWS) — NBC television's "Today Show" is scheduled to broadcast live from U.S. military facilities in Europe just before Thanksgiving.

The program's second (Army-focused), segment is scheduled for airing Nov. 24 from Fulda, West Germany. The theme will center on how U.S. service members live and train within the framework of current U.S.-Soviet relations.

The three-segment program, airing Nov. 23-25, will include a look at the Navy and the Air Force.

Band to perform in West Berlin

WASHINGTON (ARNEWS) — The U.S. Army Field Band is scheduled to take part Nov. 30 in West Berlin's commemoration of the bicentennial of the U.S. Constitution and the city's 750th anniversary.

In addition to the public concert in Berlin's Philharmonie Nov. 30, two performances are scheduled for service members and their families stationed there.

The Soldiers' Chorus will perform for American school children at the Outpost Theatre on Clay Compound, and the Concert Band will perform at the Coliseum Theatre on McNair Barracks.

Combat boots now available in stores

WASHINGTON (ARNEWS) — The Army's new combat boot, which is water-resistant, black-leather with a smooth, low-gloss finish, now sells in military clothing sales stores for $51.90 a pair.

The boot is available in 133 sizes — 22 more than the old version. Improved design features include better traction; replaceable heel; speed-lace system; softer, more comfortable upper leather with the highest degree of water resistance; and a padded collar for maximum comfort.

One of the enhancements enables the soldier to brush-shine the boot after using a silicone polish. This differs from the old-version, which required spit-shining.

The new boot has been available since July 1986.

Military historian gets service award

WASHINGTON (ARNEWS) — Henri LeVaufre received the Decoration for Distinguished Civilian Service from Secretary of the Army John O. Marsh Jr. Oct. 19 in honor of the scholar's vast knowledge of the military history of the United States' 90th Infantry Division in World War II.

LeVaufre, a resident of Periers, France, now serves as historian for the World War II veterans organization of this American division.

In making the presentation, Marsh noted that the day marked the 206th anniversary of the victory of American forces at Yorktown. He cited the important role played by the French in the American Revolution, and praised the resulting relationships between France and the United States.

Hertz offers rental benefits to military

WASHINGTON (ARNEWS) — Hertz Rent-a-Car is making car rental more attractive for service members and federal employees by offering two new benefits.

Now available is free unlimited mileage on personal as well as official travel, said Jeanie Bell, passenger traffic specialist with the Military Traffic Management Command in Falls Church, Va.

Here are the fees: subcompact, $30; mid-size, $34; and full-size, two- or four-door, $36.

All other features of the current Hertz government program remain the same, Bell said.

Rules to change for pay allotments

FORT BENJAMIN HARRISON, Ind. (ARNEWS) — Soldiers now may establish allotments for life insurance policies covering spouses or dependent children, thanks to a recent change in Department of Defense pay regulations.

Under the old pay policy, active duty soldiers were permitted to have insurance allotments for payment of premiums only on those policies that covered the life of the person making out the allotment request.

According to active duty pay policy specialists of the U.S.Army Finance and Accounting Center at Fort Benjamin Harrison, allotments for health, accident, or hospitalization insurance or other contracts that may, as an incidental feature, include life insurance, are still authorized.

Soldiers desiring to take advantage of the new policy should contact local unit personnel offices to file the proper allotment requests.

Army announces holiday PCS rules

WASHINGTON (ARNEWS) — The Army has established its 1987 permanent-change-of-station movement instructions for the holiday period for soldiers due to leave the continental United States.

Soldiers will not receive port calls calling for their arrival overseas during the following holiday periods: Thanksgiving (Nov. 26-27), Christmas (Dec. 20-26) and New Year's (Dec. 31, 1987-Jan. 1, 1988).

If a soldier requests to move during the holiday break, and if his presence is deemed not to be mission-essential, he can be moved during these periods, Army personnel officials say. The holiday period port call policy does not apply to unaccompanied family members.

The Army seeks not to delay the arrival of those family members desiring to join their sponsors overseas in time for the holidays, officials say.

ROTC instructors get medals

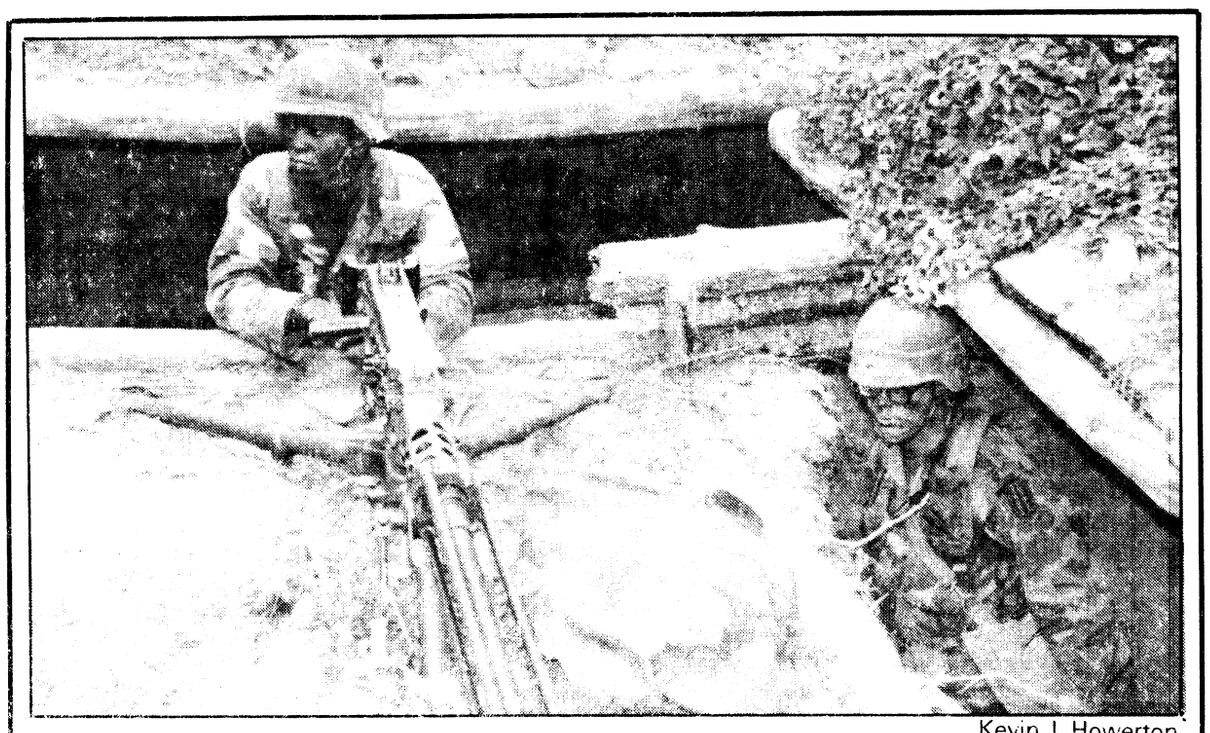
Sgt. Maj. Leroy H. Blackwell and MSgt. Robert G. Thompson receive the U.S. Army Commendation Medal from Lt. Col. Lewis S. Swinehart, professor of military science at Columbus College.

Columbus College



COLUMBUS, Ga. — The U.S. Army Commendation Medal was awarded to two Columbus College Reserve Officers' Training Corps (ROTC) instructors for meritorious achievement in an awards ceremony held on campus Nov. 11.

Sgt. Maj. Leroy H. Blackwell and MSgt. Robert G. Thompson were both cited for "exceptionally meritorious achievement" occurring on Oct. 29 when another ROTC instructor, Sgt. Maj. David P. Richardson collapsed from an apparent heart attack.

Blackwell and Thompson administered cardiopulmonary resuscitation, maintaining the procedure until emergency medical personnel arrived.

Emergency room physician at St. Francis Hospital, Dr. Tarun K. Chaudhury, credited "the quick and skilled actions of these two soldiers with saving the life of Sgt. Maj. Richardson."

The award was presented by Lt. Col. Lewis S. Swinehart, professor of military science at Columbus College.

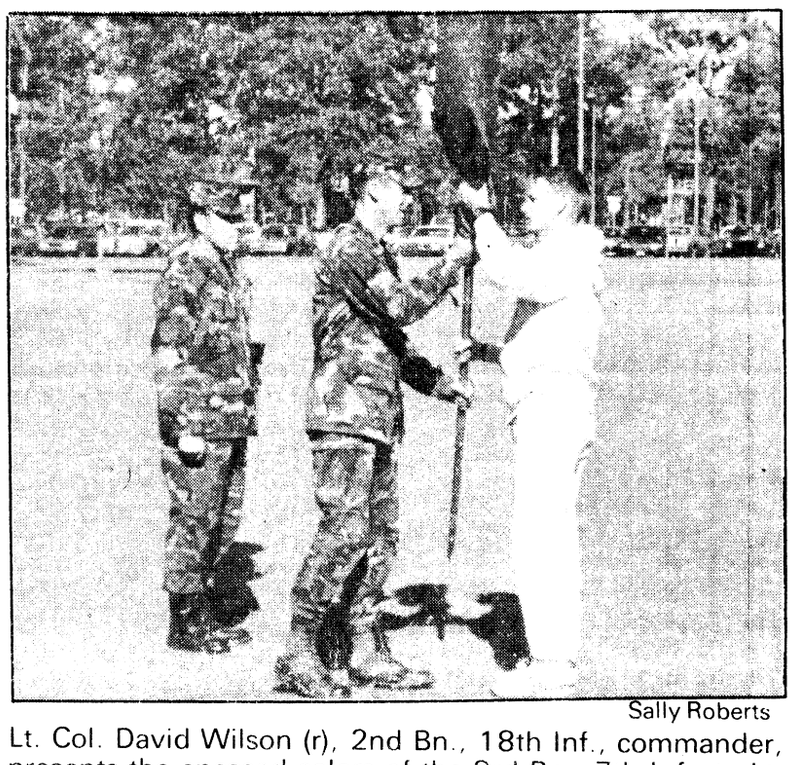
Infantry Soldiers run 240 miles



By Sally Roberts
197th Infantry Brigade Correspondent

When the soldiers of the 2nd Battalion, 18th Infantry stood on the parade field to encase the colors of the 3rd Battalion, 7th Infantry, the pomp and circumstance of the ceremony just didn't seem to be enough to show their respect for the 7th Infantry colors they had proudly served under. Last week, nearly 50 soldiers relayed the colors of the inactivated battalion of foot, running more than 240 miles to Fort Stewart, Ga., where the battalion is scheduled to be reactivated in December.

The soldiers worked in teams, each carrying the colors on a two to three mile stretch. And, bearing the weight of the colors and 74 battle streamers, each soldier earned his "Red Badge of Courage."

"The colors, with all the battle streamers, weigh about 30 pounds," said 1st Lt. Glenn A. James. "We all have a Red Badge of Courage on our shoulder."

"The run took about 33 hours," 1st Lt. James added. "We also met a lot of friendly and patriotic people along the way."

When the group arrived at Fort Stewart, Lt. Col. David Wilson, 2nd Battalion, 18th Infantry commander, presented the encased colors to Lt. Col. Carl Linke, commander of the 2nd Battalion, 34th Infantry, which is scheduled to be redesignated as the 3rd Battalion, 7th Infantry on December 18.

Dragons conduct live-fire training

By Todd H. Foreman
10th Mountain Division

3rd Bn., 14th Inf."Golden Dragons," 2nd Bde., 10th Mtn. Div. recently completed platoon live-fire evaluation at Fort A.P. Hill, Va..

Each rifle platoon was evaluated on a movement to contact raid of a Soviet trench system and deliberate attack on a command control facility.

Officers from the 29th Inf. and Infantry School performed evaluation duties

The scenario placed the commandos in the fictional country of Barcelona, long plagued by an insurgency supported from the neighboring country of Aqua Roho.

The men deployed to Barcelona and prepared for combat operations. The challenge of live-fire manuever training on unfamiliar terrain resulted in superior training benefits for all platoons.

In addition to the live-fire exercises, the men honed their skills on land navigation, rappelling, weapons firing, aerial resupply and survival skills.

A major highlight of the deployment was a daily terrain walk of the Fredericksburg Civil War battlefield to educate each soldier in the history of the Regiment.

The walk was conducted daily in order to allow every soldier the opportunity to attend.

Capt. William McCarter compiled an extensive guide of the battle and history of the Regiment which was distributed to each platoon in the battalion.

The 14th returned to Fort Benning in a higher state of combat readiness due to the platoon live-fire training and with a greater knowledge of the history of the unit.

Latin officers graduate engineer course

By Marco Morales
USARSA Public Affairs Office

Ten officers representing five Latin American countries graduated Nov. 4 at the U.S. Army School of the Americas from the Engineer Management Officers course.

Countries with number of graduates represented were Bolivia 2, Costa Rica 2, El Salvador 3, Honduras 2, and Panama 1.

Guest speaker for the graduation ceremony was Lt. Col. Jesus Iguaran, a guest instructor from Colombia.

The eight-week course covers principles of construction, use of engineer tools, heavy construction equipment, concrete riggings, soil testing and construction management. Categorized as one of USARSA's civic-action courses, this course is considered more managerial than technical.

The students participated in light construction projects such as mixing and laying cement and putting up a temporary shelter, complete with foundation electrical power, windows and door.

Volunteering says you care

By Maggie Siegfried
Installation Volunteer Coordinator

Volunteering is a way of saying you care, not only about your family, but the community in which you live.

Volunteering is a way of making the quality of life better for soldiers and their families in the Fort Benning community.

When we find ourselves new on an installation not knowing anyone, neighbors working, no one for the children to play with, and just plain bored, we begin to feel sorry for ourselves. When by word of mouth, The Bayonet, cable TV, or unit information, we find there is a place for us — in the field of volunteering.

Many of these family programs would cease to be if we lost our volunteers.

By volunteering, the children have an opportunity to be with others their age while being cared for, at no cost to the volunteer, by the in-home childcare givers or at Tot Town.

The volunteer can also make friends, gain new skills, or keep current present ones. So visit your Installation Volunteer Coordinator and see what is available for you.

The rewards are many — documentation of services for possible paid employment, recognition and training, a chance to attend workshops on self development and take part in volunteer conferences and much more.

So take time to do something not only for yourself and your fmily but the Fort Benning community.

For more information, contact the Volunteer Resource Center at 545-5602, Building 241, Room 210 (next to museum) between 8 a.m. and 5 p.m.

Some openings are: English teachers for foreign born spouses. A teaching degree is not necessary, just a willingness to help those learn conversational English.

If you enjoy writing, there is a need for someone to write a weekly column for The Bayonet and to develop a quarterly news bulletin for volunteers.

If you enjoy working with children, the Girl Scouts have needs for Junior leaders, an artist, assistant Daisy, Brownie Junior leaders and a treasurer.

There is also a need at the Thrift Shop for people interested in working in the craft cabin or in the main thrift shop doing consignments, tagging, etc.

Activities scheduled for celebration of annual "Army Family Week"

Installation Volunteer Coordinator

The week of Nov. 22-28 has been designated Army Family Week.

The Army knows families are special. This was evident by 1984 being "the year of the Army Family." From that time, many new programs have been developed to benefit army families such as in-home childcare givers, the installation volunteer coordinator, installation family member employments office, Army furniture for E-6 and below, counting volunteer experience on job applications, and many more initiatives.

Fort Benning is keenly aware of how important our families are and wants to express that by offering sepcial events throughout the installation.

A list of what Fort Benning will be doing during Army Family Week to show our support follows:

Youth Activities

Nov. 22 — 1 p.m. Family Registration
1:30 p.m. Father/Son Pool Tournament
2 p.m.Father/Daughter Table Games
3 p.m. Door Prize Drawing (adults only)
3:30 p.m. Mix Double Ping Pong

Nov. 27 — 8-11 p.m. Family Disco (free)

Nov. 28 — 1 p.m. Family Registration
3:30 p.m. Door Prizes

Child Development Services: Nov. 20 — Custer Terrace Childcare center Thanksgiving dinner with parents. Children will be the servers. Certified in-home childcare homes will host Open House activities.

Army Community Service — In honor of all great American Amry families, the Army Family Advocacy Program will show you how great they think you are. On Nov. 22 from 1—5 p.m. you can see them at the Youth Activities Center. Get ideas on how to make your Army family even greater. Register for their Great American Family prizes: 1st Prize - free dinner at Bonanza on Victory Drive; 2nd Prize: free movie tickets for the entire family; 3rd Prize: free childcare services for one night. Drawings will be on Nov. 28.

Chaplains: Activities will include family oriented worship services throughout post on Nov. 22. Chapel pot-luck dinners, classes for parents and teens, and other programs will be conducted at various chapels througout the post. First Sunday of Advent, Nov. 29, will emphasize family worship.

Fort Benning Officers' Club: Dining at 6 p.m. on Nov. 24, 25, 26, 27 and 28 will offer an additional 10% discount to families with children dining together. Brunch will be offered on Nov. 22 and 10% will be offered to families dining together.

Noncommissioned Officers' Club: Dining Nov. 22-27, 6—9 p.m. Main NCO Club will offer half price on any menu item on evening menu for all family members dining with club members.

Artist's creativity rewarded with $200 check, certificate

By Steven E. Roy
USARSA Public Affairs Office

Since she was very young, Magaly Damiani's artistic flair for painting in oil has been one of her strongest characteristics.

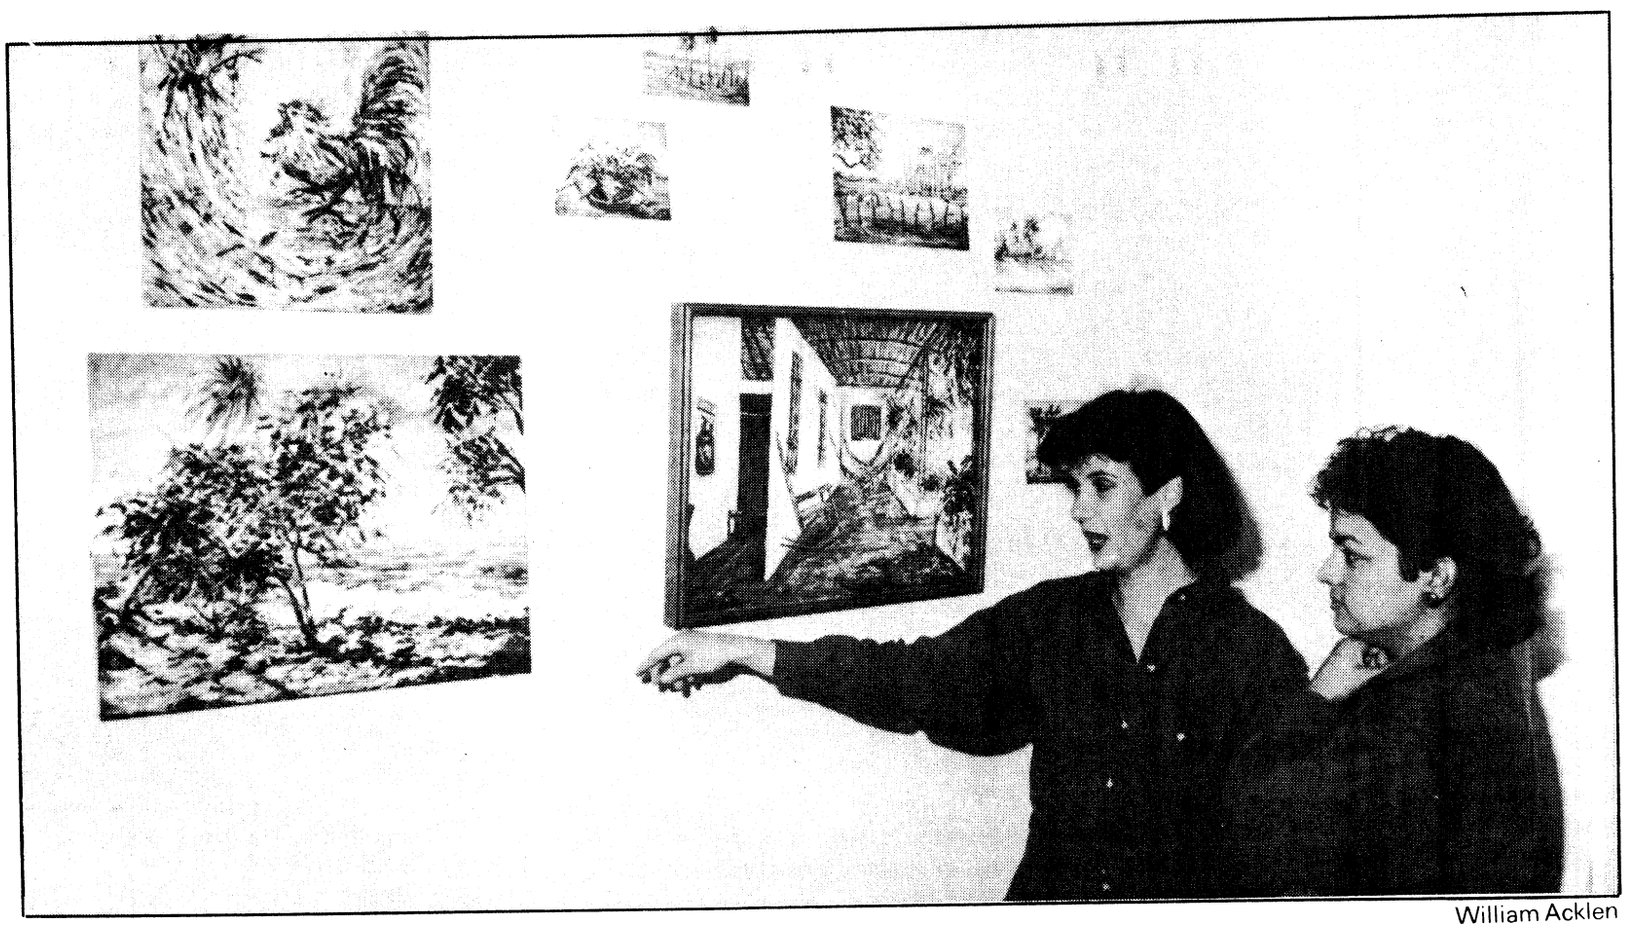
Recently, her creative instinct was finally rewarded. Damiani received a $200 check and a certificate of achievement for Creative Excellence from Fort Benning's army Community Family Support Center.

She garnered her reward during a recent art contest held at the Milton E. Long, Skill Development Center.

Damiani prefers painting landscapes with oil, pastels and carbon painting.

Her paintings of a Venezuelan villa in the colonial period and a rooster fight won her the rewards.

While residing at Ft. Benning, she has painted many Georgia landscapes including one of the country church near Callaway Gardens.



Damiani, who initially learned to paint by watching her father, also studied art in the University of Plastic Arts of Venezuela, under the tutelage of Dr. Alvarez de Luga, and Geula Zilberman, well known Venezuelan artists.

Her paintings have received showings in many Venezuelan exhibitions.

Winning the contest has encouraged Damiani to complete her formal studies in art to succeed in her painting career.

Damiani is a native of Venezuela and wife of Major Rafael Damiani, a student of the Command and General Staff Course of the School of the Americas.

"I have enjoyed my stay in the United States very much," she said. "The American people have been very nice to my family. This contest shows me the importance of art in the U.S."

William Acklen

Magaly Damiani (l) explains to Sonia Barroso some of her brush stroke techniques while pointing to one of her recent oil renderings.

Self-taught artists from deep South become big names in art circles

By David M. Maxfield
Smithsonian News Service

When it comes to art, there are no boundaries, as several dozen self-taught artists--many of them elderly blacks from the deep South--can attest. Virtually unknown outside their home communities not long ago, today they have become big names in prestigious U.S. and European art circles. Some are even media stars.

"The work of these men and women is now very much in demand," say Liza Kirwin, an Archives of American Art staff member who has watched their popularity grow. "You meet some one whose house in rural Georgia has just been hooked up to electricity, and the next thing you know, they're having a show in New York's So-Ho galleries."

Under Kirwin's guidance, the Archives, a division of the Smithsonian, is seeking written records, gathering photos and taping oral history inteviews that will tell future researchers a good deal about the work of and influences on these artists, a group that she says "defies easy categorization."

"Self-taught" is the umbrella term now often used to describe these painters and sculptors who have created substantial bodies of work, often late in life with no formal training. They also have been described as visionaries, outsiders or folk, primitive, vernacular and intuitive artists. By whatever label, many are motivated by religious calling, Kirwin has concluded, and some are driven by an intense personal need to express their visions, dreams or life experiences.

Their art is made from almost anything at hand--chewing gum, rusted tin, animal bones, window shades and spark plugs are just a few materials that Kirwin has observed. Self-taught artists also seem to solve aesthetic problems of design, color and materials with the greatest of ease. The results may be crude or even brutal to some eyes, but the "self-taught are irrepressively inventive and tirelessley engaged in the process of transmitting ideas," she says.

Though toughness--not sentimentality--binds the work of these artists, Jane Livingston, a Corcoran Gallery of Art curator in Washington, D.C., suggests that "we somehow feel (that they) represent an optimistic aspect of human nature," their art being steeped in "flashing humor, curiosity and supressed wisdom."

Like all true artists, they are compulsively creative, often so obsessed with self-expression that they profoundly transform their environments. In the 1950s, the late Sister gertrude Morgan, for instance, painted her New Orleans house and furniture entirely white, in keeping with her belief that she was to become the bride of Christ.

In Patterson, La., octogenarian David Butler's whirligigs and metal cut-outs of lizards, flyings elephants, monkeys and sea creatures are still the talk of the town. These once filled the yard around his house, which itself was treated as a piece of sculpture sporting painted-tin window screens and holes in walls for showing found objects. In Hazelhurst, Miss., Mary Smith's artwork is displayed in her garden "gallery." Animal and human figures painted in bright colors on batered pieces of tin, cut with an ax, cover Smith's dog kennel and grace her clipped lawn.

The work of Dilmus Hall of Athens, Ga., takes, well, a more sobering tone. His yard, too, is filled with sculpted figures of wood, cement and scrap tin, but dominating the scene from the street is a painted sculpture of the devil and the drinking man, Hall's moral commentary on the evils of the grape.

Then there is the creativity of the Rev. Howard Finster, widely heralded for his "Paradise Garden"--a glorious assemblage of plants and man-made trinkets surrounding his Summerville, Ga., home. This two acre spiritual landfill is intended to include all the inventions of mankind. Lately, though, things have grown a bit wild because of collectors' demands for Finster's work, at last count more than 5,000 objects.

Still, Kirwin and others who have visited "the Garden" report an incomparable assemblage of bike parts, painted TV tubes, Coke bottles, plywood cut-outs of Santa Claus and Abe Lincoln and "much more--all molded, along with Bible verses, into cement walls and walkways, playhouses and fanciful sculpture." And in the Archives of American Art collections are slides of the landscape during its lush days in the 1970s, when sparkling mirrors and trinkets reflected the brilliance of nearby zinnias, marigolds, wisteria, butter beans on 10-foot vines and 10-inch round roses.

Finster's creativity has been showcased by his skills as a communicator. "I think he's been able to use his talents as a preacher to market his art," Kirwin says. In fact, "he uses language and art as part of his mission to preach the Gospel." Rising above Finster's garden is his "World's Folk Art Church," which looks like a giant 16-sided wedding cake. Here Finster keeps the books he has written and the album covers he's designed, including a prize-winning 1985 design for a Talking Heads LP, as well as articles written about him. (Profiled by the Wall Street Journal, among other publications, Finster is probably the most widely known of the self-taught artists.) "If you want your poem or message to face this old world," says a sign at the door inviting visitors to contribute papers, "bring it by and we will put it on or in this chapel."

Such extraordinary, original creations have raised questions for the Archives about the type of materials that it and kindred organizations should collect and save to document the work of self-taught artists. Many are illiterate, and those who do write, rarely keep written records. "They have forced us to rethink our methods, stretch our criteria and be more active in gathering documentation," Kirwin says.

To be as responsive to the self-taught as the academically trained artist, Kirwin says "we

The Reverend Howard Finster is "warm, crafty, compulsive, charismatic, opinionated and profoundly imaginative," says Archives of American Art area collector Liza Kirwin who is documenting his work. Here, Finster waves in front of a metal "art mound."

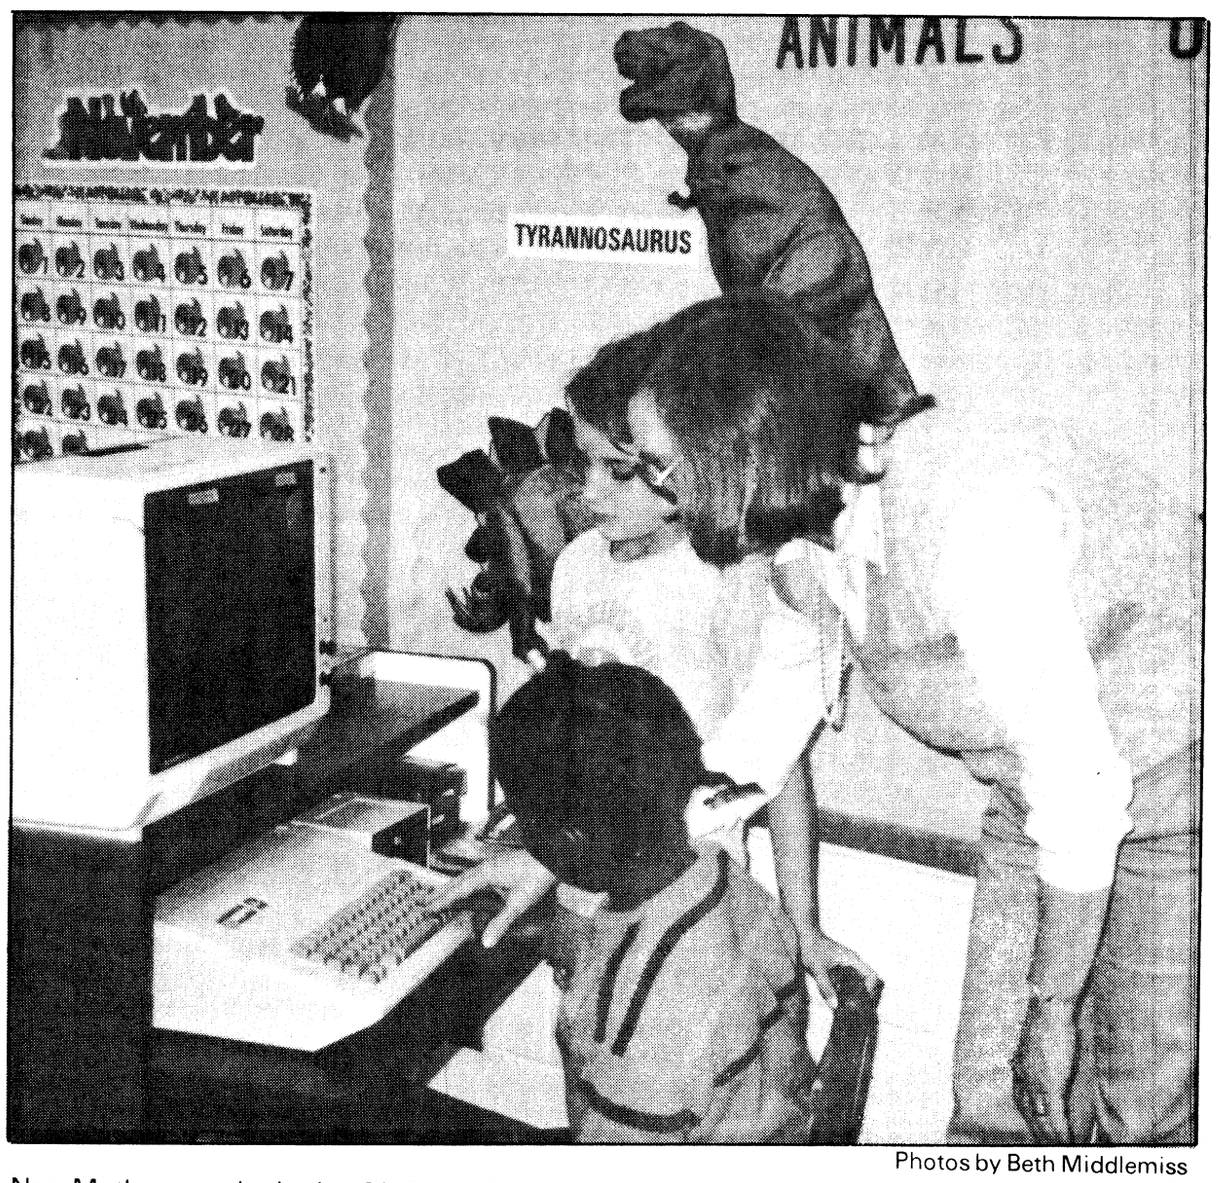
Post Schools celebrate American Education Week



Kitty Curry, a teacher's aide, works with first graders Tiffany Miles and Laura Patrick at McBride School on a puzzle related to the story they have just finished reading with their teacher. Teacher Aides are a vital component of the instructional process. Working under the supervision of the teacher, they serve in a variety of functions that allow teachers additional instructional time with their students.

Fort Benning Schools

The Fort Benning Schools join school systems throughout the United States in celebrating American Education Week, from Nov. 15 through 21.

In keeping with this year's theme of "We the People... Building Schools Together," the school system focuses on parents, teachers, school administrators, school support personnel, and community agencies who work together to provide strong educational opportunities for students.

While parents and community members are always encouraged to visit schools and to become school volunteers, American Education Week is a special time when visitations to Fort Benning's seven elementary schools and middle school are encouraged.

DANTES leads to bachelor's degree

By Hal Haskins
American Forces Information Service

"I didn't see any point in going to college while on active duty." That was Master Chief Petty Officer Don Carunchio's philosophy early in his naval career. He planned to use the GI Bill to further his education after leaving active duty.

He revised that philosophy however, when he just missed being selected for promotion to senior chief petty officer: A review of his service record revealed that he was very strong in all criteria used for promotion except one — off-duty educational credits.

About that time, he heard about the educational opportunities available through the Defense Activity for Non-Traditional Education Support — or DANTES. He started by taking the College Level Examination Program general tests and built up 24 semester hours of college credit for his personnel record.

Now, the special enlisted adviser at DANTES headquarters and holder of a bachelor's degree in history, Carunchio earned all the credits for his degree without setting foot in a college classroom. While this feat isn't typical, it's an excellent example of what can be achieved through the program.

DANTES is a valuable benefit for service members. While some are able to continue their education through traditional classroom programs offered locally, others can't. Many service members are stationed at isolated sites, perform shift work, are transferred before completing a degree program or require courses that are not offered at their installations.

For them, DANTES offers educational opportunities through a variety of tests and self-study programs. In fact, more than 250,000 service members took advantage of DANTES program last year alone.

Service members can earn high school equivalency credentials by passing the General Educational Development test or the California High School Proficiency Examination. DANTES sponsors the GED test at all overseas sites and in most states. Military personnel stationed in California or California residents stationed outside the state are eligible to take that state's exam on a self-pay basis.

One useful program sponsored by DANTES is the Military Evaluations Program. The American Council on Education evaluates military occupations and service schools and recommends college credits be given accordingly. Through this program, colleges and universities awarded more than 400,000 sememster hours last year to service members for their military experiences.

Another means of receiving college credit for knowledge alread gained on the job or through independent study is the College Level Examination Program. It is one of the more popular DANTES test programs and is widely accepted by colleges and universities. DANTES also gives subject standardized tests in vocational-technical and traditional academic subjects.

For someone getting ready to enter college or an officer accession program, DANTES sponsors some examinations required fo admission, at both the undergraduate and graduate levels.

Many service members may already have the knowledge required to gain certification in professional associations such as American Medical Technologists or Electronics Technicians Association, International. DANTES has agreements with 25 nationally recognized certification organizations to administer their exams.

Another major DANTES program is the Independent Study Support System. Through this program, service members may complete correspondence courses from accredited colleges.

Contact your local education services officer for help with planning a course of study or advice on how best to use DANTES to attain your educational objectives.

"We're here to support the service member," said Barry Cobb, DANTES director. "In today's military and general social environment, the individual is required to have higher levels of skills and knowledge. Service members have tremendous educational opportunities available through their service's off-duty voluntary education program."

Additional educational benifits of GI Bill explained

By Jenelle Flocke
Army News Service

Washington — Most soldiers are familiar with the current GI bill, which, after a successful two-year trial period, became a permanent educational benefit for servicemembers when President Reagan signed it into law June 1.

What some may not realize is that soldiers enrolled in the two-year Montgomery GI bill or two-year Army college fund may be eligible for an additional $1800 in MGIB benefits. This benefit is the "2x4" program encourages membership in the selected reserve by offering increased educational assistance to qualifying soldiers. Here, a soldier who enrolls in the MGIB and completes two years honorable service may earn an increased entitlement of $50 per month by enlisting for four years in the selected reserve. The soldier must be assigned in the selected reserve within 12 months after discharge from the active component. This benefit covers a 36-month period for a total of $1800 in addition to the basic GI bill or ace. It may be used as soon as the soldier enters the reserve or guard unit and applies to the VA.

A soldier assigned against a guard or reserve unit vacancy in his or her primary, secondary or additional military occupational specialty may also receive an affiliation bonus ranging from $2200 to $3600 for serving in a unit that has an MOS-to-vancancy match. The "2x4" program should not be confused with the selected reserve GI bill.

The selected reserve GI bill is designed to encourage and sustain membership in the selected reserve. Membership consists of Army National Guard and Army Reserve soldiers of troop program units, individual augmentee program and the active guard and reserve program.

Enlisted members of the selected reserve — Army National Guard and Army Reserve units — who enlist, extend or re-enlist to total at least six years after July 1, 1985 are eligible for a total benefit of $5,040. Also eligible are those officers who, as of July 1, 1985 or later, agree to serve for six additional years beyond their current selected reserve obligation. The benefit is paid at the rate of $140 per month for up to 36 months for fulltime education attendance; $105 per month for three-quarter time attendance; and $70 per month for half-time attendance. There is no reduction in pay for reservists.

Soldiers are eligible for educational benefits as soon as they are high school graduates, complete initial active-duty training and serve 180 calendar days in the selected reserve. Soldiers who are not eligible for benefits under the selected reserve new GI bill are those who are eligible for other veterans educational programs, receive a ROTC scholarship, possess a bachelor's degree, perform unsatisfactorily in their units, or carry less than one half time course loads.

The soldier can use these benefits only while in the selected reserve and before the end of the 10-year period beginning on the date of entitlement.

Post-Korean conflict and Vietnam-era soldiers — those who entered active-duty between Feb. 1, 1955 and Dec. 31, 1976 are covered by the Vietnam-era GI bill. They are eligible to use this benefit until Dec. 31, 1989. After that time, they will be converted to the current GI bill, provided they were on active-duty from Oct. 19, 1984 to June 30, 1985, and have acquired at least three years' active-duty service after June 30, 1985, with no break in service.

The new Army college fund provides for a "kicker," or bonus of up to an additional $400 per month over the basic benefit for members who enlist in selected specialties. These qualifying specialties are revised every quarter.

To be eligible, soldiers must be non-prior service, be a high school graduate, score 50 or above on the Armed Forces qualification test, enlist in a designated critical skill and enroll under the new GI bill.

Soldiers who came on active duty between Jan. 1, 1977 and June 30, 1985, are ineligible for the new GI bill and may not convert to it. Instead, they are covered by the veterans Educational Assistance program.

Under VEAP, the Army contributes $2 in educational benefits for every $1 contributed by the soldier, with a maximum total of government-plus-member contribution of $8100.

Those enrolled have until 10 years after separation from service to use VEAP benefits. The enrollment period ended June 30, 1985 and was re-opened from Oct. 29, 1986 to March 31, 1987.

The new GI bill was developed as a readjustment benefit for veterans and as an incentive for bright, highly-motivated potential recruits to join the military. Personnel officials view it as the primary force behind marked increases in both numbers and quality of service personnel. Each of the military services rates the program as a critical component of its recruiting package.

The basic GI bill program affects those soldiers who came on active duty after June 30, 1985, certain persons on active-duty eligible for Vietnam-era GI bill benefits and reservists. Service academy graduates and ROTC scholarship commissionees are ineligible for the benefit.

New servicemembers are automatically enrolled in the program unless they elect to disenroll. The recruit is given one chance to withdraw at the reception battalion: once withdrawn, he may not re-enter the program.

Those who elect to participate have their pay reduced by $100 per month for 12 months. This money is non-refundable. In return, they receive $300 a month for 36 months when they have com-

Marsh wins Infantry award

U.S. Army Public Affairs

Secretary of the Army John O. Marsh, Jr., received the 1987 Doughboy Award at the Infantry Ball held in Springfield, Va. on Nov. 14.

The award, established in 1980, is presented each year to an individual who has significantly improved the morale and welfare of the Infantrymen.

The award consists of a silver-plated, World War I doughboy helmet mounted on a walnut base decorated with the crossed rifle insignia of the Infantry. Previous recipients include Bob Hope, Ross Perot, cartoonist Bill Mauldin and last year's winner Sen. Robert Dole (R-Kans.).

Marsh has served as Secretary of the Army since Jan. 30, 1981. He was commissioned into the Army at age 19, and served with the U.S. occupation forces in Germany.

After serving tours with the 29th Infantry Division, 116th Infantry Regiment and the State Headquarters Detachment to the Virginia National Guard, Marsh retired in 1976 with the rank of lieutenant colonel.

Marsh became Vice President Ford's assistant for national security affairs in January 1974. He then served as Ford's counselor, with cabinet rank, when Ford became president.

Presentation of the Doughboy Award to Secretary Marsh highlighted the ball to celebrate the 212th anniversary of the Infantry. More than 150 officers and their ladies attended the dinner-dance hosted by Major General Kenneth C. Leuer, Chief of Infantry and Commandant of the U.S. Army Infantry School.

Housing fires on rise at Benning

By James E. Floyd
Fort Benning Fire Department

Within the past year we have had an excessive amount of fires in family quarters here at Fort Benning. More so than ever before in the history of Fort Benning.

The main reason for such a great dollar loss is the fact that occupants who have a small fires try to extinguish the fire themselves before calling the Fire Department.

Once it gets out of control then the Fire Department is notified.

By all means if you can extinguish the fire do so, but call the Fire Department first.

By notifying the Fire Department first we can have professional firemen on the way to your house before it gets out ot control. Don't second guess or cuss, call us.

If you have small children, do not leave them unattended at anytime. Every member of your family shoud be educated in fire safety as soon as possible. If you cannot educate your children as to what to do and what not to do, call us, we will be glad to do it for you.

One of our major causes of fires is unattended children playing with matches. Another is pans with grease left on stoves unattended — results — grease fire. Still another cause is improper storage in furnace rooms, carports and storage sheds.

Let's all work together in the future and prevent careless fires in our homes.

Remember — the life you save may be your own.

If you need any information pertaining to Fire Prevention, call us at 545-2883. Your fire inspectors will be glad to assist you in any way.

Fires cause more than material losses

By James E. Floyd
Fort Benning Fire Department

The material loses from fires are enormous and measurable to a considerable degree; the human loses are not so easily calculated.

The initial shock from burn is dreadful. The traumatic experience alone can be remembered for a lifetime; but add to this the long siege in the hospital, the separation from family and friends, repeated surgery, repeated anesthesia with the dread of dying each time the patient is forcibly reduced to unconsciousness, the painful treatment, the application of discoloring chemicals and the inevitable time of sadness, dejection and hopelessness that comes with major burns.

Families go through parallel reactions; going from shock to dread, to fear for the life of a seriously burned relative, and the chronic apprehension and burden of concern about how the patient will look and what the different medical procedures will entail.

For all members of a family of which someone has been burned, there is a sense of guilt and culpability that can lead to chronic fainting of home life. This is a loss that is not measurable in monetary terms; although, it is most terrible kind of social price that can be paid.

A proper concern form humanity demands an end to conditions which present unnecessary and avoidable possibilities of destructive fires and an intensification of fire safety education

Please don't take Fire Prevention lightly. Who knows...the life you save my be your own!

Artists

gather materials from friends of the artist, dealers, collectors, filmmakers, writers, psychiatrists or any one who has had a relationship with the artist over a period of years." The Archives seeks documents, spoken remeniscences, photographs, slides, videotapes and film.

The papers in Finster's elaborate Folk Art Church pose a specific dilemma for the Archives, which does not collect finished works of art and is not in the habit of taking in papers that are part of works of art. "With the self-taught, it is often difficult to tell where the documentation ends and the art begins," Kirwin notes. Though this issue is not fully resolved, videotape has proven useful, just as it has for capturing imaginative environments and working methods that don't come across in still photos.

Both literate and illiterate self-taught artists have thrown another hardball at organizations such as the Smithsonian's Archives. That takes the form of illegible--perhaps coded--messages complementing a painting or sculpture. Are these writings part of an artists papers--or are they complete artworks?

That question comes up in the continuing curiosity about the late James Hampton's monumental assemblage of second-hand furniture, light bulbs and jelly jars covered in silver and gold foil. Known as "The Throne," which celebrates the Second Coming,the work includes various writings in ring binders. Along with more papers found in his Washington, D.C., garage, the writings are in a script that has yet to be deciphered. These have been microfilmed by the Archives, and Kirwin feels that if they can be translated, the documents may hold the key to a full understanding of Hampton's achievement, now exhibited at the National Museum of American Art in Washington, D.C.

Purely practical matters add to the trials of collecting. "Most of the artists live in predominately rural areas, tiny towns," Kirwin explains. "I have trouble buying slide film for our work, and cashing a traveler's check can be a real challenge."

At another level are matters such as respecting the privacy and independence of self-taught artists, whose work seems to be stimulated by a cultural isolation that serves to intensify the truth, vitality and power of their art, according to Kirwin. She recalls her first meeting with the shy, retiring David Butler. "I had brought a tape recorder, but I never turned it on because he was so uncomfortable with the machine.

Finster, on the other hand, truly thrives on the attention coming his way. In 1985, Kirwin wrote to Finster to ask that he consider donating his papers for research. Finster promptly replied--sending a package that contained a plywood cutout of Elvis Presley at age three. And taped to the frame was a note: "What about real samples of all my art I have invented...like ink art, nail art, pot mettle art...?

"I immediately thought, 'no, we don't want that,'" Kirwin recalls. "But you have to reconsider. Finster's offer reminds us of the issues we face in documenting self-taught artists, but it also inspires us to think creatively."

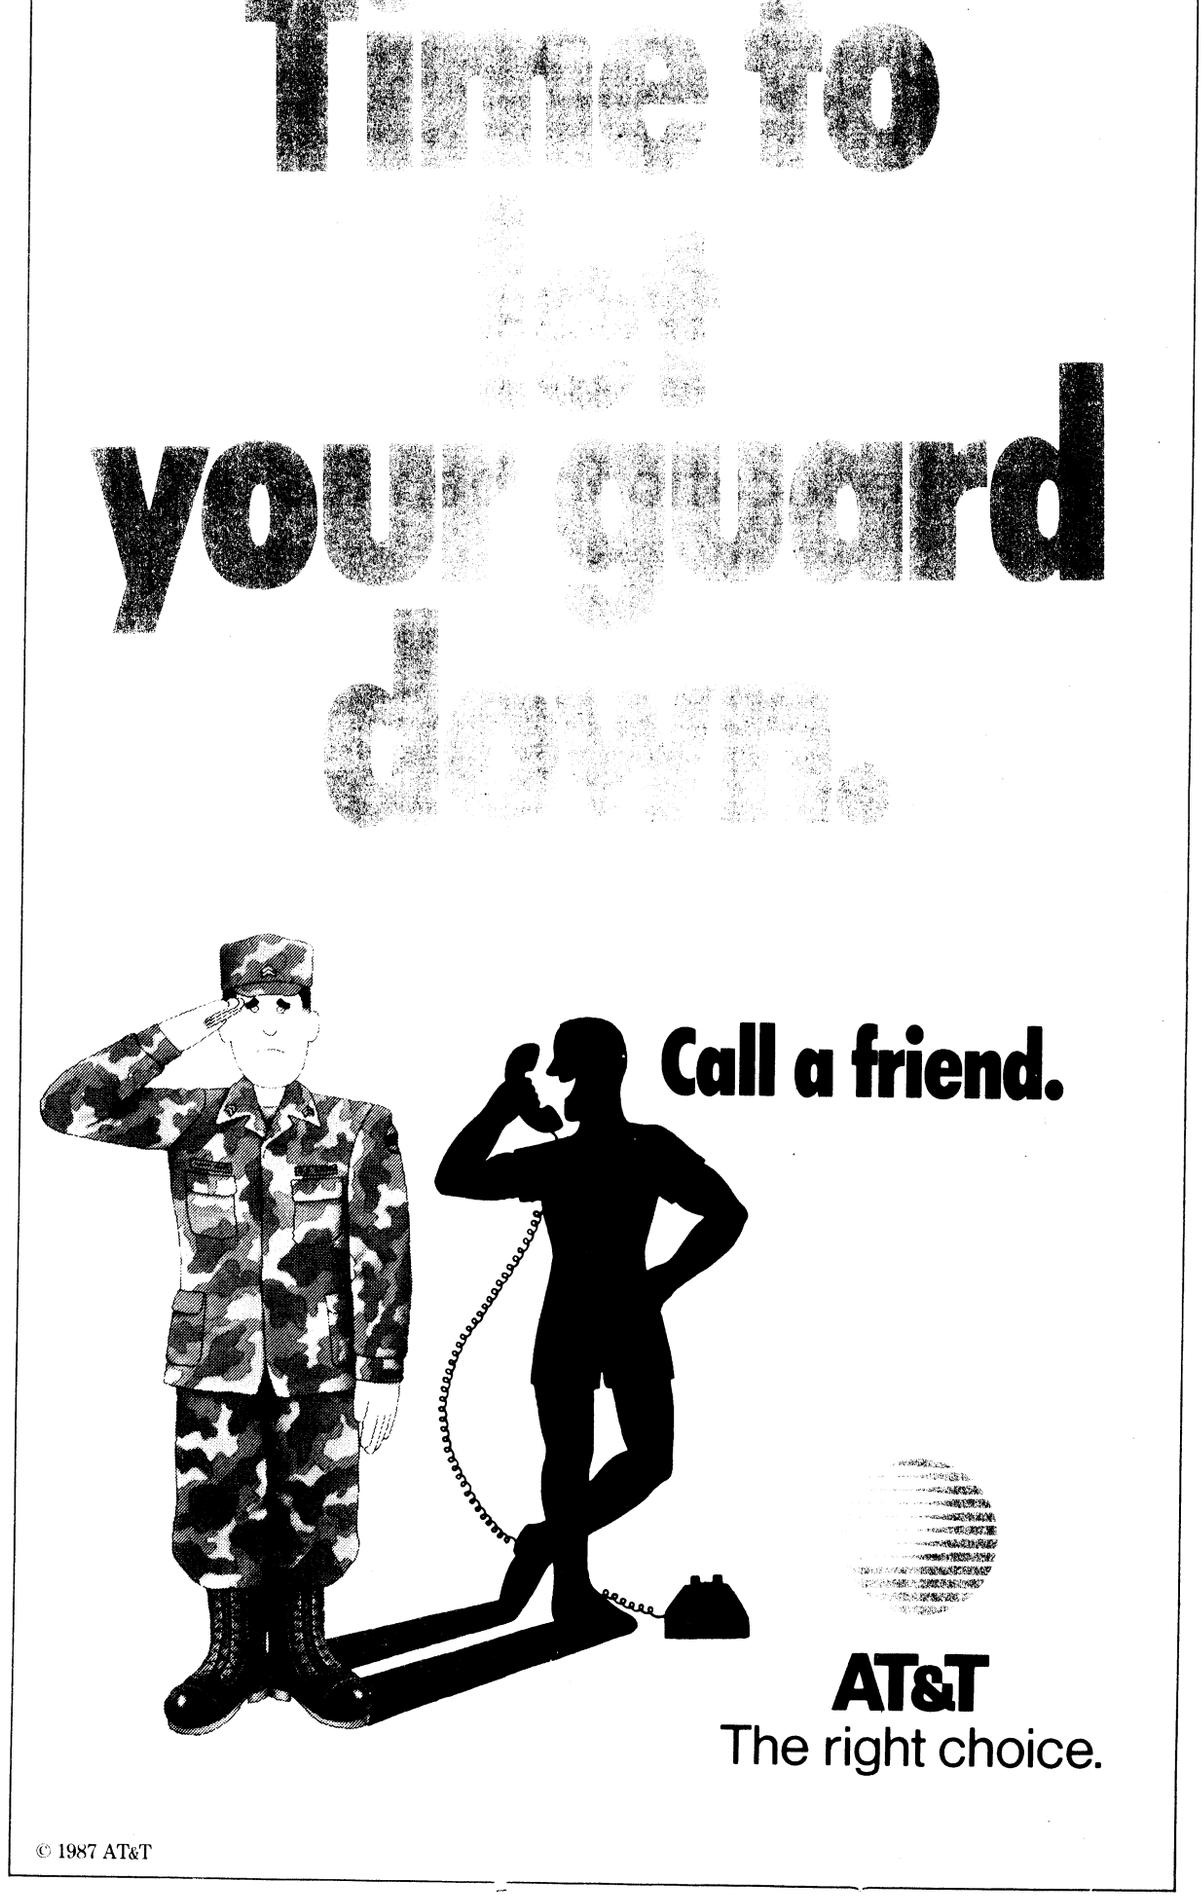
pleted as least three years of active-duty service and are enrolled fulltime in a college or other VA-approved school. Reduced monthly benefit is paid for part-time enrollment. Recruits with an initial obligation of less than three years receive $250 a month after serving two years on active duty.

Soldiers may begin using the current GI bill after completing two of the three years of active duty. Be aware that benefits expire 10 years after discharge or release from service.

Conversion from the old GI bill to the new one is relatively simple. Benefits for eligible active-duty soldiers under the Vietnam-era GI bill will be automatically converted to the new GI bill if —



- They have had no break in service since Oct. 19, 1984; and
- After June 30, 1985, they serve at least three continuous years on active duty.
- They serve two continuous years on active duty and four years in the selected reserve: or
- They are discharged from active duty for a service-connected disability or hardship; or
- They are discharged for the convenience of the government after completing 30 months of continuous active-duty service after June 30, 1985.
- Payment includes the basic benefit of the new GI bill ($300 per month) plus half of the Vietnam-era GI bill as of Dec. 31, 1989. Benefits become available Jan. 1, 1990 and are payable for 36 months or the number of months remaining on Vietnam-era GI bill entitlements as of Dec. 31, 1989, whichever is less. The maximum combined benefits for both the old and new GI bills are 48 months.

The new GI bill was renamed the "Montgomery GI bill" in a bill signed by President Reagan June 1. This was done to honor Rep. G.V. "Sonny" Montgomery, chairman of the House Veteran's Affairs Committee. Montgomery wrote and developed the legislation to provide a readjustment education benefit for veterans and to address recruitment and retention challenges faced by the Armed Forces.

"The new GI bill has played a major role in saving the all-volunteer force," Montgomery said. "The number of eligible young recruits is falling fast. Therefore, we must maintain a cost-effective means of attracting higher percentages to military service."

More information on these educational benefits is available through the total-Army career counselors or your local Army education center's education services officer.

Hotline serves as conduit to stop fraud and waste

By Tom Joyce
American Forces Information Service

"I want to report a case of fraud, waste and abuse."

Hundreds of times each year, Department of Defense Hotline staffers hear those words.

Sometimes the reports are petty and have no foundation. Those calls defeat the purpose of the hotline. But in other cases, the hotline serves as a conduit to fix legitimate cases of fraud, waste and mismanagement. In some instances, they represent a severe threat to national security or the safety of the men and women in uniform.

Defense Hotline Case No. 81-B00719 illustrates the effort, cooperation and coordination that goes into the investigation of many tips that are received each year.

Benjamin Simon, deputy director for special programs for the DoD Inspector General's Office, said Case No. 81-B00719 began when a government contractor employee reported that his boss was falsifying test records in connection with scheduled maintenance on Air Force C-130 aircraft. "We immediately recognized this as being a legitimate and serious allegation," said Simon. "Before it was over, it became a joint Air Force Office of Special Investigation, FBI and Defense Criminal Investigative Service project."

The caller said that not only were the records falsified, but technicians performing ultrasound tests were not qualified to do so. "The tests didn't meet the critically high standards the contract called for," said Simon.

The DoD hotline staff and DoD and government agencies assisted in evaluating the allegation's authenticity. "We have access to specialists in many areas for consultation," said Simon. "That includes auditors, engineers, inspectors, medical specialists and other scientists."

In this case, the matter was referred to the Defense Logistics Agency for evaluation. It advised that the allegations appeared to be criminal and requested the assistance of the Defense Criminal Investigative Service.

"At this point, the company still didn't know that it was under investigation," said Simon. "We were in contact with our confidential source, whom we found to be extremely reliable. We determined that the contractor was doing the testing required, so no one was in any immediate danger. However, the testing was still not as stringent as the contract called for."

The allegations were found to be true and other Air Force aircraft might be involved.

The Air Force Office of Special Investigation initiated an investigation and requested assistance from the Defense Criminal Investigative Service and the FBI. At this point, the contractor knew he was being investigated because federal agencies were requesting massive amounts of records.

Sufficient information was compiled and turned over to the U.S. Attorney. A grand jury handed down indictments. However, before the trial, the contractor pleaded guilty to 38 counts of making false statements. "Each statement represented a falsified test result," said Simon.

The firm was fined $380,000 and ordered to pay another $541,792 in restitution to the government.

The case was then returned to the DoD Hotline office. "We can't accept completed cases at face value, though," said Simon. "We have to analyze and evaluate the report to see that it was done objecrively and that the proper corrective measures were instituted to preclude a recurrence.

Under new rules, if the confidential source in the case had been a DoD civilian or military member, he would have been eligible for a monetary award.

Simon noted that of all the calls received at the hotline, only 20 to 25 percent result in investigation. Simon encourages those who believe they have legitimate fraud, waste and mismanagement complaints to immediately use one of the many avenues available to them. "We find that people tend to get a much faster resolution to their inquiries at the local level, since that's where the problem will be handled anyway," he said.

"However, if the people do not believe the matter will receive the proper or objective examination, or have any doubts about how to handle the matter, they should give us a call.

$500 penalty for falsifying W-4 Form

Army News Service

No, you won't be penalized if you receive a federal income tax refund in 1988, Internal Revenue Service officials say. This is a misunderstanding that needs to be clarified.

The $500 penalty mentioned in the instructions to Form W-4 apparently has caused many people concern about the effect of having too little or too much withheld from their wages.

Honest people need not worry, say officials. This penalty applies only when a taxpayer deliberately and knowingly falsifies a Form W-4 to reduce or eliminate the proper withholding of taxes. Honest mistakes in figuring the number of withholding allowances will not result in a penalty — obviously not when one receives a refund.

Of course, the usual penalties having to do with late payment, underpayment or non-payment are still in effect. These have been around a long time and have no relation to the $500 penalty for fraudulent misuse of the W-4.

In 1986, Congress instructed IRS to make withholding more accurate. For this reason and because of changes made by the 1986 Tax Reform Act, a revised Form W-4 was issued. The purpose of the new form is to enable taxpayers to more closely match tax withheld with tax to be paid.

It's important to compute your withholding accurately to avoid the shock of having to pay a large tax bill at the end of the year. If you discover, after you filed your new withholding certificate, that you made a mistake, it's possible to make a correction. Just file a second W-4.

For those who have not filed their withholding certificate yet — Oct. 1, 1987, was the deadline.

MARSHAL'S VIEWPOINT

By Wendell Choate
Provost Marshal's Office

It could be any night of the week and at 12:45 a.m. a call is made to the sponsor/parent of a military dependent to come to the military police station and pick up their dependent son/daughter.

The sponsor arrives and is informed that their dependent was picked up by the Military Police for curfew violation.

The regulation covering curfew is USAIC Regulation 210-5, section X, para. 39-e which states: All dependents under the age of 18 years will be required to be in their quarters after midnight each night except when accompanied by a parent or guardian.

Dependents 18 years will not be authorized to be out of their quarters between midnight and 5 a.m. each night.

Exceptions will be made for recognized functions of the schools or YAC, or in the event of emergencies, such request for exception will be coordinated in advance of the event with the Office of the Provost Marshal.

Any dependent found in violation of this curfew will be taken to the PMO where his/her parent or sponsor will be notified to come and escort the youth back to his/her quarters.

Any subsequent violation of the curfew by the same dependent will result in the Assistant Commander being notified of the violations. Curfew violations may also provide evidence of misconduct on the part of sponsors and their families who reside on-post and may cause them to be evicted from family housing.

As directed by the chief of staff at Fort Benning, for each dependent that is picked up for violating this regulation an entry will be made in the military police blotter. This regulation is not meant to be a harassment of the dependent children but as a regulation which protects not only residents of Fort Benning from juvenile misconduct, but to protect the dependent children themselves.

Every sponsor/parent should be aware of the potential dangers which exist when dependent children are out late at night, unattended. For further information, contact the Fort Benning Crime Prevention office at 545-1065/7610.

VA Q&A

EDITOR'S NOTE: Following are representative questions answered daily by VA counselors. Full information is available at any VA office.

Q: I was discharged from service on disability in May 1976 and notified by the VA in April 1977 that I was entitled to compensation. Am I entitled to vocational rehabilitation?

A: A veteran is entitled to vocational rehabilitation benefits if he or she is found to have an employment handicap. Generally, veterans must complete a rehabilitation program within 12 years from the date the VA notifies them of entitlement to compensation. This period may be adjusted or extended under certain conditions.

Q: Is there a penalty if a VA guaranteed home loan is partially or fully paid before it comes due?

A: No. There is no penalty if a VA loan is paid in advance.

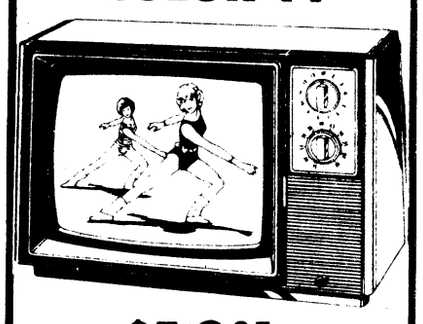
The Optometry Clinic at Martin Army Community Hospital changed its walk-in clinic for active duty to a same day appointment system.This change is being made in an effort to reduce the patient's waiting time and to provide better service.

Same day appointments will be available on Monday, Tuesday, Thursday and Friday afternoons. No morning appointments will be available since the optometrists screen patients at the Reception Station in the morning.

Appointments should be scheduled for routine eye examinations. They must be made by telephone only, between the hours of 8:30 and 10:30 a.m., for an appointment that afternoon. Call 544-3041/3042/3043.

Appointments are not needed if you only need to reorder glasses or order protective mask inserts from a current (less than one year old) prescription. These individuals can report to the clinic between 8 a.m. and 3:30 p.m. on any duty day with their current prescription, ID card and medical records.



TINNITUS CAN BE PREVENTED

Most Americans choose not to hear the warnings about tinnitus. How noise—any noise that is loud enough that you have to raise your voice to be heard—can cause tinnitus. Whether at work or play, jackhammering a city street or drag racing every weekend, the noise of modern living causes tinnitus. For more information write:

Chaplain wins essay contest

By Aimee R. Holden
Bayonet staff writer

If it hadn't been for his wife, Chaplain (CPT.) Christopher Wisdom wouldn't even have entered the AAFES "Let Freedom Ring" essay contest.

"She prompted me to submit the essay," Wisdom said. "I had originally written it as a mandatory Bayonet article for the spiritual section. I wasn't going to enter it in the contest. My wife kept encouraging me and she finally ended up hand carrying it to the AAFES office."

Her insistence paid off. Wisdom's essay won first place in the Southeast Region of the services-wide contest that was sponsored by Pentax.

The contest winners were announced in early October, and last week Wisdom and the four other regional winners traveled to Washington, D.C. to receive their awards.

Along with a 35-mm camera from Pentax, each winner received a framed copy of the United States Constitution presented by Sen. John Warner from Virgina.

"The whole thing was very elaborate," Wisdom said. "They payed for the trip there and everything else."

While in D.C. the winners did plenty of sightseeing. They toured the House of Representatives and dined with House members. They also visited Senate offices, where they were given their awards.

Wisdom said the highlight of the trip was the White House tour.

"We almost got to meet President and Mrs. Reagan, but it didn't happen," he said. "Probably because it was so close to the time of Mrs. Reagan's surgery and the death of her mother.

"But we waved at them, and they waved back," he said. "Of course, all the security people were in the middle, but it was still exciting.

"Less than 18 months ago I was a civilian and last week I was less than 100 yards from the President of the U.S.," he said. "I can't think of another country where that could happen."

Wisdom said that although he was very impressed with the trip, he was most impressed by his discovery of "how neat it is to be an American."

"This contest helped me to rediscover the Constitution," Wisdom said. "It used to be just a schoolboy's lesson to me. I couldn't tell you when the last time I read it before the contest was. That's not good considering that, as a U.S. soldier, I have a sworn duty to uphold it.

"This whole thing has made me realize how worthy of our loyalty the Constitution really is,." he said.

Wisdom also entered his essay in the Fort Benning Bicentennial essay contest, where in September he received a $200 U.S. Savings Bond for second place.

German dead honored

The post German Liaison Representatives celebrated German Memorial Day Sunday by conducting a wreath laying ceremony memorializing the 44 german soldiers who rest in the Fort Benning Cemetery. The soldiers were prisoners of war who died in the United States during World War II.

True spirit of Thanksgiving is a sense of loving gratitude

By Richard Goldsmith
Custer Terrace chaplain

In the New Testament, the word "thanksgiving" is derived from two words: good and grace.

The spirit of thanksgiving within us causes us to use well the grace of God. In that spirit, Thanksgiving becomes very personal and real.

In the true spirit of Thanksgiving, a sense of loving gratitude is felt as the many faces of people who have loved us and cared for throughout our lives appear in memory.

It is the faces of thanksgiving that make this day so very special to us. It is the faces of family and friends, special people over the years who went out of their way, some at great personal sacrifice, to assure our well-being.

I remember the sacrifice of my parents to assure my upbringing as a child. I also remember a next door neighbor who was my "second mother" in my formative years. I can still remember the pleasant aroma in her kitchen, and how she would always allow me to sample her cooking. She would wipe her hands on her apron and greet me with a hug almost every time I visited her home. When I remember her now, I am still embraced by her memory.

As a young soldier in Germany in the 1950s, I recall an noncommissioned officer who came into my quarters unexpectedly, finding things a mess. He caught me cold.

I had no excuse nor did I give one. I expected a chewing out, but instead he said to me, "I know that this room doesn't truly reflect the kind of soldier you really are. I'll be back in one hour."

As you can imagine, when he returned the room was shining. He took a quick look around, smiled at me, and said, "now this is you."

This same NCO also sat quietly with me when my friend was killed in an accident. The spirit of that great leader remains with me even now, some 31 years later. I would still want to walk into my life, look around with satisfaction and say, "now this is you."

But the one that dare not go unmentioned is the face of the young lady I married over 25 years ago. The impact that she has made upon my life goes beyond my poor power to express in words. Hers is the face of loveliness and kindness, of untold hours of waiting, of more moves than we can count, of faithfulness and hard work.

Three children bear her image, and have grown up well with character and courage. Of all the faces, hers is the one that best reflects the grace of God in my life. I thank God for every remembrance of her.

There are more leaders, soldiers and friends I could name who have their faces on my Thanksgiving hall of fame. They are a vital part of my heritage as a soldier and person. Time has varied only proximity, not the value of the impact of the relationships and the memories.

Webster defines "thankful" as "consciousness of benefits received." It is appropriate that the very word "thanksgiving" is the word used for the Christian communion, the Eucharist.

Thanksgiving is, indeed, grace used well. The word "grace" means receiving something that we did not deserve. It is the loving act of God intervening into our lives with His goodness.

Thanksgiving is a most appropriate time to express our gratitude with a special phone call or letter to the people who have lovingly and courageously altered the course of our lives.

CHAPEL BRIEFS

Workshop set for couples

A workshop will be held on Sat. Dec. 5, at the Religious Education Center for all couples of St. Maurice Catholic Parish who may be interested in working with the pre-marriage program. It will be held from 9 a.m. until approximately 4 p.m. with lunch and baby-sitting provided. Areas to be covered include communications skills, money management, religious faith in the family, abuse in relationships, sexuality in marriage, parenting, values and growth in relationships.

Participation in this workshop does not obligate you to work with the pre-marriage program. The information and skills gained from this workshop will be beneficial in enriching your own marriage as well as provide training for those who might like to assist with the pre-marriage program of the parish.

To ensure there will be sufficient materials (and food) available, contact Rich and Cathie Wampler (324-7493) if you plan to attend the workshop or if you have any questions regarding the program.

Enrichment classes to begin next week

The CCD Adult Enrichment program will begin a three-part program on families by Father John Powell Sunday at 7 p.m. in the Religious Education Center.

This program is about building new and better lines of communications between couples, parents and children, and between siblings.

Powell insists the family is a "laboratory of life," that it is where people learn how to relate to other people and how to use their talents.

All adults are welcome.

Writer expresses thoughts about visit to East, West Berlin

By William McMichael
Army News Service

EDITOR'S NOTE: McMichael edits "Ironsides," the command information newspaper serving the 1st Armored Division. He toured East Berlin while on the Berlin Orientation Tour. Here are his thoughts about what he experienced during his visit behind the Iron Curtain. West Berlin celebrates its 750th anniversary Nov. 30.)

WASHINGTON — Late at night lying in bed, I hear it roll over the low, continuous drone of Berlin's constant traffic.

Does it echo the sounds of 39 years past, when allied planes bringing food and supplies to the starving, blockaded city would land nearly every minute?

Or does it remind the older Berliners, the ones who were there, of that horrid time when those same allies were dropping bombs instead of parcels?

Perhaps, for some, it reminds them of both. The conflicting possibilities abound in the city with two sides, the city where communism and democracy live side-by-side, where the sharp contrast between east and west comes clearly into focus.

Modern sculptures and wall art seem to grace every downtown boulevard of West Berlin. Sidewalks filled with tourists and businessmen are peppered with punk rockers. The legendary night life keeps the city in perpetual motion. Anything goes. It's a celebration of freedom. The city is alive.

East Berlin is drab, colorless, humorless. Cheap, ugly cars trickle past street-corner sentries and past shabby, uninsulated tenements coated with residue of sulphur-based coal. Only in the "Alexander platz," the Eastern Bloc shopping showcase, facelifted for the 750th birthday celebration, is there any evidence of vibrancy. It is a police state.

West Berlin has maintained its vestiges of World War II by design. Perfectly preserved is the ominous "Reichstag," the building that housed Adolph Hilter's Nazi government, standing not 10 meters from The Wall. Rising high above the bustling downtown shopping district to surprise the first-time visitor is the "chipped tooth," the bomb-scarred Kaiser Wilhelm Chuch, still missing part of its steeple.

Bullet holes remain on the faces of East Berlin's buildings, too, but the buildings are still inhabited. Living monuments, to be sure, but dictated less by design than by economics.

Then there is the The Wall itself. It stretches for 28 miles between the two cities, 103 miles around the rest of West Berlin. It leaves no doubt where the boundary with communism lies.

Odd to think that the city surrounded is free, while those surrounding it are the prisoners.

It is said that East German youngsters are indoctrinated in the communist system practically from birth. Is it now a habit for the older generation? What concept of freedom do these East Berliners have?

For more than 8,000 of them over the past years, the dream of freedom has pushed them to attempt an escape. Just under 5,000 have made it to the west. Crosses on the west side of The Wall, many with fresh flowers at their base, mark the spots where those dreams of freedom died. In a way, they are monuments to the human spirit.

East Berlin has monuments too, but many do not belong to the East Germans, nor to the present. Looking down on the Garden of Remembrance in Treptow Park, I saw where 5,000 of the 20,000 Soviet soldiers who died in 1945's siege of Berlin are buried. Somehow, the Cold War, the counterpoint between their way of life and ours, seems to vanish in the mist. Once our allies, now our potential adversary. So much blood shed together, so much forgotten.

And what did those eyes on the east side say to me as they stared, I in my dress uniform, free to come and go? Everywhere, the eyes were staring, hard. Were they resentful? Hateful? Envious? Curious? I can't tell.

A few of them smiled. Maybe they know more of freedom than we think. I remember a young boy on a drab East Berlin street, walking behind his mother, turning to see our clearly marked U.S.Army Berlin tour bus as we halted for a signal.

Expressionless, he stopped, looking up the street and down. Turning back to us, he smiled broadly and gave a "thumbs up" gesture, then quickly dashed after his mother. Somehow I felt he knew what we were, and what we represented. Or did he?

Gazing out the open window of the duty train as we sped through the cool East German night, we witnessed the fields, the trees and occasional lights suddenly plunge into darkness from a concrete wall.

But it was only a tunnel, not The Wall. And it blocked my view for only a moment. In 1961, the people of East Berlin saw a concrete wall go up that has blocked their view ever since. They are still riding a train in the night, but for them, the darkness of the tunnel never stops.

Billions in benefits go unclaimed by veterans, families

Consumer Education Research Center

Although over $28 billion were paid out in veterans benefits last year, billions more went unclaimed in the past few years. Every year eligiblity for benefits and the array of available benefits are changed and very few veterans or their survivors keep up with the latest rules. Because of this, and changes in their circumstances, many veterans, their families and survivors are now entitled to money and other benefits from the government even though they were not eligible in the past.

These were the findings of a study group of the Consumer Education Research Center, an 18-year-old national nonprofit consumer group. They found that over one-fourth of the money paid in veterans benefits goes to persons who never served in the armed forces of the United States. Most of these were related by blood or marriage to veterans but many were not. Others were members of the armed forces of countries who fought with us against our enemies.

Each year the Center compiles a book describing the latest rules on available benefits and how to qualify for those benefits. The 192-page 1987 edition of Complete Guide to Federal and State Benefits for Veterans, Their Families, and Survivors with a foreword by Sen. Robert Dole had just been issued. It is available for $6 (plus $2 ph) from CERC-Vets, P.O. Box 336, South Orange, N.J. 07079.

Mr. Robert L. Berko, executive director of the consumer group, says that many survivors of veterans are unaware that they might be eligible to receive money, medical care, educational assistance, help in buying a home or other benefits. In fact, eligiblility and benefits change constantly and some people ineligible in previous years are now able to start receiving money.

The study found that many people are unaware that they are considered dependents or survivors of veterans. These include those involved in illegal marriages, those who remarried after the death or disability of a veteran, childen born out of wedlock to a veteran, parents of a veteran and even dependant grandchildren. Any of these may be eligible for benefits.

Mr. Berko says that the study questioned veterans about benefits and found that the majority were unfamiliar with most of the benefits now being granted under Federal and State laws. Even veterans now collecting were unaware of other benefits for which they were eligible and could be collecting.

For instance, disabled veterans can receive apparel allowances if they use wheel chairs, artificial limbs or any prosthetic device that can wear or damage clothing and, if they have a spouse in need of care they can receive an allowance to pay someone to provide that care.

The consumer group discovered that very few ex-GIs knew they could, in many cases, get dental treatment for non-service problems.

Few knew that (unemployed veterans) 65 or older are considered, permanently and totally disabled and, those with limited income and saving, can collect as much as $11,000 per year.

Other benefits the consumer found that were little known are:

A veteran (or dependent) can receive up to $837 (40 percent in advance) if he or she will assist the VA in a work-study program while in an educational program.

Federal agencies are required to establish affirmative action plans to facilitate employment and advancement of veterans with any degree of disability. In fact some job classifications must be filled by eligible vets.

Families of veterans buried or mentioned on commemorated on Tablets of the Missing overseas are eligible for free passports to visit these sites.

In addition, the book includes a complete list of VA facilities and information to help secure the information needed with VA applications.

"Even though the Congress and the various state legislatures have provided for money and services to be given to veterans and their dependents," Mr. Berko states, "unless the people know they are eligible and apply they will not collect anything."

As Sen. Bob Dole, a decorated veteran and one familiar with the bureaucracy says in his foreword, "Mr. Berko's book goes a long way in helping America's veterans cut through the red tape so they can receive the benefits they earned and deserve."

Great American Family Awards program seeks to help parents

By Evelyn D. Harris
American Forces Information Service

MSgt. William Griffith, his wife, Carolyn, and their children, Elizabeth, Jennifer and Christopher, represented military families at a White House ceremony celebrating healthy family life recently. The Griffith family is stationed at the Marine Corps Air Station, El Toro, Calif.

First Lady Nancy Reagan, honorary chairwoman of the American Family Society, presented the Griffiths and five civilian families with plaques at the ceremony.

The Great American Family Awards program was begun in 1982 by the American Family Society, a non-profit organization that seeks to help parents build happy, productive and enduring family relationships. For its annual awards, the society selects families who will serve as role models to other parents.

The Griffiths represent quality military families who meet the challenges of military life. The Armed Services YMCA coordinates the awareness program with the military branches. Including the Griffiths, 115 U.S. military families from all services were recognized locally throughout the world. The program officials stress that it is not a competition. Armed Services YMCA officials said, "We want to focus on all successful families. We wanted to choose a family that was down-to-earth, so younger enlisted families would look at them and say, 'We can do that, too.'"

"This is the greatest honor we'ev ever received," said Carolyn Griffith. However, she and her husband agreed that they had done only what all good families were supposed to do. "We know other families that are quietly doing as well or better at fostering a healthy family life, serving the community and instilling the right values in their children.," said William. "But we're fortunate to be in the military system and be recognized for what we have done."

The Griffiths were selected as the 1986 Marine Family of the Year by their local chamber of commerce. They believe that being in the military has been a help to their goals as a family.

After seeing an urgent appeal on their local television station six years ago, the Griffiths began taking foster children into their home. They have taken in 21 children, one of whom, Christopher, they adopted.

Medical care for the foster children is covered by California. The only military service they use for the foster children is — occasionally — the child care center. They have not asked for or been authorized larger quarters on base because of their foster children.

But being in the military has taught the Griffiths values that have helped them be better parents. "I'm proud to be a Marine's wife. I was also a Marine's daughter," said Carolyn. "One of the things you learn in the Marines is the value of continuity — the paycheck is always there, you're taught to prepare for the future and so on. That's a value that has been lacking in the home life of many of the little children we take in," she added.

William added that the discipline he learned in the Marines has helped him give his children and the foster children a sense of the importance of setting goals and meeting them.

"We only have these children a little while, no longer than 18 months," said Carolyn. "While we have them, we hope to give them a little push in the right direction."

The Griffiths also work with the foster children's natural parents and invite them over to watch the interaction with the children. Carolyn Griffiths believes many of these parents were not given the love they needed or taught how to be parents by their own. She wants to show them how to provide a good environment for their children when they get them back.

Unlike many military families, the Griffiths have not had to move often. William, an avionics chief, has been assigned overseas, but his wife and children lived in the same home on El Toro for 12 years. William is retiring soon, and the family has just now moved to a larger home in Irvine, Calif.

The Griffiths are active speakers and recruiters for the Orange County foster care program. They want to encourange other military families to take in a foster child if they feel they have "the love, the time and the room for just one more." However, they say prospective foster parents must discuss it with their own children. "We reassured our children that we were doing this because we wanted to give to the community — not because we weren't getting something from our own children," said Carolyn.

507th PIR celebrates history during reunion

Members of the 1st of the 507th march in a parade in downtown Columbus during the drafting of 18-year-olds in World War II.

Ann M. McDonald

Secretary of the Army John O. Marsh Jr. pins the wings on the company guidon making it officially Airborne qualified.

Ann M. McDonald

A rapelling demonstration is one of the many events the participants of the reunion saw during their visit to Fort Benning.

507th PIR Correspondent

The 15-man pathfinder team struggled aboard the C-47A Dakota and settled uncomfortably into their parachute harnesses. Added to their discomfort was the additional 100 pounds of combat equipment for the expected three-and-a-half hour flight to their drop zone in Northern France.

Led by 1st Lt. John Joseph, the team waited impatiently as the Dakota's twin engines coughed into life, increased power and finally pulled the paratrooper laden aircraft from the sealed airfield in the English Midlands at 11:15 p.m. into the cold, damp night of June 5, 1944.

As the lead element turned south, they concentrated their thoughts on the mission at hand-- the crossing of the English Channel and making a night combat parachute assault into the dark French countryside west of the Merderet River on the penninsula of Normandy.

Their objective was to mark a drop zone with lights and beacons for the 116 airplanes carrying the remainder of the 507th Parachute Infantry Regiment that was following about 30 minutes behind them.

As the airplane appoached the intended drop zone, Joseph made sure his team was ready and at 2:32 a.m. on June 6, leaped from the left side-door of the airplane into the darkness. Descending rapidly and coming under almost immediate enemy attack, he assembled as many of his men as possible, working feverishly to mark the 507th's intended drop zone for the follow-on paratroopers who were due to arrive shortly.

Unknown to the pathfinders, however, were the numerous problems the transports were encountering along their flight routes leading to the drop zones. A combination of fog, anti-aircraft fires and enemy night fighters that forced the transports to take evasive action.

Scattered and confused, the transports thus delivered the 507th into their first combat action with excessive drop speeds and improper drop altitudes.

The regiment entered combat confused and divided, with one element near Montebourg, another south of Carentan and the remainder astride the Merderet River, east of their intended drop zone.

The situation was a little different during the 507th Parachute Infantry Association's reunion conducted here recently when 450 paratrooper veterans of World War II descended on the Columbus/Fort Benning Community.

These men were not met with hostility but with open arms and warm greetings by the newly regimentalized 507th PIR.

The unit has a different mission than it did 40 years ago, but the spirit is still alive.

Again leading the way for his regiment was now Col. (retired) John Joseph who, as the 507th Association president, the man responsible for planning, organizing, coordinating and conducting a reunion that the 507th veterans said was the best they had seen.

They began their visit with a bus tour of post and observation of graduation jump on Fryar Drop Zone. The next day, the reunion attended an Airborne in Action demonstration and the graduation of Cos. C and D with Secretary of the Army, John O. Marsh, Jr. as guest speaker.

Marsh honored the veterans and their actions of yesterday with his remarks. After his speech, he presented the Trainer of the Year Award to SFC Robert Reeves of Co. A.

The award was named after Pvt. George Peters of Co. G, 507th PIR. Peters was awarded the Medal of Honor for his actions during the parachute assault across the Rhine River for Operation Varsity on March 24, 1945 and is awarded annually by the association.

The attendees gathered for a picnic at Eubanks Field after the graduation ceremony. Other events conducted that weekend included a banquet honoring the trainer of the year and a memorial service, which concluded the convention.

Vehicle accidents # 1 cause of accidental death, falls # 2

National Safety Council

Chicago – Back in 1802, while speeding along at the frightful rate of 10 mph, Richard Crevethick lost control of his steam carrige and ripped up a number of palings. Thus marks the first recorded automobile accident.

As late as 1896, England still had a law resulting from the accident, which prohibited any power-propelled vehicle to travel the highway at a higher speed than 4 mph.

From these humble beginnings, the automobile emerged as a leading form of transportation. According to the National Safety Council, more than 1.861 trillion miles are now traveled each year in the United States by motor vehicles.

Unfortunately, motor vehicle accidents are also the nation's leading cause of accidental death. In 1986, more than 47,900 Americans lost their lives in motor vehicle crashes.

The Council, which is celebrating its 75th anniversary, has included traffic safety as a priority in its agenda since soon after its formation. Created in 1913 to address workplace accidents, Council activities rapidly expanded to include vehicle safety.

In 1912, there were 3,100 motor vehicle fatatlities when the number of registered vehicles totaled only 950,000. By 1924, motor vehicle deaths were approaching 20,000 a year.

To help reduce these figures, the Council joined with the U.S. Chamber of Commerce in asking Herbert Hoover, then secretary of commerce, to call a National Conference of Street and Highway Safety. The conference resulted in the preparation of the Uniform Vehicle Code, which was to become the model for traffic laws in every state.

Since then, the Council has been involved in traffic issues ranging from safety belts and airbags to speed limits and alcohol-impaired driving.

In 1936, the Council established the Committee on Alcohol and Drugs, becoming the first organization in the nation to attempt to address the problem of the drinking driver. In 1982, the Council participated in the Presidential Commission on Drunk Driving, and became parent host to the National Commission Against Drunk Driving in 1984.

Other Council highway safety activities have included:

Make It Click Campaign -- Launched in 1981, this annual activity encourages Americans to sign a pledge to buckle up.

Childsafe Program -- This program, established in 1979, teaches parents the importance of child restraints.

Defensive Driving Course -- Begun in 1964, DDC has trained more than 17 million drivers nationwide. New DDC classes include "Coaching the Mature Driver" for older adults, and a program for the straight truck.

Committee On Winter Driving Hazards-For nearly 50 years, the committee -- established in 1939 -- conducted annual vehicle tests on frozen lakes and airstrips in Minnesota, Michigan and Wisconsin.

55- MPH Speed Limit Promotion -- Following passage of the national 55 mph speed limit in 1973, the Council became a leading porponent of the lifesaving benefits of the fuel-saving measure. The Council estimates that increasing the speed limit to 65 on all rural interstates will result in an additional 450 traffic deaths each year.

According to the Council, traffic accident prevention efforts have paid off. While the number of traffic deaths have increased, the traffic death rate has declined. The 1985 and 1986 mileage rates of 2.57 deaths per 100 million vehicle miles are the lowest on record.

Killer Accident #2

A 1920 article from the publication "Labor World" tells the story of Tom Cleary, who in 1880 fell from a freight train and as a result, "mislaid" his legs.

According to the article, Cleary -- who was now selling in Ithaca, New York -- was quoted as saying, "Talk about the high cost of shoes. Why, I have to pay $200 for a pair of legs every few years, and then pay for a pair of shoes besides! And I don't get much fun out of walking, either."

Unfortunately, accidental falls are a very real safety concern. Falls are the second leading cause of accidental death in the United States, according to the National Safety Council.

The Council,

encourages the public to realize the danger of accidental falls. In 1986, 11,000 Americans fell to their deaths -- only 2,500 less than the number of people who died annually in fatal falls in the early 1900s. More than half of all fatal falls occur in the home.

The most common trigger of these accidents is a rug or the floor itself, which is sometimes slippery.

Older persons share the highest risk of losing their lives in falls. Individuals aged 65 and over have accounted for at least 70 percent of fall deaths each year since 1976.

These preventive measures will help prevent falls:

Arrange furniture to open paths through rooms and eliminate tripping hazards.

Install handrails on both sides of stairways that have two or more steps -- indoors and outdoors.

Tack down carpet edges and throw rugs, or anchor them with double-sided tape.

Install sturdy, metal grab bars in tubs and showers. Non-skid mats or textured strips are also recommended for the tub and shower floor.

Killer Accident #3

Little was done to teach people how to swim at the turn of the century. Wilbert Longfellow, a waterfront reporter during the 1900s, wrote that bathing beaches "lacked rescue equipment. Rescue methods were mostly of the 'bust 'em in the jaw and roll 'em over the barrel' type."

According to the National Safety Council, drowning remains a serious safety issue. While the death rate for drowning has dropped dramatically, from 10.6 in 1913 to 2.3 in 1986 for every 100,000 Americans, thousands of people die each year in drowning accidents.

In 1986, drownings claimed the lives of 5,600 Americans, making the third leading cause of accidental death in the United States. More than 20 percent of these drownings happen to children under the age of 15.

Most drownings occur in natural water environments, such as lakes and rivers, while most swimming pool incidents happen in private facilities at homes, apartments, hotels and resorts. Unintentional slips and falls into the water account for more than half of all drownings.

These safety tips can help prevent the tragedy of drowning:

Never swim alone. Swim in areas supervised by a lifeguard whenever possible. Stay within your swimming limitations.

Check water depth before diving. Do not dive into depths of less than four feet. Never dive into an above-the-ground pool.

Make sure an adult supervises children in or near any swimming pool or body of water at all times. Empty plastic portable or wading pools after children have

Hikers, campers, picnickers check out Cloudland Canyon

Georgia Department of Natural Resource

Nestled atop Lookout Mountain in Georgia's hilly nortwest corner lies Cloudland Canyon State Park. Hikers, nature trail walkers, campers and picnickers will find this 2,000-acre park enchanting.

According to geology reports, the gorge was covered by the ocean about 300 million years ago. As water levels fell, rivers and creeks began to separate the hills,creating rocky cliffs that rise form 800 to 1,800 feet above sea level. Sitton Gulch Creek, credited with carving out the canyon, still flows through the area.

Along the four-and-one-half-mile nature trail following the rim of the canyon, hikers will pass "hanging" rocks, scenic overlooks, and lush forests. Squirrels and chipmunks sometimes scamper across the path, while butterflies are often seen around the wildflowers that sprout up in the woods. For more serious hikers, Cloudland Canyon offers a challenging seven-mile backcountry trail with two campsites for overnight stays.

"Late fall is probably the ideal time of year to see Cloudland Canyon," said Park Superintendent Herman Channell, "The leaves have turned, and the weather is just cool enough for a pleasant hike."

Operated by the Georgia Department of Nautral Resources, the park contains 75 tent and trailer sites, a 40-bed group camp, trails, picnic areas, tennis courts and a swimming pool.

The 16 rental cottages on the park offer comfortable accommodations for weekend getaways or week-long visits. Fully equipped with kitchen utensils and linens, the cottages provide everything guests will need except food. Weekend rates for one, two and three-bedroom cottages are $45, $55 and $65 per night respectively, with a $10 discount on weeknights. Call the park in advance for reservations (404) 657-4050.

The park offers several special events each year including Crafts in the Clouds and the Wildflower Program in May, and in October, hikers can join in an overnight backpacking trip.

Cloudland Canyon State Park, open 7 a.m. until 10 p.m. is located 25 miles N.W. of LaFayette,off Georgia Highway 136. For more information about this and other parks, please write the Georgia Department of Natural Resources, Communications Office, 205 Butler Street, S.E., Suite 1258, Atlanta, Ga. 30334 or call toll-free in Georgia 1-800-3GA-PARK, or outside Georgia call 1—800-5GA-PARK.

Pet now shipped cheaper for PCS

By Sgt. Maj. Rudi Williams, USA
American Forces Information Service

Military pet owners now pay only half of what they used to pay to ship their treasured animals to and from most overseas locations. Military Airlift Command officials cut pet shipment fees in half after discovering that costs to the government were lower than expected.

It now costs between $10 and $75 to ship family pets — dogs and cats only — from the United States overseas and back. Japan, Korea, and the United Kingdom are not included because of their strict rules against the importation of dogs and cats. Also, the Military Airlift Command will not ship such family pets as reptiles, birds and fish, since most countries ban their importation.

"Military people traveling to Japan, Korea and the United Kingdom must ship their pets commercially at higher costs," said a Military Airlift Command official. However, families who get a dog or cat while in those countries can ship the pet stateside when they return at the special rates.

"While the service isn't free, it beats the high costs of commercial air-freight transportation for pets from the states to overseas," the spokesman said.

For example, a pet owner would have to pay $406.26 to ship a 15-pound dog and a 10-pound cat from Washington, D.C., to Seoul, South Korea, according to a spokeswoman for the United Airlines cargo office. "That includes the weight of a medium-sized cage for each animal," she pointed out. "We sell cages for $35 each, which isn't included in the shipping cost."

The Military Airlift Command flights do not have pet-shipping containers for sale, rent or loan.

In addition to shipping containers and costs, pet owners are responsible for immunizations, clearances and ground transportation. When requesting a reservation for a pet, passengers must have a DD Form 2208, Rabies Vaccination Certificate, or civilian equivalent as proof of ownership.

For commercial flights, "they must have the original and one copy of a health certificate no more than 30 days old. A copy goes with the cage and animal. They must also have an import license," said the United Airlines spokewoman.

"The pet-shipment program is restricted to those passengers in a permanent-change-of-station status only," said a Military Airlift Command spokesman. "There is a limit of two pets per family — cats or dogs only."

The program was started in October 1986 after a five-month test to determine if shipping pets on Military Airlift Command flights would hamper other flight operations.

"Families should make reservations for their pets' travel when they make their own flight reservations," said the spokesman. "Pets are carried aboard military flights as excess baggage."

If a passenger shows up with a pet and there is no space on the military charter flight, the owner has to arrange and pay for kenneling and transportation on a commercial flight, according to Military Airlift Command officials.

The special rates are only good on Category B flights, which are flights where DoD has chartered the entire airplane. Local transportation offices can make arrangements for pet shipment of commercial Category A and Y flights, but owners have to pay the commercial rates. DoD contracts only for blocks of seats on theses flights.

Regulations prohibit shipment of pets on military aircraft, except to and from Guantanamo Bay, Cuba, Lajes Field, Azores, and between West Germany and Turkey.

Scientist study "stromalite," first life forms on Earth

By John Barrat
Smithsonian News Service

On tropical shores around the globe, otherworldly-looking formations resembling huge fluffy dinner rolls can be found anchored on the ocean's floor. In reality, the formations are as hard as stone, layers of calcium carbonate molded together by colonies of algae and bacteria as protection from the ocean's turbulent environment.

Scientists who study early life on our planet call these natural curiosities "stromalites." The formations, they say, are among the oldest known forms of life. A 3.5 billion-year old stromalite, for example, is displayed in a new exhibition, "The Earliest Traces of Life," at the Smithsonian's National Museum of Natural History in Washington, D.C.

Although stromalites have provided some answers about the emergence of life, many questions remain. The problem, scientists say, lies in the gap of time between the Earth's formation, about 4.6 billion years ago, and the appearance of the first stromalites in the fossil record, about 3.5 billion years ago. What happened over those billion years to give rise to stromalites and, subsequently, every form of life on the planet? This has become one of the most enduring and puzzling questions in science.

Research efforts are full of speculation, Dr. Kenneth Towe, a Smithsonian geologist and curator of the Natural History Museum's exhibition, says. "The farther back we search in the geologic record, the less and less there we find." All fossil and other environmental evidence which might provide scientists with clues to the processes that produced the very first living organism have been obscured by a variety of natural processes over the millenia.

Researchers, however, continue to investigate and to construct plausible scenarios for the rise of life on Earth. Recent work, in fact, has led them to revise earlier concepts and to re-evaluate the possibilities of life existing elsewhere in the universe.

One of the most famous of these endeavors took place in the early 1950s when two University of Chicago researchers, Dr. Stanley Miller and Dr. Harold Urey, shook the scientific community by proving that amino acids — a compound essential to living cells — could be produced from a mix of hydrogen, methane and ammonia gases. The researchers jolted this mixture with electricity, simulating lightning, to provide energy for the production of organic molecules.

The results of the Miller-Urey experiment led scientists to speculate that life began in a soupy, hydrogen-rich sea of molecules, known as the "primordial soup." Through collisions of these molecules in the primordial soup, billions of molecule combinations were formed, some resulting in long, complex molecule chains. Amino acids and nucleotides — another compound essential to life — were among the chains produced. Over millions of years, the amino acids and nucleotide chains linked up and formed a strange new compound — one that could copy itself and proliferate. The first "living system" was formed on our planet.

The widely-accepted Miller-Urey theory of a hydrogen, methane and ammonia-rich environment has been challenged a number of times since the early 1950s. Using computer models of the early atmosphere, for example, Dr. Joel Levine, an atmospheric chemist at the National Aeronautics and Space Administration's Langley Research Center in Hampton, Va. recently concluded that methane and ammonia gases could not have lasted long enough in the early atmosphere to combine to form more complex organic molecules, the precursors of living systems. Molecules of methane and ammonia gas, he explains, broke down rapidly. Furthermore, the gases were not replenished by biological processes — the source for both gases today — on a planet devoid of life. Levine and colleagues turned their attention to volcanic emissions.

"Because of the intense volcanic activity during earth's early history roughly 4.6 billion years ago," Levine says, "we can now assume that steam, carbon dixode and nitrogen — the main products of volcanic eruptions — were abundant in the prebiotic atmosphere."

Several researchers, in fact, have re-created the Miller-Urey results using the gases suggested by Levine. Animo acids were again among the chemical compounds formed. The chemical recipe of the Miller-Urey theory changed, then, but not the premise that life originated through a random combination of amino acid and nucleotide nolecule chains.

Another researcher, however, believes that the formation of amino acids and nucleotides is not a random event. "It is not a chance thing that different molecules come together to form amino acids and nucleotides," Dr. Cyril Ponnamperuma, director of the Laboratory of Chemical Evolution at the University of Maryland in College Park, says. "It is an inherent chemical process. Once you have the right conditions, the chemical synthesis of life may well be instantaneous."

According to Ponnamperuma, the steps of the molecular origin of life are, for the most part, well understood. "What we really don't understand," he says, "are processes that gave birth to cell organization...the development of a coordinated group of molecules working together as one organism."

Similarly, the Smithsonian's Towe points out, "A living cell is much more than the sum of its molecular parts.Chemical reactions that run even the simplest organism are precisely linked and coordinated; energy released from one reaction drives another. How these systems first got started is still unknown." A major step to the establishment of these "living systems," says Dr. John Oro, a biochemist at the University of Houston, was the generation of a skin or membrane, which created a subenvirnoment in which chemical reactions between molecules were more likely to occur. "When you trap molecules from the outside world in a closed environment, you speed up the rate and frequency of their reactions with one another," he says.

One of the most important components for such membranes, Oro says, were fatty acids, formed by carbon monoxide and hydrogen in the presence of a metallic catalyst, such as iron or nickel. In turn, fatty acids form lipids — compounds that are insoluble in water and compose the membranes of many living cells. Oro has succeededin creating such lipids in the laboratory. "Microscopic balloons of lipids, known as liposomes, from spontaneously," Oro notes, "and could easily have encapsulated organic molecules as they formed."

Departing from primordial-soup theories, research chemist Dr. Lelia Coyne at the NASA-Ames Research Center in Moffett Field, Calif., is examining the electronic structure of clays and their influence on the development of organic molecules.

So far, researchers have found that clays have the ability to store energy, which can be released as ultraviolet light. Such energy may have been used to drive chemical reactions between organic molecules closely associated with clay, Coyne says.

Further, researchers theorize that clays are capable of storing and replicating information about their molecular structure. Coyne proposes that this information-storing capacity of clays may have initially been transferred to organic molecules, which, in turn, learned to begin their own replication. "Biologically significant molecules — formed on and interacting with clay surfaces — would have led to molecular systems, which may have aided in the development of proto-cells," Coyne says. "These clay-organic systems may have thn mutually evolved to produce the first living cells."

Less earthbound theories also exist. Some researchers now speculate that life — or at least its ingredients — was "delivered" to our planet from outer space. Analysis of a meteorite that fell in Australia in 1969 revealed the presence of a number of amino acids. Other meteorites contain amino acids and clay minerals.

"Aggregates of formaldehyde molecules were observed last year in Halley's comet," Oro notes, "and there was plenty of hydrogen cyanide and water evident as wll." Both formaldehyde and hydrogen cyanide are necessary to produce both amino and nucleic acids. That comets might have delivered the organic materials to create life, Oro notes, dovetails with the "giant-impact" theory of the origin of the moon. That theory holds that the collision of a Mars-sized body with the primitive Earth ejected most of the Earth's organic materials into outer space. These materials were eventually replenished through thousands of subsequent comet collisions with the earth. Nonetheless, Cyne says, "even if we synthesize life from molecules at some point in the future, or discover its origin, we will never be able to definitely say, 'life began this way.' We will only be able to say it MIGHT have formed this way."

Smithsonian

This illustration shows how the Earth might have looked 3.5 billion years ago. Algae and other primitive forms of life were already in abundance. But how the very first organisms emerged sometime between 4.6 and 3.5 billion years ago, roughly Earth's first billion years, remains a mystery.

Killer Accident #4

In 1725, Benjamin Franklin advocated fire protection in his Philadelphia newspaper, the "Pennsylvania Gazette." After a blaze in 1730 threatened the entire city, the public took his arguments seriously and the nation's first fire department was formed. Ben Franklin served as its chief.

Today, fire is still a serious issue. According to the National Safety Council, fire is the fourth leading cause of accidental death in the United States -- and the second leading cause of accidental death in the home.

In 1986, 4,800 Americans lost their lives in fire-related accidents. About 80 percent of those tragedies occurred at home.

It was a tragic fire which prompted the creation of the Council, when some 150 women lost their lives in a factory fire in 1911, a group of safety leaders called for an organized safety movement. In 1913, the National Safety Council was formed.

Preventing fire is high among the Council's priorities.

Smoking -- The number one cause of home fire deaths, it is probably the most easily prevented. Most fires caused by careless smoking start in living rooms, where cigarettes dropped on upholstered furniture can smolder for hours before finally bursting into flames.

Since no measure is completely foolproof, smoke detectors should be installed outside bedrooms. Check the detectors batteries monthly, to make sure they are in working order.

The 1986 fire death rate of 2.0 per 100,000 population is the lowest on record. Since 1976, the fire death rate has decreased 31 percent and fire deaths have fallen 24 percent.

"Charlie Rock" wins USAIC Football Tourney

Ron Allen
Bayonet Staff

The "Charlie Rock" of C Co., 1st Bn., 29th Inf. pulled off a second half shut-out to beat the A Co., 43rd Eng "Raiders", 22-14, Monday night in the USAIC Flag Football Championship.

The Raiders jumped out to a 6-0 lead early in the first half when Tommy High fired a 30 yarder to tightend Sherwin Winbush who promptly took it in the endzone. The extra point attempt failed.

The lead was short lived however as Charlie Rock quarterback, Gregory Wooten, ran the ball 60 yards on Rock's second play of the game for the TD. Wooten then fired the ball to tightend Curtis Williams in the endzone for the 2-point conversion.

Wooten ran the second Rock score in from 5 yards out later in the half making the score 14-6 after the extra point attempt failed.

High connnected for another Raider TD pass just prior to the half time gun this time to center Cordel Allen. The extra points came moments later with another pass to Allen in the endzone leaving a 14-14 tie going into the half.

The Rock shut down the Raider defense in the second half and were held for only one TD of their own. That final TD came on a 10-yard pass play from Wooten to tightend Jimmie walker in the endzone. A 50-yard pass play from Wooten to Walker two plays prior set up the scoring play. The extra points came on a pass to Williams from Wooten.

"We were undefeated goining into the tournament and we were out to win," said Rock's safety, Harry McCorkle. "Our commander (Capt. Lewis Boone) will be leaving his command here in December and we wanted to win it for him."

"We have to give a lot of credit for this season to Walker and Wooten," McCorkle said, "They were the real motivators on the team, Wooten on offense and Walker for the defense."

"We've been winning all year," said Tony D. Gilbert, Raider's rightguard, "After each win we would say 'Take a look at what's causing all this.' Now instead of saying that to the other team, we're asking it of ourselves."

YA sports championships on line

YA Sports Office

Last Saturday was first round of the Termite League single elimination championship tournament.

The Red Demons will advance to this Saturday's play after defeating the Pack Rats 4-2 and the Cosmos advances after dumping the Panthers 5-2.

The Red Demons and the Cosmos will square off Saturday at 9 a.m. on Gordon Field #4 and the Fireballs will face th Phythons on Gordon Field #3 at the same time.

The winners of these two games will meet for the championship at noon on feild #3.

YA Super Bowl dates changed

The YA "Super Bowl" date has been changed. It will be held this Saturday in Doughboy Stadium instead of Dec. 5.

This year the Trojans, who won the Pee Wee championship by beating the Packers 18-0, will team up with the Broncos as the NFC team. The Packers will join the Redskins as the AFC.

The game will begin at 5 p.m. and everyone is invited to attend.

"It's going to be a spectacular game," said Luther Livingston, Trojans and AFC coach. "This game is well worth seeing, all these teams have some excellent players."

"These players are the caliber of a High School Junior Varsity team," said Hamp Dews, Packer and AFC coach. "Both teams will be good. But I think we'll win because the Redskins and Packers have a very similar offense. The transition, to playing as a single team, was easy because of our similarity."

The regular season ended last Saturday when the Trojans at 6-1 went against the Packers, also at 6-1, for the championship in the Pee Wee league. The Trojans quarterback, Valdrin Smith, ran in 3 TDs to beat the Packers 18-0. The defensive play of Ervin Bagley, linebacker, Leon Brown, tackle, and Lydell Mitchell, linebacker, shut down the Packer offense. The YA Football season will come to a close on Saturday when the YA Super Bowl is held at Doughboy Stadium beginning at 5 p.m.

For more information on these two events contact the YA Sports Office at 545-3070.

Lt. Col. Barrie Zais, 197th Inf. Bde. deputy commander, presents a trophy to SFC Bill Schmitt, captain of the 197th Inf. Bde. Flag Football Champions, "Cav Rocks," from Troop A, 15th Cavalry.

15th Cav takes 197th football title

By George Mingee
197th Infantry Brigade Correspondent

Last week Troop A, 15th Cavalry played their final intramural football game, ending an outstanding and exciting season for the "Cav Rocks" soldiers.

"The season went well," said Bill E. Schmitt, coach. "Even though we lost in the main post playoffs, I believe our toughest game was against Battery B, 2nd Battalion, 10th Field Artillery at Kelley Hill."

15th Cav posted a flawless 16-0 record on Kelley Hill, before playing in the post playoffs and bowing out in the quarterfinals.

The team got off to a promising start in the playoffs by beating a team from the 1st Battalion, 38th Infantry by a final score of 6-0.

Overflowing with confidence because of the initial shutout, the team again played tough defense in its second game. However, Company D., 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry scored the only touchdown for a 6-0 victory.

Undoubtedly, the sweetest victory was the third game shutout against the 988th Military Police Company. Both teams were banging against each other with neither team able to take an advantage.

Finally, late in the 1st half, 15th Cav struck when quarterback Joseph Santiano threw a 25 yard pass to Joe Roberts in the end zone.

The MPs, also known as the "Lawmen", didn't make any major busts through the 15th Cav's ironclad offensive line, which was also aided by the elusive running of Santiano.

The second half again featured an all out struggle, however, neither team scored and the game ended with 15th Cav on top 6-0.

Riding high after a big win, 15th Cav confronted a team from the Training Support Battalion. Each team scored a touchdown, however, TSB made well on it's two point conversion.

"Our hopes were so high that I believe we defeated ourselves in the TSB game," Joseph L. Roberts said.

For Cav Rock, the season was over, however, nothing could tarnish the respectable record of 18-2.

Deer hunters asked to have deer checked

By Deck Major
DEH Fish and Wildlife Specialist

If you're a hunter, you know the scenario. Two buddies standing over a nice deer. "That's a beauty. How much do you think he weighs?" says one. The other hunter who shot the buck says, "I don't know, but the further we dragged him, the heavier he got. I'll bet he'll go 150 pounds if he weighs an ounce."

Imagine the hunters' surprise upon weighing their processed meat from that monster buck when their bathroom scales tipped at 50 pounds. Where's the beef, or in this case, the venison? We know where the beef was. It was down at the processing house between the hunters and the butcher. They couldn't believe that butcher when he told them that he estimated their trophy at about 100-110 pounds.

If the hunters had brought their buck to the Deer Check Station at the Natural Resources Management Division, DEH, building 5883, Harmony Church, they would have had a much better idea of how much venison to expect. Also, their deer would have been aged by a wildlife biologist.

As we all know, age is a reflection of tenderness, and could well decide whether chopped, steak or stew meat would be best suited for the particular deer.

Biologists also have tables available that will yield your deer's whole weight and when reliving your hunting yarn to friends and relatives, this is often an interesting figure.

Biologically, check stations yield information about our Fort Benning deer herd that wildlife professionals can use to manage for a better and healthier herd. Sex and age ratios, weights, and antler beam diameters are all parameters that indicate vigor in deer populations. An adequate sample of the annual harvest is necessary to detect changing trends as they might occur.

Take a minute to review some preliminary information collected at the Deer Check Station after nine days of "Firearms/Either Sex" and our one "Antler-less Only" Veteran's Day hunt.

Seventy does and 59 bucks (129 total) have been checked in. Field-dressed doe weights averaged 55 pounds. The heaviest dressed doe was 77 pounds. Two does were aged at seven and a half years. In my book, that's chopped or stew meat. The most common age for does was two and a half years.

Several eight and nine-point bucks have been brought in weighing slightly over 100 pounds. The largest was an eight-pointer weighing 107 pounds. One nine-pointer was measured with a 13.5-inch spread. Sixty-seven percent of the bucks were one and a half years old and [illegible] averaged 67 pounds field dressed. Five bucks were aged at three and a half years. Thankfully, no does or bucks checked in have shown any signs of cummunicable disease.

Personnel at the Natural Resources Management Division would like to thank all hunters who checked in their deer. The check station will be open again during this coming "Firearms/Either Sex" period from 8 a.m. until 7 p.m. on Nov. 21 and 22; during duty hours through the work week of Nov. 23--27 (excluding Thanksgiving); and, from 8 a.m. to noon on Nov. 28 and 29.

We would be happy to age and weigh your field-dressed deer. Field-dressed weights will help determine the price per pound of your meat after weighing your final processed product.

You can keep this financial information to yourself and hunting buddies. If the wife and family finds out how much it costs to put that deer meat on the table, they might just remove the spikes from your deer stand while you are still in the tree.

SPORTS SHORTS

Open Masters pool champion visits Benning

Tom Rossman, World Open Masters Pool Champion, will conduct a Pocket Billiard exhibition at Fort Benning Recreation Center on Nov. 22.

His exhibition will include trick and fancy shots, one arm shooting and audience challenge.

Rossman will also give advise and instruction to those who wish to improve their game.

Exhibitions are scheduled for 1 p.m. at Harmony Church Recreation Center building 4410, 3 p.m. at Foxhole Recreation Center building 5363, and at 5 p.m. Kelly Hill Recreation Center building 9039. Admission is free.

Turkey shoot with long riflers

Wait! Don't buy that Thanksgiving turkey or Christmas ham yet. Why pay good money for what you can win at the Muscogee Long Rifles' annual muzzle-loading turkey shoot?

The shoot will be held on Nov. 21 and 22 at a range located 30 miles from Fort Benning. The cost will be $3 for registration and $1 per shot.

The shoot will be conducted the same as the ones Great Granddad used to attend. Only muzzle loading rifles will be used. Yep, that's right, just like Daniel Boone, FSSSST—Boom!

You don't own a rifle? That's not a problem, we will loan you one.

You say that you don't shoot? Come out any way. Country McWilliams will be there demonstrating blacksmithing skills. Jan Stables will display her hand woven woolen goods. Many of the shooters will be wearing buckskin and living in pre-1840 shelters.

There is free camping on the site, but you must bring your own water.

The club will feed Bar-B-Q to all registered shooters on Saturday night. Entertainment will no doubt follow the feed.

To get there:

Post Bass Club tourney held

The Fort Benning Bass Club held its annual November Fish-Off at Florence Marina on Lake Walter F. George Nov. 15.

Twenty-six members chased bass for ten hours and when the time ended four members found themselves in the money.

First place went to Bob Billman (MSG Ret.) with 12 pounds 1 ounce. Second place was won by Murray Williams (USAIC) with 10 pounds 6 ounces. Third place was captured by Dewey Hardison (Weapons Dept.) with 9 pounds 7 ounces and Gary Dollar (MSG Ret.) received the Big Fish award with a 3 pound 9 ounce bass.

The club asks all members to bring toys and can goods to the Nov. 23 club meeting to donate to the Fort Benning Santa's Castle and the post can goods drive.

Second either sex deer hunt begins

The second either sex deer hunt on Fort Benning this year will be Nov. 21-29.

During these dates, wildlife management personnel will be weighing, aging and measuring deer at the Deer Check Station, building 5883, Harmony Church.

In order for proper management decisions to be made, as many deer as possible should be observed. All deer hunters are asked to cooperate in this effort by bringing any deer killed to the Deer Check Station for examination.

Hours of operation will be: 8 a.m. to 7 p.m. on Nov. 21-22; 8 a.m. to 4 p.m. on normal work days; 8 a.m. to noon on Nov. 28-29. The check station will be closed on Thanksgiving Day.

For more information call 544-6120.

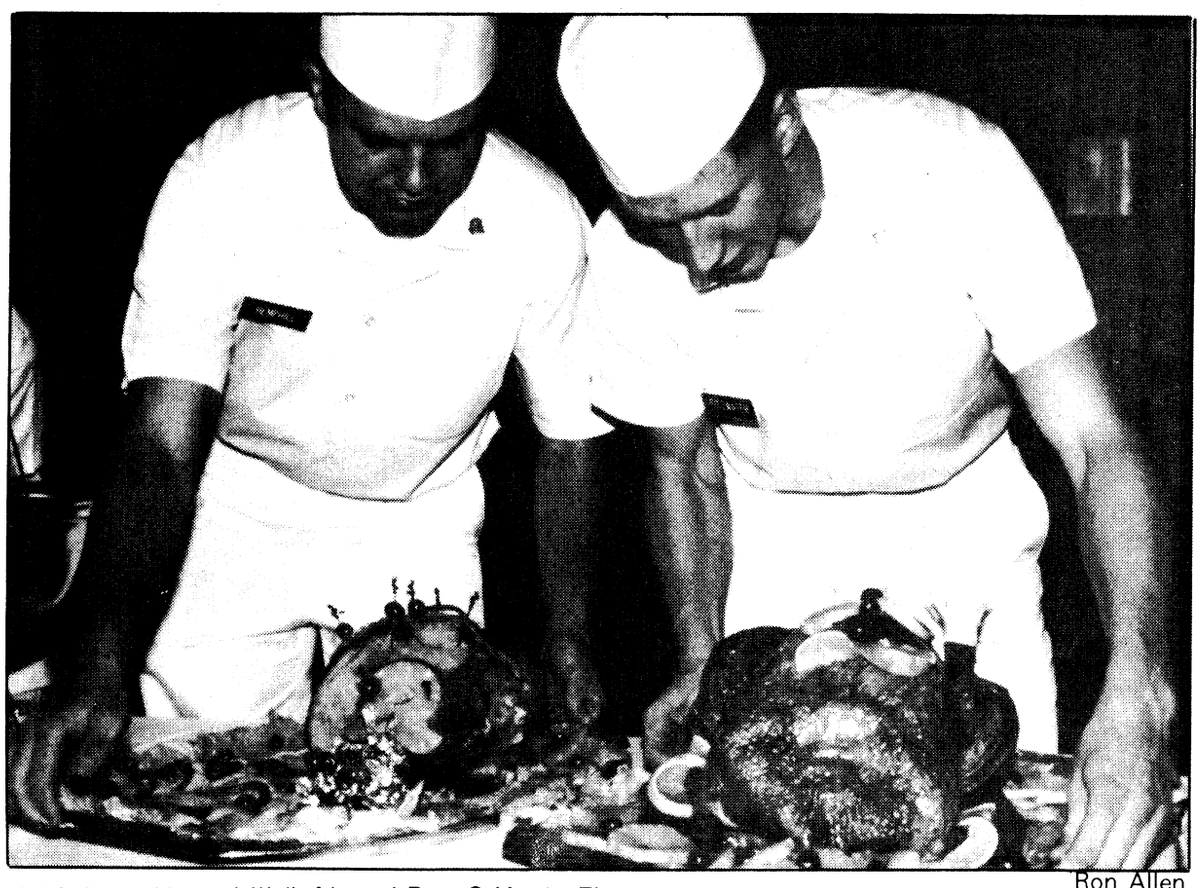
Benning workers take the day off for Thanksgiving

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Thanksgiving will be a holiday for most military and civilian personnel at Fort Benning.

Martin Army Community Hospital clinics will close for the holiday. Emergencies should be referred to the hospital's emergency room. Sand Hill's Troop Medical Clinic 5 will open from 7 to 10 a.m., but all other TMCs will be closed.



Garbage normally collected Thursday, will be collected Wednesday, with the schedule returning to normal Friday.

The commissary and all post exchange facilities will be closed with the exception of the Burger King (8 a.m. — 10 p.m.), the Main Post Bowling Alley snack bar (? p.m. — 11 p.m.) and the Mall Bowling Alley sn[illegible] bar (noon - 11 p.m.).

On Nov. 27, all PX facilities will operate normal hours except the Harmony Church snack bar and mobile units, which will not operate.

Theaters at Sand Hill and Main Post will observe normal hours on Thanksgiving, but Kelley Hill and Harmony Church theaters will be closed.

Editor's Note: For more on holiday closings, see A-3.

SP4 Chris Hemphill (left) and Pvt. 2 Kevin Fitzwater, both cooks at the 67th Maintenance Battalion's dining facility, put the finishing touches on a Thanksgiving ham and turkey.

Dining facilities prepare holiday meal for families

U.S. Army Troop Support Agency

FORT LEE, Va. — More than 111 tons of turkey will be prepared as the main course for this year's largest meal served in all 1,098 Army garrison dining facilities.

Dietitians and home economists at the US Army Troop Support Agency have released the 1987 holiday Master Menu used by all dining facilities .

And what a feast it'll be!

In addition to the 222,646 pounds of traditional turkey, the banquet will also include 27,830 pounds of shrimp for shrimp cocktail, 61,061 pounds of cranberry sauce and 23,656 pumpkin pies. Mincemeat pies are also on the menu along with fruitcake (27,831 pounds), mixed nuts (16,698 pounds), assorted fresh fruit (89,059 pounds) and assorted candies (22,265 pounds).

Rounding out their meal, diners may select from mashed potatoes, giblet gravy, glazed sweet potatoes, cornbread dressing, green beans, baked hubbard squash, spring salad, assorted dressings, shimmery fruit and vegetable salad, cloverleaf rolls, margarine, low-fat (2-percent) milk, coffee, tea and soft drinks.

Based on availability and individual preference, some installation food service personnel may vary their holiday menus to include rock cornish hen, roast duck, baked ham, steamship round of beef, grilled steak, tomato or cranberry and orange juice cocktail and apple and sweet potato pies.

Once again, this year most diners are exempt from paying extra for their meals.

Because sharing holiday meals with family members is viewed as a cornerstone toward building unit morale and esprit de corps, spouses and children of enlisted soldiers will pay the following prices for the food they eat:

Family members ages 12 and over — $2.25; children under 12 — $1.10.

Officers and non-family member guests will still be required to pay a surcharge, bringing the cost of their meals to $5.40 for adults and $2.65 for youths under 12.

Last year, 278,308 soldiers, their family members and guests put away the Army's Thanksgiving dinner, while another 108,434 people consumed the service's yuletide meal. Although turkey with all the trimmings is also offered at Christmas, food service officials say many people spend that day with family and friends and choose not to eat in a dining facility.

Update records to avoid problems with dental plan

Army News Service

Some soldiers participating in the Delta Dental Program may experience problems due to non-current family-member records, according to Army officials.

"The premium amount deducted for soldiers who elected not to disenroll this past summer depends upon the number of family members over age 4 reflected in the Defense Eligibility Enrollment Reporting System's data base," said George Gallagher, an employee with the Army's Community and Family Support Center in Alexandria, Va. "Soldiers need to make sure their DEERS files remain up-to-date. For example, there may be a child over 4 but under 10 years of age who doesn't qualify for a family member identification card but does qualify for insurance coverage.

"Soldiers can verify the type of enrollment, that is single or family rates, by examining their leave and earning statements," Gallagher said. "Item number 8, other deductions, will read 'dental' if a soldier's family is enrolled. The amount will indicate the type of enrollment. If the amount reflects a $3.93 deduction, that means one family member is covered. When more than one family member is enrolled, the deduction amounts to $7.86.

"It would be unfortunate for a family to receive dental treatment and find out later that a premium for only one family member was being paid. That's why soldiers need to check their LESs to make sure they have entered all eligible dependents in their DEERS file. This would save money and embarrassment for the soldier and his family," he said.

As of Aug. 1, dentists throughout the 50 states, the District of Columbia, Puerto Rico and the U.S. Virgin Islands who have elected to participate in the program totaled 91,000 — more than 75 percent of all dental care providers.

Delta Dental Plan of California, the program's administering contractor, has sent listings of participating dentists to all Army community service centers and health benefits advisors located at medical treatment facilities.

Lists of participating providers will be updated quarterly by Delta.

Army to screen all patients at medical facilities for presence of HIV

Army News Service

WASHINGTON — Soldiers and their family members, to include the reserve components, face two new AIDS policies.

"First of all," said Maj. David Peterson in the Army's Office of the Deputy Chief of Staff for Personnel, "the Army is setting up a program to screen certain categories of patients at Army medical treatment facilities worldwide."

The other policy change entails administration of Guard and Reserve soldiers who test positive for the AIDS-related human immunedeficiency virus.

Peterson noted that the Army is taking its cue, in part, from the nation's Center for Disease Control in Atlanta. There, the program director for AIDS-monitoring is encouraging hospitals nationwide to begin voluntary admissions testing for HIV detection.

He cites the center's need for collecting vital disease data is just one reason for embarking on such early screening. Other reasons include the need for greater public awareness of the AIDS menace in all walks of life, as well as the value of early notification in AIDS-education programs and in physicians' timely, effective response to patients' health status.

The screening policy, which takes effect immediately for generally all hospitalized patients and some outpatients, will become a routine matter, said Col. (Dr.) William Moore of the Army's surgeon general's office. He said that all affected soldiers must take part in the screening, but that for family members it will remain voluntary.

Those identified for participation include anyone admitted to Army medical treatment facilities, patients seeking care for sexually transmitted disease, pregnant women at the time of initial prenatal evaluation and at delivery and enrollees in track II or III drug-and-alcohol-abuse rehabilitation programs.

Also included are adults undergoing a physical exam for general health assessment (to include school or sports physical examinations for adolescents 15 years of age or older) or premarital physical exams performed outside the continental United States; surgical outpatients; and selected dental patients, resources permitting.

"Even after consenting to the test, volunteers may backout," Moore said. "Such a patient, however, won't be denied care at the Army medical treatment facility, although treatment methods could be changed because certain procedures or drugs cannot be safely administered to HIV-infected persons," he added.

Moore explained what happens when an initial screening test comes back positive: "Once the patient is notified, he receives counseling, undergoes additional confirmatory testing and is evaluated thoroughly. Care will continue after it is assured that the treatment he is to receive is safe and appropriate.

"Our goal in this testing program," Moore said, "is twofold: We want to be sure the care we provide is the best for each patient. We also want to prevent, whenever we can, the unknowing transmission of the HIV to others."

The second policy change calls for HIV-positive Guard and Reserve soldiers not on extended duty, or on extended full-time duty, to be transferred to the Standby Reserve, unless they request a transfer to the Retired Reserve, if eligible, or request an honorable discharge.

Readiness is the key issue considered in developing Army AIDS policy. The Defense Department already has directed that HIV-infected soldiers are non-deployable; that is, they may not serve overseas for any reason.

Administratively, assignment of HIV-infected soldiers to non-deployable billets in the Reserve components is difficult. Few positions are designated non-deployable. Vacancy, grade, military specialty, geographic location and commuting constraints would all combine to limit the practicality and prudence of allowing soldiers of unknown health to transfer to these assignments. Emerging evidence indicates that some soldiers with HIV infection may progress to a condition requiring medical discharge in as few as 18 to 24 months from identification.

HIV-positive reserve component soldiers transferred to the Standby Reserve are ineligible to take part in training, but they may earn retirement points through correspondence courses.

Officials view the two new policy changes as just another step toward keeping abreast of the ever-changing world of AIDS.

Follow-up testing of soldiers to be done biennially

Army News Service

Soldiers will receive tests for HIV exposure, the virus that causes AIDS, at least every two years beginning in January 1988 to ensure force readiness and continued worldwide deployability.

"As reflected in a Nov. 16 policy message, follow-on testing of the total force will normally occur biennially," said Maj. David Peterson, a staff officer with the Army's Office of the Deputy Chief of Staff for Personnel.

Active-duty soldiers will be tested during their birth months. Computer data banks will help personnel officials notify unit commanders when it's time for a soldier's test, just as they do now for annual evaluations, records reviews and periodic physical examinations.

For the Reserve Component troop program unit, testing will also be conducted biennially but by unit rather than in the soldier's birth month.

"If a soldier undergoes a routine physical exam, or for some other reason receives a test during a month other than his birth month, adjustments to his testing dates will be made accordingly.

This is, when a soldier's birth month shows up on the computer, personnel officials will look at the date of the last recorded HIV test, if it has been more than a year, the soldier will need to take the test again.

In a change from previous policy, test results must be current to within six months before being assigned overseas.

"Those on orders for stationing, temporary duty or deployment outside the United States, including Alaska and Hawaii, for more than 179 days also fall into this category," Peterson said.

This policy also applies to the following soldiers: those on orders to deployable Ranger units, special operations command units or rotating COHORT units; those being assigned to units of the Reserve Officers' Training Corps, the U.S. Army Recruiting Command or the Military Entrance Processing Command; and those attending specified military-sponsored educational programs (advanced civilian schooling, professional residency, fellowships, training-with-industry and equivalent programs.

Peterson also said that blood specimens for the HIV tests for active-duty soldiers will be drawn at local medical treatment facilities. Commanders whose soldiers are located outside the area of such facilities will have to arrange for testing at the facility nearest the soldier's duty station.

"Previous policies regarding assignments, retention, separation and limitations on use of test information remain in effect," Peterson said, "except that profiles issued as a result of a positive HIV test will be permanent."

Profiled soldiers assigned to stateside installations will remain at their current installations for one year after identification. Afterwards, they can, under certain conditions and in accordance with Army regulations, be assigned to a new installation within the United States, but not overseas. Nor can they be deployed overseas.

"Specific and detailed policy guidance will be forthcoming in a soon-to-be-released Army regulation, while instructions for implementing the testing program will be provided by the Army's surgeon general," Peterson said.

OPINION

President gives thanks for military members

On Thanksgiving Day, Americans pause wherever they may be to thank God for all the blessings He grants us and our land and liberty.

Around our nation and around the world, you who defend us in arms pause, too — in thanks, in prayer, in thoughts of home.

As your commander-in-chief, I'm proud to express to you the heartfelt appreciation of the American people for hearing and answering our country's call. You who safeguard our blessings, and the families who support and inspire you in your many responsibilities, are yourselves a true blessing to this land.

You amplify our debt of gratitude with your every deed of solemn duty. In barracks and bunkers, on flight decks and parade grounds, in command centers, cockpits, and engine rooms, you daily carry out your mission to preserve and protect our security, our liberty and our bounty.

You make routine the exemplary self-sacrifice and devotion to duty that have always been the watchwords of the American military.

That dedication has carried our country through periods of crisis and peril, purchasing, often at great cost, the security that enables all our citizens to pursue their lives in liberty and peace.

Happy Thanksgiving to all of you and to your families. To those of you serving on ships at sea and at isolated or dangerous outposts around the globe, Nancy and I send our very special greetings.

Ronald Reagan
President

CG stresses holiday safety

When the Pilgrims first arrived in America, they faced a series of hardships and hazards, yet considered them a small price to pay for freedom. Thanksgiving was originated by these determined pioneers as a celebration of gratitude for their survival in a strange land.

Today, Americans continue the tradition of giving thanks for this great country and the freedom it stands for, as well as an abundance of other blessings. I would like to extend to each of you my best wishes for a pleasurable and safe Thanksgiving holiday. I emphasize a "safe holiday" since many of you will be on the highway, or involved in such recreational pursuits as hunting.

It is only through a concerted effort by everyone that we may all enjoy an accident-free Thanksgiving holiday. Let us strive to make this our goal for not only Thanksgiving, but each and every day of our lives.

Happy Thanksgiving.

K.C. Leuer
Major General, USA

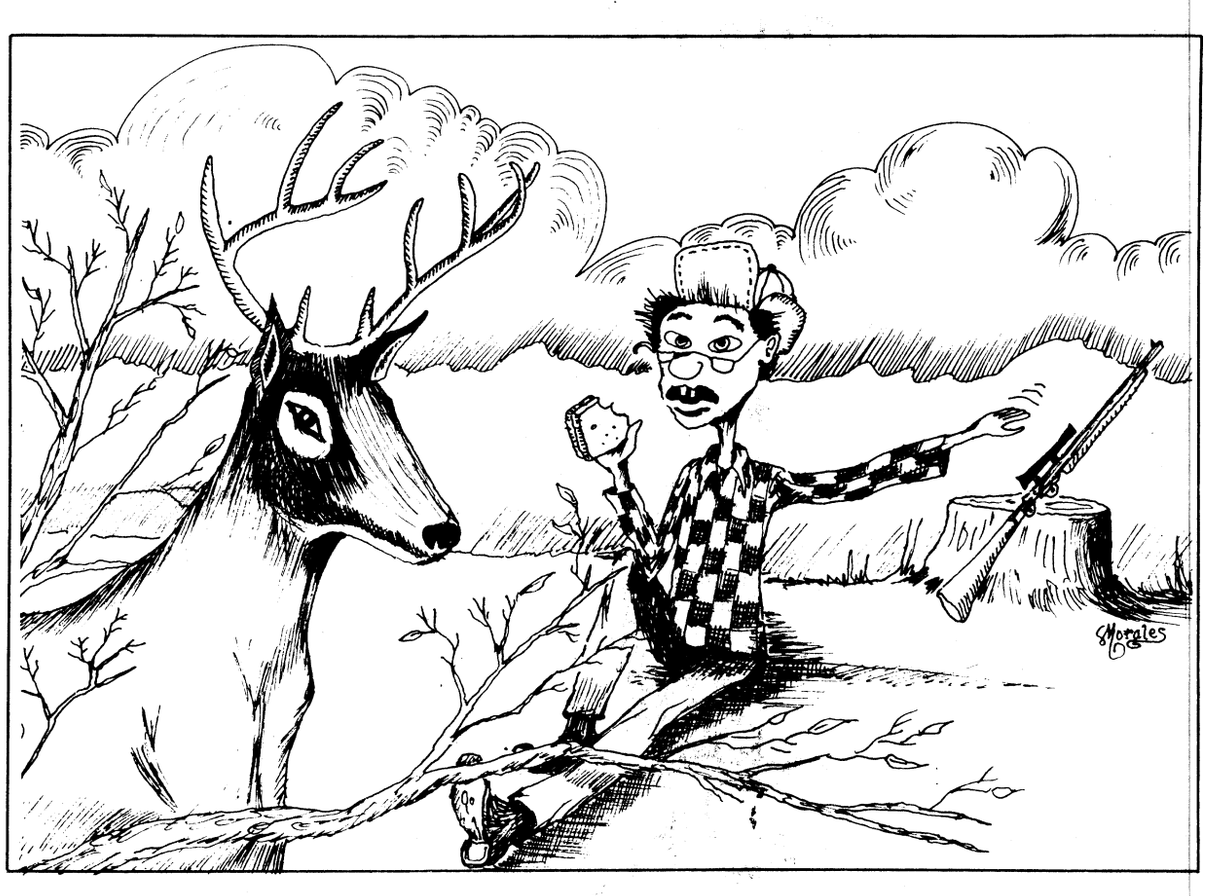
We want to hear from our readers

It seems like we always report the bad things that happen on post, while good news gets little space. We'd like to hear from our readers about some of the good things going on here. If you know someone who's an "unsung hero," write us a letter about it.



All letters must be typed, double-spaced and signed by the writer, including home or unit address and a telephone number. We will withhold a writer's name upon request, but please include it on your submission to us in case we need to contact you.

Letters are subject to standard editing and condensing depending on space available. Letters in which the writer requests that no changes be made will not be run.

Letters can be dropped off at The Bayonet office in Room 601, Infantry Hall, or mailed to The Bayonet, Room 601, Infantry Hall, Fort Benning, Ga., 31905.

Snively heads to the woods for some R and R

Clyde Snively
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Ever walk through the woods with a bunch of infantrymen? Ever hear one of them say anything nice about the outdoor excursion?

I've walked with them. And I've never heard them say anything nice about being outdoors. What I have heard are complaints about the bugs, the heat, the cold, the rain, the sun, the logs they trip over at night and the wait-a-minute vines that snag them night and day.

So what do hundreds of infantrymen do in the fall on their days off? They go out into the woods. They fight the bugs, the heat, the cold, the rain, the sun, the logs and the wait-a-minute vines.

They call it hunting. They get up early in the morning, drive their good-old-boy pickups over roads more suited for ox carts, to their favorite dismount points, then spend the day in pursuit of their prey.

They call it fun. They call it sport. They call it macho. I call it, "too much like work."

My friend Jimbo is a good-old-boy. He hunts, he fishes, he drives a pickup truck. He's also slightly "tetched." Proof is that he invited me to go hunting with him.

"Ha, ha," I said. "Let me get this straight. You expect me to get up early in the morning on one of my days off, then go out in the woods with you to get cold, wet and miserable? To do something on my own time that the Army gladly pays me to do nearly every duty day?"

"Yep," he said without blinking or cracking a smile.

I began to squirm under his gaze as it occurred to me he wasn't about to take "no" for an answer.

"I ain't got a gun," I finally said with relief.

"No pro-blem," Jimbo said. "I got a house full of 'em."

"Oh," I said glumly. "That's nice. But don't I need to go to a hunter's safety course first? Yeah, that's it, I need to go to a hunting course," I said, suddenly brightening.

"Not if you were born before Jan. 1, 1961," he said, shooting that excuse down.

"I see," I said, not really seeing how the difference in birth dates could make a person a safe hunter. I raised this concern to him.

"Snively, I got faith in you. I know you can handle a rifle. I know you'd never do anything rash or unsafe," he said.

"Yeah, sure. Maybe I won't, but how about the other guys out there? You got people shooting each other, you got people shooting themselves, you even got people falling out of deer stands. I think I'd stand a better chance of survival in a combat zone than in the south Georgia woods during hunting season."

"Nonsense," Jimbo said. "You just have to take certain precautions. I've been hunting for 15 years and haven't even had a close call."

I finally agreed to go after I made him promise that I wouldn't have to get up before 6 a.m.

Arriving at our dismount point, I began to see why people do get up early even on their days off to go into the woods. The sun was just breaking over the tree tops and the scent of pine lingered on the dew-laden limbs. It made me feel glad to be alive. I just hoped I'd stay that way.

In other words, it was a good day for a walk in the woods. And that's exactly what we did, Jimbo saying tree stands were for wimps.

After fruitlessly following a trail for a couple of hours through "prime deer country," Jimbo said we might have better luck by splitting up. After going down a list of contingency plans like any good platoon leader, we went our own ways.

I immediately found a sunny spot and sat down to attack my munchies. I must have dozed because the next thing I knew the sun was beginning to sink behind the trees.

Then I spied it. A deer. Standing motionless 20 yards away. I slowly, carefully, reached down and grabbed my gun. Raising it to my shoulder, I pressed my cheek against the stock and sighted in.

I could see the big brown eyes staring back at me as I eased the safety to off, my finger reaching out for the trigger.

"Shoo," I suddenly shouted.

The deer froze, then, with a flick of its tail, bounded into the nearby brambles.

I put my gun back on safe and headed for Jimbo's truck.

"Any luck?" I hailed him.

"Nope," he said. "Didn't even see one. How's about you?"

"Me neither," I said, climbing into the cab for the trip home.

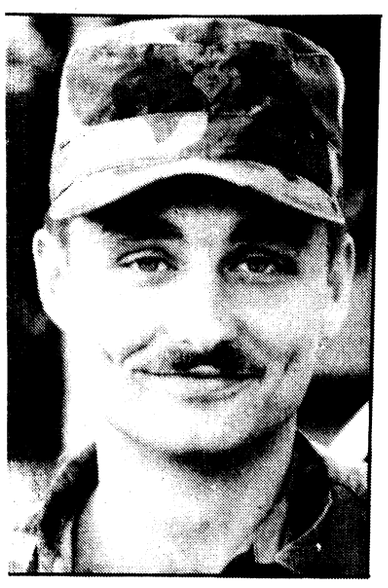
Leaders must show soldiers they care by rewarding them

By Allie-Allison Petrus
197th Support Battalion

What comes to mind when you hear the word Army? See the soldiers training, marching, deploying? Do you think of security; soldiers as our nation's protectors? Or, do you think of the world sleeping peacefully because they, soldiers exist.

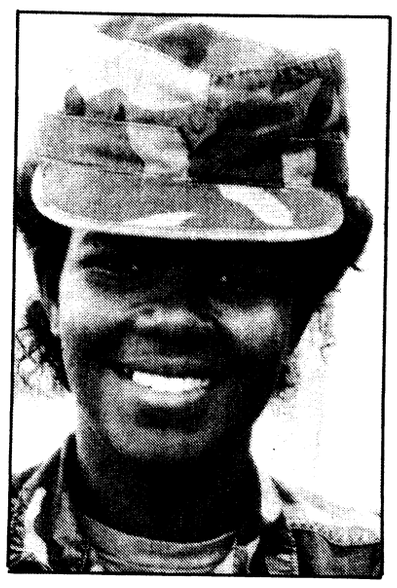
Either way, the point remains — they are important, from the officers to the noncommissioned officers and right down to the least numbered private. They all work together to make the Army effective. It's the work of unity within the Army that produces great results, which leads to recognition.

Today, however, the word recognition sometimes seems to have exclusions. In application, it seems to exclude those who fall at the lowest end of the order of rank. It's at this level that recognition is sometimes forgotten.



Needless to say, it's about time we become aware of this and act upon it. In doing so, those of authority must question themselves and their working allies.

Leaders must ask themselves: how do I show the unranked soldier, who digs the fighting position, from which I may have to fight during war time, that he is an important limb on the Army's body? How do I treat him so he doesn't feel like just another numbered soldier, but rather like the important person he is — filled with courage and willingness to fight to the last breath for the stars and stripes? How do I lead him without misleading him? How do I soldier him without degrading him?



As a leader, just pause for a moment and examine your leadership ability. Ask yourself these questions, and you might gain insight as to what inspires your

SP4 Gherisha Ball, 2nd MASH, 34th Medical Battalion — "I'm most thankful that my family is still intact — that they are alive, together and doing well."

CW2 Lutz Aguirre, MEDDAC, Family Practice Clinic — "There are a lot of things but, most important, is living in a free society and being able to have the freedom to give thanks for God's blessings."

Pvt. Kary Banta, Company A, 3rd Battalion, 32nd Infantry, 1st Infantry Training Brigade — "I'm most thankful for my family and the love and respect they give to me."

Pvt. John Kelly, 1st Battalion, 50th Infantry Regiment, 1st Infantry Training Brigade — I'm thankful that everyone in my platoon is doing well. We've lost a couple for medical reasons but, other than that, everyone is doing well."

SP4 Elizabeth Nichols, Company B, 1st Battalion, 11 Infantry Regiment, The School Brigade — "I'm most thankful that I'll be able to be with my family this year. Last year I was in basic training, so this is much better."

Session offers veterans information on benefits

Georgia Department of Veterans Service

Georgia veterans and their dependents will have an opportunity to question some 25 municipal, state and federal agencies about benefits in one location, when the Georgia Department of Veterans Service together with the Veterans Administration, conducts a one-day, one-stop service and information session Dec. 9, from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. in the National Guard Armory, 1 Milledge Road, Augusta, Ga.

Georgia Commissioner of Veterans Affairs Pete Wheeler and Atlanta VA Regional Office Director Charles Wickes explained the program during a meeting on Nov. 20 with Augusta Mayor Charles Devaney, who signed a proclamation designating Wednesday, Dec. 9 as "Supermarket of Veterans' Benefits Day" in Augusta.

Since the Georgia Department of Veterans Service originated the one-day, one-stop programs 22 years ago in Columbus, more than 100,000 persons have received on-the-spot assistance at "Supermarkets" in Albany, Atlanta, Augusta, Dalton, Gainesville, Macon, Rome, Savannah, Valdosta, and Waycross.

Veterans and their dependents from anywhere in Georgia are urged to attend this free service.

followers. A leader cannot exist without followers.

Leaders such as Winston Churchill, Franklin D. Roosevelt, Mahatma Gandhi and Martin Luther King, Jr. inspired and led nations and races of people. They succeeded in their feats only because they cared about their followers. As leader, they recognized the importance of their followers.

If our leaders could learn and apply the lessons from these important figures of the past, they would teach the lower-ranking soldiers the most important lesson they could ever learn. "My leaders care and recognize my importance."

By doing so, when those soldiers become leaders, they would not only be teaching the art of caring and the significance of showing recognition to others; but they will also demonstrate it, in the hope that it's contagious.

Brothers look forward to training in Germany

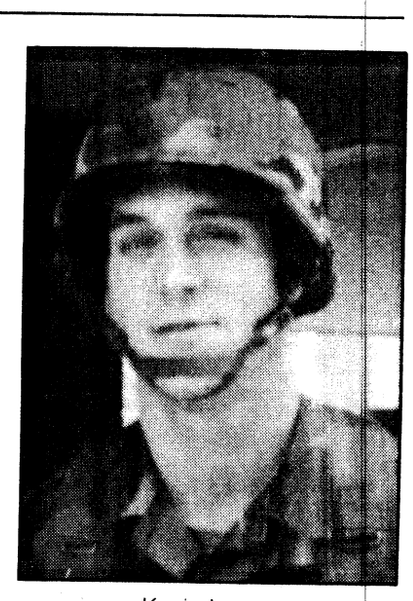
By Marsha Hogan Santiago
ITC correspondent

ITC

Training on the Bradley Fighting Vehicle proved exciting to two brothers undergoing basic training at Fort Benning.

"We have heard a lot about it. I think we're lucky to be able to train on it," said 18-year-old Sean Langan.

Sean and his brother, 20-year-old Kevin, are both part of the Cohesion, Operational Readiness Training unit currently undergoing One Station Unit Training in Company B, 1st Battalion, 19th Infantry, 1st Infantry Training Brigade.



They, along with the rest of their unit, will be assigned to the 1st Battalion, 41st Infantry, 2nd Armored Division (Forward), Garlstadt, Germany, after their graduation in December. This is the first time a Bradley COHORT battalion has been trained at Fort Benning for an overseas assignment.

Usually the 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, provides Bradley training after soldiers graduate from OSUT. Because of special requirements of the gaining COHORT unit, these soldiers are receiving their Bradley training now — in the middle of the OSUT cycle.

At the end of November, when their Bradley training is complete, the soldiers will come back to the 1/19th Infantry , complete the OSUT cycle and establish another first. For the first time, an OSUT Field Training Exercise will incorporate the Bradley Fighting Vehicle. This will give the soldiers an opportunity to add tactical experience to the technical experience gained during the 1/29th training.

Sean Langan

Kevin Langan

For the Langan brothers, sons of Philip and Uta Langan of East Hartford, Conn., joining the Army under the COHORT concept was an opportunity to change their lives — together.

A COHORT unit headed for Germany was an additional plus, since their mother is originally from Germany and the brothers hope to visit relatives once they arrive at their duty station.

"In a COHORT unit, there is a closeness that develops from training together and knowing you will be together for three years," Kevin said. "I think it is a good concept. We've met some good people."

The brothers agree that they joined the Army to add discipline to their lives. Kevin had com-

197th soldiers train future leaders

By George Mingee
197th Infantry Brigade correspondent

197th Inf.

Seasoned soldiers from 1st Battalion, 58th Infantry, were carrying out a vital mission this past week. In the woods of Fort Benning, they were training second lieutenants from the Infantry Officer Basic Course.

IOBC consists of many important segments, including the comprehension of the BTMS (Battalion Training Management System) which consists of various field taskings.

The 1-58 soldiers were on hand to teach the lieutenants how to conduct combat operations in various situations, whether it be reconnaissance of an ambush, knocking out bunkers or even breaching minefields.

"I love it, it's a once in a lifetime chance to train lieutenants," said SP4 Martin Lugo, of Co. B. "Who knows, one of these officers I'm helping to train might be my future platoon leader."

The lieutenants go through five taskings a day and one night maneuver, with the enlisted soldiers supervising and molding these future officers. Most important, the soldiers are helping the officers to analyze their strengths and weaknesses so when placed in a stressful leadership position in the future they can handle the problem.

"They're our future leaders, so we train them right," said SP4 James E. Wagner of Co. B. "Hopefully, the lieutenants will take these lessons learned and apply them to future situations.

When the training is over and soreness in their bodies has gone away, the lieutenants can look back and remember the soldiers of 1-58, who stood by and assisted in their personal training.

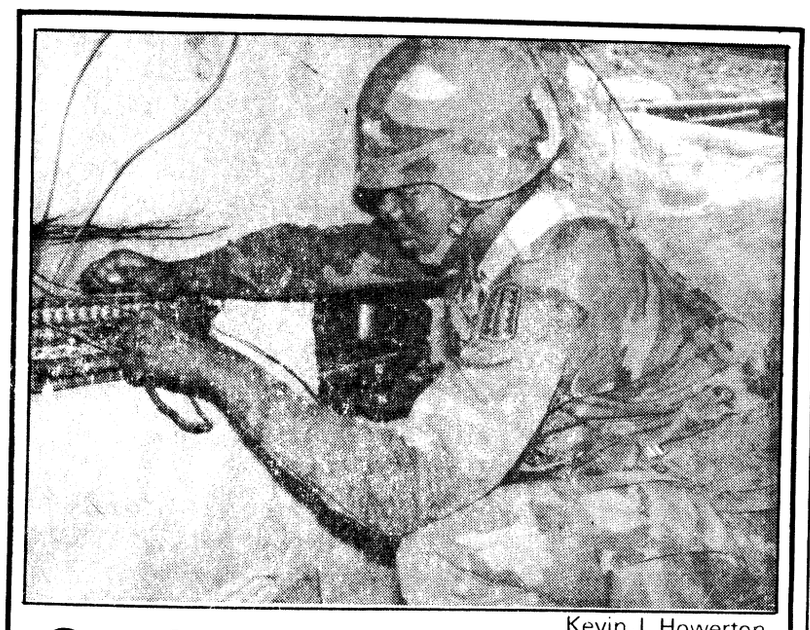
54 complete USARSA courses

By Marco Morales
USARSA PAO

USARSA

Fifty-four multi-service students from six Latin American countries graduated Nov. 19 from two courses at the U.S. Army School of the Americas.



The Small Unit Training Management course graduated eight Salvadoran officers and 15 non-commissioned officers.

Lt. Col. Francisco J. Martinez, a USARSA guest instructor from El Salvador, was guest speaker.

The six-week course prepares company-grade officers and selected NCOs to plan, conduct and manage small unit training using U.S. Army training doctrine.

Thirty-one officers graduated from the eight-week Psychological Operations (PSYOP) course. Countries with number of graduates represented were: Argentina 1, Colombia 6, Ecuador 3, El Salvador 12, Guatemala 3 and Honduras 6. Guest speaker for the graduation ceremony was Lt. Col. Angel R. Hernandez, a USARSA guest instructor for Venezuela.

The course teaches basic psychological operations to prepare students for a PSYOP assignment. Latin American officers learn to function as advisors to commanders using PSYOP training in an internal defense and development environment which supports military operations and national development plans.

Engineers build fence around 10th Mountain

By Ronald N. Light
43rd Engr. Bn. correspondent

36th Engrs.

The 10th Mountain Division now enjoys increased security around bldg. 3723 near Sand Hill thanks to work completed by soldiers of Company C, 43rd Engineer Battalion (Combat) (Heavy). The security upgrade involved some 450 meters of fencing, tied to 8-foot aluminum poles set in concrete.

SSgt. Junior L. Purdy, noncommissioned-officer-in-charge of the project indicated that despite the appearance of simplicity, the fence project posed several difficult problems for the engineers.

"The most obvious requirement for a fence," said Purdy, "is the need for perfect alignment and plumb of the poles. The 10th Mountain Division asked us to build a straight fence, not a zig-zag fence, and we took great care to ensure that they got a quality product."

Problems arose, however, when Purdy and his men were unable to dig the fence posts with simple handtools. "Since we were building along the perimeter of a parking lot, we encountered compacted gravel. Said Purdy, "We brought in our 250 cubic feet per minute air compressor and pneumatic tools and the problem disappeared."

When the final touches to the fence were completed, and the 10th Mountain Division accepted the project, Purdy reflected on the finished project. "There are shortcuts we could have taken, corners we could have cut. But we wanted to give 10th Mountain the best fence we could, so we watched the little details every step of the way. In the end, the attention to detail paid off in a useable, sturdy product."

pleted one year of college, but said he was just not ready for the responsibility.

"After these three years, I know I will be able to get more out of college," he said.

"Being in OSUT has made us appreciate everything we took for granted before," Sean added. "It has been tough and demanding, but we expected that. It's definitely worthwhile. I've seen a change for the better in Kevin."

"We do things other people never get to do," Kevin said.

They also talked about the drill sergeants and the professionalism displayed by the cadre, adding they are fortunate to be in a very disciplined company.

"Our platoon sergeant, SFC Donald Carden, works well with people," said Sean. "He earns your respect and understands what motivates you."

The Langans are looking forward to completing their training and shipping out to Germany. While there, they plan to take college courses. However, they don't plan to spend all their free time studying. Both Kevin and Sean plan to make the most of living in a foreign country and look forward to seeing the country, meeting many new people, and eating all the good food they have heard about.

VA Q&A

Veterans Administration

EDITOR'S NOTE: Following are representative questions answered daily by VA counselors. Full information is available at any VA office.

Q: I selected an endowment at age 65 on my National Service Life Insurance in April 1966. I will turn 65 years of age in January 1988. When can I expect the proceeds of the matured endowment policy?

A: You will receive payment in April 1988, the first anniversary date of your policy after your 65th birthday.

Q: May a veteran be covered under National Service Life Insurance and Veterans Group Life Insurance at the same time?

A: Yes.

Q: For training by correspondence under the Montgomery GI Bill, how much will the participant be reimbursed?

A: Reimbursement will be for 55 percent of the approved established charges for the course.

ASK THE JUDGE

Staff Judge Advocate

Q: My wife has a three year old son from her first marriage. The father does not pay child support and has never visited him. I would like to adopt and change his last name. How do I go about doing this?

A: Adoption is the legal procedure by which someone other than the natural parent assumes all the parental rights and duties concerning that child.

Step-parent adoptions such as yours are the simplest to perform, although the procedures are similar for these people using an adoption agency.

Once the adoption is complete, the new parents will be just as responsible for the adopted child as they are for their natural children.

The first step in obtaining an adoption is to file a petition, signed by the adopting parent(s), and requesting that they be permitted to adopt the child. This will require the hiring of a civilian attorney in most cases.

If the natural parent is willing to consent to the adoption, it is also necessary to file an affidavit signed by that parent giving up his rights to the child.

If, however, the natural parent refuses to consent, it will become necessary to attempt to terminate his parental rights through the court. This can become a time consuming and perhaps an expensive process, but it may often be the only option available if the adoption is to be granted.

Depending on the jurisdiction, the court may require references or a home study to determine if the environment is fitting for the child. This is often handled through the local welfare agencies. Once this investigatory stage is complete, the judge will review all of the documents and schedule a final hearing.

If the adoption is approved, a final decree will be signed making the adopting parents the legal parents for all purposes. The birth certificate will be amended and will then show the adopting parents as the birth parents of the child.

Procedures vary a little from jurisdiction to jurisdiction, so you may wish to see a legal assistance attorney to discuss any unusual circumstances surrounding your case.

"MAIL HANDLERS GIVES ME A CHOICE."

"I've had the same family doctor for 12 years now. And I wouldn't dream of giving him up just to join some health plan. My freedom of choice is too important.

That's why I chose the Mail Handlers Benefit Plan. It gives me the freedom to choose my own doctor and hospital.

Mail Handlers even gives me dental coverage (High Option only), hospital benefits, catastrophic protection, surgical benefits, plus a whole lot more—at very affordable rates. And I don't have to pay a large annual deductible.

All this, plus the freedom to choose my own doctor and hospital...who could ask for anything more?"

This is a summary of the features of the Mail Handlers Benefit Plan. Before making a final decision, please read the Plan's officially approved brochure (RI 71-7). All benefits are subject to the definitions, limitations, and exclusions set forth in the official brochure.

General to speak at AUSA breakfast

AUSA

Lt. Gen. Johnny J. Johnston, commanding general of the 2nd Army, Fort Gillem, Ga., will be the keynote speaker at an AUSA sponsored breakfast at 6 a.m. on Dec. 8, at the Harmony Church Field House.

Approximately 1,000 soldiers, AUSA corporate members and local dignitaries are expected to attend the breakfast, which is designed to recognize deserving soldiers and acquaint them with the goals and objectives of AUSA.

Tickets and sign-up rosters for the breakfast are being handled by major subordinate command representatives.

Johnston is no stranger to Fort Benning. He is a graduate of both the Officers' Candidate School and the Infantry Officer Advanced Course. He also commanded the 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry, 197th Infantry Brigade and was chairman of the Attack Committee, Tactics Group, Brigade and Battalion Operations Department, U.S. Infantry School.

Other assignments include commanding general, U.S. Readiness and Mobilization, Region V, Fort Sheridan; Chief of Staff, 5th U.S. Army, Fort Sam Houston; and Director of Training, Office of the Deputy Chief of Operation and Plans, the Pentagon.

Overseas assignments include tours in Korea, Japan, Vietnam and Europe.

In Vietnam he served as deputy brigade commander, 1st Brigade, 25th Infantry Division and commander 1st Battalion, 27th Infantry, 25th Infantry Division.

In Europe, Johnston was the assistant division commander, 3rd Infantry Division.

His awards include the Distinguished Service Medal, Legion of Merit and three Bronze Stars.

For more information, check with your unit representative, or call MSgt. Johnny R. Smith, at 545-4432.

Ancient Greeks celebrated harvest with fall festival

By Donna Miles
American Forces Information Service

This Thanksgiving, as you sit down to a table laden with turkey and all the trimmings, you'll be sharing in one of the world's oldest traditions — the harvest festival.

Many Americans think of Thanksgiving, the day of thanks first celebrated by the Pilgrim's at Plymouth Rock, as a uniquely American holiday. Yet America's Thanksgiving is similar to ancient as well as modern-day festivals celebrated around the world in gratitude for a good growing season.

The ancient Greeks celebrated a nine-day harvest festival in honor of Demeter, their goddess of agriculture. So important was this observance that armies would stop fighting to share in the celebration.

In similar fashion, the Romans paid tribute to Ceres.

Since biblical days, the Jews have celebrated the week-long Feast of Tabernacles, or Sukkot, in the fall to mark the end of the farming season. This festival, still celebrated today, is a time of feasting, partying and thanksgiving. Another Hebrew harvest festival, Shavuot, the Feast of Weeks, is celebrated in the spring.

During the Middle Ages, the Anglo-Saxons celebrated the feast of Harvest Home when the last grain was loaded for storage. People from the village went into the fields to decorate the load with ribbons and flowers, dancing around it and singing songs of thanks. The celebration continued long after the last grain was stored away.

In nearby Scotland, the harvest celebration was know as "kirn" and included special church services and a hearty feast.

The Aztecs of Mexico observed their corn harvest with more ceremony than festivity. Each year, a young girl was beheaded in honor of Xilonen, the goddess of new corn. The Pawnee Indians had a similar ritual. The Cherokees of the American Southwest, in contrast, observed the corn harvest with the festive green corn dance.

Even with the industrialization of the Western world, harvest time continues as a cause for

IF YOU'RE ABOUT TO BECOME A CIVILIAN, TALK TO THE PERSON WHO CAN HELP YOU MOST.

The person who can help you most when you leave active duty might be the one who shows you how to continue your service in the Army Reserve.
Whether you're getting out of the Army, Air Force, Marines or Navy, one of the best places to get a head start is in an Army Reserve unit. Because serving in the Army Reserve (usually one weekend a month and two weeks a year) can help you reach your new goals.
You'll be earning a part-time income based on your rank and maintaining many of your benefits such as life insurance, shopping in the PX and commissary, and qualifying for money to further your education.
Transferring to the Army Reserve is a great way to make the transition to civilian life. Because you're surrounded by other people with whom you have lots in common.
With over 4,000 Army Reserve units, there's probably one close to where you plan on living. So find out more about the Army Reserve. If you're currently on active duty in the Army, speak to a Total Army Career Counselor. If you're in another service, talk to an Army Reserve Recruiter, or call toll-free 1-800-USA-ARMY.

Try these drinks without alcohol if you're driving

Safety Office

Who says drinks for designated drivers have to be dull? Moc margaritas and "virgin" or "bloodless" Marys are two popular non-alcoholic alternative.

These drinks contan basically the same ingredients as the originals, minus alcohol. And you can still walk a chalk line and touch your nose blindfolded when you're done.

Mock Margarita

2 cups bitter lemon or lime soda
2 tablespoons sugar
Juice of 1/2 lime
Salt
Crushed ice

Freeze soda in an ice cube tray; Blend lime juice, sugar and frozen soda thoroughly. Rub lime around rim of glass, dip in salt. Pour mixture over crushed ice in salted glasses. Makes two servings.

Bloodless Mary

6-oz. can tomato or mixed vegetable juice
1/4 cup club soda
1/2 teaspoon lime juice
Dash worcestershire sauce
Dash hot pepper sauce

Shake or stir to blend ingredients. Add ice, garnish with celery stalk. Makes one serving.

Actor takes up residence in post schools

By Beth Middlemiss
Fort Benning schools

Brian Van Thompson, artist-in-residence in theater, will spend six weeks with the students at Don C. Faith Middle School.

This is the third year that the school has participated in the Artists in Residence program. Two professional writers conducted a residency in 1985-86, and last year a professional photographer helped students set up the photography lab at the new school.

During his six week residency, Thompson will introduce students to the creative process through acting, mime improvisation, and creative movement techniques. At the conclusion of the residency, students will present a program consisting of their own original material along with material that has been choreographed for them.

Thompson describes the art of acting as "a personal expression which challenges the student to discover more about their own individuality. It gives the students a new awareness of themselves, exposes potential, and encourages abilities already present."

Thompson has performed throughout the eastern U.S. and Canada at festivals, schools, colleges and universities, with symphony orchestras and on television and film. This includes not only hundreds of solo concerts but performances with a variety of theater, mime and dance companies. Presently an actor with the Academy Theatre in Atlanta, he is also a summer faculty member at two schools for gifted students in the arts; Brenau College, Gainesville, Ga., and Brevard College, Brevard, N.C.

He has been described as a clown, a dancer, and entertainer, and a serious dramatist all rolled into one. In 1985, he was co-author and technical director of "A Simple Gift", a touring multimedia production featuring 12 performing and visual artists. He has appeared in two programs for public television, "The Soldiers Tale" and "Peter and the Wolf", and most recently was seen as Joey Belinda in "Great Georgia Ghosts" on WSB-TV in Atlanta.

The Artist is Residence program is sponsored by the Fort Benning Schools, National Endowment for the Fine Arts, and the Georgia Council for the Arts.

The residency will be coordinated at Faith School by Gail Wilson, assistant pricipal, with the assistance of teachers Marcy Collins and Roger King. Jennifer Prosch will coordinate a variety of activities for the artist in the community.

celebration and thanksgiving.

Germany's popular celebration of the barly and hops harvest, Oktoberfest, is known worldwide for its abundance of beer, food, singing and dancing. Although literally called the "October Festival," the Oktoberfest is usually held in late September when the first new beer of the season comes of age. The celebration, once confined to the city of Munich, has spread throughout Germany.

Many European harvest festivals take place on Nov. 11 in honor of St. Martin of Tours, patron saint of beggars. During medieval times, the wealthier people of Germany, France, Holland, England and the countries of central Europe offered a share of their harvest to the poor in honor of St. Martin. Today, St. Martin Day is a cross between Thanksgiving and Halloween. Roast goose is traditionally served at the day's feasts. In some European towns, children dress as beggars and go door to door carrying lighted lanterns and "begging" for fruit, cake and candy.

The people of Japan celebrate rice harvests at regional festivals held throughout the fall. The Skukaku-sai festivals feature parades, floats, campfires and lanterns.

Like the Japanese Skukaku-sai festivals, many harvest celebrations are observed on a regional, rather than national basis.

One example is the English Mop Fair, celebrated at the harvest's end in Stratford-on-Avon, home of William Shakespeare. The festival began hundreds of years ago, when servants and farm hands were hired by the year. Landowners and workers alike went into town, landowners to hire new workers and workers to find new jobs. Shopkeepers in Stratford-on-Avon held a fair for the crowd that poured into town. The name "Mop Fair" was inspired by the mops carried by women servants. Today, the festival features food, music, dancing and amusement rides.

In southern Spain, natives and tourists alike join in the Fiesta de la Uva, or Festival of the Grapes, in the town of Jerez de la Frontera. Farmers and winemakers celebrate the mid-September grape harvest with a thanksgiving service in the cathedral.

It is a day of reflcetion on all that America has — freedom as well as bounty — and a time to give thanks, as a nation and a people.

Turkey 'top bird' on dinner tables this Thanksgiving

By Evelyn D. Harris
American Forces Information Service

Benjamin Franklin thought the turkey should be our national bird. And although the eagle's strong and vigilant image earned it "top bird" status, on Thanksgiving, it's the turkey who reigns on dinner tables wherever Americans gather.

Turkey, like other poultry, is tasty and nutritious. But like all high-protein food, it is especially vulnerable to microorgansims that can cause food poisoning.

Every year, some 2 million Americans suffer from food poisoning. Here are some hints from food safety experts to ensure that you and your loved ones are not included in that number.

Preparing — If you mix your stuffing a day ahead, premix only the dry ingredients and refrigerate them separately from the uncooked bird. That will keep any bacteria from entering the starchy dressing. Bacteria thrive in high-protein, high-carbohydrate food combinations.

If you're going to use the same knife to cut the vegetables that you used for the meat, first wash it thoroughly. The same goes for cutting boards and all utensils.

Cooking — Stuff the bird loosely just before you're going to cook it. That way, the heat from the oven has a better chance to cook the stuffing all the way through.

Check the stuffing with a meat thermometer after you take the bird out of the oven. Leave the thermometer in place for about five minutes for an accurate reading. To be fully cooked, the stuffing should reach 165 degrees Fahrenheit, the bird 185 degrees.

Serving — Serve the stuffing in a separate dish from the turkey. Don't leave the turkey and stuffing at room temperature longer than two hours. Even if you can't face clearing off the whole table right after eating, at least get the turkey, stuffing and any food containing eggs or dairy products in the refrigerator promptly.

Refrigerating — If you don't want to debone the turkey right away, regrigerate the carcass. It is best to separate turkey into pieces, such as drumsticks, before refrigeration. But it will stay fresher if you don't slice it into very small pieces. The reason: You want it small enough to cool quickly but not so small that it is exposed to air at room temperature for long.

If you have large amounts of stuffing, divide them into smaller dishes. This speeds cooling. The key to food safety is to try to keep foods either hot (above 140 degrees) or cold (below 45 degrees). Minimizing the time food stays at room temperature increases safety.

Freezing — If you can't eat leftover turkey quickly, freeze it. Cooked dry turkey keeps a month in the freezer. Turkey in gravy keeps up to six months. Freezing dries foods out, but the gravy helps prevent this.

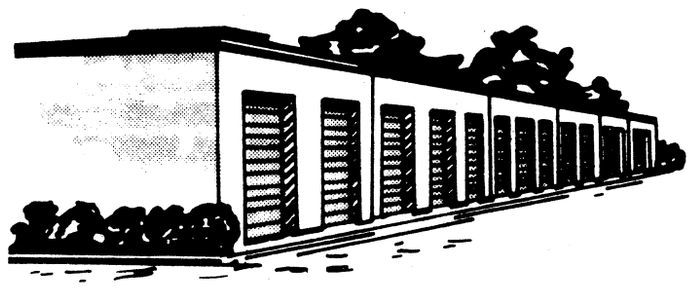
creased risk for catching the flu and are encouraged to get vaccinated.

Active duty troops must get their shots at the troop medical clinics, while family practice patients can get theirs at the Family Practice Clinic. Retirees and their dependents can be vaccinated at the Immunization Clinic on the 9th floor of the hospital. The clinic's hours are from 7:30 to 11:30 a.m. and 1 to 3:30 p.m., Monday through Friday.

Patients under age 19 must have a prescription for immunizations. Patients must bring their medical records to the clinic or they will not be immunized.



Children ages 6 months to 12 years will require two separate injections at monthly intervals.

USAIC Small Arms Championships held here

Photos by Tommy Pool

Capt. Clyde Moxley, 3/32 Inf., 1st ITB, uses a carbide lamp to blaken his front sites prior to shooting. This procedure provides a better site picture by cutting down on haze.

SSgt. Gary Cumbie, 3/32, Inf. 1st ITB, outdistanced the field for his third USAIC individual combat pistol title.

Spec. 4 Mark Crissman, 2/14 Inf., 10th Mtn. Div., was this year's USAIC individual light machinegun champion.

USAMU PAO

More than 170 of Ft. Benning's top marksmen from virtually every major unit competed in this year's USAIC Small Arms Championships held from Nov. 16 though 20.

Soldiers participated in both individual and team championships held at Phillips, Easley and McAndrew ranges firing standard military small arms.

Events included competition in the M-16 combat rifle, 9mm combat pistol and the M-60 light machinegun.

To simulate combat conditions, light machinegunners engaged multiple targets out to 600 meters while having to change barrels.

Pistol competitors engaged targets at 25 meters and M-16 shooters attempted to hit targets as far out as 400 meters.

Time limits varied from two minutes for sustained fire with the M-16 to 5 seconds in rapid fire pistol events.

In individual M-16 competition, Capt. Clyde Moxley, 3rd Battalion, 32d Infantry, 1st ITB, scored a narrow one-point victory finishing with an overall score of 359 out of 400 possible points to be named the overall M-16 match winner.

SFC Richard Wyckstandt, 2d Battalion, 29th Infantry, captured first place in the M-16 open class firing 358 while SSgt. Daniel Bonilla, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry, captured first in the novice class with 348.

In individual M-60 competition, SP4 Mark Crissman, 2d Battalion, 14th Infantry, fired 473 to be overall M-60 match winner. S 4 Eric Smith took first place in the M-60 novice class with 417. There was no M-60 open class.

SSgt. Gary Cumbie kept true to form and won the overall 9mm individual competition. Cumbie has won the this title two previous times.

Cumbie scored a two-day total of 1,780 points out shooting all competitors.

Capt. Greg Smith, 34th Medical Battalion, took first place in the 9mm open class with a 1,715 while Sgt. Wayne Gates, 2d Battalion, 29th Infantry, fired 1,714 to capture first in the the novice class.

The small arms team competition turned into a battle between teams from the 1st Infantry Training Brigade and the 10th Mountain Division.

Units form the 10th Mountain took all three M-60 team awards. Teams from the 2d Battalion, 14th Infantry captured first and second places while a team from the 3d Battalion, 14th Infantry came in third.

The first-place M-60 team from Company B, 2d Battalion, 14th Infantry included Sp4s Mark Crissman, Eric Smith and Pfc. Jamie Ensminger.

In team 9mm and M-16 competition, teams from the 1st ITB dominated by taking fist place in each.

The 1st ITB M-16 team captured 2,280 points and first place as it out distanced the team from 2d Battalion, 29th Infantry who came in at 2,244. The 2d Battalion, 14th Infantry rounded out the top three firing 2,170.

The 1st ITB M-16 team included Capt. Clyde Moxey, SFC Robert McNiel, SSgts. Hilario Benavidez and James Pless and Cpl. John Thornton.

The 1st ITB first place 9mm team scored 2,637, followed by the teams from 34th Medical Battalion, at 2,445 points, and 3d Battalion 14th Infantry, 10th Mountain Divsion, with 2,412.

Firing members of the 1st ITB winning 9mm team included Staff Sgts. Gary Cumbie, Ronald Burlington and Herman Wells as well as Cpl James Baron.

New major health promotion program to begin Army wide

Army News Service

An extensive health promotion program covering eight major fitness areas is getting underway at installations worldwide, Army officials reported recently.

"Modules designed for unit commanders from battalion to installation level will help health promotion program managers carry out the program at Army installations and communities worldwide," said Janet MacKinnon, a marketing specialist with the the Army Health Promotion Branch at the Pentagon. "The modules are packaged in commander's health fitness kits. These kits will provide a standardized approach for program planning, staffing, administration and evaluation."

"From anti-tobacco use to substance abuse, soldiers and others can receive help in many areas, including stress management, hypertension, nutrition and weight control, physical conditioning, dental health and spiritual fitness." MacKinnon continued. "In addition to handbooks, the color-coded modules contain a program overview in a guide for commanders. Contents also include a procedures guide for unit commanders and health promotion educators, as well as 'Fit to Win' brochures which describe the Army's health fitness program, brightly colored posters and handouts from outside agencies."

The new program targets all members of the total Army family for participation. "Those eligible to participate in the program include active-duty soldiers, National Guard and U.S. Army Reserve soldiers, family members, retirees and DA civilians," said MacKinnon.

"Soldiers will receive a health risk assessment during initial or periodic medical examinations. Also, they may be introduced to it during flight physicals, over-40 physical examinations, when undergoing change-of-station in-processing or when they first in-process as new recruits. In addition, unit commanders may request a soldier's participation. Self referral will be the main way family members, Army civilians and retirees will get into the program."

"In addition to recording information about the participants' height, weight, and blood pressure," MacKinnon said, "the automated health risk appraisal will record answers to a series of questions on family medical history and lifestyle. Participants get one copy of the health risk-profile printout. Health care professionals retain the other. Eventually, compiled data is forwarded to the unit, installation/community and commanders of major commands showing the overall health status of their organizations."

"Another program element, and perhaps one of the best-received and what participants find most interesting, involves a desk-top serum cholesterol count. An almost painless finger prick draws a small amount of blood which is put through a digital, computerized analyzer (about the size of a bread box). Within minutes, the participant's cholesterol level shows up on a display screen. If the count is dangerously high, the technician refers the participant for further tests and evaluation."

"Once fully evaluated, soldiers' and community needs can be identified," MacKinnon continued. "Resources can then be allocated to meet those needs. Installation commanders can now directly influence the health and fitness of the members of their command. An effective Army-wide program, we believe, can occur only with an active, involved and integrated effort at the installation level."

"Commanders, however, can't do it alone," MacKinnon said. "Under the new program, commanders appoint a program coordinator to assist them. Additionally, each installation and community will have a health promotion council made up of representatives from the Directorate of Personnel and Community Activities and the Medical Treatment Facility."

One of the council's main duties includes identifying what local health promotion activities currently exist and integrating those programs with new ones. Assessing program strengths and weaknesses stands as a high priority for each council.

"Assessments took place as early as 1982, when research was conducted at several Army installations and at the Pentagon," MacKinnon said. "For instance, at Fort Bragg, N.C., the test program began back in 1984. And it's still going strong."

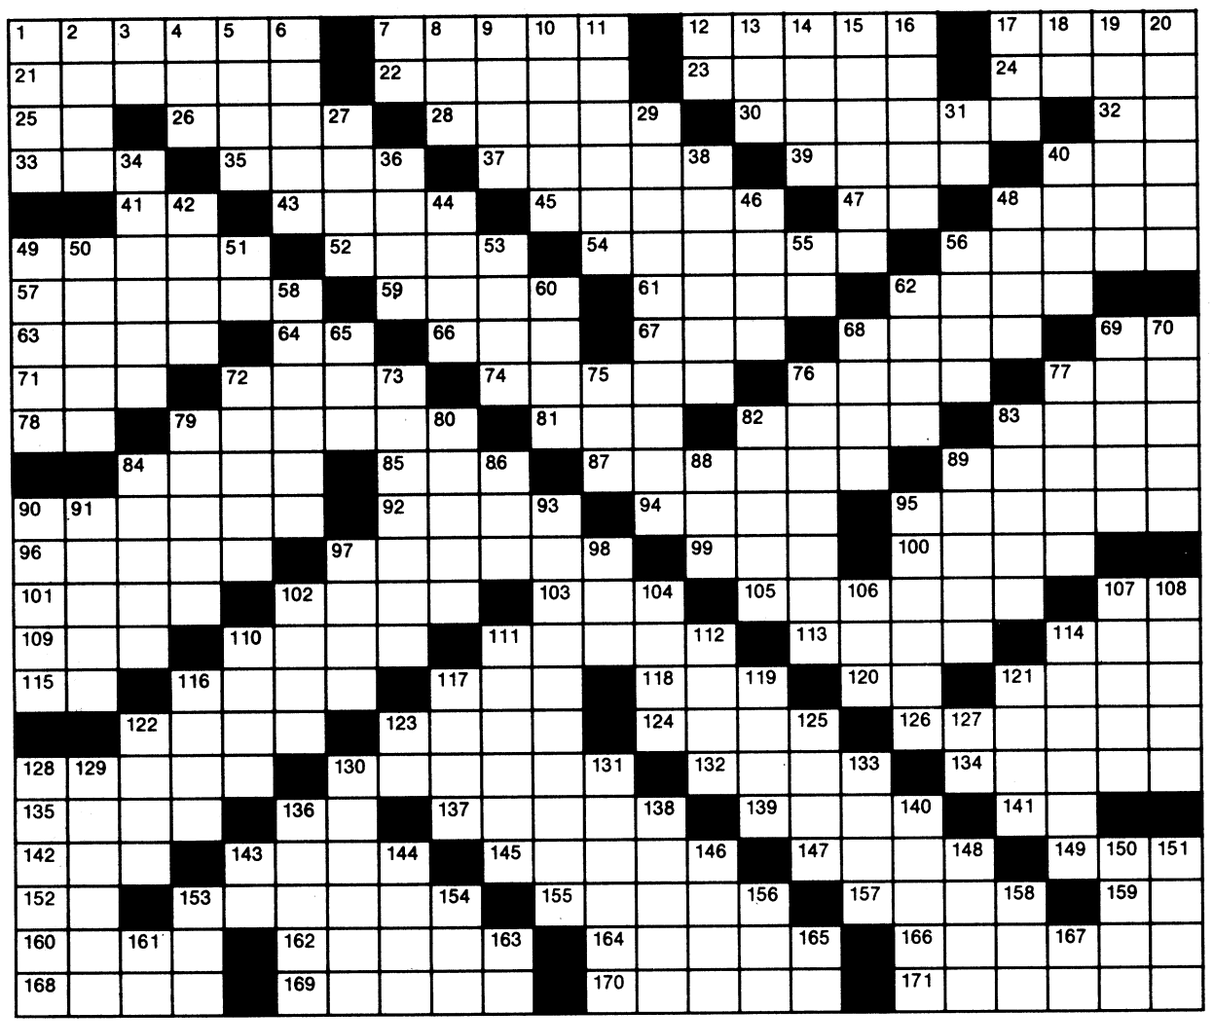
Bragg's test program eventually evolved into a pilot program, which became full-scale and bona fide in October.

Today, as many as 1,500 people participate in the program a month.

"Cholesterol is of great interest," said Capt. Theresa C. Messenger, Bragg's "CORFIT" director. "Everyone's interested in finding out his or her cholesterol level. The on-the-spot lab results went over big during the test phase and remain so."

"Also, we've produced closed-circuit aerobic cable TV programs, as well as talk-show type interviews on the local radio. Our newspaper articles have focused on health fitness.

"At our commissaries, we have labels on certain foods indicating those with low fat and salt content. We have also held health fairs and other activities for all ages -- including a calisthenics program for children as young as 5 years of age."



Overall, the Army's new program is designed to foster combat readiness by maximizing individual well-being, according to MacKinnon. "With early awareness and detection both available under the program's guidance, Army installations around the world can demonstrate the caring leadership our total Army family deserves."

"What we really want to accomplish at Bragg," Messenger concluded, "involves making good health and fitness part of everyday life -- for a lifetime."

MacKinnon, concurring, said: "The Army health promotion program can be the first step in making good health and fitness a part of your lifestyle."

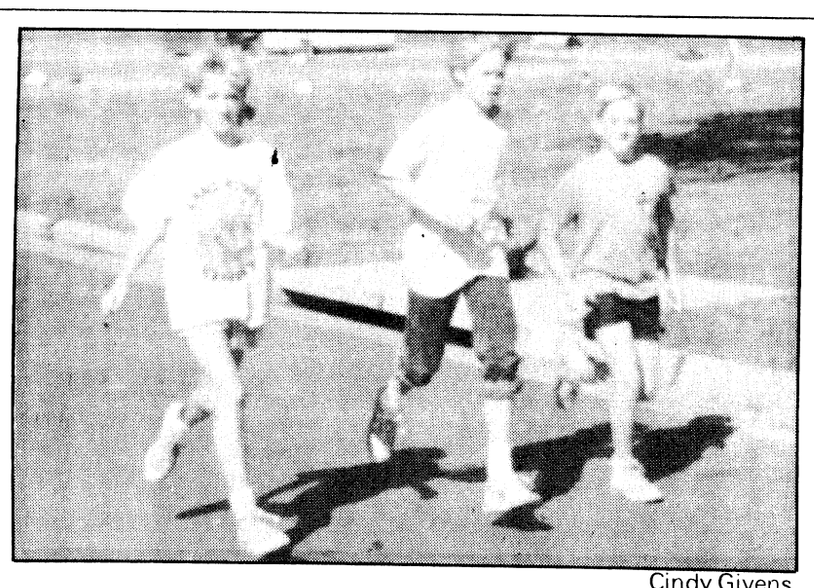
Faith Race planned

By Beth Middlemiss
Fort Benning Schools

The ninth annual Faith School Race will take place on Saturday, Dec. 5. The race is sponsored this year by the Don C. Faith Middle School physical education department and the Houston Sports Medicine Hospital.

The Faith Race is made up of three different races that begin and end at Don C. Faith Middle School at 137 Ingersoll Street. The one-mile race for boys and girls 14 years old and under begins at 8:45 a.m., the two mile race begins at 9:15 a.m., and the five mile race begins at 9:45 a.m. The two and five-mile races are open to all age categories.



There are 19 age categories within the three races, and awards will be presented in each category at the awards ceremony in the Faith School gym. Faith Race T-shirts will be presented to all finishers.

"Our race has grown each year," said Susan Emerson, Faith physical education teacher and race coordinator. "Participants include students, parents, teachers and other Fort Benning runners from the surrounding Columbus and Phenix City area. It has become a family affair with entire families running the race together."

The race involving 700 to 1100 runners each year, began nine years ago as an outgrowth of the Faith physical education program and the Faith Jogging Club which had begun that same year.

Pre-registration fees are $4 for ages 14 and under, per race, and $6 for ages 15 and over, per race. Registration fees for the day of the rate increases to $5 and $7 respectfully.

Anyone needing further information about the race, can contact physical education teacher, Susan Emerson, at Faith Middle School at 545-2309.

JROTCs wins drill meet

By Carol Wells
Spencer High School

The J.R.O.T.C. girl's and boy's drill teams won trophies for Spencer High School. The competition was held recently at Carver Heights.

The girl's team won what they call "The Stairway to Heaven." Their routine, performed with great accuracy ends with the smallest girl, Maria Ortiz, balancing upon a rifle that is held by two other girls, while the remaining team members spin their rifles.

The undefeated boy's drill team proved once again they are the best at what they do.

Both teams were invited to compete in a televised event in Florida where they will pit their talents against other teams throughout the region.

"They (the other schools) didn't think we'd make it," said Kim Oliver, drill team member, "but we showed them!"

Greenwave nabs perfect score

By T. Richard Cummings
Spencer High School

The Spencer High Greenwave Band received a perfect score at the Fountain City Festival at Memorial Stadium recently.

The band, under the direction of Mr. Vincent Rosse, played 'For Your Eyes Only', 'Stingray', and 'The Tiger of San Pedro'.

The Greenwaves took home five trophies in all, one went to drum major Tyrone Monte, the color guard, the drumline, the band award and a participation trophy.

Arts and Crafts — The Fort Benning Arts and Crafts Center Photo Lab is like having your own photography school, and your own professional instructor. What can you learn? How to use your camera, how to use studio lighting, how to develop film — black and white negatives, color negatives and color slides — how to enlarge and print pictures.

Come by and see us, you will be fascinated by what you can do, and no experience necessary, we will teach you step-by-step. Now that the secret is out and you have gotten over the initial surprise of how quick and easy you can make your own pictures we hope you will spread the word. For the best pictures in town, make them yourself at your Arts and Crafts Center, bldg. 2783, located on the corner of Eckel Street and Sightseeing Road, or call us at 545-3677.

Aerobic Classes Aerobic exercise offers fun and fitness for everyone. Classes are taught by a certified aerobics instructor and the first class is free. Think fit and look fit by enrolling in an Officers' Club aerobic class. Call 687-0871 for additional information.

Music Lessons — The recreation centers offer piano lessons, beginning and intermediate, to people of all ages.

Joleen Oney of the Acorn School of Music, offers piano and vocal lessons for all ages.

Joleen is a member of the National Guild of Piano Teachers and is qualified to teach pre-school age children, as well.

Grandkids to grandparents can learn to play beautifully by taking one 30-minute lesson per week, (not including practice time).

Lessons are private and individually-paced. Practice pianos are available during recreation centers operational hours.

Cost is only $7 per lesson. To register, call 544-1721 or 545-7400 and leave your name and telephone number. The instructor will contact you to arrange a lesson schedule.

Dogs nip Svc Btry, 33-32

Kevin J. Howerton

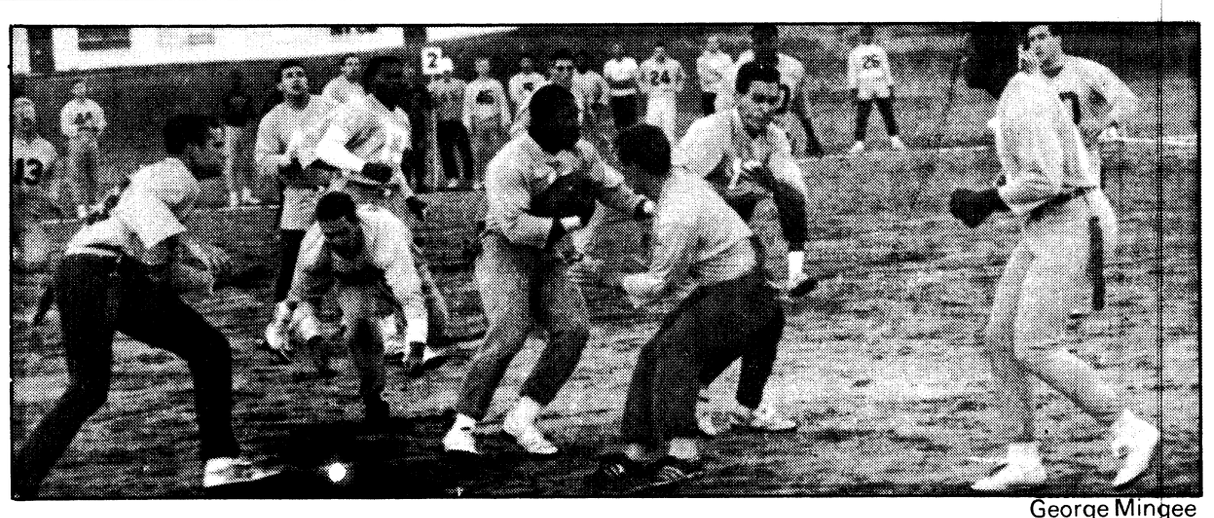
Roscoe Cherry of C Btry., 2nd Bn., 10th FA, goes up for the shot.

Roscoe Cherry game's top scorer

By Kevin J. Howerton
197th Infantry Brigade Correspondent

The "Charlie Dogs" of C Btry., 2nd Bn., 10th FA, narrowly won their first game of the Kelley Hill intramural basketball season Wednesday night. The Dogs edged past Svc. Btry. in a close and exciting 33-32 game.

Melvin C. Tripp, a guard for the Dogs, made the winning point during the last few seconds of the game. With his team one point behind and the crowd rocking the gymnasium, he managed to sink two free throws.



"I lost my first free throw, but a violation was called on the other team," said Tripp. "I just knew I had to make the other two."

Rosco Cherry, the starting center for the Dogs, scored the first two points of the game. He continued making baskets and became the leading scorer with 14 points overall.

Sylvester Davis of Svc. Btry. was the second highest scorer of the game with eight points.

The game was close all the way. The score was 19-18 in favor of Svc. Btry. at the half.

Early in the second half, the Charlie Dogs took a narrow three-point lead, but with 10 minutes left on the clock, the score was tied 24-24. The lead continued to rock back and forth until Tripp made his two free throws with 12 seconds left on the clock.

George Mingee

Halfback Charlie Jenkins, from Rock's Support, plows through the Panthers secondary for another first-down.

Support slips past Panthers, 1-0

By George Mingee
197th correspondent

In a close fought game, Rock's Support, of 2nd Battalion, 10th Field Artillery, edged out the Panthers of 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor, for the officers' 197th Intramural Football Championship.

The game started off with a bang as quarterback Randy Cephus of Rock's Support led his team on a furious opening drive. After a couple of missed scoring opportunities, the Panthers defense dug in and the drive was halted.

Taking control of the ball from their own goal line, the Panthers took off on a ball-control drive of their own. Led by the elusive running and passing of quarterback Chuck Hand, the Panthers surged into their opponent's territory. However, at this point, the drive stalled, mainly due to the relentless pass rush of Rocks Support defensemen. Thus, the first half ended on the next offensive play.

When the whistle blew, the second half started with an air of fierce determination on both sides of the field. The Panthers opened the hunt for the title with a drive down to the Rocks Support goal line. Apparently the Panthers were on the verge of scoring the game's first points, until the opposition's defense exerted massive pressure and deflected several key passes to end the drive.

Two plays after retaking control of the ball, quarterback Cephys scooted away from a heavy Panther onrush and hit wide receiver Clarence Christians deep in Panther territory. With momentum on their side and the clock running out, victory appeared imminent for Rock Support. However, the next pass was picked off when Panther Brian Foy made a diving interception.

Immediately, on the next offensive play quarterback Hand threw a deep, sideline pass to Gregg Perry who made an outstanding one-handed catch. However a play later regular time expired.

The game then went into a nail biting over-time period, where the outcome of the game was decided by virtue of which team had made the best offensive penetration. Initially the Panthers moved the ball further down the field. However, after a series of crucial plays and penalties, Rock Support entered Panther territory and won the drama-packed game 1-0 on best field position.

Cadets win Navy's next

ArNewS -- Cadet Tory Crawford ran for three touchdowns and passed for another Nov. 13 to lead the cadets of the U.S. Military Academy to a 49-37 victory over Lafayette.

Crawford's second-quarter touchdown pass to cadet Sean Jordan covered 89 yards. That's the longest scoring pass in Army history.

The cadets play the Big Game, Navy Dec. 5, in Philadelphia.

YA Basketball sign-up begins

YA Basketball registration will begin Nov. 30 and continue through Dec. 11.

Children 8-15 years old of active duty or retired military personnel may register. Birth certificates or ID cards will be required.

Sign-up will be conducted Monday through Friday from 8 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. at the Youth Activities, building 1056 on McIver Street.

Basketball coaches and cheerleaders are also needed for the up-coming season. For more information on coaching requirements and player registration, call 545-3070 or 3913.

Second either sex deer hunt begins

The second either sex deer hunt for this year on Fort Benning will be Nov. 21-29.

During these dates, wildlife management personnel will be weighing, aging and measuring deer at the Deer Check Station, building 5883, Harmony Church.

In order for proper management decisions to be made, as many deer as possible should be observed. All deer hunters are asked to cooperate in this effort by bringing any deer killed to the Deer Check Station for examination.

Hours of operation will be: 8 a.m. to 7 p.m. on Nov. 21-22; 8 a.m. to 4 p.m. on normal work days; 8 a.m. to noon on Nov. 28-29. The check station will be closed on Thanksgiving Day.

Hunters reminded of deer bag limit

The maximum number of deer that may be killed by any person by any means on the entire Fort Benning Military Reservation is three (3), one (1) of which must be antlerless.

It is legal to kill three does provided they are taken during dates on which either sex hunting is authorized.

Under no conditions shall any person take more than two (2) bucks during the entire season.

Hunter call in/out program in effect

A new system for requesting hunting areas on Fort Benning is in use this year for those authorized to hunt on the military reservation.

Through Jan. 14, 1988, a call-in/call-out system will be used, replacing last year's system of physically signing in and signing out.

In order to call in and out, hunters on Fort Benning must register at the Outdoor Recreation Administration, building 247 on Ingersoll Street, where they will receive the necessary information including regulations and a numbered access pass. State hunting licenses may be purchased there.

The new Hunter control call-in/call-out number is 682-1589 and will be operational from 4 a.m. until 8 p.m., seven days a week. The military number is 545-7680; however, there is only one line for use from range safety phones.

This is how the new system works: When the number is dialed and the call answered, the hunter gives his access pass number and hunting area requested. Hunters should have an alternate choice, should the first one be full. Once verified by the operator, the hunter may proceed to the hunting area requested.

Call-ins may be made as early as noon the day before the hunt.

When leaving the hunting area for the day, the hunter should again call Hunter Control for verification. This can be accomplished from a range phone or after arrival at home or other destination, providing the call is made before 8 p.m.

Infantry Center regulations require Fort Benning hunters to check range clearance maps before hunting on post.

Waterfowl season opens in November

Waterfowl season has been set for the 87-88 season.

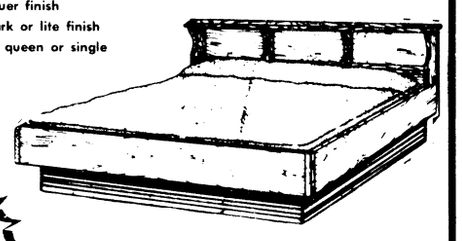
The Georgia season for ducks will be Nov. 26-28 and Dec. 12 through Jan. 17.

Alabama waterfowl season is set for Dec. 9 through Jan. 17.

Hunters must comply with state law concerning bag limits.

For more information contact DEH at 544-6120.

Uchee area suspends hunting license sales



State licenses and post permits will no longer be sold at the Uchee Creek Recreation Area on weekends and holidays. This change is due to construction of a new bait shop. State licenses and post permits will be available from the Outdoor Recreation Administration Office, Monday-Friday, 8 a.m. to 4:30 p.m..

Aerobics classes offered at Audie Murphy and bldg 4

Aerobics classes are conducted on Monday, Wednesday and Friday at 9 a.m. in Audie Murphy Fitness Center and on Monday, Wednesday and Friday at noon and 7 p.m. in building 4 Fitness Center. The cost is $12 per month. For more information call 545-1940.

Competitors begin the 3.1-mile cross-country run at Flat Rock.

Spencer nabs 2nd at Flat Rock

By Carol Wells
Spencer High School

Tom Cruise, a Spencer High sophmore, overtook Bobby Gardner, of Shaw High, in the home stretch to win the cross-country championship at Flat Rock Park recently.

Cruise finished the 3.1 mile course in 17 minutes 58 seconds.

Dawn Gossett took top honors for the Spencer High girls with a time of 23 minutes 7 seconds.

Mary Mace, the defending champion, also from Spencer, succumbed to heat exhaustion and did not place in the competition.

The top place finishes were not enough to grab the team championship as Shaw High took first in both the girls' and boys' category.

Firearms transportation regulated

By Wendell D. Choate
Provost Marshal's Office

It has been observed on this installation that personnel are carrying privately owned weapons in their POVs. There is nothing wrong with this if they are on their way to a hunting area, a range, or enroute back to their quarters from one of these areas.

But if these weapons are being transported in the vehicles just because the individual wants to carry them in the weapons rack of his vehicle they are in violation of USAIC Reg. 210-5, section X, para 41, which reads, in part:

No weapons will be transported on Fort Benning with a loaded round in the chamber or with a loaded magazine/clip affixed into the weapon load chamber. Authorized hand guns (pistols and revolvers), shotguns, rifles, or bows and arrows will be transported in the trunk of the automobile to the ranges or hunting sites. In those instances where a vehicle does not have a trunk, or the storage space is not adequate to accommodate firearms, the weapons will be carried in the vehicle in such a manner that makes them readily observable by law enforcement personnel.

The carrying of arms anywhere on the reservation is prohibited except by those who are engaged in:

(1) The performance of military duty.

(2) Skeet shooting, or authorized pistol and rifle target shooting.

(3) Authorized hunting.

Because hunting season has started, the game wardens and range security personnel will be watching the vehicles on post more closely for weapons.

If you are a hunter, carry your weapon in the trunk of your vehicle out of sight. You should never park your vehicle in a parking area on post if you have a weapon in the rear window weapons rack or other area inside the vehicle. Windows can be broken out and the weapon taken. Only transport your weapons to the authorized ranges and hunting areas and back to your quarters or company arms room if you reside in the barracks.

Let's make this hunting season as safe and incident free as it can possibly be.

If you have any questions, or need assistance contact the Fort Benning Military Police, DOD Police, Range Security or the Crime Prevention office. Phone numbers -- 545-5223/5224. Crime Prevention office, 545-1065/7610.

Safeguard firearms to prevent tragedy

Installation Safety Ofice

Carelessness with firearms in the house can have tragic results. Recently, a four year old boy in Utah shot and killed his mother with a .22 caliber pistol. The child had to climb seven feet up to a closet shelf to find the loaded pistol.

In FY 87, two Fort Benning soldiers were injured, when they improperly handled their own pistols.

Family members, especially children, usually do not know the proper and safe handling of firearms.

Many children visit homes of friends. Children are attracted to firearms and like to show off to their friends, which can and has had tragic results.

Soldiers need to explain to each family member how firearms work and how carelessly handled firearms can be unsafe and injure or kill someone.

Never load a firearm in the house, and always store ammunition in a separate, secure place.

Soldiers who would like to teach their family members the proper and safe handling of firearms, can contact the Rifle and Pistol Club, 689-3371, for instructions.

Ferret owners warned of possible attack

Georgia Department of Natural Resources

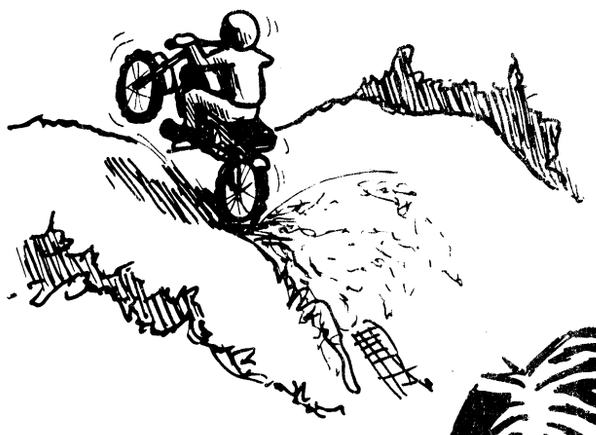
Recent attacks on humans by their pet ferrets has prompted Georgia's Department of Natural Resources to issue a public warning against owning illegal wild animals.

The attack on a six-month-old baby in Savannah, and the killing of another six-month-old by ferrets in London has alerted DNR and the public to the problem of illegal and dangerous pets.

"It's naive to think that animals that are only a few generations away from the wild would make good pets," said Col. Steve Black, head of DNR's Law Enforcement Division, "Dogs have been domesticated for thousands of years, and we hear almost daily of attacks on people by their dogs."

"Wild animals retain their killer instinct and have been know to revert after years of peaceful existence as a family pet," Black explained.

A weasel-like predator, the ferret in known to kill for no apparent reason.



Georgia law prohibits the ownership of specific wild animals like the ferret. According to Black, many Georgians continue to house these unpredictable creatures without regard to the law or their own safety.

"We would like to stop tragedies like the ferret attacks," said Black, "but we can only help if the public will cooperate by reporting violators."

If you have any questions about owning certain animals, or if you have information concerning violators, please call DNR's Law Enforcement Division at (404) 656-3510.

"I just made $600 by spending $10.62"

Spending a little money in Ledger-Enquirer Classified to sell something can mean big money for you. For example, you can run a 3-line ad for 3 days for just $10.62 on a big-ticket item. Or, you can run a 3-line ad for 5 days for just $5 in some classifications. Either way, when you have something to sell, spending a little can help you pick up a lot!

Post arbitration board; alternative to lawsuits

By Becky Obert
Bayonet staff writer

A buddy borrows $500 from you, then refuses to repay it according to the terms you agreed to. In the past, your only alternative would have been to file suit in Municipal Court in Columbus, try to obtain a judgment against him and then garnish his wages.

Now you have another alternative you can take the case to the Fort Benning Arbitration Board.

While it's not exactly Judge Wapner's courtroom, the process is similar to the popular television show, said Capt. Jeffery Kipi, the legal assistance officer who came up with the idea for an arbitration board here.

"Basically, I just got tired of people coming in to my office with this type of legal problem, and me telling them I can't help them," he said.

The way the arbitration system works is simple. The two parties in the case must agree to accept the decision of an independent arbitrator.

"The arbitration process is firmly established in federal and state law," Kipi said. "If both parties agree to accept the arbiter's decision, then we have jurisdiction."

Arbitration will save people money and time, he said. "It will save a $35 filing fee (charged in Municipal Court), time off work and attorney's fees."

The two parties must jointly fill out an application for arbitration form, which includes statements by them as to their side of the dispute. They sign the form and turn it in to the Legal Assistance Office. An artibrator is assigned the case and then notifies the parties of the hearing date.

Kipi said that the parties cannot be represented by attorneys at the arbitration hearing, and the parties don't even have to appear if they don't want to. "They can both submit their side in writing, attach any documentary evidence, and agree to accept the ruling of the arbitrator," Kipi said.

The board will meet one night a month at first, and depending on the demand for arbitration services, may be expanded at a later date, he said.

Only disputes involving $3,000 or less will be handled by the board. These could be landlord-tenant disputes, or civil disputes between two soldiers or between soldiers and civilians.

Some disputes will not be considered by the board. These include civil disputes involving the Army or its agencies, criminal or disciplinary matters, or any type of family law actions such as divorces, alimony or child support.

Other actions not eligible for arbitration are matters that can be resolved under the Uniform Code of Military Justice or Army Regulation 2-20, Chapter 9, regarding property willfully damaged or taken.

Once the case is heard, the arbitrator will have five days to reach a decision, which will be in writing, and will explain the legal reasoning. "Sometimes it may just be a compromise that will seek to be fair to both parties," Kipi said.

Every attorney in the Staff Judge Advocate's Office, with the exception of those in the Legal Assistance Office, will eventually serve as arbitrators, Kipi said. "Legal Assistance personnel will be uninvolved, so that they can provide legal advice to parties interested in seeking arbitration," he said.

This decision is final, unless either party can prove that an error was made. "If a person wants to challenge an arbitration decision, he can take it to state court. But he'd have to prove a blatant violation of law or he'd lose," Kipi said.

For information on how to submit a matter for arbitration, call 545-3281, or drop by the Legal Assistance Office in Building 5.

Downtown plans events for Operation Holiday

USAIC Public Affairs Office

The eighth annual Operation Holiday kicks off Dec. 18 in a 10:30 a.m. ceremony at the Columbus Government Center Plaza.

Operation Holiday is a series of events designed to entertain single soldiers who are unable to spend Christmas with their families. Sponsored by the Chattahoochee Valley-Fort Benning Chapter of the Association of the U.S. Army, it consists of a series of events, including basketball and football games, tours of local businesses and historical sites.

Last year, approximately 2,500 soldiers took part in Operation Holiday, at a cost to the local chapter of about $25,000.

Jim Gallagher, president of the local chapter, said that the success of the program is due to the support of the local community.

"We wouldn't be able to provide the activities we do, if it were not for local businessmen who underwrite a lot of the expense involved," he said.

The schedule includes tours of Pratt and Whitney, the R.C. Cola Company, WDAK-WSTH Radio Station, Sunshine Buscuit Company, WTVM Television Station, Dolly Madison and the Ledger-Enquirer Newspaper.

Also on the schedule are several sports events, including Atlanta Hawks basketball games, the Blue-Grey football game and the Peach Bowl.

Back this year by popular demand is an afternoon of musical entertainment at a recreation center, which will include music by a rock band, and performances by Miss Georgia, Miss Columbus and Miss Phenix City.

Historical sites on the agenda include tours of the Little White House in Warm Springs, Ga., the Confederate Naval Museum and Andersonville National Cemetery in Andersonville, Ga.

The AUSA bowling tournament, which expects to register 48 teams, will take place at the main post bowling center Dec. 21, 22 and 23.

Gallagher said that two Holiday Inns in Columbus are also donating a limited number of free rooms Christmas eve and several meals on Christmas Day.

Soldiers who are interested in taking advantage of the events should check with their unit first sergeant or sergeant major, Gallagher said.

"We are now in the process of deciding how many slots should be allotted for each activity, so that tickets can be purchased. We need to know how many soldiers want to participate," he said.

Special Forces

Recruiters visit Benning to take candidate applications

DA News Release

FORT BRAGG, N.C. — Recruiters for Army Special Forces will visit Fort Benning Dec. 6-8 to brief potential Special Forces candidates and take applications.

Briefings will be given each day at 9:30 a.m. and 1:30 p.m. in classroom 20 of building 4, Infantry Hall. Times and locations of the physical readiness and the swimming qualification tests will be announced at the briefings. For more information, call Sina Evans at 545-4702/2817.

The Special Forces Recruiting Team from the U.S. Army John F. Kennedy Special Warfare Center and School is using computers to locate qualified candidates and has streamlined the procedures for getting volunteers into the system.

"Once we have determined that a candidate is qualified, we can give him a class date in three to five days," said Maj. Randel Weikle, commander of the recruiting team.

Applications are being accepted for enlisted volunteers in four areas: weapons sergeant, 18B; engineer sergeant 18C; medical sergeant, 18D; and communications sergeant, 18E.

The team especially wants to attract soldiers interested in signal, Morse code or cryptography. Qualified soldiers who volunteer for communications sergeant could fill training slots open for January.

A soldier's chain of command will not be the approving authority for release from his unit, Weikle said. "If a soldier volunteers to go Special Forces and we find him to be qualified, he can start his training on the next available class date."

Enlisted males, sergeant to sergeant first class, who have graduated from Primary Leadership Course may apply for any of the four skill areas regardless of their current military occupational specialty. Specialists four who are PLDC graduates and hold a 91-series MOS may apply for medical sergeant.

All candidates must be U.S. citizens, be high school graduates or have a GED, and have a GT score of at least 110. Volunteers must be able to obtain a secret security clearance and be airborne qualified or volunteer for airborne training.

For more information about Special Forces training, contact the U.S. Army Special Forces Recruiting Team at Autovan 239-1818, commercial (919) 432-1818.

Post assembly areas set up for units, groups, activities

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Several no cost community assembly facilities will be set up for unit, community groups and activities to hold meetings and social events.

The Community Life Office will begin taking reservations for these meeting areas Friday and three of the facilities will be operational by Saturday, according to Maj. Jerry Latta, Community Life officer.

The following facilities will be available to all groups at no cost:

The north wing of the Officers Wives' Club, building 1208, main post.

The former Kelley Hill Snack Bar, located at the rear of the Kelley Hill Recreation Center, building 9079. This is a large facility capable of seating as many as 60 people.

Theater #2, building 72, main post, may also be reserved.

Additionally, the Normandy Room, Fort Benning Officers' Club has been pre-set with tables and chairs to use for meetings. This room, however, may be reserved by club members only.

Tentatively, building 80 on Yeager Avenue, currently occupied by the Safety Office, has been identified for conversion to a community center and will become available after the Safety Office has relocated to a newly renovated building 18.

For more information or to make a reservation call the Community Life Office, 545-2830/1389.

Infantry Center staff directors to accept command positions

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Two staff directors at the U.S. Army Infantry Center have been named to command positions they expect to assume by August.

Col. Philip R. Harris, Director of Engineering and Housing, will command the U.S. Army Kwajalein Atoll, a missile tracking station that is part of the Strategic Defense Command. As commander of that Pacific Ocean post, Harris will wear several hats including that of post commander, U.S. representative on the Marshall Islands and military respresentative to the commander-in-chief, Pacific Command, Camp Smith, Hawaii.

Col. Conrad Boterweg, Director of Personnel and Community Activities and a native of Perry, Georgia, will lead the Community Family Support Command in Seoul, Korea, the proponent for all morale, recreation and family activities serving some 40,000 U.S. soldiers and their families.

A two-tour veteran of Vietnam, Boterweg, 47 came to Fort Benning in August 1986 from a personnel assignment with U.S. forces Korea. As a major working for the Adjutant General in Washington, he established the Army's Word Processing Program and was an advocate of office automation.

Boterweg received his commission in armor and bachelor's degree in business administration in 1962 from North Georgia College. He holds a master's degree in business administration from the University of Georgia. His most recent command assignment was in St. Louis commanding the U.S. Army Publications Center.

Harris, 44, who has devoted his Army career to the Corps of Engineers, came to Fort Benning in November 1986 from Fort Gordon where he served as director of engineering and housing. The Bad Axe, Mich., native served two tours in Vietnam and has two command positions — an engineer comapny and engineer battalion — to his credit.

An authority on energy conservation, Harris received his commission and bachelor of science degree in biology from Central Michigan University. He holds a master's degree in engineering administration from the University of Missouri at Rolla.

Ceremony hails departing general

A departure ceremony for Brig. Gen. Barry R. McCaffrey, deputy commanding general of Fort Benning and assistant commandant of the U.S. Army Infantry School, will be held on York Field today at 3 p.m.

McCaffrey, who came to Fort Benning in January 1986, will be leaving the post to become Deputy, United States Representative to NATO, Military Committee, United States Army International Military Activity, in Brussels, Belgium.

Col. William W. Hartzog, recent commander of the 197th Infantry Brigade, will succeed McCaffrey. Nominated for his first star in July, Hartzog will assume the duties of Deputy Commanding General although his promotion is pending Senate confirmation of the 1987 Brigadier General list.

McCaffrey, 45, was born in Taunton, Mass., and was commissioned a second lieutenant on graduating from the U.S. Military Academy at West Point, N.Y. in 1964.

Hartzog, 46, born in Wilmington, N.C., was commissioned a second lieutenant in the Infantry upon graduating from the Citadel at Charleston, S.C., in 1963. He has commanded the 197th since November 1985.

CFC at 95 %

The monies for the Combined Federal Campaign are still coming in, and contributions will be accepted until Dec. 15, according to Maureen Brown of the campaign office. Already at 95 percent of its annual goal, 17,398 contributers have given a total of $521,223.75 to worthy agencies, she said.

OPINION

ROTC reinstatement sought at many prestigious colleges

Association of the U.S. Army

Only a dozen or so years ago the Reserve Officer Training Corps was scorned by large segments of America's college population and faced the threat of cancellation on many campuses.

In fact, a number of the nation's most prestigious schools - including Harvard, Dartmouth, Yale and Stanford — had dropped ROTC during the Vietnam era. Several of these have lately sought to reinstate the program, only to find themselves at the bottom of a sizeable waiting list.

From the ranks of ROTC come more than 70 percent of the lieutenants who enter the Army's active and reserve components each year. Enrollment reached an all-time high in 1961 when 180,000 cadets participated.

When the draft ended, after Vietnam, enrollment fell to less than 34,000. That was in 1974 and in the 12 intervening years a renew pride in uniform service and a program of scholarship incentives has swelled cadet ranks to more than 63,000.

Today some 1,450 colleges and universities across the nation offer Army ROTC courses, either as host, extension center or cross-enrolled schools.

As a result, about 85 percent of U.S. college and university students are afforded the opportunity to sign up for ROTC.

Nearly 8,000 college graduates were commissioned in the Army last year and 59 percent of them entered active duty. The remaining 41 percent assumed duties as second lieutenants in the Army Reserve or National Guard.

Political scientists have long considered ROTC one of the great strengths of the U.S. military system. Those who view critically many of the "old world" military systems see ROTC as a source of military leadership with its feet firmly planted in the American grass roots.

Governor Lee Dreyfuss, former chancellor at the University of Wisconsin at Stevens Point, ably expressed those sentiments by saying, "ROTC is not the presence of the military in the university, it is the presence of the university in the military."

This peculiar American institution seems certain to continue to serve the nation at least as effectively as it has in the past. It has already produced men like George Catlett Marshall and several other chiefs of staff of the Army. Somewhere in the college ranks today there may well be others.

Snively says Building 4 isn't all fun

By Clyde Snively
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Traveling about post I come across a lot of people who seem to think working in Building 4, Infantry Hall, is a big deal.

I guess they think that because we have two generals and more colonels than you can shake a stick at in this building. "Thus," they reason, "those Building 4 types must get a lot of special treatment."

I got news for them.

First, we don't even have a window in the Bayonet office. If we want to know what the weather is like, we have to go to the front office and ask permission to peak out the window.

Once permission's been granted, we then go into the deputy's cubby hole, being careful not to trip over the many cords he has lying about, then peer out the 12-inch wide window.

We in Building 4 don't get the air or heat turned on any earlier than the rest of you.

Having no windows makes it especially bad for us prior to air conditioning season as we all have to take turns breathing for fear of running out of oxygen.

When winter arrives I think we actually have the heat turned on later than the rest of the post, the reasoning being that we are better insulated, thus we can hold out longer.

News flash. Sixty-two degrees is cold with or without insulation.

Our phones don't work any better than any other place on post. We still have to compete with the rest of you for off post lines, autovon lines and long distance lines.

We also have our share of power failures. Only here, if you are in a room without windows, power outages mean total blackness. The only thing you can do then is take a nap or try to guess which phone is ringing before it stops.

We did get our office painted this summer. But that only served to make the carpet, which was probably installed in lieu of the floor, look rattier than ever.

Finally there are the elevators.

You people on Kelly Hill, Sand Hill, Harmony Church and Soldier Plaza don't know how good you've got it until you have to rely on elevators to get to work.

Oh, sure, I could always walk the six floors 16 times a day, but I prefer to take my PT in one lump just three times a week.

The elevators here are independent thinkers, either that, or just lazy. When they are above the first floor waiting to go down, they waste no time. But just try to coax them into going up.

I've discovered a gentle jumping up and down will usually motivate them to move, although an even better method is to have someone head in the direction of an elevator like they want to get on.

Only then will the doors begin to close. Of course just about then, the person makes a mad dash for the elevator and throws an arm in to keep the doors open. Either that or a good Samaritan pushes the "open door" button and lets them on.

Then we have to start all over again. The wait, the gentle bouncing, the next person to make a move for the doors.

If the Wright brothers had as much trouble getting off the ground, we'd still be riding around on bicycles.

I have found it does pay to check the switches on the elevator to insure some wise one hasn't flipped it to "off." The fool probably hides around the corner to see how long it takes people like me to figure it out.

I'll bet it's the same person who likes to push all the buttons just before getting off so the next person will catch all the stops.

When I want to go up I find I usually end up sharing the elevator with a bunch of healthy young captains who are only riding up to the second floor for the small group instruction.

Our deputy who thinks ill of no one says they would walk up if they knew where the stairs were.

One person who rode up with me bet that if the CG had been on with us the captains wouldn't have gotten off on the second floor.

I also seem to catch elevators that people are eagerly waiting for. So eagerly in fact that they don't let the people on, off before they crowd on.

"Hey guys,." I plead, "I just rode up. I don't want to have to make another trip."

But it's like talking to deaf people. They just keep coming.

Speaking of deaf, have you noticed how people clam up once they get on an elevator? Two people could be deep in discussion but if they get on the elevator with a stranger, they become mute until they get off again.

I also find it interesting how people can busy themselves by looking at things other than someone else. They'll stare at the buttons above the door, the buttons on either side, or study their boots. Anything to avoid eye contact with another human.

At least that's the way it is with most people. Airborne Annie's different. She ain't most people. Probably it's because always doing "Various Voices" she's used to barging in on people's privacy.

Sometimes I think she'll say things on the elevator just to outrage people or maybe it's just to let them know they are riding with a bona fide nut and if the elevator should break down between floors, be prepared to defend yourself from her.

Like the other day we and a few others were waiting to ride up when a captain who looked like a "second-floor-get-off" made the mad dash to get on.

Airborne accosted him immeiately: "Excuse me sir, have you seen nine, apathetic, sympathetic, diabetic old men on roller skates with a marked propensity to procrastination and sloth around here?"

"Beg your pardon? Were you talking to me?" he asked perplexed.

I went into my "I don't know her " mode as she continued, "well, then, how about 10, lyrical, spherical, diabolical, denizens of the deep who haul stall around the corner of the quay of the quo, of the qui all day?"

I got off when the elevator stopped on the third floor.

"What the Sam Hill were you doing in that elevator?" I asked her when I caught up with her later that day.

"You said you hate it when people only ride up one flight," she said. You noticed he didn't get off on the second floor. As a matter of fact he rode all the way up to the sixth floor," she said with a wicked smile.

"Great," I said. "Leaving me to walk three flights."

"Your choice," she said. "No one said you had to get off."

As I said, Building 4 isn't all it's cracked up to be. Just some of the people who work there.

Soldiers bug bowling alley patron, family

Harassment of dependents by soldiers is completely uncalled for in our community. I have no respect for any soldier whose behavior is unbecoming toward military dependents.

A nasty event took place at the Post Bowling Center during the all night bowling on a Saturday/Sunday evening. Six or seven young soldiers drinking and bowling, continued to harass my two sons and my older son's girlfriend. Several lanes seperated the soldiers and the youth. The excessive foul language used by the soldiers and the attempts to pick up my son's girl-friend by telling her exactly what they wanted to do with her is dehumanizing. The soldiers were told no and they continued to prevail throughout the evening several times. No soldier has any business messing with a 15-year old girl in the first place.

I was parked directly in front of the building waiting to pickup the kids and I did see several young soldiers in limbo around the entrance of the building. As my younger son was leaving the building, the soldiers blocked his exit and pushed him from behind. Now, since when does a soldier put his hand on a twelve-year old? Shortly after this mishap, the other two kids left the building and they too were harassed. Soldiers have no business tapping a girl's behind. What has become of individual discipline in a soldier?

I had three hysterical kids because of poor behavior displayed by some soldiers that evening. I really wanted to go ballistic on this small-minded drunk group of soldiers, but I too, must set an example as a soldier and a father. I did some heavy chewing out the soldiers but, the problem does not stop here. My kids do not want to be around nor associate with any soldiers in any environment now. There is always a certain number of individuals (soldiers) who will show poor behavior in public and this did leave bad feelings with my kids about soldiers in general. So what are we (soldiers) going to do to improve our performance and relations in public?

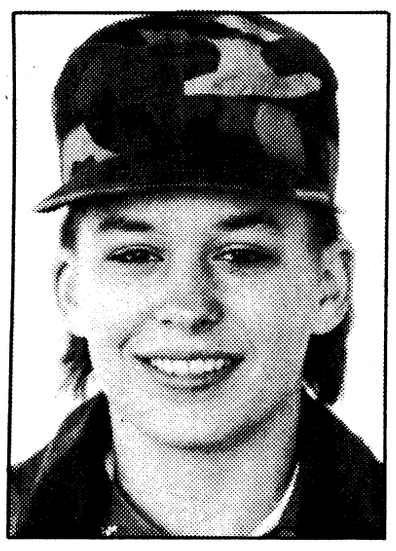
This, I promise, that I shall set an example for other soldiers to follow, conduct on-the-spot corrections on post as well as off post, for uniforms and behavior, and utilize the chain of command for assistance. Most of all, I pray that I never go ballistic if my kids are ever touched again. Amen.....

SFC· B.E.Lawton

Managers responsible for stopping rowdiness

When any form of abusive language or rowdy behavior is reported, seen or incurred at the bowling center facilities, the Bowling Center Managers are instructed to counsel the individual or persons involved about such behavior in a public facility. Should the individual or persons involved continue to display these acts of rudeness, the Military Police will be called to rectify the situation at hand.

When forms of abusive language or rowdy behavior occur outside of the bowling center facilities, the Bowling Center Managers are instructed to call the Military Police immediately to remedy the situation with the minimum of public disturbance.



Incidents occurring in the bowling centers should be brought to the immediate attention of the Bowling Center Managers to minimize distrubance to other patrons utilizing the bowling center facilities.

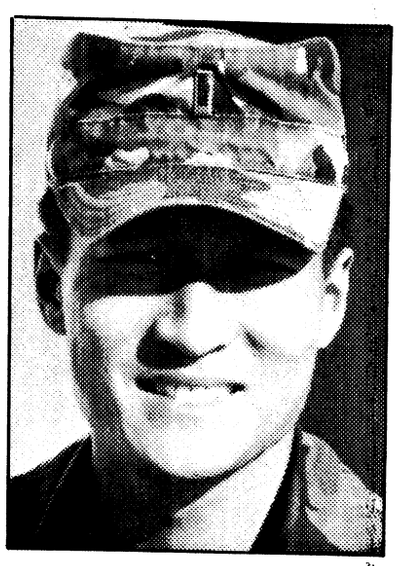
VARIOUS VOICES / Why do think we should remember Pearl Harbor Day?



SFC James Reiber, U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit - "We need to remember that day because of all the Americans that lost their lives that morning fighting for our country. We honor them as we honor all veterans that have died for us."

Pvt. Joy Shultine, Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, 507th PIR - "I think we should remember Pearl Harbor Day because it was one of the only times that the U.S. was caught off guard. I think it taught us a lesson and hopefully it won't happen again."

Bobby Stallings, Training and Support Center, DPTM - "We need to remember the day just for the simple reason that many people lost their lives."

1st Lt. Anthony Choi, Company C, 3rd Battalion, 32nd Infantry Regiment, 1st Infantry Training Brigade - "Pearl Harbor was a surprise to everyone. We need to remember that so the enemy doesn't surprise us again. The old saying goes 'stay alert stay alive'."

Sgt. Linda Bowers, Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, 38th Infantry, 2nd Infantry Training Brigade - It should be remembered because of the bombings that took place and the men that lost their lives. It also was the closest they came to fighting the war in the Continental United States."

Pvt. Jeffrey Jenks, Company B, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment - "It needs to remembered because of the big turn of events for the U.S. It made us show the world what our military forces are capable of. We lost a lot of lives that day and it had tremendous impact of the U.S."

Senior instructors attend BNOC conference

By Becky Obert
Bayonet staff writer

Approximately 80 people from around the Army attended the Basic Noncommissioned Officers Course Conference at Benning Nov. 16 through 20.

Attendees were commandants and senior instructors from 16 BNCOC academies worldwide, who came together here to examine and update curricula for BNCOC instruction in four critical military occupational specialties: indirect fire infantryman (11C), infantryman (11B), heavy anti-armor weapons infantryman (11H) and Bradley Fighting Vehicle infantryman (11M).

The conference was hosted by staffers at the Enlisted Training Branch, Course Development Division, Directorate of Training and Doctrine.

Al Renn, conference coordinator, said the purpose of the conference was to review and update the programs of instruction, lesson outlines and examinations currently being used in BCNOC.

"We write the lesson outlines and exams here at Benning and send them to all the academies," he said. "So the main purpose of the conference was to ensure that our packets fit the needs in the field."

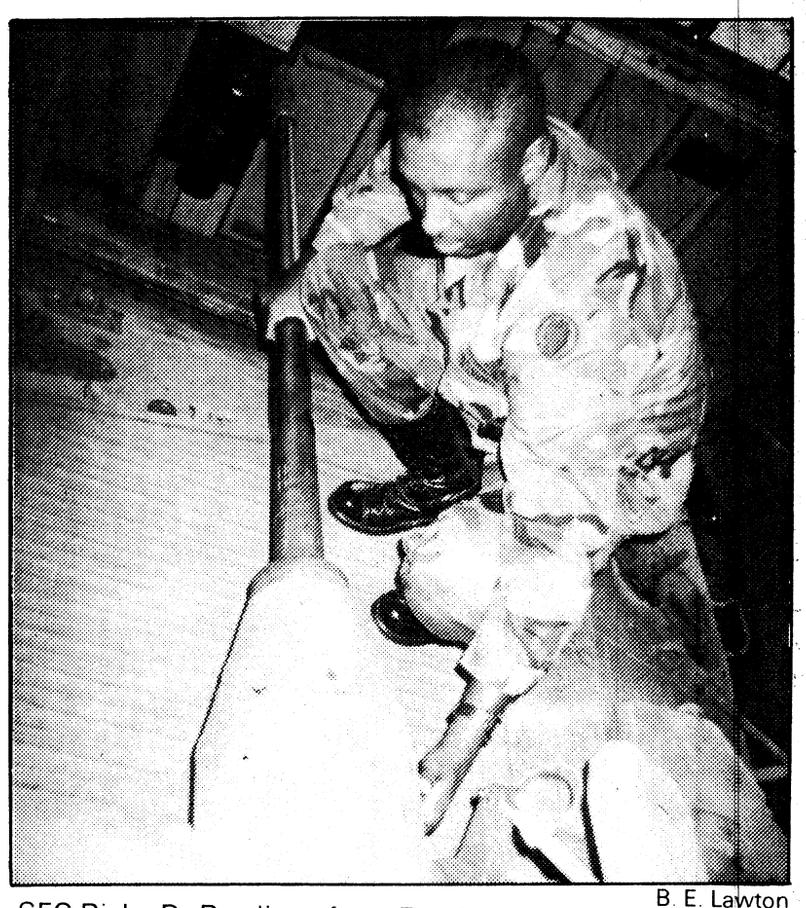
SFC James R. Parker, Ft. Stewart, Ga, checks a Firing Suppression System during a recent Basic Noncommissioned Officers Course conference here.



Before the POI was standardized, soldiers did not have a consistent knowledge of the material taught. It depended on what the strengths and weaknesses of the individual schools were. Last year was the first time the POI was standardized, Renn said, so the conference provided valuable feedback to members of the Enlisted Training Branch, who write the POIs.

BNCOC teaches NCOs what they need to know to be squad and section leaders, Renn explained. "This course was developed to instruct unit leaders in how to teach their soldiers, and maintain their readiness."

Renn said that the 11M POI got the most attention at the conference, since the Bradley course of instruction is the newest and has been in the field for only a short time. "There were major revisions needed in the POI, which we learned from the instructors who attended," Renn said.

The ultimate purpose is to ensure that the Army's basic combat soldier, the infantryman, has the skills he needs to be successful on the modern battlefield, Renn said, and he believes that the things learned at the conference will help his office provide the POIs to do that.

"Everybody was well pleased with the results of the conference, and we got a lot of valuable feedback from the attendees," he said.

CG awards blue chips represent job well done

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

If Maj. Gen. Kenneth C. Leuer hands you a blue poker chip, you've done something special. That is just one of the many ways he shows he cares.

What does the blue chip represent?

It entitles the bearer to a day off work as well as an invitation to a quarterly social function with other blue chip winners.

All soldiers, staff sergeant and below, are eligible for the award. According to CSM Autrail Cobb, this idea was first implemented here when Leuer was assistant commandant.

"It's just his way of rewarding a soldier on the spot for a job well done," Cobb said, "instead of rewarding them days or weeks later."

The Commanding General has thus far awarded 14 chips to dining facility workers at 1st Battalion, 507th PIR.

Winners are: Gary Bailey, Dennis Helgerson, Dawna David, JoAnn Wells, Myrna Livingston, Martha Brady, Rosie Thirkield, Ernstine Davis, Mary Faniel, Kyong Harris, Darlene Hunter, Robert Russel, Melida Monroe, Darrell Haylett.

Benning families chosen for awards

Capt. Marty and Nancy Russo are one of the three Fort Benning Families selected for a "Great American Family Award" at a recent ceremony held at the Follow Me Golf Course.

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Three families from the Fort Benning Community have been selected by the installation to receive "The Great American Family Award."

This award is sponsored by the American Family Society, with Mrs. Nancy Reagan as Honorary Chairperson, and is presented to those families who have made major contributions to community life.

The special criteria for national recognition is a family of exemplary character, ability, and inspiration in their proven capacity in assisting others.

The three families selected to represent Fort Benning are: MSgt. Erasmo and Christela Chapa; Lt. Col. Lawson and Gloria Magruder and Capt. Marty and Nancy Russo.

The Chapa's were selected for their contributions to the Spanish Community. The Chapa's have used their bilingual capabilites to help in the transition of foreign students at the School of Americas.

The MacGruder family is active in the Catholic community and were instrumental in re-instituting many programs in the church.

The Russo's, in particular Mrs. Russo, were selected for their many contributions to the exceptional family member program.

These Fort Benning families will go before a selection committee at the Training and Doctrine Command level. The family selected at TRADOC will receive national recognition during the summer of 1988 at a special award ceremony at the White House.

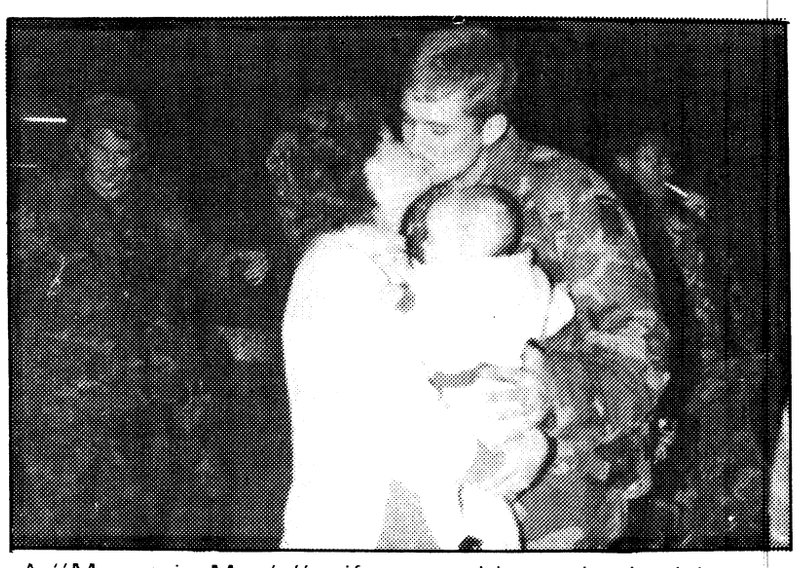
'Mountain Men' learn to survive in arctic Alaska

Wayne Park

10th Mtn. soldiers ''akio'' to the bivouac site with their supplies.

Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer



Weary and battleworn, but much wiser, the Mountain Men from Company C, 2nd Battalion, 14th Infantry, 10th Mountain Division made it home in time for Thanksgiving.

The troops just returned from the four-week Infantry Company Course at Northern Warfare Training Center in Fort Greely, Alaska, where they learned first-hand the differences between warfare in a Northern area of operation and warfare in a temperate climate.

Upon their arrival at the training center, the men immediately started acclimation exercises, paving the way to earn the distinction of being named ''Artic Light Fighters.''

The center was developed specifically because of the 10th Mountain Division's mission during World War II.

According to 1st Lt. Marc Kapsalis, a platoon leader with Company C, his men received classes on everything from how to dress appropriately for the weather to fitting skis and snowshoes properly.

A ''Mountain Man's'' wife greets him enthusiasticly upon 10th Mtn's return from training in Alaska.

With their classroom instruction behind them, the men donned their gear and headed outdoors to become more ''intimate'' with mother nature.

The men started with four-mile conditioning marches to get a feel for the boots and other gear that would become their second skin for the next month.

The versatile footwear, which is flexible, is used with snowshoes, cross country and downhill skis.

''Getting used to the skis made for a lot of laughs,'' Kapsalis said, ''we were tumbling all over the place for a while, many of us wished we had movie cameras just to capture the moment.''

After the familiarization period, it was down to business. It was into the field with a 10-man Artic Tent, and a U-con stove to keep them warm.

The troops transported all their equipment with an Ahkio, a meter and-a-half long sled that the men pull.

''The best way to describe it is like a dogsled,'' he said, ''Its pretty tough to pull because the men have 40-pound rucksacks on

By David M. Powell
A Co, 43rd Eng

Early on the morning of Nov. 11 A Co. of the 43rd Eng. roled out of its's motor pool and headed for the MOUT site (Military Operations in Urban Terrain), located on Fort Benning, to train in an urban environment.

The 43rd constructed the mock city in 1982, but this was the first time a company from the battalion had depoloyed there for training.

"The initial concern of the chain-of-command upon arrival was to clear the buildings of potential threats and to shut off the city to traffic," said 1st Lt. David M. Powell. "After the initial occupation of the city was complete, barrier materials were emplaced in strategic locations to maximize the defensive posture for the company."

Unoccupied buildings were sealed-off or booby trapped to deny acces to the enemy.

During the course of the occupation, various missions were conducted on a round-the-clock basis. Among those missions was the continuing renovation of building 1697 on Benning's main post. The project employed carpenters, electricians and plumbers of the 2nd platoon led by Powell. The mission was representative of what would be required of the Company if it ever went to war.

Another priority of the company was the maintenance of equipment, which was done effectively without hampering the company's ability to accomplish missions. One of the company's newest arrivals, 1st Lt. Jewel Johnson, wasted no time taking charge of the earth moving platoon and executing several small missions from the MOUT site.

While the company was deployed, they played two intramural flag football games. The first was played Nov. 12 and the second was played the next day.

The team members redeployed just prior to kick-off, warmed up and played a fantastic game, winning a decisive victory.

A repeat performance on the night of the 13th moved them into the contention for the post championship.

The ACE flag football team played a tough team and lost a long, hard-fought battle, taking second place overall on post. However, the loss was only a temporary set-back and the team is determined to come back next year and "Go all the way."

"The field problem and the football season were a success." said Powell. "Everyone involved either gained experience, ability or leadership. As the Commander of the Company, Capt. S.W. Winbush would say 'ACE Prevails!'" their backs and are wearing their skis, which don't give them much traction."

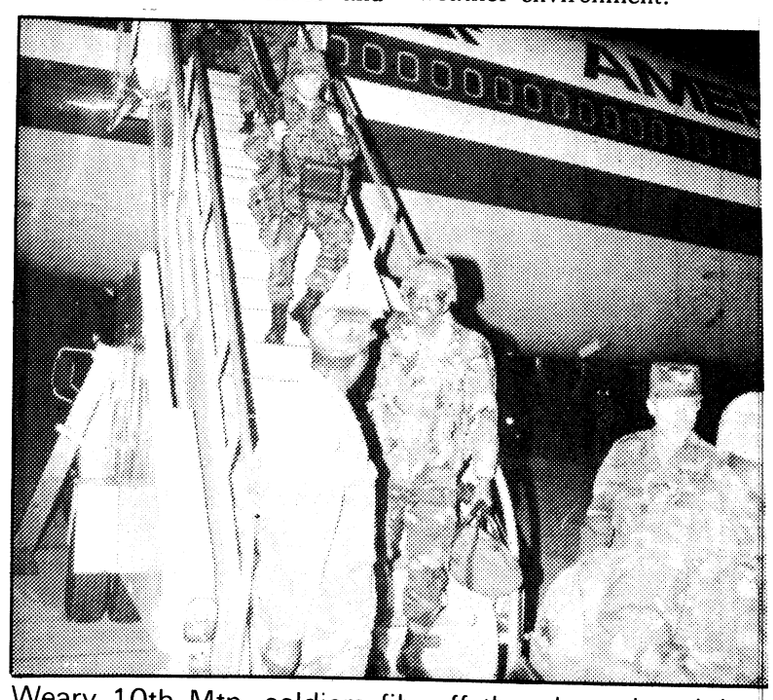
Besides sleeping in the Artic tents, the men were taught how to live directly off the land in improvised shelters.

Kapsalis noted the many differences in warfare techniques. Specifically, the planning and implementing time.

"The time is nearly double," he said, "you have to set up schedules and constantly rotate people back to warming points, so they don't remain idle for long periods in their ambush positions."

"One thing that was a constant problem was dehydration." Kapsalis said, "It's a problem because your thirst mechanism doesn't work in the cold, so you constantly have to be on guard."



A big difference in Northern Warfare fighting techniques is camoflague. The men were taught the proper wearing of the overwhites to cover the uniform and taping weapons to break up the outline. The skin is not camoflagued because cold injuries can't be seen.

Besides the field training exercises and the different objectives, the men were given some competion in the form of a squad Bi-atholon, which was a combination of sking a 10-kilometer course and firing an M-16 at targets.

Although the men were there for training, some freetime was allowed during the 4-week training and Chaplains came out into the snow for Sunday services.

The temperatures dipped to 10 below with windchills well below minus 25 degrees. It never went above 30 degrees.

men down, they gained an appreciation of the differences and difficulty of fighting in a cc weather environment.

Weary 10th Mtn. soldiers file off the plane the night c their return from arctic training.

Taylor talks on Grenada

Col. Wesley B. Taylor

Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

Col. Wesley B. Taylor recently spoke to the Society of American Military Engineers on 1st Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiments contributions in Grenada, discussing the entire mission from conception to completion

He and his battalion jumped onto the airfield in Grenada which was their main objective.

After seizing the airfield, Taylor said they found anti-aircraft weapons which led them to believe that someone thought they were coming. He also added that his troops found bullets in cases marked long-grain rice.

The men also helped evacuate approximately 500 college students.

The uniform Taylor wore during the Grenada rescue mission is on display at the National Infantry Museum.

IOBC students get survival training from Pathfinders

Lawrence Swift
Adventure Training

ile most IOBC students l their weekends sleeping or occupying the I-Bar, members of the 5th platoon, Company C, 2-11 Infantry look for new ways to excel.

Such was the situation a few weekends ago when the students participated in a survival/adventure exercise hosted by the 187th Pathfinders.

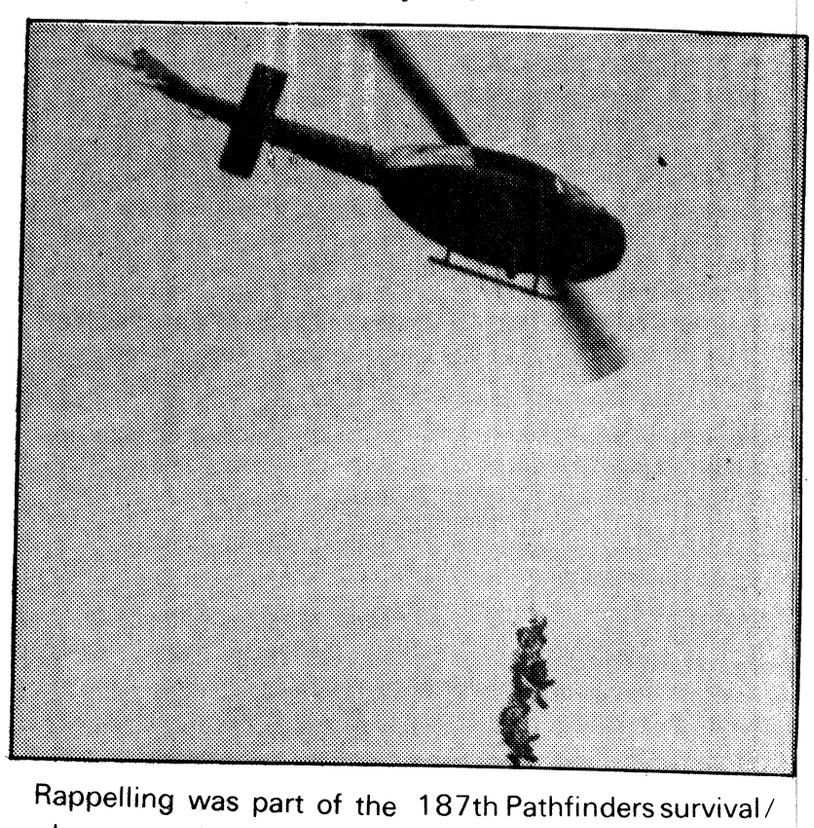
Skinning and preparing of game animals, STABO operations and rappelling made up this five-hour exercise that few IOBC students participate in.

Survival techniques were the first order of the day as 1st Lt. Shaw of the Pathfinders demonstrated how to turn game animals into much-needed nutrients in a survival situation.

"These are the kinds of skills that all military personnel should be familiar with," commented Shaw, a recent graduate of U.S. Army SERE (Survival, Escape, Resistance, and Evasion) School. "One never knows when he will be put in a hostile environment where these skills would be invaluable," Shaw continued.

Later chickens were issued to allow 5th platoon to try their hand at the techniques. The result ended up as part of an afternoon barbeque .

The next event was helicopter rappelling. After a brief period of instruction, the students were descending from UH-1 aircrafts hovering at 60 feet. This was a first for most of the students, but for those who were Air Assault qualified, it was a chance to show their skills.



"I never thought I'd do that again, but most of the techniques came back to me," said 2nd Lt. Kim Tyler, a veteran of Air Assault School.

The last event of the day was STABO operations. After a safety briefing the lieutenants practicel this fun, but sometimes painful extraction technique.

"The view was great, but a bit uncomfortable," commented 2nd Lt. Ron Clare, a STABO casualty.

Rappelling was part of the 187th Pathfinders survival/adventure training for IOBC students.

A Company becomes enemy during exercise 'Sand Eagle'

By D.L. Bridges
197th Infantry Bde. correspondent

Members of Company A, 2nd Battalion, 18th Infantry, 197th Infantry Brigade (Mechanized)(Separate), recently boarded a C-130 aircraft and traveled to a field exercise in Florida.

"It was a unique experience for the soldiers," said John Elwood, 2nd platoon leader. "It's not often you get to deploy by aircraft with your M-113s," he said.

The week-long exercise, codenamed Sand Eagle, paired the Co. A soldiers with members of the 2nd Battalion, 14th Infantry, 19th Mountain Division. The two elements acted as the opposing force against unit of the 82nd Airborne Division and the 101st Air Assault Division.

"We did harassing movements against the enemy," Elwood said, "in order to do as much damage as possible with minimum loss to ourselves." Elwood said he viewd the mission a success due to the large number of air assault aircraft "shot down" and the number of ground troops engaged with little loss to his unit. "The exercise was a no-notice alert and when the word came, we were ready," he said. "I was initially worried about our support to a light unit such as the 10th Mountain, but it was there and right on time."

The exercise is an example of the 197th Brigade's ongoing emphasis on training its soldiers for real-world missions, he said.

Sergeant Major retires after 30 years

By Sally Roberts
197th Infantry Brigade correspondent

CSM William D. Bell, 197th Infantry Brigade command sergeant major, will retire in March, following 30 years of service to the Army.

"To do a job and be successful, you have to be doing what you honestly like to do," Bell said. "I've stayed in the Army because I like the Army style, the regimentation."

Bell was drafted into the Army in 1958, trained as a combat engineer and volunteered for Airborne School. He waived his military occupational specialty to become an infantryman in order to take an assignment with the 101st Airborne Division.

While with the 101st, he served as a rifleman, machine gunner, fire team leader, squad leader and platoon sergeant.

"It's just like climbing a set of stairs," he said. "Each job is a building block toward a tougher and more challenging job with an even greater position of responsibility."

It was also during this early part of his career that Bell completed Ranger training.

In 1964, he was assigned to Vietnam and worked as an advisor to the 43rd Ranger Battalion of the Vietnamese Army. He returned to Vietnam in 1970 again as an advisor to a Ranger battalion in the Delta Regional Assistance Command.

In between his Vietnam tours, Bell served as a Ranger instructor at Dahlonega, Ga., and with the Special Forces in Thailand.

"When you wear a Ranger tab, people expect more out of you. I took extra pride and drove myself harder to live up to that Ranger tab," he said.

Several leadership positions as a first sergeant and command sergeant major preceeded his present assignment at the 197th.

Bell said he tells young soldiers that the way to succeed is to find a soldier you admire, and model yourself after him.

One such role model for him was 1st Sgt. Floyd Mayhew, who was Bell's first sergeant while he was a Ranger instructor.

"Mayhew was the most inspiring soldier for an NCO to work with," Bell said. "He believed in the principles of leadership and followed them with plenty of ability. He was mentally tough and physically fit, and a man who I hold in high regard."

Another source of inspiration was SMA Leon L. Van Autreve. "I had many opportunities to meet him and hear him speak during his tenure as sergeant major of the Army," Bell said. "He looked every bit a soldier and was very knowledgeable about the Army, as well as contemporary and historical issues."

Bell said it's also important to listen to the people you work with, and learn from them.

CSM William D. Bell inspects the soldiers of the 197th Inf. Bde.

Another great influence on his career has been his family.

"My wife Vern and I have been married for 32 years. She has supported me in everything I have ever tried to do and has always understood the demands of our lifestyle. It takes an awful lot of good understanding on the part of an Army wife."

Like the soldiers who were his inspiration, Bell is a leader who holds the admiration of his soldiers.

"You can go to CSM Bell with a problem and he understands how these things happen and he knows how to correct it," said CSM Richard McDonald, 197the Support Battalion. "He always knows what you are talking about because whatever the problem is, it has probably happened to him before."

"CSM Bell has the ability to be down to earth with a soldier, whether he be a senior or junior NCO," added CSM Harry Lewis, 2nd Battalion, 10th Field Artillery. "His experience gives him a lot of credibility."

After retiring, Bell looks forward to moving with his wife to Florida, where he plans to work for the Florida Department of Agriculture.

"I can truthfully say that I've done everything I've wanted to do in the Army. I don't think an NCO can receive a greater reward than to finish his career in this job," he said.

MARSHAL'S VIEWPOINT

By Wendell D. Choate
Crime Prevention Section

Traditionally one of the happiest times of the year, the holiday season, also brings on an increase of domestic incidents.

The cause for an increase in domestic violence can be credited to several reasons. One of the major reasons is the additional strain on the family budget. Many families operate on a tight budget from month to month. The burden of buying presents, as well as everyday needs, can be awesome.

Another common reason for the increase in incidents is the feeling of isolation from family members. Many military families are from homes outside the Fort Benning area. Other military members may even live close to home, but their military duties may prevent them from going home.

Other reasons include disappointment in gifts received, too much alcohol in celebration of the holidays, family emergencies, work schedules, and even problems with co-workers and neighbors.

We, the members of Fort Benning community, would like to see this trend reversed. Counseling, ranging from financial to marital, is available from many agencies here on post. ACS, Post Chaplains, the Red Cross, and Alcohol and Drug Control Officer, are all readily available to assist you with any problems, any time of the year. These agencies have trained counselors in many areas, or can refer you to other appropriate agencies.

Don't wait until it is too late — take advantage of these agencies before you become involved in what begins as a harmless disagreement and escalates into a family and career damaging domestic incident.

Lets make the 1987 holiday season a safe and enjoyable time. Remember to put your brain in gear, before you put your mouth in motion. Think about the consequences of what a domestic incident can do. Every problem has a solution and there are trained personnel who can help.

The Fort Benning Crime Prevention Section has changed phone numbers, the new numbers are 545-1065/7610.

ASK THE JUDGE

Staff Judge Advocate

When does discipline become abuse? Military parents should be aware that they are subject to criminal prosecution for assault if they step over the line when disciplining their children.

Child abuse has come into the public's attention in the past few years. This awareness is more intense in the military community due to available programs and the military criminal justice system.

Public outrage and desire to punish those parents who abuse their children have given military parents a reason to be concerned. An allegation that a militry parent has abused his or her child may be career terminating.

What is the difference between a spanking and an assault and battery? When does a parent step over the line from exercising parental authority and into criminal misconduct?

The law defines a criminal assault and battery as "an unlawful offer of force that results in bodily harm." Whether an assault is lawful or unlawful depends on the circumstances. Corporal punishment, that is, hitting a child, may become an unlawful assault if excessive.

Corporal punishment is excessive when it is unreasonable for the purpose to be accomplished. To determine whether the punishment is unreasonable, the court looks at the nature of the misconduct, the age, sex, and strength of the child, his past behavior, and the method and degree of punishment.

As an example, a parent may be prosecuted for assaulting his two-year-old girl if he chooses to strike her repeatedly with an extension cord. Other assaults would include shaking a six-month-old causing internal bruising, or hitting an older child with a heavy stick.

Cost of the permit is $10 per day, payable by money order or bank draft. Maps of cutting areas are given when the permit is purchased. Only downed trees may be cut in the designated area. For more information, call 544-6120.

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Recreation area: The Fort Rucker Florida Recreation Area offers an inexpensive vacation spot for active duty and retired military personnel and their families. The center is located on Florida Highway 20, between Freeport and Niceville, Fla., and is close to Destin and Panama City Beach. The center has camp sites and trailers for rent at reasonable rates.

For more information or reservations, call the Information, Tour and Travel Office at Fort Rucker, at (205) 255-5816, between the hours of 10 a.m. to 1 p.m. and 2 to 6 p.m. Monday through Friday.

Veterinary Clinic: Now the Veterinary Clinic has new operating hours. Mondays from 8 to 11 a.m., pets are seen by appointment only, 1 to 2:30 p.m., appointments or walk-ins limited to first 10 pets; Tuesdays from 8 to 11 a.m. by appointment only, and closed for training in the afternoon; Wednesday from 8 to 11 a.m. and 1 to 2:30, open for appointments only; Thursday — closed; Friday, 8 to 10:30 a.m, open for appointments or walk-ins limited to first 10 pets.

The last working day of each month, the clinic is closed for inventory. A walk-in Saturday clinic is also held once a month, and this is publicized in the bulletins. For appointments, call 545-4444. For information, call 545-1127.

Abandoned animals: The pet impoundment/adoption facility is located behind the post veterinary clinic. Unidentifiable stray pets are held only three days before disposition. Personnel interested in viewing animals need to check with the veterinary clinic personnel. Every year 500-600 pets are impounded. Many of these pets make excellent companions and family members.

Rabies vaccination recall: Dogs and cats that received their most recent rabies shots from the post veterinary clinic during Oct. 1, 1984 through Aug. 13, 1986 and June 8, 1987 through Sept. 1, 1987 must be revaccinated (at no cost) as soon as possible. Bring your pet, rabies certificate and records if we don't already have them to the post veterinary clinic during normal clinic hours for confirmation and revaccination. No appointment is needed for revaccination. No other services will be provided. Monday, 8-11 a.m. and 1-2:30 p.m., and Friday 8-11 a.m. Saturday clinics will be announced. For more information call 545-1127.

The Kelley Hill Recreation Center: Now the center offers a variety of computer classes. These include Word Perfect, MS-DOS, and Multi-Mate.

Call 544-1913 for more information.

Class openings: A Small World Child Development Center on Custer Road has openings for 4-year-olds in the two-day, afternoon class only. For more information, call 544-1623 between 8 a.m. and 3 p.m.

Lost: A PRC-77 radio, serial #230 has been lost. Anyone having knowledge of its whereabouts call Capt. DiMassimo, survey officer, 545-5659.

Arts and Crafts: The most important psychological benefit obtained from recreation is relaxation. The Arts and Crafts Center provides an essential source of relaxation for military personnel. You can learn to develop and print your own photos and remember, the Fort Benning Photo Contest is coming up in January. This is the first step on the way to the Army Photo Contest. Now is the time to get your photos printed and mounted. Come by the Arts and CraftsCenter on the corner of Sightseeing Road and Eckel Street, building 2783 and see the photo instructor for more information or call 545-3677.

The Red Cross also has several board member vacancies. These include a Youth Chairman who coordinates and supervises youth volunteers and adults who assist with the Red Cross Youth Program.

Veterinary Clinic Chairman to manage vet clinic volunteers, as well as work at the Vet Clinic.

Hospital Chairman develops and maintains volunteer services at MACH. This person is responsible for placement of volunteers at MACH and clinics on post.

The Red Cross pays for babysitting costs at Tot Town or by selected child care givers.

Influenza vaccines: Shots are available for the flu season. All active duty personnel, health care providers, children, adults with chronic heart disease, moderate to severe asthma, bronchopulmonary dysplasia, chronic bronchitis, chronic renal disease or diabetes are at increased risk for catching the flu, and are encouraged to get vaccinated.

Active duty troops must get their shots at the troop medical clinics, while family practice patients can get theirs at the Family Practice Clinic. Retirees and their dependents can be vaccinated at the Immunization Clinic on the 9th floor of the hospital. The clinic's hours are from 7:30 to 11:30 a.m. and 1 to 3:30 p.m., Monday through Friday.

Patients under age 19 must have a prescription for immunizations. Patients must bring their medical records to the clinic or they will not be immunized.

Children ages 6 months to 12 years will require two separate injections at monthly intervals. It is also suggested that patients over 65 years old receive a second injection four to six weeks after their initial immunizations.

The Officers Wives' Club: The club's School of Dance offers a variety of classes for all military families, active duty, retired, officer or enlisted. We now offer ballet, boys and girls gymnastics, karate, Maria's Battle of the Bulge and Get-Fit-Stay-Fit classes.

John Touchton, our karate instructor, is now offering a women's self-defense class. The first class began Tuesday. The cost is $50, and the class runs for eight weeks. Students will receive a certificate of completion at the end of the class. For information on future dates of the self defense class, call Touchton at 1-582-3117.

For information on specific classes, call the instructors listed: ballet - Jane Frenkel, 563-0294; gymnastics — Kelly Pitts, 563-0325, Brad Godown, 324-1167; karate — John Touchton, 1-582-3117; Maria's Battle of the Bulge, 687-2616; and Get-Fit-Stay-Fit — Jeanne Parker, 687-0738.

For more information, call Chris Travis at 682-0137 or Delaura Gallatin at 689-9937. Come by and visit us at bldg. 1234 on Ingersoll Street, Monday through Thursday from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m.

SPIRITUAL

Holidays bring joy

By Donald Taylor
2nd ITB

It is just so noticeable, there is no denying the fact — we do demonstrate a different spirit and attitude at this time of year. It begins around Thanksgiving and continues throughout the Christmas Season until the New Year. People just seem happier, demonstrate more care and concern for others, and in general want to do better.

It is a time when our senses are affected by the happy sounds, delightful smells and bright, happy colors of the season. Through such feelings and sensations, we may be drawn back to our childhood memories and focus on images of Mom, Dad, and our brothers and sisters enjoying the season's blessings. This is a time when we are acutely aware of and sensitive to both material and spiritual blessings that have come our way. It is a time when even the most reluctant of us may even worship God.

As you reflect on your memories and drew from the years of experience, I think that you will agree that this is, overall, a warm time of year. That is not to say that we do not possess both happy and painful, joyful and sad experiences at this time of the year. We do tend to be more pensive and introspective. There are exhibited no only feelings of joy and happiness, but of melancholy and sadness. This season is certainly not without its problems.

I know that you will reflect a lot on your memories during this season and will remember both the good and the bad. From my own experience there is one memory that I have from last year at this time of the season which I think will live with me forever. Last year at this time, I was living in Washington, D.C. My family and I decided that we wanted to go down to the area across from the White House and see the nation's Christmas Tree. The sight was really magnificent. A perfect, tall Norwegian fir in all its splendor and glory, decorated with a rainbow of colors. This tree was surrounded by fifty additional trees which were decorated by State and Territorial emblems. It was an impressive sight.

It was a bitterly cold night and after we had soaked in this grand and pristine sight, we thought that we would then go out and have some hot chocolate and donuts. As we crossed the road, there was a haunting sight which I will never forget. There lying on the top of the open manholes and grates for warmth were many of the cities homeless people.

Now, I had read about the homeless and seen them on television, but I never experienced a sight so close and personal. To my shame, I felt uncomfortable. My son who was nine years old at the time added to my discomfort by asking me, "Dad, why do these people have to live on the street and not in their own homes?" It would not have helped to talk about the government, the state of the economy nor shelters for the homeless. What did help, was to talk about what we as a family could do to help the situation.

At this time, as we reflect on our blessings, let us demonstrate our love to those around us and reach out and touch them at the point of their needs.

Workshop set for couples

A workshop for couples interested in working with the pre-marriage program is planned for tomorrow at St. Maurice Catholic Parish, from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m.

Lunch and babysitting provided.

Areas to be covered include communications skills, money management, religious faith in the family, abuse in relationships, sexuality in marriage, parenting, values and growth in relationships.

Participation in this workshop does not obligate you to work with the pre-marriage program. The information and skills gained from this workshop will be beneficial in enriching your own marriage as well as provide training for those who might like to assist with the pre-marriage program of the parish.

For reservations or more information, call Rich or Cathie Wampler at 324-7493.

Fifty ITB soldiers, family members baptized

By Marsha Santiago
ITC correspondent

On Nov. 15, Chap. (Maj.) James Langford, brigade chaplain, and Chap. (Capt.) Richard Quinn baptized 48 soldiers and two family members at the 1st Infantry Training Brigade Duck Pond. The candidates for baptism came from all five battalions of the 1st ITB. Col. and Mrs. Jose Feliciano, 1st ITB commander; Lt. Col. Joel Williamson, 2nd Battalion, 19th Infantry commander; and Capt. Jim House, Company B, 2-19th commander, attended the service along with drill sergeants, fellow soldiers, and visiting families.

The service began with Quinn playing the guitar and leading the group in singing "Amazing Grace." He then read a selection from Romans and Langford offered a prayer.

Langford baptized his two children, James, 15 and Tanya, 10. Mrs. Langford and Mr. and Mrs. J.C. Langford of Vienna, Ga., the children's grandparents, attended the service.

Cpl. Bridgette Smith, Chaplain Assistant, was the first soldier and the only female soldier to be baptized. She is assigned to Headquarters and Headquarters Detachment, 1st ITB.

Even though the water was cold, the individuals baptized were enthusiastic about their decision and commitment.

"I don't think they will ever forget the religious experiences they had at Sand Hill, Fort Benning, Ga." said Langford.

Langford stated this was the first time the Brigade had conducted a baptism service at the Duck Pond. The candidates for baptism had attended "Christian Growth" and pre-baptism classes for six weeks prior to the service. Quinn led the classes and gave basic instruction in these areas.

Religious program offers wide variety

Chap. Roy N. Mathis

The religious program at Fort Benning is one of the most comprehensive in the Army. There are twelve chapels on Post and forty-two chaplains who provide a wide variety of ministry.

In addition to Protestant, Catholic and Jewish services, special denominational services are conducted on post for Episcopalians, Lutherans, Latter-Day Saints, Gospel, and Spanish-Speaking Catholics.

The Infantry Center Chapel is one of the loveliest chapels in the Army and provides a broad range of chapel activities for Protestants. The Main Post Catholic Chapel has a long tradition of ministry and service to the Fort Benning Catholic Community. Both chapels provide ministries to children, teenagers, single adults and families.

The Religious Education Center provides religious education programs for the major faith denominations and contains a library with spiritual books, films, slides, and video cassettes. The program has two full-time religious education coordinators who serve as supervisors and facilitators for many chapel-related programs.

Special programs, pastoral counseling, classes, and other family activities are provided by the Chaplain Family Life Center and the Clinical Pastoral Education Center.

Chaplains are always available for consultation and interviews by appointment. For emergencies, after duty hours, call the Staff Duty Officer, 545-2218, (Building 4), or the Administrative Officer of the Day (Martin Army Community Hospital), 544-2041, for the Staff Duty Chaplain.

Diabetes can cause life threatening complications

National Diabetic Association

Diabetes is the third leading cause of death behind cancer and heart disease. Diabetes is also the leading cause of adult new blindness, kidney failure, impotence, heart disease, limb amputations and pregnancy complications.

Despite the effects of diabetes, a person can learn to live with the disease by understanding what it is and how to manage it.

The first thing to know is the disease itself. Diabetes is a condition in which the body cannot process foods properly because the supply and efficiency of the hormone insulin is not adequate.

When you eat, food is digested and much of it is changed into glucose, a sugar the body uses for fuel. Insulin is the key to getting glucose into the cells, where it is used for energy.

There are two major types of diabetes: insulin dependent and non-insulin dependent.

People with insulin dependent diabetes cannot make insulin and must take insulin injections daily to maintain life. They must carefully balance their food intake and activities with their insulin shots to avoid serious complications.

About 90 percent of all people with diabetes have the second type: non-insulin dependent diabetes. People with this type of diabetes make some insulin and can often control it through diet and excercise alone.

The three classic symptoms of diabetes are increased thirst, increased hunger and increased urination. Other symptoms include unexplained weight loss, weakness and tiredness.

There is no cure for diabetes, but it can be kept under control. The goal in diabetes treatment is to keep blood sugars as close to normal as possible. Treatment involves food or diet, exercise, and sometimes medication.

The first line of treatment for all types of diabetes is diet or food intake. Whether or not one needs to lose weight, the kinds and amounts of food one eats will be important.

A "diabetic diet" is based on ordinary foods, with an emphasis on the kinds and amounts that should be eaten. It usually involves cutting out foods with a lot of sugar, such as candy, honey, syrup, table sugar and many desserts. Most of one's favorite foods can still be included, at least once in a while.

Exercise is also used as a form of treatment for diabetes. Regular physical activity lowers blood glucose and improves the body's use of insulin. It can help with weight loss and lower the risk for cardiovascular problems.

Medications, either oral hypoglyecmic agents or insulin, help to lower blood glucose, also.

Martin Army Community Hospital provides services for people with diabetes through the Adult Nurse Practioners in the Internal Medicine Clinic.

Newly diagnosed diabetics, upon referral from a health care provider, may attend a three-week program that covers various aspects of diabetes management, including disease etiology, medication usage, exercise programs, and diet principles. This is a multidisciplinary approach with input from a physical therapist on exercise, and a dietician on the nutritional aspects of diabetes management. The Nurse Practitioners also provide follow-up care for these people.

Active-duty soldiers may request evaluation and routine blood test for diabetes through their troop medical clinic. Active-duty family members, retirees, and family members of retirees should seek an evaluation from the outpatient clinic at Martin Army Community Hosptial.

For additional information about diabetes and diet, call The Diabetes Clinic at 544-1764/1542.

Daily stress can cause more than gray hair

By Daran Neal
TRADOC OCPA

Most health and fitness experts will tell you readily that stress management can be just as important to total health as exercise and proper nutrition.

"Bad stressor distress is anything that upsets the balance of an individual's life," said Chap. (Col.) Tom Carter, Headquarters TRADOLC.

Carter said when an event or life change is distressful the body goes into a "fight or flight" mode, inherited from our ancient ancestors

Carter explained that today, however, if someone gets chewed out by the boss the proper response is not to jump up and down on the desk. Thus energy and adrenalin stay built up in the system.

There are many ways of coping with and reducing stress.

"Diet and nutrition are essential for coping with stress. A good diet is one low in fat and high in complex carbohydrates." Carter said.

Other techniques involve "letting go" or getting it off one's chest.

Some methods of letting go, however, can be just a detrimental to health as stress. One examble he cites is the "six-pack" technique, which seems to be popular with some soldiers.

"The outcome is harder on the body than if nothing had been done to combat the stress," he said.

"Remember, however, even if the stress factor is high, the methods and ability to cope with it are what count," Carter said.

Life change events increase stress

This scale was developed between 1949 and 1967 by Thomas Holmes of the University of Washington School of Medicine and Dr. Richard H. Rahe, a neuropsychiatric researcher with the U.S. Navy. They and their colleagues assembled a list of "life change events" and asked thousands of men and women from all walks of life and various cultures to judge and rank the impact of the events. The end result of this research is the Social Readjustment Rating Scale. They found that too many life changes over a short period of time initiated illness; the greater amount of life change the more serious the illness or accident.

Calculate the number of life change units you have experienced in the last 12 months. Now compare your life change units (LCUs) total with the following:

Chance of serious physical or mental illness or accident in the next 12 months.

LCUs total for 12 months

0-150	0% - 33%
151-300	34% - 66%
301-450	67% - 90%

Benning parachute towers rich in tradition

The three 250-foot Parachute Towers are most likely the most prominent terrain features on Fort Benning.

Those massive skeletons of steel can be seen for miles in any given direction. At night, the flashing red warning lights atop the tower magnify even more the power that radiates from these structures.

For the prospective Airborne student, the first gaze at these towers can cause a foreboding tightness in the throat and stomach and hammers into the students' minds the seriousness of the tasks they will face after they enter the gates of the U.S. Army Airborne School.

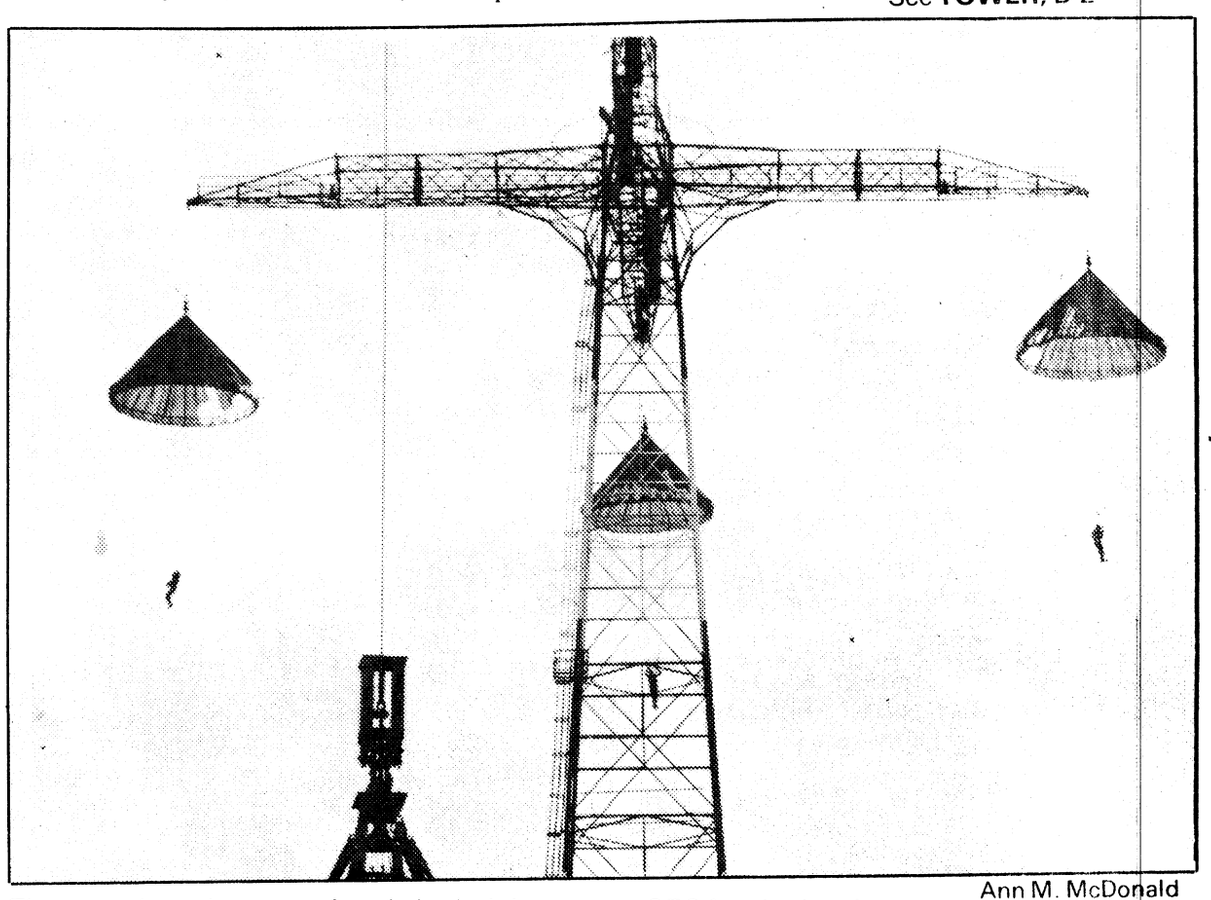
As rich in tradition and esprit de corps as it is, the history of the American paratrooper is not complete without the stories these massive towers can tell.

Over the years, the towers have been instrumental in providing the physical training and mental conditioning that separates airborne soldiers from all others.

The idea of the towers for parachute training first came about in 1940. With German paratroopers spearheading assaults at the outbreak of WWII, the effectiveness of Airborne forces startled the world.

In the summer of 1940, the U. S. began an all-out preparedness program to train its own paratroopers. This concept became reality with the organization and training of the original test platoon here at Fort Benning.

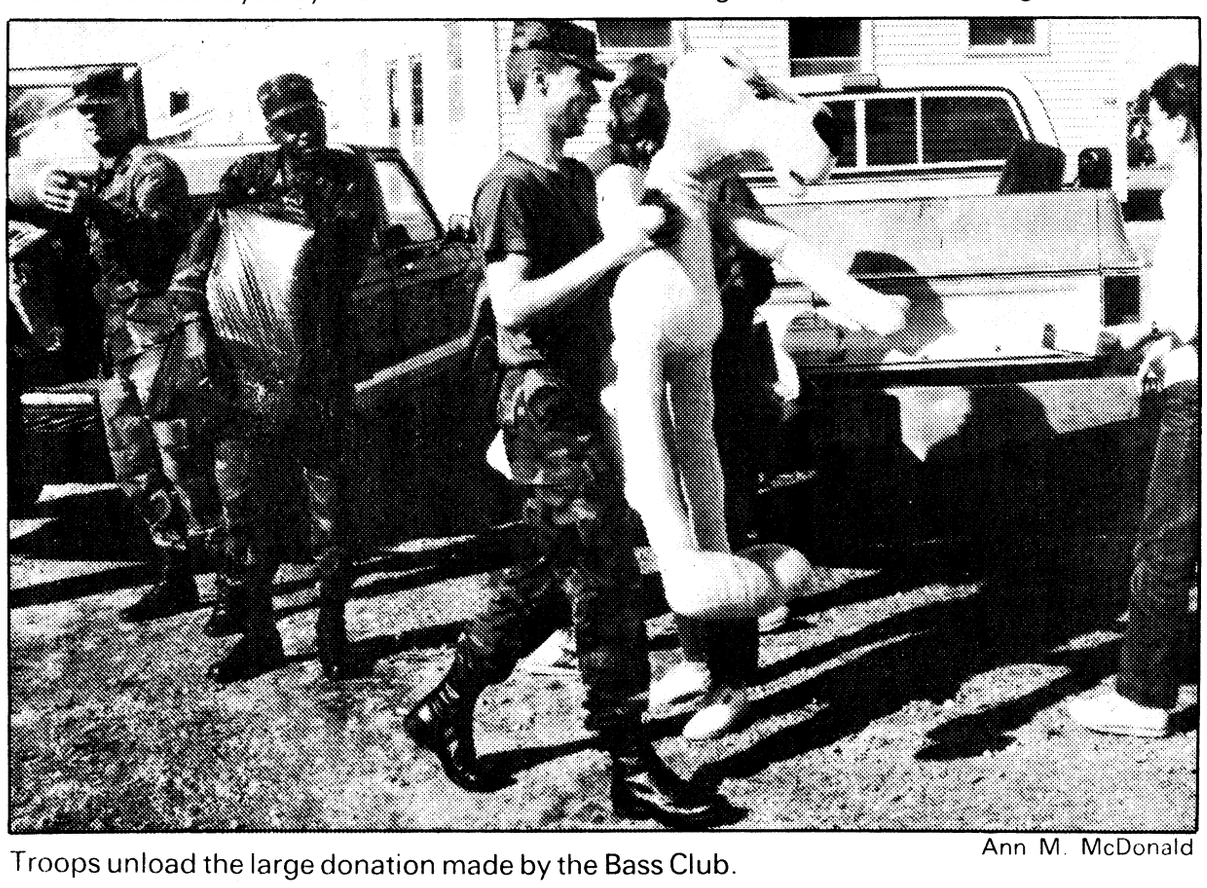
The members of the Test Platoon underwent an intense pyhsical and mental parachute training program. Part of this training included a week of tower jumping from a tower in Highstown, N.Y. owned and operated by the Safe Parachute Company.



The pioneers of the U.S. Airborne were so impressed by the outstanding training that the tower was viewed as in an invaluable training apparatus in teaching the control of the parachute during descent, self confidence and command reaction under stress and practical work in parachute landing falls. As a result, the U.S. Army adopted the 250-foot, parachute training tower concept.

Based on designs by the Safe Parachute Company, two towers were constructed on post by Ledbetter Erection Company of Birmingham, Ala. in 1941 at a cost of $100,000 each.

In 1942, two more towers were added at a cost of $200,000 each. The price had doubled that year because of higher steel costs. World War II had started and most steel was needed to construct tanks.



One of the first towers built is at Fort Benning near the intersection of Marchant and Ed-

Husband, wife are honored after sixty years of service

By Aimee R. Holden
Bayonet staff writer

Together, they have given over 60 years of service to Fort Benning, and on the first of December, Robert and Corinne Loughman celebrated the end of their careers at a retirement ceremony in their honor.

"We're very excited," Robert said."There are a lot of things we want to do, and we're ready to get started."

Robert, whose last job was in Directorate of Plans, Training and Mobilization, began his government service when he was drafted into the Army in 1943. He remained a soldier for more than 20 years, during which he served in World War II, the Korean Conflict and the Vietnam Conflict.

He was assigned to Fort Benning in 1951, and retired from the Army here in 1966. He began his Civil Service career in 1967 as the chief clerk of the Physical Evaluation Board with the 3rd Army Rifle and Pistol Team.

In 1981, Robert was medically retired. After six months of hard work as a security guard he was pronounced in sufficient shape to return to Civil Service work. He was assigned to Skill Qualification Testing, Training Division, Department of Plans, Training and Mobilization, where he remained until his retirement.

"The ladies over at Civilian Personel Office were very surprised to see me come walking through the door saying I wanted to come back to work," Robert said.

Corinne became a Civil Service employee in 1958. Her first postition was in the Transportation Department, working in Household Goods. She remained in the Transportation Department throughout her career, and retired as the Chief Quality Control Supervisor.

Both Loughmans said they had seen many changes in the military throughout their careers. Some good and some bad.

Robert said the most significant change he'd witnessed was the number of jobs now contracted out to civilians.

"I keep telling the drill sergeants that pretty soon civilians will be doing their job," he said.

Corinne said she was impressed by the care the Army now provides for family memers.

"The military treats dependents much differently now, than they did twenty years ago," she said. "It provides many more services for dependents, and takes care of them. We didn't have that kind of help when Robert was in the Army."

The Loughmans, who have been married for 41 years, were childhood sweethearts in their hometown of Glencove, N.Y.

"We used to go to church together at 6 a.m. just so we could sit next to each other," Robert said.

The couple has six children--two of whom live in Columbus--and eleven grandchildren.

They recently bought a travel trailer and plan to spend their newly acquired free time visiting family and friends across the U.S.

"We want to spend time visiting places that we've been, but didn't have a chance to really look at while we were there," Robert said.

"We'd like to go out west," Corinne said. "We also want to drive to Alaska," she added.

"Our time here has been nice," Corinne said. "I'll miss the companionship and close friends.

"But," she added, "I think it will be nice not to work."

Santa's Castle open for business

USAIC Public Affairs Office

If you have been looking for a way to help spread the Christmas spirit, stop by Santa's Castle in Splinter Village.

The shop was started in the summer of 1986 to provide toys for needy military children at Christmas.

To understand its success, you have to look at the numbers. Last year, the shop provided 4,000 toys to 300 children in 150 Fort Benning families. This year, 8,000 toys were on the shelves Monday as the first "shoppers" arrived.

"According to early reports from units, 200 families have already been identified for referral here, and we expect another 100 families by Christmas," said Joetta Brown, one volunteer.

Last year, the shop had 11 bicycles, which were distributed by a drawing. This year, she estimates they'll give away 50 bicycles, tricycles and other riding toys.

Volunteers are still repairing toys, getting more ready to go on the shelves when needed, so a final tally for the year won't be available until after Christmas.

Mrs. Brown, in her second year at Santa's Castle, explained why she volunteers. "If you could see some of these parents, the looks on their faces when the see what we have to offer, that's what makes it worthwhile," she said.

She calls the shop "Toys 'R Us" because of the variety of items the shop offers. "We have toys for all age groups, from babies on up, and a good selection to choose from," she said.

The shop is staffed by 10 permanent volunteers, and 60 more who work during the holidays. Soldiers from various units on post also give their time, repairing and cleaning the used toys that are donated by the community.

But what has made the shop successful is the people in this community, she said.

"A few weeks ago, an older woman came in and said she had some money for us. She counted out $150 and left, refusing to give her name," Brown said.

A woman came in and handed Brown a couple of boxes. "That card game still has all the cards in it," she said, "And this puzzle still has all the pieces. Do you need things like

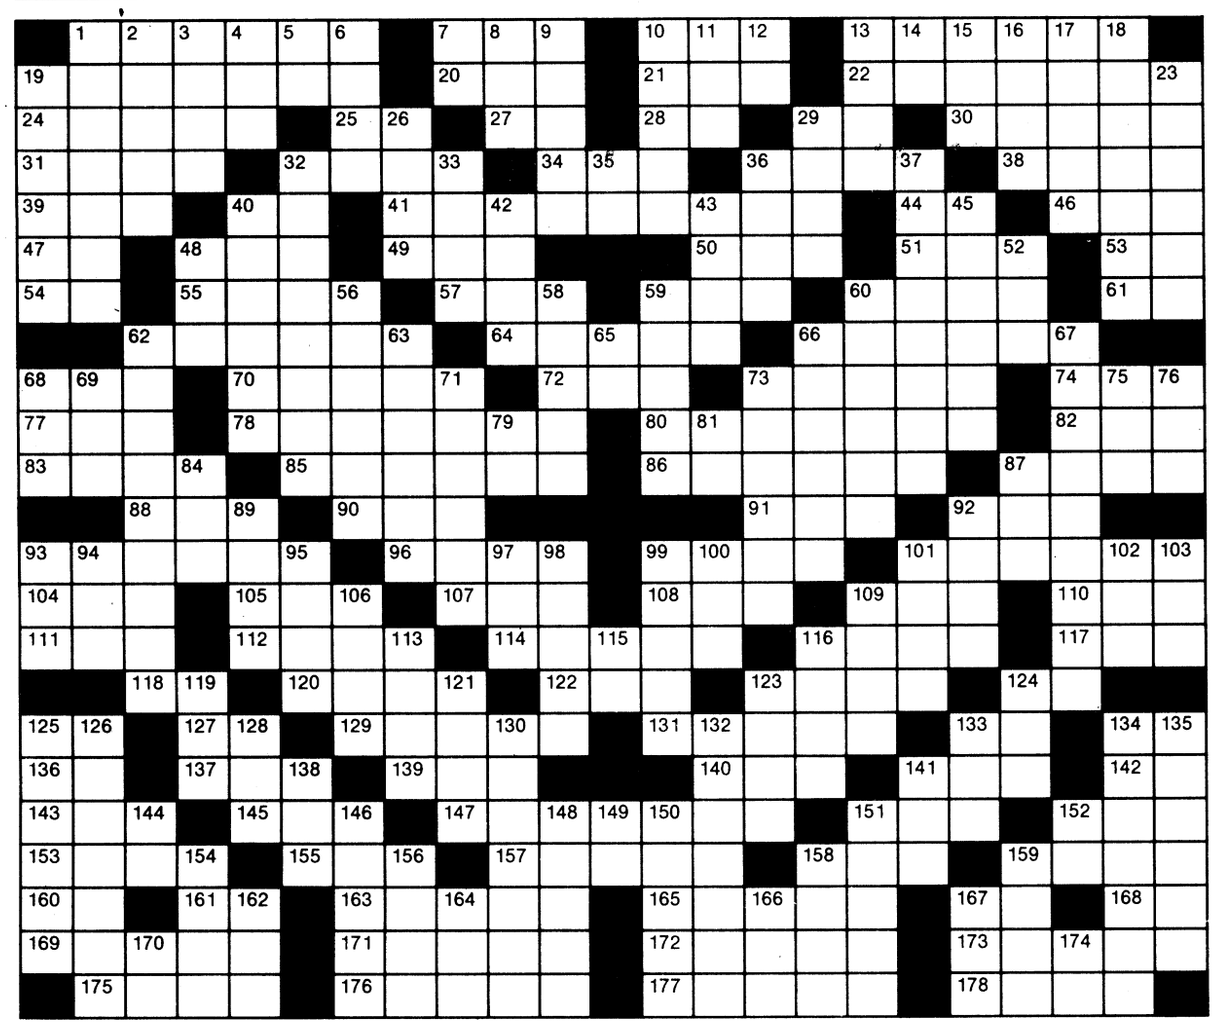
Division III title on the line in Stagg Bowl

USAIC Public Affairs Office

The Division III title will be on the line Dec. 12 in the 15th Annual Amos Alonzo Stagg Bowl at the Garrett Stadium in Phenix City.

The Stadium is located on Sullivan Road just off the Phenix City end of the North Columbus bypass. Kick off time is 1:10 p.m..



Four colleges will battle tomorrow for the chance to go to the Stagg Bowl. In the East/South match up, Wagner College in New York will play host to a tough Emory and Henry College of Virginia and Central of Iowa will travel to Ohio to take on Dayton in the North/West game.

The ITT Office in building 247 on Engersol Street has tickets at a cost of $6 per person.

Call the Stagg Bowl hotline at 576-9031 for more information.

Tower

wards streets and is used for controlled drops. The other towers were built for free drops.

Today, the essence of parachute training can be found in the two-fold purpose of the basic airborne course: first, to qualify volunteers in the use of the parachute as a means of combat deployment, and secondly, through mental and physical conditioning, to develop leadership, self confidence and an aggressive spirit.

For hands on training, the student dons a parachute harness, complete with risers, suspension lines and a modified parachute canopy. A large, metal ring is lowered by a steel cable from one of four arms or projection at the top of the tower. At the top of the canopy is a metal peak which is inserted and locked into a lifting block at the end of the steel cable.

The bottom circumference of the canopy is then attached to the large ring by the use of small rings and cams located around the base of the canopy. The student is then pulled to the top of tower by motors in the maintenance building located at the base of the tower.

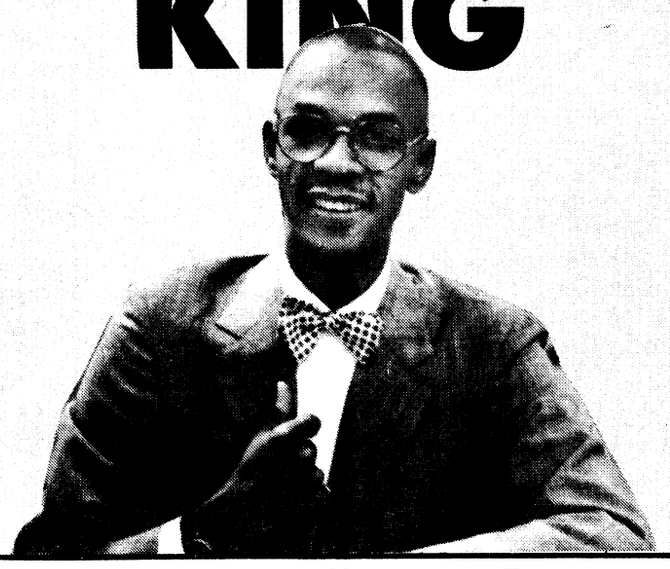
Once at the top, the mechanisms are disengaged, and the student descends under a full canopy. The student makes contact with the ground and another student takes a turn under the canopy. On a good day, trainers can jump 25 students per tower arm, per-hour.

With the exception of jumping from the aircraft door and receiving the initial shock created by the opening and inflation of the canopy, a jump from the free tower is very similiar to an actual parachute jump. For this reason, free tower training is a critical transition between the two week training phase (ground and tower weeks) and the actual jumps in the testing phase (jump week).

Free tower training takes several previous blocks of instruction and combines them into one training apparatus.

The training benefits the student receives through the use of the the free tower include: Experiencing the actual rate of descent; controlling both the T-10 and MC1-1B parachutes; assuming a good prepare to land attitude; executing a parachute landing fall; controlling a natural fear of heights; seeing what 200 feet (to lower combat equipment) and 100 feet (prepare to land) looks like from the air; testing mental alertness and reaction under stress; and the student gaining confidence in himself and his equipment.

The students receive instructions and commands during the entire process from airborne trainers on the ground by using a PA system and bull horns. Every action is closely monitored and critiqued so the student can perform better on his next jump.



Additionally, the two free towers are used in demonstrating parachute malfuncitons. For this purpose, "Oscar", a 250-pound dummy is dropped several times to show the students examples of the various types of malfunctions that may occur when jumping from an aircraft. "Oscar" is also used to demonstrate of the capabilities of the T-10 reserve parchute.

The third tower on Eubanks Field is the controlled descent tower. This tower was used by airborne trainers for malfunction and reserve parachute training up until 1948.

Today, it is used exclusively to treat visiting dignitaries and special interest groups to a controlled-descent ride (buddy-seat ride) similar to those found at large amusement parks.

In 1940, the seeds of the rich, proud and distinguished history that characterizes the U.S. Airborne effort were planted. The magnificant 250-foot towers today, are a symbol of that tradition grown strong. They represent the paratroopers and tradition of the future as these bigger than life, working monuments continue to stand tall.

Bass Club donates toys

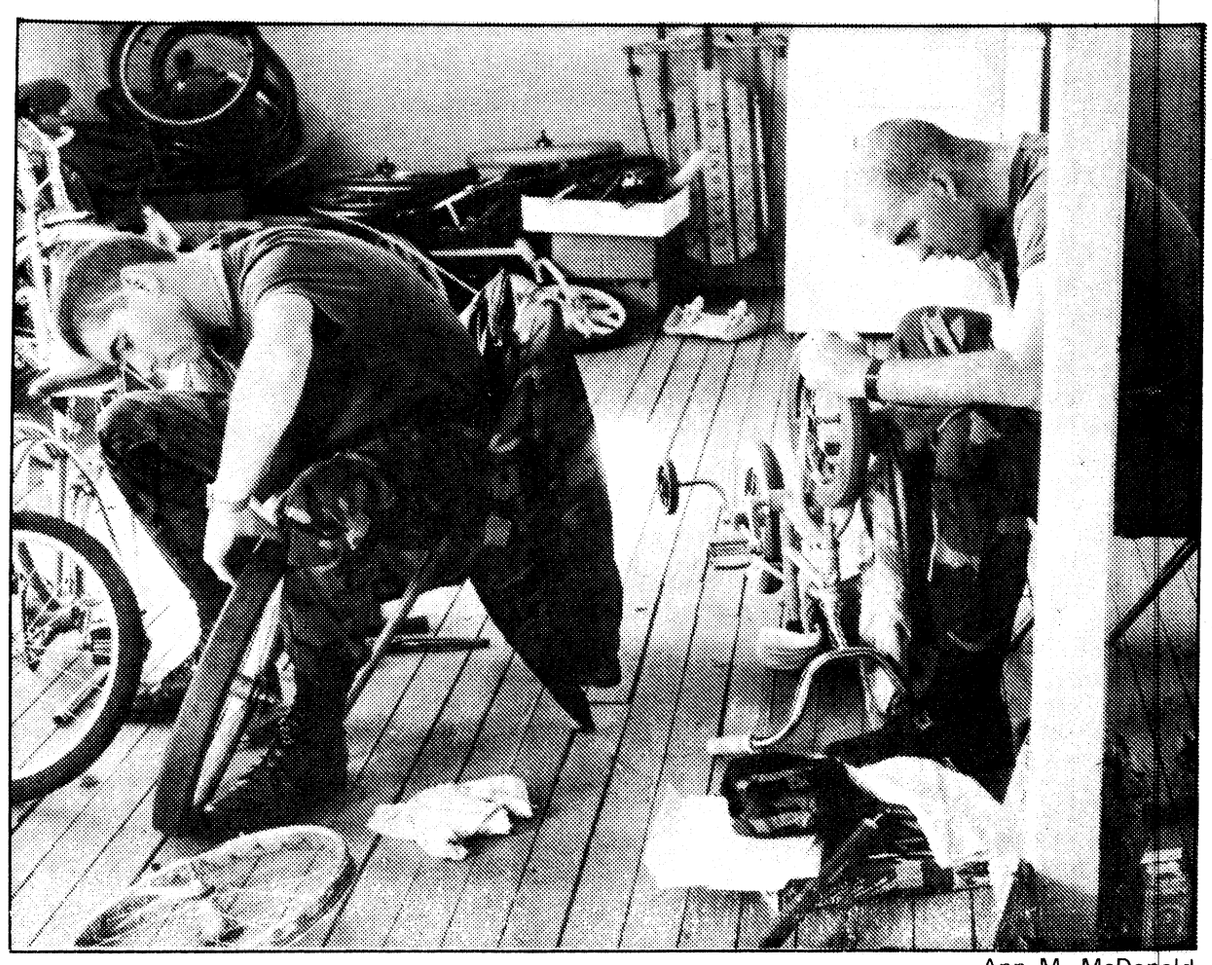
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Members of the Bass Club of Fort Benning got into the Christmas Spirit early by donating toys to Santa's Castle.

A pick-up load of toys was delivered to Santa's Castle last week by members of the club.

Those toys and many others are available at the castle. This non-profit organization was created in 1986 to provide toys for military kids at Christmas.

The walls on the ground floor of the castle are lined with shelves full of toys bagged up and ready to go. There is a large variety of toys and many of them are consistant with the latest fads.



Volunteers are always needed for the many tasks needed to get those toys back into working condition.

Jobs consist of anything from combing dolls hair, dressing them, painting on a new smile or repairing bicycles.

Shopping for this season has already begun. Children will receive three toys. Soldiers in need should see their first sergeant, the Red Cross or Army Community Services. This is done to assure that those that are truly needy, regardless of the situation, are served.

Toys many be donated year round at the Main Exchange Box, Army Community Service or Santa's Castle. Donations of cleaning supplies are always welcome.

Santa's Castle is located in Building 2639, in Splinter Village. Its phone number is 545-1233.

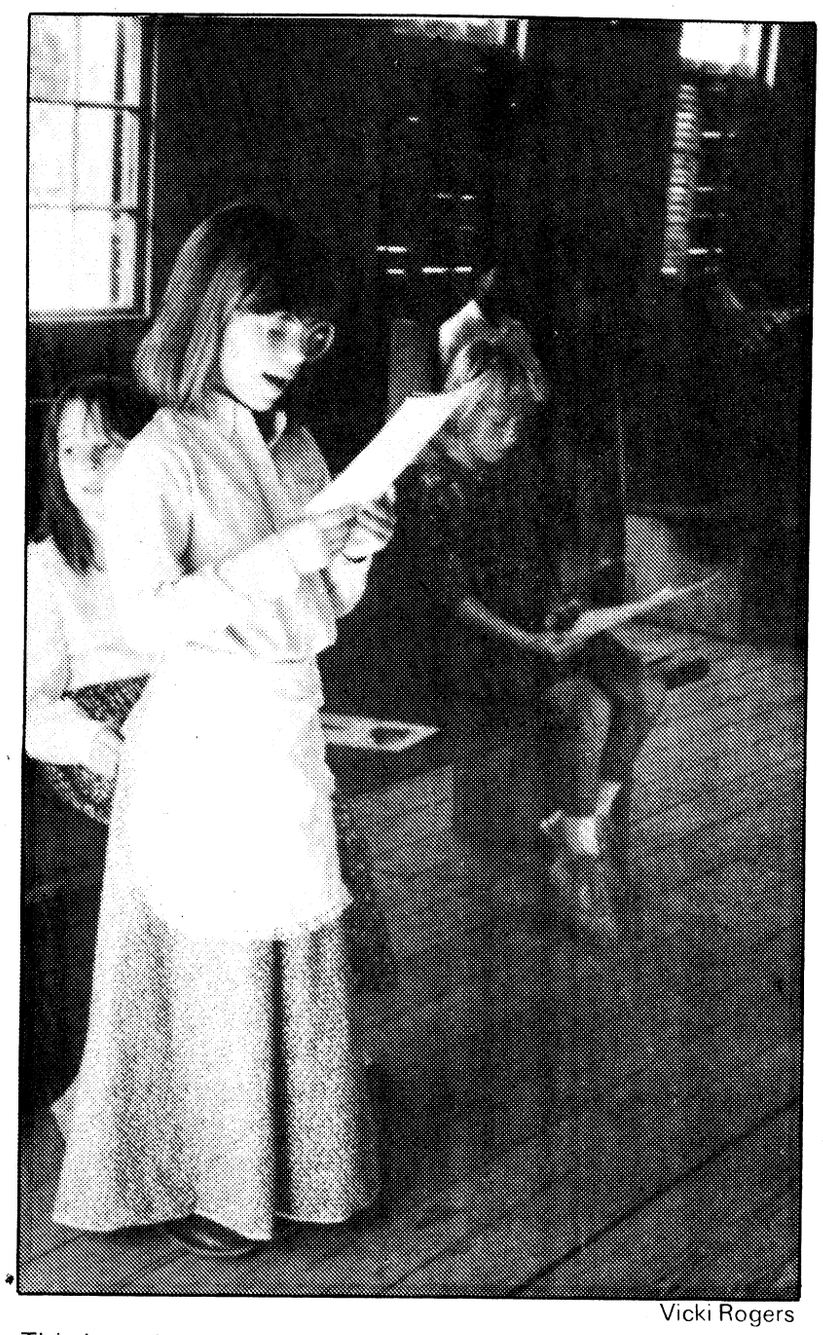
this?"

Brown assured her that the gifts were needed and thanked her for coming by. "Every little bit helps," she said.

Many more people give their time.

"Sometimes soldiers from a unit will show up and say, 'we have four hours, tell us what you want us to do,'" she said. "People have been so good about helping."

Staffers have become adapt at procuring needed replacement parts and equipment. "We order parts for many toys from the manufacturers, and a local bike repair shop gives us a good deal on parts," she said.



Their one weak spot is gifts for teenagers. "Having bought for my own children, I know from experience what a hard age group it is to choose gifts for," Brown said.

They need things like hairdryers, curling irons, manicure sets, records and tapes.

"We'd like to make sure that no child at Fort Benning goes without presents this Christmas," she said.

EDITOR'S NOTE: Volunteers are still needed at Santa's Castle. Call 545-1233 for information.

Wilson School third graders step back in time

Vicki Rogers

Third grade student, Carma Purkett, reads from a McGuffey reader at the Westville schoolhouse.

By Beth Middlemiss
Fort Benning Schools

Third graders at Wilson School recently stepped back in time to 1850 as they sat on the wooden benches of Westville's one room school house practicing their sums on little black slates. Westville's many visitors from across the country watched with interest recently as children stood tall and proud, reciting from their McGuffey Readers, while others labored over their penmanship lesson. Costumed teachers moved students through a typical day in an 1850 schoolroom.

Along the tour of Westville, located in Lumpkin, Ga., students were exposed to the talents of a master basketweaver, a musician who demonstrated the instruments of that period; a potter; and a blacksmith.

Students were fascinated with the cotton gin, propelled by "mule power", as they followed the cycle of the raw cotton from the gin to the spinning wheel and on to the loom.

The aroma of sausage and biscuits and fresh gingerbread attracted the group to the dog-trot farmhouse. Out back, there was cane syrup making and a barnyard of animals.

This extension of the regular classroom occurred because teachers Myra Cook, Sharon Martz, and Julie Miller had prepared for the field trip by visiting Westville and mapping out the entire day's program. Teachers created a booklet that prepared students for the visit. Even the school bus served as a classroom as children and teachers read the booklets and maps and sang songs prepared by music teacher, Norma Green, for the trip.

Students came back to the classroom for more detailed study. Students and teachers had captured the excitement of the day on videotape to share with parents and the rest of the students at Wilson School.

Third grade teacher, Julie Miller, rings for her students as they line up at the Westville schoolhouse.

Good health tops list of American priorities

By Dr. Michael Jacobson
Department of Family Practice

When given a list of priorities that one might have in life, most Americans have consistently placed "good health" near the top of their list.

It makes good sense: to truly enjoy almost anything, you must have good health.

But despite such strong desires for good health, many do not understand, or simply are not willing, to practice the lifestyles which are necessary for good health in later years.

There are several common misconceptions that can be destructive to our health. First, we somehow expect that regardless of how we treat our bodies, that if we do get sick, the doctors will be able to fix it. We see all of the wonderful advances in medicine and believe that it nearly guarantees us good health. This is a sad mistake.

Most do not realize that very little of medicine actually cures disease. Aside from the treatment of infections and some surgery for a limited scope of illnesses, most of the field of medicine consists of the diagnosis and treatment of disease but very few true cures.

For example, one who has a heart attack receives drugs to help protect the heart from further damage, as well as instructions to curb activities that might make the diseased heart work too hard. So the underlying disease is still present and will continue to progress unless lifestyles changes are made; but even then, it is often "too little, too late" to restore good health.

A second common misconception is that the lifestyle changes and preventive measures that one can take are not nearly as effective in providing for good health as the medications which the doctor can prescribe.

A few of the most devastating lifestyles that are common today include smoking, alcohol abuse and obesity. A long history of smoking almost assures you of emphysema; it is the greatest risk factor for heart disease, and it places you in great risk for lung cancer.

So, take responsibility for your health. Learn now how to take good care of your body. The older you get, the harder it becomes to change your habits. Get regular check-ups and ask questions. Bring your records and medications with you each time you visit your physician, this will help him/her to make sure you are on only those medications and dosages which are right for you. Remember: no one can do more to insure your good health than YOU!

Powerlifter

Taoy wins at All-Army Trials

By Kevin J. Howerton
197th Infantry Brigade correspondent

Sgt. Miguel V. Taoy, Jr. of Company D, 197th Support Battalion, recently won the Army Powerlifting Team Trials in Indian Gap, Pa. The Fort Benning soldier lifed a total of 1,416 pounds to win the championship in the 148 pound class.

Powerlifting is a sport which requires contestants to make three seperate lifts for a total weight. Taoy lifted 551 pounds in the squat lift, 358 pounds in the benchpress, and 507 pounds in the dead lift.

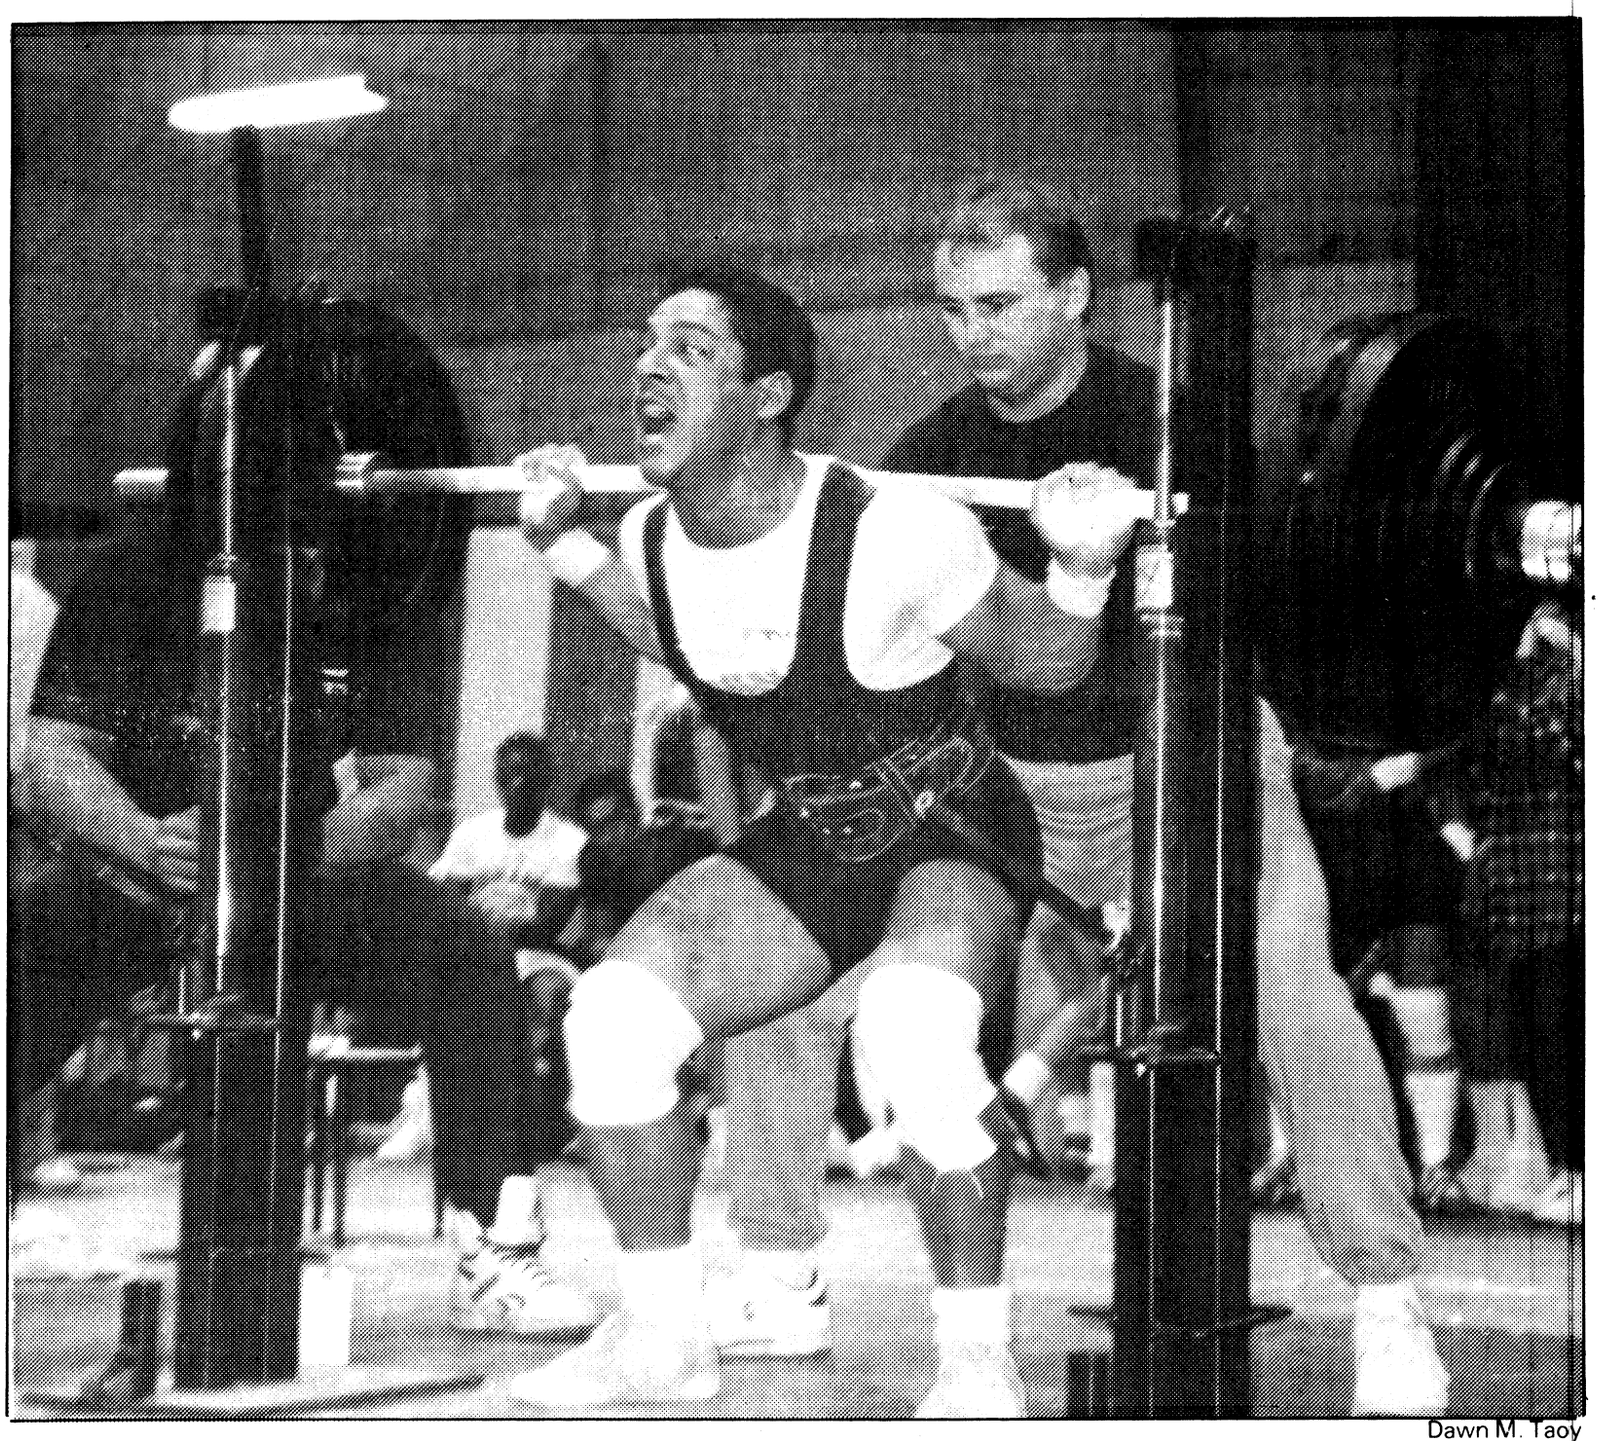
"I knew I would win after the benchpress competition," said Taoy. "I was unknown at the competition, and they couldn't believe what I could do."

The native of Hawaii has been powerlifting for two years, and is already listed among the top 20 powerlifters in the nation. This was Taoy's first American powerlifting meet, but he won three championships while stationed with the 11th Armored Cavalry in Germany.

"A German powerlifting champion saw me lift one day and talked me into competing in the German Championships in November of '86," Taoy said. "I was the only American in the competition, and I won a gold medal."

Taoy's second competition was the V Corps Championships held in Frankfurt, Germany in April. He broke three records and took first place. His last competition was the May U.S. Army Europe Championship, where he won a gold medal.

Since his assignment with the 197th Infantry Brigade in May. Taoy has continued his training as a powerlifter. During duties as a power generator repairman, he has to train in some unusual conditions.



During his unit's deployment to the National Training Center in Fort Irwin, Cal. last August, Taoy was able to take a small weight set with him. He would work out in the heat of the desert on the tracked recovery vehicle he was assigned to.

"The weight set I took with me wasn't heavy enough, so my training partner and I would grab equipment off the M88 to lift," he said. "Everybody that saw us thought we were crazy, but it's what I had to do to keep in shape."

"My unit has been very supportive of my efforts," Taoy said. "This helped me stay in shape."

Taoy will be working out at the Kelley Hill Physical Fitness Center until the Armed Forces Powerlifting Championship. The championship will be held Feb. 14 through 19 in El Toro, Cal.

In addition to his own training, Taoy enjoys helping other soldiers in weightlifting and hopes to organize a powerlifting team on post.

Gale Sayers voices views on NFL special teams, running back kicks

Gale Sayers
Member Pro Football Hall of Fame

During my years in the National Football League I ran back kickoffs and punts as well as starting in the backfield for the Chicago Bears.

It's rare today to see a starting player running back kicks. The coaches may feel that a particular player might get injured while playing on special teams. Back then my coach just saw it as another opportunity for me to get my hands on the ball.

When the coach said, "I want you to run back kicks," you did it. The players felt differently about their jobs, and it was a job.

Today's players often tell the coach what they will and will not do. And frankly, many of them are afraid to run back kickoffs or punts.

I loved playing on the special teams. I wasn't worried about getting hit because I could see all the people in front of me. In running from scrimmage, you can get hit from the back or the side. On returns, they are coming straight at you.

The way I ran with a lot of moves, tacklers got an arm or a jersey or pushed me out of bounds; I was always doing things to keep opponents off balance. The collisions were not any more violent that a normal running play.

I'll admit there was one time in my rookie year when a Detroit player clothes-lined me, which was legal back then. I didn't fumble but I jumped up and started running to the wrong bench. My teammates had to catch me and turn me around.

NFC wins YA Super Bowl

USAIC Public Affairs Office

The YA "Super Bowl" was held recently in Doughboy Stadium. This year the Trojans, who won the Pee Wee championship by beating the Packers 18-0, teamed up with the Broncos, as the NFC team, and the Packers join the Redskins as the AFC.

Hamp Dews, the AFC head coach, indicated he thought his AFC team would win. "Because," he said, "the Redskins and Packers have a very similar offense and the transition, to playing as a single team, was easy because of the similarities."

But, when game time came the NFC's Valdrin Smith rushed for 190 yards and ran in two TDs to lead his team to a 14-8 victory over the AFC.

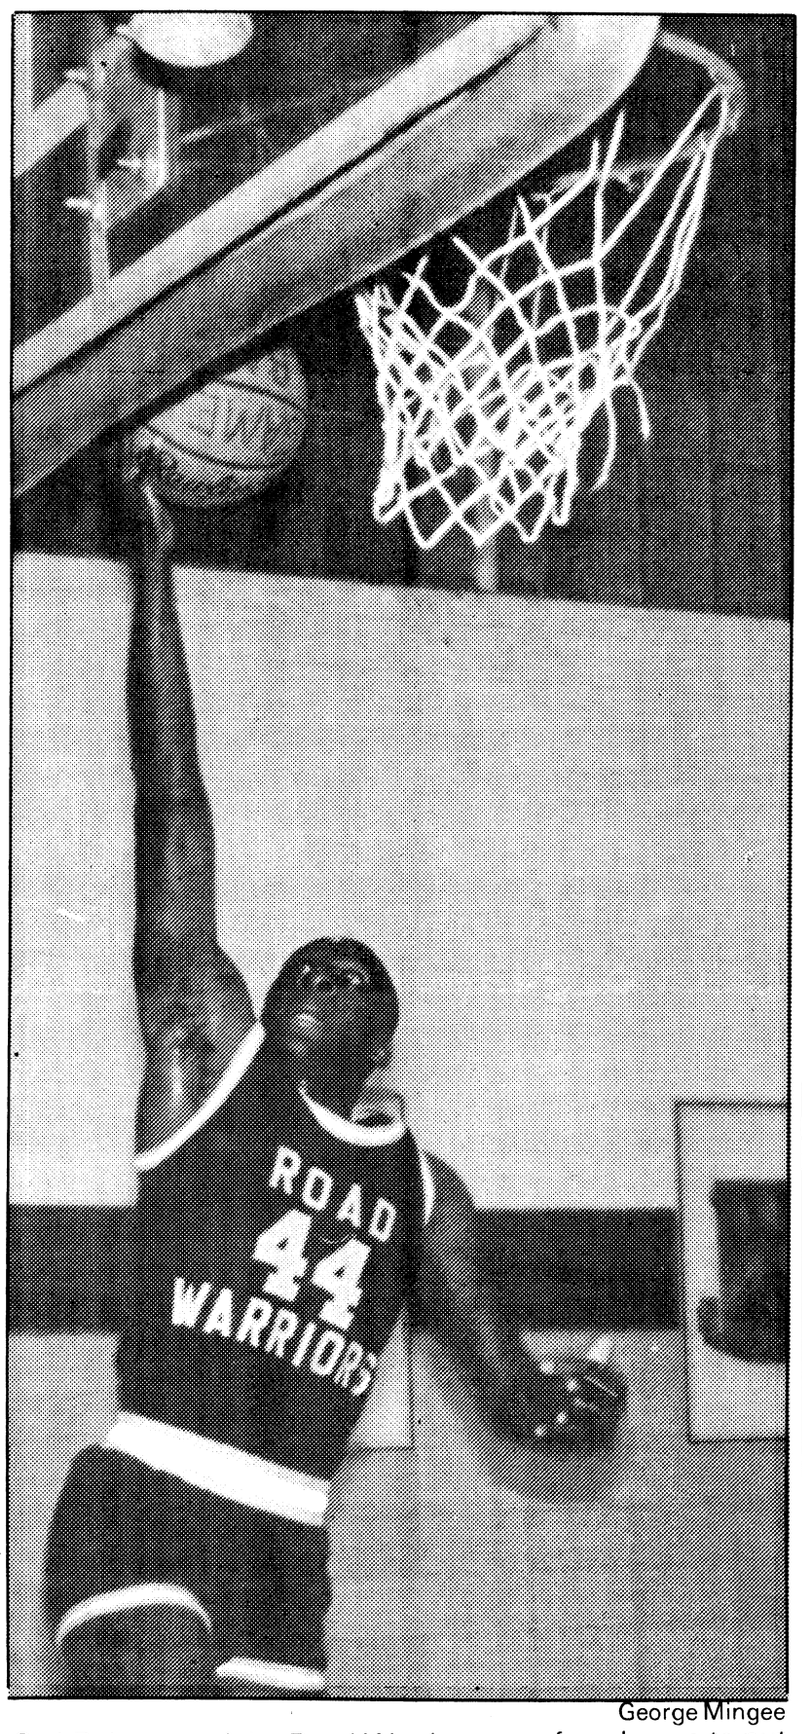
"I'm proud of these kids," said Luther Livingston, the NFC coach. "They believed in themselves and strived to be the best and today are."

The regular season ended officialy when the Trojans, at 6-1 and coached by Livingston, went against the Packers, also at 6-1, for the championship in the Pee Wee league. During that game Smith ran in 3 TDs to beat the Packers 18-0.

Road Warriors dump Dogs, 49-13

By George Mingee
197th Inf. Bde. correspondent

The "Road Warriors" of HHC 197th Inf. Bde., crushed the "Charlie Dogs" of C Btry. , 2nd Bn. 10th FA, in 197th intramural basketball Monday night, 49-13. The Warriors remain unbeaten in early season play.



Kevin Arnold, a guard for the Warriors, also know as the "Dunk Man", had a game high of 13 points. His quick moves and his ability to get open, made him a vital part of the game.

"A team that plays well together, wins together," said Coach Jeffrey Moses, of the Warriors.

Center Roscoe Cherry of the Dogs led his team with seven points during the game. But even with his leadership, the rest of the team couldn't match his scoring power.

Jerry Curry of the Warriors was the second highest scorer for his team, with a personal score of eight points.

Even though the game was never close, the Warriors and the Dogs didn't stop playing a head-to-head game until the last buzzer sounded.

George Mingee

Carl Roberson of the Road Warriors goes for a lay-up to put his team ahead by two more points.

Army vs. Navy 88th meeting on Saturday

This Saturday's game pairing Army and Navy will be the 88th in a colorful history dating back to the inaugural game in 1890. The series began that year when Navy challenged the cadets to a football game.

Army accepted, despite the fact it had never before had a football team and Navy had 11 years experience in the sport.

As expected, Navy won the West Point opener by a score of 24-0. But, when the two met again the following year at Annapolis, the tide turned against Navy. It was Army who came away with A 32-16 victory.

Competition has been relatively close since then. The midshipmen have capitalized on 10 wins and a tie in the last 14 meetings.

Navy holds A 41-39-7 advantage in the series standings.

Army stopped a six game losing streak with its 28-11 win in 1984. The 1981 game ended in a 3-3 tie. Last year Army prevailed once again, this time by a 27-7 margin.

Between 1984 and 1986, Navy claimed a 17-7 upset, scoring 10 points in the final nine minutes to snap a 7-7 stalemate.

In total, the Army-Navy classic has been played at 11 different locations since 1890. This year's Army-Navy game will be played at Veterans Stadium in Philadelphia.

Faith Race held tomorrow

The ninth annual Faith School Race will take place on Saturday, Dec. 5. The race is sponsored this year by the Don C. Faith Middle School physical education department and the Houston Sports Medicine Hospital.

There is a new race this year. maps of the route are available at the school along with pre-registration forms.

The Faith Race is made up of three different races that begin and end at Don C. Faith Middle School at 1375 Ingersoll Street. The one mile race for boys and girls 14 years old and under begins at 8:45 a.m., the two mile race begins at 9:15 a.m., and the five mile race begins at 9:45 a.m. The two and five mile races are open to all age categories.

There are 19 age categories within the three races, and awards will be presented in each category at the awards ceremony in the Faith School gym. Faith Race T-shirts will be presented to all finishers.

"Our race has grown each year," said Susan Emerson, Faith physical education teacher and race coordinator. "Participants include students, parents, teachers and other Fort Benning runners form the surrounding Columbus and Phenix City area. It has become a family affair with entire families running the race together."

The race involving 700 to 1100 runners each year, began nine years ago as an outgrowth of the Faith physical education program and the Faith Jogging Club which had begun that same year.

All proceeds from the race will go the the Faith physical education program to provide additional equipment and incentive awards for students.

Pre-registration fees are $4 for ages 14 and under, per race, and $6 for ages 15 and over, per race. Registration fees for the day of the race increas to $5 and $7 respectfully.

Anyone needing further information about the race can contact physical education teacher, Susan Emerson, at Faith Middle School at 545-2309.

YA Basketball sign-up begins

YA Basketball registration began Nov. 30 and continues through Dec. 11.

Children 8-15 years old of active duty or retired military personnel may register. Birth certificates or ID cards will be required.

Sign-up will be conducted Monday through Friday from 8 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. at the Youth Activities, building 1056 on McIver Street.

Basketball coaches and cheerleders are also needed for the up-coming season. For more information on coaching requirements and player registration call 545-3070 or 3913.

Hunter safety class offered

Persons born on or after Jan. 1, 1961 desiring to hunt in Georgia or on the Fort Benning Reservation must complete a State Hunting Safety class. Classes will be conducted on Dec. 14 and 15 in Building 4, classroom 3, from 7 to 10 p.m.. Students must attend both days.

State Golfers hold meeting

The Georgia State Golf Association announced today that it will conduct its Annual Meeting at The Standard Club, Saturday.

More than 100 persons, include the GSGA's Executive Committee, Board of Directors, Advisory Council, Committeemen and Women's Committee, along with delegates from many of the GSGA's 205 member clubs, will be in attendance.

"We are looking forward to our biggest turnout ever for this meeting," GSGA President Eddie LeBaron said. "The activities and scope of the Association have increased tremendously in the last four years and likewise, so have the number of people involved with our affairs. For both of those reasons, we are expecting our best Annual Meeting ever."

The weekend's activities start Friday with an Executive Committee meeting from 4-7 p.m. at Willow Springs Country Club. Following the meeting is the annual Executive Committee banquet at Rivermont Country Club.

Saturday's activities include the following:

8:30-9 a.m. — Meeting Registration

9 a.m. to noon — Annual Meeting

Noon-1 p.m. — Luncheon

Women's basketball leagues now forming

The Physical Activities Branch is presently looking to field six to eight female basketball team with 10 to 12 players each. For registration information call 545-5777 or go by Doughboy Stadium door 8.

Gale

Watching football today, I have trouble understanding why kickoff and punt returns aren't more successful. The rules have been changed to make it a great deal easier for the return team. Kickoffs are from the 35 yard line instead of the 40. On punt returns, only two defenders can take off immediately at the snap of the ball. It used to be that all 11 defenders charged down the field at once. An old coach of mine in grade school used to tell me that a good back should beat one man 100 percent of the time and two defenders 75 percent of the time.

Teams might not be spending enough time on returns in practice. You have to be able to do it in practice if you expect to do it in the game. If they really worked on it, I think fans would see a lot more touchdowns scored on returns.

Gale Sayers is considered one of the greatest running backs of all time. The former Chicago Bear is a member of the National Football League's Hall of Fame.

HOUSE CALL

By Dr. Herbert C. Segal
House Call

Editors Note: This is the first in a series of health care columns. Comments or concerns of genreal interest should be submitted to "House Call", c/o the Bayonet.

Matters relating to personal health care needs requiring prompt resolution should be directed to the Patient Affairs Liaison Office at Martin Army Community Hospital, 544-2788/4140.

November health-related activities included the annual Great American Smokeout, an event popularized by Larry Hagman of "Dallas". What the Smokeout promotes, in a light-hearted way, is the taking of responsibility for one's smoking habit and for the modification of personal health behavior.

What I'd like to suggest, as a larger theme, is that we as individuals bear responsibility for causing our personal health problems and that only through modification of destructive behaviors can we assure our own good health.

I recently reviewed a 1981-analysis of years of potential life lost by persons dying before the age of 65. The eight leading causes were accidents, cancer, heart disease, suicide and homicide, stroke, cirrhosis of the liver, pneumonia, and chronic lung disease.

Taken together, Americans dying that year before reaching their 65th birthday lost over 8 million years of potential life to these eight causes.

It has not escaped anyone's attention, I am sure, that we already have a tremendous amount of information on preventing these conditions through modification of five specific health behaviors: cigarette smoking, alcohol use, diet, sedentary lifestyle, and seat belt usage.

The question is: If we know how to prevent these conditions and if we agree it is desirable to do so, why are soldiers, active and retired, and their family members still dying prematurely?

Basically, I believe it is because we hate change.

While certain behaviors are known to be harmful, we reject the idea that we personally can be harmed. we cherish our individualism and resent having otherws remind us that our behavior can be self-destructive.

I have always been surprised at how concerned people are about environmental causes of ill health, air and water pollution and how uninterested they appear to be about taking responsibility for their own health behavior and, hence, their well-being.

Perhaps rather than focusing on the negative outcomes of self-destructive behaviors, we would get better results from programs like the Smokeout if we could visualize desirable or positive outcomes.

What is it worth to the Army, for example, to have a full and productive career and reach one's promotion potential rather than have that career shortened by disability?

What is the value of a physically healthy family unit whose members can count on enjoying each other's companionship?

What would such a future mean to military health care facilities now stretched to the breaking point caring for an increasing caseload of beneficiaries with debilitating diseases?

Taking individual responsibility is a key — it is a statement of personal maturity, of loyalty to our Army, and of love to our family members and friends.

No breakthrough in medical science offers anything close to the positive benefits that could be gained through personal commitment to stop self-destructive behavior.

Wouldn't such a commitment fit neatly into our resolutions for the New Year?

Continued good health can start with a phone call — Smoking Cessation: 544-4166/1221; Alcohol and Drug Counseling: 545-4821/2742; Nutrition Counseling: 544-1674/1542.

SafeyCab offers a free ride home during holidays

By Becky Obert
Bayonet staff writer

Soldiers who drink too much at holiday celebrations can get a free ride home by calling SafetyCab.

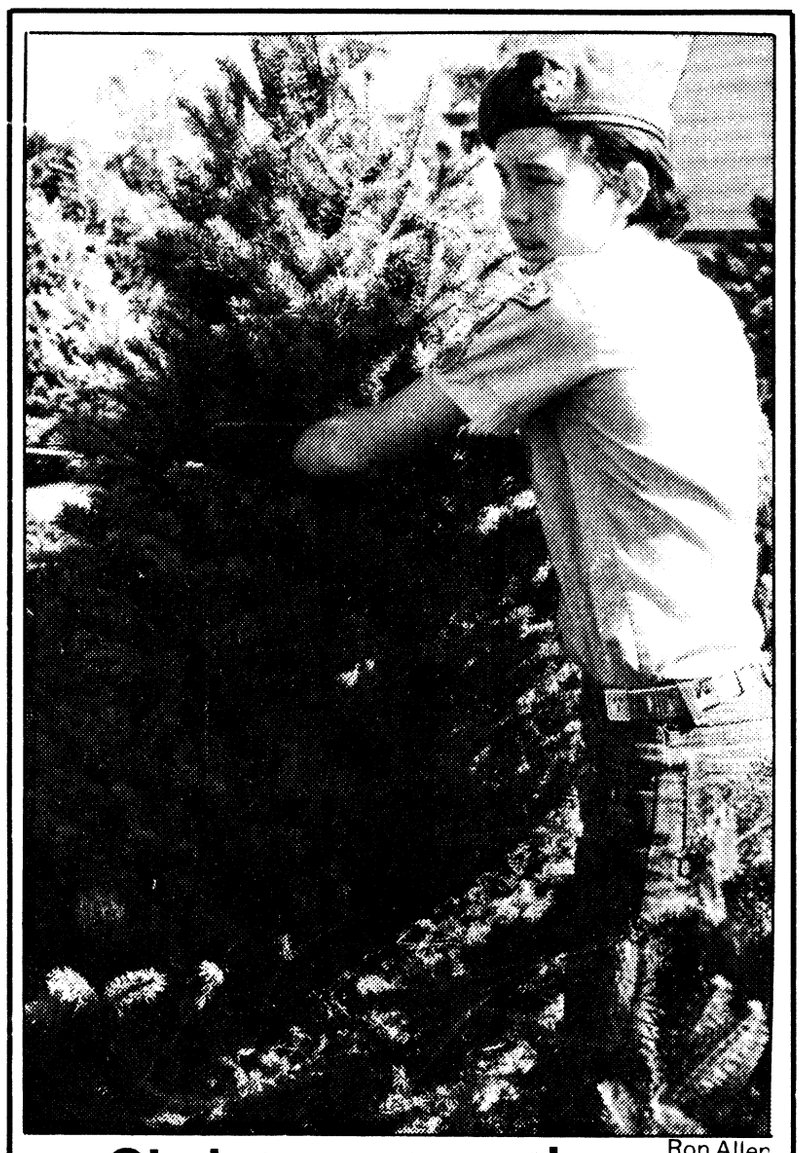
In its fifth year, the program is sponsored by The Bradley Center, American Family Life Assurance Company, the local chapter of the Association of the U.S. Army, Columbus Bank and Trust Company and the Columbus Ledger-Enquirer. All Fort Benning clubs and activities are participating in the program.

The program is simple. Beginning Monday and continuing through Jan. 3, people who have been drinking and don't want to drive can call 323-0110 and get a free cab ride home. The service is available between the hours of 7 p.m. and 3 a.m. daily.

Last year, SafetyCab provided 118 rides to Fort Benning, a total of 166 passengers.

The program is funded by the corporate sponsors, who last year spent between $12,000 and $14,000 providing the service to the community, said Alice Robertson, director of community relations at The Bradley Center.

"It's part of our efforts to educate the public about the problem of drinking and driving," she said. "We are also soliciting businesses to participate in the 'Designate a Driver' program."



Organizers are asking businesses that serve alcoholic beverages to serve free nonalcoholic drinks to people who volunteer to be designated drivers during the holiday season. Businesses are provided with colorful stickers for the designated driver to wear, which say thinks like, "no thanks, I'm driving."

The goal of the program is to keep drunken drivers off the roads, and statistics locally show that the program seems to be working. "In 1985, 238 people were arrested for DUIs, and that figure dropped to 67 in 1986," she said.

SafetyCab provided 1,155 rides last year during the two-week period, Robertson said.

She said that results with the designated driver program have been mixed, but they consider it successful if even one person chooses to be the designated driver. "Increasing community awareness of the problem and educating the people is making many people be more responsible," she said. "And every person that we educate is one less who will drive while impaired.

So if you've been drinking and don't want to drive, call SafetyCab at 323-0110, and get a free, safe ride home.

Hazards of impaired driving stressed for awareness week

By Becky Obert
Bayonet staff writer

If you plan to drink, don't plan to drive.

That's the message officials want to get out during this year's National Drunk and Drugged Driving Awareness Week Dec. 13 through 18, said Allen Curry of the Alcohol and Drug Abuse Prevention Program office.His office will be handing out literature and posters throughout the week and working with unit alcohol and drug counselors to help them coordinate their education efforts.

"We've also been providing fact sheets on DUIs at the defensive-driving classes taught by the safety office," Curry said.

"During the '70s, the focus was on knowing your limits, knowing how much you could safely drink and still drive. That didn't work very well, because even small amounts of alcohol impair driving ability," he said.

For this reason, experts now say that the best thing to do is choose one or the other: driving or drinking.

Curry said that it used to be accepted that people were going to drink and drive, but societal norms have changed in the 1980s. "Sales of hard liquor are down, but beer and wine sales are up as people switch to what they perceive as safer alcoholic beverages," he said.

Nothing could be farther from the truth, Curry said. "We are trying to educate people to the fact that beer gets you just as drunk as hard liquor."

Equally discouraging are statistics that show alcoholic-related traffic deaths on the increase after years of steady decline."Studies found that last year, there was a seven percent increase in deaths among drivers who were legally intoxicated," Curry said.

Army regulations mandate that commanders do several things if a soldier is arrested for driving under the influence, either on or off post.

Army commanders are required to ensure that an administrative letter of reprimand signed by a general officer is given to all soldiers who are convicted of DUI. The letter may be filed in the soldier's official military personnel file, where it will be reviewed by future promotion and assignment boards.

Regulations also require commanders to refer the soldier to Curry's office for evaluation and their driving privileges on post are suspended for one year.

Curry said that commanders are also required to review the soldier's personnel file to see if other actions should be taken, such as a bar to reenlistment,

Operation Holiday entertains single soldiers

USAIC Public Affairs Office

"Bigger and better than ever." That's how Jim Gallagher describes plans for this year's Operation Holiday.

The eighth annual Operation Holiday kicks off Dec. 18 in a 10:30 a.m. ceremony at the Columbus Government Center Plaza.

Operation Holiday is a series of events designed to entertain single soldiers who are unable to spend Christmas with their families. Sponsored by the Chattahoochee Valley-Fort Benning Chapter of the Association of the U.S. Army, it consists of a series of events, including basketball and football games, tours of local businesses and historical sites.

Last year, approximately 2,500 soldiers took part in Operation Holiday, at a cost to the local chapter of about $25,000.

Gallagher, president of the local chapter, said he's excited about this year's schedule, and that several new activities are planned.

"I just recently received a large group of tickets to the All American Bowl in Birmingham, Ala.," he said. Virginia playus Brigham Young University in the bowl game, scheduled for Dec. 22.

The schedule includes tours of Pratt and Whitney, the R.C. Cola Company, WDAK-WSTH Radio Station, Sunshine Buscuit Company, WTVM Television Station, Dolly Madison and the Ledger-Enquirer Newspaper.

Also on the schedule are several sports events, including Atlanta Hawks basketball games, the Blue-Grey football game and the Peach Bowl.

Back this year by popular demand is an afternoon of musical entertainment at a recreation center, which will include music by a rock band, and performances by Miss Georgia, Miss Columbus and Miss Phenix City. "New this year will be a one-hour karate demonstration put on by a post karate group," he said.

Historical sites on the agenda include tours of the Little White House in Warm Springs, Ga., the Confederate Naval Museum and Andersonville National Cemetery in Andersonville, Ga.

The AUSA bowling tournament, which expects to register 48 teams, will take place at the main post bowling center Dec. 21, 22 and 23.

Gallagher said that two Holiday Inns in Columbus are also donating a limited number of free rooms Christmas eve and several meals on Christmas Day.

"We are now in the process of deciding how many slots should be allotted for each activity, so that tickets can be purchased. We need to know how many soldiers want to participate," he said.

Soldiers who are interested in taking advantage of the events should check with their unit first sergeant or sergeant major, Gallagher said.

Santa Claus comes to Riverside

By Becky Obert
Bayonet staff writer

Santa Claus is coming to Riverside next week, to talk to children and give out treats.

A special pavillion has been constructed by soldiers from the 36th Engineer Group, and the exterior of the house has been decorated by volunteers.

The pavillion will be open from 3 to 6 p.m. daily, except for Thursday, when it will be open from 3 to 5 p.m. Post residents are invited to drop by and bring their children at any time during these hours.

A mime will also put on three performances, on Tuesday and Wednesday from 1 to 1:45 p.m., and again on Friday from 4 to 5 p.m.

There will also be a small animal exhibit, featuring a sheep, a goat, a cow, a calf and some ducks. This will be open for viewing Thursday from 3 to 5 p.m., and Friday from 3 to 6 p.m.

Parking will be available in the field across the street from Riverside, on Vibbert Avenue.

The idea for the project came from Sally Jean Leuer, wife of the post commander.

"Originally what I had in mind was a fantasyland for children," she said. "We had a little guesthouse at Fort Polk that was turned into a gingerbread house.

Sergeant Major of the Army Gates visits Fort Benning units

Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

He entered the Army as a high school dropout, but he's come a long way. Now he's the Army's top non-commissioned officer--Sergeant Major of the Army.

Julius Gates made a brief stop at Fort Benning last week to observe training and to speak to various units on post.

During his visit, Gates toured the 75th Ranger Regiment, Infantry Training Center, 10th Mountain Division, Infantry Hall and the 197th Infantry Brigade.

While at the 197th, Gates spoke to a specially selected group of sergeants and staff sergeants about non-commissioned officers leadership roles and problems that confront a soldier.

He placed great emphasis on the amount of money lost in equipment and lives during the last fiscal year. "Safety is the number one priority," he said. "Last year, we lost 250 soldiers in accidents involving both privately owned vehicles and Army equipment."

"That's a whole battalion in the graveyard," Gates said, "not to mention the $34 million in equipment lost with it."

Gates pointed to one soldier after that remark and said, "How many M-1 tanks can that buy sergeant?" The NCO said "Close to 30, sergeant major."

"Case closed," Gates said.

Another prime concern of Gates in the leadership aspect is educating soldiers.

"If a soldier needs education to improve himself and make him more knowledgeable in his job," Gates said, "Then by God let him go!"

The Non-Commissioned Officer Education System needs to be used to the fullest he said, "because the Army is only as good as its leadership."

Gates also commented on the current budget cuts. "Don't worry about the cuts, because you probably won't notice them anyhow."

"Just concern yourselves with training," he said, "and do the best with what you have."

After his speech, he opened the floor to questions.

One soldier asked about future promotions, and Gates said that across the board, not many military occupational specialties would be effected. He did note, however, there would be a slowdown in some branches.

Another question brought up was the difficulty in getting parts for the armored vehicles in the 197th.

That question interested Gates, and he said he would definately look into the problem.

"You can't train or be prepared for combat if your vehicles don't work," he said. "The threat to our nation is real, and we need to be ready.

"We need to maintain the current momementum in training and in every aspect of the Army," Gates said. "If a soldier is not willing to do that, he needs to put on a different uniform, because we don't need him."

Top NCO's wife serves vital role

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

They flew into Lawson Army Airfield together, but when the plane landed, the wife of Army's highest-ranking non-commissioned officer left her husband's side for a mission of her own.

The Sergeant Major of the Army's position is pretty clear, but the wife of the top NCO, Margaret Gates, serves a vital role as well.

Acting as a direct link between family members and the Army, she tours Army posts with her husband to find out what's going on in the family side of the house.

At Fort Benning, Mrs. Gates' itineraty started off with a briefing from Beverly Little, president of the Non-Commissioned Officers Wives' Club.

Scouts give shopper a 'real tree' bargain

By Ron Allen
Bayonet Staff Writer

It's that time of year again. For many, it was the day after Thanksgiving, for others, it won't be until Christmas Eve. For me, it was last Saturday. That's the day my wife nagged me into getting a Christmas tree.

I'd been eyeballing the prices around town so I knew it would probably put a good-size dent in the old wallet. Knowing that she was a born shopper and knew where to get the "best prices" on practically everything, I was, to say the least, sceptical.

Personally, I wanted to grab an axe and head to the woods, but since that's against the law in most places, I gave in and asked, "Okay, where are we going?"

"To the Main Shopping Mall on post," she said." The Boy Scouts sell trees in the parking lot there every year."

"Well, let's get it over with," I said. "I'll warm up the truck, you get the kid."

When we arrived, I could see this was going to be a snap. The Fort Benning Scouts had set up in front of the mall and did they ever have the trees: Balsam Fir, Fraser Fir, Virginia Pine, White Spruce, Scotch Pine, Blue Spruce, long needle, short needle, tall, medium and short -- you name it, they had it -- priced from $5 to $37.

Before my wife could get out of the truck, I grabbed one of the $5 trees, a one-and-a-half footer, and was ready to go. "Oh no you don't," she said. "This year we're going to have a big tree."

What the heck, I thought, at these prices, it's not going to break me. So I went ahead and put the small one in the back of the truck.

My wife roared, "What are you doing? We're going to have a large tree."

"I just thought this small one might be kind of nice for the kid's room," I said.

"Well, how sweet," she cooed.

Not being one who likes to be known as sweet, I took the little tree and put it back. My wife glared at me and headed off to find a tree.

A Scout quickly fell into step with her and asked if he could help. I headed off to see if there was something to do while they looked at trees.

I overheard one Scout say he'd only been working for about an hour and had already sold seven. A very busy Saturday, I thought.

Wondering how many trees the scouts sell each year, I headed off to find the man in charge. It didn't take long to locate him. McAuthur Barnes, the Fort Benning District Commissioner for the Boy Scouts of America, was on the scene ensuring things ran smoothly.

"We ordered 2,040 trees this year," he said. "So far, we've sold about 600."

"Buyers get a great price on a good tree," Barnes explained, "and the Scouts make money to help fund their programs."

Knowing that a 7-foot Frazier Fir goes for about $60 downtown, I could attest to the great prices. The same tree could be bought from the Scouts for $37.

I spotted my wife heading for the truck with two Scouts at her heels, lugging a tree bigger than both of them together. They said to cut a half inch off the bottom before putting it in water. I figured it would be more like a foot for this one.

I paid for the $5-dollar tree, deciding to ignore the comment about being sweet, and headed after my wife. I hope she doesn't ask me to help decorate the big one.

Snively family goes tree shopping

By Clyde Snively
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Have you got your Christmas tree up yet? The Snively family has.

Normally I can hold off until December reaches the mid point. But now that we're back in the land of in-laws, that's changed.

Emma believes in being prepared should any of her family stop by. She can then present our tree as evidence that the Snively family has leaped into the holdiay mood — even at 60 degrees.

Christmas tree hunting is a family tradition. It wasn't always that way. It began the year I proudly brought home my "a tree is a tree" tree. It was immediately panned by the critics.

"Too sparse at the top," Emma announced grandly.

"The trunk is crooked," Bubba added wryly.

"I wanted one with pine cones," Clydette needled me.

"Ralf," Ralf said.

Heaving one of those "Why can't he do anything right," sighs, Emma got out her pruning shears and bailing wire to give mother nature a hand.

She snipped a branch here, wired a branch there, pulled another branch down and twisted another up to fill in a void.

"Next year we go artificial," I announced glumly from my corner of the room.

"No way," Emma retorted.

"We want trees that smell," Bubba said.

"Well, it seems to me that you think this one stinks," I sniffed. "All we need to do is get a bottle of pine scent and some boughs, and you'll never know the difference."

"How tacky," Clydette said.

"Okay," I said, changing tack, "then from now on when it comes time to go look for a tree, the entire family goes. We don't come back until we have a consensus."

Amazingly, all agreed.

The next year was the inaugural year. We all piled into Fritz and headed for the corner lot. Six hours later, we'd hit all the lots at least twice (did you know you can't hide an "if we don't find anything better we'll come back and get this one," tree?).

You can't. Or at least you can't find your hiding place again. Heck, sometimes we couldn't even find the lot again.

I knew then that if I were to survive many more Christmases, I'd have to come up with a new technique.

The following year, we once again piled into Fritz. Only this time I had some special equipment.

"Whatcha got there?" Bubba wanted to know.

"A saw and some rope," I said. "This year we cut our own."

Everyone seemed to think that was a good idea.

Arriving at a tree farm, we disembarked and stepped into two feet of snow. After two hours of plodding through the white stuff, we finally located a tree about two miles from the nearest road.

Ever try dragging a tree through snow?

Back to the drawing board.

Year three. Arrive at tree farm. Get out of car. Force march to far boundary. Then turn around and head back. And only then does the hunt for a tree begin.

The nearer the car, the tireder everyone is and thus more apt to be agreeable to any, "how do you like this tree?" suggestions.

This technique has now worked well in four states. The best part is I never paid more than $10 for a tree. Up until this year. Here we have more pine trees than you throw a pine cone at, but the best deal I could come up with was $3 a foot.

My next project (one I always forget about until I'm putting up the tree) is to get a decent tree stand.

I want one that is large, deep, heavy and durable.

All I've been able to find in the PX are those shallow dishes that barely hold a teaspoon of water. Flimsy aluminum collars are supposed to hold a tree in place.

They might be okay for scrawny trees up to five feet tall, but any larger and you need special bracing to keep them from tipping over.

To be doubly sure I always screw cup hooks into the ceiling, then wire the tip to those.

Naturally Emma has to change the location for the tree each year, just like she does the furniture, so if we stay in any one place more than two Christmases the ceiling is usually full of cup hooks.

I can tell you this, after aligning a tree in those tree stands, I usually need an aspirin or two.

Now if I could only come up with a way to solve the Christmas present buying dilemma.

Writer voices opinion on unsafe driving

I would like very much to voice my opinion on a subject that is very dear to me. The subject is safe driving. I have noticed that a lot of automobiles on Fort Benning just don't bother to use their turn signals. Drivers either wait until they are right on top of the corner, or they don't even bother to use the turn signal at all. This is a very dangerous move and also very foolish. The automobile comes with turn signals, please use them.

Another subject is the stop sign at Edwards Avenue and the intersection of Building 4. The sign says it is a two-way stop, but the traffic coming from Building 4 also stops, and this creates a problem as you are waiting for the other car to go first. This two-way sign should be taken down, and it should remain a stop sign.

My last subject is inspections of privately-owned vehicles on post. I've seen cars on post that have only one headlight working, or there are no lights at all. Some cars are in such a state of repair that you wonder how the person got it started, let alone moving. If the post or the state had an inspection station a lot of these bombs wouldn't be on the road today. I'm not the greatest driver in the world, but at least my automobiles are in a good state of repair. Please take a look at your automobiles and see if the lights work, or the muffler needs to be replaced. As I said, I'm not Mr. Safety or the world's greatest driver, but I at least look out for the other guy and my automobiles.

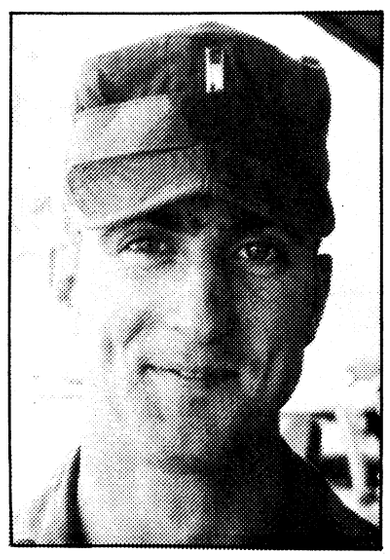
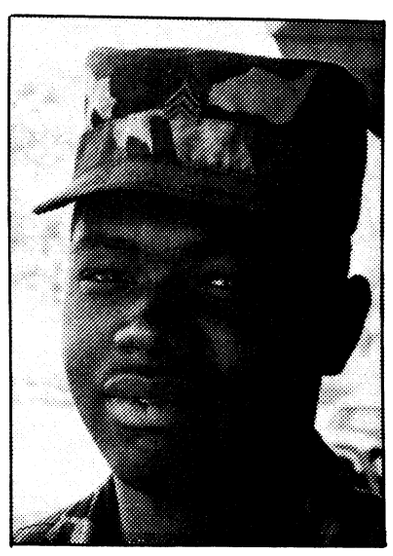
In last week's edition of the Bayonet, the story on the history of the Airborne towers was given the wrong byline. Credit should go to Capt. William Medley, Company D, 1 st Battalion, 507th Parachute Infantry Regiment.

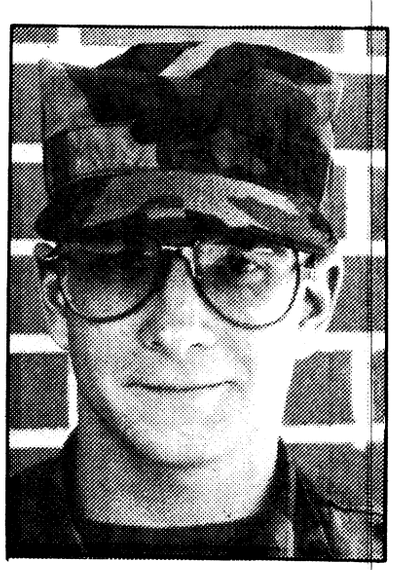


VARIOUS VOICES / Do you think the programs against DUI are effective?

Capt. William Medley, Company D, 1st Battalion, 507th PIR - "No. I think the problem stems from leadership. I believe the chain-of-command needs to get actively involved when a person is abusing alcohol. You can't just send them off to a class and hope the problem will go away. They need to know you care."



Sgt. Stanley Brown, Company B, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, The School Brigade - "I don't think the programs are effective because, for many soldiers, drinking is a tension reliever; so they are going to continue to do it. They drive after drinking because most feel the penalties aren't harsh enough to warrant not taking the risk."



1st Lt. Joseph Grams, Company C, 2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, The School Brigade - "No. I think that maybe one of the reasons it's not effective is the punishments aren't stiff enough. I think if you took some money or time away from the soldiers, they would tend to take heed."

SP4 Devin Washington, Bravo Battery, 2nd Battalion, 10th Field Artillery, 197th Infantry Brigade - "No. I don't think the issue is pressed hard enough. When I was in Germany, you had to go see the general or the brigade commander if you got caught driving under the influence."

Sgt. Willie Cross, Company D, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment - "I don't think they are cracking down hard enough. I think maybe the MPs need to set up more roadblocks and make themselves more visible."

SP4 Gary Holloway, Company A, 2nd Battalion, 14th Infantry, 10th Mountain Division - "I don't think they enforce the programs that are available as much as they should. Another problem is that people drink and drive because they think it's going to happen to the other person."

Troy State holds ceremony for Fort Benning graduates

USAIC Public Affairs Office

More than 140 soldiers, retirees, civilian employees and family members graduated from Troy State University's Fort Benning branch Friday night in a ceremony in Marshall Auditorium.

Col. Conrad Boterwig, guest speaker, praised the graduates for striving to improve their professionalism through education.

Given the Army's diminishing resources and increasingly high tech equipment and weaponry, today's soldiers must be literate, he said.

"You have done it the hard way, one course at a time," Boterwig said.

Those graduating and the degrees they earned are as follows:

Associate degrees

Army education program director optomistic about today's soldier

By Becky Obert
USAIC Public Affairs Office

The director of the Army's continuing education system had good things to say about the quality of today's enlistees.

Col. Bruce Battey was at Fort Benning to attend the Troy State University fall graduation ceremony.

"The young person joining the Army today is completely different from the one who joined years ago, in that education is important," he said.

He said that 15 years ago, people felt they didn't need an education, that they could come into the military and find a career where education wasn't needed.

"Today we're getting people who realize that to be fully successful, you've got to be educated," Battey said.

He said that in the last four months, 90 percent of new enlistees bought into the GI bill. "That $100 per month is about 20 percent of their pay, especially for a young person just starting out who wants a new car. But they're doing it," he said.

These same soldiers are also taking advantage of the Army's continuing education programs. Battey said that last year, the Army spent $36 million in tuition assistance for soldiers in post secondary education. "That bought approximately 215,000 enrollments at the college level," he said.

At Fort Benning, $420,000 was spent last year, amounting to 2,700 soldiers.

"Armywide, about 22 percent of soldiers are involved in post secondary education all the time," he said.

Soldiers now believe that's how they're going to achieve success in life, Battey said.

In the last couple of years, the Army has developed an organizational ethic encouraging a soldier's growth in education. "We are surrounded by a growing and changing technology on modern equipment. The ability of a soldier to understand that kind of technology comes for being able to analyze and solve problems," he said.

Only by continuing to support and encourage education can the Army expect to win in the long run, Battey said.

While he has no definite information on the effects of budget cuts on education programs, Battey said that he believes the Army believes in the value of education and will not allow the program to fall by the wayside.

Tuition assistance is available to all soldiers, based on the soldier's grade and years of service. Soldiers who are sergeants and above with less than 14 years service receive 90 percent, while all other soldiers, officer and enlisted, are paid 75 percent.

Battey said he encourages every soldier to take advantage of educational benefits offered. "It's available, so why not use it," he said.

AUSA breakfast held for soldiers

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

The Association of the U.S. Army hosted a breakfast Tuesday for more than 1,000 soldiers at the Harmony Church Field House.

Featured were guest speaker Lt. Gen. Johnny J. Johnston, commanding general, 2nd U.S. Army and Kelly Jerles, Miss Georgia.

Jirles, an accomplished singer, sang a heart warming "O' Holy Night" to get the crowd into the Christmas spirit.

This is the beauty queen's second appearance at Fort Benning in recent months, according to Jim Gallagher, AUSA president.

There are plans to have the breakfast quarterly. The purpose is to familiarize soldiers postwide with the mission of AUSA and to present awards to deserving soldiers.

Air Assault reps gather at Benning to rework programs

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

Commandants and primary instructors from Air Assault schools Army-wide gathered together last week to rework the programs of instruction.

Seven schools teach the course. Representatives from six of them, Fort Hood, Texas; Fort Belvoir, Va.; Fort Campbell, Ky.; Fort Richardson, Alaska; Fort Rucker, Ala. and Scofield Barracks, Hawaii were able to attend the conference. There was also a representative from the transportation department to make sure all the schools were on line in the latest innovations in that area.

According to Capt. David Santa Ana of Directorate of Training and Development, they read through the POI, discussed ways the course could be streamlined and game planned which equipment should be added or deleted.

"We went over all tasks, conditions and standards and looked into ways where the schools could gain more flexibility in training." he said.

"One reason this needs to be done is the different requirements the various commands have," he said.

Santa Ana added that the course will essentially remain the same.

The house was a project of one of the wives clubs there, and volunteers really pitched in to make it successful, Mrs. Leuer said.

"Coming here, my vision got a little grander, because this is a bigger installation.

She said funds were not available to create the fantasyland that she had envisioned, so the project had to be scaled down. The project is being paid for with Community Activities funds.

Ed Hensley, project coordinator from the Directorate of Personnel and Community Activities, said that the work on the project has been a combination of staff and volunteer efforts. "We found out that some people were good at woodwork, and they made the toy soldiers for us," he said. "Members of the 36th Engineer Group built the pavillion as a carpentry project. It's been a community project."

Mrs. Leuer said that Linda Rogers, an Army wife, built the sleigh that sits outside the front door of Riverside and also decorated the interior of the home.

Mrs. Leuer will be on hand throughout the week to greet the children who visit.

"It's a way to give joy to children at Christmas. I want it to be something special, something fascinating for them," Mrs. Leuer said.

CG presents awards to safety conscious offices

This year's Commmanding General's Annual Award for Safety went to the 2nd Brigade, 10th Mountain Division. Maj. Gen. Kenneth C. Leuer presented the award to Col. Michael Plummer, commander of the 2nd Brigade, 10th Mountain, at the Nov. 30 Commanding General's staff meeting.

In addition, seven staff agencies were recognized for having no recordable injuries for the entire year. The agencies were: Equal Opportunity Office, Public Affaires Office, Staff Judge Advocate, Inspector General, Internal Review, the Directorate of Reserve Component Support and the Chaplains Office.

The Directorate of Engineering and Housing and the Directorate of Logistics, the two largest on post, received an award for both achieving a 17 percent reduction in injuries.

IOBC students tackle Bayonet Assault Course

A soldier low crawls under concertina wire on the obstacle course.

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

Recently troops from Company D, 2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, Infantry Officers Basic Course tackled the Bayonet Assault Course to earn the bayonet qualification badge.

Consisting of 20 obstacles, eight of which the bayonet is actually used, the course tests the soldiers' abilities to defend themselves with their weapons and also tests their endurance.

Soldiers are given 10 minutes to complete the course, which has a maximum score of 200 points.

According to Capt. Jeffrey Coleman, a training officer with the course, the students are graded on how they attack the target and whether they selected the proper movement and execution."For instance, did they stab in a vulnerable spot, such the kidney, heart or groin," Coleman said, "and then, did they follow through with a lunge or a butt with their weapons to knock their opponents' weapons away," he added.

At the sound of the whistle, students hurl themselves over a wall, then hurdle over wooden obstacles.

As they double time through the course attacking rubber-dummy enemies, smoke and grenade simulators are triggered in different areas.

By the time soldiers have completed the course, they have jumped in pits, leaped concertina wire-filled ditches and crawled under concertina wire obstacles.

The spouses of the students are also brought out to the course to view first-hand the training their husbands recieve.

This is all part of the new concept that if spouses are more knowledgeable of the overall mission, they make a complete leadership team.

That's the goal of IOBC.

Ranger department becomes brigade

By Becky Obert
Bayonet staff writer

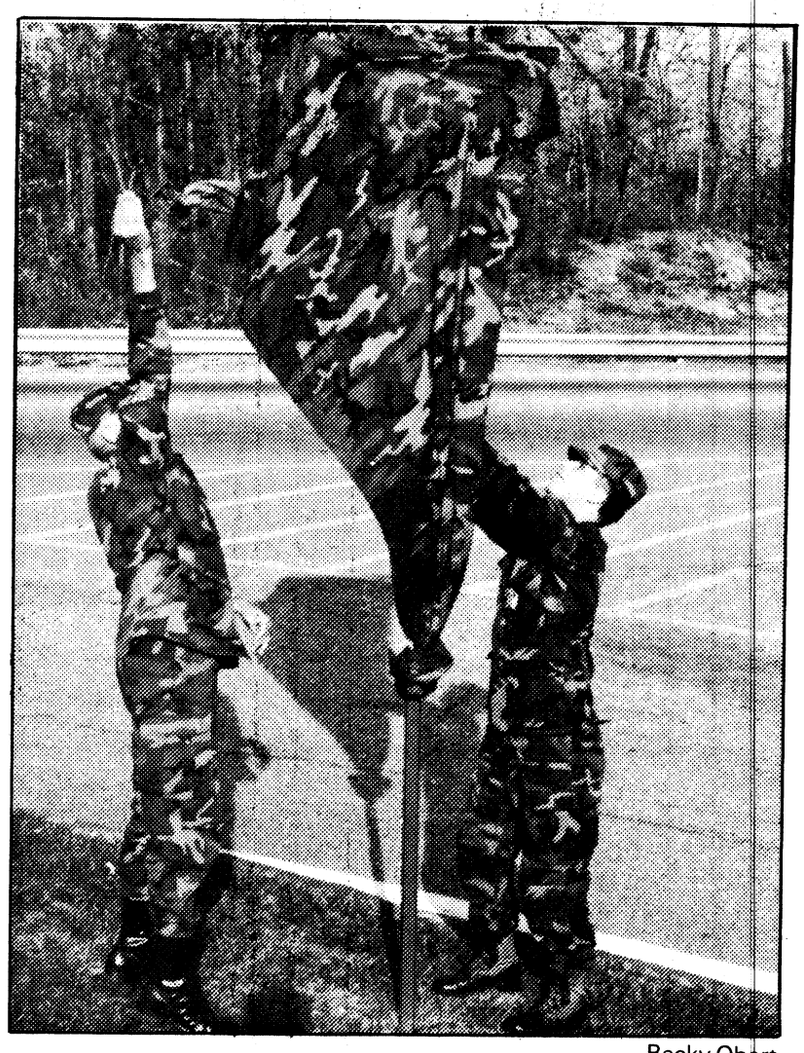
Benning's Ranger Department was redesignated the Ranger Training Brigade in a ceremony last Friday afternoon.

Maj. Gen. Kenneth C. Leuer, post commander, was the reviewing officer and passed the brigade's new colors to Col. James Mace, commander of the new brigade.

The 1st, 2nd and 3rd Ranger companies were deactivated, and the 4th, 5th and 6th battalions, and Task Force Desert were officially activated with the retiring of the old colors, and the unfurling of the new.

The activation adds one brigade, three battalion and 11 company command slots.

According to Mace, the need for a more definable chain of command led to the reorganization. The brigade now has 649 cadre, as compared to 394 in 1984. The Ranger School continues to graduate more and more students, going from 2,000 students in 1984 to a projected 3,600 in 1988. Two new courses have also been added; the Long Range Surveillance and Light Leaders courses.



This increased mission brought out the need for clearer command channels. Under the new organization, Ranger students will maintain company cohesion throughout the course, only changing commanders and cadre as they move from camp to camp.

The new brigade headquarters will be much like any other brigade, except that a deputy commander will be in command of the Desert Task Force when troops move to Dugway, Utah.

The 4th Ranger Battalion will be located at Fort Benning and will consist of a headquarters and headquarters company and three Ranger companies, plus the Long Range Surveillance Company and the Light Leaders Company.

In addition, the 5th Battalion at Camp Merrill in Dahlonega, Ga., and the 6th Battalion at Camp Rudder at Eglin Air Force Base, Fla., will each have a headquarters company and three Ranger companies.

The 75th Ranger Regiment was not affected by the redesignation since it is a separate FORSCOM unit, with a wartime rather than training mission.

Engineers gear recent training to new soldiers

By Thomas Smythe
586th Engineer Co

The 586th Engineer Company (Assault Foat Bridge) recently conducted a six-day field training exercise on the Alabama side of the Chattahoochee River.

The training was geared toward supporting and improving the company's mission-essential task list, with emphasis on training new soldiers and the newly promoted NCOs.

The exercise began with the company conducting long, tactical convoys around post, finally arriving at the bivouac area to begin defensive operations. The first two days centered around establishing defensive positions and combat engineering skills.

Soldiers refreshed their skills in such areas as constructing crew-served fighting positions, establishing and maintaining tactical communications and conducting various types of reconnaisance.

The next three days of the exercise saw the unit perform its primary wartime mission of assault river crossing using rafts and bridges constructed from Ribbon Bridge Bays and MK-1 jet boats.

The two line platoons were given missions to construct rafts to ferry vehicle loads across the Chattahoochee since the primary route, Eddy Bridge, was destroyed during day one of the scenario. In addition, first platoon completed a full closure of more than 400 feet at Bradley Landing.

For many of the new soldiers, it was the first chance they had to complete such a mission. All traffic from the unit used the rafts and bridge to perform all required missions on the Georgia side, including ration pick up. The exercise would not have been a success without the outstanding support from both the headquarters and maintenance personnel. Both elements responded quickly and efficiently to the needs and problems the platoons experienced.

The exercise ended on day six with the company breaking down and moving into a refuel point established at the south east end of LAAF by the 43rd Engineer Battalion with their HEMMT Tankers.

Road renamed for 10th Mtn. Div.

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Tenth Division Road was recently renamed 10th Mountain Division Road.

According to Col. Michael T. Plummer, commander of the 2nd Brigade, 10th Mountain Division, the change was made because Fort Benning has designated combat fighting divisions as its prime means of road identification.

"The 10th Division served as a training division and also participated in the first gyroscope to Europe in 1953. It was deactivated at Fort Benning in 1956," he said.

The 2nd Brigade, 10th Mountain Division, was reactivated at Fort Benning in February 1985, and will join the rest of the division in Fort Drum, N.Y., in November 1988.

Plummer and some his staff attended the ceremony last week, so that the name change would not go unnoticed.

The 10th Mountain Division fought in World War II in the Italian Campaign, where the soldiers used their mountain climbing skills to take Mount Belvedere enroute to joining the allies in conquering Italy. In 1945, the unit was deactivated at Camp Carson, Colo. It was later reactivated as a training division.

"It is fitting that the 10th Mountain Division carries on the lineage of the unit," he said.

Engineers build pavillion during suprise deployment

Soldiers from Co. C, 43rd Eng. Bn. spread roofing material atop the pavillion the company built during a recent deployment to Florida.

By Ronald N. Light

The mission was real; the timetable for execution, critical.

Coming off a three-day weekend, soldiers of Company C, 43rd Engineer Battalion, received word at 4 a.m. of a surprise emergency deployment readiness exercise.

The deployment order: deploy within 53 hours by C-130 aircraft and motor convoy to Camp Rudder, Fla., and construct an outdoor briefing pavillion for the U.S. Army Ranger School.

With little more than a location on a highway map and a construction blueprint, the 43rd Engineer soldiers put their ERDE plans into action.

The project required four platoon days, or approximately 960 man hours, to complete. From the time they arrived, organization was critical.

"It was clear to me that we had to organize for a smooth operation from the start if we were to finish on time," said SFC Carmelo Diaz, 1st platoon sergeant.

Crews were designated to cut lumber, prefabricate rafters, nail and place plywood, roofing felt, and rolled shingle material to the finished roof.

Since the scenario called the mission "construction in the rear battle area," the soldiers were required to have steel pots, protective masks and weapons at the ready. They were kept neatly stacked and within easy reach throughout the mission.

The pavillion replaced an old structure that had been abandoned years ago because it was unsafe. The new pavillion will be used by the Rangers as an instruction platform.

Once the job was completed, the Ranger School cadre inspected it and declared it sound and satisfactory.

"The ERDE was as true to our wartime scenario as you could get, immediate deployment with a real mission when we hit the ground," said 1st Lt. Dominic Macaluso, executive officer of Co. C.

80 Salvadorans graduate course

By Marco Morales
USARSA Public Affairs Office

Eighty Salvadoran cadets graduated Dec. 4 from the El Salvador Cadet Course at the U.S. Army School of the Americas.

Fifty-two of these cadets received specialized training for the first time in this 24-week course also graduating from the rigorous eight-week Commando course at USARSAA. The Commando course was integrated into the ESCC to enhance the cadets' overall individual leadership capabilities, according to Capt. Wilfredo Ortiz, ESCC company commander.

The Commando course is the equivalent of the Ranger course offered at Fort Benning except for the Utah desert phase. "Since the Salvadorans don't have desert terrain, we concentrate training them in other leadership skills they will need in El Salvador," Ortiz said.

Guest speaker for the graduation ceremony was Col. Oscar E. Casanova-Vejar, director of the "Capitan General Gerardo Barrios" Military Academy in El Salvador. During his address at the ceremony, Casanova told the cadets to continue refining their military professionalism and to uphold their country's patriotism.

The ESCC trains cadets for duty as infantry platoon leaders. The course focuses on basic military skills, battle drills, and patrolling operations. The cadets also qualify with the M-16 rifle and get familiarization training using the M-203 grenade launcher, M-60 machine gun, the M-72A2 light anti-tank weapon, claymore mines and the 81mm mortar.

Renovation provides valuable experience

By Shawn Bryson
36th Engineer Group correspondent

Work continues on building 1697 here as the soldiers from Company A, 43rd Engineer Battalion, 36th Engineer Group, strive toward their Jan. 15 deadline.

According to 1st Lt. David Powell, platoon leader for the 2nd platoon engineers, the renovations of the building have given his soldiers invaluable experience.

When completed, the once-aged building will be used by the personnel of the Department of Resource Management as a conference area, Powell said.

"Aside from a few minor changes in the work scope, the project is running very smoothly," Powell said.

Twenty-two soldiers make up two carpentry teams, one plumbing team and one electrical team.

The lietuenant explained that the addition of four new soldiers to the platoon has helped keep the platoon ahead of schedule. The soldiers are well over the 60 percent point of the project, which began in late September, according to Powell.

Members of the 43rd Eng. Bn. continue renovation efforts on building 1697. They are striving to meet a Jan. 15 deadline.

Ask the Judge

Q: I am thinking about buying a used car, but I am worried about future repairs. What things do I need to think about before I go to the dealer?

A: More than half of the used cars sold are "as is." This means that if you have any problems with the care after you buy it, you must pay for any repairs yourself. The dealer has no further responsibility once the contract is signed and you drive off the lot. Used cars bought from private individuals are virtually always sold "as is."

The used car may come with a written warranty. If so, be sure to read it carefully to see what is covered. Any promises that the dealer makes must be written in that warranty. Be sure to find out if the warranty covers both parts and labor. Do not assume that everything will be warranted. Some warranties will only cover certain parts of the car.

Another option is the service contract. Like a warranty, a service contract will cover certain repairs or maintenance for a limited time. Unlike a warranty, however, you must pay extra money to the dealer to get a service contract. It is very important to check the terms of the service contract before you purchase it, not only for the things listed above, but also to find out where the contract will be honored and the amount of the deductable.

The best defense against costly repairs is to do a complete inspection of the vehicle before buying it. Ask the dealer if he will permit you to take the car to an independent mechanic for an inspection. If he will not, you may want to consider going to another dealer. Even if the mechanic charges you a small fee to inspect the vehicle, it may be in your best interest to pay a little now rather than to suffer a very large bill later. It should be remembered that the state of Georgia does not have any "lemon laws" to protect the buyers of new or used cars. Although there are some protections offered by the law, the state of Georgia basically says that the "buyer should beware."

Soldiers honor patron saint

By George Mingee
197th Infantry Brigade correspondent

Soldiers from the 2nd Battalion, 10th Field Artillery, 197th Infantray Brigade recently gathered to remember Saint Barbara, the patron saint of Field Artillery.

Over 150 officers and noncommissioned officers from within the brigade and around Fort Benning attended the dress blue uniform affair.

Also in attendance was a host of special guests, which included Maj. Gen. Thomas D. Resse, commander of the U.S. Army Missile Command, Redstone Arsenal, Ala., and guest speaker, Col. William W. Hartzog, Fort Benning deputy commanding general; Col. Harvey D. Watson, 197th Brigade commander; Lt. Col. Bobby Dowless, commander of 1st Battalion, 113th Field Artillery, North Carolina National Guard and CSM William D. Bell of the 197th.

The evening began with a thunderous boom as two Howitzer cannons, parked outside the Officers' Club, fired rounds into the air.

Next came a number of traditional toasts, a roast prime rib of beef dinner, remarks by the guest speaker and a special award ceremony for this year's Saint Barbara awardees.

One of the highlights of the occasion was the age old tradition of the mixing of the "artillerymen's punch." Each company commander with his first sergeant played an important part in adding the secret ingredients to the punch, which was enjoyed by everyone.

George Mingee

1st Sgt. Kenneth A. Huotara, Btry. A, 2nd Bn., 10th FA, adds a special ingredient to the "Artillerymen's Punch" during the St. Barbara's Day celebration.

St. Barbara, patroness of artilleryment, protects against accidental explosions

197th Infantry Brigade

Saint Barbara was the daughter of a wealthy nobleman named Dioscorus, who lived near Nicomedia in Asia Minor. Because of her singular beauty and fearful that she be demanded in marriage and taken away from him, Dioscorus jealously shut her up in a tower to protect her from the outside world.

Shortly before embarking on a journey, he commissioned a sumptuous bathhouse to be built for her, approving the design before he departed. Barbara had heard of the teachings of Christ, and while her father was gone she spent much time in contemplation.

From the windows of her tower, she looked out upon the surrounding country-side and marveled at the the trees, the animals and the people. She decided that all these things must be part of a master plan, and that the idols of wood and stone worshipped by her parents must be condemned as false. Gradually, she came to accept the Christian faith.

As her belief became firm, she directed that the builders re-design the bathhouse her father had planned, adding another window, so that the three windows might symbolize the Holy Trinity.

When her father returned, he was enraged at the changes and infuriated when Barbara acknowledged that she was a Christian. He dragged her before the perfect of the province, who decreed that she be tortured and put to death by beheading. Dioscorus himself carried out the death sentence. On his way home, he was struck by lightning and his body consumed.

Saint Barbara lived and died about the year 300 A.D. She was venerated as early as the 7th Century. The legend of the lightning bolt which struck down her persecutor caused her to be regarded as the patron saint in time of danger from thunderstorms, fires and sudden death.

When gunpowder made its appearance in the Western world, Saint Barbara was invoked for aid against accidents resulting from explosions, and since some of the earlier artillery pieces often blew up instead of firing their projectile, Saint Barbara became the patroness of artillerymen.

Saint Barbara is usually represented standing by a tower with three windows, carrying the palm of martyr in her hand. Often, she also holds a chalice and a sacramental wafer and sometimes cannons are displayed near her. On present calendars, the feast of Saint Barbara falls on Dec. 4.

Agency seeks experienced aviators

MILPERCEN Public Affairs Office

The U.S. Total Army Personnel Agency is seeking experienced Army aviators to become qualified engineering test pilots, TAPA officials announced.

The Army trains nine avaiators per year at the Naval Test Pilot School in Patuxent River, Md. This program is the sole source for satisfying Army requirements for engineering research and development test pilots.

Two classes are conducted each year, beginning in January and July. Only active Army aviators holding the rank of major or below may apply for the program. An applicant must:

Have a pilot status code 1.

Have completed college algebrae, calculus and physics with above-average grades. Completion of differential equations, though not required, is highly desirable.

Be dual-rated with a minimum of 1,000 hours of military flying time. (Not meeting all of the flying requirements from attendance should not prevent otherwise qualified candidates from applying.

Be able to pass the Navy swim qualification test.

TAPA must receive applications by Jan. 15. An Officer Personnel Management Directorate selection board will convene in March to evaluate those applications.

The board will choose candidates for the program on a best-qualified basis. Those selected will incur four-year active service obligations, whether they complete the course or not.

Qualified aviators should submit applications to TAPA in accordance with DA Circular 351-87-1. Send them through normal channels to DAPC-OPE-V for commissioned officers, or to DAPC-OPW-AV for warrant officers.

For more details on the Army Aviation Engineering Test Pilot Training Program, contact Maj. Robert D. Carter at the U.S. Total Army Personnel Agency: autovan 221-8156, commercial 202-325-8156.

'Pneumovax' vaccine fights pneumonia

By Dr. Stuart F. Williams
Family Practice Clinic

"Pneumovax" is a vaccination given to individuals to protect them from certain types of bacteria which cause pneumonia. "Pneumonia" is an infection of the lungs.

Pneumonia is one of the leading causes of death in the elderly and in people who have poorly-functioning immune systems. A vaccination now exists which can protect these individuals from a certain type of bacteria which is responsible for the majority of the serious cases of pheumonia. The bacteria is call "pneumococcus", and this is where the name "pheumovax" came from. Pneumonia caused by the pheumococcus will result in death in 20-30% of persons who are not treated promptly with antibiotic medicine. Some types of pneumococcus are becoming resistant to penicillin which is the drug most commonly used to treat this infection. It is becoming more and more important to prevent this infect ionrather than wait until someone has the infection and use an antibiotic medicine such as penicillin.

The pneumovax vaccination can protect an individual from 90% of the types of pheumococcus which cause pneumonia. The pneumovax is recommended in any person over age 50 because pneumonia is more sever after this age. It is also given to patients with serious heart and lung diseases as well as patients with a poorly-functioning immune system.

The pneumovax is given as a small shot and is given only once. A person can have a serious reaction if he is given the pneumovax again. A patient can get his "flu shot and the "pneumovax" at the same time.

The pneumovax rarely results in a fever. It occasionally can cause some swelling and warmth where the vaccination was given. This is a small price to pay to protect yourself from a serious case of pneumonia.

So, if you are over 50 or have a serious medical condition, make an appointment with your doctor, and see if you qualify for a "pneumovax".

Regulations prohibit some gifts, donations

Army News Service

From time to time, prospective givers and receivers of gifts in their capacity as federal personnel need to refresh their memory on the "prohibitions concerning gifts and donations," as published in AR 600-50.

That's according to Maj. Scott Black of the Army's judge advocate general's office at the Pentagon. He works on cases in administrative law — including incidents of improper giving.

As currently worded, the regulation's key provision on the matter states: "DA personnel will not solicit a contribution from other DOD personnel for a gift to an official superior, or accept a gift or donation from DOD subordinate personnel."

What's more, Black further quoted from the regulation, "his prohibition also applies to solicitations on behalf of the immediate family members of the official superior."

On the other hand, he explained, the policy does allow for truly voluntary gifts or contributions of minimal value (or acceptance thereof). "usually, you see such gift-giving upon special occasions like marriage, transfer, illness and retirement. These are okay, assuming no gift acquired with such contributions exceeds a nominal value."

The regulation defines nominal value items as those of a sentimental nature, with little or no intrinsic value to someone other than the recipient."

In the regulation's draft revision, which is expected to be published in early 1988, a number of proposed changes address the policy on gift-giving. The most important change will specify a dollar-value limit on such gifts. The change will limit the retail value (i.e., commercial replacement value) of such gifts to not more than $180.

MARSHAL'S VIEWPOINT

By Wendell D. Choate
Military Police

Crimes on Fort Benning can be prevented if suspicious activity is reported to the Military Police. The question is what is suspicious activity? This question could be answered a number of ways. Some of the most common answers are listed below:

—Any vehicle moving slowly and without lights or following course that appears aimless or repetitive is suspicious, in any location, but particularly so in areas of schools, parks, or playgrounds. Occupants may be "casing" for places to rob or burglarize or could possibly be a drug pusher or sex offender.

—Parked, occupied vehicles containing one or more persons are especially significant if observed at an unusual hour. They could be possible look-outs for a burglary in progress even if the occupants appear to be lovers.

—Vehicles being loaded with valuables or if parked in front of a closed business or unattended residence — even if the vehicle is a legitimate looking commercial unit. More and more professional thieves are taking time and trouble to customize their vehicles with special signs in order to move more freely without suspicion.

—Apparent business transactions conducted from a vehicle, especially around schools or parks. If juveniles ae involved, this could mean possible drug sales.

—Person being forced into vehicles — especially if juveniles or females — may mean a possible kidnapping.

—The abandoned vehicle parked on your block may be a stolen car.

—Continuous "repair" operations at a non-business location could mean stolen property is being stripped, repainted and otherwise altered.

—Open or broken doors or windows at a closed business or residence whose owners are absent could mean burglary in progress or already completed.

—Unusual noises such as gunshots, screaming, sound of combat, abnormally barking dogs, anything suggestive of foul play, danger or illegal activity should be reported.

While some, if not all of the suspicious situations described could have innocent explanations, the Military Ploice would rather investigate a crime-prone situation than to be called when it's too late. Your call could save a life, prevent an injury or stop a criminal act. If you witness a crime in progress, call the Military Police Hotline Number 545-2222.

Post gears up for photo contest

Arts and Crafts Center

The Army Photo contest is coming and it will be two years before the next one so don't miss out on this one. The Arts and Crafts Center is gearing up for it by having the Fort Benning Photo Contest in January.

The last winner won after having printed his own pictures for the first time.

We have necessary photo supplies so you can learn to develop and print your own pictures in our photo labs, color and black and white film.

The Arts and Crafts Facilities are available to the military and his family five days a week and available at other than normal operating hours on request. The activities included are open shop, self-help maintenance, individual instruction, regularly scheduled classes, community involvement and cultural enrichment.

The National Gallry of Art in Washington opened its facilities for exhibition of soldier art and photography which was submitted in the first National Army Army contest in 1945. Let's get together and fill up the photo exhibition for 1988 with photo winners from Fort Benning.

Money problems? Everyone has money problems. Too many bills, unexpected expenses, dream vacations, or just plain lack of.

To help educate soldiers on how to manage their money, the Army Community Service, Consumer Affairs and Financial Assistance Program offer special programs. Counseling and assistance are available on the subjects of consumer education, personal finance and family budget matters.

Budget classes include sure-pay training, check writing, budgeting, and credit and debt liquidation. Information is also provided on Army Emergency Relief, Food Stamps and Women, Infant and Children Programs. The classes are available for unit briefings.

Budget classes or counseling appointments may be scheduled by calling 545-5516/4357 or 544-3917.

The Consumer Affairs and Financial Assistance Program serves the soldier, family members, retirees and widows.

Abandoned animals: The pet impoundment/adoption facility is located behind the post veterinary clinic. Unidentifiable stray pets are held only three days before disposition. Personnel interested in viewing animals need to check with the veterinary clinic personnel. Every year 500-600 pets are impounded. Many of these pets make excellent companions and family members.

Rabies vaccination recall: Dogs and cats that received their most recent rabies shots from the post veterinary clinic during Oct. 1, 1984 through Aug. 13, 1986 and June 8, 1987 through Sept. 1, 1987 must be revaccinated (at no cost) as soon as possible. Bring your pet, rabies certificate and records if we don't already have them to the post veterinary clinic during normal clinic hours for confirmation and revaccination. No appointment is needed for revaccination. No other services will be provided. Monday, 8-11 a.m. and 1-2:30 p.m., and Friday 8-11 a.m. Saturday clinics will be announced. For more information call 545-1127.

Influenza vaccines: Shots are available for the flu season. All active duty personnel, health care providers, children, adults with chronic heart disease, moderate to severe asthma, bronchopulmonary dysplasia, chronic bronchitis, chronic renal disease or diabetes are at increased risk for catching the flu, and are encouraged to get vaccinated.

Active duty troops must get their shots at the troop medical clinics, while family practice patients can get theirs at the Family Practice Clinic. Retirees and their dependents can be vaccinated at the Immunization Clinic on the 9th floor of the hospital. The clinic's hours are 7:30-11:30 a.m. and 1-3:30 p.m., Monday through Friday.

Patients under age 19 must have a prescription for immunizations. Patients must bring their medical records to the clinic or they will not be immunized.

Children ages 6 months to 12 years will require two separate injections at monthly intervals. It is also suggested that patients over 65 years old receive a second injection four to six weeks after their initial immunizations.

School needs support: The Don C. Faith Middle School PTO needs the support of parents to help raise funds to support school activities, and joining the PTO is the first step. Membership dues are $2 per person. For more information, call Lynn Barlotta at 689-2096.

The Self Help Issue Point has relocated: It is now housed in the U-Do-It Center, building 385, located at Vibbert Avenue and Delta Street. Operating hours of the center at 9:30 a.m. to 5:45 p.m. Monday through Friday, and 9 a.m. to 2 p.m. on Saturday. All military units will continue to pick up supplies for projects at Bldg. 466 until further notice.

For more information, call 545-1121.

The USARSA C&GSC is the equivalent of the course offered at Fort Leavenworth, Kansas, and Maxwell AFB, Ala. The course prepares field grade officers of all services for duty as commanders and general staff officers in their respective armed forces.

Academically oriented to university and post-graduate level of instruction, some of the subject aeas iclude staff operations, management, tactics, logistics, strategic studies and internal defense.

The course also includes an orientation tour of thc U.S. where students visit major military installations along the eastern seaboard, service schools and Washington, D.C.

The next C&GSC course at USARSA is scheduled to begin late next month.

School's guidon changes hands

By Marco Morales
USARSA Public Affairs Office

The U.S. Army School of the Americas has a new school battalion commander.

Incoming commander, Maj. Douglas A. Gilbert accepted the battalion's guidon as USARSA Commandant Col. Miguel A. Garcia, officially passed it to him from departing commander, Maj. Julio R. Rivera during the change of command ceremony at Marshall Auditorium Nov. 30.

Gilbert's most recent assignment was with USARSA as chief, Evaluation Standard and Safety Division under the School Secretary. Some of Gilbert's past assignments include duty as assistant executive officer, Co. C, 2/504th Infantry (Airborne), detachment executive officer, 3/7th Special Forces Group in Panama, company commander, 1/41st Infantry (Mechanized), 2nd Armored Division, Fort Hood, Texas. Gilbert also served one-and-a-half years as an instructor in the internal defense and development division, Department of Command and Staff, USARSA.

Rivera is on assignment orders as a logisticl officer in the U.S. Army South in Panama.

His past assignments include duty as chief of the administrative/logistics division, Department of Command and Staff, and as director of support, USARSA. He has served as security plans and operations officer for the 24th Infantry Division (Mechanized) and as headquarters company commander for that division's material management center.

Rivera served as battalion commander for USARSA since may 1986.

SPIRITUAL

Seasonal generosity should not be accepted as reality

By Terry A. Dempsey
USAIC Chaplains Office

The Christmas season seems to be a time of magical transformations. Even the "Bah Humbug" of the Scrooges who dwell among us becomes a spirit of generosity right in front of our amazed eyes.

It is confusing to receive a card, gift or compliment from the person who spends eleven months of the year seeking to make us miserable, then see him suddenly turn into one of Santa's helpers in December.

The source of our confusion is not difficult to pinpoint. If generosity is real, it is characteristic of a person and not just evident in isolated or seasonal events. Seasonal generosity smacks of the artificial, plastic aspects of our modern society. Even though it is expected this time of year, it simply isn't real.

It is a dangerous sign that some of us are comfortable with seasonal generosity. When the artificial becomes real for us, all perspective is lost. A humorous item from the column of Gerald Klose in the Milwaukee Journal illustrates this point. "Dear Sir: Where can I buy aluminum, Christmas-tree needles to spread on the carpet under my aluminum Christmas tree? I want it to look natural, as if they'd fallen off the tree in the old-fashioned way. Sentimental." "Dear Sentimental: They aren't available right now, but a satisfactory substitute is to buy a few boughs of natural evergreen, allow the needles to dry and fall off and then spray with aluminum paint. They look like the real thing."

If we allow ourselves to be deceived by the artificial, we will deprive ourselves of the reality of the season's blessings. Not only the gift, but the heart of the giver must be included in our focus. The blessings of giving are tied to the attitude of our hearts and not just to the gift. This is why seemingly insignificant gifts often mean so much more than expensive ones. The heart of the Giver is why the birth of a mere baby in humble surroundings changed history and has had a positive effect on so many lives.

In order to avoid developing a spirit of artificial generosity, we need to adopt a spirit of unconscious generosity. This spirit results in a heart that overflows cheerfully to brighten the lives of others without having to think about it. The cheerful, generous heart gives all year — a smile, compliments, gifts and so on. Planned giving will occur at church and with various charities; spontaneous giving will occur when the opportunity arises.

Artificial or seasonal generosity is overcome by the heart that has been blessed by the Great Giver that views humankind as a family, this life as a pilgrimage, and blessings as a means to bless others.

Robert E. Speer once said, "We cannot serve God and mammon (money); but we can serve God with mammon." The saying is true that those who inherit wealth, and we may add receive blessings, are paid in advance for the service they are expected to render to mankind.

My prayer fo you this Christmas is that you will give of yourself generously, that you will receive graciously so others may be blessed by giving, and that your heart will be touched by the Great Giver and His greatest gift — a babe born long ago.

Youths volunteer for holiday projects

Catholic Youth Organization

A season filled to the brim with activities geared to community service belongs to the children of the Catholic Youth Organization. The holiday schedule for grades 7, 8 and 9 is especially full and the children have matching enthusiasm.

Donating and wrapping Christmas gifts for the needy and for the children of the Exceptional Family Member Program, planting flowers around the church, and sponsoring a Christmas party of the EFMP are tasks that many of us would hesitate to undertake, but these CYO students have enthusiastically taken them all on head first and more.

They gathered at the house of mercy before Thanksgiving with scrub buckets and brooms in hand. They scrubbed and cleaned everything in preparation for the holiday meal.

Perhaps most noteworthy was a gathering at the Mayor's office in November. The students brought wrapped gifts and cheer to that small conference room, which was filled with local news media. Ernesto Ramirez, 13, gave a speech explaining the group's concern for the community and wish to participate in the Mayor's Christmas Motorcade.

When the group realized that infants and children from Martin Army Hospital are sometimes transferred to the Medical Center for speicialized care, they decided to collect donations for the "Tree of Light." The students also have volunteered to help visiting children from other countries to improve their English-language skills.

These children are not alone in their efforts. They are sponsored by several dedicated members of the Catholic community. Marty and Donna Worley, Mike and Rose Phillips and Father Bluett work with the students to guide and organize activities.

"We make suggestions and guide them, but they choose their activities and decide as to what extent they want to be involved. They will also have a choir and play their own instruments at the Christmas Eve midnight Mass, which will be a first for them," explained Mrs. Worley. "They do these things because they believe they need to be done and are important."

CHAPEL BRIEFS

Sunday school: Don't send your children to Sunday School; take them. Fort Benning's Main Post Sunday School has something for everyone, including parents. In addition to a class for two and three-year-olds through senior high school, MPSS currently offers two classes for adults, with a new class beginning in January.

First, there's an old-fashioned Bible study of I Timothy. Second, there's a Sunday school-type study of Genesis. Beginning Jan. 10, there's a special study on the Ten Commandments. Instructors-facilitators for all four of these are well-qualified chaplains. You parents are really missing a blessing if you're just sending your children to Sunday school. See you on Sunday mornings, 9:30 through 10:30 a.m. at the Religious Education Center, building 229.

INFORMIX* AT WORK

A 4-Day Seminar

An in-depth, hands on, instructor-led seminar that helps you create a responsive, interactive database of organizationally related information. Rather than learning from confusing computer manuals, this course gives you basic principles and concepts crucial to your understanding of Informix through a combination of lectures and hands on exercises.

The primary instructor will be Christopher P. Seale, the author of Informix at Work. Our organization specializes in training government employees; so you will find that all the illustrations, examples, and exercises are from the government arena rather than some non-relevant business examples.

SEMINAR BENEFITS

Upon completion of this seminar, you will be able to do the following:
— utilize professional database design techniques
— design user oriented customized screens
— utilize multiple approaches to retrieving and displaying data
— exchange data between Informix and other programs
— design complete professional applications

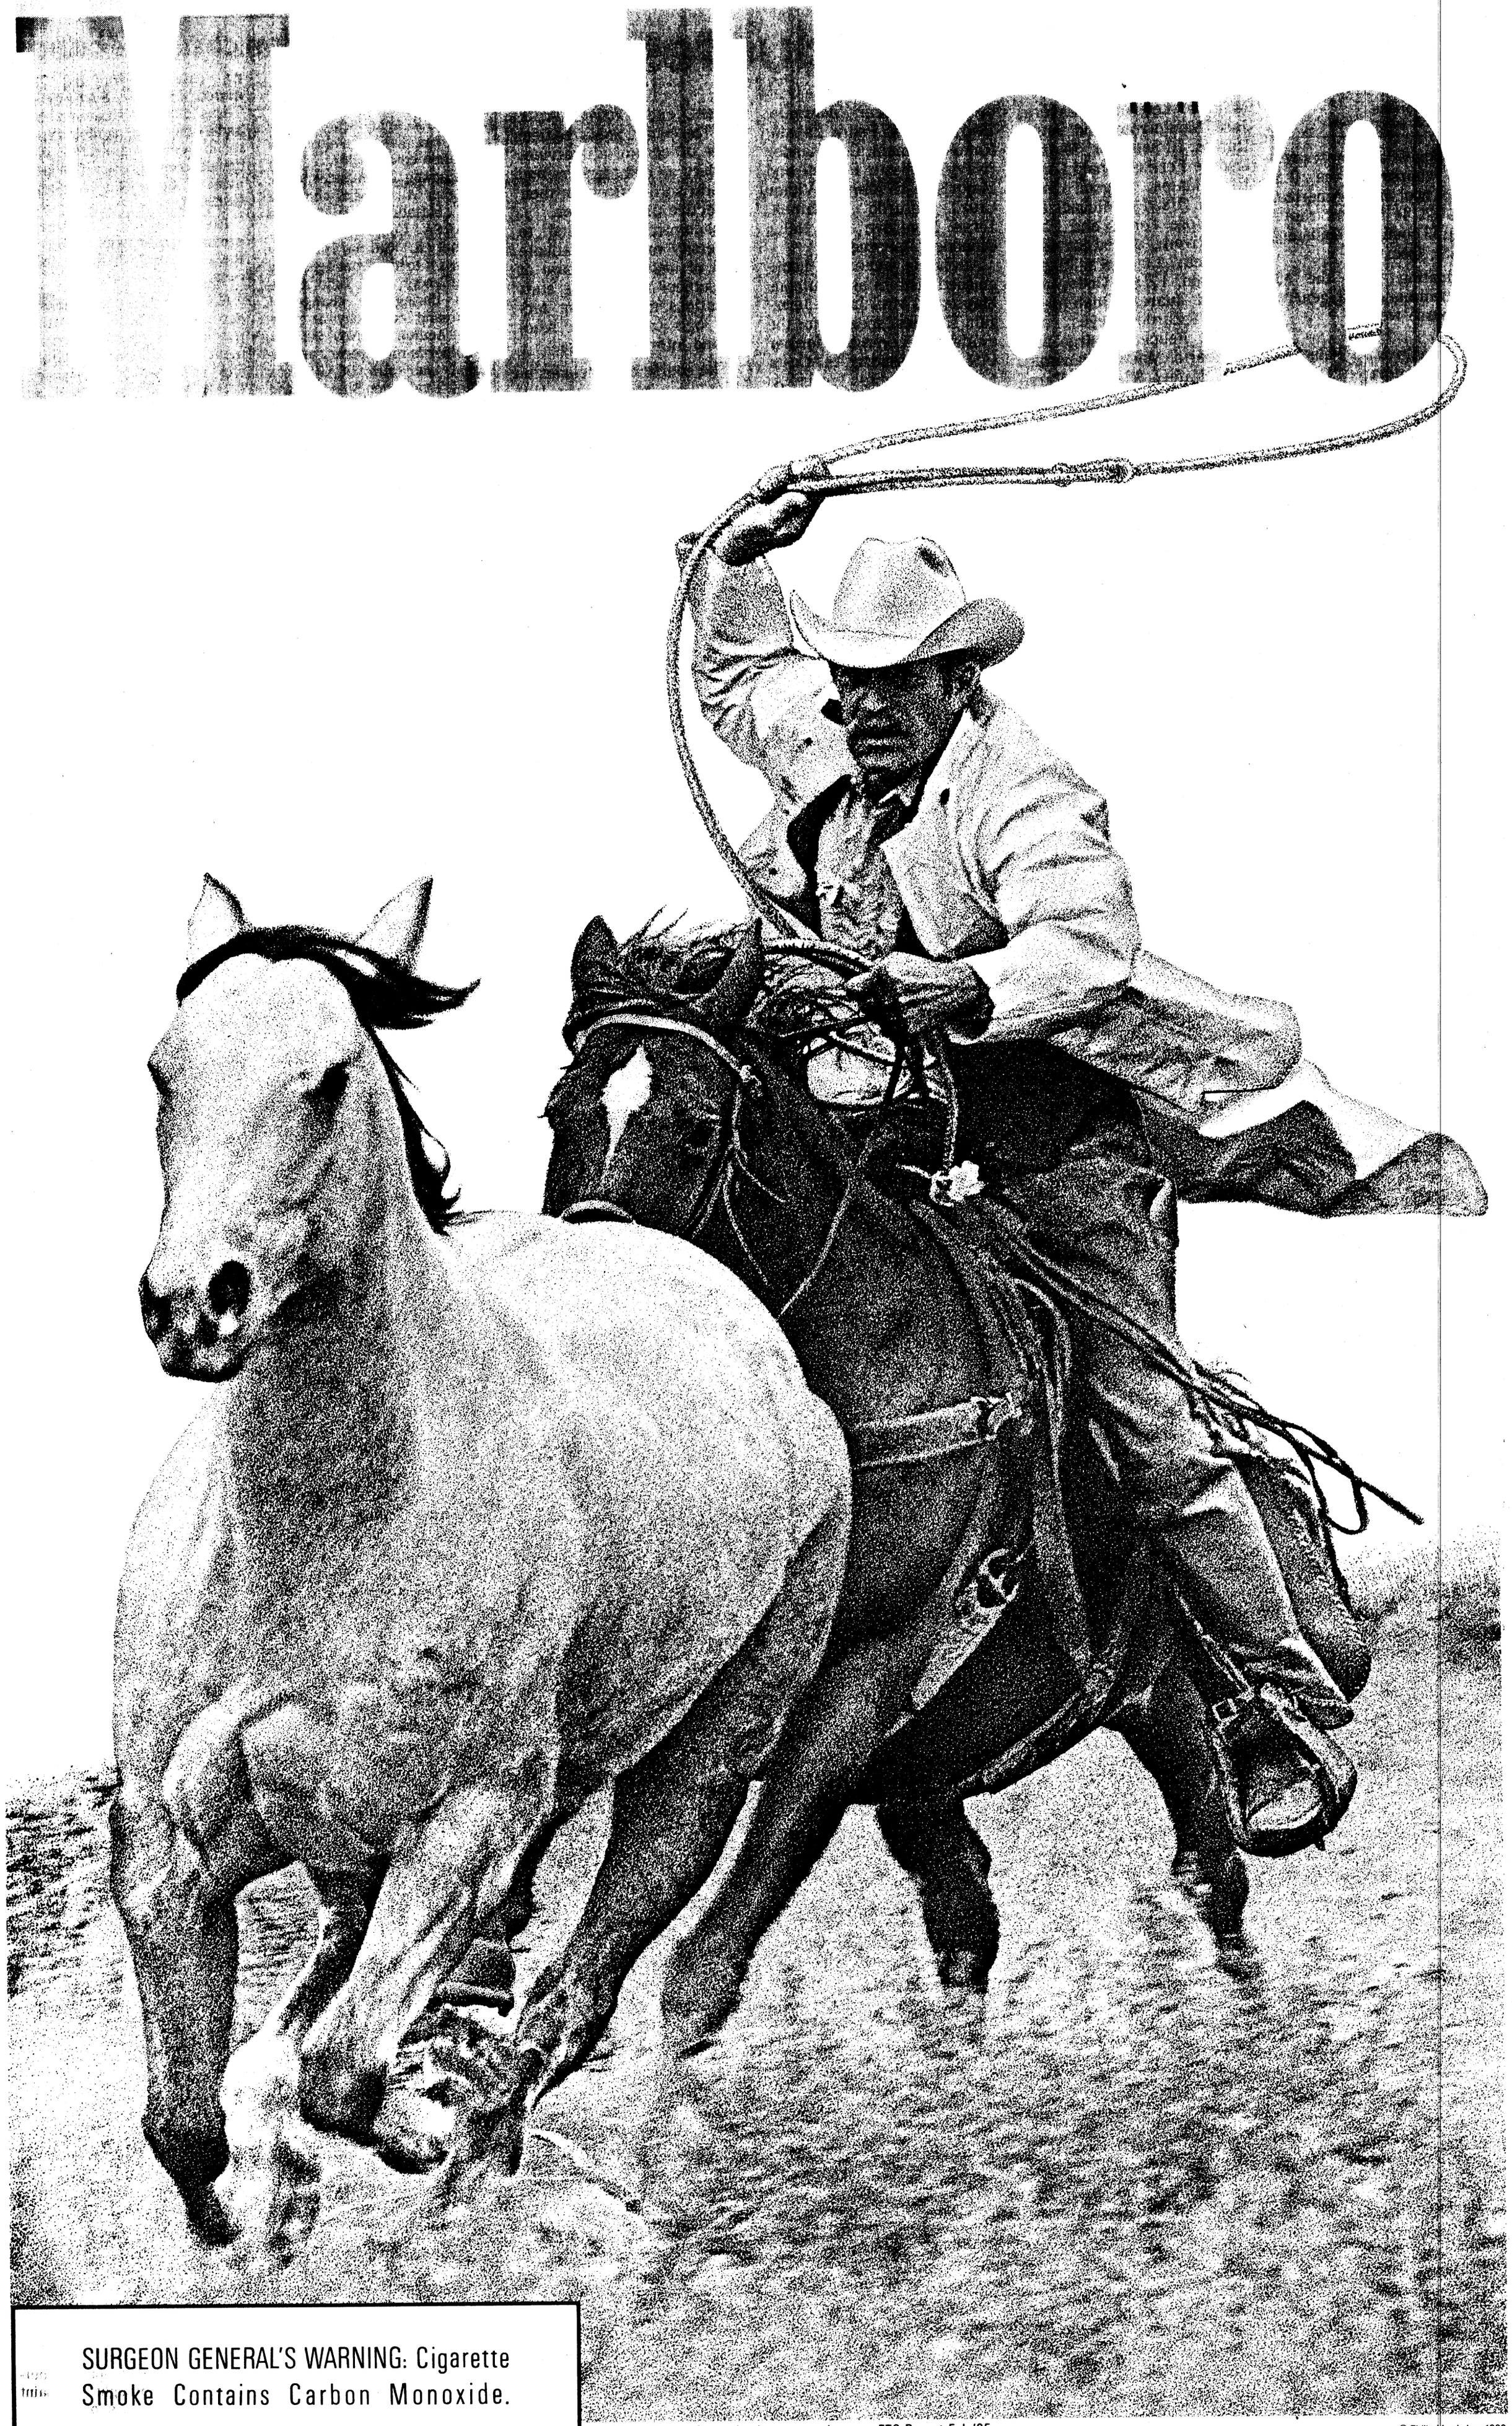
WHO SHOULD ATTEND THIS SEMINAR

This seminar is extremely beneficial to professionals who need to develop applications utilizing Informix or to those individuals who need to understand the limits and capabilities of Informix.

LOCATION AND TIMES

This seminar will be presented in Columbus on the following dates:
January 19-22, 1988
February 16-19, 1988

The hours will be from 8:00 AM to 5:00 PM. In order to provide the students with the maximum amount of training time, breaks and lunch will be provided.



COURSE FEE: The course fee is $585.00 per attendee and includes the cost of the seminar/workshop, workbook, a diskette with application examples and all meeting materials.

Call White-Seale at 404-948-8584 for enrollment information.

Bradley course gives extra edge

By Becky Obert
Bayonet staff writer

Being a good leader takes a combination of "people skills" and technical expertise. For NCOs and officers assigned to be Bradley commanders, the Bradley Commanders Course taught here gives them that extra edge they need to succeed.

Taught by the 15 instructors in the Bradley Instructor Detachment, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, the course is divided into three areas: maintenance, weapons and gunnery.

By the time they graduate, students won't be experts at any of these things, but they'll have a basic understanding of the Bradley and how to make it an effective combat tool.

"To be a Bradley commander, a soldier should know what his men are required to do, how to check their work, and how to write up their deficiencies," said SFC Anthony Johnson, detachment chief.

He said maintenance is vital to a Bradley crew, because if a vehicle isn't rolling, soldiers can't be practicing their gunnery skills.

Students are trained to recognize common problems with the vehicle, so they can tell their soldiers what needs fixing. "They should know enough about the Bradley to recognize if a soldier is doing the right thing to correct a deficiency, ordering the right parts, and so on," he said.

Students learn about the weapons systems on the Bradley, including the 25mm chaingun, the coaxial machinegun, the TOW launcher and the M-231 firing port weapon. "We teach them how to put weapons together, how to take them apart and how they interact inside the turret. Then we give them classes on preliminary gunnery instruction, how to set it up and organize it. And finally, we take them to the firing range and let them put what they have learned into action."

Commanders must know how to use the Bradley in a combat situation and how its effectiveness changes in different situations.

"We teach students how to load them, fire them and clear them, as well as how to recognize what needs fixing," he said.

The course emphasizes that the vehicle commander is responsible for the vehicle and his soldiers, including checking up on their work and following through to make sure they are a combat-ready unit.

Parents beware of dangerous toys

AAFES

Fifty dead, 1,200 injured. Results of a train crash? An earthquake? A small war?

No, simply the approximate number of children harmed by unsafe toys and lack of parental supervision during the past year.

The Christmas season tempts many parents to give in to children's demands for everything seen on TV or on the shelves of a store's toy section. And while there are some very inventive and creative toys on the market, there are also some which could be dangerous for small children.

"Manufacturers can't control the way the toys they make will be used," explains Rick Amato, quality assurance specialist at HQ Army and Air Force Exchange service in Dallas, Texas. "There are many well-designed toys which are appropriate for older children, but when left where a younger child could play with them could lead to a choking incident."

"Our policy at AAFES is to check the kinds of toys being proposed by our buyers to see if the items can pass the choke, poke and bite test. Even after accepting the product, we will occasionally pull an item from existing inventory and retest to make sure it's still safe," said Amato. "We test according to the standards set by the consumer product safety commission."

When buying for children, it is best to keep in mind the age of the child, his level of development and whether any other children will have access to the same toys, suggested Amato.

Small children like large, bright objects which are easily moved or make sounds. They like to use their mouths to aid in their exploration and to satisfy curiosity. (The mouth is more tactile than fingers at that age.) Look for water-resistant picture books, simple puzzles, pull toys without sharp edges or removable parts. Don't buy pieces which can be put wholly into the child's mouth. Small toys (or pieces) were involved in a number of choking deaths in 1987.

For toys in general, specialists caution parents to take time in choosing the right toy for the child's age group. Most toy manufacturers print guidelines on the carton.

"Even if you think your child can master a more advanced toy, remember that he's still a child," Amato said. "and may do something unexpected." Consider supervising younger children while they are using more advanced games.

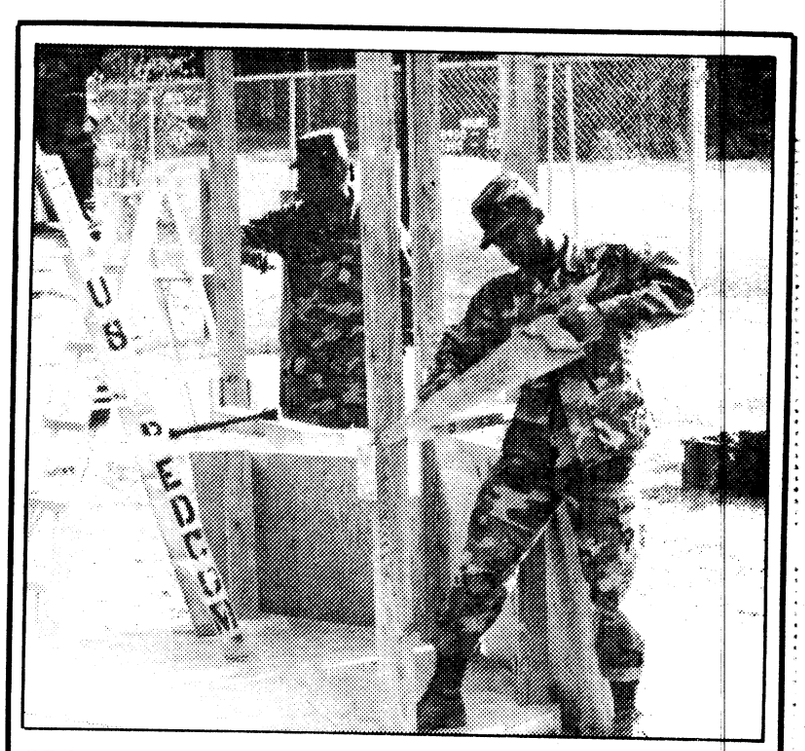
As for electrical toys, treat them like a household appliance. They should be stored properly to prevent damage to the unit or its wiring, and parents should teach children not to yank on the cord when unplugging the toy.

Examine the toy before giving it to your child. Check the plug and cord as you would any appliance and try out the unit to see that it works properly.

"Make sure there aren't any sharp edges," said Majoj Parikh, a quality assurance laboratory engineer at HQ AAFES.

Caution children not to use the electrical toys near water. "These are not bathtub toys," Amato and Parikh both emphasize.

Table mounted units should be stable enough not to fall off or be knocked on the floor.



For train sets and any other toys that work with a separate transformer, make sure that the cord, plug and terminal connections are in good condition.

Transformers normally become warm when being used, but they have built-in safety features to prevent overheating. However, if your unit becomes very hot to the touch, turn it off and let it cool down.

Reading the manufacturer's description of the toy's safety features is a wise idea.

When dealing with any electrical toy, the specialists caution, if you have a problem, don't try to fix it — return the toy to your exchange.

Following these safty guidelines can save lives and prevent injuries this Christmas and throughout the year. But there is another benefit AAFES specialists point out: You'll get many more years of use from your purchase and that will save you money.

Soldiers build 'Toy Land'

By Shawn Bryson
36th Engineer Group correspondent

With Christmas just 15 days away, people everywhere are pulling out the decorations for their offices and homes.

In fact, last week, soldiers from 1st Platoon, Company C, 43rd Engineer Battalion pitched in their share of holiday spirit as they were called upon to help design and build a Christmas "toy land" to be displayed on the commanding general's lawn here.

The Charlie soldiers received the blueprints and design plans Nov. 30, and in three days, were able to complete the project, according to SSgt. Samuel Winters, noncommissioned-officer-in-charge of the project.

The most time-consuming part of the project was the construction of the gazebo, Winters said.

The soldiers also built a guard house in which a toy soldier will stand guard over the display.

A winter sleigh and several toy blocks were alo constructed by the Company C soldiers, Winters added.

Once all the parts of the display were completed, personnel were brought in to paint the various parts of the display.

Dayton battles Wagner in Stagg Bowl tomorrow

USAIC Public Affairs Office

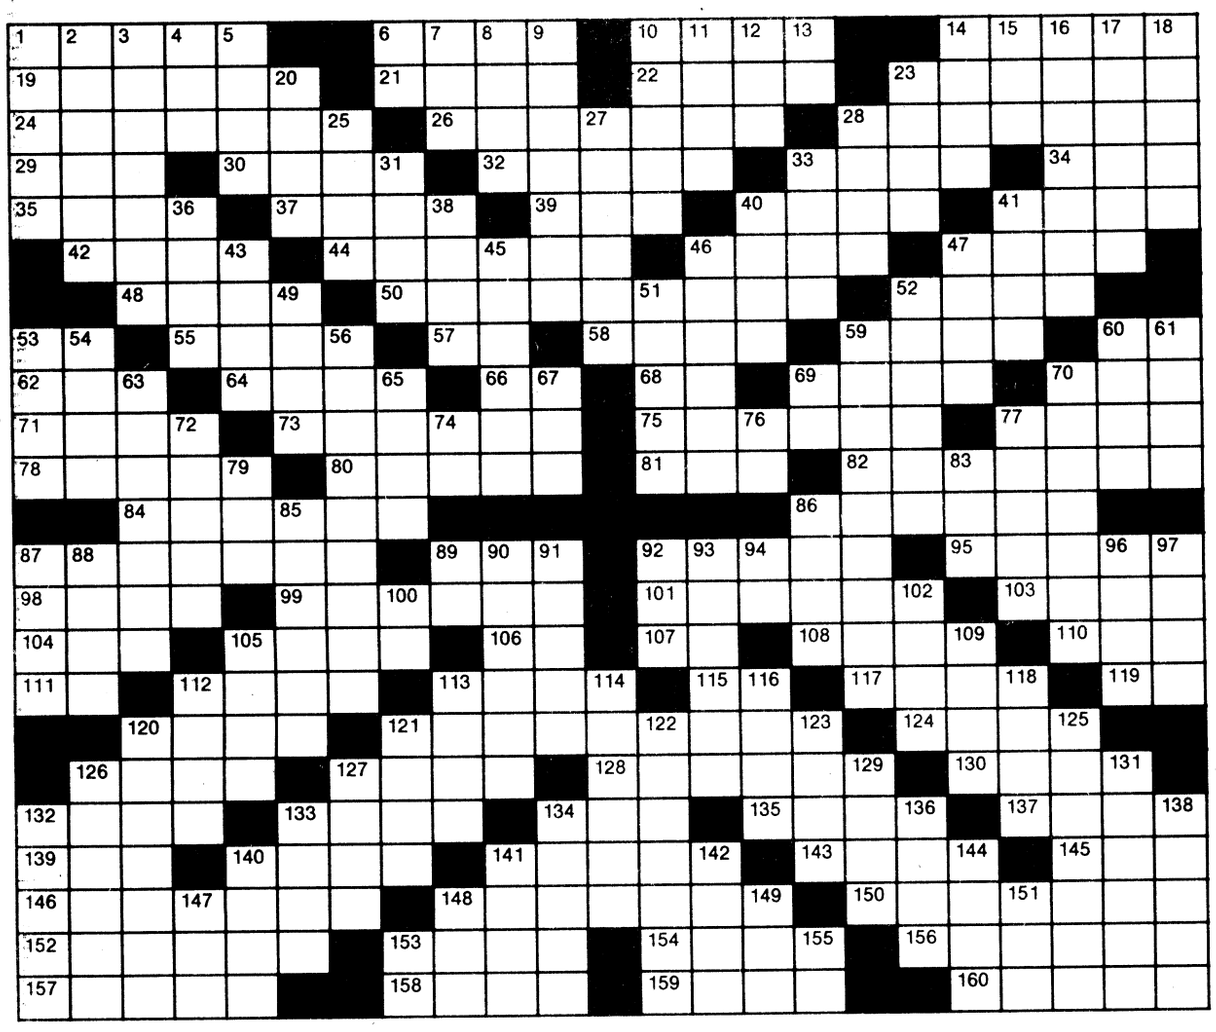
The Division III title will be on the line Saturday in the 15th Annual Amos Alonzo Stagg Bowl at the Garrett Stadium in Phenix City.

Davey Jones scored three touchdowns, rushed for 118 yards and set a University of Dayton, Ohio career scoring record as the Flyers defeated Central College of Iowa 34-0 in the semifinals last Saturday.

Jones, a senior tailback from Newark, Ohio, now has 254 career points, breaking the previous record of 246.

The Flyers, now at 11-2, will face Wagner College of Staten Island, N.Y., at 12-1, in the Stagg Bowl for the NCAA Division III championship.

Wagner defeated Emory and Henry 20-15 last Saturday when Greg Kovar completed 16 or 27 passes for 209 yards and two touchdowns to lead Wagner to the win in the semifinals.



The Stadium is located on Sullivan Road just off the Phenix City end of the North Columbus bypass. Kick off time is 1:10 p.m..

The ITT Office in building 247 on Ingersol Street has tickets at a cost of $6 per person.

Call the Stagg Bowl hotline at 576-9031 for more information.

Bradley

"I like to think we're putting out guys who are confident and can go command a squad, platoon or company and be successful," he said. "I don't think a young officer should have to learn his job once he gets to an assignment. He needs to have these basic skills to build on."

Students spend a minimal amount of time in the classroom, since 85 to 90 percent of the course is hands-on training, Johnson said.

"With this vehicle, you really learn by doing, and that's why we give students lots of opportunities to get their hands dirty," he said.

The student-instructor ratio is low, at four students to each instructor, which gives more individual attention, an added bonus.

Johnson said his course graduated more than 300 students last year, teaching seven classes, and will teach eight classes this year. That's because there is a big demand for Bradley commanders as the Army fields more of the fighting vehicles.

The course has few failures, he said, because the students are all career soldiers who are striving to be good at their work. Also, Johnson doesn't hesitate to state that his staff of instructors are "the best in the world at what they do."

Students in Class 1-88, currently underway, said the course is definitely helping them.

"I think it will definitely help me to command, because you get to deal with the mechanics of the vehicle. It'll definitely help me supervise my soldiers," said 2nd Lt. Steve Marrouqin. After graduating from the class, he will head to his first command slot at the 2nd Armored Division, Fort Hood, Texas.

Sgt. Luis Sanchez, from the 24th Infantry Division at Fort Stewart, Ga., said his unit is getting ready now to field the Bradley, and for this reason, the training will really help him. "The course is kind of demanding, but they teach you what you need to know about the Bradleys," he said. "The instructors are highly professional, and I'm learning a lot."

Sgt. Michael Campbell, also from Fort Stewart, agreed. "What's good about this course is you get to get your hands on it and get dirty. It helps you learn. In some courses, you sit in a classroom and don't actually get to work with the weapons. This is a much better way to learn."

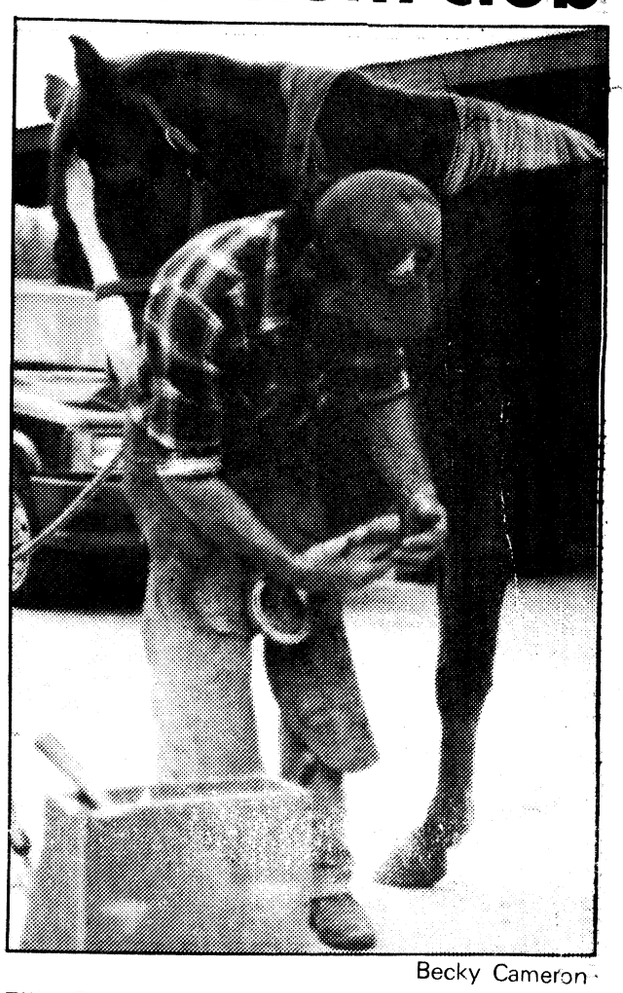
Farriers host clinic at hunt club

By Robert E. Wilke
President Fort Benning Hunt Club

The Georgia Farriers Association, in conjunction with the Fort Benning Hunt Club, will sponsoring a clinic on horseshoeing. This event will be open to the public at no charge and is an excellent opportunity to learn what it takes to properly shoe a horse and care for its feet.

The clinic will be held tommorow beginning at 8:30 a.m. at the Hunt Club

"There will be farriers from across Georgia here to attend the clinic," said Ellis Cameron, the event coordinator. "They will be taking the cerification exams while here."



There will also be suppliers of farrier equipment present at the clinic. He will put on a demonstartation of blacksmithing, making different iron crafts.

"We are also trying to get one of the local veternarians to talk on proper care of horses and their feet," Cameron said.

The Hunt Club will also be holding its annual Christmas Carol Ride and party on Dec. 19. The ride is open to members, and their guests.

The ride will travel through the housing areas on Rainbow Ave., the Iron Triangle adjacent to the Golf Course, Perkins Place, the 4-plex units of Lumpkin, Wold Ave., the NCO housing area behind the Red Cross, by Riverside, Austin and Miller Loops.

"We invite the resident to step outside and join us in singing Christmas carols," said Robert E. Wilke, President of the Hunt Club.

Tips help prevent fires

Installation Safety Office

Every Christmas, trees catch fire. The results usually are death, serious burns, and property damage. Here are a few tips to give your family that added protection during the holidays, and still have a Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year.

Cut a growing tree or purchase one which has not been allowed to dry out by prolonged storage. To check if the tree is fresh, bounce it down hard, and if the needles do not fall off, the tree is still fresh.

Stand the tree in water until ready for use.

Saw off the trunk at an angle at least one inch above the original cut.

Provide strong support for the tree. Use a sturdy stand that has anchor clamps and a container which holds water. Check the water supply at least once a day.

Keep the tree away from sources of heat (fireplaces, radiators, etc).

Never use candles on a tree. Open flames may contact the tree, curtains, or combustible material piled beneath the tree.

Use only electrical lighting sets that bear the UL (Underwriters Laboratories, Inc.) label.

Check lighting sets each year for frayed wires, loose connections, and broken sockets before using.

Be sure the fuse of the electric circuit serving the tree is not over 15 amperes.

Make certain all tree lighting is turned off before you retire or leave the house.

Collect and dispose of all combustible Christmas wrappings as they accumulate in the home.

Ghost Riders spook Renegades 42-41

Sally Roberts
oe Douglas, forward for the Ghost Riders from Co. A, 2nd n, 69th Armor, jumps up for tow points.

By Sally Roberts
197th Infantry Brigade correspondent

On the hot hitting of center, Robin Jones and guard, William Hill, the "Ghost Riders" from Co. A, 2nd Bn., 69th Armor beat the "Renegades" from Co. B, 2-69 Armor, 42-41 in 197th Inf. basketball league play.

Hill scored consistantly throughout the game, leading the Riders with 15 points. Jones, who scored only one point in the first half, returned to the second half to add 13 points to the come-from-behind victory.

The Renegades had a 10-point lead after the first 15-minute half.

Renegade forward Marty Johnson led his team in scoring with 16 points, followed by guard William Sellers with 7 points.

The competition heightened during the second half and the Renegades couldn't stop the steamrolling Riders from slipping by with a one point lead to take the victory.

2-29 Inf completes the first mini-season

2nd Bn. 29th Inf. correspondent

The 2nd Bn. 29th Inf. opened the 1987 Basketball Season on Nov. 18 with style and enthusiasm in the Harmony Church Fieldhouse.

Opening remarks were made by the battalion commander, followed by the posting of the Colors, the National Anthem, and a ceremonial "Tip-Off."

The battalion is conducting a split season this year to establish a viable intramural program.

Each season is split into two mini-seasons. This concept permits each team with the opportunity to remain competitive throughout the entire year.

Winners of each mini-season play each other for the right to advance to post-level competition. The first season runs from Nov. 17 to Dec. 17.

The first 2nd Bn., 29th Inf. mini-season concluded competition last week when the Co. B "Celtics" won a decisive victory over Co. D, 64-44.

Eddie Farrior, Co. B, led the scorering with 15 points.

Co. B will square off against the winners of the second mini-season to determine the battalion representative at post competition in December.

High scorers during the first mini-season were:

James Taylor, Co. D, 67 points.

Jake Kelly, HHC, 55 points.

Stan Trader, Co. C, 50 points.

Rouse Payne, HHC, 48 points.

Adams selected as head coach of U.S. Boxing team

MSgt. Kenneth R. C. Adams has been selected as the head coach for the U.S. Boxing Team competing in the 1988 Summer Olympic Games in Seoul, Korea.

Adams, assigned to Headquarters and Headquarters Company, U.S. Army Garrison at Fort Hood, Texas was the United States of America/Amateur Boxing Federation's coach of the year in 1985.

In 1984, he helped train the U.S. Olympic boxing team that claimed nine gold medals and one silver medal in Los Angeles. Also in 1984, he became coach of the All-Army boxing team and led it to the first of four consecutive team titles, a feat apparently unprecedented, according to the USA/ABF. Since then the Army has won every All-Armed Forces tournament, keeping alive a string of nine consecutive interservice team titles.

By T. Richard Cummings
Spencer High School

Callaway Gardens sponsored it's 3rd Annual Steeplechase on Nov. 21. For entertainment between the races the Spencer High Mighty Greenwave Band was invited to perform.

The band played in the opening ceremonies, performing the songs "For Your Eyes Only," "The Tiger of San Pedro," and "Stingray."

The highlight of the show was when the band played "Georgia on My Mind" and "Sweet Georgia Brown" (the Globe Trotters theme song).

Hunters warned against taking careless 'sound shots'

By Deck Major
Fish and Wildlife Specialist

They call them different things in different parts of the country but where I come from, Hoosier deer hunters call them "sound shots."

Now if you're a good deer hunter, you're wondering what the heck I'm talking about. Just what is a "sound shot?"

What it isn't is a shot taken with any degree of sound judgement. It is a shot taken into the brush by a hunter who has heard a sound that might, I repeat might, be a deer.

That's right, as unbelievable as it might seem, no target is identified by the "sound shooter."

As a wildlife biologist, I talk with hunters frequently. I enjoy checking their deer and discussing fish and wildlife management philosophies with them when they stop by to check the range maps for open hunting areas.

Last weekend however, a

Infantry Marathon held in March

USAIC Public Affairs Office

The annual U.S. Army Infantry Marathon and Half-Marathon will be held at Fort Benning March 5.

The race, sanctioned by the Athletic Congress and an official qualifier for national records and the Boston Marathon, was moved from its usual date because of cold weather experienced during previous January events.

Starting time for the events, which are open to both civilians and servicemembers, will be at 9 a.m. for the marathon and 9:30 a.m. for a half-marathon. Runners may enter as individuals or five-man teams.

Both races will start on Vibbert Avenue near Doughboy Stadium and will finish in the stadium. The 26.2-mile paved course is described as flat and fast with very few turns, double-looped for the marathon and single-looped for the half marathon.

Entry fee is $10 for those pre-registering for the events by Feb. 5. Late registration up to five minutes before race time will cost $15. No fees are refundable, including the optional $5 fee for the March 4 "carbo supper" at the noncommissioned officers' club from 5-8 p.m. The first 400 applicants requesting to attend the supper will be assured a place.

Entry forms may be picked up at most Fort Benning gyms. For additional information contact the race director, 544-4226, 544-4786 or 544-4946.

Sound

shooter brought my blood to a boil.

About mid-morning two men pulled up to our range map display. When they got out, I could tell they had been in the field. I wasn't busy so I couldn't help but overhear their conversation.

One barked, "I can't believe neither of us saw a deer this morning." The other chimed in, "Yeah, about 7 I thought I heard one coming up the trail from my right."

"Oh yeah?" said the other.

The other one hesitated a minute and then added, "Yup, I fired a round where I thought one deer should have been but I never heard any thrashing around. It must have been a squirrel."

After I closed my gaping mouth, I gave this guy a verbal thrashing. If I could have taken that shooter's license, I would have. Unfortunately, he's free to hunt another day. Hopefully though, he'll think before he pulls another dumb stunt like that again.

At the last Hunting and Fishing Advisory Council meeting, serious Fort Benning hunting accidents were discussed. Basically, they are broken down into two categories. Accidents dealing with tree stands have resulted in two deaths and one broken bone and "Sound shots" have killed two hunters and caused permanent partial disability to another.

Three basic rules could have prevented all of these accidents: lower your weapon unloaded, by cord; use a safety strap in your stand and know your target.

Hunter fluorescent orange has helped make deer hunting safer. However, hunter safety education holds the real key to safer hunting trips.

As young, and experienced hunters alike, are trained to hunt more safely, attitudes towards stupid hunters who take "sound shots" will also change. Then the autumn woods will be a safer place.

As you go afield this season, remember the noted words of Hill Street Blues Sergeant Esterhaus, "Let's be careful out there."

Reagan, Gorbachev agree, sign arms treaty

By Jim Garamone
Army News Service

President Ronald Reagan greeted Soviet General Secretary Mikhail Gorbachev with an Armed Forces full-honor welcoming ceremony on the grounds of the White House, Dec. 8.

Later in the day, Gorbachev and Reagan signed a treaty that eliminates the entire class of U.S. and Soviet intermediate range missiles, which includes the U.S. Pershing missile. Gorbachev and Reagan continued their talks through Dec. 8. The Soviet chief left from Andrews Air Force Base, Md., Dec. 8.

The U.S. Army Band (Pershing's Own) and the 3rd U.S. Infantry (The Old Guard) participated, among other military units, in welcoming the Soviet leader.

The Intermediate Nuclear Forces treaty was not the only result of the summit talks. Reagan and Gorbachev discussed items ranging from the Middle East to the Iran-Iraq war to Afghanistan. The two leaders also discussed a proposed treaty that would reduce strategic nuclear forces.

In addition to meetings with the President, Gorbachev and his advisors had meetings with members of Congress. The Senate must ratify the INF treaty before it is effective.

The last US-USSR treaty, the Strategic Arms Limitation Treaty II, was not ratified by the Senate although the United States stayed within the limits of the treaty.

Gorbachev and his wife Raisa were guests of honor at a state dinner at the White House, Dec. 8. The Gorbachev's returned the favor with a dinner at the Soviet Embassy Dec. 9.

The General Secretary met with a number of government, civic and business leaders including Vice President George Bush during his stay.

The Gorbachev-Reagan summit has generated a number of protests. More than 200,000 people protested the Soviet policy on Jewish immigration Dec. 6, and groups as diverse as those opposing the INF treaty to the International Society for Krishna Consciousness have rallied during the summit.

Residents' complaint sparks action

By Aquilla Wiliams
McGraw Manor

A willingness to get involved and not take no for an answer paid off recently for residents of the McGraw Manor community.

According to Aqulla Williams, community mayor, parking has long been a problem in the housing area. "We did a survey in April, and found that lack of parking was the most frequently cited complaint residents had," she said.

When they checked with post officials, they were told that there was a shortage of money to fund new projects. Residents of upper Baker Street were not ready to take no for an answer, however, so they worked with Sgt. Paul Castellano, area coordinator, to find another way to solve the problem.

First they located an appropriate site to build additional parking spaces. Next, Castellano coordinated with DEH, which agreed to provide the technical assistance to ensure the project met building specifications.

Materials, tools and equipment were obtained through the U-Do-It Office at DEH, and labor was provided by community residents. They have excavated and formed the site, and now DEH will provide the cement, which volunteers will spread.

When the project is completed, there will be six additional parking spaces available to the 24 families who live in the three buildings on upper Baker Street.

Mrs. Williams said that this just goes to show that people who are involved and care about their community can make a difference.

"If anyone else is interested in working to improve their neighborhood, help is available," she said. "If they go to their community life office, we'll help them do the paper work and coordination with DEH."

Cancer Research Institute offers hints for health

American Institute for Cancer Research

"Feel Great in '88" is both the title and the message behind the American Institute for Cancer Research's new 1988 health tips calendar. Its colorful format provides a collection of recipes, health information and practical suggestions for healthier living.

Using colorful, light-hearted illustrations and easy-to-understand health information, the calendar provides a variety of information for a healthier lifestyle. Because the American Institute for Cancer Research focuses its research and education programs on reducing cancer risk through diet and nutrition, many of the health tips, including recipes, provide easy-to-follow nutritional information for lower cancer risk.

But the calendar also provides a variety of other health information, including pointers on stress reduction and on the positive effects of sensible exercise programs. The practical advice given can provide a good basis for a healthy start to each day.

Although there is no charge for this special calendar, the Institute is requesting a donation, if possible, to help support its research and education programs. A copy of the calendar may be ordered by writing to the American Institute for Cancer Research Dept. FG88, Washington, D.C. 20069.

The campaign is part of the education program of the American Institute for Cancer Research, a national, nonprofit cancer organization.

Hartzog takes over as asst. commandant

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

A brisk wind blew across York Field chilling, but not dampening, the spirit of the crowd that gathered to witness the position of assistant commandant of the Infantry School change hands recently.

Col. William Hartzog stepped into the position replacing Brig. Gen. Barry R. McCaffrey.

During his inaugural speech, Hartzog remarked, "While I've been familiarizing myself with this job, I've walked down the hall several times, and every time, I stare at the portraits of the past ACs in awe."

"Ours will be a family portrait," Hartzog said, "because I can't do it without the Burney's, Yarbrough's, Teel's, Mace's or all the others."

Described as a fatherly man and heralded by peers for his knowledge of training concepts, Hartzog brings with him much wisdom and experience to his new position.

He received his commission after graduating from The Citadel in 1963. He served in Vietnam, taught at West Point and Officers Candidate School and has had numerous command and staff positions. A true infantryman, Hartzog can often be seen running along post roads with a rucksack on his back. In the recent Faith Race, he ran the five-mile run in full combat gear.

At a press conference held for local media, he explained why he trains that way. "I started doing it years ago with the soldiers in our troop units and now it's just habit."

One reporter asked Hartzog about a rumored change in the Basic and Advanced Non-Commissioned Officers courses.

Hartzog said that there would be evolution in the school's officer courses that would lead to a better understanding of how to train our young leaders.

"Part of the change is because of something that Maj. Gen. Kenneth Leuer and I have seen recently in our combat units." he said, "I was struck by how well trained both NCOs and commanders were on how to actually fight, but that they were not as skilled on how to develop the training to keep their subordinates ready to fight."

"They knew how to fight, but they didn't know how to train their soldiers," he said.

In his nearly 25 years in the Army, he has seen a lot of changes -- the more recent among them are standardization and accountability.

"We didn't approach training with any standardization when I came into the Army," Hartzog said. "I believe the Army Training and Evaluation Program, Field Manual 25-100 and the National Training Center have helped generate and perpetuate the ideas."

Now common standards throughout the Army are enabling soldiers to leave one unit and enter another without feeling that they have entered a new army, he said.

What pleases him about accountability is the fact that leaders are now willing to evaluate their actions against high standards and to identify and accept weaknesses and fix them.

When challenged with the question about lack of combat experience in today's leaders Hartzog said, "You cannot completely reproduce a combat scenario, but you can create a situation where you can stress a soldier enough so that you get very close to combat experiences."

One of his most important goals as the assistant commandant of the Infantry School is to generate an understanding of how to train our young leaders so that they can prepare our soldiers to fight. "It's that simple." he said.

Holidays become more electrified, more hazardous

Army News Service

The holiday season is becoming more and more electrified, from decorative lights to plug-in toys. Army and Air Force Exchange Service quality assurance specialist Richard Amato recently explained what he would look for if he were to bring these products into his home:

Before it's plugged in, check it out. That's the first rule for any electrical product.

Make sure the item carries the listing mark of an accredited testing laboratory -- Underwriters Laboratory in the United States or a foreign equivalent, such as Miti in Japan.

When you take the item out of the package, check the insulation on the cord. Look for brittleness, frays or cuts; if it's brittle, frayed or cut, don't use it.

Christmas tree lights and outside lights are the most common electrical decoration. As well as the wiring, the specialist advises that you check light sockets for damage.

These sockets usually contain two metal points. One should be horizontally across the bottom of the socket, and the second is vertical. If both are vertical, there is danger of a short.

For new lights or strings you're unpackaging after a year's storage, Amato said, "Try them out before stringing them on the tree. See that each light works and that there's no sparking or smoking when the string is plugged in."

When trimming the tree, Amato added, "be sure that garland and tinsel don't come in contact with the bulbs." He said that consumers should look for decorations that are fire-retardant, and added that any decoration AAFES sells must be non-flammable.

The number of strings that can be safely connected together is important. That information should be on the box; ignoring the warning could result in overloading the electrical system in your house.

Minilights can pose a special problem. The wire prongs on replacement bulbs may be too long for the socket. If you find that wire is exposed after inserting the bulb, remove the bulb, snip a little from the ends of the prongs, and re-insert the bulb.

Above all, use the lights as they were intended -- indoor lights are not safe outdoors.

At the season's end, repack lights and other decorations in the original boxes, and choose a dry, cool storage spot away from direct sunlight or moisture.

OPINION

General Thurman extends regards during holidays

With the advent of one of the most holy and joyful of seasons. I extend my warmest regards and best wishes to all in the training and doctrine command family.

During this special time of the year when we gather with our families and cherished friends, we should reflect on how truly fortunate we are to live in this great nation. The blessings of "life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness." secured by our Constitution for over 200 years, have enriched both America and her Army.

As the protectors and defenders of our constitution, all of us should be proud that we, the Army and the sister services, have safeguarded our way of life in the past and are prepared to do so again if called upon.

As we close out this year, I want to personally thank all of you — active duty, our civilians, and all the family members — for your hard work and many contributions you have made to TRADOC and the Army. For the coming New Year, I ask you to continue to pursue the enviable record of outstanding dedication to excellence so characteristic of your past performances.

I hope that all of you have a joyful, safe holiday season and a happy new year. Peace.

Maxwell R. Thurman
General, U.S.A
Commanding

Commanding general sends season's greetings

The holiday season of Hanukkah and Christmas should be a joyous time of worship services, festivities and celebrations. For Jews and Christians,it is a time to reaffirm our faith in God and our dedication for peace.

Hanukkah, or the Festival of Lights, commemorates a hard-fought Jewish victory over oppression and tyranny. We remember those who have gone before us and give thanks for the sacrifices this past year and again I say "Thank you."

The Christmas Season celebrates the Birth of the Christ Child at Bethlehem 1,987 years ago. The first Christmas message of "Peace on Earth, Good Will Toward Men" remains a goal that people throughout the world can identify with, but none more closely than those of us who serve in the Armed Forces. May the spirit of Christmas inspire us to work harder than ever toward that noble goal.

I extend to each of you best wishes for a happy and SAFE holiday season and ask God's richest blessings for you and your loved ones during the New Year.

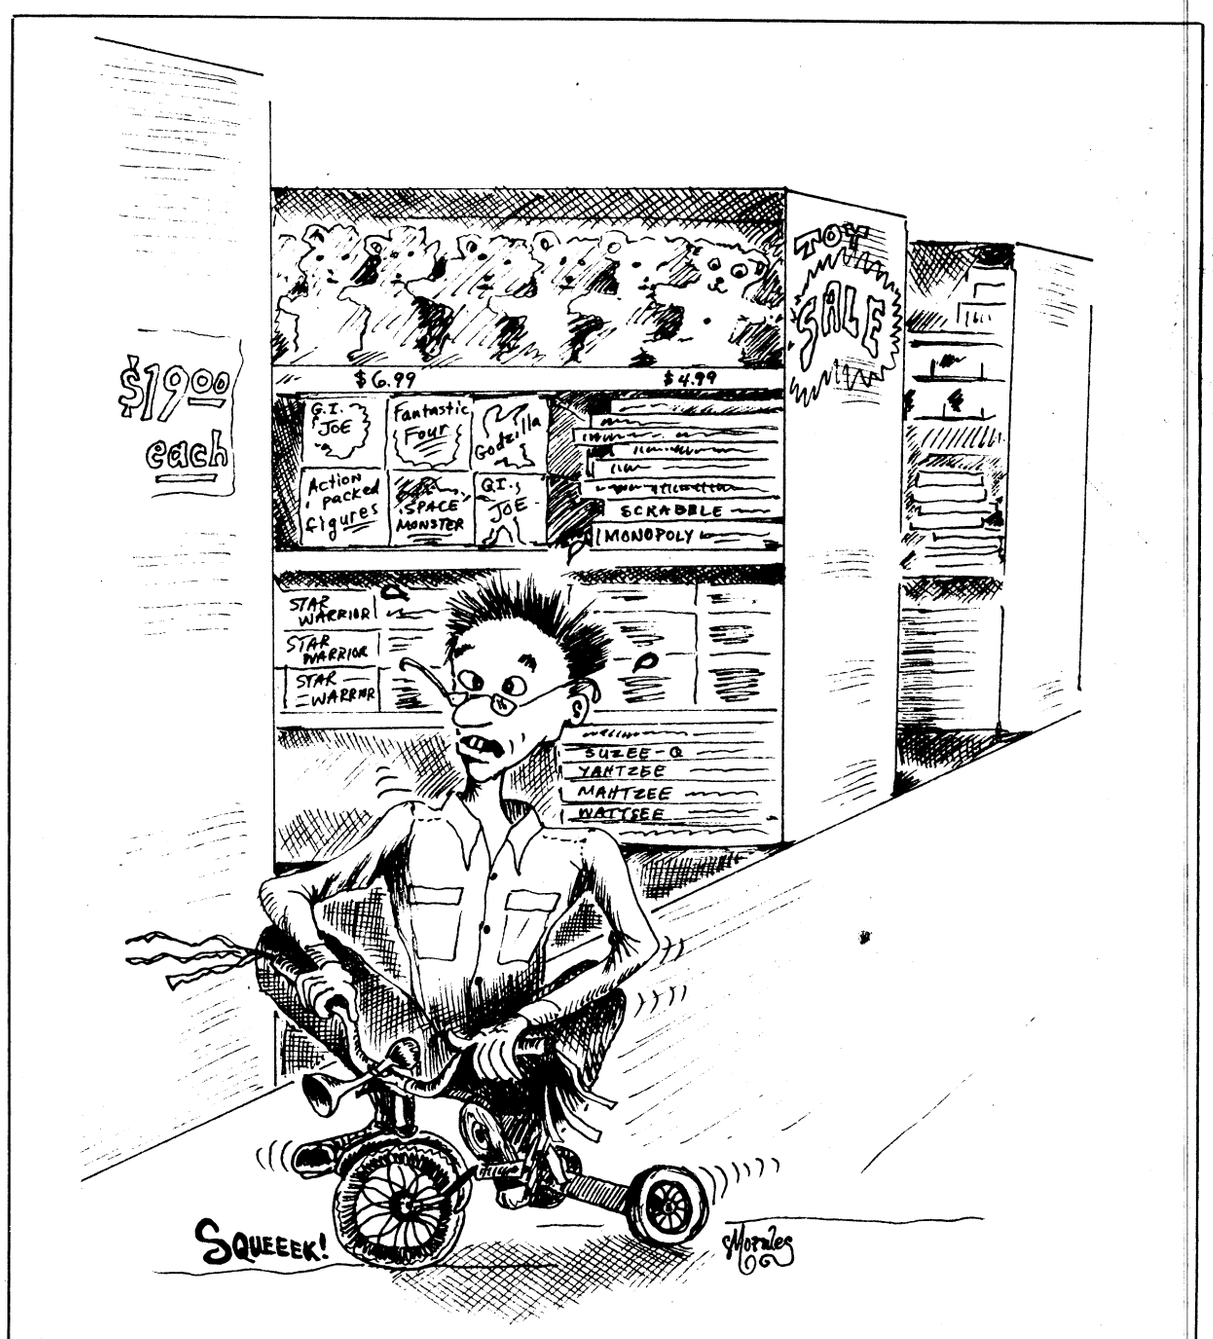
Christmas meal surcharge waived

Army News Service



Christmas meal surcharges for families of enlisted soldiers have been waived by William H. Taft IV, deputy secretary of defense, in response to a request by Secretary of the Army John O. Marsh Jr.

Because sharing holiday meals with family members is viewed as a cornerstone towards building unit morale and esprit de corps, spouses and children of enlisted soldiers will be exempt from paying the operating expense surcharge for their meals. This policy has been expanded to all the services.

Family members aged 12 and over will pay $2.25, while children under 12 will pay $1.10. Officers and non-family members will still be required to pay the surcharge bringing their cost to $5.40 for adults and $2.65 for children under 12.

Snively receives shopping lesson

By Clyde Snively
USAIC Public Affairs Office

An end to my Christmas shopping woes seemed to be at hand when a good Samaritan by the name of Steve called the other day.

"Hey Clyde," he said when I answered the phone. "This is Steve. I read your column where you said you dreaded Christmas shopping. I can help."

"You mean you've got hundreds of bucks to give me?" I asked.

"Not money, but something better. I can help you overcome your fear of shopping, give you confidence you need to face store clerks and other last minute shoppers.

"Let's do lunch, and I'll explain my technique," he said.

I knew the only way to make it less painful was to make it cost-free, but I agreed to lunch.

Arriving at Louie Louies, I didn't have any trouble recognizing him. He was sitting in the middle of the deli, propped back on the rear legs of his chair, white socks and white skin showing beneath his navy-blue, suit pants.

I was disappointed that he wasn't wearing glasses because I knew if he had been, they'd have been horn-rimmed, and a Band-aid would be holding them together at the nosepiece.

I did satisfy myself with the thought that he had a plastic pen holder jammed with pens, miniature slide rule and thermometer in his shirt pocket beneath his suit coat.

Pulling up a chair next to him, I told him I was ready to begin my shopping lesson.

"The first lesson," he informed me, "is to get a good meal under one's belt. I've already taken the liberty of ordering for both of us."

After what seemed to be an hour of nonstop eating on his part, he once again reared back on the chair legs, let out a belch that rocked the restaurant, and said it was time for my lesson — but first I should pay for the meal.

"Lesson one," I thought, "but if he can help me with my shopping it'll be worth it."

"Clues. Be alert for clues. A lot of them get dropped this time of the year, and if you aren't alert, you may miss them."

"Oh," I said. "You mean like when Emma clips an ad for a massage, shower head out of the newspaper and pastes it on the kitchen door, that could be what she wants?"

"Hey," he said. "I can tell you are going to be a star student. Try and think of some more."

"Well, like when she says, 'all of our glasses are broken. If you're wondering what to get me for Christmas, you might start there.' should I consider that a clue?"

"Most definitely," he said.

I could tell I was on to something.

"Okay," I said eagerly, "If Bubba writes Pioneer TS-6950 speakers down on a piece of paper and hands that to me, should I assume that's what he wants?"

"Yeah man, I think you've got it, try your daughter. If you can figure out what she wants, that' ll be the proof we need."

"Okay, okay. I'm at a store with her. She starts trying clothes on. She says, 'isn't this cute? It's what all the girls at school are wearing now days,' should I write down the description and size as soon as she's not looking?"

"Clyde my man, you're a genius. You're ready to solo."

"Solo? I asked. "I thought you were coming with me."

"Nah, I only do the brain work. Besides, I'm so full I couldn't keep up."

I decided. I would break in gradually by shopping for nieces and nephews at one of those toy stores with the backward R. It seemed harmless enough.

Walking in, I was immediately blinded by the flash of color that greeted me. "Nothing O.D. green in here," I thought.

I knew I was in trouble when I finally decidedthat a $9.99 price tag belonged to a kid's flashlight.

"Get one with filters for $3.95 at the clothing sales store," I said to myself.

Next, I came to a creature that reminded me of the old Munsters TV show. The sign proclaimed this to be a Pee Wee Herman talking dollfor $24.99.

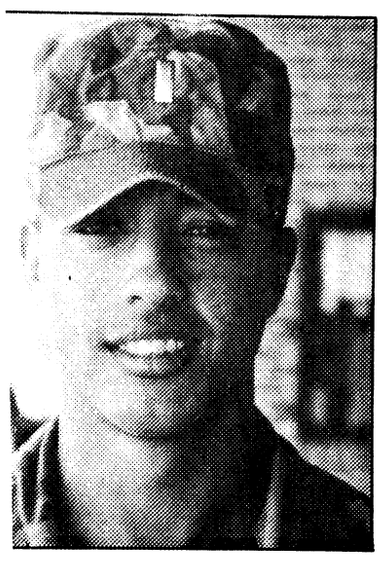
Next was the homeliest doll in the world. It claimed to be a talking cabbage patch kid. Asking price, $99.99. "That one could fill in for Barbara Walters," I decided.

A G.I. Joe Defiant Space Vehicle Launch Complex (I thought he was Army) was going for a mere $119.99. I figured this was how we were launching our satellites while we waited for NASA to get the show back on the road.

Recovering from that jolt, I was hit squarely between the eyes by a $249 (of course .99) price tag. This for a radio control bandido. Maybe the Army could use these for reconnaissance missions.

When a sales lady finally got to me, I told her I wanted to see some bikes and trikes.

"We have this boy's 20-inch vortex, ultimate, high-tech design with new air-foil system for $129.99," she said.

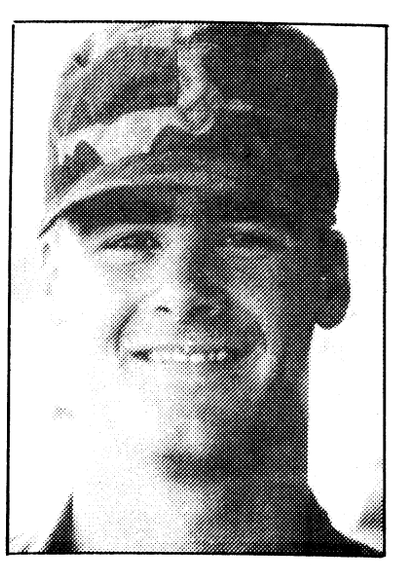


"All I'm interested in is something with two wheels, a seat, handle bars and pedals at half the cost," I said. "What about a tricycle?"

I'm sorry, we don't carry those sir. We do have scooters and big wheels but no trikes. Too dangerous."

On the way out, I wondered how we survived before OSHA and the consumer product safety commission came into being. "So what if we all have scars under our chins (even Steve had one I recalled). At least it proved we had guts enough at one time to try and drive a trike off a curb.

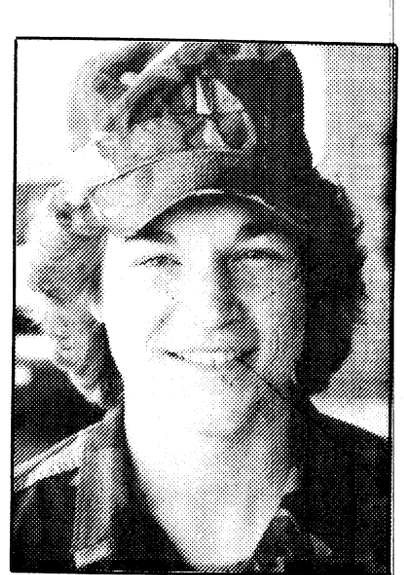
I'm back to waiting for inspiration before I try Christmas shopping again this year.



VARIOUS VOICES / How do you think the summit will affect U.S. - Soviet relations?

2nd Lt. Micheal Santos, Company E, 2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, The School Brigade – "I think it's definitely a step forward. Gorbachev is showing that he is a very effective politician as is, of course, Reagan. If anything, it shows the leaders are making efforts towards world peace.

SSgt. Joseph Laflex, Company E, 4th Ranger Training Battalion, Ranger Training Brigade — "I think it will definately improve them. The more talking someone does about anything will give each party a better understanding."



Pvt. 1 Bryan Howay, Company E, 1st Battalion, 19th Infantry, 1st nfantry Training Brigade — "Hopefully during the summit they will do away with nuclear weapons. If not, hopefully it will improve relations because we don't need to live with a bomb over our heads."

SP4 Bryan Bobb, Battery A, 2nd Battalion, 10th Field Artillery, 197th Infantry Brigade — "I think the summit will bring the two nations closer together. I think we needed the reduction in missiles and that was accomplished."

Capt. Floyd Hayes, Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, 507th PIR — "It's a start at the highest level. They are talking, but I think it's more symbolic at this point. I think more emphasis should be placed on U.S.-European relations."

2nd Lt. Christina Heberle, Company A, 1st Battalion, 507th PIR — "I think it will strengthen relations even if they don't get much accomplished. And, there will still be a better rapport between the nations because they are talking."

Department of Engineering and Hcusing workers continue efforts to complete the new One-Stop Processing Soldier Center by their Dec. 22 deadline.

DEH renovates center for soldier processing

By Sharon Reynolds
Bayonet Editor

In the not too distant past, soldiers arriving at a new post were given a list, a rather long list, of places to inprocess and a map of the post and were then sent out on a quest, not unlike a scavenger hunt, to find unfamiliar buildings and activities.

Fortunately, those crude welcomings are a thing of the past at Fort Benning. Soldiers reporting here will be able to complete all their processing in one area called the One-Stop Processing Soldier Center in Splinter Village.

The Department of Engineering and Housing, using in-house manpower and equipment, are working hard to complete the project by their deadline Dec. 22. At 10 a.m. on that day, the post commanding general will cut the ribbon officially opening the center.

At the One-Stop Processing Center, soldiers will be processed into Fort Benning without ever having to leave the comfortable atmosphere of the newly renovated and carpeted waiting rooms and offices, according to Craig Taylor, chief, Buildings and Structures, DEH. Or, he added, in the warmer months, soldiers will be treated to a landscaped outside area with park benches, picnic tables, a fountain and even a small playground for families with children.

Some of the more convenient services at the center include in-out processing for medical and dental health records, a representative from housing for those desiring on-post housing and housing referral for those who don't, utilities can be connected or disconnected, Army Community Services and vehicle registration.

The philosophy behind this and many other post improvement projects comes from the Army's desire to attract and retain quality, skilled personnel by creating a professional and personally fulfilling environment, not only for the soldiers, but for their families as well, Taylor said.

Some people may question the practicality of renovating older buildings. But, he explained, when you consider the number of people who process in and out of Benning, it's well worth the expense.

Besides, a soldier's first impression of a post is usually made at the inprocessing center.

"You never get a second chance to make a good impression," Taylor said.

The days of checklists and "treasure maps" are a thing of the past here. No longer will a soldier be sent out on a quest to still unfamiliar surroundings. He'll be waiting in comfort while he and his family are "welcomed to Fort Benning in style."

New quality control measures may ease storage headaches

Army News Service

From now on, official non-temporary storage of soldiers' household goods may pose far fewer headaches than in years past, thanks to certain quality-control measures now underway.

Army logistics officials report that for the past several months they've been striving to improve the prospect for safe and sound storage of soldiers' household goods.

Here's a rundown on what soldiers can expect from the officials' efforts: — A new plan for inspecting storage facilities. This means that, initially, all warehouses are eing inspected three times a yea. Those warehouses with god inspection scores at the outet are to undergo inspection wice a year. The ones found to have defects will be inspected four times a year. — Test of a new scoring method, which began Oct. 1, 1987. The method ims to speed up termination of those warehouse operations found to be in default of their ontracts with the government. — A regulatory change requiring an engineering environmental survey before a storage facility's acceptance into the Defense Department's non-temporary storage program. Such a survey would focus on verifying the structure and insulation necessary to protect property against mold and mildew. Warehouses currently approved have until May 1989 to meet the survey's new standards.

Benning firefighters give class

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

A train derailment has just occurred. A car containing propane gasoline, erupts in flames. This is a hazardous material fire, which calls for special action.

The Fort Benning Fire Department recently taught a week-long course to fire fighters in the Phenix City-Columbus area on how to react to situations such as the one mentioned above and more.

According to Post Fire Chief Charles Carr, the community is training together so they will be better able react as a team in a hazardous material situation.

"The likelihood of an accident of this nature occuring here is very high," Carr said. "The media carries daily accounts of hazardous material incidents that happen all over the U.S.,"Carr said the Fort Benning site is used because they have the best facilities geared for this type of training.

During the course, the people are taught how to organize, train, equip, and exercise for a hazardous material incident as a first response team.

"A major objective of first responders is to minimize casualities and prevent escalation of the incident, and they have to be well trained in order to fulfill this purpose," Carr said.

"This class is the first step in a coordinated and total program," he said. "Hopefully, the men will take back what they've learned here and teach others."

DOL worker gets first SPIRIT award

By Becky Obert
Bayonet staff writer

Jeanette Zuback was named the winner of the first Spirit of the Year Award at a luncheon last week.

Zuback, the Project SPIRIT coordinator for the Directorate of Logistics, was singled out for her support of the SPIRIT program at Fort Benning.

Col. Richard Dailey, post chief of staff, said in presenting the award that Zuback "maintains a positive attitude concerning the SPIRIT program and is supportive of actions that will enhance and advertise the program."

She is considered "the resident expert in Project SPIRIT by her peers, and her advice and guidance is sought by other SPIRIT coordinators and the installation SPIRIT coordinator," he said.

The occasion was an appreciation banquet at the NCO Club Tuesday, which was organized as a way to say thank you to the persons all over post who serve as Project SPIRIT points of contact. They are responsible for helping other employees file SPIRIT initiatives and forward them to the installation coordinator.

The Chaplain's Office was recognized for submitting the largest number of actions, and the IRAC received an award for submitting the largest amount of dollar savings.

SPIRIT is the umbrella program for capturing and documenting all savings generated at Fort Benning and throughout the Department of the Army, said Sara McLaney, installation coordinator. SPIRIT stands for Systematic Productivity Improvement Review in TRADOC.

Fort Benning is doing well improving productivity, she said. "We submitted $41 million in savings to TRADOC for the post this year. If we win, we could win $1 million to be used in community projects."

TB trains with Bradley Fighting Vehicle in exercise

By Marsha Santiago
ITC correspondent

Bravo and Charlie companies, 1st Battalion, 19th Infantry, 1st Infantry Training Brigade took to the field last week for their end-of-cycle field training exercise. For the first time, the Bradley Fighting Vehicle was incorporated into a One-Station-Unit-Training field exercise.

The 300 soldiers participating in the FTX are from a COHORT battalion being trained for the 1st Battalion, 41st Infantry, 2nd Armored Division (Forward), Garlstadt, Germany. About 30 days after arriving in Germany, the soldiers will participate in a major field problem.

Since the soldiers have a military occupational specialty of 11M, Bradley Fighting Vehicle Infantryman, this FTX was designed to provide tactical experience and better prepare the soldiers for their assignments.

"We wanted to make this as close as possible to what they will face in Germany," said Lt. Col. Sam Matthews, 1st Bn. 19th Inf.commander. "We're trying to make their time as productive as possible on this end."

Matthews continued, "We really appreciate the support the 29th is giving us. I know they are supporting several other major infantry school exercises."

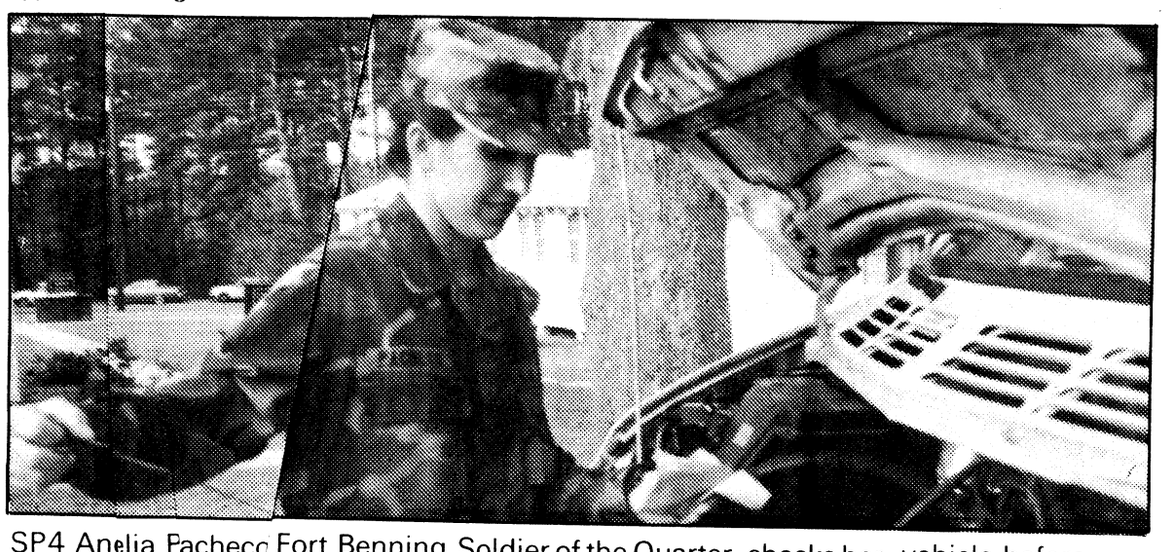
The 29th Infantry Regiment provided five Bradleys, drivers and commanders for the exercise. The vehicles and commanders came from Company C, with Company A providing the Bradley drivers.

The nine-man Bradley crew consists of a driver, a gunner (for the TOW launcher), a squad leader/track commander, an assistant squad leader, an anti-armor specialist, two automatic riflemen, one M-16 rifleman, and a sniper. During the FTX, squads were rotated as Bradley crews so all soldiers would receive realistic training.

As the Bradleys moved through the woods toward their objective, they were engaged by anti-tank weapons including the Russian Sagger. As the Bradleys were moving along the tree line, the soldiers had many opportunities to dismount, engage the enemy position, mount the Bradley at an advance position and move to the next enemy position. As the soldiers moved forward on foot, the Bradley provided fire support for their advance.

Each soldier has an assigned seat in the Bradley. They mount and dismount in a certain order ensuring a fast, smooth operation.

Pvt. 2 James Kopp, Co. C said, "Doing this (the FTX) gives you more confidence in the vehicle itself. I'm more at ease knowing it is something I can rely on."



"This is what you call some high speed stuff!" added Pvt. 1 Michael Impullitti, also of Company C.

The six-man dismount team all agreed they were very pleased to be chosen for an 11M MOS.

"This is what I joined the Army for," said Pvt. 1 Larry Justice.

Capt. Dennis K. Dudley, Co. C commander, said the soldiers

USAITC soldier named Soldier of Quarter

By Marsha Santiago
ITC correspondent

A distribution specialist from the U.S. Army Infantry Training Center has been selected as Fort Benning's Soldier of the Quarter. SP4 Angelia Lea Pacheco, Distribution Operations Center, U.S. Army Infantry Training Center, arrived at Fort Benning one year ago for advanced individual training.

Pacheco's primary mission is to keep distribution for USAITC's headquarters flowing in a timely and efficient manner. She also performs equipment and vehicle maintenance. Troop self help and SSSC inventory clerk are part of her duties as well as special projects.

"I've designed seating charts, hand delivered invitations and helped set up for "dining ins" at the Officers' Club," she said.

A native of DeRidder, La., 27-year-old Pacheco enlisted in the National Guard in March 1986. At the time, she was a sophomore at Louisiana Technical University, Ruston, La., majoring in mechanical engineering, acting as the college yearbook's index editor, working at a college pub as the assistnat manager and doing window displays for a local clothing store.

"I first enlisted in the National Guard to get financial help with school," she said. "During basic training, I enjoyed the challenge so much I asked for a discharge to enter the regular Army. I liked the discipline, being physically active and the satisfaction I felt when I had done a good job

Rappelling challenges Headquarters soldiers

Shawn Bryson
36 Engineer Group correspondent

Soldiers from Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 36th Engineer Group, got the opportunity to [illegible] some challenging training, Todd Field.

The soldiers, whose primary military occupational specialities included clerks, communications drafting and mechanics, spent Dec. 10 learning how to rappel.

The training arranged by Capt. Lawrence Pryor, commander, HHC, was conducted by soldiers of the 187th Infantry Platoon (Pathfinders), 34th Medical Batalion.

The soldiers first attended a class on properly donning a swiss seat before heading to the 25-foot towers for a few warm-up rappels.

Once the soldiers felt comfortable jumping off a tower backwards and gained confidence in their two small ropes that served as their only vehicle to ground, it was time to hit the 90-foot tower.

The majority of the volunteer rappellers enjoyed the trip down the hugh tower, although some seemed more content once they had reached ground level again.

"The training was a lot of fun for most of the soldiers, but it was also a great confidence builder," Pryor said. "It's super when soldiers are given the opportunity to do something different and challenging."

[illegible] mission."

[illegible] completed basic training at Fort McClellan, Ala., where she was a [illegible] and the National Guard honor graduate for her company. She said her biggest personal challenge during basic was the fact that she was the same age or older than her drill sergeants and accustomed to being in a leadership position. The adjustment to a subordinate position was a necessary, but not easy one.

"Seeing the changes in some of the young people who didn't know anything about being on their own when they entered basic was motivating. They became very proficient soldiers," Pacheco said. "It was a great feeling."

While in the National Guard, she worked as an administration clerk, in the S-2 section at Headquarters, 257th Engineer Battalion located at Bossier City, La.

In November 1986, she became Regular Army and entered the eight-week Advanced Individual Training course at Fort Leonard Wood, Mo. She was one of only two females in a company of 350 and the only female squad leader. Pacheco was also the only student in her class to complete every module in her training with all first time "gos."

"I was challenged quite often by the male soldiers, usually from another squad," she said. "My squad was exceptional and very supportive. I couldn't have asked for a better group of guys to work with, but I had to earn their respect first."

Pacheco was awarded the MOS 88M, Motor Transport Operator, upon graduation from AIT. She said she enjoyed learning how to drive the trucks but was grateful when she came to Fort Benning and was assigned to a position in which she could learn more about the Army as a whole.

Until the 1986 Christmas Exodus, Pacheco thought she was headed for Germany.

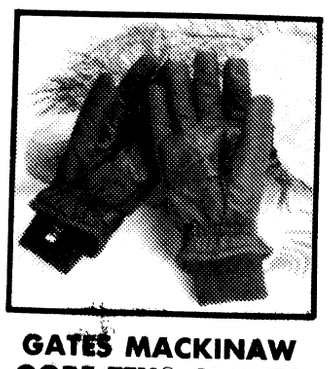
After the holidays, I found out I [illegible] coming to Fort Benning," she said. "I was happy to be stationed here since I could see my children every few months. I also heard this was a good post assignment."

Her two children, Luis Antonio "Tony" Pacheco, II, age 7 and Amanda "Manda" Leanor Pacheco, age 5, live in Shreveport, La., and play an important role in her future plans.

Pacheco's ETS date is Nov. 5, 1988, and she plans to enter the Reserve Officer Training Corps Sumultaneous Membership Program. This will enable her to continue her career as a soldier in the Reserves while completing her degree.

After graduating from college, Pacheco hopes to receive a commission as a Reserve Officer in the Regular Army. If that is not possible, she would be eligible for a commission into the Army Guard or Reserves, but assigned to a post permanently.

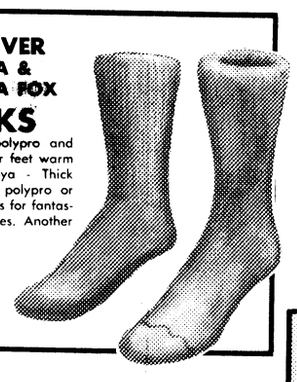
"Having children is the most important influence on my decisions about the Army and my future plans," she said.



Pacheco said she was not nervous about the boards necessary for the competition. The encouragement received from her unit and chain of command gave her all the confidence she needed.

"I felt that even if I didn't win, I could go before the board and present a positive image for ITC," she said. "I knew I was competing against good soldiers. If they weren't outstanding, they wouldn't be there."

Pacheco said the competitors were very supportive of each other during the post board, helping each other review and checking uniforms.



Prior to her selection as Fort Benning Soldier of the Quarter, Pacheco represented USAITC Headquarters at the Association of the United States Army Natonal Convention in Washington, D.C.

Engrs. lay ground work for new fire department

By Shawn Bryson
36th Engineer Group Correspondent

The horizontal construction of the new fire station to be built at the corner of Custer and Engineer roads is now complete, thanks to many hard-working soldiers from the 43rd Engineer Battalion, 36th Engineer Group.

The soldiers from Company C completed the project Dec. 9 two days ahead of their deadline, according to 1st Lt. Leslie B. Butler Earth-Moving Platoon leader and officer-in-charge of the project.

To commend the Charlie soldiers for a job well done, the commander of the U.S. Army Corps of Engneers, Savannah District, Col. Stanley G. Genega, presented a certificate of achievement to Lt. Col. Charles S. Rust, 43rd Engineer Battalion commander. Rust accepted the certificate on behalf of all the soldiers involved with the project.

Butler explained that the work of the soldiers saved the taxpayers close to $125,000.

When the soldiers began work on the site, their mission was to raise the ground surface about 12 feet, according to Butler. However, when the finishing touches were added to the project, the surface had been raised almost 14 feet in most areas.

The first step of the project was to clear the land and establish a borrow pit from which the fill could be obtained, Butler said. "The soldiers stripped about 15 acres of land before distributing the fill," he said. Once the land had been cleared, the scraper operators began scraping the borrow pit, located on Santa Fe Road, and taking the fill to the site.

Each time a load of fill was dropped off, high speed compactors packed it down. It was estimated that more than 1,500 cubic yards of fill were distributed each day, which was equal to 100 to 140 scraper loads a day, according to Butler.

A grand total of 45,000 cubic yards of fill had been transported from the borrow pit, across Custer Road and to the site when the project was completed, Butler said. He added that the total was 25 percent more fill than they had planned on.

Aside from the underestimate of the needed fill, Butler said "The project was a textbook kind of project. All construction standards were met and exceeded, to include quality and safety standards."

Because the scrapers had to cross Custer Road, road guards were posted to insure the safety of the motorists and soldiers. "Despite the estimated 250,000 vehicles directed by the road guards, there were no accidents during the project," Butler said. He added that there were also no lost-time injuries or accidents during the construction.

The hard work of the Charlie soldiers will benefit more than just the Fort Benning community in the long run. The soldiers gained experience in the operation of their equipment and 75 percent of the soldiers in the platoon were cross-trained on equipment outside of their military occupational specialties, according to SSgt. Daniel L. Miller of the Earth Moving Platoon.

The Charlie soldiers also gained experience in carpentry during the project, Butler said. With the raise in the surface of the ground, the soldiers had to add 20 feet to two existing man holes.

The project is now in the hands of the Department of Engineering and Housing. It will be turned over to Lonestar Construction Contractors from Dallas, Texas in January. The fire station is expected to be completed sometime in 1989.

School of Americas graduates last '87 classes

by Marco Morales

The U.S. Army School of the Americas completed another year of training as the final three courses graduated Dec. 11 at Marshall auditorium.

A total 86 officers representing 13 Latin American countries graduated from the Combat Arms Officer Advanced Course, the Combat Oficer Course and the Military Intelligence Course.

Countries with number of graduates represented in the 25-week Combat Arms Officer Advanced Course were Bolivia 2, Costa Rica 4, Ecuador 6, Guatemala 4, Panama 4, Paraguay 1, Dominican Republic 2, and Venezuela 3.

This course is designed to prepare senior lieutenants and captains for duty as company commanders and unit staff officers in a battalion or brigade.

Thirty Salvadoran officers graduated from the 11-week Combat Officer Course designed specifically for El Salvador. The course offers practical training on company and battalion-level tactics including offensive and defensive operations, field artillery employment and internal defense and development, which centers on psychological operations.

Countries and graduates in the Military Intelligence course were Bolivia 2, Colombia 2, Costa Rica 3, Ecuador 3, El Salvador 11, Guatemala 2, Honduras 5, Mexico 1, and Venezuela 1.

This course qualifies selected officers for duty as tactical intelligence staff officers in a conventional or unconventional war environment.

The 10-week course includes instruction in intelligence planning, the intelligence cycle, intelligence preparation of the battlefield, employee management, intelligence security, electronic warfare, tactical counterintelligence, the enemy threat and internal defense and development.

Guest speaker for this tri-course consolidated graduation ceremony was Col. John F. Stewart, director of intelligence, U.S. Southern Command (Panama).

USARSA graduated 1,199 students in calendar year 1987. Since arriving at Fort Benning in November 1984 from its previous home in Panama, USARSA has graduated 3,307 students from 15 Latin American countries.

Be jolly but beware says PMO

Provost Marshal's Office

"Tis the season for jolliness and good cheer."

It's also the season for the unsuspecting, the trusting and the gullible to be ripped off, to become another police blotter statistic, listed under "unsolved crimes."

While we may be bubbling over with peace and goodwill toward our fellow man, some of our fellow men are figuring out the best way to separate us from our hard-earned goods.

At Fort Benning, commissary employees are already reminding women shoppers not to leave their purses unattended in their grocery carts while they browse through the shelves looking for fruit cake fixings.

Shoppers who don't have trunks in their cars to hide packages, should think twice before leaving them unattended. Eight seconds is all it takes to break into a car and remove the contents.

Pickpockets, too, are out in force, reveling in the crowds that force people close together, to bump and jostle one another.

Neither are scam artists idle. Recently, a lady in Atlanta put up $3,000 earnest money so she could share in a $54,000 find.

The culprits told her the money was needed to see if it was counterfeit. After turning the money over, she was dropped off at a lawyer's office to sign some paperwork. There was no lawyer.

The next day, a police detective called to say he was working on the case. (She'd never notified the police.) He said he suspected a bank employee was involved and asked her to withdraw another $3,000.

The lady, who told the real police later she'd lost all faith in mankind, ended up losing $6,000.

The old axiom, "if it's too good to be true, then it probably is," also applies to Christmas time. There are no free rides, even at this time of year.

Don't let someone ruin your Christmas season by ripping you off. Protect your money, guard packages and have a happy holiday season.

Precautions reduce threat of cold

By Becky Ray
Energy Awareness Office

The old saying, "an ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure" is often true and seems especially appropriate regarding freeze damage. With the onset of winter and predictions for much more severe weather ahead, it's important to take precautions to reduce the threat of freeze damage. In past years at Fort Benning, cold weather has caused many thousands of dollars in damage to all types of facilities, usually from broken water pipes. Cold air causes water inside the pipes to freeze and expand, bursting the pipe as it thaws. Water from broken pipes can cause serious structural damage. In a ceiling, for example, water released from a broken pipe can collect and cause the entire ceiling to collapse.

Fortunately, simple precautions can prevent burst pipes. Family housing residents should be alert to weather reports for hard freeze warnings. Pipes in unheated areas and those exposed to outside air should be insulated. Outside faucets are also susceptible to freezing and should be insulated as well. Opening cabinet doors under sinks where pipes are near exterior walls allows the pipes to remain at near room temperature. During periods of extreme cold when water is not used regularly, allow a small amount of water to drip from faucets to prevent water from freezing in the pipes.

If going away for vacation, leave a key with a neighbor and ask him or her to check the apartment for broken or frozen pipes if a hard freeze occurs. In addition to possibly preventing any freeze damage, repair personnel will be able to gain easy access to the quarters if a repair needs to be made.

If a pipe does burst, try to locate the nearest cut-off valve and turn the water off. Then call the Work Order Section at 545-2135. Operators are on duty 24 hours a day. Please have the correct building and be prepared to give the exact location of the break — this can save time. During extreme weather conditions the phone lines may be very busy so please be patient if you are asked to hold.

Preventing frozen pipes takes little time and effort and can be an important investment when compared to the consequences of not being prepared.

Family Housing residents can get insulation materials from the Self Help Program. It offers foam insulation for pipes and freeze caps (insulating covers for outside faucets) to troop and family housing occupants. The Self Help office is located in building 385 on Vibbert Avenue and is open for troop issue from 7:45 a.m. to 4:15 p.m. Family Housing issue hours are 9 a.m. to 4:15 p.m. For more information call 545-3633.

Foreign students experience America

Marco Morales

First impressions count.

When allied military students from Central and South America and the Caribbean arrive at the Columbus, Ga., metro airport, they receive first impressions of a typical southeastern city in the United States.

Those students then travel about 18 miles to Fort Benning where they will attend courses in Spanish at the U.S. Army School of the Americas (USARSA).

Currently in its 44th year of operation, USARSA boasts more than 49,000 graduates from its training departments. Most of USARSA's business comes from Central and South Ameican countries, especially from Colombia, Honduras and El Salvador.

"My first impressions of being in the U.S. were eye-opening and exciting," said third-year Salvadoran Military Academy Cadet Roberto E. Flores. "You hear stories in El Salvador about 'life in the U.S. from people who have been here," he said, adding, "We've toured many places here including the Columbus Historic Districts, Six Flags Over Georgia and others."

Fores' experiences at these places were made possible by the Army's Information Program (IP).

"Students who receive training here from Latin America have very little free time on weekdays," said Yolanda Hagberg, allied student program assistant at USARSA. "So, a lot of what they see here happens during weekends," she said.

The IP is part of the International Military Education and Training (IMET) program. IMET funds are security assistance monies approved by the U.S. military training by selected allied countries.

Part of the IP's goal is to show allied students the diversity of life in the U.S. "This includes exposing them to our government's way of doing things," Hagberg said, adding, "We take them on local governmen tours, shopping malls, sporting events, agricultural centers, universities, industrial organizatins and expose them to civilian media operations such as the Cable News Network in Atlanta."

Hagberg spoke on how some students have compared living in Latin America to living here.

"They are often awestruck with things we, as U.S. citizens, take for granted," she said.

"The Reserve Officers Training Corps program is one area they asked a lot about," Hagberg said.

"As is common in many Latin American countries, their in-country military academy is the only place their young men can attend to receive a commission as an officer," she said. "These same officers thought that West Point was our only source for commissioning offi-

CHAMPUS claims deadline approaches

CHAMPUS

The end-of-year deadline for filing CHAMPUS claims is near.

Service families, and civilian health care providers, have only until Dec. 31 to file claims with CHAMPUS for civilian care received — or provided — in 1986. If you received (or provided) care in 1987, you have until the end of 1988 to file your CHAMPUS claims for '87.

Don't forget: If you received, or prvided, civilian health care in 1986 and haven't filed a claim with CHAMPUS yet, your claim must be filed with, and in the hands of, your state's claims processor by Dec. 31 of this year (1987)

Also remember that the claim is filed with the processor who serves the state in which you received (or provided) care. For example, if you received care in Tesas and now live in Colorado, the claim must be sent to the claims processor responsible for Texas claims. If you don't know where to send the claim, contact the Health Benefits Advisor at the nearest military medical facility for more information.

COURT REPORT

Staff Judge Advocate's Office

A Fort Benning drill sergeant was convicted recently of two counts of rape, netting him a 35-year prison sentence.

SSgt. Donald E. Harris, formerly assigned to Company D, 2nd Battalion, 58th Infantry, 2nd Infantry Training Brigade, U.S. Army Infantry Training Center, was also sentenced to a dishonorable discharge, total forfeiture of all pay and allowances and reduction to Pvt. 1.

The 17-year Army veteran was convicted of raping his 14-year-old step-daughter. The first offense happened in a remote area of Harmony Church, the second at Harris' military quarters; both were carried out at knife-point.

Harris will serve his sentence at the U.S. Army Disciplinary Barracks at Fort Leavenworth, Kansas.

On Dec. 9, Pvt. 2 James K. West, a soldier assigned to Headquarters & Headquarters Company, 2nd Battalion, 18th Infantry, 197th Infantry Brigade, was convicted by a special courtmartial of larceny.

West, using an automatic teller machine card belonging to another soldier, withdrew $160 from the soldiers account without his permission.

He was sentenced to a bad conduct discharge, reduction to Pvt. 1, forfeiture of $438 a month for four months and confinement for three months. His confinement will be served at the Fort Benning Confinement Facility.

ASK THE JUDGE

By Ollie M. Mick
Staff Judge Advocate's Office

Q: I have already received some of the bills for my Christmas shopping. I don't remember making some of the charges for which I am being billed. Is there some way I can check on the accuracy of the charges before I pay them?

A: Yes. The Federal Trade Commission advises reviewing all billing statemtents before making payment, especially after the holidays. Errors do occur, but they are simple to resolve if you know how to use the Fair Credit Billing Act. Under this law, you must send the creditor a written notice about the problem to avoid paying for any disputed charges. Many consumers don't know this. Many people are inclined to pick up the phone and call the company to correct a billing problem. You can do this if you wish, but phoning does not trigger the legal safeguards provided under the Fair Credit Billing Act.

To be protected under the law, here's what you need to do:

Write the bank or retailer who issued the card. Your notice must be received within 60 days after the bill containing the error was mailed. In your letter, include: your name and account number, the date, type and dollar amount of the charge you are disputing, and why you think there was a mistake. Be sure to keep a copy for your own records.

Make sure you send the letter to the correct office address. Frequently, you can determine the proper address by looking on your bill for a heading such as : "send inquiries to." Do not put your letter in the same envelope as your payment. To make sure the creditor receives your letter, you may also wish to send it by certified mail.

If you follow the above requirements, here is what the creditor is then required to do:

Acknowledge your letter in writing within 30 days after it is received, unless the problem has been resolved within that time.

Conduct a reasonable investigation, and, within 90 days, either explain why the bill is correct, or correct the mistake.

Include documents showing the charge was correct, if you asked for "proof" in your letter and if the creditor states that the bill is correct.

The creditor cannot close your account just because you disputed a bill under the law.

If you continue to have problems you might wish to seek legal advice from you Legal Assistance Office, or contact the Feceral Trade Commission, Room 720, Washington, D.C. 20580.

INFORMIX* AT WORK

A 4-Day Seminar

An in-depth, hands on, instructor-led seminar that helps you create a responsive, interactive database of organizationally related information. Rather than learning from confusing computer manuals, this course gives you basic principles and concepts crucial to your understanding of Informix through a combination of lectures and hands on exercises.

The primary instructor will be Christopher P. Seale, the author of Informix at Work. Our organization specializes in training government employees; so you will find that all the illustrations, examples, and exercises are from the government arena rather than some non-relevant business examples.

SEMINAR BENEFITS

Upon completion of this seminar, you will be able to do the following:
— utilize professional database design techniques
— design user oriented customized screens
— utilize multiple approaches to retrieving and displaying data
— exchange data between Informix and other programs
— design complete professional applications

WHO SHOULD ATTEND THIS SEMINAR

This seminar is extremely beneficial to professionals who need to develop applications utilizing Informix or to those individuals who need to understand the limits and capabilities of Informix.

LOCATION AND TIMES

This seminar will be presented in Columbus on the following dates:
January 19-22, 1988
February 16-19, 1988

The hours will be from 8:00 AM to 5:00 PM. In order to provide the students with the maximum amount of training time, breaks and lunch will be provided.

COURSE FEE: The course fee is $585.00 per attendee and includes the cost of the seminar/workshop, workbook, a diskette with application examples and all meeting materials.

Call White-Seale at 404-948-8584 for enrollment information.

"Operation Holiday"

An extended hand of cheer for Fort Benning personnel from the tri-city community.

The local chapter of the Association of the U.S. Army has again teamed with Columbus and Phenix City businesses, churches and individuals to make the holidays cheerier for Fort Benning personnel who'll remain on duty during the season. For those soldiers, Christmas and New Year's can be bleak and lonely times. That's where AUSA and our community come in. AUSA has assembled another full schedule of activities for the hundreds of troops staying here, including tours of participating firms, religious services, meals and trips to sporting events, trips made possible through financial contributions from various business firms.

As a participating firm, The Ledger-Enquirer Newspapers will host about 40 soldiers for tours and refreshments. We're pleased to take part. And we always like to further public awareness of this wonderful annual event, recognizing the involvement and commitment of so many businesses and individuals to Ft. Benning. The schedule below tells a rich story, full of the true spirit of the season.

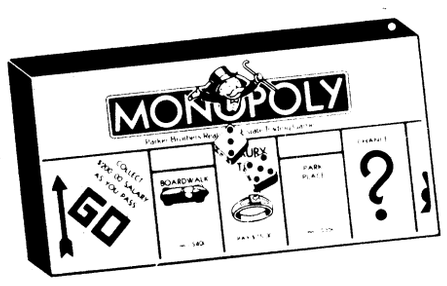
had done extremely well during the FTX. Most squads were receiving "gos" from the evaluators. Drill sergeants conducted after-action reviews throughout the exercise to correct any problem areas and further enhance training.

"Up to this point, they have been trained as individuals. The whole intent of the field problem is to give soldiers a chance to work as a squad as close to normal operations of a tactical unit as possible," Dudley added.



Pvt. 1 Morris Johnson and Pvt. 2 Louis Gibson, both of Co. C, said the FTX seemed very realistic and gave them more confidence about what they would face in Germany.

The COHORT soldiers graduated from OSUT this morning during a ceremony at Wetherby Field. After holiday leaves, the fully qualified Bradley infantrymen will report to the 1st/41st Inf. in Germany.

Accident brings victim closer to life

By Marco Morales
USARSA Public Affairs Office

When MSgt. Ed Chapa woke up the morning of Oct. 17, the farthest thing from his mind was being involved in a car accident.

A man fervently dedicated to his job, family and, perhaps more than an average person, to the community Chapa was on his way to Bibb City, Ga., that morning to attend a Youth Activities soccer meeting for appointed commissioners.

Awaiting a traffic snarl on I-185 in Columbus, Chapa's car was suddenly and unexpectedly rammed from behind by another car travelling at about 60 mph.

"When I arrived at the hospital, I was examined and treated for cuts, X-rayed, then told to go home," Chapa said. The following day, he received a phone call requesting him to report immediately to the hospital.

"The radiologist found I had a damaged vertabrae and hair-line fracture in my neck," he said.

Now Chapa has a 20 percent neuro-muscular disability on his left side.

Several weeks of excruciating pain and traction devices in and around his head and neck haven't slowed the brawny Chapa down. "I walk to and from work every day," Chapa said of his four-mile trek. "Not because I'm scared of being in a car, but because I feel it will strengthen me as an individual," he said.

Chapa is the noncommissioned officer in charge, Directorate of Training and Doctrine at the U.S. Army School of the Americas. "I can't be lying still for too long. The accident has given me a new perspective on life," he said, adding with a grin, "at least until the new YAC sports season starts up again."

Chapa, his wife, Christela and their two sons, Erasmo and Maximiano were recently awarded as one of Fort Benning's Great Amercian Families for their many noteworthy contributions as a family to the communities where the Chapas have been assigned including Fort Benning, Columbus and Phenix City.

"I don't think my family has suffered as a result of my wife being involved in voluntary work in the community," Chapa said. "Families today suffer from situations where both parents have to work, resulting in lack of attention for their children," he said. "The children who suffer most today are between ages nine and 13."

"Just the other day as I walked home, I noticed a large group of 13-15 year olds gathered at one of main post's baseball fields," Chapa said. "Upon talking to a few of them whom I knew as younger kids, I found out they were all 'just hangin' around'. At the same time, I looked across the field and saw two teams playing soccer, and realized these same kids with nothing to do could be involved in something positive like playing sports instead of things that could get them in trouble."

A 24-year Army veteran, Chapa has an associates degree in business administration from the University of Maryland. He has coached baseball, basketball and football and has even played one season of professional baseball with the Houston Astros farm-league team in his native state, Texas.

"I feel a deep concern for the Army family," he said. "I see big cutbacks in most of our people-oriented programs and, as a result, Army children and families suffer."

Chapa has also volunteered his time as a Scout master in the Boy Scouts of America, a commander of the Veterans of Foreign Wars — Post 100 in Panama and as a member of the Drug and Alcohol Human Relations Advisory Counsels.

His wife, Christela or "Chris", is also highly involved in many church and community projects including the Army's Community Services Handicapped Special Children program.

How do the Chapa's find time to manage their own lives?

"We help each other out and prioritize whatever we are involved in," Chapa said. "If you build a solid foundation on which your family can work around early in a marriage and teach your children to communicate with you and each other, everything else in life can be dealt with accordingly," Chapa concluded.

Follow an unbelted driver through an auto accident

National Safety Council

The following is a slow-motion, split-second reconstruction of what happens when an unbelted driver crashes into a solid, immovable tree at 55 mph.

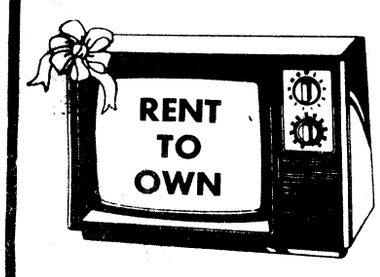
One-tenth of a second: The front bumper and chrome "frosting" of the grillwork collapses. Slivers of steel penetrate the tree to a depth of one half inch or more.

Two-tenths of a second: The hood crumbles as it rises, smashing into the windshield. Spinning rear wheels leave the ground. The front fenders come into contact with the tree, forcing the rear parts out over the front door. The heavy structural members of the car begin to act as a brake on the terrific forward momentum of the two-and-a-half-ton car. But the driver's body continues to move forward at the vehicle's original speed (20 times normal force of gravity, his body weight is about 3,200). His legs, ramrod straight and snap at the knee joints.

Three-tenths of a second: The driver's body is now off the seat, torso upright, broken knees pressing against the dashboard. The plastic and steel frame of the steering wheel begins to bend under his terrible death grip. His head is now near the sun visor, his chest above the steering column.

Four-tenths of a second: The car's front 24 inches have been demolished, but the rear end is still traveling at an estimated speed of 35 mph. The body of the driver is still traveling 55 mph. The rear end of the car, like a bucking horse, rises high enough to scrape bark off low branches.

Five-tenths of a second: The driver's near-frozen hands bend the steering column into an almost vertical position. The force of gravity crushes his chest against the steering wheel, rupturing arteries. Blood spurts into his lungs.



Six-tenths of a second: The driver's feet are ripped from his shoes. The brake pedal shears off at the floor boards. The chassis bends in the middle, shearing body

Money problems? Everyone has money problems. Too many bills, unexpected expenses, dream vacations, or just plain lack of.

To help educate soldiers on how to manage their monies, the Army Community Service, Consumer Affairs and Financial Assistance Program offer special programs. Counseling and assistance are available on the subjects of consumer education, personal finance and family budget matters.

Budget classes include sure-pay training, check writing, budgeting, and credit and debt liquidation. Information is also provided on Army Emergency Relief, Food Stamps and Women, Infant and Children Programs. The classes are available for unit briefings.

Budget classes or counseling appointments may be scheduled by calling 545-5516/4357 or 544-3917.

The Consumer Affairs and Financial Assistance Program serves the soldier, family members, retirees and widows.

Abandoned animals: The pet impoundment/adoption facility is located behind the post veterinary clinic. Unidentifiable stray pets are held only three days before disposition. Personnel interested in viewing animals need to check with the veterinary clinic personnel. Every year 500-600 pets are impounded. Many of these pets make excellent companions and family members.

Rabies vaccination recall: Dogs and cats that received their most recent rabies shots from the post veterinary clinic during Oct. 1, 1984 through Aug. 13, 1986 and June 8, 1987 through Sept. 1, 1987 must be revaccinated (at no cost) as soon as possible. Bring your pet, rabies certificate and records if we don't already have them to the post veterinary clinic during normal clinic hours for confirmation and revaccination. No appointment is needed for revaccination. No other services will be provided. Monday, 8-11 a.m. and 1-2:30 p.m., and Friday 8-11 a.m. Saturday clinics will be announced. Memorial services contain message

Becky Obert

A soldier takes part in a recent memorial service. The services were held for soldiers who have died in accidents.

By Becky Obert
Bayonet staff writer

Chaplains at the 2nd Brigade, 10th Mountain Division, have come up with a unique way to get the safety message across to soldiers.

Starting last Friday, and continuing this week, the chaplains have been conducting a series of memorial services for 2nd Brigade soldiers who have died in automobile accidents.

Last week, they remembered Sgt. Enoch Peagler, of Company B, 3rd Battalion, who died Dec. 27, 1985, and Sgt. Robert Dillard of Headquarters and Headquarters Company, who died June 15, 1986. Both soldiers were killed in automobile accidents in which alcohol was involved.

Chap. (Capt.) Donald Wilson, chaplain for HHC, 2/14th, who conducted one of the memorial services last week, told soldiers at Sand Hill Chapel #4 that they need to think about what can happen to them if they choose to drink and drive.

"There are things we can do nothing about, and people die every day through no fault of their own," he said. "But we can choose to buckle our seat belts, we can choose not to drink and drive, we can choose not to drive when we're tired."

He urged young soldiers present to choose life. "Life is brief at its best, but we can make choices that extend that time," Wilson said.

At the end of the service, the soldiers stood for roll call. When Dillard's name was called, he did not answer. Those assembled then stood silently in remembrance as the chapel filled with the sound of a mournful trumpet wailing Taps, followed by the firing of a three-gun salute.

"We may not know when we will die, but we can be ready for that time," Wisdom said. In the closing prayer, he asked God to "help us think and do what is right this holiday season."

Although it was not said, it was clear that the service was designed to remind soldiers that this memorial service could be for them, if they chose to drink and drive. The soldiers seemed to get the message. While the men of Headquarters and Headquarters and B companies had come marching in, they left the chapel slowly, solemnly, thoughtfully.

"If we can save our soldiers' lives through this type of service, then they are well worth it," Wisdom said.

The services will continue until all the soldiers in the 10th Mountain Division have had an opportunity to attend.

Jews celebrate Hanukkah

By Christopher H. Wisdom
197th Support Battalion Chaplain

For all of us winter is a season of darkness. We go to work before the sun is up and come home after it has set. But in this season of longest nights and shortest days, Hanukkah and Christmas shine brightly as "holidays of light."

The word Hanukkah means "rededication". These holy days commemorate a time in Jewish history when God's temple had been desecrated and its light had been quenched. Hanukah recalls the brave deeds of those who fought to rededicate the temple and rekindle its lamp. The Talmud teaches that the lamp miraculously burned for eight days, although they had only enough holy oil for one day.

Hence, Hanukkah is also called "The Festival of Lights.". On each of the eight nights of Hanukkah, one candle is lit on the Menorah, the Hanukkah candleholder, by the Shamas, or helper candle. Each year Jews place the lighted Menorah in their windows as a rededication of their faith in the miracle of Hanukkah and their belief that God will also protect them as He did their fathers.

Likewise, for Christians, Christmas is a holiday of light. The Gospel of John teaches that God's full and free Light has come through the birth of Jesus into a sin-darkened world. Christians believe that Jesus has come as God's Christ, to dwell with them, to die for their sins and to rededicate them to God.

To those who believe, Christ is God's unquenchable Light, and His indestructible Temple. For although men tried ultimately to put out Christ's Light through death, New Testament authors declare that God raised up the temple of Christ's body from death. (John 2:19-22).

Christmas means light and hope for Christians because the Gospel writers teach that Christ now rules from heaven and will return to dwell with us in glory forever (Revelation 21:22,23). Believers rejoice that even today, Christ dwells with His people and shines as their Light in the darkness of this present evil world.

Yes, even in these short days and long nights of winter, the light of faith still brightens the season for Jews and Christians alike. For God's Light is not like the holiday lights that twinkle and blink for a few days each year. No, this season celebrates the shining of God's Light and the certainty of His Presence even in our dark world of tyranny and injustice.

"And the light shines in the darkness, and the darkness has not overcome it." (John 1:5)

Main Post Sunday School presents Christmas program

By Amanda Thornton

Main Post Sunday School presented its annual Christmas Program to an audeince of proud parents and friends recently. This activity was in lieu of the regular Sunday school classes, which are held at 9:30 a.m. each Sunday at the Religious Education Center Building 229.

Mrs. Hicks, the devotional leader, began the program by lighting the third candle of the Advent wreath. The nursery, pre-kindergarten and kindergarten classes combined in singing two Christmas carols. The 1st graders sang "Joy to the World." The 2nd graders presented a play, "Christmas Stars". And the 3rd graders sang two songs to the piano-accompaniment of two class members.

The 4th grade class sang a carol and read Luke 1:46-55. The 5th grade class performed a skit, "The Light." The 6th grade class read Mark 2:1-12. The junior high students performed a skit written by one of its members, Marvin Brooks. The seniors served as masters/mistresses of cermony and performed a "commercial-break" skit. Members of the adult class led the audience in a familiar Christmas carol.

A special treat was a nativity scene, which childen of Sightseeing Road Chapel performed, while SP4 Robbins sang an inspirational hymn about the birth of Jesus Christ.

Some contributers to the success of this event were: Mrs. Sandaval, Mrs. Smith, Mrs. Tullia, Mrs. Person, Mrs. Nifong, Mrs. Langford, Mrs. Sines, Mrs. Redfoot, Mr. Hale, Mrs. Phelps, Mrs. Burton, Mrs. Clarke, Mrs. Treude, Cpt. Kadesch, Chap. (Cpt.) Laigaie, Mrs. Godwin, and Mrs. Bixler.

After the program REC hosted a reception for all and gave gifts to the children.

Religious Library stocks variety of resourse materials

The Religious Education Library, located at the Religious Education Center, Crain Hall, building 229, is an excellent religious resource library. It consists of a collection of Protestant, Catholic an Jewish books availablefor use by all Fort Benning personnel.

For Chaplains, there are books on sermon preparation and counseling.

Sunday School and Bible study teachers/leaders can find many teaching resources such as commentaries, word studies, Bible dictionaries, flannel graph materials and large teaching pictures.

Personnel not in the above categories, can enjoy many hours of personal study and enlightenment through use of the library.

The hours of operation are Monday-Friday, 8 a.m.-5 p.m. Everyone is welcomed to use the Religious Education Library, 545-2366.

Hanukkah means rededication

By Craig L. Allen
TSB Chapel

At sundown Tuesday, Jews throughout the world began the eight-day celebration of Hanukkah.

Like all Jewish holidays, there is both an historical and a spiritual significance to Hanukkah, reflecting the over-riding Jewish view that God is a God of history who reveals His presence and purpose through His continual earthly involvement in the affairs of humanity. Historical events are evidence, in context, of divine order and intent.

The central theme of Hanukkah is religious freedom. The festival commemorates the successful revolt of the Jews (led by Judah Maccabee) against the Syrians in 165-163 B.C.E. Antiochas, the king of the occupying Syrian Army, had forbidden the study of Judaism under penalty of death.

This act prompted the rebellion that ultimately reestablished Jewish autonomy in Palestine until the beginning of the Roman occupation in 63 B.C.E. Historians tell us that this was actually the first recorded war fought for religious freedom (1st and 2nd books of the Maccabees).

A beautiful legend tells of the rededication of the holy temple in 163 B.C.E. after its defilement by the Syrians. Upon reentering the temple for the first time, the Maccabees found only enough holy oil to keep the eternal light burning for one day.

However, we are told that "a great miracle happened there," and the oil burned for eight days, allowing the priest enough time to procure more so as to be able to maintain the continuous burning of the lamp as commanded in the Bible.

It is in remembrance of this event that Jewish families light a progressive number of candles in the Menorah (candelabra) for the eight nights of Hanukkah.

cers in our Army. They had no idea how diversified our country is with so many universities offering ROTC to our young people," said Hagberg.

The USARSA IP consists of two other functions aside from taking students on tours. Those functions are the Sponsorship Program (SP) and other sociocultural events such as incomng class receptions.

"The SP is a hospitality program designed to provide the allied students, guest instructors and their families with civilian sponsors in order to become better acquainted with life and customs here," Hagberg said.

According to Hagberg, a family from the local community agrees to take a genuine interest in an instructor or student, and his family and help them get to know and understand American people by giving them an opportunity to participate in home and community events.

"Latin American families will interpret America to their countrymen in terms o the sponsor's family," Hagberg said. "A friendly relationship can be far-reaching in the effort toward international understanding, she said.

Hagberg said new sponsors are in constant demand. "We highly encourage and welcome new sponsors for our incoming students, especially at the beginning each year," Habgerg said. "Our longest course, the command and general staff course, begins in January. Many of these students bring their families with them and desperately need someone to show them around the local area —even if it's just to become familiar with the local shopping malls," she said.

Hagberg added that many guest instructors also rotate back to Latin America during December.

"A guest instructor's tour of duty with USARSA is from 18 months to two years," she said.

Persons interested in sponsoring a family should contact the USARSA Allied Training Office at 545-1524/1525.

"Many people think that sponsoring a Latin American family means having a thorough knowledge of the Spanish language and Latin American culture," said Hagberg, adding, "This isn't true. We welcome anyone who wants to sponsor a family. In fact, most guest instructors and students want to learn English."

67th Maintenance celebrates holidays

By Amanda Thornton
67th Maintenance Bn.

After three months of planning, fund-raising, and preparing, approximately 800 soldiers and family members of the 67th Maintenance Battalion gathered in Indianhead gymnasium Dec. 10, to celebrate the holiday season.

Back in September, the officers' and enlisted wives from Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 533rd Transportation Company, 598th Maintenance Company, and the 608th Ordnance Company, set a goal of raising $1,000 for this annual event. Through various fundraisers, the ladies ended up with over $1,200.

The event had a carnival atmosphere — with clowns, Santa's helpers, elves, balloon men, a story teller, a craft table, entertainment and Christmas music. But right from the start it was obvious that the show-stopper would be Santa Claus himself. At the beginning of the evening his big, winged chair sat empty on an elevated platform awaiting his arrival.

After dinner the big moment arrived. The battalion commander, Lt. Col. Charles R. Thornton, announced the arrival of Santa Claus. The air was heavy with anticipation. The long line had already formed when the jolly old elf arrived. Santa spent the next one and a half hours listening to Christmas wishes, handing out gifts, and posing for photographs with children — and adults.

bolts. The driver's head smashes into the windshield. The rear of the car begins its downward fall, spinning wheels digging into the ground.

Seven-tenths of a second: The entire writhing body of the car is forced out of shape. Hinges tear, doors spring open. In one last convulsion, the seat rams forward, pinning the driver against the cruel steel of the steering shaft. Blood leaps from his mouth; shock has frozen his heart. The driver is now dead.

Elapsed time: only seven-tenths of a second.

EIB is infantryman's symbol of excellence

By Becky Obert
Bayonet staff writer

It's a cool December morning, but SP4 Scott Klinefelter is sweating.

Maybe it's the layer of camouflage paint on his face that makes him hot, or the full combat uniform he's wearing. Or it might be the sniper hidden on the hill 200 meters away who's firing at him.

It's called individual movement techniques, this crawling, tumbling and rolling from one fighting position to the next, trying to make it from the start line to the finish line of the test area.

For Klinefelter, it's the next-to-the-last station of the Expert Infantryman Badge test, and for him, this station's a "go."

For the soldiers of the 10th Mountain Division, it's worth sweating for, this badge featuring a silver rifle on a blue background. For combat veterans, it's encircled by a silver wreath that means they've seen combat.

For infantrymen, earning this badge means they are at the top of their profession, that all the training has paid off in shaping superior soldiers who are in full command of the skills required in their profession.

"The EIB is a sign of excellence for infantrymen. It shows that he is the best in his field," said SFC Jerry Brown.

Brown is working as a tactical operations center controller, processing soldiers as they report to the Eagle's Nest training area to begin testing, checking their scores on the previous day's roster and collecting score cards for today's tests.

"We started out on Monday with about 210 soldiers from the 2nd Battalion, 2nd Brigade, 10th Mountain Division, and now (on Friday) are down to about 25," he said.

A lot of people flunked out of the testing during the land navigation phase this year, he said. It doesn't take much to earn a failing grade here.

"They are graded on a pass, fail system," he said. "If they fail, they get a "no go" and three "no gos" means they're out."

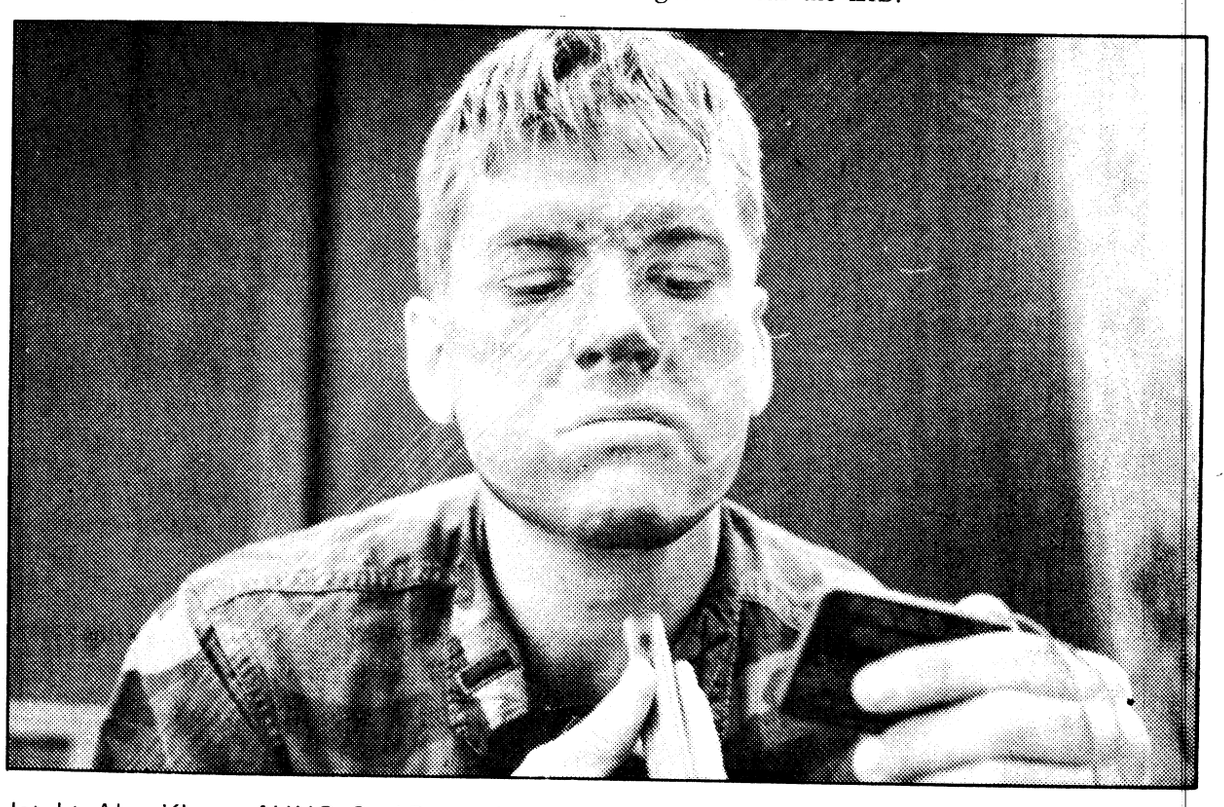
Soldiers get a second chance to complete the first two stations they fail, but the third failure means "try again next year."

If it seems like a tough standard to meet, it is. "It's what the Army expects of them, that they master the skills required of the infantry profession," Brown explained.

The 28 stations encompass all the basic infantry skills, including weapons proficiency, first aid, grenade throwing, claymore firing, the TOW, land reconnaissance and land navigation.

It's not supposed to be easy, Brown said, because surviving in combat is not easy.

He said 10th Mountain Division soldiers below the rank of master sergeant are required to take the test twice a year. But that doesn't diminish their desire to win the badge.



"I want it," said SP4 Michael Shoulders of Company B, 2nd Battalion, 14th Infantry, 10th Mountain Division. "If you get it, it shows that you are good at what you do."

SP4 Terry Smith, also of Co. B, said he "wouldn't mind having it. It's going to look pretty good on my uniform," he said, jokingly. Turning serious, he admitted, "I think I'll get a lot more respect when I wear it."

PFC Eric Watson, only three stations away from success, said he spent a lot of time preparing for the test. He said the night land navigation was hard for him. "It's not just finding points; you also have to tell what kind of terrain the point was on," he said.

When it was all over, six 2nd Battalion soldiers had earned the badge.

For Klinefelter, the heat was off and the badge was ready to be sewn on. He's earned the right to wear the EIB.

Safety tips help make winter driving safer

Liberty Mutual

Driving your car during the winter months doesn't have to be a traumatic experience. But, don't fool yourself into thinking an accident can only happen to someone else. Sleet, snow and ice can force any car off the road, unless you are prepared.

To help you travel more safely this winter, the following expert driving tips are provided.

The Tire Trick — The tread of your tires should be at least 1/16" deep. An easy way to check the tread depth is to use a penny. Hold the coin Lincoln-side up, and insert it into one of the grooves, head first. If the tread is deep enough, you will not be able to see the top of Lincoln's head. If you can see the top of his head, your tread is too shallow, and you need to replace your tires.

An Overweight Car — Many people will put a bag of sand, or some other type of weight, in their trucks to increase their cars' traction. Although adding weight to the rear of the car may increase traction somewhat, a heavier car requires a longer distance to stop and may not handle as well on snow-covered, icy roads. In addition, it doesn't help to put weight in the rear of a front-wheel-drive car. It won't increase the traction.

Inflationary Pressure — Another common misconception is that letting some air out of your tires will give the car more traction. In truth, every time the temperature outside goes down by 10 degrees, the air pressure in your tires decreases about one pound per square inch. Therefore, decreasing the air pressure in your tires could leave them underinflated and decrease traction and steering ability. Check your tire pressures regularly during the winter.

Skid Control — If your car begins to skid, don't panic. Jamming your foot on the brake pedal is the worst thing to do. You should use a "stab" or "pumping" technique instead of slamming on the brakes. Give the brakes a series of quick thrusts to slow the car down. Steer the car in the direction you want it to go. For example, if you are skidding towards the right shoulder of the road, stab your brakes and turn the wheel of the car to the left.

Belts Are Not Accessories — Always wear a safety belt. Wearing a safety belt doubles your chances of surviving a car crash. They can also keep you securely in your seat during a skid.

These five points are very important to keep in mind, but don't overlook rountine maintenance. Liberty Mutual reminds you to: have your battery, brakes, windshield wipers, defroster, anti-freeze and exhaust system carefully checked and be sure to use an anti-freezing windshield washer fluid.

Practicing these safety tips will increase your chances of avoiding an accident this winter.

Christmas time calls for extra safety precautions

Fort Benning Fire Department

Christmas trees: The traditional evergreen tree is a dangerous fire hazard.

When selecting a tree, ensure that it has springy branches and green tight needles. A good method to test the freshness of a tree is to strike the butt against the ground to be sure that no needles fall off.

When you take your tree home, be sure to keep the butt immersed in water. This will slow the drying-out process. Should you decide to use an artificial tree, make sure that it has been treated with a fire retardant substance.

Decorations: Before using your electric lights, check each string to ensure that there are no loose or broken sockets or exposed wiring. Any wiring that shows signs of wearing or cracking should be discarded.

When you purchase Christmas lights, always look for the Underwriters Laboratory label on the package, and if you plan to decorate the exterior of your house with strings of lights, be sure to purchase lights designed for that purpose.

When using decorative Christmas candles in your home, ensure that they have been placed away from trees, wreaths, packages, curtains and any other possible source of ignition before lighting them.

If you will be hanging Christmas decorations, be sure to choose a sturdy ladder. Have a "Merry Christmas" with Fire Safety.

Infantry Marathon is run on new route

USAIC Public Affairs Office

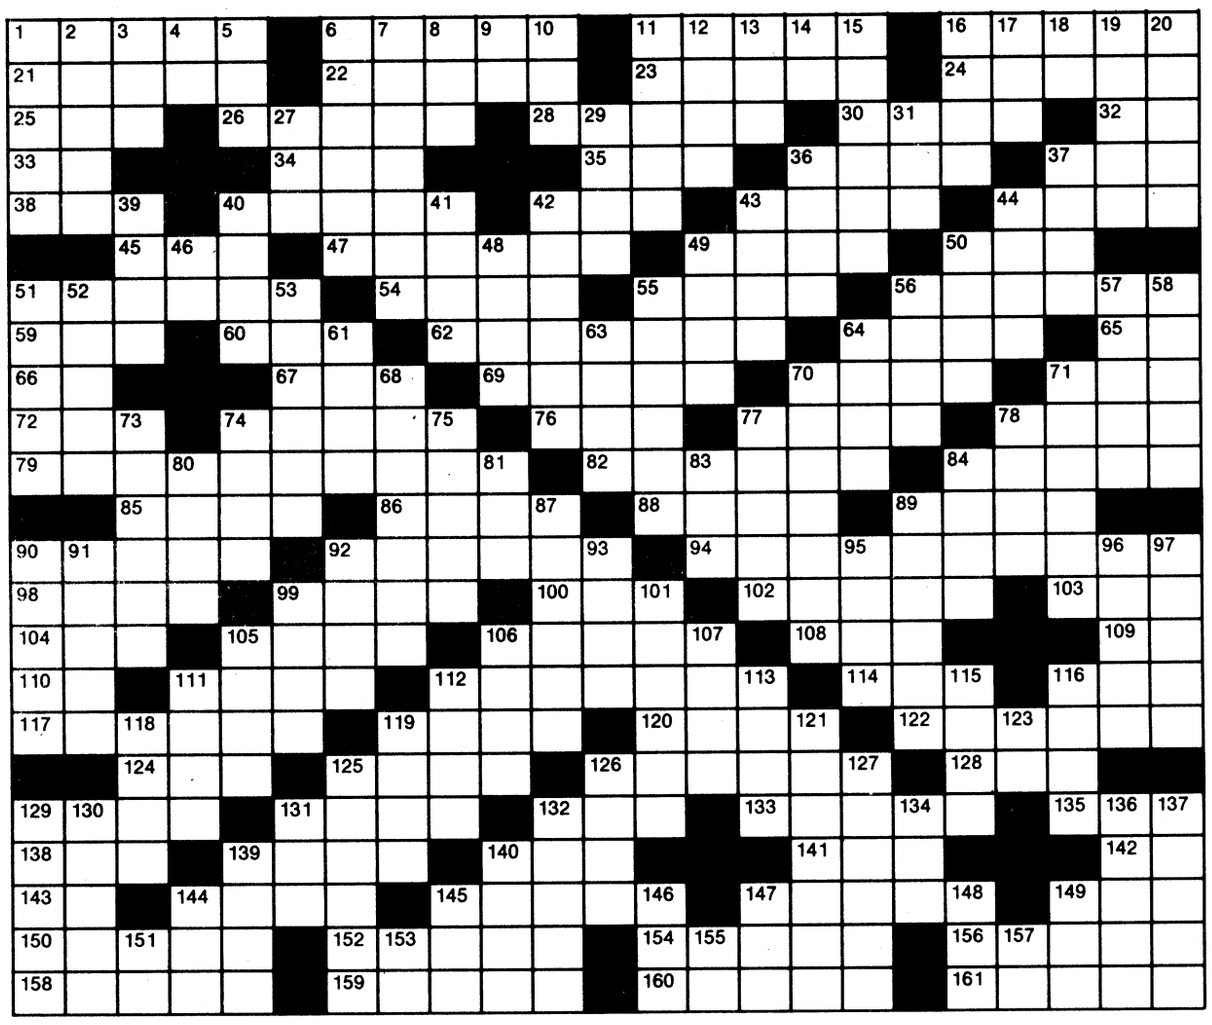
Runners planning to run in the annual U.S. Army Infantry Marathon and Half-Marathon March 5 should start getting ready now. According to the race director the course has been changed from last year and is much more challenging.

The marathon will begin near building 4, Infantry Hall, on Dixie Road and run one single loop, from Dixie to Sightseeing Road turning on Sunshine Road down to Jamestown Road then onto 8th Division road down to 1st Division and ending in front of Infantry Hall on Eckel Street.

The race is mostly a level course but does have some rolling hills that will make it a little more interesting this year, according to the race director.

The half-marathon will have a turn-around point on Sunshine Road just prior to reaching Jamestown Road. It will also finish in front of Infantry Hall.

The race, sanctioned by the Athletic Congress and an official qualifier for national records and the Boston Marathon, was moved from its usual date because of cold weather experienced during previous January events.



Starting time for the events, which are open to both civilians and service members, will be at 9 a.m. for the marathon and 9:30 a.m. for a half-marathon. Runners may enter as individuals or five-man teams.

Entry fee is $10 for those pre-registering for the events by Feb. 5. Late registration up to five minutes before race time will cost $15. No fees are refundable, including the optional $5 fee for the March 4 "carbo supper" at the noncommissioned officers' club from 5-8 p.m. The first 400 applicants requesting to attend the supper will be assured a table.

Entry forms may be picked up at most Fort Benning gyms. For additional information contact the race director, (404) 544-4226, 544-4786 or 544-4946.

Telling a cold from the flu or allergy not easy

By Evelyn Harris
American Forces Information Service

You don't know if you have a cold, the flu or just an allergy. All you know is you're miserable.

There are ways to tell the three apart, according to Army Lt. Col (Dr.) William J. Meinert. He heads the Department of Family Practice at the Uniformed Services University of Health Sciences, Bethesda, Md., and treats patients at DeWitt Army Community Hospital, Fort Belvoir, Va.

Timing is one. "Allergies are usually seasonal. Hay fever sufferers have problems in the spring and the early fall. People who are allergic to dust and mold suffer most in the winter, particularly if they have a forced-air heating system," said Meinert.

Colds, on the other hand, are most common from the beginning of the school year in the fall through spring, peaking in the coldest months of January and February.

The flu, or influenza, strikes as an epidemic, usually starting in November and continuing through the winter.

Symptoms are another way to tell the differences among the three. Allergy symptoms are limited to congestion, watery eyes and an irritated throat. In addition to these, cold sufferers may often have mild aches and a low fever. The flu is usually more severe, with a sudden, high fever, chills and sweating, a cough, muscle aches and pains and a headache.

The "common cold" is common. Americans suffer one billion colds per year. People don't get more colds in cold weather because getting chilled can give them colds, said Meinert. People live closer together in the winter, passing colds in the best way possible—from hand to hand.

"Although you can get a cold from the droplets released in the air when someone sneezes, you're much more likely to get it from touching their hands," said Meinert. Often unconsciously, cold sufferers wipe their runny eyes and then touch their neighbors. Cold germs can survive up to three hours on telephone receivers and other surfaces.

The most innocent faces belong to the most guilty parties when it comes to spreading colds. Children, particularly young children in daycare, nursery school and kindergarten, get—and spread—more colds than any other group in the population.

"Young children get from eight to 10 colds a year," said Meinert. "Unless Grandmas sees her grandchildren often, she's the least likely to get a cold—people over 65 have fewer colds," he added.

Although colds are seldom life-threatening, Meinert suggests you see a doctor if the infecton gets into your lungs or if you develop a fever or severe sore throat. If your mucous is yellow green, you probably have a bacterial infection that can be treated with antibiotics.

You should watch your baby carefully if he or she has a cold. If you believe the baby has an earache or a sore throat, take him or her to a doctor. Untreated ear infections can lead to deafness.

Sore throats can mean a strep infection—which can lead to rheumatic fever, which damages the heart. Said Meinert, "We probably do more strep throat cultures than we need to—but it pays off because rheumatic fever is now rare in this country."

Croup is another common cold complicaton for children until about the age of 3. "If your baby is 'barking,' take him to the doctor. Usually the cold air hitting him on the way to the car is enough to stop the croup, but it's best not to take chances," said Meinert. Sitting with your baby in a steamy bathroom will also stop the croup.

The military services usually vacinate against flu in the middle of October. This year, military people received shots protecting against the A/Taiwan, A/Leningrad and B/Ann Arbor influenza viruses. According to Meinert, "You can't fight a war if half your people have the flu, but the flu is not usually dangerous to healthy young men and women."

"The flu can be life-threatening to the very young, very old and chronically ill," said Meinert.

Flu can progress to pneumonia, which can be fatal if not treated. Pneumonia usually strikes suddenly, with shaking chills and sharp pain in the chest. The lungs are congested and fever can rise to 105 degrees Farenheit.

Therefore, the Public Health Service's Atlanta-based Centers for Disease Control recommends flu shots for people with diabetes, cancer or kidney, liver or lung disease, anyone over 65 and health care workers.

Meinert also recommends flu shots for smokers and children with any chronic disease.

For those who can't get flu shots because of an egg allergy or pregnancy, the drug amantiadine can prevent flu if given before exposure or lessen its severity if given after exposure.

Cold can be a crippling enemy

By Donna Miles
American Forces Information Service

Cold weather. Napoleon learned what a terrible enemy it could be during his retreat from Moscow. It crippled the Continental Army at Valley Forge. In 1950, along the frozen mountain trains of Korea, frostbite claimed more victims than the Chinese communists.

Bitter winter storms and freezing rain can be as destructive as the most formidable foe.

Through the years, military forces have relied on a variety of gear to help them overcome cold weather. One of the newest innovations, a lightweight, extended cold-weather clothing system, will soon be issued throughout the Army and Marine Corps.

Created by the Army Research, Development and Engineering Labs in Natick, Mass., the new clothing will keep troops warm and dry in a variety of weather conditions-even at temperatures down to minus 60 degrees fahrenheit.

What makes the new extended cold-weather system so effective, explained Army Lt. Col. Bill Kernodle of the Defense Personnel Support Center in Philadelphia are state-of-the-art materials designed to keep body heat in and wind and rain out.

Polypropylene is a man-made material often found in hunters' clothing and mountain wear. By pulling perspiration away from the skin, it prevents wearers from getting drenched in their own sweat, a common complaint regarding the current cold-weather outfit.

In addition, the outer layer of the new extended cold-weather clothing system contains nine billion pores in each square inch-small enough that wind and wetness can't get in but large enough that sweat vapor can escape.

The new outfit includes six major new items: polypropylene undershirt and drawers, polyester fiber pile shirt and overalls and pants, and camouflage-print parka and trousers.

By mixing and matching the pieces, wearers will stay warm and dry in temperatures ranging from 40 degrees to minus 60 fahrenheit.

Also, the new outfit weights 14 pounds less than the one it replaces-a relief to soldiers and Marines who ski or snowshoe bearing 80-pound backpacks. The old system weighed 38 pounds; the new one, 24.

The new system received rave reviews during initial wear tests by the Marine Corps at Pickel Meadows, Calif., a mountain warfare and winter survival training center high in the Sierra Nevadas. It fared equally well at Camp Ethan Allen, Vt., and in Northern Norway during the Teamwork '84 NATO exercise.

The first 60,000 sets are now in production and are expected to go to high-priority units in early 1988.

First in line to receive them will be special operations units, Army light infantry divisions at Fort Drum N.Y. and Fort Ord., Calif., in early 1988.

The outfits will be phased in throughout the rest of the Army and Marine Corps during the next five years.

"What we needed was clothing that would allow people to exist comfortably in cold, wet areas for extended periods of time," said Kernodle, the system's project manager.

"The new system is revoluntionary. It's lighter and more effective than anything the military has ever had. At the bottom line, it's going to have big payoffs in performance and survivability."

What to do when you have the flu

By Evelyn Harris
American Forces Information Service

How you take care of yourself for winter miseries depends on which problem you have and how severe it is.

For people who suffer from congestion, Lt. Col. (Dr.) William J. Meinert recommends a cool mist vaporizer. Meinert heads the Department of Family Practices at the Uniformed Services University of the Health Sciences.

Some doctors prefer warm mist because molds can grow in a cool vaporizer, but Meinert said this shouldn't be a problem if you buy a unit that can be cleaned. "Cool vaporizers are safer for children, and cool mist water particles can get deeper into the passages to break up congestion. If you can afford it, an ultrasonic cool mist vaporizer is best," he said. He doesn't recommend a humidifier attached to your furnace.

The saying "If you don't treat a cold, it lasts a week, if you treat it, it goes away in seven days" is on target, said Meinert. But if over-the-counter medications make you more comfortable, go ahead and use them.

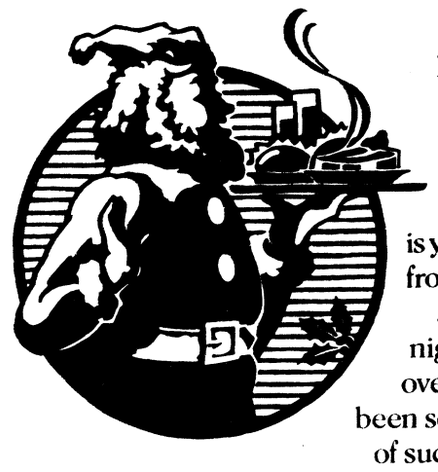
"As long as you read and heed warnings on the package, they shouldn't do you any harm," he said.

These warnings include not driving while taking some medications. Parents are warned against giving drugs containing aspirin to children or teen-agers with flu symptoms. Reye's syndrome, a very serious illness, is linked to children with flu taking aspirin.

If chicken soup and other home remedies help you, use them. Meinert's mother's favorite remedy was a mustard plaster. "We tried to get better so we wouldn't have to have another plaster," he said.

If you have the flu, don't try to resume normal activity until you've recovered to avoid a relapse.

Cold and flu sufferers should drink plenty of fluids. They help the body expel the virus more quickly and prevent dehydration.



No matter what your illness, trust your own judgment. If you don't think you need to go to a doctor, don't go. But if you feel sick enough to ask for treatment, get it.

Animal bites cause for concern

By Dr. Stuart F. Williams
Family Practice Clinic

Animal bites happen all the time here at Fort Benning, and probably the biggest fear for a parent would be rabies. What exactly is rabies?

Rabies is an infection caused by a germ known as a virus. The rabies virus is a very weak virus until it gets into nerve tissue such as the brain. In fact sunlight, drying, soap and heat can all easily inactivate the rabies virus.

How is the rabies spread? Rabies is spread by the saliva of an infected animal usually when the animal bites a victim. It is not the bite persay, but the saliva that gets in the wound that results in an infection with rabies.

From the saliva, the rabies virus will grow in muscle cells. It then travels by nerves into the brain where the virus again replicates. It then moves into the salivary glands in our mouths.

Drinking milk from a rabid cow is not a risk. Insects have nothing to do with how rabies is spread. Rabies, however, has been known to occur by inhaling infected droplets from caves where rabid bats live.

What are the most common animals in the southeast that could have rabies? Until the 1950s it was mainly the dog and sometimes the cat. If fact, in 1946, there were 8,000 cases of canine rabies in the United States. By 1982 there were 150 cases, and now there are only 0-5 cases of rabies in dogs per year.

The most common animals in our area at risk for rabies include the raccoon, skunk, bat and the fox. Rabid cattle usually get the disease from the bite of one of these animals.

Since 1980, there have been only four known human cases of rabies. However, the disease is usually fatal if a person becomes infected. Thus, preventing rabies is the best way to control the disease. The first and most important method of prevention is to avoid an animal which is at high risk for being rabid (skunk, fox, raccoon, bat). Squirrels, hamsters, guinea pigs, gerbils, chipmunks, rabbits, mice and even rats rarely ever have rabies.

It is important to determine if the attack was provoked or unprovoked. An unprovoked attack carries a higher index of suspicion. All animal bites, regardless, should be reported to the hospital, preventive medicine, or veterinary activity.

If there is a break in the skin, the wound should be cleaned on the spot with soap and water. It is then recommended to have the victim brought to the emergency room for a more thorough cleansing.

At this point, a bite report is initiated and an attempt made to locate the animal. If the animal is located, it is observed for 10 days, and if it is healthy at the end of 10 days, the rabies vaccinations are not needed.

If it becomes rabid, then the vaccine is begun. This consists of two injections followed by one injection on the third, seventh, 14th and 28th days. It is not the "21" painful shots we used to get.

There are usually no serious recations from this new rabies vaccine.

When the animal cannot be found, the Rabies Advisory board meets and determines whether the rabies vaccination is needed. This board is made of up of at least three people. Usually the preventive medicine officer, a veterinarian and several other physicians such as a family practitioner, a pediatrician or an internal medicine specialist.

Above all the most important thing is to report the bite, clear the wound and have the victim seen at the emergency room.

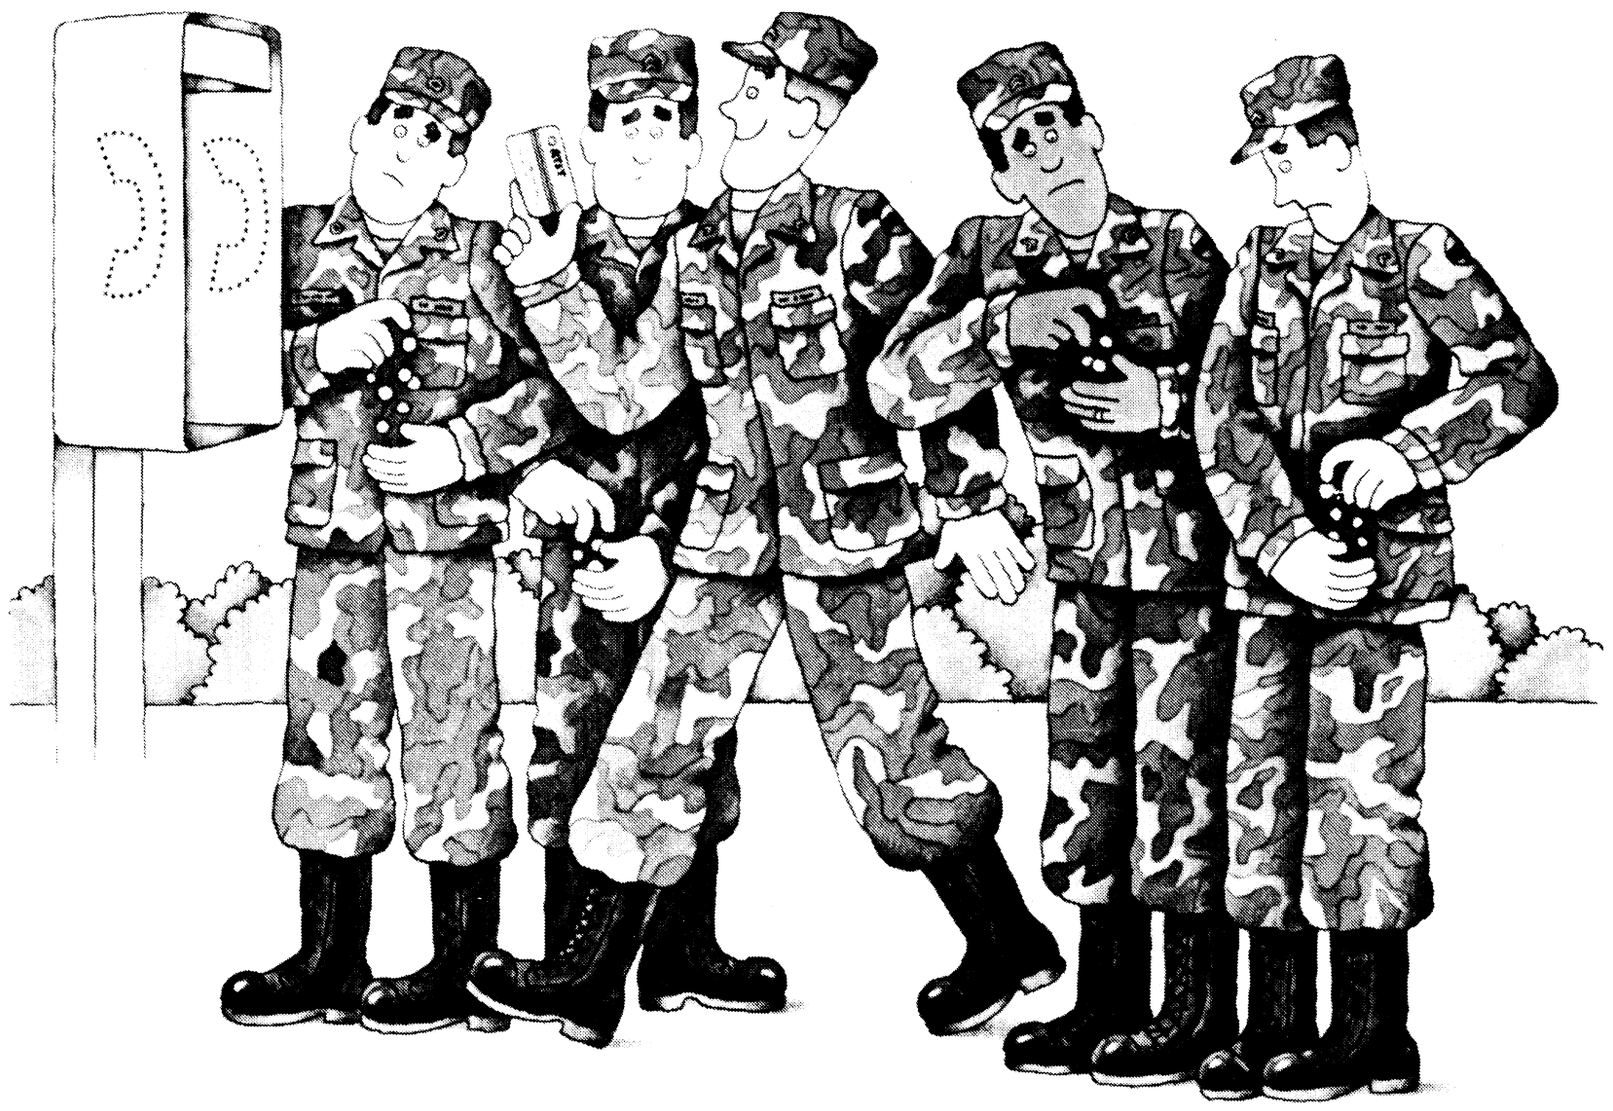
Public radio offers special program

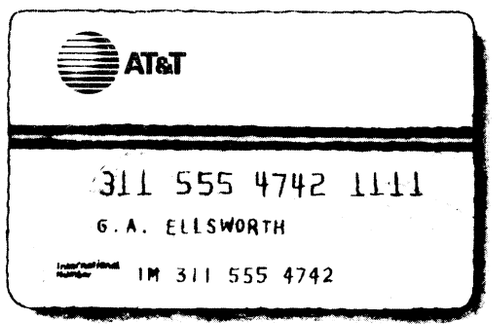
Peach State Public Radio

Since 1912 it's been an eagerly-awaited annual tradition in the small town of Northfield, Minn. Each year, thousands of holdiday celebrants from all over the Midwest flood the community for a vast concert combining the voices of five choirs in hymns and carols welcoming the Advent season.



"The St. Olaf Christmas Festival Concert '87," featuring the internationally-acclaimed St. Olaf Choir, comes to Peach State Public Radio in a 90-minute holiday special Dec. 23, at 10 a.m.

Orchestral and choral music from the classical repertory often associated with the holdiay season is performed by more than 500 musicians, including the St. Olaf Choir and Orchestra and four other choirs from St. Olaf College.



Dr. Kenneth Jennings conducts the performance, which also includes traditional folk songs with an international flavor.

St. Olaf College is a liberal arts institution with no conservatory, and yet its student ensembles are widely recognized as among the most outstanding ensembles in the country. The Washington Post writes, "At the turn of the century, when most college glee clubs are still crooning close harmony, F. Melius Christianson (founder of the ensemble) had his singers dedicated to better stuff, and now 80 or so years later and performing under Kenneth Jennings, only the third conductor in its long history, the St. Olaf Choir is still among the best in the country."

Take the battle out

The AT&T Card.

Now available whether or not you have a home phone.

No fumbling with change or grumbling over delays when you carry the AT&T Card.

Being far from family and friends is rough enough without having to hassle over long distance calling. Wouldn't you like to call them without worrying about coins? Or calling collect? Or charging the call to someone else's phone?

The AT&T Card puts you in command. Use it anytime, from almost any public or private phone. Only the AT&T Card lets you call from the U.S. to 250 countries and faraway territories—and to the U.S. from over 125 countries—with connections that sound as close as you feel.

It's fast. Easy. And surprisingly economical. No charge to order the Card; no minimum usage fee. And you'll save up to 75¢, compared to AT&T coin, collect or third-party out-of-state calls.

You'll also find it helpful having all your AT&T Card Calls clearly itemized on your monthly bill. It's the easy way to keep track of your long distance costs.

So take the battle out of staying in touch. Get your AT&T Card. It's just one more big reason AT&T is the clear service advantage.

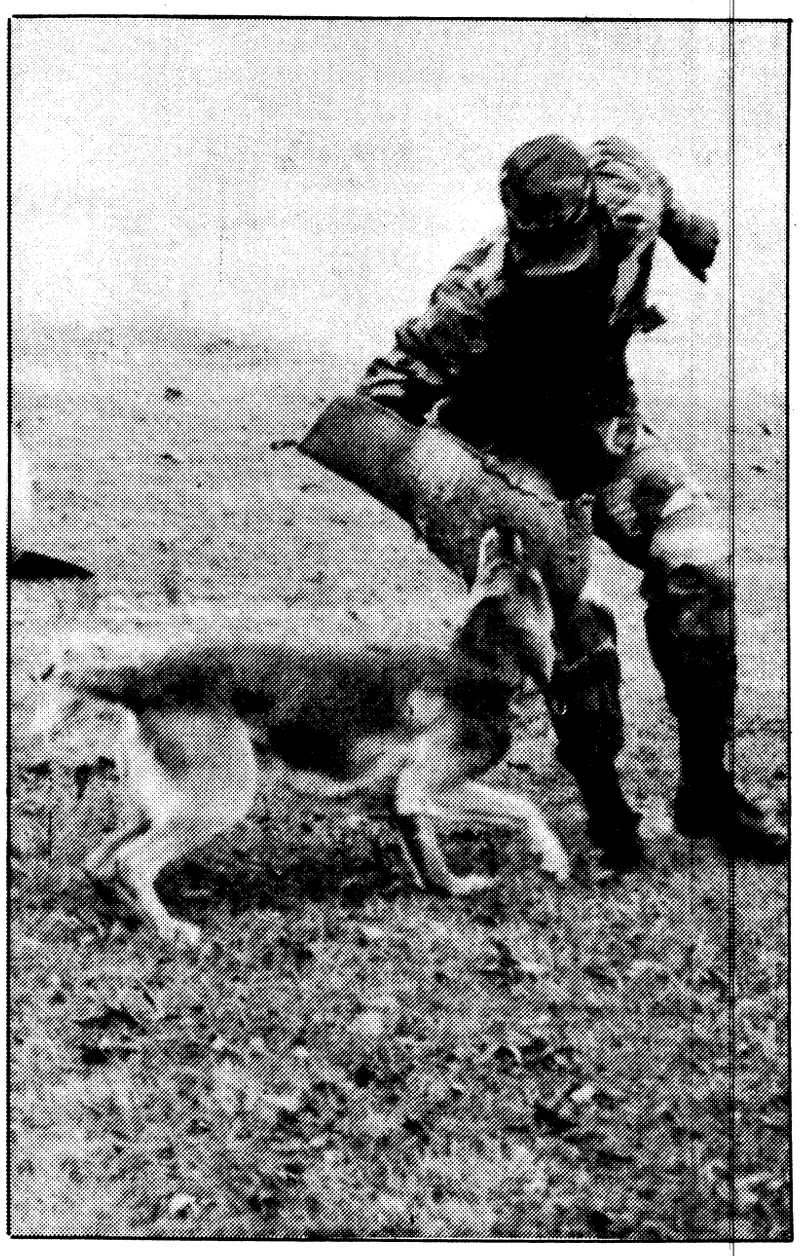
Military dogs provide many services

Military Police Activity

The military working dogs of Fort Benning provide a service that not everyone is aware of; narcotic detection and explosive detection. The dogs are also a valuable aid in crowd control, clearing buildings, searching for a person who is lost or hiding in a wooded area and for clearing government quarters that are found unsecure while the occupants are away on leave.

The military working dog handlers want to caution the parents of children, living in the housing areas on-post, that when a handler and the working dog are on a walking patrol in the housing area, to please refrain from trying to pet the dog. These dogs are trained to protect the handler and will try to bite a person if they get too close.



Unit commanders are reminded that narcotic detection dogs are available for searches of barracks, motor pools, and privately-owned vehicles, provided the unit can identify vehicles belonging to soldiers assigned to their unit. Commanders and or acting commanders, on orders, must be within their unit area to give consent.

Commanders, executive officers or first sergeants can schedule a narcotic detection mission by calling the military working dog Section at 545-2805/1059.

Dawn M. Taoy dead lifts 250 pounds to win the American Drug Free Powerlifting Championship.

Kevin J. Howerton

Taoy wins ADFPA Powerlifting Championship

By Kevin J. Howerton
197th Inf. Bde. correspondent

When you first meet Dawn M. Taoy, she impresses you as a gentle, soft-spoken woman. This pretty, dark-haired, 4-foot-11 inch, 96-pound native of Hawaii keeps a very active schedule. Not only is she married to an Army sergeant, she also works fulltime as a word processor while enjoying hobbies such as sewing, needlepoint and aerobics.

Even more impressive is the fact that this 25 year old can be found wearing a weight belt and working out in a weight room. But that's her, a Georgia powerlifting champion.

Taoy took first place overall recently at the American Drug Free Powerlifting Association Georgia Championship wich was held in Hinesville, Ga. The ADFPA is a relatively new organization of weightlifters who agree to be tested for drug usage before competing.

Taoy's winning lifts were 220 pounds in the squat lift. 105 pounds in the benchpress, and 250 pounds in the dead lift. Her total for the meet was 575 pounds.

"When I first told the other ladies at work that I won a powerlifting championship, they wouldn't believe me," said Taoy. "I had to bring in the pictures of the meet to convince them."

Taoy has been powerlifting for less than a year. She first got into the sport at the encouragement of her husband, Sgt. Miguel V. Taoy Jr., who is currently an All-Army powerlifting champion. Sgt. Taoy was stationed with the 11th Armored Cavalry in Germany at the time.

"I was warming up for a workout one day, and she picked up a set of weights like they were nothing," said Sgt. Taoy. "I got her to start a lifting routine, and then asked her to come to a German community powerlifting meet with me."

"I didn't want to at first," said Dawn. "I didn't think I was a good enough lifter to compete."

"I dared her into it." said Miguel.

Dawn won five trophies in her first powerlifting meet and won six more in the next two German meets she attended.

She plans on continuing her powerlifting.

"I have a lot of lifting techniques to learn," she said. "By the time I go to the regional championships, I hope to be breaking records in my weight class."

Army's Black Knights run Navy's Midshipmen aground, 17-3

Army News Service

The Army's cadets ran the Navy's midshipmen aground Dec. 5 in a 17-3 victory at Soldiers' Stadium in Philadelphia.

With 68,000 fans gathered there and countless television viewers watching, the U.S. Army Military Academy cadets' wishbone offense and ball control allowed them to hog the pigskin for 34 minutes and run 72 on-the-ground plays for a gain of 315 yards.

Totally dominating Navy both offensively and defensively, the cadets held the front line and kept the middies to 132 yards rushing and 191 yards total offense. Army allowed Navy across the 50-yard line only once in the first half and twice in the second.

"This win makes up for everything, all the frustrations, disappointments and injuries," said linebacker Ray Griffiths. "As a senior, this is the ultimate (victory). I feel as if I went out a winner."

Even with things going Army's way, the Cadets took only a 3-0 lead at halftime on a Bit Nambusch 40-yard field goal in the first quarter. Army hit the scoreboard thanks to a nine-play, 47-yard drive.

While the offense only netted three, the Army defense stopped Navy's wishbone. The middies could only mount one meager drive to Army's 43-yard.

"We were able to cut off Navy's inside running attack," said defensive tackle Tom Mathers. "We noticed in the game films that we could split their tackles and penetrate their line to break up their pitch-option and close off their run. We thought we could control the line of scrimmage, and we did."

During the second half, Army finally put it all together. After discussing Navy's first-half success of cutting off the Cadets' outside option-running game, Army then decided to take it to the middies up the middle.

The Cadets' wishbone gave the defense plenty of time to get ready for Navy during the second half. Cranking it up with quarterback Tony Crawford and company, the Black Knights kept the ball for more than 18 minutes, while running off 43 plays, all on the ground.

Army mounted an 81-yard, 13-play drive capped by Peterson's one-yard touchdown run with 11:02 left in the game. The drive, which proved to be the deciding touchdown, featured freshman Mayweather, who slashed inside for 27 of his 119 total yards.

"We didn't run much inside in the first half, but we came back to it, and it worked," Mayweather explained. "The main thing was that the offense got fired up."

Finally getting on the field, Navy's offense mounted an 11-play, 81-yard drive only to stall at the Army's 13 yard line. That turned out to be the closest to the cadets end-zone Navy got all afternoon. Navy's Ted Fundoukos booted a 30-yard field goal, putting Navy on the scoreboard and trailing Army 10-3.

The Army's offense, with Crawford, Peterson, Mayweather and Barnott, ground out the final tally for the cadets. Crawford received the honors of scoring on a seven-yard run for a touchdown, using up all but 35 seconds on the clock.

Crawford, the Army's signal caller, ended his career scoring on his final play as a cadet.

"I can't dream of a better way to do it," Crawford boasted. "I'll remember this until the day I die."

Crawford's score spiced a 64-yard, 13-play drive and a final 17-3 Army victory.

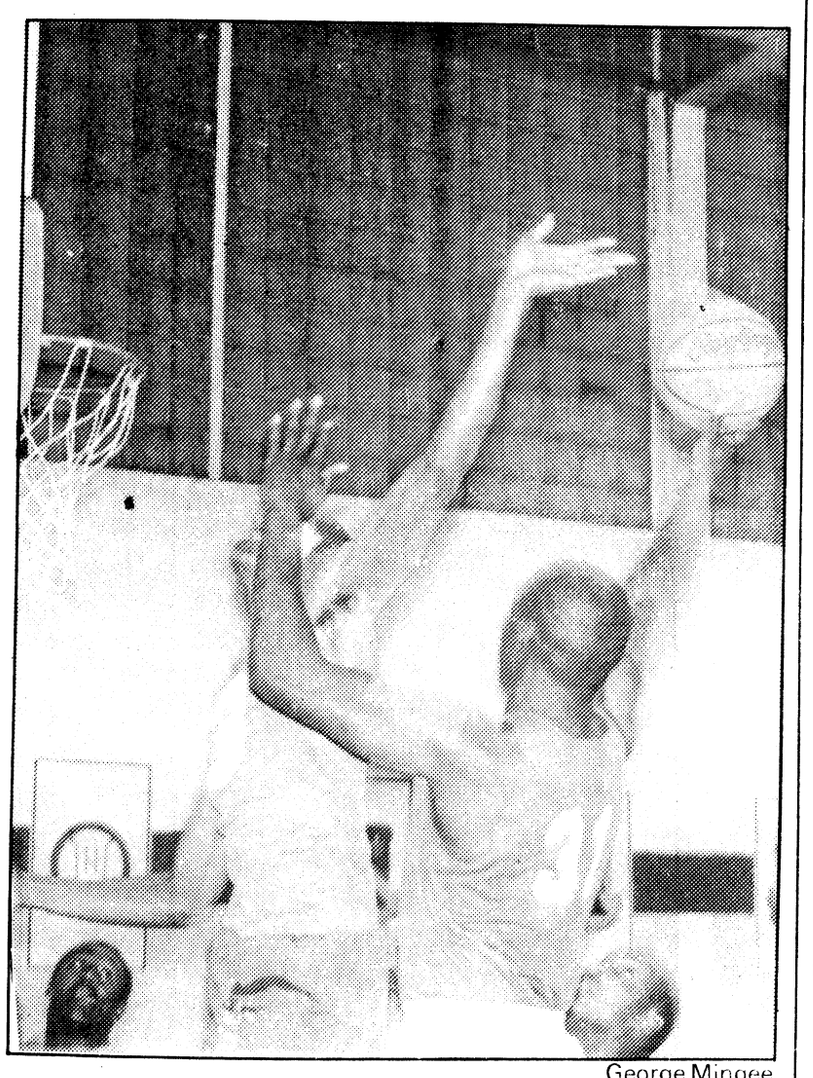
On the day, Crawford rushed for 55 yards, Mayweather 119, Barnett 78, and Peterson 71 yards.

"We stopped them from the beginning, and that was the key," defensive safety Chance Connor said.

"This is the greatest," Crawford said. "t doesn't get any better than this."

HHC Panthers maul Co. E, 57-51

By George Mingee
97th Inf. Bde. correspondent



On the power play of guard, Kevin Baker and forward Alvin Daniels, the "Panthers" of HHC, 2nd Bn., 69th Armor, beat Co. E, 1st Bn., 58th Inf., in 197th Infantry Brigade basketball league play.

Baker's hard driving and inside shots throughout the game made him the leading scorer for the "Panthers" with 20 points. Daniels scored 12 points of his own, making him the second highest scorer for the Panthers.

Co. E, 1-58, had an early half-time lead of nine points over the Panthers in the first 5-minutes of play. Guard, Paul Corpening of Co. E, led his team in scoring with 12 points. Kenneth Walker was second in team scoring with 10 points.

The game started fast for Co. E, but in the second half the game quickened for the Panthers, who quickly took over the lead, and kept it to win the game 57-51. This win puts the Panthers in the 197th Championship game.

Adams selected as U.S. Boxing team head coach

MSgt. Kenneth R. C. Adams has been selected as the head coach for the U.S. Boxing Team competing in the 1988 Summer Olympic Games in Seoul, Korea.

In 1984, he helped train the U.S. Olympic boxing team that claimed nine gold medals and one silver medal in Los Angeles.

Also in 1984, he became coach of the All-Army boxing team and led it to the first of four consecutive team titles, a feat apparently unprecedented, according to the USA/ABF. Since then the Army has won every All-Armed Forces tournament, keeping alive a string of nine consecutive interservice team titles.

"I just made $100 by spending $5."

Spending a little money in Ledger-Enquirer Classified to sell something can mean big money for you. For example, you can run a 3-line ad for 5 days for just $5 and sell items up to $300 in some classifications. Or you can run a 3-line ad for 3 days for just $10.62 on a big-ticket item. Either way, when you have something to sell, spending a little can help you make a lot!

TRADOC commander delivers news of pending budget cuts

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

Training and Doctrine Commander Gen. Maxwell Thurman came to Fort Benning last week to deliver news of pending budget cuts for the new year.

"The belt tightening period has arrived," he said at a press conference for the local media.

According to Thurman, $11.5 million will be shaved from an already reduced 1988 post budget."

This cut will mean a five percent reduction in the civilian work force, a 10 percent reduction in travel and a five percent takedown in every contract made in 1988.

"The five percent cut in the civilian workforce doesn't mean people will get fired," Thurman said. "The reductions will be made by cutting back in temporary positions."

Thurman said the worst may be yet to come in the form of proposed cuts for the 1989 budget.

Although TRADOC is faced with many cuts to its budget, Thurman is still optimistic.

"This is the best Army we've had in years. We have 5,500 M-1 tanks and 800 Blackhawk helicopters in the field." he said.

Thurman added that the National Guard and Reserves have grown in the 1980s, and they are substantially improving their level of training.

Praising the all-volunteer Army, he said, 91 percent of today's soldiers are high school graduates compared to the 74 percent U.S. average.

He said number of soldiers who are absent without leave has dropped to the lowest level in 40 years.

"We have quality young people serving our country," he said.

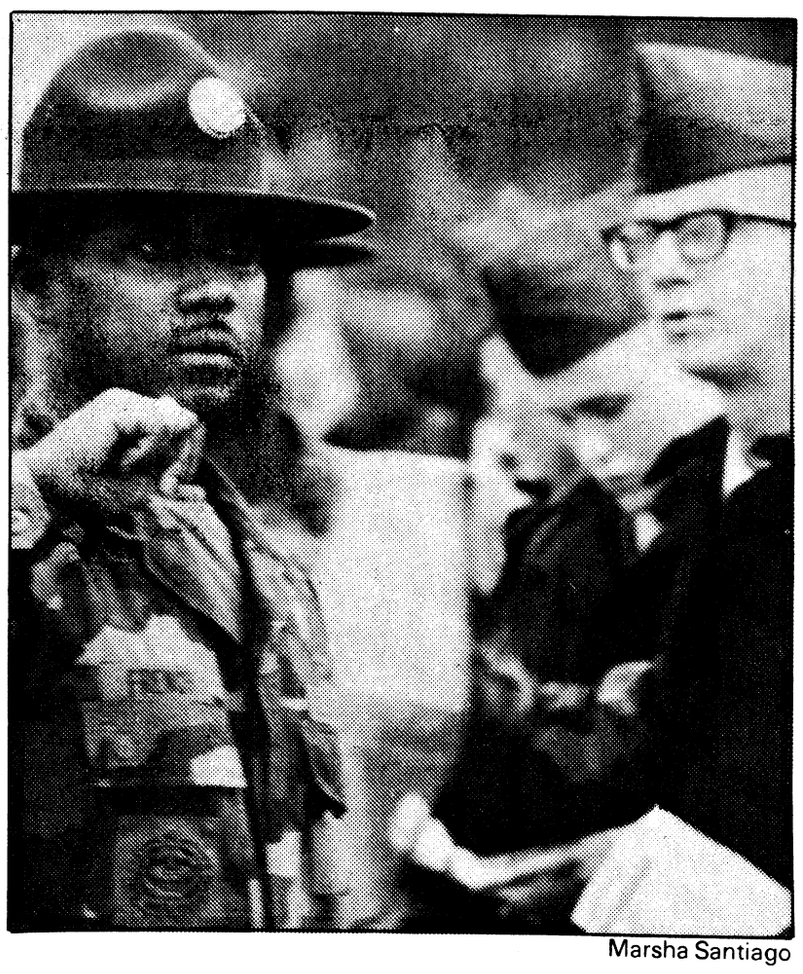
OSUT soldiers released for holidays

By Marsha Santiago
ITC Correspondent

More than 3,000 One-Station-Unit-Training soldiers from Sand Hill and Harmony Church are now home for the holidays thanks to Exodus '87, the departure of Infantry Training Center soldiers for two weeks of Christmas leave.

The first group of 400 soldiers left Dec. 17 and another 1,100 departed the next day. The largest group, 1,351 soldiers, left Sunday on 32 buses. The final three groups to leave left on Monday.

The 4th Battalion, 36th Infantry, 2nd Infantry Training Brigade ran the mass departure. Cadre were at the Exodus site Sunday morning to make sure everything ran smoothly and to quickly solve any problems. Drill sergeants gave last minute instructions and made sure soldiers boarded the right bus out of the long rows of buses marked Nashville, Los Angeles, Cheyenne, Dallas, New Orleans . . .



Spirits were high Sunday morning at Kanell Field as Christmas carols were played over the loudspeakers. Throughout the morning, military buses shuttled soldiers from their company areas to the Exodus site where they boarded commercial buses.

"I'm glad to go home for two weeks," said PFC Dan Sawyer, Co. C, 1st Battalion, 38th Infantry, as he waited to board a Greyhound for Houston.

Plans varied on how soldiers intended to spend their leaves. For Pvt. 1 Shawn Gibson, also from Houston, driving his car was first on his list of things to do. Pvt. 1 Craig Schwab, from Dallas, planned to spend time with his girlfriend and family before heading for Mexico and the beach.

"I feel great about going home. Plans? Here, I'll show you," said Pvt. 1 Mitchell Daem, of Billings, Montana, as he sat down a bag containing a teddy bear dressed in camouflage and opened his wallet. "I have two little boys I'm going home to visit, Michael, 6 and Nathan, 3."

Soldiers are due back at Fort Benning Jan. 3. The 1st Battalion, 19th Infantry, 1st Infantry Training Brigade will handle the return. Twenty drill sergeants will be at the Atlanta airport to help the returning soldiers.

Credit union workers donate holiday meals

By Nancy Parker
Army Community Services

The Fort Benning Branch of The Infantry Center Federal Credit Union has donated a holiday dinner for two Fort Benning families. The complete dinners, composed of food items from turkeys to desserts, were contributed by The Infantry Center Credit Union Board of Directors and employees.

One deserving military family, selected by Army Community Services, received one dinner for Thanksgiving. Another family will receive a dinner for Christmas.

The idea for donating items for Thanksgiving dinner was met with much enthusiasm as reported by Mary Dove, branch manager. She and Nathan Hoover, president of the Board of Directors of The Infantry Center Federal Credit Union, view all of their contributions in terms of "people helping people;" they wanted the opportunity to give back to the Fort Benning community.

Hoover said he was very proud of his Board of Directors and credit union employees. This is the first time the Fort Benning Branch of The Infantry Center Federal Credit Union has made this type of contribution. There are 46 Fort Benning Branch employees and nine members of the Board of Directors. They all deserve special credit and recognition.

Soldiers can convert insurance; no waiting

Army News Service

Soldiers can now convert their Servicemens Group Life Insurance to Veterans Group Life Insurance during the transition process.

Currently, soldiers who wish to convert their insurance must wait until they receive the application from the veterans administration, about 45 days after transition. This is 135 days after the orientation, and some soldiers may have forgotten the details.

The expanded orientation program will include the distribution and collection of application forms. The form only requires a few entries and is self-explanatory. The local finance and accounting office will withdraw the premium from the soldiers final paycheck.

This method has been tested at Fort Dix, and the application rate exceeded expectations. An informal one-month test will take place at a CONUS installation to be announced to ensure potential problems are resolved.

Army-wide participation is scheduled to be implemented in late 1988.

CG congratulates residents for meeting CFC challenge

Congratulations to the post community and our federal workers in the surrounding communities.

This year our Combined Federal Campaign objective was set at an all time high of $550,000. It was a tough challenge but we thrive on the difficult and we did it! Our soldiers, civilians and our federal workers contributed more than $560,000.

In the midst of your training load, your post support mission, and your regular duties, you found time for others.

You should be proud. You met the challenge. You exceeded the standard.

Amnesty program created to regain lost ammunition

By Robert P. Bollinger
Supply Division

The Ammunition Supply Installation Amnesty Program has been established to gain control of loose ammunition rather than to leave it uncontrolled.

The ASI amnesty program is not intended as an easy way to circumvent established turn-in procedures, but is oriented toward gaining control of small quantities of ammunition that may have been found.

Ammunition found on or off post may be turned in at the ASI Monday-Friday, 8 a.m.-4:30 p.m. or at the Vehicle Holding Area, adjacent to the ASI during non-duty hours.

No paperwork is required and no questions will be asked concerning the turn in. Point of contact is Mr. Gaylor 544-6710.

Commanders are responsible for establishing an Ammunition Amnesty Program within their units to support the ASI program IAW AR 710-2.

Unit Amnesty Programs will include:

- Conducting quarterly briefings.
- Posting location and telephone numbers of the nearest Amnesty turn in point.
- Establishing an atmosphere that does not intimidate soldiers or prevent soldiers from freely turning in ammunition.
- Providing direction to anyone (military or civilian) who wants to turn in ammunition to the ASI.
- Daily screening of Amnesty boxes to ensure ammunition is removed and turned in to the ASI.

Bogus reporter seeks information

Army News Service

An unknown individual has been calling Army installations representing himself as Richard Lacayo, a Time Magazine reporter.

The real Lacayo reports on legal issues at Time and is not working on any military stories.

The bogus Lacayo is knowledgeable enough about the Army to appear legitimate.

If a call is received, refer Lacayo to Lt. Col. Robert E. Pilnacek, Public Affairs officer, 545-2211.

OPINION

Secretary of Defense sends holiday wishes

Army News Service

Secretary of Defense Frank C. Carlucci extended his first holiday greetings to the men and women of the U.S. armed forces Dec. 1.

Reflecting upon holiday meanings to servicemembers, Carlucci said, "Each year, we Americans take special comfort in the holiday season. In a truly American tradition, we gather with family and friends to share with our loved ones the joys and happiness that this special time brings all of us. We pause to reflect on the happiness and successes of our past, and we look forward to what the year ahead may bring. At this time, peace, joy and happiness assume a special meaning for all of us.

"It is at this time, our traditional holiday season, that I wish to extend to each of you, the members of our armed services and your families, my very best wishes. It is your quiet professional dedication and spirit of self-sacrifice that affords and protects the basic freedoms we celebrate with such joy and happiness. Today our great nation remains strong and free because of your commitment to maintain peace through strength. These are indeed challenging and often dangerous times. Much has been asked of you, but you have met these challenges and have given your loyalty and skills in full measure.

It is the very nature of a profession that demands constant vigilance. Some of you will spend the holidays at sea or on watch or otherwise separated from your families and friends. Take comfort in knowing that the American people recognize and appreciate the extra measure you are giving to protect our great country.

"America's armed forces have a vital responsibility. As a people, we have dedicated ourselves not only to preserving our own freedom but also to helping our friends and allies secure and safeguard their liberty. Your uncompromising professionalism and dedication to duty enable us to keep these promises to our friends, and to remain a bulwark against the enemies of freedom. For you, peace has a very special meaning.

"Whether you are celebrating this special time with your loved ones or at a lonely watchpost, you are in the thoughts of Americans everywhere.

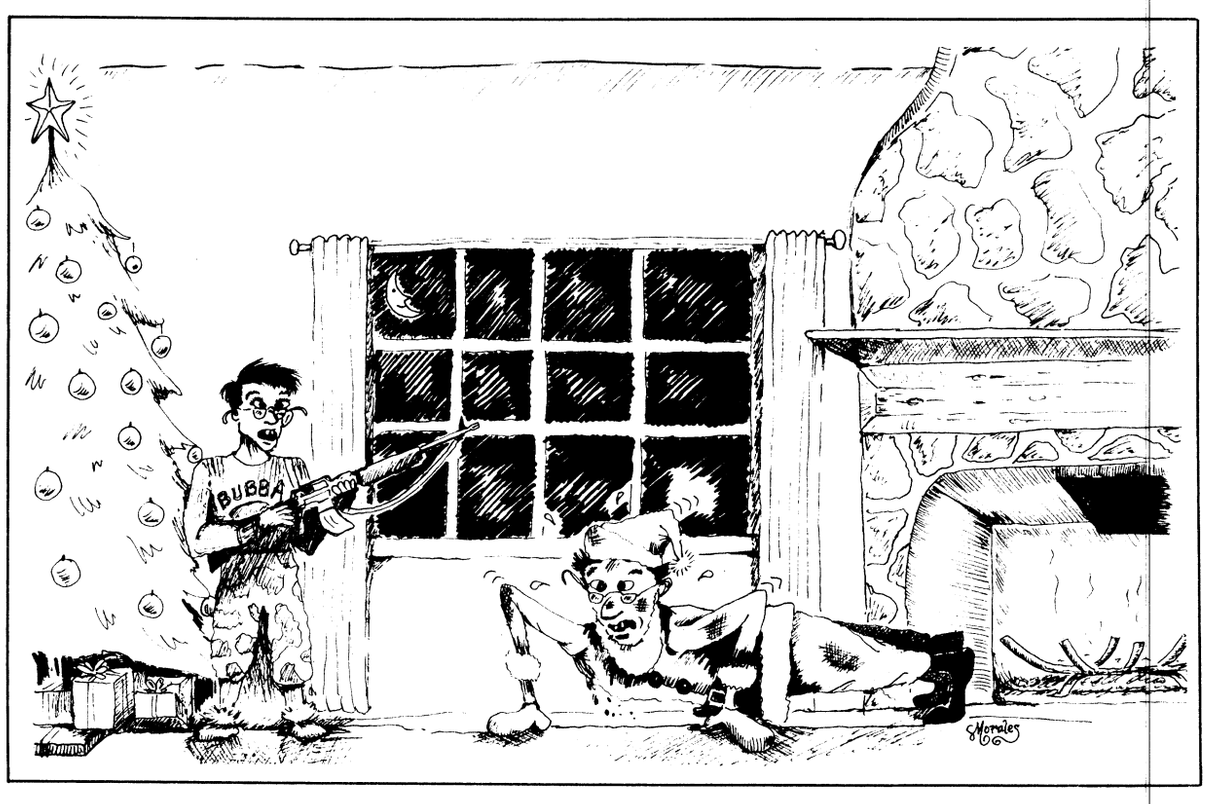
"I am proud to be able to wish you a joyful holiday season and a happy new year. May the spirit of peace, joy and happiness that we celebrate be fully realized for each of you in the year ahead."

CG warns of hazards during holiday season

The Christmas-New Year holiday season is perhaps the most special time of the year. It is not only a period of deep religious significance for many of us, but also a time for joining with family and friends in the traditional celebrations of the season.

Unfortunately, it can also be one of the most hazardous times of the year as hundreds of motorists fill the highways for the long journey home or the short drive to the party.

The frequently foul weather and reduced hours of daylight that accompany this holiday season create situations that can make driving an extremely dangerous undertaking. Accidents and arrests involving drunk drivers also increase substantially during this time.



If your plans for the holiday season include taking a long trip, consider using commercial transportation as an alternative to driving yourself. If you will be attending parties or special gatherings where alcohol is served, be sure to exercise restraint. Select a non-drinking member of the group to be the designated driver, or use the SAFETYCAB service. An arrest or accident due to drunk driving can be easily avoided with a little forethought.

Let us all do our parts to prevent needless tragedies. Have a safe and enjoyable Christmas and a Happy New Year.

Bubba detains Santa with M-16 rifle

By Clyde Snively
USAIC Public Affairs

After what we went through in Christmas '86, I'm not sure of what Bubba thinks about Santa Claus. For that matter, I'm a little shaky, too.

Knowing that Bubba's belief in the jolly old elf was waning with age, I decided I'd rent a Santa outfit and slip into the house about midnight.

After depositing the presents under the tree, I made enough racket to wake everyone up. They, then, could come into the living room, rubbing their sleepy eyes, in time to see me leave.

As fate would have it, Bubba announced that he was planning to stand guard that year.

"Perfect," I thought at the time.

Christmas Eve arrived as it does every year -- late. At about 10, Emma and I announced we were heading for bed. Bubba was left in charge.

I set the alarm for 11:30 p.m. so I'd have time to get into my costume for my midnight showing.

As the clock was banging out midnight, I tiptoed down the hall, then peaked around the corner to see where Bubba had finally settled down.

As my eyes adjusted to the faint light, I spied what looked like my poncho draped over two chairs to form a tent.

"How quaint," I thought as I advanced into the room and headed for the tree.

Two steps into the living room and my Santa boots got hung up on something. As I jerked my foot to get it loose, I set off a terrible noise of stones banging about inside tin cans.

I didn't have time to curse my clumsiness or Bubba's deft use of early warning systems, for I was suddenly frozen by a high-pitched voice that yelled out from beneath the poncho, "halt, who goes there!"

"It ain't the Easter rabbit, kid," I said in my jolly Santa voice.

"I say again, who goes there," he repeated icily.

"Santa Claus," I said again, no longer feeling quite so jolly.

"Advance to be recognized," Bubba ordered as he climbed from beneath the poncho, dragging his genuine Mattel M-16 that fires yellow plastic bullets, safe for kids ages 6 and up.

"Far enough," he said, straightening himself and aiming the M-16 at my chest. "Place your right hand on your head. With your left hand, reach for your ID, then place it on the floor. Then take five steps back and get in the front leaning rest position," he said.

"Er, ah, why, ho, ho, Santa's ID is his white beard and red suit. Santa doesn't need any ID," I said, trying to force some jolliness back into my voice.

"You don't even have an American Express Card?" the kid asked.

"This kid watches far too much TV," I thought, "No," I said.

"Well, then, where's the loot?" he asked.

"Out in the ca..., er sleigh," I said.

"Don't move or you're buzzard meat," he said, heading out the door.

I slumped into the chair, knowing his belief in Santa was just about over.

He finally returned. Now it was my turn to be surprised. "Where did you get those presents?" I asked.

"In your sleigh, like you said," he said.

"Oh," I said, befuddled. About then, Emma and Clydette came into the room, so I'm not sure, but I think I heard a far off tinkling of little bells and someone shouting, "Merry Christmas to all and to all a good night."

Writer says running is an exercise in futility

By Bert Randolph Sugar
PM Editorial Services

Just in case you haven't noticed, the highways and byways of America are being overrun, literally, by joggers — most of whom look, from the rear, as if they're waving goodbye without using their hands.

And now my wife, whose idea of exercise is shopping faster, wants me to keep apace with the running fad.

Just last week, as I was doing my daily calisthenics with the TV remote control, she came in and announced that I had to do something "for the good of my health."

"Health," I said aloud, "isn't that something everyone is always drinking to before they fall down?"

"Very funny," said She-Who-Must-Be-Heard-Out, and hurried on to tell me that "the best thing" would be for me to "lose weight, quit drinking and take up jogging."

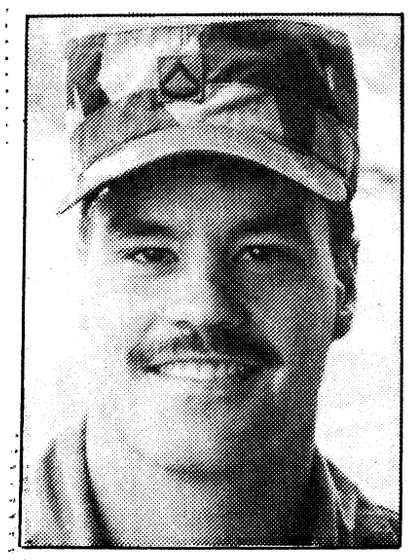
Taking the tact of all husbands everywhere, I told her, "Honey, you know I don't deserve the best; what's second best?"

For someone who is at an age when he's not worried about being in shape, just thankful he still has one, to be told jogging is good for you is somewhat akin to being told that Joan of Arc is Noah's wife.

To me, jogging is not an exercise, it's a designer sport. Everywhere one looks, young people can be seen running. All so obscenely thin that they look as if they work in an olive factory dragging pimento through. All proudly prancing around in their official badges of courage. There are "official" sweatbands, sweat socks, shirts, shorts, shoes, etc., etc., all costing top dollar. Great! Just what I need, $180 worth of officially-sanctioned equipment, all of which looks like expensive underwear, merely to run down to the corner mailbox.

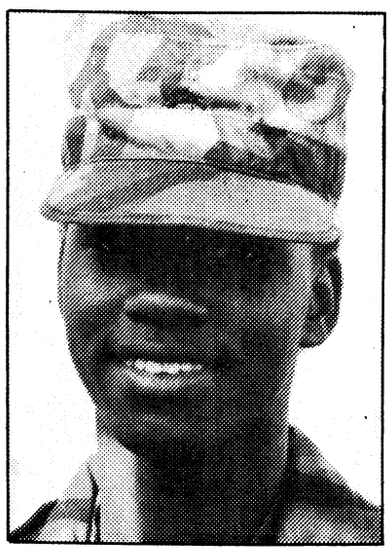
Have you ever seen a jogger smile? What is it about their exercise-hyphen-sport that takes all the fun out of it? Is it because they're counting the number of steps until they get back home, thinking, as I do, that this is an exercise in futility.

You can't jog in a small town. Bobby Rowan of Enigma, Ga. says he tried jogging but everyone stopped him to offer a lift to wherever he was hurrying.



There's the joke, size standard seven, about the husband who doesn't think he's getting the most out of his home life and goes to a doctor for advice. The doctor, adopting the latest fad in lieu of a normal "take two aspirins and call me in the morning," prescribes jogging 10 miles a day and for the patient to call him in a week.

One week later, as suggested, the husband called. "How is everything at home?" asked the doctor. "How in the dickens would I know?" said the husband. "I'm 70 miles from home."



That's jogging. As for me, give me sleep-walking. It allows you to both rest and exercise at the same time. Like Calvin Coolidge, "I do not choose to run."

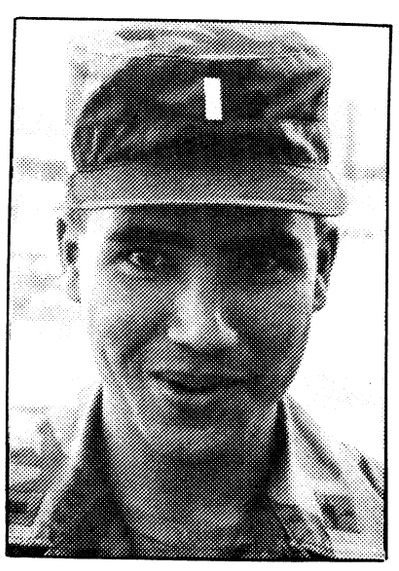
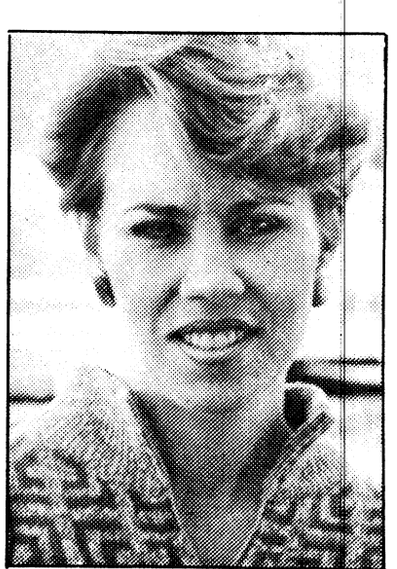
VARIOUS VOICES / What is most important to you and your family at Christmas?

PFC John Kwasigroch, Company D, 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor, 197th Infantry Brigade - "I think being with my family has to be at the top of my list. Just being there and sharing memories is really nice.



Pvt. 1 Cherie Bolden, Company C, 1st Battalion, 507th PIR - "The most important thing to my family is just being together. All year long we're going in different directions so it's hard for us to get together at any other time."



SFC C.J. Dargan, U.S. Army Recruiting Command, New Orleans, La. - "Jesus Christ and why he was born is what is most important to us. That is the true meaning of Christmas. God saw a need to show good will towards mankind just as the military is in defense of our country."

SFC Leona Hollowell, MEDDAC - "Mostly just trying to get my family all together is what is important to me. I'm here, my husband's in South Carolina and my Mom's in New York. Getting them in one place is hard to do, but it's important."

1st Lt. Mike Eslava, 690th Medical Company, 34th Medical Battalion - "Sharing the spirit of Christmas with my family and loved ones and enjoying the spirit of giving to others."

Jill Kluge, family member, - "Togetherness and having family gatherings. With the position my husband is in, it's not always feasable. So, we are grateful for the time that we do get."

Operation Holiday activities begin

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Becky Obert

Soldiers from the 1st and 2nd ITBs enjoy holiday goodies following the ceremony.

Maj. Gen. Kenneth Leuer, post commander, praised the community for their support of Operation Holiday as this year's activities began with a kickoff ceremony Friday.

Columbus Mayor James Jernigan and Phenix City Mayor Jane Gullatt were also on hand with words of support for the yearly event.

Operation Holiday, sponsored by the Chattahoochee Valley-Fort Benning Chapter, Association of the U.S. Army, will be conducted through Jan. 3. It provides various activities for service members who remain at Fort Benning during the Christmas-New Year holiday period.

Jim Gallagher, president of the local chapter, said about 2,500 soldiers participated last year at a cost to the chapter of roughly $25,000. He credits the program's success to support from the local community.

Fort Benning soldiers, this year, will have an opportunity to attend various events, including the Peach Bowl, the All-American Bowl and the Blue-Gray football games. They may also choose to participate in the post bowling tournament and tour area historic sites, industries and businesses.

In addition to extending an opportunity for soldiers to engage in fun activities, the program provides local citizens and businesses an opportunity to express their appreciation for the soldiers' contributions to our nation's defense.

ASK THE JUDGE

By Ollie M. Mick
Provost Marshal's Office

Q: I received a notice in the mail that states I have won a prize. Does it look valid?

Congratulations — it's your lucky day! You have won one of the following fabulous prizes: a diamond pendant; a deluxe vacation for two; a food processor; a stereo system; or a six-foot grandfather clock.

A: This letter should make you skeptical about the value of your "fabulous" winnings. The prizes you win may not be worth the effort to collect it.

What could be wrong with these prizes? You'd need to see them to understand. The diamond is probably the size of a pinhead. The vacation may only include discount coupons for inexpensive lodging, leaving you with the cost of transportation and food. The others may also be frauds.

These deceptively-described prizes are sometimes used as an inducement to attract customers to sales meetings for land, vacation "timesharing" packages, or products such as film processing. Because these prizes are frequently cheap imitations of luxury items, the promoters who use them call them "switchers."

A large number of complaints are received by the Federal Trade Commission about the use of deceptively advertised prizes. Many also include complaints about high-pressure sales tactics used during the sales meetings. Many people who sign contracts this way wonder if they can cancel their agreement to buy. Cancellations are often difficult without losing some amount of money.

Consider any purchase carefully before you sign. Next time you get a computerized personal letter, keep these points in mind.

- Do not be deceived by mail that looks official or urgent. Some promoters use names that resemble official organizations.
- Read the letter carefully. In some cases, the letter may tell you the cash value of each prize, or that you must attend a sales seminar as part of the contest. The fine print may be especially informative.
- Think carefully before you attend any meeting for the sole purpose of winning an expensive prize. Your chances of winning a truly valuable prize are slim.
- Do not sign a contract or give the salesperson a deposit right away. Ask for a few days to consider your answer and to have a legal assistance attorney review your contract. Call the Better Business Bureau or the state Consumer Protection Division to inquire about the company involved.
- Make sure you read the entire contract carefully.

Soldier becomes Santa Claus every year

Ann M. McDonald

Richard Davis shares a moment with Santa Claus.

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

SFC Samuel Bakley makes a big transformation during the holiday season.

Instead of the working for the lean-green-fighting-machine image, he tries to look as fat and jolly as possible. He dons a red suit and beard and becomes "Santa Claus."

In 1983 while on tour in Italy, Bakley overheard a child asking if Santa would be able to find them in Italy.

"That really got me thinking," Bakley said. "I went out and found a Santa suit from a local theater group, put it on and went around to the local housing areas passing out candy a local wives' club donated."

After his venture into the neighborhoods, he said the news spread like wildfire and his second career as Santa began.

The next year, funding was provided for candy for "Santa" to pass out during his rounds.

It just kept getting bigger and bigger, he said proudly, and the kids loved it.

Bakley recalled the year the NCO wives' club sent out flyers three months before Christmas asking for ages, names and something bad they had done during that year.

All the information was logged alphabetically for Santa's use at the annual Christmas party.

"During the party, the children were brought to Santa as close to alphabetical order as possible. When it came time to talk to Santa, he knew the child's name, and he could check the list to see if he'd been naughty or nice.

"The children were in awe when I started mentioning their shenanigans. It just added to the magic of Santa," he said.

Children get so excited about Santa as it is. When I walk into a room, I know I'll get mobbed Bakley said.

He says he gets as giddy as the children when December comes, and it's time, once again, to become the jolly fat fellow.

Before putting on the red suit, he cuts his hair so it's not visible under his wig, and his wife does his make up. He's then ready to begin again making children's wishes, to see Santa, come true.

With a Santa-like twinkle in his eye, Bakely said, "Come Christmas, I'm Santa"

New pay dates won't affect food stamp issue

Army News Service

Service members who receive food stamps to tide them over during financial hard times need not worry that their food-stamp eligibility will suffer from the newly instituted end-of-month payday realignment.

That's the good news from Army officials who have recently coordinated a policy update with officials at the U.S. Department of Agriculture, which oversees the federal food-stamp program.

We were concerned, explained Lt. Col. Jim McFarland in the Army's Office of the Deputy Chief of Staff for Personnel, that because some months during the calendar year have two end-of-month paydays and others have none (depending on how the holidays and weekends fall), we might experience conflict in the way the food-stamp eligibility is computed. The original USDA regulations required that for food-stamp purposes income be credited to the month in which it is received.

That requirement posed the prospect that soldiers who would otherwise qualify for food stamps would be deemed ineligible during those months containing two end-of-month pay days, and would qualify for more than the normal amount in those months containing none.

The revised USDA policy, issued Oct. 21 to the affected state agencies, now assures that service members' monthly pay will not fluctuate for food-stamp purposes from month to month solely because of the payday's falling on a holiday or weekend.

McFarland noted that December 1987 and April 1988 will contain two end-of-month paydays. Next year, the months of January and May will contain none.

Trainees receive GEDs

By Jean Hutchinson
Harmony Church Education Center

Thirteen trainees in 2nd Infantry Training Brigade attained an additional goal while assigned to Company E, 4th Battalion, 36th Infantry. They were awarded high school equivalency certificates through the General Education Development Testing Service, Washington, D.C.

The recipients who received GED certificates in an awards ceremony Dec. 9 included:

Pvt. 1 Robert Ainsworth, Pvt. 1 Winfred Clark, Pvt. 1 Silas Edwards, Pvt. 1 Michael Harris, Pvt. 1 Josef Jazvik, Pvt. 1 Jeffrey Jennings, Pvt. 1 Jeffrey Keller, Pvt. 1 Jeremy Miller, Pvt. 1 John Miller, Pvt. 1 Jameson Newell, Pvt. 1 William Stock, Pvt. 1 Jimmy Stone, Pvt. 1 Jason Strange.

The soldiers are among 41 trainees who recently attempted the GED while in their training cycle at Fort Benning, all in the 2nd Infantry Training Brigade. TRADOC reports that 85 percent of new recruits have successfully completed the seven-hour test battery on the first attempt.

Presentations were made by the staff of the Harmony Church Branch, Army Continuing Education Systems Office , DPCA. Charles D. Fritts, chief of the post ACES Office said, "Having attained the GED goal, these soldiers will arrive at their first PCS better prepared to fulfill their jobs and to advance in their new careers."

Dental disease is major problem

Training and Doctrine Command

The Department of the Army spent $51,929,508 in dental health care in fiscal year '87 in the continental United States, Alaska, Hawaii and Panama — up from the $47,668,992 spent in 1986.

The Army is increasing the total dollars it spends for dental treatment, but dental disease still is recognized as a major public health problem — for civilians and the military.

Dental health plays an important role in Army readiness, so preventive dental awareness is a major goal of the Army Health Promotion Program.

Historically, dental disease has been a significant problem for the military. According to a DA pamphlet, during the Vietnam conflict, 144 soldiers out of every 1,000 had some kind of dental emergency during their tours of duty.

"It's our responsibility as Army dentists to help the soldier maintain the best possible health, including sound dental health," said Capt. (Dr.) Clyde W. Long, the DENTAC preventive dental officer at Fort Monroe.

"Without proper health, including dental health," he continued, "a soldier may literally be unable to fight."

To help determine their states of dental readiness, all active duty personnel are placed in a military fitness classification system.

Class one soldiers require no dental treatment. Soldiers in class two are unlikely to have dental emergencies or require dental treatment within 12 months from the date of the examinations. Soldiers in classes three and four are the most likely candidates for dental treatment.

The classification system helps the Army determine which soldiers are the most fit for deployment.

"Soldiers in classes one and two are the most dentally healthy and are, therefore, more fit for action," said Capt. John Kelly, DENTAC XO at Ft. Eustis. "Soldiers in classes three and four are not dentally fit for deployment until they can raise their classifications or provide dental records."

The Army requires soldiers to receive annual dental exams, including Panorex x-rays for identification. Kelly explained that routine exams often catch potential dental problems before they become serious.

According to Long, dental caries or (cavities) are the most prevalent problem among soldiers. Vying for second and third places are periodontal disease and gingivitis, respectively.

He pointed out that most of those problems, however, could be avoided. Education, routine dental exams and oral hygiene are the keys to prevention.

Many of the young soldiers we see aren't that familiar with daily dental care. A lot of them have never gone to a dentist before. After they arrive at their first permanent duty stations — that's when they receive most of their dental care and learn how to take care of their teeth, he said.

The rules most people learned in health class about brushing and flossing three times a day still apply.

Most dentists advise their patients to cut down on sweets and sugary products.

In the late 1930s and early 1940s fluoride was discovered as an effective treatment in preventing tooth decay. Dental studies show that fluoride cuts decay by at least 60 percent. Fluoride has been such an effective tool that most communities now fluoridate their water.

Now all installations have fluoridated water to help their soldiers combat tooth disease. Once fluoridated water proved its merit, toothpastes and mouthwashes containing fluoride hit the market. Most can be found in installation PXs and pharmacies.

"The most important thing to remember in preventing dental problems," Long said, "is that proper dental health is ultimately an individual responsibility. The initiative must come from the individual soldier; the dentist's job is to provide help when needed and to take care of dental emergencies."

"Properoral hygiene," he continued, "will ward off a myriad of tooth problems."

Army dental care is not expensive, and dental neglect can add up in dollars and lost productivity.

Fireplaces can let heat escape

By Becky Ray
Post Energy Office

In attempting to warm their homes by using a fireplace, many people actually waste heat as it literally goes up in smoke. A fire on the hearth warms cool evenings and is a great way to save energy when a furnace is not used. However, if the furnace is operating, heat from the entire house can escape through the chimney.

One solution to the problems of wasted heat is to set the thermostat at a very low setting. Although some heat may still be lost, it will be limited if the thermostat is set at 50.

Closing off the room in which the fireplace is being used also minimizes heat loss from the rest of the house. All doors and vents entering the room should be closed. Opening a nearby window about an inch will allow in enough air to feed the fire.

When the fireplace is not being used, close the damper. Eight percent of the heat in a house can escapse up an open chimney.

Burning wood slowly saves fuel. Roaring fires wast fuel because most of the heat goes up the chimney.

Wood for fuel should be well-seasoned in order to burn most efficiently. Generally, it should be cut six to nine months prior to burning. If wood is cut during the summer, the leaves can be left on to pull more moisture from the wood. The percentage of moisture and weight of the wood determine its heat value as a fuel. Hickory and oak are excellent woods for use as fuel.

Chimneys should be checked often for creosote buildup. Creosote is caused by the condensation of unburned wood gasses on the inside walls of the chimney. If allowed to remain too long, this can turn to carbon, creating a fire hazard. Although creosote can contain differing amounts of water, it is always dark brown or black, and has an acrid odor.

Chimneys in need of cleaning should be reported to the DEH Work Order Section, 545-2135, during regular duty hours.

Candlelight Service attracts crowd

By Marsha Santiago
ITC Correspondent

Sunday evening there was standing room only in Theater 3, Sand Hill, for the fifth annual 1st Infantry Training Brigade Candlelight Service of Lessons and Carols.

A total of 1,500 One-Station-Unit-Training soldiers attended the two services.

Col. Jose Feliciano, 1st Brigade commander, welcomed the soldiers, cadre and families attending the service. Chap. (Maj.) James Langford, brigade chaplain, presented the invocation.

Lessons were read by Lt. Col. Gordon Lam, commander, 2nd Bn., 54th Inf.; Sgt. Ulysses Brown, Co. A, 3rd Bn. 32nd Inf.; Capt. Walter Dudley, commander, Co. C, 1st Bn, 19th Inf.; 1st Lt. Tim Grysztar, executive officer, Co. A, 2d Bn., 19th Inf.; Pvt. 1 Stephen Rouse, Co. D, 1st Bn., 50th Inf., and SSgt. Marjorie Robinson, HHD, 1st ITB. Chap. (Capt.) Robert Washington gave the benediction.

John Gibbs, guest soloist from Nashville, Tenn., sang three all-time favorite Christmas hymns. The choir, composed of OSUT soldiers, sang "Silent Night," and led those attending the service in "O Come, O Come Emmanuel," "O Come, All Ye Faithful," "The First Noel," and "Angels We Have Heard on High."

The annual event is the brigade's Christmas celebration for the soldiers before "Operation Exodus," which releases the soldiers for the holidays.

According to Langford, the candlelight service has proven to be one of the brigade's largest and most successful services during the year.

Each day offers new opportunity

By Dave Hicks
Infantry School Chaplain

"...She will bear a son, and you shall call his name Jesus, for he will save his people from their sins." Matthew 1:21

Every day presents each of us with the opportunity to make a fresh start in life as we pause to recall our past failures, unfulfilled dreams and hopes for a bright future. We crave a new beginning as we look forward to tomorrow, thinking that things will be different.

But H.G. Wells puts the issue in perspective for us as he says, "Until a man has found God, he begins at not the beginning and works to no end."

Jesus, the Humble King, born in a stable in a far-off corner of the world, offers that beginning as a gift. For he came as the Way to God, to unshackle and set people free. That's the miracle of Christmas and that's exciting.

When I enlisted in the Army in 1958, I was involved in a struggle, trying many things in a vain attempt to find stability for my confused and frustrated life. Christmas was no different than other holidays; they were filled with parties and empty celebrations.

Through the ministry of my unit chaplain at Fort Campbell, Ky. in 1964, Christmas became a new and exciting event, as the chaplain was effective in reaching soldiers like me through a series of lectures.

While in attendance at one of his sessions as the sergeant responsible for other soldiers who attended, I was impressed with the lecture. Later, I returned to the chapel and met with the chaplain who confronted me with the good news that in Jesus Christ I could have a new beginning in life.

I swallowed my pride as a hardened airborne infantry sergeant, well set in my ways, acknowledged my need for Christ and his forgiveness and invited him into my life as personal Lord and Savior. I experienced the miracle of Christmas and began to live a life that was filled with God's wonderful surprises.

As an individual and as a soldier, the quality of my life was enhanced immeasurably, and now as a chaplain, I continue to enjoy that excitement in my ministry to soldiers and family members.

In a real sense, I had been to the manger and had been touched by the love and power of the king of kings. My life had changed, for I had discovered the real meaning of the Christmas celebration; and in the spirit of the shepherds of old, I returned to familiar activities, "...glorifying and praising God for all" I "had heard and seen." Luke 2:20

Come to the manger and celebrate new life. There you will find life, peace, joy and hope for an eternity.

"It was said that the wise men, after visiting the Babe in the manger 'went back another way.' No one can really see Christ and go back the same way. Life becomes different from that hour." E. Stanley Jones.

COMMUNITY

THIS WEEK

Holiday closings: Christmas and New Year's Day will be holidays for most military and civilian personnel at Fort Benning. Since Martin Army Community Hospital clinics will be closed on those days, emergencies will be handled in the hospital's emergency room. Also, the hospital's and the Main Mall's pharmacies will be closed.

The Main Mall Post Exchange will be closed for Christmas but will open New Year's Day, 9 a.m.-6 p.m. The post commissary will close both days.

Christmas Day, the Main Mall bowling alley will be open Saturday and New Year's Day, noon-6 p.m., and Jan. 2, 11 a.m.-4 a.m.

Post garbage will not be collected either day.

Tot Town closing: The Child Development Center on First Division Road will be closed Dec. 24, 25, 26 and 27 and will re-open Dec. 28. The center will be closed Dec. 31 during the day but will be open from 6:30 p.m.-3 a.m. Children will be accepted on a pre-paid, no refund, reservation-only basis. The $10 fee for one child and $5 for each additional child will cover any number of hours until closing. Refreshments and party favors are included. No meals will be served. Tot Town will also close Jan. 1, 2 and 3 and will resume normal operating hours Jan. 4.

New Year's Eve party: Tickets for the NCO Club System's New Year's Party are still available. Tickets are $10 per person and includes entertainment, party favors, a split of champagne and breakfast. Breakfast will be served in the Garden Room, 12:15-1:45 a.m.

Water service interruption: An interruption of water service is scheduled Monday and Wednesday, 8 a.m.-6 p.m. for the 4800 and 4900 blocks at Harmony Church for maintenance and cleaning of the water mains. For more information, call 545-4141/4746.

UPCOMING

A Taste of Columbus: Sample cuisine from more than 35 restaurants and experience The Chocolate Factory and the Kids Kitchen. The "Taste" will be at the Columbus Iron Works Convention and Trade Center Feb. 18-21. Admission is $2 for adults and $1 for children. Food prices range from 50 cents to $3. Entertainment will be provided throughout the event. For more information, call 327-4522.

Parenting classes: Expectant Parents Classes will begin Jan. 6, 7 p.m. at Martin Army Community Hospital, second floor conference room. The classes will be held for five consecutive weeks after the starting date. For more information or to register for classes, call 545-4041.

Adult study skills refrèsher course: The Continuing Education Division of Columbus College offers an adult study skills refresher course at the Elizabeth Bradley Turner Center, Columbus College. The Tuesday and Thursday sessions begin Jan. 12, 12:30-3 p.m. or 7-9:30 p.m. and will continue for nine weeks. The course will review and update skills in reading, writing and math and gives an extensive orientation to Columbus College procedures, services and opportunities. The fee is $85. For more information, call Linda Gabrielson, 568-2330 or to register for the course, call 568-2023.

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Woodworking classes: Happiness is a gift handmade from wood. The Arts and Crafts Center is just the place to make that Christmas gift. Open Wednesday-Friday, 1-9 p.m. and Saturday-Sunday, 10 a.m.-6 p.m. For additional information, orientation classes are offered each Saturday at building 2738.

Detour: All tracked vehicle traffic is prohibited from crossing the Uptaoi Creek Bridge on Buena Vista Road until further notice. A recent inspection has highlighted deficiencies making it necessary to reevaluate the bridge's structural integrity. All tracked vehicles should use the tank trail creek crossing adjacent to the bridge. For more information, call Directorate of Engineering and Housing, 545-3725.

Christmas meal: Surcharges for families of enlisted soldiers have been waived by William H. Taft IV, deputy secretary of defense, in response to a request by Secretary of the Army John O. Marsh Jr. Because sharing holiday meals with family members is viewed as a cornerstone towards building unit morale and esprit de corps, spouses and children of enlisted soldiers will be exempt from paying the operating expense surcharge for their meals. This policy has been expanded to all the services.

Family members aged 12 and over will pay $2.25, while children under 12 will pay $1.10. Officers and non-family members will still be required to pay the surcharge bringing the cost to $5.40 for adults and $2.65 for children under 12.

Free GED and English classes: Classes will be held each Monday and Thursday, 6:30-9 p.m. and are sponsored by the International Wives Club. The classes will close for Christmas vacation today and resume Jan. 4.

Host a foreign student: The International Student Exchange is seeking families to host students from Mexico, Japan, Colombia, Spain, Germany, Panama, Brazil, Bolivia and Egypt. A teenage boy or girl, selected by you, will live as a member of your family while attending a local high school. The students are carefully screened, covered by medical insurance and provide their own spending money. If you would like to participate in this unique learning experience, contact International Student Exchange, P.O. Box 840, Fort Jones, Calif. 96032 or call 1-800-233-HOST or 1-916-468-2264.

Firewood: Cutting permits are needed by anyone desiring to cut wood on the reservation. Permits are sold at the following locations: Savannah District, Resident Forester's Office on Lightning Road and DEH Natural Resources Management Office, building 5884, Harmony Church. Permits are sold Tuesday-Thursday, 9-11:30 a.m. and 1-4 p.m. Cutting is allowed Thursday-Sunday of each week and legal holidays as they occur.

Cost of the permit is $10 per day, payable by money order or bank draft. Maps of cutting areas are given when the permit is purchased. Only downed trees may be cut in the designated area. For more information, call 544-6120.

Recreation area: The Fort Rucker Florida Recreation Area offers an inexpensive vacation spot for active duty and retired military personnel and their families. The center is located on Florida Highway 20, between Freeport and Niceville, Fla., and is close to Destin and Panama City Beach. The center has camp sites and trailers for rent at reasonable rates.

For more information or reservations, call the Information, Tour and Travel Office at Fort Rucker, at (205) 255-5816, between the hours of 10 a.m.-1 p.m. and 2-6 p.m. Monday-Friday.

Abandoned animals: The pet impoundment/adoption facility is located behind the post veterinary clinic. Unidentifiable stray pets are held only three days before disposition. Personnel interested in viewing animals need to check with the veterinary clinic personnel. Every year 500-600 pets are impounded. Many of these pets make excellent companions and family members.

Rabies vaccination recall: Dogs and cats that received their most recent rabies shots from the post veterinary clinic during Oct. 1, 1984 through Aug. 13, 1986 and June 8, 1987 through Sept. 1, 1987 must be revaccinated (at no cost) as soon as possible. Bring your pet, rabies certificate and records if we don't already have them to the post veterinary clinic during normal clinic hours for confirmation and revaccination. No appointment is needed for revaccination. No other services will be provided. Monday, 8-11 a.m. and 1-2:30 p.m., and Friday 8-11 a.m. Saturday clinics will be announced. For more information call 545-1127.

Computer classes: The Kelley Hill Recreation Center offers a variety of computer classes. These include Word Perfect, MS-DOS and Multi-Mate. Call 544-1913 for more information.

Class openings: A Small World Child Development Center on Custer Road has openings for 4 year olds in the two-day, afternoon class only. For more information, call 544-1623 between 8 a.m. and 3 p.m.

Arts and Crafts: The most important psychological benefit obtained from recreation is relaxation. The Arts and Crafts Center provides an essential source of relaxation for military personnel. You can learn to develop and print your own photos and remember, the Fort Benning Photo Contest is coming up in January. This is the first step on the way to the Army Photo Contest. Now is the time to get your photos printed and mounted. Come by the Arts and Crafts Center on the corner of Sightseeing Road and Eckel Street, building 2783, and see the photo instructor or call 545-3677 for more information. 545-3677.

Influenza vaccines: Shots are available for the flu season. All active duty personnel, health care providers, children, adults with chronic heart disease, moderate to severe asthma, bronchopulmonary dysplasia, chronic bronchitis, chronic renal disease or diabetes are at increased risk for catching the flu and are encouraged to get vaccinated.

Active duty troops must get their shots at the troop medical clinics, while family practice patients can get theirs at the Family Practice Clinic. Retirees and their dependents can be vaccinated at the Immunization Clinic on the 9th floor of the hospital. The clinic's hours are 7:30-11:30 a.m. and 1-3:30 p.m., Monday-Friday.

Patients under age 19 must have a prescription for immunizations. Patients must bring their medical records to the clinic, or they will not be immunized.

Children ages 6 months to 12 years will require two separate injections at monthly intervals. It is also suggested that patients over 65 years old receive a second injection four to six weeks after their initial immunizations.

OWC classes: The club's School of Dance offers a variety of classes for all military families, active duty, retired, officer or enlisted. We now offer ballet, boys and girls gymnastics, karate, Maria's Battle of the Bulge and Get-Fit-Stay-Fit classes. John Touchton, our karate instructor, is now offering a women's self-defense class. The cost is $50, and the class runs for eight weeks. Students will receive a certificate of completion at the end of the class. For information on future dates of the self defense class, call Touchton at 1-582-3117. For information on specific classes, call the instructors listed: ballet - Jane Frenkel, 563-0294; gymnastics — Kelly Pitts, 563-0325, Brad Godown, 324-1167; karate — John Touchton, 1-582-3117; Maria's Battle of the Bulge, 687-2616; and Get-Fit-Stay-Fit — Jeanne Parker, 687-0738. For more information, call Chris Travis at 682-0137. Come by and visit us at building 1234 on Ingersoll Street, Monday-Thursday from 10 a.m.-2 p.m.

Separation physicals: Service members desiring separation physical examinations may take one as early as 120 days and not later than 30 days prior to their ETS dates. For males Monday-Thursday, 12:15 p.m., and for females, Monday-Friday, 8 a.m. Please bring your health records, and report to the Physical Examination Service located on Baltzell Avenue, building 323, behind the Infantry Museum. For more information, call 545-1443 or 545-1660.

Girl Scouts: The Fort Benning Girl Scouts need Girl Scout leaders and co-leaders. Moms and Dads, it is so important that we have your help to make this a better place for children, so please volunteer.

In McGraw Manor, call 689-3616; main post, 687-3815; Indianhead Terrace, 689-5186, 7-9 p.m.; and Bouton Heights-Davis Hill, 689-7261, 3:30-9 p.m.

Money problems: Everyone has money problems. Too many bills, unexpected expenses, dream vacations or just plain lack of.

To help educate soldiers on how to manage their money, the Army Community Service, Consumer Affairs and Financial Assistance Program offer special programs. Counseling and assistance are available on the subjects of consumer education, personal finance and family budget matters.

Budget classes include sure-pay training, check writing, budgeting and credit and debt liquidation. Information is also provided on Army Emergency Relief, Food Stamps and Women, Infant and Children Programs. The classes are available for unit briefings.

Budget classes or counseling appointments may be scheduled by calling 545-5516/4357 or 544-3917.

The Consumer Affairs and Financial Assistance Program serves the soldier, family members, retirees and widows.

Government-owned furnishings: Soldiers who live off post and have dependents are eligible to receive government-owned furnishings.The following guidelines are provided for soldiers who want to receive furnishings.* Furnishings will be issued at the Furnishings Management Branch, Housing Division, DEH. Hours of operation are Mondays and Wednesdays from 8 a.m-noon, and 12:30 p.m.-4 p.m. Soldiers requesting items must present a copy of their Leave and Earnings Statement and a Military Identification Card. Furnishings cannot be issued or returned during inclement weather. There is no fee for the use of these items.

Soldiers must follow these procedures when returning furnishings: Turn-ins will be accepted Monday-Thursday, 8 a.m.-noon, and 1 p.m.-4 p.m. Personal effects must be removed prior to turn-in. Wood furniture must be cleaned, and a light coat of polish or wax applied. All furnishings must be returned before clearing Fort Benning. Soldiers will be held liable for loss or any damage to government issue furnishings, and may not be allowed to clear post until liability is satisfied.

A wide assortment of furnishings are available at FMO. Among these are beds, dressers, mirrors, tables and chairs, and desks.

For more information, call 544-4713.

Optometry Clinic hours change: The Optometry Clinic at Martin Army Community Hospital changed its walk-in clinic for active duty to a same day appointment system. This change is being made in an effort to reduce the patient's waiting time and to provide better service.

Same day appointments will be available on Monday, Tuesday, Thursday and Friday afternoons. No morning appointments will be available since the optometrists screen patients at the Reception Station in the morning. Appointments should be scheduled for routine eye examinations. They must be made by telephone only, between the hours of 8:30 and 10:30 a.m., for an appointment that afternoon. Call 544-3041/3042/3043. Appointments are not needed if you only need to reorder glasses or order protective mask inserts from a current (less than one year old) prescription. These individuals can report to the clinic, 8 a.m.-3:30 p.m. on any duty day with their current prescription, ID card and medical records.

School needs support: The Don C. Faith Middle School PTO needs the support of parents to help raise funds to support school activities, and joining the PTO is the first step. Membership dues are $2 per person. For more information, call Lynn Barlotta at 689-2096.

The Self Help Issue Point has relocated: It is now housed in the U-Do-It Center, building 385, located at Vibbert Avenue and Delta Street. Operating hours of the center are Monday-Friday, 9:30 a.m.-5:45 p.m., and Saturday, 9 a.m.-2 p.m. All military units will continue to pick up supplies for projects at building 466 until further notice.For more information, call 545-1121.

Santa Claus flies to Benning, visits Riverside

Children wait patiently to talk to Santa.

Photos by Becky Obert

By Becky Obert
Bayonet staff writer

In a sleigh pulled by eight tiny reindeer, Santa Claus flew into Fort Benning last week.

His visit was the result of a personal invitation from Sally Jean Leuer, wife of the post commander. Leuer invited Claus to come to Riverside to visit with the children here at a special pavilion on her patio.

A small, but steady crowd kept Santa busy every afternoon at the colorful pavilion, which was built by soldiers from the 36th Engineer Group.

It consisted of an archway flanked by twin toy soldiers and a pathway that led to Santa Claus on his throne.

Children were greeted by Santa's helper, who escorted them down the path to the throne, where the children whispered their Christmas wants into the jolly old man's ear.

The children were clearly impressed with Claus, who had rosy cheeks and a big round belly, that shook like a bowl full of jelly when he laughed.

He was dressed, head to toe, in a red suit trimmed with white fur and a matching fur cap atop his head. A long white beard and white hair all but obscured his face, save for his eyes, which twinkled merrily throughout his visit here.

While he didn't have time for an interview, he could frequently be heard saying to the children, "Ho Ho Ho! Merry Christmas!"

Claus was at Riverside from 3 to 6 p.m. daily, except for Thursday, when he left at 5 p.m. The 283rd Army Band, the Faith School choir and a mime also performed for children during the afternoons.

Thursday and Friday, Claus had a little competition for the children's attention in the form of a live animal display.

Walter Rosso, a military retiree who farms 500 acres in Chattahoochee County, brought a burro, a donkey, a rabbit, a goat, a cow and a calf from his farm for the children's enjoyment.

When they discovered that the calf did not have a name, Mrs. Leuer organized a contest on the spot, asking the children to put suggestions in a box. Later, she asked her husband to pull one out at random and announced that the 5-month-old calf is now to be called "Corky."

Santa left Riverside Friday at 6 p.m., in a hurry to get back to the North Pole and finish preparing for his big trip Christmas Eve.

But I heard him exclaim as he rode off in the twilight, "Merry Christmas to all, and to all a good night."

Children visiting Santa got the chance to help pick a name for a 5-month-old bull calf at the animal exhibit.

Black-hat selected as trainer of year

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

Standing just 5 feet, 7 inches and weighing 130 pounds, he hardly sounds like a menancing black-hat trainer at the U.S. Army Airborne School.

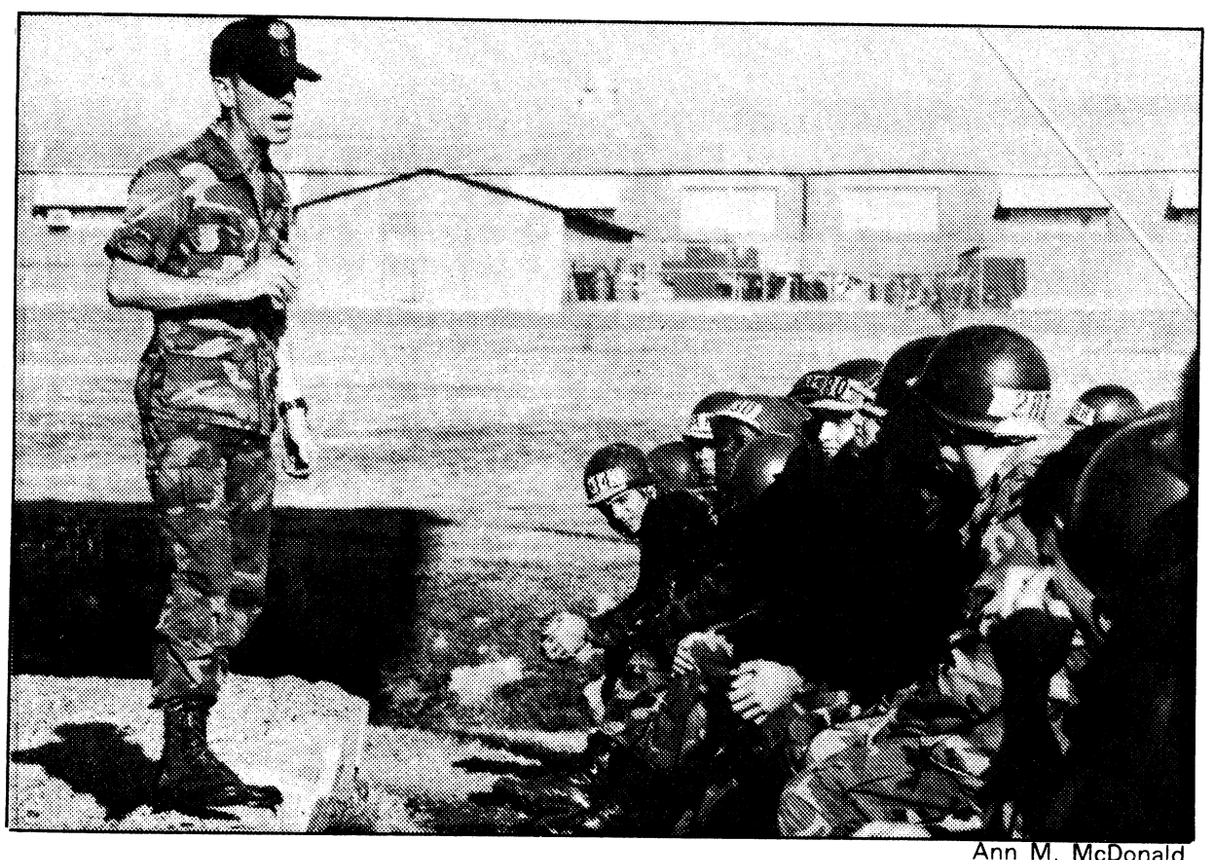
But he is that and a lot more.

SFC Robert Reeves, Company A, 1st Battalion, 507th PIR was selected Trainer of the Year.

A master parachutist and a trainer at the school since 1985, Reeves partly attributes his success on being selected for the award to his experience with training soldiers to become airborne qualified."

Also, he said he just plain hates to lose. "You have to want to win, or you're not going to succeed in life." Reeves said.

"Besides, I've been in the Army a long time, and I should know more." he said.



Reeves said training techniques have come a long way in his 13 years of Army service.

His particular style is reverse psycology. "I like to challenge people and make them prove to me they can do it," he said.

His style works. One recent graduate spoke of her experience with Reeves,"He scared me to death, but at the same time, he made me so mad I wanted to do it, and I did." she said sporting wings on her chest.

Reeves did admit he doesn't use this approach all the time. "Sometimes, I have to pull the students aside, talk to them and reassure them," he said. "But I don't baby them. I'm not going to force this training on them because not everyone is meant to go through it."When asked what motivates him, Reeves said, "I do it because I love the Army, and I'm 110-percent soldier. I'm not here for the awards."

However, Reeves humbly said, "It was nice to receive the trainer of the year award from the Secretary of the Army."

Tips help holiday overeaters

By Celeste G. Carpenter
Chief, Nutrition Care Division

The holidays are always a difficult time for those who are trying to watch what they eat. Don't let holiday time add pounds to your weight each year because of overeating.

The holiday season constitutes 25 percent of the year. The overeating usually starts at Halloween and continues until the Super Bowl.

There are several things one can do to avoid overindulging while still enjoying holiday eating. First, adopting "thin" eating habits will solve many of the problems of overeating.

The trick is to incorporate these habits into your lifestyle and practice them all year round, including during the holiday season. Here is a list of "thin eating habits" that help curb calories:

■ Watch portion sizes, put small portions on a plate. You can tell yourself you will go back for more, but chances are you won't because it takes 20 minutes for the brain to receive the message from the stomach that you are full. If you have unbuttoned a button or released a belt around your waist, you've eaten too much.

■ Adopt low-calorie basic products such as low-fat dairy products, leaner cuts of meat and less red meat.

■ Avoid using oils, butter, margarine, mayonnaise, gravies and sauces in excess. There are 2,000 calories in a cup of oil or butter; one stick of butter or margarine contains 800 calories. A tablespoon of oil, butter or margarine contains 100 calories. Eating one tablespoon less fat (100 calories) each day will enable you to lose 11 pounds body fat per year.

■ Never allow long periods of time to elapse without eating. Being hungry can set you up to overeat.

■ Select low calorie snacks. Low calorie snacks, such as popcorn, contain less fat and calories than peanuts. A three-cup portion of popcorn with a small amount of fat contains 100 calories, while one cup of peanuts contains 700-800 calories. Peanuts also contain 75 percent fat and 25 percent protein. Fresh fruit and vegetables are also good low calorie snacks.

■ Exercise more; exercising is a "thin habit" that helps you to burn calories and relieve some of the stress of the holidays. Adopt an appropriate exercise to suit your lifestyle.

■ Select foods high in complex carbohydrates, such as fruits, vegetables and whole grains. A high fiber intake increases the feeling of satisfac-

Spencer students attend an academic decathlon

By T. Richard Cummings
Spencer High School

Spencer High School attended an academic decathlon at Hardaway High School Dec. 12. The competition, hosted by the Muscogee County School District, was open to all high school students in the area.

"After this type of competition, students rarely go back to performing on the same level," said Mary Starke, an advisor for secondary language arts in Muscogee County. "Most perform at a higher level on a nation-wide average."

The decathlon consisted of ten events covering mathematics, interviewing, public speaking, economics, fine arts, social studies, science, English, essay writing and a "Super Quiz."

Each school attending sent a six-member team, two people from three grade point averages; 3.75-4, 3-3.74 and 0-2.99. Students were allowed to compete in their own range or in a higher one.

Dan McNeill, of Spencer, placed in six of the ten events and was the overall winner of the competition. Other Spencer place finishers were Keri Foster, Mark Needham and Amy Touw. Spencer High place second in team competition.

Team competes in math

Spencer High's Varsity and Jr. Varsity Math Clubs traveled to Woodward Academy near Atlanta to participate in math competition. They were one of 73 schools from around the state attending with more than 1,000 students taking part.

The Spencer High team members were Richard Eickler, Tom York, Scott Nunez, Oliver Ackerman, Lisa Roberts, Stan Moxwell, Saul Hernandez, Joaquin Saenz-Messia, Rob Tesdahl, Smirra Brinson and Clay Davis.

Eickler place 47th overall in the competion.

PTA concert conducted

The Spencer PTA held its annual Christmas Concert Dec. 10.

The girls chorus/ensemble started the evening with a rendition of Silent Night and other carols.

Then the choral director, Jeff Branham, conducted a sing along with the assembly.

Next, the Drama Department put on a mime and a comical version of "Twas the Night Before Christmas" directed by Paul Hamp, head of the Drama Department.

To close out the evening, the Mighty Greenwave Band, directed by Vincent Rosse, performed several carols and received a standing ovation.

Don't overdrink this season

By Wendell Choate
Provost Marshal's Office

The holidays are here. A time of good cheer, parties, fellowship, sharing and giving. It is also a time when our exposure to potential problems is increased.

The Christmas and New Year's holidays are traditionally celebrated at parties and other functions where a variety of alcoholic beverages are consumed. While there is no problem with the use of alcohol, used in moderation, all too often the spirit of fellowship and good cheer at parties encourages overindulgence.

It is easy lose track of how much you've had to drink when you are having a good time. You may be less careful about spreading the drinks out over an appropriate period of time for them to be safely absorbed by your body. The following are some tips on being a good host when serving liquor at parties during the holidays.

■ Keep then nibbling: eating while drinking slows down the rate at which alcohol is absorbed into the bloodstream. Nibbling also slows down the rate at which people drink.

■ Don't rush refills: Wait until the glass is empty before you offer another drink and when someone says, "No thanks," don't insist.

■ Safety first: if someone drinks too much at your house, you are responsible. See that your friends get home safely, but don't let them drive. It takes about one hour per drink taken to sober up. Coffee and a cold shower won't help.

■ Remember: the alcohol content in a 12-ounce beer is equal to four ounces of wine or one and one half ounces of whiskey.

Drinking impairs the ability to drive, drinking slows your physical and mental reflexes and reactions. So do yourself a favor by planning ahead to take a taxi, the post shuttle bus or riding home with a friend who has had little or preferabley nothing to drink.

Be honest with yourself. If you know that you have had one or two too many drinks to be in control of your mind and body, STOP. Drinking and driving is dangerous. Be smart and be sober. Know your limit. Remember, "Friends don't let friends drive drunk."

From the Military Police Activity to you, please drive safely and have a very Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year.

Eat

tion, which may help with weight control.

■ Trim fat from meals whenever possible. One way to trim fat from gravy is to refrigerate newly made gravy until the fat hardens on the surface. Remove and discard the fat before reheating the gravy.

■ Use plenty of herbs and spices as a flavor enhancement in lieu of fat and salt.

The holiday season arrives with festive music, laughter and the warmth of family and friends. The emphasis on nutrition makes is easier than ever to eat healthfully and happily during the holiday season.

River Rats win USAIC B-Ball Championship

River Rat Morris Arthur fires a pass to a teammate.

By Ron Allen
Bayonet staff writer

Coach Darnell Parham's last minute changes in game strategy for the 586th Eng. Co. "River Rats", led to a 61-52 victory over HHC, 1st Bn., 29th Inf., in the USAIC Basketball Championship Saturday.

"We started the tournament with a man-to-man defense," Parham said, "But for the championship game, I changed to a zone defense. I put everything I had out on the floor for this game and went to the bench as little as possible. To keep from burning the guys out the change to zone (defense) was necessary."

"I also put Ronnie Smith in as a guard," Parham continued. "He generally plays forward, but I wanted all my height up front."

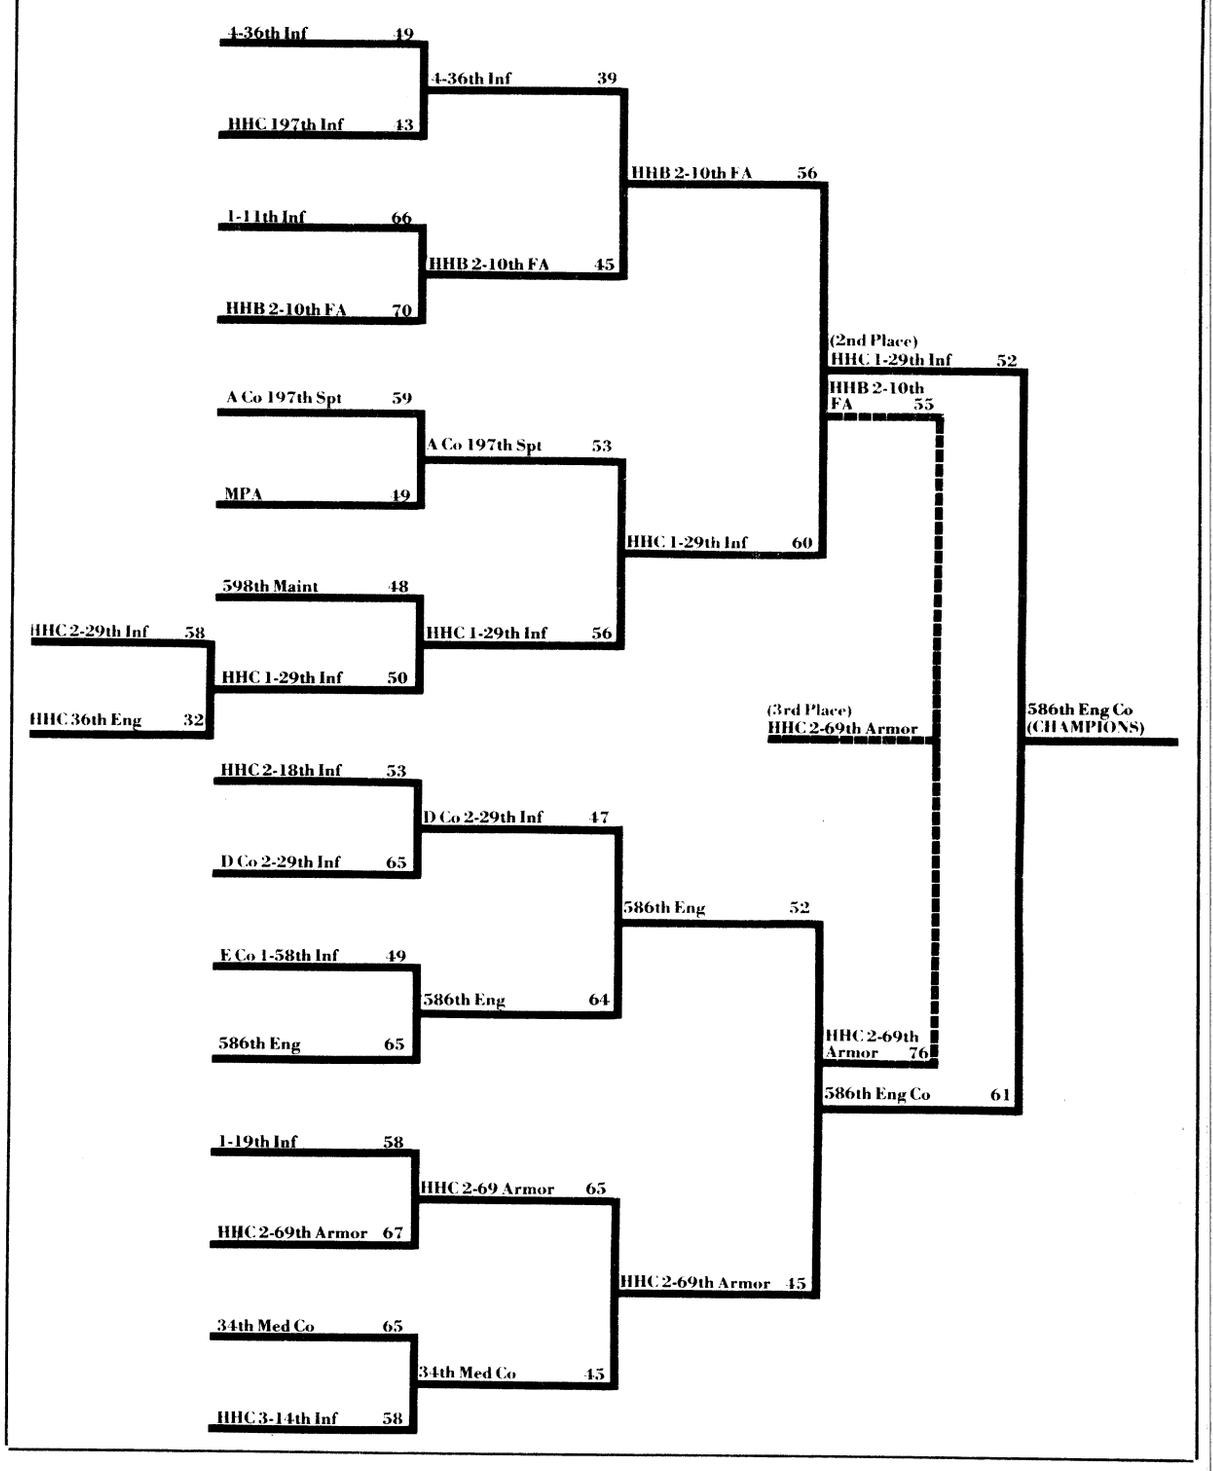
"Smith is also a pretty good ball handler and, that was another reason for the change," Parham said. "He was our high scorer for the game with 15 points."

Tony Hawkins was the second, high scorer with 10, and Terry Fortson led the team in rebounds.

At half time, the Rats led HHC 22-12. But with 13:06 showing on the clock, HHC pulled into a tie with the Rats 34-all. But that didn't last as the Rats called a time out to regroup and came back to take the lead and keep it until the final horn sounded.

The Rats began the tournament by crushing 1st Bn., 19th Inf., 67-58. They followed that up with an even more convincing win over D Co., 2nd Bn., 29th Inf., 64-47, and in the semi-final game, the Rats dumped HHC, 2nd Bn., 69th Armor, 52-45.

This year's basketball season is divided into two mini-seasons. The next season will begin in mid January. The Rats finished regular season play for this mini-season with an unblemished record of 8-0.



"Everyone better look out," Parham said. "We're going for it again in the next season."

Maj. Gen. Kenneth Leuer, commanding general of Fort Bennning, was as on hand after the game to present the trophy to the triumphant River Rats.

Road Warriors outlast Panthers, 56-53, for 197th honors

Panthers' Kevin Baker shoots over Road Warrior Joe Kelly for the score.

Col. Harvey D. Watson, 197th Inf. Bde. commander presents the championship trophy to Jeffrey Moses, team captain for the Road Warriors.

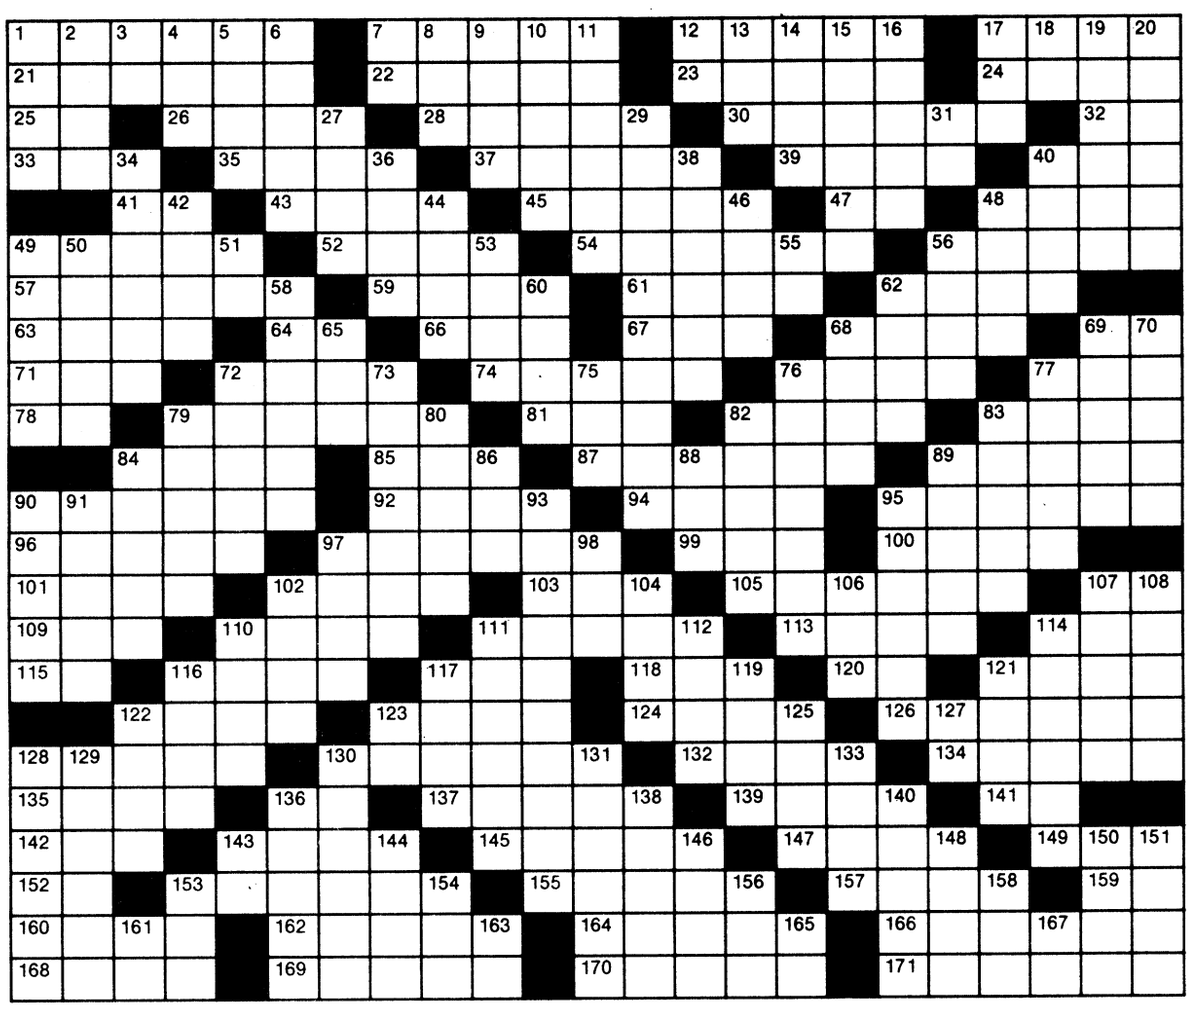
By George Mingee
197th Inf Bde Correspondent

Due to the hard charging, determination of guard, Carl Roberson and forward Ronald James, the "Road Warriors" of HHC, 197 Inf. Bde. beat the "Panthers" of HHC, 2nd Bn., 69th Armor, 56-53 in the brigade's intramural basketball championship.

Roberson's teammates fed him several good passes throughout the game.

Teammate James also found success by duplicating Roberson's score with eight points of his own. The two combined, gave their team the greatly needed edge to win the game.

The game started out as a clear match up between two evenly balanced shooting teams. But when the buzzer sounded and the half was over, the Panthers had the edge on HHC by four points making the half-time score 26-22 Panthers.



Guard Kevin Baker, of 69th Armor, led his team with total of 13 points for the game. With teammate Alvin Daniels following close behind with 11 points, making him the second highest scorer for the Panthers.

The second-half proved to be more exciting than the first-half. With the score flip-flopping back and forth, neither team could keep the edge. With the clock ticking, time ran out in regular play, forcing both teams to go to sudden death overtime with the score tied 48-48.

As the clock was reset for five minutes of overtime play, both teams were discussing strategy. When play restarted, both teams went head to head, and it was obvious that neither team was going to quit. But in the end, HHC beat the Panthers 56-53 in over-time play, making them 197th Infantry Brigade champions.

SafetyCab continues to fight drunk driving

By Becky Obert
Bayonet staff writer

New Year's is the time for parties and making merry, and unfortunately, a time when many people will drink and drive. Go ahead, eat, drink and be merry, but when the time comes to go home, try giving SafetyCab a call.

Continuing through Jan. 3, people who have been drinking and should not drive can call 323-0110 and get a free ride home. The service is available between the hours of 7 p.m. and 3 a.m. daily.

Last year, SafetyCab provided 118 rides to Fort Benning, a total of 166 passengers.

In its fifth year, the program is sponsored by The Bradley Center, American Family Life Assurance Company, the local chapter of the Association of the U.S. Army, Columbus Bank and Trust Company and the Columbus Ledger-Enquirer. All Fort Benning clubs and activities are participating.

The program is funded by the corporate sponsors, who last year spent between $12,000 and $14,000 providing the service to the community, said Alice Robertson, director of community relations at The Bradley Center.

"It's part of our effort to educate the public about the problem of drinking and driving," she said. "We are also soliciting businesses to participate in the 'Designate a Driver' program."

Organizers are asking businesses that serve alcoholic beverages to serve free nonalcoholic drinks to people who volunteer to be designated drivers during the holiday season. Businesses are provided with colorful stickers for the designated driver to wear, which say things like, "no thanks, I'm driving."

The goal of the program is to keep drunken drivers off the roads, and statistics locally show that the program seems to be working. "In 1985, 238 people were arrested for DUIs, and that figure dropped to 67 in 1986," she said.

SafetyCab provided 1,155 rides last year during the two-week period, Robertson said.

She said that results with the designated driver program have been mixed, but they consider it successful if even one person chooses to be the designated driver.

"Increasing community awareness of the problem and educating the people is making many people be more responsible," she said. "And every person we educate is one less who will drive while impaired."

So if you've been drinking and don't want to drive, call SafetyCab at 323-0110, and get a free, safe ride home.

Soldiers donated 194 units of blood, which will be distributed by the Red Cross to more than 100 hospitals in 82 counties. Boyd, originally from Chicago, said this is his sixth blood donation.

Reenlistment options back on track

Army News Service

Two key Army reenlistment incentives — the Selective Reenlistment bonus and the bonus extension and retraining program — have been reinstated.

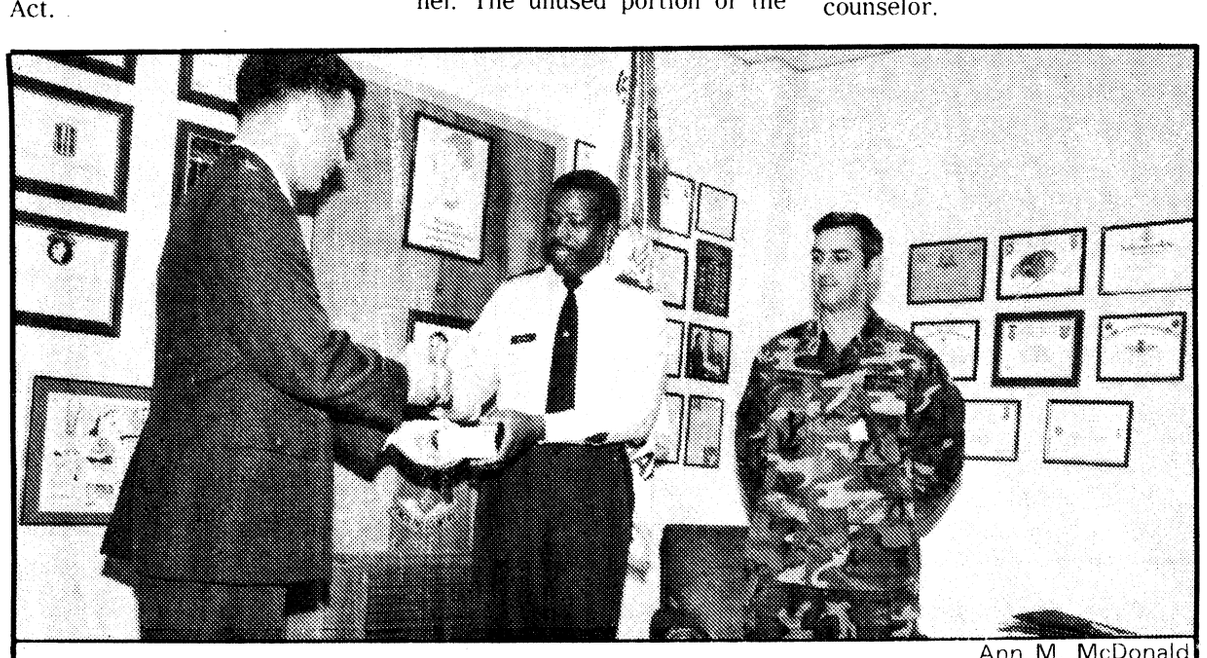
The programs were brought back Dec. 10 following the signing of the Defense Authorization Act.

Soldiers who extended in October, November or December with the hopes of getting a bonus, have until Jan. 29, to cancel their extension and re-enlist to receive the bonus, said Maj. Allen Deutsch, a staff officer in the Army's office of the deputy chief of staff for personnel. The unused portion of the extension will not be charged as previously obligated service for bonus computation purposes.

Soldiers expecting a bonus who have assignment instructions have until Jan. 15, to extend or reenlist or lose the bonus, he said.

For details on these programs, see your unit total Army career counselor.

Andersonville Historic Site highlights Operation Holiday



Andersonville National Historic Site

Hot coffee, doughnuts and history will be shared by travelers to Andersonville National Historic Site this holiday season. Continuing through Dec. 31, the public is invited to participate in Operation Holiday.

Operation Holiday has been a community project around the Fort Benning military base for years. Service personnel with duty assignments over the holiday season are provided excursion trips from the military base to local attractions and businesses. Andersonville National Historic Site has been one of the stops for a number of years. The park staff has traditionally "rolled out the red carpet," providing guided tours and refreshments for the Operation Holiday tour groups visiting the historic site.

This year the tradition continues. All holiday travelers as well as the Fort Benning tour groups are invited to join in.

If you are traveling past the Historic Site turn in at the park entrance and take a break. Enjoy some refreshments and holiday spirit and become part of Operation Holiday. The park will be open New Year's Day. Fees will not be collected.

Legal assistance plans tax classes

USAIC Public Affairs Office

The Legal Assistance Office is planning a three-day class for unit tax advisors next month.

The classes, which will be Jan. 19, 20 and 21, will last eight hours per day, said Capt. Jeff Kipi, legal assistance officer.

The course is being taught by a representative of the Internal Revenue Service and is open to anyone interested in working as a volunteer tax preparer.

It's part of the Volunteer Income Tax Assistance Program. Last year, 105 volunteers helped taxpayers prepare 1,500 income tax returns, he said.

To sign up for the course, call Kipi at 545-3281.

National, state election primary dates announced

Army News Service

Dates for the 1988 presidential and state primaries have been set.

Soldiers and their family members planning to vote in the primaries need to see their unit voting assistance officer as soon as possible for the details on how to file for an absentee ballot.

Presidential primary dates in February are: New Hampshire—16 and South Dakota—23.

Presidential primary dates in March are: Vermont—1; South Carolina (republican only)—5; Alabama, Arkansas, Florida, Georgia, Kentucky, Louisiana, Maryland, Massachusetts, Mississippi, Missouri, North Carolina, Oklahoma, Rhode Island, Tennessee, Texas and Virginia—8; Illinois—15; Puerto Rico—20; and Connecticut—29.

State primary dates in March are: Arkansas, Maryland, Massachusetts, Mississippi and Texas—8; Illinois—15.

Unit voting assistance officers should begin receiving their 1988-1989 voting assistance guides in mid-January.

OPINION

Success is especially important to soldiers

By Dawn Kilpatrick

Winning, Success.

Much has been said and written about both. Winning and success are important to everybody, but they are especially important to soldiers. We are, after all, in the business of winning.

Winning and success are also related to mental attitude and state of mind. If someone has a winning attitude, even if he doesn't always win, he's a winner.

"Far better it is to dare mighty things, to win glorious triumphs, even though checkered by failure, than to rank with those poor spirits who neither enjoy much nor suffer much because they live in the gray twilight that knows no victory or defeat," according to the eloquent Theodore Roosevelt.

The idea being, even if you are not always successful, it takes a winner to keep trying; it takes a winning spirit and a winning attitude.

Today's Army is full of winners. Today's Army is the best it's ever been. And that claim is supported by an impressive list of facts. Today's soldier is the best the Army has ever recruited. The Army's ranks are attracting the best educated, most intellectually qualified soldier in history. The result is a high-quality Army, ready to go anywhere, fight anyone and win.

Some fiscal year 1987 statistics paint the picture:

- 91 percent of the enlistees in the regular Army were high school graduates. This percentage has remained constant over the last four years and is the highest in the history of the Army.
- 68 percent of enlistees scored in the top three test categories on the Armed Services Vocational Aptitude Battery. This was the highest percentage ever.
- Army recruiters have substantially increased their effectiveness in filling the top five priority Military Occupational Skill requirements.
- The rise in educational achievement of soldiers is matched by a corresponding improvement in discipline in the Army. The past seven years have seen:
- A 27 percent decline in crimes against property by soldiers.
- A 47 percent decrease in the number of crimes of violence.
- A 68 percent decrease in AWOL rates.
- A 66 percent decrease in desertion rates.
- A 57 percent decrease in marijuana-related drug offenses.
- A 36 percent decrease in other drug offenses.
- A 54 percent drop in incidences of court martials.

The conclusion is foregone: today's high-quality soldier helps make the Army a better prepared, more efficient fighting force. With the higher-quality soldiers, statistics show a dramatic drop in the number who are discharged early from the Army. Therefore, as more soldiers serve a full enlistment, the manpower savings rise significantly — to the tune of more than 12,000 still serving each fiscal year. That saves the government upwards of $230 million annually.

The dramatic improvements in the military's posture have apparently not escaped public notice. The Gallup and Harris opinion polls recently found that Americans trust the U.S. military more than any other institution, more than the Supreme Court, Congress, the church or banks. (Quite a change from 15 years ago.)

The Gallup poll showed that 63 percent of those surveyed had either a "great deal" or "quite a lot" of confidence in the military; while the Harris poll indicated that the public holds military leaders in greater esteem than leaders in higher education, doctors or Supreme Court justices.

The Army, and today's soldiers, have worked hard to earn the trust and confidence of the American people. The trust is now evident, and the positive attitude of soldiers, made that success a reality. That makes the soldier the one who works hard, the one who has a positive outlook, a winner.

Another Roosevelt gem: "It is not the critic who counts, not the man who points out how the strong man stumbles or where the doer of deeds could have done them better. The credit belongs to the man who is actually in the arena, whose face is marred by dust and sweat and blood, who strives valiantly, who

Snively gets ready for bowl games

By Clyde Snively
USAIC Public Affairs

Now that the fripperies of Christmas are over, it's time to prepare for New Year's Day. To start getting in shape for 12 hours of non-stop football.

Those who take this day seriously understand how important proper training and preparation are. We generally eschew New Year's Eve parties (unless they are really great ones), realizing a good night's sleep is important if we are to pay undivided attention to the game (fall asleep and the wife will change channels on you).

Of course on the east coast this isn't as important as it is when you live on the west coast. Out there, you're talking about a 6 a.m. start time for the Rose Parade, then 10:30 a.m. for the first kickoff. At least out here you have three more hours to sober up.

Now I realize there have been games all week long and that Jan. 1 won't be the last of them. But who cares. Basically there are four bowl games, the Rose, Orange, Cotton and Sugar. The others are pretenders to the throne.

For some of these teams, winning could be the difference between a winning and losing season.

Not that I don't watch an occasional game during the holiday season, I do. I also keep my eye on the scores just so I can quietly chuckle to myself whenever an SEC team loses. Not that I have anything against Dawgs, Tigers, Gators and Elephants, but, well, maybe I do.

Have you noticed the latest trend in bowl games? Now we have bowls with corporate sponsors. I realize college players are demanding more money each year, but this is ridiculous. The Mazda Bowl? How about the USG&G Sugar Bowl. Sounds more like a college quiz show. Maybe the Sugar Bowl is no longer one of the "Big Four," if it has to resort to corporate sponsorship to make a go of it.

For me, happiness is 12 hours of uninterrupted football on Jan. 1.

It's having a portable refrigerator at arm's length full of libations and cold cuts, chips, dips and nuts resting on top.

It's having a remote control for the TV (although two TVs would be pure heaven).

And it's not having to answer a lot of questions such as:

"Is this college?" or, "How many chances do they get to make a score?"

Of course, Emma will also want to be notified when it's half time, not understanding that half time for one game means watching another game.

For me, bliss will be Southern Cal beating Michigan State, Notre Dame over Texas A&M and Syracuse over Auburn. I'd like to see Miami and Oklahoma beat each other's brains out and end up in a zero-zero tie.

That for me, would be the start of a happy new year.

School president cries out for teachers' rights

By Dr. Franklin Shumake
Tallulah Falls School

School teachers are some of the most important people in our state. They educate our preachers, judges, lawyers, politicians, plumbers, painters, scientists, salesmen, clerks, artists, journalists, policemen and others.

They are patient people. They are dedicated. They study long hours. They interact constantly with the thoughts and lives of others. They are talented. They are experts on various levels of content from the teaching of reading to the teaching of advanced mathematical concepts.

Each year, each school selects the "Teacher of the Year." These teachers are a profile in caring, courage and competence. We have a lot of problems in our schools in Georgia, but our teachers are not the major problem.

There is a common thread running through the thoughts of many people in high places today who would have us believe that Georgia's teachers are a selfish and grumbling bunch of lightweights opposed to all forms of assessment and accountability. They are dead wrong.

In a recent opinion survey, the teachers of Georgia sent a message to the people of Georgia. These were positive and thoughtful teachers; and as I read their words, my reaction was that they are really courageous people working under tough odds.

Much of the media and most of the politicians and bureaucrats missed their message. The respondents to the survey were not mad militants. Over 60 percent of them hold master's or higher degrees. They represent over 130 school systems. They hold membership in the Professional Association of Georgia Educators, an organization in Georgia that is made up of educators who oppose collective bargaining, teacher strikes and street marching.

This is the message the teachers sent. They feel personally successful in their jobs (93 percent). They intend to remain in the profession (93 percent). They support instructional accountability: approve of kindergarten testing, 61 percent; approve of third grade promotion testing, 80 percent; and approve of tenth grade basic skills testing, 95 percent. This is a different message than the one we normally hear from polls across the country. These educators are not burned out and threatening to get out.

The teachers message continues. They say that there are some problems with QBE. They believe there are people in high places who equate educational accountability with Mickey Mouse monitoring. They point out that the monitors of the programs arrived at the schools ahead of the funds for programs they were to monitor. They report they believe all school systems, schools, and teachers are assumed to be guilty of negligence until they can document their successes.

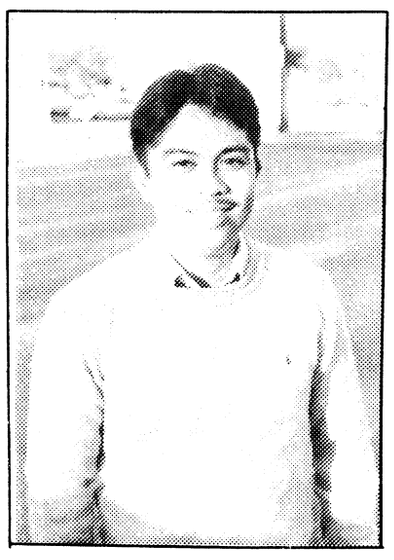
The message continues. Even at this early stage of QBE, it is obvious that some priorities are off track. By tightening up on academic requirements and at the same time, delaying the funds for alternative schools, middle school incentives, elementary counselors, instructional assistance programs and remedial education, we are working at cross purposes.

By asking for more and more data, even before the fundamental programs are in place, and expecting the current teachers and building administrators to gather the data, it is natural that there is less time to teach the students and supervise the instructional program. There is always a tendency at the top to hire more people to compile data without hiring more people at the local level to collect the data.

The message continues. Georgia is placing priority on spending millions of dollars ($100 million is requested for next year) to build new buildings to consolidate schools when one of the biggest problems we face is schools that are too big to appropriately care for and control students. The economic disadvantage of small schools is far outweighed by the disadvantages of longer traveled distances and larger impersonal learning settings.

The teachers' message goes on. Do those who accuse educators of opposing accountability realize that in a school year, a school will be visited by a remedial program monitoring team, a Chapter I monitoring team, a special education monitoring team, a vocational education monitoring team, and a state standards monitoring team? All of these require continuous record keeping and have different sets of forms, require special preparations for the visits and require time during the visitation.

Do those who are now proposing an additional $6 million to build another test data bank realize the time that is already involved in testing every student, every year in every grade (some school systems do not test fifth grade students)? Do they realize that the real problem in local schools is finding time to use the test scores already on file? Do they realize that funds are not now available to help those we have already identified as needing counseling, alternative schools, remedial education and special instructional assistance.



The message goes on. Does the public realize that even though schools have a new system for determining funding full-time equivalent counts, the teachers are required to continue maintaining the former average daily attendance system with the use of state attendance registers? Does the public know that for all the talk about competive teacher salaries that a bachelor's degree teacher working on the state salary schedule can only earn $17,300 up to $23,200 for thirty years of experience? Do they know that teachers spend an average of forty hours a month of family time to prepare for classroom teaching?

The message gets more personal. Do they realize that all these burdens are on the backs of those same smiling teachers who greet parents in the afternoon to discuss the pupils and the test scores and share suggestions on how the family can help with the students learning? Do they realize that these are the same teachers who need to meet each child in the mornings with a warm smile and a kind word? These are the same teachers who collect lunch money, sell pictures, plan Christmas programs, cover bus duty, supervise the detention hall, eat lunch with their students and show up neat, clean and sparkling at the PTA meetings.

The teachers of Georgia have earned the right to express opinions on QBE or any other

Guardsman's suggestion saves taxpayers more than $6 million

Army News Service

More than a $6 million savings to taxpayers is only a beginning as a Vermont Army National Guardsman has developed a sure, cost saving device for the Army.

Sgt. John B. Ledoux, who works as an Avionics technician with the 86th Air Traffic Control Battalion, Vermont Army National Guard, developed a simple device with $8.70 in parts he purchased at a local Radio Shack that detects the presence of infrared light without the use of expensive, sensitive night vision goggles previously used in testing.

Army helicopters are equipped with infrared lighting so they can fly at night without being easily seen. The lighting is visible only if special goggles are worn. The goggles are not designed for daytime use and are easily ruined if exposed to natural lighting. This made daytime use of the goggles risky.

A year ago in September, Lockheed sent a team to the Guard to modify the Hueys for night vision flying, said Ledoux. They were perched all over the copter, often in very precarious positions, trying to test the lights with these goggles that cost upwards of $4,500 a pair.

A combination of concern for the personal safety of the crew working on the helicopter and a strong sense that something else should be available to test the lights without the need for those expensive goggles sent Ledoux to his workshop.

I got thinking about it, and the concept is really not much different from the remote controller that you might have for your television. That operates on infrared light as well, Ledoux said.

Ledoux made a trip to the local electronics store and spent $8.70 on some miscellaneous parts used in infrared photo detection. With those parts he assembled an electronic device that will light an indicator light when in the presence of infrared light. The device is no bigger than a pack of cigarettes and can be easily carried in a technician's pocket or tool box.

I sent the design to some of my counterparts at other Guard bases, and they all thought it was great. I hadn't really thought about how much it would save the Army until my boss suggested I draft a recommendation to the Army for adoption of my idea, Ledoux said.

U.S. Army Aviation Systems Command officials determined that this device would save a minimum of 987,000 man-hours per year, representing an estimated average cash savings of $6,825,000 in man-hours alone the first year. After determining implementation costs and the cost of materials, the Army will have a net savings of $6,296,500 this year. This amount represents total yearly Army savings alone. The device can also be used by the other services.

Ledoux's suggestion has been approved for total adoption by the Army, and the design for the Infrared Navigation Light Tester will be incorporated in technical manuals Army wide.

In recognition of his outstanding accomplishment and the significant amount of money saved by U.S. taxpayers, Maj. Gen. Donald E. Edwards, Adjutant General of the State of Vermont, presented Ledoux with an initial cash award of $10,000 on behalf of the Army and the National Guard Bureau. He has been recommended by Army officials for the maximum total award of $35,000.

Ledoux is a full-time employee of the Vermont National Guard. He lives with his wife and four children in Alburg, Vt.

Memorandum affirms spouses' right to work

By Rudi Williams
American Forces Information Services

One of former Secretary of Defense Caspar W. Weinberger's final actions before resigning was signing a memorandum to the service secretaries affirming the right of military spouses to work, attend school or serve as volunteers without interference from commanders.

Weinberger's memorandum was prompted by DoD efforts to improve job opportunities for spouses and by reports of resistance to spouse employment at some military bases.

"The policy of the Department of Defense is that no commander, supervisor nor other DoD official will, directly or indirectly, impede or otherwise interfere with the right of every miltary spouse to decide whether to pursue and hold a job, to attend school or to serve on a volunteer basis, either on or off base," Weinberger emphasized in the memorandum

The decision whether to work outside the home, to be a homemaker or to perform volunteer services belongs to the spouse alone, the edict stated.

Weinberger noted that whatever spouses choose to do should not be held against the service member. "No military member will be adversely rated or suffer any adverse consequences from the decision of the member's spouse...nor shall a spouse's employment be a consideration in either assignments or promotions," the letter read.

"Military spouses have a proud heritage of volunteer assistance to their military and civilian communities," Weinberger said in lauding spouses for enhancing the quality of life in their communities through "their contributions in clubs, emergency aid agencies and other family support activities."

Employment center conducts workshop

Employment Assistance Center

The Family Member Employment Assistance Center will conduct a workshop, Jan. 13, 9 a.m.-2 p.m., entitled "Resume Writing."

Your can learn the priciples for writing an effective resume and how to present your qualifications on the resume so they will be more likely to get attention from prospective employers.

This workshop is open to all family members of active duty, retirees, reserve components and civil service employees.

The workshop is free and will be held in the ACS building located in Splinter Village.

Reservations should be made by Jan. 11 by calling 545-5430 or 545-5176.

New rules allow more confidentiality

Army New Service

Like civilians, soldiers and their families can now enjoy more client/lawyer confidentiality thanks to a newly adopted set of rules for Army lawyers.

"Army Rules of Professional Conduct for Lawyers," patterned after the American Bar Association's "Model Rules of Professional Conduct," were developed in 1983. The Army's version, however, is tailored to the special needs and circumstances involved in the worldwide practice of military law, said Army Judge Advocate General, Maj. Gen. Hugh R. Overholt.

He explained that Army lawyers always have been guided by ABA-devised disciplinary rules.

Now, as of Oct. 1, 1987, he and his colleagues have specific guidance by which their ethics, as military lawyers, can be measured. Today's separate rules for military attorneys evolved from a 4-year study that initially involved all the services. "Virtually all difficult ethical problems arise from conflict among a lawyer's responsibilities to clients, to the legal system, and to the lawyer's own interest in remaining an upright person," Overholt said. "The Army Rules of Professional Conduct prescribe terms for the judge advocate to resolve such conflicts."

Confidentiality of the lawyer-client relationship among soldiers constitutes just one area of confidentiality covered by the new rules. Rule No. 1.13, for example, declares that conversations between a commander and the commander's lawyer are "confidential" — that is, they are not releasable by the attorney except for disclosure explicitly or implicitly authorized by the Army. The new rules also define, in particular, professional standards for the defense counsel. As has always been the case, an attorney is prohibited from revealing what was discussed between the attorney and client without the client's specific authorization, Overholt explained. The only exception to this strict prohibition concerns an attorney's duty to prevent future crimes that likely are to result in what the rules term "significant impairment of national security or the readiness or capability of a military unit."

The Army joins 24 other jurisdictions in adopting the ABA model rules, amended to suit local conditions and preferences. Overholt views this latest action as "an enormous advance — not just because it updates the Army's standards for lawyer conduct, but also because it recognizes problems unique to the military."

In a recent press release announcing the development from ABA headquarters in Chicago, ABA ethics counsel George Kuhlman praised the Army's participation. "Its assurance of uniform standards for Army lawyers and their civilian colleagues, tailored to address special military needs, is an advance both for the lawyers and for their clients and the men and women in uniform," Kuhlman said. "Consistent ethical guidelines across the profession will boost lawyers' knowledge of expectations for their conduct and will increase the ability of their clients to demand compliance," he concluded.

Readers desiring more information on the rules' content and applicability may wish to check with law libraries at their local installations. The rules will be published as DA Pamphlet 27-26, Overhalt said. Army acts to minimize damage and depreciation to soldiers' household goods

Delta Force recruiters seek volunteers here

Keep us in mind when you wine and dine or when planning a special function, large or small. We specialize in all events from small cocktail parties to large wedding receptions. We have a price that's right and an experienced staff to service your every need. If you haven't already booked your Christmas party with the club, and you are planning to do so, call now as there are only a limited number of dates/rooms left.

ARTS AND CRAFTS CENTER:

Photography — The Fort Benning Arts and Crafts Center Photo Lab is like having your own photography school and your own professional instructor. What can you learn? How to use your camera; how to use studio lighting; how to develop film; black and white negatives, color negatives, and color slides; how to enlarge and print pictures.

What must you do to get started? Come by and see us, you will be fascinated by what you can do, and no experience is necessary. We will teach you step by step.

Now that the secret is out, and you have gotten over the initial surprise of how quick and easy you can make your own pictures, we hope you will spread the word. For the best pictures in town, make them yourself at your Arts and Crafts Center, building 2783, located on the corner of Eckel Street and Sightseeing Road or call us at 545-3677.

Oil painting — Classes are offered each Saturday and Sunday this month between the hours of 10 a.m. and 6 p.m. Ceramic workshops are offered each Saturday and Sunday to assist you with last-minute gift ideas.

We have so many things to offer, we just can't list them all, so come by the center, building 2783, at the corner of Eckel Street and Sightseeing Road, for one of our calendars. We are open Wednesday-Friday, 1-6 p.m. Come by or give us a call at 563-3677.

Piano and vocal lessons — The recreation centers offer piano lessons, beginning and intermediate, to people of all ages. Joleen Oney of the Acorn School of Music, offers piano and vocal lessons for all ages.

Joleen is a member of the National Guild of Piano Teachers and is qualified to teach pre-school-age children, as well. Grandkids to grandparents can learn to play beautifully by taking one 30-minute lesson per week, not including practice time. Lessons are private and individually paced. Practice pianos are available during reception centers operational hours. Cost is only $7 per lesson. To register, call 545-7400 or 327-3214 and leave your name and telephone number. The instructor will contact you to arrange a lesson schedule. Don't hesitate, call today.

BOWLING CENTERS:

Bowling Cash — Cash prizes await you at the Main Post Bowling Center. Enter the ladies Eight-pin or the Nine-pin No Tap tournament and win up to $150. Cash in on your lunch hour by entering into lunch-time strike pot bowling and the possibility of winning $75. Call us at the Main Post Bowling Center 545-4272.

Group Bowling Discounts — Bowl for $6 per person from 7 p.m.-1 a.m. including shoes. This discount price is a favorite with patrons desiring a fun and economical special occasion. Birthday parties, hail and farewell parties, church related occasions, neighborhood functions or any group of 20 or more people are eligible for this discount. Call us at 545-4272 or 544-1985 and let us provide you with a super deal and creative suggestions for your special occasion.

Adolescent suicides increase at alarming rate

By James Ford
Training and Doctrine Command

The growing number of adolescent suicides is alarming. Each year more than 5,000 young people from ages 15 to 24 kill themselves.

The rate of suicide for this age group has nearly tripled during the past 20 years, making it the third leading cause of adolescent death.

Evidence was found in a recent study of adolescent suicide attempts, during a two-year period, that a young person's attempt may be based on the combination of longstanding problems coupled with a triggering event.

Suicidal thoughts can develop from a perceived loss of love or rejection by people important to the young person. The suicidal adolescent views a temporary situation as a permanent loss.

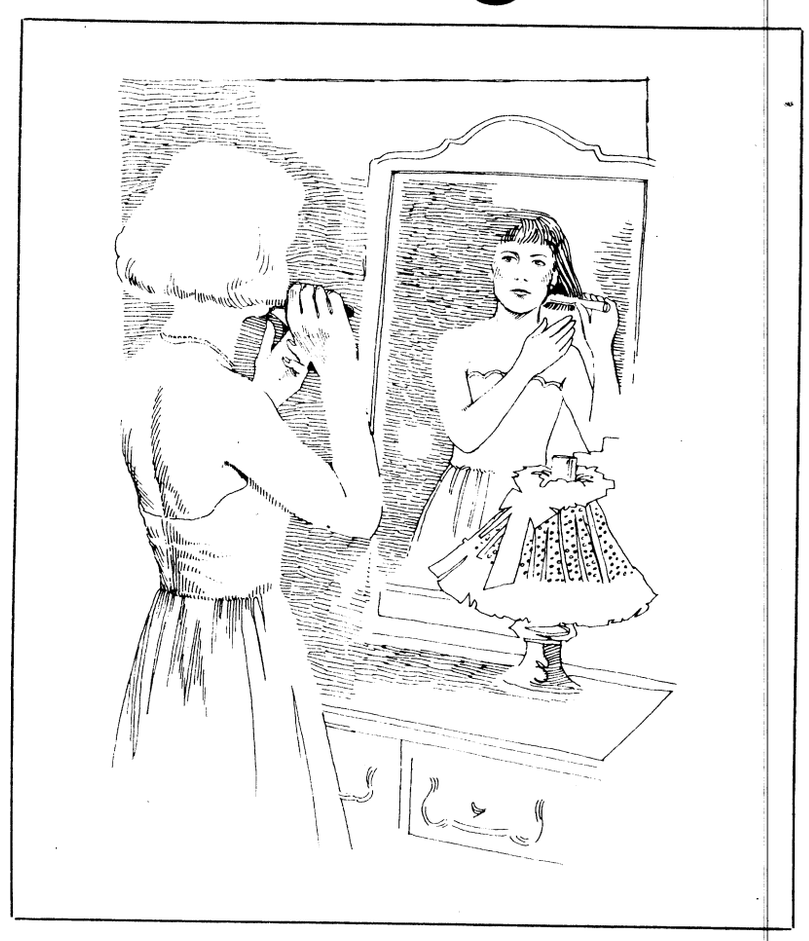
Feelings of resentment combined with exaggerated guilt often culminate in self-destruction.

It is important to recognize the tensions and stress of adolescence. It is a time of change, crisis, pressure and a tendency to react impulsively. Chronic fears about sexual identity or intellectual and physical inferiority, as well as anxiety about parental expectations and peer acceptance, frequently burden young people.

The suicidal adolescent is crying out for help. Frequently, the person does not see death as final, but rather as a temporary means of escape from reality. The adolescent may, in fact, not really want to die.

Some of the changes in behavior associated with adolescent depression and suicide do not necessarily imply suicidal behavior, but may be strong indicators of serious problems. This is especially true if more than one sign is present and persists over an extended period of time.

These conditions include:
- decreased appetite;
- interrupted or changed sleep patterns;
- avoidance of friends and normal social activities;
- angry outbursts, fearfulness or increased touchiness;
- withdrawn, uncommunicative;
- marked personality change from outgoing to isolative or quiet;
- physical complaints or fatigue;
- use of drugs, alcohol or self-abuse;
- preoccupation with death;
- obsessive fear of nuclear war;
- irrational, bizarre behavior;
- overwhelming sense of guilt or shame;
- feelings of sadness, hopelessness or despair.



A suicide attempt is the most serious of warnings. Four out of five people who kill themselves have previously given clues to their intentions. The adolescent may give away treasured belongings or write a will. Another obvious cry for help is a suicide threat. Many adolescents who commit suicide have previously threatened to do so.

The cardinal rules of suicide prevention are: Do something. Get help. Trust your judgment. Don't wait for other signs to develop. Don't be afraid of embarrassment. Break a confidence if need be. Save a young life at the risk of temporarily-breaking a friendship. Encourage an adolescent with depressive or suicidal symptoms to talk about his feelings. Do not ignore those feelings. Listen, don't lecture.

Help is not hard to find. Adolescents can go to peer support groups, teachers and school counselors who are trained in working with such problems.

Parents and families can seek help from physicians, community mental health centers or a member of the clergy.

For immediate assistance, crisis intervention centers, hospital emergency rooms and psychiatric units usually offer 24-hour services.

National Safety Council offers non-alcoholic drink recipes

National Safety Council

To help prevent holiday accidents, the National Safety Council is offering an assortment of non-alcoholic drink recipes.

The recipes range from Christmas Nog to Citrus Coco Punch and Hot-Buttered Apple Juice. A list of suggestions to keep partygoers sober before they drive, accompanies the recipes.

Recipes For the Road

Grapefruit Blush

1 can (6 ounces) frozen concentrated grapefruit juice, thawed, undiluted
1 bottle (28 ounces) club soda, chilled
2 tablespoons grenadine syrup
1 tablespoon honey
fresh mint (optional)

In large pitcher combine grapfriuit juice concentrate, grenadine and honey; mix well. Just before serving, stir in club soda; add ice. Serve with fresh mint, if desired.

Yield: 4 servings.

Merry Berry Holiday Punch

6 cups orange juice
2 packages (10 ounces each) frozen quick-thaw strawberries in syrup orange slices, fresh strawberries and mint for garnish
2 cups cranberry juice cocktail
3 cups ginger ale
ice

In a large bowl combine orange juice, cranberry juice and strawberries. Add ginger ale and ice just before serving. If desired, float orange slices strawberries and mint on top.

Yield: Approximately 13 ½-cups; 18 (6-ounce) servings.

Christmas Nog

3 eggs
¼ teaspoon each, ground cinnamon, ginger, and cloves
1 quart orange sherbet or vanilla ice cream
¼ cup sugar
1 quart orange juice, chilled
1 quart grapefruit juice, chilled
1 quart ginger ale, chilled
nutmeg

In 6-quart bowl beat eggs with sugar and spices. Beat in orange juice, grapefruit juice and sherbet or ice cream. Mix in ginger ale just before serving. If desired, sprinkle nutmeg on top.

Yield: About 1 gallon; 32 ½-cup servings.

Spiced Citrus Tea

2 cups water
3 whole cloves
1 cup orange juice
3 tablespoons butter or margarine (optional)
4 tea bags
1 cinnamon stick, 3 inches long
1 cup grapefruit juice
5 to 8 tablespoons sugar

In a medium saucepan bring water to a boil. Remove from heat. Add tea bags and spices; cover, brew 5 minutes. Remove tea bags and spices. Add orange juice and grapefruit juice. Heat through but do not boil. Remove from heat. Add butter if desired, stirring until butter melts. Add sugar to taste.

Yield: 4 to 6 servings.

Orange Hot Toddy

½ cup sugar
12 whole cloves
3 cans (6 ounces each) frozen orange juice concentrate, thawed, reconstituted
½ cup water
2 2-inch pieces stick cinnamon
1 quart sweet cider

Combine sugar, water and spices in saucepan; simmer 10 minutes and strain. Add orange juice and cider. Heat. Serve with cinnamon stick muddlers.

Yield: 28 ½-cup servings.

Grapefruit Daquiri

1 cup grapfruit juice
1 ripe banana, peeled
¾ cup bottled daquiri mix
1 cup crushed ice

In the container of an electric blender combine grapefruit juice, daquiri mis and banana; cover; blend until smooth. Add ice and process a few seconds longer until combined. Serve in daquiri or cocktail glasses.

Yield: Approximately 3 cups; 4 (6-ounce) servings.

Cafe Au Lait Shake

1 tablespoon instant coffee
2 cups cold milk
6 ice cubes
1 teaspoon sugar
¾ teaspoon vanilla

Combine all ingredients in blender (approved for ice cubes). Blend until well mixed and ice is broken up. Pour into tall glasses.

Yield: 2 servings.

Tomato Glow

⅔ cup tomato juice
¼ teaspoon sugar
⅓ cup orange juice

Combine all together. Blend well. Serve over ice.

Yield: 1 serving.

Hot-Buttered Apple Juice

2 cinnamon sticks sugar butter ground nutmeg
8 whole cloves
4 thin 1-inch strips of lemon rind
4 cups boiling apple juice

Put ½-stick of the cinnamon, 2 cloves, ¾ teaspoon sugar, a strip of lemon rind and ¾ teaspoon butter in each of 4 large mugs. Add hot apple juice to each mug, stirring to blend mixture. Let steep one minute. Fill mugs with remaining apple juice. Sprinkle with nutmeg and serve immediately.

Yield: 4 servings.

Citrus Surprise Punch

1 can (6 ounces) frozen concentrated orange juice, thawed, undiluted
5 cups cold water
1 orange, sliced
1 pint raspberry sherbet
1 can (6 ounces) frozen concentrated grapefruit juice, thawed, undiluted
1 bottle (28 ounces) ginger ale, chilled

Combine orange juice concentrate, grapefruit juice concentrate, cold water, and ginger ale in pitcher. To serve, place orange slices and raspberry sherbet in punch bowl. Pour punch over top. Serve immediately.

Yield: 20 4-ounce servings.

Orange Sour

1 cup orange juice
1 envelope (9/16-ounce) instant whiskey sour drink mixer
maraschino cherries for garnish, if desired
¾ cup apricot nectar
½ cup crushed ice
orange slices

Combine ingredients in container of a blender and process 15 seconds. Pour into on-the-rocks glasses over ice cubes. Garnish with an orange slice and marashcino cherry, if desired.

Yield: Approximately 2 cups; 2 (8-ounce) servings.

Orange Eggnog

4 cans (6 ounces each) frozen orange juice concentrate, thawed, undiluted
2 quarts milk
2 quarts bottled eggnog

Turn concentrate into punch bowl; add milk and beat with rotary beater until blended. Stir in eggnog.

Yield: About 40 ½-cup servings.

Lemon Cola

1-½ cups (12 ounces) cola
1 strip lemon peel
2 ½ teaspoons lemon juice

Fill a tall glass with ice cubes. Add the cola and lemon juice. Twist lemon peel over the drink. Drop it in and stir gently.

Yield: 1 serving.

Grapefruit Julep

1 can (46 ounces) grapefruit juice
1 ½ cups ginger ale cracked ice
3 cups tangerine juice
1 ¼ cups sliced strawberries
mint sprigs

In a large pitcher, combine grapefruit juice, tangerine juice, ginger ale, strawberries and ice. Pour into tall glasses and garnish with sprigs of mint.

Yield: 10 servings.

Creamy Orange Punch

2 cans (6 ounces each) frozen orange juice concentrate, thawed, undiluted
1 quart vanilla ice cream
1 quart ginger ale

Combine orange juice concentrate and vanilla ice cream; beat with electric or rotary beater until thoroughly blended. Stir in ginger ale.

Yield: 18 ½-cup servings.

Citrus Coco Punch

1 can(48 ounces) grapefruit juice, chilled
¾ cup canned cream of coconut
1 quart club soda, chilled

In punch bowl, combine grapefruit juice and cream of coconut, blend well. Add club soda and ice cubes. Mix and serve.

Yield: 2 ½ quarts.

Whether you are an employer sponsoring the annual office party or a friend hosting a gathering at home, when you hold a party you are responsible for seeing that your guests have every chance of making it home safely. Here are some suggestions from the National Safety Council:

- If you serve alcoholic beverages, provide plenty of food. Snacks can slow down the rate at which the body absorbs alcohol. Choose high protein foods like cheese and meat, which stay in the stomach longer. Set up the food and beverage area so that guests are encouraged to eat throughout the party.
- Since it is easy to underestimate the amount of alcohol you pour freehand, use jiggers or self-measuring one-ounce bottle spouts for mixing drinks. Standard measures usually result in less excessive drinking.
- Don't force alcoholic drinks on your guests. When a glass is empty, don't rush to refill it.

Provide non-alcoholic beverages.

When serving alcoholic punch, use a noncarbonated base such as fruit juice. The body absorbs alcohol faster when it is mixed with carbonated beverages.

Stop serving alcohol at least one hour before the party is expected to end.

MARSHAL'S VIEWPOINT

Many underestimate hazards of cold

By Wendell Choate
Provost Marshal's Office

The housing areas, parking lots, troop billeting areas and other facilities are under "attack!" Not by troops from a hostile foreign power or invaders from outer space, but from our own personnel or personnel from local areas, that are our enemies in this campaign. During December, war was declared on larcenies at Fort Benning.

The "attack" centers on private property, government property and NAF property. The primary objectives for the unscrupulous "attacks" are larcenies of bicycles, privately-owned-vehicle parts, ie. batteries, AM/FM stereo radios/tape players, CB radios, and other items of value that were left inside the vehicles, or outside quarters. Most of which were unsecured.

During October and November, there were 309 incidents reported to the military police. The dollar value of the property taken is staggering and only a few of the thieves have been identified and charged. Unfortunately, not enough of them have been caught.

What can we do to counter these "attacks." We as individuals can and should:

- Keep a record of vehicle identification numbers, license numbers and post registration decal numbers.
- Mark for identification, car batteries, radios, stereos and other high-value items in the home.
- Always lock vehicles, and never leave the keys in the ignition or hide them elsewhere in the vehicle.
- When shopping, never leave packages inside vehicles. Place them in the trunk or another place out of sight.
- Park vehicles in a well-lighted area if possible.
- Register bicycles with the Crime Prevention Office.
- Report to the military police any suspicious activities in housing areas and parking lots.
- Never leave bicycles and other valuable items outside unsecured.
- Notify the military police immediately if you suspect or know you have been the victim of a larceny.
- Personnel who live in the barracks should never leave rooms or wall lockers unsecured.

Unit commanders can initiate an interior guard force to help protect vehicles parked in unit parking lots. This action can assist in reducing the number of "attacks," and unit commanders are encouraged to provide this service.

The military police have increased the frequency of walk-throughs of parking lots, housing areas, the post exchange and shoppettes.

Through our combined efforts, we can reduce and hopefully make it too hazardous for thieves to "attack" these areas either during the day or after hours of darkness. Let's muster our forces and assets and defeat this crime. Crime Prevention is here to assist you, call 545-1065/7610. Help us, help you, and we can take a bite out of crime.

A note of interest to thieves: The maximum punishment for conviction by a court-martial for larceny is a dishonorable discharge and confinement at hard labor for up to five years and forfeiture of all pay and allowances. Is it worth it?

Readers's Digest

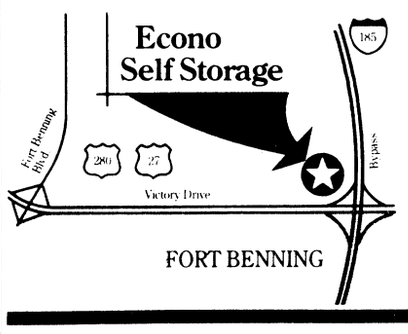
Many thousands of people are crippled or killed each year because they underestimate cold-weather hazards. It doesn't require sub-zero exposure before inner organs lose their precious warmth.

Many cases of hypothermia—a potentially deadly loss of warmth in the body's core-occur in moderately cold temperatures.

Particularly vulnerable are small children, whose bodies lose heat faster than adults' bodies do; the elderly, who are often undernourished or on medications that alter the body's temperature response; people with underactive thyroids; the unusually slender; dieters and alcoholics.

Here are six steps you can take to avoid hypothermia:

Eat properly: Dieters and extremely thin people are more susceptible to the cold because they do not have the insulation that fat cells provide. Moreover, their bodies contain less fuel—either food or body fat—to convert into heat. Experts suggest carrying high-calorie snacks if you expect to be out long.



Prevent dehydration: Fluid loss from perspiration and from breathing dry air can substantially reduce your blood volume. Drink extra fluids before prolonged outdoor activity and take along a hot beverage.

Avoid alcohol: Alcohol gives the illusion of warmth because it dilates blood vessels and brings a rush of blood to the skin. But this also takes blood away from core organs, rapidly depressing body temperature.

Know the effects of drugs: Some mediciations—such as drugs to control blood pressure, antidepressants and certain heart medicines—affect the body's response to outside temperature changes. Check with your doctor.

Wear appropriate clothing: Remember the three L's: light, loose and layered. A thin outer shell can prevent wind from penetrating. Loose, multiple garments trap layers of air, providing additional insulation, and give you the ability to add or shed clothes as conditions change. Essential are a hat and scarf because up to one-third of a body's heat loss comes from the head and neck. For the hands, experts suggest water-resistant mittens to provide an "envelope" of warm air; for feet, loose-fitting shoes with thick woolen socks. The groin should be protected by not-too-snug underwear and windproof outer clothing.

Stay dry: Try to minimize perspiration by dressing lightly and working slowly. Wear an outer garment that repels water yet allows your body to breathe. If you are wet or cold, get out of the wind.

educational topic. They are "out there" teaching students while many of the people are "up there" talking about how teachers ought to be teaching.

Before we are critical of a well organized and much needed survey of teachers' opinions released in a nonslick binding, we need to look closely at the real depth of these dedicated people. They at least deserve a sympathetic audience unaccompanied by put-downs, sarcasm and superficial treatment.

Almost daily, we hear and read of the wonders of QBE. We hear that it is on track and fully funded. We hear that it is attracting industry to the Sunbelt. We hear that classes are smaller, that graduates are smarter and that beautiful, new course guides are in the mail. If there are some facts and feelings to the contrary, it seems appropriate that we hear the whole story. No one is trying to make QBE look bad. There are many who want to make improvements in it.

We can be certain that the teachers in the classrooms are going to be the real implementors of any educational reform. It won't be done by rhetoric, press releases, slick publications and thick monitoring books created by word processors in the back corners of state office buildings.

It's time to call a truce. The people "up there" and the teachers "out there" have to come together on common ground. Cut out the top-down mandates. Lay aside the the put-downs. Cool the rhetoric when differences of opinion are expressed.

Listen to the teachers. They have earned the right to be heard. As the ones who are struggling daily to make QBE work, there is likely to be some substance to their comments.

DPSC testers save DOD $

American Forces Press Service

Tom Meehan secures another Kevlar helmet into position. Closing the door as he exits, he takes his place behind a firing apparatus in the adjoining room. He pulls the trigger, sending a bullet toward the helmet at 2,195 feet per second. The bullet slices through the helmet, leaving a hole the size of a silver dollar.

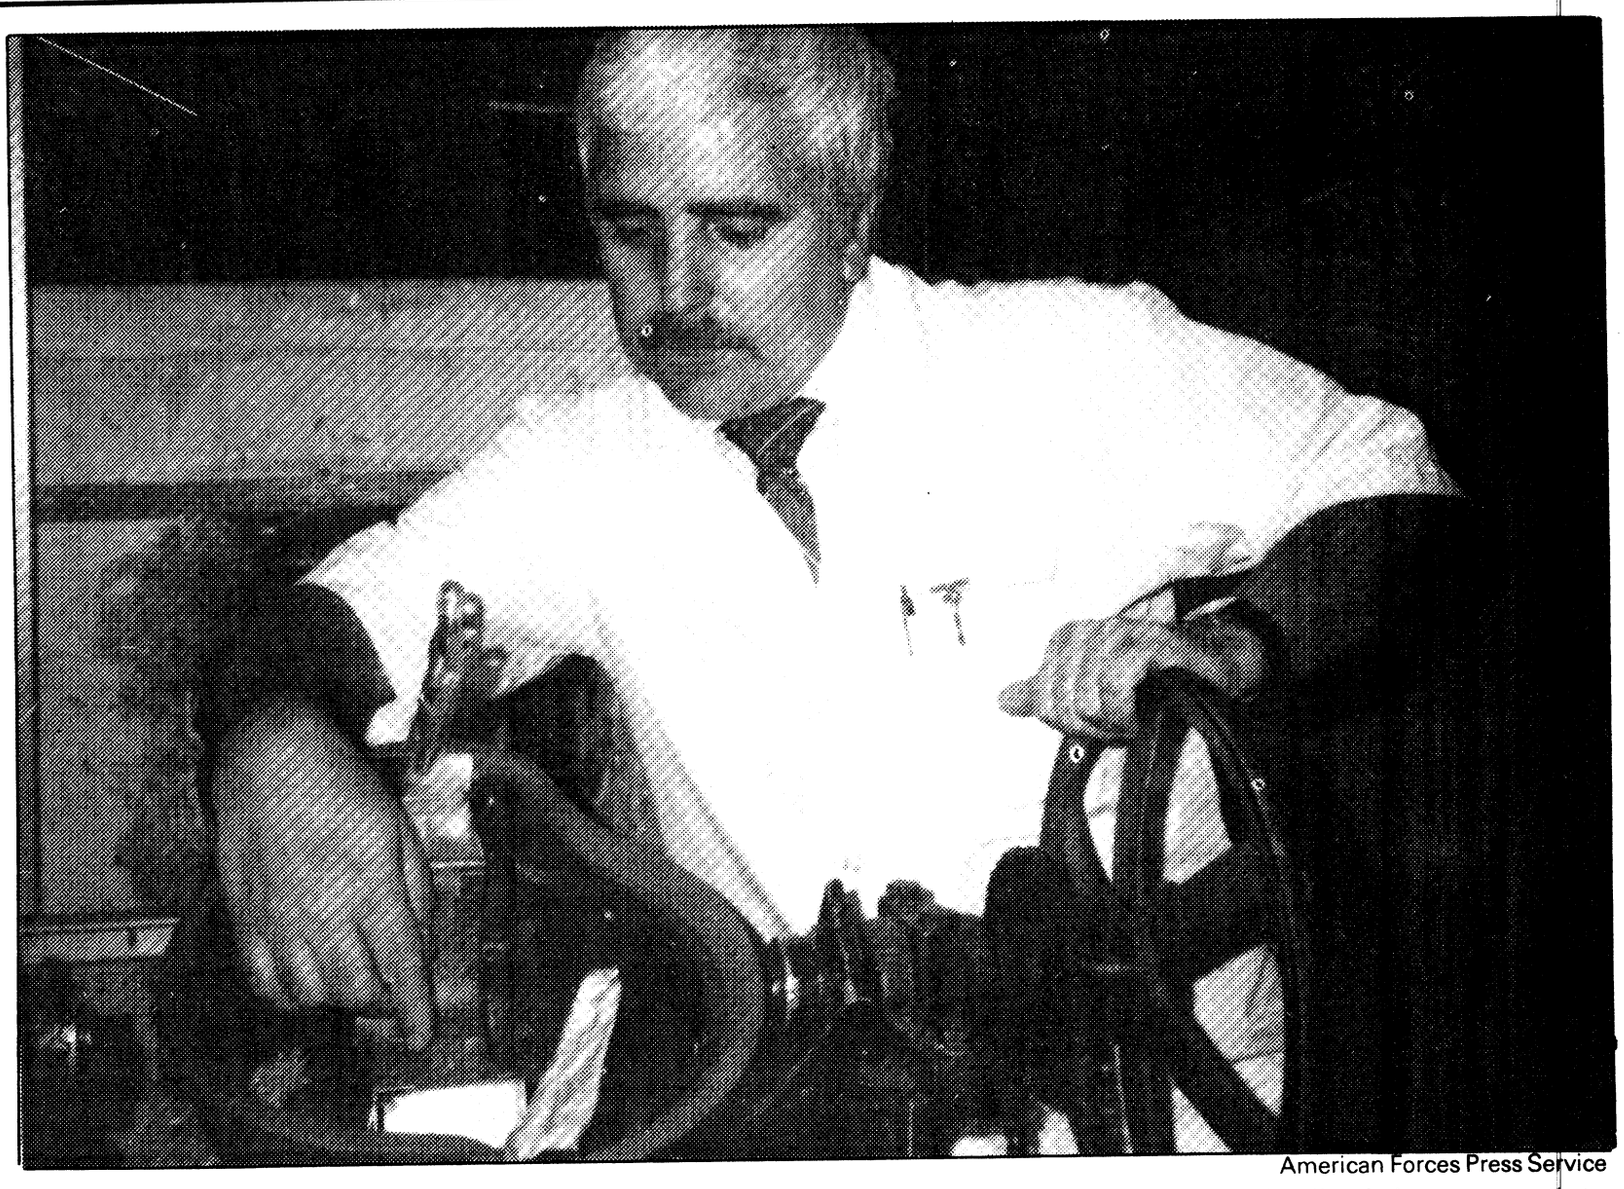
Meehan records the results. He explains that if one helmet fails, like this one, to withstand the ballistic force as specified by the contract, all helmets in that shipment will be rejected and returned to the contractor.

Meehan is chief of the equipment testing team for the Defense Personnel Support Center's Clothing and Textiles Laboratory in Philadelphia. As one of about 50 testers at the lab, he helps make sure the Defense Department gets full value for the $1.1 billion a year spent on clothing and textiles.

More importantly, Meehan said, his job is to make sure military men and women get the quality equipment and the protection level their jobs demand.

They analyze fabric to be sure its contents meet those listed in the specifications. They wash and rewash uniform shirts to make sure the seams won't pucker or tear apart. They stretch leather boots to see if they're constructed properly.

In addition, the testers evaluate the packaging material used in Meal-Ready-to-Eat food ration pouches and low-tech medical equipment like scalpels and doctors' bags to make sure they meet the contract terms.



Last year, the Clothing and Textile Lab randomly selected about 8,000 of these items for verification tests. These tests double checked not only the quality of the products provided but also the validity of the contractors' test programs.

Grandinetti said life-support items, such as helmets, protective gloves and boots and toxicological and chemical protective clothing get extra-close inspection.

"This is the strictest testing of all," she said. "If one single unit fails, the whole lot fails."

Failed lots cost contractors money. When DoD rejects a shipment because of a failed test, all items in that shipment are returned to the contractor. Technicians test all future shipments from the contractor before acceptance. Only after three consecutive shipments pass this intensive testing are later shipments once again evaluated at random.

"If all goes well after that, we should see only about one in every 10 lots," Grandinetti said.

American Forces Press Service

Tom Meehan, an equipment tester for the Defense Personnel Support Center's Clothing and Textiles Laboratory, points to a hole fired through a defective Kevlar helmet. Meehan's job is to make sure such helmets never end up on military people's heads.

"We're here to make sure that if the government — the taxpayers — pay $10 for a shirt, they're getting $10 worth of shirt. No more, no less."

"We can't just take the contractors' word for it that everything they're selling us is okay," she said.

"After all," she summarized, "would you want to be that one person whose Kevlar helmet doesn't protect against shrapnel or the one who goes into a toxicological environment with a leak in his protective gear or that one torpedo handler whose gloves don't protect against fuel or that one paratrooper whose parachute clip doesn't work?"

Astronomers search the heavens for extraterrestrial intelligence

By Joyce Dall'Acqua
Smithsonian News Service

When Skip Schwartz stops by the office to pick up his messages, he always hopes to find something like this, "Star VB8B called — will call back every 30 seconds at 1,420 megahertz."

Shwartz is the field station manager at the Oak Ridge Observatory in Harvard, Mass., which is operated by the Smithsonian Astrophysical Observatory. Since 1984, the 84-foot radio telescope at Oak Ridge has been scanning the heavens, searching for signals from intelligent life in the galaxy.

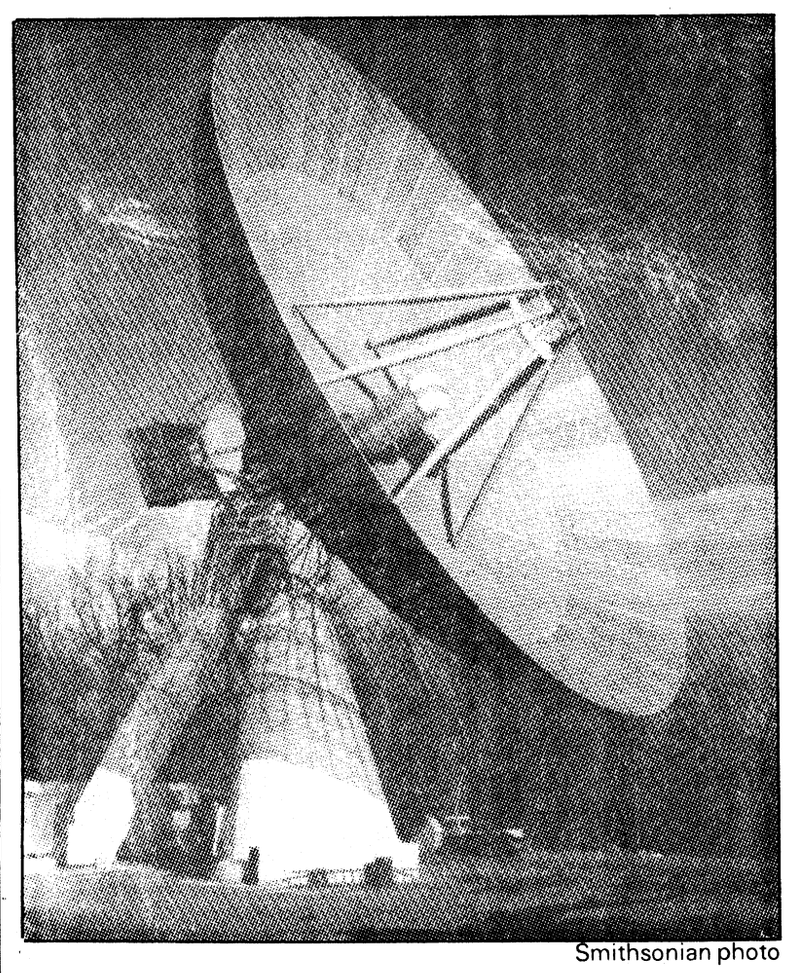
"I check the computer printout every day, looking for signs of a dramatic increase in signal power from a fixed point in the sky," Schwartz says, "This could indicate a "call" from a source of extraterrestrial intelligence. We've picked up quite a few very strong signals, but they're never repeated. It's as frustrating as coming home to a ringing telephone and reaching the phone just in time for the calling party to hang up."

The project is run by a Harvard University physics professor, Dr. Paul Horowitz. With a grant from the Planetary Society, a group founded by astronomer Carl Sagan, Horowitz designed and built a computer system that can process simultaneously more than 8 million radio channels.

"Life has been on this planet for 4 billion years, sophisticated civilization just a few thousand years," Horowitz says. "Only in the past three decades — a single generation -- have humans been technologically capable of searching for other intelligent life. So I feel we're obligated to search NOW."

The scientific search for Extraterrestrial Intelligence — known as Seti — was officially launched on April 11, 1960, by Dr. Frank Drake of the National Radio Astronomy Observatory in Green Bank, W. Va.

For "Project Ozma" — named after Frank Baum's Oz series of books about a mythical world — Drake focused the NRAOs new 85-foot radio telescope on two stars located within 100 light-years of Earth.



"Radio astronomy really came into its own in the late 1950s," says Drake, now an astronomy professor at the University of California, Santa Cruz. "Before then, radio telescopes were only 25 or 30 feet across. Coupled with the invention of much more sensitive radio receivers, we suddenly had the ability to pick up signals as distant as the nearest stars." The notion was that if those stars had planets orbiting around them, there could be advanced civilizations broadcasting from those planets.

About 50 large-scale Seti programs have been conducted since 1960, many in the Soviet Union. Most make the same assumptions as Project Ozma about extraterrestrial life:

- Life would be most likely to evolve in solar systems like our own; thus, searches are targeted at "solar-type stars," similar to our sun.
- A radio telescope can "hear" best at frequencies between 1,000 and 10,000 megahertz, where background radiation noise is minimal. Other civilizations wishing to communicate may choose to broadcast over this band, known as the "microwave window."
- If we ever make contact with other worlds, it will almost certainly be through electromagnetic waves, such as radio waves, which travel at the speed of light.

During the past five years, the search for extraterrestrial life has gained momentum, thanks to several new disco-

Winterize your vehicle properly

By Fred W. Young
Installation Safety Office

When we hear the phrase "Get your auto winterized," most people think about getting their anti-freeze checked. To properly winterize your auto requires more than just checking your anti-freeze. Your auto should have a complete check-up, from anti-freeze to wipers.

Don't just check the anti-freeze but the entire cooling system. If the anti-freeze in the radiator is a rusty color, drain and flush the entire system and replace with the proper mixture of anti-freeze and water. This will prolong the life of the radiator and help prevent overheating.

Check all of the hoses in the cooling system, cracked or bulging hoses should be replaced.

The exhaust system should be checked to ensure that there are no leaks, which could cause carbon monoxide poisoning.

Windshield wipers need to be looked at to see if they are cracked, hard, or brittle, and need to be replaced.

The fluid in your windshield washer needs to be a mixture of water and windshield cleaner, to prevent it from freezing.

Some other items to check are:

- Tires, are they worn, do they have to be replaced, rotated or balanced?
- How old is the battery? If your battery is four or five years old, it is probably at the end of its life.
- Winter driving means using your lights more. Check all of your lights to see if any need to be replaced. Clean them at this time.

When you check your auto out, make it a family affair. It is an excellent time to teach your wife and children what needs to be checked. By having them help you it is not only educational to those who do not understand autos, but it will let them know that you care.

Nobody wants their loved ones stranded along side of the highway, in cold weather, because a water hose broke or they didn't know how to change a flat tire.

Saving energy now more critical than ever

By Becky Ray
Post Energy Office

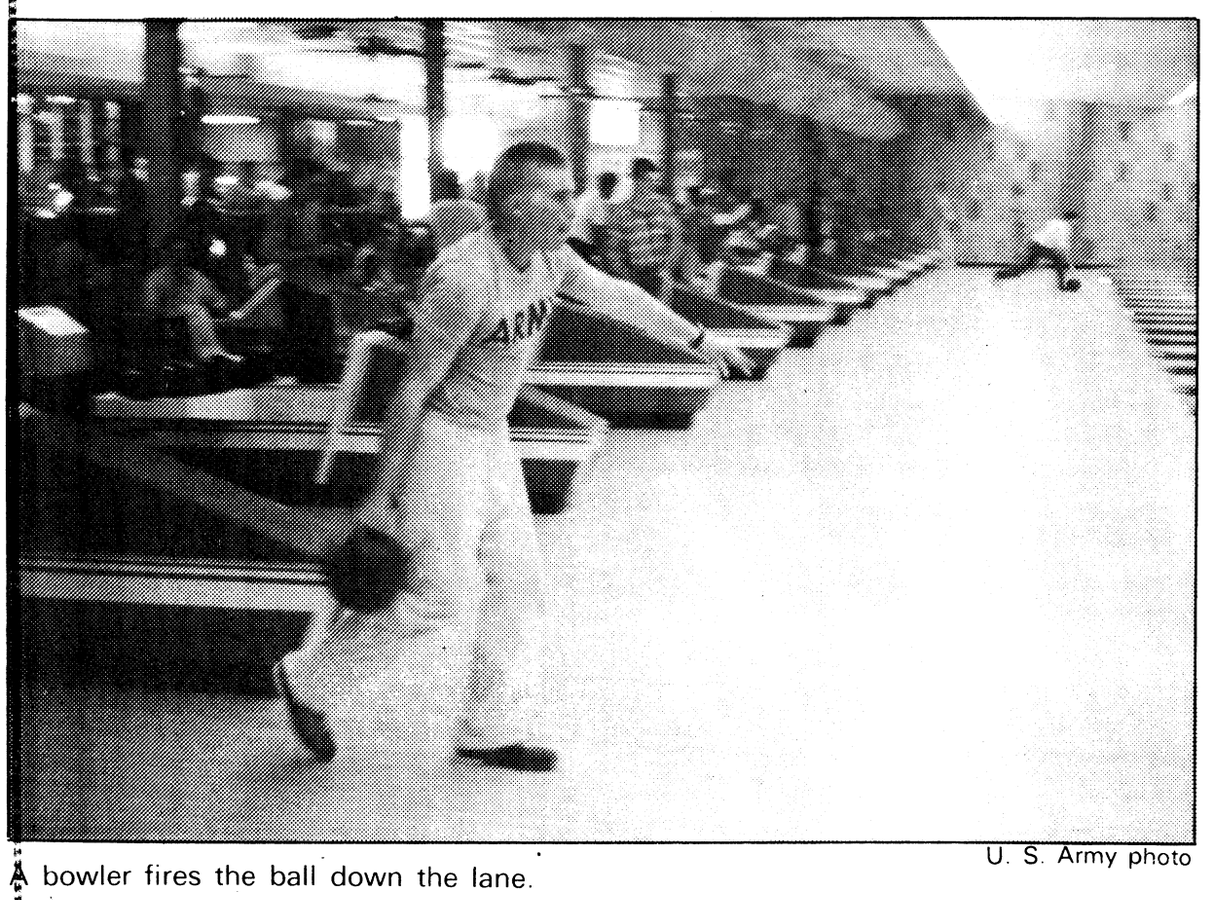
At this time of year, most Fort Benning residents are probably more concerned with staying warm than saving energy. However, with the tough energy consumption goals set for the post this year, energy conservation is more critical than ever.

Fortunately, staying warm and saving energy don't have to conflict. The following tips may help accomplish goals from both perspectives:

- Installing weatherstripping and caulking around doors and windows can stop drafts. To locate drafts, pass a lit candle over window and door frames.

Materials for weatherproofing are available to troop units and family housing occupants through the Self Help Program.

- Closing drapes, curtains and shades at night creates an extra barrier of insulating air.
- Installing plastic over windows also insulates against cold air. Masking tape can be used to attach plastic to windows and can be removed easily.
- Opening window blinds and draperies on sunny days warms the air.
- Covering window air conditioning units keeps cold air out.
- Checking heater filters often and replacing them when necessary keeps the heating unit running efficiently. During heating season filters should generally be changed each month.
- Closing fireplace dampers can cut heat losses substantially. Open dampers in a chimney when the fireplace is not in use can cause a heat loss of up to eight percent for a 48-inch square fireplace.
- Closing vents in and sealing off unused rooms helps save heating energy. This is not recommended for houses with heat pumps, as it may damage the system.
- Keeping ducts, vents and registers clean helps heat systems run efficiently.
- Using vent fans sends heated air outside. Kitchen and bathroom exhaust fans can expel an entire houseful of heated air in just one hour, so should be turned on only when needed.
- After baking or broiling, turn the oven off, but leave the door open.
- Setting the thermostat as low as possible saves operating costs of up to six percent per degree.



Energy conservation doesn't mean the establishment of unreasonable restrictions, but the controlled and responsible use of expensive, limited, and usually irreplaceable resources.

Energy consumption goals and the effort placed in attempting to meet these goals will continue to have a great impact on the entire Fort Benning community.

Even more long-term effects of the successes or failures in managing resources will be reflected in the quality of life in years to come.

Effective management of energy resources is a social responsibilty, and a great starting point is common sense, prudence and awareness.

The bowling team from HHC, 2nd Bn., 69th Armor won the Association of the United States Army Bowling Tournament for the second year in a row.

Bowling over the competition, the tankers rolled up a score of 1705 during the 3-day tournament.

Finishing in second place was Co., B, 1st Bn., 29th Inf., and third place went to HHD, 67th Maint. Bn.

High game and high series honors were split between Roger Deeny, Co. A, 2nd Bn., 29th Inf., who won the high series and Aaron Miller, 498th Med. Co., 34th Med. Bn., who won high game.

Terry Chamberlain of 598th Maint. Co., 67th Maint. Bn., took honors in both the high series and high game in the Women's Category.

Fifty teams from post units enjoyed this year's tournament. The Assistant Commandant Col. William Hartzog, presented trophys to the winners and team captains of all participating teams.

veries about the cosmos. Radio astronomers have found that many complex organic molecules — considered by biologists to be the "building blocks" of life — exist even in the depths of interstellar space.

In 1983, the Infrared Astronomical Satellite collected data from deep space, which suggested that planetary systems are commonplace in the galaxy. And, in June of this year, Canadian astronomers reported evidence of two large planets, one orbiting the star Gamma Cephei (about 48 light-years from the sun) and the other around one of the Project Ozma target stars, Epsilon Eridani (about 11 light-years away).

Seti is also being aided by the astounding pace of technological advances. In addition to larger and more sensitive telescopes, computers powerful enough to collect, compare, analyze and store millions of signals per second are now available, enabling astronomers to study many more frequency channels than ever before. According to Horowitz, to collect the same amount of data as the SAO equipment gathers in one minute, Project Ozma would have had to operate for 100,000 years.

"Computers are very good at not getting bored," says Dr. Paul Ceruzzi, curator of computer technology at the Smithsonian's National Air and Space Museum. "They can scan an incredible amount of repetitive data that a human being couldn't begin to process. The tricky part is, how do you program a computer to look for intelligence?" Ceruzzi is organizing "Aerospace Computing," a major new gallery exhibition scheduled to open at Air and Space in 1989, which will contain an exhibit on Seti.

By 1992, the National Aeronautics and Space Administration plans to launch a comprehensive Seti program, covering thousands of times the frequency range of previous searches. "One part," Lynn Griffiths of NASAs Life Science Division says, "is an all-sky survey that will search the entire celestial sphere over a wide frequency range, using the 112-foot diameter antennas that are part of NASAs Deep Space Network.

"We will also perform a targeted search of about 1,000 solar-type stars within 80 light-years of the Earth. To achieve very high sensitivity, this search will use some of the largest radio telescopes available, including the 1,000-foot diameter antenna at Arecibo, Puerto Rico and the DSN's 210-foot diameter antennae."

NASA now operates two Seti programs, a targeted search at the Ames Research Center at Moffett Field, Calif., and an all-sky survey at the Jet Propulsion Laboratory at the California Institute of Technology in Pasadena.

To test its instruments for these searches, NASA focused its 26-foot radio telescope on the Pioneer 10 spacecraft, now about 3.2 billion miles from earth. (Pioneer 10, now on its way out of the solar system, carries a message to other civilizations about the earth and its inhabitants.)

Even though Pioneer is giving off only one watt of power (about half the power of a miniature Christmas tree light), the space craft was clearly tracked. The upcoming NASA program will have instruments 150 times as sensitive.

It is now possible to detect signals, from a distance of about 1,000 light-years, of about the same strength as those broadcast from the earth.

If we could intercept a signal from a civilization that distant, we would be peering into the ancient history of that race, because that signal would have traveled 1,000 years to reach us.

By the same token, Earth has been transmitting radio signals for about 100 years and television signals for 30 years; the planet is thus surrounded by a sphere of radio waves emanating about 100 light-years into space. If these signals have reached other civilizations, they may well be attempting to contact us — perhaps requesting a re-broadcast of "The Jack Benny Show."

Scientists do not unanimously agree that life exists elsewhere in the universe. Says Horowitz, "I know one evolutionary biologist who is so good at explaining why there's no life outside earth that he almost makes his own existence impossible."

A famous objection, oft-repeated today, was raised in 1950 by nuclear physicist Enrico Fermi: "Where is everybody?" Fermi pointed out that no extraterrestrial civilizations had ever made contact with humans.

Either we are alone in the universe, he reasoned, or perhaps any civilization advanced enough to communicate with another planet is doomed to self-destruction.

"I can think of no better reason to search as intensively as possible, as soon as possible," Horowitz responds.

Assuming other advanced civilizations exist, and they wish to communicate with humans, when will it happen? "We've only been searching for 27 years," Drake notes. "In the context of a five-billion year old planet and a 15-billion year old universe, that's barely the blink of an eye." Five thousand years is a reasonable estimate, he says, "but I hope it happens by the turn of the century."

Time may be of the essence. Many astronomers are concerned that the "microwave window" of radio frequencies is becoming crowded with signals from communication satellites proliferating in earth orbit. Very faint or distant signals could be drowned out by such space noise and never reach earth-based telescopes.

"Finding intelligent life elsewhere in the universe would unquestionably be the most important discovery in the history of the world," Horowitz says. "I hope it happens soon, and I hope I'm the one who finds it."

What you eat makes a difference

Hughston Sports Medicine Hospital

Does what you eat really make a difference where fitness is concerned? Can eating properly assist in enabling you to continue athletic activities on into the golden years?

Evidently, the experts think the answer to both these questions is yes. The second in a series of Hughston Sports Medicine Foundation seminars on "Exercise and the Ageless Athlete" is called "Nutritiously Fit!"

To be held in the Hughston Sports Medicine Foundation Auditorium, Jan. 19, 7-9 p.m., the program covers every aspect of food as it relates to fitness.

William Roundtree, M.D., a family practice physician in the Foundation's Fellowship Program will talk about "The Essential Nutrients." Jessie Wright, Registered Dietician, will discuss "Super Foods" and diet plans that include them. J. Ronald Hunt, M.D., internal medicine specialist will give the connection between "Exercise, Serum Cholesteral and Heart Disease." William Etchison, exercise physiologist, will talk about ways to control "Weight Loss/Weight Gain" and "Psychological Aspects."

Following the program there will be a question-and-answer session with a panel of all the speakers led by Stephen C. Hunter, M.D., orthopedic surgeon at the Hughston Orthopedic Clinic, and consulting physician to several area athletic teams.

The program is free and open to the public. It is especially designed for the mature athlete, ages 18 and up, engaged in all levels of activity from fitness to competition.

The Hughston Sports Medicine Foundation is the research and education arm of the Hughston Sports Medicine Campus. It is located just off Hamilton Road between the Hughston Orthopedic Clinic and the Hughston Sports Medicine Hospital.

For more information about the seminar, call 576-2128 or 576-3350.

SPORTS SHORTS

Cookie Run set

The Concharty Council of Girl Scouts, Inc. will hold its Eighth Annual Cookie Run at Weracoba Park/Lake Bottom in Columbus Jan. 23.

The family-oriented event was started to encourage physical fitness among the youth and provide a challenging winter activity for the community, according to Sally B. Lasseter, executive director.

Runners participate in the event from all over Georgia and Alabama, as well as the rest of the southeast.

The 5-mile run will start at 9:30 a.m. followed by the 1.5-mile handicapped-participation run at 10:30 a.m. and then, the 1.5-mile run at 11 a.m.

This year, there will be a 50-yard Tot Trot, for runners 4 years old and under, following the 1.5-mile run.

Units from Benning that field twenty or more runners pay $5 per person if pre-registered by Jan. 22. All members who register will receive a T-shirt. Units that register by Jan. 15 will have their T-shirts delivered to the units prior to the run.

For more information on the run and to register, call Alice DeHoyos, 327-2646.

Junior Rifle Club seeks new members

The Fort Benning Youth Activities Junior Club is looking for new members. Anyone 12-19 years old is eligible to join.

The six-week basic rifle marksmanship and safety course will meet at the USAMU Indoor Rifle Range on Bergen Street behind the Infantry Museum, Tuesdays, starting Jan. 5, 4:30-6 p.m.

Cost of the basic course is $30. Membership fees for those desiring to continue for the remainder of the year is $20.

The Fort Benning Junior Rifle Club is one of the most successful programs in the country, having won three National Championship titles this year.

We are looking forward to having new members continue our winning tradition. For more information, contact Maj. Richard Hawkins or 1st Lt. David Cannella from USAMU, 545-2343.

Women's basketball leagues now forming

The Physical Activities Branch is presently looking to field six to eight female basketball teams with 10 to 12 players each.

For registration information call 545-5777 or go by Doughboy Stadium door 8.

Aerobics classes offered at Audie Murphy and bldg 4

Aerobics classes are conducted Monday, Wednesday and Friday at 9 a.m. in Audie Murphy Fitness Center and on Monday, Wednesday and Friday at noon and 7 p.m. in building 4 Fitness Center. The cost is $12 per month. For more information, call 545-1940.

The Follow Me Golf Course closes first Monday of month

The Golf course, pro snop, storage area and club house will be closed the first Monday of every month beginning Nov. 2.

Winterize: save money

Associated Release Service

According to the Department of Energy, millions of single-family homes in the United States are not adequately protected from outside weather. Unfortunately, that means millions of homeowners are compromising the comfort of their homes and paying excessive energy bills, year after year.

If you feel your home is less energy efficient than it could be, now's the time to do something about it. Fall is the perfect time to "winterize" your home — that is, make it more energy efficient in preparation for the colder months to come.

Winterizing a home is easy to do, and the best part is that the projects you undertake now to make your home more comfortable during the heating season, will make it more comfortable during the cooling season as well.

The CertainTeed Home Institute recommends following the guidelines below to winterize your home this winter.

Attic insulation: Check to see that your attic (including the door) meets recommended insulation levels for your area. If it has fewer than six inches, you should add at lest another six inches of insulation. It's available in rolls or batts for easy installation and can help prevent the warm air in your home from escaping through the roof.

Sidewalls: More than 20 percent of a home's heat can be lost through the sidewalls. Therefore, you may want to consider hiring a professional insulation contractor to install fiber glass blown-in insulation in your sidewalls. To find a contractor, look in the Yellow Pages under insulation contractors or ask contractors or friends and neighbors for references.

Windows and doors: Consider installing storm windows and doors to keep warm air in and cold air out. Keep curtains and shades open to let in warm sunshine during the day, but close them when the sun goes down.

Heating System: Clean furnace and replace filter as needed. Close heating vents in unused rooms. Consider installing devices that can increase the efficiency of your existing system.

Thermostat: Set between 65 and 70 degrees Fahrenheit during the day and five degrees lower while you're asleep. consider installing an automatic clock thermostat.

Water system: Try a lower thermostat setting and consider an insulation wrap for your water heater. Install water flow restrictors in showers and faucets. They cut hot water use without affecting comfort.

Remember, the costs you incur in winterizing your home will more than pay for themselves within a few years. So don't compromise your home's comfort this winter — winterize your home and enjoy comfort and savings in energy costs as well!

For more tips on winterizing your home, write to the CertainTeed Home Institute, P.O. Box 860 Valley Forge, PA 19482 for a free copy of the "Energy Facts" brochure.

Heating causes indoor desert

Associated Release Service

It's hard to believe but it's true. If you're planning to live in your home again this winter without a humidifier, you'd be better off living in the Sahara Desert. That's because the humidity level in the parched desert is 10 percent higher than your heated, unhumidified home!

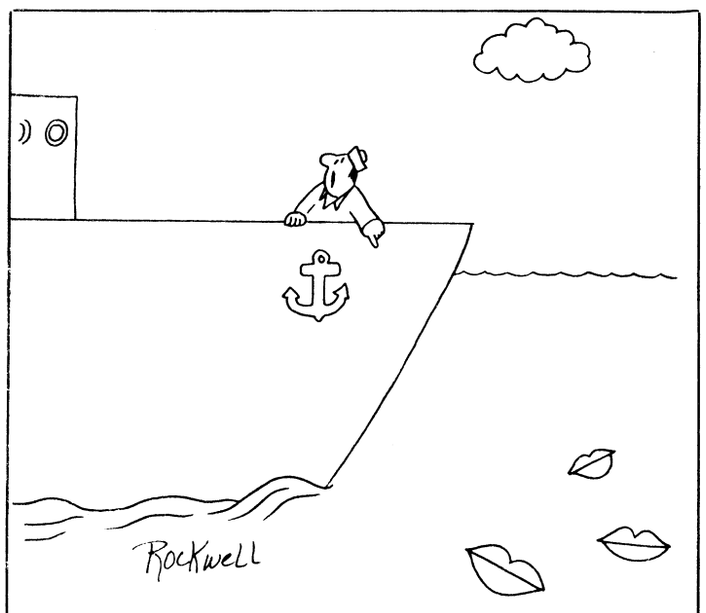
During the cold winter months, the relative humidity in most heated homes without a humidifier is only 13 percent. This figure may seem insignificant until you weigh it against the relative humidity in Death Valley at 23 percent, or the Sahara Desert at 25 percent. For comfort and health, the recommended level of relative himidity is 35 percent. During the heating season the indoor relative himidity is very low compared to the outdoor humidity. This means without a humidifier, your heated home is severly lacking in the humidity it needs to keep you comfortable and to protect your home, your furnishings and many musical instruments such and pianos, clarinets and violins.

While some people think everyday activities like boiling water, drying a load of clothes or taking a shower generates enough humidity in well insulated, super tight home, this is simply not true. Even well insulated homes can't prevent moisture from escaping through open doors, fireplaces and exhaust fans. And that's when dry air starts to steal moisture from homes and contents.

If there isn't enough humidity inside a home, warm dry air tries to get moisture from anything it can: Walls, woodwork, furniture, even house plants. What happens? Wood moulding shrinks around doors and windows (which lets cold air in and warm air out), wood floors dry out and creak, walls and ceilings crack and house plants wilt. All this happens even in today's super-insulated homes.

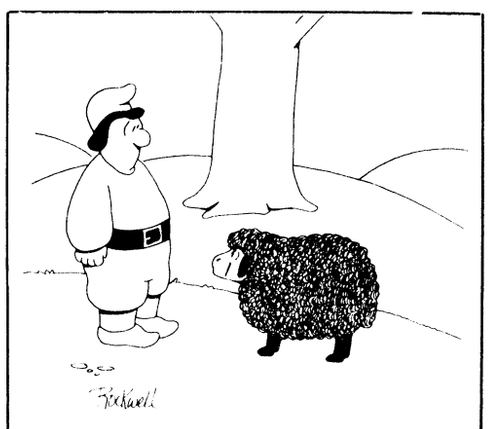
By controlling the humidity in your home, a humidifier can save your home from this excessive winter dryness and make your indoor environment more comfortable. Regardless of whether you live in a home, apartment or condominium, or what type of heating system you have, there's a humidifier to fit your needs.

Talk to your local heating dealer about installing a central humidifier before winter hits. After all, it could save your home from becoming drier than the Sahara Desert. For your copy of an informative booklet on relative humidity in the home and how to choose a humidifier, write Floyd Carlstrom, 1015 East Washington Avenue, Madison, Wisc. 53703, or call toll free 1-800-356-9652.



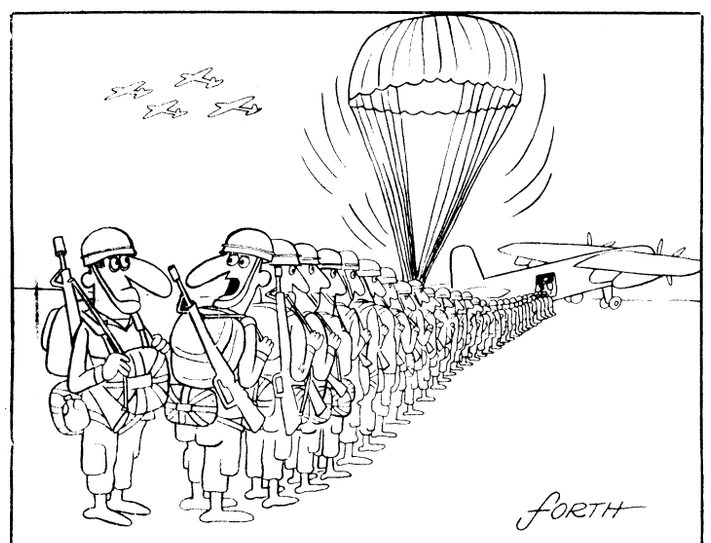
Fireplace tips keep your home safe

Installation Safety Office



This winter, most of us will be lighting our fireplaces to keep us nice and warm.

Fireplaces create a cozy and cheery atmosphere. These fires, however, if not carefully tended, could cause tragedy. Here are a few tips on how to use a fireplace safely:



- Do not use flammable liquids to start fires.
- Keep a metal or glass screen in front of the fireplace. Flying embers can start fires.
- Don't use excessive amounts of paper to build roaring fires in fireplaces. It is possible to ignite soot in the chimney by overbuilding a fire.
- Never burn charcoal in a fireplace. Burning charcoal gives off deadly amounts of carbon monoxide.
- Be sure no flammable materials hang down from a decorated mantel. A spark from the fireplace could ignite these materials and cause a fire.
- Follow directions on the package when using man-made logs. Never break a man-made log apart to get the fire going faster.
- When the family retires for the night, be sure the fire in the fireplace is out.
- Never close the damper with hot ashes still in the fireplace. A closed damper can help hot ashes build up heat to the point where a fire could flare up and ignite the room while the family sleeps.
- If the fireplace hasn't been used for some time, have it and the chimney checked before using.
- Ensure that routine cleaning is done. Clean chimneys at least twice a year if you use your fireplace often.
