Benning soldier dies

By Becky Obert
Bayonet staff writer

Police said excessive speed was a factor in the motorcycle accident Dec. 27, that killed a Fort Benning soldier.

SP4 Alan S. Johnson, who was assigned to 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment, died Dec. 29 of injuries suffered when his motorcycle struck a cement retaining wall at the Macon Road area of I-185.

Police estimated that the motorcycle was traveling 65 mph in the 35 mph zone.

During the two-week holiday period, six people were arrested on post for driving under the influence, and 23 traffic accidents were reported, with one injury.

Still, it was a relatively safe holiday season, officials said. There were a total of 28 DUIs this December, compared to 43 in December 1986 and 47 in December 1985, military police said.

"There has not been a decrease in enforcement levels, which means that people are not drinking and driving as much," said SSgt. Brian King, assistant operations sergeant at the Military Police Activity.

King said that the decrease shows that people are taking seriously the command's emphasis on safety.

"Commanders have worked hard to influence their soldiers on the seriousness of DUIs, and this shows that it's working," he said.

"It seems that safety was on peoples' minds," he said. "It's obvious that people were driving defensively and were not drinking and driving."

There were four domestic incidents during the holidays, King said, and this may continue in January, since statistics show that domestic violence rises during the holidays.

"People have more stress during the holidays, because of money problems, visits with extended families and more drinking and partying," he said.

Mislabeled rabies vaccine leaves post pets unprotected

By Becky Obert
Bayonet staff writer

If your pet was vaccinated for rabies at the post veterinary clinic within the last four years, it may not be adequately protected against the deadly virus.

According to Capt. Mark Martinez, chief of the Animal Disease Prevention and Control Branch, Veterinary Services, his office was notified in August that some pets might have been incorrectly immunized.

Animals affected are those that received rabies shots from Oct. 1, 1984 to Aug. 13, 1986, and from June 8 to Sept. 1, 1987. Pets would have received either a three-year or a one-year vaccine, he said.

Norden Laboratories, the maker of the rabies vaccine that was recalled, notified consumers that research showed the vaccine should not be administered under the skin, but instead should be injected directly into a muscle.

The bad vaccinations occurred because the product label indicated that it could be administered either intramuscularly or under the skin.

"Given the choice, under the skin injections are better because they are less painful to the animal," Martinez said.

Vet clinic records show that the vaccine was given to 2,141 pets during these time periods, and postcards were sent out to notify pet owners of the problem.

The notification process is not going well, however. "Only 275 animals have been revaccinated as a result of the mailout, and another 450 of the postcards were returned as addressee unknown," he said.

Pet owners have until Jan. 28 to bring their pets in and receive a free vaccination to correct the problem. After that date, Norden will no longer provide a free vaccine.

Martinez said that pet owners who still have their copy of the rabies certificate can check it themselves to see if their pet received the bad vaccine.

"There is a place on the certificate that says "producer" and if this is marked "NOR," it means they got the bad vaccine," he said. "If it says "MER," then they got a good vaccine.

Rabies is a real threat to people and animals and can be fatal. In this area, Martinez said skunks, raccoons, foxes and bats are the main carriers.

Properly administered rabies vaccine provides an effective barrier between humans and the wildlife population, Martinez said.

Last year there were 220 cases of rabies in animals reported in Georgia, and 225 cases in Alabama.

Chapas advance to DA competition

By Marco Morales
School of Americas correspondent

Master Sergeant Ed Chapa and his family have been selected to represent Fort Benning and the Training and Doctrine Command at Department of the Army-level competition in the Great American Family Awards program.

Chapa, his wife Christela and their two sons, Erasmo and Maximiano, recently won as one of Fort Benning's "Great American Families" because of their noteworthy contributions as a family to the communities where the Chapas have been assigned, including Fort Benning, Columbus and Phenix City, Ala.

William Acklen

MSgt. Ed Chapa, NCOIC, directorate of training and doctrine, USARSA, jots down an incoming message via the telephone.

The Chapas will compete with two other TRADOC families for national consideration. Those families are Col. and Mrs. Kent Harrison from Fort Leavenworth, Kansas and Lt. Col. and Mrs. Mark Scureman of Fort Knox, Ky.

These families were selected to represent all of the families in TRADOC who strengthen their communities by nurturing individual growth among family members, demonstrating strong teamwork and love in the home, and extending friendship and service to others, according to TRADOC officials.

Government workers indicted

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Seventeen civil service employees at Fort Benning have been indicted by a federal grand jury in Macon, Ga., for giving away or trading government property during the last year.

In addition to the charges of unauthorized conveyances of government property, 13 of the employees were also charged with perjury, as a result of testimony they gave to the grand jury in October.

According to Sam Wilson, U.S. attorney, the indictments were the result of a year-long investigation conducted by agents of the FBI, working with agents from the Criminal Investigation Division at Fort Benning.

The investigation used undercover agents to collect evidence of an informal bartering system in which employees gave away government property and received government property from other workers for personal use.

The bartering involved trades of building and plumbing supplies, paint and equipment, Wilson said.

While individually, the amounts involved are not large, collectively the problem is a lot larger, he said. "This type of activity costs taxpayers a lot of money, and we're going to do whatever it takes to get it stopped."

If convicted, the employees face up to 10 years in prison and fines of up to $250,000 on the unauthorized conveyance charge. Perjury is punishable by up to five years in prison and up to $250,000 in fines.

Charged with conveying the property and with perjury were:

Johnnie B. Buckhanan, Michael Dubose, William Mercer, John Earl Rustin, Jerry Lewis, Ricky Horn, Ralph Rogers, James Mathis, Eulas Lee, Carlton Bryant, Albert Hudson Jr., Jimmy Lee James and Theodis Upshaw.

Charged only for conveying the property were: Floyd Michael Childs, Charles Chambers, Bernard Purry and Nathaniel Askew.

Wilson said the investigation is continuing but refused to comment about possible future indictments.

The employees will be tried in federal district court in Columbus, probably in March, he said.

AUSA membership meeting, dinner set Jan. 21

Post emergency numbers not same as Columbus

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Your husband collapses unexpectedly at the dinner table. He doesn't seem to be breathing and you suspect a heart attack.

With trembling limbs, you race to the telephone and dial 911 to summon an ambulance. As you watch your husband's silent form, you pour out your story to the operator.

But when you give her your address, she tells you, "I'm sorry, but we don't service Fort Benning. You've got the wrong number." By the time you find your Fort Benning directory and locate the right number to call, your husband could be dead.

Unlike the Columbus community, Fort Benning does not have one emergency telephone number to summon help for all emergency situations. In the case of fires, there is a three digit number office workers can call (117). But residents of family housing must call 687-8117 to report a fire.

For quick military police assistance, call 545-5222. If you need an ambulance, call 544-3911.

It's a good idea to put these numbers by the telephone, so you don't have to search for them when you need them.

This will ensure that you can summon help quickly if and when you need it.

Post soldiers deserve pats on the back, praise

Public Affairs Office

Soldiers, pat yourselves on the back.

During the past week, we've come across two people praising you.

We realize that there are a lot of people out there saying a lot of nice things about soldiers all the time, not just these two.

But coming as they did back at the beginning of the new year, we thought we'd share them with you.

The first came in the form of a Christmas card to the Infantry Center from a woman in Columbus.

She said in her card how she thought we were the greatest Army in the world, how the Army's never let Columbus down and how so many people in Columbus are proud of our soldiers and the good work they do.

"I love everything you do," she wrote.

At a Rotary meeting downtown this week a man publicly told the commanding general how impressed he was with our soldiers, noting how they are well-mannered and well-behaved when they go downtown.

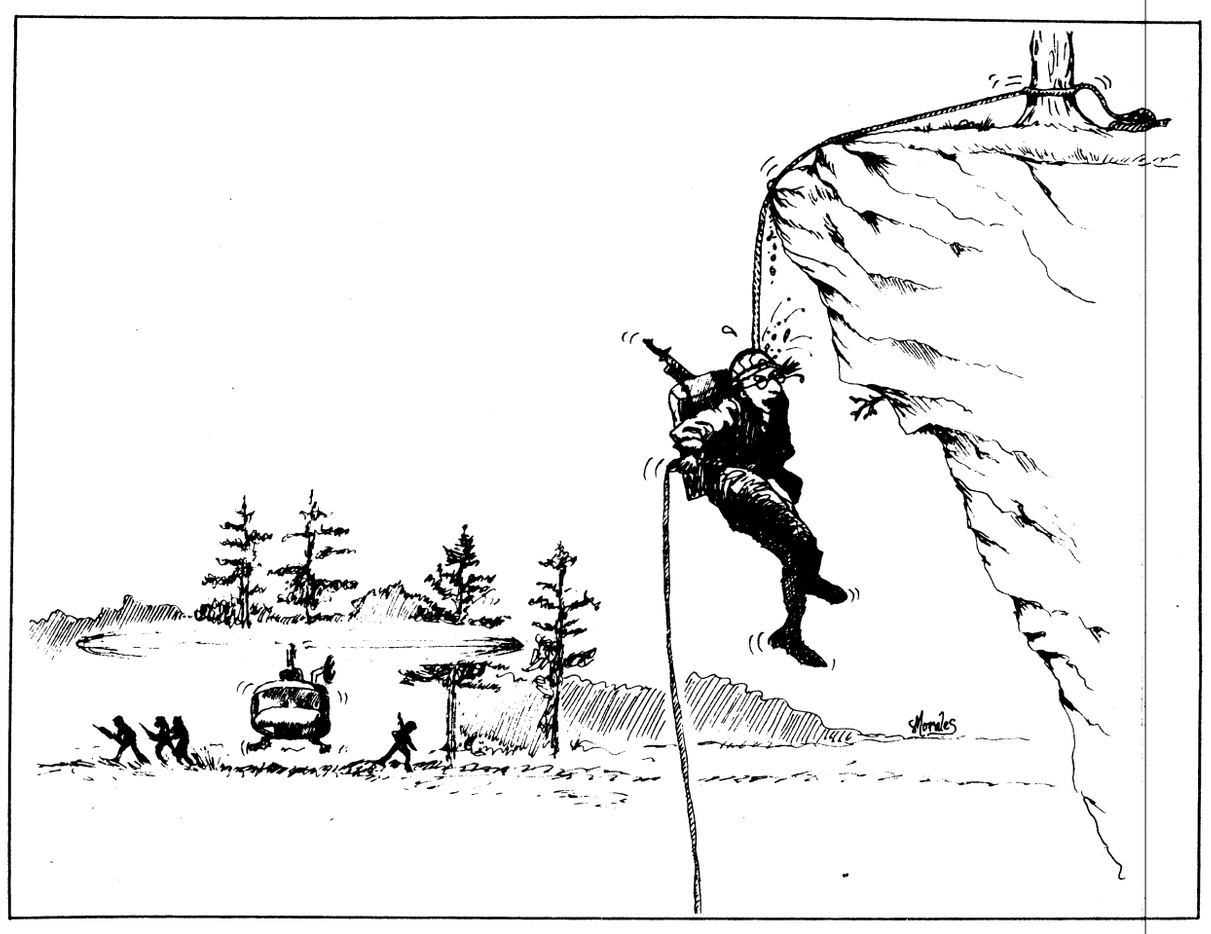
"I realize they are constantly training for war, yet when they come to town, they act like real gentlemen," he said.

Soldiers, you are appreciated in more ways than you realize.

This public support is so important since we consider those in the civilian community key players in the defense of our Constitution.

We want to hear from our readers

It seems like we always report the bad things that happen on post, while good news gets little space. We'd like to hear from our readers about some of the good things going on here. If you know someone who's an "unsung hero," write us a letter about it.



All letters must be typed, double-spaced and signed by the writer, including home or unit address and a telephone number. We will withhold a writer's name upon request, but please include it on your submission to us in case we need to contact you.

Letters are subject to standard editing and condensing depending on space available. Letters in which the writer requests that no changes be made will not be run.

Letters can be dropped off at The Bayonet office in Room 601, Infantry Hall, or mailed to The Bayonet, Room 601, Infantry Hall, Fort Benning, Ga., 31905.

Old Ranger gives friendly advice

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Newspaper work is hard. No doubt about it. We reporters are always performing under the gun. Always up against some deadline, working long hours to please some ingrate editor.

We dream of getting back to the "real Army," where we train to close with and destroy the enemy.

But Tim, one of our budding reporters went, what I consider, too far in getting off the newspaper staff. You might say he went over the edge. He volunteered to go to Ranger School and horror of horrors, he was accepted.

Not only will he be a Ranger, but a winter Ranger to boot. The elite of the elite. The tough of the tough.

When "Old Ranger" found out that Tim was heading for Ranger School, he dragged his creaky bones up to the sixth floor to regale Tim about, "Now when I was a Ranger student," or "Now when I was an instructor at Mountain Ranger Camp."

Bemused, I listened in. I also butted in, knowing it'd been some 20 plus years since "Old Ranger" had been up in Dahlonega, and therefore, perhaps his memory of events wasn't all that keen anymore.

"Listen sonny," he said, breaking away from a story about being chased by a bear somewhere near Blairsville. "Ranger training is such an intense experience, you don't soon forget being chased by bears and falling down cliffs, among other things."

I could tell the bear story had Tim's attention as his eyes were as big around as lemon pies. But Tim didn't get to hear the end of the story as "Old Ranger" was next interrupted by the Major.

"You know what you need to be doing right now while the temperature is down around freezing, and we've got a nice stiff breeze. You need to be outdoors, stripped down, pouring water over yourself to toughen up. Isn't that right old timer," the Major directed to Old Ranger.

"Gotta be tough, but not a fool," "Old Ranger" said, shooting the Major a "what kind of idiot are you?" look.

"Yep. Ya do need to be tough. Hawk gets to flappin' his wings, it'll drive the cold right through you. You get on top of one of those bare-assed mountains along the T.V.D., and you're apt to freeze in your own sweat if you sit down to rest.

"But don't be carrying and wearing everything you own now just to stay warm. I seen students try and take their bunk mattresses out with 'em. Ain't the answer. You can get heat stroke as easy as hypothermia.

Gotta travel light. Take along dry clothes you can change into after you stop for the night — not that you'll get much chance to do that. Usually have about enough time to get wrapped up in a poncho liner before it's time to be up and at 'em again.

"Tired. You ain't been tired until you go to Ranger School. Why boy, you'll fall asleep on your feet. One minute you'll be standin' there staring at the cat eyes on some Ranger's patrol cap. Next thing you know, those cat eyes are gone, and you don't hear nuthin' 'ceptin' the snoring of those behind you who fell asleep on their feet, too.

"Hallucinate. You ever try to buy a coke from a pine tree? And don't be lookin' for no chow caches left behind by other Rangers. T'ain't no Ranger in the world who'd leave chow behind.

"Feet. Sonny. Them's your best friends. Take good care of 'em. Keep 'em dry. Powder 'em. And don't be walkin' around in those blamed jungle boots. Had a friend whose heels got eat right off. And I ain't talkin' about boot heels. If he hadn't wanted that tab so bad, he'd have never gotten to Florida. Docs tried to medevac him.

"So use those boots the Army made for you. You still gonna get sore feet. But not as bad. You get back to base camp and walk over that gravel between the shower point and the hooches, you better be wearing something on your feet. Even with boots on it's like walkin' on egg shells. You don't hardly want to put them dogs down they hurt so bad.

"Yep, be smart up there. Travel light. You'll get burdened down enough with radios and machine guns and all that other sutff. Don't need to be adding anything extry. You listen to them instructors.

"You take all the stuff you think you need, and you'll lose half it. You'll be trippin' over dead fall, banging into slash pine and bouncing off mountain laurel instead of crawling under it if your pack's too full.

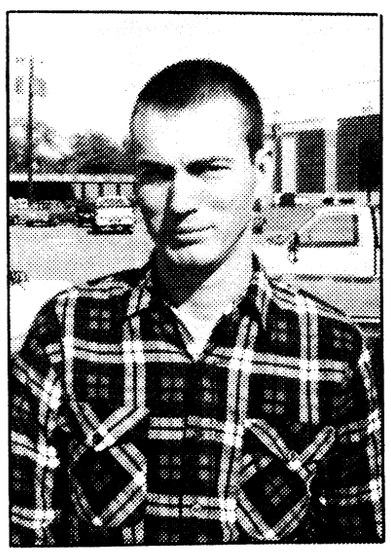
"You may even need to run for your life, you get too close to some moonshiner's still."

"Old Ranger" took time to chuckle over that one.

That's when I took a peek at Tim.

I'm not sure, but I thought he looked like he was beginning to think maybe working on the newspaper wasn't such a bad deal after all.

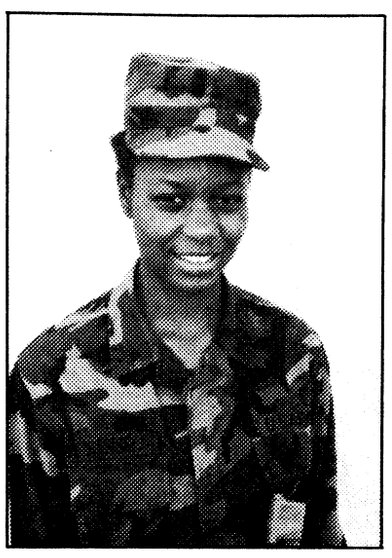
It was then that he ventured a weak, "Is there anything to look forward to?"



"You betcha," "Old Ranger" said, his eyes lighting up. "Graduation. The day you get that bitty ole black and gold piece of cloth will be the greatest day in your life. You'll have something you can really boast that you earned. It sure won't be given to ya.

"You'll wear that with greater pride than any other badge in your military career. It tells the rest of the world you are a cut above other men. It tells all who see you wearing it that you're a winner."

VARIOUS VOICES What's the best way to get people to donate blood?



SFC Wesley Chestnut, Nuclear Biological Chemical School, USAIS - "I think giving them time off or savings bonds may be a good incentive. Another idea might be to create a badge that they could earn and maybe set up a board to put names and pictures up of the people who have donated a certain amount of blood."

1st Lt. Tilman Poindexter, Company C, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment - "I've always offered my men comp time for giving blood."

SSgt. Curtis True, Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, 507th PIR - "Public awareness campaigns may help. People need to be shown the importance of giving blood and exactly what it is used for."

Pvt. 2 Teresa Harris, Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment - "Make them realize the importance of donating blood. Show scenarios of where a lot of blood will be needed at one time and show them what could happen if there is not a sufficient supply."

Sgt. William Thompson, Marine Corps Logistics Base, Albany, Ga. - "I think getting them to donate blood toward the end of the week and giving them the rest of the day would work, at least it does where I'm at."

SP4 Kimberly Barfield, 215th Finance Company, 36th Engineer Group - "I think it might help if you gave them extra money or a day off."

Simulator aids M-16 training

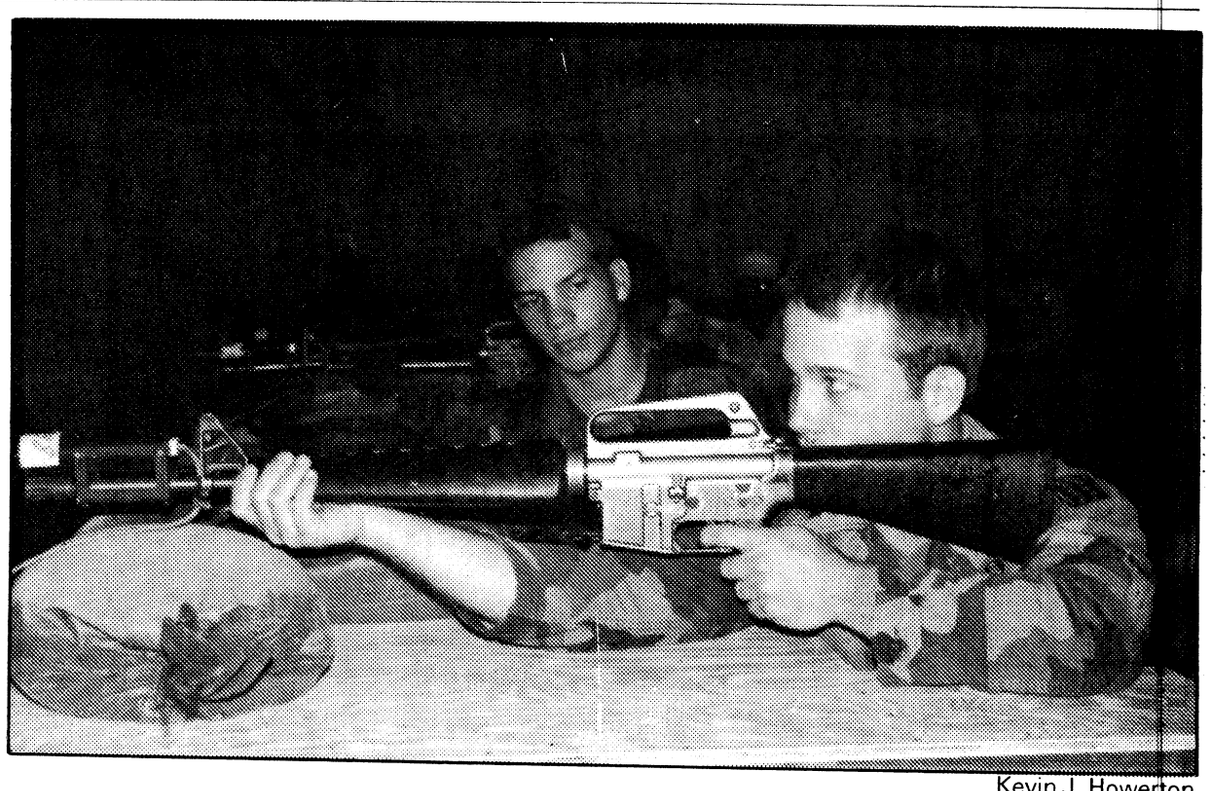
By Kevin J. Howerton
197th Infantry Brigade correspondent

One tough job for a unit commander is keeping his soldiers proficient with the M-16 rifle. The expense of ammunition, the necessary constraints of a safe range operation, everyday commitments and other factors make frequent training in marksmanship difficult.

That's the reason the Army Research Institute has developed the Multi-purpose Arcade Combat Simulator. The MACS uses specially modified, demilitarized, M-16 rifles and a microcomputer system. Soldiers "fire" the rifle at targets that appear on the computer monitor screen.

Six battalions from the 197th Infantry Brigade are participating in a marksmanship sustainment test for a six month period.

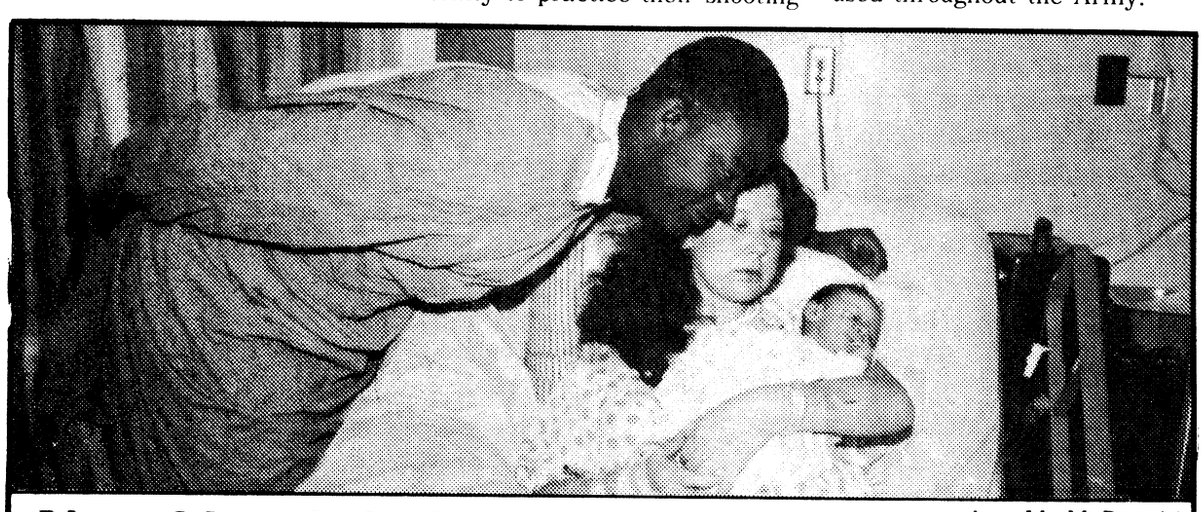
"MACS is capable of giving the soldier almost instant feedback on four major points of rifle marksmanship: steady position, trigger squeeze, follow through and shot placement," said Capt. Lawrence R. Pattersn of the U.S. Army Infantry Board, the test manager at the MACS site.



"There are 10 levels of increasing difficulty on the system. If a shooter does not achieve the acquired standards, the MACS will not allow him to proceed to the next level until the standards are met," Patterson said.

"The MACS is not a replacement for live fire," said Gary Hubbard of the Infantry School Directorate of Training and Doctrine. "It gives soldiers an opportunity to practice their shooting skills more frequently, without range constraints."

Hubbard further explained that each of the groups fired for qualification at the beginning of the test. Over the course of the testing different groups will work with the MACS in different ways. Some soldiers will work exclusivly with the system, some will work with the system as well as live firing and yet others will only live fire. At the end of the test program, the soldiers will again fire for qualification.



"The purpose of this testing is to find out the best unit sustainment program for the Army," said Patterson.

In this way, the 197th soldiers are helping to determine the training methods that will be used throughout the Army.

OSUT graduation marks end of training for 1st Bn

By Marsha Santiago
ITC correspondent

Recently Wetherby Field, Sand Hill, was the site of a five company One-Station-Unit Training graduation and the installation of an Honorary Colonel of the Regiment.

The ceremony marked the completion of training for all companies of the 1st Battalion, 19th Infantry, 1st Infantry Training Brigade. For the soldiers of Bravo and Charlie companies, it was also a chance to see their new battalion commander. The two companies were trained as a COHORT battalion for the 1st Battalion, 41st Infantry, 2nd Armored Division (Forward), Garlstadt, Germany. Lt. Col. Frederick Fox, 1st Bn., 41st Inf. commander, led the 300 soldiers of Bravo and Charlie companies during the "pass in review."

The reviewing officer for the graduation was Col. (Ret.) John R. Howard. During the ceremony, Col. Jose R. Feliciano, 1st ITB commander, presented Howard with the colors of the regiment and a Secretary of the Army certificate officially designating him as the Honorary Colonel of the Regiment of the 19th Infantry. The 19th Infantry consists of three active Army battalions.

Representing the three battalions during the presentations were Lt. Col. Sam Matthews, 1st Bn., 19th Inf. commander; Lt. Col. Joel Williamson, 2nd Bn., 19th Inf. commander; and Maj. Douglas Davis, S-3, 3rd Bn., 19th Inf. The 1st and 2nd battalions are assigned to the 1st ITB, U.S. Army Infantry Training Center, Fort Benning, while the 3rd Battalion is assigned to the 24th Infantry Division, Fort Stewart, Ga.

Howard, a native of South Carolina and New York City, now lives in Columbus. He was commissioned a second lieutenant of Infantry from Officer Candidate School in 1942. Howard is a World War II veteran and a Legion of Merit recipient. He also served with the 13th Air Force, 30th Infantry Service Company, Fort Benning and the 24th Infantry Division, Korea. Howard retired as the Deputy Commanding General, U.S. Army Reserve Command, New York City.

Howard addressed the soldiers, cadre and families gathered for the graduation, telling them he was proud to be present and that, "I can relate this to my own graduation from basic training, which took place 46 years ago, 2½ miles down the road from here in a place called Harmony Church."

He charged the soldiers never to forget the commitment they made when taking the oath of enlistment and always to wear the uniform with pride.

"Hold your head high," said Howard. "You have joined 210 years of tradition."

As the band played "Follow Me," 958 new Infantrymen did just that as they marched from Wetherby Field.

RATT operators' job is to move messages fast

George Mingee

SP4 William Slosher from HHC, 197th Inf. Bde., types a message on a teletype to perform a commo check.

By Larry Gibson
197th Infantry Brigade correspondent

"A7K DE F35 this is..."

Although this may look like a misprint to most people, to the 197th Infantry Brigade's single channel radio operators this signifies the start of another important incoming message.

Radio Teletype provides the 197th with the capability of transmitting and receiving secure hard-copy messages over great distances. Ratt combined with single-channel FM-voice radio is the primary long-range means of communications during fast-moving tactical operations. Therefore, Ratt teams must be capable of operating effectively and installing their equipment rapidly.

"By practicing their skills on a weekly basis," said Maj. William Drechsel, brigade signal officer, "the operators are faster and more proficient at sending and processing messages and reports. This creates trust and confidence in Ratt communications, which encourages commanders and staff to use Ratt as a primary means of transmitting reports required by the Tactical Standard Operating Procedures."

The operators see definite improvement in the brigade's Ratt capabilities since the training program began, according to SP4 Dan Devereaux, a single-channel radio operator assigned to HHC, 197th Inf.

"The weekly training helps me practice my communication skills. Not only do I get practice on typing and processing the messages, but I'm also learning the format and types of messages our brigade uses," Devereaux said. "We don't just practice sending messages through. We're required to camouflage our rigs, install and operate our generator sets, erect our long-range antenna and do all of this as fast as possible. This is what I came in the Army to do, and I'm really enjoying it."

Vehicle registration time is here

By Dennis E. Brower
Legal Assistance Office

Chattahoochee and Muscogee counties began selling 1988 license tags and re-registering automobiles Jan. 2.

Those who have previously registered automobiles in one of these counties should receive the registration form by mail. These people can, for an additional $1, have the registration mailed to them, saving time waiting in long lines

Both county tax offices strongly suggest using the mail-in procedures. Just follow the written directions and enclose a Soldiers' and Sailors' Civil Relief Act Affidavit. This form can be obtained from the Legal Assistance Office. Doing this will exempt non-resident soldiers from paying the state ad valorem taxes on their automobiles. If an automobile is in the spouse's name or is leased, the exemption cannot be applied.

Those who have not yet registered their automobiles, or do not receive the registration packet in the mail, must go to the county offices to register.

Anyone living in Columbus must register in Muscogee County. This includes residents who live north of the Upatoi Creek, all units in Sand Hill and all residents of McGraw Manor, Custer Terrace, Upatoi Terrace, Battle Park and Old Officer Capehart.

All other Fort Benning residents and units are located in Chattahoochee County and must go to Cusseta to register. To register, bring your previous registration, or the pre-printed form received in the mail, proof of insurance, Soldiers' and Sailors' affidavit and a copy of your latest Leave and Earnings Statement. If you have never registered before then, also take a copy of your title.

Both counties are using the staggered system again this year. If your last name begins with A-D, register in January; E-K, register in February; L-R, register in March; and S-Z, register in April. Registration costs $8. Those who do not register by the end of April may be fined. Georgia residents may have to pay some ad valorem tax in addition to the registration fee.

The place to register for those who live in Muscogee County is the Government Center, located between First and Second avenues and Ninth and 10th streets. There is also a small office located in the Columbus Square Mall. Those who live in Chattahoochee County may register at the Cusseta City Hall. From Fort Benning, take Highway 27/280 South approximately 10 miles, turn left onto Highway 55 Business, into Cusseta and go four or five blocks to the courthouse on the left.

For more information, call the Legal Assistance Office at 545-3281. The office is in building 5 at the corner of Vibbert and Sigerfoos.

MARSHAL'S VIEWPOINT

By Wendell D. Choate
Provost Marshal's Office

Shoplifters beware! I am talking to all the "sticky fingers" that pick up items at the post exchange and shoppettes and leave, or try to leave, without paying for them.

How severe is the problem of shoplifting? Nationwide, more than $8 billion worth of merchandise is stolen annually. Here at Fort Benning, shoplifting from the exchange and shoppettes is not an uncommon occurrence, with 34 incidents reported to the Military Police during October and November 1987.

There is no such thing as "typical" shoplifters — they range in age from juveniles to military retirees.

One question arises in any discussion or shoplifting, Why? Are they trying to "save" a couple of dollars? Are they doing it for kicks? In 90 percent of the cases, the answer is simply to beat the system or to impress friends.

Members of the military, can be tried by courts-martial. The penalty for a shoplifting conviction is any or all of the following; bad conduct discharge, forfeiture of all pay and allowances and up to six months confinement at hard labor.

Family members under 17 years of age who are caught shoplifting could be turned over to local civilian juvenile authorities for prosecution. Also, retired military or family members of active or retired soldiers have a lot to lose if convicted of shoplifting. They face possible ejection from the installation, suspension of exchange privileges, and when warranted, a civil court trial.

Actually, shoplifting hurts most those who can afford it the least. This crime hurts everyone in the form of higher prices since stores must cover their losses, buy additional security devices and hire more security guards. Service members and their families are literally "stealing from themselves" when they shoplift since profits from exchange activities go to the Army and Air Force Morale Support Fund.

If you see someone shoplifting, report it. If your children bring home something new, and you suspect they may have stolen it, question them about it. You must set a good example by being honest yourself, your children look up to you.

For more information or assistance, please call the Crime Prevention Section, Provost Marshal's Office, 545—1065, 545-7610.

SPIRITUAL

New beginnings

By Bill Putnam
Religious Education Center

As we come into the New Year, we think of new things and new beginnings. In fact in my culture, extra care is taken to clean homes and buy new clothes in preparation for the new year.

The following is a short quiz pertaining to new things and new beginnings.

1. What did God do in the beginning? (Gen. 1:1)
2. What/who existed in the beginning? (John 1:1)
3. When are God's eyes upon a land for which he cares? (Deut. 11-12)
4. Complete: "I am Alpha and Omega, the — — — — —." (Rev. 1:8, 1:11, 21:6 and 22:13)
5. What kind of song are we told to sing into the Lord? (Ps. 33:3, 96:1 and 98:1.
6. Compare Isaiah 65:17, 66:22 and Rev. 21:1.

Happiness can be found in spite of circumstances

By Chap. Robert Washington
2nd Battalion 54th Infantry Training

Happiness, or contentment, is not determined as much by our circumstances, as by how we look at our circumstances, our perspective. A few weeks ago a poem appeared in this column:

Thank God for the dirty dishes, they have a tale to tell; while others might go hungry, we've eaten very well. With health and home and happiness I shouldn't want to fuss. By the stack of evidence, God's been very good to us.

The poem is useful because it reminds us of the importance of perspective. The author could have complained about the stack of dirty dishes and the chore of washing them. But chose, instead, to look upon them as a stack of evidence of God's goodness in providing a home, food and a family to share it.

About the time I read the article that contained this poem, I experienced for myself the importance of perspective. The period from Thanksgiving to Christmas is always a busy time for chaplains, with special services, ceremonies and the social events that go along with the season. The day before Thanksgiving had been a particularly busy day. Some of the activities of the day included trying to line up a musician to accompany a choir of OSUT soldiers who were going to sing at the ITC Christmas ball, finding two soldiers from one of my battalions to have Thanksgiving dinner with a family off-post and making final prepareations for two Thanksgiving services I would lead the next day.

I have to confess I was tempted to look upon all of this as a lot of extra work and a real headache, until I got my perspective. I realized late that evening some of the positive aspects of what I had been doing that day: helping to give the members of the OSUT choir something of a "night out," and at the same time, to provide some entertainment, and maybe a bit of inspiration, to those who attended the ball; giving two deserving soldiers a "home away from home," if only for a couple of hours; giving the trainees, cadre and family members of two battalions an opportunity to remember the blessings God has given and to give Him the glory for them.

Viewing the activities of the day from this perspective helped me see them not as a headache, but as worthwhile work in the service of God and others; work I could feel good about and be thankful for.

Charles Spurgeon wrote, "We have more to be thankful for in our circumstances than we have in them to depress us." May God give us grace this year to see the things we have to be thankful for in our circumstances instead of the things we have in them to depress us.

Feet do an amazing amount of work. Every step a 185-pound soldier takes when running places 925 pounds of pressure on each foot.

Take time to care for your feet.

- Properly fit shoes and boots—allow toe room, provide proper arch support;
- Don't ignore discomfort;
- Check with your medical facility to learn how to live with callouses, corns and bunions;
- Trim nails straight across to prevent in-grown nails;
- Dry between toes after bathing; use bath powder to deter fungal infection.

Sometimes you need to put your feet up.

Government employees receive raise

Army News Service

Soldiers, most civilians; retirees and veterans, or their survivors, will have a little more money in their pockets thanks to a pay or benefits raise handed them and others by President Reagan Dec. 31.

"For soldiers, the two-percent increase became effective Jan. 1. Civilians' increase becomes effective the first day of the first pay period after Jan. 1.

Translated into dollars, the raise will increase pay for enlisted personnel with less than four months of active duty to $620.70 per month. After four months, that amount increases to $671.40 monthly, or a net increase of $50.70.

How much more money can civilians expect from their two-percent increase? In dollars and for those in mid-level positions, say for example, a GS-9, step 5, the raise amounts to $509 per year. A GS-5, step 5, gets $336 more and a GS-14, step 5 gets $1,040 more.

High-level executives — those making more than $72,500 — received no raise under separate legislation passed Dec. 21 and signed the following day by the president.

Retirees, both military and civilian, received a 4.2 percent cost-of-living allowance increase in retirement benefits as of Jan. 1. And, in a related action, the president signed legislation granting an equal 4.2 percent cost-of-living benefits increase for veterans with service-connected disabilities and their families. Some 300,000 surviving spouses and children of veterans whose deaths were service related also qualify for the cost-of-living benefit increase.

Payday change affects civilians

Army Personnel Bulletin

A recent change to pay regulations requires all Army civilian personnel to be paid on the same day. The Army must use the same pay period and a standard 12-day pay lag, starting no later than January 1988.

Payday for the pay period ending Jan. 2, 1988, will be 12 days after that date, or Jan. 14.

The reason for the 12-day lag is that the existing system requires an unacceptable level of precertification of time and attendance reports. That is specifically prohibited by Title VI of the General Accounting Office Policy and Procedures Manual.

The Army does not have the resources necessary to sustain overtime and other costs associated with a less than 12-day pay lag. New reporting requirements of the Thrift Savings Plan cannot be met without the 12-day lag.

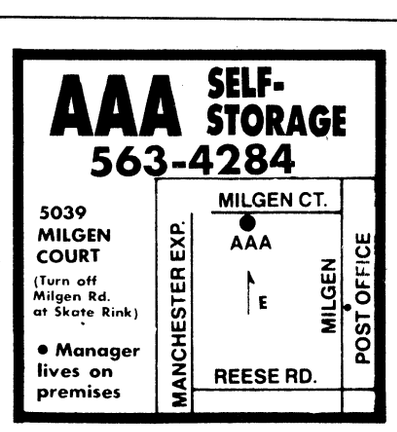
Contact your local finance and accounting office for information concerning this change.

VA Q&A

Veterans Administration

Q: Is there a penalty if a VA guaranteed home loan is partially or fully paid before it becomes due?

A: There is no penalty if a VA loan is partially or fully paid in advance.



Q: Do the VA eligibility assessment procedures for medical care apply to veterans 65 or older?

A: VA's eligibility assessment procedures apply to all nonservice-connected veterans regardless of age. Public Law 99-272 repealed a provision in The Veterans Omnibus Health Care Act of 1970 that allowed veterans 65 years of age or older to receive care in VA facilities regardless of income.

Q: I receive VA compensation and would like to know why the VA did not send me a W-2 form.

Benning soldiers watch Hawks dump Jazz in OT

By Kevin Howerton
197th Infantry Brigade

"Operation Holiday" was a wonderful gift for many of the 197th Infantry Brigade soldiers.

The program, which consists of sporting events, tours of local businesses and visits to local historical sites, was greatly appreciated by those soldiers who were unable to spend the Christmas holiday with their families.

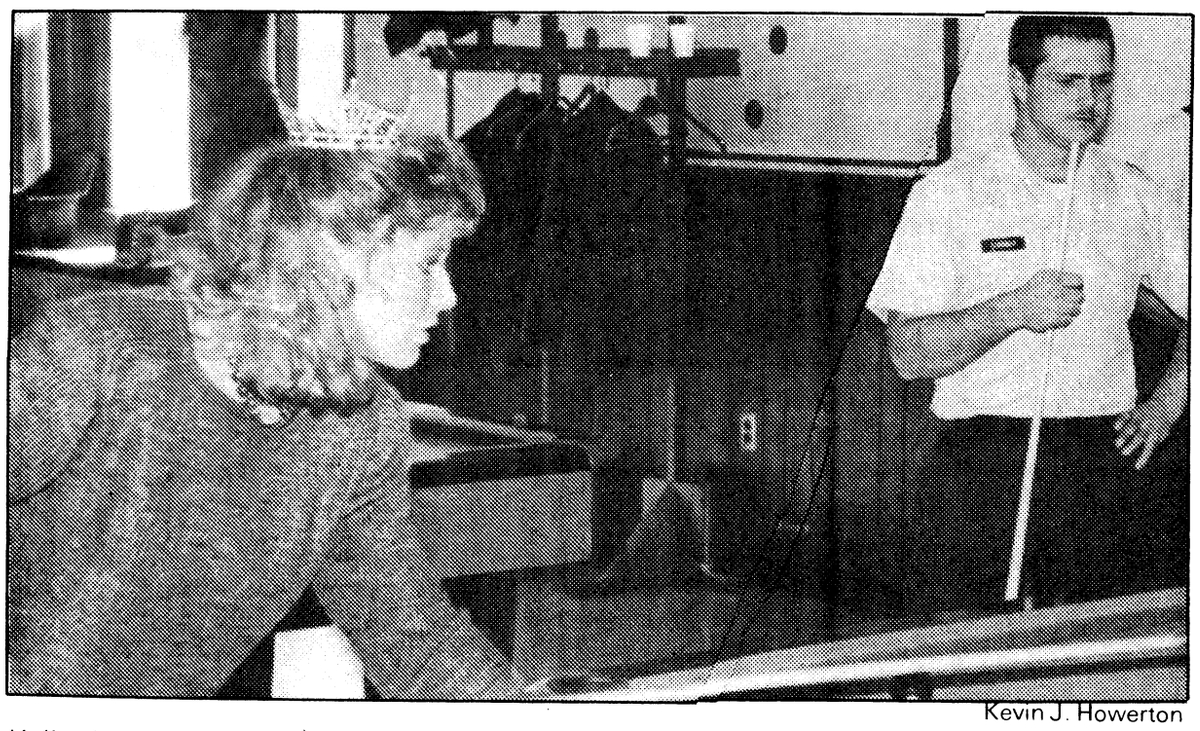
Six bus loads of soldiers from the brigade and other units at Fort Benning took a trip to the Omni Center in Atlanta.



"I came here last year when the Hawks played the New York Knicks," said SP4 Christopher J. Muckle of Btry. C, 2nd Bn., 10th Fld. Arty. "It's great for the guys in the barracks who can't get away to see their families for Christmas."

"I don't have a car or means of transportation, so this is about the only way I have a chance of seeing a game like this," said SP4 Raymond Botello of HHB, 2nd Bn., 10th Fld. Arty.

For some, seeing the Hawks play was a first time enjoyment.

"It's a great way to get out and see a ball game," said Sgt. George J. Dusel of HHC, 1st Bn., 58th Inf. "I've never seen the Hawks play, except on television.

The soldiers were treated to an exciting game,which ended in an overtime score of Hawks 140, Jazz 124.

New WIS gives up-to-date information to JCoS on worldwide unit readiness

American Forces Press Service

In a room that can't be penetrated by terrorists or even the most sophisticated electronic eavesdropping device, a small cadre of military and civilian technicians is preparing to test a system that will provide three- and four-star commanders with up-to-date readiness information on every unit in the world — instantly.

Known as the Worldwide Information System, the joint military service and DoD effort is expected to provide a modernized standard automated data processing capabiltiy for the nation's Worldwide Military Command and Control System — if all goes according to plan — by the mid to late 1990s.

"Standard" is the key word. Other and more specialized automated data processing support is used in support of the Worldwide Military Command and Control System, but that's another story.

The idea behind the Worldwide Information System effort is to help ensure that the National Command Authorities, the Joint Chiefs of Staff and commanders in chief of the unified and specified commands have worldwide information processing capabilities available to help decide about deploying conventional forces.

The Worldwide Information System will support deployment, employment and sustainment of conventional forces and provide critically needed crisis management and operational planning capabilities.

The project will combine state-of-the-art hardware and software with existing communication networks to increase war planning capabilities and to vastly increase the speed in which those plans are coordinated worldwide.

The electronic data base will resemble a massive filing system. It will hold the current readiness information on troops and equipment at every installation around the world.

The data base will be updated constantly through computer terminals placed in top secret facilities. The Department of Defense could purchase up to 40,000 terminals.

Wargaming and crisis planning are not easy. The number of command, control, communications and intelligence questions that need to be answered just for an operation on the scale of the raid on Libya would boggle the mind.

For example, detailed information concerning readiness once WIS is fully operational could occur as follows:

If one of 12 Air Force FB-111 fighter-bombers in England is taken out of service because its avionics package isn't working, that information is entered into the unit terminal, which is connected into the main data base.

If the Joint Chiefs of Staff needed 12 aircraft for a critical mission, they would know they would have to go elsewhere for the 12th aircraft.

Once the avionics package is fixed and the aircraft is available, the data base is updated.

With this kind of up-to-date information, crisis planning becomes extremely efficient, according to Air Force Col. Harry I. Gillogly III, director of the WIS systems program office at the Electronics Systems Division, Hanscom Air Force Base, Mass. If a military action were called for, the Joint Chiefs of Staff would know immediately what units and what equipment are ready and available.

Secretary of Defense Caspar W. Weinberger's annual report to the Congress noted that "Expedited, uninterrupted development of the WIS is particularly important to overcome the serious shortcoming of our present C3 (command, control, communications) capabilities for directing conventional forces."

How conventional forces will be used in any contingency is a subject under almost daily discussion. It's important to be able to effectively answer all the "what if?" questions dictated by today's world environment.

Using the current Worldwide Military Command and Control System, it takes up to two years to make changes to the U.S. and NATO war plans for the defense of Europe.

Major changes need to be coordinated between the services, other countries and the units involved.

Some units cannot be committed to two different areas at the same time.

Gillogly stated the $2 billion upgrade will make the war planning process more efficient. "The net result," he said, "will be better joint service war plans going to the Joint Chiefs of Staff."

When the Worldwide Information System is fully operational, changes to the European defense plan could be made in 90 days. "Our goal," he said, "is 45 days."

Much of the system's security is self-contained. In order to gain access, users must give appropriate identification. Once those credentials are checked by the computer, users will have to get additional authority to go into different parts of the data base.

"Commanders could be talking about and planning a military action using the system and if you didn't need to know about it, you wouldn't," said Gillogly. The security system will be set up to restrict access to different levels of classified information.

The first phase of the Worldwide Information System program, which provides its technical foundation, is scheduled for operational testing in 1989.

Save energy by saving water

By Becky Ray
Post Energy Office

When thinking of energy conservation, we most often think in terms of heating, air conditioning and electricity. Another area of concern for conservationists is the waste of water.

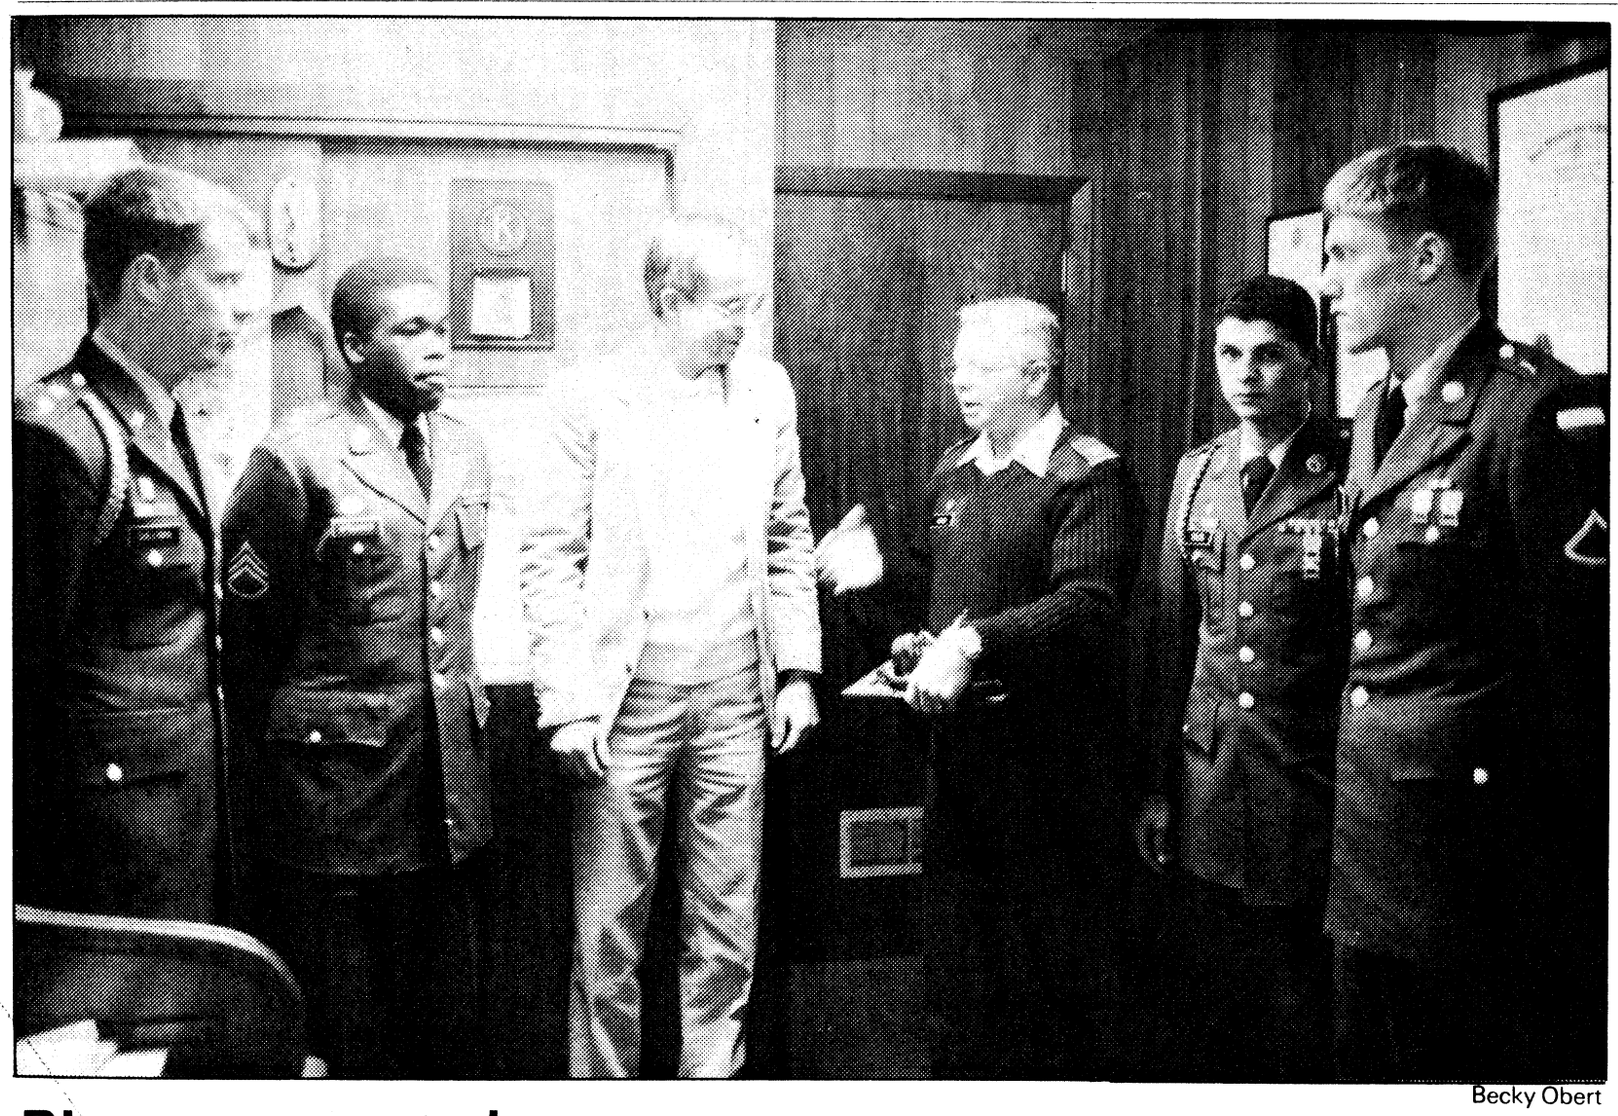
According to Mike Patton, foreman of the Water Treatment Facility on Fort Benning, state and federal regulatory agencies are insisting that all water treatment facilities develop conservation programs to promote the effective and efficient use of our water resources.

Fort Benning uses an enormous amount of treated water — an average of 8.6 million gallons per day in 1986. This water was produced at a cost of about 95 cents per thousand gallons. This cost includes capital investments and overhead costs, and the cost of the tremendous amount of electrical energy needed to produce the water.

Totaled, Fort Benning spent about $2,982,050 for water treatment in 1986. In 1987, operational changes and cooperation from post residents brought usage down to about 6.9 million gallons per day. However, much more effort is still needed to reduce consumption even further.

Everyone can cooperate by making small contributions toward conservation, such as turning taps off while brushing teeth or shaving and washing vehicles less often. Washing machines and dishwashers should be operated only with full loads.

Replacing washers in dripping faucets will also cut waste. Washers and replacement shower heads can be obtained through the Self-Helf Program located in building 385 on Vibbert Avenue.



One of the most common ways in which large amounts of water is wasted is in the excessive watering of lawns. The length and frequency of waterings should be kept to the minimum required to maintain the lawn. Waterings should be restricted to twice weekly for no more than four hours and should be done between the hours of 6 p.m. and 6 a.m.

Leaks are also a large source of waste. Leaking pipes can often be repaired by Preventive Maintenance personnel, but severe leaks from interior or exterior lines should be called in to the DEH Work Order Section, 545-2135.

Knowing the location of cutoff valves in buildings in case of severe water leaks can prevent property damage as well as water waste.

The cooperation of all individual users is needed to effect a successful water conservation program.

Savings will be realized not only in terms of the amount of water used but in electrical consumption and operational costs as well.

Infantry Marathon changes route

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Runners planning to run in the annual U.S. Army Infantry Marathon and Half-Marathon March 5 should start getting ready now. According to the race director, the course has been changed from last year and is much more challenging.

The marathon will begin near building 4, Infantry Hall, on Dixie Road and run one single loop, from Dixie to Sightseeing Road turning onto Sunshine Road down to Jamestown Road then onto 8th Division Road down to 1st Division and ending in front of Infantry Hall on Eckel Street.

The race is mostly a flat course but does have some rolling hills that will make it a little more interesting this year, according to the race director.

The half-marathon will have a turn-around point on Sunshine Road just prior to reaching Jamestown Road.

The race, sanctioned by the Athletic Congress and an official qualifier for national records and the Boston Marathon, was moved from its usual date because of cold weather experienced during previous January events.

Starting time for the events, which are open to both civilians and service members, will be at 9 a.m. for the marathon and 9:30 a.m. for a half-marathon. Runners may enter as individuals or five-man teams.

Entry fee is $10 for those pre-registering for the events by Feb. 5. Late registration up to five minutes before race time will cost $15. No fees are refundable, including the optional $5 fee for the March 4 "carbo supper" at the non-commissioned officers' club from 5-8 p.m. The first 400 applicants requesting to attend the supper will be assured a table place.

Entry forms may be picked up at most Fort Benning gyms. For additional information, contact the race director, (404) 544-4226, 544-4786 or 544-4946.

Greenwave Band plays Christmas concert

By T. Richard Cummings
Spencer High School

Vincent Rosse, director of the Spencer High Mighty Greenwave Band, invited his students to perform with his Benning Hills Elementary band students at their PTA Christmas Concert.

The beginning band volunteers from Spencer played the song "Jingle Bells" with the band at Benning Hills. Afterwards, the Spencer Symphonic Band volunteers performed a few favorite carols, rounding it out with "Silent Night."

The sixth-grade chorus performed last, singing several carols, including "Silent Night", which they sang first in English, then in Spanish.

Band performs in parade

Columbus held its annual Bi-City Christmas Parade Dec. 12. The parade, which began at 10 a.m. in Phenix City, included 13 high school bands, the 283rd Infantry Band, and 48 floats. There were also other entries in the parade, adding up to more than 100 participating groups from Columbus, Phenix City and surrounding towns.

Leading the parade were such dignitaries as the mayor of Columbus, the commanding general of Fort Benning, Miss Georgia and Miss Alabama.

About halfway through the parade, TV 9 cameras filmed the event for those not able to attend.

Benning Bass Club caps off 1987 season with banquet

By Richard P. Bennett
Bass Club

The Fort Benning Bass Club will cap off 1987 with their annual awards banquet and recognition of the club's "Fisherman of the Year."

The 1987 "Fisherman of the Year" was Bob Billman. He has coupled his skills and expertise with a little luck to win this award eleven times in the past thirteen years.

This award goes to the club member with the highest points total for the tournament year. Points are accumulated for attendance at the bi-monthly meetings, tournaments fished, weight of fish caught in sanctioned tournaments and fish released alive.

Also recognized were the remaining top ten fishermen for 1987: (2) Ben McGuire, (3) Pat Bennett, (4) Willie Goble, (5) Jack Tibbs Jr., (6) Dewey Hardison, (7) Skip Ray, (8) Jim Southern, (9) Lloyd Crow, and (10) Don Kimbrough.

The 1987 Big Fish Award went to Harry Hall who caught an eight-pound-three-ounce beauty in the April tournament.

The Bass Club begins the 1988 season with a tournament on Lake Harding Jan. 17. Anyone interested in club membership should attend one of the bi-monthly meetings (second and fourth Monday of each month) at 7:30 p.m. at the Hidden Door Club.

Sayers on running backs

By Gale Sayers
National Football Hall of Fame

Recently I was interviewed by Frank Gifford during the halftime of a Monday Night Football broadcast. We talked about great running backs and I gave my opinion that the top running back of all time was Jim Brown.

Fans love to debate who was the greatest player at each position. Naturally I've heard from some who would pick Tony Dorsett, O.J. Simpson, Walter Payton, or any one of several other fine running backs over Jim Brown.

It was a reminder to me that a lot of people just don't remember Jim Brown. If you are 30 years old today, Jim Brown quit playing when you were ten. Another factor is that because of expansion to cities and increased television coverage, the National Football League has attracted many new fans who never saw Jim during his great years with the Cleveland Browns.

When you consider the conditions Jim played under, his records are even more phenomenal. He played in an era where the defense's primary purpose was to stop the run first and the pass second. Today, it's the other way around and that helps the running back.

When Jim took a handoff he was likely playing on a frozen or muddy field. There were no domed stadiums or artificial turf fields back in the 1950s and 1960s. I feel the good track artificial turf provides adds 25 to 50 yards per game to a great running back's total.

Back then, the hash marks were out where the college hash marks are today. Officials spotted the ball on the hash marks, and there was always a short side of the field. Defense slanted to the wide side. You simply didn't run to the short side because the sideline is the best tackler a defense has going for it.

Jim ran from a split backfield where he started from about three yards behind the line of scrimmage. He didn't have the luxury of starting from seven yards deep, as in the "I" formation, and the advantage that gives you in picking your holes. And, of course, he played when the NFL season was just 12 games.

Even with those disadvantages, Jim set records that lasted for nearly two decades. He was that rare player who combined all the talents desired in a running back. He had moves and speed, and he also had the power to run over defenders.

Of today's running backs, I would choose Eric Dickerson of the Indianapolis Colts as the best of those still at the top of their game. Walter Payton, of the Indianapolis Colts, is the best of those still at the top of their game. Walter Payton, of the Bears, will be retiring this year after a great career and Tony Dorsett has had many fine years with Dallas. But there's no doubt in my mind that Jim Brown was the greatest of all time.

EDITOR'S NOTE: Gale Sayers is considered one of the greatest running backs of all time. The former Chicago Bear is a member of the National Football League's Hall of Fame.

Concharty Council of Girl Scouts shoots for 2,000 at annual Cookie Run

Concharty Council of Girl Scouts

The Concharty Council of Girl Scouts, Inc. will hold its eighth annual Cookie Run at Weracoba Park/Lake Bottom in Columbus Jan. 23.

"Last year, we had 1,500 runners turn out for the event," said Alice DeHoyos of the Concharty Council of Girl Scouts. "This year, we're shooting for 2,000."

"The outlook for making it to that mark is good," she said. "We're getting a lot of interest from many businesses and corporations that want to enter teams as well as many high schools and junior high schools."

The family-oriented event was started to encourage physical fitness among youths and provide a challenging winter activity for the community, according to Sally B. Lasseter, executive director.

Runners participate in the event from all over Georgia and Alabama, as well as the rest of the southeast.

The 5-mile run will start at 9:30 a.m. followed by the 1.5-mile handicapped-participation run at 10:30 a.m. and then, the 1.5-mile run at 11 a.m.

This year, there will be a 50-yard Tot Trot, for runners 4 years old and under, following the 1.5-mile run.

Units from Benning that field twenty or more runners pay $5 per person if pre-registered by Jan. 22. All members who register will receive a T-shirt. Units that register by Jan. 15 will have their T-shirts delivered to the units prior to the run.

For more information on the run and to register, call Alice DeHoyos, 327-2646.

If you're bumped by an airline, SJA has the answer

Staff Judge Advocate

Q: I am buying an airplane ticket and want to know what my rights are if I get bumped. Can I get my money back?

A: Airlines are regulated by the Department of Transportation, which requires that they ask for volunteers before they bump anyone.

Many airlines offer discounts or credits on future tickets to those who will volunteer to give up their seats. This could be to your advantage if you have time to spare.

Before you volunteer, though, be sure to see if your seat is confirmed on the next flight to keep you from being stranded. If you have to wait overnight, check to see if the airline will provide food and lodging.

If you don't want to be bumped, be sure to get to the gate early. When no one volunteers, the airlines usually bump on a first-come-first-served basis.

If you get bumped anyway, but end up at your destination within one hour of your original flight, the airlines are not required to compensate you for your inconvenience.

If you arrive between one and two hours late, you can get up to $200 in addition to the face value of your ticket. If the delay is longer than two hours, you can get up to $400 plus the cost of the ticket.

If you are traveling on orders and are asked to give up your seat, you may do so and keep the money given you as long as the delay does not affect the performance of your official duty nor cost the government any money.

You may not give up your seat if it will make you late signing in from leave or late reporting to a duty assignment. If you are involuntarily bumped you may not keep the money even if it does not interfere with your duties.

Airlines are attempting to avoid overbooking, but the situation does occasionally arise, especially during the holidays. Be sure to leave some leeway in your travel schedule and report any problems to the Department of Transportation.

Q: I recently moved into a new apartment and the utility companies each want me to make deposits before they will start my service. Can they do this?

A: A utility account is generally a credit account. You get service now and pay for it later.

Like any other creditor, a utility company keeps a credit history. New customers are frequently required to make a deposit or to get a letter of guarantee from someone who will agree to pay the bill if the customer does not.

The utility companies cannot discriminate against you, but they can require a deposit if you have a bad credit history or if they make it a policy to require a deposit from all new customers.

Whenever you are denied credit — including utility credit — you have the right to know the specific reason. Request that reason in writing. You also have the right to have your credit history reviewed and corrected if it contains false information.

If you still have problems, you should contact the Legal Assistance Office at 545-3281.

Front freezes post

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

A cold front brought rain and sleet to Fort Benning last week, resulting in the entire post closing down at noon Thursday.

According to TSgt Raymond Howetger, a weather forecaster with 5th Weather Detachment, the rain started at 8:45 a.m. followed by sleet at 10:42 a.m. This continued until 10:45 p.m. when the temperature dipped to 29 degrees Fahrenheit resulting in icy road conditions.

Because of the road conditions, post schools were closed the following day much to the delight of post youngsters who could be seen frolicking in the ice. Most soldiers and civilians didn't fare as well as they had to be at work by 9 a.m.

A military police spokesman said three accidents occured during that two-day period. All of the accidents were due to weather conditions. No injuries were reported.

Many people on post welcomed the extra time off with the exception of the hundreds of students at the U.S. Army Airborne School.

According to SFC Bert Darling, an operations sergeant with the school, students due to graduate that Friday were delayed over the weekend and were not able to complete their final jumps until Monday.

Darling added that they graduated soon afterward and were sent to their respective units.

Benning activities receive 'Excellence' recognition

By Becky Obert
Bayonet staff writer

Two Benning activities were awarded for their appearance recently by Training and Doctrine Command's Installation of Excellence Program.

Post commander, Maj. Gen. Kenneth C. Leuer presented awards to the U.S. Army Infantry School and the Military Police Activity, for winning in the best classroom and best visitor center categories, respectively.

According to John Baggett, deputy, Directorate of Engineering and Housing, Fort Benning competed in the large installation category, against Forts Leonardwood, Bliss, Knox, Jackson, Gordon and Sill.

All installations were evaluated on 20 areas, including such things as child care centers, barracks, chapels, dining facilities and family housing.

The philosophy behind the program is that people work better in an attractive setting, he said. "They have more pride in what they are doing if they're in a well maintained, well designed workplace."

Although the program does highlight winners in various categories, the thrust of the program is more "to be better than last year, but not as good as next year," Baggett said.

Despite cuts in budgets throughout the Department of Defense, he said the program could still work. "You might have fewer projects, but existing funds and U-Do-It Shop materials could be utilized," he said.

"We have to take the funds that we have and use them in a unified, constructive manner," he said. "The new Soldiers' Plaza is a good example. It is an old building that has been renovated, and furnished with old, redone furniture, which now is very attractive." Baggett emphasized that following the installation design guide can make renovations easier and more unified. "It doesn't cost any more to paint a building one color or another, so it is simple to check the design guide and follow its recommendations."

Next year, the post will be evaluated in the areas of barracks, child care centers, classrooms, community facilities, dining facilities, family housing areas, in-out processing, clubs, U-Do-It projects and centers, central issue facilities and overall appearance.

VA has new grave marker policy

Army News Service

The Veterans Administration has a new policy on branch of service inscriptions for veterans' grave markers and has issued new requirements for the delivery of all government-issued monuments.

The VA now provides inscriptions for all branches of service, on headstones and markers at government expense. Before the change, requests for multiple branch inscriptions were permitted below the last line of the authorized inscription, but only at private expense.

Also, the VA will deliver all grave monuments by private carrier. Applications must indicate a street address since post office box numbers cannot be used for shipping purposes. Stone monuments have traditionally been shipped by private carrier. New bronze markers will be handled the same way.

VA's Department of Memorial Affairs administers the National Cemetery System comprised of 110 national cemeteries in 38 states and Puerto Rico. Burial in a national cemetery with available grave space is open to all veterans discharged under conditions other than dishonorable discharge as well as eligible family members of veterans.

A government headstone or marker is furnished to mark the graves of veterans and their family members interred in national cemeteries and, upon request, to mark the graves of veterans interred in private cemeteries. In 1986, VA's Department of Memorial Affairs provided more than 246,600 monuments.

Drill sergeant duty offers women extra money, career enhancement

Army Personnel Bulletin

The Total Army Personnel Agency continues to seek female noncommissioned officers who have the mental and physical ability and sincere desire to be trained as drill sergeants.

Drill sergeant duty offers a female NCO the chance to earn as much as $220 extra per month and to enhance her career. Most importantly, it offers the opportunity to train, guide and permanently influence young recruits entering the Army today.

Drill Sergeant School is tough and demanding. The skills learned there are of value to all noncommissioned officers throughout their careers.

Female NCOs pass Drill Sergeant School at a higher rate than their male counterparts.

The Army authorizes female drill sergeants at 23 training centers and at the U.S. Army Correctional Activity Center at Fort Riley, Kan. At the present time, female drill sergeants are needed most at Fort Jackson, S.C. and Fort McClellan, Ala.

TAPA encourages all female NCOs to apply to be drill sergeants. However the greatest need is for females in career management fields 71, Administration; 76, Supply and Service; and 95, Military Police.

AR 641-200, Selection of Enlisted Soldiers for Training, paragraph 8-17, lists the qualifications required for Drill Sergeant School. Application procedures are in DA Pamphlet 600-8, Management and Administrative Procedures, procedure 3-34.

Female soldiers assigned overseas should ensure that they submit their applications at least eight months before completing their overseas tours.

Female NCOs who are interested in applying to be drill sergeants should contact their local personnel service centers for details and assistance. They may also call the TAPA Drill Sergeant Team at autovon 221-8070, commercial (202) 325-8070.

Holiday commemorates King, his achievements

Martin Luther King Jr., when he spoke at Republican Platform Committee session in San Francisco in 1963.

In a ceremony honoring King, Claire E. Freeman will speak in Marshall Auditorium Monday at 11 a.m.

Equal Opportunity Office

National holidays are declared to provoke unity among us as we rejoice and reflect a common interest in our nation. Our newest national holiday honoring Dr. Martin Luther King Jr., is designated the third Monday in January of each year. The "King" holiday commemorates the principles and humanitarian efforts of a man in pursuit of equality for all Americans.

As an American, Dr. King's commemoration is meaningful as it provides an opportunity for us to think about a unique form of patriotism; one that pruned our social and economical differences and made us a stronger multi-cultural nation.

Dr. King fought to eliminate the barriers of oppression, segregation and discrimination in these United States, which was eventually felt throughout the world.

His mission to promote liberty and justice for all Americans and to build a better society is the same mission that brought the founding fathers to our shores.

Like other American heroes, Dr. King's efforts opened the windows of our society when great phrases that justified rebellion in 1776 compelled a peaceful reformation in the 1960s.

One of Dr. King's greatest contributions is that he brought Americans an effective tool for making social, econmical and political changes. He emphasized "nonviolence," and he taught that meaningful changes could be attained through a peaceful revolution.

His advocacy of love, faith and abiding commitment to a principled cause, and the realization of targeted goals served as an inspiration for other groups attempting to influence and sensitize unyielding institutions.

Monday has been set aside to celebrate the life and dreams of Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. — a day to reaffirm the American

Subcommittee to discuss medical care availability

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

Availability of medical care for active duty military, retirees and their family members will be the subject of a House Armed Services Subcommittee meeting here Jan. 29.

Congressman Richard Ray, D-Ga., made the announcement to representatives of local retirees organizations on a visit here.

He said the Military Personnel and Compensation Subcommittee will hold the hearing in Marshall Auditorium, Infantry Hall, building 4 at 10 a.m.

The public is invited to attend, but since the hearings will be formal, only people serving on the panels will be allowed to participate. However, those wishing to make statements may do so in writing.

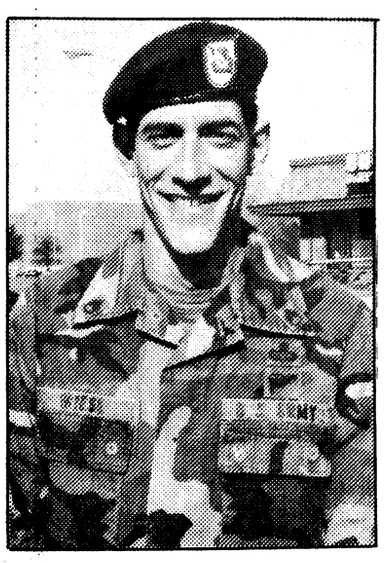
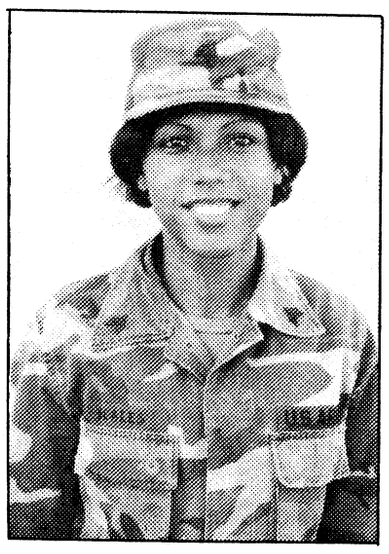
The letters must be legible and must include names and addresses.

Ray said "We want to hear about your problems so solutions can be found."



He noted that people who had an insight into military medical problems would be serving on one of the three panels.

The panels will consist of retirees, active duty military and the post and medical command commanders.



Those wishing more information about submitting testimonies can call 1-800-282-5007 or (404) 324-0292.

Southerners 'drive' Snively up wall

By Clyde Snively
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Mike Haskey

Motorist travels slowly along Victory Drive because of weather conditions recently.

"Wimps," was the first word to come to mind when I heard the announcement that schools would be closed in anticipation of a winter storm.

I was still muttering about the schools being closed as I drove to work on dry roads the next morning.

Finally, late in the morning, some white stuff, I hesitate to call it snow, did fall. It didn't take Fort Benning, state and local governments and most businesses long to announce early closings.

I was still pondering my good fortune of being let out early as I left late that afternoon in what I could describe as a little sleet falling and a slight buildup of slush on the roads.

It didn't take me long, though, before I had to acknowledge the wisdom of the school districts and the businesses for early closings.

Driving off post, it was like passing through a war zone -- cars scattered helter-skelter on and off the roadways. One car had even been abandoned by some frustrated driver in the middle of one of the lanes of traffic on I-185.

Dodging those cars that were still on the road was almost as much fun as getting out of Infantry Hall west parking lot at 5 p.m.

Only difference was that if you ever pull out of a parking space and get hit, you get a ticket, but on this day, I was to learn later, it was a freebie day. Hit someone and it was chalked up to "No charges, accident due to weather conditions."

That was right neighborly, I thought, but still wondered what happened to that term, "following too close for weather conditions."

Anyway, I could see that these folks need someone from up north to come down and give driving lessons.

I think instead of letting everyone go home early, they ought to make them report to some parking lot where they can practice skid control and learn that when the man says, "pump your brakes," that's what he means.

I realize it's difficult to take your foot off the brake to pump it as you rapidly skid towards someone's rear fender, but that's exactly what you need to do. Practice will teach this, just as it will teach the right way to turn when skidding, into the skid with rear-wheel-drive cars, in the direction you want to go with front-wheel-drive cars.

The caveat with front-wheel-drive cars, though, is you got to be accelerating. If you're braking, you won't do anything but continue to skid. Same if you are slowing to make a turn. Hit the brakes and you'll skid right on by the place you want to turn into.

You good old boys need to get yourselves some "good-old-boy snow tires" for your pickups like they do up north. And I'm not talking about those black, round rubber things. I'm talking about things like hunks of telephone poles, concrete blocks or sand bags to carry around in the bed of your pickup for extra traction.

Rear-wheel-drive passenger cars, especially station wagons, would do well to carry around some sand bags or concrete blocks for extra weight, traction, too.

The advantage of sand bags filled with sand (of course) or even kitty litter, is that if you go off the side of the road and need traction to get back on, you've got that sand or kitty litter to spread beneath your wheels.

Up north, where you can get caught in a white out and be stranded for hours, the locals always carry spare blankets, shovels, sand bags (filled with something), candy bars and candles.

It's something to think about if you're planning any trips north in the winter. By the way, winter, (are you 10th Mountain people listening?) can last from October into June, up there.

I suppose last week was winter for us down here. I guess I should just save this column for next winter?

Well, just in case we haven't seen the last of winter, remember, ease into stops and ease out of stops...Wait. I got a better idea. Just stay off the roads until they dry out again.

Training

1988 theme focuses attention on continuing Army strengths

Army News Service

"Training" was selected as the Army theme for 1988 as announced jointly on Dec. 14 by Secretary of the Army John O. Marsh Jr., and Army Chief of Staff Gen. Carl E. Vuono.

The text of the announcement follows: "Training is the Army theme for 1988. The yearly theme program has focused attention on the continuing Army strengths of winning spirit, physical fitness, excellence, families, leadership, values, and most recently, the constitution. These themes have contributed to the current positive momentum of the Total Army. Each of these Army strengths will support this year's focus on training.

"Quality training is essential for the Army to fulfill its fundamental mission: to deter war, or, if deterrence fails, to reestablish peace through victory on the battlefield. To accomplish this, we must provide our nation a Total Army - Active Forces, the Reserve Components, and civilians - trained to mobilize, deploy, fight and sustain combat operations with our sister and allied services anywhere in the world. Combat readiness is achieved by carefully planned and effectively presented training. Outstanding training and education must be experienced by soldiers in basic training: by cadets in OCS, ROTC, and USMA Commissioning Programs, by military and civlian students in every classroom of the Army school system. These positive experiences must continually be sustained in units throughout the Total Army.

"Training must focus on individuals, units and their leaders."

"Individual training must develop soldiers who are disciplined, physically tough and highly motivated. They are the cutting edge of our combat power.

Since training is the single endeavor where a majority of soldiers' time is spent during an Army career, the noncommissioned officer plays an especially important role in preparing soldiers who are skilled in their jobs and developed to the full extent of their capabilities.

"Unit training must be realistic to prepare our forces for the rigors of the battlefield. We must train the way we intend to fight. The commander must seek every opportunity to develop teamwork from buddy teams to combined arms teams to the unified action of several services or nations. Rehearsed teamwork is essential. Safety in training is always a vital goal.

"Leader training is an imperative for every echelon of military and civilian supervisors.This training pays dividends in providing a common basis of understanding and is an investment in our own future as we develop the leaders of tomorrow.

"Training requirements and techniques may differ among the active, Reserve, and civilian components of the total Army. The challenge is twofold: first, to exchange the most effective training methods and programs across the total force; second, to ensure that all components strive to meet the same Army-wide standard.

"The standards that guide our training must reflect the requirements of the battlefield. Leaders are responsible for the establishment of unit standards and a continual assessment to ensure the desired objectives are being met. This is a vital aspect of a winning training philosophy.

"Trainers must use every training resource with imagination. The effective use of simulations, simulators and training devices will not only conserve taxpayer dollars but, also, provide a high priority for our research and development community. Each of us must get the most training value out of every training opportunity.

"Training is our top priority - it is the cornerstone of combat readiness."

ACS kicks off the year with new slogan, image

By Sharon Reynolds
Bayonet staff

When entering Army Community Service, a sign proudly proclaims "The soldier is not an interruption of our business. The soldier is our business."

But ACS takes that concept a step further — the services provided are not only for soldiers but, more often, for their families as well.

"If a soldier has a problem at home, his mind is definately not going to be on his job," said Carla Cary, ACS director. "If there is stress at home, he's not going to be at his best."

"ACS is no longer a bunch of ladies stuffing envelopes."

ACS helps get rid of potential and already existing problems so soldiers can concentrate on their jobs, Cary said. ACS's new theme, "ACS: where people and solutions come together," projects the agency into the 1990s, according to Cary.

"ASC is no longer a bunch of ladies stuffing welcome packets," she said. "It's where viable programs come together."

ASC is a multi-faceted agency looking out for soldiers and their families in times of emergency. It offers assistance that helps the soldier and family through the rough times. Cary said ACS is trying to get away from the reaction mode by gearing several programs toward prevention.

The most prominent agency under ACS is Army Emergency Relief located at Soldiers' Plaza, building 2634 in Splinter Village. AER makes funds available to soldiers in the form of loans and grants when circumstances beyond families' control arise. This relief is available 24 hours per day.

"We don't want people to feel like they're coming in asking for a handout."

When, because of lack of funds, a family faces problems such as being evicted, having utilities disconnected or even going without food for several days, AER can provide assistance, but only if families are willing to ask for that assistance.

"We don't want people to feel like they're coming in asking for a handout," she said. "Anyone who comes in will be treated with privacy, respect and dignity by professionals, and I want to stress, dignity."

However, Cary added that AER is not a loan company. It's reserved for bona fide emergency situations. For instance, she said, if soldiers want to borrow money so they can buy Christmas presents, that's not considered an emergency.

Problems vary from family to family, so assistance is determined on a case-by-case basis.

Often families are faced with "more month than money." That's where the emergency food locker comes into play. Families can get a three-day supply of food to tide them over until payday. This service is located in building 2634. Also located in this building is the Lending Closet, which has items such as irons, pots and pans, eating utensils and dishes that can be signed out for 30 days by families needing these items.

The Welcome Center is another facet of ACS. It offers valuable information and relocation assistance about Fort Benning to newly assigned soldiers. Welcome packets and orientation briefings are available on request. It also has information available about other Army posts for those being reassigned.

One agency under ACS that is geared toward "prevention" is the Consumer Affairs and Financial Assistance Program located in building 2640, Splinter Village. Budget counselors assist soldiers and their family members in setting realistic financial goals. People are encouraged to plan ahead in order to use money wisely.

For those who don't use their money wisely and have already built up debts beyond their means, the Debt Liquidation Program may be the answer. In this program, counselors work with both families and creditors to come up with an acceptable payment plan that will allow families to meet payments and also keep creditors satisfied.

Classes on financial budgeting are also available for unit briefings. These classes may be scheduled by calling 545-5516.

Today, more spouses than ever are seeking employment to help make ends meet. But an Army career requires moving every three or four years, making it difficult to find employment. The Family Member Employment Assistance Program works with spouses and local organizations to help family members find employment. Workshops are scheduled continually on various subjects that might assist spouses seeking employment. And, the FMEAP manager keeps in constant contact with organizations regarding job opportunities available in the area. The FMEAP continually searches for new avenues to Cold weather doesn't stop 36th Eng. Grp.

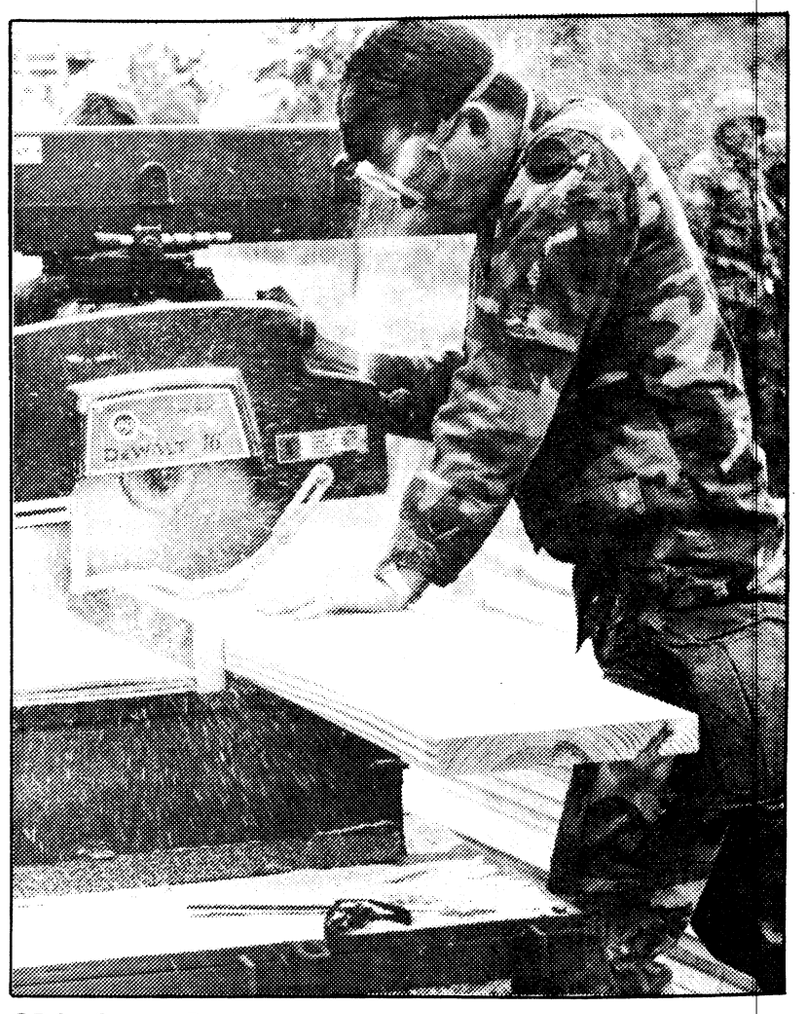
By Shawn Bryson
36th Engineer Group correspondent

Last week's ice storm caused the majority of the Columbus and Fort Benning area businesses and schools to close shop early for fear that driving conditions would worsen as the storm gained momentum.

As most people were settling into their warm, dry homes to wait out the storm, the soldiers of Alpha Company, 43rd Engineer Battalion, 36th Engineer Group were enduring the cold as they strived toward the completion of their latest construction project.



On Jan. 3, the 43rd Eng. Bn. went on alert with a mission to upgrade an existing strongpoint in support of the 75th Ranger Regiment, according to SFC Robert Hammel, a 36th Eng. Grp. construction noncommissioned officer.

After receiving the mission, the commander of the 43rd, Lt. Col. Charles Rust, gave the mission to ACE soldiers and an Emergency Deployment Readiness Exercise was under way, according to Hammel.

According to 2nd Lt. Patricia A. Bergin, 1st Platoon leader, the ACE soldiers convoyed 45 miles to the project located in the northeast corner of Fort Benning at Box Spring and Rindhart roads.

"Our mission involved several projects. Earth moving platoon built a six-foot-tall birm around the base camp's Tactical Operations Center and a hull-down defilade for a ten-pack van," Bergin said. She added that the earth movers also cleared an area for a helicopter landing zone.

While the earthmovers were busy operating their dozers, scrapers and graders, the vertical-construction platoons had their hands full as well.

SP4 Sean Burke cuts a board to be used in the construction of a command bunker.

One of the vertical platoons constructed a command bunker and set up a triple standard concertina-wire barrier around the base camp Bergin said.

Bergin explained that 1st Platoon spent the majority of its work days at building 1697 on main post as they continued to renovate the building for the Department of Resourse Management during the EDRE.

Bergin explained that the whole exercise was extremely good training for the ACE soldiers because it encompassed most of the aspects of an engineer company including a deployment, company defense operations, general engineer operations and sustaining operations in the rear.

According to Capt. S.W. Winbush, ACE commander, the actual construction projects weren't difficult ones. However, performing them in seemingly arctic weather and under tactical conditions was a real challenge for the ACE soldiers, Winbush added.

To top off the four-day EDRE, the Alpha soldiers performed a night move and convoyed back to the garrison on the very night of the ice storm Winbush said.

"The convoy home was a slow one because of the road conditions, poor visibility and size of some of our equipment," Winbush said. "The trip home took approximately five hours, but the soldiers gained an invaluable experience from the convoy."

Despite the weather, the ACE soldiers were successful in their mission and completed the project nearly three days ahead of their deadline.

ITC gets new commander

By Marsha Santiago
ITC correspondent

An ice storm changed the location, but did not cancel the ceremony for the United States Army Infantry Training Center change of command last Thursday.

In a ceremony moved from Wetherby Field to Marshall Auditorium, Infantry Hall, building 4, Col. Richard S. Siegfried relinquished command of the USAITC to Col. Victor E. Stamey.

Following the change of command, Siegfried was frocked with his first general's star, promoting him to brigadier general.

Siegfried leaves Fort Benning to become assistant division commander for maneuvers at the 5th Infantry Division, Fort Polk, La. His name was placed on the brigadier general list in July 1987.

A native of Elizabeth City, N.C., Siegfried had commanded ITC since August 1986. He first served as interim commander while retaining command of the 2nd Infantry Training Brigade and in January 1987 was named ITC commander.

Stamey, current 2nd ITB commander, will serve as ITC commander on an interim basis until a permanent commander is named He will also retain command of the 2nd ITB.

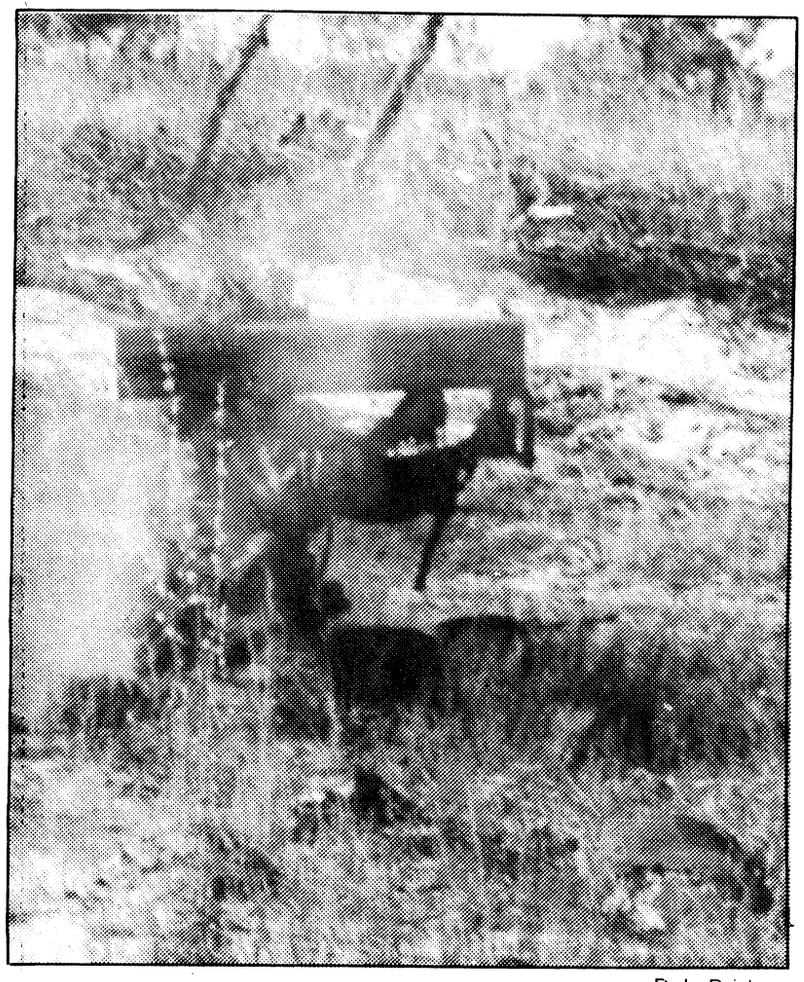
Finance sets up field shop to pay soldiers

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

215th Finance Support Unit set up shop outside Company C, 1st Battalion, 507th PIR to pay soldiers for the holidays.



What was unique is they paid them out of a tent, complete with concertina wire, M-16 rifles and while wearing full combat gear.

According to the unit's noncommissioned officer in charge, SFC William Smith, his unit had two missions last week. One was to pay the Airborne students, and the other was to set up a finance field site.

"We decided we would combine the two missions," Smith said.

He said it took them two hours to set up the field site to pay the more than 650 soldiers before Christmas.

2nd Bn, 18th Inf conducts squad training exercise

By D. L. Bridges
2nd Battalion, 18th Infantry

The 2nd Battalion, 18th Infantry recently conducted squad training exercises at Fort Benning.

"It was great training for the squad leaders," said 1st Lt. David Culp, Co. D, executive officer. "It gave them time to practice troop leading procedures and then perform under the stress of the live-fire lanes. The squad leaders are the ones who make it happen when there's a mission to accomplish, and they need the experience."

Squads were required to maneuver to an objective in their lane and react to obstacles such as indirect enemy fire and concertina wire barriers.

"The training tested the soldiers' technical proficiency in negotiating the lanes, and we threw them a few curves to check their reactions," said Culp. "This is the first time we've done this where it was the squad leader's show. Everyone is already excited about doing the upcoming platoon training exercise in February."

The 3rd Squad, 2nd Platoon of Company A won the "Best Squad" trophy following a competition held at the end of the exercise.

Quartermaster cooks visit to teach new techniques to food specialists

By Kevin J. Howerton
197th Infantry Brigade correspondent

Food service specialists from the 197th Infantry Brigade, the 155th Armor Brigade (Mississippi National Guard) and the 156th Infantry Brigade (Louisiana National Guard) learned about new equipment and techniques for preparing meals in the field. With the help of instructors from the Quartermaster Cooks School at Fort Lee, Va., the cooks became acquainted with the new Combat Field Feeding System.

"This system can do the same job with less personnel because of better equipment," said SFC Charles K. Drake, a trainer with the Quartermaster Cooks School.

SFC Drake went on to explain that the Combat Field Feeding System has three parts, a portable sanitation center, a Mobile Kitchen Trailer and Kitchen-Company Level Field Feeding System.

"The big advantage to the new system is mobility," said SFC Dawn Evans, the Separate Units dining facility manager. "The MKT can be towed by a 2½-ton truck, and four people can set it up in less than 30 minutes."

The MKT is capable of feeding 250 soldiers on the A rations (fresh food) and 300 troops on the T rations (packaged meals).

Kevin J. Howerton

Cooks from the 197th Inf. Bde. prepare T-rations on a Kitchen-Company Level Field Feeding System.

"The MKT also has more equipment than the old kitchen tents, such as a built-in grill," said SFC Evans. "Except for braising, you can cook anything here that can be prepared in a regular mess hall."

Some of the food service specialists at the site were already familiar with the MKT.

"I worked with the MKT while I was stationed in Germany," said Sgt. Clarence M. Chandler of HHC, 2nd Bn., 69th Armor. "There is less friction among the personnel with the MKT setup. It has a good floor plan where everything is easily accessible to the cooks; it's very labor saving."

There were still new techniques to learn even for those who had already worked with the MKT.

"This is the first time I've ever seen two MKTs hooked together," said Sgt. Chandler. "This increases the feedng capacity to 700, which is outstanding for feeding a nice-sized battalion.

The 197th Infantry Brigade is currently being issued MKTs for all its units.

Social security numbers required

By Jeffery T. Kipi
Staff Judge Advocate

The Tax Reform Act of 1986 requires every person in the United States, whether employed or not, age five or older to have a social security number before that person can be claimed as a dependent on a tax return.

Any one who claims a child over the age of five as a dependent on their tax return must list that child's social security number on the return.

Children claiming parents as dependents must likewise list the parent's social security number on the tax return.

If the social security number of the person being claimed as a dependent is not included on the tax return then the deduction for that dependent will not be allowed.

To obtain a social security number for yourself or your child you can go to the nearest Social Security office and fill out the application, Form SS-5.

The nearest Social Security office to Fort Benning is located in downtown Columbus on Third Avenue and 15th Street (1520 3rd Ave.).

You must bring a certified copy of the person's birth certificate and some other type of identification for that person, such as a driver's license, U.S. passport, voter registration card or copy of your armed forces discharge.

For a child this other type of identification can be a school report card or the child's shot record.

You will also need to have something to prove your relationship to the child. Usually this requirement is satisfied by the birth certificate.

You can also apply for a social security number by mail. Simply write the nearest Social Security office for Form SS-5 and answer the questions on the form. When you return the form attach a certified copy of the birth certificate and the second piece of identification.

Mail the form and attachments to the Social Security office and within five weeks you should receive a social security number by return mail.

Remember that it is required by law that you obtain a social security number for your children over five and for anyone who will be claimed as a dependent on your tax return.

The IRS will forgive you, for one year only, for listing dependents on your 1987 tax return without their social security numbers, but only if you attach a note explaining that you have applied for the numbers.

Don't wait — applying for a social security is not difficult to do and it is necessary in order for you to be able to claim the deductions on your tax return to which you are entitled.

ASK THE JUDGE

By Dennis Brower
Staff Judge Advocate's Office

Q: I was thinking of buying a new car, but the salesman says that leasing a car is financially better for me since I won't have to pay a down payment. What is the best choice for me?

A: Leasing automobiles has recently become a large business with many car dealers urging leasing over sales. The dealers stress that you don't have to pay any down payment, you may not have to insure it, pay mainteance expenses or worry about selling it when the lease expires.

Some of these reasons may be true, but often a leased car is not a very good idea for soldiers.

Although a leased car requires no down payment, you usually pay as much, or more, in monthly payments as you would for a new car.

However, you do not own the car, it remains owned by the dealer. You cannot sell it or trade it in on another vehicle unless the dealer agrees.

If you get in financial trouble with the payments you cannot sell the car. If you turn the car back to the dealer before the end of the lease you will be liable for the rest of the payments.

Also, many leases don't allow for permanent movement out of the country. Alaska and Hawaii are considered to be overseas under many of these agreements. If you were to be transferred overseas, you might not be able to take the car, but you would still be liable for all payments.

You must also pay ad valorem taxes on leased cars as you are not the legal owner and therefore not protected under the Soldiers' and Sailors' Civil Relief Act.

Although it is usually easier to lease a vehicle than buy one, the overall deal is almost always worse.

Before leasing a vehicle, you should ask questions about the above problems and questions about security deposits, regular monthly payments, license fees, registration, taxes, service fees and insurance cost.

Most of all, you should have the legal assistance office review the completed contract before you sign it. We can show you what your real expense would be and the advantages and disadvantages.

If the dealer won't let you take a completed lease for legal review, then the dealer is not reputable, and you shouldn't sign it.

For more information, contact the legal assistance office at 545-3281.

Policy is changing smoking habits

By Becky Obert
Bayonet staff writer

It's been nearly two years since the Department of Defense banned smoking in the workplace, and statistics show that the policy is changing peoples' smoking habits.

In 1985, 52 percent of soldiers smoked. As of October 1987, that figure had dropped to 41 percent. In addition, tobacco sales in commissaries and post exchanges dropped 18 percent from November 1986 to October 1987.

The decision to restrict smoking was based on hard medical facts. "Medical evidence shows overwhelmingly that the use of tobacco products adversely impacts on the health and readiness of our force," said a proclamation issued jointly by Secretary of the Army John O. Marsh and then Army Chief of Staff Gen. John A. Wickham Jr.

"Tobacco use impairs such critical military skills as night-vision, hand-eye coordination and resistance to cold weather injuries. Moreover, it increases susceptibility to disease," the proclamation stated.

In June 1986, the Army issued its own policy, setting the standard of a smoke-free environment, discouraging smoking and supporting abstinence.

Fort Benning's policy letter prohibits smoking inside all buildings on post, except in areas that are designated for smoking.

However, those areas must be sufficiently separated from the non-smoking workplace so that non-smokers will not suffer from secondhand smoke.

Further, smoking areas cannot be designated in auditoriums, conference rooms, classrooms, restrooms, gymnasiums, fitness centers or elevators, and smoking is prohibited in all military vehicles and aircrafts.

Students at DoD schools are barred from smoking on school grounds, and smoking by adults in these facilities is limited to designated smoking areas that are out of sight of the children.

Health care providers are not allowed to smoke in the presence of patients and child care and youth activity employees cannot smoke in front of the children, but only in smoking areas that are out of sight of the children.

As always, smoking is prohibited where it presents a safety hazard, in places such as firing ranges, ammunition storage areas, fuel pumps, motor pools and equipment maintenance shops.

Persons who violate this policy are subject to punishment by administrative action and can be removed from or denied access to buildings at Fort Benning.

About 30 percent of the general population smokes, and Army officials would like to see their service's smoking population drop to that level, said Yvonne Lisenbigler, chairperson of the Tobacco Cessation Task Force.

To help reach this goal, the Army offers help to smokers who want to quit. Martin Army Community Hospital regularly offers stop-smoking clinics through its Cardiology Department. If you're interested, call 544-1221.

MPI duties explained

By Wendell D. Choate
Provost Marshal's Office

The function of the Military Police Investigation section at Fort Benning is both complex and vital to the law enforcement mission. This section is responsible for investigating all misdemeanor offenses and some felony offenses.

The most frequently investigated cases are larcenies, simple assaults and damages to property under $250. The MPI section has responded to or investigated over 100 incidents of larceny during the first quarter of fiscal year '88.

The incidents investigated most by the MPI section are larcenies, damages/vandalism and simple assault; however, more should be discussed concerning the areas of larcenies, ie. private property, government property and NAF property.

There have been 312 reported larcenies at Fort Benning for the first quarter of fiscal year '88. Of these larcenies, approximately 75 percent of the property was left unsecure. Purses, bicycles, jewelry, money and even unsecure automobiles afforded the thief an excellent opportunity to steal. If the opportunity is removed, the chances of theft occurring are greatly reduced.

The MPI section has several resources available to assist in the investigation process. MPI works jointly with the Fort Benning Criminal Investigation Division and civilian authorities, exchanging criminal information daily.

Bonds bring in 7.17 percent

U.S. Savings Bonds

The semiannual market-based interest rate for Series EE Bonds issued between Nov. 1, 1987, and April 30, 1988, is 7.17 percent for their initial semiannual interest period. The current minimum rate is 6 percent for bonds held at least five years.

The semiannual rate changes each May and November, based on market averages during the preceding six months.

When ten or more semiannual interest rates make up the cumulative rate, it is rounded to the nearest quarter percent and compounded semiannually to determine the interest rate and investment yield since the start of the market-based rate program for Bonds in each issue period.

Series EE Bonds issued before November 1982, and all Series E bondsand Saving notes still earning interest, are recieving market-based rates as they reached their first interest accrual on or after November 1987. These rates are used to calculate the redemption values of eligible bonds for interest accrual dates occurring between November 1987 and April 1988. Future rates at redemption will reflect changes in the cumulative rate.

Series EE Savings Bonds purchased since November 1, 1982, and held five years or longer earn the average of semiannual market-based rates during the holding period (rounded to the nearest quarter percent) or the minimum rate in effect at the time of purchase, whichever is higher. The minimum rate is subject to change for future issues if market conditions warrant. Bonds outstanding at the time of any change retain their previous guarantees to original, or next extended, maturity.

TIC credit union makes donation

By Mary Strickland
Installation coordinator for EFMP

This holiday season was made a happy one for several families who might otherwise have had little to be happy about. The holiday spirits involved in bringing this happiness were the employees and board members of The Infantry Center Federal Credit Union.

TIC Federal Credit Union, chartered in March 1956, by civilian employees at Fort Benning, and joined by the military members when they became eligible in October 1965, operates with the motto "Credit Unions are People Helping People". They certainly proved this in their efforts during the holidays. Mary R. Dove, general manager, thought it would be nice if TIC helped a family during this special time of the year. Sheila Downs, Myra Wiese, and Dale Vann organized and gathered items donated by the members and employees at Thanksgiving and Christmas.

Boxes were placed in the lobby of the Fort Benning Offices and the Peachtree branch. Jennifer Grube and Myra Wiese designed posters to inform the members of the special effort and decorated the boxes used to collect the donations.

At Thanksgiving, the Peachtree branch donated their box to the Valley Rescue Mission in Columbus, with the Fort Benning branch donating their collection to Army Community Service for a military family.

At Christmas, the elves got busy again. Both branches combined their food and gifts, donating them to a military family, again through ACS. In addition to an excellent holiday meal (several, in fact), there were toys, gifts, clothing for the children and even some cash to make the season brighter.

It was truely gratifying to see 100 percent participation among all the employees and board members in this project. TIC is indeed a credit union of People Helping People. Their generous spirit is a true indication of the spirit of the season and their dedication to give back to the community as they prosper.

The Peachtree branch of TIC brought a large van full of food, clothing and toys to ACS Dec. 21 for presentation to the selected family.

The family was spending their first real Christmas together, due to overseas tours and moves. They had two children, one of which was severely handicapped. The mother cried as she realized just what these gifts would mean to her family. It is indeed a joy to know that such love and care for someone you have never met exists. This makes Fort Benning a very special place.

REENLIST.
BE ALL YOU CAN BE.

"WE FEEL GOOD ABOUT LEAVING JAMAHL AT THE DAY-CARE CENTER BECAUSE THEY TREAT HIM LIKE HE'S THEIR OWN CHILD."

SSG Ken and SP4 Jacquie Farmer

"We never really considered leaving Jamahl with anyone except a private sitter. But our first visit to the new Child Development Center here at Fort Hood sure changed our minds.

"We know our son is well taken care of. So we can concentrate on our jobs without worrying about what he's doing.

"He learns, instead of just playing. He counts, sings, says his ABC's. And they teach him to be more independent.

"Jacquie and I have peace of mind when Jamahl's at the Center. They take care of him, and he's learning, and those are the two most important things."

The Army's Day-Care programs are making modern day-care facilities available to more children each day. And the quality of the "Caregivers" who attend the children has never been higher. It's all part of the Army Family Action Plan in action.

ARMY FAMILY.
BE ALL YOU CAN BE.

ACS

promote its clients and market their importance and value as employees.

To help out, ACS instituted the Family Member Employment Assistance Program located in room 128 of building 35. This program offers several forms of assistance to help spouses find employment.

The Army Family Advocacy Program is another agency that is ready to help families: Emergency Foster Care provides temporary care for children who cannot be cared for by their natural families.

The Battered Wives' Shelter provides shelter for abused wives and their children. The shelter will provide care for abused wives of active duty and retired personnel.

Support is available on a short-term counselor to families with marital difficulties and referrals can be made for long-term counseling. These ACS services are available to all active duty and retired military members and can be requested by calling 545-7517.

After duty hours, Wives' Shelter or Foster Care can be reached by calling 545-5223/3214.

Another area of ACS is The Exceptional Family Member Program, also located in building 2634. The mission of EFMP is to ensure that families with members who have one of a number of disabilities receive the services necessary to meet their basic needs. Included in these services is Camp Smiley, an annual day camp for handicapped children that provides four, two-week sessions for 25 children each session.

Also under EFMP is Parent to Parent. This program offers parents an opportunity to get emotional support and understanding from other families with disabled family members. The group meets weekly in the EFMP building under the leadership of a graduate student from Georgia State University.

Short-term counseling is also available to families experiencing difficulties related to their exceptional family member. Referrals are made for long-term counseling.

ACS wouldn't be half of what it is without volunteers.

With all the agencies that are available, ACS wouldn't be half of what it is now without the time donated by volunteers, Cary said.

In fact, Cary says ACS couldn't work at all without volunteers. However, volunteering is time well spent, according to Cary. Volunteers receive valuable work experience that can be useful if they choose to apply for a paying job later. Volunteers assist in all areas of ACS.

ACS continues into 1988 making changes to fit the various needs of today's Army families. In future issues of the Bayonet, each of the programs that comes under the direction of ACS will be covered more thoroughly in an effort to help ACS bring "people and solutions together."

As we commemorate the life and various contributions of Dr. Martin Luther King Jr., I am sure that there are various interpretations and meanings that he had with each of us.

To some, he was a radical leader, one who caused social unrest. To some, he was a political leader, one who moved too fast for his time, one who wanted to rock the boat.

He was one of the few men who could go to a town, and the mayor would have to bring out all of his forces because some saw him as a troublemaker.

Then there were those who saw him from a different perspective. They saw him as a chosen Messiah, a true leader, one who gave sight to the blind through the eyes of hope, one who unstopped deaf ears with his words of wisdom, one who helped the lame to get up and walk with the crutches of faith and understanding, one who had the key of deliverance, who was able to open the prison door and set free those who were bound to prejudice, hatred, misunderstandings and hypocrisy.

History has always tried to identify certain individuals, who best exemplified the spirit of its age, and Martin Luther King Jr. was chosen to be one of the representatives of the 20th century. He represented an age of hope, a time of liberation, a time of freedom and justifiction when each person would have the opportunity to use his God given rights. He represented not only a particular race, but humanity itself.

The two words that I feel best describe the life and mission of King were love and unity. He, like so many other great patriots, got a glimpse of a vision from God, and in that vision, he saw that the qualities of life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness were attributes that described the love of God for humanity.

Dr. King did not really introduce anything new to society, for certainly the words love and unity are as old as civilization itself. We have always tried to describe the problems of our society and then prescribe certain perscriptions for its healing and reconciliation.

Our world, our country, our communities have always had a dream of peace, of liberation, of freedom for all its people. Before Martin Luther King Jr. had appeared on the scene, the Declaration of Independence said that "We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their creator with certian unalienable rights, that among these are life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness." Dr. King sought to make those qualities of life a reality for all of God's people.

King, being a country preacher, sought to be an instrument in the hands of God to help heal the broken conditions of our society. In a world of hatred and all kinds of inhumane ways, Martin Luther King Jr. sought to follow in the footprints of Jesus, and his main theme was love ye one another, even as God has loved us all.

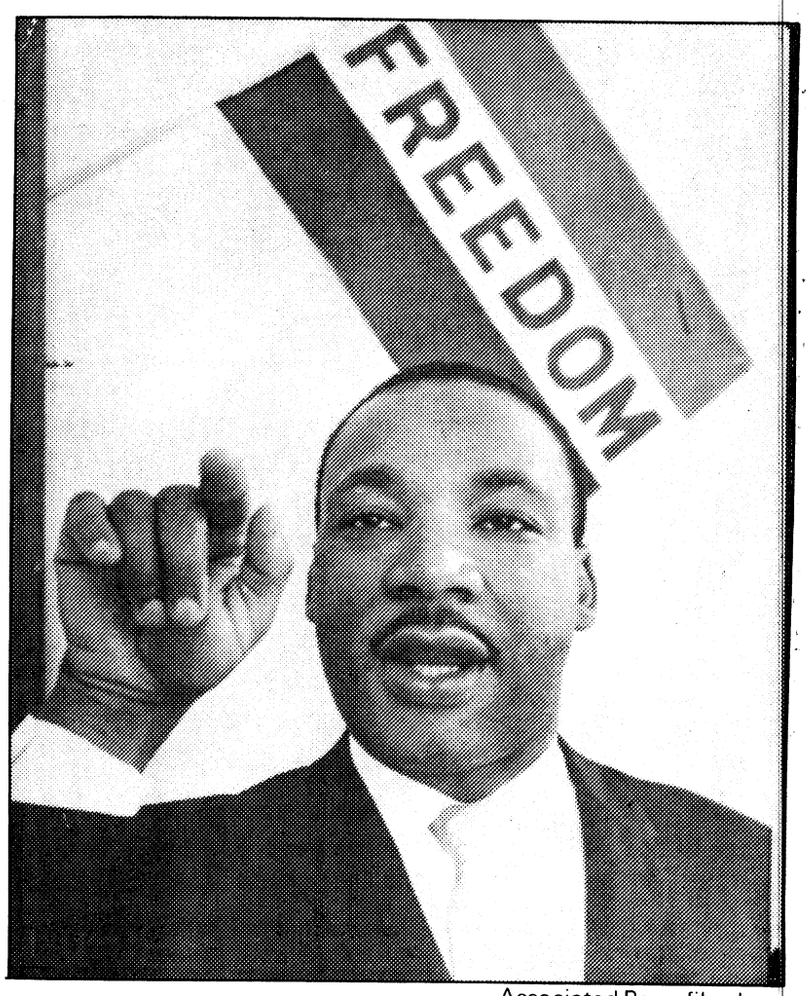
He sought to expose to all humanity the value of life. He believed that life should be strong and complete on every side. He saw life in three dimensions. Its length, breadth, and height. The length of life is the inward drive to achieve one's personal ends and ambitions and inward concern for one's own welfare and achievements. The breadth of life is the outward concern for the welfare of others and the height of life is the upward reach for God.

Life at its best is a coherent triangle. At one angle is the individual person. At the other angle are other persons. At the tip-top is the Infinite Person, God. Without the due development of each part of the triangle, no life can be complete. So this is the dream — bringing God to Man — Man to God — Man to Man.

Martin Luther spoke to America about war and peace; about social justice and racial discrimination; about its obligation to the poor and about nonviolence as a way of perfecting social change in a world of brutality and war.

He was a man who believed with all of his might that the pursuit of violence at any time is ethically and morally wrong, that God and the moral weight of the universe are against it; that violence is self-defeating; and that only love and forgiveness can break the vicious circle of revenge.

He believed that non-violence would prove effective in the abolition of injustice in politics, economics, education and in race relations.



He was convinced that people could not be moved to abolish voluntarily the inhumanity of man to man by mere persuasion and pleading, but they could be moved to do so by dramatizing the evil through massive nonviolent resistance.

He believed that nonviolent direct action was necessary to supplement the nonviolent victories won in the federal courts.

He believed that the nonviolent approach to solving social problems would ultimately prove to be redemptive.

Martin Luther King Jr. believed in a united America; he believed that the walls of separation brought on by legal and de-facto segregation, and discrimination based on race and color, could be eradicated.

He had faith in this country. He died striving to desegregate and intergrate America to the end that this great nation of ours, born in revolution and blood, conceived in liberty and dedicated to the proposition that all men are created free and equal, will truly become the light-house of freedom, where our nation will be militarily strong but perpetually at peace; economically secured but just; learned but wise; where the poorest will have bread enough to spare; where no one will be poorly housed, each educated up to his capacity. This was his dream, and the end toward which he strove.

History's gifted black preachers struggled

Blacks sought own congregations and religious freedom to minister

Susan G. Foster
Smithsonian News Service

Until the late 1700s, religious worship for blacks in this country was restricted — by law and by social custom — to either segregated sections of white churches or to separate black churches under the guidance of white ministers.

Despite untold numbers of gifted black preachers, both male and female, none could boast a congregation or church to which he or she could minister.

For years, Colonial black Philadelphians had worshipped with whites in St. George's Methodist Church, enduring not only the indignities of racism from the community at large but similar treatment from fellow parishioners. Then in 1792, the catalyst for a complete break from St. George's Church and a victory for religious freedom came in one highly charged moment.

The charge would have a profound impact on American society, from the founding of church-supported schools and universities open to blacks, to the civil rights leadership of the 1960s offered by Dr. Martin Luther King Jr., to the basic freedoms that blacks now share with other Americans.

Philadelphian Richard Allen, a black Methodist preacher, had often talked of a separate church with his colleague Absalom Jones, a former slave with a devotion to the black community. Yet their plan lacked support. As an alternative, in 1787 the two formed The Free American Society, a non-sectarian group aimed at fostering moral character and helping fellow members in need. The society also served to unify blacks against injustices at St. George's.

One Sunday morning, white parishioners tried to forcibly remove Allen, Jones and others from a restricted area during prayer services. Their resistance to moving to the rear of the church culminated in a mass walkout by black worshippers.

They never returned. Within two years, Allen was preaching regularly in his own church, Mother Bethel, located in a converted blacksmith shop. Although Allen remained a Methodist minister, Jones' disillusionment deepened. He never returned to Methodism, founding instead St. Thomas Episcopal Church for blacks.

What Allen and Jones accomplished through their simple act of protest soon reached black communities in other Eastern cities. In 1816, Allen and four other congregations formed the African Methodist Episcopal denomination based in Philadelphia; Allen was elected its first bishop. Mother Bethel Church, now known as the African Methodist Episcopal Church, is one of the oldest U.S. black churches.

The religious conviction shown by black Philadelphians seeking to exist in an otherwise hostile environment bears more than a passing resemblance to that of their ancestors. Brought to America as slaves, they, nonetheless, held on to elements of African spiritual tradition while adopting the religious teachings of slave owners.

Harold Dorwin

One of the earliest black churches in America was the First African Baptist Church organized in Savannah in 1788. The engraving here is from an 1873 photograph.

"This new religion, a blend of African religious traditions and Euro-Amrican Christianity, fulfilled spiritual needs and provided stability within the confines of slavry," historian Edward Smith says. Smith orgaized the exhibition, "Climbing Jacob's Ladder: The Rise of Black Churches in Eastern American Cities, 1740-1877," on view through March 20 at the Smithsonian's Anacostia Museum in Washington, D.C. In the era, large numbers of blacks became Christians as a result of an intense religious "awakening" sparked by Methodist, Presbyterian and Baptist ministers.

Spiritual revivals stressed a religion of the heart rather than of the mind. Such emotionalism appealed to blacks, many of whom became preachers, and racially mixed congregations were commonplace, often including newly licensed black ministers. The Baptist and Methodist denominations, which flourished simultaneously, seemed especially suited to the social and psychological needs of blacks because of their emphasis on the conversion experience.

The first Great Awakening took place in the mid-1700s as the American Colonies were considering their own liberation. At the same moment, a strong anti-slavery sentiment was building among white colonists. These changes in social thought were crucial to the spread of Christianity among the slaves and their eventual use of religion to organize independently of white churches, Smith says.

DEH's Natural Resources Management Division plants rye

By Deck Major
DEH Fish and Game Specialist

"I'm worried about it," said Oliver Land, wildlife technician. "I am too," I said, "but you know if we just get some rain, it will come up just fine."

"I know, I know," Oliver replied, "but with this long dry spell and all the wild fires this fall, that stuff won't just be important, it will be critical!"

As some of you may have already guessed, we were discussing the rye crop planted by the Natural Resources Management Division.

During this past October and November, 300 bushels of rye along with 29 tons of fertilize were sown throughout our 182,000 plus acre post.

Thin strips of rye (approximately 16 feet wide) were planted in order to spread the limited amount of seed as evenly as possible throughout the post.

Long rectangular plots that often follow the land contours were made because these type plots produce the most "edge" (that area where two different vegetative types meet).

Wilflife manag-ers have learned that this "edge effect" produces a habitat situation that is preferred by many species of wildlife.

Like wheat, rye is an agricultural grain crop that can be planted during the fall months. Given proper planting procedures and adequate fall rains, rye will sprout and grow slowly until Spring.

During the winter and the early spring months, rye is an important source of "greens" for many animals, especially white-tailed deer.

Deer begin to browse rye the minute it sprouts and continue to feed in the rye strips until warm spring rains and sunshine produce sprouts on more preferable vegetation.

Rye is not extremely high on the list of preferred food species of deer or any other animal for that matter. Clover or alfalfa would be a more popular and nutritious browse.

However, most agricultural crops grow poorly on Fort Benning soils without intensive care. Also, the size of our post makes intensive management impractical.

Rye, on the other hand, is very tolerant of poor soil conditions and will generally produce a rich stand wherever it is planted.

Though rye is not highly preferred, sometimes it moves up a notch in the wildlife menu when unseasonably dry summer weather limits production of forest trees such as dogwood and oak, and fall wild fires burn the fruit that has fallen as well as greenbriar and honeysuckle browse, rye can be the critical weight on the balance of survival.

Not only deer, but rabbits, wild turkeys, bob-white quail, and certain songbirds and nongame mammals feed heavily in the rye strips.

As spring turns to summer, rye also attracts quail and turkeys. More than one quail has nested on the edge of our rye strips.

Seed produced in summer is also an importat fall food for game birds and songbirds alike.

As you walk or drive past one of the many rye strips planted on post, take a minute to examine the plants and the soil for tracks. Often you'll find signs of use by many wildlife species.

Major information campaign on AIDS underway

By Evelyn D. Harris
Army News Service

If it seems like you've been seeing and hearing more about AIDS lately than ever before, it's not your imagination.

With the theme "America Responds to AIDS," a major public information campaign on AIDS is under way and will continue until the end of the summer.

The theme was chosen to get across the idea that everyone — parent, teacher, student, minister, community professional — has a contribution to make and a role to play in preventing AIDS.

The campaign's goal is to reduce the incidence of HIV infection in the United States through changes in social norms and behaviors.

The Public Health Service's Centers for Disease Control is coordinating the effort and has awarded a $4.6 million contract to the Ogilvy and Mather advertising agency to help spread the word.

The Department of Defense is joining with other federal, state and local government agencies, businesses and non-profit organizations in the campaign.

Military distribution centers have more than 1.8 million copies of "What You Should Know About AIDS," a Center for Disease Control pamphlet produced for the American Responds campaign.

Overseas military TV audiences will see public service spots produced as part of the campaign. These spots are the same as those distributed to 1,000 TV and 7,000 radio stations in the United States — except that the overseas spots will not feature the toll-free number, 1-800-342-AIDS.

For persons calling from within the United States, the number reaches a four-minute recording. The recording ends with a number for a counselor in case the caller wants more information.

In addition to taking part in the America Responds campaign, DoD is continuing its own extensive education efforts. These include spots made for military radio and television, films, print material and articles in DoD publications.

Here are some facts provided by the DoD HIV/AIDS Information and Education Working Group:

AIDS is caused by a virus — the human immunodeficiency virus, or HIV.

A person infected with HIV may seem perfectly healthy but can still transmit the virus to others.

HIV is found in body fluids, including blood, semen and vaginal secretions. Therefore, the best way to avoid infection is to avoid contact with infected body fluids. However, normal unbroken skin is an effective barrier against the virus.

Although there are as yet no recorded cases of individuals who became infected with HIV by getting tattoos, experts say that tattoo needles can transmit the virus. If you want a tattoo, make sure that the needle and all equipment are properly sterilized. The same applies to ear piercing.

The safest sexual partner is one with whom you've had a mutually faithful relationship for at least seven years, who has never abused intravenous drugs and who did not have a blood transfusion between 1978 and early 1985.

A latex condom lubricated with a spermicide containing nonoxynol-9 provides additional protection against HIV. (Natural condoms have tiny pores through which the virus can pass.) Condoms also protect against other sexually transmitted diseases.

Recent scientific research indicates persons who have suffered from other sexually transmitted diseases are at greater risk of becoming infected with HIV. Researchers speculate that this is because these diseases cause lesions, allowing the virus to enter the body more easily.

Energy goals pose challenge

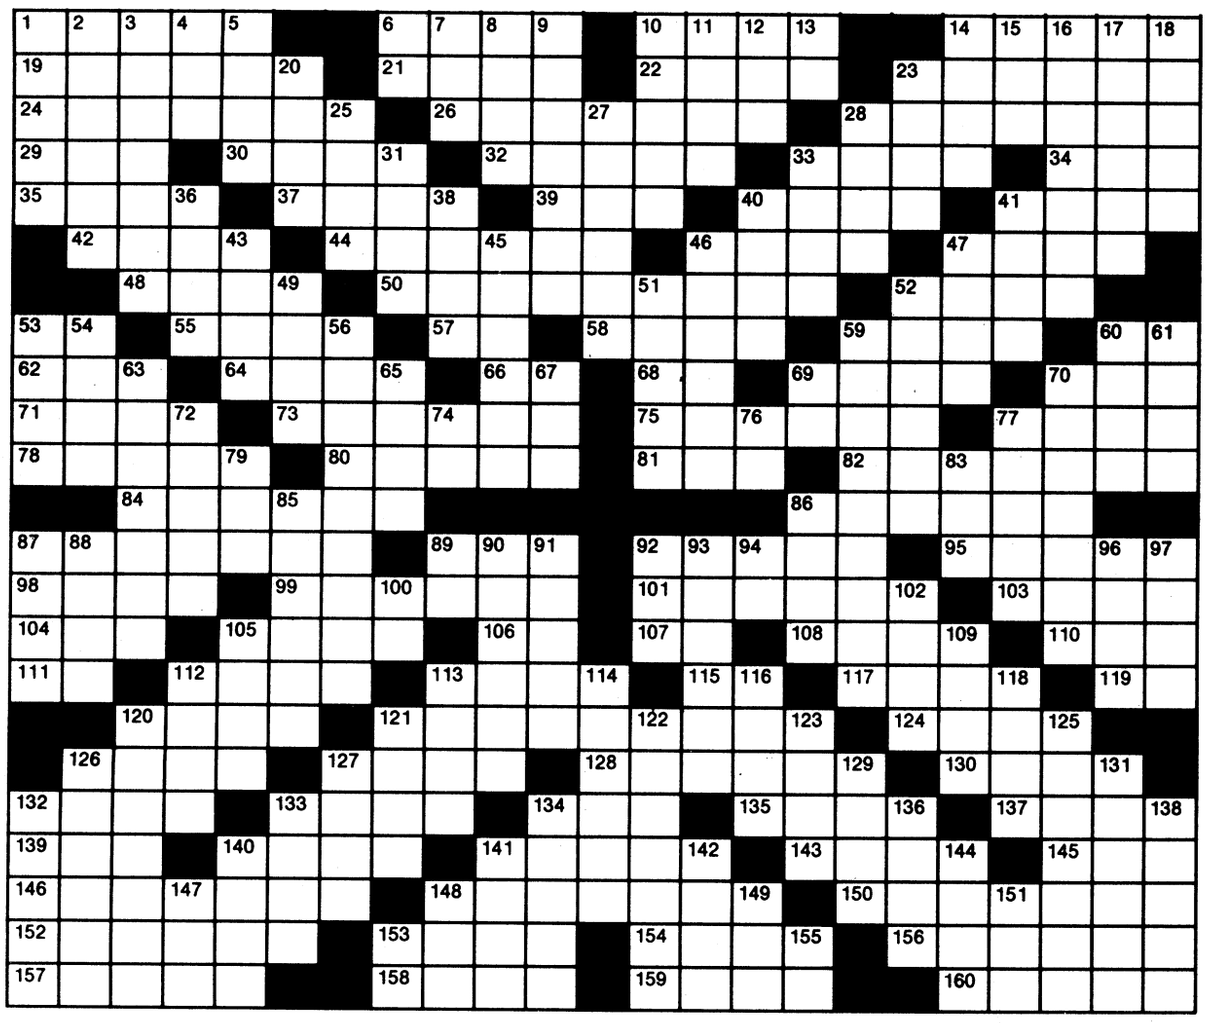
Becky Ray
Post Energy Office

Stiff Training and Doctrine Command goals pose a challenge for everyone on Fort Benning in reducing energy consumption in fiscal year 1988. Mother Nature is making that challenge even tougher by delivering mild temperatures in the winter months.

When temperatures are above average for the heating season, TRADOC removes part of the post energy allocation. This makes prudent use of all energy, especially that used in heating, especially critical.

Because meeting the goals set by TRADOC has such great and far-reaching implications for the entire Fort Benning community, it is imperitave that everyone make every effort to reduce consumption as much as possible.

Turning off heating units when weather is warmer is critical. Heating units are major consumers of electricity, natural gas, and oil and are a major factor of in energy waste and abuse. According to U.S. Army Infantry Center Regulation 11-27, heated building space temperatures should be no higher than 65 degrees Fahrenheit except in special cases where exceptions to policy have been granted.



Energy monitors are urged to carefully maintain the temperatures in their buildings so as not to exceed this limit. Every degree above 65 degrees requires an additional two percent energy use.

In addition, all occupants of Fort Benning facilities can play a part in meeting energy goals by being alert to energy waste. This can include such simple things as making sure all windows and doors are closed and properly weatherproofed.

Although the TRADOC goals are tough and success in meeting them may be made more difficult by the current trend in weather, they are still attainable. However, they cannot be met without the concerted effort of all Fort Benning occupants.

Sgt. Christopher J. McKinnon, 72nd Eng. Co., adjusts the points on his '69 Ford pickup during a tune-up.

Save on auto repairs

By Kevin J. Howerton
197th Infantry Brigade correspondent

One of the big concerns for the average soldier is saving money. And one place he can save money is at an auto craft shop.

"I think auto craft shops are one of the best ideas the Army has come up with," said Sgt. Christopher J. McKinnon, 72nd Eng. Co. "The best price I can get on a tune-up is about $40, but at Fort Benning, I can do it myself for $17 or $18."

McKinnon was at the Kelley Hill Auto Craft Shop, bent over the hood of his '69 Ford pickup truck adjusting the points. The brightly painted engine gleemed from the many chrome accessories he has installed over the past few months.

"The instructors here are really helpful," said McKinnon. "If you have a problem, they can tell you how to fix it."

"We average about a thousand customers each month," said Jim English, director of the Kelley Hill Auto Craft Shop. "Most people come in to change oil or do a tune-up."

"We don't do any repairs ourselves, our job is to act as training instructors, not mechanics," English explained. "We show people how to do the work. We have the tools and equipment for them to do the work and all the reference manuals they need."

English was able to show how a person could save as much as $80 on the cost of a complete brake job for a car.

"If you have any mechanicl ability at all, you can do your own brake job with the tools and instructions we have here," he said.

Some soldiers have been working at craft shops long enough to progress into more difficult repairs.

"I started learning mechanics and body work at a craft shop in Germany," said SSgt. Mitchel C. Davidson, Co. E, 1st Bn., 58th Inf. "Over the years,I have learned more and more. Now, I'm rebuilding the engine of a '79 Camaro. "I've already saved about $800 compared to the cost of having it done by someone else."

The next time your car needs an oil change or a tune-up, think twice before you head for the repair shop. For a lot less money, you can learn to do it yourself at a Fort Benning auto craft shop.

Church

The Great Awakening had a leveling influence," he explains. "There was a lot of equality in that poor or rich could be converted."

While Methodism was readily making gains in black communities in the North, Separatist Baptist congregations were emerging in the South. The earliest black churches drew their congregations from Southern plantations in Virginia and South Carolina. Still, strong opposition, particularly in rural areas of the South, forced blacks to worship together in secrecy.

Historians believe that the existence of "invisible" black congregations, comprised of numerous slave families living and working on Southern plantations, represents the first organized black churches. These underground congregations reveal the varied ways in which blacks established their own churches.

Black churches in Southern cities existed only in affiliation with white congregations or if their services were overseen by white ministers. White Southerners, in particular, were not convinced that blacks should be permitted to gather for prayer. Moreover, there was growing suspicion of the influence held by black preachers. The suspicions appeared to be confirmed by two events in 1822 and 1831.

Black religious activity did in fact facilitate a conspiracy between city and plantation slaves led in 1822 by Denmark Vesey, an ex-slave in Charleston, S.C. Though it did not develop into a rebellion, Vesey and 36 co-conspirators were hanged. Nine years later, in Southampton County, Va., a rebellion led by Nat Turner, who claimed that he had been called to deliver his people from the bondages of slavery, resulted in the death of 200 blacks and widespread fear of similar uprisings.

To counteract these fears, states throughout the South passed laws forbidding blacks to preach. However, the statutes proved unenforceable because of the sheer numbers of black preachers, licensed and unlicensed.

"When we think of the development of the black church, we don't tend to look to the South," Smith said, citing the secrecy of black religious services. But researchers have found records that show the establishment of visible black congregations on plantations in Virginia and South Carolina as early as 1756.

By 1860, blacks were represented in every Christian denomination in the South. The growth in black membership came in part with a second surge of religious revivals and the promotion of formal religious instruction. Christianization of slaves was advocated through prayer services supervised by plantation owners.

The movement was so successful that black membership far exceeded that of whites in many churches. As early as 1838, for instance, black membership at the First Baptist Church in Richmond was nearly three times the number of white members.

The Civil War's disruption of normal society order prompted the invisible congregations in the South to worship openly and independently. Moreover, black and white missionaries from the major denominations in the North simply trailed the Union armies into the South spreading the gospel and recruiting black converts. A number of black ministers even served as chaplains to Northern black troops.

"The Civil War upset the social and economic system of the South," Smith concludes. "It was during these years that a truly independent black church emerged."

In addition to providing spiritual growth, early black churches provided classrooms for education. And the earliest colleges for blacks, among them Morehouse, Howard, Fisk and Shaw, were established with church support during and after the Reconstruction era.

Black ministers and their congregations had new options following the Civil War. With the passage of new civil rights laws, blacks were able to compete directly with whites for government jobs. Those who had been fortunate enough to receive formal training participated in society in ways that once had been unthinkable. In 1870, Hiram Revels, an African Methodist Episcopal minister, became the first black man elected to the U.S. Senate.

As the oldest institution in this country controlled by blacks, the church today maintains great gollowing in the black community, Smith says. "Almost all aspects of black history have been influenced by the role of the church."

OWC to host luncheon

By Lynn Barlotta
Officers' Wives Club

The January OWC Luncheon, to be held Jan. 27 at 10:30 a.m. in the Officers' Club, will feature Master Chef Nathalie Dupree.

Dupree is the host of her own nationally syndicated cooking program, which can be seen locally on GPTV Saturdays at 3 p.m.

She received her formal training in Paris and has an advanced certificate from the Cordon Blue as well as La-Vernne.

But, her love for down-home cooking has led her to create a new style, a blend of both cuisines. She has put some of her best creations into a book titled "New Southern Cooking". Dupree says, "All dishes are easily prepared. I made a point of stopping to explain techniques that many new Southerners (and Northerners) might not understand because they didn't learn cooking at Mama's knees as people did in the past."

For instance, grilling outdoors year round, cholestoral and blood pressure levels are of great concern to most adults. People eat later in the day and the daily use of modern time-saving kitchen appliances have changed many Southerners cooking habits

Her cooking methods and recipes reflect her understanding of the South and its people. She has successfuly blended the old and the new and the results are exciting.

For the OWC luncheon, Dupree will be doing a cooking demonstration entitled, "V.I.P. Dinner for Eight."

Her dessert speciality, Pecan Roulade, will be served as the luncheon dessert.

Members wishing to make reservations may do so by calling their units' representative or the phone numbers listed in the Communique.

The cost of the luncheon is $5. Reservations must be made by Jan. 22.

For more information, call Lynn Barlotta, 689-2096.

Pizza Week designated

Associated Release Service

January 17-23 has been designated as "National Pizza Week."

Statistics regarding the growth of pizza are impressive: nearly 96 percent of all American households now eat pizza. However, in addition to the numbers, the pizza industry itself has its humorous and "human" side.

According to Pizza Today Magazine, in an effort to prove that a baked pizza will remain hotter if uncut beforehand, a Wisconsin pizza maker arranged to have two hot-from-the-oven pies flown to a city 180 miles away. One pizza was sliced and the other remained uncut.

With news media alerted, the mayor of the city was waiting at the airport with an oven thermometer in hand. The temperature of the uncut pizza was higher.

Another time, to raise funds for charity, the pizza operator made up a batch of tiny ounce-and-a-half pizzas the size of cookies. Ingredients included pepperoni, sausage, cheese, onions, green peppers and mushrooms. The mini pizzas were slipped into micro-delivery pouches which were affixed to homing pigeons for a 40-mile trip.

All went well until these special delivery "pizza toters" met up with a flock of racing pigeons returning from a meet. For a few moments it was thought that the pizza carriers and the larger flock might decide "it was party time and scatter."

After some delay, the first pizzas delivered by homing pigeon finally did arrive safely — if somewhat late — at their destination.

Another time for a special promotion, a pizza operator hired a limousine service for one night to deliver his pizzas. The pizza operator estimated he made more than 60 deliveries and said that customers were really impressed when the limo pulled up. It cost him $250 to rent the car.

A few years ago, the U.S. Department of the Interior contacted Pizza Hut in Wichita and asked the company to provide pizzas for crew members of a joint U.S.-Soviet oceanographic expedition located at Dutch Harbor, Alaska.

The Americans on board a research ship in Dutch Harbor had been feted at a dinner of typical Russian fare. When the Americans asked to reciprocate, the Russians said they would like pizza.

The entire project was undertaken in less than a week. Ten employees, pizza ovens and ingredients were dispatched and ultimately everyone on board the ship was fed. So, too, were U.S. Navy sailors on board minesweepers in the area as well as all the residents of the town of Dutch Harbor. In all, more than 300 pizzas were served.

Senator Robert Dole was planning a visit to the Demilitarized Zone in Korea in 1986. He telephoned Pizza Hut and asked if he could take some pizza — a "slice of home" — to U.S. military personnel stationed in the Zone. One hundred pizzas were packed in dry ice and placed in coolers for the trip.

The Indianapolis Star reports that workers at a local mall can order pizza and soft drinks by telephone and in no time the food comes rolling in. That's because a young man named James, who was born with cerebral palsy, has started a novel to-your-store delivery service in the mall.

James carries the soft drinks in a milk crate strapped to his unmotorized wheelchair. He loads the pizza and other food on his lap. Delivery is free.

Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

People who wish to enter the Fort Benning Photo Contest have two days left.

Entries have to be in the Long Arts and Crafts Center by 9 p.m. Sunday to compete in the contest.

According to William Place, Arts and Crafts director, the contest is open to anyone who is eligible to use the center. This includes active duty and retired and their family members; reserve components on active duty; department of defense civilians and their family members; and non-appropriated funds and contract employees.

Place said there are two groups with four categories. Photos can be either 5x7 or 8x10 but must be mounted. The groups are monochrome or color prints, and the categories are general, people, scenic and experimental.

"All photos have to have been taken within the year," Place said, "and the work has to be done by the individual entering the photo."

The idea behind this is to get entrants to do the technical work as well."

Place said that the judging will be done Jan. 22, and the results will be placed in the lobby of the center the following day.

"Liten" up to loose weight

Associated Release Service

Here is good news for weight conscious Americans...if you want a healthful, successful alternative to standard weight loss diets, simply "liten" up!

Doctors at John Hopkins Medical Institute studied two groups of people, both trying to lose weight. One group was on a standard low-calorie diet; the other group cut calories by substituting "lite" foods. After four months, the "lite" group had lost an average of 5 to 7 pounds more than those on a standard low-cal diet.

According to Linda Webb, R.D., a nutritionist, these results are not surprising. "When people go on a typical low-calorie diet to lose weight, they often change their eating habits so drastically that the diet is impossible to stick with. They set themselves up to fail, especially when they go "off" the diet and back to their usual eating patterns," she explains. "On the other hand, learning to choose "lite" alternatives cuts calories painlessly, and this habit, once developed, aids permanent weight control because you can stick with it for life."

If you would like to "liten" up your eating habits, here are some suggestions from Webb that can help:

- Substitute reduced-calorie tub margarine for butter or margarine and shave calories by 50 percent.
- Choose diet mayonnaise and diet sour cream instead of high fat versions and cut calories in half.
- Reduced-calorie salad dressings provide a fraction of the fat and calories of traditional dressings and add great flavor to salads.
- Buy low-fat cheese; substitute low-fat yogurt in recipes calling for sour cream; try buttermilk in main dish or vegetable recipes calling for cream.
- Buy water-packed tuna and cut the calories and fat that come along with the oil-packed variety.
- Choose low-fat milk and milk products; try ice milk instead of ice cream.
- Look for reduced-calorie bread and baked goods.
- Develop the habit of reading labels — many now list calorie and fat content, and they can be your best source of information when choosing the "lite" alternatives.

New booklet out for infant nutrition

American Institute for Cancer Research

Many people have recently become aware of the health benefits of a diet lower in fat.

High-fat diets have been associated with increased risk of stroke, heart attack and cancer.

But many people also assume that if a low-fat diet is good for an adult, it must also be good for children, including young infants.

According to a new booklet from the American Institute for Cancer Research, that could be a serious mistake.

The American Institute for Cancer Research notes that while adults should limit fat in their diets, fat is an essential dietary element for developing children.

Attempting to restrict dietary fat for children under 18 months of age, by limiting them to skim milk or low-fat solid foods, may result in babies not getting the fat necessary for normal development of their brains and nervous systems.

The Institute's new booklet, "Infant Nutrition: Sound Eating Habits Start Early," provides basic information on sound nutrition for young children.

It notes that babies who are either breast fed or bottle fed on a regular formula will get sufficient amounts of dietary fat for normal development.

Problems occur when parents attempt to limit the baby's diet to the low- or no-fat foods they are eating.

The Institute notes that as a baby is switched over to solid foods, it is important to begin teaching the child positive eating habits. This includes providing a broad variety of foods, with a special emphasis on fresh fruits and vegetables.

It is also a good time to limit sweets. Although even newborn babies seem to be born liking sweets, studies have indicated that what the baby is fed during the first year may influence his taste for sweets later on.

The American Institute for Cancer Research is a national, non-profit organization that focuses on the relationship between diet and cancer. Through its Dietary Guidelines for Lower Cancer Risk, the Institute has recommended that adults lower their dietary fat intake from the current average of 40 percent of calories to 30 percent or less.

It has published "Infant Nutrition" to help make parents more aware of the proper nutritional standards that should apply for children and can be different from those for adults.

A free copy of "Infant Nutrition" may be obtained by sending a stamped, self-addressed, business-sized envelope to the American Institute for Cancer Research, Dept. IN9, Washington, D.C. 20069.

USARSA snags post bowling roll-off honors

By Ron Allen
Bayonet Staff

USARSA rolled to a convincing victory in the Company-Level Bowling League Roll-Off, at the Mall Bowling Center Tuesday, slicing out a 5511 pin fall win over second place Co. B, 43rd Eng., who finished with 5414.

Alan Upton lead his team to the top by grabbing the high series honors, during the six-game roll-off, with a total pin fall of 1102.

"I felt we could win," Upton said. "The rest of the team had some doubts, but morale was high, and we just kept telling each other we could do it."

"The bowling center personnel really did an excellent job of putting this tournament together," Upton said.

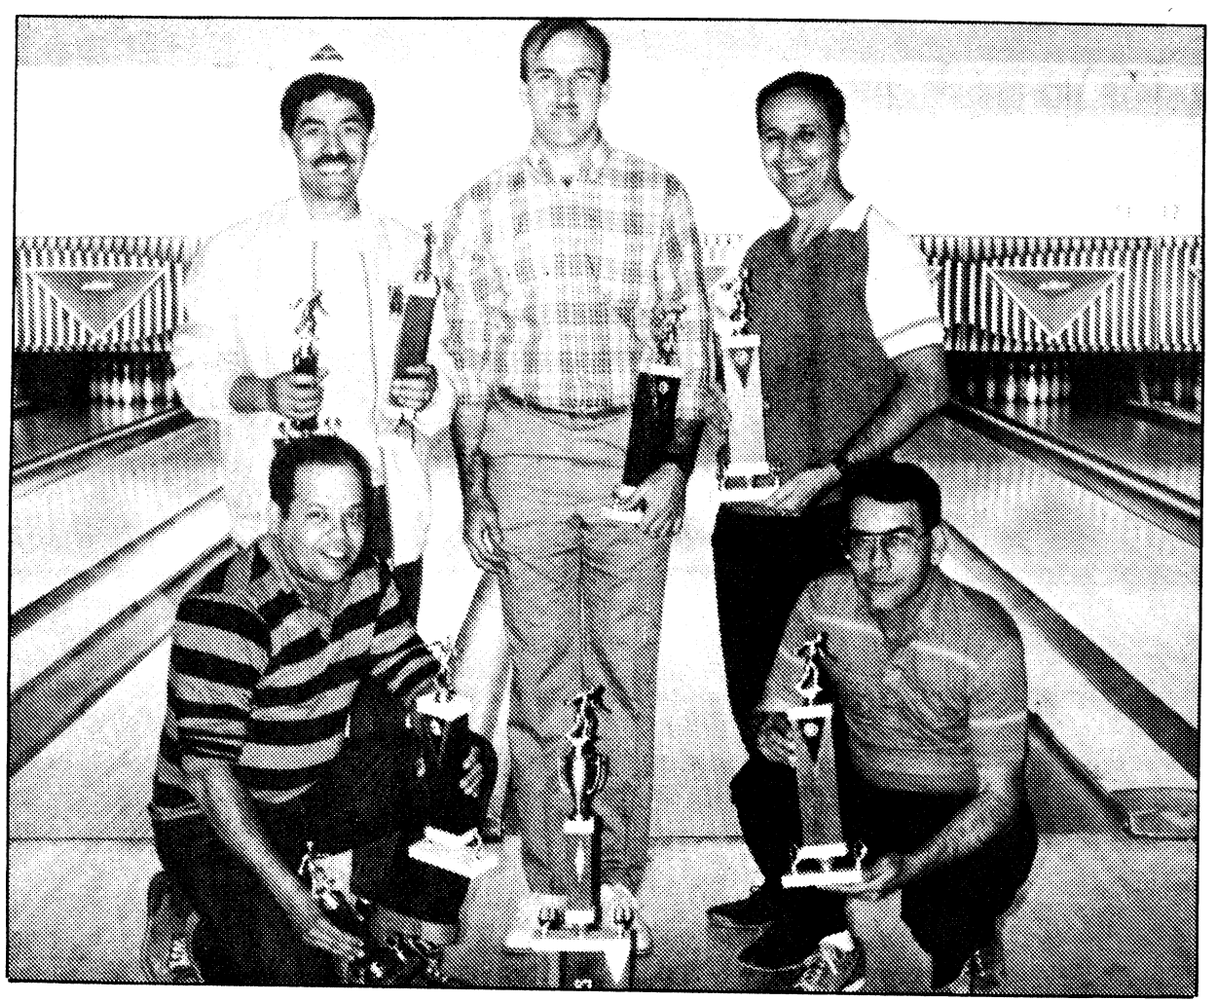
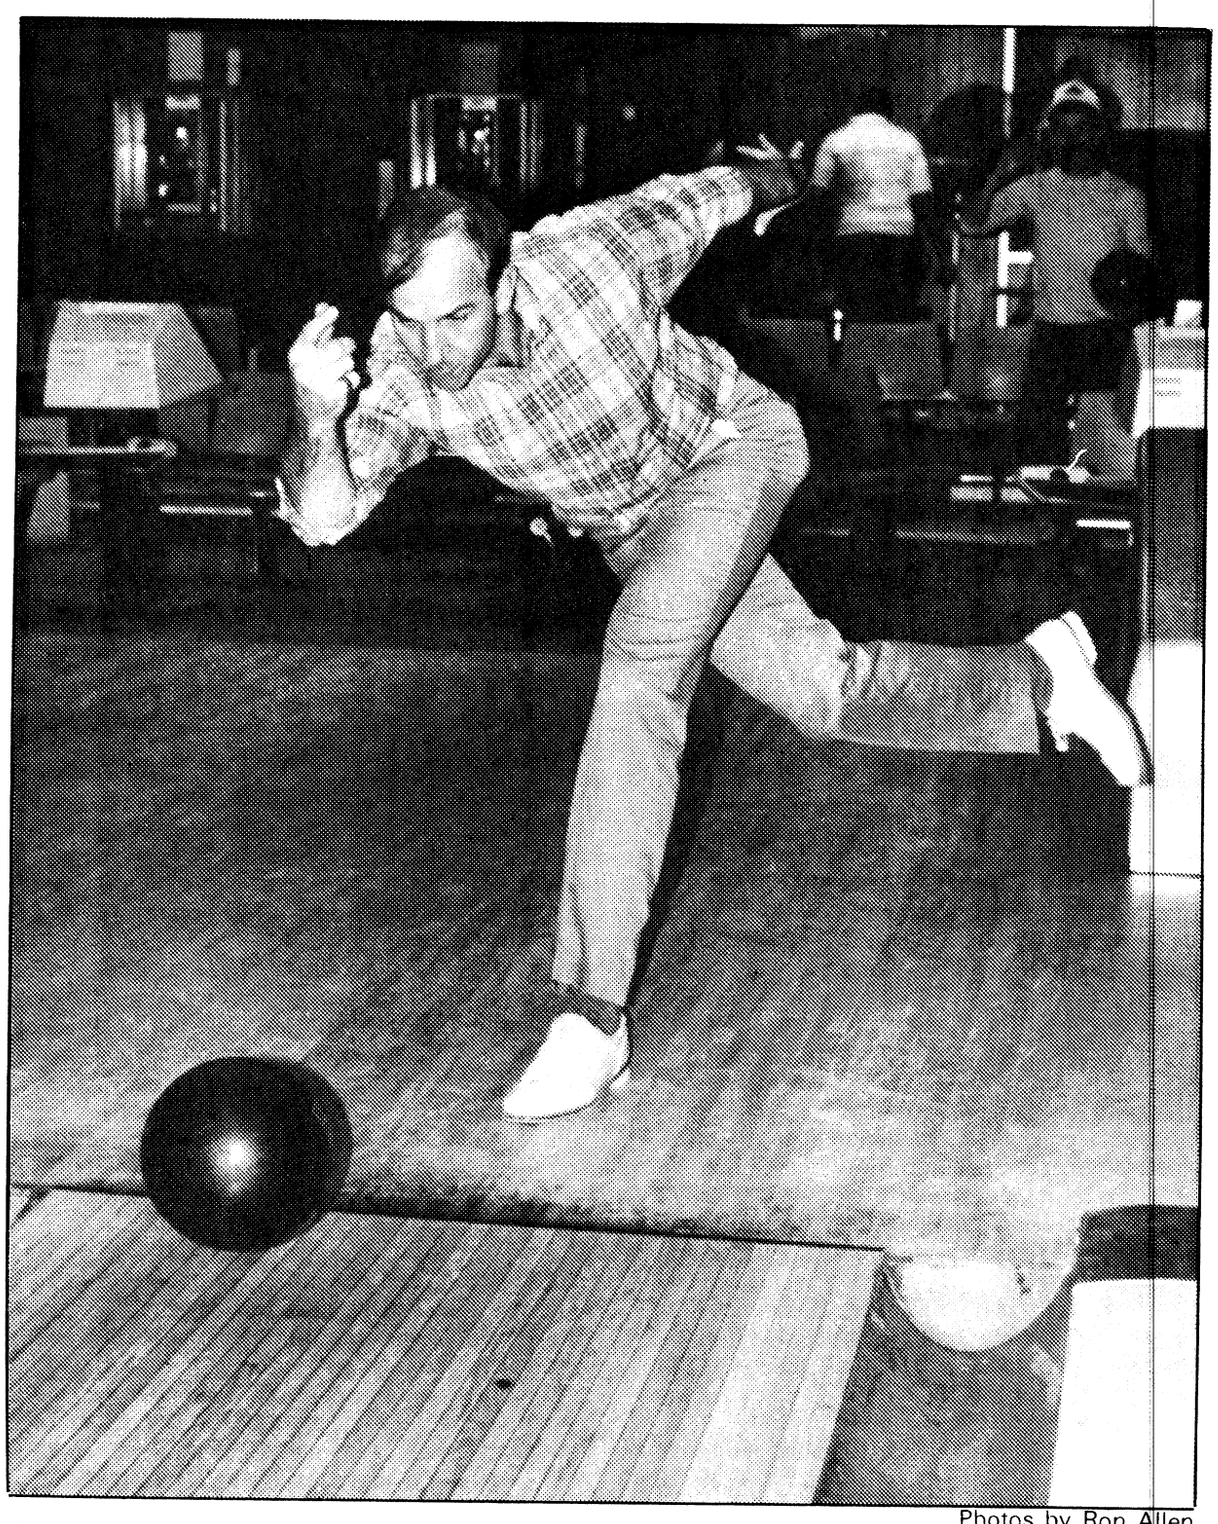
Ramos rolled the top game of the evening with a 247.



Winning the high game for the females was Katie C. Taylor of Co. A, 1st Bn., 11 Inf., with 182. High series went to Dawn A. Jones of Co. B, 1st Bn., 11 Inf.

Lt. Col. Richard Curran, secretary of the School of Americas, was on hand to give out trophies to the top three teams and the high game and high series winners.



Third place went to 3rd Bn., 32nd Inf. Rgt.

Prepare now for Infantry Marathon

By John M. Henderson
Martin Army Community Hospital

March 5 is the date of the 4th Annual Infantry Marathon.

This event is an exciting opportunity to test your endurance abilities. This year's marathon features a new route that will challenge everyone.

The purpose of this series of articles is to prepare the average person for this event. A couple of definitions will put us all on the same sheet of music.

•Average Person — This athlete has a regular job and the usual family and social commitments. Erco; running is a hobby, not a vocation. When it stops being fun it's time to stop and re-assess how and why your running.

•Prepare — Pre-event activities intended to get you ready. Readiness for the endurance event must include physical, mental and spiritual preparedness. Weakness in any one area will spell defeat (and pain).

Unless you have extra-ordinary untapped talent, you won't finish this marathon under three hours. Unless you are an affectionado of unnecessary discomfort,you would like to finish this marathon under four hours. So your target,readers,is to hope to finish between three and four hours. This will be the vast majority of entrants.

Several types of preparation will be presented.

One type of preparation is based on timed endurance. For example: if you want to complete the marathon in about 3.5 hours, the average speed per mile must be eight minutes. More importantly though, you must be able to run for 3.5 hours. So rather than practicing to run at an eight-minute pace, you should practice running for time endurance — that's right, your goal is 3:30. Keep in mind, of course, you won't run for 3.5 or even 3.25 or 3 hours. But you practice pushing your anaerobic threshold farther and farther toward 3.5 hours.

Marathon training by timed endurance

Training Week	S	M	T	W	T	F	S	Time Goal
1	R	4	6	R	8	R	14	1:45
2	R	5	8	R	10	R	16	2:00
3	R	5	8	R	10	R	18	2:15
4	R	5	8	R	10	R	20	2:30
5	R	5	10	R	10	R	22	2:45
6	R	10	5	10	7	R	14	1:40
7	R	5	3	5	3	R	26.25	3:30

NOTE:Training schedule begins on Jan. 17 and ends with the Marathon on the final day. In week seven, both 5-mile runs should be at a slow pace. In week six the 5 miles should be at a march.

From this table, you can readily notice some of the training philosophy peculiar to an endurance event:

•Rest days preceed and follow the long distance runs for a week and are an imporant part of the mid-week. Without rest days, burnout and overuse injuries develop.

•Times for shorter runs (4-8 miles) are faster than the longer runs (16-22 miles), longer runs need discipline to start and maintain a slower pace.

•Times are crudely approximate and distances can be flexible by plus or minus two miles. Training is 45 minutes short of the goal because at this point time is a "warped" dimension.

This is not etched in stone. When you feel tired or in a rut a rest day is worthwhile. Those days are good for stretching or cycling or reading. Reading?! That's right. Shift gears mentally.

The key in endurance sports is the ability to use your three resources (physical, mental and spirital power) to sharpen performance.

EDITORS NOTE: This is the first in a series of articles by Maj. (Dr.) John M. Henderson of Sports Medicine Service at Martin Army Community Hospital.

Benning Flyers battle British in post-season play

By Steve Gouthro
Fort Benning Flyers

The Fort Benning Flyers Rugby team matched their skills against a touring rugby team of the British 2nd Parachute Regiment Jan. 5.

Although the Benning season ended in early December, the Flyers could not pass up the challenge of playing an experienced British team.

Fort Benning had the first opportunity to score but missed a penalty kick.

The British then came roaring back with some smooth passing and running for the game's first score.

The Flyers didn't give up as they forced a penalty near the British goal and team captain, Steve Gouthro crashed over for the score.

Chris Greer kicked the extra points and Benning held a slim 6-4 lead.

The 2nd Para. again showed their rugby skills as they scored, putting them ahead 10-6.

The 2nd Para. kept the pressure on Benning with strategic kicks and slick ball handling, which resulted in another British score as the match ended.

The final score was Fort Benning 10, 2nd Para., 21.

Even though the score was not in Benning's favor, the team enjoyed the chance to play this experienced team.

Based on this showing, Fort Benning is looking forward to its spring season which culminates in the National Military Championships in May.

The first practice will be Feb. 10 at 6 p.m. on Engineer Field, across from the Audie Murphy Gym. Anyone interested in joining the team should show up for this practice.

Hawks dump Dribblers

By George Mingee
197th Infantry Brigade correspondent

The "War Hawks" of Co. B, 1st Bn., 58th Inf., posted a 45-38 win over the "Charging Dribblers" of Co. C, 1st Bn., 58th Inf., in a recent intramural basketball game.

The game commenced the second half of the season for the 197th Infantry Brigade Leagues.

Ellis Bradley, for the Hawks, led his team in scoring with nine points, and close behind him was teammate Elmore Savage with seven points. The remainder of the Hawks' scoring was evenly balanced among the other players.

Reginald Ross of the Charging Dribblers led his team in scoring with a personal best of 17 points. Carlton Randall was second in scoring with 10 points.

The game started quick with the score going back and forth, but the Hawks breakneck pace put them ahead by half-time with a score of 24-20.

The second half started fast,and the Dribblers never caught up. The Hawks went on to win the game 45-38 and boost their record to 2-0.

GSGA Amateur tourney scheduled

Georgia State Golf Association

MARIETTA, Ga. — Green Island Country Club in Columbus will be the site of the 1988 Georgia State Golf Association Amateur Championship, July 7-10, highlighting an active tournament season, GSGA President Eddie LeBaron of Atlanta and GSGA Championship Committee chairman, Billy Peters of Blakely announced jointly today.

Green Island was the site of the 1977 GSGA Amateur Championship won by Danny Yates III, of Peachtree Golf Club in Atlanta, and the 1967 Championship won by Billy Key of Green Island.

Allen Doyle of American Legion Golf Club in LaGrange is the defending GSGA Amateur Champion. He triumphed over Hugh Royer III, of Cataula last year at Doublegate Country Club in Albany in one of the most exciting championships ever held when it was decided in a sudden death playoff.

The featured event of the Amateur Championship week will be the presentation of the Tommy Barnes Award, given annually to the GSGA's Player of the Year.

Barry Harwell of Flat Creek Golf Club in Peachtree City and Larry Clark of Pinetree Country Club in Kennesaw will defend their GSGA Four-Ball Championship. The Four-Ball will be played April 22-24 at Sea Palms Golf Club on St. Simons Island. Harwell and Clark triumphed at Jones Creek Golf Club in Martinez last year.

Allen Doyle will defend his Mid-Amateur crown at Okefenokee Golf Club in Waycross. Doyle triumphed last year at Summit Chase Country Club in Snellville. The Mid-Amateur will be held May 27-29.

Dalton Country Club will be the site of the GSGA Junior Championship June 20-22. Rob McKelvey of Springbrook Country Club in Lawrenceville will be ineligible to defend the boys' title, having reached his 18th birthday. Last year's championship was held at Perry Country Club.

The Ladies' Team Championship will be held at Sheraton-Savannah Resort and Country Club, Nov. 8-9. Bettie Shadday of Coosa Country Club in Rome and Robyn Roberson of Austell won this year's title at Sheraton-Savannah.

The GSGA will also conduct the second GSGA Senior Championship. Johnny Skeakas of Savannah Golf Club won this year's inaugural event.

Additionally, the GSGA in 1988 will conduct three challenge matches, 11 USGA qualifying rounds, eight GSGA Amateur qualifying rounds, two Atlanta Golf Association Championships and a statewide Junior Sectional program in which 28 one-day tournaments and one two-day tournament will be conducted.

In 1988, the GSGA will begin a series of one-day tournaments in its outlying geographic regions. These tournaments are designed to bring the tournaments of the GSGA into all areas of the state.

Eddie LeBaron reelected to head GSGA

Georgia State Golf Association

MARIETTA, Ga. — Eddie LeBaron, who led the Georgia State Golf Association to one of its best years in 1987, has been re-elected as president of the association.

LeBaron, who has been a member of the association's board of directors since 1979 and executive committee since 1983, is a member of the Capital City Club of Atlanta.

He is a partner in the Atlanta law firm of Powell, Goldstein, Frazer and Murphy. Prior to that, he was general manager, executive vice president and chief operating officer of the Atlanta Falcons from 1977 to 1985. During that time, the Falcons reached the playoffs on three occasions, won their first divisional title, set attendance and season ticket records and constructed one of the best training complexes in football. LeBaron also was named the Sporting News Football Executive of the Year in 1980.

Despite his 5-feet 7-inch, 160-pound measurements, LeBaron earned all-American honors three consecutive years while at the College of Pacific where he began his career under the legendary Amos Alonzo Stagg and completed it by quarterbacking the Tigers to an unbeaten season in 1949 and the College All-Stars to an upset victory over the NFL Champion Philadelphia Eagles. He was later inducted into the Collegiate Football Hall of Fame in 1981.

LeBaron spent 11 years in the National Football League, first with the Washington Redskins, then as Tom Landry's first quarterback for the expansion Dallas Cowboys franchise.

During his NFL career, LeBaron passed for 13,330 yards and would have compiled even greater statistics had he not missed several years due to the Korean Conflict, during which time he served as a U.S. Marine officer and received several medals for bravery.

LeBaron has practiced law in Texas, Nevada, Washington, D.C. and his home state of California before passing the Georgia bar examination.

Joining LeBaron on the GSGA's 10-man executive committee are Bill Todd of Indian Hills Country Club as secretary; Dr. John Reynolds III of Augusta Country Club as treasurer; and as vice president, Dr. Bob Bowen of Athens Country Club; Tad Moore of Green Island Country Club; Dr. Roy Johnson of Atlanta National Golf Club; Andy Bargeron of Dale Country Club; Bill Blalock of East Lake Country Club; Ike Fenton of Flat Creek Golf Club; and Mike Waldron of Atlanta Country Club.

Bob Harlin, an Atlanta attorney and member of Peachtree Golf Club, was reelected as general counsel. He will continue to serve in an advisory capacity on both the executive committee and board of directors.

Wendell Couch, who directed the assocition to three of its most successful years ever as president during 1984-1986, will serve as an ex-officio member of the executive committee as past president. Couch is a member of both Honey Creek Country Club and Pebblecreek Golf Club.

Retiring members of the association's executive committee are Danny Yates III, of Peachtree Golf Club and Ed Barnes Jr. of Coosa Country Club, the association's 14th president from 1977-80.

For the first time in history, a woman has been elected to the GSGA's board of directors.

Martha Kirouac of the Atlanta Athletic Club and former U.S. Women's Amateur Champion, U.S. Curtis Cup Team member and U.S. World Cup Team member, was elected to the board for a three-year term.

Also joining the board for three-year terms were Dick Frazier of Indian Hills Country Club, Richard Carson of Radium Country Club and Bryan Persons of Idle Hour Country Club.

Elected to the board were the following: One-year terms: Moore; Johnson; Phil Clston, Flat Creek Golf Course; Pete Cox, Radium Country Club; Furman Bisher, Captial City Country Club; Johnny Smith, Okefenokee Golf Course; Allen Kaminsky, Standard Club; Gordon Johnson, The Landings; Bobby Jones III, Perry Country Club; Mel Haas III, Idle Hour Country Club; Bob Fennell, Forest Heights Country Club; Chuck Dickson, West Lake Country Club; LeBaron; and Reynolds.

Two-year terms: Billy Peters, Town and County Cub; Couch; Bob Flynn, Pinetree Country Club; Joel Stevenson, Fairfield Plantation Country Club; Fenton; Todd; Blalock; Bargeron; Don Hamelink, Atlanta Athletic Club; Adrian C. McManus Jr., Athens Country Club; Taylor Adams, Sea Island Golf Course; Dr. Jo Stegall, Coosa Country Club; Clayton Doss, Coosa Country Club.

Three-year terms: Bowen, Waldron; Barnes; Frank Jones, Coosa Country Club; Bob White, Dunwoody Country Club; Allen Doyle, American Legion Golf Course; Harley Bowers, River North Country Club; Koouac; Frazier; Carson; and Persons.

Retiring board members: Danny Yates III of Peachtree Golf Course and Bo Trotter of Green Island Country Club, were elected as emeritus directors.

Benning Ranger wins SOCOM Soldier of Year

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

A Fort Benning Ranger led the way at the Special Operations Command Soldier of the Year competition by taking the top spot.

SP4 Steve Woody, a machine gunner with Co. B, 3rd Bn., 75th Rgr. Rgt., won the competition beating out nine other soldiers who represented units within SOCOM at Fort Bragg, N.C.

Unlike most soldier of the year competitions, which consist of a board of senior noncommissioned officers asking soldiers questions in several military categories, the SOCOM competition consisted of a whole lot more.

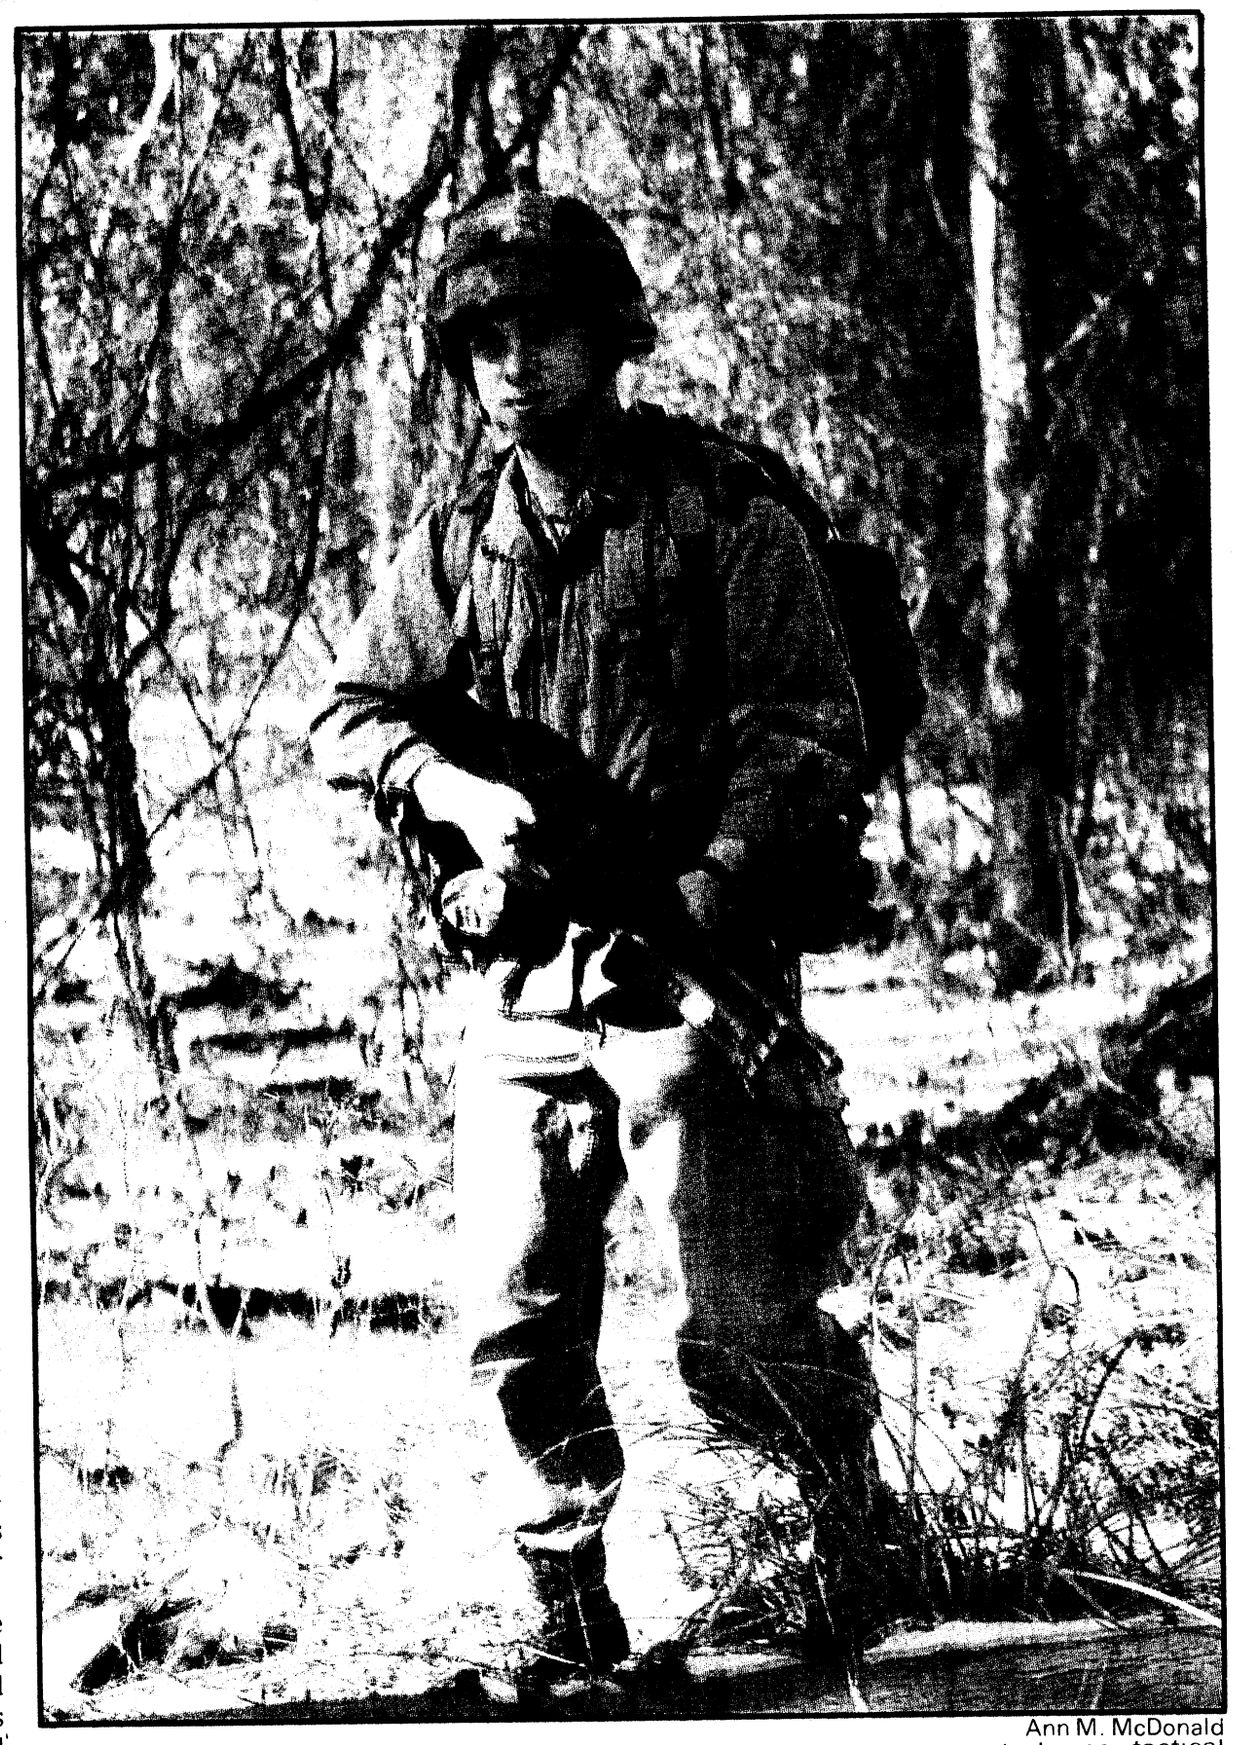
According to Woody, he traveled to Fort Bragg and stayed for four days, competing with the soldiers in a physical fitness test, a written test, a day and night land navagation course and a regular board.

"The best way I can explain the competition," Woody said, "is by comparing it to a superbowl.

"It was real close all the way through, the thing that got me ahead was land navagation where I finished way ahead of everyone else," he said.

He attributed his success to a lot of personal perseverance and to the fact that he just plain didn't want to lose.

Woody has been with the Rangers ever since completing his intial training in early 1986. He chose to be a Ranger when he entered the Army in November 1985.



"I decided to join the Army after a conversation I had with my brother." he said. "He is with a Special Forces unit, and what he was doing sounded a little more exciting than what I was doing.

"I had gone to college and earned my associates degree and was working as a electrical mechanical draftsman. It was a good job, but I just sat at a keyboard most of the time which was pretty boring so I enlisted."

He said his success at SOCOM doesn't make him feel any different, but he feels proud that he was able to represent 3rd Battalion so well.

While on that long road to success, he earned a Meritorious Service Medal, an Army Commendation Medal, an Army Achievement Medal, a total of $1,100 in savings bonds, a knife with a display case, a trophy, a set of dress blues and Army Greens, a membership to Special Forces Association, an Association of the United States Army plaque, assorted other plaques and a watch.

Woody said although the prizes are nice, his increased knowledge of soldiering and the extra confidence it has given him is the best reward of all.

CG hosts reup lunch

By Becky Obert
Bayonet staff writer

More than 200 people came to hear the commanding general's thoughts on reenlistment at the CG's reenlistment luncheon Jan. 12.

The luncheon is held yearly to honor those NCOs who have met or exceeded their reenlistment goals and to serve as a booster of reenlistment efforts on post.

Maj. Gen. Kenneth C. Leuer, post commander, told those present that Fort Benning already has a winning team when it comes to reenlistments.

"Winning is not a sometime thing; it's an all-time thing. You don't win once in a while; you don't do things right once in a while; you do them right all the time," he said, quoting Vince Lombardi.

He said reenlistment is like that, in that it's a continuing process that takes continued effort on the part of NCOs and officers.

"Reenlistment of a soldier is a team effort," he said. "It involves the entire chain of command. It involves the total Army career counselor and it involves the military and civilian communities."

The key to successful reenlistment efforts lies in this team effort, Leuer said. "The chain of command needs to get involved immediately. The team leader and squad leader have to insure the soldier gets a proper welcome.

"They need to set the tone so when the platoon sergeant, platoon leader, first sergeant and commander get involved, the seed of reenlisting has already been planted."

Public invited to attend medical care discussion

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Availability of medical care for active-duty and retired military members and their families will be the subject of a House Armed Services Subcommittee meeting here Jan. 29, Congressman Richard Ray has announced.

Ray, D-Ga., earlier this month told representatives of local military retiree organizations that the Military Personnel and Compensation Subcommittee will hold a hearing in Marshall Auditorium in Infantry Hall, building 4 at 10 a.m.

The public is invited to attend, but the formal hearings will permit only those people serving on panels to participate.

Others wishing to make statements, however, may do so in writing. These written statements may be deposited in special boxes as the entrances to the auditorium. Statements must be legible and must include a name and address.

"We want to hear about your problems so solutions can be found," Ray said.

He quoted that panel members — members of the retired and active-duty military committees, the post commander and the local Army medical activity commander — will have a particularly close insight into military medical problems.

King honored during commemoration

By Ron Allen

"The real Democratic American idea is, not that every man shall be on a level with every other, but that everyone shall have liberty, without hindrance, to be what God made him," Maj. Gen. Kenneth C. Leuer quoted Henry Ward Beecher, as he began his opening remarks at this year's commemorative ceremony of the anniversary of the birthday of the Reverend Dr. Martin Luther King Jr.

"In my mind, Dr. King represented all Americans," Leuer said. "Yes, we identify him with blacks seeking equal rights, but he did much more than getting blacks to the front of the bus, into schools with whites and the right to vote without restrictions. He energized our nation to look inward, and we saw that we had a long way to go as far as giving everyone a chance to be what God made us, without hindrance.

"His movement spurred us to take steps to give to all people their God-given right to equal opportunity, no matter what the sex, the handicap, the religion or color of that individual," Leuer said.

After Leuer's remarks, he welcomed the guest speaker, Claire Freeman, as a dedicated warrior for equal treatment.

Freeman is the first woman to hold the position of deputy assistant secretary of defense for Civilian Personnel Policy in the Office of the Assistant Secretary of Defense for Force Management and personnel.

In that capacity, she formulates and implements policy on personnel and equal opportunity practices for more than one million civilians in the defense department.

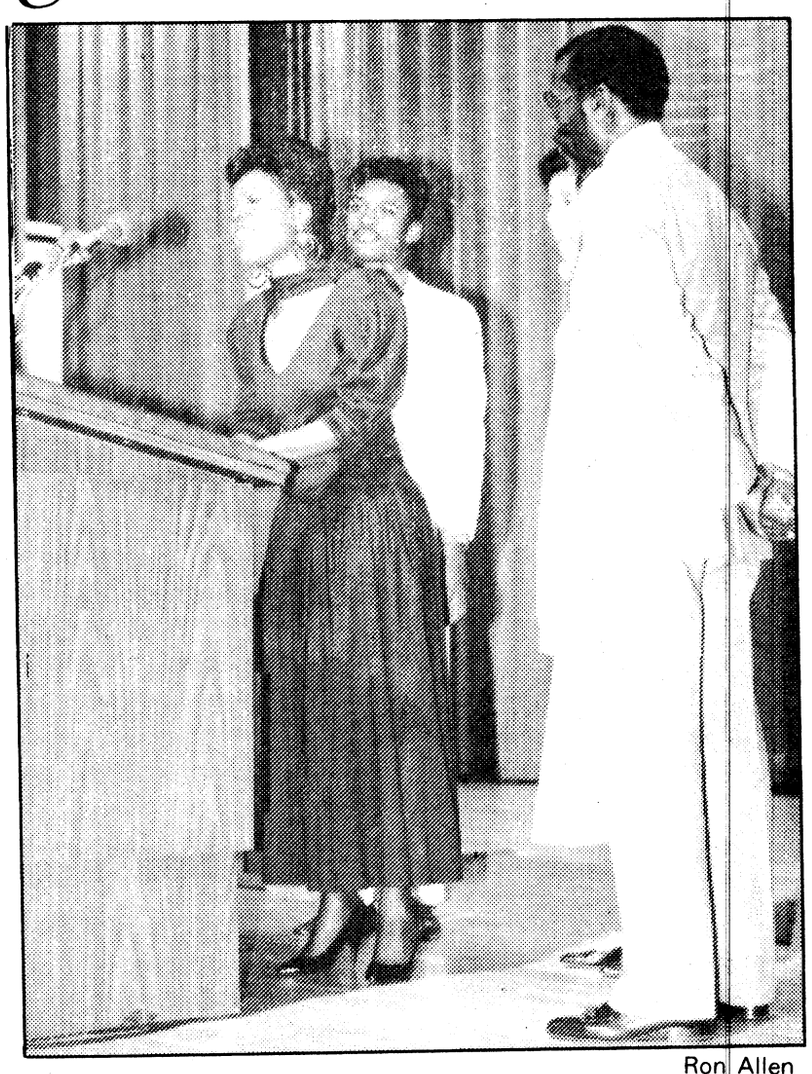
She is also the principal representative for her department to the office of personnel management, equal opportunity commission, federal labor relations authority, the merit systems protection board, labor unions and other labor and personnel organizations.

"In other words," Leuer said, "She is the guru for seeing to it that the rights of our civilian federal employees are protected and also that we do not discriminate against potential employees for any reason."

Freeman began her remarks by asking the audience to join her in prayer. She ask that the Lord use all of us as a vehicle to reaffirm the commitment to Doctor King's work and to make his dream come true.

"Martin Luther King Jr. was a dreamer of magnificent dreams," she said. "Not just for this country but for all of mankind."

"I think King would be pleased with the progress," she continued. "But, he would be concerned with the lack of knowledge of history about his period."



"What are you, what are we doing to educate the children," she asked.

"I challenge you to take a personal responsibility for teaching the children," she said. "Teach them to be children of the world and to stand up against discrimination and prejudice anywhere they find it."

"Let us not forget and let's not allow our children to become ignorant of this era," she said.

Freeman concluded her remarks by quoting Plato. "Justice will be achieved only when those who are not injured feel as indignant as those who are," she said.

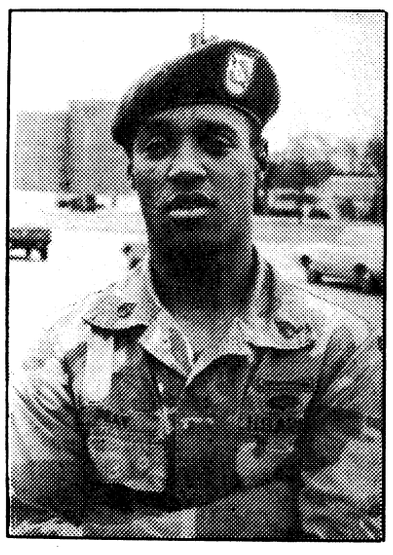
Benning schools make up day

By Beth Middlemiss
Fort Benning Schools

Jan. 29 will be a regular school day for all students in the eight schools in the Fort Benning School system.



Because students are required by current Georgia legislation to attend 180 days each year, the teacher work day scheduled on the Fort Benning Schools 1987-88 School Calendar has been eliminated to provide a make-up day for the day missed on Jan. 8 due to inclement weather.

The Jan. 29 make-up day was chosen so that days would not have to be added to the school year in June. If no additional days are missed due to inclement weather, the school year will end on schedule June 7.

Parents are urged to mark their calendars to reflect this change.

Snively reflects on meaning of life

By Clyde Snively
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Ever wonder what your reaction would be if you were told you had "no more tomorrows?"

We see programs on TV or hear about people who are told they have six months or a year to live. We think briefly what this would mean to us, then quickly put it out of our minds. It's not something we like to dwell on.

This weekend a former soldier, still in her 20s, was told she had six weeks left.

The cancer had won the early rounds, stripped her of most of her insides, left her even too weak to walk. But surgery, therapy and a warrior's determination to win had her going into the 10th round ahead on points.

Sure, she'd lost 40 pounds off a 120-pound, five-foot-four frame. Sure, she still couldn't stand or walk erect. But she had cancer up against the ropes.

A pain she'd never admit to racked her body. But she was coming back. She was taking ever longer walks with her husband, John. She was back to teaching children the fine points of dressage and how to get their ponies over the two-bar jumps.

She was even getting ready to resume her journalism career, as a civilian now. But then cancer leashed out with a rabbit punch when she wasn't looking.

Knocked to the canvass, she watched helplessly as the referee began the 10-count.

I met Marjorie when she reported for her first duty assignment at Fort Drum. A new PFC, fresh out of the Army's journalism school, she was full of apprehension.

She avoided officers like the plague, always checking to see if any were about before venturing out, not wanting to have to salute them for fear she'd be yelled at for doing it wrong or for wearing her field jacket without her black gloves.

But put a note pad and pencil in her hands, and she'd go one-on-one with anyone, no matter how many stars that person might be wearing.

It didn't take long for the public affairs officer to recognize talent and make her the editor of the post newspaper, a position she held for nearly three years.

During that time she worked her way up to the rank of sergeant and taught real-world journalism to school-trained soldier journalists. She taught them the meaning of deadlines by keeping them in the office until 2 a.m. in order for the paper to get out on time.

On the surface, Marjorie was just another soldier who had trouble balancing her hat atop her French braids, whose white socks would peak out between her boot tops and bloused trouser legs.

What set her apart from others was her competitiveness. Her zeal to win, be it at the newspaper or on the PT field.

On the PT field, she regularly won the post's top woman PT trophy, knocking out in excess of 70 men-style pushups and situps and running the two-miles in under 14 minutes.

Then early one day she was taking her PT test for the National Guard. She was doing pushups when she collapsed in pain. Rushed to the local hospital, she was diagnosed as having cancer.

She'd been harboring a killer inside her. A killer that gone undetected far too long.

When we think of the Marjorie Eberts, who passed through our lives as we move from one duty station to another, we give pause to wonder, "did we let that person know just how much we appreciated him or her at the time."

I wonder. I hope I thanked Marjorie.

Reserve Component training is main topic of Strategy Task Force meeting held recently

By Scott Erickson
Headquarters, Fifth U.S. Army

FORT MONROE, Va. — In the spirit of the Army's theme "Training," there was no better subject than Reserve Component training to be discussed at the Reserve Component Training Strategy Task Force hosted by Fifth Army at Fort Sam Houston, Texas.

More than 20 general officers, including the Army's five continental Army commanders who oversee Reserve Component training, gathered to review and address the development of a major new training initiative; a Reserve Component Training Strategy for the future.

The participants represented the Department of Defense; Department of the Army; U.S. Army Forces Command; U.S. Army Training and Doctrine Command; U.S. Army Health Services Command; U.S. Army Western Command; the Army National Guard and the U.S. Army Reserve.

The Reserve Component Training Strategy effort was kicked off last year by Army Chief of Staff Gen Carl Vuono, who charged the commanding generals of TRADOC and FORSCOM to "determine how the Army can best design a comprehensive strategy for training the Reserve Components in the future." Lt. Gen. John Crosby, deputy commanding general for Training, TRADOC, and Lt. Gen. Andrew Chambers, DCG, FORSCOM, co-chair of the task force.

The guiding principle for the task force was to provide a creative look at the unique training problems and challenges faced by Reserve Component soldiers and units.

It's mission is to provide a systematic and enduring training action plan for adoption by the Total Army, which can fully implemented by 1990.

Now that Reserve Component Forces provide 52 percent of the Army's total combat and 28 percent of the total support force, trainers are taking a hard look at training effectiveness in the Reserve Forces. What they have been finding is that Active Component and Reserve Component training are very different challenges.

As Col. Ben Covington III, president of the Army Training Board, said. "Almost everything about training the Reserve Components is unique due to the factors of time, geographic dispersion, command structure and soldier turbulence."

Reserve Component units generally have about 41 days of paid training, but it is broken into small sections, usually a weekend a month, plus two weeks of annual training at a major training area. Administrative burdens imposed by many levels of higher headquarters further limit available training time.

Geographic dispersion of the more than 4,600 RC units throughout the United States and several territories isolates many units and requires travel time to coordinate even the simplest actions.

The command structure of the Army National Guard, which has dual federal and state missions, is complex, but not as much as the USAR, which has Continental Army Commands (CONUSAs), Major United States Army Commands (MUSARCs) composed of Army Reserve Commands (ARCOMs) or General Officer Commands (GOCOMs) with geographical or functional responsibilities, respectively.

The Active Component soldier has long cherished the myth that the Reserve Component units were much more stable and suffered less personnel turbulence than the active unit. In fact, the Reserve, Component turnover rate is relatively much more severe and in terms of training impact, would compare to an active unit annual turnover of 180 percent. All of these factors combined make training the Reserve Component soldier and unit a much tougher task for Reserve Component commanders than for their active counterparts. Acknowledging these significant differences is the first step toward changing the active component mind — set toward reserve training.

According to Lt. Gen. Crosby. "The most important thing we got from this meeting with the Continental United States Army commanders and members of the General Officer Steering Committee members was a consensus and valuable input on the main thrust of the Reserve Components training strategy."

Specific agreements were reached by all parties in several areas.

The Task Force has developed a basic framework for Reserve Component training including the professional development of Reserve Component officers and NCOs. Leadership training is an essential element in the overall training strategy. In the spirit of cooperation generated by the Task Force, FORSCOM, Office of the Chief of Army Reserve and the National Guard Bureau agreed to reduce duplication of effort in conducting individual training programs.

It was agreed that additional priority needs to be placed on in training devices, simulators, and simulations for the Reserves. Training aids, devices, and simulators are important in times of austere budget cuts, but are always central to effective Reserve Component training, which is inherently decentralized.

The Task Force found strong support for a need to prioritize individual soldier tasks and unit ARTEP missions to those minimum essential tasks for survival and success in the primary combat missions.

"I believe we should go after the minimum essential tasks that are necessary for a soldier to do his job. A combat service support unit should only train in those tasks specified in its mission," Crosby said

Covington added, "We have to permit Reserve Components to focus their training on a set of minimum critical missions and tasks; achieve excellence in those and sustain that excellence."

Other areas covered included training the Individual Ready Reserve, managing training from Army to unit level, post mobilization training, training support, the impact of force modernization, military occupational skill qualification, proficiency and evaluation.

By the end of the session, there was a positive atmosphere that significant progress was being made on an issue of vital importance to conventional force readiness. As Lt. Gen William Schneider, commander of Fifth Army and conference host, put it, "In general, everybody was on the same sheet of music — supportive of the Reserve Component

Family Advocacy Program provides family counseling

By Sharon Reynolds
Bayonet staff

Nothing can tear a family apart faster and more completely than spouse or child abuse. The Army, looking out for its own, provides for a specialized program, The Army Family Advocacy Program, located in building 2640, Splinter Village, to help prevent spouse and child abuse and its resulting problems.

This agency, which falls under the direction of Army Community Services, identifies, treats and rehabilitates the abuser in addition to treating the abused. The philosophy of the program is to provide the services Army families need to maintain a sound quality of life.

"This program is worthwhile and very much needed," said Debra Howell, AFAP social worker and Battered Wives Shelter coordinator.

The programs sponsored by AFAP are Command Consultation, Emergency Foster Care, Battered Wives Shelter, Support Services and Referral.

Just because a service is available doesn't necessarily mean it will be used. Command Consultation helps increase the chain of command's awareness of services and support available from AFAP. Presentations on such topics as communication skills, stress management, anger control and conflict resolution, are available to all units and to soldiers and their family members. They may be arranged by calling 545-7517.

Emergency Foster Care is an AFAP program that provides care for children when both parents are unable to do so. The child care is provided by on-post certified child care providers at no cost to the parents. According to Howell, this program is most often used in situations where one parent is hospitalized and the other is not available or unable to care for the children.

Abused spouses and their minor dependents can look to the Battered Wives Shelter for a safe haven.

"The shelter is a safe, secret place where family members can go once there is an incident or threat," Howell said. Women do not have to wait to be referred, according to Howell. If they fear for their or their children's safety, they can call 545-7517. The location of the shelter, and the name of anyone using it is confidential.

The shelter is staffed by a host of volunteers. According to Howell, running the shelter would not be possible without their valuable input of time

When a case of abuse is reported, either by hospital report, military police report, unit referral or self referral, the couple is referred to Support Services to talk to the AFAP social worker, Howell said. She provides short-term, usually one session, counseling to individuals or families experiencing personal or marital difficulties. Howell explained that she doesn't give couples a plan to follow to work out their problems. "I let them come up with a plan with my direction. They do it, instead of me doing it for them, she said. It gives them motivation to work things out."

Support Services provides more than an abuse counseling service. "I don't want people to think of the AFAP social worker as just the person who counsels in spouse abuse cases," Howell said. "I'd like to be thought of as a counselor who can provide a coordination of services, and someone who can help people develop self help skills."

After Howell has made her initial assessment of a family experiencing spouse abuse, she then make referrals for long-term counseling as needed. She usually refers them to Social Work Services here.

Not all problems can be solved by AFAP, according to Howell, but it is a place where family members can come together on neutral ground to look for a solutions.

Watch for Substance Abuse survey

By Evelyn D. Harris
American Forces Information Service

Heads up! A computer may select you — along with 19,999 others from all ranks and all services — to take part in the "1988 Worldwide Survey of Substance Abuse and Other Health Behaviors."

According to Air Force Lt. Col. Michael R. Peterson, senior policy analyst for preventive medicine and health promotion, Office of the Assistance Secretary of Defense (Health Affairs), the survey is completely confidential.

If selected, you'll be answering questions about drugs, alcohol and tobacco use as well as other habits that affect your health. The survey will be conducted in February and March.

The 1988 survey will update informaion collected in the "1985 Worldwide Survey of Alcohl and Non-medical Drug Use Among Military Personnel." However, some questions may differ from 1985. In addition, service members will be quizzed concerning their diets and exercise habits.

Research Triangle Institute, a private company, will conduct the 1988 survey for DoD. The institute conducted the previous worldwide surveys and is now comparing data from the 1985 military survey with civilian data such as that collected by the Public Health Service's National Institute on Drug Abuse.

The 1985 survey showed that drug use by military people is steadily decreasing. For example, only seven percent of all personnel reported using marijuana in the 30 days prior to completing the survey — down from 22 percent in 1982 and 37 percent in 1980.

DoD health promotion officials hope the latest survey will show another decline. In addition, they hope to learn more about the role their health promotion efforts have played in producing a force that is healthier and more ready.

Army offers new reenlistment options

Army News Service

Beginning March 1 as part of a test that runs through July 30, soldiers will have the opportunity to take advantage of new reenlistment options.

Here is a breakdown of the new options.

Beginning March 1, soldiers who elect to reenlist for an Army service school for retraining will be given the opportunity to select their next duty assignments before reenlisting, provided they reenlist for six years.

Soldiers may either select a stateside assignment of choice or an overseas area assignment of choice based on new military occupational speciality, according to Army Personnel officials.

Soldiers who elect to reenlist for current station stabilization of 12 months or more may elect a choice of assignment following the completion of the stabilization. This option carries with it a five-year reenlistment for soldiers who choose a 12-month stabilization. A six-year reenlistment will be required of soldiers overseas who choose a stabilization period of more than 12 months and up to 18 months. According to officials, soldiers in the United States are limited to a maximum of 12 months stabilization with this option.

For those soldiers electing to reenlist for an assignment in a short-tour area such as Korea, and who reenlist for five years, will be able to select their new stateside duty station upon completion of the tour, say officials.

Beginning March 1, first term soldiers who enlist for two years may elect to reenlist for three, four, five or six years if they elect to reenlist for one of the options listed above.

On Dec. 29, 1987, other reenlist changes went into affect. One of the changes applies to midcareer soldiers who are within eight months of ETS and have received CAP III assignment instructions. These soldiers may request deletion from this assignment provided — they agree to reenlist for six years with a minimum stabilization of 12 months if stateside and 24 months if overseas; and the soldier serves in a short or balanced MOS.

Another change involves soldiers overseas. These soldiers may elect stabilization in monthly increments of between 12 and 24 months, the officials say.

Some reenlistment options now carry longer reenlistment period requirements. Soldiers reenlisting for retraining at an Army service school that are more than eight weeks must now reenlist for a minimum of four years.

Soldiers reenlisting for an assignment to a long-tour overseas area must reenlist for five years or more. Those who elect an assignment to a short-tour area must reenlist for a minimum of four years.

The language school reenlistment option now requires a minimum of a four year reenlistment.

10th Mountain men learn from 'Operation Avalanche' exercise

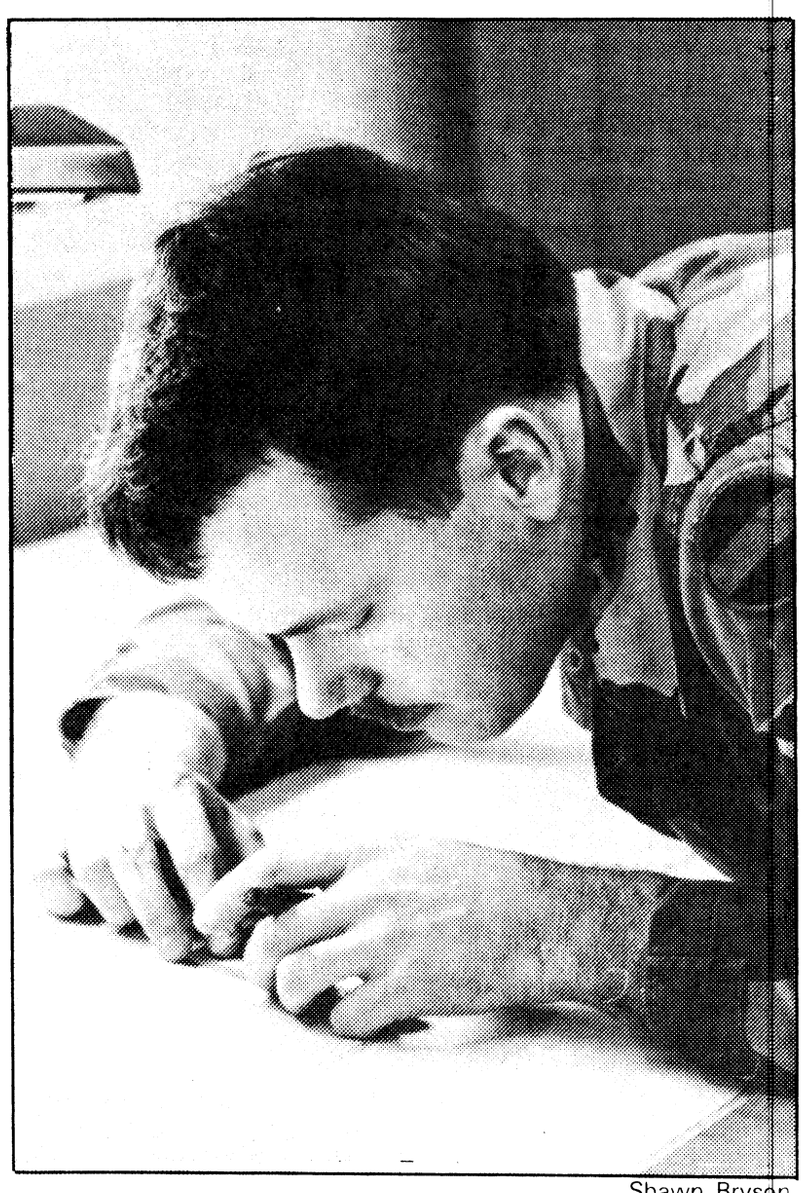
By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

Ann M. McDonald

The aggressors lay low in the prone position ready to fire on the enemy.

"Operation Avalanche" was the high point of a three-day training exercise for soldiers from Company B, 2nd Battalion, 14th Infantry, 10th Mountain Division.

Their mission: attack a MOUT site on the Alabama countryside via air insertion, assault the enemy and fly back out within 15 minutes.



Within that fifteen minutes grenades flew, plastic explosives were detonated sending broken glass flying everywhere. But, soldiers charged on not letting anything stop them from accomplishing their mission.

The men were in and out almost within a blink of an eye.

According to Sgt Maj. Thomas Arthur, Bde. HQ, 10th Mtn. Div. this is the most realistic training these soldiers can go through.

"This is exactly what our mission will be during a real wartime situation," he said, "and it's an excellent opportunity for company commanders to evaluate their troops."

The whole operation was made possible by a local farmer who donated his land so 10th Mountain soldiers can reach their highest level of readiness.

Benning MPs guard Cuban prisoners

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

Fort Benning MPs plan their stategy for guarding Cuban prisoners at the Fort Gordon Detention Facility.

A platoon of Fort Benning Military Police has been sent to Fort Gordon's detention facility to guard Cuban prisoners sent from the Atlanta Prison.

This is part of their mission as a combat support element.

According to 988th Military Police Company commander, Capt. Daniel Anderson, the MPs there patrol the outside perimeter of the prison. He said the federal government is providing security for inside the facility.

He said the reason the Cubans are being detained at the Fort Gordon facility rather than here is the location of Fort Benning's Detention Facility.

"Our facility is located right in the center of main post whereas theirs is about two miles away from their main area. This is the recommended placement and the usual standard for a military prison."

Anderson said there is a guard posted at each of the four corners of the compound with a two-man mobile patrol.

"They are working with a platoon of MPs from Fort Lee, Va." he said. "The officer in charge of my men is in charge of the entire operation."

Anderson said the platoons are staying in World War II barracks. No determination has been made as to when they will be returned to their respective units.

His people were given 48-hours notice to prepare for this deployment. Along with them, they took their basic issues of clothing, their MP gear, which included weapons and ammunition, and several vehicles.

Anderson said the reduction of Benning's MP force in no way affects post security here.

"Our men do have less free time, but that is part of our mission. We work 24-hours a day, seven-days a week, 365-days a year keeping Fort Benning crime free."

Engineer S-3 section plays major role in construction

By Shawn Bryson
36th Engineer Group correspondent

Fort Benning has a number of construction projects planned for 1988 and the 43rd Engineer Battalion, 36th Engineer Group will undoubtedly be involved in many of them.

However, many people of the Fort Benning community don't realize what kind of work goes into a construction project before the carpenters, plumbers, masons and earth movers of the 43rd commence construction.

An interesting crew of soldiers from the 36th Eng. Grp. play a large role in the construction process of the 43rd soldiers. They are the soldiers of the construction office of the group S-3 section.

A construction office is hardly common to unit S-3 sections throughout the Army but is an extremely valuable aspect of an engineer unit, according to Capt. Ralph Hok, Group Construction officer. "Due to the unique nature of the mission of the 36th Eng. Grp., which is to provide construction support to the Fort Benning community, our office is designed to manage the construction of the 43rd Eng. Bn.," Hok explained.

The management of such construction is no small task, according to the 36th Eng. Grp. construction inspector, SFC Robert Hammel. "Last year, we managed and provided guidance to the 43rd soldiers on the 110 construction projects they were given," Hammel said.

Hammel added that the projects come in a wide variety of sizes. "We receive construction projects as small as renovating an office to as large as constructing a drop zone for airborne students," Hammel commented.

Once the construction office receives a proposed construction directive, which is often just an idea without a formal set of plans, Hammel and Hok meet with the people for whom the construction is being done to discuss the exact needs of the

43rd Engineers put final touches on HMMV garage

By Todd A. Wang
43rd Engineer Battalion correspondent

Since Aug. 6, 1987, 1st Platoon, Company B, 43rd Engineer Battalion has been working on the most extensive project accepted by the battalion in the past year. Now, at the end of January, the platoon is putting the finishing touches on the Air Force's HMMV garage, located in Harmony Church, near the Clothing Issue Facility.

The 507th TACP, the Air Force unit requesting the construction of the 7200-square-foot parking facility, serves the 197th Infantry Brigade, the 3rd Battalion Infantry (Ranger) Regiment and the 10th Mountain Division with close air support missions and highly sophisticated radio systems.

To transport the equipment, the Air Force recently purchased a large quantity of HMMVs. As a result, they needed a new storage facility for the radios and vehicles. The garage built by 1st Platoon can store sixteen HMMVs and contains an office and radio parts storage room.

Although construction was not completed, a dedication ceremony was held on Dec. 17, to recognize 1st Platoon's tremendous efforts.

The garage was built "from the ground up" involving earth moving, masonry and carpentry, as well as electrical and concrete work.

From project managements to concrete finsish work, the platoon labored long and hard to give the 507th TACP outstanding results. Everyone involved with the garage benefitted, especially the Air Force, saving $310,000.00 in labor costs alone. For 1st Platoon, it was a rare opportunity to train on such a diversified construction project.

Engrs.assist DEH

By Mark Moffat
43rd Engineer Battalion adjutant

Soldiers from Equipment Platoon, HSC, 43rd Engineer Battalion (C)(H) were called on to assist DEH during the recent winter storm. According to Sgt. Gregory Senski, NCOIC, the headquarters soldiers hauled sand to replenish the stockpile at DEH and helped spread several truckloads of sand on icy roads and bridges.

Despite the hazardous driving conditions, the soldiers hauled and spread more than 120-cubic yards of sand, working until after midnight to help make driving on post safer for everybody.

2nd Bn, 14th Inf gets new commander

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Lt. Col. Wayne M. Barth assumed command of the 2nd Battalion, 14th Infantry Regiment, 10th Mountain Division, Friday at Weatherby Field.

Col. Larry J. Smith left the 2nd Battalion command slot for an interim assignment at the Combat Development Branch, U.S. Army Infantry School, where he will serve for five months, after which he will attend the Army War College at Carlisle Barracks, Pa.

Barth comes to Benning after completing the battalion pre-command course at Forts Leavenworth and Benning. Before that, he was the chief, Colonel's Division, 1st Personnel Command, in Europe.

He is a graduate of the Infantry Officer Basic and Advanced courses, Command and General Staff College, Ranger School and Airborne School.

He was commissioned in the Regular Army upon graduation from the U.S. Military Academy in 1970, with a Bachelor of Science degree. He earned a Master of Science degree from Texas A & M University and a Master of Business administration from the Sloan School of Business, Long Island University.

His awards and decorations include the Expert Infantryman's Badge, Master Parachutist Badge, Ranger Tab, Meritorious Service Medal with 2nd Oak Leaf Cluster, Army Commendation Medal with 2nd Oak Leaf Cluster and the Army Achievement Medal.

197th CSM retires, turns over top slot

USAIC Public Affairs

The command sergeant major of the 197th Infantry Brigade will retire Jan. 21 at 3 p.m. in a ceremony at Artillery Field on Kelley Hill, turning over the unit's top enlisted spot to a new leader.

Approximately 550 troops and the 283rd Army Band will pass in review of CSM William D. Bell, whose position will be assumed by CSM Tony L. Salter.

Col. William W. Hartzog, deputy commanding general of Fort Benning and former commander of the 197th, will be the guest speaker.

Capt. Clarence Pittman III, 197th Inf. Bde. public affairs officer (544-1487 or 544-1411) can provide more information.

"customer". When a plan of attack has been agreed upon, the technical drafting specialists of the office come into play, according to Hammel.

If drafts are needed, the drafting specialists visit the site of the project to take measurements and get a better understanding of what they'll be drawing.

"We drafting specialists, are kind of the right hands of our supervisors. They explain exactly what needs to be drawn up, and we draw it up," explained SP4 Homero Soto III, drafting specialist for the Group.

"Our technical knowledge is vitally important to the successful completion of the 43rd's construction missions," said SP4 Charles Meroney, another drafter for the group construction office.

When the project has been drawn up, a Bill of Materials is completed and includes the funded costs of the project such as wood, nails and insulation, for example, Hammel explained that unfunded costs such as man hours, maintenance of equipment and gasoline to be used in the project are also included in the BOM.

The final plans of the construction office are then sent back to post headquarters for approval Hammel said.

"It is estimated that construction projects done by our office and the 43rd soldiers are one-third the cost local contractors would charge," Hammel said.

Getting everything is no guarantee for happiness

By Chap. Lee Dudley
2nd ITB Chapel

Probably four out of five people, if you stopped them on the street and asked them what they wanted most in life, would say "happiness." It is indicative of the lost, purposeless, condition of modern man, that one would settle for almost any destiny that would provide happiness. Aspirations such as getting married, getting ahead in their profession, getting an education are fine objectives, but they are no guarantees for happiness.

Have you noticed how often it happens that as soon as we get something that we have been striving for, something else turns up unexpectedly to cause us worry and anxiety? Men and women struggle for years getting out of debt, only to discover that they have become strangers to their spouses and children, and the home is threatened. A long desired promotion finally comes along with the discovery that we cannot get along with the boss.

Most of us, fortunately, have learned that getting what we want is no guarantee of happiness. It leaves us a little puzzled and confused, feeling a little bit as though the world were unfair to us. We aren't sure what it would take to make us happy, but whatever it is, most of us are sure we have not found it yet.

One sure way of finding peace in the face of adversity is contentment. The virtue of contentment results from having turned over to God the management of one's life. The will of God for our lives is most often revealed to us in circumstances. Contentment is defined as that virtue which consists of the disposition to act in accordance with right reason about circumstances. Placing our lives in God's hands results in contentment.

Every one of us is presented circumstances with innumerable daily opportunities to practice this great virtue of contentment. Those who wish to develop a mature and noble character as an offering to God will not resent those circumstances, but rejoice in them. When we have found some good use for a bad circumstance, it is no longer bad but good — an opportunity to see God in our lives. Those who have made up their minds to let God run their lives and who realize that God's will is revealed in the circumstances of daily lives, who have made use of adversity for the cultivation of character for God's sake are not unhappy people. They don't need to know where they are going, because they are content to let God guide them day by day. They don't need to know what will make them happy, for they know that God knows, and He is part of their lives. Find such a person, and you will see contentment at its highest.

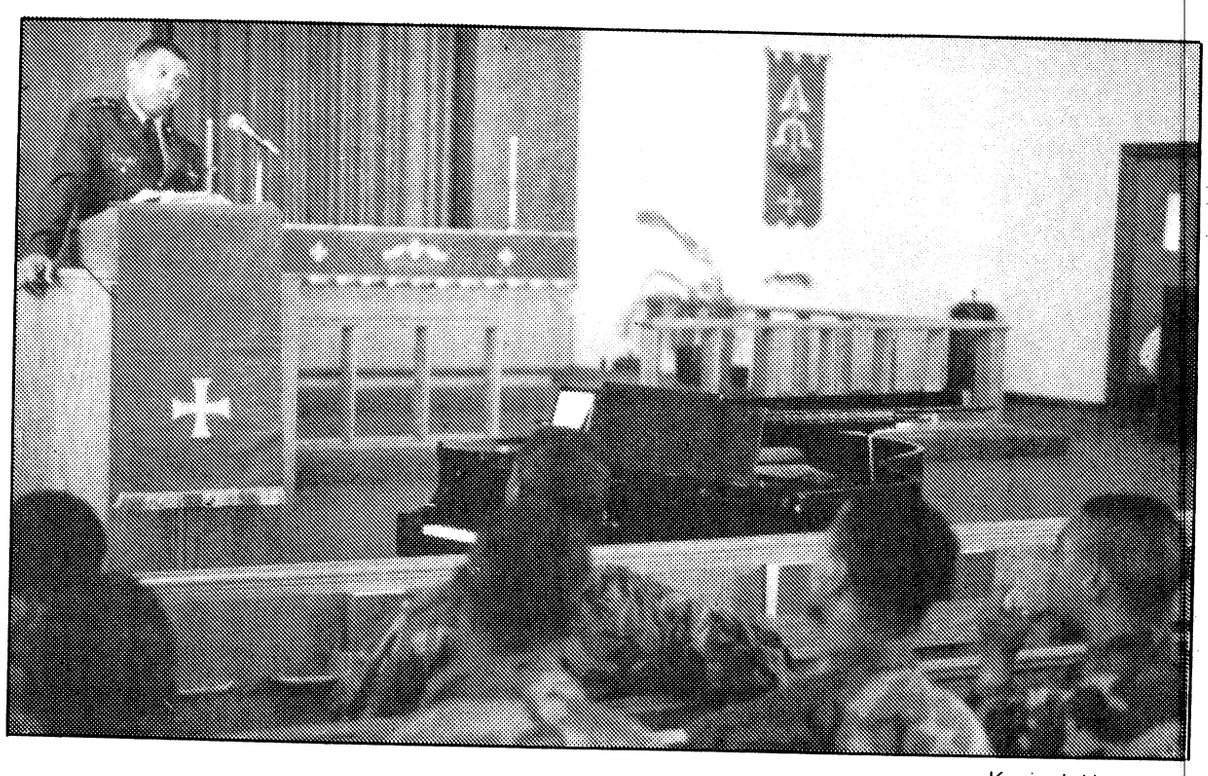
"This is the day which the Lord has made; Let us rejoice and be glad in it."

Prayer Breakfast set for Feb. 9

USAIC Chaplain's Office

Fort Benning's Annual National Prayer Breakfast for 1988 will be held at the Main NCO Club Feb. 9 at 6:30 a.m.

Last year's breakfast was the largest ever at Fort Benning with 500 people filling the club's ballroom to maximum capacity as Army Chief of Chaplains Maj. Gen. Norris L. Einertson spoke on the blessings of peacemakers.



Maximum attendance is expected again this year as post leaders at all levels, military and civilian will gather to hear Col. (Ret.) Ben Purcell speak on the importance of spiritual and moral strength in dealing with adversity. Purcell is uniquely qualified as a subject matter expert having been detained as a POW in Vietnam for 62 months, 58 of which he spent in solitary confinement.

For more than 30 years, Purcell served our country with distinction in command and staff positions ranging from platoon leader to brigade commander.

In addition to his time in Vietnam, he also had extensive combat experience in Korea.

After being released from a North Vietnam POW camp in March 1973 as the senior Army officer detainee, he continued his active duty service for seven more years before retiring in August 1980.

Among his many awards and decorations are the Bronze Star with Oak Leaf Cluster, Silver Star with Oak Leaf Cluster, Purple Heart and the Combat Infantryman's Badge.

President Reagan urges Americans to get involved in National Prayer Day

National Prayer Committee

SAN BERNADINO, Calif. — May 5, 1988 marks the thirty-sixth consecutive observance of the National Day of Prayer. The National Day of Prayer Task Force and its parent, the National Prayer Committee, have joined with President Reagan to urge all Americans to become personally involved in the observance.

National days of prayer have been part of our country's heritage since the first one was declared by the Continental Congress in 1775. With the encouragement of Benjamin Franklin for "prayers imploring the assistance of Heaven," our founding fathers sought the wisdom of God while framing our United States Constitution.

"As we reflect on the vital role of prayer in the foundation of our Constitution 200 years ago, it is important to realize that the need for Americans to pray is as great today as it was during the establishment of our nation," stated Vonette Bright, co-chairman with entertainer/author, Pat Boone, of the National Day of Prayer Task Force.

The task force is responsible for coordinating and distributing information and materials to interested individuals around the country. Its goal is to help make citizens aware of their right, privilege and responsibility to pray for our nation, its leaders and its people on this historic day.

A network of state and city coordinators and sponsoring churches from many denominations are encouraging individual and group prayer as well as special services and gatherings. A national television special is also under consideration for May 5.

In his 1987 proclamation, President Reagan stated, "On our National Day of Prayer, then, we join together as people of many faiths to petition God to show us His mercy and His love, to heal our weariness and uphold our hope, that we might live ever mindful of His justice and thankful for His blessing."

The President further urged "...the citizens of this great nation to gather together on tht day in homes and places of worship to pray, each after his or her own manner, for unity of the hearts of all mankind."

Ministries respresented on the National Prayer Committee include the Salvation Army, World Vision, Inter-Varsity Christian Fellowship, Campus Crusade for Christ, Youth With A Mission, United Prayer Ministries, Change the World Ministries, International Prayer Ministry and Support for Action.

Prayers sought for POW/MIAs

National League of POW MIA Families

The National League of POW/MIA Families is appealing to the American people for prayers to be raised in unity throughout the country for more than 2,400 Americans still held prisoner, missing and unaccounted for as a result of the Vietnam Conflict.

Calling for unity in prayer for POW/MIAs Jan. 31, the POW/MIA families hope to be joined by the active duty military community, veterans and millions of Americans in an ecumenical effort seeking divine intercession to return their missing loved ones — alive and dead who have for so many years been separated from their families and their homeland.

People of all faiths are asked to pray for those still missing, for their families, for the President as he strives to resolve this tragic legacy of the Vietnam conflict and for the leaders of Vietnam, Laos and Cambodia within whose power it is to return America's sons.

We ask everyone to devote a few moments in prayerful support of resolving this truly humanitarian concern Jan. 31.

72nd Engineers lay AVLB across Upatoi Creek

Kevin J. Howerton
Soldiers from the 72nd Eng. Co. (Combat), set an Armored Vehicle Launch Bridge (AVLB) across Upatoi Creek.

Rain along with heavy mud adds to European realism

By Kevin J. Howerton
197th Infantry Brigade correspondent

"The weather is perfect," said 2nd Lt. Jeffery K.S. Kim, as the rain poured off his wet-weather top and his boots sank into the heavy mud.

"I imagine this is what it will be like if we're deployed to northern Europe," explained the platoon leader for the 72nd Engineer Company (Combat).

The platoon was preparing to lay an Armored Vehicle Launch Bridge (AVLB) across Upatoi Creek. A task force from Company D, 1st Battalion, 58th Infantry, crossed the bridge on night maneuvers.

"Many of the Armored Personnel Carrier drivers aren't familiar with crossing on an AVLB," said Kim.

The exercise began with soldiers from the 72nd Eng. and Co. D, 1st Bn., 58th Inf., being airlifted across to secure the far shore.

A slight break in the rain allowed the UH-60 Blackhawk helicopter to land by a small cemetery, blowing mud and wet sand in all directions.

One soldier was heard to ask, "Did you get a mouthful of mud too?"

Mine detectors were used to sweep the area leading up to the bridge site.

It was near dark before the huge AVLB worked its way down the muddy slope to the edge of the water. By the time the bridge was operational, it was completely dark.

"The entire task force will be moving across tonight," said SFC Hosea J. Williams, of the 72nd Eng. "The engineers will set up Engineer Regulating Points to control the traffic across the bridge."

Even though the wet weather was a factor, the units bridge crossing was successful.

Black History Month to be celebrated

American Forces Information Service

This February, members of the U.S. armed forces and DoD civilian employees will be learning more about the role black Americans played in making the United States strong and free.

The theme for the 1988 observation of Black History Month is "The Constitutional Status of Afro-Americans into the 21st Century."

According to DoD's deputy director for military equal opportunity, Marine Corps Maj. Merle Schneide, the idea of this year's theme is to increase awareness of the constitutional rights guaranteed Americans regardless of race, creed or sex, as well as the duty of all Americans to defend these rights.

Credit for the idea of setting aside a time for Americans to learn about black contributions to society belongs to the late historian and educator, Carter G. Woodson, a Harvard PhD who founded the Association of Afro-American Life and History.

In 1926, Woodson's association initiated Negro History Week during the week in February containing the birthdays of Abraham Lincoln (Feb. 12) and abolitionist and black leader Frederick Douglas (Feb. 14). Woodson hoped that a togetherness in the United States' racial groups would develop out of a mutual respect for their diverse backgrounds.

The popularity of the week continued to grow until it became national in scope.

During the country's Bicentennial celebration in 1976, Americans everywhere had a heightened interest in learning about the people from all ethnic groups who built this nation.

Therefore, the association expanded the week's celebration to the entire month to provide more time for programs, observances and celebrations. The observance has been a full month ever since.

The Department of Defense observes Black History Month every year in a variety of ways, from educational exhibits and newspaper articles and radio and television spots about blacks' contributions to the nation's defense, science, business and culture — to musical celebrations and the serving of "soul food" in the dining halls.

This years' observance in the Pentagon includes a kickoff celebration Feb. 10 supported by Secretary of Defense Frank Carlucci.

A principal guest speaker will be the country's only black four-star general, Gen. Bernard P. Randolph, commander, Air Force Systems Command.

U.S. Military ranks number one in public confidence

Army News Service

The public has more confidence in the U.S. Military than it does in the U.S. Supreme Court, according to the findings of a national survey conducted recently.

Although it shares first place with organized religion, this is the second year the American military has been ranked No. 1 in a public confidence survey.

The Religion Research Center, an affiliate of the Gallup Organization, surveyed 1,607 adults nationwide, said Colleen McMurray, managing editor of the "Gallup Report." She said that 61 percent of those surveyed consider the military and organized religion more dependable than other long-standing institutions.

The Supreme Court captured 52 percent of the public's confidence, followed by 51 percent for banks, 50 percent for public schools, 31 percent for newspapers, 28 percent for television and 26 percent for organized labor.

Gasoline taken for granted

By Becky Ray
Post Energy Office

A common form of energy that we easily take for granted is gasoline. Although it appears plentiful at the pump, oil is a non-renewable resource.

The largest percentage of oil used in the United States is imported, and reserves are being discovered at a much slower rate than we deplete them. Yet, most of us have become accustomed to lifestyles that leave us very dependent on petroleum products, the largest reserves of which are located in the Middle East and Soviet Union.

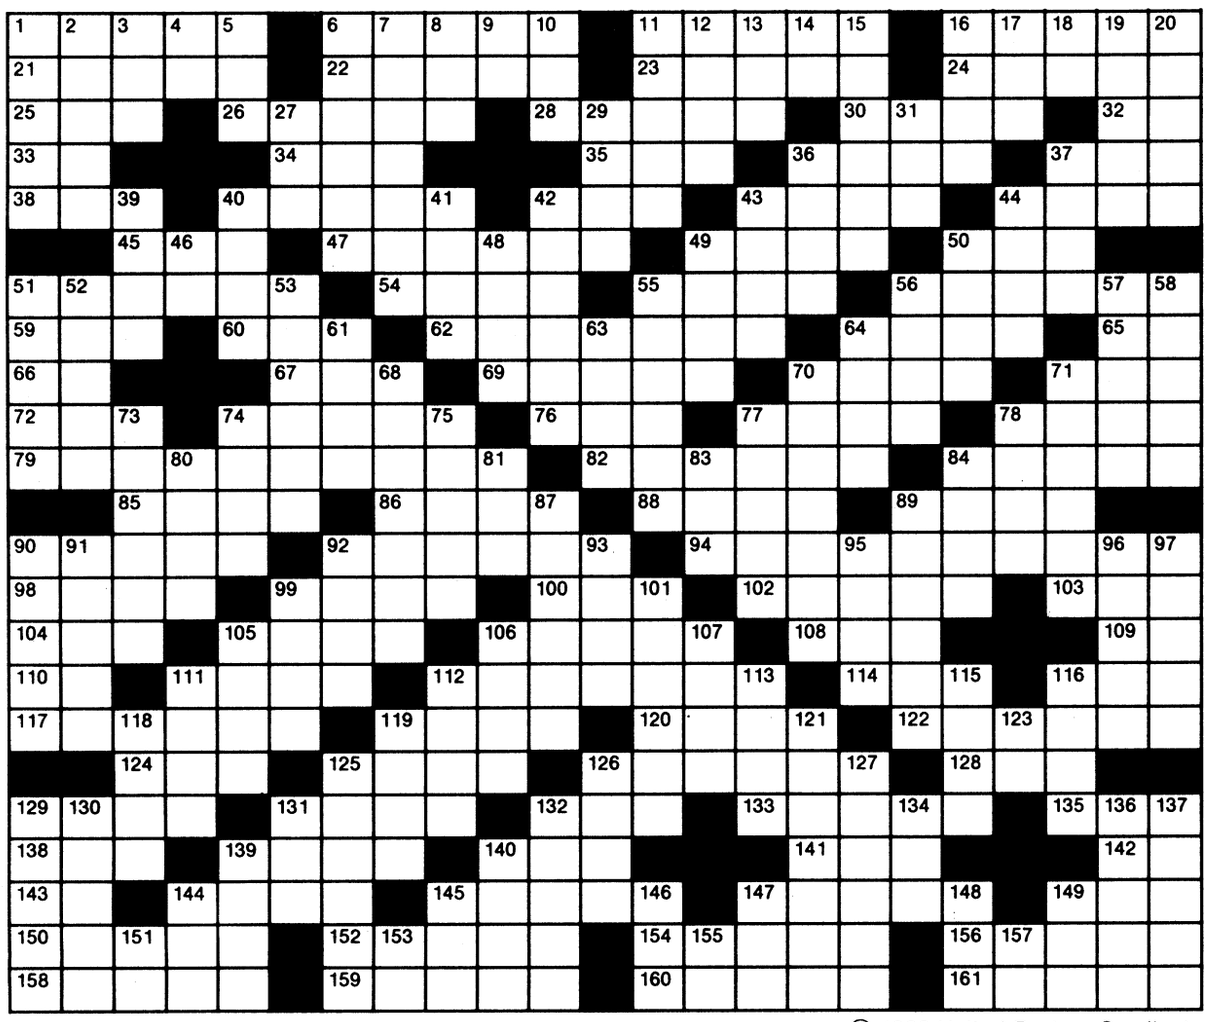
In order for the United States to become more energy independent, we must develop alternate forms of energy while we wean ourselves from oil.

Decreasing oil dependency can begin with such simple changes as walking rather than driving whenever possible. Eliminating unnecessary trips and consolidating errands can also save gas. Carpooling can be a major energy-saver, since about a third of private automobile mileage is used in commuting to and from work.

Keeping your car tuned up can save up to ten percent of gas consumption. Idling generally uses more gas than it takes to restart the vehicle, so should be avoided whenever possible.

Driving at the appropriate speed for maximum fuel economy conserves gas. On the highway, an average car gets 21 percent more miles per gallon at 55 miles per hour than at 70 miles per hour. Commanders and supervisors should stress speed limits set for government vehicles.

Attention to proper maintenance and tire inflation is also instrumental in conserving fuel.



Other conservation ideas are using foot movement to training areas whenever possible and using buses rather than several smaller vehicles to transport troops. Utilizing training areas closer to the unit can eliminate vehicle use.

It is necessary that we all do as much as we can to decrease our oil consumption and thus reduce our dependence on oil.

Because of the world political climate, economic uncertainty and the limited supply of oil in reserves, our blind dependence on oil is risky at best. We are certain to find making small changes in habits and lifestyles now much easier than being forced to change in many drastic ways later.

Turandot to play on radio

Peach State Public Radio

Puccini's final opera, Turandot, did not come easily to the composer. He was trying different methods and techniques, and the opera was left unfinished.

Sometime later, the opera was completed by Franco Alfano, and today, is frequently performed by opera companies throughout the world.

One performance is Live From the Met's presentation of Turandot to be broadcast Wednesday at 9 p.m. on Peach State Public Radio.

To add to your enjoyment of this classic opera, it will be simulcast with Georgia Public Television.

Franco Zeffirelli's production of Puccini's opera stars soprano Eva Marton singing the title role of the beautiful Eastern princess, one of Puccini's most fascinating heroines.

The cold, cruel princess will only marry the man who can correctly answer three riddles; the penalty for failure is death.

Renowned opera star Placido Domingo performs as the mysterious stranger, Prince Calaf, who is stunned by Turandot's beauty and vows to successfully meet her challenge.

Paul Plishka plays King Timur, Calaf's long-lost father, who tries to persuade his son not to attempt the trial.

Leon Mitchell stars as Liu, Timur's slave girl, who eventually gives her life to save Calaf.

U.S. Airlines offer furlough fare discounts

By Joanne L. Johnson
Transportation Division

The airlines offer furlough fare discounts ranging from 25 to 65 percent off regular coach fares year round with few or no restrictions.

They base their discounts on regular coach fares, so they can vary from route to route and change from day to day.

Both military and family members should be prepared to show their military identification cards to be eligible for the discounts.

USAir and TWA offer 50-percent discounts to active duty personnel on all of their routes. Eastern and USAir have also extended this same discount system wide to family members of active duty personnel.

All carriers offer discounts to active duty military.

For travel in the continental United States, Northwest's eligibility requirements also include Reservists, National Guard members and their family members when the sponsors are traveling in conjunction with active duty.

Pan American offers similar deals for overseas travel and also includes retirees in their list of eligibles.

Greyhound offers lowered prices on its 15- and 30-day passes for active duty and retired personnel and their family members. These passes permit unlimited travel nationwide throughout the recently merged carrier's system during the time period specified on the tickets.

The military purchase price of the 15-day pass is $119 versus the regular price of $249.

The reduced fare for the 30-day ticket is $169 versus the regular price of $349.

Children ages 5 to 11 travel for half the discount prices, a savings of 75 percent. Children under 5 years old ride free.

Active duty and retired military and Reserve military family members need not be accompanied by their spouses to get the discounted fares.

MTMC and the bus company also worked out an agreement reducing personal package shipments costs. Military personnel may now ship packages up to 100 pounds anywhere in the Greyhound nationwide bus system for $10 to $20.

Packages, weighing from one to 60 pounds, for example, and not exceeding 12x24x8 inches, cost $10 to ship, while those from 61 to 100 pounds with dimensions no greater than 36x24x18 inches cost $20.

These rates represent a savings of up to 85 percent off the company's regular package express rates. Eligible persons include those on active duty, National Guard members and reservists, plus family members and retirees.

Family members of retirees and foreign military personnel may not use these special rates.

One important feature in the program is that packages may be sent by or to active duty military personnel. For example, friends and relatives may send packages to active duty servicemembers at the new, reduced rate. Any packages costing less than $10 will be charged the lower figure. Upon receipt of a package, the recipient must show the proper military ID card; otherwise the additional charge must be paid.

Amtrak offers dicounts of 25 percent on one-way tickets for unaccompanied military personnel. Round-trip fares are set at double the one-way furlough fares.

Tickets must be purchased before boarding trains, except where no agent is available at train departure time.

Active duty personnel must present their military ID cards at time of purchase or to the conductor. Military furlough fares apply to all trains except Auto Trains and Metroliners.

Amtrak also offers reduced rates for family members traveling with or without sponsors. Spouses and all children from 12 through 21 years old will receive a 50-percent discount off the regular one-way fare. When accompanied by a parent of another adult 18 years or older, children from 2 through 11 will receive a 75 percent discount and children under age 2 can travel free.

Children ages 8 through 11 can travel alone if the entire trip occurs during daylight hours, involves no change of trains and is approved by an Amtrak station manager. In such cases, Amtrak only allows a 25-percent discount.

Sea Grass Baskets to be on display at Columbus Museum

The Columbus Museum

An exhibition of coiled sea grass baskets opens January 31 at the Columbus Museum.

Row Upon Row: Sea Grass Baskets of the South Carolina Lowcountry is an exhibition which traces the evolution of this craft from its origins in Africa, to its carryover in the south as a functional agricultural craft, to its present status as a decorative art.

The Row Upon Row exhibiton will be on display through April 10.

The collection of baskets assembled illustrates the historical progression of this Afro-American craft.

The works date from the mid-19th century to the present and include several 1850s fanner baskets.

Fanners were used in the fields to process rice.

A vegetable basket, used to carry produce to market balanced on the head, dates to the early 1900s.

Other baskets on display include a sewing basket, fruit/flower basket, candy dish, flower vase, French bread tray, hat box, cookie jar and a cake basket.

Works by contemporary basketmakers such as Mary Jackson and Blanch Watts are included for their aesthetic appeal.

Jackson's designs have been on display at numerous exhibitions, including the 1984 Smithsonian Associates annual crafts show and the Southern American art exhibition in Rome, Italy.

Baskets by other contemporary basketmakers such as Irene Foreman, Cathy Johnson, and Althea Coakley, have been noted for their narrow rows and tight coils.

"An African craft that began with functional intentions has become an art medium with primarily aesthetic motivation," notes John Vlach, Afro-American art enthusiast.

The exhibition is accompanied by a 65-page catalogue which chronicles the evolution of this craft through interviews with several generations of basketmakers, many of whom are continuing to carry on the family tradition of basketmaking.

Catalogue editor, Dale Rosengarten, notes "The craft is passed down in the family and represents a link between generations."

To highlight the opening of the exhibition, Dr. William H. Wiggins, Jr., associate professor, Afro-American Studies, Indiana University, will speak Thursday, Feb. 4, at noon. Dr. Wiggins' address, "Proclamations, Parades, and Progress" is also presented in conjunction with Black History Month.

Catalogue editor Dale Rosengarten speaks February 11 at noon on "The Fragile History of Sea Grass Baskets."

Traditional basketmaker, Mary Jackson will give two lecture-demonstrations Feb. 18, on basketweaving, at noon and 7:30 p.m.

The programs conclude with a performance by blues musicians Precious Bryant, "Weaving the Blues" on Feb. 25 at noon.

All programs are open to the public and are free of charge.

For additional information on the Row Upon Row exhibition or the accompanying programs planned in conjunction with the exhibition, please contact the Museum at 322-0400.

Marathon course a challenge

By John M. Henderson
Martin Army Community Hospital

This is the second in a series of articles leading up to the running of the Infantry Marathon on March 5 to prepare the average runner to comfortably complete the marathon.

With the announcement of the course change for the marathon, I know several runners are reassessing their intentions.

Don't let a simple thing like geography change your plans. Let's look at some facts so you can confirm your commitment for this endurance test.

Is the course flat?

If you originally planned to run the "old" course, then you weren't worrying about hills. So why now? A short ride out Sunshine Road tells why.

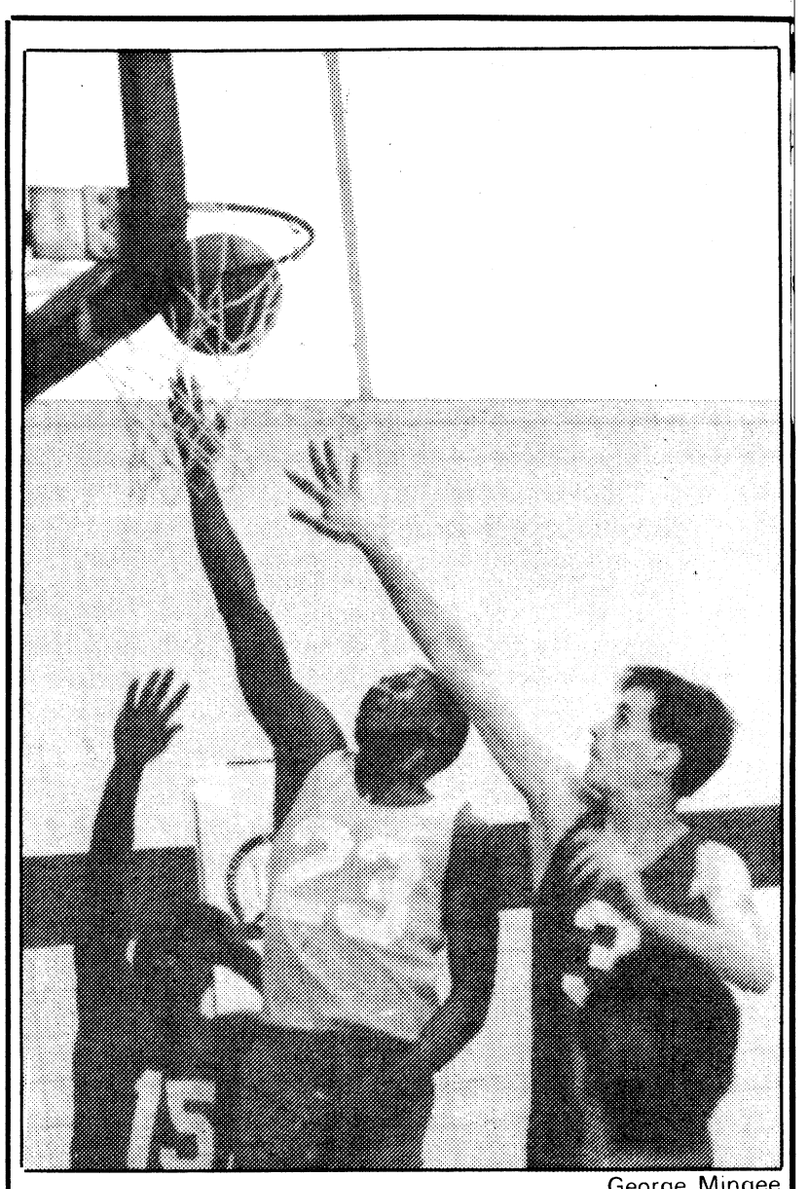
There are rolling hills, semi-desolate inclined curves, winding down hills. Of course this doesn't last forever, only 2.75 miles.

Sunshine dumps out onto Jamestown Road on a uphill left-hand turn. Jamestown is a favorite of cyclists. I have never seen a runner on that stretch. Wonder why?

As Jamestown comes up toward the firehouse, you may think you've re-entered civilization. But think again. Eighth Division Road begins as downhill but watch those banked berms.

This empties onto First Division for what you may think is the home stretch. Not so. First Division is a bit of a winding downhill once the 197th Inf. Bde. is passed. Then there is a phenominal uphill toward Dental Clinic #1.

Finally, Dixie Road is approached. Another series of rolling hills, with the final one curving downward into the old Splinter Village. Now, only now, is the final 1.25 miles flat.



To recapitulate, if you come from West Virginia, this course may seem flat.

Is it too hilly? Heavens sake! If it wasn't a challenge it wouldn't be a marathon. Each hill confirms the need for adherence to your pre-run plan: Discipline, steady pace, avoid the urge to "race" down Dixie past the ranges and MP billets, avoid overstriding down sightseeing Road and avoid the desperate feelings so common in the desolate segments out along the Harmony Church area.

This course is a great one, more scenic than ever, more challenging and less monotonous. This will however require mature discipline.

Next installment: Ergogenic aids. What about those quack remedies that are supposed to improve your performance.

See you on the road.

George Mingee

Panthers maul Co A, 40-29

By George Mingee
197th Infantry Brigade correspondent

On the power plays of Dwayne Sullivan and George McGann, the "Panthers" of HHC, 2nd Bn., 69th Armor, beat Co. A, 2nd Bn., 69th Armor, in 197th Infantry Brigade basketball league play.

George McGann of HHC scored five points in the first half of play to lead his team to a 16-10 score.

The hard charging and quick shooting of Ray Hill of Co. A, enabled him to accumulate six of his team's 10 points in the first half of play.

In the second half, Hill added another six points to make him the high scorer for his team with 12 points.

In the second half of play, HHC took control of the ball primarily with the shooting of Sullivan, who was the leading scorer for his team with 10 points.

Both Sullivan and McGann proved to be vital team players as their leadership capabilities on the court led to HHC pulling away and winning the game, 40-29.

Race date changed due to bad weather

Callaway Gardens

Runners who were all psyched up for the Callaway Gardens 15K/5K have three more weeks to prepare.

Due to the icy weather conditions Jan. 9, the races were called off and rescheduled for Jan. 30.

Starting time for both races will once again be 10 a.m. at Callaway Gardens' Robin Lake Beach.

Anyone who pre-registered for one of the races on the 9th is automatically registerd for the same race on the 30th. Those who have not registered may do so by contacting Callaway Gardens' Public Relations Department.

The entry fee is $10 for the 15K and $5 for the 5K. Late registration will be held on race day beginning at 8:30 a.m. at the Robin Lake Beach Pavilion. Those signing up on the 30th will be charged Gardens admission.

The 5K course is laid out around the Beach Drive and includes a short spur into the Gardens.

The 15K course winds through the heart of the Gardens, circling the 175-acre Mountain Creek Lake and continuing around the Beach Drive and Robin Lake. Both courses are relatively flat with no hint of a "heartbreak hill."

Awards will be presented to the top three finishers in each age group in both men's and women's divisions.

Special awards will also be presented to the overall male and female winner and runnerup in each race.

T-shirts will go to all finishers.

An awards ceremony is scheduled after the conclusion of the 15K, which will include video taped highlights of both races.

For additional information about the Callaway Gardens 15K/5K, call (404) 663-5186 weekdays between 8 a.m. and 5 p.m.

Hikes set to help unravel mysteries of nature

Callaway Gardens

This winter let a Callaway Gardens naturalist help you unravel the mysteries of nature on a hike through the woodlands.

Participants will have an opportunity to enjoy special natural areas in and around Callaway Gardens and to learn some of the "secrets" the surroundings have to share.

In January, the hike will be on Callaway Gardens' new 4½-mile Bicycle Trail. Walking through deep woods and along edges of lakes, you're sure to sneak up on wildlife and wintering waterfowl.

February's hike will be through the unique Cason J. Callaway Memorial Forest. This 3½-mile hike is mildly strenuous and takes you along a bubbling spring-fed stream, through mountain laurel thickets and upland hardwood forests.

The Limonite Trail located on Callaway's undeveloped property will be the area to be explored on the hike in March.

The hike schedule is as follows: Saturday, Jan. 30, 1:30 to 5 p.m., Callaway Gardens Bicycle Trail, meet at Boat Dock at Mountain Creek Lake.

Cookie run looks for 2,000 runners

Concharty Council of Girl Scouts

The Concharty Council of Girl Scouts, Inc. will hold its eighth annual Cookie Run at Weracoba Park/Lake Bottom in Columbus tomorrow.

"Last year, we had 1,500 runners turn out for the event," said Alice DeHoyos of the Concharty Council. "This year, we're shooting for 2,000."

"The outlook for making that mark is good," she said. "We're getting a lot of interest from many businesses and corporations that want to enter teams as well as many high schools and junior high school."

The family-oriented event was started to encourage physical fitness among youths and provide a challenging winter activity for the community, according to Sally B. Lasseter, executive director.

Runners participate in the event from all over Georgia and Alabama, as well as the rest of the Southeast.

The 5-mile run will start at 9:30 a.m. followed by the 1.5-mile handicapped-participation run at 10:30 a.m. and then, the 1.5-mile run at 11 a.m.

This year, there will be a 50-yard Tot Trot, for runners 4 years old and under, following the 1.5-mile run.

Units from Benning that field twenty of more runners pay $5 per person if pre-registered by today. All members who register will receive a T-shirt.

For more information on the run and to register, call Alice DeHoyos at 327-2646.

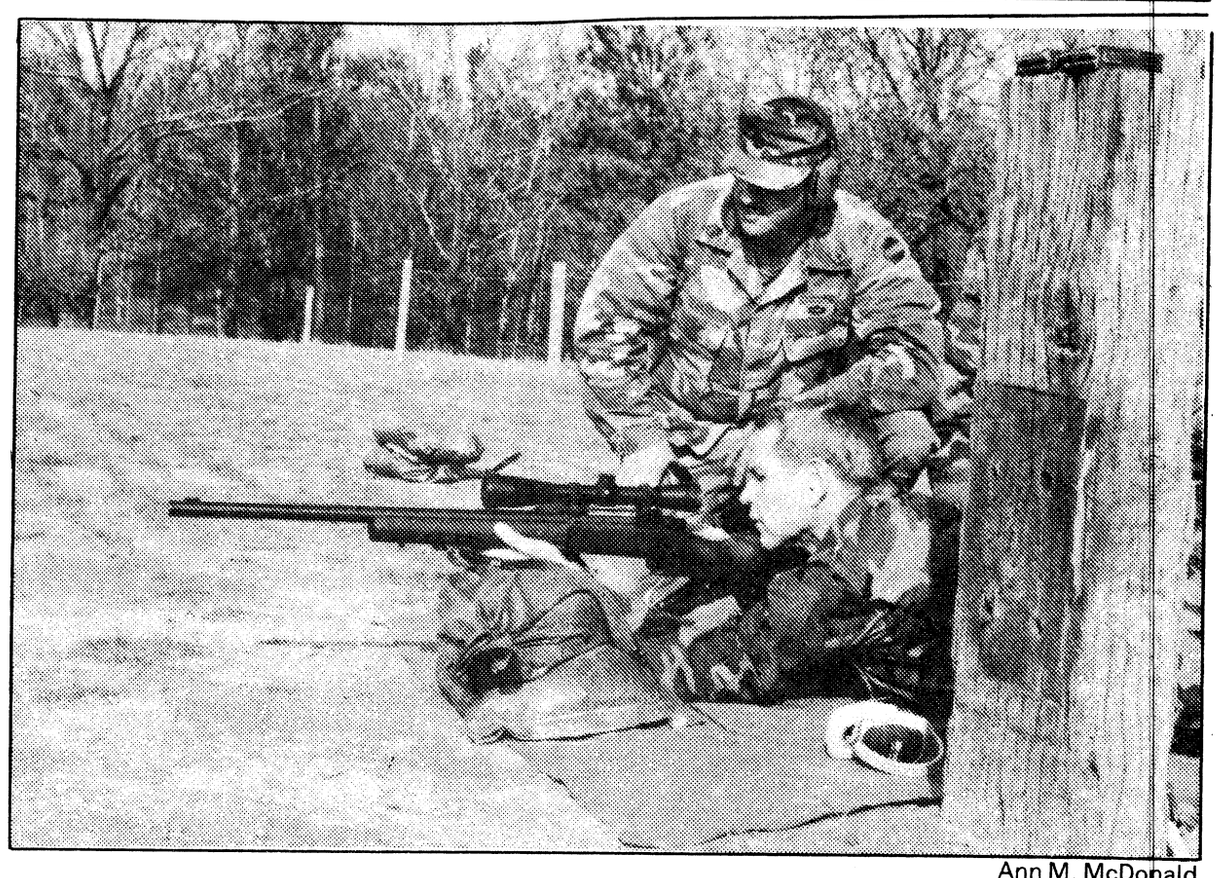
Happy 66th

SSgt. Mark Mosley keeps the beat for the U.S. Army Infantry Center Band during a Senior Review for 3rd Bn., 11th Inf. Regt. The band does more than 650 ceremonies a year at Fort Benning. Jan. 25 marked the 66th birthday of the Army band.

Brown looks at Benning training

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

General Arthur E. Brown, Army Vice Chief of Staff made a brief stop at Fort Benning last week for an overview on training being conducted here.



He arrived here early that morning and started right into business with an office call to the post commanding general followed by a roundtable discussion with the leaders of various directorates here.

After his office calls, Brown took to the field. He visited several training sites including Red Cloud Range, Camp Darby and the U.S. Army Sniper School.

He ended his trip here with a visit to a field training exercise being conducted by soldiers from 4th Battalion, 30th Infantry, 2nd Infantry Training Brigade, The Infantry Training Center.

Brown has been the Vice Chief of staff since 1987. He attended the University of Alabama and the U.S. Military Academy. He was commissioned in 1953.

Some of his past assignments include 508th Airborne Infantry Regiment at Fort Campbell, Ky.; Assistant Professor of Military Science, Florence State College, Florence, Ala.; and the U.S. Military Assistance Group, Vietnam.

Gen. Arthur E. Brown receives instructions from SFC Earl Ellis on how to shoot one of the numerous sniper weapons used at the Sniper School.

Former POW to speak at Prayer Breakfast

USAIC Chaplain's Office

Maj. Gen. Kenneth C. Leuer has invited Col. (Ret.) Ben Purcell to speak to Fort Benning's leaders at the Annual National Prayer Breakfast Feb. 9, 6:30 a.m. in the Main NCO Club. Leuer asked Purcell to contribute "to this celebration as we meet to enhance our own spiritual strength and moral fiber."

Purcell was serving as the deputy commander, DaNang Sub Area Command and executive officer, 80th General Support Group, Vietnam, when the helicopter on which he was a passenger was shot down south of Quang Tri City, South Vietnam, in February 1968.

He spent more than five years as a prisoner of war, 58 months of that time in solitary confinement.

Awarded the Silver Star with Oak Leaf Cluster for two escapes from POW camps in the vicinity of Hanoi (December 1969 and March 1972), Purcell was the senior Army officer returnee from the Vietnam Conflict when he was released on March 27, 1973.

When Leuer extended the invitation to speak on Feb. 9, he had

New EER comes on line

By Becky Obert
Bayonet staff writer

Better communication and enhanced professional development should result from the new noncommissioned officer evaluation report, according to Fort Benning's senior noncommissioned officer for personnel actions.

"In the past there was no requirement to counsel someone unless he was a substandard soldier and you needed to counsel him," said Sgt. Maj. Anderson Blow. "Now, the rater has the responsiblity of sitting down and talking to a soldier before it is too late."

The new NCO ER requires raters to sit down with NCOs on a quarterly basis and tell them how their performance measures up. If a person is having problems, the counseling session gives the supervisor a chance to point these out to the person. Then when it is time for their evaluation, they'll have had a chance to improve deficient performance.

"There should be no surprises in the final ER, if the system is used properly," Blow said. "That's the benefit of the counseling checklist."

The new ER contains a section on values, competence, physical fitness and military bearing, leadership, training and responsibility and accountability.

This gives the rater (normally the supervisor) the opportunity to go over every aspect of the soldier's job performance in advance.

If a person is overweight or frequently misses physical training, this would be pointed out during a counseling session. If a soldier frequently avoids taking responsibility or assuming the leadership role in his squad, that would be noted on the counseling checklist.

All soldiers must be counseled within 30 days of assuming a new assignment, Blow said, and then, on a quarterly basis until their actual rating is done. Ratings are normally done on a yearly basis, he said.

Another plus of the counseling checklist, Blow said, is that it provides corroborating evidence that the soldier knew of his deficiencies.

"If a soldier gets a bad rating, the rater will have the checklist on file to show that the soldier knew what the problems were, but did nothing to correct them," he said.

Blow said the checklist (DA Form 2166-7-1) and the NCO ER (DA From 2166-7) are available through normal supply channels.

"Since it is a change, people need to understand the new system to make it work," he said.

Those with questions on the new NCO ER or the counseling checklist can call the EER Section at 545-2611 or 545-2602 or drop by the section in building 2638.

Medical care meeting set

USAIC Public Information Office

Congressman Richard Ray will be at Fort Benning today for the House Armed Services Subcommittee meeting at Marshall Auditorium, Infantry Hall at 10 a.m.

The availability of medical care for active duty and retired military members and their family members will be the topic of discussion.

The public is invited to attend, but formal hearings will permit only those serving on panels to participate.

Throughout history blacks have fought for our freedom

By American Forces Information Service

When Peter Foster enlisted in the Connecticut Regiment during the Revoluntionary War, he was still "owned" by Timothy Hale of Glastonbury, Conn. It wasn't until after the war that Foster obtained his freedom, along with that of his wife and young daughter. A bill of sale dated March 8, 1788, documents the sale.

There were about 5,000 blacks who served in the Revolution; some were freed, some were not. In either case, they were quickly forgotten after the war.

Neither they nor their contributions to the nation's defense are forgotten now because Black History Month is a reminder. The entire nation, the Department of Defense and each military service will once again celebrate Black History Month in February. This year's theme is "The Constitutional Status of Afro-Americans into the 21st Century."

Throughout the nation's history, black Americans remained proud of their country, many giving their lives to support it. The Constitution they were defending, though, was not being interpreted and enforced by Congress to allow them the same rights and privileges as other citizens.

Black's service to the nation is as old as the country itself. During the Colonial period, they fought and died bravely, but none received much recognition or was declared a national hero.

The War of 1812 was mainly a naval war, and blacks made up between 10 and 20 percent of most ship's crews. They performed heroic duty, and even Oliver Hazard Perry, who initially objected to black sailors, ended up praising their bravery.

Black soldiers fought in the Civil War also. They knew that emancipation would come, even though President Abraham Lincoln had said the Union, not slavery, was the issue. More than 180,000 blacks served in United States Colored Troop units — 10 percent of the total Union strength. The best-known black regiments were the First South Carolina, which actually mustered into service as a Volunteer Regiment in Kansas, and the 54th Massachusetts.

By the time the call to arms was heard during World War I, black Americans had proven time and again their desire to aid in the common defense of the nation. More than 400,000 blacks served in the war. And despite segregation and discriminatory assignments, more than 1,300 were commissioned as officers.

During World War II, blacks were no longer restricted to labor details. They served as infantrymen, tankers, parachutists and officers leading patrols on tactical missions. They became pilots, nurses and doctors. World War II was also the first war in which black contributions were documented and accepted without debate.

When North Korea attacked South Korea on June 25, 1950, blacks again made major contributions. They made up 13.5 percent of all troops, 80 percent of them in all-black units. Two black soldiers — Pvt. William Thompson and Sgt. Cornelius H. Charlton — became the first black Americans to receive the Medal of Honor since the Spanish American War. The Korean War also resulted in other milestones: Ensign Jesse L. Brown became the first black naval aviator and Frederick C. Branch became the first black to be commissioned in the Marine Corps.

During the Vietnam War, blacks no longer had to prove their capabilities, and units in the military were truly integrated for the first time. The war provided many black role models in leadership and courage and the ability to overcome obstacles to achieve excellence.

After Vietnam, peacetime equal opportunity programs were reinstituted in earnest and preconflict issues were addressed. Affirmative action plans addressed specific equal opportunity problems. All military personnel received equal opportunity training.

Today, blacks make up more than 21 percent of the enlisted force and 6.5 percent of the officer active duty force; in 1971, blacks were only 10.2 percent of the total active force.

Black and white Americans serve together and today exemplify the words of Maj. Martin R. Delaney, a veteran of the Civil War. "Fleecy locks and black complexions cannot alter nature's claim," he said. "Skins may differ, but afflictions dwell in black and white the same."

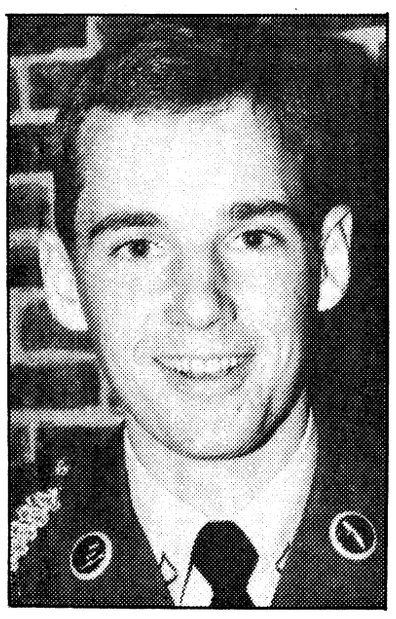
AUSA holds membership meeting

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

Retired General Jack Merritt was the guest speaker at the Association of the United States Army Winter Membership Meeting at the Columbus Iron Works Convention and Trade Center.

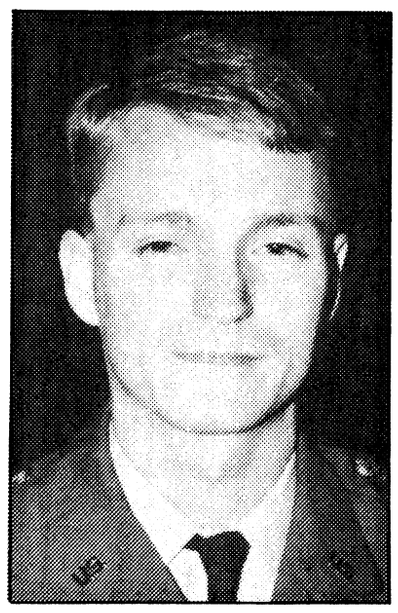
Merritt was commissioned in 1954 upon his graduation from Officer Candidate School. He has had a wide variety of important command and staff assignments including his final assignment as United States Representative to the North Atlantic Treaty Organization Military Committee.

Merritt is now the deputy executive vice president to AUSA and is slated to take over as president later in the year.



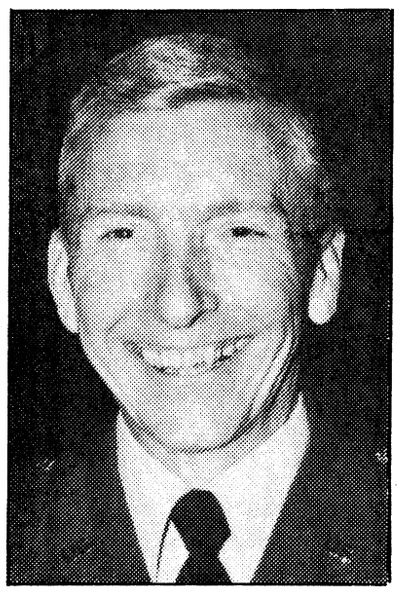
At the meeting, Merritt spoke on budget cuts in the Defense Department and how they will affect the Army.

Before his remarks Commanding General Maj. Gen. Kenneth C. Leuer awarded various soldiers with plaques for jobs they had done well.

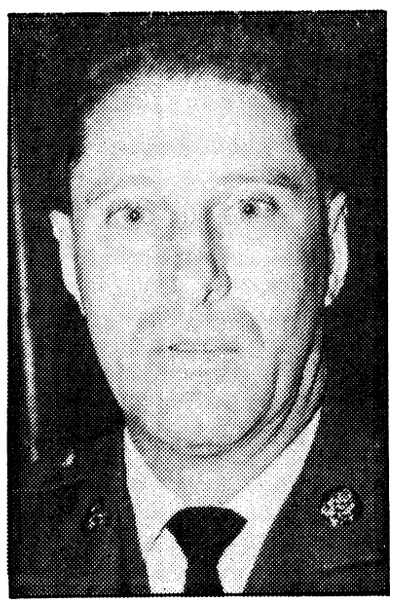


After Merritt's speech, the meeting was closed with a sing-a-long that was accompanied by the United States Infantry Center Band.

OPINION



VARIOUS VOICES:
What do you think of the Fort Benning Army Band?



PFC Timothy Mayer, Company E, 1st Battalion, 58th Infantry, 197th Infantry Brigade - "Being in the 197th, we don't get a chance to see them very often, and I wish we could see them more. I think occasions are made a lot more significant when the band is there."

Capt. Daniel MacGlashing, Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, The School Brigade - "I can't say enough about the 283rd Army Band. With their schedule, it's hard to imagine where some of the soldiers muster the enthusiasm to face the next ceremony."

Col. Victor Stamey, commander, Infantry Training Center - "The courtesy the band provides to ITC is absolutely superb. At most of our ceremonies they are not just playing for the soldiers but their families as well. These people have come from all over the U.S. to watch their loved ones graduate so they are impacting civilians as well.

CSM Francis McIntosh, 3rd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, Officers Candidate School - "I think it is a good band. I think they represent Fort Benning very well. I enjoy listening to them. One fine example is the concert they did on the 4th of July."

Art Chriss, civilian - "As a civilian who attends many different functions here at Fort Benning, without exception the band is there. I think it tremendously enhances any ceremony, and also, it is very patriotic."

Snively hears PX is selling 'contraband'

By Clyde Snively
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Henry, who's in charge of rumor control, came back from one of those Armed Forces Disciplinary Control Board meetings acting secretive and mysterious.

I wasn't about to let him know he'd piqued my curiosity, besides I knew Airborne Annie would be along in a minute and since she needs to know everything, would question Henry unmercifully until whatever secret he had would be secret no more.

I was right. As soon as she got back and saw him sitting there looking smug, secretive and mysterious, she lit into him.

He pretended to try to resist, but we knew he really wanted to spill the beans, and spill them he did.

"You'll never guess what some post's AFDCB is planning on putting off limits," he said with a smile.

"You're right," A.A. said, so tell us.

"The post exchange," Henry said. "You'd never have guessed, would ya."

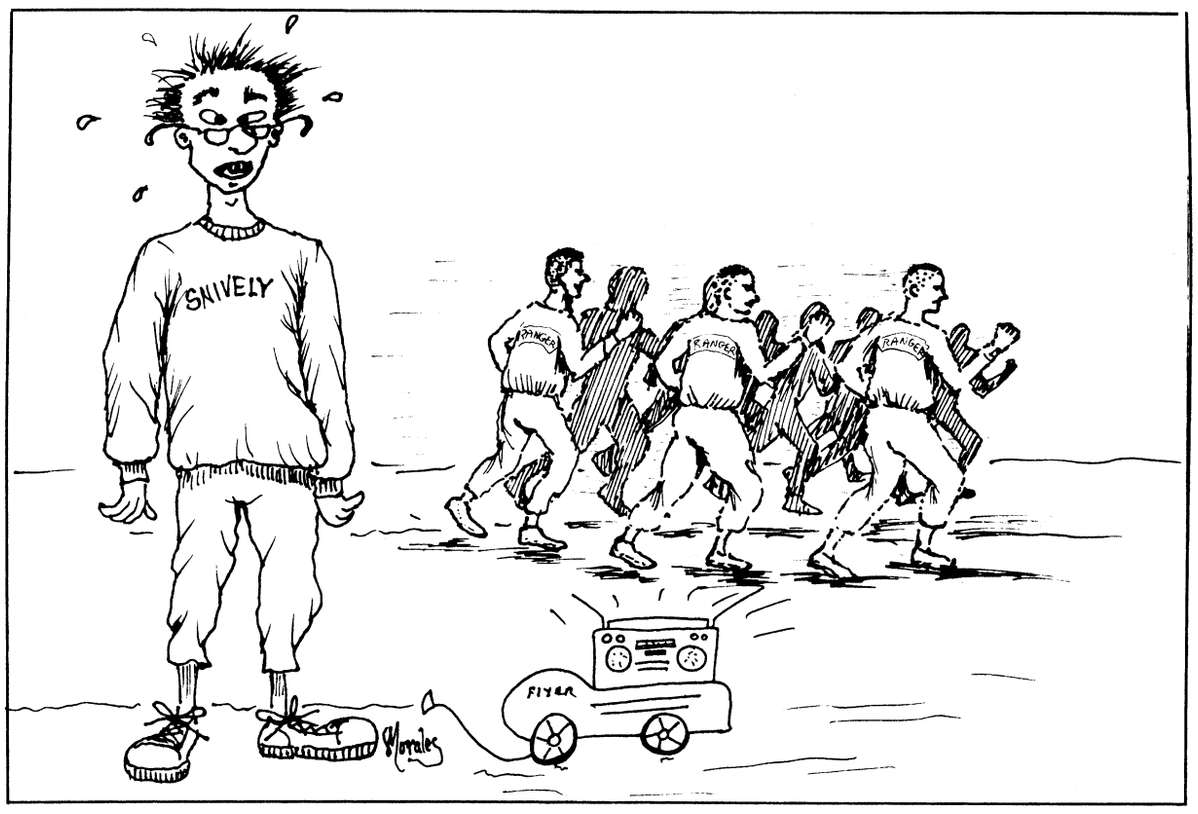
"You're right," I said. "What's the problem, chili dogs too hot?"

"Nope," he said, "Selling contraband."

"Contraband," Airborne said, getting out her reporter's notebook.

"Now wait a minute," Henry said, "First, I didn't say it was our P X Plus I didn't say it would happen."

"I guess not," I said. "What could the P X possibly sell that's considered contraband."



"Well, that's just it, it's not exactly contraband although these items can be used for illegal purposes."

"Oh, I see," I said, "You mean since the P X sells guns and screw drivers that could be considered tools for burglaries."

"You got the point," Henry said. "But this is more directly tied into crime."

"Give us an example," Airborne said.

"Okay, radar detectors. The P X we're talking about sells radar detectors for cars. People on AFDCB don't buy the argument that people buy radar detectors to be safer drivers. They say that if a person puts a radar detector in the car, then he means to speed."

"I agree with that," I said, siding with law and order. "People don't put them in their cars to help them drive within the speed limit. They have speedometers for that."

"What else?" A.A. pressed Henry.

"Tapes of cadence calls," he said.

"Tapes of cadence calls!" A.A. shrieked. "Like ranger and airborne! How can that be used for illegal purposes?"

"You ever see someone running in formation carrying a boom box on his shoulder or pulling a ghetto blaster along in a wagon?" Henry asked.

"No," A.A. and I responded.

"Well, the AFDCB people didn't either. Thus their conclusion was that someone would be playing the cassettes while wearing a Walkman with head sets. Running on post wearing head sets isn't legal," he said.

"Guess you got a point," I admitted. "What are they going to do? Issue a warning to the P X to cease and desist or make them put warning labels on them saying, 'not to be used for speeding' or 'not to be used with Walkman while jogging on post.'"

"I'm not sure," Henry said. "My sources tell me the lawyers for both parties are discussing it."

"I just hope you're not serious, Henry," I said, noting that Airborne Annie had already taken off with her camera and note pad.

I could just picture her down by the P X surveying customers on whether or not they used radar detectors in order to not speed or boom boxes to call out cadence. Next thing you know, robots will be leading calisthenics.

Training must be rooted deep in ideals, beliefs

By Jimmy Holt
1st Battalion, 507th Infantry

"Training is not done in a sterile environment of cold calculating management. Training has to be rooted in deep ideals and beliefs — something worth dying for. The warmth of service of those beliefs — love of country, pride and, belief in each other — yes duty, honor, county — thats the warrior ethic."
Richard E. Cavazos"
General, USA Retired

As we enter the new year with fond memories of the immediate holidays, we do so with a renewed sense of our ethical foundations — our family, our country, and our God. We can appreciate what General Cavazos was saying about deep ideals and beliefs — something worth dying for. With some imagination, we can empathize with the 101st Airborne Division Warriors as they held on to Bastogne against nearly overwhelming odds generated when the WWII Germans launched the offensive known as the Battle of the Bulge on Christmas Day, 1944.

The 507th Parachute Infantry Regiment, as part of the 17th Airborne Division, entered that battle on 26 December and fought in that campaign until Bastogne was recaptured and the German offensive was crushed on Feb. 12.

The 507th Parachute Infantry Regiment's participation in the Ardennes Campaign is a study of dedication and professionalism based on a solid grass roots foundation. During the period Jan. 4-14, the 507th engaged in an operation which came to be called the Battle of Dead Man's Ridge in Belgium against four different German Grenadier Regiments.

During the period Jan. 9-17, the 507th fought the Battle of the Our River and drove the Germans across that river into Germany thereby setting the stage for the final battles of the war.

This is our heritage — the same roots seated in deep ideals and beliefs which caused the WWII 507th to fight on in spite of tremendous hardship and win. The 507th Infantry mission today is not accomplished "in a sterile environment of cold calculating management" — it can not now just as it could not then. Battles are won by the collective acts and strengths of the individuals taking park in them. This is also a fact of training — good training results from the collective acts and strengths of the individuals taking part in it.

Visiting Peruvian student writes about America

By Paola Campodonico
Special to The Bayonet

Editor's Note: The following was written by a Peruvian student at Pachelli High School, when asked to write her impressions about America. Her parents are Lt. Col. Vicente and Nevenka Campodonico. Her father served with the Director of Command and Staff at the U.S. Army School of Americas. The family returned to Peru in November.

Before I came to the United States, I expected to see big cities with tall buildings filled with people like punks and to hear a lot of crazy music.

I always wanted to see these cities especially New York, and I thought all the cities were like that, so when I came to Columbus I couldn't believe my eyes. I started going to other cities like Atlanta, New York, Washington, and Los Angeles and saw that what I had originally thought was true only in the large cities. New York is just like I always imagined it to be. The Statue of Liberty, Empire State Building, Central Park, Fifth Avenue - all of it is just like in the movies. But the United States also has beautiful places like mountains, beaches, rivers and quiet cities like Columbus.

All this seems like a long time ago since I've been here almost two years. I remember that when I got here I wanted to go back to Peru right away; I thought I would never get used to so many different things, especially school, and I missed my friends so much. Now that I have to leave,I just don't want to. This country absorbs you so easily that you soon feel part of it, and you start getting so used to everything and everybody in it that you end up loving it without even noticing. The United States is always asking you to love it, and it is too hard to say no. You just can't say no. This place is too easy to love.

Maybe the most surprising thing about the U.S. is the freedom boys and girls have. In this country, when you want to do something you just go ahead and do it, and if you don't want to, you don't. You don't have to ask permission from your parents or anything like that. I wish I could do that. I have more freedom than when I first came here, but of course, I won't ever have as much as any American girl.

But the most different thing for me here in the U.S. is maybe the discipline in the education system. In Peru, it is much more strict with no second chances to make up work and no such thing as a re-test. More homework is given in every subject. I prefer going to school here in Columbus. I love my school, Pacelli, I think it is just great. In Peru, schools are only to study. We don't have any cheerleaders, or a school band, or any of the clubs Pacelli has. We have nothing like pep rallies, football games, parties, spirit week or homecoming. There is always something good going on in Pacelli. The education system in Pacelli is very good, but the students don't have to fry their brains studying; they can also have some fun doing any sport of their choice - football, cross country, basketball, or swimming. You can always find something to do in Pacelli.

School and home life are much more informal here in this country. There is no uniform worn at the high school and the students dress however they want to. In Pacelli we have a dress code, but that dress code is so easy to follow. Students can talk much more freely to teachers and adults. Boys and girls can also talk to each other more freely and to people they don't know. In Peru, dating is unheard of until the girl and boy are 17 and 18 years old. There are many informalities in this country, and I like that a lot.

I have really enjoyed my stay here in the U.S. I am so sorry to leave. I am going to miss every single thing of it, especially my friends, my school, and believe it or not, I'll miss my teachers too. They are so nice and caring like everybody else here. I wish I could at least finish high school here. I like Columbus a lot.

- Between November 1988 and February 1989 at Fort Drum accepted soldiers will:

—Settle into newly built barracks, orderly rooms, arms rooms, supply rooms, motor pools and other new unit facilities.

—Prepare administration, logs, and training requirements for receiving and training your new soldiers.

—Attend light leaders' course to refresh your skills, check SOPs, discuss training techniques and learn how to train in a winter environment.

Infantryman's father had to see before he believed

Editor: Several months ago, I read an article in ARMY by, I believe, the commander of the 2nd Infantry Training Brigade. This article included praise of: the caliber of young recruits and the Infantry basic training program. I must admit that I was not convinced. I wondered if some public relations officer had composed the article and had gotten carried away.

My apologies. I am now a beliver!

On Dec. 9 and 10, I attended programs relating to the graduation of the 4th Battalion, 36th Infantry, 2d Infanry Brigade.

My grandson, Pvt. Jeffrey Scott Davis, Co. A, 3rd Platoon, was one of the trainees completing the training. Previously, I attended the mid-cycle family day. During these visits, I met several permanent party personnel. I was, and am, impressed. The accomplishments of these young men have been most significant. I did not realize the capacity of these young men

In spite of the caliber of these recruits, however, it was the competency and professionalism of the permanent party personnel that made soldiers (Infantry, that is) out of civilians.

I am most grateful to Capt. Steven E. Sykes and SFC Ralph J. Trillo who had such an impact upon my grandson. They are professionals. They made me proud for what Fort Benning is all about and what the Infantry means and has always meant to our Republic.

Fort Benning has had a special meaning to me for years. I was assigned to Lawson Field after returning from India at the end of World War II. My three sons have completed one or more training programs. Two of them were on the school staff. One, Craig, now a reservist, was a member of your staff, I believe. My grandson was born at Fort Benning.

Food donated by units, commissary is available to Army families in need

By Sharon Reynolds
Bayonet staff

There is still a week until payday, but because of an unexpected bill there isn't enough money left over to buy food for the rest of the month. Just about everyone has faced this situation at some time in their lives, but if you have a valid identification card, ACS can help.

Food donated to The Emergency Food Locker by units and the commissary is available for families who face several days without food. According to Carla Cary, ACS director, there is enough food in each package to feed a family of four for three days.

The Emergency Food Locker is located in building 2634, Soldiers' Plaza.

"How much food we give depends of the size of the family," Cary explained. "For a larger family, we can give more."

Food given includes non-perishables such as tuna, rice, flour, pasta, peanut butter and jelly and spaghetti. Cary said they also provide a low-cost menu.

"We never deny anybody," Cary said. "Everybody is treated privately and confidentially."

However, she added that if a person makes repeated visits to the food locker, it is usually indicative of financial problems. So that person is referred to budget counseling. Or if the food is not enough to last until payday, a client may be referred to Army Emergency Relief for financial assistance.

Also located in building 2634 is the Lending Closet. Army families who are awaiting their household goods and will be at Fort Benning for more than 90 days can borrow items such as irons and ironing boards, pots and pans, eating utensils, high chairs and car seats for up to 30 days. If, for instance, transportation delivery is delayed and the items are needed longer, the time limit can be extended to 60 days, Cary said

The reason for the 90-day on-post requirement is that if all the soldiers who come here for a few weeks to attend school were to sign out items from the lending closet, there wouldn't be anything left to lend, Cary said.

Be it needing to borrow a few things until household goods arrive or needing enough food to get through the month, if military families have a problem, ACS has a solution.

2nd Bn, 29th Inf receives trophy, award for Maintenance Excellence

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Maj. Gen. Kenneth C. Leuer presented 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry a trophy last Monday naming them the winners of the Training and Doctrine Command Award for Maintenance Excellence.

The battalion was selected as the TRADOC winner in the Tables of Distribution and Allowances Heavy Density Category competition in the Chief of Staff, Army Award for Maintenance Excellence.

According to CWO 4 Neil R. LaClair, density categories are based on total density of individual items of equipment as shown in the authorized column of applicable MTOE/TDA documents.

"The competition is designed to evaluate unit-level maintenance programs in the areas of readiness, training, management, cost savings and innovations." he said. "Unit maintenance programs include all organic equipment such as weapons, tools, protective masks, communications equipment and vehicles.

"We prepared a Unit Maintenance Profile packet using existing data files and forwarded it through channels to the Fort Benning Selection Board to enter the competition," LaClair said, "and our UMP was selected to represent Fort Benning in the TRADOC competition."

He said his unit has competed in the award program for four consecutive years with the unit being selected as TRACOC winner in 1984 and 1985. In 1984, the unit was the runner-up winner in the Department of the Army competion.

LaClair gave special attribution to MSgt. William S. Friend, SP4 Jeffrey Helgeson and SFC William Covington for their success at TRADOC.

"We didn't do anything special to prepare for this competition." LaClair said. "We just followed all the prescribed requirements.

Prayer

no idea of the significance of that date. Purcell accepted the invitation and said, "This date holds a very unique position in my life. On the 8th of February 1968, I was a passenger on a helicopter which was hit by small caliber automatic weapons fire south of Q'uang Tri City. The chopper burst into flames so the pilot had no alternative but to crash land in a nearby cemetery in the midst of the VC who shot us down. The six Americans aboard survived the crash; however, one passenger, PFC James George, was burned severely on his hands and face. We tried to evade, but were taken prisoner within a few minutes. Later George asked me, 'Colonel, are you a Christian?' I said, 'Yes.' Then PFC George said, 'Let's pray,'" Purcell said.

"Thus began a five-year journey into uncharted waters. . . .a journey where prayer was necessary for hope and survival. The next morning, Feb. 9, 1968, PFC George was executed, and though we will never know why, I have always believed the VC thought that he would have no chance of survival in the jungles where we were taken," said Purcell.

"From this, you can see that as I speak at your Prayer Breakfast, exactly 20 years will have passed from the moment PFC George said, 'Let's pray.' I, too, look forward to being at Fort Benning once again."

Seating at the Prayer Breakfast is strictly limited to 500. For tickets call 545-2288.

CSM Bell retires with 30 years duty

By Sally Roberts
197th Infantry Brigade correspondent

CSM William D. Bell bid farewell to soldiers of the 197th Infantry Brigade and other distinguished guests at his retirement ceremony at Kelley Hill last week. Bell was awarded the Legion of Merit for his achievements during 30 years of service in the Army.

Col. William W. Hartzog, deputy commanding general, was the guest speaker at the retirement ceremony. Hartzog reflected on his recent command of the 197th and honored the leader of the brigade's noncommissioned officer corps.

"I can say that Command Sergeant Major Bell has touched the lives of 70,000 soldiers through his Army years," Hartzog said. "He is the impeccable mold of leadership."

Bell related his career to a message scrolled on a weather-beaten plank by 197th soldiers participating in "Gallant Eagle," a 1986 training exercise in the Mojave Desert.

"Posted in the middle of a desert, after a storm had flooded the brigade support area was a sign that simply stated, 'It just doesn't get any better than this'," Bell said.

Vern Bell, who has been at her husband's side throughout his Army years, was also awarded a Department of the Army Certificate of Appreciation for her role in the Army family.

CSM Tony Salter has replaced Bell as 197th Infantry Brigade Command Sergeant Major.

197th program gives guidance

By Sally Roberts
197th Infantry Brigade correspondent

The change of environment experienced by Army families during a change of duty station can be an exciting and sometimes unsettling experience.

You need family housing and temporary furnishings until your household goods arrive. You need to set up a new bank account, get your kids in school, and find out about medical facilities for your family. Your spouse wants to start looking for a part-time job right away but doesn't know where to start.

Skilled professionals are available at Fort Benning to help with all these types of problems, but finding help in an unfamiliar community is not always easy.

If you have been assigned to the 197th Support Battalion, "Operation Orientation" is a program designed to get soldiers and their families settled into the community as quickly as possible by introducing them to the many service facilities at Fort Benning.

"The soldier's not only informed about the support agencies available to them, but they are also given the opportunity to see that the chain of command cares about their problems," said Chap. (Capt.) Christopher Wisdom, 197th Support Battalion.

Each month, new soldiers and their spouses are invited to meet the people who provide services such as medical care, housing, arts and crafts and the library.

Although the program only began in the Support Battalion a few months ago, it has begun to draw the attention of others as a helpful asset for new families.

"The soldiers rate the program highly and have helped us in expanding and modifiying the program to meet their needs," Wisdom added.

Patriots sharpen teamwork skills

By Sally Roberts
197th Infantry Brigade correspondent

Mechanized Infantry companies from the 1st Battalion, 58th Infantry occupied Fort Benning training areas last week to conduct platoon Mech gunnery. The "Patriot" soldiers trained in the midst of the recent cold snap and torrential rains, sharpening their teamwork in night patrols, night crossing of Upatoi Creek and platoon live-fire on Ware Range.

"One night, we gathered the platoon and did a reconnissance of an enemy objective," said SSgt. Danny Garner, a squad leader from Co. B. "We spent another night in a defensive posture, waiting for enemy to attack. This is how we learn to move silently and use night land navigation techniques."

During the live fire exercise, each platoon navigated the course designed to test its reaction to various obstacles and firing points.

George Mingee

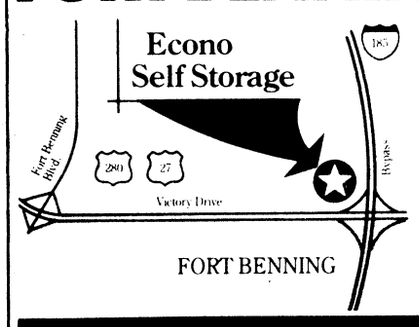
"This is a chance for the platoon to work as a unit using live ammunition," said 1st Lt. David R. Sandel, Co. B executive officer. "All the techniques that they are taught, such as fire distribution and fire control, are initiated on the range."

Sandel acted as a range safety officer, while other leaders in the battalion evaluated the performance of the soldiers.

"The emphasis here is on being tactically correct and proficient," Sandel added. "The evaluators look at the tactical scenario, help the squad and platoon leaders to make correct tactical decisions and stop unsafe acts."

At one point of the course, the platoon cleared a mine field and wire obstacle.

"The first track to reach the obstacle must dismount and use grappeling hooks, wire cutters or a Benglor torpedo to clear the obstacle," said SSgt. Reynold Nelson, a Co. B. squad leader. "The next squad through dismounts and secures the far side of the obstacle so the rest of the platoon can move through."



That type of teamwork is what the infantry platoon uses to accomplish its mission.

"WE FEEL GOOD ABOUT LEAVING JAMAHL AT THE DAY-CARE CENTER BECAUSE THEY TREAT HIM LIKE HE'S THEIR OWN CHILD."

SSG Ken and SP4 Jacquie Farmer

"We never really considered leaving Jamahl with anyone except a private sitter. But our first visit to the new Child Development Center here at Fort Hood sure changed our minds.

"We know our son is well taken care of. So we can concentrate on our jobs without worrying about what he's doing.

"He learns, instead of just playing. He counts, sings, says his ABC's. And they teach him to be more independent.

"Jacquie and I have peace of mind when Jamahl's at the Center. They take care of him, and he's learning, and those are the two most important things."

The Army's Day-Care programs are making modern day-care facilities available to more children each day. And the quality of the "Caregivers" who attend the children has never been higher. It's all part of the Army Family Action Plan in action.

ASK THE JUDGE

By Ollie M. Mick
Staff Judge Advocate's Office

Q: I have recently seen ads from off-post businesses offering to take post-dated checks for up to ten days before I am paid. Is this legal?

A: Post-dated checks are not illegal, but they are a dangerous practice that can result in financial problems down the road.

Technically, companies are not permitted to deposit your check until the date shown on it. However, after leaving your hands the check is hard to control and many times checks get deposited earlier than the date posted on them. This may be by mistake or through genuine fraud on the part of the company.

While the bank should not honor a post-dated check, most transactions are handled through machines, and the system does not always catch the incorrect dates. What this means for you is that the check will probably bounce.

Bouncing a check usually means that you will owe the bank a service fee for processing the return of the check.

If the check is deposited early and the check goes through, it may use some funds you had set aside for other checks, such as rent or utilities. This may cause those checks to bounce when they arrive at the bank.

Trying to tell the gas company that your check bounced because someone else cashed a post-dated check, and getting it to wait on its payment, may be a very difficult thing to do. It may end up taking several months to straighten out the financial problems that arise.

Another problem is that the post-dated check is really nothing more than a type of credit card. You are promising to pay money (that you don't have) at a future date. This usually begins to affect your financial affairs because you can continually get deeper and deeper in debt.

Post-dated checks are almost always a problem and should be used only as a last resort.

MARSHAL'S VIEWPOINT

By Wendell D. Choate
Provost Marshal's Office

It has been observed on this installation that personnel are carrying privately-owned weapons in their POVs. There is nothing wrong with that if they are on their way to a hunting area, a range or back from one of these areas.

But, if these weapons are being transported in the vehicles just because the individual wants to carry them in the weapons rack of his vehicle, they are in violation of USAIC Reg. 210-5, section X, paragraphs 41, c and d, which read, in part:

Paragraph c. No weapons will be transported on Fort Benning with a loaded round in the chamber or with a loaded magazine/clip affixed into the weapon load chamber. Authorized hand guns (pistols and revolvers), shotguns, rifles or bows and arrows will be transported in the trunk of the automobile to the ranges or hunting sites. In those instances where a vehicle does not have a trunk, or the storage space is not adequate to accommodate firearms, the weapons will be carried in the vehicle in such a manner that makes them readily observable by law enforcement personnel.

Paragraph d. The carrying of arms anywhere on the reservation is prohibited except by those who are engaged in:

- The performance of military duty.
- Skeet shooting or authorized pistol and rifle target shooting.
- Authorized hunting.

If you are a hunter or you go to the range to fire your privately-owned weapon, carry it in the trunk of your vehicle out of sight. You should never park your vehicle in a parking area on post if you have a weapon in the rear window weapons rack or other area inside the vehicle. Windows can be broken out and the weapon taken.

Only transport your weapon to the authorized ranges and hunting areas and back to your quarters, or company arms room if you reside in the barracks. Lets make this hunting season as safe and incident free as it can possibly be.

If you have any questions or need any assistance contact the Fort Benning Military Police, DoD Police or the Crime Prevention Office.

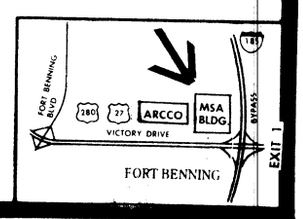
The area is located only 30 miles from Canada, 90 miles from Syracuse and 130 miles from Lake Placid. It is a major tourist center with 1,000 islands. It is a sportsman's paradise with hunting, fishing, camping, hiking, skiing, ice skating, sledding, etc.

The area also offers excellent medical facilities and an expanding job market for spouses. This is a four-year COHORT stabilization.

Some undergrading may be accepted (i.e. E-5s as squad leaders or E-6s as platoon sergeants).



If you're interested in this opportunity call 544-1715/1465 during duty hours or 544-3716/1465 after duty hours.

SPIRITUAL

Religious Education Ctr to include sex education

By Phillip Reilly
Religious Education Center

During the past year, there has been much discussion and much written about the subject of AIDS. There is no doubt that the number of those affected by this disease has grown to epidemic proportions.

It is my hope that science will come up with a cure very soon. It is not my intention, however, to add to the list of articles written about AIDS. I leave that for those more qualified. But the subject of AIDS does relate to sex education.

There seems to be a cultured indecisiveness in this country toward sex education. We don't want the problems associated with the lack of sex education such as unwanted pregnancies, promiscuity, abortions, V.D. and AIDS. At the same time, many hesitate to subscribe to any form of sex education.

It is ironic that we as a nation rank with the best as regards to pornography and yet seem to have a prudish approach to sexuality. The impression one gets is that it's okay to view sex and read about it but don't talk about it.

Since the Second Vatican Council (Vatican II), an increasing number of mandates have come forth from the Catholic Church's teaching authority regarding the need for providing children and young people with "positive and prudent sex education."

The United States Conference of Catholic Bishops has affirmed "the value and necessity of wisely planned education of children in human sexuality" in the documents "Human Life In Our Days," 1968, "To Teach as Jesus Did," (1972) and "Commission on Marriage and Family Life," 1977. In addition, number 191 of the National Catechetical Directory, "Sharing the Light of Faith," specifically mandates "positive and prudent sexual education" (1977). The Sacred Congregation for Catholic Education in its directive "Educational Guidance in Human Love," (1983) affirms the previous statements.

The Catholic Church has always recognized that the primary responsibility for education in sexuality belongs to parents. The church recognizes its own responsibility in supporting, supplementing and carrying forward education in sexuality.

There are many fine programs on sex education approved by the Bishops. In accordance with the mandates put forth by the teaching authority, we plan to incorporate some of these programs into the Catholic Religious Education Program (CCD).

It is our hope that through these programs, we will be supporting education in sexuality in the home, forming greater reverence for life and the dignity of the person and finally help to avoid some of the sex-related problems that exist in society today.

CHAPEL BRIEFS

Confirmation: CCD Confirmation candidates will be confirmed April 17 at Holy Family Church in Columbus. Bishop Raymond Lessard from the Diocese of Savannah will officiate. Practice for the ceremony will be held April 12 at 6:30 p.m. in Holy Family Church, Fourth Avenue and 12th Street, Columbus.

SSgt. Kelvin Colbert, 608th Ord. Co., assists a fellow soldier as he guides a UH-1 Huey into position over a skid of ammunition to be "slung-out."

Soldiers from the 608th Ord. Co. prepare to hook up a sling load of ammunition while a UH-1 Huey hovers overhead.

608th Ord. trains for sling-out operations

By Shawn Bryson
36th Engineer Group correspondent

Soldiers from the 608th Ordnance Company, 67th Maintenance Battalion, 36th Engineer Group recently received some demanding and unusual training.

The ordnance soldiers took to the field Jan. 20 for their annual External Evaluation. According to Capt. Carl Runyon, commander of the 608th, the field exercise was pressure packed as evaluators from the 67th Battalion Headquarters graded everything from the proper set-up of the bivouac site to the reactions of the 608th soldiers to small arms fire.

On the third day of the exercise, the 608th soldiers from the First and Second Magazine platoons got a new look at ammunition distribution as they received training in Sling-out operations.

Sling-out is the term used when ammunition supply specialists prepare a skid of ammunition to be transported by helicopter.

According to CWO 2 William Wesner, Operations Officer of the post, ASI, a four-soldier ground crew is needed for Sling-out once the ammunition has been wrapped and secured. One soldier catches the attention of the helicopter pilot and guides him into position over the ammunition. A second soldier uses a grounding device to ground the static electricity created by the helicopter. A third soldier assists the hook-up soldier who attaches the sling to the aircraft.

According to SSgt. David Kopplemann, of the 2nd Magazine Platoon, this kind of training was very beneficial to the soldiers, many of whom are new to the 608th and had never trained in Sling-out operations.

Runyon said that aside from the External Evaluation tasks, the 608th also continued to maintain operations at the Ammunition Supply Installation here, which is the 608th's primary peacetime mission.

The Ordnance soldiers returned to garrison Jan. 24 and Runyon acknowledged the soldiers for an extremely successful exercise.

Professor of Afro American Studies to speak

The Columbus Museum

Dr. William H. Wiggins Jr., Associate Professor of Afro-American Studies at Indiana University, will present a lecture, "Proclamations, Parades and Progress" Thursday, at noon in the Columbus Museum.

Dr. Wiggins' lecture is presented by the Museum in conjunction with the opening of the exhibition "Row Upon Row: Sea Grass Baskets of the South Carolina Lowcountry.

"The Row upon Row" exhibition will be on display through April 10 and includes more than 60 coiled sea grass baskets, which document the evolution of this 300-year-old Afro-American craft.

Dr. Wiggins' lecture is also presented in honor of Black History Month.

Dr. Wiggins is the author of "O Freedom! Afro-American Emancipation Celebrations," a recently published book that explores the origin, development and cultural significance of Afro-American freedom festivals.

Supported by a Rockefeller Foundation grant, the author drove 20,000 miles over an eight-month period conducting research around the country on freedom celebrations.

In addition to the noon Lunch & Lecture, Dr. Wiggins will deliver an evening lecture, "O Freedom!" at 7:30 p.m Thursday, at the Museum.

Delta Sigma Theta Sorority, Inc., Alpha Kappa Alpha Sorority, Inc., and the Mildred Terry Book Lovers Club will sponsor an evening reception after the lecture.

Feb. 11, Dale Rosengarten will present a lecture, "The Fragile History of Sea Grass Baskets." Rosengarten is author of the 65-page catalogue that accompanies the "Row Upon Row" exhibition.

Lunch & Lecture hours are Thursdays at noon in the Museum, 1202 Front Ave. and are open to the public. Admission is free. For additional information, contact the Museum at 322-0400.

Faith Middle School celebrates Martin Luther King Jr. Day

By Beth Middlemiss
Fort Benning Schools

Faith Middle School's seventh grade social studies teachers wore sweat shirts designed and created by teacher, Wanda Hagler, to celebrate Martin Luther King Jr. Day.

Seventh graders chose poems celebrating the theme "Living the Dream, Let Freedom Ring."

The poems were placed in the hallway surrounded by the personal dreams of each of the seventh grade students.

A variety of activities that included students, teachers, guest speakers, videos on Dr. King's life, assembly programs featuring student choral readings and music, skits, newspaper articles and classroom activities were parts of the celebration in the Fort Benning Schools.

Benning meets target for energy consumption

By Becky Ray
Energy Management Branch

Fort Benning met its energy consumption goals for the first quarter of fiscal year 1988.

Monthly consumption was high in September, leaving the post with performance at plus 2.9 percent above the energy goal set for the quarter by the Training and Doctrine Command (Performance above goal means that consumption exceeded the targeted ceiling).

However, consumption in October and November was below target by 0.25 and 2.08 percent, respectively; enough to make up lost ground and finish the quarter at 0.40 percent below the TRADOC goal.

Success in meeting the yearly goal, however, depends upon performance in the most critical periods, which are still ahead. The spring and fall months between heating and air conditioning seasons have traditionally been the most troublesome for Fort Benning.

During heating and cooling seasons, TRADOC adjusts energy allotments according to the number of days the temperature reads below or above the historical average. This average is taken from daily recorded temperatures for the past thirty years.

Adjustments aren't made between seasons, which often results in Fort Benning exceeding allotted consumption when weather is unseasonably warm or cool.

Because adjustments are not made during the transition periods, energy consumption must be kept to a minimum during heating and cooling seasons so that these services can be provided when necessary throughout the year.

The global warming trend also compounds Fort Benning's problems in meeting TRADOC goals. Because daily temperatures are averaged from records of the past thirty years, the warming trend is not reflected. This results in a much lower average temperature than is probable, so fewer adjustments are made for very cold weather.

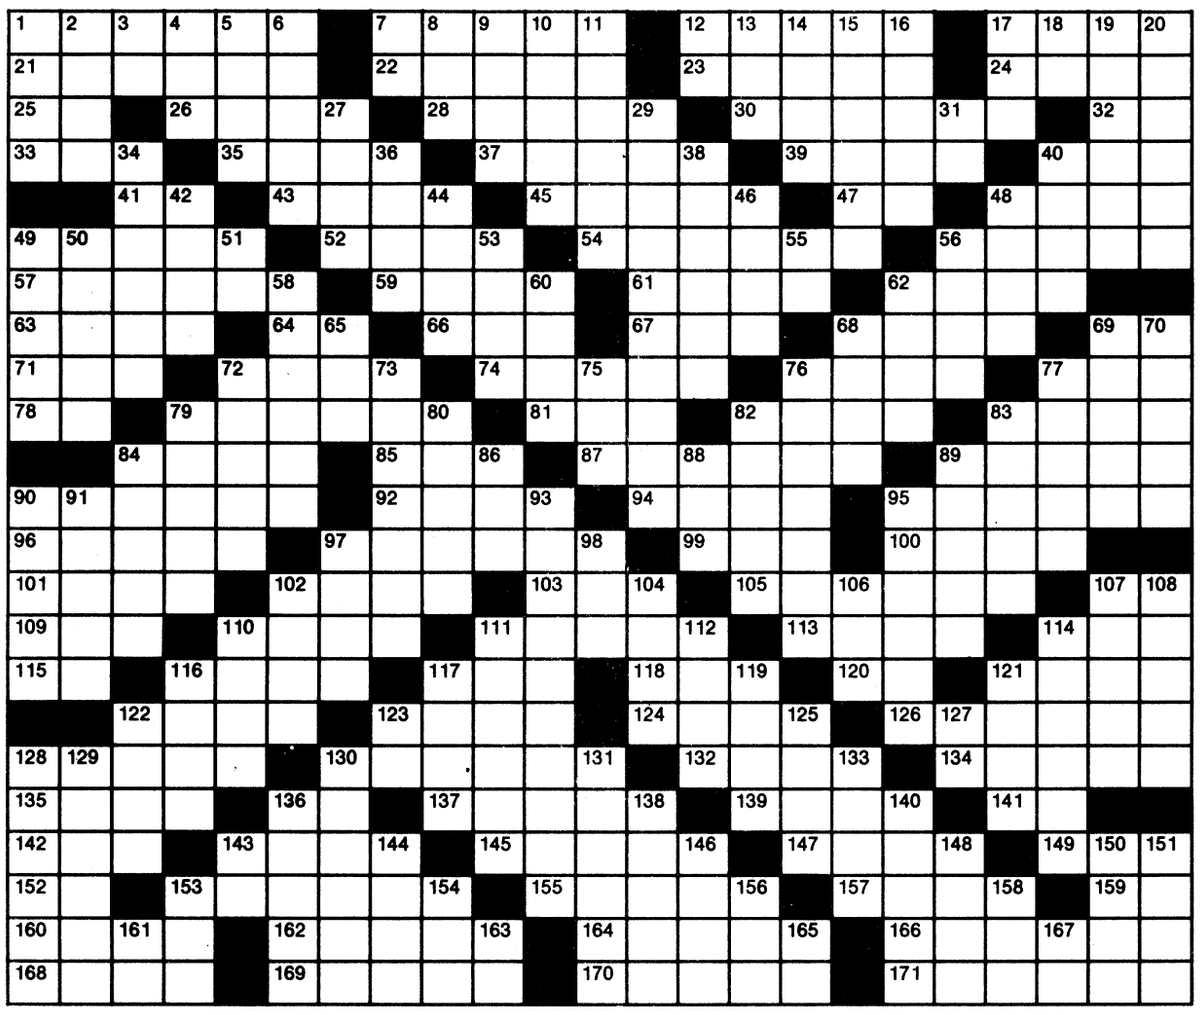
Fort Benning can't afford to rest on the success of its first quarter performance. Success in the remaining quarters depends on an even more determined effort to conserve energy.

Slogan needed

The Fort Benning Energy Management Office has begun to organize for its spring energy awareness campaign and is searching for new slogans to use on signs and promotional items.

The slogans can promote any aspect of energy conservation and should be no more than three lines long with 15 characters per line.

Slogans selected for use will entitle the writer to a T-shirt.



Bring entries to building 262 (on Edwards Street), Room 103, or mail to: U.S. Army Infantry Center, DEH, Energy Management Office, Fort Benning, Ga. 31905-5122, ATTN: ATZB-EH-FM (Ray).

Please be sure to include your name and telephone number on each entry.

Des Proctor wins Eighth Annual Cookie Run

Pvt. 2 Edward Des Proctor (left) talks with Sgt. Lloyd McDonald after the 5-mile Cookie Run. Photos by Ron Allen

By Ron Allen
Bayonet staff writer

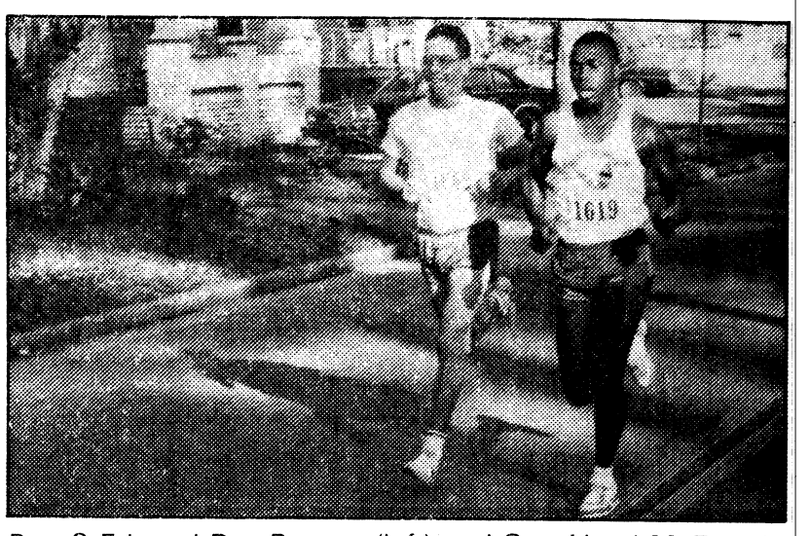
Pvt. 2 Edward Des Proctor, of the 1st Bn., 50th Inf., won this year's 5-mile Cookie Run with a blazing speed of 25:35 just 3 seconds short of last year's mark of 25:32 clocked by Brad Dodson.

Proctor was an All-American in high school in Richmond, Va. and competed in track during college in Fairfax, Va. He only recently arrived at Fort Benning and is awaiting a class date for West Point Prep School.

"My next race will be in Jacksonville, Fla. March 5," Proctor said. "The Infantry Marathon on that same date isn't in my training plans. I'm presently getting ready for the All-Army trials to be held in April."

According to Proctor, this was his best time for a 5-mile run.

Placing second for the second straight year was Sgt. Lloyd McDonald with a time of 25:48. McDonald's time last year was 26:27.



Placing third overall was Ron Dixon with 27:00.

In the women's division, Valerie Carautta placed first with a time of 31:59 followed by Virginia Baker at 34:22 and Julie Enright with 34:32.

The race is sponsored every year by the Concharty Council of Girl Scouts, Inc. and is held at Weracoba Park in Columbus.

According to race directors, the Girl Scouts raised $1,000 and are responsible for about 1,500 runners attending the race.

Anyone who didn't receive their trophy, medal or T-shirt can still do so by contacting the Concharty Council office at 327-2646.

Weather fouls preparation for marathon

By John M. Henderson
Martin Army Community Hospital

This is the third in a series of articles designed to prepare an average runner to complete the 5th Annual Infantry Marathon on March 5.

The sports world of the average runner has been abuzz the past several days with two topics; continuing to train during the cold wave and the death of Pete Maravich.

The "Siberian Express" roared through our area dumping a whopping 1-3 inches of wet grey slush on roads covered with clay-colored sand.

The most important part of the road for runner, the berm, has been covered. The runner has been forced to tromp through the cold grey-brown oatmeal on the road side.

How to muddle through?

Keep dry. Wick away the perspiration using several layers of breathable clothing. There's no reason to shell out mega bucks for high tech aluminum taffeta "bad weather" garb. Emil Zatopek wouldn't wear that stuff!

Keep warm. So much body heat is lost through your noggin. Wear a hat! Didn't your mother tell you that? Any hat will do, but one that retains heat and can be worn over the ears is best, like a ski cap.

Gore-Tex is good, but expensive. An alternative could be wearing a sweatshirt loosely packed with balled up newspaper. For gloves, try using sweat socks.

Keep hydrated. Even in winter your water requirements must be taken seriously. Your running route should go by some watering holes so you can drink 8 ounces every 2 miles.

Milage suffers during the winter so try 45 minutes on a stationary bike or a nautilus workout using low weight, high repitition or an intense stretching session.

What about Pistol Pete? He helped bring the old ABA of age, setting a style today's players emulate. He died playing the game he loved, all in all, not a terribly bad way to go. If I had my druthers, I'd choose to have a massive heart attack while running on a chilly grey morning on a desolate portion of Jamestown Road. Do I still get a marathon T-shirt.

So, should I rush to the nearest TMC to demand a treadmill stress test? Get real! First inventory your cardiac risk factors. Are you male, a smoker, diabetic, have high blood pressure, your father or brothers have a history of heart trouble? Have you been sedentary, had an abnormal EKG in the past, have high cholesterol or had chest pains when you exercise? Is your "life stress" excessive?

Talk it over with your primary care provider.

There are folks in the sports medicine circles who swear long distance running confers immunity to heart attacks. Then there are others who swear marathoner's immunity is a myth.

See you on the road.

EDITOR'S NOTE: Doctor Henderson had planned to write about ergogenic aids and quack remedies that are supposed to improve your performance. Due to the bad weather, he felt this article in the series would be better for this week. The previously planned article will appear in next week's Bayonet.

Frat Fun Game aids Cusseta School PTA

Cusseta Road Elementary School

Two collegiate graduate fraternities, the Alpha Phi Alpha and the Phi Beta Sigma Brothers, played their fourth annual Cusseta Road School PTA fund raising basketball "Frat Fun Game" in the school's gym recently.

A capacity crowd, including numerous VIPs and dignataries, again heralded the arrival of these two prominent and formidable foes of renowned round ball.

Supporters for the Alphas, commended their daring, resourceful and relentless one-time "Frat Fun Game" winners for their tireless efforts in preparing for this much coveted annual championship.

The Sigmas had won two of the previous three games and won this game 68-62.

These deserving gentlemen of the Alpha and Sigma Fraternities, volunteer their services, talents, skills, time and energies each year to aid the fund-raising efforts of the Cusseta Road PTA.

Donald B. Caldwell, principal, commended the efforts of all parties whose combined labors were instrumental in contributing to this annual fund-raising event.

Caldwell also thanked the parents, students, staff, faculty, friends and visitors for making possible the success of this forth annual basketball contest.

Many excited and delighted voices were overheard while leaving to say that they want to attend next year, so, plan ahead folks!

Marshall Whatley from C Spt., shoots over the outstrechted arms of an HHC player to score two points for his team.

HHC nips Co C, 70-65

By George Mingee
197th Infantry Brigade correspondent

BALL! BALL! The jump ball landed in the hands of HHC, Spt., who slam dunked the ball for two points.

HHC, Spt. beat C, Spt., 70-65, in a flurry of rebounds and numerous 3-point shots in 197th intramural basketball play.

Jimmy Davis, the coach for HHC, Spt., led his team with plenty of verbal support, but Sammy Chamberlain led the team with his outside shooting and his ability to drive inside. By halftime, number 21, Chamberlain had scored a whopping 21 points of his own, almost half of his team's half-time score of 44.

Derek Hill the coach for C, Spt. also did a good job coaching his team throughout the game. He received superb play from Marshall Whatley and Brian Payton who were able to rebound and shoot from the outside; HHC had their hands full trying to stop this two-man team.

The second-half of play was a flurry of shots. Neither team was able to get an advantage. But near the five-minute mark HHC pulled away with several key rebounds and blocked shots.

Several time-outs played a key factor in the game. Close to the one-minute warning Chamberlain showed the crowd he could fly with a smashing dunk to score 2 more points, making his total for the night 28 points.

Judging by the tough competition of the game neither team deserved to be a loser, but HHC came out on top with a score of 70-65, boosting their record to 3-1 and preparing them for yet another game.

Annual Shriners' bass tourney set

Shriners Hospital

BAINBRIDGE, Ga. — Top prize in the third, annual, open Shrine Largemouth Black Bass Tournament for the benefit of Crippled Children's Hospitals will be a fully-rigged bass boat. This prize valued at approximately $10,000 goes to the angler catching the most total weight of fish with artificial lures.

The tourney will be held on famous Lake Seminole in Southwest Georgia March 12 and 13. The contest is sponsored by Hasan Shrine Temple of Albany, Ga. All profits from the tournament each year goes directly to the support of Shriners Hospitals for Crippled Children.

The winning angler will receive a 16-foot Randall Craft Boat, manufactured in Pensacola, Fla., equipped with a 115-horsepower, Suzuki outboard motor and a custom-built trailer.

Shrine officials hope for an even larger number of entries than the 186 anglers who competed in 1987. The tourney will pay off for the first 30 places. Entry forms are now available and the entry fee is $100.

Headquarters for the draw tournament will be at Wingate's Lunker Lodge at Hutchinson Ferry Landing on the Flint River arm of Lake Seminole. Practice will be allowed until Friday, March 11 at 4 p.m.

PRIMUS clinic to open

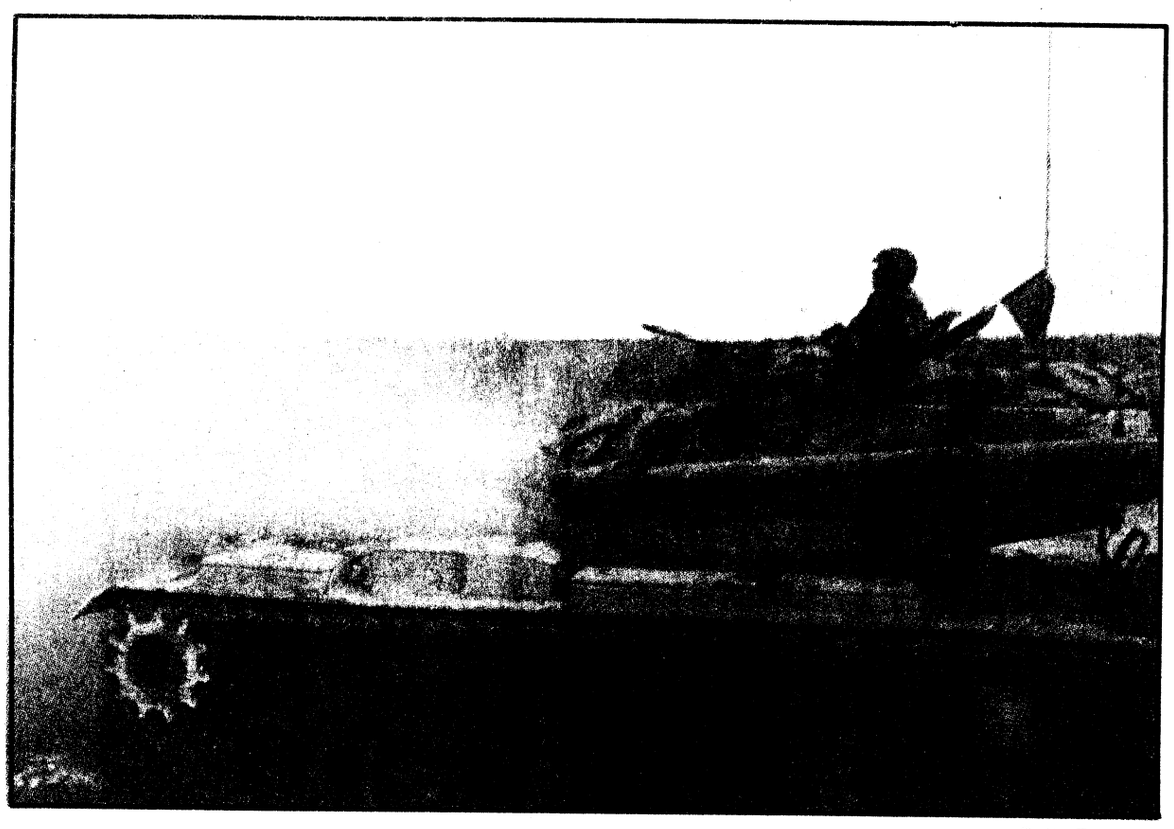
USAIC Public Affairs Office

A $2.5 million outpatient clinic will open in the Columbus area within 90 days and will provide care to soldiers, retirees and their family members.

The clinic, which will be operated by PHP Health Care Corp. of Alexandria, Va., will serve up to 48,000 patients each year and be located on Boxwood Boulevard near Columbus Square.

"This clinic will provide primary care at no cost to eligible beneficiaries and will refer those who need specialty care to Martin Army Community Hospital," says Col. Herbert E. Segal, commander of Fort Benning's Medical Department Activity and Martin Army Community Hospital.

According to Segal, experience from the other four existing Primary Care for the Uniformed Services clinics, three in northern Virginia and one in Savannah, Ga., indicates that approximately two to three percent of outpatients seen at PRIMUS clinics are referred for hospital care.

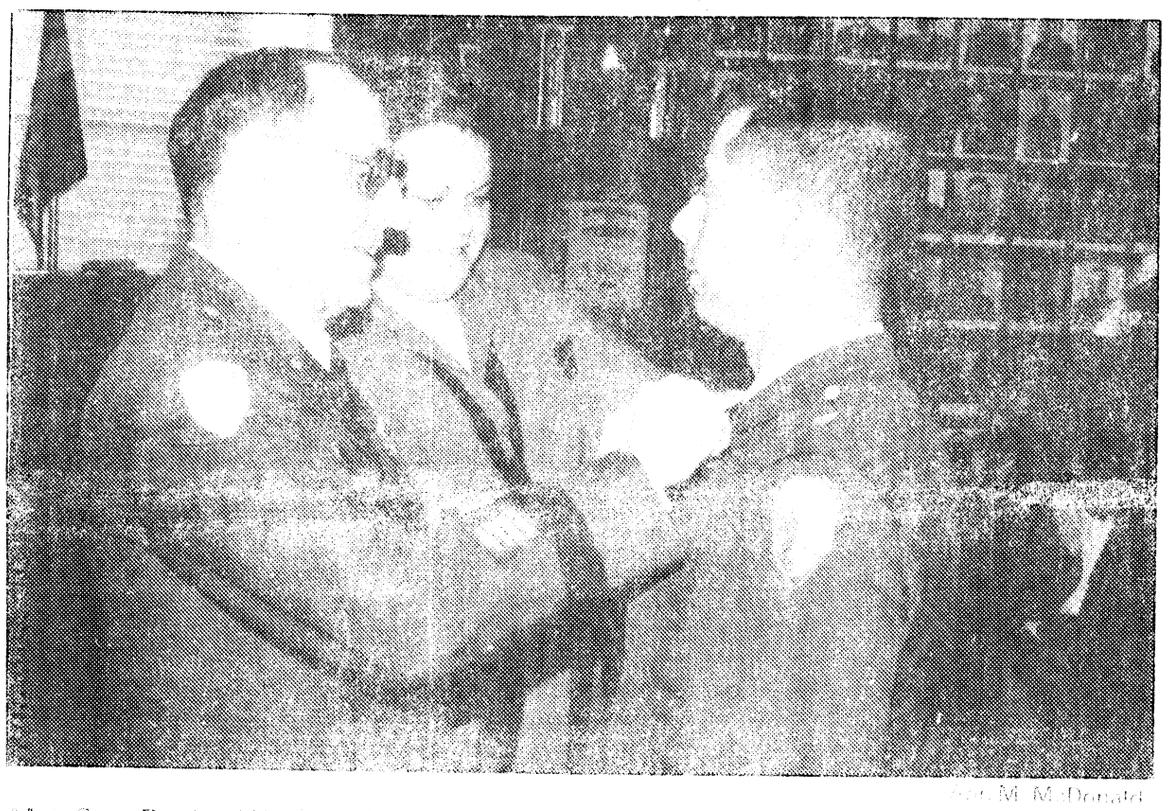


Segal said that the new PRIMUS clinic will function as an extension of the hospital's direct care system. "It's as if you took one of our clinics and transplanted it into the community," he said. "It's entirely separate from CHAMPUS."

He emphasized that assuring the quality of care is one of his chief responsibilities. "We will monitor the contract and insure that the care provided is up to specified standards," Segal said.

The outpatient clinic, which will be opened seven days a week and have 35 employees, is expected to draw some its patients from the primary care clinics on post and some from private practitioners in the community.

It will provide basic medical care to include X-rays, laboratory and pharmacy. Patients will be seen on a walk-in basis, without the necessity of making an appointment.



In addition to providing timely care to military beneficiaries, the clinic has financial advantages both to the government and to the patient. Every time a patient uses the PRIMUS clinic instead of using a CHAMPUS provider, there will be about a $40 savings to the government, Segal said. In addition, patients will not be responsible for any cost sharing.

Maj. Gen. Raphael Hallada, Chief of Ft. Field Artillery, pins cross cannons on a candidate.

Field Artillery Chief visits post

By Ann M. McDonald
Sayonet Staff Writer

The Commanding General's counterpart, the Chief of Field Artillery Maj. Gen. Raphael J. Hallada, was in Infantry territory last week.

He came at the invitation of Lt. Col. Duane Williams, Senior Field Artillery Officer, to officially designate nine officer candidates as Field Artillery Officers.

He did this as part of an ongoing program that the post Field Artillery Branch has with the Officers Candidate School.

According to the creator of the program, Capt. Lawerence Saul, a Fire Support Instructor with the U.S. Army Infantry School, the program is designed to give Field Artillery Candidates a better understanding of their future postion in the Army as a Field Artillery Officer.

"In our program, we have a series of briefings and get togethers to establish an identity and make them realize the seriousness of their profession," Saul said. "We end our program with the formal ceremony that officially designates them field artillery."

The nine candidates designated were: 2nd Lieutenants Manfred Billenstein, Anthony E. Leonard, David W. Burwell, Clifton Cole, Thomas J. Dicandido, George H. O'Brien, Jr., William B. Rhodes, Jerry R. Uhrig, II, Kevin J. Withee.

Hallada pinned the cross cannons on each of the men and warmly welcomed them into the Field Artillery branch. He also gave them advice on their careers and the importance of the role their family plays in that career.

Hallada has commanded 2nd Battalion, 321st Field Artillery, 82nd Airborne Field Artillery and has been Chief of Staff 82nd Airborne Division.

He served as Assistant Commandant of the Field Artillery School before assuming his present position.

'Tad' Davis remembered

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Retired Col. Addison "Tad" Davis III has passed away but he won't be forgogtten.

Tad Davis touched the lives of many through his many activities in the Columbus community and his support of the military community after his retirement in October 1980 and he will be missed.

Maj. Gen. K.C. Leuer remembers him as an outstanding soldier who lived and exemplified our American ideals. "He was a true friend whose death I mourn," said Leuer. "I will miss Tad Davis."

Leuer's secretary, Charlotte Lovett, who worked as Davis' secretary when he was Chief of Staff, recalls his professionalism. "He was a true professional and totally devoted to the Army and, more importantly, to making Fort Benning a better place to live and work," she said. "He was a person who truly cared for others."

Protocol chief, Ann Hill, recalled what a pleasure he was to work with. "He genuinely loved people and would do anything in his power to help them with their problems," she said. "He always supported me in anything I needed to make a VIP's visit run smooth."

"Whether it was work or play he always gave 100 percent," Hill said. "He was a great man and I will miss him dearly."

Becky Langston, also of Protocol, said she couldn't ever remember seeing him when he wasn't smiling. "I think the man just loved life," she said. "His presence was always felt wherever he went and now a little sunshine is gone from our lives."

Funeral services for former Fort Benning Chief of Staff Retired Col. Addison "Tad" Davis III, who died last week while on a business trip in Berlin, Germany will be conducted Sunday at 3 p.m. in The Infantry Center Chapel on Siegerfoos Road followed by a burial service at the Fort Benning post cemetary.

Davis served as Chief of Staff from August 1977 until his retirement in October 1980.

During his career, he also served at Benning as a detachment commander at what is now know as the Infantry Board, a tactics instructor in the Infantry School and the assistant commander of the Infantry Center.

Davis was a veteran of both the Korean and Vietnam Wars.

He is survived by his wife, the former Billie Ann Murray of Columbus and three children, a daughter and two sons.

Soldiers honored for saving life

By Becky Obert
Sayonet Staff Writer

Two Fort Benning soldiers recently received Army Commendation Medals for their role in saving the life of a heart attack victim.

SSgt. Fred H. Roberts, a master gunner instructor at the Bradley Commander's Course, 29th Infantry Regiment, and SP4 Melvin Collins, a medic at Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 2nd Battalion, 14th Infantry, 10th Mountain Division, were credited with saving the life of Jerome B. Redmond Jan. 20 at TIC Federal Credit Union.

According to Redmond's wife, Ruth, the couple were sitting on a couch at the credit union, waiting for a transaction to be processed, when her husband stopped breathing.

She immediately told the teller that something was wrong. TIC personnel called an ambulance and asked if anyone in the lobby was a doctor or medic.

At that point, Roberts and Collins offered their assistance. After checking the victim and finding that he had no pulse and was not breathing, the pair began administering cardiopulmonary rescuscitation, Roberts doing the mouth to mouth breathing and Collins doing the chest massage.

They continued this for about 12 minutes, when Redmond began breathing on his own. At about the same time, the ambulance arrived and rescue workers took over.

"I feel these men did a great thing," Mrs. Redmond said. "I think he would have died without their help."

Her husband, an Army and civil service retiree, has had heart trouble in the past, she said, but this heart attack happened so fast that it was frightening.

Roberts had recently completed a first aid course, where he learned to do CPR.

Former POW to speak at Annual Prayer Breakfast

USAIC Public Affairs Office

The Annual Fort Benning Prayer Breakfast will be held Tuesday in the Main NCO Club at 6:30 a.m.

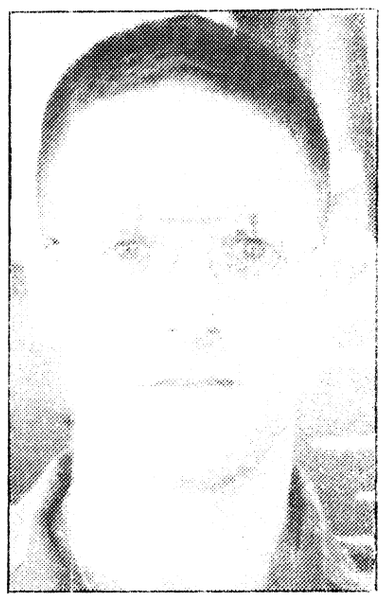
Retired Army Col.Ben Purcell will be the guest speaker. He was a POW in Vietnam.

Purcell was serving as the deputy commander, DaNang and Sub Area Command and executive officer, 80th General Support Group, Vietnam, when the helicopter on which he was a passenger was shot down south of Quang Tri City, South Vietnam, in February 1968.

He spent more than five years as a prisoner of war, 58 months of that time in solitary confinement.

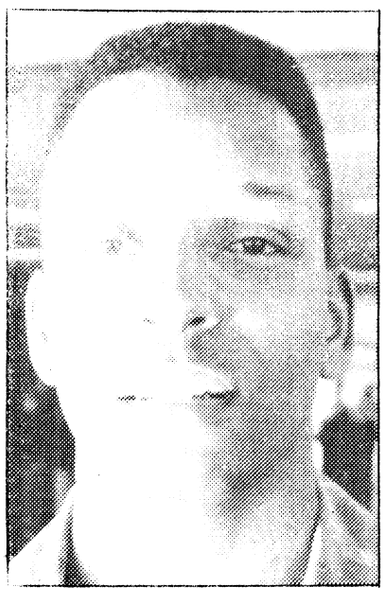
Awarded the Silver Star with Oak Leaf Cluster for two escapes from POW camps in the vicinity of Hanoi, Purcell was the senior Army officer returnee from Vietnam when he was released on March 27, 1973.

Maj. Gen. Kenneth C. Leuer, Commanding General Fort Benning, invited Purcell to contribute "to this celebration as we meet to enhance our own spiritual strength and moral fiber."

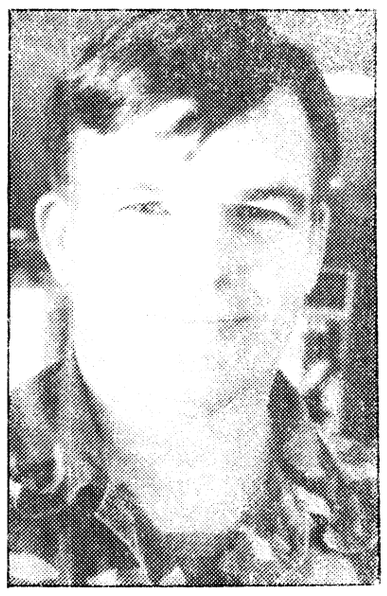


Seating at the breakfast is strictly limited to 500. For more information or tickets call 545-2288.

OPINION



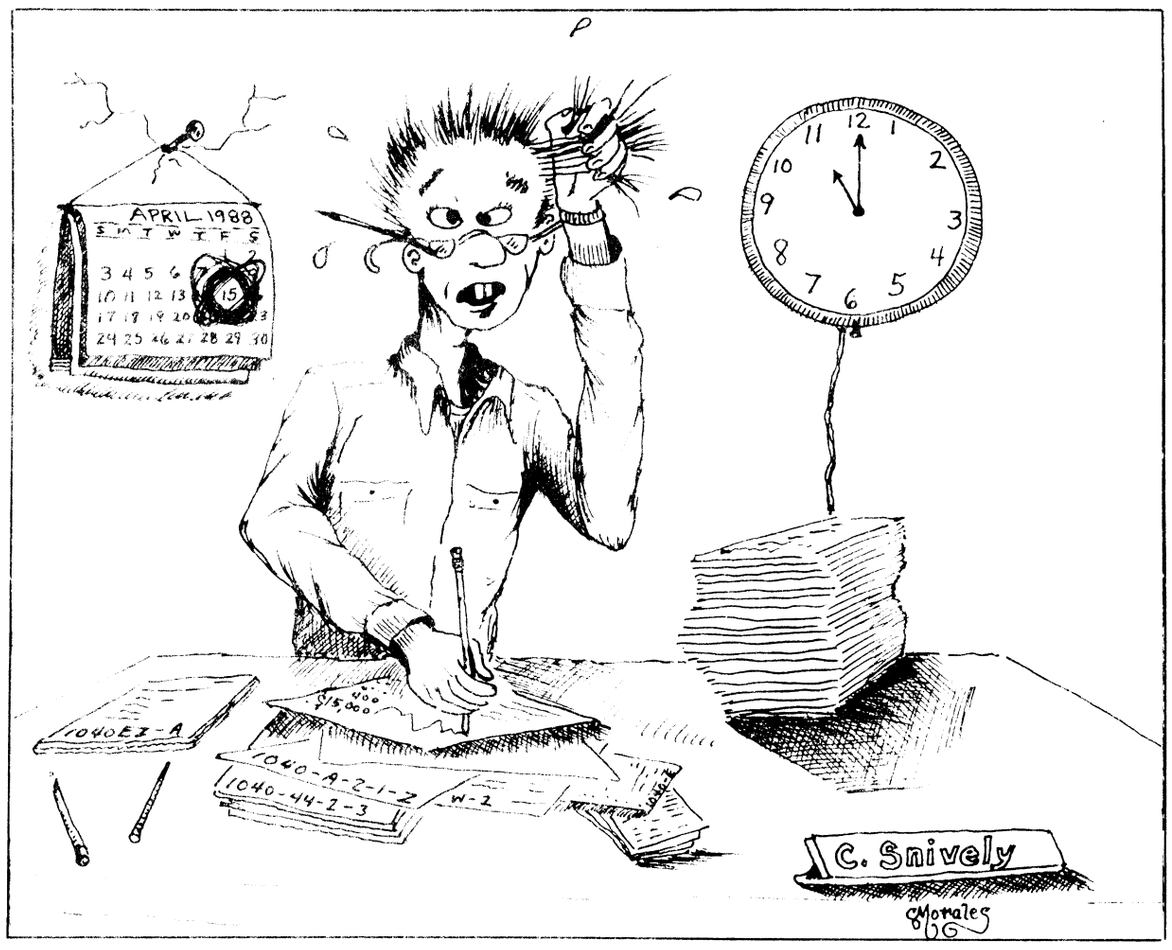
VARIOUS VOICES: Why do we celebrate Black History Month?



SP4 Collis Gilliard, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 2nd Brigade, 10th Mountain Division "We celebrate Black History Month to give people a chance to see what black people have done in the past and how far they have come. The history of blacks is not well known, so this month helps spread the word."

Capt. Bryan Owens, Company C, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment - "To make us more aware of their history. I find it intellectually stimulating to study the history of different cultures."

1st Lt. Anthony Phillips, Company C, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment - "I don't think it should be termed as a celebration, but more as a period for Americans to be made aware of the accomplishments blacks have made and the barriers they have overcome and are still overcoming. I do think that Martin Luther King's Birthday should be a day of celebration."



SFC Bradley Lawton, Company B, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment - "Because it's part of our heritage as Americans. More people need to be educated on the history of the black people to get a better understanding of their culture."

Pat Weekly, Protocol - "I think we celebrate Black History Month to make people more aware of their history and to give us a better understanding of their culture."

Snively contemplates tax time

By Clyde Snively
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Ever contemplate the mysteries of the cosmos? I usually do each year about this time.

I'm still trying to figure out how the IRS, with nearly 100 million sheep to tend, can get out all those income tax returns during the most nonproductive week of the year—that week between Christmas and New Year's day.

An even bigger mystery is how the Postal Service, not noted for its swiftness of foot, can get those blasted things into our hands practically the same day the IRS sends them out.

It's like they stockpile them in your neighborhood and as soon as the last gift is opened, whammo, the fleet couriers are standing there with your 1040 form.

I'm not complaining about this. I think it's only fair that we get the full 100 plus days to fill out the forms and get them back into the mail from whence they came.

But it doesn't work that way. I get my 1040 forms, get all psyched up about filling them out and sending them back and getting my mere pittance of a tax return.

But we all know what happens next. We wait. We wait for the Army, with only 781,000 of us souls, to get the W2 forms to us.

We wait until the end of January. By then we've lost interest in the process and are no longer excited about filling out the forms.

How come the Army can tell us to the penny how much money we made during the past year, tell us what our withholdings are, but can't include a W2 form with our end of December pay vouchers?

Is it because, being a fellow federal agency, the Army is in cahoots with the IRS?

"Say, Army, don't pass out the W2s for another month. We owe too many soldiers returns, so the longer we get to hold onto it, the better for our country's financial health."

"Okay, IRS, gotcha covered."

I even think they've hoodwinked Army Times into playing along. Ever notice when their "helpful tax preparation hints" section appears? It ain't in January.

One thing the Army stopped doing is sending us a piece of paper telling us how lucky we are to be in the Army. You know the one. It said that if we were on the outside world and had to pay for health insurance, shop in local super markets, couldn't get the tax break on BAQ and had to buy commerical life insurance, we'd need to make x number of dollars more than we are making in the Army to have a comparable standard of living.

A finance NCO told me that the purpose was to improve the morale and help with retention.

I told him it depressed me and I'd reather have the extra money just to see what it was like. See if I could handle it.

He didn't like that so he got a major to counsel me. The major pointed out that the gross figure could be used when computing sales tax deductions for those who itemized.

I asked the major if I looked like someone who itemized. End of conversation.

Well, one of these days, I'll make a trip down to JAG, pick a name off the list of tax advisors this paper was kind enough to run in the Jan. 22 edition, and make a stab at getting some bucks back from Uncle before he earns too much interest on it at my expense.

Speaking of those friendly volunteers who donate their time to those of us who have trouble filling out the forms - ever notice that all the helpers are officers?

National Prayer Breakfast held in D.C.

Recently the annual National Prayer Breakfast was held in Washington, D. C.

This event brought together the president, members of Congress, and leaders from the military services and civilian community to seek divine guidance for the national leadership and to affirm our faith in and dependence on God.

As we gather for this observance, we are maintaining continuity with our heritage. Our founding fathers recognized the importance of the spiritual element in the affairs of our nation. The foundation documents they gave us note that, "...all men are created equal," and the creator has endowed us with certain "...unalienable rights" that include "life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness."

Our nation is founded upon the belief that freedom, liberty, and happiness for all humankind are the intent of God. As a people, we persistently guard this as our way of life; as a nation, we seek to provide an example for others to pursue this ideal.

Throughout the world our people will gather for a time of prayer to seek divine guidance for our nation and our leaders. In a very crucial sense, you, the members of the military community, provide this opportunity for our people. You pay the price for the high cost of liberty and freedom; your experience the isolation of duty in remote, dangerous places around the world; you suffer the loneliness of being separated from loved ones. Our nation owes each of you its deepest gratitude.

Whoever you are, wherever you are, I thank you for the selfless sacrifice you make in the preservation of the high principles of our nation, in securing its freedom, and maintaining our unique way of life. I salute you and join with you as we seek divine wisdom and guidance in the pursuit of peace in our world.

Month celebrates contributions of Black Americans to country

In recognition of the numerous contributions of Black Americans to America's diverse ethnic, racial, social and religious history, February is proclaimed "Black History Month" at Fort Benning, Ga. This year's theme is "The Constitutional Status of Afro-Americans into the 21st Century."

Black Americans' meaningful role in American society has, historically, not been well recognized. "Black History Month" is a tool to help correct such historical omissions, and is intended to increae awareness and improve understanding between all Americans.

All personnel at this installation and in surrounding communities are encouraged to join with fellow soldiers and citizens in enjoying activities at Fort Benning during the month.

History's black chaplains got little recognition, most of the work

By Rudi Williams
American Forces Information Service

From the American Revolution to midway through the Civil War, black chaplains functioned mainly as preachers and assistants. "They may have done the majority of work, but they received little recognition," said Chaplain (Maj.) John Brinsfield, an instructor at the U.S. Army Chaplains School at Fort Monmouth, N.J.

Brinsfield found the first reference to anyone serving as a chaplain's assistant in the diary of Chaplain William W. Meech, chaplain of the Army hospital at Newport News, Va., during the Civil War. "Adam Bright (a black servant) was called an assistant chaplain by Chaplain Meech in 1862," said Brinsfield. "He (Bright) was treated as a clergy person. He preached, conducted funerals, just as chaplains do. So we know of one case where a black man served as a chaplain before they were officially recognized by the Army as chaplains."

"Adam Bright, my servant, who I call the assistant chaplain, because he attends to the sick, the burying of the dead and the preaching of the righteousness to the living among those of his race, barely escaped being taken with the rest," Meech recorded in his diary after most of the blacks working at the hospital in Newport News had been sent to fight in the war. "He thinks he would 'have had to go sure' but for being my servant.

"It was as much for his protection as my own necessity that I engaged him in this capacity. Adam is black, but not as black as many of the Negroes are, is 5 feet 8½ inches high, has gray or hazel colored eyes, with curly hair. He is about 34 years old; has a wife and three children," Meech continued in his diary, which is kept at the Chaplains Museum at Fort Monmouth.

"If we had the time and manpower to research Civil War letters, we could probably come up with 15 or more names of black people who preached and served during the Civil War, particularly chaplains who marched with Gen. William T. Sherman," said Brinsfield.

"Sherman had more than 10,000 black persons following him through Georgia. According to his memoirs, four black Baptist preachers met in Savannah in December 1864 to reassure Secretary of War Stanton that Sherman had treated Black people fairly. He was feeding a lot of the freed people from Army supplies.

"If I remember correctly, there was also a black chaplain who helped settle a major fight between cowboys and soldiers on the Mexican border. So there is a record of one other black chaplain who worked in community relations after the Civil War," said Brinsfield.

Salter takes top NCO spot in 197th

Sally Roberts

CSM Tony Salter, 197th Inf. Bde. command sergeant major, leads the brigade color guard as commander of troops, during a recent ceremony on Kelley Hill.

By Sally Roberts
197th Infantry Brigade correspondent

CSM Tony Salter recently stepped into the top noncommissioned officer spot in the 197th Infantry Brigade and quickly acquainted himself with the climate of the NCO corps within the brigade. He now faces the challenge of making his goals a reality.

"I have one great goal," Salter said with confidence, "and that is to make this brigade the best brigade in the U.S. Army."

Salter explained that he will place emphasis on three areas in order to achieve this goal.

"Training soldiers is the most important thing we do," said Salter. "We get young soldiers straight from basic and advanced training and we must get that soldier peaked to the highest level of his abilities."

"We must make maintenance a priority, making sure that each piece of equipment is ready to roll out on a moment's notice," Salter said. "Soldiers will have confidence in their equipment if they know that it has been properly maintained."

As Salter explained his third priority, his experience as a leader became most evident, and he spoke from the heart.

"I believe, from the bottom of my heart, that we must always consider the needs of the soldier's family," Salter added. "If we have soldiers who are happy at home with their families, they will be productive on the job every day. A soldier will do anything we ask of him if he feels that we care about his family."

And that is where Salter will turn to the leaders in the brigade to ensure that these goals become reality.

"Leaders need to create an environment where the soldier feels good about himself and the Army, and feels great about coming to work every day," he said.

One group of brigade soldiers who will really need to heed Salter's word are the NCOs.

"I expect NCOs to set the exampic on and off duty, 365 days a year," Salter said. "I expect NCOs to be motivators and mentors, and to know their job, tactically as well as technically."

Salter has set high standards and has confidence in those who will actually carry out the mission.

Salter concluded by saying, "I am here to be another eye, to see that we are going in the direction that the commander has given us."

Training joins forces from post, Fort Stewart

By Shawn Bryson
36th Engineer Group correspondent

The 586th Engineer Company conducted an assault river crossing operation Jan. 25 in conjunction with Co. E, 3rd Engineer Battalion, from Fort Stewart, Ga. The Fort Stewart company came here to conduct fast water bridging and rafting training that it can't do at Fort Stewart because there is no "fast water" there.

During a coordination meeting in late December, the idea was formulated to conduct the joint exercise,with the 586th providing the personnel for the engineer regulating points and Co. E providing the ribbon rafting assets.

To make the training realistic, Co. B, 43rd Engineer Battalion was alerted to roll out their company equipment, ranging from 3/4 ton trucks to the Army's 621 scraper. It then set up an engineer regulating points on the Alabama side of the Chattahoochee.

As the four different serials arrived in approximately 15-minute intervals, the soldiers dismounted to provide site security while the vehicles were sized according to length and weight for the rafts being constructed by Co. E.

Three float rafts capable of carrying a military load of class 60 and a length of 66 feet were then used to raft the engineer construction equipment from Bradley Landing to Engineer Landing, a trip approximately one mile upstream. There the equipment was offloaded and moved to the far shore engineer regulating points where the serials from Co. B reconsolidated and continued on with their tactical convoy.

The exercise provided the opportunity for all three companies to receive realistic training. For the 586th, it was an opportunity to work on one of its company battle tasks, which is to establish engineer regulating points in support of a bridging or rafting operation. With Co. E here, the 586th was able to concentrate all of its efforts in that area, where under normal circumstances they must provide both the rafting and engineer regulating point assets.

36th Engineer Group holds review

36th Engineer Group correspondent

Maj. Gen. Kenneth C. Leuer recently presented various awards and served as guest speaker at the 36th Engineer Group Quarterly Payday Review at Engineer Field.

Accompanied by the 36th Engineer Group commander, Col. Douglas R. Church, Leuer presented Certificates of Achievement to Sgt. Edgar Wolfe, for being selected as the Group Non-Commissioned Office of the Quarter; SP4 Charles Meroney, for being selected as the Group Soldier of the Quarter and PFC Rosetta M. Damato, who was selected as the Group Chef of the Quarter. Other recipients included SP4 Thomas Johnstone, for being selected as the Group Driver of the Quarter; SP4 Roberto Martinez Jr., who was selected as the Group Mechanic of the Quarter and SP4 Sheldon Leggett, who was selected as the Group Operator of the Quarter.

Sgt. Darlene Driver, Supply Sergeant for the 215th Finance Support Unit, accepted an award on behalf of the 215th for winning the United States Army Infantry Center FORSCOM Army Chief of Staff Supply Excellence Award (Level 1, Category 1).

Leuer also presented Company A, 43rd Engineer Battalion with the second place trophy for the 1987 football season and the 598th Maintenance Company received the first place trophy. The 598th was also presented with the Commanding General's Sports Participation Trophy for 1987 for the second straight year.

Leuer also presented Unit of Excellence streamers to several of the Group's units. The 533rd Transportation Company, Company A and the 608th Ordnance were recognized for their participation during NTC Rotation 87-13.

The last of the days awards, the Army Superior Unit Award, was presented to the 43rd Engineer Battalion.

Following remarks by both Leuer and Church, the parade ended with a pass in review by the soldiers of the 36th Engineer Group.

Combat engineers practice gunnery skills

By Kevin J. Howerton
197th Infantry Brigade correspondent

The 72nd Engineer Company (Combat) of the 197th Infantry Brigade, was at Cactus observation point recently to conduct Combat Engineer Vehicle gunnery.

"We've upgraded the course this year to include some realistic battlefield exercises," said SSgt. Ernest L. Farmer Jr., safety/grader for the gunnery. "We've installed a tank ditch that must be breeched using the blade and a culvert-emplacing task where you use the boom and winch assembly to lay a large pipe in the ground. We also built a bunker and a log crib for targets when using the 165mm main gun."

The CEV is a large tracked vehicle that combat engineers use to breach or create obstacles on the battlefield. The gunnery also included targets for the .30 and .50 caliber machine guns mounted on the CEV.

For some of the newer soldiers in the unit, it was a first opportunity to become aquainted with this machine.

"This is the firt time I've been at a live-fire for a CEV," said Pvt.2 Robert L. Gill, who has been in the 72nd for three weeks. "I've learned that it takes quite a bit to be a loader on one of these things. The main-gun round weighs 65 pounds, and space inside the turret is limited. You have to position yourself just right to be able to handle it."

"I've also been able to drive the CEV for the first time," Gill continued. "All the stuff taught in Advanced Individual Training really works out here. You can't hear with the engine running, so you have to be able to understand the hand signals that the ground guides use. You also have to know how to be a ground guide yourself, so you can communicate with the driver."

MOPP skills crucial in battle

By Frederick D. Moye
197th Support Battalion

From the classroom instruction to the enjoyable time soldiers spend in Military Operations in Protective Posture (MOPP), it is quite apparent that Nuclear, Biological and Chemical operations are expected to be a crucial determining factor in any battlefield confrontation.

Recently, soldiers from Company B, 197th Support Battalion conducted training to decontaminate patients who were injured or wounded while operating in an NBC environment. This type of training is necessary due to the complexities involved in thoroughly decontaminating a patient without causing him further injury.

As a medical unit within the 197th Infantry Brigade, training to operate effectively in such an environment is an integral step toward accomplishing the mission. When casualities are generated on the contaminated battlefield, patient decontamination is the foremost consideration before medical treatment can be given.

In an attempt to improve patient decontamination procedures, the Army has implemented the M-51 Collective Protective System.

This system gives medical personnel in line units down to battalion level, the capability to treat patients on the contaminated battlefield.

In this process, once a patient has been decontaminated, he is then transferred to an agent-free area to await entrance into the M-51 chemical shelter system, a pressurized chamber that allows medical personnel to operate without being hindered by clumsy, chemical protective equipment. Here, the soldier is given definitive medical treatment by a doctor or physician's assistant.

Only when the entire decontamination system is operated correctly does the casualty on the contaminated battlefield have a significant chance of survival.

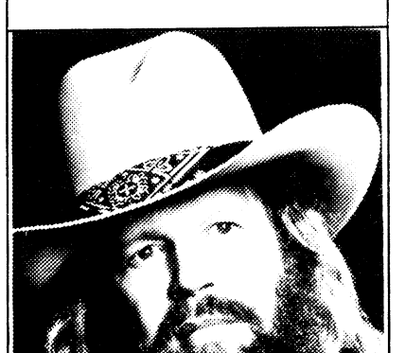
BMMC helps upgrade 197th

By George Mingee
197th Inf Bde correspondent

The 197th's ongoing revitalization and upgrading of Kelley Hill facilities now includes the Brigade Materials Management Center.

BMMC has added a product-shortage facility to its operation, which directly affects the brigade's vehicle maintenance program.

An important part of BMMC's mission is the requisition of petroleum products. Without gasoline, oil, and other automotive products, the 197th's tactical and nontactical vehicles would be immobile on the battlefield and transportation would grind to a standstill.



"The key to the system is to make sure the brigade has an adequate 15-day supply on hand in case of war," said Capt. Russell K. Price. "By using the Authorized Stockage Level System, the turn-around time is faster for products, which makes us more independent."

A stockpile of 43 petroleum products are available to the brigade, such as starting fluids, anti-freeze, and, of course, oil. With this system, a unit now receives an item in one or two days instead of waiting for the requisition to be filled at main post. Also, this decreases vehicle down time tremendously.

This new stockpile of petroleum products is an ongoing program for the 197th. It not only helps the vehicle maintenance program, but it also enables BMMC to better fulfill its mission.

ASK THE JUDGE

By Ollie M. Mick
Staff Judge Advocate's Office

Q. I am planning on buying a mobile home when my tax refund arrives. I have been shopping around so that I can get the best deal, and I noticed that some companies offer to sell me insurance as part of my contract. Is this a good deal?

A. Property insurance is a very good idea. In fact, the finance company usually requires that you have such insurance until the loan is paid off, much like car loans. Before you agree to buy this insurance through the dealer, though, you need to consider a number of things.

- Who is the insurance company selling the policy? Is it someone reputable who will be in business and able to pay if your home is damaged or destroyed and you make a claim? It is important to check the reputation of the insurance company with the Better Business Bureau and the Attorney General's office before you agree to accept the policy.
- How much coverage will you be buying and is the rate comparable to purchasing your own policy? Policies provided by the dealer may be intended only to cover the amount of the loan in case of a disaster. You may want to pick a policy which will pay for needed repairs or liability to third parties who are injured in or around your home.
- By having a "middle man" in the insurance process, it is possible that your premium payments may not arrive at the insurance company on the due date. This could cause a lapse in your coverage and leave you without insurance. You may want to get a separate policy just to keep control over your payments. Also, do not assume that you are insured until you receive a copy of the policy. If you don't receive a copy, contact the agent and demand one.

Overall, dealer provided coverage is better than no coverage at all, but probably not as reliable or cost effective as a policy tht you could buy yourself. There are a number of companies that provide insurance for the home. Take the time to phone a number of agents and comparison shop before you commit yourself. If you combine the coverage with the same company who handles your automobile or life insurance, you may be eligible for a discount rate.

Q. On my last personal loan there is an entry for an insurance payment. I didn't notice it at the time I signed the contract. Why is it there?

A. Many loan of finance companies make this insurance available to its customers to pay off the balance due on the contract if they should die. If you actually compare the amount of coverage you are getting with the rate you are being charged, these policies are much more expensive than standard life insurance. The finance companies cannot force you to buy these policies, so you should be careful to check the next contract before you sign it and have this insurance omitted. If you are concerned about leaving your family an estate with a large number of debts, it is much more cost efficient to purchase a term life insurance policy on your own then to use most of the finance companies' policies. Many companies will offer rates that are similar to the SGLI. This should provide more than adequate coverage for your family.

Q. My wife and I are considering joining a health spa to work off some of these holiday pounds. Is there anything I should look for?

A. Before joining a civilian health spa, be sure to check for facilities available to you and your family on post. You may find that everything you need is already provided by Fort Benning at little or no charge. If after examining the recreational facilities on post, you still want to join a health spa, there are several things to keep in mind.

Although many people do use and enjoy civilian health spas, others have written the Federal Trade Commission with complaints about high-pressure sales tactics, misrepresentations and spas that go out of business once they collect their fees. Be especially careful if the salesperson shows you pictures of good looking men and women. Many times the spas are advertised as a good location to meet people. However, almost all spas have separate facilities for men and women. Make sure you ask about this if your main purpose of joining is to meet a "friend."

To avoid most of these problems, do some comparison shopping and consider the following items:

- Inspect the spa. Go to the spa during the period that you will be using it and see if it is likely to be over-crowded.
- Is the facility maintained, clean and in good condition?
- Find out what hours the equipment is available and how many members there are.
- Ask about the training and qualifications of the instructors.
- Ask if you can have a trial period to sample the spa before actually joining.
- Consider the contract. If offered, a "special time-limited" rate as an incentive for joining at once, you should be suspicious about the facility. Take the contract home and read it carefully. If you have any questions about the documents, bring them to the Legal Assistance Office for review by an attorney. If you do decide to sign right away, be sure to check for these basic provisions: Is everything the salesperson promised in the contract? If not, you may not be able to rely on his statements. Is there a cooling off period to permit you to reject the contract after it has been signed? If you need to cancel, will there be a refund? This is especially important for the soldier who may receive orders and not be able to complete the contract.

Before joining, contact the Attorney General's Consumer Protection Office, the Better Business Bureau, or the Legal Assistance office to check the reputation of the spa you are considering. If problems arise after you join, these same offices will also be available to provide additional assistance. In most cases, however, the contracts are very difficult to get out of once they are signed.

Dental health month begins

Dental Activity

"A healthy smile shows your style" is the theme for this year's National Children's Dental Health Month. This is the 40th year that the dental profession has conducted a dental health month.

The Fort Benning Dental Activity will kick off the observance with the signing of a proclamation by Maj. Gen. Kenneth C. Leuer, post commander. DENTAC personnel will also visit the Fort Benning schools to promote good oral hygiene. Dental screenings will be conducted, as well as brushing and flossing instructions and table clinics. A variety of videotapes will be shown at different schools.

DENTAC will be joining members of the local dental community in putting on a Children's Dental Health Fair Feb. 20 at Peachtree Mall from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. The public is invited.

Activities will include dental screening exams for children age 12 and under, table clinics, videos on smokeless tobacco, seatbelt safety and baby bottle mouth. Continuous oral hygiene instructions will be given, along with a Teddy Ruxpin presentation on preventive dentistry.

There will be clowns, puppet shows and a tooth fairy who will give children handmade bags in which to put their primary teeth under their pillows.

In addition, there will be several educational games designed to increase children's dental knowledge.

Fort Benning sixth graders have been invited to participate in the Muscogee County coloring contest. Prizes will be given to first, second and third place winners.

Faith Middle School student wins trip to Europe

By Beth Middlemiss
Fort Benning Schools

Jose Pluguez Jr., an eighth grader at Don C. Faith Middle School, was the grand prize winner in the Young Columbus Contest sponsored by The Columbus Ledger-Enquirer and other U.S. newspapers in cooperation with Parade Magazine.

He has won a 10-day tour of England and Scotland in April and will travel in a student group with other regional winners from throughout the United States.

A project on the Persian Gulf using information from over 80 articles from the Columbus Ledger-Enquirer from June through December took Pluguez to the finals of the local competition.

He competed against four other finalists on Jan. 22, writing an essay and being interviewed by contest judges.

Those four other finalist were all Pluguez's classmates at Don C. Faith Jr. Middle School and students of teacher Libbie Kurinec.

In competition with entries from seventh and eighth grade students from throughout the Chattahoochee Valley region, all five finalists were from the Fort Benning School System.

Jennifer George, an eighth grader and Gina Barlotta, Sterling Harris, Troy Hutchins, all seventh graders, each received $100 as the four Young Columbus Contest finalists.

"The Young Columbus Contest provides an excellent opportunity for our students to do long term research," said Gail Wilson, assistant principal at Faith School. "Students are able to follow current events and to study them in depth by using the newspaper."

"Research methodology, effective report writing, and project design were all part of a class assignment that took place in Kurinec's class.

These are academic skills that our students will use from now on.

"The Young Columbus Contest gave students an opportunity to put these skills to use as they were being studied," said Wilson.

"The class projects also gave students the opportunity to experience long term planning and the need for a real commitment to a task," Kurinec said. "They learned the need to set goals and deadlines for themselves."

"Jose Pluguez, like many of his classmates, used every minute of his class time wisely, and then spent time at home refining what he had worked on at school," said Kurinec. "Jose, the four other finalists, and their classmates certainly exhibited the kind of dedication needed to carry out this kind of task."

"Jose worked on this project for months in our basement," said his father, SFC Jose Pluguez. "He would show me various parts of the project as he completed them. After a while, I began taking my friends who came to visit downstairs to see the work that he was doing."

When asked why he chose to do this project on the Persian Gulf, Jose Jr. commented that he was interested in the oil going through the Persian Gulf and the effects the oil had on countries who are dependent upon it.

"I don't know how much time I actually spent on my project, but I know that I got a lot out of it," said Pluguez, "I am very glad that I had the opportunity to participate in the Young Columbus Contest.

"I am very excited about the trip to Scotland and England," Pluguez said, "I was born in Germany, but my family has never traveled to the British Isles. I have been given information about Big Ben and the other sights that we'll see, and I'm looking forward to traveling with the other students."

Finances a mess? ACS counselors can help you set up a family budget

By Sharon Reynolds
Bayonet Staff

"Most financial problems are caused by an over extension of credit," said Velvet Ruffin-Corley, financial assistance counselor.

Ruffin-Corley says she sees cases of over-extended credit almost every day at her job with the Consumer Affairs and Financial Assistance Program, Army Community Service, building 2640.

"Not all the soldiers I see have a lot of debts," Ruffin Corley said. "I also work with young couples to show them 'how to budget their money each month.' Some people need that kind of guidance. It can only benefit them if they're willing to follow our recommendations," she said.

Ruffin-Corley works with soldiers and their family members to set up realistic fianacial goals and gives suggestions on how to reach those goals.

She said she sits down with a soldier and family members and lists all their monthly expenses; food, gas for automobiles, clothing, babysitting, etc.

Then, she said she lists all the monthly bills; rent, utilities, car payments, etc.

Next, they list the families' monthly income and compare. If the money going out is more than the money coming in, she makes suggestions to where they can cut expenses and helps them set up a budget.

It is then up to the couple to follow the budget, she said.

If expenses have already built up beyond a couple's ability to pay, Ruffin-Corley said they consider the Debt Liquidation Program.

This is a program where Ruffin-Corley writes a letter to creditors asking them not to take legal action against the soldier concerned and also to accept a lower payment. This lower payment is not less than half the original payment, so that the soldier can pay off his debts and still have enough money for the basics.

However, Ruffin-Corley said clients who wish to go with this program have to be motivated to pay their bills.

In some cases, another course of action is bankrupcy, she said. If that's the case, Ruffin-Corley refers them to the Staff Judge Advocate's office.

To arrange for an appointment with a budget counselor, call 545-5516. The appointment will be scheduled at the soldier's convenience.

Both soldier and spouse are encouraged to attend the counseling session so both will be aware of all aspects of the financial situation.

Each week Ruffin-Corley gives a class, open to everyone, at building 2640 on balancing checkbooks. She said, "Several people who have had checking accounts for years with no problem, told me they learned something from my class," she said. It's a good class."

Additionally, Budget classes are available for unit briefings; topics include: Sure-Pay, check writing, maintenance of check books, budgeting, credit and debt liquidation. Information is provided on Army Emergency Relief, Food Stamps and the Women, Infant and Children Program. To schedule a class call 545-5516.

Rose VanKuren, also a financial assistance councelor, is a representative for a satellite consumer affairs office at Kelley Hill, building 9023. She is also available to Kelley Hill soldiers Monday, Tuesday and Thursday. She will be in the Soldiers Plaza office on Wednesday and Friday.

Allensworth founded colony

By Rudi Williams
American Forces Information Service

While scouring through the windswept, alkali flats area of California's San Joaquin Valley in 1973, movie producer Danny McGuire stumbled across the remains of the town of Allensworth.

McGuire was intrigued during his search for a location to shoot a television commercial. It isn't often one finds the remains of an all-black colony founded by a retired Army chaplain and four other black men.

Lt. Col. Allen Allensworth, who reached the highest rank conferred on a black man in his time, founded the town that bears his name in 1908, two years after retiring from the Army.

"He was the second black chaplain in the military. Grover Cleveland appointed him chaplain of the all-black 24th Infantry Regiment at Fort Bayard, N.M., in 1886," said McGuire. "He served during the Spanish-American War and the Philippine Insurrection. As was the case with all chaplains of that era, he was responsible for the morale and a academic education of the troops.

"He is probably the one man most singurlarly noted for establishing the blueprint for the Army's educational and vocational training program," said McGuire. He set up a lot of post schools as a chaplain, and many of his concepts and teaching methods were adopted by the Army.

Allensworth trained a small group of enlisted men to serve as teachers. He made education compulsory at Fort Bayard and in 1889 wrote a guide titled Outline of Course of Study, and the Rules Governing Post Schools at Fort Bayard, N.M.

Allensworth introducted the use of the stereopticon, which is a special slide or movie projector. He also advocated vocational programs, including telegraphy, printing, baking, grammar, arithmetic, history, clerkship and cooking.

Another of his many works was "Education in the Army and How to Make it a Success."

Allensworth also recommended that soldiers discipline their bodies through exercise and drill.

While detailed to the World Columbian Exposition in Chicago in 1893, Allensworth learned of a course called "Science of Cooking." He later conducted cooking classes on post and used the knowledge to supplement the Army's Manual of Cooking.

"He went on to found a colony in California that was established, financed and governed entirely by black Americans," said McGuire. "There was no white influence whatsoever.

Allensworth was also the only black town established west of the Rockies.

Allensworth wanted to create a community where blacks could live and work in dignity, free from the racial prejudices they suffered throughout America.

"He envisioned the town as a home for black soldiers -- men who had fought in the Spanish-American War and the Philippine Insurrection, who were hailed as heroes going up San Juan Hill (Cuba), yet when they came home, they found themselves ostracized.

"Segregation still existed," said McGuire.

"Allenworth wanted to provide them a home so they could farm, start a business or do whatever they wanted to do," he added.

The town of more than 80 acres was at its peak from 1908 until the end of World War I. "Between 200 and 300 people lived in the valley during those years," said McGuire.

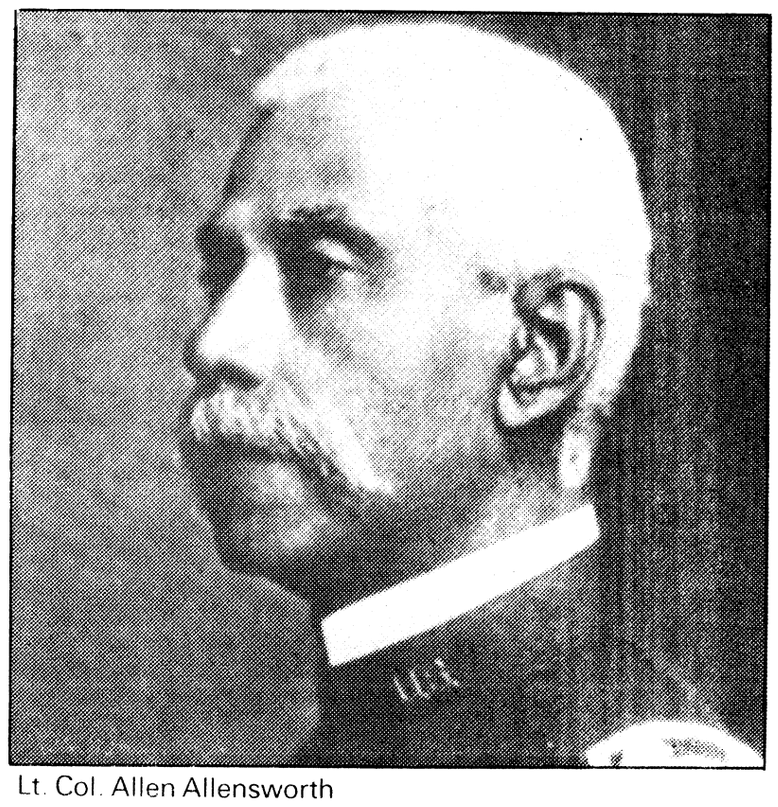
With farming as an economic base, Allensworth flourished with several businesses, a barber shop, bakery, livery stable, general store, drug store, machine shop and the Allensworth Hotel.

It also had a train station, post office, library, justice of the peace, constable, girl's glee club, orchestra, brass band and Women's Improvement Club.

The year 1914 was bad for the thriving town. A proposal to establish a vocational school there was defeated in the state capitol. Even more trauatic: Allen Allensworth was struck and killed by a motorcycle while visiting Los Angeles.

"The town started to die in the early '20s because of a lack of jobs and water, plus surrounding agricultural developments took away badly needed artesian-well water," said McGuire. "New methods of farming were tried and deeper wells dug, but it was futile. The area eventually became a valley of abandoned buildings.

"I was amazed and somewhat embarrased that I had never heard of Chaplain Allensworth in school. His name was never mentioned in American or California history," McGuire said.



The California Park Service is restoring the desolate area, dotted with a few rundown shacks and remnants of some hard-scrabble farms, into a historical park.."They've already restored six of the original dwellings and refurbished the schoolhouse, general store and library," said McGuire.

An intrigued McGuire wrote and produces a documentary called "The Spirit of Allensworth" in 1979. It won a local Emmy and awards from the World Institute of Black Communications. The documentary was also aired on public television and was the first step in bringing the story to viewers' attention, said McGuire.

Armed with a grant from the National Endowment for Humanities Media Program, McGuire is working toward realizing his 15-year-old dream — a dramatic, feature-length, made for television movie.

His company, Spirit Productions, of San Francisco, will produce the film in a joint venture with KNPB Public Broadcasing in Reno, Nev. The project is slated to be completed by the fall of 1989.

"I've always felt the Allensworth's story needed to be told in dramatic terms," said McGuire.

Lt. Col. Allen Allensworth

Allensworth was born a slave

Allen Allensworth was born a slave in Kentucky in 1842. His mother encouraged him to learn to read and write while playing with the master's children. The young slave boy developed an unquenchable thirst for knowledge, but a learned slave represented a challenge to the institution. As a result, his appetite for learning caused him to be sold "down the river" to Mississippi at the age of 12.

After several attempts to escape bondage were thwarted, Allensworth finally succeeded when the Union Army moved into Louisville, Ky., early in the Civil War.

He was headed for freedom in Canada, but instead worked as a civilian nursing aide in the 44th Illinois Volunteer Infantry.

The runaway slave joined the Navy in April 1863 and served as a first class seaman, advancing to first class petty officer before leaving the Navy in April 1865.

Allensworth worked in the commissary at the Navy Yard in Mound City, Mo., for two years and then, with the help of brother William, ran two successful restaurants in St. Louis.

Meanwhile, he attended Eli Normal School to get a formal education.

Ordained as a Baptist minister in April 1871, Allensworth sold the restaurants and devoted his time to the church.

He became interested in becoming an Army chaplain after a soldier told him that chaplains of the four all-black Army regiments were white.

He accepted an appointment as the second black chaplain in the Army in 1886.

36th Engineers improve Porter Range

By Shawn Bryson
36th Engineer Group Correspondent

The soldiers from Company C, 43rd Engineer Battalion, 36th Engineer Group had their work cut out for them last week as they were called upon to make improvements at Porter Range here.

The Charlie soldiers were given the mission of building a strongpoint which was attacked and sustained mortar fire this week during an AUSA Symposium demonstration.

Work at the range began Jan. 24 and the soldiers' deadline was midnight Jan. 28.

Capt. Ronald Light, Company C commander, explained that the strongpoint consisted of five command bunkers, 500 meters of two-meter deep trench line and 600 meters of triple standard concertina wire to encompass the camp.

During the live-fire demonstration, Rangers from the 75th Ranger Regiment breached the perimeter, and it was the job of the Charlie soldiers to make that as realistic as possible according to SFC Roy Bridges, Earth-moving Platoon Sergeant.

Bridges explained that the 1st platoon soldiers were responsible for constructing the wire barrier and that the entire operation was done in a tactical mode.

The five bunkers were prefabricated at the 43rd Battalion S-4 yard by the 2nd Platoon soldiers and were transported to the project site Bridges said.

The Earth-moving Platoon soldiers worked with the soldiers from the 3rd Platoon in a joint effort to dig out the trenches and bunker positions. The two platoons also covered the exposed parts of the bunkers with 1,000 sand bags per bunker Bridges said.

National energy consumption affects the country's economy

By Becky Ray
Energy Management Office

Although you may never have considered how the national energy consumption affects the national economy, a comparison will show that the two are directly related. Patterns of the Gross-National Product and energy consumption are very similar. Therefore, a shortage of energy in any form could have a negative effect on the national econmy.

In a shortage situation, the cost of manufacturing and delivering goods and providing services would go up, driving the cost of those goods and services up as well.

As consumer costs rose, demands would go down, causing surpluses and layoffs. Unemployment would drive down the cost of labor, reducing wages and salaries. The end result would be unemployment and inflation.

Obviously, the shortage of an energy resource upon which we rely heavily would be disastrous. Oil supplies half the energy we use in the United States, making an oil shortage a prime example of such a possible crisis.

Almost fifty percent of the oil we use in the United States is imported from highly unstable areas, leaving the national vulnerable to those who sell oil and those who would sabotage shipments.

Additionally, oil reserves will last less than thirty years at our present rate of consumption. Considered together, these facts can be quite alarming.

The situation won't resolve itself - a great effort must be made by a great number of people to conserve the resources we already have. By extending the life of current energy resources, we can buy time to develop and improve ways to harness energy from less conventional resources, such as nuclear, solar, wind, biomass and geothermal energy.

For example, many problems still must be solved regarding the disposal of radioactive waste from nuclear power plants. Community and environmental safety factors are a major concern as well.

Although solar energy is a cheap and renewable energy souce, the technology and implementation is expensive and not yet perfected.

The wind, also a renewable, clean source of energy, is not reliable and technology has not been developed to make it a viable solution to our energy problems.

Technology needed, to tap into other energy sources, such as biomass (burning waste to produce methane gas), and geothermal (energy extracted from the earth's interior) has not yet been sufficiently developed.

Time is also needed to deal with problems of converting to indigenous sources of energy, such as coal. Coal is plentiful in the United States, making up 90 percent of our energy resources, but wide-spread use poses many major problems. Coal does not burn as cleanly as other fuels, so solutions to air and water pollution problems must be solved. The effects of wide-spread strip mining create a major obstacle, and transportation systems for moving the coal must be built.

Conserving energy now seems to be the best tactic in dealing with our energy situation. Developing good energy-conserving habits will affect our lifestyle much less than an energy shortage with a resulting economic crisis.

Deductability of mortgage changed by new laws

By Jeffery T. Kipi
Provost Marshal's Office

Before 1987, mortgage interest was fully deductible as an itemized deduction. Beginning in 1987, allowable deductions for mortgage interest are limited to interest on debt secured by a qualified principal or second residence.

Also, mortgage interest is generally limited to interest allocable to debt which is not in excess of the purchase price of the residence plus the cost of improvements.

Additional mortgage interest may be allowed if the loan proceeds are used for educational or medial reasons.

Interest in excess of these limits or not used for these purposes is considered to be personal interest and is therefore not fully deductible.

These changes will generally affect only taxpayers who have refinanced their mortgages, obtained a second mortgage, home equity loan or a line of credit.

A qualified principal residence is the taxpayers' main residence This can include a house, cooperative apartment, condominium, house trailer or houseboat.

A qualified second residence can include an unused residence if not rented, a residence that is used part of the year or a residence that is rented out.

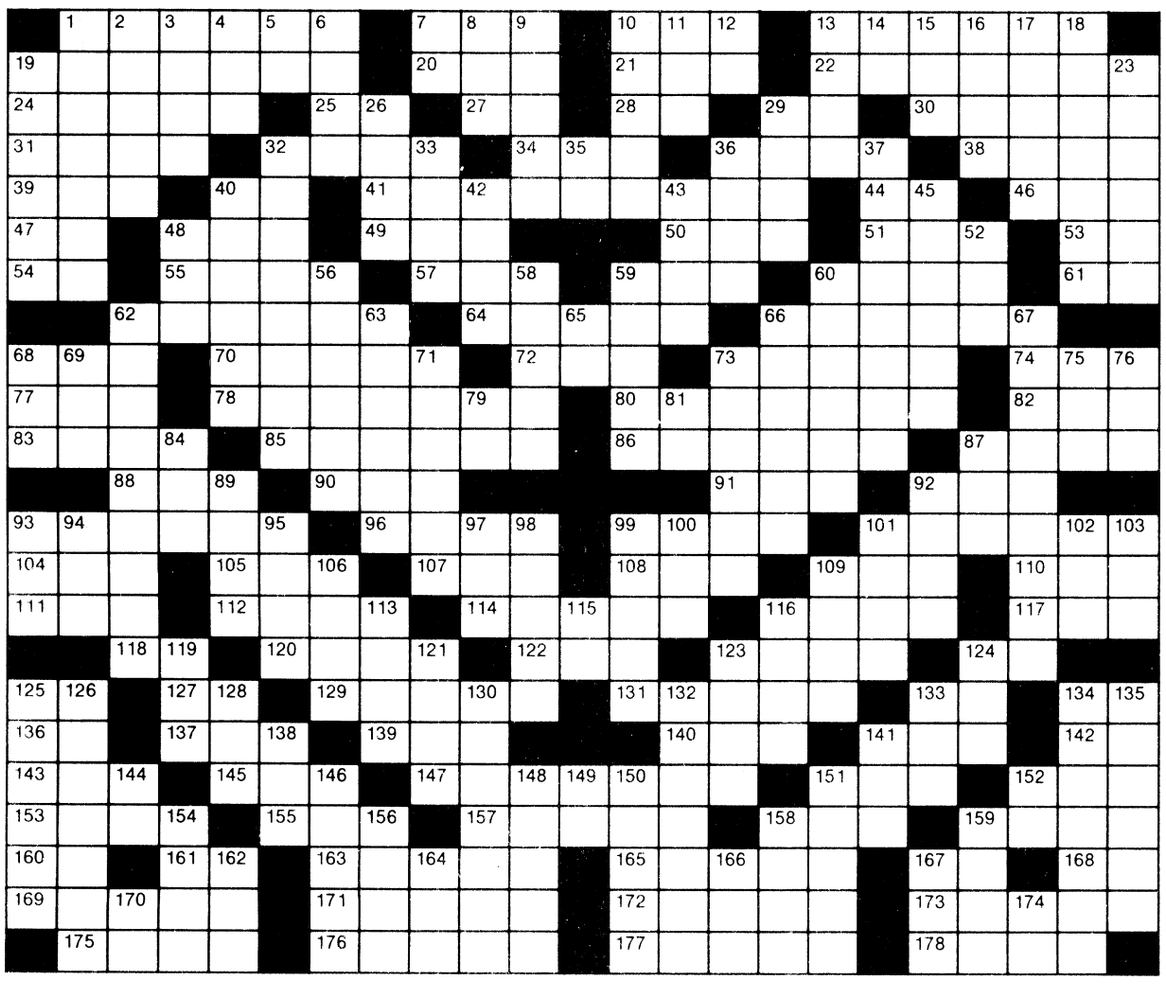
If the residence is rented out, it is subject to the use requirements relating to vacation homes (must be used for at least 14 days or 10 percent of the rental period, whichever is greater).

For mortgages secured by a residence before Aug. 17, 1986 and incurred before Aug. 17, 1986, the interest on the debt continues to be deductible to the extent that the amount of the debt is not more than the fair market value of the residence.

This rule does not apply if the amount of the debt was increased after Aug. 16, 1986.

If a second mortgage, home equity loan, line of credit or refinancing was secured after Aug. 16, 1986, or the principal amount of the debt secured by the residence prior to Aug. 17, 1986, increases, the deductibility of interest paid on such debt may be limited.

Interest incurred on all such debt secured by a principal residence or second resdence after Aug. 16, 1986 is deductible only to the extent that the total amount of debt secured by the residence is not more than:



- The cost of the residence, plus
- The cost of home improvements, plus
- The amount of debt incurred after Aug. 16, 1986, for qualified medical expenses and qualified educational expenses.

Therefore, if all mortgage and home equity loan proceeds are used for the qualified residence (or for qualified medical or educational expenses), the interest will be deductible in full.

The amount of deductible interest is also limited in that the total debt secured by the residence cannot exceed the far market value of the residence.

Maj. Gen. Kenneth C. Leuer, post commander, has established a new awards program known as the Blue Chip Award.

This award will be used to recognize those soldiers and civilians who consistently perform to the best of their abilities and who consistently work to improve those abilities.

The award consists of a blue poker chip and will entitle awardees in pay grades E-6 and below one work day off.

The following is a list of those who have received the blue chip since the last list was published.

Racer's edge is hard work

By John M. Henderson
Martin Army Community Hospital

This is the fourth in a series of articles intended to prepare the average runner to complete this year's Fifth Annual Infantry Marathon on March 5.

Everyone wants to know how to get that "Racer's Edge," that little secret that will allow them to get a leg up on the competition.

Since ancients competed for buffalo tusks, athletes have ingested, rubbed on, worn, injected, prayed to and bathed in some of the most unusual things.

For instance, in Rome the gladiators would bathe in the urine of people who ate cabbage. The urine of cabbage-eaters was thought to be medicial.

More recently, some long-distance runners have taken to chewing carnuba wax impregnated with bee pollen.

Things intended to enhance your ability to work, ie. run, are called ergogenic aides. There are many types. Natural legal substances such as bee pollen and ginsing root have been tried.

Natural illegal substances such as marijuana and peyote have been tried.

Synthetic legal substances such as caffeine and vitamin C have been tried.

Synthetic illegal substance such as anabolic steroids and amphetamines have been tried.

Boosting the body's energy stores (glycogen) by depleting and then engorging the body with complex carbohaydrates (pasta and fruits) has been tried.

Replenishing lost body salts with "balanced sports drinks" has been tried.

Hyponosis, biofeedback and even prayer to mainstream orthodox and not-so-familiar Californian dieties has been tried.

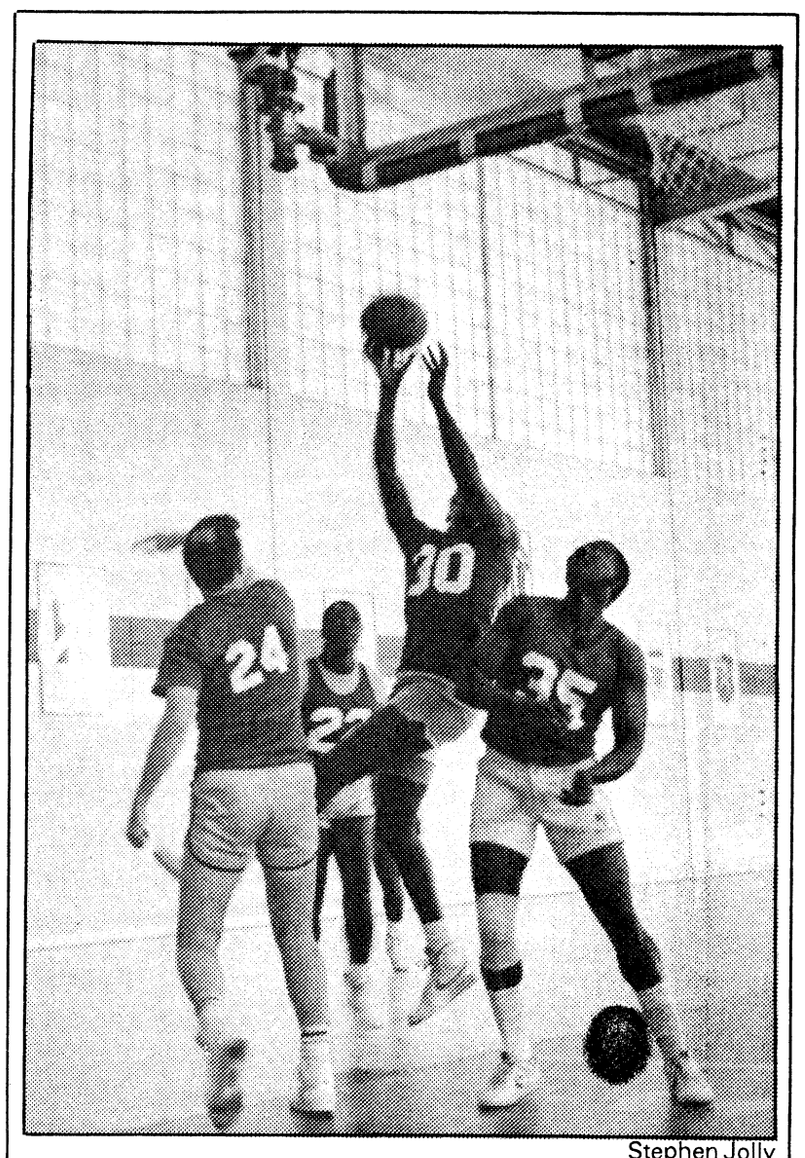
Equipment can be thought of as ergogenic too. For example, tight-weave Lycra racing togs, aluminum Taffeta windbreakers, gel-cushioned curve-lasted shoes, knee braces, mouth braces and even a Walk-man radio! All are expensive, none work.

None of the afore mentioned "aides" can replace a solid training program. Well-designed scientific studies performed by reputable folks cannot show a significant work enhancement applicable to long-distance running.

It is a fact that basic powerhouse of the body, the mitocaondria in the cell, can be "trained" to use fuels (carbohydrates, protein, fat) more efficiently. Pushing your aerobic limits further by progressively lengthening your training run will do this.

It is a fact that certain fuels "burn" better. Simple sugars, like candy, processed sugar and sugar-sweetened soft drinks, are used rapidly. The blood glucose level rises quickly and falls quickly. This fall leaves the person in worse shape than originally.

Complex carbohydrates, sugars that are strung together to make starch, are used evenly, at a more consistent pace, so there is no high nor no low, but rather fairly even blood sugar.



When we "carbo load" we are trying to ingest these complex carbohydrates and store enough musclie glycogen (sugar) for the long haul.

As you have probably guessed by now, there is no magic pill. Work and long hours of training cannot be replaced by some Madison Avenue gimmick.

Despite any short-term benefit, chemicals have long-term side effects that over balance the health ledger.

A balanced lifestyle including three square meals (with 60 percent of your calories eaten before 4 p.m.), 7-8 hours of sleep per night, stress mamagement and learning to enjoy life - those are the best ergogenic aides.

See you on the road.

Red Legs win, 44-37

By Stephen Jolly
2nd Battalion, 10th Field Artillery

It's run and gun time! The Red Legs from the 2nd Battalion, 10th Field Artillery blasted the Separate Units team, 44-37, in the 197th Infantry Brigade Officers Basketball League.

The Red Legs jumped out to an early lead and kept the fast moving pace going all the way to half-time.

The half-time score of 29-15 seemed to spell almost certain defeat for the Separate Units, but the tide changed during the second half.

Mike Norton, guard for the Separate Units, came out with a hot hand. Norton pumped in three baskets for a quick nine points, which boosted his team's spirit and their shooting from the field.

This cooled the Red Leg's, causing them to repeatedly miss shots both from the field and on the foul-line.

But the Red Legs did manage to hold on to the lead and claim another victory.

Leading the Red Legs in scoring were Mike Jones, with 14 points and Rick Turnbow, with nine points.

Leading the Separate Units in scoring were Mike Norton, Tim Brown and Edward Frimmel, each with eight points.

Sayers: Use the draft to rebuild a poor team

By Gale Sayers
NFM Editorial Service

Football fans, especially those of teams that finished out of the running this season, are looking to the future. They're asking themselves how their team can rebuild or improve before the 1988 season.

Trades, of course, are one answer. But the real key to building a team is through the annual draft of college football players.

Fan interest in the draft has grown to the point that it is now televised. Team decisions are instantly met with fan cheers or groans.

It's one day when the spotlight is on each team's organization, and recognition is given to the fundamental truth that good teams depend on more than the on-the-field coaches and players.

The president and general manager are critically important to building a solid team.

A team, for example, must know when to let a player go. This includes stars who have been in the league for years and are often very popular with the fans.

When I joined the Bears we had a lot of players from the 1963 championship team who got old overnight. I think this may have happened to the Dallas Cowboys. They have several veteran players who had off seasons in 1987.

Tony Dorsett, for example, doesn't fit into the Cowboys' plans because Herschel Walker is there and he's bigger, stronger and faster.

A year ago the Cowboys could have traded Dorsett for a top player or a high draft choice. But now he's coming off a bad season, and other teams are going to question how much he has left. Dallas probably waited a year too long. They may get little or nothing for him.

The alternative to building through the draft is the George Allen method, trading away draft choices for ten-year veterans.

To give him cedit, he got the Washington Redskins to the Super Bowl. But I don't think it is a good way to build a team. You are trading away the future. If you didnt do it in two years, you're in real trouble. The players you traded for get old and there is no way to replace them.

I think you have to do it through the draft. The Pittsburgh Steelers did it very well during the 70s, and won four Super Bowls as a result.

The Chicago Bears have done it through the 80s which is reflected by four Divisional titles and a Super Bowl victory in 1985.

It takes longer using the draft but that's the only way to build a solid team that will continue to win over a long period of time.

EDITORS NOTE: Gale Sayers is considered one of the greatest running backs of all time. The former Chicago Bear is a member of the National Football League's Hall of Fame.

150-mile bicycle tour set

American Lung Association

It's time to gear up for the Seventh Annual American Lung Association of Georgia Bike Trek for Life and Breath, May 14-16.

The three-day/two-night 150-mile bicycle tour, from Gainesville to Helen and back, is co-sponsored by the Georgia Association of Broadcasters in cooperation with the Gainesville-Hall County and Helen Area Chambers of Commerce.

The Bike Trek will demonstrate the value of healthy lungs and raise an estimated $100,000 to aid in the fight against lung disease.

This year's Bike Trek, an alpine adventure, is open to anyone 16 years of age or older in good physical condition.

Those under 16 must be accompanied by a parent or guardian.

Paritipants must supply their own gear and meet a minimum pledge goal of $250.

The Lung Association provides breakfasts and dinners while on the road, vehicles to carry gear and refreshments, mobile bike repair shops, lodging, pre-trip planning and maps, safety arrangements and sponsorship materials.

Top fund raisers will be eligible to win weekend prize packages from Marriot Suites, Embassy Suites, Compri of Atlanta, Planters Inn, Savannah; and Jekyll Island Club Resort, Jekyll Island; as well as gift certificates for bicycle equipment and accessories from Bike Nashbar.

All participants will receive an official Bike Trek T-shirt.

According to veteran Treker Chaplain Robert Reese of Fort Benning, "The Bike Trek is the kind of bicycle tour the average cyclist can complete. Participants are pampered and the trip is safe and very enjoyable. It's a great opportunity for people who enjoy bicycling to get together and have fun while supporting a worthy cause."

For more information, contact the American Lung Association of Georgia office at 2546 Wynnton Road, 323-4700.

Deadline for receipt of applications is April 15, 1988.

Post rugby team begins season

By Steve Gouthro
Fort Benning Flyers

The game of rugby began in England in the late 1860s. Since then it has been gaining world wide popularity.

Rugby has been played in the United States longer than most people realize. In fact, the U.S. won the Olympic Gold Medal in rugby in 1924, the last year rugby was played in the Olympics.

Fort Benning has been fielding a rugby team, the "Flyers" since the early 1970s. On Feb. 10, the Flyers begin their Spring season with practice each Wednesday and Thursday at 6 p.m. on Engineer Field across from Audie Murphy Gym.

Games are usually played on weekends and the Flyers field two sides, 15 players each, so everyone gets a chance to play.

The Flyers are building towards the National Military Championships in May, where they are seeking to better their 7th place finish of a year ago.

For more information on what the sport is all about or to join the team, show up at practice or call Steve Gouthro at 544-3616/3675.

Early ETS dates set

By Becky Obert
Bayonet staff writer

The Adjutant General's Office is ready to implement the early out program mandated by the Army.

According to Maj. Jim Hill, deputy AG, the early outs were ordered to meet the Congressionally mandated end strength reductions ordered for this fiscal year.

The early out program is not a new one. It allows for the discharge of some soldiers 90 days prior to their expiration term of service date.

Beginning March 1, Fort Benning will start discharging enlisted soldiers who are scheduled for release this fiscal year.

Except for soldiers who are in a few exempt categories, the early transition is mandatory.

"Exemption on the grounds of operational requirements is not authorized," Hill said. "Requests for such exemptions will not be honored."

Fort Benning's early out program is as follows:

Current ETS.....	Early Transition Date
1-31 Mar.....	1-8 Mar
1-30 Apr.....	9-16 Mar
1-31 May.....	17-26 Mar
1-30 Jun.....	27 Mar - 8 Apr
1-31 Jul.....	9-30 Apr
1 Aug-30 Sep.....	3 months prior to ETS

"Soldiers whose ETS dates fall within the fiscal year have already been identified by AG and adjustments are now being completed to allow transition under this program," Hill said.

Exempted categories are:

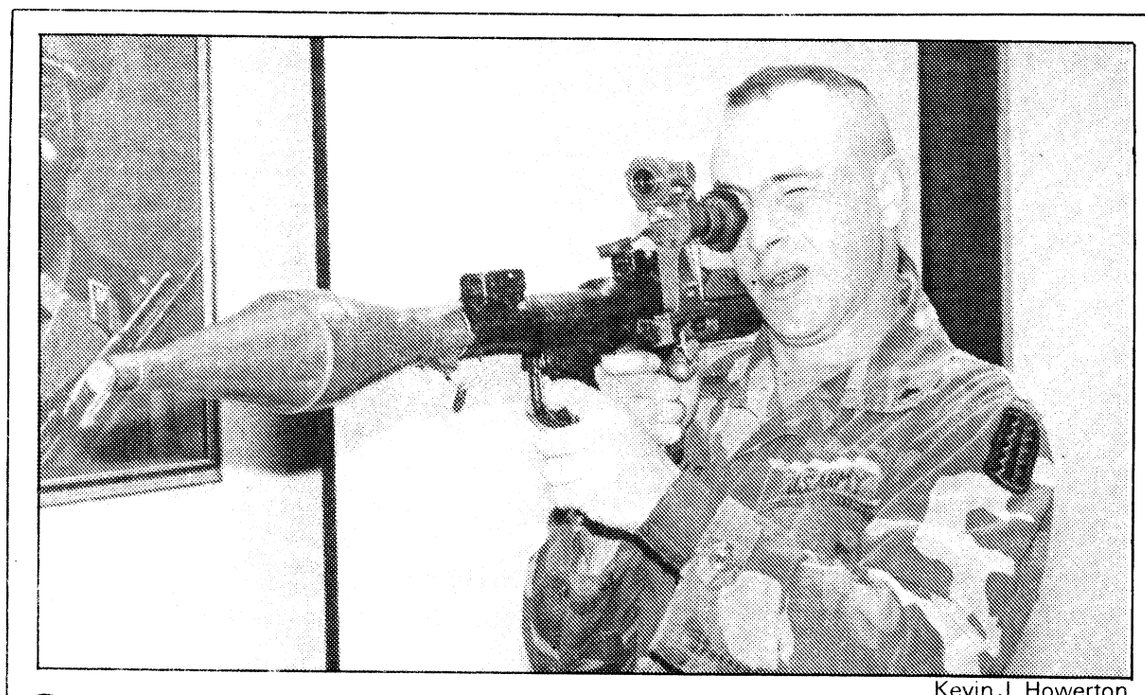
•Soldiers in MOSes (all skill levels) 05D; 05H; 05X; 93C; 93H; 93J; 95C; 97E; 98C; and 98G.

•Soldiers in the following MOSes may be granted an exemption on a case-by-case basis: 13R; 15J; 35U; 42D; 43E; 91C; 91H; 91J; 91Q; 91R; 91S; 91U; 91V; 91Y; 92B; 96B; 96H; 96R; 97G; and 98J.

•Soldiers in MOSes authorized a selective reenlistment bonus who desire to reenlist at their current ETS dates to avoid losing their SRB entitlements.

•Soldiers who are not medically cleared for separation by the early transition date. Release will not be delayed for ETS physical.



•Those for whom early transition would cause an extreme personal hardship on them or an immediate family member.

The hardship conditions must be so severe that they could not reasonably be experienced by other soldiers affected by this program.

Hill said that to request an exemption, soldiers should do so on a DA Form 4187 through their commander to the AG.

"Each request will be considered on its individual merits, he said, and exemptions can only be granted by the post commander."

SPIRIT awards presented

By Becky Obert
Bayonet staff writer

Three units won top awards in the first quarter Project SPIRIT competition Tuesday.

By changing the way units, directorates and agencies compete, Fort Benning can have more winners, and more savings, said Sara McLaney, Project SPIRIT coordinator.

"In the past, we had one big winner and a second and third place winner. But we found that many agencies were not participating in the program, because they felt they could not compete," she said.

So beginning this quarter, the program was changed so that activities compete against a group of similar size.

The post was divided into three groups for competition purposes:

•Personal and special staff include such small activities as the Chaplain's, Civilian Personnel and the Staff Judge Advocate offices.

•Directorate staff includes DPTM, DRM, DEH, DOL and other large activities.

•Commands and major units such as the 197th, 36th Engineers, 29th Infantry, compete against similar commands.

"The change was made to create greater competitiveness in the program and give more opportunities to recognize the efforts of different activities.

In the first quarter of competition under the new concept, three top winners were presented plaques by Col. James Daily, chief of staff, at an awards ceremony Tuesday.

In the command/major unit category, the 75th Ranger Regiment was honored for management initiatives that resulted in savings of $2.3 million.

The Directorate of Engineering and Housing was the winner in the directorate staff category for adopting suggestions and management initiatives equalling an annual savings of $2.1 million.

The Chaplain's Office won the personal and staff category for implementing 13 management improvements that saved $288,000 annually.

Five individual awards were also presented to employees who had contributed significantly to saving Fort Benning dollars. They were:

Vera M. Stewart, Contracting Division, Directorate of Contracting; Thomas D. Rentschler, Management Engineering Systems Branch, DEH; Capt. William L. Ingram, operations officer, DEH; Stephen Turner, Electric/Energy Management Branch, DEH; and William Bunt, Range Maintenance Division, DEH.

"The SPIRIT program got off to a good start in the first quarter," McLaney said. "Last year at this time we had $150,000 in documented savings, with only five activities participating. This quarter, we have documented a little over $19 million in savings, and 19 activities participated."

"However, Training and Doctrine Command has doubled Fort Benning's goal for the FY 88 competition," she said, "which means we need to report about $80 million to have a chance at winning the $1 million prize.

"We are doing a good job, but we need to keep the momentum up," Daily said.

More than 500 people packed the NCO Club Tuesday for the annual Fort Benning Prayer Breakfast and listened to the remarks of a former Army officer who spent more than five years as a prisoner of war.

During introductory remarks for the guest speaker, retired Col. Ben Purcell, Maj. Gen. K.C. Leuer explained the purpose of Purcell's visit. "Instead of our usual morning ritual -- physical training -- we are gathered for some PT for the soul," Leuer said.

Throughout his talk, Purcell centered on the strength of a soldier's soul. "It was not long after I was captured that I realized I could not make it on my own," he said, "and I reached to God for help."

"It was God in my soul and the love I knew my wife had for me that kept me strong throughout those years."

Purcell was finally released on March 28, 1973 after 1,875 days in captivity.

See Purcell's story on page A-10.

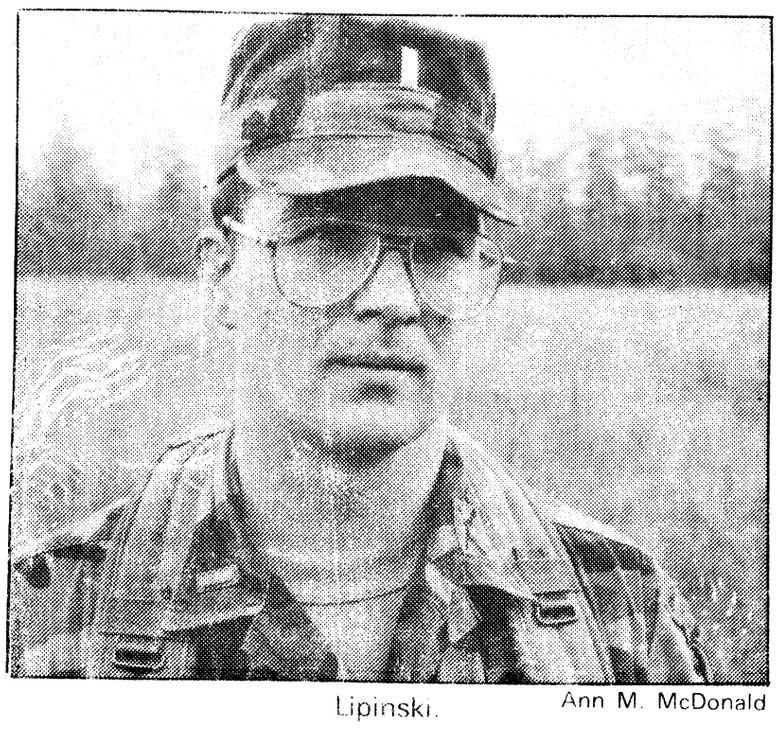
Joint assignments aren't automatic

By Becky Obert
Bayonet staff writer

You're a married enlisted soldier who just came down on orders for Korea, while your spouse is on orders for Germany.

But you are enrolled in the Married Army Couples Program. How come you haven't been given joint assignments?

According to Capt. Nancy Johnson, chief of the Enlisted Management Branch, "The heeds of the Army are the overriding factor when considering a married couple's assignment."



Couples must sign up for the program within 60 days of getting married in order to be considered for joint assignments, she said. Signing up is simple, just a matter of filling out a DA Form 4187, attaching a copy of your marriage certificate, and turning it in to the personnel administration center at the unit.

But signing up for the program does not automatically mean that a couple will be stationed together.

Lipinski named the 36th Patterson Award winner

Lipinski. Ann M. McDonald

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

A former Special Forces Medic has been named the 36th annual Robert P. Patterson Award winner, recognizing him as the most outstanding Infantry Officer Candidate School graduate from the previous year.

2nd Lt. Michael Lipinski, who graduated from OCS on April 17, 1987, is this year's recipient.

Lipinski entered the Army on June 21, 1977, with the intent of attending the Special Forces Qualification Course. He met that challenge and a whole lot more during his years before attending OCS.

You might say he's the typical success story. The 29-year-old soldier obtained the rank of Sergeant First Class and attended 17 military schools before attending OCS. Before being named the Patterson Awardee, he came out on top of his class six times.

Currently attending Pathfinder School, he is trying for number seven.

But being named honor graduate is not where his priorities lie. "I believe that if you're in the Army you should do the best you can do at whatever you're doing," he said.

Being challenged is what he likes about the Army and that's why he went to OCS. "I achieved everything that I wanted to as an NCO and felt it was time to move on."

"I feel that my time as an enlisted soldier will help me understand the positions of my soldiers and help me accomplish the mission," Lipinski said.

His next mission will be as a platoon leader with the 10th Mountain Division, Fort Drum, NY.

"I intend to the best job I can and take care of my men," Lipinski said.

As far as being selected for the Patterson Award, he feels it's a great honor and "I hope I can live up to the standards that have been set by the selectees before me."

Lipinski will be officially given his award today. Along with his award he will receive a certificate signed by the Secretary of the Army, a .45-caliber pistol, a check for $1,000 and a Follow Me Plaque.

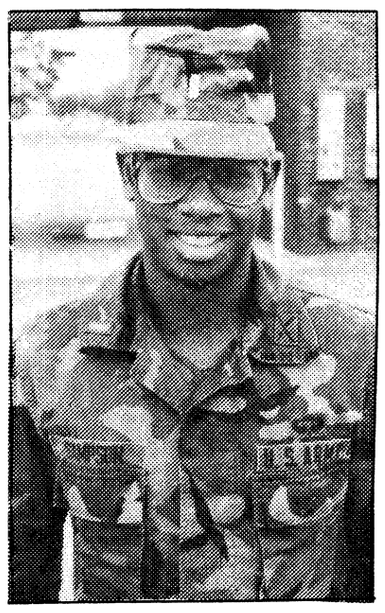
Patterson, for whom the award was named, served as a captain in the U.S. Army during World War I. During his career, he was awarded the Distinguished Service Cross, Distinguished Service Medal, Silver Star and Purple Heart.

Later, he served as Judge of the U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals and as Secretary of War in the Truman administration. Upon his death in 1952, a trust fund for the award was established with monetary contributions from personal friends.

Public is invited to Patterson ceremony

The 36th annual Robert P. Patterson Memorial Award Ceremony and the induction into the Officer Candidate School Hall of Fame will be conducted today in Marshall Auditorium, building 4, at 10:00 a.m.

The public is invited for both ceremonies.



The guest speaker for the ceremonies will be retired General Robert C. Kingston, a 1949 OCS graduate, whose last assignment, prior to his 1985 retirement, was as Commander-in-Chief, U.S. Central Command, McDill Air Force Base, Fla.

Snively knocks bunko victim

By Clyde Snively
USAIC Public Affairs Office

A while back, the Atlanta media ran a story about a lady who claimed to have lost all her faith in mankind.

Seems she fell victim to the old bunko game: "Golly, lady, look at what I found, $10,000."

Yep, the con artists wanted the lady to put up $3,000 "faith money" and if no one claimed the found money, they'd split it with her.

Naturally they split, but not with her. The next day a police detective showed up to investigate. Told her the bank was probably involved and would she mind withdrawing another $3,000 to help catch the dishonest bank employee.

Guess what. The fact she hadn't called the police never made her wonder about this detective materializing out of the clear blue sky.

She says she lost faith. I lost faith in people like her. But then I got to thinking about it and it occurred to me that people are getting ripped off all the time and guess who are favorite targets--we'uns. Soldiers. Us trusting folks in BDUs.

I'm not sure why. Is it because we have it drilled into us to trust our leaders? Or is it because, being slightly less than wealthy, we are always looking for a way to make something on nothing?

I realize everyone has to make a buck nowadays, but what ever happened to honesty?

Now, whenever someone tells me I'm going to get something for nothing, I ask what it's going to cost. What's the bottom line?

Encyclopedia salespersons are my favorite.

"Just send in this card and get a free, Atlas, Medical Book, etc."

I like free things and if all it means is saying "no" to some salesperson later, I have faith that after years of practice I can handle it. And saying "no" is what you have to do. Many times over, since these "free" prizes are always hand delivered by a persistent sales person.

Some of them can really put you through the wringer.

I like the "for you, it's free. All you need to do is sign a testimonial which we can use to sell to others," approach.

"What will it cost me?" should be your answer.

"Well, we'll want you to agree to keep the books up-to-date of course."

"How much?" you persist.

"Costs less than a pack of cigarettes a day."

"I don't smoke. How much will it cost?" you remain stubborn.

"Next to nothing. After all, don't you want your children to be able to keep up with their peers?" they answer, trying to lay a guilt trip on you, kids or no kids, married or not.

"My kids, if they learn to read, can go to the library. How much for the books?" military persistence coming through while the salesperson continues to evade.

Finally, you wear the agent down. He or she tells you--not the bottom line of course--don't be vulgar, but at least the cost of the monthly updates, which, once you're finished paying those off comes out to about twice the cost the set should normally sell for.

But for you, fellow military, a special deal.

Another scam going around involves a free camera. You may have seen the flyers stuck in your car's windshield.

The free camera advertised sounds like a high-priced outfit. The only catch is you sign up to buy their film and get your exposed film processed by them.

I've heard of debts running in the several hundred dollar category among fellow spec 4s who can ill afford it.

I've often wondered if, after you take your free camera, if you can legally be held to the contract.

Free trips are another popular gimmick. All you need to do is agree to check out some real estate. And sure, if your sales resistance is strong, you can get the freebie--if you can afford it--such as the free car. Just pay for dealer prep, delivery charges, taxes, etc.

I guess we are all out to get something for nothing. Unfortunately we're playing against a stacked deck. The guys offering us something for nothing are professionals.

And when amateurs go up against the pros, it's usually the pros who win.

Don't be taken in by clever con games

By Becky Obert
Bayonet staff writer

They say a sucker is born every minute, and if the con games that are advertised are any indication, they're right.

Consumers are constantly being inundated with mail, leaflets and telephone calls offering free gifts to allow a salesman to pitch his product.

Lots of perfectly reputable companies use this practice to bring the customers into their establishments. Once you go in, they try to sell you other merchandise and make enough money to cover the cost of the "free gift."

Freebies are fine, but you have to be able to tell a good deal from a bad one, and an honest merchant from a con artist. Sometimes it isn't easy.

Only this summer, a meat market set up business and offered extremely low prices on meats bought in bulk. Many military people were lured in, but once they left the place, they'd signed contracts to pay $8 to $9 per pound for low grade beef.

This practice is called bait and switch and it is against the law in Georgia. This particular operation eventually was exposed and its personnel forced to pack up and leave town in the middle of the night.

The newest scam involves a photo club. Leaflets are hung on peoples' doors and stuffed under windshield wipers saying, "Congratulations - you have a free gift coming."

All you have to do to claim your gift is to call a number.

But of course, it's not that simple. Once you call, you find that you much come in and listen to a sales presentation in which they try to convince you to buy their product.

Depending on the "free gift" you choose, you may end up paying anywhere from $200 to $1,000 to join their club.

"It sounds like a great deal," said Capt. Jeffery Kipi, a legal assistance officer. "You pay so much and they'll give you a free camera, free development for life, and take old pictures and make them look like new."

But it's not a good deal, because of the high "shipping and handling" charges. "They might charge you $1.50 per print for this, which means developing a roll of 12 prints would cost $18," he said.When you go in to claim your gift, their sales team goes into action and puts the pressure on you to sign a contract. It doesn't matter if you don't have the cash, they'll finance your purchase.

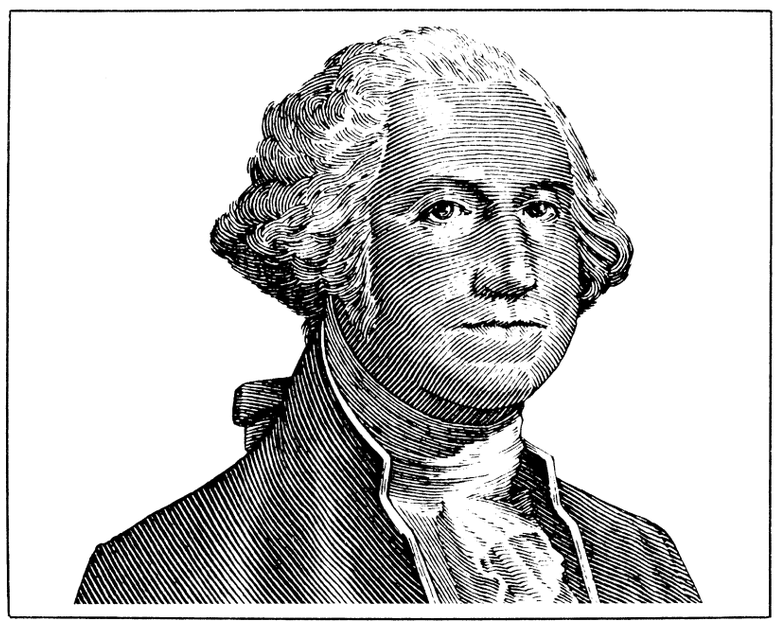
Eventually, unless you are strong willed and assertive, you give in and sign the contract, just to get out of there, planning to call them the next day and cancel it.

But here's the hitch. The contract has a clause in it which says, "I understand there's no cooling off period."

"In most cases, it's a perfectly legal, binding contract, and you won't be able to cancel it later," Kipi said.

He said that it is very important for people to read any contracts before signing them, and to bring them in to his office before they sign. "A lawyer can look at the contract and tell you if it is legally binding, and make sure you understand what you are buying," he said.

If they won't let you take the contract home with you and think about it before signing it, that's a good sign that you are about to be ripped off.



"There has to be a certain amount of responsibility on the part of the consumer," he said.

You should do some comparison shopping, and check the camera and film processing charges at other businesses, to see if you are going to be saving money by joining the photo club. Only then will you know if it is a good deal or a ripoff.

It's hard to say no to high pressure salesman, but that is what you have to be able to do. Most people can be bullied into signing the contract, rather than being rude to the salesman.

But the bottom line is that no matter how nice the salesman acts, he is trying to force you into buying something that you can't afford, don't need and don't want. And if you are the type person who has a hard time saying no, then you should not even respond to these free gift offers, because you're putting yourself at risk.

Don't let yourself be suckered in by these offers. The fact is, there's nothing free in this life.

Haddock's holiday safety message

Washington's Birthday Holiday Safety Message

On Feb. 15 Americans will celebrate the birth of this nation's first president.

The increase in traffic density and recreational activities over this 3-day holiday weekend will require the complete attention of every individual to avoid an accident.

To this end, commanders and supervisors must brief all personnel on safety prior to the holiday.

Every leader must reinforce safety by educating their personnel as to the tragic consequences of drinking and driving, speeding, and failure to use safety belts.

Also, reminders to do things the safe way during recreational activities will help bring our personnel and their families home without an accident.

An accident-free holiday weekend is possible, but can only be achieved through a concerned command effort.

Benning soldiers train with Soviet weapons

Kevin J. Howerton

Sgt. William J. Fisher leaps through the door of an MTLB Soviet vehicle, as Sgt. Herman Flemming (l) watches the squad's dismounting technique. The soldiers, from Co. D, 2nd Bn., 18th Inf., are traning with the Opposing Forces at the National Training Center at Fort Irwin, Calif.

By Kevin J. Howerton
197th Inf. Bde correspondent

Soldiers from the 197th Infantry Brigade recently deployed to the National Training Center at Fort Irwin, Calif. But they will not be training as U.S. soldiers. They will be training and fighting as Soviet soldiers.

Company D, 2nd Battalion, 18th Infantry, along with an attached platoon from Company B, are at the NTC to augment the Opposing Force. OPFOR is a special unit at Fort Irwin that is trained as a Soviet Motorized Rifle Regiment. OPFOR will be doing force-on-force training against the 1st Brigade, 1st Cavalry Division from Fort Hood, Texas.

The 197th soldiers spent the first few days at Fort Irwin working with trainers at the OPFOR Academy, learning Soviet fighting tactics. One of the most interesting tasks they learned was dismounting the MTLB, a Soviet tracked vehicle that is sometimes used as an Armored Personnel Carrier. The MTLB has been given the nick-name "Meatball" by the OPFOR soldiers.

"The meatball was cramped, dusty, and you couldn't hear a thing," said PFC Edward J. Smith, of Company D. "But it was fun."

"We're training to dismount in a Soviet manner," said Sgt. Curtis J. Edwards, from Company D's 3rd platoon. "They have only one set pattern for dismounting, but we have many. Soviets spread out in a line forward of the vehicle, with 15 meters between each individual. Team leaders are on each end of the line, so they have to run a long distance to get to their position.

"Dismounting is a lot slower with a meatball," Edwards added. "The two doors on the back are small, where the M-113 Armored Personnel Carrier has a big ramp that drops down so you can walk out."

"The track commander doesn't have a .50 cal. machine gun to help cover us," explained Sp4 Steven C. Elliott. There is a 7.62mm machine gunner, but he is only there to protect the vehicle. In a fire fight, they just put us out and take off."

"The trainer told us that the Soviet soldiers don't carry rucksacks into battle when they are on the meatball," Elliott added. "I can see why. They're expected to do a lot of running, once they're outside of the vehicle."

The soldiers also trained in Soviet mine field breeching techniques.

"The Soviets rely on more dangerous techniques," said Sgt. Robert R. Moore, of Company B. "A man throws a grappling hook on a short rope, drags the rope back to trip the mines in his path, then rushes to the point where the hook landed. Americans use safer methods such as probing and electronic mine detectors to find the mine first and then deliberately detonate it. The Soviets seem more willing to accept loses when clearning mine fields than we are."

Classes were also given in Soviet small arms and vehicles. Soldiers disassembled and reassembled the AK series of weapons and inspected a display of captured Soviet vehicles.

A combat medic from Co. B, 197th Spt. Bn., records personal data and injury information on a card that is attached to a simulated mass casualty victim.

Medics create disaster

By Sally Roberts
197th Inf Brig correspondent

Creating a disaster seems to be an odd way to accomplish training. But medics from Company B, 197th Support Battalion sometimes have to set the ball rolling in order to accomplish their medical mission in the field.

The medics recently conducted a mass casualty exercise, creating a mock disaster to test their skills in performing a field mission.

In addition to their real world mission of running daily sick call for 197th soldiers at the Brigade Clearning Station, and their medical supply mission, these medics also have an important mission in the field. They must be proficient in their mission of operating the Advanced Trauma Life Support Station and field hospital ward.

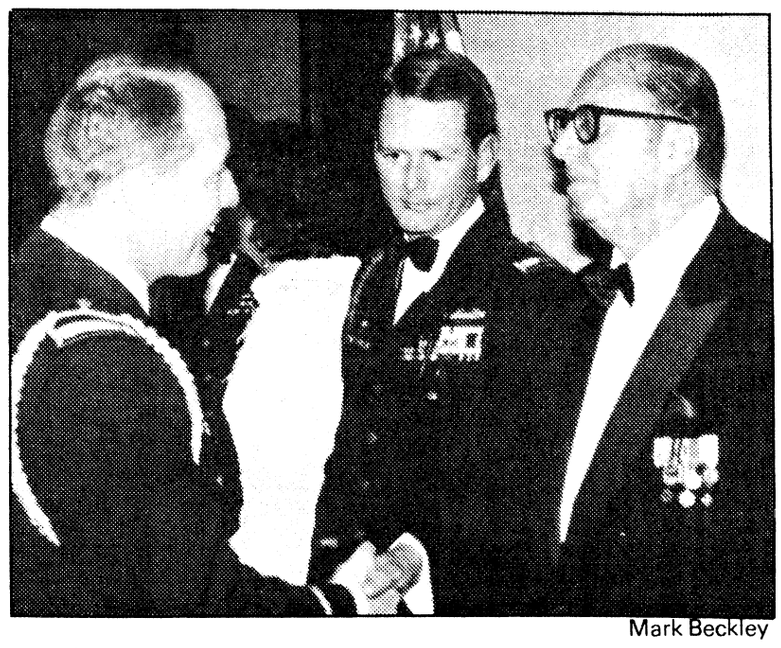
The ATLS is a field emergency room that is capable of handling most illnesses or injuries.

"We also have an 80 bed ward, where we can keep patients who will be able to return to duty within 72 hours, or who require evacuation to the rear for treatment, but are not in immediate or life threatening danger," said 1st Sgt. Michael W. Munn, Company B first sergeant.

Munn explained that the opportunity for the ward personnel to practice their nursing care was as important as the immediate treatment of the injured at the ATLS. So the mass casualty victims were held in the ward overnight as a part of the exercise.

2nd Bn, 18th Inf holds first Dining Out

By D. L. Bridges
2nd Battalion 18th Infantry

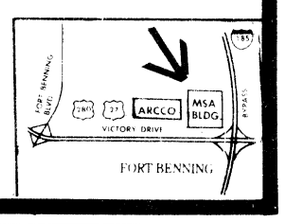


The 2nd Battalion, 18th Infantry (M), recently held a Dining Out at the Follow Me Golf Course.

The dining out was the first for the unit under the 18th Regimental colors since its redesignation from 3rd Battalion, 7th Infantry last fall.

Col. and Mrs. Harvey D. Watson, 197th Infantry Brigade commander, retired Col. and Mrs. Edward D. McGregor, the honorary colonel of the regiment, and Lt. Col. and Mrs. David W. Wilson, 2nd Battalion 18th Infantry commander, were among the nearly 100 officers and guest that attended.

McGregor, who was the keynote speaker, retired from the Nuclear Regulatory Commission in January. His immediate plans include an active commitment to the regiment's activities and an in-depth written history on the 18th Regiment.



"The Dining Out is a very important part of a unit's heritage and helps build the morale and esprit of its officer corp," said Capt. Reuben W. Maynard, the battalion adjutant. "It gives us a chance to commemorate the sacrifices of the soldiers who created the proud history we're now all a part of and that we can look forward to upholding in our careers."

Give your children the gift of good dental health

DENTAC

Children are our most precious resource, and although there are many gifts with which we cannot give — scholastic achievement, athletic ability, or musical talents — one thing we can do is start them on the path to good health.

Today, nearly 100% of all children can be cavity free for life if parents will help them with brushing and flossing from approximately 6 months to age 10.

Dental decay is a preventable disease, but parents must help their children to achieve that goal.

Most children begin life with healthy, strong teeth and they can be kept that way by instilling good dental health habits.

Take your child to the dentist for regular examinations and make certain your child's teeth are cleaned daily.

The following are some answers to questions frequently asked by parents:

●When should I begin cleaning my child's teeth?

Even before teeth begin appearing, you should start cleaning the mouth to keep food residue and bacteria from damaging newly erupting teeth.

After every feeding, wipe the baby's teeth and gums with a damp washcloth or gauze pad to remove harmful plaque.

You can sit on the sofa with the baby's head in your lap or lay the baby on the floor or changing table to make sure you can easily see into the baby's mouth.

If plaque is allowed to build on the baby's teeth, the tooth enamel could become decayed. If the decay is left untreated, the primary teeth may be prematurely lost.

Children need all 20 of their primary teeth for proper eating, speaking and appearance.

These teeth also reserve space in the jaw for the permanent teeth that later erupt. A complete set of healthy primary teeth allows proper development of a child's jaw and face.

The recommendation is that after a child brushes his or her teeth with a fluoride toothpaste, the parent should go over the teeth with dental floss and a toothbrush.

If they are completely cleaned, the parents only need to help once a day with the cleaning.

Bedtime seems to be the best time at most homes. Ask your dentist to recommend a toothbrush for your child. Generally, a brush with soft, end-rounded or polished bristles is recommended because it's less likely to injure the gums.

Children often need smaller brushes than those designed for adults.

Toothbrushes should be replaced when the bristles become bent or frayed, usually every 3 to 4 months.

Preschoolers often wear out toothbrushes because they brush imperfectly and chew on the brush.

Inspect your child's brush often, worn-out bristles do not remove plaque effectively.

Keep your child's teeth clean from the start; if you notice any signs of decay in the primary teeth, see your dentist promptly.

●My doctor told me never to put my baby to bed with a bottle. Why not?

If you put your baby to bed with a bottle, after the first baby teeth start to erupt, around age 6 months, you risk development of "nursing bottle mouth," a dental condition that destroys a child's teeth through early, serious decay.

Nursing bottle mouth occurs when a bottle containing sweetened liquid — milk, formula, fruit juice, sweetened water, or soft drinks — is given to the infant frequently, especially before the child goes to sleep.

Sugar in the liquid mixes with bacteria in the dental plaque to form acids that attack tooth enamel.

Each time your child drinks liquids containing sugar, acids attack the teeth for at least 20 minutes. When children are awake, their saliva tends to carry away the liquid. But during sleep, the saliva flow decreases and these liquids pool around the child's teeth for long periods, bathing the teeth in acid.

Don't substitute the bottle with a pacifier dipped in honey or sugar; it also can be damaging to the teeth. If your baby needs a bottle for comfort before falling asleep, fill the bottle with plain water.

●I've been seeing a lot of advertising recently for fluoride mouthrinses. What do these products do?

Recently, nonprescription fluoride mouthrinses have become available to the public.

If used as directed, and in addition to brushing and flossing, these products can effectively help prevent tooth decay. Because children younger than 6 do not have adequate control of the swallowing reflex, fluoride mouthrinses are not recommended for daily use by children younger than 6 years.

Black Military History Institute of America formed

By Rudi Williams
American Forces Information Service

A group of veterans, officers, enlisted and civilians, has decided to do something to insure proper credit is given black men and women who served in the armed forces throughout American history.

They have established the Black Military History Institute of America, Inc., a non-profit, non-partisan organization "to promote the achievements of black Americans in the military history of the United States."

They plan to build "archival facilities to collect, preserve, communicate and exhibit materials pertinent to black military history," said retired Army Col. William A. DeShields, the institute's president. "We want to provide a place for the permanent display of paintings, drawings, photographs and artifacts of blacks participating in the armed forces, including the Coast Guard. Baltimore and Annapolis, Md., and Washington, D.C., are being considered as the location for a museum."

DeShields envisions the institute as a vehicle to make the nation aware of historical wartime achievements of black men and women from the Revolutionary War through Vietnam. The institute will highlight "parts of history that have been somewhat forgotten or not emphasized anywhere else," said DeShields.

A prime objective of ths institute is "to provide different role models for our youth. Black youth of American are looking for role models other than entertainers and athletes," he added. "We want to motivate and support blacks by using military role models as a source of inspiration. We're talking about men and women, both officers and enlisted, in all branches of the services."

DeShields said the institute will not only highlight the courage and bravery blacks have shown on the battlefield, but will also focus on the jobs they do during peacetime. "Black men and women are performing successfully in such highly technical skills as flying high-tech aircraft, and operating computers and sophisticated communications equipment," he emphasized. "The military is not like it used to be; it's becoming highly selective in the people it accepts due to an emphasis on technology. We have blacks who are able to meet the education challenge and are doing the job as managers and leaders.

"Hopefully, this will set an example for our youth to aspire to greater educational excellence," he added.

DeShields said the institute's objectives are:

- To make black military-related historical information available through various media activities, lectures, forums, and exhibits — plans call for expanding into video cassettes, films and radio shows;
- To motivate and support black youths in their attainment of academic excellence by using military "role models" as a source of inspiration; and

Anyone interested in becoming a member of the Black Military History Institute of America Inc., or those who would like to donate museum items to it should write to or call:

ACS helps with relocation

By Sharon Reynolds
Bayonet staff

The Information Referral, Follow-up and Relocation Program, directed by Army Community Service, has many services available to military families including Welcome Packets and a Military Installation Resource Library.

The Welcome Center, located in building 2634, Soldiers' Plaza is where newly assigned personnel can obtain information about Fort Benning and the surrounding area, maps and information about, and referral to, agencies available to assist military personnel.

"Newly assigned soldiers are encouraged to visit the Welcome Center while they're inprocessing to pick up a map and get some valuable information about where they'll be living," said Carla Cory, ACS director.

Also available is Relocation Assistance, which includes orientation programs for new personnel, sponsorship briefings and Welcome Aboard packets.

Cory said this assistance must be requested since it isn't always a requirement. For instance, she said, if a person is returning to a station where they were stationed before, they're not going to want a Welcome Aboard packet.

Tuition assistance is not taxable

Army News Service

Is tuition assistance for soldiers taxable under the new tax law?

"No, definitely not," said Lt. Col. W.S. Key, Command Judge Advocate for the Total Army Personnel Agency in Alexandria, Va.

Congressional leaders formulating the new tax law included a new Section 134 in the Tax Code (26 USC 134) to clarify that whatever basic military benefits were exempt from taxation on Sept. 9, 1986, would continue to be exempt unless substantially modified. Tuition assistance falls under this provision.

The 1986 Tax Reform Act does have many changes, however, and will require careful reading of the instructions. Soldiers who need help should check with their unit tax officers or first sergeants for assistance.

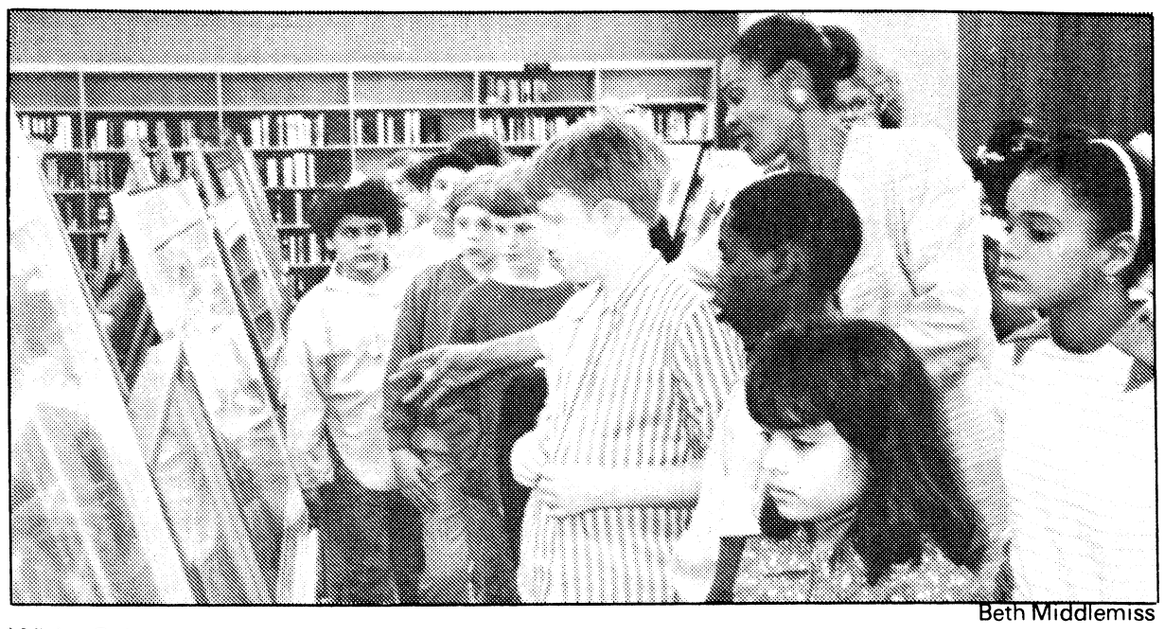
Students see art exhibit

By Beth Middlemiss
Fort Benning Schools

In celebration of Black History Month, fifth and sixth grade students from Fort Benning schools visited the Black History Art Exhibit at the Main Post Library sponsored by the Office of Equal Opportunity.

The exhibit, presented by Ms. Donna Moore, director of the Art Preservation Society of Savannah, featured works by artists with regional to international reputations.

Students were most familiar with works by Brenda Joysmith, whose paintings are a part of the Huxtable home on the Crosby Show.



Moore explained the types of art works being exhibited, as the students toured. Moore talked about the content of the art works as well as the motivations of the various artists who had created them.

Married

requirement exists for the soldier at the desired location, the request will be disapproved."

The regulation was recently updated, and it now places the responsibility of counseling married soldiers about the Married Army Couples Program on their immediate commanders. "This means that they have to explain to their soldiers how the program works, and what the program will and won't do," she said.

Many soldiers are disappointed when they are not given joint assignments, but in many instances, they had unrealistic expectations for the program, Johnson explained.

"If a couple enrolls in Germany, and the husband has already been there three years, the wife only one year, then they are not going to leave Germany together," she said.

Another thing that will affect joint assignments is if one soldier requests an MOS producing school upon reenlistment. "If a soldiers reenlists for a specific school, they are committed to fulfilling that obligation. They need to understand that if they make such a request, then the Army may not be able to assign their spouse to the same post, but they will still be required to fulfill their obligation," she said.

In cases where a couple is separated, the Army will consider assigning the other spouse to that post, if there is a legitimate need there for that soldier's MOS.

If a couple does get assigned to separate locations, there are a couple of avenues they can take to try and get a change. Stateside swaps are one avenue to rectify CONUS separations, Johnson said. Another is a permissive reassignment.

"That means you request permission to move to the other location, at no cost to the government, and the gaining location has a need for you there," Johnson said. This only applies if you have more than 12 months but less than 24 months time on station.

People also need to be aware that in the case of divorce, they need to disenroll from the program or they may continue to be assigned in the same location with a former spouse.

The bottom line is that people need to be aware of how the assignment process works, and not do anything that may lead to separate assignments.

"It behooves the married couple not to make themselves susceptible by requesting an MOS producing school, for instance," she said.

SPIRITUAL

Forgiveness is common theme during Lent, Easter

By Donald W. McSwain
The Infantry Center Chapel

Two young men became friends while attending the same university. After graduation, they went separate ways but continued to keep in touch.

One became an eminent judge; the other became a businessman and amassed a fortune.

Unfortunately, after a series of bad investments on the stock exchange, he lost everything. Then, in an effort to gain back some of his losses, he embezzled a large sum of money and was caught.

At his trial, he pleaded guilty, hoping for clemency from the court and judge.

To everyone's surprise, the trial judge happened to be the embezzler's old friend of university days. Those in the courtroom speculated as to how far the friendship would affect the judge's verdict.

The judge clearly summed up the case, making no effort to minimize the seriousness of the offense. When he pronnounced the sentence, a gasp was heard throughout the courtroom. It was the heaviest fine the law could impose.

It was obvious the buisnessman had nothing to pay the large fine with, and it appeared he would have to serve the sentence of imprisonment.

Then something happened. As the prisoner was about to be led away, the judge removed his robe, went to the prisoner's side, and placed his arm around his shoulder and said, "It's alright. I'll pay the fine for you." Then he left before the prisoner could say a word.

The human experience daily teaches us that no man can live without error. We all have weaknesses; we all make mistakes; we all stand in need of forgiveness.

Our common need of forgiveness, and our willing preparation to receive it, is a common theme throughout Lent, the annual season of preparation for Easter.

Lent begins on Ash Wednesday, Feb. 17 and begins the 40 weekdays preceding Easter Sunday on April 3. In churches across the world, as they have for over 1,000 years, many Christians will participate next week in Ash Wednesday services to begin this spiritual pilgrimage toward Easter.

During this service, each worshipper will have received a sacramental sign of ashes. This is accomplished by the minister placing his forefinger in a bowl of ashes and making the sign of the cross on the forehead of the worshipper while stating, "Turn away from sin and be faithful to the gospel."

The scriptural symbolism of the ashes is drawn from the Old Testament conjunction of ashes and dust. In Christian liturgy the use of ashes symbolizes our mortality, our need to repent, our call to forgiveness, and a sign of our commitment to prepare for Easter.

Valentine's Day for adults too

By Jo Ann Stamey
Installation Chaplain's Office

St. Valentine's Day, Feb. 14, seems to commemorate two saints. According to legend, one was a Roman priest who suffered martyrdom during the persecution by the Roman Emperor Claudius. The other was a bishop of Interamna, who was also martyred in Rome.

The day, as it is presently celebrated, seems to have no relation to these saints or to any incident in their lives. In fact, these legends may refer to one and the same person. Legend also connects it with either the pagan Roman festival of the Lupercalia, which took place in the middle of February, or with the spring season in general.

No matter how St. Valentine's Day began, it is still a special day of love. Cards are sent and special things are done for spouses, sweethearts, children and parents.

Friends somehow are forgotten -- the friend who brought over the chicken soup during an illness, the friend who was a last minute babysitter, the friend who provided the trip to the hospital when the car wouldn't start or the friend who always seems to be there when needed.

Like for children in grade school, Valentine's Day can be one of the most exciting days of the year for adults, too .

A warm and happy feeling can be sent just like the little valentines sent before: "You Make Me Happy, Valentine;" "You're The Best" or "I Love You."

It wouldn't take much to generate these feelings again. A ten-pound box of candy isn't necessary. But a phone call or a little note would send the message of love and thanks and add a special touch to a grown-up friend's day. After all, isn't that what Valentine's Day ia all about.

Former POW recounts ordeal after 20 years

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

Last Tuesday marked an anniversary of sorts for retired Col. Ben Purcell, for on this date twenty years ago one of his comrades was executed by the Viet Cong.

"It all began on February 8, 1968 when I was a passenger on a helicopter which was hit by small caliber automatic weapons south of Q'uang Tri City," Purcell recalled.

"The chopper burst into flames so the pilot had no alternative but to crash land in a nearby cemetery in the midst of the VC who shot us down." he said.

Purcell said the six Americans aboard survived the crash, however, the other passenger, PFC James George, was burned severely on his hands and face.

"We tried to evade but were taken prisoner within a few minutes." Purcell said.

"Later, PFC George asked me, 'Colonel, are you a Christian?' I said, 'Yes.' Then PFC George said, 'Let's pray.'"

Thus began Purcell's journey into a sort of hell -- A tour of duty that lasted five years.

The day after Purcell was captured is the day the VC shot George. Although Purcell never knew why, he reasons it was because the VC believed George was too weak to survive the long trek through the jungle.

"I will always remember PFC George." Purcell said. "It took that extra something that comes through faith in God that led that young PFC to question me on my faith."

Purcell talked about that young PFC in the opening of his speech at the Fort Benning Prayer Breakfast and then asked for a moment of silence to memorialize him and others like him who died in Vietnam.

After that moment of silence, he told the story of his captivity. He remarked on the struggles he went through and the problems he encountered.

After the breakfast, he gave this reporter and a member of the local media a chance to question him further about his experiences.

He said his faith in God, his wife, and the Code of Conduct helped him make it through 1,875 days of confinement.

Purcell said he considered the Code of Conduct an anchor holding him loyal to his country.

Although his faith and the code kept him loyal, the one thing that gave him peace of mind during his ordeal was the fact that he knew the Army was taking care of his family.

"I knew there was a family assistance officer available to my wife whenever she needed any kind of help financially, legally, medically or anything else," he said.

He said the last FAO who was assigned to his wife was in charge of getting her and his children up to Augusta where they met after his release.

What makes this last officer stick in his memory is the extra responsibility the officer had when he escorted his family to Augusta.

Purcell said during an interview that was conducted with his wife after the announcement of his release, she was asked what he might like to have when he arrived in the states.

"The first thing that came to her mind was a watermelon," he said. "A local watermelon producer heard this and arranged for three watermelons to be flown to my wife. This was a quite a feat considering it was March."

Two of those watermelons accompanied his wife to Augusta, via the FAO who carried them under his arms through the Atlanta Airport to Augusta.

"Because of his help, I ate watermelon the day I arrived in the U.S." Purcell said.

Purcell's message is that the Army will take care of its families while its soldiers are away at war. He said this gives a soldier great comfort knowing his family's needs are being tended to.

He spoke warmly about his wife who he believes had it harder than he did through the entire time he was held captive. "My wife was a real pillar of strength throughout the entire time," he said. "She had five children to care for and all I had to do was to get up, put on my pajamas and eat.

Purcell said that when he was released his youngest daughter did not know him for she was only 20-months old at the time of his capture.

She was 7 when she met her father again and his oldest son was attending West Point.

Purcell lost five years of his life to a prisoner of war camp but still remained loyal to his country. The love for his country is evident in that he chose to remain on active duty upon his release instead of retiring.

He plunged right back into his career. He attended the Army War College, commanded a brigade and served as a Professor of Military Science before his retirement in 1980.

Purcell's advice to up and coming leaders is "keep that sense of purpose." "You must be willing to slip out into the unknown," he said. "You have to put your whole body and mind into the Army for its not a game."

He added that you must take care of the troops and understand what their mission is and allow them to carry it out.

Since his retirement, Purcell estimates that he has given about 1,000 speeches to groups all over the country and is currently lending his assistance to an author for a book on Vietnam.

CHAMPUS rates go up

Army News Service

Soldiers will pay 30 cents a day more for inpatient care received in civilian hospitals for their family members due to a recent CHAMPUS rate change.

That means when a family member becomes a patient in a civilian hospital under CHAMPUS, he will pay $7.85 per day, or an overall total of $25, whichever is greater. This rate applies only to family members of active-component soldiers.

Soldiers who have questions regarding the rate change should contact their local health care advisor.

Captain is State Senate chaplain for a day

By Becky Obert
Bayonet staff writer

Chaplain (Capt.) Karen Diefendorf, a chaplain at The School Brigade, recently acted as the chaplain for the day at the Georgia Senate in Atlanta, Ga.

"I had to give a five-minute devotional and prayer, and was then allowed to stay and observe the session," she said.

She chose Jeremiah 12:5 as the basis of her devotional. It says, "If you have raced with men on foot and they have wearied you, how will you compete with horses?"

Modern society is used to instant solutions, she said, but the right choice for today's tough decisions may be taking the longer road.

"As legislators, they face many wearying issues that won't be resolved quickly, such as nuclear war, world hunger and poverty," she said. "I urged them not to take the quick, easy solution, but rather, to choose the tougher race with horses."

Diefendorf's life has been spent practicing what she preaches. She was ordained and endorsed by the Christian Church, a denomination that is similar to Baptists. This enabled her to enlist in the Army as a chaplain. But it was not an easy road, and it took some hard choices on her part.

As one of few women who have been ordained in her church, she faced opposition during her ordination and there are still congregations that don't believe women should be pastors.

"When I was about to be ordained and the word got out, the community rose up in protest," she said. "It was a very painful experience for me, and I dropped out of the seminary as a result."

After several years working as an associate minister at a Methodist church, she finished seminary, got married, had two children, and then decided to go forward with her dream of becoming a minister.

She said she chose the Army because the Army stresses ministry to soldiers where they are. "You go where they are, and have more contact with soldiers," she said. "I think ministry is meeting the needs of people."

Her struggles to become a minister have had their effects on her. "I seek to be discerning but not judgmental," she said. It never occurred to her to change to another denomination that accepted women as pastors, she said.

"I still believe that when God raises up someone in a place, you can't run away, that He has put you there for a purpose," she said. "We're not left on our own strength to accomplish things, and we must rely on God to help us."

Diefendorf said in her life she places God first, her marriage second, and her vocation third. She prefers the word "vocation" because in Latin it means "calling," and she said, "God has called me."

Spencer trio to attend USMA

By T. Richard Cummings
Spencer High School

The appointments are official. Three 1988 Spencer High School seniors and one 1986 Spencer High graduate have accepted appointments to the United States Military Academy at West Point.

Seniors Mary Mace, Tom York and Roy Zinser along with graduate Doug Mitchell will enter the academy with a new class of cadets on June 29.

"It'll be tough," said Mace, "but that's no reason for me not to give it my best shot. I think I'll make it."

In order to qualify, each person "must pass a very extensive and thorough physical," York siad. "Your grades throughout high school must be good, and they look highly on extracurricular achievements."

York's achievements include being on the football and golf teams. He was also an exchange student to Paraguay and he attended the Governor's Honors program for math.

Zinser is the batallion commander for the Army's Junior ROTC and has been in JROTC for four years, as well as in the Boy Scouts for seven years. He is an Eagle Scout. Presently, Zinser is a water safety instructor and teaches first aid and CPR for the Red Cross. Zinser also plays soccer and is on the swim team.

Mace was on the All Bi-City cross country team this year, and was a varsity cheerleader. "Cross country helped me to learn more about working together as a team," she said. "That's going to help at West Point." She also has received the Elk's Leadership Award.

After arriving at West Pont, each cadet will receive about $600 a month. Most will be spent on uniforms, books and other necessities during the first year.

After the first two years, each cadet has the option to continue or to transfer to a civilian college. All three seniors are looking forward to the four-year stay.

"You must be confident in yourself and your abilities and with that you can do almost anything," said Zinser.

When asked what they wanted to do after graduation and commissioning as a 2nd lieutenant, Mace responded that she wanted to enter the Medical Corps. Zinser wanted to go Infantry while York had his sights set on the Engineers.

Upon gradutation, each cadet will obligated to serve at least 5 years on active duty.

Three Arts Theatre to feature "Do Lord Remember Me" Tomorrow

Controller's Civic and Social Club, Inc.

The Three Arts Theatre will feature the Atlanta based Jomandi Productions performance of the award winning adaptation of slave narratives, "Do Lord Remember Me," Saturday at 1120 Talbotton Road, Columbus, Ga.

The performances made possible through support of the Controller's Civic and Social Club, Inc., are presented in observance of Black History month.

Jomandi Productions is one of Georgia's premiere theatre organizations. The company is in Atlanta and the oldest existing Black owned and produced professional theatre.

Performing a repetoire that includes new work, Jomandi has "classically" represented the state's artists and major arts institutions on tours in over fourteen states and in four countries abroad.

Begun in 1978, the company has won a culturally diverse audience upon its portrayal of the African-American experience.

Once christened by The Atlanta Journal-Constitution as the city's "best kept secret", the city's major journal now proclaims that Jomandi offers "some of the most exciting theatre in town."

Without exception, Jomandi now has the fastest growing audience in town--an audience that applauds theatre excellence.

The startling beauty of James DeJongh's award winning work, "Do Lord Remember Me", first produced in New York at the American Place Theatre earned it a place in Jomandi's repetoire.

The play is directed by guest director, Andrea Frye, winner of the Fred Astaire Life Achievement Award for her work in film. Ms. Frye's other credits include appearances on stage and direction for Motown productions. Under her direction, DeJongh's adaptation of slave narratives provide the back drop for a celebration of Black achievement.

In the play, six actors portray former slaves who movingly recount their remembrances of slavery, their relatives lost in the anals of history, little known facts of food, living conditions, folklore and cultural idioms.

The Atlanta Journal wrote, "Do Lord" is like sitting down with your grandparents for stories of days gone by...warm, rich with pictures remembrance paints."

An editorialist wrote, "History creates its own miracle in Do Lord"; Unquestionably, "the miracle" of "Do Lord" is its dramatization of the strength of a generation of believers in the face of seemingly unconquerable odds. "Do Lord" opens the door to a legacy that climaxed in shouts of "freedom" — a door never to closed again lest we repeat history.

For two years, Jomandi entranced audiences of every age with this "miracle" of theatre and history.

For two years, Jomandi entranced audiences of every age with this "miracle" of theatre and history. Now, Columbus can witness that miracle. If the theatre has never moved you, Jomandi will; come laugh, cry and remember.

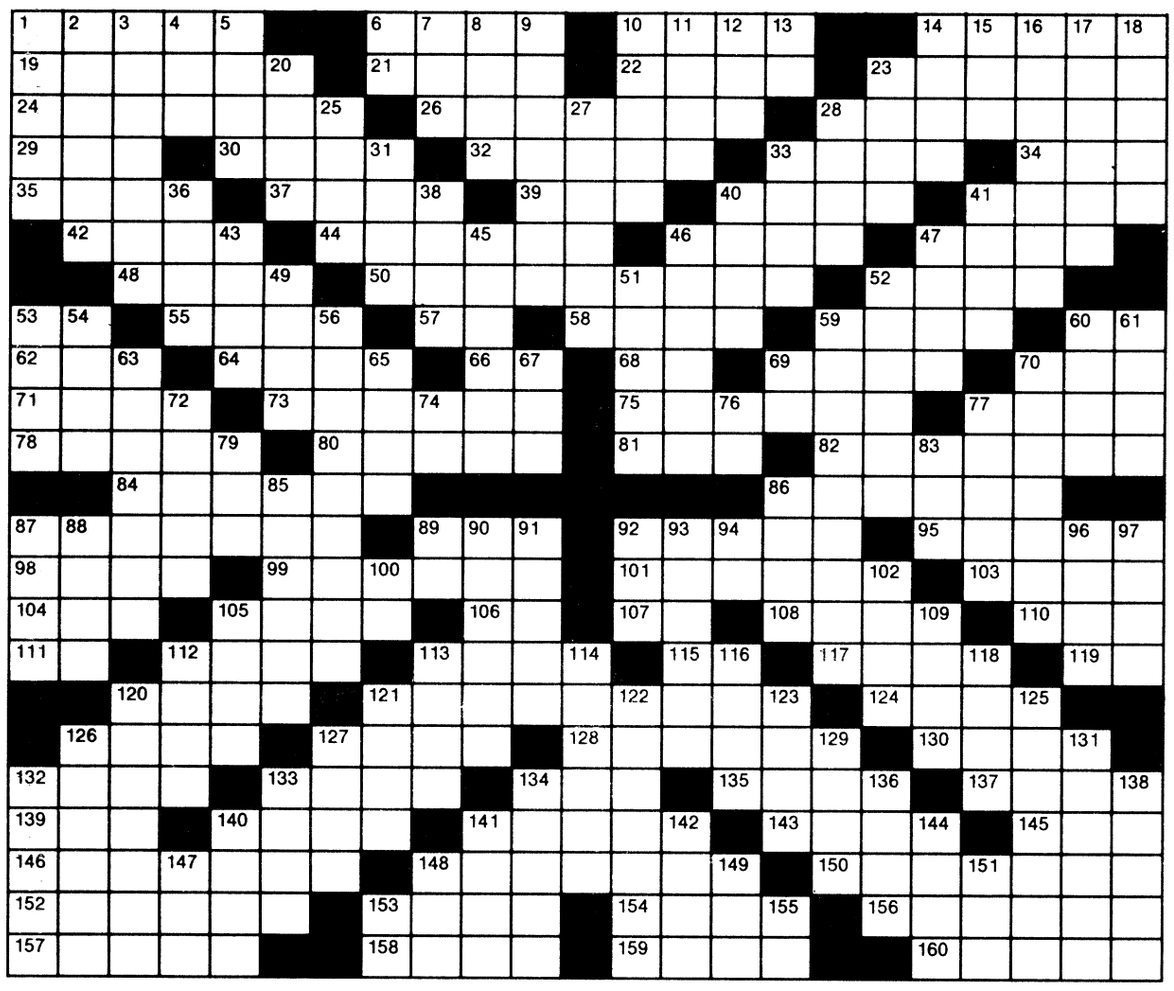
Use kitchen appliances wisely

By Becky Ray
Energy Management Branch



In most homes, the greatest waste of energy often occurs in the kitchen. Because many appliances consume large amounts of energy and are used often, substantial savings can be achieved when they are used wisely. Try the following tips to get the most out of the energy you use:

SAVE ARMY ENERGY

- When using the range, match the size of the pan to the heating element.
- Cover pans when cooking (except when frying).
- Keep burners and reflectors clean.
- Turn off electric burners a few minutes before the end of the cooking time.
- When cooking on gas burners, use a moderate setting to conserve gas.
- If possible, use the range rather than the oven.
- When using the oven, try preparing the rest of the meal there as well.
- Use small electric pans or ovens, rather than a larger appliance, whenever possible.
- Use a timer — opening the oven door repeatedly uses more energy to keep the oven at the proper temperature.
- Keep the refrigerator door closed as much as possible and make sure the gaskets seal well.
- Keep the grill at the base of the refrigerator clean.
- An overcrowded refrigerator uses more energy than one in which air circulates well.
- Defrost manual-defrost freezers regularly. Frost should not build up moe than a quarter of an inch for efficient operation.
- Don't keep the refrigerator or freezer too cold.
- Wash only full loads in the dishwasher.
- Let dishes air dry.
- Use cold water to flush the garbage disposal.

The amount of energy saved by using these tips will vary according to the types of appliances in your house. However, making a practice of using all kitchen appliances wisely will certainly take a bite out of your energy usage.

CONVICTIONS

Staff Judge Advocate's Office

Sergeant Thomas L. Blessing, assigned to HHC, 6th Ranger Training Battalion, Ranger Training Brigade, was found guilty by a general court-martial on Jan. 29 of assault with intent to commit murder, kidnapping, wrongfully soliciting another to commit a crime and false swearing.

These charges arose from an incident when Blessing expressed an intent to kill some prostitutes. After convincing another soldier to accompany him, Blessing picked up two prostitutes on Victory Drive under pretenses of going to a party. He then pulled out a .357 magnum revolver and aimed at the head of one of the prostitutes. A struggle incurred and shots were fired. No one was injured.

Colonel Gustave F. Jacob, the military judge, sentenced Sgt. Blessing to be discharged with a dishonorable discharge, to forfeit all pay and allowances, to be reduced to E-1, and to be confined for 25 years. Blessing will serve his confinement at the Disciplinary Barracks, Fort Leavenworth, Kansas.

Private E-2 William J. Tonihka, assigned to Company A, 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment, was convicted by a special court-martial of larceny and forgery in connection with the theft of a check and absence without leave.

Private Tonihka stole a personal check belonging to a friend, forged his friends name, and cashed the check at the Sand Hill PX.

Judge Gustave F. Jacob sentenced Private Tonihka to be discharged from the Army with a bad conduct discharge, to be reduced to E-1, and to be confined for three months. Private Tonihka's confinement will be served at the confinement facility at Fort Benning.

Beware of Marathon hazards

By John M. Henderson
Martin Army Community Hospital

This is the fifth in a series of articles intended to prepare the average runner to complete the Fifth Annual Infantry Marathon on March 5.

This week's topics are a little disjointed, but I think they are timely; temperature and course hazards.

The race day temperature is always the subject of debate. Review of records from the 40's to present shows that early March 88 (If it's like the rest) will be in the low 60's with 40-60 percent humidity.

To double check, I reviewed the Old Farmer's Almanac. For our area the experts predict lots of rain and cool temperatures in the first few days, followed by warmer weather, about 5 degree higher than usual, in the mid 60's.

To me,this sounds as though it could be fairly warm, as marathons go, and humid.

As in any battle, water can become a tactical weapon. You cannot let thirst guide your water intake. You must be disciplined enough to drink frequently, like every 2 miles, despite you appetite.

On a recent 10 mile training run, I lost 4 pounds of water weight even though I was keeping up with my fluid requirements.

A reasonable intake could be about 6-8 ounces of fluid every 2 miles. Very regimented, very disciplined. Remember, regardless of whether you are a fuel injected sprinter or a diesel powered plodder, we are all water cooled.

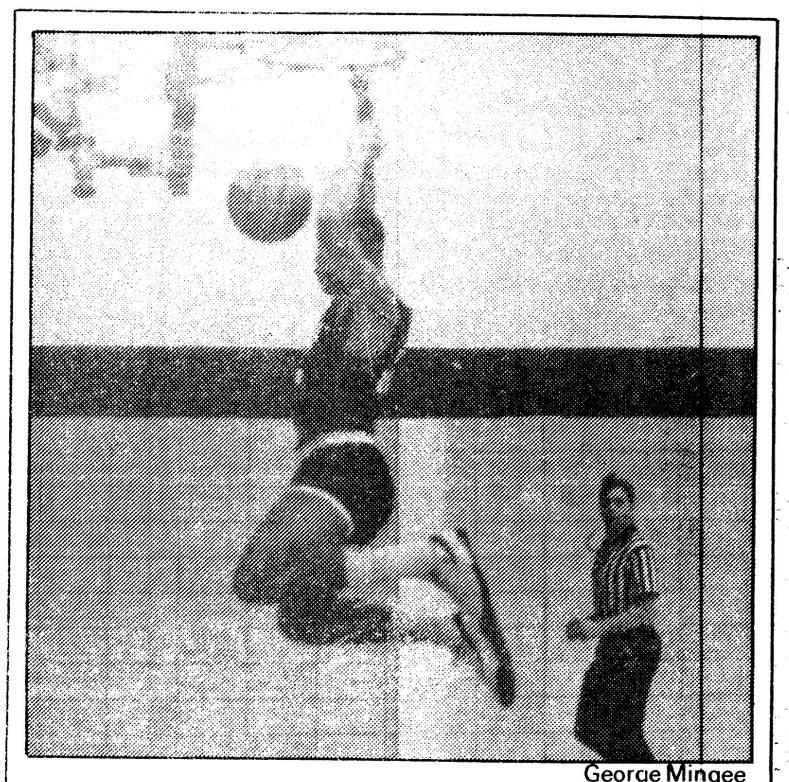
If you wait until you are thirsty, you are already way behing the "power curve."

ABOUT COURSE HAZARDS

There are no fallen logs laying across Sunshine Road, there are no Kudzu vines ready to trip you up on Jamestown Road, there are no OPFORs, live fire, or Slide for Life, but there are some real hazards.

To negotiate these,you have to keep your wits about you and, as in any long distance event, measure yourself.

•Hills: Yes, I did discuss these in an earlier article. But, let me reiterate, if you race down Sightseeing Road, you'll never be able to run up First Division Road to Dixie. This is a formidable course.



•Traffic: Although well controlled for all races on Fort Benning, traffic can still be an issue. The only level area on 8th Division Road is in the middle of the road, stay alert. The intersections of 8th and 1st Division and 1st and Dixie are very busy, even on Saturdays, stay alert.

•Shake and Bake: This is more than a recipe. The tracked vechicle traffic out along Jamestown leaves a lot of loose gravel on the road. You can bruise your planter fascia or turn an ankle.

•Inhalation: Some people have problems with asthma or "twitchy tubes" when inhaled irritants cause constriction of the airways. Our marathon course has two inhalation hazards, the lingering smell of controlled burning in the hollows along Sunshine Road and the sulfurous clouds along the firing ranges. Anyone with asthma may want to check with their doctor to get an opinion about the pre-race use of inhaled medicines.

These "hazards" are present in all races. But since this event demands a mature approach and a good measure of fortitude, I thought you'd like to be prepared.

See you on the road.

Road Warriors take win, dump the Gigolos 68-56

By George Mingee
197th Inf Pao Correspondent

RUN and GUN! The "Road Warriors" of HHC 197th Inf. Bde took on the "Gigolos" of Co. A, 2nd Bn, 10th FA and smashed their hopes for a victory by beating the Gigolos 68-56.

As the buzzer sounded and the ball was tipped, HHC Bde set the pace with their inside rebounding. This ability gave them the power to take the lead early in the first-half.

Charles Johnson, nicknamed the "Stump," was a powerfull force for the Road Warriors. His inside driving and shooting ability helped his team to a 34-26 half-time lead.

Even though Wendell Cole scored 19 points for the Gigolos, it was obvious that the team was having trouble keeping pace with the Warriors.

Even with Cole's scoring binge, the Gigolos never managed a second-half come back.

Late in the second-half Road Warrior, Kevin Arnold broke loose and flew through the air, slam-dunking the ball for a crowd pleasing two points.

The rousing support of Road Warrior fans made it clear that HHC had come to win.

When the last seconds clicked off the clock, both teams walked off the court knowing they had given their all.

The Road Warriors took the game with a final score of 68-56, boosting there overall record to 5-1 in 197th basketball play.

Dashing Hashers to meet for Hash

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

The Columbus Hash House Harriers and Harriettes will be running their 2nd Anniversary Rambo Hash on Feb. 20 and an Ollie North Hash on the 21st.

The meeting point is the Econo-Lodge on Victory Drive at 3 p.m. on the Feb. 20. The hashes will consist of two days of running, fun and frolic.

A hash run is a combination of cross-country running, hide and seek, steeple chase and sometimes an obstacle course.

There are no rules, no competition, the only stipulation is to have fun.

The run begins with everyone gathering at a start point. Two "hares" then set out to lay a trail. They mark the trail with puffs of flour. The trail may run through woods, commercial areas, housing, any area at all.

Fifteen minutes after the initial trail is set, the "hounds", which are the rest of the people, begin their chase.

For most people, that are interested in running, it sounds pretty easy but there are some catches.

If a circle with an x is found, it means the people who have laid the trail have made some false trails as well.

The only way the true trail can be found is to send people in each direction. If they come upon three lines about 200 meters up the trail it means go back for it is a false trail.

Hashers use voice signals to help in their chase of the elusive hare. If they come across the circle with the x, they holler "checking" while they search for the true trail. If they find the three lines they holler "on back." If they find the correct trail they holler "on on."

There is a halfway point where the hounds get a chance to catch there breath and then it's on to the end where people gather for refreshments and conversation.

This all sounds pretty mild but actually, it is a lot of fun.

The courses are challenging and this next hash will be especially exciting. All of the surrounding hash clubs have been invited to this "Hare" raising event.

Since this is a Rambo Hash, the mission entails you bring firearm in the form of a squirt gun.

For the two days of hashing, a $25 dollar fee is required which covers food, drink, small gifts and transportation. Everyone should meet at the Econo Lodge on Victory Drive where the transportation will be provided.

Amanda Brinke, daughter of SFC Robert and Sue Brinke, learns the fundamentals of sight alignment and trigger control under the watchful eye of national pistol champion, MSgt. Erich Buljung of USAMU.

Post Junior Air Pistol Club formed

U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit

A dozen teenagers of the newly formed Fort Benning Junior Air Pistol Club are learning the basics of marksmanship and shooting safety from members of the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit.

Members of the new shooting club began their initial season last month, and with coaching provided by the champions at USAMU, this group of teenagers hope to become as successful as the now famous Fort Benning Junior Rifle Club that was established in the early 1960s.

One of the USAMU members that gladly gives us part of his off-duty time to help coach the juniors, is Capt. John McNally, a former national champion and a bronze medalist at last year's Pan American Games.

Capt. McNally stated that, "One of the reasons for starting a club like this was to try and get more interest for this type of shooting sport, and with a lot of work on the part of the kids, we could have a future national champion or an Olympic gold medal winner from this group."

He added, "Many national and international champions began their career in this type of program such as Deena Wigger, a former local resident that holds the current junior air rifle world record and has several national titles to her credit, started out with the Fort Benning Junior Rifle Club."

When Terry Snow, age 11, was asked why she joined the club, she replied, "I thought that it would be interesting and lot of fun, I've learned that it takes a lot of concentration to do well, and my goal is to be good enough to maybe one day go to the Olympics." Terry is the daughter of MSgt. Billy and Dorothy Snow of Fort Benning.

All firing is done indoors at 10 meters (or 33 feet) using match grade air pistols that propels a .177 caliber lead pellet by compressed air.

The 10-meter air pistol event will be part of this year's Olympic Games in Korea for both men and women, and there are also air pistol events for juniors in World Shooting Championships.

"Air pistol competition has been popular in Europe for many years and is beginning to attract a lot of attention in our country as well," explained Mr. Ronnie Boles, the training coach of the U.S. Army International Pistol Team.

Mr. Boles added, "competitive shooting is interesting to a lot of individuals, because unlike many other sporting activities, physical strength is not that much of a factor in shooting and boys and girls can compete on an equal basis."

The junior club memeber ship is open to all youths from 10-18 years of age, with an annual membership fee of $25 that covers the cost of pellets and targets.

The club meets twice each week on Monday and Thursday from 6-8 p.m., with classes and instruction planned throughout most of the year.

For more information about the Fort Benning Junior Air Pistol Club, interested juniors and parents should contact Capt. John McNally or Mr. Ronnie Boles at 545-1027/7022 or 689-3371.

200 workers face loss of jobs due to budget cuts

USAIC Public Affairs Office

About 200 civilian workers may face a reduction in force in the near future as two separate issues impact on the civilian work force, said Lt. Col. Robert E. Pilnacek, the post's public affairs officer, at a news conference Wednesday.

The Directorate of Engineering and Housing and the Directorate of Plans, Training and Mobilization, have reorganized in line with a recently completed study about internal organization, Pilnacek said.

About 50 percent of the 200 jobs may be eliminated in these two directorates. According to the public affairs officer, other management studies and the deletion of portions in the Fort Benning force structure will also require other directorates to cut civilian positions.

Other directorates affected are the Directorates of Resource Management, Logistics, Information Management, Contracting and the Infantry Training Center.

Additional cuts are not ruled out once the final fiscal year 1988 budget is received by the post, Pilnacek said.

"As of right now, Fort Benning still has not received its FY 88 budget," Pilnacek said. "Once we receive the budget from TRADOC, we will evaluate what other actions will have to be taken concerning the operation of Fort Benning."

According to Pilnacek, additional budget cuts could be as high as $11.5 million.

"When we receive the final budget," Pilnacek said, "we may have to look at cuts to military courses and training, an additional reduction in force to the civilain work force and maybe even consider furloughs for civilian employees."

Pilnacek emphasized that furloughs are not planned at this time. However, TRADOC may tell the post to consider furloughs as a means of saving money once the budget is finalized.

On Tuesday, each civilian employee received a letter from Col. James Daily, chief of staff, explaining the impact of the pending actions.

Pilnacek said this was done to provide civilian employees with as much information as possible and to keep them informed as to what officials were doing.

"As more information is received," he said, "we will get it out to the work force."

42 inducted into OCS Hall of Fame

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

Forty-two men were officially inducted into the Officer Candidate School Hall of Fame Friday during a ceremony in Marshall Auditorium, which honored the inductees and the 1988 Patterson Award Winner.

The OCS Hall of Fame, which was established on January 16, 1958, by USAIC General Order Number 5, honors graduates of the OCS program who have distinguished themselves in military or civilain pursuits.

To be eligible for the induction, the officer must have been commissioned from the OCS here or the Ground General School at Fort Riley, Kansas. They then either have to have been awarded the Medal of Honor, attained the rank of colonel while serving on active duty or in a reserve component; have been elected or appointed to an office of prominence in national or state government or have achieved national or state recognition for outstanding service to the nation.

This year's inductees are Maj. Gens. Robert L. Blevins, Roy C. Gray Jr., Henry G. Skeen, Harry W. Brooks Jr., John W. Schaeffer; retired Brig. Gen. Maxie O. Redic Jr.; Cols. William F. SPECIAL PEOPLE

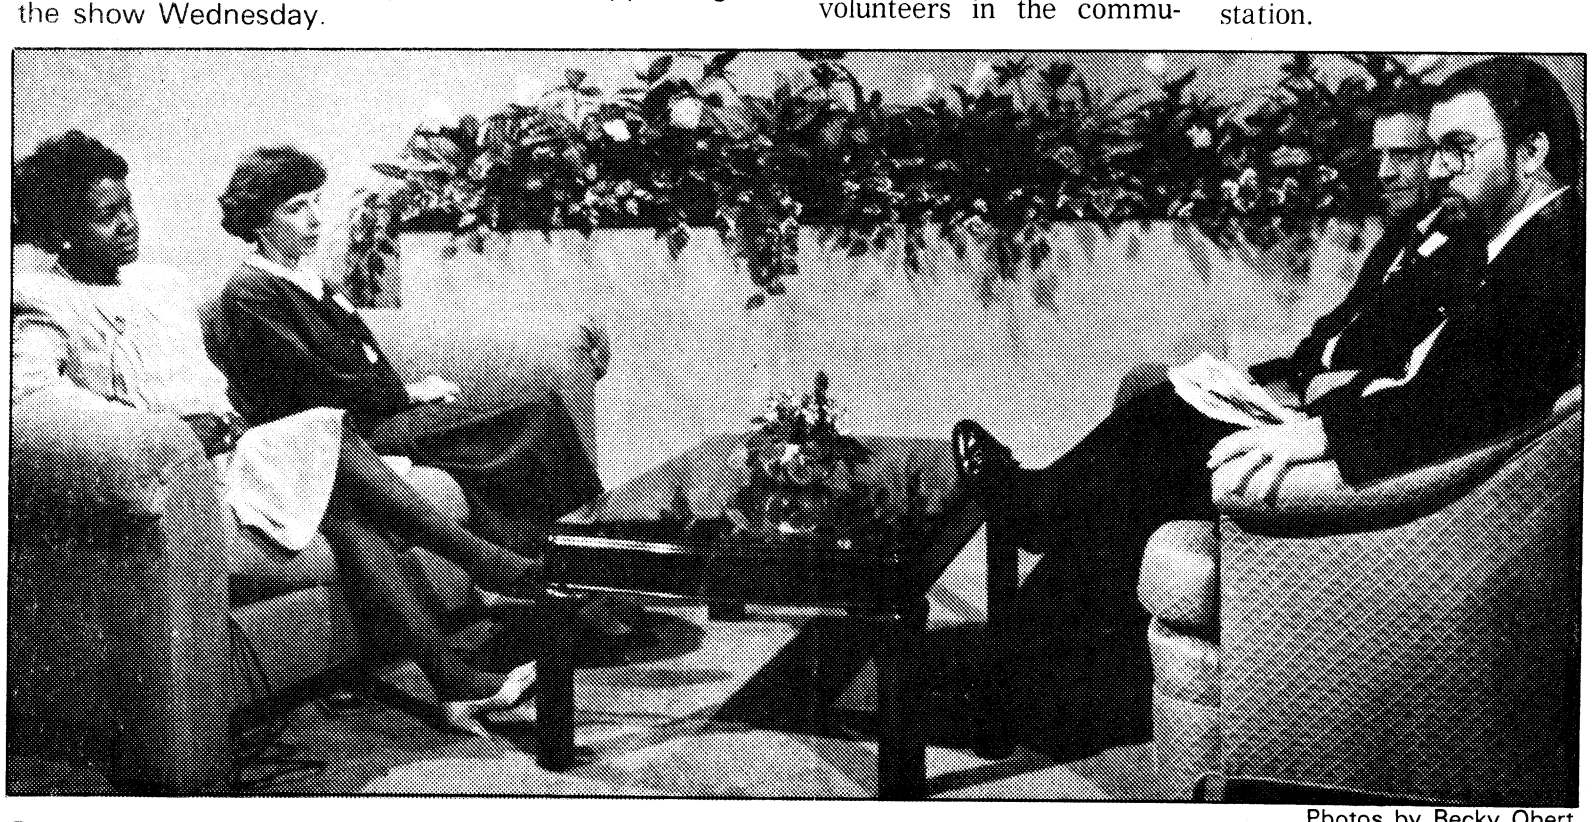
Two Fort Benning women honored for contributions

By Becky Obert
Bayonet staff writer

Two Fort Benning women were among nine persons honored as "9 Special People" at the Channel 9 television station Wednesday.

Nellie Nearen, a retail supervisor at the post exchange, was singled out for her kindness to young soldiers she meets through her work. She works in the post exchange located on the first floor of Infantry Hall.

Dorothy Bouldin, an Army wife and volunteer, was also chosen.



Frank Williams, promotions and public service director of the station, said that the "9 Special People" awards were begun in 1983 as a way to recognize volunteers in the community.

"We do it to encourage volunteerism and to recognize the people who make these valuable contributions to the community," he said.

The station received nearly 200 nomination packets this year, from which they selected this year's nine winners.

The winners represent a cross section of the community, he said, and include people who work with young people, prison inmates and one couple who aided an injured motorist.

The winners were featured on Channel 9's "Good Day" program Wednesday, and treated to a luncheon at the Goetchius House, where they were presented engraved desk clocks by the station.

Heroism doesn't pay

Soldier has to pay $44 towing fee after stopping at wreck site

By Becky Obert
Bayonet staff writer

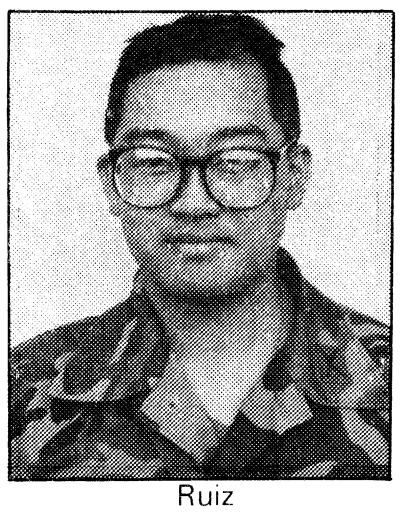
Sometimes it just doesn't pay to be a good Samaritan.

Just ask 2nd Lt. Paul Ruiz. This weekend, doing a good deed cost him $44.

Ruiz, at Benning attending the Infantry Officer Basic Course, was on his way home early Sunday morning when he passed a car accident.

A former medic, Ruiz pulled his car into the Ponderosa Motel's parking lot and ran to the accident site to offer his assistance.

When the ambulance arrived, he helped the paramedics remove the two injured men from the vehicle. One of the victims was bleeding heavily from a neck wound, and Ruiz applied pressure to try and staunch the flow of blood.



Once the two victims were loaded into the ambulance, the paramedics asked Ruiz to ride with them in the ambulance to the hospital to provide more assistance.

When the patients were delivered to the Medical Center Emergency Room, Ruiz hitched a ride back to the Ponderosa parking lot to get his car.

But the car wasn't there.

It turns out the motel had his car towed because Ruiz was not a registered guest and his car was parked in violation of its parking policy.

A motel spokeswoman who asked that she not be identified, said that they have problems with unauthorized parking, and that the manager on duty did not know where Ruiz had gone.

Ruiz

"It's standard policy with us that we have vehicles towed that do not belong to our guests," she said.

She said they did not know where the driver had gone and were unaware that he had stopped to help the victims of the accident.

By the time they did find out, the vehicle had already been towed away and it was too late for the motel to do anything about it.

Ruiz said that he explained what had happened to the wrecking company, who was not swayed by his heroic efforts. They still charged him $44 to get his car back.

Ruiz said he didn't have any hard feelings toward the motel or the wrecking company. "It was just kind of unfortunate how it worked out," he said. "I just couldn't believe it happened."

But in spite of all the trouble with his car, Ruiz said he would do it again. "The guys were in bad shape and they needed help. It was just an automatic response to try and help them," he said.

Budget restraints force cuts in tuition assistance program

Army Education Center

Tuition Assistance provided to soldiers stationed at Fort Benning and satellite areas for participation in college courses has been affected by fiscal year 1988 budget restraints. Headquarters, Training and Doctrine Command has directed that the following procedures be implemented immediately:

- TA limited to 75% of course cost for all eligible personnel.
- No TA authorized for personnel in the rank of Lt. Col. or above.
- No TA authorized for enlisted personnel or warrant officers to take graduate courses.
- No TA for courses not needed for degree completion.
- No TA for courses associated with lateral degrees already held.
- No TA for soldiers eligible for the Vietnam Era G.I. Bill.
- A TA cap is imposed at $165 per semester hour or $110 per quarter hour for graduate courses.
- A TA cap is imposed at $80 per semester hour or $53 per quarter hour for undergraduate courses.
- Due to the extent of the budget reductions, the Department of the Army has further authorized TRADOC to restrict tuition assistance to one course per quarter effective March 1.

Soldiers using tuition assistance should go to their local education center branch and talk with a counselor if there are any questions concerning the restrictions. Personnel who are close to completing degree requirements should see a counselor immediately.

Even with the imposed restrictions, the Fort Benning Army Continuing Education System will continue to offer special college programs to meet the needs of all assigned personnel.

Education center locations and telephone numbers are as follows:

Main Post Education Center (building 2602) — 545-3093

Sightseeing Road Education Center (building 2823) — 545-5338

Sand Hill Education Center (building 3006) — 544-1146

Harmony Church Education Center (building 5153) — 544-6269

Kelley Hill Education Center (building 9027) — 544-2674

If your car sticker is red or blue, it's expired

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

As of Jan. 1988, all red and blue stickers identifying the birth month on post employee's privately owned vehicles have expired.

According to Betty Jo Smith, Lead Clerk, Post Vehicle Registration, the only sticker that should be on the vehicles is green and is good until the owners' birth month in 1990.

Smith said to obtain a green sticker or if you are registering a car for the first time, one should go to the Vehicle Registration Office, which is located in building 2621, Soldiers Plaza. The office is open Monday - Friday from 8 a.m. until 5 p.m.

She added it is necessary to have current proof of insurance, vehicle registration, a valid state drivers license and a civilian or military Identification Card.

Proper accounting procedures can help 'take a bite out of crime'

By Wendell D. Choate
Provost Marshal's Office

Preventing loss/theft of government tools can be reduced or prevented through proper accounting procedures of positive security measures.

Commanders can begin today to reduce the opportunity for theft and pilferage of expendable items by taking the following action:

- Review records.
- Turn in tools which are not needed by your unit.
- Store separately tools used on a daily basis and those used only occasionally.
- Limit access to tool rooms.
- Secure tool rooms when not in use.
- Update tool locator cards daily.
- Assign responsibility of the tool room to one (1) well-qualified individual.
- Inspect work areas for tools left unsecured or unattended.

In order for the above measures to be successful, commanders and supervisors must closely monitor their methods and procedures for issuing tools, the tool charge-out system, and the tool crib record which document these functions.

Frequent inventories can be conducted and losses can be quickly identified and responsibility fixed. Adherence to existing supply and maintenance regulations should provide adequate methods of tool control. Commanders and supervisors are free to implement additional requirements as the need dictates.

Tornado drill scheduled Wednesday

Fort Benning will conduct a tornado drill Wednesday, as part of the statewide observance of Severe Weather Awareness Week. In the event of actual bad weather, the drill will be postponed until Feb. 26.

Snively not up to the 'mental challenge' of Hashing

By Clyde Snively
USAIC Public Affairs Office

There's a new fad trotting up on Fort Benning and the Chattahoochee Valley.

It's called "Hashing," and has nothing to do with cooking or smoking pot.

What it does have a lot to do with is running.

Airborne Annie, who's nothing but legs from the waist down, and who's Hashing name (they all have these cutesy names, most of which can't be repeated in a family newspaper) is Warm Buns, tried to talk me into going this past weekend.

"Army gets enough running out of me three times a week," I said. "I only run on duty time."

"But this is for fun, for partying, for beer," she said.

"The words, running and fun are diametrically opposed," I said.

"Oh come on, Clyde, give it a break. You'll love it. Two guys play rabbit, take off with some flour, mark trail and then are chased down by the pack 15 minutes later. You'll love it."

"Sounds like something I did in Boy Scouts, not interested," I persisted.

"Come on Clyde, where's your sense of adventure. You get to see lovely scenery, it's like being in a steeple chase, obstacle course and playing hide and seek all rolled into one. You hardly even realize you are running," W.B. continued with her hard sell.

"I've been in south Georgia woods," I reminded her. "You have wait-a-minute vines that'll rip your head off your shoulders if you aren't careful, rip your pants to shreds, and leave you scarred for life.

"Besides that, your $60 running shoes become caked in red clay which never comes off, the insects are vicious and the scenery consists of thick brush on hillsides interspersed with thick overgrowth in valleys.

"I got more important things to do with my weekends."

"Like what?" W.B. demanded to know.

"The Olympics?" I ventured,figuring vicarious exercise would suffice.

"Clyde, I can't believe you. A chance to breathe clean fresh air and you want to sit in a musty house watching T.V. on weekends."

"Well, actually Airborne...er, Warm Buns, it really isn't the physical challenge that turns me off," I said, trying another tack, "I don't think I could handle the mental end of it."

"Whaddaya mean?" she wanted to know.

"It's the alliteration and the imagination. I just couldn't cope."

"Such as."

"Well like you have the "Hash House" and the "Rambo Rabbit Run." I could never dream up things like "Hot harriers hit happless hound hovering on overhanging branch."

"And I'd really have trouble coming up with a nickname. You're all so colorful with names like yours, or 'Landshark,' and 'Sweet Georgia Red.' You'd probably stick me with something like, 'The Sniffler.' No thanks, I think I'll stick to a gentleman's sport, like rugby or lacrosse."

That's when I made like a hare and hurried off.

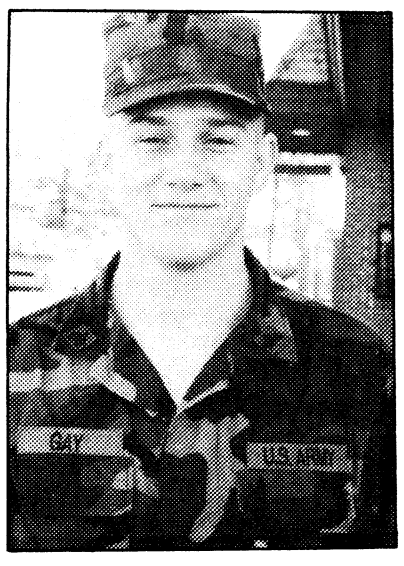
Military police need cooperation of post residents to do their jobs

By Wendell D. Choate
Provost Marshal's Office

Police work, military and civilian, is a demanding job which often requires decisions to be made quickly and with a minimum amount of information. Failing to make the decision or taking too long to execute it could result in the loss of life or property.

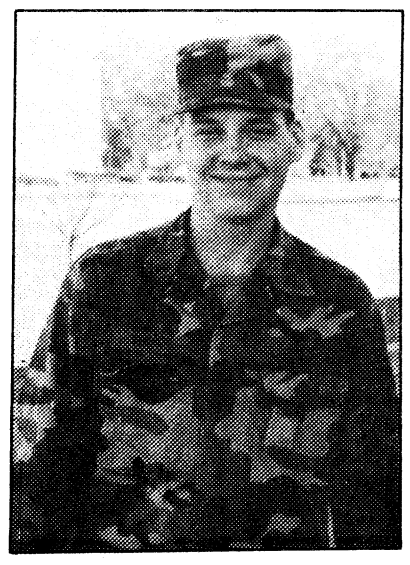
Military and civilian police must make these types of decisions daily, and there is seldom time to explain why. Patrolmen and patrolwomen are instructed to be as courteous as possible, but often people fail to understand that what they are being told is supported by reasoning and information of which they may not be aware.

During instances such as bomb threats, traffic may be directed in the opposite direction from which it normally flows to prevent anyone from possibly entering a danger area. The patrol person standing in the middle of the street is responsible to ensure not only that you safely pass through the area, but also the safety of everyone else who passes their point.



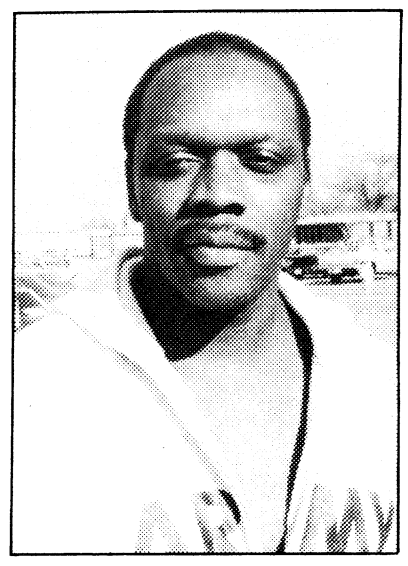
The patrol person does not have time to explain to each individual person that there is a danger ahead and that they should avoid the area. Nonetheless, people will invariably stop on the middle of the roadway and ask why they can't turn left when the military-police are directing them to turn right.

The only valid reason for attempting to pass through a roadblock is an emergency. Poor prior planning does not constitute an emergency. Other excuses include alleged flight arrangements and family problems ranging from impending divorce to sick children.

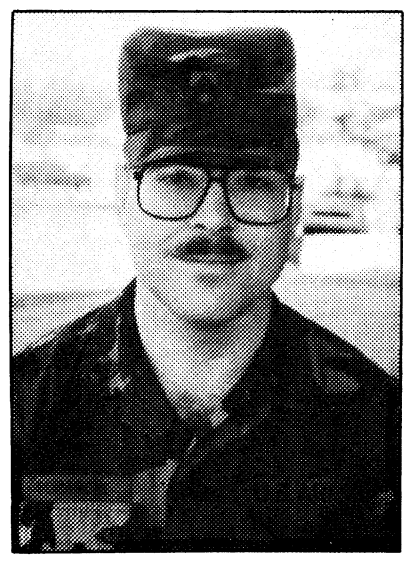


When approached by an individual with a problem, the military police will contact the MP desk to verify the validity of the situation. In the event of a true emergency, military police will ensure that appropriate assistance is rendered — often faster than the individual would have been able to react.

So if you are instructed by an MP to do something that you do not fully understand, comply with the instructions. Remember that the military police don't always have time to tell everyone why they do something: if there's something happening that requires immediate action, the decision will be made for the safety of the majority. Instructions may be directive and offered without explanation, but compliance may just save your life.



VARIOUS VOICES: What is needed to improve the post's reenlistment program?



Sgt. Adam Gay, 598th Maintenance Company, 67th Maintenance Battalion, 36th Engineer Group — "I think they should tailor it to the soldier. For instance, if a soldier wants to re-enlist for just two years and go somewhere else, let him. I think you should give incentive passes and 30 days off the duty roster. Morale is the prime factor in the whole program because there are few incentives.

SP4 David Thune, Company B, 43rd Engineer Battalion, 36th Engineer Group — "I think we need better benefits all the way around. It seems like everything has been taken from the soldiers. There are no more bonuses and everything else is being axed. I know that most of it is at the Department of Army level. I do think they could promote education, since it is needed if you're going to make the Army a career."

SSgt. Cephus McCoy, Company C, 2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment — "You have to be out there talking to the people. I think more reenlistment classes and seminars are needed to educate the people on their options. I think they should start talking to the soldiers one year out. Commanders need to get involved in the program. Another thing that should be done is to promote BSEP for soldiers who need it and give them passes for reenlisting."

SSgt. John Demarchi, 2nd MASH — "To me the big problems lie with the senior NCOs, who have fewer options. I think you should at least let them go where they want so they can be happy and be more productive for the Army. Junior enlisted soldiers have good options but they, too, are being eliminated. I think whatever can be done to make the soldier happy should be done."

SP4 Duane Gaither, Task Force Desert, The Ranger Brigade — "Start re-enlisting soldiers at an earlier point in their careers. A lot of times, commanders will wait until the last minute and by that time, if a soldier has a bad attitude, it's difficult to change his mind."

Knowledge key to avoiding injury during bad weather

Statistics show that lightning tops the list of weather that kills, injures in Georgia

Department of Energy Management

Even though tornadoes are nature's most intense and violent storms and continue to threaten lives and destroy property in our state each year, there are other severe weather events — lightning for example — which have caused more weather-related deaths among Georgians, reports Bill Windham, director of Columbus Emergency Management.

"For that reason, officials of the Georgia Emergency Management Agency and the National Weather Service have designated 'Severe Weather Awareness Week' to replace the annually observed 'Tornado Awareness Week'," Windham said.

"This new designation reflects a broad range of weather events — in addition to tornadoes — that pose a serious threat to human life and property each year," he said.

Scheduled for Feb. 22 through 26, Severe Weather Awareness Week activities in Georgia will include, with the assistance of the news media, a program to educate the public on severe weather safety rules and statistics.

In addition, GEMA and the NWS will conduct a statewide tornado drill in which state and local governments, schools, businesses and industries will participate. The program will also include testing of emergency procedures and equipment at the local and state levels.

Statistics compiled by the NWS show that lightning is the number one killer of Georgians in weather-related deaths during the past 10 years. A total of 19 deaths and 99 injuries were attributed to lightning during that period. In the last year, lightning killed four persons and injured 27 in the state.

The deadly offspring of thunderstorms, lightning occurs mostly in the summertime when high heat, humidity and temperature imbalances in the atmosphere combine.

Moreover, persons participating in outdoor recreational activities at the beginning or during a thunderstorm are at high risk to lightning strikes. Under an isolated tree, on a golf course, and in or on open water are among the most dangerous places to be during storms which produce lightning.

Flash floods are the second leading cause of weather-related deaths in Georgia. During the past 10 years, a total of 10 people have died as a result of flash floods in our state, with nine injuries reported.

Geographical areas that are most prone to flash floods in our state are the northeast Georgia mountains and the rapidly growing metropolitan area of Atlanta. There is a high concentration of citizens living in flood plain areas in Atlanta.

Even though floods or flash floods can develop at any time or any place during the year, most occur during the Spring or late Fall — times when thunderstorms are prevalent. Flash floods can develop quickly and are usually the result of a thunderstorm's heavy rains, overflowing streams and rivers, or storm surges from hurricanes.

Remember that in the event of flooding, there may be little time between detection of flood conditions and the arrival of a flash flood or flood crest. Swift action in response to floods or flash floods is essential to saving lives.

Thunderstorms and their accompanying wind speeds are the third largest cause of weathr-related deaths in Georgia over the past 10 years. Six Georgians have been killed as a result of these storms during that time and the number of injuries stands at 106 persons.

Occurring mostly during the months from June through September, thunderstorms can generate wind speeds up to 80 mph or more — the equivalent of a tornado. This is possible because of wind downdrafts which occur along the leading edge of almost all thunderstorms.

Strong, localized downdrafts are called "downbursts." This deadly weather phenomena is an intense concentraion of sinking air which fans out upon striking the earth's surface and can produce powerful "straight" winds or "windshears."

This is the force of a thunderstorm that most often kills, injures or inflicts severe damage.

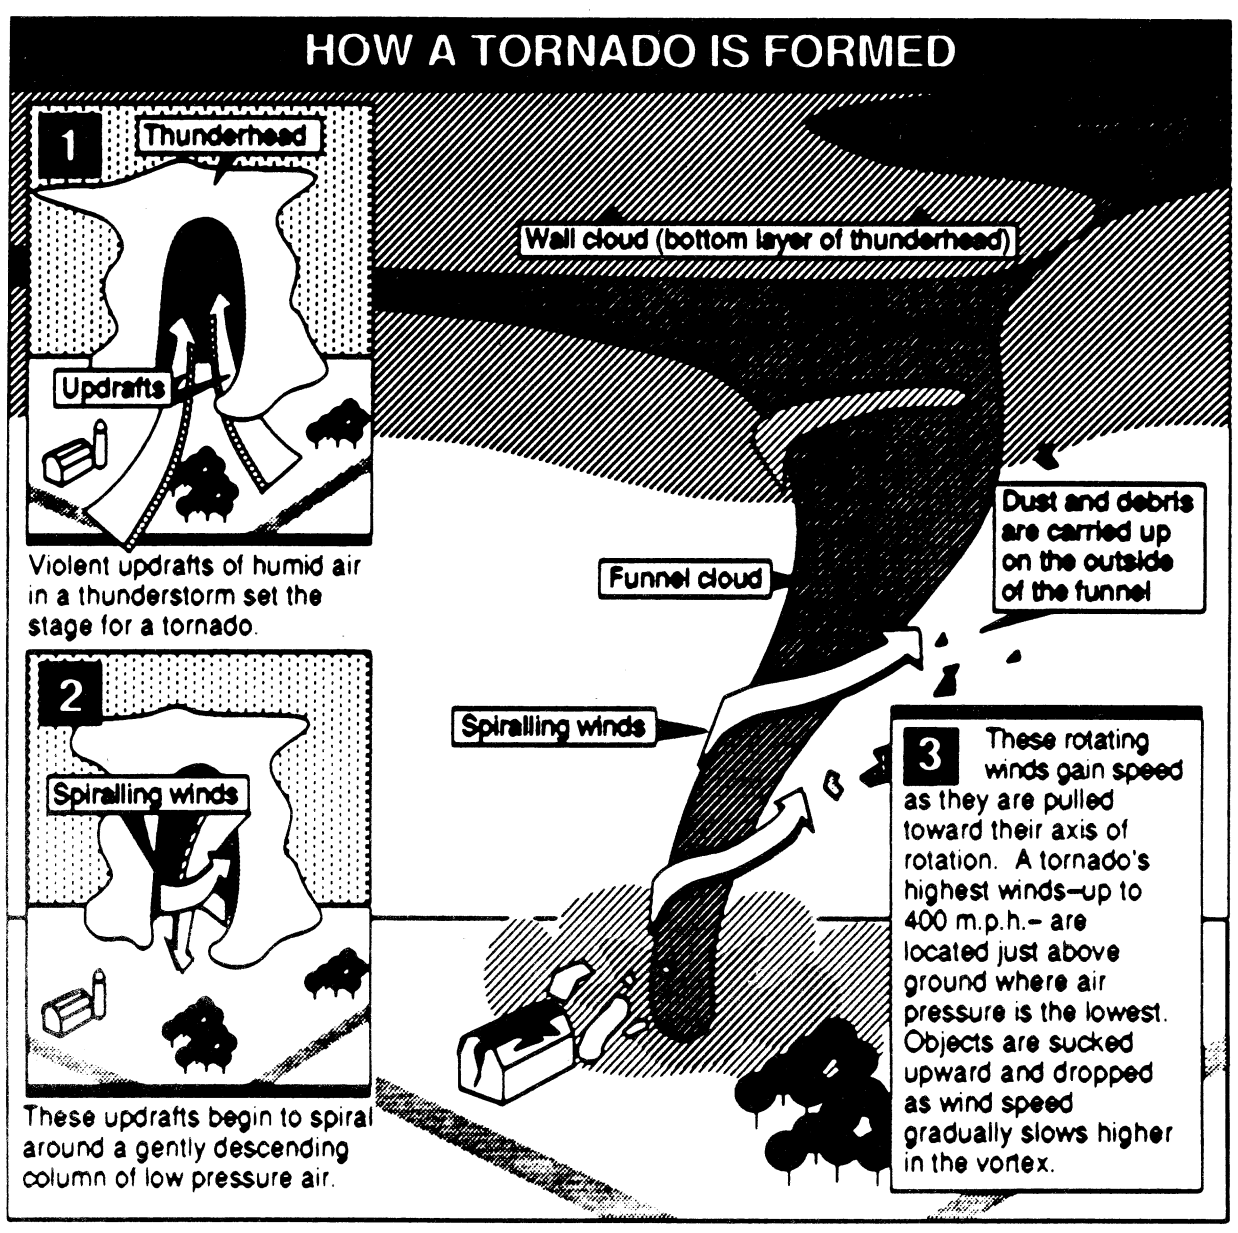
Tornadoes are nature's most violent atmospheric phenomenon

Department of Emergency Management

Even though tornadoes are nature's most violent and destructive atmospheric phenomenon, their time on earth is usually shortlived — most touch down for time periods averaging 10 minutes or less.

Destructive tornadoes produce deafening sounds like roaring jet engines or rumbling freight trains. They usually travel at speeds from 35 to 45 mph in a "pathway," averaging about nine miles long and from 10 yards to a mile wide. Even though rare, tornado "pathway speeds" of up to 70 mph have been reported.

Capable of generating rotating columns of air with wind speeds of up to 300 mph, tornadoes can topple buildings, lift and roll mobile homes and automobiles, and can hurl people, animals, trees and debris hundreds of yards through the air.



Most significant tornadoes come from the southwest and move in a northeasterly direction.

The United States has the dubious distinction of having the most severe, damaging tornadoes of any country in the world. The combination of moisture, cold air and strong winds east of the Rockies provides the perfect ingredients for tornado formatin. Georgia is included in this "tornado prone" area.

In Georgia, most tornadoes occur during the months of March, April and May. They usually occur when temperatures are at their warmest and thunderstorms are normally the most active — usually in the spring and in the late afternoon or early evening hours between 3 and 7 p.m. However, they can strike anywhere at anytime — often with little or no warning.

The deadliest tornado in Georgia's history was the Gainesville tornado of April 6, 1936. A total of 203 persons were killed and about 1,000 persons were injured.

Georgia was part of the worst tornado outbreak in U.S. history, which occurred April 3 and 4, 1974. In a single day, 10 tornadoes touched down in portions of north Georgia. The most severe damage was felt in the towns of Resaca and Ball Ground. The catastrophe injured 110, resulted in 16 fatalities and caused $15 million in property damage in Georgia.

A tornado usually appears as a funnel-shaped cloud, spins in a counter-clockwise direction, and extends towards the ground from the base of a large thundercloud. They vary in color but usually appear from gray to black and can be seen when the air column contains condensation, surface dust or debris.

Some exceptionally large tornadoes do not have the classic funnel shape. These types may appear as large, turbulent clouds or rain shafts near the ground. Occasionally, two or more tornadoes occur simultaneously, extending from the same thunderstorm.

Strong winds, heavy rain and especially hail, often precede a tornado. These are clear danger signs of impending tornado formations. Large hailstones are often found in that portion of a thunderstorm mass where strong to violent tornadoes are most likely to occur.

Through the combined action of strong rotary winds and the impact and speed of airborne debris, tornadoes quickly become a destructive and deadly force. Until recently, it was believed that the drop of atmospheric pressure associated with tornadoes caused buildings to "explode" or collapse. Most meteorologists now agree that the actual cause is the force of tornado winds pushing the windward wall of a building inward, resulting in the roof being lifted up and the remaining walls falling outward.

Flying debris is the most deadly threat of a tornado. In fact, most tornado-related deaths are caused by head injuries from windblown debris. Sticks, glass, roofing materials, lawn furnitue and other similar materials become deadly missiles when driven by a tornado's strong winds.

Demonstrating the incredible strength of a tornado's wind force, in 1931, a tornado in Minnesota carried an 88 ton railroad coach and its 117 passengers 80 feet through the air and dropped them in a ditch. In 1975, a Mississippi tornado carried a home freezer for more than a mile through the air.

Simply stated, your best protection against a tornado is to get out of its way. Of course, that is not always possible. But ample warning and time to find shelter is usually possible. There may be only seconds to act, so advanced planning is a major key to surviving a tornado.

Basic safety locations include storm cellars, shelters, basements and small rooms on the lowest levels in the center of a home or building. Always try to get under something sturdy to protect your head, face and body. Stay away from windows, doors and outside walls.

Do not try to outrun a tornado in an automobile. Seek shelter instead. More than half of the 44 deaths in the Wichita Falls, Texas, tornado of April 10, 1979, were attributed to persons trying to escape in motor vehicles.

Leave mobile homes during a tornado or tornado warning. Go to a designated shelter or a more substantial structure. If shelter is not available, lie flat in the nearest ditch, ravine or culvert with your hands shielding your head. Statistics show that many tornado deaths occur in mobile homes.

197TH INF

by George Mingee

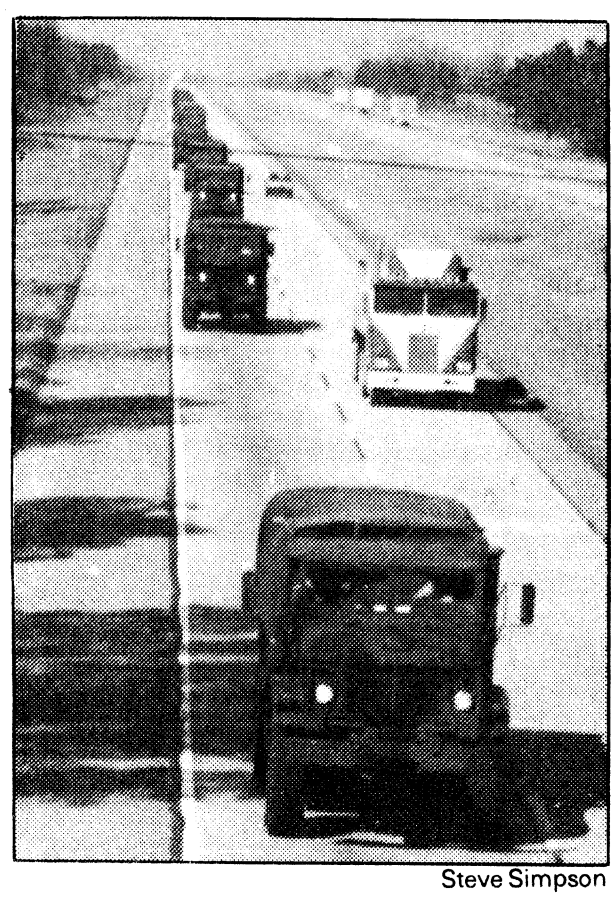
Head 'em up and move 'em out! Soldiers from Company C, 197th Support Battalion, recently embarked on a 278 mile convoy to Fort Stewart, Ga.

The convoy route led the 39 vehicles through much of rural Georgia, treating the local citizens to an unusual site of OD green 18 wheelers, five ton cargo trucks, and utility vehicles rolling through their sleepy towns. The convoy made the trip to Fort Stewart in less than nine hours.



PFC Gary Swenson, one of the "Charlie" Company 18-wheeler drivers, said, "on Fort Benning we just drive short distances, but out here you really get the feel for driving." Swenson added, "you also get two different aspects of driving: city and interstate. It's good experience for us truck drivers."

The transportation soldiers work in teams, the driver and the truck commander. The TC's job is to keep the driver alert, and is licensed to drive if the driver becomes fatigued.

According to SSgt. Robert Glance, a convoy is a readiness exercise to assure the vehicles are mission capable and can make long hauls.

1st Lt. Roderick Gray, the convoy commander said, "the convoy went well and the training the soldiers received will benefit them in future driving."

The soldiers remained at Fort Stewart overnight for maintenance and refueling, before returning to Fort Benning.

SFC Albert Wahl, the senior instructor in the Patrolling Training Area, 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, has been named the regiment's Non-Commissioned Officer of the Year.

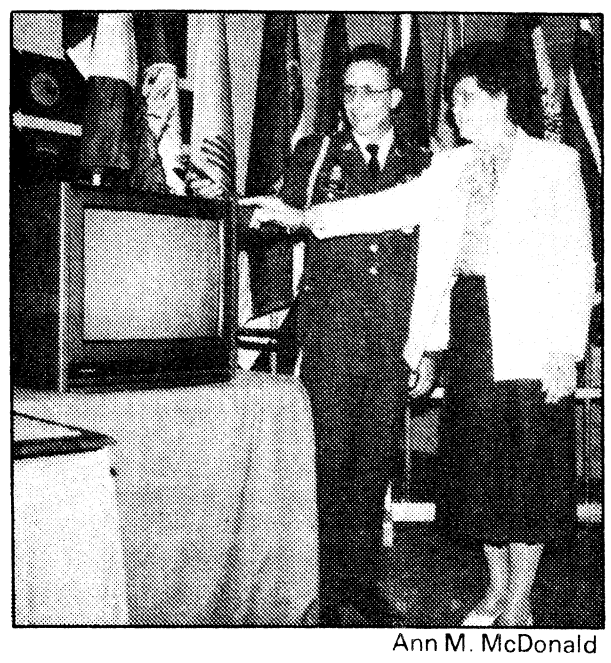
This is the first of what is to become an annual award.

Wahl was given the award at a banquet conducted for the NCO of the year. He said he was surprised when his name was announced because he didn't know beforehand. CSM Richard Pimental and his staff kept the winner's name confidential until it was officially announced at the banquet.

"The suspense almost drove me nuts," Wahl said. "The board was conducted on Jan. 21 and 22 and no one knew who the winner was until the banquet Feb. 5."

He compared the board to that of the Sergeant Morales Board that is conducted in Europe. "It was the best board I have ever competed in," he said. "We were asked questions in 23 different areas, besides being graded in drill and ceremonies, physical training and an in ranks inspection."

Wahl said he did a lot of studying for the board, which built up his confidence. "If you're prepared for the board you will be a whole lot more confident once you step into that room," he said.



Preparing for the board made him a more knowledgable NCO, he said, and helps him in his job of teaching trainees Patrolling Techniques.

He said this is the best assignment he has had since enlisting in the Army almost 15 years ago.

"I love teaching soldiers," Wahl said. He will be able to keep teaching soldiers in his next position as well. He is slated to attend drill sergeant school in October.

Along with being named NCO of the Year, Wahl was awarded an Army Commendation Medal, a statue, a color television, 3 plaques, a $75 savings bond, two free dinners and a set of dress blues.

Wahl was awarded the television from Farrar's Television and Appliance. The Farrars are corporate members of the 29th's subchapter of the Association of the Army.

MARINES

USAIC Public Affairs Office

The Marine Corps Liaison Offices' senior ranking non-commissioned officer Gunnery Sgt. Monty Sain received two awards Friday; one, from the Department of the Army and the other from the Department of the Navy.

Sain was awarded both the Army and Navy Commendation Medal for exemplary service in his position in Marine Corps Office.

Sain, who has been at Benning since January 1984 is responsible for ensuring that more than 1,800 students who are members of the Navy or the Corps are administratively taken care of while they are attending a course here at Benning.

Some of the courses that they attend are Airborne, Jumpmaster, Pathfinder and Ranger School, and the Infantry Officers Advanced Course.

He said his tour of duty here at Benning has been a learning experience. "The termonology and administrative techniques the Army uses are different from the Corps, but it is an experience that I wouldn't want to miss," he said. "Everyone here is very professional."

Policy change requires soldiers to become citizens by January 1993

Army News Service

Soldiers not citizens of the United States who plan to make the Army a career have until Jan. 1, 1993, to become U.S. citizens.

Soldiers with seven years federal service on Jan. 1, 1993, will also be required to become citizens of the United States by that date. The process can take up to one year, according to Sgt. Maj. Frank Shaffery, a recruiting policy NCO in the Army's Office of the Deputy Chief of Staff for Personnel. These soldiers should begin the citizenship process as soon as possible.

Original enlistments for all components of the Army require an eight-year military service obligation. The policy will allow completion of the MSO but no extension or reenlistment beyond the eight years unless the soldier is a citizen.

Permanent resident aliens who are considering enlisting in the Army are advised that they must become U.S. citizens upon reaching their seventh year of federal military service.

This change in policy does not apply to applicants or soldiers who are from the Republic of the Marshall Islands or the Federated States of Micronesia. These soldiers are neither U.S. citizens nor permanent residents; they have enlisted by authority or agreements between the United States and their country of citizenship under the compact of free association.

Shaffery added that soldiers needing a security clearance will find their first requirement to be U.S. citizenship. About 97 military occupational specialties require security clearances before the specialty can be awarded. Another 66 require the clearance in the senior grades.

According to Shaffery, there are about 10,000 enlisted resident alien soldiers. Officers need to be citizens in order to be commissioned in most cases, he said.

For more information, contact SSgt. Herman L. Furlow at the Staff Judge Advocate's Office at 545-3281/3282 or call the Department of Immigration and Naturalization in Atlanta at 331-5158/5159 between 7:30 and 11:30 a.m.

Budget cuts mean changes in service at Benning post offices

Fort Benning Post Office

"Although the postal service has been impacted by federal budget deficit measures, we are making every effort to limit the inconvenience to our customers. It has been necessary, however, to adjust the hours of operation at the Fort Benning Post Office," said Postmaster Elizabeth Carter.

Effective Feb. 13, retail services will not be provided on Saturdays. Access to the lobby and post office boxes will be available.

Window hours will continue to be 8:30 a.m.-5 p.m., Monday through Friday.

For information concerning purchasing stamps by mail or other services, please call 563-0100.

"The retail window adjustments are part of a nationwide effort to reduce operating costs and are necessary to comply with deficit-reduction legislation passed in December," Carter said.

Postmaster Carter says other convenient methods of purchasing stamps and products will continue to be available. Postal convenience centers, self-service mailing stations, are located at various points around the city.

The deficit-reduction law requires the postal service to cut expenditures nationally by about $1,245 billion over the next 21 months, which includes $815 million in capital expenditures and $430 million in operating expenses. Capital reductions will result in eliminating most building projects the postal service had planned for the next two years.

New NCO Evaluation Report should enhance professional development

By Becky Obert
Bayonet staff writer

Better communication and enhanced professional development should result from the new non-commissioned officer evaluation report, according to Fort Benning's senior enlisted officer for personnel actions.

"In the past there was no requirement to counsel someone unless he was a substandard soldier and you needed to counsel him," said SGM Anderson Blow. "Now, the rater has the responsiblity of sitting down and talking to a soldier before it is too late."

The new NCO ER requires raters to sit down with NCOs on a quarterly basis and tell them how their performance measures up. If a person is having problems, the counseling session gives the supervisor a chance to point these out to the person. Then when it is time for their evaluation, they'll have had a chance to improve deficient performance.

"There should be no surprises in the final ER, if the system is used properly," Blow said. "That's the benefit of the counseling checklist."

The new ER contains a section on values, competence, physical fitness and military bearing, leadership, training, and responsibility and accountability.

This gives the rater (normally the supervisor) the opportunity to go over every aspect of the soldier's job performance in advance.

If a person is overweight or frequently misses physical training, this would be pointed out during a counseling session. If a soldier frequently avoids taking responsibility or assuming the leadership role in his squad, that too would be noted on the counseling checklist.

All soldiers must be counseled within 30 days of assuming a new assignment, Blow said, and then on a quarterly basis until their actual rating is done. Ratings are normally done on a yearly basis, he said.

Another plus of the counseling checklist, Blow said, is that it provides corroborating evidence that the soldier knew of his deficiencies.

"If a soldier gets a bad rating, the rater will have the checklist on file to show that the soldier knew what the problems were, but did nothing to correct them," he said.

Blow said the checklist (DA Form 2166-7-1) and the NCO ER (DA From 2166-7) are available through normal supply channels.

"Since it is a change, people need to understand the new system to make it work," he said.

Those with questions on the new NCO ER or the counseling checklist can call the EER Section at 545-2611 or 545-2602, or drop by the section in Building 2638.

Army News Service

Recent changes in the enlisted evaluation report have brought about new responsibilities for NCOs.

Probably the biggest change to the report is the requirement for counseling. One of the indispensable skills NCOs must possess is the ability to listen effectively during counseling sessions.

Numerous surveys show soldiers work harder to state exactly what they are thinking and feeling when they are listened to carefully.

Listed below are facts that Col. Dandridge M. Malone says in his book, "Small Unit Leadership: A Common Sense Approach."

- Effective listening isn't easy. It's a skill that has to be practiced. That's why it's called "active listening."
- Listen for the literal message being sent. Ask yourself periodically as you listen, "Could I repeat what I just heard?"
- Listen also for the "total message" being sent — that is, listen for both content and emotion. Listen not only for what is being said, but how it's being said.
- Continually ask yourself as you listen, "What's the soldier really trying to tell me?"
- If a soldier is so emotional that he or she is having trouble communicating, tell the person so (for example, "Calm down soldier, you aren't making sense.")
- Listen to yourself at the same time you're listening to others. If you're getting emotional, chances are you're not hearing the other person very accurately.
- Consider the background of the person to whom you're talking. Phrases and actions can mean different things to different people.
- If you must recall some specific information you just heard later on, write it down. A leader should never be without notebook and pencil.
- Know as much as possible about the "big picture" as well as what's going on in the unit. It will help you understand what soldiers are telling you.
- The best way to get soldiers to listen is to listen to them.

REENLIST. BE ALL YOU CAN BE.

"OUR NEW ARMY HOUSING IS NICE TO COME HOME TO. IT WAS WORTH THE WAIT."

SFC Ron Rhodes and his wife Connie.

"It sure didn't take us long to get comfortable in our new house here at Fort Polk. Connie loves the size and lay-out. Ronnie-Lee loves the playground. And there's even room to store my boat.

"We love our quarters. This house has been very important for us in making a good home.

"Because we're in the Army, people may not expect us to live this well. But the Army has changed a lot in the past five years. It's a good place to live, to be.

"Connie and I feel that the Army's really come a long way in housing and, you know, in taking care of its people."

The overall quality of quarters on posts throughout the Army continues to improve. And housing starts and renovations are at an all-time high. It's all part of the Army Family Action Plan in action.

ARMY FAMILY.

Local parish hosts dinner for ministers

By Jo Ann Stamey
USAIC Chaplain's Office

On Feb. 6, Father Bruce Greening and the parish of St. Benedict the Moor hosted a dinner at the Columbus Trade Center honoring 39 black ministers of the tri-city area.

The guest of honor was Bishop Wilton Gregory, one of eleven black bishops in the Catholic Church.

The Lavoie Chapel Choir from Fort Benning was part of a mass choir from the Tri-City area to perform along with a choir from the Washington-Baltimore area.

Mayor James Jernigan of Columbus and Major Jane Gullatt of Phenix City, presented plaques to their respective clergy.

Chaplain James Bluett represented Maj. Gen. Kenneth C. Leuer, Commander, Fort Benning, in presenting plaques to five Benning Chaplains: Chaplain (Maj.(P)) David A. Hicks, Chaplain (Maj.) Robert N. White, Chaplain (Maj) John L. Krider, Chaplain (Capt.) James H. Bender, and Chaplain (Capt.) Andrew J. Bullard.

Father Greening said, "These Chaplains are not being honored becuase they are black but, for their leadership in serving the military Christian community."

St. Benedict the Moor plans to make this celebratin an annual event.

By sharing another's burdens, we 'stand on holy ground'

By Karen J. Diefendorf
TSB chaplain

A young woman, a single parent, had been working in housekeeping at a hospital. She loved her work because it provided not only the income she desperately needed but also her social life. All of her friends were employees there, too.

She had been warned that her work was not up to standard and she was very anxious. Finally her worst fear came true. She received notice that she was being released. Devastated, she was standing in the hall of the 5th floor, west wing, when a friend of mine, also a chaplain, walked by. As the young woman told of her desperation, my friend realized something, which she later shared with me. The chaplain said, "It was in hearing her story that I realized that I had been invited to stand 'on holy ground.'"

In Exodus 3:1-6, we find the biblical account of Moses' encounter with God at the burning bush. The story is amazingly simple. God gets Moses' attention with the burning bush. God invites Moses into His presence and finally, God invites Moses to be active in His redemption of Israel. But look closer. God invited Moses into His presence but also said to him, "Take off your shoes for you're standing on holy ground."

You and I are often invited to "stand on holy ground." It may be your next door neighbor who needs to talk about being lonely or hurting. Maybe you have sat with a loved one who is dying, and you have shared what it feels like to die. When we are told in scripture, "Bear one another's burdens," it is a command to go and stand on holy ground.

Sometimes, though, we forget the first part of God's direction. "Take off your shoes!" Take off or remove from your life whatever it is that causes you to tramp around in the midst of something holy without being conscious that you are a guest there.

Do you hear how that rings of a "shoes on" attitude? Surely there will be times when you and I may be more objective than those with whom we share, but we need to remember that we are invited onto their holy ground.

It may be only when we are at some "burning bush" experience in our own lives that we really learn this lesson. I do not know what God will use next to get my attention. I only know that I will need others with whom I can share. And, like you, I will most likely not want advice nor arrogance as much as I will want a traveling companion to go through it with me.

The apostle Paul understood this when he said in I Corinthians 13:1, "If I speak in the tongues of men and angels, but have not love, I am only a resounding gong, or a clanging cymbal." (NIV) To be present, to listen, and to love deeply is our calling. Then, and only then, can we put our shoes back on. And those shoes are called "the gospel of peace."

Chaplain recalls 20 years spent ministering to soldiers

By Jo Ann Stamey
USAIC Chaplain's Office

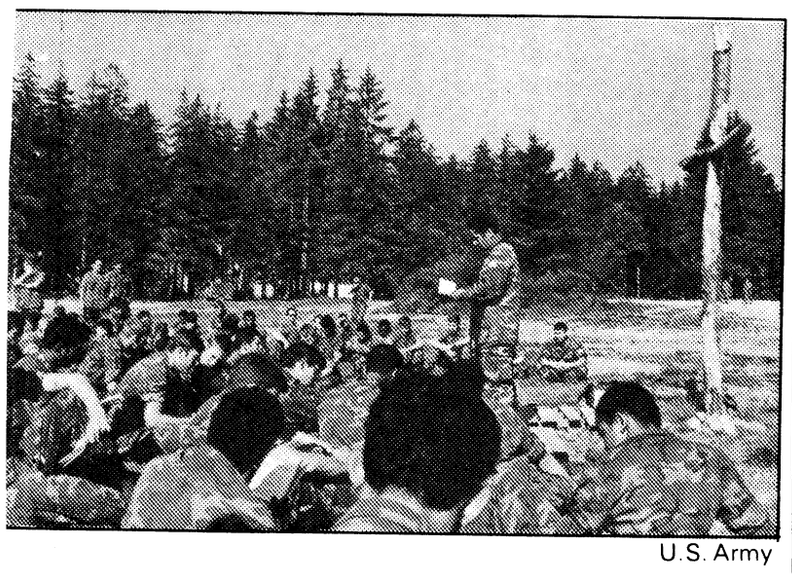
"It's great to be an American," says U.S. Army Infantry School Chaplain (Maj.) David H. Hicks. "I am proud of my heritage and consider it a privilege to serve this great nation whenever I am called."

At 17, Hicks enlisted in the Army as a private from Glen Cove, Long Island, N.Y. He came from a family of nine boys and three girls.

Hicks and his eight brothers have served in the military service — Army, Navy, and Air Force — at various times from 1939 to the present. All of the boys were influenced by their father, a veteran of World War I, who served with the first black unit to face enemy fire during the war. His father was a sergeant in the famed 369th Infantry Regiment, which fought in France, and was also a member of the National Guard unit ordered to the Champagne Front on March 10, 1918.

In 1967, after completing nine years of enlisted service, SSgt. Hicks became a Christian through the ministry of his unit chaplain.

Upon completing his enlistment, he decided to become an army chaplain. After four years of college and three years of seminary, he accomplished his goal and returned to the Army as a chaplain in August 1974.



He received his bachelor's degree from United Wesleyan College; a master of divinity from Princeton Theological Seminary; and a master of theology from the Divinity School, Duke University.

Hicks is a master parachutist, and has had such diverse assignments as 759th MP Bn., Ft. Dix, N.J.; 3rd Brigade, 3rd Armored Div., Friedberg, Germany; 509th Airborne Bn. Combat Team, Vicenza, Italy; and 1st Brigade, 83nd Airborne Div., Ft. Bragg, N.C.

In June 1985, Hicks arrived at Fort Benning and was assigned as the U.S. Army Infantry School Chaplain and a leadership and ethics instructor.

Hicks said, "The Army has been home for me over the past 30 years, with the exception of my years in preparation for the chaplaincy. In the Army I have found real purpose and meaning for my life as a result of a personal relationship with Jesus Christ."

Hicks and his wife, Janice, have three children; Pamela 15, Jeffrey 12, and Sharon 5.

Engineers' work vital to technological success

By Phillip R. Harris
DEH

National Engineers Week is always celebrated at the time of George Washington's birthday, which will be the week of Feb. 21-27 for 1988.

The first National Engineers Week was celebrated in 1951, established by the National Society of Professional Engineers. The purpose of National Engineers Week is to familiarize the public with the work of engineers and to honor outstanding members of the profession.

In 36 years of the National Society of Professional Engineers sponsorship, the presidents of the United States have sent engineers week messages of appreciation to the engineering profession in honor of over two million male and in excess of 75,000 female engineers in industry, government, construction, private practice and education.

What do weather radar, the space shuttle and an artificial kidney have in common? They are all ideas that became a reality through engineering.

Engineers are problem solvers; they use their knowledge of science and mathematics in creative ways to fulfill society's needs.

Where will we find future energy supplies? Will the country have enough water? How well will America compete in the universal technology marketplace?

Many of the problems faced by this country require engineering solutions. It is through engineering that America will progress and prosper.

Touch the thermostat and the heat goes on. Turn a knob and the television goes on. Lift the telephone receiver and you can reach almost anywhere in the world. Many of the conveniences we use everyday are the results of engineering. Many of these everyday wonders are taken for granted. We do not think about the engineering that made them possible.

Engineers have built the foundation for progress and development, thus making America the leading technological nation in the world. Engineering has solved forgotten problems, conquered new ones and defined future probem areas in industry, communications, construction, medicine, technology and higher education.

Locally, the Georgia Society of Professional Engineers (GSPE) will sponsor a math counts contest in several high schools. Mathcounts is a national program designed to raise the proficiency level of high school students in the mathematics area. This is very important in that math is essential in the engineering profession.

There will be a tour of the Techtronix-Humming Bird Plant in Eufaula, Ala., to demonstrate effective engineering concepts.

The week will end with a joint GSPE — Columbus Engineering Society banquet when the Engineer of the Year and the Joe Gamble Engineering Awards will be presented.

Pause a moment during National Engineers Week and salute our nation's engineers; they are "Turning Ideas Into Reality."

ASK THE JUDGE

By Cpt Ollie M. Mick
Staff Judge Advocate's Office

Q: My monthly payments on my credit cards have gotten completely out of control. I just can't continue paying all of them and still have enough money to live on. I received something in the mail from a company which will reduce my total monthly expenses, pay my bills and charge only a small fee. What do you suggest.

A: Many "credit help" companies exist in the Alabama and Georgia area which perform this type of service.

What the company does is to contact ech of the creditors and offers to make a new payment schedule with them.

They are often paid a smaller monthly sum over a longer period of time so that they will eventually get the full amount which they are owed.

The companies have no authority to force creditors to accept this plan, but many do so in hopes of receiving the full payment amount. The handling company will then advise you of the new amount of your monthly bills, plus their fee for services, and request that you send this total amount to them every month until all of your debts are paid.

The company then handles sending the individual payments to your creditors from the total amount.

Many people feel this is a good system because the payments are always the same and it helps them plan their budget more accurately.

Two problems have often arisen which should make you hesitate to join this company. First of all, the company handles the account "for a fee," which means that your total debt could be increased substantially depending upon what rate you are being charged. It is usually on a percentage basis so that the more you owe, the more you will end up paying for the service.

Secondly, the company retains responsibility for getting the payments to the individual creditors. Some of these companies receive your money but then "forget" to pay the creditors as agreed.

You will not know that the company has not paid your creditors until they contact you and threaten legal action because of missed payments. Thus, you may end up in worse legal and financial shape than before.

AER can help if you're short of cash

"NO PAY DUE."

Everyone in the Army fears getting a leave and earnings statement with those three words in the net pay due column. It happens, and when it does, soldiers are not left to their own devices. Army Emergency Relief, located in building 2640, Soldiers Plaza, is an Army Community Service agency that has funds available for situations such as this one. Regardless of the reason behind it, if a soldier cannot meet his expenses, AER is there to help, according to MSgt. Jerry Tillman, AER loan officer.

He said AER funds are not limited and allow for all valid emergency financial needs of Army people to be met. These funds are made available in the form of loans or grants when it is determined that repayment of a loan would put further distress on the family. Funds for AER are contributed entirely by service members for service members.

The following are types of assistance that are available:

- Non-receipt of pay and allowance, unless it is not due to punishment. Assistance is limited to basic needs until pay is received.
- Lost or stolen funds: available only for basic needs until pay is received. Assistance will not be based on the amount that was lost or stolen.
- Rent: assistance may be provided for payment of initial rent and deposit. A letter must be provided by the rental company stating the amount of the initial rent and deposit. AER will also pay rent to prevent eviction. A letter of eviction must be provided. Funds for house or trailer payments will be provided to prevent foreclosure.
- Utilities: payment of required deposits or payment of bills to prevent termination of utilities. A letter of termination must be provided.
- Food: assistance may be provided for food to prevent deprivation. Food may also be provided from the ACS Food Locker instead of giving financial assistance.
- Essential privately owned vehicle: assistance may be provided for vehicles that are essential for unit mission, commuting to and from the duty station, transportation of an ill family member, or daily needs of family members when no other transportation is available. If the POV is in the repair shop, the bill must be provided. If the POV is in a running condition, three estimates must be provided.
- Travel: assistance may be provided to meet unforeseen required travel and related maintenance expenses such as transporation, lodging or food due to emergency leave, emergency travel or convalescent leave.
- Medical expenses: in some cases assistance is available when CHAMPUS does not cover all valid expenses. Documents must be provided.
- Funeral expenses: assistance is authorized for funeral expenses incurred for family members or military members, when required to pay for funeral expenses for a parent or spouse and no insurance is available. Documentation of funeral expenses must be provided.

Tillman works closely with the commanders of soldiers who are referred to AER for financial assistance. He said, "We work with the commanders so that they know what is going on with their soldiers."

Program offers food for low-income families

Department of Family Services

The Georgia Supplemental Food Program for Women, Infants, and Children is designed to help those persons from low-income families who have health problems related to nutrition.

WIC is funded by the United States Department of Agriculture and administered by the Georgia Department of Human Resources through local county health departments.

If you are pregnant, if you have an infant under 12 months of age or children under 3, you may be eligible for WIC services. Special emphasis is being placed on pregnant women and infants due to the high infant mortality rate in Georgia.

The WIC program provides vouchers for supplemental foods such as milk, cheese, eggs, cereal, fruit juices and infant formula. These foods, when regularly combined with other nutritious foods, can help improve or prevent many health problems. In addition to the vouchers, nutritional counseling is also provided for each WIC client.

WIC is open to all eligible persons regardless of race, color, national origin, age, sex or handicap. For more information, contact your local WIC Clinic at 545-1893.

Soldiers get realistic training at Fort Irwin

By Kevin J. Howerton
197th Infantry Brigade correspondent

We had to be getting close to the enemy by now. Most of the guys were worried they would pick us up with their thermal sights.

I was worried that they would hear my shoulder blades clacking together, the result of carrying a rucksack for 15 kilometers across the high desert trail that was rough and rocky enough to kill a good horse.

The captain held up a closed fist, signaling the platoon to stop.

"How much further?" I asked the soldier in front of me.

"Two more klicks," he replied for the third time that night, but his voice lacked the authority it had earlier. Now it was more like a plea to end his misery.

Soldiers from Company D, 2nd Battalion, 18th Infantry (Mechanized) are currently training with a special U.S. Army Infantry Regiment at Fort Irwin, Calif.

The opposing force trains in Soviet tactics and provides realistic battle training to rotating Forces Command units who become known as the "Blue Force."

The battlefield is the forbidding Mojave Desert at Fort Irwin's National Training Center.

The mission of Company D's third platoon was to secure the flank of the OPFOR Regiment, preparing for a night attack on the Blue Force.

Execution of the mission was simple, walk from Furlough Ridge to the edge of John Wayne Pass, across 18 kilometers of rocky, mountainous desert terrain.

The mechanized infantrymen of Company D, operated without Armored Personnel Carriers they are accustomed to, and learned the ways of the "light fighter" the hard way.

The column of weary men continued. They turned uphill to gain higher ground. It was getting late and the dismounted troops didn't want to be on the low ground where the tanks might be maneuvering when the main force of the OPFOR Regiment attacks at 0400 hours.

The platoon stopped on a rocky spur next to John Wayne Pass.

A dark spot on the moonlit desert floor indicated an enemy vehicle about 700 meters to the front.

The decision was made to leave the rucksacks and make the final assault.

The platoon continued on, using a deep draw for concealment to get within a few hundred meters of the unsuspecting Blue Force vehicles.

"All I could see was a black spot, but there were two guys standing on top of the track and that told me it was an enemy vehicle," said Cpl. Kenyon Conley. "We sent up an illumination flare and that gave me a better shot. I fired my dragon and counted to seven. Then the yellow light started flashing on the track. The lieutenant started jumping up and down, yelling 'Yeah, you got it. You killed it'"

"My ankles were worn out from going over all the rocks, then they told us to attack," Conley added. "But it was worth it to get the kill."

The attack only lasted a few seconds, but it cost the Blue Force three Bradley Fighting Vehicles, an M577 Command Track Vehicle, and a HMMWV (High Mobility, Multipurpose Wheeled Vehicle).

"I was tired when we dropped the rucksacks," said Sgt. Curtis J. Edwards, a Dragon anti-tank gunner. "But, I knew we still had a mission to do."

"I used to be in a light Infantry unit before I came to the 197th," Edwards added. "I've walked long distances like this before. But, I've never had to walk over terrain this rough. A lot of other guys in the platoon weren't used to walking like this, but they humped it really well."

The platoon returned to the site where they grounded their gear. Their mission was over and they waited the onset of the attack by the remainder of the OPFOR Regiment.

The 2-18th Infantry soldiers are scheduled to return to Fort Benning today.

Kevin J. Howerton

Sgt. Robert P. Temallo, Co. D, 2nd Bn., 18th Inf., bears the burden of a light infantryman, while on a mission that took platoon across 18 kilometers of California's Mojave Desert.

Save energy by not overlighting

By Becky Ray
Energy Management

Small light fixtures, when considered individually, don't use a great amount of electricity when compared to other larger appliances. However, surveys show that 97 percent of all Americans overlight their homes, using about 200 kilowatt hours monthly for lighting alone.

It is possible that these wasteful habits extend to the workplace. If so, Fort Benning has an excellent opportunity to eliminate much energy waste with efficient use of interior and exterior lights.

To avoid lighting unnecessarily, consider the following tips:

- Turn off unneeded lights. Report exterior lights burning in the daytime (and unused outside lights burning at night) to the 545-SWAT energy-abuse hotline.
- Use daylight whenever possible to replace or supplement interior lighting.
- Dust bulbs frequently and keep fixtures clean — dust can absorb as much as 50 percent of generated light.
- If you have a choice, use flourescent lighting rather than incandescent bulbs. Incandescent lights can use up to five times as much wattage as fluorescent lights to generate the same light output. Fluorescent lamps also last as much as seven and a half times as long as incandescent bulbs.
- Check bulb packaging to get the most light for the wattage. Wattage indicates the amount of energy needed to light the bulb. The amount of light generated by a bulb is measured in lumens.
- "Long-life" bulbs generally use more wattage but emit less light, fewer lumens, than standard bulbs. Use "long-life" bulbs only in hard-to-reach places.
- Use task lighting. Whenever possible, use lamps on desks or work tables rather than lighting in entire room.
- Lamps located in corners reflect light from two surfaces rather than one, so they provide more useable light.
- Larger wattage bulbs are generally more efficient than several small wattage bulbs. (For example, it takes six 25 watt bulbs to generate the same amount of light as single 100 watt bulb.) When possible, use one larger wattage bulb in fixures which have two or more sockets.
- Evaluate the amount of light needed in individual areas and replace bulbs with those of less wattage when possible. Hallways, closets and entryways are examples of areas where bright lights are usually not necessary.
- Ballasts in fluorescent light fixtures consume energy even if tubes are missing. If a fixture has ballasts for four tubes but only two are needed, call the Engineer Work Order Section (545-2135) to have the extra ballasts disconnected.

The average household or office uses only a few kilowatt hours daily for lighting. While careful use would produce only modest energy savings for each single household and work area, effective use of lighting could make a large difference in total energy consumption when practiced in each of the more than 3,800 buildings (including more than 4,000 households) on Fort Benning.

498th pilot provides display

By Anthony J. Intrepido
34th Medical Battalion

It was a sort of homecoming for Capt. Efrem Hawkins, a pilot in the 498th Air Ambulance Company. Recently he was invited by his high school Alma Mater's Army Junior ROTC Program to provide a static display of the UH-60 Blackhawk helicopter.

Hawkins graduated in 1979 from Northside High School located in Atlana. His first trip back in nearly nine years resulted in a little more flight time than anticipated. The area had changed so much that it took longer than he expected to locate his old school from the air.

In the classroom he and his flight crew were greeted by the JROTC staff and nearly 100 cadets.

A film about Army aviation and a demonstration of night vision goggles highlighted the class.

The class then moved outside to the Blackhawk display. Flight medic Sgt. Christopher Carreiro gave a class on medical aspects of evacuation.

The cadets then loaded and unloaded patients, watched hoist operations and inspected the instrument panel.

Only personnel with military identification tags were allowed to go with Hawkins flying around the city.

Sgt. Maj. George Sweeny, a professor of Military Science, was one of the passengers. He remembered Hawkins' ambition to fly helicopters when he was a cadet.

"It is great satisfaction knowing you played a role in making some of your cadets' dreams come true," Sweeney said.

POV owners reminded to register vehicle

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Chattahoochee and Muscogee Counties began selling license tags and re-registering automobiles on Jan. 4. If a vehicle was already registered in one of these counties then the owner should receive the pre-printed registration form in the mail.

If the form is received in the mail then it can be mailed back, for an additional $1.00, and the registration will be mailed back to the owner.

It is strongly suggested that the mail-in procedures be used. If mail-in procedures are used ensure that the directions are followed and enclose a Soldiers' and Sailors' Civil Relief Act Affidavit.

This form can be obtained from the Legal Assistance Office and will exempt non-resident soldiers from paying the state ad valorem tax on their vehicle.

If the vehicle is in the spouse's name or if it is leased, the exemption cannot be applied.

The soldier must register in the proper county. If the soldier lives in Columbus then registration is in Muscogee County. All residents and units who live north of the Upatoi Creek are locate in Muscogee County also. This includes all units in Sand Hill and all residents of McGraw Manor, Custer Terrace, Upatoi Terrace, Battle Park and Old Officer Capehart. All other Fort Benning residents and units are located in Chattahoochee County.

To register the vehicle the soldier must bring the previous registration, or the preprinted form received in the mail, proof of insurance, Soldiers' and Sailors' affidavit and a copy of the latest LES.

If the vehicle was never registered before then the soldier should take a copy of the title.

Last names beginning with A-D should register in January; E-K should register in February; L-R should register in March; and S-Z should register in April.

Registration costs $8.00 but if not done by the end of April then a fine can be imposed.

For Muscogee County, the place to register is in the Government Center. The Center is located between First and Second Avenues and 9th and 10th Streets; 571-4800.

They also have a small office located in the Columbus Square Mall.

For Chattahoochee County registration is at the Cusseta City Hall. From Fort Benning you take Highway 27/280 south approximately 10 miles, turn left unto Highway 55 into Cusseta and go 4 or 5 blocks to the Courthouse on the left.

New civilian fitness program kicks off next month

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

Next month will mark the start of the "Follow Me To Fitness" program, an eight week civilian fitness training program sponsored by the Civilian Personnel Office.

According to Sheryl Creek, a spokesperson for the project, the program is a test which is being conducted throughout the Army.

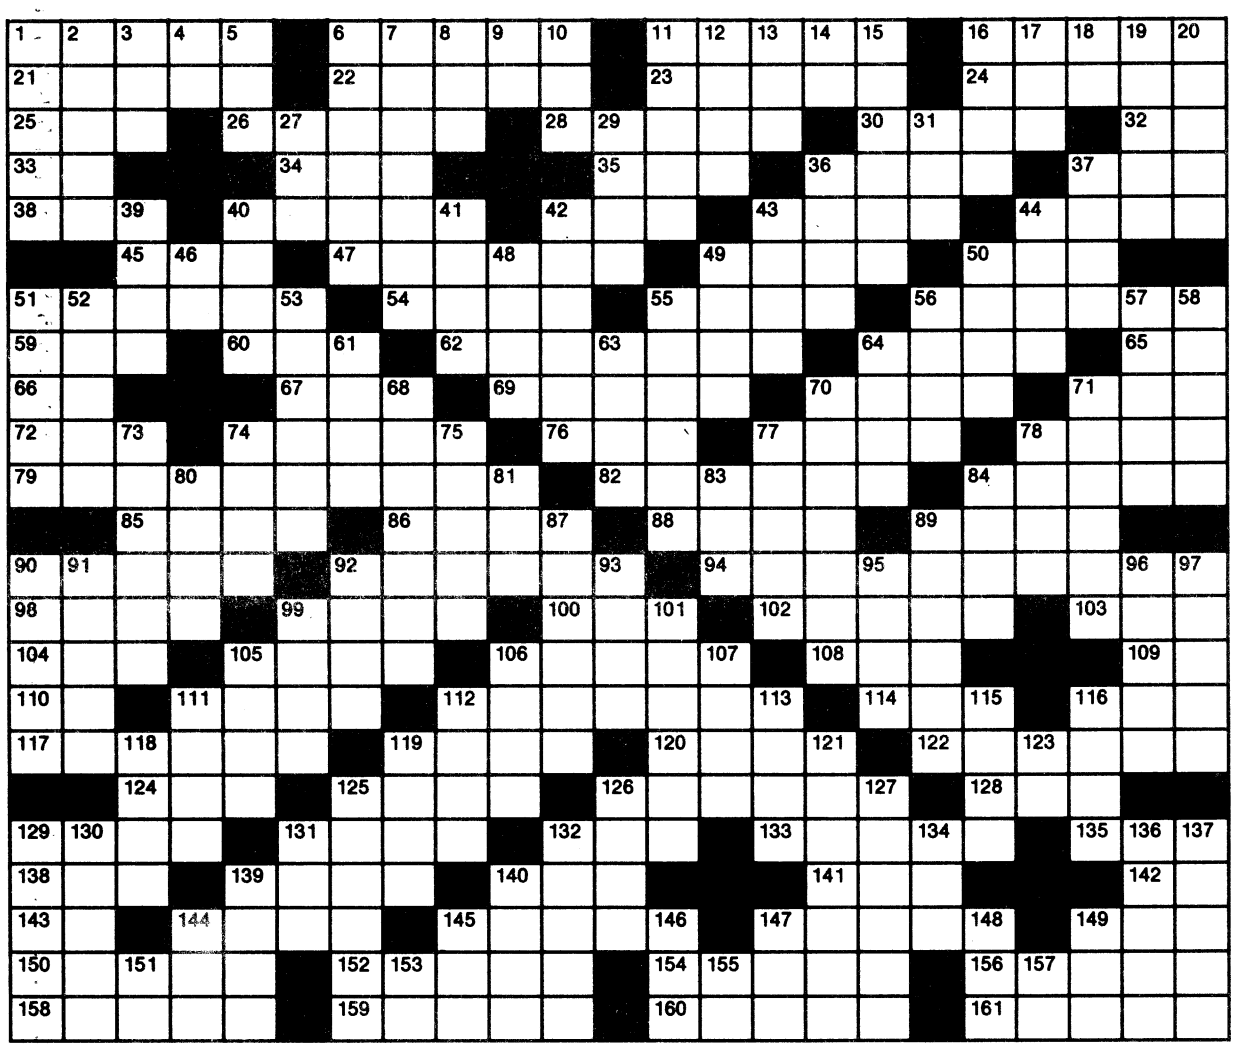
She said the objective of the program is to provide an organized fitness program for civilian employees which will encompass health, well-being, and physical fitness.

Creek said the program will begin with two weeks of classroom training in areas of general fitness, weight control, diet, nutrition, stress modification, abusive substance avoidance and the effects of physical training to physical and mental health.

She said the last six weeks will consist of training in either Nautilus, swimming, walking, or aerobics with 25 people in each group.

"We are opening this program to the first 100 people who apply and meet the criteria set for the course," she said. "There is a few things we need before we can allow a person to enter the program."

They are a physicians statement and a signed waiver of liability, oth of which must be attached to the Department of Defense Form 1556 before we can consider the application," she said.



The program will take place on Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays from 3:30 to 4:30 p.m. "It will be very controlled." Creek said, "They will sign in and out at each class."

She added that this is just like a normal class and they are not going out on their own to exercise. "It is very structured, the employees will be evaluated before and after they complete the program."

She said if the program is sucessful there might be more in the future. Each employee is only allowed to attend the program one time.

Local CPA visits Spencer High School

By Richard Cummings
Spencer High School

At a recent Math Club meeting at Spencer High, Tom Miller, a certified public accountant, spoke to students who may wish to major in accounting when they enter college.

Accountants audit both private and government businesses, as well as handle their taxes. The list is almost endless as to the various areas of specialization.

Miller, who has been a CPA for 16 years, said that the average annual salary for an established CPA is $100,000.

Four years of college is mandatory, in addition to at least two years experience. "Without the experience, one can expect to earn $16,000-$18,000 per year, more if you made good grades in college," Miller said.

Presently, in Columbus, only four years of college is needed, but soon, a master's degree in accounting will be necessary.

"Also, after achieving the status of a CPA, you would need to continue your education by earning 30 credit hours yearly at seminars and classes," Miller stated. "Any student who excells in mathematics may find this to be an enjoyable, yet demanding career."

IRS withholdings can be a taxing experience

Georgia Society of Public Accountants Inc.

As the April 15 income tax filing date approaches, do you find yourself dreaming about how you'll spend your large refund or are you one of those people beginning to worry about how you're going to pay a hugh tax bill?

According to the Georgia Society of CPAs, the wise taxpayer will avoid both extremes. You should strive to come as close as possible to your actual tax bill by having the correct amount of money withheld from your paycheck, says the society.

It doesn't make such sense to let Uncle Sam use your money interest-free, but, by the same token, you don't want to sell your soul to pay your tax bill.

Withholding is the government's way of collecting tax on your salaried income on a planned schedule, a Christmas club of sorts.

An employee with little or no other income has to have a certain amount of money withheld from each paycheck to meet his or her tax obligations. Ideally, the amount withheld by your employer during the year will match the amount of your annual tax liability.

Prior to tax reform, it often worked like this. Whenever you started a new job, you were asked by your employer to complete a withholding form. This W-4 form tells your employer how many allowances, or exemptions, to consider in determining how much to deduct from your paycheck for income tax.

Chances are, it was one of many pre-employment forms you were faced with and you may not have given it much thought. In fact, if you were like most taxpayers, you probably used the head-counting method. You counted the number of people in your family and claimed that number of allowances. The more allowances, the less money withheld.

Come April 15, if that didn't work out to your liking, you asked your employer to withhold more or less during the following year. It was, for many, a trial and error approach.

Then there were those taxpayers with significant deductions who found that they were being over-withheld and receiving large funds. The IRS allowed these taxpayers to claim additional exemptions to offset their deductions and bring their withholding closer to their actual tax bill.

The new tax law has created the need for everyone to re-examine their withholding.

Starting in 1987, less tax is being withheld as a result of lower tax rates. But, at the same time, many employees are likely to be affected by changes in the tax law that reduce or eliminate many tax breaks.

Fewer tax benefits mean more of your income is subject to withholding. Affected employees who don't increase their withholding may very well find themselves face-to-face with a large tax bill come filing time.

Taxpayers who have been offsetting large deductions with additonal allowances should be aware that under tax reform, the value of each allowance, or exemption, has been increased to $1,900 — up from $1,080 in 1986. That means you need to almost double the amount of itemized deductions to warrant each additional exemption on your W-4.

Note, too, that many deductions have been limited while others have been eliminated.

If your 1987 tax return shows you had too much or too little withheld, you can correct the problem by filing another withholding form.

The IRS recommends that in situations where both spouses work, both incomes should be combined on one form.

For more accurate withholding, the spouse with the higher earnings should claim all the exemptions while the other spouse claims none. Be aware, however, employers are required to submit to the IRS any W-4 form on which more than 10 allowances are claimed.

CPAs recommend that you make every attempt to be as accurate as possible when calculating your withholding because, according to new IRS regulations, if the amount withheld is not equal to at least 90 percent of the year's tax liability or 100 percent of the prior year's taxes, the IRS may impose a penalty. However, the IRS has agreed that, for 1987 taxes, it will waive this penalty for employees who, in good faith, filed a new Form W-4 with their employer on or before June 1, 1987.

If you discover that you're not having enough tax withheld, you should file another W-4 as soon as possible. If you're not well-versed in the changes brought about by the Tax Reform Act and think you may need assistance, consider consulting with a tax advisor before filing a revised W-4.

Good tax records save time, money

American Forces Press Service

Good tax records can save taxpayers substantial time and money when preparing income tax returns, according to the Internal Revenue Service.

Taxpayers can save themselves hours of searching for earnings statements or lost receipts and canceled checks, if their financial records are in order.

These records not only are necessary to prepare a complete and accurate return, but can save people money by making them aware of deductions they might have otherwise overlooked.

The types of records to save by those filing Form 1040, the shorter Form 1040A or the 11-line Form 1040EZ include income statements, such as Forms W-2 and W2P, showing income from wages, pensions and annuities, and Forms 1099-INT and 1099-DIV, showing income from interest and dividends.

Parents who pay for the care of their children or dependents while they work, or look for work, should keep careful records of these payments if they want to claim a credit for the amount they pay.

These records should consist of a week-by-week log of the name, address and, if required, Social Security number of the care provider, as well as the amount paid.

Canceled checks or receipts for cash payments will serve as substantiation of the amount paid. These records will enable taxpayers to accurately compute the child and dependent-care credit, which can be claimed on either Form 1040A or the longer Form 1040.

Taxpayers who itemize deductions should keep such things as receipts and canceled checks showing medical and dental payments, contributions to churches and charities and statements to substantiate mortgage interest.

Records of the real estate taxes and personal property taxes paid during the tax year should also be kept.

Other miscellaneous items to keep might include records of payment of union dues, unreimbursed employee business expenses, investment expenses and tax return preparation fees — these can be deducted only to the extent that the total amount exceeds 2 percent of the taxpayer's adjusted gross income.

Taxpayers must have statements, worksheets and receipts that document and support the income, deductions and credits claimed on their tax returns, should IRS need to examine them.

Tax records that support items claimed on a return should be kept at least until the period of limitation expires for that return. Usually this is three years from the date the return was due or filed or two years from the date the tax was paid, whichever is later.

Sometimes records must be kept longer than the period of limitation even though the tax return is correct and complete. Records of property transactions (including real estate, stock and machinery) should be kept for future reference.

In addition, copies of old tax returns may be helpful in preparing future returns, so taxpayers may want to keep them with their other records.

Questions about new tax laws answered

American Forces Press Service

The Tax Reform Act of 1986 will have an impact on taxpayers who itemize on their returns. The Internal Revenue Service has compiled the following questions and answers about itemized deductions:

Q. Will I still be able to take a deduction for medical and dental expenses?

A. Yes, but deduct only the unreimbursed part that is more than 7.5 percent of your adjusted gross income.

Q. What interest deductions am I allowed to take on my home?

A. Generally, if you itemize deductions on Sechedule A, Form 1040, you can deduct all mortgage interest on your principal residence and a second residence for all mortgages secured on or before Aug. 16, 1986. On mortgages secured after that date, you will generally be limited to deducting interest only to the extent that the loans are not more than the purchase price, plus the cost of improvements.

Q. Can I deduct loan interest on a mortgage secured after Aug. 16, 1986, that is in excess of the purchase price plus the cost of improvements?

A. Yes, if the mortgage interest results from borrowing money for qualified medical or qualified educational purposes.

Q. Will I still be able to deduct the interest on my car loan and credit cards?

A. The deduction for personal interest is being phased out. The deduction will be limited to 65 percent in 1987, 40 percent in 1988, 20 percent in 1989, 10 percent in 1990 and zero percent thereafter. For this purpose, any interest that you cannot deduct because of the home mortgage limitation, discussed in the preceding two questions, will be considered personal interest.

Q. Can I still deduct sale taxes?

A. No, taxpayers can no longer deduct state and local sales taxes.

Q. Are there limitations on deducting employee business expenses?

A. Yes. Except for reimbursed expenses and moving expenses, employee business expenses will generally be deductible as a miscellaneous itemized deduction and only to the extent that they exceed 2 percent of adjusted gross income.

Q. Can I take a deduction for tax return preparation?

A. Yes. However, miscellaneous deductions such as tax planning expenses, union dues and subscriptions to trade magazines are deductible only to the extent that they exceed 2 percent of adjusted gross income.

Practice for the Infantry Marathon

By J.M. Henderson
Martin Army Community Hospital

Editor's note: This is the sixth in a series of articles intended to prepare the average runner to complete the 5th Annual Infantry Marathon on March 5.

Watching the opening of the Winter Olympics in Calgary makes one shiver. It's kind of like setting out on the middle 15 miles of the marathon route when it's 17 degrees Farenheit with 15 mph winds.

Are you motivated? Are you dedicated? Sure you are.

And now, with only two weeks of hard training left, each run gains more importance.

Just as the long training runs teach your body to endure the pounding in the joints, the exhaustion in the viscera and the isolation in the brain, you must also teach yourself how to prepare for March 4 the day before.

Take for instance "carbo loading." This is the practice of eating lots of carbohydrates in hopes of storing up enough energy for the long haul.

Your body doesn't tolerate gorging well. You feel bloated, have lots of gas, belly cramps, headaches.

Since you have been taking long training runs recently, you can afford to "practice" carbo loading. An extra bagel, slice of pecan pie, warm sticky danish, scoop of pasta or a few cookies will do nicely.

Don't worry, by doing that 20 mile training run, you just put 2,000 calories on the deficit side of the ledger.

What else can you practice?

●Striding: Stride length and speed must be relatively slow at the outset of the race. It takes discipline to control the urge to burst out of the pack along Dixie and Sightseeing Roads.

●Shoe tightness: Over a long haul, your foot might increase in size. A tightly laced shoe may feel supportive at first, but an hour later it will be agony. Make it comfortably snug, so the heel won't shimmy.

●Accumulate your race day sundries: It's a good idea to make a list of the things you'll need, such as four little safety pins, a jar of vaseline, a cap, favorite socks, and running clothes.

Remember the towel, an extra set of dry clothes, and don't forget your race number.

●Bodily functions: Yes, you even need to practice emptying the bladder and colon before a long run. You really have to take the time to "practice" this one.

●Cutting tangents: This refers to the practice of cutting across a road so as to take the straightest (and thereby the shortest) route through a curve. It is best done on uphill curves.

●Run-walk-run: As you course your way up to the firehouse on 8th Division Road and then head toward the 197th Infantry Brigade, you may notice that your body just isn't working. It could be worthwhile to alternate running and walking.

For instance, run 10 minutes, walk five minutes and run 10 minutes. Just so you are still headed toward building 4, you have lost no ground.

I hope these tips come in handy during the last few weeks.

Next week, "The Sniffle Zone."

See you on the road.

Facts about nutrition that everyone should know

Army News Service

●Fast eating may contribute to weight problems. The reason is that it takes 20 minutes for the brain to "feel" the first mouthful of food. As a result, fast eaters eat more food, before feeling full, than slow eaters.

●Because water, which constitutes 50-70 percent of a percent's bodyweight, and lean body mass are lost first when dieting, and men have more water and lean body mass than women, men tend to lose weight faster in the beginning of a diet.

●People lose weight more successfully by eating three regular meals a day than one big meal. The reason is the one-meal-a-day pattern gives the body more calories than it immediately needs, so the food is more likely to be stored as fat.

●Many beverages have an extraordinarily high number of calories. For example, 12 ounces of non-diet soda have 150-200 calories; 12 ounces of sweetened ice tea, 146; 8 ounces of whole milk, 150; 8 ounces of lemonade, 100-140, 8 ounces of Hawaiian punch, 120, 8 ounces of beer, 98; and 4 ounces of dinner wine, 84.

●A pound of body fat contains 3,500 calories. Therefore, by eating 500 calories less a day, a person can lose one pound in seven days or four pounds per month

●A person's calorie needs depend on several factors -- such as gender (men need more calories than women), weight (heavier persons need more calories than lighter persons), activity (active persons need more calories than sedentary persons), age (calorie need decreases with age, particularly after 25), climate (persons in cold or hot climates need more calories than those in temperate zones) and body fat (persons with high body fat content require fewer calories than persons with low body fat content).

●Americans get a very high 40 percent of their calories from "fats" -- either those found naturally in food (such as whole milk, poultry, coldcuts, steaks, cheese, nuts, etc.) or fats added to food (such as cooking oils, butter, margarine, mayonnaise, salad dressing, gravies, sauces, etc). Some exceptionally high fat foods are hot dogs (120 of their 145 calories are fat calories), french fries (126 of 268), 8-inch tuna submarine sandwich (300 of 685), and sausage, egg, and biscuit (360 of 585). Decreasing high fat intake will result in weight loss.

●When dieting, be aware that "plateaus" are to be expected. The conditions of no-weight-loss occur wher the body switches from lean body mass to fat for energy. When fat is burned, water which is heavier than fat is created. The body will lose this water in time, and weight loss will continue. Don't give up! Plateaus are temporary conditions.

●When both exercise and dieting are part of a weight control program, use both a tape measure and scale to measure progress. Losing inches but no weight may indicate you have lost body fat and increased muscle mass.

●Improper dieting can produce side effects such as increased bodyfat (especially with repeated dieting), irritability, craving for sweets, headaches, and dizziness.

EDITOR'S NOTE: Material for this article originated from Jan Yoshimoto, registered dietician at the Fort Myer, Va., Rader Health Clinic, where it first appeared in the "Pentagram." "Many of us need to lose weight," she says, "but we need to know the right way to do it.")

The two days of hashing will require a $25 fee to cover food, drink, small gifts and transportation.

A hash run is a combination cross-country, hide and seek, steeple chase, and obstacle course.

Anyone interested in joining the fun should meet at the Econo Lodge on Victory Drive at 3 p.m. Saturday or call Ernest Smallman at 561-9298.

Time to gear up for American Lung Association Bike Trek

American Lung Association

It's time to gear up for the Seventh Annual American Lung Association of Georgia Bike Trek for Life and Breath, May 14-16.

The three-day/two-night 150-mile bicycle tour, from Gainesville to Helen and back will demonstrate the value of healthy lungs and raise an estimated $100,000 to aid in the fight against lung disease.

This year's Bike Trek, an alpine adventure, is open to anyone 16 years of age or older in good physical condition.

Those under 16 must be accompanied by a parent or guardian.

Participants must supply their own gear and meet a minimum pledge goal of $250.

The Lung Association provides breakfasts and dinners while on the road, vehicles to carry gear and refreshments, mobile bike repair shops, lodging, pre-trip planning and maps, safety arrangements and sponsorship materials.

All participants will receive an official Bike Trek T-shirt.

According to veteran Trekker Chaplain Reese here at Fort Benning, the bike trek is the kind of bicyle tour the average cyclist can complete. Participants are pampered and the trip is safe and enjoyable.

"It's a great opportunity for people who enjoy bicycling to get together and have fun while supporting a worthy cause," he said.

If you are interested in supporting the Lung Association's efforts in fighting lung disease but are not a cyclist yourself, you many give your support to another trekker from Fort Benning by giving him a pledge when asked or phone in a pledge to the American Lung Association office at 323-4700.

For more information, contact the American Lung Association of Georgia office at 2546 Wynnton Road, 323-4700.

Deadline for receipt of applications is April 15, 1988.

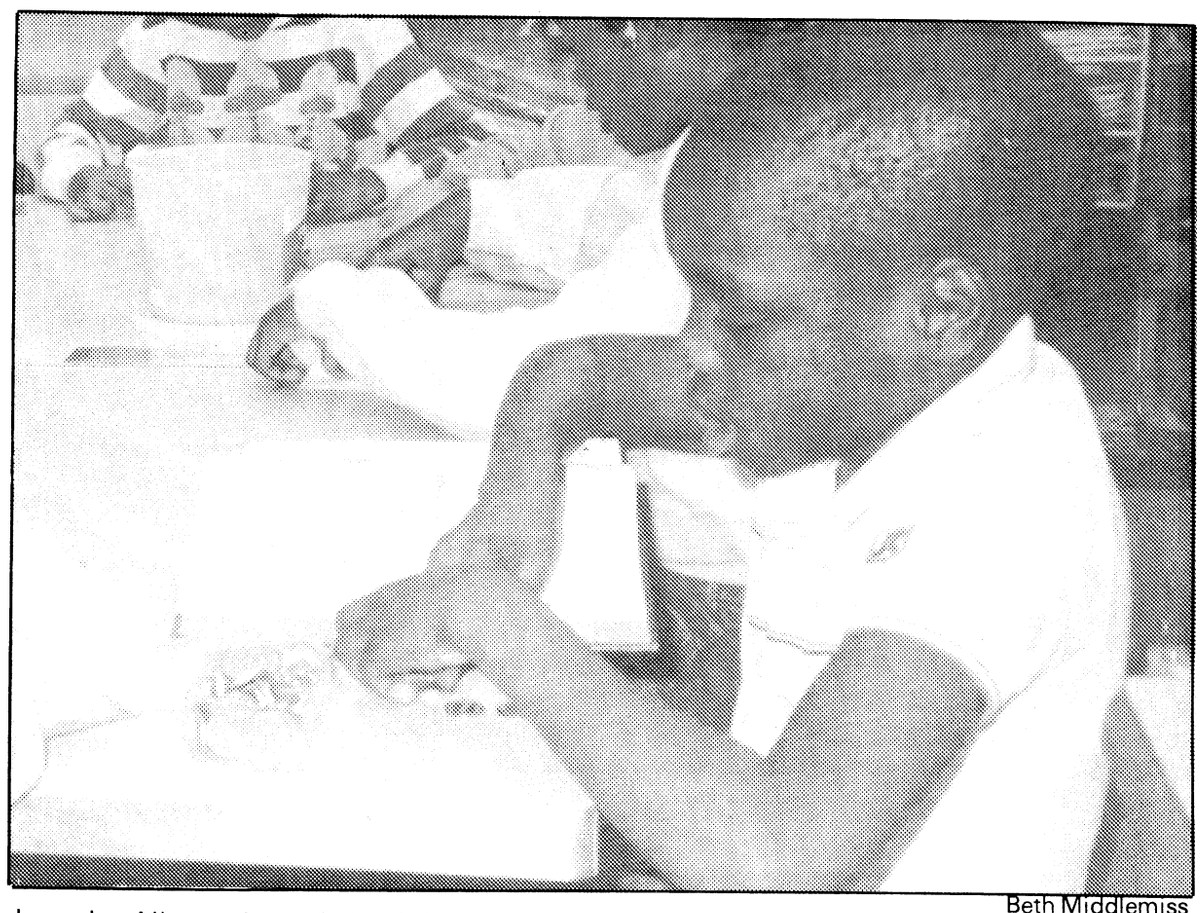
Basic skills focus of math program

By Beth Middlemiss
Fort Benning Schools

The Fort Benning Schools mathematics program is designed to teach and to sharpen basic skills while at the same time developing real world problem solving strategies.

"Basic skills are the focus and foundation of our math program," said Jerry Christy, Coordinator of Math and Science. "Our own experience as teachers is backed up by the research that indicates a need for students to develop the ability to use math confidently."



"Some people go through life believing that they have a math block and that they simply can't do math," Christy said. "Our math curriculum is built around the goal of fostering a positive attitude in students and a willingness to explore."

Each year the Fort Benning teaching staff studies and updates part of its curriculum.

Last year a teachers' committee, made up of teachers from each school and chaired by Glen Hughes, fourth grade teacher at Wilson School, looked at new mathematics book series as well as the current research on math instruction.

The committee then took its findings to each school faculty for consideration.

A new math textbook series that was selected by the teachers was purchased and the teachers began using the new series at the beginning of this school year.

Beth Middlemiss

Jvaughn Allen, a Loyd School third grader, uses math manipulative imitation coins as he solves a mathematics problem.

The new series contains not only the math book but problem solving computer software, assorted objects called manipulatives that students use to visually understand mathematical concepts, and solar powered calculators.

"Once the student has developed basic computation skills, the emphasis shifts to logical reasoning and knowing when to add, subtract, multiply and divide," said Christy.

"When the logical reasoning stage is reached other tools such as the calculator and computer are introduced to prepare students for the kinds of activities that they will be doing in the real world," he said. "At this stage students begin to realize that math involves more than just the mulitiplication tables or a sheet of paper with problems to be worked."

"Math challenges become a mystery to be solved by young minds that are capable and confident," Christy said.

Several teachers have also participated, after regular school hours, in staff development courses which provided additional ideas for using math manipulatives with their students.

"Math in schools today is not what it used to be. It's that and a lot more," said Christy. "While our math program has always been a strong one, the new materials, training and applications can only serve to enhance our students' success."

Sweeping changes made to VA home loan program

Veterans Administration

Legislation recently signed by President Reagan has made sweeping changes in the Veterans Administration's Home Loan Guaranty Program, Administrator of Veterans Affairs Thomas K. Turnage has announced.

The Veterans' Home Loan Program Improvements and Property Rehabilitation Act revised the calculations for determining the amount of the loan guaranteed by the VA.

Previously, the maximum VA-guaranty on a conventional home loan was $27,500. Under the new law, for loans of $45,000 or less, 50 percent of the loan is guaranteed. For loans above $45,000, 40 percent of the loan is guaranteed, up to a maximum of $36,000, but not less than $22,500. The changes apply to any loan closed on or after Feb. 1, 1988, unless a guaranty commitment was made on or before Dec. 31, 1987.

In addition, the new law reinstated the one percent funding fee on VA-backed home loans, effective Dec. 21, 1987, through Sept. 30, 1989.

Other changes in the loan guaranty program include:

- A limitation on refinancing of existing loans to 90 percent of the appraised value of the property. This limitation takes effect Feb. 20, 1988, and does not apply to veterans refinancing an existing VA loan with a new loan at a lower interest rate.
- A five percent downpayment on VA-guaranteed loans for manufactured homes. This change applies to any manufactured home loan closed on or after Feb. 1, 1988.
- Restrictions on assumability of a VA home loan. Veterans intending to sell their homes before the loan is paid in full must notify the lender. If the lender or the VA finds the purchaser is not a good credit risk, the unpaid balance may be declared immediately due and payable. If the purchaser is acceptable, the veteran will be released from liability to the VA. This change applies to loans for which guaranty commitments are made on or after March 1, 1988.
- A relaxation of occupancy requirements for new loans and refinanced loans. For interest rate-reduction refinancing loans only, previous occupancy by a veteran or active-duty service member will now satisfy the requirement that the veteran occupy the home in order to be eligible for the VA-backed loan. For new loans and other refinancing loans, the occupancy of the spouse of an active-duty service member will satisfy the occupancy requirement if the member is unable to occupy the property because of his or her duty status. These changes apply to loans made on or after Jan. 21, 1988.
- Authorization for VA, under certain circumstances, to sell acquired properties to certain groups or individuals to assist homeless veterans or to rehabilitate the property using veterans enrolled in job training programs.
- Minimum requirements for appraisers and authorization for the appraisal report to be forwarded to and reviewed by certain lenders.

The VA Home Loan Guaranty Program was established in 1944 as part of the original GI Bill to help returning World War II veterans.

The program helps veterans finance the purchase of homes at a favorable rate of interest and with little or no downpayment. Since the program began, VA has guaranteed more than 12 million home loans.

THE SAAB 9000S. A CAR FOR PEOPLE WHOSE SENSE OF LUXURY IS DEFINED BY HIGH STANDARDS. NOT HIGH PRICE.

For much less than you'd imagine a fine European car would cost, you can own a Saab 9000S.

It not only provides you with the kind of standard features you'd expect in a luxury sedan, but several you might not.

Like Saab's anti-lock braking system, for example, which is specially calibrated to work with our front-wheel drive.

And an interior that's roomier than any other import except the Rolls Royce Silver Spur Limousine.

So test-drive the Saab 9000S. You'll see that while many car companies use an "impressive" sticker price to elevate their status, Saab uses something infinitely more convincing. An impressive car.

Army announces fiscal 1989 budget figures

Army News Service

WASHINGTON — The Army's fiscal year 1989 budget of $78 billion, which was forwarded by President Ronald Reagan to Congress Feb. 18, represents a "negative growth" compared with the budget for fiscal 1988.

"In terms of buying power, we'll have less this year," an Army spokesman said.

To accommodate both the 1988 and 1989 fiscal year budgets, Army military end strength will drop by 8,600 to 772,300 by Oct. 1, and civilian end strength will drop by an estimated 12,000 to about 400,000. In addition, the pace of modernization will be slowed.

The Army reduction in force was directed by the secretary of defense so that funds could be redirected to higher priority Army requirements. The secretary also directed that the Army cut $4.6 billion from the fiscal year 1988-1989 budget.

The exact amount of the civilian cuts will depend on several factors, to include Table of Distribution and Allowance cuts, money allocated for operation and maintenance and local management of civilian work force funds.

As of now, the 12,000 figure is only an estimate. The civilian budgeted work force level in fiscal 1987 was about 412,000. Applying the estimated reduction associated with the lower funding levels, the Army expects the civilian work force level to be about 400,000 in both fiscal years 1988 and 1989.

Force structure cuts next year will include the deactivation of an active brigade in the 9th Infantry Division (Motorized) at Fort Lewis, Wash.; delay in the activation of two infantry battalions in the 6th Infantry Division (Light) in Alaska, and reduction of non-combat TDA spaces. The process of determining where the TDA cuts will come from has just begun and will be announced later.

Army leaders stressed that although the 1989 funding cuts will adversely affect the Army's warfighting capability, the budget will continue essential improvements in readiness, support a flexible and responsive force structure and provide limited improvements in force sustainability.

"The budget cuts will be felt," the Army spokesman said. "But Army leaders know what makes a quality force and they will preserve those key ingredients."

Training — the Army theme for 1988 — will receive top billing during the coming year despite the cuts, the individual continued. "As leaders, we will ensure we make the best use of what we receive and also look at less expensive means to accomplish training objectives," he added.

Each command and activity faces different challenges in meeting mission requirements with the reduced budgets, the Army spokesman said. Individual major commanders and their activities are in the best position to decide how to meet the challenge of operating with a reduced civilian work force.

Commanders can choose from a number of options to meet the reduction of civilian employees. These options include hiring freezes, curtailment of travel and overtime, release of temporary employees, early retirements with the approval of the Office of Personnel Management, furloughs and reductions in force.

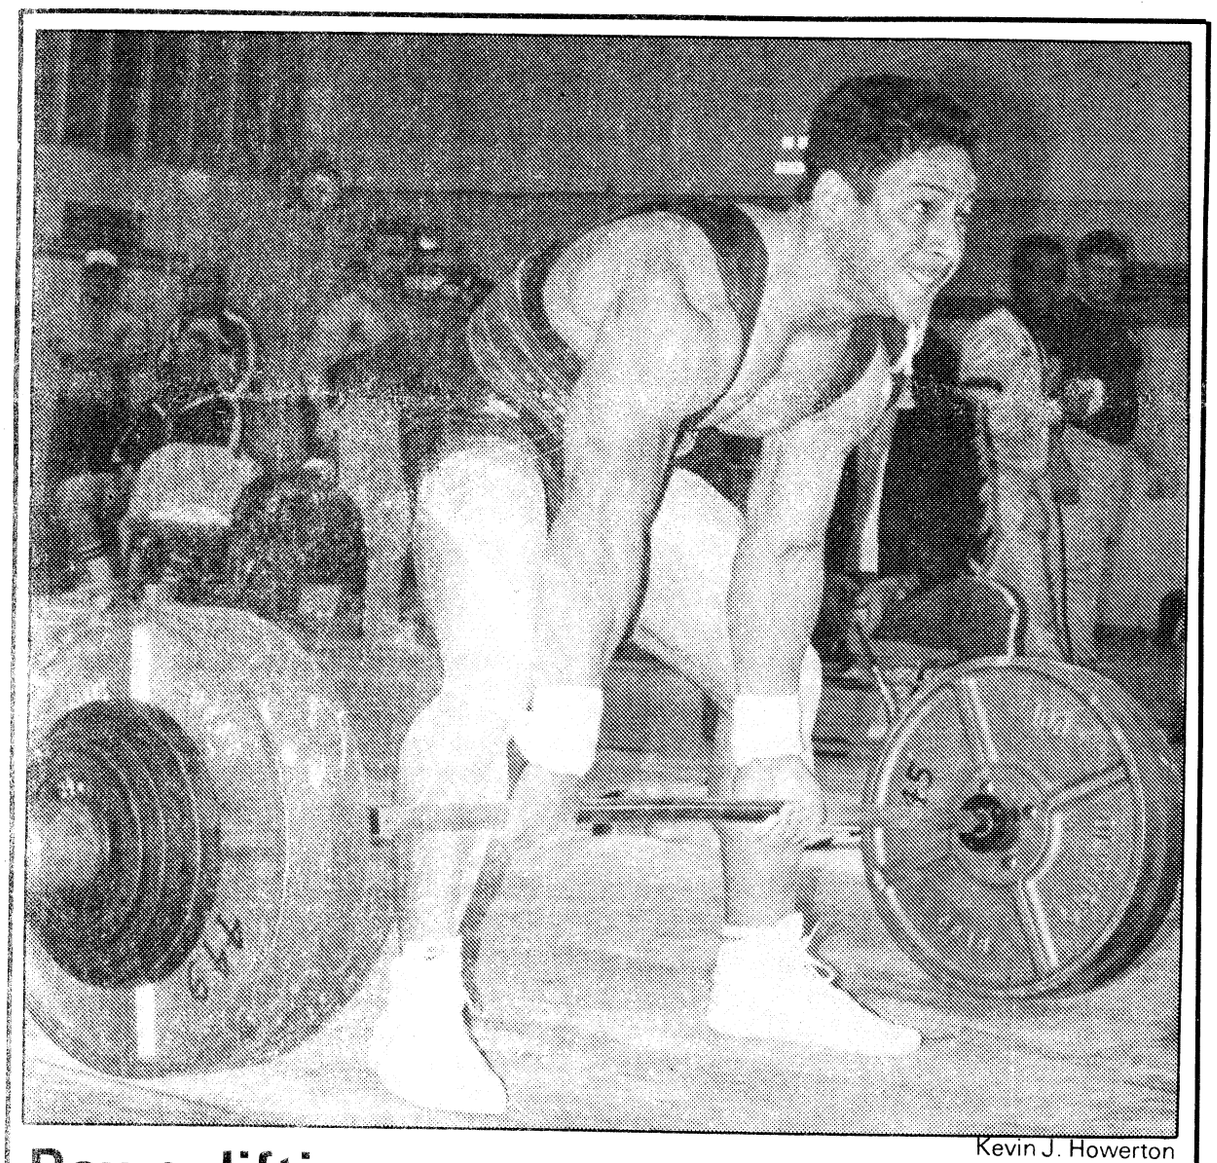
Commands have until Oct. 1 to reach their budget limit.

Benning to take another $8.6 million cut from FY 88 command operating budget

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Fort Benning has received an $8.6 million cut, in addition to the cuts it has already taken this year.

In actual dollars, Fort Benning's operational and management account budget last year was $196 million.



If this latest cut holds, Fort Benning's fiscal 1988 command operating budget will be about $174 million, or an 11 percent decrease from last year.

The impact of the additional $8.6 million cut is not known at this time, but will require some reductions in services and the workforce.

Post officials are assessing the impact and should have some firm decisions by next week.

Benning officials announced last week the possible reduction in force of about 200 people. The exact increase to this number is not yet known, but the impact on the permanent work force should not be substantially increased.

As a result of the hiring freeze and the request for early retirements, which is still not approved, Benning officials believe they will be able to meet the required civilian end strength levels by the end of fiscal 1988 as directed by the Department of Defense.

Kauffman inducted into hall of fame

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

Being inducted into the Officer Candidate School Hall of Fame was a special thrill for one Fort Benning officer last week.

Col. Raymond Kauffman, deputy director, Directorate of Combat Developments, was one of 42 officers honored, and was the only inductee from Fort Benning.

Kauffman said being inducted into the OCS Hall of Fame was a humbling experience, "especially when you walk into Wigle Hall, and one wall is covered with pictures of Medal of Honor winners who have been inducted into the Hall of Fame, and on the other wall hangs photos of general officers who have been inducted," he said.

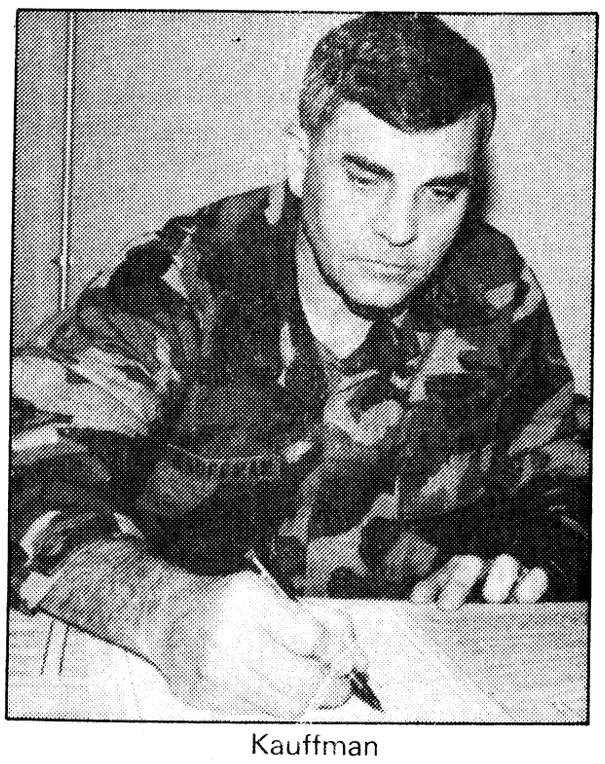
Kauffman's long road to the Hall of Fame started when he enlisted in the Army as an infantryman and then decided to go to OCS, from which he graduated in 1964.

After attending the Infantry Officers Basic Course, he volunteered to go to Vietnam where he served at a platoon leader. It was while he was a platoon leader that he realized he was doing exactly what he had been searching for and he wanted to make the Army a career.

After his first tour in Vietnam he came back to Benning where he was a tactics instructor with the Infantry School. When his tour here came to an end he volunteered for his second tour in Vietnam.

Kauffman said what motivated him was the fact that he's just a true-blue,flag-waving patriot who was proud to be an American.

"I can't think of a better job than the Army to enforce that belief," he said.



Kaufman dispelled the myth that it depends on your commissioning source when getting promoted. "What propels you forth in the Army," he said, "is individual ability and motivation."

He said he doesn't really recall a favorite tour since joining the Army, but said he favors his command positions over the ones he's held on staff.

He does, however, enjoy his present job, which is testing new equipment for soldiers, more specifically, infantrymen. "Here we look 10 to 15 years into the future to see what the men will need to be combat ready."

Kaufman said he will remain in the Army until it's no longer fun. "I have no preference, I'll serve where I'm needed."

His awards speak for how he has fulfilled past positions. They include a Silver Star, Bronze Star with two oak leaf clusters, Legion of Merit, Air Medal and Purple Heart with oak leaf cluster.

Clarke featured speaker at March 10 luncheon

USAIC Public Affairs Office

"Reclaiming the past, rewriting the future," is the theme for this year's Women's History Month.

The Federal Women's Program Committee is sponsoring several activities during March, in conjunction with local women's groups.

March 10, retired Maj. Gen. Mary E. Clarke will speak at a luncheon in the NCO Club, at 11:30 a.m. Tickets are $4.10 and must be purchased by March 2. They can be purchased from any member of the FWPC or at the Equal Employment Office.

On March 23, a symposium titled "Women in the Military: Past, Present and Future" will take place in Classroom 6, Infantry Hall, from 2:30 to 4:30 p.m.

The symposium will be divided into 20-minute presentations, followed by question-and-answer periods. Capt. Charles Martin will talk about the integration of women into the U.S. Military Academy at West Point.

MSgt. Nancy Hinkelman, Col. Suzie Sherell and SGM Hazel Taylor will speak about the changes in the role of military women

Admission is free and the symposium is open to the public.

2/58th Patriots move into new barracks

By Marsha Santiago
ITC correspondent

"Patriots, Sir, Patriots," can now be heard throughout the Sand Hill area. The cry marks the end of one period of history for the 2nd Battalion, 58th Infantry, 2nd Infantry Training Brigade. The battalion has moved from World War II barracks in Harmony Church to a "starship" in Sand Hill.

The battalion had occupied the World War II barracks since its activation in January 1976. The 2-58th is the first 2nd ITB battalion to move fom Harmony Church to Sand Hill. By the mid-1990, if current plans are followed, 2nd ITB Headquarters and the remaining three battalions will also be moved to starships in Sand Hill.

According to Capt. Robert Harter, C Co. commander, there are many advantages to the new living quarters, but also some sadness at leaving an area with so much history.

"We used to tell parents on Family Day, the best tax dollars ever spent were used to build these barracks," said Harter. "They were built in the late '30s and have been used almost continuously since then. When our last cycle graduated, a visitor came up to me and said he lived here in the '50s and now was at Fort Benning to see his nephew graduate."

When the Harmony Church barracks were built in the late 1930s, the cost per building was under $10,000. The cost for the starship in Sand Hill was $22 million. At the Harmony Church location, the 2-58th occupied 74 buildings in the 4400 and 4900 blocks; now, at Sand Hill, one building meets all the battalion's needs.

According to Lt. Col. Robert A. Frizzo, 2-58th commander, the advantages of moving to a starship are numerous. It is a self contained living and training complex, with a physical fitness field and track, classrooms, covered formation areas, dining areas and counseling rooms.

"The Harmony Church area served us well, but it had many irritants," Frizzo said. "The lack of properly lighted physical training fields, cracked sidewalks and pot-holed roads made PT a daily adverture, which too often resulted in twisted ankles and the like."

Frizzo went on to say that the buildings in Harmony Church are very old and do not warrant a very high priority for maintenance or improvements by the facility engineers. Cracked floors and

March is nutrition month

The Army has placed strong emphasis on physical fitness. According to Secretary of the Army John O. Marsh Jr., the readiness of the United States Army depends on the physical fitness of the individual, the soldiers, the non-commissioned officers and the officers who lead them.

An important aspect of physical fitness is nutrition. March has been designated as National Nutrition Month, with this year's theme, "Choose Good Nutrition — For Today and Tomorrow."

I urge all military and civilian personnel, family members and retirees to take advantage of the many nutrition education opportunities available on this post. Help yourself and your family be all you can be nutritionally.

Let's make sure our soldiers are physically, mentally and nutritionally fit to fight.

Maj. Gen. Kenneth C. Leuer
Fort Benning commander

Thurman praises Benning soldiers

Editor's note: Fort Benning has received numerous laudatory comments about the AUSA Symposium that was held here Feb. 2 through 4. More than 100 executives of defense contracting companies attended the annual update on products currently used by the Army, and equipment the Army needs for the future. The following letter was written to Maj. Gen. Kenneth C. Leuer, post commander.

I want to take this opportunity to express my sincere appreciation and official commendation for the efforts of the entire Fort Benning community for their role in the preparation and conduct of the recent AUSA Symposium.

Our 140 senior industrial official guests departed knowing that they had attended the "best ever" AUSA Symposium.

The Rangers and soldiers of the 197th Infantry Brigade and the 29th Infantry Regiment were dynamite. More importantly, they convinced our guests that we know our business, that we're damned good at it, and that ours is the best trained, motivated, equipped and led Army in the world, bar none.

Please convey to all who were responsible for that magnificent effort my appreciation and "Well Done."

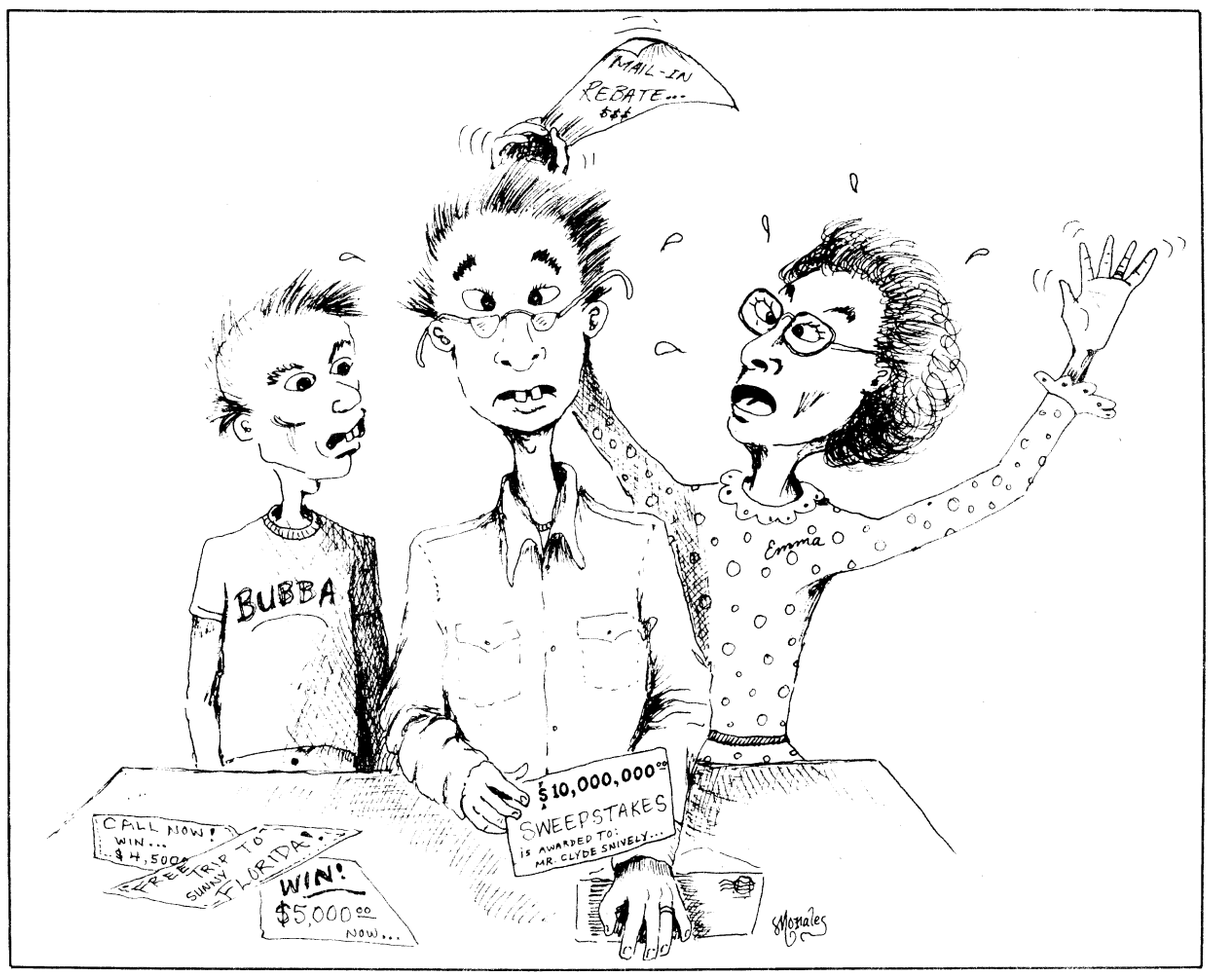
Airborne troops give America winning edge

By Jimmie F. Holt
507th PIR

Open any piece of literature in which there is a discussion of what the author believes to be the secret of winning the next war, and sooner or later the discussion will turn to the value of airborne — or its lack of value or relevance. Such authors have fallen under the spell of the managers and technocracts who believe there is an equipment or machinery solution for every problem, including the most dangerous human phenomenon — war.

The reality, however, presents itself to us eveyday by way of our history books, our newspapers and our televisions. The world is a dangerous place, but not simply because of the threat of nuclear confrontation. While such a confrontation certainly would be dangerous, it is by no means the most likely.



The Soviets understand very well what Gen. George C. Marshall meant when he said, "The only effective defense a nation can maintain is the power of attack, and that power can not be in machinery alone. There must be men to man the machines, and there must be men to come to close grips with the enemy and tear his operating bases and his productive establishment away from him before the war can end."

There are those who believe this is the real objective of the Soviet Union's effort to mobilize the Third World against America and our allies.

The most important element of the airborne force is not its equipment, it is the kind of person attracted to it, as if by some natural selection. The kind of person who, although tired and scared, can be told, "Tonight, you embark upon a combat mission... You will spearhead the landing... The eyes of the world are upon you."

Reader complains about Yankee drivers

By Clyde Snively
USAIC Public Affairs Office

It's always nice to learn that someone is reading what you write besides the editor who has no choice.

A couple of weeks ago I got a nice letter from a fellow specialist.He took exception to my efforts of trying to help the Safety Office out by giving some practical driving tips for icy roads.

He kindly pointed out that Southerners don't need any help from Yankees and noted that his bumper has a sticker which reads, "Save the South, teach a Yankee to drive."

He didn't say so, but he's probably got another bumper sticker that says, "So many pedestrians, so little time."

I really appreciate your warning, Johnny, and want you to know I have learned a great deal about driving habits since being down here--for one, I learned never to expect anyone to signal their intentions--heck if you know they plan on cutting you off, you might speed up and not let them--goes their reasoning.

Something else to be alert for, no matter which way drivers begin to head their cars--watch it, they could be coming back at you--such as those who fake left turns at intersections only to turn right.

Again, thanks for the letter, and the warning, Johnny.

The other day I actually had somone pay me a visit. Walked all the way up from the fifth floor, he did.

Said he liked the way I wrote. But the purpose of his visit wasn't so much to praise me as it was to add to my column on ripoffs.

He said he'd been studying various ways to get rich quick at home and in the process discovered there ain't no legal ones.

He brought me proof from the Better Business Bureau and the postal system.

The most popular are those "Earn money at home," opportunities.

I know you all have seen 'em. They offer $1,000 monthly just to address and stuff envelopes part time.

SFC Hock said ya gotta buy something for $8 to $25 before you can begin work. He said anytime you answer an ad offering "huge" profits for a work-at-home project for which there is "great demand," but requires "no experience," chances are you will end up losing money instead of making any.

According to the sarge, what they are selling are pamphlets with instructions on how to do to others what they just did to you.

It's like the pyramid game. Before too long all the suckers in the world have bought into it and there are no more dupes left to sell to--that'd about be the time I got into it.

In another version of this scam, the ad notes the company will pay 25 to 75 cents "per envelope stuffed and submitted to us according to instructions."

What this boils down to is you pay for newspaper and magazine ads asking people to send you self-addressed stamped envelopes for information on earning money at home.

It's those responses you send to the company.

Hock said that according to the U.S. Postal Service nearly all businesses use highly mechanzied operations to stuff envelopes, eliminating any profit potential for some who wants to make money that way.

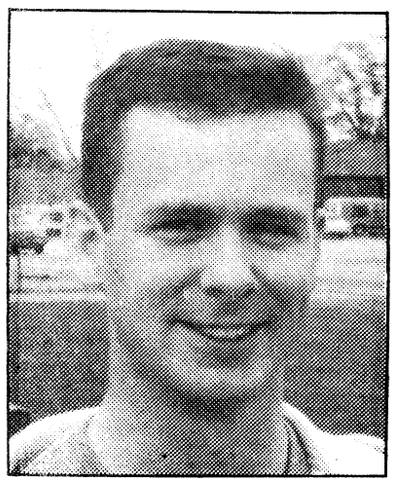
He mentioned several more schemes he'd come across. What it comes to in the end are two axioms I'm sure you've heard before:

"If it sounds too good to be true, it probably is;" and

"Always investigate money making schemes." Best way to do this is through the better business bureau or the postal service for mail order projects.

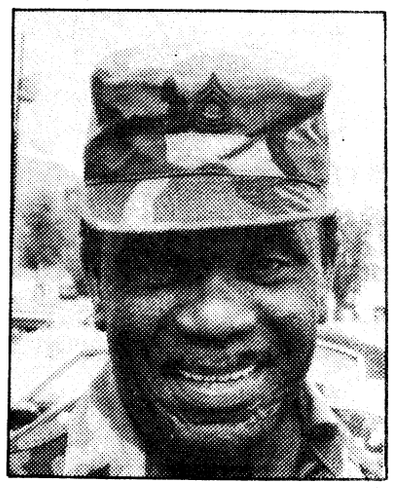
By the way, if you have a few extra dollars to invest...

Hard work, patience important leadership qualities



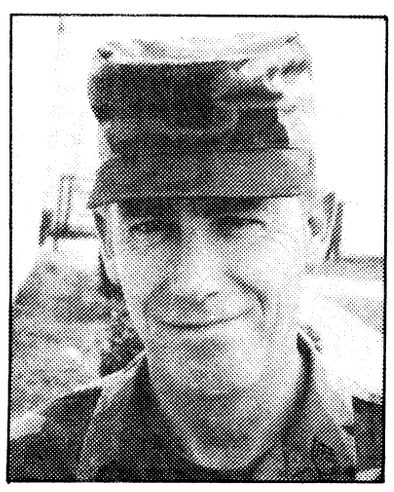
Army News Service

Of all the attributes that leaders look for in soldiers, three of the most important are poise, patience, and hard work.



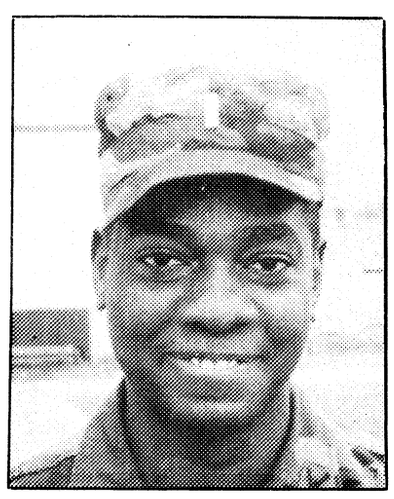
What exactly do they mean? Listed below is what educators, philosophers, authors and others have said in the past about these attributes mean to them.

- "With so many things clamoring for attention, the first law of success is concentration — bending all energies to one point and going directly to it, looking neither right or left." (William Matthew, American author).
- "Without concentration of the mind and will, performance would not result." (Roger Bannister, British physician, first man to run the mile under four minutes).
- "You can't look at the mountain below. It might soften you with its beauty. Instead, you must think only of the course and the darkness of the challenge." (Franz Klammer, Austrian Olympic Gold Medal Skier).
- "With ordinary talent and extraordinary perseverance, all things are attainable." (Thomas F. Boxton, English philanthropist).
- "Success in life is a matter not so much of talent as of concentration and perseverance." (C. W. Wendte, American clergyman).
- "Have patience. All things are difficult before they become easy." (Saadi, Persian poet).
- "I'm glad the 8-hour day had not been invented when I was a young man. If my life had been made up of eight-hour days, I don't think I could have accomplished a great deal. I never did anything worth doing by accident, nor did any of my inventions come by accident. They came by hard work." (Thomas Edison, American inventor).
- "I see no virtue where I smell no sweat." (Frances Quarles, English poet).
- "The dictionary is the only place where success comes before work." (Vince Lombardi, former National Football League coach).
- "The trouble with opportunity is that it always comes disguised as hard work." (Herbert W. Prochnow, American philanthropist).
- "Even when you're on the right track, you'll get run over if you just sit there." (Will Rogers, American humorist).
- "If people knew how hard I've had to work to gain my mastery, it wouldn't seem wonderful at all." (Michelangelo, Italian painter and sculptor).
- "The time will come when winter will ask what you were doing all summer." (Henry Clay, American statesman)



VARIOUS VOICES: What do you think about the U.S. showing in the Winter Olympics?

2nd Lt. John Ciccareli, Company C, 2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment — "We haven't been exactly doing what we expected but we're trying and that's what is really important."



MSgt. Danny Smith, Company A, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, The School Brigade — "I'm disappointed. It is embarrassing to watch television and see Americans placing 4th, 5th and 6th when we should be number one. I think that if we would invest more money in our athletes, we would be number one."

SFC Gerald Campbell, Company A, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, The School Brigade — "I'm disappointed, I hoped that we would do better. I thought for sure there would be more gold medals won by the U.S., but I am happy for what we have won."

Kelli Finamore, family member — "I think it is terrible. I think that after all the money we put into the Olympics that they should be doing better.

2nd Lt. Timothy Washington, Company E, 2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry, The School Brigade — "I think it shows the true Olympic spirit. We are up there in Canada competing and showing that the competition is greater than winning."

SSgt Fred Robert, B.I.D., 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment — "We're not doing very well. I would like to see a lot more people winning medals. We're up there and we're holding our own. I think we are well represented but we're just not winning for some reason."

Program helps spouses find jobs

By Sharon Reynolds
Bayonet editor

Today, more spouses than ever are seeking employment to make ends meet. But an Army career requires moving every three or four years, making it difficult to find employment. The Family Member Employment Assistance Program, building 35, works with spouses and local organizations to help family members find employment.

Any family member with a valid military identification card and family members of civil service employees are eligible to participate in the program, according to Pat Sneed, program manager.

Sneed recommends that family members make an appointment by calling 545-5340/5176. She explained that during the appointment, a family member will complete a registration card listing his or her qualifications and prior experience. This card will remain in an active file for 90 days and may be reactivated every 90 days. The family member then reviews the "job board," which contains a list of jobs available. Sneed said there are usually 40 to 45 new jobs per month. If the client in interested and qualified for one of the jobs, he or she is given the company's name and address.

Sneed pointed out that it is up to the family member to go to the company and fill out an application and arrange for an interview.

Most of the jobs available are office or production work, according to Sneed, and the bulk are for female spouses. However, there are some jobs available for males. She said FMEAP works with several local companies that notified them of job openings. Also, they coordinate with job services that don't charge fees. And, although they don't hire for civil service job openings, Sneed said they do keep a list of civil service employment opportunities and will provide assistance with filling out an SF 171 and checking on the status of the application.

"We were overwhelmed with the warm response from employers in the area," Sneed said. "Companies sometimes get a reputation that they won't hire military family members. But we have found that most employers are more than happy to employ family members."

FMEAP provides more than the "job board." There are workshops available that can help family members hone their job hunting skills. The workshops cover such topics as self-assessment, interviewing techniques and how to fill out a job application.

Caroline Cenney, a FMEAP volunteer, conducts resume writing workshops about every five weeks and schedules individual appointments for writing resumes.

The FMEAP offers education units through Georgia State University for all of their workshops.

For information about the workshops and to make an appointment to attend, call 545-5340/5176.

Barracks

broken doors, stairwells steps, commodes, showers and hot water heaters were commonplace. The telephone system was also undependable.

"On many occasions, all phones were out in the battalion for three to five days," he said. "These problems and many more have been solved by our move to Sand Hill."

Frizzo said that the most important difference in terms of training was in the credibility of the drill sergeants.

"Now, when a drill sergeant says that we have high standards in the Army and we must look sharp and keep our area clean and neat, the statement is credible," he said. "In Harmony Church, when a drill sergeant made such a statement, I wonder if the trainee really believed it since the area and buildings they were living in told a different story."

Harter said other advantages gained by the move include covered areas for training, the physical training field with lights, and the space available for everything from counseling to weight rooms to laundry facilities.

"The new mess hall looks more like a restaurant," said SSgt. Phillip Albert, a drill sergeant with Company A.

The old barracks in Harmony Church will not remain empty for long. They will be used by the Directorate of Reserve Components, the 29th Infantry Regiment and the Ranger Training Brigade.

For now, the new barracks is known only as building 3425. At the dedication ceremony, the barracks will be named in honor of Pvt. Jimmy Conway, a World War I enlisted soldier of the 58th Infantry Regiment. The ceremony will officially mark a new chapter in the history of the "Patriots."

Check employment agency carefully before signing

By Cpt Ollie M. Mick
Staff Judge Advocate's Office

ASK THE JUDGE

Q: I am new to the area and need to find a part-time job in order to bring in some extra money. I saw an ad for a company that offers to help find you a job and they promise to refund your money if you don't get hired. Is this a good idea?

A: There are many private employment agencies in operation. Some of these offer reliable services, some do not. There are several things which you need to check carefully before you sign any contract or pay any fees.

First, find out who pays for the service, you or the person who hires you. If the payment will be your responsibility, will it have to be paid up front or can it be delayed until you are actually working.

Secondly, read the contract carefully before you sign it. Make sure the contract contains all the promises the agency has made

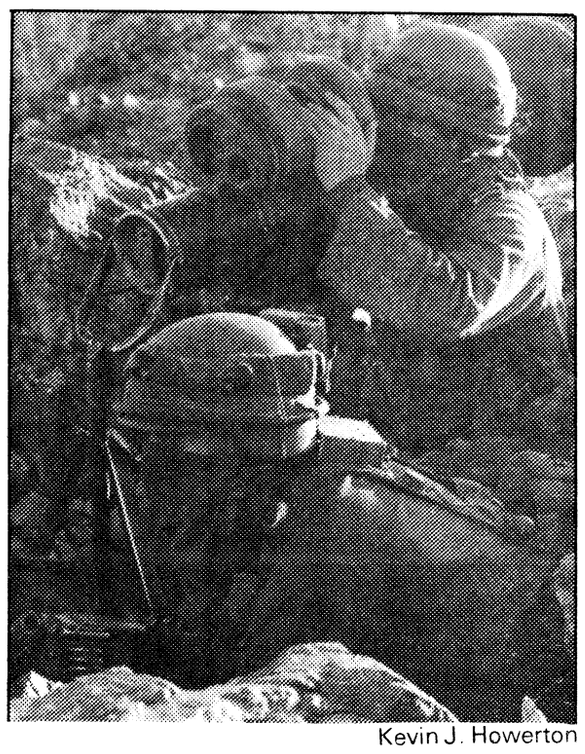
UNIT NEWS

197th Inf. Bde.

By Kevin J. Howerton
197th Infantry Brigade correspondent

What does an Infantry soldier to when he isn't walking? He digs. And in the case of Company D, 2nd Battalion, 18th Infantry, digging isn't always easy.

Company D, along with an attached platoon from Company B, learned the hard way that building defensive positions can be extremely difficult when the terrain is as rocky as the Mojave Desert. The unit was at the National Training Center, Fort Irwin, Calif., to augment the Opposing Force. The OPFOR is a special unit in the Army which is trained in Soviet tactics to provide a realistic opponent for rotating units to train against.



"It was too rocky to really dig in," said PFC William D. Howard, a Dragon anti-tank gunner from Company D. "But we found other ways to conceal ourselves."

"We dug about a foot and hit solid rock," explained Cpl. Todd N. McGregor, also of 2nd platoon, "so we piled up rocks around the position and camouflaged it to look like part of the natural terrain."

The company spent more than a day building fighting positions. Shortly after nightfall, contact with the "enemy" began.

"The OPFOR commander called on the radio and told us there was an enemy listening/observation post on top of the mountain next to us," McGregor said. "I took three other guys with me and went after them. When we started firing, they saw that they were outnumbered and started running. As they went over the hilltop, the OPFOR was on the other side wth an M-60 machine gun and waxed them."

Shortly before sun-up, the blue force armored vehicles began their main assault.

Kevin J. Howerton

Sgt. Joseph C. Sladeski and PFC Mark I. Jones of Co. B, 2nd Bn., 18th Inf., prepare to fire a DRAGON antitank weapon during exercises at the National Training Center. The two were members of the opposing force, a special unit that trains in Soviet fighting tactics and wears Soviet-style uniforms.

"We were well concealed, and they didn't see us until they were right on top of us," said PFC Howard. "When we fired an illumination flare, an M-1 tank stopped about 65 meters away from me, trying to figure out what was going on. By the time he found out my position, I had fired my Dragon, and he was already "dead."

36th Engr. Gp.

By Janet Wood
598 Maint. Co.

Feb. 3 the 598th Maintenance Company prepared to go on an ARTEP.

The alert started at 3:30 a.m. when all was quiet, except for the 598th personnel. They came in, gear in hand, got their weapons and ate their last breakfast in a garrison environment for the next six days.

Once everyone had their weapons, it was down to the shop area to load up and make final preperations to move out for the field site.

The advance party rolled out the gate at 6 a.m. and three other serials followed at 45 minute intervals.

The convoy route was long, muddy at times, and a challenge.

Each serial was fired upon by snipers. The sniper activity put everyone in the right frame of mind about why they started their day so early.

Once arriving at the field site, it was time to set up and guard the area. By this time it had started to rain again, this hampered setting up.

During the entire ARTEP, the soldiers were tested and evaluated in all areas from tactics to technical skill. Each section of the company was tested and evaluated individually, as well as collectively.

No matter what situation the evaluators gave the soldiers, either individually or collectively, the soldiers came out on top.

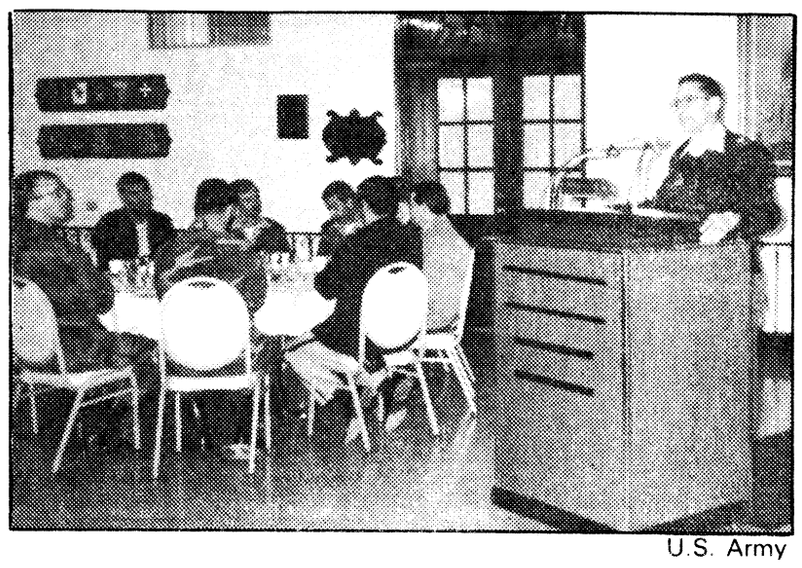
USARSA hosts prayer breakfast

By Jo Ann Stamey
USAIC Chaplain's Office

An International Prayer Breakfast was sponsored by the U.S. Army School of the Americas Feb. 18 at the Fort Benning Officers' Club.



Approximately 90 officers from the USARSA staff and faculty and the entire 1988 Command and General Staff Course from 11 Latin American countries gathered for fellowship and to hear a message about professional military values.

The guest speaker was Col. Jose Feliciano, commander of the 1st Infantry Training Brigade. His message focused on military values and ethics for leaders.

Feliciano listed enduring values in professional ethics as "loyalty to the nation, the Army, and the unit; personal responsibility; and selfless service." "Values that are developed in our soldiers," he said, "are commitment towards his nation, his Army, and his unit," Feliciano said. "This individual value so deeply ingrained will serve the nation's need and, when required, will motivate soldiers to sacrifice their lives in combat."

Col. Miguel Garcia, the USARSA commandant, brought the event to a close by reiterating the importance of maintaining high values and ethics as a leader. He also presented Feliciano with a momento of the occasion.

"This is the first time we've had an International Prayer Breakfast, and it was very successful," said Chaplain (Maj.) George Gonzales, chaplain for USARSA. "We plan to continue this event and also to extend the activity to other groups."

Leave behind negative attitudes if you want to be good Christian

By Philip Touw
The School Brigade chaplain

". . . .One thing I do: forgetting what lies behind and reaching forward to what lies ahead." (Philippian 3:13)

When the apostle Paul wrote those words, he was borrowing language directly from the Olympic games. He had something so important to tell the Greek people of Philippi, that he used an image that every "Olympic-game-loving" Greek would readily understand.

An Olympic runner cannot look to the left or to the right or to the rear during a race. Any distraction could cause the runner to lose valuable seconds and might cost the athlete the race.

Paul is telling the Philippians, and he is telling us, that if we are serious about living a life of faith, we must not look behind us, but that we, like the Olympic runner, must leave the past behind.

I believe that Lent is a time of rededication in our lives. People often "give up something for Lent" as a way of restoring a healthy sense of spirituality. Paul's Olympic image fits very well here, as he encourages us to "give up, or leave behind" things in our lives which hinder our spiritual growth.

But the question remains: what is it that we are called to leave behind? During this Lenten season, I would like to suggest three things that each of us, if we are serious about living a life of faith, need to leave behind.

The first thing that I would suggest we need to leave behind is our negative attitudes about other people.

We must also leave behind our past failures. Every one of us has something that did not work out the way we had planned it. For some of us that has happened often.

We can do one of two things with our past failures. We can dwell on them and expect that any time that we try anything, we will fail. In this case we become experts at failure. Or, we can learn from our past mistakes.

The last thing that we must leave behind is our past sins. Scripture teaches that if we confess our sins, that God is faithful and just and will cleanse us from all of our sins.

But we seem to have a need to continue to carry that excess baggage with us wherever we go. Whenever we choose to feel bad about ourselves, all we have to do is pull out some past sin and begin to beat ourselves with it.

The wonder of atonement tells us that God has dealt with our sins once and for all, and that we are free from the burden of our guilt.

I encourage each of you to allow yourselves to be free from those things which hinder you from running the race of your life.

Peaceful resistance key to success of civil rights movement

By Christopher H. Wisdom
197th Spt Bn chaplain

The civil rights movement under the leadership of the late Dr. Martin Luther King Jr., has changed the course of American history for blacks. The movement's commitment to peace, principle, and prayer has proved instrumental in effecting this change in America.

The civil rights movement has sought social change through peaceful protest. Blacks began nonviolent demonstrations in the 1950s against racial injustice.

Although some were harassed, hurt, and even killed, blacks peacefully resisted segregation until its iron grip was finally loosened.

The modern civil rights movement has succeeded also because it has been a principled movement.

King did not believe in peace at any price. In his very first civil rights speech, he said, "First and foremost we are American citizens. . . .we are not advocating violence. . .the only weapon we have. . .is the weapon of protest. . .and the great glory of American democracy is the right to protest for right."

"In that speech he referred twice to the commands of the Constitution and once to the Supreme Court's decision upholding equal rights for blacks. But the movement's message came from a higher source even than the Constitution.

Christian love and justice are two principles that King held forth as the foundation for their actions. This unswerving commitment to the principles of unquenchable love and uncompromising justice has also advanced the cause of the Civil Rights Movement.

One other ingredient in the Civil Rights movement's success has been its prayerfulness. When in the 1950's and 60's black leaders' lives and families were threatened, they prayed. When they were shot at and their homes were bombed, they prayed. And when they were arrested and put into jail, they prayed.

It is through prayer that many blacks found the strength to continue the struggle for their civil rights. And it certainly appears that some of their prayers have been answered. For since the 1950's many Americans have joined in the push for racial justice.

Program expands reenlistment options

Army News Service

Beginning March 1, as part of a test that runs through July 30, soldiers will have the opportunity to take advantage of new reenlistment options.

Here is a breakdown of the new options.

Beginning March 1, soldiers who elect to reenlist for an Army service school for retraining, will be given the opportunity to select their next duty assignments before reenlisting, provided they reenlist for six years.

Soldiers may either select a stateside assignment of choice or an overseas area assignment of choice based on new military occupational speciality, according to Army Personnel officials.

Soldiers who elect to reenlist for current station stabilization of 12 months or more may elect a choice of assignment following the completion of the stabilization. This option carries with it a five-year reenlistment for soldiers who choose a 12-month stabilization. A six-year reenlistment will be required of soldiers overseas who choose a stabilization period of more than 12 months and up to 18 months. According to officials, soldiers in the United States are limited to a maximum of 12 months stabilization with this option.

For those soldiers electing to reenlist for an assignment in a short-tour area such as Korea, and who reenlist for five years, will be able to select their new stateside duty station upon completion of the tour, say officials.

Beginning March 1, first term soldiers who enlisted for two years, may elect to reenlist for three, four, five or six years if they elect to reenlist for one of the options listed above.

On Dec. 29, 1987, other reenlist changes went into affect. One of the changes applies to midcareer soldiers who are within eight months of ETS and have received CAP III assignment instructions. These soldiers may request deletion from this assignment provided -- they agree to reenlist for six years with a minimum stabilization of 12 months if stateside and 24 months if overseas; and the soldier serves in a short or balanced MOS.

Another change involves soldiers overseas. These soldiers may elect stabilization in monthly increments of between 12 and 24 months, the officials say.

Some reenlistment options now carry longer reenlistment period requirements. Soldiers reenlisting for retraining at an Army service school that are more than eight weeks must now reenlist for a minimum of four years.

Soldiers reenlisting for an assignment to a long-tour overseas area must reenlist for five years or more. Those who elect an assignment to a short-tour area must reenlist for a minimum of four years.

Taoy wins Armed Forces Championship

Kevin J. Howerton

Sgt. Miguel V. Taoy Jr. of HHC, 197th Spt. Bn. struggles to bench press 352.5 pounds in the Armed Forces National Championship. Taoy won the 148-pound class at the meet held at El Torro Marine Corps Air Station, Santa Anna, Calif.

Grabs title with 1,454.5-pound total

By Kevin J. Howerton
197th Infantry Brigade correspondent

It was only the second time that Sgt. Miguel V. Taoy Jr. had competed in a powerlifting meet on American soil. But the soldier from Headquarters Company, 197th Support Battalion, beat far more seasoned competitors to become the 1988 Armed Forces National Powerlifting Champion in the 148-pound class.

"This is my first national meet, a really prestigious meet," said Taoy. "The judging here is as tough as any other national meet, maybe even more strict.

The 29-year-old native of Hawaii, who first started lifting two years ago, appeared to completely psyche himself up before each lift in the meet.

At times, Taoy even banged his head against the weight bar or sniffed ammonia capsules just before a lift.

"I worked myself into a rage," explained Taoy. "I put everything I had, my body, my mind and soul into concentrating on the bar.

The competition was held at the El Torro Marine Crops Air Station, Santa Anna, Calif. The best powerlifters from the Army, Air Force, Navy and Marine Crops were on hand to try for the championship.

Maj. Bruce E. Takala, the coach for the Army Powerlifting Team, was enthusiastic about Taoy's win.

"His potential is unlimited," Takala commented after the meet. "We'll be taking him to the National Championships as part of the Armed Services Team, and I expect him to be very competitive there."

Taoy lifted 573 pounds in the squat lift, 352.5 pounds in the bench press, and 529 pounds in the dead lift for a total weight of 1,454.5 pounds. This was 18 pounds more than his nearest competitor.

"I just did all I could do, and as it turns out, my extra 18 pounds was what it took to win the competition."

The Marine Corps powerlifting team won the overall competition. The Army team took second place.

The next meet for Taoy will be the Junior National Powerlifting Championships to be held in Dallas, Texas, early in June.

Black 24th Infantry Regiment leaves mark at Fort Benning

By Richard D. Hopkins
197th Infantry Brigade

Recently while loafing in the Post library, I was actually doing research for a different project, when I stumbled across some facts about black soldiers which seemed appropriate to share during this time, Black History Month.

It is more or less common knowledge that the "old" Regular Army included four regiments of black troops.

Originally, when Congress put the Army on a peacetime footing after the Civil War, six black regiments were authorized, the 9th and 10th Cavalry and the 38th, 39th, 40th and 41st Infantry.

When the Army reorganized in 1869, the four infantry regiments were consolidated into two, the 24th and 25th.

The two cavalry regiment, the 9th and 10th, and the two infantry regiments, the 24th and 25th, composed entirely of black enlisted professionals, were to remain on continuous service until the era of the segregated Army came to an end with Army Special Regulation 600-629-1 in 1950.

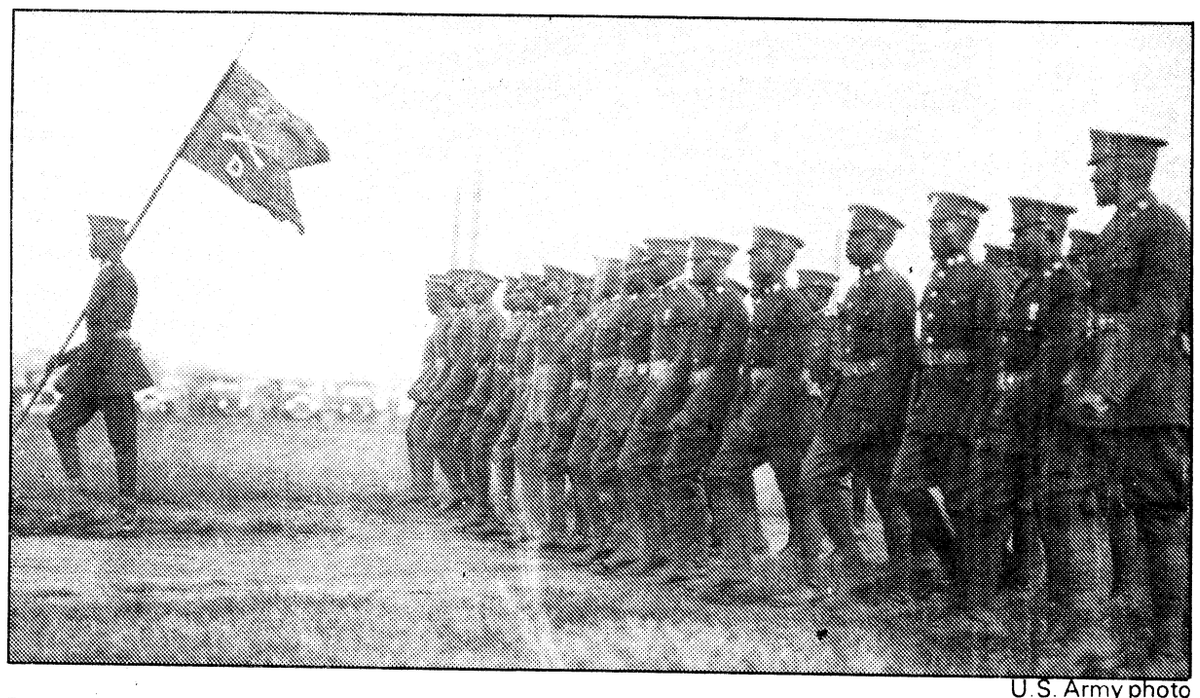
Units acquire historical associations with the places in which they are stationed. The two black cavalry regiments left marks of their passing on western posts like Fort Riley, Kan. and Fort Sill, Okla.

The 24th Infantry Regiment was instrumental in the early history of a place then called Camp Benning.

After successful service against the Comanche, the Spanish in Cuba, the Phillipine insurgents and with General Pershing in Mexico, the 24th Infantry, like the other black regulars, sat out World War I pulling garrison duty along the Mexican border.

In December of 1921, the regiment was ordered to Camp Benning, Ga., its 3rd Battalion being formed from the black soldiers already stationed on the post. The full regiment arrived in October of 1922.

Camp Benning had recently been designated not only as a permanent Army installation but also as the new permanent home of the Infantry School.



In those days Army posts were built by soldiers, and the 24th Infantry was to provide the labor force to construct the new fort.

The regiment spent nearly 20 years on Fort Benning. During that time most of what is now main post was constructed.

Permanent fixtures easily recognized today, and built by the black soldiers include Gowdy Field and Doughboy Memorial Stadium.

The regiment's time at Benning saw little application of the normal emphasis on training expected in an infantry unit. During the 1920s the soldiers did not even have rifles.

This changed only after the post commandant, Brig. Gen. Edgar T. Collins, stumbled across a detachment from the regiment training in the use of rifles during a break in a work detail. These regular soldiers were practicing their art with sticks.

The 24th Infantry left Fort Benning bound for the South Pacific in April of 1942. There it reestablished its reputaion as a fighting force at places like Saipan.

The regiment then went to Korea as part of the 25th Infantry Division, the second American unit committed to that struggle.

The end of segregation found the regiment in combat. It was pulled off the line on Sept. 29, 1951, and inactivated two days later.

With its demise, the last of the black fighting regiments left the service of the nation.

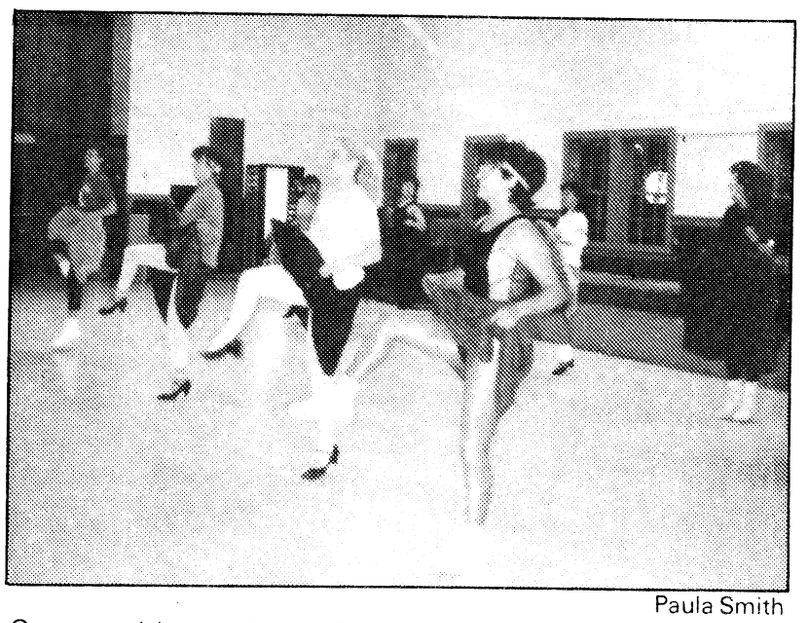
Officers Wives' Club hosts Showboat Night

By Paula Smith
Officers' Wives' Club

Ever have a hankering to be riverboat gambler? This could be your chance. The Fort Benning Officers' Club will be transformed into an 1880's style Mississippi riverboat during Showboat Night March 5.

The Officers Wives' Club sponsored event is an annual occurrence here at Fort Benning and is an effort to capture the elegant ambience of the luxury riverboats that plied the Mississippi during the period following the Civil War.

Entertainment for the evening will include casino style gambling, can-can girls, the Benning Belles and much more.



The price of admission includes a table stake of $5,000 in Showboat money and a chance at the door prizes.

You can gamble the night away at the tables playing your favorite games of chance and then spend your winnings at a country store set up specially to handle the "riverboat trade."

The "Showboat" leaves the Main Post Officers' Club "pier" at 7 p.m. March 5 and returns at 1 a.m.

Advance tickets are available from OWC members for $5 and will be available for $6 at the "pier."

So, take advantage of what promises to be a great night of fun and entertainment with a "Cruise on the Showboat."

Changing heater filters, simple task, saves energy

By Becky Ray
Energy Management Branch

Changing a heater filter is a simple task, but it is very important to the comfort of building occupants and to the efficiency of the heater.

In cold weather, the filter of a heating unit prevents dust and lint from being charred in the unit's heat exchanger.

Without the filter, these charred particles would be blown along with the warm air into rooms, forming a layer of soot on furniture and walls.

A dirty filter causes the heating unit to work harder to force air through the filter and into the building. This wastes energy and causes excessive wear to the heater.

In general, heater filters should be changed once a month in winter, or more often if they become dirty more quickly.

Disposable filters for family housing units and most other buildings on post are issued at the Self Help Center, building 385 on Vibbert Avenue.

Filters come in a wide range of sizes, so it is important to know the correct measurements for the filter before going to Self Help.

The size of a disposable filter will usually be marked on the side of the filter. If the size cannot be found on the filter itself, bring the filter to the Self Help Center for replacement.

Some family housing units have heat pumps in which the filter is permanent. Occupants should wash these as they become dirty, usually at least once a month. These filters should be washed carefully by hand in warm water with a mild detergent, as they tear easily.

Troop units must submit a DA Form 4283 for replacement filters. Because there are as many as six or seven different sizes of heater filters used in some buildings, confusion can easily arise in obtaining the right number of each size.

Close inspection of each filter location and accurate measurements eliminate unnecessary confusion and delays.

Keeping clean filters in heating units requires little time or effort. It's a simple way to help keep heaters running cleanly and efficiently.

Tax Reform Act repeals many provisions of tax law

American Forces Press Service

The Tax Reform Act of 1986 repealed many familiar provisions of tax law. Some of the more important are listed below:

Personal Exemptions for Dependents — If an individual qualifies to be claimed as a dependent on another person's income tax return, the dependent may not claim a personal exemption on his or her own return. This rule took effect in tax year 1987.

Two-Earner Deduction — There will no longer be a special adjustment to income when both the husband and wife have earned income, effective for 1987.

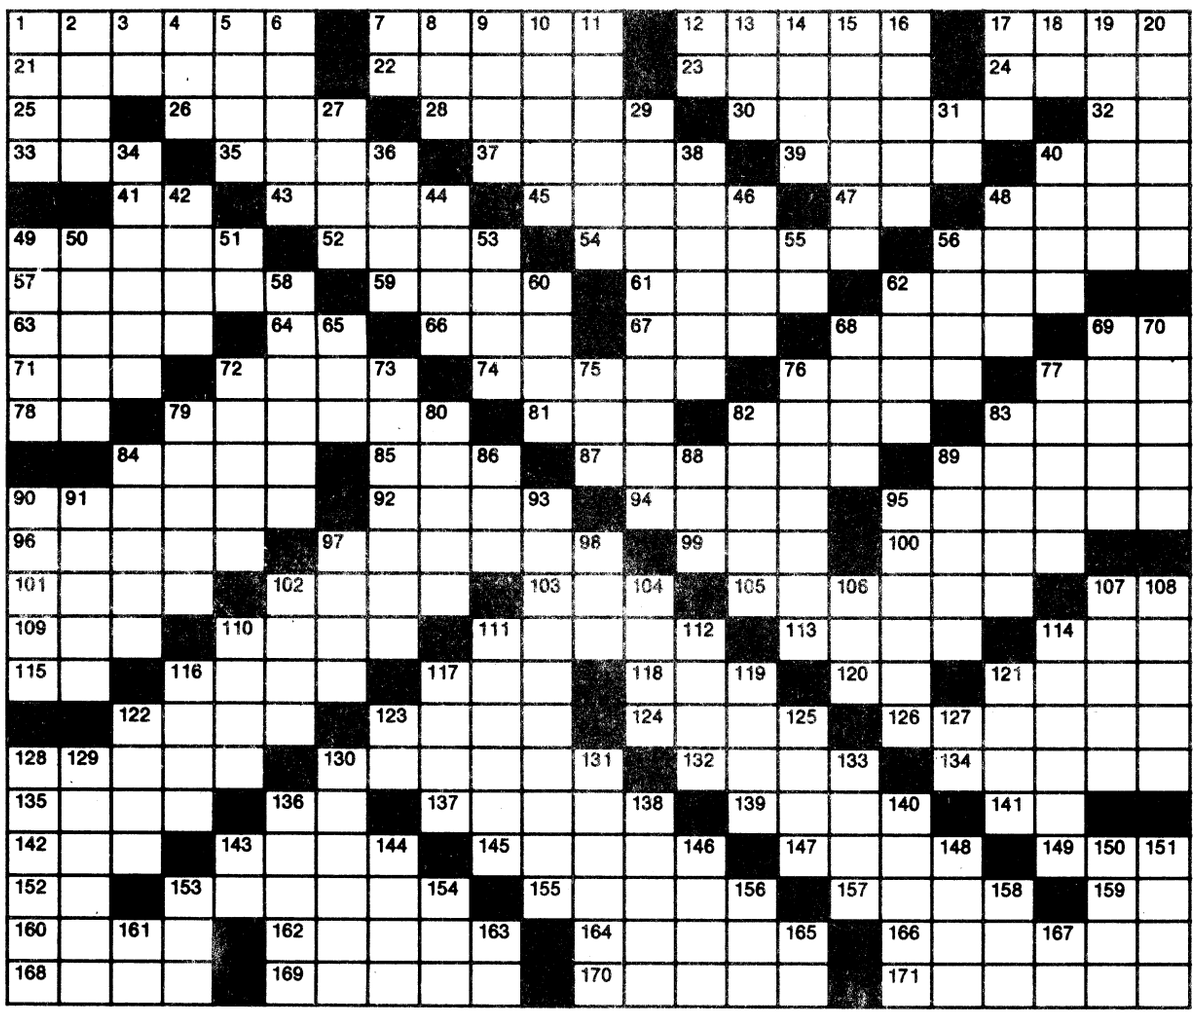
Income Averaging — Income averaging is repealed, effective for 1987.

Unemployment Compensation — The former limited exclusion has been repealed. All unemployment compensation benefits are included as gross income, beginning in 1987.

Charitable Deduction for Non-Itemizers — Beginning in 1987, the charitable deduction for persons who don't itemize their deductions is terminated.

State and Local Sales Taxes — The itemized deduction for state and local sales taxes is repealed, beginning in 1987. The deductions for state and local income, real estate and personal property taxes are retained.

Dividend Exclusion — The $100 dividend exclusion for individuals ($200 for a joint return) is repealed, beginning with tax year 1987.



Political Contributions Credit — The tax credit for political contributions is repealed, beginning in 1987.

Investment Tax Credit — With certain exceptions, the new tax law repeals the regular investment tax credit for property placed in service after Dec. 31, 1985.

Personal Exemptions for Age and Blindness — Starting in tax year 1987, there is no longer an additional personal exemption for blindness or age. However, an individual who is 65 or older or blind may be entitled to a higher standard deduction.

Beware of 'Sniffle Zone' during marathon

By J.M. Henderson
Martin Army Community Hospital

This is the seventh is a series of articles designed to prepare the average runner to complete the Fifth Annual Infantry Marathon on March 5.

Many times during ones life there are episodes of some certain ill-feeling and desparity that would make a lesser person cave in. But, we keep a stiff upper lip and trundle through toward brighter days.

Would you believe that endurance athletics are mirrors of life? There are those people who have no direction in their lives, go many directions with no goals and never complete anything. For these people, once adversity is met they back off or shrink away from the challenge.

Then comes the sour grapes, "I really didn't want it anyway," weakly rationalizing and leaving part of their spirit along their life's highway.

These folks never got out of the "Sniffle Zone."

All through history, great Americans have approached the hard reality of the sniffle zone, then they bore through it to victory of accomplishment.

Whether it was the bitterly cold travail of a Valley Forge winter; digging trenches around Petersburg during a hot, humid summer; crawling through the thicket of Argonne Forest; scaling the cliffs along Omaha Beach, staggering through a Korean snow or a sweltering Vietnamese jungle, the sniffle zones have been conquered.

One airborne commander described it as a "vapor lock in the cranial cavity." He's correct of course. "It" is in your head, quit or continue, drive on or pack it in.

During the marathon, you will think "this is ridiculous" when you're at 10 or 15 miles. Then at 18 or 10 mile it's even worse. "I didn't think it would be this bad! I don't know what to do! I'm desparate! I want to quit!"

Sure you want to stop; some people may not complete this very formidable, arduous course. But under no circumstances, even though you don't cross the finish line, do not quit inside your mind.

If you decide that discretion is the better part of valour and you must stop short of victory, then do an "after-action report". Decide where you went wrong and return for number six in '89.

If you approach this sniffle zone three-quarters of the way through, then try to say to yourself, "I know what this is and I'm mentally tougher. This feeling will pass (eventually) but this challenge will never come by again. Reach for it! Grab it! This is THE MARATHON! Those prelimary miles, just fluff!

"That which does not destroy you makes you stronger," thus spoke Zarathustra or Nietsche. Maybe it was Larry Nietsche who lived in the brown two-story down the street. He ran cross country for Slippery Rock U. and went on to be a prolific marathoner in Northwestern Pennsylvania.

Don't get caught in the sniffle zone.

See you on the road.

Women's leagues lacking unit support, recognition

By Sally Roberts
197th Infantry Brigade correspondent

Unit sports activities thrive on participation and support from the units. While some programs receive plenty of participation and support, others go unnoticed, much to the disappointment of those who want to participate.

Recently, the USAIC Women's Basketball League finished up a very short season.

Although eight teams were organized, at the start of the season in January, the season ended with only two active teams.

Sports directors attempted to keep the ball rolling by entering the active teams in local tournaments and games, but the season fell short of the player's expectations.

"The women's leagues really need some recognition," said Tracy Whitley, coach of one of the active women's basketball teams. "It's easier to get support for the men's leagues, but most people don't hear anything about the women's teams.

"Unit support really means a lot," said Mr. Will Dunham, from Fort Benning Physical Activities Office. "We can provide the opportunities to play and we encourage teams to come forward and register for the leagues."

Durham explained that the next women's sports league is volleyball, scheduled to begin March 1.

"Our goal is to fill a team from each major command on Post," Dunham said. "Some units may be able to fill more than one team. The number of teams that register will determine the number of games and the length of the season."

To participate in the volleyball league, organize a team and register by calling the Sports Activities Office at Doughboy Stadium, 545-5777/7519.

197th Inf Bde Champions named

By Sally Roberts
197th Inf. Bde. correspondent

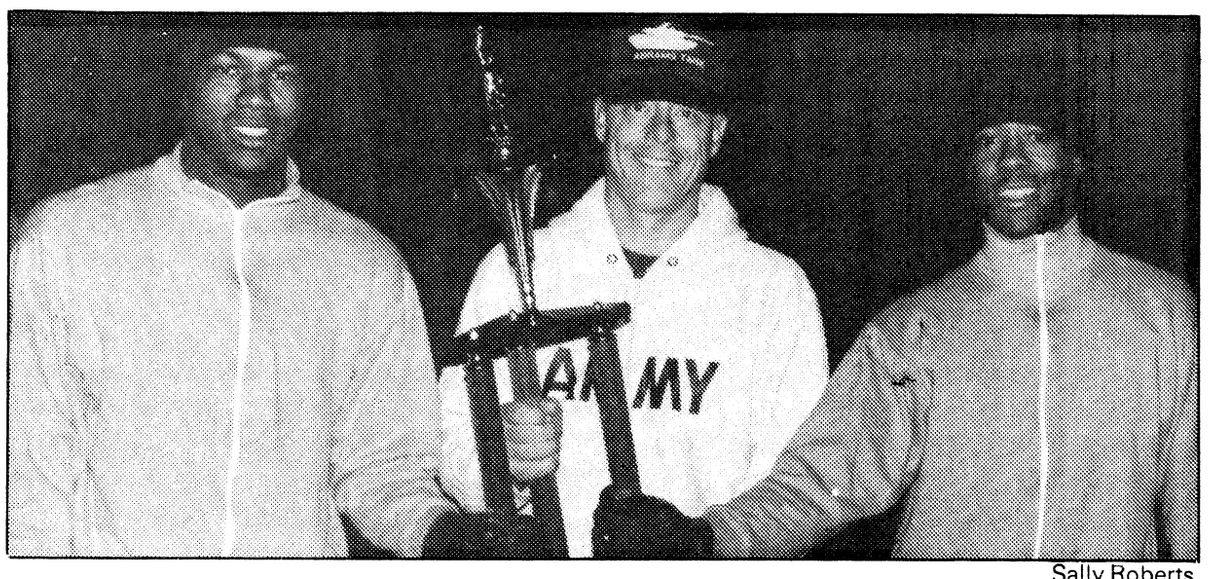
The champions of the second season of the 197th Infantry Brigade Basketball League are a hard-chargin' team from HHC, 197th Support Battalion.

The Spt. Bn. team snatched the championship away from the "Panthers" of HHC, 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor, beating the Panthers 59-53.

"Guard, Eric Reed, got the Spt. Bn. team fired up early in the game by sinking two outside shots for a quick six points," said the winning coach, SSgt. Jimmy Davis. "Sammy Chamberlain, (Spt. Bn. forward), was cold in the first half but he pulled through in the second half."

Chamberlain led the champion team in scoring with 21 points and Reed dropped in 10 points.

"The score was close the whole time," Davis added. "We had some trouble near the end of the game with technical fouls, but forward, Ronald Buskey made a three-point shot in the last few minutes and that was a key score."



Davis added that guard, Mitchell Phillips played good defense for the Spt. Bn. team and took several key steals.

Forward, Henry Davis, added 14 points to the final score.

Top scorers for the Panthers were: forward, Alvin Daniels with 16 points, center, Kenneth Smith with 12 points, and forward, Darryl Powell with 7 points.

"I think the other team took us too lightly during the first part of the game," Davis added. "All the guys played good ball and winning this championship shows that the unit has a lot of spirit."

The Spt. Bn. team, along with five other Brigade teams, are representing 197th Infantry Brigade in the Fort Benning tournament that began Thursday.

Michael Zengel wins Mountain Ranger Run

Camp Frank D. Merrill

The First Annual Mountain Ranger Run was conducted Feb. 14 on the Campus of North Georgia College, Dahlonega, Ga.

The overall winner in the five-mile race was Michael Zengel of Dunwoody, Ga.

Zengel took the lead one and a half miles into the extremely challenging course.

He built on his lead through the hilly second, third, and fourth miles and finished a full minute ahead of the second place runner, SSgt. William Thetford, B Co., 5th Ranger Training Battalion.

Thetford held off a strong challenge from Clint Ross, Riverside Military Academy, Gainesville, Ga. who fisnished in third place.

The women's overall winner, Elaine Carter of Lawrenceville, Ga., completed the run with a comfortable lead over the second place finisher Leigh Jones of Gainsville.

The third place women's finisher was Jolande Diderich of Dahlonega.

The event, which consisted of a five-mile race preceded by a one mile Fun Run, was sponsored by the 5th Ranger Training Battalion (RTB), Camp Frank D. Merrill.

The weather at race time was ideal for running and the 190 entrants were provided excellent support before, during and after the race by 55 race volunteers from the 5th Ranger Training Battalion and the North Georgia College ROTC Department.

Both runs were executed in an almost flawless manner and the event was an unqualified success.

The race was made possible through the generous support of the Mariah Development Company and Pepsi Cola of Gainesville, Ga.

All proceeds will benefit the residents of the Gold City Convalescent Center.

Trophies were awarded to the first three male and female finishers and to the top three in eight male age groups and five female age groups.

Personnel assigned to the 5th Ranger Training Battalion received throphies in the two most competitive male age groups. SSgt. Keith Conner finished in second place and SFC Charles Wood finished third in the "25-29" age group.

SFC Mark Stout finished third in the 30-34 age group.

Other significant achievements were registed by family members of Ranger Training Brigade Personnel. Beth Mace, daughter of Col. Emory Mace, Commander of the Ranger Training Brigade, finished second in the women's "19 and under" age group.

Doris Blackwell, daughter of Capt. Billy Blackwell, B Co. 5th Ranger Training Battalion, finished third in the same age group.

Adam Mattison age 9, son of SFC Joe Mattison, A Co., 5th Ranger Training Battalion, was the youngest 5-mile finisher.

Tentative plans are already being made for the 1989 Mountain Ranger Run, but a date has not been selected.

Vehicle registration continues

By Dennis E. Brower
Staff Judge Advocate

Soldiers and dependents registering their vehicles in Georgia must take special care to insure that they do so properly and in a timely manner.

Both Muscogee and Chattahoochee Counties are using the staggered system again this year. Last names beginning with A-D should have already registered in January and E-K should have done so in February. Last names ending in L-R must register in March and S-Z in April.

If registration is not done during these periods, a late fee of $15 can be added to each registration.

Registration costs $8 per vehicle. Both counties discourage out-of-town checks, so it is advisable to take the proper amount of cash.

If a vehicle was already registered in Muscogee or Chattahoochee County, then the owner should receive a pre-printed registration form in the mail. When the form is received in the mail, it can be mailed to the registrar with an additional $1 for mailing fees. The new registration will then be returned in the mail. It is strongly suggested that the mail-in procedures be used.

If you registered by mail in the past, but have not received the forms in the mail, do not wait beyond the time limit for your name. You must make an effort to find out why you have not received the forms in the mail or you may end up being late and paying the late charges.

If mail-in procedures are used, insure that the directions are followed and enclose a Soldiers' and Sailors' Civil Relief Act Affidavit. This form can be obtained from the Legal Assistance Office and must be signed by an officer who can attest to the residency of the soldier. This will exempt non-resident soldiers from paying the state ad valorem tax on their vehicle.

If the vehicle is in the spouse's name, or if it is leased, the exemption cannot be applied.

The soldier must register in the proper county. If the soldier lives in Columbus, then registration is in Muscogee County. All residents and units who live north of the Upatoi Creek are located in Muscogee County. This includes all units in Sand Hill and all residents of McGraw Manor, Custer Terrace, Upatoi Terrace, Battle Park and Old Officer Capehart. All other Fort Benning residents and units are located in Chattahoochee County.

To register the vehicle, the soldier must bring the previous registration, or the pre-printed form received in the mail, proof of insurance, Soldiers' and Sailors' Affidavit and a copy of the latest LES.

If the vehicle was never registered before, then the soldier should take a copy of the title, if he has one in his possession.

For Muscogee County, the place to register is in the Government Center. The Center is located between 1st and 2nd Avenues and 9th and 10th Streets; 571-4796/4800.

A small office is also located in the Columbus Square Mall.

For Chattahoochee County, registration is at the Cusseta City Hall. From Fort Benning, take Highway 27/280 south approximately 10 miles, turn left onto Highway 55, drive into Cusseta and go four or five blocks to the City Hall on the left. The Chattahoochee County office is closed between 12 and 1 p.m. Their phone is 989-3897.

Every dog has his day

SFC Geronimo, a boxer, retired recently with full honors at a ceremony held just for him.

His retirement marks the end of a career as official mascot for Company C, 1st Battalion, 507th Parachute Infantry Regiment.

Geronimo was assigned to the company on June 11, 1985.

According to Capt. Dave Johnson, company commander when the dog signed in for his tour of duty, the dog was donated by Nanci and Stan Kenner of Ashville, N. C., after they heard the company was searching for a quality dog to be its mascot.

And what a quality dog he has been. Johnson estimates that Geronimo has led 360 company runs, which total approximately 21,000 students.

Geronimo was awarded an Army Achievement Medal and a one way ticket to sunny Florida where he plans to sip lemonade while sunning on the beach.

Baggett chosen for Gribble award

USAIC Public Affairs Office

John L. Baggett has been selected to receive the Army-wide award for his performance as a DEH manager.

Baggett, 49, will travel to Washington, D.C., later this month to pick up the William T. Gribble Jr. Award because of his selection as Directorate of Engineering and Housing Executive of the Year.

He was selected out of management professionals in DEHs throughout the Army, including civilians and military engineers. The news of his selection came from Lt. Gen. E. R. Heilberg III, chief of engineers at the Department of the Army.

A graduate of Boston Technical Institute, Baggett earned his degree in mechanical engineering from the Georgia Institute of Technology.

After serving two years in the Army, he went to work at Fort Benning in June 1965.

During his career, he worked first as a mechanical engineer, then became chief, Engineering and Services Branch, DEH, a position he held for six years.

From May 1980 to May 1985, he held the position of chief, Engineering Division, DEH. He was named to his current position of deputy director of Engineering and Housing in May 1985.

He is a registered Professional Engineer in the state of Georgia, and a member of the National Society of Professional Engineers, the Georgia Society of Professional Engineers, the Society of American Military Engineers, the Fort Benning Management Association and the American Society of Military Comptrollers.

Baggett was named the engineer of the year in 1982 by the Columbus Chapter of the Georgia Society of Professional Engineers. He received the Commander's Award for Civilian Service in November 1986.

Baggett is married to the former Carolyn Chastain and they have one daughter.

His hobbies include coin collecting, traveling, sports and reading.

Baggett said that the news took him by surprise and that he is honored to be selected. The award presentation will take place March 24.

Special Forces selection board to convene

Military Personnel Center

A U.S. Total Army Personnel Agency board will convene in June to consider applications from eligible officers for selection for Special Forces training and rebranching. Those selected will fill school seats in late fiscal year 1989 and fiscal year 1990, TAPA officials said.

Special Forces is a nonaccession branch that is open to male officers from the Army's basic branches. The branch is now recruiting 130 officers from year group 1985.

However, the June board will also consider applications from officers in year groups 1982, 83 and 84. Special Forces still has a limited number of openings for these year groups.

Officers will not be approved for Special Forces training unless they are captains or have been selected for promotion to captain. All Other-Than-Regular Army officers must have been approved for retention in the Army in a Conditional Voluntary Indefinite status.

Interested officers in year group 1985 whose records will go before the March 1988 Captain/Conditional Voluntary Indefinite Selection Board should apply for Special Forces training now so the June selection board can convene right after publication of the results of the Captain/CVI board.

Eligible officers who want to volunteer for Special Forces training and rebranching must get their applications to TAPA by May 20. Submit applications on DA Form 4187, Request for Personnel Action, to HQDA, USTAPA, attn: DAPC-OPB-SF, 200 Stovall St., Alexandria, VA 22332-0411.

Special Forces Branch is mailing information pamphlets to year group 1985 officers this month. They can get more information from Officer Ranks Personnel Update, issue number 11, DA PAM 600-3, chapter 18, pages 35-36.

For questions or to get an application packet, contact Maj. Charles C. Paxton, autovon 221-3169/8243.

ACS hosts open house today

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Culminating a seven-week campaign to educate the Fort Benning community about its role of helping soldiers and family members, Army Community Service will host an Open House today in Soldiers' Plaza.

Visitors can meet the staff and volunteers who work throughout the year, bringing people with needs together with solutions to their situation.

Recently, the staff selected a new theme for its office -- ACS: Where people and solutions come together -- which highlights the role that ACS now plays in the Army of the 1980s.

"We felt that these words gave a better picture a what we do to help the soldiers and family members of Fort Benning," says Carla Cary, director of ACS.

"Over the years, we have become an agency that teaches those in need how to help themselves," she added. " We re a lot more than just the "Lending Closet."

Pat Sneed, who played a key role in establishing the new theme and is manager of the Family Member Employment Assistance Program, said that this was a great way to wrap up the campaign. "We have worked so hard to tell our story to the post and this is just way our way of visiting with the community," she said.

The Open House, 2-4 p.m., will be in building 2634 at Soldiers' Plaza. There will be refreshments and door prizes.

Retired Maj. Gen. Mary E. Clarke to speak at luncheon

She retired from active duty in October 1981 and now resides in Jacksonville, Ala.

She was appointed to the Defense Advisory Committee on Women in the Services in 1984 and served as vice-chairperson in 1985 and 1986.

OPINION

Smoking takes its toll sooner than you think

Army News Service

Almost everyone knows that smoking cigarettes and using other tobacco products endangers health. Several different messages from the nation's surgeon general appear on tobacco products'packages. They warn smokers about the various health hazards.

Even as serious and fatal as emphysema and lung cancer sound, most smokers resist thinking ahead 10 or 20 years. What cigarette smoking does to you today, however, should extend your interest, even for the non-smoker.

For example, did you know that:

- Studies show that smokers have more recurrent upper respiratory infections than non-smokers.
- When smokers get colds or the flu, they seem to have a tougher time getting well.
- Non-smokers out-perform their smoking buddies in physical exercise. This includes situps, push-ups and the 2-mile run.
- Smoking contracts blood vessels, restricting the flow of oxygen-rich blood to critical parts of the body. This condition impairs performance.
- Risk of cold-weather injuries, such as hypothermia, is greater among smokers.
- Smoking causes decreased eye-hand coordination, as well as reduced night vision.

A company commander checked this out by conducting a "tracking" exercise for five of his dragon gunners who smoked.

The gunners did not smoke a cigarette for over an hour before their first go-around. Before the second attempt, each smoked just one cigarette. All five scores on the second round worsened. This caused some of the soldiers to think seriously about how cigarette smoking affected their job performance.

Over the years, many veterans have said, "We whipped the enemy on the battlefield, where everybody was smoking." Unfortunately, knowledge on health-versus-readiness for those who smoked was unavailable 20 years ago.

Today, however, it's a different story. The facts speak for themselves. Smokers have taken on a new enemy -- cigarettes. The battlefield no longer exists thousands of miles away. Today's enemy lurks much closer, and hits a lot closer to home.

EDITOR'S ENOTE: One of the Army's efforts to control smoking within its ranks has to do with training. Smoking during basic combat training or one-station unit training is prohibited, and trainers themselves are urged to refrain from smoking in the presence of trainees.

Renting to own can cost more than arm and leg

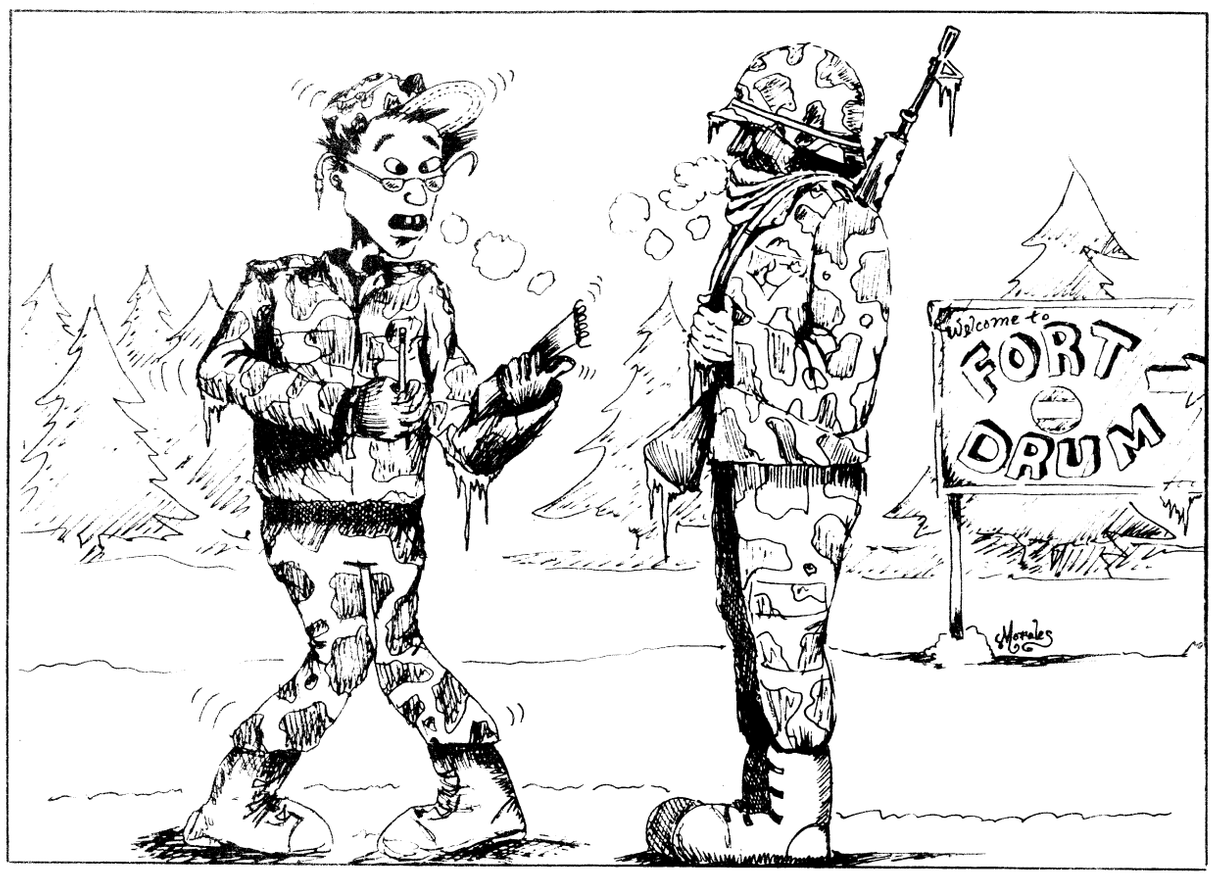
By Evelyn D. Harris
American Forces Information Service

Sgt. Joe Smith had just gotten married. Since he and his wife needed everything, they jumped at the following ad:

"Why wait for the good life: Rent to buy this $400 TV — only $18 a week."

Smith went to the store, liked the looks of the TV, and was ready to sign the contract when he decided to stop and read the fine print. What he read made him change his mind.

The set would not be his until he'd paid the $18 for 78 weeks — adding up to $1,004 for a $400 item.



Smith took his credit card to the PX and charged a set. Even though his card carries an interest rate of 18 percent, he can pay $36 a month for the set and own it in a year. He'll pay $432 for a $400 set, but that's a lot better than $1,004.

If he had waited, he could have gotten it for even less. If he saved $18 a week, he'd have $400 in less than six months. Saving $18 a week may sound difficult, but it's easier than paying $604 more of your hard-earned money for the set than it should cost.

Occasionally, renting an item you rarerly need — such as a video camera to record your baby's first birthday or a machine to clean your carpet — is smart. But if you're thinking of renting something you want to own, think again.

Snively freezes on guard duty

By Clyde Snively
USAIC Public Affairs Office

It was 32 degees below zero. A balmy February day for Fort Drum since the wind wasn't blowing.

I was on a company FTX and it was my turn to stand watch. This meant leaving the cozy confines of our igloo to stomp around in two feet of snow, trying to stay warm while staring at nothing but whiteness.

I was busy knocking icicles off from under my nose when I spotted a cucvee plowing through the drifts. Crouching into my best infantryman crouch, I laid in wait for my big chance to finally use the challenge and see if anyone knew the password.

A heavily bundled soldier finally stumbled out of the vehicle and headed in the direction of our igloo.

"Halt, who goes ther," I challenged, popping out from behind my snow drift.

"Sentinel reporter," a female voice answered.

"Graft," I said.

"Uhn," was the perplexed reply.

"You're supposed to tell me the password," I said gruffly.

"Reporters don't need to know that stuff, see my PAO armband, we're exempt," she said.

"I'll have to check with my NCO about that," I said, "wait there."

"If I wait here, I'll freeze," the reporter said through chattering teeth. "All I want to do is my 'man-on-the-street' interview and get the heck out of here."

"Oh, all right," I said and led her into the igloo.

Pulling her camera out from under her parka, a note pad out from deep inside a pocket, she let the camera adjust to the temperature change while asking incisive questions like, "Do you find this training to be challenging?"

I watched as she took notes, took the pictures, then jumped back into the cucvee which I noted she'd left running so it would be toasty warm, for the trip back to her warm office where she'd write her column without fear of frostbite.

It was then I decided that I too, could be a reporter and that's how I finally ended up here a year later.

The reason I tell you this, is last week I found myself yearning for the good old days of the Infantry (circa 1987). Last week we had to put up with more than I'd ever faced on any field problem.

First there were the phones. Couldn't get an off post line. Want to call someone, you either take a pocket full of quarters downstairs to the commerical phones, or you call a friend by Autovon, ask him to call your number and ask your number to call you.

I think the disconnect had something to do with improving the system. Like now, to call long distance, you dial 771 as always, only under the new improved system, to call long distance in Georgia, you need to go through the operator with a control number.

On top of all those worries, they dropped a new software packet, called Display Write, on us.

Public Affairs doesn't have computers, but at least we'll be ready when we do get them. However, I've heard rumblings about the complexity of the system — like no one else on campus seems to be using them, no one is offering courses on how to use them, although we still teach other systems which are supposed to be superceded by Display Write, and finally, I haven't met anyone who knows how to hook it up to a non-IBM printer.

Finally, there's the constant harassment of the BDUs. Get them too crisp and sharp and people accuse you of starching them — a definite no-no. Not crisp and sharp enough and you're accused of being a rag-a-muffin.

Yep, next time it gets to 30 degrees below zero, I think I just might go back to the Infantry.

SDI more than animated space lasers

By Tom Joyce
American Forces Information Service

Each time a network news program airs a story on the Strategic Defense Initiative, viewers are treated to an animated system of space-based lasers tracking and destroying Soviet ballistic missiles.

But much more must be done on President Ronald Reagans's research program before that animation turns into reality. A strategic defense system of this magnitude couldn't possibly be deployed all at once, say the experts.

However, research on the overall program has yielded certain defensive technologies that could provide increments of protection from ballistic missile attack. This approach to strategic defense is know as phased, or incremental, deployment.

"The concept of phased deployment addresses the question of how to deploy strategic defenses in the event of deployment decision is made in the future," said Lt. Col. Ed Carlson, assistant director for engineering and support with the Strategic Defense Initiative Organization. "It does not constitute a decision to deploy. Such a decision cannot be made now."

Carlson stressed that phased deployment is not early deployment. "An extraordinary amount of research is being done in conjunction with the strategic defense system," he said. "The Department of Defense and the Strategic Defense Initiative Organization recognized that certain technologies that were maturing could have military uses."

The maturing technologies Carlson speaks of are mostly kinetic-kill weapons. They are ground- or space-based rockets that destroy incoming ICBMs by the sheer force of impact. There is no nuclear blast or explosion.

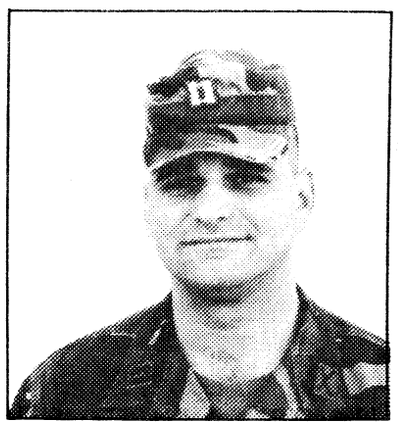
"Kinetic-kill systems are not exotic technology," said Carlson. "The front end of our system is the size of a coffee can. It doesn't take much to destroy something moving as fast as an ICBM."

A phased deployment would also provide a deterrent. "A Soviet ICBM may have as many as 10 independently targetable reentry vehicles," said Carlson. Phased deployment would give the United States the ability to destroy an ICBM and its multiple warheads in the boost phase with one kinetic-kill weapon. The Soviet planner has no way of knowing which missiles will get hit and which will survive.

"Having a kinetic-kill capability, even if it is not 100 percent effective, will go a long way toward making the Soviets think twice about whether to launch their missiles," said Carlson.

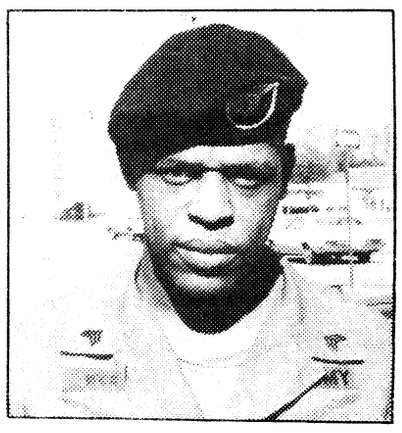
"It doesn't make sense to wait to deploy a 100 percent effective stratigic defense system," said Carlson. "To do so, we would have to wait until all the technology involved with such a system matured. Those technologies, such as lasers, are still far away.

"By doing it in phases as the technology matures, the United States can use these systems as they come around to achieve specific military and policy objectives and lay the groundwork for the deployment of subsequent phases, should they be needed," Carlson said.



VARIOUS VOICES: What woman in history do you respect the most and why?

Juan Pallingayan, Directorate of Logistics - "Juliet Lowe, the founder of Girls Scouts in the U.S., she did more for young women than anyone else I can think of. She instituted a lot of programs, exposing young women to many different things."



Sgt. Diane Hedden, 2nd MASH - "Florence Nightengale. She was the first nurse to go into the field. She was very dedicated. I think she intiated respect for women all around."

Capt. Thomas Person, Company C, 2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment - "Jeanne Kirkpatrik. She's hard and firm with the Soviets and she's no nonsense. I think she would make an excellent president."

SFC Sylvia Reed, Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion 11th Infantry Regiment - "Mary Bethune Cookman. I respect her for her stand for equality, women's rights and education."

Sgt. Hall Worth, 4th Ranger Battalion, The Ranger Training Brigade - "Nancy Reagan. She's working so hard to prevent drug abuse and she really cares about people."

Marsha Orr, Family member - "Sharon Christa McAuliffe. She went into space for the purpose of enriching her students' lives. It's too bad it ended in tragedy."

UNIT NEWS

Soldiers conduct live-fire exercise

By D.L. Bridges
2nd Battalion, 18th Infantry

Soldiers from 2nd Battalion, 18th Infantry (M), recently put their infantry skills to practical use during platoon live-fire exercise on Fort Benning.

Vanguard soldiers demonstrated teamwork as they dismounted Armored Personnel Carriers, breached an obstacle and then assaulted an objective.

"You can't overemphasize the importance of moving as a platoon and working as a team in order to accomplish missions," said Sgt. Timothy Banfield, a squad leader from Company C.

Dismounted platoon movement and coordination of unit fire power were practiced using Military Operations in Protective Posture. The MOPP gear placed stress on the soldiers as they trained in the heat of warm days over rugged terrain.

Platoons were tested for their combat readiness and survivability in a chemical enviroment by being gassed with tear gas assaulting their objective.

"It was exhausting and demanding to be gassed after taking the objective, but it was to boost everyone's confidence to successfully complete the course," Banfield said. "I wouldn't trade this kind of training for anything."

Ann M. McDonald

Leap Day Baby

Angela Graham cuddles up with her newborn baby girl, Joy Amie Graham. Joy will have a birthday only every four years, since she was born on Feb. 29. She was the first leap day baby born in the Fort Benning-Columbus community. Joy was born at 1:42 a.m. and weighed 6-pounds, 5-ounces. Her father, 2nd Lt. Timotheus Graham,is in Ranger School.

Red Cross director honored

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

Fort Benning's Red Cross Station director, who has been doing volunteer work for more than 20 years, was recently named one of Channel 9's "nine special people."

Dorothy "Dottie" Bouldin was one of the nine selected from more than 200 nomination packets sent to the station.

"I was very surprised when I found out I was selected," Bouldin said, "I wasn't aware that my name was submitted."

"I am honored and totally taken back that the people who submitted the nomination felt the way they did." she said.

In her position at the station, she supervises the entire volunteer program for Red Cross operations on post.

Her past volunteer endeavors include directing and establishing a camp for exceptional children, acting as a classroom mother, helping with various other activities within the school, working at the clothing bank and helping out at the Thrift Shop.

Besides her work with the Red Cross, the Columbus native also lends a hand to the Association for Retarded Citizens.

Bouldin said she volunteers because she sees a need in which she has the talents to fill, so naturally she tries to fill it.

She especially enjoys working with exceptional children because of the vast of knowledge she has on the subject. She also has some personal experience as she is the parent of an exceptional child.

Although her heart lies with working with exceptional children, she really enjoys her present postion.

"It gives you a nice toasty feeling inside, especially when you accomplish something for someone else's benefit," she said. "It's really nice to be able to help someone who walks in here and is in definite need of aid."

Soldier spends time as United Way volunteer

By Becky Obert
Bayonet staff writer

"It's always a sunny day and people are smiling," said PFC Thomas Lannom.

He is talking about the pictures drawn by his young charges at the 10th Street Community Center. Lannom is an arts and crafts helper, working as a United Way volunteer to help disadvantaged kids learn how to draw and paint.

The children range in age from 4 to 12, and they're still at the point where drawing and painting is fun, he said. "And you never see a sorrowful subject," he said. "They're all bright colors, showing their pets and families."

Lannom has been working at the center on Saturdays since September. He said he was bored with barracks life, and one day in the mall, he saw some kids and realized that it had been six months since he'd been around any kids.

"I was looking for something that was totally unrelated to the Army, something to do to just get away for a while" he said.

Because he paints as a hobby, combining a liking for kids and art was the perfect way to go, he said. He checked with the United Way and they told him of several opportunities in Columbus, and he finally selected the center.

Since he didn't have a car, Lannom had to get up early on Saturday mornings and catch the bus. After two hours and several transfers, he'd get to the center by noon and work until 2:30 or 3, then spend another couple of hours riding buses back to Fort Benning.

He bought a car last month, which is making getting around a lot easier.

Right now he enjoys reading in his spare time, both fiction and non-fiction. He said his favorite book is Oliver Twist. I like it because it portrays a young boy starting with nothing and struggling and all he's had to hold on to is his morals and etichal code.

"He is tested through the book, but sticks to his code, and in the end is rewarded for it," he said.

For now, he's enjoying his work with the children. He said the United Way has literally hundreds of volunteer jobs available, and on post, Youth Activities is also looking for volunteers.

SPIRITUAL

Peace is the objective, prayer can help

By Mark E. Benz
197th Infantry Brigade Chaplain

I was watching a combined arms exercise recently and was vividly aware of the fire power we possess.

Walking through the various weapons display, I was impressed at the advancement of arms technology over the last 20 years. Everything from the 9mm pistol, the SAW, the Bradley, Abrahm's M-1, the artillery's computerized taxfire system, the attack helicopters and much more.

Then to see all of that power concentrated on a single target was even more awesome (as they say nowadays). I was glad to be on the right end of the barrels.

Again, while in the field visiting our 2/10 Fire Suport Team on Concord OP, I heard a 50 cal shooting faster than my old M-60 or M-16. Being an old infantryman, I inquired about the specifics. Yes, our fire power is awesome.

But does all this power have the power to bring about the peaceful change we would all like to have in our world. We know that military armament is needed to bring peace. For the end of war is peace — at least for a period of time. But the rest from war is too often short lived.

WWI was to be the war to end all wars — then WWII hit us. The peace we seek and desire is wrestled away from us.

The United Nations was formed to help bring peace but in some places force, or a display of it, is ordered to bring partial peace.

Our national leaders, too, have continued to work towards peace and unity. But they realize other help is needed.

Alone, our military or political power has not been enough to accomplish the mission to bring peace. History often tells of our many leaders who, using all their influence and energy, realized they needed help.

The great General Patton in all of his planning and thinking recognized this before D-Day's turning point invasion.

He called for his chaplain and put in the vital request that they must have clear weather. The prayer was written and given to the General, and it was prayed (along with many others). History tells the rest of the story.

Many of our military leaders and Presidents have turned to God in prayer. Lincoln was called the "praying President."

General Eisenhower in a personal interview said, "I believe anybody who has been faced with critical situations is forced to recognized that when he has done his best and desperately wants something; and when there's nothing more he can do, he has got to say, either consciously or unconsciously, that the rest of it is in the hands of God."

We should never be too proud to humble ourselves in prayer. God alone has the power we lack. The spiritual dimension is more involved in our activities — small or great — than we realize, and God wants to be even more involved.

Col. (Ret.) Ben Purcell at Fort Benning's National Prayer Breakfast gave a tremendous personal testimony of how his prayers to God allowed him to endure 58 months of solitary confinement as a POW in Vietnam. With God all things are possible — even before they are impossible.

Today is World Day of Prayer. This day is set aside in our country to call all people to pray for the peace and unity of our world.

I'm sure that many of you pray often throughout the year for world peace, and I encourage you to continue your prayer. Even if you might sometimes think you are insignificant. You are not alone. Everyone of you and your prayers are needed and important.

In fact, March is also a time of celebration of God's deliverance of a whole nation. Our Jewish friends celebrated the last month of their religious year for the Feast of Purim. The 14th of Adar (March) is in commemoration of God's saving them from extinction by the Persians around 480 BC.

God encourges his people to pray to Him so He can help. He said, "If My people who are called by My name humble themselves in prayer and seek My face and turn from their evil ways, then I will hear from heaven, forgive their sins and heal their land." (II Chronicles 7:14)

Let's pray for our world — for its peace, its unity, its healing.

Prayer can be general or specific. Sometimes it helps to have a guide or an incentive to help us. Here is a suggestion. When we read our newspaper we usually discuss news to someone else. Discuss it with God. Take two minutes and pray about the situation, or the people or the countries in that article. Do the same with the radio or TV news.

Pray also for your own personal "world." Pray on March 4. All things are possible with God. He has the power.

Jo Ann Stamey

EFMP coordinator helps prevent 'run around'

By Sharon Reynolds
Bayonet Staff

"My main goal is to teach people how to access the system," says Mary Strickland, installation coordinator for the Exceptional Family Member Program. "Unless they're talking to the right agency, the system can become more of a roadblock than provide the help for which it was designed.

Strickland says she sees this type of "run around" all the time.

"They (people who have exceptional family members) go from place to place looking for help and usually end up right back where they started," she says. "Then they find me."

"First they ventilate a little, then, I help them get the assistance they need."

The EFMP office is located in building 2634, Soldiers' Plaza, with the lending closet and other EFMP activities located in building 2642.

EFMP is available to any family member with any physical, emotional, developmental or intellectual disorder that limits capabilities and requires special treatment, therapy, education, training or counseling.

EFMP also provides for coordination, evaluation and treatment required for exceptional family members outside the United States, Strickland says. It ensures that all eligible family members receive information and assistance needed to involve them with community support services.

Additional services provided through EFMP are:

- Information on services within a 45-mile radius.
- Information on services at other installations worldwide.
- Advocacy services and training.
- Recreation/cultural programs for handicapped children, including summer and day camps.
- A specialized lending closet with items especially designed for handicapped family members. These devices can be borrowed by anyone who is temporarily incapacitated such as someone who has had an operation and needs a wheelchair.
- An extensive resource library.
- Assistance to families in crisis-type situations.
- Referrals to other military/civilian agencies.
- Assistance with Special Olympics and training.
- Assistance with special transporation needs.
- Assistance with other needs identified by the individual.
- Respite care, available in April.

Anyone -- active duty, retired or DA civilian -- with an exceptional family member or who thinks they may have an exceptional family member, should call 545-4149 to find out about the resources available.

"We have high success rate in getting the needs of the families met," Strickland said.

36th Engineers move buildings for Santa

Shawn Bryson

A soldier steers his 920 tractor-trailer with one of the storage buildings into position for off-loading.

By Shawn Bryson
36th Engineer Group Correspondent

Anyone traveling on roads connecting the Telephone Park of the Department of Engineering and Housing to Soldier's Plaza on main post last Friday was subject to make way for what appeared to be a couple of run-away buildings. That's right, Buildings!

The buildings were not actually run-aways, however. They were being hauled on a 920 tractor-trailer from C Company, 43rd Engineer Batallion, 36th Engineer Group.

The journey of the two buildings was a part of a project to help out volunteers at Santa's Castle, an organization that collects used toys, cleans them up and distributes them to needy Army families during the Christmas season.

According to Diane Gravatt, Vice President of Santa's Castle, the two buildings were needed because of the overwhelming response by soldiers and organizations to the request by "Castle" volunteers for the donation of used toys.

She explained that the buildings will be used for storage and maintenance of the large number of bicycles that have been donated.

The Charlie soldiers from the 2nd platoon received the project on Feb. 18 and were given a deadline of Feb. 29 according to 1st Lt. Robert O'Sullivan, 2nd platoon leader and Officer in Charge of the project.

The Noncommissioned Officer in Charge of the project, SSgt. Junior Purdy, explained that, before the buildings could be transported to their new home, a number of preparations were necessary, including the construction and placement of the footers on which the buildings would stand behind Santa's Castle. The footers, 12 per building, were built by PFC Robert Anderson, Sp4s Donald Wilson and Shawn Pennington.

O'Sullivan added that the transportation of the buildings was more than just an afternoon drive, due to their size. Each building measured 22 feet by 16 feet, which made for a very wide load.

The Charlie soldiers, with the help of the military police, spent much time considering which of the possible routes would make the trip as safe as possible.

Once all of the preparations were made, the buildings were lifted from their foundations, one at a time, by two 10,000 pound forklifts at which time the trailer was backed into position underneath. The process was reversed when the buildings were off-loaded.

Purdy explained that each of the two trips took an hour in driving time alone, not counting the time spent loading and off-loading.

The Charlie soldiers were successful in their mission and there were no accidents due to the wide load.

Good nutrition applies to children

By Judy Cobb
Child Development Service

The month of March has been designated as National Nutrition Month. During this time, there will be a series of articles published in the Bayonet to give the public an awareness of what good nutrition is and how it can be applied in the child care situation.

Here at Fort Benning, good nutrition is a very important part of the curriculum in the Child Development Centers and Family Child Care Homes. When a parent enrolls his child in one of the on-post facilities, he can be assured that his child will receive good, nutritious meals and snacks. Children are fed meals and snacks each day that follow United States Department of Agriculture guidelines. Meals must consist of meats, fruits and vegetables, bread, and milk. These menus must be posted and accessible to parents.

The nutrition program of centers and homes is monitored by Child Development Services. Facilities are visited at least three times a year by the Nutrition Technician. Kitchens and eating areas are checked for cleanliness and safety. Menus are reviewed to make sure they comply with USDA requirements. All Child Development Centers on Fort Benning use a standardized menu; FCC providers prepare their own, following USDA guidelines and using a standard menu form. Caregivers plan at least one activity per week that is food or nutrition related.

As a benefit to the centers and FCC providers, a portion of the money that is spent for meals is reimbursed by USDA. Centers are reimbursed on a percentage basis regulated by income of parents, and homes are paid a standard amount per meal served. While this money is not intended to totally cover meal costs, it certainly can be beneficial to parents by helping keep day care costs down.

For a center or home to reap the benefits of being enrolled in USDA, staff and providers must adhere to a specific training requirements. Nutrition related training is provided once a month by the Nutrition Technician. This training may be in a variety of forms — lecture, video, or classroom involvement. FCC providers and center cooks must attend no less than three sessions per year.

In order to stress good eating habits at home and in day care, during the month of March the children in the Child Development Centers, FCC homes, and Youth Activities will be doing many activities that are nutrition related. They will be doing cooking experiences, projects on good eating habits, and even art using food as a resource. Some of these projects and art activities will be on display at the Main Post Library during the month of March.

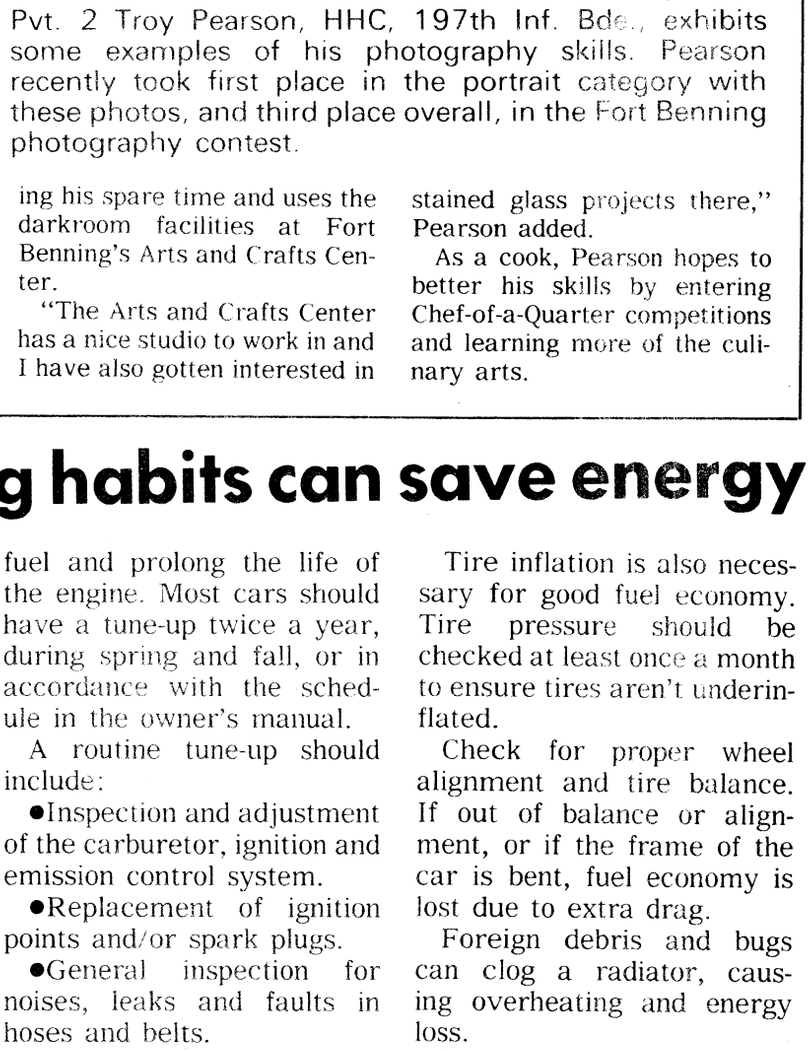
Soldier plans photo career

By Sally Roberts
197th Infantry Brigade correspondent

Pvt. 2 Troy Pearson, HHC, 197th Infantry Brigade, has an ambitious career plan which started as a high school hobby, and will end in earning a degree in photography. Part of that plan includes serving in the Army and earning education benefits under the GI Bill.

This may be a common story; however, Pearson works to maintain his skills as a photographer, while working as a cook in the 197th Infantry Brigade Separate Units Dining Facility. He recently took third place in a photography contest on Fort Benning.

"I started doing weddings ad some outdoor family portraits while I was in high school," Pearson said. "I attended a small high school in Indiana, and was contracted to take all the senior portraits and sports photography for the yearbook."



Following high school, Pearson made a small business venture and opened his own studio. But, his plans for success included a college education, so he opted to serve his country in order to earn the education benefits.

"Photography is a type of art in which I can be really creative," Pearson said. "I enjoy working with people, and it will also be a good income if I locate in a large city when I go back into business."

Pearson keeps his fingers into his photography skills during his spare time and uses the darkroom facilities at Fort Benning's Arts and Crafts Center.

"The Arts and Crafts Center has a nice studio to work in and I have also gotten interested in stained glass projects there," Pearson added.

As a cook, Pearson hopes to better his skills by entering Chef-of-a-Quarter competitions and learning more of the culinary arts.

Fighting fat, staying fit is goal of a soldier

By Nancy J. Pekar
Martin Army Community Hospital

Fighting fat, staying within the weight standards, and keeping physically fit are important goals for the Army soldier. Proper diet and a consistent exercise program are two important means of meeting these goals.

Behavior modification is another method of meeting these goals that may not be as well understood. Behavior modification focuses on the fact that eating is a learned behavior and that poor eating practices can be unlearned. It works by looking at the factors that influence one's eating behaviors and methods for controlling identified poor behaviors.

Monitoring food habits is an important step in behavior modification. This can be done by keeping a diary of one's eating habits which should include: the food eaten, place, time started and finished, activity, mood, and degree of hunger. This will help to define patterns in your behavior that contribute to overeating, which can then be focused upon and changed.

Controlling eating behavior is an important result of behavior modification. The following are a few suggestions to control eating through behavior modification:

•Eat Slowly: Place utensils or sandwich down between each bite, pause in the middle of the meal for two minutes, use chopsticks (those who do not use them well).

•Only eat while you are seated at the table: Many overeaters do their feasting while standing or sitting and watching TV. When you eat, concentrate only on eating, don't read the paper, talk on the phone or watch TV.

•Avoid keeping foods that require NO preparation: If an in-between meal snack has to be cooked, it allows more time for you to consider the consequences.

•Find other pleasures: If there is a certain time of day you have a tendency to eat snacks, plan an interesting activity for that time.

•Avoid overtasting: Especially if you are the cook!

•Vary your menu: Be creative, don't eat the same thing all the time.

•Don't be a garbage can: It's better to throw out the last few tablespoons or last serving than to eat them and add the extra calories.

•Keep food out of sight as much as possible: Less temptation if you can't see it and even less if you don't buy it!

•Be aware of hunger: Eat in response to hunger, not simply to the time of the day.

•Try not to eat alone: This often leads to overeating.

•Exercise regularly: This tends to regulate eating patterns and burns up fat and calories while sparing muscles.

Good driving habits can save energy

By Becky Ray
Energy Management office

Good driving habits are essential to maximum fuel economy, but proper maintenance can increase fuel economy considerably as well.

Generally, a neglected automobile uses 10 to 20 percent more gas than one that has been well-maintained.

Depending on individual cars and the distance driven, this can mean a yearly savings of as much as $120 or more.

Proper maintenance also makes cars more reliable. fuel and prolong the life of the engine. Most cars should have a tune-up twice a year, during spring and fall, or in accordance with the schedule in the owner's manual.

A routine tune-up should include:

•Inspection and adjustment of the carburetor, ignition and emission control system.

•Replacement of ignition points and/or spark plugs.

•General inspection for noises, leaks and faults in hoses and belts.

•Testing of engine compression.

Tune-ups usually don't include oil changes, lube jobs, or filter inspections. They are important to fuel economy as well, and should be requested in addition to the Tire inflation is also necessary for good fuel economy. Tire pressure should be checked at least once a month to ensure tires aren't underinflated.

Check for proper wheel alignment and tire balance. If out of balance or alignment, or if the frame of the car is bent, fuel economy is lost due to extra drag.

Foreign debris and bugs can clog a radiator, causing overheating and energy loss.

Proper maintenance is necessary for good reliability and may extend the life of the car. When considering these benefits along with a possible savings of 10 to 20 percent of the amount spent on gas, proper automobile maintenance is a

Piscatella to speak at OWC luncheon

By Lynn Barlotta
Officers Wives Club

Joe Piscatella, author of "Don't Eat Your Heart Out", will speak to two groups here on March 16.

At 10:30 a.m. he will be at the Officers' Club addressing the OWC as their featured speaker for their March Luncheon. At 1 p.m. he will speak to the general public in Marshal Auditorium.

Piscatella is the director of the Health and Fitness Institute and considered to be an expert in cardiac health. He is affiliated with the Department of the Army and has been the advisor to major corporations across the nation, in helping them to establish fitness programs for their employees.

Besides his best selling book, Piscatella has written a series for PBS which will air in the fall of 1988, title "Choices for a Healthy Heart".

A major empahsis of his fitness theory is nutrition, so it is fitting that Piscatella speak to these groups during March, National Nutrition Month.

His program for the OWC will include recipes and meal plans that will benefit one's cardiac health, as well as exercise information and suggestion for eliminating stess from one's everydaty life. The title for his afternoon program is "Healthy Employees are the Competitive Edge."

OWC members wishing to make a reservation to the luncheon should make a reservation by March 11.

CPAs explain new 1040 form line-by-line

Georgia Society of CPAs, Inc

At first glance, the 1987 Form 1040 may look very much the same — but don't be fooled, cautions the Georgia Society of CPAs.

The final results of two years of legislative work and hundreds of pages of tax reform law have, in effect, been summarized in the two-page 1040 form and the corresponding schedules.

Most of the changes brought about by the Tax Reform Act of 1986 became effective Jan. 1, 1987 and taxpayers are now face-to-face with how tax reform affects them.

Filing requirements have changed. Generally, the Tax Reform Act raised the amount of income a person may have before being required to file a return. This means fewer taxpeyrs will have to file returns for 1987.

For your benefit, the Georgia Society of CPAs offers the following line-by-line account of some of the major changes you are likely to encounter on your 1987 Form 1040.

Personal Exemptions, line 6.

The amount allowed for each personal exemption is increased to $1,900 for 1987 — up from $1,080 in 1986. The Tax Reform Act of 1986 eliminated the extra exemption for being 65 or older or legally blind. Instead, these taxpayers will be eligible for the additonal standard deduction.

Taxpayers claiming exemptions for dependents who are at least five years old by the end of the tax year must provide the dependent's Social Security number.

For 1987 returns, a personal exemption may not be claimed by a person who can be claimed as a dependent on another taxpayer's return. This means children who can be claimed as dependents on their parnent's returns may not calim exemptions for themselves on their own returns.

Tax-exempt Interest, line 9.

Tax-exempt interest income (such as interest on certain state and municipal bonds) received during the tax year 1987 must be shown on this line.

Dividends Exclusion, line 10.

There is no longer an exclusion from income for the first $100 ($200 if filing jointly) of qualifying dividends. All dividends earned during 1987 must be reported here.

Capital Gains, line 14.

Prior to tax reform, individuals could deduct 60 percent of their net long-term capital gains. The 60-percent long-term capital gains deduction is no longer allowed. The full amount of net capital gains must be included in income and is taxed at ordinary income tax rates. For 1987 only, there is a cap of 28-percent on net long-term capital gains.

Pensions, IRA Distributions, Annuities and Rollovers, line 16.

For lump-sum distributions from a retirement plan, ten-year forward averaging on a one-time basis by those at least 59½ has been replaced by five-year averaging. Congress created a special transition rule that allows anyone who was at least 50 years old on Jan. 1, 1986 to choose whether to have the distribution taxed under current law or the old law.

Unemployment Compensation, line 19.

All unemployment compensation received after 1986 must be included in income. Under prior law, unemployment compensation was partially excluded from income.

Other Income, line 21.

This is the place to report any income you don't find a place on your return or other schedules. One area of other income that changed affects recipients of scholarships and fellowships granted after Aug. 16, 1986. Under tax reform, those recipients who are degree candidates must include in income all scholarship money received for room, board, travel and other incidental expenses. Only those amounts receive for course-related expenses such as tuition, books, supplies and equipment are excluded from income. They must pay taxes on the full amount granted after Aug. 16, 1986.

Individual Retirement Account Deductions, lines 24 a and b.

Use lines 24 a and b to deduct IRA contributions. New rules in effect for 1987 may reduce or eliminate the deduction some taxpayers can take for contributions made to an IRA. The deduction a person can take for contributions to an IRA depends on two factors: (1) whether you or your spouse are covered by a retirement plan at work and (2) the amount of your adjusted gross income.

An individual who is not an active participant in an employer retirement plan can still deduct an IRA contriburtion up to $2,000 of his or her earnings. If you or your spouse is covered by an employee retirement plan, you may be entitled to a full or partial deduction or no deduction at all depending on the adjusted gross income of you and your spouse.

Self-employed Health Insurance Deduction, line 25.

This is a new deduction for 1987. Self-employed taxpayers who pay for their own and their families' health insurance may be able to deduct 25 percent of the cost of this insurance from gross income.

Itemized Deductions, line 33a.

This line is for the total of your itemized deductions which you disclose on Schedule A. Many deductions have been eliminated by tax reform, while others have been restricted. Refer to the instructions for completing Schedule A for complete details.

Standard Deduction, line 33b.

For 1987, the standard deduction replaces the zero tax on three factors — your filing status, your age and whether or not you are blind. Beginning in 1987, the additional exemptions for age and blindness have been replaced by the additional standard deduction. NOTE: The standard deduction has been sharply increased. Many taxpayers will find that claiming the standard deduction will be a better deal than itemizing. Once you itemize your deductions, compute the amount of standard deductions you are entitled to. Use the larger of the two amounts.

Alternative Minimum Tax, line 49.

The Alternative Minimum Tax provides a formula for tax computation which, in effect, disallows certain preferential tax treatment. Under the Tax Reform Act of 1986, the provisions for the Alternative Minimum Tax have been broadened and strengthened and the rate has been increased to 21 percent.

Do you have a feeling something is missing? Are you wondering what happened to some of your favorite tax breaks? Read on.

What ever happened to...

- The credit for political contributions? This tax credit was repealed. Under tax reform, a taxpayer may no longer claim a credit for political contributions.
- Investment tax credit? Property placed into service after Dec. 31, 1985 does not qualify for the investment tax credit.
- Sales tax? Sales tax is no longer deductible.
- The Two-Earner Deduction? In families where both spouses work, the spouse with the lower earnings will no longer be allowed to deduct a percentage of his or her earnings.
- Income averaging? This tax benefit has been repealed.

CPAs caution that this is no year to wait until the last minute to prepare your return. With all the changes in effect, you'll want to allow enough time in the event you need more information or assistance.

69th Inf. wins post basketball championship

Ann M. McDonald

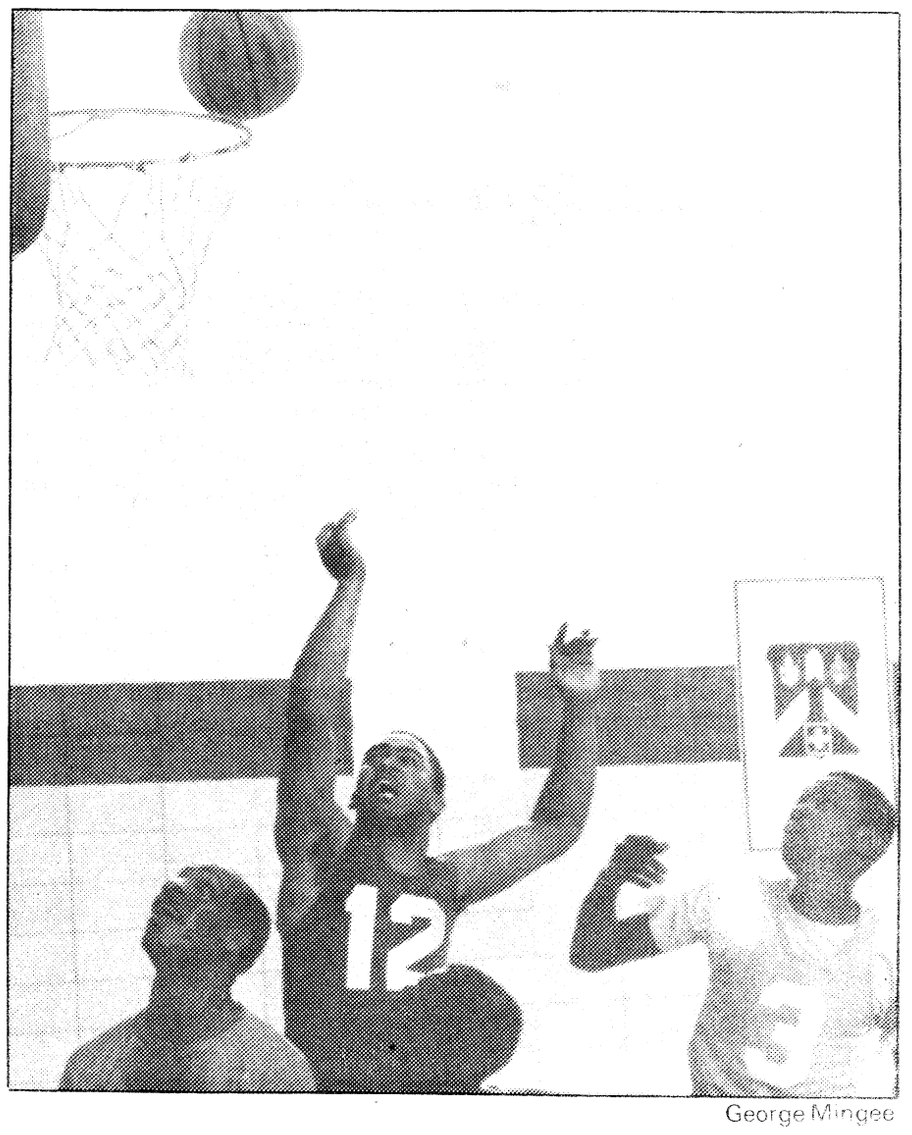
A player from the first place team dribbles the ball down court in quest of a basket.

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

It was a no lose situation for the 197th Infantry Brigade during the battle for the second season post basketball crown last Saturday night as both teams came from Kelley Hill.

HHC, 2nd Bn., 69th Inf. locked horns with HHC, 197th Spt. Bn. in the championship game with the team from 69 Inf. coming out on top 57-50.

According to the winning coach, Cedric Frazier, it was a close game with both teams connecting with the net consistantly. "What turned the game around in our favor was a brilliant play by Alvin Daniels who stole a pass from the opposing team and passed to one of our players who put it in the net," he said. "Daniels was in top form Saturday which shows by the 22 points he scored."

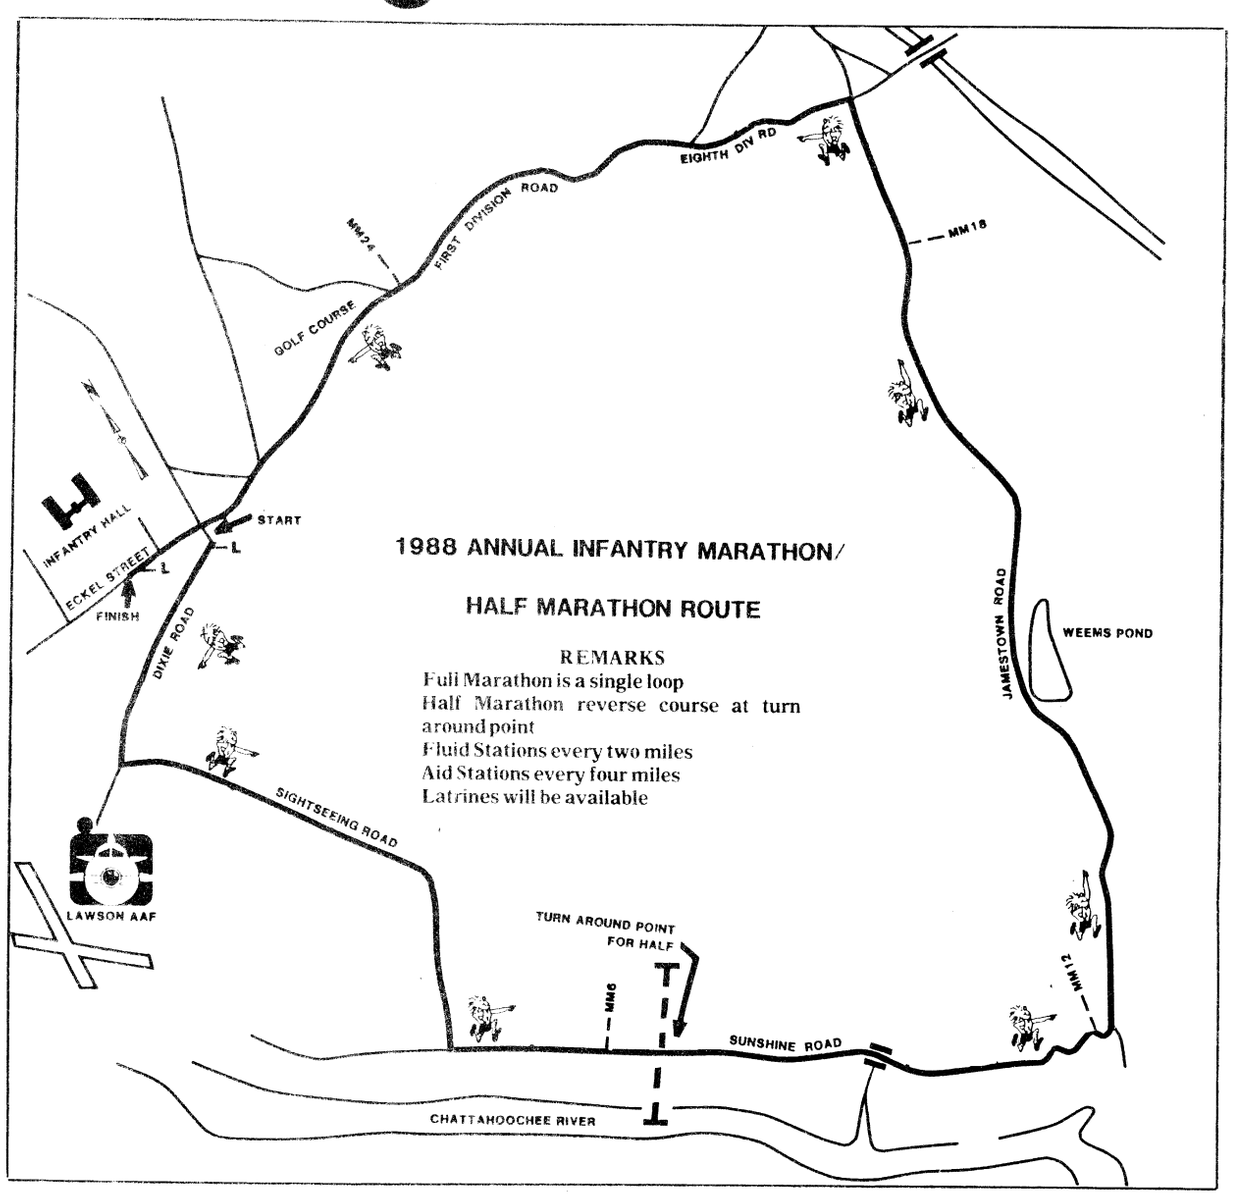


Frazier said that his team got off to a slow start the first half the season but during the second half of the season started winning consistantly. "We peaked at just the right time." he said. "The team really got it together at the end."

In the consolation game, which determined the third place winner, HHC 1st Bn., 29th Inf. trounced Co. D, 1st Bn., 11th Inf., 79-54.

Winning coach Edward Tilson attributed the win to Keith Horde who racked up 26 points, all from the inside. Tilson said his team used a run-n-gun type offense and the defense was very aggresive.

It should be noted that Tilson team included one female player Elizabeth Dorsey who scored two points during limited play.



Tilson's team placed second in first season basketball play.

Keith Collick of Svc. Btry., 2nd Bn., 10th FA, drives inside for a 2-point shot. Collick led his team with 23 points during the playoffs of the Fort Benning basketball championships.

Training comes to an end, marathon is tomorrow

By J. M. Henderson
Martin Army Community Hospital

This is the seventh, and last, in a series of articles intended to prepare the average runner to finish the Fifth Annual Infantry Marathon tomorrow.

It's time to get a wee bit introspective. If you're reading this on Friday, the day before the marathon, then you might tend to second-guess your level of preparation.

If you have intelligently and diligently prepared, you will be all right, if you haven't, you will "Pay the Piper."

If you're reading this on Saturday, after the marathon, then you're mellow, after having depleted your brain's endorphins, and wondering, just wondering, "Could I have gone faster winding up to the fire tower? Should I have run that first winding down to Weem's Pond? Why did I drink so much/so little last night?"

By Sunday it will all seem so trivial.

Returning again to you Friday readers, have you given any thought to the arithmetic of long-distance running? In a nut shell it's similar to Alice in Louis Carroll's classic. The faster you run, the slower you go.

Oh sure, there'll be a few sub-six or seven minute milers, those "Elite Folks." But in regards to the "Silent Majority," you cannot fool your body. You'll likely race the same way you trained.

Some of the arithmetic myths of a marathon are:

•You'll lose precious seconds at the water stops. Wrong! In reality, the 45 seconds it takes to drink, is time well spent.

•Don't waste time in the latrines, wait till after the race. Wrong again! If pre-race jitters prevented stool elimination and now, at mile nine, you are releaxed and have this "urge," then you might as well stop at one of the Job Johnnies and then proceed, lighter.

•If you run fast you'll finish faster. Strike three! Don't trow away your well-conceived plan. If you planned to average 8-minute miles, you'll finish near 3:30:00.00 and more importantly you'll feel fine.

But, if you blast through the first 10 at a 7.5-minute mile pace, then you slow to a 8.25 in the next 10 miles, and then slow to a 9 in the next 5 miles, and finally deteriorating to a 9.5-minute milw for the final 1.25 miles, you finish around 3:37:00.00 and you'll look and feel like a very old brillo pad. A pathetic, fatigued, de-spirited lump of dehydrated protoplasm.

Louis Carrol wasn't a marathoner, but he must have known: The faster you run, the slower you go.

Seven weeks ago we started this series of articles that could help a handful of runners make it through the fifth edition of the Infantry Marathon. If you have been able to train and then finish the marathon.I suppose you should feel some accomplishment. But I believe you have really performed some feat if you haven't abandoned your real priorities, self care, family, job, etc., in the past few months.

To end on an up-beat, thank you for your support during this series.

Hang in there, and, SEE YOU ON THE ROAD!

Army sports program mission to provide opportunity for participation

By Walt Morrissette
Army News Service

There's one program that the Army Olympic Athlete and the unit-level athlete have in common: They both are participating in the Army sports program to meet their goals in amateur sports.

Providing those sports opportunities for every soldier, regardless of playing ability, is the responsibility of the managers in the Army Sports Program.

"The mission of the Army Sports Program is to provide soldiers the maximum opportunity for voluntary participation in individual and team sports at all levels, said Lt. Col. David R. Rogers, chief of the Army Sports Program.

Rodger's team also includes Billy Dove and George Garrett, both of whom have been coordinating athletes' participation in the Army Sports Program for more than 10 years now.

The primary objective of the program is to provide for "mass participation" for everyone at the intramural or company/unit level.

There are also unit-level programs involving squad-versus squad or intra-unit activities.

"In doing that, we assist the commander in the development and maintenance of physical fitness, unit morale, esprit de corps and teamwork in support of the Army mission," Rogers said.

We also provide skilled soldiers/athletes the opportunity to train and compete at all-army level and armed-forces level or higher, such as the national championships, council of international military sports championships, world championships and the olympics.

The army sports office consists of Rogers, Dove and Garrett, who operate the program from the army community and family support center. They provide policy direction, technical supervision, oversight control, as well as program, financial and executive assistance to sports directors running their sports program at major commands and installations.

They provide overall management for the army sports program and asistance to major commands and installations.

The biggest function of the program is to form policies and plans for the conduct of selected army and armed forces competitions and other efforts to improve the image of the army, Rogers said.

Rogers, Dove and Garrett also direct and control army participation in armed forces, national and international events. They are the army's representatives to the armed forces sports committee, the U.S. olympic committee, the amateur athletic union and the national governing bodies of each olympic sport.

At the unit level, the sports program is run by unit personnel. The unit commander is responsible for programming funds.

Community recreation sports personnel provide the technical assistance and the facilities needed for competition. These programs are primarily funded with appropriated funds as authorized by AR 215-1. Further guidance for unit-level sports program is contained in DA Pam 28-9 (unit level recreation sports).

At the intramural level, where units compete against other units, the installation commander is responsible for overall development of the program. Community recreation sports directors handle the day-to day administration and scheduling of the programs. Intramural programs culminate in installation or "Commander's cup-type championship.

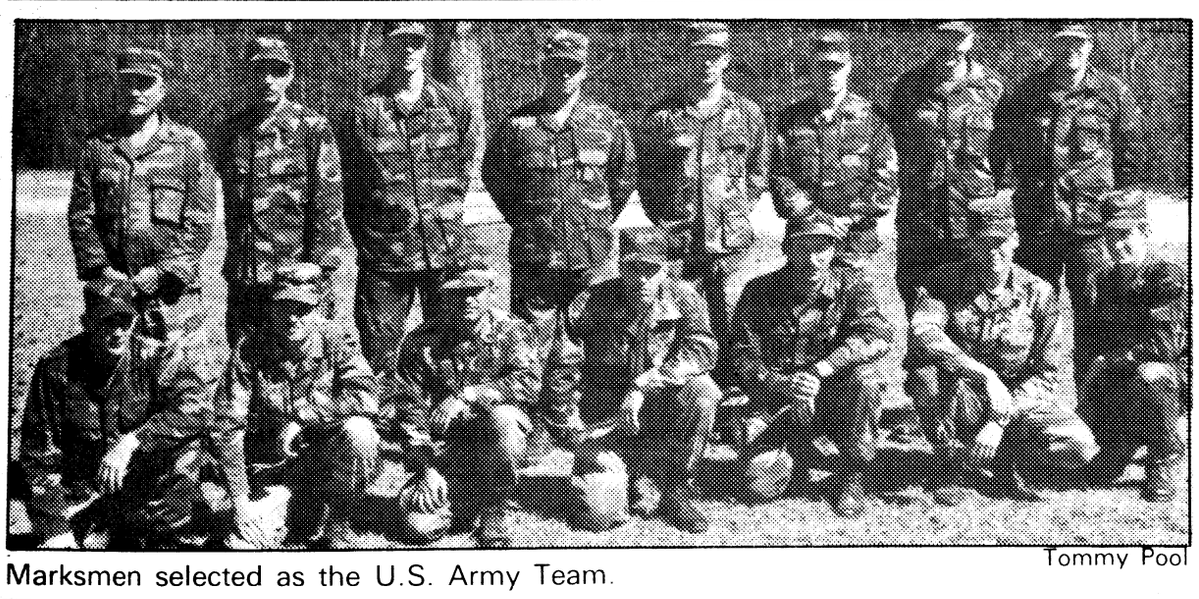
The major commands are responsible for conducting annual clinics to train coaches, officials and sports personnel

A method to gauge the excellence of an installation sports program is to examine what it provides. A great program provides:

Clinics, which should be a regular event.

Opportunities for novice or inexperienced athletes to participate in the sports of their choice.

A year-end commander's cup trophy, to identify the best unit on post for that given year.



Adequate hours to give soldiers ample opportunities to participate around their duty hours.

Special interest classes.

Year round programming so soldiers will have sports for all seasons.

Sports directors operating an active, healthy program are also on the lookout for potential world-class athletes, who should be encouraged to strive for higher levels of amateur athletic competition--such as all-army, armed forces or national/olympic levels games.

However, the objectives of army sports directors in this olympic year will be to maintain emphasis on mass participation in the army sports programs at the unit and intramural level, and to give soldier-athletes all the assistance and training opportunities possible to help them prepare for all-army, armed forces, national championships and the Olympics.

Marksmen selected as the U.S. Army Team. Tommy Pool

Team slected to compete in Australia

By Tommy Pool
USAMU PAO

Twelve soldiers were selected from shooting tryouts held recently at Ft. Benning and will represent the U.S. Army at the 1988 Australian Army Skill at Arms Matches.

The U.S. Army was invited to send a team of its top rifle marksmen to compete in the matches later in April, with funding provided by the government of Australia.

This year's Skill at Arms championships are being held in conjunction with Australia's Bicentennial Celebration, with more than 200 military marksmen representing nations from Great Britain, Canada, New Zealand, Figi, Malayia, Papua New Guinea, Singapore, Australia and the United States.

All of the shooting events in Australia will be held on the Anzac ranges at Malabar, located near Sidney, from Aprill 22 to May 6.

The four day tryouts were conducted at Ft. Benning's Easley range from Feb. 25-28, with competitors using the M16A2 rifle over the Australian course of fire.

Soldiers that competed in the tryouts included two former All-Army champions and some of the top combat rifle marksmen from the active Army, Army Reserve and Army National Guard.

The competition featured precision, as well as rapid fire events, at ranges from 100 yards to 500 yards. Both full and partial silhouette type targets were used to simulate battlefield conditions.

Six active Army soldiers from Ft. Benning were selected to the Army team, while six members of the Reserve components were also selected.

Members from Ft. Benning included SSgt. Hilario Benavidez, A Co 1/19th Inf. Capt. David Erickson, E. Co, 1/19th Inf. Sgt. Gregory Gustafson, Sp4 Timothy Jackson, Sp4 Stephen Cerny and PFC Eric Uptagraff, all from the Army Marksmanship Unit.

Final standings and order of finish of the top twelve individuals are as follows:

1st-MAJ Christopher Stark, Fifth U.S. Army Reserve 823 (out of 900)

2nd-SP4 Timothy Jackson, USAMU, Ft. Benning 805

Fort Benning honors '88's Drill Sergeant

By Marsha Santiago
ITC correspondent

For SSgt. Samuel P. Watkins, volunteering for the Cadre Training Center and becoming a drill sergeant was an opportunity to work with the basic skills and train soldiers. It is obviously an assignment for which he is well suited. He has been selected as Fort Benning's Drill Sergeant of the Year for 1988.

"As a young NCO in my MOS, 29Y (Satellite Communications Ground Station Equipment Repairer and Operator), I really didn't have a chance to work with the basic soldier skills or with troops," said Watkins. "Working with these skills and training soldiers was something I really wanted to do while I was still young and in good physical shape."

Watkins enlisted in the Army during his senior year in high school under the Delayed Entry Program. The Youngstown, Ohio, native entered the Army in August 1978 and completed both basic and advanced individual training with an OSUT unit at Fort Gordon, Ga. After serving as a wireman and switchboard operator with the 67th Signal Battalion, he was selected as the driver for the battalion commander. In 1982, he became the driver for the post command sergeant major. It was during this tour that Watkins completed the course work and received his associate's degree in education.

In 1984, Watkins received orders for the Satellite Communications 86 Section, 59th Signal Company, 509 Signal Battalion, Camp Darby, Italy.

"It was a different assignment with lots of opportunities for travel," Watkins commented. "Looking back, it seems like I lived out of a duffle bag for two years. We were always on the go."

During Watkins' tour, deployments for the unit included England and Germany. However, his next assignment, the Cadre Training Center (often referred to as Drill Sergeant School), brought him to Fort Benning.

"While I was attending Drill Sergeant School, my class went to the Drill Sergeant of the Year Ceremony," Watkins remembered. "We were all very impressed and later joked around that next year it would be one of us."

After graduation from Drill Sergeant School in June 1986, Watkins was assigned to B Company, 1st Battalion, 50th Infantry, 1st Infantry Training Brigade.

"When I got my first platoon, I was almost as excited as the new soldiers were," Watkins remarked. "At first it is a process of learning as you go, and they practically have to tell you to go home at night. I couldn't wait to get back the next morning and start again. I didn't want to miss anything."

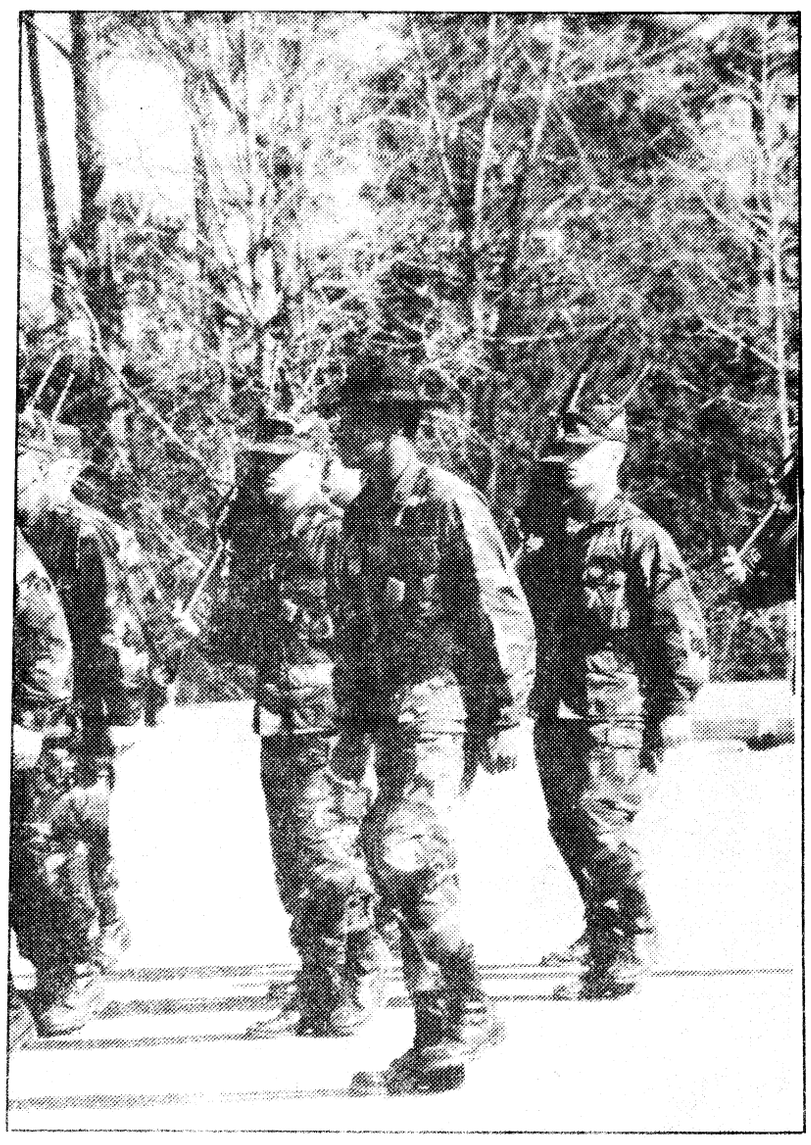
Considering that the average day for a drill sergeant begins at 4:30 a.m. and often ends at 9 p.m. this attitude says much about Watkins' motivation and dedication. Perhaps it also explains how he turned remarks made in jest into fact by being selected from the 600 drill sergeants assigned to USAITC as the Drill Sergeant of the Year.

Competition for the title is stiff and includes physical fitness, basic rifle marksmanship, drill and ceremony, infantry qualification tasks and appearance before a board of command sergeants major.

Watkins does not have an 11B MOS, infantryman, but he stated the training of Infantrymen (four, 13-week, OSUT cycles and one, seven-week, split-option cycle) has been his most challenging as well as his most rewarding career assignment.

"For the new soldier, the drill sergeant has more impact than anyone else," he said. "How they see me determines to a large degree how they see the Army. That is why it is so important to provide a positive role model and lead by example. I have to be technically, tactically and physically proficient."

Watkins [illegible] the award, "I feel that being selected proves that whatever environment you are in, if you are given a task, you can excel at that task. The important thing to remember is that a professional soldier, regardless of MOS, can do anything he puts his mind to, provided he is willing to accept the challenge."



A recent challenge for Watkins was completion of Airborne School. His assignment as a drill sergeant was the first opportunity he had to attend, so he volunteered. Watkins added that the majority of the new soldiers want to be airborne qualified, seeing the course as a physical challenge.

Watkins will receive the Drill Sergeant of the Year Award — a 9mm Baretta — during a ceremony at Sand Hill Theater #3 at 1:30 p.m. Tuesday. On April 18, he goes to Fort Monroe, Virginia, to compete against drill sergeants from other installations for the TRADOC Drill Sergeant of the Year title.

Between the Fort Benning ceremony and the TRADOC competition, Watkins has another important event scheduled. He is engaged to be married with a wedding date of early April.

"Lisa, my fiancee, has been very supportive. She understands that being a drill sergeant requires a personal commitment to my soldiers and that long hours just comes with the job," Watkins said. "She is really looking forward to being an Army wife and has been getting 'war stories' from other wives!"

While Watkins is serving as Fort Benning's Drill Sergeant of the Year, his bride will attend Columbus College and complete her masters degree in Special Education.

Hartzog will be promoted today

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Col. William W. Hartzog, the deputy commanding general of Fort Benning and assistant commandant of the U.S. Army Infantry School, will be promoted to the rank of brigadier general during a 4 p.m. ceremony, today, in front on Infantry Hall, building 4.

Hartzog, nominated for his first star last July, has been assistant commandant since Brig. Gen. Barry R. McCaffrey departed the post for a new assignment last December. Before assuming this position, Hartzog commanded Fort Benning's 197th Infantry Brigade.

Born in Wilmington, N.C., the 46-year-old Hartzog was commissioned a second lieutenant in the Infantry upon graduating from The Citadel in Charleston, S.C., in 1963. He holds a master of arts degree in psychology.

Hartzog has served in various command and staff assignments both overseas and stateside, including executive officer to the commanding general, U.S. Army Training and Doctrine Command; chief of War Plans Division in the Office of the Deputy Chief of Staff for Operations and commander of the 3rd Battalion, 5th Infantry, 193rd Infantry Brigade in Panama.

He served two tours in Vietnam, as a company commander with the 4th Battalion, 23rd Infantry Regiment, 25th Infantry Division, and as an operations officer with the Military Assistance Command.

Among his decorations are: the Legion of Merit with two oak leaf clusters; the Soldier's Medal; the Bronze Star with "V" Device and oak leaf cluster and the Purple Heart.

Hartzog is married to the former Roberta Anita Fitton of Mt. Clemens, Mich. They have two children, Robyn and Will.

Symphony performance scheduled at Fort Benning

USAIC Public Affairs Office

The 75-piece Columbus Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Maestro George Del Gobbo, will perform a selection of light and familiar pieces Saturday at 8 p.m. in Marshall Auditorium.

Del Gobbo assumed the reins of the orchestra this past summer when Harry Kruger retired after 22 years as its leader.

Featured performer, will be cellist Vilma Peguero, who is the winner of the college student competition. She will play the first movement of the "Lalo Concerto."

The full orchestra will perform such pieces as Aaron Copland's "Billy the Kid," and the final selection of Rossini's "William Tell Overture."

Del Gobbo is coming to Columbus from Fort Worth, where he was the associate conductor of both the chamber and symphony orchestras and was involved in the youth orchestra and opera.

Because of his commitment to Fort Worth, he will continue to commute between Fort Worth and Columbus this concert season. The 39-year-old maestro has music degrees from the Eastman School of Music in Rochester, N.Y. and Catholic University in Washington, D.C. He's also studied in Italy.

The performance is free and open to the public.

Special Airborne class recruits post soldiers

USAIC Public Affairs Office

If you've always longed to stand up, hook up and shuffle through the open door of a C-130 Hercules while it's flying 1,250 feet in the sky, here's your chance.

According to Alonzo Method, Military Training Coordinator, Directorate of Plans Training and Mobilization, 1st Battalion, 507th Parachute Infantry Regiment will be conducting an unprogrammed Basic Airborne Class for Fort Benning soldiers.

Method said the class is April 11-28 with a reporting date of April 8.

"This is an excellent opportunity for post soldiers to attend the Basic Airborne Course," he said, "and commanders are encouraged to take maximum advantage of this opportunity.

He added that this is one of the last classes that will be open to local standbys before the summer surge period.

Method said requests for this class should reference Class #501-88 and include a Department of the Army Form 4187 and a 705 (Army Physical Fitness Test within 30 days), a volunteer statement, a medical examination form and DA Forms 2A and 2-1.

He noted that applications must be forwarded to Training Division, DPTM, building 4, room 624 no later than March 31. Point of contact for this action is SFC Baltazar at 545-4252/2917.

Army halts civilian random drug tests

Army News Service

A recent U.S. federal court decision declaring unconstitutional the Army's practice of random drug testing of the civilian work force has prompted Army personnel officials to order an immediate suspension of urinalysis testing of its civilians in "critical" positions.

Army and Justice Department legal officials currently are studying the decision with a view toward appeal, said David M. Smith of the Army's litigation division.

The court's order in no way applies to the testing of soldiers, Smith explained.

OPINION

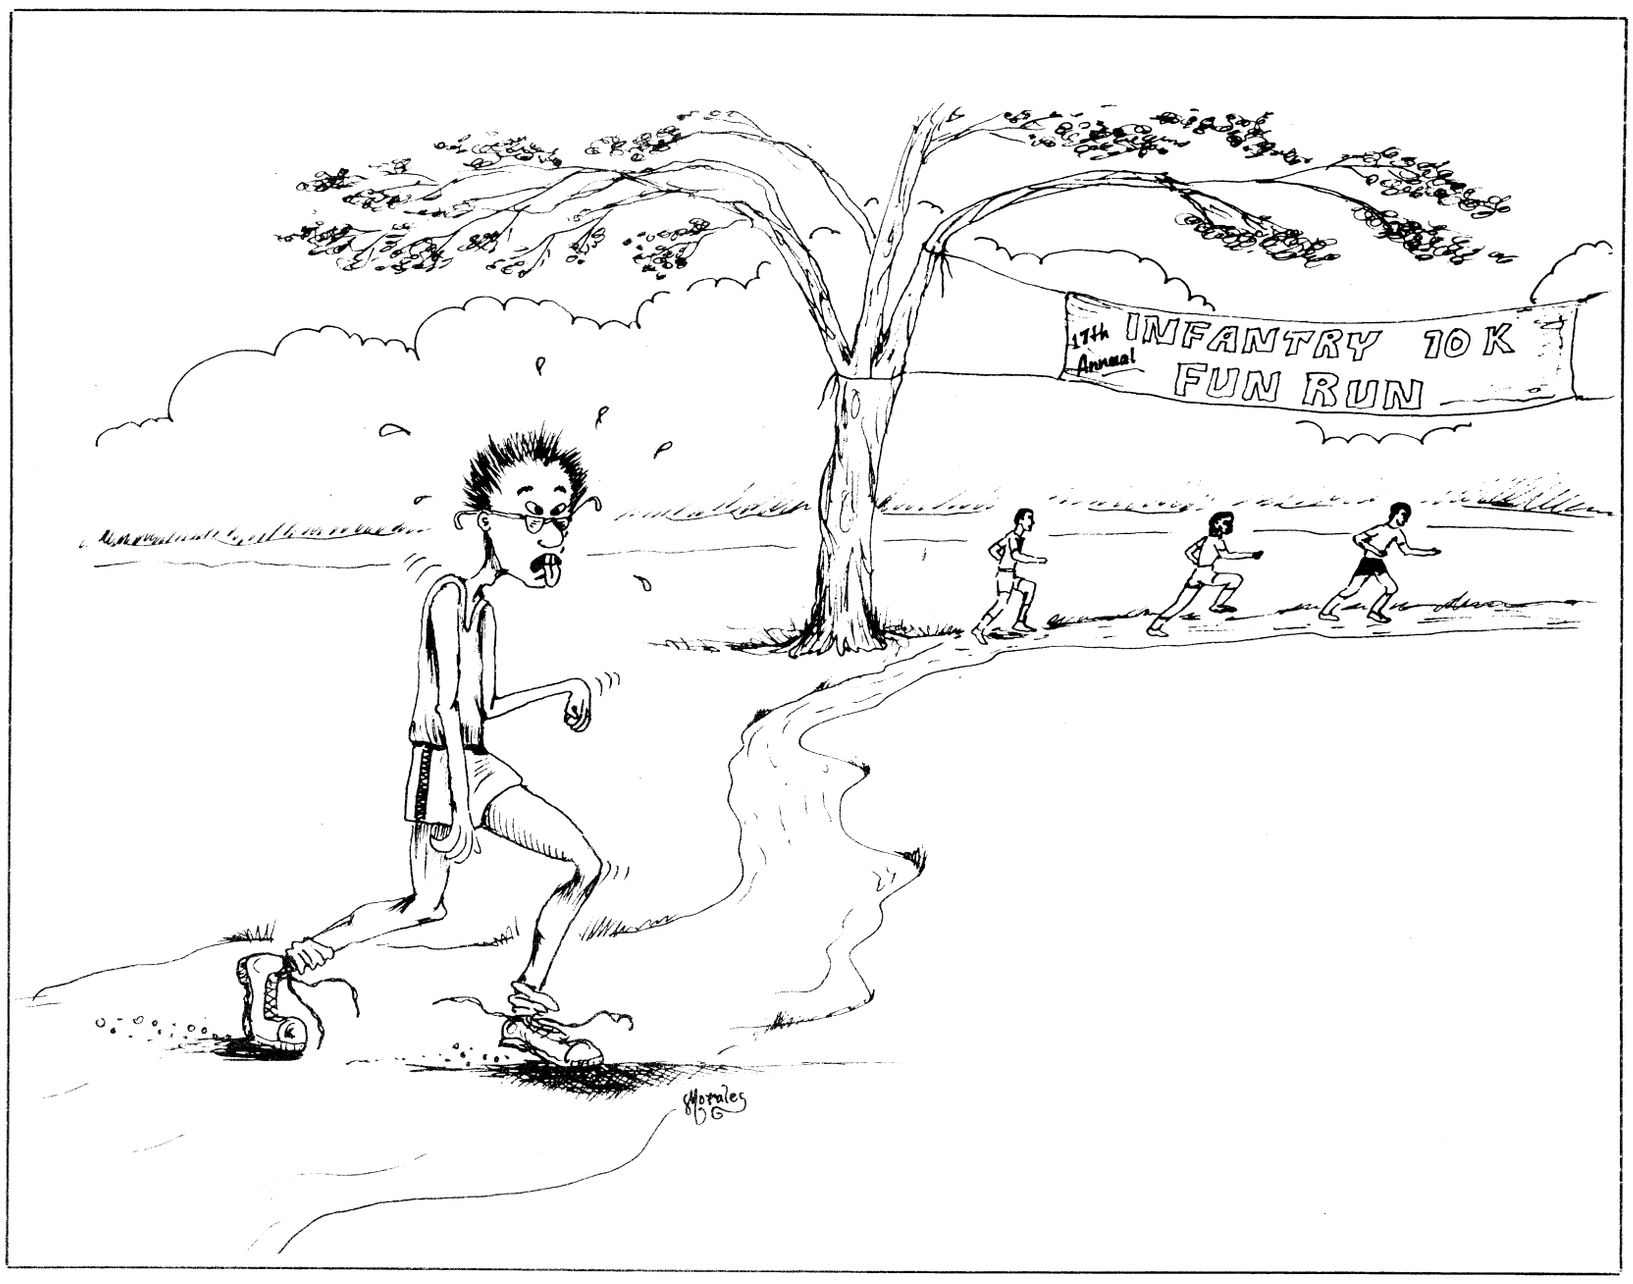
VARIOUS VOICES: How has Red Cross helped you?

Sgt. Tony Hawkins, Company B, 43rd Engineer Battalion, 36th Engineer Group - "It hasn't helped me personally, but I have seen Red Cross help other people. In one instance, while I was on Charge of Quarters, a soldier's loved one died, and they got word to the soldier very quickly."

Sgt. John Marsh, Company D, 1st Battalion, 507th Parachute Infantry Regiment - "When I was stationed in Germany, I had to come home on emergency leave. I was home for more than 30 days and my check was directly deposited overseas. I wasn't able to get any money, so I went to Red Cross, and they gave me a loan with no problems."

Marie Van Heusen, family member - "I was certified as a water safety instructor through the Red Cross, and all of my children received swimming lessons through the Red Cross."

Capt. Shepard Sawyer, Company B, 1st of the 38th Infantry, 2nd Infantry Training Brigade - "The Red Cross has not specifically helped me, but as a company commander in a training unit, I have seen many instances of soldiers being notified when a death or emergency has occured in their family."



SP4 Ramone Williams, Company B, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry - "Red Cross informed me that one of my family members passed away, which in turn enabled me to go home on emergency."

Sgt. Mary Ruffin, 215th Finance Company, 36th Engineer Group - "The Red Cross helped me out when I was having financial trouble. I had just gotten married. I needed money desperately and Red Cross loaned it to me."

Snively snivels out of marathon

By Clyde Snively
USAIC Public Affairs Office

There's gotta be a law.

There's gotta be a law about people who sign themselves up for punishment, then decide that without company, there can be no glory, so they spend however much time is left to them on this planet, recruiting others to join them.

Like Airborne Annie. She signs up for the Marathon. Nothing wrong with that.

It's her legs, her feet, her body. Let her abuse them anyway she wants. But that's not good enough for her. Oh no. She wants company.

Seven weeks out she starts. "Snively, why don't you run in the Infantry Marathon with me?"

"I'm in training for the Boston Marathon, and it doesn't fit into my schedule. I would have run it if it'd still been in January, but now I'll have to skip it," I tell her with a straight face.

"Oh," she says.

Six weeks out. She's back. "Hey Snively. I talked to the trainer who does the articles on training for the marathon. He said it wouldn't hurt you to run the Infantry Marathon and the Boston Marathon.

"As much as I like marathon running, I think two would overdo it, besides, I'm training on a special course that closely approximates the one in Boston, and by running on a course as flat as Fort Benning's, it might mess me up," I reply, really having a tough time not laughing.

"Oh," says she.

Five weeks out. She brings me an article from Runners World that talks about the need for variety in training. "Guess you can run now," she says gleefully.

"You know, you're right," I answered. "I saw the article too and immediately signed up for the Atlanta Marathon, forgetting about the Infantry Marathon," I say, trying to look downcast.

"Well, that was dumb," she said before stomping off.

Two weeks pass. I'm beginning to think it's safe to walk the halls of building 4 again as I haven't been bugged by Airborne Annie in two weeks.

Then one day she suddenly appears.

"How's your training coming?" she asks.

"Great," I say. "I figure I'll peak in about three weeks, just in time for the Atlanta Marathon."

"Well, I got great news for you. I was talking to this sports medicine person down at the sports clinic and he says a half-marathon would be perfect for you at this stage in your training. So I took my name off the marathon sign up, entered it onto the half-marathon and signed you up too."

"That was really great of you," I gasp, "but I have a confession to make. When I said my training was coming along great, I lied. You see, just yesterday I suffered a spontaneity of the orbicularis oris, and the doc said I'll be out at least two weeks.

I could tell she was crestfallen, not so much because I wouldn't be running, but because she was now out $15.

But hey, I'm a compassionate guy. I hate to see people lose their money, even if they deserve to, so I said, "what about the colonel. Why don't you get him to run. He'll probably even reimburse you the money."

"Great idea!" she shouted, racing out the door to the PAO's office.

I breathed a sigh of relief when she returned and reported that she and the colonel would be running the half-marathon. I'd finally gotten out of it. I could hear my feet and knees thanking me for my support.

There oughtta be a law.

There oughtta be a law against people who go charging off to punish their bodies then coming back and bragging about how good they feel. People who run 13 miles are supposed to come back limping, complaining about various ailments. They ain't supposed to come back feeling good.

But that's all those two have talked about all week, about how great they feel. Well, it's not all they've talked about. Airborne Annie also keeps reminding us about her third place finish and the medal she got.

I probably would have gotten a medal too. Too bad about my orbicularis oris.

Girl Scout week focuses on values and goals

By Laura Phillips
Concharty Council of Girl Scouts

March 6-12 has been designated Girl Scout Week at Fort Benning and throughout the United States. Unlike the typically designated days or weeks, Girl Scout Week was not contrived to sell cards or flowers. In fact, the entire week will most likely go untouted by the general public for the significance of Girl Scouting escapes the attention of the masses. Unfortunately, the importance of strengthening values, establishing goals and uplifting a young girl's self esteem lacks credibility with the community. An organization whose primary purpose is to guide a young person into a successful adulthood lags far behind groups with more visable and heartrendering tales to tell. However, for more than 8,000 girls and adults associated with Concharty Council, March 6-12 holds particular significance — comparable to most legal holidays and certainly comparable to any anniversary celebrating 76 years of successful existance.

On March 12, 1912, Juliette Gordon Lowe began the first Girl Scout troop with the words "I've something for the girls of Savannah and all the world. And we are going to start it here tonight." And start it she did. She began a tradition that is unparalled in the history of American women. A program that introduced the concept of mentoring — a partnership between and girls and adults — was begun. Today, a program based on the same ideals continues to shape the lives of modern young women. The Girl Scout movement crosses all cultural boundaries and links girls from all over the country and all over the world. The fantastic organization has influenced the lives of many of today's leading women and continues to influence the leaders of tomorrow.

More than 52 million women and girls have participated in Girl Scouting. Today more than three million active Girl Scouts have a rich heritage to celebrate. As members of the largest volunteer organization for girls in the world, Girl Scouts are a valuable asset to the community and to the future. Girl Scouts are committed to service whether it be of high magnitude or a simple task for which there is no glory. In all activities, the example set by Girl Scouts — one of concern and caring for others — is notable. In a society where fashionable trends and big successes are the meat of the news, the accomplishments of a Girl Scout troop still have a place on the front page of every local newspaper. For it is in the ittle successes of a child that the determination to be the best one can be is founded. The roots of strong self-worth and values are found in the very fiber of the Girl Scout program.

Each and every girl and woman who has experienced Girl Scouting will attest to the valuable lessons that are learned in that environment. For generations, now, Girl Scouting has been the organization which presented strong role models for the future leaders of communities and the nation. For their exuberence and excitement about the future of each and every little girl, for their example of service and concern for other; the Girl Scouts should be celebrated. "Thanks" is not enough for an organization that has served so well for 76 years. Happy Anniversary, Girl Scouts!

2nd Lt. promotions slow down

Army News Service

Second lieutenants will be wearing their gold bars six months longer under a change in the time in grade requirements for promotion from second lieutenant to first lieutenant, the Army announced.

The action, inceasing the length of time an officer spends as a second lieutenant from 18 to 24 months is designed to help the Army meet mandated budget ceilings and brings the promotion criterion for Army lieutenants in line with that of the other armed services and with the promotion programs for more senior officers.

The change in promotion "pin on point" will begin April 1, and be fully implemented by the end of October 1988.

Officers normally due to be promoted during the period April through April 5 will be promoted as scheduled. Officers normally due to be promoted during the period April 6 through April 10 will be promoted on May 1. Officers normally due to be promoted during the period April 11 through April 15 will now be promoted on June 1.

Additional information may be obtained from the Officer Promotion Section, Total Army Personnel Agency, autovon 221-9340 or (202) 325-9340.

DACOWITS was established in 1951 by the Secretary of Defense. It is composed of 33 civilian men and women who are selected on the basis of their outstanding reputations in business, the professions, public service and their records of civic leadership.

The purpose of the committee is to advise the Secretary of Defense on matters that concern women in the service. Committee members are appointed by the Secretary of Defense for a period of three years and they meet semi-annually in Washington, D.C.

Galer has served as a representative for the 97th House District of GA since 1976. She is also active in several national and local civic organizations including: the Georgia Women's Political Caucus, Women's Equity Action League, Seroptomist International, American Association of University Women, Daughters of the American Revolution and the transportation committee of the Columbus Chamber of Commerce.

Advisory committee strives to better service

By David P. Smith
197th Family Practice Clinic

Something brand new is happening to military medicine at the 197th Family Practice Clinic. Patients are becoming involved in the day-to-day operations of the clinic, through a patient-run organization called a Clinic Advisory Committee. This recently reformed group has operated on a small scale, but, if initial success is any indication, has tremendous potential.

A Clinic Advisory Committee is a cooperative effort between clinic personnel and patients, with the goal of all being the improvement of medical services.

While the committee leadership works closely with the medical staff providing advice on non-medical matters, it is primarily an organization of and for the patients.

Rather than complaining or suffering in silence, patients now have the opportunity for involvement in personally improving the system.

A committee is organized into sub-committees, with each sub-committee focusing on an area of interest. These areas of interest can include Services (improving scheduling, telephone services, etc.), Patient Relations (liaison between patient and doctor), Patient Education (printed material and speakers), Newsletters and many others.

Achieving excellence in health care delivery requires the cooperative efforts of both patients and staff. Patients of the 197th Family Practice Clinic who are interested in being involved in this dynamic group should contact Laura Bonner, 687-1881 after 2 p.m. or Tracy Price, 682-4353.

Physician's viewpoint

I am convinced as a physician and Officer in Charge of the 197th Family Practice Clinic that to really improve our clinic's services I need feedback from patients. When patients are unhappy with our clinic for whatever reason, they usually don't tell me. They will discuss it with their neighbors and friends, but not with the clinic staff.

The primary purpose, and there are many, of a Clinic Advisory Committee is to give the patients an opportunity to change the system. This requires that I as a physician be willing to make

School of Americas graduates 30

By Marco Morales
School of Americas

Thirty Salvadoran officers and noncommissioned officers graduated March 4 from the Small unit Training Management course at the U.S. Army School of the Americas.

The six-week course is designed to prepare company grade officers and NCOs to plan, conduct and manage small unit training such as individual training, skills qualification testing, instructional system development and war games.

During their training at USARSA, these Salvadorans also completed the Faculty Development (FADED) course. FADED provided them with the theories and practice of performance-oriented training concepts, methods and techniques. As a final requirement, each student successfully prepared and presented a five-minute, 20 minute and 50-minute class on selected subjects.

Guest speaker for the graduation ceremony was Col. Francisco J. Martinez, who is the senior guest instructor from El Salvador assigned to USARSA.

The next iteration of this course is scheduled to begin in late April with 59 students, 38 of whom will be from El Salvador.

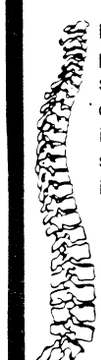
Convicted soldier faces 50 years

Staff Judge Advocate

In a contested trial that concluded Feb. 18, Sgt. David L. Munday of Company9C, 197th Support Battalion, 197th Infantry Brigade, was convicted by a general court-martial of the crimes of rape and carnal knowledge. These crimes related to testimony by Munday's former stepdaughter that she was forced to have sexual intercourse with him.



This young girl, who turned eleven on the first day of the Court-Martial, told the Court that the incidents occurred in both Germany and Fort Mitchell at a time when she was between the ages of seven and nine. Her testimony was corroborated by medical evidence and expert opinions from two doctors and a social worker.

Despite a defense case that included claims of innocence by the accused, the Court-Martial panel, which was composed of six officer members at the accused's request, took little time to return a verdict of guilty to all charges.

Following his conviction, these same members then heard both aggravation evidence and evidence in extenuation and mitigation before sentencing Munday to be reduced to the grade of Pvt. 1, to forfeit all pay and allowances and to be confined for a period of fifty years.

Munday, who had more than 10 years of military service, will serve his sentence at the U.S. Army Disciplinary Barracks at Fort Leavenworth, Kansas.

Soldiers earn EIB

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

Soldier, you have five minutes to get to the end point without being killed by a sniper. Go!

At the signal, SSgt. Micheal Mims dives to the ground and rolls to cover. He pops out his head from time to time to search for the enemy.

Although both men are from the 29th Infantry Regiment, the sniper really is the enemy for he and the clock are all that stand between Mims and the coveted Expert Infantrymans badge.

This station is one of 31 each Regiment soldier had to complete last week to earn the badge.

According to SFC William Ward, A Co., 1st Bn., Inf. Regt., as difficult as this station sounds it's not the one people fail the most. "It's on the simple tasks that the men make mistakes," Ward said. "For instance, they forget to check the backblast area before releasing the safety when setting up the LAW."

"If each task isn't done properly it's a no-go," he said, "They are allowed mistakes on three tasks during the first round; then they retest on each of the missed tasks."

"If they miss them again they're out." Ward said.

More than 350 Regiment soldiers participated in the EIB testing. Only 11 earned the badge.

Mims encounter with the enemy was a successful one, and he earned his badge. "I wanted the badge real bad." Mims jubilantly said between gasps for breath after his battle with the course. "I've always looked at people wearing the badge with envy."

The remaining 10 Expert Infantrymen are: 1st Lt. James Brown, Co. C, 4th Bn., 30th Inf. Regt.; 1st Lt. Jack Liston, HQ Co., 1st Bn., 507th PIR; SSgts. Kent Brewer and Wayne Gwyn of Co. A, 1st Bn., 29th Inf. Regt.; SSgts. Lewis Johnson and Emilio Nadina, Co. B, 1st Bn., 29th Inf. Regt.; SSgt. Bradley Stroud, Co. D, 1st Bn., 29th Inf. Regt. and SSgt. Michael Speer and Sgt. Eric Riley, Co. A, 2nd Bn., 29th Inf. Regt.

Billy Bob keeps class interested

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

"Ho Hum," a student moans, "it's time for another boring class." In many cases that may be so, but not in the Demolitions Techniques Class given by the Engineer Branch of the Infantry School.

They take a unique approach to teaching basic demolitions by using a straight man, funny man method of instruction.

The class starts with a basic outline of the class by primary instructor and straight man SFC Timothy Cline. He then calls for his demonstrator and assistant instructor Billy Bob.

As soon as Billy Bob steps from behind the partition, it's obvious he is the funny man. He wears a racoon head bonnet, long underwear, colorful shorts and cowboy boots. "Yeah sarge,." he says.

Billy Bob assures Cline he's studied the manual once and is therefore an expert, a "Demolitions man."

The banter continues drawing loud guffaws from the students, who are so intrested in the show, they hardly realize they are learning.

Billy Bob is 1st Lt. Dominic Macaluso. He inherited the funny man role from Capt. Chris Irwin, alias Buddy Row Kudzoo, who said this approach to the class dates back to the '70s.

Macaluso said, "I watched Capt. Irwin and then added my own personal touch."

"I wore anything and everything that was outrageous and eyecatching," he said, "because I'm there to get their attention."

According to Macaluso, his only problem is keeping a straight face, but, he said he knows it's a must as an instructor.

Macaluso said he is aware of how important his part is. "Demolitions are hazardous, and Billy Bob's antics make them think." he said.

They see what Billy Bob does wrong, and the humor makes them remember and do it right when it comes to the hands-on portion of the class, he said.

some changes and perhaps see things from a different perspective. But if it increases patient satisfaction and improves health care delivery, I believe it is well worthwhile.

The idea of a patient advisory group has been tried recently in the civilian community with resounding success. While conceptually this is new, in reality, we are simply using a principle that all successful corporations know: To stay successful, discover and meet the needs of the consumer.

That's my goal, to have a clinic that stays close to the needs of the patients. A Clinic Advisory Committee offers a unique opportunity to accomplish that goal and I'm all for it.

Being a member of a military family involves a lot of waiting, sacrifice and compromise. Concerned individuals are attempting to alleviate these problems at the 197th Family Practice Clinic. Two staff physicians, Drs. Smith and Cardinal, meet with members of a Clinic Advisory Committee in a constructive sharing of time, ideas, and energy. We work together by communicating our wants, needs and expectations.

The military medical services are designed, and exist, for soldiers and their family members.

Working with, not against, those who are dedicated to enhancing the physical and emotional health of soldiers and their families is the only way to better care.

Area churches prepare for Easter

By Jeffrey L. Smith
197th Infantry Brigade Chaplain

LENT — (lent), n. 1. An annual season of fasting and penitence in preparation for Easter, beginning on Ash Wednesday and including the forty weekdays before Easter, observed by the Roman Catholic Anglican and other churches.

"Water, water everywhere and not a drop to drink!" laments the survivor in the lifeboat. What a terrible dilemma that must be to be surrounded by a substance you desperately need but, because of the added salt and minerals, it becomes a path to death instead of life.

A terrible situation yet, not unlike the situation many of us experience in our journey of life. The very things we pursue — wealth, power and prestige are often the things that turn out to be poison for us. For, in our quest for the temporary, we often lose sight of the things eternal. In our race for success or higher rank, we sometimes compromise those attitudes and values that are the basis of a meaningful existence. Then we wake up one day, look around, and say, "things, things everywhere, but where is the meaning in my life?"

The season of Lent, of which we are in the middle, is a time of penitence, a time of reflection and preparation when we are offered, once again, the chance to turn back to our fundamental values. Lent is the time when we can acknowledge to ourselves and to God that we have allowed "things" to displace the important. With this also comes a turn, for recognition isn't enough, back to the direction of God of Creation who loves us and desires to commune with us and provide for us.

There is a parable told of a wild dove and a sparrow sitting on a branch together. The sparrow asked the dove what a snowflake weighed. The dove responded, "nothing more than nothing." "In that case," said the sparrow, "I have a wonderful story to tell you." "One day, I sat on a limb near the trunk of a tree as it began to snow. Not heavily as a storm, but quietly as in a dream. I counted each flake that landed on the branch," the sparrow continued, "exactly 3,273,294 fell on that branch, when the next snowflake fell, weighing nothing more than nothing, the branch broke off." With that the sparrow flew away.

The dove, a symbol of peace since the days of Noah, thought for a moment and said to itself, "Perhaps there is only one additional voice needed before peace can come to earth."

Most people have, at one point in life or another, attempted to redirect their life. Most of us have also fallen back into old patterns of living, reaching for the material in our search for security. Perhaps there is still hope for us. Maybe there is only one more attempt needed before our lives can finally be put on the right track. Use this season of Lent to reflect on the possibilities of a full and meaningful life. Make the needed change of direction away from "things"back to true happiness and meaning in life. Just remember, God hasn't left us; we are only in need of changing direction to experience his presence again.

2-58th 'Patriots' hold first Prayer Breakfast

Chap. (Col.) Roy Mathis speaks at Prayer Breakfast hosted recently by 2nd Bn., 58th Inf., 2nd ITB.

By Jo Ann Stamey
USAIC Chaplain's Office

On Feb. 28, the 2nd Battalion, 58th Infantry (the "Patriot" Battalion), 2nd ITB, held its first Prayer Breakfast since arriving at its new starship.

Lt. Col. Robert Frizzo, battalion commander, welcomed the "patriots" and spoke of love of country and what it means to be a true patriot.

Mr. and Mrs. James Stubbs provided special music. Chap. (Col.) Roy Mathis was the guest speaker. When Chaplain Mathis was asked to speak, he was jokingly told, "keep the message short, challenging and patriotic!" The message was all of these.

Chaplain Mathis spoke on "How to be a Winner." He relayed the story of David and Goliath in militarese. Four lessons learned from his message were: "good is greater than evil; attitude is more important than ability; courage is contagious--take a stand for what's right and your followers will fall in behind you as a leader; and "in the end, God is always the deciding factor."

Chaplain Mathis said, "Obstacles are those interruptions and character-building situations that jump in front of us when we take our eyes off our goal — keep your eyes on your goal. When we put things in perspective," he said "the winner always looks for the answer — the loser looks for excuses."

Chaplains sponsor a Burger King experience

USAIC Chaplain's Office

Normally one doesn't associate Burger King with the chapel program, unless it's to grab a quick bite after church on Sunday. But soldiers of the 36th Engineer Group have close ties with our local Burger King.

On February 24, 50 soldiers of the 43d Engineer Battalion gathered at the chapel to do their physical training warm-up exercises before going on a 3-mile run with Chap. Dave Penland, the Group Chaplain.

Following a good PT session, they headed into the chapel for a Burger King breakfast, accompanied by some good spiritual fitness training in the form of singing and a devotional message.

The Fort Benning Chaplain's non-appropriated fund paid for the meal, and soldiers were asked to make a small donation to help with the expense. Burger King donated hats to participants.

The program is designed to meet the spiritual, physical and emotional needs of soldiers and is sponsored by the group chaplains, Chap. Penland and Chap. Bullard, once a month for units within the command.

MARSHAL'S VIEWPOINT

By Steve Baker
Provost Marshal's Office

Fort Benning's parking lots are under "attack"! However, not by any foreign power. It is our own personnel or personnel from local areas that are our enemies. The attack is on our privately owned vehicles. The primary objectives for these attacks are larcenies of stereo equipment, tape decks, radar detectors and other items of value belonging to our soldiers, dependents and visitors.

Ann M. McDonald

A Fort Benning MP demonstrates how easy it is to steal a camera from an unsecured vehicle.

What can we do and what are we doing to counter these attacks (larcenies)? We as individuals can and should:

- Keep a record of all serial numbers.
- Mark valuables for identification.
- Always lock your POV and never leave the keys in the ignition.
- Put packages, clothing, or other articles out of plain view, lock in the trunk or out of sight.
- Park in lighted areas if possible.
- Report any suspicious individuals in parking lots to the Military Police.
- Unit commanders can start an interior guard in parking lots of company areas to help protect POVs.

Military Police have increased the frequency of checking parking lots and are stopping individuals hanging around. Through our combined efforts, we can reduce and hopefully make it too hazardous for the thief to attack our POVs while parked and unattended.

ASK THE JUDGE

Staff Judge Advocate's Office

Q: I am thinking about buying a life insurance policy. are there any clauses in civilian insurance policies that soldiers need to be careful about?

A: Yes, all soldiers should be aware of "war clauses." These clauses may differ with each policy, but often state that the beneficiaries of the policy cannot receive the insurance proceeds if you die in : 1) combat, 2) military training or 3) because you are on active duty status at death.

For example, if you died in an accident enroute to a new assignment, such a clause may disqualify your death from the insurance coverage. In such a case, your beneficiaries will get nothing.

In one case an insurance company denied coverage when the soldier died in a civilian airplane being chartered by an international peace keeping force.

Do not expect to see the words "war clause" clearly printed on your policy; you will have to read carefully, as they are often found in the small print of the insurance contract. They also may be included in the credit life insurance contract you sign as part of a car loan.

In credit life insurance loans, the dealer requires you to buy an insurance policy in the amount of the outstanding loan, naming the dealer as the insurance beneficiary. Thus, if you die, the dealer gets the insurance money to pay off the car loan.

However, if the policy contains a "war clause," and you die on active duty, the dealer might not get paid, even though you have been paying the insurance premiums. The dealer can then sue your estate for the remaining amount of the loan, leaving that much less money for your surviving family.

The best protection you have against such situations is to read your policy carefully before you sign it and/or the loan agreement. Take your time, examine the fine print, and ask questions about anything you do not understand. Know what you are agreeing to; insurance policies with "war clauses" are worthless to soldiers. Ask to have the clause stricken.

Please report to the Staff Judge Advocate's Office dealers or insurance companies that refuse to cooperate.

Joseph Molloy wins the Infantry Marathon

Runners of the half marathon gather around the start line moments before a M-109 Howitzer blast sent the competitors on their 13-mile journey.

1st Lt. Joseph M. Molloy takes a few last steps one second before crossing the finish line of the Infantry Marathon with a time of 2:25:08.

Mark S. Sternberg, 77, crosses the finish line of the half marathon. Sternberg, a native of Columbus, was the oldest competitor of either race.

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Nearly 800 runners competed here last week in the fifth running of the Infantry Marathon and Half Marathon.

Competing as individuals and as teams, marathon runners ran a new and hilly 26-mile course on an overcast day that saw last year's winner again cross the finish line before any other competitor.

1 Lt. Joseph M. Molloy, 26, from Co. C, 303 MI Bn., 504th MI Bde., Ft. Lewis, Wash., crossed the finish line nearly 13 minutes before the second place finisher with a time of 2:25:08.

Overall winner for woman marathon runners with a time of 3:24:07 was 1 Lt. Sandra E. Draper, 25, from HHD, 260th Quartermaster Bn., at Hunter Army Airfield.

First-place male runner of the half marathon was SP4 Jay L. Wood, 30, from Co. C, 1475th Engineer Bn., Utah Army National Guard. Wood finished with a time of 1:07:25.

First-place female runner of the half marathon was Capt. Debra L. Muylaert, 28, Co. A, 701st Military Police Bn., at Ft. McClellan, Ala., with a time of 1:25:17.

Record 1,910 deer taken during Benning's 87-88 season

By Deck Major
Fish and Wildlife Specialist

The smoke has settled, and the 1987-1988 Fort Benning deer season is history.

Final weapon cleaning has surely been accomplished by now and guns are hanging securely on their racks.

Blaze orange clothing has been thrown in a back corner of the closet or perhaps is hanging out of the way for the next several months.

Before thoughts of stringers full of crappie and huge gobblers brought to call totally occupy all our waking spring moments, let's take some time to reflect on last fall.

Of all the hunting done on post, deer is the most preferred game animal. Last season, 2,758 deer permits were issued, allowing us hunters the privilege of shivering in deer stands during the pre-dawn darkness and/or sighting down on a trophy buck.

On the positive side, a record 1,910 deer were taken. Reported post deer weights averaged 82.5 pounds, which translates to nearly 104,200 pounds of venison.

Almost 41 percent of our hunters were successful, and I never talked to anyone during the season who didn't see a few deer.

To many, the opportunity is 80 plus percent of the enjoyment.

On the negative side, average buck and doe weights dropped five pounds from the 1986-1987 harvest totals.

There are a few reasons our deer are smaller. Some causes are out of our control. These include amount of rainfall; nut and fruit tree production; herd genetics; and geographical latitude.

We can control other causes, and the most important one is deer density (animals per square mile).

Presently, density models from our harvest records show that each square mile of deer range on post is holding 55 65 deer.

No one knows for sure, but there are approximately 275 square miles of deer habitat at Fort Benning.

With some basic calculations, one can then compute the deer population on post to be about 16,500 animals.

Proper carrying capacity (the proper amount of food, water, and cover for an animal in a given amount of habitat) for deer in this region of the state is 45 per square mile.

With some additional calculations, you'll find that we are holding about 4,125 deer over what our habitat will properly support.

Basically, there is only so much food out in the woods, if there are a lot of individuals sharing the same "pie", something has to give and usually the first to go is body weight.

By far, the most important food is acorns. Although thousands of bushels are produced each year on post, they are prime food for turkeys, squirrels and other rodents, several songbirds, wood ducks and quail as well as deer.

How can you help solve the problem? The most logical solution is to harvest more deer, especially does.

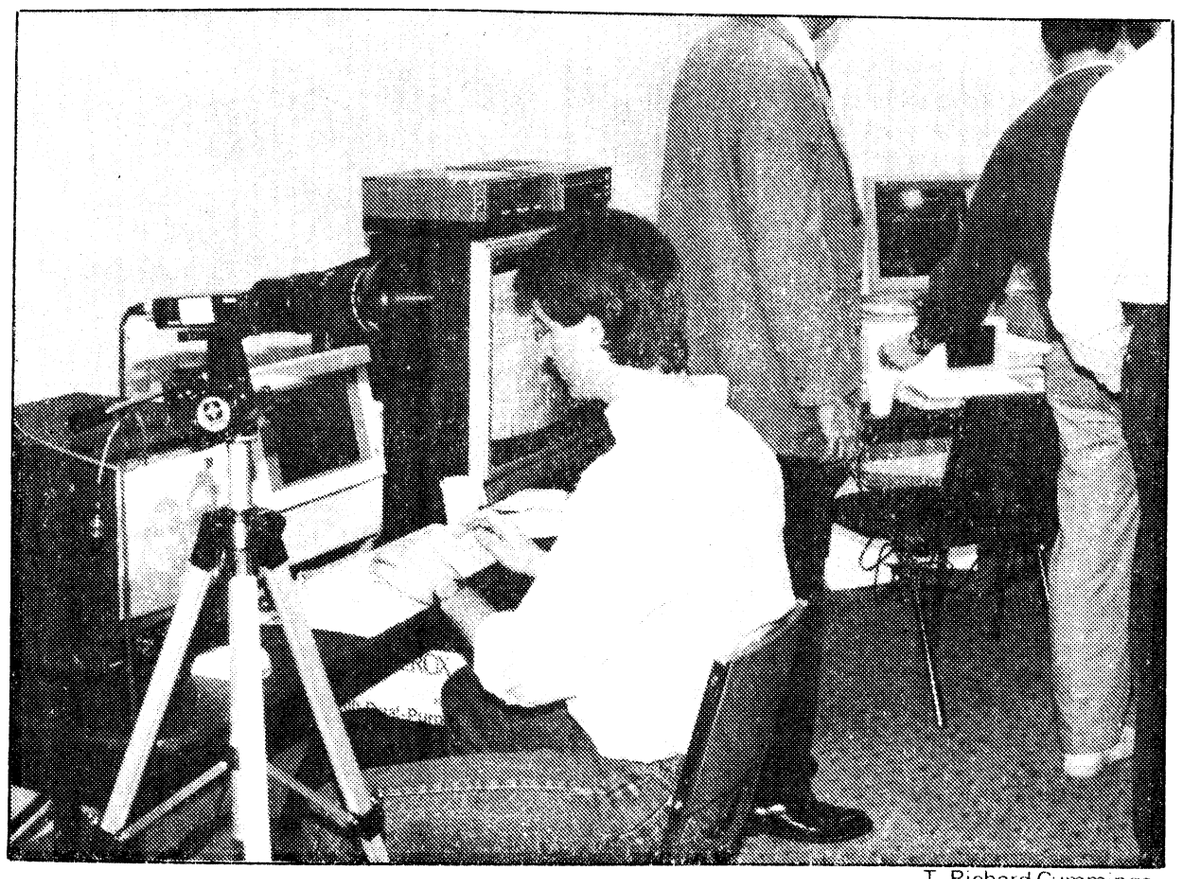
Although our season is now liberal, it is not liberal enough to even control our herd. That is, our present harvest rate is below what is produced each summer.

If you're interested, do some additional figuring assuming a 2-doe to 1-buck fall ratio and a 0.5 fawn to doe fall ratio. Remember that we harvested 1,910 deer this past season, and you'll begin to understnd why you got 30-40 pounds of venison from your deer.

Our problem can be corrected but it's going to take a concerted effort from every hunter. We've got a few months, let's think about it.

Spencer students visit Auburn University

By T. Richard Cummings
Spencer High School



Auburn Univsersity hosted its annual Engineering Day Feb. 26. The event is designed to acquaint students with the specific fields they may be able to enter upon graduation from high school.

Students in Spencer's Math and Science clubs, and the advanced math and science classes were given the opportunity to go on the day-long excursion. The science department head, and sponsor for this trip, Mr. Edmondson, has been bringing Spencer students to E Day for about five years.

After signing in, each of the students visit the various displays. There were well over 50 displays, including biology, chemistry and computer programming. The eight specific categories for display were: Aerodynamic, Textile, Civil, Computer, Mechanical, Electrical, Chemical and Biochemical Engineering.

"The computer technology was quite fascinating," stated Rob Tesdahl.

By the end of the day, all students agreed that they had enjoyed the trip and had learned a great deal from it.

T. Richard Cummings

A Spencer High School student checks out a computer at Auburn University's Engineering Day.

One of the physics-oriented experiments involved dropping an egg from the top of a building without breaking it.

"It's always fascinating to watch full grown engineering majors participate in the egg drop," Edmondson said.

60 percent of energy at Benning is natural gas

By Becky Ray
Energy Management Office

About 60 percent of the energy used on Fort Benning is in the form of natural gas.

Natural gas has been called "nature's most perfect fuel" because it burns cleanly and efficiently.

When burned completely, natural gas produces water vapor and carbon dioxide. It is the cleanest burning and least polluting fuel.

Because it can be used in its original state, natural gas is also more efficient than many other forms of energy.

Electricity, for instance, must be generated using gas, oil or coal, processes in which about two-thirds of the primary energy source is lost in the conversion process.

Natural gas has a better safety record than most forms of energy, but leaks can occur through misuse or accident. Because the gas is odorless, a harmless chemical odorant is added to it to make leaks easy to detect.

If you smell this odor (similar to rotten eggs), try to locate its source. Check for blown-out pilot lights and stove burners left partially on. If you can't find the source of the gas or if the problem is something you can't correct, call the Engineer Work Order Section, 545-2135.

If you discover a gas leak indoors, open windows for ventilation and don't light matches or switch anything on or off. If the odor is extremely strong, leave the building and call the Work Order Section from a neighbor's phone. If you notice this odor outdoors, call the Work Order Section and report the location. Someone is available around the clock to respond to emergency calls.

Countdown for filing income taxes 35 days

EDITOR'S NOTE: With the tax filing deadline only 35 days away it's time to get your forms and records together. The following information was provided by the Armed Forces Press Service to help you with your return.

What's tax exempt

Because there are exemptions on certain military payments, there is confusion in the minds of some service members as to what is taxable and what is exempt.

To set the record straight, here's the difference:

Taxable income includes:

- Active duty pay
- Reserve training pay
- Re-enlistment bonus
- Service academy pay
- Amounts received by retired personnel serving as instructor in Junior ROTC programs
- Lump-sum payments upon separation or release to inactive duty
- Military retirement pay based on age or length of service.

The following items are not taxable:

- Quarters allowance or variable housing allowance
- Subsistence allowance
- Clothing allowance
- Family separation allowance
- Station housing allowance
- Cost-of-living allowance
- Moving and storage expenses provided in kind or reimbursements for actual expenses for permanent-change-of-station moves
- Benefits under Servicemen's Group Life Insurance
- Death gratuity benefits
- Forfeited pay, but not fines
- Certan disability retirement pensions
- Veterans Administration benefits, including VA insurance dividends

There are experts to help you with every tax problem. Contact your unit tax advisor for more information.

Check for accuracy

To those expecting a tax refund this year, a quick check for accuracy can help avoid mistakes that might slow tax return processing, according to the Internal Revenue Service.

Carefully prepared, easy-to-read returns can be processed faster, the IRS advises.

Once the return is completed, the IRS suggests that taxpayers consult the following check list:

- Have you attached all your W-2 Forms, "Wage and Tax Statements?"
- Have you attached all the supporting schedules to your Form 1040?
- Is your name and Social Security number on each schedule?
- Are the names and Social Security numbers of dependents 5 years old or over on your return?
- Is your arithmetic correct?
- Are all of your entries on the proper lines?
- If you rounded off your numbers, did you round off consistently?
- Is your handwriting legible?
- When you used the tax table, did you follow the line across to the correct column for your filing status?
- Did you sign and date your return? Remember, if it's a joint return, your spouse must sign, too.
- Did you use the peel-off label, and is the information on the label correct?
- Have you made necessary corrections on the peel-off label?
- Have you retained a copy of your return for your records?
- Did you remember to put the correct postage on the preaddressed envelope? If the return has several attachments, additional postage may be required.

Use peel-off label

Many delays in processing federal income tax returns could be avoided if taxpayers used the labels and envelopes that accompany their tax packages.

The peel-off label, which contains the taxpayer's name, address and Social Security number, expedites accurate processing at IRS service centers to avoid delaying a refund check.

The IRS advises taxpayers to use the label, even if corrections are necessary. For example, in the case of a change of address, the correction should be made directly on the label.

Taxpayers who use a tax preparer need to furnish the peel-off label to the preparer.

One of the most common and troublesome errors that can be averted is listing an incorrect or illegible Social Security number. This is a major cause of delayed refund checks.

The coded, pre-addressed envelope ensures that the return is sent to the proper IRS service center.

Once the envelope reaches there, the coding ensures speedy entry into the processing system.

Taxpayers should make sure they use the proper postage when mailing their returns, IRS adds.

Most returns require one first-class stamp; however, thicker returns, usually containing more than four items (i.e., Form 1040 and three attachments) require more postage. Returns that are sent back to taxpayers for additional postage will not be considered timely filed, even if they were originally mailed on April 15.

Let IRS figure tax

For individuals who find working with numbers somewhat confusing, the Internal Revenue Service will figure taxes for you if you use Forms 1040EZ, 1040A and certain 1040s.

Those desiring this assistance must fill in certain items on the return, attach W-2 Forms, sign the return and send it in before the April 15 deadline.

To qualify for this service, taxpayers must have an income of $50,000 or less, not itemizing, not claimed as a dependent on another person's return and must not use "Foreign Earned Income" (Form 2555).

Income must include only wages, salaries, tips, interest, dividends, pensions and annuities.

The agency will figure the tax in the way that benefits the taxpayer the most, IRS stresses.

Since eligible persons need only complete certain questions, IRS says it will probably finish their returns faster and with less opportunity for error.

If a refund is due, IRS will figure the amount and send it to the taxpayer. If additional tax is owed, it will be computed and a bill sent for the balance.

Neither interest or the penalty for late payment will be charged if the bill for additional tax is paid within 30 days of the notice date or by the due date of the return, whichever is later.

For more information, taxpayers should check the instructions in their federal tax packages.

Spencer gets 12 in honor band

By T. Richard Cummings
Spencer High School

The All City Senior High Honor Band held its concert Feb. 20. The band, which was comprised of 71 students from five of the eight area high schools, included 12 students from Spencer High.

Auditions for the honor band were held in January and only the best students were chosen for the annual performance.

The lucky few who made the band met for the first time as a group Feb. 19. They had only those few hours after school Friday and until 4:30 p.m. Saturday to prepare for the concert that night at 7:30 p.m.

The guest conductor, Dr. David Gregory, has taught in Columbus before, but is now the coordinator of Instrumental Music for the Clayton County School System. He has received many awards for his expertise in conducting as well as his bands' performances.

Dr. Gregory said of the band, "This group is very high caliber — definitely among the best high school honor bands I have conducted."

The Spencer students found the clinic to be a great learning experience. Denise Davis said, "Dr. Gregory is an excellent conductor. He teaches in a very comfortable type atmosphere, but you're still always on your toes."

Bass player, Jeffrey Talley said of the clinic, "There's a standard that each musician must live up to. Everyone plays well. Usually even the least talented student is as good as the best student in their own band."

The 12 Spencer honor band members include: Christine Perez, Taneshia Fitch, Jeffrey Meacham, Tina Pierson, Valencia Walker, and Denise Davis on woodwinds; James Ford, Larry Nelson, Yvette Jones, Larry Barker, and Jeffrey Talley play brass instruments; and Robert Tesdahl plays percussion.

Post powerlifters head for qualifying meet

Ann M. McDonald

Garnet Boudreau strains under the weight of the barbells as Franklin Roach looks on.

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

One might think a Medical Activity first sergeant and an executive officer from Company A, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment would be unlikely training partners. But powerlifters SFC Garnet Boudreau and 1st Lt. Franklin Roach will be making tracks to Aberdeen Proving Ground, Maryland soon, with hopes of heaving enough weight to participate in the qualification meet for the Army trials.

Although they both have been lifting on their own for many years, this story began about a year and a half ago.

Boudreau's buddy told him about a man he saw at the gym who had done 10 repetitions of squats with 600 pounds of weight. Although Boudreau thought his buddy was pretty reliable, he didn't really think it was true until he saw the feat for himself.

"As soon as I saw him I knew that he was the person I needed to train with," he said. "The next time I saw him in the gym, I asked him to train with me, and we've been inseparable ever since.

Through working together, they have learned more about their sport and have helped each other improve. "Boudreau helped me get acquainted with new equipment that was developed during my [illegible] from powerlifting, and I showed him some techniques I knew he wasn't familiar with," Roach said.

With the competition near, the two train four times a week, concentrating on one of the three lifts they will perform during the meet, the Squat, the Bench Press and the Dead lift.

The winner of the meet is determined by the highest weight total of the three lifts.

Roach, who will compete in the 242-pound class, hopes to lift 2,000 pounds while Boudreau, who will compete in the 220-pound class, hopes to lift 1,900 pounds. The men are confident they will qualify for the meets with those weight amounts.

Both said the reason behind lifting that much weight is the challenge. Each encourages the other each time they [illegible] which at times is more than 700 pounds.

Storing up the [illegible] to heft that much weight requires [illegible] about 6,000 calories each [illegible] "Because of this, we go to a lot of 'all you can eat' establishments to cut down costs," Boudreau said.

Although their immediate goal is the Maryland meet, they will still train together but each has a different goal. Boudreau plans to compete in the first-ever post powerlifting competition, and Roach, who [illegible] bodybuilder, plans to compete for the title of [illegible].

OOPS! Sorry!

The Bayonet incorrectly identified the USAIC Basketball Champions for the second half season as HHC, 2nd Battalion, 69th Infantry. The champion was HHC, 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor who beat HHC, 197th Support Battalion 57-50.

The staff of The Bayonet regrets the error.

2-10 FA grabs win, upsets Sep. Units

By George Mingee
197th Infantry Brigade correspondent

The 2nd Battalion, 10th Field Artillery upset the Separate Units 40-36, and took the championship title in the 197th Infantry Brigade Officers Basketball League.

When the opening buzzer sounded and the ball was tipped, it was obvious it would be a brutal battle neither team had come to lose.

Both teams almost matched baskets throughout the first half as Separate Units took a slim 20-18 half time lead.

Dwight Smith, a guard from 2-10, chalked up 10 hard-charging points in the first half, followed by teammate Mike Jones with 4.

Separate Units scoring was shared by Ken Talley and Tim Brown who both had 7 points in the first half.

The second half commenced with a close battle, until Separate Units began to take charge, stretching out a 8-point lead late in the game.

However, 2-10's persistent [illegible] and rebounding [illegible] the combination of Smith and Jones, instilled the comeback for the win.

Smith and Jones finished the game with 14 points apiece.

The win almost turned out to be doubly rewarding for the Sep. Units team because they had earlier won a 50-49 shootout over 1st Battalion, 58th Infantry, to advance to the finals.

Sep. Units was paced by Ken Talley, who scored 17 points, and Edward Frimmel with 14 points in a demanding and very physical game.

The 1st Bn., 58th Inf. team never slowed down, not even for a moment, but the Sep. Units team always stayed one step and one-point ahead.

With 11 seconds remaining Skip Johnson of 1-58 was at the foul line for 1-1 with the score 48-50. Johnson sank the first shot and missed the second making the score 49-50.

The Sep. Units team regained possession of the ball but consequently ran the clock out to win the game.

Jury finds 8 workers not guilty

Eight present or former civilian employees accused of illegally giving away government property at Fort Benning were found not guilty in Columbus federal court last week. Several Fort Benning civilian employees had been charged with giving away government property according to a grand jury.

Eight were found not guilty on trials held last week. Nine others pleaded guilty to a reduced charge of theft less than $100. Perjury charges against them were dropped. Another employee pleaded guilty of theft over $100. The guilty pleas were made before last week's trials began.

The investigation used undercover agents to collect evidence of an internal bartering system in which employees gave away government property and services of government property from other workers for personal use.

The barterers involved trades of building materials, camping equipment, according to Sara Allison, U.S. attorney.

Those found not guilty are:

John E. Rustin, formerly B. Buckhannan, Danny Woods, Dallas Lee, Carlton Bevans, Theodis Upshaw, Lloyd Mitchell Childs and Charles Chambers.

Those who pleaded guilty of theft under $100 are:

Michael Dubose, William Mercer, Jerry Lewis Hicks, Born, Ralph Rogers, Albert Hudson Jr., Jimmy Lee James, Bernard Darby and Jeffrey E. Adams.

Nathaniel Askew pleaded guilty of theft over $100.

Taft visits here to view training

By Ann M. McDonald

The Deputy Secretary of Defense, William H. Taft, made a brief stop at Fort Benning last week.

Taft's visit to Benning enabled him to see exactly what kind of training occurs and the types of weapons used on post.

While here, Taft observed Bradley Capabilities Exercises, 3 Rangers in a combat demonstration. After viewing the demonstrations, Taft dined with soldiers and spoke briefly to them.

Taft was appointed to his position by President Ronald Reagan in January 1984 and was sworn into office on February 24, 1984.

He is a native of Washington D.C. and attended Yale University where he earned his bachelors degree and later attended Harvard Law School.

After finishing his education, Taft served in many key positions within the Federal government. He is married to Alice Lindsay Taft and they have three children.

Former WAC director talks here

By Ann M. McDonald

Last week the former Director of the Women's Army Corps, Retired Maj. Gen. Mary E. Clarke, spoke at Fort Benning's observance of Black History/Women's History Month.

Clarke is the first female to obtain the rank of major general and the first ever to command a major unit in the Army.

Clarke's speech focused on the history of the women in the military, in particular, her history.

She began her career as an enlisted woman at Fort Des Moines, Iowa in August 1945. She said her reasons for volunteering to join the Army were for patriotism and because she saw Lana Turner in a pair of fatigues in "Keep the Powder Dry."

"I know it certainly wasn't for the money," she said, "because my base pay was $21 per month compared to $50 per month for the men." According to Clarke, the pay was not the only difference. She said that there were no retirement benefits for women until 1959.

Clarke said she believes that most women had the same patriotic attitude toward the military. She said 30,000 women applied for the 500 positions available to women when the Women's Auxiliary Army Corps was established in 1942. She said women in the Army have come a long way, especially since the Women's Army Corps was disbanded in 1978.

Although women in the military have come the farthest in the past 10 years, she said she believes that women made their breakthrough when Officers Candidate School and basic training schools were open.

Clarke herself was the driving force behind male drill sergeants training females.

"I remember when I was the commander of the WACs, and the first man was assigned to me," she said. "He swore up and down it was some kind of mistake." Clarke said she squared away the situation real fast.

She said the reason she wanted men to train women is so they could see that women were doing the same things they were to earn promotions.

Clarke said there is no place women can't go if they set their sights on what they want.

She added that "the climate is right for women to do exactly what they want to do."

Officers can leave service voluntarily announces Army

Army News Service

Officers are being offered the chance to voluntarily leave the active service by Sept. 30 as the Army announced recently.

The move, designed to help the Army meet personnel strength and budget cutbacks for this fiscal year, is one of several recent personnel actions.

In announcing these programs, Lt. Gen. Alfred S. Clark, deputy chief of staff for personnel, stated that this personnel decision was made only after "The Army leadership [has] and fought and fought to preclude initiating these actions."

"The guiding principle from the leadership has been to execute the Congressionally mandated officer cuts with minimal impact on readiness and the Officer Corps. This is being accomplished by choosing officer management actions that realize the required number needed to reduce strength levels, with priority given to the voluntary release of officers," said Brig. Gen. John A. Renner, director of military personnel management, office of the deputy chief of staff for personnel. The voluntary early out program does not apply to warrant officers and those in the Judge Advocate General, Chaplain, Medical and Dental Corps.

Eligible officers will be considered in three categories:

• Category A. Regular Army and other than regular Army first lieutenants who have been nonselected for promotion to captain at least once. These officers may apply for early release. Regardless of the length of their remaining active duty service obligation, those individuals who graduated from a service academy, attended flight school or a fully funded graduate school, or who received an ROTC scholarship have top priority for early release. However, they must agree to serve in the National Guard or Reserve unit for one year. Officers in this category who did not graduate from the U.S. Military Academy and received an ROTC scholarship, etc., do not have to commit to serve in a National Guard or Reserve unit. However, they must request assignment to the Individual Ready Reserve to complete their statutory military service obligation.

• Category B. Regular Army and other than regular Army lieutenants and captains who have 12 months or less remaining to their service obligation and are not graduates of a fully funded advanced civil schooling program. These officers must agree to serve in a National Guard or Reserve unit for one year and should include with their application a statement of acceptance from the Reserve or National Guard unit.

• Category C. Regular Army and other than regular Army officers in all grades who are not included in Category A and B and who wish to separate or retire and who require a waiver of a nonstatutory active duty service obligation. Up to

Crime Stoppers cut 2nd birthday cake

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Area policemen and leaders from Columbus, Phenix City and Fort Benning gathered at the Columbus Hilton March 14 to celebrate the second birthday of Crime Stoppers.

In a tactic to fight crimes that may otherwise go unreported, citizens are asked to make anonymous calls to police hotline, 571-5858, to report information on crimes.

After its second year, Crime Stoppers has proved quite successful, according to Sgt. Jack McCoy, Columbus police sergeant and Sal Dias Verson, Crime Stoppers' chairman. They reported during the celebration that since its inception, concerned citizens have made 5,018 calls resulting in more than $638,000 in property recovered and drugs seized.

The citizens' good deeds didn't go unrewarded. Almost $23,000 was paid for 138 tips that led to arrests and convictions.

In 1987, 2,368 calls resulted in 84 arrests with $218,000 in property recovered and drugs seized. During that time, 68 rewards were paid totalling $10,685.

Special class recruits Fort Benning soldiers

USAIC Public Affairs Office

A special Basic Airborne Class for Fort Benning soldiers only will be conducted by the 507th Parachute Infantry Regiment, according to Alonzo Method, military training coordinator, Directorate of Plans, Training and Mobilization.

He said the class will be held April 11 through April 28 with a reporting date of April 8.

Fort Benning soldiers who would like to take this opportunity to go Airborne should forward applications to Training Division, DPTM, building 4, Room 624, no later than March 31.

Applications must include DA Form 4187 (Personnel Actions Request), a 705 (Army Physical Fitness Test), dated within 30 days, a volunteer statement, a medical examination form and DA Forms 2A and 2-1.

For more information, call SFC Baltazar at 545-4542/2917 and ask about Class #501-88.

AER gears up for campaign

USAIC Public Affairs Office

There is a source of support for soldiers and their families at Fort Benning that many do not know exists. It can provide food when children are hungry. It can transport family members home when crises arise. It can pay initial electric bills and rent. It can tide you over when your pay check comes up short one month. This source is interest free. It's called Army Emergency Relief.

Since 1942, whenever Army families were in need, Army Emergency Relief (AER) answered. AER help at Fort Benning reached more than 3,400 active duty and retired soldiers last year.

AER provided nearly a half million dollars in support.

From now to July 1, Fort Benning will conduct its Army Emergency Relief Campaign. It has two main purposes: first, to replenish the fund for grants, scholarships, and unpaid loans of 1987; second, to increase awareness of this immediate source of financial support.

Last year's campaign contributions totaled $177,132.

Contact your unit project officer for more information on contributing to the AER Fund Campaign.

Snively says drill sergeants were a lot different in his day

By Clyde Snively
USAIC Public Affairs

Congratulations to SSgt. Samuel P. Watkins on his selection as Fort Benning Drill Sergeant of the Year.

Basic's certainly changed since my day. First, it was still called basic, not One-Station-Unit Training.

Second, I doubt if anyone in basic as much as we loved our drills, ever dreamed one of them would be considered for any type of award.

I guess I stretch the truth a bit when I say we loved them. Held them in great awe and reverence, maybe--loved them, I doubt it. Feared them? Definately. But nominate them for any type of award--never.

SFC Burrell (drills didn't have first names, just ranks) was our senior drill sergeant. Looking up to him was like gazing to the top of a giant sequoia that just happened to have a Smokey the Bear hat on top.

He was as straight as one of those giant redwoods and nearly as broad besides being as tall. Plus, he was all legs--I'll get back to that later.

It was my privilege to go through basic in the summer. You veterans of a Fort Benning summer know what that means. It means, unless you live in air-conditioned barracks, you go to bed sweating and wake up sweating.

Your sweat rolls down your nose into your food when you eat, and I'm sure you even sweat in the shower.

Yep, "home" was one of those temporary World War II barracks, which the Army keeps meaning to tear down but never gets around to.

Thus, paint was peeling on the outside and the inside. But we were expected to keep the place looking as sharp as possible.

The drills, who never seemed to go home, made sure of that. In fact, we all wondered if drills had homes.

About the only time I didn't see SFC Burrell around was when I was pulling the midnight shift on fire watch or during the payday watch when we'd sit on those porches armed with bunk adapters, daring some thief to try and steal our hard-earned cash.

Back to SFC Burrell's legs.

The thing about those legs of his was they could move him as fast across the parched earth as most people could double time. He called it his "recon walk." That meant we double timed to keep up. Of course everyone knew trainees weren't supposed to double time in heat-category-four weather, so he used to yell at us to stop running, "you want to get me into trouble with the colonel?" in case anyone was around.

We never did suffer any heat casualties. I think we were afraid to. This was also when you went an entire day on one canteen of water and ate salt tablets like candy. But I think the real reason for lack of heat casualties was we weren't being shuttled between air-conditioned rooms and the field.

SFC Burrell was the only leader in the Army I came across who had enough sense to put short people in the front of a formation that was heading off for a forced march or a run.

He'd probably have done it for parades too--give the short guys a chance to see what was going on--except some colonel or general would probably have had a stroke.

What impressed me most about SFC Burrell and the other drill sergeants in our company, was they really seemed to care for us. They wanted us to be the best, to get the best training possible in case we should ever need it.

Yeah, I can still taste the red clay from the obstacle course, still remember coming in from a field problem late at night, muddy, tired and hungry and having to clean my rifle and field gear before doing anything else and wondering about the sanity of the green machine.

But we didn't ask questions. What SFC Burrell said was law at D-3-1.

Looking back on it now, I can see there was generally a reason for everything we did. Just like there is today.

And just like then, drills spend 18 hours a day, making sure their charges are cared for and trained to standard. I add my congratulations to SSgt. Watkins as he accepts his award and represents all Fort Benning drill sergeants at the TRADOC drill sergeant competition April 18.

Student praises chain of command for assistance during difficult time

Editor's note: This is a letter written by a soldier of Vietnamese heritage to his chain of command thanking them for helping him through a rough time in his life. We have, for the purpose of readability, changed the wording of Trinh's letter somewhat. However, we tried not to change the meaning of Trinh's original letter.

Dear Sir,

My name is Trinh Binh, Q. I'm a private first class with E Company, 4th Battalion, 36th Infantry Brigade. I'd would like to take this opportunity to express my gratitude to my chain of command, Capt. Roderick Walton, 1st Sgt. Jose Unchangco and most of all Lt. Col. Paul Cullinane for helping me through a very difficult time during my OSUT training.

An incident during training left me feeling depressed. I was beginning to get a negative attitude. So I looked to my chain of command for help. They spent valuable time working with me. Lieutenant Colonel Cullinane gave me good advice. I feel that without them I wouldn't have been able to resolve my problems.

I'm working on my problems now, and I will not let my chain of command down.

I'm from Vietnam and to me the most important thing is to learn to believe. I believe in this country and our military forces. God bless America.

Modern technology spinoffs benefit humanity

By Tom Joyce

Long before Neil Armstrong took his first cautious step onto the moon, the American people and the world had benefited from new scientific discoveries brought about by the U.S. space program.

Literally thousands of different uses of space technology have found their way into American communities since President John F. Kennedy challenged the scientific community to "land a man on the moon and return him safely."

President Ronald Reagan's Strategic Defense Initiative is an even larger undertaking. The technical resources of this nation's universities, small businesses and major corporations will be marshalled in a program to erase the threat of intercontinental ballistic missiles.

As with the Apollo and space shuttle programs, the Strategic Defense Initiative will advance scientific progress across a broad range of areas from medicine to computers to telephone networks. The technology "spin-offs" from these efforts can add up to significant benefits in terms of human welfare, industrial efficiency and economic value.

For example, a new bio-active material — bioglass — has shown the capability to replace or repair human bone and soft tissue. Air Force Col. James A. Ball, director of SDI Organization technology applications, said bioglass has already revolutionized implantable devices used to dispense medications. "In many cases, the catheters in the implantable devices became clogged, and the medication was not released properly. Bioglass material will actually blend in and become part of the soft tissue to ensure the free flow of medication."

Important spin-offs are also expected from the Superconducting Magnetic Energy

Strategic Defense Initiative free electron laser technology has significant potential for applications in medical research, according to Bail. The program is funded entirely by the Strategic Defense Initiative Organization at more than 19 universities and hospitals around the country.

Medical research indicates the free electron laser will result in better treatments and methods for kidney and gallstone destruction and, potentially, removing plaque in blood vessels. It has also proven to be very effective bone cutter. Current bone saws usually leave jagged edges that can cause both the surgery and the healing to be long-term processes. The laser leaves a relatively clean cut and no collateral tissue damage, and may offer improved and accelerated surgical techniques, especially for elderly patients.

Other technologies in the prototype or development state include:

- High-speed, fault-tolerant computer applications in medicine.
- Safer methods for food preservation.
- Highway bridge safety.

Army offers new reup incentives

March 1 marked the beginning of a three-month test of reenlistment options for career-minded soldiers.

The test options, scheduled to end July 30, complement those listed in current Army regulations.

A breakdown of the new options follows:

After March 1, soldiers electing to reenlist for an Army service school for retraining will be given the opportunity to select their next duty assignment before reenlisting, provided they reenlist for six years.

Soldiers may either select a stateside assignment of choice or an overseas area assignment of choice based on their new military occupational specialty, according to Army Personnel officials.

Soldiers who elect to reenlist for one of the stabilization of 12 months or more may elect a choice of assignment following the completion of the stabilization. The soldier receives with it a two-year reenlistment for selected soldiers who choose a 12-month stabilization. A six-year reenlistment will be required of soldiers selected soldiers who choose a stabilization period of more than 12 months and up to 18 months. According to officials, soldiers in the United States are limited to a maximum of 12 months stabilization with this option.

Soldiers electing to reenlist for an assignment in a short tour area such as Korea, and who reenlist for five years, will be able to select their new stateside duty station upon completion of the tour, say officials.

Also on March 1, first term soldiers who enlisted for two years may elect to re-enlist for three, four, five or six years if they elect to reenlist for one of the options listed above.

December 1987 changes remain

On Dec. 29, 1987, other reenlist changes went into affect. One of the changes applies to midcareer soldiers who are within eight months of ETS and have received CAP III assignment instructions. These soldiers may request deletion from this assignment provided they agree to reenlist for six years with a minimum stabilization of 12 months if stateside and 24 months if overseas, and they serve in a short or balanced MOS.

Another change involves soldiers overseas. These soldiers may elect stabilization in monthly increments of between 12 and 24 months, the officials say.

Some reenlistment options now carry longer reenlistment periods requirements. Soldiers reenlisting for retraining at Army service schools that are more than eight weeks must now reenlist for a minimum of four years.

Soldiers reenlisting for an assignment to a long tour overseas area must reenlist for five years or more. Those who elect an assignment to a short tour area must reenlist for a minimum of four years.

The language school reenlistment option now requires a minimum of a four year reenlistment.

Unit's readiness tested during ARTEP

Ann M. McDonald

One of the evaluators for the external evaluation scans the area with binoculars to get a clear view of the action.

By Ann M. McDonald

More than 60 units combined forces during 2nd Battalion, 14th Infantry, 2nd Brigade, 6th Motorized Division's recent external evaluation exercise.

The unit was evaluated by 2nd Battalion, 22nd Infantry, Fort Drum, N.Y., which is one of the battalion's parent units.

According to Capt. Ray Royalty, assistant brigade S-3, the exercise began Feb. 21 and continued through March 3.

Royalty said the unit was evaluated on every task the unit would be doing in a real wartime mission.

"The tasks that were most beneficial to the readiness of the unit were a battalion-size air assault, establishing an anti-armor defense and a CALFEX execution of a deliberate attack," Royalty said.

He said the CALFEX, which also was the final operation, was especially beneficial because of the realism and the stressfulness of the situation. Live ammunition was used.

"The evaluation will also help us prepare for our rotation to the Joint Readiness Training Center at Fort Chaffee, Arkansas," Royalty said. "The evaluating unit recently returned from the center, and armed with the knowledge they were able to tell the unit some of its weaknesses and ..."

Along with the evaluators, many other units were used in the exercise. They were the Engineers and 2nd Battalion, 7th Field Artillery of Fort Drum; 197th Infantry Brigade battalions; 3rd Battalion, 69th Armor; 1st Battalion, 58th Infantry; and the Support Battalion. Other units were 34th Medical Battalion, 43rd Engineer Battalion, 44th Engineer Group, Troop E, 17th Cavalry, 82nd Airborne Division; 3rd Battalion, 7th Cavalry, 2nd Brigade, 10th Mountain Division; and the Air Force.

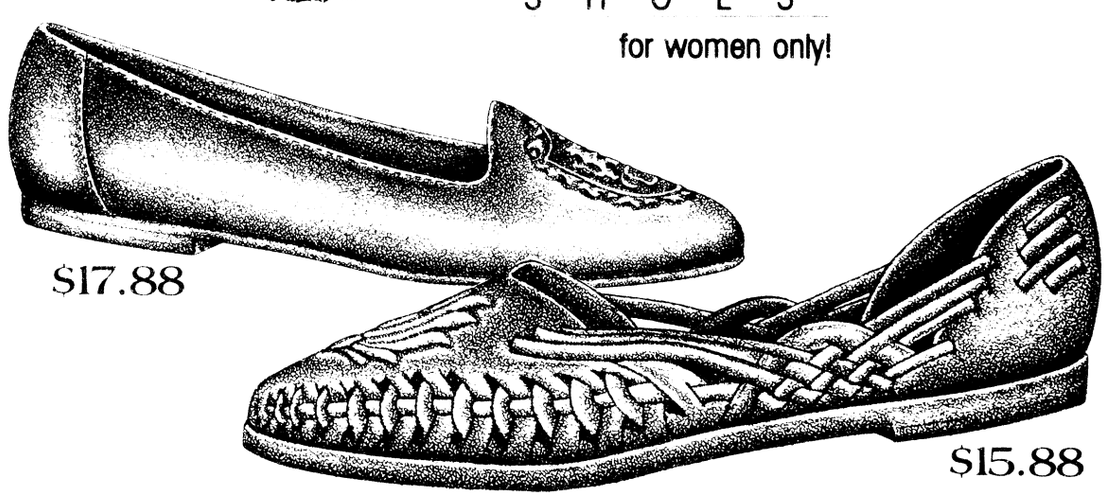
Spt. Bn. maintenance shop. In nearly eight years in the Army, she has remained proud of her job and her skills as a mechanic.

There is still some prejudice against females working in some MOSs," Kail said. But if you prove that you can do your job as well as, or maybe even better than the males in the shop, they begin to have more respect for you."

SFC Dawn Evans is the manager of the 197th Separate Units Dining Facility. She has earned her leadership position by serving under many different conditions and feels that she is a pioneer, of sorts, in her trade.

My first job as a cook was with a boat company at Fort Eustis, Va., which carried equipment and troops to places along the East Coast," Evans said. "At that time, going out to sea with 13 men scared me to death, but we all treated each other with common courtesy, and I grew to really like that job.



Today, her job as dining facility manager requires much responsibility and knowledge.

"You just get used to being in the Army, but it doesn't get any easier as you move up in the ranks," Evans added.

"Rank and leadership put you in a comfortable position, but it requires much more of you."

Women who have served in the military over the years have seen many changes. However, women who are just entering the service can take advantage of the many opportunities that have risen out of progress.

'Earthmoving' platoon proves they are Backbone of Benning

Shawn Bryson

A soldier operates a D-7 Dozer to construct a tank ditch.

By Thomas Perry
Company B, 43rd Engineer Battalion

On the front steps of Company B, 43rd Engineer Battalion, the phrase, "The Backbone of the Battalion" is written, but during the last week in February and the first week in March, Company B proved they were the "Backbone of Benning" in support of 2nd Battalion, 10th Infantry's recent external evaluation.

One vertical construction platoon and one horizontal, or "earthmoving" platoon, were sent to accomplish more than twenty construction missions in the time it would normally take a much larger-scaled unit to get the job done.

The three vertical missions included the construction of an air defense fire base, which included five bunkers, a 300-meter triple-standard concertina fence and several revetments and hull defilades.

Special projects for this mission included ingenius designs for wood-frame Soviet Air Defense weapons and life-size tank silhouettes.

The second site was a remote signal base, while the third site, the remote radar site, was by far the most elaborate, with 350 meters of triple-standard concertina fence, 200 meters of trench line, hull defilades, revetments and five bunkers. These bunkers were an important aspect of the construction, as the platoon built and learned the standards for actual positions that would be used to survive in combat.

At any time during the day, the sound of earthwork could be heard on the dusty roads near Bush Hill. Bravo's earthmoving platoon received more training value during these two weeks than they have had in quite some time.

The most exciting mission was the construction of three abatis. An abatis is a roadblock in which long rows of trees are cut to fall across the roadway, overlapping each other and forming successive "X" patterns. Due to many variables, construction of an abatis is a rare mission for engineers.

Jo Ann Stamey

Col. Vic Stamey, ITC commander, presents a plaque of appreciation to Assistant Pastor Carey Singleton of First Baptist Church of Columbus for support of Operation "Koinonia."

OSUT soldiers get a taste of home during 'Koinonia'

By Jo Ann Stamey
USAIC&FH Staff Writer

"The thanks goes to you, members of the First Baptist Church of Columbus, for your effort towards us. We needed [illegible] and you provided the perfect food right [illegible] the sandwiches [illegible] combination!"

This is the comment [illegible] the entertainment provided [illegible] and evening [illegible] soldiers who have experienced Operation "Koinonia" [illegible] see p. 9)

Operation "Koinonia" [illegible] that volunteer church [illegible] the U.S. Army Infantry [illegible] Chaplain's Office, [illegible] Baptist Church of [illegible] ways to provide a [illegible] as well as social [illegible] recreational opportunity for OSUT soldiers at the Infantry Training Center.

In 1981, Ray Cobus, [illegible] at First Baptist Church of Columbus, started Operation "Appreciation," which was a takeoff of Operation "Appreciation" [illegible] Kentucky [illegible] Operation "Columbus."

Operation "Koinonia" [illegible] to come into the area's [illegible] fellowship [illegible] Christ's kingdom throughout the world [illegible] including countries [illegible] fellowship with each other [illegible] of generosity, kindness, love and [illegible] participating in sharing [illegible] Today, Operation [illegible] continues [illegible] the spirit of the [illegible]

In the [illegible] Baptist [illegible] Columbus [illegible] Operation "Koinonia" [illegible] church door by a volunteer church staff of 10-12 people [illegible] provide name tags that reflect the soldier's name and home state. What follows are introductions, games, skits and special music that fill the room with laughter, Christian love and [illegible] fellowship. The men are then escorted into the Church Sanctuary where they sing, share testimonies and are directed in devotion. Counselors are available to talk with the men.

Afterward, the men are treated to downhome peanut butter and jelly sandwiches, with chips and ice tea. The fellowship that follows is always relaxed and joyful. "Chap. Don Troyer of the 2nd ITB said, "Over the last year, I have been privileged to take approximately 300 soldiers to the First Baptist Church of Columbus, and I've never heard a negative comment."

Being a friend to others is first step in a relationship with God

By George Gonzalez
USAIC&FH Chaplain

According to the first chapter of the Gospel of St. Luke (verse 28), God sent his angel, Gabriel, to say "hello" to Mary. We call this event the Annunciation of the Blessed Mary and place it in our calendars on March 25th, exactly 9 months before December 25 when the Virgin Mary gave birth to His child, Jesus.

"Then the Holy Spirit came upon Mary, she answered back with the wonderful "Magnificat" which, according to Stanley Jones, is the most revolutionary document in the world.

My purpose today is not to analyze the Magnificat, Mary's Canticle, but rather make several considerations about our personal relationship with God. Everybody asks the Chaplain to keep her or him in his or her prayers. The prayer is a personal relationship with God. In the case of Mary, after speaking with the angel, she went immediately to see her cousin, Elizabeth. The result of the initial greetings between the two was the Magnificat.

"The core of intelligence of the relationship with God and the relationship with human beings is very biblical. "If anyone says: "I love God and then hates his brother, he is a liar." (1 John 4:20)

How can a person be a friend of God if he is incapable of friendship with people around him? Inability to relate at the human level is an impossible basis for the building of spiritual relationships. So the best preparation for the good relationship with God is to become more intensely human.

Lack of self-knowledge and the inability to relate to people are strong signs that one is far from mature humanity. One of the factors that will always work against growth in prayer is shallowness and lack of inner discipline. The acquaintance with one's inner depths is intimately connected with the encounter with God.

St. Ignatius says, "The ladder which leads to the kingdom is hidden within your own soul. Flee from sin, dive into yourself, and in your soul, you will discover the stair by which to ascend."

The process of self discovery is inseparable from personal relationships, or through the encounter with others that we grow in self-knowledge. Growth cannot occur in a vacuum and the establishment of sound relationships without a family is of the utmost importance to the future health of the spirit.

Out of the experience of lack of love comes self-centeredness, which can produce the fruit of bitter resentment. Since initial training in prayer is always a training in personal relationships, before you say "hello" to God, please say "hello" to the people around you -- and mean it! Don't fake it!

MACH hospice program: Martin Army Community Hospital announces the formation of a hospice program that will be operational sometime in May. The hospice will serve both active duty and retired military personnel and their families. The hospice program will be a home-based program that operates on the premise that terminally ill patients and their families prefer to remain at home to die unless the medical care is so complicated that hospitalization is necessary. The primary support for the patients and their families will be provided by trained volunteers under the direction of hospital staff members. The program is now seeking volunteers to work in the program. About five nurses (RN and LPN) and five bereavement counselors are being sought as volunteers for the program. The bereavement counselors do not need to have behavorial science background. A training program given by Georgia State University is tentatively scheduled for April. Volunteers are asked to make a one-year commitment to the program because of the required training and need for continuity of treatment to patients and their families. For more information, call Lt. Col. Paul Tessier, 545-1661/3212.

MARSHAL'S VIEWPOINT

By Steve Baker
Provost Marshal's Office

VICTIM: But officer, I only left the office for a moment to get a drink.

MILITARY POLICE: And you didn't want to carry your purse for such a short distance, but it only takes a few seconds for a thief to make his move.

Does this sound familiar? If it does, then you were probably one of the many victims of theft of personal property from offices. There is not a particular type of person who commits this crime, so no one should be overlooked as a potential thief. Considering the large amount of traffic entering most offices on any given day, it could be anyone from a visitor to your own coworkers.

There are some measures you can take to reduce your chances of becoming an office theft victim:

- Don't leave loose sums of money lying around on desk or table tops, whether in or out of the office.
- Don't carry or flash large sums of money at work. The more you have, the more a thief takes.
- When you leave the office for any reason, no matter how short your absence will be, take your purse or wallet with you or secure it in a lockable desk drawer or file cabinet.
- The only preventive measure to take against this crime is simply to secure it.

Reserve Seabees report for training here

Seabee Larry Conklin receives instructions on the M-203 Grenade Launcher from SSgt. Billy F. White of Co. C, 2nd Bn., 29th Inf.

By Terry Bickford
USNR-R

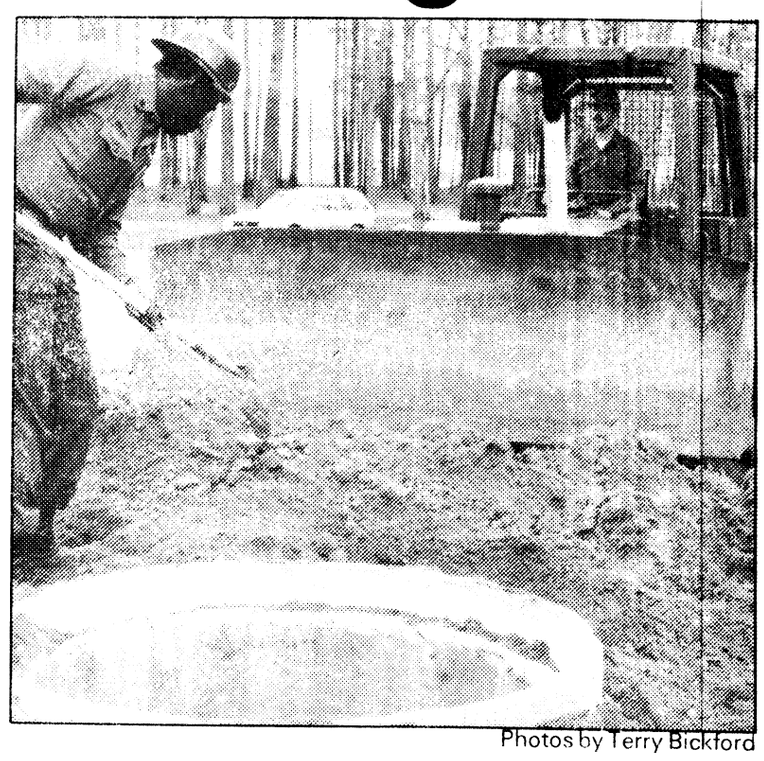
Reserve Naval Mobile Construction Battalion 12 is the second of three Navy Seabees battalions from the Northeast Region to report to Fort Benning for two weeks of military training.

The training began with RNMCB-26 Feb. 21 and will end with RNMCB-13 on April 3. The three Seabee battalions make up the 7th Reserve Naval Construction Regiment, headquartered in Davisville, RI, with detachments spread throughout New England and upper New York state.

The commanding officer for RNMCB-12, John P. Heinstadt (commander, Civil Engineer Corps, USNR-R) stated about the training, Fort Benning provides an excellent site for the Seabee battalions to improve their military readiness capability. "Our important mission in the Naval Reserves is to be able to immediately mobilize a combat ready construction unit in the event of any national emergency. We must be an effective building and fighting machine," he said.

The focus of the training at Fort Benning is on weapons firing and qualifications for the M-16, M-60 machine gun, M-203 grenade launcher, the LAWS and the 81mm mortar.

Knowledge of these light weapons is essential for Seabee battalions to defend construction projects in hostile areas.



Army instructors from the 29th Infantry Training Regiment have been providing the weapons training to the Seabees and assisting in evaluating the level of proficiency gained with each weapon.

"The high degree of professionalism displayed by the Army instructors has been a real plus for the Seabees," Heinstadt said.

As part of the training exercise, emphasis has been placed on the development of small unit leadership for platoons, squads and fire teams. The Navy Seabees from RNMCB-12 have been able to sharpen these skills on a tactical field exercise during the second week of training.

Defensive operations were set up by platoons and squads at Walter Hill around a would-be construction area, positions were held for a three-day period.

In addition to the military training, the Navy Seabees have also been involved in some base construction projects. The Seabees formed and poured the concrete for a sidewalk in front of the 2nd Battalion, 18th Infantry Division motor pool; framed, wired and finished a room at the Kelley Hill Chapel; leveled and landscaped concrete foxholes at Malone 7 Range; and formed and poured footings for bleachers at Malone 21 range. The projects not only enhance the quality of life for the base, but at the same time, provide valuable training for the Seabees to work as construction teams.

Photos by Terry Bickford

Seabee construction crews build concrete foxholes.

The Seabees conduct similar construction projects as part of their training and community service at their respective drill sites throughout New England and upper New York state.

The Navy Seabees proved their worth in the theaters of combat during WWII as highly skilled, combat ready construction units. They gained a reputation of getting the job done, whatever the odds, whether it be laying airstrips or building field facilities in support of the combat soldier.

Even more recently, in 1968, RNMCB-12 was called to active duty in Vietnam for 13 months to work on important construction projects.

The Navy Seabees celebrated their 46th anniversary on March 5 and have grown to more than 25,000 in number for active and reserve units combined. The Reserve Naval Construction Force today provides 70 percent of the Navy's construction force and 18 percent of the entire selected reserve.

New program helps train Reservists in markmanship skill

John W. Stevenson

Reservists receive marksmanship training.

By John W. Stevenson
Second U.S. Army Reserve

Competitors in the Army's competitive marksmanship program have always benefitted from the training received and the opportunity to practice and improve their shooting skills.

Now, with the implementation of a new program to train the marksmen as instructors, units throughout the Army Reserve will benefit directly from the marksmen's participation as competitors.

The new program began last year with a request to provide basic rifle marksmanship training to personnel from the Army Personnel Center (ARPERCEN) in St. Louis. CWO Albert "Al" Coots, FORSCOM marksmanship training expert and officer in charge of the All-Army Reserve Service Rifle Team, tasked SFC Robert "Bob" Davidson, the team's coach and a USAR school instructor, with developing a lesson plan for preliminary rifle instruction.

The lesson plan was used first last June, when members of the All-Army Reserve Team gave the instruction to around 250 ARPERCEN headquarters personnel. The plan and the method of instruction "worked extremely well," according to Davidson.

Coots agreed. "There were people who came up to me afterwards and said this was the first real marksmanship training they had received." Training of additional marksmanship competitors as instructors took place this week at Fort Benning when more than 460 of the best shooters in the Second Army area gathered for the Second U.S. Army Reserve Components Rifle, Pistol and Light Machinegun Championships.

SFC Davidson and other All-Army Reserve Service Rifle Team instructors taught the marksmen how to teach from the lesson plan they had developed during classroom training in building 4. From there, the new instructors moved to Simpson Range for "hands-on" instruction on the 25-meter zero range and the qualification range.

"Our next step is to develop a lesson plan for zeroing," Davidson said. "We are experimenting and identifying problems that need to be addressed here at Fort Benning."

The short-term goal of the marksmanship training program given here this week is to quickly develop a pool of instructors that will be able to go to Reserve and National Guard units on request and provide high-quality, standardized marksmanship training. "Our thinking (in training the competitive marksmen as instructors) is the more experience you have, the easier it will be to teach," said Coots.

A longer-term goal is to develop a complete program of instruction in basic rifle marksmanship that can be sent to all units for unit instructors to teach. "We want a complete, yet simple, lesson plan so NCOs can teach their soldiers," Davidson said. "The plan we have developed can be taught anywhere — in a classroom, under a tree or on the range. We should be able to qualify faster when we are actually on the line to fire."

Reserve unit marksmen compete at Benning

By John W. Stevenson
Second U.S. Army Reserve

More than 460 Reserve and National Guard marksmen from throughout the southeastern United States and Puerto Rico were on Fort Benning's ranges this week to compete against each other in the First U.S. Army Reserve Components Rifle, Pistol and Light Machinegun Championships.

In addition to determining the top individual and team firers, the competition also determined who fills the slots on the Second Army teams that will represent the command in future matches during the year.

Competition took place in five categories. Combat rifle matches used the standard, non-modified M-16 rifle. The composite rifle competitors fired the accurized M-14 rifle and were allowed to use special shooting equipment and apparel. Combat pistol competitors fired the .45-caliber pistol, while .22-caliber weapons were used for the composite pistol competition. Three-member teams competed against each other in the M-60 machine gun competition.

The championships are scheduled to end with an awards ceremony Friday at 1:30 p.m. in Theater 1.

Soldiers provided assistance when registering to vote

By Jeffery T. Kipi
Staff Judge Advocate's Office

It has been a long standing principle in law that "no right is more precious in a free country than that of having a voice in the election of those who make the laws."

To ensure that the right to vote is not undermined, it is the Army's policy to provide every soldier with assistance in registering to vote in his or her home state. After the soldiers have properly registered, they will be able to vote by absentee ballot.

To be able to vote in most elections, individuals must be registered to vote thirty days before the day of the election. Unless they are registered to vote within that time frame, they will not be able to vote in the election.

Because the time limitations and various other requirements vary from state to state, each soldier should begin the registration process months before the scheduled date of the election.

The Chief of Staff of Fort Benning has appointed a Unit Voting Assistance Counselor for every company-sized unit on post. These counselors will assist soldiers in registering to vote and in finding answers to questions about voting by absentee ballot. Soldiers should contact their Unit Voting Assistance Counselor as soon as possible so that they will be able to vote in this years' federal elections.

As James Madison, one of the founding fathers of our Constitution once said, "Who are to be the electors of the Federal Representatives? Not the rich more than the poor; not the learned more than the ignorant; not the haughty heirs of distinguished names, more than the humble sons of obscure and unpropitious fortune. The electors are to be the great body of the people of the United States."

It is the task of each soldier to protect the freedoms for which our country stands. Make sure you are doing your part by exercising your right to vote. Don't let inaction weaken our freedom. See your United Voting Assistance Counselor today and register to vote for tomorrow.

See page B-4 for a list of Voting Assistance Officers.

Appliances can waste energy

By Becky Ray
Energy Management Office

Household appliances can account for large percentages of the energy used in a home. It's smart when buying an appliance to compare energy efficiency so you'll save energy and get the most for your energy dollar. The appliance labeling program makes comparisons simple.

The program was developed by the Federal Trade Commission and the Department of Energy as a result of the Energy Policy and Conservation Act, which was signed into law in 1975. Under this law, manufacturers must place labels showing estimated operating costs of all models of the following.

- Furnances
- Water Heaters
- Refrigerators/freezers
- Clothes washers
- Dishwashers
- Air conditioners

The Energy guide labels are bright, yellow and black stickers that show comparisons of the estimated operating costs of different models of the same appliance.

The label shows the lowest estimated operating cost for that type of appliance on the left, and the highest estimated cost on the right. The estimated operating cost of the model on which the label is attached is shown in the center of the label and is marked with an arrow. The most energy efficient models will show the arrow close to the left of the sticker.

Obviously, the purchase price is not the only cost you should consider when shopping for an appliance.

Operating costs can vary greatly and make a substantial difference in utility costs even over a short period of time.

The labeling program makes it easy for consumers to shop for appliances wisely and to reduce the life-cycle costs of the appliances they purchase.

Tax filing deadline reaches 28 day mark

USAIC Public Affairs Office

With the deadline for filing with the IRS down to 28 days, the American Forces Press Service provides the following information to help you with your taxes.

Extension possible

Taxpayers who file Form 1040 or 1040A can request an automatic four-month extension to file their federal income tax returns, according to the Internal Revenue Service. The IRS stresses, however, that the extension to file tax returns is not an extension of time to pay.

To obtain the four-month extension, taxpayers must complete Form 4868, "Application for Automatic Extension of Time to File U.S. Individual Income Tax Return," and forward it to the service center processing returns for their area by April 15, 1988.

On Form 4868, taxpayers should make a tentative estimate of the year's taxes and submit any balance due with the form. If the unpaid tax is more than 10 percent of the total tax, a penalty will be assessed for the underpayment, unless the taxpayer can show reasonable cause for not paying the tax when due.

The penalty for any failure to pay, which began after Dec. 31, 1986, is one-half of 1 percent per month or part of the month on the unpaid balance, up to a maximum of 25 percent. If a notice of intent to levy or a notice and demand for immediate payment is issued, the monthly penalty increases to 1 percent of the unpaid balance, up to a maximum of 25 percent. Interest is also assessed on any unpaid balance.

Taxpayers who qualify to take an Individual Retirement Arrangement deduction for 1987 must make their IRA contributions for 1987 by April 15, 1988, whether or not they have been granted an extension to file, the IRS said.

Taxpayers filing Form 1040EZ or those requesting the IRS to compute their taxes are not eligible for an automatic extension.

Your tax taxed too

Taxpayers who received income tax refunds in 1987 from taxes paid in an earlier year to a state or local government may have to report all or part of the refunds as income on their 1987 IRS tax returns.

Generally, a state or local tax refund is reported as income only if the taxpayer itemized deductions on Schedule A of the 1986 Form 1040, deducted income taxes paid to the state or local government and received a tax benefit from the deduction.

State and local governments still furnish annual information statements to the Internal Revenue Service for all taxpayers who receive refunds, credits or offset of $10 or more from their state and local governments. These statements are similar to those required of financial institutions on interest and dividends. However, state and local governments are not required to issue statements to taxpayers, unless they itemized deductions on Schedule A of last year's Form 1040.

Refunds of federal income taxes are not considered income on a federal tax return. However, interest earned on a delayed federal refund is income and must be reported, the IRS noted.

Second job taxed

Taxpayers who earn income from a second job must report their earnings on their federal income tax returns.

Some examples of "moonlighting" that produces income that must be reported include an office worker who doubles as a babysitter in her spare time, a newspaper reporter who writes free-lance articles, a public school teacher who tutors for pay and a construction worker who picks up extra money doing home repairs on weekends.

Income from any source is taxable, the Internal Revenue Service emphasizes, whether it is received in cash, property or services, unless it is specifically excluded by law.

Even if a taxpayer does not receive a Form W-2, "Wage and Tax Statement," from an employer, income from moonlighting jobs must be reported on the tax return as wages or salaries. The taxpayer should also be aware that he or she may have to pay estimated tax if little or no tax is withheld on the income from moonlighting jobs.

If an employer indicates that a Form W-2 will not be issued, the taxpayer should keep his or her own record, including dates, names and addresses of employers, type of employment and amount of income. Because employers are required by law to issue a Form W-2, the taxpayers should also notify the IRS.

Some people who do work in addition to their regular jobs are considered self-employed, not employees. Examples may include free-lance writers and repair persons who set their own schedules and work out of their own homes. These people also must report their income. Generally, they use Form 1040, Schedule C, "Profit or (Loss) From Business or Profession." If they have at least $400 net earnings from self-employment, they must pay self-employment tax, a form of Social Security tax.

The IRS points out that if an employee incurs expenses in producing income -- such as union dues or uniform expenses — they may be deducted as miscellaneous deductions on Schedule A of Form 1040 if the taxpayer itemizes. Beginning in 1987, certain miscellaneous deductions were deductible only to the extent they exceed 2 percent of adjusted gross income.

For more information on reporting taxable income and deducting work-related expenses, the IRS offers free Publication 525, Taxable and Nontaxable Income, and 529, Miscellaneous Deductions. These publications may be ordered by calling 1-800-424-3676.

Child care tax break

Parents who pay someone to care for a child or dependent while they work, or look for work, may qualify for a special tax credit. It may be taken not only for payments to babysitters and day-care centers but also to certain relatives paid for this service.

This credit is available to married couples who both work part time or full time or are actively looking for work and file jointly. If one spouse works full time and the other who works part time is a full-time student or is disabled, he or she is also eligible for the credit.

The credit may also apply to a divorced or separated parent who has custody of a child who is under 15 or physically or mentally incapable of self-care, even though the parent may not be entitlted to a dependency exemption for the child. The parent claiming the credit must, however, have custody for a longer period during the year than the other parent. A married person living apart from his or her spouse for the last six months of the taxable year is eligible for the credit if a separate return is filed.

The credit is from 20 to 30 percent of eligible expenses, depending on the taxpayer's adjusted gross income. The maximum credit that may be taken is limited to $720 for one qualifying person and to $1,440 for two or more qualifying persons.

To qualify for the Child and Dependent Care Credit, a taxpayer:

- Must have been gainfully employed or in active search of gainful employment when the expense for the child's or dependent's care was incurred; and
- Must have paid over half the cost of maintaining his or her household, which included one or more qualifying individuals.

A qualifying individual is a dependent child under 15 years of age or a spouse or dependent who is mentally or physically incapable of self-care.

To claim the credit, taxpayers can file Form 1040A, using the worksheet in the Form 1040A tax package to compute the amount of the credit. Taxpayers who file Form 1040 may also claim the credit, even if they do not itemize deductions. These taxpayers compute the credit on Form 2441, "Credit for Child and Dependent Care Expenses," and attach this form to the Form 1040.

Additional informaion is available in IRS Publication 503, "Child and Dependent Care Credit, and Employment Taxes for Household Employers," which may be ordered by filling out the order blank in the tax package or by calling 1-800-424-3676.

Soldier of the Quarter says self-confidence is winning factor

By Shawn Bryson
36th Engineer Group correspondent

Shawn Bryson

SP4 Charles Meroney works on a drawing for the S-3 construction section of the 36th Eng. Grp.

The soldier sits in an antique chair in the Bond Gallery at the Infantry Museum. Chin in hand, his dark eyes stare thoughtfully at the ceiling. For a moment, he scratches his dark brown hair, searches for the exact word to a question describing himself and answers clearly, "Self-confidence."

That's the characteristic that SP4 Charles "Chuck" Meroney feels enabled him to walk away with the title of Fort Benning's Soldier of the Quarter for the second quarter of fiscal year 1988.

It might seem odd that the Soldier of the Quarter is pulling museum guard. However, Meroney has had his share of details, and he doesn't mind the change of pace.

Meroney describes his victory as the icing on the cake for an eight-year Army career.

He explained it as a career in which he dealt with the trials and tribulations of being the low man on the totum pole as well as the senses of responsibility and pride that accompany leadership.

The 25-year-old Meroney hails from Kansas City, Mo. One of eight children, he credits his parents for success in the military. "I was raised in a Christian-oriented home. My parents set very high standards for me to follow, and I've carried those standards with me since."

Meroney also feels that his first squad leader and supervisor, Sgt. Richard Woodcox, greatly contributed to the soldier he is today.

"You might say that my parents made the mold and Sgt. Woodcox sculpted it," Meroney commented proudly.

As a Technical Drafting Specialist currently assigned to the 36th Engineer Group, Meroney has always been assigned to a headquarters company since his advanced individual training. His first tour was with the Headquarters and Headquarters Company of the 20th Engineer Brigade, Fort Bragg, North Carolina. While at Bragg, he attended the then Primary Leadership Course. "My Tactical Sergeant from PLC instilled in me a philosophy that has been invaluable to me ever since; Don't go by word of mouth, find it out in black and white." That's when, Meroney added, he began studying Army regulations to get a broader perspective of the Army.

Meroney went to the E-5 board in 1984 and later in the year, he was transfered to the 7th Engineer Brigade at Kornwestheim, West Germany.

It was at the 7th that he was able to put the leadership skills taught him to the test.

"In Germany, I was made a corporal and then later, an acting sergeant. I was put in charge of four draftsmen, five surveyers and five soil analysts." When the subject of leadership is brought up, Meroney has a strong viewpoint. "A soldier is a direct reflection of his leader."

"I demanded high standards for the sake of high standards, not just to impress my bosses. But I was also a fair leader. If a situation came down to the wire, I would make sacrifices of myself before my soldiers. Too often, I've seen leadership fail at the cost of good soldiers."

Meroney recalls a field exercise in Germany in which he fell victim to poor leadership. "We were all in the tent when a Master Sergeant entered and said he needed a hero. I don't know why, but I was the guy who didn't fake being asleep." Chuck went on to explain that after driving to assist a soldier whose vehicle had broken down, the truck he was given to drive ran out of gas. He was lucky to catch a ride to get some fuel.

However, he was unable to get a ride back to the truck. "I walked 17 kilometers with a full five-gallon can. Although Meroney is a stocky, five-feet, 10-inches tall and weighs 183 pounds, the mission was to say the least, difficult. "It might not have been so bad except for the 25-degree temperature, mud and sleet storm," he jested.

When SP4 Meroney is not soldiering, he enjoys listening to music from the 50s, 60s and early 70s. He also reads military books. "I have a book called 'Patton's Principles' from which many of my leadership beliefs come," he said.

Since he arrived at Fort Benning in September 1987, Meroney has also been a part of something extra special. "I belong to 'People Able to Love and Share (PALS) which is a program in Columbus and is an affiliate of Big Brothers."

"I love kids. I've been sponsoring a 10-year-old boy, Brian, for six months." He said that he takes Brian to movies and parties and enjoys every minute of it.

Meroney will be leaving the Army next month to go back to Kansas City, Mo. "I will be attending a police academy there and hope to be a narcotics investigator."

He believes that many of his experiences in the Army will help his new career, but one stands out.

"The Army has taught me how to deal with people from so many different backgrounds. That will be very important to me in my new career as a police officer."

Turkey time arrives at Fort Benning

By Deck Major
Fish and Wildlife Specialist

Have you heard any yet? It's time you know. Buds are popping, water temperature is rising, and most importantly, the amount of daylight known as photoperiod is increasing. As days become longer, all wildlife react. Large winter flocks of turkey hens and their polts begin to break up and go their separate ways. Gobbler groups also disperse at the males claim loose territories in preparation for the mating season.

You know what's next, spring gobbler season. That wonderful time of the year when you can try to match wits with a wiley old Tom. Spring turkey hunting is becoming more popular every year. As more novice hunters appear afield, the potential for a hunting accident increases. Complete camouflage also adds to the danger potential. In some states where turkey hunting is very popular, turkey hunting accidents, by ratio of license sales, outnumber deer hunting accidents each year.

A safe turkey hunter hunts defensively. Ponder these points before entering and while afield.

Choose your hunting companions carefully. If you have doubts about their abilities, educate them. If that doesn't work, don't hunt with them.

Wear proper clothing. Avoid wearing red, white, or blue outer or under garments. These are the colors of a gobbler's head and neck region. The red band on a sock could be mistaken for a tom's head by a careless hunter. A blue hankerchief tucked carelessly in a back pocket could likewise be mistaken. White T-shirts should be covered entirely by drab outer garments.

Unless absolutely necessary, don't use a gobbler call. This call can be productive and also very dangerous. In areas of a high concentration of hunters, you will call more hunters in to you than turkeys. This call is best used for scouting prior to the season. While hunting, use a gobbler call when all else fails, and then sparingly.

Make sure it's a turkey. many hunters can imitate both gobblers and hens excellently. Assume it's a hunter calling until you're sure it's a turkey. Don't sneak on a bird calling. Turkeys are extremely wary and you'll undoubtedly spook it. It may indeed be a person and then not only will you be in a very dangerous position but you'll have spoiled his hunt.

Identify your target. Don't point your gun until you have identified your target. Keep your gun on safe position until the last possible moment. If you have any doubt — don't pull the trigger.

Choose a calling position carefully. Sit in the open woods with your back up against a large tree, stump, or rock. Keep your movements to a minimum and let your camouflage work for you to break your outline. Select a calling site that gives at least 40 yards vision in all directions. At this distance your bird is in range. Anything over that is too far. You can also identify your turkey and anyone who may approach. No surprises!

When other hunters approach. Gain his attention while he is some distance away. Don't move quickly or call like a turkey. Try to attract his attention by coughing, whistling, or speaking to him.

Check and double-check your safety. Often the most dangerous period for a successful turkey hunter is after he has fired. Be sure to put your safety back on before running to pick up your bird.

It's not always easy being an ethical turkey hunter. Remember, we hunters are also called sportsmen for a reason. Abide by these simple rules and all turkey hunters, including yourself, will benefit.

Abide by hunting regulations. Season lengths, shooting hours and bag limits are set by biologists who study turkey populations on a yearly basis. There is a good reason for the regulations governing turkey hunting. Any game law violations should be reported.

Respect the rights of other hunters. Two hunters working the same gobbler is one hunter too many. Always scout your own hunting spots. If you know them well, you should know if other hunters have also scouted the area. If you get to your hunting spot and it's already occupied, go to your alternate location. Never try to work a bird that's already being called by another hunter.

Make sure your target is a gobbler. Hens will often respond to calls. Gobbers are large, 15-24 pound birds with bright red, white and blue head coloring. Although a small percentage of hens have beards, none have the bright head coloring of a male. Jakes, or young males, may or may not have bright blue heads but they do have red-coloring in the head region. Hens are smaller birds (8-12 pounds) and because of brown-tipped feathers appear drab at a distance. Gobblers have black-tipped feathers and appear very dark and often have a metallic sheen.

Use proper loads and make sure your bird is in range. Gobblers are big, tough birds (twice the size of a Canada goose) and will take a lot of shot in the body and still run or fly off. Before entering the field, pattern your gun to determine which shot shell brands and loads pattern best. Because the sport and challenge of spring turkey hunting is calling a gobbler close, your initial shot should be at a standing or walking turkey. Most shots occur at 30 yards of less (never shoot at a gobbler over 40 yards) and one shot is usually all it takes. Aim should be at the head and neck and not the body. A full-choked barrel is best. Magnum loads of 6s or 4s aimed at the head and neck will knock a big tom down to stay at proper range. You're not goose hunting, 2's are a poor turkey load.

Good luck out there. We are fortunate to have an excellent population of turkeys on Fort Benning. With any luck and the proper freezer space, Thanksgiving '88 should be a special time indeed.

Vet clinic has pets for adoption

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

Are you looking for a companion that demands little more than a friendly pat and a few kind words?

If so, the Fort Benning Veterinarian Clinic is the place for you. The clinic has dogs and cats available for adoption at a nominal fee.

According to Capt. Mark Martinez, post veterinarian, the fee is to cover the cost of properly immunizing the animal and giving it an examination to insure the animal is healthy.

Martinez said that fees for a dog can range from $20 to $25 and for a cat, $15 to $20.

"We do this in accordance to post regulations." Martinez said.

He said, on the average, there are seven animals in the kennels. He urged owners whose pets are missing to check with his office. He explained that after three working days, the animal must be euthanized.

Martinez said 50 percent of the animals brought to the clinic have to be euthanized, 25 percent are returned to their original owners, the remaining 25 percent are adopted out.

Making weight may have negative health effect

By Alison Murray
Special to The Bayonet

Many of you have to "make weight" for your weigh-ins twice a year. Wrestlers, gymnasts, and weight lifters also have to make weight to compete. This practice will occur five to 30 times a season. Unfortunately, most soldiers and athletes do not realize the negative health effect of "making weight."

The primary means of rapid weight loss is dehydration. It's simple — the body loses water in response to insufficient food and water.

Fluid losses greater than two percent body weight can adversely affect health and performance. That's like losing more than three pounds of water weight for a 150-pound person. With excessive fluid losses, heart rate increases, stroke volume decreases (pumping efficiency), and cardiac output declines.

Simply put, the heart works harder to accomplish the same job. The result — decreased fuel and oxygen to body cells, and therefore, decreased performance.

Body fluids affect the body's temperature regulating system. When there is less fluid circulating to active cells the movement of heat from the cells to the skin is diminished. Sweating is almost shut off when plasma volume decreases, so the body retains heat.

Soldiers and athletes "making weight" who refuse to replenish body fluid are at risk for muscle exhaustion, heat pyrexia (heat-induced fever) and heat stroke.

Research is now indicating that repeated episodes of dehydration may have long-term effects on kidney function. Renal ischemia (decreased blood supply to the kidney) frequently occurs during acute stages of "making weight" and may lead to renal hypertension or high blood pressure.

The effects of dehydration can be serious, now and in the future. Unfortunately, many soldiers, athletes, and coaches are misinformed.

Learn to "make weight" the right way — through proper diet and exercise.

Officers Wives' Club sponsoring 'Festival of Running'

Officers Wives' Club

The Fort Benning Officers Wives' Club is sponsoring the 5th annual Festival of Running on April 9 at Eubanks Field, behind building 4 on main post. This major fundraiser has grown from a small race into the third largest running event in Georgia. Last year's race involved 6,000 runners from all over the state.

What makes this race different from many is that it involves the whole family. Events offered this year include 3- and 5-mile unit runs, 3- and 5-mile individual runs, ¼- and ½-mile children's runs, a 5-mile team run, a 1-mile fun run and a 3-mile walk. Something for everyone!

Concessions will be available for spectator purchase. Entertainment throughout the morning includes the U.S. Army Infantry Band, an aerobics demonstration, Silver Wings Parachute Team and much more.

Proceeds from the Festival are used by the OWC Welfare Committee to benefit local organizations such as the Boy Scouts and Children's Social Services, as well as to provide scholarships to military dependents at Fort Benning.

Registration forms may be found at various locations throughout the community or by contacting the OWC office at 687-3537 from 10 a.m.-2 p.m., Monday-Thursday.

Unit registration materials have been sent to all units. If your unit has not received any, contact the OWC office or the Race chairman, Rhett Kopiness, at 568-7251. All paid registrants will receive a T-shirt and refreshments following the race. Registration fee is $6. After April 5 the $7 late registraion fee applies. Register early.

Incoming leader faces challenge

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

Ann M. McDonald

Col. Michael J. Connor (l), takes the reins of 2nd Bde., 10th Mtn. Div. from Col. Michael T. Plummer during Wednesday's change of command ceremony.

Wednesday, Col. Michael J. Connor became the second man to command 2nd Brigade, 10th Mountain Division and, like his predecessor, he will be crossing into new frontiers for he will be responsible for the unit's move to its new headquarters in Fort Drum, N.Y.

Connor said he is looking at his new command with great anticipation and relishes the many challenges this year's star command offers, the biggest being the move to Fort Drum.

There will be some unusual missions involved in moving to Fort Drum, according to Connor.

He said the impact on the families is a great concern, but he feels his experiences as an Army "brat" will be helpful in dealing with the issues that will arise.

"Fortunately, this is a good brigade, and I think the transition will be a smooth one," he said. But for now, he said he must continue with the mission at hand, training his brigade.

"I have to take what has been done with the brigade and build upon it," Connor said. "I believe this is one of the only units in the Army that is going to look at the enemy eyeball to eyeball, so we continually have to lead, train and motivate."

Training effectively is very important, he said. The differences lies in managing your time and training.

He said professional soldiers are where his heart lies.

"I'm as confused as this guy who gets into battle at the dirty, nasty, nitty-gritty level. To make the brigade the best, he expects his soldiers to recognize the Army not as a job but as a profession.

"It's a lot more than a civilian job. You're doing your work for a higher reason and it's selfless work," he said. "Soldiers shouldn't take anything for granted."

"Be all you can be" is not just a recruiting slogan, it's a way of life," he said.

"The best thing I can do during my command is to give soldiers first class training so they are ready for what they have to do if we go to war," he said.

Connor is a graduate of West Point. He comes to 10th Mountain from a position in the Office of Congressional Legislative Liaison.

Early retirement authority approved for 3 commands

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Voluntary Early Retirement Authority is approved for three of the major commands stationed at Fort Benning.

The three are Training and Doctrine Command, Forces Command, and Information Systems Command. It does not apply to two other major commands represented on post, Health Services and Troop Support Agency.

The window to apply for early retirement is April 1 to 30 for TRADOC, April 1 to Sept. 30 for FORSCOM and from May 1 to Aug. 31 for USAISC employees.

To be eligible for the early retirement, TRADOC employees must be at least 50 years old with 20 years of service.

Employees with 25 years of service may retire at any age. TRADOC employees seeking early retirement must also have been employed by that command since Jan. 24, 1988.

Some TRADOC employees are not eligible for the early retirement. They are those who occupy a position covered by special salary rates or occupy a position for which direct authority has been granted, such as engineers and operations research analysts.

The same age restrictions apply to FORSCOM and USAISC employees. To be eligible to retire from FORSCOM, an employee must have been on the rolls since since Jan. 13. For USAISC, the date is Jan. 12.

Directors may fill positions being vacated by retiring individuals. However, the fill for TRADOC activities must come from within TRADOC or be approved by TRADOC headquarters if an external fill is requested.

While the position being vacated by an early retiree may be filled, a vacancy must be created within the organization to make up for the rehire.

10th Mountain commander steps down

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

Wednesday ended the command of the man who built part of a mountain, his part being 2nd Brigade, 10th Mountain Division. His task began in the fall of 1986. His tools were empty barracks rooms with a company garrison in each.

Now, two years later, those rooms are orderly, rooms for two battalions of combat-ready light infantry soldiers.

This is the house Col. Micheal T. Plummer built and one that was not easy for him to give up.

"I think of the brigade as one of my children," Plummer said. "And like my children, I know I had to give up the brigade at one point, but believe me, it wasn't willingly."

He added that the only saving grace is that he isn't completely out of the picture as he will assume a position with the 10th Mountain at division level.

"I'll be able to pull them up to Fort Drum while Colonel Connor, the incoming 2nd Brigade commander, is pushing them from the Fort Benning end.

Plummer said that by the end of 1988, the whole brigade will be moved to Fort Drum, where facilities are now available for another brigade of soldiers and their families.

"Housing has been built for privates to generals," he said, "and there is a new commissary and exchange as well."

He said that all of these facilities were built because of the lack of facilities around Fort Drum.

"Although the brigade is ready to join its sister unit at Drum, the unit and I leave behind a warm feeling for the post and the surrounding community," Plummer said. "Fort Benning gave me complete support when I was building the brigade. They gave me the environment to train and the opportunity to send my soldiers to schools to be better educated in the field of battle."

Plummer said this has been the best assignment of his career.

He said the highlights of his command were the actual activation, unit deployments to such places as Panama and California and the battalion exercise evaluations, in which the two battalions were declared combat ready.

"What will remain in my mind the longest are the privates I have seen grow into leaders and the captains and lieutenants who really know how to train," he said. "These men will be the seed corn of the leadership of the Army in the future."

He said he likes serving in the Army so much that he would stay indefinitely if he could.

"I love people, and the Army is people. Plus, we are all serving something bigger than ourselves," he said.

Benning schools offer summer school program

By Beth Middlemiss
Bayonet staff writer

The Fort Benning Schools are planning to offer a summer school program for students in grades one through eight who need remedial instruction in reading and math.

The school system will be taking enrollment applications through today to determine if there is sufficient interest in the program. If so, the program will run during July with all classes meeting at Faith Middle School.

Classes will have 12 to 20 students and will be in session weekdays from 9 to 11:30 a.m. Transportation will not be provided.

Since the summer school program must be self-supporting, there will be a charge of $100 to $110 for the 20-day session. The exact cost will be established when enrollments are in and the cost of operation determined, but will not exceed $110. A deposit of $20 is required by today with the balance to be paid by May 13. No refunds will be paid unless the class is cancelled.

Parents who desire more information or who did not receive an enrollment application through their child, should call the school administrative office at 545-2500/3500.

Benning Room at Officers' Club renovated, rededicated

Ann M. McDonald

Joel T. Dougherty, weapons curator at the Infantry Museum, plays the part of a Georgia Volunteer Infantryman during the recent rededication of the Benning Room at the Officers' Club.

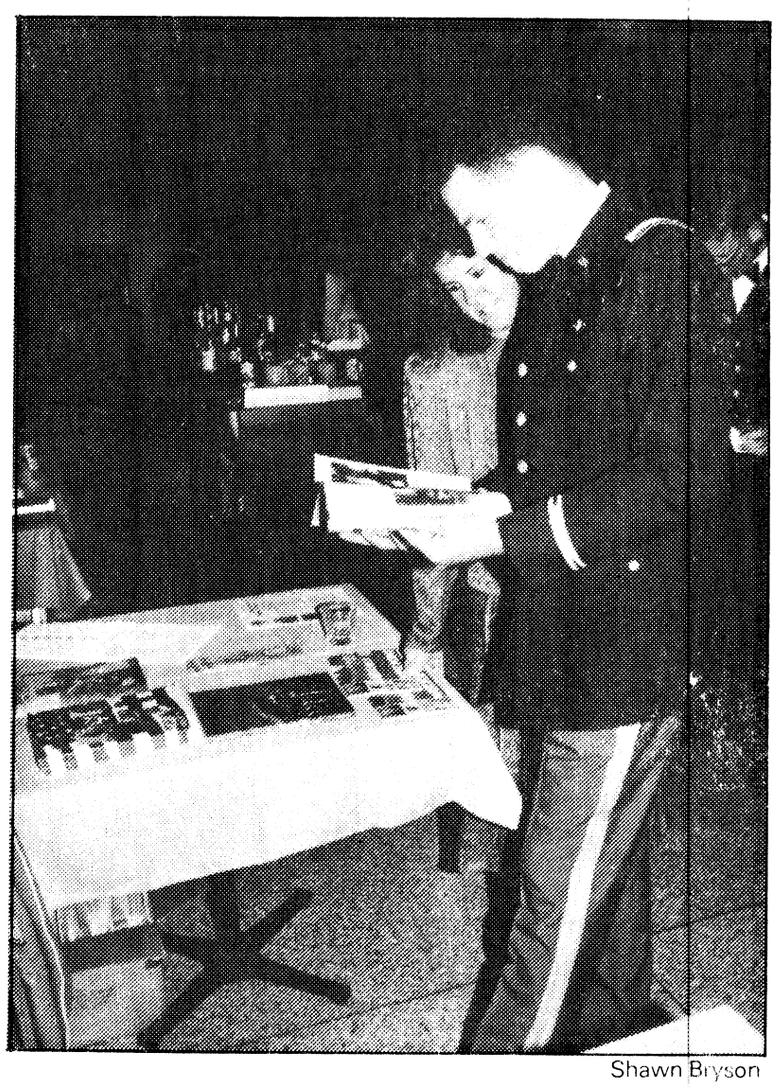
By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

The Benning Room in the Fort Benning Officers' Club has a new look. The room was reopened after renovation with a small rededication ceremony conducted during a Civilian Military Council Luncheon last week.

According to Dick Grube, Infantry Museum curator, the room, as well as the post, was named after Gen. Henry Lewis Benning, a man whose grandfather, Capt. Richard Ware, fought with Gen. George Washington during the American Revolution.

"Benning, known to his men as 'the Rock,' was a big man, a polished speaker, a politician, a lawyer, who was the youngest ever admitted to the bar, a judge and a statesman," Grube said. "He would have enjoyed all the people who attended the rededication of the room named after him."

To honor the spirit of Benning, a special guest appeared at the rededication. He was Pvt. Ezra Willard, Co. C, 17th Inf., a Georgia Volunteer Infantryman, alias Joel T. Dougherty, weapons curator at the museum.



According to Willard, who remained in character throughout the interview, he was a confederate soldier who served under Benning during the Civil War. He said he came to thank the people of the council for naming the room and the post after Benning. Donned in confederate apparel, Willard demonstrated the capabilities of his equipment to the council members and talked about the battles he participated in with Benning.

According to Lamar Caldwell, chief of Community Operations, Directorate of Personnel and Community Activities, the redecoration of the room was well recieved.

He said this is the first time the room has been redecorated in 15 years.

"The room was totally renovated," Caldwell said. "Some of the walls were replaced due to deterioration, and the wall covering, ceiling and carpeting are new as well."

The Benning Room is open for use by club members for official post functions, wedding receptions and special events.

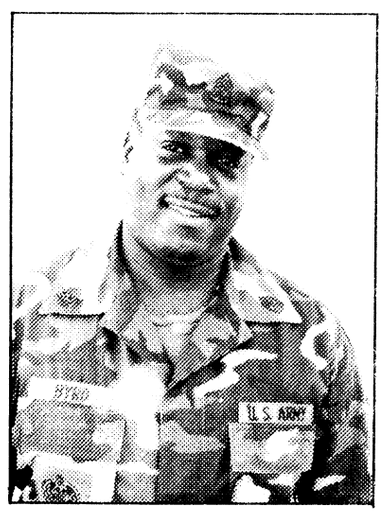
OPINION

VARIOUS VOICES: How do you plan to utilize outdoor recreation facilities this season?

SSgt. Clinton Allen, Company B, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, TSB - "I like to fish so I'm going to rent a boat and lanterns to do some night fishing."

Pvt. 2 Frank Richardson, Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, 507th Parachute Infantry Regiment - "I'm going to take advantage of the canoe rentals so I can either fish or have a nice ride. I am also going to take advantage of horse rentals available on post."



Sgt. Robert Kent, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment - "I plan to use the Uchee Creek recreational facilities for myself and my family. My wife and I both like to fish, so we will surely utilize the boat rental priviliges and probably some of the other sports facilities as well."

Myrtice Reynolds, family member - "My entire family likes to fish so we plan to rent some boats and do some fishing."

Eileen Sullivan, family member - "We get our football tickets from the recreation center, and we rent boats from outdoor recreation, which my children really enjoy."

Sgt. Maj. Henry Byrd - "Directorate of Engineering and Housing - "I plan to play a lot of golf and rent a boat and do some fishing. I'm thinking about going to Destin as well."

Thieves take a bite out of Annie

By Clyde Snively
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Officer McGruff may be taking bites out of crime, but from the evidence I've seen, he ain't gettin' much cooperation from the people here on post.

I guess it speaks well of many of our citizens that they can be so trusting of their fellow man. Unfortunately, not all fellow men are worthy of our trust.

Even our local star journalist, Airborne Annie had to learn this the hard way.

Seems she and a buddy of hers, a staff sergeant who should be setting good examples for Sp4s, took it upon themselves to tempt some person's honesty. Temptation won.

These two soldiers had just finished with PT. They knew they'd only be a minute, and besides, they were in the west parking lot of Infantry Hall, a parking lot frequented by officers, senior NCOs and upstanding civilians. Who'd ever suspect a thief would lurk in a place like that?

Well they do, and they must be rather vigilant thieves as they swooped down on the two unsecured cars and took all the personal belongings.

So that meant they had to call in Fort Benning's chief crime buster, Officer McGruff.

Seeing the commotion in the parking lot, I went over to check it out.

First, I noticed that Officer McGruff was not pleased.

Especially after he recognized Airborne Annie as a person who'd interviewed him about a crime busting story and how a key point was "secure your valuables."

"Have a memory lapse?" he growled at her.

"I was only going to be gone from my car for 10 minutes," she sniffled.

"It takes less than 30 seconds to rip off an unsecured vehicle," he replied in the voice he uses when addressing grade schoolers after which he passes out his crime fighting badges. Only in this case I knew no badges would be passed out.

"Okay," he said. "Let's get the facts here. What was stolen?"

"My purse and all my credit cards and ID cards," Airborne said.

"Type of purse," McGruff asked, pen poised over his notepad.

"Don't know," A.A. answered.

"Okay, tell me about your credit cards," he said.

"I had a VISA, Montgomery Wards, Circuit City..."

"Hold on, not so fast," he said. "I need the numbers from the cards."

"I don't know them," she said.

"But you have them written down at home, and you'll call us when you get home, right?" he said.

"Wrong," she said, sniffling even more. "I don't."

I could tell that McGruff was really getting antsy. He took down some more information, then turned to the sergeant.

"I know you'll have a better record of what was taken," he said.

"I just had cash taken," she said, and before Officer McGruff could say anything, she said she didn't have any serial numbers of the bills.

"I ought to lock you both up for being so careless," he said. He then noted that the sarge didn't have a post decal.

"This your primary means of getting to work?" he asked her.

"Yes sir," she said. "Nice little car, isn't it."

"Lovely," he said, proceeding to write her up.

Crime doesn't pay.

25 cents could send a queen to Washington

USAIC Public Affairs Office

They're off and running again. Each year, young women from various units on post represent Association of the United States Army subchapters and vie for the title of AUSA queen.

Unlike many other contests for women, this is no beauty contest, however, good looks can't hurt. To become an AUSA queen, they're required to sell as many 25 cent tickets, or votes, as they possibly can before the May 4 count. On May 4 all votes are counted, and the women with the most votes from the nine subchapters will become subchapter queens.

The contest continues with the nine subchapter queens continuing to sell tickets until May 18 when, once again, all votes are counted. The one with the most votes at that time will be crowned as AUSA's queen for 1988.

Former AUSA queen Stacy Barnes encouraged the women vying for the honor to take the contest very seriously because she said it takes a lot of ingenuity to sell enough tickets to win.

"You don't have to have a body out of this world to win. You have to have the will and the drive to work," she said.

This contest is a big fund raiser for AUSA and has continued to grow each year. Eleven years ago when the first contest was staged, $900 was raised. Last year, more than $29,000 was raised. The funds are used for the military community in such projects as Operation Holiday and Safetycab. AUSA also helps the military community in Washington where they voice the concerns of the Army and lobby on issues that will affect the quality of life for soldiers and their families.

Elections are a right and privilege of citizenship; yet many don't take advantage of that freedom

Army News Service

The United States is one of the few countries in the world where free elections are a right and privilege of citizenship.

Unfortunately, many take that right and privilege for granted and fail to vote, according to federal voting assistance program officials. That is a shame because it means that non-voters allow others to make the decisions that affect all of us. Millions of Americans who are eligible to vote aren't even registered to vote, and in most states registration is a necessary step to vote. In the past, the voter registration system itself was blamed for low registration rates. In addition, literacy tests, poll taxes, requirements that a voter be a landowner, and many other barriers served to discourage or outlaw registration. Today, however, voter registration is easy and convenient even for the absentee voter. It's as simple as seeing your voting officer or counselor and requesting a Federal Post Card Application to register and/or request a ballot. You simply fill it out, sign it (some states require notarization by an officer or other official authorized to administer oaths) and mail it to your county or town local election official. It's even postage free. You may register if you are a U.S. citizen 18 years of age or older. Most states will send a ballot in response to a single FPCA. But remember, in most states you must register by the first week of October if you wish to receive a ballot for the Nov. 8, general election. It is a good idea to have your unit voting officer or counselor check the FPCA to insure it is properly filled out, signed, dated and notarized if applicable. Just because you voted in the primary election, it does not mean you will automatically receive a ballot for the Nov. 8, election. You may need to submit a new FPCA in order to receive a ballot for the general election. Check with your unit voting officer or counselor about requirements for your state. Regulation governing retiree recall changed

Army News Service

Retired soldiers who previously had been exempt by regulation from involuntary recall to deploying units upon mobilization now are subject to such a recall, based on a recent change to the governing regulation, AR 500-10.

Observations on mobilization requirements from both the field and the Army staff have led Army personnel officials to make the change, said Lt. Col. Hank Hanrahan, who monitors the retiree recall program for the Army's deputy chief of staff for personnel.

"This change acknowledges a potential shortage in certain manpower skills were the Army to undergo mobilization," Hanrahan explained. "For example, we'd need to have an adequate number of retirees from the medical and military intelligence fields to complement their active and reserve counterparts mobilized for deployment. Basically, we're talking about having the Army's program make full use of the retiree pool within the ranks of combat support and combat service support. This will align the Army's effort with the Defense Department's policy and procedures."

Hanrahan traces the idea for the recall program back to the mid-seventies. Since then, the program has undergone annual testing and refinement via a series of preassignment and recall exercises known as "Exercise Certain Sage." Now, the exercise is conducted annually as a function of the U.S. Army Reserve Components Personnel and Administration Center in St. Louis.

Hanrahan stressed that the policy change merely provides an option to the Army. "This doesn't mean the Army is bound to assign recalled retirees to deploying units. It simply provides management flexibility to the Army and extends its warfighting capabilities." He noted that there is no change to current procedures of issuing assignment orders ("hip-pocket orders") to mobilization installations. "Once mobilization occurs," Hanrahan explained, "the gaining mobilization station commander will have the authority to determine the deployability status of individual retirees and to cross-level (reassign) to deploying units if requirements exist."

Communities need volunteers to run for mayor

Community Life Office

The Fort Benning Community Life Office is looking for a few good candidates for the upcoming mayoral elections slated for April 19.

According to the Community Life officer, Capt Donald W. Boson, "The mayoral program can have a significant influence on the day-to-day lives of people at Fort Benning. The military provides a wealth of services to soldiers and family members. Full use of these services can only be achieved by publicizing them.

That's the role of the mayor, to coordinate what the community needs with the agencies providing these needed services. The mayors are the community's number one volunteer".

Each community has its own campaign and elections are then held to decide who each community's mayor will be. These mayors, who each represent one of Fort Benning's six communities, provide services to more than 4,000 soldiers and family members living in post housing. They need the community's support to serve the community.

This support comes in the form of volunteers from the community who assist the mayor in getting things done for their respective communities. These volunteers serve as the mayor's link to the rest of the community and provide a two-way channel for information going to and from the mayor.

The payoff for mayors, according to Boson, is "feeling satisfaction in bettering their community, whether it's a big project or just helping a small group of children getting their community playground fixed up."

For more information on the Fort Benning mayoral program and on the upcoming election, call the Community Life Office at 545-2910, 2830 or 1389.

VA implements new guidlines

Veterans Administration

The Veterans Administration has implemented new eligibility guidelines for veterans who must meet certain income requirements to obtain VA medical care.

A Jan. 1 cost-of-living adjustment to the agency's means test may allow no-cost care to veterans who previously had to pay for treatment.

VA Administrator Thomas K. Turnage explained that the new limits apply only to veterans who do not have service-connected disabilities or other exemptions from the means test.

Before a new limit of $21,111 was set, single veterans with annual incomes of more than $20,260 had to pay for treatment at a VA medical facility. For married veterans, the new limit is $26,389 with one family member and another $1,055 for each additional family member, as compared to the previous limits of $25,325 and $1,013.

Under the Congressionally-instituted Means Test, which went into effect July 1,1986, the VA must provide no-cost hospital care to veterans who fall below the first and lowest annual income limits and, if space is available, may provide no-cost outpatient and nursing home care.

Veterans below the second income limit are eligible for no-cost hospital, outpatient and nursing home care, but only if space is available. Above the third, and highest, income limits,

Scouts strengthen battlefield skills with live-fire exercise

By George Mingee
197th Infantry Brigade correspondent

Recently, Troop A, 15th Cavalry, 197th Infantry Brigade, held a Combined Arms Live Fire Exercise (CALFEX) on Cactus Range at Fort Benning.

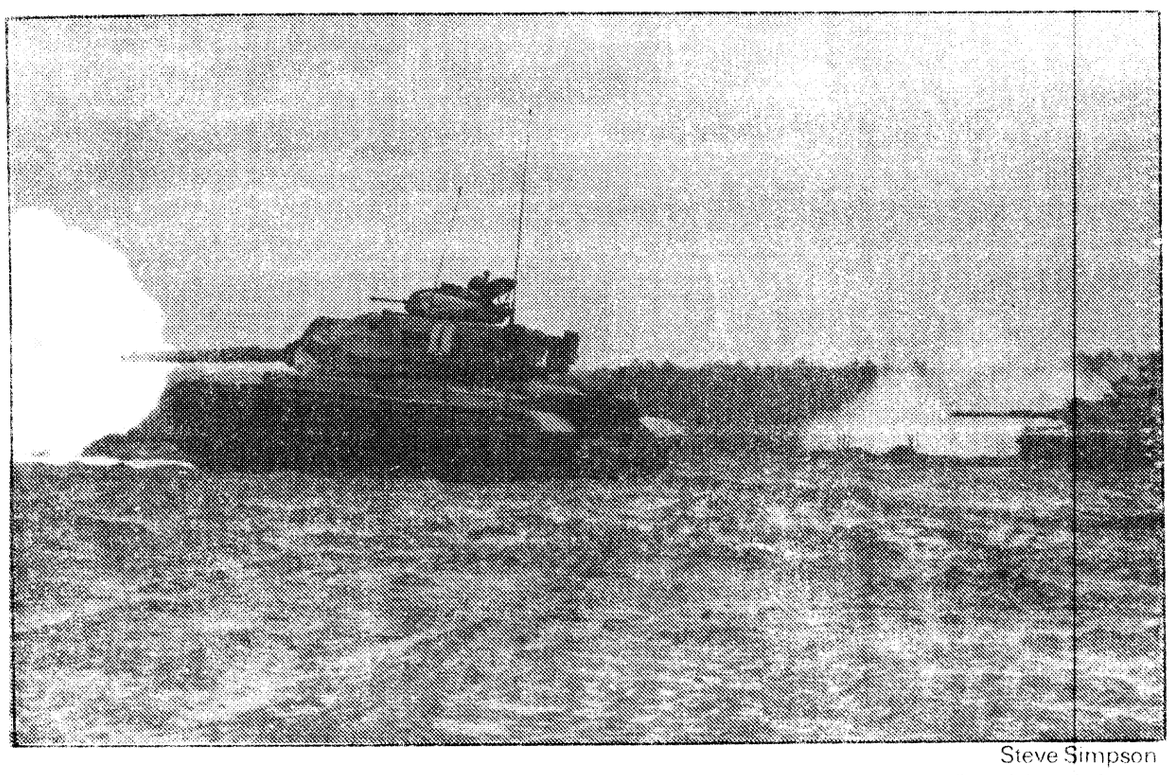
This particular CALFEX of scout, tank, and mortar platoons operated in an evironment that pitted the platoons against a simulated Motorized Rifle Regiment.

"The scouts are training with tank and mortar crews, said 2nd Lt. John Hurst, scout platoon leader. "This helps strengthen the combined arms coordination on the battlefield."

Even though the CALFEX was a one-day operation, it took 15th Cav. two months to prepare for this training. Each platoon did it's own special preparation.

The scout platoon trained on the M-72A2 Light Antitank Weapon (LAW), the M-203 Grenade launcher and with demolitions.

The tank training consisted of 9mm pistol qualification and a Tank Crew Gunners System Test (TCGST).



The mortar platoon did their part in getting ready by taking a gunners exam and training at a live-fire range.

According to 1st Lt. Pat Sullivan, the three platoons contribute towards 15th Cav's overall mission, which is to identify the enemy and defeat its forward element, while pushing foward to recon the area.

The training culminated with M-113 troop carriers and M-109 tanks advancing downrange with scout teams forward blowing up wire obstacles and searching for bigger targets. As targets were identified, the tanks would move forward and show their fire power, while the .50 caliber machine gunners on M-113s used suppressive fire on pop-up targets. As each round and bullet hit it's target another soldier's training had begun.

"15th Cav. emphasizes training so we all know our jobs," said Sgt. Paul Christian. "I feel confident that we can hold our own in battle."

A Troop, 15th Cavalry's CALFEX ended on a positive note with every soldier sharpening his own skill, under the watchful eye of their commander.

34th Med Bn evaluated on field performance

By Anthony J. Intrepido
34th Medical Battalion correspondent

In a recent field exercise, the 34th Medical Battalion provided the combat service support it would on the battlefield to the many combat arms units. The exercise lasting seven days, called for the battalion to strategically place its four major units in areas where they can provide the best support and still perform tactically.

Anthony J. Intrepido

34th Med. Bn. soldiers care for the enemy wounded while keeping them under constant guard. This was part of a recent field exercise.

The 690th Ground Ambulance Company positioned its platoons to give ambulances easy access to and from the infantry's Battalion Aid Station and the helicopter pick-up points or the Mobile Army Surgical Hospital. The 498th Air Ambulance Company selected key terrain that allowed quick access to landing zones and that resulted in minimal air time to the 2nd MASH. With assistance from the 187th Pathfinder Detachment, ground to air communications was provided durang sling load operations. The Headquarters and Headquarters Detachment was located in an area where it could best provide command and control of all the medical units.

Meanwhile, the 2nd MASH was being evaluated. During the exercise, the field hospital handled three mass casualties, which resulted in more than 100 patients. The 60-bed hospital was also forced to conduct a night move to a new location. The move was conducted in two parts in order to remain operational throughout. The MASH not only treated our soldiers, but also prisoners of war.

Some of the toughest patients to treat are the NBC casualties. "Manpower is just one of the problems with providing care for these patients," stated SFC Kathleen Lowrance. "Two post-operative patients can be handled by one nurse," she stated, "But since an NBC casualty is automatically considered a category-one intensive care patient each is assigned to one nurse." Lowrance, a 91C40 is the chief wardmaster. "Most NBC casualties need to be maintained on life support systems, at which time the MASH only had fourteen," Lowrance said.

Under the Geneva Convention, posting of the Red Cross protects medical units from being fired on. However, the soldiers of the 2nd MASH were continuously harassed by both infiltrators and terrorists.

The 34th Medical Battalion also had to maintain support of its real world missions during the exercise. On one mission three Blackhawk helicopters were used to transport victims from the site of an accident that took place in Columbus. Five patients that were seriously injured were MEDEVACed to the Medical Center. 498th medics on the scene provided emergency care to the 15 injured in the accident.

The successful field exercise was the first one in years to have two major subordinate commands, one combat arms and the other combat service support to share a training scenario.

NCOPD takes training from classroom down to river

By Gregory Nell and Sally Roberts
197th Infantry Brigade Correspondents

More than 200 noncommissioned officers from the 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor recently took their Noncommissioned Officer Professional Development training out of the classroom and into the field, as they convoyed their armored vehicles across the Chattahoochee River.

The training was assisted by the 58th Engineer Company (Assaul Ribbon Bridge), that emplaced a floatation bridge at the Cox Landing site.

Upon receiving the operations order, the soldiers moved to the battalion motor pool for pre-combat inspections of vehicles and equipment and then a tactical road march to the Engineer Regulating Point. Co. C, 2nd Bn., 69th Armor, occupied a support by fire position and provided overwatch as the 586th Engineers emplaced the bridge. Once the bridge was set, one company of M-60A3 tanks crossed and secured the far side of the river, enabling the remainder of the battalion to cross with their armored vehicles.

Each phase of the training was geared to help the NCOs learn the proper procedures for such an operation.

"It is important for the soldiers to know the procedures of a river crossing and how the engineers fit into the bridging operations," said 1st Sgt. Clifton Kinsey, Co. B, 2nd Bn., 69th Armor.

The 586th Engineers also benefitted from the training.

"This was the largest crossing done by the company in quite some time," said 1st Lt. Thomas Smythe, executive officer, 586th Eng. Co. "It gave us a chance to train on three of our primary battle tasks; establish an Engineer Regulating Point, construct a ribbon bridge and establish operations in a command and control environment.

"We crossed about 30 tanks, twice in the same day," Smythe added. "This was also the first time we rafted an M-1 tank across the river, and most soldiers have never seen any of this done before."

OCS candidate found guilty, charged for lying under oath

Judge Advocates Office

On March 10, SSgt. Kenneth S. Deppe of Co. B, 3rd Bn., 11th Inf., TSB, was convicted by a special court-martial for the offense of false swearing. Following his conviction, Deppe was sentenced to be reduced to the rank of SP4.

Deppe, who had previously been assigned to the 75th Ranger Regiment and was enrolled in Officer Candidate School, pleaded not guilty to the charges that he had made false statements under oath to a Fort Benning CID agent. CID had interviewed Deppe to determine if he had information about his girlfriend who had been reported missing several months earlier. In this interview Deppe denied having any idea what happened to her. Despite his plea of not guilty, testimony in the court-martial proved that Deppe's denial was not truthful and that he had, in effect, lied under oath.

On March 7, SP4 Dwayne E. Sullivan, HHC, 2nd Bn., 69th Armor, 197th Inf. Bde., (Mech.) (Sep.), pleaded guilty before a special court-martial of assault upon his 4-month-old daughter, Tanisha. Sullivan assaulted his daughter when he became angry with her crying. He grasped his daughter with both hands on her sides and shook her. The treating physician at Martin Army Hospital testified that Tanisha suffered intracranial bleeding, which caused epileptic seizures. Tanisha, now 9 months old, was hospitalized for ten days and now is in a foster home. Tanisha's pediatrician testified that it will be another three months before Tanisha catches up with other children her age in large motor skills. Tanisha further faces the possibility of developing epilepsy and having a reduced intellectual capacity. Sullivan was sentenced to three months confinement and reduced to private.

On March 9, PFC Daniel C. Clark, HHC, 1st Bn., 58th Inf., 197th Inf. Bde., was convicted at a special court-martial for a 14 day AWOL and writing bad checks. During a two-week period in November 1987, Clark wrote 10 worthless checks totaling more than $500 to a local restaurant. He and a friend then took a fellow soldier's jeep without permission, and drove to Maine, where they were apprehended by civilian police.
Clark was sentenced to be reduced to the rank of Pvt. 1, three months in confinement in the Fort Benning confinement facility and to be discharged from the service with a bad conduct discharge.

On March 11, Pvt. Wayne A. Johnson, Co. E, 2nd Bn., 18th Inf., 197th Inf. Bde. was convicted by a general court-martial for writing bad checks. Late in December 1987, and early in January 1988, Johnson wrote 21 checks totalling approximately $2,350 to the AFFEES Post Exchange. During the trial, a CID Special Agent testified that Johnson told him that he had written the checks so his chain of command would consider "chaptering" him out of the service. Johnson was sentenced to a dishonorable discharge from service, reduction to the lowest enlisted grade, total forfeitures and confinement for two years.

On Feb. 23, 1988, SSgt. Alford L. Looney, a drill sergeant, assigned to Co. F, 2nd Bn., 19th Inf., 1st ITB, was convicted by a general court-martial. Looney was convicted of seven violations of the United States Army Infantry Center Regulation 600-3 and two specifications of assault. During the month of November 1987, nine trainees complained that Looney ordered them to perform excessive amounts of physical training as a method of punishment. He also physically assaulted three of them. The regulation outlines under what circumstances physical training may be used to punish a trainee. Looney exceeded these limits in each case. Looney was sentenced to be reduced to the rank of Pvt. 1.

On March 8, 1988, SFC Tommy Toliver, a drill sergeant assigned to Co C, 1st Bn, 50th Inf., ITB, was convicted by a general court-martial of pandering, adultery and use of illegal drugs. On Dec. 1, 1987, Toliver and a civilian female, while driving on Fort Benning, solicited three solders to have sexual intercourse with the female for money. The soldiers all paid for sex with the female. While she was engaged in a sex act with the third soldier, they were apprehended by the military police.

The female revealed that they had solicited soldiers on Fort Benning on many occasions. Toliver was sentenced to a bad conduct discharge, reduction to the rank of Pvt. 1 and confinement for one year.

To be eligible for early retirement, an employee must have at least 20 years of federal service and be at least 50 years old, or have at least 25 years of service, in which case no age limit applies.

Common questions that eligible employees are asking, with answers provided by the Civilian Personnel Office are noted below:

Q: Will an eligible employee under age 55 receive a reduction in retirement pay?

A: Yes. An eligible employee under age 55 who retires will lose two percent in retirement pay for each year under age 55.

Q: Can an employee with 19 years of service and age 50 or older with one year or more of unused sick leave retire?

A: No. The days of unused sick leave cannot be addd for the purpose of meeting the minimum length of servie required for retirement eligibility.

Q: Can an employee continue enrollment in the health benefits program after retirement?

A: Yes. The employee must retire on an immediate annuity and have been enrolled, or covered as a family member, in a plan, not necessarily the same one, under the health benefits program for the five years of service immediately preceding retirement; or for all service since his or her first opportunity to enroll; or continuously for the full period or periods of service beginning with the enrollment that became effective no later than Dec. 31, 1964. The annuity must be sufficient to cover the withholding required as his or her share of the cost of the enrollment.

Q: How soon after an employee retires can he or she expect to receive annuity payment?

A: Based on past experience, the waiting period is usually about 60 days.

Q: Must an employee retire by the third day of the month in order to receive an immediate annuity for that month?

A: Although not definite, it appears that employees will have to be off the rolls by the third day of the month to receive an immediate annuity for that month.

Q: Will employees who elect to retire under the early retirement authority before the year in which they attain age 55 and elect to take their lumnp sum suffer a 10 percent penalty on the lump sum?

A: Yes. If employees retire before the year in which they attain age 55 and receive the lump-sum credit, a 10 percent additional tax applies to the part of the amount that is included in gross income.

To assist those employees who chose to retire under VERA authority, a special retirement counseling office has been set up in building 35 to provide information so that eligible employees can make an informed decision. To make an appointment, call Alex Van Heuvel, personnel management specialist, at 545-1694/1139.

MARSHAL'S VIEWPOINT

By Steve Baker
Provost Marshal's Office

New technology at Fort Benning has made it harder to "get away with" shoplifting at the post exchange. Detectors in the post exchange, although not easily visible to consumers, are watching every move they make on video cameras.

Since these cameras were installed, the percentage of personnel apprehended for shoplifting has steadily increased.

Judicial/disciplinary action is being taken against those apprehended.

The profits from exchange activities are channelled back into the community to improve the quality of life for military personnel and their families by providing swimming pools, bowling lanes, libraries, car washes and laundromats, shoplifting.

Besides limiting the above facilities, it also decreases privileges in the PXs.

The fact is that shoplifting is "stealing" and it costs every one.

Individuals who are convicted of shoplifting find it harder to obtain or keep certain jobs and get loans. It's also very embarrassing.

How can you help? If you see someone shoplifting, report it. Remember they are "stealing" from you.

Simple recipes are fun, healthy

By Judy Cobb
Nutrition Technician

Has your day care child ever come to you and said, "Hey Mom, how about making some porcupine balls for supper. Or maybe a purple cow."?

If this has happened to you, were you totally confused? Well, as a benefit to all parents during National Nutrition Month, Child Development Services at Fort Benning is going to try to clear up some of that confusion by giving you a few of the recipes that are used in the Child Development Centers and the Family Child Care Homes.

Start your morning with these two delicious breakfast ideas:

WAKE—UP RICE

½ cup enriched long grain white rice
1 cup water
¼ teaspoon salt
cinnamon to taste
¼ cup fluid milk

Combine the rice, water and salt in a medium saucepan. Heat until water boils; reduce the heat. Cover the pan; cook for 14 minutes. Spoon the rice into cereal bowls. Top with the cinnamon and milk. Serve immediately.

BANANA COW

1 small (5-6") banana
1 cup fluid milk

Combine the banana and milk in a blender. Blend the ingredients until smooth. Serve immediately.

Lunchtime can be an interesting experience with these recipes.

PORCUPINE BALLS

1 pound ground beef
½ cup enriched long grain rice, uncooked
1 tablespoon onion, chopped
1 (10¾ ounce) can tomato soup
1 (10¾ ounce) can water
1 tablespoon Worchestershire sauce

Combine the ground beef, rice and onion in a large bowl; mix thoroughly. Form the mixture into 21 balls. Place the balls in a 2-quart casserole. Combine the soup, water and Worchestershire sauce in a medium bowl. Pour the sauce over the balls. Bake at 350 degrees for one hour.

MAKE—A—FACE—SANDWICH

Cut bread into a circle. Spread with peanut butter. Make "hair" and "eyes" with raisins, carrots, apple slices, coconut, etc.

Make snacks that will delight both children and parents.

APPLE GOODIES

½ cup applesauce
2 double graham crackers (approximately 5" x 2½" each)

Crush the graham crackers. Place ¼ cup crushed crackers in bottom of a glass or bowl. Layer with the applesauce. Place the remaining ¼ cup crushed graham crackers on top of the applesauce. Serve.

BUMPY CRUNCHY COOKIES

¾ cup vegetable shortening
¾ cup brown sugar, packed
1 large egg
½ cup apple juice
1 teaspoon vanilla
1 cup enriched all-purpose flour, sifted
½ teaspoon baking soda
1 cup carrots, shredded
2 cups regular rolled oats
1½ clubs crisp rice cereal
1 (6 ounce) package chocolate chips

Cream the shortening and sugar together in a mixing bowl. Add the egg, apple juice and vanilla; mix until smooth. Sift the flour and soda together in a small bowl. Add the sifted ingredients to the ceamed mixture; mix thoroughly. Stir in the remaining ingredients; blend. Drop the dough by teaspoonfuls onto greased baking sheets. Bake at 350 degrees for 15 minutes. Makes 5 dozen cookies.

ANTS ON A LOG

Fill celery sticks with peanut butter and top with raisins.

PURPLE COW

2-3 tablespoons frozen grape juice concentrate
⅔ cup cold milk

Gradually add 2 to 3 tablespoonfuls frozen grape juice concentrate into about 6 oz. (⅔ cup) cold milk. Always pour juice into milk.

CHEESE PUFFS

½ lb. grated cheese
1 stick margarine
1 cup flour

Mix all ingredients together. Roll dough into balls about the size of marbles. Place on cookie sheet or in baking dish. Bake at 350 degrees for 15 minutes.

Many of these recipes can be made by children. This is a good month to start some cooking experiences as a family. So cook, eat and enjoy!

Stress tips can reduce everyday tension

Army News Service

The following tips will help you cope with stressful situations that occur during our everyday lives:

- Begin each day with breakfast.
- Drink water or fruit juices instead of coffee or soft drinks.
- Get organized. Set your priorities. Write them down in checklist form. Depending entirely on your memory doesn't always work.
- Perfection is often sought, seldom accomplished. Realize this and the fact that you can't do everything right all the time.
- Keep your work in the office. Don't take it home with you. Go in a little early or stay a little late.
- Make your work environment as pleasant as possible.
- Instead of keeping petty annoyances inside, speak up about them.
- Co-worker support networks can be developed for sharing peak stress periods.
- Balance your work, rest and recreation. Do you need a change?
- Sometimes being a NERD can help you handle stress – Nutrition, Exercise, Rest and Diet.

Singer ministers with gospel music

By Jo Ann Stamey
USAIC Chaplain's Office

Bobby Michaels, internationally known for his music ministry to armed forces personnel, will be at Fort Benning March 31 through April 3 to provide special gospel music during the Holy Week.

Bobby has been traveling most of his life, and he is still on the move, but these days he has a definite purpose in mind — to minister with his music and tell the world about God through what he calls "a modest accomplishment."

Michaels grew up in Fort Worth, Texas. From there, he spent his youth in different parts of the world, as his father was a colonel in the U.S. Air Force.

Now, after completing a new album for Word, Bobby is living out of a suitcase once again. His album, Time, will be introduced to international audiences as Michaels paces himself through a heavy and demanding concert schedule that will wind up in May.

The Word recording artist sings in the "adult contemporary" style, and his material is an up-beat proclamation of Christian belief and hope. Michaels relates closely with his audience. His story of God's power in his life has inspired many.

Michaels has been to Fort Benning on several occasions — each time a resounding success! He will perform in nine concerts and services while here.

Thursday, he will perform at the 4th Battalion, 30th Infantry Chapel, 2nd ITB, at 7 p.m.

On Good Friday, he can be heard at the Sightseeing Road Chapel, 10:30 a.m., and at Theater No. 2 in Harmony Church at 7 p.m.

On April 2, Michaels will appear at the Reception Station at Sand Hill at 1:30 p.m., and he will appear at the 1st ITB Chapel at 4 p.m. and 7:30 p.m.

Michaels will be featured at the post-wide Easter Sunrise Service at the Field of Four Chaplains, 7 a.m., April 3. He will also be featured at the 2nd ITB Easter Sunrise Service to be held at Victory Pond at 8:30 a.m. At 11 a.m., Michaels can be seen at the Kelley Hill Chapel.

Everyone is invited to share the music and experiences of Michaels' ministry.

Family Life Center provides guidance, counseling from pastoral perspective

By Audrey Lenig
USAIC Chaplain's Office

The idea for the Family Life Center was originated in the 1970s by a chaplain at Fort Campbell, Ky., who recognized the need for family counseling for the military community. This service is now available at major installations across the United States as well as Korea and Germany. Families and couples are provided professional counseling and guidance from a pastoral perspective. Centers have been established based on local needs and are defined by local criteria. Consequently, no set definitions or directions are given other than authentic utilization of specially trained personnel.

According to Chap. (Maj.) Robert N. White, director, Family Life Center, "The center begins with and operates from a theological base and focuses on ministry to families with a particular emphasis on relationship issues. As a pastoral model focusing on reconciliation, problem prevention, family education and enrichment, it reaches out to the total community."

Some of the pastoral counseling and educational activities provided by the Family Life Center include family and marriage, divorce, parenting, death and dying, grief and child abuse. The enrichment programs include marriage enrichment, couples communication, family communication, grief and others. Consultations and referrals are also made. Systemic Training for Effective Parenting (STEP) of school age children is one of the more active educational programs.

White comes to Fort Benning from Fort Knox, Ky. He received his bachelors degree from Nyack College. His Master of Divinity degree was received from Gordon Conwell Theological Seminary in Massachusetts. In 1984-85, he attended the University of Louisville and received a masters in education in marriage and family counseling. He is currently in a four-year utilization tour. White has been a chaplain for 13 years. He has been married 24 years and has two sons. His oldest, age 20, attends Boston University and his youngest is a junior at Shaw High School.

The Family Life Center at Fort Benning provides pastoral counseling and education. All counseling is confidential and cases are received on a self-referral basis only. Anyone who needs counseling services may call the Family Life Center at 545-1760 to obtain an appointment.

Day-to-day deaths can be seeds to new life

By James K. Bluett
197th Infantry Brigade Chaplain

Death leads to life. This is the Easter Alleluia that peals forth today. The silence of Good Friday with the overwhelming cry that Christ our Lord is risen indeed.

From the days in the desert, whenever he saw disease, corruption, hypocrisy, he acted like those deaths were summoning him to struggle — and struggle he did. Too often we act as if it were at the moment of crucifixion that Jesus began to contend with death. Too often, it seems as if the great thing about Easter is our not being afraid to die because Jesus' rising means only that we shall rise. We narrow down dying to what happens when the heart stops beating. We act as if the grave, made of God's earth, is our enemy. The end of Jesus' long struggle, Easter, has too often been reduced to a hope of life after death. Most of us believe more in some victory over death than we believe in the struggle against day-to-day ways in which we all die.

We need to learn to recognize the death and resurrection events in our everyday lives. Any genuine full human life implies profound crises, ordeals, sufferings and losses, which hopefully lead to a renewed sense of self. Those deaths can be seeds to new beginnings. Death need not be anti-life. Life confronts us with the choice between death that destroys and death that leads to life.

Francis of Assisi called death his sister. Was death an enemy to Jesus? Nowhere does Jesus have a harsh word for death. He knew that death was as holy and good a creation as life. The dying that Jesus met, struggled with and overcame was not the falling asleep in the Lord that ends life. The dying was what he saw happening in the little towns and in the city of Jerusalem. He hated dying. Dying was poverty, dying was greed, dying was giving to Caesar what was God's — dying was judging others!

Easter is the belief of Jesus, and us, that dying is to the last word. Jesus took it on. Easter is about victory. The empty tomb, the meals of the risen Lord with his followers. The confusion and excitement that followed his death were the clearest possible signs that his followers had at last understood what the struggle was about and whose was the victory.

The word "victory" has a sense of conqueror and conquered about it. It's unfortunate that we tend to think of victories as over people — over husband or wife, parent or child, Russians or Americans.

Easter is a victory that fits springtime. The 40 days of our Lenten struggle were 40 days of the contest between cold and warmth, darkness and light. The good guys and the bad guys in life are not so easy to tell apart as light and darkness, nor do they confine their struggles to springtime. The same is true for the daily struggles we keep in our hearts. Our victories are always partial. But we gather today to affirm our hope to new life. On Easter, for at least one day of the year, we gather to say that "As Jesus was, so are we on the side of the living."

The gifts of God are simple. They are full of life. Easter's gifts of eggs, water, fire, bread and wine are the way we remember Jesus Christ as victor. The Lord is risen indeed! Alleluia!

Anglers report great fishing on Chattahoochee

Steve Simpson

Robert Kyser of 197th Inf. Bde. and his son, Scott, size up part of their catch while fishing the Chattahoochee River at Fort Benning

By George Mingee
197th Infantry Brigade correspondent

Crickets or minnows or artificial lures are a very important part of a recreational fisherman's tackle and gear. Blessed with spring like weather that Columbus has been receiving in March, these fishermen reportedly have been enjoying a whale of a time.

One area in particular that is reportedly experiencing a surge in number of fish caught, is the Chattahoochee River winding through Fort Benning.

"The white bass and the hybrids have been biting extremely well in the last few weeks," said Officer Randy Hackley of the Georgia Fish and Game Department. "In comparison to previous years, the fish have been biting for a longer time period.

Hackley added that this is good news, not only for the fishermen but also for the river. These two types of fish are stocked mainly to take pressure off of largemouth bass. The white bass and hybrids are bred and then deposited in strategic points along the Chattahoochee River.

The white bass and hybrids are very similiar in markings but with some difference. The white bass has broken or faded-out lines underneath its midline, running from head to tail. The hybrid, a cross between white bass and stripers, has a complete line running underneath its midline from head to the tail.

Lately, retirees, civilians, and soldiers can be seen fishing on the Chattahoochee, taking full advantage of this opportunity. However, some happy fisherman are jeopardizing their fun by violating the rules.

"For some people, the temptation to keep catching fish even after they have met their limit is too overwhelming," Hackley said. "One should take into consideration that if he has just one fish over the limit, it's a $55 fine, not to mention $5 for each additional fish in his possession."

Another, more common, violation is fishermen getting caught without a license. People go fishing and just forget to bring their license along with them. When a person gets caught without one, a citation is written and the person has to go to court and produce his license.

"A rule, which I'm glad to report is not broken as often, is the fisherman who uses a boat without an adequate number of life jackets, and at least one throwing device. Life jackets should be Coast Guard approved and the label should be fully attached and readable. If the label is torn off or the print is unreadable, then the life jacket needs to be replaced", said Hackley.

Fishing can be fun for everyone if the rules are followed and the hot spot you've dreamed about is found.

Faith School team enters Odyssey of the Mind competition

By Beth Middlemiss
Fort Benning Schools

The teacher stands with a stop watch. Five students sit at a table. The teacher poses a problem. The students sit in deep thought for one minute. The teacher gives the signal, and students begin to respond by giving creative answers to the problem that has been presented.

The teams are in training -- in class and after school. The teacher is Libbie Kurinec, Faith Middle School teacher and sponsor for the Odyssey of the Mind teams. The students are two groups of Faith Middle School students who recently competed in the regional finals taking top honors in the categories they entered. One of the teams received an unprecedented perfect score.

Odyssey of the Mind is a program that provides students a mental challenge through long- and short-range problem solving activities. It is based on the premise that the mind, like the body, can improve performance through practice and exercise.

In the competition, the teams present a long-term problem they have solved. Then, they must compete in the spontaneous problem solving activity where a problem is presented and the group must individually come up with creative answers within a minute's time.

One team — Jennifer George, Troy Hutchins, Loren Magruder, Dana May, Chris Moore, Danny Segal and Pontress Webb — developed a problem called "Comics." The problem required students to select cartoon characters, to make graphic cartoons and to write and perform one to four humorous skits that included music. Set up of scenery and the performance itself could only take eight minutes. The "Comics" team brought Pee Wee's Playhouse to life in a way that captured the regional championship as well as the Renatra Fuscra Creativity Award for exceptionally creative performances.

Gina Barlota, Nicole Dondelinger, Nathan Granham, Sterling Harris, Almad Hernandez, Tara Norton, Amanda Ritchie and Patrick Williamson developed a problem called "Classics...It's Showtime." The team developed and executed a musical scene based upon the classic story "Rumpelstiltskin." The story took a decidedly different twist as Rumpelstiltskin became a KGB agent. The "It's Showtime" team took the regional championship and the Renatra Fuscra Creativity Award.

The teams, their coach, Kurinec and her assistant coach, Joan Hutchins, are busily preparing for the state competition in Atlanta on April 16.

This is the second year that Faith Middle School has entered the Odyssey of the Mind competition. Last year, as first time participants, a team of Faith students under Mrs. Kurinec's sponsorship went all the way to the International Odyssey of the Mind Competition that was held in Michigan.

Accidental poisonings increase by 11 percent

National Safety Council

Chicago -- The National Safety Council has targeted senior citizens and children as groups in serious danger of accidental poisonings.

About 4,000 Americans died in 1986 from accidental poisoning, an increase of 11 percent from the previous year. The American Association of Poison Control Centers estimates that up to 1.4 million children and teenagers may have been involved in poisoning incidents in 1986. Fortunately, most of these incidents were not fatal.

Accidental ingestion of poisonous household substances such as detergents, paints and pesticides continues to plague the nation's children, while misuse of medications appears to be the main cause of senior poisonings.

In accordance with National Poison Prevention Week, being observed this week, the National Safety Council recommends the following poison prevention tips for adults with children:

•Dangerous household products like cleansers, paints, medicines, pesticides and automotive products must be kept out of the reach of small children. Kitchens, bathrooms, basements and garages are especially hazardous areas, and poisonous substances in these places should be locked up and stored so children can't get at them.

•Never leave a household product out of your sight when children are around. If distracted by the telephone or doorbell, carry the product container with you or lock it up.

•Never store poisonous household products in the same place with food, and always keep such products in their original containers. Be especially careful not to transfer ammonia, turpentine or other dangerous liquids to beverage bottles.

For adults:

•Read medicine labels carefully and obey the prescriptions. Do not take medicine in dim light or darkness. Such conditions make it more difficult to read labels.

•Never mix medications, take more than what is prescribed or use someone else's prescribed medicine. Avoid taking medications in combination with alcohol or other drugs.

•Keep detailed records of the medications you take, the dosages administered and the times of day when the medication is ingested. Include in your records both prescription and over-the-counter medications. If you experience any side effects from a medication show these records to your physician. Also show your physician your records during routine examinations and when additional medications are prescribed.

•Clean out medicine cabinets periodically. Discard unlabeled or outdated medications.

All age groups should keep the number of their nearest Poison Control Center near the phone, and call the center immediately upon accidental contact with a harmful or unknown substance.

Turn down water temp to save energy, money

By Becky Ray
Energy Management Office

In a household, the amount of energy used to heat water varies with the number of people in the family, their ages and personal habits.

Usually, heating water constitutes about 13 percent of total energy consumption in a household. If the water heater is electric, it accounts for about 44 percent of the electrical use.

To put these figures into perspective, the amount of electricity used to heat water for an average family of four costs about $302 per year using current average residential rates.

Because hot water heaters consume such a large percentage of household energy, they provide a great opportunity to cut energy waste.

Overheated water wastes energy and is a safety hazard. Water heated to 130 degrees is a scald hazard, and water at 156 degrees can produce a third degree burn in only one second. Preventive Maintenance personnel can check the water temperature in family housing units.

The largest use of hot water by households is in washing clothes. Energy use can be cut substantially by washing in cold water as much as possible and by using the washing machine's special features. Washing only full loads, and using short and soak cycles saves time as well as energy and can be easier on fabrics. Cold water is also more effective at removing lint from clothes than hot water.

Dishwashers also use lots of hot water — an average of 15 gallons per load. However, one operation of a dishwasher generally uses less hot water than is used to wash dishes by hand three times a day. To get the most effective cleaning from an automatic dishwasher, dishes should be loaded so that the dispenser and spray arms are not blocked. Wash only full loads — usually once a day for an average size family. The rinse and hold cycle should be avoided because it uses three to seven gallons of hot water. Instead, scrape and rinse dishes in cold water.

Hot water used in the bathroom can also be conserved by taking showers rather than baths. Letting water run while shaving or brushing teeth wastes water needlessly. Dripping faucets and leaky pipes waste water, the energy used to heat it and also overwork the water heater.

A faucet dripping at a rate of ninety drops per minute wastes about 1000 gallons of water in a year. This can usually be corrected by simply replacing faucet washers, which are issued at the Self Help Issue Facility, building 385 on Vibbert Avenue.

More severe problems should be handled by the Preventive Maintenance team. Broken water lines and water heaters should be reported to the Work Order Section, 545-2135.

One kilowatt hour of electricity will heat only four gallons of water in an electric water heater. This same amount of energy will burn a 100-watt lightbulb for ten hours, heat a burner on a stove for twenty-five minutes, or operate an electric clock for one month. Because so much energy is used in heating water, careful and efficient use of hot water is an excellent way to avoid energy waste in the home.

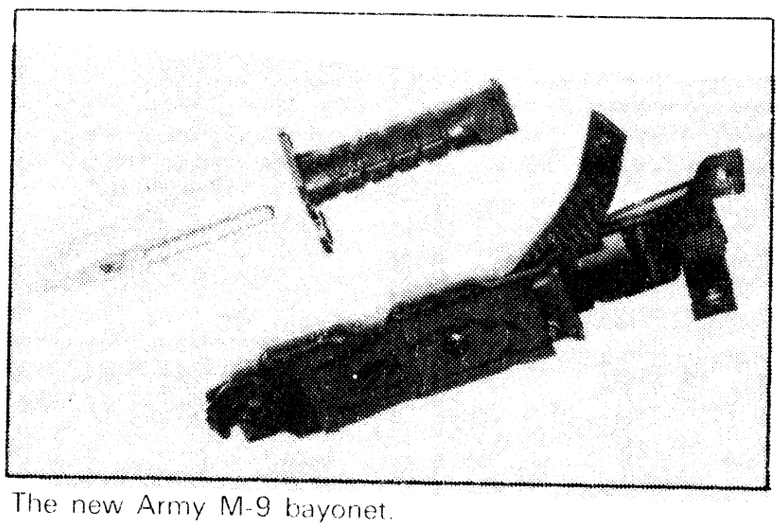
The M-9 Multipurpose Bayonet System to replace M-7

By Rudi Williams
American Forces Information Service

What weighs less than 2 pounds and can saw through half-inch hemp rope and light metal, cut through 10-gauge double-strand barbed wire, cut metal bands on ammunition containers, comes with a built-in screwdriver and can open bottles and cans?

It's the Army's new super-high-tech, corrosive-resistant, stainless-steel M-9 Multipurpose Bayonet System that performs these feats and more. It's the military's premiere combat fighting knife that will eventually replace the old, double-edged, carbon-steel M-7 bayonet.

Made of space-age plastic, the scabbard comes with a built-in sharpening stone.The scabbard attaches to the service member's belt or pack strap. But the modern-day, single-edged fighting knife that clips onto the combat rifle's muzzle is not insulated against electrical shock as has been reported in some journals.



"The operator's manual warns that, 'This bayonet is not insulated against electrical shock. Do not use to cut live wires,'" said Warren R. Zumwalt, chief of the small arms branch of the Army Armament, Munitions and Chemical Command at Rock Island, Ill.

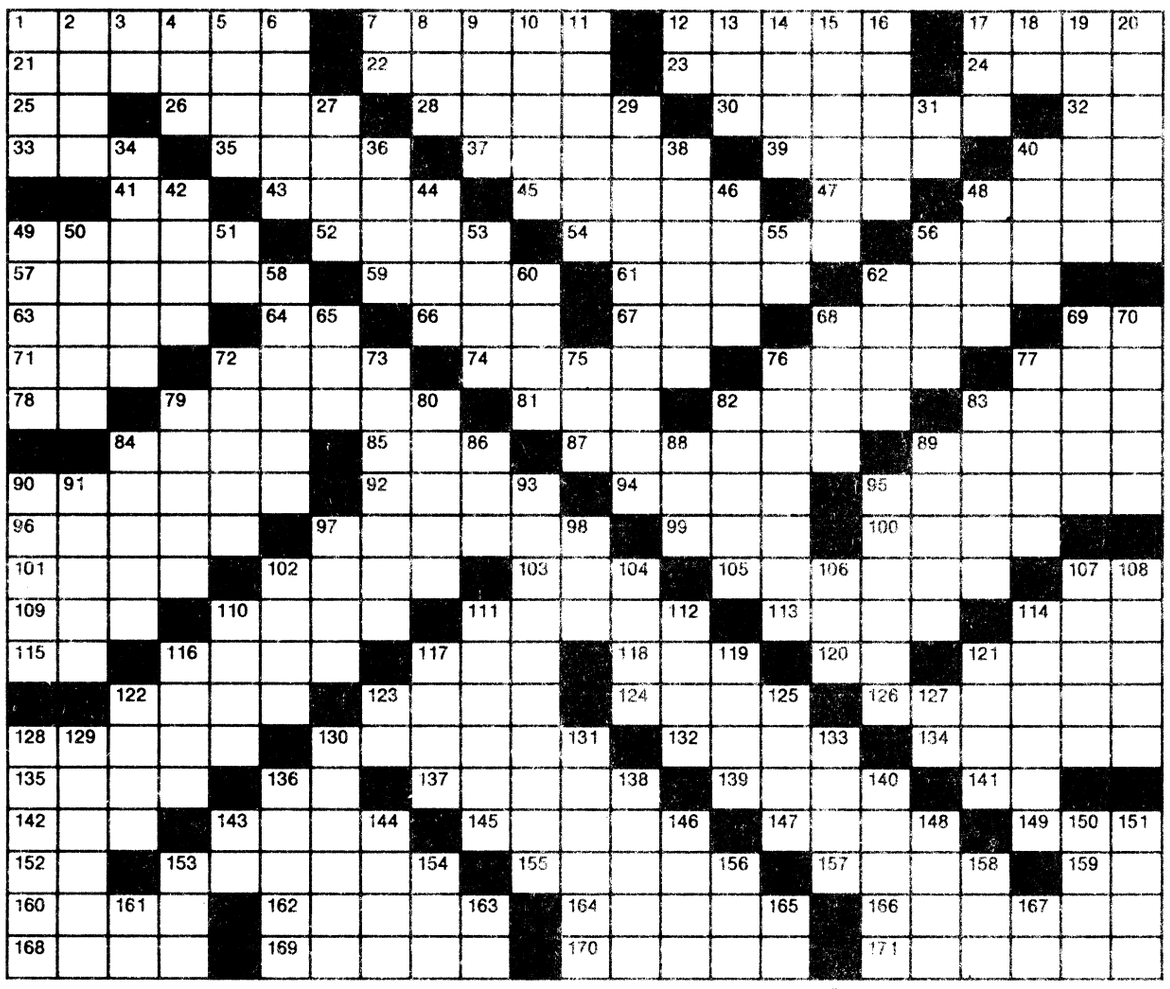
More than 700 of six different prototype bayonets were tested by the 3rd Battalion, 75th Infantry, at Fort Benning, Ga., starting in February 1987, according to Zumwalt.

Mak Picchianti, project engineer at the Armament Research, Development and Engineering Center at Picatinny Arsenal, Dover, N.J., said the multipurpose knife was chosen overwhelmingly by troops who used it in performance tests.

About 90,000 of the 105,000 bayonets ordered by the Army have been delivered to selected infantry, special forces and combat engineer outfits, including some Army Reserve and National Guard units. "They like the design and its capability," said Picchianti.

"It's working pretty well, but we've had a few minor problems — the rivets on the scabbard occasionally popped out, causing the scabbard to separate from the soldier's pistol belt," he said. "But that problem is being fixed in those coming off the production line now."

The new Army M-9 bayonet.



Other services are showing an interest in the weapon. "We're getting purchase orders from Air Force and Marine Corps units," said Zumwalt. "We also have some individual Army units ordering it. And we anticipate orders from many more units."

The Army was looking for a new bayonet because of an increased need for a utility knife. Soldiers were carrying their own survival knives and wire cutters in addition to the old double-edged bayonet. The new multipurpose bayonet also reduces the weight and bulk soldiers must carry. And changing the shape of the bayonet's blade increases its effectiveness in hand-to-hand combat.

Army weapons experts levied two other major complaints against the old bayonet. It doesn't hold an edge and is poorly balanced for hand-to-hand combat when it's attached to a rifle. The new weapon solves these problems.

Columbus mayor visits Loyd School

By Beth Middlemiss
Fort Benning Schools

Mayor James Jernigan of Columbus and Col. Donald M. McKay Jr., deputy post commander, visited the third graders at Loyd School recently as part of the students' study of community government.

The mayor talked to the students about how the Columbus Consolidated Government operates and commented that the "working relationship between Fort Benning and Columbus is excellent."

Bonita Willis, a Columbus College student doing a teaching internship with the Fort Benning Schools arranged the visit.
