Reserve Seabees report for training here

Seabee Larry Conklin receives instructions on the M-203 Grenade Launcher from SSgt. Billy P. White of Co. C, 2nd Bn., 29th Inf.

By Terry Bickford
USNR-R

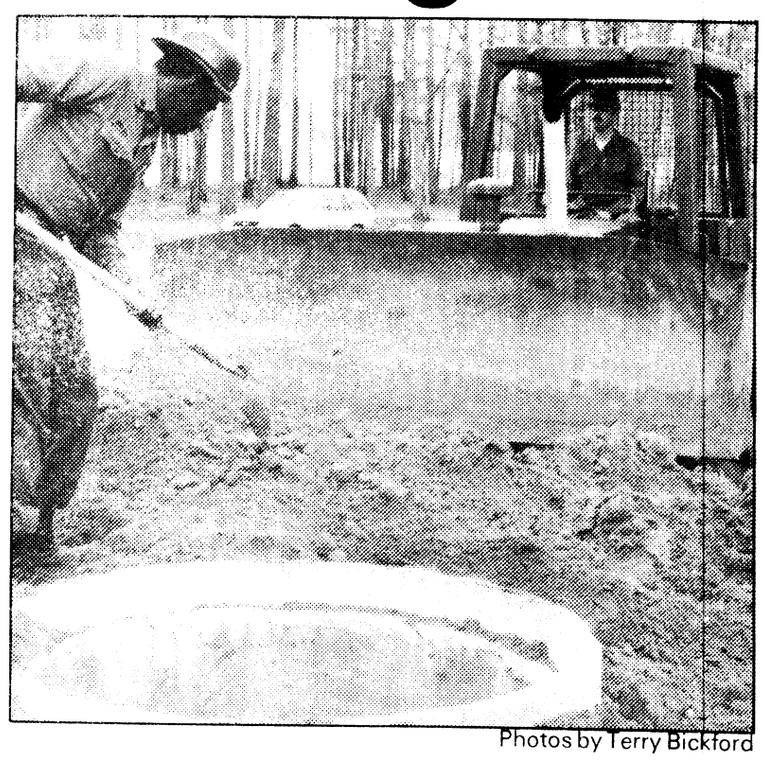
Reserve Naval Mobile Construction Battalion 12 is the second of three Navy Seabees battalions from the Northeast Region to report to Fort Benning for two weeks of military training.

The training began with RNMCB-11 on Feb. 21 and will end with RNMCB-13 on April 3. The three Seabee battalions make up the 7th Reserve Naval Construction Regiment, headquartered in Davisville, RI, with detachments spread throughout New England and upper New York state.

The commanding officer for RNMCB-12, John P. Heinstadt (commander, Civil Engineer Corps, USNR-R) stated about the training, Fort Benning provides an excellent site for the Seabee battalions to improve their military readiness capability. "Our important mission in the Naval Reserves is to be able to immediately mobilize a combat ready construction unit in the event of any national emergency. We must be an effective building and fighting machine," he said.

The focus of the training at Fort Benning is on weapons firing and qualifications for the M-16, M-60 machine gun, M-203 grenade launcher, the LAWS and the 81mm mortar.

Knowledge of these light weapons is essential for Seabee battalions to defend construction projects in hostile areas.



Army instructors from the 29th Infantry Training Regiment have been providing the weapons training to the Seabees and assisting in evaluating the level of proficiency gained with each weapon.

"The high degree of professionalism displayed by the Army instructors has been a real plus for the Seabees," Reinstadt said.

As part of the training exercise, emphasis has been placed on the development of small unit leadership for platoons, squads and fire teams. The Navy Seabees from RNMCB-12 have been able to sharpen these skills on a tactical field exercise during the second week of training.

Defensive operations were set up by platoons and squads at Walter Hill around a would-be construction area, positions were held for a three-day period.

In addition to the military training, the Navy Seabees have also been involved in some base construction projects. The Seabees formed and poured the concrete for a sidewalk in front of the 2nd Battalion, 18th Infantry Division motor pool; framed, wired and finished a room at the Kelley Hill Chapel; leveled and landscaped concrete foxholes at Malone 7 Range; and formed and poured footings for bleachers at Malone 21 range. The projects not only enhance the quality of life for the base, but at the same time, provide valuable training for the Seabees to work as construction teams.

The Seabees conduct similar construction projects as part of their training and community service at their respective drill sites throughout New England and upper New York state.

The Navy Seabees proved their worth in the theaters of combat during WWII as highly skilled, combat ready construction units. They gained a reputation of getting the job done, whatever the odds, whether it be laying airstrips or building field facilities in support of the combat soldier.

Even more recently, in 1968, RNMCB-12 was called to active duty in Vietnam for 13 months to work on important construction projects.

The Navy Seabees celebrated their 46th anniversary on March 5 and have grown to more than 25,000 in number for active and reserve units combined. The Reserve Naval Construction Force today provides 70 percent of the Navy's construction force and 18 percent of the entire selected reserve.

New program helps train Reservists in markmanship skill

John W. Stevenson
Reservists receive marksmanship training

By John W. Stevenson
Second U.S. Army Reserve

Competitors in the Army's competitive marksmanship program have always benefitted from the training received and the opportunity to practice and improve their shooting skills.

Now, with the implementation of a new program to train the marksmen as instructors, units throughout the Army Reserve will benefit directly from the marksmen's participation as competitors.

The new program began last year with a request to provide basic rifle marksmanship training to personnel from the Army Personnel Center (ARPERCEN) in St. Louis. CWO Albert "Al" Coots, FORSCOM marksmanship training expert and officer in charge of the All-Army Reserve Service Rifle Team, tasked SFC Robert "Bob" Davidson, the team's coach and a USAR school instructor, with developing a lesson plan for preliminary rifle instruction.

The lesson plan was used first last June, when members of the All-Army Reserve Team gave the instruction to around 250 ARPERCEN headquarters personnel. The plan and the method of instruction "worked extremely well," according to Davidson.

Coots agreed. "There were people who came up to me afterwards and said this was the first real marksmanship training they had received." Training of additional marksmanship competitors as instructors took place this week at Fort Benning when more than 460 of the best shooters in the Second Army area gathered for the Second U.S. Army Reserve Components Rifle, Pistol and Light Machinegun Championships.

SFC Davidson and other All-Army Reserve Service Rifle Team instructors taught the marksmen how to teach from the lesson plan they had developed during classroom training in building 4. From there, the new instructors moved to Simpson Range for "hands-on" instruction on the 25-meter zero range and the qualification range.

"Our next step is to develop a lesson plan for zeroing," Davidson said. "We are experimenting and identifying problems that need to be addressed here at Fort Benning."

The short-term goal of the marksmanship training program given here this week is to quickly develop a pool of instructors that will be able to go to Reserve and National Guard units on request and provide high-quality, standardized marksmanship training. "Our thinking (in training the competitive marksmen as instructors) is the more experience you have, the easier it will be to teach," said Coots.

A longer-term goal is to develop a complete program of instruction in basic rifle marksmanship that can be sent to all units for unit instructors to teach. "We want a complete, yet simple, lesson plan so NCOs can teach their soldiers," Davidson said. "The plan we have developed can be taught anywhere — in a classroom, under a tree or on the range. We should be able to qualify faster when we are actually on the line to fire."

Reserve unit marksmen compete at Benning

By John W. Stevenson
Second U.S. Army Reserve

More than 460 Reserve and National Guard marksmen from throughout the southeastern United States and Puerto Rico were on Fort Benning's ranges this week to compete against each other in the First U.S. Army Reserve Components Rifle, Pistol and Light Machinegun Championships.

In addition to determining the top individual and team firers, the competition also determined who fills the slots on the Second Army teams that will represent the command in future matches during the year.

Competition took place in five categories. Combat rifle matches used the standard, non-modified M-16 rifle. The composite rifle competitors fired the accurized M-14 rifle and were allowed to use special shooting equipment and apparel. Combat pistol competitors fired the .45-caliber pistol, while .22-caliber weapons were used for the composite pistol competition. Three-member teams competed against each other in the M-60 machine gun competition.

The championships are scheduled to end with an awards ceremony Friday at 1:30 p.m. in Theater 4.

Soldiers provided assistance when registering to vote

By Jeffery T. Kipi
Staff Judge Advocate's Office

It has been a long standing principle in law that "no right is more precious in a free country than that of having a voice in the election of those who make the laws."

To ensure that the right to vote is not undermined, it is the Army's policy to provide every soldier with assistance in registering to vote in his or her home state. After the soldiers have properly registered, they will be able to vote by absentee ballot.

To be able to vote in most elections, individuals must be registered to vote thirty days before the day of the election. Unless they are registered to vote within that time frame, they will not be able to vote in the election.

Because the time limitations and various other requirements vary from state to state, each soldier should begin the registration process months before the scheduled date of the election.

The Chief of Staff of Fort Benning has appointed a Unit Voting Assistance Counselor for every company-sized unit on post. These counselors will assist soldiers in registering to vote and in finding answers to questions about voting by absentee ballot. Soldiers should contact their Unit Voting Assistance Counselor as soon as possible so that they will be able to vote in this years' federal elections.

As James Madison, one of the founding fathers of our Constitution once said, "Who are to be the electors of the Federal Representatives? Not the rich more than the poor; not the learned more than the ignorant; not the haughty heirs of distinguished names, more than the humble sons of obscure and unpropitious fortune. The electors are to be the great body of the people of the United States."

It is the task of each soldier to protect the freedoms for which our country stands. Make sure you are doing your part by exercising your right to vote. Don't let inaction weaken our freedom. See your United Voting Assistance Counselor today and register to vote for tomorrow.

See page B-4 for a list of Voting Assistance Officers.

Appliances can waste energy

By Becky Ray
Energy Management Office

Household appliances can account for large percentages of the energy used in a home. It's smart when buying an appliance to compare energy efficiency so you'll save energy and get the most for your energy dollar. The appliance labeling program makes comparisons simple.

The program was developed by the Federal Trade Commission and the Department of Energy as a result of the Energy Policy and Conservation Act, which was signed into law in 1975. Under this law, manufacturers must place labels showing estimated operating costs of all models of the following:

- Furnances
- Water Heaters
- Refrigerators/freezers
- Clothes washers
- Dishwashers
- Air conditioners

The Energy guide labels are bright, yellow and black stickers that show comparisons of the estimated operating costs of different models of the same appliance.

The label shows the lowest estimated operating cost for that type of appliance on the left, and the highest estimated cost on the right. The estimated operating cost of the model on which the label is attached is shown in the center of the label and is marked with an arrow. The most energy efficient models will show the arrow close to the left of the sticker.

Obviously, the purchase price is not the only cost you should consider when shopping for an appliance.

Operating costs can vary greatly and make a substantial difference in utility costs even over a short period of time.

The labeling program makes it easy for consumers to shop for appliances wisely and to reduce the life-cycle costs of the appliances they purchase.

Tax filing deadline reaches 28 day mark

USAIC Public Affairs Office

With the deadline for filing with the IRS down to 28 days, the American Forces Press Service provides the following information to help you with your taxes.

Extension possible

Taxpayers who file Form 1040 or 1040A can request an automatic four-month extension to file their federal income tax returns, according to the Internal Revenue Service. The IRS stresses, however, that the extension to file tax returns is not an extension of time to pay.

To obtain the four-month extension, taxpayers must complete Form 4868, "Application for Automatic Extension of Time to File U.S. Individual Income Tax Return," and forward it to the service center processing returns for their area by April 15, 1988.

On Form 4868, taxpayers should make a tentative estimate of the year's taxes and submit any balance due with the form. If the unpaid tax is more than 10 percent of the total tax, a penalty will be assessed for the underpayment, unless the taxpayer can show reasonable cause for not paying the tax when due.

The penalty for any failure to pay, which began after Dec. 31, 1986, is one-half of 1 percent per month or part of the month on the unpaid balance, up to a maximum of 25 percent. If a notice of intent to levy or a notice and demand for immediate payment is issued, the monthly penalty increases to 1 percent of the unpaid balance, up to a maximum of 25 percent. Interest is also assessed on any unpaid balance.

Taxpayers who qualify to take an Individual Retirement Arrangement deduction for 1987 must make their IRA contributions for 1987 by April 15, 1988, whether or not they have been granted an extension to file, the IRS said.

Taxpayers filing Form 1040EZ or those requesting the IRS to compute their taxes are not eligible for an automatic extension.

Your tax taxed too

Taxpayers who received income tax refunds in 1987 from taxes paid in an earlier year to a state or local government may have to report all or part of the refunds as income on their 1987 IRS tax returns.

Generally, a state or local tax refund is reported as income only if the taxpayer itemized deductions on Schedule A of the 1986 Form 1040, deducted income taxes paid to the state or local government and received a tax benefit from the deduction.

State and local governments still furnish annual information statements to the Internal Revenue Service for all taxpayers who receive refunds, credits or offset of $10 or more from their state and local governments. These statements are similar to those required of financial institutions on interest and dividends. However, state and local governments are not required to issue statements to taxpayers, unless they itemized deductions on Schedule A of last year's Form 1040.

Refunds of federal income taxes are not considered income on a federal tax return. However, interest earned on a delayed federal refund is income and must be reported, the IRS noted.

Second job taxed

Taxpayers who earn income from a second job must report their earnings on their federal income tax returns.

Some examples of "moonlighting" that produces income that must be reported include an office worker who doubles as a babysitter in her spare time, a newspaper reporter who writes free-lance articles, a public school teacher who tutors for pay and a construction worker who picks up extra money doing home repairs on weekends.

Income from any source is taxable, the Internal Revenue Service emphasizes, whether it is received in cash, property or services, unless it is specifically excluded by law.

Even if a taxpayer does not receive a Form W-2, "Wage and Tax Statement," from an employer, income from moonlighting jobs must be reported on the tax return as wages or salaries. The taxpayer should also be aware that he or she may have to pay estimated tax if little or no tax is withheld on the income from moonlighting jobs.

If an employer indicates that a Form W-2 will not be issued, the taxpayer should keep his or her own record, including dates, names and addresses of employers, type of employment and amount of income. Because employers are required by law to issue a Form W-2, the taxpayers should also notify the IRS.

Some people who do work in addition to their regular jobs are considered self-employed, not employees. Examples may include free-lance writers and repair persons who set their own schedules and work out of their own homes. These people also must report their income. Generally, they use Form 1040, Schedule C, "Profit or (Loss) From Business or Profession." If they have at least $400 net earnings from self-employment, they must pay self-employment tax, a form of Social Security tax.

The IRS points out that if an employee incurs expenses in producing income -- such as union dues or uniform expenses — they may be deducted as miscellaneous deductions on Schedule A of Form 1040 if the taxpayer itemizes. Beginning in 1987, certain miscellaneous deductions were deductible only to the extent they exceed 2 percent of adjusted gross income.

For more information on reporting taxable income and deducting work-related expenses, the IRS offers free Publication 525, Taxable and Nontaxable Income, and 529, Miscellaneous Deductions. These publications may be ordered by calling 1-800-424-3676.

Child care tax break

Parents who pay someone to care for a child or dependent while they work, or look for work, may qualify for a special tax credit. It may be taken not only for payments to babysitters and day-care centers but also to certain relatives paid for this service.

This credit is available to married couples who both work part time or full time or are actively looking for work and file jointly. If one spouse works full time and the other who works part time is a full-time student or is disabled, he or she is also eligible for the credit.

The credit may also apply to a divorced or separated parent who has custody of a child who is under 15 or physically or mentally incapable of self-care, even though the parent may not be entitlted to a dependency exemption for the child. The parent claiming the credit must, however, have custody for a longer period during the year than the other parent. A married person living apart from his or her spouse for the last six months of the taxable year is eligible for the credit if a separate return is filed.

The credit is from 20 to 30 percent of eligible expenses, depending on the taxpayer's adjusted gross income. The maximum credit that may be taken is limited to $720 for one qualifying person and to $1,440 for two or more qualifying persons.

To qualify for the Child and Dependent Care Credit, a taxpayer:

- Must have been gainfully employed or in active search of gainful employment when the expense for the child's or dependent's care was incurred; and
- Must have paid over half the cost of maintaining his or her household, which included one or more qualifying individuals.

A qualifying individual is a dependent child under 15 years of age or a spouse or dependent who is mentally or physically incapable of self-care.

To claim the credit, taxpayers can file Form 1040A, using the worksheet in the Form 1040A tax package to compute the amount of the credit. Taxpayers who file Form 1040 may also claim the credit, even if they do not itemize deductions. These taxpayers compute the credit on Form 2441, "Credit for Child and Dependent Care Expenses," and attach this form to the Form 1040.

Additional informaion is available in IRS Publication 503, "Child and Dependent Care Credit, and Employment Taxes for Household Employers," which may be ordered by filling out the order blank in the tax package or by calling 1-800-424-3676.

Soldier of the Quarter says self-confidence is winning factor

By Shawn Bryson
36th Engineer Group correspondent

The soldier sits in an antique chair in the Bond Gallery at the Infantry Museum. Chin in hand, his dark eyes stare thoughtfully at the ceiling. For a moment, he scratches his dark brown hair, searches for the exact word to a question describing himself and answers clearly, "Self-confidence."

That's the characteristic that SP4 Charles "Chuck" Meroney feels enabled him to walk away with the title of Fort Benning's Soldier of the Quarter for the second quarter of fiscal year 1988.

It might seem odd that the Soldier of the Quarter is pulling museum guard. However, Meroney has had his share of details, and he doesn't mind the change of pace.

Meroney describes his victory as the icing on the cake for an eight-year Army career.

He explained it as a career in which he dealt with the trials and tribulations of being the low man on the totum pole as well as the senses of responsibility and pride that accompany leadership.

The 25-year-old Meroney hails from Kansas City, Mo. One of eight children, he credits his parents for success in the military. "I was raised in a Christian-oriented home. My parents set very high standards for me to follow, and I've carried those standards with me since."

Meroney also feels that his first squad leader and supervisor, Sgt. Richard Woodcox, greatly contributed to the soldier he is today.

"You might say that my parents made the mold and Sgt. Woodcox sculpted it," Meroney commented proudly.

As a Technical Drafting Specialist currently assigned to the 36th Engineer Group, Meroney has always been assigned to a headquarters company since his advanced individual training. His first tour was with the Headquarters and Headquarters Company of the 20th Engineer Brigade, Fort Bragg, North Carolina. While at Bragg, he attended the then Primary Leadership Course. "My Tactical Sergeant from PLC instilled in me a philosophy that has been invaluable to me ever since; Don't go by word of mouth, find it out in black and white." That's when,

Shawn Bryson

SP4 Charles Meroney works on a drawing for the S-3 construction section of the 36th Eng. Grp.

Meroney added, he began studying Army regulations to get a broader perspective of the Army.

Meroney went to the E-5 board in 1984 and later in the year, he was transfered to the 7th Engineer Brigade at Kornwestheim, West Germany.

It was at the 7th that he was able to put the leadership skills taught him to the test.

"In Germany, I was made a corporal and then later, an acting sergeant. I was put in charge of four draftsmen, five surveyers and five soil analysts." When the subject of leadership is brought up, Meroney has a strong viewpoint. "A soldier is a direct reflection of his leader."

"I demanded high standards for the sake of high standards, not just to impress my bosses. But I was also a fair leader. If a situation came down to the wire, I would make sacrifices of myself before my soldiers. Too often, I've seen leadership fail at the cost of good soldiers."

Meroney recalls a field exercise in Germany in which he fell victim to poor leadership. "We were all in the tent when a Master Sergeant entered and said he needed a hero. I don't know why, but I was the guy who didn't fake being asleep." Chuck went on to explain that after driving to assist a soldier whose vehicle had broken down, the truck he was given to drive ran out of gas. He was lucky to catch a ride to get some fuel.

However, he was unable to get a ride back to the truck. "I walked 17 kilometers with a full five-gallon can. Although Meroney is a stocky, five-feet, 10-inches tall and weighs 183 pounds, the mission was to say the least, difficult. "It might not have been so bad except for the 25-degree temperature, mud and sleet storm," he jested.

When SP4 Meroney is not soldiering, he enjoys listening to music from the 50s, 60s and early 70s. He also reads military books. "I have a book called 'Patton's Principles' from which many of my leadership beliefs come," he said.

Since he arrived at Fort Benning in September 1987, Meroney has also been a part of something extra special. "I belong to 'People Able to Love and Share (PALS) which is a program in Columbus and is an affiliate of Big Brothers."

"I love kids. I've been sponsoring a 10-year-old boy, Brian, for six months." He said that he takes Brian to movies and parties and enjoys every minute of it.

Meroney will be leaving the Army next month to go back to Kansas City, Mo. "I will be attending a police academy there and hope to be a narcotics investigator."

He believes that many of his experiences in the Army will help his new career, but one stands out.

"The Army has taught me how to deal with people from so many different backgrounds. That will be very important to me in my new career as a police officer."

Turkey time arrives at Fort Benning

By Deck Major
Fish and Wildlife Specialist

Have you heard any yet? It's time you know. Buds are popping, water temperature is rising, and most importantly, the amount of daylight known as photoperiod is increasing. As days become longer, all wildlife react. Large winter flocks of turkey hens and their polts begin to break up and go their separate ways. Gobbler groups also disperse at the males claim loose territories in preparation for the mating season.

You know what's next, spring gobbler season. That wonderful time of the year when you can try to match wits with a wiley old Tom. Spring turkey hunting is becoming more popular every year. As more novice hunters appear afield, the potential for a hunting accident increases. Complete camouflage also adds to the danger potential. In some states where turkey hunting is very popular, turkey hunting accidents, by ratio of license sales, outnumber deer hunting accidents each year.

A safe turkey hunter hunts defensively. Ponder these points before entering and while afield.

Choose your hunting companions carefully. If you have doubts about their abilities, educate them. If that doesn't work, don't hunt with them.

Wear proper clothing. Avoid wearing red, white, or blue outer or under garments. These are the colors of a gobbler's head and neck region. The red band on a sock could be mistaken for a tom's head by a careless hunter. A blue hankerchief tucked carelessly in a back pocket could likewise be mistaken. White T shirts should be covered entirely by drab outer garments.

Unless absolutely necessary, don't use a gobbler call. This call can be productive and also very dangerous. In areas of a high concentration of hunters, you will call more hunters in to you than turkeys. This call is best used for scouting prior to the season. While hunting, use a gobbler call when all else fails, and then sparingly.

Make sure it's a turkey. many hunters can imitate both gobblers and hens excellently. Assume it's a hunter calling until you're sure it's a turkey. Don't sneak on a bird calling. Turkeys are extremely wary and you'll undoubtedly spook it. It may indeed be a person and then not only will you be in a very dangerous position but you'll have spoiled his hunt.

Identify your target. Don't point your gun until you have identified your target. Keep your gun on safe position until the last possible moment. If you have any doubt — don't pull the trigger.

Choose a calling position carefully. Sit in the open woods with your back up against a large tree, stump, or rock. Keep your movements to a minimum and let your camouflage work for you to break your outline. Select a calling site that gives at least 40 yards vision in all directions. At this distance your bird is in range. Anything over that is too far. You can also identify your turkey and anyone who may approach. No surprises!

When other hunters approach. Gain his attention while he is some distance away. Don't move quickly or call like a turkey. Try to attract his attention by coughing, whistling, or speaking to him.

Check and double-check your safety. Often the most dangerous period for a successful turkey hunter is after he has fired. Be sure to put your safety back on before running to pick up your bird.

It's not always easy being an ethical turkey hunter. Remember, we hunters are also called sportsmen for a reason. Abide by these simple rules and all turkey hunters, including yourself, will benefit.

Abide by hunting regulations. Season lengths, shooting hours and bag limits are set by biologists who study turkey populations on a yearly basis. There is a good reason for the regulations governing turkey hunting. Any game law violations should be reported.

Respect the rights of other hunters. Two hunters working the same gobbler is one hunter too many. Always scout your own hunting spots. If you know them well, you should know if other hunters have also scouted the area. If you get to your hunting spot and it's already occupied, go to your alternate location. Never try to work a bird that's already being called by another hunter.

Make sure your target is a gobbler. Hens will often respond to calls. Gobbers are large, 15-24 pound birds with bright red, white and blue head coloring. Although a small percentage of hens have beards, none have the bright head coloring of a male. Jakes, or young males, may or may not have bright blue heads but they do have red-coloring in the head region. Hens are smaller birds (8-12 pounds) and because of brown-tipped feathers appear drab at a distance. Gobblers have black-tipped feathers and appear very dark and often have a metallic sheen.

Use proper loads and make sure your bird is in range. Gobblers are big, tough birds (twice the size of a Canada goose) and will take a lot of shot in the body and still run or fly off. Before entering the field, pattern your gun to determine which shot shell brands and loads pattern best. Because the sport and challenge of spring turkey hunting is calling a gobbler close, your initial shot should be at a standing or walking turkey. Most shots occur at 30 yards of less (never shoot at a gobbler over 40 yards) and one shot is usually all it takes. Aim should be at the head and neck and not the body. A full-choked barrel is best. Magnum loads of 6s or 4s aimed at the head and neck will knock a big tom down to stay at proper range. You're not goose hunting, 2's are a poor turkey load.

Good luck out there. We are fortunate to have an excellent population of turkeys on Fort Benning. With any luck and the proper freezer space, Thanksgiving '88 should be a special time indeed.

Vet clinic has pets for adoption

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

Are you looking for a companion that demands little more than a friendly pat and a few kind words?

If so, the Fort Benning Veterinarian Clinic is the place for you. The clinic has dogs and cats available for adoption at a nominal fee.

According to Capt. Mark Martinez, post veterinarian, the fee is to cover the cost of properly immunizing the animal and giving it an examination to insure the animal is healthy.

Martinez said that fees for a dog can range from $20 to $25 and for a cat, $15 to $20.

"We do this in accordance to post regulations," Martinez said.

He said, on the average, there are seven animals in the kennels. He urged owners whose pets are missing to check with his office. He explained that after three working days, the animal must be euthanized.

Martinez said 50 percent of the animals brought to the clinic have to be euthanized, 25 percent are returned to their original owners, the remaining 25 percent are adopted out.

Making weight may have negative health effect

By Alison Murray
Special to The Bayonet

Many of you have to "make weight" for your weigh-ins twice a year. Wrestlers, gymnasts, and weight lifters also have to make weight to compete. This practice will occur five to 30 times a season. Unfortunately, most soldiers and athletes do not realize the negative health effect of "making weight."

The primary means of rapid weight loss is dehydration. It's simple — the body loses water in response to insufficient food and water.

Fluid losses greater than two percent body weight can adversely affect health and performance. That's like losing more than three pounds of water weight for a 150-pound person. With excessive fluid losses, heart rate increases, stroke volume decreases (pumping efficiency), and cardiac output declines.

Simply put, the heart works harder to accomplish the same job. The result — decreased fuel and oxygen to body cells, and therefore, decreased performance.

Body fluids affect the body's temperature regulating system. When there is less fluid circulating to active cells the movement of heat from the cells to the skin is diminished. Sweating is almost shut off when plasma volume decreases, so the body retains heat.

Soldiers and athletes "making weight" who refuse to replenish body fluid are at risk for muscle exhaustion, heat pyrexia (heat-induced fever) and heat stroke.

Research is now indicating that repeated episodes of dehydration may have long-term effects on kidney function. Renal ischemia (decreased blood supply to the kidney) frequently occurs during acute stages of "making weight" and may lead to renal hypertension or high blood pressure.

The effects of dehydration can be serious, now and in the future. Unfortunately, many soldiers, athletes, and coaches are misinformed.

Learn to "make weight" the right way — through proper diet and exercise.

Officers Wives' Club sponsoring 'Festival of Running'

Officers Wives' Club

The Fort Benning Officers Wives' Club is sponsoring the 5th annual Festival of Running on April 9 at Eubanks Field, behind building 4 on main post. This major fundraiser has grown from a small race into the third largest running event in Georgia. Last year's race involved 6,000 runners from all over the state.

What makes this race different from many is that it involves the whole family. Events offered this year include 3- and 5-mile unit runs, 3- and 5-mile individual runs, ¼ and ½-mile children's runs, a 5-mile team run, a 1-mile fun run and a 3-mile walk. Something for everyone!

Concessions will be available for spectator purchase. Entertainment throughout the morning includes the U.S. Army Infantry Band, an aerobics demonstration, Silver Wings Parachute Team and much more.

Proceeds from the Festival are used by the OWC Welfare Committee to benefit local organizations such as the Boy Scouts and Children's Social Services, as well as to provide scholarships to military dependents at Fort Benning.

Registration forms may be found at various locations throughout the community or by contacting the OWC office at 687-3537 from 10 a.m.-2 p.m., Monday-Thursday.

Unit registration materials have been sent to all units. If your unit has not received any, contact the OWC office or the Race chairman, Rhett Kopiness, at 568-7251. All paid registrants will receive a T-shirt and refreshments following the race. Registration fee is $6. After April 5 the $7 late registraion fee applies. Register early.

Community repays soldier for losses

By Shawn Bryson
[illegible]

It's said that all's well that ends well, and 2nd Lt. Paul Ruiz would more than likely vouch for that.

Ruiz, who graduated from the Infantry Officer Basic Course March 23, learned that being a good Samaritan really does pay off.

Late last month, Ruiz was driving along Victory Drive in early [illegible] when he witnessed an automobile accident. Concerned for the passengers of the vehicles, he pulled into the nearest parking lot and rushed to the scene.

Ruiz, a former medic, applied direct pressure to a neck wound of one of the victims and rode in the ambulance to a local hospital to further assist the paramedics.

When Ruiz's help was no longer necessary, he caught a ride back to the motel where he had left his car. To his dismay, his car was gone.

It had been towed away because it was parked in violation of the motel's policy and none of the personnel at the motel knew to whom it belonged.

When he went to the towing service, he explained his situation, but he still had to pay a $44 fee to get his car back.

It took time, but his luck did change. After hearing about his story, some people realized that an injustice had been done to Ruiz, and he got what he had coming and then some.

Directly after his graduation from IOBC, Ruiz received a $44 check from Art Chriss, of ARCCO military sales. Chriss presented the check to Ruiz on behalf of the owner of the wrecker service who was unable to attend.

"The owner of the wrecking service is a personal friend of mine," Chriss said, "and I'm sure that he would not have taken the money from Lt. Ruiz if he had been there at the time."

Ruiz was also given a $100 savings bond from Robert T. Anderson, the vice president and branch manager of Columbus Bank & Trust at Benning. Anderson commented that what Ruiz did was very honorable and that he should be commended.

Carter T. Seaton, of the Columbus Ironworks Convention and Trade Center also presented Ruiz with a $44 check and emphasized that Ruiz shouldn't leave Fort Benning with a bad impression of the Columbus and Fort Benning community.

After the presentations, Ruiz said "I'm from San Francisco, and things like this go unnoticed. I was very suprised when I was told that I would be receiving the money. I never held any grudges to begin with so it's great the way it worked out, he said."

Ruiz explained that he will be returning to San Francisco to study law, but that he is leaving this community on a positive note.

Heating season officially ends; DEH turns off post heating units

By Becky Ray
Energy Management Branch

As of last Friday, Fort Benning's heating season officially ended. Heating units controlled by the Directorate of Engineering and Housing's Energy Management and Control System were shut down for the summer. Occupants of buildings in which the heat is not controlled are asked to turn their heating units off.

The criteria for ending the heating season is established in the Training and Doctrine Command (TRADOC) Regulation 420-11, which states that heating systems will be shut down when the average outdoor temperature is above 60 degrees Fahrenheit for three consecutive days. The 22nd, 23rd and 24th of March were sunny and warm with temperatures at Fort Benning reaching 80, 78 and 79 degrees, respectively. Average temperatures for these days easily exceeded the 60 degrees necessary to meet shut down criteria.

This early warm weather provides the post with an excellent opportunity to make gains in meeting energy goals. By extending the period between heating and cooling seasons, Fort Benning may be able to keep consumption levels for the year within the recently reduced TRADOC allocation.

Taking advantage of mild weather now gives us a greater chance for meeting goals and allows the use of air conditioning more freely later in the summer months. Thanks for being part of the Fort Benning energy conservation team.

Robert P. Patterson's widow passes away

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Margaret Winchester Patterson, the widow of Robert P. Patterson, for whom Fort Benning's annual Robert P. Patterson Award is named, died of heart failure, last Monday, in New York City. She was 91 years old.

The Robert P. Patterson Award is given annually to the outstanding Fort Benning Officer Candidate School graduate. Patterson served as a captain in the U.S. Army during World War I. Later, he served as a federal judge and as Secretary of War in the Truman administration.

Upon his death in 1952, a trust fund for the award was established with monetary contributions from personal friends. Until the past two years, his wife represented the family at the award ceremonies.

Mrs. Patterson was a former director of the Army-Navy Relief Society in World War II. She founded the Junior Army-Navy Guild Organization for servicemen's families to help them do volunteer work in hospitals and canteens.

She is survived by son, Robert, of New York City, three daughters, Aileen Patterson Seldes, Susan Hand Patterson, both of Manhattan and Virginia Montgomery of Bethesda, Md., also a brother, John C. Winchester, of Jupiter Beach, Fla., and 10 grandchildren.

The funeral was held at St. Philips in Highlands, Garrison N.Y.

Post plans Easter Sunrise Service

Edgren from the Office of the Chief of Chaplains in Washington, D.C. Music will be furnished by the 82nd U.S. Army Band. Bobby Michaels, internationally known for his music ministry to armed forces personnel, will provide special music. Babysitting will be provided in the Chapel Annex. Refreshments will follow the service on the annex patio.

Army recinds medical cuts

[illegible]

Cuts in medical services for military retirees and family members announced by the Army last week will no longer take place, according to Col. Herbert E. Segal, commander of Martin Army Community Hospital.

Segal said the cuts to benefits were rescinded because funds have been made available by the Department of Army to substantially restore a $36 million shortfall in the Health Services Command Operation and Maintenance Budget.

Segal said Martin Army will continue to honor prescriptions, lab tests and X-rays ordered by civilian doctors.

However, Segal cautioned that while no other cost-cutting measures are planned at this time, it is premature to rule out [illegible] cost cutting measures for fiscal year 1988.

"I'm pleased that the cuts have been reversed," he said. "But, I want to caution everyone that budget difficulties still remain."

In a talk with hospital staff members, Segal stressed the importance of obtaining the hospital's fair share of HSC's resources.

"It is important that we use our resources efficiently," Segal said, "so that when HSC's budget is reallocated, we obtain our fair share of the resources necessary to maintain our current level of medical services.

"We are in much better shape than most other HSC's facilities," he said.

According to Segal, Martin Army performs 3.5 percent of HSC's workload with only 2.1 percent of HSC's resources.

Presently, Martin Army has the highest workload [illegible] workloads [illegible] in 1985.

"We need to remain efficient to get through difficulties that are caused by our present budget constraints," he said.

Snively considers dumping old girl

By Clyde Snively
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Fritz is on her last legs.

The poor old gal survived five winters in Northern New York. That means nearly 30 months of driving on salt-laden roads; 30 months of being subjected to temperatures that could drop from a balmy 10 degrees to 30 below overnight; 30 months of scraping ice sheets off the windshield, of trying to knock blocks of ice the size of small icebergs off the wheel wells in order to turn the front wheels.

But it was the salt, that carcinogenic salt, that ate away at everything it came into contact with.

Holes are too big for even bondex to do any good. Where there aren't holes, there's rust — rust on top of rust.

It was time to get a new buggy.

I didn't tell the old gal, but I began looking around for another car.

First, I went to all the car and consumer magazines. I read up on fuel efficiency for various classes of cars, on safety features — which did best in the five-miles-per hour test, which did worse.

I checked to see which cars braked fastest, had the lowest repair and maintenance rates, availability of parts and the cost of them and which cars offered me the most protection should I get into an accident.

I consulted experts on resale value and checked to see what time of year was the best for buying various makes and models of cars.

Banks and credit unions were visited to see what the interest rate on a new car would be, and what that would do to the overall cost of the car.

Until you buy your first home, the purchase of a car is your biggest investment, and I wanted to do it right.

It took me about a month to compile all my raw data.

Next, I took it to Lanny, our local computer whiz and had him do up a program for me which, while it couldn't tell me which the best all around car was, could tell me which was the best for certain things.

That narrowed my choice down to just a few cars.

That's when I began stopping people in parking lots who were driving cars I was considering. I asked them how they liked their cars and what they thought of the dealer they purchased it from.

I was proud of my research and was sharing it with anyone who'd listen. Few did, but one, M.J., seemed most attentive.

"You know, I'm glad you stopped me," she said. "I need a new car bad, and all this information is giving me the incentive to go buy one."

"Oh, what's wrong with your car?" I asked.

"Baby seat," she said.

"Baby seat?" I asked.

"Yeah, kid's getting too big for the baby seat, so now I need a new kid seat. The one I want won't fit in the car I have now, so I need a new car," she said with all her logic.

"I see," I said and remembered I had some work to do.

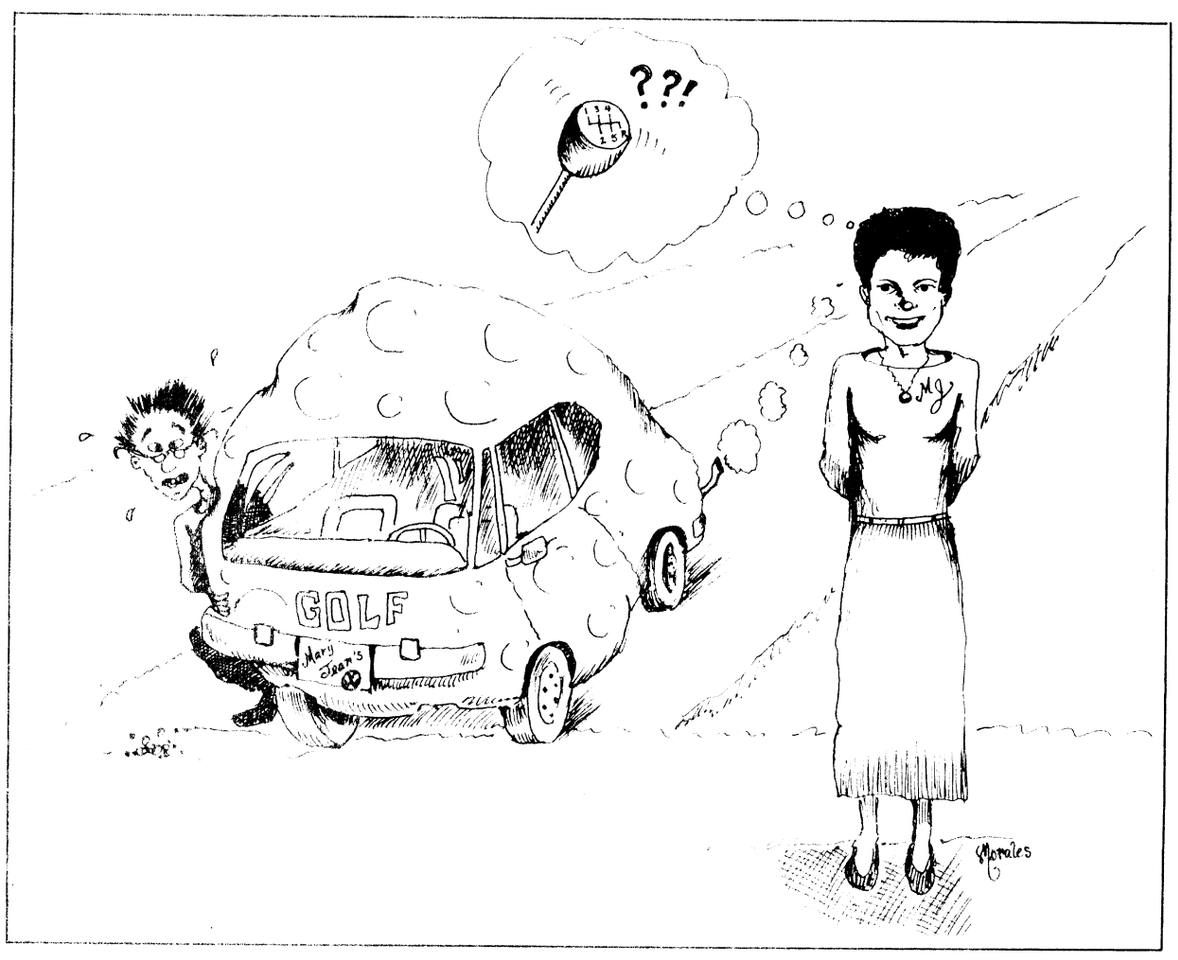
The next day it was she who stopped me in the hall.

"Hey Clyde," she called. "Guess what. I got a new car."

"She then explained what a sporty car it was, how it could do 0 to 60 in 5.8 seconds, then stop almost as fast. What great instrumentation it had, a leather covered stick shift knob, how the stereo worked, that it had a racing stripe down the side and a nape finished upholstery.

"Sounds great," I said somewhat envious. "Let's go look at it."

"Well, we can't today," she said.



"Oh, dealer still servicing it for you?" I asked knowingly.

"No, it's not that," she replied. "It's at home and all. But you see, I can't drive a stick shift."

"Then why did ya get it?" I asked, incredulous.

"I looked good in it," she said, "and besides, if I didn't hurry, I'd have had another payment to make on my other car."

Fritz and I are still together. There's more to this car buying business than meets the eye.

Civilian employees allow soldiers to maintain readiness

USAIC Public Affairs Office

When the Reagan Administration first came to power, a lot of military officials complained of serious shortages in the civilian workforce. They were talking about non-uniformed employees who undergrid every activity from operating our Army bases to research, development and procurement and ranging through the functions of maintenance, transportation, training, medical and communications. At that time, the Army estimated that enough soldiers to man a full combat division were working in civilian slots, many of them critical to mobilization. These borrowed soldiers were not available to deploy with their units in wartime, thus causing serious reductions in tactical unit readiness.

In response to strong pleas from Army leadership, Congress, in 1984, wisely removed its arbitrary civilian strength ceiling. This allowed the Army to manage its workforce more effectively by returning soldiers to the fighting units and by assigning to civilians the functions of keeping the records, maintaining the facilities, moving the supplies and performing the most intricate maintenance on our increasingly sophisticated arsenal of weapons. Coupled with other adjustments to the Army support structure, this allowed the Army to grow from 16 to 18 combat divisions without increasing the number of soldiers.

Today, there is every indication that reductions in the workforce, mandated by reduced Army funding for fiscal 1988 and 1989, will again force reliance on borrowed military manpower to fill critical civilian vacancies. In all, budget cuts dictate that the Army will lose more than 12,200 civilian employees by the end of next year. Equipment and supplies will no longer move through warehouses at optimum speed and the backlog of major pieces of equipment waiting to be repaired or rebuilt will steadily increase.

Most important, when Army commanders around the world are forced to divert soldiers from military training to perform housekeeping functions, there is a direct, negative impact on the readiness of the affected units. Congress must seriously consider whether the increased risks to our national security interests are worth the savings in civilian salaries.

101st mourns death of nighttime mission crash victims

Army News Service

For national media organizations, the recent crash of two UH-60 Black Hawk helicopters merited a minute or two of television air time. For soldiers, however, news about the crash hit home very hard. We lost 17 of our own, members of the tough 101st Airborne Division (Air Assault), at Fort Campbell, Ky., during a nighttime mission.

The Screaming Eagles are still healing from the loss of 248 soldiers who died in a plane crash at Gander, Newfoundland, in December 1985.

Those soldiers were returning from peacekeeping duties with the Sinai-based Multinational Force and Observers.

Our sister service, the Marine Corps, remembers the bitter agony of the Beirut, Lebanon, terrorist bombing incident in 1983. There are other tragedies dating all the way back to our nation's early days.

It is a hard fact that we, the men and women in uniform, must absorb the shock waves generated by tragedy. We must heal quickly and continue to train hard so our units can deploy and preserve or secure peace.

We realize the dear cost of our efforts when tragedy strikes. We hurt and share the loss with families of our dead comrades.

During the Gander ordeal, the 101st Division commander told one group of Sinai task force members: "You were so efficient and effective that the nation didn't even know you were there."

Soldiers are "there" every day year round. They train in varied jobs at posts throughout the United States and around the world.

Some work as advisors to foreign armies struggling for their developing country's freedom.

For the most part soldiers go unnoticed by the nation - until tragedy or some other "hard news" event occurs. That's a shame.

Sadly, the 17 soldiers who died while training at Fort Campbell will be remembered for giving the ultimate gift to the nation.

Had the accident not occurred, the soldiers would have completed their training and, as the former 101st commander said, gone unnoticed by the nation. Instead, their deaths shed intense light on the important, dangerous jobs performed by military people.

AUSA sponsors breakfast

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

Last week, more than 1,000 soldiers gathered at the Harmony Church Field House for an early breakfast and entertainment during the second quarterly Association of the U.S. Army Breakfast.

Featured at the breakfast was singing by former Miss Georgia, Marlesa Ball, and a speech by commanding general, Maj. Gen. Kenneth C. Leuer.

According to AUSA representative, MSgt. Johnny Smith, door prizes donated by corporate members of AUSA were given away to soldiers.

The commanding general of Fort Benning handed out AUSA plaques to deserving soldiers from various units on post.

Soldiers recognized were: PFC Bret Huntsman, 29th Inf. Regt., for scoring 100 percent on his Skills Qualification Test; SP4 Charles Meroney, 36th Eng. Grp., U.S. Army Infantry Center soldier of the 2nd Quarter; 34th Med. Bn. soldiers, Sgt. Robert Sedlock, NCO of the 2nd Quarter and Pvt. Todd Wurtz, Soldier of the 2nd Quarter; SP4 Mels P. Noel, 2nd Bde., 10th Mtn. Div., Soldier of 2nd Quarter; PFC Marlene Mendozo, School of Americas, Soldier of 2nd Quarter; SSgt. Harmon Wells, NCO of 2nd Quarter; Sgt. William R. Lindsay, 197th Inf. Bde., NCO of 2nd Quarter; PFC Tony D. Smith, Outstanding Duty Performance; Sgt. Bryan Stall, 75th Rgr. Regt., NCO of the 2nd Quarter.

Also recognized were civilians Lenora Smith, James Blanchard and Rozell Fabiani, who were all honored because of their work with soldiers.

AUSA president Jim Gallagher said he was pleased by the turn out of both the soldiers and civilian corporate members of AUSA.

"We try to make this event something soldiers can remember. I believe we achieved that."

Toll-free number set up to handle medal questions

American Forces Information Service

A toll-free 800 telephone line has been established to handle questions about DoD's newest medal, now being issued to those who were prisoners of war during America's armed conflicts.

Former POWs or their next of kin can call 1-800-873-3768 for more information on the award. All services will begin issuing the medals soon.

The medal also has brought another story to the fore: the fire that destroyed Army and Air Force records at the National Personnel Records Center in St. Louis.

The July 12, 1973, fire destroyed about 80 percent of the records of Army personnel discharged between Nov. 1, 1912, and Jan. 1, 1960. It also destroyed about 75 percent of the records of Air Force personnel (those with last names Hubbard through Z) discharged between Sept. 25, 1947, and Jan. 1, 1964.

For former POWs to receive the new medal, they have to present proof that they were prisoners of war and that their service was "honorable." The fire will make this tougher for most veterans who were prisoners of war during World War II and Korea, when the most American POWs were taken.

There are alternate sources of military-service data. Veterans have documents in their possession that can be used to "rebuild" their service records. Separation documents are especially useful. These categorize the type of discharge a veteran received, awards and sometimes a list of the veteran's units.

Veterans also may have medical records in their possession. These can be used to rebuild records, especially if the veteran is being treated for an injury or disease that started when he was a prisoner of war.

The Veterans Administration has records of vets if they or their families filed claims before July 1973. These too can be used to rebuild records at the National Personnel Records Center, as can information from state Adjutants General and state veterans offices.

Finally, National Personnel Records Center officials themselves can use other materials at the center to rebuild records such as the morning reports, payrolls and military orders.

Time moves forward Sunday

It's that time of the year again. If people want to get their normal amount of sleep time this Saturday night, they should go to bed one hour earlier than usual.

At 2 a.m. this Sunday, the nation will convert to Eastern Daylight savings time and clocks should be turned an hour ahead.

Although people will lose an hour's of sleep, there are a couple of positive ways to evaluate the time change. Since the change falls on a Sunday this year, most people won't have to worry about forgetting to set their clocks and being late for work. However, because the change occurs on Easter, those who forget may run a little late for Easter activities.

Another positive note, the time change gives people an extra hour of evening light during the spring and summer seasons.

To help with the twice yearly time changes, remember, "spring forward, fall back."

Commissaries stock Kosher items

U.S. Troop Support Agency

This year Passover begins at sundown today and ends at sundown April 9. Jews celebrate the beginning of Passover with a traditional seder, which consists of turkey or chicken, borscht, egg noodles and matzoh.

In observance of the holiday, U.S. Army Troop Support Agency commissaries have stocked the following Kosher items for sale:

Matzoh, thin tea matzoh, egg matzoh, matzoh meal, matzoh ferfel, matzoh cake meal, egg noodles, golden yellow cake mix, coconut macaroons, potato starch, old fashioned Gefilte fish, White fish and Pike Gefilte fish, borsch, sesame crunch, chicken and turkey.

Passover is the time Jews around the world remember the Old Testament Book of Exodus. It is the time of Moses, when the children of Israel were enslaved to a cruel Egyptian Pharaoh. It is the time when Yahweh saved His chosen people by admonishing each family to mark their dwelling with the blood of a lamb so death would "pass over."

Passover was dramatized in Cecil B. De Mille's "Ten Commandments" in a poignant scene where Pharaoh (Yul Brynner) finally relented to Moses (Charlton Heston's) "let my people go!" after the Passover death took the life of his first born. De Mill's version of Exodus had the children of Abraham looking like the Mosaic description of a fattened calf, as represented by top chef/tom (Edward G. Robinson). But, the Biblical account indicates that their 40 years in the wilderness was a hungry experiment with an ancient combat field feeding system.

Because, unlike a many-menued Meal, Ready-to-Eat or a modern and varied T Ration, the children of Israel had only the monotony of quail and manna to eat every day. There was no grumbling about the chow, though. They were thankful for every gift.

The seder meal focuses on the meaning of Jewish Passover: To recall the bitterness of bondage and the joy of a new beginning; to symbolize the communion between people and their God; to embellish conventional Hebrew greeting of peace . . . "shalom!"

U-Do-It has supplies ready for post Spring Clean Up

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

Yes, it's that time again, it's spring cleanup, and to help spruce up post housing, the Fort Benning U-Do-It Shop has several items available to aid residents.

According to Dominick DeCarlo, chief of Facilities Training Branch, the U-Do-It Shop has flowers, shrubs, trees and grass seed ready for pick up at the shop. He added there is a limit of five plants per resident.

"To make planting easier, there are several tools we can loan to post residents," DeCarlo said. "Currently in our inventory, we have fertilizer spreaders, tillers and weed eaters."

He said they also have pine straw, pine bark and fertilizer to spread around the plants.

DeCarlo recommended that post residents pick up and plant all available items before the end of April because after that, the temperature rises and the plants don't transplant well.

He said areas in which residents wish to plant trees must be surveyed before trees are issued.

As a reminder, the U-Do-It Shop has changed its hours to Tuesday through Friday, 9 a.m.-4 p.m. and Saturday, 9 a.m.-2 p.m. DeCarlo said the shop is no longer open Mondays since that is when they restock and take inventory.

Mountain men lend a hand at Special Olympics

By Shawn Bryson
Bayonet staff writer

Monday was a day to be remembered for many soldiers from the 2nd and 3rd battalions, 14th Infantry Regiment, 10th Mountain Division, as they extended helping hands at the Phenix City Special Olympics.

Approximately 66 mountain men volunteered their time and hearts to help at the annual event, which involves mentally and some physically handicapped children of all ages from Phenix City and Russell County.

The 283rd Army Band from Fort Benning was also present at the games and played at the opening ceremony.

After the traditional lighting of the olympic torch, the fun began for both the Special Olympians and the soldiers.

Throughout the day, the soldiers could be found measuring distances in the softball throwing competition or the standing broad jump. They also helped out by pushing wheelchairs and organizing and timing the children who competed in the running races and relays.

However, probably the biggest help the soldiers provided was assuring the children that they were special no matter how they performed in the games. The mountain men encouraged the children before events and praised their efforts afterwards. Hugs from soldiers brought smiles to the competitors, and they were given a ribbon after each event to show that everybody is a winner at these Olympics.

According to Col. Michael J. Connor, commander of the 10th Mountain Division, Phenix City adopted the 10th Mountain Division nearly three years ago when it was first activated at Fort Benning. Since then, he said, the relationship between the two has worked out very well.

"The mountain men have responded really well this year. The hugging and caring of the soldiers is a very special part of it all," Connor said.

SP4 Ben Farrel, from Co. A, 3rd Bn., 14th Inf., said, "I have a friend whose brother is handicapped so I understand these children and was very happy to come and help."

"Helping these kids has really been a blast, and I'd love to do it again," said PFC Greg Milam, also from Co. A.

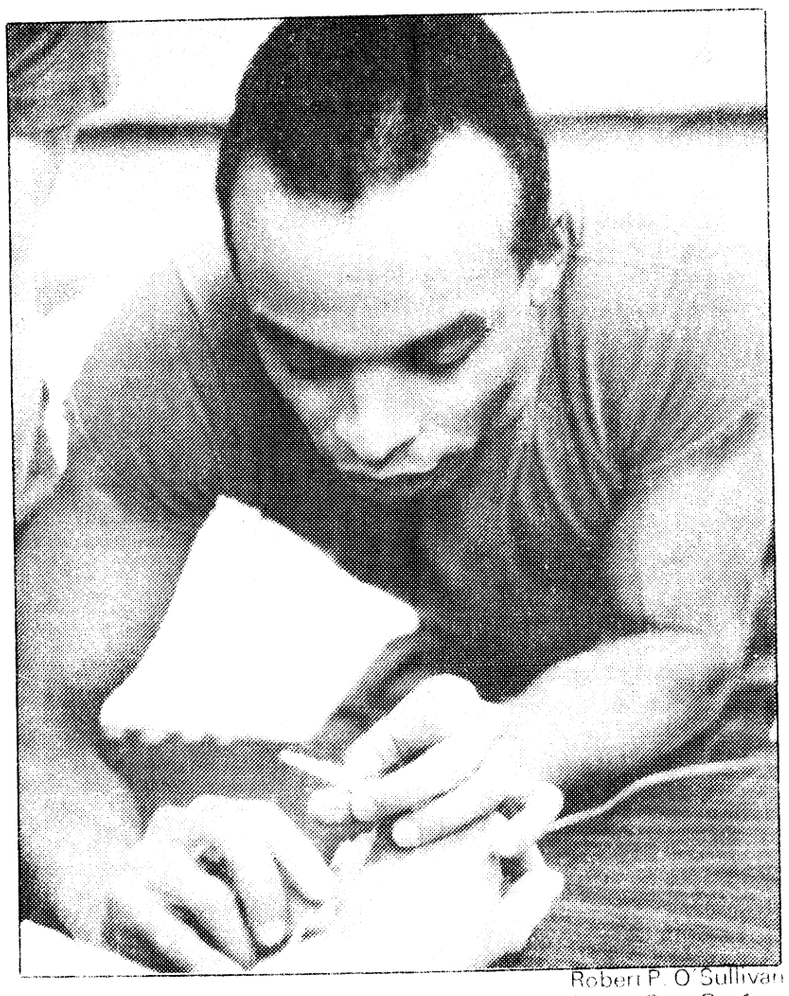
'Black Hats' trained to be Lifesavers

By Mountain Division

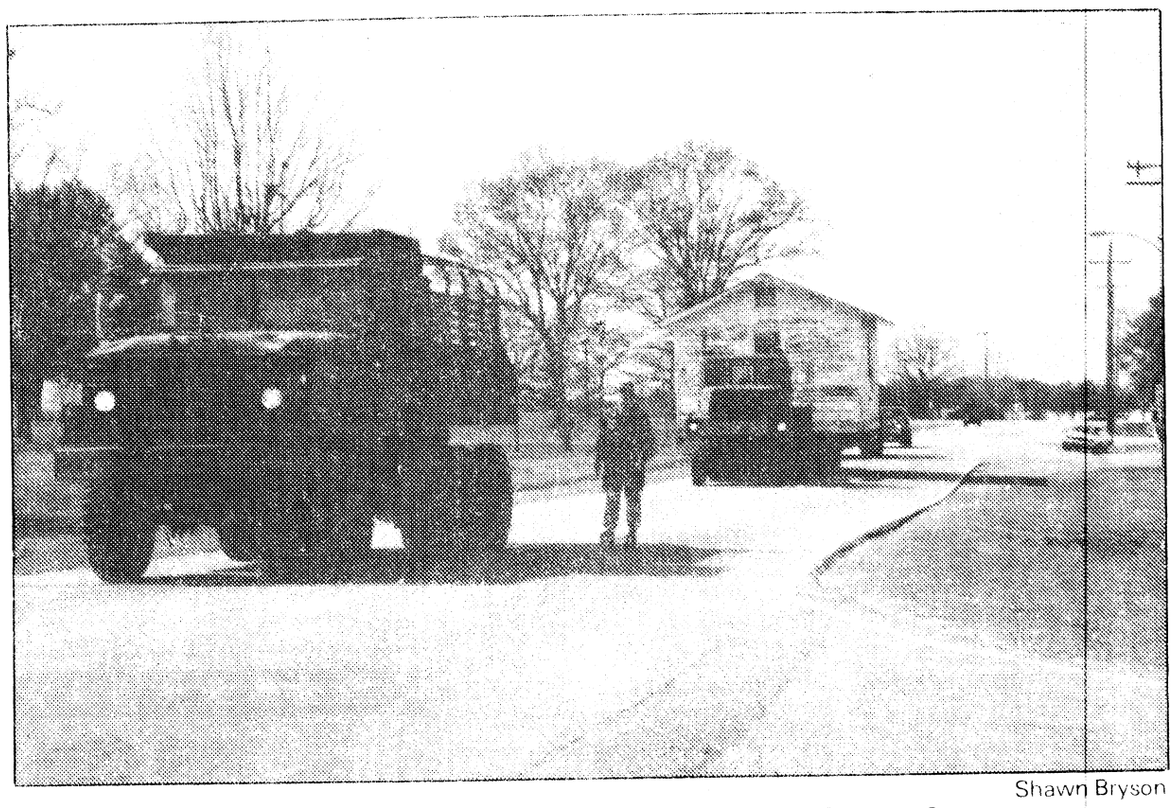
During the week of March 14 through 18, 25 "Black Hats" from 1st Battalion, 507th PIR were trained by physician assistants to become Combat Lifesavers.



A Combat Lifesaver is a non-medical soldier trained to provide emergency care as a secondary mission. Soldiers selected to be Combat Lifesavers serve as extensions to medics. These soldiers are trained to recognize and treat shock, provide cardio pulmonary resuscitation, apply splints and dressings, treat environmental injuries (heat and cold), initiate intravenous therapy and institute evacuation procedures.

CWO 3 Richard Schick and CWO 2 William Randall, physician assistants, 2nd Bde. 10th Mtn. Lt. Inf. Div. taught the course. Martin Army Community Hospital provided Basic Cardiac Life Support and certification for all the students.

Care given during the first hour after injury was the difference between life and death in Vietnam. Helicopter evacuation was one of the success stories of that conflict. However, in conflicts, air superiority is not expected, so ground forces will be forced to depend on ground care and evacuation.



Considering the number of medics needed to complete this mission, the Army Medical Department developed a program that will ensure capable care providers for the front line.

The 1st Bn. (Airborne), 507th PIR is the first TRADOC unit to receive this training. The ability to provide immediate care at the drop zone may save lives.

Engineer selected to get Sturgis Award

By Robert P. O'Sullivan
[illegible]

SSgt. Junior Purdy, platoon sergeant of 2nd Plt., Co. C, 43rd Eng. Bn., was recently chosen as the Fort Benning nominee for the Lt. Gen. Samuel D. Sturgis Award.

The Sturgis award is presented to the engineer noncommissioned officer who best exemplifies leadership, stamina and engineer expertise.

Purdy received this nomination for his work and leadership and accomplishments while deployed to Honduras.

Purdy deployed to Honduras in November 1986 with Joint Task Force Bravo Engineer at Palmerola Air Base, Palmerola, Honduras. While there, Purdy served as the manager of the Palmerola Class IV facility. He directed the storage, use and accountability of more than $12 million worth of construction supplies. These assets were used in the construction projects for United States forces in Honduras and in humanitarian-aid projects for the Man who fled from Vietnam graduates from OSUT

By Marsha Santiago
ITC correspondent

Graduating from One-Station-Unit-Training (OSUT) is a longed for and important event for any ITC soldier but for Pvt. 1 Thanh Nguyen, a 19-year-old soldier graduating today at Pomeroy Field, Sand Hill, the event has more than the usual significance.

Nguyen has been in the United States only four years, arriving in Seattle, Washington in July 1984. He was born April 1968 in Vietnam. His father, Tan Nguyen, was then a Captain in the South Vietnamese Army. Thanh is the youngest in a family of four.

In April 1975, his father was sent to prison. It would be two years before the family heard from or about him and seven and a half years before he would be released. In late 1982, Tan Nguyen rejoined his family. According to Thanh, the family always believed he would be released.

"We always knew he would come back," he said. "We just didn't know when."

After the family was reunited, Thanh and his father began trying to leave Vietnam for the United States. An older brother, Toan, had been living in Seattle since 1975. In order to leave Vietnam, Thanh and his father could not just make a plane reservation and arrive at the airport. They escaped from Ho Chi Minh City (formerly Saigon) on a 45-foot boat along with about 80 other people.

"We were lucky that day," said Nguyen. "We had tried to escape at least 10 other times before we finally made it. Something would always go wrong. The boat wouldn't start or the communists would catch us."

Even after leaving Ho Chi Minh City on the boat, there was no immediate feeling of safety for Thanh. They still had fears the boat would develop problems or rough weather at sea would stop their escape. However, for Nguyen, the trip ended in safety and in the U.S. — with a few stops along the way. The first stop was Malaysia where the American Red Cross and the American Embassy helped the father and son. Next stop was the Philippines, where the Nguyens spent six months learning English. Finally, they arrived in Seattle and were reunited with Toan Nguyen.

While the reunion was a happy one, there was one sad note. Although Thanh, his father and older brother were in the United States, his mother and two older sisters remained in Vietnam.

"We write to each other, but it takes months for letters to arrive," he said.

Thanh described his first feelings about the United States as ones of confusion and surprise. Confusion over different life styles and surprise that all the people seemed so large.

He and his father soon adjusted to the change. His father began working for Boeing Aircraft and Thanh completed high school in only two years. He then finished two years of college before deciding to enlist in the Army.

"I had always heard about the American people and the American soldiers," he said. "I decided it was a good thing to become a soldier and protect the freedom we have."

So he came to Fort Benning and Company D, 2nd Battalion, 19th Infantry, 1st ITB. According to 1st Sgt. Robert Miller the decision has been a good one for the Army as well as for Thanh.

"It's an old fashioned American success story," said Miller. "Here is a young man, arrived in this country only four years ago, and now he is an American soldier doing great in all his training."

Nguyen scored "expert" with the M-16A2 during Basic Rifle Marksmanship; "maxed" all 15 hands-on tasks during the Mid-Cycle Test; scored "expert" on the TOW System (his MOS is TOW gunner), received a first class qualification with hand grenades; "maxed" the 25 hands-on tasks during the End-of-Cycle Test; and successfully completed the Army Physical Fitness Test (APFT). According to Nguyen, the APFT was a challenge.

"When I came to Fort Benning, I was very weak physically. I had never run two miles while being timed, but the Army will make a man of you!" he said. "The most important thing is the mind. At first my body didn't think it would make it, but my mind said 'Push, push — if that guy can make it, so can you.' And I did."

For Nguyen, OSUT has been a positive experience. Although he said the first few days required adjustments, he believes the Army transforms boys into men and helps many people. He stated the drill sergeants are much like parents — they don't hesitate to tell you when you do something wrong, but in the end, their goal is to help you become the best you can possibly be.

After today's graduation ceremony, Nguyen will attend Airborne School and then report to Alaska for his first duty assignment.

What plans has Thanh made for the future? He is not certain yet if the Army will be a career, however, he plans to complete his college education and become a computer programmer.

121 Reservists complete Pre-mobilization courses

Shawn Bryson

Lt. Col. Adolf Carlson, commander of the 2nd Bn., 11th Inf. Regt., TSB, presents Sgt. Harold B. Gonzales with a trophy for being selected as the Individual Ready Reserve Pre-mobilization Course Distinguished Leadership graduate.

By Shawn Bryson
Bayonet Staff Writer

A group of 121 soldiers from the United States Army Individual Ready Reserve graduated March 25 from the first of two IRR Pre-mobilization courses given at Fort Benning this year.

The course was conducted by soldiers from Company D, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, The School Brigade, commanded by Capt. Scott Hampton.

The IRR soldiers received training with weapons, including an infantry weapons refresher course and basic rifle marksmanship training, Thomas said.

Land navigation was another area in which the Reservists were fine tuned. They also went on a five-day, field training exercise during which the IRR soldiers were given the chance to sharpen their leadership skills at the Tactical Leadership Course. It was said by many to be the most challenging part of the two weeks of training.

The Distinguished Leadership graduate for the course was Sgt. Harold B. Gonzales. The Honor Leadership graduates were SSgt. Llewellyn D. Byrd, Sgt. Mark W. Crowley, Sgt. Victor Green and SP4 Keith Marland.

SP4 Duane Collins was the U.S. Army Arms Race Award winner and Sgt. Mark J. Gomez was the winner of the Army Physical Fitness Test Award.

The guest speaker at the graduation was Lt. Col. Adolf Carlson, commander, 2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry, The School Brigade. He commended the IRR soldiers for their hard work and added that this kind of intense training has definitely better prepared the soldiers for combat.

The second of the IRR pre-mobilization course is scheduled for September.

Reservists train OSUT soldiers

By Raylund Lee Pryor
104th Training Division correspondent

The takeover of the 2nd Infantry Training Brigade by members of the 4th Training Brigade, 104th Training Division was neither hostile nor a surprise.

More than 140 members of the brigade, a Reserve unit headquartered at Fort Lewis, Wash. are currently training soldiers in One-Station-Unit training at Harmony Church.

"This is our mobility mission," explained Lt. Col. William W. Granville, 4th Bde. executive officer. "Our soldiers are constantly training to fulfill our mobilization mission."

Two training battalions, 2nd Bn., 415th Regt. and 3rd Bn., 415th Regt. arrived on March 19 to displace members of the 4th Bn., 3rd ITB and the 4th Bn., 36th Inf. Members of HHD, 4th Training Brigade arrived Saturday to run the Personnel Action Center for the brigade.

In a symbolic ceremony held Sunday, Lt. Col. Michael W. Hodge, 4th Bde. commander assumed command from Col. Victor E. Stamey, 2nd ITB commander.

"Colonel Hodge has taken over operation of the 2nd ITB," said Granville. "Colonel Stamey retains legal command, but Colonel Hodge is running the program."

Members of the 2nd Bn., 415th Regt. and 3rd Bn., 415th Regt. will return to Washington and two more battalions, the 2nd Bn., 413th Regt. and 1st Bn., 415th Regt. will conduct training for two weeks.

local Honduran people. These projects included the construction of a culvert and electrical wiring for an orphanage. Purdy was also the quality control noncommissioned officer in charge of planning deployments for training by Reserve, National Guard and Active Army engineer units.

While in Honduras, Purdy routinely briefed visiting officials and dignitaries on the mission and scope of the engineer effort in Palmerola. His experience in briefing culminated with a briefing of the 60 Minutes television news anchor, Mike Wallace. Purdy received a joint service commendation medal for the contributions during his stay in Honduras.

Since his return to the United States, Purdy has been involved with numerous engineer construction projects to include the renovation of the Officers' Wives Club Thrift Shop; the expansion of the 43rd Eng. Bn. dining facility; the construction of a 1,200-linear-foot, chain-link fence around building 3723, 10th Mountain Division; and the construction of five defensive bunkers for the February 1988 AUSA Symposium.

Most recently, he was involved with the removal and placement of two buildings from the DPCH telephone park to Santo's Castle. These buildings were loaded onto a 920 lowboy tractor-trailer with two 10,000-pound fork lifts and placed on a foundation of footers.

With noncommissioned officers of such high caliber as SSgt. Purdy in the Army, the Corps of Engineers will always surpass all standards.

USARSA officers receive tactics training

By Marco Morales
USARSA Public Affairs Office

Two courses, the Honduran Staff Officer course and the Training Management Course, graduated last Friday and Monday at the U.S. Army School of the Americas.

The Honduran Staff Officer Course is designed especially for company-grade staff officers. The course gives practical training on company and battalion tactics, offensive and defensive operations, field artillery employment and internal defense and development, which emphasizes psychological operations. This course runs 11 weeks.

The five-week Training Management Course prepares senior officers from Latin America to serve as directors of instruction for service schools and training centers. The course also teaches students how to function as training officers through the general staff level. Students are introduced to U.S. Army training doctrine, principles and training techniques.

Thirty Honduran Staff Officer Course captains and senior lieutenants were presented their diplomas by the school's commandant, Col. Miguel A. Garcia, deputy commandant, Col. Ulises Fumiato of Argentina, and USARSA, and senior guest instructor from Honduras, Lt. Col. Rene Pineda. Pineda was also the guest speaker for this graduation ceremony.

The Training Management Course graduated 36 students representing four Central American countries. Countries with numbers of graduates represented were, Costa Rica 3, El Salvador 21, Guatemala 2, and Honduras 10.

Guest speaker for the graduation was Col. Enrique Cano, a senior guest instructor from Mexico assigned to USARSA.

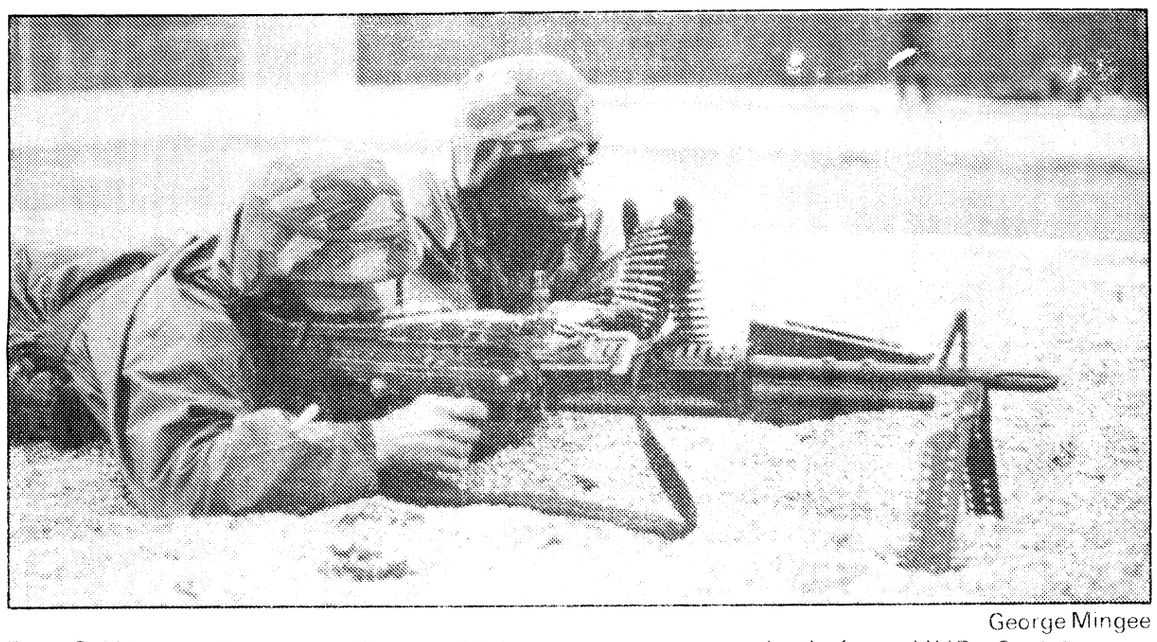
Artillerymen give 'thunder' a rest

By George Mingee
and Sally Roberts
197th Infantry Brigade correspondents

Artillerymen from the 2nd Battalion, 10th Field Artillery are known for their trademark: the thunder of the M-109 Howitzer. However, these soldiers must also maintain their individual fighting skills, utilizing smaller weapons.

Nearly 270 artillery soldiers recently reaffirmed their most basic soldier skills by firing weapons such as the M-16A1 rifle, M-203 grenade launcher and the M-60 machine gun for familiarization and qualification.



The training also gave the soldiers the opportunity to challenge their own skills and build up confidence with small arms.

"All soldiers need to keep their weapon's skills sharp," said Capt. William Bland, from the battalion operations section. "These individual weapons skills are a key to self defense."

Some soldiers also learned some basics of demolition at Brown Demo Range.

"The demo skills are necessary for emergency destruction of special equipment," Bland added.

Each of the ranges stressed proficiency and confidence with the individual weapons, enabling the artillerymen to support the 197th Infantry Brigade not only with the thunder of artillery, but also with the basic fighting skills of a soldier.

Airborne veterans jump into Republic of China during second annual parachute tour in Taiwan

By Michael R. Doyle
Association of Airborne Veterans

The International Association of Airborne Veterans conducted its second annual parachute tour to the Republic of China, Taiwan from Oct. 31, 1987 to Nov. 10, 1987. Sixty IAAV members (active duty, Reserve and National Guard veterans) who range in ages from 20 to 67 years old, and from private first class to full colonel, and their wives attended.

Activities included official visits to government departments, military facilities, national shrines and memorials, the military academy, the Airborne and Special Warfare Center, the National Palace Museum, Chinese banquets and regimental-type dining-in nights.

The R.O.C. army conducted refresher ground training at the Army Parachute School. The friendship jump was a static-line (or free-fall, for those qualified) descent from R.O.C. Air Force C-119 "Flying Box Car" aircraft. The Drop Zone was at "Chou Chaw;" a recently harvested rice paddy.

Some of the older paras landed like the proverbial "sack of mud" ... but all the IAAV jumpers walked off the D.Z. The second-in-command of the R.O.C. Army, Lt. Gen. Shih, hosted a bar-b-que at the Airborne and Special Warefare Center for all the IAAV jumpers and their wives. A wings parade followed: all IAAV jumpers were awarded their R.O.C. "wings" and jump certificates ... as well as military orders to authorize the wearing of R.O.C. parachute wings.

The R.O.C. tour with the Nationalist Chinese lasted 10 days.

After the R.O.C. jump trip some of the IAAV visitors returned home or to their duty stations in Australia, Europe and the Far East — while still others went on an optional four-day tour to Korea.

Part of the tour included a visit to the D.M.Z. where they saw the Third Tunnel; dug by the North Koreans in a secret invasion attempt. They also visited a front-line observation tower.

Those vets who are not yet members of the IAAV and who are interested in coming to the Third Annual R.O.C. Jump Tour to Taiwan in 1988 should send a stamped, self-addressed envelope to: I.A.A.V., Suite 181, 606 West Barry Street, Chicago, Ill. 60657, or call (312) 327-3120.

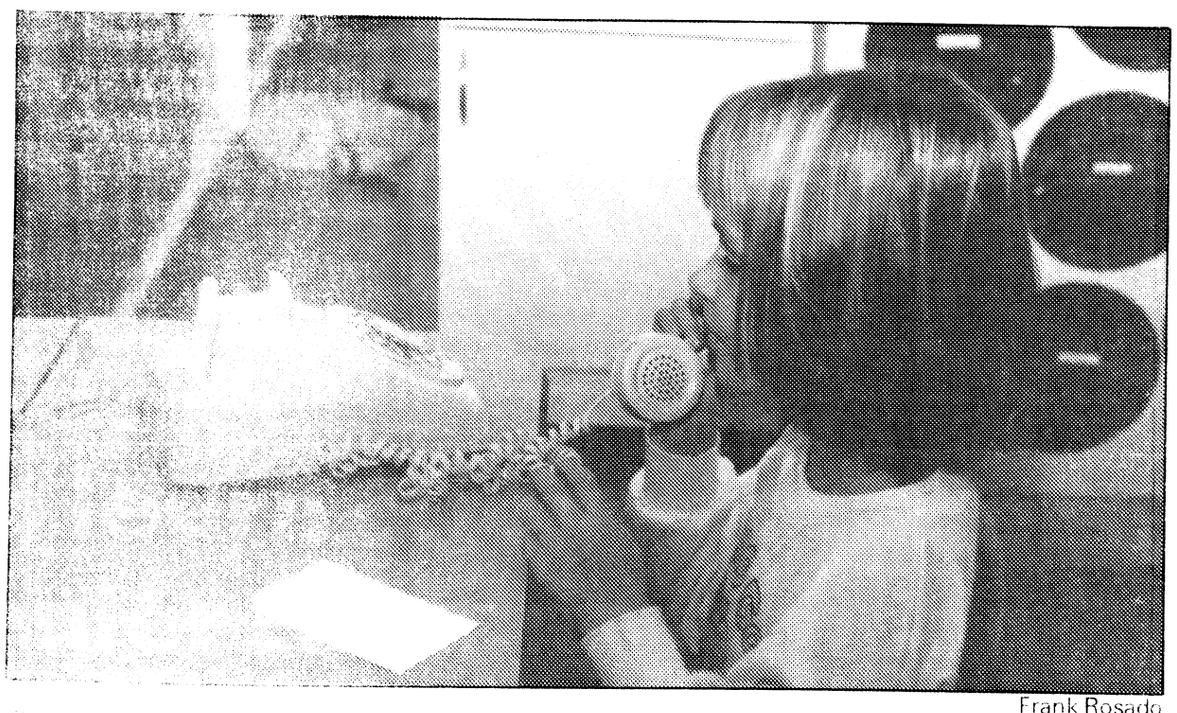
Children learn phone manners, keep senior citizens company



By Sharon Reynolds
Bayonet staff

The Fort Benning NCO Wives' Club is making it possible for the 2nd graders at Loyd Elementary School to brighten up the days of several Columbus senior citizens in a local nursing home by paying the phone bill.

A telephone, paid for by the NCO Wives' Club, has been installed in the 2nd grader's classroom and each day, the children are allowed to make phone calls to senior citizens who have been assigned as their phone pals.

Beverly Oliver, NCO Wives' Club president said, "They learn telephone manners in addition to providing company to senior citizens."

This is another of the ways the NCO Wives' Club is using monies collected by the club members to support the local community.

- Forward deployment and strategic lift
- Total Army readiness

At the local level, the chapter has been busy the past month. First, we supported the Drill Sergeant of the Year awards program recently by presenting to SSgt. Samuel P. Watkins a customized Beratta 9mm pistol, among other awards.

The chapter's quarterly breakfast was held on March 24 with more than 1,000 soldiers in attendance to hear Maj. Gen. K.C. Leuer speak; additionally, nine soldiers were presented AUSA awards for outstanding achievements in their units.

On March 30, the chapter will present scholarships to eight Columbus College ROTC students in recognition of their academic and military standings.

As you can see, the chapter is busy. In future weeks, I will report on other efforts at both national and local levels.

ASK THE JUDGE

By Ollie M. Mick
Judge Advocate's Office

Q — When I moved from my last apartment, the landlord claimed that I owed him $200 for damages and refused to return my security deposit because of it. Most of the things he charged me for were already damaged when I moved in, but I really can't prove it. How do I keep this from happening again?

A — Situations like this can be avoided in most cases by a little effort on your part, and accurate record keeping. Before you move into your next apartment, take the time to do a thorough pre-inspection. This should be done prior to signing the lease if at all possible. If the landlord will not agree to let you do the inspection before you sign, you should be wary of moving in. Be certain to check your lease to see what conditions it contains about your acceptance of the premises under those conditions. You may be agreeing that the apartment is in great shape without realizing that the walls are cracked, the oven is loose or similar flaws.

You may want to take your landlord with you when you do your pre-inspection. If he is unavailable or does not wish to join you, be sure to make accurate notes of all existing damage. Some landlords provide forms for this list, but if yours does not a handwritten list on any paper will be sufficient. If the landlord has not accompanied you on your inspection, you should be sure to review the list with him and have him initial and date it to indicate that he agrees the damage was already present before you moved in. Keep a copy of this list with your permanent records.

Most states require the landlords to do post inspections of rental property within a few days of your move. If you are still in the area, it may be helpful for you to walk through the apartment with your landlord while he does this. Many small things can be pointed out at this time and corrected by you without much difficulty. For example, it would probably be cheaper for you to go back and clean the oven again than for the landlord to hire someone to come in and do it for you. Remember that any money the landlord is required to spend will be charged against your damage deposit.

When you receive a statement from the landlord telling you what he is charging you for, compare it with the pre-inspection checklist that you prepared when you moved in. If any of these charges are for items which were damaged when you moved in, the landlord will not be able to hold you responsible. If you have trouble resolving a deposit dispute and getting your money back from the landlord, make an appointment to see a Legal Assistance Attorney who can look over your documents and check the state laws which apply to your situation.

MARSHAL'S VIEWPOINT

By Toney Bailey
Provost Marshal's Office

Last year, more than 1,000 bicyclists were killed and more than 40,000 injured in the United States in accidents. The majority of these victims were between the ages of 5 and 15 years old. With the advent of hot, summer weather, Fort Benning will see a marked increase in the number of bicyles involved in accidents.

While bicycling can be both enjoyable and healthy, it can also be dangerous. Although collisions involving bicycles and cars are often the fault of the car driver, it's the bicyclist who is more prone to be seriously injured.

These sobering thoughts make it imperative for both parents and their children to do all in their power to decrease the likelihood of becoming involved in a bicycle accident. For starters, when planning to purchase a bicycle for a child, every parent should be aware of the responsibilities that must be assumed. Several questions that a parent might ask are:

Is my child old enough to understand traffic laws?

Is the neighborhood safe for children on bicycles?

Do I have the patience to teach my child traffic laws and rules?

Bicyclists of all ages must understand that, just as in operating an automobile, adhering to safe riding practices is of the utmost importance. The following are some pointers to help you and your children to "ride right with a bike."

Obey all traffic signals.

Be seen at night. Be sure to have a white light in the front of your bike and a red reflector on the rear. Always wear light or reflectorized clothing when riding at night.

Keep to the right — ride in the same direction as cars, but just as close to the edge of the road as possible.

Ride in a single file — always ride with one bicycle behind the other and never side by side.

Slow down at intersections — look in all directions.

Use proper hand signals — give signals before, not while turning.

Keep both hands on handlebars — especially while turning.

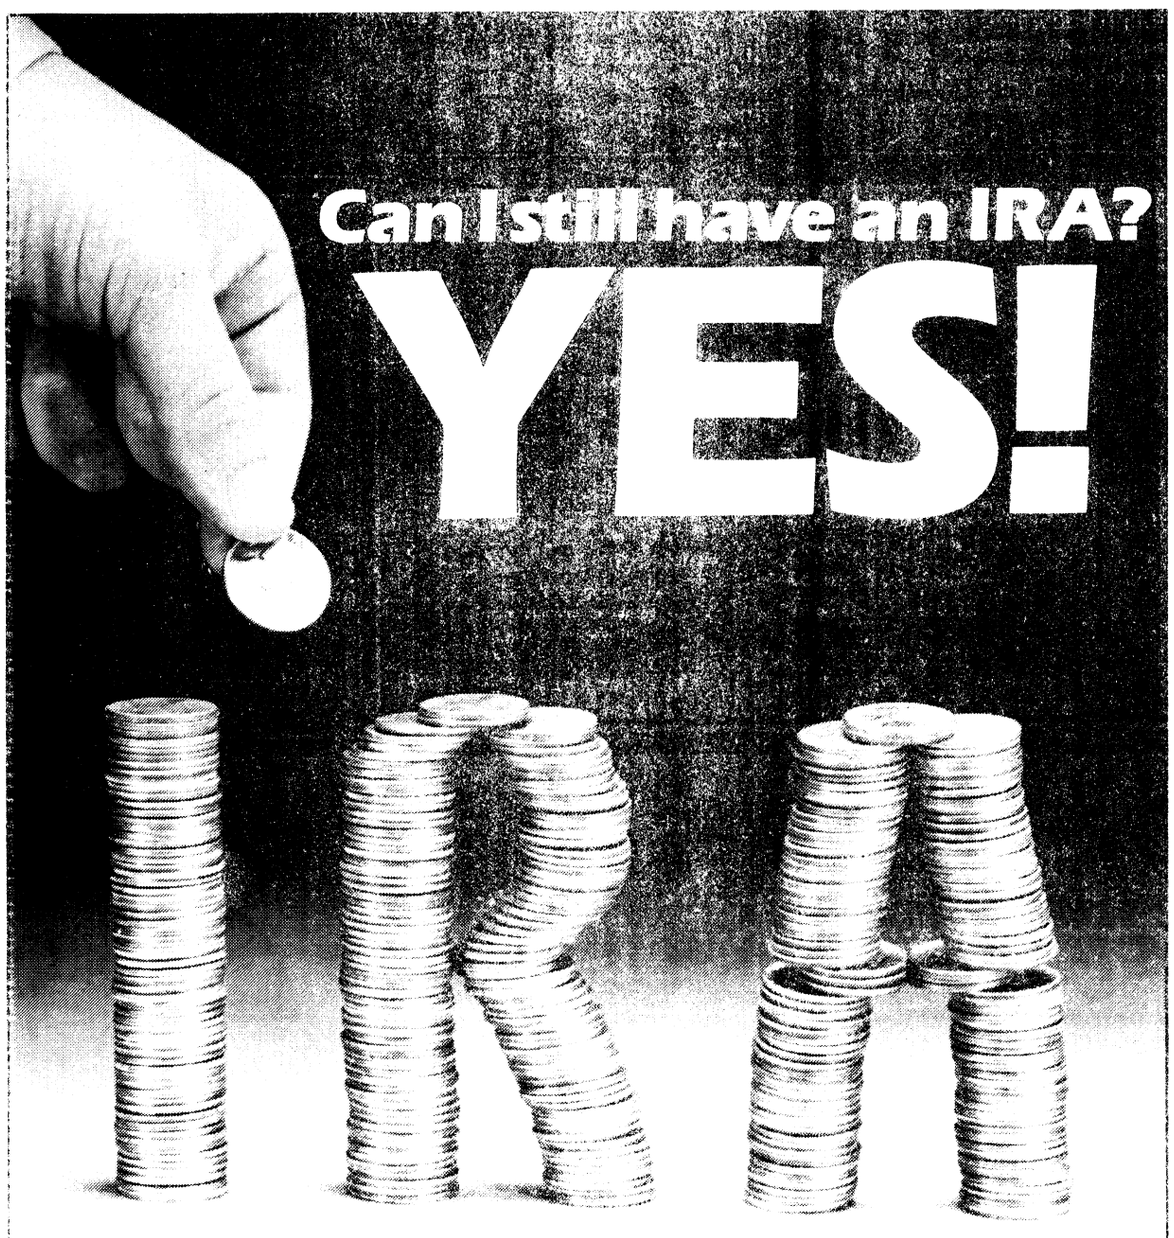
Ride in a straight line — don't weave or swerve in traffic. Don't be a showoff.

Slow down going downhill — you may have to stop quickly.

Keep your eyes straight ahead — watch where you are going.

Only one on a bike — bicycles made for one rider should never carry two.

Don't ride a bike that's not in good condition — it's not safe. Check your brakes and steering before you ride.



Remember the above rules and teach them to your loved ones. By working together and observing the rules of the road, we can make our community a safer place in which to live, work and play. Accident prevention is your business.

Hate, prejudice lead to darkness

By Craig L. Allen
58S Chaplain

On a cellar wall in Cologne, Germany, where Jews hid from Nazis, was found the following poem:

"I believe in the sun even when it is not shining,

I believe in love even when feeling it not,

I believe in God even when He is silent."

Silence.

Is God ever really silent? Eli Weizel was possibly the first to capture in his writing the unavoidable inner tension one feels when dealing with the Holocaust; namely, that it is an event in human history so profoundly unbelievable, so distant, and yet so personal that we are simultaneously numbed into silence and yet, uncontrollably and unexplainably compelled to speak.

A healthy response to the Holocaust should include three things: remembrance, grief and growth. Certainly the historical lesson is clear, that hate and prejudice, if unopposed, lead only to pain, social calamity, and spiritual darkness. It has been said: "All that is necessary for the triumph of evil is for good men to do nothing." That is not a particular, but a universal lesson. In every sense, the Holocaust is a collective tragedy. Anyone who views it as a Jewish problem is clearly living an illusion, for the way in which a society reacts to its cultural diversity is an unmistakable barometer of its mental health. A sick society is a national problem and ultimatly the implications are universal.

How and what should we grieve? According to Jewish tradition, one who takes a life is as if he murdered a whole world, for not only does the individual die, but also his potential for good. Hence, to take a life means to deprive the world of all he could have been as well as his offspring and their offspring. Eleven million lives! All those individual hopes and dreams that could have so profoundly influenced the course of mankind, found a cure for cancer, written a symphony or found the right words to appease an angry society. Eleven million souls deprived of the right to experience life, to enjoy a sunset or be awed by a butterfly.

To destory all those hopes and dreams is to wage war with God!

Ultimately, if we as a nation and as a species are to move forward and grow from this collective tragedy and get on with the great work and divine partnership that remains before us, we must find a way to internalize and personalize the Holocaust, both individually and nationally. Only by personalizing the experience will we insure that we will continue to remember our victimized brothers and sisters of all origins and creeds. Only then will we continue to grieve for them and what they could have been. Only then will we dedicate ourselves to the dignity of all life and to the preservation of the human spirit. Perhaps nothing more fully captures the purity and worth of the human soul than an excerpt from a poem written by an unknown child from within Theresienstadt concentration camp:

"Try to open your heart to beauty; go to the woods someday and weave a wreath of memory there. Then, if the tears obscure your way . . . you'll know how wonderful it is to be alive."

On Friday, April 15, 4 p.m., Fort Benning will hold its third Annual Holocaust Memorial Service, in Marshall Auditorium. Alex Gross, an Auschwitz survivor, will be the featured speaker. All are encouraged to attend. For more information, call Chap. (Capt.) Craig Allen, 545-1314.

Significance of Passover explained

The Hebrew word Pesach, from which the English word Passover is derived, literally means to jump or leap. In the book of Exodus (11, 13), we read about the Angel of Death skipping over the Hebrew slave houses which had been marked with lamb's blood. This act, putting the blood on the doorpost, was one of commitment to or "casting ones lot," so to speak, with the fortunes of what would shortly become the Jewish people. It was no glib act on the part of the Hebrews, since the lamb was an Egyptian deity. Hence, by slaughtering it and blatantly publicizing the act, one was flaunting his defiance in the face of his oppressor. To say that this was an act of faith is an understatement indeed. Moreover, it was one of civil disobedience, probably the first collective one in recorded history.

Furthermore, in Exodus (13, 8) we read: "And you shall explain to your son on that day", 'It is because of what the Lord did for me when I went free from the land of Egypt.'" This and other verses are the basis for the Passover seder, the elaborate meal and accompanying ritual and commentary that takes place on the first night of the holiday. It is this yearly retelling of the Exodus story in conjunction with the symbolic foods and rituals for the entire eight days of the period, that have served to connect Jews of all ages with each other and their collective historical redemption. For God is first and foremost a God of history, who reveals Himself through pivotal acts of involvement (events) in the affairs of man. Aside from God's continual love and presence, the secret of Jewish survival has been the ability of each Jew to internalize and personalize (i.e., remember) these events. By so identifying with our common past, we obtain the necessary degree of optimism and courage concerning the continuing existence of the Jewish people, hast countries committed to Jewish survival. It is not surprising, therefore, that we invariably find prohibitions of Jewish holidays and other religious acts (circumcision, Sabbath observance, Torah study) enacted by host nations against the Jewish community. Certainly that is the situation that presently exists in the Soviet Union.

Given the Jewish historical experience, an aversion to enslavement of any kind is inevitable. You could probably make a good psychological argument that the disproportionate Jewish tendency toward social activism is a matter of identity. Since Jesus, as a Jew, undoubtedly viewed himself as having "personally gone out of Egypt," he behaved in a way that was totally unacceptable to the Romans, as did the thousands of other Jewish dissidents that the Romans killed during the period. Indeed, this has historically been the case in almost every country in the world where Jewish eternal values conflicted with the transient values of spiritually decaying governments. The United States is an obvious exception, and perhaps that is the source of her strength. With all the present unrest around the world, we can only pray that this country's values will serve as an inspiration to the rest of the world and that "the Kingdom of God will be established speedily and in our days."

EDITOR'S NOTE: With the income tax filing deadline only 15 days aways it's time to get with it. The following information is provided to help you with your return.

The Tax Reform Act of 1986 made sweeping changes to the law of personal income tax.

Some of these changes have already been discussed in detail in previous articles. But, this article provides general information concerning certain miscellaneous provisions in the Act that changed the previous law, highlighting those provisions that most directly impact on soldiers.

Income: Military allowances, such as quarters and subsistance allowances, which previously were not taxed, retain their tax-free status. Additionally, military fringe benefits that were in existence and excludable from gross income on Sept. 9, 1986 will not be considered taxable income.

Tax Rate: The new law reduces the previous 15-percent tax bracket to two: 15 percent and 28 percent. The 28-percent rate begins on taxable income of:

$29,750 for joint filers and surviving spouses,
$23,900 for heads of households,
$17,850 for single individuals, and
$14,875 for married couples filing separately.

There is also an additional 5-percent surcharge placed on taxpayers once their taxable income reaches $71,900 for joint filers, $61,650 for heads of household and $43,150 for single filers.

Taxable income does not include tax-free allowances. The new rates are effective for tax year 1988; five rates will be used in 1987, the transition year.

Personal Exemption: The exemption a taxpayer is given for each dependent will be increased progressively from the current $1,900 to $2,000 in 1989 ($1,950 in 1988).

Standard Deduction: The standard deduction for joint filers will be increased in 1988 from the current $3,760 to $5,000, and from $2,540 to $3,000 for single taxpayers. Itemized deductions will have to exceed this amount before there will be any benefit to itemizing a return.

Mortgage Interest Deduction: Interest paid on a mortgage on a "qualified residence" remains deductible, with certain limitations. There is now a statutory assurance that the IRS will not deny military members the deduction because they receive a tax-free allowance for quarters.

Earned Income Credit: The earned income credit for low income taxpayers who have a dependent child in their home increased, permitting a maximum credit of $800. It is not completely phased out until gross income reaches $17,000. The home for the child must be maintained in the United States for one to qualify for the credit.

Itemized Deductions: Fewer people will benefit from itemized deductions because:

- The standard deduction is increased to $5,000 for joint filers in 1988.
- Many other itemized deductions are reduced or eliminated.

Consumer Interest: In 1987, you can deduct only 65 percent of all consumer interest. You can deduct 40 percent in 1988, 20 percent in 1989, and 10 percent in 1990. After 1990 the deduction is eliminated.

Medical/Dental Expenses: These expenses are deductible only to the extent that they exceed 7.5 percent of adjusted gross income.

- Miscellaneous Itemized Deductions: Expenses for such things as professional dues, unreimbursed business expenses and deductible uniform expenses are only deductible to the extent that the total amount of such expenses exceeds two percent of adjusted gross income.

Moving Expenses: These expenses are no longer an adjustment to income. Instead these are now itemized deductions available only if you can itemize your deductions.

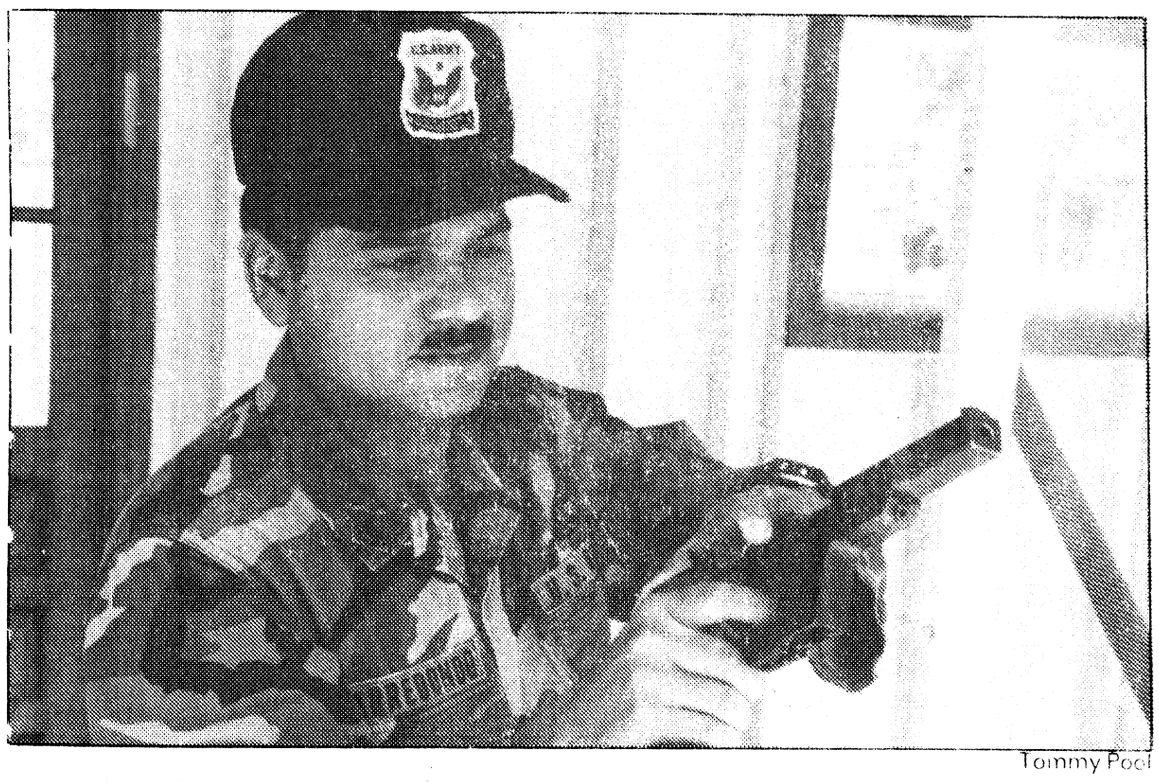
Taxes: Sales taxes are no longer deductible, though state and property taxes will remain fully deductible.

Two-Earner Deduction: The deduction given joint filers when both work is repealed.

Capital Gains Exclusion: There is no longer an exclusion from income for capital gains. Rather capital gains will be taxed as ordinary income at the same rates as apply to all other income.

Dividend Exclusion: 100 percent of all income derived from dividends must now be included as ordinary income on your tax return.

IRAs: Those covered by an employer-provided retirement plan (this includes soliers) will lose the current $2,000 deduction for IRA contributions once their income exceeds $35,000 for single filers and $50,000 for joint filers. The deduction is allowed for those whose income is under $25,000 for single filers and $40,000 for joint filers. A partial deduction is allowed if your income falls between these limits.



Children's Accounts: Any unearned income by a child under the age of 14, that exceeds $1,000 will be taxed at the parent's tax rate. This precludes parents from gaining tax breaks by setting up interest earning savings accounts in their children's names.

Income Averaging: This method of tax accounting is now eliminated.

Political Contributions: There is no longer a credit for contributions to political campaigns.

Charitable Deductions: Charitable contributions can now only be deducted by those who are able to itemize.

The Act was designed to simplify the tax law and make it more fair. Whether this objective was achieved or not is open to debate, however, it is certain that there are definitely more changes to occur in the near future. Whether individuals will obtain a tax cut or tax increase as a result of the current changes in the law depends on how many of the various changes affect them.

Members of the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit won five of the seven individual events and also won three of the five team championships.

Top medal winners in the matches were SFC Jimmie McCoy and SSgt. Ray Arredondo, both winning medals in three different events.

McCoy won the 50-meter, free pistol event and followed with silver medal finishes in center-fire and 10-meter, air pistol matches, while Arredondo scored a gold medal in standard pistol, a silver in rapid fire pistol and a bronze medal finish in centerfire pistol.

In the rapid fire pistol event, last year's winner, Capt. John McNally, successfully defended his title and set a new Interservice record in the process.

The former Olympian fired a total of 687 out of 700 to break the old mark by seven points.

USAMU's MSgt. Ernich Buljung and Lt. Col. Sharon Best also dominated the open and women categories of the 10-meter, air pistol championship.

In the open event, Buljung scored a total of 680 out of 700 to out distance the field by seven points, while Best won the ladies event by four points over SSgt. Ruby Fox, USAR, scoring 474 to 470.

The final centerfire pistol event was won by SSgt. Andy Moody of the U.S. Marine Corps, by a narrow, one-point margin over USAMU's SFC Jimmie McCoy.

Moody scored a final of 588 out

IOBC students sponsor PAL children for circus trip

By Matt Canfield
IOBC

Students from Companies A and D, 2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry (IOBC), volunteered an afternoon recently to be sponsors for underpriviledged children.

The lieutenants escorted several needy boys from the Columbus area to a local circus.

Each lieutentant was paired with his own "pal" at the local family counseling center, where they met the children's parents. The "pals" got to know each other a little and headed out for the afternoon's festivities.

At the circus, the boys were treated to animals, clowns, elephant rides, acrobats and more than a little attention and indulgence from their sponsors.

The circus was a first for most of the children, as their excited shouts and laughter attested.

After the show, the little guys were returned to their families.

PALS, or People Able to Love and Share, is an organization not dissimilar to Big Brothers and Big Sisters. A needy child is paired with an adult sponsor.

In this case, it was a one-time affair because most of the soldiers who volunteered are at Fort Benning temporarily. The organization does, however, support long-term relationships and is open to both men and women.

The project coordinator for 2nd Bn., 11th Inf., is Maj. Jimmy R. Duhaime. He and the PALS coordinators, Clay Cole and Larry Shaw, organized the afternoon. Duhaime plans for activities of this nature to be an ongoing project.

The original idea to expose the IOBC officers to civic-action-type activities was that of Lt. Col. Adolf Carlson, 2nd Bn., 11th Inf. (IOBC) commander. He challenged his battalion to become active in both the military and civilian communities.

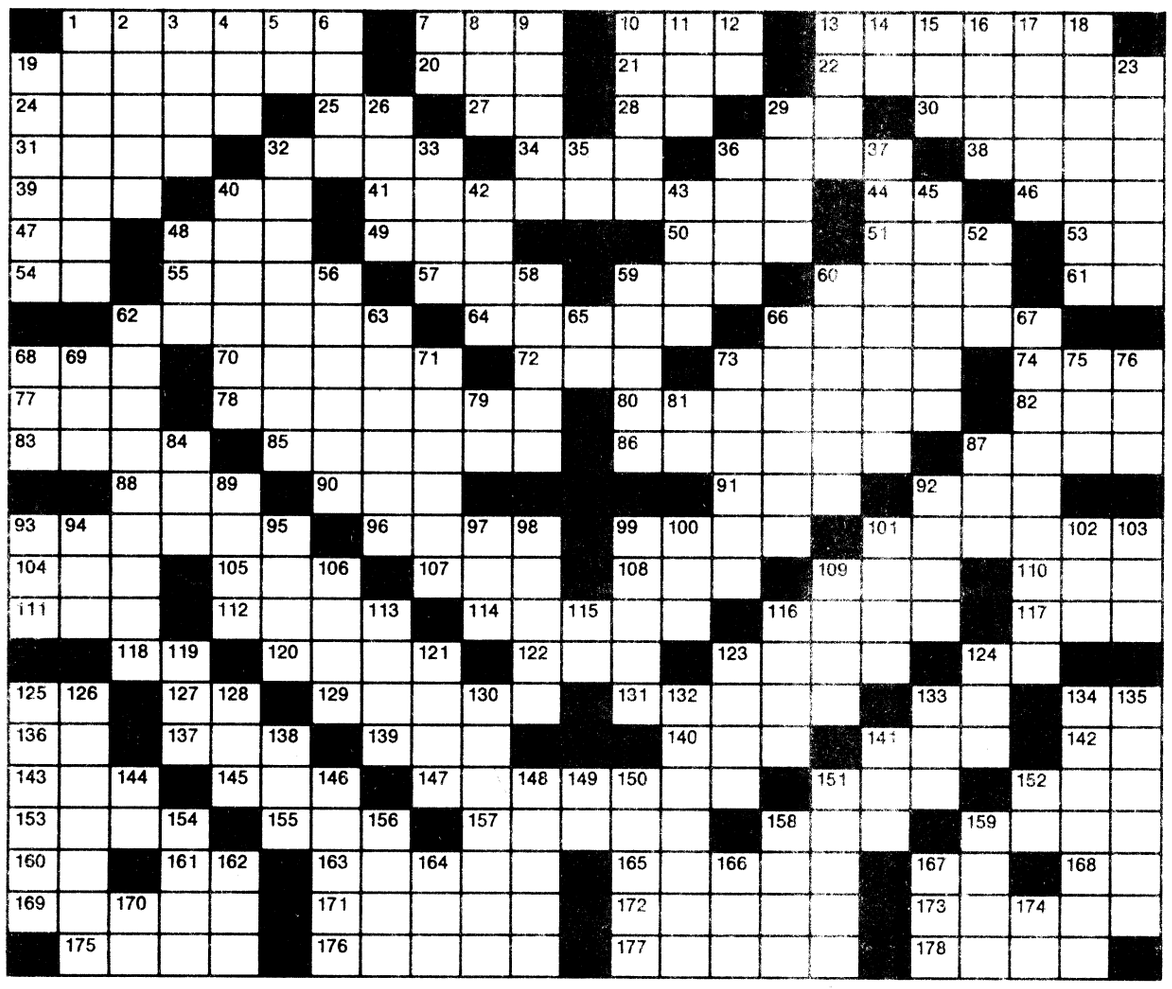
The experience builds character in the lieutenants as well as positive public relations.

There was no lack of volunteers from the battalion. In fact, there were too many. All of the lieutenants who did volunteer were eager to give their time and talents to someone who might appreciate it. Indeed, these men were just as excited as the kids.

All the PALS sponsors were required to attend a two-hour class conducted by Larry Shaw, who explained what to and what not to expect from the children. All PALS sponsors must attend these classes before they are assigned a child. The class discussed behavior patterns, single-parent families, and legal issues. The class was both enlightening and entertaining.

The PALS offices are located at the Columbus Family Counseling Center. Anyone wishing more information may call 327-3238.

Save energy while doing the laundry



By Becky Ray
Energy Management Office

Considerable amounts of energy can be saved when doing laundry by conserving hot water and by using washers and dryers less often and more efficiently. Following these tips will help reduce the amount of energy used in doing laundry:

- Use hot water only when necessary. Wash in cold water whenever possible to conserve energy and extend the life of fabrics.
- Wash only full loads, but don't overload the machine.
- Don't use too much detergent. Over sudsing makes the machine work harder.
- Presoak when necessary to avoid washing heavily soiled garments twice.
- Operate clothes dryers only with full loads, but don't overload them.
- Clean the lint screen in the dryer after each load. Lint buildup causes the dryer to work harder and use more energy.
- Check the outside exhaust of the dryer regularly to make sure it's clean.
- Dry clothes in consecutive loads. A lot of energy can be wasted in warming up the dryer each time it is operated from a cold start.
- Use outside clotheslines whenever possible.
- Remove and hang clothes promptly from the dryer to reduce ironing time.

Benning Flyers take second at LeJeune meet

By Steve Gouthro
Fort Benning Flyers

The Fort Benning Flyers Rugby team traveled to Camp LeJeune, N.C. March 19-20 for a military rugby tournament and come away with second place honors.

The tournament featured some of the toughest military teams in the area including two Army teams, two Marine teams and one Air Force team.

In the first round, Fort Benning faced a stubborn Marine squad from Cherry Point, N.C.

The Flyers kept pressure on the whole match but could not manage to build a comfortable lead.

They were leading only 6-4 at halftime.

The did Flyers managed to put some points on the board in the second half as Billy Whitesides kept Benning in the match with some clutch goal kicking. The final score was 13-8, Fort Benning.

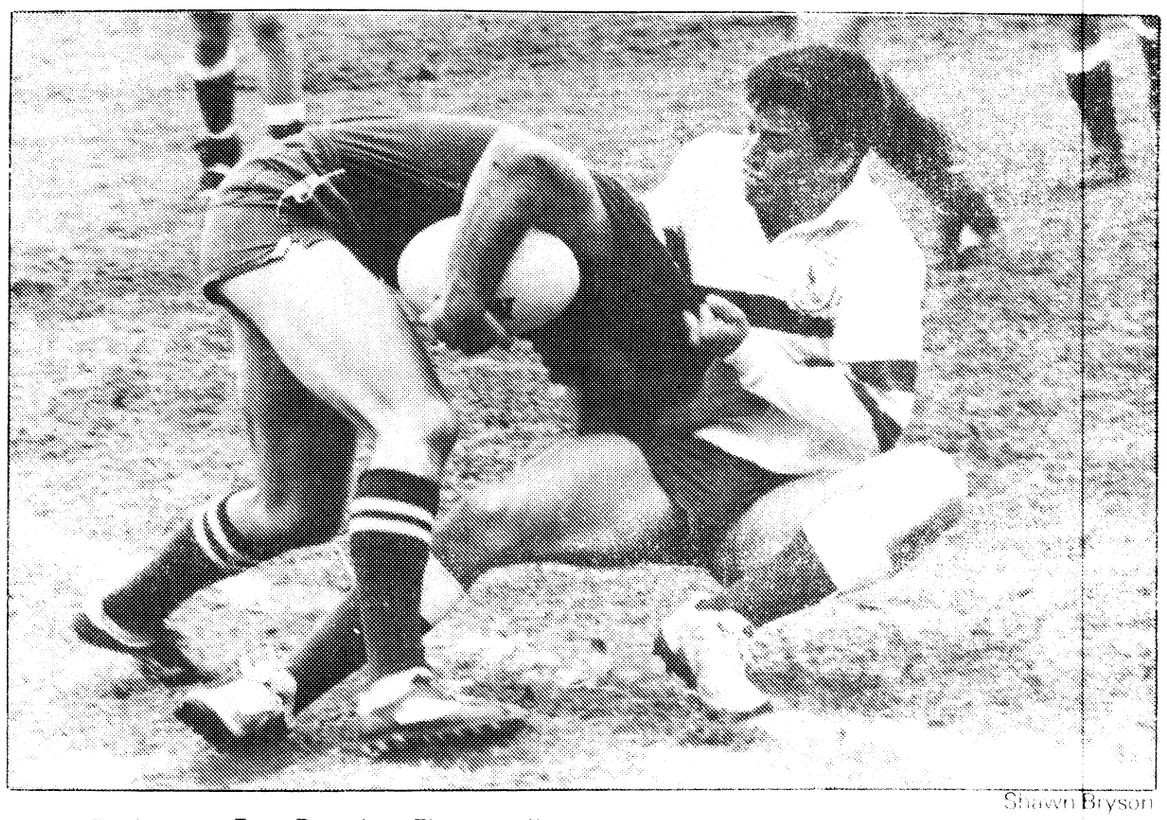
With only a ten minute rest, the Flyers took on a physical Fort Bragg team. A very cautious first half ended with Bragg leading 4-3.

Overcoming numerous intimidation attempts by the Bragg players, Fort Benning dominated the second half and came away with a 19-4 triumph.

After an hour's rest, a confident Flyer team took the field against the Air Force from Seymour-Johnson, N.C.

Benning quickly opened the scoring with two trys by Norm Dodson. Building to a 16-0 lead, Benning tried to sit on the cushion but ran into trouble. Three quick scores by the Air Force put the score at 16-12.

The Flyers came back on the attack as Dan Charron, Steve Tennant and Steve Gouthro combined for two scores to seal the victory at 24-12.



Due to the tournament format, the Flyers had only fifteen minutes before the championship match. A very tired Fort Benning team matched up against a relatively fresh home team from LeJeune for first place.

The Flyers played a tough match but ran out of gas in their fourth game of the day and the Benning squad had to settle for the second place trophy.

In addition to taking home the second place trophy, Fort Benning had a number of players named to the tournament All Star team. Those players are: Chris Greco, John Williams, Steve Tennant, Norm Dodson and Steve Gouthro.

The Flyers improved their record to 7-1 this past weekend by trouncing the Fort Stewart rugby team 24-0.

John McDonough scored twice and single scores were added by Keith Leigh, Larry Holmes, D. Mathew and Steve Gouthro.

By Ron Allen
Bayonet Staff

The Columbus Jaycees are sponsoring a 25- and 50-mile Cystic Fibrosis Bike Challenge April 30 at 8 a.m. starting and finishing at Flat Rock Park, Columbus, Ga.

"Since this is the first year of this event, we have specific goals," said Ish Espada, Bike Challenge chairman, "First, we want to register at least 100 riders, next, raise at least $1,000 for Cystic Fibrosis, encourage a Chapter of Cystic Fibrosis to be established in Columbus and to establish a charitable event that will become annual."

"With only a few weeks to go until our Bike Challenge," Espada said, "community response has been very impressive with donations of services, as well as, monetary donations."

"The reason for Cystic Fibrosis as the charity chosen was the result of community request for this charity," he said. "After all expenses are paid, money received as a result of the Bike Challenge will go to the Cystic Fibrosis Foundation in Atlanta."

"Columbus has no chapter and our hope is a greater awareness of this disabling and fatal disease will encourage a chapter to be established here," he said.

Registration is $10, in advance, or $12 the day of the race.

Riders under 14 years of age will be allowed to ride only with an adult sponsor. Riders under 18 must have a release form signed at the registration table the day of the race by their parent or guardian.

All riders must wear a helmet to register and all riders must wear a helmet on the ride. No helmet, no ride, no award, no nothing.

of 600, while McCoy finished at 588. Third place went to Arredondo with 585.

This year's Interservice matches were also used as final tryouts in selecting members for the U.S. Military (CISM) pistol team. Members of the CISM rifle team will be selected during the Interservice Rifle events to be held at Fort Benning in May.

The CISM rifle and pistol squads will represent the United States during the 1988 CISM Shooting Championships to be held in Lahti, Findland.

SPORTS SHORTS

Army wins Armed Forces Basketball

The Army beat the Air Force 91-87 to capture the 1988 Armed Forces Basketball Championships, at Camp Lejeune, N.C., in a double-elimination tournament.

The Air Force managed to upset Army in an earlier game 96-74 to hand the Army team its only loss in the competition.

Rounding out the standings was the Navy defeating the Marine Corps, 106-77, in the consolation game. Thus, the Navy finished third while the corps finished fourth.

A great deal of attention was focused on the Navy's Ensign David Robinson, who was college basketball's most valuable player for 1987.

Fish-off held

The Fort Benning Bass Club held their March Fish-off on Lake Walter F. George March 20.

The first-place winner was Pat Bennett, who weighed in eight fish for a 17-pound-5-ounce total. John Mann took second place with eight fish that weighed in at 14 pounds 12 ounces. Willie Goble placed third with eight fish for a 13-pound-2-ounce total. Big fish honors went to John Campbell, who caught a 6-pound-4-ounce lunker.

Most fish were caught off the river ledges with a few caught shallow on spinner baits.

The club is now gearing up for the annual "Super Bowl" tournament to be held April 10 at Lake Point. The Super Bowl is a bragging rights tournament for area clubs who enter their top six anglers. The winning club receives a rotating trophy to be held by that club until the next year's tournament.

Also in April, the club's top anglers for '87 will be entering the annual Georgia State Top Six Tournament on West Point Lake.

The club's April Fish-off will be held on Lake Walter F. George April 23.

T-Ball season begins

Youth Activities baseball, softball and T-ball registration has begun and will continue through April 8.

Sign-ups will be taken at Youth Activities, building 1056 on McIver Street.

Children, ages 6-15, are eligible for registration, first-time participants to the Youth Sports Program must present birth certificate, ID card or passport.

The Sports office opens for registration at 8 a.m. and closes at 4:30 p.m. Baseball and T-ball coaches are also needed for the upcoming season.

The monster truck 'Nitemare II' crushes a row of cars on the 'Monster Mania' obstacle course at the East Alabama Motor Speedway last weekend.

Giant trucks mash cars at EAMS's 'Monster Mania'

By Shawn Bryson
Bayonet staff writer

For soldiers who are always complaining about having nothing to do in their free time, the 1988 racing season is underway at the East Alabama Motor Speedway.

Last weekend, the speedway featured "Monster Mania," an event in which giant monster trucks battle it out to prove which is the meanest car-cruncher of all.

The event featured such nationally-known trucks as 'Mad Dog,' 'Nitemare II,' 'Lethal Weapon' and Rambo. A total of eight trucks competed in the event.

The objective of the monsters was to race down an obstacle course of two rows of cars, smash their way over the cars and make it to the finish line with the fastest time.

It was obvious to the fans in the grandstands that the car obstacles were hardly obstacles at all for the monster truck drivers. Most of the trucks measure over 12 feet high and weigh about 12,000 pounds.

EAMS also hosted a 4x4 street truck competition for all those that dared take their stock beauties onto a slightly milder course, when compared to the monster course.

The 1988 EAMS season includes many special upcoming events including the Cadet Championship, April 9; Military night, May 21; Open Wheel Modified Special, June 11; Demolition Derby, "Firecracker 50" and fireworks July 2.

Other features this year are the World Championship Mud Bog, July 15-17; Winged Outlaw sprint cars, Aug. 20; Demolition Derby and fireworks, Sept. 3; Alabama State Championship, Oct. 15-16 and the 13th Annual "National 100," Nov. 5-6.

Stock car races are also held at EAMS every Saturday night at 8:30 p.m. The season continues through October and tickets cost $7. Children under 12 years get in free at EAMS.

For special prices on the feature events listed, call 297-2594. EAMS is located six miles west of Phenix City on Highway 80.

Custom auto club sponsors show

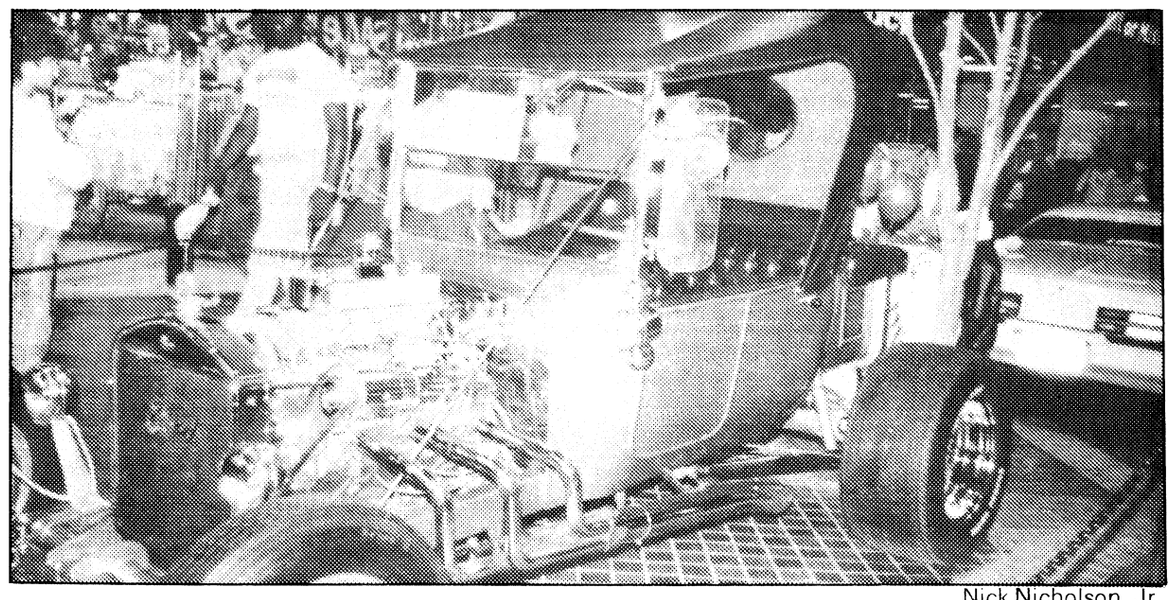
By Rob Murray
Twin Cities Custom Car Club

Twin Cities Custom Car Club of Columbus and Phenix City sponsored a car show along with the Columbus Square Mall March 19 and 20.

There were 18 custom, classic and hot rod automobiles on display inside the mall. According to members of the Merchants' Association, the car show drew "Christmas-size crowds" to the mall.

The highlight of the show was the awards ceremony along with an interview and coverage from the "Action 9 News Team."

First place went to Nick Nicholson for his modified 1923 Ford Model-T hot rod.



This is the only yearly show that is open to club members only. All other shows, sponsored by the club, are judged by members of the club. It would be unfair to have members judge their own cars. Also it gives the club a chance to recruit new members.

The weekly meeting held on Monday at 8 p.m. at the Wynnton Road Burger King produced 27 prospective new members.

The next scheduled event will be held May 15 at F.D. Roosevelt State Park in Pine Mountain, Ga. when the annual "Rod Run" will be held.

For more information about the club or upcoming events, call 298-0081.

Happy Motoring.

Nick Nicholson, Jr.

This 1923 Model T-Ford, belonging to Nick Nicholson, Sr., took first place.

Fort Benning is TRADOC's million dollar winner.

Chief of Staff Col. James Daily received word Tuesday that Fort Benning was the TRADOC Spirit winner for fiscal year '87 and, as a result, will receive $1 million to use as it sees fit.

Daily said he was ecstatic when he received the message announcing the award. "Can you believe it, look at all those zeroes," he said.

"It's great news," he said. "First, it shows what team work can do, but more importantly with the way the budget is now, it means we will have more money to help us preserve the quality of life here at Fort Benning."

"It's a no-strings-attached monetary award," said Sarah McLaney, installation Spirit coordinator. "We can use the money any way we see fit."

She said the Director of Resource Management would ask agencies and units on post to submit a wish list.

"It was a team effort. Everyone on post pitched in and helped, so everyone should get a chance at sharing the profits," she said.

McLaney had special praise for the chief of staff.

"We got off to a slow start. We only had about $120,000 in savings after the first quarter, but he kept pushing us to go for it. He got everyone involved."

The $120,000 figure eventually blossomed to $40.8 million, according to McLaney. Of that figure, she said about 95 percent was validated by TRADOC.

This means the post is actually about $41 million richer thanks to the savings generated by the Spirit program in addition to the million dollar award from TRADOC, McLaney noted.

She said the great thing about Spirit is the way money multiplies. If an activity takes its money and spends it, it only receives back what the money was spent on. But if the activity finds a better and less expensive way to do something, it can perform that function and have money left over for other projects.

McLaney said the post is in good position to win again, noting that the first quarter of the current fiscal year saw $19 million in savings and that the second quarter looks even better.

Fort Benning beat out 16 other TRADOC installations in winning the award. The second-place winner was Fort McClellan, Ala., and third place went to Fort Knox, Ky. These two posts won $400,000 and $200,000 respectively.

Fort Benning last won in 1983 and had a fourth place finish worth $100,000 in 1984.

Gen. Thurman presents trophy to commanding general

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

Training and Doctrine Commander Gen. Maxwell Thurman presented Fort Benning Commander Maj. Gen. Kenneth C. Leuer with a trophy Tuesday for winning the Outstanding Installation Community and Family Activities Award in the large installation category.

According to Brian Smith, a spokesperson for the Directorate of Personnel and Community Activities, Benning was not selected for any one outstanding area.

"We were judged on our operation as a whole," Smith said. "Some of the programs they looked at were in-house training, marketing, budgeting and cooperative projects with both the Boy and Girl Scouts, and the Noncommissioned Officers' and Officers Wives' clubs."

Smith said that not only was Fort Benning honored, but several individuals were recognized as well.

Three people in the TRADOC Division Chief Category were honored. They are: John Bush, Community Services Division; Lee Eeta Simmons, Community and Family and Financial Management Division and Linda Magee, Family Support Division.

Becky Carrol was named TRADOC Outstanding Program Manager of the Year for Child Development Services and Pat Sneed was named TRADOC Outstanding Civilian Employee of the Year.

10th Mtn. commander wins McArthur Leadership Award

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

Capt. Thomas McGrath, 2nd Brigade, 10th Mountain Division, has been awarded the Gen. Douglas A. MacArthur Leadership Award.

This is an honor the Forces Command bestows upon their junior officers who have best displayed traits of leadership and for their ideals on duty, honor and country.

According to Col. Michael Plummer, who nominated McGrath for the award, he selected McGrath because he believed him to be an excellent representative of the type of people who should get the award.

"I think he is the type of guy who is going in the same direction as McArthur in the areas of leadership. The decisions he had to make as a commander of a brand new company are a good example," Plummer said.

He said that McGrath took a newly activated company and made it into the best Army rifle company he had ever seen.

The commander's position, for which McGrath's nomination was based, almost wasn't his. McGrath said that when the activation of the brigade was taking place, he was originally slotted for an a position in S-4.

Gross, a successful Atlanta businessman who survived the horrors of the Nazi concentration camp system, will be the featured speaker at the April 15 Holocaust Memorial Service. OPINION

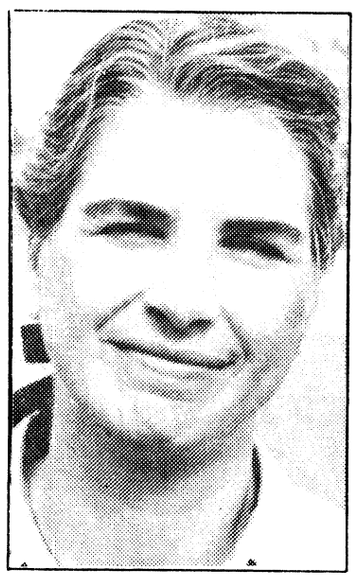
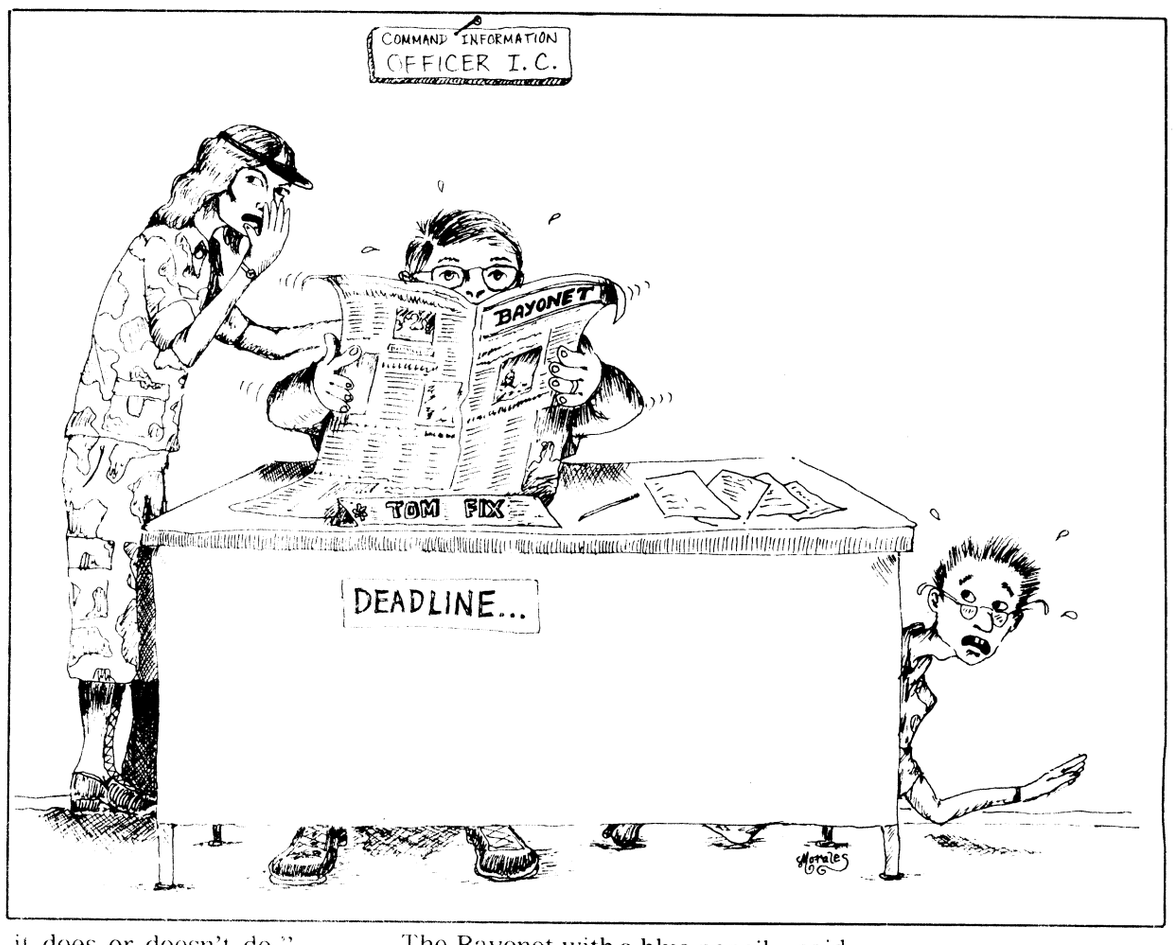
VARIOUS VOICES: What makes military children special?



SSgt. Daniel Serik, ANCOC - "Military children are special because they have to put up with special hardships. One example is mommy or daddy being away from them for extended periods of time."

Frankie Smith, Army and Air Force Exchange Service - "They are special because military children are so adaptable. They are friendly and outgoing because they move so often and have to be able make new friends easily."

SP4 Russell Martin, HHC, 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment - "Military children are special because they are well disciplined, and they learn leadership traits from their parents. They also have the opportunity to travel and meet unique and interesting people throughout their childhood."



Eileen Reid, family member - "I think one of the things that makes them special is their ability to adapt to new schools, friends and lifestyles because they have to move so often."

Capt. Larry Patterson, Infantry Board - "I think military children is special because of the sacrifices they have to make on account of their parent's responsibilities. Their parents either have to go to a new place unaccompianied and be away for extended periods of time, or if they (the children) are allowed to come, in it may be a place they really don't want to be."

Snively involuntarily volunteers

By Clyde Snively

The Command Information Officer has a meeting with the editors every Friday after the paper comes out.

Usually, I'm invited to leave. When that happens, I figure they are coming up with some real choice assignments.

This week, I was allowed to stay. Probably because they whispered a lot. I also noticed that during the whispering heads would pop up from the huddle and look my way.

I got a very uneasy feeling.

I really knew I was sunk when the first words out of the major's mouth were, "Have I got a deal for you."

"You want me to go to the NTC with the 197th, or Honduras with the 36th Group," I said.

"No," he said, "I need your help in a big way. I want you to be the newspaper's ombudsman."

"What's an ombudsman? You sure it isn't supposed to be ombudsperson?" I asked.

"An ombudsman is a person who answers complaints, tries to solve problems, like Baxter Omohundro is for the newspaper downtown."

"Oh, I gotcha," I said. "An ombudsman is a person named after Omohundro."

"No," he said."Omohundro is an example of an ombudsman. When people have complaints about the newspaper, he's the front line soldier. He's the one who tells people why the newspaper does what it does or doesn't do."

"The complaint department," I said. "No thanks. I've seen you on the phone all day on Fridays, telling people why their article didn't run, or why we dared to carry 'such trash,' why their papers didn't get to them or why too many were delivered.

"Units complain because you said something that they don't agree with, and they complain when you say nothing about them.

"Heck you even get beat up by the PAO and deputy on misspellings and style errors. Everybody in the world's an editor. Even my wife reads The Bayonet with a blue pencil in her hand," I said.

"Soldiers in foxholes don't know how good they got it," I continued. "They don't have 30,000 critics standing over them telling them the hole's too deep, too wide, or the grenade sump isn't slanted enough. All they need to worry about is their squad leader.

"Thanks for the honor, but no thanks."

"You'll be doing a real public service to all those soldiers out there who have problems with the newspaper or anything else going on at Fort Benning or the Army," he said.

"It's an opportunity to serve your fellow soldiers."

"Perhaps Bry would be a good one for the job. He seems to have his act together," I offered.

"Are you through?" he asked.

"Yes sir."

"Good, because guess what."

I knew I didn't need to guess what. The job was mine.

I wonder if the Ranger Training Brigade needs someone out at Dugway.

I think I'll move to a desk with an unlisted number.

Every uniform tells a story about its wearer

By Donald W. Boson
Community Life Officer

The sight of a soldier in uniform is a common one in the Fort Benning/Columbus community. Soldiers and their supervisors, however, should consider what is communicated to the observer by the manner in which a soldier wears his uniform. A few implied messages are, pride; in self, unit and branch of service; and professionalism.

A number of questions commonly arise concerning the correct wear of the uniform. The proper wear and appearance of Army uniforms and insignia is described in great detail in Army Regulation 670-1, dated May 20, 1987. Supervisors at all levels, military and civilian, should familiarize themselves with the contents of this publication and refer to it for guidance whenever a question surfaces.

Where the Battle Dress and utility uniforms are concerned, questions arise concerning when sleeves are to be rolled up and how trousers should be bloused. Paragraph 3-5, AR 670-1, authorizes commanders to prescribe specific uniforms for formations and ceremonial occasions; otherwise sleeves may be worn up or down at the soldier's discrection. Trousers will be bloused using the draw cords or blousing rubbers if the trousers are not tucked into the boots. If the reader refers to Figures 3-1 through 3-4, as recommended, one will note that the trousers are bloused at the top of the boot, so that neither socks nor the top edge of the boot are visible; also a fold or "blouse" of material, relatively uniform in appearance, is formed at the bottom of the trouser leg.

Insignia and accouterments authorized for wear with the Battle Dress Uniform are described in Paragraph 3-4, AR 670-1, subdued combat, special skill and identification badges and tabs; subdued insignia of rank, name and U.S. Army distinguishing tapes; and subdued shoulder sleeve insignia denoting the wearer's current organization and former wartime service. The wearing of foreign badges, distinctive unit insignia or regimental affiliation crests are not authorized with the Battle Dress Uniform. Locally authorized badges; such as the Jungle Expert badge, are not authorized for wear on the Army uniform.

The summary of change accompanying AR 670-1, outlines the major points of interest in the latest revision of this regulation. The most recent revision clarifies issues such as the wear of utility uniforms off post; adds the wear of jungle boots as optional and clarifies wear policy for regimental/corps affiliation branch and distinctive unit insignia.

It is the responsibility of all supervisors to insure that the appearance of their soldiers is in compliance with Army standards. All leaders are not only responsible but obligated, by virtue of their rank and position, to correct their own subordinates and any other soldier they observe whose uniform or appearance is not consistent with that of the proud, professional soldier.

No fires means firemen are doing their jobs

James E. Floyd
Fire Prevention

Some people believe that the only duty of Fire Protection personnel is to fight fires.

It is a common belief that when there are no fires for long periods of time, the fire departments are just lucky. The average layman doesn't realize that those long periods without a fire are probably due to an efficient fire prevention program.

Fire protection organizations have, in the past, concentrated their major efforts on the extinguishment of fires.

During recent years, however, these organizations have come to realize more fully the importance of preventing fires. The reason is obvious; fires that do not occur do not cost anything. The fire protection organization that never has to extinguish a fire is the organization that has a perfect fire inspection and prevention program.

No organization, of course, has thus far achieved such a record, but we can expect it to be more and more nearly approached as progress continues.

Our primary concern, as members of a fire protection organization, is to prevent the destruction of lives and property by fire... thus, the prevention of fires. How can this be accomplished? By a Fire Prevention Program that includes both education and inspections.

Fire Protection personnel cannot accomplish the important job of fire prevention alone. We must have the cooperation of all post personnel. This cooperation will make each individual fire conscious. Therefore, our efforts will be aided by hundreds of post personnel, all on the outlook for fire hazards. We want you to feel free to call us anytime, day or night. If you find a fire hazard or have any questions pertaining to fire prevention, please call day — 545-2883 ornight — 545-1220/2935.

Budget ax cuts into 1989

By Jim Garamone
American Forces Information Service

Military personnel and several major projects face the budget ax under the amended defense fiscal 1989 plan presented to Congress by Defense Secretary Frank C. Carlucci.

The proposed fiscal 1989 defense budget is $299.5 billion.

All services will feel the budget crunch. The fiscal 1989 proposal is $33 billion less than was asked for in the biennial defense budget request made last year. The original fiscal 1989 defense request was pegged at $323.3 billion. Congress was unwilling to approve either the fiscal 1988 or 1989 Defense Department budgets, and President Ronald Reagan and congressional leaders worked out cuts to both requests during a "budget summit" in December.

The new budget will cut 46,000 troops from the military services.

"We have made the hard choices here," said Carlucci. "We have traded off a smaller force in order to maintain a quality force."

By reducing the size of the force, Carlucci was able to put a 4.3-percent pay raise for military members and a 2-percent raise for civilian workers in the budget. The latter figure is consistent with the administration's government-wide request for civilian pay.

The smaller-sized force means that pay and benefits should improve for those who remain and that the services would be able to attract and retain highly qualified recruits and careerists.

Carlucci said in his prepared testimony to the Congreess that "these force structure reductions, no matter how carefully focused and considered, have increased the risk to our national security. The threat, which these forces are designed to meet, has not diminished."

Personnel

Army end-strength will drop by 8,600 soldiers by the beginning of fiscal 1989. This will come from eliminting one brigade of the 9th Infantry Division at Fort Lewis, Wash., reducing the size of some helicopter units and eliminating some headquarters troops throughout the service.

In addition, the planned activation of the 6th Infantry Division (Light) in Alaska will not occur in either fiscal year 1988 or 1989. The activation of two battalions in the division — due in fiscal 1988 and 1989 — will be changed. One battalion's mission will shift to the National Guard, and DoD will try to activate the other in fiscal year 1990.

The Army National Guard and the Army Reserve will stay at current strength levels. Previously, they were to expand by 26,100 soldiers.

Finally, the Army will reduce the numbers of its helicopters and crews. The service will eliminate 450 OH-58 and UH-1 helicopters by the end of this year, 170 helicopters in fiscal year 1989 and another 730 over the next five years.

The Air Force will cut its end-strength by 25,000 from what it earlier projected for fiscal year 1989. It will eliminate the equivalent of three tactical air wings. DoD has recommended that the wings at Nellis Air Force Base, Nev., and Torrejon Air Base, Spain, be eliminated. If the Torrejon wing moves elsewhere in Europe, the Air Force will cut another wing. Furthermore, 72 aircraft in 12 Reserve squadrons will be eliminated — the equivalent of another full wing.

The Navy will reduce its active force end-strength by 9,600 from the original fiscal year 1989 plan. It will decommission one nuclear ballistic-missile submarine slated for overhaul, retire 16 frigates and stand down a 14th carrier air wing.

The Marine Corps will reduce by 2,900 active duty Marines and 900 Reserve personnel by the beginning of fiscal year 1989. It will announce details on the drawdown, which will be reflected in restructured combat units, within the next few months.

There is no end-strength ceiling on civilian manpower. However, under the Goldwater-Nichols DoD Reorganization Act of 1986, defense agencies alone will cut 10,000 civilian jobs. The military services will also reduce their civilian work forces.

Equipment

Equipment will also feel the budget knife.

The Army will cancel or defer these pgrograms: the Aquila remotely piloted vehicle; M-198 Howitzer; Copperhead l artillery round; 120mm mortar; armored family of vehicles; 8-inch search-and-destroy armor projectiles; the EH-60A Quickfix helicopter; LHX helicopter restructure; as well as other programs.

The Navy will not make its 600-ship goal in fiscal year 1989. Due to budget cuts, the service will retire 16 frigates earlier than planned, which will leave the service with 580 ships at the end of the fiscal year. Canceled programs will include: the A-6F aircraft; naval airship; the anti-radiation seeker; the high-frequency, anti-jam radio; the 5-inch semiactive, laster-guided projectile; and the Skipper bomb.

The Marine Corps will cut back on the procurement of M-1 tanks, ammunition and funds for base operations and grounds maintenance. No Marine program was terminated or deferred.

The Air Force will terminate several programs. These include the Small ICBM program; the Gross lectures throughout the country about his experiences during World War II. His message is simple: The Holocaust must never be repeated!

A native of Czechoslovakia, Gross was only 11 years old when his country was conquered by German military forces. At the age of 14, after witnessing and experiencing three years of persecution, Gross was taken to Auschwitz; he was later transferred to Buchenwald. By the time he was liberated by American soldiers, most of his family members had been killed by the Germans. After the liberation, Gross returned to Czechoslovakia only to find that German oppression had been replaced by Russian oppression. He left Czechoslovakia, went to England and finally emigrated to the United States in 1949.

Asked if he can still remember events in the camps, he responds softly, "Yes, I remember. Yes, I remember my bunk. Yes, I remember the rats attacking me. Yes, I remember being too weak to cheer when an American tank blew a hole in the camp wall."

Gross is no stranger to the Army. During the Korean war, he voluntarily spent two years in the U.S. Army Intelligence Corps and the Medical Corps.

"In my entire life, I accomplished more in the Army than before or since," he said.

A free commemorative Holocaust booklet, "Days of Remembrance," is available at the Post Chaplain's Office (building 2606).

Benning's 'top cop' departs

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

Fort Benning's top cop, Col. Thomas Feuerborn will be leaving soon to take over a Brigade in Korea.

Feuerborn's new assignment will be no small responsibility as he will basically "wear three hats" when he arrives in Korea.

He will be a U.S. Forces brigade commander as well as the provost marshal and Eighth U.S. Army provost marshal. "I will basically be in charge of all the Military Police in Korea," Feuerborn said, "something, I feel, is a great honor."

Feuerborn is familiar with Korea since he previously commanded a battalion in Korea in addition to serving as a corporal before that.

Another unique challenge he will be facing is the Summer Olympics in Seoul, where he will be responsible for all U.S. citizens.

He is looking forward to his new position and will be leaving shortly to take over the reins in Korea. Feuerborn has left his mark here in many ways.

In 1987, there was a reduction in all categories of crime at Fort Benning. Also during that year, his unit was inspected by the Training and Doctrine Command provost marshal and was cited as having a most efficient organization.

During his command, the Information Center received the Commander's Trophy from TRADOC.

Feuerborn refuses to take credit for the last award or any of the others.

"My wife and the MPA Wives' Club should take the credit for the Information Center," he said.

He explained that the club set up a volunteer force to help the duty officer during peak periods of activity such as graduations and ceremonies.

As for the rest of the awards, he gave credit to Fort Benning's "hardworking" military police and DoD Defense Police.

"I take great pride in the force here at Benning," he said. "The young men and women are dedicated to keeping the community a safe place to live and train."

Feuerborn said since he has been at Benning, he and the whole force have been developing a proactive policing philosophy. He explained that keeping as many patrol cars on the road as possible gives them visibility and helps prevent violations of regulations.

Feuerborn commented on local law agencies, "Of all the assignments I have had in the law enforcement field, Fort Benning and the surrounding area have finest police forces I have the ever seen."

"I'm proud to be a part of it," he said. "There is nothing more gratifying than the law enforcement field and the satisfaction one gets from serving and keeping soldiers, family members and civilians safe."

mander of Company B, 2nd Battalion, 14th Infantry, 2nd Brigade, 10th Mountain Division, injured his leg in an accident. He was then chosen to fill the slot.

He started his command with a company of newly trained, Cohesion, Operational, Readiness and Training soldiers.

"I was familiar with COHORT soldiers from my time as a platoon leader at Fort Campbell," he said. "I felt it was a big plus in my position."

"When you have COHORT troops, the men have all ready built relationships and have been working together. So, my biggest job was to show them that I would work with them as well," he said.

McGrath said that when they (the COHORT soldiers) realized we were a team, the mission was easy.

"My first sergeant, Richard Guerrarro was my biggest asset as well as my platoon leaders and platoon sergeants," he said. "My whole command team realized that the key to success is taking care of the soldier."

McGrath's key obviously fit the lock because during his time in command, his company had the highest numbers in the brigade in school completion, ranger graduates, physical fitness, marksmanship, reenlistment and Skills Qualification Test scores.

"I feel you have to look more to the military as a profession and not just a job," McGrath said. "One really has to be dedicated to his country and soldiers."

McGrath will travel to Washington, D.C. later this month to receive his award.

Soldier to go to jail for abusing his daughter

Staff Judge Advocate

Child abuse

On March 24, SP4 Theodore Gustavus, was convicted by general court martial for two specifications of assault on his infant daughter, Jennifer Gustavus.

In the first specification, Gustavus was found guilty of a Dec. 3 aggravated assault on his daughter. At this time, Jennifer was only three weeks old and had been released from the hospital the day before, having been treated for pneumonia. At trial, Gustavus admitted to becoming frustrated with his daughter when she would not stop crying. He held her with his left hand and repeatedly struck her on the back with his right hand. Shortly after the assault, Jennifer started having trouble breathing. Upon admission to the hospital, X-rays revealed two broken ribs and a punctured lung. Jennifer remained in the hospital five days.

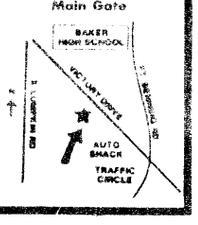
On Jan. 6, Gustavus again admitted to becoming frustrated with his daughter's crying. This time, he grasped her with both hands on her sides and shook her. Shortly after the shaking, Jennifer began suffering epileptic seizures caused by intercranial bleeding. Jennifer was initially treated at Martin Army Hospital and then transferred to The Medical Center within two days. Shortly after arrival at The Medical Center, Jennifer stopped breathing and had to be placed on a respirator. She was further transferred to Henrietta Eagleston Children's Hospital in Altanta the same day.

Jennifer's condition is improving. She is currently two months behind other children her age in large motor skills. It will, however, be years before any permanent effects of her injuries are known. She faces the possibility of having epilepsy and a reduced intellectual capacity.

SP4 Gustavus was sentenced to three years confinement and a bad conduct discharge.

AWOL and forgery

On March 22, Pvt. Willie B. Ricks, Service Btry., 2nd Bn., 10th Fld. Arty., 197th Inf. Bde., was convicted by general court martial for AWOL and forgery.



While AWOL in July of 1987, Ricks came to possess a checkbook that belonged to his grandfather, who has the same name, Willie B. Ricks. During the next month, Ricks forged 10 of his grandfather's checks. He made them payable to friends who cashed the checks at the PX and then gave most of the money back to Ricks. Ricks was first scheduled for trial on Jan. 21, however, he again went AWOL until he was apprehended by civilian authorities in February. Ricks was sentenced to a bad-conduct discharge, total forfeitures and 18 months confinement.

Pop-up targets aid training

By George Mingee
197th Infantry Brigade correspondent

Infantrymen from 1st Battalion, 58th Infantry, recently participated in a squad livefire on Cactus Range at Fort Benning. This range was a segment of an exercise that combined individual tactics with squad maneuvers and assaults.

The basic philosophy for all the training was taken from the Mission Essential Task List. The training was designed to task squad leaders and members to their fullest, with stress and decision-making being a vital part of training under simulated combat.

The squads fired M-16 rifles, M-60 machine guns, 4.2 mortars and Dragons (Antitank Weapons). Each squad's firing engagement was made against simulated vehicles and dismounted troops, followed by each squad reporting back to its platoon leader for further instructions and maneuver orders.

"Communication is the key to success for this operation," said Capt. John C. Prosch, from the battalion operations section. "It's critical to have equal fire distribution to suppress the enemy."

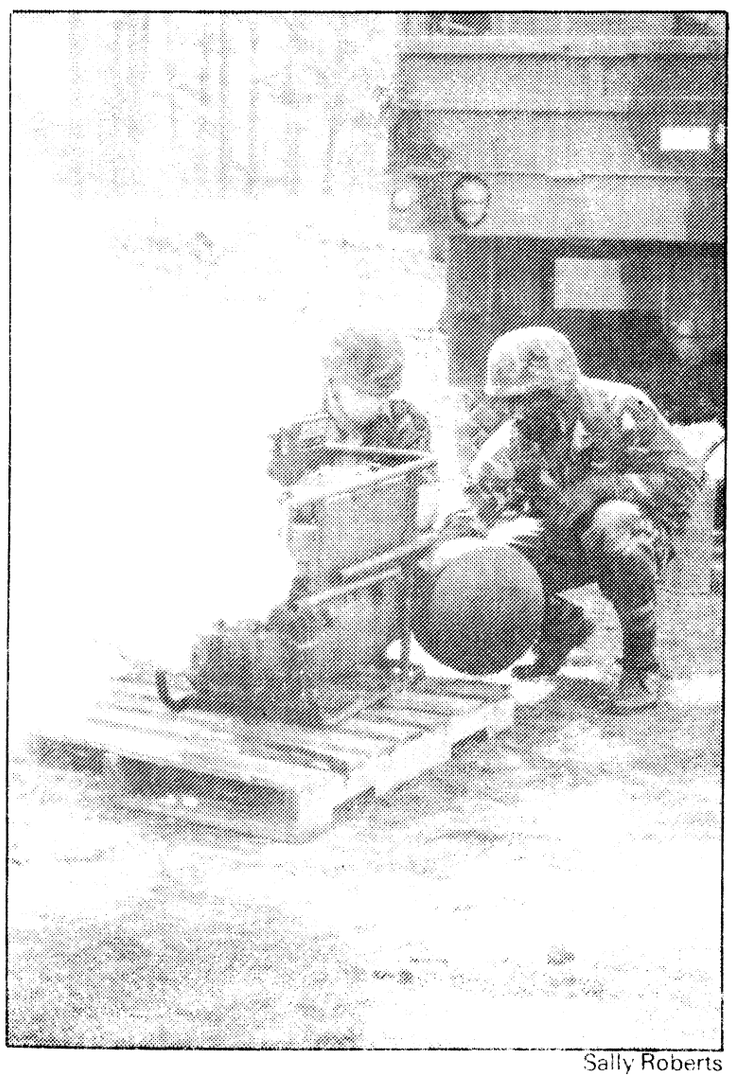
When the APCs (Armored Personnel Carriers) rolled out of the assembly area, the scenario was painted with soldiers and lethal machines attacking the course with aggression. Only a few seconds had passed before tracks slowed to a crawl and the tailgates slammed to the ground. Upon exiting the tracks, soldiers ran for cover and started firing their weapons downrange, scoring hits on pop-up targets. Seconds later, dust and debris flew through the air as a Dragon missile hit its target with a surge of power.

As other targets and challenges surfaced, the soldiers were continually given enjoyable and tough opportunities to display their firepower and aggression.

The week-long training stressed proficiency and communications for the squads, with live-fire proving to be a useful tool for all soldiers and their leaders.

Smoke generators bellow out camouflage for friendly vehicles on sparse terrain

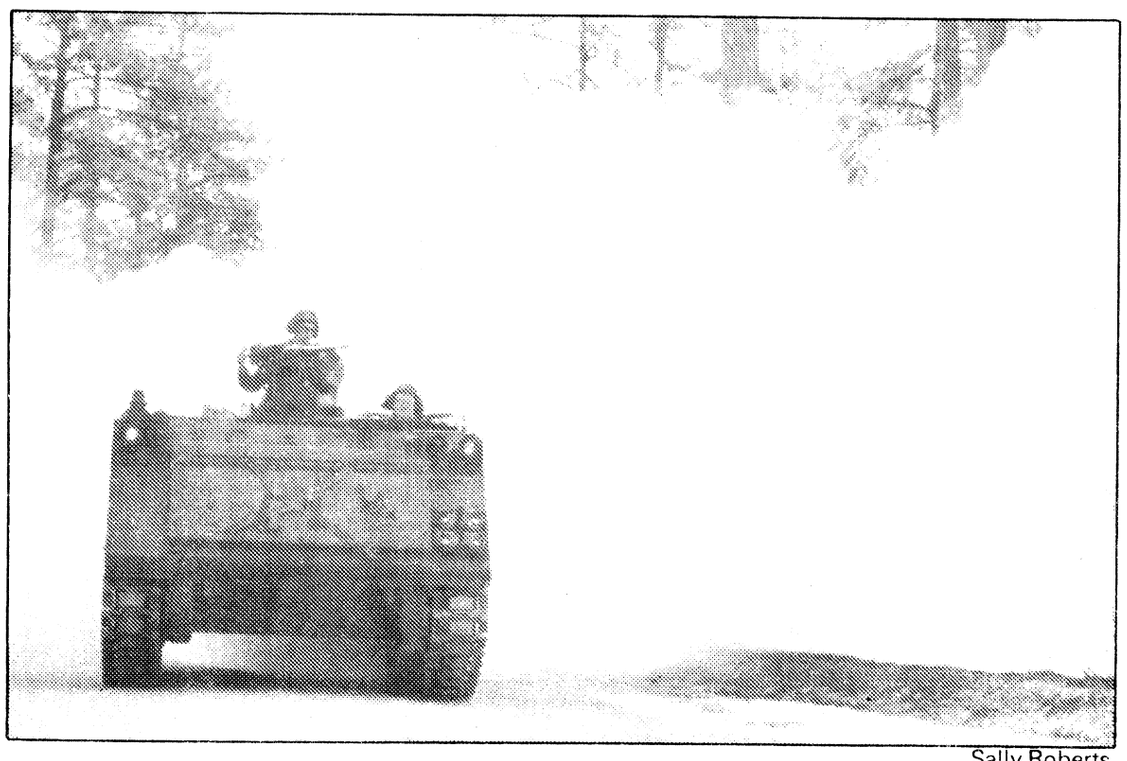
By Sally Roberts
197th Infantry Brigade correspondent



Of the many support assets provided to combat units by soldiers of Headquarters, Headquarters Company, 197th Infantry Brigade, soldiers in the "Decon" platoon have their work cut out for them. In addition to their mission of decontaminating tactical vehicles and equipment of chemical agents, the soldiers also provide tactical smoke capabilities.

Smoke generators bellow out clouds of thick, white smoke to mask the movement of friendly vehicles. Behind the cover of the man-made cloud, troops or vehicles can move across terrain that offers minimal concealment.

According to SSgt. Keith Riddick, platoon sergeant, the Decon platoon supports all units' purposes.



"We are in the middle of a conversion in our military occupational specialty, which includes the smoke generator operation as well as the previous decon skills," Riddick said. "We use the support opportunities to implement training for the soldiers in these additional skills."

Riddick explained that the smoke generators can be mounted on trailers, enabling the platoon to move with the unit while providing smoke support.

Reserve drill sergeants train here

By Raylund Lee Pryor
104th Training Division correspondent

With Reserve drill sergeants conducting training of basic training soldiers, some might think there would be a big difference.

But according to many of the soldiers, they feel training has not changed, and they're still marching, shooting and pushing Fort Benning through to China.

"It doesn't make any difference who's up there in front of us giving orders," said Pvt. 1 Louis Lagasse, Co. A, 4th Bn., 36th Inf. Regt. "We get trained either way — whether it comes from a Reserve drill sergeant or an active duty drill sergeant, knowledge is always good."

More than 250 members of the 4th Brigade, 104th Training Division, a Reserve unit headquartered at Fort Lewis, Wash., have taken over operations of two battalions and the brigade headquarters of the 2nd Infantry Training Brigade.

"This is our mobility mission," explained Lt. Col. William W. Granville, 4th Bde. executive officer. "Our soldiers are constantly training to fulfill our mobilization mission.

"Here at Fort Benning, we have a chance to fully implement our training," he said. "We are conducting four weeks of One-Station-Unit-Training while we are here."

the 4th Bde. arrived March 19. The two battaliions; 2nd Battalion, 415th Regiment and the 3rd Battalion, 415th Regiment have displaced the 4th Battalion, 30th Infantry Regiment and the 4th Battalion, 36th Infantry Regiment, respectively.

Two battalions departed Fort Benning April 3 and were replaced with two other 4th Brigade battalions; the 2nd Battalion, 415th and the 1st Battalion, 413th Regiment. Those two battalions will remain at Fort Benning through April 16.

Members of Headquarters, Headquarters Detachment, 4th Brigade., arrived March 16 and took over operation of the 2nd Infantry Training Brigade headquarters.

"We've taken over operations all the way from the brigade headquarters to battalion headquarters and put our drill sergeants in front of soldiers — leading the way," explained Granville.

"We're monitoring the training schedules for the battalions of the brigade," SFC Waler D. Chapman, scheduling noncommissioned officer said. "The battalions send their training schedules to us, we forward them to the Infantry Training Center."

Chapman is one of the Reserve soldiers who has taken over the duties of his active counterpart during his two weeks of annual training.

"We ensure that all the training days are scheduled properly and that all the required training is taken care of," explained Chapman. "We also forward the schedules to the ITC to ensure that transportation requirements are taken care of."

Another of the many members of the brigade who've taken over their counterpart's job is SFC Kathy Roberson. She has displaced SFC Terry Steel, personnel staff noncommissioned officer in charge.

"I feel great about being able to displace my active duty counterpart," Roberson said. "It's been a lot of fun — I've learned a lot.

"It's good to get the opportunity to do a real job while I'm here instead of just observe," she added.

"I think this is good training for the Reserves," Steele said. "It's an excellent opportunity for the Reserves to sharpen their skills.

"Everyone here is doing a good job," she said. "They're all motivated and eager to learn.

Drill sergeants also have an excellent chance to put their training to use as they work with their counterparts and train new soldiers.

"I felt I was trained and ready to come here," said SSgt. Ruben Tejada, Co. A, 3rd Bn., 415th Regt. "But I also know that we still need more training."

"Training is our mission," said Granville. "And we are always training, so we are ready to meet our mission."

Father observes son's training

By Raylund Lee Pryor
104th Training Division correspondent

Normally when a young man heads off to Army basic training and advanced individual training, he bids his parents farewell only to visit them several months later before heading off to his first assignment.

But when Pvt. 2 Commodore J.R. Mann left Kirkland, Wash., Fort Benning, Ga. bound, he knew he would return home, assigned to Company B, 2nd Battalion, 413th Regiment — a U.S. Army Reserve unit at Fort Lewis.

He also knew he could look forward to a visit from his father, Capt. Commodore L. Mann, security/intelligence officer for Headquarters, 4th Training Brigade, 104th Training Division.

His father would be attending annual training for two-weeks about midway through his son's basic training.

Not only was Mann visited by his father several times during the senior Mann's two-week AT, he was also visited by his Reserve unit brigade commander, Lt. Col. Michael W. Hodge and brigade command sergeant major, Rodney E. Schott.

Mann started his training with Company B, 1st Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment Feb. 17 with graduation plans set for May 20.

"The favorite part for me is being trained to be a U.S. soldier," Mann said. "The best part of the training so far was the gas chamber — I loved that day.

"When I came out of the gas chamber, I was disorientated, I was caughing and my nose was running. But I saw my company commander in front of me, so I stopped and saluted him. I guess since no one else could see him when they passed — because of the effects of the chamber — no one else was saluting him," Mann said. "I guess I caught him off guard, and for a moment he didn't know what to do. Then he said 'carry on,' and I headed on up the hill."

"He's been trained well," Capt. Mann said. "And it's exciting to be here and see him get more training."

Capt. Mann said being here at Fort Benning at the same time his son is in basic is an opportunity of a lifetime.

"Especially when the government pays your way," he said.

When Mann's brigade commander and command sergeant major visited him for lunch, Hodge commented that he didn't recognize the young Mann at first to which Mann replied, "I've changed my hair style, sir!"

Retired ID has practical uses

Army News Service

Besides their annuity checks, today's Army civilian retirees have another tangible link to their former status: the Army-sponsored retiree identification card (DA Form 5003).

When an employee applies for retirement, the card usually is issued through his/her servicing personnel office, said Cecil Carlson, who deals with retiree policy matters at the civilian personnel directorate of the Total Army Personnel Agency in Alexandria, Va.

Besides affording the retiree a personal, portable memento of his/her retired status, the ID card also has some practical uses, Carlson explained. "Initially, it served as a handy substitute for retirees who no longer possessed a driver's license. Since many banks require customers to produce two separate ID cards for check-cashing purposes, the retiree can rely on the Army's retiree ID card as a second ID to supplement, for example, the the U.S. Office of Personnel Mangagement-issued retiree ID card."

The card contains space for a color photograph, the bearer's signature and the Army's logo - all fully laminated for durability.

Since its inception several years ago, the card has become a valuable asset to those persons desiring to maintain ties to their former Army communities, Carlson added.

For example, depending on the installation commander's security needs and visitation policies, retirees may use the card to gain access to on-post credit unions, civilian-oriented clubs/functions on post, thrift shops, libraries and personnel offices.

"The Army acknowledges that by so honoring the card for such personal affairs, the former employing activities help retirees feel still a part of the total Army family," Carlson said.

Engineers tackle 89 acres of forest

43rd Engineer Battalion correspondent

On Feb. 17, 1988, Company C, 43rd Engineer Battalion (Combat) (Heavy) began work on McKenna Phase IIA, a project designed to clear an area large enough to support a tactical parachute drop of a battalion-sized element, at McKenna Airfield near King's Pond.

The construction project is to be performed by the Earth Moving Platoon. It involves clearing more than 89 acres of forest to the immediate north of McKenna airstrip. This land contains more than 5,000 trees and numerous large stumps left from logging operations.

Clearing stumps provides a definite challenge to the dozer operators due to the leverage that is lost when the tree is cut. Dozers normally push against the entire tree trunk and use the leverage gained by the weight of the tree top as it falls to take the tree down. In the case of a stump, the dozer must provide all the leverage. This greatly increases the time it takes to remove a stump.

The cleared land will provide an area to conduct tactical air insertions of troops, in conjunction with training at the McKenna Military Operations in Urban Terrain training site. It can also be used to support an air insertion to secure a Forward Landing Strip to conduct air land operations.

The construction will involve various assets from the Earth Moving Platoon to include Caterpillar D7F and DBK dozers, 621B Caterpillar Scrapers; and Case MW24C2½ yard loaders. The entire project will be conducted as a section-sized operation.

Sgt. Kevin Wells, project NCOIC, estimates it will take his section about 60 working days to complete the project and is expecting to make full use of the battalion's upcoming External Evaluation to get ahead of his planned work schedule.

This type of project provides new equipment operators a chance to practice and improve their skills. Unlike many projects where the platoon cannot afford the mistakes new operators sometimes make, this project will incorporate enough flexibility to accept these mistakes and provide ample time to teach and coach new operators.

According to SFC Roy Bridges, platoon sergeant, "Each new operator should be able to gain 30 to 50 equipment hours of experience during this project.

The scope of work includes clearing the 5,000 trees and removing the stumps, piling the remains of the trees into wind rows, burning, then buryng the tree remains, then leveling the surface with scrapers and graders. All shrubs and debris will also be removed to provide a clean surface.

With Fort Benning's normal dry and windy spring weather, the burning operations will require close guard. Safety and fire prevention will be top priority. The platoon's assets include two, 6,000-gallon water distributers, which will be used to control fires and to keep fires from spreading to other areas. In addition to the water distributers, the platoon's bulldozers and graders can be used to bring out-of-control fires under control and limit the spread of locally-controlled fires.

When completed, the 89 acres, combined with another 15 acres already cleared by Co. B, will provide using units with 104 acres of safe, cleared drop zone to parachute onto. This capability, combined with the assets already available at the McKenna MOUT and airstrip, also constructed by the 43rd Eng. Bn. (C)(H), will provide Fort Benning a highly versatile training area capable of supporting company-sized units and larger.

Unlike buildings and other vertical construction projects, this horizontal construction project will produce a change in the landscape of Fort Benning that will be utilized for many years to come.

Crime Stoppers, Columbus police search for suspect who broke into pickup truck

Columbus Police Department

Columbus Crime Stoppers and the Columbus Police Department are looking for the person(s) who broke into a white 1984 Toyota pick-up truck, belonging to Mark Huddleston. The truck was parked in front of building 200 of Willow Creek Apartments, 3700 Buena Vista Road.

Taken from the truck was stereo equipment, cassette tapes and a wallet belonging to Huddleston, which contained a small amount of U.S. currency and a First Union bank card. The theft occurred between the hours of 8 p.m., March 6 and 6:30 a.m., March 7.

On March 7 at 4:30 a.m. two young, white males used the First Union bank card belonging to Huddleston to withdraw a large amount of U.S. currency from the Constant Banker at the Northside Branch of the First Union Bank on the Airport Thruway.

The victim had left a small piece of paper in his wallet with four secret numbers to the bank card. The suspects apparently figured they were the numbers for the card.

The two young, white males were photographed using the stolen card, but at this time, they have not been identified.

They are described as: Suspect No. 1 - white male, approximately 16 years of age, shoulder-length, sandy blond hair, parted down the middle; No. 2 — white male, approximately 16 years of age, dark hair.

Although photographs were taken by the bank machine of the two males using the stolen card, there is some chance that they might be juveniles, which prevents the pictures being shown to the public at large. However, the pictures are available for viewing at Crime Stoppers, Columbus Police Department for anyone who thinks they might be able to recognize them.

Several other vehicles were broken into the same night in the same parking lot, and it is believed that the same persons are responsible.

Anyone having any information concerning this case are asked to call Columbus Crime Stoppers at 571-5858. If your information leads to the arrest and indictment of these persons you could receive up to $1,000 in reward money.

Columbus Crime Stoppers also pays for information on other criminal activity, wanted fugitives and stolen property. The Crime Stoppers phone lines are open from 10 a.m. to 10 p.m. Monday through Friday. Crime Stoppers serves the Columbus, Phenix City, Russell County and Fort Benning areas.

Last week, the soldier and child in this photo were incorrectly identified. The cutline should have read: SP4 Glen Miller, HHC, 2nd Bn., 14th Inf. Regt., 10th Mtn. Div., shows a Special Olympian the inside of a UH-1 helicopter flown in to entertain the children between events.

AUSA CORNER

By Jim Gallagher
AUSA chapter president

In the first column of AUSA Corner, an overview of how AUSA operates at both national and local levels was provided. In this column are specific examples of both levels.

AUSA national prepares and distributes to key people Defense Reports on timely subjects. A recent report, "Cutting the Civilian Workforce — Can the Army Keep Rolling?" is reproduced for your information.

"When the Reagan Administration first came to power, a lot of military officials complained of serious shortages in the civilian workforce. They were talking about non-uniformed employees who undergird every activity from operating our Army bases to research, development and procurement and ranging through the functions of maintenance, transportation, training, medical and communications.

At that time, the Army estimated that enough soldiers to man a full combat division were working in civilian slots, many of them critical to mobilization. These borrowed soldiers were not available to deploy with their units in wartime, thus causing serious reductions in tactical unit readiness.

In response to strong pleas from the Army leadership, Congress, in 1984, wisely removed its arbitrary civilian strength ceiling. This allowed the Army to manage its workforce more effectively by returning soldiers to the fighting units and by assigning to civilians the functions of keeping the records, maintaining the facilities, moving the supplies and performing the most intricate maintenance on our increasingly sophisticated arsenal of weapons. Coupled with other adjustments to the Army support structure, this allowed the Army to grow from 16 to 18 combat divisions without increasing the number of soldiers.

Today, there is every indication tht reductions in the workforce, mandated by reduced Army funding for fiscal 1988 and 1989, will again force reliance on borrowed military manpower to fill critical civilian vacancies. In all, budget cuts dictate that the Army will lose more than 12,200 civilian employees by the end ofnext yer. Equipment and supplies will no longer move through warehouses at optimum speed and the backlog of major pieces of equipment waiting to be repaired or rebuilt will steadily increase.

Most important, when Army commanders around the world are forced to divert soldiers from military training to perform housekeeping functions, there is a direct, negative impact on the readiness of the affected units. Congress must seriously consider whether the increased risks to our national security interests are worth the savings in civilian salaries."

Locally, your chapter continues to sponsor or support activities in support of soldiers. Last Monday, the Chapter hosted a mixer for attendees at the 1988 Infantry Conference. This high visibility event afforded the chapter an opportunity to demonstrate the close relationship between the military and civilian communities.

On April 11, the chapter will participate in the award ceremonies for the Instructors of the Year. The commanding general presides at this ceremony, which recognizes the officer instructor of the year, the senior noncommissioned officer instructor of the year and the junior noncommissioned officer instructor of the year.

tion board - he then becomes eligible once again for assignment," Meares added.

Soldiers reach their retention ineligibility point at: E4s - 8 years, E5 - 13 years, E6 - 20 years, E7 - 24 years, E8 - 28 years and E9 - 30 years.

According to Meares, an E4 with exactly 6 years time in service and not on a promotion list, can only reenlist for two years. He cannot elect a school or assignment option because both will take him beyond his ineligibility point. Former prisoners of war eligible for service medal

Sexual harassment at work is illegal

Training and Doctrine Command

Sexual harassment has no place in the workplace, according to TRADOC's Federal Women's Program manager.

"As a matter of fact," said Debbie Ridley, who works in the TRADOC equal employment opportunity office, "sexual harassment is illegal and has no place in society." Ridley emphasizes the seriousness of sexual harassment by comparing it to someone being charged with bigamy.

"When sexual harassment occurs, everyone suffers," she said. "It affects the employees' morale, productivity and, ultimately in our case, the Army's readiness. And because readiness is our goal, we must get rid of anything that impedes or hampers our goal and mission."

"Sexual harassment debilitates morale and interferes in the work productivity of victims and co-workers alike," said Gen. Maxwell R. Thurman, TRADOC's commanding general. "Sexual harassment is a form of employee misconduct that undermines the integrity of the employment relationship. All employees must be allowed to work in an environment free from unsolicited and unwelcomed sexual overtures."

Gen. Thurman is strongly committed to ensuring a workplace free of sexual harassment and all other forms of discrimination, said Maj. Andrea Kapolka, TRADOC equal opportunity officer. Therefore, he has issued directions that he will not tolerate such inappropriate behavior and will see to it that sexual harassment does not exist in TRADOC.

Today, more military and civilian employees - male and female - are better educated on the issue because of the increased amount of literature and emphasis on the subject.

"What used to be accepted as the norm, no longer is now," Ridley said. "Nowadays, when people realize they have been harassed in this manner, they are more knowledgeable and aware of the various avenues of redress available to report such incidents."

Those innocent-sounding remarks, dirty jokes, conniving gestures or casual physical contacts all fall into the Army's definition of sexual harassment.

Sexual harassment as defined in AR 690-700 is:

- Influencing, offering to influence, or threatening the career, pay or job of another person - woman or man - in exchange for sexual favors; or

- Deliberate or repeated offensive comments, gestures or physical contact of a sexual nature in a work or duty-related environment.

When individuals are harassed sexually by co-workers, peers, supervisors or other superiors, they should let the harassers know that such behavior is offensive. The next step is to report it to the appropriate supervisory level. If no results are achieved from supervisors, individuals should proceed to the next level of command.

Every supervisor or manager, whether civilian or military, is responsible for looking into the complaints and taking necessary action to ensure that instances of sexual harassment are addressed swiftly, fairly and effectively, Ridley said.

Kapolka pointed out that if a supervisor or manager witnesses sexual harassment and does nothing about it, he or she could also be reprimanded for not taking action against such unacceptable behavior.

Civilian employees can file sexual harassment complaints with the Equal Employment Opportunity Office. Military employees can file with the military Equal Opportunity Office and the Inspector General.

Military workers who have complaints should use their chain of command when reporting a complaint, Kapolka said. However, if the problem exists in the chain of command, they should go to the next supervisory level to report the problem. If no satisfactory results are achieved there, the next step is to report it to the Equal Opportunity Office or the Inspector General.

"Managers and supervisors know that sexual harassment is serious business," Ridley said. "When they are confronted with a problem regarding it, they generally try to resolve it themselves and resolve it right away."

People are more intelligent and informed about sexual harassment as a result of some positive steps taken by the Department of Army to counter this problem, Ridley explained.

DA requires mandatory training on sexual harassment for every employee, supervisor and manager. Also, implementation of numerous awareness programs, as well as stronger disciplinary measures for offenders, has been effective in combating sexual harassment.

"The bottom line is that sexual harassment must not be condoned," Ridley said. "Men should treat women like they would want their mothers, wives, daughters or sisters treated. Women should treat men like they would have their husbands, fathers, sons or brothers treated.

"I find that if they keep this thought in mind, sexual harassment probably would not occur as often as it does."

MARSHAL'S VIEWPOINT

By Patrick M. Reed
Provost Marshal's Office

One of the less touted, but more costly crimes this installation experiences on a daily basis, is that of vandalism — more specifically the damaging or defacing of government or private property.

Millions of incidents nationwide are reported each year and numerous more go unreported. Common targets of vandalism at Fort Benning have included vehicles, homes, range areas, schools and other public buildings.

Although the perpetrators often look upon vandalism as a "harmless prank." It's not. Vandalism is a crime that wastes time and money, causes suffering and sometimes, even death. Whenever vandalism occurs, you and I pay, either directly through damage to our property or indirectly through higher taxes for repair or replacement of government property or higher insurance costs.

Statisticians tell us that vandalism accounts for a national loss of more than one billion dollars annually. Vandalism can create suffering through the disruption of vital services (fire, police, electricity) and injuries may result from hazards created by vandals.

Who is responsible for vandalism, and why do they do it? Vandals range from grade school children to teenagers to young adults. Anger and a desire for "revenge" against society in general, a particular unit or organization or a particular person are often the motivating factors for wanton destruction of property. Other common factors are boredom, drug abuse and alcoholism, lack of discipline and psychological problems on the part of the perpetrators.

Vandalism can be prevented or at least reduced by a few actions on our part as leaders, parents and citizens of this community.

- Protect personal and government property against vandalism by securing property when not in use, utilizing lighting in dark areas and reporting suspicious persons or activities around your home, office or unit.

- Report any acts of vandalism you may witness or have knowledge of.

- Get help for children or soldiers when problems are recognized. This help may include professional counseling, referral to a chaplain, or simply establishing a closer relationship between a parent and child.

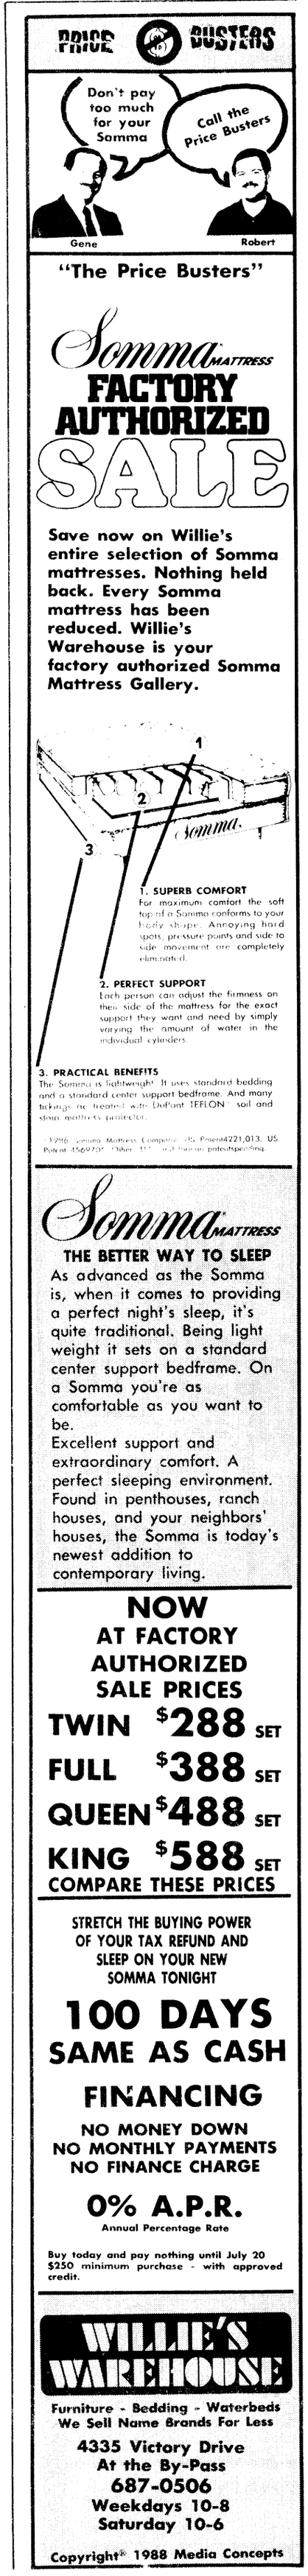
- Give your children your time and recognition so they won't have to commit destructive acts to get attention. Discipline them when they are wrong, and care enough about them to know how they spend their time and who their friends are.

- Teach by example by respecting the law, other people's rights and their property.

Let's all join together in the fight against vandalism! We will all benefit when we do.

ASK THE JUDGE

By Ollie M. Mick
Provost Marshal's Office



Q: My wife and I have been unable to stick to the budget we created and now we are afraid that we will lose our home. I haven't made a payment for two months now, and I don't know what to do. How can I straighten things out before it's too late?

A: The first thing you need to do is to call or write your mortgage company. Most mortgage companies do not like to have to foreclose on a home because of the time and expense involved. They are usually willing to accept any reasonable alternative if you are sincere in your attempts to save your home and able to workout an acceptable payment plan.

Sit down with your wife and work out a new budget taking into consideration those items you did not accurately include in the last one. Determine the maximum amount you can provide the mortgage company and ask if they can work out a new payment plan to permit you to extend the length of the mortgage in order to make these smaller monthly payments. This may mean that you have to refinance at a higher interest rate, but this is a better alternative than forclosure in most cases. If your current money problems are the result of a one-time, unforseen expense, such as an accident, then you may not need to make a new payment plan. Talk to your lender about starting your regular payments again in a month or so and making up the missed payments a little at a time. If he will accept such a proposal, you will be back on schedule within a few months and will be able to keep your home and your original interest rate.

If you do not foresee being able to make any reasonable payments for quite sometime, you may have to sell the house and assign the loan to someone else. If this is done, remember that there is often some continuing liability on the loan if the new owners ever default, so select your purchaser very carefully. Be sure that they are acceptable to the mortgage company and that the company prepares formal assignment contracts. Do not permit the new owner to merely move into the home and begin making payments in your name. This does not terminate your liability.

Finally, if there is no other alternative, you may try to give the title back to the mortgage company to avoid foreclosure. This is an extreme procedure and will probably affect your ability to buy another house. It may, however, reduce the amount you would be required to pay in a standard foreclosure.

And give you help in financial planning, day care, medical assistance, and now dental assistance, through the Army's Dental Plan.

It's just our way of telling you that we know an Army family is more than just a soldier's spouse and kids, it's a big part of his life. And it's a part we are making as good as it can be.

anti-satellite research and development program; the replacement for the airborne command post system; the C-27 aircraft; the Minuteman III penetration aids; and the AGM-130 powered GBU-15 glide bomb.

Funding for the Strategic Defense Initiative was also cut. The Defense Department amended its request for $6.3 billion to $4.6 billion.

Warnings

Carlucci underscored three points in his report to Congress. The first is that the threat to American security has not lessened and the United States must honor its commitments to its allies. While the Soviet Union remains the prime focus of American attention, other countries receive attention because of their threat to our security. A ready military is the best defense against aggression, but when this type of deterrence fails, the armed forces must be prepared to "fight and defeat aggression. Resource constraints have forced us to accept increased risks to our security."

Carlucci pointed out that the budget constraints today may be paid for in the future. "I'm not going to have to worry about the risk," he said "Some future defense secretary is going to have to."

The second point made was that DoD would not repeat the mistakes of the past. Carlucci pointed to the services of the late 1970s and early 1980s and said that they were "hollow forces." The balance between people, readiness and modernization was allowed to get out of kilter. The result was a massive drain of career noncommissioned and commissioned officers and a force that could not measure up to the commitments of national security. By cutting troop levels, the Defense Department hopes to keep that balance in line.

The third point concerned arms control. Carlucci said that the Intermediate-Range Nuclear Forces Treaty would not have been possible without the deterrent effect of U.S. forces.

"Our primary arms control goal remains achieving effectively verifiable and stabilizing arms agreements with the Soviet Union, leading to true reductions in nuclear and conventional arms," noted the report. "Our successes, including the INF agreement, have resulted from our determination to bargain from a position of strength."

Easter Service
Renowned singer Bobby Michaels performs during the Easter Morning Service at Victory Pond.

Strange and wonderful event takes place at Victory Pond

By Jo Ann Stamey
USAIC Chaplain's Office

Victory Pond at Harmony Church was a serene and beautiful sight on Easter Sunday. "Christ is Risen, Christ is Risen," echoed around the pond from more than 1,200, cadre and family members of the 2nd Infantry Training Brigade. Mayor and Mrs. Jernigan of Columbus, as well as other distinguished guests from the civilian and military community, joined in the service.

Chap. (Col) James A. Edgren, from the Chief of Chaplains Office in Washington, D.C., was the guest speaker. Edgren said, "It is apropos that we're meeting at "Victory" Pond because today, we are celebrating a victory!"

Bobby Michaels, gospel guest recording artist, sang three selections that truly moved the audience. Reverend Larry D. Aiken, who was formerly a SSgt. with the 10th Mountain Division, also provided special music.

At the closing of the service, a phenomenal event occurred. As Bobby Michaels sang, "He Is Alive," the chaplains' flag was picked up by a breeze — all of the other flags remained limp. As the song concluded, the breeze stopped, and the flag once again hung straight.

Stick with good people to maintain good rep

By James L. Langford
1st ITB correspondent

George Washington once said, "Associate yourself with men of good quality if you esteem your own reputation; for it's better to be alone than in bad company."

The writer of Proverbs says, "A good man is rather to be chosen than great riches, and loving favour rather than silver and gold." (Prov. 22:1)

Truer words have never been spoken, for we are, or we become, the kind of people we associate with. Your good name or reputation is something that should be guarded with deep concern and care.

The Psalmist David stated it very clearly and profoundly in the Book of Psalms 1:1, "Blessed (Happy) is the man that walketh not in the counsel of the ungodly, nor standeth in the way of sinners, nor sitteth in the seat of the scournful, but his delight is in the law of the Lord,and he meditates day and night (daily).

There are four words that I think characterizes and describes the quality of good men: First, there is faith. Faith is at the top of the list for without faith, it would be impossible to believe, accept or please God, (Heb. 11:6). This kind of faith not only believes there is a God somewhere, but believes in a personal, knowable God who is deeply concerned about humanity and all that's going on in our world. Your faith has matured when, "It (faith) is spoken of throughout the whole world," (Roman 1:8) and especially among those who know you best.

A prayer spoken by an old mountain man that might apply to all of us, flatlanders and hill people alike, goes like this: "Lord, I don't ask for a faith that would move yonder mountain. I can take enough dynamite and move it, if it needs movin. I pray, Lord, for enough faith to move me."

Then there is love. Love for God, for family, for your country and the principles for which it stands. One of the Ten Commandments says to "love the Lord thy God with all thine heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy might." (Deut. 6:5). Love is the intense affection you hold for your family and is your devotion to and adoration of God. It is loving your country and American way of life so much that you will fight for it and die to defend it, if necessary. Love for country demands action — positive action. America may have many problems and even faults, but let's take a positive course of action. America is still the greatest nation on earth.

Next comes courage. Courage, according to the dictionary, is the state of quality of mind or spirit that enables one to face danger with self-possession, confidence and resolution. It is being brave enough to stand for the truth, even if you must stand alone, and uphold the principles and Christian way of life upon which our great country was founded. We are exhorted to, "be strong and of good courage, fear not, nor be afraid of them; for the Lord thy God, He is that doth gowith thee, He will not fail thee, nor forsake thee." (Deut. 31:6).

Last of all is loyalty, the state of being loyal, first to God, then to your family and country. This is the ability to remain steadfast in your allegiance to the above.

I believe that faith, love, courage, and loyalty are four of the ingredients necessary for an individual to build a name or reputation for himself. A reputation that says you stand for something in life and desire to make this world and life better for those who will follow you in generations to come.

influence you have upon others is good or bad, and the people you associate with tends to influence you in the same manner. So may your delight be in the law of God and meditate in it day and night.

507th PIR remembers, improves on the past

Members of the 507th PIR prepare to make a jump during the week of "Operation Varsity."

507th PIR correspondent

Remembering the past and improving upon it for the future is an old infantry concept, which when heeded, can be a gold mine of valuable information.

In keeping with that, members of 1st Battalion, 507th Parachute Infantry Regiment recently commemorated a World War II mission entitled "Operation Varsity," which occured on March 24, 1945.

The men donned their parachutes and combat equipment and re-enacted the airborne insertion and followed it with a discussion of tactics complete with a sandtable to illustrate the battleground more clearly.

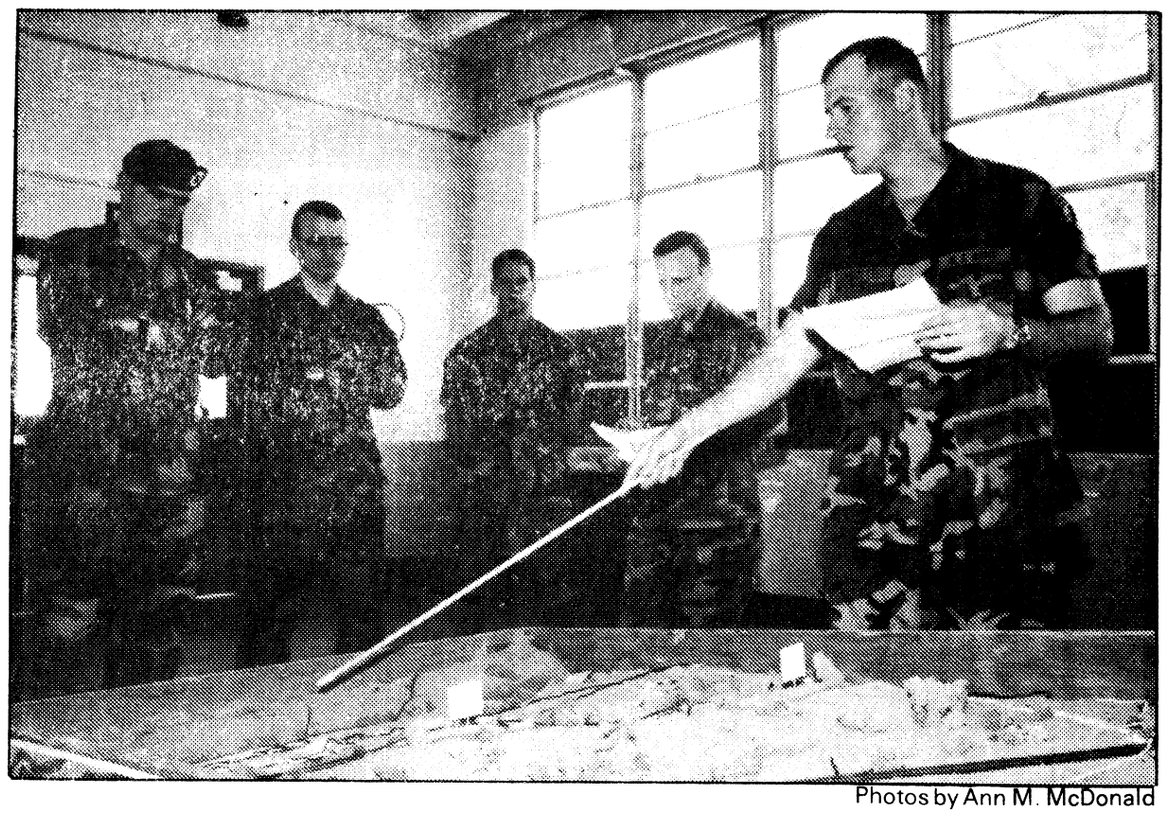
During the original operation, the 507th Combat Team was the first element to take off. The entire column, more than two hours long, was made up of 226 C-47s and 72 C-46s loaded with paratroopers and 906 gliders towed by 610 Tugplanes.

Visibility and weather were good as the first ship rose from the runway the day of the battle.

1st Battalion, 507th Parachute Infantry, in camouflaged chutes, began bailing out northeast of Wesel, West Germany at 9:50 a.m. and landed in the vicinity of Diersfordt Castle, which was quickly captured and a large number of German officers taken prisoner.

The 2nd and 3rd Battalions came in close behind and by mid-afternoon the combat team had taken all its objectives and established contact with the British 1st Commando Brigade in Wesel.

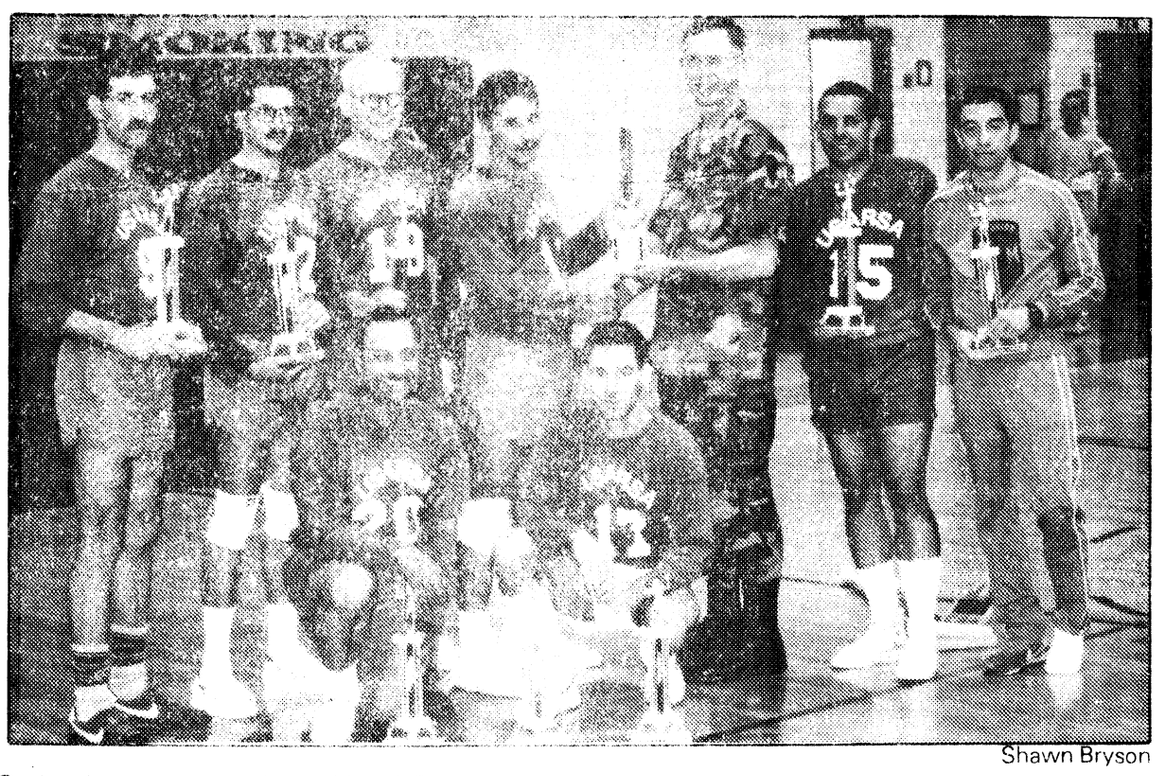
The 513th CT followed the 507th by 17 minutes to complete the parachute drop and seize its objectives.



Twenty minutes later, the 194th CT began landing in CG-4A gliders that had been double towed to set several records - longest combat glider tow; first combat, double tow and first glider, combat landing on fields not previously secured by paratroops.

Within two hours after the 194th landed, it had seized all its initial objectives.

Rapid assembly of troops and effective establishment of communications marked the operation.



In his report to the Combined Chiefs of Staff, Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower said, "Operation

USAIC Public Affairs Office

The first half of the USAIC volleyball season year wound up April 1 at Bryant Wells Field House with the United States Army School of the Americas #1 claiming the post championship in a best two out of three contest.

The USARSA team battled Headquarters, Headquarters Company, 2nd Battalion, 14th Infantry, 10th Mountain Division in the championship match that started out in favor of the Georgian men.

According coach Carlos Leon, of USARSA, they lost the first game to the 2/14 Inf., 15-8. The second game was an opposite reflect on of the first as USARSA volleyed its way to a 15-8 victory.

The tie-breaker was close with both the home team men and the USARSA taking it to the net with spike after spike. But, USARSA pulled it together and won the final game 15-12.

USARSA had a regular season record of 6-1 in which the only loss was to the cadet team from the School of the Americas.

Leon attributed winning the championship to intensive practice and experience.

"We started practicing two weeks before the tournament and four of our players have a lot of experience in volleyball," he said.

The team from Company A, 3rd Battalion, 14 Infantry, 10th Mountain Division took 3rd place at the championships.

The second half volleyball season began Monday and will continue through April 29. The playoffs are scheduled for May 4-6.

Spencer attends CAHSMUN

By T. Richard Cummings
Spencer High School

Recently the Columbus College hosted the 15th Annual CAHSMUN (Columbus Area High School Model United Nations Competition).

Approximately 300 students from various high schools participated, enduring a grueling 23 hours of competition. Beginning on a Thursday from 5 p.m. to 10 p.m., the convention continued Friday from 7:30 a.m. to 3 p.m. and ended Saturday, 7:30 a.m. to 3 p.m.

Awards were given Saturday at 3 p.m.

The CAHSMUN, or Model UN convention, is based on United Nation procedure. Prior to the convention, schools involved are sent a list of delegations for participating students. Delegations represented real United Nation Countries and students posed as representatives of their respective country.

All delegations were divided into three committees:

- Special Political Committee
- Political Security Committee
- Economic and Social Committee.

Committee members wrote resolutions concerning this year's preselected topic, the Persian Gulf War.

Resolutions were the heart of the convention. Students discussed, debated and argued to get their country's resolutions passed. During the last few hours of competition, sparks flew and temperatures ran high as 300 delegates raced the clock to pass their resolutions.

Judging the CASHMUN this year was complicated. Delegates were judged individually, as well as whole teams, for speaking ability.

"The students involved were very aware of current events," said Sue Watson, Spencer delegation co-sponsor. "Spencer students represented us well. Unfortunally, only so many awards exist, and the only award many of our students have is knowing it was a job well done."

I'm looking forward to improved competition in the future," Watson said.

Spencer High sent 61 students this year and finished very well. Of seven delegations, two delgations and one senior were awarded top honors: Japan received 2nd place for Security Council, Syria received 1st place for Middle Power, and Dan McNeil, of the Syrian delegation, received first place for speaking.

Spencer delegates were:

Edward Rainey, Alexander Finan, Kari Halstead, Saul Hernandez, Bryant Brothers, Paula Bradley, Shawn Huey, Juanita Miller, Crystal Potter, and Jose Valentin (Japan); Frank Braskie, Dan McNeil, Douglas Raynor, Mary Mace, Richard Eickler, Toi Lawrence, Cecilia McMoore, Naomie Murphy, Matt Schumacher, and Bo York (Syria); Tom York, Stan Maxwell, Maureen Fitzgerald, Lupe McMoore, Besheivah T. Omar, James Hogans, Kim Jones, Allison Sanchez, Rhett Holand, and Shaneatha Lane (Italy); David McDonald, Amy Tanksley, Larissa Lawrence, Tami Huskins, Gregg Markins, Oliver Ackermann, Bill Connolly, Shawna Deadrick, Terria Hughes, Terri McSwain, and Oliver Tieden (Ghana); Jon Forbis, Kate Rhoades, Vallis Thacker, Roy Zinser, Patricia Munoz, Yonqmin Choe, Chris Pearce, Sean Tillmon, Karen Vredenburgh, and Heather Winthrow (Canada); Heidi Nix, Kristin Helgeson, Keri Foster, Tiffany Deadrick, and Theresa Kirschbaum (Argentina); and Michael Brown, Richard Crundwell, Pat Harkins, Kevin Tessier, and Antoine Taylor (North Yemen Arab Republic).

Windows can be the key for saving energy, home comfort

By Becky Ray
Energy Management Office

Windows serve many functions in our homes and offices -- they provide sunlight, ventilation and a view of the outdoors. They also can be a determining factor in how comfortable a room feels.

Because heat naturally moves from warmer to cooler areas, heat will enter through a window on a hot day but escape through a window on a cold one.

Heat moves in three ways — radiation, conduction and convection — and windows can allow all three to occur.

Radiation from the sun passes directly through the glass in windows and warms rooms. Glass is also a good conductor, allowing heat to be transmitted to the other side of the glass. Convection occurs when warm air in a room is displaced by cold air infiltrating through a poorly sealed window.

To make windows more effective at maintaining the room temperature, they should seal well. Caulking and weatherstripping should be used to seal cracks, preventing infiltration of outside air.

On cold days, opening drapes and blinds to allow sunlight in will warm the room. They can be closed on warm days to keep sunlight out.

Window treatments kept closed on cold nights add an extra layer of insulating air.

When selecting window treatments for the home or office, keep in mind the window's effect on the room temperature. In doing so you can not only make the room more comfortable, but more energy efficient as well.

Results of turkey survey show large population

By Deck Major
Fish and Wildlife Specialist

Results of the 1988 turkey surveys are in. The period of March 20-25 has been a busy one for personnel of the Natural Resources Management Division, DEH. For the first time, an effort has been made to census turkeys on Fort Benning.

Two Trend Routes were established to determine turkey distribution on post. The first route, consisting of 20 miles with 10, 4-minute listening stops began in the O Area and continued along gravel roads to the G Area.

The other route of similar design began on Yankee Road (A Area) and continued along Sunshine Road into Alabama.

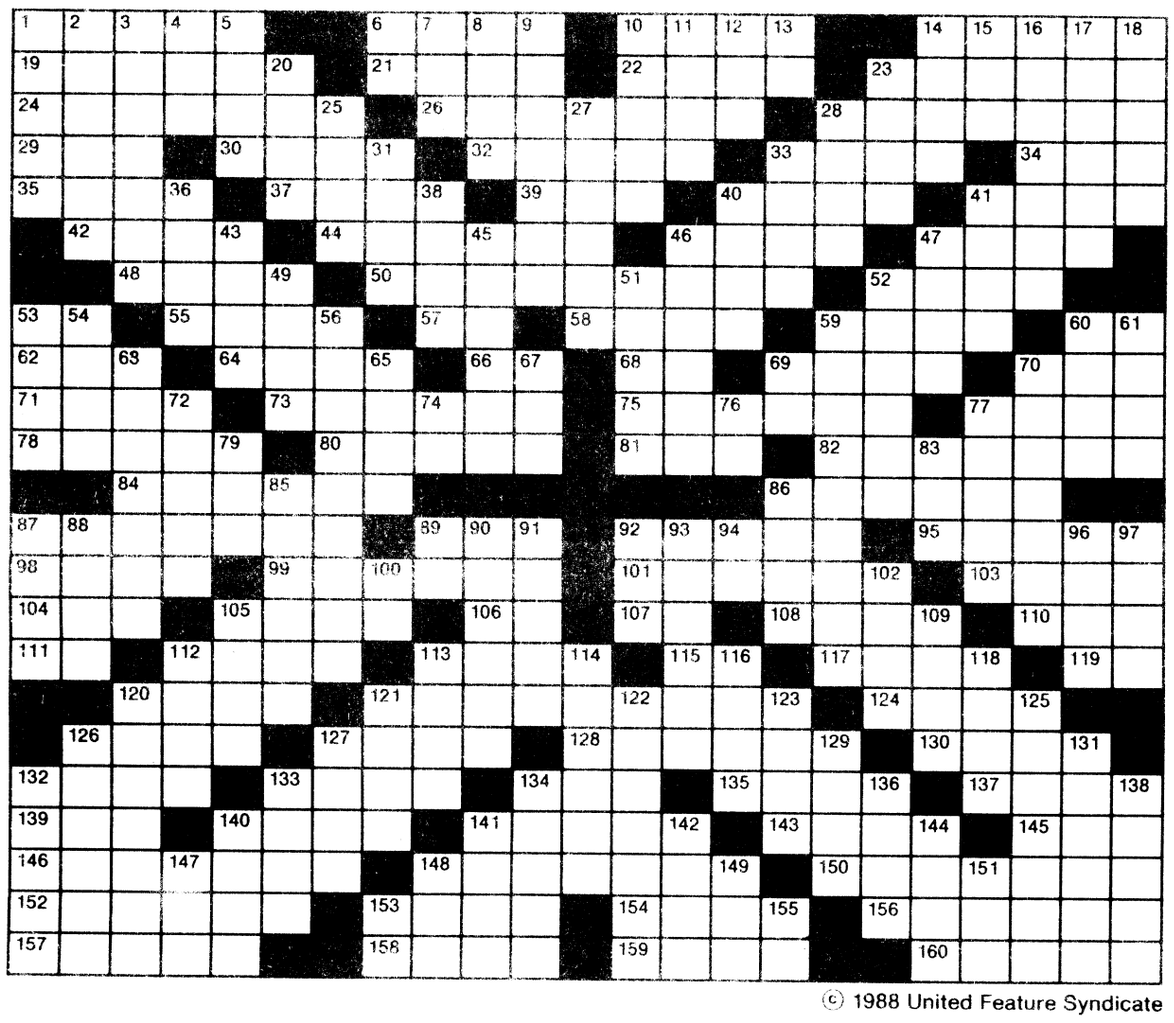
Four counts, two on each route, were conducted.

An average of 14 gobblers were heard each day, almost 1.5 gobblers at each stop.

Counts began at 6:15 a.m. and as every turkey hunter might suspect, gobbling activity was heaviest from that time until around 6:45 a.m.

On March 22-23, 13 listeners converged on approximately nine square miles in the D Area. Armed with note pads and pencils, watches and compasses, they recorded gobbler/hen activity from known locations.

On the best day, 28 gobblers and 26 hens were heard. Using minimum-known turkey densities from other studies, data collected translates to 12 birds per square mile.



We all know that all males don't gobble each day and using some additional assumptions accounting for jakes (juvenile males) and nonvocal gobblers, it is entirely possible that turkey density per square mile is closer to 22 birds.

If anyone asks, that translates to an estimate of the turkeys on post that ranges from 3,400 to 5,676 birds in the spring depending on how conservatively to count nongobbling males.

Good luck this season. There are plenty of trophy birds for everyone.

Amanda DeKockkoch, a kindergarten student in Janet Wynn's room at William H. Wilbur School, is busily involved in a cooking activity.

By Beth Middlemiss
Fort Benning Schools

These pictures were taken, developed and printed by the students to celebrate the Month of the Military Child.

Three Don C. Faith Middle School students — Rebecca Jordan, 7th grade, Frank Rosado, 8th grade and Carrie Brook, 6th grade — visited the seven other Fort Benning schools.

Their mission was to show Fort Benning children through the eyes of military children.

These students are part of a photography club that meets regularly with their teacher-sponsor, Tina Patrick.

Since moving to their new building last year, these students have learned to use their new dark room to develop and print pictures.

Club members have completed several projects this year including developing the pictures that will be used in their school yearbook.

Lee, York chosen as 'Star' teacher, student

By T. Richard Cummings
Spencer High School

"It was the highlight of my teaching career," said Joyce Lee, head of the math department at Spencer High School. Lee was commenting on being chosen as "Star Teacher."

The award, was first given to the senior with the highest SAT score, Tom York. It was then his choice who whould be the Star teacher, and he chose Lee. The choice was left entirely up to him.

York received the title of Star student at a recent school assembly.

An awards banquet was also held for all 20 star students and teachers from the eight area public high schools and two private high schools. At the banquet, York and Lee won the Muscogee County School District competition.

Joyce Lee and Tom York

The two honorees also attended a district luncheon, at which York did not win. However, he said, "Considering the fact that it's such a big honor in Georgia, it is something I can be proud of."

Being an "A" student, York has received many honors throughout high school, including a scholarship to the U.S.M.A., West Point.

"Tom is definitely one of the best students I have ever taught," Lee said.

Only 7 days remain before tax filing deadline

By Ron Allen
USAIC Public Affairs Office

There are only 7 days remaining before the filing deadline. If you're like many taxpayers, you're still putting off your return.

It's not really that difficult a task with a little prior planning. The problem is most people wait until they get their W-2 Form before they start planning, by then it's too late.

The Bayonet has been running articles for the past five weeks to help you with your taxes. This article is just to let you know how to get an extension, if you've waited too long.

We won't be able to cover everything, so see your unit tax advisor, listed below, for more details.

Taxpayers, who file Form 1040 or 1040A, can request an automatic four-month extension. This is only an extension to file your return, not an extension of time to pay if you owe.

To get an extension you must complete a Form 4868 and forward it to the IRS Service Center processing returns for your area by April 15.

Taxpayers filing 1040EZ or those requesting the IRS to compute their taxes are not eligible for the automatic extension.

Having the IRS compute your taxes may be another way for you to make the April 15 deadline. If you use Forms 1040EZ, 1040A and certain other 1040s the IRS will figure your taxes for you.

Just fill in certain items on the return, see the tax booklet or your advisor to find out which ones, sign the form and send it in before April 15.

Believe it or not, the IRS will figure the tax the way that benefits the taxpayer the most.

To qualify for this service, taxpayers must have an income of $50,000 or less.

The taxpayer cannot itemize, be claimed as a dependent on another person's return and must not use "Foreign Earned Income" (Form 2555).

Income must include only, wages, salaries, tips, interest, dividends, pensions and annuities.

For more information about an extension or getting the IRS to figure your taxes, see your unit tax advisor.

Varsity

Varsity was the most successful airborne operation carried out to date, and the brilliant results reflected the great strides made in this aspect since the landings of D-day, nine months earlier."

There are many lessons to be learned from Operation Varsity. First, is the time of attack. It will be recalled that the Airborne assault commenced at 10 a.m., some eight hours after the principle ground assault. Previously, all airborne assaults in the European Theater had preceded the ground or amphibious assault. Thus, the reversal in the timing of Operation Varsity constituted an innovation and was chiefly responsible for the assault achieving distinct surprise.

The second lesson learned is that airborne forces should be delivered in mass. In previous airborne operations in the European theater, airborne forces had been piecemealed into the target area over a period ranging from 12 hours to 2 1/2 days. In Operation Varsity, the complete air echelons of both participating divisions were dropped within 2 1/2 hours.

The principle of mass has long been an acknowledged precept of war. It particularly aids the airborne forces in that it allows the airborne forces to overcome weather and capitalize on shock effect and surprise.

Third, Operation Varsity proved that gliders could land on ground that had not previously secured by paratroopers.

Three from Benning win at lifting tourney

Kevin J. Howerton

Sgt. Miguel V. Taoy, Jr. of HHC, 197th Spt. Bn., strains to lift 529 pounds.

By Kevin J. Howerton
197th Infantry Brigade correspondent

Three people from Fort Benning recently won top honors at the Georgia Powerlifting Championships.

The meet was held at Dunwoody, Ga. and was hosted by the United States Powerlifting Federation, the largest powerlifting organization in the nation.

Sgt. Miguel V. Taoy Jr. of Headquarters Company, 197th Infantry Brigade, won the 165-pound class competition, and was also named Best Lifter in the Light Session (114-165 pounds). His wife, Dawn M. Taoy, won the women's 97- to 132-pound class and the Women's Open.

Harold D. Thompson, an air conditioning equipment operator for the Directorate of Engineering and Housing at Fort Benning, won the 165-pound class in the Masters Division (40 to 44 year old). He also set four state records in the Masters Division.

Despite an injury to his knee in the first round of lifting, Thompson was able to squat lift 480 pounds, bench press 335 pounds, and dead lift 480 pounds for a total of 1,295 pounds.

Thompson, who has worked at Fort Benning for two years, has been in powerlifting since 1975. In 1977, he placed fourth in the National competition, and became the first elite-class powerlifter in the state of Georgia.

"While powerlifting isn't for everybody, I would recommend some form of weightlifting for everyone," said Thompson.

Sgt. Taoy is currently the Armed Forces champion in the 148-pound class. He didn't intend on competing in the Georgia championships.

"I wasn't prepared for the competition at all," said Taoy. "I was just there to coach my wife, and they asked me to lift. I told the meet director that I had no equipment, and he borrowed a lifting suit for me. It was so tight, it took me 20 minutes to get it on."

Sgt. Taoy lifted 565 pounds in the squat lift, 345 pounds in the bench press and 530 pounds in the dead lift for a total of 1,440 ponds.

Dawn Taoy is currently the Georgia State Champion in the American Drug Free Powerlifting Association (97-pound class).

The ADFPA is a relatively new organization of weightlifters who agree to be tested for drug usage before competing. This was her first United States Powerlifting Federation meet.

Mrs. Taoy's winning lifts were 230 pounds in the squat lift, 105 pounds in the bench press and 230 pounds in the deadlift for a total of 565 lbs.

Sgt. Taoy will be the meet director for the 1988 Fort Benning Powerlifting Meet to be held June 18 at Bryant Wells Field House.

The meet will be open to all active military stationed at Fort Benning, and family members, retirees and civilian employees.

Anyone interested in competing, can contact Sgt. Taoy at 545-4726/4388.

Lawton sets new national record during running target shooting

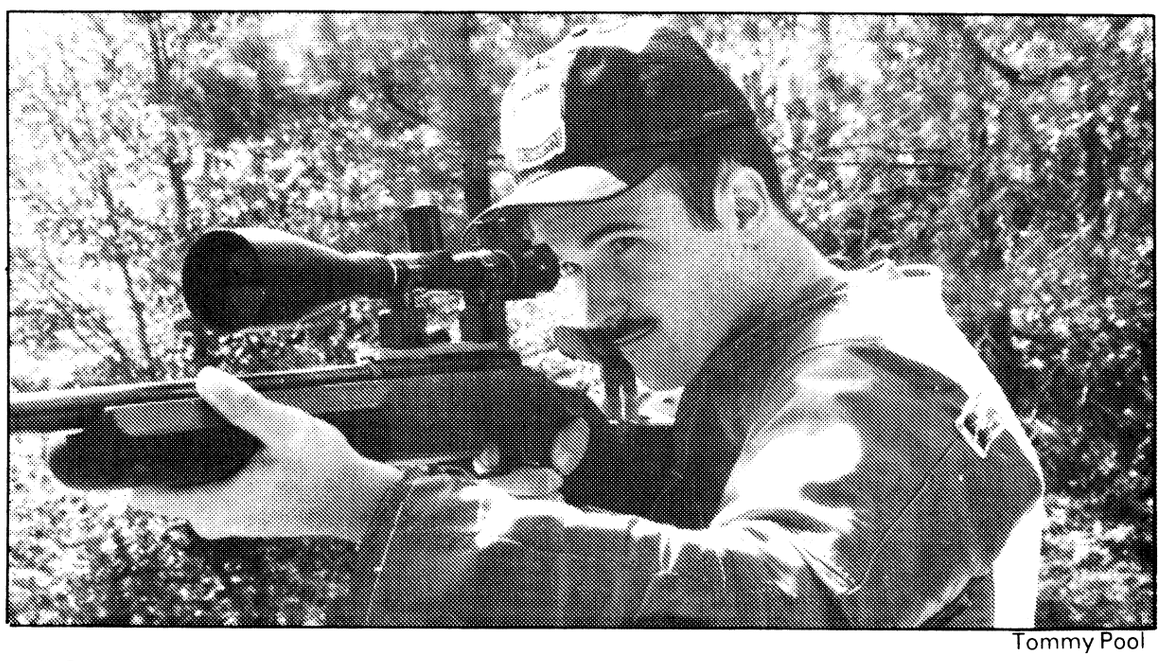
By Tommy Pool
USAMU Public Affairs Office

SP4 Troy Lawton of the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit, set a new national shooting record in competition held March 26-27.

Lawton's new record score was fired during running target championships held at U.S. Marine Corps Base, Quantico, Va.

His total of 394 out of 400 in the "Mixed Runs" phase was one point over the old mark established in 1983.

The U.S. Army "Gold" squad of Lawton and PFCs Michael Moore and Martin Edmondson, also won the "Mixed Runs" team event with a total of 1,156 out of 1,200 points.



The USMC "Scarlet" team was second at 1,135.

In other events, Lawton finished third in the Olympic Runs and 10-Meter Air Rifle matches scoring totals of 584 out of 600 and 356 out of 400 points, respectively.

USAMU's Michael Moore scored a career-high total of 579 in the Olympic Runs event, to finish only three points away from a bronze medal.

The Army "Gold" squad also won the final 10-meter team championship event, scoring a total of 1,046 to finish six points ahead of the U.S. Marine "Scarlet" team.

Members of the winning "Gold" squad were Lawton, Edmondson and SSgt. Manuel Fleitas.

Second place in the 1988 tournament was won by Jim Merritt, also of Bainbridge, with a total of 36.10 pounds.

Brock, as first-place winner received a 16-foot Randall Craft Bass Boat with a custom-built trailer and a 115-HP Suzuki outboard motor. Merritt won a 15-foot Glasstream Hydrobass Boat with a 75-HP Suzuki motor.

With a total of 153 contestants, the tournament paid off for the first 30 places. It required more than 14 pounds of fish to finish in the money.

Ron Bobrou of Louisville, Ky., traveled the greatest distance to compete. Last year, he finished in 36th place and this year, he finished in the money at 22nd place.

The Bainbridge Bass Club won the 6-man team competition. The Sowega Bass Club placed second and the Florida Po' Boy team finished third.

This is the top ten:

Free fishing festival to be held at Stone Mountain

Natural Light City Fish

Anglers who drive to Georgia's Stone Mountain Lake on April 16, will get more fishing action than they bargained for. A free fishing festival called the Natural Light City Fish will premiere that day at Stone Mountain Resort, 16 miles from Atlanta, offering beginners and experts alike a tackle box full of fishing-related activities.

The Natural Light City Fish will feature a casting contest, tagged fish competition, clinics by local pros and television fisherman, Bill Dance and tackle and boat exhibits.

The event, made possible by Natural Light Beer, is being presented by the Atlanta metro Ford dealers and Exide Batteries and is being sponsored by Purina HiPro.

"The Natural Light City Fish is a noval and much-needed approach to getting more people excited and involved in the sport of fishing," said Dance, who assisted in designing the event. "We have a great day planned at Stone Mountain for both beginners and experts. And, you don't need to buy a ticket to take part in the fun."

While the Natural Light City Fish is free to the public, there is a $4-per-car admission fee to Stone Mountain.

Organizers of the Natural Light City Fish, which will run from 10 a.m. to 8 p.m., expect to take the event to other urban areas after the premiere in Atlanta.

Also included in the fishing festival will be a lunchtime "Golden Dipt Fish Fry," live music and a game call exhibit.

Those in attendance will be encouraged to test their skills and their luck in two competitions: A casting contest and a tagged fish competition.

In all, 10 fish will be caught, tagged and released in Stone Mountain Lake prior to the 10 a.m. start time on April 16. Each lucky angler catching a tagged fish will win $5,000. Winners will be eligible from 10 a.m. to 6 p.m.

"It will take some luck, skill and perseverence to land one of the tagged fish," said Dance. "But that's what fishing's all about."

The Natural Light City Fish represents a collective effort by fishing industry suppliers to spread the popularity of fishing to an even wider cross section of the public. There are already an estimated 70 million Americans who have fished in their lifetime.

"There are still a lot of people who don't know how much fun fishing can be," said Dance, who hosts the syndicated "Bill Dance Outdoors" television show. "Fishing is a great way to enjoy the outdoors, and we'll be delivering that message at Stone Mountain."

Return GDNR tag for reward

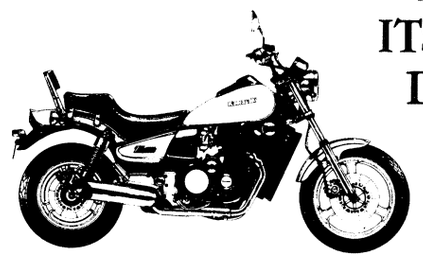
Georgia Dept. of Natural Resources

Fisheries biologists of the Game and Fish Division periodically tag fish for research purposes and a small reward is offered to the angler who finds and returns one of these tags.

The data provided by the angler along with surveys and other research allows the biologists to better manage the fishery in Georgia.

Recently, the Game and Fish Division has learned that one fisherman on Lake Lanier has tagged more than 500 fish with his personal tags and that he intends to tag 500 more. The imprint on each tag, "Release Me" is meant to encourage catch and release fishing.

However, this private tagging has created confusion among fishermen as to which tag has been attached by whom and for what purpose.



Tagging by inexperienced persons often results in the needless death of the fish, according to Department of Natural Resources Fisheries Chief Mike Gennings.

"We find that many of these people do their tagging in the warm months when the possibility of a fungus infection is greatest," he said. "Our tagging is done in the winter. The tagging operation increases the handling of the fish putting them in greater stress and greatly reducing their chance for survival."

Other fishermen who catch the tagged fish are confused over which tags to send to DNR for the reward or tend to ignore the tags which deprives the biologists of valuable information.

The Game and Fish Division strongly urges all anglers not to tag fish.

SAAB'S INNOVATIVE TECHNOLOGY AND ENGINEERING PROWESS START AT AROUND $15,000 AND DON'T STOP UNTIL ABOUT $20 MILLION.

The idea of "shared technology" has a long history at Saab. In fact, the first Saab cars weren't even conceived by automotive engineers, they were designed by aircraft engineers.

All of which helps explain why Saabs have always been known for their innovative approach.

Innovations such as one of the first uses of turbocharging in a standard production car. One of the earliest applications of 16-valve cylinder head technology and front-wheel drive. Dual-diagonal braking. Energy-absorbing, collapsible steering columns. And most recently, the addition of an ABS anti-lock braking system to all Saab 9000's.

But to experience this technology in a far more moving fashion we suggest you visit us soon. Where the entire 1988 model line (unfortunately, minus the supersonic Saab JA-37 Viggen) awaits your inspection.

SAAB
The most intelligent cars ever built.

Rangers honor WWII vet

75th Ranger Regiment

During a recent strategic deployment exercise at Fort Chaffee, rangers from Regimental Headquarters participated in ceremonies honoring the famed World War II ranger, Brig. Gen. William O. Darby.

Darby was from nearby Fort Smith, Ark. and is buried in the national cemetery there. Darby was the commander of the 1st Ranger Battalion, which was organized in Northern Ireland and fought in Africa, Sicily and the Italian mainland campaigns. He was also the commander of the Ranger Force, which included the First, Third and Fourth Ranger Battalions; spearhead of the Sicilian invasion and the fights for Anzio and Cisterna.

Later Darby was assistant division commander of the 10th Mountain Division until he was killed by artillery fire in Italy in April 1945.

During the ceremonies ranger Sgts. Michael O'Dell, Shannon Davis, Kenneth Hall and Nadeem Butler placed a wreath on Darby's grave and the grave of ranger Sgt. Marlin Maynard, also buried at Fort Smith, who was killed during the Grenada operation. The rangers/sergeants then raised the U.S. flag over the restored Darby family home and present day museum. They also gave a short presentation about today's ranger for students at the William O. Darby Junior High School in Fort Smith.

Infantry commanders attend conference here discuss training tactics

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Infantry commanders from around the world gathered here last week to attend the annual Infantry Conference. They received an update on weapons, organization and doctrine and heard the Army's highest leaders discuss training, state of the Army and challenges of the future.

Post Commander Maj. Gen. Kenneth C. Leuer welcomed the attendees and set the agenda for the three-day conference. As chief of infantry, Leuer discussed the state of the Infantry on the first day. In addition to being the chief of infantry, Leuer wears two other hats -- commanding general of the Infantry Center and Fort Benning and commandant of the Infantry School.

Secretary of the Army John O. Marsh Jr. delivered the conference's keynote address to a packed Marshall Auditorium. He highlighted the Army's theme of the year, telling the audience of commanders and Infantry School students that training is the most important thing we do.

At an evening dinner at the Officers' Club, Chief of Staff of the Army Gen. Carl E. Vuono addressed the conference about the state of today's Army.

Commanders of several Army major commands also spoke during the three-day conference. They were Gen. Maxwell R. Thurman, commanding general of Training and Doctrine Command; Gen. Joseph T. Palastra, commander in chief of Forces Command and Gen. James J. Lindsay, commander in chief of Special Operations Command.

Other high-level commanders discussed other aspects of concern in the Army today. Commanding general of III Corps and Fort Hood Lt. Gen. Crosbie E. Saint stressed the importance of "focusing combat power" while Lt. Gen. Gerald T. Bartlett, commanding general of the Army's Combined Arms Center, spoke about "leadership in the combined arms team."

The deputy commander in chief of U.S. Army Europe and Seventh Army, Lt. Gen. George R. Stotser, addressed the Army's warfighting ability in Europe.

Bringing attention a little closer to home, Lt. Gen John W. Foss, commanding general, XVIII Airborne Corps and Fort Bragg, discussed the recent emergency deployment readiness excercise into Honduras, which included troops from the 82nd Airborne Division and the 7th Infantry Division.

Maj. Gen. Bernard Loeffke, commanding general U.S. Army South and U.S. Army Security Assistance Agency Latin-America, also addressed a topic closer to home, "Challenges for the Infantry in Latin America."

Nearly 200 officers, active and retired, attended the three-day conference.

Phone system update in the works

By Shawn Bryson
Bayonet staff writer

If there's one thing at Fort Benning that really steams people, it's probably the telephone system. Wrong numbers, never-ending busy signals and constant static are just a few of the complaints about the system.

However, according to officials at the Information System Command at Fort Benning, the furture of the phone system holds great things.

"We are actively involved in a project to replace the present electro-mechanical telephone switching system with a state-of-the-art electronic switching system," said Bill Funk, acting chief of Logistics Support Division.

"The existing technical difficulties, deteriorated lead-covered cables and antiquated electrical-mechanical switching equipment, cause the all too frequent problems of unfounded busy signals, dead lines, noise and wrong numbers," Funk said.

However, the new system is expected to bring the communications at Fort Benning up to par, according to Funk. "The complete replacement of inside plant telephone equipment and selected cables will correct these problems and result in a tremendous improvement in the quality and efficiency of the Fort Benning administrative telephone system," Funk said.

The multi-million dollar project has been contracted to GTE, and the installation of the new equipment is tentatively scheduled to begin in June. The completion of the project is expected to take approximately one year, according to Donald Brown, site manager for Continental Telephone.

Brown said the project involves work on the outside plant and the inside plant as well as the replacement of many of the cables at Benning. "The work at the outside plant, which includes the replacement of approximately 60,000 feet of old lead-covered cable, should be completed by the end of this month. The work at the inside plant will involve the replacement of all electro-mechanical switching equipment and most of the hardware," Brown said. He added that four of the new electronic switches will be installed on post.

According to Bill Holloway, project officer at the Information System Command, many of the problems with the phone system occur with changes in the weather. All the copper wires of the older cables are wrapped in paper and covered with a lead casing that has corroded over the years and allowed moisture to seep inside hampering connections, Holloway explained.

"The new plastic insulated, jelly-filled' cables will last much longer and won't be affected by the weather," Holloway said.

Funk said that the telephones on post will not be replaced all at once, but will eventually be replaced through attrition.

The new system will also give the rotary-dial phones many of the same characteristics that the contemporary 'touch tone' telephones feature. Some of those features are call-waiting, call-forwarding and conference calling, according to Brown.

"As a part of the contract with GTE, they will also install a fiber-optic transmission system to interconnect main and satellite switches, which will give callers faster connections, clearer calls and overall better quality," Holloway said.

While the changes in the system will not be overnight, the personnel at the Information System Command urge phone users to be patient. "We get calls all the time about the poor quality of Benning's phones. What people don't realize is that we are doing everything within our power to supply a better phone system. It takes money, and now we have the money, so callers will begin to notice the improvements soon," Holloway said.

"Our goal is to provide Fort Benning customers with essentially the same quality of telephone service as they might expect to receive from any other provider," Funk concluded.

Tax deadline approaches

By Ron Allen
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Today's the day. You'll have until midnight and that's it. Tax returns are due, and there's no time left. So, what do you do?

If you're like a lot of people, you've procrastinated right up to the final hours without filing for an extension. However, there's still one shot left.

According to Jim Roberts, Columbus manager of mail processing, the post office, in a joint effort with the IRS, will help you get your return in before the deadline.

The General Mail Facility, located at 3916 Milgen Road, will be open until midnight tonight offering window service, selling money orders and stamps.

Also, VITA (voluntary income tax assistance), an organization sponsored and trained by the IRS, will be on hand from 7 p.m. to midnight to help you prepare your return.

Approximatly 12 members of the organization will be there to help render free aid. Business should be booming so get there as early as possible if you need help.

The post office at Fort Benning, corner of Vibbert and Hall streets will be closed. But, personnel from the Tax Assitance Office will be there from 6 p.m. to midnight to help prepare your return. Mail will be picked up at midnight from the drop box out front. That mail will be post marked April 15.

Other post offices in the area with mail boxes that will be emptied at midnight are; Wynnton at 1179 Henry Avenue, Downtown at 120 12th Street, Lindsey Creek at 3469 Macon Road, Beallwood at 3845 Hamilton Road and Baker Village at 1435 Benning Drive.

Budget ax chops into education benefits

By Shawn Bryson
Bayonet staff writer

Major cuts in the budget of the Army Continuing Education System are responsible for many changes at Fort Benning. The most extreme of those changes concerns Tuition Assistance.

According to Charles Fritts, Education Services officer, the ACES annual budget has been cut from $1.9 million to $1.3 million, a reduction that will probably affect most students currently using Tuition Assistance for college courses and definately those who plan to use TA in the future.

In the past, students were able to use TA for two or three classes each quarter. However, TA is now only available to students for one course per quarter, Fritts said.

Spring Energy Awareness Campaign kicks off April 23

By Becky Ray
Energy Management Branch

It's time again for Fort Benning's annual Spring Energy Awareness Campaign, and the Energy Management Office of the Directorate of Engineering and Housing is making plans to include the entire post in events during the week of April 23-29.

A brown-bag lecture is scheduled for April 25 in building 4, Infantry Hall in room 21 at noon. Everyone is invited to bring a lunch and enjoy listening to a representative from Southface Energy Institute in Atlanta. The topic will be solar energy.

Fort Benning's favorite mascot, the Energy Ant, will be at the Main Mall on April 23 from 11 a.m. to 1 p.m. to greet his young friends and distribute balloons. Kids, bring your parents!

Win a weekend stay for four at the Destin Recreation Center Hotel in Destin, Florida! Complete the crossword puzzle on page B-3, and send it to the Energy Management Office before 4 p.m. April 28. A drawing will be made from all the correct entries to determine the winner.

T-shirts will be awarded to all those placing energy related suggestions accepted for evaluation during the week. Anyone having an idea for saving energy should submit their suggestion on a Fort Benning Form 50 to DRM, Model Installation Program/Army Suggestion Program, Building 2604.

In the post dependent schools, children in grades K through 8 are participating in poster and essay contests. One winner in each grade will receive a bicycle and a certificate of achievement. The runners-up in each grade will be awarded a savings bond and a certificate of achievement. Posters, small gift items and coloring books will also be distributed.

Family Housing occupants will receive heater and air conditioner filter signals for use in their heaters and air conditioning systems. These small plastic devices fit into air filters and whistle when the filter needs to be changed. They are washable and reuseable. Installation instructions will be delivered with each signal.

Tax help available until midnight

By Jeff Kipi
Legal Service

At the end of every season there are always some individuals who wait until the last minute to file their tax returns. Because this is always the case, the personnel from the Tax Assistance Office will be available in the lobby of the Fort Benning Post Office on Main Post Friday from 6 p.m. to midnight to assist individuals in filing their tax returns for 1987 before the midnight deadline.

There will be no post office personnel on hand to provide postal services, so don't expect to buy stamps or send registered letters, etc. They will, however, pick up the mail from the boxes in front of the post office at midnight and date it April 15.

Remember, federal law requires that all tax returns be filed by April 15. The obvious questions that arise from this requirement are: who must file a tax return, and what happens if I fail to file as required?

The instruction booklets for each tax return contain the specific requirements to determine if you must file a tax return. Generally, you must file a tax return if you are single and your gross income is more than $4,440; you are married, filing a joint return, and your gross income is more than $7,560; you are married, filing separately, and your gross income is more than $1,900; or you file as head of household and your gross income

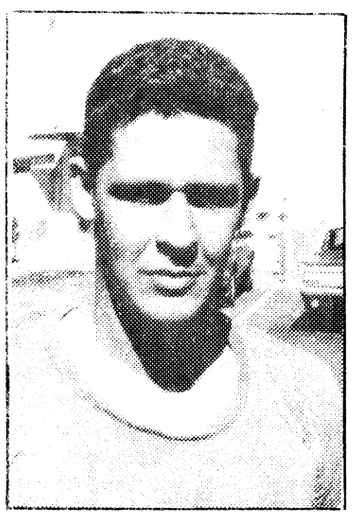
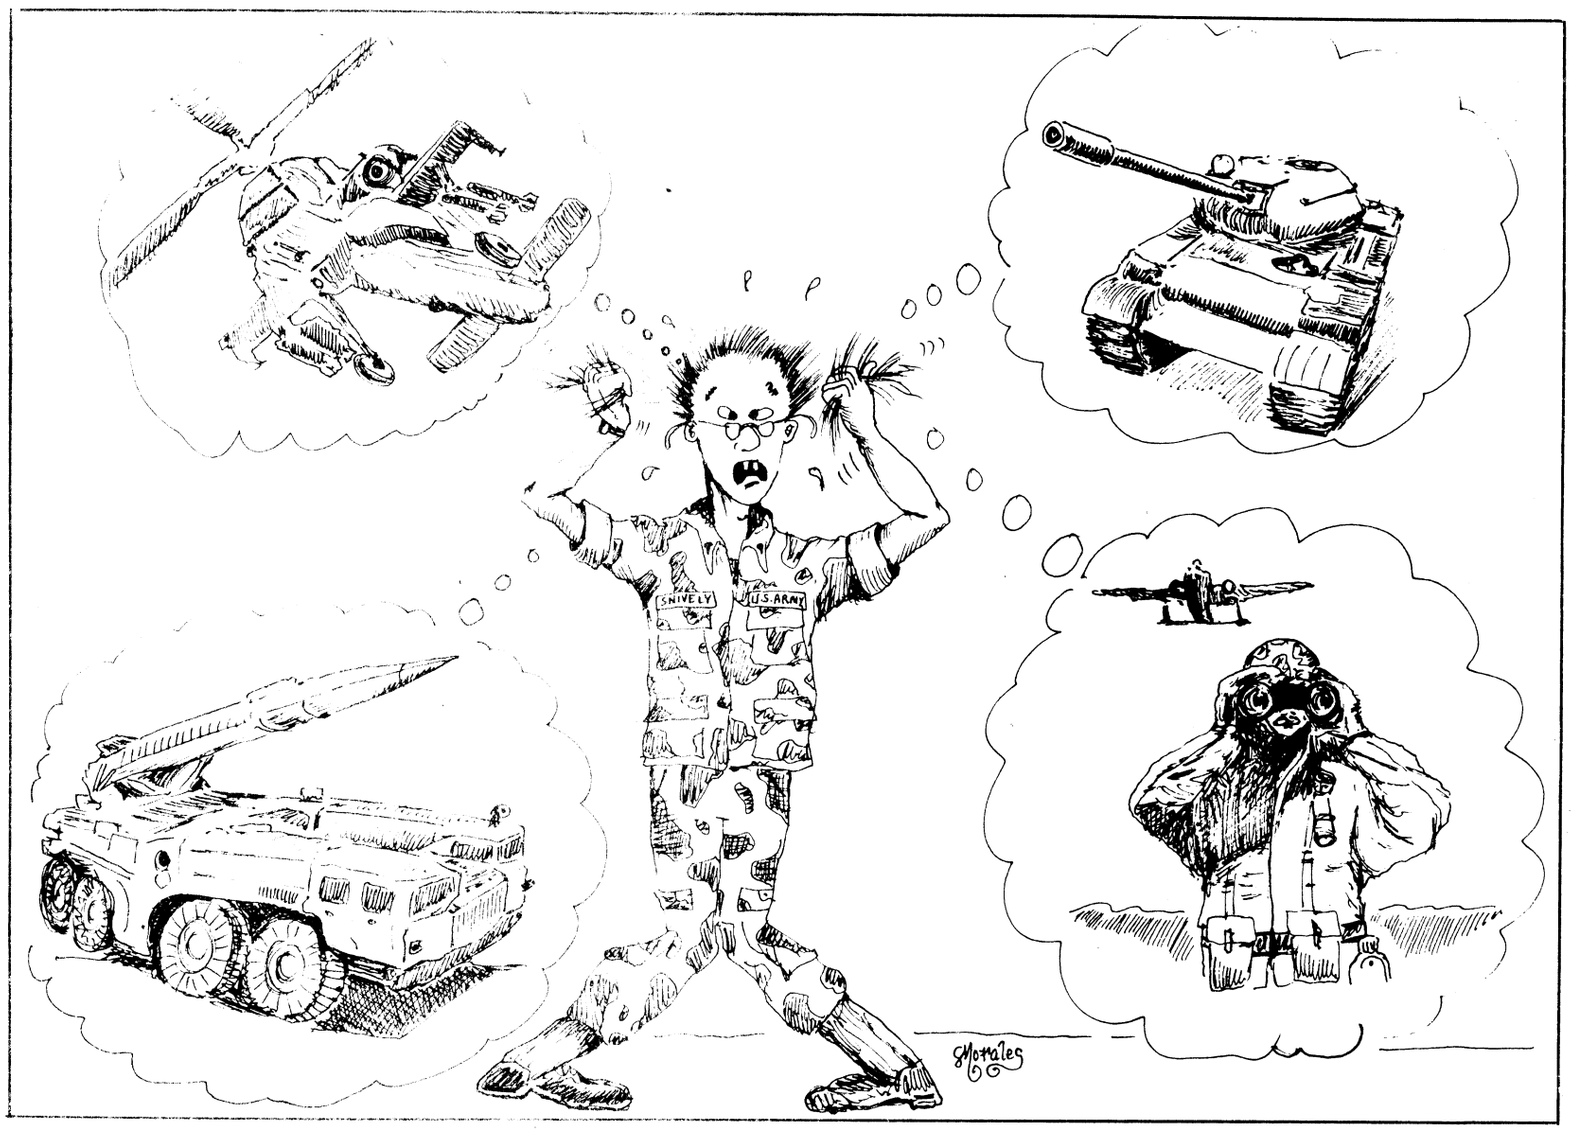
VARIOUS VOICES: Which military instructor has influenced you most in your career? Why?

SSgt. Orlando Welsh, ANCOC - "SFC Duenas, he taught in one of my leadership courses and I remember the way he always presented himself in class was very professional. He got the point across by putting the information out in the right perspective."

2nd Lt. Lee Enloe, Company D, 2nd Battalion, 18th Infantry, 197th Infantry Brigade - "SSgt. David Tz[illegible]zyk, a ranger instructor at the Ranger Training Brigade. He was very squared away. He took and interest in each student and seemed genuinely concerned that each student retained the knowledge he passed."



PFC Robert Camp, A.G. Replacement, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment - "SSgt. Chong Dean, my squad leader at Fort Ord, Calif., he really knows his stuff. He was a combat veteran and really squared away. He knew what he was supposed to teach you and he presented it in a way that you felt you were serving a purpose."



Sgt. Marvin Ellis, 6th Ranger Battalion, Ranger Training Brigade - "My first sergeant when I was at basic training was the instructor that most influenced me. He was a hard man, but he was soldier's, soldier and he was very physical fitness oriented, and in turn he made sure all his soldiers were fit."

Cpl. Steven Metallo, Headquarters Company, 4th Battalion, 30th Infantry Regiment, 2nd Infantry Training Brigade - "Unquestionably Drill Sergeant Dikus, he was a professional noncommissioned officer, and he cared about his troops."

SP4 Douglas VanDeste, Headquarters Company, 2nd Battalion, 18th Infantry, 197th Infantry Brigade - "A squad leader named SSgt. Mansito, has most influenced me. He was the most experienced and professional noncommissioned officer I have ever met. If you made a mistake, he corrected you and then that was the end of it. He is very fair."

Technology astounds Snively

By Clyde Snively
USAIC Public Affairs Office

"I didn't realize the Army was so high tech," a reporter said as we toured the displays during the Infantry Conference in building 4.

I had to admit that I didn't either. Sure I realized that most offices — with the exception of the PAO — had computers to do their work for them.

I also knew about the Bradley and the M-1 tank. I'd heard about the new TOW missile and plutonium armor for tanks, and I was aware that nearly every country that so desired, had nuclear bombs. But that was about the extent of my keeping up with technology.

On the other hand, I was keenly aware that we had a tough time talking by phone from room 604 to 640 in building 4, and that unless we took special care of U-joints on quarter-ton vehicles, we'd break down where we least wanted to. So I was still a little skeptical about just how far the modern Army man had actually come.

Thus, walking the halls the other day with the reporter was quite an eye opener.

There were teleoperated anti-tank systems, fiber optic guided missiles, fire and forget missiles, directed energy and kinetic energy and laser devices for killing tanks, for communicating, for doing all sorts of things.

It was enough to boggle the mind and leave a person in a fog.

Some people will claim I'm in a constant fog anyway, but I'm here to tell you, I have grave doubts about all this gear.

I can see SP4 Tentpeg learning to operate a piece of equipment. I can almost envision SP4 Thumbs pulling maintenance, but how does commander keep track of all this?

They've got to know capabilities, limits, vulnerabilities of so many systems. Do company commanders get issued lap top computers that remind them what the max effective range of a TOW is or what kind of support he can get from aerial gun platforms and indirect artillery?

I guess that's why they're officers and I'm a spec four typewriter pounder.

As I wandered the hallway glassy-eyed, catching fragments of what sounded like erudite and profound discussions on the various pieces of equipment, or watched the video demonstrations of missiles fired on one side of a mountain killing tanks on another side, I developed a theory.

My theory is that as fast as we and the other guy develop a piece of equipment, we also would be developing countermeasures nearly as fast.

Thus, according to my theory, all our equipment would be checkmated by the other guy and vice versa. Deadlock. Negated.

And you know what it all boils down to? That little guy in the foxhole who was just lying low, waiting for the big guys with all their fancy equipment to knock each other out.

Then, SP4 Tentpeg would rise from his foxhole like the Phoenix and smote the enemy dead with his bayonet — assuming he was better trained, of course.

And that's how our next major war will be decided — it'll all boil down to which Army trains its bayonet fighters to be the best.

Commanding general reminds everyone to be conscious of energy consumption

During the week April 25-29, an Energy Awareness Campaign will be conducted to promote the Fort Benning Energy Program. This campaign is to remind the Fort Benning community of the role energy plays in the conveniences of our modern lifestyles and its critical importance to our military operation. It also should reinforce our firm commitment that must be made toward the wide use of our limited energy resources. Efficient and effective use of our energy resources is a first step to eliminating the United States' dependence upon oil from foreign nations. The goals of conservation and the elimination of energy waste and abuse must be a priority of everyone working and living at Fort Benning.

The Energy Program has made progress in the last few years, but continued achievements depend increasingly on the efforts of individuals. I urge each of you to become actively involved in bringing about the success of the Energy Program not only during this campaign, but throughout the year.

cover 75-90 percent of most tuition fees. Fritts explained that now TA is set at 75 percent for all students.

Another of the new changes involves eligibility for TA. Soldiers who have the Vietnam Era G. I. Bill must now use it verses tuition assistance. Also, officers holding the rank of lieutenant colonel and above no longer qualify for TA, Fritts added.

Another of the changes stipulates that students may not use TA to take a course at a level that they have already achieved. For example, a person holding an associates degree may not use TA to take lower level courses.

One issue at ACES that has been resolved concerns the availability of TA for graduate courses. "Warrant Officers and enlisted personnel may have heard that they could not receive TA for graduate courses," Fritts said. "However, it has been determined that those soldiers will be able use TA for the graduate courses."

Fritts further explained that although $1.3 million is a lot of money, ACES has more of a responsibility than just providing Fort Benning soldiers with educational services. "We are responsible for all active duty soldiers at Fort Benning as well as active duty soldiers, reservists and guardsmen in nine counties in Alabama, 24 counties in Florida and 50 counties in Georgia," Fritts said. He explained that many of those soldiers outside the Fort Benning area hold positions such as recruiters, ROTC instructors and administrators at military entrance processing stations.

Other changes in the continuing education service include a reduction in Basic Skills Education courses and a reduction in the number of Defense Activity for Non-Traditional Education Support testing sites. "The number of Basic Skills Education courses is now half of what it used to be and the number of DANTES testing sites has dropped from four to two," Fritts said.

He said that ACES is expected to run out of money for Tuition Assistance by July, but the staff at ACES is doing everything possible to ease the impact of the cuts on soldiers.

"Because we were able to see the cuts coming, we made some adjustments to prepare for the them," Fritts said. "Actually we're doing well compared to many other installations, which have already run out of money."

Fritts stressed that soldiers should not give up their education plans for fear of insufficient funds. "We are keeping a positive attitude and our counselors can point soldiers affected by the budget cuts in the right direction," Fritts said.

One of the best ways for students to avoid the cuts is to see their branch education center and ask about DANTES. DANTES is a program geared toward refreshing material previously learned and testing out of courses that might not be necessary for all students, according to Fritts.

Instructors of Year honored

By Ron Allen
USAIC Public Affairs Office

The 1987 Fort Benning Instructors of the Year were honored during a ceremony in Infantry Hall Monday.

Receiving recognition as the commissioned officer instructor was Capt. Mark L. Rozycki. When selected, he was assigned as an instructor with CATD, Leadership Division. He is presently commanding Co. D, 2nd Bn., 29th Inf.

SFC Timothy S. Cline was honored as the senior enlisted instructor. He is assigned as an instructor with the Engineer Branch of CATD. He teaches demolitions and engineering techniques.

The junior enlisted instructor, SSgt. Alan R. Bowser, is assigned to Co. B, 1st Bn., 507th PIR. He teaches basic airborne techniques.

The Instructor Recognition Program was established in 1981 to recognize those instructors who clearly exceed the requirements of their position through dedicated effort and who contribute significantly to the accomplishment of the USAIS training mission.

The three instructors chosen received USAIS plaques and Army Commendation Medals presented by Maj. Gen. Kenneth C. Leuer, Fort Benning's commanding general.

They also received plaques, warm-up jackets and a $100 savings bond from AUSA, presented by the local chapter president, Jim Gallagher.

The NCO instructors received plaques and warm-up jackets from the local chapter of the NCOA, presented by the Columbus Service Center manager, John Lynch, on behalf of the Follow Me Chapter.

is more than $4,440. If you meet any of these requirements, or the other requirements listed in the instruction booklets, then you must file a tax return by April 15.

If you do not file your tax return on time, you will have to pay additional interest and penalties on the amount of tax you owe. Interest will be charged on any taxes not paid by the due date, and it will also be charged on the amount of the penalty you will owe for failing to file. Interest on the penalty is charged from the due date of the return to the date of the payment.

The penalty assessed against your taxes for filing late is 5 percent of the tax due for each month, or part of a month the return is late unless you can show a reasonable cause for the delay. The maximum penalty is 25 percent. If you do file a return late, attach a full explanation to your return explaining your reason for the late filing. If the return is more than 60 days late, the penalty will be no less than $100 or 100 percent of the balance of the tax due on your return, whichever is less.

The only way to avoid the payment of this interest and penalties is to file the tax on time or file form 4868 asking for an extension of the time to file. The extensions does not extend the time to pay your taxes, but it does avoid the penalties. If you received your W-2 from your employer before April 15, there is no reason to file for an extension.

Remember, if you need assistance in preparing your taxes, the personnel from the tax assistance office will be at the Fort Benning Post Office on Main Post Friday from 6 p.m. to midnight. At this office, you will be able to receive free assistance in filing your tax return.

Any return completed and filed by midnight will be postmarked by the post office as being filed on April 15, 1988.

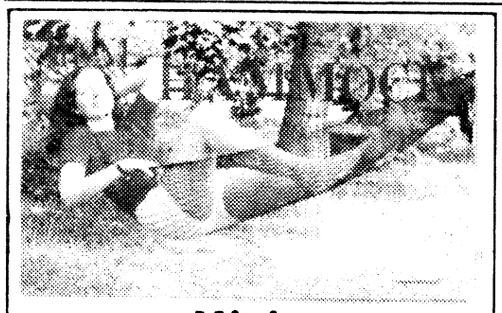
NCO promotions increase in May

Army News Service

The NCO promotion prospects for the month of May, as announced by Army personnel officials, show that 1,442 enlisted soldiers are to be promoted as of May 1.

That figure exceeds by 15 percent the number promoted in April.

Even though budget limitations have held down promotions in recent months, officials say they're striving to keep promotions for the rest of 1988 near or above the level for May.



The current list of promotions includes 19 to sergeant major, 73 to master sergeant and 150 to sergeant first class. Soldiers on local promotion lists to staff sergeant will see 300 promotions, and 900 will go to those awaiting sergeant stripes.

Scout Platoon ambushes tanks during evaluations

Kevin J. Howerton

A tank from Co. D, 2nd Bn., 69th Armor, comes out of the brush to engage a helicopter silhouette during a simulated attack in platoon evaluations.

Sgt. Stan P. Kane of HHC, 2nd Bn., 69th Armor, tapes pyrotechnic charges next to a silhouette for a simulated helicopter attack during platoon evaluations.

197th Infantry Brigade correspondent

"What we're trying to do is get them to act aggressively, take out whatever opposition they get, because they have the firepower," said SSgt. Luis Solorzano of HHC, 2nd Bn., 69th Armor.

The Scout Platoon from 2nd Bn., 69th Armor is in the field, providing opposition force for the tankers during their platoon evaluations. One of the tasks for the scouts is to ambush a tank platoon during a road march.

"They need to get off the road quickly and go after the attackers to destroy them. The ability to make a split-second decision is what it takes, you have to develop a second nature to be able to react quickly to the attack."

"In our ambush, we can usually get the first tank with our Viper missiles," said Sgt. Stan P. Kane, another of the 2nd Bn., 69th Armor scouts, "even though it's hard to kill a tank with Vipers."

"You have to volley fire with two Vipers at the same time to kill a tank," explained Sgt. Ronald D. Peck.

"We let them get close, 75 or 100 meters, before we engage," said Kane. "The whole ambush only takes three to five minutes, but if they deploy properly, they can run right over us and take us out."

Other tasks the Scout Platoon must perform include simulating an artillery gas attack and an attack from a Soviet M1-24 Hind helicopter. For the gas attack, the scouts throw artillery simulators and CS gas grenades.

For the helicopter attack, the scouts place a Hind helicopter silhouette in a tree off the road.

"I tape two grenade simulators and a smoke grenade to the branches next to the silhouette, and run trip wires down to the Armored Personnel Carrier at the base of the tree," said Kane. "When the tanks come by, I pop a grenade simulator, then the smoke, then the other grenade simulator."

"The platoon that came through yesterday reacted perfectly," said Kane. "All four tanks came out of the brush and fired simultaneously. If that had been a real Hind, I know he would have bought it."

Rangers complete rotation

3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment

The 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment recently completed the first Ranger Battalion rotation through the Joint Readiness Training Center, (JRTC), Fort Chaffee, Ark.

The battalion conducted a strategic deployment via six C-141 USAF Starlifter Aircraft culminating in an airborne assault into Arrowhead DZ, Fort Chaffee.

During the training rotation, the rangers conducted several raid and recovery operations. These missions included strikes deep behind enemy lines against such targets as enemy command and control sites, theater air defense systems and special weapons sites. The raids, ambushes and attacks required joint planning, detailed rehearsals and close coordination with numerous support-

Engineers tackle obstacle course

By George Mingee
197th Infantry Brigade correspondent

When combat engineers take to the woodline, it's not always to dig tank ditches and build log cribs. Recently, the 72nd Engineer Company (Combat) of the 197th Infantry Brigade, tracked to the woods to build another section of an obstacle/leadership course on Kelley Hill.

The course consists of nine obstacles, with each obstacle designed to test a soldier's strength and ability to follow out a mission under adverse conditions.

A three-rope bridge begins the adventurous course 100 feet into the woods. The objective of the course is for a squad leader to maneuver his squad and a box of demolitions through nine obstacles. With snipers and aggressors lurking around every corner, a squad has to move quickly to avoid being captured or killed.

"We started this course with just a three-rope bridge in mind, but over the past year, we have built eight more obstacles. We hope to build a night infiltration course later," said SFC Robert Barth, 1st platoon sergeant.

Some of the intermediate obstacles include a rope climb with a 25-foot wall of dirt and a tree used as a balance beam over a culvert. The final objective is to assault a bunker, using a reconnaissance team and hand grenades, allowing part of the squad to get close enough to use the stachel charges and blow the bunker.

According to Barth, it takes approximately three hours for a squad to maneuver through the course. As a result, the course is truly beneficial to a squad leader as well as a confidence builder for a squad's members.

The obstacle course is, and will continue to be, a project testing the diverse engineer skills and capabilities. And, it also appears the course will continue to test the users (soldiers) for years to come.

Steve Simpson

Pvt. 2 Jeffery Danger (front) and Pvt. Gregory Ignatowski of 72nd Eng. Co. (Combat) hoist themselves and a box of ammo up the last two feet of the rope climb.

Rangers

ing assets. USAF Close-air Support, Naval/Marine Gunfire and several elements of Army aviation all contributed to the success of the ranger missions.

One highlight of the deployment was an airmobile assault onto an enemy POW compound to rescue allied and American POWs. With Companies B and C conducting simultaneous raids and ambushes from blocking positions against enemy reaction forces, Co. A cleared the compound, secured the prisoners and extracted to a reception area.

Elements of the 96th Civil Affairs Battalion and the 8th Battalion, 4th Pyschological Operations Group of 1st Special Operations Command provided assistance in the reception, handling and intelligence gathering from the returned POWs.

After completion of the mission, the rangers were visited by Secretary of the Army John O. Marsh Jr. He was briefed on the operation after which he spoke to the soldiers of Co. A, reminding them that this year's Army theme is training. Not just at JRTC, but at all times, soldiers at all levels need to put forth effort and creativity to insure we have demanding and realistic training. Tough training will enhance professionalism, save lives and deter potential adversaries. He also reminded the rangers to thank their families for the support and understanding they provide and the hardships they endure as part of the Army Family.

The Joint Readiness Training Center at Fort Chaffee was established in 1987 to provide the Army's light forces (Light Infantry, Range, Airborne, Air Assault) with tough, realistic joint and combined arms and services training in accordance with airland battle doctrine. This is much the same as the National Training Center at Fort Irwin, Calif., for armored and mechanized forces.

Three other battalions from the light and airborne divisions preceded the ranger battalion rotation. JRTC includes force-on-force engagements against OPFOR units employing Soviet-style tactics.

MILES (Multiple Integrated Laser Engagement System) is used to replicate a battlefield environment complete with the high lethality of modern weapons for casualty and damage assessment. In this context forces are committed at both low and mid-intensity conflict levels. This often pits the infantryman against lightly armored and motorized forces which he must defeat to accomplish the mission.

In all respects JRTC is tough, demanding training in a realistic environment.

Voluntary private insurance available

Army News Service

Transitioning servicemembers and their eligible family members have access to a congressionally inspired program called "voluntary private insurance conversion."

Taking effect May 1, the new program offers all eligible persons the chance to buy, through voluntary payment, a specially designed "conversion policy." For example, said Doretha Robinson in the Army surgeon general's office, active-service members separating from the service have at least 30 days after their separation to buy a conversion policy. For former spouses, children coming of age and legal family members, a minimum of 90 days applies for sign-up, after they meet the rules on "qualifying events."

Robinson defined "conversion policy" as a comprehensive, private-pay health insurance policy that provides benefits similar to those available under the Civilian Health and Medical Program of the Uniformed Services.

She went on to explain that DoD policy requires that the conversion policy be made available without exception to all eligible persons and that it must cover pre-existing medical conditions (with a maximum of a one-year waiting period on such conditions). As for cost to the insured, the policy's premiums must be kept lower than those set for similar, private-individual insurance.

The DoD policy also requires that initial enrollment premiums cover no more than a 90-day period, and normal payments should cover no more than 30 day periods.

Emphasizing the extent of the program's private operation, Robinson said that after the military departments provide general information and verification documents to individuals or, in the case of separating members only, help in the initial enrollment and payment process, all payments and policy arrangements must be made between the purchasing person and the company offering the policy.

On the matter of eligibility, Robinson explained that persons are deemed eligible to purchase a conversion policy within 30 to 90 days of the date they lose their eligibility for uniformed-services health benefits; or are certified as minors under the legal responsibility of active-service or retired members. Such eligibles include the following:

- Members leaving active service (other than those separated for health conditions existing before service) and their family members who were covered by CHAMPUS.
- Spouses of members whose marriage ends in divorce, dissolution, or annulment after at least one year of marriage.
- Unmarried children of active-service, deceased, or retired members when such children lose their CHAMPUS eligibility upon reaching the age of 21 (23 if in school).
- Children who are legal wards, or pre-adoptive children, of active service or retired members or survivors.
- Dependent grandchildren living with active service or retired members or survivors.

The mechanics for the program's operation are spelled out in DoD Directive 6000.3, dated Jan. 5.

They begin with having the participating insurance companies supply all designated distribution centers with policy-explanation brochures, application forms and updated premium schedules. Besides that, servicemembers and their families are to be informed of the conversion policies' availability when they experience, or expect to experience, a change in benefit status. That informational presentation may occur at appropriate times during their active service, during separation processing or when visiting a personnel office, a separation office, an ID office, a health benefits advisor's office, a family service center, a clergy office or a legal office.

Robinson explained that as the program gains momentum, prospective enrollees may obtain detailed printed information on eligibility criteria and enrollment periods — along with explanations of procedures, benefits, costs, premium payment schedules and applications — from most of the locations cited above. To obtain the verifying documents that must be sent in with the application, interested persons should check with their local personnel services office or with an office of the Defense Eligibility Enrollment Reporting System.

Army continues testing civilians for drug use

Army News Service

Random drug testing of critical-job holders among the Army civilian population may resume, now that the Army has won a stay of a U.S. district court order prohibiting the testing. The stay, granted March 30 by the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit, had been requested by the Army pending the case's outcome during the requested appeal process, said Maj. Kevin Bond of the Army's litigation division at the Pentagon. Bond said the Army expects the stay to remain in effect until the appeal process runs its course on the constitutionality of randomly testing Army civilians for drug abuse. In the meantime, employees in, and applicants for, such critical job fields as aviation, security and law enforcement are once again subject to the random-testing policy, Bond said.

Credits cards useful if used carefully, wisely

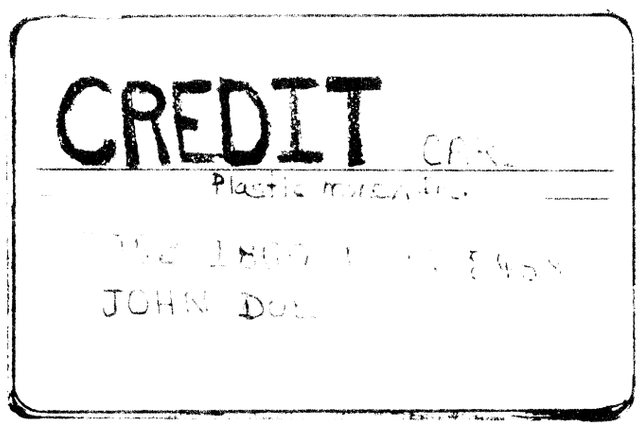
By Evelyn D. Harris
American Forces Information Service

"Now that Army, Navy, Air Force and Marine exchanges accept credit cards for most large purchases, it's easier for military families to shop when prices are low instead of only when cash is available," said Kathleen O'Beirne, DoD's family programs information coordinator.

When used wisely, credit can save money. And you'll be in a better position to use credit wisely if you research the various credit options available — choosing the kind that best meets your needs, said O'Beirne.

There are three general types of credit cards:

•Retail credit cards. Issued by specific store chains and oil companies, they require the customer to either pay in full once a month without interest or to pay a minimum monthly amount plus finance charges on the unpaid balance.



•Bank cards. Generally, Visa and MasterCard are accepted at exchanges and at numerous stores, restaurants and businesses. Like retail cards, there is a monthly finance charge on any unpaid balance. Many of these cards allow you to borrow money through a cash advance, which must be paid back with (usually high) interst. Many bank cards levy annual fees.

•Travel and entertainment cards. These come with an annual fee, and you must pay your monthly bill in full each month. American Express is an example. Some of these cards offer extra services such as accident insurance — but so do some bank cards.

O'Beirne suggested doing a little research before deciding which card or cards best suit your needs. Things to look for: amount of annul fee; effective annual percentage rate of interest; credit limit; and availability of emergency cash and personal check cashing (a real plus for military people who travel frequently).

You may want to start your research at your defense credit union. Navy Capt. Ward DeGroot, executive vice prsident of Navy Federal, the world's largest credit union, said, "We try to give our members a better deal than they can get elsewhere." Both Navy and Pentagon Federal credit unions are offering bank cards with no annual fee and relatively low interest. And since small defense credit unions tend to follow the lead of the large ones, they may also offer good deals.

Another advantage to military people of establishing a relationship with a defense credit union: Frequent moves won't be held against you when you apply for credit — they might if you're dealing with a civilian institution.

No matter which cards you choose, O'Beirne said you should read the credit contract carefully — and get advice from your post legal officer if you don't understand it completely.

"Credit cards provide some significant advantages when used wisely," said O'Beirne. "For example, you usually have 30 days to pay once your account is billed. If you pay your bill in full toward the end of that period, you essentially have an interest-free loan.

"Credit cards can give you added consumer protection," said O'Beirne. The Fair Credit Billing Act gives you the right to refuse to pay for services or products that are defective or were not delivered.

But to protect your rights when you are billed incorrectly, you must do the following: notify your credit card company within 60 days after you get the bill; give your name and account number; and explain how much you think the error is and why there is one.

When the compny gets your letter, it must investigate your claim and cannot bill you for the item until its investigation is complete.

If your complaint is about poor quality goods or services, O'Beirne suggested first writing to the merchant (keep a copy of the letter). If that doesn't work, you can contact the credit card company and ask to have the charge reversed. However, you can only do this if the item cost $50 or more and if the sale took place within your state or within 100 miles of your home.

Credit cards can also save time. You can make purchases by phone and receive mercandise or tickets without having to wait for a check to clear.

Finally, credit card receipts are useful for tax and insurance records. Save receipts to document deductible expenses and to establish the purchase price of expensive items should they be damaged or stolen.

According to O'Beirne, most disadvantages of credit cards flow from using them unwisely or carelessly. Guard your credit cards carefully. After you've checked your statements against your receipts, save only the receipts you need for taxes and insurance. If you receive credit cards you don't want, cut them up.

Pay attention to your credit card statements. Careless mistakes can be costly. Some card issuers add new purchases to the balance on which you must pay interest. For example, if you didn't pay all of your June charges, purchases made in July could be added to the total, requiring you to pay interest on these as well. One customer accidentally underpaid her balance by 10 cents. The following month she purchased plane tickets and a new refrigerator using the card — and had to pay interest on them as well.

Although credit cards can be a boon, remember they aren't "free money." Use them only for purchases you know you can pay for in a reasonable amount of time.

And, said C.V. Toulme, president of the Defense Credit Union Council in Washington, D.C., "If you think you're headed for trouble, go see the financial advisers at your defense credit union or installation — before you're facing bankruptcy. A good credit rating is a valuable asset — don't lose it."

Women and Credit

Women should establish credit in their own name if their income meets the requirements said Kathleen O'Beirne, DoD's family programs information coordinator. If not, married women may request that credit accounts report the history in both their names — John and Jane Doe, not Mr. and Mrs. John Doe. Military widows have had painful experiences trying to obtain credit on their own when all previous family credit history was in their husband's name alone.

Army seeks good linguists

Army News Service

The Army needs linguists. To be more specific, the Army needs good linguists in specific military occupational specialties.

According to Phyllis Cates of the Total Army Personnel Agency's Language Management Branch, the MOSs involved are mostly within Career Management Fields 96 (Military Intelligence) and 98 (Electronic Warfare/Cryptologic Operations). Most of the languages needed are difficult ones, such as Korean, Arabic, Russian and Persian.

"We have shortages in these areas that have been caused in part by the length and difficulty of the training," Cates explained. "The language training runs from 25 to 63 weeks and is taught in Monterey, Calif. It is followed by eight to 25 weeks of MOS training at one of three locations in Texas, Arizona or Massachusetts."

There are several benefits for soldiers in the linguist field. They can earn as many as 25 semester hours of college credit, depending on the language and MOS they learn.

"Selective Reenlistment Bonuses apply to almost all soldiers in this field," Cates said. "Linguists also learn skills that may be very useful in the civilian sector."

To qualify for classification into one of these MOSs, a soldier must:

Be a U.S. citizen; be a high school graduate; have a Skill Technical (ST) score of 95 or higher; and qualify for a top secret security clearance with sensitive compartmented information access.

Interested soldiers who meet the qualifications should contact their installation career counselors or personnel service centers for assistance.

U.S. Army Reserve looks for officers for a special DA personnel program

Army News Service

The U.S. Army Reserve is seeking officers to enter a program to develop a mobilization pool of politico-military regional area specialists.

Officers selected will enter a special Department of the Army personnel program, authorized under AR 135-11, that can award them the "reserve component foreign area officer specialty."

Individual mobilization augmentation positions for the program's registrants typically are found in Department of the Army staff agencies, at U.S. embassies, and in joint, unified and specified commands.

Applicants for the program must be in the rank of captain or above; possess a graduate degree in a related discipline; possess a foreign-language ability or show aptitude to acquire a foreign language; have at least eight years of commissioned service; have at least six years remaining before mandatory removal; and have completed the appropriate level of branch qualification and military education for their rank.

Officials at the U.S. Army Reserve Personnel Center in St. Louis say that the program's training consists of the Foreign Area Officer Reserve Components Non-resident/Resident Course. This six-phase series of research projects, additional written preparations, and oral presentations covers 570 credit hours. The course's last phase, a 2-week active-duty-for-training assignment, takes place at Fort Bragg, N.C.

Language training occurs upon the initiative of the program participant, and is not included in the course. Limited overseas training may be available as well, officials add.

Questions about the program may be directed to: Commander, ARPERCEN, ATTN: DARP-OPD-CA-FAO, 9700 Page Blvd., St. Louis, MO 63132-5200; or call 1-800-873-3765; from Missouri, call collect 314-263-7826.

Chaplain brings God's word to field

By David R. Penland
36th Engineer Group correspondent

Ministry to soldiers in a tactical or field environment is a central part of a chaplain's role in the military. Now don't get me wrong — I enjoyed the covered dish dinners, the United Methodist Youth Fellowship and the Sunday evening hymnsings at the first church I pastored in Etowah, N.C.

I still relish those kinds of activities as a pastor serving a military community. But, there's something special about sharing God's word and fellowship with a group of soldiers in the field, be it the arid desert of Fort Irwin at the National Training Center, or the more moist atmosphere of a Fort Benning field problem.

Sharing communion with weary soldiers and coaxing them to lift their voices in singing, "Stand Up, Stand Up for Jesus", these are the times that linger most in my heart add mind as God's servant to soldiers.

I can't count the number of times I've driven out to a prearranged grid coordinate and all of a sudden a dozen armored personnel carriers would rattle up, drop their troop ramps and disgorge a bunch of camouflaged, mud-caked, equipment-laden soldiers who have come to offer praise, find some peace with their maker and to gather spiritual strength for the days ahead.

Of course, there are always those after the service who might never have darkened the doors of the chapel, who will quietly come up to you and say, 'Chaplain, I need to talk' or 'Pastor, will you pray with me for a few moments.'

Yes, that little church in the hills of western North Carolina has found a place in my heart, but I've never been sorry that my Lord called me to serve soldiers.

Holocaust memorial set for today

By Jo Ann Stamey
USAIC Chaplain's Office

On September 1, 1939, Hitler's Army initiated World War II by invading Poland. By the end of 1942, the Nazis, with their Axis partner Italy and its satellites in Central and Southeast Europe, had tyrannized the European continent from the Atlantic Wall to the Volga and from the Norwegian Arctic to the Mediterranean.

German military might was reinforced by the dreaded SS, the secret police, and armed security forces of the Nazi party whose record of cruelty, terror and murder made its name synonymous with evil.

Over 35 million people (more than half of them civilians) were killed, far surpassing the losses of any previous war. Of the civilian deaths, more than 11 million were non-combat fatalities, of whom six million were Jews who were singularly targeted for total annihilation. Five million others individually fell victim to Nazi hatred.

It is these 11 million for whom we still grieve, and to whom we pledge our commitment to the dignity of life and the preservation of the human spirit.

Today, Fort Benning will hold its third annual Holocaust Memorial Service at 4 p.m. in Marshall Auditorium (building 4), in memory of the 11 million non-combat victims of the Nazi Holocaust.

Alex Gross, the guest speaker currently residing in Atlanta, is a survivor of both Auschwitz and Buchenwald, having been first imprisoned at the age of 14.

His message, although similar to novel prize winning author, Elie Weisel, with whom Gross was imprisoned, is highly personal. Themes of patriotism (he spent three years in the American Army after the war) and the universality of the Holocaust tragedy constantly color his remarks.

The public is invited to attend the service.

Many look for material proof of God's existance

By Steven Paschall
1st ITB Chaplain

Have your overheard folks talking lately about things they would like to do if only they weren't so busy? Chances are the busy things had to do with tangible obligations and the things they would like to do, had to do with frivolous things like relationships.

We march to the drum beat of daily demands until we are addicted to the narcotic of what eveyone describes as "success." In the book of Ecclesiastes, chapter 2, verse 17, and following, we witness the struggle for success. "All of it is meaningless, a chasing after the wind."

No, there is nothing wrong with our labors until we loose a balance or perhaps an understanding of the intangibles. I captured the essence of this imbalance some years ago when I visited relatives in East Berlin.

The communist system had stressed physical realities to the point that there was no room for metaphysicalones. There, I understood for the first time that communism is not merely a political system but rather, a religion of the material.

Jesus struggled with the spiritual blindness of people in His day as well. Even the religious leaders were looking for the material proof of God's presence in Jesus' ministry. Nicodemus, a leader of the Jewish ruling council, visited Jesus with these remarks (John 3:2): "Rabbi, we know you are a teacher who has come from God. For no one could perform the miraculous signs you are doing if God were not with him."

Jesus' reply was simple: "I tell you the truth, no one can see the kingdom of God unless he is born again." Another translation of that phrase, "born from above," may also be appropriate.

In any case, we are directed to the reality that we must go through some spiritual regeneration before we can understand the rule of God in our lives. Without this regeneration, we float along in life out of contact with the spiritual power that created us and the world we live in.

Sure, it's easy to ignore if we develop an overwhelming reliance on the tangible. But we are reminded daily of our mortal vulnerabilities. Jesus speaks quite clearly of the situation: "Flesh gives birth to flesh, but spirit gives birth to spirit." We can ignore the eternal aspect of life only so long, and we face the reality; "He has also set eternity in the hearts of men" (Ecclesiastes 3:11).

Spring is an excellent time to reflect on the creative power that regenerates the earth around us. It's time to put away our overwhelming reliance on the tangible and contemplate our reliance on God. How about you, when were you born into a relationship with the living God?

ASK THE JUDGE

Ollie M. Mick
Legal Assistance Office

Q: My wife and I would like to file for a divorce. What do I need to know in order to file in Georgia?

A. To obtain a divorce in the state of Georgia, you must meet the minimum residency requirements. This means that you must have lived in Georgia for 6 months, if living off post, or for 1 year, if living on post. This period of residency must occur immediately prior to the filing of divorce decree. Once you meet the residency requirement, you will need to hire a civilian attorney to handle the divorce. A petition for dissolution will be filed with the local courts, and a copy will be served on the other spouse. Georgia is a "no fault" divorce state and will permit a divorce on the basis of an irretrievably broken marriage. Other grounds, such as adultery and desertion, still exist, but are seldom used. You will want to discuss with the attorney which grounds are most appropriate in your case.

If you are not certain that a divorce is necessary, but would like to obtain a separation, you should make an appointment to see a legal assistance attorney. A voluntary separation agreement can be prepared if you and your wife can agree on major issues, such as child custody, child support, alimony and a basic property settlement. Persons who are separated are still married, however, and will eventually need to file a petition with the court in order to obtain a valid divorce. A voluntary separation does not automatically become a divorce after a number of years.

President Reagan designated this week to recognize and promote the vital role of consumers in our free competitive enterprise system and to highlight consumer activities and programs. The theme for this year's observance is "Consumers Buy Services."

Last year, more than 500 organizations took part in National Consumer Week activities reaching out to more than 100 million consumers.

"I encourage schools, community organizations, labor unions, businesses, the media and consumers to help further public awareness of consumer issues and services," Reagan said.

ACS is striving to further that public awareness of consumer issues and services by hosting these workshops for the people of Fort Benning.

Fraud: Soldiers risk careers for cab fares

By Tom Joyce
American Forces Information Service

Is an entire career worth the price of a 15-mile cab ride?

Some military personnel apparently think so. After a permanent change of station or temporary duty tavel, they decide to ask to be reimbursed for expenses they never incurred. It might be only a few extra bucks, but fraud is fraud.

Travel voucher fraud, while not rampant, still occurs throughout the Department of Defense. During fiscal 1987, DoD spent almost $3.4 billion in permanent change of station and temporary duty travel costs. And of the thousands who traveled, some couldn't pass up the chance to pocket a few extra dollars. For example:

•An Airman on a permanent change of station from the United States to Japan files a travel voucher stating he drove his personal car during his travel in the United States. He is reimbursed for mileage and paid a per diem of $344 for seven days of travel time.

An investigatin shows the airman actually traveled by commercial air in the United States. He is ordered to repay $181.20, is charged four days leave and receives an Article 15.

•A captain on temporary duty to the United States claims use of a rental car and is reimbursed $120.50. He is suspected of using the rental car for recreational purposes. An investigation supports the allegation, and the captain is found guilty of filing a fraudulent travel voucher. The captain repays the money, pays a $2,000 fine and receives a letter of reprimand.

Col. Patrick Malvase is director of the Air Force District of Washington Accounting and Finance Office, Boling Air Force Base, Washington, D.C. His staff of 20 clerks computes more than 600 travel vouchers a day. Clients include the secretary of defense as well as recently arrived service members. He acknowledges that the first line of defense in travel voucher fraud in finance offices around the world is the clerks.

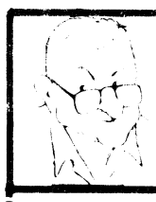
"They are all very bright," he said. "Over time, they develop data banks in their head which they use to spot fraud. For example, after filing 5,000 vouchers from Washington, they know how much it should cost for cab fare from National Airport to Mount Vernon, Va. But we'll occasionally still see someone try to claim more than they should." Seasoned veterans in other cities have similar data banks.

DoD has done what it can to make the travel voucher process more efficient. Currently, only reimbursable expenses of $25 or more require receipts.

Later in fiscal 1988, military personnel should begin filing travel vouchers based on the Lodgings Plus system. This system, currently being used by service and DoD civilians, estalishes firm per diem rates for each part of the country and requires receipts for lodging costs.

If the per diem rate is $65 a day, that means the traveler will be reimbursed no more than $65 for each day's stay in the area. Should travelers decide to pay more for meals and lodging, it is on their expense. If they can eat cheaper, it is to their advantage.

"The travel voucher process works on the honor system," said Malvaso. "Over the years, DoD has tried to simplify the process as much as possible. Moving to Lodgings Plus for military folks will place all personnel on an equitable system. However, I anticipate there will be more opportunity to fudge the figures."



Malvaso strongly encourages anyone debating the idea of picking up a few bucks to reconsider. "First, unit financial managers review all travel vouchers. And finance clerks have heard and seen everything. If it looks out of place, they will catch it."

Secondly, said Malvaso, fraudulent travel vouchers can be detrimental to a career. "Officers know that if they get caught with a fraudulent voucher, it's the end of their career," he said. "Enlisted personnel can expect to be punished under the Uniform Code of Military Justice.

"In either case, commanders will know you can't be trusted as a person. And that is very important. Once the trust is violated, it's all over."

4,000 show up for OWC Festival of Running

Tom Fix

A young girls runs the mile under the watchful eye of her father.

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

Nearly 4,000 runners competed here last weekend in the annual Officers Wives' Club Festival of Running.

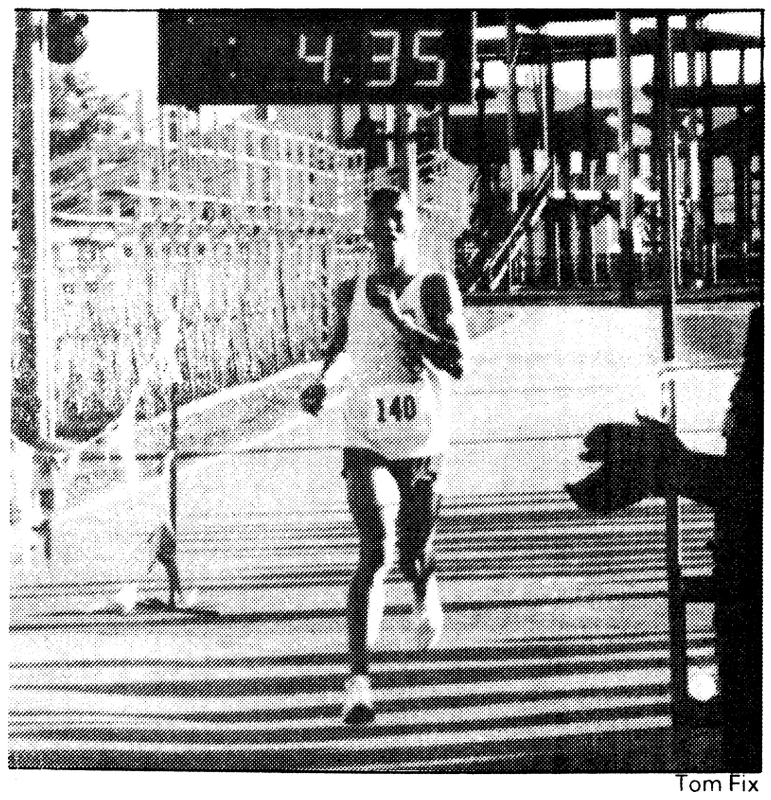
It truly was a festival, with two bands playing, and demonstrations by both the Command Exhibition Parachuting Team, the Silver Wings, and aerobics instructor, Maria Ratio.

People ranging from 2 to 77 years old participated in a variety of events included in the festival. Among the events were the 3- and 5-mile walks, the 1-, 3- and 5-mile runs and for youngsters, the 1/4- and 1/2-mile runs.

Brad Sievers, 19, outran the competition in the men's 1-mile with a time of 4:35, which was 21 seconds faster than any of his competitors.

The female overall winner Kathy Ferguson, 22, crossed the finish line with a time of 6:31.

Overall female winner in the 3-mile race was Jennifer Simpson, 14, who crossed the finish line with a time of 20:58. The men's results are unavailable at this time and will be run at a later date.



Top finishers in the 5-mile race were Des Proctor, 20, 25:50 in the male category and Colleen Forshee, 24, 32:45 for the females.

In the unit races, Company D, 4th Battalion, 30th Infantry Regiment captured the Commanding General's Trophy in the 3-mile race while Company E, 3rd Battalion, 32nd Infantry took the trophy in the 5-mile race.

In the team race for the 5-mile, male category, Team #11 took first place while Team #2 won the race in the female category.

Individuals who have not picked up their awards may do so at the OWC office. People who have T-shirts on order may also pick them up at the office next Friday. Both are urged to call before going to the office.

For more, see page B-5.

New auto ripoff drives into town

Better Business Bureau

There's a new scheme that's driven into town. It's called an "auto equity promotion."

Auto equity promoters advertise relief for car owners who can't keep up with their payments. The promoter takes the car and promises to continue sending payments to the lending institution.

He then sells or leases the car to a third party, usually to someone who can't buy a car on his own because of poor credit.

The car remains in the name of the original owner, tricking the lending institution into thinking the original owner still has the car and is making the payments. In this way, the original owner hopes to protect his credit record.

However, the scheme can fall apart if the third party, who usually sends the payments to the promoter, can no longer afford the car, or, the promoter may not pay the lender, but instead just pocket the money.

Since the car is still titled to the original owner, he is still responsible for the payments. The owner has lost his car and damaged his credit as well. Also, the third party gets nothing for the payments he has made.

In most states, auto equity promotions are illegal unless the owner has the written permission of the lending institution.

Some states are drafting laws which would upgrade the offense from a misdemeanor to a felony.

So don't be tempted by advertisements that promise to rescue you from car payments or bad credit. Watch out for ads that read "Auto payments too high? We assume," or "Credit problems? Get instant credit approval and drive away today."

If you're having trouble making payments, contact the lender to explain the situation and try to work out a repayment schedule.

If you have an inquiry or complaint about auto equity promotions, contact your Better Business Bureau or your local consumer protection office.

School Board elections to be held May 17

By Beth Middlemiss
Fort Benning Schools

Parents of the children attending Fort Benning Schools set the direction for their children's schools through an elected school board.

A 10-member board, elected by parents of children attending the schools, meets monthly to set district policy and provide general direction to the system. Members are elected for two-year terms, with each of the eight schools having a representative on the board. In addition to the eight elected school representatives, the board includes an elected president and chaplain. Member's terms are staggered so that the board will include experienced board members each year.

School board elections will be held this spring on May 17. Board seats up for election for two-year terms are the representatives from the McBride, Patch, Wilbur and Wilson schools and the at large president and chaplain seats. A vacancy for a representative from the White School will be for one year due to an unexpired term.

To be eligible to run as a candidate representing a school, an individual must be the parent or guardian of a child enrolled in the school at the time the candidate is elected to the board and must not be an employee or related to any school system employee.

Those interested in running for election should contact the school principal of the school for which they wish to run or the assistant superintendent for logistics, Richard Skinner, 545-2950.

The board meets on the last Monday of each month at 11 a.m. in the administrative conference room of the School Administrative Building on Running Avenue. The board considers school policies, approves the budget, approves curriculum changes and functions in much the same way as do school boards in civilian communities.

Post schools for post children

Beth Middlemiss
Fort Benning Schools

Soldiers who purchase a home in town and move off post must also move their children to off-post schools in most cases, according to Fort Benning Schools' superintendent, Rolla W. Baumgartner.

"As much as we would like to allow children to finish the school year when they move off post, the law simply does not permit us to do so," he noted. He cited Public Law 874 under which the schools operate as limiting attendance to children living on post.

The DOD directive covering the operation of the Fort Benning Schools permits off-post children to attend the on-post schools in only two situations: (1) If a newly arrived family is waiting for on-post quarters and has evidence that they will move into quarters within 90 days, they may enroll children in the on-post schools; (2) Ffamilies leaving post may leave their children in the on-post school for the remainder of the school year if the move off post results from either the transfer or retirement of the sponsor and if the children will be residing in an adjacent community with a parent or legal guardian or another person acting in loco-parentis.

There is no provision for any exceptions to the post residency requirement other than the situations noted above.

The school system receives many requests for exception each year, many based on hardship, but the system has no authority to grant exceptions. Families with elementary school children planning to purchase and move into homes off post should be aware of the probable requirement to change schools.

Fort's watering policy saves energy and water

By Becky Ray
Energy Management Branch

To visitors of Fort Benning, one of the post's most beautiful assets is its green, well-manicured lawns and roadsides.

The post is known for the pleasant, down-south atmosphere created by abundant mimosas, azaleas magnolias and dogwoods.

These lawns and gardens require a great deal of care and maintenance, including sufficient water to keep them healthy and lush.

Watering too frequently, however, can damage plants and grass and is also a waste of water. Most of the time, rainfall is enough to keep lawns green. During dry periods, lawns should be watered only enough to keep grass and plants healthy until the next rain.

Fort Benning has established a new policy for watering lawns in family housing areas. Watering is only authorized on Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays from 5 p.m. until midnight.

The reason for this restriction is the large energy and chemical costs used in treating, processing and pumping the water to make it safe and available to post occupants.

In 1986, for example, Fort Benning spent $2,982,050 for water treatment. Daily usage averaged about 8.6 million gallons per day.

In 1987, operational changes and cooperation from post residents brought the average down to about 6.9 million gallons per day. However, at a cost of 95 cents per thousand gallons, the post still spent huge sums for water treatment.

Water used on post is supplied by Upatoi Creek and is treated at the Fort Benning Water Treatment Facility.

The plant has a capacity of 18 million gallons per day.

Demand in winter months is generally around 6 million gallons per day. In the summer months, lawn watering and car washing more than doubles this average.

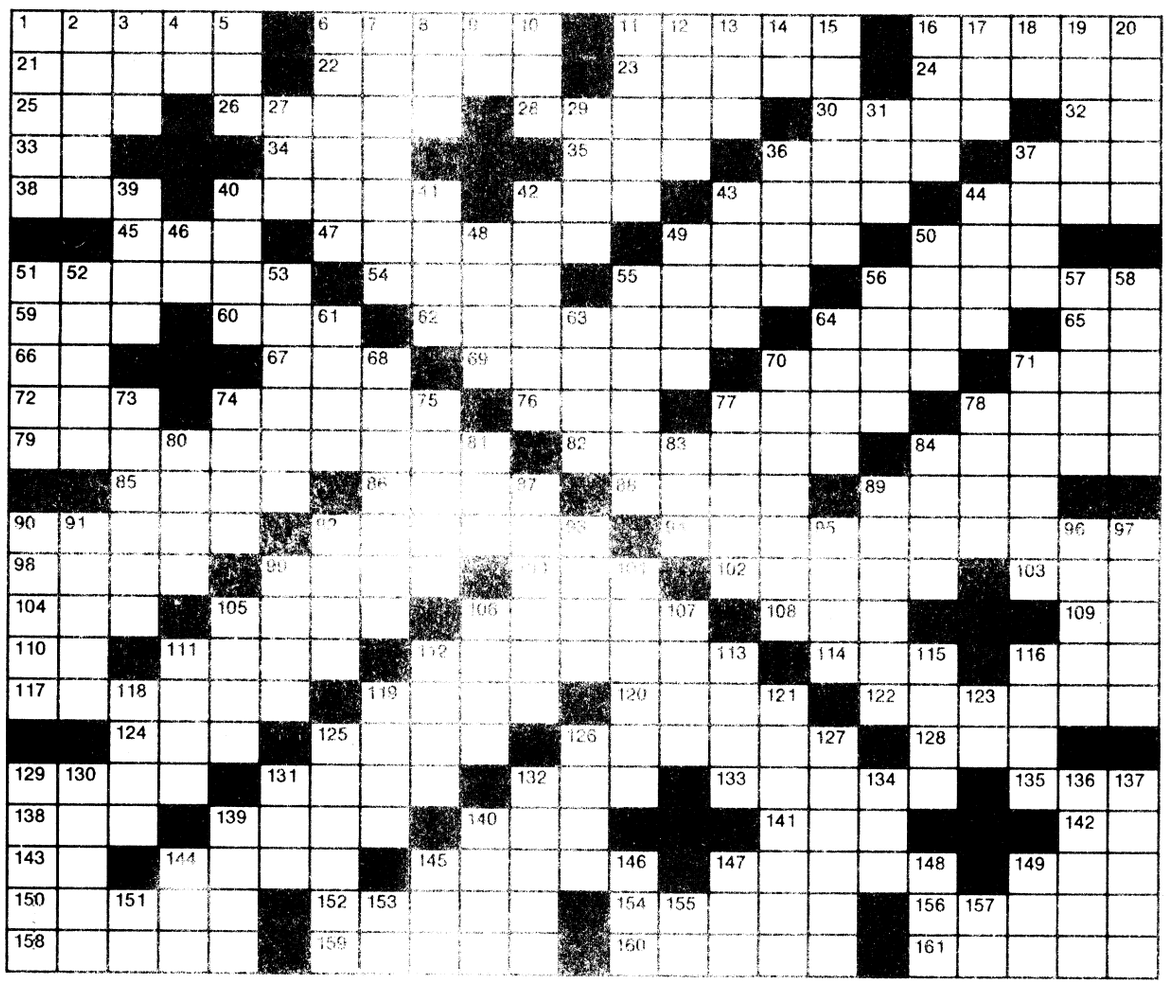
Obviously, Fort Benning can save hundreds of thousands of dollars every year in energy and chemical costs by conserving water, especially in summer months.

The burden to conserve is not placed on users alone, however. Mike Patton, foreman of the Water Treatment Facility, was recently faced with sharp operating budget cuts. With assistance from plant personnel, Patton devised and implemented a plan to reduce the pressure on the water distribution system and lower the operating levels of water in storage tanks.

The reduced pressure means that water can be distributed using fewer pumps — one or two pumps operate rather than three or four as in the past.

Water loss through leakage was also reduced, as is the risk of ruptured pipes.

The reduced frequency of pump start-ups, due to lower levels in storage tanks, causes less wear and tear on the pumps.



These improvements have saved from $2,500 to $3,000 per month in operating expenses, over last year's costs, with no adverse effect on the quality of the water being produced.

Although Patton received a Project Spirit Award for his work, he gives equal credit to the Water Treatment Plant crew.

Fort Benning cannot rest on past water conservation successes. Conservation, to the degree that it is now needed, requires changes in perception, attitudes and habits.

'DARE' educates students about drugs

By Evelyn D. Harris
American Forces Information Service

April, the Month of the Military Child, is a good time to focus on what the Department of Defense Dependents Schools is doing to help military kids stay drug free.

According to Frank Gallivan, DoDDS drug education coordinator, drug education has to start as early as possible. To this end, DoDDS is testing an elementary school program called DARE — for Drug Abuse Resistance Education.

Initiated by the Los Angeles Police Department, DARE involves police officers teaching drug abuse resistance techniques to students. Los Angeles police officers trained selected military police and security police to give the classes to DoDDS students. The department selected the military instructors based on their interest in children, work with youth and knowledge about drugs. The Los Angeles officers traveled overseas to teach the two-week course on-site.

DARE is directed toward fifth and sixth graders, but children in kindergarten through fourth grade also will hear some DARE talks from the police.

The pilot program involves 13 DoDDS schools in West Germany; the program may expand to other schools in the system next year. Section 6 schools, DoD-run stateside schools on military installations, also are piloting a similar DARE program at three schools, with an eye toward future expansion.

The students in the DARE program receive 17 lessons, starting with a class on personal safety and the role of police. Other lessons include information on the harmful physical and mental effects of drug abuse; role-play in how to say "no" under pressure; ways to build self-esteem; managing stress without drugs; and decision-making skills.

In addition to the DARE pilot program, DoDDS already has two drug abuse prevention programs in place, which are taught by specially trained teachers. The school system is purchasing new health textbooks for students from kindergarten through 12th grade that include in-depth units on drugs. Finally, parents will be provided with education and counseling programs, and a hotline will be available to ensure immediate care for drug abuse.

Inhalant abuse by teenagers on the rise

By Evelyn D. Harris
American Forces Information Service

Not all drugs abused by children and teenagers are illegal — nor are they even drugs when used as intended.

A recent survey of drug abuse among teenagers showed that inhalants are the only substances that more teen-agers reported abusing in 1987 than in 1982.

The survey included high school seniors in Department of Defense Dependents Schools and in stateside public and private schools.

Popular inhalants include toluene (used in paint mixtures), nitrous oxide (used to foam whipped cream in cans), butyl nitrites, gasoline and glue.

Sniffing these substances produces a "high" that can last anywhere from a few seconds to a few hours. Common reactions include drowsiness, headache and nausea.

Sniffing inhalants displaces oxygen in the lungs — and could lead to sudden death from suffocation. Death could also result if the central nervous system is slowed so much that breathing stops.

Large doses can cause the heart to stop because of insufficient oxygen to circulate the blood, or inhalants can cause nausea, leading to death from choking if the person is unconscious when vomiting occurs.

According to the National Institute on Drug Abuse, long-term inhalants abusers can permanently reduce physical and mental capabilities and cause damage to liver, kidneys and blood.

Young people between the ages of 7 and 17 are more likely to abuse inhalants, in part because they are readily available and inexpensive.

Columbus College to increase financial assistance

Columbus College

Columbus College will be able to provide up to 77 additional student financial aid awards during the 1988-89 academic year after receiving official notification of an 18 percent increase in campus-based financial assistance programs from the U.S. Department of Education.

"Campus-based financial assistance programs include work-study, Perkins loans, and Supplemental Educational Opportunity Grants," said Clark Aldridge, director of the college's financial aid office.

In addition to the campus-based aid programs, students can apply for assistance from other federal and state programs, including Pell Grants, Guaranteed Student Loans, Parents Loans for Undergraduate Students, Supplemental Loans for Students and Student Incentive Grants.

"Last year, over 1,600 students received in excess of $2,650,000 in financial aid from all available programs to attend Columbus College," said Aldridge.

Students interested in applying for financial aid should contact the Financial Aid Office at least two months prior to registration.

For more information, contact the Columbus College Financial Aid Office at 568-2036.

Swedish NETT team trains soldiers here

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

A Swedish New Equipment Training Team (NETT) was here recently to educate 39 10th Mountain soldiers on the operation and employment of the BOFORS BILL.

The BILL is made in Sweden, and the U.S. Army is considering purchasing it for use in select light infantry and airborne units.

The Swedish team was chosen because Sweden manufactures the weapon and their soldiers were best able to train the mountain men.

According to Capt. D. B. Esplin, Heavy Weapons Test Division, Infantry Board, the weapon is one of the two being considered by the Army as a supplementary interim medium antitank system. The other weapon being considered is the MILAN, which has already been subjected to a battery of operational tests.

Both weapons are designed to be easily operated, man portable anti-tank weapons, which can be deployed in various tactical positions against all kinds of targets.

Esplin said the 10th Mountain soldiers were selected because they are light infantry soldiers who would probably be using the weapon if the Army purchases it.

The men are currently conducting live-fire tests with the BILL. After the results are in from this test the Army will make a decision on which weapon they will purchase if any.

Maj. Ulf Eriksson, a member of the Swedish Nett Team, praised the soldiers testing the weapon. "American soldiers are very professional," he said. "I find them very much the same as our soldiers except that Swedish soldiers are drafted into the system, they don't volunteer."

He said he was very impressed with Fort Benning and Georgia.

Eriksson added that he would like to see the Swedish army purchase some of the weapons currently in the U.S. Army's arsenal.

"I think the Bradley Fighting Vehicle and the M-113 would be a nice additions to our force," he said. "We could really use that armor protection for our soldiers."

10th Mountain soldier, PFC Wesley Bonham found that training with the NETT members has been an experience he won't soon forget. He said he found them to be very knowledgeable about the the BILL and were very willing to assist soldiers with the weapon and any problems he encountered.

The remaining members of the Swedish NETT team are Majs. Bjorn Kall and Olaf Edjeblad, and Capt. Sven Rylander.

SP4 Darrell Beasley, 10th Mountain Division, bounds up an incline demonstrating how mobile the weapon is.

POW Medals now ready for issued to former POWs

Army News Service

The Prisoner of War Medal, recently authorized by Congress, is now available for issue to former prisoners of war, as announced by the Secretary of Defense.

The medal will be issued at no cost to any person who was taken prisoner of war and held captive after April 5, 1917. Defense records indicate about 142,000 service members qualify, for action during World War I, World War II, Korea and Vietnam.

Former prisoners of war, or their next of kin, may apply for the medal by writing to the military records center of the service they were part of during their imprisonment.

Application forms are available from the military services or a variety of veterans organizations and other public service agencies.

A toll-free number, 1-800-873-3768, has been established to take requests for application forms and provide information about the medal.

Requests for the medal must include basic personal information so the records center can verify the applicant's former POW status and character of service while imprisoned.

Information provided should include full name, service number, Social Security number, VA claim number, date and place of birth, branch of Service, unit of assignment when captured, and dates of confinement and release as a POW. A personal letter containing the necessary information will also be accepted from those applicants who do not use the official form.

To qualify, an individual must have been taken prisoner during an armed conflict, i.e., World War I, World War II, Korea or Vietnam and must have rendered honorable service during the period of captivity.

The medal may be awarded posthumously to the legal next of kin. However, the next of kin of those who are listed as missing in action, but for whom there is no evidence of captivity as a POW, are not eligible.

The law creating the medal indicates it may be awarded to anyone who ". . . was taken prisoner and held captive while engaged in an action against an enemy of the United States, while engaged in military operations involving conflict with an opposing foreign force, or while serving with friendly forces engaged in an armed conflict against an opposing armed force in which the United States is not a belligerent party."

In addition to writing directly to their military records center, applicants may submit their requests through a third party, such as a veterans organization or public official, who will agree to receive the medal and present it to the requester.

Description of the POW Medal:

The front of the circular medal features a golden eagle standing with its wings outspread against a lighter gold background, ringed by barbed wire and bayonet points. Although symbolically imprisoned, the American eagle is alert to regain freedom, the hope that upholds the prisoner's spirit.

Awardees, at their own expense, may have the medal inscribed with their name.

The ribbon for the medal is tri-colored with a black bar running vertically through the center, bordered by alternating vertical white, dark blue, white and red stripes.

The Public Law establishing the POW Medal specifies that it will be displayed immediately following decorations awarded for individual heroism, meritorious achievement, or meritorious service, and before any other service medal, campaign medal or service ribbon authorized to be displayed. As such, the POW medal will be placed ahead of the Good Conduct Medal in the order of precedence.

Written requests for issue of the medal or determination of eligibility should be addressed to:

Former Army prisoners of war - U.S. Army Reserve Personnel Center, ATTN: DARP-PAS-EAW, 9700 Page Boulevard, St. Louis, MO 63132-5200.

Former Navy, Marine Corps and Coast Guard prisoners of war - U.S. Navy Liaison Office, National Personnel Records Center, 9700 Page Boulevard, St. Louis, MO 63132-5199.

Former Air Force (including former Army Air Corps) prisoners of war - Air Force Reference Branch, National Personnel Records Center, 9700 Page Boulevard, St. Louis, MO 63132-5199.

The DD Form 2510, FEB 88, Prisoner of War (POW) Medal Application/Information, is used to process applications.

There's help in battle of the bulge

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

If you're battling the bulge and you need someone to help you combat that fat, Maria Ratio is just the person you need to see.

She is an aerobics instructor with the Fort Benning Officer's Club and she makes fighting fat fun.

Standing just 5-feet, 1-inch tall this little powerhouse puts the Fort Benning Community men and women through their paces during the 13 aerobic classes she conducts weekly.

Maria started teaching aerobics five years ago at Fort Lewis, Wash. after being an active attendee in another class.

"I have always been athletic," she said. "And I've been active in dance and gymnastics, so, after attending classes for a while, I ended up substituting for my instructor when she needed help.

Ratio discovered she really enjoyed teaching and when a position opened at the fitness center where she was doing aerobics she applied for it and got the job.

That's were her aerobics career began and that's what she's been doing ever since.

Fun is top priority in all of Maria's classes. "If you don't have fun," Ratio said, "working out becomes a chore and many people tend to lose interest."

"I try to keep my classes interesting by varying the routine everyday and using a variety of music." she said. "I feel music is one the most important things because if a person likes the tune they are listening to they tend to forget about straining themselves."

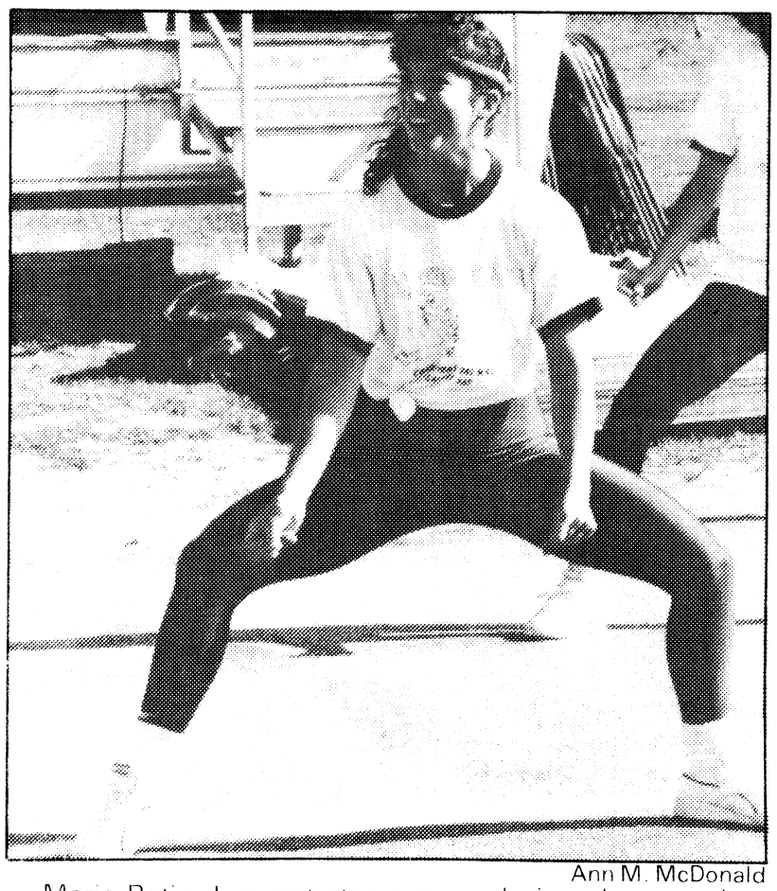
Ratio said she does all of her own choreography and does accept input from students to keep them excited and feeling like they are a part of her class.

The comments about Maria's classes vary but all of her students agree that Maria is one of the best instructors they have ever had.

"She really makes you feel welcome and a part of her class," Stacy Barnes and active member of Maria's lunchtime class said. "She also takes requests for working on different body areas which I think adds to the class."

Beryl Robertson another member of the lunchtime class said, "I like going to her class so much that when I have to miss one it drives me nuts."

"Exercising with her is fun," Robertson said. "The lunchtime group is kind of like a family."



That attitude is what Maria strives for. "I really enjoy being around people and seeing them get into shape," she said. "When I hear a remark like "I can fit into my favorite pair of jeans again," or "My husband noticed I'm firming up," I feel good inside."

Although women are the mainstay of most of her classes there are a lot of regular male attendees.

"I have a lot of men come to my classes to prepare for Ranger School," she said. "And there are some that come on a regular basis just to keep in shape."

Ratio said she mainly teaches men at their physical training sessions. At least once a week she can be seen at various sites on post giving aerobics instruction to rangers, basic trainees or members of the Infantry Officers Basic Course as well as various other units.

"I really enjoy teaching those classes," she said. "Because it gives me a chance to show the men that aerobics are effective for men as well."

Ann M. McDonald

Maria Ratio demonstrates a move designed to tone leg muscles.

Maria said the units usually ask her back again after they have done PT with her once. That in itself proves she has swayed the mens opinion of aerobics.

Another bonus in Maria's class is that she speaks Spanish which opens doors to the School of Americas community as well.

Maria is certified by two different aerobics associations and attends conventions and seminars on a regular basis to keep current on every aspect of aerobics.

Ratio invites everyone to attend her class once at no charge.

She has four separate groups she teaches weekly. The lunchtime class from 12:10 - 12:40 p.m., Monday - Friday at the Officers Club Fitness Center designed especially for people who have just one hour for lunch.

The other classes are conducted at the Officers Wives' Club are on Tuesday and Thursday from 9 - 10 a.m., and a class conducted on Monday, Wednesday and Friday from 10 - 11 a.m. or 6 - 7 p.m.

Each set of classes is $12 with the exception of the Tuesday and Thursday class, which is $10.

Maria is also available to units for PT sessions.

For more information, call 687-2616 and come join the war against fat.

58th Inf. wins FORSCOM trophy in OWC Run

By Kevin J. Howerton
197th Infantry Brigade Correspondent

Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, 58th Infantry, 197th Infantry Brigade, won the FORSCOM Overall Trophy at the Officers Wives' Club Festival of Running last weekend.

Fifty soldiers from the company ran the 5-mile course in 38 minutes.

"It was a challenge, but the guys in the company had good spirit and wanted to run," said SFC Michael E. Rennie. "Last year, we missed getting the trophy by one minute, but this year, we got the big one we were shooting for."

"We deserved the trophy," said Capt. Ferdinand Irizarry, HHC commander. "We were a highly motivated group, the best on Fort Benning."

"It felt great, seeing all these guys from our company running on a day that they didn't have to, just to show their spirit," said PFC Clyde W. Tarvis.

"We were trying to get the soldiers to get out and do something for themselves," Rennie said.

It felt like a regular P.T. day," said Pvt. 2 John C. Smith, "but it was a lot more enjoyable."

Many of the runners commented that the course was different this year. There were more hills and scenery than last year.

"The course goes by quick. When you get done, you really don't feel like you've run five miles," said PFC Jack H. Pelon.

PRIMUS to open April 30

By Shawn Bryson
Bayonet staff writer

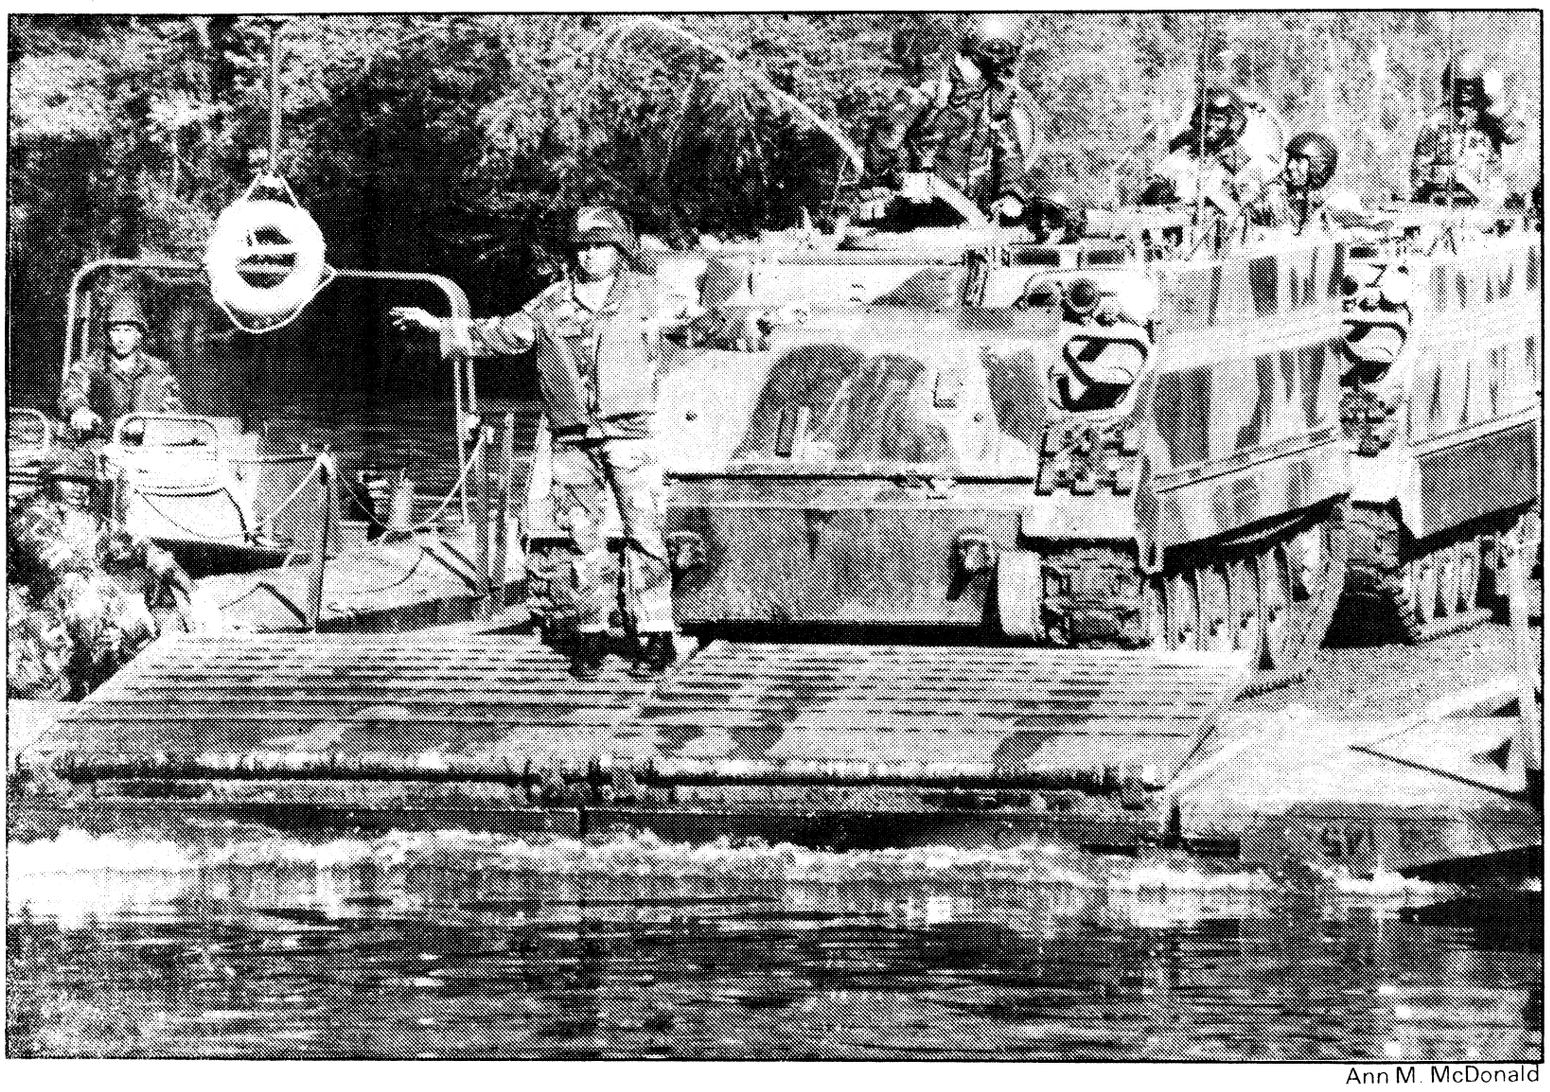
For all uniformed service beneficiaries of the Fort Benning and Columbus area, getting prompt, high quality health care will be made easier April 30 as the Primary Care for the Uniformed Services Clinic in Columbus opens for business.

The PRIMUS clinic, the fifth of its kind for the Army, is a facility geared toward providing easy access, convenient and quality health care to military beneficiaries.

According to Maj. Joe Butler, chief of the Clinical Support Division at Martin Army Community Hospital, the primary focus of the clinic will be Primary Care and Family Medicine. Radiology as well as an on-site pharmacy and a laboratory, will be featured at the clinic. However, Butler explained that the clinic will not be used as an Emergency Room and that all medical emergencies should continue to be taken to Martin Army Community Hospital or the nearest hospital with emergency facilities and personnel, if time is of the essence.

Care provided at the clinic will include treatment for colds, flu, cuts, sprains, simple bone fractures and limited follow-up care for chronic conditions such as high blood pressure, diabetes, and heart conditions. Physical examinations, immunizations and PAP smears will also be given at PRIMUS.

Although obstetrics will not be a service of the clinic, patients will be able to receive gynecological care and routine allergy shots according to Butler.



The clinic will be open 365 days a year from 7 a.m. to 8 p.m. on weekdays and from 7 a.m. to 2 p.m. on weekends and holidays.

PRIMUS will be located at 1727 Boxwood Drive in Columbus.

"Patients at the PRIMUS clinic will have a minimum waiting time. A policy at the clinic will be that all patients are registered and their condition assessed within ten minutes after they arrive," Butler said. He added that there will be no cost for patients of PRIMUS.

Butler emphasized, however, the clinic is for the underserved military beneficiaries. For example, all retirees and family members enrolled in the Defense Enrollment Eligibility

Benning announces RIF plans

USAIC Public Affairs Office

With a reduction in force of as many as 200 positions pending, the Civilian Personnel Office is working out a multi-pronged plan to ease the turmoil on the civilian work force as best it can.

The RIF is a result of implementation of Most Efficient Organization and realignment of the present work force and fiscal year's 1988 and 1989 space reductions.

While the decision to implement the RIF was announced last week, it won't be until mid-May, that workers learn how or if they are affected. Some will be told on that day that as of July 30, they no longer have a job. Others will learn that as of July 31, they will be working in another position; many others will not be affected at all.

The Civilian Personnel Office is now going over personnel records and establishing current and accurate retention registers to determine exactly which employees will be affected or how they will be affected by the RIF.

Once this information is determined, letters will be prepared for delivery by supervisors. After receiving the letter, each worker will be counseled by a CPO representative regarding employment status, entitlement to other jobs, pay retention or adjustments, retirement eligibility and placement assistance at other federal agencies and private industry.

A RIF Information Center will be set up in the Recruitment and Placement Division at CPO in building 35, Room 107 after the individual announcements have been issued in mid-May. The center will contain material such as retention registers, competitive level registers and applicable regulations.

CPO officials note that the center should not be visited until after the employee has been individually counseled by a CPO representative regarding his employment sta-

Commander to present SPIRIT award

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Oscar Betts, a former local and regional AUSA president who befriended soldiers and their families during World War II as manager of Ralston Hotel, will receive the Spirit of Fort Benning award in ceremonies Wednesday.

Post Commander Maj. Gen. Kenneth C. Leuer is hosting an award dinner for Betts to honor him for his contributions to the Army.

Betts is the fourth person to receive this award, which is presented yearly to recognize civilians who have substantially contributed to the national defense through their work with the Fort Benning community.

Civilian pay may be affected by shift cutbacks

By Shawn Bryson
Bayonet staff writer

Civilian pay is one of the areas that is being affected by changes at the Operations and System Intergration Division of the Director of Information Management here.

"Due to recent resource constraints, the Army's Regional Data Center in Atlanta has eliminated its third shift and is operating only two shifts, five days per week," said Lt. Col. Robert U. Schultz, Fort Benning's finance and accounting officer. He added that the RDC in Atlanta was the first of the Army's five RDCs to operate under the new conditions.

According to Schultz, the shift reduction has caused major changes at the Finance and Accounting Office including complications in the Civilian Pay Section.

"We used to have 10 computer runs during the two-week pay period to make any pay changes for civilians, such as promotions and stops and starts for allotments," Schultz said. However, he explained that the finance personnel now only have five opportunities to make those necessary changes.

"When we had 10 cycles to process the changes, we could also determine when those cycles were run," said Bobby King, deputy finance and accounting officer. "The new change doesn't allow us to choose when we run any of our five cycles now."

Schultz added that in the past, civilians were able to turn in requests for changes in their pay up until the last minute. "Pay changes used to be accepted up until the Friday before payday," Schultz said. "Now, civilians must get all pay changes in to us at least one week earlier than they have been used to," he said.

The restrictions have caused a restructuring of the hours at the Civilian Pay Section with hopes that the impact of the changes will not hinder the effectiveness of civilian pay operations, Schultz said.

However, the two officials did explain that one of the dangers that accompanies the recent limitations is the possibility of computer system problems, which, with only five available runs, could cause late paychecks for civilians. Schultz said that if the wrinkles in the payroll can not be ironed out before the paychecks are scheduled to be cut, then the checks can't be cut.

"Although a late payday could result from the strict guidelines we've been forced to follow, we are doing everything possible to avoid that," Schultz said.

Another area that will be affected by the latest restrictions is the supply system, according to King. "Because we have lost all the decision making, even high priority requests for supplies will probably be delayed," said King.

Schultz advised that the best way for civilians to avoid major dalays is to submit pay changes to supervisors as soon as possible. He added that supervisors should not sit on those requests and should get them to the Civilian Pay Section quickly.

To provide maximum services to all activities, the Civilian Pay Section has revised working hours on Fridays and Mondays. For answers to any questions about the latest changes, supervisors should contact the Civilian Pay Section at 545-1533.

Snively, Bubba join energy crusade

Clyde S. Snively
USAIC Public Affairs Office

While the post observes Energy Awareness week, Bubba Frank and I will be observing Energy Conservation Week.

Our motto is, "Don't run when you can walk, don't stand when you can sit and don't sit when you can lie." Not original, but good enough for us.

Since we both covet anything free, and since the Energy Conservation office is giving away T-shirts for anyone making an energy saving suggestion, we decided to hold a brain storming session to come up with energy conservation ideas that we could submit to win one.

Only, in interest of energy conservation our brain storming was actually just a brain sprinkling.

Bubba Frank's first suggestion, and perhaps the best of the day, was that all electrical appliances (except air conditioners) would be shut down from noon to 1 p.m. and everyone would be forced to take a nap.

While that suggestion will certainly win him a prize, I allowed as how they should modify all the elevators in building 4, except the one for freight, so they wouldn't stop below the fourth floor.

That way if a person wanted to get to the second and third floors, he or she would have to walk, or ride an elevator to the fourth floor and walk down. Or they could wait for the freight elevator.

Bubba Frank said that wasn't too bad, noting those who worked on the first three floors would either spend more time in their offices, or get in better shape.

His next suggestion was to remove all the light bulbs in the restrooms.

His reasoning was that most people were familiar enough with what they had to do and didn't need a heck of a lot of light unless the restroom was entirely dark, then they could have one or two bulbs, he said. He said this too would keep people in the office longer as they wouldn't spend as much time primping in front of mirrors and since they couldn't primp, they might be afraid to go out in public.

I told him I liked his idea but reminded him that restrooms were possibly the only place on post where The Bayonet was read. "Dim the lights, and we lose our readers," I said.

His answer was that less light would eliminate many of the calls about all the mistakes in the paper.

While I thought that one over, Bubba Frank jumped in and declared that those with staff cars should have to walk to all destinations within a mile of where they were unless they were to continue their trip or it was raining extremely hard.

He also said drivers should not be allowed to wait in cars while their bosses attended meetings since drivers would invariably run the engines for either heat or air conditioning.

Barely had he gotten that out of his mouth, when he was onto another idea. "Let's declare a moratorium one day each week on coffee makers. Everyone will have to unplug their pots for one day."

"Cruel and unusual punishment," I said. "The only ones who'll be happy with that are the coffee vendors."

I could see that Bubba was on a roll now so I recommended we take another energy conservation break, preferrably in a place with low lighting, lotsa air conditioning and plenty of cold beverages.

Raise caused some checks to shrink

AUSA

Q. When does a military pay raise result in smaller checks for people in uniform?

A. When Congress halves the President's recommended raise, requires a larger social security deduction and imposes a freeze on military housing allowances.

That's just what happened to thousands of servicemen and women when Congress reduced the requested four percent pay hike to a two percent increase, effective last Jan. 1. At the same time, all service members were hit with a one percent increase in their social security payroll taxes. Then the Defense Department was forced to realign military housing allowance rates, which resulted in smaller paychecks for some 135,000 military families. Needless to say, such moves do not sit well with military personnel and have the potential to place in jeopardy all the recent gains made in attracting and retaining the high quality people now serving in our Armed Forces.

Defense Secretary Frank C. Carlucci has publicly vowed to made his number one priority the 4.3 percent pay raise for military personnel proposed in the 1989 Defense Budget. Already there is ample indication that he will not have an easy time of it as House and Senate members begin to see the money requested for a military pay raise as a possible bill payer for other programs.

At his very first appearance on Capitol Hill to present the new budget, Secretary Carlucci was questioned at length concerning the chances of reducing the requested increase in order to fund a variety of other programs. To his great credit, Carlucci has held firm in his belief that the requested amount is the minimum necessary to slow the growing gap between military and private sector wages. Consecutive pay caps over the past six years have widened that gap to 11 percent, where it was in the late 1970s when we witnessed one of the greatest "hemorrhages of talent" in the history of our Armed Forces.

It is asking too much for members of Congress to remember back only ten years to the days of the "hollow Army" when our military was weakened by low quality recruits and an exodus of experienced people? That in itself should be enough to convince Congress that the standard of living for American soldiers, sailors, airmen and marines should not be diminished to pay for pork.

Field Medics to be honored next week

The week of April 25-29 is designated Field Medic Week.

Brave and dedicated field medics have served with distinction from Concord to the jungles of Vietnam and on Grenada. It is in their honor, and to those who stand prepared to do so in battle today, that I recognize their dedicated combat service support to our fighting forces. During this week, the Expert Field Medical Badge test will be conducted at Fort Benning, and Army Medical Department personnel will have an opportunity to meet one of the toughest peacetime challenges designated to test the skills of the combat medic. The Infantry Center salutes those who are about to accept the challenge, and those who have gone before you.

Soldiers relieved of quarters cleaning responsibility

Recently, HQ Training Doctrine Command approved a service that anyone who has lived in government quarters will greatly appreciate — the cleaning of military family housing at government expense.

This service is expected to be available here by May 2, according to Kenneth G. Hankins, Fort Benning housing manager. Once implemented, soldiers who are making permanent change of station or expiration of term of service moves will no longer be required to clean quarters and stand the traditional final cleaning inspection. They won't have to pay someone else to clean their quarters and stand inspection either.

Soldiers will still be responsible for accomplishing and meeting the following standards:

•All self-help and preventive maintenance items, such as door stops, shower head and light fixtures must be in good repair.

•Floors, rugs and installed carpet must be swept and vacuumed.

•Walls and ceilings must be free of dirt, cobwebs, crayon marks, food, etc. All nails and hooks will be removed and holes repaired. Materials for repairing the walls can be obtained at the U-Do-It self-help store.

•Doors must be free of dirt and stains on both the interior and exterior.

•All light bulbs must be installed and working.

•Cabinet, closets and shelves should have shelf paper, tape, staples and tacks removed. All food particles, trash and personal items must be removed.

•Refrigerator must be defrosted and wiped down. All food articles must be removed. Unplug and leave the door open.

•All accessible surfaces of the range must be cleaned of all burned/crusted-on food and wiped down.

•Government furniture must be returned to the Furnishings Management Office.

•Kitchens, bathrooms, toilets must have stains, lime, mineral deposits and excessive soap residues removed.

•Ventilators, air vents must be wiped down and filters replaced as necessary.

•Trash cans must be empty and any crusted-on garbage removed.

•Outside areas, carports, patios, balconies and walks, must be swept and cleared of all debris. Oil or grease must be removed from paved areas. Normal yard maintenance must be accomplished.

•All personal items must be removed by occupants before termination inspection.

•There is no requirement for windows, mirrors and radiators and pipes.

Forty five days prior to departure, residents must contact the Family Housing Office, 545-3107, to schedule a pretermination inspection. This inspection is mandatory to ensure residents understand what self-help work and preventive maintenance must be accomplished prior to quarters termination.

Soldiers who make moves for personal reasons; for instance, buying a home off post, or an OCS graduate who wishes to move into officer's quarters; must either clean their own quarters or pay someone to clean them, according to Hankins.

Army curtails reup option

Army News Service

Soldiers can no longer reenlist for the education reenlistment option that has allowed them to attend school full time.

Army personnel officials announced April 7 that the education reenlistment option is being eliminated because of its high cost in terms of manpower and because of Congressional restriction on the use of the Army College fund benefits. The benefits are those used in conjunction with full time attendance at school while on active duty.

Under the new policy, soldiers now in school will be allowed to complete their studies in accordance with their reenlistment contracts. Also, soldiers currently assigned a processing control number issued by the Total Army Personnel Agency on or before Dec. 11, 1987 may reenlist for the option.

Soldiers who reenlist for the option or enter a school after Oct. 1, 1987 may not use the Army College Fund in conjunction with this option.

Close out date for sergeant Evaluation Report is May 31

Army News Service

May 31 is the close-out date for the Enlisted Evaluation Report for platoon sergeants, sergeants first class, staff sergeants and sergeants on the E-6 promotion list as of that date.

Those NCOs who have served under the same rater for at least 90 days since their last report will most likely be due a final EER.

The rating period for the new Noncommissioned Officer Evaluation Report (NCOER) for these senior NCOs begins June 1. The first use of the evaluation report begins 90 days later on Sept. 1 as events occur, such as change of rater, PCS, etc.

The months of June and July are mandatory counseling months for raters to discuss the report with these NCOs. The procedures and elements for effective initial and quarterly counseling are contained on the NCO Counseling Checklist/Record (DA Form 2166-7-1). Face to face counseling is mandatory for all NCOs.

Primus

Reporting System can use the clinic. The clinic is not intended for active duty soldiers during duty hours.

"The staff at the PRIMUS clinic will not be authorized to give soldiers physical profiles or assign them to quarters. Soldiers should continue to use their designated troop medical clinics on post," Butler said.

Because the Fort Benning community is so densely populated with military beneficiaries, the clinic is expected to receive 48,000 patient visits each year, he said.

The clinic will be contractor owned and operated. The contract was awarded to PHP Health Care Corporation of Alexandria, Va. Jan. 29, and operation of the clinic will be overseen by Col. Herbert E. Segal, Martin Army Community Hospital commander, according to Butler.

"PHP has the contract for Army's other four existing PRIMUS clinics, and all of the feedback we've received about the corporation has been very positive. Quality has been built into this contract, and we see the PRIMUS clinic as a tremendous asset to military health care here," Butler said.

Because PRIMUS is totally separate from the Civilian Health and Medical Care Program for the Uniformed Services, a patient loses no benefits from CHAMPUS by using the new clinic, according to Butler. However, a patient visit to PRIMUS costs the government substantially less than a CHAMPUS visit Butler said.

Although the clinic is solely for the military, everyone is invited to the Grand Opening ceremony April 29 at 10 a.m. Refreshments will be served and Maj. Gen. Kenneth C. Leuer, Fort Benning commander, along with local dignataries will speak at the ceremony.

A tour of the facility will be given after the ribbon cutting. The clinic will open at 7 a.m. April 30.

tus. Affected employees and their supervisors may review the materials at any time between 8:30 a.m. and 4 p.m., Monday through Friday.

These officials further state that while the goal is to minimize turnover as much as possible, it is still possible that specific job offers and notices of separation identified in the individual letters may be subject to change.

The letters the employees will be receiving by mid-May, will tell them that there is currently not a position for them at Fort Benning, or that they have a job elsewhere on post, possibly at a lower pay grade.

Those offered other positions will have the position explained, to include a job description and the employee will be told whether he is entitled to grade and or pay retention.

Both letters will explain the rights of appeal and the fact the employee who is being reassigned can resign instead of taking the other position. The person who is being terminated can also resign without providing a two-week notice instead of working until July 30.

Officials say every effort will be made to assist displaced employees in getting other jobs.

The employee may be registered in the Priority Placement Program for all activities within his commuting area. The employee's name will be placed on the Reemployment Priority List, and that person is eligible for registration in the Office of Personnel Management Displaced Employees Program. Some employees will be eligible for severance pay.

The Civilian Personnel Office will also provide assistance in obtaining employment with state and local governments and in private industry.

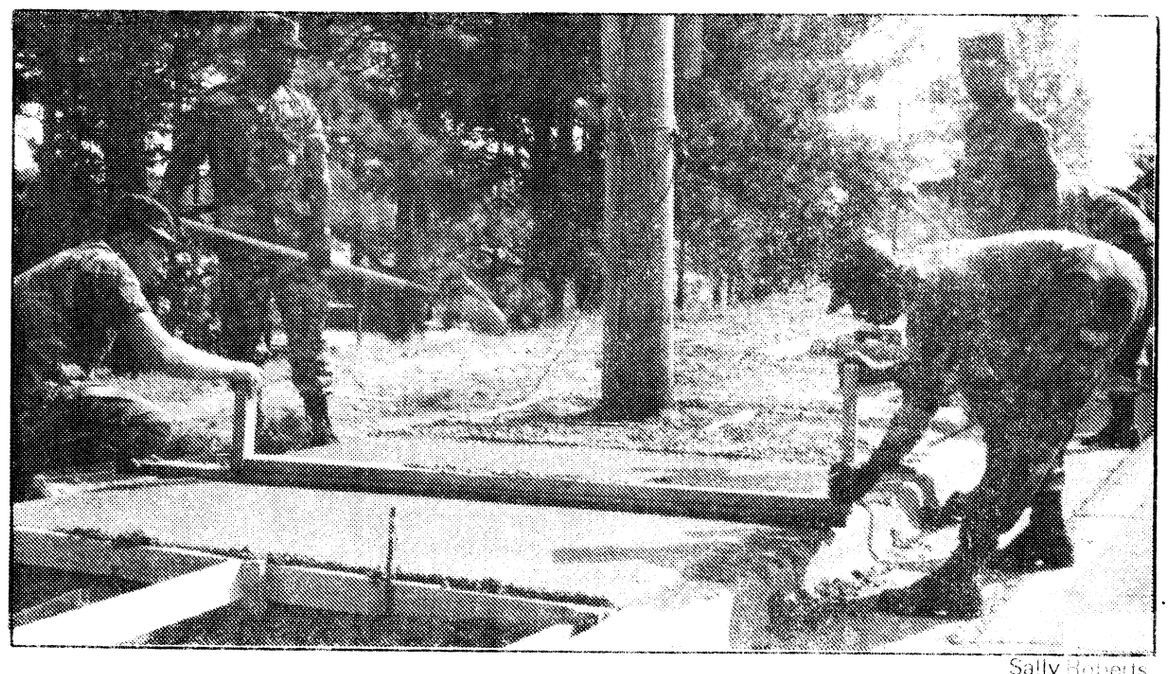
Combat engineers upgrade Kelley Hill environment

By Jeffrey K.S. Kim and Sally Roberts
197th Infantry Brigade

In a continuing effort to upgrade the environment in which 197th Infantry Brigade soldiers live and train, Combat Engineers from the 72nd Engineer Company used their skills to construct several badly needed sidewalks.

The engineers are providing the labor force to construct a sidewalk along Marne Road leading to the 1st Battalion, 58th Infantry Motor Pool. This area gets a lot of foot traffic as infantry soldiers walk to and from the motor pool daily.

The soldiers from 2nd Platoon, 72nd Engineer Co., who were constructing the sidewalk are actually 12Bs (Combat Engineers) by Military Occupational Specialty. They are usually out training on the hard-core combat skills, such as laying minefields, constructing obstacles, breaching obstacles and supporting maneuver units.



These soldiers like construction projects because they break up the monotony of the routine combat engineer tasks, said Capt. Steven V. Tennant, 72nd Eng. Co. commander.

This "off-beat" project has raised the morale and spirit in the platoon because it was a chance for the soldiers to do something different. Each soldier appears to have definitly learned something in the process of the construction.

"This project has been a worthwhile project because I learned how to do something that I can apply at home," Pvt. 2 Teddy Jones said.

"This sidewalk project has given all the soldiers here a good basic working knowledge of concrete construction," said SFC Hosea Williams, platoon sergeant.

Overall, soldiers appeared to be happy with the sidewalk project because it gave them a break from the hard core combat tasks. It also gave them a chance to prove to themselves and the residents of Kelley Hill that Combat Engineers can not only excel in supporting their maneuver units but also excel in construction projects as well, shedding a new light on the meaning of being a Combat Engineer.

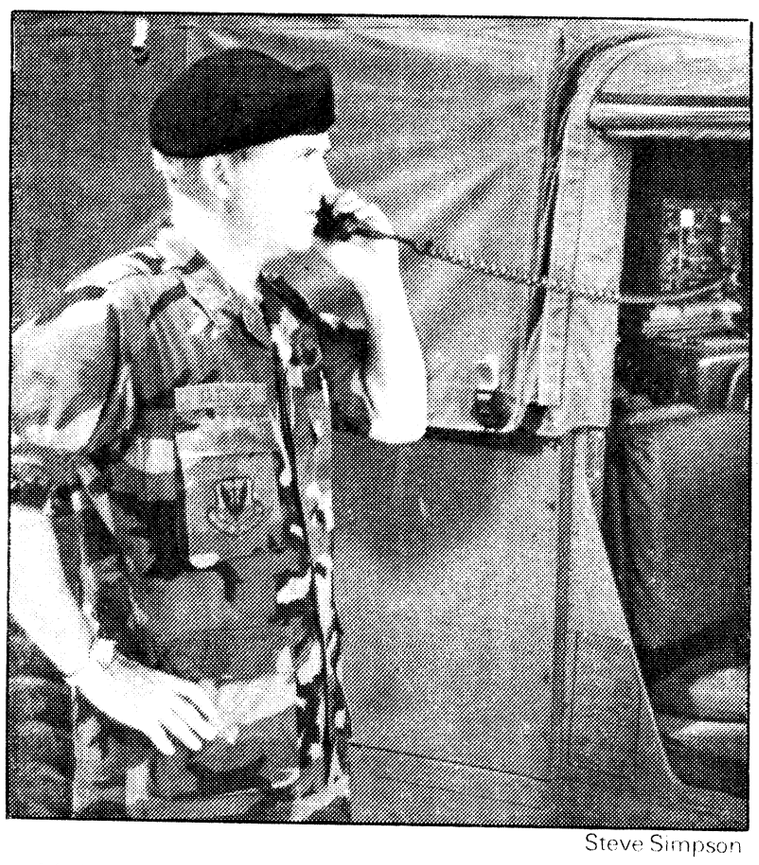
Santa's Castle gets facelift

By Patti Bergin
Company A, 43rd Engineer Battalion



The members of 1st Platoon received the mission of renovating the Santa's Castle building located in Soldiers' Plaza. To date that is the largest vertical construction for the 43rd Engineer Battalion this quarter.

The construction project, however, provides the best opportunity for the soldiers of 1st Platoon because of the variety of work that is needed to complete the building renovation.

The scope of work includes installing new floors, ceilings, and walls; rewiring the electrical system to include installing new light switches and outlets; and of course, the plumbing. In addition to all the rough carpentry work, the Platoon will rebuild shelves for the toys throughout the building.

As always, there is a time schedule to be met. The Officers Wives' Club members have been using this building to clean, repair and paint old toys, which are then given to children at Christmas. However, due to the lack of building space, the renovation project has been broken down into two phases. Phase one is the upstairs and stairway construction, and phase two is the downstairs construction. Since Santa's Castle is always open, the Officers Wives' Club will have at least one floor to continue its work on the toys throughout the construction period.

A project of this magnitude is always a challenge for the ACE soldiers because of its scope in general. The work will also serve as a vehicle to validate many of the 1st Platoon soldiers' job books and validate the squad, platoon, and company METL.

Air Force liaison officer set to retire Army style

Sally Roberts
197th Infantry correspondent

Few U.S. Air Force officers celebrate their retirement while stationed on an Army post. However, Maj. Jack B. Eatman, Jr., Detachment 4, 507th Tactical Air Control Wing, will be recognized by his Air Force and Army counterparts at a retirement ceremony on Fort Benning at 1:30 p.m. May 3.

Eatman fills a multi-facetted role with the Detachment, serving as an Air Liaison Officer and Reconnaissance Liaison Officer for the 197th Infantry Brigade, as well as Excecutive Officer for the Detachment.

This Detachment serves a vital support role to the Infantry units on Fort Benning, providing coordination to the Army commanders for Air Force Tactical Air Support.

Eatman's career began as a navigator. He then attended Pilot training at Craig Air Force Base, Ala. Following Pilot Training he was assigned to Udoorn Royal Thai AFB in Thailand, which he feels was one of his many rewarding experiences in the Air Force.

"This was my first operational assignment as a pilot," Eastman said. "We flew reconnaissance missions (aerial photography) over Cambodia, Laos and Vietnam."

Another productive experience during his career was with the Directorate of Joint Matters, where he developed reconnaissance and intelligence operational concepts.

"We developed a foundation for how opertional systems would be used in the future," Eatman said. "It's interesting for me to see some of the projects that I worked on that were only concepts then, but are now being implemented."

Maj. Eatman's present assignment on an Army post has not been any less a challenging Air Force assignment.

"My work with the 197th Infantry Brigade has been extremely rewarding," Eatman added. "It has been very educational seeing how the battle really happens on the ground."

Although he plans to stay in the Columbus area, Eatman hasn't settled on his post-military career. No doubt, his skills and leadership developed as an Air Force officer have created a strong foundation for his continued success.

48-year Army, civil service veteran retires today

By Marsha Santiago
ITC correspondent

For Haskew Nobles, today marks the end of a 48-year association with Fort Benning. Nobles, a supply clerk in the S-4 section, 1st ITB, USAITC, retires from civil service today.

Nobles has held his present position with USAITC since 1980. He entered civil service at Fort Benning in July 1974, working first at Martin Army Community Hospital, then at Post Publications, and then back to Martin Army before taking the position at ITC.

However, his association with Fort Benning came long before his 14 years as a civil service employee. It began in July 1940 when the New Orleans, La. native enlisted in the Army and reported to his first duty station — 41st Armored Infantry, 2nd Armored Division, Fort Benning, Ga. In his 34-year, military career, Nobles would return to Fort Benning many times and, with each trip, the installation would have changed more.

"When I first came here in 1940, I lived in a tent," Nobles said. "I was one of the first troops to move to Sand Hill in 1941. It was all woods where 1st Brigade is now. We used to sit in the "Bowl" and listen to General Patton talk."

The "Bowl" Nobles refers to was a large outdoor depression with stone seats, much like an ampitheater. Photos showing the "Bowl" hang in ITC headquarters, which was Gen. George S. Patton's headquarters in the 40s.

In November 1942, Nobles' unit left Fort Benning for North Africa. He then transferred to the 6th Infantry Division where he served until he was wounded in the battle of the Kasserine Pass. He then returned to the 41st Armored Infantry.

Nobles served with the 2nd Armored Division as an Infantry platoon sergeant throughout the remainder of World War II. In 1943, he participated in the invasion of Sicily and then returned to England for training. The training was for the invasion of Normandy.

June 6, 1944 was D-day for the Allies and Nobles was among the troops on Omaha Beach. In July 1945, Nobles was among the first occupational troops of Berlin.

In October of 1945, he returned to the States and was discharged from the military. He had earned a Silver Star with two oak leaf clusters, a Purple Heart with two oak leaf clusters, two Meritorious Service Medals and all the service ribbons that went with the campaigns. His rank at the time was master sergeant. Nobles said rank came much quicker during World War II, but not necessarily easier. For many of his contemporaries, the discharge ended their military service. Not for him.

In September 1946, he reenlisted and returned to Fort Benning for Airborne Training. Nobles recalled his Airborne training was done from a glider.

His long career would take him to many locations both in the States (Fort Bragg, Fort Hood, Fort Leonard Wood, Fort Riley, Chicago and Alabama); and overseas (Japan, Germany, Korea and Vietnam). Periodically, he would return to Fort Benning.

It was during one of his tours in Germany, 1963 to 1966 with the 6th Infantry Division, that Nobles met and married his wife, Irmtraut. He was also promoted to master sergeant during that tour.

In 1967, Nobles and his wife bought a house in Columbus and began thinking of the area as their home. While his family remained in Columbus, Nobles served two tours in Vietnam. The first in 1967 with the 9th Infantry Division and the second in 1969 with the 101st Airborne Division. It was during his Vietnam service that he received a Bronze Star with two Valorous Oak Leaf Clusters.

From 1970 until 1973, Nobles served as an operations sergeant with the Signal School at Fort Gordon, Ga. He retired on Jan. 30, 1973.

"From the time I reenlisted in '46," Nobles remarked, "I never really wanted to do anything else. The Army was the place for me."

Nobles has seen many changes at Fort Benning both during his military and civil service careers. He commented that soldiers now receive much better training than when he enlisted in 1940 and that the equipment has also improved through the years.

What does the future hold for Nobles?

"This time I really plan to retire," he said. "We will probably travel. My wife hasn't been back to Germany since we came to the States in 1963. We're planning a trip back this year."

It is unlikely he will need a reminder of his years of service, but just in case, Nobles can always look at a wall in his home. There he has mounted all the patches and the unit crests of the many units with which he served.

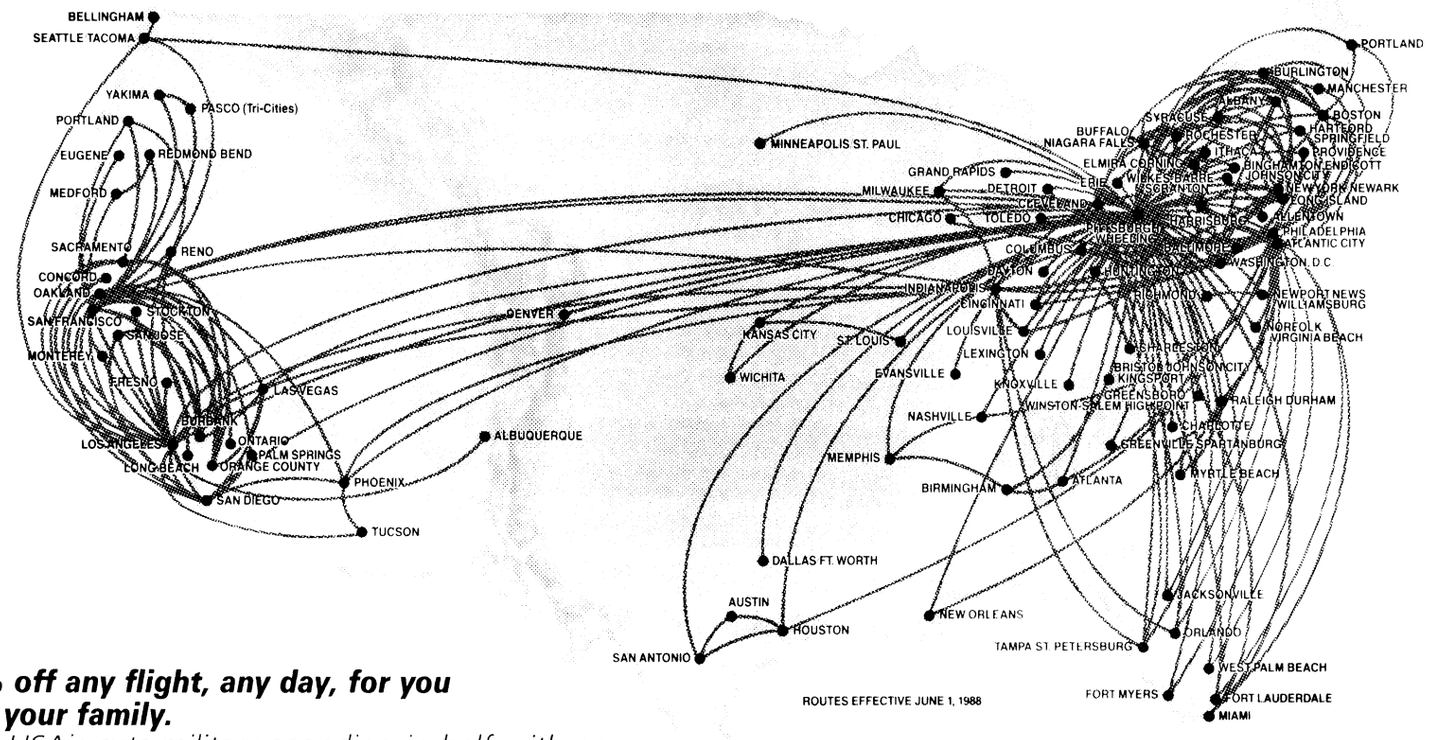
IOBC students volunteer time to Boys Club

2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry



Recently, a group of Infantry Officer Basic Course students and cadre volunteered time to work with a number of local youngsters. Maj. Samuel G. Pride, commander of Co. E, 2nd Bn., 11th Inf. Regt., organized the effort with the help of Robert "Butch" Stanford, executive director of the Columbus Boy's Club, as part of the battalion's ongoing program to get its members involved in community activities.

On April 2, Pride and his men joined members of the Boys Club at the Peach Bowl Lanes for their initial get-together. During the event, each boy was "sponsored" by one of the men from Co. E. The afternoon was filled with bowling, space-age video games, and of course, lots of pizza and hotdogs. Names and phone numbers were exchanged, and everyone left with a good feeling.

The next Saturday, the group reassembled for more fun, games and fellowship at the East Side Boys Club on Morris Road. This time basketball, football and billards were the order of the day. The visit also afforded the IOBC group the opportunity to tour the Boys Club facility to see what it had to offer its young members. As usual, they day was topped off with hotdogs and

Bridging exercise challenges engineers, infantry

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

During one recruiting commercial a soldier says "We do more by 9 a.m. than most people do all day." This statement holds true in most cases, and a good example is a recent mission conducted by soldiers from Company C, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment and 586th Support, 36th Engineer Group.

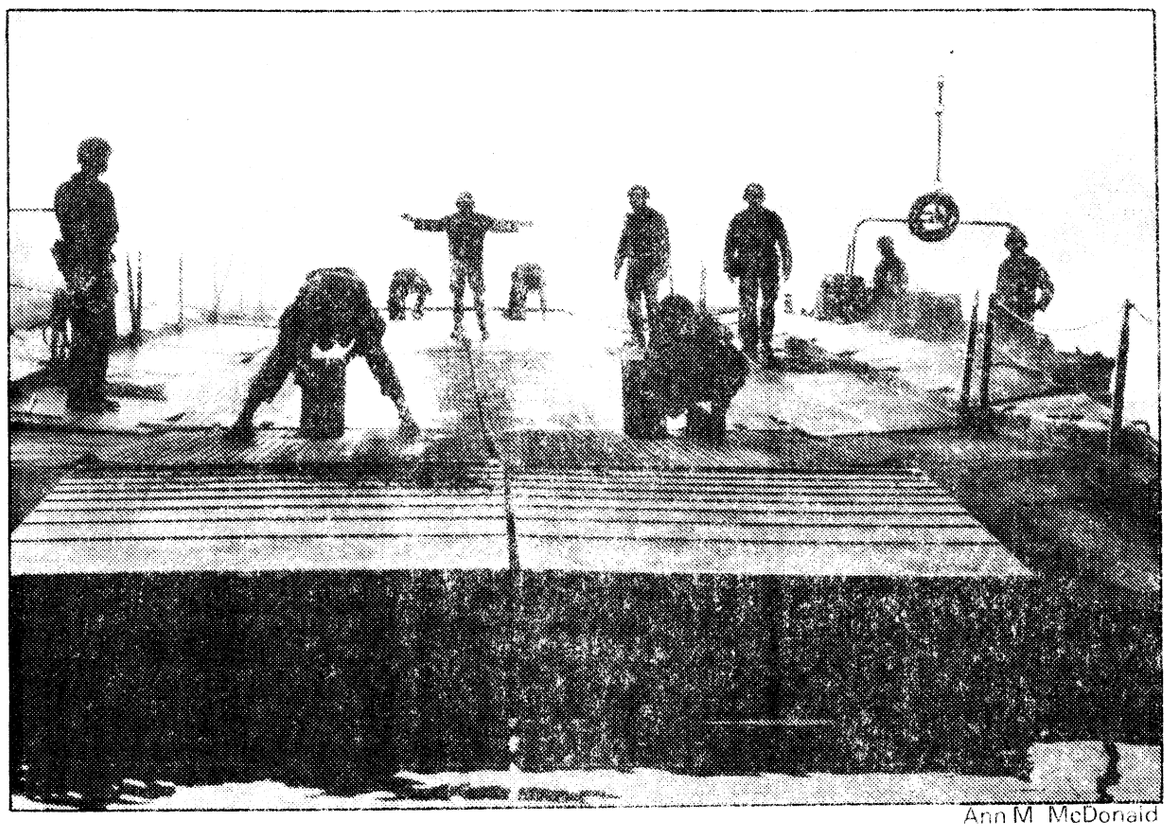
Before 9 a.m. the engineers built and dismantled a bridge over the Chattahoochee River while 29th Infantry Regiment soldiers brought out their armored vehicles, drove over the bridge, conducted a command inspection of the vehicles and had them ferried back across the river.

According to Capt. Martin Neal, an S-1 officer with 1st Bn., 29th Inf. Regt., this mission was all part of a command inspection conducted by battalion commander, Lt. Col. Robert Tisdale.

Neal said because of the unique mission of the Regiment, which serves both the U.S. Infantry Center and School, the inspection gives the battalion commander the opportunity to see where each company stands in overall readiness.

He added that this gives soldiers a chance to do tasks they don't normally do in the regiment.

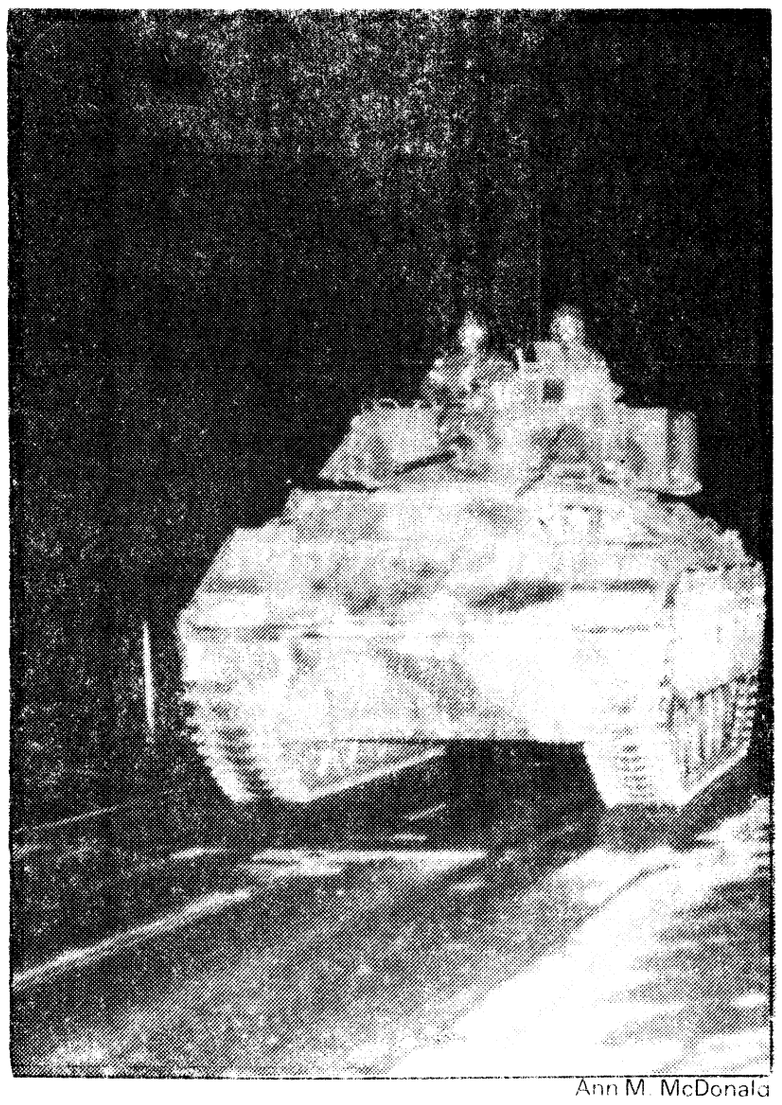
"In the past, they have set up fences and built different types of obstacles," Neal said. "This mission required the soldiers do much more than that."



Neal said that besides the events that occurred the morning of the bridge crossing, Co. C soldiers underwent a physical fitness test, a greens inspection and a TA-50 layout.

Co. C commander, Capt. Kim Hooper, said his troops were motivated about the inspection because the required tasks were much more on line with what a regular combat unit would do.

One of Hooper's soldiers, Pvt. 2 Joseph Lapinta, a M-113 driver said, "it was worth getting up at 1:30 a.m. to do the river crossing."



"When I drove the 113 across the bridge, I thought it would be shakey, but the bridge was really stable," Lapinta said. "Being a part of the river crossing and undergoing all the different training involved is great, because we don't get a chance to do new things that often. It made this one that much more enjoyable."

Lapinta's exhuberant attitude about the mission was mirrored by the entire company and the engineers. Both seemed to realize that the Army "is not just a job it's an adventure," and that their mission is important any time, even before 9 a.m.

Stained glass patch honors Philippine Division

By Shawn Bryson
Bayonet staff writer

Many unsung heroes of World War II were recently recognized by the visit of Brig. Gen. (Ret.) Royale Reynolds to Fort Benning.

Reynolds, assistant commandant at Fort Benning from 1962 to 1963, presented Fort Benning's Chief of Staff, Col. James J. Daily, and Dick Grube, curator for the National Infantry Museum here, with a stained glass replica of the Philippine Division patch.

According to Reynolds, the Philippine Division was the only active U.S. Army unit in the Philippines when the islands came under the attack of Japanese forces in World War II.

In December, 1941, Lt. Gen. Douglas MacAurthur, commander of United States troops in the Philippines, had 26 infantry units on the island of Luzon in the Philippines but the only units trained for combat at that time were the three regiments that made up the Philippine Division.

The United States 31st Infantry Regiment was one of those units. The other two regiments of the Philippine Division were the 45th and 57th Infantry (Philippine Scouts). Reynolds was, at that time, the commander of the 1st Battalion, 57th Infantry (PS).

Reynolds explained that the Philippine Scouts were units composed primarily of Filipino soldiers led by U. S. Army officers. Although the Filipinos were only called 'Scouts,' Reynolds explained that they were some of the best soldiers of World War II.

"The Scouts were a highly disciplined and well-trained group of soldiers who more than proved their worth in World War II, especially in their participation at Bataan," Reynolds said.

"So many good soldiers were lost in the Bataan march, and I felt that they should be honored and that the stained glass properly belongs in the National Infantry Museum," he said.

"If we had had more units like the scouts, the Japanese would not have taken Bataan," Reynolds said.

Both Pride and Stanford viewed the events as great opportunities for the IOBC group to serve as positive role models for their new friends. It also gave some of them a chance to "adopt" a surrogate family while being at Fort Benning, away from their loved ones.

The Boys Club is an organization that works with boys up to the age of 18. Although funded by various agencies, most of the Club's programs depend heavily on the support of volunteers. There are three units operating in Columbus. Stanford's office is located at 1807 17th Street in Weracoba Park. Anyone interested in volunteering to help with this most worthwhile program should call him at 327-4264.

Screening expands to CSMs

[illegible]

Cardiovascular screening [illegible] expands to command sergeants major.

All active duty command sergeants major designees, regardless of age, are now required to undergo cardiovascular screening and be cleared by medical personnel before assuming duties as CSMs.

Army officials explain that due to the level of responsibility and the physical demands on CSMs to "set the example," it is appropriate to expand the screening process to include these soldiers. Units now, with soldiers age 40 and older, lieutenant colonel and colonels selected for battalion and brigade command, were required to have the screening done.

If a cardiovascular problem is discovered, CSM activation will be delayed until it is corrected. If the problem cannot be corrected, according to officials, the NCO will be removed from the command sergeants major program.

CSM designees who have been screened or cleared within the last five years will not be required to go through the screening process again.

Non-commissioned officers already serving as CSMs will be screened as soon as possible, according to personnel officials. Future CSMs will not be removed from the position solely for failure to be medically cleared.

Child care certification class slated for on post providers

Child Development Services

A new certification class to train military spouses to provide child care in government quarters will begin May 16. The class, which is conducted by the Child Development Services staff is open to spouses ages 18 and older who reside on post.

Certification involves:

●Completing an application packet.

●Attend 20 hours of classroom training in first aid, safety, child development, nutrition, business practices, etc.

●Passing home inspections from fire, preventive medicine and FCC.

●Receiving favorable background checks on potential provider and all other household members 12 years old and older.

Providers must purchase items for a first aid kit, locks for cabinets and closets that are not already child proof, covers for electrical outlets and a fire extinguisher. Once certified, caregivers may check out toys and equipment from the Resource Lending Library in the Child Development Services office.

Certified caregivers are needed on all areas of post for infants and before/after school care; there is also a great need for caregivers in the Main Post area for children of all ages. For more information, contact the Family Child Care office at 545-4525 or come by building 23, Room 30.

Holocaust memorial service features Auschwitz survivor

By Jo Ann Stamey
USAIC Chaplain's Office

"As soldiers we realize a special role and a special responsibility that is our's in defending the freedom of all people," said Chap. (Col.) Roy Mathis, as he opened the Holocaust Memorial Service last Friday in Marshall Auditorium.

Maj. Gen. Kenneth C. Leuer, the Infantry Center commander, the deputy commander, Brig. Gen. William Hartzog, 700 soldiers and several people from the military and civilian communities attended the service.

The 283rd Army Band provided the music. A special selection written for this occasion by Rabbi Craig Allen was a highlight of the service.

Allen stated, "Although the music I wrote for the occasion was initially inspired by the anonymous poem, Terezin, it soon became clear to me that I was, in a mystical sense, responding on a higher level; firstly, to the collective historical experiences of my people, but ultimately, to the suffering and eventual redemption of all mankind."

The guest speaker, Alex Gross, who survived the horrors of Auschwitz and Buchenwald, gave a very personal account of his experiences during the Holocaust. A native of Czechoslavakia, Gross was only 11 years old when his country was conquered by German forces. At age 14, after three years of persecution, he was taken to Auschwitz.

"We were beaten, stamped on, stripped of our clothes, our hair taken off, and we were told we were no longer human beings," Gross said.

Later Gross was transferred to Buchenwald, where he was reunited with two of his brothers. The miracle they had prayed for occurred. In 1945, they were liberated by American soldiers.

"To me a soldier is not anything short of an angel ... If I ever saw an angel, that was it, when the tank came into the camp, the turret opened up and the helmet came out. I did not see a helmet; I saw wings -- I saw God -- I saw everything beautiful -- everything wonderful," Gross said.

Gross concluded his remarks by saying, "And to this day, when I look at you (soldiers), I see nothing but wonderful things, because you are the bastian for freedom -- you are the ones who freed us and got us out of that hell."

After the liberation in 1945, Gross returned to Czechoslavakia and found German repression had been replaced by Russian repression. Gross then moved to the United States, during the time the Korean Conflict had erupted. Gross joined the Army and spent three years in the Medical Service Corps and Military Intelligence. Atlanta is Gross' home, where he is deeply involved in civic and charity work. He is the president of Hemshech, an organization of Holocaust survivors.

At the conclusion of the ceremony, 11 candles were lit by children from Fort Benning -- one for each of the 11 camps that exterminated six million Jews and five million non-Jews during the Holocaust.

This memorial service was in remembrance of these 11 million people and for whom we still grieve.

Chapel Info desk opens at Soldiers' Plaza

By Jo Ann Stamey
USAIC Chaplain's Office

On April 18, Soldiers' Plaza opened its doors to the new Chapel Information Desk located at building 2622.

The desk is one of the steps in processing stations new soldiers visit upon their arrival at Fort Benning. The purpose of the Chapel Information Desk is to provide newcomers with information on Chapel services and activities available to them at Fort Benning. Volunteers are given an orientation to sign up for chaplain programs such as children in Bible school, and sign up for various volunteer activities; i.e., youth leaders, Bible study teachers. At this time, the soldier is also given the name and phone number of his unit chaplain.

The desk is manned by volunteers from 8:30 a.m. to 5 p.m. each day.

Faith in God helps with daily worries

By Robert E. Reese
MACH Chaplain

It's difficult to pray sometimes. God can seem far away, and we wonder if he is really listening. When prayer becomes difficult, especially when you feel worried or upset, there is something, which works most of the time, you may want to try.

You can make a radical, yet simple, leap of faith and say to yourself and to God: "Even now, Lord, I have complete trust in You."

To make this simple affirmation helps us to realize, once again, that in times of trouble, turmoil or doubt, God is still holding each of us, including you, in the palm of his hand whether we realize it or not.

Another good discipline to help our faith to increase is to begin each new day with this simple prayer of devotion: "Throughout this new day, I have complete trust in You, Lord, to heal, guide, protect and watch over my loved ones and me." To begin each day with a simple affirmation of trust in God creates within us an extra source of strength needed to overcome fear, doubt or any challenge of mind or body.

The true goal of faith is to have a simple child-like trust in God's power to right every wrong, to heal every hurt, to meet our

AUSA CORNER

By Jim Gallagher
AUSA chapter president

This week AUSA's column will be devoted to an overview of the Chapter Awards program.

The awards program is applicable to all active duty members, Reserve component, ROTC, individual and corporate members, and Department of the Army civilians.

Awards are grouped into categories and include AUSA plaques and certificates of appreciation, commendation, and achievement; dress blue uniforms; US Savings Bonds; AUSA watches; AUSA warm-up jackets; AUSA memberships for one or three year periods; 9mm Beretta pistol; scholarships; and attendance at the AUSA national meeting.

The chapter awards program recognizes:

Drill Sergeant of the Year.

USAIC Noncommissioned Officer of the Year.

USAIC Noncommissioned Officer of the Quarter.

USAIC Soldier of the Year.

USAIC Soldier of the Quarter.

USAIS Instructors of the Year (officer, senior NCO, junior NCO)

Major Command NCO of the Year and Quarter.

Major Command Soldier of the Year and Quarter.

Distinguished Graduates:

Infantry Officer Advanced Course (IOAC)

Infantry Officer Basic Course (IOBC).

Officer Candidate School.

Advanced Noncommissioned Officer Course.

Basic Noncommissioned Officer Course.

Primary Leadership Development Course.

Ranger (officer and enlisted).

Allied Graduate, IOAC and IOBC

U.S. Army School of the Americas Graduates.

OSUT Honor Graduate.

Department of the Army Civilian Employee of the Month/Year.

AUSA Chapter Queen, Runner-Up, and Subchapter Queens.

Columbus College ROTC cadets.

Corporate members.

A listing of all the awards presented to the above recipients would be too lengthy for this column. However, to sho the extent of the program a selective list follows:

Drill Sergeant of the Year: Blue uniform, 9mm Beretta pistol, AUSA watch, AUSA warm-up jacket, AUSA plaque and certificate of commendation, 3-year membership, attendance at AUSA national meeting and local chapter meetings and events.

USAIC Soldier of the Year: Blue uniform, AUSA warm-up jacket, AUSA plaque and certificate of achievement, 3-year membership, attendance at AUSA national meeting and local chapter meetings and events.

Instructors of the Year: $100 U.S. Savings Bond, AUSA warm-up jacket, and AUSA plaque and certificate of commendation.

Distinguished Graduates: AUSA plaque and certificate of achievement.

As you can see the Chapter Awards Program touches many soldiers at Fort Benning. The Chapter has made efforts to include recognition of other soldiers, i.e. MP of the Year, Cook of the Year, Medic, Mechanic, to name some. In some of these cases,there are no official military competitions. This holds up the Chapter from including them in the AUSA awards program. If you have a category that you would like to recommend for AUSA awards, contact the administrative office, 545-4432.

ASK THE JUDGE

By Ollie M. Mick
Staff Judge Advocate's Office

Q — I recently received a check in the mail for $2,000 from a local finance company. The check says that they will cash it for me if I bring it down in person and sign a repayment contract. I could really use the money right now, but I would like to know more about this kind of thing before I get involved.

A — The "credit check" you received is a marketing technique used by a number of consumer loan organizations. The checks are simply advertisements that are supposed to encourage you to come in and apply for a loan. If you read the check and other enclosures carefully, you will probably see that there is a statement indicating that the offer is conditional upon your credit history being approved by the company. What this means, of course, is that the offer can be revoked by them if they decide you are a bad credit risk.

If they do approve the loan and cash the check, they will ask you to sign a contract for repayment. The contract is actually a loan agreement, so you will need to read it carefully. The interest rates may be set at a higher rate than conventional loans,and you may end up paying a great deal of money for this service.

A number of state and federal laws have been enacted to control the loan process. Restrictions are placed on how the companies can solicit business and what terms they need to disclose to the consumer before they make the loan. If you have any questions about the transactions, or if you would like to have the paperwork reviewed by an attorney before you sign, make an appointment with the legal assistance attorney.

Pray

individual needs for strength, prosperity or guidance.

As scripture says, "All things are possible with God." (Mark 10:27) Having complete trust in God also helps us to be patient with God and with the people and circumstances surrounding us. We come to realize that we do not need to know ahead of time every detail, or the exact schedule of the perfect outworking of a challenge or answer to a prayer. We realize that we don't need to have all the answers to all the questions. We are able to turn loose of our impatience and our anxiety and trust in the right unfolding of answers to our prayers according to God's ultimate design. We become more in touch with the divine guidance that helps to mold our lives, and the divine order in which right ideas are formed and matured.

To affirm our trust in God each new day helps us to be more patient with ourselves.

We each make mistakes. We each have regrets about the past. But you and I belong to God. Our lives are in his compassionate and forgiving hands. When we can trust in His ability to get us through the ups and downs of life in his own way, according to his schedule, we realize he is not finished with us. What may appear to be a failure or mistake can be seen as a guidepost to a better way to go next time. You can change direction right now, begin again, start over, and take a different route. By trusting in God even in times of failure, you are eventually led to the very best path for your unique situation.

A person's relationship with God is like any other relationship in many respects. It takes time to develop and grow. It takes self-discipline and effort. Even when we are trying our best to grow in that relationship there are times of struggle. But even in times of struggle, a simple affirmation of faith can give us strength and hope.

When God seems distant, and when life becomes difficult, we can say the simple prayer: "Even now, Lord, I have complete trust in You." This short, yet powerful, affirmation of faith can open our eyes to behold God's hand at work in our lives, and help us to realize that he was really there all the time.

DACOWITS representatives visit Benning

Ann M. McDonald

Mary J. Galer (l), Carolyn Gates and Lt. Col. James Holt view some students going through tower week at the Airborne School

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

Two members of the Defense Advisory Committee on Women in the Services (DACOWITS) came to Fort Benning last week to view training and to talk to women about problems they encounter in the military.

The visit by Carolyn Gates from Germantown, Tenn. and Mary Jane Galer of Columbus, Ga. occurred just one week before one of the bi-annual conferences conducted by the committee.

According to Gates, Fort Benning is one of the two military installations DACOWITS members are required to visit annually.

She said the purpose of the visit is to gather data on the problems women have in the military so DACOWITS can try to resolve them.

"Mrs. Galer and I have found the morale here at Fort Benning is very high and that the women are proud of the roles they play here," Gates said.

She added that the problems women are having here are the same ones military women all over the country are having.

"For the most part, women are worried about their careers being stifled because not all job fields are available to them," Gates said. "They also mentioned child care and the quality and design of the uniform."

Gates has served on the committee for more than a year while Galer was just appointed the position earlier this year. Fort Benning was the first military installation she has visited since her appointment.

Galer, who resides in Columbus, works as a director for Library Service at Troy State University.

According to Galer, she had done community work her entire life so when her children grew older, she decided to run for public office. She won the election and has been active in politics since then.

"I was very honored when I was appointed to be one of the 34 committee members who serve on DACOWITS," she said.

DACOWITS was established in 1951 by the Secretary of Defense. It is composed of civilian men and women who are selected on the basis of their outstanding reputations in business, the professions, public service and their records of civic leadership.

DACOWITS members serve for a term of three years. They serve as individuals, not as official representatives of any group or organization with which they are affilitated.

In carrying out the purpose of DACOWITS, the committee interprets to the public the need for and the role of women as an integral part of the Armed Forces and encourages public acceptance of military service as a citizenship responsibility and as a career field for qualified women in the services.

Mother-daughters trio wins 3-mile run

Steve Simpson

Jennifer (l), Nancy and Megan Simpson on a light workout at Fort Benning. The mother-daughters trio recently entered the 3-mile event at the OWC Festival of Running and each took first place in her age group.

By Sally Roberts
197th Infantry Brigade correspondent

Whether it's for fun, fitness, or for the spirit of competition, running is all in the family for Nancy, Jennifer and Megan Simpson.

This mother and daughter trio entered the 3-mile event in the recent Officers Wives' Club Festival of Running and each took first place in her age group.

The trio is led by mother Nancy, who took first place in the age 35-39 category.

Next is Jennifer, who entered the age 12-14 category and wound up as the top female finisher overall in the 3-mile race.

Megan came in more than two minutes ahead of the second place finisher in the 9 and under category.

"I knew I could take first place," said 9-year-old Megan with a confident shrug of her shoulders. "Mom and I ran together three times before the race, and I walk to school every day."

But, Mom, Nancy Simpson, is also motivated by Army fitness standards. She has been stationed at Fort Benning for two years, along with her husband Steve.

Nancy works for the Department of Anesthesiology at Martin Army Community Hospital, and her husband is in the 197th Infantry Brigade.

"During the past three weeks, I have tried to run every day to get ready for my PT test," Nancy said. "But I also run to ventilate my frustrations.

"It's easy to find reasons not to run," she said. "But, you feel good if you just find the time to do it."

Running is a bit more competitive for Jennifer, a freshman at Pacelli High School. She was a member of Pacelli's Girls Cross Country team, which became the Georgia State Champions last fall for Class A high schools.

Jennifer also placed seventh in state competition individually and is presently on the Pacelli Girls Track team.

"I just wanted to finish first in my age group," said Jennifer. "But, I saw that no one was ahead of me so I thought, why not go for it."

"Jennifer was there to win," Nancy added. "Megan just wanted to keep Jennifer in sight, and I just wanted to finished."

Whatever their motivation, the Simpsons have found one enjoyable, yet challenging, way to spend their quality time together.

Faith students win competition

By Beth Middlemiss
Fort Benning Schools

Fort Benning's Don C. Faith Middle School students took top honors in the regional Georgia History Day Competition in Americus, Ga. in two categories.

Nina Kendall, Yamilette Flores, Shawn Gravatt and LaToya Thomas won first place in a skit competition with a skit entitled "Building Bridges to Make a New Frontier".

Erica Buljung, James Mullennax, Carla Smith and Sonya Tomas took first place with a videotape presentation on Horace King called "King of the Covered Bridges."

These Faith Middle School students and Faith teachers who sponsored them, Mary Barnette and Pam Tate, will travel to Agnes Scott College in Atlanta tomorrow to represent the region in the Georgia State History Day competition.

Follow these backyard barbecue safety tips

Fort Benning Safety Office

With the onset of warm weather in the air, it's time to get out the old grill for backyard barbecues and picnics at the park.

Barbecues are a popular form of outdoor activity, but, don't let them make you an accident statistic. Know the rules of safety.

The following are a few safety tips to help you enjoy these cookouts:

•Line the bottom of the clean grill with an inch of ash, gravel or commercial charcoal base to absorb dripping grease and reduce flare-ups.

•Set the grill on a level surface away from low branches, dry brush or other combustibles — including the house or garage.

•To start a charcoal fire safely, use wood shavings or charcoal lighter fluid. Follow package directions when using charcoal lighter fluid. Never substitute gasoline or other combustible liquids. Never add charcoal lighter fluid after the charcoal begins to burn.

•Never use the grill indoors. Burning charcoal produces carbon monoxide (an odorless, tasteless, lethal gas).

•Keep pets and children away from charcoal grills to eliminate the danger of their touching the grill or accidentally pushing it over on someone.

•Keep sharp instruments out of reach of small children. When passing knives and forks to other persons, keep the point turned away from them.

•Use proper equipment to prevent burns; a pair of heavy-type potholders, along-handled spatula or fork, and a pair of long tongs.

•Wear safe clothing. Avoid dangling ties and shirtails that could easily brush against the fire. Keep other combustibles away from the grill.

•Keep garden hose ready for use in case of fires outside the grill. After cookouts, drench fire with water and promptly dispose of soaked ashes in a metal trash container.

Backyard barbecues and picnics are a very enjoyable part of outdoor fun. It can stay fun for you and your family by the safe use of charcoal and charcoal grills. Remember, you're out to barbecue the hamburgers not the chef.

Energy expense make some shudder, grimace

By Tom Joyce
American Forces Information Service

Ask a group of people what sound makes them wince and their answers will vary.

Some shudder at the sound of a gunshot. Others cringe when fingernails race across a chalkboard. And a few would probably admit to a grimace each time their home heater kicks on, adding nickels to the utility bill.

Electricity and natural gas are getting more expensive. It was only 14 years ago — 1974 — that Americans waited in lines for hours to buy gasoline. Home heating fuel costs skyrocketed and electric bills slowly inched upward. The energy crunch reminded everyone how valuable — and expensive — energy could be.

The Department of Defense and the military services have electric bills of their own to pay each month. In fiscal 1986, they totaled almost $1.5 billion. It's no wonder energy conservation programs receive so much attention throughout the defense community.

Electric bills account for 57 percent of DoD's facility energy needs. And figures show that DoD is using 2 percent more electricity each year.

Millard E. Carr, a professional engineer and assistant for energy policy with the DoD Energy Programs Office, said that even though use of petroleum products and heating fuels are down throughout DoD, electricity use continues to rise.

"Like the rest of America, DoD is becoming more electrical-energy intensive," he said. "There are more terminals on desks, more training is being done using simulators and robots are retrieving parts in warehouses. All of this modernization requires more electricity."

Even with increased electric use, DoD and the military services are still using electricity more wisely than the nation as a whole. Between 1975 and 1985, the United States consumed about 30 percent more energy than it did in the previous 10 years, while DoD consumption went up only 17 percent.

Carr said programs to improve the quality of life for military members also resulted in increased energy use.

"We wanted people to come into the military and stay. That meant more construction and facilities upgrades. More stereos, televisions and air conditioning. And with the efforts of efficiency-conscious service engineers, electrical usage didn't go up as much as it could have."

Because of the current "glut" in petroleum, energy conservation is not receiving the emphasis it did 10 years ago. Carr said he believes some people may be letting their guards down, letting temperatures in buildings drift upward, leaving lights on and leaving equipment running when it's not really needed. He estimates that as much as 10 percent of DoD's current energy bill is caused by waste.

"It continues to be in everyone's best interest to be sure electricty is not being wasted," said Carr. "Toward that end, each service has agreed to try to reduce energy consumption throughout DoD by an additional 10 percent."

Between 1975 and 1985, DoD and the services set a goal of a 20 percent reduction in energy use. Carr said a reduction of 18 percent was achieved, even with the expanded growth in requirements.

"But we do not want to try to achieve it at the expense of productivity, mission accomplishment or quality of life," he stressed. "Each service recognizes there is some waste that can be avoided to reach and goal.

"Our emphasis will be on providing complete mission support and personal comfort while increasing the efficiency with which we use that energy we need to do our jobs. Energy is a precious resource, and we all can be better resource managers to keep the bills down."

Air conditioning start-up depends on many factors

By Becky Ray
Energy Management Branch

Although heating season ended only a few weeks ago, the Directorate of Engineering and Housing has already received many calls concerning the use of air conditioners. The start-up of air conditioning season has many implications, and many factors must be weighed prior to the decision to turn units on.

One reason air conditioners are not turned on indiscriminately is that use of heating and cooling is guided by regulations.

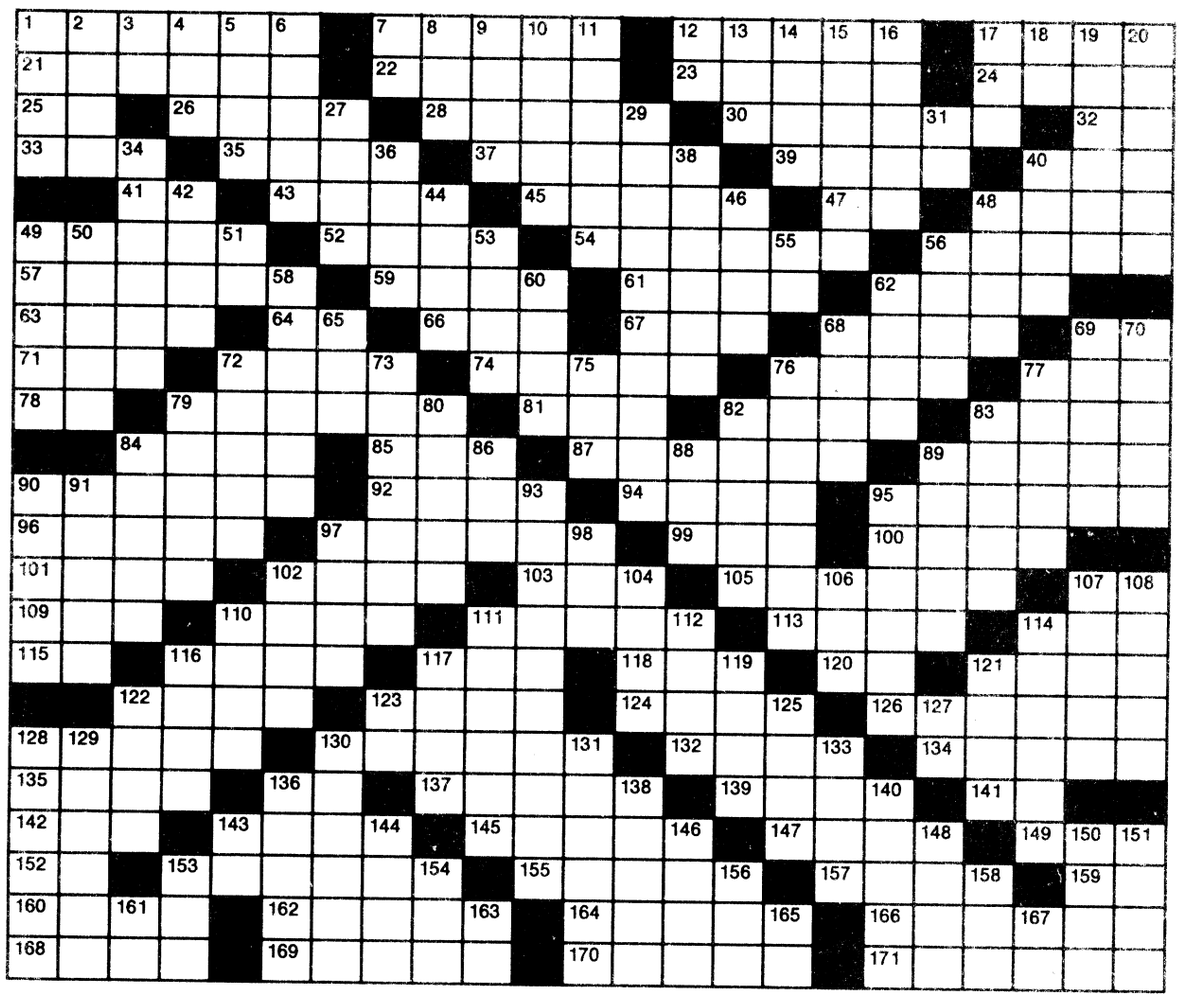
According to the Training and Doctrine Command (TRADOC), dry-bulb temperatures and humidity levels must rise above an established "comfort line" for four out of five days before air conditioning may be used. So far this year, the criteria have not been met.

Historically, temperatures and humidity levels rise above specified levels around the first of June.

Other factors are also considered. Because Fort Benning must work within an energy budget, recently cut by three percent, the command must use every means available to meet goals.

Any energy use beyond the amount authorized for the fiscal year will be paid for from other units' budgets, which could have a detrimental effect on other important programs or activities.

Post officials recognize that it may be wiser to be more restrictive with air conditioning use now, rather than be forced to reduce cooling during hotter months. Historically, the high temperatures now being recorded will not last. On the other hand, late August and early September will almost certainly be hot and humid. If too much cooling energy is used during the spring, it won't be available later, when it is needed most.



Because air conditioning consumes such large amounts of energy, the difference of a few days of cooling may make or break the post's energy goal for the entire year.

Energy waste by a few careless and abusive occupants may also cause many others to lose the use of air conditioning later in the year.

Careful energy management by energy officials, and cooperation by post residents, will allow the installation to operate within goals while providing as much cooling as possible.

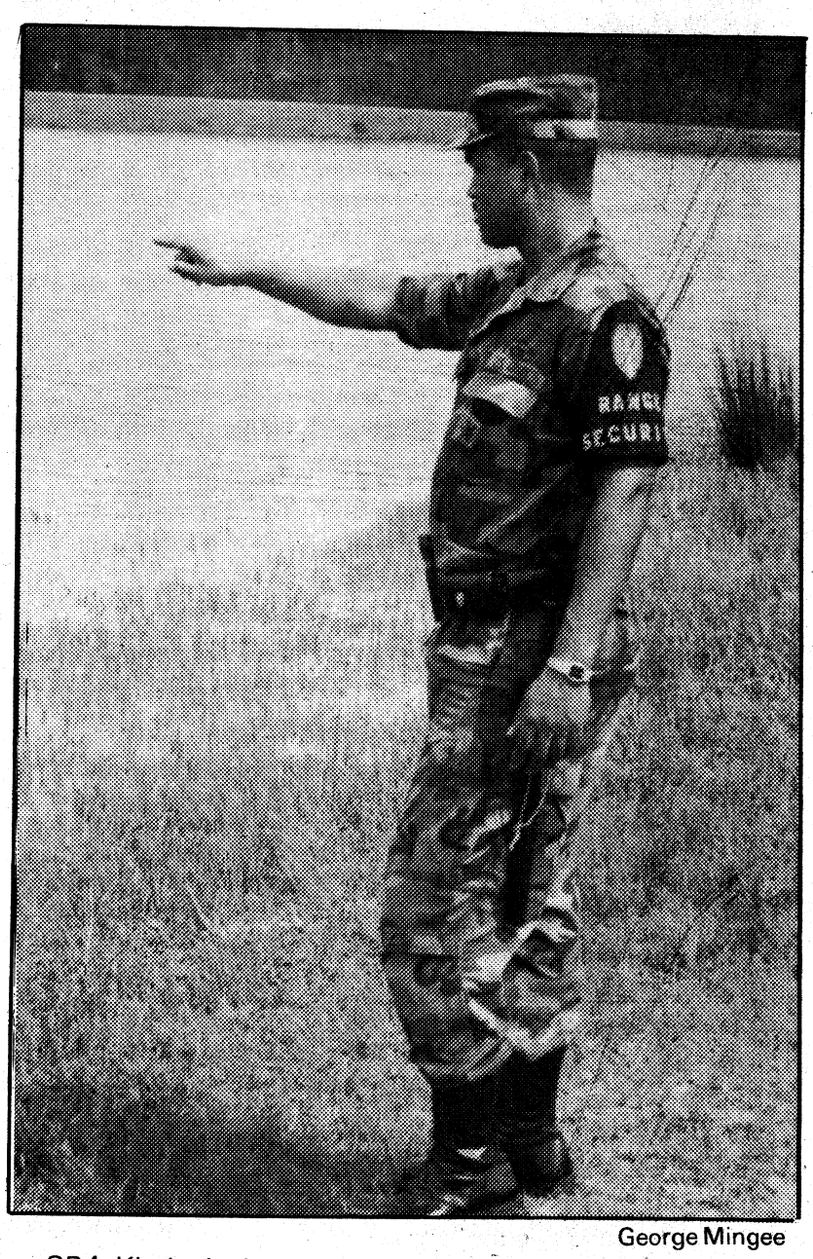
197th Infantry soldiers pull Game Warden duty

By George Mingee
197th Infantry Brigade correspondent

Above the tops of the trees the sun rises in the east, and the animals and hunters of Fort Benning begin to move about in the wooded areas. On a typical spring morning this scenario unfolds, and to keep abreast of this development, the soldiers of the 197th Infantry Brigade spring into action as Range Security/Game Wardens.

Some 17 people on special duty are assigned to the U.S. Army Infantry Center USAIC Military Company, providing range security 24 hours a day.



Their patrols cover 60,000 acres or 94 square miles of ranges, accessible ponds and hunting areas.

"Our people insure the property and buildings of the different ranges are securely kept. Also, we enforce the state hunting and fishing as well as the post laws," said SSgt. Horace Johnson, USAIC Military Police platoon sergeant.

The job of a game warden could be a dull one one if you look at it in only one perspective. Game wardens can be observed constantly driving around Fort Benning enforcing safe hunting and verifying state licenses. But the job can be rewarding if you see a fishermen pull in a 6-pound bass or a 15 year old who just took his first trophy-size buck.

"It can be dangerous at times, because we do have a few hunters who are poachers, and they don't care about the regulations," said Kieth Jackson. "But, we're not only keeping the hunters and fishermen safe but the animals as well. This job challenges you a lot, having to work with people and animals of all kinds."

For the soldiers on Range Security/Game Warden duty, it's a lot of sleepless nights on patrol, but also a necessary job to insure the safety of others. Conserving and managing the wildlife, allows for future generations to enjoy the game sport of hunting.

SP4 Kieth Jackson points out where he has observed turkeys coming to Twilight pond to drink, while patroling Fort Benning.

American Bald Eagle slips to edge of extinction

Georgia Department of Natural Resources

Americans have allowed our national symbol, the bald eagle to slip to the edge of extinction. Once eagles were a common sight in Georgia skies, today there are only seven nests in our state.

With the help of the Nongame Wildlife Fund, authorized in state law in 1985 at the request of Governor Joe Frank Harris, the Department of Natural Resources hopes that throughout Georgia eagles will be a common sight again.

The Adopt-An-Eagle Program offers Georgia citizens the chance to join in bald and golden eagle restoration projects, begun in 1979 by DNR.

Using a system called "hacking," biologists raise eaglets in a semi-captive state and then release the birds when they are old enough to fly.

Bald eagles are hacked on Butler Island in the Altamaha Wildlife Management Area near Darien, while golden eagles are raised on Pigeon Mountain near LaFayette in northwest Georgia.

Since its beginning, the project has provided for the release of 43 bald eagles and 36 goldens.

Federal funds for endangered species programs like this one are steadily decreasing. This year there are only $10,000 in federal funding available to offset the project's $100,000 budget need.

Because there are no state funds appropriated for the program, DNR has needed to rely heavily upon private support.

When funding was unavailable last year for golden eagle restoration efforts, groups like the Georgia Kraft Hunting Club, Brownie Troop 1925 of Dallas, Ga., and the Columbus Audubon Society readily responded to the need.

However, if the eagle restoration efforts are to continue, other groups and individuals must step forward and help in the funding.

Anyone can participate in the effort — individuals, clubs, school groups or other organizations.

With a $1,500 donation, a supporter can become an "Eagle Parent." Eagle parents will be invited to the "delivery" when young eagles arrive at either the LaFayette or Atlanta airports after being transported from golden eagle nests in Wyoming or from the Bald Eagle Captive Breeding Program in Pautuxant, Md.

DNR will send each parent, or set of parents, an adoption certificate, a photo, regular updates and an invitation to visit the hacking site on Pigeon Mountain or Butler Island.

Those who contribute $1,000 will be "Eagle Godparents." These supporters may join Eagle Parents, with whom they have been matched, for their bird's "christening" at a picnic and ceremony near the release site on Pigeon Mountain. Godparents will also receive an adoption certificate, a photo and regular updates.

All other donors, "Eagle Friends," will receive a certificate acknowledging their contribution to the program.

The seven natural bald eagle nests are also available for adoption. A sponsor may adopt a nest for $5,000 becoming a member of the "Best For A Nest Club."

Give Wildlife A Chance! To support the Nongame Wildlife Program or receive information about adopting an eagle, contact the Georgia Department of Natural Resources, 205 Butler Street SE, Suite 1258, Atlanta, GA 30334 or call 1-800-342-7275.

Fat and cholesterol have many important roles

Martin Army Community Hospital

Both fat and cholesterol have a number of important roles in the body. Yet there is no agreement regarding their optimum level in the diet.

Americans consume about 37 percent of their energy intake as fat.

Dietary fat serves as a concentrated source of energy; carries the fat soluble vitamins A, D, E, and K; and supplies essential fatty acids.

Dietary fat is responsible for the characteristic flavor, aroma, and texture of many foods, which help make them taste better.

Fat also promotes a feeling of fullness by slowing the process of digestion.

In the body, fat is an integral part of all membranes.

Fatty tissue serves as insulation against the loss of body heat and is important in terms of cushioning the body and its internal organs.

Cholesterol too, is an important structural and functional part of all membranes and is necessary in the formation of bile, steroid hormones, and Vitamin D.

Cholesterol, however, is not a dietary essential nutrient for adults as it is synthesized in the body, primarily in the liver and intestines, at a rate sufficient to meet body needs.

Elevated blood cholesterol is one of the main risk factors for coronary heart disease — which causes 30 percent of deaths yearly.

The other risk factors for coronary heart disease (CHD) are high blood pressure, overweight, cigarette smoking and alcohol consumption.

When blood cholesterol is measured, the doctor sometimes specifies that the percentage of LDL and HDL be determined.

LDLs are low density lipoprotein (fat protein molecules) that contain the greatest percentage of cholesterol and may be responsible for depositing cholesterol in the artery walls. For that reason LDLs are known as bad cholesterol.

HDLs are high density lipoprotein that contain the greatest amount of protein and the smallest amount of cholesterol. They are believed to take cholesterol away from cells and take it back to the liver for processing or removal from the body.

Researchers have noted that persons with higher levels of HDL have less heart disease. Thus HDLs have become known as good cholesterol.

Cholesterol is found only in animal foods. Organ meats, egg yolk and many dairy products are high in colesterol.

The American Heart Association advocates a diet containing 30 to 35 percent of calories as fat with an increase in the ratio of polyunsaturated to saturated fatty acids and no more than 300mg of cholesterol a day. A two to one ratio of polyunsaturated to saturated fats is recommended.

There are several ways to lower blood cholesterol including maintaining ideal body weight, exercising regularly and reducing the saturated fat and cholesterol.

Substitute polyunsaturated fat for part of the saturated fat.

Here are some practical steps to cut down on cholesterol and saturated fat:

- Choose more vegetables, fruits, whole grain cereals and complex carbohydrates (starches and pastas); consume less refined sugars.
- Choose fish, poultry and lean cuts of meat and serve moderate portions.
- Trim fat from meat before cooking.
- Eat less organ meat such as liver, kidney.
- Use skim milk or low fat milk, low fat yogurt and low fat cheeses.
- Eat less cream, ice cream or butter.
- Eat fewer eggs, or at least fewer egg yolks (preferably no more than three per week).
- Broil, boil, roast, and stew meats to help remove fat; skim fat off soups and broths.

Within each of the basic food groups, which are essential to a nutritionally balanced diet, lower fat products can be selected.

To insure an adequate intake of essential nutrients without consuming energy in excess of that needed for basalmetabolism and activitiy, all Americans should consume a wide variety of foods from the basic food groups in moderate servings.

Beware of nutrition quackery

Martin Army Community Hospital

Americans spend billions of dollars each year on nutrition quackery.

Most people are vulnerable to nutrition quackery because they do not know enough of the true facts about foods. Some of the more common misconceptions will be discussed here.

Some believe that honey has a particular health value. Honey is a crude sugar that has only trace amounts of nutrients.

Honey can even be dangerous because it may contain botulinum spores and those who do not have a resistance to the botulism may become very ill.

For this reason, children under one year of age should never be given honey. Honey even causes tooth decay more readily than white sugar.

Eggs are another food that have had some false claims made about them. Many faddists encourage eating raw eggs. Eggs can carry salmonella which can lead to food poisoning if eaten raw.

Raw eggs contain a substance called avid in which may destroy biotin — a nutrient needed by the human body.

Others claims that fertile eggs, brown-shelled eggs, and Araucana eggs are higher in cholesterol than regular eggs. Brown-shelled eggs are no different nutritionally than the white-shelled eggs.

Contrary to the beliefs of some faddists, fertile eggs do not contain an anti-cholesterol substance and are not lower in cholesterol.

Do not be caught in the "All Natural," "Organically Grown" trap. Natural and organic are unregulated terms used for marketing foods. The term natural connotates unprocessed but often fruits are dried, nuts roasted or salted and oils are heated. Even this type of processing affects nutrients.

Organic refers to foods raised without chemicals. Studies have shown that organically-grown foods are indistinguishable from conventionally-raised foods.

Granola is usualy advertised as an all natural food. Granola is a cereal product with added dried fruits, coconut, seeds, nuts, honey, brown sugar and oil. Actually, granola is high in calories and nutritionally inferior to fortified cereals.

These are only a few of the misconceptions about food. There are many others.

Questions concerning other foods and their true nutritional qualities should be directed to a registered dietitian or a qualified nutritionist.

Beware of those who offer quick dramatic cures and do not have the proper credentials. For further information concerning this topic contact the Clinical Dietitian, Martin Army Community Hospital, 544-1541.

Heavy sodium intake strains body

By Ginger M. Boas
Martin Army Community Hospital

With increased emphasis on a healthy diet comes the suggestion to limit sodium intake. Why? Reasons are that excess sodium causes some individuals to hold water in the body and puts a strain on important body functions.

Consequences that could occur are stroke, heart disease, or kidney failure resulting from hypertension.

Since salt is made up primarily of sodium, substituting spices that do not contain salt or sodium in cooking and on the table can greatly reduce sodium intake without sacrificing flavor.

By following some simple tips, your food will not only taste good, but be good for you.

- Avoid spices that contain salt or sodium in the name.
- Substitute non-salt herb mixes for salt when seasoning food.
- Read food labels. There is hidden sodium in many processed foods.
- Try to reduce the use of high sodium condiments: ketchup, steak sauce, barbecue sauce, soy sauce, worchestershire sauce and prepared mustard.
- Try the following spice mixes in the salt shaker for use on the table and in cooking.

SPICE MIXES

Mix all of the following seasonings together and place in your salt shaker:

1 Tbsp chili powder, 1 Tbsp garlic powder, 2 Tbsp dry mustard, 6 Tbsp onion powder, 2 Tbsp ground oregano, 3 Tbsp paprika, 2 tsp black pepper, 1 Tbsp poultry seasoning.

Mix these seasonings together and place in shaker:

3 Tbsp dry mustard, 3 Tbsp onion power, 1 Tbsp garlic powder, 1½ Tbsp white pepper, 3 tsp paprika, ¼ Tbsp basil.

Blend all ingredients and place in shaker.

2 Tbsp onion powder, 3 Tbsp garlic powder, 1½ Tbsp basil, 3 Tbsp paprika, 6 tbsp parsley flakes.

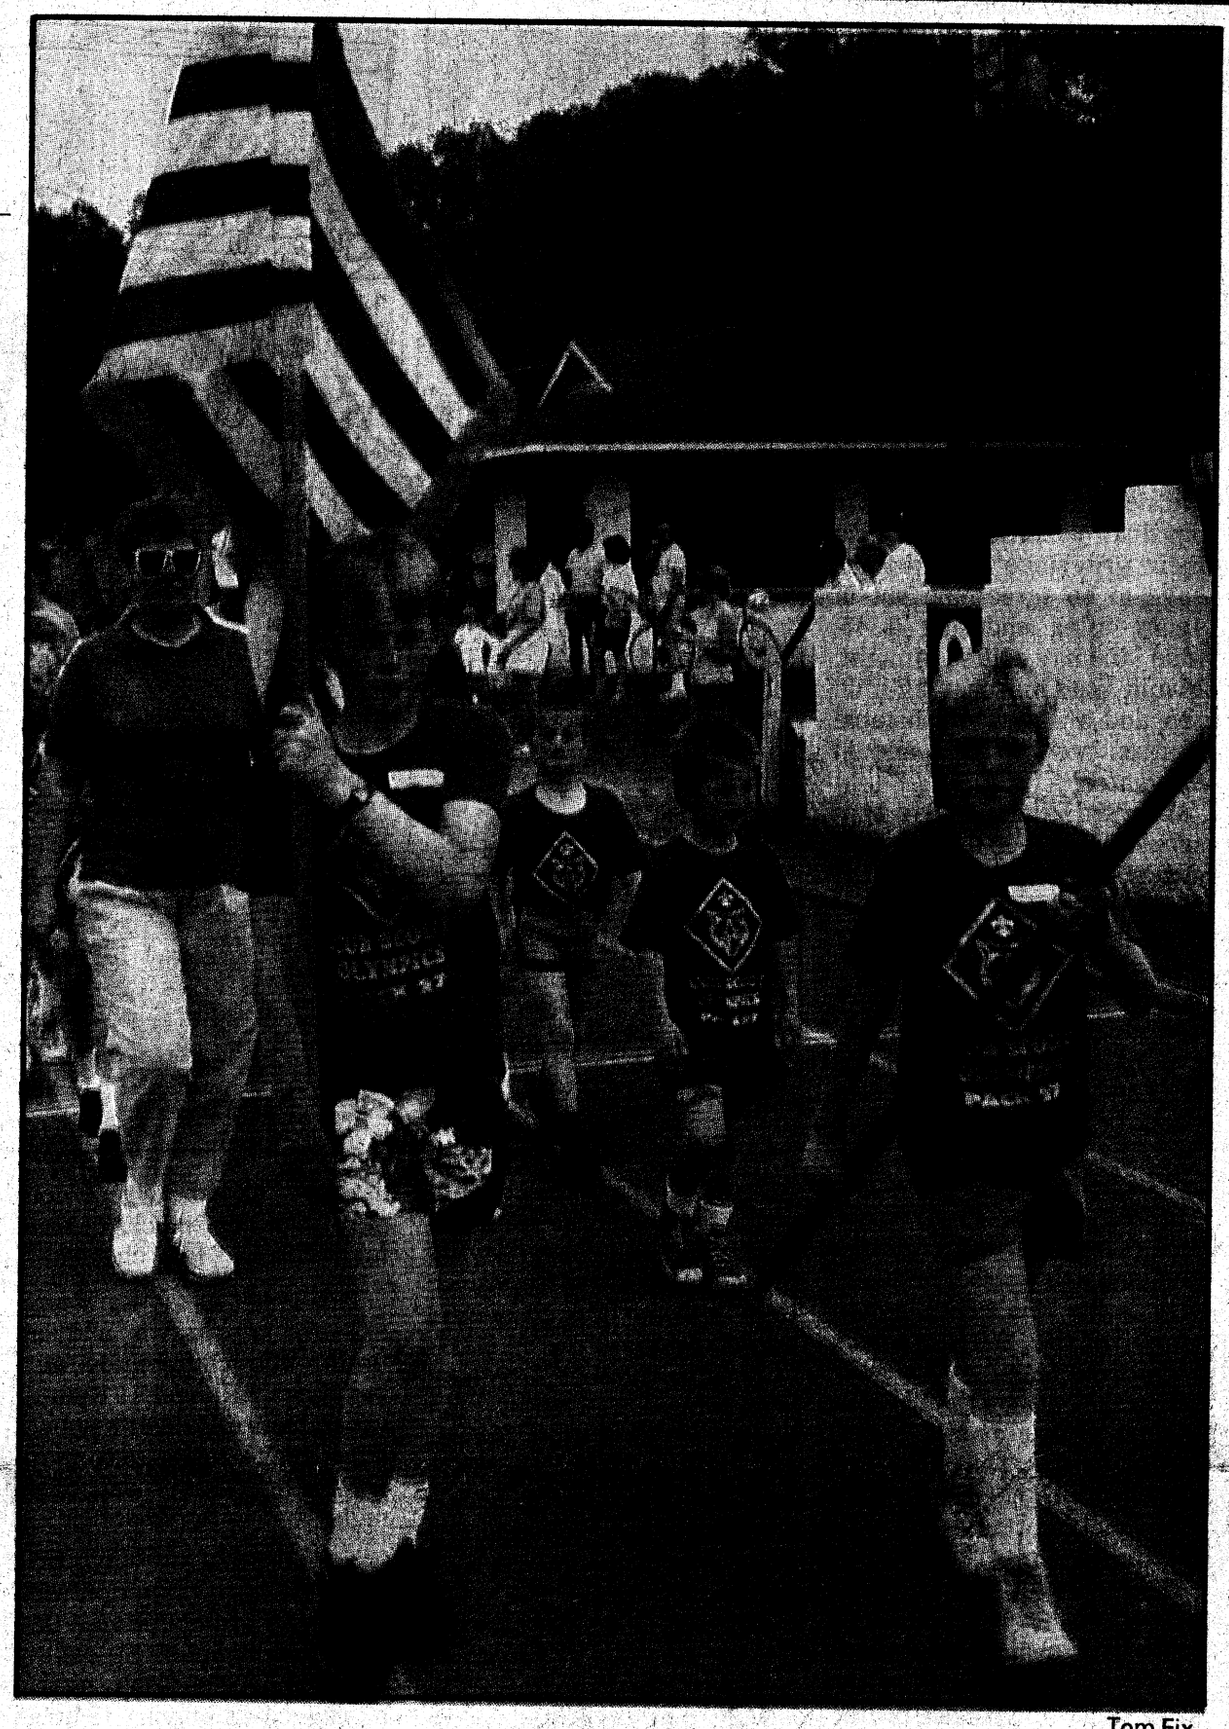
Fort Benning's SSgt. Samuel P. Watkins has been named Drill Sergeant of the Year from among 20 active duty units in competition held at the Army's Training and Doctrine Command in Fort Monroe, Va.

With 10 years of Army service, Watkins has served as wireman, switchboard operator and driver while assigned to 67th Signal Battalion, Fort Gordon, Ga. He has also served as chief of Maintenance at Camp Darby, Italy.

Watkins, who is a member of Co. B, 1st Battalion, 50th Infantry, 1st Infantry Training Brigade will serve as an advisor on initial entry training and as a point of contact to TRADOC.

Watkins recieved the Meritorious Service Medal and the Stephen Ailes Award, named for a former Secretary of the Army who was instrumental in forming the Drill Sergeant Corps in 1964.

Named as Army Reserve Drill Sergeant of the Year was SFC Raul Casas Jr. of 2nd Battalion, 89th Regiment, 402nd Brigade, 95th Division, Fort Sill, Okla.



Casas works with his family welding business in Demmitt, Texas.

He received a Meritorious Service Medal and the Ralph E. Haines Jr. Award, named for a former commander of the Continental Army Command, which is the predecessor of TRADOC.

In addition, both winners received the "Army Times" Eugene P. Fammiglietti Award, named for a late editor of the Army Times.

The active Army runner-up for Drill Sergeant of the Year is SFC Vera M. Stinson, of 3rd Battalion, 112th Military Intelligence Brigade, Goodfellow Air Force Base in Texas.

The reserve runner-up is SFC Jay F. Finn, assigned to the Leadership Academy of the 84th Division, Milwaukee, Wis.

Local businessman gets SPIRIT award

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

Although not as a soldier, Oscar L. Betts Jr. has been on active duty for 53 years and for his efforts, he has been given the SPIRIT of Fort Benning Award. His association with the post dates back to 1935 when he came to Columbus to construct barracks at Fort Benning; he became intertwined with the post and has been since.

After the barracks were completed, he started managing the Ralston Hotel in downtown Columbus, the site of many family reunions during World War II.

While in that position, he made many friends on post. A holiday rarely went by without the hotel hosting a special activity for soldiers.

During the World War II, the Ralston was the meeting place for soldiers and their families and was always alive with activity. Sometimes Betts and his wife gave up their own room at the hotel to accommodate a soldier.

After the war, business slacked off at the hotel, but Betts remained active with Fort Benning.

Betts was one of the people responsible for the present road system on post.

"Before the roads were improved, Fort Benning was virtually closed during the daylight hours because they were made one-way to get people to and from work in an expedient way," Betts said.

"Myself and other members of the community traveled to Washington,D.C. to resolve the problem," he said, "and the eventual result was the extension of I-185 between Highway 27 to 1st Division Road."

He has also been very involved with the Association of the United States Army since its organization.

"I was one of the first people to join AUSA when it was founded here in 1957," Betts said, "and later went on to become president of the local chapter and the 3rd Army Region."

He said that during that time Fort Benning had the largest chapter in the association.

Betts recalled that while he

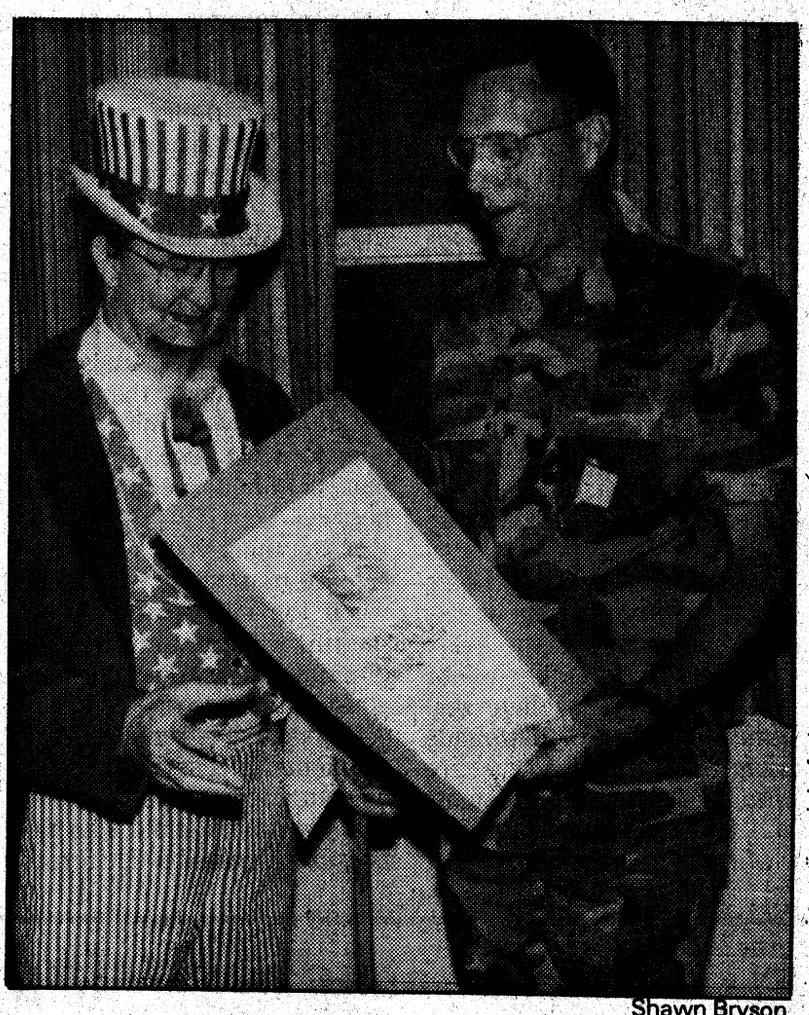
Raw sewage flowing in the Chattahoochee river from Atlanta poses no threat to Fort Benning's water supply. The installation draws its water from Upatoi creek, which serves as a tributary flowing into the river. This being the case, the creek is not subject to potential cross contamination eminating from the river.



Nation sets aside day for prayer

USAIC Chaplain's Office

The United States is a country rich with spiritual heritage. During the writing of the Constitution, as the founding fathers struggled to establish a nation that ensured the blessings of liberty and domestic tranquility, they sought the wisdom of God. The need for Americans to pray is as great today as it was during the establishment of our nation.

May 5 is the 1988 National Day of Prayer. Called upon by joint action in Congress in 1952, each succeeding president has proclaimed a day that focuses entirely on prayer for our nation, its leaders and its citizens. In his 1987 National Day of Prayer proclamation, President Reagan stated, " . . . the true meaning of our entire history as a nation can scarcely be glimpsed without some notion of the importance of prayer . . ."

The problems that face the United States today may be somewhat different, but the solution is the same! On May 5, embrace one of our greatest freedoms — the freedom to pray.

34th Med Bn hosts meal for Asian/ Pacific Islander Week

By Mary K. Shuler
34th Medical Battalion correspondent

Have you ever imagined yourself attacking a smorgasbord and finding yourself in a massive tactical retreat when you found the main dish consisted of sauteed snail? This is not to say that snails do not taste good; it is just that such a meal is foreign to us, and we would just avoid making contact.

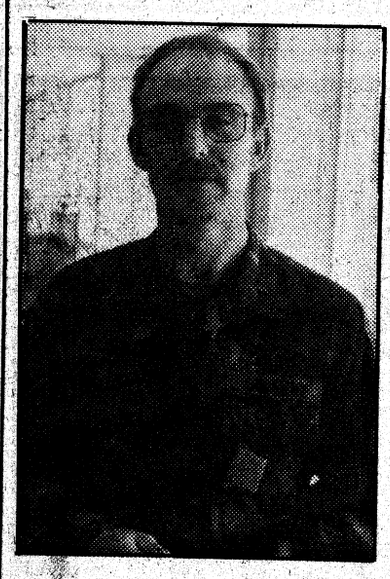
Actually, this dish, otherwise known as "escargot," is said to possess such an exquisite flavor that it is considered a delicacy all over the world — at least among those who are brave enough to try it.

Unfortunately, we tend to approach meeting people of different ethnic backgrounds in the same manner we approach tasting foods with which we are unfamiliar — we retreat. This comparison is not to place choosing one's friends and choosing one's dinner on the same level; it is merely an attention grabbing means of illustrating a serious issue that cannot be avoided due to the ethnic diversity of the Army.

In order to combat the lack of information and misinformation and emphasize the hertiage and contributions of the various factions of our culture, the Department of the Army, sporadically throughout the year, recognizes one of our many ethnic groups. May 7-14 has been designated to highlight the Asian and Pacific Islander heritages.

With the support of post command, the 34th Medical Battalion Dining Facility will host an Asian/Pacific Islander Week meal May 5, 11:30 a.m. to 1 p.m. Honored guests will include Col. Donald M. McKay Jr., deputy post commander and Lt. Col. Sang Soo Lim of the Republic of Korea. All Fort Benning military and their family members are invited to attend. Those of Asian or Pacific Islander decent are invited to wear their native dress and/or bring one of their favorite native dishes to set out for others to sample.

Attendees are asked to bring an open mind, a sense of adventure and a hearty appetite.



For more information, call 2nd Lt. Mary K. Shuler at 545-5315 or SFC Hayward McBride at 545-3488.

OPINION

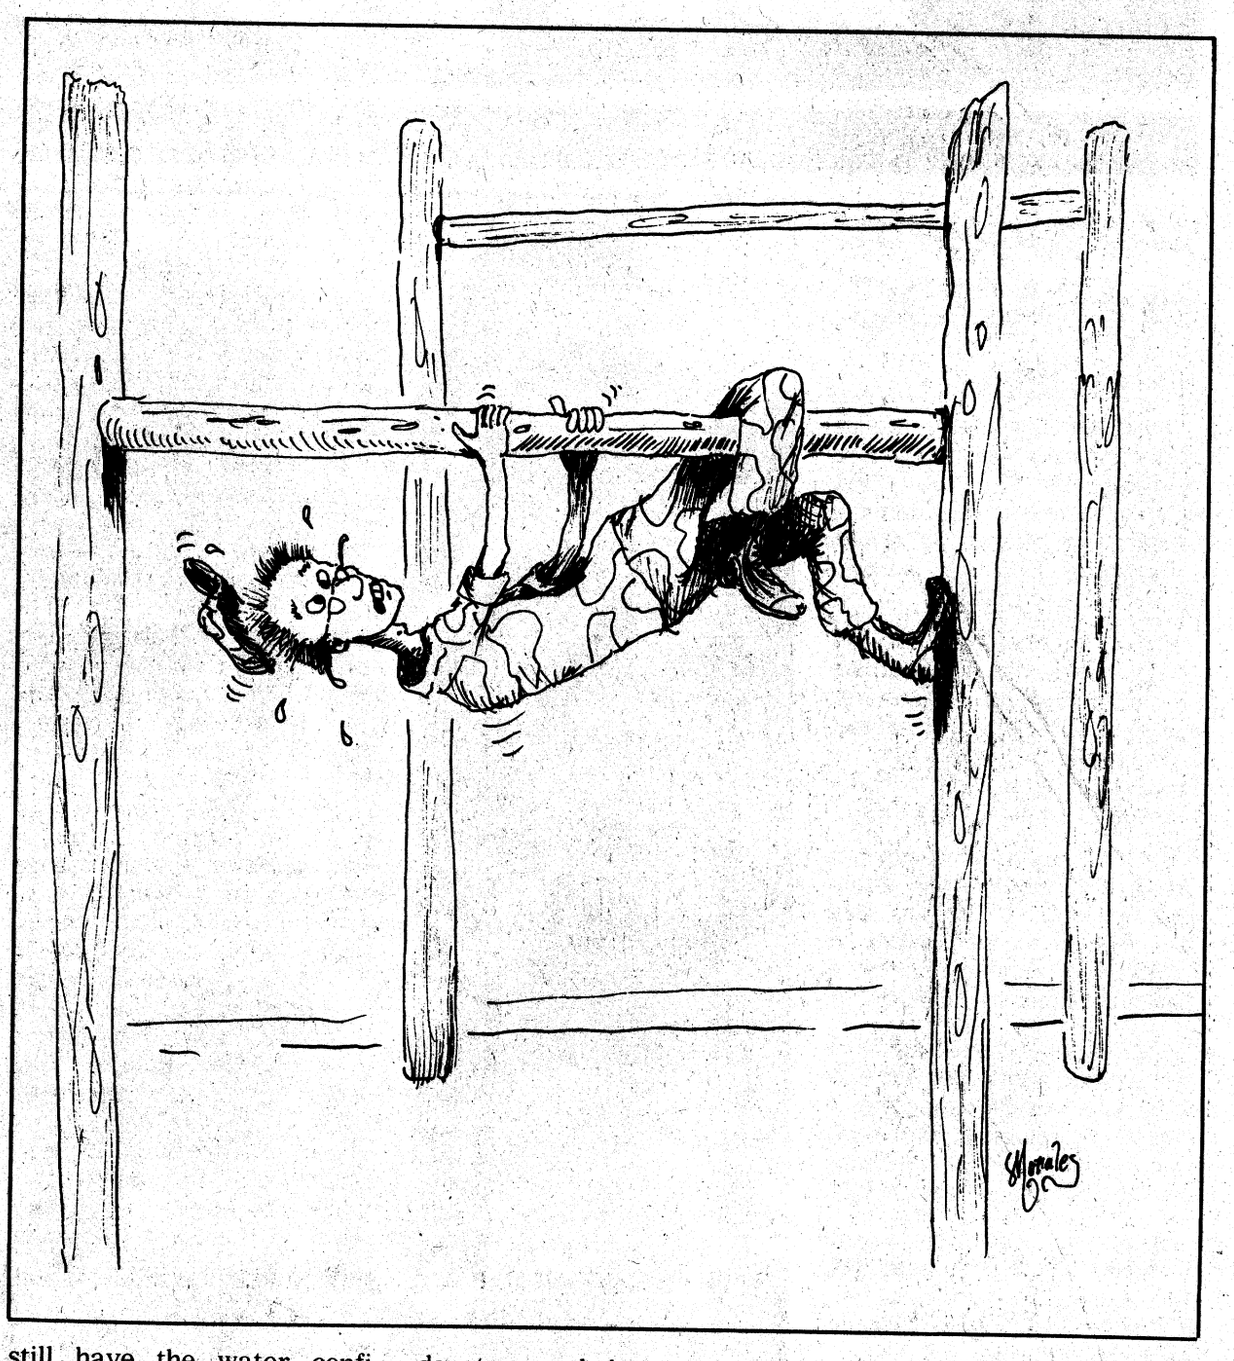
VARIOUS VOICES: What is the role of the secretary in the Army today?

SFC Patrick Mullis, Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment — "A lot of times a secretary is like a right-hand person. They have a hard job. In our office, we have one secretary who works for nine people. Without her, we wouldn't get out all the correspondence we need to get done before its' suspense."

1st Lt. Mike Pappas, Company C, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, Infantry Officer Advanced Course — "A secretary is there to assist his or her boss in completing his role. In the past, they have had to have the ability to research and interpret Army rules and regulations, and sometimes, advise their bosses on certain things."

Sgt. Myrtis Butler, Company B, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment — "In many instances, a secretary working for the Army has a hard job. For instance, the secretary for our directorate has to proofread everything before the directorate head sees it. She also makes all of his appointments and various other things."

Maj. Bob Tezza, Company B, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, Tactics Division, Combined Arms and Tactics Division — "The ideal secretary is courteous pleasant to work with and efficient in that they insure that the boss has time to concentrate on important aspects of his job. The secretary we have consistantly makes a positive contribution."



Sgt. Maj. Robert Beverley, Company B, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, Directorate of Training and Development — "She plays a very important role because she keeps paperwork flowing, and the Army is made up of paperwork. In a lot of cases, without secretaries we would be lost."

2nd Lt. Donna Wright, 277th Maintenance Company, Atlanta National Guard — "Besides the normal clerical skills, they need to have basic knowledge of the regulations and manuals, and they have to have a good rapport with Army personnel."

Rangers face tough competition

By Clyde Snively
USAIC Public Affairs Office

The best Rangers in the world are here this week for the meanest, baddest competition known to man.

The "David E. Grange Best Ranger Competition," wasn't dreamed up by man. It was conceived by a committee of sadists who wanted to see just how much pain the human body could endure.

Television has various super man competitions that these Rangers could do while eating breakfast without breaking sweat in July.

The fact they are able to walk to the awards ceremony the next day attests to their physical condition, but also their grit since their bodies have to be screaming out in agony after enduring a 15-mile land nav course at night, 18-mile road march, a 2.7-mile run and all sorts of obstacle courses both on land and in the water.

The Six Million Dollar Man should have been as well constructed as these Rangers. If he had been he wouldn't have needed Lindsay Wagner to bail him out of trouble.

I'm not saying these guys are super human, but when's the last time you negotiated the Darby Queen? Okay, now go back and do it after taking the Army PT test, jumping out of helicopters into water, paddling a canoe five miles, going on the road march and land nav course, breaking your arms and crushing fingers on the 60-foot prusik climb, and leaving your guts, skin and bones on the bayonet assault course over a period of 50 hours.

Then try to negotiate the 25 diabolical obstacles of the Darby Queen.

You'd probably find it was all you could do just to walk up to each obstacle and touch it, let alone scramble up the skyscraper and bounce off the gut buster.

If you survive that, and you will if you're a Ranger, you still have the water confidence test, helocast swim and the buddy run to look forward to, completing your 60 days of Fort Benning fun condensed into 60 hours.

I used to think the iron man competition was tough, but that's over in one day, and the competitors can then go home and lick their wounds.

The time for the Rangers to recover depends on how fast they can finish the road march and land nav course. If they're slow, that's tough, no recovery time.

Well, that's not quite accurate. After all, they get a full hour for a hot breakfast on day two, and there're a couple of half hour blocks of time for refits and foot checks.

This is not to say the Rangers are all brawn and no brain. The competition also includes Ranger stakes, which tests a Ranger's knowledge on 15 ranger and infantry skills both day and night.

Nor is this to say that everyone is all that impressed with the competition. Our deputy debunks it. He claims the competition isn't nearly as rugged as playing 18 holes of golf on Pineside in the noon day sun.

"Ever wrestle a rattler for your ball?" he asks. "Or counter attack the thorn bushes with bare legs as you hack away at wait-a-minute vines with your three iron while searching for the all elusive ball.

"Or hump a heavy bag of golf clubs up heart break hill, then try to tee off with the sweat running down your nose and your glasses steaming up.

"Now that's macho."

Somehow I think I'd rather count on Rangers keeping the world safe for democracy than our deputy with his steamed up glasses and three iron on the 13th hole of Pineside.

Physician explains ER procedures

By Nicholas G. Lezama, M.D.
ER staff physician

Recently, I was waiting for a prescription in the main lobby of the hospital when I overheard someone complaining about a two-hour wait in the Emergency Room for treatment of his sore throat.

Perhaps you have had a similar experience. As an emergency room staff physician, I frequently encounter patients with frustrations regarding the long waits in the emergency room.

The goal of MACH is to provide prompt, high-quality medical care to a large and ever growing population. The system is not perfect, but an understanding of how it works will increase your chances of having your needs fulfilled.

The ER is open 24 hours a day and is equipped to treat major and minor emergencies.

The ER is not designed as a convenience clinic for people who have non-acute medical problems. Such patients can be better served in the Outpatient Clinic, Pediatric Clinic, Family Practice Clinic and Troop Medical Clinics.

Every patient who signs into the ER is interviewed by a staff physician, and if the patient's medical problem is non-acute, he may be asked to utilize one of the above clinics. This policy allows us to emphasize the treatment of life-threatening emergencies we frequently encounter, often unexpectedly.

An analysis of the patient flow in the ER shows our busiest hours are between 4-11 p.m. with the vast majority of patients having non-acute problems.

This large flow of patients places a heavy burden on the staff and results in the delay of treatment of the minor emergencies. The clinic system is designed to provide such non-emergency care with scheduled appointments and follow-up if needed.

Many patients call the ER seeking medical advice. Our policy has been not to give medical advice over the phone, but to state that if the patient thinks he has a medical emergency, to come to the ER.

Frequently, we receive calls from patients asking for pediatric information. Between 4-9 p.m., this information is available by calling the main desk and asking for the pediatrician on call.

Every family with children should have a copy of the Pediatric Medical Advisor, a booklet, written by the pediatric staff, answers many of the questions we receive regarding common pediatric illnesses.

If you think your symptoms require immediate evaluation when the clinics are closed, then the ER is ready to provide emergency evaluation and consultation.

If you have chronic medical problems, please bring a list of your medications.

If you have a child who has possibly ingested a dangerous substance, please bring the container. Parents can call the Poison Control Center in Atlanta (1-800-282-5846) if their child is not showing symptoms from ingesting the substance, and Poison Control will advise you if an ER visit is necessary.

Active duty personnel must utilize their Troop Medical Clinics for all non-emergency conditions.

The excuse we often hear is that the patient did not want to miss training and that's why he came to the ER after duty hours.

Unfortunately, many patients who avoid sick call have allowed their health to deteriorate to the extent that it warrants hospitalization for a condition that could have been easily treated during sick call hours if seen earlier.

The ER staff is sensitive to the needs of the community. With your cooperation, we can strive to treat emergency medical conditions in a timely and efficient manner.

Colombia's future leaders train with Guard

By Marco Morales
School of the Americas correspondent

Part of Colombia's future military leadership benefitted from training conducted April 15 with guardsmen of the 168th Engineer Company (Panel Bridge), an Alabama National Guard unit stationed in Eutaw, Ala.

Seventy-nine engineer branch cadets, currently going through a four-week course at the U.S. Army School of the Americas (USARSA), received 'hands-on' training on Bailey Bridge construction using Alabama National Guard hardware and expertise.

"It all began last year with an idea formulated by SFC Dean White and I," said SFC J. Ortiz-Maldonado, USARSA's Cadet Branch Orientation engineer course administrator. White is the full-time active duty operations noncommissioned officer for the 168th Engineers.

Last year, Ortiz said, USARSA and the 168th Engineers participated in a similar training exercise but with a different group of engineer students from USARSA.

"We pooled our ideas and resources and realized the long-range potential for not only expanding USARSA's training program, but also solidifying international relations at the 'grassroots' level," Ortiz said.

While the Guardsmen were logging-in their active duty training time, the cadets learned about the assembly and launching of the versatile Bailey bridge. In this exercise, the cadets put together a single-span, single-truss bridge using everything from base plates to launching rollers, sway braces, rocking rollers and steel pins.

Under the English-to-Spanish interpretations and guidance of Ortiz, SFC Ubiel Valencia, a senior U.S. instructor at USARSA in the Department of Combat Operations, general subjects division, and the Colombian tactical officers, the cadets worked together in several teams unloading 300-pound trusses and steel panels while keeping safety in mind.

"I've seen incidents during training exercises where fellow engineers have lost parts of fingers while putting the "Bailey" together," said White, adding, "The cadets were briefed on being constantly safety-conscious during this exercise."

One aspect of putting the "Bailey" together is a stretched-out length of engineering string known as the "center line," which is the most critical reference point in maintaining total construction and orientation of the bridge.

The training site, located about five miles west of the 168th's armory, exposed the cadets to Alabama territory known as the Black Warrior River Basin, or "black belt" area. The "black belt" is part of the rich, fertile soil used extensively in the Old South for cotton plantations. The bridge was built over a mud-filled, 10-foot-deep gulch.

"The Guardsmen are no strangers to training with allied nations in this hemisphere and in Europe," said Maj. Ralph T. Holmes, public affairs officer, Headquarters, Alabama National Guard at Montgomery.

The 168th Engineers are part of the 145th Engineer Battalion headquartered in Centerville, Ala. Currently boasting about 23,000 Army Guardsmen, the Alabama National Guard is the largest in the United States, according to Holmes.

"Working closely with the U.S. Southern Command, members of the 168th deployed in increments to Ecuador last year," Holmes stated. "They re-built a 300 foot, permanent bridge, which was destroyed in an earthquake in Archidona over the Andes Mountains. They also helped clear about eight miles of damaged road leading to that bridge."

The 168th also deploys to Germany on each "REFORGER," Holmes said.

USAITC activates 3rd Inf Tng Bde

By Marshal Santiago
IFC correspondent

The United States Army Infantry Training Center is participating in the total Army concept through the activation of 3rd Infantry Training Brigade. This unique Infantry One-Station-Unit-Training (OSUT) Brigade (Infantry), 70th Division (Training), is a Reserve unit headquartered in Flint, Mich.

From April 11 until July 15, the 3rd ITB will join the 1st and 2nd ITBs in training Infantrymen for the total force while conducting a Mobilization Army Training Center (MATC) Mission. The 3rd ITB (Prov.) is commanded by Lt. Col. Quentin A. Brainerd.

This is the first time a MATC mission has been conducted at Fort Benning. The exercise will test the training capabilities of the 70th Div. In the event of mobilization, the 70th Div. would assume command and control of the USAITC and continue the mission of training Skill Level 1 infantrymen for the force.

The 70th Div. is composed of the 1st Battalion, 329th Infantry and the 1st 2nd and 3rd Battalions, 333rd Infantry. For the MATC exercise, the 2nd Bn. 333rd Inf. was chosen as the battalion designation even though personnel will rotate from all the units.

The MATC mission continues a long relationship between the 70th Div. and the USAITC. Since 1978, the 1st ITB has served as the host unit for the 70th Div.'s annual, two-week training. The 1st ITB has also provided technical assistance, including sending Mobile Training Teams (MTTs) to Michigan when needed. For the MATC '88 mission, the 1st ITB spent approximately eight months in planning and preparation for the 3rd ITB activation.

Each unit within the 2nd Bde, 70th Div. has a host battalion within the 1st ITB. They are:
Reserve unit — USAITC Unit
1st Battalion, 329th Infantry — 2nd Battalion, 54th Infantry
1st Battalion, 333rd Infantry — 1st Battalion, 19th Infantry
2nd Battalion, 333rd Infantry — 3rd Battalion, 32nd Infantry
3rd Battalion, 333rd Infantry — 1st Battalion, 50th Infantry

During MATC '88, the 3rd ITB will inprocess, train, evaluate and graduate two OSUT companies totalling approximately 400 soldiers. The 2nd Bde. (Inf.), 70th Div. (TNG) will rotate elements of its training battalions through the 3rd ITB in seven, two-week training periods. For continuity purposes, a core cadre of 23 Reservists will remain at the 3rd ITB for the entire MATC exercise to coordinate administrative and logistical actions.

Relocation Assistance Center scheduled to open here Monday

USARC Public Affairs Office

A consolidated Relocation Assistance Center is scheduled to open at Fort Benning. The center, located in Soldiers' Plaza, building 2622, will officially open May 2 at a 2 p.m. ribbon cutting ceremony.

A broad range of services will be offered to incoming and outgoing soldiers and their families.

"The Relocation Center will help relieve some of the stress experienced by military and civilian DoD members and their families when they have to make a permanent move.

"The Army has determined that stress associated with a permanent change of station has an impact on retention and readiness," said Ellen O'Leary, chief of the Relocation Assistance Center. "With this service, some of the stress will be removed."

PCSing families can visit the center to obtain information on housing, schools, costs of living, special requirements such a medical treatment facilities and availability of job opportunities for spouses and other family members, at their next duty assignment.

Emphasis will be placed on providing detailed and current information on the destination community so that servicemembers, or civilian employees and their families know what to expect, can anticipate special problems and begin to work on special problems before the move.

Information about Fort Benning and the surrounding area will be provided to incoming families.

Departing servicemembers and their families usually face the most uncertainty about their moves and are most apprehensive because they are leaving familiar surroundings. Part of the Relocation Assistance Center's services will be to supply a pre-move checklist, which lays out what needs to be done prior to, during and after the move. It includes advice on how to determine what household goods to keep or sell; how to give notice to a landlord; how to transfer records from schools, physicians and dentists; how to rent or sell property; how to close out utilities; how to minimize packing and cleaning time and many more.

A unique Automated Information System in the Center will also show each individual how much the move is likely to cost and how much will be reimbursed. The information provided by the Relocation Assistance Center will help in budgeting move expenses and in taking other actions to keep out-of-pocket expenses down.

For incoming personnel, the most up-to-date information on Fort Benning and the surrounding area and a checklist of agencies and services available for assistance on Incoming families can obtain advice on how to minimize the cost of setting up a residence, information on housing areas and schools, local real estate practices including deposit requirements, tentant/landlord rights and responsibilities for renters and servicemembers rights. Job information for spouses, and other working family members and off-duty soldiers will also be available, as well as continuing education registration dates and course offerings.

Fort Benning has dedicated people in the Army Community Service program, Housing Referral Office, Transportation Office, Military Personnel Office, Chaplain's Office, in units and with volunteer agencies who provide excellent relocation assistance. The Relocation Assistance Center will be a "one-stop" information center where existing and new services will be highlighted without duplicating any of the services currently being provided by others.

The stresses on individuals and their families involved in relocating are numerous. O'Leary said, "Stress is like ants at a picnic. It's always there." At Fort Benning, people on the move can make their move easier by using the services provided at the Relocation Assistance Center.

The Relocation Assistance Center is currently scheduled to be open from 8 a.m. to 6 p.m. Monday through Friday and from 8 a.m. to 2 p.m. Saturday. The center will be closed Sunday and official holidays.

to take place at Fort Riley, Kan. this summer.

While at Benning, the cadets were primarily introduced to platoon environments. The exercise also focused attention on the teamwork that accompanies platoon functions, according to Maj. Linda Eppele, adjutant for the Army ROTC at Auburn University.

The cadets also used the exercise to further develop leadership skills and interaction with other ROTC programs. The exercise exposed many of the cadets to barracks life for the first time.

The improvements of day and night land navigation skills, as well as map reading skills were other missions carried out by the cadets.

The battalion commander of Bold Leader VIII was Col. Emmett F. Johnson, the professor of Military Science at Auburn University.

The exercise, which was hosted by Auburn University, ended April 24.

Betts

was in his dual presidency position, AUSA wanted to increase their membership by 100,000 members.

"The president of AUSA asked me how much I could increase membership in my region, and I told him 25,000. I met that goal, and for my efforts, I recieved the AUSA Anthony J. Drexel Biddle Medal."

In the citation given with the award, it states, "Rarely does one man, in the course of a single year as head of a voluntary organization, impress his personality and character on that organiztion as thoroughly as did Oscar L. Betts Jr."

After serving as president locally, Betts was elected to serve on the Board of Trustees for the association. "I really enjoyed those monthly trips to Washington and meeting all the different people in that area," Betts said.

He said the work he has done with AUSA and this post has been so rewarding. "Frankly, I'm surprised that more people don't take the interest that I do in Fort Benning.

"I guess I'm just one of those peculiar fellas who gets interested and stays interested," he said. "When I do something, I like to do my very best."

At 85, he's still doing his very best. Betts rarely misses a ceremony on post. "I go because I like being around Fort Benning and the people who are involved in the activities.

As for the SPIRIT Award, Betts said, "Well, everyone knew I had been selected before I did and now that I know, I'm thrilled."

Editor's note: Oscar L. Betts Jr. is this year's winner of the SPIRIT of Fort Benning Award.

Established in 1985, The award is given to a civilian who has gone above and beyond the call of duty to support the military community.

The award was presented Wednesday at a ceremony at the Officer's Club.

Benning soldiers get shot at wings

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

There are some people missing from the ranks of the all-Fort Benning Airborne Class 501-88, Company D, 1st Battalion, Parachute Infantry Regiment, as they move into the final phases of their training. Post soldiers have discovered that the path leading to those silver wings isn't an easy haul.

This reporter has been following the class through their training these past weeks and found out what a couple of post soldiers had to say.

1st Lt. Alan Stone of 2nd MASH, 34th Medical Battalion, reflected back to why he chose to come to the class and his first days in training.

"I had wanted to go to Airborne School for a while but never had the opportunity, so I jumped at the chance to come to this class," Stone said. "There's a lot of prestige in wearing those wings on your chest, and I wanted to be a part of it."

Stone said after the first two days, his muscles started aching. He said there was that little voice in his head that wanted him to quit, but he knew that if he did, he would feel like he was failing himself.

He said that little voice started really nagging him the first time he went out of the 34-foot tower. "I stood in the door of the tower and wondered 'what am I doing here.'"

After overcoming that, he drove on and really put all his energies into his training. "As I was doing that, I noticed how really dedicated the black hat trainers are. If they notice a student is having problems, they won't hesitate to help him one on one."

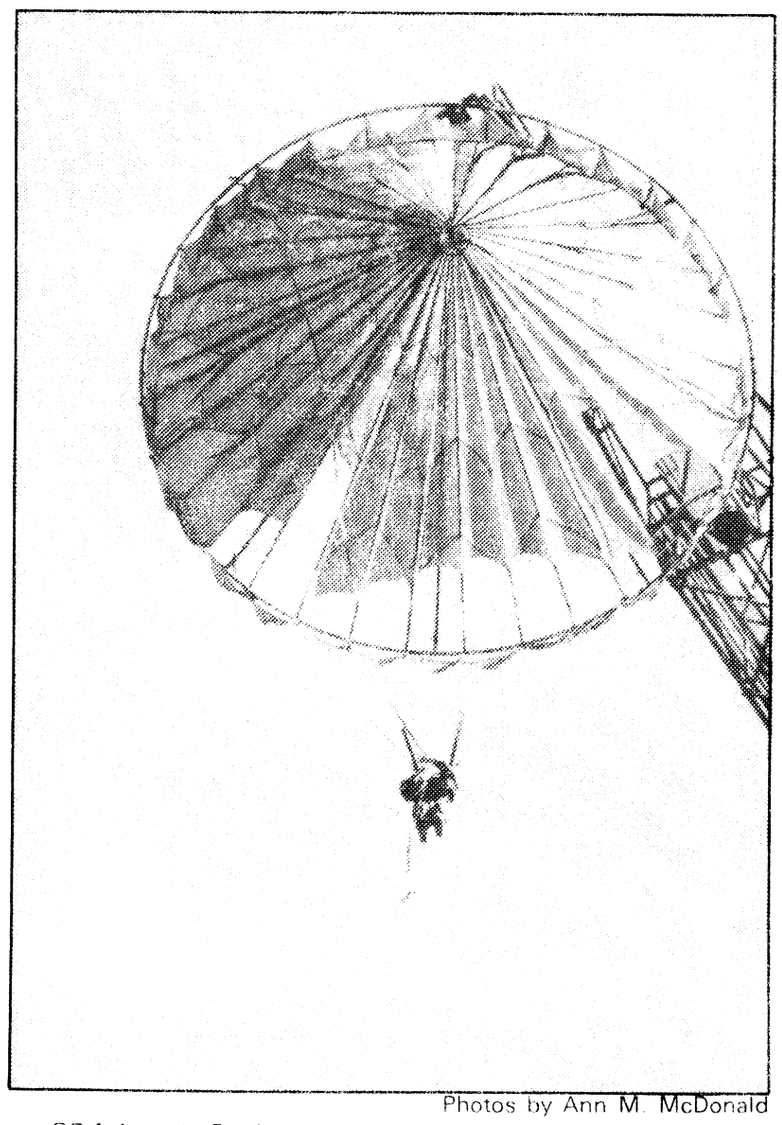
Stone successfully completed week one and commented on the highlights of the second week of training. "I was really motivated at that point," he said, "and found the swing landing trainer an exceptional training aid, as the black hat has total control."

SP4 Angela Pacheco, of Headquarters, Infantry Training Center, agreed with Stone on the quality of the trainers, but from there, their views differ.

Pacheco, had wanted to go to Airborne School since coming in the Army. "I had orders to come to this school prior to this class, but I was in a car accident and wasn't able to attend."

She said this special class was probably the only opportunity for her to complete Airborne training.

Aspiring to someday become a military pilot, Pacheco found jumping out of the 34-foot mock tower to be great fun.

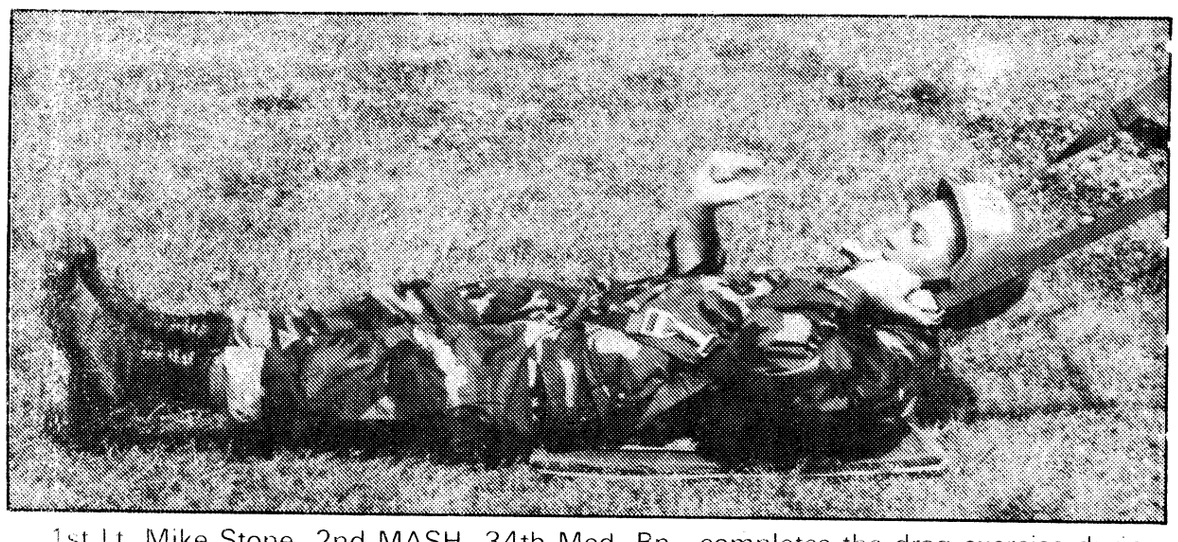


"The parachute landing falls didn't come quite as easy though, but I mastered them and qualified in everything," she said.

In Pacheco's second week, everything she had learned came together. She qualified on every apparatus before the end of the third day of training.

After jumping from the 250-foot, free tower, she felt confident that she would successfully complete jump week.

Pacheco and Stone both had great faith in their trainers and agreed that they had taught them everything the class needed to successfully jump from an aircraft in flight.



"It's all on me now," Pacheco said. "I'm ready to stand in the ranks of the soldiers ahead of me who have earned those silver wings."

SP4 Angela Pacheco hangs from the top of the 250-foot tower.

Pvt. 2 Blue Stedt, keeper of the wings in D Co., 1st Bn., 507th PIR, is strapped in the suspended harness, one of the last classes in preparation for the final week of Airborne School.

A: Active duty personnel are expected to use their designated Troop Medical Clinics (TMCs) during duty hours. The PRIMUS Clinic will not be allowed to recommend profiles or "quarters" status or make other administrative dispositions for active duty personnel; these patients will waste additional time away from duty and expense to the government repeating the visit at the TMC if such dispositions are required. PRIMUS will be prohibited from treating active duty personnel who are on flight status or on the Personnel Reliability Program. The PRIMUS Clinic will forward the results of all medical treatment provided to active duty personnel to the appropriate Troop Medical Clinic for review and filing in health records.

Q: Will Primus see emergency patients?

A: No. In case of an emergency, patients should proceed to the nearest hospital capable of treating emergency conditions. Emergency patients arriving at the PRIMUS Clinic will be stabilized and transported to the nearest hospital by a local EMS ambulance. Reimbursement for the ambulance trip will be the responsibility of the patient under the CHAMPUS program except for active duty patients whose bill will be paid by MACH.

Q: How will eligibility for care be determined?

A: All patients will be required to show a valid ID card before receiving medical care. All patients will also be verified as being enrolled in the Defense Enrollment Eligibility Reporting System (DEERS) prior to receiving care.

Q: How do I know if I am in the DEERS system?

A: The sponsor should call the DEERS toll free information number, 1-800-532-9522, to verify his family's enrollment status. The sponsor or family member can also come to the outpatient records section at Martin Army Community Hospital to verify DEERS enrollment. The PRIMUS Clinic will perform a 100-percent DEERS check to verify authorized beneficiaries. All active duty members are automatically enrolled in DEERS. Sponsors have the responsibility to ensure that their family members are enrolled in DEERS. DEERS enrollment must be accomplished through the active duty sponsor's personnel office and is not a medical facility function. Beneficiaries not in DEERS will be treated in accordance with established Department of Defense policy which generally results in their being charged noncategorical care until the sponsor enrolls them in the DEERS system.

Q: I am the spouse of a retiree. Can I use PRIMUS?

A: Yes, if you are an authorized beneficiary, possess a valid ID card and are enrolled in DEERS.

Q: Will I lose my option to use CHAMPUS benefits if I use PRIMUS?

A: No. You still have the option to use CHAMPUS for outpatient care. However, primary care at PRIMUS is provided as part of the direct care system, therefore, there is no cost to the patient as there is when using CHAMPUS.

Q: What will happen to my medical records?

A: The administration of records at PRIMUS will be in accordance with all regulations and requirements that exist in Army medical treatment facilities. If you use PRIMUS as your entry point into the health care delivery system, your Outpatient Treatment Record should be maintained at PRIMUS. As is true in all military medical treatment facilities, medical records are the property of the United States government. A copy of appropriate portions of the record will be made for the patient if there is a valid reason for doing so. If, after trying the PRIMUS Clinic, you decide to use PRIMUS for your primary care needs, you can request that your Outpatient Treatment Record be transferred from Martin Army Community Hospital to PRIMUS.

Q: Will I need an appointment at the PRIMUS Clinic?

A: No. Care will be on a walk-in basis.

Q: Will I be able to get routine well woman care, i.e., pap smears, mammograms, etc.?

A: Yes. Routine "female" examinations to include pap test and a screening mammogram will be available.

Q: Will I be able to use PRIMUS during my pregnancy?

A: Yes, obstetrical care will not be provided at PRIMUS. Upon confirmation of pregnancy, you will be referred to the Martin Army Community Hospital OB/GYN Clinic for evaluation and follow-up.

Q: Will I be able to get routine allergy shots at PRIMUS?

A: Yes, if you are already receiving these shots. However, the PRIMUS Clinic will not be staffed to perform allergy evaluations or initially provide allergy medicines.

Q: Will I always see the same physician at PRIMUS?

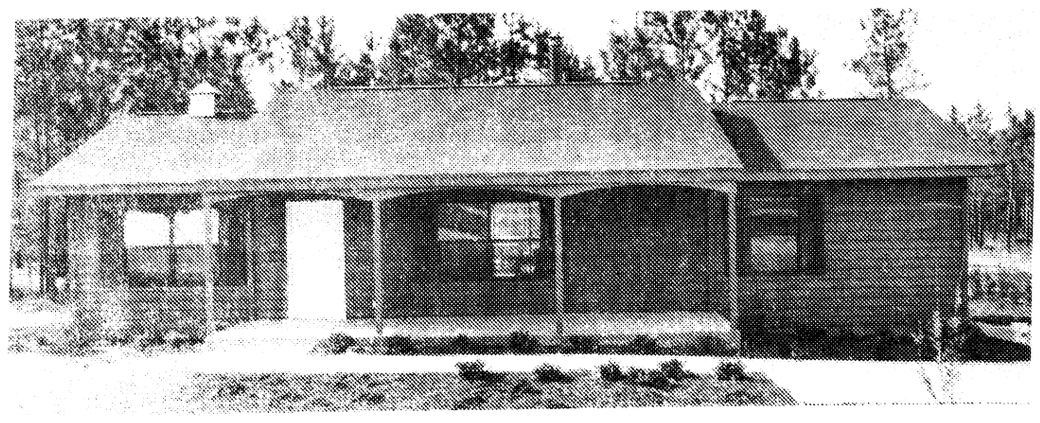
A: For the most part, yes. However, because PRIMUS offers services on a walk-in basis, you may be seen by a different physician. Also, because of the extended hours of operation, one physician will not be on duty all hours of operation. You can call ahead to determine if your preferred physician is on duty, schedule your visit accordingly and request the desired physician by name upon registration.

Q: If my medical condition becomes complex and requires specialty consultation services, what happens to me?

A: The PRIMUS Clinic is designed to provide a level of care equivalent to that normally found in a family practice clinic. Should you require more specialized services, you will be referred to Martin Army Community Hospital for care.

Q: Can I bring my civilian prescription to the PRIMUS Clinic to be filled?

A: No. The PRIMUS Clinic will only provide medications, X-rays and laboratory tests to patients being treated at the PRIMUS Clinic.



Q: Do I have to pay for my PRIMUS prescriptions?

A: No, they will be provided to you at no cost.

Q: How much does PRIMUS cost?

A: A visit to the PRIMUS Clinic will be free to the patient. The contractor is reimbursed on the basis of the number of clinic visits seen. The price the government pays is substantially less than it would pay for the same visit under CHAMPUS.

SPIRITUAL

Fort Benning youth groups help improve community

By Jo Ann Stamey
USAIC Chaplain's Office

Drugs and alcohol, speeding, suicide, undisciplined — these are the words we constantly hear about our youth of today.

This is the Month of the Military Child and a great time to reflect upon the positive things our youth does for the community.

The Protestant and Catholic chapels each sponsor Junior and Senior High youth groups.

Donna Worley

CYO members assist with Exceptional Family Member children at Mayor J.E. Jernigan's Christmas Parade.

The Protestant Senior High Group, Youth Alive, is just getting started. Valerie Bixler, who recently took over as the group leader, said Youth Alive is a place where kids can develop a balance among the spiritual, physical, mental and social elements of their lives. The purpose of the group is to have a good time and relate to others in a positive way, while developing a spiritual foundation. This is a non-denominational group for 10th, 11th and 12th graders. If you want to have fun and help your community too, call Bixler at 689-7410.

A youth group that is particularly active at this time is the Junior High Catholic Youth Organization (CYO). The group is headed by Marty and Donna Worley, and Mike and Rose Phillips assist with many of the activities. The group started off in September with a barbeque/registration and set their goals for the coming year.

Worley said, "The kids are in charge — they vote, they set the goals, and they achieve and accomplish those goals." According to the Worleys, the most important objective of the group is to grow and share in their faith.

At Thanksgiving, the group cleaned and decorated the House of Mercy in Columbus. The group participated and helped with Columbus mayor, J.E. Jernigan's Christmas parade. Also, they gave donations for gifts to West Central Georgia Regional Hospital and passed out gifts at Martin Army Community Hospital during the holidays. On several occasions, the youth group sponsored parties for children in the Exceptional Family Member Program. The kids have also worked on toys for Santa's Castle, helped with the Easter Egg Hunt at Riverside and during Holy Week, they conducted a fund drive for canned goods and donated them to Army Community Service for distribution. During spring break, the group again worked with children from the Exceptional Family Member Program. They also worked in some of the other ACS programs and participated in the Holocaust Memorial Service. This group did most of the landscaping and planting of flowers at the Main Post Catholic Chapel; and each month they mow, rake and edge the grounds. Saturday, they will be helping with the Youth Parade.

To raise money, the kids hold bake sales and wash cars. At the OWC Run, they made $466!

When they first started, they had to go out and look for things to do — now they are being called! The group has received many letters of appreciation, one from Mayor Jernigan for their efforts during the Christmas season.

The group decided meeting twice a month wasn't enough time to get all accomplished they wanted to do and requested they meet every week. Their enthusiasm and dedication is phenomenal. "They are so eager to work, very dedicated and very trustworthy young people," said Worley.

One thing that makes the group so successful is that the parents are very supportive.

The program ends in May, but the kids have decided they want to go through the summer so they will have something to do, and the new kids that come into the community will have an opportunity to make new friends before the school season begins.

At present, the group is going to take a well-deserved break to rejuvenate themselves — they're going to Destin Recreation Area during Memorial weekend!

This group meets each Sunday, 6 p.m. at the Religious Education Center. If you want to have fun and contribute to your community, call Donna Worley at 689-8330.

How refreshing it is to hear of all the good things our children are doing for themselves and for the community. Anyone interested in assisting the Protestant youth leaders, please call 545-2050. To assist with CYO groups, call 545-5508.

National Prayer Day: May 5 set aside as day to pray for nation

By Don Wilson
2nd Battalion 14th Infantry
10th Mountain Division Chaplain

May 5th has been set aside as a National Day of Prayer. Throughout the country on that day, people will be praying to God on behalf of our nation. But what is it, exactly, that we will be doing? What is prayer?

We talk about prayer. We know we ought to pray. We know the Bible teaches us to pray. But, what is prayer?

It has been said that "prayer is the offering up of our desires unto God, in the name of Christ, by the help of the Holy Spirit." It has also been said that "prayer is simply talking with God, and the simpler the talking the better." In James 5:16 we read: "The earnest prayer of a righteous man has been power and wonderful results." (The Living Bible) When we read Scriptures like this, we are tempted to ask, "Where is the power? Where are the wonderful results? Why don't my prayers get answered?"

I was surprised to discover a few years ago that there had been several "scientific" studies done on prayer. The study that came to my attention was done at Redlands University, under the direction of Dr. William R. Parker. The study involved 45 volunteers of different age and background, who had one thing in common, "they were in trouble physically, mentally and spiritually." Fifteen members of the group felt that psychotheraphy was the answer to their problems. Fifteen felt that prayer was the answer and devised their own prayer program. The other fifteen selected prayer therapy (prayer with expert Christian counsel.)

At the end of nine months the following results were noted. The psychotherapy group showed a 65 percent improvement. Those who prayed without counsel showed no improvement, some were worse. The prayer therapy group showed a 72 percent improvement. Over the next five years, the psychotherapy group returned again and again for treatment, while the prayer therapy group needed no more treatment at all. But the question remained, "how could one group receive such amazing answers to prayer while another group (all practicing Christians), in the same place at the same time, experience total failure in prayer?"

A comparison was made of the two groups, and the following results were found in the styles of those who failed: (1) Their concept of God was faulty. (2) Their prayers were acts of self-condemnation. (3) They could never truly accept God's forgiveness. (4) Their prayers were in a negative form.

Do any of these styles of prayer sound familiar? Maybe that is part of an answer to "Why My Prayers Don't Get Answered." The editor of the book, "Prayer That Really Works", shares these important ideas about proper praying: (1) Realize that God is love. His love is unconditional. No sin that you have ever committed has changed God's love for you in the slightest. God knows all about you and loves you anyway. (2) Realize that prayer must be an exercise in honesty. Since God loves you, you can afford to be open and honest with Him; no pious phrases and no pretending. (3) Realize that prayer must be regular and regulative. "Sparetire praying will never be fruitful." One must make prayer a regular habit. It must also be regulative. That is, "your life must not regulate your prayer, your prayer should regulate your life." (4) We must make prayer positive. "Negative prayer gets negative results." "The person at prayer must affirm his ability to know and trust God's love and forgiveness."

Prayer is too important to misunderstand and misuse. God is powerful, and He desires to help us in our everyday lives, but we must pray and pray correctly.

One great writer on prayer put it this way: "Books on prayer are good, but not good enough. As books on cooking are good but of no use unless there is food to work on, so with prayer. One can read a library of books and not be one whit more powerful in prayer. We must learn to pray, and we must pray to learn to pray."

New battalion trains here prior to activation

By Shawn Bryson
Bayonet staff writer

An entire battalion of light infantry soldiers were recently trained by Fort Benning soldiers in preparation for the battalion's activation at Fort Drum, N.Y.

The 2nd Battalion, 87th Infantry, 10th Mountain Division is being activated as a COHORT unit and all its soldiers can credit many of their light infantry skills to Fort Benning.

More than 90 of the officers and noncommissioned officers that will lead the soldiers of the battalion arrived at Benning March 7 to attend the Light Leaders Course. The 342 soldiers to serve the battalion were also trained at Benning by the cadre of 2nd Battalion, 19th Infantry, 1st Infantry Training Brigade, Infantry Training Center.

The training for the Light Leaders Course was provided by the Ranger Training Brigade here and was primarily refresher training, according to SFC Roger J. Frank, noncommissioned officer in charge of the soldiers attending the course.

"One of the objectives of this course is to train the NCOs and officers to be trainers," Frank said. "We've all had this training before, but it has been a while for some of us. This course gives us a chance to refresh the skills that we already have so that we will be ready to train our soldiers at Fort Drum," he said.

The training included basic rifle marksmanship, physical fitness training, rappelling, rope bridging and Zodiac boat training. Other phases of the LLC training were urban warfare, patrolling, raids, bunker clearing, ambushes, heli-casting, live-fire patrols and air mobile and aerial resupply techniques.

Although the leaders of the 2nd Bn. 87th Inf. had such training in the past, they were taught many new techniques by their Ranger instructors, according to Frank.

Aside from the skills learned at the LLC, there was another and possibly more significant reason for the course, Frank explained. "When the decision was made to activate the 2nd Battalion, we were all picked to be the leaders. The NCOs and officers here are from all walks of life. Some are from mechanized infantry units and some from communication units," Frank said. Because of the diverse backgrounds of the leaders, the Light Leaders Course was also useful in helping them adjust to and evaluate each other.

"We went through some growing pains at first," Frank said. "But we've learned a lot about each other's strong and weak points as well as how much stress each of us can handle."

Frank explained that it's a challenge taking soldiers who might not be used to the "light" side of the infantry and having them pull together as a unit. "We are all going to be working together for the next three years, and this course has really helped us to get to know each other so that we can concentrate on business when we get to Fort Drum," he said.

Light infantry and ranger units focus a lot of attention on leadership at the squad level, which is one primary aspect taught by the Rangers during the LLC, according to SSgt. Timothy Irby, a Co. C squad leader for the 2nd Bn., 87th Inf. "We have really developed a sense of cohesiveness here, which is important in a COHORT unit and when working to try to solve the problems of our squad members," Irby said.

While the NCOs and officers sharpened their skills at the LLC, their soldiers were hard at work during their One-Station-Unit-Training here.

According to SFC Ruben G. Castillo, a platoon sergeant and liaison for the 2nd Bn., 87th Inf., the cadre of Companies B and C, 2nd Bn., 19th Inf., molded the infantry, mortar and anti-tank trainees into highly motivated light-infantry soldiers. "The drill sergeants here really did a good job in getting our soldiers highly trained in basic light infantry skills," Castillo said. "The level of training they received was phenominal and has fully prepared them to join their leaders at Fort Drum," he said.

The soldiers arrived at Fort Drum April 19 to begin building the battalion from scratch. Pvt. Kristofer Vanosdel, a soldier trained at Company B, 2nd Bn. 19th Inf., said, "Our drill sergeants really helped us develop a team attitude. That attitude will be carried to Fort Drum."

Physical fitness trail opens near 'Follow Me' golf course

By Shawn Bryson
Bayonet staff writer

A new exercise course is scheduled to open at Fort Benning next week, for men, women and children of all ages and physical conditions.

The course, called "Fit Trail," is a physical fitness trail designed to combine jogging or walking and exercising in a natural setting as well as a safe area.

According to Maj. William Sitler, deputy, Directorate Personnel and Community Activities, the trail will be located at the corner of Dixie and 1st Division roads near the 'Follow Me' golf course.

Work on the trail began six weeks ago and was recently finished by soldiers from 2nd Platoon of Company C, 43rd Engineer Battalion, 36th Engineer Group.

"The engineers did a really great job on the trail and have given everyone a very decent place to run and exercise," Sitler said.

The new trail is a two-mile loop with a series of exercise stations along the jogging trail.

"There are 20 exercise stations with a total of 32 different stretching and toning exercises," Sitler said.

The fitness trail has an overall design to develop flexibility and build and tone muscles. The course is also helpful in cardiovascular conditioning.

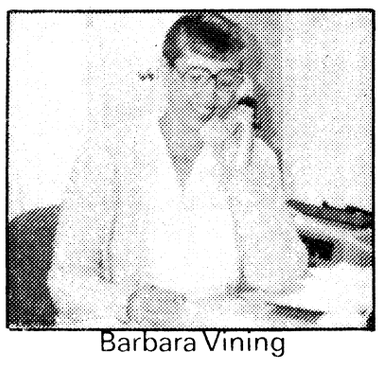
Each station will have instructions for each exercise as well as trail direction markers and certain apparatus.

Fit Trail includes Target Heartbeat Range Guides at each station for monitoring heartbeat.

It is recommended that persons interested in using the fitness trail consult a physician before doing so. It is also important that people start exercising at a slow pace and don't overdo it. Cooling down after using Fit Trail is also considered necessary in preventing injuries.

Secretary celebrates 21st year of work at the Chaplain's Office

By Jo Ann Stamey
USAIC Chaplains Office



The first thing you see when you enter the Post Chaplain's Office is a sign on the secretary's desk that reads, "Do you want to speak to the man in charge or to the woman who knows what's going on?" The man in charge, Chap. (Col.) Roy Mathis, placed that sign there, because he knows that his secretary, Barbara Vining, knows what's going on.

Barbara was born in Madison, Fla., but has been in Columbus since she was 5 years old. During high school, she occasionally filled in for her sister as church secretary and loved the work. In December 1966, she started her first job in the Adjutant General's Office. After five months, she transferred to the post Chaplain's Office, starting as a GS-3. Barbara has worked for 10 post chaplains and on May 22 will celebrate 21 years in the Post Chaplain's Office.

Barbara and her husband Kenneth, who works in the research lab at Royal Crown Cola, recently bought a new home in Salem, Ala. They have three children: Kenya, 17, Kara, 16, and Kenny, 13. Barbara says, with a smile on her face, "Being the mother of three teenagers and secretary to the post chaplain is not easy."

As an active member in the Smiths Station Baptist Church, Barbara is the church organist, works with the children's choir, and sings in the choir whenever she gets a chance. She is also active in Sunday school and training union. Barbara loves music, sewing, cake decorating and softball.

Bacause she is such an outstanding secretary, five previous post chaplains tried to get a promotion for Barbara — but to no avail. In 1981, Barbara decided it was time to leave and try to get a promotion. She was torn because she loved her job and the people so much. She prayed hard to make the right decision. One evening, she attended a chaplains wives' coffee, and one of the wives sang "Ordinary People." The theme of the song is that God uses ordinary people for special jobs. Barbara's burden had been lifted! The song had touched her — she felt she was in a special job and this is where God wanted her. In October 1987, after much perseverance, Chap. Mathis did get Barbara her well-deserved promotion.

Barbara Vining

Of course, Barbara has received many honors and awards, but the most treasured is the Scroll of Honor given to her by the Chief of Chaplain's Office, which states, "Mrs. Vining cares for people. She has created an environment where people receive personal and social encouragement. She is a secretary, but more than that, a friend."

These few words most definitely describe this quiet, confident and outstandingly competent secretary.

Heavy watering is not necessary

By Becky Ray
Energy Management Branch

Maintaining a healthy, well-manicured lawn is a form of recreation for many family housing occupants at Fort Benning.

Luckily, even those who don't have the time or desire to spend hours outdoors can also have a neat, healthy lawn with a minimum of upkeep. Many people mistakenly believe that frequent, heavy watering is necessary for hearty grass. Fortunately, the opposite is true.

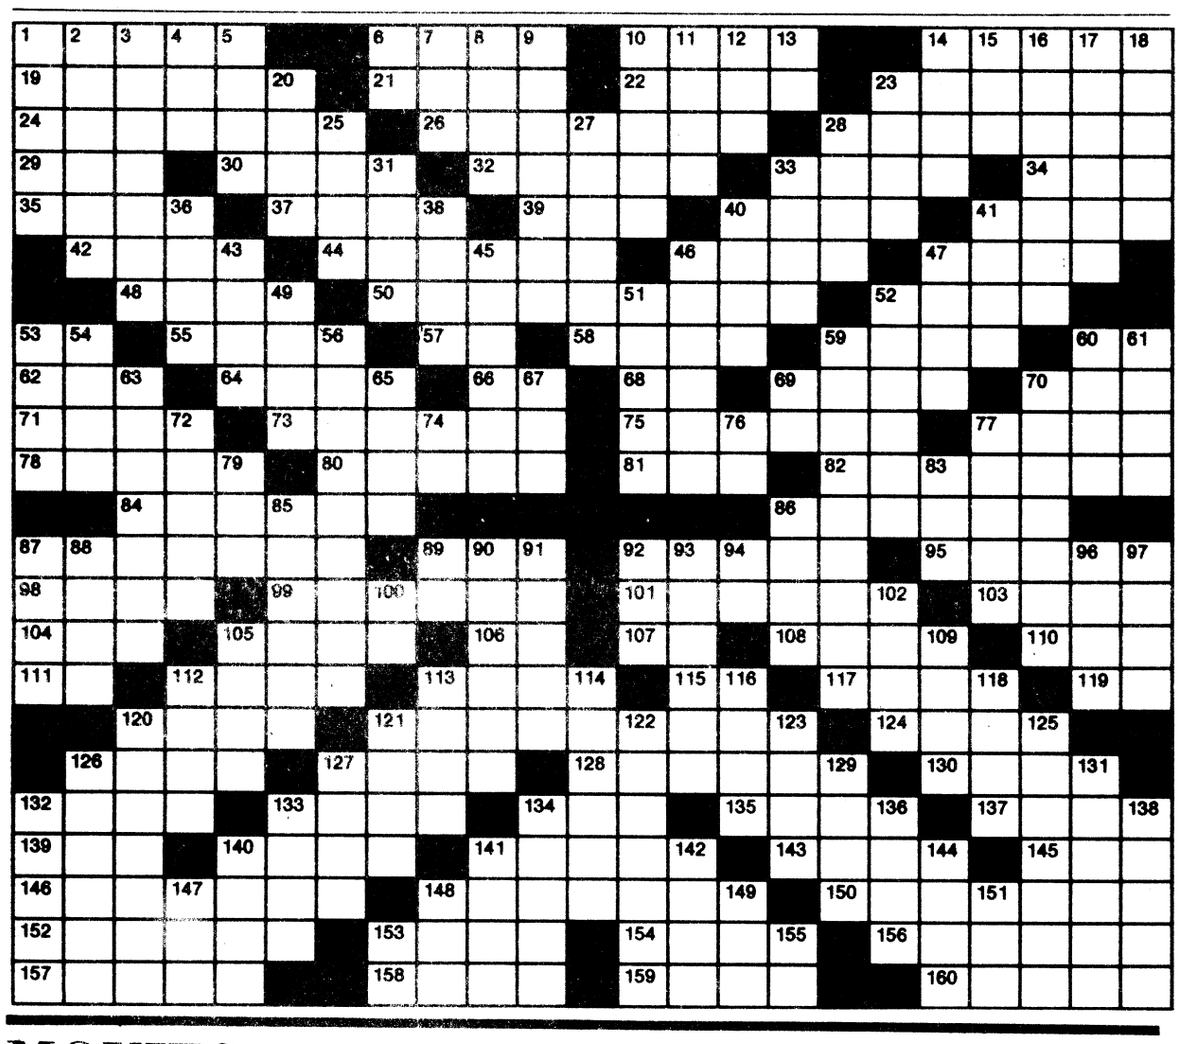
According to lawn and landscape experts, watering too often and too heavily can cause shallow grass roots, which make the grass wilt easily in hot weather. It also encourages the growth of many water-loving weeds (especially crabgrass).

Oxygen, required by all plants for survival, is extracted from the soil by the grass roots. If too much water is applied to the grass, displacing all the oxygen in the soil, the grass will literally drown. Overwatering, in addition to being wasteful, can also lead to erosion problems.

Experts also seem to agree that, in general, lawns need one inch of water per week. If this amount isn't supplied by rain, lawn sprinklers can be used. The Georgia Cooperative Extension Service recommends using pie pans or cans set at different distances from the sprinkler to measure the amount of water being distributed.

Agronomist Melvin Robey, author of Lawns, says the best way to determine the need to water is by feeling the soil at a depth of three to four inches. If it's dry, it's time to water. Grass will also begin to turn a bluish color when the soil is too dry.

Soil type, weather, types of grass and proximity to trees and shrubs also influence watering needs. Because clay holds water well, grass growing in soil with a large percentage of clay can be watered less often. Shade trees shield the grass below from rain, and they also have shallow root systems that compete with the grass for water.



If the water from your sprinkler isn't absorbed into the soil as quickly as it is distributed, it will puddle or run off, wasting water and eroding rich topsoil. This can be corrected by punching small holes into the soil with a pitchfork or soil aerator. Another solution is to use a sprinkler that sprays more gently and makes smaller droplets. These sprinklers distribute water more slowly, giving the soil more time to absorb the water.

Mowing grass too short increases the amount of water required by the lawn because root growth is kept shallow. Higher, less frequent mowing deepens root growth. In addition, USDA studies have shown that longer grass tends to shade out the undesireable weeds, such as crabgrass.

Keeping all this in mind, your lawn watering schedule can easily be planned within the Fort Benning guidelines for lawn watering. The watering policy allows family housing residents to water lawns on Monday, Wednesday and Friday from 5 p.m. to midnight.

Scouts hold mini-olympics

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Cub Scouts from Pack 27 held small-scale olympics at Doughboy Stadium Saturday, competing in five events before a crowd of friends and parents.

Activities began with a parade into the stadium and an opening ceremony at center field, where 57 scouts saluted the American flag while the national anthem played.

Tom Fox

It was then on to the games.

Capt. Russ Medina, Cub Master of the Pack, divided the scouts into five group and competition began in the basketball shot put, 50-yard run, quarter-mile run, javelin throw and discus hurl.

Rotating between events, the Scouts, boys ages 7 to 11, competed for arrow points towards Bear and Wolf badges, said Caroline East, committee chairperson for the Pack.

The Cub Scouts, known as Tigers, Bobcats, Bears, Wolves, and Webelos depending on a boy's age, competed under a hot mid-day sun after which all participants received a physical fitness belt loop.

According to East, the Pack Olympics is just one of three outdoor activities that the Pack schedules each year for Scouts, families and friends

East said the next outdoor activity for Pack 27 would be a camp fire on May 16. Boys interested in Cub Scouting may attend. Call Caroline East for time and location, 687-5727. See standings below.

USARSA and 10th Mountain tangle for the ball during the championship game.

USARSA wins USAIC soccer title

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

The U.S. Army School of the Americas Soccer team edged 2nd Battalion, 14th Infantry, 10th Mountain Division out of the United States Infantry Center Soccer Championship 3-2, making this the fourth year in a row they have won the crown.

USARSA halfback Rudy Diaz kicked in the winning goal five minutes before the final whistle and the defense held long enough to take victory.

According to USARSA team captain, Jimmy Urteaga, his team was surprised when the Mountain Men scored the first goal drawing first blood in the championship game.

"We didn't let that first goal bring us down though," Urteaga said. "As a matter of fact, that surprise brought us together, and we turned around and made two goals."

Urteaga said, "When we realized how strong the 10th Mountain team was, we relied heavily on the defense. Bernardo Soto was a great asset in that department, he kept the ball out of the mountaineers scoring area."

The mountaineers did manage to get the ball into USARSA's court tieing the score at the half.

After the half, USARSA dominated the game, and Diaz was named most valuable player for his Championship winning goal.

All-Army Bowling Trials conducted here

By Shawn Bryson
Bayonet staff writer

Fort Benning hosted the All-Army Bowling Trials recently at which the Army's men's and women's teams were seleted to compete at the Armed Forces Bowling Championships held here this week.

Nineteen men and 12 women turned out to compete in this year's tournament, which was held at the Main Post Bowling Center.

The bowlers rolled a total of 24 games during the four day tournament in their quest to represent the Army.

Fort Benning's Tony Szeluga, who has made the Army team for five straight years, once again proved his worth by leveling a grand total of 4,987 pins with a high average for the trials of 207.8. Szeluga's performance at the tournament slotted him at the top of the men's team just ahead of Eddie Gilert, from the United States Army Military Entrance Processing Command, who finished the trials with a 4,960 and a 206.7 average.

The first day of the trials was not a promising one for Szeluga, as his six-game 1,089 total put him in 12th place. "I was throwing a good ball the first day, but the pins just weren't carrying for me," Szeluga said.

However, the pins had a different attitude toward Szeluga's ball on day two as he rolled a high game of 276 with a 1,390 series. His 2,479 12-game total shot him into first place half way through the trials and gave him a 107-pin lead over his closest challenger.

Szeluga's 1,280 for the third set was second best to Gilbert's 1,345, and the margin between the two bowlers shortened to 95 pins.

On the final day of competition, Szeluga finished the fourth set of six games behind four other bowlers, but his substantial lead from the previous sets kept him above the rest of the field.

The rest of this year's All Army men's team were Barry Hornie, stationed in Nuermburg Germany, Brian Russell, from Fort Drum, Michael Earnest, from Fort Devons and Edward Thompson Jr., from Fort Knox.

The women's competition saw Dawn Johnson, from Fort Carson, as the overall winner with a 24-game total count of 4,383 and an average of 182.6. Johnson was followed by Karen Hamera, from Fort Lewis, Judy Johnson, stationed in Nuermburg Germany, Francis Sims, from Army Material Command, Deborah Vanderline, from Ludwigsburg, Germany and Brenda Dodge, stationed at Hall Station in Arlington, Va.

The two Army teams competed in this week's Armed Forces Bowling Championships this week. The Bayonet will have a full run down on the event in next week's edition.

Faith School teams make 'World Finals'

Dana May (genie) and Troy Hutchins (Pee Wee) bring Pee Wee's Playhouse to life in the "Comics" problem of Odyssey of the Minds.

Two teams from Fort Benning's Don C. Faith Middle School will represent the state of Georgia in the World Finals of the Odyssey of the Mind competition at the University of Maryland June 1-5.

Faith students will be competing there against teams representing 48 other states, as well as teams from Mexico, England, China and the Philippines.

Both Faith teams won the district competition in March and the state competition April 19 in their respective categories.

This is the second year that the Fort Benning Schools have competed in the Odyssey of the Mind competition and the second year that students from Fort Benning have gone on to the World Finals.

Last year, one Faith School team went to the International competition, which was held in Michigan. Two students who are competing this year, Troy Hutchins and Dana May, also represented Faith School in the international competition a year ago.

Odyssey of the Mind, was begun by a teacher, Dr. Sam Micklas, in New Jersey several years ago.

The competition requires students to solve a long-term problem while also demonstrating proficiency in spontaneous problem solving.

At the state competition, both Faith School teams that competed won both long-term and spontaneous problem-solving exercises in their respective categories.

The "Comics" team won the Renatra Fuscra Creativity Award for outstanding creativity. Team members -- Jenny George, Troy Hutchins, Loren Magruder, Dana May and Chris Moore solved their long term problem by populating Pee Wee's Playhouse with cartoon characters, Tweetie, Sylvester and Grandma, not to mention Pee Wee and his genie.

Troy, Jenny and Chris are also spontaneous problem solvers for the "Comics" team. Alternates are Pontress Webb and Danny Segal.

Members of the "It's Showtime" team are Gina Barlotta, Nicole Dondelinger, Sterling Harris, Tara Norton and Amanda Ritchie. Gina, Sterling and Tara are also the spontaneous problem solvers for the team. Alternates are Nathan Graham and Patrick Williamson. Ahmad Hernandez serves as standby alternate.

Sterling Harris won the individual Renatra Fuscra Creativity Award at the state competition for his performance in "Rumplestiltskin", the team's performance problem.

Team members, their coach, teacher Libbie Kurinec and assistant coach, parent Joan Hutchins are preparing now for the World Finals in June.

Wilson School conducts playground plays

By Beth Middlemiss

Beth Middlemiss

The witches toil and trouble as the fire burns in the Wilson third grade production of "Macbeth." Left to right are Melorie Brown, Carma Purkett, Yagaira Ramos, Michelle Corning and Jennifer Lang.

"Macbeth," "Julius Caesar," "A Midsummer Night's Dream" -- Shakespearean plays that many adults read while in high school or college -- have been coming to life on the playground at Richard G. Wilson School.

Macbeth, with garbage bag tunic and cardboard sword; Julius Caesar, Brutus and cohorts fitted in togas, which were probably recently a family member's bed sheet; and a host of elves dressed in old ballet costumes, have left their third grade personas behind for a while as they have, at times literally, thrown themselves into their roles.

"This is not polished theatre," said third grade teacher, Myra Cook. "It's a different way to review what the students have learned."

And they have learned. They have studied England, its history and parts of its culture. They have read children's versions of the three Shakespearean plays. They have taken an imaginary trip to England with passports and had high tea with the queen. "Macbeth" was taped on the day they had their jousting match.

With the help of music teacher, Norma Green, the third graders learned about works by Wagner, Copland and Mendohlsson to use with their tapings of the plays.

Art teacher, Teresa Dalton, helped students decorate shields and design their own personal flags for the jousting tournament.

Parents helped at home as swords and helmets were created from paper, cardboard and aluminum foil.

"A parent told me that she had to turn off the evening news on television because England was mentioned and her third grader insisted on bringing the family up to date on what she was learning," said third grade teacher, Julie Miller. "Students are constantly bringing something to class they have found at home or in the library that refers to Shakespeare or to something else we have studied about England."

"Since our children are from military families, it is very possible that they may visit England someday. Perhaps some of our third graders will ask parents to take them to visit "Shakespeare's "Old Vick" and to see a play. Judging from the interest and enthusiasm our children have shown, I wouldn't be at all surprised."

Spencer students assist at Special Olympics

By T. Richard Cummings
Spencer High School

The Spencer High School Math Club National Honor Society volunteered their time to assist in the 1988 Columbus Special Olympics.

"We really take for granted all of the advantages that we have," said Lisa Bonner, a sophomore at Spencer High. She was referring to the various disabilities of the children and adults at the games.

"But, they don't see their 'lack of' they see only the positive side of things," said Stella Bodilly, a special education teacher at Wood Elementry School.

The kids try their hardest, though they do sometimes give in to frustration. The point, however, is they try.

"Only a few win the first place ribbon, but it's heart-warming to see them so proud and content with fifth place," said one Spencer senior.

Events in the Special Olympics included 50-, 100- and 400-yard dashes, the standing long jump and the baseball throw.

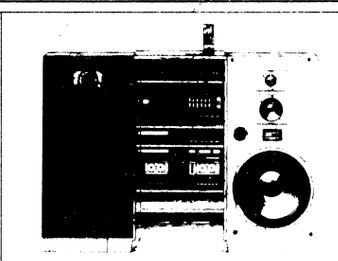
Students assisted in running each event, recording scores, and of course, hugging.

"It's inspirational seeing how hard each individual works. Some people could take heart from their example and learn a few things," said another Spencer student.

Post schools go to summer schedule

By Beth Middlemiss
Fort Benning Schools

On May 9, students in the eight Fort Benning schools will begin their days and be dismissed 45 minutes earlier as the heat relief schedule resumes. This schedule will be in effect for the rest of the school year.



Since some of Benning's schools are not air conditioned, the heat relief schedule is designed to provide students with more time in school during the cool morning hours and shorten the time during the afternoon heat.

AUSA CORNER

By Jim Gallagher
Chapter president

Last week I gave an overview of the local chapter awards program. Today, I want to report on the awards the chapter competes for at national level. The presentation of awards is an excellent means of building and sustaining a chapter through public recognition of outstanding performance. The Fort Benning chapter has received many awards in past years and is considered one of the best chapters in the association.

Each chapter is evaluated by national,based on input of activities and membership from July 1 through June 30. Chapter awards are presented at the annual meeting each October in Washington, D.C.

The awards presented by national are:

- Largest overall membership.
- Greatest percentage increase in civilian membership.
- Greatest percentage increase in membership.
- Greatest percentage in corporate membership.
- Greatest corporate membership.
- Best overall chapter general membership meetings.
- Best chapter support of Reserve components.
- Chapter most active in pursuit of AUSA objectives. (Fort Benning won last year).
- Best chapter newsletter.
- Best corporate member support. (Fort Benning won last year).
- Best chapter renewal rate.
- Best chapter overall.
- Special award. (Fort Benning has won special awards for the Operation Holiday program in past years).

The diversity of the national awards program provides the opportunity for chapters to gain recognition. Individual members and subchapters contribute to the chapter's overall performance and can lead to chapter recognition. All members and subchapters are encouraged to assist in developing or supporting programs to gain chapter recognition.

PS. Congratulations are in order for Colonel (Ret.) Hal Van Meter, past chapter president who was recently elected to the office of Third Region President. We know that Hal will bring to Third Region the same level of energy, enthusiasm and innovativeness he brought to the chapter.

★ JOBS ★
U.S. POSTAL SERVICE

OFFICIAL ANNOUNCEMENT . . . MAY 2-6 COLUMBUS AND ALL AREA POST OFFICES WILL ACCEPT APPLICATIONS FOR THE CLERK-CARRIER EXAM.

A recent issue of Newsweek magazine noted that the average Postal worker earns $27,500 in salary and benefits. Men and women, regardless of age or experience are eligible to apply. Courses to help you prepare for the above exams will be offered by Postal Exam Workshops. Instructors Suzanne Anderson and Bill Harold are considered by many to be the most qualified on how to gain employment with the Postal Service. These exams do not test general knowledge. Proper preparation is the key to getting hired, because people are hired for these positions based on their exam score. The easy-to-learn techniques taught in these courses were designed by Mr. Harold. He is a former Postal employee, the author of three postal exam guides, and has repeatedly scored 100% on Postal tests.

3 HOUR WORKSHOP: SCORE 95-100%
GUARANTEE The time-saving and accuracy-increasing methods taught in this course are so powerful that we will enter into a written agreement.
- You will score 95% or higher or your money will be refunded.
- If you do not receive a job application/interview within 90 days of your score, your money will be refunded.

WORKSHOP TUITION is $35 and includes the guaranteed workshop, workbook, interview hints, study guide with 25 complete take-home exams, follow-up consultation privileges with free information phone number, home study program kit, personal notification of future application dates, and more . . . WANT TO RELOCATE? We offer the Postal Alert Bulletin giving you postal exam dates nationwide. You are invited to bring your tape recorder to record the workshop for personal review.

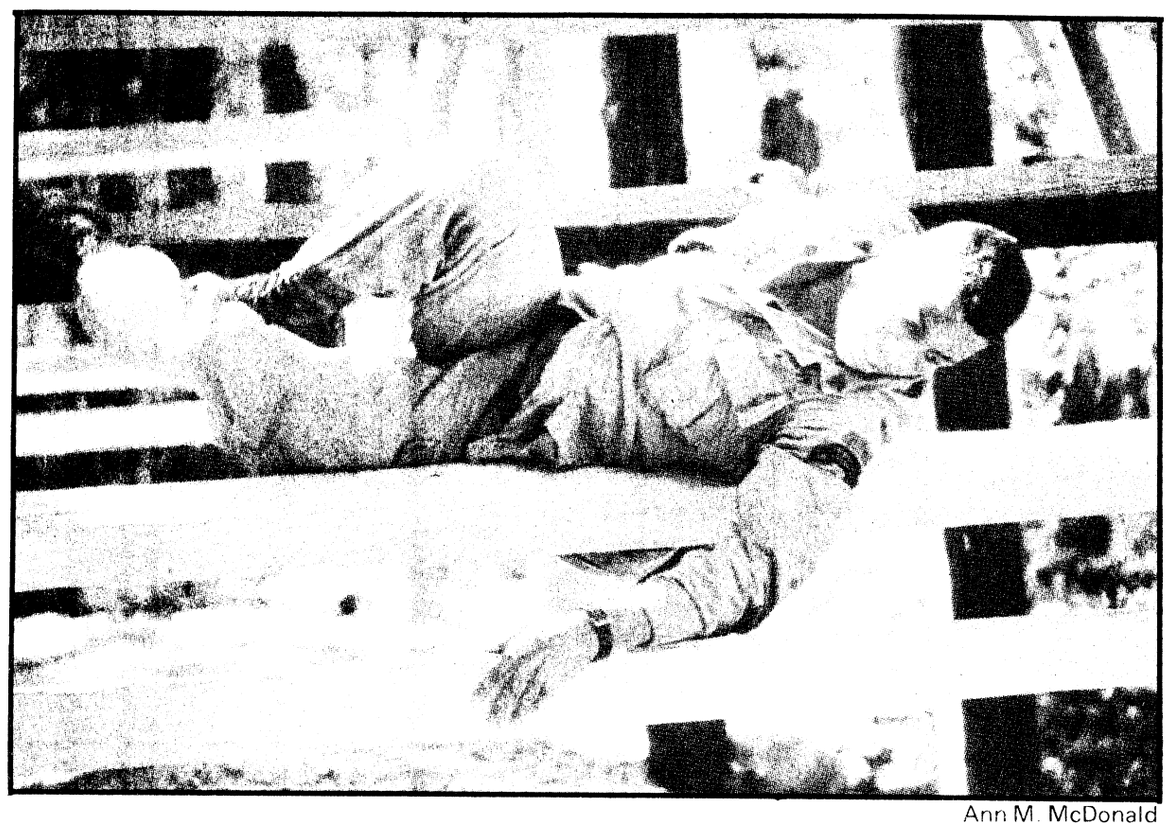
OSUT soldiers pull KP

USAIC Public Affairs Office

All soldiers in One-Station-Unit-Training are now performing kitchen police (KP).

In the past, only soldiers in the basic training portion of OSUT (the first seven weeks) were assigned KP duties. But now, they will perform those chores during the entire 13 weeks of the training, taking over these duties from civilian contractors.



The change is part of the post's efforts to save money in view of recent budget cuts experienced throughout the Army.

Affected by the decision to use soldiers for these duties are about 200 full-time and part-time civilians employed by Rice Services of Smithville, Tenn.

These contract employees are responsible for dining facility sanitation, serving food and related tasks in some 25 Army Training Center dining facilities.

Rice employs about 1,100 contract civilian employees in about 50 dining facilities throughout the post. Rice's current contract with the post will expire Sept. 30, 1990 if each one-year option is picked up.

This reduction will save the post about $1.5 million per year.

Recruiting team seeks WO candidates

U.S. Army Recruiting Command

Uncle Sam still wants you, especially if you qualify as a warrant officer candidate.

An Army recruiting team will visit soldiers at Fort Benning Thursday to select qualified candidates for training as warrant officers.

At the beginning of this year, U.S. Army Recruiting Command added warrant officer recruiting to a long line of recruiting missions. To find technically and tactically qualified candidates for the warrant officer corps, two recruiting teams from Fort Sheridan are traveling to Army posts throughout the country and overseas locations.

Recruiting team members quickly point out that they recruit candidates for training, not as warrant officers. Specialty branches must train, certify and appoint the candidate to warrant officer status. Not every warrant officer specialty is always being recruited. Recruiting is targeted to meet available training quotas.

Proponents set guidelines for qualifying candidates as warrant officers, and the recruiters contact soldiers who meet those requirements. After application begins, the Recruiting Command sends a packet to the proponent, where a technical review of the applications ensures the minimum qualifications are met. If the applicant qualifies, the packet is then boarded at Recruiting Command headquarters. Each branch is represented on the board by a voting member, who selects the best qualified applicants.

How to apply

Recruiters say that the application process has been simplified and processing time has been cut to make it easier on the soldier. There are no procedural differences between regular Army and Army Reserve applications.

Active duty soldiers who apply for warrant officer training need to complete DA Forms 61 and 160, Verification of Clearance, and obtain an endorsement from their company and battalion commanders. Application also requires an official photograph and DA Forms 2-1 and 2A. Military Intelligence and Special Forces applicants must include DA Form 398.

Reserve applicants should complete DA Forms 61, 145, 2-1, 2A, Verification of Clearance, an endorsement from their company and battalion commanders and include an official photograph. Also in the application package, Reservists should enclose their training certificates and Enlisted Efficiency Ratings. Those desiring to go on active duty must complete DA Fort 160.

Applicants for flight training must add a Class I Flight Physical, DA Forms 6256 and 4989-R and an interview by a field grade Army aviator.

Special Forces applicants must include scores from their Defense Language Battery and Army Physical Readiness Test. They must show proof of completion of the combat water survival test. Only an original and one copy of each requirement need be forwarded. Soldiers applying for warrant officer training should mail packets to Headquarters, U.S. Army Recruiting Command, ATTN: USARCRO-SM-A, Fort Sheridan, Ill. 60037-6000.

Field boards are not conducted. Selection boards meet at recruiting headquarters monthly. When selections are finalized by the board, school training seats are obtained from the Army Training Requirements and Resource System.

When an applicant's recruiter notifies him that a training seat is available, that soldier is on the way to becoming an expert in a specialized field of leadership — a warrant officer.

The Army warrant officer recruiting team will hold an open house in Marshall Auditorium, building 4, 10:30 a.m. Thursday.

For more information on the visit, call Capt. Harry Williams, 545-4522.

PRIMUS clinic in Columbus officially opens

USAIC Public Affairs Office

The Primary Care for the Uniformed Services Clinic in Columbus officially opened for business last week with a formal ribbon cutting ceremony.

Cutting the ribbon were commanding general, Maj. Gen. Kenneth C. Leuer; president and chairman of the board of the PHP Healthcare Corporation, Charles H. Robbins; congressman, Richard Ray and MACH commander, Col. Herbert E. Segal.

The PRIMUS clinic is geared toward providing quality health care to military beneficiaries.

According to Maj. Joe Butler, chief of the Clinical Support Division at Martin Army Community Hospital, the primary focus of the clinic is Primary Care and Family Medicine. Radiology, as well as an on-site pharmacy are featured at the clinic. Butler emphasized that the clinic should not be used as an emergency room and that all medical emergencies should continue to be taken to MACH or the nearest hospital with emergency facilities.

Care provided at the clinic will include treatment for colds and the flu, cuts, sprains, simple bone fractures and limited follow-up care for chronic conditions such as high blood pressure, diabetes and heart conditions. Physical examinations, immunizations and PAP smears will also be given at PRIMUS.

The clinic will be open 365 days a year from 7 a.m. to 8 p.m. on weekdays and from 7 a.m. to 2 p.m. on weekends and holidays.

PRIMUS is located at 1727 Boxwood Place in Columbus. For additional information, call 569-9464 for a taped message.

Transient facilities reopen after renovation

USAIC Public Affairs Office

McVeigh Hall (building 75) and Towle hall (building 83), transient facilities for official visiting personnel, will be reopened after a ribbon cutting ceremony Monday, 10 a.m. The ceremony will be held at the third cuartel where buildings 75 and 83 meet. The buildings are presently in the final stages of renovation.

McVeigh Hall was named in honor of Sgt. John J. McVeigh, formerly of Co. H, 23rd Inf., 2nd Inf. Div. near Brest, France. McVeigh was cited for conspicuous gallantry and intrepidity above and beyond the call of duty. His story follows:

Shortly after dusk an enemy counterattack of platoon strength was launched against one platoon of Company G, 23rd Infantry. Since the Co. G platoon was not dug in and had just begun to assume defensive positions along a hedge, part of the line sagged momentarily under heavy fire from small arms and two flak guns, leaving a section of heavy machine guns holding a wide frontage without rifle protection.

The enemy moved so swiftly that German riflemen were soon almost on top of one machine gun position. McVeigh, heedless of the tremendous amount of small arms and flak directed toward him, stood up in full view of the enemy and directed the fire of his squad on the attacking Germans until his position was almost overrun.

He then drew his tranch knife, and singlehanded, charged several of the enemy. In a savage hand-to-hand struggle, McVeigh killed one German with the VARIOUS VOICES: What do you think when you see a Ranger Tab on someone's uniform?

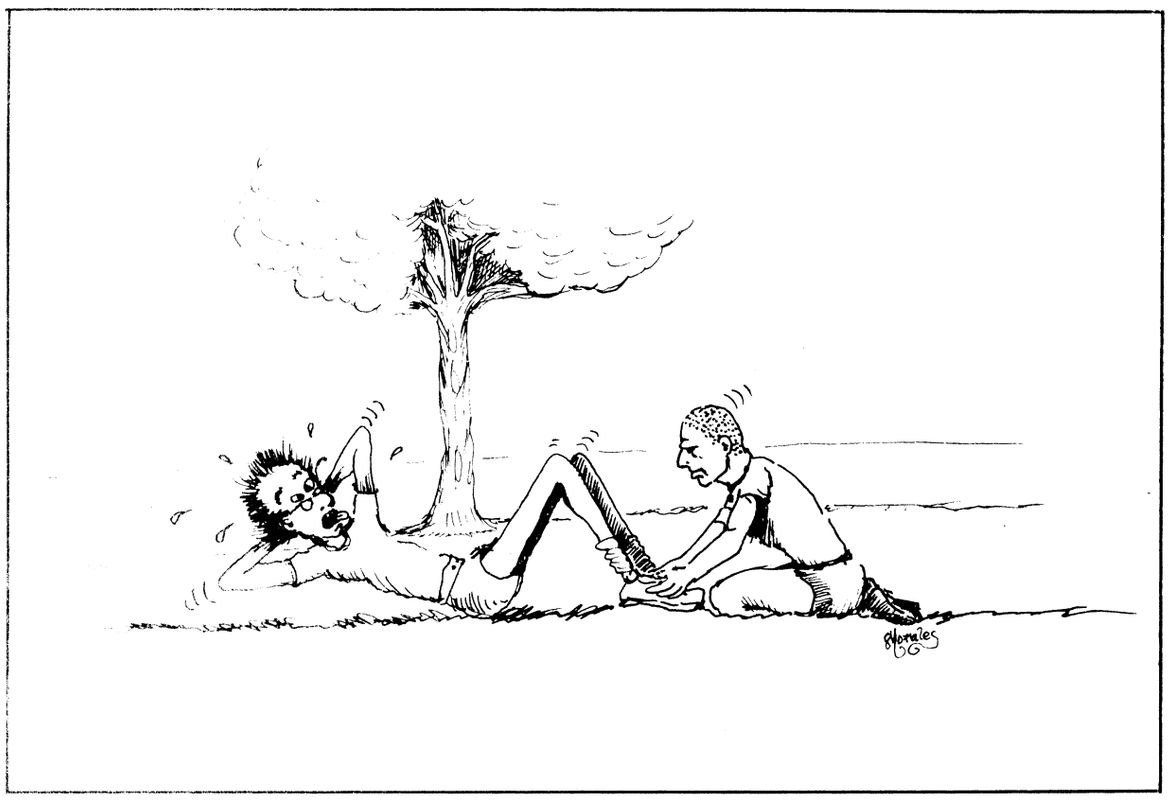
Tom Herring, Company C, 5th Ranger Battalion, WWII — "I think they are exceptional individuals. There are so many things a person has to go through to earn that tab. Earning that tab changes that person's life forever. At least it did mine."

Bill Spies, civilian (retiree) — "Well, when I see that ranger tab, I think of leadership and dependability. The person wearing that tab has attended the best leadership school there is. When you tell a Ranger to do something, he is going to complete that mission and do it well."

PFC Johnny Galvin, 690th Medical Company, 34th Medical Battalion — "When I see a ranger tab on someone's uniform, I see a highly motivated soldier who is willing to go that extra mile to obtain the knowledge needed to be the very best on the battlefield."

PFC William Mathews, Headquarters and Headquarters Detachment, 4th Ranger Training Battalion — "I think when you see a ranger tab on someone's uniform, you've come across a true American. He has obtained the best training possible enabling him to better defend our country. That person wearing the tab will never quit. He is a very patriotic person who is an American and proud to be one."



Joy Ciciora, family member — "The first thing I think of when I see a ranger tab on someone's uniform is my husband. I saw what he went through to earn that tab, and that makes me respect everyone else I see with that tab on their shoulder."

Maria Ratio, aerobics instructor, Directorate of Community Activities — "Since I'm an aerobics instructor, the first thing that comes to my mind is fitness. Rangers are the epitomy of physical fitness in the Army."

'Moment of truth' rolls around for Snively at PT test, weigh in

By Clyde Snively
USAIC Public Affairs Office

In the Army, the "moment of truth" rolls around regularly every six months.

This "moment" consists of a PT test and the weigh in. The weigh in is what I dread the most.

Unfortunately for me, I was born with legs that are too close to the ground. Added to that is I eat in Army dining facilities on occassion. When you're as tight with the penny as I am, you want to get your money's worth.

Thus, if I pay for an Army meal, I'm going to eat everything to which I'm entitled. Calories be damned.

But then every six months, I pay the price as the appointed hour for the weigh in approaches.

I may be getting nervous which means I eat more, compounding my problem.

Thus, the last few days prior to the "event," finds me making frequent visits to the sauna to see how much I can sweat off. By the way, M&Ms might not melt in your hand, but they do melt in saunas.

Finally, I go on my crash diet, I stop eating after supper, then skip breakfast until the weigh in. I also report to the weigh in wearing boots that have little sole, absolutely nothing in my pockets, no socks or underwear and BDUs that are threadbare and are missing most of the buttons — anything to get over on the system.

Having undergone the trauma of the weigh in, I'm in little condition for the PT test.

Fortunately, as we all know, the PT test is a rather easy, if not a realistic test of a soldier's ability to physically survive the battlefield. To me, an Army, or at least an infantry PT test should involve an obstacle course and should be taken wearing combat gear and carrying a rifle.

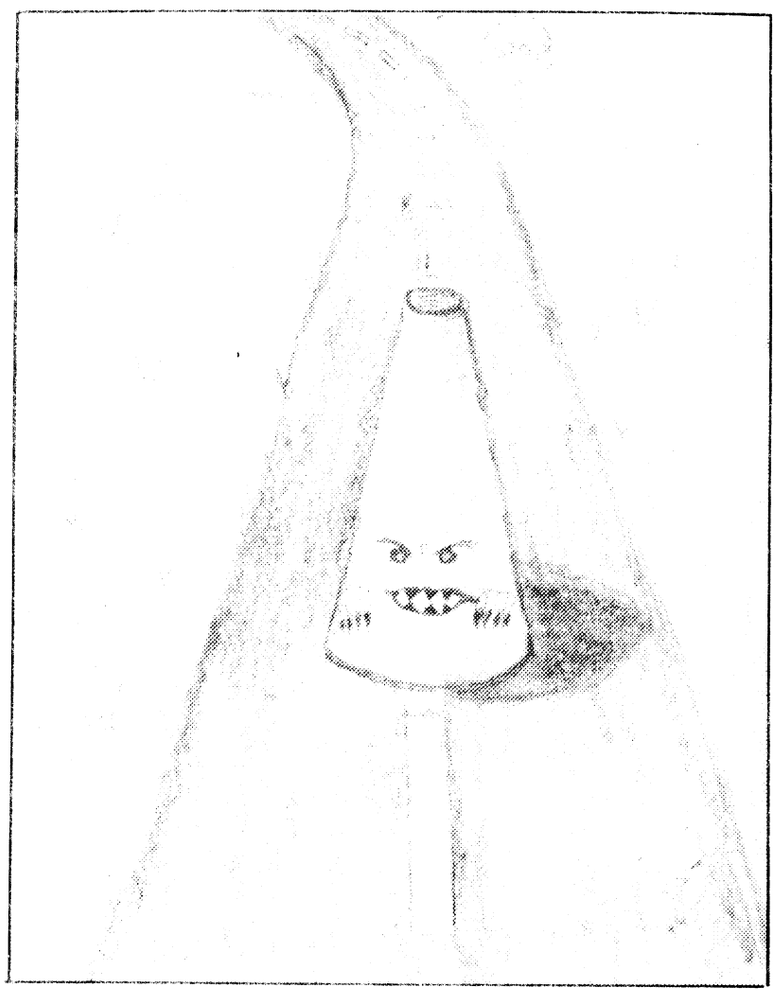
Furthermore, it should be taken over a period of three days with minimal sleep. Practically anyone can pass the PT test without studying for it. The true test comes the next couple of days after the muscles have had a chance to tighten up.

People in shape won't have that problem, but those who only come out every six months just to take the test will. Not that I'm complaining, since, I still have trouble with pushups.

I mean I can do pushups and all, but when some mean NCO is breathing fire in my face, checking my elbows to make sure they bend to 90 degrees then straighten to 180 degrees, I get up tight.

Then as I hear, 28...29...30...30...30..., I about collapse into a heap.

But, I eventually muddle through. Just 182 days to the next weigh in and PT test.



Driving on post harder for those folks who are always going the wrong way

Wrongway Reynolds

It's because I'm always going the wrong way that I have problems driving on post. Actually, I'm a pretty good driver, even for a woman.

Then again, maybe it's a conspiracy. Those harmless-looking orange cones are out to get us. Not everyone, just a select few of us who are always going the wrong way.

Every Wednesday and Thursday I go downtown to work at the Ledger-Enquirer to help publish the post newspaper, The Bayonet. Getting there and back on post on those days is usually as challenging as an obstacle course — a really big, really tough one.

Between 7 and 8 a.m., the people who work at Fort Benning are rushing on post. The traffic at that time is extremely heavy, so the military police have made it easier for these folks by blocking off parts of, South Lumpkin to turn the four-lane street, two lanes leading on and two lanes leading off post, into three lanes leading on and one lane leading off post. That way more traffic can be channelled on post faster. The flow of traffic is reversed in the afternoon when post workers are leaving post. But, I'll go into the afternoon traffic later.

Now when I get in my car on those Wednesday and Thursday mornings, I usually remember there's a road block on Vibbert where I turn onto South Lumpkin, so I go three blocks up and another four blocks across to get around it. Sometimes I forget, and when I get to the road block, I have to turn around and go four blocks back up the same street and then three blocks up and four blocks across to get around it.

I finally make it onto the one lane that runs down South Lumpkin. But, once I get to the traffic light by the cemetery, I'm forced by road blocks to make a right I neither wanted nor intended to make. So, I pull into the housing area just down the street, turn around and go back down the same street to the same traffic light and finally make a right back onto South Lumpkin, the same street from which I was forced to veer.

Whew! Finally, I'm off post, and I can fight the normal heavy morning traffic on Victory Drive to get downtown.

It's not over though. I have all day to plot my course back through the road block maze to get back home. This time the traffic will be coming off post, and I'll be trying to get on post. It's basically the same story. Road blocks once again force me to go several blocks out of my way. In one particular situation while I was still experimenting with getting on post with the least hassle, I went 2.6 miles out of my way. It can be done. I know, I've done it twice. The second time I clocked the mileage. Also the second time my 5-year-old son was in the car with me. He shot me a puzzled look and said, "Mom, I thought we were going home." At times like that, I have to look in the mirror to see if I got up that morning and put on my stupid face.

It's amazing that those harmless-looking orange cones can cause much confusion. Not for everyone, just a select few of us who are always going the wrong way.

Roundup is a time for parents and children to become acquainted with the school principal and teachers and to see the school building. Towle Hall was named in honor of Pvt. John R. Towle, formerly of Co. C, 504th Parachute Inf., 82nd Abn. Div. near Oosterhout, Holland. He received a citation for conspicuous gallantry and intrepidity above and beyond the call of duty when the rifle company in which Towle served as a rocket launcher gunner was occupying a defensive position in the west sector of the recently established Nijmegen bridgehead. A strong enemy force of about 100 infantry supported by two tanks and a half-track formed for a counterattack. With full knowledge of the disastrous consequences resulting not only to his company but to the entire bridgehead by an enemy breakthrough, Towle immediately and without orders left his foxhole and moved 200 yards in the face of intense small arms fire to a position on an exposed dike roadbed.

From this precarious position, Towle fired his rocket launcher at and hit both tanks to his immediate front. Armored skirting on both tanks prevented penetration by the projectiles, but both vehicles withdrew slightly damaged.

Still under intense fire and fully exposed to the enemy, Towle then engaged a nearby house that nine Germans had entered and were using as a strongpoint, and with one round killed all nine. Hurriedly replenishing his supply of ammunition, Towle, motivated only by his high conception of duty which called for destruction of the enemy at any cost, then rushed about 125 yards through grazing enemy fire to an exposed position from which he could engage the enemy half-track with his rocket launcher. While in a kneeling position preparatory to firing on the enemy vehicle, Towle was mortally wounded by a mortar shell.

By his heroic tenacity, at the price of his life, Towle saved the lives of many of his comrades and was directly instrumental in breaking up the enemy counterattack.

SSgt. Cathy J. Sutherland, 3rd Battalion, 330th Infantry, 2nd Brigade (Infantry), 70th Division (Training), Fort [illegible]

SSgt. Cathy J. Sutherland

March [illegible] selected as the Secretary of the Army's Retention NCO of the Year for Reserve Components for fiscal year 1988. From May 15 until May 17, she will be in Washington, D.C. where she will meet the Secretary of the Army.

Sutherland is the only at Fort Benning serving as the Personnel and Administration Center (PAC) supervisor for the 3rd Infantry Training Brigade (Provisional) United States Army Infantry Training Center (USAITC). The 3rd ITB is composed of elements of the 2nd Brigade, 70th Division with the mission of conducting a Mobilization Army Training [illegible] exercise at Fort Benning for 3rd ITB (Prov.). It is using infantrymen for the [illegible] and improving the training and graduating two One-Station-Unit Training (OSUT) companies totalling approximately 400 soldiers.

Sutherland served as a member of the planning committee when the MATC exercise was being developed. Afterwards, she was traveling for the competition for Reserve Retention NCO of the Year; however, after competing and winning at the FORSCOM level she discovered a position was still available for the MATC. It was the position of PAC Supervisor and the individual selected would remain at Fort Benning for the entire exercise (April through July).

"I wanted that position," Sutherland said. "I love Fort Benning. Any day, any place you look here, you will find good training being conducted. It could be anything from the Bradley Fighting Vehicle over at the 29th Infantry to Airborne Training on Main Post, but it will be good."

Sutherland has worked with infantry units since joining the USAR seven years ago. She completed Basic and Advanced Individual Training at Fort Jackson, S.C. She entered the Reserves as a 71E and worked in the S-2 section, 2nd Brigade, 70th Division.

"I worked with some fine people," Sutherland remarked. "They knew I wanted to get promoted, and when I heard about the opening for an E-5, Retention NCO, in the 3rd Battalion, they suggested I apply. At that time, I really didn't know what a Retention NCO did! I soon found out and discovered I loved the job."

As Retention NCO she works directly for battalion commander, Lt. Col. Gerald

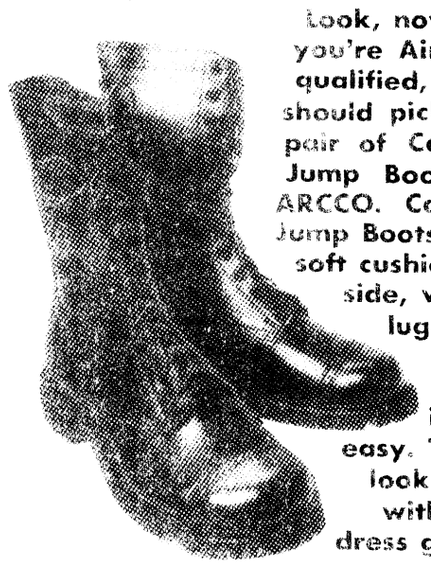
The 3rd battalion, 14th Infantry, 2nd Infantry Brigade, 10th Mountain Division will return to Fort Benning Monday after completing a lengthy and demanding field exercise at Fort Bragg, N.C., that began April 18.

The 10th Mountain soldiers participated in Operation Market Square II with soldiers from the 18th Airborne Corps, 82nd Airborne Div. Arty., units from the Air Defense Artillery, aviators from 1st Battalion, 17th Cavalry, warriors from 10th Mountain Division and units from 10th Airborne Division.



The exercise was designated to stress the soldiers and leaders from all the units. The soldiers of the 3rd Bn., 14th Inf. acted as opposing forces using several different tacts to disrupt the 18th Abn. Corps and 101st Abn. Div. operations. Some tactics used were airfield defense Airborne assault, hasty and deliberate defense, raids to disrupt 82nd rear logistical operations, air assaults, squad/platoon battle drills, movement to contact (live fire) and movement techniques to urban terrain.

The 3rd Bn., 14th Inf. Golden Dragon soldiers participated and learned from this exercise.

I still think you're crazy for signing up to go to Korea. Do you know how cold it gets over there? I don't care how good-looking the women are, you are going to freeze your toes off if you don't get yourself some Danner Boots. Danners are lined with Gore-Tex, so they guarantee them to be waterproof for two years. The insulated version is rated at 30 below zero and you better believe it gets cold in the Korean mountains!

And are you going to wear those things in the swamp phase when you go to Ranger school next month? I can just see you hiking up the trail with your leather boots full of water — slosh, slosh, slosh!

So when do you want me to take you to ARCCO? Huh! Next payday? Wait a minute, didn't you say you had your Mom's Visa Card"?

What you need is a pair of U.S. Jungle Boots. They were made for hot, wet weather, and have drainage holes in the bottom to let the water out when you're in swamps.

Artillery unit uses technology designed for today's battlefield

2nd Battalion, 10th Field Artillery

Through the morning mist, an enemy refueling point is identified. Seconds later, the forward observer sends a high-pitched digital message over the radio from his hand-held computer. The message is received by the Tactical Fire Direction computer at the battalion Fire Direction Center. TACFIRE quickly computes and forwards the target data to the appropriate Battery Computer Systems. There, more computations are made; deflection, quadrant, the number of rounds and the type of projectile are transmitted to the computer terminal in the M-109 Howitzer. In less than one minute, artillery rounds are impacting on the target.

Shoot, move and communicate is daily business for 2nd Battalion, 10th Field Artillery, which recently completed a Standardized External Evaluation. The "Rock's Support" successfully completed 750 tasks and subtasks designated in the Field Artillery Training and Evaluation Program.

The evaluation team consisted of 36 officers and warrant officers from 197th and 24th Infantry divisions from Fort Stewart, Ga.

Engineers take advanced demolition course

By Kevin J. Hoverton
197th Infantry Brigade correspondent

The 72nd Engineer Company (Combat) (Separate) of the 197th Infantry Brigade was at Brown Demolition Range recently. But instead of instructing courses in basic demolition, the engineers were learning.

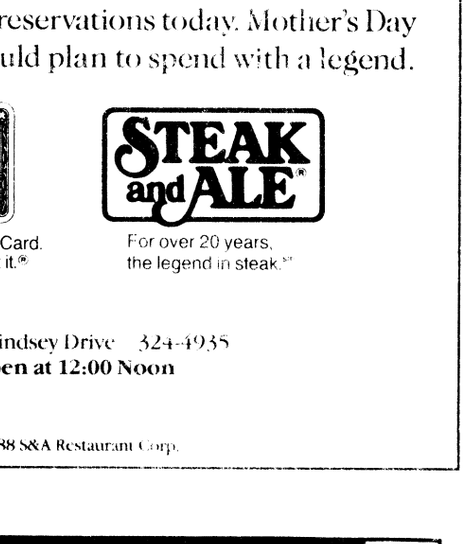
"This is advanced demolition," said PFC Michael Griemsman. "Demolitions are a part of the combat engineers Military Occupational Specialty, we tend to learn a lot more about it than most soldiers."

The engineers were working with high explosives such as dynamite, TNT and C-4 plastic. They used the explosives to blast ditches and cut steel. A two-foot-deep drainage ditch was made, and heavy steel railcar axles and wheels were cut or blown in half using explosives.

They also created an abatis, a roadblock made by blasting trees or poles so that they fall in a particular direction and are still connected at the base.

Field expedient methods were also used. The soldiers took U-shaped pickets (a six-foot metal stake normally used to hold concertina wire) packed them with C-4 or TNT, and taped them together to create Bangalore Torpedos.

Platoon Bangalore drills were held, where the soldiers would rush to a concertina-wire obstacle, slide the field expedient Banglore underneath and then rush back to the safety bunker to detonate it.



Safety on a range like this is very important," said SFC Robert S. Bath, the noncommissioned officer in charge of the range. "We are working with very high explosives, which are very stable," he added, "but you also have blasting caps, which are unstable and have to be handled very carefully. However, most of engineers are demolition qualified and know all the safety rules well."

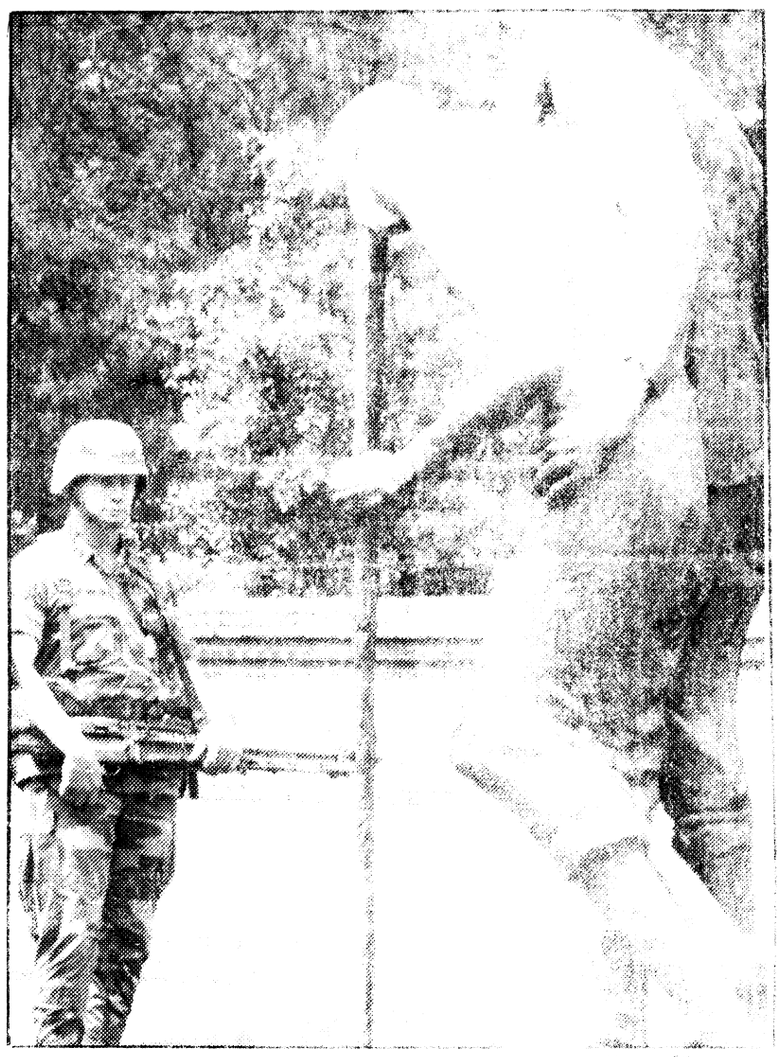
Unit takes Civil War time out

By George Mingee
197th Infantry Brigade correspondent

Recently, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 197th Infantry Brigade, convoyed some 170 miles to Andersonville National Cemetary. A total of 42 trucks were involved, including 5 tons, 1¼-ton multi channel vehicles and, of course, refueling tankers.



The convoy was a six hour, round trip for the soldiers, with the intermediate point being Andersonville. Upon reaching Andersonville, the soldiers dismounted and toured the largest Confederate military prison established during the Civil War. More than 45,000 Union soldiers were confined at the prison and of these, some 13,000 died from disease and poor sanitation.

"We stopped in Andersonville because of it's historical value and to show the soldiers that Georgia is full of history. I also hope this trip whets their appetites, and they will venture out on their own," said Capt. Frederick A. Schulze, HHC company commander.

Part of Andersonville consists of an open cemetary. A soldier with 180 days active service and an honorable discharge can be buried there.

"I would like to do something like this again," said Pvt. 2 Richard Jeffers, who added, "I never knew Andersonville existed. I hope I can find other places in Georgia just as interesting."

1st Plt, Co. B wins 'Top Tank' during grueling evaluation

By Kevin J. Howerton
197th Infantry Brigade correspondent

First platoon of Company B, 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor recently was named the "Top Tank Platoon" of the battalion. Twelve tank platoons were evaluated in a grueling, 24-hour competition that included three battle drills and day and night live-fire battle runs at Hastings Range.

"The thing that set 1st Platoon, Company B, apart was it's superior performance on the platoon battle runs," said Lt. Col. David Merriam, 2nd Bn., 69th Armor commander. "The platoon's desire to excel showed in every operation."

In addition to the platoon exercises, the soldiers were tested individually on common soldier's tasks and skill qualification tasks.

The Platoon evaluations gave the tankers an excellent opportunity to do many things. Aside from the immediate training benefits, feedback systems and after-action reviews were used to identify exact training strengths and weaknesses to guide future training. The battalion command group was the evaluating team, so they were able to identify critical tasks and specify precise standards.

"Company B, 1st Platoon showed excellent communication capabilities," said Merriam. "The platoon chain of command made extensive use of checklists. Actions in assembly areas and during reorganization and consolidation were guided by priority words that were understood by every soldier in the platoon."

TACFIRE

This evaluation was the first the battalion has undergone since fielding the $3.4 million TACFIRE Computer system.

This system enables the field artillery units to detect and destroy targets as far away as 18 kilometers without any voice transmissions. All transmissions are made digitally from the forward observer's call for fire on a Digital Message Device, through the TACFIRE main computer at battalion, to the Battery Computer System and stopping at the Gun Display Unit at the howitzer. The process takes only 60 to 90 seconds.

This system is a far cry from the World War II and Korean War era of delivery of indirect fire. The incredible complexity of the tasks and susbstasks evaluated truly tests the skill, ability and readiness of the field artillery soldiers.

Also evaluated and found to be battle ready was the battalion's Survey section, with the jeep-mounted Position Azimuth Determining System. This space-age marvel is capable of pinpointing its exact position on the earth's surface to the nearest 0.1 meter.

The Meteorological Data Section, also an important part of the gunnery team, was evaluated on its ability to make automatic deviation corrections for weather.

Capable of detecting a firing unit or an impacting round at a distance of 23 kilometers, the Fire Finder Radar was evaluated on its ability to perform a wide-range of functions, including a digital link to the TACFIRE computer that automatically inputs a fire mission against any and all enemy indirect fire weapons detected.

The king of battle has entered the computer age.

Gruska. She advises the commander and staff on regulation changes, reenlistment eligibility, and types of benefits available for members of the Army Reserve. She also advises the commander on the morale of the troops. She serves as a career counselor for soldiers, advising them on what they need to do to get promoted. And, of course, she reenlists soldiers.

Sutherland stated her belief that good soldiers must be retained and her philosophy on accomplishing this, "You have to care about the individual soldier and be willing to go that extra mile. You have to put yourself in that other person's shoes and figure out what is going on with them. Everyone who graduates from basic training is motivated — if something happens after that, it needs to be addressed. People have to be utilized in their field and feel they are doing a good job."

According to Sutherland, problems with employers can result in the loss of Reserve soldiers. Part of her job is resolving these problems when possible. Sutherland also cited the need for more community awareness about the mission of the Army Reserves and her hope the MATC exercise would meet that need.

"We have one weekend a month to be technically and tactically proficient," Sutherland said. "This mission (MATC) will show the world that we can be just that. We can train Infantry soldiers. We can be effective in both the civilian and military worlds."

Having both a civilian position and Reserve duties has not been a problem for Sutherland. She is employed as a custom glass beveler in Linden, Mich. and receives support, encouragement and understanding from her employers.

"They are very proud of me," she stated. "They want me to do this and to succeed."

Receiving the Secretary of the Army Award is a good indication that Sutherland is succeeding. She said much of the credit for her success goes to her battalion commander, a strong believer in the retention of the individual soldier.

After being nominated at the brigade level for Retention NCO of the Year, Sutherland faced competition at 70th Division and 4th Army. Each time a win, with the next competition at the U.S. Army Forces Command (FORSCOM). She was selected as the FORSCOM winner and received a Meritorious Service Medal and a plaque from Gen. Jospeh T. Palastra Jr., FORSCOM commander. Sutherland was then eligible for the Secretary of the Army Retention NCO of the Year.

Although the competition was stiff, Sutherland said she found it rewarding. She said it is easy to become isolated and begin to wonder if other soldiers in the same field face the same problems, have the same concerns and try as hard to accomplish the mission. For her, the competition answered those questions.

"Going through the various levels, I discovered there are a lot of good people out there doing a super job," Sutherland said. "That made the competition stiff."

During the FORSCOM competition, Sutherland's years with an Infantry unit paid off. All competitors faced a board composed of the FORSCOM command sergeant major and other sergeants major. Each member of the board asked questions related to Retention NCO duties, regulations and current world events. Then, as a determining factor, the questions began on basic soldier skills.

"Since I am in a training division, in order to do my job well, I have to be able to communicate with the 11B (infantryman) soldiers," she said. "In order to communicate, I have to train with the 11Bs, so I know what they do."

Although she has won the Secretary of the Army award and participated in the MATC exercise, Sutherland has set other goals for the future. She has applied for a tour with the Active Guard and Reserve (AGR). If selected, she would serve a four year tour on active duty as a Retention NCO. The board will convene in June and Sutherland is waiting to hear the results. She applied for any duty station in the continental United States. Her future plans do not stop with AGR.

"One day I plan to be a command sergeant major," she said. "I have met two female sergeants major during my career. One of them is now a command sergeant major, which is a real incentive. For me, the phrase "Be All You Can Be," applies. I want to do that."

Columbus Crime Stoppers seek assistance in solving local crime

Columbus Police Department

Columbus Crime Stoppers and the Columbus Police Department are looking for the lone black male who robbed Country's Barbecue, 3137 Mercury Drive, Columbus March 7.

On March 7 at approximately 9:30 p.m., a lone black male approached the cashier at Country's Barbecue and asked for a dime in exchange for a nickle and five pennies. The black male then used the pay phone in the lobby. Approximately 15 minutes later at 9:45 p.m. the black male again approached the cashier stand where another cashier was now working and asked for change for a quarter. As the cashier opened the register, the black male pushed her aside and snatched a large quantity of U.S. currency from the register. He then ran out the door.

The black male was chased by employees of the business West on Mercury Drive toward the Goo Goo Car Wash, around the corner beside the Victory Auto Parts Store where he jumped into a brown or gold compact car, possibly a Dodge Colt, that was parked in the parking lot of Sun Ray Cleaners, Macon Road. The black male started the car and was last seen driving West on Macon Road toward the downtown area.

The suspect is described as:

Honored guest attends OCS parade

By Shawn Bryson
Bayonet staff writer

A special man to the 3rd Battalion, 32nd Infantry Regiment, Infantry Training Center visited Fort Benning last week to attend an Officer Candidate School parade.

Retired 1st Sgt. Clifton G. Hobbs was here April 29 as an honored guest at OCS's Senior Status Review for class 3-88.

Hobbs is special to the 3rd Bn., 32nd Inf. Regt. because just three weeks ago, he was appointed as Honorary Command Sergeant Major for the battalion.

According to Hobbs, his honorary appointment began with an invitation to a 3rd Battalion 'Dine In'. "I was invited to the dinner that retired Gen. Robert Kingston also attended," Hobbs said. He explained that Kingston, an OCS Hall of Famer, had previously been appointed as the Honorary Colonel for the 3rd Battalion by the Secretary of the Army.

Hobbs was appointed the Honorary CSM that evening by Kingston, who nearly 40 years ago, was a trainee under Hobbs.

"From 1947 to 1950, I was stationed at Fort Riley, Kansas and was one of Gen. Kingston's Tactical Sergeants at the then Army Officer Candidate School," Hobbs said.

Hobbs and Kingston also served together in the Korean War. "I was in a different battalion than General Kingston, who was a second heutenant then," Hobbs said. After being wounded, Hobbs was sent back to the states.

Hobbs explained that he and Fort Benning are old friends. "I was assigned to the Infantry School here from 1951 to 1961 and had several special projects during those ten years," he said.

The self discipline that soldiers get from drill and ceremony is one the aspects of the military that Hobbs considers crucial and has modeled his life and his soldiers after. He explained that he always tried to instill in his soldiers the teachings of America's first drill and ceremony manual, written in 1779 by General Carl Von Stueben. "That manual was the first Army regulation I ever studied thoroughly. It contains the roots of American military discipline, and I always tried to teach those principles to my soldiers," Hobbs said.

Hobbs, a Columbus resident, served the Army for more than 20 years and retired in 1962 at Fort Hood, Texas. After his retirement, he worked for the United States Postal Service for 21 years.

"I was very honored to be appointed as 3rd Bn., 32nd Inf. Regt.'s Honorary CSM 26 years after retiring from the Army. It was one of the highlights of my life, and I'm truly greatful to everyone involved," Hobbs said.

AUSA CORNER

By Jim Gallagher
Chapter president

On May 21, U.S. military installations around the world will celebrate Armed Forces Day. Here at Fort Benning, the celebration will include a full day of activities starting with a parade and leading to the annual AUSA picnic.

At the conclusion of the parade and following the Rangers in Action demonstration and skydiving exhibition, the new AUSA Queen will be announced and crowned by Miss Georgia. Miss Georgia is a talented singer and will perform throughout the day.

Joining Miss Georgia will be Miss Columbus, Traci Greene and Miss Phenix City, Shannon Stevens. These ladies have performed for soldiers at various AUSA functions in the past year and enjoy the opportunity to again entertain Fort Benning soldiers.

Another entertainment feature added to the picnic schedule this year is the appearance of the Georgia Dancing Machine. This group of teenagers recently won 3rd place in the Georgia dance competition and will compete in New York July 14 for a national title.

A band being led by Rebecca Wright and specializing in southern rock music will perform throughout the afternoon.

The scheduled entertainment is free. Tickets for food and beverages will be sold. Advance tickets were distributed to units and people can avoid standing in a ticket line by buying in advance. The advance tickets are $5 and can be used to buy food and beverages or play midway games.

The menu includes hamburgers, $1; cheeseburgers, $1.25; hotdogs, 75 cents; corndogs, 75 cents; chili dogs, $1; bratwurst and knockwurst, $1.50; beer and soda (16 ounce) are $1.

Displays of military equipment, unit games and rides for kiddies will also be available to help celebrate Armed Forces Day.

ASK THE JUDGE

By Ollie M. Mick
Staff Judge Advocate

Q: I can no longer afford to make the payments on my car, so in order to avoid a repossession, I am going to try and sell it. One of my friends has agreed to take over the payments for me if I give him the title when it is paid off. This sounds like a great idea. How can I make it legal?

A: The first thing you need to do is notify the finance company that holds your car note and get their consent. Unless they agree to this arrangement in writing, they will still be able to hold you responsible for the payments. If your friend should fall behind or stop making payments, the finance company will sue you for the balance due on the loan. Additionally, most finance agreements contain language that makes it an automatic breach of contract for you to attempt to sell the vehicle before it is paid off. By trying to prevent financial problems, you may end up making this situation worse.

Once you notify the finance company, they will probably be able to send you the forms you need to make the transaction final. If they refuse to let you assign the loan to someone else, or if they turn down this particular friend because of his credit record, you may want to consider refinancing the vehicle. It is possible that you can obtain a loan that will allow you to make smaller payments over a longer period of time so that you can afford to keep the car yourself. Or, you can have your friend obtain a loan for the amount equal to the balance on your loan and simply pay the car off before you sign over the title.

In any case it is very important not to let the vehicle go without proper documentation. You may end up with the loan company reappearing several months down the road to collect money from you that you assumed your friend was taking care of. If you have any questions about the proper procedures or the consequences of these actions, make an appointment with a legal assistance attorney.

SPIRITUAL

Mother to be praised, not profaned

By Gregory Black
1st ITB Chaplain

"Mean Mother!" I read the words again. Yes, I was correct. "Mean Mother!" I couldn't believe my eyes. What terrible abuse of the word that awakes in me my fondest memories. "Mean Mother" was the brand name of the fog lights on my car! A tinge of pain flashed through my body as I recounted the other ways motherhood and her name are profaned.

I don't remember my prenatal months. However, I'm confident that they were filled with the pure joy of oneness and serenity found only in the womb. No, I don' remember that time in my own life, but I remember those times when my wife carried our children. Never did her face gleam so peacefully, her voice sing as melodically as when she carried our prenatal children. Perhaps no sacrifice is more graphic than when a mother's figure expands to accommodate her child's growth. No wonder childbirth is labeled "delivery" and its predecessor "labor."

When the day finally came, the "birthday" for our child and the delivery time for my wife, it was a day of prideful rejoicing for me. We looked forward to a future of growth in love as a family. It was a good time.

The Scriptures describe a godly mother:

Her children arise and call her blessed; her husband also, and he praised her: Many women do noble things, but you surpass them all. Charm is deceptive, and beauty is fleeting; but a woman who fears the Lord is to be praised. Give her the reward she has earned, and let her works ring her praise at the city gate. (Prov 31:28-31)

"You're mean, mom!" "I hate you!" What cutting words and thoughtless. Is it possible that people fail to think before they speak? I believe it is!

Words, like a feather in the wind, may hardly be retrieved. My challenge, therefore, goes out to every family member. Let us consider the force of our words before we speak to each other, especially to that special person called mother. She is to be praised, not profaned.

Catholic children receive first communion

By Phil Reilly
Religious Education Center

Last Saturday, Main Post Catholic Chapel was the scene for 45 young communicants receiving their first communion.

The First Communion program for the Main Post Catholic Chapel began Dec. 1, 1987 with a meeting of the parents, teachers and the director, Chap. (Lt. Col.) Gott. An overview of the program was presented, and it was pointed out that the focus of the program is on the family, parish and the community.

The program encompasses the nine themes that emerge from our experience of the Eucharist. Each of the nine themes is presented in four sessions: an adult session for parents; an instructional session for the children; celebration of the theme for the children, their parents, families and community members; and a home session for the children. Each theme is then developed to disclose its underlying Chrisitan tradition; e.g., the first theme is about "belonging." The children are led from the experience of belonging to their families to their experience of belonging to the Christian family. The theme is reinforced through the celebration/prayer service at the chapel the following week. Two of the parents vounteered to design a banner bringing out the idea of belonging. The banner was brought to the chapel on the evening of the celebration. During the service, the children, accompanied by their parents, came forward with a picture of themselves. Each one pinned his picture on the banner, and the banner was hung in the chapel during the period of preparation — January through May. Each theme is addressed in a similar manner.

After all the themes are covered and just before reception of First Communion, the children gathered with their parents to make the altar breads, which they received at First Communion.

The boys were dressed in white shirts and ties and dark pants, and the girls were dressed in the traditional white dress and white veil.

During the mass at the Offertory, the first communicants brought up their books, which they had studied in preparation, and offered them as part of their offering to God.

After Mass, the children and their families met for a reception in the TIC Annex sponsored by the Military Council of Catholic Women.

Brothers win Best Ranger Competition

Bill Walton

SSgt. Scott Bertacini, Ranger Training Brigade, prepares to do the Prussile Climb.

Ann M. McDonald

Twin brothers, Sgt. Gordon and Gavin Grayson of 2nd Bn., 7th Ranger Rgt, Fort Lewis, Wash., race to the finish line during the water confidence event in the Best Ranger Compeittion.

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet Staff Writer

Although all soldiers are considered "brothers in arms," the winners of this year's David E. Grange Jr. Best Ranger competition literally are brothers.

Sgt. John Schlichte, 26, and SP4 Karl Schlichte, 21, of HHC, 3rd Ranger Bn., 75th Ranger Regt are this year's "best of the best" and the first set of brothers ever to win the event.

For three days, the Schlichte's and 30 other teams, competed against each other in marksmanship, parachuting, canoeing, swimming, land navigation, running and other grueling events designed to test a Ranger's physical and mental abilities.

In the end, the brothers came out on top, fulfilling the eldest Schlichte's three-year pursuit of the title.

It was past experience in competitions that Sgt. Schlichte said enabled them to win the crown.

"I formulated a training schedule based on my knowledge of the competition," he said. "I think that really helped us win."

"I think the fact that we are brothers gave us an edge as well," SP4 Schlichte added, "because we really know each other's strengths and weaknesses."

Both agreed that the hardest event for them was the 20-mile road march and that the easiest was the Helocast swim.

Jean Schlichte, the brother's mother, traveled from Hampstead, N.H., to see her sons compete, knowing that her sons had what it takes to come away victorious.

"I watched John compete last year," she said. "And I told him then, that he and his brother should compete as a team."

"Karl is almost as strong as John, and I knew he would not let his big brother down," she said as she glanced lovingly at her sons. "I'm so proud of both of them."

As for the "Best Rangers," "We're glad its over," they said. They also said they don't feel the term best fits them.

"I think the word "best" only applies for those three days of competition," the eldest brother said. "It just so happens, we peaked on those days and won, but I think any one of the teams could have done the same thing."

Loyd School wins Law Day Award

By Susan McKeeman
Legal Assistance Office

Frank R. Loyd Elementary School won the U.S. Constitution Bicentennial Award for outstanding participation in Law Day for 1988.

The award was presented to Dell Karr, school principal, by Lt. Col. John H. Nix, acting Staff Judge Advocate, at the annual Law Day luncheon held recently at the Fort Benning Officers' Club.

The award was initiated last year by the Staff Judge Advocate Office to honor the Fort Benning school that best promotes the message of Law Day in its activities. Last year's winner was Richard G. Wilson Elementary School.

The program at Loyd Elementary included a wide variety of activities. In addition to many posters and displays throughout the school, the school held a campaign to elect two students to be official School Greeters for visitors to the school. The third grade held a mock trial, "The Three Bears v. Gold E. Locks," a case in which Locks was accused of displaying bad manners.

The second grade also held a mock trial in which the school custodians played the roles of plaintiff and defendant.

"It was not only obvious that Loyd's participation was wide spread from top to bottom, but also that the students were enjoying and learning from their activities," said to Lt. Col. Paul J. Luedtke, acting deputy Staff Judge Advocate, who judged the contest.

"They really got into the program, as did several other schools. It made the decision difficult. In fact, across the board, school participation in Law Day was better at Fort Benning than any other community I've been in. It was top-notch," Luedtke said.

Law Day activities in the schools this year tended to emphasize the right to vote. A number of schools had mock presidential elections.

Other activities included mock trials, guest speakers, posters and displays, and at the upper-grade levels at Faith Middle School, essays.

"One of the best ideas I saw was at McBride Elementary," said Luedtke. "There, the kindergarten through third grade students voted on the lunch to be served at Field Day. Mock elections are educational," said Luedtke, "but when a child votes for chicken and gets peanut butter, he gets a real lesson in democracy."

Kindergarten through fifth grade students competed in a poster contest, and Faith Middle School students competed in an essay contest.

The winners of the poster contest for kindergarten through second grade were:

1st Sarah Cox, 2nd grade, Loyd
2nd Raynell Small, 1st Grade, Wilson
3rd Mandy Laughlin, 1st Grade, McBride

The winners of the poster contest for Third through Fifth grade were:

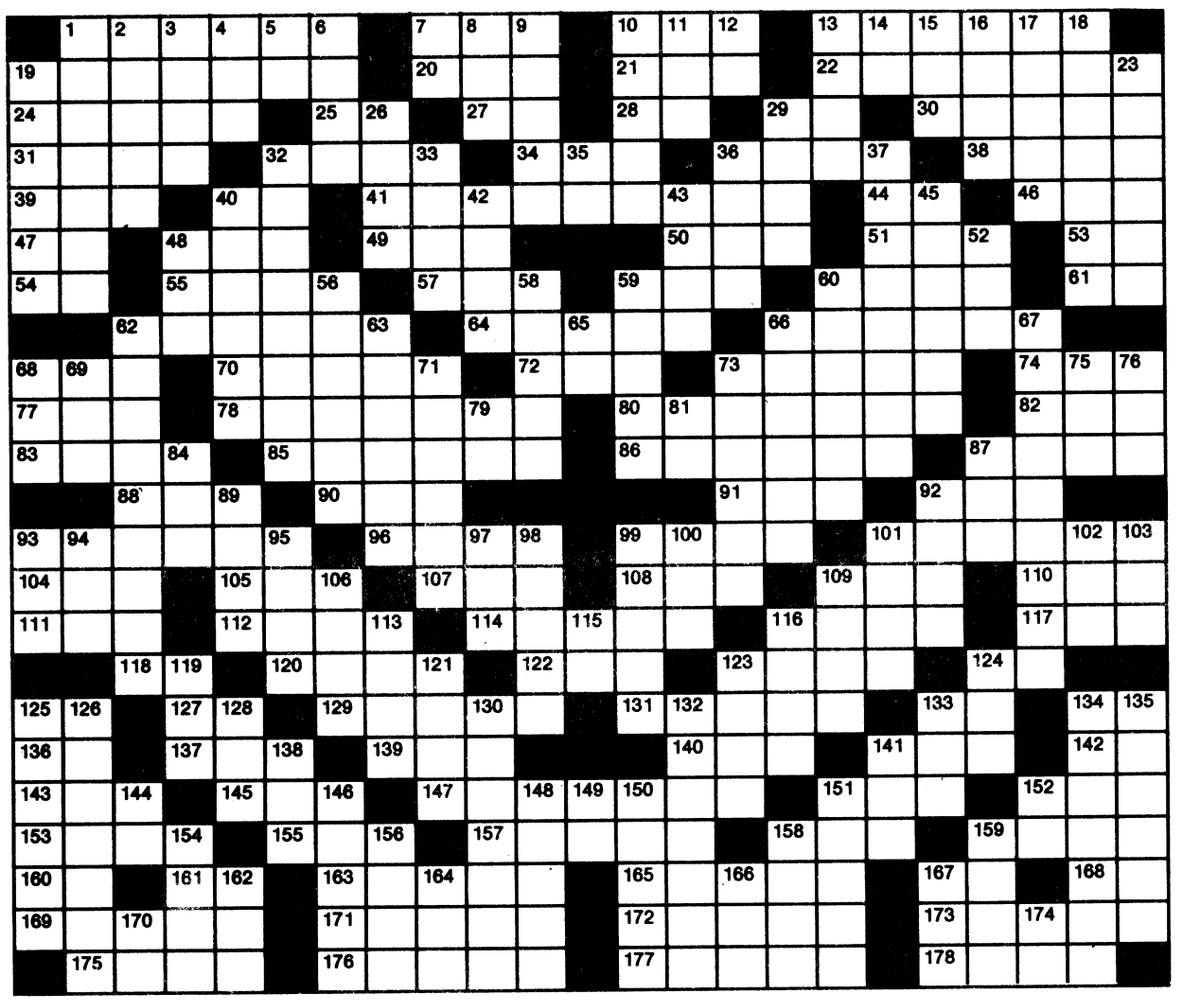
1st Benjie Wisdom, 5th grade, Dexter
2nd Bettina Butt, 5th Grade, Dexter
3rd Doug Mock, 4th Grade, White

The winning posters were on display in the Infantry Hall Display Room at the entrance to building 4.

See page B-3 for the first, second and third place essays written on the subject "Legal Literacy—Voting," the theme of this year's Law Day.

Even in warm weather keep energy conservation in mind

By. Becky Ray
Energy Management Branch



The arrival of warm spring days has brought with it an epidemic of spring fever, with thoughts turning to outdoor recreation and vacations. Fort Benning occupants and residents are also looking for ways to beat the heat without blowing the post's energy budget. Here are a few suggestions:

- Close drapes and shades in sunny windows to keep the hot sun from warming the room.
- Turn off unneeded lights — lights generate considerable amounts of heat. Office equipment and appliances (such as typewriters, computers and coffee pots can also add lots of unwanted heat.
- Keep hot water use to a minimum. Hot water increases the temperature and humidity of the air.
- Use a clothesline to dry clothes. Dryers add heat and humidity to the air in addition to consuming lots of energy. Line drying also makes clothes smell fresher.
- Use heat-generating appliances (especially ovens, dishwashers and clothes dryers) late at night or in early morning hours whenever possible. In cooking, select appliances that generate the least amount of heat.
- Use fans and open windows whenever possible to cool rooms.
- Take advantage of seasonal fresh fruits and vegetables in planning cold meals, such as salads. They save energy in cooking and will help keep the kitchen cool.
- Outdoor barbecuing is a great way to cook without raising the temperature in the house.
- Dress in cool, comfortable clothes. Take advantage of the lose-fitting cotton clothing that is currently in vogue.
- Take care of yourself — healthy bodies handle heat better.
- When air conditioning season begins, set the thermostat no lower than 78 degrees.
- Check the filter often and replace when solid — at least once a month when the air conditioner is in use.
- Blocked air conditioning vents cause air conditioners to work harder and prevent cool air from circulating through the room.

Because air conditioning creates the largest demand for energy at Fort Benning in the summer months, efficient use is critical in meeting energy goals. However, living within an energy budget and being comfortable don't have to be conflicting goals. Creativity and common sense can go a long way in maintaining your personal comfort on hot summer days.

Students participate in Energy Week activities

By Beth Middlemiss
Fort Benning Schools

"Use Energy Wisely for a Secure America" — the theme of this year's Fort Benning spring Energy Awareness Campaign — was a topic discussed and considered by all of Fort Benning's students.

This yearly campaign sponsored by the Energy Office provides students materials and a variety of reminders that emphasize the importance of energy conservation.

Students in kindergarten through third grade were invited to submit a poster using this year's theme, while students in fourth through eighth grades were asked to submit an essay.

While all students benefited from the awareness program, the theme will be especially well remembered by 16 Fort Benning students, their families, their teachers and their classmates.

First-place contest winners at each grade level received a bicycle and a certificate of achievement. A runner-up from each grade level received a $50 savings bond and a certificate of achievement.

This year's winners were presented their awards by Col. James I. Daily, chief of staff, at a ceremony at Faith Middle School April 29. This year's winners were:

"The energy awareness contest provides Fort Benning children an opportunity to become involved in the post-wide effort to conserve energy," said Dr. Suzanne Williams, deputy superintendent. "The Fort Benning Schools' staff has greatly appreciated the support provided by Becky Ray and the Energy Office in providing instructional materials and resources to assist us in instruction concerning energy conservation.

In the past, energy from our natural resources was used without planning for or regard to our future. It is up to this generation of "America the Powerful" to change that attitude.

This wreckless usage has caused our generation to face insecurity of just how long we will have this much "power."

Our rich nation is being forced to turn to foreign lands in order to fuel its existence. The burden of finding new ways to create the energy needed is on our shoulders — for "we" are the future.

Until an infinite source of energy is discovered, we are forever bound to our efforts of conservation.

I think there are three major areas of conservation and planning in which everyone can be involved.

Basic, everyday things can save countless watts, therms, and indirectly, resources. Simply turning off a light, television or radio when leaving a room is a start at conserving energy. Must the heater be a 75 degrees in the winter? Sweaters are in season anyway — why not put one on? This applies in the summer to air-conditioners as well. Why always drive your own car? Start a car-pool and save your money and everyone's energy. Shouldn't these be habits of common sense?

To support the research being done on new energy sources is to help prepare for the nation's future. Conserving is a great part of this preparation, but is research not, as well? A greater knowledge about future options of energy production and about the resources being used in them will be a great advantage. Hydroelectric, nuclear and solar energy are in experimental stages for their role in the times to come. It is vital we learn to use the things we have had all along. This adds some bit of confidence in the upcoming security of the United States.

Future planning and programs of conservation will secure the future to a great extent. When using energy — look forward, not around. We are not conserving for our generation only, but for many more to come. Maybe we will not be here to see the end of energy, but our grandchildren might if we do not conserve today.

Energy must be used with discretion and wisdom. It is not ours to waste. Knowledge is the key to conserving our future. The continuation of studying, testing and learning about more effective uses of resources and new ways of creating energy is pertinent. It must be started now if our successors are to have a chance to improve this world. A conserving environment is much more secure than one that uses energy without discernment. Would not this be true for our country as well? In conclusion, knowledge, perceptiveness, common sense and future planning must be present to secure America and its future.

Top 'Legal Literacy-Voting' essays honored

To be an American is a great thing. We have been given many freedoms and due rights. What use are these if we don't understand them and pursue them to their fullest extent? Voting and education are two of these. Who would not want to be part of the persuasion of their nation's future — it affects us all.

Before we vote, it is vital that we are educated. It would be chaos if all uneducated, unexposed people voted and dictated our future. There is a definite difference between reading and being literate. To read is to simply pronounce and recognize words. Literacy is a step above that — understanding the words individualy and as a group. To be literate in the laws of this nation is a step above that — we must be educated and exposed. We are guaranteed this right by the 10th amendment. Literate voting is efficient.

The United States is governed by "We the People." "We" would be ignorant not to feel the need to help guide outcomes directly affecting us. The right to vote should be taken full advantage of. The U.S. is a team and should have "team effort" in the controlling of its future. Voting is a responsibility placed before us. I know I will gladly accept it when I reach the legal age — I am proud of my country and want to be involved in its future.

Education and voting are key elements in the directing of the United States in the years to come. These two rights and privileges are latticed together — one would fail without the other. It is the duty of Congress to bring them to our attention, the public to support them and the new generation to fulfill their challenge.

It's an election year, time for people to vote. But how do we do this? Do we do it with knowledge or enthusiasim? Do we do it by learning about our candidates? Not often. Most people vote out of habit, or they don't vote at all due to a lack of interest or lack of feeling.

"Voting is a method by which people express their wish or preference on a candidate for public office or on a public issue." It has been used to elect all of our presidents, governors, senators and much, much more.

A lot of people don't bother to vote because of "voters apathy." This means that they simply don't care or are not interested enough to get involved in the election process. During an election year, most political candidiates try to make an impression on people by making public appearances. They even have debates against each other on television so they can let everyone know how they feel about certain issues and what they think about others. Most of the time, people get bored with this and turn their televisions to another station to watch a ballgame or another show that's more interesting. The general public usually couldn't care less in what the political candidates have to say. They do not want to interrupt their lives by taking time to learn about the candidates.

When election day is finally here, most people who are voting have not formed an opinion on their own. They have been lead by what others have said about a particular candidate or because it has become the thing to do.

Voting is a very simple freedom given to us by the rights of the Constitution. People should stop sitting around moaning and groaning about who's in office. They should do something about it, such as voting. That's their way to change American history. It's a right given to people who are supposed to be responsible adults. As a young teen, I feel the Constitution plays a part in my life. I know that in the future, it will be my responsibility to carry on the rights given to me by our forefathers. These rights are a privilege and should be treated accordingly.

There have been a lot of laws made, never one that requires you to vote. Voting is an important issue, and too many people take it for granted. Maybe someone should make a law that makes it manditory for everyone over eighteen to register and vote.

In 1964, a new act was established. The act was called the Civil Rights Act of 1964. This act said no one, on account of race, color, religion, or national origin, would be denied their right to vote. The Voting Rights Act of 1965, which banned literacy tests and other methods to determine voter qualifications in any district where less than 50 percent of the voting population was registered on Nov. 1, 1964.

The Fifteenth Amendment states that the right to vote shall not be denied on account of race, color, or prior servitude. This amendment was not specific enough. It neither gave nor denied women the right to vote. Blacks were then given the right to vote, but women were denied this right.

The rights of women had always come after those of men.

By Shawn Bryson
Bayonet Staff Writer

The Army men's bowling team won first place in the team event of the Armed Forces Bowling Championships held at Fort Benning April 25-28.

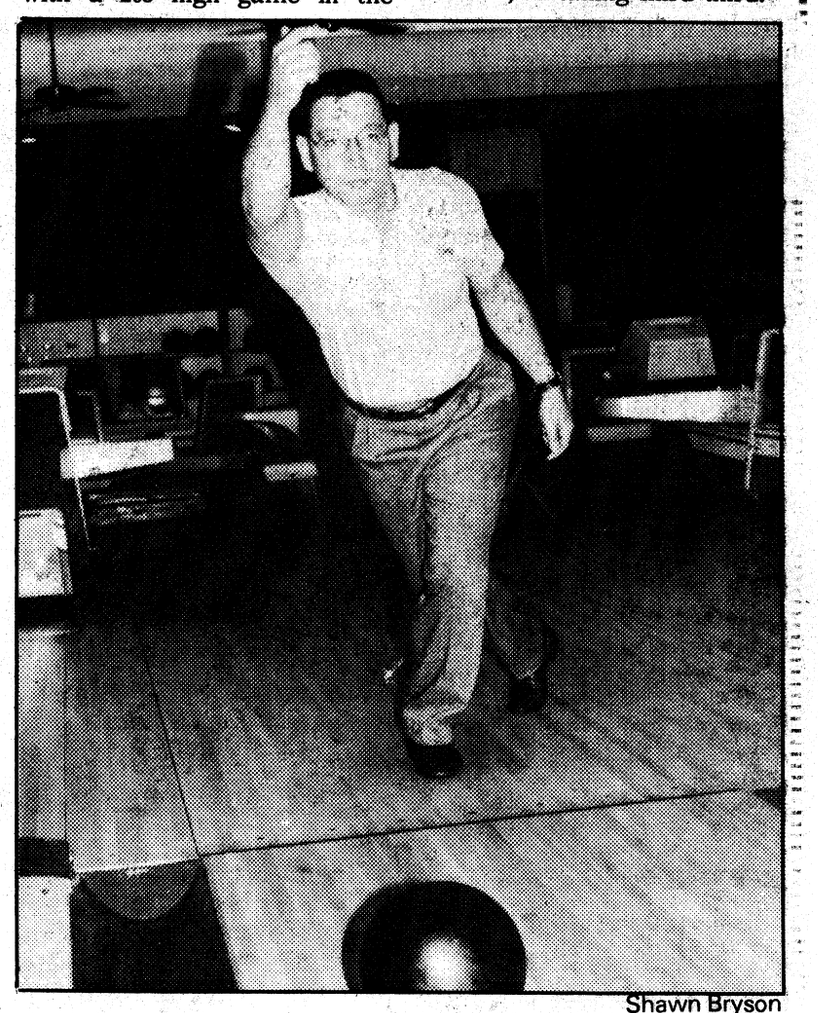
Eddie Gilbert, with a 1,252 pin fall and Tony Szeluga, with 1,232, led the Army six-man team to victory over second place Navy, 7,127 to 6,947.

The women's team event found Army in third place.

Three hundred and fourteen pins separated the first-place Navy women, at 6,791 in the team event, from the runner-up Air Force women. Top bowlers for Navy were Lisa Barfield with 1,278, and Bev Brennan with 1,203.

Air Force men finished third in the team event, and the Marines were last. The Marine women also finished in last place.

Army took the top three places in the overall men's individual competition. The winner was Fort Benning's Tony Szeluga who leveled 1,232 in the team event, 1,357 in the doubles and 1,316 in the singles. Szeluga's total pin fall of 3,905 gave him a tournament average of 216.9. Eddie Gilbert was the second place bowler with a pin count of 3,789 averaging 210.5 per game. Bryan Russell took third with an average of 201.7 with 3,630 pins.



Navy women also took one, two, three in the overall individual competition. The top woman bowler was Lisa Barfield who toppled 3,538 pins with a final average of 196.6. Second place went to Bev Brennan with a 3,450 pin count and 191.7 average. Lana Mink knocked down 3,344 pins averaging 185.8 and taking third.

Gilbert teamed up with Edward Thompson to win the doubles event for Army racking up a 2,574 pin total. Szeluga and Barry Horne grabbed second place for Army just 18 pins behind Gilbert and Thompson. Third in the doubles were Robert Welch and James Fausnight from Air Force with 2,514.

The women's doubles were won by Navy's Bev Brennan and Linda Muth with a combined total of 2,384. Also from Navy, Lisa Barfield and Lana Mink took the doubles second place spot with 2,220. Third went to Army's Dawn Johnson and Frances Sims with a 2,193.

Larry Griffin, from the Marines, took the men's singles with a high game of 237 and six-game series of 1334. Szeluga gave Army a singles second with a 1,316 total. Air Force's Joseph Mrenak took third with a 1,236 total.

Air Force picked up its first victory of the tournament when Sherry Wingfield felled 1,160 pins with a 205 high game in the women's singles. Mink took second for Navy with 1,147 and Army's Judy Johnson knocked down 1,141 taking third third.

Billy Hlebak finds his niche in the sports world racing bikes

By Sally Roberts
197th Infantry Brigade correspondent

In a pair of jeans, T-shirt and a mop of blond hair, Billy Hlebak looks like any ordinary kid. But, on the motorcross track, this 10 year old has found his niche in the sports world.

Billy discovered his sport last summer and began attending races with friends, volunteering to help by cleaning the grime of dirt racing off the bikes. He got his first bike, a Kawasaki 60, for Christmas and took second place in his first race in March. Since then, racing has been in his blood.

In addition to his youthful determination, Billy gets a lot of support from his family. SFC Bill Hlebak, a retention noncommissioned officer in the 197th Infantry Brigade, is learning the ins and outs of racing right along with his son. He attends the races and practices and helps with the cleaning and bike repairs.

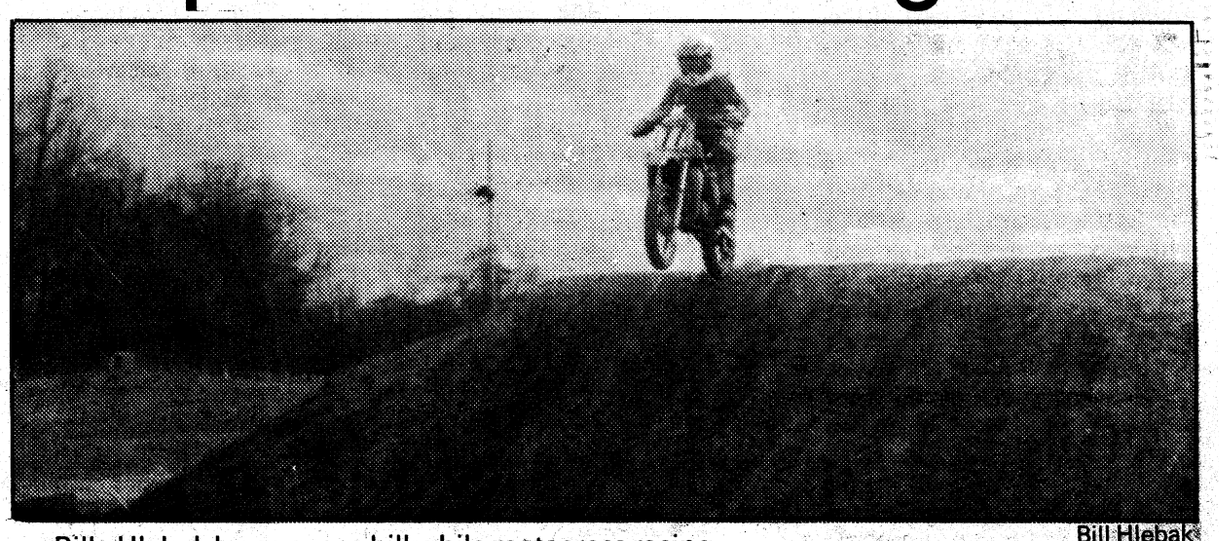
"Billy can take the bike down (for cleaning and repairs) better than I can," Hlebak said. "He is just now teaching me how to do it."

The rest of the family also gets in on the act by attending the races and cheering Billy on.

"His sisters and mother are probably his most important supporters," Hlebak added. "If it's a local race, they're there to cheer for him."

In addition, Billy gets coaching from Bob Schultz, a local businessman and experienced motocross racer. He practices twice a week at the Fort Mitchell Motocross Park.

"He has to know what position to stand on the bike," Hlebak said. "He has to stand on the footpads almost the entire race."



"When I go over a hill, I scoot back on the seat," Billy said. "When I turn, I scoot up on the gas tank and pull the bike down on the side."

Training involves more than just riding. Billy follows a daily fitness schedule in addition to his riding practice.

"I run every night, lift weights and do pushups and situps," Billy said.

Billy has done well in his first few races. Last weekend, he raced in Tallahassee, Fla. There, he raced against more experienced riders and finished fourth over all in the two-day event.

Billy has plans to attend motocross camp during the summer to learn more about riding and racing techniques. He is confident that he wants to make this sport a career.

Four world records fall to servicemen powerlifters

Army News Service

Four world records were set at the Hawaii World Record Breakers' Powerlifting Contest in early April; one by a soldier, two by an airman, and one by a marine.

The Army's Steve Goggins, representing Fort Hood, Texas, picked up a total of 2,254 pounds in his three lifts, more than anyone has ever done in the 242 pound weight class. He had a squat of 920.5, benched 512.5 and deadlifted 821.25 to set the world record.

Gene Bell, a 181 pound Air Force staff sergeant from Homestead AFB, Fla., set two records. He squatted 843 pounds, breaking the old record of 837 pounds.

He then went to work on shattering his weight division's total record which was 2,100 pounds. He broke the record totaling 2,110 pounds, with a deadlift of 744 pounds. Bell also benched 523 pounds.

Ausby Alexander, a Marine from Camp Pendleton, Calif., squatted 738 pounds. He broke the record by 5 pounds in that division.

In February, Alexander and Bell won their divisions at the Armed Forces meet at El Toro, Calif. Alexander broke three interservice meet records while Bell broke all four.

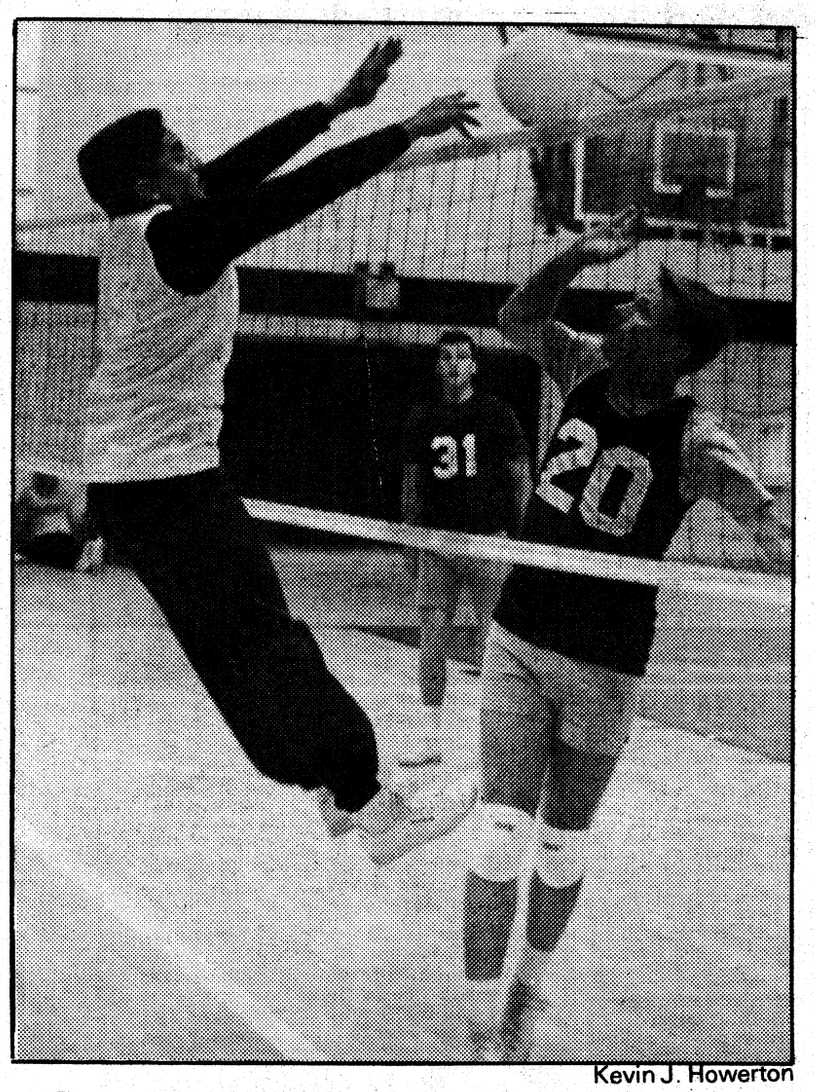
Separate Units team wins

By Kevin J. Howerton
197th Infantry Brigade correspondent

The 197th Infantry Brigade Separate Units team won the Kelley Hill Officers Volleyball Championship recently, beating 2nd Battalion, 18th Infantry "Vanguard" 15-6 the first game and 15-4 the second game.

The single elimination tournament left no room for error. The Separate units finished the season with a 4-1 record and then walked away with an easy victory in their first match of the playoffs, beating 197th Support Battalion 15-5 and 15-9.

Support Battalion made a good show early in the second game, keeping the score within one point. But the Separate Units rallied to cinch their spot in the championship game.



The Vanguard edged past 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor in their semi-final match. The first game ended in a score of 15-9. But the Vanguard had to work hard for their championship seat, coming through with a score of 15-11.

The Separate Units kept their winning drive going in the final game on the talents of various players, such as their coach, Patrick M. Lyons. Lyons has the unnerving ability to spike the ball even when he's at half court.

Archibald V. Arnold also showed aggressiveness at the net, saving many points with blocked spikes. John F. Towry is another strong player whose ability to position the ball near to the net assisted the team's spikers.

The Separate Units also benefitted from strong serving throughout the team. Possession of the ball was rarely lost to a bad serve.

The tournament wrapped up the Volleyball season for the Officers league. Now, attention turns to softball.

USAMU's Glenn Dubis breaks two national shooting records

By Tommy Pool
USAMU Public Affairs Office

Capt. Glenn Dubis from the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit, swept the individual rifle events and established two new national records during the U.S. Grand Prix shooting championships held recently at Prado Dam, Calif., from April 22 through 25.

Competing at the site of the 1984 Olympic shooting events, Dubis scored consecutive victories in the 50-meter, smallbore three position, 50-meter, smallbore prone and 10-meter, air rifle championships.

His total of 1,180 out of 1,200 points during the 50-meter, threeposition event raised the old record mark of 1,179 that had stood since 1984. Dubis also raised the 40-shot standing national record by two points during the same championship, scoring 390 out of 400.

Second place in the event went to U.S. shooting team member, Webster Wright, with a total of 1,171 points, while R. Denevec of Yugosolvia placed third at 1,168.

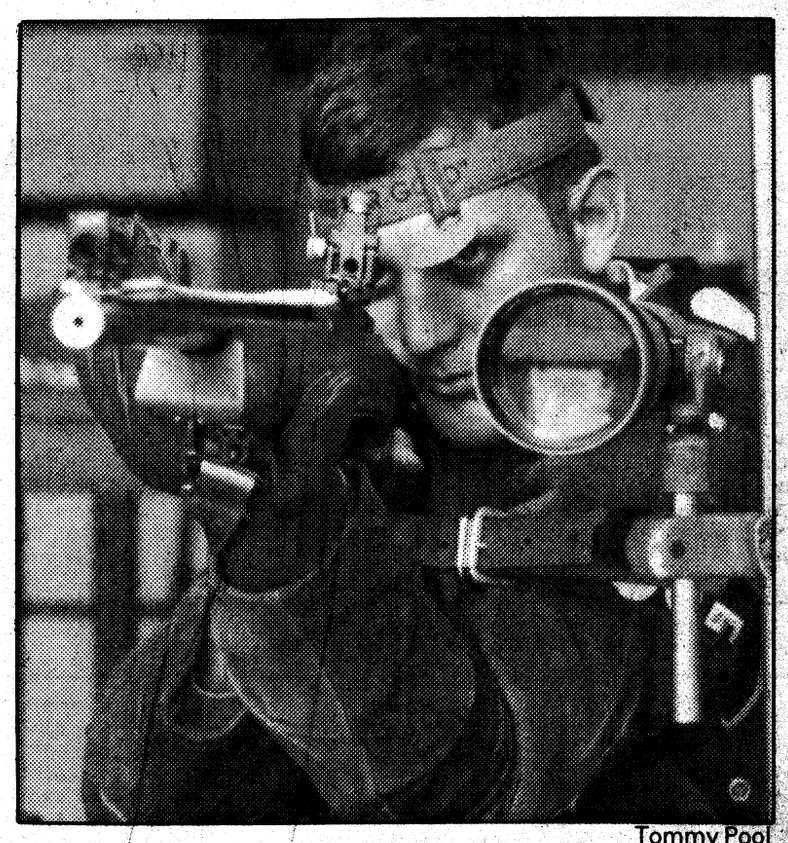
In the other events, Dubis finished with 599 out of 600 in the 50-meter, prone event to place three points ahead of team-mate, SP4 Thomas Tamas, who captured the silver medal at 596.

Dubis scored his third individual gold medal during the 10-meter, air rifle championship by a narrow one-point margin over U.S. team member, Dan Durbin.

Dubis scored a total of 592 out of 600 points, while Durbin finished with 591 and the silver medal. Third place was won by R. Devevec of Yugoslovia, with a final of 586.

In team competition, the U.S. Army "Blue" squad won all three of the rifle team championships. Winning Army team members in the 50-meter, three position event were: Dubis, Capt. Kurt Fitz-Randolph and 2nd Lt. Michael Anti.

The 50-meter, prone team members included Capt. Dubis, Tamas and Sgt. Brad Carnes, while the 10-meter air rifle squad included Dubis, Fitz-Randolph and SP4 Troy Baker.



More than 50 of the top international rifle competitors participated in this year's U.S. Grand Prix and represented such nations as Peru, Cuba, South Korea, Yugosolvia and Israel.

In other shooting competition, the 1988 Interservice Running Target Championships began at Fort Benning this week, with the top service teams from the Army, Army Reserve, U.S. Marine Corps, U.S. Air Force and National Guard in attendance.

'Fit Trail' opens near Follow Me golf course

By Shawn Bryson
Bayonet staff writer

A new exercise course is is open at Fort Benning. The course is open to men, women and children of all ages and physical conditions.

The course, called 'Fit Trail', is a physical fitness trail designed to combine jogging or walking and exercising in a natural setting as well as a safe area.

According to Maj. William Sitler, deputy, Directorate of Personnel and Community Activities, the trail is located at the corner of Dixie and 1st Division roads near the 'Follow Me' golf course.

Work on the trail began seven weeks ago and was recently finished by soldiers from the second platoon of Company C, 43rd Engineer Battalion, 36th Engineer Group.

"The engineers did a really great job on the trail and have given everyone a very decent place to run and exercise," Sitler said.

The new trail is a two-mile loop with a series of exercise stations along side the jogging trail. "There are 20 exercise stations with a total of 32 different streching and toning exercises," Sitler said.

The fitness trail has an overall design to develop flexibility and build and tone muscles. The course is also helpful in cardiovascular conditioning.

Each station will have instructions for each exercise as well as trail direction markers and certain apparatus.

Fit Trail includes Target Heartbeat Range Guides at each station for monitoring heartbeat.

It is recommended that persons interested in using the fitness trail consult a physician before doing so. It is also important that people start exercising at a slow pace and don't overdo it. Cooling down after using Fit Trail is also considered very necessary in preventing injuries.

Vote

There were many debates over whether the Fifteenth Amendment included women. Finally, in 1920, women gained their right to vote like any other United States citizen.

People should be encouraged to vote. We need everyone to register to vote, so that people will be satisfied with who wins the election. One vote could make the difference between a better nation or a worse one. All it takes is a few minutes of your time and once you vote, you'll feel good because your vote could have been the one that helped our nation.

When you turn eighteen, you should register to vote. Just think of the people before you who have worked to let you choose who the next president, mayor or governor should be. In some countries, people don't have a choice of who their next president will be.

Each individual counts and is important to our nation. Every vote, opinion and suggestion is important. It's all up to you — register and make your own decision. Don't and let the choice be made by someone else.

"I just made $100 by spending $5."

Spending a little money in Ledger-Enquirer Classified to sell something can mean big money for you. For example, you can run a 3-line ad for 3 days for just $11.70 on a big-ticket item. Or, you can run a 3-line ad for 5 days for just $5 in some classifications. Either way, when you have something to sell, spending a little can help you pick up a lot!

Spouse Day message

I am happy to join all Americans in saluting our Nation's military wives and husbands on Military Spouse Day, 1988.

This special occasion allows us to recognize and thank publicly the millions of men and women around the globe who, through care and support of their spouses in uniform, enhance the morale and improve the readiness of our Nation's defenders.

Most military spouses are at least part-time homemakers, and many are responsible for children and families. Still, they find time to serve as volunteers in their communities and as goodwill ambassadors abroad. Not a few are called upon to make personal sacrifices, defer careers, forego familiar surroundings or endure long periods of separation for the defense of freedom. Truly, they are unsung heroes.

The commitment of these spouses to our Nation and to its ideals is just as great as that of the soldier who mans the guns or the sailor at sea. Both serve so that free peoples everywhere might live in peace and justice. Neither takes peace for granted, they know its price. To those who have lost a loved one in the cause of freedom, we as a Nation owe a special debt which can never be repaid.

On this noteworthy day, I urge all Americans to remember our military spouses, wherever they serve, with appropriate activities and observances.

Let us join together in saying "thank you" to all those good men and women upon whose love and friendship so many depend. God bless you.

Post braces for more cuts

USAIC Public Affairs Office

One hundred thirty-seven, permanent post employees received Reduction in Force letters yesterday while another 800 were told they would change jobs.

Post civilians, working for Training and Doctrine and U.S. Army Information Systems Commands, have known since mid-April of the pending reduction. At that time, it was estimated that as many as 200 might be released.

The current action does not include 52 mechanic positions, which will be lost later this fall when General Services Administration takes over Transportation Motor Pool operations, as previously announced.

Now that the letters have been distributed, the Directorate of Civilian Personnel is taking various steps to assist affected employees.

Permanent employees being released will be counseled individually by a specialist from the Recruiting and Placement Division. They will be registered in the Priority Placement Program as applicable, placed on the Reemployment Priority List and, if eligible, registered in the Office of Personnel Management Displaced Employee Program.

Employees being reassigned will also be counseled on a one-on-one basis. They will have their new positions explained to them in detail and will be told about grade and/or pay entitlements.

The effective date for these moves is July 31.

The Directorate of Civilian Personnel's Information Center will open Monday to assist those being released and reassigned. It will be located in building 35, Room 130 and will be open Monday through Friday from 8:30 a.m. to 4 p.m. It will contain material such as retention registers, competitive level registers and other applicable regulations.

Employees who receive letters are asked not to call or visit the Directorate of Civilian Personnel until they have been individually counseled.

Civilian personnel officials note that while the goal is to minimize turmoil as much as possible, it is still possible that specific job offers and notices of separation identified in the letters are subject to change.

They explain that the refusal to accept a certain position by one employee could then open that slot up to someone who receives a termination notice.

In addition to the permanent employees being released, the post may also have to release up to 39 temporary positions.

This action is being taken as the post moves to the Commercial Activities "Most Effective Organization" status, because of fiscal year '89 civilian strength ceilings reductions and budget cuts.

Ceremony held to honor award winners

By Shawn Bryson
Bayonet staff writer

Outstanding contributors to the 1987 Training and Doctrine Command SPIRIT competition, in which Fort Benning won first place and $1 million, were honored at an awards ceremony last week.

Col. James I. Daily, Fort Benning chief of staff, presented Col. Victor Stamey, commander of the United States Army Infantry Training Center, the Project SPIRIT trophy for the Command/Major Unit competition as his unit's nine management initiatives and one suggestion allowed an $8.4 million annual savings.

Some of the savings changes included making TA 50 gear a wall-locker issue item, assembly of wall lockers by troop labor, and a hire freeze. Other changes implemented were the transfer of one copier, the use of alcohol pads to replenish Nuclear-Biological-Chemical decontamination kits and changes in the award program.

The Directorate of Engineering and Housing won top honors in the Directorate Staff competition with 27 management initiatives, six adopted suggestions and one capital investment project, which resulted in a $5 million annual savings.

Projects completed through the U-Do-It program, landscaping done with self-help and troop labor, the renovation of buildings with troop labor, reduction of sick leave and the elimination of overtime were many of the actions taken by DEH to reduce spending in support of Project SPIRIT.

The Special Staff Competition was won by the Safety Office, which had an annual savings of $160,000. The non-filling of vacant positions at the office, as well as the detailing of personnel and hiring of interns were actions taken by the office that helped Fort Benning win the TRADOC competition.

Eleven people who contributed significantly to Project SPIRIT were presented the Individual Project SPIRIT Award. Ellen F. Taylor and Charlene R. Cowman of the Directorate of Contracting; Charles Cole, Charles Wilson and Michael Dubose of the Directorate of Engineering and Housing; Mary E. Herring and Patricia P. Ellis of the Directorate of Logistics; Lawrence D. Lalka of the United States Army Information Systems Command; Samuel E. Rush of the Directorate of Plans, Training and Mobilization; Francis P. Farrell and Emilio Garza Jr. of the United States Army Infantry Training Center received the award for their help in Fort Benning's victory.

The total savings figure turned in by Fort Benning was $40.8 million, 95 percent of which was validated, which was more than enough to beat out 16 other installations in TRADOC.

The $1 million prize will be received sometime in 1989.

Holiday plans set

USAIC Public Affairs Office

"Securing the Blessings of Liberty" is the theme of this year's Armed Forces Day, which will be celebrated here May 21 with an open house.

A full day of activities are scheduled, including a 7 a.m. 10k and 2-mile run at York and Steward fields, followed at 10 a.m. by a parade, Airborne and Ranger demonstrations and crowning of the Chattahoochee Valley/Fort Benning Association of the United States Army queen.

From noon to 5 p.m., Stewart-Watson Field will take on a carnival atmosphere with activities for all ages. In conjunction with Armed Forces Day, the local AUSA chapter will sponsor its annual picnic. Food and bevarages will be on sale at booths located at the Stewart-Watson site from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m.

The public is invited to attend the all-day events.

Special Airborne class graduates

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

Paratroopers past and present were honored last week at the Airborne Walk in a memorial wreath laying ceremony conducted in conjunction with the graduation of the special Fort Benning Airborne class.

A ceremony of this type has been conducted each year since the construction of the walk was completed in 1986 and is traditionally conducted in conjunction with the Airborne awards ceremony in Atlanta.

Although the purpose of their visit is to memorialize their fallen airborne comrades, this ceremony gives past paratroopers a chance to come back to the place where their airborne careers began.

During their visit, they observed different phases of airborne training and the special all-Fort Benning class make their final jump.

Through a radio link-up, the audience was able to listen to the students receiving their final jump commands.

After lunch, the group viewed a special performance of the Airborne-in-Action demonstration and continued to the site of the ceremony.

During the ceremony, they were given the opportunity to pin the wings on the 426 remaining members of 540 soldiers who started the special Fort Benning class.

Note: In an article about the special class in last week's edition of The Bayonet, SP4 Angelia Pacheco was misquoted. The quote should have said that Pacheco was in the process of applying for airborne class when she was in a car accident.

Snively would make a few changes to regulations for women's uniforms

By Clyde Snively
USAIC Public Affairs Office

It's late at night as I stare at the blinking eye on my computer's screen.

My only company, the occasional footfalls of the duty officer as he prowls the building.

I sit here pondering how I'm going to write this without bringing the wrath of womenhood down on my slender shoulders, wishing instead that I was in some foxhole at JRTC, waiting the aggressor to start his attack. Knowing I would blow him away, while here, it may be the other way around come Friday.

The subject is women and the proper wear of the uniform.

The subject came to mind the other day when I overheard some NCOs complaining about a woman soldier who'd just walked by.

"Look at that hairdo," the first one said.

"Can you believe the makeup?" the second one added.

I was waiting for them to counsel her about her appearance when the first one asked, "Is it regulation?" The second one shrugged his shoulders, rolled his eyes in a "got me look," and at that they both turned and went back to their business.

Now ole Snively knows that women soldiers, just like men soldiers will get away with anything they can. If a women soldier figures that she won't be counseled for uniform violations, then she'll violate the reg until she is corrected.

Men do the same thing. As soon as an NCO lets something ride we know is wrong, we got ourselves a new standard to go by.

We're all like that. I mean, hey, if my editor lets me skate just once on some style guide error, what the hey, I stop using the style guide and make up my own style. So what if it's different from the rest of the newspaper.

The editor must not care. She hasn't chewed on me lately.

But we're getting off the subject, and I've come up with a suggestion for helping supervisors who can't remember uniform regulations.

Starting at the top, my regulation is a little more explicit than AR 670-1 that says hair shouldn't be ragged or unkempt or interfere with the wear of headgear or protective masks.

My reg would say that if you can't see neck between collar and hair, either the collar is up too high, the hair's too long or both. It adds that the hat will sit on the head, not the hair. In other words, a light breeze won't blow the hat off some beehive.

The reg says makeup will be in good taste.

Again, what's good taste. Loam, sand and dark green? Limiting female soldiers to those three colors might be a bit extreme, so use the fingernail test. If the soldier runs her fingernail across the face and comes up with a nail full of paste, too much make up. Hold a picture of Bozo the Clown next to her. If there's a resemblance, makeup is too extreme.

The reg goes into a great deal of detail about jewlery. It covers barrettes–they should be transparent or the same color as the hair — and earrings, again discussing color and size and noting they will not be worn with field uniforms, no matter how tasteful.

I say let women soldiers wear their earrings and barrettes with all uniforms as long as they match their BDUs in color and design.

Long fingernails that are brightly shone are taboo, as are more than two rings (wedding and engagement rings count as one).

This is a favorite for uniform violators. I've seen women with rings on nearly all fingers and fingernails that looked like they belonged to a vampire who'd had just used them for a blood feast.

Again, nail polish should match the earrings and no more than one ring in addition to the wedding and engagement rings — that goes for us guys too.

Not covered, but I think it should be is the perfume. After all, use too much, and you not only give your position away, but can suffocate your co-workers.

Once again, Snively comes through. I've developed a new scent, called "eau de BDU," coming to your post exchange soon. A sister perfume will be "Parfume l'sweat." I figure I can make millions on these scents.

The reg covers a lot more. In fact I never realized what interesting reading it made. But my female editor is turning red, waiting for my copy, and I don't think red faces are in compliance with the regulation.

Carlucci sends thanks to soldiers

As troops return from exercises in the field and ships and aircraft squadrons return from deployments, it has long been customary to send messages of congratulations for a job well done. But in reflecting on the recent deployment of U.S. military forces to the Persian Gulf and Central America, as well as the continuing commitment of U.S. military forces overseas, there are some more important issues that merit our consideration.

From the earliest days of our republic, the U.S. Military has stood ready to protect our nation's vital interests and underpin our diplomatic objectives around the world. Although the lesson has occasionally been forgotten only to be relearned with some pain and great expense, it has been consistently recognized that in exercising a leadership role and looking out for our interests in a very dangerous and at times confusing world, military strength must undergird diplomacy.

And so our military history has been enriched by great men like the Army's Marshall, the Navy's Burke, the Marine's Lejeune and the Air Force's Mitchell — all of them great leaders who clearly understood the critical relationship of military and political strength.

Today the men and women of our military services are again called upon to undergird our political and diplomatic objectives. In addition to satisfying existing commitments in Europe and Asia and here at home and at sea, events in the Persian Gulf and in Central America have required the extraordinary deployment of our military forces in support of our diplomatic objectives in these very important regions.

In the Persian Gulf, all four services have joined together to execute very capably a mission as old as our nation — the protection of ships flying American's flag. The Persian Gulf remains a dangerous place, but America's interests are more secure because of the quiet professionalism of our military forces there.

More recently, the Army and Air Force responded very quickly to a rapidly developing situation in Central America. Events of the last two weeks have shown that America's willingness to help its friends carries a very strong and very important message.

Our ability to exercise immediately our military capabilities results from having a clear understanding of purpose, modern equipment and rigorous individual and unit training. Commitment to that purpose, immediate readiness to respond, thorough professional grasp of procedure and principle and quiet execution of very difficult, dangerous missions — this is what we have come to expect from our armed forces and this is what you deliver.

All too frequently the execution of timely, effective military operations in response to political and diplomatic objectives unleashes a flood of criticism. We hear all kinds of warnings: There is a danger of escalation, the executive lacks authority to take action, or someone might get hurt. Fortunately, you see it differently: Each mission is another opportunity for our military services to prove themselves imminently capable of doing a dangerous task well. What these recent operations prove is the critics are wrong. Prompt action brought more stability, not less.

In my view, there are several reasons for your success. You are well trained and ready. You are led at every level of the chain of command by leaders of the highest caliber, especially at the NCO and junior officer levels. But perhaps the most important ingredients in your success are your basic sense of purpose and commitment to defend the elemental principles of our republic — the liberty and equality Americans enjoy.

Whether you participated directly in these operations or serve our continuing commitment to freedom in some other capacity, either near or far, you represent the highest ideals of our nation. We are proud of each of you. Well done.

Frank C. Carlucci
Secretary of Defense

TRADOC commander commends post on winning SPIRIT award

I want to personally commend you and the personnel of your command on your outstanding support of the TRADOC Project SPIRIT and being the first place SPIRIT winner among TRADOC installations in fiscal year '87. Not only were the savings most impressive, but the variety and breadth of the initiatives and the clarity with which they were explained indicate a thorough and well-rounded commandwide program. You have set a new standard of productivity excellence for TRADOC.

No doubt you have identified many needs for the first-place award monies, and I would hope that at least some of it would be used in a manner that would publicize and sustain the momentum you have so successfully generated in fiscal year '87. I see no letup in the need for productivity gains to support the Army management goal of "a total Army, which efficiently and effectively uses the resources made available." This is particularly sensitive in light of Gramm-Rudman, the Presidential Executive Order to increase productivity 20 percent by 1992 and the recent budget cuts.

With your continued commitment and cooperation, TRADOC and the Army will convince Congress and the American public of our resolve, our professionalism and our SPIRIT.

Again, my congratulations on a job well done!

Sincerely
M.R. Thurman

INFANTRY continues 67-year tradition here

Office of INFANTRY Magazine

In the May-June 1988 issue of INFANTRY, Capt. Thomas T. Smith, in "Bradley Gunnery Evolution," chronicles Bradley fighting vehicle gunnery since 1983 when the vehicles were introduced to units at Fort Hood. Using the experiences of the one battalion, he describes the training concepts, techniques and standards as they changed over the years in all areas of gunnery.

Also in that issue is the first of a two-part article on Soviet landmine warfare. Prepared by the Infantry School's Threat Directorate , it describes the mines and minelaying organizations most commonly used in the Soviet Army. The second part, to appear in INFANTRY's July-August 1988 issue, covers minelaying doctrine, types of minefields, and methods of emplacement.

INFANTRY, now an official professional bulletin of the Department of the Army, has been published at Fort Benning since 1921.

Other articles in the May-June issue include "Close Air Support: The Debate from FAC's Perspective," by Capt. Mark A. Barrett, USAF; "The Commander's Intent," by Capt. Thomas M. Jordan; "Platoon Live Fire Ambush," by Lt. Chris G. Pappas; and "The New Battalion CSM," by Command Sergeant Major Othel Terrell, Jr.

Information about INFANTRY, including subscription rates and writers' guidelines, is available from the Editor, P.O. Box 2005, Fort Benning, GA 31905-0605; AUTOVON 835-2350, commercial (404) 545-2350.

VHA surveys needed by May

Soldiers who were surveyed for VHA are asked to report housing costs before the end of May.

About 150,000 soldiers recently received variable housing allowance survey forms asking for housing costs in their duty location areas.

If you received a survey questionnaire, take heed. The variable housing allowance survey, conducted every two years by the Department of Defense's Per Diem, Travel and Transportation Allowance Committee, will end May 31.

Personnel officials encourage you to fill out the forms accurately and submit them before the deadline. The survey gives the committee the data they need to set VHA rates for soldiers across the country. It is important that you report accurately the housing costs in your area so that the VHA rates can be adjusted to coincide with your housing costs. Of the 970,000 DOD servicemembers who receive VHA, about 400,000 received the survey questionnaire.

During the last VHA adjustment, 67 percent of all soldiers who get VHA got less of it. If housing costs have increased in areas near your duty stations, then the only way your VHA rates can rise to meet the increase is if you complete the survey, report the increase, and return your form to your unit survey administrator.

Forces Command CSM observes training here

George Mingee
197th Infantry Brigade correspondent

"As a sergeant you are the standard for soldiers. Make sure you know as much as soldiers and even more," said the top noncommissioned officer of U.S. Army Forces Command, CSM George Horvath. "The next war we enter is going to be 'come as you are,' with little time to train. The sergeants will bear the responsibility."

Horvath took the opportunity to look in on the 197th Infantry Brigade during his recent visit to the FORSCOM units at Fort Benning.

During his two-day visit, Horvath viewed 197th soldiers accomplishing many training missions, such as the 72nd Engineer Company demonstrating obstacle building techniques; and an assault of the bayonet course by soldiers of Company D, 197th Support Battalion.

CSM Horvath was seen constantly talking to soldiers in the brigade. In particular, he gave a few words of encouragement to the soldiers at the bayonet course.

"I want to instill 'spirit of the bayonet' in all of you," Horvath said. I want to see you attacking this course, slashing and jabbing with the idea to kill."

And that's exactly what the enthusiastic Support Battalion soldiers did, even to the point of cheering on Horvath as he high-crawled through one of the muddy obstacles.

"Young soldiers make me feel the best," said CSM Horvath. "A sergeant's primary job is to train and teach young soldiers; whether it be as a team, squad, section or crew. Soldiers are the building blocks, and a sergeant's job is to teach them the correct tactics and how to execute them."

CSM Horvath conveyed this message to all the soldiers he met. A sergeant's job is to teach and train soldiers and a soldiers job is to learn and strive to become a noncommissioned officer.

'Mountain Men' return from desert

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

The "Mountain Men" have returned from the desert.

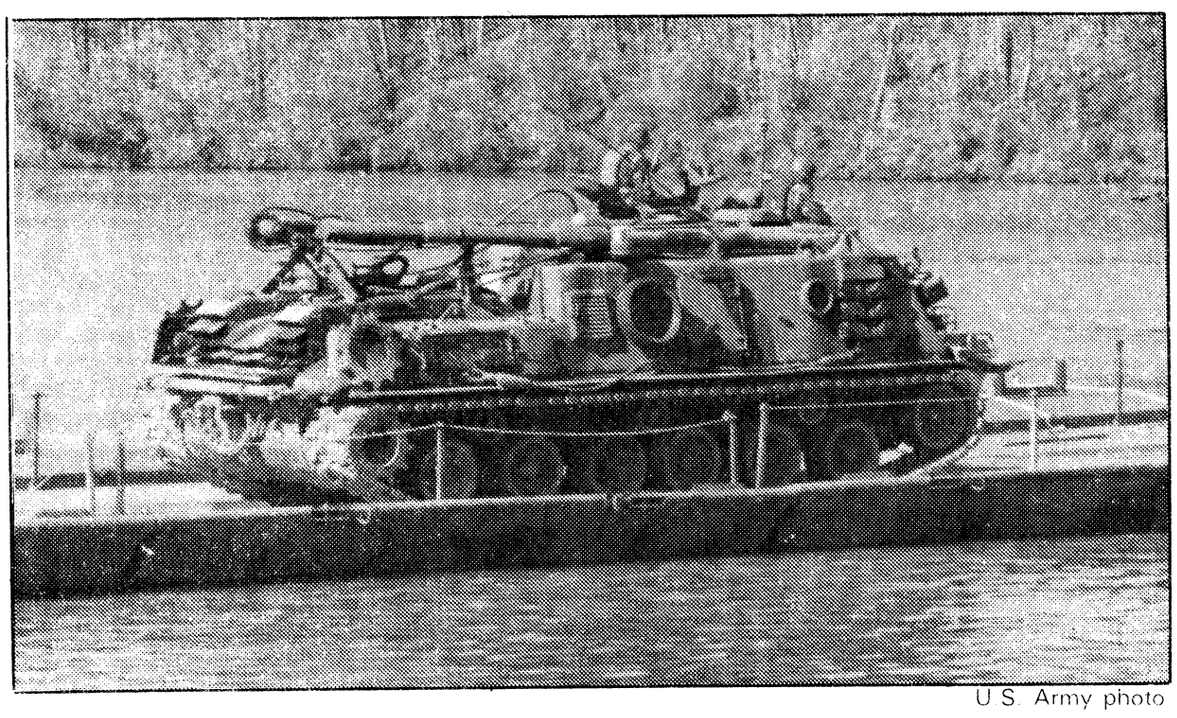
The Alligators of Co. A, and the Barbarians of Co. B, 2nd Bn., 14th Inf., 10th Mtn. Div. returned from the National Training Center, Fort Irwin, Calif.

According to 1st Lt. Harry Yates, executive officer, Co. B, 2nd Bn., 14th Inf., 10th Mtn. Div., the men traveled to the NTC to act as the opposing force for 194th Armor Division, Fort Knox, Ky.

Yates said, they left Fort Benning enroute to the NTC on April 9, four days early, so they could attend what is known as the OPFOR Academy.

"At the academy, the men learned Soviet tactics and weaponry," he said. "Then they donned replicas of Soviet uniforms to better portray their role as the opposing force."

Yates said the mountain men were reluctant about wearing communist uniforms but that they realized the importance of the mission at hand and accepted the idea of wearing the apparel.



After the mountain troops were prepared for their mission as the OPFOR at the NTC, they got down to the business at hand.

Yates said they did well. Both companies were given an award while at the center for knocking out 150 tanks over a 14 day period.

"The personnel at NTC said, we 'were the best OPFOR rotation they had seen come into the center in four years,'" Yates said.

But in the end, the NTC was not the only benefactor as the mountaineers learned something about themselves.

"They now have confidence that they can kill tanks on the desert battlefield, which is something they weren't sure of before," Yates said.

IOBC students volunteer time to PALS program

By David A. Cherry
IOBC student

April 23, IOBC students from Co. C, 2nd Bn., 11th Inf., braved the elements to engage the PALS in what could be called an ambush. This time it was with water balloons and of course the PALS children won.

The PALS program, People Able to Love and Share, is a United Way Program sponsored by the Columbus, Ga. Family Counseling Center. The children are from single parent families in Columbus and the immediate area.

After an informal Saturday morning at the Family Counseling Center, each IOBC lieutenant was matched up with a PALS child. After meeting each child's parent and receiving instructions, the child and his pal moved to Flat Rock Creek Park for a day of games and food.

The day's activities consisted of games such as tug-of-war and tag, lots of food, awards to volunteers and a visit by the world's greatest athlete. Oh yeah; we also had the world's greatest water balloon fight. Nobody escaped that wet and wild feeling.

As earlier stated, the PALS program is sponsored by the Columbus Family Counseling Center under the United Way. The director for the Family Counseling Center is Larry Shaw with Clay Cole as the coordinator for the PALS Program. Often the PALS find that they do not have enough volunteers and many of the children are left out and are put on a waiting list. Shaw, in coordination with Maj. Jimmy Duhaime, commander for Co. C, 2nd Bn., 11th Inf. (IOBC), established a program called "PALS for the day." Under this program, IOBC lieutenants are paired on a one-day basis with a child on the waiting list. There is always an over-abundance of IOBC volunteers, and there is no lack of enthusiasm. This program definitely proves, once again, that the Army Family cares.

Those who work full time with PALS should be commended for their efforts. Clay Cole, Kimberly Favors and Ann Allison are the stalwarts of the organization and demonstrate a role model of patience, endurance and care.

Anyone wishing further information concerning the PALS program, can call the Family Counseling Center at 327-3238. The center is located on the corner of First Avenue and 7th Street in Columbus.

River

pany for its upcoming External Evaluation in June. 2nd Bn., 18th Inf., began early to prepare to cross the manuever unit. Engineer Regulating Points were established to receive the organic equipment of the manuever unit, which in this case consisted of M-113s, ITVs, M-88 recovery vehicles, jeeps and 2½-ton trucks. At the ERP, leaders and drivers were briefed on safety and any special instructions needed to cross the river. Prior to the arrival of the main body serials, a liaison team made up of 2nd Bn., 18th Eng.'s executive officer, Maj. Batiste and its Scout Platoon arrived to coordinate movement.

For realism, 2nd Bn., 28th Inf. was broken down to conduct two of three phases of river crossings, rafting and bridging, which are second and third respectively in the crossing phase. The first phase, assult crossing through swimming, heli-lift and rubber boats, was omitted due to safety and asset limitations. The first two elements of the main body, Co. B and E., were chosen to be the initial raft elements.

When the units arrived at the ERP, they were broken down into raft loads, issued life vests and given special instructions. As this occurred, the engineers constructed two Class 75 ribbon rafts to ferry the equipment from Georgia to Alabama. When complete, raft loads were sent the final three kilometers to the crossing site, where they ferried and then reconsolidated on the far shore to continue their mission.

Upon completion of the rafting, 586th immediately went into the bridging mode to expedite the crossing of the remaining units, which included Co. C and D, as well as the battalion's supply trains. After the companies received their briefings, they rolled across to occupy defensive positions. This crossing did not terminate the exercise though.

To insure everyone gained full benefit, those elements not rafted on April 25 were given the mission to do so early the next morning. The night rafting of Co. C and D proved to be the most realistic training in the river crossing exercise, since these tasks are normally conducted at night under limited visibility to avoid detection.

'Vanguards' take to field for a variety of events

Reuben Maynard
2nd Battalion, 18th Infantry

The Vanguards of 2nd Battalion, 18th Infantry, were in the field recently to conduct a wide variety of events during a Field Training Exercise. The exercises began when each company crossed the Chattahoochee River on a ribbon bridge and returned on vehicle rafts. Once they reached the field training sites, the companies began a different phase of the exercise.

They rotated through many different events, such as a company live-fire attack and hasty defense on Cactus Range. Platoons fought against each other in force-on-force exercises, and squads had live-fire attacks on Cactus Range. There were also qualification ranges for small arms such as the M-60 machine gun, the Squad Automatic Weapon and the 9mm pistol.

Anti-tank weapons were also used during the FTX. Platoons were certified in the use of the Improved Tow Vehicle, there was a competition for the best TOW defensive position and a TOW live-fire at Hartell Observation Point. DRAGON and Law missiles were live-fired on Cactus Range.

The battalion also participated in a 197th Brigade level Command Post Exercise conducted during the FTX.

"The training was designed to lay stress on the battalion's soldiers and their leaders and made maximum use of the available training time," said Capt. Thomas P. D'Alo, the battalion plans and training officer.

Training was designed to prepare the battalion for a June External Evaluation. During the exercise, the leadership of the battalion conducted an evaluation for the best individual fighting position during the platoon defensive force on force and for the best squad during the squad live fires. Each of the winners will be announced by the commander of the 197th Infantry Brigade (M) (S), Col. Harvey D. Watson, during a battalion awards ceremony, 1 p.m. Wednesday at the Kelley Hill Theater.

ASK THE JUDGE

By Ollie M. Mick
Staff Judge Advocate

Q: I am having a number of financial problems, and I am trying to reduce most of the expenses in my budget. One of the things I am thinking about doing is cancelling the insurance on my automobile. I know that it is required in Georgia, but we simply can't afford it. What could happen to me if I do this?

A: Automobile insurance is required by the state of Georgia and by Fort Benning regulations. It is necessary to show proof of insurance to register the vehicle on post and to obtain the annual tags from the motor vehicle department. Although your tags and registration may be current at the moment, they will both have to be renewed eventually, and this cannot be done without insurance.

Insurance is an essential protection against liability claims and property damage. If your car is being financed, cancelling the insurance will result in a breach of contract and may cause the finance company to purchase a limited insurance policy for you and add the premiums on to your regular payments. This policy would probably only cover the amount of the loan and would not protect you from lawsuits if an accident occurs.

In the event that you are in an accident without insurance, you would have no protection from lawsuits. If you are sued, you would be responsible to hire your own defense attorney (insurance companies usually provide defense attorneys for their clients). This could be very expensive. If you lose the case, you may also have to pay for the court costs, property damage, medical expenses and any amount awarded for pain and suffering. This could result in several thousand dollars. If this happens you could lose your home and other valuable property as well as having your bank accounts garnished to pay the judgement.

Even if you aren't sued, there are severe consequences. A person who is caught driving without insurance is usually reported to the Department of Motor Vehicles who may decide to revoke his driver's license. There is also a state law that reqires that you pay a minimum fine of $225 if you are ticketed for driving without insurance.

In the long run, trying to save money by cancelling the car insurance may not be very successful. If your car is paid for, you might consider reducing the coverage to the minimum amounts required by state law and dropping comprehensive coverage. Your agent can tell you how to do this.

For more information on the specific insurance requirements of Georgia or Fort Benning, contact your Legal Assistance Office at 545-3281.

AUSA CORNER

By Jim Gallagher
Chapter president

Last week while in a conversation with a co-worker, I mentioned that the AUSA picnic is the major fund-raising activity sponsored during the year by the chapter. The co-worker queried me as to what AUSA used the money for. The query surprised me because I thought AUSA activities in support of soldiers received generous coverage in local papers, certainly The Bayonet, and the local radio/television stations. But the query also caused me to stop and think. If a fellow co-worker who at least knows that I am involved in many AUSA activities but apparently is unaware tht the majority of these activities are in support of Fort Benning soldiers and units, then maybe we need to "toot your horn" more.

So this week I will review the AUSA sponsored activities that would not be possible without having funds available to make them happen.

This chapter underwrites the expense of 40 plus soldiers attending the national AUSA meeting in Washington, D.C. in October of each year. This includes two-way transportation, hotel accommodations for the six-day period, tickets to the receptions, luncheons and dinners and conduct of tours of historical sites in the D.C. area.

The chapter donates funds to the Post Retirees Council to assist in the annual Retiree Open House.

Another large budget item is support of Operation Holiday, which in the past eight years has benefited more than 16,000 soldiers. The chapter obtains tickets for football bowl games, Atlanta Hawks basketball games, and for tours of local historic sites, such as the Little White House. Outstanding soldiers, including soldiers and NCOs of the quarter and year, Instructors of the Year receive awards from AUSA in the form of uniforms, bonds and wrist watches. "OUR NEW ARMY HOUSING IS NICE TO COME HOME TO. IT WAS WORTH THE WAIT."

SFC Ron Rhodes and his wife Connie

"It sure didn't take us long to get comfortable in our new house here at Fort Polk. Connie loves the size and lay-out. Ronnie-Lee loves the playground. And there's even room to store my boat.

"We love our quarters. This house has been very important for us in making a good home.

"Because we're in the Army, people may not expect us to live this well. But the Army has changed a lot in the past five years. It's a good place to live, to be.

"Connie and I feel that the Army's really come a long way in housing and, you know, in taking care of its people."

The overall quality of quarters on posts throughout the Army continues to improve. And housing starts and renovations are at an all-time high. It's all part of the Army Family Action Plan in action.

ARMY FAMILY.
BE ALL YOU CAN BE.

SPIRITUAL

Tackling too many tasks at once may cause failure

By Chap. Charles O. Canada
Clinical Pastoral Education student

Abraham Lincoln once told this story: There was a blacksmith who heated a piece of iron in a forge not knowing what he was going to make out of it. He began to beat it and fashioned a horseshoe. Then he changed his mind and decided he would shape a stake. Not satisfied, he beat it into a shoe scraper. Each time it began to lose the needed heat to shape it. Finally he took his tongs and thrust the iron into a barrel of water. As it went in, it made a loud hissing sound and with that he exclaimed, "Well, at least I can make a fizzle out of it."

The point is that it is better to concentrate on one thing than dream about a hundred things. Otherwise, we will end up crying, "If I had only followed one thing!"

That is the way God is. He has one thing in mind: love for all people. He has made a commitment to us. In spite of His commitment to us, mankind has walked out on Him. Nevertheless, his commitment remains: "You did not choose me, but I chose you . . ." (John 15:16). He remained constant with one thing in mind: His love for us for all eternity.

Jesus expresses a desire for us to share in this same commitment: "As the Father has loved me, so have I loved you. Now remain in my love . . . Love each other as I have loved you" (John 15:9, 12). Jesus has chosen us to live a full and loving life. He explains it this way, "Greater love has no one than this, that he lay down his life for his friends" (John 15:13).

Our immediate reaction is that Jesus is going too far. Yet, remember this is what Christ has done for us. He literally laid down his life for all people so that we could have eternal life. He died on the cross for our broken commitments to God and one another. When we believe this, we are forgiven to start living anew.

Now, he invites us to lay down our lives for one another. How? There is one way in what you are now doing: being a soldier in the U.S. Army.

Daily we live with the expectation that we could be called upon to lay down our lives for the citizens of this nation. It's not an easy task. Our constant training for combat proves that. Nor is it easy when we think of all our other commitments and none could be more important than our families. However, we have one purpose and that is a commitment to God's people so that they can live in freedom.

That is why this Armed Forces Day our beloved nation takes an opportunity to say, "Thank you!" We deserve the recognition for what we have done. We didn't fizzle out!

However, don't forget this: we have and can continue to accomplish this daily task only by God's help. With His strength, we shall accomplish this one grand commitment. We shall succeed! We won't fizzle out!

Chaplains take soldiers to Callaway Gardens retreat

By Chap. David R. Penland
Group chaplain

"There's nothing to do here." How many times have you heard someone say that? Well, soldiers of the 36th Engineer Group certainly disproved that saying recently.

Capt. Dennis Krumlauf, the 43rd Engineer Battalion Chap. and I, 36th Eng. Grp. chaplain, led a group of 37 soldiers on a three-day retreat to Roosevelt State Park, Callaway Gardens' Beach and "The Little White House."

The retreat began with worship at the amphitheater on Callaway Garden's beach May 1 at 10 a.m. The rest of the day was spent swimming, canoeing, paddle-boating, playing putt-putt golf or riding bikes through the beautiful garden's grounds.

That evening, the group checked into the small group camp at Roosevelt State Park where they spent two nights and three days. The camp is nestled in the midst of a beautiful wooded area, with a lake for swimming and fishing and has areas designated for softball and volleyball.

The campsite also has a large dining facility and meeting room for camper's use.

The evening of May 1, the group joined in some spirited get acquainted games and then entered into a discussion concerning "Gods' purpose for developing our God-given talents."

Following the formal program, video movies such as "Star-Trek II, III" and "Raiders of the Lost Ark" were available for viewing.

The next day the retreatants visited "The Little White House" in Warm Springs, Ga., former President Franklin D. Roosevelt's summer residence. The story of Roosevelts' determined battle against polio, made a fitting follow-up to he passed evening's disussion on using our God-given assets.

Monday morning began with more group games and was followed-up with singing and a discussion on Gods' will for us to make a decision regarding our relationship to Him.

Videos like "War Games", "The Philadelphia Experiment" and "Superman III" were viewed later in the evening. Tuesday was a day for volleyball, softball and clean-up for departure.

Sp4 Cole of 43rd Eng. who is originally from Jamaica and more recently from New York, said, "This area is some of the most beautiful scenery I have seen in my travels."

PFC Jason Kesler of Co. C 43rd Engineers said, "I enjoyed the time together, the breathtaking countryside and the discussion made me think. It was a great trip."

The Non-appropriated Chaplains' fund paid for the cost of lodging at Roosevelt State Park and for a continental breakfast each morning.

The soldiers paid for their entry fee to Callaway Gardens' Beach, which included putt-putt golf, canoeing, swimming and paddle boating. The soldiers also covered the fee to visit "The Little White House" and their lunch and dinner meals.

The Command support of the 36th Eng. Grp. and the goodwill of the congregation at Sightseeing Road Chapel made the retreat a major success.

"So, yes there is plenty to do in Georgia."

Four of 152 win Expert Field Medical Badge

By Anthony J. Intrepido
34th Medical Battalion

One hundred and fifty two soldiers attempted to earn the Expert Field Medical Badge recently, but when the smoke, dust and CS cleared,only four remained.

All of the 152 AMEDD personnel took the first step, a 100-question written exam, but by the end of the week, after the final step, only four had earned the coveted badge.

The written test was the biggest eliminator, knocking down the class size to 66. A score of 75 was needed to pass the test, which covered such subjects as map reading, nuclear, biological, chemical operations, emergency medical treatment, evacuation procedures, field sanitation and survival skills.

Next,the Army Physical Readiness Test left 62 anxious candidates who moved to the field site to conquer the hands-on performance tests.

The land navigation course destroyed the hopes of 50 more candidates. Cardiopulmonary Resuscitation found two more victims and the the night land navigation course brought the count down to six.

The Emergency Medical Treatment lane called for each candidate to pack his own aid bag after which he was trucked to a site where he triaged, treated and bandaged four to five wounded infantry soldiers. Open abdominal wounds, sucking chest wounds, amputees, open head wounds, compound fractures and shock were just a few of the problems they encountered. Initiating intravenous infusions and field medical cards were also part of the exercise. After that, only five were left.

All five completed the communication portion which included preparing and transmitting a medical evacuation request.

The survival skills, six of which were NBC oriented, left the class with four. They like to call themselves the fearsome foursome.

The evacuation portion was a non-stop lane of various individual and litter carries to various types of trucks requiring proper loading procedures and finally to a UH-60 Blackhawk helicopter. This was followed by the infamous litter obstacle course.

Four dirty, tired soldiers carried a heavy litter with a"wounded"infantryman strapped to it on an odyssey they will never forget. During the trip, the four litter bearers encountered walls to climb, barbed wire to pull their litter through, chemical hazards to contend with and finally a deep body of water to cross.

The four candidates, their confidence building with every test they passed, received a few hours to rest before the final obstacle — the dreaded twelve-mile road march to be completed in three hours or less. All four candidates with helmet, loaded rucksacks, weapons and protective masks ran across the finish line in less than two hours and 20 minutes.

The dream became reality for the two doctors and two medics who finished.

"This entire week was demanding and required one's full determination to make it," said SP4 Michael Braly of HHC, 2nd Bn., 18th Inf. "When the group got smaller, we really became cohesive and pulled each other through."

"I thought the week was more mentally stressful than physically," said another medic, PFC Wallis Oppitz of HHC, 1st Bn., 58th Inf. "When the group got small, it was easier for the evaluators to see every move we made therefore allowing no room for the slightest error."

In the last two years, only nine out of more than three hundred medical soldiers who tried received the EFMB from the 34th Med. Bn. These four who were able to tough it out will walk away from the graduation ceremony with a new sense a accomplishment. They will know they were tough enough and knowledgable enough to earn the Expert Field Medical Badge.

Dexter School third graders focus on region's folklore

By Beth Middlemiss
Fort Benning Schools

If you travel through the rural Georgia countryside and you know where to look, you might see a man in coveralls hunting with a blue tick hound and a mule, or a group of ladies quilting, or a group of fiddlers playing an old fashioned tune. You might, but it isn't likely.

The third grade teachers of Fort Benning's Dexter School decided to focus on the folklore of this region, so through the Artists-in-Education program they brought residents from Marion County and Schley County and folklorist, Maggie Holtzberg, to their classrooms.

Marion Jones, fiddler, and B.S. Teek, guitarist, came first to spend the day at Dexter. "Turkey in the Straw," "Mockingbird" and other old time tunes rang out as students tapped feet, clapped hands and later heard the stories behind the tunes.

Two weeks later, Tazewell quilters Elizabeth McCorkle and Irene Smith, came to show and discuss their handiwork. The ladies talked about quilting patterns that they had learned from their mothers and even taught the students how to "piece" a pinwheel square.

Then came Robert "Jie" McCorkle and Rocky Top, the blue tick hound. McCorkle sat in a rocking chair wearing his hunting cap and patting Rocky Top, who sat quietly by his side. Children sat on the edge of their seats as McCorkle told about his dogs; he has been raising the same family of blue tick hounds since 1946. McCorkle told about his dog Penny, who had climbed a tall pine tree to catch a racoon, so he talked to Penny to bring her down since he was unable to climb the tree, and how after almost falling several times Penny returned safely to the ground.

He told about his hunting mule who jumps right into the truck with the dogs when it is time to go hunting.

Throughout his visit, McCorkle talked about the responsibility of the dog owner to love and care for the dog. As he rocked, he explained to the children ways to care for a dog — how to feed it, to get medical attention for it and to train it. And when he finished there were questions — lots of them. McCorkle sat next to Rocky Top and answered them all.

"Most boys and girls don't get to learn about folklore the way we did," said third grader, Chris Smith. "I really like Rocky Top. someday I'm going to have a hunting dog just like him."

Benning students to compete at national level

By Beth Middlemiss
Fort Benning Schools

Fort Benning seventh and eighth graders will represent the state of Georgia at the National History Day competition at the University of Maryland in June.

Two teams from the history club at Don C. Faith Middle School took top honors in their categories at the state competition in Atlanta last Saturday.

The theme of this year's competition is "Frontiers in History — People, Places and Ideas." In keeping with this theme, both Faith teams chose to research the life of Horace King who pioneered covered bridge construction and lived in the Columbus area during the early 1800s. The 14th Street Bridge was recently renamed in his honor. King was a slave who was later freed because of his exceptional contributions.

"We couldn't believe it when we returned from district competition," said Erica Buljung, eighth-grade member of the video team. "Four days after we got back, the city honored Mister King by renaming the bridge for him."

Though both groups researched Horace King, their projects are quite different. One team — Erica Buljung, James Mullennax, Carla Smith and Sonya Thomas produced a videotape. "We not only had to do the research, but we also had to learn to use a video camera and an editing machine," said Beljung. "Our teachers could show us how to use the machines, but we had to do the work all by ourselves."

The other team — Nina Kendall, Yamilette Flores, Shawn Gravatt and LaToya Thomas, produced a skit on King's life. Team members had to write the script, design and make their own costumes, as well as learn to find and understand primary research sources.

"I am looking forward to going to the University of Maryland," said Nina Kendall, seventh grader on the performance team. "I have always enjoyed history, and it will be fun to see the projects that students from all over the country have done."

"The students will be polishing their productions for the national competition," said eighth grade teacher, Mary Barnette, who along with seventh grade teacher, Pam Tate, has sponsored the teams. "They have done phenomenal research for students at the middle school level. They put in long hours after school, and I know that the trip to the national competition will be a meaningful one for all of us."

"The students have developed a great respect for Horace King as they learned more and more about him," said Barnette. "It gave us all a great deal of satisfaction to know that King was being honored by the renaming of the bridge. It will mean just as much to us as we share information about him with students and teachers from across the country."

Waste paper recycling saves energy, resources

By Becky Ray
Energy Management Office

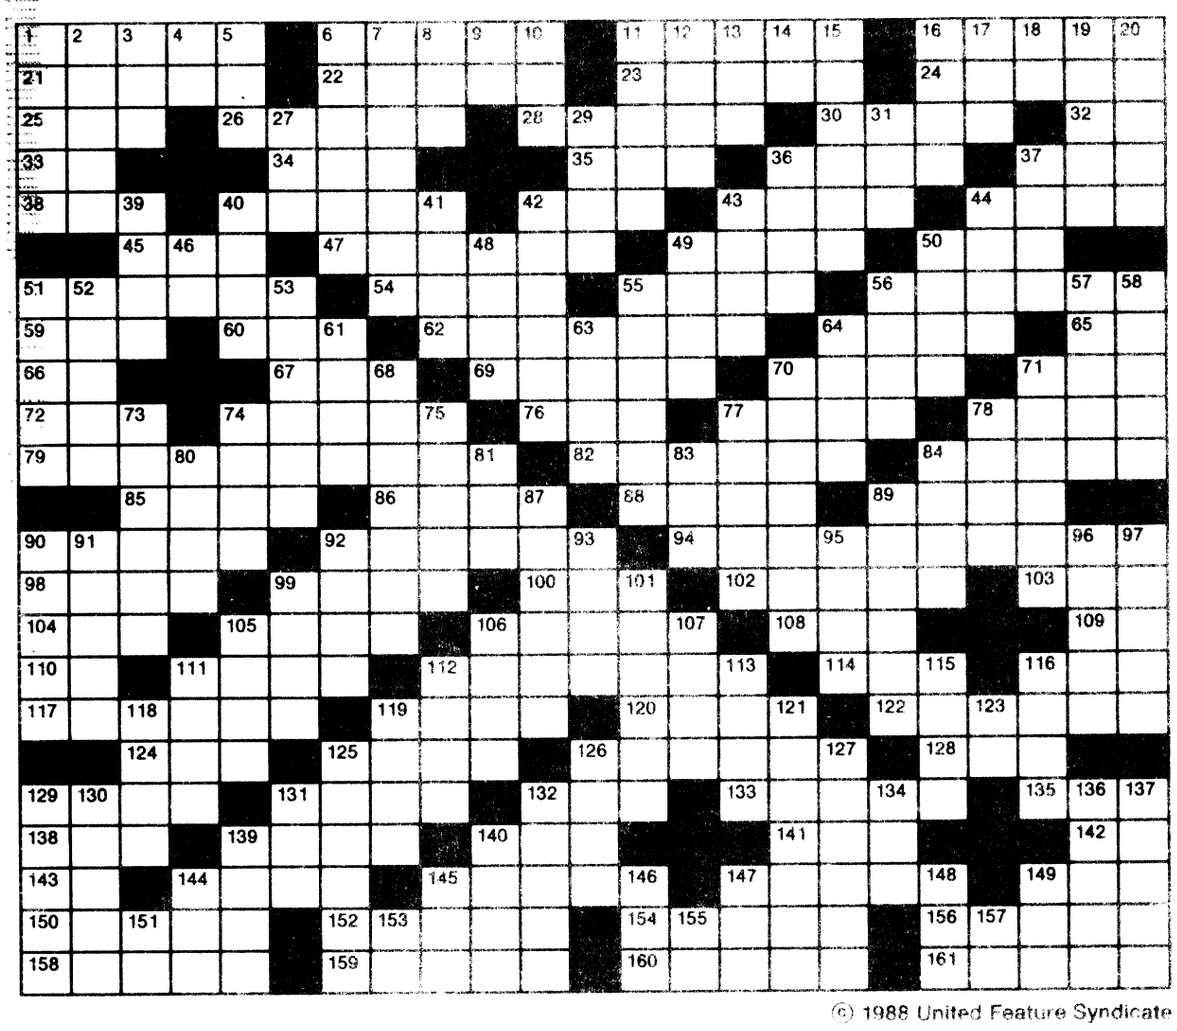
Although waste paper recycling has been standard at Fort Benning for several years, the reasons for doing so are still as important today as they were during the 1970s, when concern grew among the American public that our forest resources were being rapidly destroyed by our wasteful demand for paper and wood products.

According to the fall issue of Phoenix Quarterly, Americans use about 400 pounds of paper per person each year, compared to per capita consumption of 25 pounds in the Soviet Union and two pounds in China.

In 1986, approximately 73 million tons of paper were manufactured in the United States, and 12 million tons were imported. Only about 25 percent of the raw material used in the domestic manufacture of paper products was recycled paper. In Japan, this figure is 47 percent.

The benefits of recycling paper begin with energy conservation. Production of paper from recycled products reduces the need for more extensive processing of raw wood pulp. Because production costs for paper from recycled fibers reduces energy consumption by about 64 percent, paper products can remain less expensive. When paper is recycled, rather than simply "thrown out," the value of the paper remains in the national economy.

Paper recycling is also important to conservation of our natural resources and helps reduce the level of pollution to air and water from paper mills and plants. Trees, which would have been cut for paper production, are saved by the millions as paper is made available for recycling. In addition, recycling reduces the amount of fuels and chemicals used in the production of paper products, lessening the amount of pollution to air and water from mills and plants.



"Throwing out" paper causes problems in solid waste disposal, landfill operations and incineration costs — all at the expense of the taxpayer. According to Phenix Quarterly, about 30 to 40 percent of the nation's solid waste is paper that could have been recycled. Waste disposal costs taxpayers about $8.50 per ton locally, and have risen as high as $50 per ton in some cities. In addition, landfill sites are becoming more scarce.

Because of the tremendous volume of paper involved, recycling also has an important impact on the national trade deficit. In recent years, the United States has exported over $400 million in paper stock (paper ready for recycling) to foreign countries.

In short, waste paper can be a burden or a boon to the United States. Through increased awareness and effort and stronger policies we can use this resource to solve, rather than create, many expensive and avoidable problems.

Camp Smiley just around corner

By Nancy Russo
EFMP Volunteer Chairperson

Spring has finally arrived and that means that the Exceptional Family Member Program's Camp Smiley is just around the corner.

Camp Smiley is the handicapped children's summer day camp, which consists of four, two-week sessions that run in conjunction with Youth Activities' summer day camp.

EFMP is gearing up because Camp Smiley '88 will be run solely by the staff and volunteers of EFMP and Youth Activities. They hope to have retained the best of years past, but are also excited about some new features that they will be trying this year.

The program is in need of volunteer recreational aides and camp counselors. Now is the time to stop and think about how and when to participate in Camp Smiley '88. Volunteers may sign up for any or all of the four sessions. However, when signing up to volunteer for a particular session, please commit to the entire two-week session if at all possible. The dates of the four sessions are as follows:

June 2-July 1: Session 1 — preschool campers

July 5-July 15: Session 2 — campers aged 7 to 11

July 18-July 29: Session 3 — campers aged 7 to 11

Aug. 1-Aug. 12: Session 4 — campers aged 17 and over

The guidelines for EFMP/Camp Smiley volunteers are as follows:

- All volunteers must be either adults or students entering at least the 9th grade in the fall;
- Recreational aides should be 8th, 10th or 11th graders;
- Camp counselors should be 12th graders or older. However, volunteers will be assigned positions based on individual abilities and past experience.

Training for Camp Smiley volunteers will be held from June 13-17, 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. daily. Attendance during the entire week of training is required in order to volunteer for any or all camp sessions.

Anyone interested in volunteering for Camp Smiley, please call Mary Strickland, EFMP coordinator, at 545-1149 or 545-4043, or Nancy Russo, EFMP volunteer chairperson, at 687-9916. Volunteer packets may be picked up from the EFMP office in building 2634 (Soldiers' Plaza). All forms must be turned in by May 31.

Good volunteers are needed to make this year's camp a memorable one for Fort Benning's handicapped children. So, please join EFMP for a heart-warming and personally rewarding experience. An added benefit of being an EFMP volunteer is Red Cross training for certification in First Aid, CPR, and Aquatic Safety.

Blue Chip social held

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Holders of the Fort Benning Blue Chip gathered at the NCO Club recently to meet with other winners of the award and to talk with Maj. Gen. Kenneth C. Leuer.

Leuer commended the soldiers, staff sergeant and below, for jobs well done in the normal activities of their daily work and urged them all to keep up the good work.

The Blue Chip Award started when Leuer arrived last year as a way of recognizing soldiers who consistenly perform to the best of their abilities and who consistently work to improve those abilities.

Soldiers can be recognized for a single outstanding job or initiative, an act of safety, outstanding appearance, a sports or athletic achievement, consistent high performance or noticeable improved performance.

Blue Chips are given out by the commanding general or major subordinate commanders on post.

The blue chip winners, several hundred in number, shared stories about how they won their awards.

"I'm glad to be here," said Sgt. Tyrone J. Williams, summing up the feelings of a room full of Blue Chip awardees.

Soldiers ride 2,000-pound bull

By Kevin J. Howerton
197th Infantry Brigade correspondent

All soldiers like to kick back and have some fun on the weekends, but three soldiers from the 197th Infantry Brigade have a rather unusual way of doing it. They climb onto a 2,000-pound animal that isn't overly fond of the idea and try to stay on it for eight seconds.

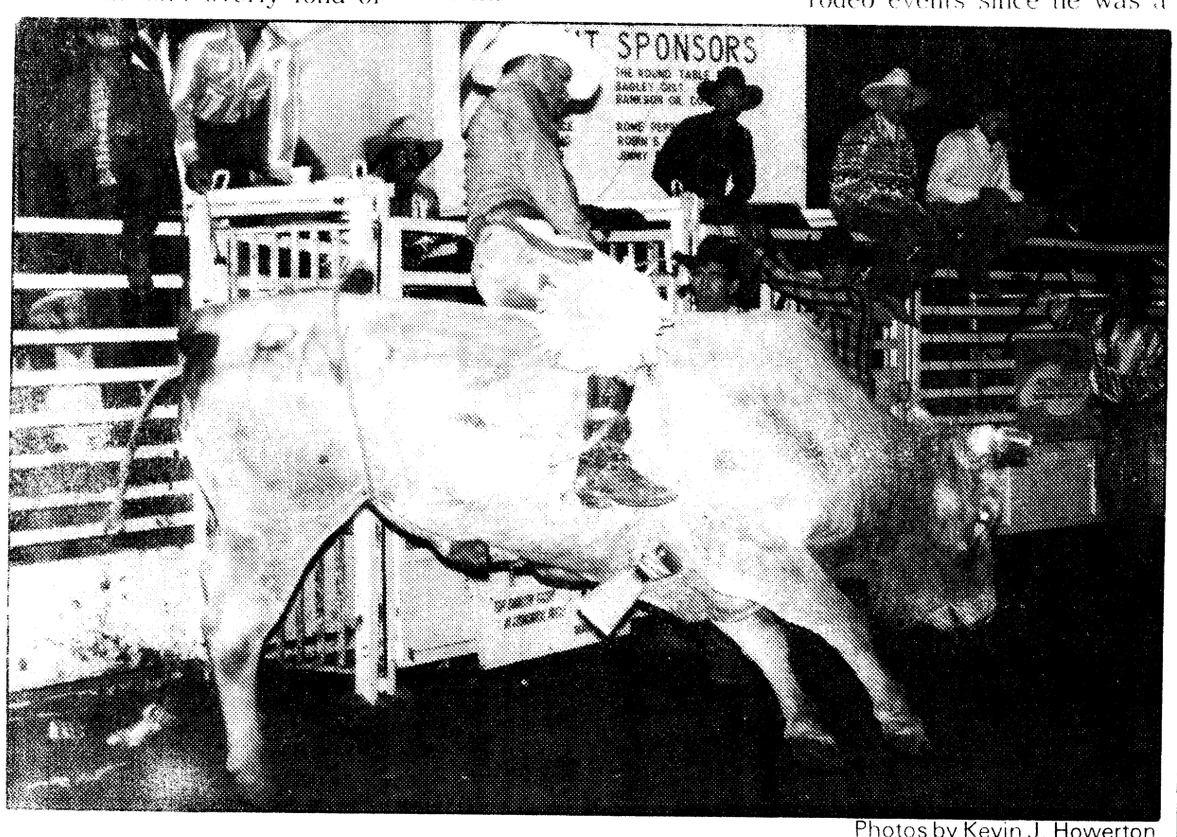
Sgt. Carl D. Fleming and Pvt. 2 Tony E. Emert, both from HHC, 1st Bn., 58th Inf., and PFC Robert F. McReynolds of HHB, 2nd Bn., 10th Fld. Arty., are members of the American Cowboy Association.

"A lot of people go to amusement parks and pay to ride roller coasters," said Fleming. "I go to rodeos and pay to ride the bulls. It's a lot more exciting, and you have a chance to win up to $600 for an eight-second ride."

Fleming has been riding in rodeo events since he was a 6-year-old in California. Now the track vehicle mechanic, with eight years in the Army, still rides in small town rodeos throughout Georgia and Alabama.

Since being stationed at Fort Benning last December, Fleming has been trying to find other cowboys to form a Rodeo club.

"I started riding in Kansas when I was 10," said Emert, an Infantryman who has been in the Army nine months. "Sergeant Fleming got me back into bullriding."



"It's exciting. You've got 2,000 pounds of animal under you, and he comes out of the chute with a lot of power," Emert added. "You've got to be a little crazy to do it."

All the riders attempt to stay on the bull by holding onto a flat braided rope, which is wrapped around the animal's chest. A heavily — resined, thin leather glove protects his hand and helps him keep his grip.

McReynolds is the Bareback Bronc rider in the group. While horses don't have the power of bulls, they are a lot quicker.

"All that you have to help you stay on the horse is a wide leather strap with a handle about the size of a suitcase handle," said McReynolds. "You tape your elbow to keep it from hyperextending, and you use a heavy glove with resin to improve your grip and protect your wrist."

The three have already been in several rodeos this spring and plan on attending a rodeo each weekend for the rest of the summer season. One of the upcoming events is a rodeo at the Diamond B Ranch, six miles west of Phenix City. The rodeo will be held May 27 and 28.

Hawaiian Luau to be held at Officers' Club

By Jane Singleton
197th Infantry Brigade correspondent

Aloha! The biggest and best Hawaiian Luau in the history of Fort Benning is coming to the Officer's Club May 21.

The Infantry Training Center and 29th Infantry Regiment are bringing this spectacular event to life for club members, officers and guests throughout Fort Benning and the surrounding area.

The luau will feature authentic Hawaiian entertainment to include a flaming knife dance and hula contest, fun and games and include a limbo contest and hula hoop contest with prizes for the winners. The buffet will consist of a feast of exotic foods such as sweet and sour pork, fried rice, teriyaki beef and chicken and various fruits and salads that will bring the true tastes of Hawaii to Fort Benning.

Dress for the event is casual. Hawaiian/beach wear is allowed, and everyone is encouraged to wear something bright and festive to truly capture the spirit of the event.

The fun begins at 6 p.m. and ends only when the last person leaves. The price for members is $9.95 and for non-members and guests, $13.95. Tickets are on sale now at units and at the cashier's cage at the Officer's Club.

Win Ms. Fort Benning crown with perfectly sculpted body

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

There are two "sides" to Jill Price. One side is that of a dedicated wife and mother of three and the other, a serious bodybuilder who will be competing for the crown of Ms. Fort Benning.

Price began her travel in search of the perfectly sculpted body about year ago after noticing how good a friend of hers looked after she had been lifting weights for a while.

"Before seeing her I always associated people who lifted weights as looking masculine, but seeing her swayed my opinion and I asked her to take me to the gym so I could learn how to tone my muscles," Price said.

Price said when she began lifting she exclusively used the Nautilus equipment but she soon felt they just weren't enough so she asked Speedy Austin to recommend someone who could tailor a more intricate program for her."

Austin recommended champion powerlifter Miguel Taoy who complied and designed a workout program for Price.

Price said she quickly noticed the results of her new program and that's when she really seriously considered entering the competition.

"Seeing those changes really motivated me," she said, "but they didn't happen overnight and I realize that and that's why I will find a way to the gym one way or another."

Price said she gets a high from going to the gym. "Since I am a housewife, it is my way of getting away from it all," she added, "besides it gives me something to work for, and I feel much better

Soldiers test their rafting skills on white waters of Chattooga

By George Mingee
197th Infantry Brigade correspondent

Recently, 197th Support Battalion officers journeyed to the Chattooga River to test their white river rafting skills. The river is located in Chattahoochee National Park in Clayton, S.C.

The rafting trip combined water survivability training with just plain fun.

"The river produces class three and four rapids, it was just like being on Wild World of Sports on TV," said 1st Lt. Bernadette Nicholson. "The currents were so strong, everybody did their best just to say afloat."

When floating down the six-mile course, one quickly gains self-confidence; but he or she also must rely on others for help in conquering the unknown river ahead.

"When I fell in the first time, the only thing on my mind was how deep is the water," said 1st Lt. Anthony Chambers. But luckily, I popped right back up, I felt like I was taking a ranger swim test."

Water rafting can be a big mental and physical test, especially for those who conquered the powerful rapids running over the rocks. The Spt. Bn. officers brought home more than just bruises, they brought home the self-assurance to challenge the unknown and to better lead their soldiers in their everyday trials.

Army Small Arms Championships held here

By Tommy G. Pool
USAMU PAO

The annual U.S. Army Small Arms Championships will begin at Fort Benning firing ranges next week, with the matches scheduled to begin Monday and continue through May 27.

More than 800 of the top marksmen representing units from the Army, Army Reserve and National Guard, will be on hand to compete for the title of "All Army Champions," in both team and individual small arms competition.

Teams will begin reporting in this weekend for the initial combat championship phase of the matches that will include events for the M-16 rifle, 9mm pistol and M-60 light machine gun.

The commanding general of the U.S. Army Infantry Center is the host for the yearly championships, with range operation of the matches conducted by members of the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit.

Support for this year's matches is also being provided by elements from the 2nd Bde., 10th Mtn. Div., 197th Inf. Bde., 36th Engr. Grp., 34th Med. Bn. and staff directorates at Fort Benning.

Designed to determine the Army's best marksmen with individual small arms, the championships will include both the traditional known distance competition, as well as combat matches using silhouette type targets to simulate battlefield conditions.

A mandatory physical fitness phase is also included as part of the matches and consists of a two-mile run carrying weapons and field equipment prior to record firing. In addition, and for the first time ever, a two-man sniper rifle event will be held.

The sniper rifle competition will consist of three field craft events and three firing exercises, with the winning team based on the combined scores of both individuals.

The required field crafts will consist of exercises such as movement techniques, target observation and detection and range estimation. Firing exercises will require both team members to engage targets at ranges from 200 to 850 meters and will be limited to a maximum of two rounds per target.

A score of 100 points is given to snipers that successfully engage targets with a first round hit and 50 points for a second-round hit. No points are received if both shots are misses.

Representatives from various units that will be competing in the 1988 All Army Small Arms Championships were selected from installation matches held earlier throughout the Army.

Stiff competition is expected again this year in all of the shooting events between the top battalion teams and individual marksmen representing more than 40 active Army and Reserve Component units.

The All Army championships have been conducted at Fort Benning for more than 60 years, and are the largest shooting events next to the National Rifle & Pistol matches held annually at Camp Perry, Ohio.

From the early 1920s until World War II, it was called the U.S. Infantry championships and was also used to select the best shooters to represent the Army at the national matches.

Many of our nation's most famous marksmen began their careers with victories during the Army championships. Two of the top pistol shooters of all time, retired SGMs Joe Benner and William Blankenshp, went on to win six national titles and two world championships.

More recently, in 1987, SSgt. Greg Strom of USAMU, became the first individual in history to ever win the All Army, Interservice and National Rifle Championships in the same year.

Competing in the small arms matches is also the soldier's first step towards receiving the Army's most coveted shooting award, the Distinguished Marksman Badge.

Awarded since 1884 for rifle and 1891 for pistol, fewer than 3,000 of the 10-karat gold badges have been won by Army personnel. Some notable recipients of the distinguished badge have included Gens. John J. Pershing and Lyman L. Lemnitzer.

All Fort Benning personnel and the general public are invited to attend this year's All Army Championships and observe the Army's best marksmen in action.

Below is a schedule of dates and ranges where the matches and competition will be held. Firing will normally begin at 8 a.m. daily and conclude at approximately 4 p.m.

May 16-19 — All Army Combat Rifle — McAndrew Range

May 16-19 — All Army Combat Pistol — Phillips Range

May 16-19 — All Army M60 Machinge gun — Easley Range

May 21-22 — All Army Sniper Rifle — N. Galloway Range

YA baseball gets underway

Tom Fix
USAIC Public Affairs Office

The post youth baseball season got underway last week as 25 T-ball and baseball teams from Fort Benning gathered at Green Field for the throw-in of official ball, which was jumped in by the Silver Wings Command Exhibition Parachute Team.

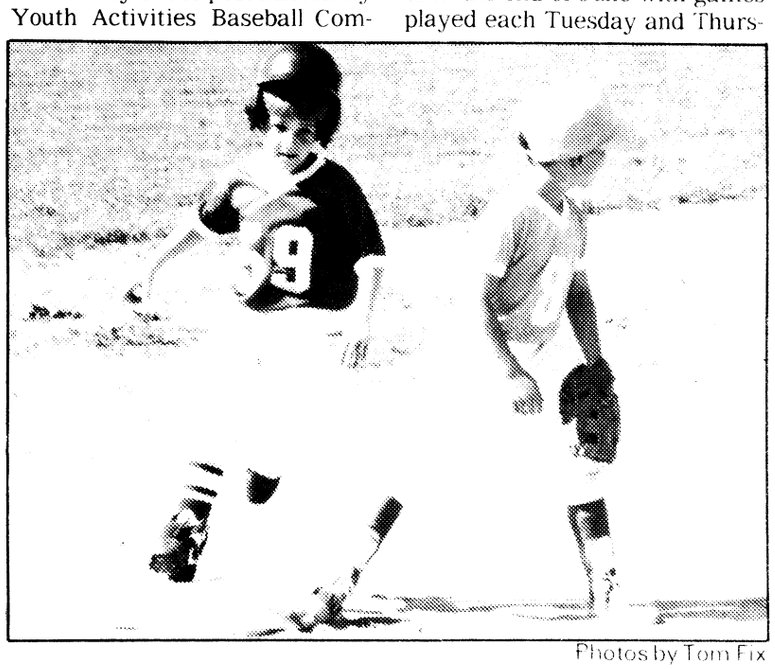
Teams lined up in the outfield of the baseball diamond as the national anthem played and the season was dedicated to the staff and faculty of the post schools by Youth Activities Baseball Commissioner Ed Chapa.

Players, ages 6 to 8, representing 14 teams of the Grasshopper T-Ball League, waited impatiently for the ceremonies to end and for the games to begin.

Eleven teams from the baseball league also were represented. The Termite League teams consist of players ages 9 to 10 while 11- and 12-year-olds play in the Pee Wee League. Junior League baseball players are ages 13 to 15.

The regular season will run until the end of June with games played each Tuesday and Thursday at various fields around post.

Each game day, the Grasshopper League plays doubleheaders at Old Faith School Field, Dexter #1 and Custer #2. The Pee Wee League also plays doubleheaders at Indianhead Terrace Field while the Termite League plays only a single game at Green Field and Custer #1.



The first game kicks off at 5:30 p.m. and lasts until 7 p.m. or until six innings have been played.

A waiting list exists for children interested in playing on the 6 to 12 year old teams. But, spaces are available on one of the two Junior League teams. The Junior Leaguers play an eight-game schedule with the Columbus Boys Club League.

Post-season play will feature a three-game, mini-World Series between the best teams in the American and National divisions of the T-ball league. The series will start around the first week in July at Old Faith School Field.

An All-Star game will culminate play for the Termites and the Pee Wees. Each league will select players for their All-Star teams, which will then do battle in a seven-inning game for the bragging rights of each league.

For more information about the Youth Activities Sports Program, contact YA Sports director, Ray Pierce at 545-3070.

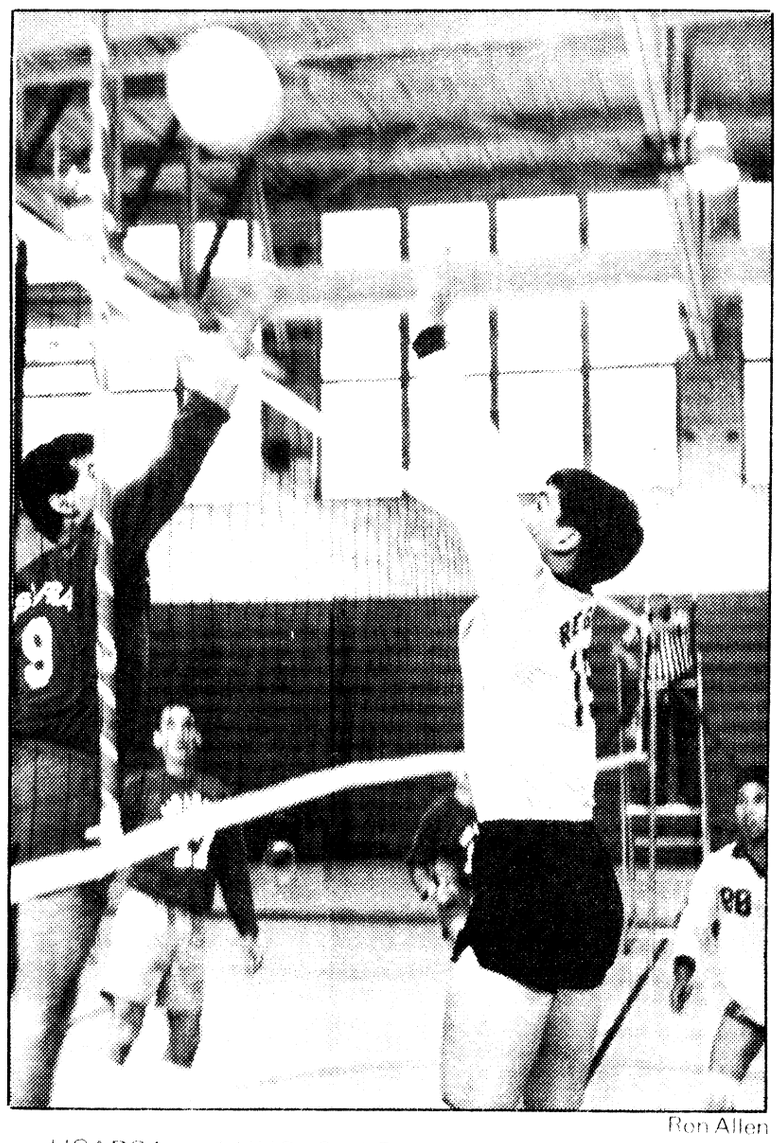
USARSA nips HHC 2-14 Inf

By Ron Allen
USAIC Public Affairs Office

USARSA squeaked by HHC, 2nd Bn., 14th Inf., last Friday in the USAIC Second Season Volleyball Championship, 13-15, 17-15 and 15-13.

HHC took the first game in the two-out-of-three match and led 11-5 in the second when USARSA decided to take a time out. USARSA came back from the time out and fought to a 15-15 tie. USARSA traded serve for serve for several minutes before they could get the next two points needed to win.



HHC grabbed an early lead again in the third game leading at one time by 5 points. But USARSA again rallied and came away with the win and the trophy.

"We played five other teams during the championship," said Leon Carlos, USARSA player/coach. "Some were tough and some were easy, but, I think 2-14 was the toughest we faced."

"The main thing was we got in a lot of practice," Carlos said. "We were prepared."

"It was a really tough game," said Orlino Antolin, HHC player/coach. "They played a great game especially number 10, (Leon Carlos)."

"HHC played a great game too," Carlos added. "Our teams were evenly matched and it was close the whole time."

about myself for doing it."

Since this contest will be her first, she is mainly competing to gain experience however, she does have her goals set.

"I plan on competing in larger competitions in the future," she said, "but I know that I have a long way to go before I do that."

Presently Price is concentrating on her posing routine for the post competition and the special diet she has to follow to get in prime shape for her first time in the spotlight.

The Mr. and Ms. Fort Benning Contest will be conducted on June 11, 1988 in Marshall Auditorium, Building 4. The contest is open to all active duty military men stationed at Fort Benning and all active duty military women, family members and civilian employees. President's Armed Forces Day message

To citizens of the United States, Armed Forces Day is one of the most revered days of the year — because for more than 200 years the Armed Forces of our Republic have faithfully tended the eternal flame of liberty. American school children have ever learned that "We the People" are free in large measure because of the valiant men and women who proudly wear the uniforms of our military services.

In that spirit, this year's Armed Forces Day theme is based on the preamble to our Consititution — "Securing the Blessings of Liberty." These magnificent and immortal words challenge every generation of America's sons and daughters to take her destiny in their own strong and capable hands. You have taken up the challenge in our time so that all of us can continue to share the blessings of the liberty you protect so ably and at such great risk and sacrifice.

We celebrate this day to give all Americans an opportunity to honor members of the Army, Marine Corps, Navy, Air Force and Coast Guard and to reflect on their role under our Constitution. On the calendar, Armed Forces Day comes but once a year; but you who stand on the ramparts of freedom know that Armed Forces Day is not only a day but truly a way of life.

As your Commander in Chief and as an American, I proudly salute you for your courage and your devotion. Nancy and I join all Americans in recognizing the more than two million active service members and one and a half million National Guard and Reserve personnel who serve our country's cause. God bless you, and God bless America.

Ronald Reagan
President

CI-TV provides on post information

CI-TV: A Command Information TV Channel is now operating on channel 13.

Showing character-generated announcements of upcoming events, CI-TV provides information to all post households that are connected to the Alert Cable System. CI-TV is also received by all unit dayrooms.

The format is one-screen announcments about future events that are of interest to the Fort Benning community.

The first eight screens are called "Post Notes" and deal with announcements of general events and activities.

"Religious Reminders" highlights events that are sponsored by the Chaplains Office.

"Sports Shorts" promotes sporting events and activities in and around Fort Benning.

These three sections of original announcements takes about 10 minutes to run. They are then followed by two Department of Army audio Command Information announcements discussing topics of current interest such as moving tips, medical benefits and veterans information.

Six times within the hour the written announcement will be repeated.

As background music, CI-TV plays "Oldies But Goodies," and plays the entire hour before repeating songs.

CI-TV runs from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. each day, with the same announcements running from Monday to Friday.

Since the video tape is not updated during the week, no event will be featured the week the event actually takes place. This will prevent events that occur early in the week from running after they have happened.

Any organization that desires to place an annoucement on CI-TV should send typed, double-spaced, 8-line announcments to: The Bayonet, USAIC, building 4, Room 601, Fort Benning, GA 31905.

Requests for airing announcements should arrive at the CI Office at least three weeks before an event.

Catch the SPIRIT

Join Benning's $1 million effort

Staff Office

May 23-27 has been designated "Catch the SPIRIT" week.

What is "Catch the SPIRIT" Week?

One of the goals we have set for Project SPIRIT is to create a productivity consciousness at Fort Benning and foster an attitude of seeking better ways to increase productivity. To generate interest and to help capture and report dollar savings, the DRM is sponsoring a "Catch the SPIRIT" Week. The main emphasis for the week is to encourage submission of productivity improvements in all activities on post. There are a lot of "good" things going on at Fort Benning. We need to capture and report the innovative things we do. The installations that are "winners" are those who have a year-round, active program. We would like to win the million dollars again in fiscal year 1988. To do this, Project SPIRIT must remain visible, and our people must be educated in the type of actions that can be reported. The key to being a winner is to keep everyone involved in reporting their savings. "Catch the SPIRIT" Week is an effort to do this.

What is going on during the week?

All productivity-improvement type actions conducted during the April, May and June that have dollar savings are eligible for submission. Actions will be submitted on TRADOC Form 1206-R to the activity SPIRIT point of contact no later than May 27. A copy of this form was distributed to all activities on post as an enclosure to command letter, ATZB-DRM-M (5-4a), April 19, 1988, Subject: "Catch the SPIRIT" Week. Activity SPIRIT points of contact will validate actions and submit them to the installation SPIRIT coordinator no later than June 10.

The top three individuals on post submitting the most actions with dollar savings will be presented Blue Chips and SPIRIT plaques by the commanding general at the next command and staff conference immediately following the campaign.

Each individual who submits a validated SPIRIT action during the week will receive a certificate signed by the commanding general.

Activities will also receive credit for the initiatives that are submitted during the campaign in their 3rd quarter, fiscal year 1988 local awards competition.

What will it do for the post?

This effort could help us to win the installation another million dollars. There is a lot of competition throughout TRADOC (17 installations) for the million dollar prize. With the dwindling resources ahead of us and the tight budgetary constraints, everyone could use an extra million dollars. Numerous installations are calling Fort Benning to see what we attribute our "success" to. We must continue our vigilance if we are to be competitive in fiscal year 1988. Competition will be even greater next year.

What can I do to make "Catch the SPIRIT" Week a success?

Be positive — not negative.

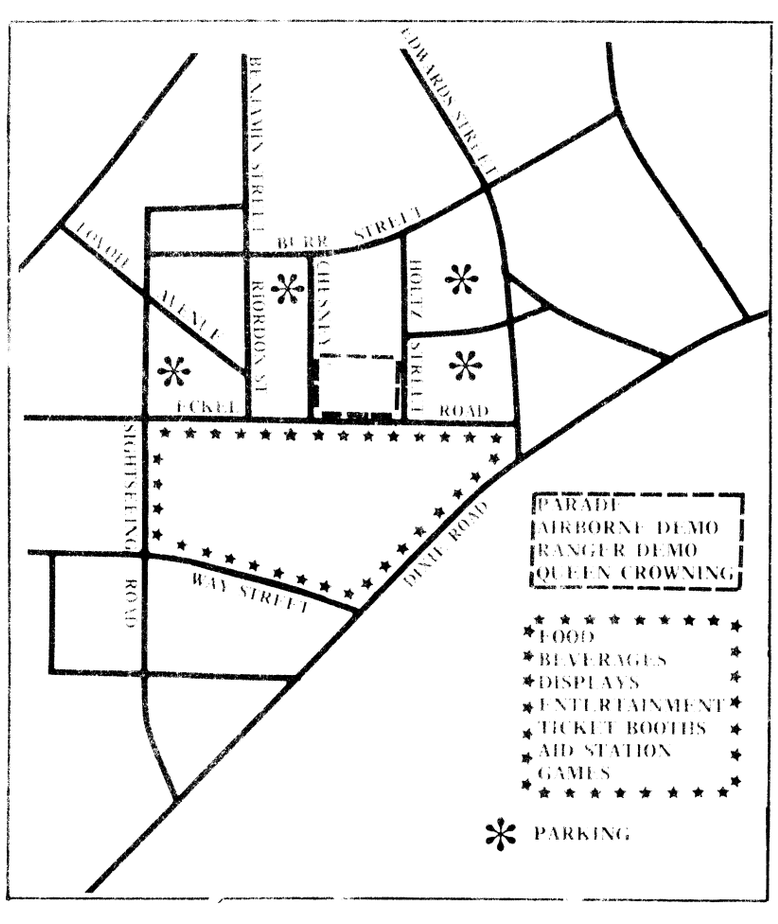
Report the "good" things that are going on within your area of responsibility.

Look for ways you have improved the productivity in your day-to-day operations, document it and submit the action for credit in the awards competition.

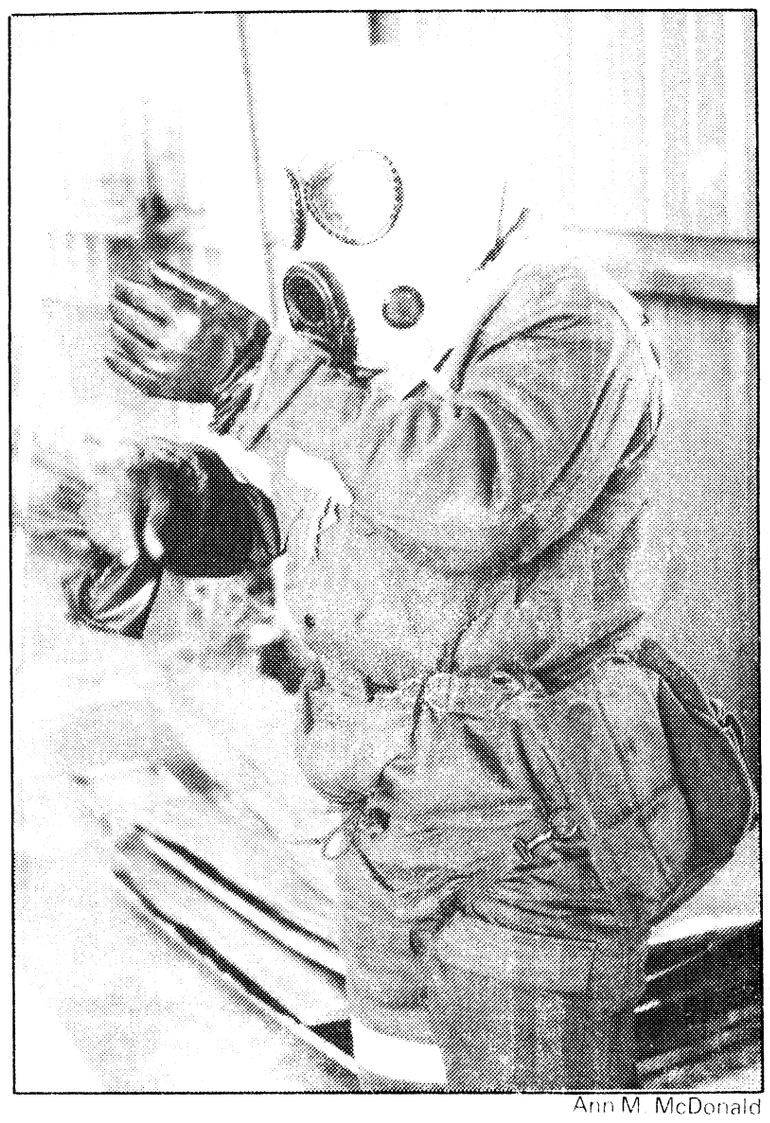
Benning celebrates Armed Forces Day

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Armed Forces Day will be celebrated here tomorrow with an open house and a full day of activities scheduled.



Events include a 7 a.m. 10k and 2-mile "fun run" at York and Steward fields, followed at 10 a.m. by a parade, Airborne and Ranger demonstrations and crowning of the Chattahoochee Valley/Fort Benning Association of the United States Army queen.



From noon to 5 p.m., there will be children's rides, interunit games, game booths, military equipment displays, recreation and entertainment at Stewart-Watson Field.

A nominal fee will be charged for participation in selected entertainment and recreational activities.

In conjunction with Armed Forces Day, the local AUSA chapter will sponsor its annual picnic. Food and beverages will be on sale at booths located on the Stewart-Watson site from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m.

The public is invited to attend the all-day events and enjoy the day.

Army supports Buckle-Up week

U.S. Army Safety Center

The Army is joining the Department of Defense, the National Safety Council and the National Traffic Safety Administration in support of Buckle-Up America Week, May 23-30. Buckle-Up America is a nationwide observance to remind all of us to use safety belts and child safety seats.

More soldiers are killed each year in private motor vehicle accidents than in all other accidents combined. So far this year, 98 soldiers have been killed in private motor vehicle accidents. Two out of three of these soldiers killed were not wearing safety belts. The Department of Transportation estimates that the regular use of safety belts would reduce fatalities by more than half.

One of the greatest assets the automobile has is the safety belt. The simple act of buckling up is a proven life saver, and Army personnel are reminded of the safety belt provisions in Army Regulation 385-55. This regulation requires all soldiers to use safety belts on and off post and Army civilians and military family members to use safety belts on post and while on official government business. Not only is the use of safety belts required by regulation, but 31 states and the District of Columbia also have safety belt laws.

Parents should be especially alert to the safety of their children while traveling. Older children should be buckled in, and those ages 4 and under should be in safety seats. It's also the responsibility of the driver to ensure everyone in the vehicle is buckled up.

The Buckle-Up America campaign includes motorcyclists who are especially vulnerable because of their exposed posture while riding. Army Regulation 385-55 requires motorcyclists to wear an approved helmet and protective clothing while operating a motorcycle at all times.

2nd Bde, 10th Mtn seeks volunteer NCOs

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

If you are a good infantry noncommissioned officer and feel you need to need to have some troop time under your belt, now's your chance to climb the mountain of success.

2nd Brigade, 10th Mountain Division is looking for qualified NCOs to take with them when the unit transfers to Fort Drum N.Y. in November.

According to unit commander, Col. Michael J. Conner, there are a tremendous number of talented motivated troops at Fort Benning who have not had the opportunity to be in a line unit and his unit's transfer will allow these troops a chance to get back "where the rubber meets the road."

"We talk about serving our troops, and the offer I am giving to these NCOs is a perfect example," Connor said. "Especially since the sergeant major of the Army was recently quoted as saying, 'If you want to get promoted, you have to have good, solid troop time listed in your records.'"

He added that along with the promotion opportunities his unit is moving into brand new, multi-million dollar facilities.

SP4s become just specialists

By Clyde Snively
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Well now, isn't this special? We E-4s, not including corporals, are no longer specialist fours or specialist fourth class.

We are now just specialists.

The Army, in all its wisdom, finally figured out that since there were no more specialist fives or sixes, that there was no need to distinguish specialist fours since there was nothing to distinguish them from.

That certainly makes sense to us, in the newspaper business who are constantly beaten about the head and shoulders over brevity.

Getting the word out to all the speedy fours, or specialists, will be quite a chore. There's 180,000 of us in the Army. All I can say is it's a good thing we aren't changing rank insignia.

The Army makes it clear that the abbreviation for SP4, I mean specialist, will be SPC. I like that because until the rest of the Army catches on, I'm sure there will be times when someone not familiar with the latest change will look at where I've written my name and rank down and think, "Just look at that, a sergeant first class, and he makes his 'Es' look like 'Cs,' "and he's so young, too."

Civilians, on the other hand, might look at SPC and think we left off another C or an A. They might then call us about people abusing animals or kids.

I will admit, I'm not disappointed with one alternative that was discussed, but dismissed.

Seems there was a suggestion to turn us all into corporals. Can you imagine someone filling a leadership or NCO position with just 18 months in service?

I was still learning what to salute and the proper way to do an about face after my first 18 months in uniform.

Anyway, the Army couldn't either, so we remained specialists instead of becoming NCOs like corporals are.

Also, I don't think the NCOs really wanted us scumming up their NCO clubs.

But despite all the good this title entails, it still boils down to what we are called.

I realize the answer is "specialist," but what do we respond when some civilian asks, "Specialist in what?" after we've just identified ourselves as "Specialist Snively."

Before, the "four" would let them know it was some kind of crazy Army rank. Besides, that's all so formal and stuffy.

We used to like to kick back and refer to one another as "Speedy fours," and "Spec. 4s." Now I guess we're just plain "speedies," or worse, "Specs," which is about the way we're treated anyway.

Carlucci sends letter on budget cut effects

I'm happy to have this chance to speak to you and bring you an update on developments here in Washington and the way they affect our armed services. As all of you know, our nation is entering a time of tight budgets. I've been ordered to cut 33 billion dollars in the 1989 defense budget, and that is only the downpayment on larger cuts in our plans for 1990 and beyond. Deciding where to cut has been difficult, and it isn't going to get any easier.

I want to speak to you today because I know you're wondering where you stand in all of this. Well, the answer is simple: You stand front and center. My goal has been to emerge from the cutbacks with our priorities intact. And as I've said clearly to the Congress as I defend our budget on the Hill, People are our first priority.

I am convinced that our armed forces are only as good as the dedicated men and women in the ranks. Your talent, dedication and skill gives us our fighting edge — and we mean to maintain that.

That is why, in spite of the cutbacks in fiscal year '88, we've included a 4.3 percent raise in military pay in next year's budget. President Reagan has worked hard to close the gap between civilian and military pay, and neither of us intends to see it start widening again. 4.3 percent is not too great a price to pay to reward your hard work and sacrifice, and I intend to fight hard to see that you get it.

We also intend to see that you get the training and the equipment you need to do your job. Short changing training time would be a serious mistake, and we've made every effort to prevent that part of the defense budget from cuts. We will not send you on your missions without being fully ready and with less than what you need to succeed.

The cutbacks we face are deep, and all the services are feeling the pain. But the cuts aren't indiscriminate — we're using a scalpel, not a meat ax. We've made a choice: It is better to have a smaller, effective force than a large but inadequate one. We have postponed a number of new weapons systems and other modernization programs and proposed the elimination of some ships, air wings and battalions for one reason: in order to guarantee that the forces that remain are trained and equipped to do their job.

I'm sorry to report that the budget squeezes shows no signs of relief. I can assure you, however, that I will continue working to reverse the downward trend in defense spending. My aim is to convince Congress to put defense spending on a path of steady, modest growth. An increase of two percent after inflation would enable us to maintain the defenses we need at a price our nation can afford. It will be a difficult battle, but I am still confident we can hammer out a new consensus on defense spending — and I know I have President Reagan's support.

Rest assured that as we work towards that consensus, the president and I are well aware that the men and women of our armed services are the backbone of America's military strength. All of you can take great pride in the role you play as guardians of our peace and freedom. Let me take this opportunity to say that we are grateful for your service to our nation.

Frank C. Carlucci
Secretary of Defense

Commander encourages everyone to buckle belts

Last year, 48,000 Americans were killed on our nation's highways. Of those who died, 673 were active duty military.

Many of these individuals would be alive today if they had used seat belts and other available protective equipment. In an effort to stop these needless deaths, the Department of Defense and Fort Benning will join with the National Safety Council, National Highway Traffic Safety Administration and many other organizations to encourage everyone to take positive action to protect themselves and their passengers while driving.

There are a number of things we at Fort Benning can do to assist the Department of Defense in this most worthwhile campaign. Primarily, we must remember to buckle up when we get behind the wheel of our automobiles and ensure our passengers and children are buckled up as well. Motorcyclists and their passengers should wear approved helmets and appropriate protective clothing whenever they ride.

The philosophy that "safety is a by product of everything we do" can best be demonstrated when we drive defensively, soberly and with our seatbelts buckled. Let's work together to make the 1988 "Buckle Up America" campaign an enormous success.

Community welcomed for Armed Forces Day

The theme for Armed Forces Day 1988 is, "Securing the Blessings of Liberty."

Our Army theme for 1988 is "Training." It is through good, hard, realistic training, performed to standard, that we are able to secure the blessings of liberty.

We believe that preparedness, achieved through training, is a deterrent to war. Our mission at Fort Benning is to train our soldiers and units to fight and win. This is our contribution to securing the blessings of liberty. We take pride in our contributions and are pleased to share this pride with our neighbors from the civilian community who we welcome here today.

Participation in SPIRIT encouraged by Leuer

Project SPIRIT is truly a success story at Fort Benning. We won an extra million dollars as a result of the fiscal year 1987 SPIRIT competition and the "spirit" of this program continues to grow. This is because you get involved in actions that generate savings and increase productivity.

The week of May 23-27, 1988, has been designated as "Catch the SPIRIT" Week. Now, more than ever, is the time to report the innovative approaches you are taking as managers and employees to accomplish your mission during this period of stringent budget cuts. As I tour our Fort Benning facilities, I see the results of new and improved methods of operations. I challenge each of you to report these actions to Project SPIRIT. If we all pull together, we can win the million dollar prize again in fiscal year 1988.

Your participation in the events of the "Catch the SPIRIT" Week is encouraged. We need your help to capture and report all actions that save government dollars.

Catch the SPIRIT!

House fires increase here

Within the past year, there has an excessive amount of fires in family quarters at Fort Benning, more so than ever before. The main reason for such a great dollar loss is that occupants leave their cooking unattended and go next door or down the street. Upon returning, they find their kitchen on fire and try to extinguish the fire themselves before calling the fire department. Once it gets out of control, then the fire department is notified. By all means, if you can extinguish the fire, do so, but call the fire department first. By notifying the fire department first, professsional firemen will be on the way to your house before it gets out of control. Don't second guess, call us at 687-8117/8118.

If you have small children never leave them unattended. Every member of your family should be educated in fire safety as soon as possible. For Fire Safety Educational Classes and Courtesy Home Fire Inspections, call 545-2883/1967.

Some major causes of fires are:

●Pans with grease left on stoves unattended. ●Improper storage in furnance rooms, carports and storage sheds.

Lets all work together in the future and prevent careless fires in our homes.

Remember, the life you save may be your own.

If you need assistance or information pertaining to fire prevention, call 545-2883. Your fire inspectors will be glad to assist you in anyway we can.

Two soldiers lose lives; neither wore seat belts

USAIC Safety

During the past two weeks, two soldiers lost their lives as a result of POV accidents. In both cases the soldiers might have lived had safety belts been in use.

In the first accident, the soldier lost control of his vehicle on a curve, left the road and overturned. The soldier was thrown from the vehicle and crushed.

In the second accident, the soldier was traveling at an excessive rate of speed when he lost control and left the roadway.

He reentered the roadway, traveled approximately 125 feet and left the roadway again on the opposite side. He then struck a guard rail, became airborne, struck a concrete drainage culvert and rolled over several times.

The soldier was found in the back seat of the vehicle. He died of massive internal injuries.

change and commissary as well as new recreational facilities," he said, "and to compensate for the brigade's move to Fort Drum, new housing has been built for family members."

Connor said that the waiting list for the facilities are minimal, and the school systems are excellent.

Besides the modern military facilities, Fort Drum offers plenty of recreational activities for the off duty soldier, Connor added.

"Salmon fishing and both cross-country and downhill skiing are just a few of the activities available." Connor said. "The opportunities are many," he said, "and we want good soldiers to take advantage of them."

For more information on the move to Fort Drum, please call for an appointment with CSM Cruise or Col. Connor at 544-1715. Either, will be happy to answer any further questions about Fort Drum. Calling is your first step up the mountain of success.

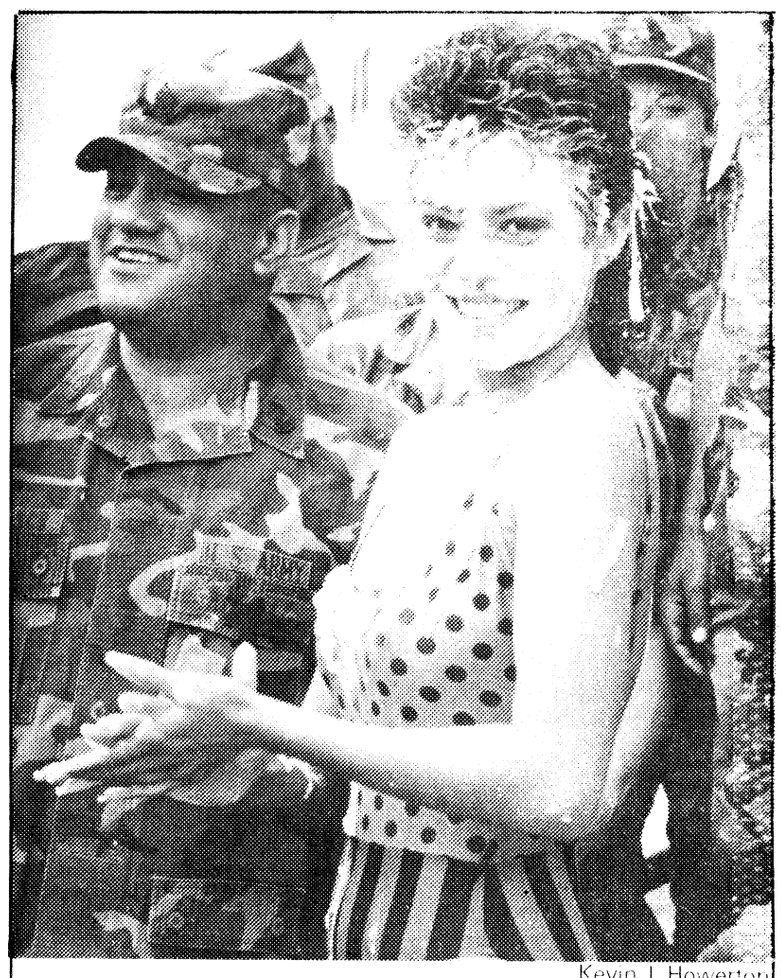
UNIT NEWS

Winning becomes tradition for 533rd

According to Capt. Earl H. Boyd, commander of the 533rd, the accomplishment took a combination of the total dedication of vehicle operators and the technical expertise of the maintenance mechanics. The yardstick by which their performances are measured, culminates each year when FORSCOM selects its annual Maintenance Excellence Award winner.

The competition was open to all units throughout FORSCOM and was evaluated in three categories: heavy, intermediate and light.



Qualification for the award consisted of the evaluation of all reportable systems including vehicles, weapons, Nuclear, Biological, Chemical equipment, field mess equipment and maintenance operations. After compiling the required data, a unit profile book was assembled and sent to review boards beginning at the battalion level. After the battalion review, it was sent to the group headquarters and then to post headquarters for final consideration before being sent to FORSCOM.

The competition at post level took place late last year, and the transportation company drove away with yet another win. Then, after several months of evaluation at the FORSCOM level, the unit received notification of its victory.

The primary peacetime mission of the 533rd is the line-haul tranportation of major equipment at Fort Benning as well as operational support for all major troop deployments. For example, the 533rd recently completed major movements to the National Training Center at Fort Irwin, Calif. in support of the 197th Inf. Bde. The truckers also supported the 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment in a recent deployment to Fort Chaffee, Ark. The unit also has constant commitments along the east coast.

Boyd credited the FORSCOM win and the continuous high maintenance standards of the 533rd to the drivers' and mechanics' positive attitudes about keeping the unit's 54 M-915 tractor trailers operational and on the road at all times. "Our unit motto, 'Spirit of the Road', is indicative of our desire to maintain the highest possible mission capability, and we believe that these awards are evidence of the success of our efforts," Boyd said.

The unit placed second in the Department of the Army phase of the competition, which was announced early this month.

Exercise improves training

By Suzanne L. Rudat
67th Maintenance Battalion

The Headquarters and Headquarters Detachment, 67th Maintenance Battalion conducted a quarterly field training exercise with the battalion, which began April 29 and continued through May 4. The exercise primarily focused on improving the training status of five battle tasks in the unit's Mission Essential Task List.

One of the areas on which the unit trained was establishing a defense within a base and deploying a reaction force. This was the first time the HHD located within one unit's perimeter, and it was accomplished quite successfully.

The soldiers went to the range while on a FTX for the first time. On Tuesday, the soldiers went through complete NBC decontamination training. The Decon Platoon from HHC, 197th Inf. Bde., provided the necessary training and equipment.

Overall, the unit was able to accomplish a significant amount of training, which is very difficult to conduct while in garrison. The FTX has also better prepared the unit for their external evaluation in October.

4 post soldiers earn Field Medical Badge

By Sally Reinecke

The Expert Field Medical Badge was recently awarded to four Fort Benning soldiers who challenged a week of training and energy-sapping tests.

The EFMB is awarded to soldiers in the medical fields who prove they are "experts" by performing several tasks.

The first task is a written test consisting of 100 questions, which cover common soldier skills as well as medical tasks.

Those who pass the written test advance on the hands-on tasks, such as land navigation; first aid; Nuclear, Biological and Chemical (NBC); and others. Standards for each task are high, and only those who demonstrate a high level of skill remain until the final tests.

One particularly challenging task is the litter carry in which the candidates must carry a "battlefield casualty" on a litter; over, under and through several obstacles.

The EFMB was awarded to: Capt. Peter Cardinal, MEDDAC; Capt. Mark Martinez, MEDDAC Veterinary Services; Cpl. Michael Braly, HHC, 2nd Bn., 18th Inf., 197th Inf. Bde.; and PFC Wallis Oppitz, HHC, 1st Bn., 58th Inf., 197th Inf. Bde.

CSM retires after 28 yrs

By George Mingee
197th Infantry Brigade correspondent

For many who have made the Army a career, the years pass in a series of reaching one goal and then looking forward to the next. In what seems to be a matter of a few years, soldiers reach retirement from an active and fulfilling career that has made an irreversable impression on their lives.

So it goes for CSM Richard McDonald, who recently retired following 28 years of the Army life. His last position was as command sergeant major of the 197th Support Battalion. The battalion's soldiers bid farewell to their enlisted leader during his retirement ceremony last week.

CSM McDonald started his Army career in 1959. He attended basic training at Fort Leonard Wood, Mo. and went to work in the supply field.

He served two tours in Vietnam, the first in 1965-1966 and another in 1970-1971.

Since joining the Noncommissioned Officer Corps in September 1962, McDonald has seen many changes in the Army.

"The Army today has more realistic training, with the soldiers being able to travel to California and Canada to train," McDonald said. "A few years back, soldiers stayed in and around their own post to train.

McDonald advises soldiers to look for the challenging jobs throughout their careers.

"Take the hard jobs as they come," he said. "The Army looks at the soldiers with good experience, and it makes you a better soldier."

"I feel good about serving the time," McDonald added. "It's the best thing that has ever happened to me."

Like many retired soldiers, McDonald has grown accustomed to the Columbus area and plans to stay here with his wife Carolyn.

"Fort Benning has always been a good tour for me, having been stationed here twice before, I really enjoy the post and the surrounding area."

McDonald was awarded the Legion of Merit at his retirement ceremony. Other awards and decorations include the Bronze Star, Meritorious Service Medal, and Army Commendation Medal.

Correction

In last week's Bayonet, an error was made in the story about the recent SPIRIT Awards Ceremony.

The story referred to ceremony as the 1987 SPIRIT Awards. However, the ceremony was actually held for the winners of the 2nd Quarter of Fiscal Year 1988.

for the award, personnel must be a staff sergeant or below. Candidates are nominated from the 1st and 2nd ITBs, HSC and the 30th AG Battalion.

Final selection for the award is made by an ITC board. Winners of the quarterly award are then eligible to compete for the Logistician of the Year Award.

ASK THE JUDGE

Susan McKeeman
Staff Judge Advocate's Office

Q: I saw an ad in the paper for a Dominican Republic vacation and I'd really like to go — especially as I've been thinking of getting a divorce and I hear you can get a divorce cheaply and quickly there. What do you advise?

A: You will find several problems with a foreign divorce. If the court never had proper jurisdiction or authority (i.e., power over the parties and/or over divorce matters), and you never gave your spouse notice of the divorce, the decree may not be given full faith and credit in the United States. Consequently, people who thought they had a valid divorce judgement found themselves still married.

Time and money are the two most powerful attractions to foreign divorces. The lure of quick divorces with lower court costs and attorneys fees are tempting factors.

Another man received a Mexican divorce after living in Mexico a couple of weeks. However, he never fulfilled the residency requirement and United States courts refused to honor his Mexican divorce. Unfortunately, the man had since remarried. Under United States law, he was still married to his first wife; the Department of Defense denied him all dependent benefits for his second wife. He eventually had to pursue his case through the California courts to re-divorce his first wife and re-marry his second wife. Instead of saving time and money, the process cost him twice as much of both.

influence on the military-age youth.

•Congressional members who generally have little military background and are significantly overworked. Thus, they have little time to research defense issues before voting.

•News media who are generally uninformed on defense issues yet are the primary source of information regarding these issues for the public.

•Our own AUSA members who need to have the issues relating to the Army, whether they are active duty soldiers, Reservists, National Guardsmen or civilians, reported and interpreted in the light of their best interests.

The type of materials prepared by LEF include:

•Special Reports — These are detailed examinations of subjects vital to national defense in which all sides of an issue are reviewed and for which recommendations are made. Prepared in booklet format, generally five or six are published annually.

•Fact Sheets — These are printed documents that discuss particular aspects of national defense issues

•Defense Reports — These are brief, hard-hitting discussions of the realities facing defense. They are prepared bi-weekly in photo copy, news paper column format and to more than 900 newspapers on a syndicated basis.

•Television Reports — This program produces video tapes covering subjects of importance to all of AUSA's audiences as well as providing a new form of linkage between national headquarters and the membership.

•Congressional Testimony — When called upon, AUSA testifies before Congress on critical issues. This testimony is then printed for distribution as appropriate.

The Landpower Education Fund depends entirely on contributions to continue its work. Membership dues are not used for this purpose. Both chapters and individuals can contribute to the LEF. The Chattahoochee Valley-Fort Benning Chapter has been awarded LEF Honor Roll Streamers for its flag for support of the LEF in past years. Individuals can contribute to the fund and receive on a regular basis copies of the material described above.

A Special Message to the Youth of Our Community

Last week, as part of our Centennial Celebration, CB&T was proud to bring 12 of the world's finest Olympic athletes to Columbus. These outstanding people, each a real-life hero, visited 67 schools in the Columbus area and shared their experiences with over 32,000 students.

We appreciate how welcome you made each Olympian feel and we hope that the athlete's message was meaningful to you. We rarely get to meet our heroes and it's nice to see that they're people just like us.

Not everyone desires to become an Olympian. Yet it's inspiring to see how these Olympians have set their life goals... and are reaching them. Through sharing their experiences we hope the Olympians have encouraged you, in whatever you strive for, to say "I'm Going For The Gold!"

Columbus is our home and for CB&T, the Olympians' visits have been a special and memorable experience. As you go for the gold in your own future, keep in mind that while all things are not easy, everything is possible.

Thanks to these Olympians for coming to our community.

Benning has first all-female airborne-qualified UMT

By Jo Ann Stamey
USAIC Chaplain's Office

March 18, Chap. (Capt.) Karen Diefendorf received her airborne wings and, with this, Fort Benning had its first all-female airborne-qualified unit ministry team (UMT).

A UMT is composed of a chaplain and an enlisted chaplain's assistant. In 1909, the Army authorized the assignment of one enlisted person per chaplain to help wih administrative responsibilities and arrangements for worship services. During the Korean War, a separate occupational specialty was created for chaplain's assistants, enabling soldiers and chaplains to work together as a team.

Sgt. Reba Guerts, a petite, red-haired, soft-spoken, highly motivated soldier entered the Army in November 1982 and was the distinguished honor graduate as a telecommunications center operator. Her first assignment was with the 35th Signal Brigade at Fort Bragg N.C. In February 1985, she went to the Army Marksmanship Unit as a Training and Reenlistment NCO. Guerts decided she wanted to get her family closer to the church. She made the decision to become a chaplain's assistant and in November 1986, went to the U.S. Army Chaplain's Center and School at Fort Monmouth, N.J., where she was the distinguished honor graduate.

In February 1987, Guerts was assigned to The School Brigade as the NCOIC, where she became a chaplain's assistant to Diefendorf. Witnessing the enthusiasm and motivation of the soldiers for several months, Guerts decided to go airborne. Guerts said her family asked, "Are you crazy?" but her husband was proud — that was one of her biggest motivators. He even made the last jump with her. On Dec. 11, 1987, Guerts received her silver wings.

When asked why she decided to go airborne, Guerts replied, "My own experience gave me more knowledge of the training, and it is easier to talk with the soldiers who come in for counseling because it lets them know they can make it, too."

Sgt. Guerts was asked to be a "black hat," an airborne instructor. But because she and her husband already had orders for Germany, she had to decline.

After her assignment in Mainz, Germany, Guerts hopes to go to the 82nd Airborne. Guerts said working at The School Brigade gave you a "strack feeling. It was the place you wanted to be, and will miss."

Diefendorf, a charismatic, enthusiastic, highly motivated officer came to Fort Benning in September 1986 as the only female chaplain on a staff of 30. She was assigned to the 2nd Mobile Army Surgical Hospital and in September 1987 was transferred to The School Brigade.

When asked why she decided to go airborne, she said it was like osmosis — watching and listening to the soldiers each day, you really wanted to become a part of what they were doing. She said she feels the cadre has a greater respect for her because she took the risk for something they value. Diefendorf feels her ministry to soldiers has been enhanced because her ministry is more viable, and she knows what they're going through.

Being female raises both positive and negative aspects. On the positive side, it gives the female soldiers the chance to see early on another female that has accomplished the task. There are female riggers, but they don't see them until they jump. A difficult side of airborne training is a combat skill, and the Army still is not clear on combat skill courses for females. Diefendorf said that is one of the things she took most seriously. She said she wants to be able to go wherever the soldiers go that she's ministering to.

When asked if airborne training had made a difference in her career, she replied, "Yes. The difference is I met myself in that course. I had to prove to myself that I could do something extremely physically demanding and hang in there, no matter what."

She stated she also learned a lot of spiritual things. She felt that she had not accomplished this on her strength alone.

"God worked through the cadre, who were extremely professional and helped me succeed. They didn't just teach me — they helped me succeed," she said. One day after a battalion run, she told the first sergeant, "I never thought the strong arm of the Lord would look like you," and the first sergeant replied, "You're going to make it because we need you here."

Diefendorf does not know what airborne training will ultimately do for her career, but for now, she feels she has more access to the soldiers she is ministering to. It's important that the chaplain not just say in the harness shed that "you'll be okay," but be able to demonstrate they'll be OK. The chaplain tries to jump on the first jump with each class, and when possible, she goes on the night jump.

She said her husband was extremely supportive and had taken over extra household chores and care of the children.

When asked what was the one incident that stood out during this time she shared the following:

On Thursday before the final run on Friday, she was physically a wreck, and was close to falling out. Upon returning home that evening, there was a Bobby Michaels tape in the mail with a song that said, "I will not offer to my Lord something that costs me nothing." She studied the passage in Chronicles. She decided to offer her run as a sacrifice on Friday. The next day, she ran with more ease than she ever had and whenever she began to struggle, she would call the passage to mind.

Initially, in October, Diefendorf and Guerts entered airborne training together as a unit ministry team. However, Diefendorf was injured and had to drop out. During that time, Guerts was encouraged by the chaplain in many ways. When Diefendorf entered airborne training, each day Sgt. Guerts would come out and run along with the formation to give her words of encouragement. After the final run, Diefendorf went home and Guerts had left her breakfast and a rose. This is truly the spirit of the unit ministry team.

Diefendorf said, "Airborne training was great, really great." It gave me enough to preach on for a lifetime!"

Chaplain says everyday should be 'Kid's Day

By Donald Taylor
2nd HIS Chaplain

As I was thinking during this break between Mother's Day and Father's Day, I came up with the obvious question that should disturb all kids (or the kid in us all), and that is, when is "Kid's Day?" Perhaps part of the answer is discovered in one of the Peanuts cartoons when Linus raises this very question to his grandmother, only to be informed that, "every day is Kid's Day." The inner workings of the adult mind often baffle us with sheer simplicity and over eagerness (eager responsiveness), even if the answer is not too satisfying and does not guarantee a gift.

If every day is "Kid's Day," then how does each day take on a special meaning and tradition that Hallmark should help us celebrate. If it does not have a Hallmark card, can it really be a special day? Although I may have started out tongue in cheek, I think that the question demands a serious answer. Especially, when we consider that as our society continues to change, families are faced with more demands on their time. More and more the norm is working parents and "latchkey" kids. This isn't a criticism — it is reality. The burden for many parents is the ability to spend time with their children and to give themselves to their children.

There is a teaching from the Word of God that says, "Train up a child in the way that he should go and when he is old, he will not depart from it." It is the prayer of every parent from their child's infancy through the "terrible two's" to the impossible teens, that our children turn out all right. Such a thought will mean different things to each parent, but I think that it may include appropriating those values that parents hold dear — be a credit to the family name and perhaps a "chip off the old block," that they be successful and achieve those things that would make their parents proud.

It is not an original thought, but it "ain't easy being a parent." This may seem all too real when we are called into conferences with teachers or the kids are thrown out of school, or just the daily confrontations that we go through with our children. However, our children may respond (with the appropriate response), "It ain't easy being a kid." Sometimes such sentiments produce from deep within our hearts our war stories. "Why, when I was your age, I had to . . ." Ever notice how the passing of years increases the distance from the school, the depth of the snow, climatic conditions, the amount of chores and the significance of the accomplishments.

If we really want to give our kids a gift each day and make the day special, then it has to focus on the time spent together, the investment in the child as a distinct and important human being, and above all, letting the child know that he is loved. The way that we "train" a child is through the personal investment of time — being there for the child and clearly demonstrating and modeling for the child the important areas of life. If we want our children to consider church an important area of life, then attend church and consistently live the requirements of such a lifestyle. Our children do not live in a vacuum. They are acutely aware of the world around them. They are attuned to gesture and word that is communicated. Therefore, if we want our kids to turn out right, a great deal of it depends on how we treat and train them.

This is not designed to have parents feel guilty, but rather the opposite. We recognize it is tough being a parent — and a struggle to be a good one. However, our children must become a priority, not an after thought, and be given top billing in our lives.

Soldiers restore M-3 tank

1940 Stuart to be used at 69th change of command

By Kevin J. Howerton
197th Infantry Brigade correspondent

Soldiers from the 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor have been busy recently, working on a tank. Not one of the regular tanks in the battalion, this is a very special tank. It's an M-3 Stuart tank built in 1940.

The Stuart tank began its career in 1940 when it was the first American light tank brought to Egypt during World War II, though it was only used as a trainer.

Later, the tank saw action with the British against the Germans at Sidi Rezeg, Libia in November of 1941. The little M-3 performed so well that the British nicknamed her "honey."

In 1942, after improvements in speed, she was reclassified as the M-5 Stuart and entered combat at Casablanca during the Allied invasion of North Africa. Later, she was used for reconnaissance in France and Italy. The last of her fighting was done at Normandy.

The Stuart tank normally stands guard in front of the 2nd Bn., 69th Armor motorpool year round. But in the near future, the still operable antique will once again be pressed into service at the 2nd Bn., 69th Armor change of command.

"It's a lot of work to get the M-3 ready for the change of command, because it's so old," said SFC Victor M. Morales, the noncommissioned officer in charge of the tank.

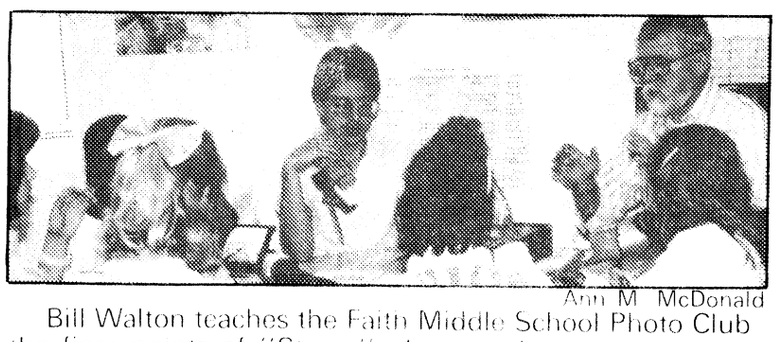
The M-3 is having an intercommunications system installed, various rewiring work and mechanical repair done and welding of fenders and rear deck. She will also be repainted.

"There aren't any repair manuals available for something like this," said SPC Christopher S. Shanks, a Tank System Mechanic in 2nd Bn., 69th Armor, who will be the M-3's tank commander for the change of command. "We just have to use our basic mechanical abilities," he added, "and rely heavily on common sense."

SPC Christopher S. Shanks (l) and SPC Shawn B. Normandin of 2nd Bn., 69th Armor, install a new power switch in an M-3 Stuart tank.

The M-3 was fitted with a diesel engine from an 2½ ton truck in 1982. Sgt. Cedric B. Frazier was one of the soldiers who helped fit the new engine in then and is also helping to get her into shape now.

"It was difficult to get the truck engine to fit into such a small tank," said Frazier. "It took three of us about two months to make it work."



The tank will be used to carry Lt. Col. David Merriam, 2nd Bn., 69th Armor's outgoing commander, and Lt. Col. Walter Bunyea, the incoming commander, at the May 26 change of command. The ceremony will be held at 2 p.m. at Artillery Field, Kelley Hill.

Faith photoclub learns to shoot in stereo

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

When a recent guest speaker questioned the Faith Shutterbugs, a photoclub at Faith Middle School about, "What is a stereo," they all answered with "a musical device," which is correct in most cases but not in this one.

When Bill Walton, the Public Information officer of the post Public Affairs Office asks that question, he is referring to three dimensional or stereoscopic photography from which the pictures produced are commonly called stereo views.

Ann M. McDonald

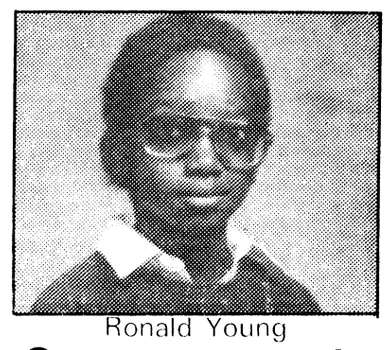
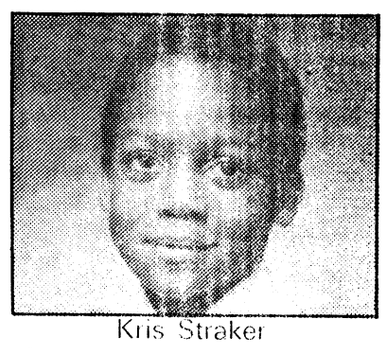
Stereographic photography literally enables the viewer to get into the picture. This three dimensional effect is obtained when a picture is taken using a special technique or camera and then mounting them on a frame and viewing them through a stereoscope, which makes the pictures appear 3-D and gives the viewer the illusion of being there.

According to Walton, who is a member of the National Stereographic Society and an amateur photographer, he offered to speak to the group after seeing an article in The Bayonet about the club.



Walton said he offered because he feels people should learn about 3-D photography at an early age. He was introduced to it in 1976 and regrets not knowing about it sooner.

While speaking to the group, he showed them how to take a 3-D picture with one camera, two cameras mounted on a board, a stereo camera and a Nimslo.



He showed the group examples of each of the ways he said a picture could be taken.

"I then showed them how they could mount a print of a view," he said.

"They were really enthusiastic about 3-D, and I think a few might end up pursuing it in the future," Walton said. "Their advisor put it in their list of projects, which is a start."

MACH celebrates Nurses Day

By Jeri I. Graham
MACH

Martin Army Community Hospital, joined the nation in recognizing the nursing profession during National Nurses Week, May 2 through 8 and National Nurses Day, May 6.

This year, the theme for National Nurses Day was "Proud to Care". This event, sponsored by the American Nurses Association (ANA) is a day for the entire nursing community to share pride in what nurses do and for the public to show their appreciation for the valuable contributions that nurses make to our health care system each and every day.

At Fort Benning, military and civilian nurses are working in a wide variety of roles to include, direct patient care, education and training, administration and field nursing. They are a vital part of the Georgia Nurses Association and represent a majority of the membership and officer positions in the Columbus chapter of the GNA. Our nurses are very active in a number of specialty organizations and share their expertise via teaching programs at the local, regional and national levels.

This week, the nursing staff was involved in a number of special activities. They participated in the proclamation of National Nurse Week by Columbus' Mayor Jernigan. There was a photo display of nursing activities in the main lobby of Martin Army Community Hospital and a "Proud to Care" tea on May 5.

Col. Herbert Segal, the hospital commander, presented Col. Susie M. Sherrod, chief, Department of Nursing, with a special Letter of Commendation for all nursing personnel. Both Segal and Sherrod hailed the civilian registered nurses for being the "backbone" of the department and for providing the continuity of care throughout the years. The retired nurses from the area were also recognized for their many years of dedicated, quality service to the Fort Benning community.

John Barr

Col. Herbert Segal (r) and Col. Susie Sherrod (b) recognize six distinguished retired nurses as part of Nurse Appreciation Week

Four senior nurses were asked to share their thoughts about working at Martin Army. Dorothy King, RN, joined the Martin Army staff in 1976 after working for eight years in hospitals in Alabama and Florida. With a great deal of psychiatric nursing experience behind her, she came to Fort Benning because of the competitive salary and benefits, and because it was highly recommended by a good friend. Her father had been on active duty, and there was a certain sense of patriotism as well.

King cited a number of positive reasons for staying on at Martin Army. She likes the philosophy of patient care, the nurse/patient ratio, the increased responsibility, the good working relationships with the military staff and the educational opportunities.

"The staff really puts together, and their sense of humor makes a real difference in the working environment."

Mary Riggins, RN, started working at MACH in 1955. She has seen many people come and go in the past 30 years, but she has stayed because of the good working conditions and the "nice people." She sees the rotation of Army doctors and nurses as an advantage because they are always introducing new ideas. She likes giving equal care to all ranks and believes the obstetrics is basically a really happy service to work in. She really lights up when she says," You know I went to nursing school with Dr. Smith's (Army staff obstetrician) mother!"

Lula Scott (known to most as Scottie) graduated from the Medical Center School of Nursing in Columbus in 1952. She worked for the next eight years in the civilian sector, met her husband, who was stationed at Fort Benning, and then entered government service in 1960. She served in many Army hospitals while her husband continued his Army career. She worked in a variety of positions in Frankfurt, Germany; Fort Riley, Kansas; Fort Bliss, Texas and Wurzburg, Germany. She plans to retire in the Columbus area. Scott loves the challenge of working in the emergency room. "I can work very well in a stressful environment, and I can also get to the heart of things quickly, deciding

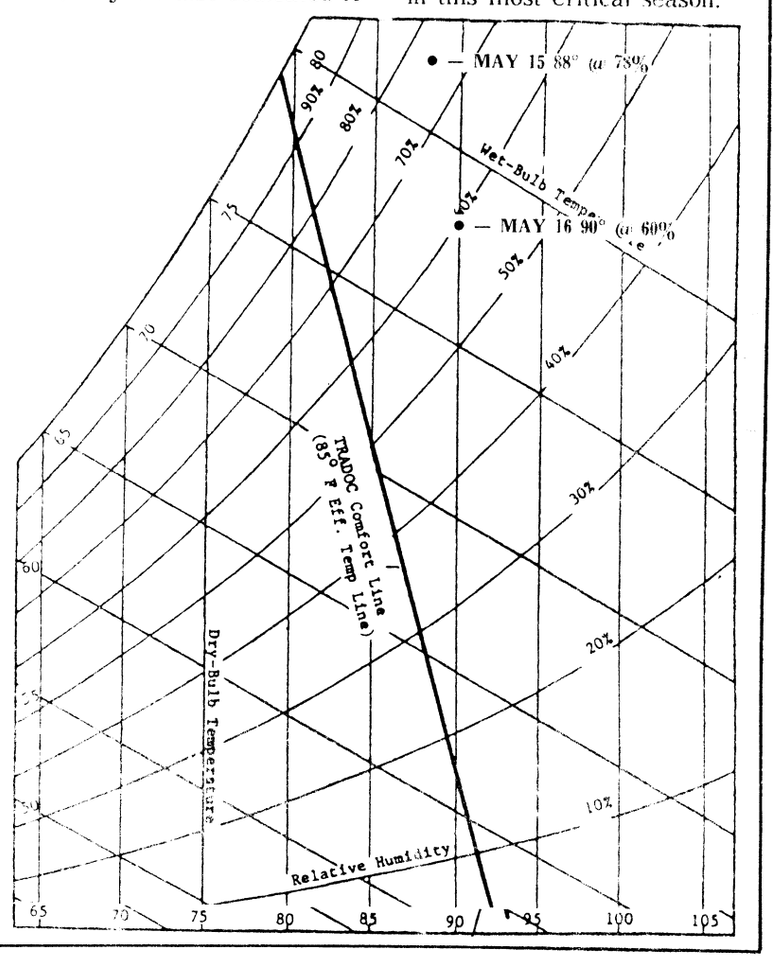
Weather exceeds 'Comfort Zone,' air conditioning season to begin

By Becky Ray
Energy Management Branch

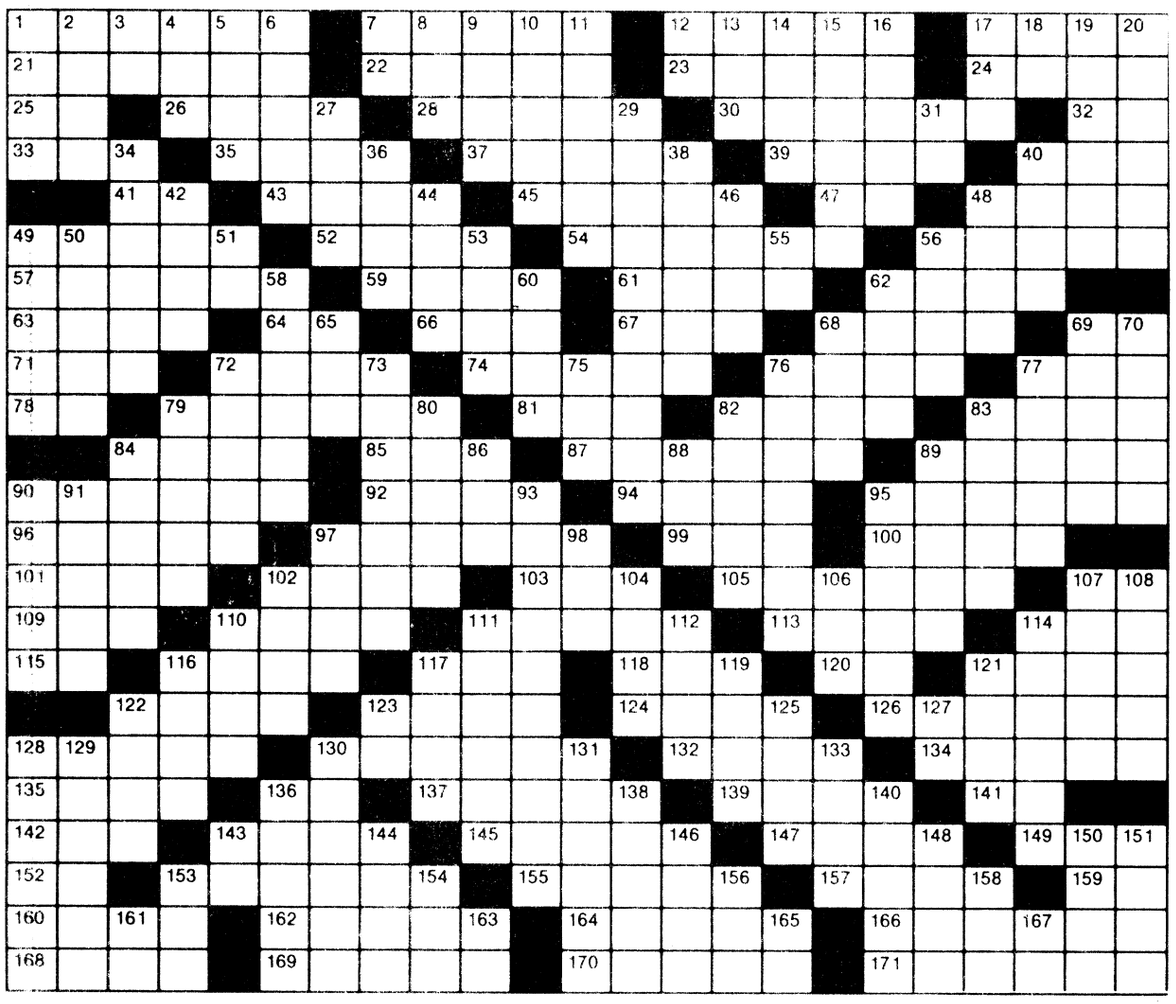
As days become warmer and more humid with the approach of summer, people working and living at Fort Benning are increasingly interested in the criteria used to determine the start-up date for air conditioning.



The Training and Doctrine Command has devised a "comfort zone" chart on which daily relative humidity and dry-bulb temperatures are plotted. These points must fall to the right of the "comfort line" for four out of five consecutive days for air conditioning to be authorized by TRADOC. However, post officials make the final determination beyond this point in authorizing air conditioning start-up.

May 15 brought temperatures of up to 88 degrees with a relative humidity of 78 percent, which falls above the TRADOC comfort line when plotted on the chart. Although the humidity level dropped slightly on May 16, temperatures of up to 90 degrees kept the day's plot point above the comfort line. If weather forecasts for the remainder of the week are accurate, criteria for air conditioning turn-on will be met soon. Tentative plans call for air conditioners to be cycled on beginning May 23. Occupants are reminded that turning on all air conditioners on post is a large task and may take a few days.

Careful use of air conditioning systems is critical in living within Fort Benning's energy budget because they use such great amounts of electricity. In fiscal year 1987, for instance, Fort Benning spent $626,673 for electricity in November. Air conditioning in summer months increased the montly bill to more than $1 million in July and accounted for a great percentage of the year's $9,362,621 electrical bill.



Although post officials are concerned with individual comfort, they are also dedicated to the careful management of air conditioning to avoid exceeding energy goals. Under the Army Energy Program, TRADOC has mandated a 15 percent reduction in energy use in 1995 from 1985 baseline figures. TRADOC assigns Fort Benning's yearly goals, which decrease gradually each year.

The entire Fort Benning community faces a challenge in meeting the assigned energy goals. We can meet this challenge if we operate efficiently and work together, especially in this most critical season.

Door prizes will be awarded during the festivities. Prizes include a weekend party cruise from A-1 Travel Services, a four hour brunch cruise at Panama City, Floridia and two free passes to fly anywhere on U.S. Air (present scheduled stops).

These prizes are just one more fantastic reason to attend the Luau, because you must be present to win.

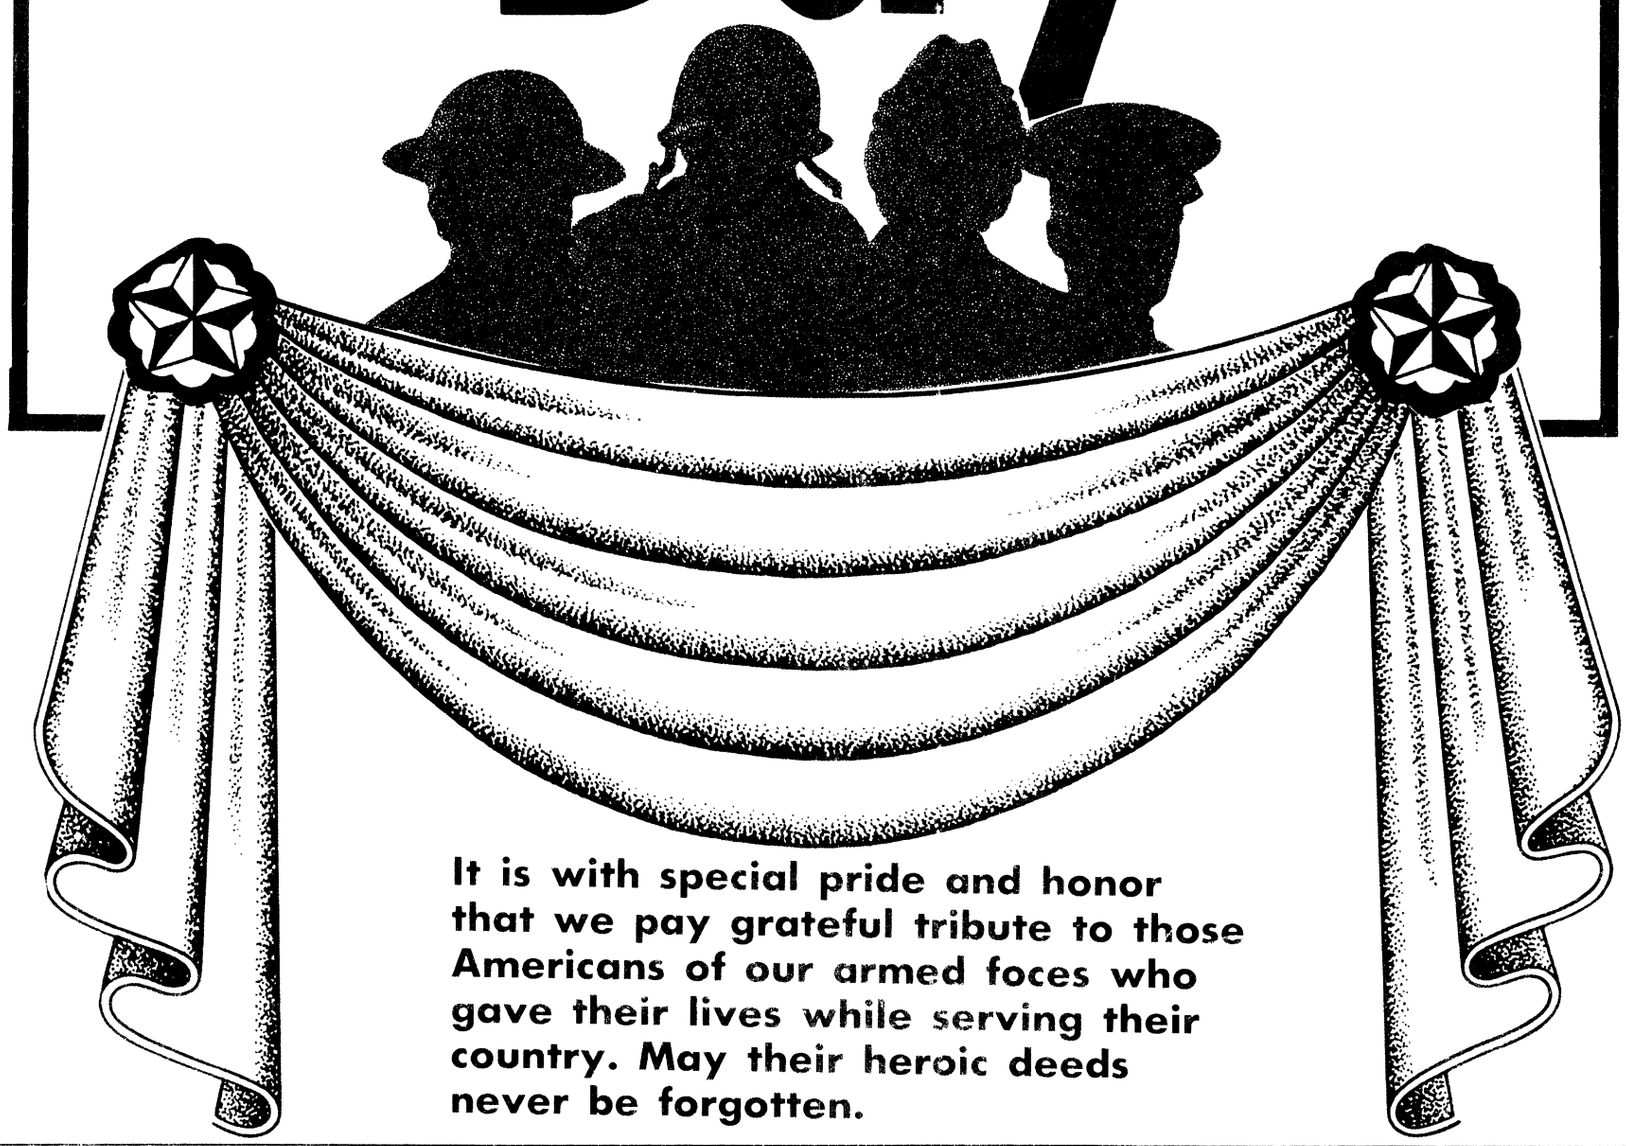
She knows that the emergency room is a very visible place and that it takes lots of skill, patience and understanding to get through those busy shifts.



Lydia McCullough, RN, has worked at Martin Army since 1967, and has progressed through a variety of positions to her current position as chief, Nursing Administration, Evenings/Nights. As nursing supervisor, she is responsible for the nursing care performed during her shift and most aptly handles a miriad of staffing and patient care requirements. McCullough has been an integral part of the growth and development of the Department of Nursing over the years and can provide a unique historical perspective to most challenges. She has been an active member of the Columbus nursing community and has assumed many responsible positions in a number of orgnizations. She is now a member of Sherrod's Task Force to study recruitment and retention at MACH.

The four nurses mentioned above are representative of the outstanding quality of professionals employed at Fort Benning's hospital. Their length of service at this facility has only increased their belief in the motto "Proud to Care!"

Capt. Kurt Fitz-Randolph of USAMU tied a national record enroute to winning this year's Interservice 300-meter standard rifle event.

Army marksmen set record

By Tommy Pool
USAMU Public Affairs Office

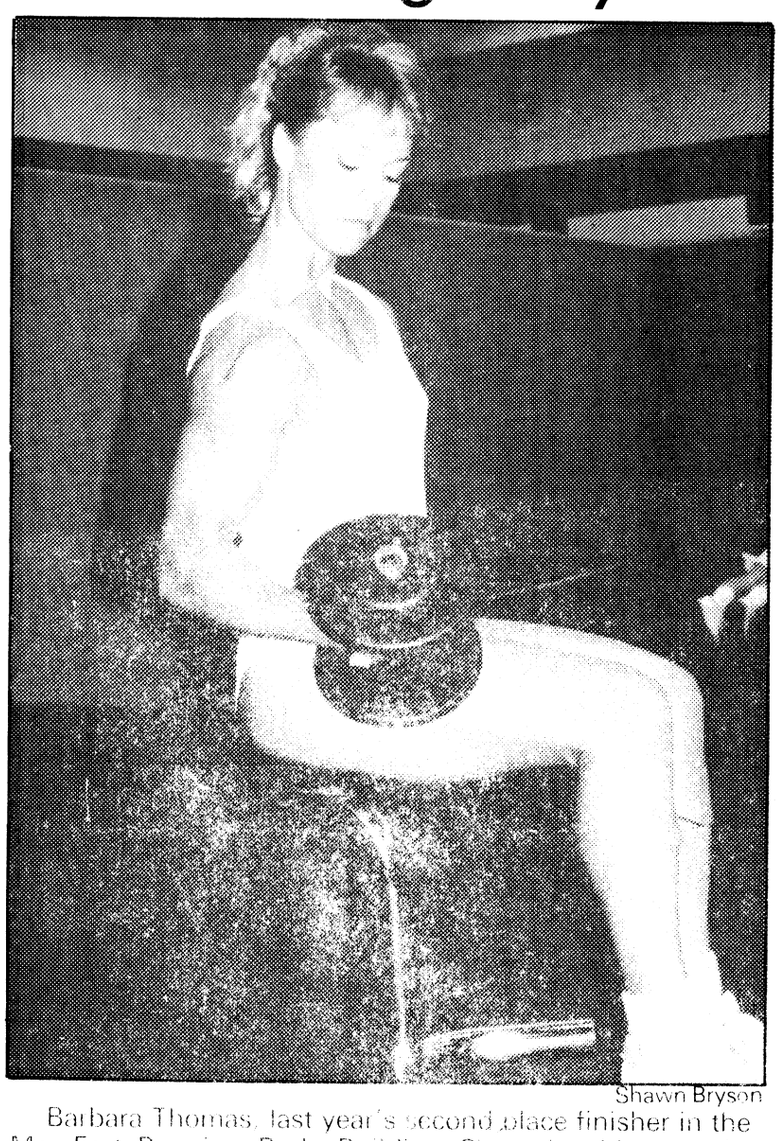
Members of the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit established a new national shooting record while dominating this year's Interservice Rifle championships and Military Shooting Championships (CISM) team tryouts.

The matches were held at USAMU's Hook International Range from May 12-15 and included more than 40 of the top shooters from the different service teams that participated in Olympic-style shooting events.

This year's Interservice championships were also used to select the 1988 United States CISM shooting team that will compete in the CISM, to be held July 1-9, in Lahti, Finland.

Members selected to the United States squad were all members of USAMU and included in order of finish: Capt. Glenn Dubis, Capt. Kurt Fitz-Randolph, SPC Thomas Tamas, Capt. Steve Goff, Sgt. Brad Carnes and Maj. Robert Aylward.

During the interservice championships, both individual and team events were dominated by members of USAMU and included a new national team record in 300-meter standard rifle.



Individual gold medal winners from the Army included Aylward and Capt. Wanda Jewell in 50-meter rifle competition, and Carnes, Dubis and Fitz-Randolph in 300-meter rifle championships.

In team competition, the U.S. Army won all five of the team events and raised the current national record by two points in the 300-meter standard rifle event.

Members of the record setting Army team included Aylward, Fitz-Randolph and Dubis.

Fort Benning body building showdown nears

Shawn Bryson

Barbara Thomas, last year's second place finisher in the Ms. Fort Benning Body Building Championships, works her forearms in preparation for this year's competition.

Shawn Bryson
Bayonet staff writer

The showdown for the best bodies at Fort Benning grows closer as the 5th Annual Mr. and Ms. Fort Benning Body Building Championships will be held June 11 at Marshall Auditorium in building 4.

The competition is open to all active duty military men stationed at Fort Benning and to women who are active duty, family members (active duty or retired), Department of the Army, Non-Appropriated Funds, and Army Air Force Exchange Service Civilian Employees.

One of the top contenders for the women's title is Babara Thomas who was the runner-up in last year's contest.

The mother of two, Thomas hopes that her combination of symetry and muscle mass, as well as her femininity will pay off at next month's championships.

"Last year, I didn't have as much muscle as I have this year," Thomas said. "I am better defined and have worked on my routine with Maria Ratio, an aerobics instructor. I think we've put together a dynamite routine for this year's competition. It's a little classier and more mindful compared to last year's."

At 5-feet-7 inches tall, the 134-pound Thomas started working out three years ago with an off-and-on dedication. "I didn't get really serious until I started training for last year's contest," she said.

Although her genuine love is running, Thomas feels that she has the natural build for body building and keeping her body in showtime shape is an ongoing task.

"I train three days on and one day off," Thomas said. Junk food is out of the question for Thomas who stays on a very strict diet. "The hardest part of my training is the dieting because I love to eat," she added.

Thomas also explained that without the help of her husband, she wouldn't be able to keep up the training. "My husband is a great supporter and gives a lot of his free time to help with the kids while I'm training.

"I think that the lady who can show off the muscle but keep the sense of femininity about her will have the best chance of winning the competition," Thomas said.

All Army shoot held here

By Tommy Pool
USAMU Public Affairs Office

The 1988 All Army Small Arms Championships are underway at Fort Benning this week with more than 800 shooters from the Army and Reserve Component teams competing in the matches.

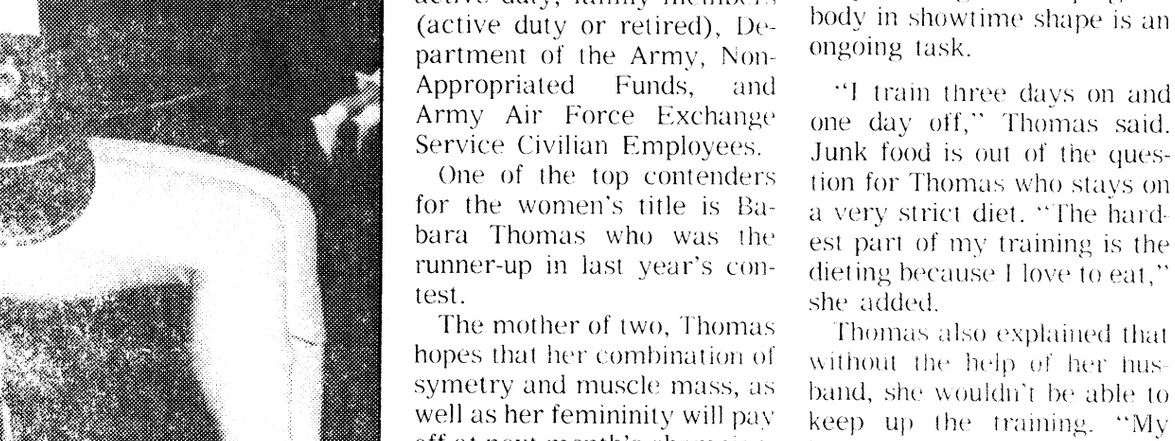
This year's annual championships were officially opened May 16, by Maj. Gen. Robert D. Wiegand, chief of staff, U.S. Army Forces Command.

The opening ceremonies also included an assumption of command of the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit, by incoming commander, Col. William O. Vowell, from former acting commander Lt. Col. Eustice M. Shiver.

Col. Vowell comes to Fort Benning from Fort Jackson, S.C., where he commanded the 3rd Battalion, 28th Infantry Regiment. He is a distinguished military graduate of the University of Alabama and holds a master's degree in American and European history from the University of Southern Mississippi.

The U.S. Army championships will continue through May 27 and will feature both team and individual competition to determine the title of "All Army Champions".

Teams representing more than 40 units from the Army, Army Reserve and National Guard are entered in the matches that include combat firing with the M-16A2, 9mm pistol and M-60 light machine gun, as well as a newly added two-man, sniper rifle event.



Next week's matches will also include the traditional, known distance, or precision shooting with national match pistol and M-14 match rifle championships.

The top scoring competitors from the national match phase of the U.S. Army championships will be selected to represent their respective service teams at this year's National Rifle and Pistol Matches held annually at Camp Perry, Ohio, from July to August.

Watch for all the winners and complete results of this year's U.S. Army Small Arms matches in next weeks issue of The Bayonet.

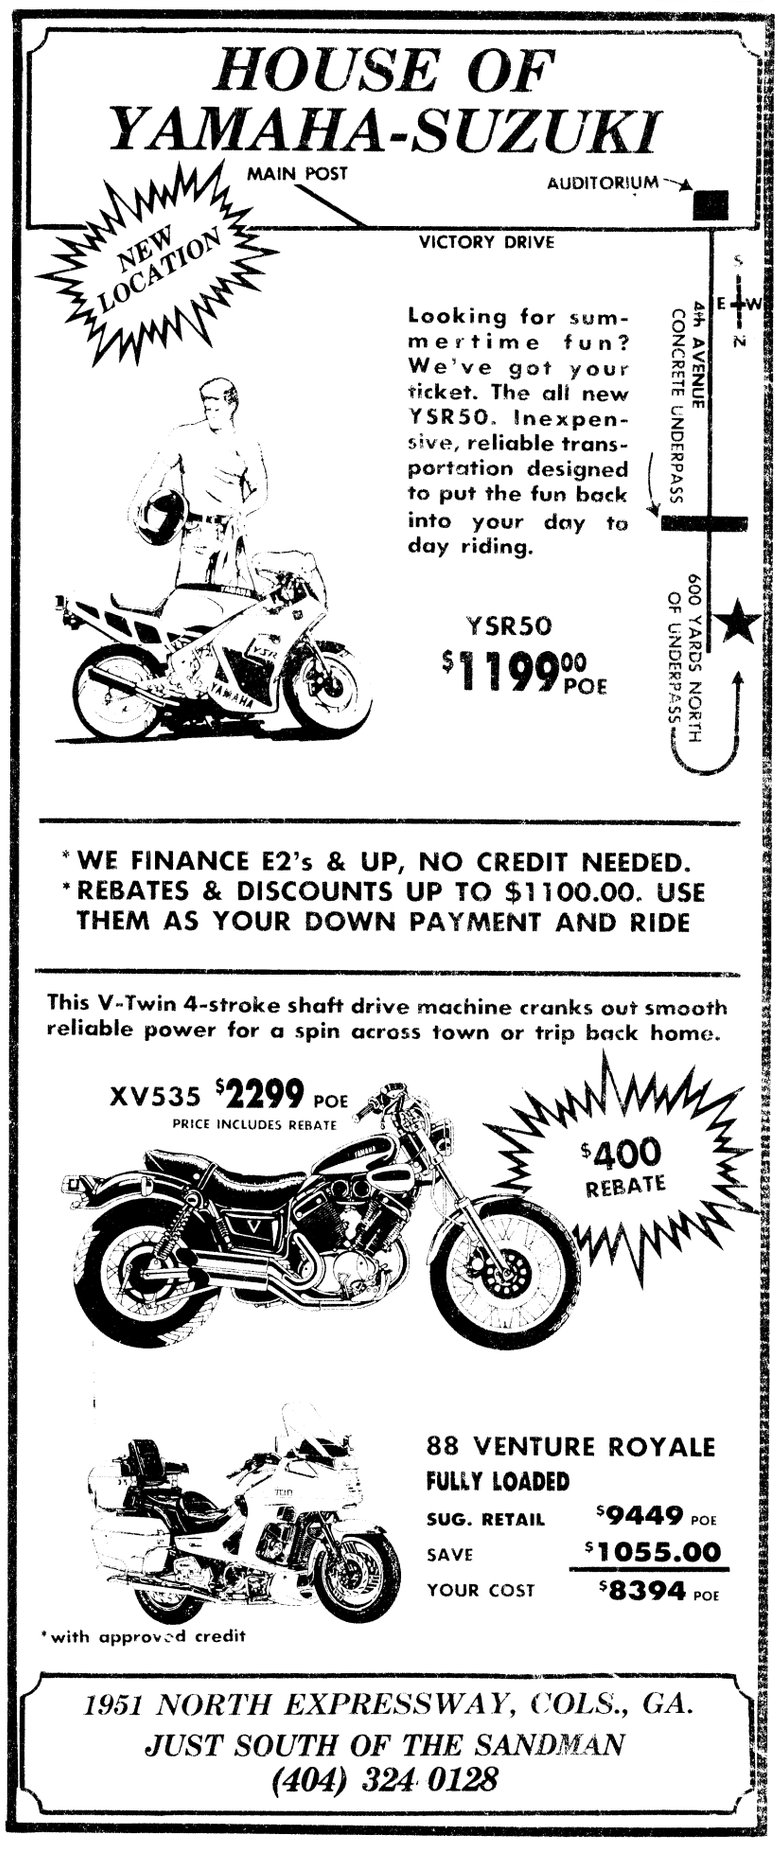
Walter F. George Reservoir fish-kill subject of concern

Ga. Dept. of Natural Resources

An ongoing fish kill on the Walter F. George Reservoir south of Columbus on the Georgia-Alabama line has been the subject of concern with fishermen in that area.

Georgia's Department of Natural Resources Fisheries Section and the Southeastern Cooperative Fish Disease Project at Auburn University have been studying the problem.

Among their findings is that the kill is affecting most species of fish in the lake but most severely affected are crappie, carp and largemouth bass.



The disease is found in all areas but is most concentrated above U.S. Highway 82, according to DNR Fisheries supervisor, Russ Ober. He said that he would rate the severity of the problem as moderate and although there have been rather heavy losses, the disease will not decimate the fish populations.

The problem is endemic to the reservoir and is a continuing problem that shows up during times of stress in the fish. Early spring is particularly stressful to fish that have survived the winter and are beginning the spawning period.

Dr. John Plumb of the Southeastern Fish Disease Project at Auburn, who has examined the fish, said that the kill is a result of a combination of disease causing organisms, particularly the bacteria Areomonas hydrophila. He said the disease causing the problem is impossible to combat. It is a natural phenomenon and will soon run its course for the year.

Plumb and Ober advise fishermen in Lake Walter F. George that healthy fish, those that bite readily and fight well are safe to eat if they are properly cooked. It should be of no concern to human health.

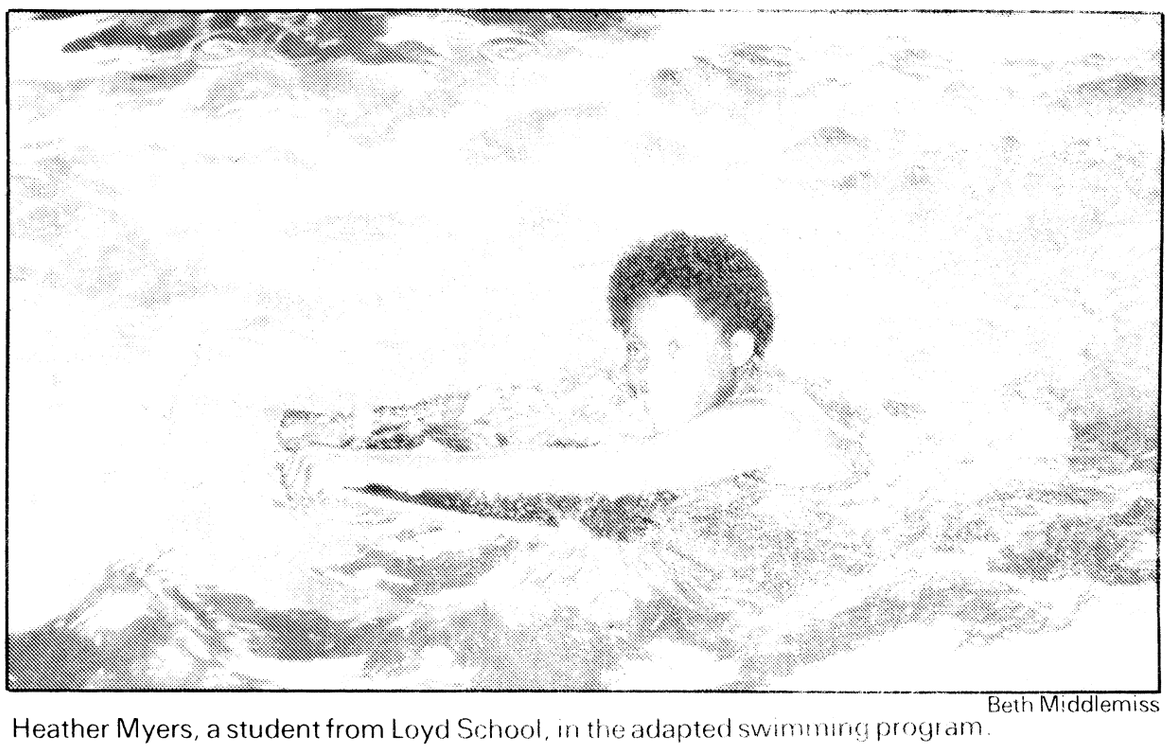
Students swim for PT

By Beth Middlemiss
Fort Benning Schools

The school bus stops. The students hurry out. It's Wednesday, and it's time to go swimming.

Wednesdays and Fridays have become special days for students in Jean Anderson's and Evelyn Montgomery's classes at Loyd School. Their physical education classes have been meeting since March on those days at the pool at Bryant Wells Gym for an hour with Elaine Kendall, adapted aquatics instructor, and with SFC Bruce Kendall and Joanne Babbitt, who are Red Cross swimming instructors.

The class, designed for children with special needs, works with children individually and in groups. Students in the class range in ability from those who are just learning to put their faces in the water to those who are swimming the length of the pool.



"The classes are designed so that everyone achieves," said Kendall. "We figure out how to build on the individual strengths that each child possesses."

The class is in operation due to the combined efforts of several agencies on post. The Exceptional Family Member Program coordinated the use of the pool and provision of the bus.

The Red Cross provided two of the instructors and YAC provided the third. The school system employees worked with each of the agencies while arranging students' daily schedules so that they could participate in the adapted swimming program.

One outgrowth of the adaptive swimming program is that two of it's students will be participating in swimming events in the Georgia Special Olympics Competition later this month. They are the first students from this region to participate in the swimming events.

"This program means a lot to our students, and we are delighted to see how well it is working for each one of them," said Jean Anderson. "Though we only go to the pool two days a week, our students look forward to classes all week long."

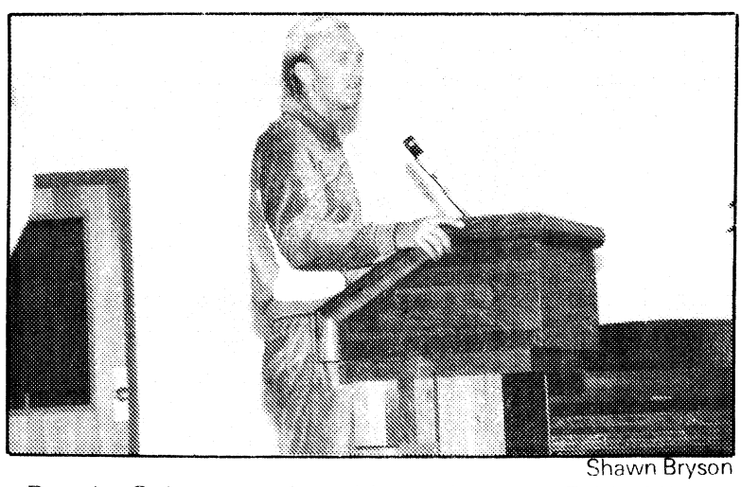
U.S. Olympians visit Benning Schools



By Shawn Bryson
Bayonet staff writer

Several United States Olympians of past and future visited Fort Benning schools last week to speak to students about setting short-and long-term goals in life as well as building self esteem.

Among the atheletes to visit Fort Benning were 1984 Olympic gold medalists Julianne McNamara and Rowdy Gaines. McNamara was the first American woman gymnist to win the gold in the uneven parallel bars and a silver medal in the floor exercise during the games held in Los Angeles, Calif.

Rowdy Gaines was another of America's heroes in the 1984 Olympics as he brought home three gold medals for his 100-meter freestyle, 400-meter freestyle and 400-meter medley relay swimming events.

Another Olympian who visited the schools was Bob Beamon. Beamon was perhaps one of the more famous Olympians to visit Fort Benning as his world record 29-feet, two-and one-half-inch long jump has held up for 20 years. Beamen set the world record in the 1968 Olympics at Mexico City, Mexico, and it has yet to be broken.

Memorial Day message

On Memorial Day Americans pause to pay solemn tribute to the countless members of the Armed Forces who have given up their lives in the service of their country.

It is fitting that this day should fall during springtime, the time of rebirth and renewal. Though our sorrow is deep at the loss of so many of our finest men and women, in remembering them we also celebrate the precious freedoms they preserved for others with their lifeblood. The flowers we lay at their resting places and the quickening of life around us remind us of the many joys made possible by their willing sacrifice.

Americans have never sought conflict, and the only foreign soil we claim is the graves in which our heroes sleep. But since our beginning as a nation, we have always understood the high price freedom demands of us. Whether the challenge came on the greens of Lexington and Concord, at Belleau Wood or Omaha Beach on the Pusan Perimeter or in the Mekong Delta, the answer of our fighting forces has always been clear and unequivocal. Here at home and around the world, rows of white stone markers stand in silent testimony to our determination to defend liberty with our deeds and, if necessary, with our very lives.

The legacy of our fallen heroes is at once our birthright and our responsibility. And we look to you, the members of today's Armed Forces, to carry on their noble work. Your skill, dedication, and courage are the guarantees of our continued security. Those qualities defind the meaning of duty to your predecessors and their fellow Americans; they are a torch that will pass to each new generation as long as we remain determined to fulfill our duties as a free people.

On behalf of a grateful nation, I thank you for your hardships and sacrifice in that great tradition. As your Commander-in-Chief, I salute you. God bless you.

Ronald Reagan
President

Area lake safe again officials say

Georgia Department of Natural Resources

Department of Natural Resources Commissioner J. Leonard Ledbetter announced today that laboratory analysis indicate that all state water quality standards are being met in West Point Lake. "We see no reason why people cannot resume normal recreational activities in the lake," Ledbetter said.

The Department had advised people not to swim or water ski in the lake following the release of untreated or partially treated wastewater into the Chattahoochee River from Atlanta's R.M. Clayton Water Pollution Control Plant during the period April 24 to April 28.

The Environmental Protection Division of DNR began monitoring water quality in the river and in West Point Lake immediately following the incident.

"We will continue to monitor the water quality on a regular, frequent basis and will immediately notify the public if conditions change," Ledbetter said.

As a result of the unauthorized release of the waste water to the Chattahoochee, the Department of Natural Resources has sent a Consent Order to the City of Atlanta proposing a fine of $125,000 and requiring procedures to be put into place to prevent any recurrence.

For additional information, please contact Lucy Justus or Gib Johnston at 656-0772.

Restrictions to have little impact here

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Restrictions on purchases of supplies, travel and overtime announced by Department of the Army earlier this week will have little impact on the Fort Benning work force, according to post officials.

DA announced the following restrictions:

●Civilian hire will only be filled at a rate of one for every two vacancies. All SF52s will continue to be submitted to the director of Civilian Personnel where the SF52s will be monitored for compliance.

●No overtime authorization or payment except for safety/emergency requirements.

●Only mission essential travel will be performed. Conferences, meetings and civilian training are deferred during this period.

●No contracts for "new starts" will be let. Contracts will continue to be processed up to the point of actual award and held.

●Issuing of office supplies will be monitored and kept to minimum essential for operation from now until June 30.

Post officials noted that the post has been under a hard hiring freeze since November; that overtime authorization had already been reduced to a minimum, as had travel.

As far as maintaining supplies go, they said enough would be maintained to keep the civilian workforce gainfully employed.

The DA actions are a result of the Department of Defense running about $3 billion ahead of projected spending for the current fiscal year, according to a DA spokesman.

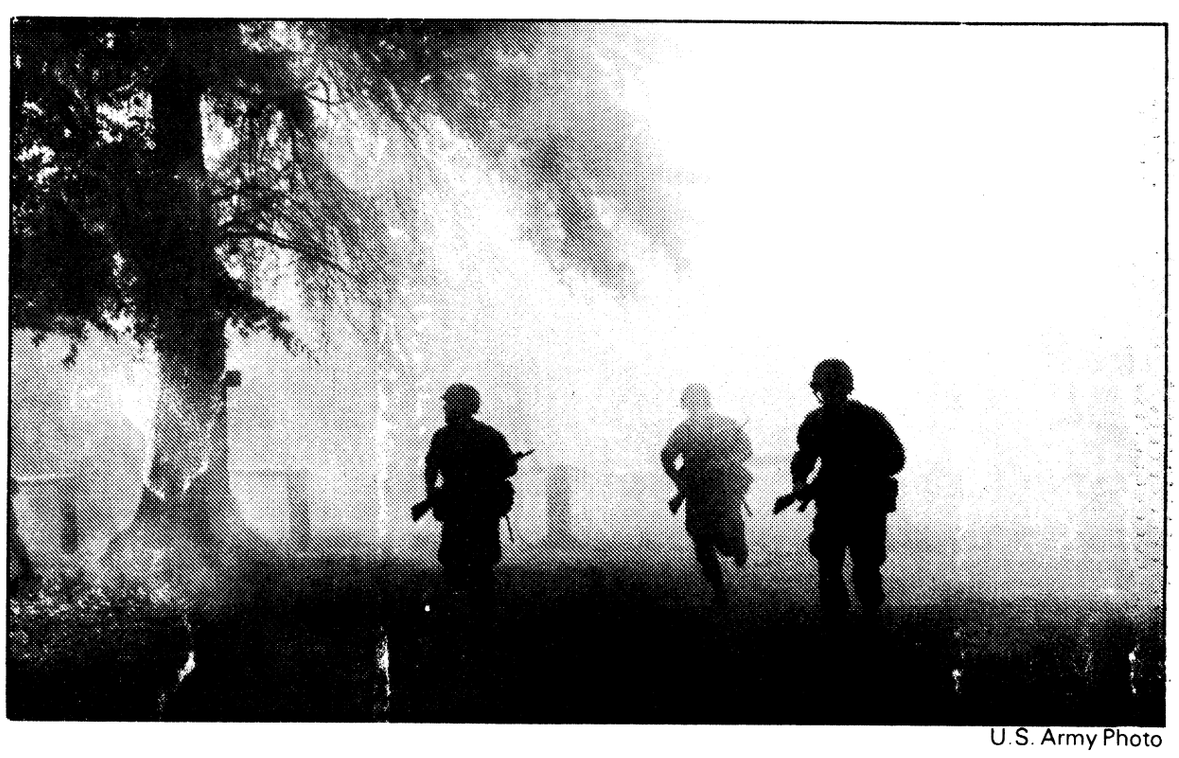
Family record screening required when sponsor is PCSing overseas

Martin Army Community Hospital

Soldiers PCSing to overseas commands, whether they plan to take family members or not, are required to have the medical records of all family members screened by the EFMP coordinator at Martin Army Community Hospital.



The purpose of the screening is for identification of exceptional family members who must be enrolled in the EFMP when found to have medical conditions, educational disabilities or other support needs. This includes children requiring speech/language therapy, special education requirements or medically related problems; as well as adults with medically related problems or other support needs.

The EFMP is a mandatory, Department of the Army, program (AR 600-75), which became effective Aug. 1, 1986.

"What is the purpose?" is frequently asked. In addition to the above, if soldiers do not have their family members screened immediately after receiving notice of pending overseas assignments, they may discover later that family member travel has not been approved. If during the screening process, a medical condition or educational condition is found to exist, then a series of DA questionnaires must be completed prior to the completion of the screening. In some instances, these questionnaires must be coordinated with other facilities, which could result in additional delay in finalizing the family member screening process for overseas deployment.

A large number of soldiers and spouses are still unfamiliar and uninformed on the program and its requirements. If you are unsure whether a family member qualifies for enrollment in EFMP or if you are alerted for an overseas assignment, you can contact Helen Moore, EFMP coordinator, 544-4350, for further information and for scheduling required appointments. Walk-ins cannot be seen due to the large number of daily scheduled screenings/enrollments.

If Moore is unavailable when you telephone, you may leave your name and phone number, and she will return your call (usually the same day). Messages should be as clear as possible to allow prompt reply. Appointments are usually scheduled within a three-day time frame and, in most instances, screenings are completed the same day. An exception to this is when enrollment in EFMP is needed; Then completion of family member screening could be delayed. In any event, the entire process must be finalized within a 15-day time frame so MILPO can prepare the necessary packets for the gaining commanders.

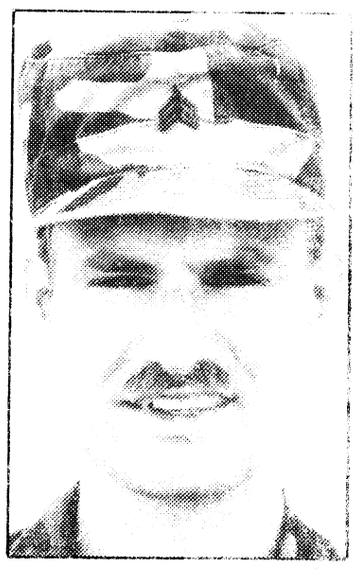
OPINION



VARIOUS VOICES: What is the best way we can honor our war dead?

SSgt. Todd Stevens, Headquarters and Headquarters Detachment, 34th Medical Battalion — "I think parades and other ceremonies are a nice way to honor our war dead. I think [illegible] stop them is fine [illegible] respect."

2nd Lt. Todd Dixon, Company A, 2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment — "I think the best way to honor our war dead is to observe the holiday. It's named to memorialize friends and fellow soldiers who have died for our country."

Litterers should be trashed

By Clyde Snively
[illegible]

Litterers have always been high on my "Shoot on sight" list.

I've spent the better part of my military career picking up after them. I know there are other things I could have been doing, such as training, or mission tasks, like covering stories for The Bayonet.

I think the OSUT soldiers would probably agree. I know they spend a better part of their mornings policing up around their barracks, which, mind, of the rest of us also do, but they also are out early in the morning on Saturdays and Sundays, risking life and limb as they police the portion of [illegible] that runs through post. I [illegible] these are great things they'd like to do especially on Sundays when they might even have the morning off to sleep in.

For my part, having to wade through six feet of cigarette butts just to get inside the hallowed halls of building 4 is more than I should have to endure.

Can't these swine use butt cans, or G.I. their cigarettes [illegible] the wives fish the litter out of the washer and dryer at home, rather than someone like me have to endure the sight and smell of that mess on a nice, fresh morning.

I bring all this up because we've had a cut back in "maid" service. We are back to emptying our own trash cans. I think most offices handle this quite nicely.

The problem is that now without our maids, or mothers to pickup after us, the place is beginning to turn into a pig sty.

Why do people walk over and around a piece of paper lying in the middle of the hall? Do they expect it to get up by itself and leap into the nearest trash receptacle? Or maybe they figure the guy or gal behind them is mom or the maid and that person will bend over and do it for them.

What really happens is that trash breeds. One piece becomes two, two pieces becomes a pile of trash.

I watched a class of advanced course students on break in Infantry Hall the other day. The trash container was filled with their debris from another break, so they just heaped trash on top of trash until it spilled onto the floors.

It's hard for me to believe that such responsible people as we have working and attending class on post can be so unresponsible when it comes to litter. But maybe I misjudge them. Maybe they aren't responsible after all.

I'm not really sure what the answer is. I heard a phrase from some nature lover the other day who talked about "unlittering." He said that's the act of taking out more litter than you bring in.

Could that ever happen around here?

Secretary of Defense writes Memorial Day letter

Every year on Memorial Day, we pause to remember those brave soldiers, sailors, airmen, and Marines who lost their lives in defense of our nation.

Their sacrifice reminds us of what the ultimate cost of freedom can be. While we can never repay the debt we owe to those who protected our freedom with [illegible], we can do [illegible] to see that their deaths were not in vain.

Since the birth of our Republic, America has held a special place in [illegible] nations. Our dedication to liberty and justice — and our willingness to do what we must to protect this nation and [illegible] — [illegible] hope and salvation for freedom-loving people everywhere. That is why you, the men and women of our country's armed forces, have such an important job. You serve as the bulwark against those who threaten our nation from without; your patriotism serves as a warning to them — and as an example to your fellow Americans.

This is why serving out your daily duties with skill and dedication is so important. It is your way of paying tribute on this Memorial Day to all who went before you in the service of this great nation. It is your way of ensuring that future generations will continue to enjoy the freedoms we hold so dear.

My thoughts are with you on this day of remembrance.

Military commissaries come under attack

The military commissary system [illegible] coming under attack from the White House, both the Office of Management and Budget. By way of the President's 1988 and 1989 budgets, proposals to [illegible] commercial grocery store operators run the commissaries, the profits of the privatized [illegible] management of the stores.

The idea of "privatizing" military grocery stores is not new. Such a proposal was seemingly put to rest by Congress as recently as the Fiscal 1988 Defense Authorization Act. In its report accompanying that law, the House Armed Services Committee concluded: "[illegible] studies should be undertaken, [illegible] extensive hearings and substantial contracting out experience proved that industry could not operate the commissary system and provide the subsidy savings offered by the existing system. Unfortunately, the Senate failed to rule out the first proposal in its version of the 1988 Authorization, thus the idea carried over to the present budget.

In addition, the President's Commission on Privatization, after a cursory one-day hearing into the matter, concluded that private sector operations can offer greater efficiencies as a result of competitive stimulus." That group's wishy-washy recommendation states: "Private sector businesses should participate in managing and operating military commissaries in the United States." What that means to soldiers and their families is that commercial intersts could take over operation of those large volume stores located near some of the major metropolitan areas, while commissaries at more remote locations will be left to fend for themselves.

Because military patrons realize a 25 percent savings over commercial costs of food and household items, the commissaries, in 1987, produced a "compensation effect" of more than $1.8 billion. Should military families be denied this indirect compensation, the taxpayers would need to come up with nearly $2 billion in additional pay and benefits to keep standards of living comparable.

Considering the fact that service members view the commissary as one of the top three benefits of military life, the White House is obligated to ensure that the quality of service and the benefit to service families is not diminished. Otherwise, a lot of good people may take their talents elsewhere.

Sgt. Maj. bids Army life goodbye

[illegible] people. You may never be liked, but isn't respect one of the deepest of loves.

Remember [illegible]. Your leaders can not satisfy all of you or all of your wants and needs. If they tried they would be a ravin, lunatic mob very short order, and soon it would have to be You who would have to try and do his job. But it would take every [illegible] effort by you and your comrades to make them the happiest bosses alive. Meet most of your needs and a lot of your wants could be accomplished. You give those things you expect from him. Be among bosses hard [illegible] and courageous and you both will be the winners. Walk the extra mile, give that extra 10 percent and you'll reap your reward. Some day you'll fill his shoes.

Remember [illegible] your history — the Huns, the Ming Dynasty, the Babylonians and the Romans, they had great societies and were very powerful, but they all made one fatal mistake, they forgot the standards and principles that made them great. As a result, these empires fell. All through history, you can find people and nations that have come to the top, only to fall, and the same mistake is at the root of it all. Our nation was build on "We the People," not "I the Individual." So each morning take "We and Us" to work with you and leave "Me, Myself and I" at home. We have no need of individualists, but we crave individuals who are team players. In the final analysis it will be the teams that will survive and make history, while the individualist will perish, become a part of history.

I have stood the roll calls, the stand-tos and the vigilances and in my mind and heart have done the job to the best of my abilities. But now, the time has come for me to pass these duties on to others. It is with a sad and heavy heart that I now do so. My comrades, I salute you and ask only that you walk proud and tall, carry the guidon and standards, hold them high for all to see and don't let them fall. Remember that God and I love you, and I will miss your fellowship. So long comrades, until on some future day our paths happen to cross again.

Soldiers must continue quest for freedom

This Monday, we pay tribute to the men and women who made the ultimate sacrifice in defense of our Constitution.

They are heroes. Everyone of them.

They are the men and women who fought in our nation's wars. They are soldiers, sailors, airmen, marines and their graves are found where Americans have answered the call for freedom.

We know nothing of the individual thoughts and feelings at the hour of their deaths, but we do know they were patriotic, dedicated and courageous. They loved America and believed in the ideals for which this country stands.

These men and women paid the highest price for freedom. Monday, we honor them for it.

But is that enough? Is it enough to merely fly the flag, visit a cemetery, place a wreath?

I think not.

The blessings of liberty require never-ending vigilance. It is up to those of us who serve today and those who would follow to maintain this watchfulness.

Each generation plays an active, vital role in maintaining our freedom. We know that had even a single generation before us been lax or indifferent, we would have risked the loss of that precious freedom.

Now it's our turn. Let us not let those who've gone before us down. Let us not let our fellow Americans down.

Let us accept our responsibility for securing the blessings of liberty.

Red Cross volunteers receive praise

Shawn Bryson

Sally Jean Leuer, honorary chairperson of the Fort Benning Red Cross, and wife of Maj. Gen. Kenneth C. Leuer, Fort Benning commander, presents a 19 year tab to Angeline Cole for her dedicated service with the Red Cross.

By Shawn Bryson
Bayonet staff writer

Some special people were honored at the American Red Cross' Annual Awards and Recognition Ceremony recently.

Col. James I. Daily, Fort Benning Chief of Staff, and Sally Jean Leuer, honorary chairperson of the Fort Benning Red Cross Volunteer Board and wife of Fort Benning's commanding general, Maj. Gen. Kenneth C. Leuer, were on hand at the Youth Activities Center recently to assist in awarding the dedicated volunteers.

A variety of presentations were made at the ceremony including 40-hour volunteer pins, yearly volunteer pins, certificates and letters of appreciation for hours volunteered and Gold Star Mother certificates.

One of the yearly tabs went Pauline Veaudry who has been a Red Cross volunteer for 26 years. Mary Morgan, another volunteer, was honored for her 24 years of work with the Red Cross and Johnnie Lewis received a tab for 21 years of volunteer service.

Although the more than 150 volunteers at Fort Benning make up only a fraction of the Red Cross' 1.4 million volunteer force, their services to the community are frank, fun and invaluable.

In the past year, the volunteers lent a total 17,000 hours to helping people in need.

The work of the volunteers includes everything from clerical work to case work to talking with patients at Martin Army Community Hospital. The volunteers also assist the staffs at the dental and veterinary clinics here, as well as teach Cardiopulmonary Resuscitation and give first aid classes.

Blood pressure screening and providing emergency leave funds to soldiers are among many of the other services of the Red Cross volunteers.

Seventy-five youths got into the volunteer act last summer as they gave up 7,000 hours of their free time to help people in need.

According to Carol Fehlings, publicity coordinator for the Fort Benning Red Cross, the organization welcomes anyone wanting to volunteer time to helping Fort Benning people. There are currently board positions available as well as many other services that people might enjoy doing.

For information about the Red Cross and everything it does, call the main office at 545-5194 or 545-5117.

Letter results in new Code of Conduct

by Rose Williams
American Forces Information Service

After receiving her initial training in 1985, Stephanie Ann Augustine wrote to then Secretary of Defense Caspar W. Weinberger suggesting that the Code of Conduct be changed to eliminate any reference to gender. The code began with "I am an American fighting man . . ."

On March 28, 1988, President Ronald Reagan signed an executive order eliminating any reference to gender.

"Early in her Naval training, Augustine was asked to sign the Code of Conduct, but she didn't like the reference to 'fighting man,'" said a spokesman for the Department of Defense Legislative and Legal Policy Office. That's when she wrote the letter to Weinberger.

After going through Navy channels, the letter reached the assistant secretary of defense for force management and personnel, where the Legislative and Legal Policy Office began working on ways to make the code gender-free.

"Our principle concern in drafting the language change was to ensure that the substantive meaning of the code remained the same and that it retained its literary quality and emotional impact. We were very careful not to use bureaucratic language," said the spokesman.

"Since its inception in 1955, the Code of Conduct has always applied to both male and female service members," he said. "We simply removed an ambiguity.

"Late last year, the proposal was approved by Deputy Secretary of Defense William H. Taft IV," said the spokesman. "It went to the White House early this year, and President Reagan signed it on March 28, on DoD's recommendation."

When the original Code of Conduct was written after the Korean War in 1955, there were 35,191 women on active duty in the armed forces. Today, 221,522 women serve in the Army, Navy, Air Force and Marine Corps — 10.3 percent of the total force.

President Reagan also amended Section I of the original executive order to read: "All members of the Armed Forces of the United States are expected to measure up to the standards embodied in this Code of Conduct while in combat or in captivity. To ensure achivement of these standards, members of th armed forces liable to capture shall be provided with special training and instruction designed to better equip them to counter and withstand all enemy efforts against them, and shall be fully instructed as to the behavior and obligations expected of them during combat or captivity."

Code of Conduct
1988
I

I am an American, fighting in the forces which guard my country and our way of life. I am prepared to give my life in their defense.

II

I will never surrender of my own free will. If in command, I will never surrender the members of my command while they still have the means to resist.

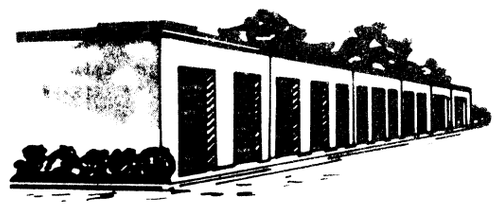
III

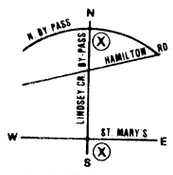
If I am captured, I will continue to resist by all means available. I will make every effort to escape and aid others to escape. I will accept neither parole nor special favors from the enemy.

IV

If I become a prisoner of war, I will keep faith with my fellow prisoners. I will give no information or take part in any action which might be harmful to my comrades. If I am senior, I will take command. If not, I will obey the lawful orders of those appointed over me and will back them up in every way.

V





When questioned, should I become a prisoner of war, I am required to give name, rank, service number, and date of birth. I will evade answering further questions to the utmost of my ability. I will make no oral or written statements disloyal to my country and its allies or harmful to their cause.

VI

I will never forget that I am an American, fighting for freedom, responsible for my actions, and dedicated to the principles which made my country free. I will trust in my God and in the United States of America.

ADA platoon prepares for upcoming live-fire

By Kevin J. Howerton
197th Infantry Brigade correspondent

The Air Defense Artillery platoon from Headquarters Company, 197th Infantry Brigade has been honing their skills for the past few weeks in preparation for the annual Redeye missle live-fire.

Sixteen fire teams are competing for a chance to fire one of the four live Redeye missles in the June range.

"Training has been very intense, the new people have been learning a lot of new tricks," said SPC David J. Sargent, a team chief with the ADA platoon. "The NCOs and TCs have been teaching new techniques in aircraft identification and map reading."

"I've doubled my ADA knowledge since I've been in this unit," said PFC Larry E. Yerkes, a gunner in the platoon. "I'm confident I will be firing this year."

The fire teams are being tested on their knowledge of ADA hardware, aircraft recognition and weapons checks. Part of the hardware the teams use is the Identification Friend or Foe system.

The IFF system uses coded radio signals to interrogate aircraft. American airplanes return radio signals that identify them as positive friendly, NATO aircraft as friendly and all others as unknown.

"The IFF is a great assistant to the fire teams," said 2nd Lt. Thomas A. Thornton, ADA platoon leader. "But you always have to positively identify the aircraft visually before you can fire."

The Redeye live-fire will be held June 18 at Fergusen Range. The events will begin at noon, and everything is open to the public. Four Redeye missles will be fired, as well as 10 Ballistic Aerial Target Simulators. The extra BATS will be engaged with various small arms to demonstrate techniques that can be used by individual soldiers for air defense.

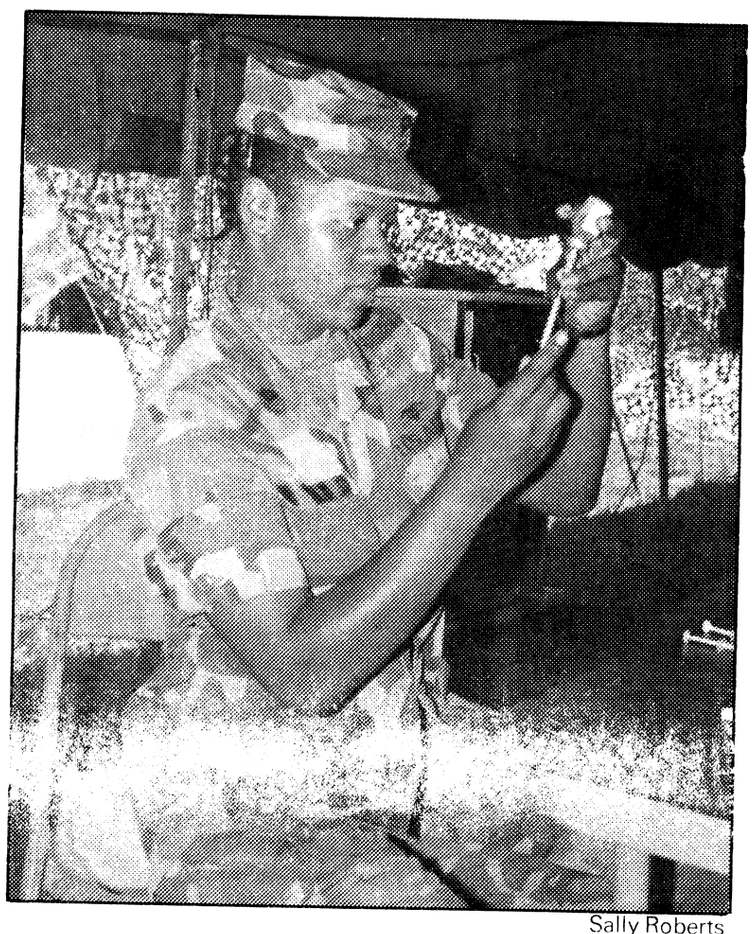
Bn commander's father reviews graduating class

By Marsha Santiago
ITC correspondent

Recently, Pomeroy Field, Sand Hill was the site of a two company, One-Station-Unit-Training (OSUT) graduation. OSUT graduations are frequent events for the United States Army Infantry Training Center (USAITC); however, it is very infrequent that the reviewing officer for the graduation is the father of the battalion commander of the graduating companies.

Maj. Gen. (Ret.) Richard G. Ciccolella was the reviewing officer and guest speaker at the graduation ceremony for Companies A and [illegible] 1st Battalion, 50th Infantry [illegible] Training Brigade. His son, Lt. Col. Robert E. Ciccolella is the 1st Bn., 50th Inf. commander and served as Commander of Troops for the ceremony.



A native of Brooklyn, N.Y., The retired Ciccolella began his military career in 1940 when he was commissioned a second lieutenant of Infantry. In August 1940, he attended Fort Benning's first Infantry Officer Basic Course. During World War II, he served as a Rifle Company commander in the 16th Infantry, 1st Infantry Division. His unit fought through the North African Campaign and captured Field Marshal Von Rundstedt, Germany's top military commander. Ciccolella won two battlefield promotions, rising quickly to the rank of lieutenant colonel. At the end of World War II, he was the regimental commander of the 141st Regiment, 36th Infantry Division.

Following World War II, he served in a variety of command and staff assignments. He commanded two regiments in Germany, the 13th Infantry Regiment and the 2nd Armored Cavalry Regiment. He has the distinction of being the only Infantry Officer ever to command the 2nd Armored Cavalry Regiment. His staff assignments included Chief of Psychological Warfare for US Army Europe; Special Assistant to Chief of Staff, U.S. NATO Command, Turkey; Deputy Chief of Staff for Operations and Plans, V Corps; and Chief of Plans, Operations, and Intelligence, U.S. Forces, Italy.

From 1962 to 1963, he served as the Chief of Training, U.S. Continental Army Command (now TRADOC). Promoted to brigadier general in 1963, he served as the assistant division commander of the 101st Airborne Division [illegible] and [illegible] Commander, MacDill Air Force Base, Tampa, Fla.

In 1966, he was promoted to major general and became the youngest major general on active duty. He was assigned as the senior member of the United

Health fair provides wealth of information

By Sally Roberts
197th Infantry Brigade correspondent

197th Infantry Brigade soldiers were treated to a wealth of valuable health information when Co. B, 197th Spt. Bn. sponsored a Health Fair recently on Kelley Hill.

The Co. B Medics ran the health fair in a field hospital set up under a canopy of tents and camouflage nets.

First, soldiers were medically screened for immunizations, HIV testing and outdated physical examinations. Then they attended one of several classes offered, such as Alcohol and Drug Use, [illegible] Sexually Transmitted Diseases, Risk Factor Analysis, Proper Nutrition and Weight Control and Family Planning. These seminars were conducted by personnel from several Fort Benning health agencies and clinics.

The medics also set up several static displays, demonstrating their field capabilities in such areas as radiology (x-rays) and dental services.

"The primary objectives of the health fair were medical POR qualification, health education and to assess the individual soldiers' present health," said 1st Sgt. Michael W. Munn, Co. B first sergeant.

"We are trying to work a little closer with the medical platoons in each battalion, said 1st Lt. Frederick D. Moye, a Co. B medical officer. "There is always new health information that we need to communicate to the soldiers, and this is [illegible] our goals here."

[illegible] to assist commanders to assess the health of their units.

"We are trying to get on line with the commander's Health Awareness Program," Moye added. This Health Fair will help commanders get involved with the health of their units."

CATD personnel conduct staff ride at Chickamauga

By Paul Roberts
CATD correspondent

Several personnel from Fort Benning participated in a staff ride at the Chickamauga National Battlefield that was conducted by the Combined Arms and Tactics Department of the United States Army Infantry School recently.

A staff ride is an exercise that enables officers and noncommissioned officers to gain valuable combat leadership experience by visiting an actual battlefield from a previous war. It is a unique exercise that uses the Army's rich history to give leaders an extra tool to train their soldiers with. A staff ride is also an excellent teaching method for professional development, tactical instruction, warfighting expertise and unit cohesion.

The Chickamauga battlefield is located in Tennessee and was the site of one of the bloodiest and largest battles of the Civil War. The battlefield was chosen for the staff ride because it provides challenging combat situations for debate and stimulating thought for Army leaders.

The staff ride took place April 27-29 and was planned, organized and conducted by the Military History Division of the CATD.

The three distinct phases that make up a staff ride are the Preliminary Study Phase, Field Study Phase and Integration Phase.

The Preliminary Study Phase was conducted before the soldiers left Fort Benning and consisted of the briefing of group members, the assigning of battlefield stand locations and the development of group briefings.

Once in Chickamauga, MHD initiated the Field Study Phase of the exercise by providing an overall strategic setting.

During the two-day staff ride, each of the six groups of soldiers were required to present briefings about their respective battlefield stands. Issues of importance during the exercise for each group were commander's intent, clear concise orders, security, reconnaissance, the ability to see the battlefield, leadership and "command and control."

The Integration Phase of the staff ride was used to relate the lessons learned to current doctrinal issues of battle. The phase was significant because it allowed the soldiers to openly express their ideas about the battle.

His awards and decorations include the Combat Infantryman's Badge, two Distinguished Service Medals, three Silver Stars, two Legions of Merit three Purple Hearts and four Bronze Stars.

Lt. Col. Ciccolella has served as battalion commander since November 1985. Prior to this assignment, he served in the 82nd Airborne Division, 101st Airborne Division, 8th Infantry Division (Mechanized) and the 4th Infantry Division (Mechanized).

A large group of family and friends were present for the ceremony. As they watched, the elder Ciccolella presented the awards for excellence to the graduating soldiers. Lt. Col. Sam Matthews, commander, 1st Battalion, 19th Infantry, was standing in for the brigade commander.

While the band played "American Soldier," Lt. Col. Ciccolella led the companies during the "pass in review." As they marched from the field, 362 new soldiers had joined the ranks of qualified infantrymen.

Soldiers get acting lessons while making safety film

By Sally Roberts
197th Infantry Brigade correspondent

Several 197th Infantry Brigade soldiers got a quick acting lesson recently when they assisted officials from the U.S. Army Safety Center in filming a new safety film that will become part of a soldier's training when he enters the Army.

According to Charles Brambley, chief of Traffic Safety, U.S. Army Safety Center, Fort Rucker, Ala., the film will be a part of the Army Driver Improvement Plan and will be the introduction to a four-hour mandatory training segment that all soldiers will be required to complete when they enter the Army.

Sally Roberts

A film crew from the U.S. Army Safety Center, Fort Rucker, Ala., readies 197th Inf. Bde. Chap. (Capt.) James Bixler for another take.

"The intent of the program is reducing the number of POV accident fatalities that involve drinking and driving, unsurvivable speed and wreckless driving, and to increase seat belt usage," Brambley said.

The 197th's part in the film was Chap. (Capt.) James Bixler, speaking to a group of soldiers regarding their responsibilities when driving a vehicle.

"We were trying to talk about the moral aspects of safety," Bixler said. "We want soldiers to realize that as we make choices, we make moral choices, even when we're driving. We must think about the impact of our actions."

"We anticipate that six million people will see this film during the next five years," Brambley said. "We expect it to be fielded during the first quarter of fiscal year 1989."

neighboring Columbus community showed up.

"This year's turn-out is up 20 percent from last year's," said CW0 4 Harry F. Proctor, property book officer, 29th Inf. Regt.

The festivities kicked off at 8 a.m. with a push-up contest and concluded with an awards presentation hosted by Col. John D. Fuller, commander of the Regiment, at 2 p.m.

Various events were open to soldiers and family members of the regiment (golf, military stakes, egg toss and chariot race to name a few).

Bradley Infantry Fighting Vehicles were on hand to give rides around the regimental area. Also, the kids were offered a chance to ride on a fire truck and dress in the outfits used by the Harmony Church Fire Department.

Several static displays were set up to acquaint family members and other soldiers with some of the equipment used on a daily basis by the soldiers of the regiment. These displays included the improved TOW vehicle, small arms, mortars and the Dragon.

The children were also given a chance to participate in various activities. Many of the children were excited to join in the events such as, putt-putt golf, egg-toss and sack races.

Many teams did well in the team events competition, but the best overall team and winner of the Commander's Trophy went to Co. A, 2nd Bn., 29th Inf. Regt.

Family Day takes unusual twist; becomes site for wedding ceremony

54th Infantry Brigade correspondent

Family day at Company A, 2nd Battalion, 54th Infantry at the 1st Infantry Training Brigade had an unusual twist recently. Oneof its soldiers tied the knot in the ninth week of training.

Pvt. William S. Douglas and Julie Lynn Slaughter of Marrietta, Ga., were married at Chapel 4 on Sand Hill.

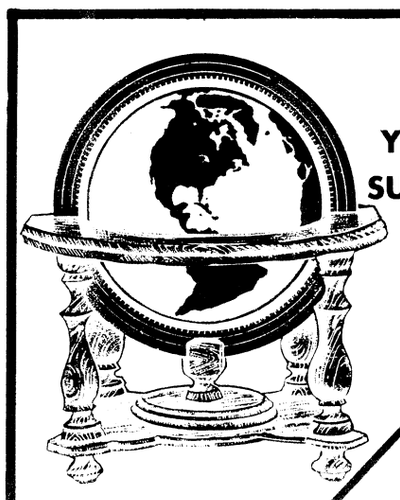
"It was a good chance to have all my friends, family and drill sergeants there," he said.

"I think it's good that soldiers are married in the church and seek God's blessings," said Chap. (Capt.) Robert Washington. "It is important to make a covenant with God."

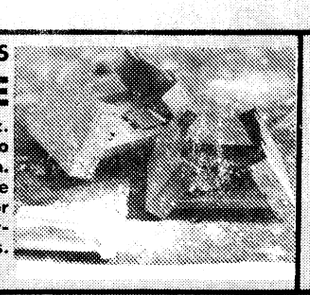
Parents, grandparents, wives and fiancees traveled in from as far as Washington and Maine.

The day began with static displays of small arms, machine guns and mortars. Later,soldiers took on the bayonet assault course.

Explosions, smoke and machine gun fire filled the air as infantrymen attacked the parry-thrust targets.



Cameras and video cameras came into motion as the soldiers raced through hurdles and low crawled through a double-apron, barbed wire fence.



Afterwards, 1st Lt. Azchary Doser, showed family members video tapes of One Station Unit Training and the 101st Airborne Division (Air Assault).

Officer promotions to continue at a steady pace officials say

Army News Service

Officer promotions in most grades will continue at a steady pace for the remainder of this fiscal year despite budgetary restrictions, Army personnel officials say.

The number of promotions each month varies according to grade and competitive category.

Monthly promotion figures are determined by the number of "vacancies" or openings created in a category as officers separate, retire or get promoted to a higher grade, and by the budget, said Lt. Col. Tom Wilson of the officer division of the Army's deputy chief of staff for personnel.

"We are severely constrained by available dollars. For that reason alone, promotions to colonel will be lower in the last quarter of this fiscal year than we would like, running about 12-14 per month in July, August and September. We plan to increase the number of monthly promotions, particularly in the field grades as we begin the next fiscal year. However, the number will depend on what the budget says and how many vacancies open up in each grade. Our objective is to exhaust a promotion list within 12 months after we begin promoting from it, setting the monthly number to meet specific time-in-service goals. The next fiscal year will see us moving closer on this objective."

Details of the number and competitive categories of planned Army promotions for commissioned officers effective June 1 follow:

Master WO 4 gets nod

Army News Service

A new rank designation of master warrant four got a nod recently from the Army's top military leader as an interim measure pending Congress' approval of a new grade of rank, chief warrant five, for all services who want it.

Army Chief of Staff Gen. Carl E. Vuono's approval stems from the Army's need to retain highly skilled senior warrant officers.

Currently, 65 percent of those warrant officers who remain for 20 total years of service leave by 22 years of service.

The legislative process to approve the new CWO 5 can take from nine months to a year or more, said Lt. Col. Randall M. Beckman, chief of the total warrant officer system implementation branch at the Total Army Personnel Agency in Alexandria, Va. It depends, he said, upon the number of changes made by departmental officials before the draft legislation goes to congressional committee. At best, officials anticipate committee action won't begin before January 1989.

Consequently, the names of more than 150 chief warrants four appear on a list, scheduled to be released June 7, of those who will attend training and, if successful, be designated master warrant four. Designees will fill positions already coded as master warrant.

All who made the designation-board approved list have almost 20 years warrant experience and each has at least five years in grade as a chief warrant four, Beckman explained.

"Before approval of the master warrant four designation, little incentive existed for retirement-eligible chief warrants four to attend master warrant training and then serve in the most challenging job in their military occupational specialty without some form of recognition."

This Army-unique rank intends to provide an extended career incentive, Beckman emphasized. "We can do that with an Army-created rank insignia called master warrant four. Some of these master warrants will be supervising other CWO 4's who may not be eligible or who may not have been selected to be master warrants. So, we need a visible recognition of that distinction between these master warrants four and regular chief warrants four."

Noting that a 1984 ad hoc study group found that warrant officers retire generally within 10 years after their WO appointments, Beckman said this means that they leave the Army shortly after they become retirement-eligible. They are leaving at the peak of their expertise and potential.

Although some of the 150 or so chief warrants four selected for designation as master warrants four have already made some retirement plans they may pursue, Beckman said the Army hopes that the majority of them will accept what it has to offer. Referring to their training as "challenging" and their jobs as offering the chance to make a maximum contribution to the Army, he emphasized that all of them have more than 20 years' soldiering experience.

"We hope they avail themselves of the chance to give back a little bit of that experience in the form of advice and counsel to their new commanders and subordinates on how the Army can better itself in their particular area of expertise before they leave."

By design, the master warrant four designation aims to provide incentives for senior warrants to remain in the Army.

Although there will be no difference in pay, master warrants four will outrank chief warrants four. "We can't recognize these newly designated officers with a pay increase short of congressional legislation authorizing it," Beckman explained.

For those chief warrants four who made the list and who elect to forsake retirement for the time being, their designation to master warrant status won't come automatically. They must attend and complete a special commoncore training course at Fort Rucker, Ala.

The eight weeks of schooling include a 100-hour-plus, do-ahead correspondence package that must be completed before they begin their resident phase of the training. However, some candidates will most likely report a week or two early to the first class scheduled for late September so they may complete their do-ahead packages, Beckman said. Course curriculum covers such diverse subjects as force integration, mobilization planning and materiel life-cycle management "how the Army runs type material, Beckman said.

Before chief warrants four become master warrants four, they must receive course-completion certification from their proponent branch chiefs. Currently, there is no active-duty service obligation for accepting master warrant designation.

The rank of master warrant four represents an interim one only for those warrants promoted to chief warrants five. After approval of the rank of chief warrant five, those officers not selected for promotion to that rank may keep the master warrant four designation until promotion, separation or retirement.

Promotion to the rank of chief warrant five, when and if congress approves the new rank, will not occur automatically.

Master or chief warrants four must go before a promotion board, just as for any other promotion phase of a soldier's career, Beckman said.

CWO 4 Thomas E. Simonian, the TWOS legislative officer at TAPA, said that it will cost less than $1,000 to produce the new insignia for the master warrant four rank. That figure represents the cost for a design done by the Institute of Heraldry in Alexandria, Va. The insignia will consist of a silver bar with four silver squares outlined in black, he said.

"Most of the cost is borne by the contractor who produces and sells the insignia," Beckman echoed.

Other TWOS legislative proposals deal with selective retirement; a single promotion system for the active component, a provision for allowing those warrant officers placed in the "two-time non-select category" six months instead of 60 days to make a transition; and permitting warrant officers to sit on promotion boards.

"For those familiar with the Defense Officer Personnel Management Act, acronymed DOPMA, this prospect represents the DOPMA for warrant officers," Beckman explained. "It gives us the strength-management tools the Army requires to better manage its force."

That force currently consists of more than 33,000 warrant officers, representing some 15,000 in the active component and 18,000 in the reserve components.

334 NCOs selected for CSM

Army News Service

The Army has selected 334 NCOs for appointment to command sergeant major.

The 1988 list was released recently.

This year's selection board recommended only three more than last year for command sergeant major, but 32 less than in 1986.

The selection board, convened to recommend soldiers for promotion to sergeant major as well, considered 5,373 sergeants major and master sergeants.

According to a personnel NCO in the Office of the Deputy Chief of Staff for Personnel, an NCO selected for appointment to command sergeant major must be a graduate of the Sergeants Major Academy and be cleared by a cardiovascular screen before appointment.

"We want all the command sergeants major to be aware of their health before they go out and try to out-do their young troops," he said.

The requirement to be a graduate of the Sergeants Major Academy was made two years ago. The personnel NCO said that the list includes 34 NCOs who were automatically selected to attend the Academy's residence course.

ASK THE JUDGE

By Dennis E. Brower
Staff Judge Advocate

Q: I have recently been approached by a salesman who wants me to join a "Buyers Club." He tells me that all my purchase prices will be lower because of the joint buying power. Is this a good deal?

A: The salesman's claims are appealing. However, almost all buying clubs do not save you any money. In fact, some buying clubs will cost you more than careful shopping in your local stores. Buying clubs try to entice you by stating that members can buy goods at wholesale prices or at a certain percent reduction from the manufacturers' suggested list prices. They usually require a member to pay an initiation fee and then a yearly service fee for each year the member remains in the club. The initiation fee can run as high as $1,000 and the service fee may be $20 to $100 each year. If you are asked to pay a large initiation fee and yearly service charges, you will have to make a large number of purchases to ever get back your expenses. An example of this would be if you paid $500 to join a club and saved 25 percent on all purchases, you would have to spend $2,000 before you would break even. This would be hard to do.

If you are interested in a buying club, do not sign with any company that will not give you a price list or catalog. Some clubs will tell you that the offer is only for today, or the discounted membership is only for one day. Be careful of these claims. A good test is to ask if you can take the contract to your local legal assistance office for their review. If they won't allow it, for any reason, then you should not sign the contract.

Many of these clubs have taken the initiation fee and then gone out of business. Your money is then gone and usually with no way to ever get it back.

Remember, no matter what these clubs may tell you, they are in this to make money. They are not in the business just to help you out. Be very careful and ask a lot of questions. Any promises must be in writing.

If you have any questions, you should ask the Better Business Bureau or the Legal Assistance Office before you sign.

Crime Stoppers needs your help

Columbus Crime Stoppers

Columbus Crime Stoppers and the Columbus Police Department are looking for the lone black male who robbed the Majik Market on Farr Road and assaulted the manager.

On May 3, the Columbus Police Department responded to a robbery call at the Majik Market, 1100 Farr Road. On arrival, it was discovered that at approximately 10 a.m. an unknown black male entered the store and went to the coffee machine and poured himself a cup of hot coffee. The suspect stayed near the coffee machine until the last customer had left the store and then he approached the counter where the manager was taking a large amount of U.S. currency out of the register to put into the drop safe. At this time the suspect threw the hot coffee into the manager's face, temporarily blinding her and causing her to fall back away from the register.

The suspect then came around the counter and beat the manager in the face with his fists. Then, he took a large amount of U.S. currency out of the register and attempted to open the safe but could not. The suspect ran out of the store toward old Cusseta Road and possibly got into a red Mustang and drove away.

The suspect is described as: black, male, 20-25 years old, slim build, light skin complexion, crew cut style haircut, no facial hair, wearing a gray jogging suit.

Anyone having any information concerning this individual or having any information concerning this case should call Columbus Crime Stoppers at 571-5858. If your information leads to the arrest and indictment of this person, you could receive up to $1,000 in reward money.

Columbus Crime Stoppers also pays for information on other criminal activity, wanted fugitives and stolen property. The Crime Stoppers phone lines are open from 10 a.m. to 10 p.m Monday through Friday. Crime Stoppers serves the Columbus, Fort Benning, Phenix City and Russell County area.

Mercer offers summer courses

Mercer School of Engineering

Mercer University's School of Engineering will offer area engineers a chance to use their knowledge of statistics this summer.

Dr. John Hunt, adjunct professor in the Department of Industrial and Systems Engineering at Mercer, will teach Statistical Applications, ETM 634, at the school's satellite center located at Pratt & Whitney in Columbus. The six-week course will begin June 14 and conclude with final exams July 21. Class will meet Tuesdays and Thursdays from 5:30 to 8:30 p.m.

Statistical Applications, ETM 634, uses statistics to predict product reliability and assess quality assurance methods and experimental design and analysis. The course is required of students working toward a master's degree in either engineering management or technical management.

Mercer's engineering school offers the Master of Science in Engineering degree in engneering management and the Master of Science degree in technical management at its Columbus site. The engineering management degree program builds upon bachelor's degree preparation in the various engineering management disciplines, while the technical management degree program builds upon undergradate degrees in in physics, chemistry, quantitive business administration and related technicl fields. Both programs are aimed at preparing people to successfully address supervisory and managerial needs in a technical environment.

Tuition for summer quarter is $125 per credit hour, or $375 for a 3-credit-hour course. Some companies provide tuition assistance for their employees seeking advanced degrees. Check with your personnel director for more details. There's still time to apply for admisson to the engineering school summer quarter.

For further information on the summer schedule, or for admission inquiries, please call Mercer's School of Engineering at (912) 741-2430 or write to Mercer University School of Engineering, 1400 Coleman Ave., Macon, GA 31207.

Supplemental insurance helps pay CHAMPUS costs

Champus

Do you have a CHAMPUS supplemental insurance policy?

If not, maybe you should consider one. Such policies can provide a big assist at times when even CHAMPUS cost-sharing may leave sizeable sums for you to pay as your share of the total medical bill.

But, if you do buy a CHAMPUS supplemental policy — read the fine print. Be sure you know what you're getting. Find out if the policy will pay all — or only part — of what's left after CHAMPUS has paid its share of your civilian health care costs.

There are CHAMPUS supplements (insurance policies available from many military associations and other private firms) that do pay all of the remaining costs of your care after CHAMPUS has paid. Other CHAMPUS supplements don't.

With the new CHAMPUS "diagnosis-related group" (DRG) payment system in place in most stateside areas, overall costs (including your cost-share) for care covered by CHAMPUS should go down as CHAMPUS pays pre-set amounts for hospital inpatient services.

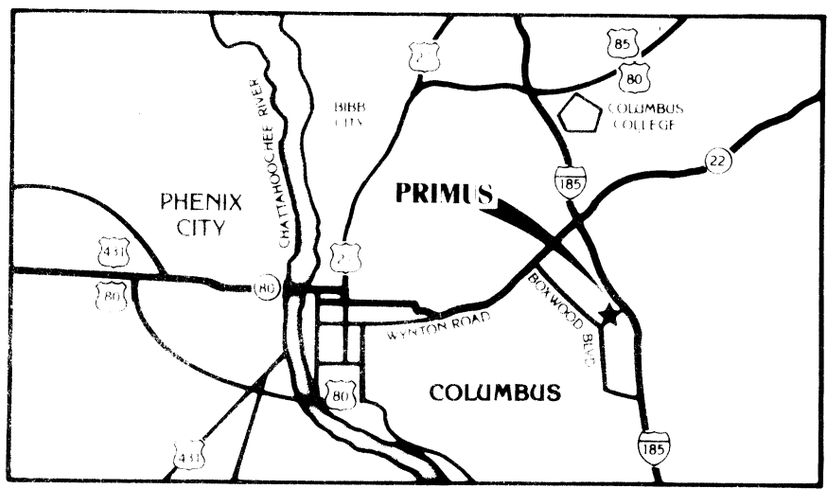
But some people who hold CHAMPUS supplemental policies have recently found that, even though their premiums haven't gone down, their policies don't seem to be paying as much as they used to before CHAMPUS switched to the new DRG payment system last October. Here's an example of the type of problem that some holders of supplemental policies have run into:

Let's say you're a military retiree, and you just spent 20 days in a civilian hospital. While in the hospital, you ran up a $10,000 bill for CHAMPUS - covered inpatient hospital services.

Under the old payment system, CHAMPUS used to pay its share of the costs as the hospital billed them. This means that, for all CHAMPUS-eligible persons except active-duty families, CHAMPUS would have paid 75 percent of the $10,000 hospital bill, or a total of $7,500. That would have left you, the patient, with a cost-share of $2,500 to pay. And, if you had a CHAMPUS supplemental policy, it would have picked up most or all of that amount for you.

But under the new DRG payment system, CHAMPUS would pay only its share of the amount specified by the DRG rules as reasonable, or "allowable" for the type of care you received. In this example, the DRG system's allowed amount for the care is $4,000, even though the hospital gave you care that they valued at $10,000.

The new DRG payment rules also say that your share of the cost can't be more than 25 percent of the billed charges, or a maximum of $175 per day, whichever is less (and, they can't exceed the DRG allowed amount). Since $175 per day multiplied by the 20 days you spent in the hospital is $3,500, and since 25 percent of the $10,000 that the hospital billed is $2,500, your cost-share can't be any more than $2,500 in this case.



But here's the rub with some CHAMPUS supplemental policies: They're worded so that they agree to pay under 25 percent of the allowable charges for the hospital costs in our example. Under the new DRG payment rules, the allowable charge is $4,000, so their 25 percent only comes to $1,000. That could leave you on the hook for the rest of the $2,500.

What it all means is that, if you decide to buy a CHAMPUS supplemental insurance policy from one of the many organizations that offer them, you should read the whole policy carefully. If you don't fully understand parts of the policy, ask questions. Make certain you know what the policy covers and how much of your medical bills it covers after CHAMPUS has paid its share.

Customers advised of potential lead in drinking water

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Fort Benning is required by law to advise all water customers about the potential health hazards associated with exposure to lead in the drinking water.

Although the quality of the drinking water leaving the Fort Benning water treatment plant/wells is in compliance with the national drinking water standard for lead, Fort Benning is still required to issue this notice. Please read carefully.

Lead is a toxic metal known to be harmful to human health if inhaled or ingested. Although it has been used in numerous consumer products, we must be concerned about our level of exposure to lead in our environment, including drinking water.

Potential sources of lead exposure to humans include: air, soil and dust (both inside and outside the home); food, which can be contaminated by lead in the air or in food containers; and water (from the corrosion of plumbing).

The United States Environmental Protection Agency sets drinking water standards and has determined that lead is a health concern at certain levels of exposure. There is currently a standard of 0.050 parts per million. Based on new health information, EPA is likely to lower this standard significantly.

Part of the purpose of this notice is to inform you of the potential adverse health effects of lead. This is being done even though your water may not be in violation of the current standard.

EPA and others are concerned about lead in drinking water. Too much lead in the human body can cause serious damage to the brain, kidneys, nervous system and red blood cells. The greatest risk, even with short-term exposure, is to young children and pregnant women.

Lead levels in your drinking water are likely to be highest:

- If your home or water system has lead pipes.
- If your home has copper pipes with lead solder.
- If your home is less than five years old
- If the water is soft or acidic.
- If water sits in the pipes for several hours.

Lead may get into your water after the later leaves the local treatment plant or well. Thus, the most likely source of lead contamination in your drinking water is the pipe or solder in your home's plumbing. The most common cause is corrosion, a reaction between the water and the lead pipes or solder. The longer water stands in the pipes, the greater the potential of lead dissolving into the water. Soft water, which lathers soap easily, tends to accelerate the corrosion process, resulting in increased levels of dissolved lead in the water. The practice of grounding electrical equipment, such as telephones, to water pipes also increases corrosion. Any electric current traveling through the ground wire will accelerate the corrosion of lead in the pipes. (CAUTION: do not remove wires from pipes unless a qualified electrician installs an adequate grounding system.)

Up through the early 1900s, it was common practice to use lead pipes for interior plumbing and service connections. Plumbing installed before 1930 is most likely to contain lead. Since then, copper pipes have replaced lead pipes in most residential plumbing; however, the use of lead solder to join copper pipes is widespread. It is regarded that this lead solder is the major cause of lead contamination of household water in U.S. homes today. Recently, it has been required by federal law to use lead-free solder and lead-free materials in new household plumbing and for plumbing repairs.

It has been determined that the newer the home, the greater the risk of lead contamination. Lead levels decrease as a building ages because, as the minerals in water deposit on the inside of the pipes, direct contact of water with the lead solder is prevented.

Lead dissolved in water cannot be seen, tasted or smelled. Having your water tested by a competent laboratory is the only sure way of telling whether there are harmful quantities of lead in your drinking water. Be suspicious particularly if your home plumbing has lead material (lead is a dull-gray metal that is soft enough to be easily scratched with a house key) and your non-plastic plumbing is less than five years old. Testing is especially important to apartment dwellers where flushing may not be effective in high-rise buildings that have lead soldered central piping. Contact your local water supplier for assistance in locating a laboratory qualified to analyze drinking water samples for lead contamination.

If you determine or suspect that your household water contains high levels or dissolved lead, there are ways to minimize your exposure to lead:

- Avoid consuming water that has been in contact with your home's plumbing for several hours, such as overnight or during your work day. Before using water for drinking or cooking, "flush" the cold water faucet by allowing the water to run until you can feel that the water has become as cold as it will get. If there has recently been major water use in the household, such as showering or bathing, flushing toilets or ding laundry with cold water, flushing the pipes should take 5 to 30 seconds; if not, flushing the pipes could take as long as a minute.
- Avoid cooking with, or consuming, water from the hot-water faucet. Hot water dissolves more lead more quickly than cold water. Avoid water taken from the hot-water faucet for making baby formula. If you need hot water for cooking or for any consumption, draw water only from the flushed cold water tap and heat it.
- Ensure that only lead-free solder and lead-free materials are used in new household plumbing and plumbing repairs.

For additional information concerning reducing your exposure to lead, contact your water supplier. At the present time, the water supplied to the public has no known lead content in excess of the national drinking water standard. It is not necessary that additional steps be taken to achieve compliance with the regulations.

AIDS training scheduled

Army News Service

A number of medical and civilian-personnel administrators at Army installation level are being scheduled for AIDS in the workplace training so that they can provide the same training to local managers, supervisors and other employees among the Army's civilian workforce.

In a recent message to the Army's civilian-personnel administration community, Army personnel officials noted that "the myths, fear and misinformation concerning acquired immune deficiency syndrome have caused disruptions in schools, communities and worksites throughout the United States. In order to avoid disruptions in Army programs, an Army wide AIDS in the workplace training education program has been developed."

William E. Fanelli in the Army's Office of the Director of Civilian Personnel explained that the program aims to provide managers and supervisors with current, correct information about the disease "so that they can reduce employee anxieties, dispel prevailing myths and make rational workplace decisions consistent with current knowledge and Army policy."

The need for such training was agreed on last year by a special committee convened by the deputy chief of staff for personnel and the Army's surgeon general, Fanelli said. "They acknowledged that the training would help protect the rights of AIDS-exposed persons, protect Army management interests and keep employees aware of, and prepared for, the dangers of the disease's onset and transmission."

He added that the training, scheduled to begin in several weeks, will consist of 10 "train the trainer" sessions in the continental United States.

"Depending on availability of travel funds, we hope to conduct three sessions in U.S. Army, Europe."

Each activity is being asked to select two persons to receive the training: one employee from the local medical treatment facility and one employee from the local civilian personnel office.

They are to proceed to five locations for the two-day-long sessions:

Washington, Atlanta, Dallas, St. Louis and San Francisco

Plans call for each CONUS site to conduct two sessions, while the USAREUR site, if approved, will conduct three. Each class size is expected to number no more than 30 attendees.

Course content, Fanelli said, will consist of a specially developed package called "AIDS Education in the Workplace", which includes a videotape, a manager's guide and a flyer subtitled "A Guide for Employees."

"The flyers will be distributed to all Army civilians by the Baltimore AG publications center sometime this summer," Fanelli said.

"By getting our people trained before problems occur, we'll be able to minimize the disease's impact on the workplace. From this training that's to be conducted under technical guidance from Army medical personnel, we hope to clarify the various legal, medical, personnel-management and societal aspects of the AIDS issue".

"Part of the training will consider the proper attitudinal stance of employees in their dealings with AIDS-infected coworkers. It will stress the positive, humanitarian side of coping with the issue, and deal realistically with the negative side," Fanelli concluded.

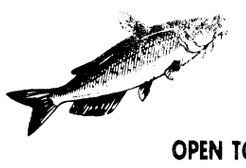
AUSA CORNER

By Jim Gallagher
Chapter president

Last week, I overviewed the Landpower Education Fund (LEF) and this week, the AUSA Corner will excerpt parts of the summary of the latest LEF product, an AUSA Fact Sheet, entitled "The Fourth Year of Decline," an analysis of the fiscal year 1989 Army budget.

"The Army budget outlook is far more complex than just a snapshot of fiscal year 1989.

First, we have the legacy of decreasing budgets (in real terms) since fiscal year 1985, placing a damper on the vigorous Army modernization program, which had developed momentum during the first half of the decade.



Then we look at what is happening in fiscal year 1988, the budget on which the Army is currently operating. This is an extremely difficult year in terms of operating funds. Not only did Congress reduce the operation and maintenance (O&M) appropriation, but the situation was made worse by unplanned costs resulting from such things as currency exchange rates, medical cost overruns and unfunded pay raises.

The federal deficit remains an overriding national concern, and the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings Act is still alive. In fiscal year 1990, the law requires another mandatory $36 billion deficit reduction to reach the $100 billion ceiling. This means more cuts and that can only come from discretionary spending, which includes defense. Fiscal year 1989 is a tough and austere budget for the Army. It includes the first actual Army strength and structure cuts in years. Furthermore, fiscal year 1989 may be only the down payment on what could be facing DOD in the next few years."

Retired Maj. Gen. Robert F. Cocklin, executive vice president of AUSA warns about the pendulum of support swinging toward reductions in defense spending that could endanger the ability of our armed forces to defend our nation and our vital interests. He states that AUSA is disturbed at what appears to be a reversing of the process of correcting some of the more serious weaknesses in our military posture.

AUSA had welcomed the progress during the past two or three years, and the job is not yet done. Cocklin states that AUSA "bucked the tide before, and we intend to buck it again as we continue our efforts to gain ever-increasing public support for our national military strength in general and for Landpower in particular."

Copies of the fact sheet can be obtained from AUSA Landpower Education Fund, 2425 Wilson Blvd., Arlington, VA 22201.

SPIRITUAL

CONTACT offers to help with problems of all kinds

By Jo Ann Stamey
USAIC Chaplain's Office

A young wife, her first time away from home, has to come to Fort Benning to join her husband. She sits at home, alone and depressed because he is always at work or in the field. CONTACT can help.

A teenager's grades have dropped. His parents are upset with him; he broke up with his girlfriend; and he just had a big fight with his best friend. CONTACT can help.

Whether it's sex or suicide, dating or drugs, family squabbles, loneliness, a crisis situation or an everyday problem — a CONTACT representative is there to listen and care 24 hours a day.

Through a process called "active listening," trained volunteers encourage callers to talk out feelings and frustrations.

Because callers are assured of confidentiality — and can remain anonymous if they choose — they can feel free to discuss deeply personal problems. After situations are sorted through, volunteers help callers discover alternatives based on individual strengths and goals.

Should a caller need further information or referral, CONTACT keeps an active file on other helpful resources in the area.

CONTACT's service is unique in Columbus. It is the only telephone agency that responds to such a broad spectrum of needs 24 hours a day, seven days a week.

A 15-member board of directors made up of people from all professions and backgrounds in Columbus, Phenix City and Fort Benning provides guidance and sets policies for the CONTACT center.

It is a non-profit, non-denominational organization composed presently of 100 volunteers and a paid executive director and is sponsored by the Columbus Ministerial Alliance.

CONTACT is the American affiliate of LIFELINE International, which started in Sydney, Australia in 1963. The first center in the United States was opened in 1965. At the time, there was an insurance agency with the name LIFELINE, so the name was changed to CONTACT.

The local center is one of 93 in the United States and was opened in August 1979. It was started by Reverend Paul Luthman, who was, at that time, an associate pastor at First Presbyterian Church in Columbus. During the late 1970s, there were a series of stranglings in the area, and because of the extreme anxiety of the women in the church who lived alone, Reverend Luthman decided there was a need for CONTACT.

The last nine years have proven there is indeed a need and support here in terms of volunteers and financial support. Last year, CONTACT received more than 14,000 calls!

CONTACT receives its financial support from United Way, Department of Human Resources, local churches, civic groups, individuals and the Bradley Foundation. Once a year, in September, the Fort Benning chaplains designate one Sunday "CONTACT Sunday," and donate all of the offerings to CONTACT. Last year, Fort Benning provided a donation of more than $4,600.

CONTACT offers an excellent 50-hour college-level program on active listening and effective crisis intervention-skills that are also utilized in our daily lives. There are 16 class sessions, and the students are observed and evaluated during training. The next class starts Sept. 15 and runs through mid January. The classes will be held each Thursday, 7 p.m. to 9:30 p.m., at the Central Christian Church on Wynnton Road. There is a continuing education program to keep these skills current. Once a year, a chaplain from Fort Benning talks to the volunteers on stress and special needs of the military community. Volunteers are requested to work eight hours a month for one year, because of the extensive training.

Susan Stanton, the executive director, said CONTACT is there to help people look at their feelings, sort out their options and let the caller make the right choice. CONTACT has a good relationship with the professional community because CONTACT makes it clear that they do not give advice, they do not diagnose, and they do not solve problems. CONTACT's purpose is to help the caller focus on his feelings and help him get a clearer awareness of the nature of his problem.

Stanton said, "We respond — we care. We feel we make a difference in the lives of our callers and a difference in the community."

CONTACT offers to the community someone who will listen, a free and confidential service, information on agencies and services, emergency assistance and a friend in the middle of the night.

CONTACT offers the community a life line and symbol of hope, an expression of love and concern and an affirmation of the worth of every person.

To volunteers, CONTACT offers a chance to meet new friends, to strengthen one's faith, to learn and grow and help others and to experience faith in action.

If you need help or if you care and want to help others, please call 327-3999.

"CONTACT — When you need help, we care."

Church provides care

By Thomas W. Mitchiner
Office of Pastoral Education

In scripture more than 100 cognate ways are used to express the idea of church.

The church is designated as "the saints," "the believers," "the faithful", "the people of God," "the body in Christ," etc. The church is never used in scripture to refer to a building. No list can exhaust the vivid imaginative power of the New Testament writers or do justice to the fluidity, vitality and subtlety of their conceptions of the church.

My favorite recurring theme for the church is that of a caring community of believers. As a caring community, the church is formed out of people who care for others. They are the primary care providers of the world by advocation. This ideal of the church is in stark contrast to the world where people are more concerned with what they can get than with what they can give.

C.A.R.E. is provided by the church as: C, Comfort; A, Affirmation; R, Reflective listening; and E, Encouragement.

The church is called upon to provide comfort. It is to be, by choice, with those that are suffering physical, psychological and spiritual pain. Those who have enjoyed the comfort of God in times of pain are best able to comfort others.

"Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, the Father of mercies and God of all comfort, who comforts us in all our tribulation, that we may be able to comfort those who are in any trouble, with the comfort with which we ourselves are comforted by God." (II Corinthians 1:3-4)

Comfort is provided by the people who are joined together as the church to those in pain by the things they do and not do, just by the words they speak. To His people Christ will say, "Come, you blessed of My Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world: for I was hungry and you gave Me food; I was thirsty and you gave Me drink; I was a stranger and

Bicyclists more apt to injury when involved in accidents

National Safety Council

In 1987, 1,200 bicyclists were killed in collisions with motor vehicles, according to the National Safety Council. More than half a million other cyclists suffered injuries from all types of accidents. Despite cyclists' best efforts to drive their bikes safely, many motorists fail to spot bicycles until it's too late.

Bicyclists should never assume that the driver of a car, truck or other bicycle can see them clearly.

Being seen is one of the most important aspects of bicycle safety. In conjunction with American Bike Month in May, the National Safety Council recommends the following tips for cyclists to improve visibility:

- Never assume another driver can see you — even in daylight. Drive your bicycle defensively and expect the unexpected.
- Wear conspicuous clothing whenever you ride your bicycle. In the daytime, wear bright or fluorescent colors, and at night, wear retro-reflective material that outlines your body.
- Ride with traffic on the right side of the road and don't weave or turn suddenly.
- Be especially careful at intersections. Use hand signals to indicate turns and stops.
- Obey all traffic regulations, signs and signals.
- Equip your bicycle with a headlight, taillight and reflectors for night driving.

Reflect

you took Me in; I was naked and you clothed Me; I was sick and you visited Me; I was in prison and you came to Me." (Matthew 25: 34-36)

Those who suffer tend to doubt their worth as a person. When Job was suffering in the Old Testament after the loss of his family, possessions and health, he referred to himself as a worm.

Many people, when they suffer, feel about as significant as a worm. Like Job, they sometimes wish they could just die. Many have exhausted all of their resources to cope. They have no more strength. They feel alone and forsaken in their pain. Affirmation is provided to those who suffer simply by caring enough to be with them. Sometimes this is difficult if they are angry like Job was because of his devastating losses and outward expressions of great physical, psychological and spiritual pain.

In spite of their pain and anger, they are still precious in the sight of God. Many times it is only through the care shown by the church that they know God still cares. One of the mistakes well intended church members make in trying to comfort those who suffer is to attempt to answer the question, "Why?"

The friends of Job make the mistake of trying to provide answers to why Job was suffering. Their answers only provoked Job in his suffering to more anger and God was also displeased with them. What Job needed was for his friends just to be with him and listen. Usually there is no satisfactory answer to why there is suffering. God listened to Job complaining, but when he appeared to Job out of a whirlwind, even then God did not give him an answer to why he was suffering.

After listening, the church as a caring community can pray with understanding for the needs of those who suffer. Those who pray without listening first tend to be talking to the one suffering more than looking to God out of concern for the one suffering. Such prayers are better left unsaid.

Lastly, to care means that the people who form the church encourage those who suffer. They call them to hope. No matter what the situation, God has the last word. They call them to faith. God can and will work good out of any situation for those who love the Lord. They call them to strength. While they may have exhausted their own strength, they can learn what the apostle Paul did in his suffering:

"My grace is sufficient for you, for My strength is made perfect in weakness." (2 Corinthians 12:9)

They call them to responsibility. People who suffer tend to experience life as being helpless. The sense of helplessness leads to feelings of depression. They are seldom completely helpless. As people are encouraged and take responsibility for doing what they can for themselves, the feelings of depression subside.

Only as the church realizes its ideal as the community of primary care provider in our society will it move out of the buildings and provide real ministry in a hurting world.

Benning, AUSA host Armed Forces Day

The 29th Infantry Regiment team tears down the lane in the chariot race.

Ann McDonald

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Last week's Armed Forces Day celebration drew more than 10,000 soldiers and civilians to Fort Benning for a day of fun and games.

The celebration started at 7 a.m. with a 2.2 mile "fun run" and a 10k race. After the race, the event moved to York Field for a noncommissioned officer review honoring all who serve in the Armed Forces.

Immediately following the review, SSgt. Barbara Arredondo, of the Infantry Training Center, was crowned the 1988 Fort Benning Chapter Association of the United States Army Queen. Then, the 75th Ranger Regiment conducted a hand to hand combat demonstration and the Silver Wings followed with a free-fall demonstration.

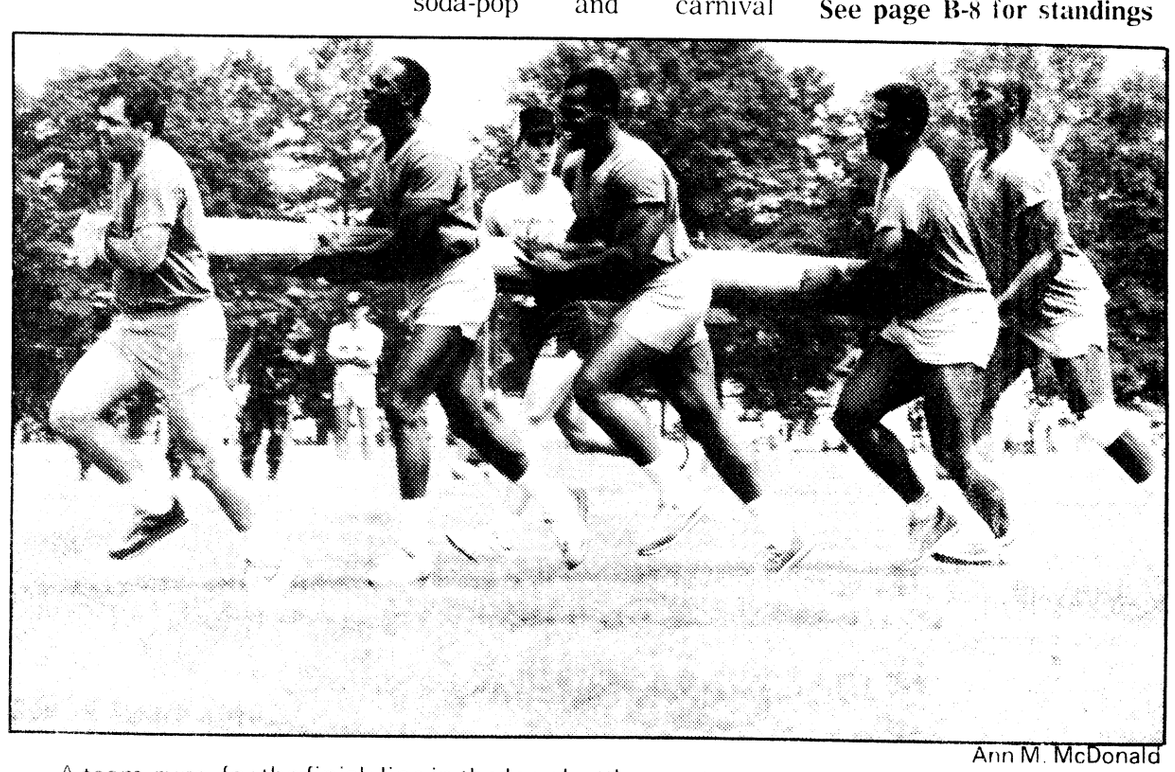
After the demonstrations, the crowd moved to Stewart and Watson Fields where the celebration took on a county fair atmosphere complete with cotton candy, corn-dogs, soda-pop and carnival games.

While the Armed Forces Day visitors were enjoying this, soldiers participated in some friendly competition consisting of eight events.

Teams competed in the 8-man, 2-mile Relay, 100- and 200-meter dash, tug of war, push-ups, litter carry, log shuttle and chariot race.

The 197th Infantry Brigade came out on top claiming the crown but not without a fight from the 29th Infantry Regiment.

"The 29th really wanted to win the competition," a sports office spokesman said. "They put forth a lot of effort, but unfortunately, they weren't able to win the competition."



Although everyone couldn't finish first in the day's events, whether it be the queen competition, the interunit competition or the carnival games, young and old alike were able to enjoy a day celebrating the freedom of the U.S. made possible through our armed forces.

Dressing cool in summer can make difference in temperature you can feel

By Becky Ray
Energy Management Branch

The south's hot, humid summer days have been a favorite topic of regional writers and poets for many years. Although the weather remains basically the same, the heavy, elaborate clothing described by these writers is, fortunately, long out of fashion.

Todays clothing, using many natural fibers and lighter colors, is both fashionable and functional in the South. Lightweight cotton and linen fabrics allow skin to "breathe" and let perspiration evaporate, cooling the body.

Most man-made fibers (such as polyester, nylon and acrylic) are not absorbent, and therefore are not as comfortable in the summer. Lightly colored clothing reflects light, whereas darker clothing absorbs radiant heat from the sun.

The cleanliness of clothing can also affect the comfort of the wearer. Particles of dirt, body oil and lotions can decrease the fabric's ability to absorb perspiration. Excessive use of fabric softeners can also reduce fabric absorbency.

Other factors can influence comfort as well. Tightly fitting clothing doesn't allow the movement of air over the skin. Thick socks and panty hose keep the body warmer, too. Larger openings at the head, arms and legs allow more heat to escape.

The following chart shows how clothing can affect thermal comfort:

You will feel a difference equal to an air temperature change of- If you:
Wear a tie	+.2
Wear an undershirt	+.5
Wear nylon stockings	+.1
Wear open toed-shoes	-.2
Wear a sleeveless dress	-.2
Wear a full slip	+.1
Half slip	-.6
Replace a skirt with slacks	+1.5

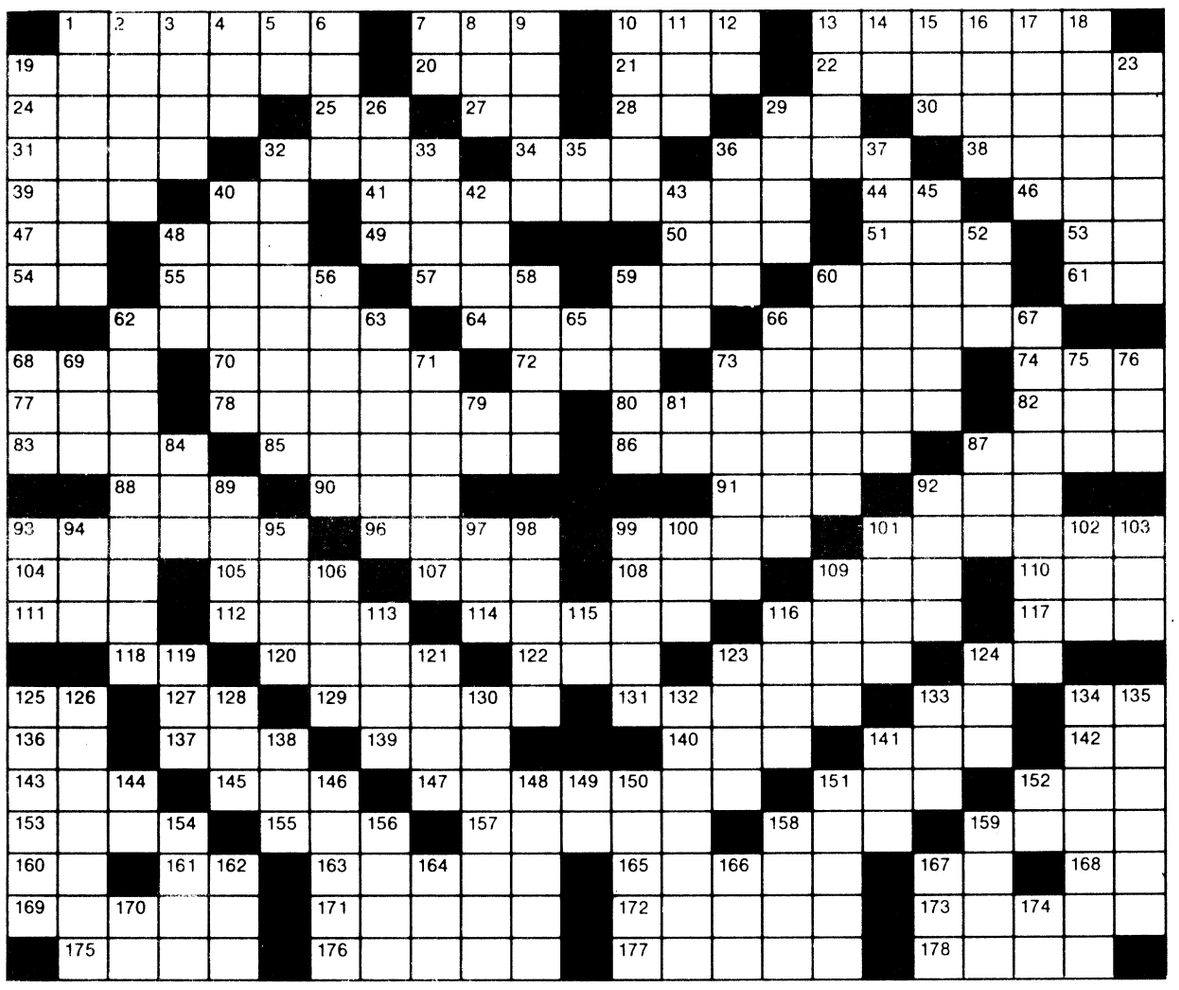
Clothing can have a great influence on personal comfort in any environment, so care should be taken in selecting clothing for the day and when shopping.

Best protection in accidents is seatbelt use

USAIC Safety

Every week, about 900 people in this country are killed in motor vehicle accidents, and 70,000 others are injured on our streets and highways. Clearly, human tragedy resulting from motor vehicle accidents has become a major problem in the United States.

The simplest and most effective protection against possible injury or death in motor vehicle accidents is a fastened safety belt. There are two types of safety belts — the lap belt and the lap-shoulder belt. In a crash, a fastened lap belt dissipates the deceleration forces of your body across your hips. A fastened lap belt keeps you inside the car and protects you from the risks of ejection. However, it may not prevent you from striking the windshield, steering wheel or dashboard.



A fastened shoulder belt provides additional protection. It dissipates the deceleration forces over a larger area of the body than just the hips. A fastened shoulder belt prevents your head and chest from striking the car's interior.

Despite the availability of safety belts and the fact that they are nearly 60 percent effective, only 11 percent of the U.S. population uses them.

You can make a difference. Every time you get in a car buckle up.

Cypress Gardens salutes armed forces

Cypress Gardens news release

For the sixth consecutive year, Cypress Gardens kicks off a summer-long salute to the armed forces during Memorial Day weekend, tomorrow through Monday.

Special activities during the three-day weekend will include demonstrations by the U.S. Army Parachute Team "The Golden Knights," who will perform twice daily, subject to weather conditions. The Knights, based at Fort Bragg, will execute team and individual free-falls from 12,500 feet (two miles high), tracking the skies with red smoke as they create diamond and stack formations.

The U.S. Marine Drum and Bugle Corps, based at Parris Island, S. C. is back by popular demand and will also give two daily performances.

Other activities will include exhibitions on the water by the 4th Assault Amphibian Battalion, 43th Marine Division, out of Tampa, Fla. This U.S. Marine Corps unit will demonstate the mobility of assault amphibious vehicles. In combat situations, these vehicles, which carry up to 25 men, are used to deploy troops from ship to shore.

A memorial service will be held at 1 p.m. Sunday at the ski show area, honoring all branches of the armed forces. U.S. Congressman Andy Ireland will be the featured speaker. The service will include a joint-service color guard, a musical salute to veterans performed by the Drum and Bugle Corps and a "missing man" formation fly-over, featuring F-16 Fighting Falcons from the Air National Guard 125th Fighter Interceptor Group out of Jacksonville, Fla.

Through Labor Day, active military personnel may receive a 50-percent discount on admission to Cypress Gardens by purchasing tickets on post. A 15-percent military discount will be available at Cypress Gardens' ticket booths upon presentation of a military identification card. Regular admission prices are $16.95 for adults and $11.50 for children ages 3-11, children under 3 are admitted free.

Cypress Gardens, "Flordia's Original Showplace," is located just 45 minutes southwest of Sea World off U.S. 27 near Winter Haven. The park is open daily 9 a.m. to 7 p.m.

EFMP's 'Camp Smiley 1988' scheduled to begin in June

By Nancy Russo
EFMP Volunteer chairperson

Spring has finally arrived and that means that the Exceptional Family Member Program's Camp Smiley is just around the corner.

Camp Smiley is the handicapped children's summer day camp, which consists of four, two-week sessions that run in conjunction with Youth Activities' summer day camp.

EFMP is gearing up because Camp Smiley 1988 will be run solely by the staff and volunteers of EFMP and Youth Activities. They hope to have retained the best of years past, but are also excited about some new features that they will be trying this year.

The program is in need of volunteer recreational aides and camp counselors. Now is the time to stop and think about how and when to participate in Camp Smiley '88. Volunteers may sign up for any or all of the four sessions.

The dates of the four sessions are as follows:

June 2-July 1: Session 1 — preschool campers

July 5-July 15: Session 2 — campers aged 7 to 11

July 18-July 29: Session 3 — campers aged 7 to 11

Aug. 1-Aug. 12: Session 4 — campers aged 17 and over

The guidelines for EFMP/Camp Smiley volunteers are as follows:

- All volunteers must be either adults or students entering at least the 9th grade in the fall.
- Recreational aides should be 9th, 10th or 11th graders.
- Camp counselors should be 12th graders or older. However, volunteers will be assigned positions based on individual abilities and past experience.

Training for Camp Smiley volunteers will be held from June 13-17, 9 a.m. - 4 p.m. daily. Attendance during the entire week of training is required in order to volunteer for any or all camp sessions.

Anyone interested in volunteering for Camp Smiley, please call Mary Strickland, EFMP coordinator, at 545-4149 or 545-4043, or Nancy Russo, EFMP volunteer chairperson, at 687-9916. Volunteer packets may be picked up from the EFMP office in building 2634 (Soldiers' Plaza) All forms must be turned in by May 31.

Good volunteers are needed to make this year's camp a memorable one for Fort Benning's handicapped children. So, please join EFMP for a heart-warming and personally rewarding experience. An added benefit of being an EFMP volunteer is Red Cross training for certification in First Aid, CPR and Aquatic Safety.

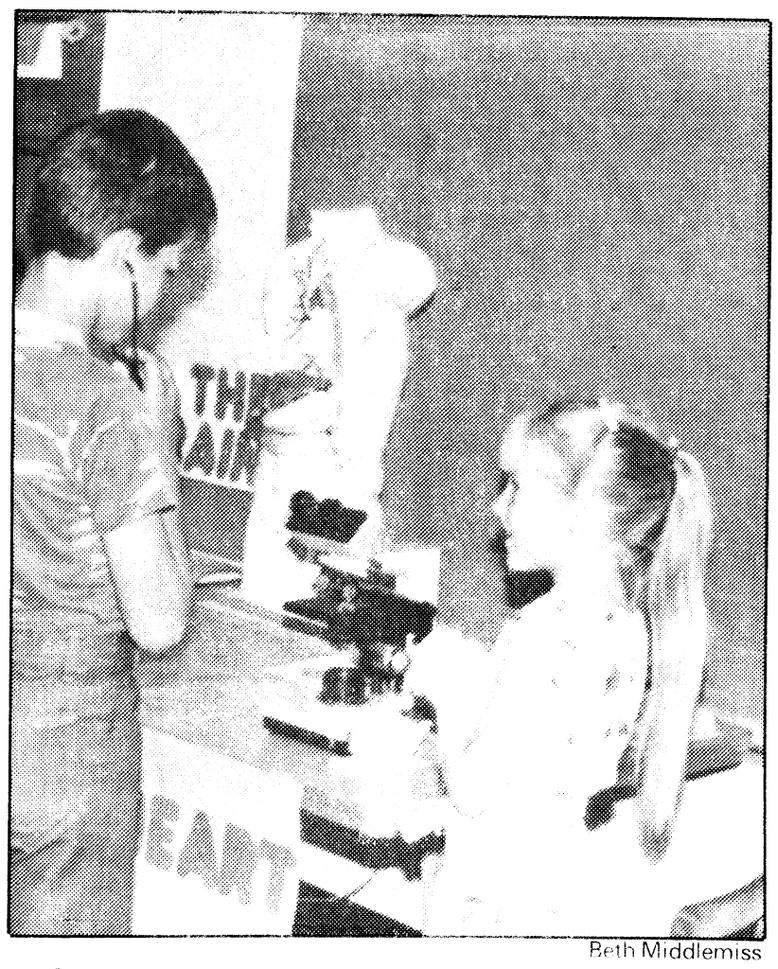
Post students discover research

By Beth Middlemiss
Fort Benning Schools

Research can be interesting and fun when you know how to do it. That is what Rebecca Leverett's class found when they participated in a project designed specifically to familiarize the gifted third graders with research techniques.



A cow's brain, some chicken hearts, microscopes, a piano opened so that you could see its workings, globes, maps, computers and diagrams of aircraft carriers filled the room.

Students learned that a trip to an open encyclopedia would not give them the answers they needed. They had to get raw data by conducting a survey, writing to an expert for information or interviewing an expert.

Parents were involved at the beginning of the project as the parent and the child met with Leverett for a Saturday morning field trip to the library. In one case, the whole family got involved as the project progressed; the entire family went along when the call came from the meat packing plant to pick up the cow's brain.

Students presented the final results of their research at a special exhibition for their parents and for all of the third, fourth and fifth grade students at Dexter School.

"The research projects were extremely well done," said Leverett. "They are an indication of the exceptional things that gifted children can accomplish inside and outside the classroom."

Male nurses' contributions often go unrecognized

By Wynona Bice Stephens
Army Nurse Corps (retired)

On Nurses' Day, the public often envisions women in starched white uniforms, caring for the needs of humanity. Rarely is it recognized that thousands of men have contributed to the rich heritage of professional nursing — a heritage that grows stronger each day.

Male nurses can be traced back to the early days of Rome. During the 3rd century, the brotherhood of men cared for the many victims of the Black Plague. Risking their lives to come into contact with the sick, these men organized a hospital and traveled throughout the city to care for their patients. After the fall of Rome, during the crusades to Christianize lands and peoples, the Catholic Church became a powerful influence on nursing. Excellent nursing care was given by such persons as the Benedictine monks at the hospital of Saint John during the Battle for Jerusalem in 1094. Following the battles, many warriors stayed and joined the nursing order. Priests, knights and "serving brothers" — those persons who performed the care — were organized into separate nursing orders.

Years later, across the ocean, the struggles in Colonial America began. Few medicines, rare surgical instruments and sparse medical training resulted in poor health conditions. Consequently, during the French and Indian Wars and the Revolutionary War, fellow soldiers ultimately had to care for each other in the worst of circumstances.

During the Civil War, contract nurses who were frequently males, attended the ill and injured. Once again, conditions for health care were poor at best. In 1887, a trained hospital corps of enlisted soldiers was established, partially to avoid hiring female nurses. However, the rapid onset of the Spanish American War, with epidemics of tropical diseases like typhoid, soon found the new corps beyond its limits. Over 1,500 women [illegible] were contracted to serve by necessity.

These nurses were so successful in providing care to the soldiers that a permanent nurse corps was established on Feb. 2, 1901. Men were essentially barred from the Army Nurse Corps, for the law which brought it into being designated it as the "Army Nurse Corps, Female".

Men nurses were accepted into the Army only as "technologists," as enlisted personnel, unless they accepted officership in another military field.

Thereafter began a struggle that would last for years. During World War I, enlisted men nurses served in numerous capacities, side-by-side with their female counterparts who were officers. By World War II, men were nationally recognized for their contributions to the profession of nursing, particularly in the areas of education, administration and psychiatric nursing. In the military, men nurses served with the Army, Navy, Marine Corps and Coast Guard; they were after all, subject to the draft.

In 1941, the Men Nurses Section of the American Nurses' Association, sought equal status with female nurses. Taking up the matter with The Surgeon General's Office, they were told that "It is the policy of this office to utilize male nurses in their professional capacity whenever their services are required." This policy held true throughout the Korean War. Finally, in 1955, Edward L.T. Lyon was commissioned a second lieutenant in the Army Nurse Corps Reserve. A nurse anesthetist from Kings Park, N.Y., he was the first man to receive a commission in the Army Nurse Corps. Soon after, the contributions made by male nurses in the Vietnam War could only be described as outstanding. Of the nine Army nurses who died while serving in Vietnam, one was a male nurse aboard a plane that crashed enroute between evacuation hospitals.

Today, according to the American Nurses' Association, 56,000 nurses, or about 4 percent of the total registered nurses in America, are men. Twenty-seven percent of the total Army Nurse Corps is composed of males. Throughout the years, these nurses and their colleagues before them have struggled often, sacrificed much and gained greatly from their dedication to the healing of humanity. They share a proud heritage and growth of brotherhood, which has culminated into a very significant impact overall on the professional growth of nurses.

U.S. Army Small Arms matches continue here

By Tommy Pool
USAMU Public Affairs Office

Soldiers from the Army National Guard, 82nd Airborne Division and Fort Benning's 29th Infantry Regiment, claimed "All Army" championship titles during last week's combat phase of the 1988 U.S. Army Small Arms matches.

The top marksmen representing the Army, Army Reserve and Army National Guard participated in combat rifle, combat pistol and M-60 machine gun competition at Fort Benning firing ranges from May 16-22.

In the combat rifle events, PFC William Walls, 1st Bn., 504th PIR, 82nd Abn. Div., won the individual M-16 combat rifle championship after trailing the early leaders until the final day.

Walls finished with a final aggregate score of 699 out of 750 points, to edge team-mate SPC Sean Lynch at 696 out of 750 points. Team-mate SFC Bruce Tucker from the Vermont ARNG, placed third with 695 points.

Members of the 1st Bn., 504th PIR, Fort Bragg, N.C., also won this year's U.S. Army Infantry team championship with a total of 954 points. The Vermont ARNG team was second at 948, with the South Dakota ARNG placing third with 926 points.

In the precision combat rifle team event, members of the Army National Guard swept the top three places and included the Connecticut team in first place with 1,315 points, followed closely by Vermont at 1,313 and the Wyoming team in third place with 1,290 points.

This year's small arms events also included a two-man sniper rifle championship, for the first time in the history of the matches.

The competition required snipers to engage man-sized silhouette targets at ranges that varied from 200 to 850 meters, with each team member limited to a maximum of two rounds per target.

Each sniper team was also graded on mandatory elements such as field crafts, target observation and range estimation exercises.

The 1988 sniper rifle championship was won by Sgts. Scott Raitt and Teddy Anderson, both members of Co. D, 2nd Bn., 29th Inf. Regt., with a combined aggregate score of 575 out of 900 total points.

Second place was won by CWO 4 David Logan and SSgt. George Morgan of the Pennsylvania ARNG, with 523 points, while Maj. Jon Howell and SFC George Shaw, Delaware ARNG, finished in third position at 434.

On the M-60 machine gun range, Sgt. Grant Hysell of the 340th Spt. Bn., California ARNG, outdistanced the field for the overall individual title scoring 2,210 total points.

Second place went to SPC David Cousineau, Michigan ARNG, with 2,050 points, while third place was won by Sgt. Shawn Gilbert, 1st Bn., 504th PIR, 82nd Abn. Div., at 1,964.

Members of the 340th Spt. Bn., California ARNG, also went on to win the M-60 machine gun team championship with a final total of 2,480 points. Firing members of the winning team included Hysell, SPC Kevin Sousa, PFC Chris Brown-Silva and Sgt. Walter Hudson.

Second place in the M-60 event was won by the 194th Armor Bde., Fort Knox, Ky., scoring 2,190 points, while the 3rd Bn., 126th Inf. Regt., of the Michigan ARNG, placed third with 2,188.

The final phase of last week's matches included the combat pistol championships and were dominated by the Army National Guard in the individual events, while the 2nd Bn., 505th PIR, 82nd Abn. Div., won the combat team championship. Vermont ARNG squad won the Patton team event.

SSgt. Angelo Appi, Connecticut ARNG, scored a narrow three-point victory in the race for the individual championship over last year's winner, Sgt. David Kaigle, Vermont ARNG.

SSgt. Appi finished the two-day championship with a total of 2,665 out of 2,700 points to establish a new Army record for the event. Kaigle scored 2,662 to capture second place, as SSgt. Charles Allen, also from the Connecticut ARNG, rounded out the top three positions with 2,658 points.

Members of the 2nd Bn., 505th PIR, 82nd Abn. Div., won the U.S. Army combat pistol team championship with a five-point victory over the Vermont ARNG squad, scoring 1,166 to 1,161.

In the Patton combat pistol event, the Vermont ARNG squad came back to outscore the 2nd Bn., 505th PIR, with a team total of 1,687 points to 1,658 by the Fort Bragg squad. Third place went to the Connecticut ARNG at 1,646 points.

The final week of this year's U.S. Army Small Arms championships will include the traditional known distance competition with national match rifle and pistol events and will end today.

The top scoring individuals from the national match phase will be selected to represent their respective active Army, Army Reserve and National Guard teams at the annual National Rifle and Pistol championships held at Camp Perry, Ohio in July and August.

Listed below are the final results and scores of this year's individual and team winners in the "All Army" combat championships.

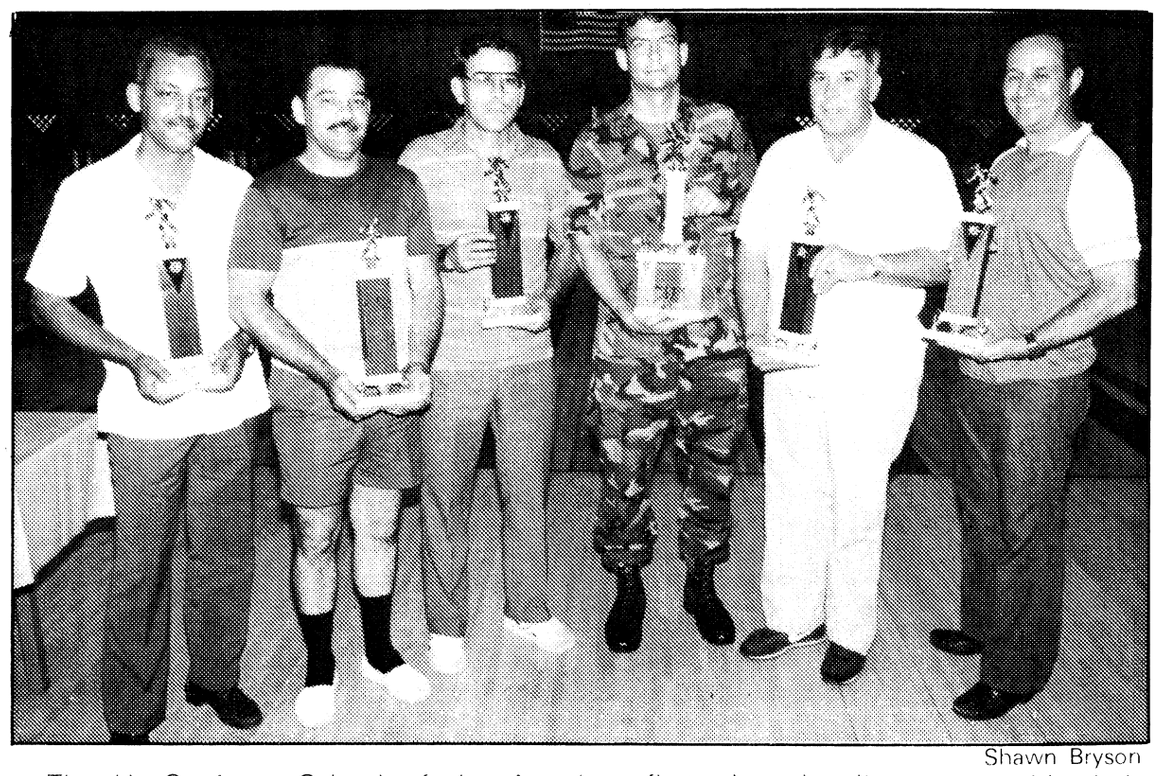
USARSA wins USAIC Bowling Roll-off

By Shawn Bryson
Bayonet staff writer

The United States Army School of the Americas' bowling team successfully defended its title Tuesday night with a 5,476 series total, giving the team the first place trophy for the second consecutive year in the Company Level Roll-Offs bowling tournament held at the Main Post Bowling Center.



The three-day tournament, which started with 48 teams, boiled down to the best 12 teams from both the main post and the mall bowling centers in a six-game roll off, which hosted some fierce competition.

Ed Chapa, USARSA bowler and president of the league, said the team's goal was to come back this year and win the tournament again. However, he pointed out that during the second night of the roll-offs, there was some doubt by team members whether they could do it. "We were in third place and about 50 pins out of second going into the last night and didn't really expect to win the tournament," Chapa said.

The team's expectations turned to the positive side Tuesday night when they started bowling up to par. "We were tied for first after the second game and began to pull away from the field during the third game," Chapa said. USARSA ended the tournament with no one in sight for 161 pins.

Other USARSA team members included Frank Miller, team captain, Pete Figueroa, Hector Torres, Joe Rivera and Angel Ortis (alternate).

The battle for second place was a heated one as the 598th Maintenance Company team barely edged out the 988th Military Police bowlers 5,315-5,302.

DAKOTA S

STEP UP TO DAKOTA!

Sure, you could get one of those "fun tough" Ford Rangers with electronic fuel injection, halogen headlamps and 4x4 capabilities. And you still wouldn't have as much total head, hip and shoulder room as Dodge Dakota.* Because Dakota gives you everything you'd want in a small pickup and more! And the Dakota long bed model has room for a 4x8 foot sheet of plywood with the tailgate closed. Try that in a Ranger, and you may find it tough to have any fun.

The unequaled Dodge Dakota – the world's only true mid-sized pickup.

STARTING AT ONLY $6875.

NEWS BRIEFS

Specialist 4 remains SP4

SP4 doesn't become SPC: Not yet anyway. An article distributed for print by Army News Service, dated May 12 said that the abbreviation for specialist "SPC" was effective with the fielding of AR 600-20, dated March 30. That is incorrect. The abbreviation "SPC" will take effect with the implementation of the SIDPERS-3, Version 1, rescheduled for fiscal year 1989, said a personnel NCO in the Office of the Deputy Chief of Staff for Personnel.

Vets get paid monthly

Pension payments: The Veterans Administration has amended its regulations to allow pension beneficiaries to receive monthly payments if less frequent payments cause loss of other federal benefits.

As an efficiency measure, the VA makes pension payments on a monthly basis only if the amount of the annual benefit is more than $228. But for lesser amounts the payment is less frequent. VA pension checks are sent quarterly if the annual amount is $144 to $228, semi-annually if the amount is $72 to $144, and annually if the amount is less than $72.

An unintended result of the consolidated payments, however, has been the denial of other federal benefits based on income, such as Medicaid, for the month the VA payment is received.

To avoid this result, the VA on March 11 changed its regulations to allow pension beneficiaries to request monthly payments if less frequent payments cause them to lose eligibility for other federal benefits. The request must be renewed each year and also must indicate which federal benefit eligibility is in jeopardy.

Pension recipients who wish to receive payments monthly should contact the nearest VA Regional Office.

VA pensions are paid to wartime veterans with limited income who are totally disabled, or age 65 or older and to survivors of veterans who meet eligibility requirements. The amount of pension is based on income and changes in marital or dependency status.

Undersecretary of Army picked

Army News Service

Michael P.W. Stone has been confirmed by the U.S. Senate as the undersecretary of the Army. The Senate made the confirmation May 23.

Stone, formerly of San Francisco, served as assistant secretary of the Army for financial management for nearly two years before being nominated by President Reagan to become that service's number two ranked civilian leader earlier this year.

When he took the oath of office, Stone assumed duties as the principal deputy to Secretary of the Army John O. Marsh Jr. He will act with full authority of the secretary in the general management of the Department of the Army, and will share oversight responsibility for programs and functions delegated to him by Marsh.

Stone served as a Navy aviator in World War II. He was one of few U.S. pilots to fly with the British Royal Navy and was attached to a British carrier operating in the Mediterranean and the Far East. His squadron participated in the surrender of Japanese forces at Rabaul in September 1945.

Stone began his civilian government service in 1982 when he joined the Agency for International Development. His service there included coordination of activities in Egypt, as well as Honduras, Guatemala, Costa Rica and other Caribbean Basin initiative countries.

Stone's business experience is primarily in the paper industry. From 1969 to 1982, he was also the president of a California winery. He is married to the former Ann Donogh, and has two married sons. He received a B.A. degree from Yale University in 1948 and studied at New York University Law School in 1948-49.

PMO releases crime stats for 2nd quarter of 1988

Provost Marshal's Office

During the 2nd quarter of fiscal year 1988, there were 779 founded offenses with a combined rate per thousand of 10.45 for crimes of violence, crimes against property, drugs, DUIs and traffic accidents.

Comparing the 2nd quarter with the 1st quarter of this year, which had 794 founded offenses with a combined rate per thousand of 9.50, there was a decrease in the actual number of founded offenses by 15. However, because of the decrease in the population during the 2nd quarter, the rate per thousand increased by .95. Comparing the 1st and 2nd quarters of 1987 and the 1st and 2nd quarters of 1988, the trend shows this to be normal for this time of year.

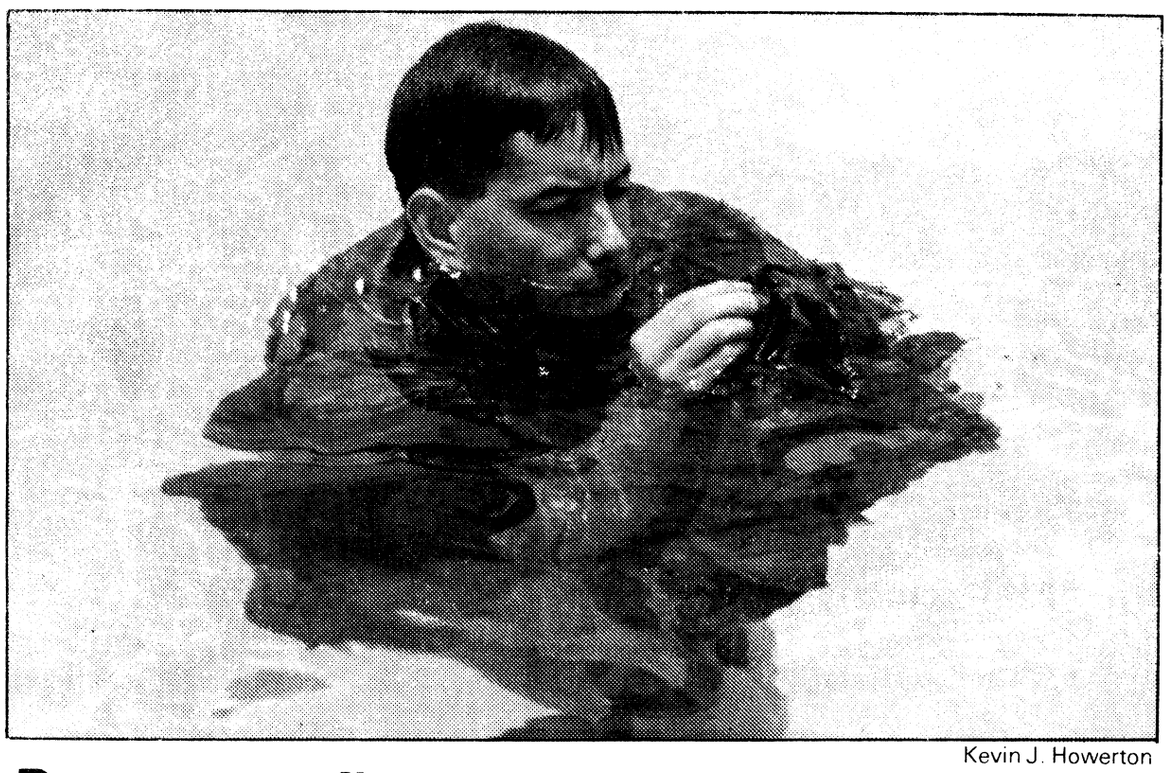
Persian Gulf Medals unauthorized for wear on U.S. Army uniforms



Army News Service

The Defense Department has learned that commercial sources are advertising and offering for sale a medal characterized as a "Persian Gulf Campaign Medal."

They advise that this is not an official DoD campaign medal or decoration and is not authorized for wear on military uniforms.

The Department of Defense has not authorized or issued any "campaign" medals for operations in the Persian Gulf region.

The Armed Forces Expeditionary Medal has, however, been authorized for award to members of the U.S. Armed Forces participating in, or in direct support of, operation "Earnest Will" in the Persian Gulf.

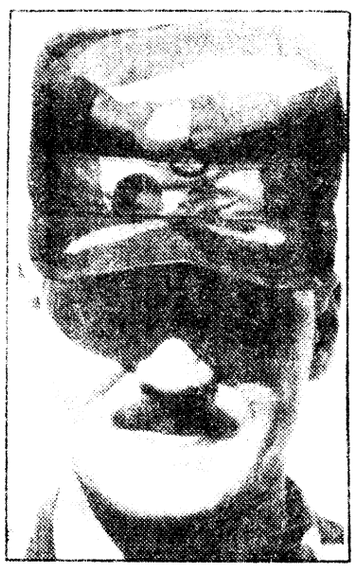
Flag waves over USA for more than 200 years

Army News Service

Created June 14, 1777, in Philadelphia, she has grown from 13 stars and stripes to today's 50 stars on a field of blue and 13 red and white stripes.



Her colors stand for what this nation was built upon. Blue for valor, red for the blood shed to build this nation and white for the purity for which it stands.

She has seen her nation grow from 13 colonies to 50 united states, the District of Columbia and three territories: Guam, The U.S. Virgin Islands and Puerto Rico. She has been to the North Pole, the moon, and seen her country at war and at peace. She was first saluted by a foreign country when the vessel "Ranger" sailed into Quiberan Bay on France's Northwest coast in 1778.

Her colors are paraded down main streets across America on the Fourth of July. She has been held proudly by veterans who fought to make her what she is and stands for. She can be seen flying, day and night at the Nation's capitol where she waves to dignitaries and citizens alike because she does not distinguish between them. She has seen the lips of a child struggling to say the Pledge of Allegiance for the first time. She was there when the young Cub Scout earned his first badge. She has seen the sorrow of a family when a servicemember is buried because she is what he died for, his nation. She has witnessed joy, too. She was there when the American hostages returned from Iran. She was there when you graduated from high school. She has seen many young and old couples take their marriage vows. She has seen her country's presidents take the oath of office and, recently, a U.S. Supreme court justice. She has been in the courtroom keeping an eye on liberty and justice. She flies proudly over city hall, watching her community grow. She is worn on the sleeve of of special forces soldiers and the Army's Golden Knights have jumped carrying her. She is displayed on space shuttles and flies on Army installations around the world. She is the flag of the United States of America. And on June 14 when her people celebrate her birth, she will see the promise of her nation strive for peace and freedom, for all mankind.

When is National Snively Month?

By Clyde Snively

If you are feeling unusually light and unburdened as we swing into June and the first month of summer, there's a good reason. This is the first month of the year that isn't dedicated to something, be it nutrition, blood or aviation.

Not only that, but even the first week of June is free, very unusual when you consider the Army alone has six pages of themes for various months, weeks and days.

Like January is Volunteer Blood Donor month and February is dedicated to American Heart, understandable since this is also the month of Valentine's Day. Black History and Children's Dental Health vie for equal billing and February is also the month for us to prevent crime. I personally would like to do that year-round.

We spend the month of March reminding ourselves to eat nutrionally, probably to recover from the winter maladies. We get smart on women's history, throwing off our male chauvinism to realize this country would never have gotten off the ground if women hadn't been there when we needed them.

Is it coincidental that this month also hosts poison prevention and wildlife weeks?

Moving into April, we have the month of the military child. Fitting we should honor our tax deductions then. We also note "Keep America Beautiful" week — probably by sending money to our federal government. Finally we have volunteer week, which we all feel like after paying our taxes.

May is the month for high blood presssure, physical fitness and sight saving. They could go a long way to keeping my blood pressure down if some of the drivers I encounter on I-185 were banned from driving — at least until they got their sight back. Make 'em walk, I say, it'll improve their physical fitness and my peace of mind.

Don't forget Mother's day. I did and the excuse that "you're my wife, not my mother," doesn't cut it.

Whoever is in charge of marrying up months with the various campaigns must figure people can't be bothered during the summer about worrying about anything beyond avoiding sunburn and mosquito bites because, except for Flag Day in June, there really isn't anything to focus on until September when we have Hispanic Heritage week and Native American day. I don't know why Hispanics get more time than Native Americans, maybe because the Native Americans had a head start and Hispanics are trying to catch up.

Oh, don't forget grandparents' day. I guess the people at Hallmark needed one more day to get them to Christmas.

There is also an Asian-Pacific week, but it seems to be a floater, not really finding a month to get settled in. My only question is, can we who don't fall into any category — white males of European ancestory, get a moment for ourselves?

In October, we have Fire Prevention Week while Novemember brings us epilepsy and aviation months, an interesting combination.

December is reserved for Christmas.

For most of you, you probably wonder why anyone would make such a fuss over all this. But then you don't have to post the various signs around post, or dream up newspaper campaigns to keep people aware of these various months, weeks and days.

I think we should take all these campaigns, roll them into one day, set it aside — a national holiday of course — so we can celebrate it's "Great to be an American, so drive carefully, secure your valuables, don't play with matches, watch what you eat and visit your doctor, dentist and opthamologist regularly."

And how will we celebrate? By doing anything we want, to include nothing, if we so desire. No parades, no celebrations. Just a day for us to do our own thing without feeling guilty.

Thurman writes on this year's theme

By Maxwell R. Thurman

Past Army themes have successfully highlighted areas of concern to the Army. But none has been so important to the Training and Doctrine Command and the Army as this year's theme training.

"The total Army active, Guard, Reserve and civilian must provide the winning edge. As resources become scarce, we must train the Army to succeed at every level and, thus, offset shortages in other areas."

"Future success as a deterrent force and, if needed, on the battlefield, will come from technical and tactical competence, as well as positive leadership."

"We must take the lead in integrating both institutional and field training. This is the key to enhancing our war fighting capability."

"Training is the cornerstone of readiness. The best doctrine and equipment and the highest quality personnel are of little use unless our soldiers are well trained."

"We in TRADOC bear a great responsibility to the rest of the Army, but it is one of which we can be proud as we pursute our primary mission: Prepare the Army for War."

"There are two principal purposes that TRADOC tries to achieve. First, we train today's soldier with today's equipment for tomorrow morning's war.

Second, we try to be the architect for the future Army; we try to take stock of who our enemies might be in 15 years and what technological innovations may be prevalent at that time."

"Leadership development is the most important aspect of TRADOC's tasks leadership training will culminate in technically and tactically competent leaders who have confidence in themselves and the confidence of subordinates."

"Quality training is the heart and soul of leader development."

"There is a need for quality training and leadership. We can never equal the Soviets in numbers. We have to focus on the ingenuity of the American fighting man."

"The difference between a good Army and a great Army is not just having modern equipment, which we do have, and having high quality young men and women who present themselves for government service, which we do have; it is the determination to learn and win. The difference in making that happen is the quality of leadership that trains young troops with this great equipment, made by great American production facilities, to high levels of tactical competence in organizations around the world."

"Leadership is the function of two things: one, technical competence; and two, that technical competence enacted in a tactical setting."

My philosophy is not complex in theory. It is based on the fundamental principles that the noncommissioned officer as well as the officer leader must first in his or her own right be technically competent, know what is required to do his or her job. Leaders must know those details, and then be able to teach and train, professionally develop subordinate NCO leaders to do, not as they say do, but as they can show them how to do."

"Training is at the heart of TRADOC business"

Our HERITAGE

The Sweat of Their Brows

Years of historical novels and Hollywood movies have cast a rosy glow over America's colonial past. The popular image is of men with powdered wigs and ruffled shirts and women with petticoats and oriental fans dancing around brightly lighted ballrooms.

In truth very few colonials ever saw the inside of an aristocratic ballroom. If we could be transported back to the 18th Century, the obvious differences in everyday lives would, of course, be apparent — no electricity, few paved roads, travel by horse or ox cart, etc. But another fact would also be apparent—the early settlers of America worked incredibly long hours each day.

George Washington was a prominent planter raising tobacco, wheat and corn long before he became our first president. His view of labor was simple. "Lost labor is never to be regained. The presumption is, that every laborer does as much in twenty-four hours as his strength, without endangering his health or constitution, will allow."

Some of the colonies passed laws to protect workers. Georgia in 1755 "limited" the workday to a maximum of 16 hours. South Carolina's law set a work limit of 15 hours per day from spring to early autumn and 14 hours per day for the rest of the year.

Many Europeans came to America as indentured servants to tradesmen or plantation owners. Some entered into this agreement voluntarily, willing to work five years or more for a master in order to pay for their voyage to America. Others were sentenced by courts to servitude in America as a result of debts or lawbreaking. While white indentured servants often worked alongside slaves from Africa and suffered some of the same deprivations, they did have some recourse to the courts in cases of gross abuse. They also had

Sick leave can be money in pocket for federal workers

By Jim Garamore
American Forces Information Service

Sick leave is an insurance policy for most federal workers, but it can also be money in the pocket for many nearing retirement.

It accumulates at a rate of four hours per pay period. Unlike annual leave, which workers must use or lose, sick leave accumulates as long as a person works for the government.

When people retire, they do not get reimbursed for sick leave hours; however, they may be credited with those hours as part of total federal service for retirement purposes.

The arithmetic runs as follows:

Under the Civil Service Retirement System, 2,087 hours of sick leave make up a year and 174 hours make up a month. Thus, accumulating a year's worth of sick leave requires just over 20 years of federal service, six months' worth of sick leave takes 10 years and so on.

To take an example: A person who retires after 30 years of federal service and has 2,435 hours of accumulated sick leave would actually retire with 31 years and two months of total federal time.

Sick leave, however, cannot be used to qualify for retirement. That is, a person with 24 years of federal service cannot add a year of accumulated sick leave and thus be eligible for retirement with 25 years of service.

This raises the question about whether an employee benefits from accumulating sick leave.

A recent General Accounting Office report noted that federal workers now take more sick leave in the years before retirement than at any other time in their careers.

Personnel officials claim employees would be in better financial shape if sick leave was added to their time in service. "The payoff for adding the sick leave to retirement lasts as long as you receive a retirement check," said an official.

However, federal workers under the new Federal Employees Retirement System plan cannot accumulate sick leave for retirement purposes. This includes employees who chose to leave the Civil Service Retirement System for the new plan as well as new employees since 1984, who are automatically enrolled in the new system.

Those who transferred to the Federal Employees Retirement System had their sick leave frozen for retirement purposes.

"If employees end up with fewer hours than they had when they transferred, then that is what they get. If they save more hours, they still only get the number they the hope of eventual freedom. Salves had no such protection and freedom lay generations in the future.

In addition to the indentured servants and the slaves, there were thousands of small farmers scratching out a meager living the land. On the edge of the frontier, there were hunters and trappers, who lived an even more precarious life.

Looking back in history for the founders of America, the search should not end in the mansions of the aristocrates. It is outside those ballrooms and parlors that we find the workers who cleared the land, constructed the roads and raised the crops. They were less interested in philosophical debates over improving mankind as they were in personal freedom. These were the pioneers who carved a nation out of the wildnerness.

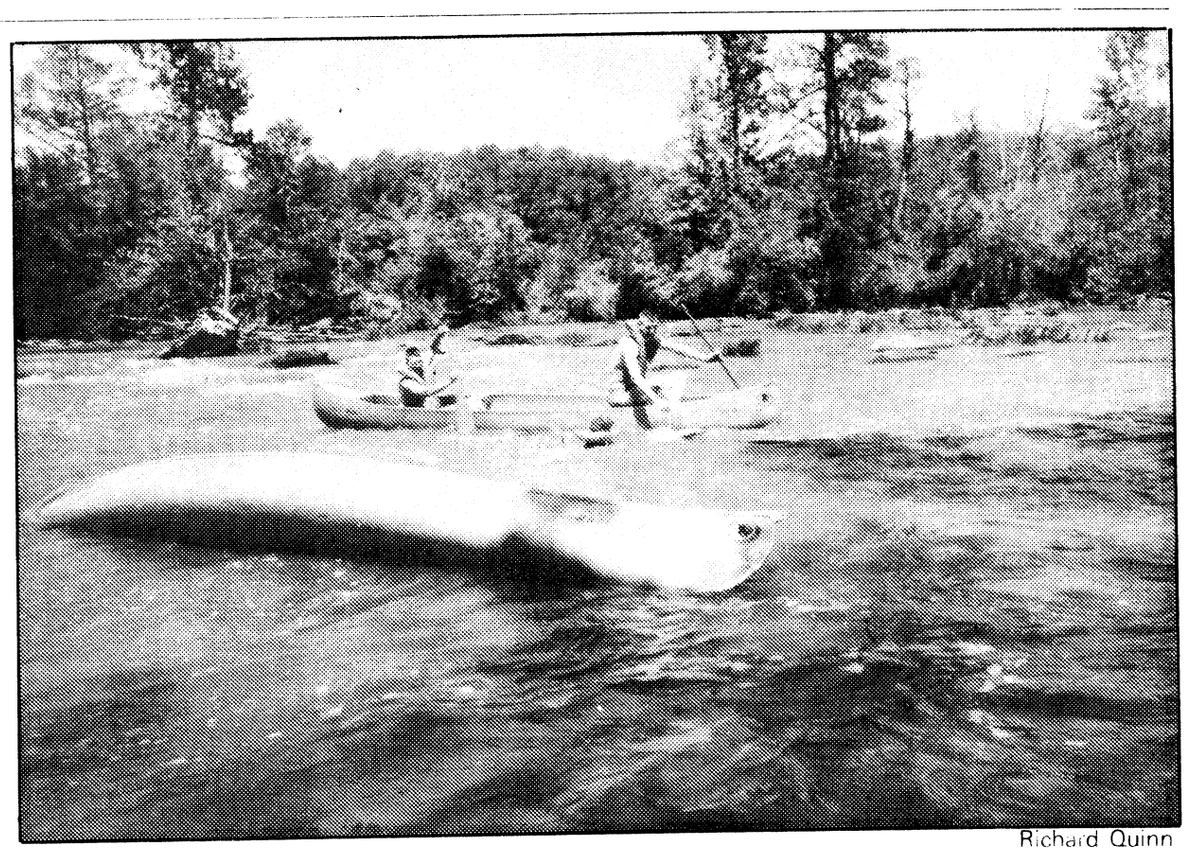
Rangers enter dangerous waters

By Richard Quinn
3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger chaplain

I know what you're thinking. "Big deal, another Flint River canoe story." But where those other retreats exited the water, the Rangers entered.



While the Schlickte brothers were competing on Upatoi Creek for "Best Ranger" honors, 40 other Rangers from 3rd Battalion, 75th Rangers, were sculling the water in Thomaston, Ga. Twenty-one canoes were hauled from Uchee Creek for the retreat.

Like most retreats, lunch was served at the halfway point provided by the 3rd Bn. dining facility. A devotional on peer-pressure and Christian values was held. After the prayer, came the "threat briefing."

Everyone knows that river operations are a part of Ranger training, but in aluminum canoes?

The river had fallen an average of 8 feet per mile from the start of the trip. But, below the Highway 36 bridge, where all other retreats had ended, the river falls 40 feet the first mile and 30 feet the second. Donning life vests, the Rangers put a new meaning into "river retreat" as they attacked Daniel Shoals, The Slueth and Yellow Jacket falls, class III rapids. All the rangers made it through, some up-side-down, some up-side-up, some swimming, some riding, some backwards but all with smiles.

This was the 3rd Bn.'s first soldier retreat since its formation.

TUSA makes history

By Mark O'Neil
507th PIR correspondent

Airborne! Finally, after several years of fruitless attempts to get parachute positions, Headquarters, Third United States Army (TUSA) made history by receiving authorization for 38 Table of Organizaion and Equipment (TOE) parachute positions, of which 16 are paid positions.

These positions were made effective March 1, and they were approved to provide TUSA with an airborne delivered command and control (C2) capability. This capability allows TUSA to drop a central command unit anywhere over Southwest Asia.

On May 2, who is deputy commanding general/chief of staff for TUSA, and 12 other personnel came to Fort Benning to complete a refresher training course. Once the training was completed, they made proficiency jumps with the support of the 1st Battalion, 507th (Airborne) Parachute Infantry Regiment. The deputy commanding general led the way by making the proficiency jumps with his troops.

In addition to the refresher course, Airborne training will be provided to those personnel in TUSA who hold parachute positions but are not Airborne qualified.

TUSA's airborne proficiency training will also be conducted on a quarterly basis to help maintain a "to war" capability.

The airborne training that TUSA is undertaking is not only designed to develop jump proficiency, but it also helps the troops to develop self confidence, self discipline and leadership. The training gives the individual soldier a chance to see how Airborne units get their missions accomplished. This program also develops that elite Airborne esprit de corps, which is indigenous to every U.S. paratrooper.

The 1st Bn., 507th (Airborne) PIR would like to welcome TUSA as a new member of the Airborne community. The Airbone community also wishes TUSA the best of luck with their future training here at Fort Benning, as well as in their future endeavors.

Soldiers encouraged to vote since Revolutionary War

Army News Service

EDITOR'S NOTE: This is part one of a five-part series on the history of the voting assistance program.

Soldiers have been encouraged to vote since the Revolutionary War, but it was not until the Civil War that the large-scale use of absentee ballots began.

Unfortunately, many frauds and irregularities in the counting and collecting of soldier ballots were experienced. This had a direct influence on future soldier absentee ballots.

In 1918, when state commissioners attempted to visit the battlefields in France and issue and collect absentee ballots, Gen. John J. Pershing sent them home with the admonition that the soldiers' job was to fight and that they should leave voting to the civilians back home. Later, during Pershing's assignment as chief of staff, this philosophy became an unofficial part of the soldier's credo.

In 1942, with some 5 million men of voting age serving in the armed forces, less than 1 percent of these citizens who were called upon to defend freedom were able to vote.

President Franklin D. Roosevelt saw the serious inequity of the situation and called upon the nation to remember the words of George Washington " When we assumed the soldier, we did not lay aside the citizen." Roosevelt called upon the Congress to remedy the situation.

The Congress and state governments responded by enacting legislation providing for absentee voting for our military personnel and for civilians serving with and attached to the Armed Forces. The results were immediate. In the 1944 elections, with the strength of the armed forces at its peak, some 30 percent of the 9 million servicemen of voting age cast a ballot.

When World War II ended, the planned program of soldier absentee voting also terminated. This occurred because the state legislation had an "in time of war" clause in the special provisions for absentee voting for military personnel. This legislation had become ineffective by the start of the Korean War, and as a result, less than 15 percent of the 3 and a half million military personnel engaged in the Korean War were able to exercise their franchise. As late as 1955, despite the experiences of World Wars I and II and the Korean War, the United States had no completely satisfactory system to permit members of the Armed Forces and overseas civilian employees to take part in local, state, and national elections through the use of absentee ballots.

Over the years, the problem was also compounded by the lack of uniformity in the states with respect to simplified absentee voting laws.

President Truman initiated a study, later followed through by President Eisenhower, to devise a way that these previous inadequacies could be permanently resolved. The result was the enactment of the Federal Voting Assistance Act of 1955 on Aug. 9 1955.

Federal employees are subject to restrictions on political activities

Army News Service

Army people's political activities: what's permitted and what isn't.

Most federal employees who choose to take part in political activities must abide by certain restrictions imposed by a federal statute called the Hatch Act. So, too, do the same restrictions apply to soldiers, as presented in AR 600-20 (Army Command Policy and Procedure). In addition, when soldiers and DA civilians do exercise their political rights in public, they are cautioned not to do so in uniform or with their official positions identified as an element of the activity.

Spouses and other family members of the affected personnel are not subject to these rules.

Here's a roundup, for this election year, of what you as a soldier or Army civilian may or may not do:

- You may register and vote on candidates and issues.
- Express your opinion on any political subject.
- Attend fund-raising functions or otherwise contribute money to a political party, committee or organization, subject to the limitations noted below.
- Communicate your unsolicited ideas or comments to a partisan political candidate; but you may not establish a formal advisory relationship.
- Take part in a campaign not specifically identified with a political party such as for a constitutional amendment or referendum.
- Be a member of a political party or other political organization, provided you do not take an active part in managing the organization's activities.
- Explain or present DA policies to Congress, the news media and non-partisan gatherings.
- Sign a nominating petition.
- Write a letter-to-the-editor expressing an opinion on a political matter, provided that the letter is not part of a concerted effort to solicit votes for or against a particular partisan candidate or party.
- You may not become a partisan political candidate for nomination or election to public office.
- Make a financial contribution for political purposes directly to an employee of the federal government, a member of the armed services or a member of Congress. It is permissible however, to contribute to any candidate's authorized committee subject to the restrictions in the following circumstance.
- Make a financial contribution to a partisan political candidate, or to that candidate's authorized committee, if that candidate is the employer or employing authority of the contributor. (This is a criminal prohibition; see Title 18, U.S. Code, section 607.)
- Solicit, collect or handle funds intended for partisan political purposes; nor organize, promote or actively participate in fund-raising events for such purposes.
- Distribute partisan political literature or perform clerical or administrative duties for a partisan political organization or committee.

SPIRITUAL

God invites us to choose a life of peace, not stubborness

By William T. Laigaie
14th Infantry chaplain

How would you feel if someone you know refused to shake your hand or answer when you greeted them, and acted like they didn't know you? How might you feel then if you tried to warn the same person who was about to walk into a hole or some obstacle, and they ignored you?

This is a little what it's like to disregard God's offer of wisdom, His guidance for skill in living.

God invites us to choose a life of peace in exchange for a life of stubbornness.

Let's look at what the Scripture says:

"Wisdom call aloud in the street, she raises her voice in the public squares; at the head of the noisy streets she cries out, in the gateways of the city she makes her speech." (Proverbs 1:20-21).

God's wisdom is available to everyone. It's not a big secret that you have to pay for. As those who have experienced will share with you, there are real benefits in obeying God. Again, these blessings of life are open to everyone. "Whoever listens to me will live in safety and be at ease, without fear of harm." (Proverbs 1:33).

If we take God's guidance seriously, we might avoid the failure to find meaning, purpose and direction in life for a choice to remain ignorant of God's instruction. Let's consider this picture of God as a devoted father taking time to teach His child. "My son, if you accept my words and store up my commands within you . . . then you will understand the fear of the Lord and find the knowledge of God." (Proverbs 2:15).

God's desire is to enlighten us with His wise advice. "The Lord gives wisdom, and from His mouth comes knowledge and understanding." (Proverbs 2:6).

In order to receive God's guidance, we must be willing to accept it. To a great extent, the way to understanding lies with our choice to "turn our ears to wisdom and apply our hearts to understanding." (Proverbs 2:3)

If we choose not to accept and practice God's wisdom, we may find ourselves enslaved to some destructive habit against our will. However, if we seek to become wise in God's way, we are reasonably assured of a life free of pain due to our own unwise decision.

Bible school students stretch spiritual muscles

By Jo Ann Stamey
USAIC Chaplains Office

Dust off the old trophies! You're in the winner's circle with this year's theme, "Champions for Jesus." Students will study, laugh, pray and stretch their spiritual muscles. They'll meet three Bible coaches — Peter, Paul and John the Baptist — and they will discover that everyone is a winner because of Jesus.

World-class champions have many things in common — they're stronger, smarter, quicker and larger. That's why the program needed a "less than perfect" symbol with whom students could easily identify — introducing the Vacation Bible School (VBS) symbol — Spunky, the Eaglet!

Spunky is a champion in the making — just like the VBS students. He's still learning to fly straight, but he's got the stuff champions are made of.

The analogy is obvious — we're all learning to fly straight, too. But we've got the stuff champions are made of — Jesus has redeemed us — and we look to Him for guidance and direction.

That's what the lessons are all about this year. Being a champion of commitment and having victory over prejudice. Being a champion of action and winning the victory over personal fears. Being a champion of faith and winning victories over doubt and the unknown. And lastly, being a champion because we have a victory in Jesus.

Come join in the fun from June 13 through 17, 10 a.m. to 12:30 p.m. at Dexter, McBride and Wilson schools. Classes are for 4-year-olds through those who have completed 6th grade. Classes will include studying with Spunky, the Eaglet, music, crafts, recreation and refreshments.

Buses will be available to pick up students in McGraw Manor and Bouton Heights Davis Hill housing areas and at the Custer Terrace Chapel. Children who have not completed 1st grade must be accompanied by an older sibling.

The coordinators responsible for this year's program are Bobbie Hartzog, Evelyn Church and Amanda Thornton. A nurse will be on duty during the week. Chaplains will be teaching Bible stories to 4th, 5th and 6th grade students.

More than 700 students are expected to join in this fun and spiritually enriching week.

Be a "Champion for Jesus." Spunky is looking forward to seeing you at Vacation Bible School. At the end of the week, you and Spunky will be soaring like eagles!

Soldier convicted of theft, forgery

Provost Marshal's Office

In a special court-martial, SSgt. Michael W. New was convicted pursuant to his pleas of burglary, wrongful appropriation, and 11 specifications of forgery. Underlying these offenses was New's having broken into a fellow soldier's room to borrow several weapons without the soldier's permission. New also took another soldier's charge card and repeatedly forged his signature to charge slips over a two month period.

After hearing both aggravation evidence and evidence in extenuation and mitigation, the military judge, Col. Malcom Yawn, sentenced New to be reduced to the rank of Pvt. 1, to forfeit $447 pay per month for two months, to be confined for two months and to be discharged from the service with a Bad Conduct Discharge. New was assigned HHC, 4th Ranger Tng. Bn., Ranger Tng. Bde., and had nearly eight years of active service.

A special court-martial convened to hear charges of AWOL and wrongful use of cocaine against Sgt. Clarence M. Chandler of HHC, 2nd Bn., 69th Armor, 197th Inf. Bde. Chandler entered mixed pleas to the charges and was ultimatly found guilty of a period of AWOL just short of 30 days and wrongful use of cocaine. Once convicted, Yawn, the military judge, sentenced Chandler to be reduced to the rank of Pvt. 1, to forfeit $447 per month for six months, to be confined for four months and to be discharged from the service with a Bad Conduct Discharge.

Sgt. Thomas Lavelle of Co. A, 1st Bn., 58th Inf., 197th Inf. Bde. was convicted by a general court-martial for the offenses of dereliction of duty, AWOL and forgery. Following his conviction, Col. Herbert Green, military judge, sentenced Lavelle to be confined for a period of nine months, to forfeit all pay and allowances, to be reduced to the rank of Pvt. 1 and to be discharged from the Army with a Bad Conduct Discharge.

Lavelle, who performed duties as the unit's armorer, was charged after his commander entered the unit arms room while he was home on leave and discovered a lack of property security and accountability. A full inventory confirmed not only that property was missing but that Lavelle had forged a hand receipt to cover shortages. He then failed to return from leave and was AWOL for over 30 days before being returned to Fort Benning and pretrail confinement. Lavelle will serve his sentence at the U.S. Army Correctional Activity at Fort Riley, Kan.

ASK THE JUDGE

By Jeffery T. Kipi
Staff Judge Advocate's Office

Q: I am considering selling my home, which I purchased with a VA Home Loan. I would like the buyer to assume the loan, if possible. Is there anything that I need to be aware of concerning the assumption of the loan?

A: Anytime someone assumes your VA loan, you need to remember that you remain secondarily liable on the loan.

Simply put, this means that if the person who assumes your loan ever defaults on the payments you will be contacted by the VA and will be held legally responsble to pay the remaining balance on the loan. To avoid this liability you need to apply for a "release of liability" with the VA at the time the loan is assumed.

You can qualify for this release if:

- The VA determines that the loan at the time of the assumption is current.
- The buyer qualifies from a credit standpoint.
- The buyer assumes all of your contractual obligations. If the loan is assumed and you failed to file for this release, you can still file for the release if the loan enters default. Like the application for the release at the time of he assumption, if certain conditions are met you will not be held liable.

Allowing someone, who you know little or nothing about, to assume your VA loan can be an extremely risky venture. Remember to make sure that you are released from liability on the loan before the house is sold.

If you are not sure how to apply for this release, ask your Legal Assistance attorney for assistance.

AUSA CORNER

By Jim Galagher
Chapter president

In 1987, the chapter put together its first discount coupon book to be issued to new and renewing AUSA members. Although there were many favorable reports on the use of the coupon book and some very attractive discounts, the idea did not receive the enthusiasm we had hoped for. Part of the blame for its lack of acceptance was probably due to the format, which resembled a quick copy and was not considered a bona fide discount coupon book.

The 1987 book had nearly 50 discounts offered by AUSA corporate members. I think I should mention just one of the savings realized by a renewing member so you can be aware of the value of these discounts. The case I recall involved a discount coupon from an automobile dealer who offered a 10 percent discount on repair costs and the AUSA member had $87.00 discounted from a $870.00 repair bill. So you can see that for a $20.00 membership cost, this member had a return of $87.00.

This year, the membership committee had the assistance of several first sergeants who both advised on the type of discounts considered most popular with soldiers and also helped the membership committee to contact local businessmen. The result is a discount coupon book containing more than 80 coupons, ranging from fast food restaurants to beauty shops, with all the coupons having a total value estimated at more than $800.

The membership committee reports that the coupon book is now being printed and should be available and in the hands of first sergeants, the first week of June. The membership committee recommends that a coupon book be issued to each AUSA member, who has joined or renewed membership with the chapter since 1 January 1988.

The discount coupon book is evidence of the positive and supportive attitude of local businesses and is another way in which your AUSA chapter supports soldiers.

Thus, persons who transfer from the Civil Service Retirement System to the Federal Employees Retirement System with 1,000 hours of sick leave receive 1,000 hours of credit (about six months) when retirement comes around. However, if they end up with 700 hours at retirement time, that's all they get credit for. If they stay and continue to accumulate sick leave, they still get credit only for the 1,000 hours.

Attention: Bodybuilders & Serious Athletes
Is hard training robbing your body of nutrients it needs?
Now that you're training harder than ever before, it's time to take a new look at your diet.
After all, you want to feel good about your physique. You want your body powered to get you through your workouts without fatigue. And you want to build muscle mass without building up fat, so you'll develop deep cuts and a great cellophane look.
Training gives you a lot—but is it also taking a lot out of you? If you've cut way down on your calories, your body may be getting robbed of vital nutrients you need to keep you in good health as well as in great shape.
Your diet goals: High carbs, low fat, the right protein
Today's nutrition experts advise bodybuilders to get the "carbs" in (especially before strenuous workouts), to go easy on fats (they carry twice the calories of carbs and protein), and to get enough muscle-building amino acids–the building blocks of protein. That's where a problem could arise. To take in enough amino acids, many people consume lots of meat, eggs and milk. All excellent sources of complete protein—the kind you want. But they also pack a lot of calories from fat—the kind you don't want.
Even if you drink skimmed milk, eat only the egg whites and cut back your meat portions, you could still fail to achieve a proper balance between the nutrients you need and the calories you don't. And that's where the Challenge bodybuilding formula comes in.
The Challenge™ Growth & Training Vita-Pak™
Lifestyle designed, the Challenge Growth & Training Vita-Pak takes the confusion—and the guesswork—out of what nutrient supplements to take. It's all thought through and worked out scientifically. You don't have to count tablets. Or balance out the proportions. Or worry about nutrient interactions.
Each freshness-sealed Vita-Pak contains:
- The free-form amino acids L-ornithine and L-arginine
- All other essential amino acids—in free form (not hydrolysates)
- Nutrient catalysts such as niacinamide (a B-vitamin), pantothenic acid (also a B-vitamin), vitamin C and potassium (good for muscle recuperation)
- Octacosanol in a base of vitamin E and wheat germ powder

Also very important: Challenge Growth & Training Vita-Pak contains NO artificial colors, flavors, sugar, starch or sodium.
The GNC Guarantee: Use the Growth & Training Vita-Pak for as long as 10 days. If you are not 100% satisfied, return the unused portion with proof of purchase to your GNC store for a complete refund.

Army Small Arms Championships conclude

By Tommy Pool
USAMU PAO

After two weeks of marksmanship competition between some of the top military shooters in the country, this year's U.S. Army Small Arms Championships was concluded at Fort Benning May 27.

Winners in both individual and team events were honored in ceremonies conducted at the main post theater and presented with trophies designating them as the Army's best marksmen.

This year's matches drew more than 800 personnel that represented the top teams from the active Army, Army Reserve and Army National Guard, setting a new attendance record.

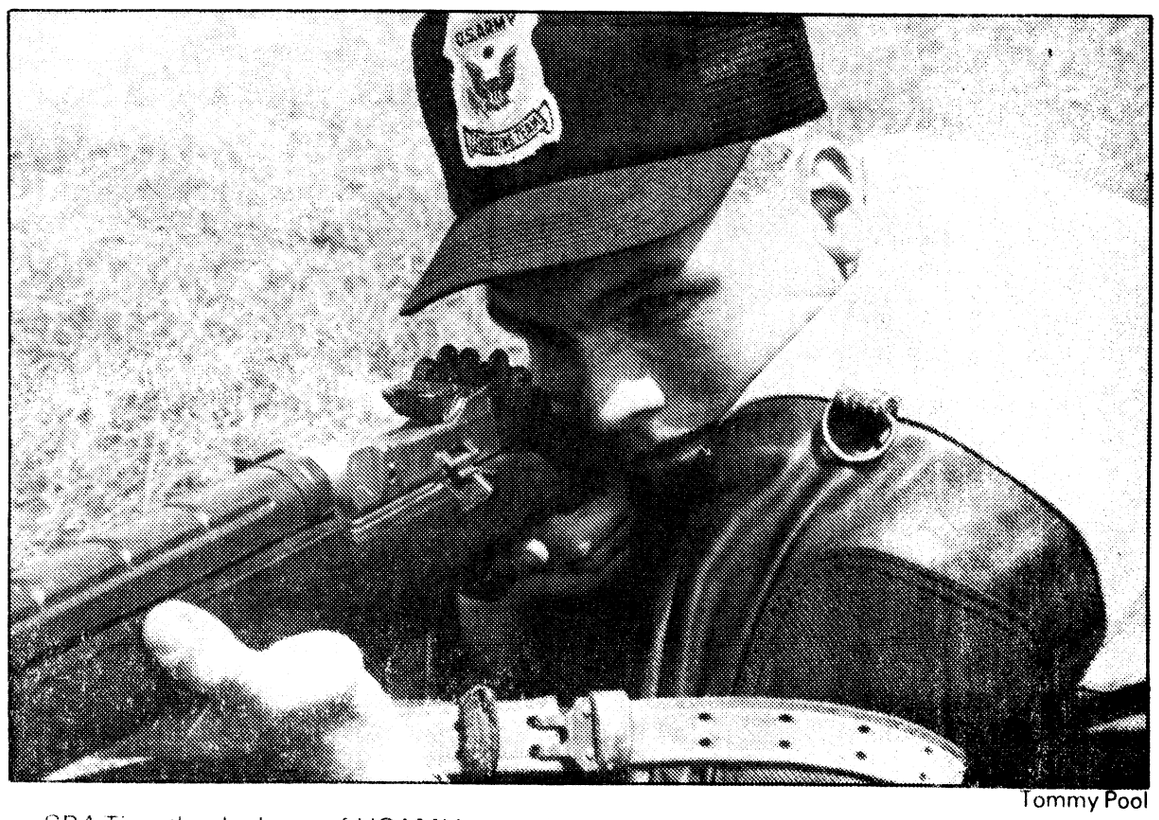
In last week's final events, SP4 Timothy Jackson from Fort Benning's Army Marksmanship Unit, captured the U.S. Army individual rifle title, while SFC Frank Goza, USAR, won the individual pistol championship.

After a close three days of competition on the rifle ranges, Jackson scored a narrow one-point victory over Army reservist Sgt. Lowell Johnson and USAMU team-mate, SP4 Eric Uptagrafft.

Jackson finished with an aggregate total of 2,061 out of 2,100 possible points, with Johnson edging Uptagrafft in a tie-breaking procedure for second place as both competitors finished with identical scores of 2,060.

In rifle team competition, members of the Army National Guard swept the top three places in the national match event, while the 6th U.S. Army squad from Fort Ord, Calif., came back to win the final Army Infantry Trophy team championship.

Trailing the leaders going into the final phase of firing, the 6th Army team rallied for a final aggregate winning score of 2,530 points, to defeat the 2nd Army Reserve by nine points at 2,521.



Members of the winning 6th Army squad included SFC Sione Tulua serving as the team coach, while SSgt. Daniel Wolf was team captain. Firing members were Sgt. Dwayne Gaskin, Sgt. Jorge Garcia-Torres, Cpt. Kyle Weaver, SP4 Douglas Doard, SP4 Frank Anderson and SP4 William Mikeal.

In the race for the individual U.S. Army pistol championship, Army reservist SFC Frank Goza, held on to an early lead to finish ahead of former national champion, MSgt. Roger Willis of USAMU.

SFC Goza scored a total of 3,525 out of 3,600 points, and was followed by MSgt. Willis at 3,520. Placing third in the aggregate championship was Capt. Patrick Powell, Army National Guard, with a total of 3,505.

The Army National Guard won the top three places in the pistol team matches, with the 2nd ARNG squad winning the overall championship with a score of 1,112 points.

Sumo wrestler visits Fort Benning

By Shawn Bryson
Bayonet staff writer

It might have seemed like brawn versus blubber to all those on hand May 19 for an exhibition wrestling match at the Fitness Center in building 4.

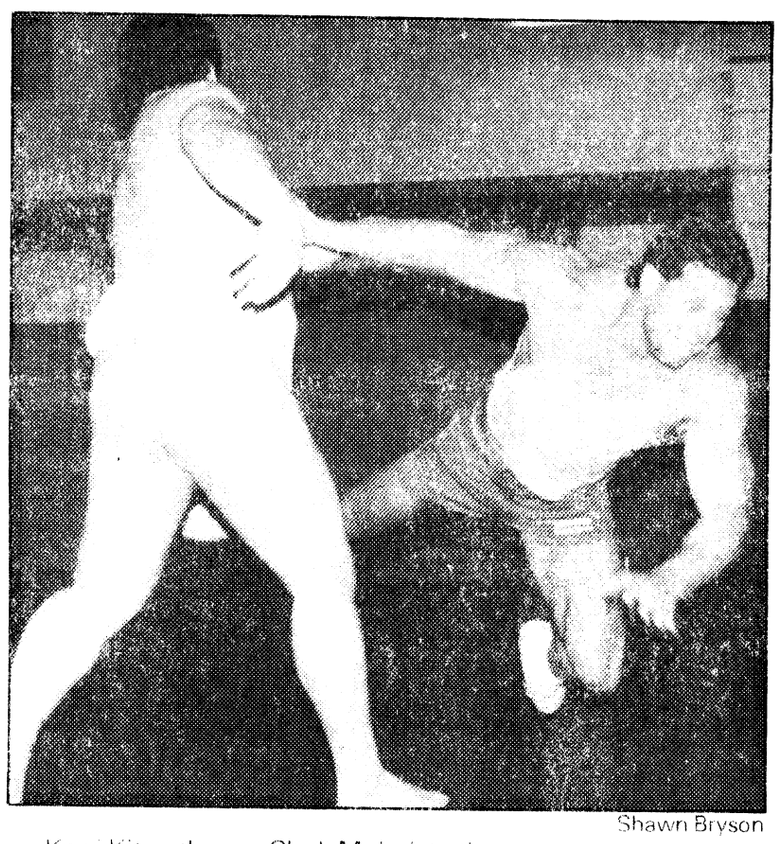
Kogi Kitao

However, this was no ordinary wrestling match as it featured a 314-pound sumo wrestler and a 245-pound body builder. Many were suprised to see just how skillful and powerful blubber can be.

The match was arranged as a part of a visit to Fort Benning by Kogi Kitao, better known to sumo wrestling fans as Futahajuru, former Japanese Grand National Sumo Wrestling champion.

According to Futahajuru's translator, Victor Higgins, the wrestler was never beaten and became the champion at 24 years old, a young age for sumo wrestlers. However, because of training differences between Futahajuru and his coach, he resigned from wrestling prematurely, which is unusual for sumo wrestlers, who dedicate much of their life to the sport.

Higgins explained that Futahajuru, accompanied by a Japanese film crew making a documentary, is visiting the United States to get better oriented with the world because his training as a sumo wrestler, which began when he was 15, was highly disciplined, and he led a very sheltered life.



Futahajuru's opponent in last week's bout was 36-year-old body builder, Clark Mahek. Because Mahek had never wrestled sumo style, Futahajuru and his translator explained that the object was to push the opponent out of the ring or knock the him off his feet.

Once Mahek had an understanding of the sport, the match began. Mahek could not budge the giant and was dropped, pushed and thrown about the ring with an almost graceful ease.

After the match, Mahek exclaimed that trying to move Futahajuru was like trying to move a brick wall.

"I have never been thrown around like that before," Mahek said. "I didn't think he was as strong as he is because he's fat," he said.

With Higgin's help, Futahajuru explained that muscle is not the key to being a good sumo wrestler. "Sumo wrestling is more technique than muscle," Higgins said. "In Japan, the fans would rather see the smaller man win because it shows how important technique is."

Shawn Bryson

Kogi Kitao throws Clark Mahek to the mat.

Futahajuru demonstrated his power once more when he and Fort Benning's Miguel V. Taoy Jr., Armed Forces National Powerlifting Champion in the 148-pound class, lifted free weights at the gym. With seemingly little effort, Futahajuru dead lifted 500 pounds.

Other parts of Futahajuru's visit to Benning included tours of the Airborne School's ground and tower branches. Higgins said that Futahajuru has always liked the Army and wants to join some day.

Dangers of electricity warrant precautions

By Becky Ray
Energy Management Branch

Because electricity is used so extensively in our homes and workplaces, we often take it for granted, forgetting the dangers of working with it carelessly. Electricity, when used improperly or when safety precautions aren't taken, can cause damage to the body ranging from burns to respiratory arrest, nerve damage, cardiac arrest and death. Electricity is, after all, raw power.

Electric shock will occur if a person becomes a part of an electrical circuit, either by touching two wires in a closed circuit, touching one wire of an energized circuit and a ground or touching a metal piece of equipment that has become energized ("hot") and a ground.

Many factors can influence the degree to which a person is injured from an electrical shock, but the amount of electrical current and the length of time the body is exposed to it are major factors. A shock of only five milliamperes can be felt but is usually not a painful shock. The shock causes the person to lose control of muscles, although muscle contractions may cause the person to be thrown from the current.

At a level of current higher than thirty milliamperes, the victim can't let go of the live wire. A shock of one more ampere can cause cardiac arrest, nerve damage and death.

Even small household appliances can deliver shocks much more intense than this. For example, hairdryers commonly use about five amperes, which means they can deliver a shock five times greater than one which can kill.

Other bodily damage can result from electrical shocks as well. Internal hemorrhaging and severe burns to skin or internal tissues and bones may occur. Electrical current passing through internal tissue and bone causes the most serious type of burns. Involuntary muscle reations can result in collisions or falls that may lead to bone fractures, bruises, cuts and even death.

Shock isn't the only hazard of electricity. Damaged or incorrect wiring can cause even relatively heavy pieces of equipment to explode, throwing shards of metal in all directions.

The best protection we have against an electrical accident is the use of safety precautions and good work practices.

Make a habit of checking the equipment and tool wiring insulation, especially on flexible cords. Temperature, moisture and corrosive chemicals or fumes can damage insulation. Be certain all electrical equipment is in good working order and practice good judgement in working with it. When making repairs to equipment, make sure the equipment is de-energized.

Never alter or try to intentionally bypass circuit breakers and fuses. They are used to monitor the amount of electricity flowing through a circuit. If too much current passes through the circuit breaker, it will trip stopping the current. In the same way, fuses will melt through, interrupting the flow of electricity.

Grounding of equipment can substantially reduce the danger of electrical shock. A service or system ground (with which the system is protected at the service entrance) protects equipment, but the equipment ground (with which the individual piece of equipment is grounded) protects the person using the equipment. Generally, grounding wires are green or green with yellow stripes, and grounded conductors are insulated in white or gray. Never disconnect green ground prongs off plugs.

Stay away from fallen power lines, Report them immediately to the DEH Work Order Section, 545-2135 (if at Fort Benning).

When operating ladders or cranes, keep clear of power lines. Unless you are qualified, keep a distance of at least ten feet from overhead electrical lines.

Kites should be flown as far away from power lines as possible and never on rainy days (a wet kite string is an excellent conductor). If kite string becomes entangled in a power line, leave it there, and report it to DEH.

Keep small children away from electrical outlets and appliances and use outlet protectors in exposed outlets. Keep pets away from electrical cords — puppies and kittens can chew through wire insulation.

Never use electrical appliances in or near water unless the appliance was designed specifically for use in water.

Emergency aid for electrical burns or electrical shock includes shutting off the current. If necessary, get the victim away from the electrical source, using dry wood or other non-conductive material.

National Safe Boating Week begins

By Evelyn D. Harris
American Forces Information Service

June 5-11 will be the 30th annual National Safe Boating Week.

Since 1958, when the week was first proclaimed, the number of recreational boats has grown from 5 million to 17 million nationwide.

According to the National Transportation Safety Board, more than 1,000 Americans lose their lives every year in boating accidents — more than the combined annual fatalities from airline accidents, commercial shipping accidents and railway accidents.

This year's theme is "Know Before You Go." Hunt Anderson, who heads the U.S. Coast Guard's Boating Education Branch and is the National Safe Boating Council's secretary, said the council is giving special attention to non-traditional boaters — people who use boats occasionally for fishing or waterskiing. Because these people often don't think of themselves as boaters, they're unlikely to take a boating safety course.

According to Anderson, boat users need to know their craft and its safety equipment; weather and water conditions; the boating "rules of the road"; and their personal limitations.

To help people with this, the Coast Guard has a consumer hotline to answer questions relating to safety and recalls. In the Washington, D.C., area, the number is 267-0780; in the rest of the U.S., it is 800-368-5647.

For information about a safe boating course, contact your installation safety office, or call 800-336-BOAT in Virginia; 823-9550 in the Washington, D.C., metropolitan area.

Some points covered in the courses:

Always wear a Coast Guard-approved personal flotation device-and make sure everyone on the boat is wearing one. Of the 1,066 people who died in boating accidents in 1986, 82.5 percent were not wearing life jackets.

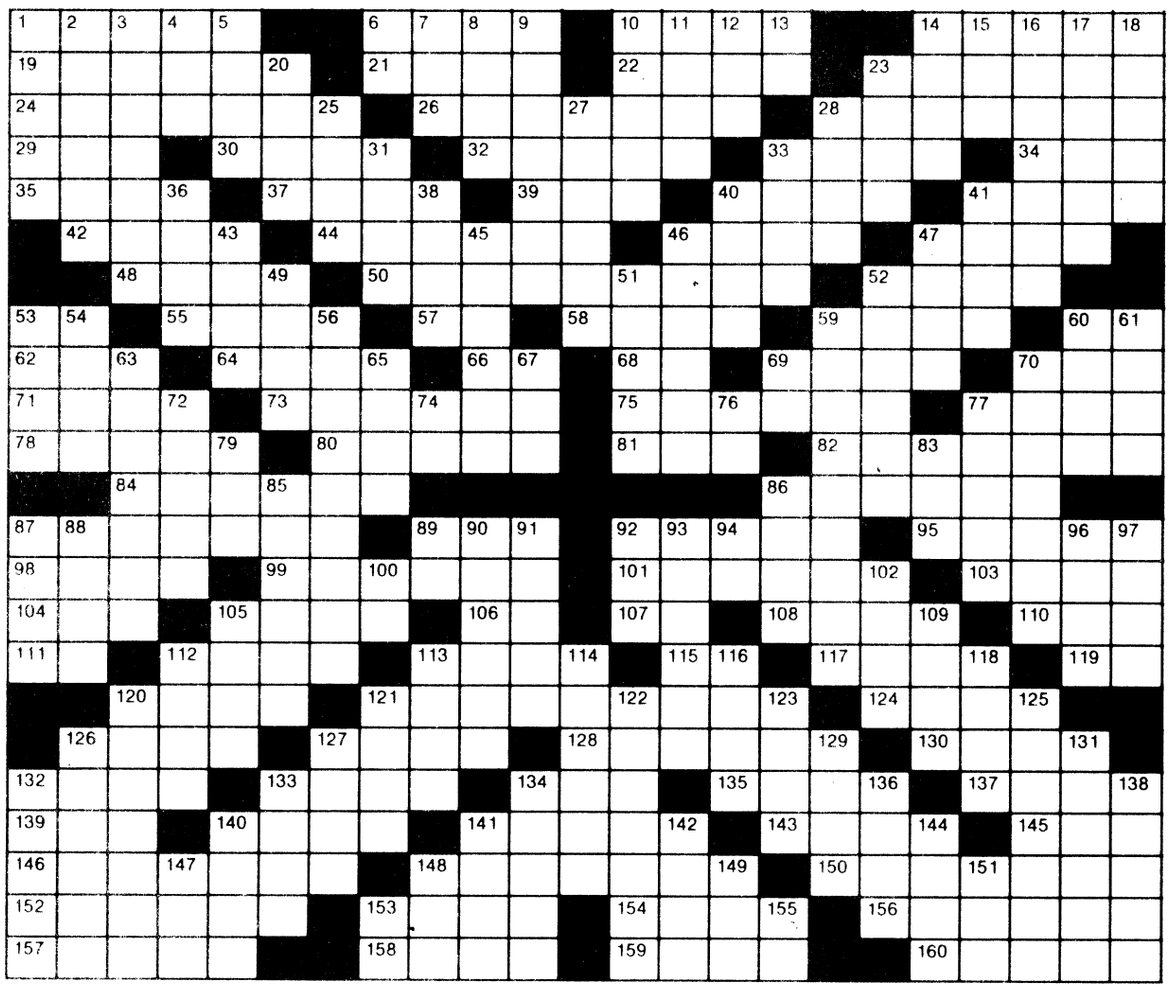
Have respect for the water, even if it's a small lake. The two major causes of fatal accidents are capsizings and falls overboard. Most happen in small boats on small inland bodies of water.

Don't overload your boat. The small utility, or jon boats people use for fishing, hunting and day cruising tend to be unstable and easily swamp or capsize. Modern outboard boats have a plate indicating the maximum outboard horsepower and carrying capacity of the boat. The number of seats in a boat isn't a measure of its capacity. Overloaded boats overturn.

Booze and boats don't mix. The stressors in the marine environment — the motion and noise of the boat combined with sun, wind and glare — compound the effects of alchol. If you want to serve alcohol on your boat, use the designated-driver concept. But remember, any intoxicated person, operator or passenger, is at risk on the water.

Water safety rules stressed

TRADOC's Safety Office



"Accidents and loss of life in water activities are unnecessary," stresses George Morgan, TRADOC's Safety Office Director. While swimming this summer, remember these rules:

- Never swim alone, regardless of your ability. Always use the "buddy system," and make sure your buddy is a good swimmer.
- Swim only at supervised areas where lifeguards are on duty. A typical accidental drowning involves a young soldier, age 19-26, who had been swimming in an unauthorized area. Such areas often include unseen hazards such as weeds, bottles, tree limbs, deep holes, pollution, etc.
- Don't swim if you are chilled, overheated, overtired or if you've just eaten. Don't swim during a storm.
- Cold water can kill you quickly. You should never dive into water before determining its temperature. Enter the water slowly, to let the body adjust to the temperature. You should never try to overcome the shock of cold water by rapid entry.
- When cold water covers your body all of a sudden, it can cause you to gasp and suck water into your lungs, and you may

Beetle Bailey joins voting campaign

Staff Writer Association

Beetle Bailey, the military's comic strip character featured in over 1,600 daily newspapers worldwide, recently received a "special assignment" from Anheuser-Busch, Inc. in cooperation with the United States Department of Defense. In a special presentation ceremony to U.S. Secretary of Defense, Frank C. Carlucci, at the Pentagon, Thomas L. Moore, Director of Military Sales for Anheuser-Busch, recently revealed Beetle Bailey in his new role as spokesperson for the current Armed Forces' "Get Out The Vote" campaign.

The campaign utilizes posters and counter cards featuring Beetle Bailey in an effort to register military personnel stationed away from home to vote by absentee ballot. At the direction of Anheuser-Busch, Inc., the giant St. Louis brewery, which is funding and administering this effort, Cartoonist Mort Walker was asked to create the original artwork to assist the U.S. Armed Forces in this massive Public Service campaign.

Thomas L. Moore presented Carlucci with a special framed poster and explained the other kit materials designed for program implementation that will be provided on all U.S. military bases throughout the country, by Anheuser-Busch wholesalers. These same materials will be provided to our Armed Forces serving abroad as well.

"There is a great need for an effective voter awareness campaign among the military," says Moore, himself a retired Air Force colonel. "Military personnel are usually on the move," he says, "and it's understandable that their voting privileges may not be top-of-mind until just before election time. Unfortunately, several states require that absentee voter registration be requested as much as 40 days prior to the election."

In support of this year's campaign, Moore cites 1984 election returns, which indicated that over 900,000 armed service personnel failed to vote.

"With Beetle Bailey's high profile among today's servicemen and women," Moore says, "we expect to assist in the reversal of that fact and see a much larger turnout for this year's important presidential election."

The current campaign has been highly endorsed by all levels of the military. Carlucci warmly received the Beetle Bailey artwork, which features "every man's hero" as a war hero statue accompanied by the slogan, "Be A Hometown Hero . . . Tomorrow Will Be Decided Today . . . Vote!"

Anheuser-Busch, a longtime supporter of the U.S. Armed Forces, is distributing thousands of posters, counter cards, and over 1 million absentee voter information pamphlets through its network of wholesalers. The wholesalers are responsible for coordinating the campaign with local military base voting officers. In addition to the on-site assistance, Anheuser-Busch wholesalers are providing additional support and media coverage through press releases and specially prepared television and radio public service messages.

"This is the kind of thing we really enjoy doing," Moore says enthusiastically. "We're fortunate to have Mort Walker's talent and the support of the military behind us. What we want to achieve is the foundation of what all our military service personnel are fighting for — America's freedom and our right to vote. Making that privilege more accessible to them and their families is the kind of public service Anheuser-Busch will always be honored to perform," Moore says.

Faith School students teach teachers computer skills

Jerry Christy

Bobby Ciccolella teaches the teachers about the computer program that he has been using in his Language Arts class at Faith Middle School to create and illustrate written compositions.

By Beth Middlemiss
Fort Benning Schools

A group of Faith Middle School seventh graders — Bobby Ciccolella, Sonia Garcia, Michelle Hann, Sterling Harris, Michael McCloud and Jackie Prior recently shared in a learning experience with a class of graduate students at Columbus College.

What made this session rather unique was that it was the younger students who taught the older students.

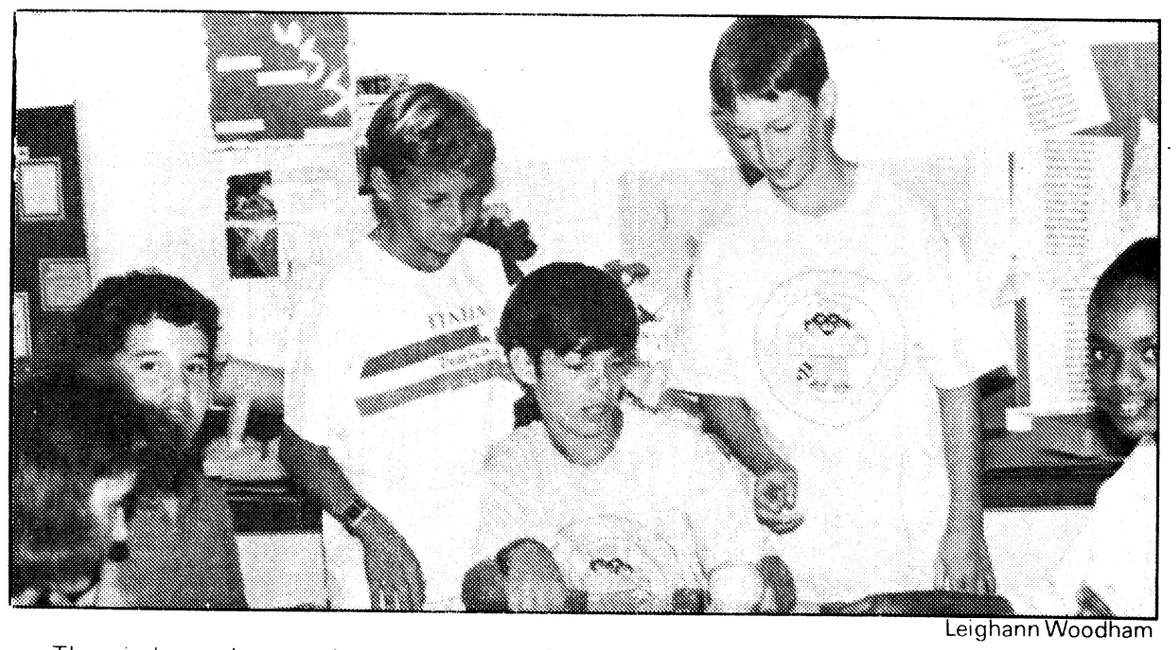
Under the direction of Marcie Collins, the Faith students demonstrated computer skills developed in Collins' creative writing class. The graduate students (in-service teachers from various regional schools) are enrolled in Dr. James Brubaker's course in Teaching Writing Skills at Columbus College.

As computers become more accessible to students at all levels, techniques are being developed to capitalize on students' motivation to develop their writing skills with a variety of word processing programs.

The program demonstrated by the Faith students is called LogoWriter — a unique program in which students can not only write story text but also illustrate with color graphics, animate and produce musical accompaniment.

According to Collins, the students are prone to write much more with a program like LogoWriter than they would with a pen or pencil. Beyond that, the real benefit students see is that it is much easier and more fun to correct and revise their writing on the computer.

Once each of the students' creations had been demonstrated the class broke into small groups and the graduate students were given some hands-on LogoWriter instruction by the seventh graders.



Over the years, there have been numerous exchanges between the Fort Benning Schools and Columbus College, but it is a special occasion when students get the opportunity to "teach the teachers."

Scouts tackle cleanup of Benning for Eagle

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

Members of Boy Scout Troop 27 are making it their business to make Fort Benning a beautiful place.

The boys are doing various projects around post as part of earning the rank of Eagle Scout, the highest rank obtainable in Boy Scouting. According to Lt. Col. James Holt, 1st Battalion, 507th PIR commander and program chairman for the Fort Benning District, Chattahoochee Valley Council of the Boy Scouts of America, this group has done many community services around post to earn their badges.

He said some good examples are fingerprinting of kids as part of the Identi-kid program, conducting food drives, landscaping the exterior of buildings, and a drug awareness program where the Scouts made sure outdated drugs were dispose of properly.

A particularly interesting project is one that Jeremy Holt just completed. It is a good example of the community and the military working together.

Jeremy Holt painted the newest additions to Santa's Castle which are the bicycle storage shed and repair shop.

Lt. Col James Holt said his son had seen an article in The Bayonet where 36th Engineer Group had brought the buildings over to the Castle and noticed that they could stand to be repainted.

"After he decided that he had wanted to do that for his project, he obtained permission to start the project."

Holt said that his son and the boys who helped him spent 96 hours scraping, painting, undercoating and replacing boards on the buildings that will indirectly make some small child happy.

But, also the boys involved in these projects learn they are supposed to help out their fellow person.

Along with the community service project, the Scout has to complete 11 other steps before reaching the rank of Eagle Scout. Jeremy Holt has just finished the painting of the building, which was the last thing needed to send his Eagle Scout Packet forth to the Boy Scouts of America Board. If all goes well, Jeremy Holt will soon be an Eagle Scout.

Red Cross seeks youth volunteers for summer

The Fort Benning Red Cross is looking for teens to take part in its Youth Volunteer Program.

"The program is open to youths ages 12 (rising seventh graders) and up, but only those 13 and older can work in the medical positions," said Dotti Bouldin, Volunteer Station chairman.

A volunteer position can be whatever the student wants it to be. They can work as many or as few hours as they want — it's up to them.

Positions available include jobs as receptionists, ward clerks, helpers at the pediatrics ward and newborn nursery of Martin Army Community Hospital, as well as jobs in the library and veterinary and dental clinics.

The program gives young people a chance to contribute to the community in a meaningful way while helping them grow and mature. It also allows them to gain job skills and get a chance to explore a possible career field.

Students who apply and are approved must attend an orientation session tomorrow at 9 a.m. in the MACH conference room on the 2nd floor at the hospital and both student and a parent must attend the screening interview.

"We do this so they will understand what we expect of them and what they can expect of us," Bouldin said.

Application packets are available at the Red Cross office, on the corner of Vibbert and Ingersoll streets, and the MACH Red Cross Office, on the 7th floor of Martin Army Community Hospital. Applications must be turned in by today at 4 p.m.

For more information, call the Red Cross at 545-5194.

DA monitors child care

Army News Service

Command support and recognition for Child Development Services is the most noticeable finding the Department of the Army Child Care Evaluation Team sees as they travel around the world inspecting the Army's child development facilities and programs.

Formed nearly seven months ago to monitor quality control of safety, security and health standards, the team is almost finished inspecting the installation programs and training major command inspection teams.

"Our intent is to educate major commands to assess and assist their own programs, then disorganize," said Lt. Col. Don Rojas, chief of the evaluation team. The team recently completed training the U.S. Forces Command evaluation team and inspecting the child development program at Fort Campbell, Ky. They plan to visit U.S. Army, Europe in August.

Rojas says that the future for Army child care looks favorable. "Congressional support remains strong as shown by the recently approved construction budget for this fiscal year and the projection for next year," Rojas said. "We'll never be able to provide center-based services to everyone who needs it," he added, "but we can accommodate the needs of the installation by expanding the family child care system at each installation."

Nearly 150,000 children are cared for annually in 304 child development centers and in 8,000 homes throughout the world. "It's very evident that child development services is a vital link to readiness and retention of soldiers," Rojas said.

Accidental deaths drop

TRADOC Safety Office

Overall, the number of TRADOC fatalities has dropped from 83 in 1985 to 45 so far this year.

According to George Morgan TRADOC's safety director, this drastic reduction is due in great part to a directive established by Gen. Maxwell Thurman in 1985 when he was the Army's vice chief of staff.

"He directed all the commands to submit five safety initiatives to reduce accidents," Morgan said. "One of TRADOC's initiatives was water safety. During 1986 and 1987, only six recreational drownings were reported in TRADOC, compared to the eight reported during 1985."

Although the number of fatalities have been going down considerably, safety awareness will continue to be a key factor in preventing water-related accidents this year, Morgan says.

Before engaging in any type of water activity this summer, such as swimming, boating, water skiing, diving, fishing or sailing, Morgan advises you to learn to swim.

There is no substitute for personal skill. Enroll in community learn-to-swim classes sponsored by the Red Cross, YMCA and other groups. Then stay within your ability. If you can't swim, stay in areas where lifeguards are on duty.

Avoid cold water and swim only in approved areas. Cold water is the leading cause of Army drownings. Don't dive or jump into cold (below 70 degrees farenheit) water; it can cause you to gasp and you may drown. Other frequent causes of soldier drownings are swimming or boating in bodies of water without knowing the hazards. It doesn't matter if you are a good swimmer. You can get tangled in weeds, or the water may be polluted.

Wear a personal flotation device (PFD). All persons swimmers or not who go near cold, fast, dangerous water should wear suitable PFDs. A PFD is the first and best line of defense against drowning.

Learn to use the cardiopulmonary resuscitation (CPR) technique. Doing the proper thing in an emergency could save a life.

Never mix alcohol and water sports. Alcohol is involved in a very high percentage of water-related accidental drownings. Overindulgence can result in a fatal accident. In some situations, even a beer is too much.

Pay attention to weather conditions. You will be surprised how many people ignore the obvious. If the weather is bad, don't begin the activity. If the weather becomes inclement after the activity has begun, the water enthusiast should know how to handle it.

"Water is fun," Morgan says. "However, courtesy and common sense must be used in all water activities at all times."

drown.

- Know your limitations as a swimmer. Stay well within your limits of endurance and ability. Don't overestimate your ability as a lifesaver. Don't show off.
- Beware of all rough water. Fighting a current causes exhaustion, panic and drowning.
- If you or any member of your family has never learned how to swim, there is no better time than right now. There is no substitute for knowing how to swim, to protect yourself and help others. Parents should see that every child has an opportunity to learn to swim well. Enroll them in community learn-to-swim the Red Cross, YMCA, YWCA, and other groups. See that they learn the drownproofing technique to stay afloat for extensive periods of time.
- Small children always should swim under adult supervision.
- If you don't know how to swim, don't rely on floating devices such as inner tubes, mattresses or floats. It is too easy to fall off these things and have them float out of your reach.
- To rescue a victim, throw him/her a flotation device such as an oar, plank, cooler, rope or any item that will float and support a person.
- Learn the cardiopulmonary resuscitation (CPR) technique. This is not only important in water sports, but many other activities as well.
- Keep in mind that alcohol not only dulls your senses and judgment; it also increases your susceptibility to hypothermia or reduction of the body's inner temperature.

DoD civilians view Army life

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Recently 50 Department of Defense civilians came to view Army life at Fort Benning.

The purpose of the visit was to give executives a better idea of how the armed forces are run and how their tax dollars are spent.

During their visit they observed airborne operation conducted by 1st Battalion, 507th Parachute Infantry Regiment, dined with officer candidates and viewed a Bradley capabilities exercise conducted by the 29th Infantry Regiment.

At the Bradley CAPEX they were able to fire the Bradley along with many other weapons stocked in the Army's arsenal.

The civilians also toured most other major units on post and then departed at the end of the week.

Benning body showdown nears

By Ann M. McDonald and Shawn Bryson
Bayonet staff writers

Not much work-out time remains for people competing in this year's Mr. and Ms. Fort Benning Body Building Championship.

The competition will take place June 11 at Marshall Auditorium in building 4 and will feature a show-and-tell of body builders whose months of grinding workouts, strict dieting and relentless self-discipline have nearly boiled down.

The contest is still open to all active duty men stationed at Fort Benning and to women who are active duty, family members (active duty or retired), Department of the Army, Non-Appropriated Funds, and Army Air Force Exchange Service Civilian Employees.

Up for grabs at the contest will be first-, second- and third-place trophies as well as the best poser award. The men's competition will also offer a most muscular trophy.

Hungry to reclaim his title as Mr. Benning is Franklin Roach, who won the competition in 1986. Roach was the second-place finisher in last year's contest.

Although Roach is also known for his powerlifting and has recently qualified for the All Army Trials, he has been seriously concentrating on his bodybuilding since March and feels ready for the challange.

To reach his peak, Roach has used a combination of diet and a rigorous training program.

Roach explained that although bodybuilding and powerlifting both involve the use of weights, the training programs are totally different.

"I have increased the number of repetitions I do in each different exercise and decreased the rest time in between each exercise," he said.

Roach added that he has changed his diet as well. "I am currently on a 70-30 diet, which consists of 70 percent carbohydrates, 25 percent chicken and fish and 5 percent fats."

He said he has found that is the system that works best for him.

Coming down the closing stretch, Roach feels he's primed and ready to retake the crown. But right after that competition is over, it's back in search of another crown at the All Army powerlifting trials.

On the female side, one competitor is hoping to better herself with a good finish this year is SSgt. Gwen Garrett. To this point, Garrett is the only female soldier entered in the contest.

Garrett won third place in last year's Ms. Fort Benning competition and believes that she is taking a different approach to this year's contest."Last year was a lot of fun for me, but I'm a little more serious about this year," Garrett said.

Garrett explained that she has gone from 133 pounds to 118 pounds in the last 11 weeks and feels she's in better shape this year.

The soldier has her own philosophy about females and body building. "Many ladies think that going to a gym and lifting a lot of heavy weights is the answer, but, I don't think I've lifted a single weight over 70 pounds in a long time. Consistency is what builds and tones the muscles of the body," Garrett said.

Garrett gives praise to all the people at the gym who have supported her. "The guys at the gym used to hassle me when I first started working out but since they've realized how serious I am about body building, they have been a really big help," she said.

Garrett added that keeping the training going is not easy for a soldier to do. "I work at the Women's Health Clinic at Martin Army Community Hospital and have a 6-year-old son so it's hard to find time to fit the training in," she said.

The contest will remain open to all who qualify up to the day of the event and contestants should arrive at Marshall Auditorium no later than noon.

72nd Engs dump Co C, 197th Spt, 6-1

George Mingee
197th Infantry Brigade correspondent

"Batter up," yelled the umpire as Company C, 197th Support Battalion took to the plate. Co. C was squaring off against the 72nd Engineers (Combat), who were both playing their second game of the new season.

The Engineers behind good pitching and timely hitting recorded a 6-1 win in 197th Infantry Brigade softball league play.

The game started slow with the first inning yielding only one run scored by Co. C. But in the bottom of second inning, the Engineers batted around taking a 3-1 lead.

"We're the team to beat," yelled a player from the Engineer's dugout. And when William Henry went to bat in the top of the third, it was obvious the dugout player was right. Henry's hard hit triple brought in two of his teammates and increased the Engineers' score to 5-1.

When Co. C came to bat, they were continuously stifled by the spiralling pitches of Tommy Fuller.

The game was scoreless after the third inning rally by the Engineers until the bottom of the sixth. At that time, Henry slammed another triple and brought in a teammate, making the score 6-1 in favor of the Engineers.

With the score 6-1 in the top of the 7th, Co. C needed a rally to catch the Engineers, but the Engineers infield was just too tight defensively to yield runs. Three outs were quickly recorded, boosting the Engineers' record to a 2-0 start in the young season.

Robert Holtz, pitcher for Co C, 197th Spt. Bn., picks up a ground ball hit by Tommy Fuller and hurls it towards first baseman Fernando Salnave to make the out.

Keep fit while traveling, follow these tips

By Dick Kazmaier
Fitness Forum

Editor's note: Dick Kazmaier is the Chairman of the President's Council on Physical Fitness and Sports.

Keeping up your fitness program when you travel no longer is a major challenge. Whether you're on the road for business or pleasure, it's easy nowadays to fit in a workout. With a little advance planning, adding exercise to your schedule can even make your trip more enjoyable.

Too many hours spent in an airplane, bus, train or automobile can give you tired muscles and a lazy mind. That's not the best way to start, or end, a trip. Exercising while traveling has many benefits, from reducing the tension of a hectic schedule to giving you more energy during your days away from home. It's also important to maintain the fitness level you've previously worked so hard to achieve.

By following a few "pre-trip" planning tips, and keeping a flexible schedule and open mind, you can keep your fitness level up or, if you're a beginner, find a more interesting way to exercise. If nothing else, a little exercise while on the road will help you counter one of the great temptations of travel - overeating.

Tip 1 - Select a hotel with or near a fitness club and/or pool. Many hotels now have tennis courts or a golf course. Ask your travel agent to book you into a hotel with some type of exercise facility, or call in advance to see what is available.

Tip 2 - If you walk or jog for exercise, choose a hotel with safe scenic trails nearby. Ask for a local map when you check-in and directions to safe areas to walk or run. Some hotels and facilities offer running course maps detailing trails of varying distances. It's a good idea to carry some form of identification card with you, just to be on the safe side.

Tip 3 - Make your exercise clothes a priority when packing. Don't leave them until last or they may be left at home. Check the climate of your destination so that you'll be prepared and pack appropriately.

Tip 4 - Consider taking along some portable workout gear. A jump rope, rubber exercise tubing, or light weights may come in handy if you're confined to your room for lengths of time. And, if you're a swimmer don't forget your goggles. Hotel pools often have high levels of chlorine.

Tip 5 - Check the television guide where you are staying for exercise programs. Stations often run exercise programs in the early morning, noon and before dinner hours. You can get in a half-hour workout in the privacy of your room, which will keep you alert and full of energy for an important meeting or presentation. Some hotels even sponsor their own closed-circuit exercise program.

Tip 6 - If you're planning a vacation, consider the many new fitness-themed packages sponsored by hotels and cruise lines. Here, you'll have your workouts planned into your itinerary and offset such luxuries of vacation travel as buffet meals and poolside cocktails. You can take these opportunities to try a new activity or exercise class, and make new friends.

Tip 7 - Look for hidden opportunities to be physically active. Use the stairs instead of the elevator and walk to meetings when possible. Take a walking tour of local attractions and scenic highlights. You'll really get to know the area best when you explore on foot.

At the very least, finish each day with some curlups, pushups and other exercises you can do easily in your room, ending with a relaxing series of stretches. From Maine to California, and elsewhere, it's easy to stay fit when you're on the go.
