2nd ITB graduates end training with an airlift FTX

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

A week-long Field Training Exercise marked the end of infantry advanced individual training for soldiers of Company C, 4th Battalion, 36th Infantry Regiment, 2nd Infantry Training Brigade.

Although an end-of-cycle FTX is required for most training units, some of the missions in it are not.

The troops were flown to their objective, and their gear was slingloaded and dropped at the site.

According to Capt. Tom Person, commander of the unit, soldiers are usually bussed to the objective and then they start the exercise.

Person said that he wanted to make their last exercise more realistic so he and his staff arranged for air support.

Once the unit touched down at the site, they were aggressed by members of the 10th Mountain Division. These battles continued throughout the entire exercise.

The troops also executed six battle drills during the exercise and road marched back to their company.

Pvt. Brian Rexroad of Co. C said all the skills he has been taught throughout his training have now just come to him automatically.

"I guess instinct just brought it all together," he said. "Now, I understand why the drill sergeants drilled me time and time again."

He added that it is nice to know that everything he learned really was necessary and that even the trivial things he was taught were useful.

Ann M. McDonald

Another slingload of equipment is attached to a Blackhawk helicopter to be dropped at the field training exercise site.

Benning NCOs convicted by general court-martial

Staff Correspondent

Sgt. Philip Humphrey was tried by a General Court-Martial on two specifications of failing to be at the appointed place of duty; five specifications of absent without authority; one specification of escape from custody; 10 specifications of intentionally writing bad checks for a total of $1,037 and one specification of larceny.

At the conclusion of the case, Humphrey was convicted on four specifications of being absent without authority; escape from custody; 10 specifications of intentionally writing bad checks and the one specification of larceny. He was sentenced by Colonel Richard Scheff to be dishonorably discharged from the service, total forfeiture of all pay and allowances, reduced to the Pvt. 1 and confinement for three years. Humphrey will serve his confinement at the United States Disciplinary Barracks, Fort Leavenworth, Kansas.

SFC Bruce Dudley was tried by a General Court-Martial on one specification of larceny; one specification of willful dereliction of duty and one specification of false swearing.

Dudley, as acting first sergeant, gained possession of two money orders belonging to a PFC Anderson totaling $1,000. Dudley failed to issue a receipt for the money orders and properly secure them as required by unit SOP. Despite attempts by Anderson, Dudley never returned the money orders. The money orders were ultimately cashed by Dudley's wife. When confronted about the matter, Dudley at first stated that he returned the money orders, then when confronted with the money orders showing that his wife had cashed them, he stated he gave Anderson an envelope with pieces of paper in it. Later he stated he may have taken them home and that his wife must have found them on her own.

Dudley was convicted of all charges. He was sentenced to be dishonorably discharged, total forfeiture of pay and allowances, reduction to Pvt. 1 and confinement for three months.

Sgt. Nathan J. Creps was tried by a General Court-Martial Aug. 22, on two specifications, one for mail fraud and the other for bank fraud.

Creps falsified an MP report to indicate that his automobile had been stolen and mailed the report to his bank in an effort to stop the car from being repossessed.

Creps was convicted of both specifications and sentenced to be discharged from the Army with a Bad Conduct Discharge, to forfeit $400 pay per month for six months, to be reduced to private and to be confined for six months.

Golden Knights paratrooper to jump into 1988 Olympics carrying America's colors

Army News Service

He said he just wanted to jump when he joined the Army six years ago. In mid-September Sgt. Chuck Lackey will get what he wants when he jumps before millions of spectators who will watch him jump into the opening ceremonies of the 1988 Olympics carrying the American flag.

"It'll be the proudest moment of my life," said Lackey, who is a member of the U.S. Army Parachute Team, the "Golden Knights."

Lackey said he wanted to go airborne when he joined the Army but learned the military occupational specialty he enlisted for, missile mechanic, was listed as non-airborne. This exclusion didn't stop him from jumping, however. He took up skydiving. By 1986, Lackey was so proficient in his hobby, he was invited to tryout for the Golden Knights and was selected to the team. His selection was a slight dilemma for his branch managers, says Lackey, as one prerequisite to be a Knight is to be airborne qualified.

Lackey finally got his wish and was sent to airborne school. He was also retrained and reclassified as a Vulcan anti-aircraft gun mechanic before being assigned to the Golden Knights. Lackey was initially assigned to one of the Knights' two demonstration teams, but it became immediately apparent his mind was set for competition.

"I'm a competitor at heart," said Lackey. "Whatever I do, I like to do it better than anyone else."

This year, Lackey was reassigned to the Knights Style and Accuracy Competition Team. At the U.S. National Skydiving Championships in Muskogee, Okla., he demonstrated just how competitive he was as the team rookie took first place in the Accuracy competition, earning himself a position on the U.S. Parachute Team and the privilege of jumping the American flag into the Olympics.

"I wasn't surprised at all," said the Golden Knights first sergeant, Jeff Moon. "I know how hard he's worked to get where he is. In the afternoon when the competition team finished practicing at Reaford, N.C., I've seen Chuck pay for a civilian lift ticket to make another practice jump. When we were in Yuma, Ariz., in January, he would go jump with the demonstration team when the competition team quit for the day."

Moon said if there is anyone on the team who deserves the right to jump the American flag into the games in Seoul, Lackey deserves that honor. Lackey explains his enthusiasm for jumping as "an addiction." His only interest outside the work place is the same thing he does at work -- jumping. "Not too many people get to do their hobby for a living," he said, saying he plans to stay with the Golden Knights as long as the Army allows him and if he is ever reassigned, he said he'll work hard for an airborne assignment.

Hard work has gotten him to the Olympics. He expects hard work to continue to take him where he wants to go.

Eufaula to host Vietnam veterans' convention in Nov.

Veterans of America

The historic resort city of Eufaula will play host to the first Regional Convention of The Vietnam Veterans of America, Nov. 10-13.

After more than a decade of being ignored, Vietnam veterans from Alabama, Georgia and the Panhandle region of Florida are being honored by a coalition of veterans organizations, veterans service groups and governmental agencies stretching from the local level all the way to the halls of Congress.

The first official convention function will be the celebration of the birthday of the U.S. Marine Corps Nov. 10, at the Holiday Inn in Eufaula. Marine veterans, as well as Marine Reserve and active duty personel in town to participate in the Veterans Day parade Nov. 11, will host the gala event.

The Veterans Day parade will be the largest of its kind ever staged in south Alabama and southeast Georgia with well over 150 military units and more than 50 veterans units and local university and high school bands participating.

Retired Admiral Thomas H. Moorer, former Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff for two terms, will be the Grand Marshal of the parade and featured speaker at the awards dinner later that evening at the VVA Convention at Lakepoint Resort in Eufaula.

The Vietnam Veterans of America was chartered by an act of Congress and draws its membership from Vietnam era veterans including many still on active duty. In Alabama, the VVA is under a state council with chapters in Dothan, Ozark, Fort Rucker, Montgomery-Maxwell Gunter Air Force Base, Decatur, Birmingham, Tuscaloosa and Huntsville. Veterans of the Vietnam War era may obtain information on the VVA and this first regional convention by writing to The Vietnam Veterans of America, Convention Chairman, P.O. Box 1942, Dothan, Ala., 36302-1942, or call (205) 792-2868 or (205) 793-9697. Requirements for membership in the VVA are active duty service for at least 160 days during that time period of the Vietnam War.

Benning's four-year-old solar pond, still among the world's largest, saves money

Becky Ray

Fort Benning's solar pond facility, constructed in 1984, consists of 80 ponds, each 16 by 200 feet. The facility uses the sun energy to heat water for 26 barracks on post.

By Becky Ray
Energy Section

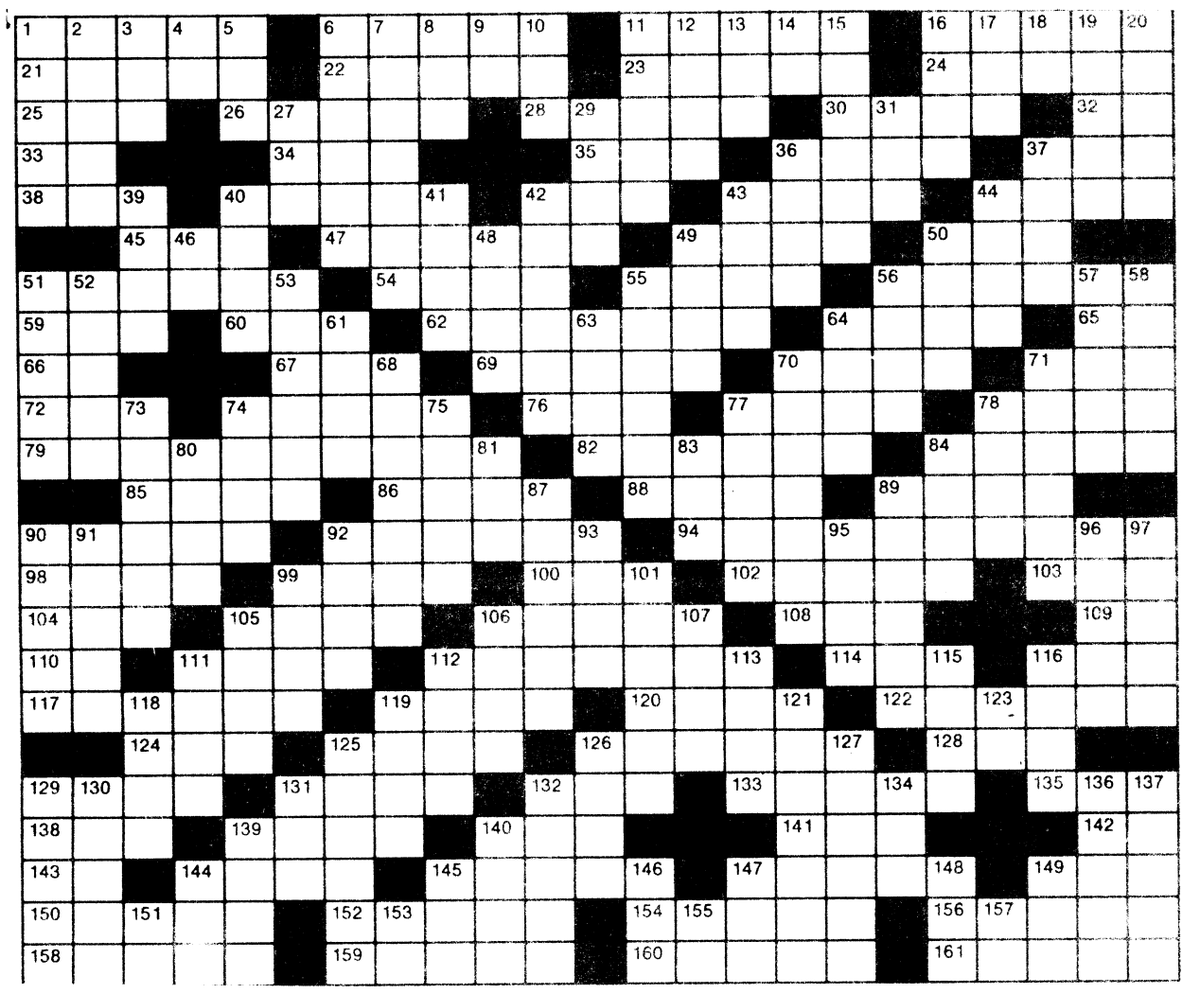
Fort Benning, long known for turning out fine military leaders, carries on this tradition of leadership in the energy field as well. Fort Benning is the home of one of the world's largest shallow water solar facilities, which harnesses the energy of the sun to heat water for domestic use.

The facility, located on Indianhead Road, consists of 80 ponds. Each pond module is constructed of cement curbing and measures 16 by 200 feet. The base of each pond is sand and is lined with insulation. Above the insulation in each pond is a large black water bag. Corrugated glazing panels are arched above the bags to protect them from the weather. Because the panels are translucent, they insulate the ponds while allowing about 89 percent of available sunlight to reach the bags of water.

The solar ponds work in the same manner by which water is heated in a garden hose left in the sun. The sun's rays warm the rubber hose, and the water absorbs this heat.

Fort Benning's solar ponds work in a much larger scale, however. The solar facility covers 11 acres of land and includes a 500,000-gallon-capacity water storage tank, 50,000-gallon-capacity sump tank and more than three and a half miles of underground piping. Water levels and temperatures are monitored and controlled by computer.

Depending on the amount of sunlight reaching the ground, the water in the ponds is heated to temperatures of up to 160 degrees Fahrenheit. Each evening the water is drained by gravity into an underground storage tank and then pumped into the insulated above-ground storage tank. It is then sent out as needed to 26 barracks in the 2700 and 2800 blocks. After being drained, the bags are refilled to start the process again.



The project was completed in 1984 at a cost of approximately four million dollars. It saves the equivalent of about 2,340 barrels of oil each year.

The facility was constructed under the supervision of the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers. The original design was the result of a collaborative effort between the Savannah District of the Corps of Engineers and Lawrence Livermore Laboratories (LLL). The ponds were tested at LLL in Livermore, Calif. and at a demonstration project in Grates, N.M.

When they were completed, the solar ponds broke the world's record for the largest active solar facility. The record was previously held by a one-acre, 80,000-watt flat plate collector system in an African village in Mali, about 120 miles south of Timbuktu.

Trial by one's peers not necessarily better

Army News Service

If you're a soldier accused of a crime, what could offer you better protection of your interests than the equivalent of the civilian community's "right to trial by one's peers?"

Some critics of the military justice system assert that the lack of equivalence shortchanges soldiers. But were these critics to look a little closer, they'd find that the military system has a broader scope of protection.

Recently Lt. Col. Demmon E. Canner discussed the distinction between the military and civilian trial-by-jury systems. Canner serves with the criminal law division of the Office of the Judge Advocate General at the Pentagon. There, he recently expressed his consternation over how critics too often ignore or underrate the distinction between the civilians' trial by one's peers and the soldiers' trial by a panel of members appointed by one of the accused's commanders — a panel, incidentally, empowered to convict and sentence with less than a unanimous vote.

"Since trial by one's peers is a well-recognized standard in the civilian community, its absence in the military sometimes is presumed to be a deficiency," Canner explained. "But when you closely compare the two systems, you find in the military neither a void nor a prejudicial substitute for the jury."

Indeed, Canner and his colleagues in military juris prudence view the court-martial panel as a superior alternative. "For one thing," Canner continued, "trial by one's peers is not all that's commonly imagined. You won't find the phrase in the Constitution. It originated as 'judgment by one's peers' in the days of England's Magna Carta. In its contextual sense, it means trial by one's equals.

"Now, the constitutional standard requires only impartiality. Typically, civilian juries are assembled from large pools of names randomly selected by a civil servant from lists of registered voters, property-tax payers and registered car owners in the court's district. A large number of these persons are excused from jury duty because their family commitments or business affairs won't allow them to serve for the duration of the trial. From those deemed available, the attorneys cull out those found lacking in impartiality."

At this point, Canner emphasized, "The resultant jury may or may not consist of the accused's equals. The education and maturity of individual jurors are left somewhat to chance because the Constitution's standard calls for no more than impartiality."

Canner said that a court-martial qualifies as a jury — "because, by definition in the civilian system, a jury consists of a certain number of men and women selected according to law, sworn to inquire of certain matters of fact, and prepared to declare the truth upon evidence laid before them."

Most servicemembers realize that impaneling a court-martial takes place under authority of congressional statutes (commonly referred to as the Uniform Code of Military Justice), and not merely at the whim of some military officer. But, as Canner stressed, "A court-martial panel is something more than its civilian counterpart." Besides having to meet the constitutional standard of impartiality, the code requires that the court-martial members be selected by a convening authority. That official reflects a special status, Canner said.

"Military officers undergo scrutiny just to become commanders; some never get to serve as commanders during their entire career. Even in this small group, only certain commanders are granted authority to convene court-martials; this selection is based on their experience and level of responsibility. So you could say that general court-martial convening authorities are comparable to community leaders by virtue of their command responsibilities."

What about selection of the membership comprising a court-martial? Canner explained that the convening authority is required to seek quality in the persons he or she chooses for the members. UCMJ rules require the authorities at all levels to detail members who "are best qualified for the duty by reason of age, education, training, experience, length of service and judicial temperament. Once the selection occurs, the authority orders the members to serve court-martial duty.

"Quality people in or out of the military are the busiest," Canner acknowledged. "But the convening authority makes it the members' job to be at the trial if at all possible, or to furnish an explanation for any requested absence."

As to representation of the membership, the members are drawn from the officer corps unless the accused is an enlisted soldier, in which case the soldier can require that at least one-third of the members be enlisted. Here, Canner stressed that, regardless of the officer-enlisted composition, "the soldier is being tried by members of his own profession who have a common background of experience and who know the difficulties of military life as well as its rules." On the procedural side, these knowledgeable members are allowed to ask questions of witnesses, as is the court-martial judge.

"It is not uncommon, for example, in a prosecution of a soldier for disrespect or assault of a superior, for the members to ask the accused's superiors pointed questions as to how they were treating the accused just before the incident. In contrast, the civilian system offers, say, a construction worker no guarantee of being tried by a jury of fellow construction workers; nor are civilian jurors allowed to ask questions."

To the critics who charge that court-martial members are likely to be biased against the accused because the convening authority (who selects the members) is a superior officer, Canner countered: "Unlawful command influence over a court-martial can result in reversal of the conviction of the victim. Obstructing justice is a crime in the UCMJ that can cause the influencer to be punished. Besides that, federal statute prohibits superiors' commenting on court-martial duty in a member's annual performance rating.

"What's more, biased members may be removed by challenges for cause. The defense may remove one member for any reason or no reason at all with a peremptory challenge. As I mentioned earlier, an enlisted soldier may require at least one-third of the members be enlisted rather than officers. Any accused may request trial by judge alone. A military judge is a lawyer who is independent of the convening authority's command. The accused in civilian courts has no access to comparable choices."

Canner cited the most-diffi-

Civil servant retires at Benning after 40 years service to U.S.

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

Retired Lt. Col. Louis Harris, the Chief of Reserve Training Management Division, Directorate of Training and Doctrine, retired again last week.

This is the second time that he has retired from this position. The slot was civilianized after he left active duty in 1978.

Harris has served his country for 40 years.

His career started in 1943 when he entered the U.S. Marine Corps. While serving in the corps he saw action in World War II.

After the war he entered college and participated in a Reserve Officer Training Corps program.

He was commissioned in 1950 thus beginning his Army career.

Harris again saw action in both the Korean and Vietnam War.

After Vietnam Harris came to Fort Benning and never left.

During the retirement reception Brig. Gen. William Hartzog commented on how much knowledge Harris has.

"You haven't lived until you've tried to get something past this man," Hartzog said. "He is an institution and he is going to be sorely missed."

POV shipment could be too much for some

Army News Service

Soldiers planning to ship privately-owned vehicles to Europe need to be sure their budget can stand the strain before making the decision. The costs of obtaining insurance and bringing older American cars up to the strict German safety standards have risen to levels that may be unaffordable — particularly for younger soldiers — a result of the dollar's decline against the German mark.

The current cost of full-coverage insurance on a $9,000 car in Germany for a single or unaccompanied soldier under 25 is $2,688 a year. Liability-only insurance costs $1,069 a year. U.S. Army, Europe officials say that many soldiers are requesting "early return" of their POVs because they can't afford the combination of car payments, insurance and other expenses of living on the German economy.

However, officials stress, there is no such thing as "early return" of a POV. Once you ship a car to Germany, if you can't afford to operate it, your only alternative may be to sell it — possibly at a loss. Soldiers on orders for Germany or who anticipate a move to Germany within the next year and who plan to ship a car should begin preparing early to work the costs into their personal financial equations.

OWC, NCOWC and YAC get scholarship funds

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

Because of special promotions done through the Fort Benning Commissary, some post organizations are hundreds of dollars richer.

The money was given to the Officers and Noncommissioned Officers Wives' clubs for scholarship funds and to the Youth Activies Center to erect a new baseball field.

According commissary director, Jim Hobbins, donations of this type are given Armywide.

He explained that various manufacturers approach officials at the Troop Support Agency, Fort Lee, Va. with ideas on how to donate money; and they, in turn, disseminate it down to post level.

The money given to Fort Benning agencies was gained through a three-week promotion in which the promoters donated a set amount of money per case sold during that period.

cult to understand [illegible] the voting procedure. "Let's quit," he says, "because there's a difference of one [illegible] out of context." Civilian juries, he explained, are required to reach a unanimous verdict to convict, whereas only two-thirds of the court-martial members are needed to convict. (The one exception — to convict the accused of spying during wartime — requires a unanimous court-martial verdict.) Considering the diverse nature of the civilian juries, the [illegible] necessary to assure fair representation of society's views. As I've said because the court-martial jury is more homogeneous, there's less need for all to agree to assure that society's views are represented. Conversely, divergence of opinion among the members is more likely to be the result of personal biases that have no place in the determination of guilt."

[illegible] the [illegible] of the [illegible] differences in the [illegible] there between the two forums. Civilian juries must agree unanimously as to guilt — or as to innocence, because of the [illegible] system's requirement for a unanimous verdict, civilian juries discuss and vote until all agree or until they are hopelessly deadlocked. It's not uncommon for judges to send juries back for further deliberation — to see if someone will change his or her vote, and to avoid a hung jury or otherwise inconclusive trial.

"Now, at a court-martial, the members discuss the case as much as necessary but vote on each offense only once and do so in secret. There's no chance to know how a person voted, nor to convince a change in a vote based on a perceived position inferred from the discussion. There is one taking of the vote, and the accused is either voted guilty or is cleared as a result of the prosecution's failure to convince the court-martial members of the accused's guilt. So there's no inconclusive court-martial; the accused is either found guilty or not guilty."

Cooper summed up the picture in these words: "Some of the most distinguished civilian defense counsel who are familiar with both systems have publicly commented that they believe the accused is better protected in a court martial than in a civilian criminal trial."

4/30th edges MPA in 2nd season tourney

A participant in the second season championship softball game attempts to knock one out of the ballpark.

Bottom-of-the-third grand slam wins it

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

The second season men's post softball championship was a long time coming for 4th Battalion, 30th Infantry, 2nd Infantry Training Brigade players, but they finally did it, defeating the Military Police Activity 6-4.

According to team member, Shelton Little, several members of his team have been working toward this goal for three years.

"We all think our victory is pretty awesome," he said, "and to win the championship before our unit deactivated is an added bonus."

Little said that Henry Mitchell and John Killingsworth were a deciding factor in their win.

"Mitchell hit a grand slam in the bottom of the third inning," he said. "The score was 2-1 in our favor, and the runs he batted in were the last we scored in the game."

Little said Killingsworth's pitching kept MPA from scoring enough runs to win.

"Killingsworth struck out three players," he said, "including what could have been the tying run in the seventh inning."

"Striking out that last batter essentially won the game for us," he said, "not to mention making our team very happy."

Anglers can catch more on hot days by working in tributaries

By Earl Bentz & Steve Price
Outboard Marine Corp.

One of the tricks veteran bass anglers use to catch bass during the hot, lazy dog days of summer is to stop fishing big impoundments. They change locations and head upstream from the open water to work tributary rivers.

The reasons are because the rivers will have a more pronounced current flow, which in turn keeps the water well oxygenated, while at the same time washing food around where bass can get it.

"Big rivers have a lot of advantages for bass anglers this time of year," explains Jack Chancellor, who won the 1985 BASS Masters Classic with river fishing techniques, placed in the 1982 Classic and third in 1981.

"One of the really exciting aspects of fishing big rivers is the possibility of finding large schools of feeding bass. When you do, you can often catch a limit of fish as fast as you can cast."

Chancellor suggests anglers look for underwater bars and points, especially those formed along the insides of river bends. Here, sand, logs and other debris washes downsteam but gets stopped at the bend. What eventually forms is a perfect combination of conditions for bass.

"The upstream side of one of these points will form a sharp drop into deep water," explains Chancellor. "Bass love a shallow water/deep water combination like this, paticularly one where current is continually washing bait around them. Bass move up on top of the sand bar, which may be only two or three feet deep, then go straight down the edge into deeper water."

Chancellor uses several lures for fishing river bars like this, including deep diving crankbaits, plastic worms and jigging spoons.

"Basically, I like to keep my boat in deeper water and cast up on the bar, then work my lure down," he explains. "If bass are shallow on top of the bar, I don't want to spook them by pulling my boat up on them."

If the deepest water he's fishing is less than 10 feet, Chancellor prefers the crankbait. Keeping his rod tip low, he lets the lure plow its way down the bar, bouncing off logs and other obstructions.

With deeper depths, he changes to a plastic worm or a spoon. He prefers a small four-inch plastic worm rigged "Carolina style," in which a one-ounce sinker is slipped on the line above a swivel. A three to four foot leader is tied to the swivel, and the worm, which incorporates two bream-size hooks, tied on.

"The heavy sinker bounces along the slope of the bar," explains the Johnson Outboards pro, "but the little worm floats and darts above. It's as if the commontion caused by the sinker gets the attention of the bass. They look up and see the worm ang go after it."

Chancellor's technique for fishing the worm is fairly simple. He suggests casting it up on top of the bar, then hopping it down the steeper slope into deeper water. He uses a seven-foot rod to make the casting easier, hopping the worm by twitching the rod tip.

Jigging spoons can be hopped down a bar the same way, but when Chancellor knows he's found a concentration of bass, he prefers to fish the spoon vertically. He drops it over the side of the boat and hops it in quick jumps near the bottom.

"Bass move up and down river bars," Chancellor points out, "so anglers should fish the area carefully. I recommend starting at one end of the bar and working it thoroughly to the other end.

"Sometimes you'll have a fast flurry of action, then suddenly you won't get anything. What's probably happened is that the fish have moved. Don't stay in that same place, but instead, move down the bar to see if you can locate them again."

Chancellor also points out that wind and water current can influence where bass position themselves on a bar. Strong current, for example, often tends to move bass up on top of a bar, while calmer waters keeps them deeper.

"I believe the reason this happens," says the popular tournament pro, "is because wind action or current move baitfish into shallow water, and the bass follow. You can even see this on big impoundments when water is released to power dam generators. Bass move from deeper channels up to the flats and points and start feeding. The bait simply moved shallow and brought the bass with them."

In his years of river bar fishing, Chancellor has not noticed any particular characteristics that may make one bar more productive than another. Along with the depth change, he prefers longer bars, simply because they offer more casting opportunities. Often, however, he fishes several different river bars before he locates bass on one.

"Sooner or later you'll find one with bass on it," he smiles, "and when you do, the action will more than make up for all the others you may have fished without a strike."

It's a good idea to wear a personal floatation device (PFD) whenever you're on the water, and Johnson and Evinrude dealers have made that a little easier by offering a PFD designed especially for bass fishermen.

NEWS BRIEFS

Check procedures change

AAFES: The rules for presenting checks for purchase or for cash changed Sept. 1. All identification information must be placed on the face of the check now. This information can no longer be put on the back with the exception of an endorsement signature, which must fit in the top one and one half inches. The change is due to a new federal law designating the open area on the back for banking use only. AAFES officials encourage customers to have personal checks preprinted with all necessary information to prevent customers having to cram information into the limited open spaces on the front of their checks.

Week proclaimed for Hispanics

In recognition of Hispanics' contributions to America, Sept. 11-17, has been proclaimed "National Hispanic Heritage Week." This year's theme is "Hispanic Heritage: Legacy of Involvement."

Hispanic Americans have played a long and distinguished role in the history of our nation. Their accomplishments have been many and varied. They include such areas as law, science, religion, agriculture and the Armed Forces of the United States. In defense of our nation, many Hispanic Americans have received the highest decoration our country can bestow — The Medal of Honor.

Fort Benning has planned and scheduled numerous activities in observance of Hispanics' heritage. All military personnel, their family members and all civilian personnel are invited to observe and participate in these activities during National Hispanic Heritage Week.

Hispanic Americans receive recognition

By Marcos Morales
USARSA Public Affairs Office

This year's National Hispanic Heritage Week will include numerous activities in and around the Fort Benning and Columbus.

The theme, "A Legacy of Involvement," focuses on significant contributions Hispanic Americans have made to U.S. history.

Today, Hispanic Americans make up four percent of the active duty armed services. In 1980, Hispanics constituted 6.4 percent of the total U.S. population, and, in 1987, that total had grown to 7.9 percent, or 18,790,000 Hispanic Americans.

According to the U.S. Census Bureau, Hispanic Americans will be the largest ethnic minority by the year 2,000.

However, Hispanic Americans haven't just concentrated on becoming one of the largest ethnic minorities in this country for that sole reason without contributing to the development of this great nation in that process.

Thirty-seven Hispanic Americans received the Medal of Honor.

Spanish soldiers, priests, explorers and "adventurers" conducted considerable exploration and settlement of large segments of North and South America in the late 15th and 16th centuries.

Spanish settlers assisted colonists against the British during the American Revolution. Bernardo de Galvez, governor of Louisiana, with consent of the Spanish court, sent soldiers to fight alongside Americans at Yorktown.

At the battle of the Alamo in 1836, approximately 183 Texans, including six Mexicans, died fighting for Texas' independence and in, 1845, voted to become part of the U.S.

Tensions between the U.S. and Mexico didn't decrease, and war broke out in 1846. In 1848 Mexico was defeated. It then signed the Treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, ceding to the U.S. the states of California, Nevada, Utah, Arizona and New Mexico and half of Colorado.

Mexicans who stayed were guaranteed their rights by American law, but these were often ignored by the settlers who flocked to the areas.

The 1860 census reflected 27,466 Hispanic Americans living in the U.S. When the War between the States began in 1861 this community — like families all over the country — found itself divided. Some 2,550 Hispanic Americans joined Confederate units; another 1,000 joined the Union forces. In all, more than 9,000 Hispanic Americans fought during the war.

Hispanic Americans also rode with Theodore Roosevelt's "Rough Riders" in the Spanish-American War. They were Pvt. John B. Alamia, Sgt. George W. Armijo, Pvt. Abel Duran and Capt. Maximiliano Luna.

Hispanic Americans also served in the American Expeditionary Force in World War I. Exact numbers aren't known, but many were decorated for their distinguished service. For example: Nicolas Lucero, 19 years old, from Albuquerque, N.M., received the French Croix de Guerre for destroying two German machine gun emplacements and for keeping a constant fire on the enemy positions for more than three hours.

Marcelino Serna received the Distinguished Cross, the French Croix de Guerre, the Victory Medal with three bars, and two Purple Hearts for being wounded in combat and capturing 24 German prisoners.

Estimates for WWII indicate that anywhere from 250,000 to 500,000 Hispanic Americans served in the armed forces — from two and a half to five percent of all persons who served.

Post sponsors observances for POW-MIAs

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Fort Benning will honor the nation's former prisoners of war, those still missing and their families in a ceremony Sept. 16 at 10:30 a.m.

The Fort Benning Prisoner of War Monument at Lumpkin and 1st Division roads will be the site of this year's National POW-MIA Recognition Ceremony, which will be hosted by Brig. Gen. William W. Hartzog, post commander.

Hartzog will be joined at the podium and in placing a wreath at the monument by Jo Ann Shaw, president of the Georgia Committee for POW-MIAs. they will also unveil a plaque dedicating the field as Honor Field.

The United States Army Infantry Center Band will play patriotic music during the ceremony.

At Infantry Hall, the POW-MIA flag will fly beneath the American flag in recognition of the day. It is usually flown every fourth Friday of each month and on special days such as Veterans Day and Memorial Day.

Should it rain the ceremony will move to Marshall Auditorium in Infantry Hall.

Across the country Veterans Administration facilities are sponsoring special observances for next Friday's POW-MIA Recognition Day.

At some facilities, ceremonies will include the awarding of the special POW service medal, which was established recently by Congress and is authorized by the individual military services.

"The medal is an expression of this nation's appreciation for the sacrifices and hardships endured by these men and women," Turnage said.

Individuals who were taken prisoner during an armed conflict after April 5, 1917, qualify for the medal. The period of eligibility includes action during World War I, World War II, Korea and Vietnam.

To receive the medal, individuals may write directly to their service military records center.

The end of an era

Smoke stacks, wires and bricks are all that remain of the old Ranger Training Brigade in Harmony Church. The brigade, then, the Ranger Department was formed there in 1951. Prior to that, the buildings were used to house prisoners of war during World War II. The Ranger Training Brigade relocated to the 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment area, and they moved to main post so they would be more accessable to Lawson Army Airfield.

Supply excellence rewarded here

By Julie Greco
USAITC correspondent

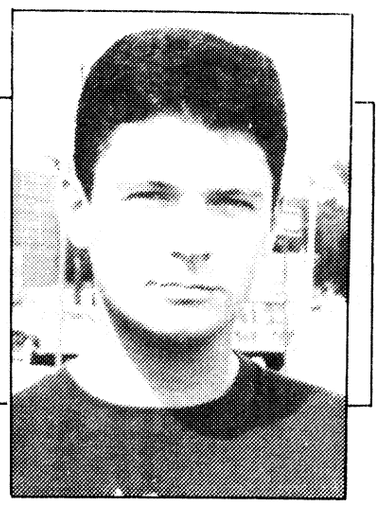
The Property Management Section, S4, USAITC and the Property Book Officer, Charles E. Lewis, received a prestigious award Aug. 31.

Dale Ellis, Director of Logistics, presented the Army Chief of Staff Award for Supply Excellence for Fort Benning and a Certificate of Achievement signed by Maj. Gen. James W. Wurman, Headquarters, TRADOC. The S4 and Property Management Section, U.S. Army Infantry Training Center attained the highest score of 98.9 percent accuracy in the conduct of supply procedures, a very high level of accuracy considering USAITC's property book value of $900 million.

The award resulted from a TRADOC-wide competition. Until recently, no DA-level excellence award program had been established for the supply division. The newly developed program encourages competition at two levels. Level I pits companies, batteries and troops against each other, and level II is for battalions and squadrons. The Army wants to generate impetus for excellence in supply discipline.

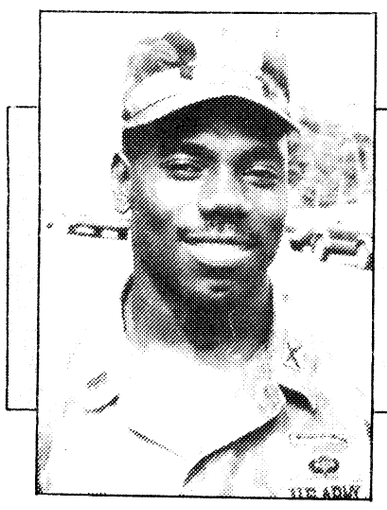
A Fort Benning DOL team looked at all activities of DOL here and found that USAITC S4 Property Management Section achieved the score of 98.8 percent in the conduct of supply procedures in support of training at USAITC. Later, a supply team from TRADOC also examined the operation of the Property Management Section.

Charles E. Lewis has been the Property Book Officer at the PMS for the past seven years. He supervised the consolidation of the 2nd Infantry Training Brigade's property books with the one for 1st Infantry Training Brigade to form the USAITC property book.



Sharron Strickland, his assistant, has worked with Lewis for the past six years. The S4 Officer for USAITC at the time of the competition was Capt. Francis P. Farrell. Other staff members of the S4, PMS are Karen Campbell, Margaret Rice, Claire Seymour, Sgts. Denise A. Harris and Anthony D. Greene and Specs. William J. Peyton and Darrell L. Lawrence. Staff members of S4 PMS who have departed since the award competition are SSgt. Damon Lile, and Spec. Jon R. Sines.

OPINION



VARIOUS VOICES: Name an Hispanic person you think has made a contribution to society?

PFC Tyrone Murphy, Co. C, 1st Bn., 507th PIR — "Rita Moreno has made a great contribution through her music and her acting. She came from a poor family and climbed that ladder to the top, which also shows people, through a lot of hard work and determination you can make it to the top."

2nd Lt. Garrett Fisher, HQ Co., 1st Bn., 29th Inf. — "I think Costa Gravas has made a great contribution to our society. His realistic portrayal of life in his films has greatly enhanced the public's view of different cultures."

1st Lt. Keith Gilmore, Co. C, 1st Bn., 11th Inf. — "Julio Iglesias, he has bridged the communication gap between Americans and Hispanics through his music."

Spec. Joseph Hymon, 533rd Trans. Co., 67th Maint. Bn., 36th Eng. Grp — "Geraldo Rivera. His keen ability to uncover the facts has won him the respect of his peers in the newsworld."

Brenda Mollett, AG Div. — "Ricardo Montalban , I think that his classic style has changed the way people think about some Hispanics."

Snively buckles down on seat belts

By Clyde Snively
USAIC Public Affairs Office

"Buckle up, it's the law" signs hit us whichever way we turn.

For us military types who are used to driving on Army posts, it's no big deal. We've been told to "buckle up or else" for several years now. So we're used to it. Also, we're used to following orders.

Someone comes up to us and says, "Move it or lose it," we move it and ask questions later.

Civilians aren't quite that way and when laws are enacted, no matter how well meaning, no matter how many lives or money, or whatever will be saved, someone is going to protest.

That's just the way we are as Americans.

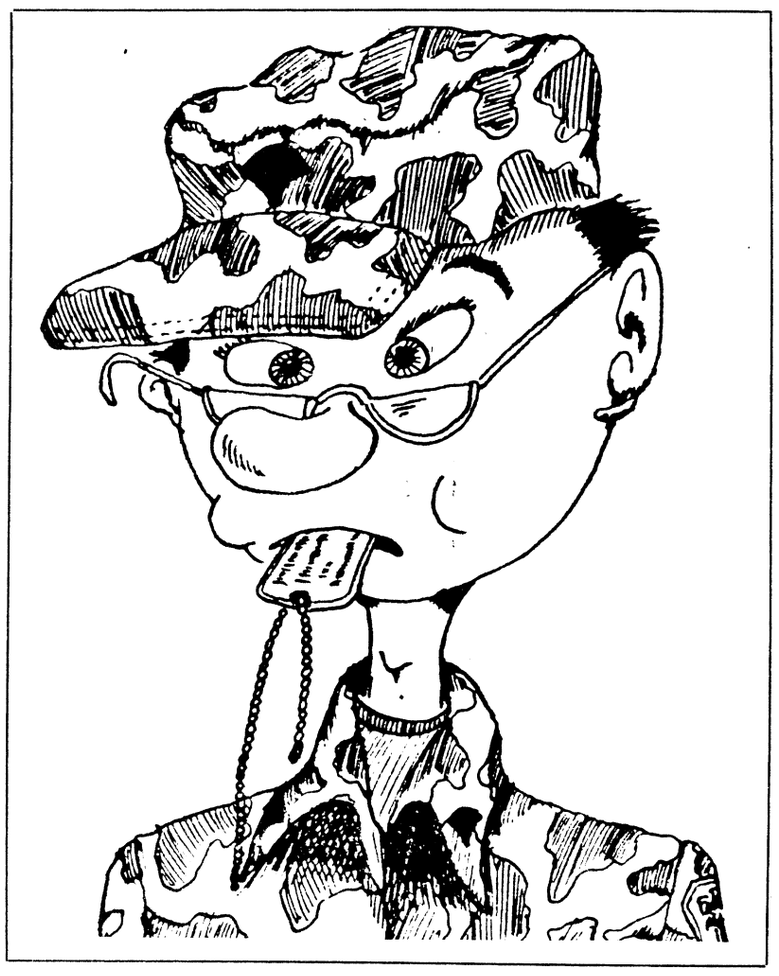
When the 55 mph speed limit went into effect, it was challenged as not being safe, "at slow speeds my mind wanders, I'm not as alert." We all know how hokey that argument is. But now we're up to 65 mph, and people are somewhat mollified, fuel shortages be damned.

When various businesses and governmental agencies began passing laws banning cigarette smoking inside public buildings, the hue and cry went up from smokers claiming their Constitutional rights were being violated.

They never did specify which rights, perhaps the right to contract lung disease, or annoy nonsmokers with their smoke. Overlooked was whatever right the Constitution gave them to blow smoke in other peoples' faces it would stand to reason that the Constitution would give nonsmokers the right to breathe fresh, clean, unadulterated air.

Now in Georgia, people are gearing up to bombast anyone who will listen, and even those who would prefer not to, with their rhetoric against seat belts.

Some argue that seat belts actually result in more injury. There are always the stories about Aunt Thelma Mae being pinned in her flaming car because she couldn't get her seat belt off.



Or second cousin, twice removed, Bobby Joe who, if he hadn't been wearing his seat belt, would have been thrown gently and safely from his vehicle just before it plunged off the cliff.

One person claimed in public print that seat belts prevented him from driving safely, saying a seat belt didn't allow him to twist in his seat. And here all this time I thought cars were aimed by using steering wheels, that it was bowling balls that you applied body language to.

Perhaps his car is like a horse, a little knee pressure here, the horse turns right, leg pressure there and it breaks into a canter. Only in his case, it would be rear end and shoulder pressure on the car seat that would guide the vehicle.

Another person told Columbusites via the airways that seatbelts violated his first admendment rights.

Maybe he can't run his printing press from the front seat while wearing a seat belt, or perhaps it keeps him from exercising his freedom to worship as he wishes or to assemble peaceably.

Others are less specific and, like the smokers, cite vague Constitutional guarantees. You know, like the right to become a vegetable, the right to take up hospital space, etc.

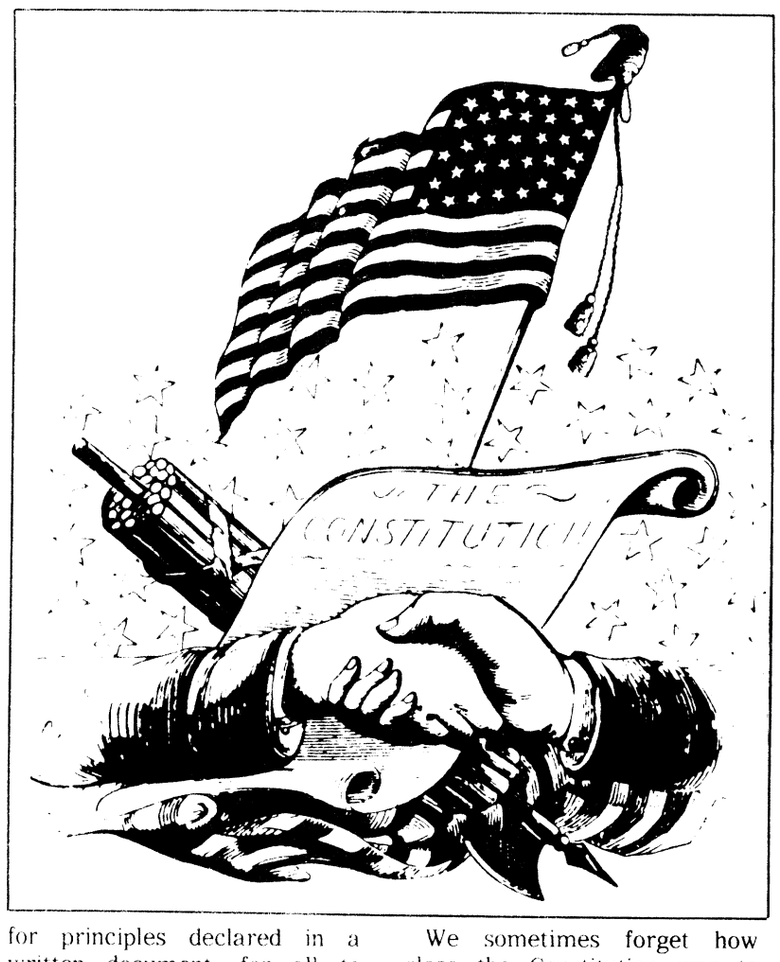
Again, I think somewhere the Constitution must give me the right not to have my insurance rates or taxes raised because some numbskull became a tangled mess of skin, bones and muscles and will now spend 30 years in a hospital at $1,000 a day being repaired.

I look on these anti-seat belt activists with about as much respect as I do for the New York motorcyclists who ride, bareheaded on Albany each year to protest the helmet law — "We demand the right to have our skulls smashed in and spend the rest of our lives in a coma," they seem to be saying.

I've got news for them. I think they, and those who won't wear seat belts for whatever reason, are already comatose.

Soldier's oath is a pledge of allegiance

By Adolf Carlson
2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry



This week we commemorate the 201st anniversary of the United States Constitution, the document we have all sworn to support and defend. It is appropriate that we reflect on the significance of that document and the meaning of that oath.

A soldier's oath is a sacred trust, binding him, body and soul, to a cause he is willing to die for and to kill for. A soldier with no such allegiance, or who makes such a commitment lightly or for selfish reasons, is no better than a murderer, for it is our allegiance that justifies the violence of our profession and makes it a useful part of human development.

Soldiers' oaths are very ancient, the soul of the profession of arms. In feudal times, men swore their loyalty to their king or noble, a personal loyalty that survives today in the world's remaining monarchies. It's most extreme example was the oath of all German soldiers to Adolf Hitler prior to World War II. All the excesses of that regime resulted from that act.

In the Soviet Army, in World War II, the soldier's oath to defend the Stalinist regime was without popular appeal, so the government evoked from the soldiers a loyalty to the motherland, the traditionally sacred soil of Russia. I would imagine it still gives Soviet leadership pause to remember that in their greatest crisis, the common soldier didn't think his government was worth fighting for.

For the American soldier, the inspiration has been different. The United States has produced leaders men would die for, and an attack on U.S. territory has galvanized the nation to action, as the Japanese learned after Pearl Harbor. But primarily, the American soldier has fought for principles declared in a written document, for all to read and judge for themselves. The first such document was the Declaration of Independence, which in declaring the 13 colonies to be independent states, was in a sense our first constitution.

Our victory in the War of Independence ensured our destiny separate from that of Great Britain, but did not yet forge the newly independent states into a nation. Not until September of 1787, 201 years ago, were the procedures and principles of U.S. government published as the U.S. Constitution. Like the Declaration of Independence, that document's safety was assured only by a small number of soldiers, like yourselves, sworn to defend it.

We sometimes forget how close the Constitution was to destruction in its early years. In 1912, for example, we fought a second war with Great Britain, during which the enemy captured our new capital of Washington, D.C. and burned it to the ground. It it weren't for loyal U.S. soldiers, the Constitution might have been burned to ash at the young age of 27 years old.

Later, in mid-century, the Constitution underwent its most serious threat, as the country's racial and regional differences erupted into Civil War. Because of the terrible sacrifices of soldiers from the North and South, the issues that spawned the war were decisively settled. One and only one country would endure between the Atlantic and Pacific, between the Rio Grande and the Canadian border.

But if the nation was newly bonded together, it was far from perfect. Civil rights legislation was far in the future. Among society's vanguards in intergration was the U.S. Army, which in response to President Truman's executive order, integrated and showed how black and white soldiers could fight together. The courage of U.S. Army units in Korea and Vietnam showed how much stronger a truly united American population could be.

That you believe in the Constitution is nothing that requires my comment. Your strong presence, standing shoulder to shoulder, in all shades and accents making up the American Republic, shows your faith better than anything I could say. Anyone with a hostile intent against the United States would be a fool to proceed.

We are sworn not just to defend the Constitution, but to support it. It's up to us not just to be first class soldiers, but first class citizens as well. It's up to us to make sure that the words "all men are created equal" mean exactly what they say. It's up to us to vote this November, and to ensure that the soldiers entrusted to our care exercise their right to vote.

On this Constitutional anniversary, I want you to think about the miracle of our Constitution, and the brave men who have preserved it for 201 years. And I want you never to forget that, like it has for each preceding generation, your time to protect the Constitution will come, but your time to support it is now.

Editor's Note: These powerful words of wisdom were taken from a speech made by Lt. Col. Adolf Carlson, commander of the 2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry, IOBC.

Special resource teacher works with Loyd students

By Beth Middlemiss
Fort Benning Schools

Frank R. Loyd School is beginning this year by bringing in a special resource teacher to work with all Loyd students. Richard Keeton, a writer, will serve as Loyd's artist-in residence from Sept. 12 through 30.

Students will learn from Keeton how to improve their writing while demonstrating that storytelling can be adventure — exciting and fun. His students learn to expect the unexpected; juggling, singing, magic and one-man plays are all used by Keeton in his work with children.

Keeton has been a professional writer for many years. He began as a reporter for the Chicago Tribune specializing in investigations of organized crime and official corruption. He won the Peter Lisagor and Jacob Scher awards for public service reporting.

Since leaving the Tribune, Keeton, along with his wife and writing partner Sharyn Kane, have written for numerous publications including "Delta Sky, Best of Business, Writer's Digest, "Business Atlanta," "Campus Voice," "The Atlanta Journal and Constitution," "The Main Event, Atlanta Magazine," "Southern Style," "Creative Ideas for Living" and others. Keeton earned a journalism degree from the University of Texas and a master's degree in foreign relations from John Hopkins.

He has taught creative writing in more than 40 schools. One of those schools was Faith Middle School where Kane and Keeton served as artists-in-residence in 1986.

Keeton's residency at Loyd School is sponsored by the Georgia Council for the Arts' Artist in Education Program, the National Endowment for the Arts, and the Fort Benning Schools.

NCOA sponsors membership breakfast

NCOA

The Fort Benning Follow Me Chapter No. 295, of the Noncommissioned Officers Association held their first membership breakfast in the Main NCO Club recently. The breakfast will become a quarterly event that will be held by the association to highlight current, ongoing and future activities.

Each breakfast will feature a distinguished guest speaker of past and present affiliation. The guest speaker of the first breakfast was CSM Walter "Ski" Zurowski, USAF. Zurowski is a member of the International Board of Directors and currently holds the position of International Secretary. He has held this position since 1984.

Zurowski's topic of conversation was "Who," "What," When" and "Where." During his speech "Ski" gave an overview of what the Noncommissioned Officers Association means to all enlisted men and women of the Armed Forces and highlighted some of the projects/activities in which the association is currently involved. "Ski" continued by placing heavy emphasis on "Who" the Association defends and "Why" it is extremely vital that each member express his/her personal concern and personal support.

The Fort Benning NCOA Follow Me Chapter, under the direction of CSM William M. Mayo, chairman and Sgt. Maj. Shelby P. Jones, vice-chairman, has been active in a number of projects that have a direct impact on soldiers, both retired and active duty, in the Fort Benning and surrounding area. The Follow Me Chapter has consistently maintained a spot on the National Chapter's Top 10 Distinguished List. SSgt. Samuel Watkins, winner of the TRADOC Drill Sergeant of the Year competition, was elected Honorary Trustee.

More than 250 noncommissioned officers attending the breakfast listened as Zurowski updated the Chapter on some of the accomplishments of the association.

pecentages of Hispanic Americans. With the exception of the 65th Infantry Regiment of Puerto Rico, Hispanic Americans weren't in segregated units. More than 53,000 Puerto Ricans served from 1940-1946. Approximately 200 Puerto Rican women served in the Women's Army Corps.

Hispanic American soldiers participated in all major battles of WWII. The 141st Infantry Regiment from Texas saw 361 days of combat. Its members earned three Medals of Honor, 31 Distinguished Service Crosses, 12 Legion of Merit awards, 492 Silver Stars, 11 Soldier's Medals and 1,685 Bronze Stars.

The first Hispanic American Medal of Honor recipient of WWII was Pvt. Jose P. Martinez, honored for his role in the 1943 American invasion of the Aleutian Islands.

The Puerto Rican 65th Infantry Regiment was the only all-Hispanic division to serve during the Korean conflict. Individual members of the unit received four Distinguished Service Crosses and 124 Silver Stars. The unit was credited with capturing 2,086 enemy soldiers and killing 5,905.

Col. Manuel J. Fernandez, an Air Force fighter pilot, ended the war with 14.5 confirmed "kills" of enemy planes in Korea.

The armed forces didn't keep separate records of Hispanic American participation in Vietnam.

Retired MSgt. Roy Benavidez, who was one of several Vietnam-era Medal of Honor recipients, hails from Texas. Benavidez' bravery, while in live-fire combat against the Viet Cong with a special forces unit, spoke for itself.

Hispanic Americans were in the first American units to enter South Vietnam, as well as the last to leave.

So, lets get involved in all the activities planned throughout the week to celebrate that legacy of involvement, and next year, let's make it better.

SPIRITUAL

Birth of Mary celebrated here

By J. Barry Lonergan
Infantry Training Center Staff Chaplain

Yesterday the Byzantine, Syriac and Catholic Christian communities celebrated the birth of Mary, the Mother of Jesus.

It was an opportunity to reflect on a woman called by the Scriptures as one "blessed among all women." A woman of deep faith, chosen by God to be the Mother of His Son, Mary comes down to us through the pages of Scripture as the one who was present at the significant moments in the life of Jesus. From her He took human flesh and was born in Bethlehem. She held Him in her arms when the shepherds and the Magi visited. She taught the Teacher how to speak; the One who walked upon the waters how to walk; the One who gave us the Our Father how to pray.

When the Master began his public ministry at Cana in Galilee, she was there with advice that speaks to us even today: "Whatever he (Jesus) tells you to do, do it."

When the time came for Jesus to die upon the Cross, Mary, His mother, stood beneath that Cross loving Him to the end. What joy must have been hers on Easter Sunday morning when her faith in Jesus was rewarded. The final mention of Mary in the Scriptures shows her seated in the midst of the Apostles praying for the coming of the Holy Spirit on Pentecost — the event that heralded the beginning of the Christian Community. As the Spirit came upon Mary many years before and heralded the coming of Christ in earthly flesh so the Spirit being poured out on the followers of Jesus heralded the outpouring of God's Spirit across the earth.

Mary stands in history first and foremost as a women of deep faith. She symbolizes the important role of women in the Christian Community — a role that is still unfolding and developing.

In the history of Christianity, there have been many brave men and women of deep Christian faith whose lives are held up for us to reflect on. Among these heroes of the Christian faith, Mary stands in a position worthy of great respect. May God be able to say of us what He said to Mary through the Angel Gabriel, "Blessed are you."

New support group comforts grieving

By Jo Ann Stamey
USAIC Chaplain's Office

Because of the transient, stressful and unpredictable lifestyle associated with the Army, Family Support Groups are an important and vital part of our community.

Support groups come in different shapes and sizes. They can range from 30 people postwide to a small unit group of three. The group can be formed for such special needs as "waiting wives" (husbands on extended TDY or unaccompanied tours), single parents or can be formed in a unit to give wives the support they need when husbands have long work hours.

A need has been identified, and a group is presently being formed called Families of Grief. FOG is being established to provide support to families and individuals who have lost a child through death. This group is open to everyone who has lost a child — from mothers who have miscarried to parents who have lost older children, or even to a grandparent who has raised a child. Chap. (Maj.) Don Troyer states, "There is probably nothing more traumatic than losing a child."

The definition of the word "FOG" is: "To cause to be obscured; blur; to make uncertain or unclear; bewilder." This definition is a true analogy of what a person feels when suffering the loss of a child.

A young couple, Don and Becky Dietz, recently came to Fort Benning and had been members of FOG at Fort Stewart, Ga. After many inquiries and much frustration later, they discovered there was no support group at Fort Benning to help cope with this very special need. Not only were they having to cope with their feelings of loss alone, but they soon discovered this loss was occurring to many others around them.

The Dietz' felt a need for a support group to help them with their grief, but now a fire had been lit in their hearts to help other couples who had lost their precious gifts from God and were in a "FOG." Karen and Don contacted their unit chaplain, Troyer, who gave them the support they needed and, in July this year, had their first meeting. The meeting was a huge success. Said Troyer, "There was lots of sorrow, but good solid support — they were grieving, but growing."

One of the things that came out of the group was that there was a need for an on-call ministry, where a couple with this experience could go to another couple immediately and help them through their crisis.

The Dietz', with the help of Troyer and Chap. (Maj.) Bob White of the Family Life Center, are working very hard to ensure this group will provide the special support and caring a couple needs during their loss. The group will enable family members to share their experience of loss with others who have suffered the same loss.

To help members get to the stage of allowing others to reach out to them is another important phase of this group. To discover the value of self-help groups and to help members arrive at a level of normalcy are two important objectives.

Becky Dietz said, "Many people deny their grief; and if nothing else comes out of this, we want to help people to realize it's okay to grieve."

If you need help coping with the loss of your child or you know someone who needs the support of this special group, please call. If you want to offer your services to FOG, please call. The person to call is Chap. White in the Family Life Center at 545-1760 or the Post Chaplain's Office at 545-2608.

Military observes Religious Education Month in September

By Bill Putman
Protestant Director of Religious Ed

The U.S. military worldwide observes September as Religious Education Month. During this observance, Sunday School begins the quarter with new curriculum material; they observe promotion Sunday for children; and they consider it a time for everyone to make their new beginnings. Catholic Confraternity of Christian Doctrine (CCD) classes that have been out for the summer resume, and other faiths place additional emphasis on their education programs.

A common misconception is that religious education refers to Sunday School and CCD, but these are only a small important part of the entire religious education program. Women of the Chapel, Youth of the Chapel, men's groups, Vacation Bible Schools, Bible study groups, confirmation classes, pre-marriage and pre-baptism seminars, and many other activities combine to compose a religious education program. In the military community, all these programs are included in the post commander's total support for soldiers and their family members.

Religious education is nothing new. To prove this, we only need to explore the Bible to learn that Jewish adults, as well as children, gathered at the Synagogue to receive secular and religious training and to discuss doctrine.

Catholics started religious education in France in the 16th century, and it was officially sanctioned by the Pope in 1905. Protestants in England established "Sunday School" in the 18th century to serve the dual purpose of affording secular and religious education to children who worked six days a week in factories.

In 1735, John Wesley, while a missionary in Georgia, established Sunday Schools, although Sunday Schools as we know them really came into prominence in the 1820s.

Religious education came to Fort Benning early in the post's history. Chaplains conducted Bible studies for troops and, in the early 1920s, the first Sunday School was established.

In 1957, Chap. (Col.) Albert C. Wildman, the post chaplain, influenced the creation of the first Director of Religious Education position, and he also promoted the organization of the first Protestant Women of the Chapel group at Fort Benning. The organization of a Youth of the Chapel group soon followed. The Catholic Women of the Chapel, now MCCW, had its worldwide origin at Fort Benning, soon after the 1957 organization of the Fort Benning Protestant Women of the Chapel.

During 1987, Chap. (Col.) Roy Mathis, the current post chaplain, obtained a grant to procure materials and to saturate the post with Bible studies, which would be available to all personnel. This was kown as Operation SATURATION.

As a result of this effort, 15 new Bible studies have begun in chapels, barracks, and housing areas. Other materials have been purchased to provide for the continuation of several already existing studies. Additional studies are scheduled to begin this month.

Sign-up activities for religious education are occurring at this time. To obtain further information or to participate in any of the religious education activities mentioned above, contact Bill Putman, the Protestant Director of Religious Education, at 545-2366/5508, and for Catholic activities, contact Phil Reilly, the Catholic Director of Religious Education, at 545-2771.

2/11th renews Army oath during Labor Day parade

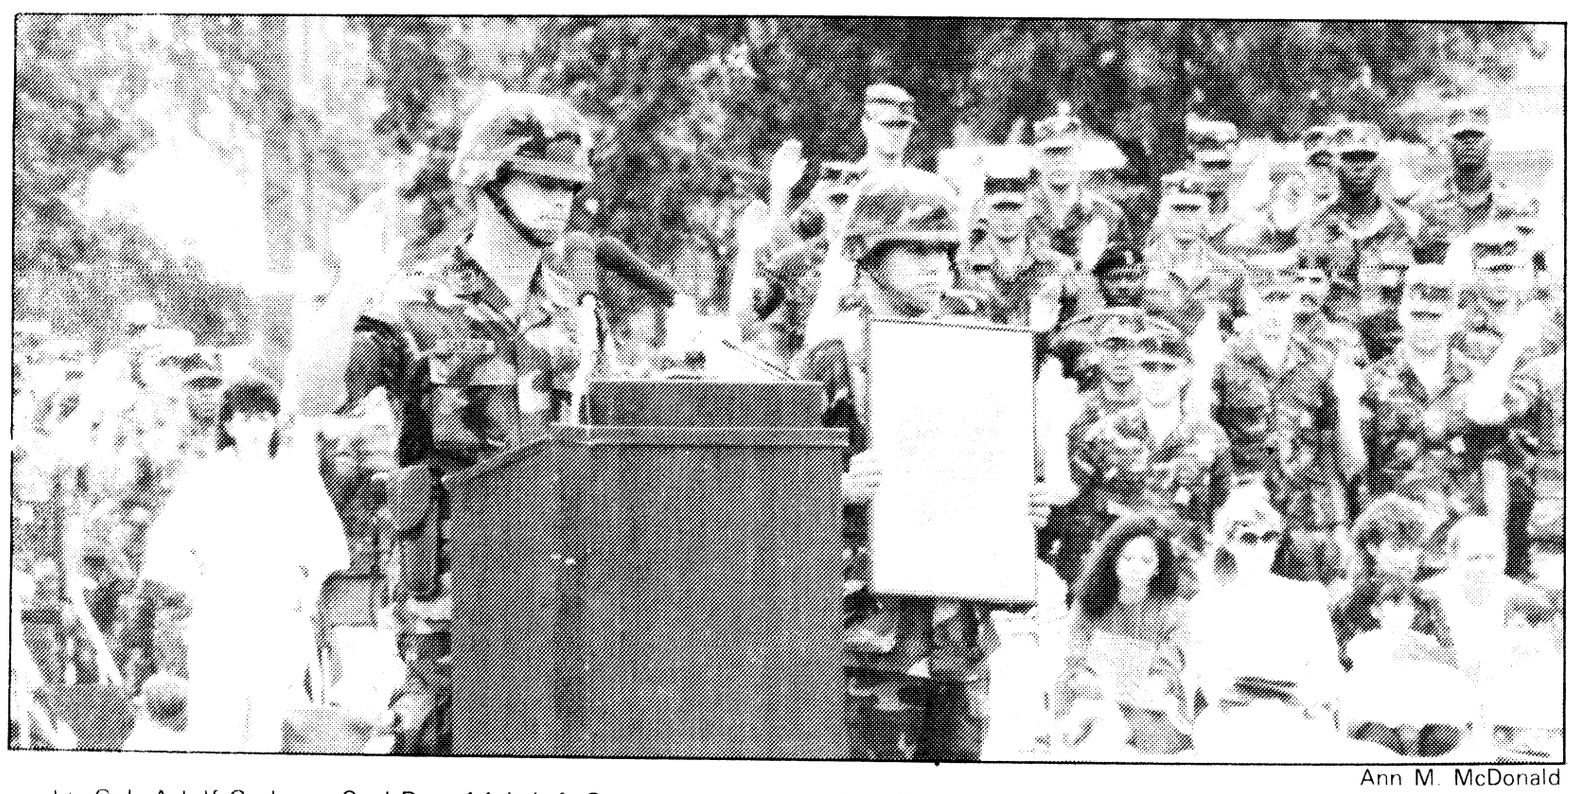
By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

During last year's 200th anniversary of the Constitution of the United States, 2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment conducted a parade to salute this historical event.

The idea of a parade to celebrate an event of that type was so well accepted, the unit now conducts a parade quarterly. 2nd Battalion is the only unit on post that does this for that purpose.

Last week, the unit celebrated Labor Day with a parade.

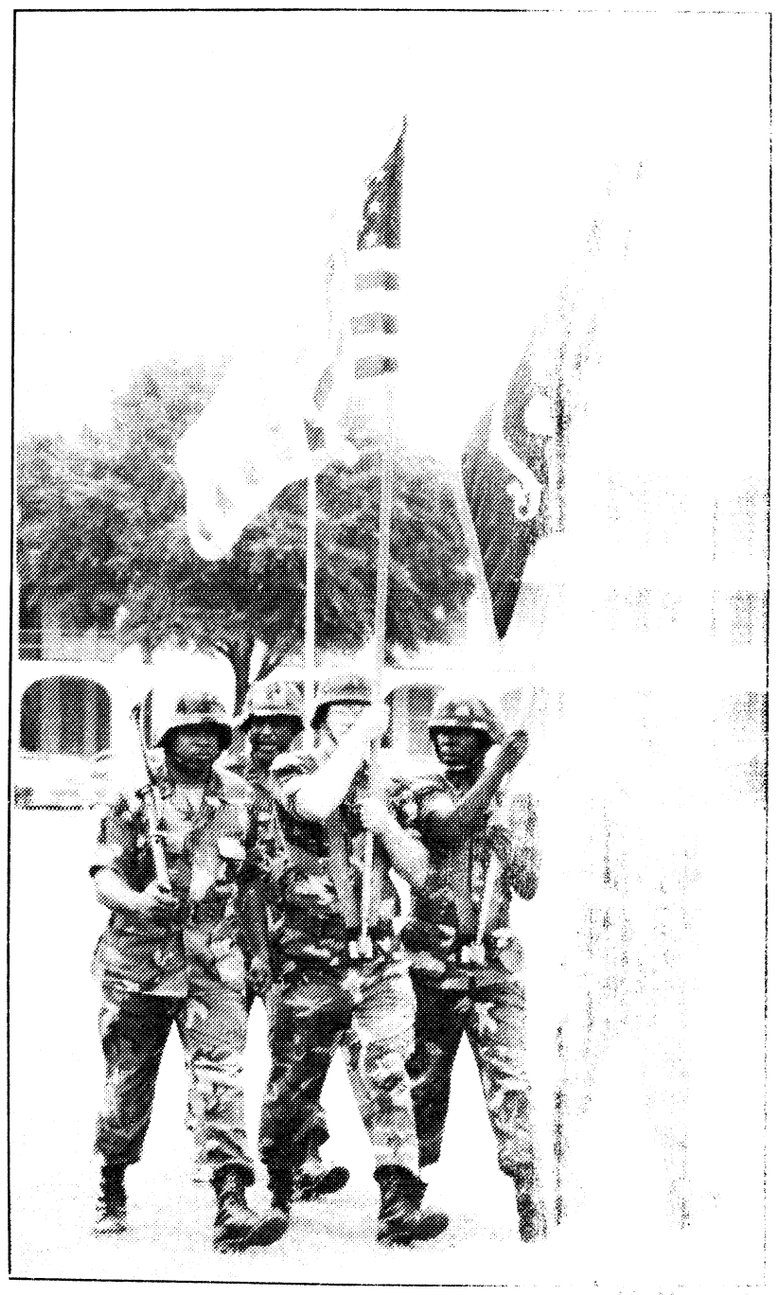
During the ceremony the unit added something unique, they renewed their oath to military service. Battalion Sgt. Maj. Charles Lewis led the enlisted personnel in their oaths; and afterwards, the unit's commander, Lt. Col. Adolf Carlson, led the officers.



According to Carlson, they did this in celebration of the 201st anniversary of the Constitution of the United States and to remind enlisted and officers alike why they're serving in the U.S. Army.

Carlson reflected the significance of the Constitution and the meaning of the oath during the ceremony.

"A soldier's oath is a sacred trust, binding him body and soul to a cause he is willing to die for and to kill for," he said. "If a soldier takes that commitment lightly, or for selfish reasons, he is no better than a murderer, for it is our allegiance that justifies the violence of our profession."



Carlson continued that, soldiers, oaths are very ancient, the soul of the profession of arms. "In feudal times men swore their loyalty to their king or noble," he said, "a personal loyalty that survives today in the world's remaining monarchies.

He added that soldiers are sworn not just to be first class soldiers, but first class citizens as well. "It's up to us to make sure that the words "all men are created equal" mean exactly what they say, no matter who they are," he said.

Fort Benning's recycle program now making money for pr[illegible]

By Alice Howard
Environmental Specialist, DEH

In fiscal year 1987, Fort Benning recycled about 246 tons of paper, 648 tons of cardboard, 962 tons of brass, copper and aluminum and 983 tons of light metal.

More than 45 buildings currently participate in the white paper recycle program saving both valuable space at Fort Benning's sanitary landfill and generating money for the installation. Cardboard balers are located at high generation points such as the Reception Station.

Recycling is not a new idea at Fort Benning, but until recently, the revenue generated from the sale of recyclable materials was returned to the U.S. Treasury. All proceeds from sales conducted through the Defense Reutilization and Marketing Office (DRMO) are now returned to Fort Benning. This money is used to cover operating costs of the recycle program and for safety, energy, environmental and Morale Support projects.

As a member of the military, or civilian employee, you can save our valuable natural resources by recycling white high grade office paper. It is estimated by Waste Age magazine that paper and paperboard products make up 42 percent of all trash generated in the United States. In 1986, according to Waste Age magazine, we consumed 80 million tons of paper and paper related products.

If every office worker in building 4 participated in the recycle program, the building could recycle 31 tons of white high grade office paper yearly.

The average office worker generates .3 pounds of white, high-grade office paper a day. Only 28 percent of this amount was reclaimed nationally. The use of recycled paper to manufacture new paper products takes 60 percent less energy resources. Recycled paper is used to produce such things as newsprint, cardboard, egg cartons and cushioning materials.

The largest percentage of revenue generated at Fort Benning from the recycle program comes from brass, copper and other high-cost metals turned in to DRMO. These and other scrap metals are sorted, saved and turned in by military units, the Directorate of Logistics, contractors, the Directorate of Engineering and Housing and other activities, rather than being dumped in the sanitary landfull. According to DRMO, no saleable property, refuse or trash with utilization or sales potential shall be disposed of by dumping in the landfill.

Veterans return to Benning for 40th reunion

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

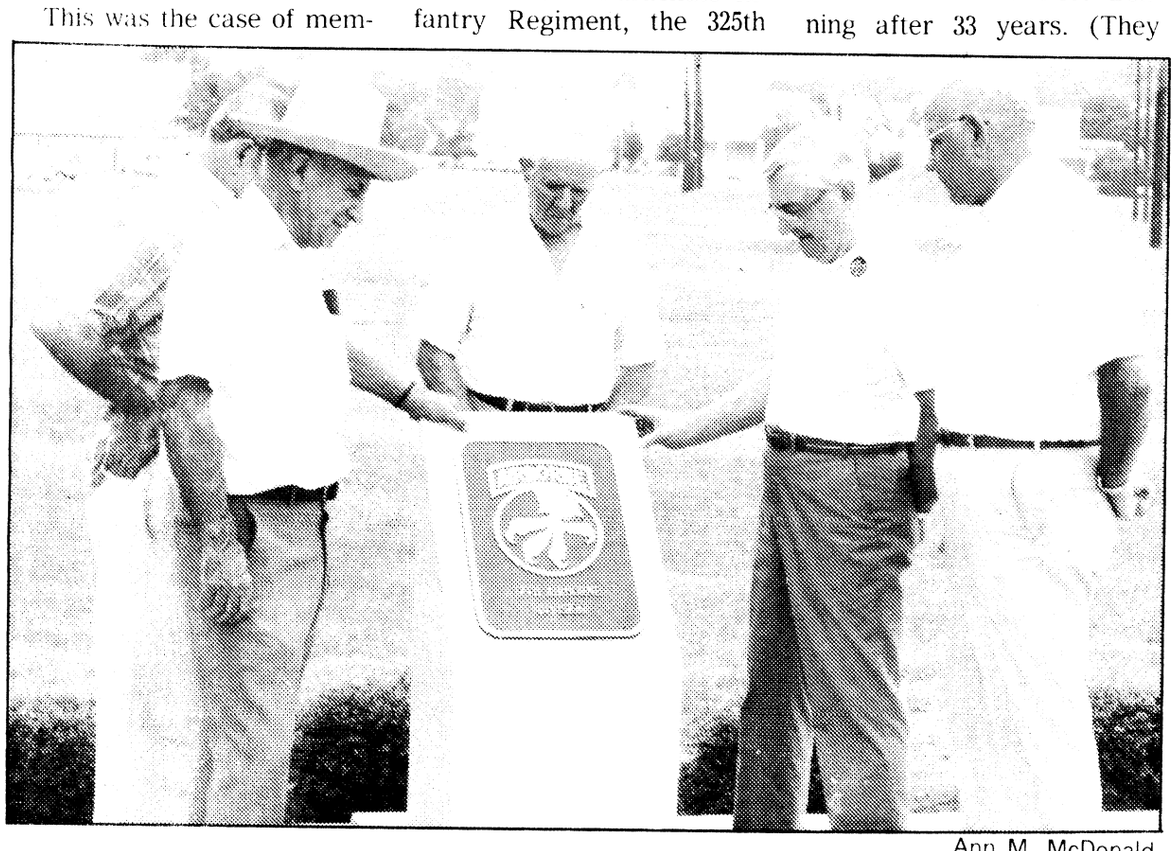
Most Infantrymen will come back to Fort Benning sometime during their career and many have been known to come back even after they have retired.

This was the case of members from Company I, 513th Parachute Infantry Regiment, 17th Airborne (World War II), who recently gathered here for their 40th reunion.

This particular unit along with the 507th Parachute Infantry Regiment, the 325th (glider) and the British 6th participated in Operation Varsity, the largest airborne operation in history.

According to Dean Swem, he and members of his unit have returned to Fort Benning after 33 years. (They celebrated their seventh reunion here.)

"We were going to wait until our 50th (reunion) before we came back, but there are not as many of us left now, and we wanted to come back to our airborne roots before we are all gone," he said.



Swem said it was all made possible because the group keeps in touch so they are able to successfully coordinate these reunions.

"We have to get together face-to-face at least once a year to tell each other lies," he said. "This is the 40th year we have gathered and the 40th year that the war was won because of us."

One member of that unit turned 22 years old on the day the unit took part in Operation Varsity.

"I remember it well," he said. "We were flying in the airplane, and it got hit and caught fire."

He said he didn't think he was going to live past that day; but they exited the aircraft and went "Sequititis Bastatii," which translates to "after the bastards," and was the motto of their unit.

Army energy logo [illegible] than just another [illegible]

By Becky Ray
Energy Branch

The Army energy logo is a simple graphic symbol but its colors and lines represent a host of ideas, commitments and goals. Although often seen in black and white, the symbol is actually a black and white "A" in a yellow sun surrounded by a brilliant red.

The black "A" at the center of the logo represents the Army goal of increased dependence on domestic coal, rather than on imported oil. The white border surrounding the "A" stands for our committment to pure air and a clean environment.

The yellow sun represents the Army's commitment to increased development and use of alternative and renewable energy source, including solar energy. The eight arrows radiating from the sun are symbolic of the eight directions in which this goal will lead. These energy sources are biomass, wind, geothermal, hydropower, ocean thermal, photovoltaic, synthetic fuels [illegible] from refuse.

National Safety Council urges bus safety

National Safety Council

CHICAGO — As summer comes to a close and youngsters return to school, the National Safety Council urges parents to teach their children the fundamentals of school bus safety, as part of National School Bus Safety Week, Sept. 18-24.

Forty-five students were killed and 6,900 were injured in school bus accidents in 1986, according to National Safety Council statistics. Most of those killed were pedestrians approaching or leaving a loading zone.

Since many pedestrian accidents could be prevented by more care on the walker's part, the Council asks parents to teach their children these rules for boarding and exiting a bus:

- Allow enough time in the morning to get to the bus stop without rushing. Inattentiveness while running for the bus is a major factor in accidents.
- When the bus approaches, stand back from the edge of the road. If you have to cross the road to enter the bus, then wait until the driver or crossing guard signals that the way is clear.
- Use the grab handle when boarding; and once on the bus, go directly to a seat. Don't goof off or make trouble.
- If you have to cross in front of the bus when you leave, walk at least 10 feet in front of the bus so the driver can see you. Wait for a signal from the driver before you cross.

The Council reminds parents to teach children to "walk alert."

Vocational rehabilitation paying off for disabled vets

Disabled veterans successfully completing programs of vocational rehabilitation have substantially increased their incomes according to a recent study by the Veterans Administration.

Georgia commissioner of Veterans Affairs Pete Wheeler said that the VA reviewed the annual income levels of more than 2,300 veterans who were rehabilitated in 1987 and found their annual earnings after training were $15,586, a 450 percent increase over the $2,765 the veterans were averaging prior to entering the program.

The VA's vocational rehabilitation program provides services and assistance disabled veterans need to achieve independence in daily living, to be trained in employable skills and to obtain suitable employment.

Veterans who served in the U.S. Armed Forces on or after Sept. 16, 1940, are eligible for vocational rehabilitation if they meet the three following conditions:

(a) They suffered a service-connected disability in active duty entitling them to compensation.

(b) They were discharged under other than dishonorable conditions or are hospitalized awaiting separation due to disability; and

(c) The VA determines that they need vocational rehabilitation to overcome an impairment to their ability to prepare for, obtain or retain employment consistant with their abilities, aptitudes and interests. Also, their service-connected disabilities must materially contribute to their employment handicaps.

Wheeler said the VA's program of rehabiliation begins with an evaluation of the services needed by the veteran. Following the evaluation, a training plan is developed and, finally, VA counselors assist the veteran in finding suitable employment.

Veterans enrolled in the program also receive tax-free disability compensation from the VA. These payments, however, were not counted in calculating individual earnings. Officials say the cost of the program is repaid many times over by increases in income taxes paid by the participants.

Lt. Col. Elliot Feliman presents the Navy Commendation Medal with the Combat Distinguishing Device to Capt. David K. Hough. Hough, an Infantry Officer Advance Course student, received the award for heroic achievement while serving as 2nd Plt. leader, Co. B, Battalion Landing Team 1st Bn., 8th Marine, 24th Marine Amphibious Unit, Fleet Marine Force, Atlantic. As a member of the Multi-National Peacekeeping Force, Beirut, Lebanon; Hough, then a lieutenant, was instrumental in repelling all attacks from a numerically superior force.

Hearing is essential for combat tasks, life

MACH Public Affairs Office

The experiences of Vietnam, Grenada and combat training confirm the importance of hearing in combat, especially in low to medium intensity conflict using light infantry or dismounted mechanized infantry.

In offensive operations, hearing is necessary to locate patrol members, locate snipers, determine the position, number and type of friendly and enemy vehicles and to determine types of booby traps. When on night patrol, especially with a new moon shining, patrol members guide more from sound than from vision. Good hearing can lead to the detection of an M-60 tank from the Soviet T-62. In locating snipers, one needs only to hear the report of the weapon. Good hearing comes in handy when detecting booby traps. There is a distinct difference in the sound generated from a trip wire that pulls the pin on a grenade and one that triggers a pressure sensitive explosive. The enemy moves through leaves, grass and twigs. These sounds can give an enemy's position away. This is why normal hearing will aid in this detection as well as the loading of weapons, clipping of barb wire and safety locks.

These are just some of the things good hearing is needed for. Some other areas where good hearing is essential is in hearing radio messages, verbal orders and in the weapons accuracy and identification. A soldier with hearing loss has more difficulty in communication on the radio.

Some soldiers may have money coming due to decision by Comptroller General

Army News Service

Some soldiers who had a permanent change of station between Oct. 1 and Dec. 18, 1985 may have money coming because of a decision by the Comptroller General. The money is for payment of Dislocation Allowance.

Soldiers who could be affected by the Comptroller General decision should contact local servicing finance offices for more information or to file a claim. If possible, soldiers should bring copies of previously paid vouchers to aid in the processing routine. The fiscal year 1986 Authorization Act had authorized payment of DLA in an amount equal to two months' basic allowance for quarters. However, due to late enactment of the fiscal year 86 Appropriations Act, use of these funds for payment of the second month's basic allowance for quarters wasrestricted in the computation for payment of the dislocation allowance.

In its original ruling on this subject, the General Counsel of the Office of the Secretary of Defense ruled that unless the payment had been made for the double DLA rate prior to Dec. 19, 1985, that no entitlement existed. Thus, soldiers who had received the double rate had to pay back one half of the amount received for DLA. And, for those who hadn't been paid, it meant receiving only one month's basic allowance for quarters consideration for the allowance.

Swarms of baitfish can lure bass to fisherman's hook

By Earl Bentz and Steve Price
Outboard Marine Corporation

Between now and mid-autumn, anglers can take advantage of some of the most spectacular displays of bass activity of the year, the gathering of huge schools of fish ravenously feeding on minnows they've trapped near the surface.

"It's one of the most exciting times to be on the water, because you can often catch a bass on every cast," explains Johnson Outboards Pro Staff member David Wharton, a former professional guide on Lake Sam Rayburn in Texas.

"I have seen the surface of a lake turned into a white froth as the bass slash and chop into swarms of baitfish. Often, you can hear the frenzy before you even see it."

On some lakes well known for schooling bass, anglers add a pair of binoculars to their fishing tackle and continually scan the water for signs of surfacing activity. Often, diving sea gulls provide the signal, for they're feeding on the shad from the air while bass are feeding on them from below.

Schooling bass readily hit lures, says Wharton, because when the fish are gathered like this, they are feeding actively. What's happening is that as the water warms in summer and shad are hatched, they become easy prey for bass. The largemouths continually circle the swarms of shad and gradually force them to the surface where they have even less chance to escape.

Then, when the bait is effectively trapped this way, the bass start slashing through them.

"At this time, practially any lure that resembles a shad will get a strike," notes Wharton.

"I think a small chrome or clear topwater lure, worked very fast over the surface is one of the most effective choices, but diving lures or fat-bodied tailspinners can also be effective.

"The size of the lure can truly mean the difference between success and failure in school bass fishing," adds Wharton. "Overall, I prefer to use a smaller lure, but I still try to match it to the size of the baitfish."

Schooling bass are notoriously famous for spooking easily and submerging, so Wharton tries to fish his fishing from a distance. What's required, he explains, is a long, limber rod with light line that allows him to make extra-long casts. Slowly and carefully, under trolling motor power, he then eases his way closer.

When the bass do submerge, Wharton changes from a topwater plug to a small ½ ounce white marabou jig and an ultra-light action rod. The lure is fished in the same area where the bass were schooling on the surface, and is allowed to sink. With the jig nearly the bottom, Wharton uses a swimming, hopping retrieve to draw strikes.

After submerging, the bass are not necessarily scattering. Instead, they're simply riding herd on the baitfish, corraling them again and gradually forcing them back to the surface. When they're on top, the bass will begin feeding once more.

"Normally, schooling bass weigh three pounds or less," says the Johnson Outboards Pro Staff member, "but occasionally larger bass can be caught by fishing below the feeding spree on the surface.

"For this, I like to use a deep diving crankbait, casting it as far as I can across the school. I just use a straight, fast retrieve and bring the lure back under the surface fish. Big bass seem to be lazy and let the smaller fish do the work. They stay below and feed on injured shad falling to the bottom."

Another lure Wharton recommends for catching larger bass under a surfacing school is the plastic worm. He rigs it Texas-style with a slip sinker and lets it drop to the bottom where he begins hopping it back to the boat.

"When bass are actually down on the bottom," he says, "you can really catch them with a worm. Much of the time, however, the bass are suspended and are a little harder to catch. When you do get a strike, you have to know the depth so you can get your lure down there again."

Certainly one of the interesting aspects of bass schooling activity, says the well-known tournament pro, is the fact schooling frequently takes place between mid-morning and mid-afternoon; and it occurs in the same areas year after year.

Normally, the bass and shad relate to some type of bottom feature, such as a chanel, submerged roadbed, or underwater ledge.

Training center dedicated to Gen. Collins

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Brig. Gen. William W. Hartzog dedicated a $10.7 million facility to former Chief of Staff of the Army and commander of VII Corps during World War II Gen. J. Lawton Collins here Wednesday.

Named, The Collins Training Center, the facility is equipped with the latest computer technology to assist in training Bradley Fighting Vehicle crew members.

"I can think of no finer tribute to pay a great warrior and combat commander than to dedicate a building for housing and training soldiers," said Brig. Gen. William W. Hartzog, acting post commander. "I can think of no finer nor more appropriate soldier than General 'Lightning Joe' Collins to dedicate this particular building to."

Hartzog was on hand as the opening speaker at the ceremony and quoted General Collins as saying "There is the danger that we may become so enthralled by machines and weapons systems that we will lose sight of the fact that the man, the individual soldier, is the supreme element in combat. That is the reason why the foundation of our system of discipline is the same as the very foundation of our system of government — the preservation of the dignity of the individual."

"This building was designed with soldiers in mind," Hartzog said. "It was designed to present the best possible training in the most conducive atmosphere for learning."

The center, which will also house the headquarters of the 29th Infantry Regiment, the people responsible for training Bradley crew members, encompasses 92,000 square feet of office, classroom and maintenance space.

The complex will house computerized equipment for training soldiers to drive, fire and maintain the Infantry's premier fighting vehicle. This equipment is valued at $18 million and includes the Conduct Of Fire Trainer (COFT), which simulates Bradley battlefield conditions for the students in the classroom.

The trainers assigned to the 29th Inf. are responsible for providing instruction and support to the Infantry School and Training Center. They teach everything from basic driving skills through the master gunner's course, plus provide support

Second Blackhawk crew departs for Yellowstone

By Shawn Bryson
Bayonet staff writer

A second pair of U.S. Army UH-60 Blackhawk helicopters and their crews from the 498th Medical Company (Air Ambulance), 34th Medical Battalion, left for Yellowstone National Park last Tuesday to assist in efforts to extinguish fires that have burned more than a million acres in the park and surrounding areas.

According to Capt. Kenneth Quaglio, 498th operations officer and acting commander, the first pair of Blackhawks were sent to the park last week after a request from Forces Command. "We had our helicopters and crews ready to go on the fourth (Sept. 4), and they were loaded onto a C-5, which departed Sept. 6," Quaglio said.

He added that the 498th soldiers and their aircraft are now providing air medical evacuation support for about 6,000 soldiers and firefighters currently battling the fires.

A request for more Blackhawk support by FORSCOM Sept. 9 readied two more of 498th's aircraft. Quaglio explained that the second pair, also transported via C-5, were flown to Helena, Mont. to support four battalions of infantry soldiers already fighting fires in that area.

Flying at altitudes of 9,000-14,000 feet, the UH-60s have been dodging the quickly-spreading fires since their arrival there.

"They are primarily doing medical evacuations but if things turn worse, they may be used to evacuate people from the areas," Quaglio said.

The Blackhawks, the only military evacuation crews currently there, could stay out west through October, Quaglio said.

Election day draws near, 51 days left

USAIC Public Affairs Office

There are only 51 more days until the presidential election, which will be held Tuesday, Nov. 8. For voters mailing an absentee ballot, there's even less time.

To vote in the upcoming general election, voters have until Oct. 11 to register in Muscogee County. Anyone registering to vote must be at least 17-1/2 years old and be a United States citizen. County residency is required; however, there is no time requirement for residency. Also, proof of identity, such as a valid Georgia driver's license, is needed. Registration is held at the Government Center, located in downtown Columbus and at several other locations throughout the city. For a complete list of registration sites and more information about local requirements, call 571-5815.

All service members and spouses, 18 and over, can use the absentee ballot to vote in the general election. According to Capt. Harry Williams, deputy installation voting officer, most states allow voters to request absentee ballots anywhere from 30 to 45 days prior to the election. Once the absentee ballot is received, it should be mailed immediately since some states will not count ballots received or postmarked after election day. Your unit voting assistance officer has available absentee ballot request forms and can provide information about each state's voting laws. For a list of unit voting assistance officers, contact the post operator or Capt. Williams at 545-3881.

NCOA helps seekers seek employment

NCOA

A "Job Seeker" workshop for military personnel who plan to enter the civilian job market after separating or retiring from the Armed Forces will be held here Wednesday by the Noncommissioned Officers Association (NCOA).

The workshop will be held in building 4, classroom 4, 8 a.m. to noon, according to H.M. "Buddy" Flanagan, chief operating officer of the NCOA.

Flanagan, a retired Air Force chief master sergeant, noted that NCOA holds workshops in areas not covered by one of its 20 annual Job Fairs, where those wishing to enter the civilian market can meet face-to-face with corporate recruiters.

"At the workshops, we review all aspects of job hunting, from writing resumes and handling interviews to salary negotiations and proper dress codes," Flanagan explained.

The NCOA's Veterans Employment Assistance (VEA) services, which are used by 50,000 to 80,000 separating military personnel and veterans each year, are offered free to members and non-members alike.

Flanagan said mini-resumes obtained at the workshops are forwarded to the Computer Assisted Matching Program (CAMP) of the Employment Transition Services, which serves industry. CAMP translates occupational skills ac-

DRMO expands sales program

USAIC Public Affairs Office

The world's largest surplus military equipment sales store is going into the retail business.

Officials at the headquarters of the world-wide Defense Reutilization and Marketing Service in Battle Creek, Mich., recently announced that local surplus sales programs will be expanded to include retail sales outlets at all of the agency's 134 field offices.

A DRMS spokesman noted that the retail sales concept has previously been limited to a small number of the agency's Defense Reutilization and Marketing Offices, primarily at overseas locations.

Otis Denham, chief of Fort Benning's DRMO, says local retail sales will be conducted at building 315 monthly and will be open to all base military personnel and the general public.

Denham says that the items that will be sold through the

Rapture takes Snively for a ride

By Clyde Snively
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Madame Editor is always on my case about missing deadlines.

But at this week's editor's conference, I had a ready answer for her — "You can't assign that to me, I won't be around to write it."

"I beg your pardon," she said.

"Yeah," I said, "Didn't you read the article in the newspaper. I'm going to get raptured, I won't be here. No more deadlines, no more PT for me. I'm living on borrowed time."

"Snively," the major interjected, "aren't you forgetting something?"

"Uh, I don't think so. Why do you ask?" I asked.

"Rapture is for the good guys. They go to heaven. We heathens hang around and wait for another chance," he said in his sermonizing voice.

"Oh, you mean that Wednesday won't be the end of the world?" I asked.

"No, it'll only be the end of some people's stay on this planet," he said.

"Oh, I get it," I said. "The rest of us need to hang around for all those events mentioned in the newspaper article. That should be exciting...'Coming in three weeks, World War III breaks out between the U.S. and the Soviet Union!'

"What else, oh yes, the cataclysmic events. 'The demonic Locust Plague, coming to your neighborhood theater, Oct. 23.'

"I think that was followed by 'The Battle of Armageddon, available on VHS beginning Oct. 4, 1995.'

"I guess the millennium is the final act then. And it's to begin Dec. 23, 1995?"

"You got it," the major said.

"Well, that certainly clears things up," I said. "I'd always assumed that the Rapture was the end of the world, so when I read about all these other things happening afterwards, I got confused. I'm glad you cleared that up for me, sir."

"You got it," the major said.

"So let me see if I've got this straight now. You're telling me that we got nothing but bad guys down here fighting each other after the Judgment, which is supposed to happen by Wednesday? So who cares what happens then?"

"Well, like I told you, there's a second chance," the major said. "There will be about 140,000 do-gooders down here trying to convert lost souls."

"Where will they be during the war? Holed up in a fallout shelter?" I asked.

That was Friday.

On Monday, I noticed that large sarge wasn't at PT. Then at the office I looked around and he wasn't there either.

"He's been raptured," I guessed.

I whispered my beliefs to Airborne Annie.

She scoffed at my fears. "Heck, he's always being raptured. I haven't seen him in ages."

"Wow," I said.

Tuesday I was very observant, looking to see if anyone I knew had suddenly disappeared.

Wednesday, as I stepped onto the elevator at Infantry Hall, I was thinking about large sarge who still hadn't surfaced. I was feeling disgruntled and put out because I hadn't been raptured and had had to go to PT instead.

I pushed the button. The doors slid silently closed. With a sigh the elevator began to rise. It reached the sixth floor, but the doors didn't open.

Instead, after a pause, it went back down. On the ground floor it stopped once again. But the doors didn't open. We — me and the elevator — started back up as the words to the Kingston Trio song, "The MTA" started running through my mind: "Oh he never returned, no he never returned, his fate is still unknown..."

"I'm being raptured," I thought, as the elevator slipped upward past the fourth floor.

Just before the elevator reached the sixth floor, I dropped to my knees and asked God's forgiveness. The doors opened. A light shone in on me. I could sense a presence. I looked up. It was Vern.

"Whatcha doin' there, Clyde," he asked.

"I ah, er, dropped some coins on the floor, just picking them up," I said, quickly getting up and walking off.

After that experience, I vowed to never again ride the elevator without at least a sandwhich in my pocket.

Red Cross sends 'thank you' to participants

On behalf of the American Red Cross, we would like to thank those who donated blood during our recent blood drive.

The person who gives blood and the patient who receives it are linked together in a special bond of concern and need. Giving blood is a unique way of saying "I care." For the recipient, it can literally be a "gift of life."

The blood donated on Aug. 31 has already been used, indicating that there is a great need for the blood donated. Thanks again to all those who gave the gift of life.

Here are some facts about Red Cross' Blood Drives:

- While 40 percent of this country's population is medically eligible to donate blood, only four percent give blood to take care of the blood needs of 100 percent of the people.
- While many blood donors give as often as possible, about 70 percent give only once a year. Yet, you can give blood every eight weeks up to a maximum of five times a year.
- As much as 100 to 150 units of a particular blood type may be quickly, unexpectedly needed for just one patient.
- Each week, about 4,500 people are needed to give blood in the Atlanta Region of Red Cross Services to meet the blood needs of people in area hospitals.
- All blood donated today is tested for the antibody to the AIDS virus.
- More Americans have type O positive blood than any other type. However, more than 652 blood types are known. A rare blood type is found in one person in a thousand. Some types are so rare that they are found once in 10,000 people.
- You cannot get AIDS by donating blood. Blood is collected through sterile, disposable syringes that are destroyed after one use.
- The Red Cross Blood Services serves 56 regions in the U.S. Last year, an estimated 3,500 hospitals received more than 12 million units of Red Cross blood and blood components.
- The Red Cross Blood Services provides a number of special services:
- The Red Cross Rare Donor Registry shipped more than 1,000 units of rare blood to more than 250 patients around the world. The American Red Cross maintains the only natural computerized rare donor registry.
- The Red Cross maintains a systemwide network of reference laboratories to aid hospitals in matching blood for problem patients.

Daddy goes away to make a 'REFORGER'

Daddy is far across the sea in a town called "Germaneee."
He's away from Mommy, brother and me..
...and his truck.

Mommy told us he is far away making something big, maybe from clay called a "REFORGER," that is hard to say..
...or figure out.

When you are only 4-years-old and the summer is gone and the air is cold and Daddy's big arms around me don't fold..
...I get bummed.

You know what else is sort of a drag?
  The car is all broken, the motor and mags,
Mommy's eyes don't sparkle, they pretty much sag..
...chill out, Mom.

So please, God, send Daddy back home,
  Let him make a nice REFORGER then leave it alone.
Maybe, at least, let him get to a phone..
...I miss him.

IOBC students volunteer time to children of single parents

By David A. Cherry
2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry

Recently, IOBC students from Company C, 2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry, along with Maj. Jimmy R. Duhaime, commander of Co. C., and Capt. Wayne Chaloupka, a Co. C senior trainer of IOBC students volunteered this day to share with children in the PALS program. Soldiers from HHC, 2nd Bn., 11th Inf., 1st Lt. Gary Pierce and Spec Pamela Louis also volunteered their time.

The PALS program, People Able to Love and Share, is a United Way Program sponsored by the Columbus Family Counseling Center. The children in the program are from single parent families in the Columbus area. The children, mostly boys, range from 7 to 15 years old.

The day was fun-filled and interesting for the PALS children and volunteers. It started with an informal meeting at the Family Counseling Center where the volunteers were matched up with a PALS child. After meeting the children, the volunteers met the parents of the children they were matched with and received any instructions the parents may have had.

Activities that day included swimming at the Officers' Club and games at the Youth Activities Center. Then, in groups of four or more, the volunteers and children went to various restaurants in the local area where the volunteers treated the children to lunch. Last on the agenda was a trip to the Infantry Museum.

The director of the Family Counseling Center is Larry Shaw and Clay Kull is the PALS coordinator. Ann Allison, an Army wife, is a counselor for the PALS program. A program called PALS for the day was established by Shaw in coordination with Duhaime, where IOBC lieutenants are paired on a one-day basis with a child and are PALS for that day.

There was an abundance of IOBC lieutenants who were enthusiastic to share a day with the PALS child. The parents were very appreciative that soldiers from Fort Benning would volunteer time spend with their children. This program shows civilians that soldiers really are concerned about them and their children.

The people who work for the PALS program are doing a great service for the community. Because of them, and the volunteers, the PALS children are able to go places and do things they otherwise might not be able to.

Anyone wishing further information concerning the PALS program can call the Family Counseling Center at 327-3238. The center is located on the corner of First Avenue and Seventh Street in Columbus.

Bar Rest Boy's Ranch needs volunteers

By Ron Allen
USAIC Public Affairs Office

The Bar Rest Boy's Ranch is in desperate need of volunteers to help with a construction project. The project is to redesign a building into a bunkhouse to house four boys.

"Although most of the materials for the project have been obtained," said Jim Yeargin, excecutive director, "the problem has been finding skilled volunteers to provide the labor needed to complete the work. Originally scheduled to accept the first residents Sept. 1, the opening was delayed because of the shortage of trained construction help."

"The greatest need is for people to help with the roofing of the building," Yeargin said. "But, knowledgeable workers are also needed in carpentry, sheetrocking, electrical and plumbing."

The ranch is located at the foot of Pine Mountain in Warm Springs, Ga. and is adjacent to the 10,000-acre Franklin D. Roosevelt State Park on shared facilities with the Good Shepherd Riding Academy.

The purpose of the ranch is to provide therapeutic rehabilitation to the handicapped through horseback riding and pet therapy programs conducted outside the traditional institutional environment. The ranch provides a Christian living and learning environment for boys from troubled backgrounds.

Anyone interested in volunteering time to this project, contact Brad Castleberry, 545-2238 or call Yeargin, (404) 655-3630.

for eight Army Reserve training commands and for development and doctrinal literature for Infantry weapons.

Officers and noncommissioned officers who will command these vehicles will also be trained at this facility. In all, more than 4,000 students a year will be trained at this new facility.

The 29th Inf. is commanded by Col. John D. Fuller, who played a role in planning the facility when he was assigned to Fort Benning previously.

Retired Col. Joseph E. Collins, the son of the late General Collins, was on hand to cut the ribbon.

"What impresses me the most about this facility," Collins said, "is the professionalism of the NCO instructors."

"My father would be very please to be associated with such a center," Col. Collins said. "He had a very close working relationship with General (Omar N.) Bradley for whom the Bradley was named."

While on active duty, Collins attended the company commander's course in 1925 then became an instructor in weapons and later tactics at the Infantry School.

During World War II, he commanded the 25th Infantry Division in heavy fighting against the Japanese on Guadal Canal and the New Georgia Islands.

Transferred to the European Theater of Operations, he assumed command of VII Corps in February 1944, leading that Corps through some of the fiercest combat of the war, including the D-Day landing on Utah Beach, the capture of Cherbourg, the breakout from Normandy and the defensive battle at Mortain and the drive of the first Army Group and later Twelfth Army Group under the command of Bradley, across Europe to a meeting with the Russians on the Elbe River, 50 miles from Berlin.

Prior to becoming chief of staff, he served as vice chief under Bradley.

General Collins was a representative to NATO and served as a special representative with the rank of Ambassador to Vietnam in the mid 1950s.

The Collins Training Center is located on Bradley Loop, named after Collins' former boss.

Ground was broken for construction of the center Nov. 10, 1986, was officially designated the Collins Training Center June 13, 1988, and was accepted by the 29th Inf. Reg. Aug. 17, 1988.

16 officer candidates receive branches

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

Sixteen officer candidates were branched Field Artillery recently and are preparing to attend the basic course at Fort Sill, Okla.

Col. Gary W. Jackson, Assistant Chief of Staff, Personnel and Administration, Headquarters, State Area Command, Okla. and Lt. Col. Duane Williams, Chief Field Artillery representative from the Infantry Center, pinned the crossed cannons on the candidates officially designating them field artillery.

It was a special event for Jackson who was also a graduate of OCS 25 years ago and has been nominated for the OCS Hall of Fame.

Jackson also served as the guest speaker during the ceremony.

"It's a distinct privilege to be a Field Artilleryman," he told the candidates. "The sounds of artillery are the glorious sounds of freedom."

Jackson advised the newly branched candidates that they had to be good soldiers before they could become good officers and they had to earn the lieutenants respect.

The following candidates were branched Field Artillery: Arnold [illegible], David P. Chase, Carlos [illegible] Egalite, James [illegible], Brandon W. George, Ronald A. Grant, Robert [illegible], Douglas A. Haugen, Michael V. Hickman, [illegible] Hopkins, Victor S. Linares, Joel A. Myrick, George [illegible] Pittman, Joseph W. [illegible], Tad R. Starr, James M. Sept -Oct INFANTRY released

The September-October 1988 issue of INFANTRY features an article by Capt. Dennis W. Davis, who is assigned to the U.S. Army Infantry School's Combined Arms and Tactics Department. In the article, "A Plan for Command," Davis provides what he calls a "command reconnaissance framework for an officer who is preparing to command a company."

This article is paired with another feature article, "On Company Command," by Capt. Richard D. Hooker Jr., who is now attending graduate school at the University of Virginia. Hooker offers common sense advice for new commanders based upon his own experience as a company commander.

INFANTRY is now a professional bulletin of the Department of the Army. It has been published at Fort Benning since 1[illegible]

Also in that issue are three articles on weapons and major items of equipment: "The M-60 Machine Gun," by Kenneth E. Maritz; "EPLRS: Where Are You? I Am Here," by Maj. David A. Prior, on the enhanced position location and reporting system; and "MCPS Standard Integrated CP System," by Maj. Kenneth D. Boyd.

In addition, Capt. Harold E. Raugh Jr., follows up his article "World War II History: The German Studies," (which appeared in the March-April 1988 issue of INFANTRY) with "World War II History: Japanese Monographs and Studies."

ASK THE JUDGE

By Susan McKeeman
Staff Judge Advocates Office

Q. Madge and I bought a car from a local dealer. One of the main reasons we bought it was because he gave us a 30-day, money-back guarantee. This guarantee had "Terms of 30-Day Money Back Guarantee" at the top of the form and listed 11 conditions. We have decided to turn the car back in, but Bubba, our close friend, told us he also had the same guarantee; and he lost all sorts of money when he returned it. Would you please look at this guarantee and tell me if you see any problems with it. I don't want the same problems Bubba had.

A. After reviewing this guarantee, it is clear that it will cost you a lot of money to return your car to the dealer. As you read the conditions of this guarantee, you see that when you turn the car back in, you do not receive any of the fees, sales tax or registration fees back. This may not seem like much, but consider that for a $10,000 car this will amount to more than $600. Another condition of this guarantee is that any car you traded becomes the property of the dealer. Not only do you lose your trade-in, but the dealer also expects you to pay for any "inequities" to the dealership. What "inequities" means is suspect, but you can be sure that any additional costs the dealer discovers, he will want you to pay.

One of the worst things about this document is that one of the conditions takes the guarantee away. Yes, that's correct. Although the top of this form states, in capital letters, that you have a 30-day guarantee, this additional condition states that because of other "considerations" you have given up the 30-day guarantee. This appears to be a clear example of the warning that courts have given about consumer contracts that what the big print giveth, the small print taketh away.

This last condition, which takes that guarantee away, does have a block for you to initial. This block is supposed to make it look like you knowingly received and then gave away the guarantee. But if that is so, then why did the dealer give you the guarantee in the first place?

This guarantee appears to be a fraudulent and deceptive trade practice and might even violate the Federal Magnuson-Moss Warranty Act.

The lesson to be learned in many of the "car dealer guarantees" is that you usually do not receive anything of real value.

SPIRITUAL

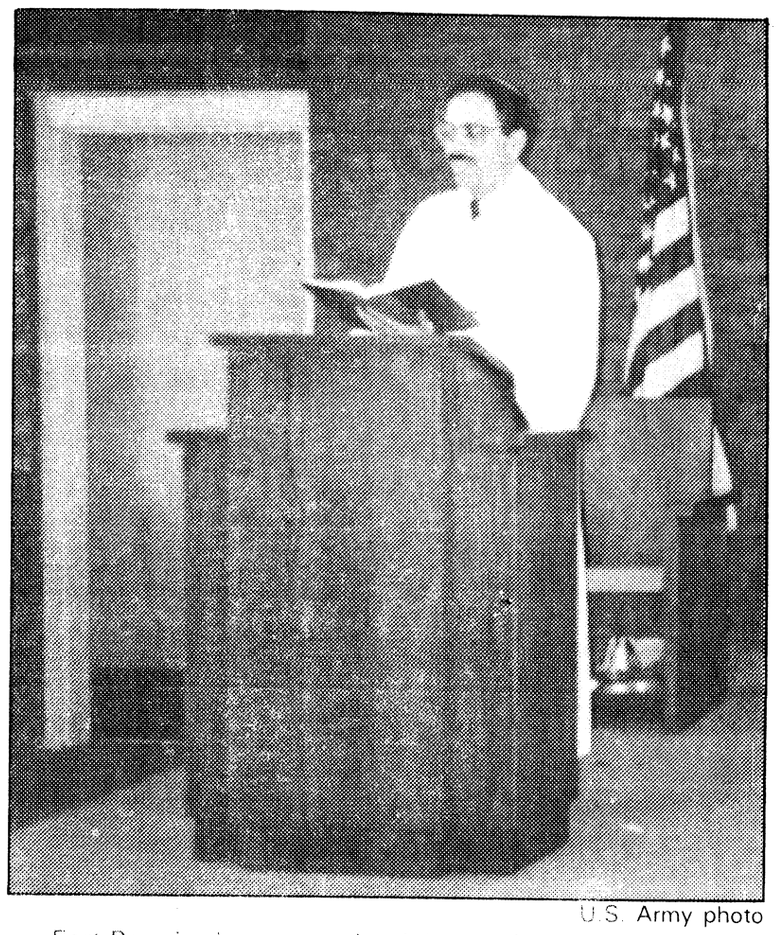
Forgiveness is unconditional

By Donald W. McSwain
Infantry Center Chapel Chaplain

Some years ago, a man by the name of Samuel Holmes was serving a life sentence in a Kentucky prison. A friend of his, Lucien Young, was a very respected and well known man. Young went to Governor Blackburn of Kentucky and pleaded for a pardon for his friend. The Governor consented and signed the pardon. Lucien Young rushed to his friend in prison at Frankfort. When he walked in the cell, he said, "Sam, if suddenly by some miracle you were released from here, what's the first thing you'd do?" Without hesitating, Sam said, "First, I would find the judge who sentenced me, and I'd kill him." Lucien Young turned and slowly walked out the prison. Outside the walls he took his friend's pardon and tore it in pieces. Samuel Holmes lost his pardon.

There is an ironic parallel to this in the New Testament. In teaching his disciples the Lord's Prayer, he included "forgive us our trespasses as we forgive those who trespass against us." When we pray this, we are asking to be forgiven in the same manner as we forgive others. In reality, if we are unforgiving of others, we are asking God not to forgive us.

The difficult thing about forgiveness is that the person who gives it is the one who is hurt. The natural thing to do is lash back or withdraw; to hurt back. But there is no other one thing that can scar our souls like the piercing arrow of an unforgiving spirit. The one thing never cured by nursing is a grievance. Whether right or wrong, we can allow our hate to become an obsession that poisons our whole attitude toward life and rob us of our maturity. In the end, we might discover our pride has cut us off from those we love.



A young man had left home after a heated confrontation with his parents, even though he knew he was wrong. Some months later he decided to return home but wasn't sure he was welcome. He sent a telegram to his parents saying, "Tomorrow I'll be on the train that runs by the house. If I can come home, put a sheet on the clothesline so I'll know." The closer the train came to his home the next day, the more nervous he became wondering if the sheet would be there. When he passed the house, he saw that his parents had put every sheet in the house on the clothsline!

His parents went to the limit with sheets to show their forgiveness. God went to the limit with Calvary to show his love and forgiveness. Even as they nailed him to the cross, Christ could say, "Father, forgive them." If God is so willing to forgive us, we have to honestly ask ourselves why are we so reluctant to forgive those who have wronged us?

Ephesians 4:32 says "forgive...even as God has forgiven you." Remember that real forgiveness is unconditional. It is not threatening and requires nothing of the forgiven. It is not miserly and given in portions. When you're not happy with the tense relationship you have with someone else, run the risk. Hang out all the sheets and you may learn that they're as eager to be forgiven as you are to forgive.

Post welcomes new chaplain

By Jo Ann Stamey

Fort Benning's newest chaplain - and only rabbi - Chap. (1st Lt.) Barry R. Baron delivers his first sermon here.

Fort Benning's newest chaplain — and only rabbi — Chap. (1st Lt.) Barry R. Baron — has arrived just in time to celebrate the Jewish High Holy Days with the Fort Benning community.

Chap. Baron is from New York City and is a 1978 graduate of Cornell University. Baron decided to enter college teaching and enrolled in the Graduate School of Business at the University of Pittsburgh for four years. Deciding this was not really what he wanted to do with his life, in the fall of 1983,he entered the Jewish Theological Seminary of America, which is a training school for "Conservative" rabbis. In May 1988, he graduated and was ordained. During his first year in rabbinical school, he became a chaplain candidate and was commissioned in August 1984. As a chaplain candidate, he served in a basic training battalion and the reception station at Fort Dix, N.J. In the summer of 1985, Baron attended the first segment of the Chaplains' Basic Course at Fort Monmouth, N.J. In June of the same year, he married his wife, Jo, who is a psychiatrist and is currently working at Martin Army Community Hospital.

When asked why he chose the Army as a profession, he stated his experiences as a chaplain candidate were very enjoyable, and he felt the Army would give him an opportunity to do two things he really wanted to do — to serve Jewish soldiers isolated from family and home, and to reach out to other people in the community.

Baron was excited about being assigned to the 2nd Infantry Training Brigade because of his previous experience with basic trainees. He likes dealing with this particular age group, and he enjoys helping people undergoing a difficult adjustment in their lives.

Baron said, "Going to a training battalion is a nice balancing experience. You deal with trainees, drill sergeants, and officers — you get a real diversity of the Army."

Baron is a "Conservative" rabbi. There are three branches (or styles and philosophical systems) of Judaism. The three branches are "Reform," "Conservative," and "Orthodox."

In the military setting, the Jewish worship services and education are set to accommodate all styles of Judaism. The Jewish Chaplains' Council has representatives from all three branches and together they formulate procedures to be followed in the military to balance all three interest groups.

Chap. Baron will hold regular Jewish worship services each Friday at 8 p.m., at the Infantry Training Center Chapel; and the religious education program will be held on Sunday mornings. During the week, there will be programs geared to specific interest groups. For further information on the Jewish worship schedule, contact Chap. Baron at the ITC Chapel, at 544-3269/3458.

Youth Alive invites children to lock-in

By Dale Heinlein Jr.
Youth Alive Leader

The doors are locked. You are surrounded by 26 other people your age — most of whom you do not know. Your anxiety level is high.

You are at a Protestant Junior High "Youth Alive" lock-in at the Infantry Chapel Annex on main post.

The ground rules are laid and the fun begins! You have a night of adventure and growth ahead! There are devotions on prayer and spiritual treasures, games, pizza, sodas, singing, relays, movies, ice cream sundaes and banana splits, donuts, milk and juice. Twelve non-stop hours of excitement!

At 7:15 a.m. Saturday the last movie ends. Breakfast is served. Then it is time to pack up, clean up and go home to meet the day "wide-eyed and bushy-tailed" (well, sort of). Nevertheless, the lock-in comes to a grinding halt as parents arrive to retrieve their youngster(s).

If you are a sixth, seventh or eighth grader you, too, are invited to attend the Protestant "Youth Alive" Group on Sundays, 6:30-8 p.m. at the Infantry Chapel Annex. Come and grow in spirit and fellowship. You may feel like a stranger, at first, but you will leave as a friend!

For more information about the Junior High Youth Alive Group, call Chap. (Capt.) Dale Heinlein at 544-2114/3070.

Kid's safety is residents' responsibility

Safety Office

The children at Fort Benning slipped into their new school clothes and set out for school a couple of weeks ago — some for their first time. They're concerned most with classes, friends and getting to school on time, not with their own safety. It is up to us to make sure the coming school year is a safe one for our children.

Safety is everybody's business. Statistics have shown that the innocent have often paid with their lives for the recklessness, carelessness and stupidity of those who have no regard for their own or others' safety and are not prone to listen to the voice of reason.

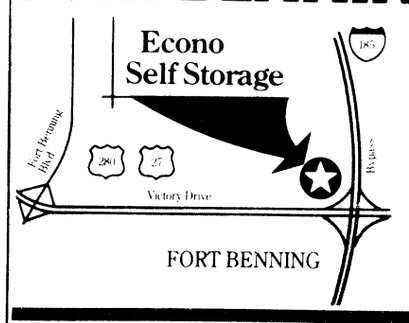
In order to eliminate accident causes, we must have the support of every individual. It's the parents' responsibility to instill in children a safe behavior pattern.

For the next nine months, our concern must be focused on the traffic problems created when children are rushing to school and soldiers and civilians to work.

The bright yellow bus laden with children will be a familiar sight in the area. It travels during the early morning hour, at mid-day, and in the afternoon. We may even see the school bus during hours of darkness. Whenever it travels, motorists must exercise caution to protect the lives of its young passengers.

Then, there are children walking to school or to the bus stop. When sidewalks are not provided, youngsters will walk on the streets.

Parents should ensure that their children wear at least one light colored article of clothing — anything to make the child more visible to motorist. Reflective tape can placed on book covers or belts. If the child will be walking during darkness, he should carry a small flashlight with the light turned on.



The motorist must be alert at all times; and be prepared for the child who may wander or dart into the path of a car.

We cannot depend on instinct or intuition to warn of a dangerous situation but should always be ready for the unexpected.

Tae kwon do school builds self confidence

Nicole Worley warms up before class.

Jason Wideman and Nicole Worley practice one-step spars

On any given Monday, Wednesday or Thursday evening, the Youth Activities Gym is filled with people dressed in belted, white uniforms, kicking and screaming at each other.

No. This is not a new dance craze. These people are receiving instruction on tae kwon do, the Korean form of martial arts.

Their instuctor is Martin Czapla, a certified instructor with the Fort Benning Tae Kwon Do Chung Do Kwan School.

According to Czapla, the Fort Benning School was started by Lt.Col. J. Henkle in July 1985 for active duty and retired military and their families.

Czapla right away clarified the misconception that tae kwon do is a form of karate.

"Karate is actually Japanese for empty hand fighting and is 80 percent hand work, where tae kwon do is 50 percent hand, and 50 percent foot fighting," he said.

Czapla said it is considered a sport and is practiced year round.

"It is going to be an exhibition sport in the 1988 Olympics," he said, "and most people in martial arts circles, hope it will become a regular event."

Czapla said, members of his school start at age 7. They start from the bottom and work their way up through all the phases.

He added that they compete regularly in each of their categories and attend seminars to sharpen their skills.

"One of the best things about this sport is that no one is a bench sitter," Czapla said. "Everyone is first string and a main player on the field.

He said that tae kwon do is great confidence builder, which focuses on coordination, balance, concentration and endurance.

The post Tae Kwon Do Chung Do Kwan School will be conducting an exhibition Oct. 12 at 7 p.m. in the Youth Activities Gym. Czapla always welcomes new students. Classes are conducted on Monday, Wednesday and Thursday from 6:30 to 8:30 p.m. For more information, call Martin Czapla at 545-2670.

Air conditioners to stay on even after recent cool spell

By Becky Ray
Energy Management Branch

The Fort Benning community can now reap just one of the benefits of increased energy conservation efforts this year. Although the TRADOC criteria for air conditioning cut-off have been met, air conditioner use will still be continued through the warm fall days that lie ahead.

During Labor Day week a cold front brought temperasure down long enough to meet TRADOC guidelines for cut-off of air conditioning. Because more hot days are still likely, air conditioning systems won't be turned off for the year until later. Building occupants and family housing residents may use air conditioners when the outside air temperature exceeds 78 degrees Fahrenheit. If the outside temperature falls below 75 degrees, DEH will use the Energy Management and Control System (EMCS) to turn off air conditiners and cooling systems under EMCS control. Air conditioners that aren't under EMCS control must be turned off by building occupants when the outside air temperature is less than 78 degrees.

This liberal policy for air conditioning use was made possible by recent achievements in reducing energy use by the Fort Benning population. Improved energy management techniques and increased awareness and concern on the part of building occupants and family housing residents helped keep energy use within goals established by TRADOC. Because the post used less energy through the year, more energy is now available to keep everyone comfortable in the hot days of fall.

Conservation efforts, however, must still be an ongoing goal. In the next year, Fort Benning's goals will be lower than those in the current year. This is part of the Army's plan to reduce energy consumption Army-wide by 15 percent from 1985 figures. The Fort Benning community and energy managers must work a little harder each year to meet these decreasing goals.

The success we've achieved recently shows that energy conservation begins with the elimination of energy waste and abuse. We don't have to freeze in the winter or swelter in the summer to meet energy goals. Everyone who uses energy on post must be responsible for using it wisely.

AER gets two unexpected contributions

Army News Service

An unexpected contribution of $5,000 from a military-oriented monthly magazine, matched by another $5,000 from the magazine's publisher, set the stage Sept. 1 for a Pentagon ceremony in which Army Chief of Staff Gen. Carl E. Vuono and Sergeant Major of the Army Julius W. Gates relayed the contributions to officials of the Army Emergency Relief fund.

In accepting the check from Vuono, AER director Ross Thompson, a retired U.S. Army lieutenant general, praised the Washington, D.C.-based magazine, the "Armed Forces Journal," and its parent corporation, Maxwell Communications, Inc. He noted that the donation arrived outside the regular period for AER solicitation of the soldier community.

Such corporate support, he explained, reminds everyone that any individual or group may act on its own initiative to contribute to the fund, without one's having to wait for the next organized canvassing of the fund's principal contributors — i.e., soldiers who choose to "help their own" via such a worthy cause.

That worthiness is epitomized by Thompson's comment that "the strength of what we do is from the individual soldier" — meaning that, without that soldier's financial support, the Army Emergency Relief's programs and services would fall far short of its goals.

As he relayed the check signed by AFJ editor Benjamin J. Schemmer (himself a former Army officer), Vuono stressed the importance of having the Army "take care of our soldiers and families. The work you (in AER) do is very important. We appreciate what you're doing."

Echoing that sentiment, Gates reminded all present that a teamwork effort like the Army Emergency Relief "was organized for the specific purpose of supporting our soldiers in need."

From his headquarters in Alexandria, Va., Thompson defined those valid emergency needs as including food, rent, utilities, essential travel or car repair, medical and dental care and funeral expenses. The AER assistance can take the form of interest-free loans. "If loan repayment will cause undue hardship, grants are considered," Thompson said. "Soldiers also have access to undergraduate-level educational assistance for spouses and dependent children," he added.

Since its inception in 1942 as a private, non-profit organization, the fund has helped more than 2 million Army people with more than $320 million.

As such, it is the Army's own emergency financial-assistance organization.

USARSA golfer makes All-Army team

By Marco Moraies
USARSA Public Affairs Office

How does playing sandlot baseball make someone an adept golfer?

Ask Maj. Bill Engel. For him, playing baseball as a child sharpened his golfing skills. "I always had this desire to excel in sports," Engel said. "I chose baseball but found I could never hit the ball. I had to find a sport like golf where the ball stands still as you swing at it."

Engel, 41, is one of 12 soldiers who recently qualified as a senior's division champion in the All-Army Golf Trails for 1988.

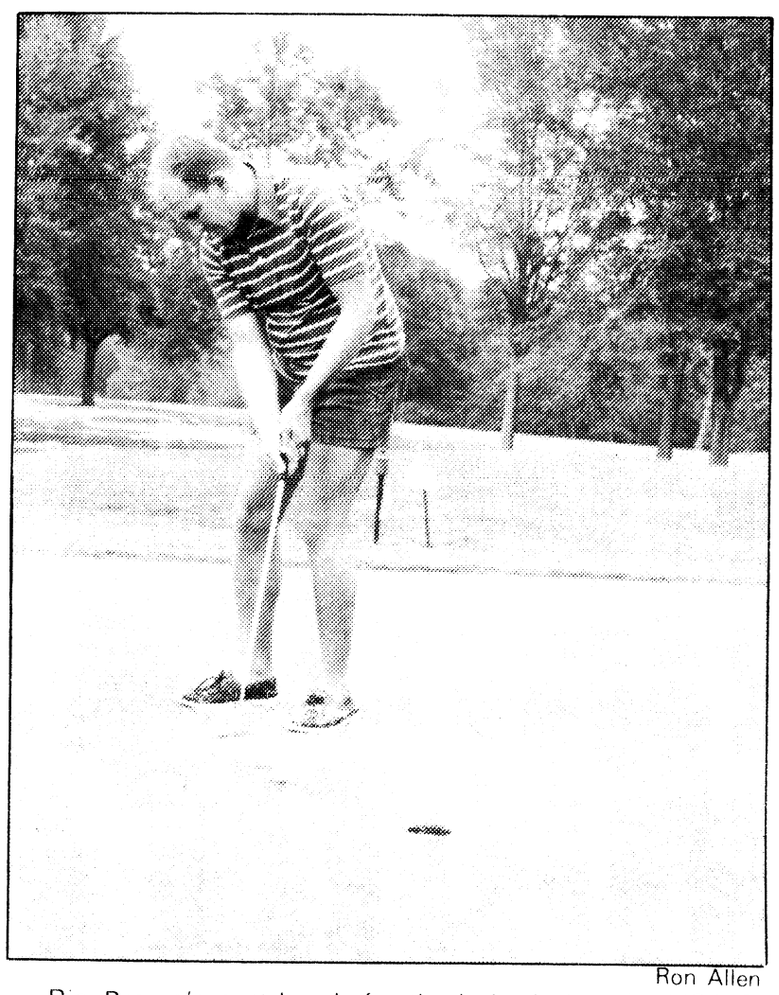
The 12 Army golfers compete this week at the Gordon Lakes Golf Course at Fort Gordon, Ga., in the Inter-Service Golf Championship. They will play against the best Navy, Air Force and Marine teams.

"A total of 66 Army 'linksters' competed at Fort Gordon for the 12 slots which make up the All-Army team," Engel said. "The Air Force team has traditionally won inter-service play, but I feel very confident we have a stronger team this year."

Engel's golfing record speaks for itself. He lettered for three consecutive years while attending Virginia Technical University in his native Blacksburg, Va., from 1967 through 1969. He participated in the National Collegiate Association of America (NCAA) golf tournament in 1967. Virginia Tech finished 6th in that nationwide competition.

Engel made the All-Army team in 1972 and competed in All-Army golf trials in 1980.

It is said that practice makes perfect in any technical discipline. For Engel, it's become a way of life.



"I practice on a driving range two or three days a week and play 18 holes every Saturday whenever possible," he said.

"A lot of how you play golf depends on your equipment, such as golf clubs, balls and even shoes," Engel said. "Ninety-eight percent of amateur golfers will use a cut-proof ball during a game, while 98 percent of pro golfers use a ball made of natural rubber compound—the cut-proof ball goes farther on the fairway, but the ball used by the pros spins better as it lands on the green," Engel explained.

Engel's golf idols are Jack Nicklaus and Curtis Strange. "I played with Strange when he was an amateur during a tournament in Portsmouth, Va.," Engel said.

Engel, who served two years as executive officer, 2nd Battalion, 10th Field Artillery, 197th Infantry Brigade, currently serves as a special projects

Ric Brown's putt heads for the hole during the USAIC Golf Championship at the Follow Me Golf Course.

Brown's six over par wins

By Ron Allen
USAIC Public Affairs Office

A rain soaked Bob Loushine of DENTAC fired his first-ever hole-in-one during last week's USAIC Golf Championships held at the Follow Me Golf Course. He used an 8 iron on the 129-yard, par 3 16th hole.

Loushine was also a member of the winning team, DENTAC, with a two-day score of 651. Other members of the team were Richard Brown, Gene Withrow, Bill Cobin, Brent Hassel and Don Foster.

CATD was the second-place team with a total of 665. Members of the team were Theodore Reid, Dan Fake, Gary Robertson, Jeff Yarbrough, Floyd Troupe and Ric Brown.

The hole-in-one grabbed the spotlight from CATD's Ric Brown, who placed first in the Championship Flight with a two-day total of 150, 6 over par. He scored 73 the first day and 77 the second day.

"I did extremly well with the iron and woods," Brown said, "but, I had a little trouble putting."

Second place in the Championship Flight went to Hassel of DENTAC who shot a 154 two-day total, 10 over par.

In the first flight, Thomas Suitt, 29th Infantry Regiment, place first with 164; and Don Foster, DENTAC, placed second at 168.

Eugene Brown, 498th Medical Company, took first in the second flight with 173 followed by Patrick Young also from the 498th with 178.

In the third flight, Randal Treber of 498th fired a 185 for the top spot; and Alvin Honaker, NCOA, shot a 189 for second.

James Everett, 533rd Transportation Company, took first in the fourth flight with a 210; and Michael Hundley, 1st Infantry Training Brigade, place second with 206.

Cadet earns alternate slot on Olympic team

Army News Service

University of South Florida Army ROTC cadet Kirsten Peterson has won a position as an alternate on the women's Olympic shooting team.

Peterson took third place among about 40 contenders in the women's small-bore rifle competition at the Olympic tryouts, held recently in Los Angeles.

Only three women were selected to go to Korea.

Peterson, a native of St. Paul, Minn., has been competing in riflery since age 12. An All-American and a member of the U.S. Shooting Team, she was named the USF Woman Athlete of the Year for 1988. She is also the winner of this year's collegiate sectional title.

During her freshman year of college, Peterson was a walk-on, won a scholarship and now holds a ROTC scholarship. She credits the ROTC program with helping her manage her busy schedule.

"Even though ROTC may have taken time away from training," she explains, "it makes me use the time that I do have more effectively. ROTC stresses physical training," she adds, "and, although riflery is a passive sport, you have to be in good physical condition to handle the stress."

Peterson left for Seoul on Aug. 31 and will return to the United States at the end of September. The Olympic games begin tomorrow.

"We are very excited that one of our cadets might have the opportunity to represent the United States at the Olympics," said Maj. Gen. Robert E. Wagner, who commands the U.S. Army Cadet Command. "We wish her the best of luck and we'll be looking forward to seeing the results of the competition."

Soldiers qualify in 14 Olympic trials events, including boxing

Army News Service

Of the 188 soldiers qualifying for the trials, 18 qualifed in five events: boxing, fencing, kayaking, modern pentathlon and shooting.

Three alternate boxers were selected from the Army competitors: Sgt. Alfred Cole, Spec. Robert H. Salters and PFC Michael Bent.

Three Army coaches will be in Seoul: SFC Floyd Winter for Greco-Roman Wrestling as an assistant and SFC Hank Johnson and MSgt. Ken Adams as boxing coaches.

Norm Dodson, of last year's Fort Benning Flyers rugby team, pulls an opponent to the ground in the last minutes of a game. The 1988-89 rugby season officially opens tomorrow. Two games will be played at Fort Benning on Stillwell Field, which is located across the street from Briant Wells Field House. The first game, between the Georgia Rugby Union Select-side and Renegades A-side, Atlanta, will begin at 1 p.m. The second game will feature the Columbus-Fort Benning Cruisematics against the Renegades B-side.

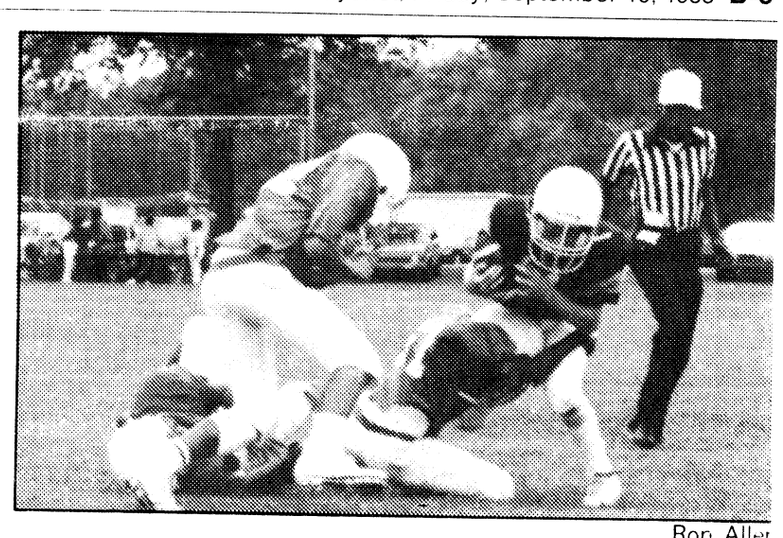
officer for the commandant of the U.S. Army School of the Americas.

The 17-year Army field artillery branch veteran is scheduled for promotion to lieutenant colonel next month.

"It's all speculation but the fact that in field artillery a projectile's maximum effective range is shot from a 45-degree angle rules true in golf," he said with a subtle smile.

Engel's longest drive on the fairway is about 240 yards.

Odomes kicks off YA football opener



By Ron Allen
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Dianne Odomes, mother of Nate Odomes the safety for the Buffalo Bills professional football team, was the guest speaker at the YA Football opening ceremonies last Saturday at Blue Field.

Mrs. Odomes spoke to the crowd of about 800 players, chearleaders, coaches, family and spectators about her son, Nate, and when he was a participant in the YA Football program.

"Nate began his football career right here on this field," she said. "He learned the basics here and went on to become a star in college and win many awards and continued on to become a professional football player."

Th s year's program is split into three leagues, The Grasshoppers flag football for ages 6-8 with three teams, the Giants, Bulldogs and Vikings; the Termites tackle football for ages 9-10 with four teams the Bears, Falcons, Vikings and Cowboys; and Pee Wees tackle football for ages 11-13 with four teams the Giants, Sooners, Redskins and Packers.

Ron Aller

A runner for the Giants is stopped by the defense of the Redskins in the opening game of the YA football season.

In the Grasshopper League, the Giants beat the Vikings, 20-8; and the Bulldogs were idle.

The Falcons shut out the Vikings, 8-zip; and Bears dumped the Cowboys, 22-8. In the Bears game, quarterback Corey Thompson ran in two touchdowns, one of 68 yards and the other from 13 yards. Javain Rufus picked up the other Bears' TD on a 22-yard pass play. Enoka Fatuesi lead the Bears on defense with 14 tackles and one sack, and Bobby Ashbrook and Jason Burdeshaw teamed up for a total of 14 tackles.

In the Pee Wee League, the Sooners blanked the Packers 20 zip. Halfback Franklin Mills ran in the first score from 20 yards out in the first quarter and halfback Keith Pittman took it the exta point. In the third quarter, Pittman ran in a sweep from 30 yards for the second score, but the extra point attempt failed. In the final quarter, quarterback Joseph Addison fired a bullet to wide receiver, Antawione Morris for a 45 yard TD pass play. The extra point try failed.

EDITOR'S NOTE: Head coaches are reminded to turn in game summaries to Mr. Pierce every Monday so they can be included in The Bayonet.

Ann M. McDonald

Alpha, 2/ 29th dumps Delta, 7-6

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

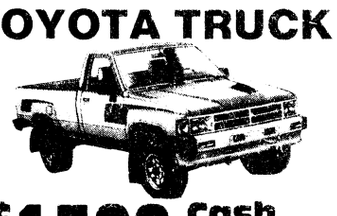
The rain dampened the bodies but not the enthusiasm of Company A as they edged out Company D, 7-6 in 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment in flag football action last week.

That game marked the opening of the post flag football season.

Company A scored early in the first quarter when Fred Mosely caught a pass and ran it into the end zone.

Timothy Rhodes scored the extra point.

During the rest of the first half and most of the second half, both teams played good defense and neither team scored.



Company D scored 50 seconds before the end of the game and failed to make the extra point, which cost them the game.

According to Company A right guard, John Jones, his team came away victorious because they have a good solid team and a great coach.

"We don't have any stars on our team," Jones said. "We all play together, and hopefully, that is what we need to take our team to the top."

Maj. Gen. Michael Spigelmire accepts the flag representing his acceptance of duties as commanding general of Fort Benning at a ceremony Wednesday.

New commander

Spigelmire takes reins

By Agatha H. James
Bayonet Staff Writer

Maj. Gen. Michael F. Spigelmire became Fort Benning's 40th commanding general in an assumption of command ceremony Wednesday on York Field. Spigelmire succeeds Maj. Gen. Kenneth C. Leuer who retired Sept. 1.

"Fort Benning is known for its fine military force, excellent community relations and a dedicated civilian workforce," Spigelmire said in a brief speech during the ceremony. "I can assure you that tradition will continue.

"The soldiers here represent every facet of military training," he said. "I pledge my full support for their continued excellence."

In introductory remarks about Spigelmire, Lt. Gen. Leonard P. Wishart, III, Training and Doctrine Command's Deputy Commander, said, "Today's Army demands a special leader; one imbued with a fighting spirit. I can't think of anyone better equipped to lead the troops here at Fort Benning."

Wishart added that Spigelmire brings with him a wealth of tactical experience. "He is a proven leader in tactical command," he said.

Spigelmire, 49, has held various command and staff positions. He comes to Fort Benning from the 24th Infantry Division (Mechanized) in Fort Stewart, Ga., where he served as Commander. Prior to that, he was the Division's Assistant Division Commander for Maneuver.

His initial tour was with the 24th Infantry Divison in Germany where he served in company and division level positions and as a detachment executive officer and commander with the 10th Special Forces Group.

He served two tours in Vietnam. First, he commanded a company and later served as a battalion adjutant with the 1st Cavalry Division. After a stateside tour as an instructor with the Infantry School at Fort Benning, he returned to Vietnam as a district senior advisor.

In 1972, Spigelmire was assigned to the Pentagon where he served as an Operations Staff Officer and later as Assistant Secretary to the General Staff, Office of the Chief of Staff, Army.

Museum bells ring tribute

By Agatha H. James
Bayonet staff writer

The National Infantry Museum rang an 1860 U. S. Army bell 201 times Sept. 16, to commemorate the signing of the U.S. Constitution more than 200 years ago.

The event, part of the "Bells Across America" program instituted by the Committee on the Bicentennial of the Constitution, continues a five-year observance begun last year by the Department of the Army.

The ringing tribute began at 4 p.m. At that time, individuals and groups across America simultaneously rang bells and chimes.

SSgt. Robert L. Abernathy, Jr., and Spec. Lance E. Walters, Jr., members of the Museum's guard staff, Troop A, 15th Cavalry, 197th Infantry Brigade, rang the bell.

"It means a great deal to me to be able to help recognize this significant historical event," said Walters. "I'm thankful our forefathers saw the need for a constitution."

Abernathy echoed the sentiments. "This occasion reminds me of what our Constitution stands for — human rights, freedom and justice for everybody," he said. "I took an oath to defend those rights, and I'm proud that I did."

Last year, Museum officials selected school children to ring the bell. Ed Annable, the Museum's Registrar, said, "This year, we decided to use soldiers because it shows that 200 years later, service members are still doing their part in living up to the oath to defend the Constitution."

More than 200 years ago, delegates to the Constitutional Convention signed a document that established the world's first government by the people and for the people. Adopted on Sept. 17, 1787, and ratified on June 21, 1788, the Constitution is the world's oldest written instrument of national government.

The cornerstone of the American republic, it represents our national ideals of freedom, justice and equality for all.

All week, original documents, signed by former soldiers who fought in the Revolutionary War and later were signers of the Constitution, have been on display at the Museum. Also, the U. S. Constitution Flag has been flown beneath the U. S. Flag in front of Building 4.

Election day nears

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Nov. 8 is just 45 days away. That's when voters will elect the next United States president.

There's still time to register in Muscogee County. Voters have until Oct. 11 and may register at the Government Center, located in downtown Columbus.

Service members and spouses away from home can use federal post card applications to register and to receive an absentee ballot. (West Virginia residents must use two separate applications — one to register and another one to receive an absentee ballot. All other states require only one.)

The applications are available from unit voting assistance officers or at any one of three main post locations:

The Information Office in Building 4; the Legal Assistance Office in Building 5; or the Personnel Processing Center, Building 2622 in Soldiers' Plaza.

Most states accept the applications 30 to 45 days prior to the election. But, with only 45 days left until the presidential election, time is an important factor. Once the absentee ballot is received, it should be mailed immediately since some states will disallow ballots received or postmarked after election day.

Many do not know just how important one vote is. Every vote — including the absentee ballot — does matter.

POWs-MIAs honored

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

Soldiers who were Prisoners of War or Missing in Action were honored in a ceremony conducted in Marshall Auditorium recently.

Jo Ann Shaw, president of the Georgia Committee of POW/MIA, was the guest speaker at the ceremony.

Shaw has a brother missing in action in Laos since July 24, 1970.

According to Shaw, President Ronald Reagan has really made the POW, MIA issue priority since his time and office, and she wanted to assure the audience that something is really being done about it.

"Because, when a family member is MIA, it never leaves you, it stays on your mind constantly." she said.

This wreath was placed at the POW-MIA monument by Maj. Gen. Michael Spigelmire and Jo Ann Shaw. The monument stands on Honor Field.

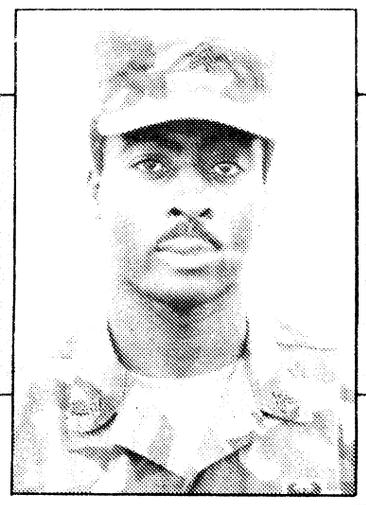
OPINION



VARIOUS VOICES: How can we better recognize Native Americans?

Spec. Ernie Green, Co. B, 1st Bn., 507th PIR — "There should be a holiday for Native Americans. It would show respect for them and the numerous things they have done for our country. A good example of their contributions is their heroics during WWII.

PFC Lachelle Marable, Co. B, 1st Bn., 507th PIR — "Special exhibits demonstrating their culture and some of the contributions they have made to our country."

Sgt. Jack Jones, Co. B, 1st Bn., 29th Inf. Regt. — "Well, I think we should make the public more aware of all the contributions Native Americans have made."

Pamela Williams, family member — "I think we should try to help them more. A lot of Native Americans are still living on reservations and are in desperate need of financial aid. I think they are just kind of pushed aside."

Pvt. Kevin Singleton, 1st Bn., 507th PIR — "I think we should let the Indians have some of their land back and give them more say in political decisions."

Tericea Rossiter, family member — "I think a day set aside just for our Native Americans to promote public awareness."

AUSA questions legislation

AUSA Defense Report

The complaint that some of our Western allies have failed to contribute their fair share to the common defense is raised with some regularity, especially around election time. In reacting to the charges, the Senate Appropriations Committee has offered legislation to force the other governments to carry more of the load.

Under the mantle of burdensharing, the Senate panel's defense spending bill for 1989 seeks to freeze U.S. spending for stationing American military forces overseas. It would also essentially bar future increases in the number of personnel stationed overseas. More importantly, it would require the Pentagon to begin reducing the number of military families it now supports in foreign countries.

The major burdensharing provision in the Senate Committee's bill would limit spending for the deployment of U.S. forces overseas to the amount authorized in the current fiscal year. Any additional costs, including costs resulting from fluctuations in the value of the dollar, would have to be covered by allied governments. Just how this would be accomplished is less than clear.

Another provision in the senate bill would limit the number of military dependents overseas who would be supported by any Pentagon programs to the 413,000 reported in fiscal year 1987. Further, the Defense Department would be required to reduce the number of dependents overseas by 10 percent by 1991.

Unfortunately, it would appear that the impact of some of the Senate proposals on the people who serve in the armed forces has not been very well thought out. For example, while all service families overseas would be affected by these reductions, the majority are Army families.

Clearly, Congress is moving to limit the costs associated with United States' forward deployed forces. But, the Senate Appropriations Committee should ask itself is this the right way and the best way to accomplish that objective?

One thing is certain — cutting back on the number of family members overseas to serve longer and more frequent tours separated from their families, that in itself will make it a lot harder for the Army to retain the services of some of its best and brightest, which in turn has a direct adverse impact on readiness.

NCOA argues for NCO severance pay

NCOA

Enlisted personnel will bear the economic brunt of involuntary separations from the military caused by budget cuts because, unlike officers, they are not entitled to severance or readjustment pay, the Noncommissioned Officers Association warned today.

"Officers who are forced to leave the service before becoming eligible for retired pay can collect up to $30,000 in severance pay, but enlisted personnel with less than 20 years of service get nothing," C.R. Jackson, executive vice president of the NCOA, pointed out.

Jackson, a retired Navy Force Master Chief, noted that for the past 15 years the NCOA has been advocating equal treatment for commissioned and noncommissioned officers who are involuntarily released before reaching retirement eligibility, but has been unsuccessful in securing favorable legislation. Meanwhile, Congress and the Department of Defense have approved severance for other groups.

Ten years ago, for example, President Carter signed into law special legislation that provided up to $50,000 a year to private sector loggers put out of work when the government added 48,000 acres to the Redwood National Park. This program also guaranteed some loggers age 50 or older the equivalent of their annual salaries tax free until they reached age 65, Jackson noted.

In another case, DoD paid out $28 million — the equivalent of $200,000 per person — to 141 Japanese nationals laid off by an American bank that lost a contract to provide services to American military personnel stationed in Japan.

"Despite these actions, both Congress and the DoD have refused to allocate one cent in severance or readjustment pay for enlisted men and women who form the backbone of America's Armed Forces," Jackson declared.

"The involuntary separation of noncommissioned and petty officers is purely a quick-fix economic measure. It is too easy and too tempting to discharge enlisted people to meet a cost savings goal," he concluded.

The Noncommissioned Officers Association of the United States is a federally chartered, nonprofit fraternal organization founded in 1960 to promote and protect the rights and benefits of active-duty and veteran noncommissioned and petty officers (NCOs/POs) in all five branches of the Armed Forces worldwide.

Native American Day set

In recognition of Native Americans and their many contributions to our country, Sept. 23 is officially declared "Native American Day" at Fort Benning.

This year's theme is "Honoring the First Americans." Native Americans possess a rich culture. Their experiences and accomplishments are deeply rooted in our American heritage. Their excellence in the arts, business, law, medicine, and the Armed Forces has been instrumental in our country's development.

I invite each individual at Fort Benning to learn something new about the first Americans, the Native Americans, during this year's observance.

Preventing fires saves lives, property, resourses

By James E. Floyd
Chief, Fire Prevention Branch

Fire prevention is the saving of lives, property and natural resources from destruction by needless fires. Every year more than 15,000 people die because of faulty fire prevention. That's the same as saying once a year all the fun loving people of the United States get together to have a little town warming. They could pick a town the size of Cusseta, Ga., and burn it and its inhabitants so they would never be heard from again.

Ten years ago, more than $870,984,000 of property damage was recorded because of needless fires. Today that figure has more than doubled. More than 300,000 people were left homeless because of one careless moment by an individual.

More money is lost in paying doctor bills, hospitals and loss of wages due to inability to work caused by fire. There are also losses that cannot be measured by money. The loss of someone's life, the loss of treasured items, the psychological effects on someone who is burned and is left with some kind of disfigurement or scar.

Legend says Prometheus first gave fire to man because he wanted to help them. Even if fire was started by lightning, a volcano, spontaneous combustion or Prometheus, man has had it for over 500,000 years. After all that time, one would think ran could have learned to use it properly and be able to control it. Fire Prevention is like a chain with people as its links. Everyone knows a chain is only as strong as its weakest link.

Twenty-six percent of all fires are caused by matches or smoking. Smoking in bed, not using smoking facilities properly, leaving matches in reach of small children and just careless throwing away of smoking refuse. Another 13 percent is caused by the misuse of electricity. This could be stopped by not overloading circuits and by having a good ground. These two groups of fire causes make up 40 percent of all fires and both groups could be prevented by individuals using good fire prevention habits.

Changes in the Presidency

Today when the President of the United States travels, it is an event that calls for weeks of careful planning by a large number of staff members who must see to everything from communications to security. Scores of staff must travel with the president and separate airplanes are necessary to carry all the press who follow the chief executive's every move.

Just seeing to the communications needs of the president and those traveling with him is a major undertaking. Scores of direct lines to the White House must be in place so the president can continue to be in touch with all areas of the government, civilian and military, as well as with other world capitals.

Huge crowds turn out to greet the president. Local police, as well as the U.S. Secret Service, must be prepared for all those who want to see their elected leader.

Contrast that scene with the spring of 1791 when George Washington set out on a two-month tour of the Southern states. While Washington was traveling through North and South Carolina and Georgia, he was completely out of touch with his government. There were no telephones or telegraph lines to carry immediate messages. The postal service was slow and uncertain, and even if that were not the case, no one knew in advance where the president would be staying or for how long.

Mindful of this, Washington made provisions for decisions to be made while he was traveling. The federal government was much simpler in those days, and so it was only mildly surprising that the two months were so quiet that no decisions were called for in his absence.

Thomas Jefferson was worried about Washington's safety on his trip—but not out of fear that the "Father of Our Country" would be attacked. In fact, Washington traveled without a guard of any kind. Jefferson's safety warnings were about the terrible conditions of the roads and highways Washington would have to travel.

No advance men traveled ahead of Washington's party to pave the way and see to arrangements. Instead, the small party simply sought a tavern or inn where Washington could buy a hot meal and the use of a bed for the night. Innkeepers were stunned to learn that their guest would be the world-famous George Washington.

When the tour was completed and Washington was back in what was then the capital, Philadelphia, he calculated he had traveled 1,887 miles. With some humor he noted that his horses had lost weight but he had gained a few pounds. What he had truly gained, however, was an accurate, first-hand survey of current public opinion.

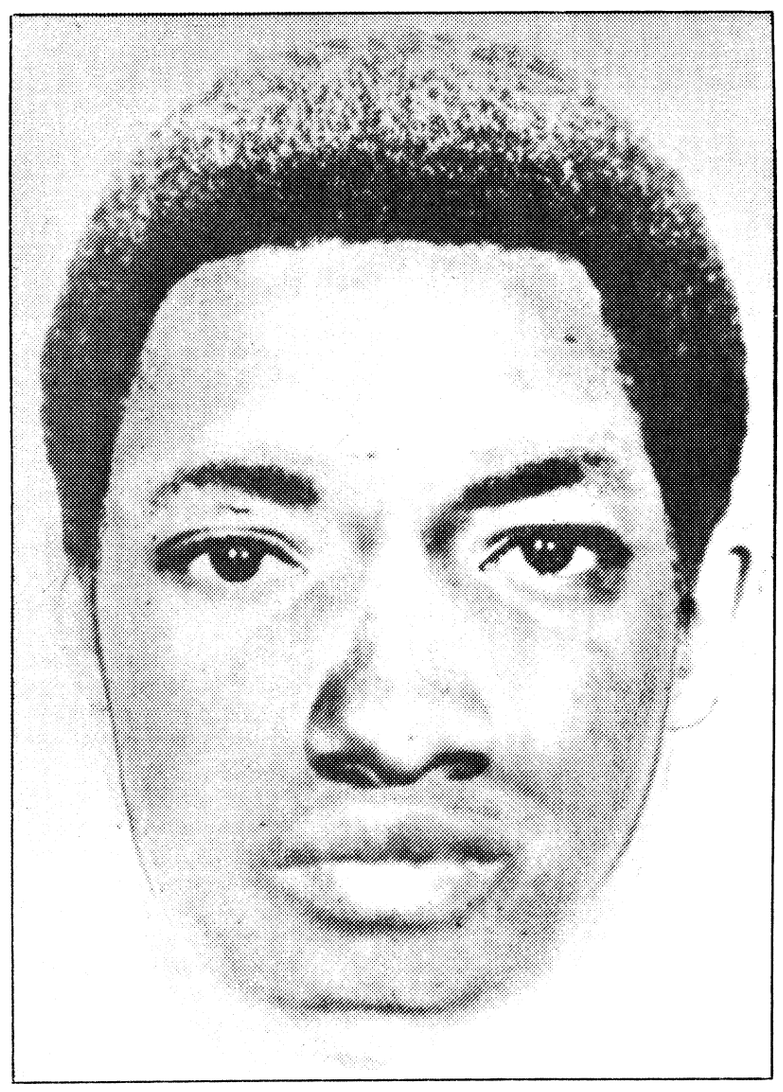
Authorities continue rapes investigation

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Fort Benning's Military Police, CID and the Columbus Police Department are continuing their search for suspects in the rapes of four wives of post soldiers, which occurred in late July through August.

According to Maj. David Buzzell, deputy provost marshal, special MP surveillance operations are still ongoing.

The four rapes that appear to be connected have occurred both on and off post. The two on-post rapes took place in Battle Park and Indianhead Terrace. No additional rapes connected to these four have occurred since Aug. 28 and no other rapes have occurred on post since that date, according to officials.



"While our operations are clandestine," Buzzell said, "they are designed to provide additional security to post residents and, at the same time, to catch the perpetrator." Buzzell added that post residents should not hesitate to call the MP Desk Sergeant if they see suspicious individuals around their homes.

"We would much rather respond to a false alarm rather than get to the site of an actual crime too late," Buzzell said.

The victims have described their assailant as a black male, of stocky build, in his late 20s or early 30s. He is about 5 feet 10 inches to 6 feet tall and weighs about 160 pounds.

The Fort Benning CID is offering a $5,000 reward for information leading to the arrest and indictment of the perpetrator of these rapes. The Columbus Police Department is also offering a $1,000 reward.

The MP desk sergeant's phone is 545-5222. CID may be reached at 545-7950.

Precautions suggested

USAIC Public Affairs Office

In response to recent rapes of military wives, the Military Police recommend that post residents take extra precautions to secure their homes. They suggest that husbands make sure that their houses are locked before leaving for work.

Residents who have windows that cannot be locked should place their PM cards out or call the PM shop at 545-4326. Doors that need locks repaired should be reported to the Work Order Section at 545-2135. Residents in Bouton Heights and Davis Hill should contact the family housing maintenance contractor at 687-4383 for repair of their doors and windows.

Additional items to secure the home are available at the Unit and Housing Support Branch, which contains the U-Do-It Shop, building 385 on Vibbert Avenue.

The U-Do-It Shop has barrel bolts, security chains and peep holes for main doors as well as securtiy pins for sliding glass doors. Items to secure windows include hash locks as well as security screens for basement doors. Some of these items can be installed by PM personnel.

The U-Do-It Shop is open Tuesday through Friday, 9 a.m. to 4 p.m., and Saturdays, 9 a.m. to 2 p.m. The shop is closed Saturdays over three-day weekends and on Mondays.

The MPs also recommend that post residents turn on outside lights during nighttime hours.

Other useful security tips are contained in USAIC Pamphlet 190-31, a copy of which can be obtained at the MP Desk, Building 215.

The countries represented on the menu were Puerto Rico, Colombia, Peru, Venezuela, Spain, El Salvador, Ecuador, Panama, Bolivia, and Mexico.

ASK THE JUDGE

By Jessica L. Kole
Office of the Staff Judge Advocate

Q. - I have been receiving telephone calls from a debt collection agency concerning a credit card debt I paid off two years ago. This jerk calls me at all hours of the day and night, uses abusive language, and threatens to throw me in jail if I don't pay up. What can I do to get this moron to leave me alone?

A. - The Fair Debt Collection Practices Act (FDCPA) was passed by Congress in 1977 to insure that all debtors are treated fairly. This law prohits debt collectors from using certain methods of collecting money. A "debt collector" is a person who regularly collects debts owed to others. The FDCPA covers all personal, family, and household debts. This includes money owed for the purchase of a car, for medical care, or charge accounts.

The Act states that a debt collector may contact you in person, by mail, telephone, or telegram. However, he may not contact you at inconvenient or unusual times or places, such as before 8 a.m. or after 9 p.m., unless you agree. He may not contact you at work if he has reason to know that your employer disapproves.

A debt collector may not harass or abuse you. He must not use threats of violence or harm to you, your property or reputation; he must not use obscene or profane language, or repeatedly use the telephone to annoy you. He must not use any false statements when attempting to collect a debt. For example, he may not falsely imply that you have committed a crime, or that you will be arrested if you do not pay your debt. A debt collector must cease contact with you when he learns that you are represented by an attorney, receives a written refusal to pay the debt, or receives written communications requesting that such contacts end.

If a collection agency contacts you, there are steps you can take to protect yourself if you believe you do not owe the debt. Within five days after a debt collector contacts you, he must send you a written notice which states the amount of money you owe, the name of the creditor to whom you owe the money, and explains your right to dispute the accuracy or existence of the debt. This notice must also inform you that the debt collector is required to obtain proof of the debt if you request it within 30 days of the notice. If you receive such a notice, you should immediately write the debt collector a letter requesting verification of the debt. In the letter, explain that you do not owe the debt and that you want proof of it. Also state that you want the debt collector to cease further contact with you. Mail the letter by certified mail, return receipt requested, and be sure to keep copies of all correspondence you send and receive.

A debt collector who violates the FDCPA is civilly liable to the debtor for damages and attorney's fees. In addition, a violation is also considered an unfair or deceptive act, and the Federal Trade Commission can fine the debt collector up to $10,000.

If you are being contacted by a debt collector and believe he is violating the FDCPA, contact the Legal Assistance Office at 545-3281 for an appointment with an attorney.

43rd Engineers pack everything for NTC exercise

43rd Engineer Battalion

Charlie Company, 43rd Engineer Battalion (Combat) (Heavy), recently railloaded almost all of its equipment to the National Training Center at Fort Irwin, Calif. for the unit's rotation at NTC as the opposing forces (OPFOR) Engineers from Sept. 12 to Oct. 5.

The operation included loading 68 vehicles, including many heavy construction pieces of equipment such as bulldozers, scrapers, and graders. A total of 24 steel and wooden deck cars, which were driven onto the railcars and binded down with chains, were used to transport the equipment. Chock blocks were also used on the wooden deck cars to ensure there would be no lateral shifting. In addition, two Gondola railcars were used to load a Milvan (a large storage box), two Conexes (like a Milvan but smaller in size) and the blades from five D8K bulldozers.

Because of the route to Fort Irwin has width restrictions, the blades from the bulldozers had to be removed. This posed a problem because each blade weighed approximately 7,000 pounds. The comany's 25-ton crane was used to lift each blade and place it into the Gondola railcar. All five blades were placed in one Gondola car, which left only seven inches of freeplay to spare. Once in the Gondola railcar, they were secured with cable. Once the bulldozers arrive at Fort Irwin, the blades were reattached.

Charlie Company completed the raiload in just one day using a team of 30 soldiers from 7 a.m. to 10 p.m. The soldiers were broken down into two crews: A chaining crew and a chock block crew. Pre-training classes were given to each crew on the proper procedures of railloading and the work began. As a vehicle was driven onto the railcar, the first crew ensured that the vehicle was centered and chained. The chock block crew, which worked only on the wooden deck cars, nailed blocks in front and back of the wheels or tracks and wedges on each side.

Materials for the railload were provided by the Department of Engineering and Housing's packing and crating division The division provided blocks, wedges, and nails used to anchor the blocks and wedges. Jose Hernandez, of Arrival/Departure Airfield Control Group, stated that "Charlie Company did an outstanding job — a three-day job was completed in one day. Of all units on Fort Benning, Charlie Company was the best I have worked with in many months. They displayed pride and really hustled to finish in one day."

Charlie Company will get another chance to demonstrate their railloading ability, this time to the railroad personnel at Fort Irwin when they railload the equipment for the return trip to Fort Benning.

Reserves seek best article

Reserve Officers Association

The search for 1988's best published scholarly work on the military reserves has resumed in a joint effort of the Reserve Officers Association and the American Military Institute.

Established in 1986, the ROA Pershing Prize — $500 and a medal — will be given to the author of "the best scholarly article on the history of the U.S. reserve forces from all sources" that was published this year.

The prize honors General of the Armies John J. Pershing, Army Chief of Staff who suggested the organization of ROA in 1922 "to assure an adequate national security."

The selection will be made by a four-man panel appointed by Dr. Charles J. Gross, historian with the Office of Air Force History, chairman; Dr. V. Keith Fleming, Marine Corps Historical Center; Dr. William R. Roberts, U.S. Naval Academy, and Dr. Robert K. Wright, U.S. Army Center of Military History.

Deadline for nominations for the 1988 judging is Jan. 15, 1989. Nominations, to include a copy of the printed work, should be sent to Dr. Gross, HQ AFSC/HO, Andrews AFB, D.C. 20334-5000. Information can be obtained from him at 301-981-6354/6355.

The prize in 1986 was won by Maj. Bruce A. Olson, USAR, a doctoral candidate at the University of Houston, Texas. His manuscript, "The Houston Light Guards: A Study of Houston's Post-Reconstruction Militia and its Membership, 1837-1903," was from "The Houston Review: History and Culture on the Gulf Coast," published by the Houston Library Board April 1986.

There was no award for 1987.

Veterans Administration begins nationwide survey

Veterans Administration

The Veterans Administration has begun a nationwide survey of veterans who use VA's medical system to gather information on their use of other VA benefits and programs. The survey is designed to assist the agency in planning to meet the future needs of veterans.

The Arawak Consulting Corporation, Rosslyn, Va., was awarded a $598,000 contract to conduct the survey, which began in mid-September. Interviews will be conducted with 3,000 men and women veterans who were selected at random and contacted directly by Arawak. Survey questions include military background, education, income, and types of VA services and programs, in addition to medical, used by these veterans.

The survey is expected to be completed in December, with a final report available by the middle of next year.

Administrator of Veterans Affairs, Thomas K. Turnage, is urging all veterans contacted to participate in the survey. In a letter from the Administrator to each veteran selected, Turnage noted that participation is voluntary and the confidentiality of all responses will be maintained.

Arawak is conducting another survey for the VA, gathering information on the needs of disabled veterans. That survey also is expected to be completed by the middle of next year.

Engineers experience different culture in Honduras

By David R. Penland
43rd Engineer Group Chaplain

It's not Iwo Jima, but the job Company B, 43rd Engineer Battalion, 36th Engineer Group is doing at Joint Task Force-Bravo (JTFB) in Honduras still makes a difference.

Honduras is a developing democratic nation, and the Engineers of Bravo Company (plus support elements from Headquarters Support Company and Company A) are doing their part to put the emphasis on "developing." Our Bravo Company Engineers are improving a stretch of a mountain farm—to—market road, constructing a helicopter hangar and landing area and inserting a culvert drainage system.

Bravo Company and its support elements have been in Honduras since June 10, living in "hutches" or "C-huts" at JTFB, a combined Army, Air Force, Navy Task Force located at Palmerola, AFB.

Twenty-two of the determined Bravo soldiers have lived high on a mountain overlooking JTF Bravo, struggling against heavy rains, more than occasional high winds and steep mountain grades to upgrade primitive roadways essential to Honduran economic growth and military security.

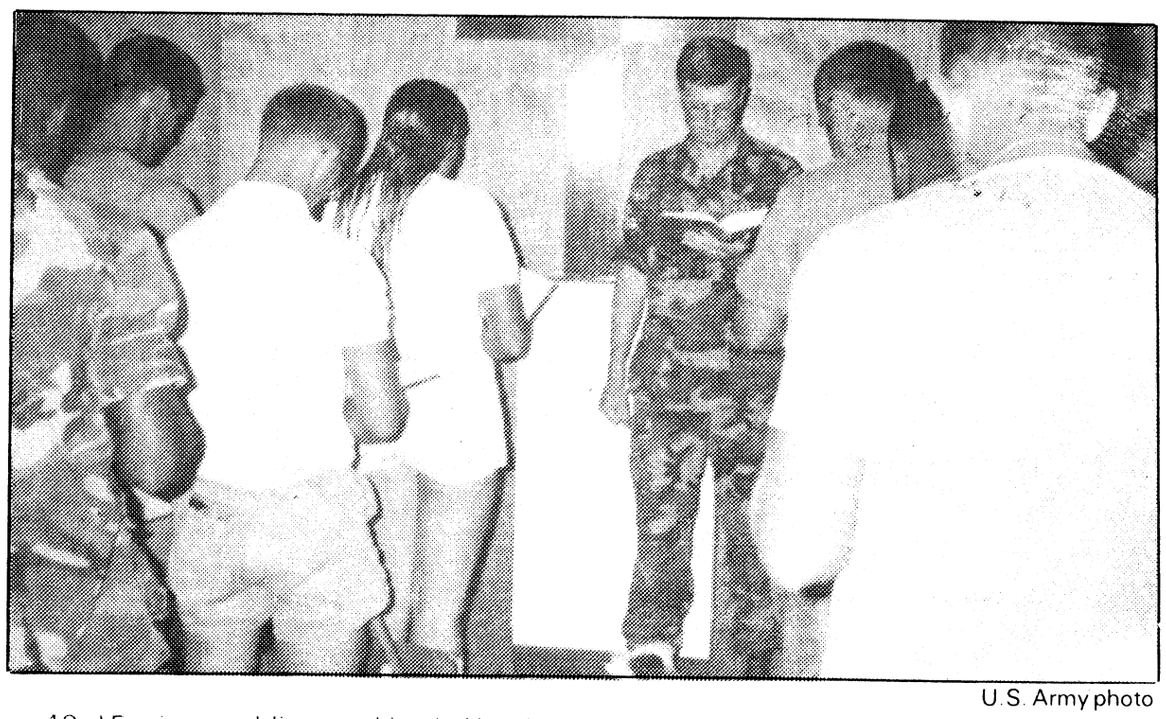
On my recent visit there, I had a chance to worship with Bravo Company soldiers and assess their morale as they prepared to finish the mission and head home.

I interviewed several soldiers and asked: "What's the best thing about your time in Honduras?" PFC Pat Bird said, "The extra TDY pay will be nice. The group esprit, fellowship, closer friendships — just getting to know and trust one another is a plus. Being away from civilization, especially girls; having to walk a block to a shower and the primitive bathrooms are the worst things, and of course, guard duty."

Sgt. Taylor Owens commented, "The best things are developing my leadership skills and training my soldiers in a challenging environment. Seeing a different part of the world, and experiencing a different culture is exciting. Being away from family is a definite hardship. My wife is supportive, and I truly appreciate the way she sticks by me in these absences. She's a good Army wife."

PFC Terry Wilson responded, "I'm a heavy equipment mechanic, and I've grown in the knowledge of my field since being here. I've also gotten excellent cross-training in other MOSs. I plan to ETS in August of next year, and the training in heavy equipment maintenance will be useful in civilian life. I would never have gotten to come to a place like Honduras, had it not been for my enlistment in the Army. I've only been married 14 months, so a three-month separation is hard on my wife and me. I've written once a week and Becky, my wife, has even been better about writing. I've received five or six letters a week and they've been a real morale boost."

SSgt. Debra Hartin-Freeman, a 51H Construction Supervisor, said, "I've learned a lot about myself; how to lead by learning, and take advice from others even my subordinates. We're building a helicopter hangar and landing pad. It's very demanding work. We've worked terribly hard, but we've pulled together, and it's made me feel good about myself and my unit.



"I guess you could say this is both a negative and a positive. When I see the native Honduran kids with their sad eyes and their hands out, I want to reach out to them. It makes me count my blessings. The countryside is like a picture postcard, but there's a lot of hurt behind the beauty.

"The worst thing about being here is the constant rain, the loneliness and missing my husband, SSgt. Clifton Freeman, stationed at Fort Hood. I miss my daughter Keolani, 10 years old and my son Curtis, who's 3. When the mail plane doesn't make it, it's depressing. Letters make my day."

PFC Harvey Murray proudly said, "I'm a welder and the magnitude of welding jobs here is greater than at Fort Benning. I've become more proficient at difficult welding jobs. Because of the need to support the overall mission, I've had to learn a lot about other MOSs as well. For me, this has been good.

The mountain scenery is breathtaking here; and the people, from what I've been able to see, are warm and friendly. Like Terry Wilson, I've been married a short time. My wife, Wendy, went home to Pennsylvania to work in a bank while I've been gone. She likes being an Army wife, but she recognizes there are a lot of sacrifices that have to be made.

Wendy will be back in Columbus about a week before I get back. I can't wait to see her at the airport. We've got a lot of catching up to do."

43rd Engineer soldiers working in Honduras attend worship services.

SSgt. Richard Tenhet, Earth Mover platoon sergeant: "The training value has been superlative. Our dozer, grader, scraper and scooploader operators have been performing "real-world" missions. We feel like we're accomplishing two goals; helping Honduras and improving our skills.

"Weather and materials have been the biggest problems, but we've had a "can-do" attitude about overcoming difficulties."

Douglas R. Church, the 36th Eng. Grp. commander admires the determination to excel displayed by Bravo Company. "ESSAYONS," the Engineer motto means, "Let us try." Bravo Company has tried and succeeded in its Honduran mission.

Aside from the standard and understandable complaints about homesickness, Bravo Company soldiers came to Honduras to perform a mission, and everyone from the Joint Task Force Commander, Col. Miller to Col.

Many 197th soldiers get first taste of Europe

George Mingee

German citizens watch as a convoy of vehicles from the 197th Spt. Bn., 197th Inf. Bde., move through the town of Nierstein, West Germany.

By Kevin J. Howerton
197th Infantry Brigade

For many soldiers in the 197th Infantry Brigade, the unloading of U.S. Naval Ship Denebula was not only the first time they had been involved in a port operation, it was their first taste of Europe.

The advance party of the 197th was quartered near Olen, Belgium, while they unloaded the ship and prepared the vehicles for convoy to Germany.

Spec. Stephen M. Metallo, HHC, 197th Inf. Bde., was on the first plane to land in Belgium.

"We helped the local Belgians set up the tents, with wooden floors, and then we set up 1,400 cots," he said. "The people here are very friendly and quite interested in us. Local children would crowd around the fence to see the helicopters land. We would go over and give packets from our MREs to them. They really go for the MREs."

"I've been at Olen for eight days now, and I've met Dutch, Scottish, British, Belgian French and Belgian Flemish citizens," said Spec. Shawn S. Lander, HHC, 2nd Bn., 69th Armor. "The most interesting person I've met is a man who sells souvenirs at the PX. He speaks English and knows all the Belgians, Germans, Dutch and British in the camp. He's like the local newspaper, he can tell you everything that goes on."

The soldiers not only met people of different cultures, they were also given an opportunity to view the culture as a whole.

"Everything is well maintained," said Spec. Myron O. Tingle, HHC, 2nd Bn., 69th Armor. "There is no trash or litter anywhere, and flower gardens and greenery are everywhere. There are no billboards, that's what I like best."

"The day before we left Antwerp, we took a bus tour of the city," said Metallo. "It is a distinctly European city, no skyscrapers, business suits, and rushing people like you find in an American city. Instead, there are casually dressed people who seem to be in no particular hurry, in a city of outdoor cafes, narrow streets and canals."

As the soldiers were viewing the people and culture around them, they found themselves being viewed as well.

"Everyone alongside the road waves at you as if you were some sort of liberator," said Tingle after driving a 2-½-ton truck from the port at Antwerp to the vehicle holding area near Olen.

The same was true when the vehicles convoyed from Olen to Rhein Main Ordnance Barracks in Kaiserslauthern, Germany.

"Going through the small towns, we were the center of attention," said Metallo. "It seems like the whole town would just stop what they were doing when we drove in, like a circus had come to town. They would come out of the shops and schoolyards to look and wave at us."

The soldiers from the "Sledgehammer" Brigade continued to become aquainted with the local culture and customs as exercise "Certain Challenge" moved through Germany.

Army BSEP classes; a springboard to college, promotion

29th Infantry Regiment

Sgt. Arcadio Rigual, Company C, 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, recently increased his general technical score on the Armed Forces Classification Test by 37 points in a retest.

The new score will make his personnel records much more impressive. One of his first stops after learning the result was at the Harmony Church Branch of the Army Continuing Education System, to tell the staff that the "BSEP" program really works.

Rigual is one of 53 soldiers from 2nd Battalion who recently participated in Basic Skills Education Program classes at the ACES Branch. Of those 53, 21 soldiers demonstrated sufficient improvement to allow retesting in the AFCT during April-July, with 16 soldiers attaining scores of 100 or above. The point gain ranged from 3 to 44 points, with an average increase of 11 points.

For several years, BSEP has enabled thousands of soldiers to improve their skills in order to prepare for such Army tests as the GT section of the AFCT, the Skills Qualification Test and the General Education Development Test. The GT score can be important in quality point assessment for promotion. Through better preparation for higher scores, soldiers may enhance retainability and promotability.

In February, 2nd Battalion's command sergeant major gathered his first sergeants and planned new strategies to ensure that soldiers could reap education benefits. The focus on personal development for promotability gained acceptance, causing some soldiers to reassess goals and career opportunities. Several have used BSEP classes as springboards for college.

The participation rate of 2nd Battalion's BSEP eligibles increased from nine percent during the first quarter of fiscal year '88, to 15.9 percent second quarter, and to 26.4 percent third quarter. HQ, 29th Inf. Regt., also served by the Harmony Church Branch of ACES, referred their soldiers to help fill each of seven successive classes to the maximum number of students: 22.

First sergeants established a method to identify and prioritize soldiers for BSEP enrollment. Working around mission requirements, they prepared lists of students from first-termers and ranking NCOs. The command sergeant major then screened lists from each company, preparing a composite list for the ACES staff. Meanwhile, he submitted a request through ACES to schedule another class for the following 16-day cycle, and first sergeants began filling quotas for another class. Eligible soldiers were given equal consideration for classes, based on duty scheduling and career plans.

The BSEP program was supported at all comman levels, including John D. Fuller, commander, 29th Inf. Regt., who tracked program progress through reports from the ACES Branch Chief at staff meetings.

ACES staff provided immediate feedback through progress reports on soldiers' achievements. They measured progress by comparing scores that indicated skill levels (equivalent to high school grades) through the Test of Adult Basic Education (TABE) pre-test and post-test, and by use of the GT predictor quiz which used sample GT items and gave further indications of AFCT readiness. In cases where individual soldiers needed further instructions, the staff alerted the Command Sergeant Major that the soldiers should report for another cycle of classes.

Working with ACES and the S-1 staffs, the command sergeant major became involved n expediting the processing of DD Forms 4187 to assist in scheduling the AFCT retest at ARmy Military Personnel Testing. By helping cut down on the paper chasing usually experienced in initiating forms, getting them approved, and taking them from office to office, he enabled soldiers to retest immediately after BSEP to ensure maximum skill retention.

By monitoring soldiers' progress, first sergeants were able to determine the sincerity of soldiers about personal development and to provide benefits to achievement-oriented individuals. Despite mission staffing requirements and special taskings, they made personal commitments to their soldiers, ensuring a fair cut of education benefits.

1st Sgt. Allan L. Sternberg, Co. C, 2nd Bn., 29th Inf. Regt., said, "In the Army of the Collins Training Center swings into action

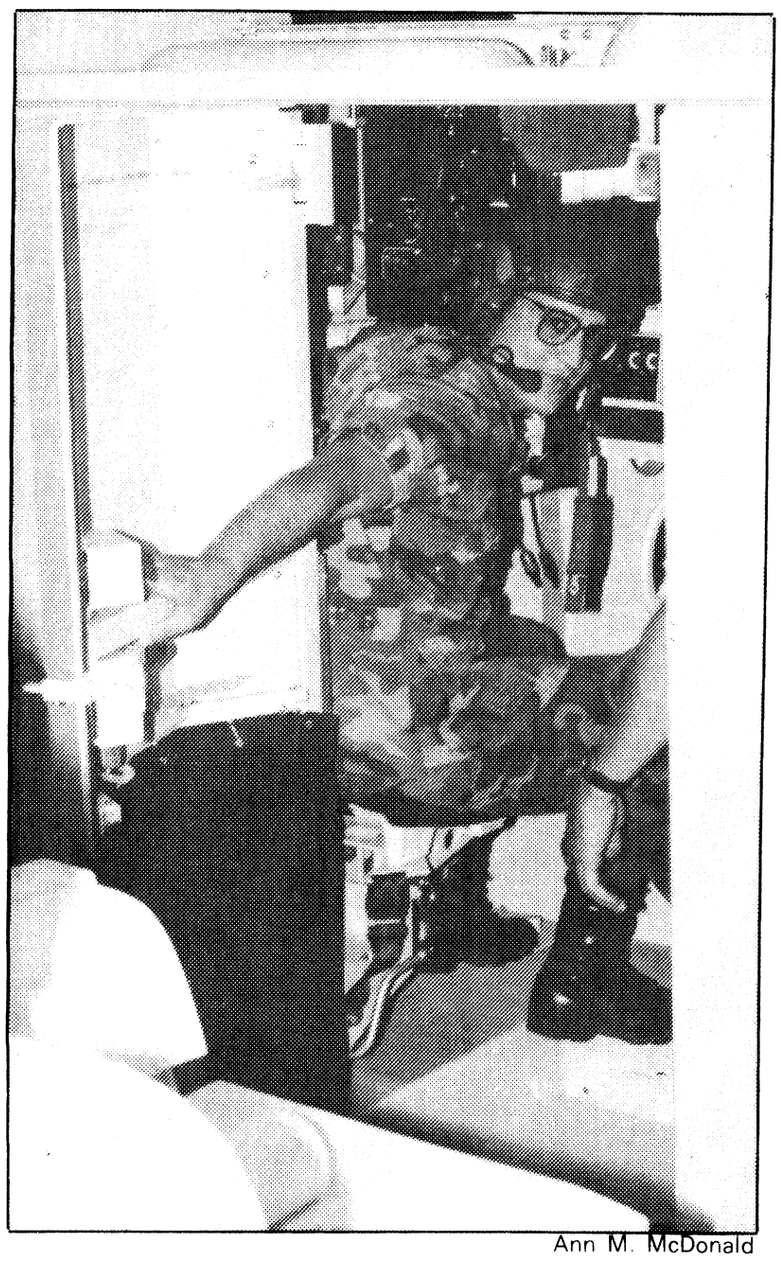
By Ron Allen
USAIC Public Affairs Office

The $10.7 million Collins Training Center has been open for less than two weeks but is already in full swing.

The facility, with the latest computer technology to assist in training Bradley Fighting Vehicle crew members was dedicated here Sept. 14.

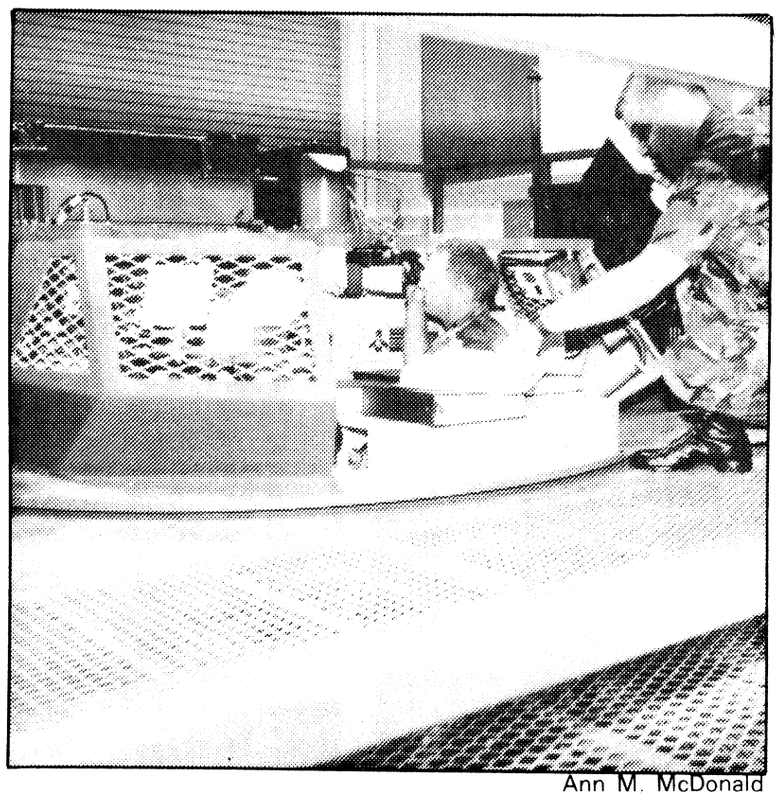
Named, The Collins Training Center, the facility was dedicated to General J. Lawton Collins, a former Chief of Staff of the Army and commander of VII Corps during World War II.



The center, which also houses the headquarters of the 29th Infantry Regiment, the people responsible for training Bradley crew members, encompasses 92,000 square feet of office, classroom and maintenance space.

The complex is equipped with computerized equipment for training soldiers to drive, fire and maintain the Infantry's premier fighting vehicle. This equipment is valued at $18 million and includes the Conduct Of Fire Trainer (COFT) which simulates Bradley battlefield conditions for the students in the classroom. In all, more than 4,000 students a year will be trained at this new facility.

The 29th Inf. is commanded by Col. John D. Fuller, who played a role in planning the facility when he was assigned to Fort Benning previously.



The Collins Training Center is located on Bradley Loop, named after Collins' former boss.

Ground was broken for construction of the center Nov. 10, 1986, was officially designated the Collins Training Center June 13, 1988, and was accepted by ;the 29th Inf. Reg. Aug. 17, 1988.

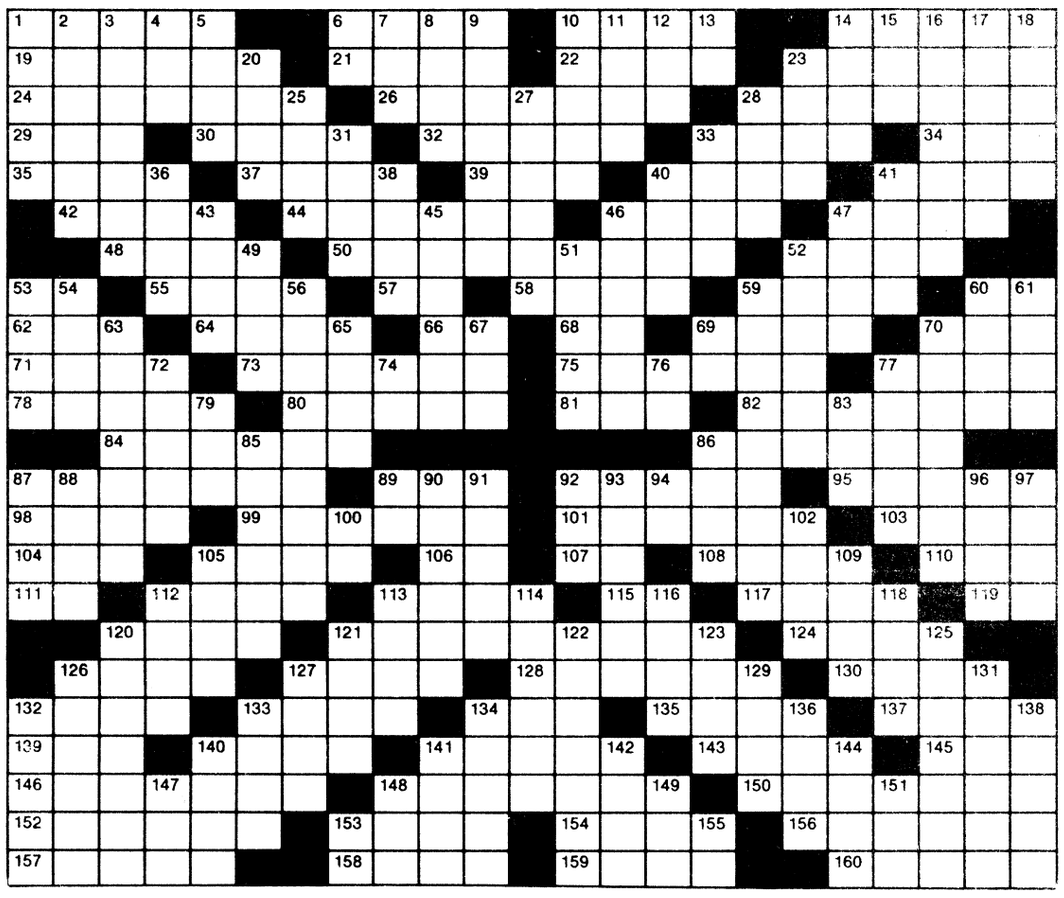
Oil supply vulnerable to disruption says GAO

By Becky Ray
Energy Section

The U.S. is vulnerable to potential disruptions of its oil supply, and conservation of oil is necessary to reduce this vulnerability. According to a recently released report by the General Accounting Office (GAO), conservation of new soil products, especially those used in transportation,should be stressed to reduce the threat of oil supply disruptions.

The GAO reports that the transportation sector is almost totally dependent upon oil and is the only sector of the economy in which oil consumption has increased over the past ten years. Two thirds of the oil used in the U.S. is used in transportation. And as oil consumption rises, production of non-OPEC oil is declining, increasing the threat of supply disruption. A few countries control a great portion of national energy supply, and the GAO states that this will be the case well into the next century.

Because the U.S. depends upon oil products for 97 percent of transportation nationally, disruptions in the oil supply could impact severely on industry, the economy and national security. The report suggests the adoption of higher fuel efficiency standards and gasoline taxes. It also states that a price floor on imported oil could help protect U.S. oil investors and alternate energy projects from politically motivated or other sudden price reductions.



Also among the recommendations made by the GAO is the development of alternative fuels and fuel efficiency technologies. It suggests the government support research for the development of alternative fuels and encourage the application of energy-efficient technologies in the private sector as well. The GAO also stated that the role of the government is to maintain an environment that is conducive to the investments in energy projects worldwide.

The report also urges the rapid development of the Strategic Petroleum Reserve to stockpile soil in case of an oil supply disruption. In addition, the GAO recommends supplemental programs be organized to help offset the effects of a reduced supply. These might include plans for emergency driving restrictions and low-income energy assistance.

The GAO believes that the U.S. government and the private sector must work together to develop strategies to improve the national energy situation and that other countries should be encouraged to do so as well.

VETERANS' Qs & As

Veterans Administration

Q — If I encounter legal difficulties while purchasing a home using my GI home loan, will the VA provide or pay for any legal assistance I may need?

A — No. The Veterans Administration does not provide legal assistance or advice; nor can the agency pay for any legal assistance a veteran obtains to deal with troubles encountered in the purchase or construction of a home.

Q — I heard that Congress passed a law authorizing special life insurance dividends for World War II veterans. I understand that veterans are entitled to this dividend even if they haven't kept their policies in force. Is this true?

A — No. The VA does not pay dividends on lapsed insurance policies. An insurance hoax that has plagued the VA since 1948 is refueled every few years by a distribution of "applications" that claim that Congress has authorized the dividends. There has been no such action nor is there any pending. Annual dividends on current GI insurance policies are paid by the VA to veterans who continue to pay premiums. Dividend payments are made automatically, usually on the anniversary date of the policy, and no application is needed.

197th convoys during REFORGER

Kevin J. Howerton

A German soldier guides a 197th Inf. Bde. vehicle onto a ferry to cross the Rhein River.

By George Mingee
197th Infantry Brigade

One thing the 197th Infantry Brigade soldiers gained during REFORGER is a lot of experience and confidence behind the wheels of their vehicles.

As the maneuver portion of the exercise began, 500 vehicles rolled from Kaiserslautern to Nierstein on the Rhein River. The soldiers drove through small towns and scenic rolling hills of Western Germany, enjoying the view of vineyards and farmland. The 50-mile trip was completed in about two hours.

The German and the U.S. Army military police were stationed at critical points along the convoy route, since the drivers traveled without the benefit of radio contact.

When the convoys reached Nierstein,they launched on an important training event — a tactical crossing of the Rhine on a swingbridge.

The German engineered swingbridge spanned the 300-meter width of the river in two sections, linking in the middle to form a stable means of crossing.

According to Berthold Kratz, safety director for the U.S. Army 21st Support Command, Kaiserslautern, the most dangerous maneuver of REFORGER is the Rhein River crossing, because of the many variables you can't predict. The river current runs at 1.3 meters per second, but the strength of the bridge can easily bear the speed of the current and the weight of the vehicles.

According to 2nd Lt. Detlef Heinisch, the German Army officer in charge of the operation, the motorized bridge is braced in two strategic locations, using seven pontoons, which steady the bridge into place. The bridge can hold up to 100 tons and can cross 150 vehicles per hour.

German engineers, consisting of German soldiers, Reserve soldiers and civilians, provided the swingbridge support to facilitate the movement of NATO forces across the Rhein.

Post soldiers hit port in Belgium

By Kevin J. Howerton
197th Infantry Brigade

The crane operator peered through the window near his feet as he came in for another vehicle. The hook assemblies descended on a 5-ton truck like a giant spider on a fly, picking it up and lowering it 200 feet from the deck of the U.S. Naval Ship Denebula to the pavement. Below, track vehicles were pouring out of the side of the ship, down the huge loading ramp onto the docks at Antwerp, Belgium.

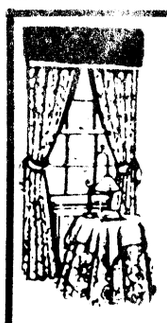
"I think I've seen more tanks on this dock in the past few days than we have in the whole Belgian Army," said one Belgian lieutenant in broken English. It was impossible to tell whether he was joking or not, but he was obviously overwhelmed by the operation.

The "Sledgehammer" Brigade landed in Europe, and Autumn Forge began. The soldiers from the 197th Infantry Brigade unloaded the huge ship in a little more than a day. The tracked vehicles were loaded onto railcars, headed for Germany. The wheeled vehicles were lined up in long columns for convoy from Antwerp to Rhein Main Ordanance Barracks in Kaiserslautern, Germany.

"The soldiers hustled and got the ship unloaded in less time than most people thought we could with no accidents or injuries," said Lt. Col. Albert J. Nahas, deputy commander of the 197th. "The Belgian railroad official was very pleased with how we were organized and the attitude of the soldiers."

"One reason we were able to unload so quickly was the safety consciousness of the individual soldier," said Capt. Eric T. Grasham, brigade movement officer. "We had three safety briefings before the operation, and the soldiers followed the rules, so no one had to stop due to unsafe acts."

The 197th is the only CONUS unit participating in REFORGER to bring all of it's equipment to Europe.



"All of the tons of equipment and 960 vehicles aboard the Denebula belong to the 197th," Grashman said. "We had our own liaison officers at key points who communicated with the port authorities on the ground and kept things moving.

For many vehicle drivers from the 197th, this was the first time they had been involved in a port operation. Tricky maneuvering challenged their driving skills and safety awareness.

"The Denebula is the largest vehicle I've ever been on," said Spec. Curtis Covington, HHB,, 2nd Bn., 10th Fld. Arty. "It's over 900 feet long and nine stories tall."

"I had never been on a ship before," said Spec Sherwood A. Brown, also of HHB, 2nd Bn., 10th Fld. Arty. "It was like driving in a skyscraper, the way you have to bring the tracks down the ramps that go down like a staircase. It was very tight at times."

During the remainder of the REFORGER exercise many soldiers of the 197th will stretch their capabilities as they are challenged by the hard work, long days, and sometimes stressful situations that the training presents.

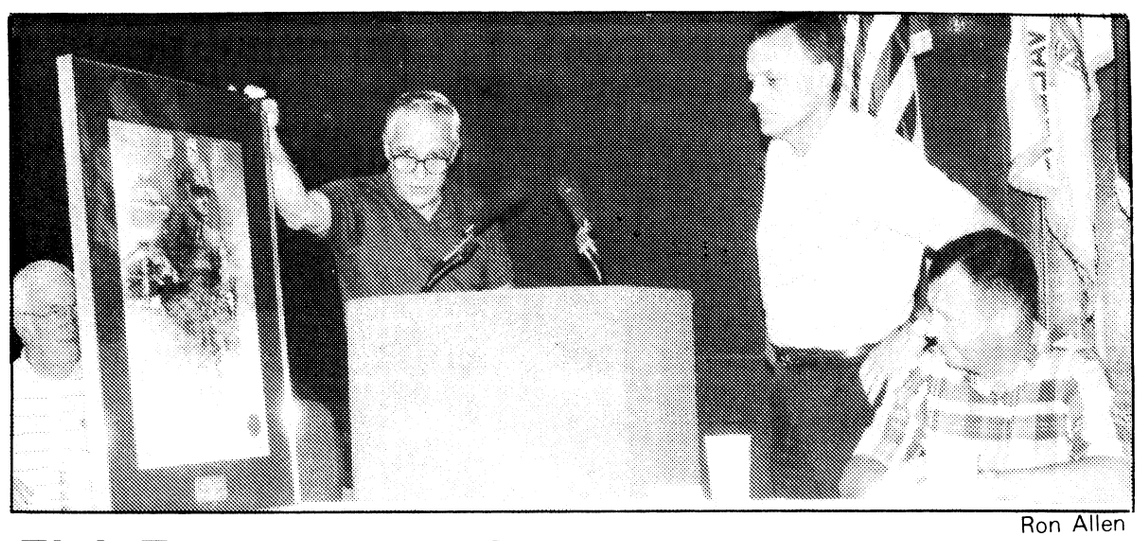
School's open, watch for kids

Safety Office

School's open. Children are at large. . .many of them very young, strangers to traffic, and very unfamiliar with the proper procedures to follow as they attempt to walk in traffic or to cross a street or highway. Everything humanly possible must be done to ensure their safety on the streets and highways, going to and from school.



With the opening of school, many children will, for the first time, be on their own in traffic. Heretofore, they have been almost entirely under the guidance and protection of someone at home, but now they start out alone to and from school, and must necessarily rely largely on their own knowledge of safety to protect them from dangers which beset our streets and highways in spite of the utmost care and caution on the part of motorists.

We feel sure that most every person who drives in or near schools wants to be governed by all traffic rules regulating the legal speed in those areas. However, speed even as low as 10 or 15 miles per hour may prove to be unsafe, particularly if some child should decide to cross against this slow-moving traffic. No speed, however slow, can or will be safe unless all parties concerned — motorists and children alike are willing to abide by current rules and regulations.

The safety of school children is undoubtedly the most important safety problem before the people in the Fort Benning area. In spite of early home training and daily instructions in the schools about safety, the actions of the average child are not always predictable. At times, the child is apt to forget some of the rules he has learned about protecting himself in traffic. This usually happens when he is with other children or when he is preoccupied with some game. Now, with the opening of school, the child must have every possible ounce of protection by his parents, his teachers, the motorists, military police, etc.

Parents have the responsibility of cautioning their children about their behavior and explaining to them that it is easier for them to get out of the way of a car than it is for its driver to avoid them or even to stop. Since children are children and cannot be expected to accept full responsibility for their safety, they must be cautioned about the dangers of traffic, and be reminded that they will not always be near a school patrol person or a police officer who will look out for them. Children must be taught to give the motorist a break just as they expect the motorist to give them a break.

Much is said about protecting our wildlife. . .now, we say, let's protect our child life. Children are important to the future of our nation, and we cannot afford to lose any of them!

future, it will be mandatory for a soldier to have an associate degree. When records are reviewed by the Army Promotion Board, the soldier who shows he has taken the initiative and interest in personal development can take a point lead over another soldier who has not done likewise. I strongly support educational development and I know first hand what it says to the Promotion Board."

Hernandez added, "I was pleased to see how strong the basic skills program was in the Second Battalion when I arrived. I will be among the soldiers enrolling in college courses offered on-stie soon."

Lt. Col. Barry W. Mahek, commander, 2nd Bn, 29th Inf. Regt., said, "We have invested in education options with some sacrifice in daily mission accomplishment. However, it is an investment that will reap large dividends for our Army in the future. These opportunities improve morale when soldiers come back from testing with high scores and are better prepared career-wise. We must be able to do our mission while simultaneously looking out for the welfare of our soldiers."

Departing YA volunteer honored at ceremony

By Ron Allen
USAIC Public Affairs Office

MSgt. Erasmo (Ed) R. Chapa, the commisioner of the Fort Benning Youth Activities Football and Soccer programs, was honored here Saturday at the opening ceremony of this year's YA Soccer season.

Chapa is leaving after 12 years of volunteer service to Youth Activities. He has been the commisioner since 1980 and is now retiring and will be living in Texas were he will take over operation of his family's ranch.

"Ed (Chapa) was one of the best volunteers we've ever had," said Ray Pierce, YA Sports director. "When he was needed, he was there."

The inscription on the plaque he was awarded read, "For the generosity and free time you have given as a volunteer words cannot express the gratitude. The overall growth of the Fort Benning Youth Activities Program is the result of volunteers giving their time and expertise as you have done. Your involvement with the Youth Sports Program has been instrumental in the leisure growth of our youth. Thanks from the Youth Activity staff."

Chapa was a professional baseball player prior to entering the service in the early 60s. He also had two sons who played on teams in the YA Sports Program.

Game ends pre-season play

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

The Columbus-Fort Benning Cruise-matics crushed the Atlanta Renegades B-side 13-4 in their last pre-season rugby match Sept. 17.

Norm Dodson ran the ball in for the first try four minutes into the game. John Hunt completed the play by kicking in the conversion.

Later in the game, Hunt kicked in a penalty goal upping the lead over the Renegades.

John Weldon wrapped up the scoring by running the ball into the try zone during the final play of the game.

According to game official, Ray Davis, it was a very physical game.

"There were a few scuffles," he said, "but, that's to be expected."

"The Cruise-matics will play their season opener Saturday against the Mobile Battleship Rugby Club. The game will begin at 1 p.m. and will be played on their home field located behind the Dolly Madison Outlet on Victory Drive.

TINNITUS CAN BE HELPED

While there is no cure for tinnitus, sometimes the symptoms can be masked—and research is leading to advancements in treatment. But many doctors and tinnitus victims are unaware that head noises can be turned down. Hearing aids, masking devices, biofeedback, stress management, and self-help groups can help alleviate suffering IF people know about them. The American Tinnitus Association offers ways to cope—and reasons for hope. For more information write:

Weapon control

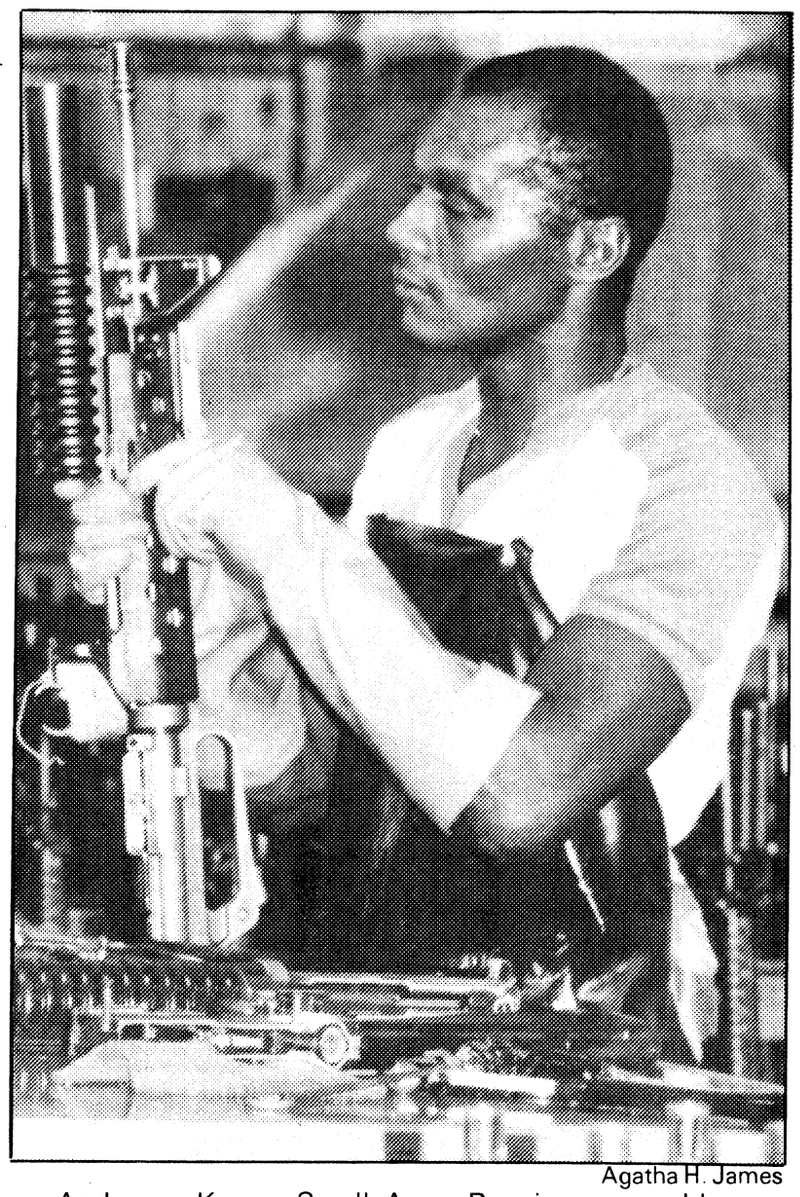
Bar coding system makes receipt, issue faster

By Agatha H. James
Bayonet staff writer

A new bar coding system, designed by the Industrial Engineering Office, Directorate of Logistics (DOL), will expedite weapon receipt and issue, facilitate inventory management and improve customer service at the Weapons Pool.

Called the Benning Weapons Inventory Control System (BWICS), it is expected to be implemented in January. BWICS will computerize the Weapons Pool's receipt and issue process, and it will serve as a tracking mechanism for inventory control.

"Our current accountability method is totally manual," said Bennie Cochran, Maintenance Division Chief, DOL. "When we compile a tally, we check each piece of equipment's serial number. Then, as the weapons are issued, one person reads aloud the serial numbers while someone else double-checks the equipment list.



"The BWICS will eliminate manual procedures. Therefore, we will be able to provide faster and more efficient service. Ultimately, our goal is to improve service to soldiers, and BWICS will help us to do that."

Now, when orders are received, Weapons Pool personnel manually conduct an inventory to see if the requested equipment is available or will be available when needed. With the BWICS, they will spend less time counting inventory.

"The foundation for the BWICS is a master computer file that will allow physical inventory to be conducted with the wave of a hand-held wand," said Tony Gillooley, the BWICS Project Engineer, Industrial Engineering Office.

"The system will facilitate daily issue and receipt functions, and it has the capability to track weapons through the cleaning, repair, turn-in and requisitioning process."

"Since the BWICS works as a tracker, Weapons Pool personnel will be able to locate a piece of equipment immediately — whether it is in stock, being cleaned, or out on tally," added Ron Shehane, Industrial Engineering Office Chief. "This is an excellent way to improve security measures."

Agatha H. James

Anderson Kemp, Small Arms Repairer, assembles an M-203 weapon.

The BWICS' hand-held wand reader is an optical scanner that looks like a handgun. Each weapon will be labeled with a bar code containing its serial number.

A bar code consists of a pattern of lines and bars. The Universal Product Code (UPC) printed on canned goods and other supermarket items is a type of bar code.

Since the weapons are cleaned in a highly caustic solvent, the label is made of a special material — one that does not react with the chemicals in the solution. "We found that anionized aluminum works best," said Gillooley. "It's lightweight, sturdy and long-lasting. What's more, it can't be easily peeled off or defaced."

BWICS will facilitate the issue and receipt process. Weapons Pool personnel will perform their jobs in a manner similar to supermarket checkout counter personnel.

When a tally or list of weapons is issued, dock clerks will simply scan the bar code on each piece of equipment. Then, the computer will generate a complete list, containing serial numbers, weapon description, and quantity.

"This system's implementation will allow us to do our jobs more efficiently and effectively," said John Tyre, Weapons Pool Chief. "It will improve weapon turnaround time resulting in better service to soldiers.

"Since the BWICS will reduce paperwork, supervisors, repairers and other workers will be able to spend more time doing what they were hired to do."

Initially the system will be operated on a test basis. Weap-

USARSA to induct 10 in Hall of Fame

USAIC Public Affairs Office

The U.S. Army School of the Americas will induct the first 10 members in its Hall of Fame Tuesday in a ceremony on the south lawn of Building 35 at 10 a.m.

The Hall of Fame will recognize alumni and former staff and faculty who achieved military and civilian prominence. Of the 10 to be inducted, two are former presidents of their countries, three are, or were, ministers of defense, and five are, or were, chiefs of staff of their respective armies. The 10 represent six Latin American countries.

The concept of the Hall of Fame and the induction criteria mirror those of the United States Army's Command and General Staff College Allied Hall of Fame at Fort Leavenworth, Kan., with the exception that prominent civilians may be inducted. Gen. Maxwell Thurman, commander of the U.S. Army Training and Doctrine Command, initiated the program and will be the speaker at the opening ceremony.

The ceremony is being held in conjunction with the Conference of American Armies Training and Military Education Conference. The overlap will allow considerable Latin American participation in the activities surrounding the ceremony.

In the event of inclement weather, the ceremony will be moved to Marshall Auditorium, Building 4.

Conference to focus on military education

USAIC Public Affairs Office

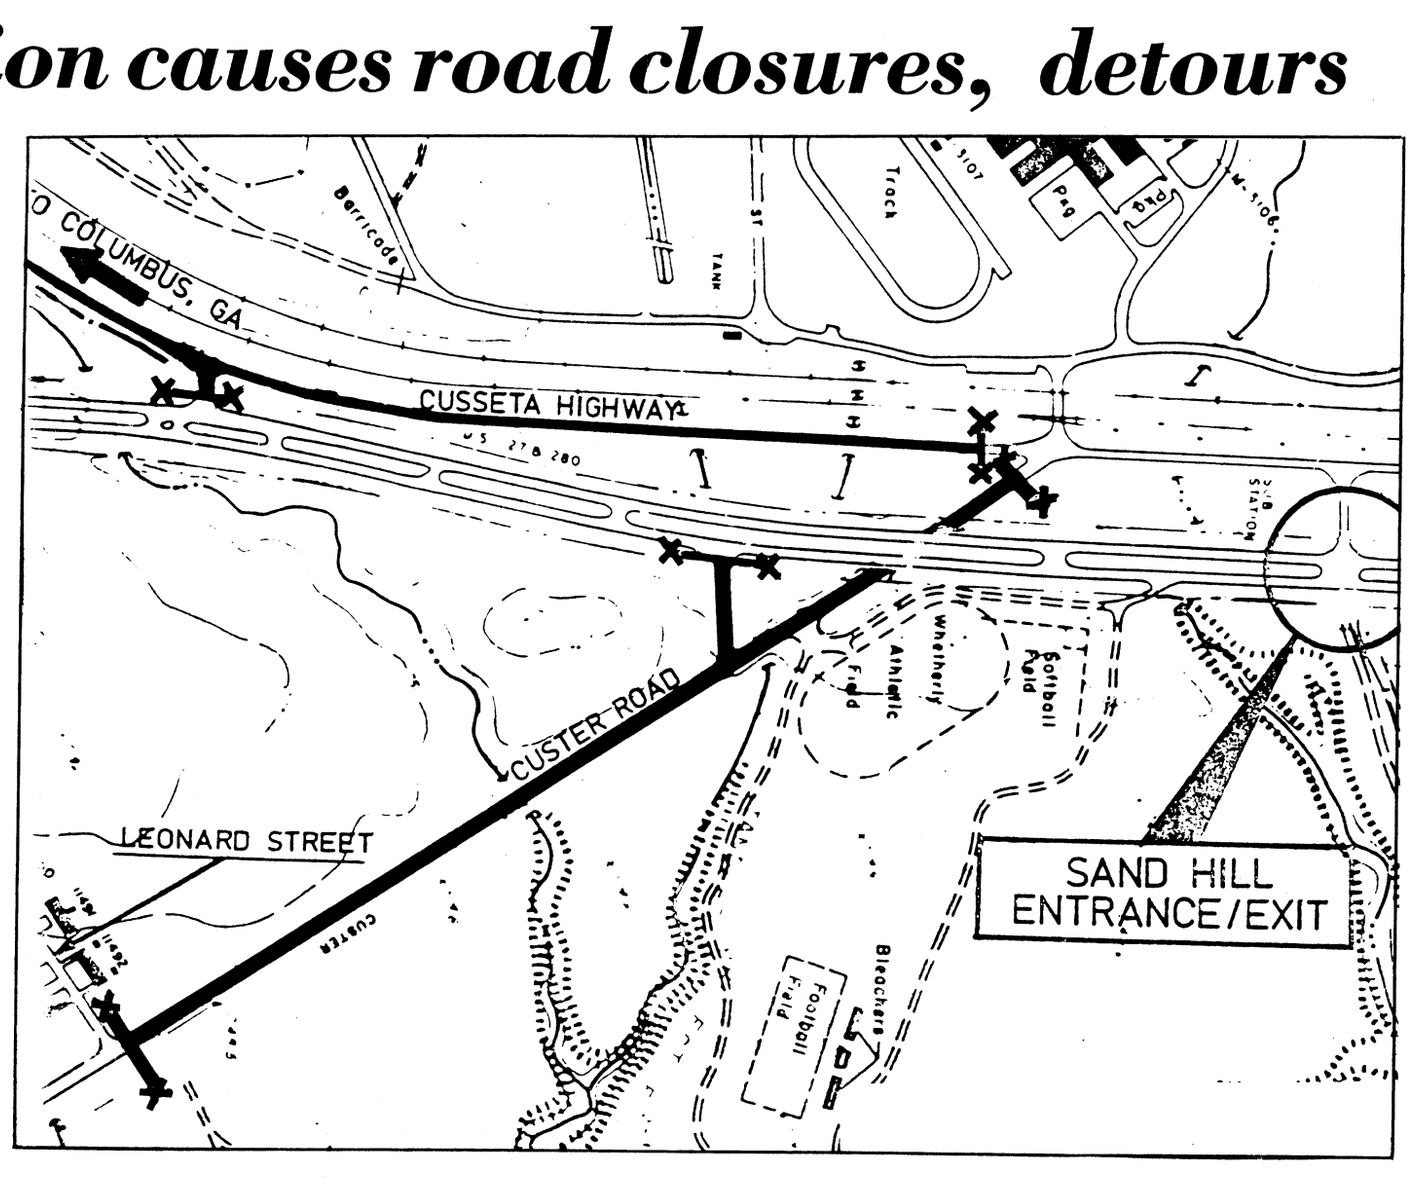
The United States Army School of the Americas (USARSA) will host the second Training and Military Education Conference (TMEC) of the Conference of the American Armies (CAA) here, Monday through Friday. This event will bring together senior military trainers from 19 Latin American countries to exchange ideas on training and educating soldiers.

One major objective of the TMEC is to make military education a permanent concern of future conferences.

Gen. Carl E. Vuono, Chief of Staff of the U.S. Army, selected USARSA to host the conference for several reasons. First, USARSA currently offers 21 courses, all taught in Spanish, to soldiers from 14 Latin American countries. Also, USARSA's language capabilities and its international expertise make it an ideal host for a Latin American training conference.

Through conferences of this sort, the CAA stimulates and enhances military cooperation and exchanges among its member armies. The first TMEC was held in Buenos Aires in 1986.

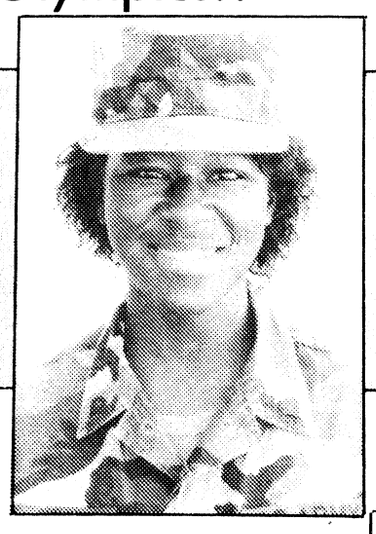
Contruction causes road closures, detours



USAIC Public Affairs Office

Construction of a major overpass into Sand Hill will cause two major road arteries leading into and out of Sand Hill to be closed temporarily. They are Custer Road from Old Cusseta Highway intersection to Leonard street and Old Cusseta Highway from the Columbus city limits the Custer Road intersection.

The Custer Road closure will prohibit Sand Hill and U.S. 27/280 traffic the use of Custer Road as an entrance into Sand Hill for traffic traveling east from Columbus and also the main access route between Main Post and Sand Hill.



A temporary entrance and exit to and from Sand Hill via U.S. 27/280 has been built for use during the next 18 months. All traffic should use Lindsay Creek Parkway (I-185 extension) and U.S. 27/280 when traveling between Main Post

VARIOUS VOICES: What do you think about the U.S. athletes' performance in the Olympics.?

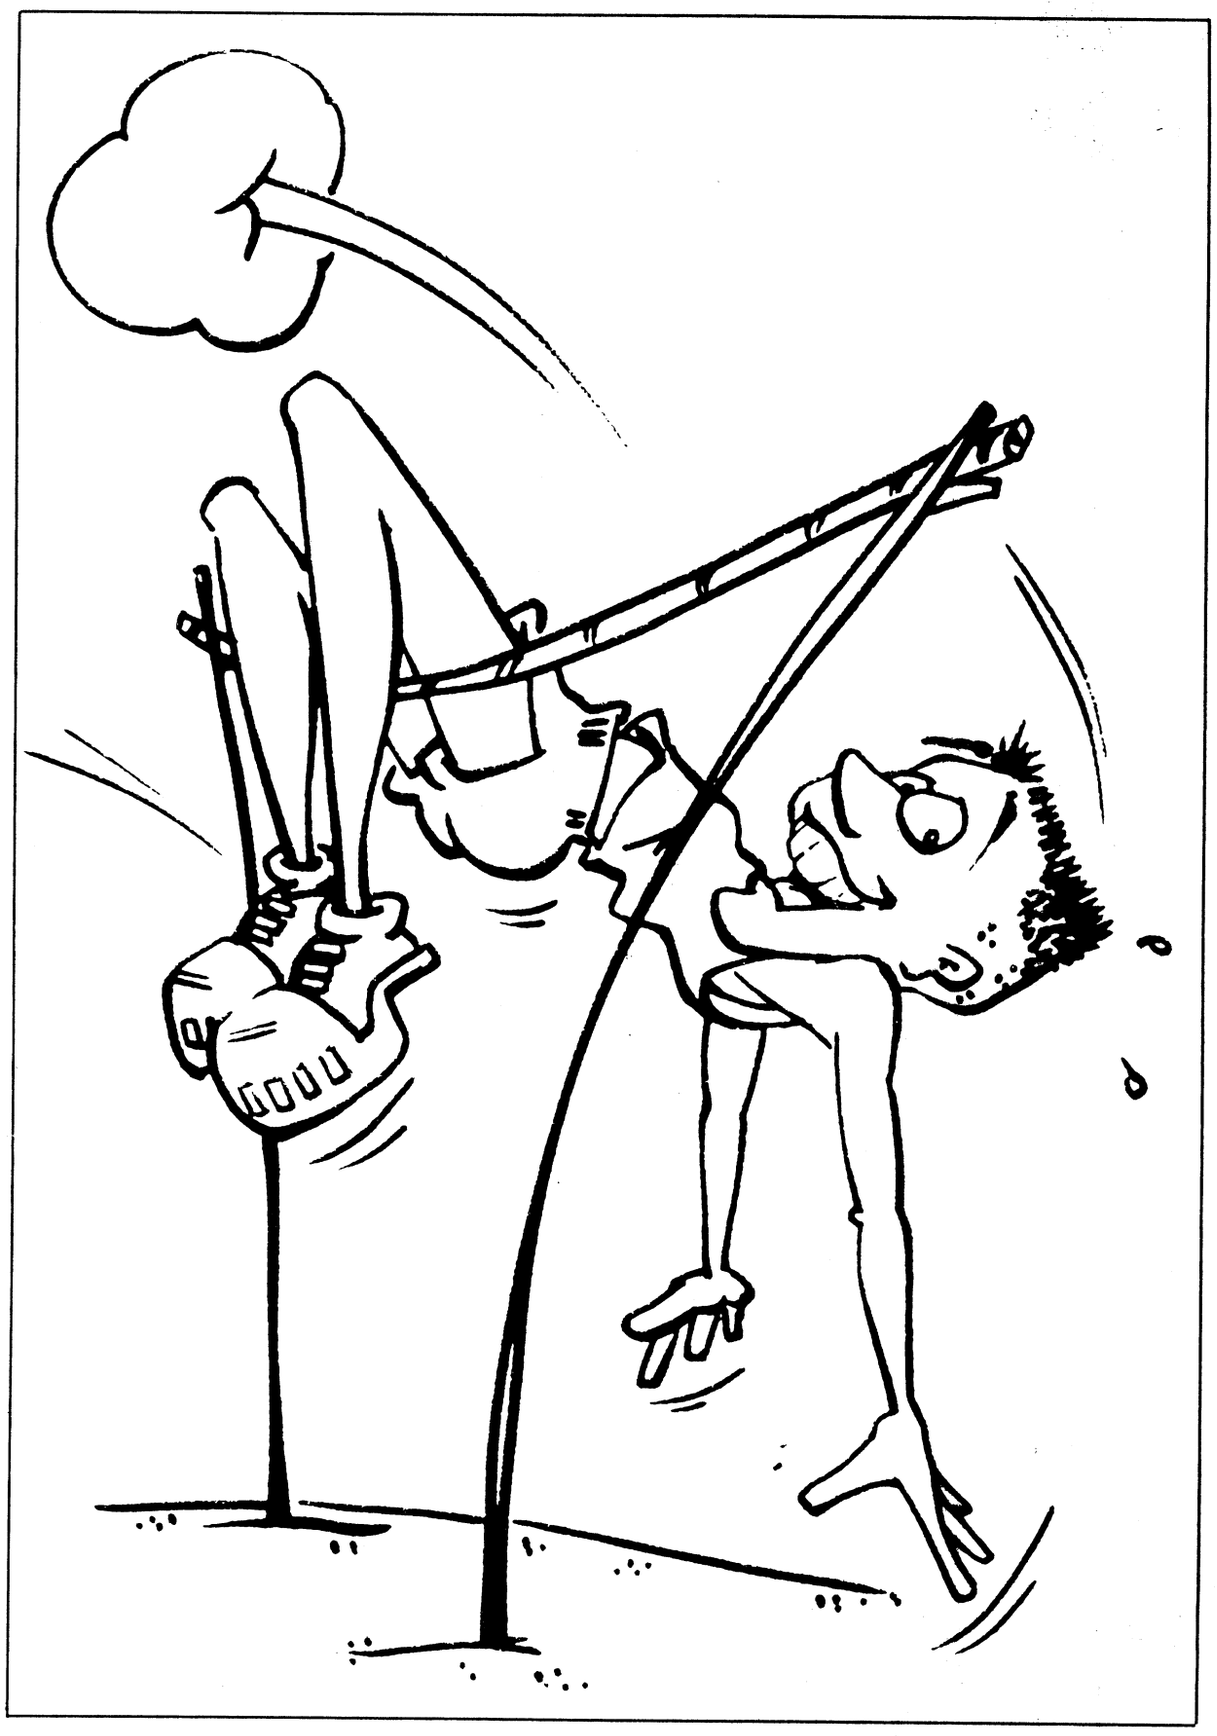
Spec. Carolyn Daise, 215th Fin. Co., 36th Eng. Grp — "Well, they aren't doing as well as I anticipated they would, but it's not over yet. I guess time will tell."

MSgt. Jerry MacDonald, 2nd MASH, 34th Med. Bn. — "I don't think they are doing well. They shined in the '84 Olympics because the Soviet Block countries boycotted them. Now that they are competing against each other for the first time in 12 years do we see how much farther our athletes need to go."

MSgt. Jasper McCoy, HQ Co., 1st Bn., 11th Inf. — "I think they are doing okay; I believe that when all the track and field results come in, we will have made a better showing."

Hanna Jessie, Finance — "I'm so proud of all the athletes. Although, a lot of people have said the athletes aren't performing well, I think they are doing a super job."

Sgt. Zulika Oliver, USAIB — "I think they are doing an outstanding job. I think they've represented the U.S. well in each event."



John Babbaccia, TASC, DPTM — "I think that the athletes are doing well. However, I don't think Matt Biandi took all of his races seriously. He was capable of coming away with seven gold medals, but he didn't do it."

Snively keeps up with Olympics

In the true spirit of the games

By Clyde Snively
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Notice all the people walking around with bags under their eyes?

They're the ones who come to work, and the first thing they do is give you a run down on the latest Olympic developments. I haven't decided if they are staying up late to watch the events, or just to have bragging rights over who's got the latest dope.

It's like they are competing in their own little Olympics — "I stayed up until after midnight to see how Mary Decker Tabb Slaney did in the 3,000-meter run," Airborne Annie reported proudly.

"Gotcha," Large Sarge retorted. "I never went to bed. I hung in there until 3 a.m. to root Carl Lewis to victory in the long jump."

"You both bore me silly," I yawned.

"I suppose you're not even watching the competition," Airborne Annie smirked.

"Of course I watch," I responded. "I just don't watch it for the same reason most Americans do. I watch it in the true spirit of the Olympics."

"Hogwash," Large Sarge said.

"What's that supposed to mean," A.A. wanted to know.

"Look, you and all the other guys and gals watch the Olympics to see how many medals Americans are getting. I watch it to see man (or woman) competing against himself, against others, against the elements to come out on top.

"I don't watch just to see some American guy wax some Russian's butt. The purpose of the Olympics is to glorify the individual, not the state."

"B.S.," Large Sarge said.

"That's a pompous attitude if I ever heard one," A.A. said. "How can you watch the Olympics and not cheer for the Americans." She demanded to know.

"Oh, I pull for the Americans. What I'm saying is we shouldn't get so wrapped up in medal count. Just because one country scores more medals than another country, doesn't mean its society is better off. And that's what's happening. Countries use the Olympics for propaganda. 'Look at how our glorious socialist state turns out more gold medal winners than decadent capitalistic societies.' Sounds like breakfast food commericals to me. Eat brand X and run faster, jump farther and live longer and have a more satisfying sex life," I said.

"The way Americans and the media get so concerned about the number of medals, I'm surprised we haven't come up with a different way of counting."

"Whadda ya mean?" Airborne wanted to know.

"Well, like you know we usually do well in team sports like volleyball and basketball and if the Cubans aren't around, baseball. Instead of counting a win in one of those team sports as one medal, we could count it as a medal for each member of the team — nine for baseball, five for basketball, and so on."

"Crud," Large Sarge grunted.

"Great idea," Airborne, exclaimed.

"You miss the point," I muttered.

"Oh, I get it," Airborne exclaimed brightly. "You think we shouldn't even keep track of the medal count. Just publicize who wins, not worry about his country, don't play national anthems when the athletes are on the awards platform, stuff like that."

"You got it," I said.

"I like your thinking," she continued. "I think that's the way it should be too — at least until we, too, begin subsidizing our athletes and begin winning more medals than those communist countries."

I went home to watch the Andy Griffith Show to see how Aunt Bea deals with crass materialism.

They're gone

State flags stolen from Riverside display

By Sharon Reynolds
Bayonet staff

"Welcome to Fort Benning Maj. Gen. Michael Spigelmire." That has been on the tip of everyones' tongue for the last couple of weeks. Parades, banquets, breakfasts, guest speaker engagements, and, of course, ribbon cutting ceremonies have all been part of making the commanding general feel at home here

However, Friday someone or several somebodys made a mockery of it all by playing a childish prank on the commander. He or they stole 10 state flags from a set that was on display in front of the general's home.

The vandals — let's assume there's more than one — were quick, according to Ann Hill, Protocol Office. She and a group of others leaving Riverside at 9:45 p.m. Friday saw the flags were all there. Thirty minutes later when the flags were to be taken down, Georgia, Massachusetts, Maryland, North Carolina, Rhode Island, Florida, Texas, California and South Dakota were gone. The flag staffs were still there, just the flags had been taken.

If it was a joke, it wasn't funny. Hill said she wants the flags back. "They're expensive," she said. "A set costs about $1,750."

She wasn't sure if just the ten missing flags can be replaced. Even if she could order replacements for them, they would be new and the others a little faded.

There are a couple of ways the flags can be returned and avoid trouble, according to Hill. She's asking that the villians bring the flags to Building 4, Room 631 where Hill said she will take them back, no questions asked. Her phone number is 545-1214.

If the thieves are too ashamed to show their faces in daylight, then after duty hours, the flags can be returned to the Staff Duty Officer in Building 4, Room 111.

Or of course, the culprits could wait until the Military Police catch them with the flags and...well, let's hope they're smarter than that.

Come on, let's not make the post look bad for the sake of a prank, give back the flags.

MPs assist in search for missing woman

By Agatha H. James
Bayonet staff writer

A missing 72-year-old woman was the focus of a search and rescue operation by Fort Benning Military Police Friday.

The woman is identified as Eva Kiefer, a resident of Phenix City's Canterbury Health Facility.

The request for assistance came from Phenix City Rescue Squad officials, who made the call after an all-night search proved fruitless.

Julia Compton, the facility's administrator, said Kiefer, who walks daily after supper, apparently got lost when it turned dark. She had been missing since 7:30 p.m. Thursday.

As they arrived by helicopter at 11:45 a.m. Friday, the MPs spotted Kiefer in an adjacent, wooded area about 200 meters from the facility. She was taken to her private physician, who examined and released her.

Troops from 10th Mountain, 988th MP Company and 1st Bn., 507th PIR volunteered to participate in the mission. According to Benny Wright, Department of Defense Police, Military Police Activity (MPA), some troops had just come off guard duty. "But, they volunteered, anyway," he said.

"We were prepared for an extensive search," said SSgt. Steve Baker, Range Security platoon sergeant, MPA. "But, as we arrived and were hovering above the facility, we spotted her. She was waving her arms to get our attention."

Kiefer has been a resident of the facility's retirement section for two years. She takes a two-mile walk three to four times a day.

The award was presented to Faith students and staff to congratulate them for winning the Renatra Fusca Creativity Awards as well as first place in the World Finals of the Odyssey of the Mind.

The members of the Odyssey of the Mind team, Troy Hutchins, Chris Moore and Danny Segal, their coaches, Libbie Kurinec and Joan Hutchins, and Faith principal, Olin Harp accepted the award.

WWII vets reunite at Fort Benning after 46 years

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Members of the 505th Regimental Combat Team (WWII) came back to Fort Benning last week, reuniting, at the place their unit was activated, more than 46 years ago.

The unit was activated here on July 6, 1942, underwent intensive training, and then moved up to the 82nd Airborne Division on February 10, 1943.

The 505th went overseas in April 1943 and took part in the first large-scale night parachute operation on Sicily in July of that year.

"Husky Number One," was the first American airborne operation of the Sicilian campaign. The conquest of Sicily paved the way for the invasion of Italy.

In September 1943, 120 planes dropped Regimental Commander Col. James M. Gavin and 1,900 of his paratroopers into the Salerno beachhead. This last minute reinforcement caused the sagging morale of beachhead troops to soar and stiffened their resolve to hold against overwhelming odds and turn the tide of the battle.

Pulled back to England for training in February 1944, the 505th participated in the Normandy invasion airdrop and the airborne invasion of Holland.

In December of 1944 through January 1945, the Regiment helped stem the German Ardennes offensive. The final curtain of the war found the 505th aiding the drive to the Baltic, and having made the term American parachutist synonymous with courage of a high order.

The 505th was credited with four combat parachute assaults, six campaigns, and awarded the Presidential Unit Citation twice for actions at St. Mere Eglise and Nijmegan.

Milton Schlesener, a member of Co. D, 505th Regimental Combat Team, recalled some of the missions in which he participated.

"I think we were most confident when we landed in Holland," he said, "The Normandy mission was scary because we knew all of the things that could go wrong."

"As it was," he continued, "our unit was the only one that landed on its drop zone. The others missed theirs and were scattered all over the place."

However, he didn't blame it on the other units and attributed it to pilot error.

He added that, as most paratroopers know, it's all in the pilots timing.

Schlesener said those were just some of his memories of the time he served with the unit but even though they are not in the same "unit" anymore they stick together and keep in contact just like a close knit family.

In addition to the wreath laying ceremony at the Airborne Walk, the 505th toured various other parts of the 507th and other units on post.

Students celebrate Constitution's birthday

By Beth Middlemiss
Fort Benning Schools

Time capsules, speakers, birthday parties, flag ceremonies, and parades marked the celebration in the eight Fort Benning Schools of our Constitution's 201st birthday.

The impact of the Constitution on the lives of students was emphasized in a variety of ways. Capt. Sue McKeeman spoke to Faith Middle School students. By comparing the Constitution to the warranty on a washing machine, she explained the parts of the constitution affect them as students each day.

The entire student body joined in a parade at Loyd School that ended with an assembly where students were recognized for outstanding art work, poems, and essays based on the Constitution.

The impart of ceremonies at Wilbur School will continue long after Constitution Week has ended. The time capsule buried by fifth graders this year will be reopened by Wilbur students five years from now. The oak tree planted during the ceremony will serve as a reminder to students each day that the Constitution is a part of their lives.

Constitution Week is a time in all Fort Benning Schools when students and teachers use reading, math, art, music, and social studies to focus on the meaning of the Constitution.

Hit and runs increase on post

By Patrick Reed
Military Police Section

During the last few months there has been an increase in traffic accidents on Fort Benning, which had the additional charge of leaving the scene of an accident, or more commonly referred to as a "Hit and Run." The law in effect at Fort Benning prescribes that "the driver of any vehicle involved in an accident resulting in injury to or death of any person shall immediately stop such vehicle at the scene of the accident, and in every event shall remain at the scene of the accident. Any person failing to stop or comply with the requirements of this code shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction shall be fined not less than $300 nor more than $1,000 or imprisonment for up to one year or both."

If involved in a traffic accident while operating a POV or military vehicle, immediately check for any injuries and provide first aid accordingly. If the accident is a "Hit and Run," make notes of the description of the vehicle, to include damage that occurred, color, distinguishing features, and a description of the driver. Request that witnesses come forward and provide what details they observed to you and the Traffic Accident Investigator upon his arrival. The next step is to call the Military Police (545-5222). Upon arrival of the Military Police, have the following documents available:

Driver's license

Defensive Driving Card

Vehicle Registration or military dispatch

Proof of insurance and policy number

Also be prepared to write a sworn statement as to how the accident occurred. After all paperwork has been completed, you will be released from the scene (except in cases of Driving Under the Influence or an accident involving injuries by death) by the Traffic Accident Investigator or Military Police Patrolman.

If a passenger in a vehicle that is involved in an accident, write a sworn statement regarding the events that lead to the accident. If you witness an accident, you should volunteer to write a statement as to what you observed. This is especially important if both drivers are injured and a statement cannot be obtained at that time from them.

The possibility of the vehicle or vehicles being impounded by the Military Police exists if the accident involves DUI, or as evidence, and when the driver of the vehicle is taken to the hospital as a result of injuries received in the crash.

Copies of the accident report can be picked up at the Provost Marshal's Office, building 215, Monday through Friday during normal working.

For more information regarding traffic accidents, contact the Traffic Accident Investigation Section at 545-7474 or the on-duty Traffic Accident Investigator at 545-7474/2874. Remember, Crime Prevention is everyone's business — get involved.

By Barbara Brooks
43rd Engineer Battalion

It was midnight, and the entire company was hard at work. Charlie Company of the 43rd Engineers weren't pulling long hours, just different ones. The last week in August they "reverse cycle trained;" they switched day for night, and night for day. The "day" started at 4 p.m. and ended at 2 a.m.

This schedule was adopted for a week in preparation for Charlie Company's current deployment to the National Training Center as an augmentation unit to the opposing force there. In order to prepare themselves for this mission, Charlie Company soldiers practiced Soviet techniques of minefield laying, concertina stringing, tank ditch building, and vehicle fighting position digging.

The first night, Monday, each squad practiced map reading using National Training Center maps. After six hours of instruction by their squad leader, the evening culminated in a 100-question squad map test that took the fastest squads more than two hours to complete. The test covered intersection, resection, distances, and terrain identification. By the end of the first "day," everyone knew the terrain at the National Training Center thoroughly by map reconnaissance.

On Tuesday, each squad studied how the Soviets employ their engineers. The vertical platoons learned how to lay a Soviet minefield using five-ton dump trucks and minechutes. The earthmoving platoon learned how to prepare Soviet anti-tank ditches and tank fighting positions. Each squad practiced their tasks in the dark until everyone could do them perfectly.

Wednesday night the company set up a tactical training situation to exercise the Soviet mission skills that each squad had learned and practiced the previous two nights. The company executive officer gave each squad a Soviet-style mission, which was executed in Soviet fashion. Typical missions were to lay several hundred meters of double strand concertina wire, or to lay a Soviet hasty minefield.

After a squad finished executing their task, they radioed in, using proper radio security measures and received their next mission. Often one squad would be given the mission to breach an obstacle that another squad had just emplaced.

As the night wore on and radios failed, each squad learned just how important communications is to successful mission completion. Sending a runner to report mission completion meant that the company operations center had to wait for information instead of being able to have current knowledge of the situation in the field.

Thursday the company put together the entire week's training and executed a full tactical operation for the entire night. The company operations order was issued at 4 p.m.; platoon leaders issued their platoon operation orders one hour later. From there on the night was tactical. No lights were allowed for any of the drivers and radio security was maintained throughout the evening.

The first set of missions included two 300-meter Soviet minefields and several tank fighting positions. After the successful completion of these squad-sized missions, two platoons joined together for a larger mission; a 700-meter Soviet minefield with a double-strand concertina obstacle along the enemy edge. All this was done in complete darkness, with the vehicles using only blackout lights.

When this obstacle was finally breached at 4 a.m., the mission was complete, and everyone went gratefully to bed.

The week of night training emphasized squad operations and training. Each squad worked independently for most of the week, and each squad leader was responsible for teaching his squad the Soviet tactics that they will employ at the National Training Center.

All in all, night training was a very effective change of pace for Charlie Company. The routine was different, as was the training in Soviet tactics. The week prepared the company well for their deployment to the National Training Center and the schedule added variety to the day.

ASK THE JUDGE

By Dennis E. Brower
Staff Judge Advocate's Office

Q - I was recently assigned to Fort Benning from North Carolina. While in North Carolina, I purchased a car. My legal residence is Alabama, but I registered my car in North Carolina because the sales tax was lower, and it was easier. After living here for several months, I received a traffic ticket for not having my car registered in Georgia. Can they give me a ticket for this?

A - Yes. The Georgia Code states that if a legal resident of the state owns a car he has seven days in which to have it registered. If the person is a nonresident, as are most soldiers assigned to Fort Benning, then he has 30 days from the date he arrived in Georgia to register the car with Georgia's Motor Vehicle Department. The only exception to this rule is if the soldier has the car properly registered in that state. The Soldiers' and Sailors' Civil Relief Act protects the soldier from having to register, and pay property taxes on, his car in the state in which he is assigned.

In the case above the soldier's legal residence was Alabama. While assigned in North Carolina, he was permitted to register his car in that state. However, when he was ordered to Georgia he had to change the registration from North Carolina to either Georgia or his legal residence of Alabama. To comply with the Georgia law he would have to do this within 30 days. Even if the soldier decides to register his car in Georgia, he will still not pay property taxes on it if a proper Soldiers' and Sailors' Civil Relief Waiver Form is filled out stating that the soldier is not a resident of Georgia. These forms are available from the Legal Assistance Office.

Another point to consider is that of cars that are registered in the names of the soldier's family members. In Georgia cars that are registered to family members, who are here because of their sponsor's orders, do not have to change the registration to Georgia if it is properly registered in the legal residence of the soldier. This is the same rule as discussed above. Many other states do not have the same rules concerning family members and require registration and the payment of property taxes on cars registered to family members. As you are assigned around the country make sure that when you arrive at your new assignment you check with the local legal assistance office on what rules apply for that state.

- Locate your category of housing.
- Note the eligibility date located on the same line as your category.
- Calculate the time difference between the elibigility date last assigned and your eligibility date. The difference is the approximate time you still have to wait for housing.

EXAMPLE: If the eligibility date for the person who last receive housing in your category was May 15, 1988, and your date of eligilibity is Sept. 15, 1988, you can expect housing in four months. SPIRITUAL

To be remembered by God is to be truly remembered

By Richard Goldsmith
Director, CPE Center

Of all the statements written about soldiers, one stands apart in my mind and spirit. It is written in stone. The stone is part of a site that is so unique to the nation that it merits a perpetual sentry. People from all walks of life and from all over the country and world come to pay silent tribute. It is more than a memorial to an unknown soldier. It is also a proclamation. It is a statement of faith, love, grief and hope combined in nine words, "Here lies an American Soldier, known but to God."

Someone once wrote about the soldier, "I was that which others did not want to be. I went where others failed to go and did what others failed to do. I asked nothing from those who gave nothing, and reluctantly accepted the thought of eternal loneliness should I fail. I have seen the face of terror, felt the stinging cold of fear, and enjoyed the sweet taste of a moment's love. I have cried, pained, and hoped. . .but most of all have lived in times others would say are best forgotten. At least some day I will be able to say that I was proud of what I was. . .a soldier."

I know of no other profession where the sense of self satisfaction, and knowing in one's heart that he is doing what he was meant to do is as important as being a soldier. The greatest reward to the professional soldier is not public acknowledgment, but inner awareness, that he did his best and gave his all, not ultimately for personal gain, but for a nation and people, he gave an oath to defend and protect.

Jesus knew what it meant to be a soldier and found, "the greatest faith in all of Israel," in an enemy commander. The ultimate "draft" into national service must remain that of one's own heart. To those who know and care, everyday is Memorial Day, and everyday is Veteran's Day. There is a sad poem that depicts how it feels to be forgotten: "God and the soldier, we like adore; in times of danger, and not before. The danger past, and all things righted; God is forgotten, and the soldier slighted." To be "known but to God," is to be truly known. To be remembered by God, is to be truly remembered.

It is a terrible thought that we may one day forget God, but it is inconceivable that one day God may forget us. And so, we write in stone, that even though we do not know God, God does. And not only does the Lord know, but he never forgets to remember. The soldier is never forgotten.

New law changes check collection methods

By Rudi Williams
AFIS

A new federal banking law that shortens the time banks can hold checks before making money available to depositors and makes changes in how checks are collected and returned could spell trouble for people who float, or kite, checks, according to spokeswoman for the Federal Reserve System.

Under the legislation, banks must make funds available on local checks within three days and non-local checks within seven. Money from low-risk checks, such as those issued by DoD, must be made available to customers in one day. Before the change, which went into effect on Sept. 1, some banks held checks between five and ten days.

Banks that don't make funds available within the new time limits will be subject to civil penalties, according to the spokeswoman.

"The new regulation applies only to banks within the United States," she said. "Branch offices located overseas, such as those on U.S. military installations, are not affected by the regulation.

"Because the mandatory fund-availability schedules require banks to release funds before they can be sure the checks won't be returned, the new regulation also makes changes in how checks are collected and returned. These procedural changes should help reduce the possibility of kiting."

A spokesman at the Fort Belvoir, Va., finance office explained how kiting works: "Say I have a bank account in a Texas bank and another in a Virginia bank. The bank in Texas gets my mid-month paycheck about the 13th, so I write a $500 check on the Texas bank (knowing I won't have any money until payday) on the 10th. Then I start drawing money on the Virginia bank, thinking that by the time my $500 check reaches Texas my money will be there. That's kiting, or floating a check.

"What you're doing is knowingly writing a bad check — you're breaking the law," he emphasized. "If you write a check at the commissary or exchange on Friday knowing payday is not until Monday, that's also kiting. You shouldn't write a check unless you've got money in the bank."

New endorsement rules implemented by the Federal Reserve System specify the locations for banks to endorse checks. The new standards are aimed at providing clear and uniform endorsements for all collecting and returning banks and to speed the return of unpaid checks.

"These new standards mean a 1½-inch space. The smaller rubber stamp includes lines for the check writer's Social Security number, service, rank, status (active, retired, Reserve), organization, duty station and dependent Social Security number.

The patron's name, current address and telephone number go on the front of the check. "If this information isn't preprinted on the front, the writing will have to be pretty small," said a spokesman for the Navy exchange and commissaries. "There is no need for an endorsement line because the checks are made out to the Navy Exchange or commissary. They are for deposit only. In the few instances where the exchange will cash a two-party check, such as your paycheck, we will ask you to endorse it at the bottom."

Army and Air Force Exchange Service officials considered designing a smaller rubber stamp for the back of checks, but scrapped that idea. "All customer-related information will be required on the front, either preprinted or hand printed on the upper left hand corner of the check," said a spokeswoman.

A Marine Corps commissary spokeswoman said they ar asking patrons to put all identifying information on the front of the check.

"The space limitation doesn't affect our commissary customers because all of the information we need is on the front of the check," said a spokesman for the Air Force commissary system.

Fort Benning shootist grabs Olympic Silver

Win prevents team medal shut-out

By Tommy Pool
USAMU Public Affairs Office

MSgt. Erich Buljung from the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit here brought home the silver medal on the last day of shooting competition at this year's Olympic Games being held in Seoul, Korea.

With the U.S. shooting team in danger of being shut out of winning a medal for the first time in more than 30 years, Buljung fired a total of 590 out of 600 points in the 10-meter air pistol competition. That score tied the old world record and advanced him to the medal round as one of the top eight finalists in the event. Each competitor then fired an additional 10 shots on a target with the scoring rings graduated into tenths of a point.

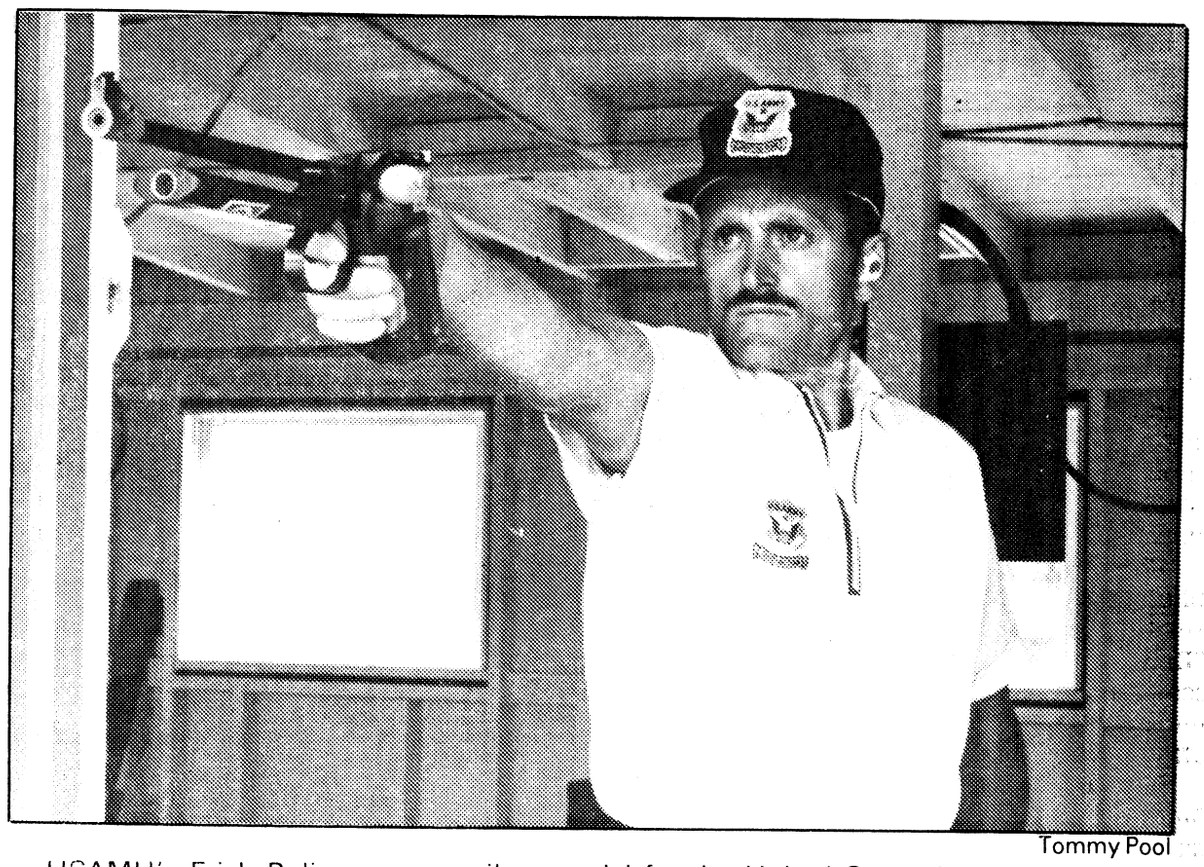
During the 10 final shots, Buljung and Taniou Kiriakov of Bulgaria fired identical scores of 987.7. Buljung had to settle for the silver as Kiriakov was awarded the gold medal in a tie-breaking procedure based on the last shot fired. Kiriakov scored a 9.8 to Buljung's 9.1 on his final shot.

Third place and the bronze medal went to Xu Haifeng of China.

The closest the U.S. came to winning any other medals in the Olympic shooting events were two fourth place finishes, one in the men's air rifle and the other in men's skeet shooting.

Buljung has been competing in major international shooting competitions since 1979 and has won more than a dozen medals including four gold in the Pan American Games.

He was also a member of the 1984 U.S. Olmpic team and competed in the 50-meter free pistol event where he finished in ninth place during the Los Angeles Games.



Buljung has won 14 national pistol championships in his career and holds the current world record in the standard pistol event to go along with co-holder of the 10-meter air pistol record that he tied last week in Seoul.

Other USAMU members of the U.S. Olympic Shooting Team included Glenn Dubis and Wanda Jewell in rifle events, John McNally and Ray Arredondo in rapid fire pistol and Brian Ballard in the men's trap shooting.

Dubis placed fifth in the 50-meter smallbore rifle event with a score of 1273.5; and Jewell finished thirteenth in the Women's 50-meter standard rifle event, scoring 579 points.

McNally was tied for second going into the finals of the rapid fire pistol event but finished in fifth position with a 597 out of 600 total, three points out of third place. Arredondo finished thirteenth.

Ballard finished tied for twelfth with fellow American, George Haas, in the trap shooting event.

USAMU's Erich Buljung won a silver medal for the United States in pistol shooting during the Olympic Games in Seoul. His medal saved the U.S. shooting team from being shut out in medal competition.

Parking lights aren't intended for driving

Safety Office

A man appearing before the local judge, explained his head on collision with another car, that was being operated during dusk with only parking lights on, by stating, "Your honor, I was driving down Houston Street last night when I saw what I thought was two bicycles, with their headlights on, right in front of me so I tried to go between them.

Parking lights have a definite purpose, but are to be used only when the car is parked. It is a violation of the Traffic Code in most states to operate a vehicle and use parking lights instead of headlights. Some claim that they demand less battery power. They do, but the amount of saving is so small that it is far surpassed by the potential of an accident.

Another practice that creates serious surprises is that of using only parking lights while driving during rain, snow, or fog. In that kind of a condition, the "other guy" has just as much trouble seeing you as you have seeing him — maybe more. Georgia State Law requires you to turn your lights on when you have your windshield wipers operating. Check conformance to this one the next time you are driving in the rain. Count the number of potential accidents you see.

Pedestrians have similar problems and responsibilities. Every year, lives are snuffed out by pedestrians attempting to cross a highway and being struck by a car, or walking/jogging alongside/within a traffic lane in early morning or at evening dusk while wearing dark clothing. If you have to walk down a highway, day or night, stay at least five feet from the edge of the traffic lane and walk against traffic instead of with it. If you are a little tipsy, don't walk.

Even while doing the "hup two, three, four" in military drill, the danger of not being seen by vehicle operators is right in front (or back) of you. Just the other day, a platoon of soldiers was marching in formation in a traffic lane on Range Road at about 6:15 p.m. Their precautionary measure was to have two soldiers in front of the column, with red lensed flashlights to warn approaching vehicles. Great! however, in this case, when two cars approached them, the rear vehicle operator mistook the two red lights as the tail lights of a third vehicle. Because the vehicle in front was going slower, (he probably saw the troops and slowed), the second driver attempted to pass and headed directly into the marching troops.

Fortunately, he saw what the situation was and managed to avert a disaster. What did we learn?

○That motorists driving in a military training area must be alert to the possibility of a confrontation with foot troops at any time or place and be ready to yield to them regardless of legal speed limit. Having conformed to the speed limit would be little solace to the grieving survivors of such a tragedy or the life-time, haunting memory by the motorist who brought it about.

○The officer or NCO who is moving troops in formation on an active roadway at night should use more positive means of identifying their presence and alerting motorists who may pass the formation (10 miles per hour).

○Take a look around and see how many are moving about by car or on foot as if they were practicing cover and concealment. Note the night riders in vehicles with dark windows, driving in the rain at dusk without headlights on, cutting in and out of traffic (above the speed limit) and wearing dark glasses!

Soldiers shoot for annual title

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

While Fort Benning marksmen were in Seoul, Korea, shooting for gold in the XXIV Olympiad, members of the 29th Infantry Regiment and the Infantry Training Center were back here doing the same in the second annual "Top Gun" competition.

Col. John Fuller, 29th Infantry Regiment commander, started the event last year to give soldiers in his command an opportunity to vie for the title of being the best marksman in the unit.

During the competition, the men fire the 9mm pistol, M-16A2 rifle and the squad automatic weapon for points. The "Top Gun" is the soldier who has the best composite score after firing all of the weapons.

This year the competition expanded and was opened to ITC troops, who work closely with members of the 29th throughout the year.

During the awards ceremony officially recognizing the winners of the competition, ITC Commander Stephen Perry said he believes the field of competitors will be even bigger next year.

The following soldiers were recognized in the ceremony.

New fiscal year begins; renews energy challenge

By Becky Ray
Energy Section

October first is the beginning of a new fiscal year for Fort Benning, and it also marks the beginning of a new energy challenge for the post.

Each fiscal year the Training and Doctrine Command issues energy goals for each of its installations, including Fort Benning. Because the Army has mandated a 15-percent reduction in energy consumption by the year 1995 from 1985 figures, the post's energy budget is decreased in increments each year.

The 1989 energy budget is 1.5 percent less than last year's, but even after the cut, the budget exceeds a whopping $20 million. The 1.5 percent budget cut for the year amounts to about $250,000.

Although this reduction represents a large amount of energy, it should be possible for Fort Benning to meet the goal easily, as similarly reduced goals have been met in the past years.

Historically, Fort Benning has finished each year extremely close to energy goals. Because of this, air conditioning was shut off as soon as the TRADOC criteria for shut off was met.

These criteria are temperatures below 85 degrees and humidity below 50 percent for four or five consecutive days.

At Fort Benning, four cool early fall days are usually followed by warmer weather. Without air conditioning, buildings are uncomfortably warm at best.

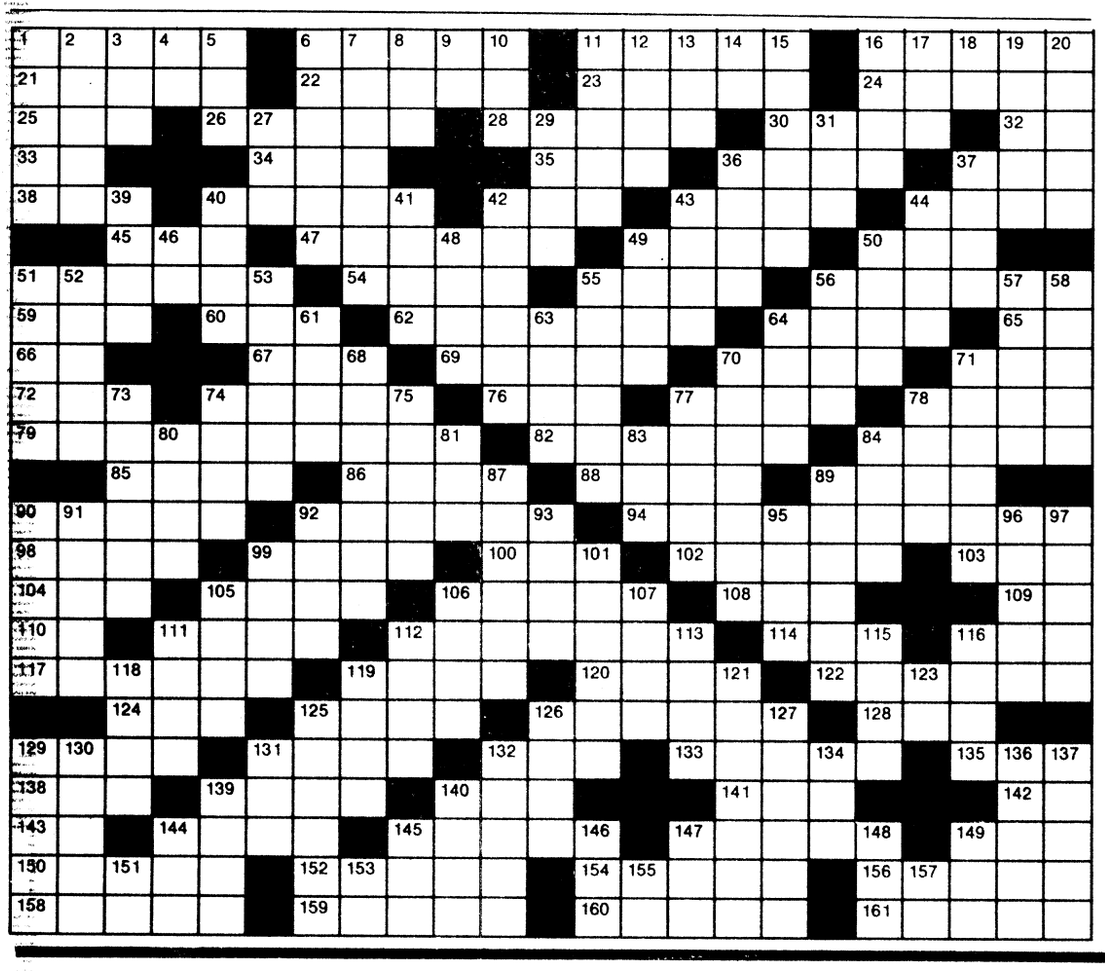
In 1988, cooperation from the Fort Benning community throughout the year resulted in substantial energy savings, allowing air conditioning season to be extended. Post occupants are able to keep cool in the fall's "Indian summer" even though TRADOC criteria for air conditioning shut off has already been met.

Steve Turner, Fort Benning's energy manager believes that if this trend of energy conservation continues, TRADOC-imposed heating and air conditioning seasons can be eliminated altogether. Air conditioning and heating could be used as dictated by the weather and outside air temperatures.

The key to this more liberal policy is increased cooperation by individuals in using heater and air conditioners with conservation in mind.

The fall provides a great opportunity to get a head start in meeting the new year's energy goal. When we are between air conditioning and heating seasons, we are also between seasonal energy peaks.

Energy used in heating and air conditioning causes consumption peaks in natural gas and electricity. By extending the period between cooling and heating seasons as an annual goal, and for making sure we have enough energy later in the year. In essence, we are banking our energy savings now during mild weather to use when we need it later during the cold of winter and the heat of summer.



Because the area's transitional periods between seasons aren't gradual, short spells of warm or cool weather are to be expected in the fall and spring.

Usually, these weather fluctuations can be dealt with by dressing sensibly, using fans or opening and closing windows as necessary. It is also wise to plan the day's activities around the predicted weather. If the day is expected to be hot, for instance, plan to do outside or strenuous chores during the cooler morning hours.

Wise energy management and cooperation by individuals will allow more liberal policies for air conditioning and heating use and possibly the elimination of established heating and cooling seasons. With a concerted conservation effort, the entire post will benefit.

Play set for tomorrow at Andersonville

By Peggy Sheppard
Andersonville correspondent

Seventy-five year-old Father Peter Sheridan, Georgia Franciscan priest whose residence is at St. Mary's Friary in Americus, Ga.will portray Father Peter Whelan, "The Good Samaritan of Andersonville," in the Andersonville Historic Fair kick-off parade to be held Saturday, 11 a.m. in the Civil War Village of Andersonville.

Father Peter Whelan was the Catholic priest from Savannah who, during the hot months of June, July, August, and September 1864, ministered daily to the ill-fed, unsheltered, sick and dying prisoners of Andersonville.

The 62-year-old priest visited the prison every day from 9 a.m. until almost sundown. He assisted the sick, gave solace to the despondent, and extreme unction to the dying. Without regard to danger of infection, he gave the same loving attention to those with small pox, typhus, and gangrenous sores as to others. In his own words, his purpose was to "allay misery and gain souls to God."

In late September 1864, Father Whelan borrowed $16,000 in Confederate money (the equivalent of $400 in gold) from a Macon resident, Henry Horne. With this money, Whelan purchased 10,000 pounds of wheat flour and had it baked into bread. This life-saving food was called by the prisoners, "Whelan's Bread."

When these prisoners returned home and wrote their memoirs, Father Whelan's name and work were recorded. Some said that he saved hundreds of lives. Many wrote, "All creeds, color, and nationalities were alike to him. He was indeed the Good Samaritan."

Although Andersonville Confederate Prison was located in the Bible Belt, no local religious leaders attempted to minister to these suffering Yankees.

Father Whelan's unique war service included ministering to both northern and southern prisoners of war. Prior to his work at Andersonville, he served as chaplain of the Montgomery Guards, an Irish company raised in Savannah for the First Georgia Volunteer Regiment at the beginning of the war. This company, stationed at Fort Pulaski to guard the Savannah harbor, was captured by the Federals and Father Whelan, along with the rest of the Montgomery Guards, was transferred north and imprisoned at Governor's Island, New York for six months until an exchange for the whole group was arranged.

Other Civil War characters to be portrayed in the Oct. 1 parade include Clara Barton, Civil War nurse who was instrumental in preserving the names of those who died at Andersonville and who later started the American Red Cross. Margaret Pond of Americus, who served for 10 years as Americus Red Cross director, will portray Clara Barton. Gen. Robert E. Lee will be played by Clifford Harpe of DeSoto and Gen. Ullyses S. Grant by James Osborne of Americus.

Ice Cream Cones:

PM Editorials

That all-American treat, the ice cream cone, is 85 years old this year. On Sept. 22, 1903, Italo Marchiony, an Italian immigrant, applied for a patent for his new invention, the ice cream cone. He was issued a patent on Dec. 15, 1903.

85th Anniversary

Marchiony invented the cone to hold the lemon ice he sold from a fleet of pushcarts in New York City. Although his first cones were made of paper, he switched to using rolled waffles. The edible ice cream cone has continued to grow in popularity ever since.

Vets save $12 billion in refinanced loans

Veterans Administration

Over the past three years, 338,000 veterans have refinanced their VA-guaranteed home loans and generated some $12 billion in long-term personal savings.

The savings, which may amount to $36,000 or more for the individual veteran, are a major benefit of the sharp decline in home loan interest rates during the 1980s.

Veterans have been quick to take advantage of the potential savings. A sharp and dramatic rise in refinancing began in January 1985 when 610 refinance loans were reported, for a total of $39 million. By December, refinance loans had jumped to 2,893, totaling $209 million, a 400 percent increase.

The growth in refinance loans continued in the following years, with 13,921 in the 1985 federal fiscal year, 100,909 in fiscal year 1986, and a record 205,210 in fiscal 1987.

In the current fiscal year, VA loan refinancing continues, but at a declining rate. This decline reflects the veterans' success in refinancing the high interest rate loans made in the 1970s and a concurrent rise in current market interest rates making refinancing less advantageous.

A refinancing rule of thumb is that a borrower should consider refinancing a home loan if the interest rate of the loan is 2 percent or more higher than the rate available in the current market.

A 30-year loan for $70,000 with a 13.5 percent interest rate, for example, has a monthly payment of $801.79 for principal and interest alone, as compared to a $640.32 monthly payment for a similar loan with a 10.5 percent interest rate. Refinancing would save the veteran $161.47 a month.

As of Sept. 30, 1986, after the increase in refinancing had already begun, there were still 400,000 loans guaranteed by the Veterans Administration with interest rates of 12.5 percent or higher. This backlog of loans with refinancing potential included 141,000 loans at 13.5 percent or higher.

In the intervening months, veterans have gone a long way toward erasing the backlog. As of June 1988, only 206,000 veterans held VA-guaranteed home loans of 12.5 percent or higher.

The potential savings to veterans are tremendous. Over the 30-year life of a mortgage, refinancing to cut home loan interest by 2 percent points could save up to $36,000.

In the current fiscal year VA expects another 38,000 loans to be refinanced, barring any dramatic change in current market loan rates. This could result in another $1.4 billion in savings to veterans.

The VA encourages veterans to refinance loans that are two points or more higher than the current market rate of 10.5 percent. Veterans considering refinancing should contact a private lending agency. If there are questions concerning eligibility for a VA-guarantee of the refinance loan, the veteran should contact the nearest VA Regional Office.

20 millionth GI Bill participant recognized by VA Administration

Veterans Administration

A major milestone in the 44-year history of Veterans Administration education benefits was observed Sept. 22 in a ceremony recognizing the 20 millionth GI Bill participant.

VA Administrator Thomas K. Turnage and House Affairs Committee Chairman Rep. G.V. "Sonny" Montgomery (D-Miss.) jointly recognized Steven C. Scott of Canton, Ohio, who will continue his college education this fall using benefits earned during two years of Army service. Scott is eligible for the Montgomery GI Bill — the newest version of VA education assistance that is available to those entering military service after June 30, 1985.

The Capitol Hill ceremony noted the significance of all GI Bill programs that since 1944 have delivered some $69.7 billion in assistance to veterans, family members and active duty members.

Scott, 25, is pursuing a degree in business administration at Ohio State University. The 20-millionth participant served in an Army Signal Corps unit from 1985 to 1987 and currently participates in a simultaneous National Guard and Army Reserve program. His GI Bill benefits amount to $583 per month.

Participants in GI Bill education programs so far include 7.8 million World War II veterans; 2.4 million Korean Conflict veterans; 8.1 million Vietnam Era veterans and active-duty service personnel; 168,000 in the peacetime Veterans' Educational Assistance Program (VEAP); 1.1 million in the Vocational Rehabilitation Program; 481,000 family members of deceased and disabled veterans; and 513,000 in the current Montgomery GI Bill Program.

Under the Montgomery GI Bill participants on active duty have their basic pay reduced by $100 a month for the first 12 months of service. After a three-year active-duty commitment is completed, the veteran is entitled to $300 a month basic benefits for 36 months. Completing a two-year commitment entitles the veteran to $250 a month for 36 months.

Participants who enlist in the Selected Reserve for a six-year period are eligible for education benefits after completing active duty training and 180 days of service in the Active Reserve. Education benefits for reservists are $140 a month for 36 months.

VETERANS' Qs & As

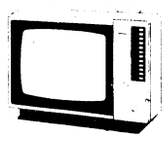
Veterans Administration

Q - My husband was killed in World War II while on active duty and was buried at sea. I never remarried and would like to be buried in a VA national cemetery. Is this possible?

A - Yes. The widow or widower of a member of the Armed Forces lost or buried at sea or officially determined to be in a status of missing or missing in action or whose remains have been donated to science or cremated, is eligible for burial in a national cemetery.

Q - I own a manufactured home on a rented lot. I would like to purchase a lot for it. Can I do this using my the VA guaranteed loan program?

A - Yes. A VA-guaranteed loan may be used to buy and improve a lot on which to place a manufactured home you already own and occupy.



Q - Am I required to occupy as a home the house I purchased with my VA home loan eligibility?

A - Yes. In order for you to qualify for the loan, the law specifically requires you to certify that you intend to occupy the property personally as your home within a reasonable period of time.

Tot Town ground breaking

Col. Robert Hatch, Ida Barnes, Col. James Daily (l to r) break ground for the new addition to Tot-Town as Mike Farmer (l) and Jay Skinner look on. The addition, which they have dubbed the "Baby Addition," will allow Tot-Town to take an additional 40 children at any given time. The project should be complete by the end of 1989 at a cost of more than $400,000.

Follow these 13 rules of the road

Safety Office

To many people the traffic safety problem seems hopelessly complex. As a result they disregard as unimportant the little things that make for safe driving. Here are 13 simple rules that, if followed, would greatly reduce our annual traffic toll:

Obey speed limits — They are for your protection. They represent maximum rates that are safe under favorable conditions. When traffic is heavy or weather is bad, you should slow to a "reasonable and proper" speed.

Signal plainly — Signal well in advance for every turn, stop or change of lane. You will be safer and, you are being courteous to other drivers, who can pass you safely without waiting.

Get in the proper lane — If you are turning, you should get in the proper lane before reaching the intersection. Here again, you are being both safe and courteous.

Do not drink and drive — Tests have shown it takes very little alcohol to stimulate your confidence, reduce your alertness and coordination, and slow your reflexes.

Stay in line — Do not pass on hills or curves. The driver coming just out of sight may be traveling faster than he should. What appears to be a safe passing distance may not be.

Watch for pedestrians — They should cross only at intersections, with the green light. If some are careless and inconsiderate, they may step into the street from behind parked cars.

Do not compete with the traffic hog — To dispute the right of way might cost your life or the life of a loved one.

Reduce speed at night — Your range of visibility is reduced at night, but not your stopping distance. The night traffic death rate is sharply higher than the day rate.

Keep your car in top operating condition — Brakes not good enough for normal driving may let you crash if you get into a tight spot. Lights properly focused help you see the pedestrian in dark clothing, or the unlighted vehicle ahead.

Watch for children — they are unpredictable. If one darts into your path, a little less speed or a little more caution may mean all the difference.

Watch for traffic signs — Be alert to see and follow signs and markers. Truly they are the signs of life. 13 could be your lucky number!

Develop a 'Family Fitness Plan'

By Dick Kazmaier
President's Council on Fitness

As an American living in a modern society, you probably have to make sacrifices in order to keep up the fast pace. "Time-budgets" get tight and no doubt you frequently need to give up some of the things you enjoy the most, such as favorite activities, recreational time, regular exercise and family time. That's why developing a "family fitness plan" is so important. With it, you can help make the most of your free time while strengthening your own fitness level and your bond with your family members.

A commitment to physical fitness is one of the most important aspects of a wholesome family life. Regular exercise promotes physical and psychological health, and healthy families are the framework of our society. Within this framework come the values our youth carry into adulthood. Leading a healthy, vigorous lifestyle is one value we, as a nation, cannot afford to ignore.

Each generation can benefit from regular exercise. Youth develop healthy habits that will help them avoid chronic illness as adults. Some studies show that exercise helps boys and girls do better in school. Exercise can reduce stress and calm nerves, helping both child and parent deal with family tension. And, physically fit grandparents are more likely to have the energy and strength to keep up with the younger "generation."

The fitness formula is basically the same for all family members—follow a well-designed program at least three times each week, incorporating exercises for strength, endurance and flexibility. Older family members should always check with a physician before starting an exercise program.

Keeping a family commitment to exercise requires some creativity and an understanding of the differing needs of each family member. Some families may find motivation in exercising together, choosing an activity that mom, dad and the kids all enjoy. Other families may find it more effective when each member chooses their own exercise and then shares their progress and experiences.

Here are a few tips to help your family develop and stay wtih a fitness plan:

- Choose group or individual activities that are enjoyable. Studies show that people who have fun while they exercise are more likely to maintain their commitment and get results.
- Involve each member in planning the family program. Kids are more likely to get excited about exercising if they've had a say in selecting the activity.
- Choose an activity you can turn into a family adventure. Biking, walking and hiking are ideal because you can discover new places with your family. Warmup as a group and then allow each member to pace themselves individually for awhile. Establish meeting points along your route before you leave and then meet up with each other on the trail.
- Vary your exercise activity. Family members often have different weather preferences. Take advantage of the climate change and alter your fitness program so everyone can enjoy their favorite season with a new activity.
- Include other families in your activity. Plan a weekend bike ride or fun run/walk with your neighboring families.
- Monitor your family's progress. Keep track of each member's fitness achievements as you would your child's height and weight through the years. Fill-in the kitchen calendar with the week's activity plans and mark off each day a workout is completed.

Receiving encouragement from people who mean something to you makes exercise rewarding. Staying with a family fitness plan will add health, excitement and fun to your family life.

Georgia's Little White House beautified

GDNR

The month of September was set aside to encourage everyone to take pride in the nation's natural and cultural resources. It is also the month designated by Governor Joe Frank Harris for Georgians to improve the physical and environmental quality of their lives.

The Little White House Historic Site has chosen Dowdell's Knob, FDR's favorite retreat, for beautification. The entry road has been resurfaced and landscaped along the sides, curbing has been added in the picnic area and picnic tables have been freshly painted. Gates have been installed at the entrance way to discourage loitering after visitation hours.

Plan to visit this beautiful overlook of the Pine Mountain Valley. Have a picnic or meditate where FDR did. Then journey on to the Little White House for a tour.

The Georgia Department of Natural Resources operates the site, which is located on Georgia highway 85W in Warm Springs. Operating hours are 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. seven days a week, but the last tour begins at 4:15p.m. For further information or to schedule a group visit, please phone (404) 655-3511.

Cruise-matics edge out Mobile

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

The Fort Benning-Columbus Cruise-matics edged out the Mobile Battleship Rugby Club, 22-20, in the final minutes of the season opener Sept. 24.

This is the first time they beat the Battleship Rugby Club in three outings.

According to Cruise-matics Coach Mierion Isaac they traditionally scheduled to play that team a the beginning of the season.

"They're a good club, and it was a tough game," Isaac said; "but they made a lot of mistakes,and we capitalized on them."

Both Bill Rapp and Noel Reed scored a try during the game for four points each while John Hunt utilized his kicking skills to the fullest scoring 14 points with one conversion and four penalty goals.

Isaac said that although John Hunt scored the most points in the game the most impressive play of the game was Noel Reed's try.

"He broke away and ran nearly half the length of the field to score in the closing minutes," he said, "giving us the win."

This week the Cruise-matics play the Atlanta High Country team in Atlanta.

Aaron: on the line with Umpires

By Hank Aaron
Vice President Atlanta Braves

There's a fine line a baseball player should walk when an umpire's call goes against him.

The first thing to understand is that the umpire is not going to change his call. The player can tell the ump what he thinks and then go on about his business. That should be the end of it.

Whenever I thought a bad pitch was called on me, I would carefully avoid showing up the umpire in front of 40,000 people. Instead, I would pick up some dirt, step back out of the batter's box until I was next to the umpire and say, 'I thought that pitch was low.' The ump would say, 'Well, I thought it was a strike.' And that would be all. Why dwell on it? The call is already made and he's not going to change it. Even if he wanted to change the call, he won't because it would make him look bad.

So what did my strategy accomplish? Nine times out of 10, when that same pitch was made in the seventh or eighth inning, the call would go in my favor. Some people might call it reverse psychology. All I was doing was treating the umpires like they're human beings. And, for that matter, as long as we have human beings doing anything, they are going to make mistakes.

It's easy to point a finger and use the umpire as an excuse for not getting the job done. Players say 'the umpire put me in a hole,' or 'the umpire took a pitch away from me.' I didn't believe in pointing fingers. It was up to me to take care of myself. If they called a bad strike on me, I always felt I had two more left. The only thing that really bothered me was if the bad call was on a third strike.

They sure didn't pay me to get thrown out of ball games arguing with an umpire. The closest I came was on a called third strike. The ump didn't like my protest and signaled me out of the game. What he forgot was that I was the last out of the game, and it's impossible to throw a player out after the game is over.

Now and then I'm asked about using instant replays on close calls. I am against it in baseball and have misgivings about it in football. If we had it in baseball, games would end up lasting five hours instead of two. In football, fans see a touchdown and have to wait 15 minutes before they know whether to cheer or not. As a fan myself, I'd rather see them add more football referees to catch the close plays and drop the long replay delays.

Deer gun season will begin in October

By Tim Brown
Community Recreation Division

The 1988/89 deer gun season will open in Georgia Oct. 22, and Nov. 19, in Alabama. Fort Benning will observe these season dates in the respective states.

Computerized hunter registration will be required during the deer gun season for all hunters, same as the 1987/88 season. However, this year, there have been significant changes made in the hunting rules.

The penalty for failing to call in and clear have been changed. This hunting season, the first offense will result in a warning letter being sent to the individual. The second offense will result in a 14-day suspension of hunting privileges. These penalties are absolute standards and will not be subject to an appeal of any type.

This year, all hunters and fishers must display a current DoD vehicle registration decal on the vehicle before entering any hunting/fishing area. Previously only vehicles entering restricted areas were required to display the DoD decal. DoD vehicle registration decals may be obtained at the Soldiers' Plaza processing center located in building 2620, Dixie Road. Retired civilian employees from Fort Benning will be able to obtain vehicle decals to display while hunting or fishing. The penalty for failing to have a properly registered vehicle is a one-year suspension of hunting and fishing privileges.

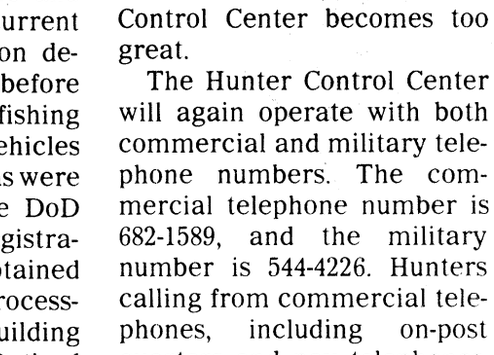
Early registration for opening weekend, Oct. 22 and 23, will again be conducted this year. Hunters may preregister beginning Oct. 17, between 8 a.m. and 5 p.m. for both Oct. 22 and 23. However, hunters will still be responsible for calling in to clear for each day.

The Fort Benning Hunter Control Center will operate during the entire deer gun season, including weekends and holidays, from 4 a.m. to 9 p.m. Additionally, on opening weekend, Oct. 22 and 23 only, the Control Center will be open until 11 p.m.

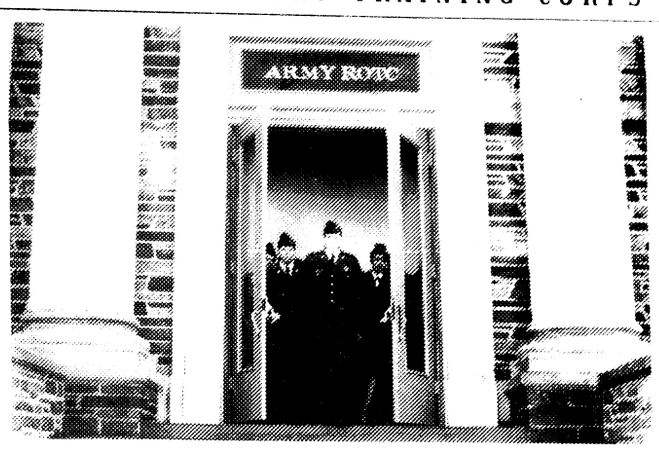
The Hunter Control Center will accept next day registration for hunters as was done last year, however, hunters will not be able to preregister until noon for the following day — and preregistration may be terminated after 6 p.m. if the volume of calls at the Hunter Control Center becomes too great.

The Hunter Control Center will again operate with both commercial and military telephone numbers. The commercial telephone number is 682-1589, and the military number is 544-4226. Hunters calling from commercial telephones, including on-post quarters and pay telephones, are asked to use the commercial number. This will once again be a four-line rotary system. The military number will not be connected to the rotary system and should be used only when calling from an on-post telephone with a 544-545 prefix.

Hunting maps will be posted throughout the installation. Maps will be posted at the Outdoor Recreation Office, building 247, located on Ingersoll Street just off Dixie Road; the Military Police Station, building 215, located at the corner of Wold Avenue and Edwards Street; Uchee Creek Recreation Area across from the resale store, building 0007, located off 101st Airborne Disivion Road on the Alabama side of the military reservation; and the Natural Resources Management Office, building 5884, located on 1st Division Road just off U.S. Highway 27 in the Harmony Church Area. Maps will be posted three days ahead.



The hunting maps, however, will not have the striped green overlays indicating open hunting areas. Instead, a pre-printed "check sheet" will be posted adjacent to the hunting map with available hunting areas indicated. As with last year, it is the individual hunter's responsibility to check the map and checksheet to ensure that a particular area is open for hunting on a specific day.



Hunters will find one more significant change in hunting this year on the Georgia portion of Fort Benning. The entire gun season has been designated as "either sex," however, gun hunters are reminded that the limit of three deer is still in effect. Gun hunters may take as many as three does, but, may not take more than two bucks during the hunting season anywhere on Fort Benning, including the Alabama portion of the military reservation.

Register vehicle before using it to hunt on post

By Patrick Reed
Military Police Activity

Hunting season is rapidly approaching. Starting Oct. 22, authorized hunters may hunt deer with a rifle, and Oct. 15 is the beginning of squirrel hunting season. Hunting and personnel authorized to hunt on Fort Benning are governed by USAIC Regulation 210-2. Hunters can get a copy at the Outdoor Recreation Office, building 247, Main Post. In addition to personnel meeting the hunting requirements, all vehicles that will be entering designated hunting areas must be registered through the post vehicle registration office and have a properly affixed DoD vehicle registration sticker.

"So how can I get my vehicle registered?" you may ask. The answer is simple and so is the procedure. All active duty and retired military and DoD civilians must present a vehicle ownership and state registration certificate, a valid driver's license, proof of insurance, and verification of employment on Fort Benning to register their vehicles. Military personnel under the age of 26, with the exception of USAIS students and basic trainees, are also required to attend the Defensive Driving Course (DDC) at Fort Benning. Nonaffiliated civilians are not authorized vehicle registration stickers.

After gathering the necessary documents, register your vehicle at the Vehicle Registration Office, building 2621, Soldiers' Plaza. Hours of operation are Monday through Friday, 8 a.m.-4:30 p.m.. Two decals are issued to each individual, one for the front and the other for the rear of the vehicle

Remember, the first paragraph mentioned a "properly affixed" decal. There are three approved ways of properly affixing decals:

- Driver's side on the front and back bumper.
- Driver's side front and back bumper with decal mounted on plates that conform to the size of the decal.
- Outside of front windshield top center, and lower left of the rear window.

For more information on vehicle registration, call 545-1195/3646.

Restocking tacklebox can be a problem

1988 Outboard Marine Corps

One of the most difficult tasks every bass angler eventually faces is re-filling his tacklebox from the dozens of lures, hooks, sharpeners and other gadgets he gradually accumulates in the sport.

Contrary to what many fishermen do, the solution is not to simply purchase a larger tacklebox, but rather, to carefully select certain lures that perform in specific ways.

"After all," says Evinrude Outboards Pro Staff member,Larry Nixon, who has faced this very problem many times, "what matters is not how many items you cram into a tacklebox but what you put into it.

"The key to successfully stocking a tacklebox is filling it with lures that cover a variety of water depths. This provides you with versatility, although it may also mean you have to fish with lures you don't necessarily like to use."

"One of the difficulties we all have is the desire to catch bass the way we want to, which is not necessarily always the best or most efficient way to do it."

Because he strives for depth versatility, Nixon puts a lot of crankbaits in his tacklebox, choosing those that cover depths between four and about 12 feet. Virtually all are shad color, but the lures have different wobbling actions.

"Some crankbaits have a subtle side to side wobble," explains the 1983 BASS Masters Classic winner and all-time top B.A.S.S. money winner, "while others have a much more pronounced action. Even though both lures might dive to the same depth, I have seen many times when bass would only hit one lure because of its action."

Nixon recommends stocking several very shallow-running crankbaits because they're so effective when fishing around shallow vegetation. He reels the lure down to the very top of the grass and bounces it over the greenery.

Nixon also recommends anglers stock several spinnerbaits in their tackleboxes, concentrating on different lure sizes and blade designs. Although spinnerbaits are among the most versatile of all bass lures, some are better suited to certain conditions than others.

"My spinnerbait choice includes a ½-ounce model with a size 5 willow leaf and size 3 Colorado blade, a combination I like to use around vegetation because it comes through the grass very well.

"I also make certain I have a ¾-ounce spinnerbait with a single size 8 Colorado blade in my box. This is an excellent big bass lure because the blade produces a lot of flash and vibration, and it's a fine lure to use if you have to fish muddy water."

Another versatile lure the Evinrude Motors pro recommends bass anglers have is a jig. Nixon can credit several of his tournament wins to jigs, and he stocks them in 3/16, 5/16 and ½ ounce sizes. His favorite skirt color combinations are black/blue, brown/orange and brown/black. With the jigs he has a supply of black and brown port and plastic trailers.

Nixon strongly recommends anglers make certain they have a good selection of topwater lures in their tackleboxes. His own choices include two-inch poppers that he likes to fish rapidly over the surface; several propeller baits for when bass want a slower-moving lure; and several large poppers for clear water lakes where he might catch a big bass.

"Another lure I really think bass fishermen underestimate and don't use enough is a minnow-immitation floater/diver," says Nixon. "I always have several in my tacklebox, especially in chrome and perch colors. They're excellent spring lures, but they're actually year-round lures in much of the country.

"I fish these lures around grass or stumps, casting them around the targets and letting them sit motionless for a few moments, then twitching them just enough to make them look alive. I'm really surprised more anglers don't use them."

Still another lure Nixon loves to use but doesn't see many others using is a ⅛-ounce marabou jig, which over the years has earned him more than $50,000."These little jigs will catch fish when nothing else does," says Nixon. "Of course, you have to use them with extremely light tackle, but you can still catch some big bass with them. I like to fish them in clear water around pier pilings or the edges of brush piles, jigging and hopping them around the cover."

Nixon also recommends anglers save some room in their boxes for plastic worms and the hooks and sinkers used in rigging them. He himself uses a variety of worm sizes and sinker weights, but thinks a six-inch worm with a 3/16-ounce slip sinker is a good basic combination.

"With plastic worms," says the Texas-based pro, "confidence in the lure is probably as important as the lure itself. I'd recommend anglers fish several styles and types of plastic worms, then pick one they feel most confident in using. With sinkers, it's important to use the lightest weight possible, adding weight when you want the lure to fall faster or need the weight for casting."

Over the years as a guide on Toledo Bend and as a tournament pro, Nixon says he has accumulated enough tackle to stock a store. He re-packs tackleboxes often, filling them with lures for specific lakes and water conditions. The overall goal, however, is always to remain as versatile as possible.

Two children dance to Bavarian-style music at AUSA's Oktoberfest held Oct. 1 and 2.

AUSA sponsors Oktoberfest; more than 5,000 people attend

USAIC Public Affairs Office

More than 5,000 people passed through the doors of the Chattahoochee Valley Association of the U.S. Army Oktoberfest at the Columbus Iron Works last weekend.

Once inside, they found sights, sounds and smells characteristic of an authentic German fest, complete with bratwurst, sauerkraut, beer, polka bands and men, women, and children dressed in the traditional Bavarian costume.

To add an American twist, the fest included appearances by rock bands and local beauties, Miss Columbus and Miss Georgia who demonstrated their vocal talents

Local merchants had handcrafted items available for purchase, which made for a well rounded Oktoberfest atmosphere.

USARSA holds 2nd training conference

By Agatha H. James
Bayonet staff writer

The second Training and Military Education Conference (TMEC) of the Conference of American Armies (CAA), hosted by the United States Army School of the Americas (USARSA) ended here today. Senior military members from 19 Latin American countries attended the week-long event, which provided an exchange for ideas on training and educating soldiers.

In the keynote address, Maj. Gen. Bernard Loeffke, TMEC President and Commanding General of the United States Army South, stressed to the Latin American delegates the importance of military training and education.

"Our training must cover four areas," he said. "We must care for the soldier, provide the best training possible, provide the necessary equipment and maintenance, and provide realistic training. What works in Germany may not work in El Salvador."

Loeffke told the audience that the guerillas are recruiting children as young as age 12. "By age 17, they're already trained in some form of deception and intelligence gathering," he said.

Gen. Maxwell Thurman, Training and Doctrine Command Commander, briefed the conferees on TRADOC's approach to training excellence. "Our mission is twofold," he said. "One, we must prepare the Army for war. Two, we are the architect for the future Army.

"These mission statements include five domains," he added. "They are doctrine, force design, equipment requirements, leader development and training. We must work on exercise and training today because tomorrow we may have to go to war."

While the conference provided a forum for the exchange of ideas on training and educating soldiers, each country must do its own mission analysis according to Thurman. "You can't train your Army to do another country's mission," he said. "Each country is distinct; therefore, their needs are different."

Through conferences of this sort, the CAA stimulates and enhances military cooperation and exchanges among its member armies.

Three separate committees discussed ideas and issues on evaluations systems, computer simulations and the feasibility of establishing a common training language.

Gen. Carl E. Vuono, the Army's Chief of Staff, selected USARSA to host the TMEC because of its language capabilities and international expertise. USARSA currently offers 21 courses, all taught in Spanish.

The first TMEC was held in Buenos Aires in 1986.

MP Corps celebrates 47th anniversary

Agatha H. James
Bayonet staff writer

The Military Police Activity recently celebrated the MP Corps' 47th anniversary.

Brig. Gen. Peter T. Berry, commandant of the MP School at Fort McClellan, arrived Sept. 30 for the festivities, which included an anniversary ball at the Officers' Club Oct. 1.

Berry said the MP Corps is in the best shape ever. "Many soldiers initially choose the corps because of the law enforcement aspect. But, once they get in, they find our mission covers more.

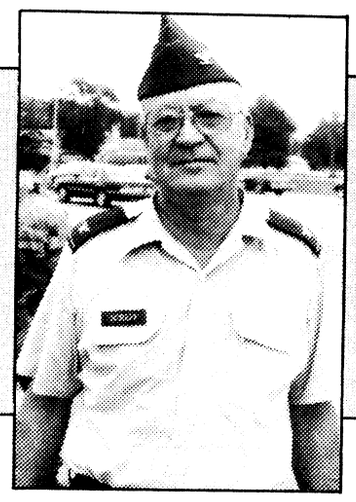
"MPs should always conduct themselves in an exemplary manner because we set the example," he added. "As law enforcement officials, we serve as role models."

The MP Corps as we know it today began in 1941. There have been Provost Marshal troops since the Revolutionary War, but the MP function was not defined as a separate Army corps until 1941.

The Provost Marshal here at Fort Benning has two roles, according to Maj. David Buzzell, MPA Deputy commander. "One, he is Provost Marshal in the sense that he is the police chief," he said. "Two, as the MPA commander, he provides command and control of the two MP companies on post.

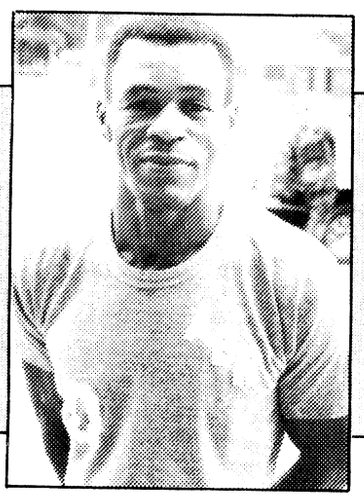
"Our mission is not only to provide law enforcement, but to run a confinement facility for military prisoners as well," Buzzell continued. "Also, we have the responsibility of preparing to go to war.

"We try to reduce crime among the soldier population. Therefore, soldiers can do their jobs without worrying about pilfering, assaults, or being crime victims.



Buzzell said the MPs are always available to protect soldiers, their families and the civilian work force in order to make Fort Benning a safe place to work, live and play.

OPINION



VARIOUS VOICES: What is the best way to get soldiers to donate to CFC?

Capt. Samuel Padgett, Co. A, 2nd Bn, 54th Inf. 2nd ITB — "I think the responsibility to get soldiers to donate lies with the first line supervisor. Supervisors should sit their soldiers down and explain what CFC does, and then they will most likely donate."

Col. Richard Scheff, Military Circuit Judge — "I believe that if you explain the purpose of CFC to the soldiers, you will get the best results. I think understanding is a lot better than arm twisting."

MSgt. William Cox, HQ Co., 1st Bn. 507th PIR — "Point out the importance of the campaign and what it benefits."

Sgt. William Schaper, Co. A, 3rd Bn., 11th Inf. — "I think one needs to explain what CFC is for and that all those organizations really need help to help other people."

SSgt. Donald Moore, Co. C, 2nd Bn. 11th Inf. — "I think that the CFC organizers should pass out a very detailed information paper explaining exactly what CFC is.

SFC Samuel Robinson, A Bat., 2nd Bn., 10 FA — "I think the best way is to thoroughly brief soldiers on the purpose of CFC. When they realize exactly where their money is going, they usually donate."

Snively considers Radon Buster career

Clyde Snively
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Rad and I were minding our own business, talking about the care and treatment of lawns for the winter when we overheard the "J" girls in the front office voicing their concerns about Radon poisoning, the latest fad of things to fear to sweep the U.S.

J1 told J2 she is worried because her new home is built on stone. J2 said she is concerned because hers is energy efficient and therefore would trap all those nasty cancer causing gases and zap her even while she tried to call 911 to come out and save her.

Rad, ever the entrepreneur, turned to me, and said, "Clyde, we need to get into the business. We could be 'Rad and Clyde, Radon Busters.'"

"I don't know," I lamented. "I really don't know anything about radon. I don't even know if it's a chemical. If it is, then we're really in trouble cuz that was my worst subject in school."

"That's the point," Rad said gleefully. "The public doesn't know anything about it either, so no matter what we do, it's gotta be right. "We just take a box, put some cotton in it, print some big long words on it with instructions to handle only with rubber gloves, provide a mailing container that we tell them has lead lining, charge $25 for a dollar worth of material and we're in business."

"What do we do with the box when we get it?" I asked, apprehensively. "Oh, we wave some litmus paper over it. If it turns red, we tell them to buy a more expensive test kit and redo it. If it turns blue, we tell them the same thing."

"Rad, you're unscrupulous," I said.

"Hey," he said. "Others are going to be out there doing the same thing, I figure we may as well be the first. Maybe we can even scare the people on post into demanding DEH come out and test their quarters, then we'd bid on the government contract."

"I don't think you'd have much luck there. First, the government quarters aren't energy efficient enough to have to worry about holding in radon gases. Second, I'm sure the government would run a check and see you didn't know a radon from a Greyhound Bus."

"Can't hurt to try," he said. "It's not like we're hurting anyone."

"I disagree," I said. "What happens if a person really does have radon in his home and you tell him he doesn't."

"Okay, you don't like my idea. Maybe you'd like to go into the 'sick barracks syndrome' business with me."

"What's that?" I asked, looking at him suspiciously.

"Well, you see the new barracks are energy efficient. But they also hold in all the germs that soldiers bring in with them and spread around by breathing. So you have a greater chance of spreading disease. What we'll do is offer to drill holes in walls of barracks for soldiers who feel threatened."

"Rad and Clyde Radon Busters"

"Rad," I said. "You need to be put away. You smoke like a chimney yet you're worried about barracks disease. I just hope the Better Business Bureau or the postal service doesn't get wind of some of your schemes. They'd have you locked up for sure. And sometimes I think that's where you belong.

"One good thing about knowing you, it makes me suspicious of anyone who might want to sell me something, especially if it's to help me live longer, more healthfully. And rest assured, I'll most definitely check out anyone who tries to sell me a radon test kit for my home."

The only happy weekend is a safe one

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Columbus Day brings another three-day weekend and signals a special need to be alert when you jump behind the steering wheel of your car.

The only way to have a happy conclusion to this long weekend is to have a safe one.

As we take off to enjoy the weekend, several safety rules need to be firmly planted in our minds' eye, so that Tuesday, we can say it was an enjoyable, safe weekend.

Falling asleep at the wheel can happen to even the well-rested driver because of a phenomenon known as "highway hypnosis."

Highway hypnosis usually is caused by a combination of monotonous scenery and driver boredom. Common culprits include flat stretches of road, the humming of tires on the pavement, the drone of the engine, and the flow of the wind. Sun glare, a warm car interior and a too-full stomach can easily make any driver drowsy and less alert.

This type of fatigue is dangerous because it can affect judgment and the ability to make quick decisions. As a consequence, the driver may ignore or fail to recognize emergency situations, such as the distance needed to stop safely.

There are a few precautions drivers can take to prevent or fend off an attack of highway hypnosis.

Make sure the car is properly ventilated; open a window or set air conditioning controls to keep a comfortably cool interior.

In sunny weather, sunglasses should be worn because glare from the sun can cause drowsiness.

On monotonous stretches of road, drivers should occasionally move their eyes, scanning the road ahead and to the sides. They should also make frequent checks on both the side and rearview mirrors.

Chewing gum, eating candy or drinking a cup of coffee may help keep the driver alert, but drivers should avoid heavy meals and alcoholic beverages.

Stopping periodically on long trips can offset fatigue. A stop of a few minutes every two hours, along with regular stops for food and fuel, will keep drivers alert and get them safely to their destination.

Another danger to watch out for is the weather.

The first drizzle of rain tends to loosen a greasy film of oil, gasoline and rubber on roads, turning them into a skid trap for the unwary. You may need four times the usual distance to stop your car when the roads are wet. So to avoid skidding, keep speed down, accelerate gradually, corner carefully and pump brakes gently. Test brake action now and again to check your traction. Avoid tailgating. Be alert for wet leaves and mud, for sharp turns in the road, and for gusty side winds, which can cause you to lose control of your car.

Finally, a word about drinking and driving. Half of all traffic fatalities occur when drivers mix alcoholic beverages and driving on our highways. We all know that is a volatile combination.

It's worth repeating that friends don't let friends drive drunk. And if we are all to have that safe weekend, we need to put the buddy system into practice. Try using it this weekend, so that at formation Tuesday every soldier is "all present" at morning formation.

Fire Prevention Week begins Sunday

The week of Oct. 9-15, marks this year's Fire Prevention Week. Observed annually by the United States and Canada, Fire Prevention Week always falls during the Sunday through Saturday period that includes Oct. 9. This date is the anniversary of "The Great Chicago Fire of 1871," which killed 250 people and destroyed property totaling 168 million dollars.

I urge all military and civilian personnel to help your fire department during Fire Prevention Week and all year by keeping your homes and your community as safe as possible from the dangers of fire by following the Fire Prevention Week theme, "A Sound We Can Live With — Test Your Detector". It is important that you and your family know and practice how to operate your detector.

The Fort Benning Fire Department has scheduled several events during this week to emphasize the importance of fire prevention to include a display at the Fort Benning Mall, puppet shows at all post schools and "Open House" at all post fire stations.

Remember, keeping the world safe from fire is a shared responsibility. Let's all support our fire prevention program at Fort Benning and help make this a more fire-safe world in which to live.

Woman rewarded for her honesty

She found $2,700 and returned it

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

People say, "honesty is the best policy," but when you have $2,700 in cash staring you right in the face, it can be tough to decide what to do with it.

It wasn't a tough decision for a maid who works at Olson Hall.

Anna Henry found $2,700 while cleaning a room in her section. As soon as she found it, she didn't bat an eye. She picked up the money and took it immediately to her supervisor.

According to Henry, she found the money in the closet.

"I was cleaning out the closet when I found an old pair of blue jeans," she said. "Finding discarded clothing in the checkouts is not unusual, but I always check the pockets to make sure that person hasn't left anything. That is where I found the money."

Henry said it didn't even cross her mind to keep the money. "All I could think of was getting the money to my supervisor as soon as possible," she said.

Shortly after she turned the money in, the man who had left it came to claim it. He thanked Henry and left Fort Benning.

Dean Metsinger, head of the housekeeping staff felt Henry deserved more than just a thank you and recommended her for a $250 incentive award.

"She is an outstanding worker," Metsinger said. "Turning in that amount of money takes a certain kind of person, and I thought she should be justly rewarded."

Ann M. McDonald

Col. Robert Hatch gives Annie Henry a check for $250, an incentive award for her honesty in turning in $2,700 she found.

Since its inceptin in 1946, more than 50,000 oldiers representing 22 Latin American countries have ttended the School's myria of courses from the Rang Course to the Commandand General Staff College.

"The graduates who are being recognized here today have distinguished themselves in service to their countries, and they have created a lasting legacy to great leaders and serve as a source of inspiration to future ones. Combined Federal Campaign gets underway at Fort Benning

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

"We have two months to complete this project, but that much time isn't necessary, let's meet our goal and move on to the next project," Maj. Gen. Michael Spigelmire said during the 1989 Chattahoochee Valley Combined Federal Campaign Kickoff Breakfast last week.

He reminded soldiers that they are part of the Chattahoochee Valley community while they are stationed in this area, and they should support the community to the best of their ability.

This community is what CFC is all about, for this is the federal employees contribution to the United Way Campaign, a non-profit organization that helps people who can't help themselves.

Post CFC project officer, Maj. William Sitler, said that undesignated post monies collected will go directly into the Chattahoochee Valley United Way Fund.

He said an allocations committee votes on where the money will go. Included on that committee is a post representative, which gives Fort Benning an active voice in the distribution of the undesignated funds.

Just giving a set amount to CFC is the easiest way to donate and selecting a particular organization is one of the best things about the campaign.

"Soldiers get to decide exactly where they want their money to go," Sitler said. "There are many organizations to choose from including organizations from Fort Benning as well as the surrounding community."

He said that unit key persons have a list of organizations United Way supports and respective codes that should be entered on the donation form.

Sitler added that key persons should urge soldiers to give to something to CFC but to give within their means.

"CFC is a very worthy charity," he said. "It supports everything from children's homes to battered wives' shelters and everything in between."

"However," he said, "all of these organizations that help the needy can't do it if they don't receive money from CFC; and they can't receive anything if soldiers and civilians do not contribute.

Once a contribution is made, it is given to your unit key person who will, in turn, bring it to the post central CFC office located upstairs in the 1st Union Bank. Vickie Ciccolella and Sammie Herring, head that portion of the operation, and they will tabulate donations and enter it into the account.

"To expedite the procedure, please have an accurate account of the funds and monies collected," Ciccolella said.

If there are any questions, call 545-4937.

Contributions may be designated locally

The Combined Federal Campaign is already underway at Fort Benning. While some soldiers give to the same charity year after year, others have a hard time choosing an agency. Many people don't realize that their donations can go to agencies right here. These donations go toward making Fort Benning agencies even more responsive to the needs of soldiers and their families. Agencies such as Red Cross and ACS and many others spend thousands of dollars to assist soldiers.

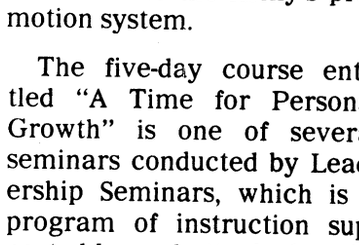
Anne Palastra discusses Army life and the role of military wives with seminar participants.

Mrs. Palastra speaks on Army life

Agatha H. James
Bayonet staff writer

Anne Palastra, wife of Gen. Joseph T. Palastra, Forces Command commander at Fort McPherson, was the guest speaker Sept. 30 at the final session of a week-long personal growth seminar sponsored by Leadership Seminars. Palastra's speech, "What a Way of Life," examined past and present Army customs and military wives' roles.



Palastra said, "I've been in the Army for 51 years. I've been an Army wife for almost 30 years, and I was an Army brat for 21 years."

She reminded the participants, "Sometimes you may feel that since your husband is in the Army, you're in the Army, too. But, remember, you don't have rank."

Palastra's speech was a collection of personal stories and tidbits about Army life. Topics ranged from social courtesies to the Army's promotion system.

The five-day course entitled "A Time for Personal Growth" is one of several seminars conducted by Leadership Seminars, which is a program of instruction supported by and attached to the 1st Bn., 11th Inf., USAIS. Created for company-level commanders' spouses, Leadership Seminars' courses are designed especially for the IOAC students' wives. The program teaches skills and techniques for enhancing leadership and communication abilities.

The standard course includes a personality inventory and a five-day leadership program covering group behavior and development, interpersonal relationships and basic communications skills (verbal, non-verbal and active listening).

NCO, Soldier of Year share a common pride

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

Although their military specialties and positions are different, Spec. Angelia Pacheco and SSgt. Mark Sheehan have a lot more in common than people would think.

For one, they respectively, have been named the U.S. Army Infantry Center Soldier and Noncommissioned Officer of the Year. But, that is not all they have in common they both share a love for the military as well as a desire to excel in all areas.

Pacheco, who hails from DeRidder, La., started her career as a soldier in the National Guard and switched to active duty after attending basic training.

"I found I really enjoyed the physical challenges and the discipline in the Army," Pacheco said, "and the education benefits and job security added to my decision to go active duty."

Although Pacheco was initially slated to go into an administration specialty, when she made the switch to active status, one of the MOSs they offered her was 88M — a truck driver.

Pacheco chose to accept that MOS, attended the course and was assigned to the Infantry Training Center as a courier and distribution specialist.

Once she settled into her position, her supervisors recognized Pacheco's administrative skills and assigned additional duties.

Pacheco said she enjoys her position because she has access to all the Field Manuals and Army Regulations, which she reads to keep up to date on Army matters.

She said her knowledge of the manuals is one of the reasons she was selected as Soldier of the Year.

"I don't read the FMs and ARs only when I am preparing for a board," Pacheco said. "I try to know everything so I have a better grasp on the Army, which makes me the best soldier I can be."

Recently her desire to be the best led her to attend Airborne School where she pursued and conquered the challenge of earning those silver wings.

"If there is a school available, I would like to attend it," she said.

In the future, she said she would like to attend flight school or learn a different language.

During her free time Pacheco enjoys athletic activities and especially likes playing intramural sports. "When they let me play," she said and laughed.

But no matter whether she's on or off duty, she said she feels the need to set a good example for Fort Benning.

"I felt that way even before I was named Soldier of the Year," Pacheco said, "but, I do feel a little more responsible now. I'm proud to be soldier; and I feel there is a place for women in this Army," she said. "As a matter of fact, the best compliment I have ever received is that I am infantry at heart.

NCO of the Year

Infantry, or more specifically, Ranger is the specialty of the NCO of the Year, SSgt. Mark Sheehan.

Sheehan, who is currently assigned to the Ranger Training Brigade, entered the Army after reading an article in Soldier of Fortune.

"I read a story about Rangers and it sounded so interesting and challenging that it sparked an interest," he said. "So I went down to the recruiters and signed up for the Infantry."

That was in the spring of 1983. He came to Fort Benning to attend basic training, advanced individual training, and airborne school.

He then was assigned to Fort Carson, Colo., spent some time in a line unit there, and came back to Fort Benning to attend Ranger School and attain his ultimate goal of being assigned to a ranger battalion.

While at 3rd Ranger Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment, Sheehan excelled in his chosen field.

"I attended BNCOC, Scout Swimmer, OPFOR Weapons Course, HALO and Jumpmaster School," Sheehan said. "I like knowing as much as possible about my position."

But above all that, Sheehan just enjoys being in the Army.

"I like being able to go to work and not feel like I'm doing a job," he said. "I guess to coin a phrase, it really isn't a job, it is an adventure."

As for being the best NCO on post, Sheehan doesn't agree, "I don't feel like I am the best," he said. "There are areas I could improve in. I just happened to be better than anyone else attending the board on that day," he said, "and I had a lot of support from my NCOIC, SFC Theodore Scott, and CSM Frederick Weekley."

Obviously the support of his chain command did not go unrewarded, for now they have the prestige of having one of Benning's finest under them.

Sheehan said that now the board is over, he will pursue his education and aim for Officers Candidate School.

In his free time, he enjoys sky-diving, bicycling and spending time with his wife Marianne.

With all that on his schedule, Sheehan still managed to squeeze in some time to train the post's top soldier to rappel. Pacheco, who met Sheehan after it was announced she was soldier of the year, expressed the desire to learn the skill, and Sheehan, who is always prepared to train an eager soldier, complied.

Auburn Football Tickets: The ITT Office is currently offering selected Auburn football tickets. Also, this office offers discount movie tickets, Disney Land Packets and much, much more. (MWR)

Military Lodging Rates: The Information Tour & Travel Office is now booking lodging facilities at military rates. Call the ITT Office for a list of eligible hotels.

This is a special offer that is sure to appeal to anyone who's ever arrived with their family at a duty station only to find government quarters were not available. To begin with, the soldier has to bear the expense for a commercial hotel. Then, because they're new to the area, it's hard to find a good hotel, let alone one with reasonable rates.

Don't take chances, ITT can tell which hotels are available, whether they have laundry facilities, baby-sitting services, a swimming pool, fitness center and so forth. Of course, the best part is you will not have to pay full price.

If you plan to travel on vacation or just want to get away for the weekend, remember to book discount lodging reservations with the ITT Office. The same discounts apply if you need to reserve rooms for parents, family members or other personal guests who plan to visit you at the installation. Call the ITT office, 545-7535/4155 for lodging reservations. (MWR)

Choir gives time to Oak Manor

1st ITB Chapel

Scripture says, "Be doers of the Word, and not hearers only." (James 1:22) The 2nd Battalion, 58th Infantry Patriots Marching Notes Choir knows how to put faith into action.

The residents of the Oak Manor Rest Home, Columbus, Ga., recently were given a special gift when the 2nd Bn., 58th Inf. Choir presented a program of songs, testimony, and Bible readings.

Carolyn Hilligoss directed the choir and designed the program, which was especially suited to meet the needs of the rest home residents.

Chap. (Capt.) Robert Reese, 2nd Bn., 58th Inf. Bn Chaplain, states that a major emphasis of our Chapel Program has been to encourage faith to be reflected in attitudes, actions, and lifestyles. The choir's visit to Oak Manor was a way these soldiers could share with others the hope and joy God has given them; an opportunity for them to be doers of the Word, and not hearers only.

SACS team lauds post schools

By Beth Middlemiss
Fort Benning Schools

The Fort Benning Schools have been accredited for a number of years by the Southern Association of Colleges and Schools (SACS).

Recently, Fort Benning educators and parents hosted a team of 25 educators who came to serve as a SACS committee to validate the Fort Benning Schools' self-study. The self-study is required periodically of each school system that maintains SACS accreditation; it focuses on school programs, facilities, personnel, community involvement, student services, and all aspects of the daily operation of the school system.

Dr. Mary Creamer, the SACS team chairperson, gave an overview of committee findings, which lauded many of the Fort Benning programs and made recommendations for future growth.

Fort Benning educators look forward to receiving a written report from the SACS committee.

Christmas Mail Call gets underway

Military Mail Call

The 1988 Christmas Mail Call is now underway!

Smiles were the order of the day last year as Christmas greetings arrived from school children, high school and college students, retirees, veterans auxiliaries, churches . . . from Americans of just about every walk of life.

Though the mail came from every part of the country, "Mail Call" was the common denominator. The cards and letters were sent to hundreds of military units and activities all across the U.S. and around the world by the Christmas Mail Call program of Military Mail Call, a nonprofit activity now headquartered in Columbus, helping to put a cheer into the Christmas Season for more than 100,000 of our servicemen and women.

Letters from a couple of Air Force chaplains portray the good results: From a base in the U.S., "Received. . .letters from your organization (and) took them to a security police squadron that had to pull guard duty on Christmas Eve and Christmas Day. I also took apples, oranges, cookies, and hot apple cider. The troops went for the mail before the food."

After reading an article in the Air Force Times, a chaplain overseas requested mail for his command. He later wrote, "I would like to express our gratitude. . .for spreading so much Christmas joy. When I wrote to you last November, I did not know what I could expect. You more than surpassed my hopes and desires. The people who participated in your program brought much happiness to the Air Force and Army personnel stationed here. You helped to bring a little piece of home. . . You will be in our prayers for the work that you have done. . ."

Fort Campbell, Ky., was not only the leading military installation, thanks to the hard work of Fort Campbell High School's Student Council as well as several scout troops, but was also number one among all eight categories of participants sending mail.

Sincere thanks to all who helped make last year's Christmas Mail Call the most successful ever!

Mail Call is an exciting project for both active duty and reserve families, retirees, veterans and auxiliaries, civilian employees and family members—in short, for just about everyone who is a friend of a strong U.S. defense.

For detailed information on how to be a part of this unique, patriotic program, please send your name and address along with a first-class postage stamp (not a self-address, stamped envelope — just a stamp) to: Military Mail Call, Box 2530, Fort Benning, Ga. 31905-1130.

October is month of reformation

By Chaplain Bob White
Chief, Family Life Center

Oct. 12 is observed as a legal holiday in most states in commemoration of the landing of Columbus in the Bahamas in 1492. It is also Discovery Day. Our great nation, America, was discovered by Columbus when it was still a wilderness, full of opportunities and potentials for growth.

I have, since childhood, thought of Columbus Day as a day to remember that Columbus discovered America. I continue to think that way even though I have since learned that the importance of the discovery has grown with time. It was the beginning of a migration from the old world to the new. The old fears caused by old thinking had inhibited travel until Columbus dared to venture beyond those fears.

I would hope that we as an American people do not forget the need to explore and discover new worlds and opportunities for ourselves and others. Even now, our nation is reaching out beyond our fear to discover new possibilities in space. However, not all of us can take part in that exploration. I want to challenge us to discover new things, which are positive, about ourselves and those immediately around us. I am on the verge of discovering the world of cycling. I am intrigued by the idea of taking a touring bike to Europe and traveling and seeing the environment from a bike instead of a car. This experience will be shared with my wife as we rediscover our relationship with both children.

October is also the month when we recall the Reformation. The key idea associated with reformation is to reform or in Biblical terms, regeneration. Regeneration is being made anew. Through this idea a new power is introduced into our lives that permits the passing away of the old nature and the beginning of the new nature. God is the author of regeneration through faith in His Son, Jesus. This idea of regeneration coupled with the thought of discovery is exciting indeed. It takes energy, belief, and desire to move toward new worlds. Go for it!

ASK THE JUDGE

By Susan McKeeman
Staff Judge Advocates Office

Q: My buddy, Private Fastlane, will be ETSing in a few months and wants to buy a car. All the car dealers say he must get someone to cosign the loan. He's asked me. I have a good credit rating and both checking and savings accounts with a bank on post. Should I cosign for him?

A: Think twice. Cosigning a loan is more than just signing your name so that someone can get a car. It means you are going to be responsible for paying off the loan if he defaults. How often does that happen? Studies show that three out of four cosigners end up repaying the loan! Even if your friend does not default, cosigning a loan may have negative consequences. In the portion of your credit rating showing your financial obligations, the credit bureau will list the amount of your friend's loan as if it were yours. If you later need a large loan, or a mortgage, a bank may deny your loan because it feels you have overextended your financial obligations.

What happens if your friend misses a payment? The lender has the right to immediately demand the money, and any late fees, from you. It does not have to track down your friend first, even though he is the real borrower. You must then track him down and collect from him yourself. Once he leaves the Army, you may never be able to locate him. If you have cosigned a loan from a bank where you also have an account. As you may not know anything about the default and the bank's withdrawal, you may overdraw your account. In addition to the bad check charges, you will damage your credit rating.

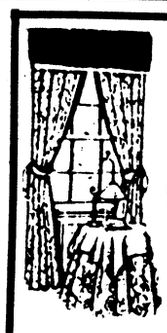
If the lender has to sue to collect the money, you may be responsible for its attorney's fees — check the agreement to see if you are. If the lender wins, it may take savings and property to satisfy the debt. You may be forced into bankruptcy.

If you do decide to cosign, look into several factors. Is it an amount you can afford to pay if your friend defaults? Does the agreement ask you to pledge your car or other property to secure the loan? You would lose these if the buyer defaults. Will the lender set out the specific amount of money you are responsible for, or does the lender insist you will also owe late charges, court costs and attorney's fees? Ask the lender to include a statement favoring you, such as, "The cosigner will be responsible only for the principal balance outstanding on this loan at time of default." Will the lender also agree, in writing, to notify you if your friend misses a payment? Finally, get your own copies of all paperwork your friend signs: the loan contract, the Truth-In-Lending Disclosure Statement, and any warranties. Remember, the reason the bank requires a cosigner is that it does not, as a professional lender, feel your friend is a good credit risk. They want your guarantee that the loan will be paid.

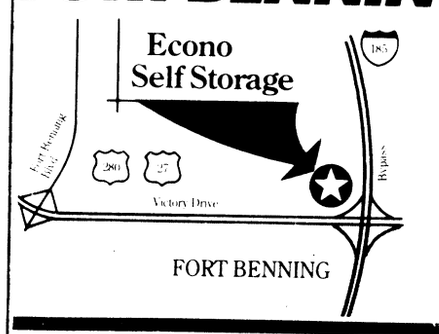
CRIME STOPPERS

Columbus Crime Stoppers

Columbus Crime Stoppers and the Columbus Police Department are looking for the unknown black man who kidnapped a white woman and her two-year-old son and forced the victim to commit sodomy, robbed her at gunpoint and struck her son on the head with a wrench.



On, Sept. 6, between 3:30 and 4 p.m. the victim left Cooper Creek Park on Milgen Road with her two year old son when she stopped her car, a blue 1987 Ford Tempo, at the stop sign at the entrance to the park on Milgen Road. An black man opened the unlocked passenger door, got into the car, pulled out a very old black revolver and pointed it at her. The suspect made the victim drive east on Milgen Road to Miller Road then right to the Macon Road Intersection. The woman was told to drive east on Macon Road past Pratt and Whitney near mile post marker number 20. She was forced into a wooded area where she was forced to commit sodomy and robbed of her currency. The suspect ordered the victim to again drive east on Macon Road. When the victim's son started crying, the suspect became angry and struck the boy on the head with a wrench. The woman was forced to drive to Talbot County near mile post marker number 112 on Highway 41 where he got out and was last seen walking away from the car on foot.



The suspect is described as a black male, 40-45 years of age, about 6 feet tall, 200 pounds, dark complected, large flat-shaped nose with flared nostrils, "kinked" hair, approximately one inch high with a spot of gray over the right ear, unshaven with no mustache or beard, wearing blue jeans and a blue T-shirt.

Anyone with information concerning this case should call Columbus Crime Stoppers at 571-5858. If your information leads to the arrest and indictment of this person, you could receive up to $1,000 in reward money.

Columbus Crime Stoppers also pays for information on other criminal activity, wanted fugitives and stolen property. The Crime Stoppers phone lines are open from 10 a.m. to 10 p.m. Monday through Friday. Crime Stoppers serves the Columbus, Fort Benning, Phenix City and Russell County areas.

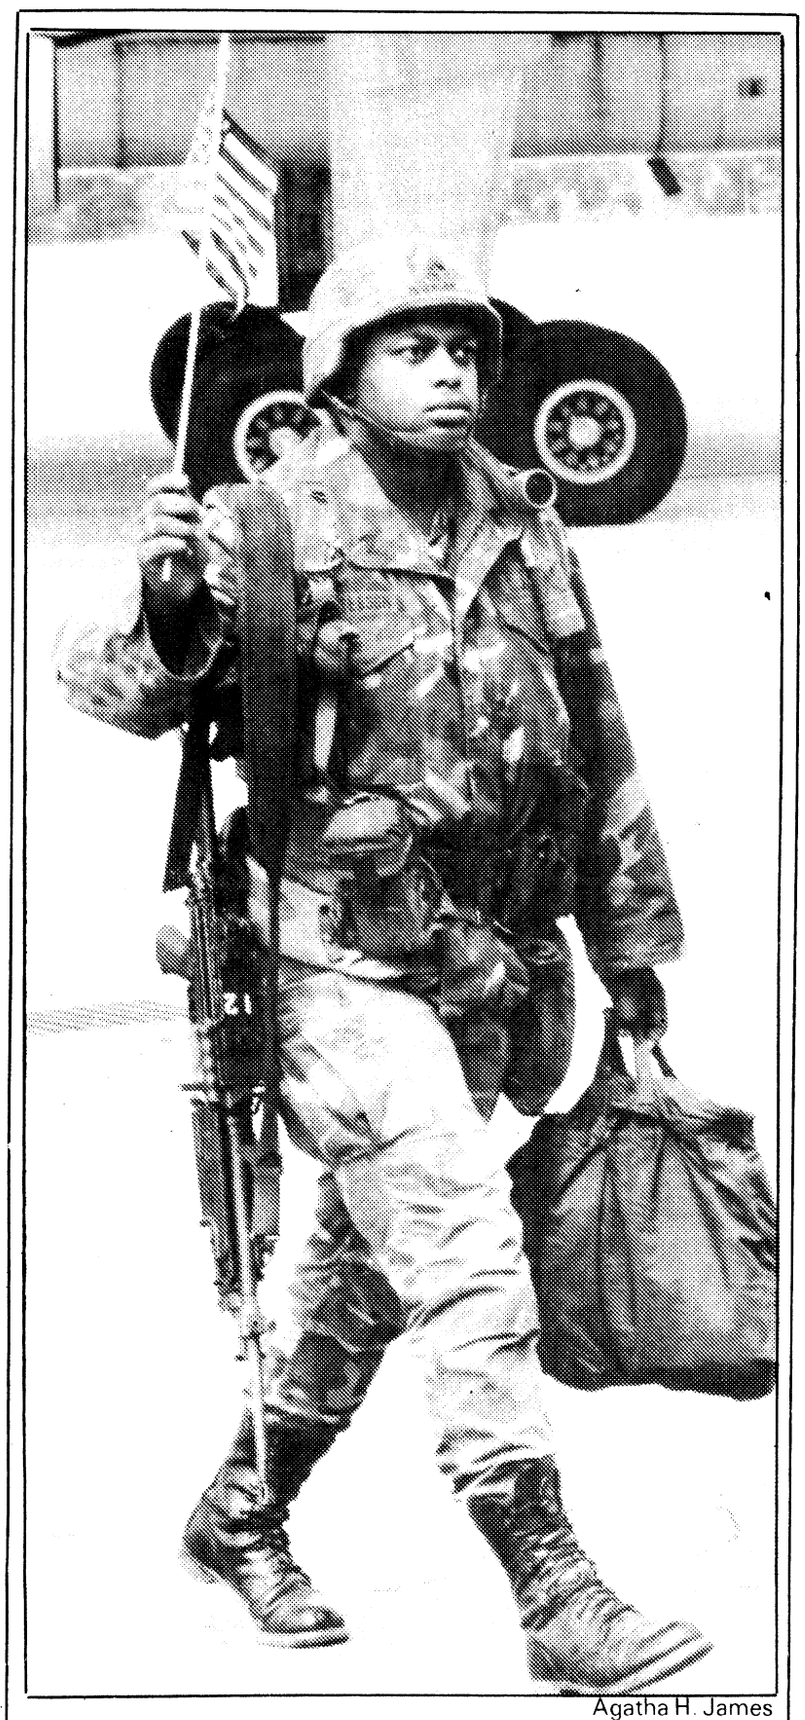
Crime Prevention Month

Crime Prevention Section

Traditionally, October has been associated with the leaves bursting into breath-taking shades of red and yellow and brown signaling the start of the fall season and Halloween. But, October is also National Crime Prevention Month.

In keeping with that theme, the Fort Benning Military Police Activity, Crime Prevention Section will have the crime prevention van on display Wednesday at Indianhead Terrace in front of Wilson School from 10 a.m.-1 p.m.; and Thursday at the Custer Terrace shoppette from 10 a.m.-1 p.m. Services available are bicycle registration, fingerprinting of children for Operation Child Find, and many informative brochures on improving home and personal security.



However, crime prevention is not just a once-a-month activity, it should be taken seriously year-round, 24 hours a day. It only takes a minute to reduce your vulnerability of becoming a victim of crime. In 1987, the average loss per residential burglary was $1,004, and the average loss in larceny thefts was $404. You've worked hard to improve your quality of life, why give someone the opportunity to take that away. With your help, we can "Take a bite out of crime."

For more information, call 545-1146/7115.

REFORGER homecoming

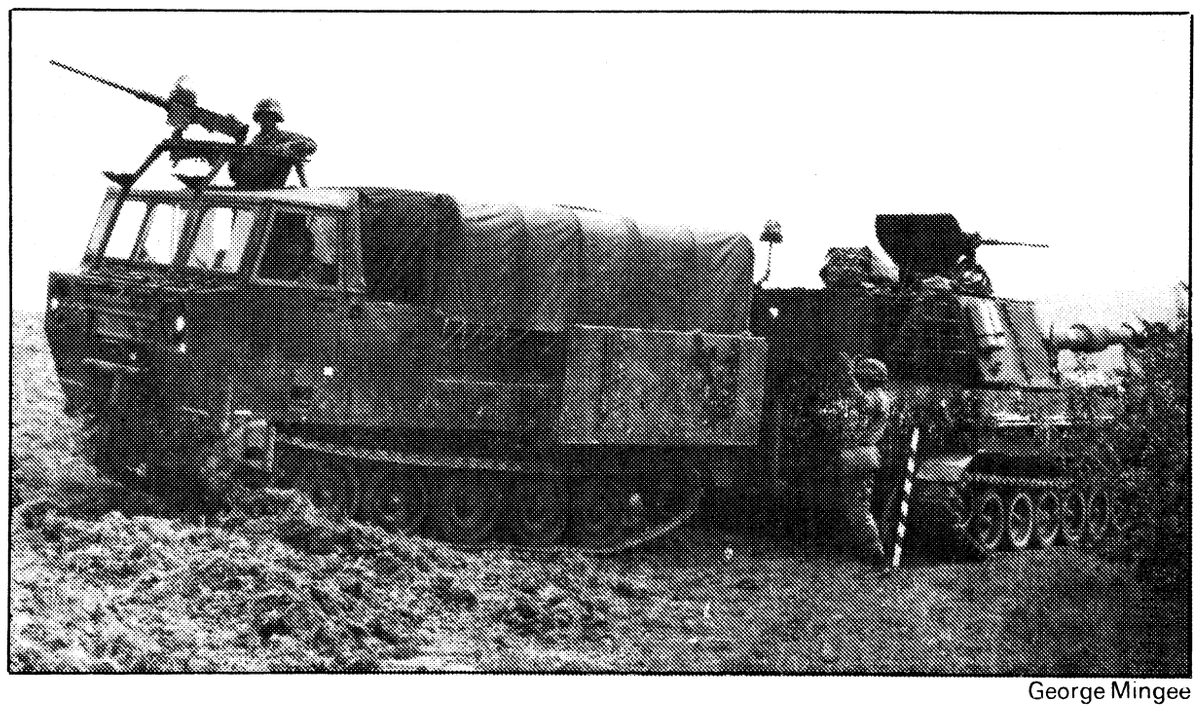
'Sledgehammer' fast-paced action



By Kevin J. Howerton
197th Infantry Brigade

For the 2nd Battalion, 10th Field Artillery, the size of REFORGER, the maneuver box and the speed with which the "Sledgehammer" Brigade moved during REFORGER, proved the capabilities of the gun crews.

"The maneuvering is about as close as you can get to a war-time situation," said PFC Kenneth Dupree of Btry. C, 2nd Bn., 10th FA. "We have to move at least twice a day to keep up with the brigade. One move may be 20 miles, another to the next corn field."

"The way the people drive here, the moving can be a real challenge," said PFC Christopher L. Snyder, also from Btry. C. "Other vehicles will be ducking in and out of the convoy, and sometimes you have to signal a passing driver that there is another vehicle coming ahead."

The battalion worked with the 41st Field Artillery Brigade from Babenhausen, West Germany. Working with a full artillery brigade with assets such as 8-inch guns and Multiple Launch Rocket Systems provided several choices in dealing with the enemy.

George Mingee

Artillerymen from Btry. B, 2nd Bn., 10th FA maneuver the cumbersome Howitzer and ammo carrier into position, ready for a fire mission within minutes.

"The 41st can cover us when we are moving our batteries," said Capt. William S. Bland, battalion operations officer. "The MLRS can take out an entire square kilometer; and the 8-inch has a greater range and is more effective on many targets. Our Howitzers can move faster, and have more types of ammo available."

"Our 155s are best for dealing with moving targets," said 1st Lt. Nicholas D. Nalepa, battalion fire direction officer, "When the other battalions in our brigade call for fire, we can put our own guns on it immediately. But the 41st can do better on large targets that are fixed because of the massive firepower."

By switching from the firepower of the 41st assets to the immediate firepower of 2nd Bn., 10th FA, the brigade could give the maneuver units the exact support they needed. This combination of firepower enabled the Sledgehammer Brigade to forge 30 kilometers into enemy territory during the first week of the exercise.

Being the only artillery unit on Fort Benning, working with division artillery gave the soldiers and commanders of 2nd Bn., 10th FA new ways to keep pounding the enemy as the battle progresses.

Stinger platoon provides air defense

By George Mingee
197th Infantry Brigade

Stinger platoon soldiers from HHC, 197th Infantry Brigade provided short-range air defense for the entire 197th Inf. Bde. during the two weeks of exercise "Certain Challenge." Intertwined with Vulcan, Chapparal, Improved Hawk, and Patriot Air defense systems of other units participating in REFORGER, the Stinger platoon's mission was to free the Sledgehammer's maneuvering units from the interference of hostile aircraft.

According to 2nd Lt. Thomas Thornton, Stinger platoon leader, the platoon recorded 17 kills during the Brigade's defensive maneuvers.

"Ten of the kills were helicopters ranging from UH-1s, to UH-60s. The seven remaining were fixed wings ranging from A-10s to F-4s," said Thornton.

The Stinger platoon, composed of 12 two-man teams, were attached to each of the task forces, while Stinger teams were also attached to the brigade trains and under brigade control. Moving directly on the vehicles of the task force units, Stinger teams were immediately accessible to that respective commander to provide air defense.

"The key to air defense is communication, that's why for the operation the platoon has been broken down into teams throughout the Infantry and Armor Task Forces," said Thornton.

To provide effective communications between teams that were spread over the battle areas, Thornton received a daily report on aircraft and the various air

Are you going hunting for game or trouble?

Safety Office

You've got the gun oiled up. The hunting outfit is laid out. The dog is conditioned and ready, and the alarm is set for an early hour.

But stop and consider for a minute — just what are you going hunting for, game or trouble?

You may have safety in your head when you have working tools in your hands, but how about when you've got a gun in your hands?

Plenty of trouble may be waiting to lower its sights on you if your head isn't loaded with such precautions as these:

○ Treat every gun with the respect due a loaded gun. This is the first rule of gun safety.

○ Guns carried home, into camp and in the automobile or when not in use, must always be unloaded and broken down or have the actions open. Guns always should be carried in cases to the shooting area. It is not only unsafe but also unlawful to have in your vehicle any shotgun or rifle containing shells or cartridges in the magazine or chamber.

○ Always carry your gun so you can control the direction of the muzzle, even if you stumble. Don't lift a gun by the muzzle and keep the safety on until you are ready to shoot.

○ Always be sure the barrel and action are clear of obstructions, and you have ammunition of the proper size for the gun you are carrying. Remove oil and grease from the chamber before firing.

○ Never pull a gun through a fence. Hand it over to someone or lay it down on the other side before you start through. Point it away from yourself and others.

○ Don't lean a loaded gun against a tree or a fence, where it might be knocked over and discharged.

○ Be sure of your target before pulling the trigger. Know the identifying features of the game you intend to hunt. Be sure no person is in the line of fire.

○ Never shoot across a roadway or in the direction of living quarters.

○ Unattended guns should be unloaded. Guns and ammunition should be stored separately beyond the reach of children and thoughtless adults. Ammunition should be locked up.

○ Never lay a loaded gun down in a boat. Never lift a gun from a boat by the barrel.

○ Avoid a fall, or a climb, and after walking over plowed ground, examine your gun to make sure the barrel is clear. In fact, always ensure that your gun or rifle is in good operating condition. The barrel and breech should be free and clean from any foreign matter, which may tend to clog them.

○ When in any area where other hunters may be, wear bright colored clothing (international orange vest and hat). Know where you are shooting. People can be accidentally killed by fellow hunters.

○ Be sure to read and understand the hunting rules and regulations pertaining to the area in which you are hunting.

○ Each year, there are cases of people dying from heart attacks while hunting. Make sure you are in good health and do not overexert yourself. Know your limitations, and do not go beyond them.

○ Prior to leaving on a hunting trip, make sure that some responsible person knows, in detail, what area you will be hunting, and the estimated time of return. Report back, either personally or by telephone, upon return. Never hunt alone.

Make the hunting season a safe and enjoyable one. And remember that safety is always in season!

It's not too early; prepare for winter weather now

DEH Energy Section

Labor Day is over and school has begun, signaling the end of summer. Although the South still can enjoy a few more weeks of warm weather, it's not too early to begin preparing for the cold and blustery winter days ahead.

Making sure your home or office is ready for winter is simple and will help keep you much more comfortable on cold days. This means adequately weatherproofing offices and homes to keep heated air in and cold air out. Air leaks are common around windows, doors, corners, baseboards or other seams. To locate drafts, follow these steps:

○ Turn on the fan to depressurize the building. This will strengthen incoming drafts, making them easier to find.

○ Beginning with the outside walls of rooms, slowly pass a burning incense stick along the edges of windows, doors, baseboards, ceilings, attic doors and any corners or seams where two surfaces come together.

○ If the smoke drifts straight up and hangs, no draft is present. If the smoke moves to the side, it's due to an air leak. Ask a friend or family member to make notes of any drafts you locate.

Now that you know where the leaks are, seal them. Weather stripping can be used around doors and windows, and most other air leaks can be sealed with caulking. Plastic sheets attached to windows with masking tape serve as good temporary storm windows. Drafts under doors can be blocked with rolled towels or rugs.

Weatherproofing materials are issued for most buildings on post at the Unit and Housing Support Branch (formerly Self Help), building 385, Vibbert Avenue. Occupants and housing residents can get weather stripping, caulking, plastic sheeting and duct tape for winterizing homes. Hours are Tuesday through Saturday, 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. The telephone number is 545-4207.

Weatherproofing your home or office is easy, and it can make a big contribution to your personal comfort as well as saving energy.

October designated as National Car Care Month

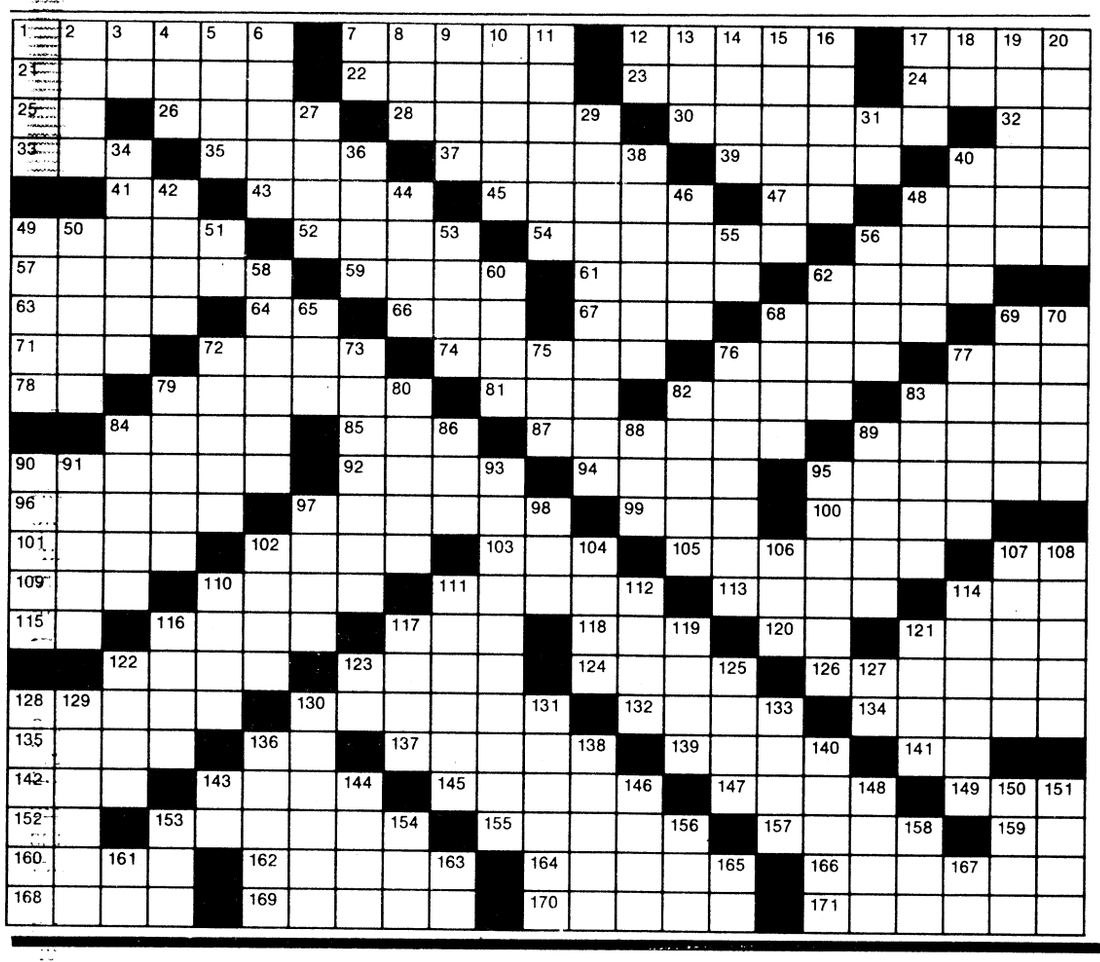
Car Care Council

"If it ain't broke, don't fix it"

That seems to be the adage followed by most American car owners. With the amount of money people invest in a car today, it's surprising that a large percentage of American motorists ignore necessary maintenance. Doing so could enable their cars to run more efficiently and economically, adding more years to the life of their vehicles and protecting their "investments."

Automotive technicians say a major reason for owners' failure to maintain their cars properly is because they do not understand the basics of car care.

Although most people know how to pump their own gas, many do not know how to find their way around a car, and are unable to spot minor problems before they turn into major repair bills. Intensified efforts are needed to ensure that consumers take proper care of their cars.



To alleviate this situation, October has been designated National Car Care Month.

National Care Care Month was developed to educate American motorists about preventive maintenance for their cars. Its purpose is to improve air quality, highway safety and fuel consumption. National Car Care Month is staunchly supported by federal, state and local governments, public interest groups such as the American Lung Association and the American Automobile Association, and the media.

Car owners are encouraged to take advantage of NCCM and have all necessary maintenance checks done. It not only improves car performance, but extends the life of the vehicle as well. After all, buying a car is a big investment, so why not make it pay off!

Peach State Radio to air War of the Worlds

Peach State Public Radio

It seems like an ordinary Sunday evening at home. But gradually something on the radio catches the attention of millions of listeners. Many of them are seized with a sudden panic at the news they think they're hearing. The aliens have landed! Or have they? Is this really the news or the put-on of the century?

"The War of the Worlds," first heard on Oct. 30, 1938, caused a nationwide panic, and focused great media attention on the original star, Orson Wells. The public's reaction took author Howard Koch, producer John Houseman and the original Mercury Theatre radio players completely by surprise. What seemed a routine Sunday night broadcast had changed the course of radio history. No one who heard it would ever forget!

And now, "The War of the Worlds" is happening again. Only this time it's really happening in a 50th anniversary production of Koch's celebrated science-fiction drama, a primal tale of alien invasion as retold for the ear on Peach State Public Radio, Oct. 30, at 8:30 p.m. A documentary on the original 1938 Orson Wells broadcast is also scheduled for Oct., at 8 p.m.

This entirely new production will star Jason Robards as Princeton astronomer Richard Pierson, one of a handful to survive the initial Martian attack on Grovers Mill, N.J.

Two of National Public Radio's foremost personalities will join the cast as a media-break from their regular network programs — Terry Gross, host of "Fresh Air" will play a local radio DJ, and Scott Simon, anchor of Saturday morning's "Weekend Edition," himself a "hot-shot" reporter, will play Carl Phillips, the first newsperson to see the Martian invaders.

Multi-media personality Steve Allen will portray the TV network news anchor who stays at his microphone until "The Last Veteran" radio newsman, Douglas Edwards, provides informed commentary on the end of civilization.

Noted film, TV and stage actors Rene Auberjonois and Hector Elizondo join the WOTW company, along with Phil Proctor who plays a newscaster and acts as assistant director.

Radio has definitely changed in 50 years. Today, radio newspeople would probably present their coverage of a Martian invasion in a cool and seamless flow of information. The 50th Anniversary production of "The War of the Worlds" will take place over today's media — exactly as it might be heard on your local public radio station on an ordinary Sunday night in 1988.

Director of the updated version of WOTW, David Ossman, comments, "What gives Howard Koch's script its tremendous impact is the compression of time from an innocent beginning to the end of the world. Also, it's pure radio for the ear — timeless."

"The War of the Worlds" — an astonishing cast! Super special sound effects! And a wonderful Halloween Eve broadcast for the whole family. Gather friends and family around the radio and relive the invasion that panicked a nation in 1938.

The narrow streets of German towns challenge the maneuvering skills of many drivers.

Safety was a major concern during REFORGER '88 training

By Sally Roberts
197th Infantry Brigade

When the leaders evaluate the outcome of the exercise, much more than the battle action is considered. Issues such as safety and maneuver damage, have a great impact on how the world views the success of an exercise with the magnitude of REFORGER '88.

Potential safety hazards are a real part of a tough working environment such as soldiers experienced during REFORGER. In this environment, safety becomes an additional duty to everyone.

"Having done as much as we have done in this short period of time, our safety record has been excellent," said CSM Tony L. Salter, 197th Infantry Brigade command sergeant major. "We've continued to emphasize safety and the individual soldier is demonstrating that by not taking shortcuts."

According to German Polizei Liaison officials, the 197th was involved in far fewer training accidents than other units participating in REFORGER. More than 360 accidents occurred involving Blue and Gold Forces during the first two weeks of the exercise.

"It seems that the 197th has a very high standard for safety," said Detlef Brinkman, a Polizei Liaison Officer. "We recognize the training and the stress that is put upon the soldier to act safely."

Maneuver damage was also a top concern for all units participating in REFORGER.

According to Maj. Richard D. Hopkins, 197th Infantry Brigade Maneuver Damage representative during REFORGER, consideration for the environment is a major political issue in Germany.

"Widespread destruction of forestry, crop lands and pollution by petroleum products caused by maneuver forces is a matter of extreme delicacy during an exercise of this magnitude," Hopkins said. "Of over 1,800 reported maneuver damage incidents, less than 100 were directly attributed to the 197th Infantry Brigade."

That is a record that all 197th soldiers can take pride in, for the individual soldier's consideration for safety and maneuver damage represent the unit as a whole.

corridors. Using the most likely air corridors to be approached, his teams then scan to determine whether the aircraft are friendly or hostile and must act on instinct to record a kill.

"The Stinger platoon protects the Infantry and Armor by engaging targets that fly within three to four kilometers of their positions," Thornton added. "As the hostile aircraft maneuver out of the safety of the woodline, Stinger teams are challenged to pick-up these aircraft that may fly in low or pop-up to engage a ground target."

"To record a kill in this exercise, Stinger soldiers must first identify the threat aircraft and contact a grader. Then the grader will calculate the distance, speed and armament of the aircraft and tell the soldier the probability of a kill or a miss," said Sgt. Joe Kelly, a Stinger section sergeant.

According to Kelly, a team only has a 50/50 chance of a kill in this exercise, whereas the probability is much higher during an actual live-fire.

Undoubtedly, the brigades' units were protected by an umbrella of air defense assets, and as routinely trained, the Stinger soldiers mainly fought against hostile low-flying aircraft.

Penalty for hunters failing to call in and clear changes

Community Recreation Division

The 1988/89 deer gun season will open in Georgia Oct. 22 and Nov. 19 in Alabama. Fort Benning will observe these season dates in the respective states.

Computerized hunter call-in/out will be used during the deer gun season for all hunters, the same as the 1987/88 season. However, this year there have been significant changes in the hunting rules.

○The penalty for failing to call in and clear has been changed. This hunting season, the first offense will result in a warning letter being sent to the individual. The second offense will result in a 14-day suspension of hunting privileges. The third offense will result in a one-year suspension of hunting privileges. These penalties are absolute standards and will not be subject to any appeal of any type.

○This year, all hunters and fishers must display a current DoD vehicle registration decal on the vehicle before entering any hunting/fishing area. Previously, only vehicles entering restricted areas were required to display the DoD decal. DoD vehicle registration decals may be obtained at the Soldiers' Plaza processing center located in building 2620 on Dixie Road. Retired civilian employees from Fort Benning will be able to obtain vehicle decals to display while hunting or fishing. The penalty for failing to have a properly registered vehicle is a one-year suspension of hunting and fishing privileges.

Early registration for opening weekend, Oct. 22 and 23, will again be conducted this year. Hunters may pre-register beginning Oct. 17, 8 a.m.-5 p.m. for both the 22nd and 23rd. However, hunters will still be responsible for calling in to clear each day.

The Fort Benning Hunter Control Center will operate during the entire deer gun season, including weekends and holidays, from 4 a.m. to 9 p.m. Additionally, on opening weekend Oct. 22 and 23 only, the Control Center will be open until 11 p.m.

The Hunter Control Center will accept next-day registration for hunters as was done last year, however, hunters will not be able to pre-register until noon for the following day and pre-registration may be terminated after 6 p.m. if the number of calls at the Hunter Control Center becomes too great.

The Hunter Control Center will operate with both commercial and military telephone numbers. The commercial telephone number 682-1589, and the military number is 544-4226. Hunters calling from commercial telephones, including on-post quarters and pay telephones, are asked to use the commercial number. This will once again be a four-line rotary system. The military number will not be connected to rotary system and should be used only when calling from an on-post telephone with a 544/545 prefix.

Hunting maps will be posted throughout the installation. Maps will be posted at the Outdoor Recreation Office, building 247, located on Ingersoll Street just off Dixie Road; Military Police Station, building 215, located at the corner of Wold Avenue and Edwards Street; Uchee Creek Recreation Area across from the resale store, building 0007, located off 101st Airborne Division Road on the Alabama side of the military reservation; and the Natural Resources Management Office, building 5884, located on 1st Division Road just off U.S. Highway 27 in the Harmony Church Area. Maps will be posted three days ahead.

The hunting maps, however, will not have the striped green overlays indicating open hunting area. Instead, a pre-printed "check sheet" will be posted adjacent to the hunting map with available hunting areas indicated. As with last year, it is the individual hunter's responsibility to check the map and check sheet to ensure that a particular area is open for hunting on a specific day.

Hunters will find one more significant change in hunting this year on the Georgia portion of Fort Benning. The entire gun season has been designated as "either sex," however, gun hunters are reminded that the limit of three deer is still in effect. Gun hunters may take as many as three does, but may not take more than two bucks during the hunting season anywhere on Fort Benning, including the Alabama portion of the military reservation.

'88/'89 mourning dove season continues for northern zone

GNDR

The mourning dove is the most hunted and the most harvested migratory game bird in North America. The 1988-89 dove season for the northern zone, which includes Jones and all surrounding counties, continues Oct. 2, Nov. 24 through 27, and Dec. 10 through Jan. 14.

Legal hunting hours are from one-half hour before sunrise to sunset.

Because mourning doves are migratory, dove hunting is regulated by both federal and state governments.

One of the primary problems in dove hunting is baiting and the apparent misunderstanding of what constitutes a baited area. Dove hunting regulations prohibit the hunting of doves over or near any baited area. Shelled corn, cracked corn, wheat, millet, scratch feeds, and rock salt are common dove baits.

The law also stipulates that an area is considered to be a baited area for 10 days following the complete removal of corn, wheat or other grain, salt, or other feed.

This time of year, one of the most frequently asked questions of conservation rangers is, "What is a legal dove field?" Certain agricultural practices are very attractive to doves, and the key phrase in discussing legal dove fields is "normal agricultural practice."

Wheat can be top sown on prepared ground at a rate of about two bushels per acre and evenly distributed. This is considered a normal agricultural practice and hunting doves over such an area would be legal.

It's not a normal practice to sow wheat where previously sown wheat has sprouted and is growing or to plow under a good stand of wheat in order to top sow more grain. Sowing wheat on an area several times in quick succession is not a normal agricultural practice.

Dove hunting over fields where grain crops such as corn, wheat, milo, millet, sorghum, and sunflowers have been harvested is permitted provided no grains are added to what was left by the normal harvest procedure. Also, crops may be grown specifically for doves, and then mowed, bushhogged, or knocked down and made more available to doves so long as it is not harvested and then redistributed on the field and no other grains are added to those already there.

The daily bag limit for doves is 12. Also, a dove hunter who gives birds to another hunter must tag the birds with his name and address, total number of birds involved, and signature.

A valid Georgia hunting license is required, but the Federal Migratory Bird Stamp is not required to hunt mourning doves.

Auto-loading or repeating shotguns must be plugged to limit them to a maximum of three shells in the chamber and magazine combined.

Permission from the land owner is required to hunt anywhere in Georgia.

Hawks, songbirds, and other birds are often present in dove hunting areas. These birds are protected by state and federal regulations, and killing, or even shooting at them, is strictly prohibited.

Dove hunting provides many hours of enjoyment for hunters of all ages. Dove hunts are often occasions with large gatherings of hunters and firearm safety should be a primary concern for all involved.

Remember that alcohol and firearms are a dangerous combination. Hunting under the influence is illegal and rangers will be alert for intoxicated dove hunters this season. For more information on hunting, fishing, or boating regulations, contact any office of the Game and Fish Division.

Hungarian shooting team to visit Benning

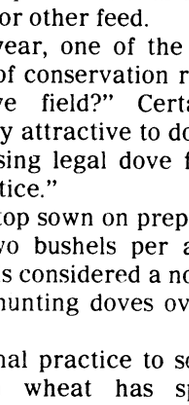
By Tommy Pool
USAMU PAO

In an historic visit, members of the Hungarian shooting team will arrive at Fort Benning Sunday to participate in friendship matches with soldiers of the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit.

The 16-member squad is the first Hungarian marksmanship team ever visit to the United States. The delegation is scheduled to return to Hungary Oct. 16.

In addition to the friendship matches that will feature competition in rifle and pistol events, plans include a tour of Fort Benning and points of interest in the local area, including Callaway Gardens.

Several of Hungary's top marksmen are included in the team, including two former world champions, as well as two former European championship winners.

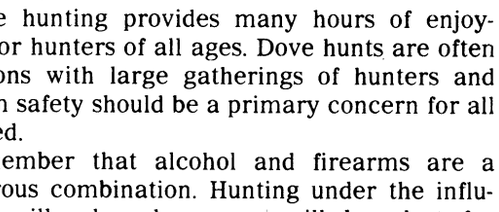


Among the outstanding competitors are Sandor Berczky, a 1986 world smallbore rifle champion, and Attila Zahonyi, a recent bronze medalist during the Olympic Games at Seoul, Korea, in the smallbore rifle prone event.

Other top shooters include Laszlo Orban and Istvan Szalai in pistol competition, both members of a world-record-setting Hungarian team in rapid fire pistol.

Actual dates of competition will include a day of practice firing Tuesday, followed by record firing in international-type rifle and pistol events from Oct. 12-14.

All firing will be held at USAMU Hook and Phillips ranges and will include both individual and team competition in 50 meter free rifle, 50 meter rifle prone, 10 meter air rifle, 50 meter free pistol, 25 meter rapid fire pistol and 10 meter air pistol.



The friendship matches and marksmanship exchange between Hungary and the U.S. Army was arranged earlier this year, with Hungary to invite members of the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit to Budapest in 1989.

'Flipping' credited with victories in national bassing tournaments

By Earl Bentz & Steve Price
Outboard Marine Corporation

In recent years, the technique of "flipping" has become one of the most effective ways of catching spooky bass out of thick cover in shallow water. Basically, it is a variation of vertical jigging in dingy water with a plastic worm or jig, and it has been credited with numerous national tournament victories.

Even more recently, tournament anglers have modified the flipping technique, changing it for use in clear, shallow water where bass are extremely wary. This new technique has been named "pitching," and it is best described as long-distance flipping.

"The advantages of flipping are that they let an angler present a lure very quietly, naturally, and accurately to a bass," explains Evinrude Outboards Pro Staff member Denny Brauer.

"While flipping is normally done right beside the boat, pitching places the lure 30 to 40 feet away with the same accuracy and quiet approach. When bass are shallow in clear water lakes with heavy cover, or when bass are spooky because of heavy fishing pressure, pitching is an excellent way to approach them."

Brauer, recognized as one of the nation's experts at flipping and pitching, points out that pitching isn't difficult to learn, either, although gaining accuracy will take practice. The best pitchers, he says, can consistently drop a jig into a paper cup at 40 feet.

To learn pitching, Brauer recommends using a long 7 or 7-½ foot rod as in flipping, although shorter casting rods can also be used. Open face spinning outfits work extremely well and are used by some pros.

"Pull about three feet of line off the tip of your rod," instructs Brauer, "and begin by holding the rod parallel to the water, just like you'd start a normal overhead cast. Bring the rod up sharply to about the 11 o'clock position, and then make a quick flick of the wrist, bringing the rod down like an underhand roll cast.

"It's really easier to do than to describe," Brauer laughs, "but what you want to do is send the lure out low over the water the same as in flipping. You might even describe pitching as a speeded-up flip. You use the speed of your wrist and rod movement is vertically, but in pitching the lure moves horizontally.

"Actually, once your jig or worm lands after a pitch, most of the time you crawl it along the bottom or through the cover just as you would after a regular overhand cast. What pitching does is let you put your lure in the same spot as casting, but without any noise or splash, and with more accuracy."

Unlike flipping, notes Brauer, anglers often pitch a lure repeatedly to the same spot, a technique frequently necessary to tempt spooky bass into striking.

"I can remember several tournaments on Florida's Lake Okeechobee that have been won by pitching," says Brauer. "The water there is very clear and the bass often hold around small clumps of grass in water less than three feet deep.

"We'd pitch worms to them four or five times, crawling the lure through the grass, before we'd finally get a strike.

"You couldn't move closer to the weeds to make a flip, nor could you make a regular overhand cast, because either one would spook the fish."

Boat control is extremely important in pitching, says the Evinrude Motors pro, because an angler has to realize when he's close enough to make an efficient pitch. This comfort range of fishing develops with practice, and as an angler becomes more and more efficient, his pitching distance will increase.

Bears maul Cowboys in YA action

YA Sports

The Bears mauled the Cowboys, 22-zip, in YA football action Saturday.

Quarterback, Arthur Brown, fired a pass to end, Javain Rufus, who carried the ball 26 yards for the first score. Elton Pope carried in the extra point.

Brown called his own number for the second score as he ran 13 yards on an end around. The extra point attempt failed.

The defense scored next when Arthur Brown sacked the Cowboy quarterback in the end zone for a safety.

The final score was carried in from nine yards out by Pope.

Defensive standouts for the game were Kelly German with eight tackles and one sack, and Chuck Gonzales, Jason Burdeshaw and Larry Crenshaw, with five tackles each.

In other action, the Giants routed the Redskins, 22-6.

Quarterback, Luther Livingston,led the onslaught as stand-in coach, Richard Baird, called the plays in from the sideline. Jose Perez and Chris Strong were the outstanding players of the game.

Sledgehammer Brigade returns from REFORGER

By Clarence Pittman III
197th Infantry Brigade

About 3,000 soldiers of the 197th Infantry Brigade (M)(S) arrived at Lawson Army Air field last week after participating in REFORGER '88 in Germany.

The soldiers were deployed for more than 30 days on the largest REFORGER exercise in its 20-year history. The American soldiers trained with soldiers from Germany, Great Britain and Canada.

The Sledgehammer Brigade, which was the only stateside unit to take all of its vehicles and equipment overseas for the exercise, started the deployment to Europe in mid August with a shipment of 1,000 vehicles and tons of equipment on naval cargo vessels. This was a crucial operation because it tested

Leadership Seminars graduate wins Volunteer of the Quarter

By Agatha H. James
Bayonet staff writer

Eileen Reid, a recent Leadership Seminars graduate, is the Volunteer of the Quarter. As a facilitator/trainer for Leadership Seminars, she will lead small group discussions.

Reid, who was selected by the Volunteer of the Quarter committee, co-directed an entire workshop while working through the program's certification process. Also, she remade two sets of charts into booklets that participants could take home. According to Donna Williams, Leadership Seminars director, her work with the charts used in large and small group discussions greatly benefited the staff and made seminar preparation much easier.

Reid also works with other volunteer agencies. She is chairman of Santa's Castle, an agency that refurbishes used toys and distributes them to needy children at Christmas.

"I decided to contribute some time to Leadership Seminars because I really liked what they were doing," she said. "I wish that I had had that sort of training when my husband took the advanced course. I like the people and the program, and I felt I could make a contribution."

Project Spirit saves Benning millions

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Last year, Fort Benning was a million dollar winner in TRADOC's Spirit competition. Based on fourth quarter figures alone, the post has a good chance to win again this year.

For the fourth quarter, 139 Spirit actions created a dollar savings of $48.3 million. That's more savings in one quarter than the post submitted for all of fiscal year '87. So far this year, 539 actions representing a savings of $142.6 million have been documented.

Earlier this week, Chief of Staff, Col. James I. Daily, presented fourth quarter Spirit awards. He told recipients that with Project Spirit, everyone wins – the Army, TRADOC, Fort Benning, and the taxpayer. "I appreciate the efforts each of you have made," he said. "The enthusiasm, creativity and imaginative thinking generated has been remarkable."

The activities recognized at Tuesday's ceremony include the Infantry Training Center (ITC) as the command/major unit winner. This is the second time this year ITC has won a Spirit award. ITC implemented one capital investment project and 17 management improvement projects. DEH, which won the directorate staff competition for the fourth quarter in a row, had a total of 43 actions for a $33.5 million savings. The Equal Employment Opportunity office was recognized as the personal and special staff award winner for the second consecutive quarter.

22-year Fort Benning veteran retires

By Agatha H. James
Bayonet staff writer

When he was hired in 1966, Robert F. "Bob" Galer had no idea his efforts would change the course of management history at Fort Benning. Galer, the post's first full-time (and up until now, its only) Equal Employment Opportunity Officer, recently retired after almost 22 years of service.

A major objective of the Army's EEO program is to attain a work force of minorities and women representative of the civilian labor force. In other words, Fort Benning's labor force should be close in representation to the one in Muscogee, Chattahoochee and Russell counties.

That may sound simple, but there was no full-time program in place when Galer came to work, so setting up one proved to be no easy task.

Prior to 1966, the post's EEO program had been a part-time, collateral duty. Since there was no full-time program set up, Galer sought guidance from Department of Army and HQ, 3rd Army officials. With some assistance, he developed standard operating procedures and put together a program that later served as a model for other installations.

"I was a jack of all trades in those days," he said. "I did all the inquiries and investigations. My five years experience as Inspector General in the military helped tremendously in the complaint and investigation process."

Snively's friend returns home looking for real food, a Whopper

Anticipated war stories becomes a dining out

By Clyde Snively
USAIC Public Affairs Office

The Sledgehammer crew returned home Sunday.

I was at Lawson Army Airfield to meet Alan. He's an infantryman, an 11 Bravo, so I knew he'd have plenty of tales to spin.

It was an impressive ceremony. The band played. Everyone went around telling everyone else what a great job they did while wives stood on tip-toes and waved to their husbands, trying to point out daddy to children more interested in going somewhere, doing something than standing about listening to people talk.

Finally, the spouses were reunited with long, wet kisses, little kids were hugged and jostled and that's when I finally spotted Alan, bag flung over his shoulder, making his way to the waiting vehicles.

"Yo, Alan," I hailed him.

"Yo, ho, Clyde," he responded, surprised to see me there. "How'd the war go?" I asked.

"Kicked butt," he said. "Got any food on ya?"

"No," I said, patting myself down, "unless you consider some stale chocolate chip cookie crumbs food."

"I'll take 'em," he said grabbing at me with his free hand. "So, tell me about the war, kill any tanks?"

"Lotsa them. Hey, we gotta get some chow. I need a Whopper fix. Like, I gotta drop some grease into my system."

"I don't understand why you're so hungry. Didn't you get a chance to stop and eat."

"Oh, heck yes, we had plenty of food, if you call T-meals and MREs food. Problem is, they all begin to taste the same after a couple of days. The only thing that kept me going was the backfire I took along from Country's. It may not have helped the taste, but it sure killed it."

"Look, Alan," I said in desperation. "Madame Editor wants a personalized story from the war zone. Ya know the kind. Life of a grunt up front. If I take you for a burger, will you help me out?"

"Sure thing, Clyde, just as soon as I get my gear squared away. You and me can head out for Victory Drive and hit all the fast food places — Mexican, burgers, roast beef, I've got me a craving."

I began to wonder if my pocketbook could handle the pressure of feeding Alan, but decided it would probably be worth it if I got some good, inside info and get the editor off my case.

Over a Big Mac, Alan told me how he and his one-one-three crew personally held the enemy off at the Main River, counterattacking the enemy and driving a wedge into the enemy lines.

"Wow," I said, impressed.

"Yeah, and the nice thing about it, we were able to get some kids to make a run to the Bakerei and buy us some fresh broetchen for breakfast. Didn't drink their coffee though, ever had German coffee, like drinking melted tar. Yuk."

"What happened after the breakthrough?" I wanted to know, as I pictured Alan blossoming into another Patton.

"Oh we shoved them all the way back to Rothenberg. Captured the city. Say, if you're ever in Rothenberg, I know a really nice Gasthaus that has the best Spatzle."

I was beginning to wonder if my warrior was better at eating than fighting. But what the heck, if the V Corps commander said the success of his mission depended on the 197th Infantry Brigade, who was I to argue.

Does it matter if the infantry eat their way across Germany as long as they put the enemy to tail? I know I wouldn't want to be caught between the anvil and the Sledgehammer.

Seat belts; a potent charm against evil

Safety Office

A horseshoe nailed over a doorway was considered a potent charm against evil only a few years ago.

Today, another good luck talisman has taken the horseshoe's place. It doesn't guard a doorway. Instead, it lies unused in an auto.

Seat belts are now installed in millions of cars. But surveys show that only about half are used at all times. The other half often lie on the seat, just a nylon horseshoe to ward off harm.

Experts have proved beyond question that seat belts do save lives, but only if they are worn.

Are you putting your trust in a superstition? Do you rely on a nylon horseshoe?

PROOF ... PREJUDICE

The use of seat belts is recommended by many authoritative groups after thousands of case studies and scientific tests proved their worth. No other safety concept in the history of the automobile has been backed by such careful statistical validation and scientific investigation.

It is estimated that more than 5,000 lives could be saved every year if all car occupants used seat belts all the time. Few other traffic programs offer that much promise.

Probably no other safety measure has been surrounded by so much myth in the minds of the public, so much unreasoning prejudice, such blind refusal to accept massive evidence and documented fact.

All new cars sold now have seat belts as standard equipment. Yet many car owners fail to use them. Why?

Most homes have fire detectors; yet many are nonoperational

National Safety Council

Each year about 4,000 people die in home fires, according to the National Safety Council. Most fatal home fires occur at night while people are sleeping. Fire produces toxic gases and smoke that can overwhelm an individual in a very short time.

Because of this, fire officials consider smoke detectors a "must" for every household. And three-quarters of American homes currently have at least one smoke detector, says the National Fire Protection Association (NFPA).

Yet, the NFPA also estimates that one-third of these detectors are nonoperational, often due to dead or missing batteries. If this trend continues, approximately one-half of America's home smoke detectors will be nonoperational in 10 years.

In observance of National Fire Prevention Week, Oct. the NFPA and the National Safety Council suggest the following steps for ensuring maximum home fire protection with smoke detectors.

○ Purchase smoke detectors for your home. In some states, smoke detectors are required by law. Most only cost between $10 and $30 each. Be sure the detector bears a label from a respected testing laboratory.

○ Read all instructions carefully and follow manufacturers' directions for installation and maintenance.

○ Install smoke detectors properly and strategically. You should have at least one unit outside each sleeping area and on each additional story of your house, including the basement. If any family members sleep with their bedroom doors closed, make sure smoke detectors are placed so they can be heard, or install detectors in the bedrooms themselves. Don't place detectors near airflow areas, such as heat registers or air conditioners, or near the stove.

○ Test your smoke detectors regularly, once a week for battery-operated units and once a month for AC-powered units. Listen to the sound of your smoke detectors when you test them. Be sure you can hear the sound clearly, and identify it as your smoke detector. If the detector is outside a bedroom, be sure you can hear it from inside the bedroom, with the door closed.

○ Maintain your smoke detectors. Replace old or weak batteries, and use only batteries recommended by the manufacturer. Change batteries at least once a year. Pick a date you'll remember such as your birthday or during National Fire Prevention Week. Do not paint over smoke detectors. Check detectors for dust, dirt or cobwebs, which all inhibit operation. Vacuum detectors, if the manufacturer recommends it.

○ Make smoke detectors part of your Home Fire Escape Plan. Be sure every member of your family knows where the smoke detectors are located, what they sound like, and how to maintain them. Draw a floor plan of your house, and determine possible fire escape routes. Be sure to have at least two escape routes from each room. Plan a rendezvous place away from your house once everyone has escaped. Be sure everyone knows the local fire department phone number and how to report a fire. Rehearse your plan regularly, to ensure the best response in a real emergency.

Let National Fire Prevention Week, October 9-15, be your family's starting point for lifelong fire safety awareness.

191st Tank Battalion Association tours Fort Benning during reunion

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

"The tanks we drove in my time couldn't hold a candle to these tanks," a member of the 191st Tank Battalion Association said during a tour of the 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor Motor Pool.

The 191st Tank Battalion Association conducted a reunion at Fort Benning last week, and a tour of the motor pool was a part of their visit.

For 45 minutes they climbed in, out, and around looking at the M-60 and M-1 Abrams tanks from every angle. The tanks were on display for the reunion group at the 2nd Bn., 69th Armor Motor Pool.

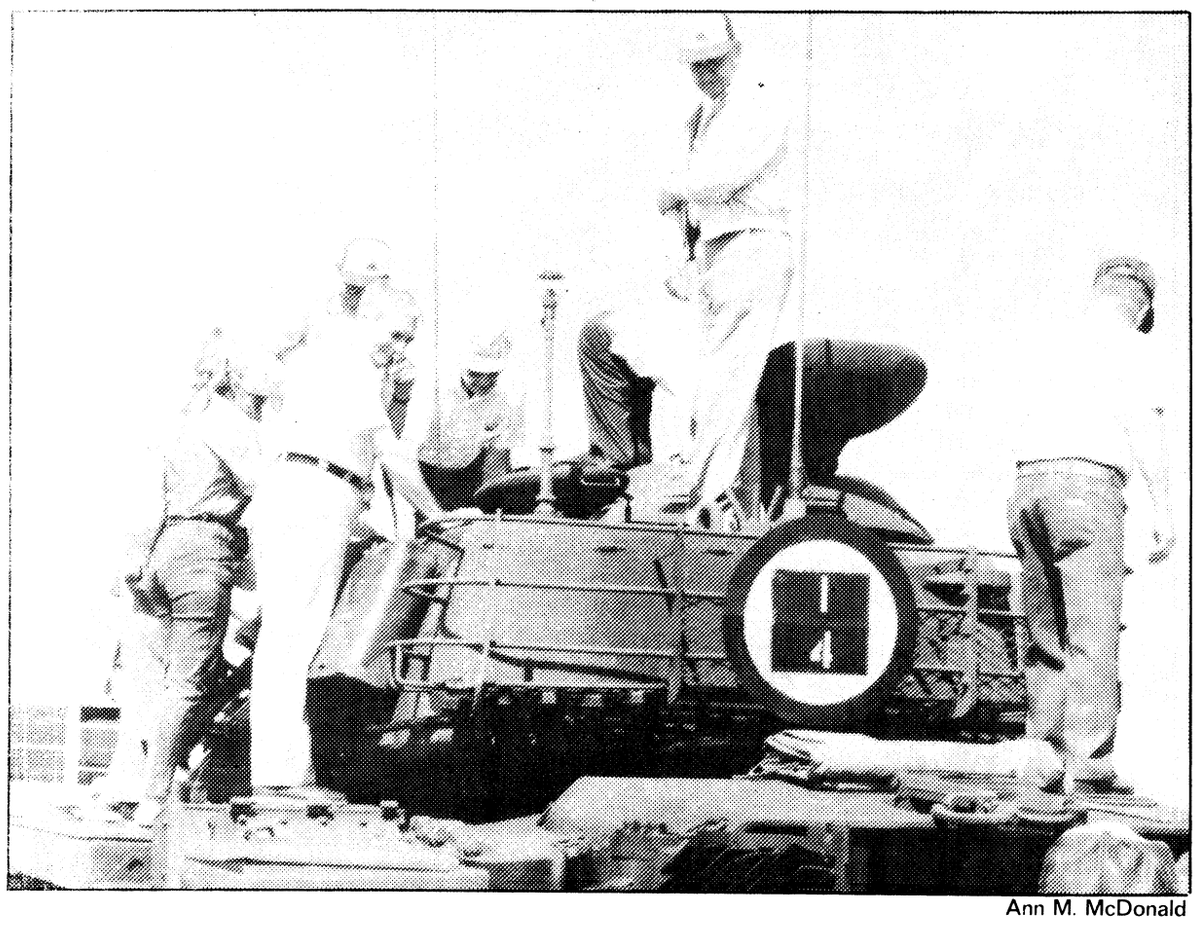
Retired Lt. Col. Ralph Carr took a moment to explain the history of the unit.

"Before we were activated, battalions used to have a tank company assigned to them," he said. "But the mission in WWII was different so they took some of those tank companies and formed a battalion."

According to Carr, the 191st was made up of companies from Massachusetts, Virginia, New York, and Connecticut. They assembled at Fort Meade, Md. where they underwent their initial training.

"We went to several other posts before we went overseas to fight," Carr said. "We stopped at Fort Benning for six weeks."

He said they were attached to the 157th Infantry Regiment for a good portion of the war, and they fought in many campaigns during that time.



The men who spent many moments together cradled in the arms of war now they get together at best once a year and go to different posts and talk about years gone by.

This is made possible through a lot of coordination and correspondence throughout the year.

Members make presentations and then decide where they will go and what they will do.

Joseph Crowley, an original member from the unit, remarked that he really enjoys coming to these reunions and taking the different post tours.

"These tours give me a chance to see the new equipment firsthand," Crowley said, "but, the most important thing is being able to spend some time with some guys that I nearly cashed my chips in with."

MACH gets boost from members of Retiree Council

USAIC Public Affairs Office

In these days of tight budgets and personnel constraints, wouldn't it be nice to look up and see new workers arrive at your office.

Imagine 20 people walking through your door and saying "We're here to help."

Recently, Martin Army Community Hospital got such a boost from members of the Fort Benning Retiree Council. More than 20 area retirees and spouses of retirees attended an orientation at the hospital as the first step to becoming trained volunteers at the internal medicine clinic.

Motivated by the possibility of improving the medical services at Martin Army, members of the Fort Benning Retiree Council approached the hospital commander, Col. Herb Segal, with the idea of helping with administrative and clerical work, thus allowing hospital staff to concentrate on medical services.

"We got the idea from our Valdosta subcouncil," said Barbara Youngs, Benning's Retirement Services Officer. "We thought it was a great idea, so we expanded on the concept and organized it into a full-blown operation."

Youngs, who acts as the liaison with the 22-member Retiree Council, said a number of post agencies worked to make it happen. Maj. Joe Butler and Capt. John Wynn of the Clinical Support Division at the hospital, Karen Crowley of the post's Volunteer Center and Linda Scorgie and Chris Hoffman of the American Red Cross, laid the groundwork, according to Youngs.

The driving force behind it all, Youngs said, is retired Maj. Gen. Daniel A. Raymond, cochairman of the Retiree Council.

"Although many people helped, General Raymond made it all come together," said Youngs.

With the planning and organizing finished, Segal gave the program its name — "Adopt-A-Clinic." He pointed out that the selection of the internal medicine clinic was a logical starting place since 80 percent of the patients seen there are retirees and their family members as well as it having an unacceptably high patient no-show rate.

The initial orientation at the hospital's Baugh Conference Room became the first step for the volunteers. Welcomed by Raymond and Segal, the volunteers were given instruction about the positions they would fill.

"They will primarily perform administrative work," said Youngs, "but several of the volunteers have had clinical experience and may assist in patient care support roles."

The volunteers select their own hours and are allowed to perform those functions they are most comfortable with. Youngs said several retirees volunteered full-time.

The volunteers started working in the internal medicine clinic Sept. 19.

"Once the program is well established at internal medicine," Youngs said, "we plan to expand to other clinics if we get more volunteers."

"We can do so much to help ourselves," said Youngs, "but people have got to take the first step. We have a program now, the rest is up to the people. That first step is not so big anymore."

Karen Crowley, who monitors all volunteers at Fort Benning from the Volunteer Center, was thrilled with the turnout from the retiree community.

"Our motto is 'Volunteers make the difference,' Crowley said, "and the 'Adopt-A-Clinic' program is an excellent example of that. But this volunteer program is not just for retirees; if people want to help at the hospital, all they need do is call my office."

"The great thing about giving is that you can give wherever and whenever you want," Crowley said.

For more information about the program, contact Karen Crowley at the Volunteer Center, 545-5602. Retirees should call Barbara Youngs at the Retirement Services Office, 545-5369.

Halloween safety tips

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Halloween trick-or-treating will be in effect from 6-8 p.m. Oct. 31 (the only day trick-or-treating" is permitted).

○ Trick-or-treating should be limited to children under 13 years old. Preschool children must be accompanied by a person 14 years old or older.

○ Limit trick-or-treating to the housing area in which the participants reside and approach only residences with lighted entry ways.

○ Light colored costumes, short enough to prevent tripping and nonflammable should be worn by children. Costumes can be marked with reflective tape or "glow" spray paint so they can reflect auto headlights and other lights.

○ Observe all basic safety precautions. Use sidewalks and crosswalks; don't cut through yards. Look in all directions before walking across the street.

○ Wear masks or head coverings that do not restrict vision. Use colorful facial makeup when possible.

○ Ensure pet owners take measures to prevent pets from being a nuisance or a menace to children, and caution children about the wrongs of vandalism and causing damage to the property of others.

○ Ensure children carry flashlights after dark. If a pumpkin is carried, it should be lit with a battery-operated device, not a candle.

○ Never let your child eat anything until you have inspected the treats. Give your child a full meal before he or she goes trick-or-treating.

Professional writer shares creative ideas

By Beth Middlemiss
Fort Benning Schools

Richard Keeton, a professional writer who served as Loyd School's Artist in Residence, has touched the lives of each of Loyd's students and teachers. He has moved from class to class sharing creative ideas with students and guiding them through a variety of creative writing activities.

"When Keeton came to our room the first time, he brought along his invisible friend, Sally," said second grader Luke Yeager. "Sally stepped on Keeton's foot, she tried to kiss him on the cheek, and then she climbed up on the ceiling. We all had to say 'Please come down, Sally' before she would climb down. Then we wrote stories about Sally. You should see some of the stories we wrote."

"Keeton came to our class with a big brown sack," said Jason Barnaby, a Loyd School fourth grader. "He took a big yellow statue that looked like a frog out of the bag and told us about how he had found it in a strange old house when he was about our age. Then we wrote stories about the statue and what we thought it was."

Keeton's visit to Loyd was sponsored by the Georgia Council for the Arts, the National Endowment of the Arts, and the Fort Benning Schools. Loyd first grade teacher, Nora Lester, and Charene Shaw, Loyd PTAC Chairperson, coordinated Keeton's visit and his daily schedule.

Parents were invited to attend Keeton's visits to their children's classrooms, and many of them came to school to share in the creative writing activities with their children.

Keeton conducted a special workshop for Loyd teachers in which the teachers produced creative writings. He also worked with teachers on ways to continue to generate creative writing activities such as the ones he uses with the students.

The three-week residency ended with an evening program in which Loyd parents and students listened as Keeton read selections from the many stories that had been written.

"Children realized that writing can be fun," said Shaw. "It is interesting to watch the way Keeton gets the children to participate. He relates so well with this age group."

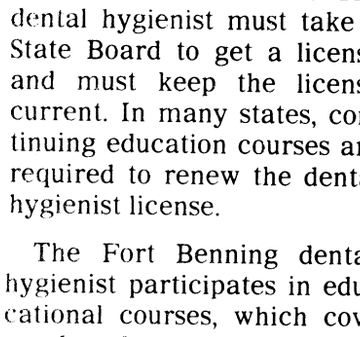
"It has been exciting and rewarding to have someone of Richard Keeton's caliber at Loyd" said Lester. "The whole school is writing. He is leaving us with a lot of experiences that will be a basis for our creative writing all year long."

"I write books, myself, you know; I've been writing them for a long time," said Jason Barnaby. "I write them, my mother checks the spelling, and then I give them to my friends to read. I am glad that I got to know Keeton. He's a grown-up writer who writes all the time. I didn't know about writing with flashbacks till he came. I'm going to keep those in my books."

Dental Hygiene Week

DENTAC

Oct. 16-22 is "National Dental Hygiene Week." and in observance of that, the Fort Benning Dental Hygienists are acknowledged for their contributions to the dental profession.



The dental hygienist is the "Preventive Member" of the dental team who is responsible for providing treatment that helps to prevent oral disease such as dental caries and peridontal disease (gum disease). This is done by providing educational, clinical and therapeutic services that support total health through the promotion of optimal oral health.

The education of the dental hygienist emphasizes the basic sciences, which include microbiology, chemistry, pathology, anatomy and physiology as well as clinical skills.

After graduation from an educational program accredited by the American Dental Association Commission, the dental hygienist must successfully complete both a written National Board Dental Hygiene Examination and a clinical examination. The dental hygienist must take a State Board to get a license and must keep the license current. In many states, continuing education courses are required to renew the dental hygienist license.

The Fort Benning dental hygienist participates in educational courses, which cover dental research, new materials, procedural techniques and other related topics. There are advances taking place in dental hygiene and in all phases of dentistry. The dental materials are stronger and more durable, techniques are faster and more accurate, the doctors are more knowledgeable and proficient and the patient is more conscious of the causes of dental disease and what he must do to arrest or correct a dental problem.

The dental team is on the move, and the dental hygienist is a valuable member of the team.

Galer

Ron Allen

Galer, who recently retired, spearheaded the post's EEO activities for almost 22 years.

An unusually high number of complaints originated at that time as a result of the inequalities that existed in the work place. "I walked into a backlog of complaints," he said. "My first case involved an individual who alleged racial discrimination because he was not selected as foreman of the brick masons. At that time, the masons were predominantly black. The foreman had always been white. Needless to say, this individual's allegations were substantiated; and, eventually, he won the case and became Fort Benning's first black foreman of the masons."

Accomplishing that feat was a difficult task. According to Galer, the EEO program faced considerable opposition initially. "Some managers did not take kindly to me upsetting tradition," he said. "Even though there was some antipathy to me and what I was trying to do, I never took anything personally.

"That's one of the reasons I remained in the job for so long," he continued. "I knew there would be some resistance, but I also knew that I had to solicit the cooperation of managers and supervisors (to whom this was an entirely new process) in order to do my job."

In 1969, Galer faced what was probably his biggest challenge. The country was on the brink of racial unrest, and Columbus and Fort Benning were no exception. "I can remember when racial tension was so high among black and white soldiers that it posed a real threat to the Army's mission," he recalled.

"Racial incidents on post were the norm rather than the exception. This was true in all the services and throughout the country.

"Locally, there were racial riots, burned buildings and racial fights at schools. Columbus policemen even tore the American flag patch from their uniforms in a display of utter contempt for the country."

In an effort to quell the tension on post, Galer was instrumental in creating the first Race Relations Council and Race Relations Coordinating Group in the Army. The Council consisted of 18 military and civilian personnel appointed by Maj. Gen. Orwin C. Talbott, who was Fort Benning's commanding general at the time. Their mission was to report on the status of race relations within the command and to suggest solutions to problems that existed. The purpose of the coordinating group, which consisted of military personnel, was to assist unit commanders in planning and conducting race relations seminars, to serve as a nucleus for special study groups, to address specific problem areas and to assist in identifying and correcting the sources of racial tension and conflict.

In an attempt to restore order, a series of battalion seminars were begun. At that time, race relations was high on the Army's list of priorities since racial unrest posed a definite threat to the mission. The seminars were continued for two to three years until the situation subsided and was under control.

When a permanent military group was set up, Galer stepped out; subsequently, the Equal Opportunity program for the military was created in 1972 and set up as a separate program from EEO for civilians.

Galer's approach to race relations was very successful and became a model for TRADOC and DA.

"I was asked to attend several conferences to explain our approach, and the Race Relations Group concept was widely copied throughout the Army," he said. Galer cited three rewarding aspects of the job. "The first reward has been to see military and civilian managers mature in their jobs so they accept affirmative action as a normal way of doing business. Second, I was able to see command support for the program grow tremendously. Third, I have watched women and minorities move into occupations and grade levels at Fort Benning where formerly they were not represented or fully represented."

Current statistics show that women are employed in 46 percent of all jobs on post, and minorities hold 40 percent of all jobs. "Our standard is based on the Metropolitan Statistical Area, which consists of Muscogee, Chattahoochee, and Russell counties. Based on the demographics of our MSA, our percentage of women equals the female population, and the figure for minorities exceeds the minority population.

When asked about future plans, Galer said "I've been so busy with the present, I haven't had time to think about the future. Initially, I plan to campaign for my wife's re-election." His wife, Mary Jane, is running for her seventh term in office as State Representative of the 97th District. "Because of the Hatch Act, I've never been able to campaign for her. Now I'll be able to, and I'm looking forward to it," he said.

Galer said he thinks the EEO program will continue on a very professional basis because now it's part of life at Fort Benning. "EEO has definitely achieved a place on the personal staff of the commander."

Galer said he would like for his successor to remember that the EEO program is one that is carried out by the managers and supervisors at Fort Benning, not by any one staff person. "One staff person or ten staff people can't do the job," he said. "By training managers and supervisors well, as we have done, 400 to 500 military and civilian people are out there doing the job. The personnel decisions they make everyday affect the program."

Under Galer's leadership, what started out as a one-man operation has grown into an award-winning, four-person operation. The staff is now comprised of the EEO officer, two specialists and one assistant. Also, in 1975, EEO counselors, part-time collateral duty personnel who handle complaints during the informal stage of the complaint process, were added to the program.

Since 1985, Fort Benning's EEO program has received "excellent" evaluations from TRADOC and is repeatedly looked at as a model for other installations. Under Galer's guidance, Fort Benning has maintained an 89 percent or better resolution rate, which represents a 4 percent increase over the DA and TRADOC goal.

Three special emphasis programs – the Federal Women's Program, the Hispanic Employment Program and the Black Employment Program – all began during Galer's tenure. Two programs, the FWP and the HEP, have been rated outstanding by TRADOC and HSC, and the FWP has been cited as a program model for other installations.

Galer and his wife have three children – Robin, a graduate of Georgia Tech who is employed as a nuclear engineer in Menlo Park, Calif.; Fulton, an accountant with Peat, Marwick, Mitchell Associates in Roanoke, Va.; and Barbara, a University of Atlanta graduate who lives in Calgary, Alberta, Canada.

Upon retirement, Galer received the commander's award for civilian service.

Officer gets promoted, takes command on same day

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

It's not often that someone gets promoted to lieutenant colonel and takes command of a battalion the same day; but, it does happen. It most recently happened to John T. Keneally.

The new lieutenant colonel took command of Camp Rudder Ranger Camp, Eglin Air Force Base, Fla.

What makes his position even more unique is the battalion is one of few like it in the Army.

In addition to his duties as a battalion commander, Keneally's position is not unlike a post commander.

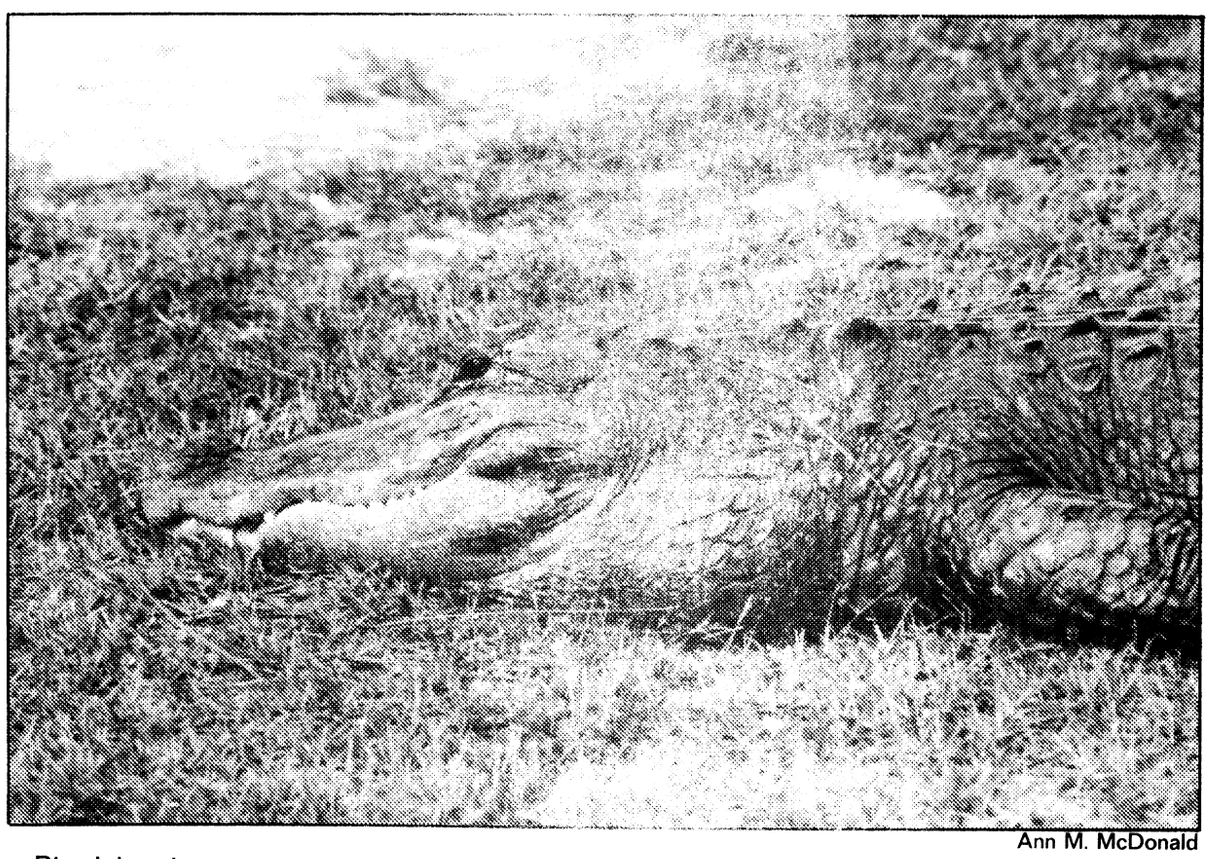
Camp Rudder is almost totally self sufficient. It houses a fire department, motor pool, post exchange, small club, stable, swimming pool and housing, just for starters.

Keneally, is not only in charge of the permanent party personnel under him, but he is also responsible for the Ranger students who rotate through his camp for the swamp phase of the course.

As this is the swamp phase of the Ranger Course, it is only fitting that an alligator be the mascot for the unit. They have two. To keep the gators company, the unit also has a snake house where they have a large collection of snakes.

All this is quite a responsibility for a man who was promoted an hour prior to taking command of the unit.

Although he is newly promoted, Keneally is one person who can fill those shoes. During his Army career, he has served at Fort Hood, Texas; Fort Kobbe, Panama; Fort Clayton, Panama; and Florida Ranger Camp, to name a few.



During the ceremony, he vowed to sustain a program of instruction for the camp and that he is totally committed to maintaining the standards.

"I will continue to improve the quality of life on Camp Rudder and make it better than it already is." he said.

Ann M. McDonald

Lt. Col. John Keneally waits to accept the flag formally putting him in command of the camp.

Big John, the camp mascot, takes it easy.

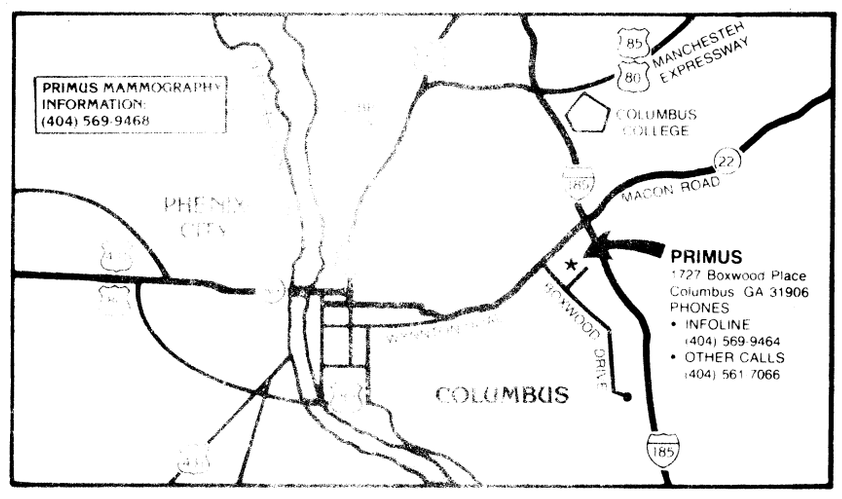
By using the following procedure, soldiers on the Family Housing Waiting List can use this chart to estimate when they can expect quarters:

Locate your category of housing.



Note eligibility date located on the same line as your category.

Calculate the time difference between the eligibility date listed and your eligibility date. The difference is the approximate time you still have to wait for housing.

EXAMPLE: If the latest eligibility date of the person who last received housing in your category was May 15, 1988, and your date of eligibility is Sept. 15, 1988, you can expect housing in about four months. If you do not know your eligibility date, contact the Family Housing Office at building 399, 545-3107.

This is a special offer that is sure to appeal to anyone who's ever arrived with their family at a duty station only to find government quarters were not available. To begin with, the soldier has to bear the expense for a commercial hotel. Then, because they're new to the area, it's hard to find a good hotel, for alone one with reasonable rates.

Don't take chances. ITT can tell you which hotels are available, whether they have laundry facilities, baby sitting services, a swimming pool, fitness center and so forth. Of course, the best part is you will not have to pay full price.

If you plan to travel, remember to book discount lodging reservations with the ITT Office. The same discounts apply if you need to reserve rooms for parents, family members or other personal guests who plan to visit you at the installation. Call the ITT Office, 545-7535/4155 for lodging reservations. (MWR)

A rigger packs for life

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

Rigger? The job title may be foreign to many soldiers, but those in the airborne community know a rigger holds their lives in his hands.

A parachute rigger is responsible for packing every parachute with which a soldier performs an airborne operation. The static line, connected to the parachute was packed by a rigger and is the only thing that will open the parachute as a soldier jumps into the clear blue sky.

At Fort Benning the Parachute Packing Branch is 100 strong. It's divided into four parts; the Ranger Support Platoon, Parachute Packing, Parachute Issue and Maintenance.

According to the branch chief, Capt. Monica Divis, her group has packed more than 107,000 parachutes this year. Divis proudly states that all of this was accomplished without any injuries or fatalities due to parachute malfunction.

To accomplish this, each rigger on packing status was and is required to pack 35 parachutes per day before they are dismissed.

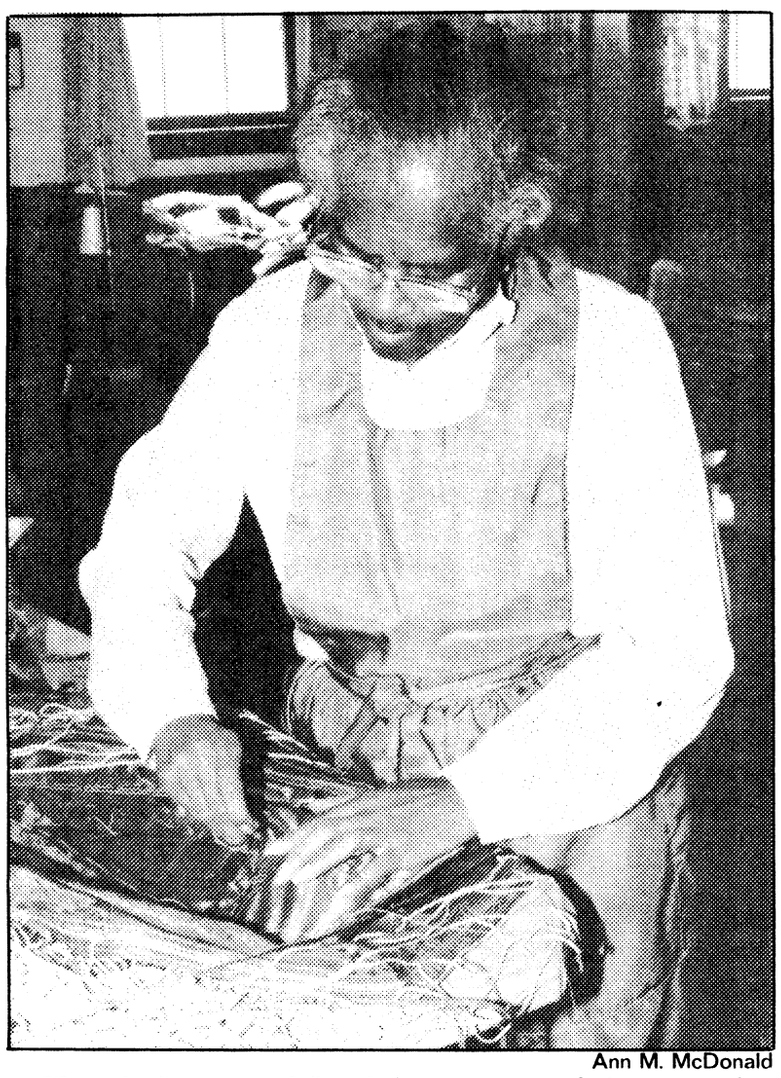
Theoretically, a soldier could pack those chutes as fast as he can and get out of there, but, then he is risking the life of another soldier. This doesn't happen because when they become riggers, they live by the riggers' creed.

In the creed, it is written that each rigger will pack each parachute as if they would jump it themselves and to never let the idea that a piece of work is "good enough" make them potential murderers through a careless mistake or oversight, for they know there can be no compromise for perfection.

Divis said that to further ensure a mistake doesn't happen, riggers are subject to court martial.

SSgt. Tamara Reddy, a section sergeant at parachute packing, has been a rigger for six and a half years. She chose to be a rigger because the job description she read at the recruiter's office sounded interesting.

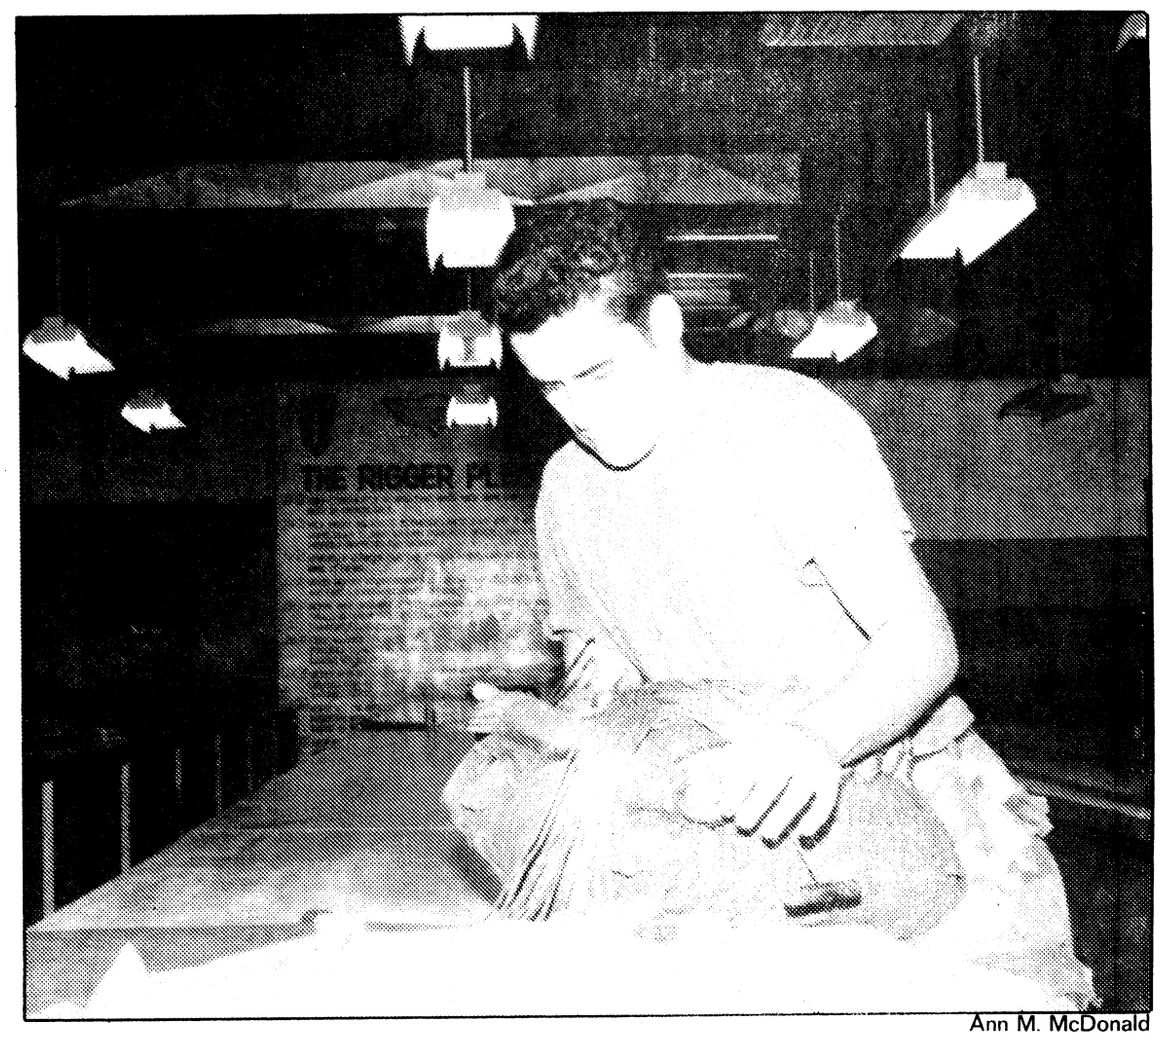
Reddy said although the job can sometimes get mundane, she alleviates this by setting daily goals for herself.



"This keeps me a little sharper, although I am always on my toes. I pack each chute as if it were my own," she said. "Chances are, I could be jumping that chute myself."

In addition to the personal goals soldiers set, the unit gives incentives to keep soldiers on their toes.

A soldier who packs the most parachutes in one month earns a four-day pass, the runner up, a three-day pass. "Of course, all this has to be accomplished with no malfunctions, and they have to be proficient in all of their other soldier skills," she said.



Reddy said you can tell which chute was packed by whom by a tag attached to the chute and signed by the packer.

But those incentives are just bonuses. The parachute rigger's job is such that they will be always sure, just as it states in the riggers' creed.

Parachute riggers gather here to remember days of the past

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Parachute Riggers from all over came to Fort Benning last week to participate in the first ever Rigger Ball.

Riggers, old and new, donned in all of their finery gathered at the Main Post NCO Club to wine and dine and remember days past.

The man who is considered the father of riggers, retired Col. William Foley, was the guest speaker for the affair.

During his time on active duty, he served with riggers in WWII, Korea, Vietnam, the Iranian Raid and Grenada.

He spent five years running the school for riggers at Fort Lee, Va.

Foley said that riggers are incredible airborne soldiers. "In many cases," he said, "I have been told that higher ups would trade two colonels for two Specialist Riggers because they are quality soldiers."

Foley said they are recognized throughout the world as quality soldiers.

"I remember once when I sent out some NCOs to train riggers from a foreign nation, the officials were so happy with them, they said they would give their right arm to have some of our NCOs," he said.

He said that's because riggers are special people, and they will continue to command respect throughout the Army.

Alcohol dulls senses and interferes with coordination

Drinking drivers kill

Safety Office

They kill themselves.
They kill their passengers.
They kill people they love.
They kill people they don't even know.

Why? For one thing, most of them do not realize how badly alcohol affects their mental and physical functioning. Since alcohol depresses the central nervous system, it makes them less alert and slows reaction time; it dulls the senses and interferes with coordination.

For another, drinking drivers don't believe they're going to get caught. According to the National Safety Council, the odds of getting picked up are about one in 2,000 in most places. Most drivers believe if they are convicted, the sentence will be light.

There is still another factor that allows drinking and drunk drivers on the highway. Drinking and driving is socially accepted behavior. It may not be endorsed or approved behavior, but it is accepted. How many times do you drink and drive? How often do you let someone you know drink and drive?

With the holiday season only a few months away, now is the time to focus our attention on the prevention of drunk driving. Safety meetings, promotion, and education on the dangers of drinking and driving are important, and supervisors should do more than meet mandatory requirements in these areas.

Special safety meetings should focus on dangerous drinking practices. The dangers of trying to travel too far on a weekend and partying besides should be emphasized. Both civil and military penalties for drinking while driving should be clearly impressed upon people.

While drinking may be a socially acceptable practice, killing and injuring people are not. Too often they go hand-in-hand.

Court Report

Staff Judge Advocate

On Sept. 26, Sgt. Earl H. Holt, Co. A, 1st Bn., 11th Inf., TSB, plead guilty before a special court-martial to writing worthless checks. Holt wrote worthless checks for almost $2,000 to the NCO Club and AAFES. He explained he wrote the checks knowing he did not have the money in his account, but he claimed he intended to pay the checks off. Prior to trial, Holt had reimbursed the NCO Club for more than $1,000 of bad checks and processing fees.

The military judge, Col. Richard P. Scheff, found Holt guilty of all charges and specifications and sentenced Holt to a bad conduct discharge, three months confinement, forfeiture of $447 per month for three months, and reduction to E-1

On Sept. 1, Sgt. Terry L. Johnson, Co. B, 1st Bn., 11th Inf., TSB, was tried by a general court-martial on three specifications of selling cocaine. The evidence showed that, in conjunction with SSgt. Noble Harris, Johnson was selling cocaine to other soldiers from his room in the barracks.

Johnson did not deny making the sales but claimed he was entrapped by government agents. However, the military judge, Col. Richard P. Scheff, found Johnson guilty of all charges and sentenced him to a dishonorable discharge, six years confinement, forfeiture of all pay and allowances, and reduction to E-1. Harris was previously sentenced to a dishonorable discharge, eight years confinement, forfeiture of all pay and allowances, and reduction to E-1.

the Brigade's logistical capability to fully load up and deploy for combat.

With the support of the U.S. Navy, Army transportation and supply units, and NATO allies, the brigade more than proved it could successfully deploy as its equipment rolled off the ships at the port at Antwerp, Belgium.

After a few day of offloading the ships and completing other logistical requirements, the brigade moved into the training areas in Germany and was challenged to show its fighting capability as a participant in two weeks of field maneuvers called "Certain Challenge."

Fighting alongside larger NATO and U.S. units, the Sledgehammer soldiers more than held their own. As illustrated during the first week of battle, the outnumbered 197th was the vanguard of a 30-kilometer offensive maneuver that took the initiative away from the enemy.

Besides gaining the valuable experience of training with our NATO allies and large U.S. units, the 197th soldiers learned a great deal about the German culture and customs as they traveled through the towns and countryside, took historical tours, and visited Germany's Oktoberfest.

Unit trains for war and finance support

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

What are the Finance personnel doing firing a LAW?

They're carrying out their unit mission. The mission of the 215th Finance Unit, 36th Engineer Group is to train for war and provide support for the post finance office.

In wartime, they will go to the battlefield to pay the soldiers. To prepare themselves for that battlefield, they have gone to the desert with units, and some soldiers went to Germany on REFORGER.

According to the unit commander, Lt. Col. Robert Schultz, cash becomes a commodity during wartime, and it's up to his unit to disburse it.

He and the soldiers under him are undergoing training so they can protect themselves while doing their mission.

"If you're dead, you can't pay anyone," Shultz said, "so the training these soldiers are undergoing will lessen the chances of this happening."

To date, 215th Finance soldiers have fired the M-16A1 in every conceivable way, to include extensive night training and advanced marksmanship. They also complete a 12-mile road march with full rucksack monthly.

Schultz said his soldiers are tired, and they sometimes wonder if they're doing too much, but he hears a lot of boasting as well.

One thing that the 215th has to boast about is that a female from their unit is the first female to fire the M-136AT4 LAW. SSgt. Martha Killingworth fired the weapon while attending a "Train the Trainer" class that would enable her to help members of her unit qualify with the M-72A2 LAW.

After completing the training, Killingworth took that newfound knowledge and helped the rest of the unit become LAW qualified.

SSgt. Sherreyal McFarland, the first female from the 215th to fire the M-72A2 said she learned a lot from the LAW training and all the other training the 215th has done.

"I've surprised myself," she said. "I have never doing any of the training we do here. I wasn't sure how I would do.

McFarland said she is now qualified to fire the LAW as well as many other weapons, and she really enjoys it.

"When I aimed the LAW and engaged that target, then saw the fireball soar downrange and actually hit it, I was in total awe," she said. "I wish I could do training like this all the time."

Stray animals become a problem here

By Patrick M. Reed
Military Police Activity

Reports of stray animals to the Military Police have increased recently. Many of these stray animals are pets that are abandoned by families PCSing or irresponsible pet owners who let their pets wander out of their control.

USAIC Reg 210-5 is very specific in governing pet privileges at Fort Benning — pet owners "will keep animals under confinement or control."

These stray animals are a nuisance and in some instances, dangerous to people working and residing at Fort Benning. While incidences of animals attacking humans are infrequent, there are specific procedures to be followed should an attack occur.

Any animal impounded for a biting incident will be quarantined for 10 days by the post veterinarian clinic. If the animal does not have rabies, it will be returned to the owner. When a pet is impounded and has no tag, it will be kept for three working days and if not claimed or adopted, it will be destroyed by the post veterinarian clinic. If the animal has been apprehended and confined more than once, the owner will be notified in writing of his/her responsibilities to maintain control of the pet. A third violation will result in the permanent removal of the pet from post, and the owner will be prohibited from future ownership of pets on Fort Benning.

Of greatest concern are those animals running wild in packs, especially dogs. If these animals present an immediate or chronic threat, the Military Police have the authority to destroy them on the spot. If you see a stray, report it to the Military Police (545-5222); do not try and capture it yourself.

Pets deserve responsible owners who don't let their pets stray. Take a bite out of crime, before a stray takes a bite out of you.

Cold weather brings out the chain saws; safety office reminds us to use them safely

Safety Office

Gasoline or electric chain saws, often used to clear land of trees or underbrush, present a cutting hazard because of their sharp, rapidly moving chain. The U.S. Consumer Product Safety Commission estimates that last year about 23,000 people required hospital emergency room treatment for injuries associated with chain saws.

○Joe was pruning trees. When he finished, he released the trigger on his chain saw and drew the chain out of the branches. The chain, which was still moving, lacerated his upper arm.

○Hal rested a log on sawhorses and sawed downward with his chain saw. The saw went through the log quickly and fell onto his leg, severely cutting his knee.

○George was trimming the rafter of the lean-to he had built. The chain saw kicked back as he held it overhead and his hand slipped from the handle onto the chain. One finger was amputated.

○Bernard was cutting through a branch when the rivet on his saw failed. The chain loosened and lashed out at him, cutting his hand.

The U.S. Consumer Product Safety Commission offers the following suggestions for the purchase, safer use and maintenance of chain saws:

Selecting a saw

Test the saw to see if the chain stops immediately after power is turned off.

Buy a saw no larger or longer than required for the average size of timber you will cut. Lightweight saws require less exertion and cause less strain.

Look for guards over the sprocket and rear portion of the chain.

Make sure an electric saw is insulated against shock by double insulation, a three-prong grounded plug or an adapter and tied to a ground.

Motor control on an electric chain saw should be through a deadman switch that stops the chain when hand pressure is removed.

On gasoline-powered saws, the exhaust should be directed so it does not blow on the operator.

Using the saw

Read the instruction manual carefully before use.

Use a lightweight hand tool to trim tree branches, not a chain saw that could be cumbersome.

Place wood to be cut close to the ground with the saw held parallel to the ground so that the saw cannot swing downward toward your body after the cut.

Keep legs well apart or to one side of the machine so that, in case of kickback, the saw will not strike your legs.

Be careful that the moving chain does not touch the ground, because it will dull the chain.

Avoid touching the hot muffler.

Never let the saw run unattended. When a tree starts to fall, shut off the power and lay the saw on the ground at a distance from the tree.

When walking with a saw, turn off the motor and hold the saw to your side with a chain pointing backward.

Start the saw on a firm surface, such as the ground.

Dress appropriately: wear closed, sturdy shoes, safety glasses and heavy trousers.

Ear plugs or muffs may be necessary when using a gasoline-powered saw to prevent hearing damage.

Don't wear loose clothing or jewelry that may catch in moving parts.

Clear away stones, bark and other debris to avoid throwbacks.

Keep electric cords out of the way of cutting.

Keep children away from the work area at all times. Never allow them to operate saws.

Oct 16-22 declared Army Energy Awareness Week

By Becky Ray
Energy Branch

Oct. 16-22 has been declared Army Energy Awareness Week. The theme for this year is "Energy Efficiency for the Army of Excellence."

Each fall, the Army sets aside one week to focus on progress in energy conservation over the past year and to make a renewed commitment to progress in the upcoming year. Special attention is also placed on educating the Army community of the need to conserve energy and ways in which to do it. At Fort Benning, special activities emphasizing the purpose of the energy program have become tradition. This year's campaign is no exception.

A kick-off breakfast was held at Fort Benning's Follow Me Golf Course Club House today. Key energy managers were briefed on Fort Benning's energy performance in fiscal year 1988 and goals and strategies for 1989.

Special candlelight dinners are being held at the NCO and Officers' Club in honor of Energy Week. The Officer's Club will feature steak dinners by candlelight Thursday. The NCO Club will provide a romantic and energy efficient dinner atmosphere Oct. 21 in the Garden Room. Dinner will be served from 6 to 9 p.m.

In the dependent schools, students are being "licensed" as energy detectives. After studying blocks of instruction on energy conservation techniques, the students will be awarded certificates and badges. They then take on missions of fighting energy waste and abuse.

Many students at Faith School will also learn about nuclear energy generation and safety concerns from Westinghouse engineer, Rick Schluter of Atlanta. Schluter will also be the guest speaker at the meeting of the Society of Military Engineers at 11:30 a.m., Thursday, at the Officers' Club.

Energy Branch personnel will visit many facilities around post and reward those practicing good energy conservation habits. The Energy Ant will also tour Fort Benning to distribute balloons.

Georgia Power furnished several interesting and informative displays that can be seen in the display room of Infantry Hall, Martin Army Community Hospital, and the Main Post Mall.

Family Housing occupants will receive Planning Guides, which include calendars and energy conservation tips for the home. A letter from the Commanding General will accompany the planners, which are being distributed by the Community Life Office.

The Energy Ant will be at the 2nd ITB Family Day Oct. 22 to distribute helium balloons and say hello to the 2nd ITB members and their families. For more information, contact the 2nd ITB S-4.

For more information on Army Energy Awareness Week activities, please call 545-SWAT (Save Watts And Therms).

1st Sgt tackles Airborne School at age 55

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

1st. Sgt. Max Gee has wanted to jump off the 250-foot airborne free tower since he saw it for the first time in 1948.

Now, 40 years later, he did it as part of his second week of airborne school. At 55-years old, he is attending airborne school.

While attending the course, he is assigned to Company A, 1st Battalion, 507th Parachute Infantry Regiment; but he is permanently assigned to Company B, 3rd Battalion, 325th Infantry, 2nd Brigade, 108th Training Division, a reserve unit in N.C.

Gee is attending airborne school this late in his career for several reasons. The biggest one is that it is very difficult for reservists to get a slot to go to the course.

According to Gee, he came in the Army for the first time in 1951. He got out, came back in and then got out and joined the reserves in 1974.

"I was a 41-year-old PFC, but that didn't last long," he said. "I got my stripes pretty quickly."

In his regular unit, he is in charge of drill sergeants who come and take over for the active duty drill sergeants here. He went to Drill Sergeant School while in his 40s and came away as the honor graduate.

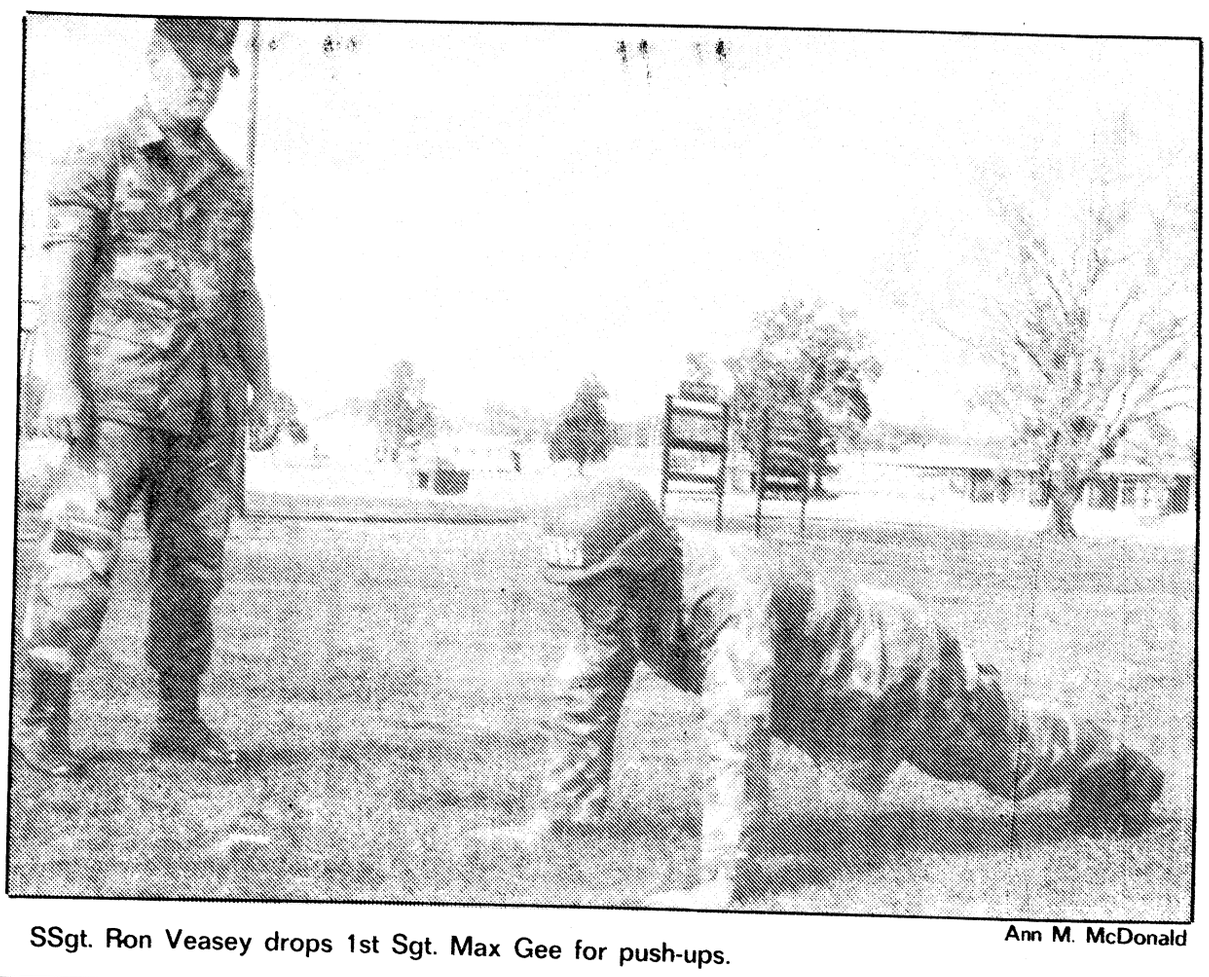
When Gee is not serving in the reserves, he works for the Cherokee County Sheriffs Department in South Carolina. He prepares physical training for candidates for the Sheriffs Department.

The fact that Gee is so into physical fitness is one of the reasons he was allowed to go to the course.

He said he is not having any more problems than any of the other students in meeting the requirements to pass the course.

"I have found out that the old body doesn't bounce back as fast as it used to," Gee said, "but that is not going to stop me from completing this course."

He said that he gets a lot of support from his fellow students and finds that they will tell him things that he doesn't think they would normally talk about.



"A lot of them tell me about their parents," he said. "They also comment that they hope they are in the kind of shape that I am in when they reach my age."

Married, with three children and one grandchild, he is old enough to be a father of a majority of the soldiers, including the instructors.

Gee's instructor, SSgt. Ron Veasey said even though that's true, he has not cut Gee any slack.

"He has met the standards just like anyone else," Veasey said, "and he has earned the right to jump out of an aircraft."

Veasey did add that he does have a lot of respect for him. "He has taken a lot of punishment on his body," he said, "and bounced back with the best of them."

New parachute tested at Bragg

By Steven Moore
JFK Public Affairs Office

FORT BRAGG, N.C. — Soldiers in Special Forces and Ranger units soon will enjoy softer parachute landings with a new parachute that officials say is certain to reduce drop-zone injuries.

The new MC1-1C personnel parachute has a no-porosity nylon material in its canopy that results in a smoother landing, said Thomas M. Wallis, a combat developments project officer with the JFK Special Warfare Center and School.

The new parachute, a modification of the standard MC1-1B, has a rate of descent of 14.6 feet per second. That rate is much slower than the current MC1-1B, which has a standard of 21 feet per second, Wallis said.

"For our mission, the MC1-1C is ideal — a good forward drive, faster turning and a slower rate of descent," SFC Jerry D. Powers, a 1st Special Operations Command parachute rigger who tested the MC1-1C, said.

"Attaining a slower rate of descent was our main goal in making the parachute safer and reducing the number of injuries," said Powers, a member of SOCOM's logistics branch who has been close to the parachute's development.

Because resupplying is difficult during Special Operations missions, Special Forces soldiers and Rangers carry as much as 120-130 pounds of equipment, Wallis said.

REFORGER return trip becomes training exercise

197th soldiers volunteer to be 'casualties'

Photos by Sally Roberts

197th Infantry Brigade correspondent

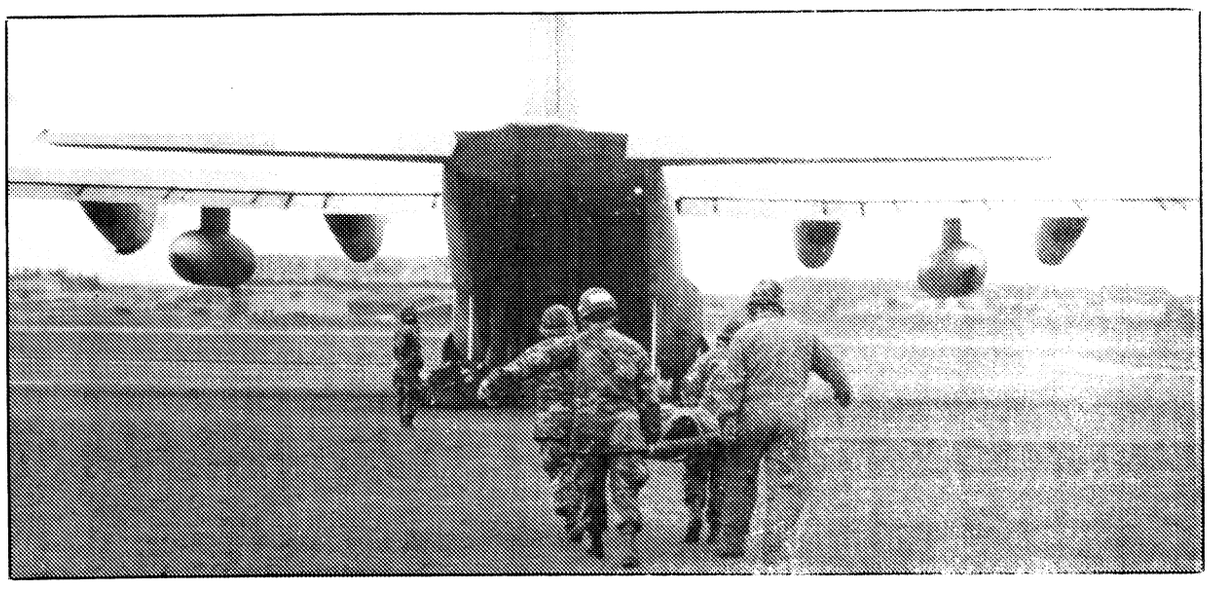
For several 197th Infantry Brigade soldiers, the return trip from Germany following REFORGER was a training mission in itself. The 197th and other CONUS units who trained in Germany provided soldiers to act as patients to assist medical units in accomplishing one of their REFORGER training objectives.

The soldiers participated in a Tactical/Strategic Aeromedical Evacuation from the Rear Combat Zone to CONUS. The four-day exercise took the patients from Germany to England and then home to the United States.

The first stage of the training took place near Hanau, Germany at the Casualty Staging Facility operated by the 583rd Medical Company (Ambulance) from Wiesbaden. Here, the soldiers were assigned an injury or illness and briefed on how to act and cooperate during the exercise.

The patients were then admitted to a Combat Support Hospital and spent the night in the controlled environment of the "bubbles," a field medical facility. The medical personnel here conducted simulated patient consultations and prepared the patients for an aeromedical evacuation on C-130 aircraft.

All details of the evacuation were performed in a tactical manner, from loading patients onto the aircraft to checking the patients during the flight, the medical personnel were busy accomplishing their training missions.



The second night was spent in the 348th General Hospital in Neubrucke, Germany. This facility was operated by a U.S. Army Reserve unit from Pennsylvania which set up its hospital in a normally vacant facility to perform their REFORGER mission

Each day, the patients moved on to a higher level of care in a larger medical facility. The third night was spent in the 349th General Hospital in Nocton Hall, England where the medical staff, an Army Reserve unit from Los Angeles, provided extensive medical care before the patients were evacuated to the United States.

Of course, all of this treatment was done on paper, and the time spent at each facility would vary if the medical personnel were treating real war casualties. However, the soldiers who participated as patients learned how the evacuation process will take place and gained confidence in their medical care through seeing firsthand the network of medical personnel who will be responsible for their safe evacuation home.

Medical personnel prepare patients for aeromedical evacuation from the Combat Support Hospital in Hanau, Germany.

Fradella heads for U.S. Bobsled Team

Sally Roberts

Ernie Fradella pushes his car while in training for the U.S. Bobsled Team. Fradella will compete with the team in Calgary, Alberta, Canada in November.

By Sally Roberts
197th Infantry Brigade

How does an athlete train for the U.S. National Bobsled Team while stationed with the U.S. Army in Columbus, Ga.? Spec. Ernie Fradella, can be seen pushing his Toyota Celica around the parking lot at the Kelley Hill Recreation Center when he isn't lifting weights at the gym or running and jumping to keep in shape for the training and competition that landed him a spot on the National Bobsled Team.

Fradella, Co. B, 1st Bn., 58th Inf., 197th Inf. Bde., was recently selected for the U.S. National Bobsled team following competitive training at the Lake Placid Olympic Training Center in New York. He made one of the six national teams, which will return to Lake Placid at the end of October to prepare for the World Cup Bobsled competition in Calgary, Alberta, Canada in November.

Fradella has spent much of his time in the Army participating in the athletic programs the military offers. In 1987, he placed fourth in the Armed Forces Championships, competing in the javelin throw. Following an ankle injury earlier this year, Fradella fell short of his goal to make the Armed Forces Championships for the second time. But his athletic abilities caught the eye of the U.S. Olympic committee, and Fradella was chosen to train for a position on the bobsled team.

The ankle injury kept Fradella from making the Olympic team, however, he never lost sight of his goals. He kept up with his training, mended his injured ankle and went on to make the bobsled team for this winter season.

"This has been a rebuilding year," Fradella said. "When I tore the ligaments in my ankle, I felt that I was always at the back of the pack. But with the support of many friends and people in my unit, I set my goals and kept going."

To make the team, Fradella took a physical test, which involved running, jumping, lift-

Benning Rebels lose to Reese Hurricanes, 3-1

Don Tisdale

Rebels player kicks the ball during soccer action against the Hurricanes on Bibb City Soccer Field Saturday.

By Don Tisdale
Rebels Coach

The Fort Benning Rebels lost to the Reese Road Hurricanes, 3-1, in Columbus Soccer League action Saturday.

Minutes into the first quarter, the Rebels' Philipp Conze fired one past the Hurricane goalie taking their only lead of the game, 1-zip.

Tough and aggressive defense by Randy Vogel, Rebels' goalie, and backs Tracy Spanier, Chris Grotton and Mike Warnock held the attacking Hurricanes to zero until late in the second quarter when the Hurricanes tied the game, 1-all.

In the second half, Rebels' Scott Kyser, Bryan Vogel, Robbie Pearce and Tim Thorton continued punching at the Hurricane defense, but the ball never found the net.

The game slipped away from the Rebels as the Hurricanes scored two more goals in the second half. Rebels defense, Shawn Gravett, Keith Latson, Chris Nardotti and Rebecca Jordan, continued to display strong, solid defense to hold the Hurricanes to three.

In other action, the Fort Benning Bullies II lost to the Northside Blazers, 5-1. Michael Fiacco scored the only Benning goal assisted by Francisco Reyes.

According to Bullies II's coach, Bob Cagle, the size and experience of the Blazers was too much for the Bullies to overcome. However, Bullies goalie, Bryan Church, had 15 saves.

fore starting a task. If necessary to refuel during the cut, turn off the motor and wait until cool.

Use the proper mixture of gasoline and oil recommended by the manufacturer of the saw.

Don't smoke while refueling and don't refuel in an enclosed area near a gas water heater or other flame source.

Wipe off any gasoline spilled on the tank or engine before starting the engine.

Start the saw in a different location from where you fueled it.

Beware of gasoline leakage while refueling or when saw is in operation.

Don't wrap the rewind starter around your hands.

Empty the fuel tank before storing the saw for longer than a few days. After long periods of storage, the gas could cause trouble in starting.

Maintaining and storing

Store saws in a high or locked place, away from children.

Wait until the motor is off, chain stopped, and saw unplugged (if electric) before repairing or cleaning the saw.

Keep the chain, bar and sprocket clean and lubricated; replace worn sprocket and chain.

Keep the chain sharp. You can spot a dull chain when easy-to-cut wood becomes hard to cut and burn marks appear on the wood.

Keep the chain at proper tension. Tighten all nuts, bolts and screws after each use.

For electric saws, inspect the electric power cord frequently and repair any defects.

For gasoline-operated saws, keep spark plugs and wire connections tight and clean.

chutes, this extra weight means harder landings that increase the chances of personal injury and equipment damage, Wallis said.

The new parachute's forward drive of 8-10 knots — an increase of two to four knots — will enable the parachutist to maneuver faster and easier around dangerous ground obstacles like trees and boulders, Wallis said.

More than 59 square feet of material was removed from the back of the canopy to improve the parachute's forward drive, he said.

The SWCS imposed its own requirement that the new parachute have a greater forward drive than the MC1-1B, Wallis said. The forward-drive modification will be quickly apparent to observers, Wallis said, because the removal of the material gives the modified area the appearance of the letter H.

The first MC1-1C parachutes were shipped this month to 1st SOCOM, which asked for the development of a no-porosity maneuverable parachute in 1986, Wallis said. More parachutes will begin to arrive later this summer. The parachutes will be manufactured at a rate of 500 per month until the production contract of 7,000 is completed.

The MC1-1C was developed by the Army Natick Research, Development and Engineering Center in Natick, Mass., using the MC1-1B as a base model for development and improvement ing and throwing events. Then he had to show his strength by pushing the 600-pound sled unassisted.

"When I went to the testing, I had personal best performances in seven of eight events," Fradella said. "It's an emotional thing because I didn't make the team last year. This year, I was way above my own standards."

When Fradella returns to Lake Placid in November, he will compete with his team to be one of three teams to go on to Calgary.

"I think I have a lot more potential that will be brought out in Calgary," Fradella added. "My goal is to compete at a high standard and bring back a World Cup medal through a lot of hard work and dedication."

Race packets may be picked up at the Hilton Nov. 11 from 5 to 7 p.m. and on the race day beginning at 6 a.m.

How to get a wake up call from a cardinal

By Pattie Orr
PM Editorial Service

Windows open to a pleasantly warm morning — a cup of steaming brew — and the wake-up call of the cardinal!

If you have a feeder nearby, it could be a daily experience to watch both male and female cardinals feeding their noisy young.

Another easy way to draw nature to your door is with a birdbath. All your visitors will enjoy bathing — even robins in very chilly weather. In dry weather one day we counted 14 Robins bathing in our birdbath at one time.

Birds will find your birdbath in no time, but if at first they appear a bit apprehensive and do not actually approach, there might be a reason. Even if it looks artistic backed up against dark and heavy shrubbery, birds are too cautious to chance a cat or other predator springing from the cover. Place their water (even an old garbage lid will do) in an open and sunny place. Also, be sure it is acceptable for your tiny birds, such as the chickadees and warblers, with a shallow edge.

In dry weather having water available to them will bring birds to your yard as quickly as food. You will be able to enjoy their delight at finding a new bathing place as you watch from a comfortable chair. If you are near one, you will be able to see them use the tiny oil sac and preen each little feather, especially the primary flight feathers, which require such important care.

The myrtle warbler, sometimes called the "yellow-rumped" warbler, will come from all surrounding woodlands at the sound of running water. The myrtle warbler is small and constantly on the move collecting insects. A definite field mark for identification in the spring and summer is a yellow patch at the base of each wing and on the head, but most positive is the "yellow-rump!"

Another migrating warbler is the magnolia warbler, which is not difficult to identify as a black and yellow warbler with a splash of white on its wings and across the tail. The change of outfits worn by our warblers — spring and fall — is strikingly different. They are one of our most numerous groups of birds.

NEWS BRIEFS

FMEAP plans job fair

Post-wide Job Fair: Family Member Employment Program is hosting a post-wide job fair Nov. 5., 8 a.m.-3 p.m. in the west wing of Building 4. The job fair will coincide with the Fort Benning Annual Tri-State Military Retiree Open House. The purpose of this fair is to assist soldiers and their families in their job search efforts.

The Family Member Employment Office expects representatives from 40 to 45 companies at this event. These companies are of a local, state, regional, national and international character. Representatives from the Civilian Personnel Office, local job placement agencies, and the Alabama and Georgia state employment agencies will provide employment assistance and answer questions regarding their particular area of job market expertise.

Job applicants are encouraged to bring past employment histories and completed resumes as employment representatives will be actively receiving employment applications. If you need assistance in resume writing, FMEAP is presenting a Resume Writing Workshop Tuesday, 7-9:30 p.m. in Classroom 50, Building 4. Call FMEAP for a reservation.

Some of the firms represented at the fair are of regional and international scope, so the job fair can be of importance of those attendees who expect to move from the Columbus area in the near future.

If you need further information, please write Pat Sneed at the Family Member Employment Office Assistance Center, Headquarters United States Army Infantry Center, Building 35, Room 128, Fort Benning, Ga. 31905-5223; or call (404) 545-5340 or 545-5176.

Benning commissary donates to AER

USAIC Public Affairs Office

The Fort Benning commissary recently took part in a U. S. Army Troop Support Agency commissary special promotional sale of Proctor and Gamble products, which contributed $107,641.74 to the Army Emergency Relief Fund.

Edward A. Devany, manager of the Military Sales and Marketing Division, Proctor and Gamble Distributing Company, Cincinnati, presented the check to retired Lt. Gen. Nathaniel R. Thompson Jr., director of AER.

During the special sale in May and June, 17 P&G products were offered at reduced prices in commissaries. Total sales amounted to $2,697,800 with an average contribution of 86 cents per case. The Fort Benning commissary sold 3,500 cases of the products resulting in a total contribution to the sale of $5,099, according to James W. Hobbins, commissary officer.

Commissary shoppers benefited from the event, also. They saved $772,900 by using coupons and taking advantage of Voluntary Price Reductions when purchasing the sale merchandise. Shoppers at Benning saved $33,988 from the sale.

TSA commissaries regularly participate in industry-sponsored promotional events such as the 'Just Say No To Drugs' and Muscular Dystrophy Association campaigns, which benefit charitable organizations.

Post CFC collects $65,000

By Shawn Bryson
Bayonet staff writer

The 1988 Combined Federal Campaign is well underway throughout the United States and now ending its third week at Fort Benning. More than $65,000 has been collected thus far.

The CFC kicked off here Oct. 1 and is a program in which federal agencies, such as the Federal Bureau of Investigation and the Federal Aviation Administration, as well as others, combine contributions gathered throughout a campaign and distribute those contributions to charities grouped under the United Way, according to Vickie Ciccolella, director of CFC activities at Benning.

Ciccolella explained that the campaign will continue until Nov. 30 and added that although $50,000 is a substantial amount of money, more contributions are needed to meet last year's total of over $500,000, of which over $200,000 was allocated back to Fort Benning programs.

An allocation committee distributes Fort Benning's share of the funds not already designated at the end of the campaign to organizations such as Santa's Castle, Youth Activities and the Army Community Service Food Locker.

"Next to the Army Emergency Relief fund, the CFC is the biggest fund raiser that helps Army families in the long run," Ciccolella said.

Contributors are reminded to include their Social Security number on the donation certificate and contact their unit project officer for any other information about contributing to the campaign, Ciccolella said.

Time to mail ballots is now

USAIC Public Affairs Office

The debates are over. The polls are in. The election countdown is underway.

Nov. 8, when voters will go the polls to elect the next president of the United States, is just 17 days away.

Voters mailing absentee ballots should do so right away since some states will not count ballots received or postmarked after election day.

Remember to vote. It's a right and a privilege Americans can't afford to lose or take for granted.

Fort Benning supports drug free USA week

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Oct. 24-30 is designated National Drug-Free America Week with an emphasis on drug abuse prevention and education throughout the United States.

Paralleling the event is the 1988 National Red Ribbon Campaign, sponsored by the National Federation of Parents for Drug-Free Youth, Inc. and the Drug-Free Youth of America.

Fort Benning's Alcohol and Drug Abuse Prevention and Control Program supports the week and available to answer questions pertaining to the cause, according to Allen Curry, ADAPCP Education Coordinator.

The focus of National Drug-Free America Week is 'What Works — Next Steps,' which emphasizes existing education programs and the creation of new prevention programs based in the communities.

Federal resources and leadership will be used to further spread the word that illegal drug use can and should be prevented.

The Red Ribbon Campaign stemmed from the 1985 kidnapping of DEA Agent Enrique Camarena by drug traffickers. Camarena was tortured and beaten to death. The red ribbon is now a symbol in Camarena's honor of the intolerance to the use of drugs as the yellow ribbon symbolized the American hostages held by Iranians eight years ago. The red ribbon also symbolizes the commitment to living a drug-free, healthy life style.

Curry explained that he is available to provide information about the two campaigns as well as education and prevention materials in support of next week's cause.

Post lauded for hiring handicapped

By Agatha H. James

Fort Benning was recognized for its employment of the handicapped at the recent Mayor's Committee for the Handicapped Awards Banquet.

The banquet was held at the Columbus Iron Works Trade and Convention Center.

For eight consecutive years, the post has received the Mayor's Handicapped Employer of the Year. Although not eligible to compete for this year's award, the post was recognized for sustained excellence. Fort Benning is the largest employer of the handicapped in this area.

Georgia's Secretary of State, Max Cleland, was the keynote speaker at the banquet.

Deaf woman overcomes handicap

By Agatha H. James
Bayonet staff writer

Doris Stearns' life was forever changed at age 2-1/2 when a car accident left her deaf.

Although she has lived in a world of silence since that time, she recently created quite a stir among her coworkers, supervisors, and other employees at Fort Benning. Stearns, 39, a sewing machine operator in the Canvas and Clothing Repairs section, Maintenance Division, Directorate of Logistics, is Fort Benning's Handicapped Employee of the Year.

"I was really surprised I was selected," she moticned with her hands. "I feel proud that others think I do a good job."

Stearns' supervisor, Bill Harden, said her hearing and speech impairment has never interfered with her performance of duties. "She is dependable, productive and personable," he said. "She does a good job and is quick to help others and shares her knowledge with them."

Born in Abbeville, Ala., Stearns came to work at Fort Benning three years ago. Prior to that time, she was employed as a sewing machine operator for nine years for the Charleston Manufacturing Company in Charleston, S. C.

After graduating from high school in 1966, she attended vocational-technical school and the Georgia School for the Deaf for two years.

Before she had formal training, Stearns and one of her older sisters devised their own sign language. "My sister, Nellie, was the only one in my family who really went out of her way to communicate with me," she said. "After I went to school and learned formal sign language, I taught Nellie. Because of our closeness then, we

Diets break out of the dark ages

Tweedledee, Tweedledum discuss nutrition with Sniv

By Clyde Snively
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Given all the new discoveries in the health and nutrition field, it's a wonder to me how our soldiers ever fought and won on the battlefields of World Wars I and II or survived the hardships of Korea and Vietnam.

Simply put, those soldiers were living in the dark ages when it came to taking care of themselves. Yet, amazingly enough, you still see World War II and Korea vets gathering by the hundreds across our land and in foreign countries for reunions where they raise cane and tell war stories.

I just hope I'm half that active at half their age. They got that way by eating K-rations, Spam, engorging themselves with salt tablets by the handful and going long periods of time without Gatorade (or even water). And I'll bet there wasn't a weight set, let alone nautilus, within light years of most military installations. Nor do I think thoughts about complex carbohydrates and good vs. bad cholesterol ever crossed their minds as they scaled Mt. Belvedere.

I got to thinking about all this the other day when Paul and Ed, the Infantry Center's version of Tweedledee and Tweedledum, pointed out a news release on the latest Army kick for nutritional, anti-cholesterol, low sodium, low-fat diets.

Vern, that's their name when you want to get both of their attention at once, noted the new menu was to be rich in complex carbohydrates and fiber.

Fortunately for me, I'd been studying up on these things by watching cereal and bread commercials on TV, so I wasn't totally in the dark when they started throwing around all those highfalutin words.

"I see they are also going to start pushing breakfast fitness bars," Vern said.

"You mean those bars my kids always want to eat for snacks after school. The same ones their mother calls 'junk' and tells them they can't have because it'll spoil their supper and rot their teeth?" I ask.

"Well, those are called fitness bars," Vern said.

"Of course they are," I said, "Everything today is called fitness something. How else can you market something without tying it in to fitness. That way, the millions of couch potatoes in America can feel good about themselves as they wallow on the sofa, stuffing themselves with some fattening food products, reflecting on how the TV announcer is telling them 'it's good for you.'" I was really on my high horse now and both Verns took a step back.

But not for long.

"They are also talking about serving hot and cold wheat grain cereals, fresh, frozen, dried and canned fruit, low fat yogurt, and whole grain bread," Vern said.

"Yeah, I can see it now," I said. "Some big burly ranger, his biceps bulging as his ham-sized hands daintily grip a container of strawberry yogurt for breakfast. Hey, these are men. They need manly foods, like stacks of pancakes, heaping servings of SOS and lotsa eggs to order."

"Sorry Clyde," Vern said, "Eggs to order will now be served just six days a week, but they will serve you steak biscuits, turkey and cheese sandwiches and tuna and cheese sandwiches for breakfast."

"For breakfast!" I interjected. Cheese sandwiches for breakfast! And they think eliminating eggs one day a week is going to cut down on cholesterol, yet here they come with cheese sandwiches." I was flabbergasted. I could feel a bad case of indigestion coming on.

But still they weren't finished. Next, they began talking about the fitness meal; the one with a baked or roasted entree, no gravy, salad bar and low calorie dressing, low calorie desert and low fat milk and margarine.

"Listen," I said. "If the Army is interested in people who are too heavy for their height, then they need to start charging a la carte. You send Clyde Snively through a mess hall line and he's going to eat everything he's entitled to. You start putting individual prices on things, and he becomes a selective eater. That's how you do away with overeaters."

The Verns couldn't handle it any more. They just looked at me with their deep, sad eyes, through their horn-rimmed glasses, shook their heads and walked off.

Army succeeds where others faltered

Army News Service

The Army official in charge of the man power personnel integration program (MANPRINT) recently labeled that program highly successful for the Army after it had limited success in other organizations.

Dr. Harold R. Booher, who directs the program at the Pentagon, explained that the Army has incorporated the program in its weaponry procurement process.

According to Booher, MANPRINT — coined by Gen. Richard H. Thompson when he commanded the Army Materiel Command in Alexandria, Va. — contributes to budgetary restraint in national defense through its primary objective: to design equipment soldiers can use.

MANPRINT incorporates human-factors engineering, health hazard assessment, man power, personnel, training and system safety into the acquisition of weapon systems.

Among many other things, human-factors engineering takes into account soldiers' physical dimensions (height and weight) when designing weaponry or equipment. For example, under the program, the Army wouldn't build a tank with a hatch too small for some soldiers.

"The Navy, Air Force and the Nuclear Regulatory Commission tried to initiate major human factors programs in the past and failed," Booher said.

"So when I took this job in 1986 I was skeptical," he continued.

"Will it work for the Army? I asked. We're trying to change our entire culture in how we design and build equipment.

Booher attributes part of the Army's MANPRINT success story to support from Army leadership.

"A lot of credit goes to Army leadership for opening the doors," he said. "That was a necessary condition. If you don't have support from the top it will never happen. The door is open, and our job here is to make it happen.

"We have established four strategies to assure MANPRINT's success," Booher continued. First, we created a regulation, policy and guidance. Then, we established a strategy for education and training. We've trained some 1,400 people to date. We conduct a one-week mid-level managers' course 10 times a year and a three-year action-officer course also supports the program. We're looking to the future where we can develop centers of excellence for MANPRINT.

"We're also considering changing the engineering curriculum in the whole national education system so that future engineers will have an appreciation for human-factors engineering and other MANPRINT features," he said.

"Our work also affects the whole training system throughout the Department of Defense. We all work with the same industry. We can't expect industry to change their design process totally just for the Army." The third strategy allows Army MANPRINT to take part directly in the decision-making process. Here, theoretically, a new program can be stopped if it really is off-track when it reaches the Army Systems Acquisition Review Council, according to Booher.

"The idea is to identify and resolve the problems very early, so by the time a program gets to the council it has been truly 'MANPRINTed' and will pass through successfully. The 'light helicopter experimental,' better known as the LHX, and the Army 'Forward Area Air Defense' are two such MANPRINTed systems," Booher added.

The final strategy consists of research and development. This allows industry to solicit soldiers' input and involvement in designing equipment for them. It supports the basic MANPRINT philosophy — "That the soldier is our most important resource, and that the weapons and equipment we develop and acquire must serve him/her — not vice versa," said AMC chief of staff Maj. Gen. Jerry C. Harrison, during the 8th National Security Industrial Association Conference in Orlando, Fla. "Soldiers can operate, maintain and support MANPRINTed systems at the lowest overall cost," Harrison said. "We're clothing the soldier with equipment." MANPRINT helps the Army avoid developing and buying weaponry too complex for the soldiers to operate and maintain or that requires more crew members than anticipated in the original development.

Government-led seminars and conferences for industry serve to stress the importance of MANPRINT for the Army; they also help assure industry of the Army's sincerity for incorporating MANPRINT in the weaponry procurement process.

During a recent MANPRINT seminar in Alexandria, Va., Army Deputy Chief of Staff for Personnel Lt. Gen Allen K. Ono, and Gen. Arthur E. Brown Jr., the Army vice chief of staff, met with key industrial executives and provided updated information on the status of MANPRINT policies and procedures.

Topics presented included MANPRINT integration into the request-for-proposal and source-selection processes; input to the new MANPRINT analytical support tools; and MANPRINT initiatives at both the Army's Human Engineering Laboratory and the Army Research Institute for the Behavioral Sciences.

Booher explained that the "request for proposal" serves as the primary procurement document used by the Army Materiel Command to solicit equipment and services. It tells industry exactly what the Army wants to procure, and it starts the competitive bidding process among industry.

"MANPRINT requirements must be clearly stated here," he said. "During the source-selection process, the Army evaluates how well the MANPRINT requirements in the request-for-proposal have been met."

What started out to help the Army may very well help the whole country. "The United States should look to the Army to take the lead on this,"Booher concluded."

Handicapped parent overcomes odds

By Agatha H. James
Bayonet staff writer

How does a crippled, disabled mother raise two small children while at the same time raise her own sense of self-worth and self-esteem. Patricia T. Barnett did it by embarking on a self-improvement program that has taken her to heights some may say are unreachable for many disabled persons.

Diagnosed with limb-girdle muscular dystrophy and confined to a wheelchair, Barnett, who is a medical clerk in the Admissions and Dispositions (A & D) section at Martin Army Community Hospital, is the Columbus-Fort Benning area's Handicapped Employee of the Year. Selected by the Mayor's Committee for the Handicapped, her list of accomplishments and personal triumphs is one that many people can admire.

Through a series of decisions and actions, Barnett changed her status from a low or non-producing member of society to a productive one. After the low point in her life when she dropped out of high school to get married at age 17, she began a steady climb up.

First, she decided to go back to school to obtain her high school equivalency. Next, she attended vocational school, then she enrolled in college obtaining an Associate's degree in mental health then a Bachelor's degree. After she landed full-time employment, she enrolled in Georgia State University's master's program. If all that isn't enough, she also served the community through extensive volunteer work.

Here's how her story began:

"From the time I first learned to walk to age 12 when I had surgery, I walked on my tiptoes," she said. "My mother really didn't realize there was a major problem until a public health nurse came by our house. She (the nurse) enrolled me in the Health Department's Crippled Children's program."

Over the next 17 years, Barnett received physical therapy, braces, surgery to release the ligaments which caused her to tiptoe, and corrective shoes. Although the therapy and surgery helped her to walk in a heel-to-toe fashion, her legs were still no better; in fact, they were getting progressively weaker.

The physicians at the Crippled Children's clinic told her she had a rare form of arthritis. It wasn't until after age 21 when she consulted a private physician that she learned she had a neuromuscular disease called muscular dystrophy. She also learned there is no cure and the disease eventually would affect other parts of her body.

When asked how this knowledge made her feel, she responded, "At first, I didn't think much about it. I had always walked with a limp, and I had accepted that as a part of my life."

"When I was growing up, my mother made me do all the chores my sisters did, in spite of my leg problems. Even though it would take me longer, I still had to clean the house, wash dishes and wash and hang clothes."

Because she was not treated like a handicapped person, Barnett learned that she could do anything anyone else could do. "It may take me longer, but once I make up my mind, I can do anything."

After she obtained her high school equivalency certificate, she enrolled in Columbus Technical School's Custom Dressmaking and Tailoring course. She graduated two years later; and for the next ten years, she supplemented her welfare check by sewing for individuals at home.

But, this did not satisfy Barnett. She wanted to be gainfully employed; she did not like having work only part time. She wanted full-time employment with a steady income.

She knew that getting an education would improve her chances of getting a job. In 1978, she enrolled in Columbus College. Six years later after facing many frustrations and obstacles (her walking defect prevented her from getting from one class to another within 10 minutes, she was unable to carry an arm load of books and walk with the cane she now needed, and classes were not available when needed), she graduated with a Bachelor of Science degree.

All she wanted next, more than anything in the world, was a full-time job. After combing the help wanted ads daily, submitting hundreds of applications, having several interviews, and volunteering for just about anything, she landed her present position as a medical clerk at Martin Army Community Hospital. "I placed applications everywhere," she said, "even at places where I really didn't want to work. I would have taken almost any job just to get the experience."

Barnett said that's one of the reasons she volunteered her time so much. "I wanted the community to know that I could work and that I was capable of doing a job. I had to show what I could do, even if it meant I would not be paid. I had to prove that I possessed skills." For three years, she was a counselor with Contact, a telephone listening ministry; and, for one year, she worked as an office caseworker with the Red Cross. Currently, she serves as Hospice Volunteer Coordinator.

With so many accomplishments and personal triumphs and overcoming what may have seemed like insurmountable hurdles, it's no wonder the Mayor's Committee for the Handicapped selected Barnett to receive its top award.

"She's like the unsinkable Mollie Brown," said Gail McKoon, Mayor's Handicapped Committee director. "She has had so many things thrown at her, but she always manages to come out on top. She's a real trooper." McKoon added that as the winner of the Mayor's award, Barnett will be nominated as the Governor's Handicapped Employee of the Year; and, if she wins, she will go on to compete for the President's Committee for Employment of Persons with Disabilities award.

At the Mayor's awards banquet, Barnett received a plaque and two gift certificates.

ASK THE JUDGE

By Jessica L. Kole
Staff Judge Advocate's Office

Q: I gave my wife a general power of attorney before I left for REFORGER. I just returned home and did I have a surprise waiting for me. While I was gone, she used the power of attorney to buy a brand new sports car; and the loan is in my name. She said she also tried to use it to buy a fur coat on credit, but, luckily, the store wouldn't let her use the power of attorney. How could the car dealership let her do such a thing? We can't afford payments on a new car. I don't understand any of this. What happened?

A. I hope you like the car color and style she picked. By giving your wife a general power of attorney, you gave her the authority to do anything you could have done yourself, including buying a new car. She just took advantage of the situation. A power of attorney is a legal document that allows someone you name to act as your legal agent. Your agent can use the POA to do any act you authorize. There are two different types of POA. A general POA allows the person you name to do almost any of the things that you could legally do yourself, such as borrow money, buy or sell property, ship household goods, clear quarters, etc. A special POA lists a particular act or acts you authorize your agent to do for you, such as register your car, or provide medical care for your children. As you can see, a POA can be a very powerful document and should only be given to someone you trust.

Some important points about POAs: A POA is no longer valid once the person who gives it dies. However, the document can be written to remain valid in the event the person who gives it is mentally disabled or in a POW/MIA status. It should expire as soon as the act for which the agent has the POA has been completed. In any case, a long-term POA should be rewritten at least every two years. A POA can be revoked at any time. Realistically though, it may be difficult to revoke it, especially if you don't know all the places where the POA was accepted. Finally, you must be aware that any business or person has the right to refuse to honor a POA.

The Fort Benning Legal Assistance Office has all types of POAs available. They are prepared on a walk-in basis. The office hours are Monday through Friday, 8 a.m. to 5 p.m.

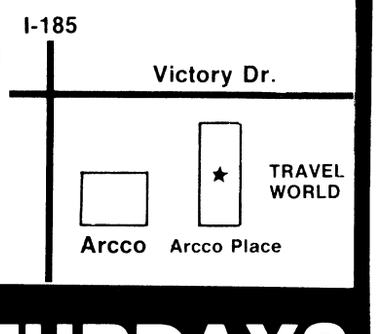
Drinking in park breaks local laws

By Patrick Reed
Military Police Activity

During recent weeks, there has been a significant rise in the number of military personnel assigned to Fort Benning being apprehended off-post by the Columbus Police Department for drinking in public.

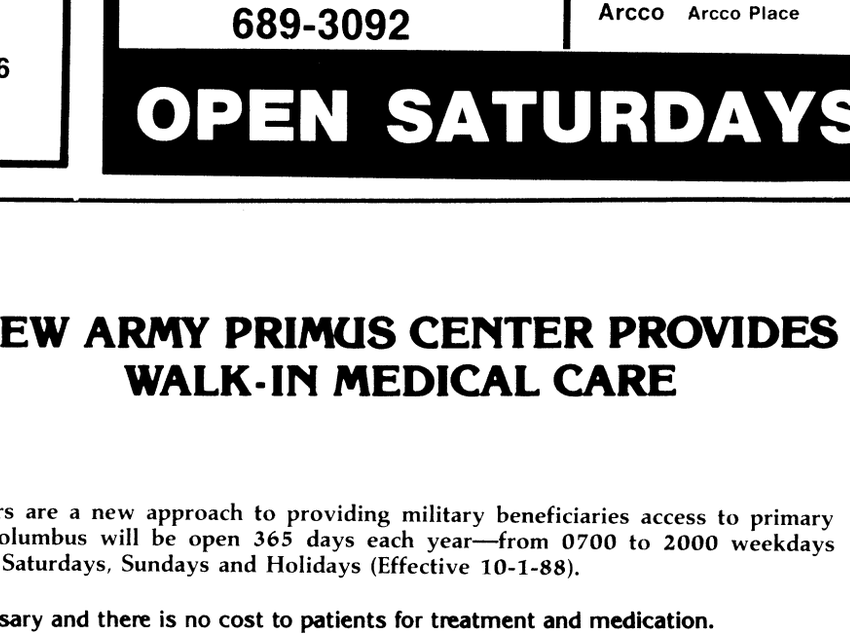
Columbus City Ordinance 14-5.1 prohibits the consumption of alcohol in a variety of public areas within the Columbus city limits. These areas include parking lots of both public buildings and private businesses, and public parks, playgrounds and other recreation areas.

City Ordinance 3-5L specifically addresses possession of alcoholic beverages in public parks. Under no circumstances will alcohol be permitted on these premises. Additionally, City Ordinance 4-41.1 prohibits being in public parks after dark. Soldiers may be accustomed to different laws and procedures in their home states and cities, but while assigned at Fort Benning, local laws apply.



The maximum penalties for drinking in public are up to 60 days in jail and a $350 fine. Violation of these ordinances are misdemeanors and may require a court appearance. Even so, these offenses are reportable through Military Police and military command channels.

Soldiers assigned both temporarily and as permanent party to Fort Benning are being cited under City Ordinance 14.5.1. These laws have been, and will continue, to be enforced by the Columbus Police Department.



Obey the laws of both Fort Benning and Columbus, and Help Take A Bite Out of Crime.

If you plan to travel, remember to book discount lodging reservations with the ITT Office. Catholic community installs senior priest

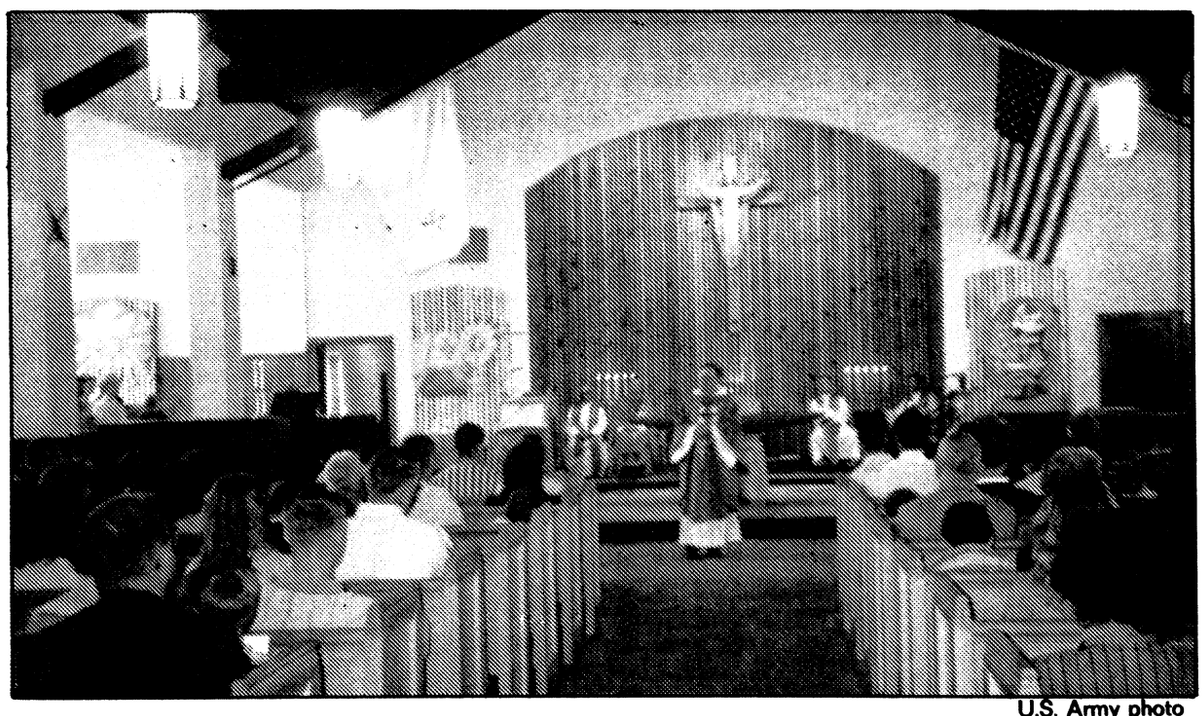
USAIC Chaplain's Office

The Roman Catholic community of Fort Benning installed Chap. (Lt. Col.) James Barry Lonergan as its senior Catholic Priest Oct. 16 at the Main Post Catholic Chapel.



Chap. (Lt. Col.) Richard Goldsmith represented the Post Chaplain and presented Chap. Lonergan to the community. Chap. (Lt. Col.) Michael Chilen represented the Archbishop for the military services.

The Rite of Installation was specially created for the ceremony and involved representatives from all aspects of the Catholic community.

Chap. Lonergan is a native of Ticonderoga, N.Y. He was ordained a priest of the Roman Catholic Church June 18, 1966. He represents the Diocese of Albany, N.Y., in the U.S. Army Chaplaincy. He did his undergraduate studies at the University of the State of New York and studied theology at Atonement Seminary in Washington, D.C. between 1962-1966.

Following his ordination, he graduated studies in theology and counseling psychology at Catholic University in Washington, D.C. His assignments from 1966-1970 included teaching at the high school and university level, serving as a counseling psychologist in a major seminary and as a retreat director. He then spent two and one-half years in the Archdiocese of Vancouver, British Columbia, where he assisted in the development of the "Come to the Father" religious education program.

In 1972, he joined the U.S. Army. During the past 16 years, Lonergan has served as Chaplain to the 60th Infantry Battalion, 9th Infantry Division; Assistant Command Chaplain, 19th Support Command (Korea); Assistant Staff Chaplain, U.S. Army SAFEGUARD Command (ABM); Chaplain, 16th Engineer Battalion (Germany); Catholic Military Chaplain, Corps of Cadets, U.S. Military Academy; Brigade Chaplain, Third Brigade, Second Infantry Division (Korea); Religious Education Chaplain, Fort Ord, Calif.; 9th Regimental Chaplain, Seventh Infantry Division; and Division Chaplain, Second Infantry Division (Korea). He is currently the Staff Chaplain at the Infantry Training Center.

Group chaplains serve up Destin spiritual refreshment

By Chap. David Penland
Group Chaplain

Nothing to do with your weekend? Don't tell that to the Chapel Single Soldiers group of the 36th Engineers. Recently 33 single soldiers from within the 36th Engineer Group traveled to the Fort Benning Recreation Center at Destin, Fla. for a weekend of sand, surf, and spiritual refreshment.

The Group Chaplains led the retreatants in a discussion of God's rules for living the first evening. That evening they also enjoyed a seafood dinner at the "Seafood Factory" in Destin.

Saturday a number of the group rented a pontoon boat and went fishing and swimming in the gulf, while the rest hit the beach.

The staff at the Fort Benning Recreation Center in Destin is headed by retired CSM Joe Cross, formerly of Fort Benning.

The cabins the group stayed in were complete with kitchens and color televisions and comfortable sleeping accommodations. The Recreation Center itself has a new pool right on the ocean. They also had access to motorized and sail craft for rent.

Sunday the group worshiped together and talked about the need for a Christian heart and kind attitude to go along with knowledge of who Christ is. On Oct. 2 they headed home.

The Destin Fort Benning Recreation Center was an ideal location for relaxation, and spiritual renewal. 36th Engineer Group soldiers recommend it highly.

'Operation Saturation' increases Bible study opportunities for all

By Chap. Terry A. Dempsey
USAIC Chaplain's Office

Recently, the Fort Benning Chaplains began a project called "Operation Saturation." The project's goal is to increase the number of Bible Study opportunities for soldiers and family members.

Our religious education program offers a broad variety of spiritual growth areas with something for everyone. But all of these structured experiences are designed to supplement the vital and deliberate home Bible study plan of each individual and family.

A simple and effective approach to studying the New Testament is found in taking as an outline for your study the "Great Commission" of Jesus in Matthew 28:18-20. There we find Jesus saying, "All authority has been given to me in heaven and on earth. Go therefore and make disciples of all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father and the Son and the Holy Spirit, teaching them to observe all that I commanded you; and lo, I am with you always even to the end of the age."

Jesus' statement, "All authority has been given me," is the first part of our study. Jesus and His authority are introduced to us in what we call the gospels: Matthew, Mark, Luke, and John. Here, we read of Jesus' birth, ministry, death, and resurrection. In these books, we find a record of His miracles and see His authority established.

Next, in Acts, we are with the believers as they go and make disciples of all nations. The good news of salvation is preached and disciples are baptized in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit as Christianity spreads.

Finally, the promise of Jesus that He is with us always, even to the end of the age, is brought to life in the book of Revelation. In spite of different interpretations of this apocalyptic book, Jesus' promise to be with us and give us victory even in the midst of problems and persecutions is very clear to all.

If you have been putting off reading and studying the New Testament because it seemed too hard to approach, this simple outline can help it all fall into place. Why not sit down and start today?

Locate your category of housing.

Note eligibility date located on the same line as your category.

Calculate the time difference between the eligibility date listed and your eligibility date. The difference is the approximate time you still have to wait for housing.

EXAMPLE: If the latest eligibility date of the person who last received housing in your category was May 15, 1988, and your date of eligibility is Sept. 15, 1988, you can expect housing in about four months. If you do not know your eligibility date, contact the Family Housing Office at building 399, 545-3107.

197th Support Battalion keeps brigade operational

'Dependables' come through at REFORGER

Sally Roberts

Spec. Anthony Williams, Co. C, 197th Spt. Bn., checks the gauge on a fuel truck while a customer fills the tank.

By Sally Roberts
197th Infantry Brigade

Let a mechanized unit run out of fuel, and they lose their maneuverability and die on the battlefield. Let a unit run out of food, and the soldier loses strength and morale. Let a much needed repair part not find its way to a broken down vehicle, and the fighting force is weakened.

One thing that makes the 197th Infantry Brigade a separate brigade is the fact that the 197th Support Battalion is a full-time part of the unit, filling the never-ending need for supplies of fuel, water, rations, repair parts and other classes of supply.

During REFORGER, the Support Battalion "Dependables" were operational nearly every hour of the day, every day, to support the combat arms units who seized all the glory on the battlefield.

"As long as we have vehicles coming in for fuel, our day rolls," said SSgt. Sylvester Walls, POL assistant platoon sergeant. "We have a 24-hour-a-day operation."

The POL section from Company C, 197th Support Battalion, keeps the brigade fueled with diesel, mogas, and other oils and lubricants.

According to SSgt. Walls, during the heaviest days of maneuvering in the exercise, the brigade and attached units used up to 20,000 gallons of fuel. Keeping soldiers fueled is also a mission of the Support Battalion and the proportion of rations for soldiers is almost as great as the proportions of fuel for the vehicles.

"We have units picking up rations at all hours of the day," said SFC Vincente Babauta from Brigade Food Service. "The units have always been on the move and jumping from one spot to another. But we have to make sure that the soldier gets fed."

Many soldiers may not realize that the hard work of the Support personnel affects them several times each duty day. When the fuel gauge nears empty, while waiting on a needed repair part, while standing in a chow line or when the battle rages and ammunition is low, 197th Support Battalion soldiers maintain the life line for the brigade.

Water purification section supplies clean water for soldiers

Provides 8,000-10,000 gallons every day

By George Mingee
197th Infantry Brigade

For the Sledgehammer Brigade soldiers, it's no problem to take a drink of water. The water purification section from Company C, 197th Support Battalion provides the brigade with 8,000 to 10,000 gallons of potable water each day.

According to SSgt. Ricky Laws, water purification starts with a pond, lake or stream and a Water Quality Analysis Set. This determines the hardents, or minerals found in the water, such as calcium and magnesium; and the PH level. Using an additional test known as the Chlorine Residual Test, it's possible to find the level of chlorine present and the amount of chemicals needed to treat the water.

The water is pumped out of the pond into the separation unit and undergoes many changes. According to Sgt. John Weaver, ferric chloride is used as a coagulating compound to clump the debris in the water. The debris, along with limestone, settles to the bottom of the tank and the good water filters over the top of the tank. Since the water still contains impurities, it's sent through a final filtering process and chlorine is added to kill germs.

The final "go" to make the water potable comes when the brigade's Preventive Medicine personnel test the water and are satisfied that it's safe to drink.

In a training environment clear, safe, drinkable water is taken for granted.

"If we go to war, the water buffalos just won't be instantly filled with water and ready for use," said Spec. Kevin Foster. "The water will come from available natural sources, and it will have to be purified first."

George Mingee

PFC Conrad Sampson (l) and Spec. Slyde Richardson, Co. C, 197th Spt. Bn., test purified water to ensure it's safe for soldiers' consumption.

Columbus Lions Club sets up reward fund with hopes of catching a killer

By Ron Allen
USAIC Public Affairs Office

The Columbus Lions Club's R.W. Garner has established a Benjamin Siegfried Reward Fund at Trust Company Bank of Columbus.

The fund was set up to help find the robber who shot and killed Benjamin Siegfried during a Spectrum Store holdup this summer.

Siegfried was the son of Brig. Gen. and Mrs. Richard S. Siegfried. Brig. Gen. Siegfried is the assistant division commander for maneuver at the 5th Infantry Division, Fort Polk, La. Until January of this year, he was the commander of the Infantry School's 2nd Infantry Training Brigade.

Benjamin, 22, was a clerk in the 1645 Manchester Expressway store when it was robbed in the early morning hours of July 31. A customer found him lying on the floor bleeding from a bullet wound to the head. He died at the Medical Center 12 days after the robbery.

Benjamin attended Columbus College and was a member of the Tau Kappa Epsilon fraternity.

A Benjamin Thomas Siegfried Scholarship Fund has also been set up at the Columbus Bank & Trust Co.

Anyone can make donations to the Reward Fund or the Scholarship Fund. Donations to the Reward Fund can be made at any branch of the Trust Company Bank of Columbus. Donations to the Scholarship Fund can be made at any branch of the Columbus Bank & Trust Company.

Benning benefits by saving energy

By Becky Ray
Energy Branch

Fiscal year 1988 was a good year for energy consumers and managers at Fort Benning. The post met and exceeded the year's target for energy use set by the Training and Doctrine Command (TRADOC), which governs the post. For the second time since TRADOC began establishing energy use goals, the installation has used less energy than the amount budgeted.

Fort Benning's energy managers have calculated consumption at 1.8 percent below the targeted amount. In percentage terms the amount seems small, but in terms of paying utility bills, the cost of the energy the post saved is estimated at about $330,000.

TRADOC energy policy allows an installation that uses less energy than budgeted to keep part of the savings to invest in other post projects.

Fort Benning has made its energy goal only once before, in fiscal year '86. In that year, the newly installed Energy Management and Control System contributed to the posts finishing the year at 5 percent below goal and saving more than $1 million dollars in energy costs.

In the past year, reduced energy use was a result of improvements in the EMCS operation and overall energy management. Another contribution to energy savings was the movement of organizations to more energy-efficient facilities, and the demolition of many old, uninsulated WWII buildings.

One of the most important reasons for the success, however, was increased community awareness of energy conservation and positive actions by the Fort Benning community to reduce energy use. Post residents and workers concerned with energy waste for economical, environmental and ethical reasons stepped up efforts to use energy resources wisely, resulting in energy savings.

More efficient use of energy in fiscal year '88 also resulted in more services to those living and working on post. Energy savings early in the year allowed air conditioners to be used later in the season, for a longer period than in any year on record.

However, this success doesn't mean Fort Benning can forget about conserving energy. Because the Army has mandated a 15.5 percent reduction in energy use by 1995 from 1985 baseline figures, TRADOC reduces the Fort Benning goal by 1.5 percent each year. This means that in 1989, the post faces the same challenges to conserve energy as in the past.

Beware of snakes in the woods during fall months

DNR

Autumn has officially arrived in Georgia — a season especially attractive to those interested in the great outdoors. The Department of Natural Resources (DNR) reminds Georgians to watch for snakes in the fall woods.

"During fall months, snakes are searching woodlands and other areas that attract people, looking for a place to spend the winter. Those who plan to spend time outdoors this fall, particularly in Georgia's woodlands, should be aware of their increased chances of encountering a snake," says DNR Wildlife Biologist Ron Simpson.

According to Simpson, most snakes that people happen upon are harmless, but all snakes should be left alone. "In Georgia, approximately 38 nonpoisonous and six poisonous snakes occur, including the rare, deadly coral snake," he warns. "Of the few people bitten each year by poisonous snakes in Georgia, most were attempting to catch or kill the reptile."

To avoid the possibility of a poisonous snake bite, Simpson advises, "Simply watch for snakes. If you plan to be in 'snake country,' wear heavy shoes or boots. Heavy pants hanging down over footwear offers added protection. Snake leggings or boots are a good investment for those planning to spend a lot of time in Georgia's woodlands."

Measures to keep snakes from "settling in" around homes during autumn and winter include removing any debris that would provide snake cover such as limbs and rock piles, trimming dense shrubbery and cutting weedy areas, Simpson suggests.

For more advise on avoiding snakes in Georgia, contact the nearest Game Management Office of the Department of Natural Resources, or call Wildlife Biologist Ron Simpson in Albany at 912/439-4254.

White House Fellowships application deadline nears

Deadline nears for White House Fellows applications

Officers wishing to compete for 1989-90 White House Fellowships have until Nov. 1 to submit their applications, say officials at the U.S. Total Army Personnel Agency here.

Each year the President's Commission on White House Fellows selects 13-15 exceptionally promising persons from all sectors of American life –the medical professions, business, military, the arts and the academic community as White House Fellows.

White House Fellows serve for a one-year period in such positions as special assistants on the White House staff or at cabinet-level agencies.

The President's Commission on White House Fellows has determined the only eligibility requirement that cannot be waived is United States citizenship. While eligibility criteria, as specified in AR 621-7, Acceptance of Fellowships, Scholarships, or Grants, do not apply to this program, officers wishing to compete must request permission in accordance with the regulation.

Requests to compete will be forwarded directly to each officer's Career Management Division. Requests may be submitted by letter or message. Authority to compete will be granted by the TAPA commander.

Following approval to compete, candidates will apply directly to the President's Commission on White House Fellows. The deadline is Dec. 1, 1988. Application forms will be forwarded to approved competitors by TAPA when permission to compete is granted.

Final selection is scheduled for June 1989, and the 1989-1990 fellowship begins in September 1989. Officers selected to participate in the program will receive full pay and allowances at their current grade level and PCS to the Washington, D.C., area.

Normally, applicants must have a minimum of 24 months on station in CONUS, or have completed a normal overseas tour by August 1989. Normal Joint Duty stability requirements are applicable.

For more information about the White House Fellows program, contact Linda Hakenson at AUTOVON 221-3140 or commercial (202) 325-3140.

586th bridges with 2998th N G

By Thomas Smythe
586th Engineer Company

The 586th Engineer Company (AFB) recently completed two weeks of cross training with the 2998th Engineer Company of the Tennessee National Guard out of Martin, Tenn. during its annual training period here Aug. 1 through 12.

The 2998th is presently an M-4T6 Float Bridge Company transitioning to the ribbon bridge equipment, like the 586th, in the near future. As a part of this transition, Capt. Jimmie Brown, commander of the 2998th, decided that joint training with the 586th was an opportunity he could not pass up; so a schedule combining a week of ribbon training for the 2998th and a week of M-4T8 training for the 586th was planned.

Even though M-4T6 is being eliminated from the Army's inventory and replaced by the more expedient ribbon, it is still a tested subject for the 12C-series MOS, the predominant skill in the 586th.

The transition training began Aug. 1 in the 586th motor pool where soldiers of the 2998th were introduced to ribbon equipment and proper performance of operator maintenance on the bridge erection boats and bridge bays. The next two days, classes were centered on the nuts and bolts of ribbon bridging with classes taught on launch and retrieval of boats and bays, raft assembly, and rafting techniques.

Maximum time and emphasis was placed on hands-on performance and evaluation throughout the training, Which ended with a rafting practical exercise. The soldiers of the 2998th were energetic and enthusiastic about their new mission and caught on very quickly.

On Thursday and Friday, the training shifted gears from rafting to bridging, completely closing the gap across the Chattahoochee River at Engineer Landing.

During this time, the 2998th leaders were trained on management techniques for bridge construction and tactics surrounding full-blown bridge operations. Simultaneously, the soldiers were taught and drilled on bridge assembly with the climax on Friday morning when the 2998th moved its convoy from the field across a bridge they had constructed.

The following week had the 2998th giving refresher training to soldiers of the 586th in M-4T6 construction. Since the soldiers of the 586th have worked some with the M-4T6 the training was primarily refamiliarization with bridge components and building techniques.

The 2998th Annual Training period concluded with a demonstration for Martin, Tenn. civilians, comparing the vast improvements of the ribbon bridge to M-4T6. To illustrate these differences, the 2998th built a four-float, class 50 raft on Aug. 9, which takes approximately 2.25 hours by the book.

As a comparison, soldiers from the 586th second platoon installed a class 60 raft in 6 minutes, 37 seconds, which is 8½ minutes under the ARTEP standard. The enormous advantages of the ribbon raft were clearly evident. Bridging times are also significantly reduced when using ribbon components.

As both units come away from the training, it is another example of close cooperation between active and Guard components to better prepare ourselves for a future conflict. Everyone involved came away better prepared in some way.

Both teams featured some of the top shooters in the world including Erich Buljung, a recent silver medal winner at the Olympic Games, and Attila Zahonyi, who won a bronze medal at the Olympic Games.

During the matches, held at Hook and Philips ranges, USAMU and Hungary split in the team championship with three matches each.

Hungary won the 10-meter air pistol, 10-meter air rifle, and the 25-meter rapid fire pistol events. The USAMU won the 50-meter free pistol, 50-meter rifle prone and the three-position team events.

In the individual championships, USAMU won four of the six events, air pistol, free pistol, rapid fire and 50-meter free rifle.

1/50th out-throws 2/11th in post football tourney

By Ron Allen
USAIC Public Affairs

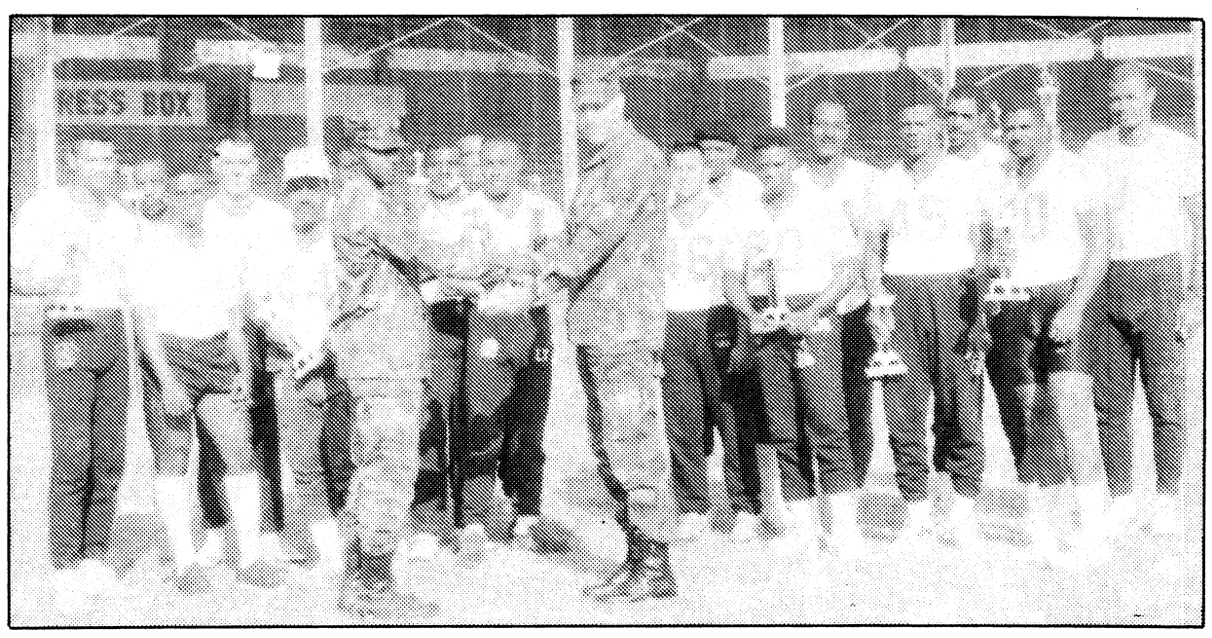
Quarterback Michael K. Beans led the 1st Battalion, 50th Infantry to a 22-6 win over HHC, 2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry in the USAIC Flag Football Championship Oct. 13.

Beans threw three touchdown passes, all to end, Walter K. Jarard, and ran in an extra point while the defense, lead by defensive end, Aster L. Grate, almost pulled off the shut out.

Early in the first half, Beans fired a bullet to Jarard in the end zone. Running back Curtis Shanklin then ran the ball in for the extra points.

Near the end of the first half, the 50th added six more when Beans fired another one to Jarard from 20 yards out. The extra point attempt failed; and the half ended with the 50th out front, 14-zip.

Beans and Jarard teamed up for a final score near the middle of the second half on a 40-yard pass play, and the Beans called his own number for the extra point making the score 22-zip.



As the game neared the final minutes, 2nd Bn. 11th Inf. quarterback, Darrell Baker, found Nathaniel Zellner in the end zone to avoid the shut out. The extra point attempt failed.

"These players have been waiting for this since last year when we missed the tournament by one game," said Bob Ciccolella, defensive coach 50th Inf. "Most of these players are the same ones who lost in the final game of the ITC Championship and failed to make the USAIC Tournament."

"Last year, they made a pledge to win it all this year. They've been talking about it all year," Ciccolella said. "This was more than just a post championship to them, they went all out to win, they believed they could do it and then followed through."

The 50th Inf. finished the season with a 11-1 record, their only loss coming at the hands of the Reception Battalion. "That loss just inspired us to go on and win," Ciccolella added.

"We had some outstanding plays in what turned out to be a very rough game," said Dewayne Chapman, 50th offensive coach. "Wide receiver, Jimmie Walker, was making some great first down catches out there; and both lines were just amazing. We're just waiting to come back for the second season.

Col. James I. Daily (r), Fort Benning Chief of Staff, awards Dewayne Chapman, offensive coach of the 1/50th, the first place trophy for the USAIC Flag Football Championship.

The eighth annual National Infantry Museum Road Race is set for Oct. 29 here. This race is one of the largest held in the Southeast. Last year, more than 5,000 runners, pictured above at the start of the race, participated, and that number is expected again this year. The course follows a five-mile route throughout the main post area with the start and finish line in the vicinity of Building 4. The cost of registration is $7 with all proceeds going to the Infantry Museum. Registration is now being conducted at the Museum, and special registration will be held at Briant Wells Fieldhouse Oct. 28, 5-9 p.m. Registration can also be accomplished the morning of the race in Building 4. For more information, call the Museum at 545-2958 or Bernard Pfeiffer at 545-1130/3285.

Falcons still atop Termite League

Youth Activities Sports

In Youth Activities Sports action over the weekend, the Falcons remain in the number one spot in the Termite Football League after crushing the Cowboys, 36-zip.

The Falcons, now 5-1, dedicated this game to teammate, Dinky Bailey, who was out with pneumonia.

B.J. Rogers lead the Falcons with two rushing TDs and a total of 65 yards. One pass play went to Jeremy Howell for a 55-yard TD, he was also credited with seven tackles on defense. Gabriel Borders netted six points on point-after attempts and posted 45 yards on four carries. Darryl Blackwell also had 45 yards on four carries. Eugene Phillips, Don Walls, Karam Becks and Blackwell had four tackles each.

In other football action, the Sooners tangled with the Redskins in the Pee Wee League. The Sooners slipped by with a 22-20 in overtime when Joseph Addison sacked the Redskins quarterback in the end zone for the two-point score and the win.

The Redskins scored on their first drive, but the lead was short lived as the Sooners' Franklin Mills ran back the ensuing kickoff 75 yards for the TD.

Sooners' quarterback, Torrey Gooding, faked a pass right and threw back left to Mills late in the second quarter for a TD. The Sooners scored again in the third quarter and lead the Redskins 20-6.

Redskins' Charles Graham brought his team back late in the third quarter when he intercepted a pass and ran for the TD. He later lead the offense on a 80-yard march to tie the game and take it into OT.

The only reported action in YA Soccer was a defensive battle between the Thunderbirds and the Falcons in the Grasshopper League where the Thunderbirds won 1-zip.

Manuel Rosendo, playing center forward, scored the only goal of the game upsetting the favored Falcons. Rosendo also made a game-winning save late in the second half when he played goalie.

Know rules of firearms

Hunting season nears

GNDR

Thousands of Georgians are preparing to head afield to enjoy the challenge and rewards of hunting. Last year, more than 450,000 people hunted in Georgia for an estimated 6,000,000 man days of hunting. Most of them planned their trips carefully, studying maps, sighting-in rifles, scouting hunting areas and making sure that everything was in order.

Too often, though, planning the hunt includes only an operational check of firearms and does not include a thorough review of the safety rules for using all firearms. Knowing and applying these rules, commonly known as the 10 Commandments of Safety, can make the difference between making the right decision and making a tragic mistake in the field.

Last hunting season, there were more accidents than ever before. Ninety-two hunting accidents were reported and of those, 13 were fatal. Most of these accidents were the result of carelessness; the failure of someone to follow the basic rules of firearm safety.

However, the greatest single cause of hunting accidents has nothing to do with firearms.

The number one cause of hunting accidents last year was the improper use of tree stands and none of these would have happened if the hunter had used common sense. Most of the accidents involve the permanent-type stand and too often, the hunter fails to carefully check the stand for broken parts or rot from the summer weather. Users of portable tree stands fail to ensure the stand is in good repair or fail to master the use of the device. Users of both type stands tend to drop off to sleep during the quiet hours of the hunt. This causes few concerns if the hunter is wearing a safety harness; many don't and three people were killed last year in falls from tree stands.

Other prominent causes of accidents last year were accidents where one hunter shoots another. A few were out of sight of the shooter, others were hit by a hunter swinging his gun on a game bird, while the rest were mistaken for game. All were guilty of violating the most basic hunting safety rule: Be sure of your target and what is beyond your target. 24 people were injured and three died because this rule was not heeded.

Last year, as usual, more than half the hunting accidents reported were self inflicted. These run the range of causes from the person who drops his gun, to falls, to careless handling of a firearm. They are probably the most difficult to rationalize, and 100 percent of them are preventable. Many would not have happened if hunters would learn not to load their guns except when actively hunting.

All hunting accidents are preventable. Some go so far as to say there is no such thing as a hunting accident. Of course, no one means for an accident to happen; but they do happen when carelessness comes into play. Hunting safety is up to the individual hunter; and if he obeys the 10 commandments of firearm safety, he will be invulnerable.

Hunting is one of the safest of all participatory sports. A hunter is far less likely to be injured while hunting than while playing football, baseball, basketball, or soccer. In fact, a hunter is far more likely to be injured while riding to the hunting ground than after he arrives. In the eye of the public, however, firearms are basically dangerous; and therefore, a sport that uses firearms is, in fact, dangerous. Nothing is further from the truth. A properly used firearm is no more dangerous than a baseball bat.

In Georgia, anyone born after Jan. 1, 1961, must take and pass Georgia's Hunter Safety Course given by representatives of the Department of Natural Resources, before he can legally hunt or buy a license to hunt. The course is given often in all areas of the state. Information on the course and where it may be taken is available from any Conservation Ranger or office of DNR's Game and Fish Division.

Three records set in Georgia gamefish records program

GDNR

Debbie Lewis, of Savannah, Ga., stands beside her record-breaking 34-pound, 14-ounce Atlantic Sailfish caught in June.

GDNR

Three state records were set and two were tied this summer in the Georgia Department of Natural Resources Saltwater Gamefish Records program. The women's division had record catches of Spanish mackerel, sailfish and wahoo, as well as a tie for red snapper. In the men's division, the tripletail record was tied and several outstanding catches were awarded.

Capt. Ida Knight of Savannah landed her record 7-pound, 14-ounce Spanish mackerel four miles southeast of Tybee Island during the Landings annual Spanish mackerel tournament. Knight not only broke the previous 7-pound, 3-ounce record, but also earned her a first place in the tournament.

Debbie Lewis, of Savannah, reeled in a 34-pound, 14-ounce sailfish from the Gulfstream off Savannah's coast. Lewis caught this new state record during the Savannah Sport Fishing Club's 17th Annual Billfish Tournament in June.

Landing a 77-pound wahoo 53 miles southeast of the R2W sea buoy, Dr. Linda Li-Chao Yang easily surpassed the previous 56-pound record. Yang is also a Savannah angler.

Jean Hancock, a Macon resident, tied the women's red snapper record with a 25-pound, 4-ounce catch. Hancock, fishing on the Savannah snapper banks, was only three ounces away from breaking the existing state record.

H.E. Bluestein tied the men's tripletail record with a 25-pound, 12-ounce catch landed in the Satilla Cove. Bluestein, of Darien, needed six more ounces to replace the existing state record held by Harry Parker of Brunswick. Bluestein's son, Phillip, was also awarded an outstanding catch certificate for a 24-pound, 2-ounce tripletail landed earlier in the summer.

Other outstanding catch awards went to Mike Holder, of Brunswick, for his 260-pound lemon shark; Walt Pipkin of St. Simons Island, for his 9-pound, 3-ounce Spanish mackerel; and his father, Marvin Pipkin, also of St. Simons Island, for his 7-pound 12-ounce Spanish mackerel.

The Georgia Saltwater Gamefish Records program is administered through the Coastal Resources Division (CRD) of the Department of Natural Resources. Anglers landing potential state record fish should contact the CRD office in Brunswick. The catch must be weighed on a certified scale and a completed application, along with clear photos of the anglers and fish must be submitted.

Checking deer benefits hunters

By Deck Major
Fish and Wildlife Specialist

Deer check for successful hunters at Fort Benning is voluntary. However, if at all possible, all hunters should make an effort to bring their deer to a check station. Everyone benefits!

Hunters are helped because their deer are aged and weighed. This information will help when it comes to processing. Fort Benning's Fish and Wildlife personnel and the deer themselves benefit because important information is collected that leads to scientific wildlife management practices that make for a healthy deer herd.

The main deer check station at Harmony Church (building 5883) will be open all weekends from Oct. 22 until an adequate sample of deer is examined. During the first week of gun season, the station will open at 7:45 a.m. and close at 4:15 p.m.

This year, two additional check station locations have been established to better sample the entire post harvest. On opening weekend of the Georgia season (Saturday and Sunday), a station will operate at the junction of Buena Vista Road and 10th Armored Division Road. On opening weekend of the Alabama season (Nov. 19-20), a station will operate on 101st Airborne Division Road. These stations may open at other times. Look for signs.

Weekend hours for all check stations are from 8 a.m.-8 p.m. during daylight savings time and from 8 a.m. — 7 p.m. hours during standard time.

Be a safe and ethical hunter. Hunting on Fort Benning is a privilege.

Symphony to hold first concert

Columbus Symphony Orchestra

The first concert of the Columbus Symphony's 1988-89 Masterpiece Series will take place at the Three Arts Theatre Saturday at 8 p.m. George Del Gobbo will conduct the orchestra, and guest pianist is Alexander Toradze.

Emigrating to America in 1983, Toradze first received recognition by winning the Silver Medal in the 1977 Van Cliburn International Competition. He has performed extensively in both this country and abroad with orchestras ranging from the New York Philharmonic to the London Symphony and Israel Philharmonic. He has also participated in the Mostly Mozart Festival at Lincoln Center and numerous other summer festivals. Born in Tbilisi, Georgia, he attended the Paliashvili School of Music and Tbilisi Conservatory before entering the Moscow Conservatory in 1971. He was the subject of a PBS television documentary called "Lexo," and was recently featured in "People Magazine" when his mother was given permission to come from Russia to visit him.

Alexander Toradze

Toradze has toured extensively and has recorded on the Angel/EMI label.

This concert, which is sponsored by Columbus Bank and Trust Company, is given in joint celebration of CB&T's 100th anniversary and the CSO's 40th.

The program comprises John Adams' "And the Chairman Danced" from "Nixon in China," Rachmaninoff's Piano Concerto No. 2, and Symphony No. 4 by Tchaikowsky. Conductor Del Gobbo will speak about the music at a preconcert lecture at 7 p.m. the night of the concert. There is no charge for the lecture.

VETERANS Q & A

Veterans Administration

Q - I am a woman veteran. Can I obtain gender-related medical treatment at a VA facility

A - Yes, provided you meet the general eligibility requirements for medical care. Women veteran coordinators have been designated at each VA medical center and at many regional offices to counsel women veterans seeking treatment.

Q - Can the current monthly rate of VA benefits received by a veteran be disclosed to a third party?

A - Yes. The monthly amount of benefits is considered public information; however, information concerning the veteran's disabilities cannot be released without the veteran's prior consent.

Q - Will the Veterans Administration release my new address to my estranged wife?

A - No. Your address is privileged information and may not be released to anyone without your permission.

Labor Dept recognizes post efforts

By Agatha H. James
Bayonet staff writer

For the first time, the U. S. Department of Labor has selected Fort Benning as Georgia's outstanding employer of handicapped veterans and workers over age 55.

The selections, which are made annually, recognize the company or organization in the state that employs the greatest percentage of disabled veterans and/or handicapped older workers. This year, Fort Benning was cited for both categories.

Gene Wagner, the American Legion's State Employment Committee chairman and the Department of Labor's director of Veteran Employment and Training, presented two plaques to Chief of Staff, Col. James I. Daily.

In accepting the awards, Daily said the the post is proud to employ these types of workers.

According to Georgia Employment Office local officials, the post has the highest ratio of handicapped workers who are disabled veterans or older workers among employers in the Columbus-Fort Benning area.

"Each year we select a local company to compete at state level for the award," said Annette Corley, field services manager of the local Georgia Department of Labor office. "This year, we nominated Fort Benning because the post has the best handicapped employment record in those two categories in the area."

A committee of veteran representatives viewed nominations from employment offices across the state and selected the employer with the greatest percentage among its workforce, Wagner said.

Open House planned for retirees

JSAIC Public Affairs Office

1988 brings a full agenda to area retirees and their guests during the Retiree Open House, Nov. 4 and 5.

The Open House begins Nov. 4 at 7 a.m. with registration at Main Post Theater #1. Special guest at the theater from 7-10 a.m. is retired USAF Brig. Gen. Robert Lee Scott, Jr., author of "God is My Co-Pilot," who will be on hand to autograph his latest work.

At 10:15 a.m. a question and answer session is scheduled with representatives from agencies of special interest to retirees. Col. Herb Segal, commander of Martin Army Community Hospital, representatives of the Post Exchange and Commissary, invited dignitaries from the Washington Veterans Administration Office and Retired Pay Operations representatives will answer questions concerning retiree benefits.

The panel will be unable to answer individual claim questions, but will answer questions about policies and legislation.

At noon, retirees are scheduled to lunch with troops at Sand Hill, where they can discuss with the young soldiers the similarities and differences of the Army of today and yesterday.

At 1:45 p.m. a Rangers-In-Action is scheduled at Victory Pond to present thrilling hand-to-hand combat techniques, rappelling and helicopter demonstrations. Then at 3 p.m., the retirees and their guests will witness a Live Fire Demonstration capabilities exercise at Red Cloud Range.

Later, the NCO Club will host a dinner dance with the big band sounds and music of years past.

Nov. 5 begins at 6:30 a.m. for the retirees who wish to have breakfast at the Follow Me Dining Facility. At 7 a.m. registration begins in the main lobby at Building 4, where Scott will once again be available to autograph his book.

At the same time, the Country Fair begins. The ID Card Section will be available to renew ID cards that will expire within 90 days; retirees are reminded to bring the proper documents in the event their card needs to be renewed or replaced.

A medical team will set up Nov. 5 to give a mini-physical. This includes blood pressure, glaucoma, weight, oral cancer checks and more. A Health Benefits Advisor and Social Security/Medicare counselor will also be there.

The Job Fair begins at 8 a.m. and continues until 4 p.m. At the same time, other exciting events will take place including the MP Dog Show, helicopter rappelling, static display of combat equipment and the Silver Wings free fall parachute jump.

At 9:30 a.m., formal presentations will begin in Marshall Auditorium in Building 4 with the "Benning Belles" Army wives group, who will sing and dance. Then, to bring retirees up to date on the latest changes and proposed changes in legislation affecting benefits is retired Lt. Col. Jon B. Blount, cochairman of the Army Chief of Staff's Retiree Council.

Scheduled from 10:30 a.m.-2 p.m. is a barbecue picnic with all you can eat pork and chicken dinners for $6.25 a plate at York and Gardner fields near Building 4.

For more information and tickets, call MSgt. Jack Stewart, 545-5369/2715.

Scouts to collect food

USAIC Public Affairs

The Fort Benning Boy Scouts will strike a blow against hunger later next month as a part of a national campaign for food by the Boys Scouts of America.

Benning Scouts will join millions of fellow Cub Scouts, Boy Scouts, Varsity Scouts and Explorers nation wide in a door-to-door collection of canned or nonperishable food.

The campaign, entitled 'Scouting for Food', is an example of Scouting's long-standing commitment to community service.

About 400 Fort Benning Scouts will distribute plastic food bags door-to-door Nov. 12. According to Steve Harris, District Executive of the Fort Benning District, BSA, the Scouts will be knocking at all Fort Benning homes and will leave donation bags at the front doors of residents not home.

The following Saturday, Nov. 19, Scouts will return for the bags, which they are asking residents to place outside of doors. All food collected at Fort Benning will go to the Army Community Service's Food Locker, where it will be sorted and passed along to needy families.

Chairman of the post drive is Maj. Mark Cloth, a Fort Benning District committee member.

The Fort Benning District is one of seven districts under the Chattahoochee Boy Scout Council. Harris explained that the Scouts expect to collect about 100,000 cans, or close to one quarter of a million pounds of food in the Chattahoochee Council.

All food must be canned or nonperishable and must not be in glass containers.

Famous pilot, author visits here

Will autograph books during Open House

By Barbara Young
Retirement Services Office

Brig. Gen Robert Lee Scott, Jr., USAF retired, author of "God is My Co-Pilot," prayed as a child, "Please God, let me be a fighter pilot, and if it be Thy will, make me an ace." His prayer was answered.

Scott became a world famous World War II Fighter Ace logging more flying time and kills than just about any other combat pilot in the old Army Air Corps. He is the honored guest during this year's Retiree Open House. He has penned 14 books. "God is My Co-Pilot" still thrills the younger generation, encouraging many young people to enlist in the military. His latest book, "The Day I Owned the Sky," was released earlier this year. The autobiographical story is full of combat adventure, romance, and pure guts. All proceeds from the book will be donated to the Museum of Aviation at Robins Air Force Base.

"The Day I Owned the Sky" includes stories of how he received approval, at age 76, to fly the F-16 jet fighter, only after he easily passed the flight physical. As recently as July of this year, at age 80, he flew the F-15 out of Dobbins Air Force Base in Atlanta. At 72, he walked the length of the Great Wall of China (a lifelong dream).

Scott will be at the Retiree Open House registration Nov. 4 at Theater #1, 7-10 a.m. and again Nov. 5 in Building 4, main lobby, 7-10 a.m. for an autographing session.

Rubber checks bounce back

By Shawn Bryson
USAIC Public Affairs

Some people at Fort Benning seem to be under the impression that checks are made of rubber, not paper. However, those people don't realize the consequences of "bouncing checks".

According to Elaine Watson, Accounting Technician at the Dishonored Check Section of the Army Air Force Exchange Service at Benning, the occurrences of dishonored checks at AAFES facilities are very much on the rise.

Watson explained that the next few months are always the biggest time of the year for bad checks due to Christmas, but 1988 has been a big year in itself

Snively searches for Halloween spirit

By Clyde Snively
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Oct. 14. The day shall live in infamy. At least for the next few weeks.

There I was, in best couch potato fashion, flopped all over the living room sofa, a bowl of cholesterol-bustin' pretzels resting on my stomach and a can of high-protein beer within easy reach.

Then suddenly, it appeared on the screen, the familiar visage, the full head and face of white hair, the rosy cheeks. It was the man. It was St. Nick, Santa, Kris Kringle. You can call him anything, but don't call him late.

As Santa's image faded into the background to be replaced by the advertised special, Christmas carols assaulted my ear drums.

"Ye Gods," I said to Emma, "You know what this means...Halloween can't be long now."

Emma shot me one of those, "But I haven't even done my candy shopping yet; and you haven't gotten the pumpkin, much less carved it" looks.

I shot her one of those, "I know, it just seems that the Halloween season comes earlier each year," looks back.

Not wishing to spend the rest of the evening shooting looks back and forth even though that is the true modus operandi of couch potatoes, I once again broke in on the TV program and spoke up.

"I don't know if it's old age or what," I said, "but I just can't seem to get into the Halloween spirit anymore.

First, you've gotta give the kids a safety briefing. Don't take nuthin that's not wrapped in its original wrapping, make sure you bring all food stuffs home for inspection before eating.

"Then you need to escort them with a flashlight, making sure they have their fluorescent orange vests over their dark and dreary Darth Vader or witch costumes. It takes more preparation than going on an early morning PT run."

"I know," Emma agreed, "and don't forget, take them only to the homes of people you know.

"We should do like that guy in your office, Mikey. His wife says he scouts all the homes beforehand."

"He's just a comparison shopper. He compares notes with others on who gives the most chow and what type. He sends his kids to those homes. Then when they return home with all the booty, he eats it all. Just like he does in the office, scarfing up everyone else's food.

"But what really gets me about the Halloween season nowadays," I continued, "is you can't have any fun with the trick-or-treaters who come to the house. You scare them, the parents sue. They fall and hurt themselves on a crack in the driveway, the parents sue. You act overly nice and friendly and you're labeled a pervert."

"What gets me are the older kids who come to the door and demand goodies; and they don't even have on costumes," Emma added.

"Yeah," I agreed. "It's kind of difficult to get up for an event that, first of all, isn't dictated by date any more, but what is convenient for adults and law enforcement agencies, and which is used by hospitals as a PR ploy as they broadcast offers to parents to have their kids' food scanned for needles, razor blades, and glass."

"I guess I won't be doing any baking for the little monsters. The parents might think I laced the cookies with LSD or put marijuana in the brownies," Emma said, turning back to the TV while I washed down a mouthful of pretzels with another swallow of beer, thinking how sad it is that more parents aren't concerned like the Snivelys.

Groundbreaking for women's memorial set for November 1991

Army News Service

Groundbreaking for an historic memorial dedicated to the women who serve, have served and will serve in the Armed Forces is set for November of 1991.

The location will be the memorial gate area at the end of the entranceway to Arlington National Cemetery. The existing major structure in this area is the Hemicycle, which is in need of repair. Construction of the Memorial will preserve and complete the Hemicycle, with restoration incorporated into the design, and enhance the surrounding area.

In late 1986, President Ronald Reagan signed a bill authorizing construction of the memorial, which will cost between $15 and $20 million.

A large portion of the monies will be used to restore the gate area, which is one of three key points on the axis of monumental Washington.

The memorial will tell the story of the dedication, commitment and sacrifices of women; make their historic contributions a visible part of the national heritage; illustrate their partnership with men in defense of the nation; and inspire others to emulate and surpass them.

Memorial planning calls for a complex that will include a theater-style auditorium with a multi-media presentation about the historical contributions of women in the military; a registration room with the names and photos of registered women servicemembers available for computer review; a reception area with commemorative souvenirs, books and displays.

An essential feature of the memorial will be the registration room.

Historically, there have been difficulties in identifying those women who have served in the armed forces. The registration process will make it possible for every woman who is serving, or who has served, to be identified and registered and thus, have her permanent place in history.

The registration process involves completion of a short form of personal military history, with an accompanying payment of $25. The form includes name, place and date of birth, pertinent service information, highest rank or rate and decoration, and career highlights.

This information is being computerized into a permanent record, which can be viewed by visitors. An important feature of this process will be the simultaneous display of submitted photos with the service record.

Registrations are now being accepted.

Information package focuses on retention

Army News Service

The September-October 1988 edition of the Command Information Package, titled, "Retention" has been delivered to publication account holders worldwide for release to soldiers.

Each of the 42,000 shrink-wrapped copies of the Command Information Package produced by the Office of the Chief of Public Affairs in Washington, D.C., consists of two copies of "Officers' Call," four copies of "Sergeants' Business," and two copies of "Soldiers' Scene," according to Capt. Barbara Goodno of the print media branch. This equates to 84,000 copies of "Officers' Call," 168,000 copies of "Sergeants' Business," and 84,000 copies of "Soldiers' Scene" that are circulated around the Army each time a new package hits the field, she says.

Goodno further explained that the popular package provides officers, noncommissioned officers and enlisted soldiers with information about current policies, doctrine, lessons learned and training tips related to a central theme assigned to each issue.

Past issues, according to Ken L. Holder, managing editor of the package, have been enthusiastically received in the field.

"In the past year, demand for the package has increased from about 37,000 copies to our present high of about 42,000 copies," explained Holder.

"Because of the popularity of the product, many staff agencies have expressed interest in using the package to communicate with the field about subjects for which they are responsible," says Maj. Joseph P. Allred, chief of the print media branch. If you have not seen a copy of the current issue of the Command Information Package, contact your publication officer or noncommissioned officer. If your unit has completed the DA Form 12-99, and filled in block 147, with the requested number of copies for your unit, you should be receiving your copies.

Investigation clears charges against VA

Veterans Administration

A General Accounting Office investigation has cleared the Veterans Administration of charges that the VA willfully destroyed records sought by parties to a major court case involving claims for exposure to radiation.

The GAO concluded that VA records were not "intentionally purged, destroyed, or withheld" during the lengthy and far-reaching discovery process of a suit filed in a U.S. District Court by the National Association of Radiation Survivors (NARS). The court has not yet issued its decision in the case, which involves a challenge to the constitutionality of attorney-free limits in complex veterans claims proceedings.

GAO, the investigative arm of Congress, initiated its review following allegations that the VA had impeded NARS' requests for vast numbers of agency records. GAO found that while some records were destroyed, this was the inadvertent result of normal purging of VA files. The GAO also revealed that information obtained from the FBI, the Department of Justice's Public Integrity Section, and the VA Inspector General did not contradict GAO's findings.

The NARS action was filed in April 1983 and sought relief from a law that places a $10 limit on fees veterans may pay attorneys representing them in claims for VA death and disability benefits. NARS contended the complex nature of claims for radiation-related conditions necessitated legal counsel. The basic constitutionality of the fee limit has been upheld by the U.S. Supreme Court.

During the trial, which concluded in November 1987, the VA was required by the court to produce over one million pages of records and documents sought by NARS. VA offices nationwide were affected and remain under a protective order issued in September 1986.

checks," Watson said. "Last fiscal month, we closed out at $123,168."

First-time offenders at AAFES and MWR facilities, such as Billeting Operations and all post clubs, have 10 days to make restitution, Watson said. A second offense equals an automatic suspension of check-cashing privileges at AAFES for six months.

Third-time offenders are given an indefinite suspension for at least three years, according to Watson.

People needing financial counseling can seek help from the Army Community Service's Consumer Affairs and Financial Assistance Program located in Soldiers' Plaza, building 2640.

Budget counselors of the program assist soldiers and their family members in setting realistic financial goals. In this program, people are encouraged to plan ahead in order to use money wisely.

But, for those who haven't used their money wisely and have already built up debts beyond their means, the Debt Liquidation Program may be the answer. Here, counselors work with both families and creditors to arrive at an acceptable payment plan that will allow families to meet payments and also keep creditors satisfied.

Classes on financial budgeting are available for unit briefings. These classes may be scheduled by calling 545-5516.

Safety tips help make trick-or-treating safer

By Patrick Reed
Military Police Activity

Halloween is once again around the corner. Houses are being decorated in preparation for the haunting by youngsters dressed in their scary costumes. "Freddie Kruegers,""Draculas,""Princesses," and other mythical characters will knock on doors and chant trick-or-treat. Halloween is meant to be an enjoyable time for children and parents alike. However, this traditionally enjoyable night is occasionally marred by acts of vandalism and criminal acts directed towards children.

The Military Police at Fort Benning hope to help make this Halloween as safe and enjoyable as possible. Certain restrictions, therefore, are placed on trick-or-treat activities at Fort Benning:

Trick-or-treating is allowed only between 6 and 8 p.m., Monday, and is restricted to the housing areas.

Trick-or-treating is limited to youngsters 12 years old and younger.

All children must be accompanied by a parent or responsible adult.

Additionally, parents can help to ensure their children's fun and safety with the following instructions:

○Instruct children to stay out of streets, use sidewalks, and cross only at designated crossing points.

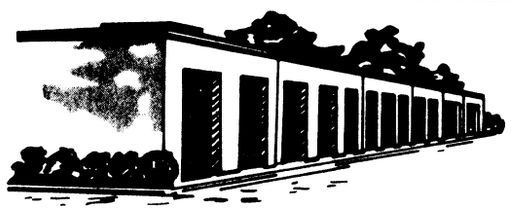
○Obey instructions from Military Police.

Parents need to ensure that costumes are safe. Make sure they do not drag on the ground and eye holes in masks allow unobstructed vision for the child and are easily visible in the dark.



A good rule to remember is to throw away any unwrapped candy or apples or other fruit. If you suspect that some candy has been tampered with, call the Military Police at 545-5222.

With your assistance and cooperation, we can assure that everyone has a "frightfully" good time.

Benning AUSA fares well at National Meeting

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

The Chattahoochee Valley - Fort Benning Chapter of the Association of U.S. Army was named the second Best Chapter Overall at the recent AUSA National Meeting in Washington D.C.

The chapter competed against more than 25 other worldwide chapters that have more than 1,300 members. Over the years, Fort Benning consistently has been one of the top chapters in this category.

The chapter also took top honors as most active in the pursuit of AUSA objectives. They took runner-up in two additional categories - best corporate member support and largest overall membership.

Ann M. McDonald

Jerry Benton an AUSA corporate member chats with AUSA Queen Runner-up Sgt. Laurianne Brevard before attending the President's Reception.

Honorable mentions were given to the chapter in best general membership meetings, best chapter in support of reserve components, best chapter newsletter, and greatest corporate membership.

Commendable performances came for greatest percentage increase in civilian membership and greatest percentage increase in corporate membership.

While at the meeting, a group of Fort Benning soldiers and local corporate members met with the people who make both the Army and AUSA come together at the top.

The meeting began with the 3rd U.S. Infantry (The Old Guard), dressed in traditional colonial garb, presenting the colors and officially opening the session.

After the presentation of the colors, the meeting commenced.

First on the agenda was the presentation of a special AUSA award to retired Gen. William Westmoreland, for his devotion to our nation's veterans.

Later, Secretary of the Army John O. Marsh Jr. addressed the audience. During his address, he praised the highly trained soldiers of today's Army. Marsh was given an award for the progress he has made toward total physical fitness for the Army.

After Marsh's address, soldiers from Fort Benning and local AUSA corporate members attended such events as the President's Reception, where they met with Marsh and other key members of the Army and AUSA staff.

Luncheons and dinners during the week-long meeting featured addresses from U.S. Army Chief of Staff, Gen. Carl E. Vuono; SOCOM commander, Gen. James J. Lindsay; U.S. Southern Command commander, Gen. Frederick F. Woerner; TRADOC commander, Gen. Maxwell Thurman and the Honorable Caspar Weinberger, former Secretary of Defense.

Sandwiched between meetings were tours of the historical sites of the capital.

Soldiers were also given the opportunity to review their personnel and finance records at booths set up by the U.S. Total Army Personnel Agency and U.S. Army Finance and Accounting Center.

Hospitality Night provided an unofficial portion of the conference. On this night, many of the chapters open their suites to everyone attending the meeting.

Hospitality Night gave everyone a chance to chat informally with people from around the Army.

Remarks about the excellent hospitality in the Fort Benning suite were heard for days afterward. One visitor commented that Fort Benning really knew how to treat people right.

According to Sgt. Stacy Barnes, AUSA administrator for Fort Benning, a lot of planning and coordinating went into the event. "We had to make sure we had plenty of everything and that everyone was in their designated areas at the proper time." she said.

AUSA chapter president, Robert Sullivan, praised the whole delegation on the fine representation of Fort Benning during the conference.

"We have fine soldiers at Fort Benning; and our representation here proves it," he told Benning representatives.

Spec. Cheryl Knott, HHC, 29th Infantry Regiment representative, said she was really impressed with the whole conference and noted the magnificent presentation by TRADOC commander,Gen. Maxwell Thurman.

"He presented the Army in a very positive light," she said.

Another memory for Knott will be the people she met.

"It was nice to meet soldiers from different posts, but I really enjoyed just getting a chance to meet other soldiers from units on Fort Benning," Knott said. "In my position, I don't have the opportunity to do that."

"I saw camaraderie among all the soldiers from Fort Benning," she said. "That was just as important as the meeting itself."

Post displays training devices in Washington

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

Training devices currently used at Fort Benning went on display recently for the attendees of the Association of the U.S. Army Annual Meeting in Washington, D.C., in a multi-media static display.

The Fort Benning Exhibit was part of annual displays set up at the meeting by units throughout the Army. It is done in conjunction with exhibits set up by corporations who manufacture items that are currently used by the military. The corporations also promote items they would like to see in future Army inventories.

The displays presented a phenomenal overview of what is currently used in the Army today.

SFC Rodolph Fisher, an infantry training developer with the Directorate of Training and Doctrine, played a big role in setting up the Fort Benning Exhibit.

According to Fisher, he and other members of DOTD started preparing their exhibit in April.

"We were given a budget and some guidelines, and we went from there," he said.

The men opted for a conservative approach.

Fisher said they combined the exhibits from the past three years and created one that was lauded as the best display in the Training and Doctrine Command Section.

Fisher said the key to the success of their display was the multi-purpose arcade combat simulator (MACS), which allowed viewers of the exhibit to actually use the equipment.

Throughout the meeting, privates through generals fired the MACS AT4 missile launcher, M-16A2 rifle and MK-196 automatic machine gun grenade. Several visitors returned to fire the MACS weapons more than once.

While waiting their turn on the MACS, visitors kept themselves occupied by looking at the weapons featured in the static display - 9mm Beretta, M-249 SAW and the M-21 Sniper Weapon.

Fisher said it took the men about six hours to set up the exhibit culminating the work that had begun in April.

"All of the work was worth it, because it gave each person who used the MACS a little more knowledge of the workings of the weapons currently in use today," he said.

Georgia students prepare for SAT

Many unsure of test's role

The College Board

Thousands of high school students in Georgia are expected to take the Scholastic Aptitude Test (SAT) Wednesday, many of them still unsure of the test's role in college admissions. Nearly half-a-million students throughout the nation will be tested that day, the largest SAT administration of the year.

In Georgia, more than 87,000 students take the SAT annually — nearly 10,000 in November alone.

To test general knowledge of the SAT and clarify its use in admissions, the College Board, which sponsors the SAT, has prepared a short true-or-false quiz to help put the test in perspective and separate myths about the SAT from facts.

Are your No. 2 pencils ready?

SAT scores can make or break a student's academic future.

False. By itself, the SAT won't get a student into college, or keep most students out. That is because the SAT is one of several factors that college admissions officers consider in deciding who is admitted.

Before most colleges look at SAT scores, they look at grades and evaluate the strength of the student's academic program. Doing well in tough academic courses is the most important consideration in college admissions. Extracurricular activities, recommendations, special talents, and the college application essay are also important.

High school grades are better than the SAT in predicting how well students will do in college.

True. At most colleges, high school grades are somewhat better than SAT scores in predicting how well students will do in a particular college. But the combination of grades with scores produces a better predictor than either used alone. (At other colleges, Achievement Tests are most valuable in predicting performance.)

Combining grades and SAT scores is useful because grading practices differ among the more than 25,000 high schools in the United States and from teacher to teacher, and because students do not take the same courses in high school. A standard admissions test like the SAT permits colleges to put the variations in grading practices and academic preparation of their applicants in perspective.

Fewer colleges are using the SAT every year.

False. The number of colleges using the SAT is increasing, not decreasing. More than 1,600 colleges use the SAT today for admissions, and guidance and placement; that's 435 more than in 1978. Why? Because the SAT is a universally recognized standard of excellence against which a student's readiness for college, regardless of where they attended high school, can be measured. It's a rigorous standard, but objective and fair.

The best preparation for the SAT is a coaching course.

False. Despite decades of research, it is still not possible to predict ahead of time who will, or will not, improve their scores — and by how much — through coaching courses. For that reason, the College Board does not recommend coaching courses, especially if they cost a lot or require a lot of time and effort that could be better spent on schoolwork or other worthwhile activities. Most students who repeat the SAT have not been coached, yet most of them receive higher scores the second time — averaging

FB Management Association praises Kinnett Dairies' support

By Agatha H. James
Bayonet staff writer

At its regular monthly meeting, the Fort Benning Management Association (FBMA) recognized Kinnett Dairies for its support of the club's fundraising activities.

James Prescott, the Dairy's executive vice-president, and R. T. Wood, salesman for the Fort Benning area, accepted awards presented by the organization's president, Col. Allan W. Keener.

According to Keener, proceeds from ice cream sales have enabled the FBMA to provide a number of scholarships to students attending Troy State University.

"We sell ice cream at the Fourth of July and Armed Forces Day celebrations on post," said Keener. "This is our primary fundraising activity for the year. Thanks to Kinnett's cooperation and assistance, we were able to make a substantial profit this year."

Proceeds from ice cream sales were used to finance five scholarships to Troy State University for the 1988-89 school year. The scholarships total $3,400.

Bayonet staff writer

No one wants another world war; but, if one does occur, more than likely it will be fought on urban terrain.

That's the consensus of a group of U. S. and foreign military experts who recently gathered here for the third Euro-NATO Fighting in Built-Up Areas/Military Operations on Urbanized Terrain Symposium.

The symposium, held Oct. 16-20, provided a forum for the exchange of ideas among Belgium, Canada, Denmark, Federal Republic of Germany, Italy, Norway, Portugal, Spain, England and the U. S.

Personnel from Department of Army, TRADOC, FORSCOM, USAIS, Fort McClellan, Fort Bragg, Fort Hood and Fort Ord also attended.

Each representative is his country's FIBUA/MOUT subject matter expert, according to Capt. Robert J. Holleman, chief of the Training Integration Branch, Training Division, DOTD.

"They all work in either training or doctrine development for their countries," he said.

Lt. Col. Raymond Taillefer, who is with the Canadian Army's Combat Training Center in Ottawa and chairman of a NATO working group, said all NATO countries train their forces to fight in built-up areas, ranging from a village type of environment to a big city..

"We're here to observe and exchange ideas," Taillefer said. "Each country varies in their doctrinal development and training. Some are more advanced; others have novel and innovative approaches to problems.

"It's good to compare what other countries are doing," he continued. "That's the value of this symposium. Of course, there are differences in tactics, but there is commonality in the way all of us approach FIBUA/MOUT.

"Currently in Canada, we are working on a project to build the proper training sites. That's one of our shortcomings, but we hope to have this project complete in two or three years."

The first two symposiums were held in Germany, one in Hammelburg in 1984 and the other in Vogelsang in 1985.

Each representative made a presentation about his country's approach to FIBUA/MOUT including new developments, training techniques and equipment, Holleman said.

SAT

15 to 20 points more on each of the two sections.

The best preparation for the SAT is to follow a solid program of challenging academic courses in school, to read widely, to review mathematical principles, and to be familiar with the SAT. Getting a good night's sleep before the test also makes sense.

The SAT is biased against women and minorities.

False. As individuals, women and minorities score as high, and as low, as white males. Average group scores, however, do show a gap between most minorities and whites and between women and men. It is very simplistic to blame differences in scores on bias in the test. Women and minorities who take the SAT frequently have unequal educational, social, and other background experiences that may be reflected in their performance on the SAT and other standardized tests.

On average, for example, women and minorities are less likely to have followed an academic or college preparatory program in high school. Minorities take fewer years of study in academic subjects and women take fewer courses in the sciences or advanced mathematics. Women and minority test takers tend to have parents with less formal education — a factor often related to lower scores.

The SAT keeps women and minorities out of college.

False. In fact, more women are attending college than ever before: total enrollments in higher education are 52 percent female and 48 percent male — identical to the proportion of women and men taking the SAT. More minorities are also taking the SAT (up by 12 percent since 1973), and applying to and entering college.

It is very hard to get into college.

False. Being accepted is the norm, not the exception. Each year high school students file nearly 3.6 million applications to the nation's 1,770 four-year colleges and universities. According to survey data from the American Council on Education and the University of California at Los Angeles, 92 percent of students end up at their first or second choice college. And more than 1,100 (36 percent) of America's colleges are "open admissions" institutions that admit virtually all students who apply.

The College Board is a national nonprofit membership organization of more than 2,500 secondary and higher education institutions and schools, systems, and associations, providing a variety of tests and services for guidance, college admissions, placement and financial aid purposes.

Don't take chances, ITT can tell you which hotels are available, whether they have laundry facilities, baby-sitting services, a swimming pool, fitness center and so forth. Of course, the best part is you will not have to pay full price.

If you plan to travel, remember to book discount lodging reservations with the ITT Office. The same discounts apply if you need to reserve rooms for parents, family members or other personal guests who plan to visit you at the installation. Call the ITT Office, 545-7535/4155 or lodging reservations. (MWR)

'Navigators' strive to bring people closer to God

By Jo Ann Stamey
USAIC Chaplain's Office

When you hear the word "Navigators," one vision that may come to mind is that of ex-crewmen who flew bombing missions during World War II. Actually, "The Navigators" is an international non-denominational evangelical ministry committed to bringing people together and closer to God. "They strip away the thin veneer of religious talk and plant roots deep in the Christian walk," says Chuck Swindoll.

The Navigators began in southern California in 1933, when founder Dawson Trotman taught sailors how to grow in their Christian faith. During World War II, Navigator Bible study groups spread to a thousand ships and military bases. In 1949, the first missionary was sent to China. Now, almost 40 years later, there are approximately 300 short-term and career missionaries abroad. In 1951, The Navigator outreach was extended to the college campuses; and in 1971, the Navigators extended their ministry to the community.

Today, in almost 70 countries, 2,700 Navigator staff minister through local churches, on military bases and college campuses and in homes and work places. The Navigators rank in the top eight percent among American missionary agencies.

With a heart for individuals, The Navigators teach on a one-on-one basis and in small groups. They reach people through spiritual multiplication: "What you have heard from me. . .entrust to faithful men who will be able to teach others also." (II Timothy 2:2) This specialized training produces a special kind of Christian — a laborer — who has learned to study the Bible, have a daily devotional time, develop a deepening prayer life, articulate one's faith to family and friends, and invest his life in discipling another.

Navigator staff on more than 150 U.S. college campuses spend time with students, helping them to get closer to God before they launch their careers.

Military service especially surfaces a person's spiritual needs. Young adults are away from home for the first time; families are strained by extended separations caused by duty assignments; combat soldiers face danger and terrorism — even death. As with the majority of the Army, there is a shortage of chaplains, and the Navigators work very hard to support base chaplains at 145 locations in America, Europe, and the Far East.

Reaching people for Christ where they live, work, and play is the strategy for The Navigator community staff in 112 cities across the United States. They reach out through local churches, neighborhood groups and Bible students in the business world.

Some critical issues addressed by the Navigators are:

○Population explosion — there are one million births every five days, 90 percent without the gospel.

○Disintegration of the family — 44 percent of marriages end in divorce; 22 percent of U.S. households are single parent families; 1.5 million teen-agers run away from home each year.

○Immorality — 1.3 million teen-age abortions are estimated this year.

Difficulties allow for patience growth

By Richard G. Quinn
3rd Ranger Battalion Chaplain

"Is your life full of difficulties and temptations? Then be happy, for when the way is rough, your patience has a chance to grow. So let it grow, and don't try to squirm out of your problems. For when your patience is finally in full bloom, then you will be ready for anything, strong in character, full and complete." (James 1:2-4 TLB)

As my end of tour draws near at Fort Benning, I look back to where my life has been and forward with expectations of where it's going. Ministry has some unusual twists that often take us down paths we normally would not tread. The old home church seems lost in Infantry dust after two years in the 197th Infantry Brigade, six months in the 1st Infantry Training Brigade and a year in the 3rd Battalion, 75th Rangers.

Exchanging the briefcase and church van for a ruck and parachute is not the most sane thing a preacher has ever done. However, I'm not alone. Fort Benning has altered many a life style from high school student to private, collegiate to lieutenant, bag boy to Infantryman, and "leg" to airborne ranger. For most of us these have been good times, but for all of us, there have been obstacles along the way.

Yesterday, while I was scavenging through the leftover religious literature from the 10th Mountain move, I came across a poem entitled, "Friendly Obstacles." It reminded me of the Bible verse in James, which I quote when I'm in need of a few extra miles of encouragement. I pray that both the Scripture and the poem lift your day a little higher and encourage you to look forward with renewed expectation.

Friendly Obstacles

For every hill I've had to climb,
For every stone that bruised my feet,
For all the blood and sw and grime,
For blinding storm and burning heat,
My heart sings but a grateful song–
These were the things that made me strong.

For all the heartaches and the tears,
For all the anguish and the pain,
For gloomy days and fruitless years,
And for the hopes that lived in vain,
I do give thanks; for now I know–
These were the things that helped me grow.

Tis not the softer things of life,
Which stimulates man's will to strive,
But bleak adversity and strife
Do most to keep man's will alive
O'er rose-strewn paths and weaklings creep,
But brave hearts dare to climb the steep!

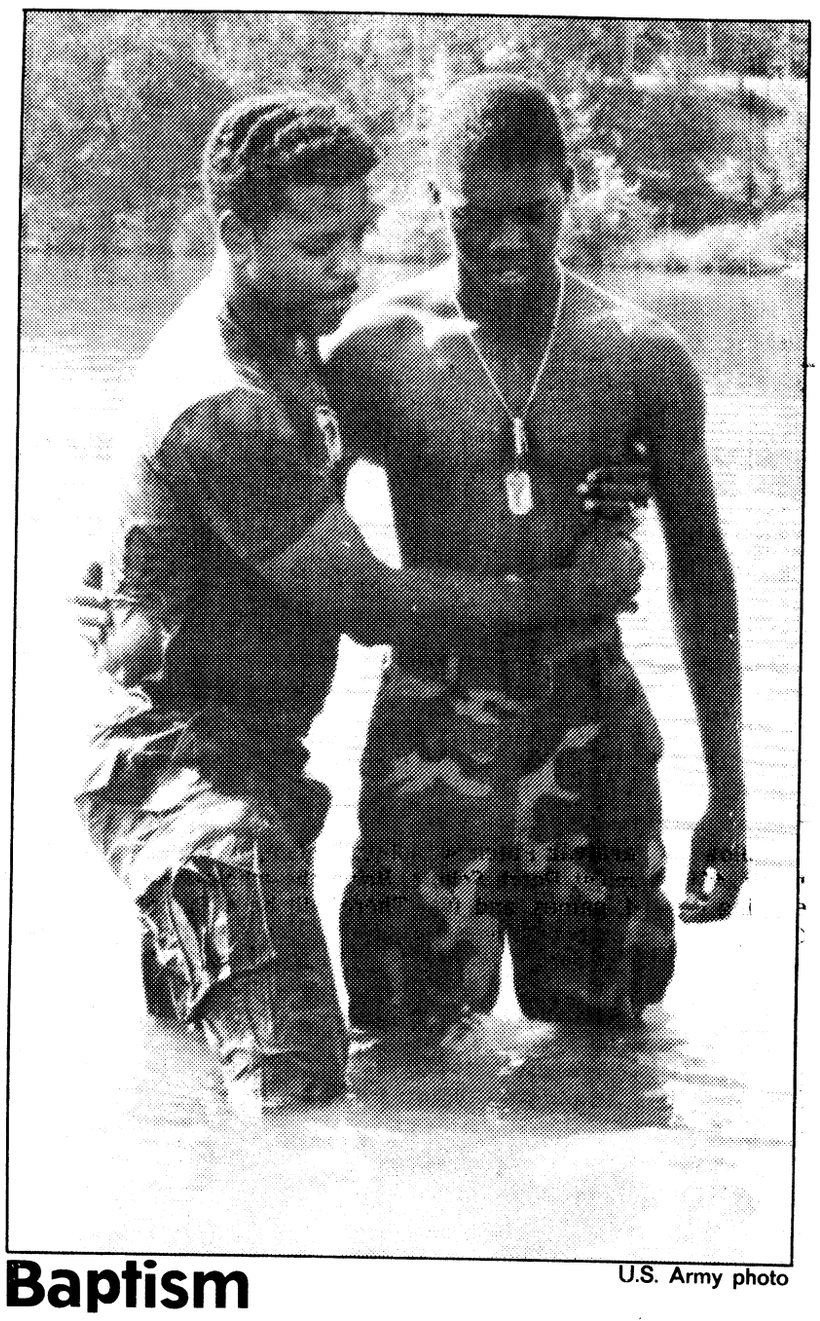
Chaplains faced real challenge at REFORGER

197th Infantry Brigade Chaplains

The sojourn of the 197th Infantry Brigade on REFORGER to Germany, "Certain Challenge," was a real challenge for the chaplains.



Filling the spiritual needs of soldiers on a major journey tests us in many ways. Just like Moses when he took the Hebrews through the desert to the Promised Land, we need to be resourceful, to be flexible to the changing demands of the mission, to be willing at all times and especially to be endurable. Chaplains were dispersed throughout the flights, starting with the advance party to the Belgium seaport, to the last flight to Germany. Thus, we allowed all soldiers worship and counseling opportunities and encouragement to keep going and fulfill their specific mission.

In Belgium, our Lord blessed us with a beautiful little chapel (seating about 60 people), in which we met for worship and prayer. Just outside the chapel is a peaceful setting on the outside with trees all around. Inside are lead-stained glass windows behind the alter, hanging chandeliers and kneeling rails and even an old pump organ that actually worked. The services, held every night, were enjoyed by numerous soldiers. Bible studies, prayer time, and just sitting around and talking until late in the night made the chapel a common meeting place. Video films like "Chariots of Fire" and Dr. James Dodson's series on family relationships were shown.

Preparing the staging area for the arrival of the main body of troops and their equipment in Germany was the responsibility of the Early Recovery Team. Many support agencies worked hard to make the sojourn of the soldiers as comfortable as possible. Three large tents were erected to provide the troops with a game room, a PX, and a television tent. This area quickly became the hub of the camp community. Chapel services were held each evening in the TV tent and were well attended. The forest creates an atmosphere conducive to contemplation and personal reflection. Many soldiers discovered a sense of inner peace in the midst of what was otherwise a very busy time of work and preparation for the arrival of the main body of soldiers.

As our journey took us into the "battle exercise," God's people again were blessed with worship times. The field environment brings a person close to his God. Meeting with a number of soldiers in the woods of Germany with the beams of sunlight penetrating the tree cover does something to you. It manifests God's glory like a building cannot.

Our sojourn took us into the rain and mud as well as the bright blue sky. Yet, God's provision for us never ceased. Yes, the sojourn of REFORGER '88 and our Lord's provision will remain in the memory of many soldiers for some time.

COURT REPORT

Staff Judge Advocate's Office

On Sept. 29, John McIver was tried by a General Court-Martial on three specifications of larceny, for a total value of $1,050 and one specification of desertion.

In 1985, McIver obtained a bank teller card of another soldier. Using his home computer, McIver was able to calculate the "pin" number and gain access to the account. Using the card, he withdrew $1,500.

Shortly before he was scheduled to be tried by a court-martial, McIver feigned his death in a boating accident. The whereabouts of John McIver were unknown until July 14 when he was stopped during a routine driver license inspection in Jacksonville, Fla.

He was returned to military control and convicted by a general court-martial. McIver was sentenced to be dishonorably discharged from the service, total forfeiture of all pay and allowances, reduction to Pvt. 1 and confinement for five years.

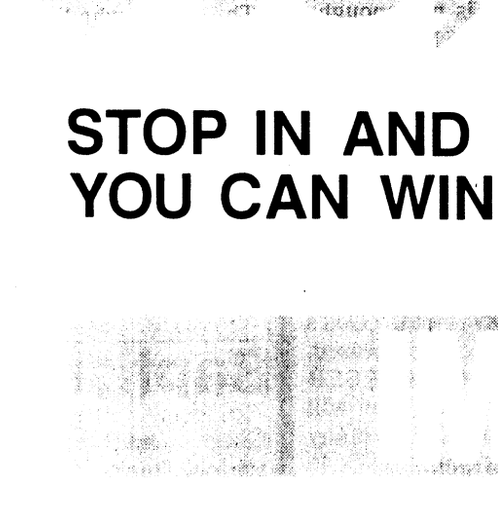
ASK THE JUDGE

By William F. Sutton Jr.
Staff Judge Advocate's Office

Q: I bought a new home a few months ago after a local bank agreed to finance the purchase. I recently learned that the monthly mortgage payment on my home covers not only principal and interest, but something called an escrow account. What is this escrow account, and how do I know that the bank is charging the proper amount?

A: An escrow account is a fund that a lending institution (such as a bank or savings and loan) establishes in order to pay property taxes and hazard insurance on your home during the year. This helps the lender protect its investment in your home. For example, if your property taxes were not paid, the local municipality could sell your home at a foreclosure sale to collect the amount due. Also, if you failed to pay the hazard insurance premium, a fire that destroys your home would also destroy your bank's security for the loan.

Most mortgage loans require escrow accounts. For mortgages insured by the Federal Housing Administration (FHA) or the Veterans Administration (VA), escrow accounts are required since a payment for taxes and insurance must be received monthly by the lender. The goal of using escrow accounts is to ensure that there is enough money to pay taxes and insurance by the dates they are due.



To determine whether the bank is correctly charging you, compare what you owe annually on your hazard insurance and property taxes with your escrow payments. This information can be obtained from the local tax authority and your insurance company. If the bank charges you less than the required amounts, you will need to pay a lump sum at the end of the year. If you paid more than you should have, ask your bank to refund any excess amounts to you, unless you prefer to have it applied to next year's payments.

To ensure that they are collecting enough money to pay your taxes and insurance, most lenders will review your escrow account annually. If your taxes or insurance premiums change during the year, your bank will adjust your payments accordingly. If you believe that your bank is handling your escrow account improperly, contact your state banking agency or write to the Department of Housing and Urban Development, Washington, D.C. 20410.

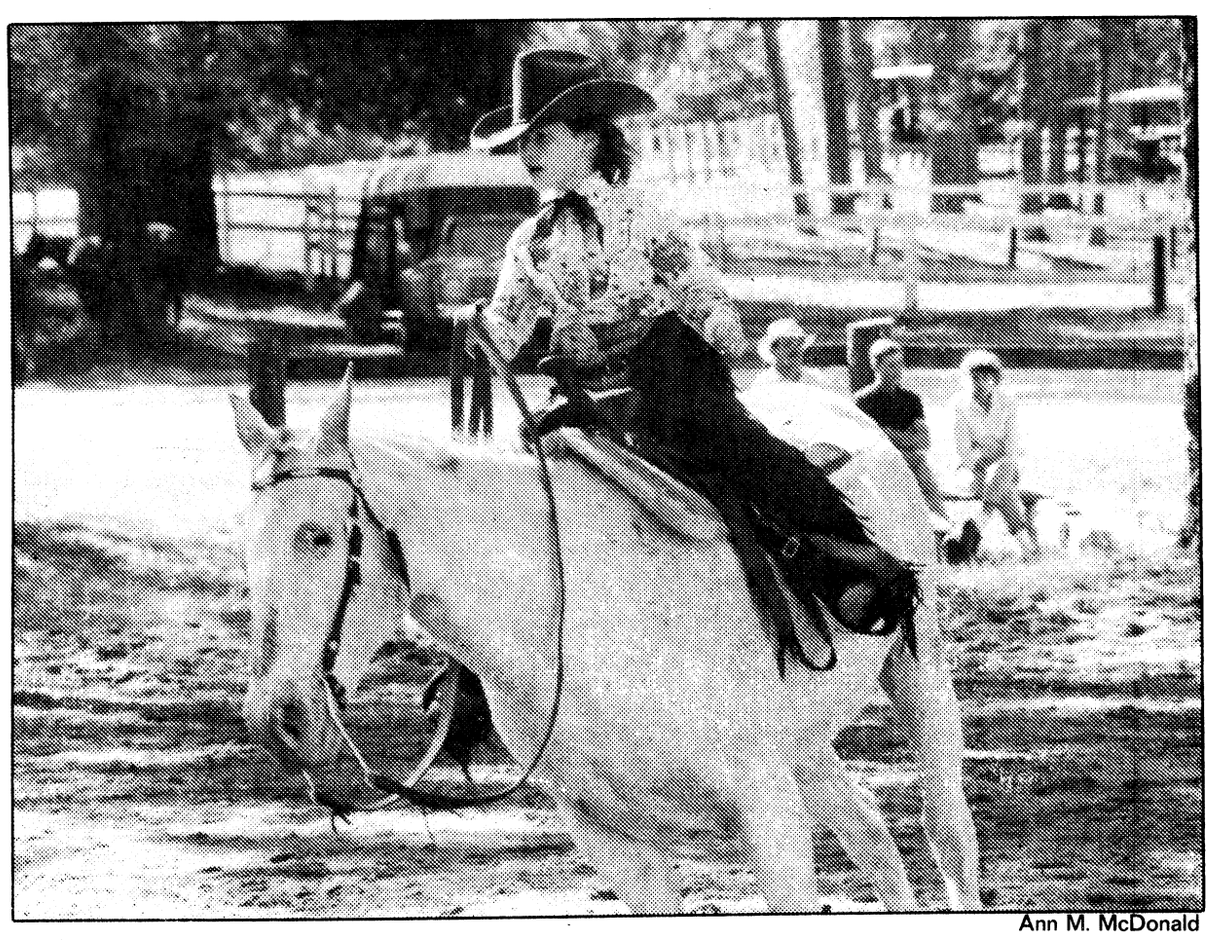
Hunt Club holds Western/English horse show

Ann M. McDonald

Riders of the Western Walk Trot class guide their horses around the show ring during the Western/English Horse Show at Fort Benning's Hunt Club.

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

There was no "horse play" at the Fort Benning Hunt Club Fall Western and English Horse Show Oct. 22; it was all serious business for the riders and their steeds while competing in the 43 events.



According to Christie Hanson, a show participant and a long time member of the Hunt Club, many people turned out for both the English and the Western categories of the competition.

She said although English and Western styles sound as though they come from opposite ends of the horse riding spectrum, they do not. "The primary differences are the size and weight of the saddles and the gait of the horses."

However, she added that the English style is more competitive than Western because the Western style is more for pleasure.

Brenda Slappey, a horse show judge from the local area, officiated the event.

Hanson and her steed, Sandpiper fared well in their portion of the competition taking the 24-inch championship in the English Hunter Jumper Class. Other champions in that class were Karen Stewart, riding Extra Charming, 30-inch championship; and Alex Steele riding Zappa in the 36-inch Championship.

Ann M. McDonald

Championships are determined by the total scores of three events, which demonstrate the versatility of the riders.

Linda Ricker, riding Wendie Woodcock, showed well in the Western Class taking a first and second in the show.

All of the beginning children were winners, and each was given a ribbon for participation.

Hanson said that although this was a judged competition, it was done mainly for fun and experience. "Everyone came out a winner," she said.

Students awarded for fire posters and essays

USAIC Public Affairs Office

The Fort Benning Director of Engineering and Housing, Col. Robert W. Hatch, visited schools here today to present awards to students. The awards are for winners in the poster and essay contest held during Fire Prevention Week.

The theme for this year's contest is "A Sound We Can Live With - Test Your Detector."

The following are the first place essays for grades four, five, six and eight.

1st Place - Fourth Grade

Wilson School

The Association of Fire Safety is trying to get people to buy a smoke detector for many reasons. Most important of all is saving lives.

A smoke detector can alert you to a fire in your home at the first sign of smoke. This is really important if you are sleeping.

Every home should have a smoke detector; especially homes with more than one floor. It is something that can save your life or the lives of your family members.

Your smoke detector should be checked monthly to make sure it is working properly and batteries are good.

If you don't have a smoke detector, get one today. Remember that the sound of a smoke detector is much more pleasant than the sound of a rescue squad.

1st Place - Fifth Grade
Mandy Moneymaker
Loyd School

A smoke detector is a device that detects smoke and sounds a horrible alarm. However, it's a beautiful sound once it saves your life.

You should place detectors in a central area of your home. You want to be able to hear them from every room. Most smoke detectors are located on the ceiling because heat and smoke rise.

Test your detector. Most detectors run on batteries. Batteries lose their power causing the smoke detector not to work. This is the reason you should test your detector.

A lot of detectors have a light on them, but that is not enough to prove it's working. Most lights stay on, but the battery could be dead. So test your detector often.

A smoke detector is an important device to have. When it senses smoke or heat the alarm will go on. That gives you a chance to find the fire; or if the fire is too large, to leave the building. At times like this the horrible noise is one you can live with. It becomes a very sweet sound.

1st Place - Sixth Grade

Hi! I'm Sam Smoke Detector. You're the most company I've had for a while except for spiders.

The people who live here don't care for me very much. The mother is a lousy cook. Whenever she cooks, I go off. I feel so proud when I go off, but the people say harsh things to me. You should hear them as they run to open the windows, especially in the summer and winter; that ruins my confidence.

One day my battery ran out. The people were very happy because they didn't have to open the window any more.

One night when everyone was asleep, a fire broke out. They were very lucky their dog woke them up. They got out safely. Had they put a new battery in me I would have woke them up instead of the dog. I would have saved them money because there would have been less damage from the fire.

After the fire,the people paid a lot of attention to me. They checked me every month. The mother started to take cooking lessons. They especially made sure my battery didn't run out. I had much more company than just the spiders after that. So please test your detectors. It's a sound we can live with!

DoD strives for safety; maintains objectives

American Forces Information

"Considering the dangerous nature of much of military training and the large number of personnel trained, DoD's safety record is good," said DoD's top military manpower and personnel policy official, Marine Corps Lt. Gen. Anthony Lukeman.

"It is the desire of the Department of Defense to make training as safe as can be done without losing sight of the learning objective. But much of military training is inherently hazardous — training with live ammunition and explosives, working with heavy equipment, parachuting, etc.," he told the House Armed Services Committee. Training is the principle activity of military forces in peacetime, and the average annual training population in all services is about 240,000 people.

"Good training produces military readiness. A well-trained force, properly armed and supported, will give a good account of itself in combat," Lukeman said.

Since the beginning of fiscal year 1985, only three training-related recruit deaths have happened among about 140,000 in basic Marine training, he said.

The military aircraft accident rate for fiscal 1987 was 2.25 major accidents per 100,000 flying hours. He noted that "most military flying is conducted for training purposes."

He also explained that despite the hazardous conditions of combined-armed training at the Army's National Training Center at Fort Irwin, Calif., only six training-related fatalities have occurred in the past three years. He emphasized that the training center "has a high potential for accidents because of the large number of heavy armored vehicles used, continuous day and night training with little rest,and the firing of live ammunition." About 230,000 soldiers have trained at the center in the past three years.

"These safety records in hazardous, demanding and realistic training are the result of careful safety planning and emphasis in every phase of the training process," Lukeman said. "Despite the heavy emphasis placed on safety within the Defense Department, systems can be improved."

The military services build safety measures into programs of instruction as courses are developed or revised. All services place high priority on safety rules and procedures.

"Military members who are properly trained are more likely to be accident-free . . . (while) skimping on training is likely to lead to higher accident rates," he said.

Army Energy Awareness Week observed

By Becky Ray
Energy Branch

Fort Benning observed Army Energy Awareness Week Oct. 16-22, and the Energy Branch sponsored several activities to get post residents and workers thinking about energy.

A kick-off breakfast started the week with most of Fort Benning's major unit commanders, sergeants major, activity directors and energy conservation officers in attendance. Maj. Gen. Michael Spigelmire, post commander, delivered opening remarks and stressed the involvement of the entire installation to help meet Fort Benning's energy conservation goals.

The Energy Ant visited the Martin Army Community Hospital and the Main Mall shaking hands and distributing helium balloons. Energy Branch personnel distributed beverage can insulators and auto windshield shades at various on-post locations as reminders to use energy carefully.

Members of the Energy Resources Group were also tasked to distribute promotional gifts to their organizations.

Rick Schluter, vice president of Marketing at the Computer Aided Training Company (a subsidiary of Westinghouse) gave an exciting presentation to a group of students at Faith Middle School. Schluter, who is certified as a Senior Reactor Operator by the Nuclear Regulatory Commission and taught reactor theory operations for Westinghouse, discussed nuclear plant operations. Schluter answered many questions from students and teachers concerning plant operations in the U.S., reactor design, and environmental and safety issues.

Energy exhibits were set up at the Main Mall, Martin Army Community Hospital pharmacy area and in the display room of Infantry Hall. The exhibits gave information on all forms of electrical generation, including solar, nuclear, hydroelectric and fossil fuels. The mall display showed visitors how the Shenandoah Solar Center operates to convert the sun's natural energy into electrical energy.

The Officers' Club and NCO Club celebrated Army Energy Awareness Week by lighting dining rooms with candles. This saved energy and created a nice atmosphere for the patrons.

The Energy Ant made his final appearance of the week at the 2nd Infantry Training Brigade Family Day. He visited the members and families of the brigade and distributed balloons.

Becky Ray

The Energy Ant stands with one of his followers outside MACH during Army Energy Awareness Week.

The goal of Energy Awareness Week events is to heighten the community's understanding and concern about all energy issues. It is observed at an especially critical time for the Fort Benning energy program — the beginning of the new fiscal year. This marks the beginning of new conservation challenges for the post in meeting TRADOC goals, and awareness is the key to meeting those challenges.

'Best Squad' competition tests Mountaineers

By Agatha H. James
Bayonet staff writer

Last week, some 10th Mountain soldiers suffered a few scrapes, bumps and bruises, but that's not what they will remember most about their battalion's first ever "Best Squad" competition.

What they will recall more than anything else about the week-long event is the tremendous feeling of accomplishment, camaraderie and esprit de corps during what was probably one of the most grueling, physically demanding weeks of their military careers.

The 3rd Battalion, 14th Infantry, 2nd Brigade's "Best Squad" competition pitted 25, six-man squads against each other in a test of physical stamina, marksmanship, water confidence and more. The event evaluated each soldier's military skills and physical abilities and tested each squad's confidence, teamwork and cohesiveness.

Tailored after the Ranger Training Brigade's "Best Ranger" competition, the "Best Squad" competition featured six-man squads instead of two-man, buddy teams.

Events included the Darby Queen obstacle course, military-skills testing, a 12-kilometer night land navigation course, marksmanship competition, a 15-mile road march with rucksack, rappelling, and water confidence tests.

Each squad leader received tasks, conditions and standards two weeks before the test and had 14 days to get his men ready.

According to CSM Joe N. Heckard, the battalion's sergeant major, the standard for each task was set extremely high so the soldiers would have to work hard. "We did this to give the soldiers something to work for," he said. "That way, squad teamwork, leadership and cohesiveness would be enhanced."

Lt. Col. Shelby T. Stevens, the battalion commander, said the event gave squad leaders and members a chance to show their skills during the last phase of training before they leave Fort Benning. (The battalion is moving to Fort Drum, N. Y. in November.)

"It was an opportunity for squad leaders and members to prove themselves," he said.

The competition focused on building squad leadership, confidence and cohesion. "The squad is the heart and soul of the Light Infantry," said Col. Michael J. Connor, brigade commander. "It's the building block. That's why we put a lot of emphasis on it.

"Squad members know the importance of every man," Connor continued. "You're no better than your weakest link. It's not the individual who is best, but all the strengths in the squad are relied upon to get the mission accomplished, especially in combat. We don't fight as individuals; we fight as a team. That's why we train as a team."

Darby Queen finish helps squad win first

By Agatha H. James
Bayonet staff writer

After a week of facing their toughest challenges, the rain couldn't dampen the spirits of the 3rd Battalion, 14th Infantry, 2nd Brigade Golden Dragons who took top honors in the battalion's first-ever "Best Squad" competition.

Out of 25 squads that began the five-day event, the top three squads stood before their commanding officers under the eaves of their starship barracks as rain fell on Sand Hill.

3rd Squad, 3rd Plt., Co. B, with 352 out of 375 total possible points, earned the title "Best of the Best."

"Our company commander, Capt. Robert Cursio, helped us prepare," said squad leader, Sgt. Kevin Benson. "Plus, we jumped way out ahead by finishing the Darby Queen five minutes faster than anybody else."

For a week's worth of work, squad members Benson, Sgt. Ronald Moeggenberg, Cpl. Tony Gilyard, Spec. Brett A. Ingram, Spec. David Accord, and Spec. Kenneth Johnson each received a plaque and an Army Achievement Medal. Also, they won a trophy for their company.

"Each of you went into a lot of preparation for this," said Lt. Col. Shelby T. Stevens, battalion commander, addressing the troops as they stood in formation. "We appreciate that.

"Some of you are either afraid of height or water or have some other deep-seated fear, but you beat those fears," he said.

Col. Michael J. Connor, brigade commander, added that the competition was one of the most comprehensive ever at squad level. "I don't know of any squad evaluation that is more demanding," he said.

"Many of you may be aching; some may feel worse," he said. "But, now you can feel with a deep sense of pride that you really have become all that you can be. It's more than a slogan in this battalion; it's a reality."

Second place honors went to 2nd Squad, 1st Plt., Co. B; third to Scout Plt., HHC.

'Dirty Name' challenges squads in competition

By Agatha H. James
Bayonet staff writer

Navy aviators call their finest "Top Gun." The 3rd Battalion, 14th Infantry proudly call their tops "Best Squad."

For three days last week, soldiers of the 'Golden Dragons" fought for that honor in a series of events testing their physical and mental prowess.

First, the Darby Queen tested their confidence. Squad members raced 2,000 meters through a hilly, wooded lane filled with 25 obstacles. "The Inclining Wall," "The Dirty Name," "Wire Walk," and more slowed them down.

Tuesday afternoon, the soldiers put their military skills on the line. Locating enemy positions on a map, and constructing a one-rope bridge taxed each squad, as well as administering first aid, employing hand grenades and installing the M-18A1 claymore mine.

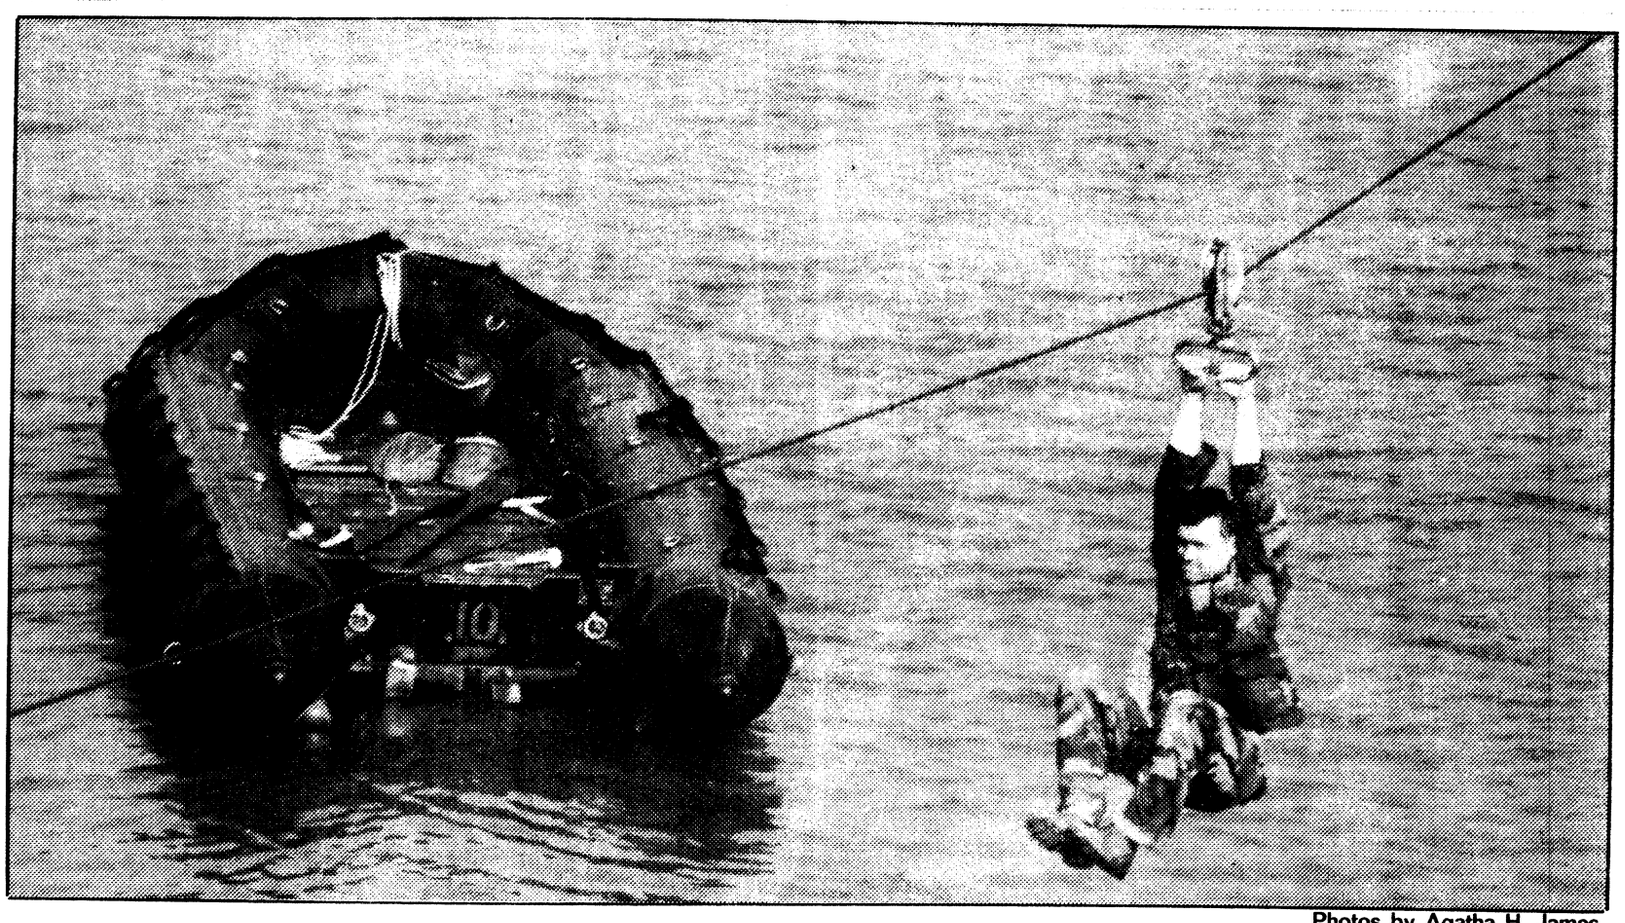
Tuesday night the troops began a 12-kilometer land navigation course. They moved on foot across dirt roads through heavily wooded terrain. Each squad had eight hours to finish the course.

After land navigation, the soldiers moved immediately to Malone 18 for live-fire testing. From a foxhole, squad members engaged pop-up, moving targets from 50-300 meters.

Wednesday afternoon, military skills took place again. Participants identified threat armored vehicles as well as threat and friendly aircraft. They disassembled and assembled the M-16A1 rifle, the M-60 machine gun, the 9mm pistol, and the M-249 SAW. They also mounted and laid the M-224 mortar for direction of fire.

A 15-mile road march with rucksack began Wednesday night at 8. Completion was required in six hours or less. All squad members had to conduct and finish the march together.

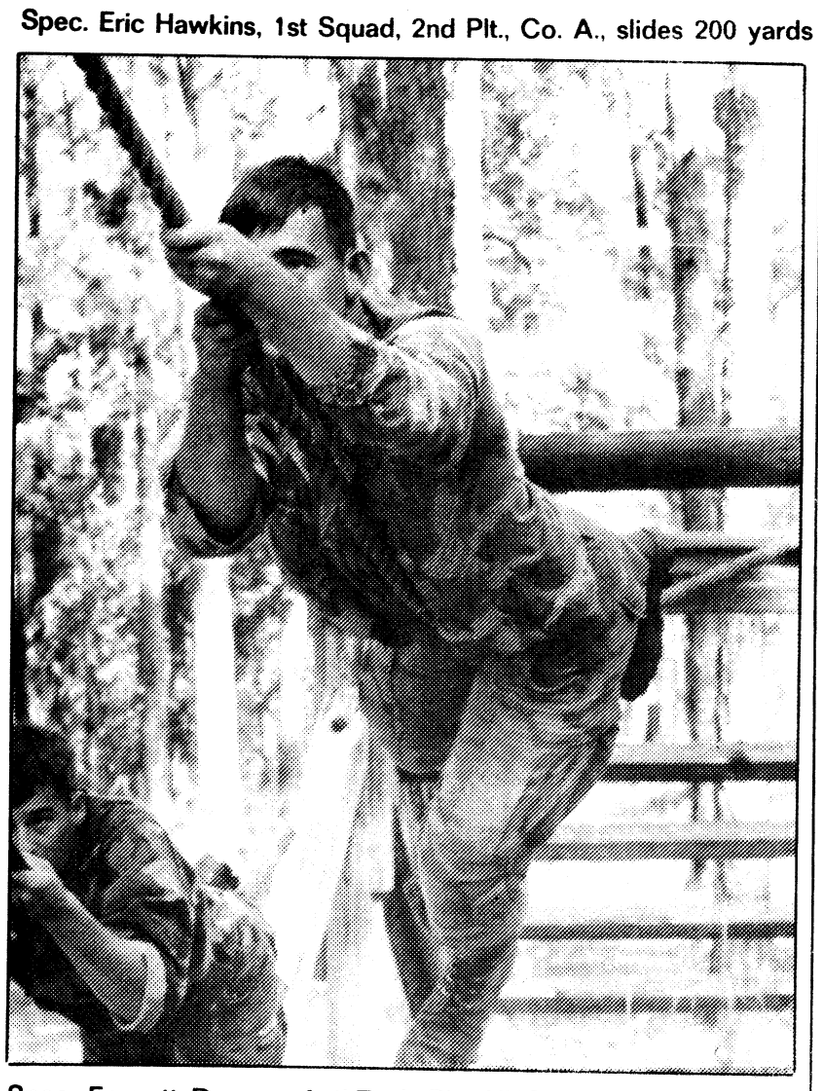
After two, almost sleepless days and nights, the soldiers faced two more challenges — rappelling and water confidence.



Each squad member rappelled from a 60-foot tower as fast as possible, adhering to correct procedures.

Next, the water confidence challenge came in two parts — the log walk/rope drop and the 80-foot "Slide for Life" suspension traverse.

In the 40-foot-high log walk/rope drop, three squad members climbed a 40-foot vertical beam, crossed an 18-inch wide log with a step obstacle in the middle. After monkey crawling on a rope about 12 feet, they dropped 40 feet to the water and swam unaided to the shore.



On the last test, the 80-foot "Slide for Life" suspension traverse, each soldier slid down a steel cable, crashed into the water (at speeds up to 40 mph), then swam unaided to the shore.

The crowning of the "Best Squad" was all that remained.

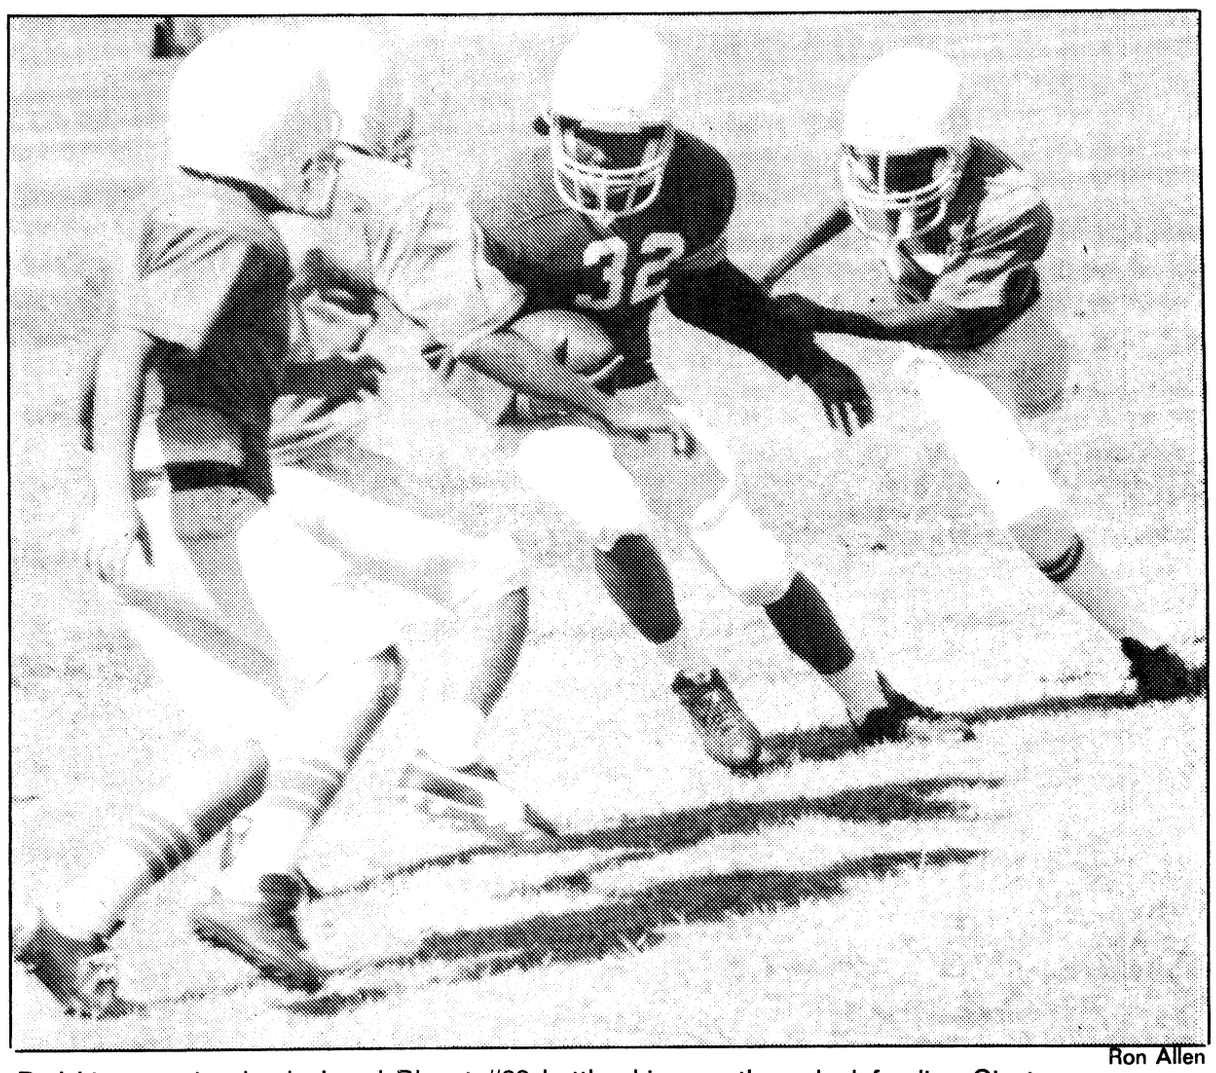
Quarterback, Cory Thompson, racked up three touchdowns and two extra point runs for 22 points and running-back, Junior Fatuesi, took the ball into the end zone twice for 12 points. The Bears other six points came on an interception run back TD by defensive end, Chuck Gonzales.



Junior Fatuesi's brother, Enoka Fatuesi,lead the Bears' defensive massacre of the Cowboys with three QB sacks and three tackles. The other Fatuesi brother, Ryan, was the captain of the team.

This win moves the Bears, at 4-3 tied with the Viking for second, to within one game of the Falcons, who lead the Termite League at 5-2. The Falcons fell victim to the Vikings, 22-18, Saturday.

Falcon B.J. Rogers scored two TDs in the first half to lead them to 12-0 lead. After giving up safety early in the second half, the Falcons lead 12-2.

Fire

stop it. If no one is home while the fire spreads, you would need a detector in your house so it could warn someone near.

Other than a detector, there are many ways to be prepared in case of fire. The phrase "stop, drop and roll" has been taught to us for many years. We have also been told to organize a safe evacuation plan. It would be wise to have everyone in our homes to learn it in case of an emergency.

The detector is very appropriate in case of a fire. As I have already stated, if no one is home, someone near by could get some help. What if a fire broke out in your home while you were sleeping. The detector could wake you and give you enough time to call the fire department or neighbor.

If you have a detector, it should be checked on a regular basis. If you don't have one, get one installed as soon as possible. You never know when a fire will break out and that detector will come in handy.

For example, a few weeks ago a young boy was left in a trailer for a few minutes while his mother went out. While she was gone, an appliance caught on fire and started spreading through the trailer. The young boy, frightened, ran under a bed with his teddy bear. The boy died of suffocation under the bed.

This youngster's life could have been saved if his mother had taken a few hours out of her time to install a detector. The few hours out of her life could have saved her son's entire life.

Have someone check your detector. Who knows, it might save your own life or the life of someone that you love.

Ball

Devlin ran in the extra point and the score was Falcons 12-10.

On the kickoff return after the Viking TD, B.J. Rogers returned the ball for his third TD of the game and the score was 18-10 Falcons.

With four minutes left, Devlin threw a sweep pass right to running back, Teronde Carr, from 35-yards out and closed the gap to 18-16.

The final score came with seconds left on a Devlin QB sneak putting the Vikings on top 22-18.

In the Pee Wee League, the Scooters shut out the Packers 35-zip and now lead the league at 6-1. Offensive standouts for the game were Joseph Addison, Franklin Mills, Gerald Lewis and Kevin Crow. Standouts for defense were A. Mitau, Keith Pittman, Michael McCaugel and Rashad Hassan.

Also in the Pee Wee League, the Redskins played a tough game to beat the Giants, 12-6. The Redskins scored both TDs in the first half. Duke Duplessis took in an 8-yard sweep, and Andy Chewey fired a pass to Terence Bailey and Jason Miranda who both came down with the ball in the end zone. Defensive standouts for the game were James Cooper, Emanulle Rodriguez, Hector Cedeno, Dorsey Stancil, Jamel Blount and J.C. Holland.

The only reported action in YA Soccer was a Termite League game between the undefeated Goalbusters, at 10-0, against the Rebels in second now at 7-4.

The Goalbuster beat the Rebels, 2-0. Both goals were made by Alan Gettridge. Goalie Billy Niuamoa kept the Rebels out of the net on defense.

First 10th Mountain battalion closes out, heads for Drum

By Agatha H. James
Bayonet staff writer

In their hearts, 10th Mountain soldiers knew when they set up their brigade here three years ago this day would come. They knew Fort Benning was a temporary location and that one day, they would have to move on to Fort Drum, N.Y.

That day came Monday for the men of the 2nd Battalion, 14th Infantry, the 2nd Brigade's first battalion to officially closeout.

Of more than 600 men who made up the initial battalion, 70 are going to Fort Drum, about 180 are getting out of the Army, 350 others are transferring to other posts or are being transferred to other units at Fort Benning. A few who make up a rear detachment will remain at Benning until they tie up some loose ends.

When the men arrive at Fort Drum, they initially will link up with 108 other cadre, 10 of whom had transferred previously from Fort Benning. The first order of business will be a mountain leaders certification course to prepare them for the first COHORT troops due to arrive in late January.

The train-up period will include basic soldiering and leadership skills, light infantry tactics and the Light Leaders Course, which will bring them back to Fort Benning in late November.

The train-up period will include basic soldiering and leadership skills, light infantry tactics and the Light Leaders Course, which will bring them back to Fort Benning in late November.

The 2nd Brigade set up at Fort Benning three years ago because Fort Drum did not have the facilities to accommodate the soldiers. Now, new barracks and ultra modern office buildings await those men who decided to go with the brigade.

The brigade's mission, for the most part, will be the same. They will continue to receive OSUT soldiers and train them during the COHORT cycle.

According to Lt. Col. Wayne M. Barth, battalion commander, the big challenge for them is to move everything, including families and equipment, from one station to another and begin operations in six weeks.

The brigade will be in for some changes. "Fort Drum is not as developed an installation as Fort Benning," Barth explained. "A lot of facilities and opportunities we have come to expect here will not be as readily available there.

"Also, because Fort Benning is Home of the Infantry, we have been able to procure the latest infantry doctrine and execute it before most other units in the Army."

Boy Scouts mobilize in 'Scouting For Food'

USAIC Public Affairs Office

More than 400 Fort Benning Boy Scouts will mobilize for two weekends this month to help stock Army Community Service's Emergency Food Locker.

Organized by the Chattahoochee Boy Scout Council, "Scouting For Food" is a drive by scouts and volunteer leaders from Fort Benning to collect cans of nonperishable food to donate to the needy. The postwide drive is part of a national "Good Turn" being conducted by the Boy Scouts, to ease the food problem for the more than 20 million Americans who go hungry some time during each month.

The food collected will supply the ACS Food Locker with food for months to come. The Food Locker is set up to help Army families who are often faced with "more month than money."

The locker can give families a three-day supply of food to tide them over until payday. Last year, the Food Locker helped more than 40 to 45 families per month.

Directed by Maj. Mark Cloth, chairman of the post drive, Scouts will distribute bags to homes on post Nov. 12.

The following Saturday, Nov. 19, scouts will return to pick up the bags of food. People planning to leave home on pick-up day should place the bags outside their doors. Scouts will gather the food and transport it to the Food Locker.

Individuals not receiving food bags at their homes can pick them up at Goolsby Food stores in Columbus. Harris explained that Goolsby Foods will bag food for their customers in about 135,000 "Scouting for Food" bags.

The main post exchange as well as Goolsby stores will also have food bag drop-off barrels.

Engr Fld officially named

By Shawn Bryson
Bayonet staff writer

There are few places at Fort Benning that a person can go without seeing one. They are the brown and beige name signs at nearly every building, range and field on post.

However, the field, across from Audie Murphy Gymnasium, until recently, lacked one.

The field had never been officially named and was unofficially known as Engineer Field since it lay directly across from the 36th Engineer Group and its primary users were the engineers.

According to SSgt. Ezzard Crittenden, 36th Engineer Group tasking noncommissioned officer, when a question was raised about four months ago as to who controlled the field, the Group sprang into action.

"The Group had controlled the field for years," Crittenden said. "We've always had the keys to all the gates and light boxes."

That tradition was upheld Oct. 28 as Col. Douglas R. Church, 36th Engineer Group commander, dedicated one of the brown and beige signs officially naming the field "Engineer Field" during a payday review ceremony.

Engineer Field is currently used for USAIC flag football and softball competitions, physical training and official ceremonies such as company-level changes of command.

Crittenden explained that use of the field, including the tennis courts, must be approved through the 36th's S-3.

Veterans gather for last 10th Mtn reunion

Original Mountain Men visit 10th Mtn soldiers

By Agatha H. James
Bayonet staff writer

As the band played "The Army Song" at the Oct. 28 afternoon retreat at Sand Hill, the proud faces of some 10th Mountain Division veterans stirred with feelings of gratitude and pride.

These original Mountain men, World War II soldiers, and their wives gathered to kick off the 1988 reunion of the Southeast Chapter of the 10th Mountain Division Association.

The veterans knew this reunion would be their last chance to meet with 10th Mtn. Div. soldiers at Fort Benning before the brigade moves to Fort Drum. (The 2nd Brigade's first battalion closed out Monday; the second one leaves Nov. 21.)

The veterans are a proud group with a rich heritage. They fought in Po Valley, at Riva Ridge and on Mt. Belvedere during the Italian Campaign in World War II.

"When we see the 10th Mountain patch, our chests swell with pride," said Paul Gunderman, the chapter's president. "What my comrades and I accomplished in Italy is history," he said. "Now young soldiers are carrying the ball. They make us proud."

The retreat began a weekend of reunion activities. After the retreat, members viewed a static display of weapons and talked to soldiers. Later that evening, the brigade held a reception for the veterans at the Officers' Club.

Saturday night, the chapter hosted a formal at the Columbus Hilton Hotel with 2nd Brigade soldiers as their special guests.

"The reunions are important because they help build bridges between old soldiers and new ones," said Col. Michael J. Connor, 2nd Brigade commander. "There is a common bond between men who have experienced war and those who are preparing for it.

"Also, the reunions give the veterans a chance to renew their friendships," he said. "There is a strong bond that exists between soldiers who have fought in war together."

Connor presented Gunderman a plaque from brigade soldiers pointing out that it is a memento for all the support the Association has provided the brigade.

AUSA president, retired Maj. Gen. Robert E. Sullivan, also presented a plaque to the Association.

The Southeast Chapter has 245 registered members from Florida, Georgia, Alabama, South Carolina and Tennessee. The national organization boasts 18 chapters with more than 3,200 members.

Snively snared by hunter

By Clyde Snively
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Each year at this time Jimbo comes by to try and talk me into going hunting with him.

He starts off by inviting me down to the cafeteria where he buys me a biscuit and a cup of coffee so I'll sit still long enough for him to make his sales pitch.

After patiently listening, I try to explain the facts of life to him. Namely:

○I'm a soldier. As a soldier, I get up early in the morning every day of my duty life. As a soldier, I get many opportunities to walk in the woods, get mud on my boots and scratches on my face. To me, a day off should be exactly that, a day where I do nonsoldier things, like sleep late and drive to wherever I need to go.

○As a soldier I understand what can happen when a bullet, fired from a gun makes contact with flesh and bone. The bullet wins.

○As a soldier who understands the value of intelligence, I know that out in the woods are hunters who have a tendency to fire at sounds, not sights. I make a lot of noise when I'm in the woods. I don't want to be fired at.

○As a rule, I dislike the idea of things falling on me. Such as hunters in rotted deer stands. While I never could understand why people will go up in deer stands that are rotten, the fact is they do; and they usually end up coming back down the hard way — fast.

○As a soldier, I know about guns. I know that if they are propped against a tree or a car, they will eventually slip and fall. If they are loaded, they will probably go off; and if someone is in the area, that someone will probably get hit.

○As a soldier, I also know about crossing barbed wired fences, the kind that snare your pants leg, or crossing rivers by walking on slippery logs. I know that the chances of falling or tripping are good. I also know that hunters, hot on the trail, often forget these things and cross these obstacles with loaded weapons, which again, have a tendency to go off when they strike the ground as the hunter trips and falls.

I was summarizing all these points for Jimbo when a frazzled looking lady leaned across her table and said, "If you want to hunt, but don't want to go in the woods, you ought to try pursuing the elusive bargain color TV."

"Uhn," Jimbo and I responded simultaneously. "Yep, me and several other great white hunters spent last Thursday driving around post trying to find the $65 color TV sets that were advertised for sale by DEH. The ones that were in the post hotel rooms.

"It's really quite challenging. They are very cunning and devious. First the sets were advertised to go on sale on Tuesday. Then that was changed to Thursday. So I went out there on Thursday. Wanted to be first in line.

"Went to Building 17 at 10 a.m. Just like the Benning Bulletin told me to do. Nothing. So I asked a maid. She told me to go to another building.

Someone must have seen me asking her because as I pulled out, I noticed three cars following.

"I got to the next building and sure enough, there was a large van with several workers pulling TVs out of boxes. I stopped. I asked. They laughed. They said the sale wasn't until Saturday, that I had to pay at Building 85 in advance.

"I went off to find Building 85. I now had seven cars behind me. No one there but another maid. She told me to try still another building. I took off, and now there were nine cars. All filled with hunters, all seeking the elusive TV."

She finally ran out of breath. Seeing my opportunity, I came right to the point. Did you ever get your TV?

"No," she said. "But I did learn they'd be on sale the end of this week. Only now they will cost the bargain hunter $70 plus tax."

"Will you be back, hunting?" I asked.

"Do I look like a fool?" she asked, not really answering my question. "Interesting," I said, turning back to Jimbo. "See, even civilized hunting isn't without its perils. Do you realize what kind of chain reaction accident that little convoy could have caused?

"I think I'll limit my hunting to foraging in the refrigerator during the time outs of football games. Just too bad ABC doesn't carry the game of the week in Columbus."

'Green To Gold' keeps good soldiers in

Army News Service

They're your brightest soldiers, and you know that they'll make sergeant with no problem.

Yet, you can't convince them to reenlist. You're losing the battle to the college campuses.

Sound familiar?

Since World War II, the Army has been a stepping stone to a college education. Last year alone, more than 77,000 soldiers left the Army with educational benefits.

Now, as a result of the Montgomery GI Bill, more soldiers than ever are entering the Army with definite plans to attend college three years later. They are young, bright, enthusiastic, and goal-oriented junior enlisted soldiers. They will tell you that they are not interested in reenlisting because they plan on earning their college degree.

Frustrating Losses

Many of these soldiers take advantage of the on-post campuses and tuition assistance offered them. Faced with this new reenlistment challenge, commanders can become frustrated as they watch some of their best soldiers slip away.

Should we just give up on them? Should we instead just channel our efforts toward other soldiers more willing to stay in the Army?

There is an Army program designed just for these soldiers. As leaders, you can help your soldiers, as well as the Army, by being aware of it.

Going from Green to Gold

The U.S. Army Cadet Command has initiated a program for this growing sector of our force. The program is called "Green to Gold" and is designed to attract veterans, using army education benefits, back into the Army through the Reserve Officers' Training Corps (ROTC). The program will also assist service members in making the transition from soldiers to students.

"Green to Gold" was created to aid the Cadet Command in commissioning the future leadership of the Army. As more people enlist in the Army to earn college benefits, the percentage of veterans on campus rises.

These soldiers-turned-students are excellent candidates for ROTC. They are familiar with the Army and the role of the Army officer. Their devotion to higher education is the same devotion that will make them outstanding junior officers.

An Established Network

"Green to Gold" is set up as a referral program to help Cadet Command track and contact likely candidates. However, the program goes beyond just another name in the computer. A network has been established to provide first-class service to the soldier.

That network includes a cadet battalion near each Army post in the continental United States, which is designated as a counterpart battalion. It has the responsibility of assisting all soldiers leaving that post to attend college.

Each counterpart battalion has an assistant professor of Military Science assigned as "Green to Gold" counselor. That counselor works closely with the post education system, the retention noncommissioned officers, and the transition point personnel.

Awareness may help prevent potential rape

By Patrick Reed
Military Police Activity

Rape is the most frequently committed violent crime against women in the United States, with attacks occurring about every two minutes.

These are only the reported cases. Rape is also the most seriously under reported crime in America. For every rape reported, it is estimated that 10 go unreported!

Rape is more than just a statistic. It is a violent act involving sexual intercourse against the will of the victim. Rape leaves both physical and psychological scars and, therefore, demands compassion and patience for the victim by those investigating the offense. The victim of rape is just that — a victim. The rapist is the criminal!

The criminal commits the crime of rape to control and humiliate another person — not out of sexual desire. The rapist has raped before and will continue to do so until caught. And make no mistake — a rapist looks for a situation in which the victim is vulnerable.

Who are potential victims? The answer often assumed is, "somebody else — it can't happen to me." Wrong. Rape knows no color, no ethnic grouping and no age limit. There is neither one type of victim nor one type of sex offender. It is estimated that about one-half of all sex crime offenders are known to the victim. Relationships range from casual acquaintances to close friendships.

The following are a few suggestions that, if heeded, may prevent you or a loved one from becoming a rape victim.

○Never hitchhike. Never accept rides from strangers or enter a vehicle with a group of males that you only know casually.

○If possible, never walk or jog alone. Travel well lit areas at night if you must go out. Don't take short cuts.

○When driving, keep your doors locked and windows closed.

○If car problems occur on the road, raise the hood and remain in the car. If a motorist stops, ask him to call the police and a tow truck.

○Do not respond to cat calls, whistles or remarks.

○Before going to bed, make a check of all windows and doors to ensure they are secure. Leave an outside light on.

○After your spouse leaves for work, relock the doors.

○Hang curtains or blinds on every window, and use them.

○Vary your routine. Most rapes are planned.

○If you think you're in danger, scream "fire." That gets more attention than yelling "help."

○Get to know a neighbor you can trust in an emergency.

○If you are being followed, change directions. If in a car, drive to the police station or fire department.

If you are confronted, it's up to your judgment on how much resistance to use. Weapons have been known to be taken away from victims and used against them. Martial arts are a good defense; but you should be confident that you can use your training, not to defeat the rapist, but enough to get away. Be realistic about your ability to protect yourself.

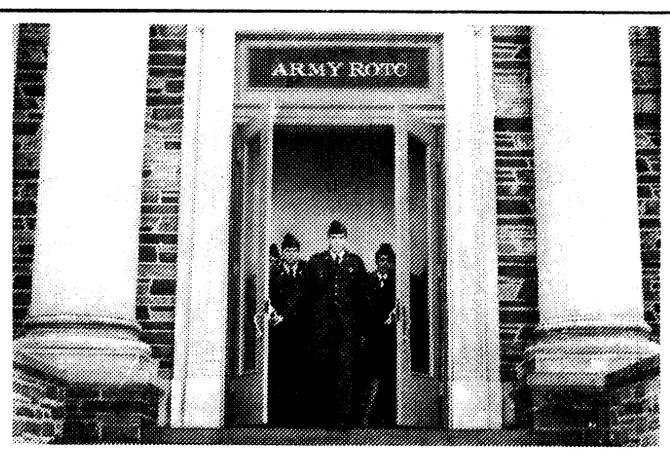
If you become a victim of rape, try to remain calm and rational. Report the attack immediately to the Military Police (545-2222/5222), if the crime occurred on Fort Benning. Also call a woman friend to accompany you to the hospital.

Despite the enormous psychological and physical trauma endured, victims should resist the temptation to bathe or treat injuries sustained in a rape attack. Treatment is not only best administered by trained medical personnel, but preservation and collection of physical evidence is of vital importance.

At Martin Army Hospital emergency room, rape victims receive priority treatment. A qualified hospital counselor for rape victims is available. A staff doctor conducts a physical examination and fills out the necessary medical forms used as evidence in court. Military Police officials then meet with the victim to get the details of the assault, or arrange to meet with the victim later. The Military Police will retain all the clothing of the victim to process for evidence.

If the rape occurs off post, the victim should contact the local police. The Columbus Police Department has a police officer specially trained in handling rape cases. They will transport the victim by patrol car or rescue squad to a hospital of choice. The Rape Crisis Center of Columbus hotline is open 24 hours a day, seven days a week and may be reached by calling 571-6010. Trained volunteers provide information and support to victims at no cost.

Your actions can help prevent you from becoming a rape victim. Following these precautions will reduce your risk and will help "Take a Bite out of Crime".



For more information and scheduling rape prevention classes for your unit, call the Crime Prevention Branch, 545-7115/7154.

Tips to help smokers quit

American Cancer Society

"I want to quit." If you can say that, you have taken the first and most important step in kicking the cigarette habit. If you have a sincere desire to stop smoking, the rest is mechanics. Nov. 17 is National Smokeout Day, which is a day in which smokers voluntarily put away their cigarettes for a day and hopefully forever.

Below are some tips to help smokers resist the urge to light up:

● Throw out all cigarettes by breaking them in half and wetting them down. Clean out all ashtrays in your home, office, or car and put them away. Discard matches; hide lighters, or give them away.

● When the urge to smoke hits, take a deep breath. Hold it a second, then release it very, very slowly. Taking deep, rhythmic breaths is similar to smoking, only you'll inhale clean air, not poisonous gases.

● Exercise to help relieve tension. Climb stairs rather than take the elevator, park the car a block or two from your destination and walk the rest of the way. At home, practice touching your toes, jog in place, do jumping jacks.

● When tempted to reach for a cigarette, think of a negative image about smoking. Select your worst memory connected with the habit — the time you burned a hole in your suit or when you were left completely breathless running for a bus that pulled away. Imagine this experience for 15 seconds whenever the urge occurs.

● Reward yourself with oral substitutes in the same way you may have used cigarettes. Good examples: sugarless gum, lemon drops, pumpkin or sunflower seeds, apple slices, carrot sticks, unbuttered popcorn and stick cinnamon.

● Eat three or more small meals. This maintains constant blood sugar levels, thus helping to prevent urges to smoke. Avoid sugar-laden foods and spicy items that can trigger a desire for cigarettes.

● Scramble up your day and change habits connected with smoking. Drive a different route to work; eat lunch in a new place; leave the "scene of an urge." At home, avoid your "smoking chair" after dinner, reach for gum rather than a cigarette when answering the phone.

● Cleanse your body of nicotine. Drink liquids — lots of them. Water (6-8 glasses a day), herbal teas, fruit juices and caffeine-free soft drinks all fit the bill. Pass up coffee, caffeinated soft drinks and alcohol, as they can increase your urge to smoke.

● Keep your hands — and mind — busy. Work on a crossword puzzle, knit a sweater, balance your checkbook, fix something around the house, shampoo the dog.

26 Latin Americans graduate USARSA

By Marco Morales
School of Americas

Twenty-six officers representing six Latin American countries graduated Oct. 19 from the Military Intelligence course at the U.S. Army School of the Americas (USARSA).

Countries with number of graduates represented were Bolivia, one; Colombia, five; El Salvador, 12; Honduras, five; Peru, one and Venezuela, two.

Guest speaker for the graduation ceremony, which took place at the Infantry Museum auditorium, was Col. John A. Cash of the Defense Intelligence Agency in Washington, D.C.

The 10-week course qualifies officers to work as tactical intelligence staff officers in a conventional or unconventional war setting.

The course also focuses on how to manage employees in a low-level intelligence collection organization and in internal defense and development operations.

Since USARSA's inception in 1946, more than 50,000 Latin American military personnel have graduated from its diverse curriculum.

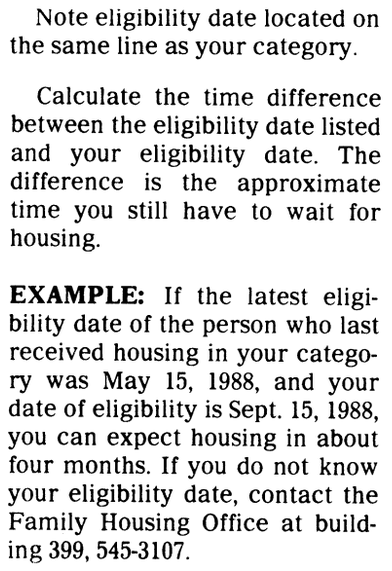
By using the following procedure, soldiers on the Family Housing Waiting List can use this chart to estimate when they can expect quarters:



Locate your category of housing.

Note eligibility date located on the same line as your category.

Calculate the time difference between the eligibility date listed and your eligibility date. The difference is the approximate time you still have to wait for housing.

EXAMPLE: If the latest eligibility date of the person who last received housing in your category was May 15, 1988, and your date of eligibility is Sept. 15, 1988, you can expect housing in about four months. If you do not know your eligibility date, contact the Family Housing Office at building 399, 545-3107.

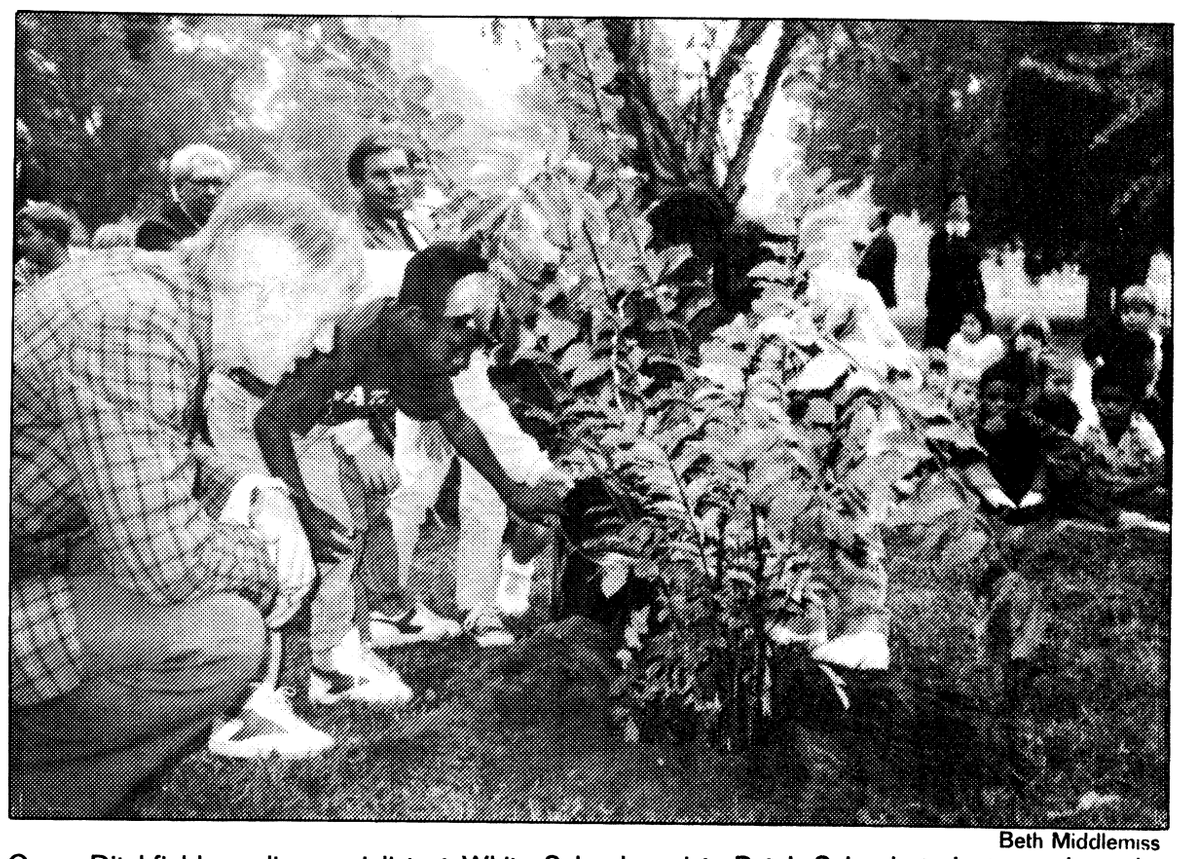
CB&T donates trees to schools

By Beth Middlemiss
Fort Benning Schools



Trees were a topic of discussion in the Fort Benning schools last week as 10 new crepe myrtle trees were planted at each of the eight Fort Benning School campuses.

Jimmy Yancey, president of Columbus Bank and Trust, presented the trees as a gift to the schools from CB&T as part of CB&T's 100th birthday celebration. Trees were placed according to a beautification plan that each school is developing.

The Fort Benning schools are participating in the Keep Columbus Beautiful program, which will provide students a variety of activities to make them aware of the importance of a clean and beautiful environment.

To celebrate the arrival of the new trees, two of the schools held tree planting ceremonies Oct. 28. At Wilson School, students, under the direction of Glenn Hughes, Wilson School fifth grade teacher, read poetry and their own original essays about trees and about the importance of their school and campus to them.

At Patch School, the kindergarten and first grade students listened to students from White School present a program on trees. Following the program, Owen Ditchfield, White School media specialist, explained the tree planting process and how to care for the trees to the Patch students. Ditchfield then assisted several of the Patch students as they planted one of the trees.

to ensure that each college-bound soldier determined to have officer potential is quickly identified and counseled. The counselor provides information on college as well as Army ROTC.

Through the counselors, soldiers learn what ROTC offers during college and the benefits of becoming an officer upon graduation. The counselors can also assist the soldier with admissions paperwork, scholarship applications, and general preparation for college.

Soldiers who express an interest in the ROTC program are entered into a tracking referral system, which allows the cadet command to follow up on the progress of each soldier.

The referral system, designated "Gold Quest," sends data on the soldier to a national center and on to the professor of military science at the college the soldier plans to attend.

How Referral Works

If a soldier is leaving the Army at Fort Benning, Ga., and attending school at Ohio University, information on the soldier's separation date, home address, college major and unit address is forwarded to the cadet battalion at OU.

The soldier will then be contacted by the counterpart battalion counselor just prior to leaving the service. He will also receive direct mail information from the National Center after leaving the service and prior to attending college.

Finally, the Professor of Military Science at OU will contact the soldier once school has started.

By establishing and maintaining contact, and following up with a personal visit, the cadet command hopes to retain these bright, young soldiers within the force and return them to the field as officers.

Additional Advantages

While the immediate audience for this program is the college-bound soldier, the counselors will also spend time updating education center and retention personnel on the Army ROTC program. This system of ROTC retention will be successful if the information available to the soldier is accurate and timely.

As information for the program changes, the counterpart battalion counselors can update education centers so that the best possible service to the soldier is provided.

Unit commanders can boost the program, and the Army, by finding out all the current information on the program through their Army Education Center. This will assist them in dealing with soldiers bound for college.

If the program is successful, then a commander's loss could, in the end, be turned into the Army's gain.

Girl Scouts honor their founder

Juliette Low

By Shawn Bryson
Bayonet staff writer

Fort Benning Girl Scouts gathered at Camp Hideaway Sunday to share favorite songs at a songfest in celebration of their founder, Juliette Low.

Low founded the Girl Scouts of America March 12, 1912. The Girl Scouts are now more than four million strong across the country with more than 200 at Benning.

According to Wanda Campbell, Fort Benning's Girl Scout service unit director, the average number of Girl Scouts here is 430.

Currently, the scouts are primarily working on their badges and will start all of their bridging programs in January, which include such activities as International Day, arts and crafts, as well as many types of outdoor skills.

The five levels of scouts - Daisies, Brownies, Juniors, Cadets and Seniors, range in age from 5 to 17.

The Fort Benning Cadets (7th-12th graders) are now into "Bobby Socks to Stockings," which is a course that teaches many important aspects about growing up.

Girls wanting to join the Girl Scouts should call Suzanne Switzer at 687-3419.

ASK THE JUDGE

By Susan J. McKeeman
Staff Judge Advocates Office

Q: I recently joined a health club in town. Last Saturday, when Bubba and I strode down for our morning workout, a sign on the door said the club had closed down. I was pretty ticked, but I didn't think there was much I could do.

On Monday, I received a letter from a bank. It informed me the bank had bought my club finance contract. The letter said to make my payments to that bank now, and for $20 extra a month, I could use another health club. I checked out the other club. It had aerobics and other sissy stuff. I don't want to go to the other club. I certainly don't want to pay any more money either. Don't I have any rights? What should I do?

A: Stop paying on your health club contract at once. Health club contracts are your promises to pay money in exchange for their promises to keep their facilities open for your use. Once the club breaks its promise and closes down, it has breached the contract; and you are no longer bound to it.

You have the right to stop paying and to defend your actions by saying the club breached the contract. The bank may try to say that it wasn't the one that breached the contract, and that since it bought your contract from the club, it has bought all the club's rights under the contract, including the right to collect money from you.

However, the law provides that whoever buys your contract gets not only all the rights of the original party, but all the liabilities as well. This means that your breach of contract defense is also good against the bank, and you should not have to pay them either.

Signing a health club contract often causes many problems. Be careful what you sign and check the facilities on post first to see if you really need to spend so much of your money for something you already have for free. Before you make any decisions, you should contact the Legal Assistance Office for additional guidance.

Destin Recreation Area: Now is the perfect time to catch the mild weather and beat the crowds in the Destin Florida Recreation Area. Winter rates are as follows.

	2 BR Cabin	3 BR Cabin	Motel
E-5 and below	$16	$18	$10
E-6 through E-9	$17	$19	$15
WO 1 through CWO 3	$19	$21	$15
CWO 4 and above	$20	$22	$15

Call the ITT Office, 545-7535/4155 for more information or reservations. (MWR).

Six Flags discount tickets: ITT and Six Flags say thanks to the military community with discount tickets. One thousand tickets to Six Flags are available for $7.50 per ticket. Tickets are good on Nov. 13 only. (MWR)

Auburn Football Tickets: The ITT Office is currently offering selected Auburn football tickets. Also, ITT offers discount movie tickets, Disneyland Packets and much more. (MWR)

Military Lodging Rates: The Information Tour & Travel Office is now booking lodging facilities at military rates. Call the ITT Office for a list of eligible hotels.

This is a special offer that is sure to appeal to anyone who's ever arrived with their family at a duty station only to find government quarters were not available. To begin with, the soldier has to bear the expense for a commercial hotel. Then, because they're new to the area, it's hard to find a good hotel, let alone one with reasonable rates.

Don't take chances, ITT can tell you which hotels are available, whether they have laundry facilities, baby-sitting services, a swimming pool, fitness center and so forth. Of course, the best part is you will not have to pay full price.

If you plan to travel, remember to book discount lodging reservations with the ITT Office. The same discounts apply if you need to reserve rooms for parents, family members or other personal guests who plan to visit you at the installation. Call the ITT Office, 545-7535/4155 or lodging reservations. (MWR)

Reserve chaplains arrive for annual training

By Jo Ann Stamey
USAIC Chaplain's Office

About 35 chaplains have come to Fort Benning for their annual training. The 70th Division in Michigan, 80th Division (Training) in Virginia, 95th Division in Oklahoma, and the 104th Division in Oregon and Washington are just a few of the units that provide Reserve chaplains.

Most Reserve chaplains are pastors of local churches, while others minister in hospitals, schools, and prisons. Still others are managers, consultants, insurance representatives, and general contractors.

A majority of the Reserve units stretch over a wide area, with the battalions and brigade headquarters 200-300 miles apart. An attempt is made to have chaplains serve units fairly close to home; but often they may travel up to 300 miles round trip each month, as do the chaplains in the 1st Brigade of the 91st Division.

On drill weekends, the chaplains emphasize three types of ministry programs — visitation to troops in their work areas, counseling, and worship services. Worship services usually require creativity and adaptability, since most Reserve units do not have access to a chapel. Classrooms, gyms, warehouses, and outdoors become the worship center at a drill.

Other priorities for Reserve chaplains are special staff officer to the commander, family ministry, and morale support. Reserve chaplains keep physically fit by regular participation in PT; and they keep up to date on military skills subjects by attending classes on map reading, communications, and first aid; and accompanying the units to the field.

Educational and ministerial skills are enhanced by annual attendance at division and area Army chaplain schools and conferences.

Chap. (Lt. Col.) Darrell Neves, who has been in the Reserves for 19 years, served at the brigade chaplain for the 3rd ITB during their Mobilization Army Training Center (MATC) mission, in July. Chap. Neves said he especially enjoys ministering to soldiers, and that Fort Benning is the best place for them to train since this is their mobilization site.

Chap. (Maj.) Jon Wright from 1st Brigade (OSUT), 91st Division, stated, "Our annual training at Fort Benning is probably the greatest opportunity to enhance our skills as chaplains and be prepared to come on board alongside active duty chaplains in the event of mobilization. We appreciate the chaplains at Fort Benning who welcome us and work with us as part of the team."

Recently Reserve Chap. (Maj.) Dwight Nelson arrived here from the 1st Brigade, 104th Division. He has come to Fort Benning for annual training since the early 1980s. He states, "This gives me an opportunity to serve my country as well as my God."

The overall feelings of the Reserve chaplains were that the chaplains at Fort Benning really stepped aside and let them train, but were there when needed. The Reserves especially seem to enjoy coming together with chaplains from so many different denominations, which gave them a broader spiritual perspective.

Chap. (Maj.) Don Taylor of the 2nd ITB, who has served with a large number of Reserve chaplains, feels the Reserve chaplains have contributed significantly.

"They have innovative and creative ideas, and the quality is such that they could assume the active Army chaplains' roles without difficulty. We have an interesting partnership."

This nation was built on the "citizen soldier" premise — people who chose not to be full-time military members, but who realized the importance that the nation have the strength to be ready, if needed. Today, this concept is still alive. The Reserves are people who care enough about what this nation stands for to say, "We'll be there when needed."

Work should be a place of fulfillment

God invites us to reconcile

By Mark W. Kayser
2nd Bn., 18th Inf. Chaplain

Since time began, man has worked the soil for a meager existence. The beginning of work can be traced back to the Bible in the book of Genesis when Adam and Eve sinned and God banished them from the Garden of Eden. With that sin, man's relationship with God and earth was altered.

Once a natural and fulfilling activity, work took on a toilsome character. Man's work with soil became difficult. Such became the nature of labor. (The word "labor" is also associated with the pain of childbirth, the result of the sin of Eve.)

Although few of us work the soil for an existence today, things are pretty much the same. For most of us, work is toilsome, burdonsome and difficult. Few people sense true fulfillment in their work.

What is your relationship to your work. Is it characterized by difficulty or fulfillment?

Two types of people stand out in the consideration of the question of work and its relationship to man. The first is the individual who never seems pleased with his profession. The fact of this person's displeasure with work appears in almost every conversation. You know people like that. Their lives are filled with complaints.

The second person is the one who senses fulfillment in his work, one who refers to his work as a "vocation" or "calling." This second person has discovered the key to fulfillment at the workplace. The key is that of restored relationships, both with God and the very nature of work itself.

Karl Marx viewed work as the bridge to the universe. Labor for him was the basis of all human fulfillment. What Marx ignored was the fact of the broken relationship between God and man, a brokenness that is fundamental to all other relationships. In Genesis, we find the depth and breadth of that brokenness; so we labor in our work and in giving birth.

God invites us to reconcile with him and with our work. Let us reflect on our relationships, once broken, but now healing. Let us thank God for our work.

Eighth annual NIM Road Race attracts 3,000

Ron Allen

Stephen Redmond crosses the finish line in second place at the National Infantry Museum Road Race.

By Ron Allen
USAIC Public Affairs Office

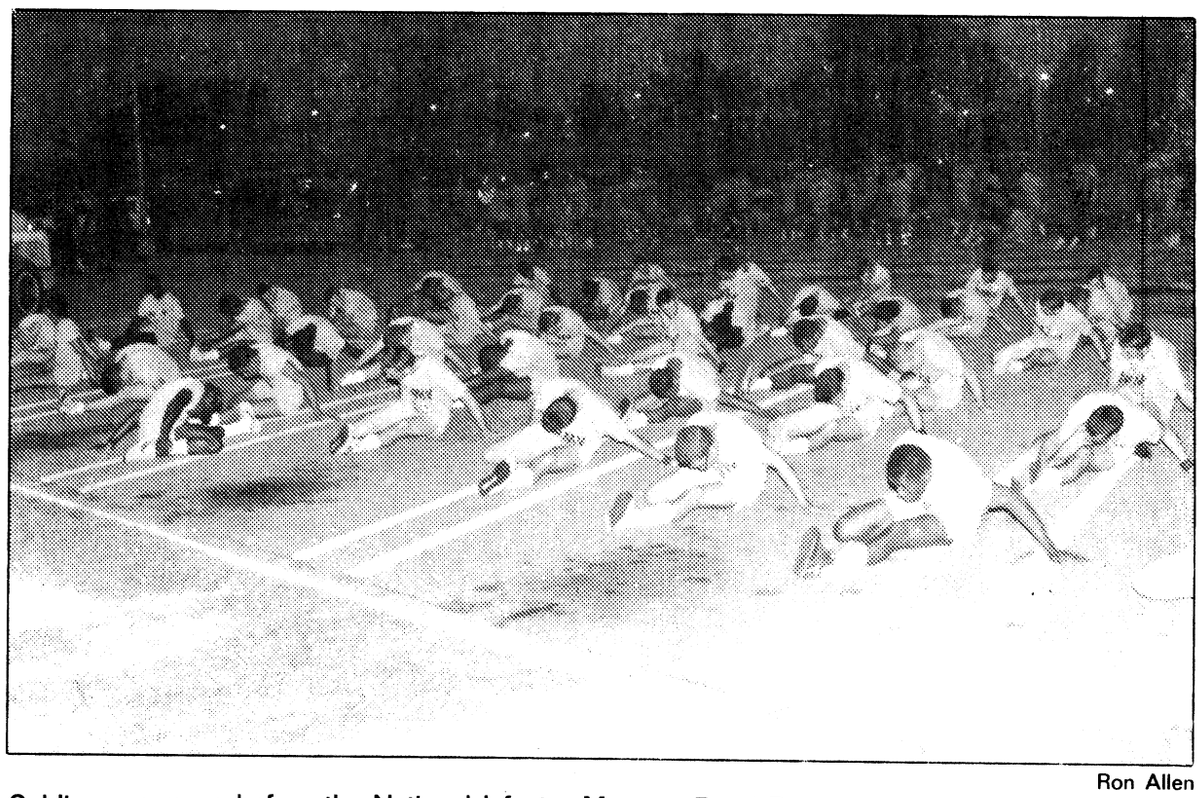
The eighth annual National Infantry Museum Road Race attracted more than 3,000 runners Oct. 29 pushing the money raised over the $100,000 target set in 1981.

The race was started in 1981 to raise the $100,000 needed to renovate the third floor of the museum. Since that time, the third floor has been renovated; and the money is now being used to buy artifacts, maintenance equipment, and services such as restoration of artifacts.

Thomas Schmitt, an Infantry Officers Advanced Course student, cruised over the finish line first with a time of 25:36.5 leaving the record, 24:23.00, set during the first race in 1981 by Theodis Abston, unbroken. Abston was a former 800-meter specialist on the Auburn University track team.

Stephen Redmond, an Airborne School student, shot across the finish line second with a time of 25:54.00; and last year's winner, Lloyd McDonald, finished third at 26:03.00.

A Fort Benning family member, Colleen Forshee, finished first in the women's category with a 30:09.00, out-classing last year's time of 30:23.00 set by Suzanne Lee. The time was the third best ever for the race.



Lise Cote of MEDDAC finished in second with 31:39.00 followed by Patrice Davis of Columbus with 32:54.00.

This year, the race was run on a new course beginning behind Building 4 and finishing in the front of the building.

In terms of organization and planning, this year's race seemed to be a little better. "We didn't have the scoring problems that we had last year," said race coordinator Bernie Pfeiffer.

The National Infantry Museum, for which the race is held, houses infantry artifacts dating back to the mid-1750s. Included in the museum's collections are a letter from President George Washington signed shortly before his death in 1799, a portable field bar of Gen. Ulysses S. Grant and uniforms worn by Gen. Omar Bradley who served as Infantry School Commandant from 1941 to 1942.

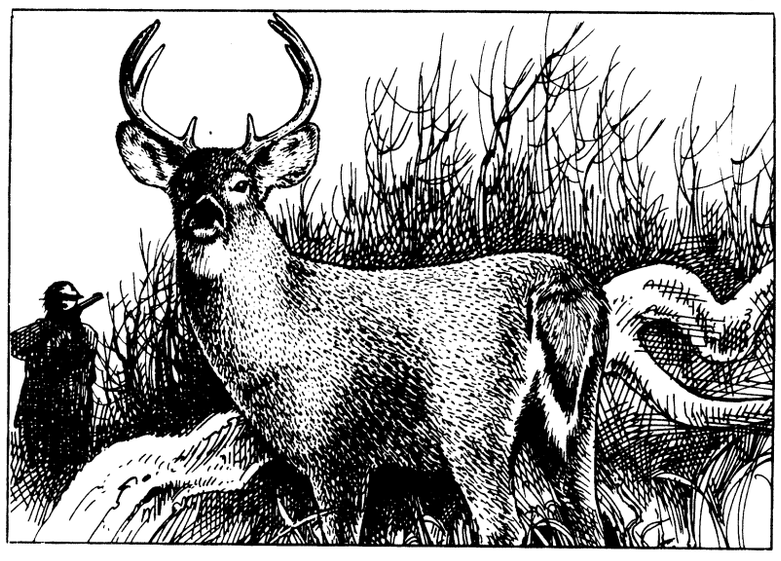
Hunting season requires safety



USAIC Safety Alert

This year about 3,000 military and civilian personnel are expected to hunt at Fort Benning. Past hunting seasons have been marred with many accidents; some accidental shootings have resulted in fatalities. Many other mishaps were due to over exertion, exposure, and especially, falls.

Some essentials of safe hunting are:

- Wear international orange vest and hat.
- Treat all weapons as if they are loaded.
- Don't drink alcoholic beverages while hunting.
- Be sure to unload weapons when not actually hunting.
- Shoot only when positive of your target.
- Beware when crossing fences or using old deer stands.
- Hunt with a responsible friend.
- Make sure someone knows where you are hunting and when you are expected to return. Stay in your assigned area.
- Do not touch any object that resembles ammunition. Report the location of such objects to the Military Police, 545-5222.

With the opening of deer hunting season, commanders should inform personnel of the precautions needed for safe hunting. Commanders should also be aware that hunters and training units could be in the same area by accident. Soldiers in camouflage have been fired at by mistake. Awareness of this situation and alertness will help minimize hunting accidents this year.

Vets' benefits eligibility change

Consumer Education Research

Although more than $32 billion were paid out in veterans benefits last year, billions more went unclaimed in the past few years.

Every year, eligibility for benefits and the array of available benefits are changed, and very few veterans or their survivors keep up with the latest rules.

Because of this and changes in their circumstances, many veterans, their families and survivors are now entitled to money and other benefits from the government even though they were not eligible in the past.

These were the findings of a study group of the Consumer Education Research Center, a 19-year-old national nonprofit consumer group. They found that more than one-fourth of the money paid in veterans benefits goes to persons who never served in the armed forces of the United States. Most of these were related by blood or marriage to veterans but many were not. Others were members of the armed forces of countries who fought with us against our enemies.

Each year, the Center compiles a book describing the latest rules on available benefits and how to qualify for those benefits. The 192-page "Complete Guide To Federal And State Benefits For Veterans, Their Families, and Survivors," with a foreword by Senator Robert Doyle and a separate book containing information and forms to obtain marriage, death, divorce and other vital documents needed to substantiate claims have just been issued. The set of two books is $7 (plus $2 postage and handling) from CERC-Vets, P.O. Box 336, South Orange, N.J., 07079 or by call 1-800-872-0121 with credit card.

Robert L. Berko, executive director of the consumer group, says that many survivors of veterans are unaware that they might be eligible to receive money, medical care, educational assistance, help in buying a home or other benefits. In fact, eligibility and benefits change constantly, and some people, ineligible in previous years, are now able to start receiving money.

The study found that many people are unaware that they are considered dependents or survivors of veterans. These include those involved in illegal marriages, those who remarried after the death or disability of a veteran, children born out of wedlock to a veteran, parents of a veteran and even dependent grandchildren. Any of these may be eligible for benefits.

Berko says that the study questioned veterans about benefits and found that the majority were unfamiliar with most of the benefits now being granted under Federal and state laws. Even veterans now collecting were unaware of other benefits for which they were eligible and could be collecting.

For instance, disabled veterans can receive apparel allowances if they use wheelchairs, artificial limbs or any prosthetic device that can wear or damage clothing and, if they have a spouse in need of care, they can receive an allowance to pay someone to provide that care.

Few knew that (unemployed veterans) 65 or older are considered, permanently and totally disabled and, those with limited income and savings, can collect as much as $11,000 per year.

Other benefits the consumer found that were little known are:

A veteran (or dependent) can receive up to $837 (40 percent in advance) if he or she will assist the VA in a work-study program while in an educational program.

Federal agencies are required to establish affirmative action plans to facilitate employment and advancement of veterans with any degree of disability. In fact, some job classifications must be filled by eligible vets.

Families of veterans buried or mentioned on commemorated on Tablets of the Missing Overseas are eligible for free passports to visit those sites.

In addition, the book includes a complete list of VA facilities and help to secure the information needed with VA applications.

Be prepared by checking filters before winter arrives

By Becky Ray
Energy Branch

Just as we prepare ourselves for winter by pulling warm clothes out of storage, it's also necessary to prepare our homes and offices for cold weather. An important way of getting your building ready is making sure that your heater is ready for the cold when you are. That means checking the filter to make sure it's clean, and removing dust that may have accumulated from vents and air intakes.

Dirty filters can cause a host of problems. According to Buddy Bussey, foreman of the DEH Heating, Ventilation and Air Conditioning Shop, dirty filters are the most common cause of heater failure. When too much dirt accumulates over the combustion chamber, the chamber can crack, leaving occupants without heat. This can also cause the release of carbon monoxide fumes into the house.

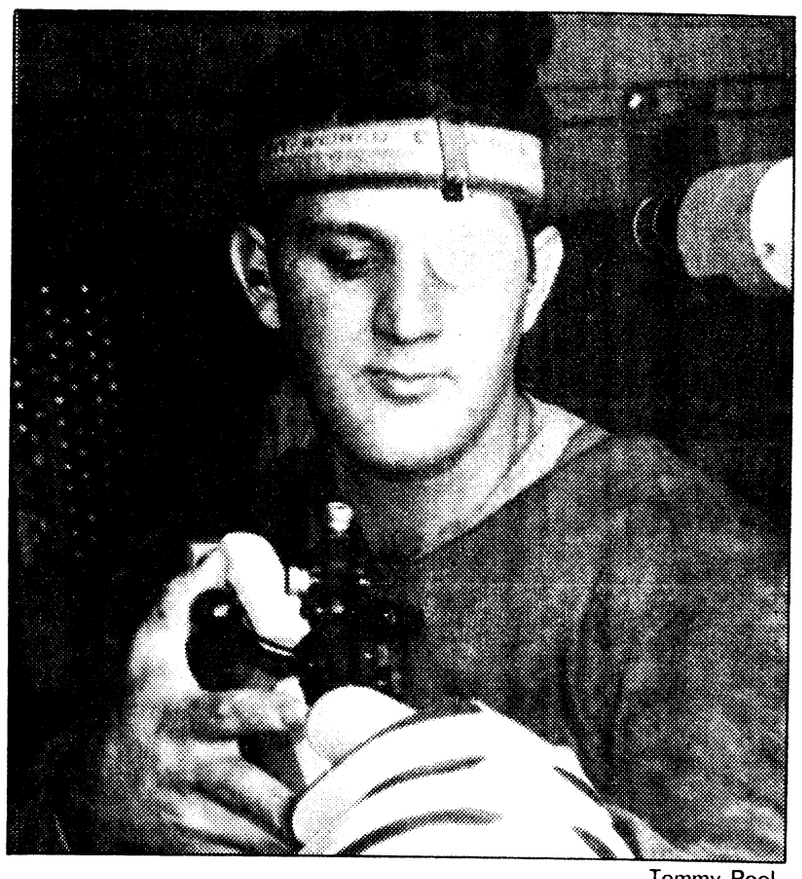
Even while they may continue to run, heaters with dirty filters don't work efficiently. The heater stays on longer than it would with a clean filter, but can't deliver as much warmth to the space. Because the heater works harder, it's more likely to have maintenance problems or shut down completely. It also wastes energy.

The quality of air that is blown through a dirty filter is lessened, as filters lose much of their effectiveness when they accumulate too much dirt. Dirt, dust, and pollen are blown through the house along with the heated air, rather than remaining trapped in the filter.

Worse than allowing a heater to operate with a dirty filter is using a heater with no filter at all. Particles that would normally be trapped in the filter are charred in the heat exchanger and then blown out with the heated air, ready to collect on walls, furniture or lungs. Dirt also collects on the heat exchange surface or in heating coils and stops heat transfer. The heater stops working and major work is often required to repair the damage.

Extensive, costly and time-consuming repairs and replacements ware often caused by the occupants' failure to replace filters. Heater filters should be checked often and changed at least once a month, or more often if needed. Replacement filters are issued at the Unit and Housing Support Center (formerly the Self-Help Center), Building 385 on Vibbert Avenue. Filters come in many sizes, so it's important to know the correct size for your heater. Copy the dimensions from the side of the old filter, or bring the old filter in for exchange.

Some family housing units have heat pumps with permanent filters. These should be washed gently by hand in warm water and a mild detergent, and then rinsed with clean water. Allow to air-dry after blotting excess moisture with a clean towel.



Troop units should submit requests for replacement filters on DA Forms 4283, with the sizes and quantities clearly stated. Each filter should be inspected closely for the correct size, as some buildings use several different filters.

Keeping a clean filter in your heating system is probably the single most important maintenance measure you can take to keep the heater operating properly and at maximum efficiency. The few minutes taken to check and change a heater filter cam save major problems and inconvenience in the future.

Dubis guns down final World Cup shooting championship

Outshoots 1988 Olympic gold medal total by 1.1

Tommy Pool

Glenn Dubis checks his weapon before a competition.

By Tommy Pool
USAMU PAO

Army Capt. Glenn Dubis won this year's final World Cup shooting championship held in Munich, West Germany, Oct. 19-22.

These final championships pitted the top world cup finishers from throughout the year into one final event to determine the top marksmen in the world.

More than 100 of the world's best competitors from 25 nations participated in 13 shooting events at Munich and included 20 individual medal winners from the recent Olympic Games held at Seoul, Korea.

Competing in the 50-meter three-position rifle championship, Dubis fired 1,280.4 to finish ahead of G. Maksimovic of Yugoslavia by two points, while Robert Foth of the U.S. team placed third at 1,269.4 points.

The final world cup score by Dubis was 1.1 points above the gold medal winning total fired in the same event during last month's Olympics in Seoul.

Fifteen Americans participated in the final world cup championships, including four members of the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit

Joining Dubis from USAMU were Capt. John McNally and Olympic silver medalist MSgt. Erich Buljung, both competing in pistol events, and Spec. Thomas Tamas competing in 50-meter rifle prone.

In the pistol championships, McNally placed fifth in the rapid-fire event, while Buljung finished sixth in the 50-meter free pistol matches.

During the 50-meter rifle prone championships, Tamas finished with a strong closing effort to place fourth in the final standings.

Tamas scored a preliminary total of 597 out of 600 points, and finished with a 10-shot final of 104.5 for an aggregate of 701.5 to finish only one-tenth of a point out of third place.

The only other American to win a world-cup event besides Dubis, was Launi Meili of Colorado Springs, Colo., who fired a near world record total to win the ladies 10-meter air rifle championship.

In the final medal count, the Soviet Union and Yugoslavia tied with three world cup winners, followed by the United States and Czechoslovakia with two winners each.

2/10th FA supports USAIS with firepower

By Sally Roberts
197th Infantry Brigade

An artilleryman once said, "The infantry may be able to take the hill, but the artillery can move the hill."

Soldiers from 2nd Battalion, 10th Field Artillery can prove this proverb to be true, as they often do while demonstrating their firepower to students in various USAIS courses.

The only artillery battalion at Fort Benning, it is often tasked to support the Infantry School, giving infantry officers a first-class show of the artillery assets available to them.

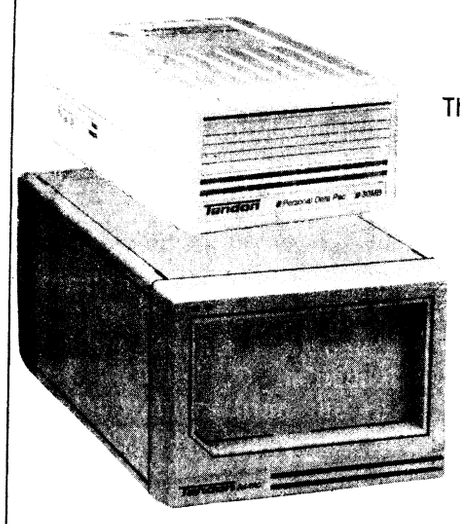
The battalion's main weapon is the M-109 self-propelled howitzer, with which it performs it's mission of supporting the 197th Infantry Brigade (Mechanized). However, the battalion also has several M-101A1 howitzers, the type that are towed behind another vehicle, which are valuable artillery assets to a light infantry or airmobile unit.

These smaller artillery pieces are often used by the battalion to perform missions in support of the Infantry Center. During local celebrations and ceremonies, a proper artillery salute to the national colors is most often provided by the soldiers of 2nd Bn., 10 Fld. Arty.

It's a big responsibility for one battalion of soldiers to maintain the artillery mission at the "Home of the Infantry."

NCOA teams battle during family day

By Bill Hurley
NCO Academy



The Fort Benning Noncommissioned Officer Academy, soon to be officially dedicated the "Henry Caro Noncommissioned Officer Academy," in honor of Command Sergeant Major Henry Caro, (the first enlisted commandant Dec. 1974-July 1975), recently conducted its annual Organizational Day activities at McBride School athletic field.

The academy members (about 100 cadre since the recent acquisition of the Drill Sergeant School) and their families turned out in force to participate in unit competition pitting each branch (ANCOC, BNCOC, PLDC, DSS, and the Headquarters Detachment) against each other. Activities included volleyball, water balloon toss, egg toss, horseshoes, sack race, three-legged race and a chariot race followed by an award ceremony and an academy picnic. Competition was fierce, especially since the winner of the most events will carry the NCOA Banner Day Streamer for the next year.

A highlight of the activities was the First Sergeant Chariot Race in which a "chariot" carrying the branch first sergeant and drawn by branch members, was unmercifully pelted with water balloons, eggs and containers of ice water. All branches posted extremely fast times over the measured course. Whether this was because of athletic ability or determination to get through the "gauntlet" as quickly as possible is unknown. The overall winner of the NCOA Organizational Day was the PLDC branch.

The NCOA firmly believes in building and maintaining esprit de corps and promoting quality of life for NCOA cadre and their families. They believe that social functions such as the recent Organizational Day are an excellent way to promote these values.

Registration starts for Faith School race

By Beth Middlemiss
Fort Benning Schools

It's time to register for the 10th annual Faith School Race set for Dec. 3 and sponsored by the Don C. Faith Middle School physical education department.

"Our race has grown each year," said Susan Emerson, Faith physical education teacher and race coordinator. "Students, parents, teachers, members of the Fort Benning and adjoining communities, and runners who have served at Fort Benning, all come out to make this an exciting day for everyone. It has become a family affair with entire families running the race together."

The race involving 700 to 1,000 runners each year began 10 years ago as an outgrowth of the Faith physical education program and the Faith Jogging Club.

All proceeds from the race go to the Faith physical education program to provide additional equipment and incentive awards for students.

The Faith Race is made up of three races that begin and end at Don C. Faith Middle School at 1375 Ingersoll Street. The one-mile race for boys and girls 14 years old and under begins at 8:45 a.m. The two-mile race begins at 9:15 a.m., and the five-mile race begins at 9:45 a.m. The two and five-mile races are open to all age categories.

There are 19 age categories within the three races, and awards will be presented in each category at the awards ceremony in the Faith School gym. Faith Race T-shirts will be presented to all finishers.

What is MULTIPLE SCLEROSIS

How Is MS Caused?

Our bodies contain a fatty substance called myelin which surrounds and protects nerve fibers of the brain and spinal cord (the central nervous system) in the same way that insulation protects electrical wires. When any part of this myelin sheathing, or insulation, is destroyed, nerve impulses to the brain are interrupted and distorted.

The result is multiple sclerosis —multiple because many scattered areas of the brain and spinal cord are affected; sclerosis because sclerosed or hardened patches of scar tissue form over the damaged myelin.

We know how multiple sclerosis happens. We still don't know why. That is one of the questions researchers are investigating.

Please Help A Neighbor's Child In Need!

In Third World countries, hundreds of thousands of children are in desperate need of food, clothing, medical care—the basics of life. These girls and boys are even denied the opportunity to attend school. They are our neighbors in a world that grows smaller every day.

Through CCF, you can sponsor a neighbor's child. The cost is $18 a month—just 60¢ a day—to help a poor child in Asia, Africa or Latin America—a child who has virtually nothing.

Please pick up your phone now and dial the toll-free number below. Be a good neighbor by helping an innocent child.

Scrap material recycled into $1 million

One man's junk is another man's treasure

By Agatha H. James
Bayonet staff writer

The largest check in the worldwide recycle program for fiscal year 1988 was presented to Fort Benning officials Nov. 3.

The post Defense Reutilization Marketing Office sold $1,051,148 worth of scrap material during the last fiscal year and presented a check to Col. Robert E. Hatch, chief of the Directorate of Engineering and Housing, in that amount.

Col. Joseph L. Methvin, commander of the Defense Reutilization and Marketing Memphis Region, Defense Logistics Agency, presented the facsimile check.

The money resulted from the sale of recyclable scrap metal, cardboard, glass and fired, brass cartridges. During fiscal year 1988, Fort Benning recycled more material than any other military installation in the world.

"All the products sold by DRMO were generated and collected here," said Methvin. "Fort Benning gets all the credit for producing this $1 million," he said.

MACH rewarded for achievements, service

By Agatha H. James
Bayonet staff writer

The ceremony lasted just a few minutes, but its significance will carry over for a long time.

Retired Col. Robert E. Nett, representing the Congressional Medal of Honor Society, presented a framed, engraved honorary plaque to Col. Herb Segal, hospital commander, for outstanding service and achievement by the Martin Army Community Hospital staff.

The plaque contains facsimiles of three different medals of honor – Army, Navy and Air Force.

The PRIMUS clinic opening and a reduction in the number of complaints from people who are treated at the hospital are some of the achievements mentioned by Nett, a Medal of Honor recipient, and Georgia's 3rd District Congressman Richard Ray.

"It pleases me beyond expression to have been given this award by people who have given so much," Segal said.

He pledged that his staff would continue to provide quality and dedicated service.

The first Medal of Honor was authorized by Congress and President Abraham Lincoln in 1861 for naval enlisted men. Later, in 1862, Congress passed a law authorizing an Army Medal of Honor for enlisted men. The Air Force began its Medal of Honor in 1965.

The medal is awarded for an act of heroism, which must be proved by two or more eyewitnesses. The act must be so outstanding that it clearly distinguishes gallantry beyond the call of duty. It must involve the risk of life.

There are 3,412 Medal of Honor recipients; 86 percent received the award posthumously.

The group of living awardees is known as the Congressional Medal of Honor Society, which was chartered by Congress and approved by President Eisenhower in 1958. The Society has six regions in the United States. Recipients in each region seek out individuals in those regions for outstanding military professional service.

Teachers, students, parents celebrate Education Week

By Beth Middlemiss
Fort Benning Schools

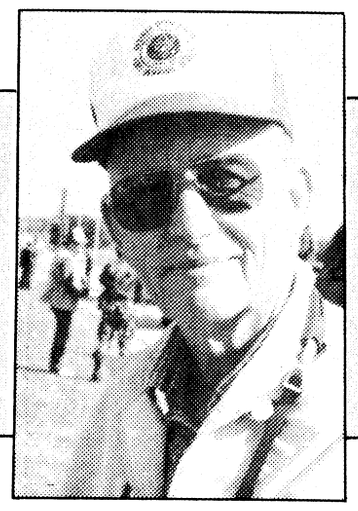
Sunday through Nov. 19 is celebrated throughout the nation as American Education Week.

It is a time when teachers, students, and parents focus on the educational process and on the people who participate in that process. This year's theme is "Invest in your future."

American Education Week is traditionally a time when parents visit classrooms or have lunch with their children at school. In the Fort Benning School System, that involvement is encouraged throughout the school year. Parents are invited to lunch on any school day rather than just during this special week.

Fort Benning parents and other community members make a continuous investment in their children and their schools by visiting in classrooms, attending student assemblies, working with Artists in Residence, serving on parent-teacher action committees, working at Halloween carnivals, helping with a variety of tasks as school volunteers and attending parent-teacher conferences.

American Education Week — a time to celebrate the efforts of the entire community in making contributions that will pay off for students now and in the years to come.



See page A-4 for additional information on Education Week.

If Snively can do it, so can you

Kick the habit

By Clyde Snively
USAIC Public Affairs Office

What used to be one of my favorite "special days," is coming up next week. It's the Great American Smokeout.

I used to like it because that was the one day I could go to work and almost breathe clean air. At the end of the day I could go home without smelling like a stale cigarette.

Oh sure, there were those special people — the rugged individualists, who, if you tell them to do one thing, they do just the opposite.

In my old office, it was Mary. On smoke out day, she'd smoke an extra pack just to prove she didn't have to listen to good sense.

That's all changed now. Now you can make it through a day without even smelling a cigarette. You can go home and hang up your clothes without worrying about stinking up your entire closet. You don't have to scour your nose hairs to get the smell out of your nostrils.

I might be imagining it, but people seem to be healthier and get more work done, too — well, the smokers who travel great distances to smoke might not.

But I'm most appreciative of the ban. Having quit smoking shortly before the Army quit, I was very sensitized to other people's smoke. I can smell a cigarette a block away. Just seeing a person driving in a closed car with all that smoke curling about his face, gives me the willies.

But you really don't know who the smokers are unless you get close enough to sniff them or see them outdoors, gathered around the entrance to a building, puffing away.

Seeing them standing there, looking like outcasts, reminds me of when I was a kid and used to sneak out to the garage to smoke. I thought I was pulling a fast one over on my parents. Ha. Even bathing in dad's after shave and gargling with mouth wash didn't deter mom's keen sniffer.

When it came to quitting, I was a lot like Mark Twain. Quitting was easy. I did it hundreds of times. Sometimes I'd go years without smoking. Other times just a few months.

This last time I quit because I was tired of having some weed run my life. I was actually a slave to this 84cm long, cylinder made of paper and shredded leaves. "Who's in charge around here?" I asked my last Pall Mall one day?

The cigarette didn't say anything. Just rested on the ashtray, a thin ribbon of blue smoke rising idly into the air, adding to the haze. I knew that it knew it was.

I continued to smoke it, but after each deep drag, I'd tell it, that it was to be my last. It was. It's been nearly four years now since I had that last Red Devil.

Do I still get an urge to smoke? Sure do. All the time. Writing this column is making me want a cigarette. I'm losing my concentration thinking about a smoke.

I especially want one when I see someone taking long, satisfying pulls on a Pall Mall. It gets the saliva flowing, the fingers twitching. I'm tempted to walk right up to the person to see if I can bum one. But I know if I do, pretty soon I'll be bumming another from someone else, then another, telling myself that as long as I'm bumming, not buying, I'm not really smoking. But inside a month, I'll be down at the PX buying them. A pack at a time at first, then a carton.

The trick for me, is to walk away from that first cigarette, do something to take mind off it — like finish this column. I know the urge will pass. I've just got to hold off until it does. It's like being on a diet and wanting a snack. Ya gotta out last the urge.

They say nicotine is addictive. I believe it. But the real cruncher is habit. When we smoke, we establish a pattern. Think about it. A person who smokes two packs a day, takes 400 puffs. That's 146,000 times a year you put a cigarette to your lips. In 10 years, you've gone through the ritual more than a million times.

That's what I call reinforcement.

Smokers, you have my sympathy. The American Lung Association says that 90 percent of you would like to quit. I wish you luck. Maybe the Smokeout Day can be the first day for you.

Just take it a day at a time. You can do it. I did.

Spigelmire stresses safety during holiday

Veterans Day is the day we set aside to pay tribute to all service members who served their country in peace or in war. It is a day to remember our veterans' sacrifices and to rededicate ourselves to the great ideals for which they served and vow not to let them down by relaxing our commitment to the defense of this nation and its Constitution.

As we prepare for this three-day weekend and the many activities taking place to acknowledge the contributions of our service members, I leave you with this thought — more Americans have been killed in traffic accidents than killed in combat in all of our wars. So I ask you, enjoy yourselves, but be safety conscious at all times

CG encourages smokers to quit

Thursday, soldiers and civilians are encouraged to stop smoking for the day and take part in the Great American Smokeout. Caring leadership dictates that we demonstrate a sincere, unambiguous concern for the health and safety of the total Army family.

The Army has become increasingly aware of the fact that tobacco use impairs military skills such as night-vision, hand-eye coordination, resistance to cold weather injuries and increases susceptibility to disease.

The Great American Smokeout is a good opportunity to assist in the implementation of the Army's tobacco cessation efforts and to renew our commitment of maintaining the health and readiness of our Army.

Your participation in making the Great American Smokeout successful is anticipated.

Vuono, Marsh send joint Veterans Day message

Army News Service

1988 Veterans Day message from Army Chief of Staff Gen. Carl E. Vuono and Secretary of the Army John O. Marsh Jr.

Friday marks the 70th anniversary of the Armistice that heralded an end to one of the most brutal wars in history. Since then, Americans everywhere set aside this day to pay homage to those who have served in the military forces of our nation.

We pause to remember the many sacrifices that have been made to keep our nation free. It is particularly appropriate as we celebrate the 200th anniversary of the ratification of the Constitution, that we honor the millions of veterans who willingly made those sacrifices. It signifies that for two centuries generations of Americans have answered the call to defend the principles established by one of the greatest documents of government ever written.

Those brave soldiers of World War I, as well as the American patriots before and after them, fought not for themselves but for our Country's future–a future blessed with liberty for their children and grandchildren. Now it is in our hands to protect and preserve those blessings for tomorrow's generations.

You, the soldier of today, serve as the Nation's first line of protection. You face challenges and responsibilities unlike any in our history. Your skills, your professionalism, and your commitment are needed to protect the heritage established by nearly 39 million American veterans. And, you are performing superbly. The veterans we honor today would be proud to serve alongside you.

So, on behalf of a grateful nation, thank you for your selfless service you can truly say that when you were needed, you were there.

Benning Scouts to begin distribution of food bags

USAIC Public Affairs Office

More than 400 Fort Benning Boy Scouts will spend this Saturday distributing food bags door-to-door for the Army Community Service's Emergency Food Locker.

This is the first step in the "Scouting for Food Good Turn," part of a nationwide appeal being undertaken by the 5.2-million-member youth organization, made up of Cub Scouts, Boy Scouts, and Explorers.

The following Saturday, Nov. 19, Scouts will return to pick up those bags of food. The goal of the Chattahoochee Council, Boy Scouts of America, is to collect 100,000 cans of food. All food collected by Fort Benning Scouts will be donated to the Foood Locker.

According to Carla Cary, ACS Director, the Food Locker helps about 40-45 Army families each month and the Good Turn will supply the locker with months of food.

People who are leaving their homes on pick-up day should place the food bags outside their doors.

Individuals not receiving food bags at their homes can pick them up at Goolsby Food stores in Columbus. The stores will bag food for their customers in about 135,000 "Scouting for Food" bags.

The Main Post Exchange as well as Goolsby stores will also have food drop-off barrels.

Committee, the money will be used for safety programs, environmental protection, energy projects and morale and welfare support projects.

The money has been deposited throughout the year, and some of it will be used to repair the pump and filter at Briant Wells pool and to replace worn out Nautilus equipment at Audie Murphy, Briant Wells and Kelley Hill gyms.

Also, soldiers will get new sports uniforms; a new softball field at Camp James E. Rudder, the ranger camp at Eglin AFB, Fla. and new PT uniforms.

The funds will finance asbestos removal at the Military Police prison, the Preventive Medicine building, and the National Infantry Museum and carpet installation at the Reception Station to prevent injuries caused by slippery floors.

Defense Reutilization Marketing is a DoD program established in 1983. Initially, it was created to clean up the environment and to turn waste products into dollars.

"The military has been a leader in cleaning up the environment, and this program is one indication," Methvin said.

The program permits recyclable products to be collected, separated and turned into the property disposal office for resale. The DRMO's objective is to collect and market the products at a profit.

The Memphis DRM region is part of the Defense Logistics Agency and covers 12 southeastern states, Puerto Rico and Panama. The region sold $9.6 million in recyclable products in fiscal year 1988. All proceeds are returned to the installation that generated the materials.

Last year, recyclable materials brought in $20 million for the federal government. Almost half that amount, $9 million, resulted from products gathered and sold by southeastern military installations.

Recyclable items include: glass, cardboard and scrap metals such as brass, stainless steel, aluminum and iron. The metals can be found in old signs, old bleachers, helicopter landing skids, automotive parts such as brake shoes, shock absorbers, wheel drums and tank tracks.

Before throwing away scrap material, call the DRMO. It could mean dollars for Fort Benning.

Otis Denham, DRMO chief, said his office will help units determine if a material is recyclable.

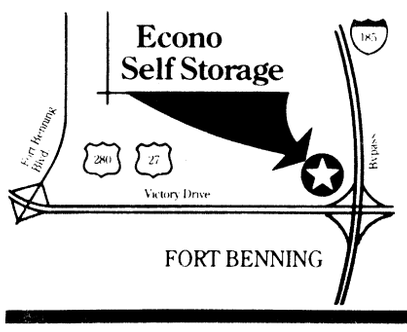
WIC program explained

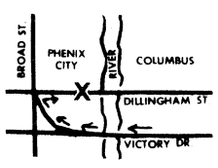
WIC Program

The WIC Program is a federally-funded supplemental program for pregnant or postpartum women and infants and children ages 1-5 years. This program is available through your local health department.



To qualify, one must meet income and nutritional requirements. Qualified applicants receive vouchers that are used to purchase specific food items in WIC approved grocery stores. Milk, infant formula, fruit juices, cereals, eggs, cheese, peanut butter and dried beans or peas are foods approved for purchase with vouchers. Nutrition information and counseling are also available to all WIC participants.

WIC foods are only meant to supplement and do not constitute a complete diet. Nutritionists recommend eating a well-balanced diet daily; choosing foods from the basic four food groups including milk and other dairy foods, meats, and other protein foods, fruits/vegetables and breads/cereals.



WIC is available to all eligible persons regardless of race, color, national origin, age, sex, or handicap. For more information about the WIC program, contact the Fort Benning WIC Clinic at 545-1893/4140.

Bicycling can be enjoyable, dangerous

By Patrick Reed
Military Police Activity

Bicycling can be an enjoyable and healthy activity. It can also be dangerous.

While collisions involving bicycles and automobiles are often the fault of the automobile driver, it's the bicyclist who is most prone to be seriously injured.

Nationwide last year, more than 1,000 bicyclists were killed and more than 40,000 were injured. The majority of the victims were between the ages of 5 and 15. Some of these accidents could have been avoided if the bicyclist had followed the safety rules.

Bicyclists of all ages must understand that, just as in operating an automobile, knowing and adhering to safe riding practices is of the utmost importance. The following are some rules and pointers to help you:

○Obey all traffic signals. Bicycles must stop at all stop signs just as automobiles.

○Be seen at night. Bicycles that are operated after the hours of darkness, shall as a minimum, have a headlight visible from 300 feet to the front, and a red taillight or reflector.

○Always ride with one bicycle behind the other, and never ride side by side.

○Keep to the right — ride in the same direction as automobiles, but keep as close to the edge of the roadway as possible.

○Don't ride a bicycle that's in bad condition — it's not safe. Always check brakes and steering before you ride.

Remember most of these rules and pointers come from USAIC Reg No. 190-5. By working together and observing regulations and rules of the road, we can make Fort Benning a safer place in which to live, work and play. Accident prevention is everyone's responsibility.

For more information and assistance, call the Crime Prevention Section at 545-7115/7154.

Driving alone presents dangers

National Safety Council

You can be a target for rape, assault or getting mugged when driving alone at night. In conjunction with National Safety on the Streets Week, October 23-29, the National Safety Council offers these tips:

●When approaching your car, stay on brightly-lit walkways, and be alert to any activity around you.

●Have your car keys ready before you reach your car. Blindly searching for keys makes you vulnerable, and a set of keys protruding between your fingers can make an effective weapon.

●Check the back seat before entering your car, even if doors are locked. Once you're in the car, lock all doors and keep them locked.

●To deter "smash and grab" thieves who break car windows and grab purses on seats, put purses, wallets and briefcases on the floor under the seat.

●Park in well-lit areas. In a public parking lot where you must leave the key, leave only the ignition key.

Help a smoker quit

By Evelyn D. Harris
American Forces Information Svc

Thursday is the day of the 12th annual Great American Smokeout — the day millions of smokers attempt to remain smoke-free for 24 hours.

Army Maj. Mary Davis, chairperson of DoD's Anti-tobacco Working Group, hopes that military women will pay special attention. The working group consists of health promotion people from each service who share ideas on how the military can educate service members on the effects of smoking and best help smokers who want to quit.

Said Davis, "Although the percentage of smokers in the general population is going down, the percentage of smokers who are female has not significantly decreased."

Davis said DoD education efforts this year are focusing on younger smokers, particularly females.

Explained Davis: "There remains a need to reach special populations who have high rates of smoking — women are one of these groups. In fact, a recent U.S. surgeon general's report stated that adolescent girls had a slightly higher rate of smoking than adolescent boys.

"The report also said women who smoke have three times the risk of dying of stroke and two times the risk of heart attack, when compared with nonsmoking women," Davis notes. "If female smokers also use oral contraceptives, their risks increase still further. And smoking while pregnant is associated with increased risk of miscarriage, low-birth-weight babies and other complications.

"Our society's ideal woman is slender and attractive. There is supporting evidence that on the average, women who smoke weight less than nonsmoking women and that quitting smoking often leads to weight gain. Therefore, a woman who smokes may perceive weight gain as a unavoidable result of quitting. What we must do is educate women and the public about how to use coping skills and adjust eating habits to control weight gain and other side effects of not smoking."

For those who want to quit, DoD installations will be equipped with smokeout "survival kits." For her part, Davis plans to adopt a smoker, using the kit, which includes an adoption certificate, sugarless candy or gum, a wrist band to pop every time the smoker wants to light up, a list of coping tips, headless matches, stickers and various buttons.

Davis suggested that nonsmokers adopting smokers add their own treats to the kit, such as healthful snacks. She added, "Whether they are male or female, young or old, smokers trying to quit need patience and support from those around them. The smokeout is a light-hearted way to give that to them."

New adult Catholic program begins here

By Jo Ann Stamey
USAIC Chaplain's Office

A new Catholic program is available for adults who want to join the Catholic church, for alienated Catholics who wanted to rejoin the Catholic community, or for anyone interested in learning more about the Catholic faith.

On Jan. 6, 1972, Cardinals Tabera and Bugnini signed a decree that introduced a new Rite for the Christian Initiation of Adults (RCIA), which had been approved by Pope Paul VI. This rite was the direct result of the council that had ended six and one-half years earlier. The church was ordered to use the rite in Latin immediately and in the vernacular upon completion of an approved translation.

In 1974, the United States Catholic Conference published the RCIA, a provisional text in a study book edition.

As of September 1988, the old "Inquiry Class" was put aside (because it was considered to be too individualistic), and the RCIA was mandated by the Bishops for every parish in the United States. The RCIA program incorporates the whole Catholic community and is developed on the premise that conversion, or "the coming to faith," is an ongoing process. The process involves several phases.

Pre-evangelization: the period of recruitment and preparation.

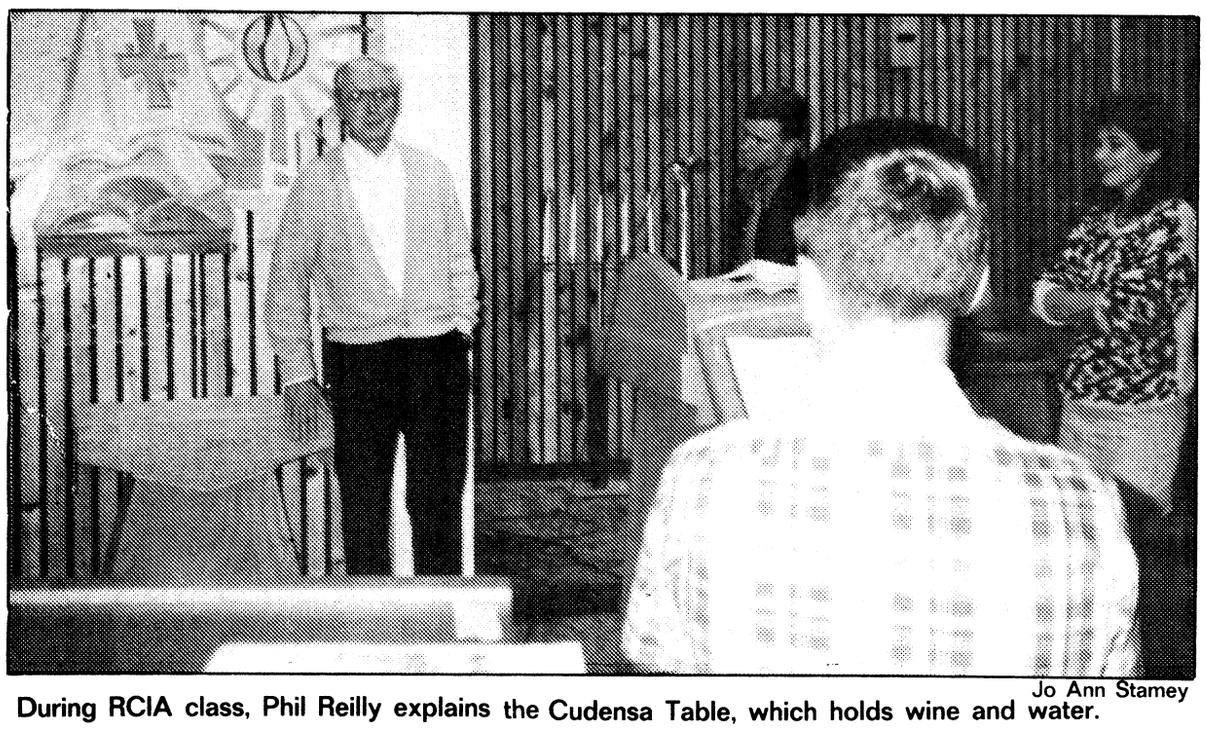
Evangelization (pre-Catechumenate): the period of inquiry and introduction to the Catholic community and services.

Catechumenate: the period of formation — usually from Advent through Lent.

Rite of Enrollment: also called "the Rite of the Catechumenate," is usually the first Sunday of Advent, when the inquirers are enrolled in the Catechumenate.

Rite of Election: usually the first Sunday of Lent, when the inquirers elect to receive the Sacraments of Initiation — Baptism, Confirmation, and Eucharist.

Period of Enlightment: still part of the Catechumenate, but a special period in which those who have elected to receive the Sacraments of Initiation and have been accepted by the Catholic community prepare for the reception. This occurs during the six weeks of Lent.



Sacraments of Initiation: usually at the Easter Vigil (Holy Saturday).

Mystogogia: the period following Easter when the newly baptized spend time reflecting on initiation and become part of the ministering church.

Also involved in the program are catechists or sponsors, whose role is to teach and be a resource person, but more importantly, to listen and be a friend on this journey into faith. The sponsors are an integral part of the program and are involved at all levels — learning, questioning, sharing and growing.

The Catechumenate is a source of renewal for the whole Catholic community. The public liturgical rites of enrollment, election, and initiation are inspirations to the community, as well as reminders to the community of their responsibility.

The RCIA group meets Wednesdays, 7 p.m., in the Religious Education Center. Anyone interested in learning more about the Catholic tradition is invited to attend. For more information, call Phil Reilly at 545-2771.

Remember to honor those who sacrificed for freedom

By Jim M. Phelps
Health Service Chaplain

Veterans come from all economic, cultural, social, and religious groups. They have served our country by wearing the uniforms of our military services and defending the Constitution of the United States.

The Uniform and the belief that the "more perfect union" of which the Constitution speaks exists because of the efforts of the men and women we recognize and call "veterans."

Those of us who now serve have taken an oath of service and sworn to "support and defend the Constitution of the United States." We stand side by side with those who have served and pledge our lives, fortunes, and honor. During this Veteran's Day Observance, we should remember to celebrate the duty and sacrifice of those who have served our country. We should interpret and promote what it means to be a citizen soldier who supports and defends the Constitution; and recognize veterans who have provided for our freedom.

Let this Veteran's Day be a day we recognize and honor those who have worn the uniform to "support and defend" the oldest still-governing document in the world.

Our remembering is a way to ensure this "more perfect union" will continue to serve as a means toward securing of "the blessings of liberty for all."

Church pays tribute to Lonnie Hicks

By Penny Barfield
TIC Chapel Publicist

The Infantry Center Chapel paid special tribute to Lonnie Hicks Oct. 30 by dedicating the 9:30 and 11 a.m. services to her.

Hicks, 88, volunteered as a pianist for the first religious services conducted at what was then "Camp" Benning. That was October 1918. She continued for many months as the volunteer pianists, and for the past several years, has been the guest pianist at the Infantry Center Chapel during the anniversary of Camp Benning each fall.

In recognition and appreciation of her service, Chap. (Col.) Roy Mathis, post Chaplain, presented Hicks with a bouquet of flowers and a Fort Benning Certificate of Appreciation, signed by Maj. Gen. Michael Spigelmire, commanding general of Fort Benning.

Hicks, who is a resident of Oak Manor, continues to play for services there.

Students hold elections and learn about voting process

By Beth Middlemiss
Fort Benning Schools

The legal voting age depends upon where you are and whose election you are considering.

At the Fort Benning schools all kinds of elections took place last week. Decorated voting booths that had once been refrigerator boxes, ballots, campaign speeches, signs, buttons, and discussions of political platforms were found in a variety of elementary and middle school classrooms.

Even the kindergarten and first grade students at Patch School were involved in election tappings as they talked about the elephant and the donkey, the symbols of the two political parties.

At Dexter School, there was a voter registration table in the front hall for teachers and students to register; those students who did not register were not eligible to vote. Older children helped the younger ones fill out their voter registration cards.

At Loyd School, a computer was set up as the voting station. Each student voted using the computer.

One of the many units on the elections at Faith Middle School was found in Atlena Bledsaw's seventh grade classes. Her students studied the election process and previous presidential elections dating all the way back to the time of George Washington. There were also debates with a Bush and a Dukakis in each class.

Wilbur School's fifth graders set up their own political parties, the Wigs and the Wags, with a president and vice-president on each ticket. They conducted an entire campaign — promises and all. On election night, the students focused on the real election by color coding a map of the United States to indicate which states went Republican and which states went Democratic.

"It's really exciting to see our students enthusiastically involved in this election," said Vicki Rogers, Language Arts and Social Studies coordinator for the Fort Benning Schools. "Each of our schools provided a variety of activities that will make this presidential election a memorable one for our students."

Remember veterans with letters

From America With Love

For more than half a century, Americans have paused each Nov. 11 to pay tribute to the men and women who have served our country. Often a time of reflection for those who lost their lives while fighting for the United States. Veterans Day also represents a moment in history when the American public honors all the men and women who are a part of the armed services.

Veterans Day was first observed in 1919 as a national holiday to commemorate the armistice of 1918 that ended World War I. This year, Americans will have an opportunity to become personally involved in the Veterans Day holiday by offering words of encouragement to those individuals who are currently serving overseas.

"From America With Love" is a national, grassroots program designed to reach out to servicemen and women abroad through letters from home. The program is being sponsored by Lanier Voice Products to provide Americans with a means to communicate with the more than 500,000 men and women who are stationed outside the continental United States.

Tony Amason, executive vice president and general manager of Lanier, says that the Atlanta-based company became interested in sponsoring such a program after talking with many of its own employees, who are veterans, about the lonely life of a soldier who is far from home.

Many members of the armed services suffer from feelings of loneliness and detachment when serving overseas. These feelings often become more pronounced during the upcoming holiday season.

"From America With Love" will allow Americans in seven U.S. cities to send letters via a facsimile communications network. Letters than will be sent to the nation's capital, where they will be shipped overseas. Letters from home will reach soldiers stationed at U.S. bases in 21 foreign countries. Greeting also will be sent to four ships which will be on active duty during the holidays.

This national program is being supported by politicians and representatives from the armed services and Veterans Administration.

To ensure that all Americans become involved in this program, a toll-free number has been established to provide information about how to become a part of "From America With Love." For more information about the program, call 1-800-888-8196. Finally, Americans can send their correspondence, as well as any additional letters collected, to: From America With Love, Lanier Voice Products Division, 8500 Hilltop Road, Fairfax, VA 22031, Attn: Bob Bradford.

"We want to ensure that service men and women have contact with fellow Americans during the Thanksgiving and Christmas holidays," he said.

From America With Love promises to be an important part of this year's remembrance of American veterans.

IOBC students help out PALS

By Jimmy Duhaime
2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry

"Have any of you ever been lost in the woods?" Several of the young boys stated they had. "What did you do?" "Were you scared?"

"Yes, we were," came some replies. Some said they yelled for help, some cried and some quickly found their way out. Of course, some of the more macho boys said they never get lost.

On Oct. 29, the IOBC students took their PALS through six stations to teach them basic techniques that would help if they ever got lost.

A basic survival round-robin course was set up at the Uchee Creek Recreation Area by six IOBC student instructors and 27 IOBC volunteers. Each boy was given the opportunity to practice each of the stations, which included Psychology of Survival (Immediate Actions, Will to Survive, Panic, Fear, Loneliness and Boredom); Finding Yourself Without a Map or a Compass; First Aid — Basic Hygiene; First Aid — Minor Injuries and Carrying Injured People; Shelters and Survival Skills (seeking food and water, making fires, and signaling).

At meal time, the boys spent most of their time trading certain items of the MREs their PALS provided. Just as with most units, no one ate the fruit cake.

The PALS program is an ongoing project for 2nd Battalion 11th Infantry, TSB. It was initiated by Lt. Col. Adolf Carlson in December 1987. Coordination was made with Larry Shaw, director of the Family Counseling Center and Clay Kull, the PALS director, to establish a short-range program to reaching those PALS children still on the waiting list.

The "PALS for a Day" program was established by the Columbus Family Counseling Center to assist children of single parent families, allowing them to experience things other children take for granted.

For more information on the PALS Program, call Clay Kull at 327-3238. The PALS office is in the Family Counseling Center on the corner of First Avenue and Seventh Street. If you are in the military and interested in PALS for a Day, call Maj. Jimmy Duhaime at 545-7439/5770.

Although all are welcome, there is a shortage of female volunteers. Your reward is giving a child a role model, someone who cares and gives of his time to listen to a child's dreams.

Keep warm while conserving energy

By Becky Ray
Energy Branch

Already the chilly winter winds are blowing, and most Fort Benning residents are probably more concerned with staying warm than saving energy.

However, tough energy goals set for the post this year make conserving energy more important than ever. Energy conservation doesn't mean freezing in the dark, it means using energy wisely. The following tips can help you stay warm and save energy at the same time:

- Closing drapes, curtains and shades on cold nights keeps warm air inside and cold air out.
- Opening drapes and blinds on sunny days warms the indoors with sunshine.
- Installing weatherstripping and caulking around doors and windows can stop drafts. Weatherproofing materials are available at the Unit and Housing Support Center, building 385 on Vibbert Avenue.
- Covering window air conditioning units keeps cold air out.
- Checking heater filters often and replacing them when necessary keeps the heating unit running efficiently and cleanly. During heating season filters should generally be changed each month.
- Closing fireplace dampers can cut heat losses substantially. Open dampers in a chimney when the fireplace is not in use can cause a heat loss of up to eight percent for a 48 inch square fireplace.
- Closing vents in and sealing off unused rooms helps save heating energy. This is not recommended for houses with heat pumps, as it may damage the system.
- Keeping ducks, vents and registers clean helps heat systems run efficiently.
- Using vent fans sends heated air outside. Kitchen and bathroom exhaust fans can expel an entire houseful of heated air in just one hour, so should be turned on only when needed.
- After baking or broiling, turn the oven off but leave the door open.
- Setting the thermostat as low as possible saves operating costs of up to six percent per degree.

Staying warm and comfortable and conserving energy don't have to be conflicting goals. With a little thought and planning, both goals can be met at the same time.

Be aware of Radon hazards

USEPA

Almost every day humans are subject to exposure to potentially hazardous substances unknowingly.

Most dangerous are those chemicals or gases whose physical properties don't allow them to be seen, smelled or tasted.

One gas in particular that falls into this category is radon.

It is a radioactive gas, which occurs in nature, and is odorless, tasteless and invisible. Radon results from the radioactive decay of uranium. High concentrations of the gas can be found in soil and rocks containing uranium, granite, shale, phosphate and pitchblende.

It can also be found in soils contaminated with certain types of industrial wastes, such as the by-products from uranium or phosphate mining.

Although radon is found in the outdoor air, it is reduced to such low concentrations that it is usually nothing to worry about. However, the problems begin once the gas is inside an enclosed space, such as a home, where it can accumulate.

In-door levels depend both on a building's construction and the concentration of radon in the underlying soil.

Radon can move through small spaces in the soil and rock on which a house is built. It can seep into a home through dirt floors, cracks in concrete floors and walls, floor drains, sumps, joints and tiny cracks or pores in hollow block walls. It can also get into water in private wells and be released into a home when the water is used.

However, the only known health effect associated with exposure to elevated levels of radon is an increased risk of developing lung cancer.

When radon naturally breaks down, it forms radioactive decay products. When one breathes, the radon decay products can become trapped in your lungs. As the products break down further, they release small bursts of energy which can damage lung tissue and can lead to lung cancer.

Smokers increase their risk of lung cancer because the radon sticks on the smoke particles, which in turn, adhere in the lungs. This smoker/radon association is thought to increase the risk of getting lung cancer by a factor of 15.

Not everyone exposed to elevated levels of radon will develop lung cancer, and the time between exposure and the onset of the disease may be years.

Your risk of developing lung cancer from exposure to radon depends upon the concentration of radon and the length of time you are exposed. Exposure to a slightly elevated radon level for a long time may present a greater risk of developing lung cancer than exposure to a significantly elevated level for a short time.

Generally, your risk increases as the level of radon and the length of exposure increase.

With exposure to radon, as with other pollutants, there is some uncertainty about the amount of health risk.

Make better grades with improved study habits

American Forces Information Svcs

Whether you're studying for a promotion or pursuing a degree, being a student can be tough when you're also working full time. But it's a lot easier if you know how to take notes and study to make the most of your valuable time. The following tips from the Defense Activity for Non-Traditional Education Support, or DANTES, can help you make the grade:

○Study at least 30, but no more than 90, minutes at one time.

○Set aside a neat, well-lighted place to study. Make sure it is free of distractions and not too warm.

○Figure out what time is best for you to study, and set that time aside each day.

○Don't cram. Try to get a sense of what is most important, and memorize that. You can't memorize the whole textbook.

○Before a study session, gather your course materials: texts, notes and handouts.

○Read the table of contents, preface and chapter summaries to get the basic ideas before reading the rest of the assignment.

○Don't underline entire sentences or paragraphs. Underline only those words that summarize the main points.

○Distribute your study time. Some tasks require intense concentration, others can be done at odd moments.

○Paraphrase and write down main points in your own words.

○Review material. A short immediate review before starting something new will help you retain the material. Skim to find facts and to review material.

○Get interested in the subject, and talk about what you've learned to others.

Flipping helps land bass in cold weather

By Earl Bentz and Steve Price
1988 Bass Masters

Guido Hibdon, recent winner of the 1988 BASS Masters Classic, remembers how he once spent an entire day casting a spinnerbait to a single fish he could see. The bass never moved until Hibdon finally touched it with his rod tip.

"That's what a severe cold front can do to bass," said the Johnson Outboards Pro Staff member. "The fish become extremely sluggish and very hard to catch.

"I think 'cold and front' are the two words bass anglers dislike the most."

The worst cold fronts, said Hibdon, a former guide on Missouri's Lake of the Ozarks, are those in which the temperature plunges drastically overnight. It's as if the bass go into complete shock. Divers who have observed bass under such conditions often report the fish suspended motionless near the bottom, close to heavy cover. Other fish look as if they're trying to bury their heads in the bottom.

"Shallow water bass definitely move closer to cover," said Hibdon. "Any topwater fishing that existed prior to the cold front nearly always stops completely because the fish bury themselves in cover like bushes, weeds, or moss.

"That's why flipping is one of the very best techniques to use at this time. Flipping allows an angler to place a lure into heavy cover without causing any water disturbance. Once the lure is in the water, the angler can jig it slowly up and down in one spot as long as he wishes."

Another key to successful cold front fishing, said Hibdon, is fishing a little deeper.

"Cold fronts often move bass, especially those that might have been on points or flats," he explains. "If there is deep water nearby, an angler should systematically work his way out into that deeper water. Very often, bass will suspend just off the edge of a dropoff over deeper water."

The depth at which bass like this are holding generally determines lure choice, says the Johnson Outboards pro. Spinnerbaits and crankbaits are often successful, as long as they are fished slow.

"Smaller lures are also more attractive to bass," Hibdon notes. "I like to use ⅛-ounce marabou jigs and six-pound test line, swimming the lure among fish very slowly. Even with little lures like this, however, strikes are often very light and tentative."

Learning to fish slower is extremely important in beating cold fronts. Instead of making 10 casts to a target, Hibdon suggests making 30 or 40, covering the same water repeatedly until a fish finally hits.

Another place to find cold front bass, according to Hibdon, is in deep holes, such as those around bridge crossings, natural springs, and main channel drops. These bass can frequently be pinpointed with a depthfinder, so lures can be presented more accurately. Often, vertical jigging with a spoon is a productive technique.

"Cold front rules are really pretty simple," Hibdon concludes. "First, expect to catch fewer fish, simply because they are not as active. Next, if you work shallow water, concentrate on the heaviest cover you can find, and flip it carefully with a jig.

"In deeper water, look for suspended bass near structure; and try to catch them with a small crankbait, spinnerbait or even a jigging spoon.

"It normally takes two or three days for the fish to become active again," Hibdon notes.

"After spending all day casting to that one bass that I finally moved with my rod, I went back the next day and finally caught it with a spinnerbait."

Johnson and Evinrude outboard service experts recommend all boaters check their propeller for bent blades and "dings" regularly, since even minor prop damage can result in major damage to gearcase bearings. Small nicks and burrs can often be removed with a file, but bent blades should be taken to your marine dealer.

Correct sight setting key to hunting

By Aaron Pass
Outdoors

Each year, many hunters go into the woods as unprepared to kill anything as if they were carrying an unloaded gun. Due to the fact that they failed to sight in their rifles, they cheat themselves out of game; and many lose the chance at "one in a lifetime" trophies.

There is nothing mysterious or difficult about sighting in a rifle. Greatly simplified, it is the process of adjusting the sights so that they are aligned on the same point where the rifle shoots the bullets. This is done by firing the rifle at a specific point to determine where the bullets are striking. Next, the sights are adjusted so that they are aligned on the bullet impact area. A very old, but apt, description of a well-sighted rifle is one that "shoots where she looks."

A good solid rest and some type of pad to fire the rifle from is important. A benchrest and sandbag arrangement is best, but a rolled up sleeping bag on a table or even on a car hood beats nothing.

Next, all it takes is time and a safe place to shoot. Your best bet is to contact a local gun club. Many of these host a "sighting-in" day for local hunters each fall. If you choose to free-lance on "open land," make sure you have the landowner's permission; and make doubly sure you have a safe backstop to stop your bullets.

Ear and eye protection, in the form of ear plugs and shooting glasses, is highly recommended.

If you are mounting a new scope, make sure the mounts and rings are correctly installed and tight. Degrease and seal the mount screws that go into the receiver with shellac or clear fingernail polish. Do not seal the ring screws that hold the rings around your scope.

If your rifle was sighted-in last season, you should still check it out before taking it afield this fall. Stocks have been known to warp, or the sights may have been knocked out of alignment during storage. Also check all screws in the stock and scope mount with a proper size screwdriver before you begin shooting.

If you have carefully bore-sighted or used a collimator with a new rifle or scope, you can skip a preliminary shooting session at 25 yards to "get on paper." Otherwise, getting close at short range is highly recommended since you could miss the entire target at longer ranges.

Next, put a target at 100 yards and fire three or four rounds off the bench. From the center of this group, measure the distance both vertically and horizontally to the bull's-eye. Now, adjust your sights accordingly, moving the rear sight or scope adjustments in the same direction you wish to move the group so that it will be on target.

Hunting with a well-sighted rifle is basic to this season's success. No matter what else happens, it will all come down to one shot and your ability to put it where it needs to go.

"I'm sick of her ruining our lives."

When confronted with a mental illness, families experience a wide range of emotional responses. From outrage to shame and denial. They often blame victims for causing worry, embarrassment, family strife. And they often blame themselves.

But mental illness is no one's fault. Least of all those afflicted. It's a serious medical illness that affects one in four families—afflicting 35 million Americans from all walks of life.

Recognizing the warning signs and seeking treatment for your loved one can be the first steps to reducing family fears and confusion. And to actually healing the sickness. Today, mental illness need not be hopeless.

Learn more. For an informative booklet, write: The American Mental Health Fund, P.O. Box 17700, Washington, D.C. 20041. Or call toll free: 1-800-433-5959. In Illinois, call: 1-800-826-2336.

Learn to see the sickness. Learning is the key to healing.

NEWS BRIEFS

CG urges residents to help Scouts

For more than 78 years, the Boy Scouts of America have been involved in community projects.

This year, Fort Benning Boy Scouts will join forces with fellow scouts in the Chattahoochee Valley and across the country to collect food for the needy.

"Scouting for Food" is a drive to take food donations from those who have and put it on the tables of the less fortunate. Fort Benning scouts will collect food from post housing residents on Nov. 19.

Our Army is noted for caring for its own. This is one means of doing so, by donating food that will be placed in the ACS Food Locker and distributed to our families as needed.

I urge you to be as generous as possible and help support this worthwhile cause.

Benning Marine wins Darby Award

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

Capt. Mark Bean certainly fills the bill for the Marine's recruiting slogan "... a few good men," Actually, he's a step above that; and he's demonstrated it here more than once.

While attending courses at Fort Benning, Bean was on the Commandant's List in the Infantry Officer Advanced Course, Distinguished Honor Graduate in Pathfinder School and was honored with both the Distinguished Honor Graduate and the prestigious Brig. Gen. William O. Darby Award in Ranger School.

According to SSgt. Bryan Newman of the Ranger Training Brigade, the Darby Award is given out very infrequently.

"The last time the award was given was during class 6-88, and this class is 14-88," he said. "That was eight classes and about 2,000 students ago."

Newman added that the recipient of the Darby Award has to be a cut above the best.

"In the SOP, it states that a soldier should demonstrate superior knowledge and performance throughout the entire course," he said. "When I prepared the paperwork for the award, the recommendations included words such as truly outstanding and exceptional, several times."

The reports given by Bean's peers echoed those remarks.

Although everyone stated how outstanding he is, Bean said he doesn't feel like he's anything special.

Motor pool conversion set for Jan.

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Post employees affected by the conversion of the transportation motor pool operation to General Services Administration are being officially notified today.

Although GSA will take over the operation of the motor pool on Jan. 1, 1989, the employees will continue to work until Feb. 4.

The conversion is taking place as part of the Army-wide drive to save money for transportation while increasing the quality of the fleet.

Currently, the vehicles in the Army's inventory are over age and over mileage, some as many as 13 years old. Under the GSA contract, a third of the fleet will be replaced immediately, the remainder, being replaced over the next two years.

This means that Fort Benning will get 341 new vehicles during the first year. The post has 1,276 vehicles, not counting its tactical vehicle fleet, which is not affected by this move.

GSA is able to operate post motor pools at reduced cost because it operates with newer vehicles, making maximum use of new car warranties.

It also receives a substantial amount of its original outlay back when it sells the vehicles at the end of the "wear out period."

This period is three years for light vehicles and five years for heavy vehicles.

As part of the contract, the post pays GSA a fixed amount plus mileage.

While GSA will hold the contract, it is negotiating with a subcontractor to provide maintenance support at the two post motor pools, one on main post and the other at Sand Hill.

Scouts move out to collect food bags

By Shawn Bryson
Bayonet staff writer

About 400 Scouts, Varsity Scouts and Explorers from Fort Benning distributed plastic bags to nearly every home on post for residents to fill with canned goods for needy Army families Saturday.

The distribution was the first step of a national Good Turn designed to fill emergency food banks across the country.

Scouts will pick up the bags filled with donated canned goods this Saturday. After sorting and marking, the food will be donated to the Army Community Service's Emergency Food Locker. Harris said that the Scouts of the Chattahoochee Council hope to collect 100,000 cans from the local appeal, supplying the ACS Food Locker with months of food.

The Food Locker is designed to help families short on money and can give them a three-day supply of food to tide them over until payday. According to Carla Cary, ACS director, the Locker helps out about 40-45 families each month.

Homes that did not receive a "Scouting for Food" donation bag Saturday can pick one up at participating Goolsby Food Stores in Columbus. Also, the Main Post Exchange and Goolsby stores will have drop off barrels for the food bags. The Scouts recommend that people planning to leave their homes leave the food bags on their front steps.

The Scouting for Food Good Turn continues a long-standing tradition of the Boys Scouts of America that dates back to the organization's founding. The first national Good Turn in 1912 took action to support a safe and sane Fourth of July. Since then, the Scouts have sold war and victory bonds, collected everything from scrap metal and waste paper to peach pits and milkweed floss (both used for national defense efforts). They have also encouraged conservation efforts and supported get-out-the-vote drives.

The most recent national Good Turn, in 1986, involved distribution of 14 million brochures supportive of organ and tissue donation.

Tot Town expansion underway

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

Tot Town will be able to provide care to 40 more children upon completion of the new addition currently under construction.

The $414,982 project began in early September and should be completed by the end of next summer.

Contractors from the Geiger Company are currently working on the plumbing and should start laying the foundation soon.

According Melinda Gilbert, chairperson of the board of directors for Tot Town, the addition will be for children ages 6 weeks to 18 months.

Gilbert said there is a great demand for child care in that age group and there are not enough facilities available in this area that provide it.

"The Army realized that need. They looked at the plans we made and approved it," she said.

"The addition will be the most modern infant room currently in the Army," Gilbert added. "And, it is the first time that the Army has built a facility for a nonprofit organization."

"This addition will be a big help to mothers of small children," She said. "It's really difficult to run errands when you have a baby with you."

Santa to make house calls

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Anyone whose ever dreamed of catching Santa as he placed toys under the Christmas tree can make that wish come true for his children. Holly Nay, a Recreation Assistant at Kelley Hill Recreation Center has devised an ingenious method for doing away with long lines, expense and unavoidable hassles of mall Santas.

On Dec. 22 and 23, Santa is going to make house calls. For a small fee, Santa will knock on your door and deliver a Christmas stocking containing candy and a small toy for each child. The children will have 10 to 15 minutes to whisper their wishes into Santa's ear, and you'll have time for photos.

According to Nay, this is the first time something like this has been tried at Fort Benning. She said she's not sure how well it will go over; but if it goes over well, Santa's visits will become a yearly event.

"I thought it would be a lot of help to parents. It'll relieve the waiting in line to see Santa," she said. "After a while, the waiting in line gets depressing."

Parents can set up an appointment for a visit from Santa by calling the Kelley Hill Recreation Center before the Dec. 21 deadline. The cost is $5 for one child and $3 for each additional child. The money collected will go into the MWR fund for other morale support activities such as this.

Nay said the hours that Santa will keep Dec. 21 and 22 will depend on how many people make appointments. Tentatively, the hours are 4 to 10 p.m. However, the hours can be adjusted if necessary, she said.

The Santas will actually be volunteer soldiers. Nay said she is counting on volunteers from 197th Infantry Brigade. She added that she could always use some standby Santas. To volunteer or for more information on a Santa visit, call the Kelley Hill Recreation Center Wednesday through Saturday, noon to 9 p.m. and Sunday, 10 a.m. to 7 p.m. at 545-1721/3079.

Snively fills Mountain Men in on idiosyncrasies of 'North'

By Clyde Snively
USAIC Public Affairs Office

The mountain men officially close out Monday when the 3rd Battalion, 14th Infantry holds its departure ceremony at 1:30 p.m.

The ceremony comes three years and a month after the activation ceremony of the 2nd Brigade on Pomeroy Field. During their time here, soldiers of the brigade became well-traveled, participating in training from the jungles of Panama to the snow fields of Alaska.

While only a handful of the original Commando Brigade soldiers will make the trek to Fort Drum, I thought it my duty to fill them in on some of the idiosyncrasies of that strange and wonderful land called "The North Country."

First, let me confirm the fact that it does snow up there. And not necessarily when expected. One year, the locals thought they'd escaped winter — less than four feet fell from October to March — but come spring, several inches fell on April 18.

While four feet of snow in a winter is rare, so are the nine feet of snow that fell one recent December.

It also gets cold there. Once winter sets in, days above freezing are rare. Good batteries in cars are needed. But that's not all. Car doors have a tendency to freeze shut. A hairdryer and long extension cord is a handy item to keep on hand (but not in the car, dummy). By the way, snow blowers are standard issue items with government quarters.

The people in the North Country are very patriotic. American flags can be seen flying from many houses year-round, but come a holiday, nearly all the homes display them.

On any weekend during the summer, you can find a parade in one of the many villages surrounding Fort Drum. The parade kicks off Firemen Field Days. These are like mini-county fairs, only the highlight is the competition among the various volunteer village fire departments. It's their way of raising money and having a good time.

Those of you who like to fight fires — there are a lot of house fires in the winter because so many people heat with wood stoves — will be welcomed into the departments.

North Country folks like to decorate their yards. While they have the standard pink flamingos and ceramic geese, they add a few additional twists. One is chrome balls. They actually go out and buy balls about the size of basketballs. The colors range from blue to silver to gold to red. They then mount them on a pedestal and place them in the front yard.

They also have what is known up there as "The Virgin of the Bath." These are statues of Mary mounted in bathtub shrines, which have been cut in half and placed into the ground. Some times Mary will have a court of plastic critters like squirrels and deer. One yard had her surrounded by the Seven Dwarfs. The statues are placed in memory of servicemembers who died.

Outdoor Christmas lights will normally remain up year round, since by the time the snow melts in order to take them down, winter is almost back and you want to get the lights up before the first snow falls.

So don't be surprised to see cardboard Christmas candles on a porch and an Easter Egg tree peaking up out of a six-foot snow bank. Easter Egg trees are trees decorated with those plastic Easter eggs.

Traditionally, one does not plant until after Memorial Day. But that still doesn't guarantee protection from frost since frost can occur in the middle of June (a rarity).

Most peoples' last names up there end in a vowel. So, as you might expect, there are many tremendous Italian restaurants. The food is great and inexpensive.

Canada is only minutes away and is well worth a visit to sightsee and to take advantage of the exchange rate. Canadians are also known for knowing how to have a good time.

Best wishes Commandos and Golden Dragons. You made a real mark for yourselves while you were here, and I know the people in Phenix City will especially miss you just like I know the people in the North Country will welcome you with open arms.

A seat belt could have saved her

Author unknown

We were both young and in love. She was beautiful and successful. We had become very attached to each other and cared for each other as if there were no other person on earth.

I finally got my 30-day leave, after waiting a long 13 months for it. The two of us drove to my home in California. She finally got to meet my family, and we had the best vacation I ever had in my life — one I would never forget.

She had secured the job of a lifetime just before leaving the Fort Bliss area and was eager to get back to it and get started. We left my home town early so that we would have plenty of time to drive back to Fort Bliss, Texas. We started out early in the afternoon of Friday the 24th of February. We were planning to stop in Phoenix, Arizona for the night.

We were 100 miles out of nowhere, on the most desolate spot of the interstate. She was driving and looked over to see a picture in a magazine that I was reading. We both felt the left tires leave the road as the car drifted onto the shoulder. Returning our attention to the road, we saw that we were just a little onto the shoulder. Nothing to worry about, just slow down and ease the car back onto the pavement.

Instant reaction getting the best of her, she jerked the wheel to the right. The wheels cut into the asphalt, as inertia kept the back end going straight. We fishtailed to the right, and she countered in that direction. The car snapped left, and pointed its direction of travel off the road, and onto the center median, a 50-foot span of dirt, rocks and brush.

The car continued to swerve until it was going sideways through the dirt. I looked out my side window and saw the ground passing under, sideways at 50 mph. I felt the car go over and told myself to hang on. I remember seeing the ground slam into the door and smash the window on my side as the car rolled upside down. I looked up through my sunroof and saw dirt and grass flying in. I don't remember what I was holding onto. I did'nt stop to think my seat belt was holding onto me. We rolled over three times and finally came to rest right side up, in the right hand lane of traffic on the opposite side of the road. All in all a full 225 feet from where we initially lost control of the vehicle. The sounds of smashing glass and crunching metal were replaced by eerie silence. Not even the wind.

At first I almost started laughing. I had never been in a rolling car and it felt more like a wild roller coaster ride. I looked over the dust, still thick in the car, to console my fiancee knowing her nerves would be shot. My heart stopped. She wasn't in the car. Two years prior, I had witnessed an accident in which a young lady was killed when her car rolled over in much the same way as mine did. She wasn't wearing her seatbelt and had her skull smashed on the payment as she was thrown out. Those painful memories went through my mind again.

With blinding speed, I undid my seatbelt, threw open the door and jumped out of the car. I ran barefoot right through the glass fragments that had once been the windows of my car. Then I saw her lying face down, off the side of the road. I ran to her yelling her name. She didn't answer. I turned her over and stared in disbelief as bright red blood ran out of her mouth.

Seeing the one person who meant everything to me lying there not breathing, I didn't know what to do.

Then I recalled my first aid. I cleared the airway and started mouth to mouth resuscitation, but there was no response. I stopped to assess the extent of her injuries. Then I felt the skull fracture.

A quick check of her eyes, dilated and non-reactive. My heart sunk, now I had to face the fact that she had died.

I did not want to believe it. I lay by her side and cried as cars stopped and people gathered around. The autopsy report states that she died instantly upon hitting the side rear view mirror as she flew out of the driver's window. Dead before she ever reached her final resting point, 25 feet from where she came out of the car and 40 feet from where the car finally stopped.

I have difficulty accepting that she is gone, and I was there when she said her last words and breathed her last breath. I know she's gone, but I haven't accepted the fact that I will never see her again. But worse than that, how do I explain to her brother and sisters, mother and father, and worst of all, her 4-year-old daughter just why she died in my car and I did not. I could only say "She wasn't wearing her seat belt."

How many times does it have to be preached before someone believes. I live by seat belts, literally. They're put in there to save lives, and they do work. Think about my fiancee next time you go driving without your seat belt on. She died for no reason whatsoever.

See page A-3 for more proof that seat belts work.

Santa's Castle needs a few good elves

By Shawn Bryson
Bayonet staff writer

Santa's looking for a few good elves. With Christmas just up the road, volunteers, as well as toys, are needed to help make this year's holiday season another big success for Santa's Castle.

The Castle, now entering its third Christmas season, is a nonprofit organization dedicated to helping soldiers bring a little extra joy to the faces of their children.

Last year, the Castle distributed toys to about 600 needy children at Fort Benning.

According to Diane Gravatt, assistant chairman of the Castle, the past successes of the organization were due to volunteers. "We need elves constantly," she said. "Volunteers already have all the skills they'll need to help us here."

Those skills include everything from [illegible]ing and washing toys to bagging and stocking them on the shelves.

Although the Castle is wall-to-wall toys as this point, Gravatt explained that the more toys they have, the more they can give to the children. "We especially need toys for older children (13 and up)," she said. "We have a shortage of things like fishing gear, sports equipment and models."

"We are always able to accept cleaning supplies and cash donations, too" Gravatt said.

Gravatt said that Santa's Castle will only distribute toys to families who have been referred by organizations such as the Army Community Service, the American Red Cross and Martin Army Community Hospital or by unit chaplains and first sergeants.

"After we receive a referral, we send the family a letter with a shopping appointment," Gravatt said. "Because distribution starts Nov. 28, we need referrals as soon as possible."

Distribution of the toys will continue through Dec. 16 with a lottery for bicycles, tricycles and a few other items Dec. 15.

Gravatt explained that the Castle basically doubled in size thanks to soldiers from the 36th Engineer Group. The soldiers spent much of last summer renovating the World War II-era building and moving two storage buildings to the Castle's backyard.

Santa's Castle is located in Soldier's Plaza, building 2639, and is open Monday-Friday, 9 a.m.-2 p.m. Gravatt invites anyone to stop in for a visit. She said that coffee and church groups, Scouts and wives' clubs are welcomed by appointment.

The Castle also has a drop off box for toys at the Main Post Exchange. For more information, call 545-1233.

"When I received those awards I felt a big sense of pride," he said, "but it wasn't personal pride, it was pride for the Marine Corps."

He said that a Marine getting recognition on such a large Army post made him feel good. "But I certainly didn't attend this course, or any of the other courses, for the awards or to have it listed in my records," Bean said. "I went to do my best and I expected to do well."

He's been doing well for the almost 17 years he has been in the Marine Corps. But, you could say he has been a Marine all of his life. Both Bean's mother and father were in the Marine Corps; and, with the exception of one of his sisters, each of his siblings has done a stint in the service.

Bean started his career in the Corps in 1972 as an enlisted soldier. He was promoted to staff sergeant before attending Officers Candidate School in 1981.

He has done two tours at the Paris Island. One, as a drill instructor and later as a series commander.

Bean came to Benning from Paris Island, where he served in a training position. He noted the differences in training between the two services.

One of the biggest differences Bean noted about training was how much Army NCOs were involved in instruction compared to Marines.

"With the exception of IOAC, all of the courses I attended were taught mainly by NCOs who did a very good job," Bean said.

He added that all the NCOs he dealt with demonstrated a tremendous amount of professionalism.

"They moved us thousands of miles to the desert, the mountains and the swamps of Florida, and they made sure we safely exited aircraft on each jump we made," he said.

Bean said he will be going to his next assignment as a commander of a rifle company at Camp Pendleton, Calif., with a very good attitude.

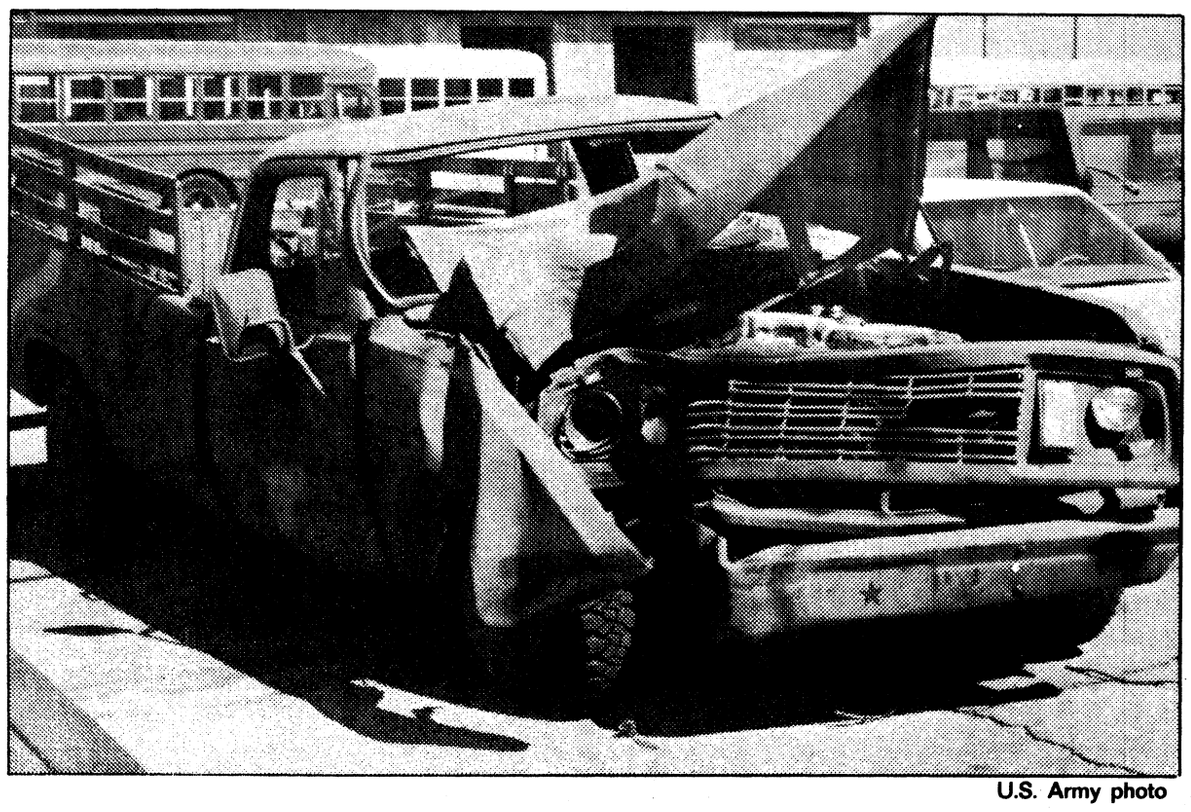
He's leaving with that attitude because he has the knowledge that he gave his all while he trained at Fort Benning.

"I had the opportunity to test myself, and I did it," Bean said. "If you don't give the best of yourself, I think you're wasting your time."

VA lowers loan interest rate

Veterans Administration

To adjust to current market conditions, the Veterans Administration lowered its maximum home loan interest rate from 10.5 percent to 10 percent, effective Nov. 1, 1988.



"The market conditions permitting the drop reflect a continuing move from the high interest rates of the early 1980s," said Administrator of Veterans Affairs Thomas K. Turnage. The maximum rate for loan guaranties in recent years has been on a general decline, from a high of 17.5 percent in September 1981 to a low of 8.5 percent by January 1987.

The latest change is the fourth in 1988. The rate dropped from 10.5 percent to 9.5 percent on Feb. 1, then moved up to 10 percent on April 4 and 10.5 percent on May 23.

In the federal fiscal year that ended Sept. 30, 1988, the VA guaranteed 232,638 loans amounting to $17.3 billion. Because of a large number of guaranties for refinancing loans, the previous year saw 474,400 home loans guaranteed for a record one-year amount of $34.8 billion.

Also effective Nov. 1, the VA will decrease by one-half percentage point the maximum rates for Graduated Payment Mortgages to 10.25 percent, home improvement loans to 11.5 percent, manufactured home loans to 12.5 percent, manufactured home lot-only loans to 12 percent, and manufactured home and lot loans to 12 percent.

VA home loans may be used to purchase, improve, or refinance a house or condominium, and to purchase or refinance a manufactured home.

Present duty option popular

By Ken Holder
Army News Service

One of the most popular reenlistment options, the present duty assignment (PDA) commonly known as the current station stabilization, provides soldiers with the opportunity to stay with a unit they like and the Army with a chance to save precious PCS dollars.

"Soldiers reenlist for present duty assignment because they like the leadership in the unit, they like where they're at geographically or they have their family settled in the area," explained MSgt. Michael Dodd, Total Army Career Counselor for the 3rd Infantry at Fort Myer, Va. "It could be a combination of all of these elements but the main thing you need to remember is that the Army and the soldier benefits from keeping a high caliber soldier in a place where he or she wants to be."

The old logic of, "if you don't like it here re-enlist and go somewhere else" doesn't appeal to today's soldiers, explained Dodd. While yesterday's NCOs often moved to see the world, today's NCOs stay on station longer and provide institutional knowledge that heretofore was only provided by the civilian workforce.

"Not that long ago, in the days of abundant PCS money, not as many soldiers really thought about staying in their current job," said Sgt. Maj. Shelby A. Meares, senior rentention NCO in the Office of the Deputy Chief of Staff for Personnel. Today's soldier wants to stay with a proven group of winners. He wants to stay with people that are making good things happen. According to Meares, smart noncommissioned officers and officers encourage soldiers to stay in place because they get the benefit of experience, and they know they can take care of the soldier because they know his needs.

Meares feels that there is no greater compliment to an NCO or officer than to have a soldier want to stay in the unit. By the same token, said Meares, what better, compliment for a soldier than to have the chain-of-command ask him to stay with the team because the team needs him.

According to research conducted for the DCSPER, the longer the Army can keep high quality soldiers together the better the readiness, maintenance, and morale of the soldiers become.

"It's the top units in the Army that have some of the highest PDA reenlistments," Meares said.

Tips for job-hunting

Army News Service

Changes to Army procedures that affect the way family members get considered and hired for federal jobs have opened up opportunities during the past few years.

Army personnel officials point out, however, that there are often fewer jobs than applicants. A job cannot be guaranteed to every family member who wants one. This is especially true today because of congressional budget cuts and hiring freezes.

Your job search, however, will be easier if you understand the new procedures and remember the following tips:

Keep good records of previous employment, education, training, special achievements and volunteer work. Be prepared to document complete information from your background and experience when applying for a job.

When moving, start your job search as soon as you know your new location.

Find out about the job market and how to apply for an opening before you move. Family-member employment-assistance personnel at your local Army Community Service office can help.

Follow all application instructions. Submit a complete, neat application package by the closing date of a vacancy announcement.

Follow up on each application or interview. If not selected, analyze your weaknesses and correct them.

Be available for interviews and to start a job. To apply for a job means you're ready to work.

Representatives in your civilian personnel office or ACS center can explain the provisions of employment programs geared to Army family members. Don't miss out by being misinformed. Arm yourself with this information, and become a strong competitor.

Communities of Excellence roadway to future

Army News Service

"Excellence is a journey, not a destination, and the Army Communities of Excellence program is a road map to guide our efforts in the years ahead, not a magic formula. The program capitalizes on excellence programs already in place. It focuses community resources and community initiative toward the common goal of supporting the individual."

So states Army Chief of Staff Gen. Carl E. Vuono in his preface to DA Pamphlet 600-45 (Guidelines for Community Excellence), which recently was distributed to the field. His call for improving and maintaining the scores of installations and communities shared by Army people serves as the cornerstone for this new Army-wide program.

Vuono goes on to say, "Excellent performance will not be achieved by soldiers who live, work and train amidst the signs of neglect: substandard housing, long lines, uncaring or discourteous service personnel, neglected work and training spaces, clutter, confusion and disregard for the basic needs of individuals and families. Where such conditions exist, they fail to support the Army's basic mission. We must do better."

How does one go about achieving the aims of the program?

"You can start by getting hold of a copy of the pamphlet, which now is being distributed to the field," said Larry Black in Maj. Gen. Charles Williams' management directorate of the Office of the Chief of Staff.

Black explained that the ACOE concept, as defined in the pamphlet, "is broad enough to accommodate a variety of tactical approaches that can be tailored to the unique needs and constraints of any installation or command."

Those approaches focus on achieving excellence in facilities and services. On the facilities side, Black cited the program's "installation design guides" as an essential tool for achieving and maintaining excellence. He said that the typical design guide establishes interior and exterior standards for long-range planning and seeks to ensure consistency of the community's physical appearance and functionality. Planners and designers rely on Technical Manual 5-803-5 (Installation Design) for general guidance and standards in preparing the design guides.

In the words of the pamphlet, the design guide "focuses resources on a common goal and on improvements based on excellence standards. It offers guidance on visual excellence, construction, repair, maintenance, interior design, urban design, and approaches to developing architectural themes for guiding the future vision for community evolution."

Black pointed out that the pamphlet's first appendix expands upon how installation commanders are expected to develop their own installation design guides, tailored to each's particular needs and resources.

"The IDG program," he said, "now is a mandatory component of an installation's master plan. As explained in the appendix, the installation design guide is intended to provide guidelines to designers regarding unique installation requirements that need to be accommodated in the design of all construction. That would include construction or maintenance and repairs done via contract, in-house, and Expanded Self-Help projects.

All Army communities can use the IDG approach to analyze their assets and20 liabilities and establish a plan, both short- and long-range, to fulfill a vision of the future, Black said.

"By setting clear standards for external and internal design, and by adhering to an environmental theme, they can be well on their way toward an overall design image. That effort would fit in quite well at a post like, say, Fort Belvoir, Va., with its original campus-style architecture."

Indeed, he added, Belvoir serves as an excellent example of how a recent mission changeover offers an ideal time for putting design-guide theory into practice.

Besides having available the newly published pamphlet and other material on design-guide development, installation commanders may draw upon the inspirational content of a recently produced videotape from the chief of staff's office. The tape features Vuono's philosophy and direction for achieving and maintaining Army communities of excellence.

ASK THE JUDGE

By Jessica L. Kole
Staff Judge Advocate's Office

Q. — My grandmother died last month, and it was a very difficult time for my family. I was responsible for the funeral arrangements, and the funeral cost a fortune. I can't believe how much it costs to die. I really felt that the funeral home was taking advantage me, but I was too upset to argue with them. What can I do to protect my family from the same type of problem when I die?

A — Every year, Americans arrange more than two million funerals for family and friends. It is just a fact of life that can't be avoided. A funeral may be the most expensive item you purchase after a house and car. It is unfortunate that there are those who would take advantage of people in their time of grief, but it happens all too often. There is a Federal Trade Commission rule, called the Funeral Rule, which enables you to obtain information about funeral arrangements. The rule makes it easier for you to select only those goods and services you want or need and to pay for only those you select.

A funeral provider must give you information over the telephone so you can compare prices and arrangements. You are entitled to know prices for the various services available, and they must reasonably answer your questions.

If you ask about funeral arrangements in person, you are entitled to a general price list, which contains the cost of each individual funeral item and service offered. The price list must also disclose important legal rights and requirements concerning funeral arrangements.

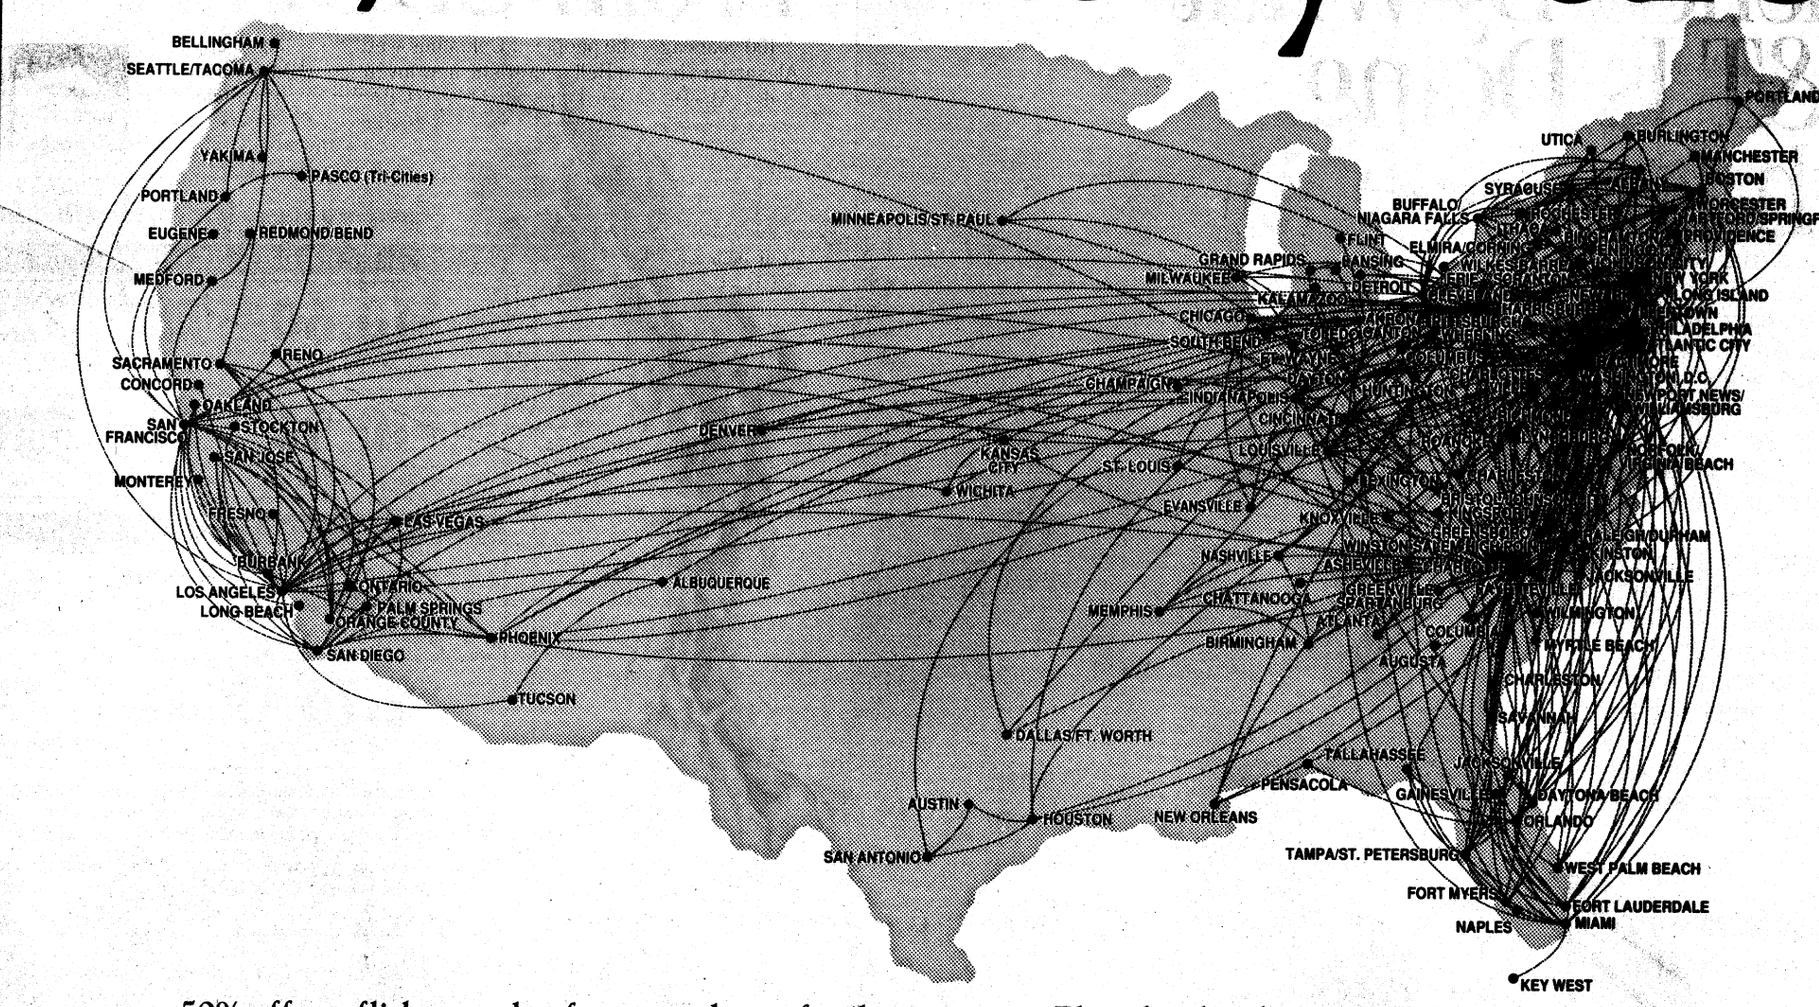
The rule requires funeral providers to give you information about embalming to help you decide if you want to purchase this service. Embalming is not required by law, and the provider must inform you of this. You may not be charged a fee for unauthorized embalming.

Funeral providers must tell you in writing if they charge a fee for buying cash advance items, such as flowers, obituary notices, and clergy fees. You must also be informed if a service fee is added to the price of cash advance items, or if the provider receives a discount from the supplier of these items.

If you desire cremation, you must be informed that you have the right to purchase a wooden box for the cremation, instead of purchasing a more expensive casket.

You are entitled to an itemized statement, which includes the total cost of the funeral goods and services you select. This will allow you to decide to add or subtract items as you wish.

The rule also prohibits funeral providers from telling you that a particular service can preserve a body indefinitely, or from claiming that caskets or vaults will keep out water or dirt.



Most funeral decisions are made during a time of grief. Therefore, thinking ahead may help you make more thoughtful and informed decisions about funeral arrangements. To insure that your wishes are carried out, it is important to inform those close to you of your desires, and perhaps put it in writing.

Heater noise warns of pending failure

Car Care Council

Do you hear a chirping or screeching sound when you turn on your car heater? This noise, most prevalent in cold weather, usually comes from a worn bearing in the fan motor. It's an indication of pending failure.

This is just one of many parts we take for granted until, usually too late, we discover they were calling for attention. That's when the cold ride to work becomes misery.

Most of this discomfort and inconvenience can be avoided by being more aware of pending failure of a heating system component, according to the Car Care Council.

In addition to the fan or blower motor, other components of the system that may give warning signals of failure are as follows:

●The heater control valve, which may become sticky or totally inoperative. You're likely to notice stiffness in the panel control lever.

●The heater core, a miniature radiator, which, like its big brother at the front of the engine, eventually may seep or leak. Your first tip-off will be an accumulation of moisture inside the car, that even defrosters won't help.

●Heater and defroster duct hoses carry fresh air into the system and warmed air to locations beyond the heater core. When they're leaking, you'll lose heating/defrosting efficiency.

●Heater hoses are the smaller hoses in the cooling system that direct the hot coolant from the engine to the heater core. A leaking heater hose goes beyond simple discomfort and can ultimately leave you stranded on the side of the road.

Because of the safety aspects of driving comfort and clear vision, the heating/defroster system is a vitally important part of the vehicle, emphasizes the Council, and should be taken seriously when failure is indicated. Be alert to early warning signs such as inefficient heating or defrosting, unusual noises or smells. It's quicker, more convenient and usually less expensive to have these malfunctions taken care of while they are only minor problems.

For more information on you car's cooling system, send 25 cents and a stamped, self-addressed, No. 10 envelope to: COOLING, Car Care Council, 600 Renaissance Center, Detroit, Mich. 48243.

By using the following procedure, soldiers on the Family Housing Waiting List can use this chart to estimate when they can expect quarters:

Locate your category of housing.

Note eligibility date located on the same line as your category.

Calculate the time difference between the eligibility date listed and your eligibility date. The difference is the approximate time you still have to wait for housing.

EXAMPLE: If the latest eligibility date of the person who last received housing in your category was May 15, 1988, and your date of eligibility is Sept. 15, 1988, you can expect housing in about four months. If you do not know your eligibility date, contact the Family Housing Office at building 399, 545-3107.

Adoptive soldier-parents may apply for reimbursement

Army News Service

Soldiers who choose to take part in the pilot program for government reimbursement of their qualifying child-adoption expenses may be able to start submitting claims by Dec. 1.

Local Army finance offices are gearing up to acquire the necessary claim forms and to complete their part of the program's implementation, said Mary Harden of the U.S. Army Finance and Accounting Center at Fort Benjamin Harrison.

Stressing that the adoptive soldiers must submit their claims to their servicing finance office, Harden noted that soldiers on temporary duty or otherwise away from their servicing offices should mail the claim to the appropriate office.

The two-year pilot requires that participants request reimbursement not later than 180 days after the adoption is final or within 180 days after the date of the Army's implementing instructions, whichever comes later.

Harden summarized the recent congressional legislation that authorizes the program:

"All servicemembers on active duty, including Active Guard/Reserve soldiers, may be reimbursed up to $2,000 per adopted child or $5,000 per participant in a calendar year. To be eligible, the adoption proceedings must be initiated between Oct. 1, 1987, and Sept. 30, 1989. The law defines the term 'adoption proceedings' as comprising the initial home-study report or the placement of the child in the soldier's home for the purpose of adoption, whichever comes later."

She went on to say that with the exception of stepchildren, the program covers most adoptions of children up to the age of 18 by either married or single soldiers. "It also covers the adoption of children from countries other than the United States and children with special needs."

On the specifics of coverage, she said that most reasonable expenses entailed in a legal adoption qualify for reimbursement unless previously covered by another government program. "Reasonable expenses include placement as well as legal and medical fees, including hospital expenses for a new-born infant."

Even personal travel expenses are reimbursable if deemed necessary to assess the child's health, to attend counseling sessions, to escort the child to the soldier's home or otherwise required to qualify for legal adoption.

To contribute toys, bring them directly to the Castle, or place them in the drop box in the PX mall. Cleaning supplies are also needed and may be brought to Santa's Castle. Family Life Center helps families cope

The Family Life Center

Building a healthy and satisfying community for Army families is a major role played by Army chaplains. Family Life Centers, which have been established on many installations since the early 1970s, are helping the Army to meet this goal.

The concept of the Family Life Center is to meet the specific needs of Army families with programs designed to prevent family problems, provide pro-active enrichment or family growth, and provide family and individual counseling programs. Similar programs in the private sector can cost thousands of dollars. But at Fort Benning, they're free to servicemembers and their families.

The Family Life Center here provides counseling to families who experience communication difficulties. The staff is trained to help couples and families develop negotiation skills, learn to resolve conflicts, parent children more effectively, learn how to listen, and how to love one another. Stress, divorce, and sexual dysfunctional counseling are also available.

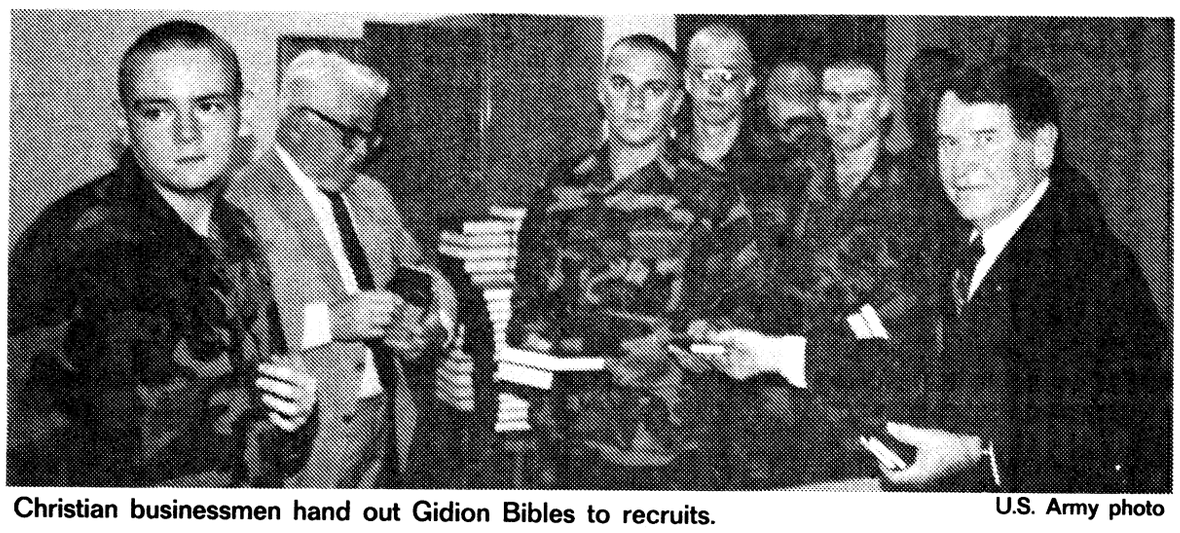
The counseling provided goes beyond "crisis" intervention. Brief therapy that involves several sessions leads to "change," — the chief objective of counseling. Clients learn alternative ways of relating to each other.

Referrals to other agencies are done on a case-by-case basis. Referrals may become necessary when drugs alcohol or individual pathology is preventing success in the counseling sessions.

Marriage and family counseling is open to all ranks. This simply indicates that the Family Life Center recognizes that everyone at some time may need the help of a counselor. Confidentiality is stressed for the benefit of the soldier and his family.

Take advantage of this fringe benefit. If you are in need of any of these services, contact the Family Life Center to schedule an appointment for yourself. This is an important part of the therapy. Call Chaplain (Maj.) White at 545-1760 for an appointment soon.

Special programs planned for 'Bible Sunday'



By Jo Ann Stamey
USAIC Chaplain's Office

The third Sunday of November is nationally designated "Bible Sunday," and this Sunday, churches all over the nation will have special programs reaffirming the sacredness and authenticity of the scriptures.

The people most responsible for spreading the word of God are the Gideons. The Gideons are a group of Christian businessmen who donate their time and money to get scriptures in every language possible distributed to as many people as possible. This is an international organization located in 175 countries.

The group was organized by three traveling men in Janesville, Wisc., on July 1, 1899. In November 1908, the organization began to place copies of the Bible in hotel rooms, later into hospitals, penal institutions, and schools. Their work is supported through freewill offerings.

Each year, Fort Benning receives about 75,000 free copies of scriptures to distribute to soldiers and their families. The majority of the scriptures distributed are Service Testaments, which are offered to every soldier that comes through the Infantry Training Center. Other scripture material distributed by the Gideons are Pew Bibles, Hospital Testaments, and Spanish Bibles. Also, there are Nurse's and Children's Testaments. English and Spanish Bibles are provided for all BOQ and BEQ rooms and transient billets.

On "Bible Sunday," the Chaplains invite the Gideons to their worship services to talk about their work around the world. The offerings on "Bible Sunday" are designated to the Gideons. Fort Benning gives back approximately $4,000 each year — a small token for what we receive. Considering the time, energy, shipping, and cost of the scriptures, the Gideons give Fort Benning over $75,000 worth of scriptures each year.

During War War II, the Gideons supplied the United States armed forces with Service Testaments. At that time, the covers of the testaments were metal. Many stories have been told of how these testaments saved lives of men who were carrying their Bibles in their pocket — the metal cover deflecting bullets that could have pierced hearts. Several of these can be seen at the Gideon National Headquarters. Many men have stated that they became Christians after receiving their Testaments.

Today at Fort Benning, many brothers, uncles, fathers, and grandfathers come to see their young men graduate from OSUT, airborne, or OCS training. These men often pull out the Service Testament that was given to them during World War II, Korea, or Vietnam and speak of its value. Obviously, that was a very important part of their life — then and now. Let us remember this on "Bible Sunday."

Thanksgiving tradition sprang from adversity

By Steven D. Paschall
The School Brigade Chaplain

The Scottish historian, Thomas Carlyle, wrote: "Adversity is sometimes hard on a man; but for the one man who can stand prosperity, there are a hundred that will stand adversity."

The irony of that thought should bring a faint smile across our lips. How many times have we missed the mark because we were blinded by our own prosperity?

The history of our nation suggests that our Thanksgiving tradition grew out of our experiences with adversity rather than prosperity. The early settlers at Plymouth raised the first Thanksgiving prayers in the face of hardship.

"This year that is drawing toward its close, has been filled with the blessings of fruitful fields and healthful skies. To these bounties, which are so constantly enjoyed that we are prone to forget the source from which they come, others have been added, which are of so extraordinary a nature, that they cannot fail to penetrate and soften even the heart that is habitually insensible to the ever watchful providence of Almighty God. . .

They are gracious gifts of the Most High God, who, while dealing with us in anger for our sins hath nonetheless remembered mercy. It has seemed to me fit and proper that they should be solemnly, reverently, and gratefully acknowledged as with one heart and one voice by the whole of the American people. I do, therefore, invite my fellow citizens in every part of the United States, and also those who are at sea and those who are sojourning in foreign lands, to set apart and observe the last Thursday of November as a day of Thanksgiving and praise to our beneficent Father who dwelleth in the Heavens. . ."

The holiday season frequently is a difficult time for some who struggle with personal problems. People everywhere are celebrating the bounty of our land, and yet, there are many who are caught up in personal trials and crisis. Remember our national celebration of Thanksgiving was given birth in the face of adversity.

For those of the Christian tradition, the symbol of human cruelty, the cross, gave birth to our eternal victory. Hard times will give way to thankful hearts in the face of God's love and provision.

General Pershing set training precedent

Army News Service

The United States was largely unprepared to enter World War I. Its regular Army was small and its reserve component forces were both small and underfunded.

The National Defense Act of 1916 addressed some of the problems associated with building a modern Army, but when Congress declared war against Germany and her allies in April 1917, the Army was still woefully understrength — without a single division-size unit in existence.

Many men volunteered for Army duty, but the draft was the primary method used to build U.S. forces to a level where they could contribute to the Allied war effort. Whether volunteer or draftee, these inexperienced men needed to learn military skills, and the Army decided that four months of basic training in the United States would be sufficient before sending them overseas.

The commander of the American Expeditionary Forces was Gen. John J. Pershing, an experienced soldier who realized that the training his men had received in the United States had been rudimentary at best. It was Pershing's decision that, even after U.S. troops arrived in Europe, there would be a considerable period during which they would receive additional training before he would allow them to be committed to combat.

U.S. allies – particularly Britain and France – thought that Pershing was going overboard with his training schedule. They needed bodies to be fed into the trenches and they needed them now.

Pershing, however, refused to waiver in his conviction that training would be the key to a genuine U.S. contribution to the war effort.

Pershing accepted both British and French assistance in teaching his men such subjects as gas warfare, demolitions and use of the hand grenade and mortar. But he was not convinced that the allies knew everything about how to fight and win. He therefore gave his men additional training in offensive tactics, including rifle marksmanship and bayonet practice.

Despite intense pressure to commit his soldiers piecemeal into Allied units that were running short of infantrymen, Pershing resolved to maintain the organizational integrity of American units and to employ them together in American operations. He did eventually agree to allow American infantry battalions to serve with a French division on a rotating basis, regarding this experience as part of the training cycle.

After six months of European training, Pershing felt that his men were capable of going into the trenches and giving a good account of themselves, and he moved them into the line. Pershing's confidence in his men was soon vindicated at St. Mihiel, the Meuse-Argonne, and other battles that represent the gallantry of the doughboys who went "over there" in defense of democratic ideals.

Indeed, the battle streamers that were added to the U.S. Army flag for World War I offer testimony to the wisdom and stubbornness of one man — Gen. John J. Pershing — who refused to commit his troops to battle until they had been trained to his satisfaction.

COURT REPORT

Staff Judge Advocates Office

On Nov. 10, Pvt. 2 Eugene B. King, HHC, 1st Battalion, 58th Infantry, 197th Infantry Brigade (Mechanized) (Separate), pleaded guilty before a special court-martial. He was charged with missing movement and wrongful appropriation of an M-16A1 rifle.

The evidence showed that on Sept. 5, King drew his weapon in preparation for movement on REFORGER. While saying good-bye to his wife, he placed his weapon and equipment in his car and went home. Other soldiers of his unit observed King's actions as they boarded the buses to depart. The weapon was recovered that night during a search of King's POV. King explained he felt compelled by financial and personal problems to stay with his wife.

King was found guilty of all charges and was sentenced to a bad conduct discharge, 90 days confinement, forfeiture of $400 per month for three months and reduction to E-1.

On Oct. 26, Spec. Demetrius J. Martin, of HHC 2nd Bn., 69th Armor, 197th Inf. Bde. (M) (S), was convicted of obtaining services under false pretenses and being disrespectful to a superior commissioned officer. Martin discovered the AT&T calling card number of a fellow soldier and made about 25 long-distance calls on the soldier's account. He was sentenced to a bad conduct discharge, confinement for three months, forfeiture of $600 a month for three months and reduction to E-1.

Lt. Col. Cullinane relinquishes command of 4/36th Infantry

By Joe Buskey
2nd ITB correspondent

On Nov. 8, Lt. Col. Paul E. Cullinane Jr., 4th Battalion, 36th Infantry, 2nd Infantry Training Brigade, relinquished command of the "Deeds Not Words" Battalion to Lt. Col. John M. Greenwalt.

Greenwalt's most recent assignment was in the Pentagon as a program analyst and executive officer in the Program Analysis and Evaluation Directorate, Office of the Chief of Staff of the Army. His other assignments includes instructor and assistant professor with the Department of Mathematics at the United States Military Academy at West Point, company commander, battalion S-4, and brigade S-4, with the 82nd Airborne Division, Fort Bragg and battalion executive officer with the 2nd Infantry Division, Korea.

In the assumption of command of the 4th Battalion, 36th Infantry, Greenwalt was joined by his wife, Jackie, and daughter, Tracy.

Before assignment to Fort Benning, Cullinane worked as Deputy Senior Advisor to the 28th Infantry (Keystone) Division, "America's Oldest," Pennsylvania Army National Guard. Upon being assigned to Fort Benning in November 1986, Cullinane assumed command of the now deactivated, 10th Battalion, 2nd Infantry Training Brigade. After the deactivation of the 10th Battalion, Cullinane assumed command of the 9th Battalion, 2nd Infantry Training Brigade on July 7, 1987. On Aug. 29, 1987, in alignment with the Department of the Army's Regimental System, the 9th Bn. was redesignated as the 4th Bn., 36th Inf., 2nd ITB. Cullinane is now slated to occupy a position in the office of the Deputy Chief of Staff of operations in the Pentagon.

Flag runners end trek

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

"Mine eyes have seen the glory ...," and what a sight it was, as the American Flag Runners and the Chief of Infantry carried Old Glory to the end of an 850-mile trek that began seven days earlier.

The run started at our nation's capital after a brief ceremony at the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier in Arlington National Cemetery, and it ended at the Columbus Ironworks Convention and Trade Center on Veterans Day.

The run was conducted to honor veterans across the U.S.

Juan Padilla, a Fort Benning soldier and a member of the Columbus Track Club was one of the runners who participated in the run. During his portion of the run, he racked up 92 miles and a lot of memories.

Padilla said there were two occasions that he remembers above all others.

"The first is when we ran through Fort Bragg, N.C.," Padilla said. "They had a ceremony for us and members of the 82nd Airborne Division helped carry the flag for a number of miles."

He said being out on the road really made him feel proud of what he was doing.

The second thing that will stick in his mind happened shortly after the runners crossed the Georgia border and ran through Manchester.

"A high school band was there along with many members of the community," Padilla said. "Their welcome was the only other official welcome we had other than the big one in Atlanta and our arrival back home."

"That recognition from the communities really helped us," he said. "But, when it came to running in the middle of the night, the knowledge that we were doing it for the veterans was more than enough."

Winterize car now

National Safety Council

If you winterize your car now, you can avoid cold-weather problems, says the National Safety Council. The Council recommends you get an engine tune-up and have your battery and voltage regulator checked before winter sets in. Be sure to switch to a winter-weight oil if you're not already using an all-season oil.

The Council also suggests that you keep these items in your car during the winter season:

- ○Snow shovel and ice scraper
- ○Tire chains
- ○Jumper cables
- ○Flares or reflective triangles
- ○Abrasive material (cat litter, salt, sand or traction mats
- ○Sleeping bags or blankets
- ○Tow chain or strap
- ○Flashlight
- ○Candles and matches
- ○High-energy food — candy bars or nuts
- ○Empty coffee can (you can melt snow in the can to use as drinking water if necessary)

Prevent refrigeration problems by routinely checking gasket seal

By Becky Ray
Energy Branch

Refrigerators are among those appliances that most of us take for granted until they stop working, and then we panic.

We give them little thought until two weeks' supply of groceries are threatened with spoilage. For refrigerators to work efficiently and dependably, they require only a little preventive maintenance.

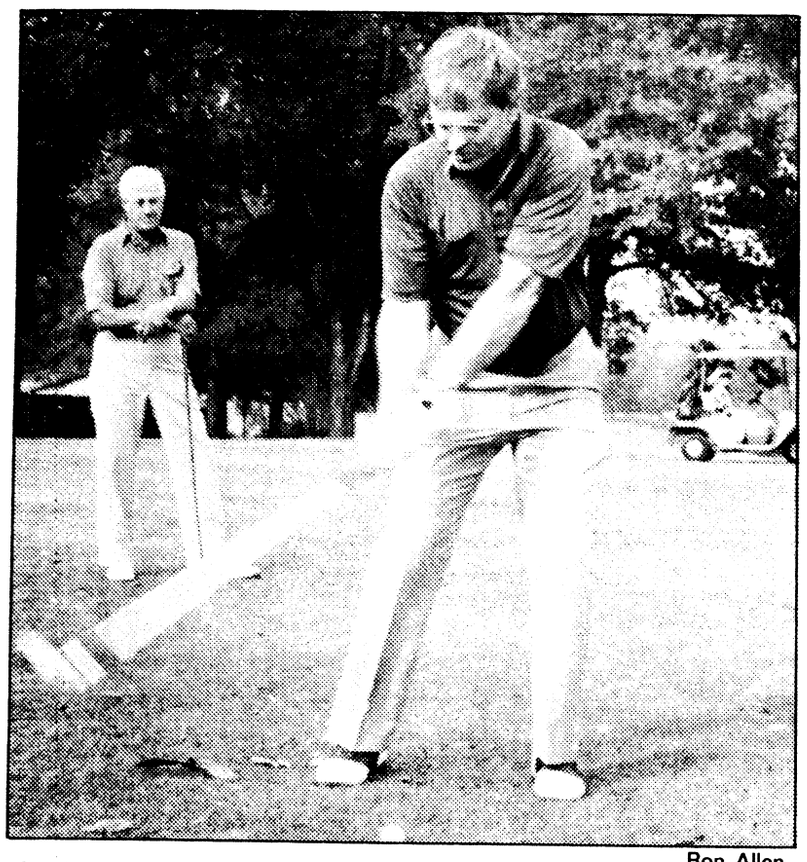
Bill Douglas, a DEH refrigeration mechanic for Fort Benning, says that many refrigerator problems can be prevented by taking care of the gaskets that seal the refrigerator and freezer doors. These gaskets should form an airtight seal to keep cold air in and warm air out. If the gasket doesn't seal properly, the refrigerator can't keep food at the correct temperature; and it may spoil. The compressor works harder to keep the front of the compartment at an even temperature, so the rear of the fridge or other compartments may freeze up. The constant running of the compressor also wastes electricity.

Douglas advises checking the gasket periodically for a tight seal, and cleaning it about once a week with warm water and a mild soap to remove any dirt or spills. Avoid using abrasive cleaners that wear the smooth surface of the rubber. Sticky substances, such as fruit juices, soft drinks and jelly spilled on the gasket or door frame should be cleaned off immediately. These seal the door like glue, so that when the fridge door is opened, the gasket is torn.

The problems caused by worn out gaskets can also be caused by warped doors. Because the doors are attached to the body of the refrigerator only by hinges, it's easy, for them to become bent or warped with a little too much weight. Loading down the door shelves with too many heavy jars, or allowing children to swing on the doors, are too-common causes of warped doors.

Dirty condensers make refrigerators work inefficiently. The condenser coils are on the bottom of most refrigerators on post, but are on the back of the appliances on a few models. The coils should be vacuumed periodically using an upholstery attachment to remove dust.

The right amount of air circulation is needed to keep the refrigerator operating reliably and efficiently. If the condenser is on the back of the refrigerator, there should be at least three inches between the back of the coils and the wall. On models with condensers on the bottom, the back of the refrigerator should be a minimum of two-inches from the wall.



If the freezer is not auto-defrost, it should be defrosted whenever there is ¼-inch of ice anywhere in the compartment.

Douglas recommends placing an electric fan at least three feet in front of the open freezer door. (Electrical appliances of any type should never be placed inside the freezer, as melting ice can result in a shock hazard.) The

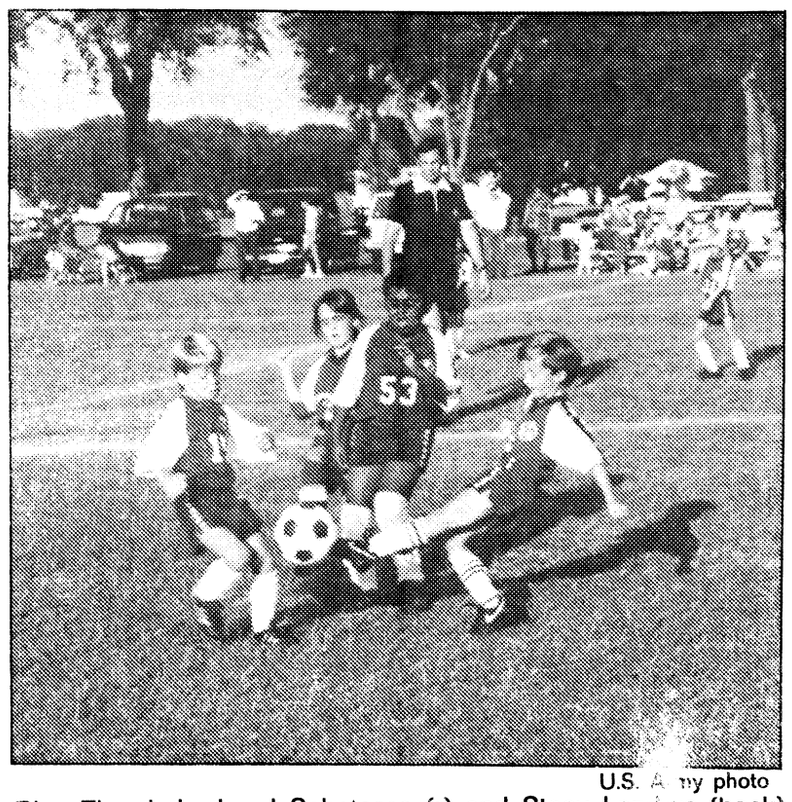
YA soccer season ends; one team undefeated

YA Sports

Youth Activities soccer ended earlier this month after a season of goal-busting action.

From the YA's Grasshopper league (6-8 year olds), arose a team whose thunder was heard by all and brought the team to its second straight undefeated season.



Blue Thunder, according to coaches Mike Truczinskas and Steve Orlof, finished the seven-team league with an end-season record of 12 wins and 0 losses. This year's finish gave the team a two-year record of 17-0-1.

Both Truczinskas and Orlof attributed the Blue Thunder's outstanding season to a well-rounded team with a strong offense and a dominating defense. "We averaged five goals per game and our defense allowed only seven goals all year," Orlof said. He said the key to the strength of the defense was the players' abilities to keep the ball in the opposing team's end most of the time.

Eight-year old Michael Patrick was the Blue Thunder's leading scorer as he single-handedly blasted 23 goals in 11 games. Truczinskas explained that Patrick missed the 12th game due to a family move.

Other assets of the team were five return players from 1987, according to the coaches. Key defensive players for the team were Stephen McGuire, Sergio Espenshade, Stacy Landrus and Jeremiah Werner.

"The season was a lot of fun for the kids, but it was also a starting point for learning about and developing good sportsmanship and teamwork skills," Orlof said.

Hunting fatalities occur when safety neglected

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Since the start of the 1988 hunting season, 34 people have been killed in Georgia by hunting related accidents.

One of the most recent deaths occurred Nov. 12 when a 13-year-old boy, the son of a Columbus attorney, was killed off-post while on a hunting trip near Cusseta.

The boy was brought to Martin Army Community Hospital, the nearest medical facility, where he died after two hours of surgery.

The man who fired the shot, a friend of the boy's father, was admitted to MACH for observation of a possible heart attack and released Monday.

Authorities continue to investigate the cause of the accident.

At Fort Benning, the post Safety Office stressed that on-post hunting has been without death or injury so far this year; it emphasized that safe hunting is the result of an alert mind, adherence to hunting regulations and observance of hunting safety rules.

The Safety Office recommends that all hunters be aware of and heed the following safety rules:

–Treat every gun with the respect due a loaded gun. This is the first rule of gun safety.

–Guns carried home, into camp and in the automobile or when not in use, must always be unloaded and broken down or have the actions open.

Guns always should be carried in cases to the shooting area. It is not only unsafe, but also unlawful to have in your vehicle any shotgun or rifle containing shells or cartridges in the magazine or chamber.

–Always carry your gun so you can control the direction of the muzzle, even if you stumble. Don't lift a gun by the muzzle and keep the safety on until you are ready to shoot.

–When in any area where other hunters may be, wear bright colored clothing (international orange vest and hat). Know where you are shooting. People can be accidentally killed be fellow hunters.

–Always be sure the barrel and action are clear of obstructions and you have ammunition of the proper size for the gun you are carrying. Remove oil and grease from the chamber before firing.

–Never pull a gun through a fence. Hand it over to someone or lay it down on the other side before you start through. Point it away from yourself and others.

–Don't lean a loaded gun against a tree or a fence, where it might be knocked over and discharged.

–Be sure of your target before pulling the trigger. Know the identifying features of the game you intend to hunt. Be sure no person is in the line of fire.

–Never shoot across a road-way or in the direction of living quarters.

–Never shoot a bullet at a flat, hard surface or the surface of water. Be sure back stops are adequate.

–Avoid alcohol before or during shooting, and leave "Quick Draw" gun play to the experts.

--Unattended guns should be unloaded. Guns and ammunition should be stored separately beyond the reach of children and thoughtless adults. Ammunition should be locked up.

–Never lay a loaded gun down in a boat. Never lift a gun from a boat by the barrel.

–Avoid a fall, or a climb, and after walking over plowed ground, examine your gun to make sure the barrel is clear. In fact, always ensure that your gun or rifle is in good operating condition. The barrel and breech should be free and clean from any foreign matter, which may tend to clog them.

–Be sure to read and understand the hunting rules and regulations pertaining to the area in which you are hunting.

–Each year, there are cases of people dying from heart attacks while hunting. Make sure you are in good health and do not over-exert yourself. Know your limitations and do not go beyond them.

–Prior to leaving on a hunting trip, make sure that some responsible person knows, in detail, what area you will be hunting, and the estimated time of return. Report back, either personally or by telephone, upon return. Never hunt alone.

–Make the hunting season a safe and enjoyable one. And remember that safety is always in season.

fan circulates the warm air from the room through the freezer compartment and eliminates the bother of heating water in pans to warm the freezer. Sharp objects should never be used to chip at ice buildup — Freon coils in the floor of the freezer are easily punctured.

According to Douglas, keeping a refrigerator operating reliably and efficiently is as simple as checking gaskets, keeping it clean, defrosting when needed and avoiding abusing doors, handles and door racks.

Because he's the only refrigerator mechanic serving the post, it's important that occupants maintain their refrigerators well. By preventing avoidable repairs, post residents can ensure prompt and efficient service for emergencies.

NEWS BRIEFS

CG's Thanksgiving Day message

Three hundred and sixty-seven years ago in Plymouth, Mass., Gov. William Bradford proclaimed a day of thanks for the past year's blessings. Since then, Thanksgiving Day has become an honored tradition celebrated by all Americans on the fourth Thursday of November.

Americans observing Thanksgiving in 1988, like the Pilgrims who celebrated in 1621, have many blessings for which we should be grateful. We have greater freedoms, enhanced well-being and more opportunities than any other people in history. Those freedoms and opportunities have been achieved through dedication to high ideals and the personal sacrifice by us and generations of Americans before us.

Our forefathers paused to give thanks to the Creator for seeing them through tough times, for the bountiful harvest and to seek His blessings for the days ahead. We would be wise to follow their example. Let each of us in our own way pause to express gratitude on this special day.

My prayer for you and your loved ones is for a safe, happy and prosperous Thanksgiving.

Boy Scouts collect tons of food

By Shawn Bryson
Bayonet writer

Boy Scouts from the Fort Benning District of the Chattahoochee Council, collected approximately four tons of food Saturday at Fort Benning and south Columbus as their part of the Boy Scouts of America's "Scouting for Food" Good Turn.

According to Maj. James Hill, District Commissioner, the Scouts spent most of day picking up food bags they had dropped off the weekend before. "We were only expecting one or two cans per bag, but many folks gave three to five cans plus other nonparishable foods," Hill said.

As a whole, the Chattahoochee Council collected more than 120,000 cans of food (about 45 tons), which easily surpassed its original goal of 100,000 cans, Hill said.

The food goes to the Army Community Service's Emergency Food Locker, which will use it to help out needy Army families at Fort Benning.

Dining facilities to put on Thanksgiving feasts

By Randy Dykstra
Army News Service

In keeping with the tradition of Thanksgiving Day, Army dining facilities will prepare more than 88 tons of turkey with all the fixings for soldiers and their family members.

Dietitians and home economists at the U.S. Army Troop Support Agency have released the 1988 holiday Master Menu to be used by all dining halls.

The Thanksgiving Day banquet is the largest meal served in more than 1,000 Army dining facilities worldwide, and it is quite a feast.

In addition to the 177,461 pounds of turkey, this banquet will include 22,182 pounds of shrimp for shrimp cocktail, 48,668 pounds of cranberry sauce and 18,885 pumpkin pies. Mincemeat pies are also on the menu, as well as 11,091 pounds of fruitcake, 13,309 pounds of mixed nuts, 70,984 pounds of assorted fresh fruit and 17,746 pounds of assorted candies.

To round off their meal, diners may select from mashed potatoes, giblet gravy, glazed sweet potatoes, cornbread dressing, green beans, baked Hubbard squash, spring salad, assorted dressings, shimmery fruit and vegetable salad, cloverleaf rolls, margarine, two-percent lowfat milk, coffee, tea and soft drinks.

Based on availability and personal preference, some installation food service personnel may vary their holiday menu to include cornish hen, roast duck, baked ham, steamship round of beef, grilled steak, tomato or cranberry and orange juice cocktail, apple and sweet potato pies.

As has been the case in the past, most diners are exempt from paying extra for their meals.

Because sharing holiday meals with family members is viewed as a cornerstone of building unit morale and esprit de corps, enlisted soldiers' family members 12 and over will pay $2.25, while those under 12 will pay $1.10 for their meal.

Officers and non-family member guests will still be required to pay a surcharge, bringing the cost of their meals to $5.40 for adults and $2.65 for youths under 12.

Last year, 221,826 soldiers, their families and guests enjoyed the Army's Thanksgiving dinner, while 86,775 people consumed the yuletide meal. Although turkey with all the trimmings is also offered at Christmas, food service officials say many people spend that day with family and friends and choose not to eat in a dining facility.

Officials honor Army families

By joint resolution of Congress, Monday was designated "National Military Families Recognition Day."

By recognizing the important role of military families in the defense of our nation, we add significance to upcoming Army Family Week observances.

In keeping with the intent of both Army Family Week and National Family Week, we join the nation in thanking Army families for their caring support and sacrifices in the defense of our nation. Our Army is strong and ready because our families are strong. We are committed to maintaining this strength and to ensuring our families continue to support the Army mission.

John O. Marsh Jr., Secretary of the Army and Gen. Carl E. Vuono, Chief of Staff

The following activities are scheduled at Fort Benning in observance of Army Family Week: The U.S. Army School of the Americas will hold its annual Thanksgiving dinner Nov. 24, 11:30 a.m. to 1 p.m., at the USARSA dining facility.

A family style Thanksgiving dinner for "new" soldiers will be held Nov. 24, 11:30 a.m.-1 p.m., at the U. S. Army Infantry Training Center dining facility.

Fort Benning unit dining facilities will have family style Thanksgiving meals for soldiers and their families Nov. 24, 11:30 a.m.-1 p.m.

The National Infantry Museum will be open to the public Nov. 25, 10 a.m.-4:30p.m.

World AIDS day to focus on worldwide prevention

Preventive Medicine

AIDS, a new word that is less than ten years old, is a word known to five-year olds, teenagers, and adults around the world.

It is a word that is part of millions of conversations daily; a word that strikes fear in the hearts of many; a word that evokes sorrow in the hearts of othes as they recall the suffering and death of their loved ones — brothers, sisters, husbands, wives, children and friends.

The World Health Organization has declared Thursday as World AIDS Day to focus attention on the worldwide efforts against AIDS.

Prevention of AIDS continues to be the main line of defense against this dreaded disease. The first step in that defense is education.

An aggressive education program has been ongoing in the Fort Benning community for the past two and one-half years with well over 10,000 people participating in classes last year alone.

Recent research has shown that such educational efforts have been somewhat effective. The majority of people are well informed about the cause and prevention of AIDS, but that same majority has yet to act to reduce their risks for exposure to AIDS.

Benning betters safety record; looks ahead

Safety Office

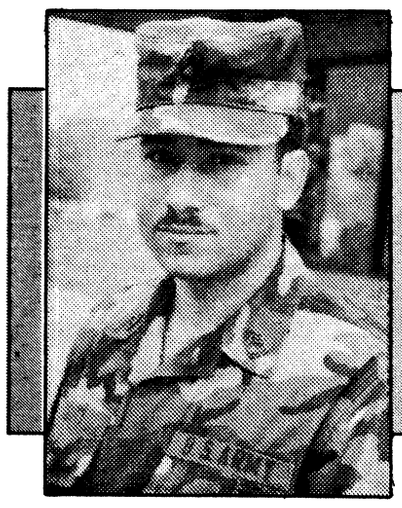
Fiscal year 1988 was an extremely successful year from the standpoint of safety at Fort Benning. Leaders are 'talking up' safety at every opportunity, creating the desire to develop a more aggressive attitude toward bringing about the reduction of needless and costly accidents and injuries. The facts and figures tell the story.

In fiscal 1987, Fort Benning experienced 410 personnel injuries, 25 Army motor vehicle accidents and 48 privately owned vehicle accidents.

In fiscal 1988, the post saw reductions in personnel injuries (297) and privately owned vehicle accidents(35), but sustained an increase in Army motor vehicle accidents (31). There was an overall Army-wide reduction in the number of AMV accidents from fiscal 1987 (54) to fiscal 1988 (42).

The reduction of Army accidents is a team effort, and Fort Benning must do its part to support the team. While post personnel can and should be proud of the reductions they have worked so hard to achieve, a collective effort must be made to further reduce accident rates in the future.

For Benning is an installation well known for its multi-faceted training activities. Examples of this are the Airborne School, Ranger School, Infantry Officer Basic and Advanced courses and Initial Entry Basic Training.



When these hazardous activities are combined with the conduct of normal day-to-day business, such as aviation missions, POL operations and maintenance support, the potential for serious accidents and injuries is staggering.

Snively searches for something to be thankful for; misses deadline

By Clyde Snively
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Generally, story ideas for this column are difficult to come by. Once in a while a reader will suggest a topic. Occasionally, the major will have a brain hiccup and send me in pursuit of a story.

This week was easy. "You'll do a story about what you have to be thankful for," Madame Editor announced in her command voice, her eyes daring me to protest.

While I wasn't crazy about the subject-- it did nothing to get my blood boiling -- there really wasn't anything else to write about, so I agreed without a whimper.

I soon learned figuring out what to be thankful for was a one person operation. Airborne Annie didn't want to be bothered since she had to do "Various Voices." Shawn, who was given some title like "Makeup and layout editor for the Thanksgiving edition," said he was far too busy and important to help me with my trivial pursuits.

Ronnie said he had enough trouble dealing with all the sports correspondents on post to concern himself with some insignificant columnist and his problems.

Aggie at least smiled when she asked me to leave her alone as she turned back to her computer terminal.

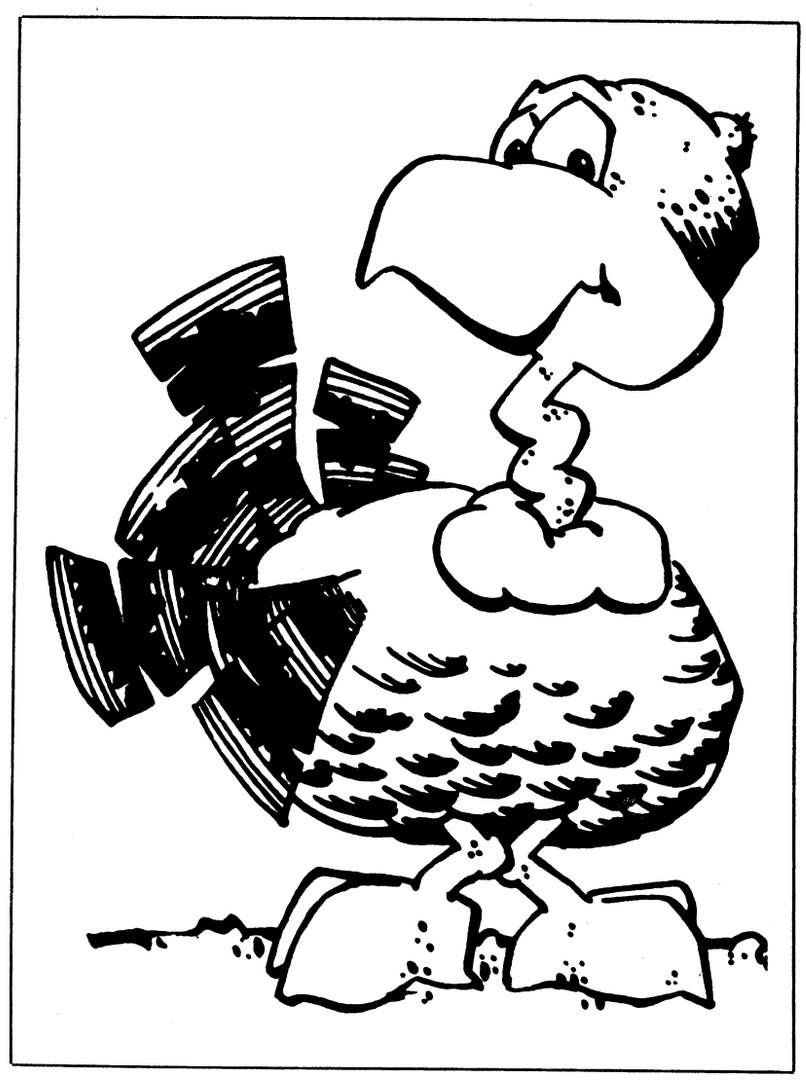
Luz muttered something in Spanish that sounded a lot like "Geta losta, amigo."

I turned to the major who was trying to spread peanut butter on a cracker while cradling the phone on his shoulder. His look told me I needn't bother to ask him for any creative ideas.

So I wandered back to my corner where I tried to get my creative juices flowing by arranging all my pencils neatly in my pencil holder and carefully stacking last year's back issues of The Bayonet in chronological order.

I awoke the next morning with a start. It was Tuesday, the day the paper was to go to bed, and there was still no column. Not even any clues about what I could say I was thankful for. I knew I was in hot water.

Pulling into the parking lot at work, I gave Fritz, my car, a love pat for once again getting me to work without joining all the other deadlined vehicles lining I-185.



I took the elevator up the the sixth floor of Building 4, muttering a "1,657" under my breath as I got off, acknowledging another successful trip without getting caught between floors.

I'd barely set foot inside the door of the office when Luz told me our "editor-for-the week," Shawn had already called about the column. I was to call him ASAP.

Too bad for him. I wasn't able to get an outside line before it was time to leave the office. I did however, manage to get through to the 29th Infantry for a change, saving me a drive out there.

At noon I joined an IOBC class in the field where the lieutenants were dining on MREs before continuing on an operation. Since I'd already eaten, I was able to pass up a kind offer to join in, making a mental note not to include MREs on the Thanksgiving meal menu.

On the way back, I stopped at a traffic accident on post. Since I was wearing my new PAO badge for the first time the MP was most cordial and helpful, allowing me to get some good shots for the paper's safety drive without the usual run-around.

Walking back from the parking lot to Building 4, I got dumped on by a sudden shower. "At least I'm not out with the Infantry," I mumbled to myself as I sprinted for the cozy confines of the building.

Arriving at the office, I tried to slide, unnoticed, into my corner. But to no avail.

"Where's your column!" Madame Editor shrieked at me. Shawn's having hemorrhoids down at the paper. He's got a 15-inch hole that needs to be filled."

"Ah, the sounds of freedom," I said. "Be with you as soon as I can think of something for which I'm thankful.

Reagan wishes joyous Thanksgiving

Thanksgiving is a time when we surround ourselves with family and friends and acknowledge God's blessings upon us and upon our nation in the year past. It is a truly American holiday, rooted in our earliest history and founded on our national sense of dependence on the guidance of divine providence.

Our ancestors have faced Thanksgiving day in times of danger and want and in the harsh winters and rough conditions of our early eastern settlements. Amidst the deprivations of wartime, in the grid of economic depression, whatever the challenge, these americans welcome without fail the coming of this day - for on it they joined together as communities and as a people to pay tribute to the generous god who is the father of our freedoms and the hope of our future.

This spirit of thanksgiving has always had special meaning for the members of our armed forces. For you, sacrifice and separation from loved ones are routine facts of life. You give up many daily comforts, and face many daily dangers, so that your fellow citizens and citizens of allied nations can live with peace and without fear. As you spend another holiday guarding our freedoms, the thoughts of all americans are with you. Our thanks, among the many we offer today, go with you for everything you have done and will do to keep this nation strong and at peace.

Nancy and I wish you and your families a bountiful and joyous thanksgiving. God bless you.

President Ronald Reagan.

Carlucci explains best blessing of the year

The national security of the United States has no days off.

This Thanksgiving, when Americans gather in their homes to give thanks to God for the blessings of the past year, thousands of your fellow American soldiers, sailors, airmen, and Marines will be manning their posts.

As Americans sit down for the traditional Thanksgiving feast, I hope they remember their best blessing of this year: Peace. It is through your diligence and devotion to duty that our country continues to enjoy this blessing.

This past year has not been without sacrifices as we maintained our vigilance in defense of American interests. To your credit you performed these duties in a professional manner and with a "can do" attitude. More than anything else, our readiness ensures that our adversaries will not doubt the resolve of the United States or the meaning of our actions.

As Americans share the closeness of this day with their families, American service men and women will be doing what they do every day of the year — guarding our country and the freedoms we hold dear. It is not an easy job, but you are doing it superbly.

I hope all Americans remember you today as they count their blessings and thank God that our nation has produced sons and daughters like you.

Happy Thanksgiving.

Praise elevates; criticism deflates says chaplain

By David R. Penland
36th Eng. Grp. Chaplain

Have you ever found yourself displaying a fault-finding or critical attitude toward your family or friends or just with life in general?

Are you quick to be negative — not able to find the good or the positive in something done by your wife or children, your boss, you co-workers?

Walter Knight once told the story of a lady in Switzerland who bought a small package of greatly aged cheese, which she placed in her shopping bag. Following her purchase, she continued her shopping and as she went shop to shop, she was repelled by ill-smelling clerks.

She thought, "How can these ill-smelling clerks maintain their positions." Imagine her embarrassment when, upon opening her shopping bag, she discovered it was she, not others, who was responsible for the offensive odor.

Isn't that the way it is with a contentious or critical spirit — the offense comes from within rather than from without. Unhappiness, turmoil and confusion often rise from within. God's word wisely, lovingly informs us that a cynical or critical spirit can not only harm or damage us spiritually, but it can detract from our Christian witness and hurt the feelings of others.

The tragedy, the depth of suffering that a critical attitude can cause, was emphasized to me just recently in a story I heard. It seems there was a young boy named Jeff who reached school age. The first day, the teacher told her pupils to draw a flower. Jeff drew several flowers - some with golden petals, some with bright orange, some with violet and blue. The teacher praised the beauty of Jeff's work, even though some of the flowers were roughly cut and drawn. With every project, Jeff's abilities and confidence grew, and he was praised for the efforts he made.

Halfway through the year,

Ono stresses high retention

By Lt. Gen. A. K. Ono
U. S. Army Deputy Chief of Staff for Personnel

People are the heart of our Army.

That's true today. It will be true tomorrow. Without good, well-trained, quality soldiers the Army will not, it can not fulfill its mission.

Just what is that mission? You've heard it before, of course – to maintain a state of combat readiness that can deter our enemies, and if that deterrence should fail then to defend the nation and its interests anywhere in the world.

Readiness is one of the key words in that mission statement. If we are not ready at all times, the chance of failure is significant.

The Army has the full-time burden to remain ready whenever and wherever needed.

Road to readiness

The road to readiness is not a mystery to us. It begins with securing the necessary manpower to meet our requirements. We must train at manpower to be effective and disciplined soldiers.

That's not the end of the road though. Readiness also requires that we retain as many of these well-trained soldiers as possible. We do that through an effective retention program, and it is only through the continued strong efforts of unit commanders that the program can remain effective.

In any type of program, the goals to be achieved must be defined. The goals of our retention program include adequate manning in critical skills, establishing and maintaining a sufficient manpower pool for our non-commissioned officer corps of the future, and meeting the needs of force alignment. Each goal is important to help us achieve and maintain readiness.

Commander's influence

How significant is the commander's role in helping us reach those retention goals? Very significant, according to research done by the Army.

That research has shown that the commander is the person with the most influence on a soldier's decision to re-enlist. Individual soldiers may, or may not, re-enlist based on the impact of their commander.

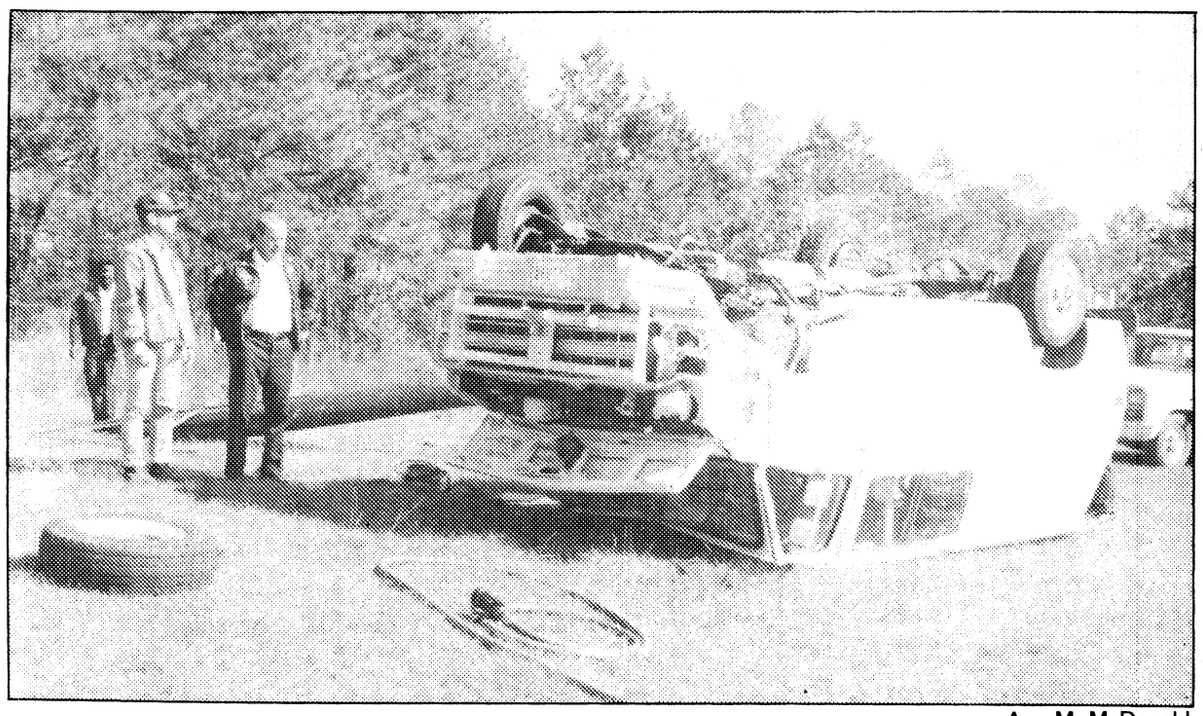
Research has also shown which actions taken by a commander have the greatest impact – either positive or negative – on the soldier's re-enlistment decision. I don't believe any of them should surprise you.

First, a soldier expects credit or recognition for a job well done. If this is not done, don't expect individual morale to be very high at the critical point of re-enlistment.

Second, a soldier wants fair and equal treatment in all areas. This means that awards, promotions and adverse actions be applied objectively to each individual based on one set of standards.

Third, a soldier anticipates promotions will be given on time. If a commander shows a lack of concern, the Army will likely lose a soldier at the re-enlistment decision point.

Fourth, soldiers look for their commanders to show a sincere concern for the family. That word 'sincere' is important. A commander can't pretend to care and think that is enough. Where families are concerned, actions do speak louder than words.



Finally, soldiers want to get the re-enlistment option they desire.

They expect help from their commander if required.

Tools available

The actions mentioned above are some of the indirect ways commanders can influence retention. But it is the commander's individual retention program, conducted at the unit, which is the direct way good soldiers can be influenced to stay in the Army.

Saved by the belt

The driver of this van was speeding and lost control of his vehicle. He hit a utility pole and the vehicle overturned. The driver was wearing a seatbelt. He was taken to Martin Army Community Hospital and treated for lacerations on his right buttocks and released. The injuries would have been much more serious had the driver been not wearing his seatbelt.

Four-wheel fatalities on the rise

By Evelyn Doyle Harris
AFIS

The number of service members killed in car crashes is going up, while motorcycle and moped deaths are holding steady. So said Jerald Anderson, DoD's assistant for safety and occupational health policy and secretary of DoD's Intoxicated Driving Prevention Task Force.

In the first nine months of fiscal 1988, there were 83 military people killed in two-wheel crashes; 14 percent were intoxicated. For the same period in 1987, comparable figures were 80 persons and 15 percent. Full-year figures show a decline in motorcycle fatalities, from 181 in fiscal 1986 to 131 in fiscal 1987.

Anderson credited the motorcycle rider education courses, which are required on all military installations, for the decline in motorcycle deaths.

In the first nine months of fiscal 1988, 402 members were killed in four-wheel vehicle crashes, compared with 282 deaths for the same period in 1987. The percentage of persons killed who were intoxicated also increased from 10 percent in the first nine months of fiscal 1987 to 21 percent in 1988.

DoD confirms alcohol as a factor in a crash if the individual's alcohol concentration is .10, the legal intoxication level. A reading of .10 on a breath-testing instrument indicates .10 gram of alcohol per 210 milliliters of breath. However, studies have shown that a driver's ability deteriorates at less than half that level.

Praise

Jeff's teacher became ill and was replaced by a new teacher. The new teacher asked the students to draw a flower. Jeff began drawing one in every conceivable color. The teacher snapped, "I didn't tell you to start yet. Are you stupid?" The teacher looked at the children's papers, and said, "No, no, that's not what I mean by a flower — this is a flower..." and she drew a picture on the board of a plain flower with a green stem and a red blossom.

Shortly thereafter, Jeff's family moved to another city, and he was sent to a new school. The first day the teacher told the students to draw a picture of a flower. Jeff just sat quietly, head down. Finally the teacher came to Jeff's chair. She asked, "Jeff, aren't you going to draw some flowers?"

Jeff said, "No one told me to begin."

"You may begin, Jeff," she said.

"What kind of flower do you want me to draw," asked Jeff.

"Any kind of flower you want — use your imagination." replied the teacher.

So Jeff drew a plain flower with a green stem and a red blossom.

There are some people whose tongues are tuned to criticize. There are some whose eyes are focused to discover virtues.

Praise inspires — criticism tires.

Praise elevates — criticism deflates.

that everyone faces during off-duty hours must also be remembered, especially privately owned vehicle accidents. Even though there was a reduction in fiscal year 1988 POV accidents not only at Fort Benning, but Army-wide, no one can afford to let their guard down for a single moment.

Everyone must continue to buckle themselves and their families and drive both defensively and soberly. Safety should also be remembered when hunting, boating or participating in sports. Furthermore, terrain walks should be conducted at job sites in search of unsafe conditions, as well as at home.

Everyone controls their own destiny with respect to safe living. Leaders can make policy, check, inspect, lecture and warn, but in the end the responsibility for safety lies solely with the individual.

Aids

The second defensive step in prevention of AIDS then, is individual change of behavior to reduce (preferably eliminate) high risk activities — namely, IV drug abuse and sexual contact with multiple or high risk partners.

At noon, Dec. 1, World AIDS Day, a moment of silence will be observed worldwide. Take this time to reflect upon the following. Have you changed your behavior to reduce your risks? Have you mae sure your loved ones are well informed about AIDS so they can reduce their own risks? Have you sown compassion to persons with AIDS and their families?

An effective retention program is not operated in a vacuum. The commander has access to several management resources that will help him make the program a success.

These resources include the organization's retention NCO, the NCO chain of influence, re-enlistment interviews, the commander's override program, the retain computer system, and bars to re-enlistment. I want to elaborate on several of these.

First, the retention NCO should be the key manager of the program for the commander. Each battalion-level or higher-level command has one assigned. Most are school trained and provide technical expertise to support the program.

They can also provide career counseling services.

The NCO chain of influence.

Next, senior NCOs are not the sole source of retention help. The entire NCO chain of influence can be very valuable to the commander's retention efforts.

How so? The answer relates to professionalism.

When your entire NCO chain reflects an attitude of professionalism that is encouraged and promoted by the commander, retention will benefit.

This attitude will permeate the entire organization. It will "rub off" on your soldiers, and be reflected in their confidence and desire to be all they can be. This will enhance the likelihood that they will make the decision to stay with the Army.

Third, is the Commander's Override Program. It allows the commander to take action in behalf of a good soldier who isn't getting the re-enlistment option he wants. This program is discussed in greater detail in a separate article within this issue of Officers Call.

Computer aids retention

Next, is the use of computers in retention. As Army modernization has changed weapon systems and equipment, so too has it helped us in the retention field.The computer has significantly enhanced the commander's ability to be responsive.

For instance, under the RETAIN computer system, work sheets of a soldier's qualifications are quickly printed up and available. Determining just what a soldier is qualified for under re-enlistment is now quick and simple.

Finally, bars to re-enlistment. With them comes the obvious question that since they are intended for problem soldiers, how do they help those who are thinking of re-enlistment?

The answer is simple. They serve as an "example". This program demonstrates to good soldiers that the Army is not interested in marginal performers.

We are not interested in the retention of every individual. We want to keep on only those soldiers who care, who want to be all they can be and who have performed in a highly professional manner.

I want to emphasize just how important retention is. We don't have a choice in the matter. We must keep quality within our Army.

Retention of quality soldiers today will significantly impact on the quality of NCO leadership in the ranks of tomorrow. Today, we must ensure the right soldiers are retained to ensure effective leadership in tomorrow's Army.

All officers need to contribute to the retention process whenever possible. For commanders, that need is critical. We must accept the challenge ahead and work as a team to ensure that our great Army is sustaining strong leadership and soldier quality. We will then be ready to fight and win when called upon.

Be all you can be!

By using the following procedure, soldiers on the Family Housing Waiting List can use this chart to estimate when they can expect quarters.

Locate your category of housing.

Note eligibility date located on the same line as your category.

Calculate the time difference between the eligibility date listed and your eligibility date. The difference is the approximate time you still have to wait for housing.

EXAMPLE: If the latest eligibility date of the person who last received housing in your category was May 15, 1988, and your date of eligibility is Sept. 15, 1988, you can expect housing in about four months. If you do not know your eligibility date, contact the Family Housing Office at building 309, 545-3107.

ROA will award 100 scholarships for 1989-90

Reserve Officers Association

One hundred college scholarships worth up to $500 each will be awarded for the 1989-90 academic year by the Reserve Officers Association (ROA) of the United States.

Eighty-five will be undergraduate scholarships to members or children or grandchildren of members of the ROA or ROA Ladies Clubs. Children under 21 of deceased but paid up members also are eligible.

The 15 graduate fellowships will be awarded to members of ROA.

Termed the Jenry J. Reilly Memorial Scholarship Program, the awards honor the late Army Reserve brigadier general who was ROA's first president, 1922-23.

This is the eighth year that the scholarships will be tendered and the fifth for graduate fellowships. The program began in 1982 with the presentation of 25 and continued last year with a total of 100.

Applications for the 1989-90 academic year are now available and may be obtained by writing ROA Scholarships, 1 Constitution Ave., N.E., Washington, D.C., 20002 or by calling 202-479-2200. Completed applications must be received by the committee no later than April 1, 1989.

Undergraduate applicants must be members of ROA or ROAL or their children or grandchildrens must be attending or accepted for full-time undergraduate studies at a regionally accredited college or university. Only ROA members are eligible for the graduate fellowships. Because of the minimum tuition fees, attendance at community colleges will not be considered.

Last year there were approximately 1,500 requests for applications and more than 500 were submitted for consideration. The scholastic aptitude test (SAT) scores of the winners were between 1,200 and 1530 and their high school grade point averages ranged from 3.68 to 4.0.

The scholarships are made possible by voluntary donations by ROA members to the endowment fund. Interest earned each year is applied to scholarships.

All applications are screened by a six-member committee who also select the winners.

These committee members include retired Army Reserve Lieutenant Colonel John J. Hart, retired administrator with the Baltimore County Public School System; retired Marine Corps Reserve Colonel Catherine Y. Telford, retired educator at Carlsbad, Calif., United States District; Air Force Reserve Lieutenant Colonel Doris Franklin, nurse clinician, Baltimore, Md.; Retired Army Colonel James B. Price Jr., retired executive, Studio City, Calif.; Coast Guard Reserve Captain Dennis A. Lupher, professor of economics, Ohio U., Athens, and Air Force Reserve Lieutenant Colonel Richard A. Halapin, professor at Indiana U. of Pennsylvania, Indiana, Penn.

Washington-based ROA was founded in 1922 at the suggestion of General of the Armies, John J. Pershing. Its Congressional charter calls for it to support an adequate national security. The 125,000 membership includes officers of all branches of service, reserve and regular.

THE PRESIDENT DOESN'T TAKE AN OATH TO DEFEND THE AMERICAN FLAG OR THE STATUE OF LIBERTY.

The President takes an oath to defend something even more important than a majestic symbol of our country.

The President takes an oath to defend the Constitution of the United States. A document that has been described as the greatest leap forward for freedom in human history. A document that is the foundation of our country. And the means by which we achieve the rule of law and protect our freedom.

As we commemorate the Bicentennial of the Constitution, there is no better way for you as an American to reaffirm the principles for which our country stands than to learn more about the United States Constitution.

Melanie Czapla (l), Sidney Cooley and Donnie Schocklee enjoy the Junior Great Books party.

Loyd School holds "Great Books Party"

By Beth Middlemiss
Fort Benning Schools

Books and children were the reason for the party at Loyd School recently. Top readers from third through fifth grades were invited to this "Great Books Party" to celebrate their nomination to participate in the enrichment program called Junior Great Books.

Parents were invited to the party, too. Since parent involvement is a key element in the success of the program for the child, parents were there to join the celebration and to hear how the program works.

Each year about this time the Junior Great Books program begins in third through eighth grades in the Fort Benning Schools. Junior Great Books enriches the language arts program by providing opportunities for the Great Books students to read, think, speak, and listen as others discuss traditional literature classics. It is a time for questioning and sharing opinions with others.

In order to be Great Books leaders, teachers and administrators were required to participate in a two-day, hands-on in-service training course conducted for Fort Benning Schools by the Great Books Foundation.

At Loyd School the program began at the party with a cake decorated with the names of the Great Books students and with "I love Great Books" T-shirts for participants.

At other Fort Benning schools the Junior Great Books program may begin differently, but the process will be the same. Teachers and students will come together weekly to discuss what they have read and to discuss discuss together the ideas found within the stories.

Tips may help federal employee hopefuls

Army News service

Changes to Army procedures that affect the way family members get considered and hired for federal jobs have opened up opportunities during the past few years.

Army personnel officials point out, however, that there are often fewer jobs than applicants. A job cannot be guaranteed to every family member who wants one. This is especially true today because of congressional budget cuts and hiring freezes.

Your job search, however, will be easier if you understand the new procedures and remember the following tips:

Keep good records of previous employment, education, training, special achievements and volunteer work.

Be prepared to document complete information from your background and experience when applying for a job.

When moving, start your job search as soon as you know your new location.

Find out about the job market and how to apply for an opening before you move.Family-member employment-assistance personnel at your local Army Community Service office can help.

Follow all application instructions. Submit a complete, neat application package by the closing date of a vacancy announcement.

Follow up on each application or interview. If not selected, analyze your weaknesses and correct them.

Be available for interviews and to start a job. To apply for a job means you're ready to work.

Representatives in your civilian personnel office or ACS center can explain the provisions of employment programs geared to Army family members. Don't miss out by being misinformed. Arm yourself with this information, and become a strong competitor.

Home-based businesses give flexibility

Army News Service

By the year 2,000, one-half of all self-employed workers will be women, many of them in home-based businesses.

Researchers have found that working from the home affords a number of advantages. These include degrees of flexibility, control and portability that make this type of employment attractive to many, especially to the frequently transferred Army spouse.

Previously, so long as an Army spouse lived in private housing, she or he could feel free to operate a home-based business. But persons living in military housing were prohibited by legislation from doing the same.

Thanks to legislation passed in 1986, the situation has changed. It permits and encourages home-based businesses in military housing.

Military-family officials have this advice for prospective home-grown entrepreneurs:

Don't overlook this opportunity to build a career that may be as portable as your household goods and as successful as the market and your imagination will allow.

To help you get started, the Department of Defense Office of Family Policy and Support offers a 'how to' brochure. For a free copy, write to the Military Family Resource Center, Office of Family Policy and Support, 4015 Wilson Blvd., Suite 903, Arlington, VA 22203-5190.

Army gives families meals at low cost

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Sharing of Thanksgiving and Christmas dinner with family members in military treatment dining facilities has been a long standing Army tradition.

Family members may purchase the Thanksgiving and Christmas dinners at the food cost-only rate. The requirement to pay a holiday meal surcharge is waived for family members.

Family members refers to dependent children and spouses of military members. Exemption is not applicable to officers or guests of military members.

U.S. Customs continues drug fight

By Mary A. Peterson
AFIS

Many government agencies spend enormous amounts of manpower and money inspecting international mail and cargo, including parcels shipped with overseas military addresses, to catch illegal drugs, pornography and counterfeit trademark merchandise. An equally serious catch: military material.

With the help of trained dogs, X-ray machines, video players and "sniffing" machines that determine chemical profiles, U.S. Customs Service inspectors have played a part in the drug war. They have seized more than 1,000 pounds of marijuana and opium sent from overseas in personal mail in the first eight months of 1988, said Steve Knox of the U.S. Customs Service in Washington, D.C. No figures were available on how much has been confiscated at international airports.

Pat Solan, customs inspector supervisor at Washington's Dulles International Airport, said the disguises are getting more sophisticated.

"It used to be the insides of portable radios were taken out, then stuffed with drugs, leaving the batteries. Now the smugglers have gotten smart and hollow out enough of the radio so that it still plays," Solan said.

De Filippo added that it's not uncommon for inspectors to find cocaine or marijuana in stick deodorant tubes and toothpaste pumps or in hollowed-out gas-filled candles. "Fake shaving cream cans have taken a new twist," he said. "They're adapted so they dispense a small amount of cream while containing a significant amount of drugs."

What customs inspectors find covers all subjects. Mailed pornographic materials now include videotapes, and inspectors consider it a growing problem. "Often we can tell just by the title," Solan said. But when they can't, they screen the cassettes. Penalties for attempting to ship a pornographic tape into the United States, especially in commercial quantities such as shipment for video clubs, range from tape seizure to prosecution.

"We have intercepted government weapons in the mail," De Filippo said. Packages opened have contained machine guns, claymore mines, ammunition, military technical manuals and military supplies. "We're concerned that government items are being shipped through military post offices to individuals," he said.

De Filippo said that when military items are discovered, the Customs Service consults with DoD or the individual service and, depending on the seriousness, turns control over to that agency.

Then, according to Air Force Special Agent J. W. Harris, Office of Special Investigations at Bolling Air Force Base, D.C., the Defense Department, or in his case, the Air Force, verifies that it owns the material.

"We trace the material back to inventory to confirm it was once under Air Force control," Harris said. "If it is ours, we do a background check on the sender—identify his unit and what his job is to see if he normally has access to the item. Then we contact the party to whom the item is addressed.

"Let's say the package is sent to the parents," Harris said. "We would ask them to release the package to us, and they do; then interview the sender to find out his intent and purposes. We then let him know that mailing the material was a violation of whatever (postal regulations, customs law or military regulations).

COURT REPORT

Staff Judge Advocate's Office

On Nov. 8, 1988, Sergeant Jesus Sauceda, C Company, 4th Battalion, 30th Infantry, 1st Infantry Training Brigade, plead guilty before a Special Court-Martial empowered to adjudge a Bad Conduct Discharge. He was charged with stealing $40 and destroying six security locks of a value of less than $100.

The evidence showed that on Aug. 15, 1988, Sgt. Sauceda, a Drill Sergeant, entered building 3245, located on Sand Hill, proceeded to an area where trainees maintained personal wall lockers, and using a pair of pliers broke open six locks securing the lockers. While breaking open the locks, he wore a green, wool glove liner on his left hand. Sgt. Sauceda went through the personal effects contained in the lockers and stole $40 in currency from the wallet of one of the trainees.

The Military Judge, Col. Richard P. Scheff, found Sgt. Sauceda guilty of all charges and specifications, and he sentenced him to a bad conduct discharge, five months confinement, forfeiture of $300 per month for five months and reduction to E-1.

On Nov. 14, Pvt. 1 Anthony Q. Powell, Company C, 1st Battalion (Airborne), 507th Parachute Infantry Regiment, plead guilty before a special court-martial empowered to adjudge a bad conduct discharge. He was charged with assaulting two soldiers on separate occasions and failing to report for his duties as floor guard.

The evidence showed that on Aug. 3, Powell struck a soldier in the face with his fist during an argument. On Aug. 7, Powell assaulted another soldier. This soldier required two stitches for an injury he incurred from the assault.

The military judge, Col. Richard P. Scheff, found Powell guilty of all charges, and sentenced him to a bad conduct discharge, three months confinement and forfeiture of $447 per month for three months.

ASK THE JUDGE

By William F. Sutton Jr.
Staff Judge Advocate's Office

Q— After sending a modest donation to my favorite charity, I started receiving donation requests from dozens of organizations. Some of these have been duplicate and multiple requests. Why do I keep receiving these requests and how can I stop them from coming to my home?

A — When you contribute to a charity or other nonprofit organization, your name is added to a "donor" list. You then become valuable to the charity not only because of your financial support, but also because of the charity's ability to exchange or rent your name to other nonprofit organizations interested in sending their appeals to known contributors. Moreover, the charity may rent or exchange your name with for-profit entities.

When you give to a charity that you did not support before, you increase your chances of receiving mailings from other organizations.

Charities consider established donors as the best source for future contributions, and these names will continue to be solicited. Fund raisers report that continuous appeals to proven donors resulted in more contributions. The same organization may solicit your support several times during the same year.

It is unlikely that you can have your name removed from all mailing lists. Even if you succeed in removing your name from most of these lists, new lists are being created every day. However, if you want to cut down on the amount of fund raising mail you are receiving, here are some tips.

- Decide which charities you want to support and discard appeals from the others. More focused giving will have a greater impact on the problem the charity is trying to solve and might eliminate your name from some lists.
- If more focused giving doesn't reduce your mail, write directly to the organizations soliciting you to ask that your name be removed from their mailing list. If you want to support an organization and receive their solicitations, ask that your name be removed from any list that is exchanged or rented.
- If you are writing to an organization to eliminate duplicate mailings, send all the labels addressed to you showing all of your name variations.

If any of these steps do not work, consider writing the Direct Marketing Association (DMA) at 6 East 43rd Street, New York, N.Y. 10017. The DMA operates a "Mail Preference Service," which, on request, will delete your name from the mailing lists of certain direct mail marketing firms. If you decide to write to DMA, specify whether you want your name deleted from commercial mailing lists, nonprofit organization lists, or both.

PDA reenlistment still one of most popular

By Ken Holder
army News Service

One of the most popular re-enlistment options, the present duty assignment (PDA) commonly known as the current station stabilization, provides soldiers with the opportunity to stay with a unit they like and the Army with a chance to save precious PCS dollars.

"Soldiers re-enlist for present duty assignment because they like the leadership in the unit, they like where they're at geographically or they have their family settled in the area," explained Master Sgt. Michael Dodd, Total Army Career Counselor for the 3rd Infantry at Fort Myer, Va. "It could be a combination of all of these elements, but the main thing you need to remember is that the Army and the soldier benefits from keeping a high caliber soldier in a place where he or she wants to be."

The old logic of, 'if you don't like it here re-enlist and go somewhere else' doesn't appeal to today's soldiers, explained Dodd. While yesterday's NCOs often moved to see the world, todays NCOs stay on station longer and provide institutional knowledge that heretofore was only provided by the civilian workforce.

"Not that long ago, in the days of abundant PCS money, not as many soldiers really thought about staying in their current job," said Sgt. Maj. Shelby A. Meares, senior rentention NCO in the Office of the Deputy Chief of Staff for Personnel. Today's soldier wants to stay with a proven group of winners. He wants to stay with people that are making good things happen. According to Meares, smart non-commissioned officers and officers encourage soldiers to stay in place because they get the benefit of experience and they know they can take care of the soldier because they know his needs.

Meares feels that there is no greater compliment to an NCO or officer than to have a soldier want to stay in the unit. By the same token, said Meares, what better compliment for a soldier than to have the chain-of-command ask him to stay with the team because the team needs him.

According to research conducted for the DCSPER, the longer the Army can keep high quality soldiers together the better the readiness, maintenance, and morale of the soldiers become.

"It's the top units in the Army that have some of the highest PDA re-enlistments," Meares said.

Gettysburg remembered

PM Editorial Services

It was 125 years ago, on Nov. 19, 1863, that President Abraham Lincoln delivered perhaps the most famous speech in American history. The occasion was the dedication of a national cemetery on 17 acres of land near Gettysburg, Pa., where 43,000 men had been killed or wounded in a three-day battle four months earlier.

Newspapers of the day devoted most of their coverage of the ceremony to a two-hour speech given by a noted orator, Edward Everett. But it was the two-minute address by Abraham Lincoln that became famous throughout the world.

"Four score and seven years ago, our fathers brought forth on this continent a new nation, conceived in liberty, and dedicated to the proposition that all men are created equal," began the president.

He concluded by saying that the Civil War would determine whether the American experiment in democracy — "government of the people, by the people, and for the people" — would survive.

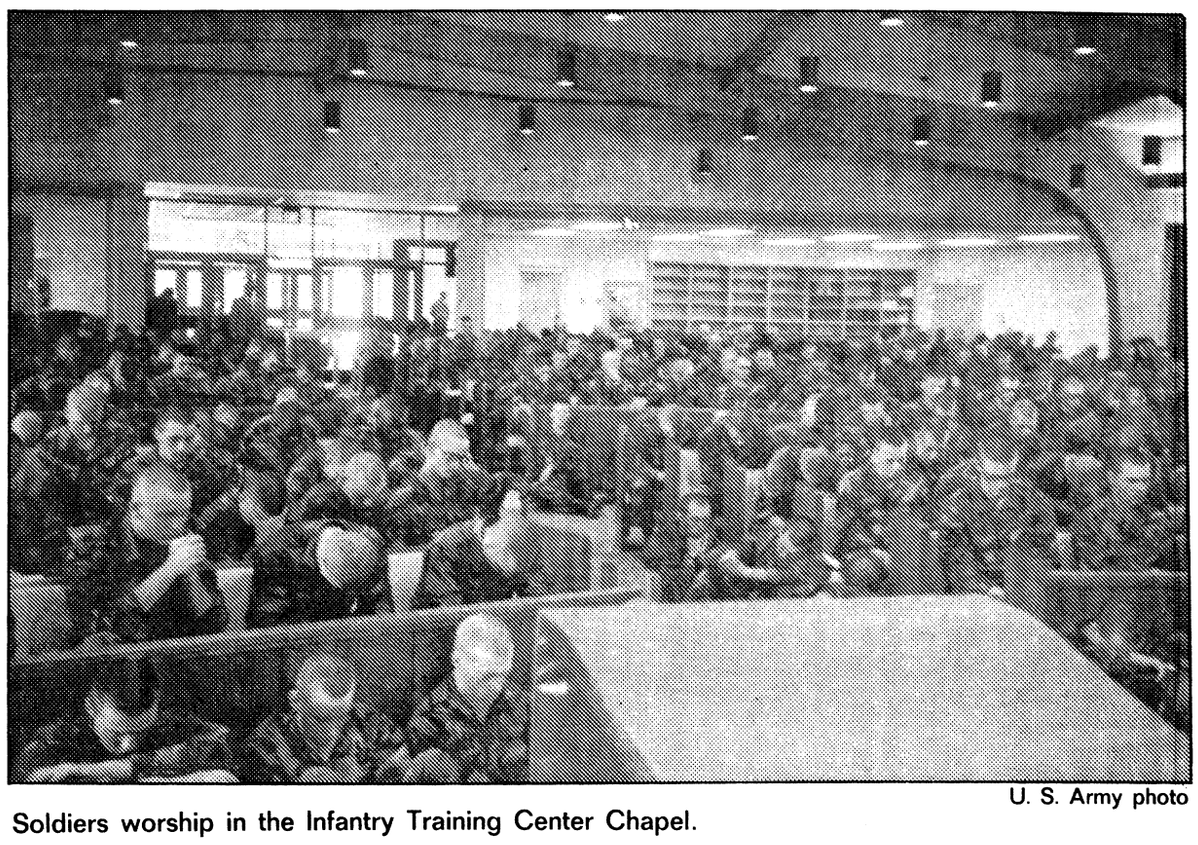
ITC chaplains help OSUT soldiers cope during trying times

By Jo Ann Stamey
USAIC Chaplain's Office

Each year over 28,000 soldiers come through the only Infantry training center in the Army — the U.S. Army Infantry Training Center here at Fort Benning. Soldiers come from every state, every socio-economic background in our society — many leaving home for the first time in their life. The average age is 19.8 years. There is a tremendous range of ability to adapt and cope with the physical and mental stress that comes with learning the skills of an Infantry man.



Most will adapt, but a large number will have great difficulty because of the sudden responsibility of having to make everyday life decisions they hadn't done before. From day one, their world changes from being awakened at 4:30 a.m. and being under direct supervision until put to bed at 9 p.m. There is no more television, no more radio — only orders and directions of drill sergeants, first sergeants, and company commanders to start the 13-week developmental process. Waking up to physical training six days a week, having 20-30 minutes to eat meals, and having a training day totally structured for 13 weeks is a big adjustment for an experienced military person, much less a young man who has left his family — wife, children, friends, and familiar surroundings. Adjustment is traumatic. Colonel Victor E. Stamey, Commander of the 2d Infantry Training Brigade, states, "There is no place in the U.S. Army — short of combat — that a chaplain is more valuable to the soldier."

A One-Station Unit Training (OSUT) battalion has 1200 soldiers in five companies. This is where the chaplain enters the picture and begins to do the wonderful things they do every day, every night the whole year in the Infantry Training Center (ITC). Upon entering the battalion, the chaplains hold an orientation session, and the soldiers are given the opportunity to see the chaplain. There can be as many as 100-200 soldiers requesting counseling! A time is set up, and chaplains from the other battalions in the brigade are pulled together for mass counseling. This is an opportunity for the chaplains to identify major problems and make recommendations to the company commander to refer the soldier to Army Community Service, Army Emergency Relief, or other helping agencies.

The ITC is very lucky in that it has an extremely competent, professional, enthusiastic and diverse group of chaplains. During the orientation session, to ensure he gets the trainees full attention, Chaplain J.D. Bender comes out on the stage in full battle gear and "entertains" the troops. When talking to soldiers at the end of their 13 weeks, and he asks, "What do you recall about your first week in training?" Many have smiled and said, "The chaplain at the orientation." Chaplain Bender is a unique chaplain in that he is a former infantry soldier, was a gunner on a Cobra, is airborne-qualified, and attended Air Assault and Jungle Expert School. Says Bender, "I have done all of these things so I can be with them wherever they go."

Army chaplains do more than conduct worship services on Sunday. They are with the soldiers and cadre all day and night, seven days a week — in garrison and in the field. When a lunch or rest break occurs, a chaplain is there talking to the soldiers, listening, encouraging and motivating. The chaplains participate in five-mile runs, 12-mile road marches, five-day FTXs, and are on the ranges — in good weather and bad. They are with the soldiers during their mid-cycle and end-of-cycle tests. Said Chaplain Andy Bullard, "A chaplain has to advertise himself to gain the confidence of the soldier and be ble to give encouragement." You find chaplains talking and listening to soldiers on a bunk in the barracks, on the side of a road, on the rifle range, on a hill in the woods, or at the hospital when they're ill. It is this visibility and sharing of hardship that gives the chaplain credibility with the soldiers. The chaplain can talk to the soldier because he wears a cross or tablet: He is a leader and represents authority, but he is also a confidant of the soldier. It is this universal understanding of soldiers that allows chaplains to be so effective. Chap. (Maj.) Jim Langford, 1st ITB Chaplain, states, "Being in the Training Center has been the peak of my ministry. No where else do you have the attendance or the congregation listening as intently to what you say. No where else will I have the impact that I've had in the training environment."

The chaplains provide worship services on Sunday, conduct Bible studies, organize choirs (some visitnursing homes and churches in Columbus), conduct Prayer Breakfasts, and provide soldiers with special religious activities and entertainment. The chaplains spend many hours counseling the trainee. Counseling is continuously done throughout the 13-week training, but the first three weeks are the peak times for counseling because of the adjustment period.

Soldiers worship in the Infantry Training Center Chapel.

The majority of the time is spent with trainees, but the chaplains also minister to the cadre. It is important that the chaplains build a good working relationship with the drill sergeants, to let them know he is there as a friend and pastor. For the cadre, the stress is not the same as a trainee, but it is difficult because of the long hours, shortage of resources, and tremendous amount of instruction to be presented in a short period of time. The drill sergeant is there before the trainee is awakened and after the trainee has gone to bed. Because of the long hours, there is limited time with families. The chaplains provide support to the cadre as well as their family members in this stressful environment.

The chaplain serves as a professional staff officer, but more importantly, he is a confidant and adviser to the commander on morale, morals, and religion. There are few people that a commander can talk to with absolute frankness and honesty about his concerns and decisions. The chaplain is the person that the commander turns to for that ear and for words of either encouragement or for confirmation about a decision. The chaplains are key and essential people to the trainees, cadre, and commanders.

There is no way to quantify all the good the chaplains do. They are "pro-active" — looking for problem areas and solving them before a tragedy occurs. Chaplains have an absolute essential role in the health of the total command. Because he has a special sense of the overall effectiveness or ineffectiveness within the command, he is a confidant and trusted adviser on attitudes, concerns, and expectations within the unit.

"The training base is a great place for chaplains to work and minister," says Chaplain (Maj.) Don Taylor, 2d ITB Chaplain. "Outside of combat, this is the most effective place in the Army. We have an opportunity to change lives and give direction, an opportunity to be with soldiers that are unchurched and the opportunity to teach, preach, and help them respond to the gospel."

29th Infantrymen compete in Sports Day

Ann M. McDonald

CWO2 Mya Issac (r) carries Capt. James Bienkemper while 2nd Lt. John Chapman brings up the rear in the litter carry.

By Ann McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

From dawn until dusk three-man teams of officers of the 29th Infantry Regiment did everything in their power to complete a grueling series of events designed to determine who would win the units "stud award."

They did this at the second annual Maj. Gen. Willard Latham Officer Sports Day which was conducted last week.

According to Regimental Commander, Col. John Fuller, the day was designed to build cohesion and esprit among the officers of the regiment.

"The officers in this unit don't have a chance to get together very often because of the nature of their mission," Fuller said. "This event allows them to get to know each other better and do some physical training at the same time."

The teams were determined by age and rank so that each had a fair chance.

Twenty teams gathered at 5 a.m. to tackle the first event which was a 10-point land navigation course which was to be completed in two hours. Immediately following the navigation course was a five-mile road march.

After the road march the men went to Lippett Field to compete in a round- robin consisting of a hand grenade throw, rope climb, mental event (a task that required competitors to figure out a solution before physically doing the task), litter carry, sit-ups and push-ups.

The competition was closed out with a two-mile run and a canoe race.

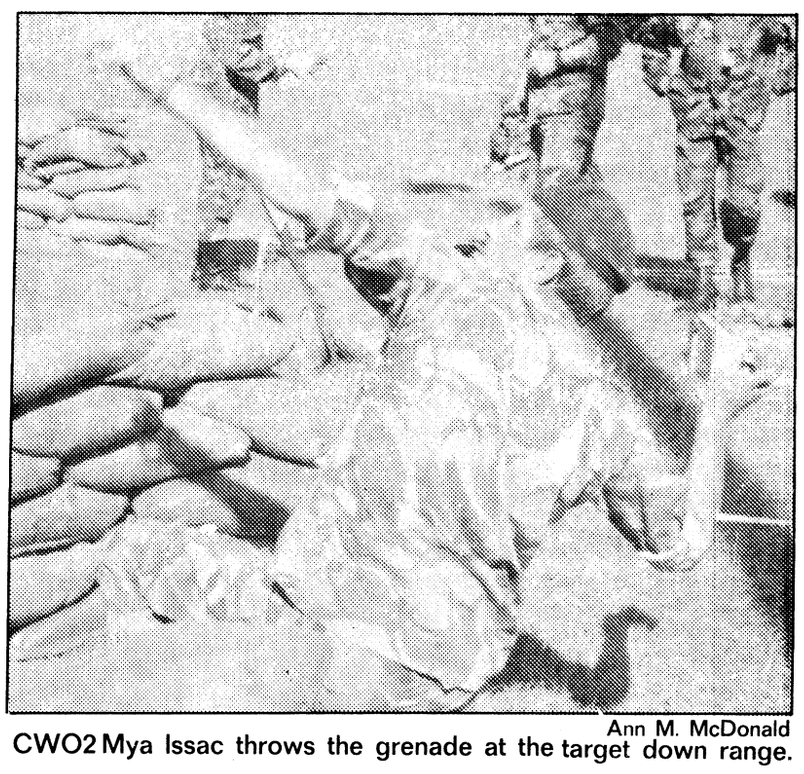
Fuller said that each of the events by themselves are pretty easy but pairing them all together makes it pretty difficult.

"The winning team really deserves the stud award," Fuller said.

The winning teamfor this year is Capt.'s Jake Kelly and Thomas Vanderbeck and 1st Lt. Leon Daniels.

Vanderbeck said that his team was successful because each man put a total effort into the events.

"Of course each of us had our strong points," Vanderbeck said. "I fared well in the mental event, while Lt. Daniels pulled us through on the push-ups.



"Capt. Kelly was good all around, so he filled in the gaps," he added.

Vanderbeck said that one event that really surprised him was the canoe race.

"We thought the canoe race would be easy," he said. "But once we got out on the water, it took us a while to get a good rhythm going."

Vanderbeck said although they won the stud award he didn't feel that studly. "The next day my legs felt like they were loaded down with concrete."

He added that everyone else probably felt the same way.

Benning teams participate in Army's Ten-Miler

By Ann McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

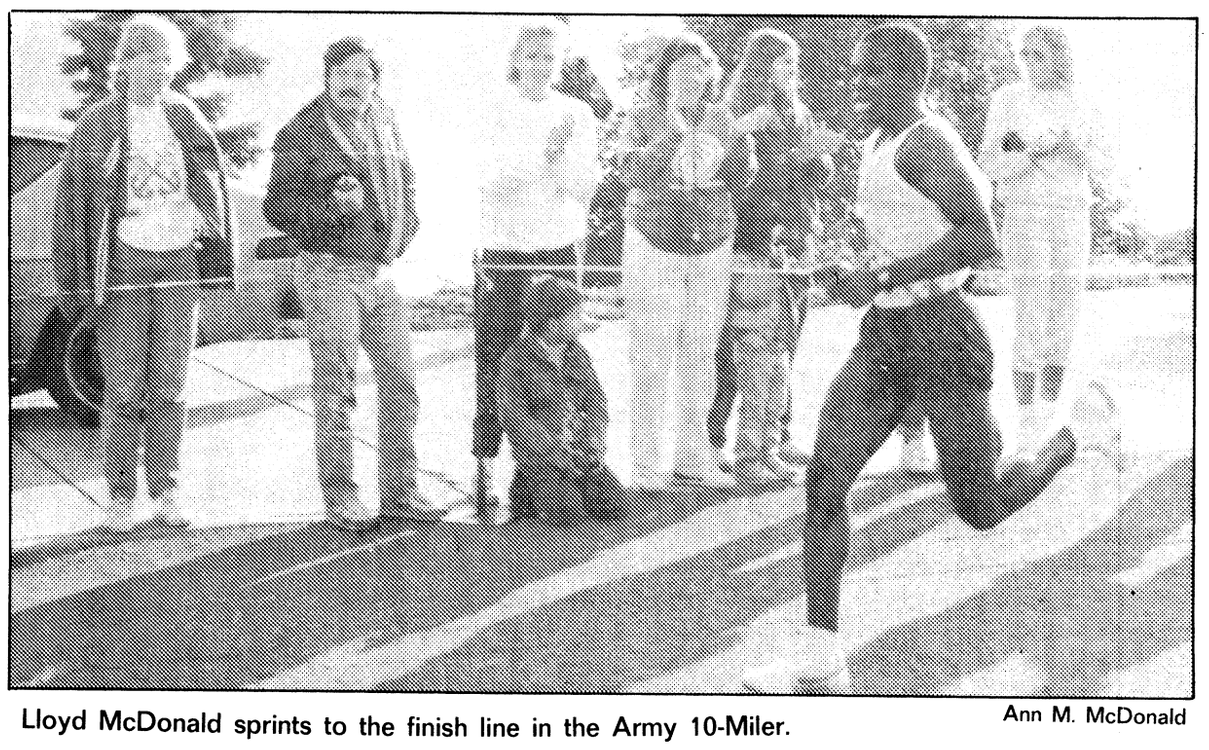
Although they didn't come back with any hardware, the Fort Benning Men's and Women's teams fared well in the active duty team competition in the Army Ten-miler recently conducted in Washington, D.C.

The womens team placed fourth in a field of 16 and the mens team placed seventh in a field of 85 teams.

This is the first time a women's running team was put together on Fort Benning. Team members were: Lise Cote, Jo Gabbard, Ann McDonald, Karen Majeske, Beryl Robertson and Kathy Ferguson.

Lloyd McDonald, Douglas Davis, James Evans, James Nails, Bradley Sievers and Jeffrey Huff comprised the men's team.

"Both teams were strong," McDonald said. "I really thought the women had a trophy, but they lost by seconds."



McDonald added that the teams now have some experience and will know how to train for another race and how to build a better team.

"I hope that more women on Fort Benning will show interest in long distance running when they see what we were able to do," Lise Cote said. "If they do, our team can only get better; and, we can go out and win the race next year."

The top ten finishers in the race are:

Women:
1. Screaming Eagles, Fort Campbell, Ky. (4:43:57)
2. Blackjack, Fort Bragg, N. C. (4:49:10)
3. 82nd Abn. Div., Fort Bragg, N. C. (4:50:25)

Conservation reduces monthly fuel costs

By Becky Ray
Energy Branch

What costs over $20 million a year, yet is often misused, wasted and taken for granted? The answer is Fort Benning's energy supply.

When most people think of utility bills, they think in terms of two or three figures per month. For Fort Benning's energy managers, a month's utilities bills can mean totals in excess of one and a half million dollars. In July of 1988, for example, Fort Benning paid $1,616,928 for utilities. The cost of providing electricity, natural gas, heating fuels and water to the post makes up a substantial part of the post's budget. These costs are influenced by every person living and working on Fort Benning.

Good conservation habits and practical energy management can make a surprising difference in the amount of energy that we consume in buildings, even over a short period of time. This has been proven in many other industrial countries where energy consumption per unit produced is only half that in the United States. In those countries, such as West Germany, Italy and Japan, energy conservation is stressed much more than in the U. S., and the quality of life remains high.

Although the high cost of energy to Fort Benning should be enough to convince everyone to be conservative in their use of energy, there are also a number of other important reasons:

★ Oil imports account for one-third of the national trade deficit, which, according to some experts, could reach as high as $100 billion by the year 2000 if left uncontrolled. Beyond voluntary conservation efforts, recommendations have been made to raise fuel economy standards for cars and trucks above those already mandated, and impose new federal fuel taxes of 30-50 cents a gallon for gasoline and diesel fuel.

★ The national dependence on imported oil make the United States vulnerable to Middle Eastern suppliers. Because much of the oil used in America comes from OPEC (Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries) nations, our economy and our national security depends o=upon a steady oil supply from politically unstable areas. Problems can arise in shipping, as those recently experienced in the Persian Gulf, or through uncontrolled production, which results in wide fluctuations in oil prices. Overproduction can result in an oil glut, causing low prices and increased dependence on imported oil. Underproduction could cause oil shortages in the U. S., such as those in the early 1970's, which severely impacted on our lifestyles and the American economy.

★ At the same time that oil imports to the U. S. are increasing, domestic oil production is declining. This means that U. S. dependence on OPEC imports is increasing, with revenues going to the Middle East, while many areas in the U. S. that were only thriving oil producers (such as Texas and Alaska) are now in economic recessions.

★ Fossil fuel supplies cannot be replaced. The world's proven oil reserves are expected to last only another twenty years, and the natural gas supply will only last about thirty more years at present rates of consumption. Technology for alternative fuels remains underdeveloped. In a country which depends heavily on oil products for transportation of food and other consumer goods, lack of fuel could have disastrous effects on the economy, national defense and lifestyles.

★ Technology for renewable forms of energy, such as solar-generated electricity, have not been developed sufficiently to provide for the growing demand for electricity. Nuclear power is still a controversial source of energy because the public lacks confidence in nuclear plant safety. Few new nuclear facilities are being brought on line or being constructed, partially due to pressure by environmental organizations and local organizations opposed to nuclear facilities operating in their areas.

★ Energy costs for consumer goods in the U. S. are twice as high as in many other countries, making U. S. products more expensive and less competitive in trade. Energy for operating production facilities, and for transportation are overhead for producers and must be recouped in purchase prices for consumer goods.

★ The combustion of fossil fuels have been linked to the "greenhouse effect," or global warming trend. Although the trend was widely debated in the scientific arena, the consensus now seems to be that the earth's temperature is rising due to pollution caused by the burning of fossil fuels, especially those used in transportation and power generation. Many scientists believe that if the trend continues unchecked, the next decade will bring longer, hotter summers which could cause agricultural areas to become parched and barren, expansion of the equatorial deserts and polar melting, resulting in coastal flooding.

★ Acid rain has been shown to be caused by sulfur dioxide and nitrogen oxides – products emitted from electrical plants when coal is burned. Acid rain has been charged with killing trees, polluting lakes and poisoning fish and waterfowl. To solve the problem, it is possible to retrofit coal-burning plants with "scrubbers" to decrease levels of the harmful chemicals. However, this solution is expensive and these costs would undoubtedly be passed to the consumer through rate increases.

★ Surveys conducted by the League of Women Voters show that an overwhelming majority of authorities in the energy field believe that the U. S. will experience a major energy shortage in the 1990's. Demand for all forms of energy is rising as the concern for conservation, so strong in the early 1970's wears off. Last summer, for example, electrical consumption records were set all over the country. Many parts of the country experienced brownouts because electrical plants could not keep up with demand. Soon, supply may not be able to keep up with the growing demand, and consumers may become less concerned with the cost of energy than its availability.

★ The Department of Defense spent $1.5 billion for electricity along (not including natural gas and oil) in 1986, and the Energy Programs office has estimated that at least 10 percent of that was energy waste. That equates to $150,000,000 in tax dollars wasted every year.

When put into the whole perspective of national security and economic, environmental and ethical issues, we should be much more concerned about our energy resources. We've forgotten all too quickly the lessons learned in the gas lines of 1974. It's easy for us to be complacent in these days of seemingly plentiful energy, but complacency is a position we should consider risky.

Conferees discuss BNCOC curriculum

By Ann McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

Representatives from every Infantry Basic Noncommissioned Officer Academy in the Army gathered at Fort Benning last week to review their infantry programs of instruction and revise course curriculum.

According to MSG John Franklin of the Directorate of Training and Doctrine, instructors dealt primarily with three issues.

The length of BNCOC, itself, ranked high among the topics of discussion. Franklin said that the academies in the field have determined that more time is needed to properly train NCO's and that is why they want to extend from five to seven weeks.

One task that will be added in the extra time is verification of a soldier's skills at the beginning of the course. Representatives said that knowing a soldier's weaknesses from the start will allow instructors to key on specific weak skills and correct them during training.

The revision also added a weapons week to the course's curriculum. During this week, soldiers will be trained on every weapon used in the infantry squad. As a minimum, soldiers will be taught the M-16, 9-mm Baretta, .45-caliber Colt, M-60, Squad Automatic Weapon, .50-caliber machine gun and the Dragon.

Testing of soldiers to actually determine if they were MOS-certified rounded out the top issues of the conference.

"Every student attending BNCOC should prove that they have a grasp on the skills taught before they go back to their units," Franklin said.

Franklin noted that representatives of the academies in the field made suggestions for the topics to be discussed.

"This conference is for those people at the schools," he said. "We want their ideas because they are the only ones who know the true problems."

Franklin said Fort Benning is involved because this is the headquarters for the infantry proponents, and Fort Benning is responsible for establishing common standards.,"

"Each of the individual academies is responsible for maintaining those standards," Franklin added. "But, they may add things that are unique to their locations."

Representatives from 16 NCO academies attended the week-long course. Stateside posts included Forts Benning, Ord, Knox, Hood, Riley, Bragg, Carson, Polk, Lewis, Campbell and Stewart.

The National Guard NCOA at Little Rock, Ark., completed the stateside academies.

Overseas NCOAs came from Germany, Panama, Alaska and Hawaii.

Representatives from Forts Bliss, Leavenworth and Sill also attended. Fort Hood representative, SFC Rick Rawlins, said this is the second conference, and he thinks the conference is a tremendous help.

"It allows us to share ideas across the board and enables us to improve the level of training." he said.

Shanklin leads 1/50th Bn in win over 197th

By George Mingee
197th Infantry Brigade

Behind the power running of Curtis Shanklin, 1st Battalion, 50th Infantry, beat Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 197th Infantry Brigade, 14-6 in the third Round of the Post Flag Football Championship.

With its offensive and defensive linemen displaying awesome power and quickness, the men of the 50th Infantry controlled the game from the start. Immediately after holding HHC to four offensive downs, Shanklin of the 50th Inf. rumbled in for a touchdown on the very first offensive play by his team.

HHC's Hubert Steptoe took the ensuing kickoff and ran up field to give his team good field position. Unable to move the ball further down field, HHC punted the ball away. Starting on their 20 yard line, the 50th Inf. moved progressively up field until HHC's defense stiffened, led by Darren Sloan's third down sack of the quarterback.

Upon receiving the ball back, HHC was able to move downfield with some success, until Astor Grate of the 50th Inf. snuffed the drive by sacking the quarterback, ending the first half.

Starting the second half, the 50th Inf., received the ball and ran to the 40-yard line. On their next play HB Shanklin struck again with another touchdown run, giving his team a 12-0 lead. The following two-point conversion attempt was good, which increased the 50th Inf. lead 14-0.

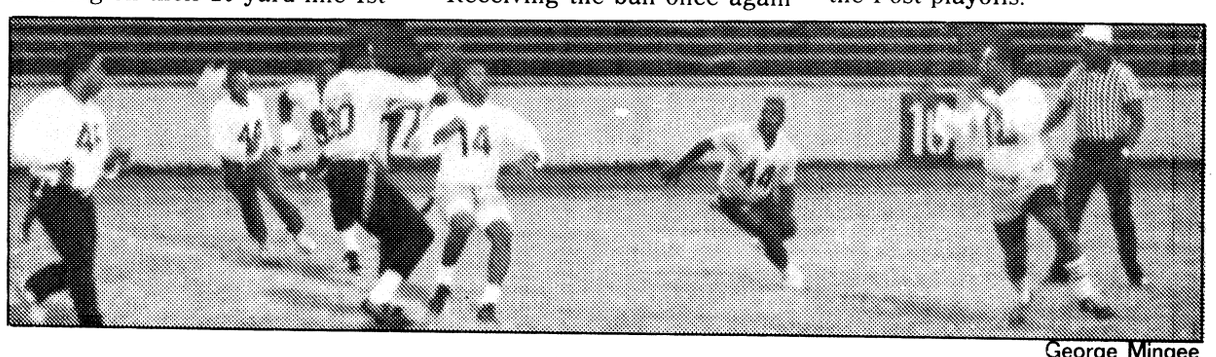
On the very next possession, HHC mounted its most serious threat of the ballgame as it ran and passed down the field. HHC finally scored when QB Charles Johnson faked an option and kept the ball for a touchdown.

As the game neared the two-minute warning of regulation time, the 50th Inf. appeared to be in control until HHC's Tracey Callahan stole an ill-advised pass. HHC desperately mixed plays to come up with a touchdown; however, the 50th Inf. held up in the tense situation by holding HHC to four game-ending downs.

By winning the game 14-6, the 50th Inf. boosted its overall record to 18-1 and qualified for the fourth round of the Post championship.

1st Bn, 50th Inf. kicked off. Receiving the ball, HHC moved the down field only to punt four downs later. Returning the ball to the 30-yard line 1st Bn, 50th Inf., Curtis Shanklin on the very first play ran the ball in for a touchdown giving his team an early 6-0 lead.

HHC's Hubert Steptoe took the kick-off and ran up field to give HHC good field position. Unable to move the ball farther down-field HHC punted the ball away. Starting on their 20 yard line 1st Bn, 50th Inf., moved up field only to be sacked on third down by Darren Sloan of HHC forcing the punt.



Revenging the sack for 1st Bn, 50th Inf., was Astor Grate as he dumped HHC's QB Charles Johnson on fourth down, ending the first half.

Starting the second half, 1st Bn, 50th Inf., received the ball and ran to the 40-yard line. On their next play, HB Curtis Shanklin struck again with another touchdown giving his team a 12-0 lead. Making good the two-point conversion, 1st Bn, 50th Inf., now led 14-0.

Receiving the ball once again HHC's QB Charles Johnson optioned and kept the ball for a touchdown, to give HHC six points and a score of 14-6.

Near the two-minute warning, 1st Bn, 50th Inf., rushed to pass and threw an interception to HHC's Tracey Callahan. HHC took possession of the ball only to fail on a fourth down conversion and turned the ball over once again to 1st Bn, 50th Inf., as time expired in the game.

1st Bn, 50th Inf., came out victorious over HHC with a final score of 14-6, boosting their overall record to 18-1 and pushing them farther up the ladder in the Post playoffs.

HHC's quarterback, Charles Johnson, passes to halfback, Rick Oliver, for a gain of 20 yards.

Faith School schedules race

The tenth annual Faith School Race is just a few days away. Families and individual runners should mark their calendars for the race date, Saturday, Dec. 3.

The race is sponsored by the Don C. Faith Middle School physical education department. Students, parents, teachers and members of the Fort Benning and surrounding communities are invited to participate. Entire families can participate in the race if they so desire.

Each year 700-1,100 runners participate in the race, which began ten years ago as an outgrowth of the Faith physical education program and the Faith Jogging Club.

All proceeds from the race go to the Faith physical education program to provide additional equipment and incentive awards for students.

The race is made up of three different races that begin and end at Don C. Faith Middle School at 1375 Ingersoll Street. The one-mile race for boys and girls 14 years old and under begins at 8:45 a.m.; the two-mile race begins at 9:15 a.m.; and the five-mile race begins at 9:45 a.m. The two-mile and five-mile races are open to all age categories.

There are 19 age categories within the three races, and awards will be presented in each category at the awards ceremony in the Faith School gym. Faith Race T-shirts will be presented to all finishers.

For more information, contact Susan Emerson, race coordinator, at 545-5524.

FIGHT CANCER. EAT YOUR VEGETABLES.

There's strong evidence your greengrocer has access to cancer protection you won't find in any doctor's office.

Like broccoli, peaches, spinach, tomatoes, citrus fruits and various other types of fruits and vegetables. They may help reduce the risk of some forms of cancer.

Deadline for CFC donations nears

By Shawn Bryson
Bayonet staff writer

The 1988 Combined Federal Campaign at Fort Benning has reached 81 percent of the goal set at the start of the campaign Oct. 1, according to Vickie Ciccolella, director of psot CFC activities.

The $459,899 collected thus far falls significantly short of the $565,000 goal. Although the campaign was originally only to continue through November, the deadline for contributions has been extended to Dec. 8 Ciccolella said.

Ciccolella stressed the importance of the donations saying that of the $553,00 collected during last year's campaign, $200,000 was allocated back to Fort Benning programs. Santa's Castle, Army Community Services, the Battered Spouse Shelter and Youth Activities are some of the programs that could benefit from this year's campaign.

Contributors should see their unit CFC representative for more information and are reminded to include their Social Sercurity numbers on the donation certificates.

Operation Holiday to kick off Dec. 16

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Opening ceremonies for the ninth annual Operation Holiday will kick off Dec. 16, 2 p.m., at the Government Center Plaza in Columbus.

Operation Holiday activities will begin Dec. 20 and run through Jan. 2. The program, sponsored by the Association of the United States Army, provides activities for soldiers at Fort Benning who are away from their families during the holidays.

The program also provides an opportunity for local businesses and citizens to express their appreciation to soldiers for their contribution to our nation's defense.

Activities scheduled for this year include attending sporting events such as the Peach Bowl, Blue-Gray Bowl, All-American Bowl and Atlanta Hawks basketball games. Soldiers will also be able to compete in a bowling tournament.

Other activities include tours of the Confederate Naval Museum, Andersonville National Cemetery and the Little White House. Tours of local businesses will also be given. Some of those include the Ledger-Enquirer publishing building, Dolly Madison Bakery, RC Cola bottling company, WRBL television station and the Sunshine Bakery.

The Bayonet will publish schedules of all the activities when they are available.

Pearl Harbor remembered 47 years after attack

By Jim Garamone
American Forces Information Service

On Dec. 6, 1941, the island of Oahu in Hawaii was a bastion of American strength. It was the home of America's Pacific Fleet. The Army Air Forces, the Navy and the Marine Corps had air bases all over the island.

Wafting over the island was nothing but the scent of tropical flowers and the sounds of a nation at peace.

On Dec. 7, all this changed. The Pacific Fleet lay shattered on the bottom of Pearl Harbor. Planes were marked by plumes of smoke as they lay burning on their air strips.

The smell of explosives, oil and death overpowered the scents of flowers. The bark of anti-aircraft guns, howling plane engines and the bursting of bombs had replaced the sounds of peace.

When the smoke cleared, 2,403 Americans were dead, and the United States was at war with the empire of Japan.

Today, the aircraft carrier signifies the naval might of the nation. In 1941, the battleship was that vessel. Moored on Battleship Row in Pearl Harbor were seven of the Navy's big guns. The pride of that fleet was the USS Arizona. At the beginning of the attack, the Arizona took a bomb hit in the forward magazines, ripping the ship apart. A total of 1,177 sailors and Marines died in this explosion.

Today, a memorial to those men spans the remains of the Arizona. The American flag flies from a pole attached to the severed

3/14th mountainmen end Benning tour, head for Drum

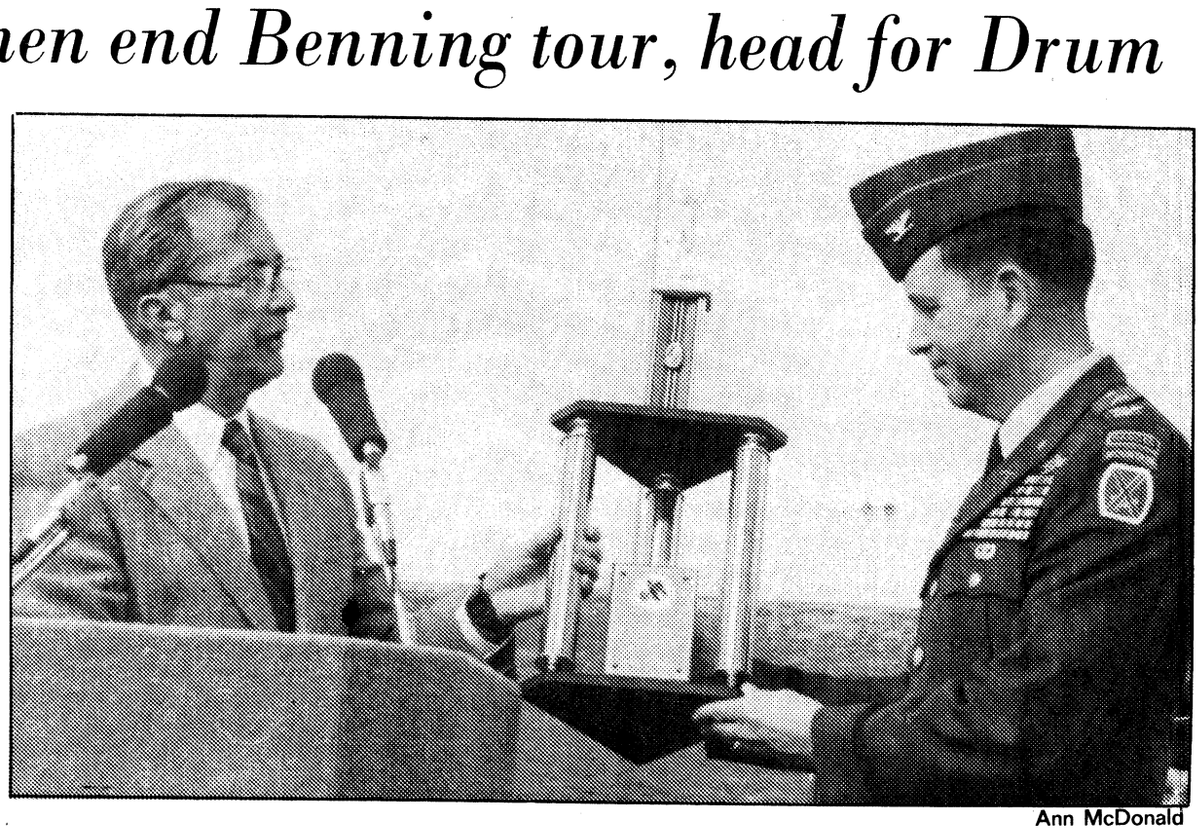
By Ann McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

When the soldiers from 3rd Battalion, 14th Infantry, 2nd Brigade, 10th Mountain Division passed in review last week, they marched off the parade field and off of Fort Benning forever.

The ceremony marked the end of the unit's tour of duty here and the start of their trek to Fort Drum, N.Y.

From the moment the unit was reactivated here on Feb. 27, 1986, it was known that they would be at Benning only temporarily.

The battalion was reactivated here because there was not enough room at Drum to house the unit.



Although the Fort Benning community always knew the mountainmen would be here for a short time, they could not stop the feelings of endearment that developed.

During his remarks, Maj. Gen. Michael F. Spigelmire commented on the great things the unit has done, especially the Special Olympics.

"Your unit has become synonymous with the Phenix City Special Olympics," he said. "I know that your presence will be truly missed."

Spigelmire started what turned out to be a string of farewells to the battalion. Congressman Richard Ray took his turn at the podium and said, "If I had it my way, this unit would never leave Fort Benning."

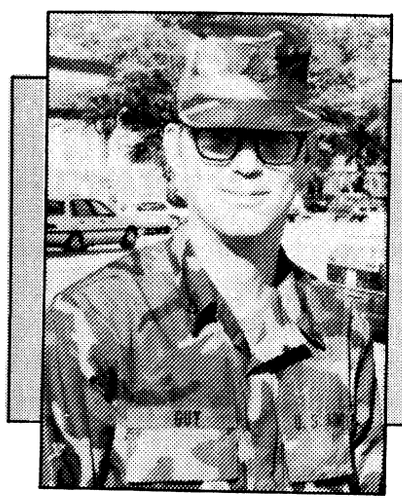
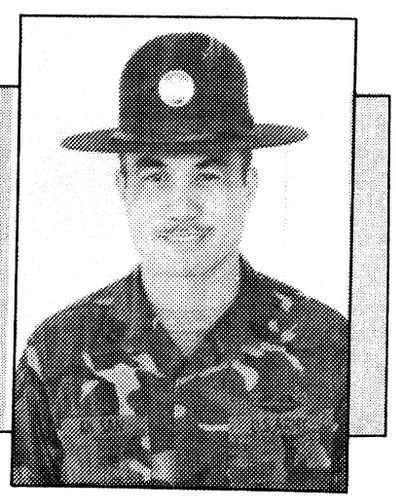
Ann McDonald

Retired CSM Jim Gallagher thanks Col. Michael Connor with a trophy for his unit's participation in AUSA while at Fort Benning.



"The chapter is going to miss your support," Gallagher said. "10th Mountain is part of the reason this chapter has won significant awards at the AUSA National Meeting."

The goodbyes could go on forever but that won't change the fact that the mountainmen are gone.



They, along with the rest of the Army, have a mission. Although Fort Benning's heart is heavy, new challenges await the mountaineers.

Snively forgets family Christmas tree tradition to help out Scouts

By Clyde Snively
USAIC Public Affairs Office

This is a paid ad. I've been bought. Not with money. With threats.

Last week's column was a teeny bit late. Mr. Acting-Editor-in-Chief Bryson, the one faced with a 15-inch hole to fill on page two, didn't like it a bit. He promised if that happens again, I'll never have to worry about another column. He promised bodily harm to my person–crushed fingers, legs broken at the knees.

The major also promised to keep me supplied with column ideas and plenty of encouragement. His idea for this week is,"Scouting for trees."

Christmas trees that is. Pines and spruce. Those living green things that grow in the wild most of the year, only to be cut down in Novemember, sold and decorated in December and thrown out in January.

Now I'm not anti-Christmas trees mind you. After all it's the traditional thing to do. In fact back in the olden days, B.C. (Before Columbus), the Snively family had a tradition of going Christmas tree hunting together.

We'd all bundle up, including Ralf, the dog, take our little hatchet and go to someone's woods and stalk around for a day in hip deep snow seeking the perfect tree. We did this because the trees were either free or very inexpensive.

Tradition had it that we always found our perfect tree on a line as far from the car as it was possible to get. That point always escaped us until it was time to walk back.

Once the tree was selected, I'd get down on my hands and knees, scrunch up my shoulders so snow wouldn't fall down my neck and begin to hack away (Bubba learned long ago about falling snow and refuses the honor of hatchet man).

We'd then tie a rope to the tree and tow it back to the car. Emma's job was to police up the discarded coats, scarves, and mittens that we dropped as we worked up a sweat from our labors. She was also good at pointing out all the beautiful trees we passed on the way back, "Oh, look at that one, isn't it lovely."

Reaching the car, we'd scrape all the paint off it as we pulled and shoved the tree up onto the roof. Next we'd lash it down, running the rope over the tree and through the car.

This always meant doing it a second time as I always forgot to open the doors before running the rope through the car. Convincing Emma to climb through a window was out of the question.

Arriving back at the Snivleys, we'd get the tree off the car and into the house where we always learned, no matter how high the ceilings, that the tree we cut down was three feet too tall. (They never look that big in the forest.)

Back outdoors and off comes the extra three feet. Then back into the house, mount it in a tree stand and learn, because the tree stand elevates it six inches, it has to go back out for finishing touches.

So now, with a tree six hundred pounds lighter (why couldn't we have measured before dragging it across hill and dale), we put the tree back in the stand and pull it upright.

This is when I begin to curse myself for once again forgetting to buy a new tree stand ("This doggoned tree stand couldn't support a branch let alone a tree over five feet tall," I remind everyone.)

So while Emma holds the tree at the base, and Bubba holds the branches, I grab the step ladder out of the storage room, a tea cup fastener and some wire.I then climb up to the step which has a red and white warning sign telling me, "Danger, don't stand on this step."

I stand on it with one foot anyway, figuring if they were serious, they wouldn't have put that step there. With my other foot dangling in outer space for balance, I screw the cup holder into the ceiling, fasten the wire to it, run the wire down to the top of the tree and fasten the tree to the wire.

I then leap from the step ladder, knocking it against the vase on the end table which crashes to the floor.

At this point I depart the area of operation and don't return until the tree is decorated. I'm also smart enough by now not to remark on the cant of the tree or about how there are no lights in one section and why are the large balls at the top and the small ones on the bottom?

That's how we've done it in the past. So where do the Boy Scouts come in? This year they are going to save me the pleasure of our annual "let's do something together as a family fun-packed adventure, snow or no snow."

This year, after measuring the height of the ceiling, buying a sturdy tree stand, I'm going to be first in line at their tree lot on post, where Emma can spend all the time in the world picking out a perfect tree. I'll then pay the scouts and, hopefully let them secure it to my car.

Arriving home fresh and full of energy, I'll have no trouble getting the tree up. Once it's up, I'll depart the premises to watch a football game while Emma, Bubba, Clydette and Ralf decorate it anyway they want.

Soldier praises White School principal

I recently chaperoned a slumber party at Edward A. White School during National Children's Bookweek. I was so impressed by one individual's conduct there that I felt compelled to write this letter.

I first met Spurgeon A. Glenn, Jr., principal of E. A. White School, during the school's carnival this past summer. Initially, I assumed this smiling man clad in a t-shirt was the janitor. My daughter, who was embarrassed by my assumption, quickly informed me that he was the school principal.

During the sleepover, the interaction between Mr. Glenn and his students was inspiring. From high-fives to hair tossling to back-patting, he demonstrated genuine love and concern for all the students.

Throughout the evening, he served in various roles. If a student spilled popcorn or milk, he quickly grabbed a mop or broom to clean up the mess. If a student had a problem, he used a "let's talk about it" approach.

This principal's excellent rapport with his students can only be described as heartwarming. Throughout my school years, I cannot recall ever having such a dynamic and loving principal.

If this is the direction our military school system is heading, I applaud Mr. Glenn and all the fine individuals that make up the Fort Benning School system.

I have had my children enrolled in this school system for the last six years. My only regret is that more parents are not involved in their children's school activities to witness not only those actions displayed by Mr. Glenn but the efforts made by all the fine staff members of the Fort Benning School system.

INF Treaty calls for cooperation; caution

AUSA

Last December the General Secretary of the Soviet Union, Mikhail Gorbachev, visited the United States for an historic summit meeting with President Reagan. Most people think of the INF Treaty as the key result of the summit. The more important aspect, however, was that Gorbachev became viewed as a responsible world leader–an honor never before accorded to a Soviet leader.

More recently, General Sergey Akhromeyev, the head of the Soviet armed forces, toured a number of our military bases and both he and the General Secretary suggested that the Soviet Union was assuming a more defensive posture and that we should all cooperate to reduce tensions.

Of course, we should not be cynical about this opportunity–if opportunity it is. The problems come when you look at the record. Peaceful protestations haven't kept the Soviet Union from building an extraordinary military capability nor from taking actions which violate prior agreements, such as the ABM treaty.

And while Gorbachev may be absolutely sincere, it is not clear that he can, in fact, deliver. He has faced sharp opposition to his attempts to change and liberalize the Soviet economy and, sincere or not, it is not clear that he can succeed. It can also be suggested that while he is sincere, the thing he is sincere about is establishing the Soviet Union as a true superpower and that with its basket-case economy he has no choice but to seek cooperation with the West to gain its technology and economic know-how.

Whatever the motivation, it would be irresponsible of us not to pursue every avenue which might reduce the chance of war. We should remain open to opportunities for cooperation. It would be equally irresponsible for us to allow pious platitudes and exhortations about peaceful cooperation to cause us to disarm unilaterally or to dismantle NATO –the alliance which has kept peace in Europe for 40 years.

We Americans are optimistic and we believe in peaceful coexistence and we don't have very long memories. So now is a time to seek cooperation–but a time to do so with caution.

Concern grows for access to proper medical care

AUSA

On the list of reasons new recruits give for enlisting in the Army, medical and dental care is rarely mentioned. But at reenlistment time, health care ranks closely behind job satisfaction and retirement benefits among the most important reasons soldiers give for staying in the Army.

Yet, despite the importance of adequate health care, there is a growing uncertainty on the part of military personnel about obtaining access to proper medical treatment.

In recent years, a number of Army treatment facilities–both medical and dental–stand closed because of government squabbling over how such facilities will be funded for the work they can perform.

At a time when 11 percent of the active Army is female and 57 percent is married, a Department of Defense attitude that for a long time, minimized the readiness contributions of OB/GYN physicians is seriously affecting morale of those who serve in and those who receive the services of the Army Medical Department.

This sends a clear signal to soldiers and their families that the military health care system is not being funded to meet the needs of its beneficiaries.

In addition, in 1988 military retirees and their families have seen increasing instances where medical treatment rooms were closed to them. First in a few isolated locations, then later with near uniformity, they were denied access to dental and optometry clinics and later to the use of other medical services. Even some reciprocal agreements for treatment of retirees at Veterans Administration hospitals were discontinued by the Defense Department, allegedly because funding was not available.

Both the Administration and Congress need to be made aware of the fact that military health care is a vital benefit for soldier's, retirees, and their families. It must be brought to the attention of our government that the incentive of lifelong quality family health care, so important to mid-career retention and the readiness of our military units, is being seriously eroded by reductions in the capability of military health care facilities.

USARSA's language services division translates training material to Spanish

By Keh F. Johnson
USARSA:orrespondent

Thes are unsung heroes who dotheir jobs daily without muh fanfare or recognition; bt, without their efforts, the Scool of the America's would be a school without books.

USARSA's unsung heroes are th workers in the LanguageServices Division and Printig Section.

Sittig behind computers, 19 operators, fluent in English and Sanish translate training and octrine material. It is here nat U.S. doctrine takes on a panish flavor.

LSD's mission is to translate material from Army textbooks and create a textbook in Spanish that can be used in the classroom by the instructors and students, according to Juan W. Santamaria, LSD chief. This is no easy task.

"The school has to project a professional image to Latin American students who attend training here. We strive for the best professional quality possible," said Santamaria.

Without LSD there would be no textbooks, therefore no means of instruction. Each day the translators create words that translate the most difficult tasks. Their words must be clear and concise to the 1,300 students who attend the school annually so that the subtlest of meaning is conveyed.

"To translate, you have to understand the meaning of what you're reading in English. Then, match that concept into Spanish," exclaimed Eleonora E. Aguirre, a translator for LSD.

Once translation is complete, the USARSA Printing Section takes over.

The Printing Section takes camera-ready translated material to produce manuals, pamphlets, diplomas, flyers.

"Everything we print here is usually needed yesterday," said Sgt. Verlelia D. R cks, senior offset press operator for USARSA. "But nothing stops the presses because the school can't function without the printed materials we produce."

When instructors pass out new textbooks at the beginning of a new class, no thought is given to the countless hours spent developing the material to be used.

But, because of the work of these two sections in building 35, USARSA continues its mission of developing professional armies throughout Latin America.

ASK THE JUDGE

Q: bought a used car. It was the est looking one on the lot. The salesman told me it got "goo" gas mileage and was built to last forever. I've had it a wee now, and the gas mileage isn'tas good as I had hoped. I realy don't like the way it ride, either. There's nothing really wrong with the car; I just think I could have done better, and I don't like the car anymore. How can I get out of my contract?

A: Sales or other contracts cannot be cancelled solely at your whim. You may be able to get out of contracts if you lacked the capacity to contract, or when a seller misrepresents goods, fails to deliver or otherwise commits a major breach of contract. But the seller has no obligation to cancel the contract and refund money when he did nothing wrong. The contract is good even if you later discover you did not get as good a deal as you originally thought.

Your signature has legal significance. It binds you to the promises stated in the contract. Written contracts would serve no purpose if they ended whenever one person changed his mind. Only a legal justification excuses your obligations under a contract. Think about it. For example, what if the shoe was on the other foot? What if a salesman, a week after a sale, came up to you and said he was sorry, but he'd made a mistake. The mainmast of the battleship. Survivors of the Arizona remember when the scene was not the serene memorial it is today.

John Anderson was a boatswain mate second class aboard the Arizona when the attack started. Since he had been stationed in China before reporting aboard, he knew immediately what the planes with the orange circles on their wings meant. "I just went for the quarterdeck hatch where the alarm system (was) and pulled it, and nothing happened," he said during an interview with the National Park Service in 1981. "About that time, a bomb hit back aft, and then I knew we were in the attack."

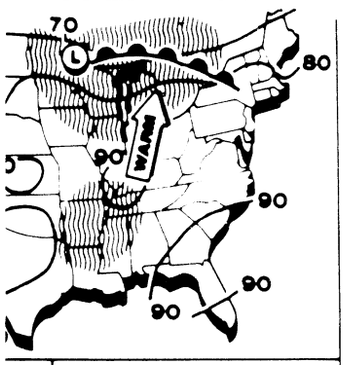
Anderson went to his battle station, but it had been hit by a bomb and was worthless. He was attempting to get to his twin brother's battle station at an anti-aircraft gun when the bomb that blew up the ship hit. "The bomb hit and blew me off the ladder, and we wound up back of the crane," he said. The blast had blown him almost 60 feet.

The ship was a loss, and attempts to rescue the survivors began. Men worked to get the wounded nto rescue boats. "I picked up a couple of nore people, and (their) skin just slid off their arms like it was grease because these people were flash burned," Anderson said. He vanted to go back to find his brother, but an offce told him that the ship was gone, his brother was gone, "and we better get off before everybody else is killed, too." The officer pushed Anderson into the boat, and they headed toward Ford Island—the nearest land—in the center of Pearl Harbor.

"Everything was on fire. The ship was on fire, the water was on fire, and there was (sic) people on the crane, and I saw them as we went, and they were up in this fire, and I thought 'God Almighty, how are they going to make it?' " Anderson said.

On the way to the island, Anderson and his mates fished people out of the water. Once on Ford Island, he and another sailor spotted an unmanned boat and swam out to it. They operated the boat, rescuing people from the crane area of the Arizona and bringing them to the hospital pier. Anderson and his fellow sailor cruised the area rescuing men until they were sunk by a Japanese plane. Anderson swam for Ford Island. He had been hit in the back and head with shrapnel and flash-burned when the Arizona exploded.

Once on the island, he still wasn't finished. He and another sailor manned a machine gun all that day and night.



The reverberations of the surprise attack on Pearl Harbor are still being felt today. The United States entered World War II ill prepared and fought for the first months with weapons left over from World War I. America vowed not to let this happen again. U.S. service members today are well-trained and equipped with the latest weaponry.

The American military mans a sophisticated surveillance system that guards against surprise attack.

Finally, the United States maintains forces strong enough to deter aggressors from attacking and—if that fails—strong enough to exact retaliation.

The lessons of Pearl Harbor and the USS Arizona were costly. The Arizona memorial stands today as a haunting reminder of that.

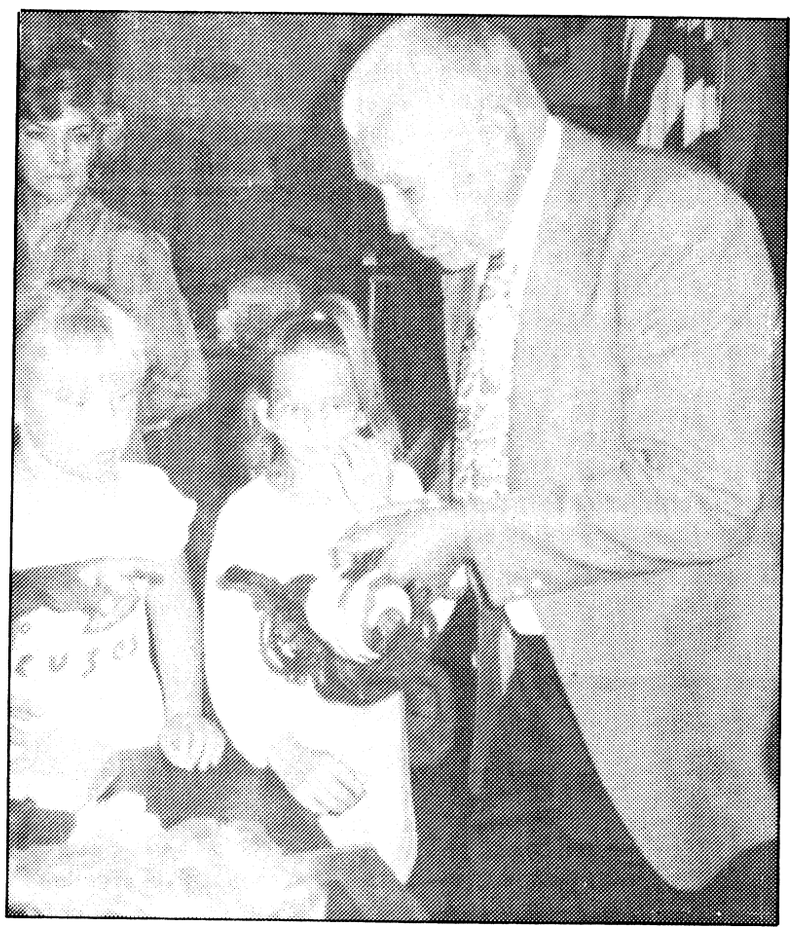
EDUCATION

Turn experience to credit at ed. centers

DANTES



Are you aware of an organization called the "United States Council on Military Education"? This organization has sent articles to base and post newspapers throughout the United States announcing a "new" Educational Services Program that provides a portfolio kit which converts the Military Service experience of active duty, guardsmen, reservists and even retired or former officers and NCOs from any branch of Service directly to civilian college semester hours.

Although the articles mention DANTES and the "Guide to the Evaluation of Educational Experiences in the Armed Forces," neither DANTES nor the Americn Council on Education (publisher of the Guide) is associated with the "United States Council on Military Education." The organization is not sanctioned or endorsed by any Department of Defense educational organization.

It seems the organization is charging service members for services which are already provided free of charge through the Education Services Office and college officials. This organization markets a portfolio kit for $12.95, which the student completes, outlining his (or her) learning experiences in the Armed Forces. For a preparation fee of $50, the Council matches the Service member's experiences to the appropriate listing in the ACE Guide. The Council then gets a college or university to transcript the credit. The student is required to pay the Council for the credits transcripted (cost ranges from $50 to $198, depending on the amount of credit transcripted.)

Service members should be aware that they can obtain the same service at no charge through the Army Continuing Education Services Office, according to Charles Fritts, Chief of Fort Benning's ACES.

Soldiers may contact a counselor at any education service center on post for more information.

Students celebrate with slumber party

By Beth Middlemiss
Fort Benning Schools

White School celebrated National Children's Book Week with a slumber party for its fourth and fifth graders. One hundred and twenty-two students, twenty volunteer parents, and several White School faculty members spent a memorable night reading.

Students arrived at the school the night of Nov. 18, loaded with sleeping bags, books, and enthusiasm. They spent the first part of the evening taking part in a variety of reading-related activities that included storytelling, puppet shows, poetry, ghost stories, storytelling in Spanish, and pantomine.

During the rest of the evening, students dozed off in their sleeping bags or participated in silent reading activities that lasted all night long.

At various times durin the night, students were askd to calculate the number of pages they had read. At the end of the party the total was announced; White Schoo students had read 12,083 pges during the night.

"The last of the stuents fell asleep around 3 a.m. but some of the parent volunteers and teachers remained awake and on duty throughout the entire night," said Owen Ditchfield, media specialist and coordinator of the slumber party. "It's obvious that there is a strong love of reading among our studets, and with th wonderful cooperation of parents, we were able to extend our regular reading program in new and exciting ways."

car he sold you was more valuable than he thought. He'd even found someone willing to pay an extra thousand for it and he wanted it back. Would you let him get out of his contract so easily?

Many consumers eagerly hold businesses to their responsibility, yet ignore their consumer responsibility. Consumers should save documents involved in major purchases — not only the sales contract, but any paperwork they sign, all warranties, and receipts. If you do not receive a copy of one of these documents, ask for it. Ask about any unclear terms and do not sign until the seller explains to your satisfaction; this may involve repeating the question several times. If a salesman makes a verbal promise, ask him to put it in writing on your contract. You can only enforce the promises in the final written contract. Do not skim over cancellation/refund paragraphs. If you should need a refund, the seller can refuse if you do not follow exactly the refund procedures you agreed to in the contract. Many problems occur when cancelling by mail. If you use this method, protect yourself and document your actions by sending the cancellation by certified mail, return receipt requested.

All consumers expect the businesses they deal with to follow sound business practices, but many fail to follow sound consumer practices. Remember, consumer matters are a two-way street. Contracts give sellers rights, too, not just responsibilities. Your best insurance against loss and disappointment is keeping yourself informed and prepared.

Checklist can help make kitchen a safer place

National Safety Council

The kitchen is the busiest room in every home — how safe is yours? See how many items you can check off on this safety inventory:

★Strong, even lighting at stove, sink and countertop work areas.

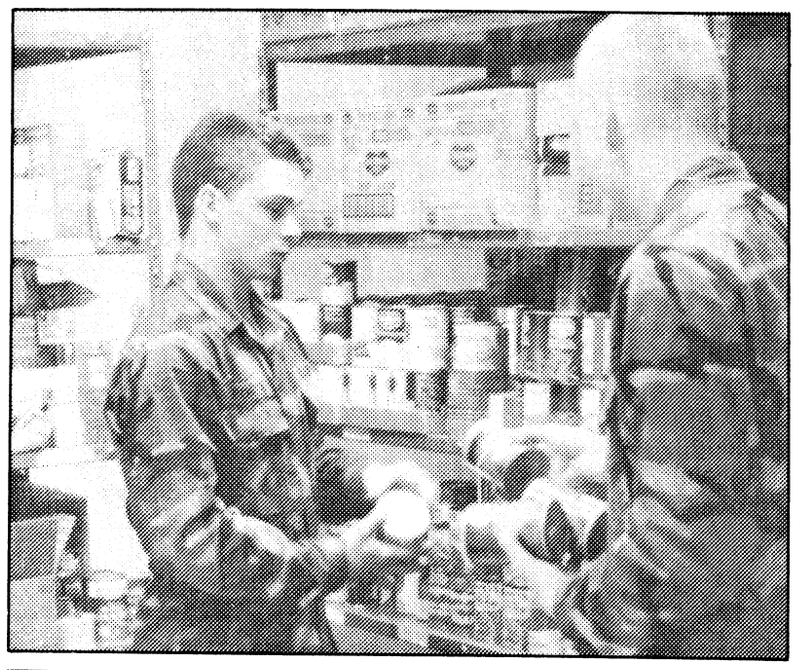
★Sturdy step stool or utility ladder for reaching high shelves and cupboards.

★Special rack, compartment or tray for storing sharp knives.

★Household cleaners, disinfectants and insecticides kept in their original containers, away from food and out of the reach of children.

★Spills wiped up as soon as they occur.

★Self-polishing or non-skid wax on floors. If you do use regular wax, be sure to buff it thoroughly.



★Electric appliances stored and used away from sink. Kitchen wiring should be heavy enough to carry the extra current drawn by appliances.

★Oven and broiler pans clean and free of grease; grease containers kept away from stove.

★Towel racks located away from range (a breeze might blow a towel into a burner flame).

★Kitchen matches stored in tightly closed metal containers.

★Handles of pots and pans turned sideways while cooking so that children can't pull hot food down upon them.

Tons of food

Soldiers from the Infantry Training Center stack food collected during last week's "Scouting for Food" campaign. During the campaign, Fort Benning Boy Scouts collected about 4 four tons of food, which was donated to the Army Community Service's Emergency Food Locker.

CRIME STOPPERS

Columbus Crime Stoppers

Columbus Crime Stoppers and the Columbus Police Department are looking for the person or persons who are responsible for the murder of Angela Tucker Barnes.

On Wednesday, Dec. 7, 1983, at approximately 11:20 a.m., the Columbus Fire Department responded to a house fire at 5448 Armour Road. Upon arrival firefighters found the house in flames and once inside the house they found the severely burned body of Angela Barnes, white female, lying on the living room floor.

Investigation by the Columbus Police Department revealed that one of the victim's three children was drying a pair of blue jeans next to a heater when apparently the jeans caught on fire and spread to the house. The children, ages 4, 4, and 2, tried to "wake-up" their mother whom they thought was sleeping on the floor. When the victim would not "wake-up" the children ran out of the house. It is unknown at this time how the victim was murdered without the children, who were in the house at the time, knowing what was happening.

Anyone having any information concerning this case should call Columbus Crime Stoppers at 571-5858. If your information lead to the arrest and indictment of this person or persons, you could receive up to $1,000 in reward money.

Columbus Crime Stoppers also pays for information on other criminal activity, wanted fugitives and stolen property. The Crime Stoppers phone lines are open from 10 a.m. to 10 p.m. Monday through Friday. Crime Stoppers serves the Columbus, Fort Benning, Phenix City and Russell County areas.

Doughboy statue relocates to NCOA after 30 years

By Ann McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

After serving 30 years at his first permanent duty station in front of the old Infantry School, Building 35, Fort Benning's Doughboy statue has a new duty station in front of the new Noncommissioned Officers Academy, the former Faith Middle School.

The statue's dedication here on April 1, 1958, marked the 51st anniversary of the Infantry School, which had moved here from Ft. Sill in 1919.

The Doughboy, clothed in World War II combat gear and holding an M-1 rifle at parade rest, is a bronze replica of the American Doughboy statue in Berlin, whose base is made from six stones taken from the Remagen Bridge in West Germany.

Historians say capture of the bridge by Americans during World War II may have shortened the war by weeks.

The original Doughboy Statue in Berlin is the work of German sculptor Ernst Kunst, who, sculpted the statue soon after the close of World War II. Kunst made the original statue because a group of German citizens wanted to give thanks to the Americans for their sacrifices during the war.

A selection committee composed of two colonels, a major and four enlisted men was chosen to pick a suitable model to pose for the statue. The model they chose was to represent a typical infantryman.

Tech Sgt. Thomas Love of Oak Hill, West Va., was selected from four soldiers in Berlin to model as the American Doughboy. A member of the Third Infantry Regiment, Love was judged the most typical U.S. combat soldier by the selection committee.

"I remember standing in front of that selection committee very well," Love said recently in a telephone interview, "because we had to stand there at attention with 80 pounds of gear on for three hours."

"By the time they told us "at ease," I didn't know if I was laying down or standing," he quipped.

Once he was chosen, Love said the general's driver would drive him to and from work on days that he posed for the statue.

Unfortunately, Love had to leave Berlin before the statue was unveiled.

In 1953 plans for erecting a similar statue at Benning began when Maj. Gen. Guy S. Meloy Jr., then commander of Fort Benning, wrote to the Berlin Command about the statue. He received permission allowing him to make a copy of the statue for Fort Benning.

Once he got permission to erect the statue, a "Follow Me Fund" was established for the project. Soldiers from all over the Army made contributions to the fund. Finally, in 1957, all systems were go and Maj. Gen. Herbert B. Powell, post commander, commissioned the Herman Noack Foundry of Friedenaue, Germany, to copy the Berlin statue for Ft. Benning.

Noack took on the contract and went to work on the replica of the Doughboy statue.

Finally, in April 1958, the statue was dedicated in front of what was then The Infantry School across from the Officers Club.

Although this Doughboy Statue is many miles closer to its model's home, Love has never seen this one, either.

An Army official tracked Love down in 1982 and asked him if he was the model for the statue. Love said he was and the Berlin Command was informed of his whereabouts. The NCOs of Berlin learned that Love had never seen the statue and immediately started raising money so he and his wife could see the now famous statue.

He saw it for the first time in 1983, 37 years after its dedication.

"It was a great honor to see that statue I posed for standing so prominently in the Berlin Brigade Headquarters," Love said. "My wife and I will forever cherish our visit there."

Love still has not seen the statue's twin at Benning. "I would like to see it," Love said. "Hopefully, some day I'll have the chance."

43rd soldiers use engineer skills to move Doughboy

By Ann McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

Fort Benning's Doughboy Statue has a new home thanks to some help from a squad of soldiers from Company A, 43rd Engineers, 36th Engineer Group.

Sgt. Calvert Green, PFC Tony Gilbert and Spec.'s Gerald Beatty, Tim Oversmith and Mark Dettwiller recently moved the statue from the front of Building 35 to the new Noncommissioned Officers Academy, at what was formerly the old Faith School.

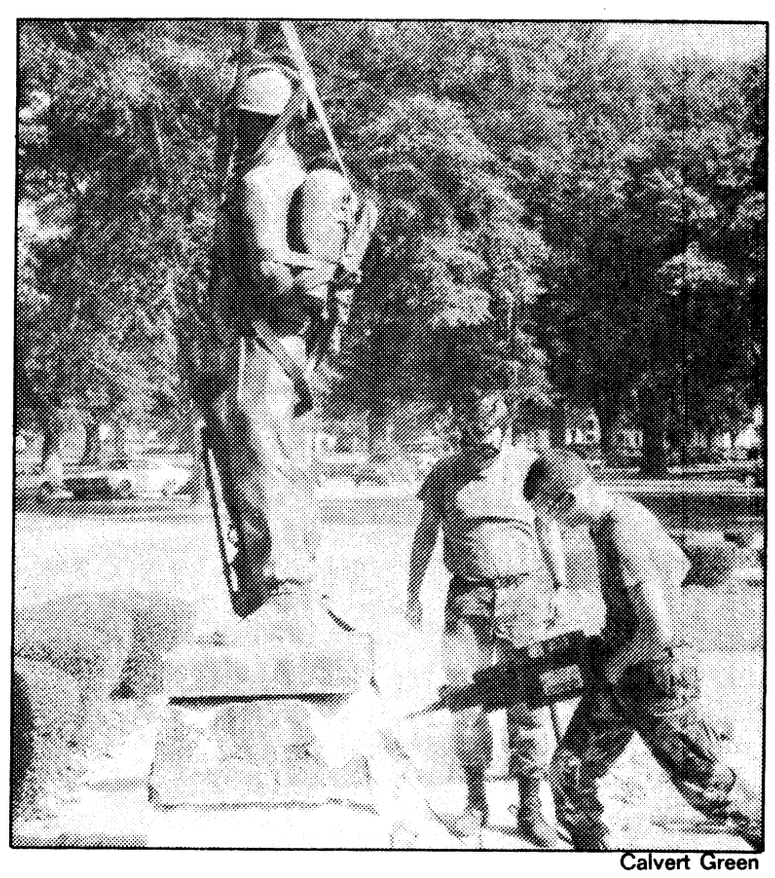
According to Green, they moved the statue by hoisting it with a crane and loading it onto a trailer filled with sand.

"We then put the statue in storage while we rebuilt the base," he said.

Their only problem was rebuilding the base, which was made of six stones from the historic Remagen Bridge that spans the Rhine River between France and Germany.

"The stones are such an odd shape that they can only be layed in a certain way," he said., "We couldn't find the blueprints, so we did everything on our own."

Green researched everything from the best way to mix the mortar to the best type of slate to use for the base.



When all the engineering work was done, they brought the statue out of storage and securely placed it on its new base.

Once the statue was settled, the mission continued for Green. His curiosity piqued, and he went to the Infantry Museum to find some background information on the statue.

It was at the Infantry Museum that Green found the missing blueprints along with other pertinent information about the statue. "I found out that the original engineers had the same problems we did and that made me feel pretty good," Green said.

The ceremony officially giving the Doughboy to the NCO Academy Nov. 16 made him feel even better.

During that ceremony, NCO Academy Commandant, CSM James Fowler said, "Sergeant Green did an excellent job with this statue, and I intend to maintain it to those standards."

Calvert Green

Soldiers from Co. A, 43rd Eng. Bn., 36th Eng. Gp., work to loosen the Doughboy statue before moving it to the NCO Academy.

Sightseeing Road Chapel annex opening ceremony held

Caps 3,200 man hours of work

By Debra Galle
USAIC Chaplain's Office

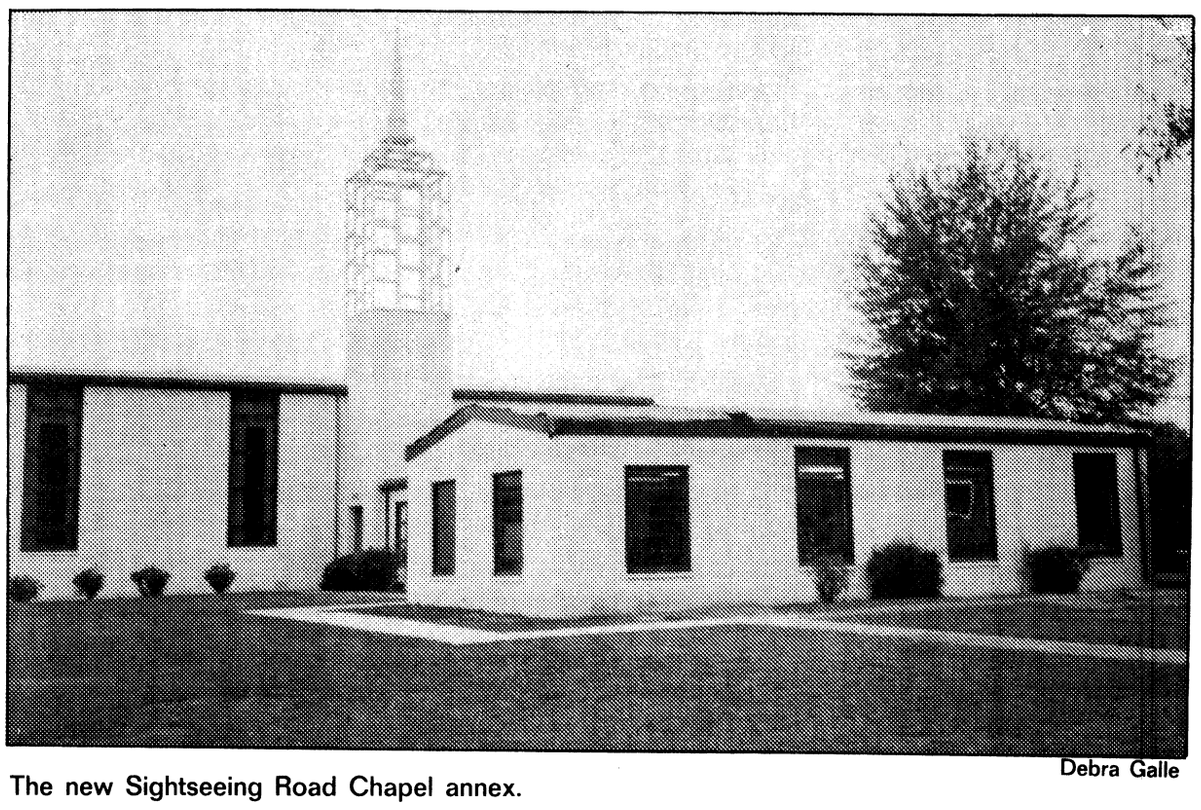
A ribbon-cutting ceremony applauding results of about 3,200 man hours of work on the new Sightseeing Road Chapel annex was held Nov. 22.

The project, according to Chaplain (Col.) Roy Mathis, was a joint effort of the 36th Engineer Group's Chaplain Section, USARSA, and DEH.

Approximately $20,000 was allocated for building materials from USARSA and DEH. The value of the final project is approximately $45,000, resulting in savings to the government of about $25,000.

During the ceremony, Chaplain (Maj.) David Penland presented 2nd Lt. Patricia Bedard, platoon leader of the 1st Platoon, 36th Engineer Group, a plaque commending the work of her soldiers.

"We want more projects like this," Bedard challenged as she accepted the plaque. "It keeps up our morale to do service projects like this and to let the soldiers work in their MOS. We enjoyed this project." Bedard explained the military specialities of the soldiers included carpenters, masonry specialists, plumbers and electricians.



"My dream has always been to learn carpentry," said Spec. Shawn Caskin. "This has helped to fulfill my education. I feel so much better doing this kind of work than I do when building bunkers. This is something all soldiers can enjoy and use."

Col. Douglas R. Church, 36th Engineer Commander, selected the 1st platoon for the job. The soldiers built the annex, which will be used as a nursery, fellowship hall or simply additional room to meet the growing needs of the chapel.

"This platoon did an excellent job here and at Santa's Castle," Church said. Their work will contribute to someone's happiness this Christmas and many more to come.

Chaplain Mathis said, "This is an extension of the house of the Lord. These soldiers have served the carpenter of Galilee. If one soldier or one family will come closer to God by using this meeting area, all of our efforts would have been worth it."

The Chapel, which is used primarily by the soldiers and families of the 36th Engineer Group, 34th Med., MASH and the Rangers, was originally built as a brigade chapel. But, like many of the older chapels, it needed to be expanded to accommodate the community.

Advent is a time of preparation and spiritual reflection

By Douglas R. Stephenson
USAIC Chaplain's Office

Advent is the four-week period of time in the Christian calendar before the celebration of Christ's birth on Christmas. Traditionally, in Christian churches, both Catholic and Protestant, the Advent season is a time of preparation, of spiritual reflection, a time of repentance and, of course, a time for rejoicing and thanksgiving.

During Advent, we stand with ancient Israel and hear the words of the prophets proclaiming expectation and hope for the coming of the Messiah. We rejoice anew at the comfort of living in this Anno Domini — "year of our Lord" and knowing the joy of Emmanuel — "God with us."

The good news of Advent is this: Jesus is coming back to take us to be with Him forever. Advent is not merely the expectation of Christ's nativity, but His coming again to judge, to save, and to rule and reign with His saints. Christians throughout the world join in the song of Revelations, Maranatha — "Even so, come, Lord Jesus."

Advent is also a commemoration of the victory of spiritual light over spiritual darkness. One of the most traditional and meaningful practices of Christians during Advent is the lighting of the Advent candles on the Advent wreath.

The lights on the Advent wreath symbolize the power of Christ, the Light of the World. The evergreens encircling the Advent wreath suggests eternal life. The unending circle of the wreath represents life unending in Jesus Christ.

Traditionally the candles used in the wreath are in the colors of purple, pink and white. The purple is associated with penitence, the pink with joy and the white, or Christ, candle in the middle with the purity and holiness of the Christ child.

Each Sunday, in homes and churches, a candle is lit as Christ is slowly revealed to us in readings from prophecies in the Old Testament and fulfilled promises in the New Testament.

Anyone interested in Advent or in selected scripture readings for Advent, may feel free to contact their unit chaplain or call the USAIC Chaplain's Office, 545-2288/2608.

MCCW sends four to conference

By Debra Galle
USAIC Chaplain's Office

Four delegates from the Fort Benning chapter of the Military Council of Catholic Women (MCCW) were sent to the National Conference in Tacoma, Washington recently. Delegates Claudia Wolf, Hae Suk Donahue, Bobbie Pearce and Debbie Galle were sent to represent Fort Benning at national and regional meetings, exchanging ideas and learning many things to help their local chapter and church community grow.

MCCW members of Fort Lewis, Washington, hosted the event which proved to be instrumental in a "growth spurt" of the organization. A strong affiliation with the National Council of Catholic Women (NCCW) was fromed, as this is the parent organization. Of great importance to the organization was the acceptance of national moderator from Bishop Joseph Dimino, of the Archdioscese of Military Services. Bishop Dimino was a speaker, celebrated most masses, and made himself available for casual conversation during the convention.

Although approximately 113 delegates attended the convention, more than $4,000 was raised through special collections, church donations and a week long raffle with gifts donated by members. This money was presented to Bishop Dimino for the purpose of aiding the new military seminarians. This money will help many new priests into the military community.

Decisions concerning next year's regional conference were made, and the southeastern area conference will be held at Redstone Arsenal, Ala. next fall.

Among the topics discussed and commissions formed were Organizational Services, International Affairs, Community Affairs, Church Community, Family Affairs and Military Women in Service. Many seminars were given including those on leadership, outreach, scripture, liturgy, membership, public relations, communications, and social justice.

Special speakers were many. One in particular, Beulah Lund, advocate for the homeless in America, spent most of the week with the convention. She opened everyone's eyes to the dilemma and stirred their hearts. She became an honorary MCCW member. The Conference theme was "Catch the Spirit" symbolized by the dove of peace. Goals of delegates included bringing this spirit and enthusiasm back into their communities.

"We can do no great things, only small things with great love." Mother Teresa

Spigelmire wishes happy Chanukah

Chanukah, or the "Festival of Lights," commemorates a hard-fought Jewish victory over oppression and tyranny. We remember those who have gone before us and give thanks for the sacrifices they made and the inspiration their lives give. It is a time of celebration.

Our Jewish soldiers and their families will celebrate Chanukah this year beginning Sunday, Dec. 4, and ending Sunday, Dec. 11. A large Menorah with eight candles will be placed on the lawn at the Infantry Training Center Chapel, and our Rabbi will be leading services on each of the eight holy days.

I extend to each of you best wishes for a happy Chanukah and a SAFE holiday season. May God bless you and your loved ones during this coming year.

VETERANS Q & A

Veterans' Administration

Q — My father served with the occupation forces in Nagasaki at the end of World War II. He died last year of multiple myeloma. Is my mother eligible for Dependency and Indemnity Compansation (DIC)?

A — Your mother should apply for DIC, citing your father's service in Nagasaki. The multiple myeloma can be ruled service-connected if it became manifest to a degree of 10 percent or more within 40 years after the last date on which your father participated in the occupation of Nagasaki.

Q — My brother is a totally disabled veteran whose only income is his Veterans Administraton compensation check. Recently, a guardian was appointed by the Probate Court to manage his affairs. Does the VA do any follow-up monitoring to ensure that my brother will be protected?

A — The VA audits the periodic guardianship accountings that is required by the Probate Court. If discrepancies are discovered, the Probate Court is notified and asked to take corrective action. The welfare and needs of disabled veterans under guardianship are monitored by VA Field Examiners who make periodic visits with these veterans. Unattended needs or adverse conditions are reported to the guardian or, if necessary to the Probate Court for required action.

"Iron Mike" goes TDY to Jacksonville, Fla.

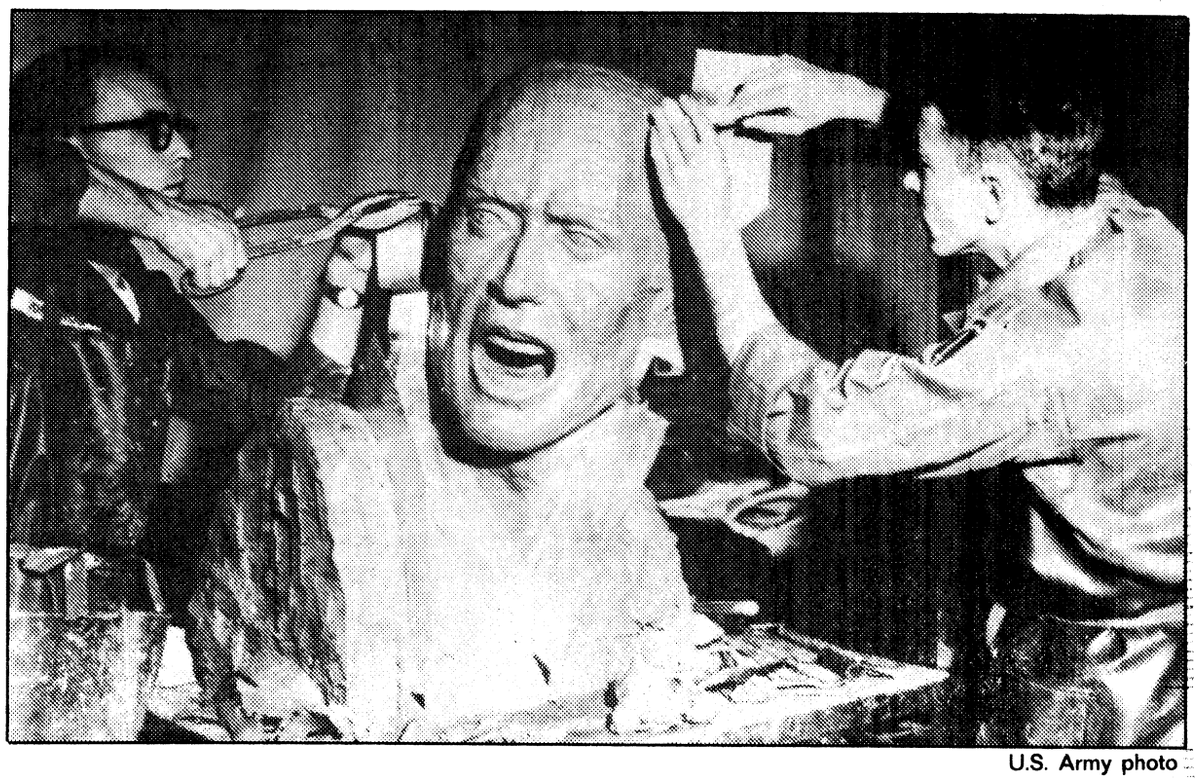
Gets first makeover since his creation 28 years ago

By Shawn Bryson
Bayonet staff writer

If you've been wondering where Iron Mike has been for the past few weeks, just ask yourself where you would go after standing in one place for 24 years.

Actually, "Mike" is TDY in Jackonsville, Fla. While in Florida, "Mike" will enjoy a little rest and relaxation, as well as an extensive makeover.

The statue, which was moved to Building 4 in 1964 after standing on F... ...anks Field for four years, was ...ken from its perch Nov. 2 by the Atlantic Monument Company, according to officials from the Directorate of Engineering and Housing.



"Iron Mike" has been one of the more popular attractions at Fort Benning since its completion in April of 1960. Although the statue appeared, from a distance, to stand as strong as the day of its original unveiling, AMC's inspection of "Mike" found him "in very poor condition."

According to company officials, oxidation of the supporting structure was "destroying the statue" and needed to be corrected immediately. Moisture inside the statue had caused the outer fiberglass shell to separate from the framework.

In their restoration report, AMC officials said, "Generally speaking, the fiberglass shell must be removed and the armature cleaned and coated with an oxidation preventative, a coating that the fiberglass resin will bond to."

Specific repairs of the statue include rebuilding the soles of each boot, the right hand, the helmet and sling, bayonet and receiver of the rifle. Items to be cleaned and repaired include the bayonet scabbard, cartridge belt, neck and head.

Restoration is expected to take 60 days. However, DEH officials explained that it is possible that "Iron Mike" might be home in time for Christmas.

Pvt.'s Karl Von Krog (l) and Manfred Bass put the finishing touches on the face and head of "The Infantryman" statue.

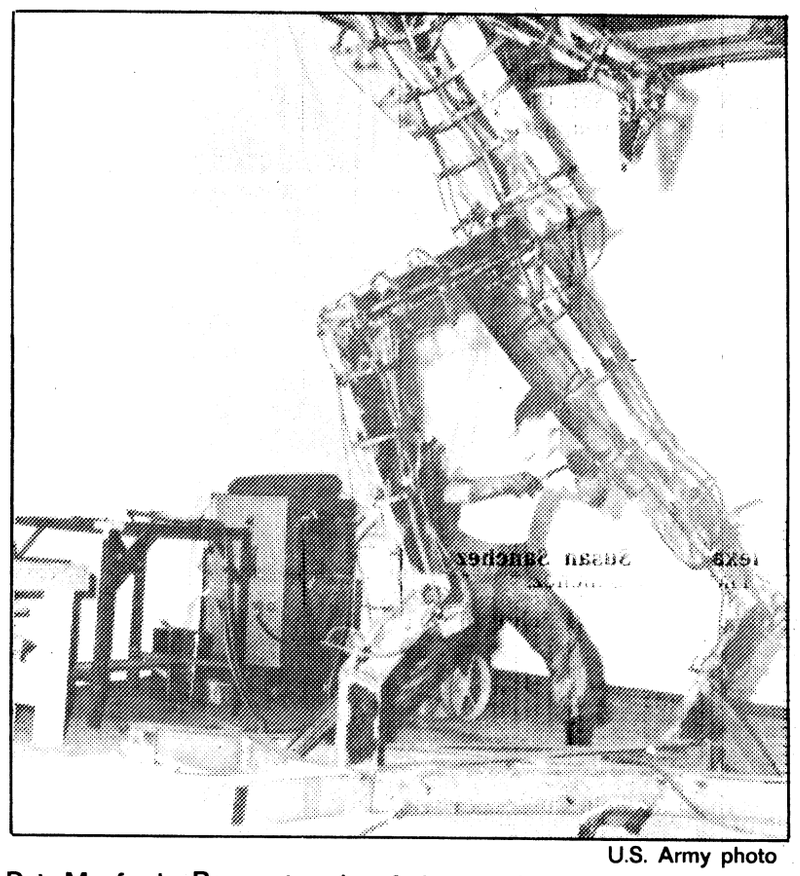
Building of statue done by privates

USAIC Public Affairs Office

The statue that has stood in front of Building 4 for 24 years is commonly known as "Iron Mike." But, in 1960 it was known by its creators as "The Infantryman."

The idea for the statue originated in 1959 when the commander of Fort Benning, Maj. Gen. Paul L. Freeman, Jr., decided it was appropriate for such a memorial to stand at the "Home of the Infantry."

Many people worked to make the idea a reality. Pvt.'s Manfred Bass and Karl Von Krog, of Fort Benning, however, were the actual creators.



Bass and Von Krog both had sculpting experience. Bass was the chief sculptor with Von Krog as his assistant. Their model was Eugene J. Wyles, an Officer Candidate School student at the time.

Their goal was to depict the seriousness of a squad leader in combat wearing the latest equipment of the time period.

They started by preparing scale models of an infantryman in different poses. Once the "Follow Me" pose was selected by Freeman, the framework of the statue was constructed with heavy steel I-beams, metal bands and wire mesh. Then, parts of the statue were molded and cast.

A fiberglass compound was put over the mesh. The outer layer, a bronze-impregnated epoxy, was then hand sculpted and applied over the base.

"The Infantryman" is twelve feet high with a 10-foot base. It weighs 3,000 pounds and the two soldiers spent thousands of hours creating it.

Make holidays energy efficient & accident-free

By Becky Ray
Energy Branch

The holidays are traditionally festive times when we enjoy some of the most elaborate celebrations of the year. Because of the increase in cooking, travel and at-home entertainment, energy conservation and safety are more important than ever.

Make your holidays energy efficient and safe by using the following tips:

○When expecting a crowd, lower the thermostat. Body heat will raise the temperature in your home.

○Keep the heat indoors. Don't keep doors open longer than necessary when guests enter or leave.

○Whenever possible, cook with small appliances, such as toaster ovens and microwaves. If the oven must be used, try preparing all other dishes for the meal in the oven as well.

○Keep the fireplace damper closed when the fireplace is not being used.

○Remember to turn off exterior lights.

○Flashing miniature ornamental lights use less energy than most others. It takes 250 of these to use as much energy as a 100-watt bulb.

○Faulty wiring and overloaded electrical circuits are fire hazards. When buying strings of lights, check for sturdy wiring. Check all sets for loose connections, broken sockets and frayed or broken wiring. Don't overload circuits by plugging too many decorations or appliances into a single outlet.

○Be especially careful when using extension cords. First check them for damaged insulation, and make sure they are rated for the appliance you're using.

○Don't place packages too close to tree lights or electrical circuits.

○Keep a fire extinguisher handy. Never use water on an electrical fire.

Practicing energy conservation through the holidays will help control the peak in energy demand Fort Benning usually experiences during this time of year. Smart energy use now will allow more energy for use later in the year, especially during air conditioning season.

Retirement-eligible NG, Reservists may select survivor benefits plan

Army News Service

When members of the Army National Guard and Army Reserve complete 20 years of qualifying service, they receive the coveted "20-year letter" from their state adjutant general and the U.S. Army Reserve Personnel Center here.

Receiving a 20-year letter means a lot to a Guard or Reserve soldier – it notifies the soldier that he or she will be eligible for retirement pay upon reaching age 60. But another critical event happens when the 20-year letter goes out – the soldier receives limited opportunity to elect coverage under the Reserve component Survivor Benefit Plan.

Receipt of the Survivor Benefit package requires the soldier to act promptly to choose one of three options. The choice will determine if, when, and in what amount the soldier's survivor(s) receive a permanent income from a portion of the soldier's base amount of retired pay. By law, the soldier must pick an option within 90 calendar days of receiving the package.

The three options are:

– The soldier chooses to defer a decision on enrolling in the program until applying for retired pay at age 60. If a soldier picks this option and dies before reaching age 60, the survivors receive nothing.

– The soldier chooses to have survivors start receiving benefits on what would have been his or her 60th birthday, should he or she die before reaching age 60.

– The soldier chooses to provide survivors with coverage effective as of the day immediately following the date of his or her death.

The last two options have costs, and there are a variety of alternatives that depend on the soldier's marital or family status. To help the soldier choose which option to select, the package includes detailed information, instructions and cost tables.

For information about the Survivor Benefit Plans, members of the Army National Guard should contact their state adjutant general. Army Reserve soldiers may obtain this information through the information paper which is mailed along with the packet.

Reserve soldiers may write to the following address for answers to specific questions:

Military medical school seeks applicants

Army News Service

The Defense Department's tuition-free military medical school has extended the deadline to apply for a seat in its August 1989 freshman class.

The Uniformed Services University of the Health Sciences will accept applications for its F. Edward Herbert School of Medicine through Jan. 2, 1989 – two months past the previous Nov. 1 deadline.

Located in Bethesda, Md., USUHS trains doctors for the Army, Navy, Air Force and U.S. Public Health Service. When accepted by the university, students serve on active duty as reserve, commissioned officers in grade O-1, receiving full pay and benefits while they pursue a medical degree.

Upon graduation, they are promoted to the grade of O-4 and incur a seven-year service obligation (not including graduate medical training such as residencies or internships).

According to USUHS spokesman Air Force SSgt. James H. Guthrie, applications to the school of medicine have dropped over the past 15 months.

"Our program combines a traditional medical education with military medical studies," Guthrie wrote in an Oct. 24 letter. "Since this program is designed specifically to create military medical officers, we want to assure that all qualified active duty members are aware of this educational opportunity."

To qualify for the school's August 1989 freshman class, applicants must:

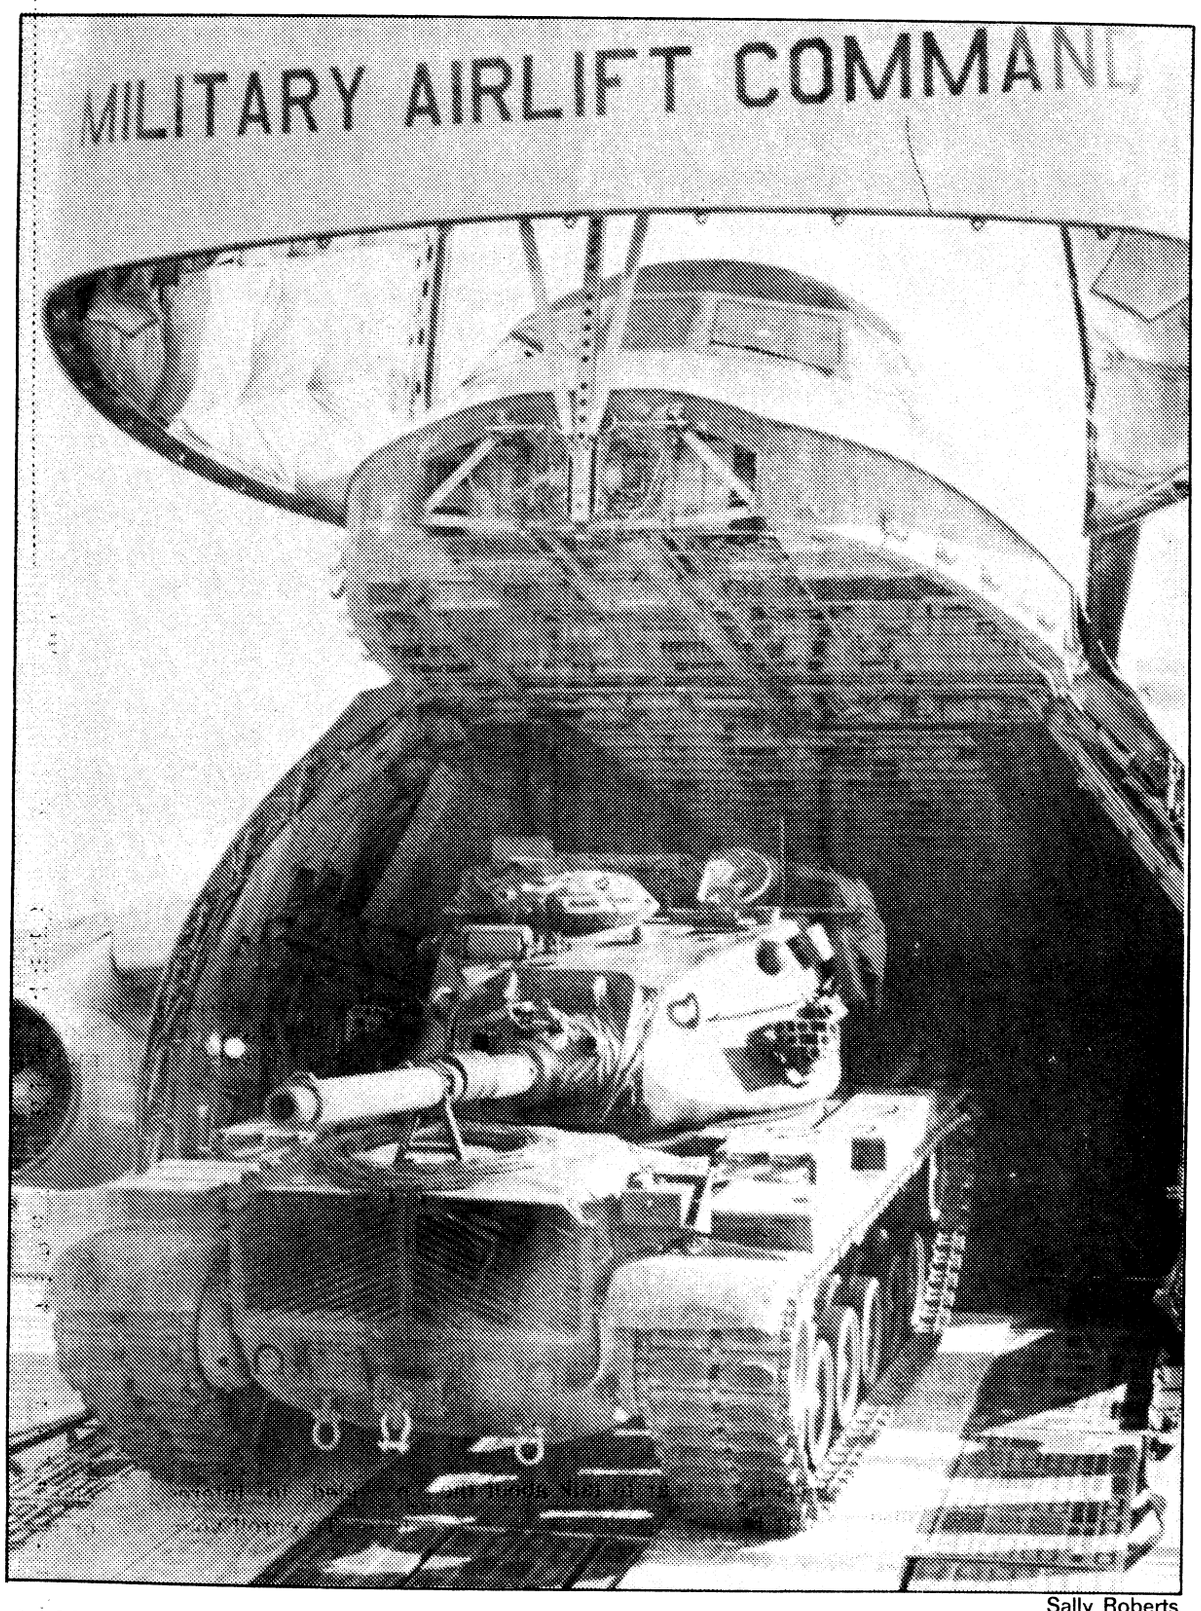
★Be 27 years old or younger on June 30, 1989. An age waiver of up to four years is available to applicants with military experience.

★Have earned a (baccalaureate degree from an accredited U.S. college or university.

★Have completed at least one academic year in each of the following, with labs: general or inorganic chemistry; physics; organic chemistry; and biology. One academic year of mathematics (through calculus) and college English is also required.

★Obtain a qualifying score on the Medical College Admission Test. Scores from tests taken no more than three years before August 1989 must be provided.

★Submit a "letter of approval" from the appropriate branch of service (if the applicant is in the military).



Prospective applicants may obtain admission brochures by writing to the Director of Admissions, F. Edward Herbert School of Medicine of the Uniformed Services University, 4301 Jones Bridge Road, Bethesda, Md. 20814-4799, or by calling (301) 295-3101 (collect calls accepted) or AUTOVON 295-3101. 197th Infantry Brigade conducts joint operation with Airborne Div

By Sally Roberts
197th Infantry Brigade

Soldiers from the 197th Infantry Brigade recently proved that a mechanized fighting force can swiftly mobilize for combat and successfully operate under the command and control of an Airborne Division.

Although the exercise simulated a deployment outside the United States, it actually took place here on Benning. Soldiers from the XVIII Airborne Corps, Fort Bragg, N.C. and the 101st Airborne Division (Air Assault), Fort Campbell, Ky. were deployed here as the main element of the force.

Sally Roberts

An M60 tank is loaded into the belly of a C5-A aircraft in preparation for a tactical airlift training exercise.

A 197th mechanized company team, consisting of more than 300 soldiers from the 1st Battalion, 58th Infantry; 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor; and Troop A, 15th Cavalry were attached to the Division.

For the 197th soldiers, the exercise afforded some out of the ordinary training. These soldiers performed tactical airlift operations and loaded heavy equipment such as M60 tanks, improved TOW vehicles and a diesel fuel pod on to aircraft, and prepared to deploy with their equipment.

According to Lt. Col. Arch Arnold III, commander, 1/58th Inf., this exercise taught the mechanized soldiers, as well as the airborne division soldiers, many lessons in fighting the battle as a combined arms team.

"We were a mechanized force working for a Division that we weren't familiar with, and we had to work out all sorts of situations," Arnold said. "If we needed a new engine for an M113 Armored Personnel Carrier or tank ammunition, the airborne soldiers, who are accustomed to repairing helicopters, would have to find our parts and supplies through their supply system; and, that would be something different for them."

These short-notice exercises are a valuable tool in measuring the readiness of a unit and are expected to become a regular part of the 197th's training scheme.

Training Obstacle

Pvt. 2 Michael Porter (l) and Pvt. 2 Benjamin Pertilo, both with 72nd Engineers Company (Combat), set up track obstacles reinforced by bobbed wire during a recent training exercise for IOBC students. The obstacles were set up to slow down opposing forces to allow troops to make a better attack.

More accidents occur in rush hour traffic

National Safety Council

Motor vehicle accidents occur more during morning and evening rush hours than at any other time during the day, says the National Safety Council. To avoid colliding with other vehicles in heavy traffic, follow these defensive driving tips:

★Remember to maintain at least two seconds of traveling time between your car and the vehicle ahead. This will give you more time to react should the driver ahead break suddenly.

★Always be prepared to slow down or change lanes quickly to avoid an accident. Don't delay braking!

★Travel at the same pace as other drivers, but stay within the speed limit.

★Avoid congested routes whenever possible.

HHC, 1/29th Inf. clinches flag football championship

By George Mingee
197th Public Affairs Office

HHC, 1st Bn, 29th Inf., clinched the USAIC Flag Football Championship beating HHB 2/10th FA 22-18 Friday, Nov. 25 at Doughboy Stadium. The champions finished the season undefeated with a record of 10-0.

The first half was a real grudge match as the teams swapped turns taking the lead with each score.

HHB scored early in the game taking advantage of errors by 1/29th's quarterback Jimmy Lewis. Luther Walker of HHB intercepted a pass by Lewis, giving his team possession on 1/29th's 20-yard line. Two plays later, Fred Heldt of HHB caught a touchdown pass for a score of 6-0.

Lewis made up for the play by connecting with Anthony Huffman for a touchdown, and Kevin Merriweather made the two-point conversion seizing the lead for 1/29th, 8-6.

HHB regained the lead 12-8 when quarterback Darryl Quick returned the kick off to 1/29th's 18-yard line and set up Michael Washington's 18-yard sprint into the end zone.

Another touchdown by Anthony Huffman and a two-point conversion ended the first half with 1/29th leading 16-12.

As the second half opened, 1/29 took a 10-point lead on a 10-yard run into the end zone by Antonio Underwood.

Heavy penalties suffered by 1/29th gave HHB's Michael Washington the opportunity to bring the score to 22-18. But, time ran out before HHB could catch up with 1/29.

El Salvadoran officer candidates graduate at School of Americas

By Keith Johnson
USARSA

The first-ever stateside Officer Candidate Course for El Salvador ends today as 69 candidates graduate after 25 weeks of training at the United States Army School of the Americus.

The course focuses on training and evaluating officer candidates in leadership abilities for future commissioning as infantry second lieutenants, according to Capt. Gregory L. Alderete, El Salvador Cadet company commander.

"A candidate may be academically, physically and militarily proficient but unable to lead," said Alderete. "That candidate can fail the course because of this inability to lead."

The course is divided into two phases. The first phase, which lasts 18 weeks, is the Officer Candidate School portion of the course.

During the first phase, candidates are schooled in many different areas including first aid, land navigation, communications, weaponry, small-unit infantry tactics, movement and infiltration techniques as well as psychological operations and internal defense and development.

The candidates are evaluated daily during the first phase not only in leadership but also academics, marksmanship and physical fitness. To continue past phase one, the candidate must be successful in each of these areas.

"The candidate must be a well-rounded group leader," said 1st Sgt. Lazaro Ramirez, cadet company first sergeant. "He may be the top guy academically, but he may be unable to lead. El Salvador doesn't need new officers who cannot lead."

Once the candidates successfully complete all facets of phase one, they are prepared to begin phase two.

The second phase deals more with physical aspects of combat such as hand-to-hand combat, bayonet training, water survival, military mountaineering and combat patrol training.

"It is designed to correlate with the U.S. Army Ranger course, using the same standards," explained Capt. Ramon Valle, a USARSA patrolling operations instructor.

The candidates receive two-weeks mountain and combat patrol training at Camp Frank D. Merrill, Dahlonega, Ga. Then, they get two more weeks of swamp combat patrol training at Eglin Air Force Base, Fla.

"The second phase is a challenge both physically and mentally," said SFC Jose A. Rangel, a USARSA Ranger and instructor. "By placing the candidates under rigorous and intense conditions, they're put into a position where they'll do something they usually wouldn't do. This training helps the students learn how to control emotions, such as fear."

Eating two meals a day and averaging two to three hours of sleep a night during the 58-day second phase takes its toll on the student. But, the psychologically taxing nature of the course is important in order to evaluate each candidate as small-unit leaders in planning, movement, action on an objective and establishing a patrol base.

"Being put under these conditions will build teamwork and prepare better officers who are able to accomplish their mission," said Rangel.

USARSA conducts C&GSC graduation

By Marco Morales
USARSA

Sixty-one officers, representing 13 Latin American countries and the United States, will graduate today from the Command and General Staff Course at the United Sates Army School of the Americas.

Lt. Gen. Leonard P. Wishart, III, deputy commanding general, TRADOC, will be the guest speaker for the graduation ceremony.

Considered to be one of USARSA'S most prestigious courses, the 45-week C&GSC is the same as the course offered at Fort Leavenworth, Kan. and Maxwell AFB, Ala., except that the course at USARSA is taught in Spanish.

The course prepares field grade officers of all services for duty as commanders and general staff officers in their respective armed forces.

Academically oriented to university and post-graduate level of instruction, some of the subject areas taught include staff operations, management, tactics, logistics, strategic studies and internal defense.

The course also includes, through funding by the Department of Defense' Information program, an orientation tour of part of the U. S. This tour includes visits to major military installations and service schools along the eastern seaboard and Washington, D. C.

New center opens to assist reservists

Army News Service

Reserve soldiers have a new source for information about some entitlements.

The ARPERCEN Incentive Administration Center opened Oct. 15 as a central location to assist all Army Reserve soldiers in resolving problems, obtaining information, and getting answers to questions about the Montgomery G.I. Bill, the Selected Reserve Incentive Programs and the Army Continuing Education System.

The Selected Reserve Incentive Program includes enlistment bonuses, educational assistance, re-enlistment bonuses and affiliation bonuses. The Student Loan Repayment Program, Health Professional Loan Repayment Program and the new Specialized Training Assistance Program for Medical and Army Nurse Corps officers also come under SRIP.

Soldiers who've been having trouble receiving benefits from any of these programs, soldiers who believe themselves eligible, or soldiers who just want information about the programs should follow these steps:

If you're a Troop Program Unit member, first ask your unit personnel office or unit administrator. If they can't help, contact the unit's next higher headquarters. If the higher headquarters can't help, contact the IAC.

The IAC's mailing address is Commander, ARPERCEN, ATTN: DARP-PAT-A, 9700 Page Boulevard, St. Louis, Mo., 63132-5200. The autovon telephone number is 693-7740/7741/7742. The commercial number is (314) 263-7740/7741/7742.

Marksmen set record at match

By Tommy Pool
USAMU correspondent

Soldiers from the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit established a record during a shooting competition at the Marine Corps Air-Guard Combat Center, Twentynine Palms, Ca., Nov. 18-20.

Competing in the 1,000-yard, long-range, four-man team championships, members of the U.S. Army "Blue" squad scored a new national record total of 799 out of 800 possible points.

The record shattered the old national mark of 796, which was also set by the Army "Blue" team in matches held earlier this year at Quantico, Va.

Members of the record setting "Blue" team included Spec. Timothy Jackson and SSgt. John Cubb. Both had perfect scores of 200 points. They were joined by Spec. Eric Uptagrafft at 199, and SSgt. Lewis Silvis, who also fired a perfect score of 200, as well as serving as the "Blue" team coach.

The Army squad also won the service rifle category in the 1,000-yard team event, with a score of 769 out of 800.

Members of the winning team were SFC Bruce Gilbreath, Spec. Steven Cerny and PFC's Steve Benoit and Lance Hopper.

In individual competition, SFC Gilbreath also won the long range aggregate championship after scoring a total of 379 out of 400 points.

Second and third place also went to USAMU members including SSgt. Lewis Silvis with 377 points, followed by Spec. Steven Cerny at 376.

Scouting activities keep girls busy

By Lorraine Spakowski
Girl Scouts Troop Leader

In the spirit of world friendship, Girl Scouts from Junior Troop 47 met Nov. 22 with El Salvadoran soldiers who are attending the United States Army School of the Americas. The girls passed out cookies to about 40 students.

As part of the entertainment, the girls taught the students songs like "Alice the Camel" and "Singing in the Rain."

Troop 47 has been very busy this month with several other activities. During a sleep-over at the Main Post Girl Scout Hut on Nov. 11, they worked on their Aerospace Badge. Maj. Antonio Lopez from USARSA'S Air Force Element visited the group with his flight gear to talk about the Air Force.

Also, the troop's patrol leaders participated in an installation ceremony to welcome new patrol leaders.

Girl Scouts from Junior Troops 47, 104 and 66, and Brownie Troops 76 and 289 recently participated in the Officer Wives' Club Bazaar. The girls sold barrettes, craft hoops, wooden flowers and racks, Christmas tree decorations and jelly bean pigs.

All girls, ages 5-17, are encouraged to participate in the five age levels of Girl Scouting. Troop meetings are held in neighborhood huts and uniforms are not required.

Currently, adult volunteers are needed to help provide leadership as troop leaders or co-leaders. Child care and training are provided to interested volunteers. To enroll your child or to volunteer to help a troop, please call Wanda Campbell at 689-1293.

Infantry Board becomes part of new TEXCOM

By Tom Fix
USAIC Public Affairs Office

His three tanks are like no other on post. And each day that he comes to work at Benning's Sandy Patch, SFC Don Sanks knows that the operation of those tanks may have Army-wide implications.

Sanks and his two soldiers, Sgt. Aaron Casey and Spec. Gilbert Arreguin, operate modified M-103 tanks, which, in actuality, become the targets for anti-armor tests conducted each year by Fort Benning's unique Manned Evasive Target Team.

Sanks is chief of METT, a unit in the Heavy Weapons Test Division of the U.S. Army Infantry Board – one of the oldest commands on post and one which recently became part of TRADOC's newest two-star command –Test and Experimentation Command.

At the start of this fiscal year, the Army placed its eight test boards under one command for better effectiveness and efficiency.

According to a TEXCOM spokesman, the consolidation of all testing and experimentation agencies of the Army is a step forward in developing a cohesive testing community.

"Our mission, however, remains the same," says Col. Barrie E. Zais, President of the Infantry Board. "We will continue to test infantry organizations, training, doctrine and equipment in the hands of the actual soldier."

Zais said the Board will continue to operate the same way it has in the past, but its marching orders will come from the new TEXCOM headquarters, located at Ft. Hood.

"We now receive our tasking and funding from Fort Hood," said Zais, emphasizing that consolidation of testing requirements and funding responsibilities should allow the Board to better serve the Infantry as a branch and, at the same time, help the Infantry School field the best trained and equipped infantry in the world.

One of the oldest units on post, the Infantry Board will remain at Benning under the new organization. It will continue in direct support of the Chief of Infantry, Maj. Gen. Michael F. Spigelmire.

Under the consolidation plan, TEXCOM will command nine test and experimentation boards:

–Infantry Board at Fort Benning
–Armor and Engineer Board at Fort Knox
–Air Defense Artillery Board at Fort Bliss
–Field Artillery Board at Fort Sill
–Aviation Board at Fort Rucker
–Communication and Electronics Board at Fort Gordon
–Intelligence and Security Board at Fort Huachuca
–Airborne and Special Operation Test Board at Fort Bragg
–Test and Experimentation Center Board at Fort Lewis

TEXCOM will also include the Experimentation Center at Fort Ord and the Combined Arms Test Center, located with TEXCOM's headquarters at Fort Hood.

According to Maj. Gen. Robert L. Drudik, TEXCOM's commander, consolidation of evaluators and equipment under one command will provide better test results which, in the long run, will improve the quality of the Army across the board.

Zais says that quality will not suffer in the re-organization, adding that changes will have no perceptible impact. In fact, he says the most noticeable change will be a new patch that is under design. Instead of the Infantry School's "Follow Me" patch, Board soldiers will don the new TEXCOM patch.

For Sanks, Casey and Arreguin, the new patch will have no effect on their work. They will continue to operate their modified M-103 and attempt to evade the anti-armor missiles that streak toward them.

Tippy family graduates third airborne soldier

By Ann McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

During jump week at 1st Battalion, 507th PIR (Airborne School), it's not unusual to see a father come and make one of the qualifying jumps with his child. Usually, mom is there too, waiting anxiously at the drop zone hoping the best but thinking the worst. She is afraid that one of her loved ones might get injured during the exercise.

This scene is enacted quite frequently during the year at the school. It happened during Co. C's last jump week. The scene was the same with the exception of one thing, mom wasn't afraid; she was wishing she was up in that plane so she could jump too.

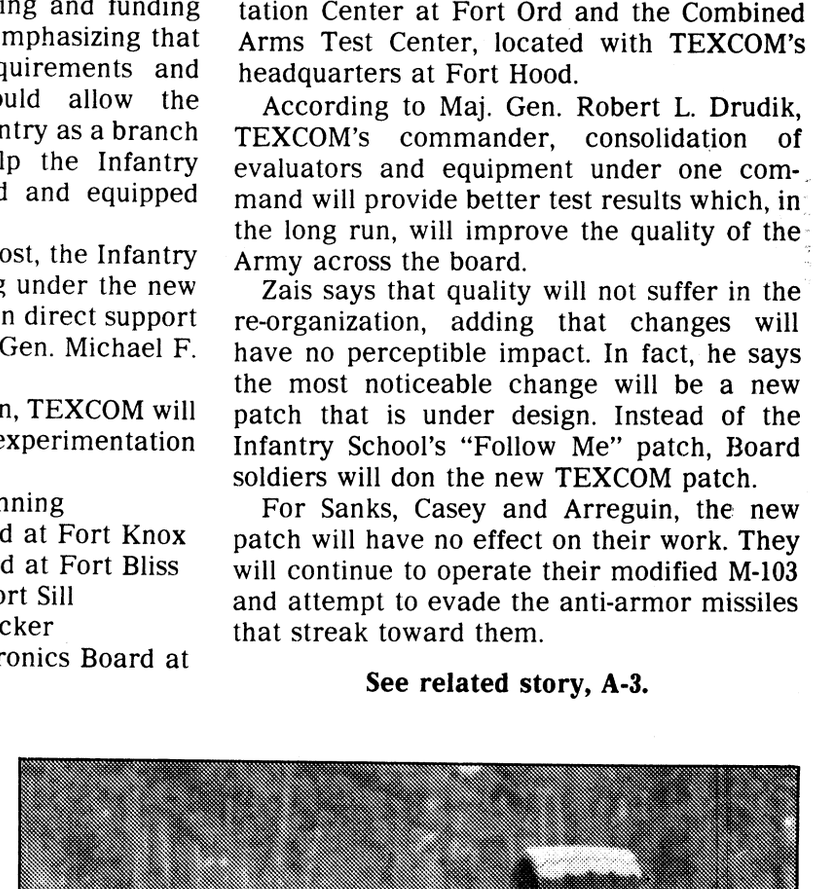
A few years ago, she could have been in the plane, but she has since left the service making it impossible to join her son in the sky.

Margaret Tippy had to wait on the ground for her husband, MSgt. John Tippy, and her stepson, Pvt. John Tippy, Jr., to make John Jr.'s final jump.

Now, the entire family is airborne qualified.

Dad, who is with A Co., 3rd Bn., 5th Special Forces Group, Fort Bragg, N.C., graduated from the course in 1966. Mom graduated in 1976. Now Junior proudly sports his own set of wings. His dad pinned on the same wings his mom earned 12 years ago.

Young Tippy has some big boots to fill. Dad is special forces qualified, a former HALO instructor and former Golden Knight. Mom was the third woman to ever graduate as an honor graduate from Jump School.



If there was a Who's Who book for airborne personnel their names would most likely be in it.

Their notoriety however, doesn't phase the newest airborne member of the family. "I have never felt any pressure from my parents to follow in their footsteps," he said.

As a matter of fact, he didn't even tell his parents he was enlisting in the Army or that he had requested to go to airborne school.

"I was floored when he told me he had joined," the eldest Tippy said. "I

Various Voices: Name one way Fort Benning can save money.

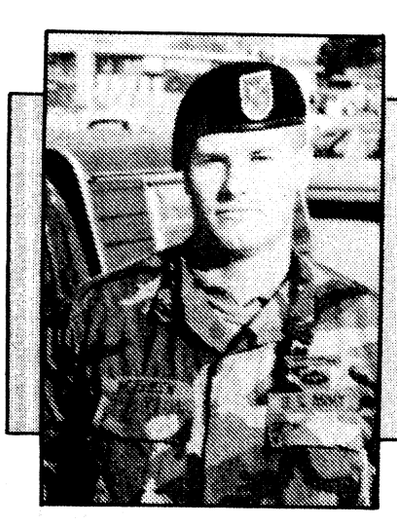
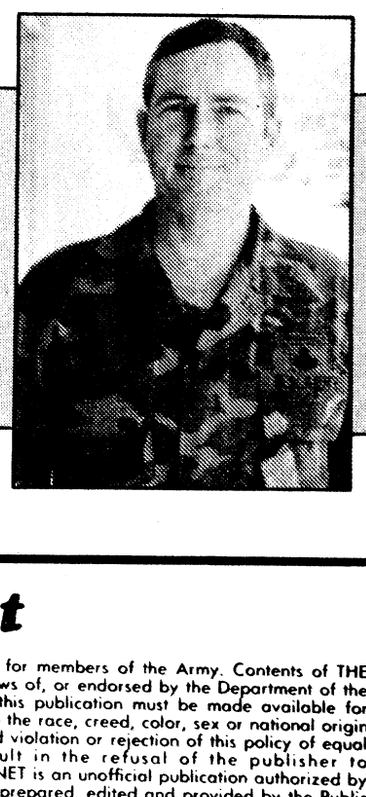
Adrienne Mathieu, family member - "I think the post should institute a recycling program. Soldiers and civilians drinks thousands of cans of soda each day and if they deposited them in a designated area the funds gained from the turned in cans could be used in the Morale, Welfare and Recreation Fund."

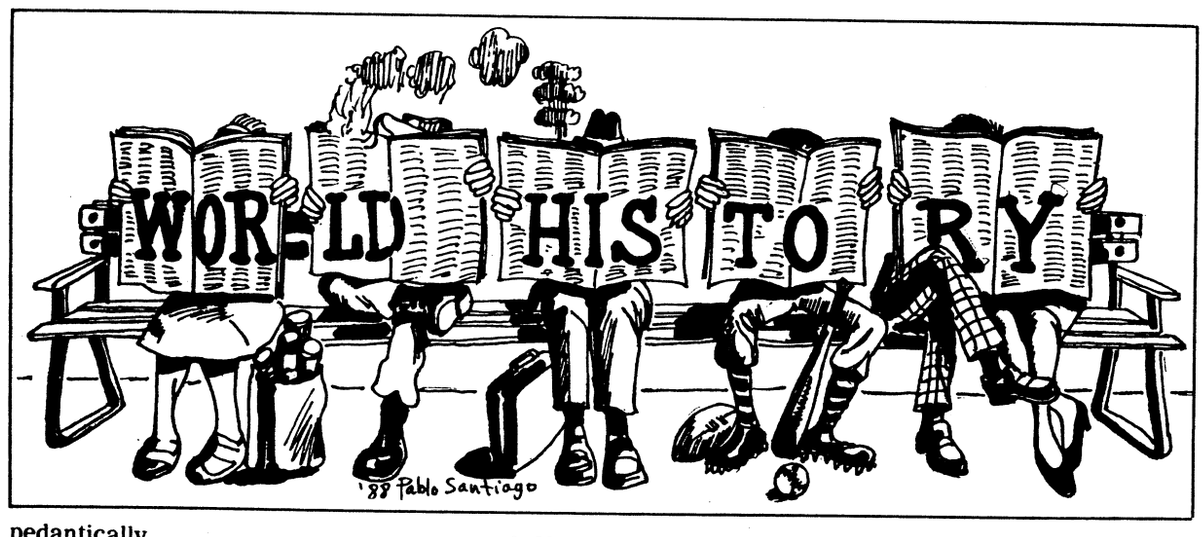


Brigitte Foster, family member - "I think that this post shoula keep closer tabs on energy usage in the housing areas. I often see water and electricity used when it is not necessary."



SSgt. Gregory Samuel, Co. B, 4th Bn., 36th Inf., 2nd ITB - "I think that Fort Benning should urge units to use the Self Help program more often. The program saves money and gives soldiers the satisfaction of doing it themselves.

Howard Hall, TASC, DPTM - "I think that when a person is hired for a position he or she should be required to have a working knowledge of every position in that office. Often times a person filling that position is the only one who knows how to do it and the office is crippled in their absence.



PFC James Merricken, Co. B, 3rd Rgr. Bn., 75th Rgr. Regt. - "I think there should be more emphasis placed on Energy Conservation."

Maj. Robert Watson, USARSA - "I don't really see how Fort Benning can save any money. Funding follows the assignment of a mission. This post has certain requirements it has to meet and it has to use money to complete them. If the mission has been properly planned there should be no wasted funds."

Snively trips over tongue and lands knee deep in Pearl Harbor history

By Clyde Snively
USAIC Public Affairs Office

"Next Wednesday is December 7," the major announced pompously as though we should all kow tow to the December 7th gods.

"So," I said. "And the following Wednesday is December 14 and after that we have December 21."

"Those who forget history, are doomed to repeat it," the major said, cutting me off as I was about to launch into January.

"Snively, Bryson, McDonald, Cooper, does December 7 mean nothing to any of you?" he implored.

"It's not pay day is it?" Bryson, who has a new addition to the family to feed, asked.

"It's not the beginning of the half-day schedule is it?" Cooper asked, thinking about the extra time he'd get to spend with his girl.

"It's the 47th anniversary of the bombing of Pearl Harbor," Agatha piped up from her corner of the room.

"Way to go Aggie, show us all up. Make us look like fools," I said. "And here I thought we were supposed to be a team. Nice going."

"My name's not Aggie," she retorted, "and I see nothing wrong with knowing a little history and not being afraid to speak up."

"Hah. It may be history for us, but for you it's just part of your past," I said evily.

"Okay, okay. That's enough. Snively, you just earned yourself an assignment. You're doing a research paper on Pearl Harbor. Report back to us next Wednesday, Dec. 7," the major said pedantically.

Naturally I whiled away all my free time and the next thing I knew, it was 10 p.m., Dec. 6. I called the major for a reprieve.

"Snively," he said between yawns. "You're still missing the point. Dec. 7 is Dec. 7. A report about Dec. 7 on Dec. 8 or 9, just won't do."

How's about Dec. 7, 1990, or better yet, 1991, the 50th anniversary," I interjected, getting the point at last.

"Tomorrow, Snively, tomorrow," he said, hanging up with a loud click.

Fortunately for me, the college library stays open 'til midnight. On the drive there I decided I'd do my report on what took place in Columbus on that fateful day. That meant reading back issues of the local newspapers.

At the library, I grabbed a couple of rolls of December 1941 microfilm and headed for a microfilm reader.

A coed was on the machine next to the one I picked, studying high fashion modeling from the pages of Vogue and Harper's Bazaar.

I finally managed to get my thumbs to work and raced through the pages of history until I came to Dec. 7, 1941.

I noted the papers had several extra editions that day, headlines screaming the news of the attack on Pearl Harbor and FDR's declaration of war.

The coed looked up about then as she asked, "What publication is that?"

"Columbus Ledger-Enquirer," I said.

"Oh," she said, turning back to her high necklines and padded shoulders.

I was busy reading about what Roosevelt said about the surprise attack when she looked over again.

"Like, is that old?" she wanted to know.

"December 1941," I said, reading that more than 2,000 Americans lost their lives because of the surprise attack.

"I see," she said, flipping through some more microfilmed pages of her fashion magazine.

I was now at the part where Fort Benning's commanding general, Brig., Gen. Omar C. Bradley, told a reporter that training of the 60,000 soldiers assigned to Fort Benning would continue as usual until further word from Washington.

"Well, is that, uhm, the Vietnam War you're reading about?" she asked.

"No," I said, "it's World War II. It took place before Vietnam."

"I thought that was a little old for Vietnam," she said, turning back for the last time to wide belts and narrow waists.

I marveled at the keen intellect and the ability of the major to coin a phrase. Here was living proof of what he'd said about history repeating itself.

If my generation was as obtuse as that college student, what chance did we have. The past is certainly forgotten, not even last month's top 20 tunes are remembered. We are doomed to repeat our mistakes.

I certainly learned my lesson. I'll never call Aggie, er, A.J. old again...at least not in front of the major.

Bill of Rights protects American freedoms

Army News Service

(EDITOR'S NOTE: The following comment on the contributions of George Mason to the strength of our nation is excerpted from the Seventeenth Annual Kenneth J. Hodson Lecture delivered March 24 in Charlottesville, Va., by Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of Virginia Harry L. Carrico. Titled "George Mason, John Marshall and the Constitution," the entire lecture is published in the summer 1988 issue of "Military Law Review" (DA Pamphlet 27-100-121).)

Being a Virginian, I am, of course, extremely proud of the part the Virginia delegates played in the Constitutional Convention of 1787. The roles of George Washington and James Madison are well known, but I think George Mason of Gunston Hall in Fairfax County, though a lesser-known delegate, is due special bicentennial recognition. Far too few Americans realize the significance of George Mason's contribution to American independence and the establishment of constitutional government in this country. Probably even fewer could tell where he lived during the period of his greatest achievement. Considering what his life meant not only to Americans, but also to those beyond our shores, George Mason is a near-forgotten man in history. I will not recite a biographical sketch of Mason. Instead, I shall focus upon two major documents he authored at crucial points in our evolution from 13 British colonies to an independent nation, specifically the Fairfax Resolves and the Virginia Declaration of Rights. With these documents, Mason engraved the names of Fairfax County and Virginia forever on the record of the American independence movement, and, with both documents, he put his personal stamp indelibly upon the course of history. Thomas Jefferson said of Mason that he was "of the first order of greatness." In the Resolves and the Declaration, Mason's genius shines through with unquestionable clarity. Mason disdained the political life or anything else that would take him away from Gunston Hall and his family. Yet, he could never remain completely aloof from the call to20 public service. Inevitably, he was drawn into service as a member of the House of Burgesses, later as a member of the House of Delegates, as a member of the Virginia Convention of 1776, as a delegate to the Constitutional Convention of 1787, and as a member of the Virginia Convention of 1788 on the ratification of the Constitution.

A TURNING POINT

My story begins, however, in Boston. In December 1773, a band of Bostonians masquerading as Indians boarded a British ship in Boston harbor and threw overboard 340 chests of tea belonging to the British East India Company. Parliament responded with enactment of the Boston Port Bill, which effectively closed Boston harbor to all trade. The closing of the part brought swift and positive reaction up and down the Atlantic seaboard, evidenced both by the supplying of food and money to the beleaguered Bostonians and by the stiffening of resistance to British rule. In Virginia, freeholders gathered in county meetings and chose representatives for an August 1774 convention in Williamsburg of the membership of the then-dissolved House of Burgesses. On July 14, 1774, Fairfax freeholders, meeting at the county courthouse in Alexandria, chose George Washington and Charles Broadwater to represent the county at the Williamsburg Convention. following this election, the meeting was adjourned until July 18, at which time the assembly would consider instructions to its new delegates and measures designed to persuade the British to redress colonial grievances. On July 17, Mason rode from Gunston20 Hall to Mount Vernon and spent the night there. He and Washington undoubtedly discussed the paper Mason intended to present to th freeholders the next day, and the paper as presented may have contained Washington's ideas. However, the document was written entirely in Mason's hand and bore his literary style. Washington and Mason rode together into Alexandria the next day for the meeting of the Fairfax freeholders. With Washington presiding, the meeting adopted what Mason himself styled the "Fairfax County Resolves."

The freeholders directed Washington and Broadwater to submit the resolutions to the Williamsburg convention in August "as the Sense of the People of this County, upon the Measures proper to be taken in the present alarming and dangerous Situation of America." Washington conveyed the Fairfax Resolves to Williamsburg personally, and they were submitted, along with resolutions from other counties, to the August convention. The Resolves formed the framework of the Virginia Association of 1774, adopted by the convention as an effort to halt exportation and importation to and from Great Britain. Washington then took the Resolves with him to the meeting of the first Continental Congress in Philadelphia. In revised form, the resolutions appeared as the Continental Association, adopted by the Congress on Oct. 20, 1774, a measure again directed toward the enforcement of non-importation and non-exportation.

SETTING THE STAGE

Notable by their verbosity, the Resolves as Mason originally conceived them consisted of 24 numbered paragraphs. Time does not permit me to review them all, although I commend them to you for future reading. Possibly the most significant was the second resolution, which stated that an important part of representative government is "the fundamental Principle of the People's being governed by no Laws, to which they have not given their Consent, by Representatives freely chosen by themselves." By this, Mason pointed out that the Townsend Acts, the Boston Port Bill, and similar laws of Parliament denied the colonists the right to be heard. In the third resolution, he forcefully stated that "own Provincial Assemblys or Parliaments," rather than the British Parliament, had the right to exercise legislative power. In this resolution, Mason gave formal recognition to the theory that the American colonies could never be adequately represented in the British Parliament. Reviewed in the entirety, the Resolves left no stone unturned. Taxation without representation was viewed as tantamount to slavery, trials by jury were applauded so long as jurisdiction remained within the colonies, the Boston Port bill was condemned, and the issues of non-

Soldier climbs to top of Mana Peak

By Ron Allen and Agatha James
Bayonet staff writers

"Why do men climb mountains?" Some people think it's the desire to conquer nature. Others think it's to accomplish something that seems impossible.

For SFC Joseph L. Mattison of the 5th Ranger Training Battalion at Dahlonega, Ga., it's the challenge. Mattison was one of 32 mountaineers who recently embarked on an expedition to climb the 23,800-foot high Mana Peak, located about 225 miles northeast of New Delhi, India, in the Himalaya Mountains.

A platoon sergeant trainer at Camp Frank D. Merrill, Mattison was one of 23 climbers who actually scaled to the mountain's summit. Exercise Mana, a joint venture between the U. S. Army and the Indian government, was conducted to improve diplomatic relations between the two countries.

Mattison, along with the other climbers, arrived in New Delhi in late August. "From New Delhi, we drove to Mana Village," he said. "We continued our journey on foot from there because the village was literally the end of the road."

The climbers used a southwest route to scale the mountain. No expedition has successfully climbed the southwest route in more than 50 years when Frank Smythe first did it in 1938.

The team set up three camps along the way. Camp One was established Sept. 6 at 17,500 feet; Camp Two, Sept. 9 at 20,700 feet and Camp Three Sept. 12 at 22,700 feet. Weather conditions prevented the climbers from setting up a fourth camp.

"Between camps two and three, we shifted our original route slightly to the west to avoid numerous crevices that were open wider than we had expected." Mattison said.

He reached the summit Sept. 15 as the rope leader of a four-man American team. Mattison's team included Sgt. Shane B. Shisler of the U. S. Marine Corps Mountain Warfare Training Center and Sgts. Timothy P. Brown and Tony G. Hale of the Northern Warfare Training Center.

"We each took flags to the top," he said. "The first group of Americans to reach the summit took the traditional U. S. Flag, the Army Flag and unit flags, so I carried a Cub Scout flag from Cub Scout Pack 221 in Gainesville, Ga." Mattison is a webelos den leader for Pack 221.

"I enjoy mountain climbing," he said. "Right now, it's up to the Army when and if I get another such climb. But, if I do, I'll take them as they come."

Mattison said when the team got back to New Delhi, they were invited to visit Sir Edmund Hillary, the first man ever to reach the top of Mount Everest in 1953. Hillary, now 69, is the New Zealand Ambassador to India.

"I received a lot of support from my unit during this climb," Mattison said. Fellow soldiers checked on his family for him while he was gone.

"My family also gave me a lot of support," he said. "Although my wife, Jan, wasn't pleased to see me go, she was happy I got the chance. She wrote me every day. I received her first letter Sept. 13 at Camp Two. A "high altitude porter" was paid 50 rupees ($3.50) to deliver the mail up to 20,700 feet.

An experienced mountaineer and a 1985 graduate of the German Army Alpine School, Mattison reached his highest climb on the summit of Mana. However, it's probably not his last.

Infantry Board tankers get fired at

By Ann McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

"I've never been in combat," SFC Don Sanks said. "But with the job I have right now, I feel like I've been there."

Sanks, along with Sgt. Aaron Casey and Spec. Gilbert Arreguin, is assigned to the U.S. Army Infantry Board. Their job is to drive a modified tank around on a range while other soldiers who are testing new anti-armor weapons fire inert rounds at their hull.

They are the USAIB Manned Evasive Target Tank Team.

Three METTs are kept at USAIB to provide a non-cooperative, moving armor target manned by soldiers instead of computers, according to METT Team Chief Don Sanks.

"The METTs were made in 1974 and fielded here in 1977," Sanks said. "It is a modified M-103 heavy armor tank."

Sanks said that the primary changes to the tank are the removal of the turret and the addition of armor side-skirts to protect the tracks and the suspension.

When the crew is operating the tank, they are totally buttoned up inside. There is no ventilation except for a small fan system. Small slits of heavily reinforced plexiglass serve as windows for the driver to see where he is going.

The men wear fireproof suits and goggles for extra protection while they are inside the vehicle.

The crew is made up of a driver and an assistant. Normally, they operate the tank in two-hour periods. When testing, 16-hour days are common.

According to Sanks, USAIB conducts tests with the use of the METT at least three times per year. Each test usually lasts 50 days.

"When we are closed up inside the METT with all of our protective gear on, it gets pretty hot," he said. "So besides the fear of injury from the outside of the vehicle, we have to worry about heat casualties as well."

Injuries caused from impact damage are a concern, too. Although the rounds are inert, they could cause considerable damage to a regular armored vehicle.

Sanks explained that the impact is the same as a regular round and that the only difference is there is no warhead. He added that regular vehicles aren't designed to withstand repeated blows of that nature.

"Tanks aren't meant to be sitting ducks," he said. "They are extremely manueverable so they can either attack or evade the enemy depending on the circumstances."

Sanks and his crew are very familiar with the workings of a regular tank because they have Armor MOSs and, although they are not currently working in that MOS, they still have to remain proficient.

During a recent evaluation of their skills, the team scored higher than many of their peers who work with tanks every day.

It may be that because these men have been on both sides of the barrel that they were able to perform better.

However, they say it's not much fun being on the other side.

"You can see a round coming towards you when you are inside the METT," Arreguin said, "and you instinctively duck."

The entire team says that they have learned to turn their fear into humor and look at the lighter side of their job.

"It's our job, and we've accepted it," they said. "Being in combat arms, you have to take a chance, and we're taking it."

By using the following procedure, soldiers on the Family Housing Waiting List can use this chart to estimate when they can expect quarters:

Locate your category of housing.

Note eligibility date located on the same line as your category.

Calculate the time difference between the eligibility date listed and your eligibility date. The difference is the approximate time you still have to wait for housing.

EXAMPLE: If the latest eligibility date of the person who last received housing in your category was May 15, 1988, and your date of eligibility is Sept. 15, 1988, you can expect housing in about four months. If you do not know your eligibility date, contact the Family Housing Office at building 399, 545-3107.

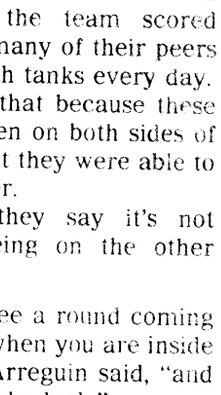
Young Tippy has plunged right into his new career. He recently graduated from advanced individual training and is going to Fort Bragg, N.C. for his first duty assignment.

"I have to admit the Army was a little different than I had expected," he said. "I guess I only saw one side of it when I was kid."



"I understand things a lot better now," he added.

"He's grown up so much it's hard to believe that the rangy kid I knew has changed into a proud soldier," the eldest Tippy said.

The whole family is now at Fort Bragg, N.C. together again as a family and defenders of freedom.

Soldiers get second chance at GI Bill

Army News Service

Some soldiers who chose not to participate in the Montgomery GI Bill when they enlisted now have a second chance to enroll in the program. Thanks to legislation recently signed by President Reagan, soldiers have from Dec. 1, 1988 until June 30, 1989 to re-enroll in the Montgomery GI Bill, according to Lt. Col. Robert Jaynes, program manager for enlistment incentives in the Office of the Deputy Chief of Staff for Personnel.

The Montgomery GI Bill is available to qualified soldiers now on active duty who enlisted between July 1, 1985 and June 30, 1988 and have served continuously on active duty.

Soldiers who enlisted for the Student Loan Repayment Program aren't eligible for the second-chance GI Bill enrollment, Jaynes said.

The GI Bill allows soldiers to have an amount withheld from their pay until they have accumulated $1,200. In return, the government offers basic education benefits of $9,000 for a two-year enlistment and $10,800 for a three-year or longer term of service.

Soldiers may have the money deducted from one paycheck or spread the withholding over as much as a year, depending on the remaining time in service. "This is not a contribution," Jaynes said. "It's a base-pay reduction by an amount that continues until the soldier has accumulated $1,200."

Since the program's inception, Jaynes said, all soldiers are considered automatically enrolled in the GI Bill when they enlist. Some decide to "disenroll," and they are the ones being given the second chance by the new legislation.

According to Jaynes, the Army has by far the highest number of members participating in the Montgomery GI Bill.

"Our monthly enrollment rate has been above 90 percent for more than 17 months, so we don't anticipate great numbers of soldiers coming in to re-enroll. However, we want to offer every qualified soldier the chance to take advantage of this program before they leave the service," he said.

To re-enroll, soldiers must first visit their local military personnel office or personnel service company to initiate a DD Form 2366. The next step is a visit to their finance office to arrange for the base-pay reduction. The monthly reduction will be determined by the finance officer based on the soldier's remaining service and available base-pay, but it can't be less than $100.

Soldiers wishing to enroll in the last month of their enlistment could do so if they had $1,200 base-pay available and were willing to have it all withheld at one time or if they were willing to remit the difference between their available base pay and $1,200, Jaynes said.

Jaynes stressed that the Montgomery plan isn't designed to pay entirely for anyone's education, but it may influence soldiers "on the brink" to continue their schooling.

"There are soldiers who would like to continue their education, but think they just can't afford it. The GI Bill may be the factor that tips the balance for them," he said. "We want every soldier to have that opportunity.

Shoplifting bad way to "get some kicks"

By Patrick Reed
Military Police Activity

The holiday season is here again! Along with Christmas cheer, however, the season brings an increase in criminal activity, especially shoplifting.

Shoplifting may seem like a somewhat trivial crime and the shoplifter might even consider it as a good way to "get some kicks" without hurting anyone. The shoplifter feels that the store's loss of merchandise does not affect anyone; and, the offense is so minor that if he or she is caught, the consequences will be negligible. This reasoning is totally wrong.

Regardless of how one attempts to rationalize it, shoplifting is stealing! A conviction for shoplifting on post may result in a hefty fine, time in jail and loss of PX or commissary privileges. The long term consequences of a shoplifting conviction also includes the inability to obtain or keep certain jobs or security clearances. It may also cause difficulty in obtaining loans and result in personal embarrassment. In short, the negative consequences for shoplifting can ruin your future.

In addition to the effects on the shoplifter, this crime penalizes legitimate consumers in the form of higher prices. Stores must cover their losses and take steps to limit future losses. These measures usually include purchasing expensive and sophisticated additional security devices and expanding security staffs. When a service member or his family shoplifts, they are literally stealing from themselves. That's because profits from exchange activities are used to improve the quality of life for military personnel and their families by providing such facilities as swimming pools, bowling lanes, libraries and craft shops.

How can you help? If you see someone shoplifting, report it. If your children bring home something new and you suspect they may have stolen it, question them about it immediately. Set an example by being honest yourself. With your help, we can "Take a bite out of crime." For further information, contact the Crime Prevention Branch, 545-7115/7154.

DoD works to overcome spousal employment rejection

By Mary A. Peterson
AFIS

The spouse was fully qualified for a prestigious position with a nation-wide health insurance company. She was sure she would land the job: She had been interviewed three times, had taken tests and had filled out countless forms. Then she was asked what her husband did. She was turned down for the job because the firm was looking for more "long-term stability."

The experience of losing a "good position"--particularly for military spouses-is a familiar one.

Not long ago the military spouse was labeled an employment risk. Hiring for part-time jobs or low-paying or minimum-salary positions was more commonplace. Why? Because employers considered the spouse a short-term or temporary employee.

Today, the Defense Department recognizes the obstacles military spouses face and is working to overcome them.

Part of the Telephone Job Bank service now being tested in southeastern Virginia assists and encourages employers to hire military family members.

"We want to emphasize to employers that family members are part of the defense family team. They know what commitment means-and asset employers look for," said Kathleen O'Beirne, DoD's family programs information coordinator.

A pamphlet-Looking for Employees?-has been published by DoDs Office of Family Policy and Support promoting the value of the military family member. It points out that military family members make good employees because:

They have the proven knowledge, skills and abilities to make viable contributions to organizations.

New tour lengths mean that they are likely to be in the area for a minimum of three to four years.

Many become permanent area residents.

Their lifestyle has helped them adapt readily to new environments-they have learned to invest their energies promptly in their new community.

In many cases, their contacts from previous duty stations and their relative ease in meeting new people may be helpful to businesses.

Fire division warns of holiday hazards

Fire Protection and Prevention Div.

Christmas Trees: The traditional Evergreen tree is a dangerous fire hazard. When selecting a tree, ensure that it has springy branches and green tight needles. A good method to test the freshness of a tree is to strike the butt against the ground to be sure that no needles fall out. When you take your tree home, be sure to keep the butt immersed in water. This will slow the drying out process. Should you decide to use an artificial tree, make sure that it has been treated with a fire retardant substance. If you use a metal tree, do not use electric lights, since a loose connection could energize the tree. Under no circumstances should lit candles ever be placed on a Christmas tree of any type!

Decorations: Before using your electric lights, check each string to ensure that there are no loose or broken sockets, or exposed wiring. Any wiring which shows signs of wearing or cracking should be discarded. When you purchase Christmas lights, always look for the Underwriters Laboratory label on the package. If you plan to decorate the exterior of your house with strings of lights, be sure to purchase lights which are designed for the purpose. Unplug your inside and outside lights before leaving your house, or retiring for the evening. When using decorative Christmas candles in your home, ensure that they have been placed away from trees, wreaths, packages, curtains, and any other possible source of ignition befor lighting them. If you will be hanging decorations, choose a sturdy ladder.

Dangerous Plants: As you decorate for the holiday season, please keep in mind that many of the traditional plants are extremely dangerous. Poinsettia leaves, mistletoe berries, and Holly berries are poisonous if eaten. Young children and household pets are not aware of this and may find them very tempting. Be sure to keep these beautiful and dangerous plants out of reach of any curious fingers and mouths.

Toys: While selecting toys for your children this Christmas, be sure to keep in mind their age and abilities, and choose toys which are appropriate. Pass up any toys with sharp edges or parts which could be pulled off and swallowed. Avoid toys that shoot projectiles! If you should choose an electrical toy, look for the Underwriters label. Electrically heated toys, such as stoves, wood burning tools, and plastic molding toys get just as hot as many electric stove burners. Parents should supervise closely the use of all such toys. Boys and girls who receive bicycles are seldom skilled in their use. Before permitting unsupervised use of a bike, ensure that your child can operate it skillfully, and observe all regulations and precautions.

Surcharge collections up by $4 million

Army News Service

Surcharge collections in U.S. Army Troop Support Agency commissaries rose by approximately $4 million for a total of $89.5 million in fiscal year 1987, TSA officials report.

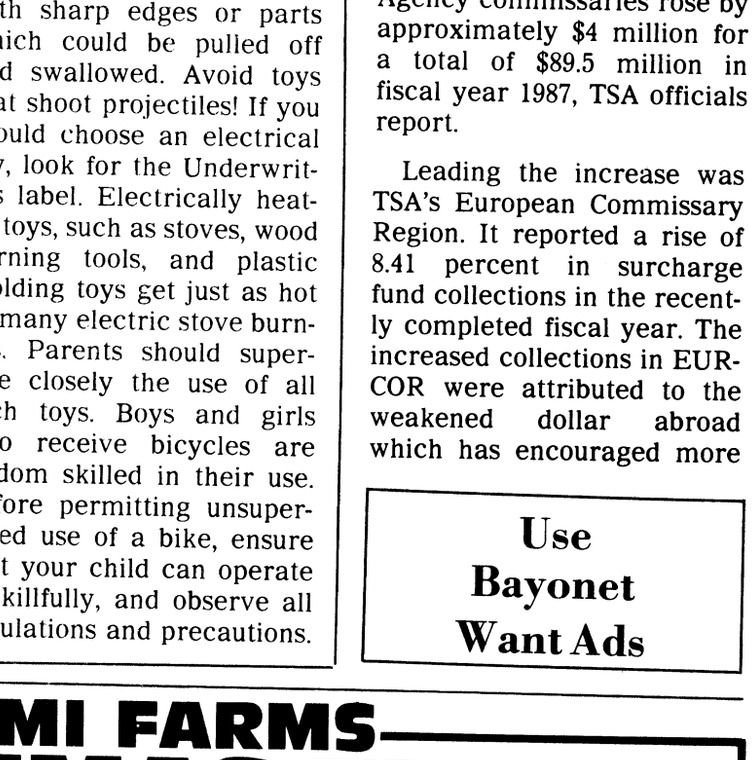
Leading the increase was TSA's European Commissary Region. It reported a rise of 8.41 percent in surcharge fund collections in the recently completed fiscal year. The increased collections in EURCOR were attributed to the weakened dollar abroad which has encouraged more purchases in TSA commissaries and less on European economies.

Both the Southeast and Northeast Commissary Regions checked in with surchage fund coffers of more than 4 percent over FY 87. SECOR reported an increase of 4.28 percent and NECOR of 4.58 percent.

In TSA's Western Commissary Region, the increase accounted to 3.7 percent. And in the Midwest Commissary Region the increase was 1.83 percent.

The increases in surcharge collections in the stateside regions are said to be attributed in part to military reservists being eligible to use TSA commissaries throughout the entire year as opposed to just six months in 1987.

Surcharge is the 5-percent fee added to a customer's total purchase before coupon discounts have been deducted from the bill.



The surcharge a customer pays benefits all shoppers because it pays for new construction, improvements to existing facilities, utilities such as electricity, heat, refrigeration, air conditioning and telephones for commissaries in the United States.

Additionally, this money is used for the purchase of automated data processing equipment, electronic cash registers, scanning systems, forklifts, display cases, meat processing tables and other equipment; supplies such as shelf labels, cash register tape, safety glasses, shopping carts; and maintenance and services such as: equipment repair, laundry of uniforms and cleaning supplies.

Surcharge also pays for damaged and stolen merchandise.

Civilians able to supplement retirement by pay deductions

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Most Army civilians on Fort Benning, regardless of whether they are enrolled in the Federal Employee Retirement System or the Civil Service Retirement System, have another semi-annual chance to enroll in a government-wide, payroll-deduction program for supplementing their retirement annuity.

Called Thrift Savings Plan, the program's latest "open season" for enrollment is currently underway and extends through Jan. 31, 1989. Since newly hired employees must abide by a six-month waiting period, the current open season applies only to those hired before July 1, 1988. The next open season is scheduled May 15 to July 31, 1989.

As in the past, the Civilian Personnel Office has available copies of the plan's brochure and standard enrollment form.

CPO distributed a revised information booklet and a bulletin to civilian employees the week of Nov 21. The booklet outlines open season enrollment procedures and contains information about changes, contributions, investments, loans, interfund transfers, and withdrawal options.

Employees who would like to make a change in their enrollment must complete the new election form (TSP-1, revised 8/88). Forms are available from the R&P office, DCP, Room 110, Building 35. The forms must be completed and submitted to R&P no later than close of business the last day of open season (Jan 31, 1989).

Patricia Beasley, management and employee relations specialist, pointed out that the post's civilian employees should contact the R&P Division at 545-5666/5578 for assistance.

Infantry tells of new tactics

USAIC Public Affairs Office

In an article in the November-December 1988 issue of INFANTRY, Captain William O. Odom highlights the importance of the movement to contact and hasty attack skill. He calls it "the most important collective skill and fundamental offensive task a squad can master."

In the artice "Movement to Contact and Hasty Attack," Captain Odom presents his observations on the basis of tactical and training lessons learned.

Captain Odom served as a platoon leader and company commander in the 2d Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment at Fort Lewis. He is now attending Ohio State University in preparation for an assignment to the United States Military Academy.

Also in that issue is "The Soviets' 'Other' Forces," by Captain Ronald M. Bonesteel. The article describes the Soviets' desert forces–air assault, airborne, and Spetsnaz (or special purpose) and the roles they are expected to play on their next battlefield.

Captain Bonesteel is a Soviet Foreign Area Officer now in graduate school at the Russian Research Center, Howard University.

Food inspectors ensure quality food at commissary

Veterinary Services

Army, Navy and Marine Corps commissary and troop issue customers can be sure that they are purchasing high quality food because of rigorous inspections that occur before the food ever reaches the sales area.

The inspection process begins when the food arrives at the Government's receiving dock and continues until the customer takes the food home.

Veterinary food inspectors, enlisted members of the medical department activity supervised by a veterinary corps officer or warrant officer, are responsible for the behind-the-scene safety checks. They are trained to examine food to determine if it's safe to eat as well as wholesome. They also determine if it meets quality standards.

Inspectors verify that the food was produced in plants that meet the sanitary standards required to sell to the military. Then they check for proper delivery temperatures, protection against contamination, wholesomeness and adherence to quality standards such as grade and freshness. Special emphasis is placed on highly perishable items such as produce, meat, poultry and dairy products although they inspect all food items.

Inspections continue even after food has been accepted into the commissary to ensure its wholesomeness and quality are protected during processing, handling, storage and display.

Veterinary food inspectors check product codes dates, fat content of ground beef, storage temperatures, produce quality and facility sanitation as a part of their daily routine. They also coordinate with other federal agencies involved in food safety, participate in food recalls and examine customer returns to determine the problems involved and coorective measures that may be needed.

Daily inspections aren't the only precautionary measures taken. A representative from the installation veterinary services conducts a formal sanitary inspection at least once a month to ensure that the conditons and methods used provide the customer with high quality food.

It's evening and you are getting ready for bed. Doors and windows are locked, outside lights on, and the cat has been let out. Cat has been let out? Wrong!

At a recent meeting between the Commanding General and Community Mayors, the subject was raised about the large number of cats that run loose in the communities, particularly at night. Many of these cats are drawn to garbage cans that are left out the night prior to trash collection. The result is a mess which is made worse by stray dogs on post being attracted to the loose garbage left behind by the cats.

Some residents have requested cat traps be placed out to capture the strays. However, sometimes the captured cat turns out to be someone's pet, and ill feelings are generated between neighbors.

USAIC Regulation 210-5 requires pet owners to keep animals under confinement and control. This applies to cats as well as dogs.

If you are being annoyed by stray cats, animal traps are available for issue for a 48-hour period from Self Help, Bldg. 385, 545-3633. Additionally, the DEH Entomology Section, 545-4766, will set out traps upon request. (They will not loan traps.)

For further informtion, contact Crime Prevention, 545-7154.

importation and non-exportation were dealt with effectively. The 17th resolution deserves a special note. It sought a suspension of slave importation "during the present Difficulties and Distress," and indeed, "an entire Stop for ever to such a wicked cruel and unnatural trade."

While the Resolves cannot be characterized as a major literary contribution, there can be no doubt that the document represented a giant step in the colonists' onward march toward independence. Although the language of the Resolves did not state the colonists' case in language quite so dramatically as the words employed by Patrick Henry at St. John's Church, they made clear the colonial patriots' position "that from our Sovereign there can be but one Appeal," apparently meaning open rebellion. At the time of their writing, the Resolves were "the strongest documented stand against British oppression to be formally and officially stated."

History records that George III did not heed the freeholders' plea; hence, the rebellion presaged by the Resolves became inevitable. As one commentator has observed, "The combustible materials were collected that spring of 1774 in Fairfax County, ready for that first spark struck on 19 April 1775 near Boston."

ASK THE JUDGE

By Jessica L. Kole
Staff Judge Advocate's Office

Q — I applied for a car loan, but was informed that my request was denied because I have a poor credit rating. I don't understand how that could be. I only have two other credit cards and a personal loan payment. I have never missed a payment or been late in paying any of those bills. How can I find out why they think my credit is bad?

A — Anyone who applies for and uses credit can expect that his or her name has been referred to a credit reporting agency, or credit bureau. Credit bureaus are companies that collect information on credit users. The bureaus prepare credit reports from data sent by creditors, usually on a monthly basis, which shows what each accountholder owes or has paid. This information notes if payments are up to date, and indicates whether any action has been taken to collect overdue bills. These credit reports are sold to banks, retailers, finance companies, and other businesses who give credit to their customers.

In 1970, Congress passed the Fair Credit Reporting Act to give consumers specific rights concerning credit bureaus. This Act requres them to insure that all information contained in their reports is accurate.

If your application for loan was denied due to information provided by a credit bureau, the bureau's name must be given to you by the company you applied to. You have the right to know all of the information contained in the report and the sources of the information. You are entitled to a free copy of the report, as long as you request it within 30 days of the denial notice. Otherwise, you can receive a copy of the report for a reasonable fee.

If there is incorrect information on the report, notify the credit bureau immediately. They must investigate the items you question. If the investigation shows an error, you may request the credit bureau to send the corrected report to anyone who received your report within the past six months. If the credit bureau will not change the report based on their investigation, you may write a statement which explains your side of the story, and have that included in your credit report. In most cases, a credit bureau may keep unfavorable information in your file for seven years.

Even if you have not been denied credit, you may wish to check the information in your credit file. The telephone book has the number of your nearest credit bureau. You may receive a copy of your report for a small fee. Credit is important to you, and knowing how to correct errors in this report is just as important.

SPIRITUAL

Chanukah commemorates purification; rededication

By Barry R. Baron
2/54th Battalion Chaplain and Post Jewish Chaplain

Chanukah, the Jewish Festival of lights, is a holiday which occurs the same time of year as Christmas. This year, it is Dec. 4-11.

Chanukah is the Hebrew word for "dedication." The holiday commemorates the purification and rededication of the temple in Jerusalem in 163 B.C.E.

Antiochus, the Assyrian emperor, had demanded uniformity of religious practice among all his subjects as a sign of loyalty to him. For Jews, this meant a ban on circumcision and study of the five books of Moses, being forced to eat forbidden foods and seeing their holy temple desecrated by sacrifices to the Greek pagan Gods.

By 165 B.C.E., the Jews revolted. They were led in battle at first by a priest from the Judean village of Modin and later by his son.

In 163 B.C.E. fighting against a larger and better equipped enemy, the Judean forces ousted the Assyrians from Jerusalem. While it is this event and subsequent cleansing of the temple which Chanukah celebrates, the war itself lasted another two years. The Jews won, and as a result, gained their independence from Assyria.

In the temple in Jerusalem, there was a seven-branch oil lamp called a "menorah". When the temple was in use, this lamp was kept lit with pure olive oil. When the Maccabees rededicated the temple, they needed to re-light the menorah. According to Jewish tradition, the oil that was available was enough to keep the menorah lit for only one day. Miraculously, however, the lights continued burning for eight days, until more oil could be obtained.

In memory of the miracle, Jews today light an eight-branch menorah on Chanukah. One candle or oil wick is kindled on the first night of Chanukah. On each succeeding night, an additional lamp is lit.

Chanukah is a holiday with an important message not only for Jews, but for all of us, especially soldiers. Long ago, people fought and died for their freedom. They believed in themselves and in their cause, and they were triumphant. We, too, believe in freedom. Indeed, we are sworn to fight and even die for it if necessary.

Religious freedom for which the Judeans fought is an especially precious kind of freedom. Antiochus, tried to impose one religion on his subjects. He reaped a bitter harvest of war and revolt. In our country, by contrast, people are free to worship as they choose. Because of this freedom, many different kinds of people can live together peacefully.

Religion can give great strength to people, just as it did to the Maccabees and their followers. Faith in God can help us to overcome many different types of enemies, whether within or outside ourselves. "Not by might and not by power, but by my spirit, says the Lord of Hosts." (Zechariah 4:6)

Determination to protect religious freedom should give us pride in ourselves as American soldiers. Protecting freedom is, indeed, a sacred calling. Responding to God's call, each of us in our own way, should strengthen ourselves to meet the challenges we face, just as it strengthened the Maccabees 2,200 years ago.

Service held at MACH to honor and pray for those affected by AIDS

By Debbie Galle
USAIC Chaplain Office

A religious service was held on Dec. 1 at noon at the Martin Army Community Hospital chapel to honor and pray for those affected by AIDS.

The service was intended to encourage those who are HIV infected by letting them know that others care about them and are praying for them.

Services were held world wide on the first World AIDS Day to focus on efforts against the virus. The World Health Organization ranks Georgia eighth in the United States in the number of AIDS cases.

Chaplain Phelps conducted the brief service and observed a moment of silence for those suffering because of the virus. "The failure, the hurt, and the grief that a person experiences when AIDS affects their life can cause them to be fearful of the world or to seek a greater faithfulness in God," he said.

"It is that faithfulness that enables us to be caring, compassionate and hopeful people.

"This service reminds us that every life has value and worth," he continued. "We should be aware of how we treat people who are HIV infected."

Statistics project that by the year 2000, every person will know someone who has AIDS.

New Kaufman bayonet assault course complete

Ready for training thanks to soldiers' hard work, ingenuity

By Ann McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

1st Infantry Training Brigade troops will receive better training thanks to two soldiers who made the dream of a new bayonet assault course a reality.

The Loren R. Kaufman Bayonet Assault Course is that reality, and it officially opened for business after a brief ceremony Nov. 23.

The two men responsible for making it happen are MSgt. Elroid Light and 1st Lt. Nikita Chavis. Together they organized and oversaw project from beginning to e

Through the self-Help program, the men obtained the supplies necessary to complete the project. Company C, 43rd Engineer Battalion, 36th Engineer Group provided heavy equipment support.

"When we got the engineer support, we knew we could do it." Light said.

The engineers cleared the site to be used for the course and put in the heavy training aids from the old bayonet course.

With the heavier work complete, Light and Chavis coordinated with units to provide the soldiers needed to finish the project.

In addition to the material they received from DEH, the men resorted to their own devices to gain the other materials necessary for proper completion of the project.

"We went to almost every junk tire shop in Columbus to get all the tires we needed for the targets," Light said.

He explained that they needed to go to these places because they couldn't use steel belted tires since they are too difficult to penetrate.

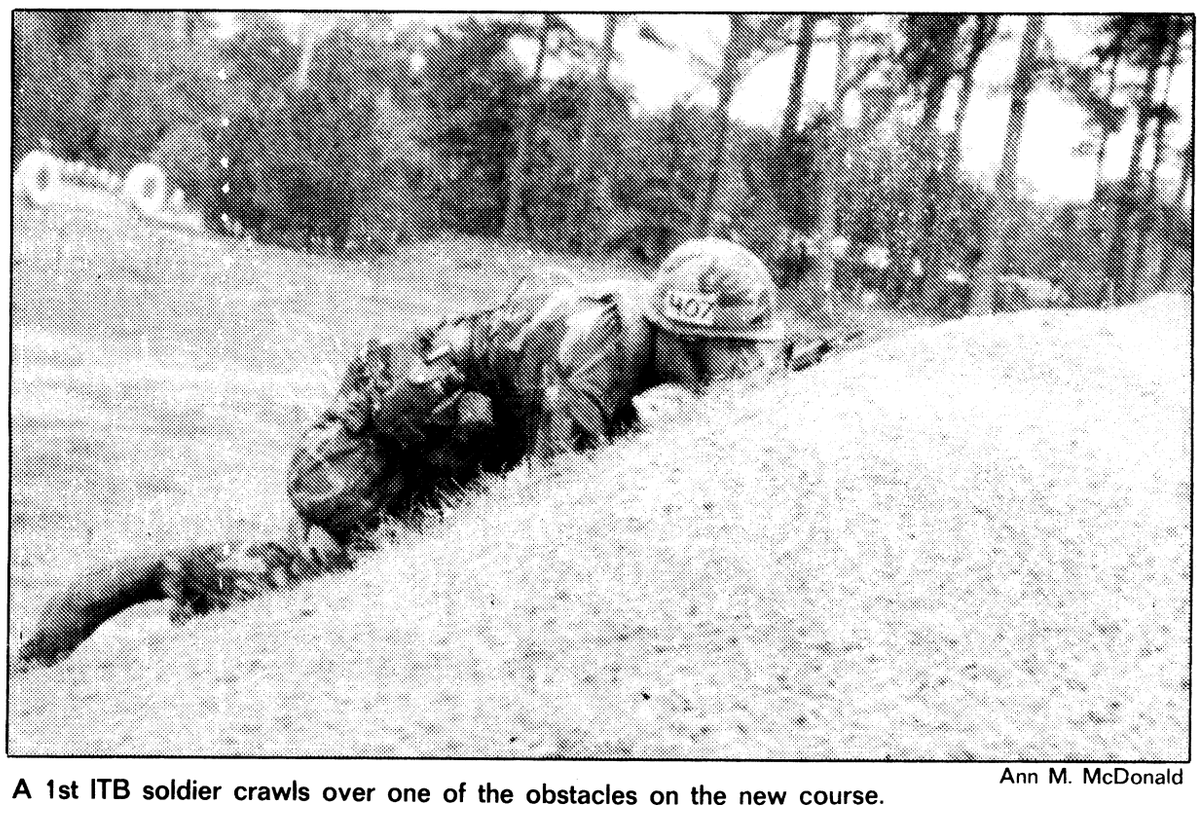
Soon, the course began to take shape. Designed with safety in mind, the course is a straight trek that allows the range to be used with a minimum amount of people, while having more control than on the old course.

"The old course was on a curve so you could not keep the soldiers in sight all of the time," Light said. "With this design, there is much more control."

By doing the project as a self-help program, Light and Chavis saved the Army $174,000.

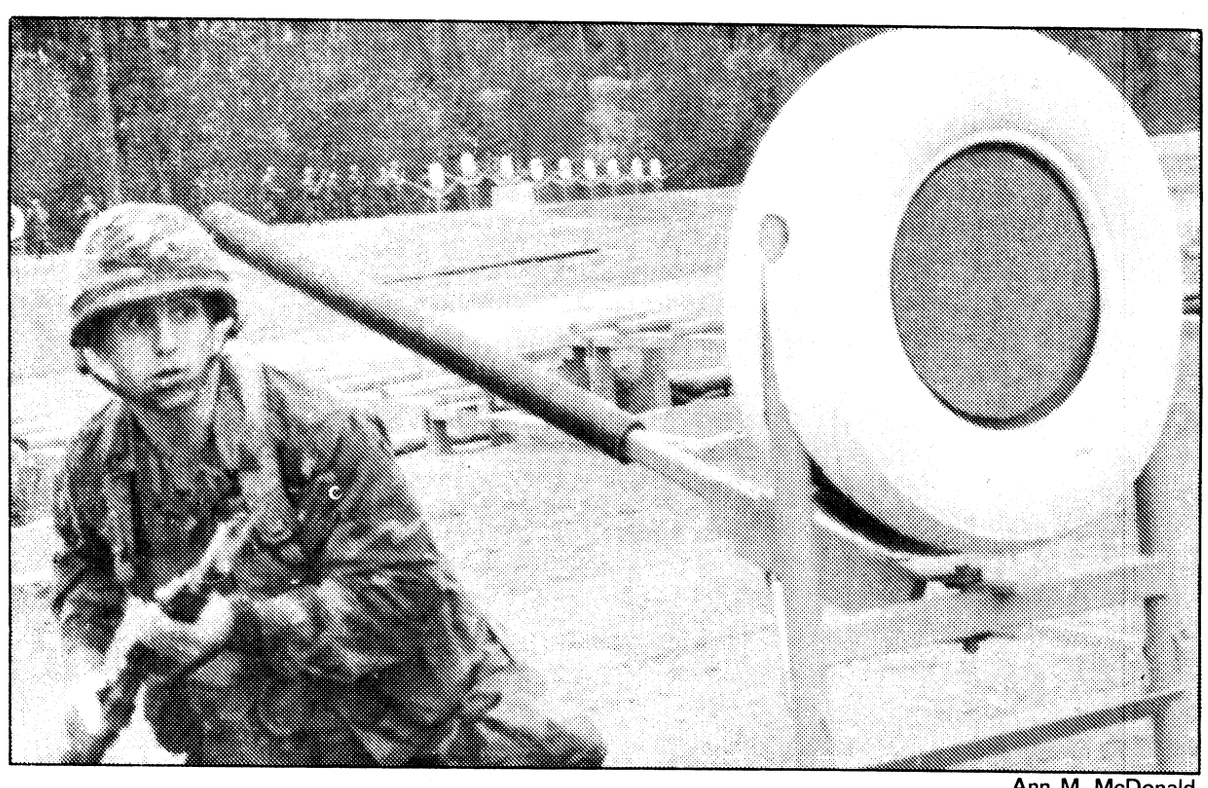
The first company to reap the harvest of their efforts was Co. C, 4th Bn. 30th Inf., 1st Inf. Tng. Bde., and they gave the course nothing but rave reviews.

"This course is great for training," said Company 1st. Sgt. Dewayne Crowell. He explained that it was ideal for trainees because there are no blind spots. Drill instructors can see when soldiers make mistakes and correct them on the spot.



As for the troops, one enjoyed it so much he exclaimed, "Is that all Drill Sergeant?"

"Why? Do you want more," the Drill Sergeant said.



"Heck yea," the soldier responded.

Saving energy reduces greenhouse effect

By Becky Ray
Energy Branch

One of the most severe and pressing environmental problems the world faces today – the greenhouse effect – has been directly linked to the energy industry. The greenhouse effect, or global warming trend, is the result of heat-trapping gases building up in the atmosphere, blocking the dissipation of the earth's heat. The greatest contributor to the problem seems to be carbon monoxide.

Carbon monoxide is produced in the burning of fossil fuels, and is emitted by power plants, such as those that generate our electricity. The use of cars, aircraft, and other vehicles burining fossil fuels is also a major contributor to the great amounts of carbon monoxide continuously being released into the atmosphere. While there are no simple, immediate, or total solutions to the problem, conservation seems to be the most logical measure for slowing the damage.

Many scientists believe that the high temperatures and droughts of the past two summers were a direct result of the greenhouse effect and not a natural occurrence. Many also believe that if nothing is done to control the problem, the next century should bring severe environmental and economic problems to our nation and the rest of the world. Scientists before the Senate Energy and Natural Resources Committee recently stated that the greenhouse effect could leave America's farm belt parched and barren. It could also cause melting of the polar ice caps, with subsequent coastal flooding and the expansion of the equatorial deserts.

The vice-president of the World Resources Institute, Jessica Mathews, has recommended a reduction in the burning of fossil fuels for energy sources as the first corrective action. The United States should convert to cleaner forms of energy, such as compressed natural gas, nuclear power, and passive solar technology. Conversion to hydrogen-powered vehicles should be made when technology makes it available.

Congress has recognized the problem of global warming and is considering legislation on several options including energy conservation, more strict emissions standards, and the development of alternative fuels.

Conversion will take time, however. Instituting legislation made by Congress is a lengthy process. The most immediate step that can be taken to reduce the magnitude of the problem is voluntary conservation by everyone.

By conserving electricity and gasoline, you can play a small, but positive, role in the most important issue.

Hosts of Latin Americans program provides students chance to experience U. S. culture

By Keith F. Johnson
USARSA correspondent

The number of civilian sponsors participating in the School of the Americas' "Hosts of Latin Americans" program has reached a record number.

The program, which began November 1984, provides Latin American students, guest instructors and their families at USARSA a chance to experience North American family life and culture.

The number of civilian sponsors from the Columbus/Phenix City/Fort Benning area is 120, more than double the number of sponsors since the program's inception.

"The program is an excellent idea," said Capt. Rene A. Fernandez, a guest instructor from Chile assigned to USARSA and a program participant. "I have learned a lot about American people and their customs.

"I used to think American families were cold and materialistic. However, after sharing Thanksgiving dinner and other times with my sponsor, I view Americans as having a gratis spirit, giving freely of themselves while expecting nothing in return," said Fernandez. "Hopefully, some day my sponsor family will be able to visit Chile so I can return their hospitality."

Sponsors serve as hosts to visiting families and share in experiences and activities such as the Columbus Steeplechase, Southern Open Golf Tournament and local annual fairs as well as shopping trips to Atlanta, informal dinners, picnics and holiday cultural activities.

"I became a sponsor because I felt we needed to improve our relations with South and Central America and help Latin American visitors feel more at home while they're here," said Charles G. Fox, an advocate for the mentally ill in Columbus.

"I don't speak Spanish and the student assigned to me (Maj. Hernan Martinez from El Salvador) speaks very little English; but, we are still able to enjoy a friendship and learn from each other," said Fox. "In spite of cultural differences, we have a lot in common. We share common goals and experiences."

The acronym HOLA is the Spanish word "hola," which means "hello." The word symbolizes the receptive nature of the program.

Anyone interested in the program should contact Yolanda Hagberg, International Military Student Office, USARSA, at 545-3948.

Soldiers to test new 'HIP howitzer' prototype

Army News Service

Soldiers will begin tests next spring on the latest version of the M109 howitzer – the "HIP howitzer" – as part of the Howitzer Improvement Program prototype testing phase.

Four of the six prototypes developed under the program will undergo operational tests. The first prototype was completed in November; the last is scheduled to be ready in March.

The HIP tests, administered by the Army's Operations, Testing and Evaluation Agency and the Field Artillery Board, will run from next April through June.

The Army is expected to make its production decision by next September. If it's approved, about 1,700 M109's in Army service will be converted to HIP howitzers.

"The test will determine the operational effectiveness and suitability of the HIP howitzer when operated by soldiers from a typical artillery unit. That's why soldiers from a unit will be manning the howitzers," said Capt. Larry Fallen, a project officer for the Army Training and Doctrine20 Command's cannon system manager's office.

Soldiers from the 2nd Battalion, 17th Field Artillery will be testing the prototype HIP howitzers.

The HIP howitzer is the latest modification of the self-propelled howitzer that's been in the Army inventory since 1963. The modifications, under development since 1984, are designed to significantly improve the gun's survivability, range and responsiveness.

Cannon modifications on the HIP improve its reliability and boost its range with rocket-assisted projectiles from 24 kilometers to 30 kilometers. The HIP howitzer crew can automatically lay the gun or aim the cannon using an on-board automatic fire-control system linked to the gun. Current M109's don't have such a system.

A combination of computerized fire direction, navigation and radio communications systems on each howitzer enables it to operate more independently. The advanced communications system eliminates the need to string wire between howitzers and their platoon command center. The howitzers can set up far enough from each other to require the enemy to attack each one individually. According to Fallen, this is one of a series of tests to determine if the HIP howitzer conforms to the specifications outlined in the program's requirements document. "The HIP's modifications will greatly improve our conventional forces overseas and in the United States," he said.

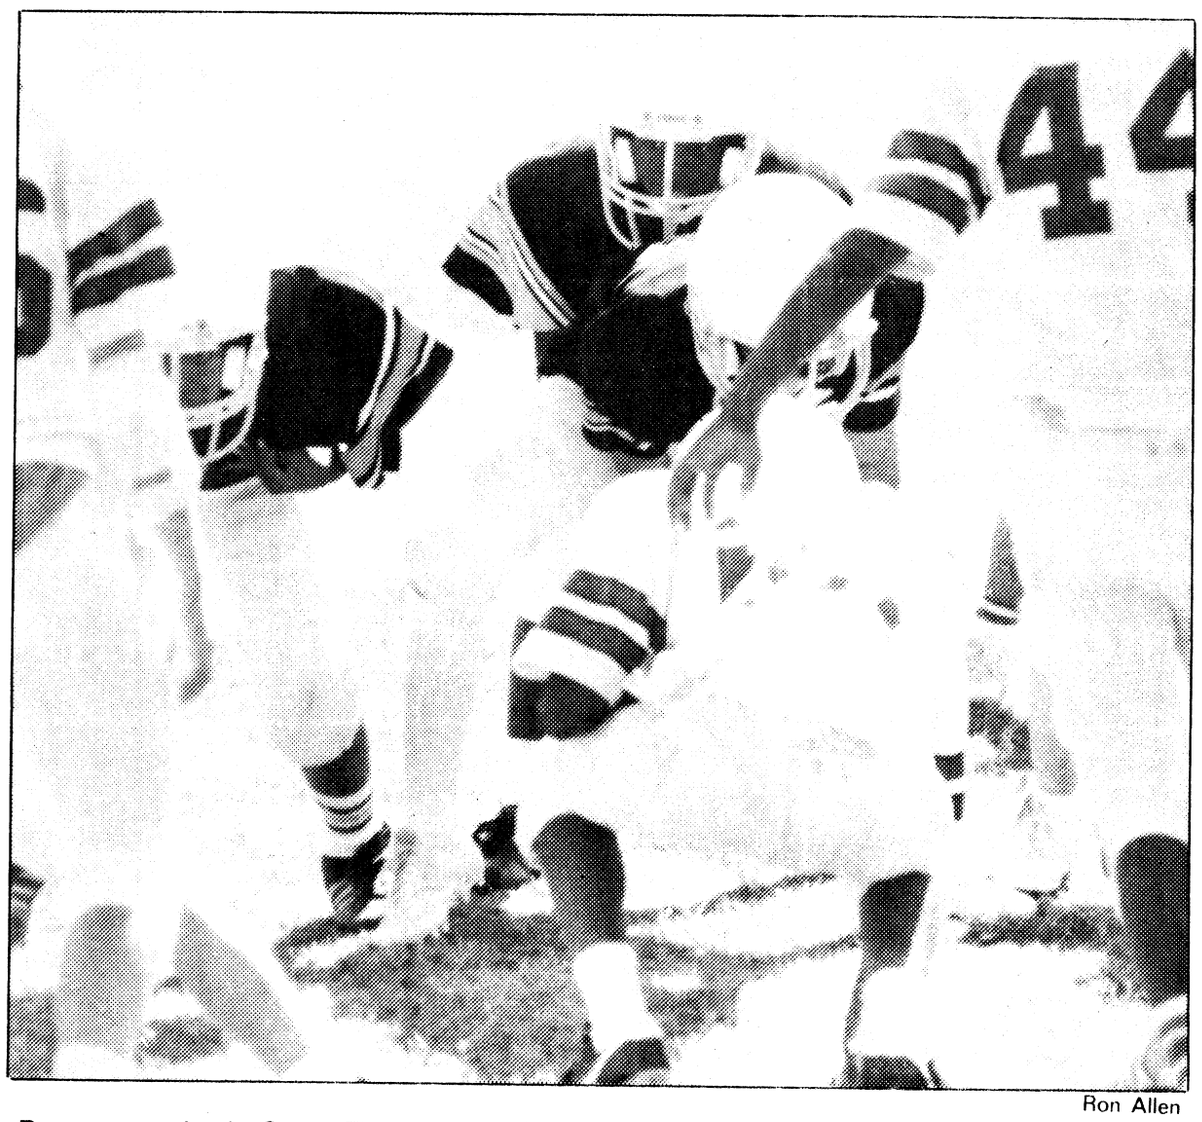
Youth Activities Football season wraps up

USAIC Public Affoirs Office

The Youth Activities Football league recently wrapped up their season with a Football Bowl at Doughboy Stadium.



Pee Wees, Grasshoppers, and Termites battled it out for the championship in each of their classes.

The Pee Wee competition featured the NFC champions – the Falcons and the Vikings – against the AFC champions – the Bears and the Cowboys.

The NFC team dominated the game winning easily 22-6. The coach attributed their success to a strong defense as well as a very productive offense.

The teams in each of the leagues were made up of the first and the fourth place teams versus the second and the fourth place teams who were then pitted against each other. At the end of the regular season play, standings were:

BEARS 7 - 3
FALCONS 6 - 4
VIKINGS 5 - 4
COWBOYS 1 - 8

Backs need good linemen

By Gale Sayers
PM Editorial Service

Offensive linemen do not get the credit they deserve for contributing to the success of great running backs. Linemen are the key to any running back's success, whether he gains 10 yards or whether he gains an inch.

One of the things you hear all the time about great running backs on unsuccessful teams is that while the back may be good, the team just doesn't have good players. It's been said many times that the Chicago Bears didn't have good teams when I played. Yet I led the league in rushing two separate years. The same thing was said early in Walter Payton's career when he gained about 1,500 yards a year for five or six years and the Bears still lost eight or nine ball games a year.

But anytime, anytime you have a running back gain that much yardage, somebody's doing something up front. I don't care if you're talking about a 10-1 team or a 1-10 team, somebody has to be moving out the defense. If a team wins only five games all year and a running back gains 1,500 yards on the season, somebody's doing something.

A running back has to develop a good relationship with the linemen, and he has to let them know that they are much appreciated. Linemen know that if they have a great back, an Eric Dickerson or a Walter Payton or an O.J. Simpson, if they just hold off their defender for a 10th of a second, that great back has the ability to make that brush block into a 10 yard gain or touchdown. They know a great back will find a way to get there. On my teams, guys like Bob Wetoska and Mike Rabold were doing something right for Gale Sayers to lead the league in rushing and to gain over a thousand yards on the season. They did things right.

Holding penalties can be frustrating as a back when you have a long run called back. But a lineman is trying to do the best job he can and he wants the play to be successful. Many times if he thinks he can get away with it, a lineman will hold. Because offensive linemen now can extend their arms, there is probably holding on 80 percent of the plays, but officials don't call it unless it's a real flagrant thing where a defender is pulled down.

Army soccer squad takes title

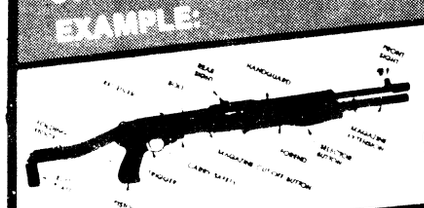
Army News Service

Placing eight players and two coaches on a joint-service, all-star squad, the Army squeaked past the Navy to win interservice bragging rights in the recent Armed Forces Soccer Championship at Naval Air Station Little Creek, Va.

Both Army and Navy finished the tourney with 4-2 records, but Army claimed the victory based on goals scored and allowed. All four services entered the tourney, with the Marines edging the Air Force for third place by just two goals. Both finished at 2-4.

In addition to filling one-third of the player positions on the 24-man all-star team, the Army coaching staff was picked to lead the joint-service squad into later competition. Selected for the Armed Forces All-Stars were: Head Coach John Thomas, a staff sergeant from Company A, 3rd Battalion, Academy of Health Sciences, at Fort Sam Houston, Tex.; assistant coach Johan Haraldsen, a first lieutenant with the 4th Air Defense Artillery at Fort Campbell, Ky.; halfback Timothy Bartlette, a sergeant from Headquarters and Headquarters Service Battery, 5th Battalion, 11th Field Artillery at Fort Wainwright, Alaska; fullback Oscar Escalante, a private first class, also of HHSB, 5th Battalion, 11th Field Artillery at Fort Wainwright; halfback Mark Erwin, a first lieutenant in Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, 10th Infantry, 4th Division at Fort Carson, Colo.; goalkeeper John Gallagher, a captain with Company D, 82d Aviation Brigade at Fort Bragg, N. C.; fullback Oscar Najarro, a private first class in Battery B, 2nd Battalion, 20th Field Artillery at Hanau, Germany; fullback Brian Roberson, a sergeant with Headquarters and Headquarters Company, U.S. Army Information Systems Command at Fort Myer, Va.; halfback David Smith, a sergeant in the 551st Transportation Company at Fort Eustis, Va. and forward Raymond Taylor, a sergeant in the 136th Engineer Brigade at Fort Leonard Wood, Mo.

In addition, Bartlette, Erwin and Escalante survived elimination to earn a spot on the permanent 1988 All-Star squad roster.



After a 2-0 tourney-opening loss to Navy, Army blanked Air Force 4-0 to even its record at 1-1. Erwin scored the first two goals of the match, with Kevin Bauer and Marvin Andrade rounding our the scoring. Army went on to top the Marines 5-3 in its third match to move into a three-way tie for first place. Escalante and Taylor booted two goals apiece, and Najarro added another in the win.

The fourth match saw Army avenge its loss in the opener by stopping 17 Navy shots for a 2-0 shutout. Colin Pollard and Erwin scored the only goals of the match, which left Army in sole possession of first place.

Army held onto its lead in the fifth match by topping Air Force 3-1. Escalante, Erwin, and Taylor netted a goal each to send the 4-1 soldiers against their final opponents of the tourney–the last-place, 1-4 Marines. A 2-1 surprise Marine victory lifted the Corps out of the tournament cellar.

Taylor scored the lone Army goal in the match, which left them in a 4-2 tie with Navy. However, 12 tournament goals scored with only five allowed provided Army with the margin of victory over Navy's six goals scored and three allowed.

Faith School Race draws over 500 runners of all ages

Ann M. McDonald

Maria Paz Fernandez and her mother finish up the one-mile race at the Faith School Run.

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Over five hundred runners ranging from ages 3 to 78 years came across the finish line in their respective races in the tenth annual Faith Christmas Race last Saturday.

The race was made possible because of the physical education department at the Don C. Faith Middle School and local sponsors.

All proceeds from the race will go to the Faith physical education program to provide additional equipment and incentive awards for students.

Overall winners of the one-mile race were awarded plaques. Overall winners of the two- and five- mile races were awarded mugs. Winners in each age group were awarded commemorative medallions.

There were a lot of proud winners who walked out of the Faith School gymnasium after the awards ceremony on race day. Among the proud winners was Bradley Siever who won the two-mile race. This is the second year in a row that he has won the race.

The victorious Siever said he was glad that he won the race, and added, "I'm getting out of the Army to go to college, and it's nice to have won one last race before leaving Fort Benning."

The runners are lined up and ready to go in the two-mile race during the Faith School Run. Ann M. McDonald

197th Inf Bde wraps up season's 1st half; teams go to play-offs

By Sally Roberts
197th Infantry Brigade

The first half of the 197th Infantry Brigade basketball season is wrapping up, ready to send teams to the USAIC basketball play-offs December 14 through 16. Short tournaments played by each battalion are deciding which six teams will represent the 197th in the post play-offs.

The 197th Support Battalion will be represented by its Headquarters Company which remained undefeated in the battalion games. HHC Support met some resistance from D Company, taking the win by only four points, but easily beat the 519th Personnel Service Company 57-31 and B Company with a score of 49-31.

Headquarters Battery, 4/41st Field Artillery will also be a contender at the post play-offs, losing only one game in the battalion series. HHB dominated each team they played, beating their opponents usually by more than 10 points. Their only loss went to HHC, 197th Infantry Brigade who are favored to represent the 197th's Separate Units at USAIC.

Sally Roberts

Glen Bowen, Co. A, 1/58th Inf. goes up for two points.

The top team for 2/69th Armor is HHC which is undefeated among battalion teams. HHC will also represent the Panthers at the post tournament.

The teams that will represent the 2/18th Infantry Vanguard, the 1/58th Infantry Patriots and the Separate Units will be decided this week.

Soldiers compete in Chess Tourney

By Hal Haskins
American Forces Information Service

"Competition is the heart and soul of our nation. Those of you who have reached this level of competition are to be congratulated for your winning spirit," said Secretary of Defense Frank C. Carlucci. He was welcoming the competitors in the 29th annual Armed Forces Chess Championship Tournament, held recently at Andrews Air Force Base, Md.

This year, the event, sponsored by the United Services Organizations, American Legion and American Chess Foundation, saw the strongest field of players yet. One player holds a U.S. Chess Federation rank of senior master. The other 17 hold the rank of either master or expert.

The Air Force won the team championship with 41½ points. The Sea Services (Navy, Marine Corps and Coast Guard) came in second with 33½ points. The Army team was a close third with 33 points.

The Air Force has won the team championship six of the past seven years.

Air Force Staff Sgt. Emory A. Tate, Fort Meade, Md., was the tournament individual champion with 10½ points. Tate, a chess senior master, has won four times in six years, setting an individual record.

Petty Officer 2nd Class Marc Plum, Naval Sub Facility, Conn., finished second with 8½ points. Two players tied for third with 7½ points each—Petty Officer 1st Class Lane Teraoka, Naval Sub Facility, Hawaii, and Army Spec. Jimmy Don Gray, Fort Gordon, Ga. Two playoff games for the third-place plaque were both draws, so a coin toss was used to determine the winner, with Teraoka winning.

The tournament consisted of 12 rounds, with each person on a six-player team playing all 12 players on the other two teams. One point is awarded for a win, half a point for a draw and no points for losses.

The top four Air Force players and the top two Army and Sea Services team members went on to represent the United States in the International NATO Match in Aalborg, Denmark.

Turkey population up; quail down as hunters turn from deer to fowl

By Deck Major
Fish and Wildlife Specialist

As deer season quickly closes in around us, it's hard for some to think about other game. Blaze orange has replaced camouflage green as the major color around the hunting maps and at the moment, the white-tailed deer reigns supreme. Opening day dates for birds like the bobwhite quail and wild turkey are stored away in the back of our heads. However, we'll be ready with dog or call when the time comes.

In an attempt to evaluate nesting trends and predict success during upcoming quail and turkey hunts, a quail and turkey productivity survey has just been completed by personnel of the Natural Resources Management Division. This summer, May through September, records were kept by each Natural Resources' vehicle operator. Each time a turkey or quail was sighted, several parameters were noted including brood size, age of the birds, and their location. Paired quail and single adult hen and tom turkeys were also recorded.

Analyzed in combination with miles driven for each vehicle, this information yield valuable results that can be compared with other regions of the state and country and also be evaluated on an annual basis at Fort Benning to determine seasonal nesting success and overall population trends.

Any hunter or casual observer of wildlife knows that our post turkey flock is in very good shape and that quail on the reservation are not nearly as abundant as they once were. Data collected during the survey reflect these observations. A total of 681 turkeys were sighted during the survey but only 146 quail were seen. Forty turkey broods were spotted averaging nearly six juveniles per adult hen. This is a very healthy ratio for eastern wild turkeys. Conversely, only nine quail broods were observed during the survey. Although the number of chicks per hen was high (eight), the scanty amount of broods observed is worthy of concern.

On a miles driven basis, turkeys again came out on top. Overall, a turkey was observed every 32.5 miles. In September, when the broods become very mobile, a turkey was seen in every 10.8 miles. On the other hand, a quail was seen after driving 151.6 miles. Again, the figure was better in September once the quail chicks had gained strength and size, but still, they were seen four times less than turkeys or once every 46.6 miles.

The data speaks for itself, but why is it so? This is a complicated question, one that has no clear-cut answer. Many factors have contributed to the present upswing in turkeys and decline in quail numbers. The most important of these is probably habitat change. When the post was acquired from private land holders, most of it was farm country, perhaps not the most fertile farm land hereabouts, but farm land just the same. There were plenty of fence rows, much small grain, and fields were rarely over 20 acres. This is excellent quail habitat. Through acquisition, we inherited great quail populations, a by-product of the farm techniques of the period. However, things don't stay the same, and the habitat changed. Gradually, on a day to day basis, the overall vegetative community grew and matured. This process is called ecological succession. In effect, the post has been growing out of quail habitat since acquisition days. Optimum turkey habitat consists of 30-60 percent mature timber interspersed with old fields and openings that provide nesting and brood cover. Presently most of the post is excellent turkey habitat.

Another important factor is weather. Extreme cold and snow can have deadly affects on quail coveys. Sometimes quail populations need five plus years to bounce back after such a winter. Combine severe winter with summer drought, which is a major negative for quail nest success, brood survival, and food production, and it takes even longer for the birds to respond. In the last ten years, weather has probably been the most influential factor controlling our quail populations. Georgia's weather conditions don't affect turkeys as drastically. They can make it through cold periods and the droughts usually come after the peak of nesting season. Also, due to their size, they can move more easily to free water.

Other factors such as increased use of insecticides for fire ant control may also have contributed to present low quail numbers. Perhaps there are several other factors. The field of wildlife science is sometimes one of speculation, often we work after the fact trying to put a puzzle together without all of the pieces.

What is the Natural Resources Management Division doing to help quail on the reservation now? The problem is being addressed from two different directions. Whistling quail counts conducted this spring show that even though they are at low densities, quail still exist throughout Fort Benning. In an effort to help as many conveys as possible, a general management plan has been established. Some techniques used here include: 1) prescribed burning to eliminate thick brush from pine stands; 2) cross country disking through pine stands which helps establish important quail foods like partridge pea and Beggart's ticks; 3) establishment of bi-color Lespedeza patches which provide important food and winter cover; and, 4) development of wildlife openings planted with grains such as Egyptian wheat, brown-top millet, and corn. In an effort to maximize quail numbers in certain locations, special quail management zones will be established. In these areas, techniques mentioned above will be used but more frequently with less unmanaged land occurring between managed sections. It's not practical to expect excellent quail densities throughout Fort Benning, but this is our approach to attempt to bring back what was once here on a practical scale considering present budget and manpower limitations.

How does this affect you as a hunter of wildlife enthusiast? If you hunt quail, you're in for another difficult season. The most important contribution you can make is to respect your quarry. Don't shoot a covey below six birds and remember there are other hunters that will follow you in the field to flush that same covey on another day. At the end of the day, don't measure your success by the amount of quail in your bag. If you hunt turkeys, the picture is rosy. Our Fort Benning turkey population is presently one of the best in the nation.

Noted cellist will perform at concert

Cellist Andres Diaz, touted as one of today's most talented young artists, will perform with the Columbus Symphony Orchestra in the second concert of its masterpiece series. George Del Gobbo will conduct the concert at 8 p.m., Saturday, Dec. 10, at the Three Arts Theatre.

Diaz will perform the Shostakovich Cello Concerto No. 1 with the orchestra, and the program will also include Wagner's Prelude to "Die Meistersinger" and Symphony No. 4 in E Minor by Brahms.

Preceding the concert at 7 o'clock will be a pre-concert lecture, "Know the Score," by Del Gobbo in the theatre auditorium. There is no cost to ticket holders.

Andres Diaz is a member of a multi-talented family – his father, Manuel, and his brother Roberto, both violists and his step-mother, Betty Ann, a pianist.

Manuel is a music faculty member at Columbus College and is conductor of the Columbus Symphony Youth Orchestra.

Born in Santiago, Chile, in 1964, Diaz began studying the cello at agae five under Arnaldo Fuentas, principal cellist of the Chilean Philharmonic. Three years later, he moved to Atlanta and studied at the Georgia Academy of Music.

Since winning the first prize in the Naumburg International cello competition, he has won the admiration of critics and audiences.

The young virtuose is a sought-after recitalist and was re-engaged at Lincoln Center's Alice Tully Hall this season. He has appeared with orchestras in the Atlanta area on many occasions, including the Atlanta and Macon symphonies; other orchestras with which he has performed include the Los Angeles Chamber Orchestra, Milwaukee Symphony and Garden State Philharmonic.

Diaz graduated from the New England Conservatory where he worked with Laurence Lesser and Colin Carr.

Tickets for Saturday's concert are available from the Columbus Symphony office in the Rankin Executive offices or by calling 323-5059. All seats are reserved and tickets are $10 for adults and $3 for students.

NEWS BRIEFS

Class addresses parents' concerns

Parenting and teen groups: Beginning Jan. 5, Fort Benning Social Work Services will offer groups for parents of teen-agers, and teens themselves, as a service to the military community. The classes have been scheduled in response to concerns of parents and professionals about the important issues facing young people today.

Parents can enroll for STEP Teen (Systematic Training for Effective Parenting), which will help them understand teen-age emotions, communicate with teens and more.

At the same time, teen-agers whose parents are enrolled in STEP can attend a support group, led by trained counselors who will assist them in examining issues such as relationships, suicide and peer pressure.

Classes are open to active duty military and their immediate family members and will be held Thursdays, 3:30-5:30 p.m., for nine weeks.

To enroll and for more information, call 545-7645/1661.

Post saves millions

By Agatha H. James
Bayonet staff writer

In fiscal year 1988, Fort Benning saved a record $198.8 million through the SPIRIT program. The record savings gives Benning a good chance of beating 16 other posts for TRADOC's coveted $1 million award in the SPIRIT competition.

Since the success of Project SPIRIT is attributed to the efforts of the people who participated in the program, the installation's SPIRIT staff hosted a luncheon Dec. 9 at the NCO Club for commanders, directors and program coordinators who helped the post add up the savings.

Chief of Staff, Col. James I. Daily, told those present, "Project SPIRIT is a win-win proposition. Not only are there no losers, but the winnings are compounded."

EEO best in TRADOC

'We were just doing our jobs.'

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

Fort Benning's Equal Employment Opportunity Office is the best out of all the major commands in the Training and Doctrine Command.

The official announcement and presentation of the award came during a banquet conducted during an EEO Program Workshop at TRADOC.

Deputy post commander, Lt. Col. Barry Mahek, and EEO representatives, Ellis Dandy and Winnie Torain, accepted the award on behalf of Fort Benning.

Torain said they were very surprised when it was announced that they were the winners.

"Obviously post officials knew or they wouldn't have sent the DPC," Torain said, "but, we didn't know. It just happened that we were there for the workshop and were able to join him in accepting the award."

According to Torain, this is the first time the TRADOC EEO Award has been given.

She explained that it is a roving award, which means the original plaque will go to the winning command each year. A metal plate designating the winner of that particular year will be placed on the plaque.

Torain attributed their win to the great support they received from the Command Group and the Civilian Personnel Office.

Ann M. McDonald

Ellis Dandy (l), Winnie Torain and Elva Shoemaker admire the plaque that was presented to EEO by TRADOC. This is the first time a TRADOC EEO award has been given.

"We weren't trying to win any award," she said. "We were just doing our jobs.

Their job is making sure qualified minorities and women have an equal chance in gaining employment at Fort Benning.

Their Federal Women's Program and their Hispanic Employment program have been previously recognized for being the best in TRADOC.

The EEO office has done all of this with a staff of five people: Ellis Dandy, Winnie Torain, Elva Shoemaker, Luis Arvelo and Mary Hewson.

Robert Galer and Delaine Wilson also played a big part in winning the award. Both have since retired.

Torain said that their staff is much smaller than the EEO offices in TRADOC. That goes to show that the old adage "dynamite comes in small packages" holds true, for the EEO office certainly made a big impression on TRADOC officials.

Gift certificates add to holiday cheer

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

Commissary gift certificates are going to make several families' Christmas dinners a little more special this year. Fort Benning's Commissary Promotions Program has made it possible for families who can't afford a Christmas dinner with all the trimmings to receive certificates for $15 to $50.

According to post Commissary Officer, James Hobbins, corporations participating in the promotion program promote items for a set time and during that time donate a percentage of their proceeds to the commissary.

The proceeds were turned into commissary gift certificates and distributed to the commander of the 197th Infantry Brigade, Col. Harvey Watson and the chief of Army Community Service.

The total amount of checks is $2,100 dollars.

"We used to conduct a drawing inside the commissary; and more often than not the prize went to someone who didn't need it," Hobbins said.

He added that the commissary decided that by giving the certificates to ACS and 197th the people who needed them the most would receive the checks.

The Commissary Office distributed the gift certificates as follows:

197th Infantry Brigade
50 - $15 gift checks donated by Lever Brothers
5 - $25 gift checks donated by General Foods
16 - $25 gift checks donated by Webco USA

Army Community Services
5 - $25 gift checks donated by General Foods
16 - $25 gift checks donated by Webco USA
6 - $50 gift checks donated by Pilcher Brokerage

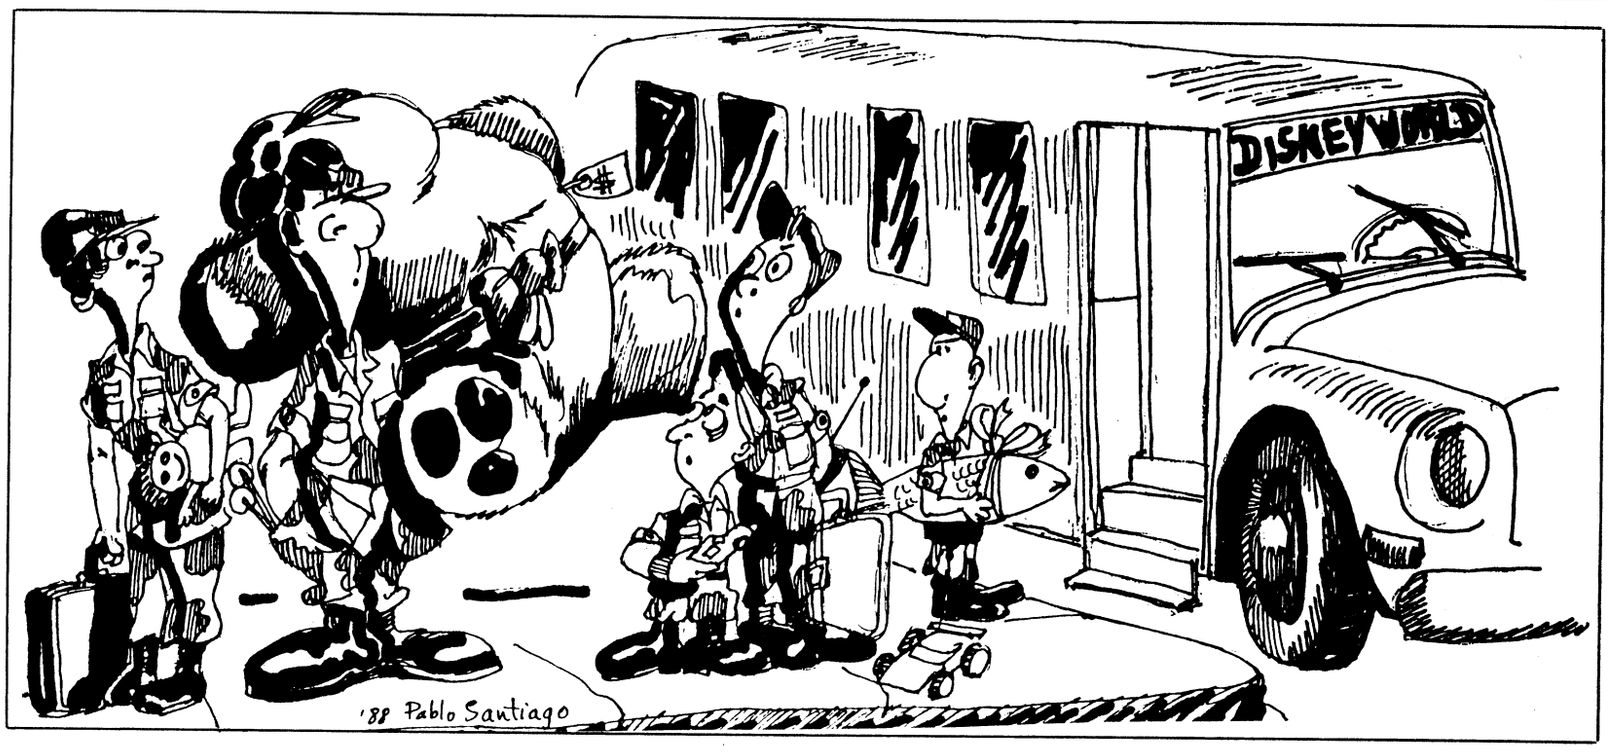
VARIOUS VOICES:
What's the best gift you could get for Christmas?

Spec. Thomas Zaveta, AG Repl., 1st Bn., 11th Inf. Regt. — "I would like a round-trip flight to Korea, so that I could be with my girlfriend for Christmas. I just finished a two-year tour over there, and she hasn't completed hers."

MSgt. N.R. Saunders, HQ, Forces Command, Fort McPherson, Ga. — "I'd just like some peace and quiet and a happy family."

Rebecca Sanderlin, family member — "I'd just like my family to show that they love and appreciate me. I would also like it to snow."



Sgt. Richard Hulsey, Co. D, 1st Bn. 38th Inf., 2nd ITB — "I don't want anything for Christmas. My wife spends too much money as it is."

SSgt. Bruner Caudill, Co. C, 2nd Bn., 29th Inf. Regt. — "I would like to get my E-7 stripes officially pinned on and some PCS orders to Germany."

Michael Keene, family member — "I'd like a toy gun that shoots real bullets."

Snively may be doomed to Scroogedom this holiday

Dresses family in BDUs to win trip

By Clyde Snively
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Word has gotten back to me that my fellow office workers are calling me "Clyde Scrooge."

I can say it is unjustified and uncalled for.

Yes, I will admit to having cut the music chip out of the singing Christmas card. But you would have too, if you had to work with Airborne Annie. She had a penchant for opening the card and walking off while it played an assortment of Christmas songs. I'd normally be doing a phone interview at the time, so I couldn't get up to turn the darn thing off — "Uh, excuse me. Hold that thought while I get up and turn off the singing Christmas card."

Well, alright, what if I did put up a note on the office door, saying "Bah, humbug." The Constitution gives us the right to worship Christmas in our own manner whenever we feel like it. I just haven't felt like it yet.

Okay, so I did go out in the woods with cousin Wayne Jeff and nephew Dipstick and pluck a cedar branch out of the ground, proclaiming it "our Christmas tree, love it or leave it."

Yeah, I know, I promised last week that I'd go to the Scout tree lot. And I did, expecting to pick up a nice tree for $10 or $15. Sorry guys, you'll have to find another way to sponsor your trip to see the Great Wall of China and the famous falls of Patagonia. But I ain't paying $45 for a tree.

"Yes, I will admit that I dressed Emma, Clydette and Bubba up in BDUs and tried to pawn them off as soldiers, hoping they'd get a free trip to Disneyworld, or at the very least, a tour of Pratt-Whitney. That little diversion could have saved me bundles of money on gifts. So it didn't work, maybe next year.

What of it, if I follow Emma and the kids about the house, unplugging the Christmas tree lights if someone turns them on before 8 and leaves them on past 9. Electricity is expensive, in case you, who live in government quarters, have forgotten.

Yeah, yeah, you guys across the hall. Maybe I did over react when I jumped up from my desk and slammed your door and our door shut. But having listened to McDonald playing the Christmas card off and on all day, I wasn't in the mood for computer-generated Christmas carols. I don't care if they come with cartoons.

Okay, so sue me for ripping up all the shopping inserts in this morning's newspapers before anyone had a chance to read them. But just think how much money I saved you.

Airborne Annie is going around with her camera and note pad, blinding people with her flash as she asks them what they want for Christmas.

She must have really dazzled them with a thousand points of light because some of their answers were off-the-wall to say the least.

I did agree with part of an answer though. And that was — "I'd like some peace and quiet."

Vuono differs with Wash. Post article

Army News Service

(EDITOR'S NOTE: In a Nov. 15 Washington Post op-ed page article, Jeffrey Record, senior research fellow at the Hudson Institute, discussed four factors that he said clouded the Army's future. The four factors were: (1) the Army's "extreme sensitivity" to changes in the U.S. military commitment to Europe; (2) the Army's "structural inability to respond rapidly in force to any major overseas contingency; (3) the Army's "limited ability to operate in many areas of the Third World;" (4) the Army's political constituency and popular image. The article drew a strong response from Gen. Carl E. Vuono, Army chief of staff. His op-ed article appeared in the Dec. 7 Washington Post and is quoted below.)

Jeffrey Record's gloomy assessment of the Army's future "The Army's Clouded Future, op-ed, Nov. 15 makes a useful contribution to debate.

However, I know today's Army, and I can assure the American people that the Army is ready. It is now, and will remain, a dynamic force that supports our nation's security objectives by fulfilling unique strategic roles. As Record points out, keeping the Army up to date cannot be taken for granted. We have carefully designed the Army to fight and win wherever our nation's vital interests are at risk, and we have the right mix of heavy, light, special operations and support units. As the world's and our needs change, the Army will adapt. Today's Army is a powerful and flexible deterrent, because it has superb soldiers. Our young men and women thrive on high standards and seek to improve themselves. We meet their expectations with tough, realistic training with sophisticated equipment. We plan to continue to recruit and keep these high-quality soldiers.

Committing the Army is the strongest signal our nation can send to potential enemies. Our forward-deployed combat-ready forces based overseas in Europe, the Far East and the Panama Canal Zone are backed by rapid reinforcements from the United States. They are an undeniable sign of our nation's will.

Each service has specific missions clearly defined in public law and unclassified government documents. The states mission of the Army is to prosecute prompt and sustained combat on land to defeat enemy land forces and to seize, occupy and defend land areas. The Army is sometimes criticized for not being self-sufficient, but none of our Armed Forces is.

Why should the Army be? It would be wasteful and unnecessary. No service can fight independently for long.

The reason the United States is committed to NATO also is often misunderstood. The forward defense of the United States begins in Europe, where the failure of deterrence can threaten our national survival. It is understandably our nation's first out-of-homeland priority. That the Soviet Union and its allies maintain vast mechanized forces in Central Europe, far in

Congratulations go out to Darby Award winner

By James J. Altieri
Chairman Ranger Trust Fund Committee
Author, Darbys Rangers and The Spearheaders

On behalf of the Ranger Battalions Association of World War II that has been sponsoring the General William O. Darby Memorial Awards to the outstanding graduates at the Ranger School since 1964, I extend to Capt. Mark Bean our heartiest congratulations. According to the superb and superior performance of this Marine Corp Ranger School graduate, as written in the Nov. 18 edition of The Bayonet, he very definitely is a "cut above the best."

Bean exemplifies in the fullest measure the difficult-to-earn qualifications required to be a recipient of the Darby Award as set forth when our Association first proposed the project to the Ranger Department. General William O. Darby who organized and commanded the 1st Ranger Battalion in Northern Ireland in June 1942, laid the groundwork for all Ranger units that followed in WWII and later in Korea and Vietnam. Three times decorated with the DSC and Purple Heart and hailed by Gen. Lucian Truscott, 5th Army Commander with this tribute, "Never in this war have I known a more gallant, heroic officer," the Darby Award at the Ranger School remains the finest memorial — a living memorial — that we Rangers who served with him know he would cherish. Our Ranger Trust Fund Committee, which provides the funds for this prestigious award, will in the future provide each recipient with a copy of William Orlando Darby — A Man To Remember, published recently by the Darby Jr. High School of Fort Smith, Ark., his home town. This book chronicles his legendary career from his school days up to his death when he was killed leading a combat team of the 10th Mountain Division in Northern Italy just two days before the war in Europe ended.

Santa's Castle staff says thanks

The staff of Santa's Castle would like to thank the Fort Benning community for the outstanding volunteer response we received this year. Since our organization has no paid staff, the success it achieves is solely dependent on volunteer man power.

Because of the efforts of so many generous people — coffee groups, church organizations, The Officers' Wives' Club, unit donations, The Noncommissioned Officers' Wives' Club and individuals too numerous to name — more than 500 children received toys that will make Christmas a happier time for them.

To those people who helped, we thank you for keeping the spirit of Christmas alive at Fort Benning.

AAFES assumes responsibility of Class VI stores

AAFES

Brig. Gen. Jeffery D. Kahla, commander, Army and Air Force Exchange Service, announced recently the signing of the Class VI transfer agreement. Maj. Gen. Thomas G. Rhame, commander of the Community and Family Support Center, signed for the Army, and Maj. Gen. Billy J. Boles, commander of the Military Personnel Center signed for the Air Force.

The agreement is in keeping with the direction given the services by Congress, and is the formal document transferring responsibility for the operation of installation package beverage stores to AAFES from the services' Morale, Welfare, and Recreation (MWR) activities.

AAFES will now be the single manager of Class VI retail operations and the primary wholesaler to authorized MWR activities.

Where distilled spirits and wines are sold, "We expect the transition to go smoothly in a friendly partnership between the installations and our representatives," said Kahla. "We want the transition to benefit everyone: the customer, the commands, MWR funding and AAFES. After all, the Class Six operations and AAFES have the same missions — supporting military members and their families around the world."

The transfer will physically take place worldwide March 25.

"This is a good agreement for the services," explained Art Ryan, plans chief at AAFES' headquarters and chief negotiator. "We'll guarantee each installation's income on a monthly basis. The first year will be equivalent to each service's 1988 earnings, plus a pro-rated share of AAFES' beer and wine cooler earnings for fiscal year 1988. Each installation will also receive 50 percent of all earnings on alcoholic beverages sales above the guarantee. It will be treated as a special dividend, over and above normal AAFES dividend distributions," Ryan said. "The formula will be adjusted for the second year, and again for subsequent years after review and negotiation."

The details of the agreement are lengthy. Ryan said, "Installation level personnel assigned to Class VI operations will be offered employment with AAFES, but not necessarily in the Class VI Store. There will be no adverse impact on the retirement funds of either the MWR or AAFES systems, or, most importantly, on the employees. "AAFES will comply with DoD, Service and Installations regulations which dictate the rules for use, sale, and control of alcoholic beverages. "AAFES will pay for the Class VI inventory over a five-year period. That amount will be determined after AAFES pays for each installation's current payables for inventory on-hand as an 'up-front' payment.

Ryan added, "Facilities and equipment will be turned over to AAFES "as-is" and in operable condition. The only repairs necessary will be to the extent of fixing what's broken. The services will fund and continue current Class VI projects in progress, through the end of their contractual obligations. The installation will share in the earnings of expanded operations and improvements," Ryan said.

Officials also pointed out that clubs will still sell six-packs over the counter where authorized, and may sell bulk under party contracts. The cost of distilled spirits and wine bought by MWR clubs will be at the "landed" cost. This is the same cost it takes to get the merchandise in the Class VI store.

A marketing plan and an implementation checklist outlining specific tasks involved in the transfer, and their timing, will be available later in November, according to Maj. Richard Doucette, marketing program manager at AAFES' headquarters.

Kahla said, "We're really excited about this. This natural step joins the proud heritage of customer service provided by both the Class VI and AAFES organizations. The incentive for increasing earnings, built into this agreement, will offset some of the losses in appropriated funds provided to MWR activities. We view it as a solid step forward in cementing our partnership at the installation level."

Share your Christmas with a soldier

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

Christmas is the happiest time of year. It is a time of giving to your fellow man and enjoying the company of your loved ones. When people look back on their memories of past holiday's they always recall sitting around the table enjoying a big feast with the people they care about most.

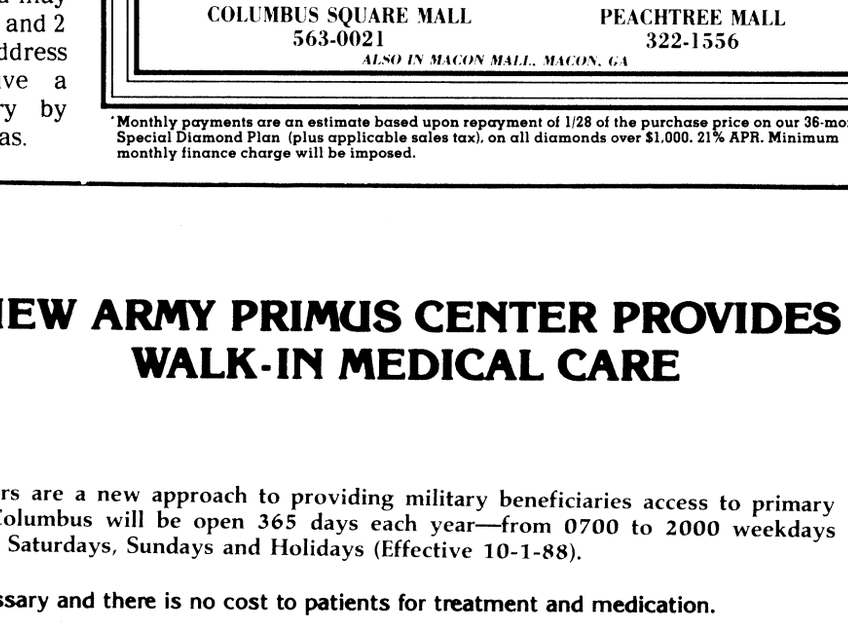
Some Fort Benning soldiers won't have that memory this year because, for various reasons, they won't be going home for Christmas.

To alleviate that heartache, post volunteers have set up "Operation Open House." This program matches up volunteers who have offered to have a soldier come into their home for a holiday meal with a soldier who will be here for Christmas.

According to a program spokesperson, this program was set up because many members of the Fort Benning - Chattahoochee Valley Community called various agencies on post about what they could do to help make soldiers who are left behind have a merry Christmas.

Although many of the troops come from the Infantry Training Center the program is open to soldiers all over post.

Currently, "Operation Open House" is seeking people who would like to have two or more soldiers in their home for Christmas.



Anyone who is interested may call 545-5602 between noon and 2 p.m. and leave his name, address and phone number. Give a soldier a happy memory by sharing yours this Christmas.

Safety Cab offers free, safe ride during holidays

By Shawn Bryson
Bayonet staff writer

Holiday season activities are picking up speed with Christmas just nine days away. Traditionally, this is the time of the year when more parties and social drinking occur. It is also a time when many people make a life and death decision — whether or not to drive after drinking.

Six years ago, an alternative was created. It's called Safety Cab, and it provides a free ride home to people who have had too much to drink.

People who have been drinking and don't want to drive may get that free ride home by calling 323-0110. Safety Cab will provide rides home to Columbus, Phenix City and Fort Benning residents, including rides for soldiers who live in post barracks, according to Alice Robertson, director of Community Relations at The Bradley Center in Columbus.

Safety Cab began its sixth season Thursday and will continue through Jan. 1, Robertson said. The hours of service during the two weeks will be 7 p.m. to 3 a.m.

The sponsors of this year's Safety Cab are American Family Life Assurance Co., Columbus Bank & Trust, WTVM and the Chattahoochee Valley/Fort Benning District of the Association of the United States Army.

Safety Cab received 900 calls for rides last year, about 200 less than in 1986, according to Chuck Cumiskey, vice president, Hydrick Calhoun and Associates, Inc. he also explained that 84 driving-under-the-influence arrests were made during last year's holiday season. That total was up from the 1986 total of 67 — but still significantly lower than 1985's 238 DUI arrests.

Robertson said local businesses are again being asked to participate in the Designate a Driver program. Businesses that serve alcoholic beverages are asked to serve free nonalcoholic beverages to anyone who volunteers to be a designated driver for a group of people.

Benning scouts earn highest rank

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Eight Boy Scouts from Troop 27, Fort Benning district, have earned the Eagle Scout Award, scouting's highest rank. They are: Charles Andre, Patrick Harkins, Christian Nahas, Clint Taylor, Mark Zais, Greg Harkins, Michael Helgeson and Jeremy Holt.

Not only is this a significant personal achievement, but it also represents a valuable source of volunteers for the Fort Benning community.

As part of their qualification for the Eagle rank, each scout had to plan and lead other scouts in a service project. The projects test the scout's organizational and leadership abilities.

Many Fort Benning agencies benefited from the scouts' projects. For example, Greg Harkins' beautification project at Faith Middle School consisted of planting 45 azaleas and cleaning an adjacent area.

Taylor conducted a clothing drive for the Salvation Army.

Nahas contacted Mothers Against Drunk Driving, and he and his team distributed red ribbons in the parking lots of Building 4 and the PX as a holiday reminder about drunk driving. Also, he landscaped an area around Kelley Hill Chapel.

Some of Fort Benning's newest additions to Troop 27 Eagle Scouts are Charles Andre (l), Patrick Harkins, Christian Nahas, Clint Taylor, Mark Zais and Greg Harkins.

The American Red Cross got a clean and organized basement thanks to the efforts of Zais. He and other scouts constructed two sets of metal shelves, painted, and installed carpet.

Helgeson's project yielded much needed storage space at the Red Cross headquarters. He and his team renovated two large walk-in closets.

Andre obtained 7,000 lifesaver tags, which are labels attached to shoes or other clothing with a child's name, address, and necessary medical information needed in an emergency. He and a scouting team passed out the tags at each school on post.

Holt and his team renovated two buildings, which are now being used by Santa's Castle for storage and repair of donated toys.

Patrick Harkins and his crew organized some handbooks for Fort Benning's Housing Division.

These scouts' achievements and outstanding contributions have shown the Benning community they care enough to make a difference.

CFC continues drive

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Although the original deadline for the Combined Federal Campaign has passed, it is not too late to donate to the drive.

Currently, Fort Benning has met 92 percent of its designated goal of $565,000.

According to post CFC representative, Maj. Bill Sitler, the new closing date of the drive has not been determined.

CFC kicked off here Oct. 1 and is a program in which federal agencies, the military and many others, combine contributions gathered throughout a campaign and distribute those contributions to charities grouped under the United Way.

At the end of the campaign, an allocation committee will distribute Fort Benning's share of the funds not previously designated. These funds will go to organizations such as Santa's Castle, Youth Activities and the Army Community Service Food Locker.

CFC is second only to Army Emergency Relief in helping Army families.

Contributors are reminded to include their Social Security Number on the donation certificate.

Vietnam-era hero bids a farewell to Army

By J. C. Bean
Army News Service

He leaves the Army next week after 32 years of military service.

The first Vietnam war hero to receive the Medal of Honor retired Thursday. I interview him via telephone a week before the event. He's in San Francisco. I'm in Washington.

Through the receiver I hear the voice of Col. Roger H.C. Donlon crack a little when I ask what retirement would mean to him.

Donlon, born Jan. 30, 1934, in Saugerties, N.Y., doesn't elaborate on the answer. He simply says that it means he'll be leaving behind a great part of his life — no, he corrects himself, his whole adult life — in service to his country.

A modest answer, indeed.

Donlon's modesty prevails throughout the interview. I ask him to share some of the thoughts that had crossed his mind some 24 years earlier during the White House Medal of Honor ceremony. I am surprised how quickly he recalls the Dec. 5, 1964, event.

Nine survivors had gathered with him that day to watch as President Lyndon Johnson presented then Captain Donlon with the medal. Donlon was cited for his 'conspicuous gallantry and intrepid leadership in defending his Special Forces camp located some 30 miles northwest of Da Nang and near Khe Sanh during a vicious, wee-hour-of-the-morning Viet Cong attack earlier that year on July 6.

It seems no effort for Donlon to recall the emotions he and the others shared in Washington that day.

He explains, "Just three days ago, on the 24th anniversary of the ceremony, I had occasion to share some of those thoughts with then Sgt., later warrant officer Thomas L. Gregg, my medic during the battle. I think what was on all our minds that day were thoughts and feeling for those not present — namely, MSgt. Dave 'Pop' Alamo, young Sgt. John Houston and Australian Army Warrant Officer Kevin Conway. They weren't there because they had made courageous sacrifices for us all."

Donlon doesn't say it, so I do. "You mean their lives, colonel?"

"Yes, yes," Donlon answers softly.

"It was their courage that spurred each and every one of us on. Of course, I also on that day was overwhelmed and was especially proud because President Johnson was so kind as to have my mother there along with my brothers and sisters. Both immediate and extended family."

At that moment my preconceived image of Donlon changes. All the reading and researching I had done in preparing for my interview with the Special Forces hero had produced a mental image of a hard, super-macho-type man. Perhaps a mix of John Wayne and Rambo, I thought. I saw exploding grenades and mortar rounds, heard the fire of automatic weapons. The tight eyebrows and white, gritted teeth of a young Donlon stuck in my mind as I imagined him running, falling, getting back up and stumbling to wherever his soldiers needed him, taking hits, bearing down, ignoring the pain and blood, all for the sake of his men.

The next moment, Donlon's sincere, honest voice brings reality back.

He continues his story.

"Also present at that White House ceremony," Donlon informs me, "was the man I still respect the most after 32 years, and for whom I served, Brig. Gen. Lester L. Wheeler. "Under his leadership and inspiration, I learned some very important lessons. Probably the most important ones were honesty and integrity to yourself and to your charge, your command."

Donlon talks more about Wheeler's courage, values, caring and sharing attitude, other attributes he says he hoped had rubbed off on him during his Army career. Echoing his utmost respect for Wheeler, Donlon also credits Maj. Gen. Aubrey S. Newman as having a profound influence on his career.

It seems Donlon always wants to talk about someone else. For instance, while he recovered from his wounds in a Saigon hospital after the Nam Dong attack, Donlon talked to visitors Gen. William C. Westmoreland and Ambassador Maxwell Taylor about the men on his team, the A team, incidentally, and their careers, he says. He told them both just how proud he was of his team, every single man, and the courage he had gained from their inspirational action on the battlefield.

From the battlefield in the tropic jungles to the frigid ice of the north, Donlon's military career has spanned the globe, he tells me when I ask. Career highlights include service in the Arctic, Panama, two tours in Vietnam, one in Japan and most recently at the Presidio of San Francisco. He attended the Command and General Staff College at Fort Leavenworth, Kan., in 1971 and returned there later as an officer instructor.

"Beyond that, I was privileged to become the director of allied personnel at the college," Donlon says proudly.

In that role Donlon says he and his wife, Norma, shared some of the most outstanding moments in his Army career.

Donlon's military career began back in December 1953 when he joined the U.S. Air Force. Two years later, he enrolled in the U.S. Military Academy at West Point as a cadet. He attended the academy for two years, until personal reasons caused him to resign. A year later on Feb. 5, 1958, Donlon enlisted in the Army and a year after that attended the Infantry Officers Candidate School at Fort Benning, Ga. He received his commission as a second lieutenant on June 24, 1959. In 1963, Donlon began his Special Forces training, and became one of an elite group of soldiers new to the Army scene.

As for training and what Donlon thinks about it, he has developed a simple phrase that says it all, especially as it pertains to his. Since he believes teamwork is necessary for success on the battlefield, the words "teamwork through tough training" represent his motto for success.

"It's very appropriate, too," Donlon grins verbally, "that I find myself retiring during the year the Army has rededicated itself to excellence in training. Further, I'll be retiring at the crossroads of the Army's educational and training center at Leavenworth."

Before he retires, however, Donlon has a message to soldiers serving in the Army now or for any man or woman contemplating an Army career. "I've been privileged," he says, "to be part of a Department of Defense effort encouraging everyone in uniform to exercise their right and fulfill their requirement to vote. If I can just remind everyone in uniform that we are citizens as well as soldiers, sailors, airmen, Marines or Coast Guardsmen. Today it's so much easier than it was when I first came in. I couldn't vote then. I could go off to war at 18, but I could not have the privilege or the right to vote. Everyone in uniform today can do it."

In his push for encouraging voting among members of the armed services, Donlon continues with remarks about the importance of absentee voting, noting a few recent elections whose ultimate victories were decided that way.

"For most of us in uniform, that's what's available to us," Donlon reminds.

In conclusion, Donlon says, "If I can just relay the message and encourage every soldier — man and woman — to do their best on the job.

Remember, your job also is to be the very best possible citizen/soldier." Something tells me Donlon speaks from experience.

The man who was awarded the first Medal of Honor for his actions in Vietnam retired Thursday in a ceremony at Fort Leavenworth, Kan.

Col. Roger H.C. Donlon, president of the Physical Evaluation Board at the Physical Evaluation Board at the Presidio of San Francisco, retired with 32 years of military service. He received the Medal of Honor in a White House ceremony Dec. 5, 1964 from President Lyndon Johnson for his bravery during a Vietcong attack at the Nam Dong Special Forces camp July 6, 1964.

Donlon, has served at Fort Benning several times, first as an Officers School Candidate and later as an Infantry Officers Advanced Course student. He also served at the U.S. Army Infantry Board from June 1974 to September 1975. Donlon was in the Supporting Weapons Test Division, a forerunner of today's Heavy Weapons Test Division.

Commissary prices see slight increase

Army News Service

Combined with a heat wave, the drought of 1988 meant low times on the farm.

Those low times are now beginning to show up in higher prices for food and U.S. Army Troop Support Agency commissaries are not exempt.

The good news is that TSA customers still save an average of 25 percent when compared with their local grocery store economies. And, considering the steepest one-month rise in grocery store prices in 4.5 years was recorded in July, any news about savings was indeed welcomed.

Statistically, food costs are tracked in what government economists call the Consumer Price Index. In July, the CPI shot 1.3 percent above the June mark. Driving part of the price climb are extreme fluctuations in produce directly related to the summer drought.

Consumers of vegetables suffered a 4.3 percent rise as the index was jerked by an 8.9 percent hike in fresh tomatoes. Behind the leap is the geographic fact that the nation's vegetable garden is California, where drought conditions killed tomatoes in large numbers.

Commissary shoppers will also notice an increase in poultry prices.

Poultry recorded an overall 7.4 percent boost in July and chicken was the main contributor to higher costs as it climbed 8.9 percent.

The CPI for eggs rose 13.8 percent. The reason behind the increase was that supply crashed below demand because producers cut back production due to the drought-fed higher feed costs for layers.

July's CPI rose 1.1 percent for cereal and bakery products.

However, according to economists, most items in this category are highly processed and price fluctuations are primarily due to such reasons as labor, packaging, advertising and other marketing costs. Part of the hike, though, is attributed to the dry conditions.

The fall harvest is beginning, and even higher prices for food may loom on the horizon as farmers reap the aftermath of the drought of '88. But Army commissaries are still busy irrigating savings to ensure their customers reap the best available benefit.

defense operations in the midst of an enemy barrage of mortar shells, falling grenades and extremely heavy gunfire. Upon the initial onslaught, he swiftly marshaled his forces and ordered the removal of the needed ammunition from a blazing building. He then dashed through a hail of small arms and exploding hand grenades to abort a breach of the main gate. En route to this position, he detected an enemy demolition team of three in the proximity of the main gate and quickly annihilated them.

Although exposed to the intense grenade attack, he then succeeded in reaching a 60mm mortar position, despite sustaining a severe stomach wound as he was within five yards of the gunpit. When he discovered that most of the men in this gunpit were also wounded, he completely disregarded his own injury, directed their withdrawal to a location 30 meters away and again risked his life by remaining behind and covering the movement with the utmost effectiveness.

Noticing that his team sergeant was unable to evacuate the gunpit, he crawled toward him and, while dragging the fallen soldier out of the gunpit, an enemy mortar exploded and inflicted a wound in Donlon's left shoulder. Although suffering from multiple wounds, he carried the abandoned 60mm mortar weapon to a new location 30 meters away where he found three wounded defenders.

After administering first aid and encouragement to these men, he left the weapon with them, headed toward another position and retrieved a 57mm recoiless rifle. Then, with great courage and coolness under fire, he returned to the abandoned gunpit, evacuated ammunition for the two weapons, and while crawling and dragging the urgently needed ammunition, received a third wound on his leg by an enemy hand grenade.

Despite his critical physical condition, he again crawled 175 meters to an 81mm mortar position and directed firing operations, which protected the seriously threatened east sector of the camp. He then moved to an eastern 60mm mortar position and upon determining that the vicious enemy assault had weakened, crawled back to the gunpit with the 60mm mortar, set it up for defensive operations and turned it over to two defenders with minor wounds.

As he bravely continued to move around the perimeter, a mortar shell exploded, wounding him in the face and body.

As the long-awaited daylight brought defeat to the enemy forces and their retreat back to the jungle leaving behind 54 of their dead, many weapons and grenades. Donlon immediately reorganized his defenses and administered first aid to the wounded.

His dynamic leadership, fortitude and valiant efforts inspired not only the American personnel but the friendly Vietnamese defenders as well and resulted in the successful defense of the camp. Donlon's extraordinary heroism, at the risk of his life above and beyond the call of duty are in the highest traditions of the U.S. Army.

SPIRIT

"Getting that check for a million dollars for last year's efforts was most appreciated," Daily said. "It came at a good time, and it helped us keep programs in place that might otherwise have been cut because of budget reductions.

"We need to continue doing what we've been doing at every level."

A. Eugene Cottle, Management Analysis Division Chief, Directorate of Resource Management, recognized the command and major units, directorate staffs, and personal and special staffs that contributed the largest dollar savings and greatest number of improvement actions for fiscal year 1988:

Command/major units

1st place - USAITC (39 management actions for $15.2 million savings)

2nd place - 75th Ranger Regiment ($4.4 million savings)

USAIS (32 actions for $2.5 million)

Directorate staff

1st place - DEH (136 actions $89.5 million savings)

2nd place - DOL (69 actions, $24.8 million savings)

Personal and special staff

1st place - Chaplain's office (34 actions, $1.5 million)

2nd place - EEO office (12 actions, $253,000)

Fiscal year 1988 SPIRIT of the year award winners

Susan Piland, USAITC

Charles Orr, DEH

SFC James M. Lawlor, Chaplain's office

Cottle also recognized two very special individuals: Sarah McLaney, installation project SPIRIT coordinator, and chief of staff, Col. James I. Daily. Both received engraved plaques for their efforts and support of the SPIRIT program.

Project SPIRIT stands for Systematic Productivity Improvement Review in TRADOC. The program focuses on improving productivity. Through the program, each installation documents and measures in the form of savings management improvement initiatives.

Since the program's inception in 1983, Fort Benning has done well. The post is the only installation within TRADOC that has won the $1 million award twice — in fiscal years 1983 and 1987.

In fiscal year 1987, the post won the award with 538 actions for a $40.1 million savings. In fiscal year 1988, the post recorded 880 actions representing $198.8 million.

The program's goal for fiscal year 1989 is $18.5 million. "If we want to win again, we need to do much better than that," Daily said.

The post's final SPIRIT report was submitted to HQ TRADOC Nov. 2. Winners will be announced in March 1989.

Post schools implement drug education program

By Beth Middlemiss
Fort Benning Schools

DARE — Drug Abuse Resistance Education — is now being implemented in the Fort Benning School System beginning with Faith Middle School's sixth graders.

This 17-week course brings specially trained police officers into classrooms to help students acquire decision making skills — skills that lead to personal safety as well as the ability to learn to recognize, cope with, resist the pressures that might influence students to experiment with alcohol, tobacco and other substances.

Spec. Tony Bailey, a member of Fort Benning's military police force, completed 80 hours of intensive training this summer on narcotics and on classroom management to enable him to present DARE to youngsters.

DARE was designed and implemented first in the city of Los Angeles. Since that time, the program has been implemented in 33 states, in New Zealand and in more than 300 agencies world-wide.

The Fort Benning School System is one of only two systems in Georgia to use program. Its design provides time for the police officer to serve not only as a teacher but also as a role model for students during lunch and other times during the school day.

While Benning schools have begun the program in sixth grade, plans are underway for implementation of DARE in the elementary schools as well.

A visit to a classroom will show the kinds of interactions that the police officer has with students to prepare them to face some of the pressures they may encounter later on or may be facing now as they move into their teen years. Press is invited to attend a class at Faith Middle School; classes occur at 12:37 Wednesdays and Fridays.

Maj. Gen. Michael F. Spigelmire, Fort Benning's commanding general, was awarded the Georgia Commendation Medal for his contributions to the State's National Guard.

Georgia State Adjutant General, Maj. Gen. Joseph W. Griffin, presented the award Monday at Infantry Hall.

"I've known Maj. Gen. Spigelmire for a long time," Griffin said. "He's a soldier's soldier. He has a deep understanding of the reserve component and where it fits in today's Army."

"Georgia National Guard has a real close affinity with Fort Benning," Griffin continued. "It's a pleasure for me to present this award."

Fort Benning's top soldier said it was with a great deal of pride that he accepted the award.

Spigelmire received the medal and a memento plaque for his services to the National Guard as commander of the 24th Infantry Division (Mechanized) in Fort Stewart, Ga.

Army provides help for victims/witnesses

By Paul A. Capofari
Army News Service

"I don't want to get involved." "If I report it, I'll be the one in trouble." "It's none of my business."

Have you ever used or heard any of these excuses for not reporting criminal activity? Becoming involved in the criminal justice system frightens some. It represents a chore to others. Often, victims do not report crimes because they fear being questioned by police and prosecutors.

Since you never know when you might witness a crime, or, an even more scary thought, be the victim of one, it's important to know what services and programs the Army has for victims and witnesses.

Chapter 18 of Army Regulation 27-10 governs the Army victim witness assistance program. This military justice regulation lays out the essential services and programs for victims and witnesses. The staff judge advocate supervises the program that is based on a federal law called the Victim Witnesses Protection Act of 1983. Although the provisions of the law apply only to federal courts, the Army has extended its provisions to the court-martial system.

Designed to ensure good order and discipline within the Army, the military justice system also is designed to protect the lives and property of members of the military community and the general public while at the same time protecting the fundamental

2 Reserve companies activated at Benning

By Shawn Bryson
Bayonet staff writer

Two U.S. Army Reserve companies became a part of Fort Benning in two separate activation ceremonies Saturday — one at Benning's Lawson Army Airfield and the other at Fort Rucker, Ala.

Both units, Companies A and B, 6th Battalion, 159th Aviation Regiment, are now officially tenant units here, although Co. B won't physically arrive for about a year, according to SFC Richard Forchiemer, unit spokesman.

Among the officials on hand for the activation ceremony for Co. A here, was Brig. Gen. Carlton B. McAurthor, deputy commander of the 121st Army Reserve Command in Birmingham, Ala.

Forchiemer said the two companies will provide air support to various activities at Benning, the Infantry School, School of the Americas and the Ranger Training Brigade, for example.

rights of the accused. Without the cooperation of victims and witnesses, the system would cease to work effectively. So, all persons working within and in support of the system — the lawyers, the police, and commanders — should make sure that victims and witnesses receive due consideration, get authorized assistance, are treated with dignity and courtesy and are subjected to minimum interference with personal privacy and property rights.

In those cases where the victim has been subjected tn actual or attempted violence, every effort should be made to reduce further trauma. Utmost care and compassion is accorded victims, especially where the victim is a child or one that has been sexually assaulted.

Each Army post is required to appoint a victim/witness liaison officer. They act as a point of contact through which victims and witnesses may get information and assistance. They do not provide services for the victim. Instead, they make sure that the services available are used. They are a friend to help the victim of crime. They provide the victim with a victim information packet designed to help the victim understand the military justice system.

If the victim or witness must testify in court, the liaison officer, along with the prosecutor, will intervene for the witness with their employer to make sure the employer knows that testimony at a court-martial is compelled by federal law. Witnesses are entitled to travel and witness fees, and may be compelled to appear under a subpoena.

Victims are entitled to know the status of the investigation and the criminal procedure underway. Victims of crime often feel neglected as the criminal justice system moves toward an adjudication of guilt and sentencing. Many of these frustrations stem from what seems like the the slow pace of the judicial system, and the lack of information provided to the victim. In these two areas the military justice system is ahead of many civilian jurisdictions.

Military trials are speedy; they must be completed in 120 days from when charges are first made. Trial occurs faster if the accused is in pretrial confinement. To a person who has been the victim of a crime these limits can seem excruciatingly long. However, compared to other criminal justice systems, military justice is swift.

Also, victims are entitled to know the status of the case. The regulation says that the victim liaison will normally consult with the victim before deciding not to prefer charges, to release the accused from custody or to accept a pretrial agreement offered by the accused.

A pretrial agreement, or plea bargain or "deal" as it's commonly known — is an arrangement whereby the accused avoids a contested trial by pleading guilty and in exchange the sentence is limited to a certain amount. Often victims are confused by plea bargains. In the Army they are discussed with the victim ahead of time whenever possible.

If you are the victim of a crime - report it - and know that the system is designed to protect you.

Soldier gets 'double whammy' from furniture store, finance company

By William F. Sutton Jr.
Staff Judge Advocate's Office

Q: A few months ago I purchased furniture from a local store. After making a few payments, several pieces fell apart. I called the store and told them I would not make any more payments until they agreed to repair my furniture.

One week later, a local finance company's representative called me. He said that his company bought my contract from the furniture store, and that I must start making my monthly payment to the finance company.

Since they are a finance company, they say they won't repair my furniture. Meanwhile, the store says it doesn't have to fix my furniture since it sold my contract. I seem to be getting a double whammy. Must I pay this finance company?

A: Your problem is a common occurance. Although the store did sell your contract, they still should fix or replace any defective furniture covered by a warranty.

You should return to the store and review the situation with the manager. If the store still won't help, then you might have to complain to the Better Business Bureau or let the Legal Assistance Office review the contract. However, your ability to enforce the contract may be hampered by the sale of the contract to a finance company.

Although stores have the right to keep and collect their own accounts, for practical reasons, most don't. Most stores are not and do not want to be collection specialists.

Also, they dislike tying up money in installment contracts that can last three or four years. As a result, they sell or "assign" your contract to financial institutions to get cash immediately and let someone else worry about collecting payments. When a store does this, it means they already have the money and any threat to stop payments will have no effect.

Because the store did sell your contract, several problem areas could arise. First, it appears that you did not receive proper notice of the sale. Section 9-318 (3) of the Uniform Commercial Code (UCC) states that a buyer may continue to pay the assignor (the store) until the buyer receives notice of the assignment, and his duty to pay the assignee (the finance company). This notice must identify the rights assigned (such as the right to receive payment on the first of the month, etc.).

Also, if required by the buyer, the assignee must prove that the store really made the assignment. The finance company has failed to give you such a notice. Thus, you can refuse to pay them until they do.

Second, a general rule of contract law states that an assignee (the finance company), stands in the shoes of the assignor. In other words, the finance company takes not only the store's rights, but also its responsibilities. All the claims you can make against the store can also be made against the finance company. This includes repair, replacement, or refund for a defective item. There are, however, exceptions to this rule.

The first exception covers cases where the buyer signs a separate promissory note along with the sales contract. The second exception covers times when the store includes a "waiver of defenses" clause in the buyer's sales contract. Those clauses may release the finance company from any of your claims against the seller. You need to review all documents in your furniture purchase to see if the finance company qualifies for one of these exceptions.

Whenever you buy things under a monthly payment agreement, be sure to ask the store questions about the assignment of accounts. Make sure you understand what every document says and how it could affect your future rights if the account is sold. If you have any questions concerning your rights under these type of agreements, contact the Legal Assistance Office for an appointment.

"Operation Holiday"

An extended hand of cheer for Fort Benning personnel from the tri-city community.

The local chapter of the Association of the U.S. Army has again teamed with Columbus and Phenix City businesses, churches and individuals to make the holidays cheerier for Fort Benning personnel who'll remain on duty during the season. For those soldiers, Christmas and New Year's can be bleak and lonely times. That's where AUSA and our community come in. AUSA has assembled another full schedule of activities for the hundreds of troops staying here, including tours of participating firms, religious services, meals and trips to sporting events, trips made possible through financial contributions from various business firms.

A strong supporter for years, the Ledger-Enquirer is pleased to further public awareness of this wonderful annual event, recognizing the involvement and commitment of so many businesses and individuals to Ft. Benning.

excess of reasonable defensive needs, cannot be ignored. We must continue to take stock of their actual capabilities until they change, regardless of new expressions of good intentions. Peace in Europe for more than 40 years demonstrates the success of this strategy.

If war should break out, the Army is responsible for controlling and ending a conflict on terms favorable to the United States and its allies and at the lowest level of violence possible. Active Army, Guard and reserve forces are indispensable as an alternative to escalation to nuclear war.

The division of the Army between active and reserve units is not a hindrance. In the active force the Army has the combat and support unit needed to ensure forward defense and to meet unforeseen emergencies worldwide. In the Army's reserves, and those of our sister services, lie the additional forces needed for prolonged contingencies or total war.

In the past five years, the Army's revitalized light forces have become the best trained in the world. They can be quickly deployed anywhere. In higher intensity combat, such as we would face in Europe, light infantry is vital in night operations, cities and rugged mountains and woods. We recently20 confirmed this in exercises in Germany. When needed, we provide our light forces the transport, anti-armor weapons and other support to match the threat and terrain.

Beyond NATO, our nations faces sophisticated military capabilities that are rapidly spreading. More than a dozen developing nations, for instance, have more than 1,000 main battle tanks. As the Iran-Iraq war demonstrates, conflicts in the developing world can be intense and deadly.

The challenges of low-intensity conflict also are complex, and we have prepared our Army to meet them. U.S. Army units stand ready to help friendly nations, provide material assistance for priority, national development efforts and protect or rescue U.S. citizens from terrorists.

The unique capabilities of the Army's 82nd Airborne Division and 75th Rangers for a forcible insertion against armed opposition are unmatched when a crisis cannot be contained. Combat-ready active units — from a battalion of fewer than 1,000 soldiers to a fully supported corps of several divisions — can respond to contingencies anywhere with little or no notice.

In a recent training exercise, we demonstrated our ability to rapidly defuse a potential crisis. On minimal notice, we deployed elements of the 7th Light Infantry Division and 82nd Airborne Division to Honduras from California and North Carolina.

We have learned the lessons of the past. We have fielded an Army able to meet the challenges of today. Looking ahead, we will adjust to trends on the horizon. I am confident the quality and flexibility of or Army will enable it to carry out its strategic roles — anywhere, anytime.

Health care available for post pets

Veterinary Services

Limited basic health care needs for privately owned pets are available at the Animal Disease Prevention and Control Facility located on main post. This facility is funded by both appropriated and non-appropriated funds and is authorized for the treatment and prevention of diseases that may be transmissible to humans or constitute a community health hazard.

Services provided by the facility include vaccination programs, treatment of transmissible diseases, on-post pet registration, health certificates for travel, adoption programs, impoundment/quarantine services and means to humanely euthanize and dispose of ill and unwanted pets. Diagnostic procedures are also available which include heartworm testing, feline leukemia testing, intestinal parasite evaluation and Equine Infectious Anemia (Coggins) tests for horses quartered on post.

Normal duty hour emergencies can be treated but only to the extent of stabilization of the animal. After the animal is stabilized, it will then be referred to a civilian veterinarian for primary and follow-up care. Procedures such as surgery, radiology, heartworm treatments, and hospitalization will also be referred.

All pets over three months of age will be vaccinated for rabies and revaccinated at one year of age. Other vaccination programs can be explained at the clinic. Dogs and cats over three months of age also have to be registered with Veterinary Services within two weeks of arriving at Fort Benning.

Veterinary services are provided in building 265, at the west end of 10th Mountain Division Road on main post.

The phone numbers are 545-4444/1127. Please call for appointments or if you have any problems or questions about your pets.

Tips to help spot drunk drivers

National Safety Council

If you don't drink, you never have to worry about driving while impaired by alcohol — but you could still become the victim of a drunk driver. The National Safety Council offers these clues to help you spot a driver impaired by alcohol or other drugs:

★Unusually wide turns
★Driving with window down in cold weather
★Weaving or swerving
★Braking erratically
★Slow response to traffic signals
★Turning abruptly or illegally
★Driving with headlights off in darkness
★Straddling center line or lane marker
★Driving on other than the designated roadway
★Following too closely
★Stopping without apparent cause
★Excessive speed or very slow speed

Adventures could turn into disaster

U.S. Army Safety Center

Picture your children roaming the fields and woods in search of elusive treasure that sets their imaginations ablaze. Perhaps they're searching for arrow heads, which transport them to Western Plains covered by buffalo herds and Indian hunters.

Adventurous, inquisitive children are constantly on the lookout for discoveries that carry them to distant lands and times. Playing on a deserted construction site, they may happen across a tiny, silver tube. They may unearth an artillery shell in an area adjacent to a military range.

Such finds may be considered a stroke of good luck. Actually, their discovery may be the least fortunate event of their young lives. These items can explode, causing injury or death.

Blasting caps, or fuse detonators, are packed with dense, high strength explosives. They can be as short as one-inch long. They're sensitive to flame, heat, friction and shock. They're used to detonate explosives and may be found around quarries and construction sites.

Duds are munitions that have not exploded. Duds may be unexploded rockets, missiles, mortar rounds, artillery shells or grenades. Just because these munitions didn't explode the first time, that doesn't mean they can't explode. On the contrary, any handling or motion could cause an explosion. Again, these deadly dangers are often small enough to fit in the palm of your hand. However, they are still as deadly as the reason they were made.

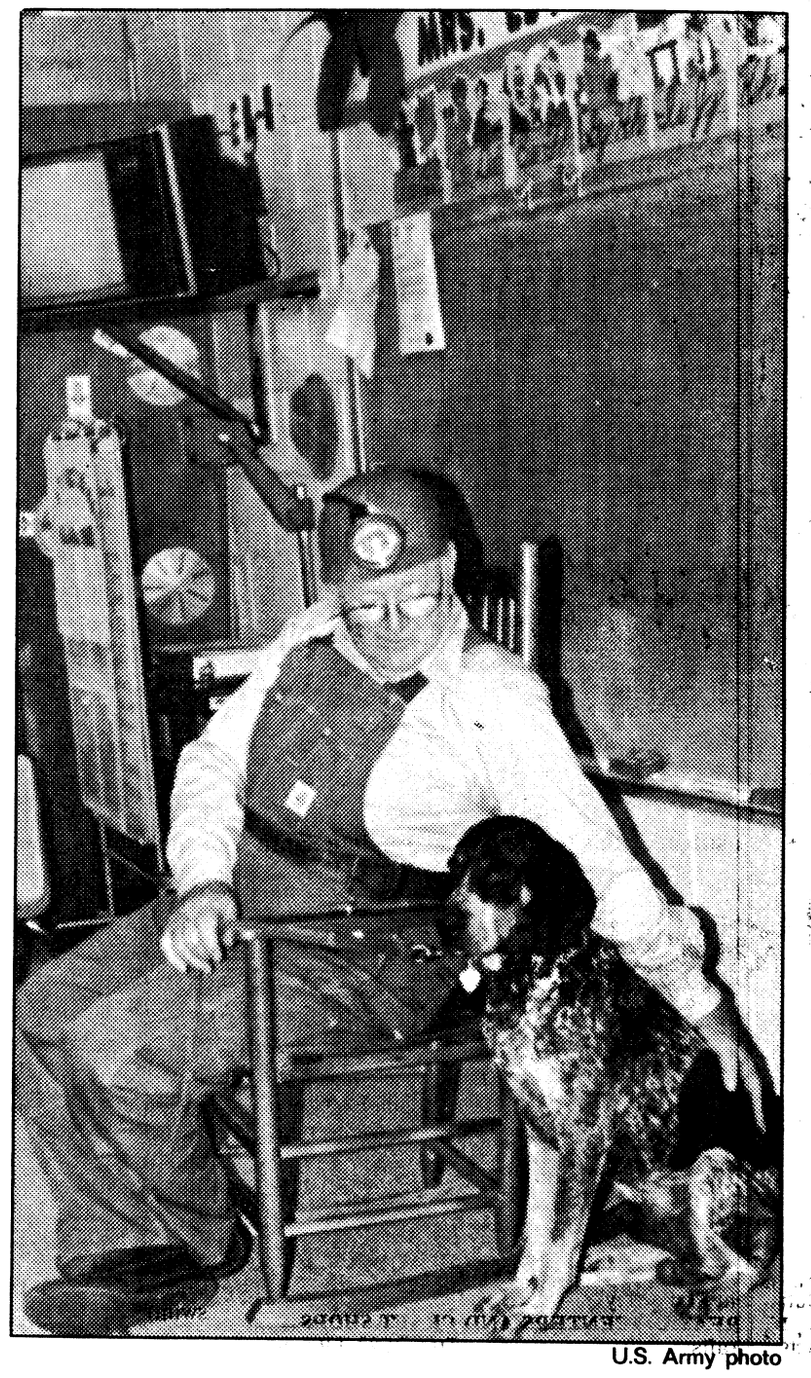
Beware of duds in and around current and historic ranges and impact areas. They may also be present in any military training area. Be cautious in areas adjacent to ranges and training grounds.

The key to protecting children from these lurking dangers is education. Children must be made aware of the hazards, where they may be found and what to do if they find or suspect they've found one.

Their immediate reaction must be, "DON'T TOUCH." Then they should contact the military police or fire department. If police or fire personnel aren't nearby, they should contact a parent or teacher.

Children love to search and discover. But they need to be trained about the treasures that will blow up in their faces. Broadening their lives shouldn't end them.

Students learn about ammo safety



By Beth Middlemiss
Fort Benning Schools

Twice each year, before the winter holidays and before the summer break, teachers and administrators in the Fort Benning Schools place even greater emphasis on ammo safety than they do throughout the rest of the school year.

With displays, posters, plays and discussions, students are made aware of the dangers of ammo, the need to stay away if ammo is found and the need to notify an adult so that proper precautions are taken and appropriate authorities are brought in to remove the ammo.

Dexter School brought an old friend back as they observed Ammo Safety Week. To supplement their classroom activities on ammo safety, Dexter students and teachers invited Robert McCorkle, of Buena Vista, Ga., and his blue tick hound, Rocky Top, back for a visit. When McCorkle visited Dexter School last year, he came as part of the Artists-in-Education program to discuss regional folklore.

While part of the conversation during this visit naturally centered on Rocky Top and McCorkle's other blue tick hounds, much of this visit was spent discussing safety in the woods and what to do if guns or ammo are found.

SPIRITUAL

Give the gift of presence

By Lyn H. Brannon
Chaplain

During this season of the year, many of us are preoccupied with presents. We are buying them, mailing them, dropping hints for them and writing letters to Santa Claus about them. Perhaps one of the nicest presents of all is one you haven't even considered. The gift of which I speak is the present of presence.

To be present with someone means to really listen to them, to be attentive not only to the words they speak, but also to the meaning or feeling behind the words. How many times are we really "present" to the people we are with, or they to us? So often we drown out what the other says with a blaring stereo or split our attention between the ball game on TV, hearing what our spouse tells us and playing with the kids. Can we do justice to any of the three when trying to do them all at once?

Perhaps this holiday season it would be fun to try giving the gift of presence. We can do it in many ways. We can give our presence to a child by kneeling down to her level when she talks to us and treating her as the person of value and worth that she is. We can give our presence to a friend or acquaintance who seems down by removing the distractions around us and asking him if he would like someone to talk to. We can even give our presence to someone who is a long distance away by calling her and really listening to what she is telling us — the feelings as well as the facts conveyed in the conversation.

When we receive the gift of presence, it makes us feel very special. To be really heard is a rare gift indeed. I suspect that it is the secret wish of us all on our own private wish lists. Why not try giving the gift of presence this season? It won't cost any money, although it might cost you a bit of time and effort. But the reward will probably be worth the effort. If you would like to learn more about how to be present to others with your presence, see your unit chaplains or contact the Family Life Center. May the blessings of the season be with you.

10th Mtn Div soldiers return to Benning temporarily

By Agatha H. James
Bayonet staff writer

Some 10th Mountain Division soldiers are back at Fort Benning. However, they're not here to stay.

One hundred mountain men including platoon and squad leaders, first sergeants, company commanders, the command sergeant major and even the battalion commander have returned to Benning. The men are here for light leader training.

The light infantrymen left Fort Benning in early November for their new home at Fort Drum, New York.

Capt. Steven R. Hoogland, Light Leader Course operations officer, confirmed that the 2nd Battalion, 14th Infantry, 2nd Brigade, soldiers are here for training. Hoogland said the Ranger Training Brigade agreed to teach the mountain men a shortened or abridged version of the 28-day Light Leader Course.

Upon their arrival at Fort Drum several weeks ago, one of the first orders of business has been a Mountain Leader Certification Course. The 14-day light leader training at Benning is the first phase of the brigade's MLCC.

"We started the light leader training for them on Nov. 28," Hoogland said. "The normal LLC goes very in depth on certain areas such as battle drills and collective tasks. However, 10th Mountain identified specific areas they wanted to concentrate on, so we ended up instructing them in 16 of the normal 37 task areas."

The LLC is a train-the-trainer course. Its purpose is to train soldiers how to train other soldiers.

"During a normal course, we train soldiers to be squad leaders," Hoogland said. "We take a group of individuals who have been selected to be the leader from each squad. We teach them to do a specific task; then, they are required to go back and instruct the soldiers in their squad. This forces them to be able to train soldiers."

For the 10th Mountain version, the Ranger Training Brigade's instructors did all the instruction up front rather than train 10th Mountain soldiers to be instructors. "Then, we turned it over to them, and they practiced and rehearsed," Hoogland said.

Lt. Col Wayne M. Barth, 2nd Bn., 14th Inf. commander, said the LLC was included in the battalion's MLCC because only about 25 percent of their newly assigned soldiers have had light leader training. "A lot of the NCOs we are receiving for this COHORT rotation are coming to us from Europe, and they are not from Light Infantry units," he said. "We included light leader training in our MLCC so our soldiers would get the training.

"The leader certification program develops the physical, mental and tactical skills critical for effective combat leadership."

The battalion also brushed up on weapon and surveillance training while here at Benning. The 29th Infantry Regiment instructed the battalion's HHC Platoon on TOW/Dragon and 60mm and 80mm mortars. The Long Range Surveillance Unit taught the battalion's Scouts Platoon how to construct hide positions, plan reconnaissance and rappel.

The second phase of training will be done at Fort Drum. "That will give us the knowledge and skills that we will need to operate in a cold weather environment," Barth said.

The other facet of the course at Drum will focus on leadership of the 1990s. "It is designed to make leaders aware of the unique challenges of receiving not only new COHORT, but other soldiers that come into the unit, building teamwork by first building cohesion and bonding among the soldiers," Barth said.

The troops graduated from the Light Leader Course Dec. 9 and headed back to Drum Sunday. The 3rd Battalion, 14th Infantry, 2nd Brigade, will be back at Benning Feb. 8-20 for light leader training.

USARSA's historian will provide research

By Keith F. Johnson
USARSA correspondent

The history of the United States Army School of the Americas is being officially researched for the first time through efforts of the school's first historian, Dr. Richard A. Gorell.

Gorell, fluent in Spanish, arrived at the school after spending the last 25 years studying Latin America and its culture.

"During the early 60s, I became aware of the Cuban Revolution, the Bay of Pigs situation and the Cuban Missile crisis. All of this interested me from an intellectual point of view on Latin American activities," Gorell said.

Upon completing his undergraduate degree in history at Quincy College in Illinois, Gorell joined the Peace Corps in 1964 and went to Colombia, South America. His experiences there fueled his desire to learn more.

"After spending two years in Colombia," Gorell said, "I was convinced my academic focus should be on Latin America, so I went to Georgetown University in Washington, D.C."

While working on his master's degree at Georgetown, he received a grant from the Organization of American States to conduct independent research in Bogota, Colombia, on political participation of people living in shantytowns.

Gorell learned that the family kept shantytown residents together through the hard times. This observation led to his Ph.D work at Kansas University and completion of his doctorate in 1988.

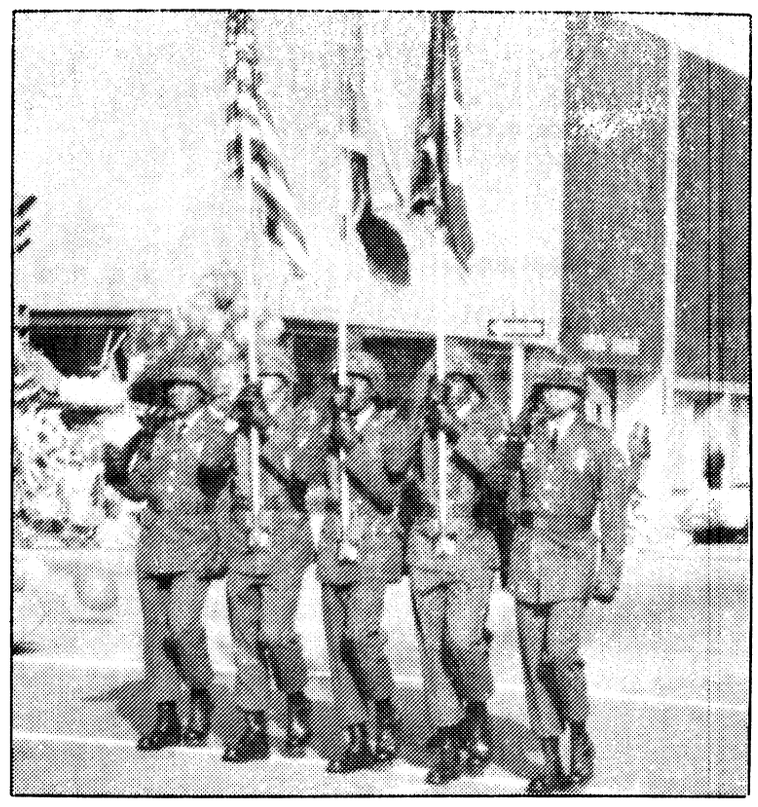
As a continuation of his gained knowledge of Latin America, Gorell has come to USARSA with several tasks to fulfill.

"I am here to develop part of the curriculum from the academic and intellectual side of training," Gorell said. "I will be teaching Latin American history from an analytical standpoint. USARSA students and I will conduct inquiries on the historical development of Latin American society, economy and culture. We will then compare this to the U.S. and reach some conclusions."

In addition to teaching, Gorell will write an annual historical review of USARSA to maintain a history of the school and to brief newly assigned students on recent school history.

"As a historian, I will add historical perspective to what happens here by providing an independent viewpoint," he said. "I will observe various operations in the school, collect information and document ongoing events."

Gorell also will document different operations of the school since its founding more than 40 years ago.



"After World War II, the U.S. realized regional cooperation and solidarity in the western hemisphere is an important part of our national defense," Gorell said. From this beginning, the school has evolved into what it is today.

Gorell will look at certain aspects of what happens and what has happened at the school from a historical and political point of view. Also, he will represent USARSA in the military and civilian communities when questions about the school's history surface or when a spokesperson is needed for conferences, panel discussions and speeches.

Fireplace allows heated air to go up in smoke

By Becky Ray
Energy Branch

Thinking they're saving energy by using a fireplace to supplement heat from their furnaces, many housing residents are actually wasting energy by allowing heated air to literally go up in smoke.

Fireplaces generally operate at about 10 percent efficiency, thus are poor heaters. Large amounts of outside air are drawn in to fuel the fire, creating drafts. In addition, much of the heat generated by the burning wood escapes up the chimney rather than out into the house.

When the furnace and fireplace are on at the same time, the draft created by the fireplace will draw air already warmed by the heater out the chimney also.

While heating with a fireplace alone will save energy that might otherwise be used by a furnace, care should be taken when they're used together.

Setting the thermostat at a low setting will reduce heat loss through the chimney while a fireplace is in use. Heat loss will be kept to a minimum if the thermostat is set at 50 degrees Fahrenheit. Closing off the room with the fireplace by closing doors and heater vents will minimize heat loss as well. Sufficient oxygen for the fire can be supplied by leaving a window in the room open about an inch.

When the fireplace isn't being used, it's very important to keep the damper closed. Glass fireplace doors provide extra protection from heat loss.

Fuel efficiency is an important consideration in determining the type of wood to burn in a fireplace. Denser species of wood give off more heat than less dense wood, and is more desirable. Common types of wood with high heat values are oak, hickory, elm, maple and walnut. Many types of pine and spruce, however, have low heat values and burn faster.

Moisture content also affects the amount of heat the wood will provide. Wood which has a high moisture content requires energy to be used to evaporate the excess water before it will burn.

Seasoned, or dry, wood has been air dried and has a lower moisture content, so it starts burning easier and burns more efficiently.

Generally, cut wood should be allowed to dry for about six months before burning. Cutting or buying wood in the spring or early summer usually allows enough time for drying before the wood will be used in the winter. Wood can sometimes be bought for a lower price in the spring and summer.

If the leaves are left on the limbs, they will pull some of the moisture out of the wood. Splitting the wood increases the exposed surface area and reduces drying time. Split wood is often easier to handle and start burning. Wood should be stacked and covered immediately after splitting to allow for proper drying.

Chimneys should be checked often for creosote buildup. Creosote is a tarry black substance that accumulates on the interior of the chimney. It is formed from unburned wood gases, and can't be easily prevented. If allowed to accumulate too long, however, it can become fuel for a chimney fire.

Chimneys on post in need of cleaning should be reported to the DEH Service Order Desk, 545-2135, between 7:30 and 4 p.m. Monday through Friday.

Safety should always be a top priority when using a fireplace. Make sure smoke detectors are installed and are operating, and always have a fire extinguisher handy.

Empty fireplace ashes into a metal bucket, preferably one with a lid. Never put ashes into the garbage — hot coals can't always be easily seen.

Gasoline, lighter fluid or other flammable liquids should not be used in a fireplace. Finally, monitor fireplace fires well, so the fire stays confined to the fireplace.

The U.S. Department of Energy has prepared a booklet on heating with wood, which includes information on fireplace use, wood-burning stoves and furnaces, and tips on buying, preparing and burning different types of wood. The Energy Management Branch has a limited number of these books. Call Becky Ray at 545-4652 for a free copy.

10th Mtn Battalion's new facilities at Drum 'best in the Army'

By Agatha H. James
Bayonet staff writer

"The new facilities are absolutely the best in the Army." That's what Lt. Col. Wayne M. Barth, 2nd Battalion, 14th Infantry, 2nd Brigade, said about his battalion's new home at Fort Drum.

"There's a real air of excitement up there," Barth said during a recent interview while here for his battalion's light leader training or Phase I of a Mountain Leader Certification Course. "The barracks, headquarters, maintenance facilities, the commissary and the PX are all brand new using state-of-the-art equipment and construction."

The first of six modern troop complexes has just opened at Fort Drum, according to an Army News article.

The complex is part of the largest Corps of Engineers construction project since World War II — a $1.3 billion, 11-square-mile expansion at the 82-year-old New York installation. The complex is home for the 10th Mountain Division that departed Fort Benning in November.

The division received the first facility during a ribbon cutting ceremony Nov. 30. Two others are slated to open in 1989, with all six to be completed by January 1991. The complexes will contain 29 barracks.

The new troop complex includes barracks and company headquarters buildings.

"Each soldier will live in a two-man room that has cable TV and telephone hookups," Barth said. "Two rooms share a bathroom that has two showers, two wash basins, a wardrobe and a closet. The company area is laid out with a day room and a game room. It's really the nicest troop living facility that I have seen in the Army."

The buildings also include more modern themes, with main entrances framed by glass from ground to roof, and high ceiling lobbies with skylights in the battalion headquarters buildings.

"Each battalion is organized into a quadrangle area, so that a battalion's area consists of two, two-story 'L-shaped' buildings with a company on each floor," Barth said. In the open area of the 'L' is a large headquarters building.

"The physical fitness facility is exceptional," he continued. "There is an indoor, olympic-sized pool, two racquetball courts, an entire Nautilus equipment center, a large gym, and separate male and female sauna rooms.

"The outdoor recreation facility has the latest skiing equipment. In fact, my family and I went skiing over the Thanksgiving holiday weekend at Lake Placid. The resort at Lake Placid is dedicated to the soldiers of the 10th Mountain Division."

"Every street you go down, there's some sort of construction going on," he said.

"When we got back to Benning, I drove by my old quarters," Barth said. "It was depressing because I suddenly realized I missed the post. But, I quickly got over it. In fact, later that afternoon, I was talking on the phone to my battalion XO who is up in Drum. He said they had just received seven inches of snow. When I heard that, I was ready to go back so I could go skiing.

"Fort Drum is like any other place; it's what you make of it," he said.

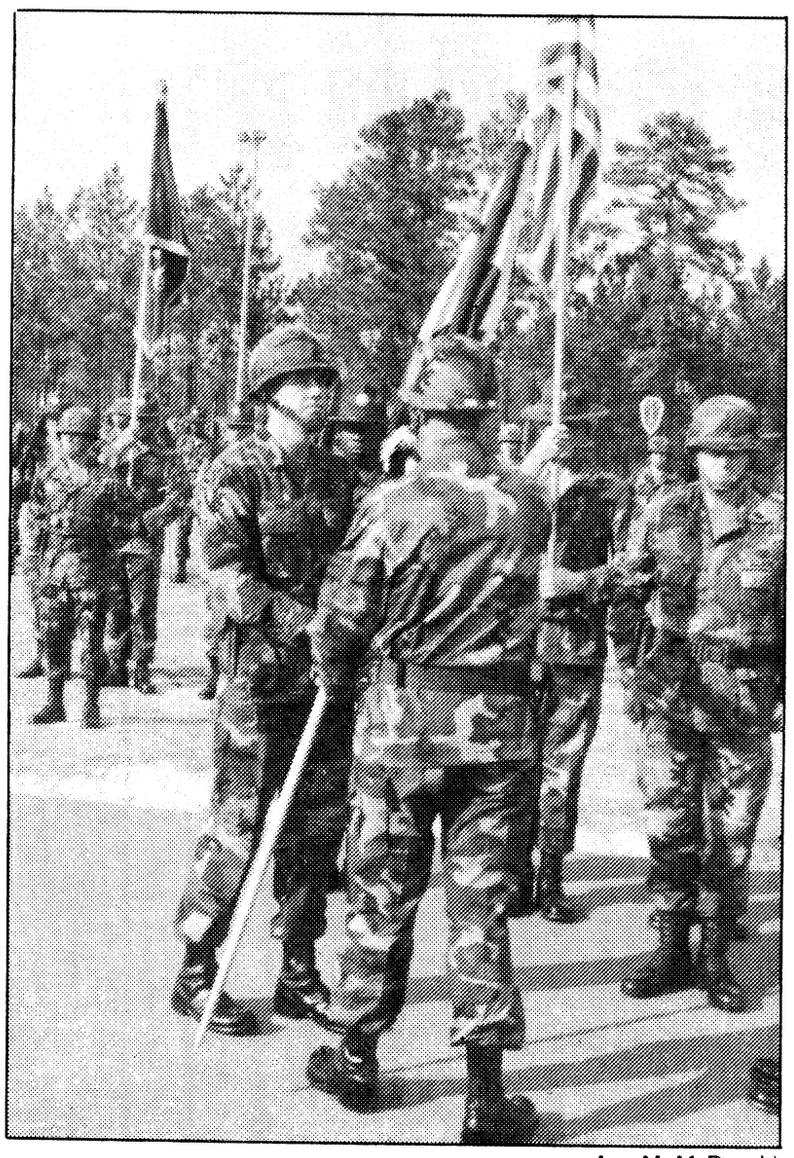
2nd ITB gets new commander

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

The 2nd Infantry Training Brigade, Infantry Training Center has a new leader. Last week Col. Victor Stamey turned over the colors to Col. Charles Viale.

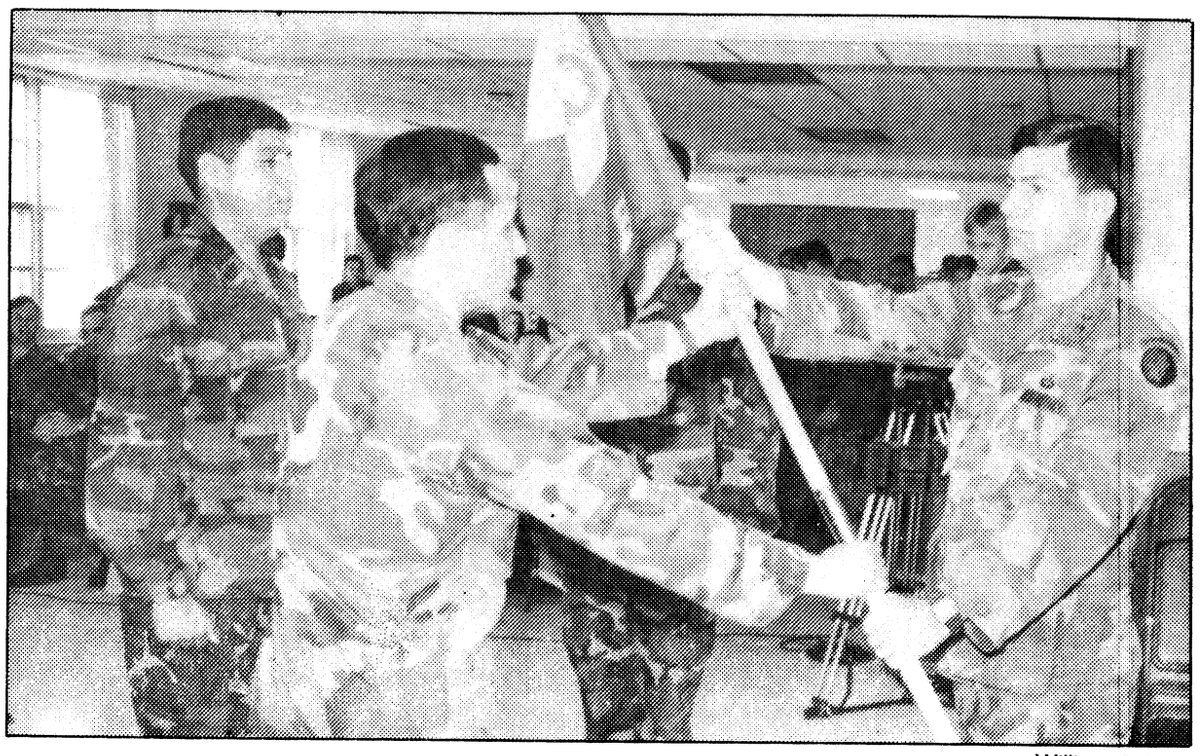
Viale's duties as the new commander consist of overseeing four battalions, with five companies in each. The brigade's mission is to turn civilians into disciplined, motivated and physically fit soldiers dedicated to defending the U.S.



About 15,000 soldiers pass through the gates of 2nd ITB during the year.

Viale comes to Fort Benning from Fort Leavenworth, Kan. where he taught at the Command and General Staff College.

He has a Master of Arts in Political Science from the University of Kansas, a Master of Arts in Political Science from the U.S. Army Command and General Staff College and is a graduate of the Advanced Operational Studies Fellowship of the School for Advanced Military Studies at Fort Leavenworth.



His awards and decorations include the Legion of Merit, Bronze Star with two oak leaf clusters, Purple Heart, Combat Infantryman's Badge, and the Master Parachutist's Badge.

Viale is married to the former Judy McDonell of Sebastopol, Calif. Their daughter, Paige, attends college in Kansas.

Maj. Douglas A. Gilbert, School Battalion commander, passes the guidon officially activating USARSA's School Battalion to Capt. Juan Renta, Cadet Company commander.

The School of the Americas activates School Battalion

By Keith F. Johnson
USARSA correspondent

Fort Benning has activated a new battalion. It's the School Battalion of the School of the Americas.

The activation, held Dec. 9, was authorized by the Department of Army because of the growth in the number of personnel assigned to the battalion and a need to recognize the distinct missions of the three companies that comprise the battalion.

"The battalion has grown and developed from a headquarters company into a headquarters company, student company and cadet company," said Maj. Douglas A. Gilbert, school battalion commander.

According to Gilbert, the student company is strictly an administrative body while the cadet company handles training Latin American cadets and officer candidates.

When it began in 1985, the cadet company operated for only short periods of time depending on whether or not training was being conducted. Now, training will be conducted throughout the year, Gilbert said.

This year's cadet company class from the Dominican Republic will begin training Feb. 2. The class consists of 94 candidates, an increase of 64 students over least year's class. More than 100 candidates are expected from El Salvador when their training starts in May, compared to last year's class total of 84. Both courses cover 25 weeks of training, according to 1st Sgt. Lazaro Ramirez, cadet company first sergeant.

Immediately following the activation ceremony, cadet company held a change of command ceremony as Capt. Gregory L. Alderete passed the guidon and command of the company over to Capt. Juan Renta.

Gilbert will change command of the school battalion over to Lt. Col. Gilbert Tijerina in a ceremony Monday at 10 a.m. on York Field.

2nd Bn, 10th Field Artillery hail new colors, unit designation

By Sally Roberts
197th Infantry Brigade

Soldiers of the 2nd Battalion, 10th Field Artillery now hail the colors of a new unit, the 4th Battalion, 41st Field Artillery. The unit was redesignated recently, under the Army's regimental system.

Col. Harvey D. Watson, 197th Infantry Brigade commander, Lt. Col. Glen Lackey, 4th Bn., 41st Fld. Arty. commander and CSM Lyle R. Kirchhoff, 4th Bn., 41st command sergeant major, encased the colors of the 2nd Bn., 10th Fld. Arty. ending an era during which the battalion served the 197th Inf. Bde. as well as the Infantry Training Center and School.

The 10th's history dates back to 1917 when the regiment was formed. During both World Wars and the Korean Conflict, the 10th proudly supported the infantry and became a highly decorated artillery unit.

The history of 41st Arty. is equally rich. The unit was originally constituted and organized in 1918 and served during World War II in North Africa, Europe and the Pacific and during Vietnam.

Although the name and history of the unit has changed, the unit's service to Fort Benning and the 197th Inf. Bde. will continue.

Reserve soldiers get new pay system

Army News Service

Soldiers in the Army National Guard and Army Reserve will get paid earlier for their bi-monthly drills, under a change to the reserve components pay system which becomes effective Feb. 15, 1989.

This is a change from the current system, in which soldiers receive their paychecks around the first week of the second month after they drill. For example, soldiers who drilled July 15-16 received their paychecks in the first week of September. Under the new system, soldiers will be paid about 15 days earlier, or about a month after their drill. The change means that reserve component soldiers will receive two paychecks in February. The first, at the beginning of the month, will be for December drills. The second, which inaugurates the new system, will be for January drills. After the catch-up, checks will be mailed the 15th of each month from the Army Finance and Accounting Center. Soldiers with SUREPAY or Direct Deposit will have their accounts credited on the 15th, and will also receive a pay advisory notice on or before the 15th indicating the amount credited to their account.

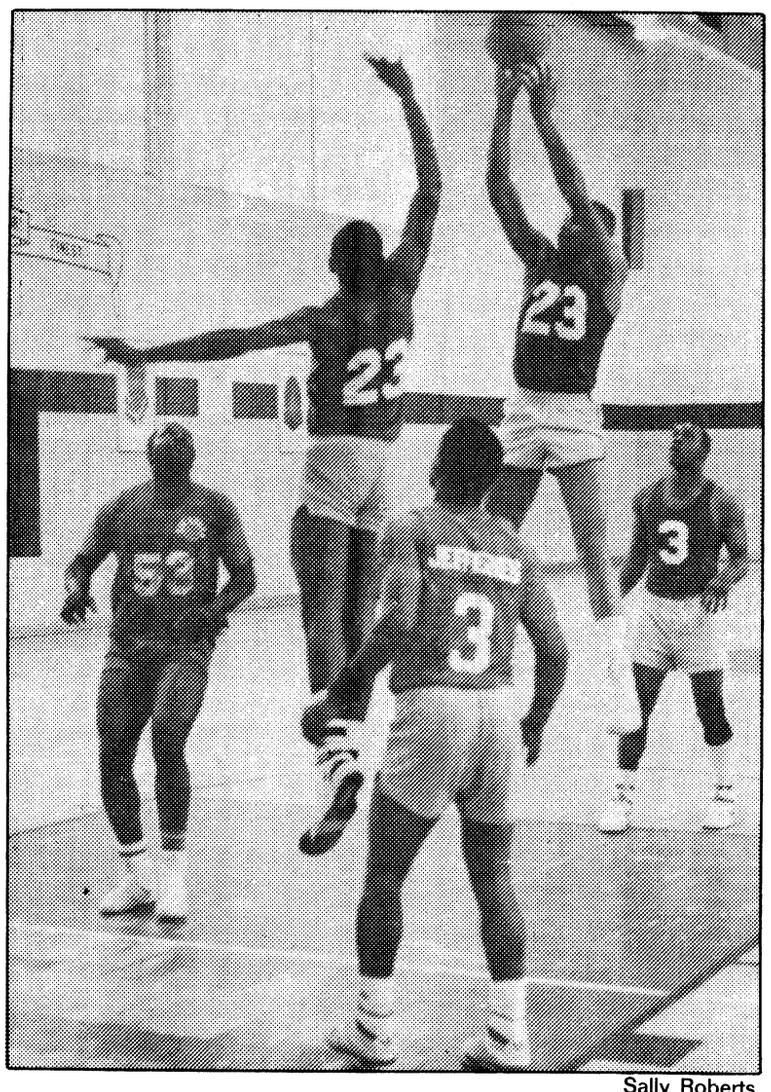
197th teams battle on the court

By Sally Roberts
197th Infantry Brigade

The competition got fierce this week as the remaining 197th Infantry Brigade basketball teams battled for a seat in the USAIC tournament.

Three teams had already been picked at the close of last week: HHC, 197th Support Battalion; HHB, 4th Battalion, 41st Field Artillery and HHC, 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor.



HHC Support remained undefeated in their battalion games. HHB, 4th Bn., 41st Fld. Arty. dominated their opponents in the battalion games, usually out scoring each team by more than 10 points. HHC, 2nd Bn., 69th Armor also remained undefeated heading into the USAIC tournament.

Throughout this week, teams for the 197th Separate Units, 2nd Battalion, 18th Infantry and 1st Battalion, 58th Infantry hit the court to decide their best team.

Charlie Company will represent the 1st Bn., 58th Inf. Patriots, giving up only one loss during the battalion season to Echo Company. But Charlie got revenge in the final game by trouncing Echo 58-37.

HHC, 197th Infantry Brigade finished with an undefeated season and ran away with the Separate Units slot for the USAIC tournament.

The top team for the 2nd Bn., 18th Inf. Vanguard remains undecided. Bravo Company leads the battalion with a 4-1 record and will play in the battalion championship game. B Co's opponent will be decided as HHC and Alpha Company, both with 3-1 records, match up.

Schools' fine art concert series bring in professional musicians

By Beth Middlemiss
Fort Benning Schools

Music came to school students' ears as the Fort Benning Schools' Fine Art Series began another year.

Jackie Pickett, who is principal bassist of the Columbus Symphony Orchestra, performed a program on the double bass in all eight Benning schools. The program featured music which moved from classical to jazz to folk music.

During the performance, Pickett paused to discuss her double bass and the kinds of sounds that a double bass can produce. She also explained the music that she would be playing before she began to play each time.

Pickett plays the double bass professionally as both a classical and jazz musician. She studied double bass with Homer Mensch, professor of double bass at the Julliard School in New York City. She studied jazz double bass with well-known recording artist Richard Davis.

The concert series, sponsored by the Officers' Wives' Club, brings professional musicians four times a year into each of the schools. Pianists, cellists, clarinetists, vocalists and violinists are just a few of the types of musicians who have performed solos, duets, and trios.

Beth Middlemiss

Annette Santiago, Officers' Wives' Club chairperson, Richard Gallo and Joan Kulich watch as Columbus Symphony Orchestra musician, Jackie Pickett, demonstrates how to play the bass.

Columbus Symphony presents 'Messiah'

Columbus Symphony Orchestra

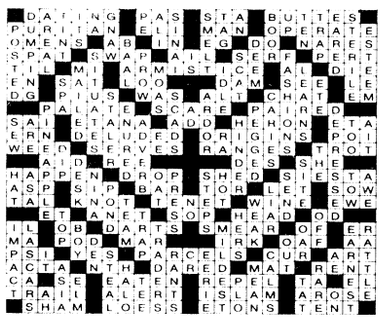
The Columbus Symphony's performance of Handel's "Messiah" at the Three Arts Theatre Dec. 18 at 3 p.m. will involve not just the orchestra, but the Columbus Civic Chorale, Dr. William J. Bullock, director; four soloists and the audience itself. George Del Gobbo will conduct.

This is a "sing-along" performance of the famed oratorio in which the audience is invited to sing along with the 125-voice chorus. Special sections of the theatre will be reserved for sopranos, altos, baritones and tenors, but audience members have the option of sitting in these sections or elsewhere.

The performance is expected to become an annual December event.

Soloists are Teresa Hopkin, soprano, James Michael McGuire, baritone; Deanna Higgins, mezzo-soprano; and Michael M. O'Neal, tenor.

Hopkin is a member of the voice department and director of opera at Columbus College's Schwob Department of Music. She has been heard on three continents on opera, concert, and recital stage.



McGuire is a graduate of Emporia State University and the Cincinnati Conservatory.

Higgins has appeared in oratorio and concert throughout the Southeast, and she has been called upon to perform repertoire from Bach to Britten.

O'Neal appears regularly throughout the Southeast as soloist, conductor, and clinician. Specializing in oratorios, O'Neal has performed most of the major Bach roles, including "St. Matthew" and "St. John Passion", "B Minor Mass", "Christmas Oratorio" and "Magnificat". He is choral activity director at Mercer University in Atlanta.

"Messiah" tickets are on sale now in the symphony office located in the Rankin Executive Offices at $10 for adults and $3 for students. Seats are not reserved. For information, call 323-5059.

Award catches up with warrant officer

By Shawn Bryson
Bayonet staff writer

It was a long time in coming, but after about a year and a half, WO Perry J. Mathews finally got what he had coming.

In April, 1987, Mathews, currently a helicopter pilot for the 498th Medical Company, 34th Medical Battalion, graduated from the U.S. Army Aviation School's Initial Entry Rotary Wing Program at Fort Rucker, Ala. He finished the program as the honor graduate of class 86-39, with a 98.6 percent accumulated average.

After graduation, Mathews was nominated for the Orville Wright Achievement Award, given to outstanding graduates from the U.S. Air Force Air Training and Naval Air Training Commands, as well as the Army's Rotary Wing Program.

"I knew I had been nominated for the award, but I really forgot all about it after a while," Mathews said.

The Order of Daedalians, the National Fraternity of Military Pilots, is the sponsor of the award and normally gives its awards shorlty after graduations. The Order chose Mathews to receive the award but had more than a hard time finding him, let alone giving him the award.

The problems with finding Mathews began graduation day when he was asked to start UH-60 Blackhawk flight training earlier than he had been scheduled. He attended, and graduated from that program in August 1987. He then went to Korea for year.

Unfortunately, the Daedalians chose Mathews for the award after he had already gone to Korea.

Mathews still didn't know he had been selected for the award and arrangements were made to have the award presented to him in Korea. But there was yet another twist.

Shortly after arriving at his unit in Korea, Mathews was reassigned to a unit near the demilitarized zone, again postponing the award.

Mathews' tour in Korea ended and he transferred to Fort Benning in August, which gave the Order some hope that the presentation might finally occur.

But, once again, Mathews was gone. "As soon as I got here, I went TDY to Yellowstone National Park to help the firefighting efforts there," Mathews explained.

Two more TDYs and four months later, the Daedalians finally caught up with Mathews. "I was very suprised when I opened a letter they sent me about a month ago. I read the return address on the envelope and didn't know what the Order of Daedalians was," Mathews said. He explained that he didn't realize the Daedalians were the sponsors of the award that he had all but forgotten about.

Col. David I. Casperson, a Daedalian out of Warner Robins Air Force Base, Ga., presented the award to Mathews Dec. 16 at Lawson Army Airfield.

During the ceremony, Casperson commented that Mathews was a hard man to keep up with.

"I just try to stay a step ahead of everything, sir," Mathews simply replied.

283rd band now first in TRADOC band recruiting

By Shawn Bryson
Bayonet staff writer

Two years ago, Fort Benning's 283rd Army Band had one of the lowest band recruiting percentages of the 49 Army bands.

Today, the 283rd is the number one recruiting band in the Training and Doctrine Command, and the number two recruiting band in the Army.

Recognized recently with the "Best in TRADOC Band Recruiting Award," the 283rd, now under the direction of CW2 Larry G. Hyatt, carried out a mission given to all Army bands two years ago by the Chief of Army Bands, Col. Lawrence T. Daly.

According to SSgt. Victor Rios, 283rd Recruiting NCO, that mission was to put more emphasis on band recruiting.

Rios said that before Daly focused on recruiting, Army bands were at an average of 79 percent of their strengths. Now, they are at 98 percent.

The 283rd began the new surge on recruiting in fiscal year 1987. Rios explained that he and the then band director, CW3 Gary L. Crown, traveled to various recruiting stations, sometimes for two weeks at a time, throughout Georgia, Alabama and Florida in search of new recruits.

"We worked hand-in-hand with local recruiters and visited 2 to 4 high schools and colleges a day sometimes," Rios said. During the visits, Rios and his team made presentations about Army band life and auditioned band members.

"We auditioned 150 people in 1987 and 21 of them joined the Army," Rios said. "This year, we auditioned 206 and 36 signed up."

"The trips are really good because the local recruiters learn more about the recruiting of band members, which differs from regular recruiting," Rios said.

Rios also credited Sgt. Fred Catchings, 283rd band member, for his recruiting efforts while Rios attended the Advanced Noncommissioned Officers Course for three months.

Even though the 283rd is the number one band in TRADOC, Rios said they're not satisfied. Their goal now is to pass the number one Army recruiting band, the 398th Army Band at Fort Monmouth, N.J. The 398th collected 43 recruits this year, seven more than the 283rd.

Operational Holiday is full speed ahead as soldiers enjoy get aways

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

Thanks to Operation Holiday post soldiers don't have to be alone this holiday season; instead, they can participate in activities all over the local area.

This is the ninth year that Operation Holiday has existed. It officially kicked off Dec. 16 at the Columbus Government Center.

Since the the program began, soldiers have toured Sunshine Bakery, the Confederate Naval Museum, Pratt-Whitney, Kennasaw National Park and attended an Atlanta Hawks basketball game and a party at the Hilton. They have also bowled in a tournament, which wraps up today.

The program is made possible because of caring folks from the Chattahoochee Valley-Fort Benning Chapter of the Association of the U.S. Army. It is designed for soldiers who remain on post for the holidays.

In addition to extending an opportunity for soldiers to engage in meaningful activities, the program allows local citizens and businesses to express appreciation to soldiers for their contributions to the nation's defense.

Today, soldiers will tour Dolly Madison and the Good Day Show studio.

For more information about the program contact your unit first sergeants.

The remaining events are:

Dec. 23 - Atlanta Hawks vs. Indiana
Dec. 25 - Blue-Gray Football Game
Dec. 26 - Andersonville National Cemetery Tour
Dec. 27 - Popular Entertainment at the Kelley Hill Recreation Center, Miss Georgia, Miss Columbus, Miss Phenix City
Dec. 28 - Atlanta Hawks vs. New York
Dec. 28 - Little White House and Callaway Gardens Tour
Dec. 29 - All-American Bowl
Dec. 30 - Dolly Madison Bakery Tour
Dec. 30 - Columbus College Basketball Tournament
Dec. 31 - Peach Bowl (to be determined)
Jan. 2 - Little White House and Callaway Garden Tour

CG wishes safe, happy holiday

The holiday season of Christmas is a joyous time of worship services, festivities, celebrations, shopping, exchanging of gifts and family gatherings. It is a time to reaffirm our faith in God and our dedication for peace.

The Christmas Season celebrates the birth of the Christ Child at Bethlehem, 1,987 years ago. The first Christmas message of "Peace on Earth, Good Will Toward Men," remains a goal that people throughout the world can identify with, but none more closely than those of us who serve in the Armed Forces. May the spirit of Christmas inspire us to work harder than ever toward that noble goal.

Many of you will be traveling during the holiday season to visit with family and friends. Please plan ahead, buckle up, drive safely and return to Fort Benning ready for 1989.

Merry Christmas and a happy and SAFE New Year.

OPINION

Various Voices: What does Christmas mean to you?

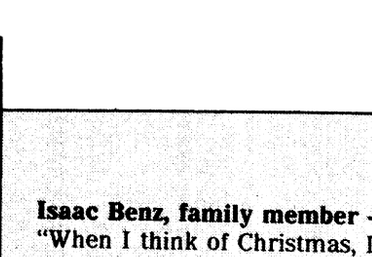
Pvt. Darryl Darensbourg, Co. B, 1st Bn., 507th PIR - "Christmas means family gatherings. It's a time for everyone to get together and relax. It's a very warm and friendly time of the year."

2nd Lt. Myron Robinson, Co. E, 2nd Bn., 11th Inf. Regt. - "It means a lot of happiness and joy from being with people. The spirit of love is everywhere during this time of the year."



Carolyn Howard, family member - "It means just being with family and friends. It's not the gifts that mean so much; it means more to be with loved ones."

Spec. Lauren Hauer, HHC, 36th Eng. Grp. - "It means going home. It is one of the only times during the year that I make a real effort to be home. It's real important to home with my family."

Isaac Benz, family member - "When I think of Christmas, I think of what happened almost 2,000 years ago. Jesus Christ was born, and it made quite an impact on the world."

Mary Winston, family member - "Christmas is the pleasure of giving gifts to others. I love seeing someone's face light up when they see the surprise that was wrapped up inside their package."

Snively gives in and catches the holiday spirit with help from the 283rd band

By Clyde Snively
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Right on schedule, I caught the Christmas spirit.

It was the day I woke to the stirring martial music of our great Infantry Center band (yes I was still asleep by the time I got to the Harmony Church Field House at Oh-dark thirty, but not for long).

The band lifted my spirits to such an extent that I didn't protest that afternoon when the AUSA guys from the neighboring office put up Christmas decorations of the fat guy and his four-legged friends.

Nor did I comment on the tree we...they...erected in the office.

The evening's band concert, Christmas pageant and tree lighting ceremony, coupled with the lighting of the national tree by the President, capped it all off. I decided it was time to get with the spirit of the season.

I also discovered that the dear folks across the hall in SMB (whatever that stands for) can read (I thought they only dealt in numbers). They honored my Christmas wish of "peace and quiet" by preparing me a special Christmas computer diskette.

It's blank. Not a thing on it. So now, when I want my peace and quiet, I pop it into the computer and sit and see nothing and hear nothing.

Our supreme PAO boss really got into the mood when he served as a bell ringer at one of the local malls.

He did quite well. But he had a scam. He offered to tell jokes for a quarter. For a dollar he wouldn't. The man cleaned up.

I'm not sure if I've been oblivious or what, but is there more controversy regarding Christmas this year than in the past?

First, there was the letter in the local newspaper pointing out how having Christmas trees is a pagan custom. I wonder how the lst Baptist Church feels about that. After all, they put on a living Christmas tree pageant that plays to a full house during each performance.

If you want to be picky about it, the whole idea of Christmas started with the pagans. We don't know when Christ was born. We picked a date based on pagan ceremonies.

The reason we don't have the birthdate of Christ is early Christians didn't celebrate a person's birthday. They considered it a pagan custom.

In fact, when the Puritans took over England in 1643, they banned Christmas – said it was pagan. This carried over to New England where they really got carried away by outlawing mince meat.

Here on post we get complaints from people who don't want to be wished a "Merry Xmas." I would have felt the same way seeing a sign like that up to a few years ago. But Ann Landers or Dear Abby straightened me out.

They noted how "X" in ancient Greece was considered holy and is the first letter for Christ (the X is a voiceless vela aspirate–ch or kh–). She also compared the X to the cross.

My research tells me the X used by the Greeks was a fish back then. It evolved from the ancient Egyptians and Phoenicians. We all know early Christians used a fish symbol for Christ.

Were early Christians even then stealing from idolators and animists?

Anyway, Christians, I think for this Holy season, it would behoove us to be a little more tolerant of our fellow man, more understanding and not so quick to criticize.

I know I won't be doing any criticizing for awhile – in fact, no time. I've got my Christmas shopping to do – surely a pagan custom if I ever heard of one.

Spigelmire thanks all who helped with visits

There have been three significant groups of visitors here in the past week — the National War College, the Chief of Staff of the Army of Ecuador, and the Chief of Defense Forces of Colombia.

I have been involved personally in each of these visits and would like to thank everyone who contributed to their success. Thanks to the soldiers who made extra police calls, the Sergeants Major who supervised troop movements, the civilians who coordinated activities, the officer planners and briefers throughout the chain of command and all others who were part of the "team."

Fort Benning has always been known as a great post by members of the Army, but what a great feeling it is when civilian members of the State Department, Senior Air Force and Navy personnel make the same observation. Our friends from South America were equally effusive with their praise, not only for the quality of briefings and the high standards set at USARSA but also the great contribution that everyone in both the military and civilian communities is making to support and cooperate with the School of the Americas. This is indeed in our national interest.

The visits mentioned above clearly demonstrated the sense of sharing and caring that exists at Fort Benning. As we enter this holiday season, once again my sincerest thanks to everyone who participated in this "team effort" and my warmest Christmas greetings with continued success in the New Year. God bless you all!

The Day Before Christmas

'Twas the day before Christmas and Tommy O'Dell, braved the traffic to the mall with a story to tell.

He strode up to Santa — settled down on his knee, said, "I have a problem, please listen to me."

I hail from Fort Benning and I am alarmed, that the people out there just keep getting harmed.

They're all real good people, but those crazy fools,
just don't seem to remember the Post safety rules!

So here is a list of things they could use:

Sam is all shook, he was DUI on a journey,
he killed a pedestrian and needs an attorney.

Tom had a wreck — he chose not to yield, wasn't wearing his seatbelt and needs a windshield.

A new motorcycle for John, he still wears the scars,
one day in a hurry he tried to squeeze 'tween two cars.

Sue needs some free time, she was racing her vehicle,
she now spends her Saturdays in a class called Remedial.

A new bumper for Clyde who chose to decide,
he'd try backing his truck without a ground guide.

Ann needs a new hobby — she'll be jogging no more,
she finally discovered what road shoulders are for.

Jack looked like a deer and now needs a toupee,
'cause he didn't wear orange on a hunt yesterday.

The game got too physical so George needs a crutch, he's learned not to play tackle when the game is called touch.

Sally met with a car while out cycling one night,
now she needs a new bike — one with a headlight.

Al took off the guard while building a table, needs a glove with four fingers if one is available.

Clara tried all alone to move a bookcase,
the load was too heavy — now she needs a back brace.

A new home for the Smiths who will finally learn, overloaded extension cords will eventually burn.

James was forgetful — left a toy on a stair,
now his papa has need of a first class wheelchair.

Some cabinet locks for a family named Tilden, they just learned the hard way about poisons and children.

Tommy squared up his shoulders, and paused for a breath, knew he had to do something before there was death.

"Santa these are our problems, if you'd give us a hand, to prevent needless accidents, it sure would be grand.

Please help us Santa, you're bound to be heard,
to stop all mishaps, we must spread the word.

Our folks just must learn to use common sense, to think 'fore they act to prevent bad consequence.

Have a good Christmas Santa and never your fear;
We're going to do things a lot safer this year!"

Four suggesters pocket dollars for saving Army thousands

By Agatha H. James
Bayonet staff writer

Three civilians and a soldier pocketed a total of $8,705 from the Army Suggestion Program in a ceremony here Monday.

Leroy Engram, Margaret L. McGarvey, Capt. Jeffrey L. Smith and Patricia P. Ellis turned their ideas into dollars, according to Beverly Howell, ASP coordinator.

Engram, a motor vehicle operator for the Motor Pool, Transportation Division, Directorate of Logistics, received the largest check. His idea to modify Fort Benning's shuttle bus schedule netted the post $139,000 in annual savings and won him $3,895.

McGarvey, a Data Entry Clerk with the Commercial Activities Branch, Management Analysis Division, Directorate of Resource Management, received $2,230. She saved Fort Benning $51,157 by suggesting that a command directive require units to submit special assignment airlife mission requirements 30 days in advance to meet the incentive deadline.

Smith designed a form to be used by physicians in evaluating trainees. The idea's $46,000 savings meant $2,080 for Smith.

Ellis, who is Automated Installation Property Book chief, thought that bulk oil fuel could be controlled more efficiently if one area controlled it. This would make one area accountable for it and create valid audit trails for sales and issuance. The idea brought her $500.

Lt. Col. Barry Mahek, deputy post commander, said the incentive for others is to make suggestions and win some of the cash. "Simple suggestions can result in huge savings," he said.

Mahek said future plans are to present the awards at the employee's work site. "That way, other personnel can see what can be gained through the Army Suggestion Program," he said. "Hopefully, this will increase participation."

According to Howell, suggestions are a good way to make some extra money, especially since civilian monetary awards on post have been suspended due to budget cuts.

"A suggestion doesn't have to save money for a soldier or civilian to receive cash," she said. "Even ideas to improve a work area or morale may mean dollars."

Howell said to submit a suggestion, just write down the current procedure, the proposed procedure and the benefits. Suggestion form (FB Form 50) should be used. The form is available from administrative offices or post publications.

AUSA recognizes ten soldiers at breakfast

Ann M. McDonald

Post soldiers exchange sentiments during the Quarterly AUSA Breakfast.

By Ann McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

The atmosphere was cheery and muted sounds of laughter rang throughout the Harmony Field House when soldiers and civilians gathered for the Association of the U.S. Army Quarterly Breakfast last week.

The breakfast provided them the opportunity to gather with other soldiers before Exodus began and everyone left for the holidays.

It also gave AUSA the chance to recognize outstanding soldiers and civilians for the jobs they have done for the tri-communities.

Maj. Gen. Michael F. Spigelmire presented the awards between two Christmas Carols sung by Miss Columbus, Karen Reeder.

Spigelmire presented awards to Roy L. Smith, Sr. and Jacob L. Riley, Jr. for patriotic civilian service.

He also presented awards to the following soldiers:

– 1st. Sgt. Arturo V. De Los Reyes - Co. B, 2nd Bn., 11th Inf. Regt. - 100 percent cadre and student AUSA membership

– SSgt. Louis Tinsley - Co. E, 2nd Bn., 58th Inf. Regt., 1st Inf. Trng. Bde., Inf. Trng., Cntr. - Drill Sergeant of the Year

– SSgt. Mark Sheehan - Hq. and Hq. Co., 4th Bn., Rgr. Trng. Bde. - U.S. Army Infantry Center - Noncommissioned Officer of the Year

– Spec. Angelia Pacheco - Hq. and Svc. Co., Inf. Trng. Ctr. - U.S.

Locate your category of housing.

Note eligibility date located on the same line as your category.

Calculate the time difference between the eligibility date listed and your eligibility date. The difference is the approximate time you still have to wait for housing.

EXAMPLE: If the latest eligibility date of the person who last received housing in your category was May 15, 1988, and your date of eligibility is Sept. 15, 1988, you can expect housing in about four months. If you do not know your eligibility date, contact the Family Housing Office at building 399, 545-3107.

Benning sergeant gets Soldier's Medal for pulling woman, child from burning car

USAIC Public Affairs Office

On May 22 at Fort Kobbe, Panama, SSgt. Martin Leach heard a loud explosion. He immediately ran to investigate and found a car engulfed in flames. What he did next earned him a Soldier s Medal for heroism.

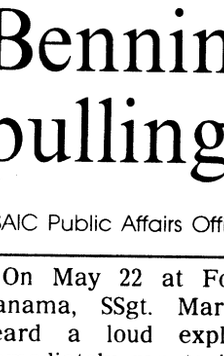
When Leach ran to the car,he found a pregnant woman and a small boy inside. He immediately opened the door to the car and pulled first the mother, and then the child away from the crash site.

Just as he pulled the child from the car, it exploded for a second time. He didn't have any time to spare.

"I reacted on instinct," Leach said. "But,I think that if I had to think about it,I would have done the same thing."

Leach said as soon as they were pulled to safety, other people came to aid the crash victims.

"An ambulance came and rushed them both to the hospital," he said. "They were both badly burned."



According to Leach the mother had third degree burns over two-thirds of her body. The doctors had to deliver her baby by ceasarean section so they could properly treat her without

ASK THE JUDGE

By Susan McKeeman
Staff Judge Advocate's Office

Q: I saw a commercial for JZW Credit Reporting Agency last night. It talked about a new service they provide which sounded really neat. The ad said that for a $35 annual fee, JZW would do three things: 1) give me as many copies of my credit history as I wanted, whenever I wanted; 2) inform me whenever anyone asked for my credit history; and 3) give me a special member card which will make applying for credit easier. Is this a good deal?

A: No. Think carefully about the service JZW actually provides. First, why do you need copies of your credit history at all? Have you ever even asked for it before? It is not the type of document you need to constantly check. Why pay for a service you don't use? Most people never need to request copies of their credit history; they already know how their credit stands. If you should need a copy, credit reporting agencies will provide them to you whenever you want anyway, usually for a small one or two dollar fee. Finally, under Federal law, you are entitled to a free copy if you are refused a loan on the basis of your credit history.

Scondly, do you really need to be informed of who asked for your credit history, and when? A credit reporting agency can reveal your credit history only to those with a valid business purpose for the request. Almost all such requests are made by banks; banks determine whether they will loan you money depending on your past repayment track record. Most other requests are made by employers when considering employment applications. Anytime you apply for a loan or a job, you can automatically expect your credit history will be requested. As you already will know who you are trying to get a loan from or who you have applied for a job with, it serves no purpose to be informed that they requested your credit history.

Finally, no credit reporting agency can improve you credit history. Only you can. The ad is carefully worded. The special card makes APPLYING for credit easier. The ad does not promise the card makes GETTING credit easier. Paying for the card doesn't mean your credit history will be wiped clean. Nor does it mean your loan applications will be approved just by showing it. The card makes applying for credit easier because it has your name specially coded to provide quick computer access to your credit history.

Leach said she stayed in the hospital for two months.

"I monitored her progress the whole time she was in the hospital," he said. "but I couldn't see her because I was preparing o come back to the U.S."

It was after he came back to the states that he found out he had been awarded the Soldiers Medal.

"I don't feel like I was a hero," Leach said, "I just did what the Army has taught me to do for the past seven years."

Now, he's teaching other soldiers to do the same thing.

"I always wanted to be a Drill Sergeant," he said. "That is what I 'm doing now."

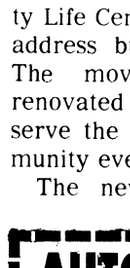
He's a Drill Sergeant at Co. E, 1st Bn., 50th Inf., 1st ITB. He's doing what he dreamed of since his first enlistment. Maybe, some of that motivation will rub off on his trainees and there will be a new breed of heros.

Custer Terrace Community Life Center moves

By Ann Mcdonald
Bayonet staff writer

The Custer Terrace Community Life Center has changed their address but not their mission. The move into their newly renovated facility will help them serve the residents of the community even better.

The new center is located behind the shoppette annex at Custer Terrace. It s purpose is to increase the quality of life for members in the community.



The project was started in April and was completed in June. Although the project was officially completed in June, the center was not opened because it was not cosmetically complete.

The office will house the mayor, the noncommissioned officer in charge as well as the Community Life Officer of the community.

The building will serve as a meeting place for members of the community to discuss issues and plan and conduct family activities for the area.

School Brigade students enjoy week-long holiday open house

By Debra Galle
USAIC Chaplain's Office

A week-long open house program at the Main Post chapel annex was held Dec. 12-16 for The School Brigade students. Chaplain Candidate Walter Dinkins coordinated the project with the Protestant Women of the Chapel (PWOC).

The women prepared homemade cookies and cakes for up to 200 students, who attended each night from 7 to 9 p.m.

Chaplain Steven D. Paschall, TSB Chaplain, said since it was the last week before most soldiers make the journey home, this was a fitting way to begin the holidays.

Debby Godwin, president of the PWOC, coordinated the "Great Bake-Off." She said hostesses were present each night.

Dinkins coordinated each night's entertainment. He said the reward of all the efforts came in seeing how grateful the soldiers were.

Many of the soldiers were eagerly anticipating going home for the holidays. But, for the ones who were staying behind, the open house program was a touch and feeling of home.

The Christmas carols sung around the piano were sometimes traditional, sometimes set to jazz and sometimes quiet acappella, but the mood always stayed the same – one of peace and love.

Christmas is the time to share story of Jesus with all mankind

By James L. Langford
1st ITB Chaplain

It seems only a short time ago that we were celebrating Christmas 1987. Very soon, Christmas '88 will be history. Then we start all over again.

But, what's it all about; what does it really mean?

The word "Christmas" brings to mind all sorts of reactions. To children, it means getting gifts that all too soon will be worn out or outgrown.

Parents brace for the annual attack on the family budget and remind their children how "little" they had growing up.

Perhaps, we are all guilty of placing too much emphasis on the material things of life and not nearly enough emphasis on the spiritual aspects of life.

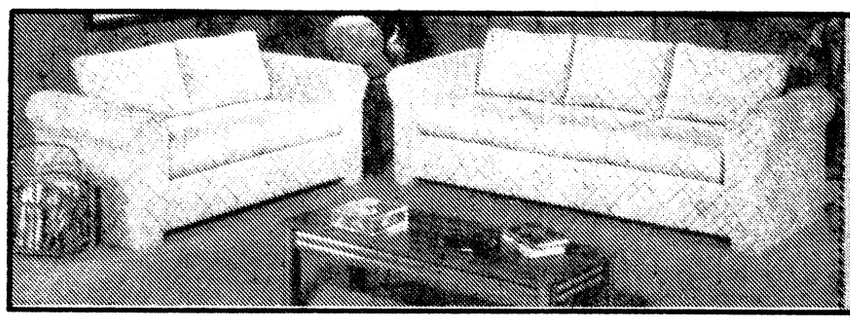
To Christians, Christmas means more than toys, tinsel, trees and travel. It presents a unique privilege to proclaim the gospel to those who do not understand the significance of the season. It give us the opportunity to tell the story of Jesus and His love.

It's true that Jesus was born as a "babe" in a manger in Bethlehem, but his life and influence go far beyond that. He grew from infancy to boyhood to manhood, both in wisdom and in statue (Luke 2:52). He hungered, thirsted, ate, drank, slept, wept, rejoiced, marvelled, was moved to anger and to compassion. He was a human being.

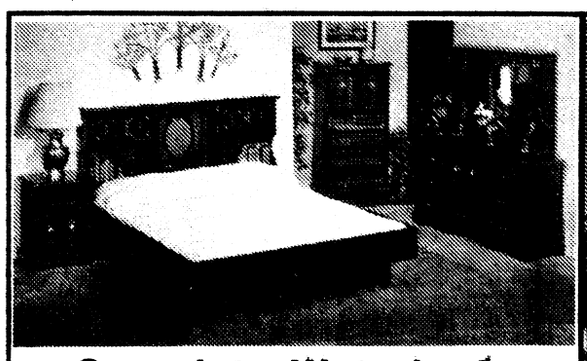
The incarnation means that the Lord Jesus Christ, the Messiah, became a man. He took human nature upon him in order to save sinners. He prayed, read the scriptures, suffered being tempted and submitted his human will to the will of God, the Father. He really suffered and shed his blood, really died and was buried, really rose again and really ascended up into heaven. And yet, all this time he was God as well as man.

This Christmas, let us recognize, as did the shepherds, that the story of Jesus — the good news of the gospel — is to be shared with all mankind.

As the shepherds were sensitive to the word of God, may we also be sensitive to His spirit in our daily lives. May we see him anew through faith and be made aware of His presence and power.



For in reality, we feel what the shepherds felt; we see what they saw; we hear what they heard; we tell what they told.



It's Christmas. The King has come!

When Friend fell, he called for Help.

but Confusion came instead.

Company C, 1st Bn airborne students graduate early

Earn wings before Christmas and New Year holidays

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

Students from Company C, 1st Battalion, 507th Parachute Infantry Regiment, got an early Christmas present.

They went through an accelerated jump school course so they could graduate before the holidays.

According to Battalion Commander Lt. Col. Mark Lewis, coordination started two months ago.

"When I looked through past records, I discovered drop zone injuries increased right after students had come back from Christmas leave," Lewis said. "This led me to believe that it was caused by the two-week break between tower and jump week."

Lewis said that he found that unacceptable and decided to see what could be done to decrease the number of injuries.

"It took a lot of coordination," he said. "We had to make sure the riggers, the Air Force, the medics and the hospital were notified and prepared."

Special preparation had to be made because more than 5,000 students jumped in one week to graduate before Christmas exodus.

Lewis said two classes jumped during that time.

The first class, Co. D, went through a regular cycle, and Co. C followed.

"We put both classes through the course without sacrificing any of the standards," he said.

He added there were a lot of hours put in during that time including weekends, but he feels everyone agrees it was worth it.

"The students were able to go home as heros with their jump wings fastened to their uniforms," he said. "After their leave is finished, they get to go straight to their next assignment.

"As for the instructors," Lewis said, "they get some extra time to prepare for the next class after the holidays."

New policy requires PLDC before rank of sergeant

Total Army Personnel Agency

Under a new Noncommissioned Officer Education System policy which starts Oct. 1, 1989, soldiers will have to be graduates of the Primary Leadership Development Course (PLDC) to be eligible for promotion to sergeant.

Graduates of a resident primary NCO course, Primary Leadership course, or an NCO academy before Oct. 1, 1976, and graduates of a Basic NCO Course (BNCOC) (except AMEDD BNCOC) before Jan. 1, 1986, are considered to have met the requirement.

Soldiers on the standing list for promotion to sergeant who are not graduates of one of these courses will be removed from the list on Sept. 30, 1989. They will have to be reboarded after they graduate from PLDC in order to regain promotion standing list status.

PLDC attendance priorities until Sept. 30, 1989, will be corporals and specialists on the list for promotion to sergeant, sergeants who haven't attended a primary-level course and corporals and specialists whose commanders intend to recommend them for promotion in the near future.

School of the Americas inducts Colombian defense minister Guerrero into Hall of Fame

By Keith F. Johnson
USARSA Correspondent

The United States School of the Americas inducted Gen. Manuel J. Guerrero Paz, Colombian minister of defense, into its "Hall of Fame" Dec. 15 in a ceremony in Building 4.

Guerrero's induction completes the list of ten inaugural inductees to the "Hall of Fame." Guerrero was unable to attend the original ceremony Oct. 4 at USARSA.

"It is a great honor for me to welcome a friend who has been a loyal supporter of the School of the Americas and who shares with us those values, democratic principles and way of life that we all protect," said Col. Miguel A. Garcia, USARSA commandant.

Guerrero holds the distinction of being the only foreign officer who was commandant of the school. He served as commandant from June 17 through Sept. 13, 1977. He also served as deputy commandant from Jan. 1 through Dec. 31, 1977.

Gen. Maxwell R. Thurman, commander, U. S. Army Training and Doctrine Command, conceived the idea of a "Hall of Fame" as part of a continuing effort to promote USARSA as a premiere training institution.

To be eligible for induction, a candidate must be a graduate of USARSA and either a former guest instructor or deputy commandant as well as fulfill other special requirements.

Annual inductions will occur when merited, although no requirement exists at this time for an annual ceremony.

The October inductees were Gen. Jose Angel Archena Acosta and Gen. Alfredo Antonio Sandoval Hernandez, ex-commanders of the Venezuelan Forces of Cooperation; Brig. Gen. Manuel Antonio Callejas, chief of the National Defense Force of Guatemala; Brig. Gen. Humberto Regalado Hernandez, commander-in-chief of the Honduran Armed Forces; Gen. Hugo Banzer Suarez, ex-president of Bolivia; Maj. Gen. Policarpo Paz Garcia, ex-president of Honduras; Gen. Rafael Samudio Molina, Colombian minister of defense; Gen. Enrique Lopez Abujar Trint, Peruvian defense minister and Gen. Eliodoro Antonio Guerrero Gomez, Venezuela's ex-defense minister.

Christmas at Riverside

The staircase at Riverside, the home of Maj. Gen. and Mrs. Michael F. Spigelmire, was one of many sights on the annual Officers' Wives Club Candlelight Tour of Homes. Ten Fort Benning homes were featured on the tour, which is one of many similar events that take place Armywide.

Americans should remember oil crises of 1973 & 1974

By Steve Turner
Energy Branch

Americans, who comprise less than five percent of the world's population, spend more than a quarter of the world's energy output.

Think back to the trauma of the gasoline lines following the 1973 and 1974 Arab oil embargoes and the 1979 Iranian revolution. The losses were puny compared to a cutoff of Saudi Arabian oil or, worse yet, all Persian Gulf oil. Yet, the impact on American motorists is still a vivid and unpleasant memory. And, the embargo, which lasted only six months, helped trigger the worst recession in 40 years.

It is an irony that we should be caught in an energy bind. The United States is one of the richest nations on earth in energy raw materials. We have the world's largest single share of coal reserves. Even though we import oil, we are the world's third largest producer of petroleum. We are virtually self-sufficient in natural gas. And, we have, by far, the largest nuclear output of any nation.

Yet, in 1970, our national bill for imported oil was $3 billion. In 1978, it was $42 billion. In 1979, it topped $60 billion. And, in 1980, even though conservation efforts and the recession significantly reduced the volume of oil imports, the price for those imports reached the staggering figure of $80 billion. Today our annual bill for imported oil still stands at over $38 billion.

Such a drain has seriously skewed our balance of trade. Last year, all of our agricultural exports, on which we depend heavily to make up our trade deficit, amounted to only about $40 billion. This hemorrhage of money has played a significant part in the weakening of the American dollar in international exchange and in stimulating inflation at home. Not the least of the repercussions is the haunting fear that action to protect our foreign supply of oil will lead to a major war.

Of course, the problem has not been entirely oil. The whole U. S. economy has been heavily dependent on cheap energy – cheap electricity, cheap natural gas, cheap coal, cheap hydropower, as well as cheap oil. Except for hydropower, which requires no fuel, these sources are no longer cheap, and their escalating cost is itself a serious matter.

Today, more than ten years after the embargo that heightened America's energy consciousness, we are frighteningly further away from energy independence than we were then. The much heralded plans for huge increase in nuclear energy, coal production, and new solar and other renewable energy sources were all laid aside or delayed.

How do we become less vulnerable to disruption of our foreign oil supplies? How do we become more energy independent? Study after study reaches the same conclusion: the cleanest, least expensive and least vulnerable option today is to use less by being more efficient.

2nd Bn, 69th Armor tank crew fires perfect 1,000 score

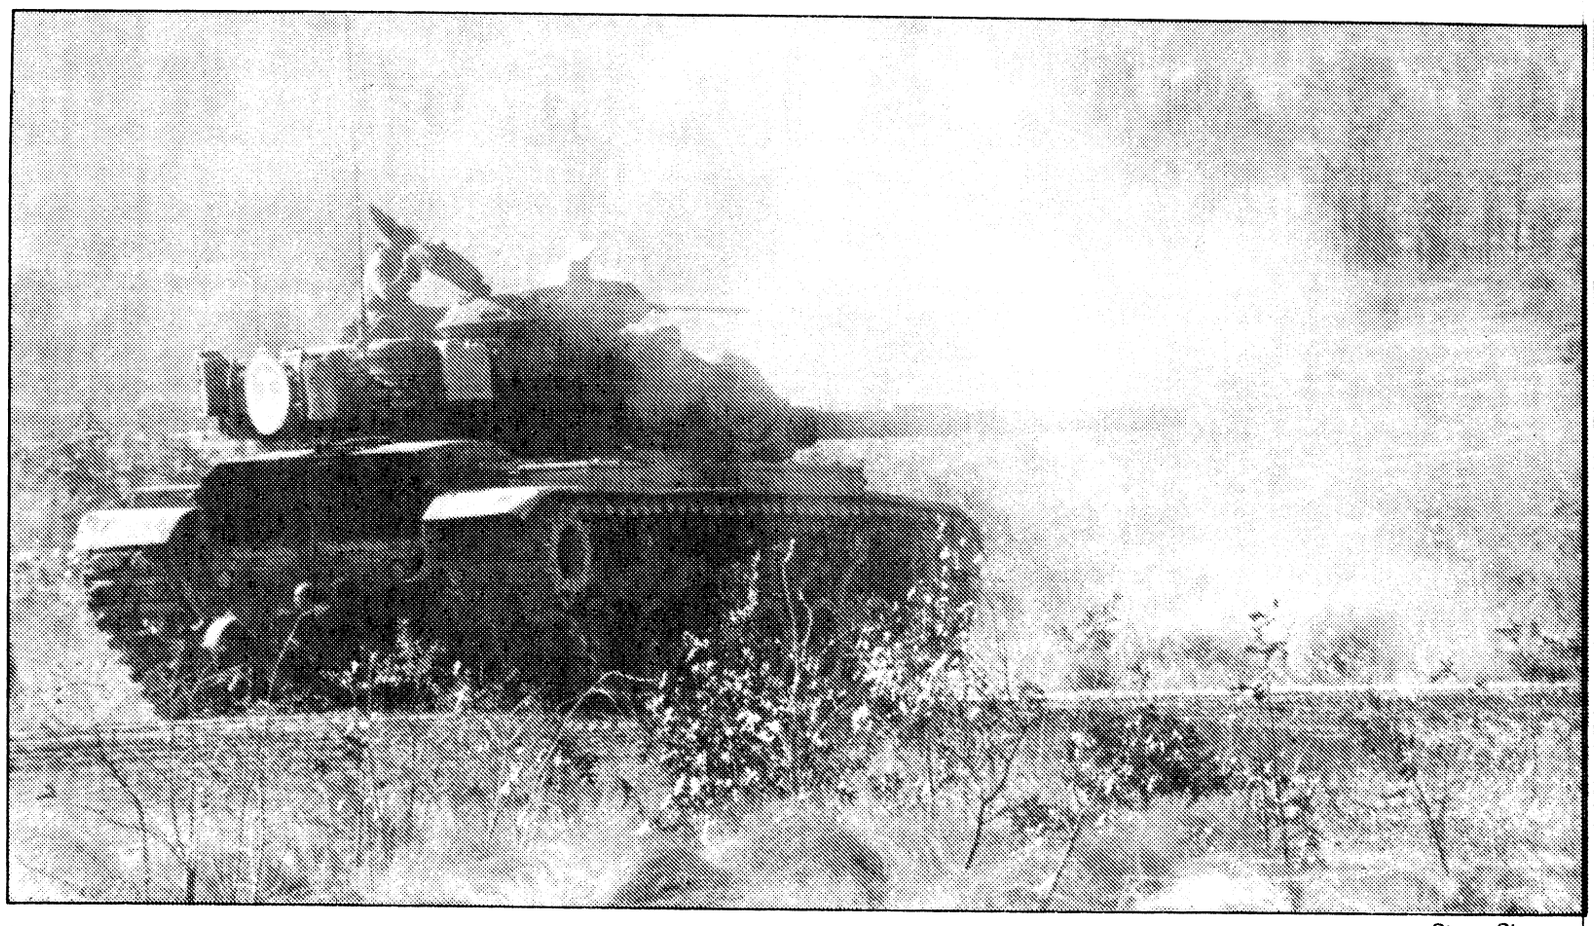
By George Mingee
197th Infantry Brigade

"Bravo 21" crew of Company B, 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor, scored a perfect 1,000 on table eight at tank gunnery at Hasting Range recently.

Tank commander SFC James Mitchell said, "This is the first time this has happened on one of my crews in 16 years. We were successful because our gunner, Spec. Tony Herring, laid in on the targets quickly and fired to give us more time to engage for the next target." Spec. James Boren, the driver, and Spec. Paul Brown, the loader, were also vital members of this special team.

Level I tank gunnery is a regular training event used to evaluate the skills of a tank crew. Crew members qualify once each year and conduct gunnery exercises to sustain their skills.

Tank crews have the opportunity to show teamwork during Level I gunnery, in which they use the battalion's M60A3 and M1 Abrams tanks. The tankers progress through different tables, or levels of skills, from individual and crew skills to section and platoon battle runs.



Tank qualification, also known as table eight, consists of 10 engagements, five during the day and five at night.

Prior to firing for table eight qualifications, leaders train their crews using the M-COFT (Mobile M60A3 tank simulator).

"The M-COFT is a device in which the tank commander and gunner are trained as a crew under combat situations to enhance their gunnery skills," explained SFC Claudy Moore, battalion master gunner.

"Computers are used to generate graphics of terrain and enemy vehicles," he said. "This allows the tank crew to engage in a very realistic, electronic battle."

According to Moore, the crews of 2/69th Armor strive for excellence. "From the tank crew to the loader, the soldiers have something to be proud about," he said.

1st SOCOM units remember Special Service Force

By William P. Bradner
1st SOCOM Public Affairs Office

In the early morning on Dec. 6, a handful of special operations soldiers from the 75th Ranger Regiment began yet another airborne operation.

The air was charged with the familiar mixture of fear, bravado, and excitement, but there was something a bit odd about this particular operation. There was luggage being loaded, and books and magazines in the hands of the paratroopers, and more importantly, garment bags and Class A uniforms.

These soldiers weren't off for a lazy circular route to the nearest drop zone; they were heading for Snow DZ, an hour north and west of Ottawa, Canada, to jump with the Canadian Special Force.

Each year members of the 1st Special Operations Command and members of the Canadian Army Special Forces congregate at Fort Bragg, or Petewawa, to commemorate the deactivation of the 1st Special Service Force.

The 1st Special Service Group was a joint U.S./Canadian Force activated in the early stages of World War II.

The force was activated in Helena, Montana, and trained to fight in snow behind the Nazi lines in Europe. They were diverted, however, to the Aleutian Islands and then Italy before being disbanded in Menton, France, in December of 1944.

The following 1st SOCOM units participated in the five-day event: the 1st, 5th and 10 Special Forces Groups (Abn.) from Fort Lewis, Fort Campbell, and Fort Devens, respectively; the 12th, 19th and 20th Reserve Special Forces Groups (Abn.) from Sheridan, Ill, Salt Lake City, Utah, and Birmingham, Ala., the 160th Special Operations Aviation Group (Abn.) from Fort Campbell, Ky., and the 4th Psychological Operations Group (Abn.), 7th Special Forces Group (Abn.), 96th Civil Affairs Battalion (Abn.), 112th Signal Battalion (Abn), 528th Support Battalion (Abn.), and the Kennedy Special Warfare Center and School (Abn.), all from Fort Bragg, N.C.

With foreign faces, parachutes, airplanes, unfamiliar jump commands and even a different type of aircraft exit, this was no ordinary jump indeed.

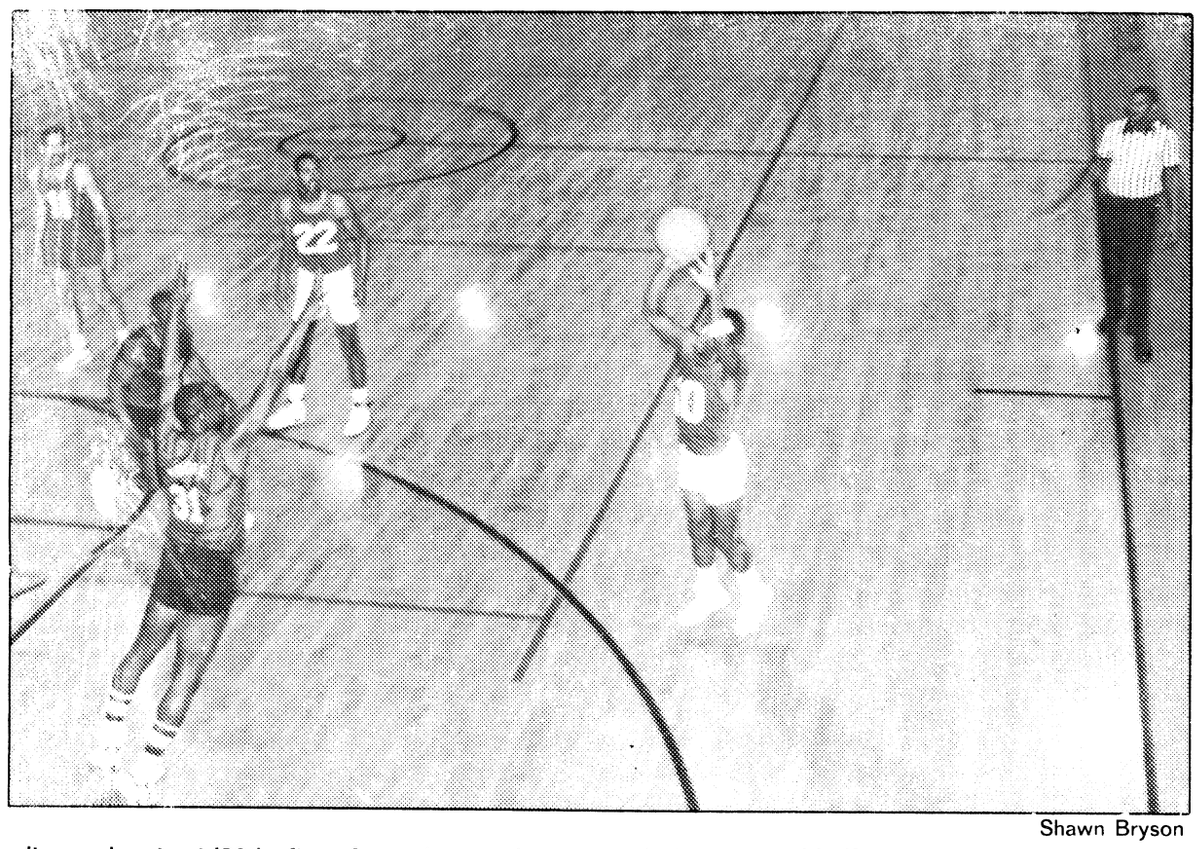
HHC, 1/29th crush opponents in post basketball tournament

By Shawn Bryson
Bayonet staff writer

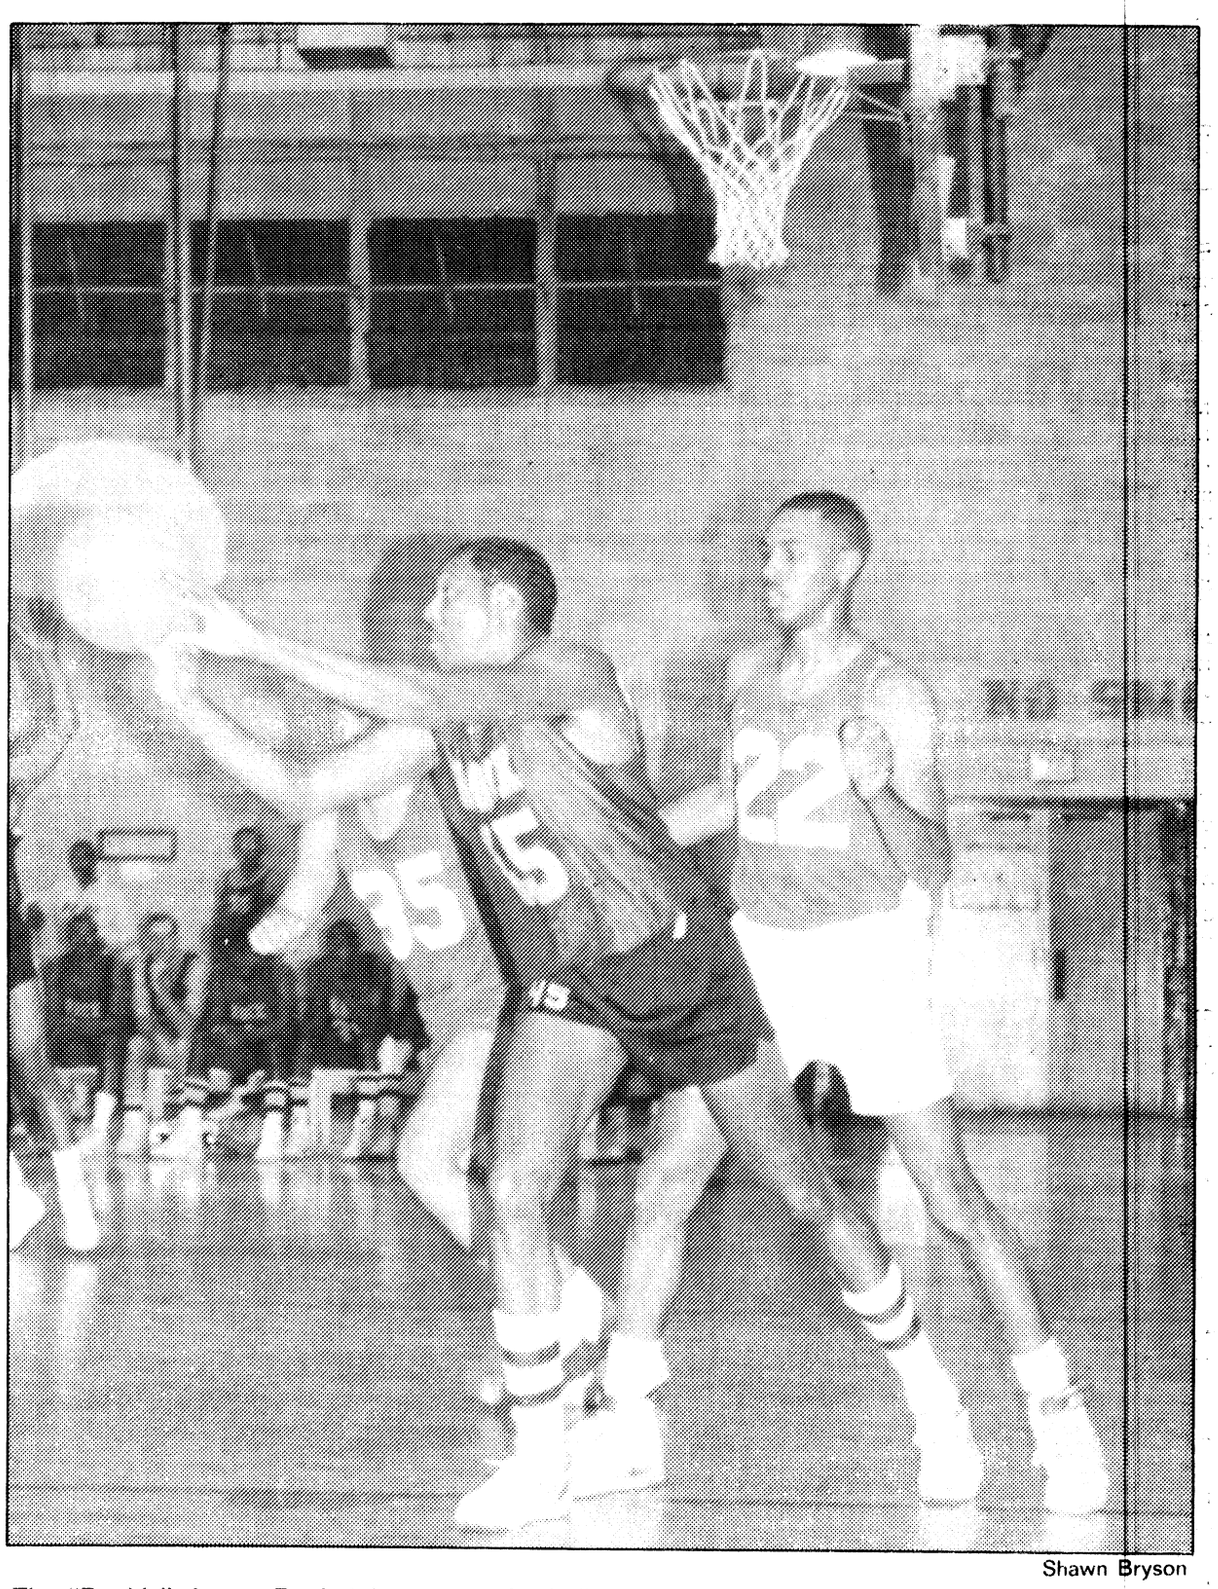
It was a come-from-behind victory for the B-ballers from Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, as they crushed the "Rock" cadre of the 1st Battalion, 38th Infantry Regiment, 2nd Infantry Training Brigade, 57-48, to become the first-season post basketball champions Dec. 16 at Briant Wells Field House.



A fierce battle heated early in the game as the "Rock" leading scorer, James Bucknight, rocketed one from three-point range giving him three of his 11 first-half points.

Early foul trouble by the "Rock" gave 1/29th leading scorer, Gary Slayton, five of his seven first-half points. But, Bucknight and Aaron Young, who sunk two three-pointers, were still able to push the "Rock" to a half-time 29-25 lead.

1/29th began their comeback midway through the second half, scoring from the field and inside and holding Bucknight to just one point.



Slayton again led the 1/29 offensively, adding seven more to the scoreboard with help from guard, Jimmy Lewis, who ended the game with 13 points.

The third-place winners championship night were players from Headquarters Service Company, 43rd Engineer Battalion, 36th Engineer Group as they edged the team from Company C, 1st Battalion, 58th Infantry Regiment, 43-40.

Sergeant named 1988 coach of year

Army News Service

The Army's top boxing coach was named 1988's Amateur Boxing Coach of the Year by the USA Amateur Boxing Federation.

Sergeant 1st Class Henry 'Hank' Johnson from Fort Bragg, N.C., was honored by the organization during its recent annual executive meeting at St. Louis.

The 40-year-old coached the 1988 All-Army boxing team to its 11th straight Armed Forces championship and its fifth straight national team championship. Johnson also served as an assistant coach for the 1988 U.S. Olympic boxing team. Three Army boxers won gold medals in the summer games in Seoul.

Johnson has coached amateur boxers for 14 years. A ex-boxer himself, he placed first in the 1972 Amateur Athletic Union championships.

A native of Indianapolis, Johnson is the younger brother of former World Boxing Association and World Boxing Council light heavyweight champion Marvin Johnson. He is married and has two children.

Soldiers take part in three bowl games

Army News Service

The Army's 1988 post-season college bowl appearances aren't limited to the Cadets' battle with the University of Alabama Crimson Tide in the Sun Bowl.

By the bowl season's end, four other Army organizations will have performed in three of college football's late 1988 and early 1989 gridiron classics.

The "Silver Wings" parachute team from Fort Benning, Ga., kicked off the Army's post-season appearances by bringing the game ball into Garrett Stadium--airborne-style--for the Dec. 10 Stagg Bowl in Phenix City. Fort Benning's Infantry Center Band also performed in the stands throughout the game during time-outs.

Although the Army highlight of the Dec. 24 Sun Bowl will be the Cadets' performance against the Crimson Tide, soldiers of Fort Bliss' 1814 Colonial Color Guard will also take the field. The honors unit will post the colors for pre-game ceremonies at the El Paso, Texas, match-up.

The Army's celebrated 'Golden Knights' parachute team will wrap up post-season appearances by jumping into the Fiesta Bowl in Tempe, Ariz., Jan. 2, 1989.

Columbus College presents concert

Columbus College

Columbus College's Schwob Department of Music will present its third concert in the 1988-89 Faculty Concert Series Jan. 8 at 3 p.m. in the Davidson Student Center recital hall.

Columbus College flutist Natalie Kruger will be joined by two visiting artists in a program of music for flute, piano and winds.

All the selections on the program have some association with France.

The program will open with the familiar "Minuet and Dance of the Blessed Spirits" from the opera "Orfeo ed Euridice" by Christoph Willibald Gluck.

The "Sonata for Flute and Piano" by Francis Poulenc is next on the program. Dedicated to the memory of the American patroness of music, Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge, this composition was introduced at the 1957 Strasbourg Festival by flutist Jean-Pierre Rampal.

The first half of the concert will close with "Fantaisie" by Jules Demersseman. He was one of several great flute virtuosos who wrote prolifically during the Romantic era. His compositions for the flute encompassed a multitude of virtuosic airs, varies, and solos de concert, all combining elegance, originality and brilliance.

From the great storehouse of music written for her instrument during the Baroque era, Kruger has chosen a suite of five pieces for unaccompanied flute by Joseph Bodin De Boismortier. This composer lived and worked most of his life in Paris where he became a wealthy man through the sale of music to the amateur market. His career was in sharp contradiction to his unfortunate surname, "dead wood."

The final number on the concert will be "Chanson et Danses" for seven winds by Paul Marie Theodore Vincent D'Indy, who was born in Paris into a family of the ancient nobility. D'Indy was influenced by the music of Liszt and Brahms; but, most importantly, he had come under the spell of Wagner during the period when that composer's ideas, as well as his music, exerted a tremendous influence upon French art and literature.

"Chanson et Danses" is scored for the traditional woodwind quintet (flute, oboe, clarinet, bassoon, and French horn) with the addition of another clarinet and a bassoon to add richness to the middle and lower registers.

Tickets for this concert are $5 and are available at the door or in advance at the music office in the College's Fine Arts Hall.

For more information or to request tickets, call 568-2049.

Operation Holiday activities continue

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

Many post soldiers who stayed behind during the holidays were kept busy with Operation Holiday activities, which began Dec. 16 and will continue through Jan. 2.

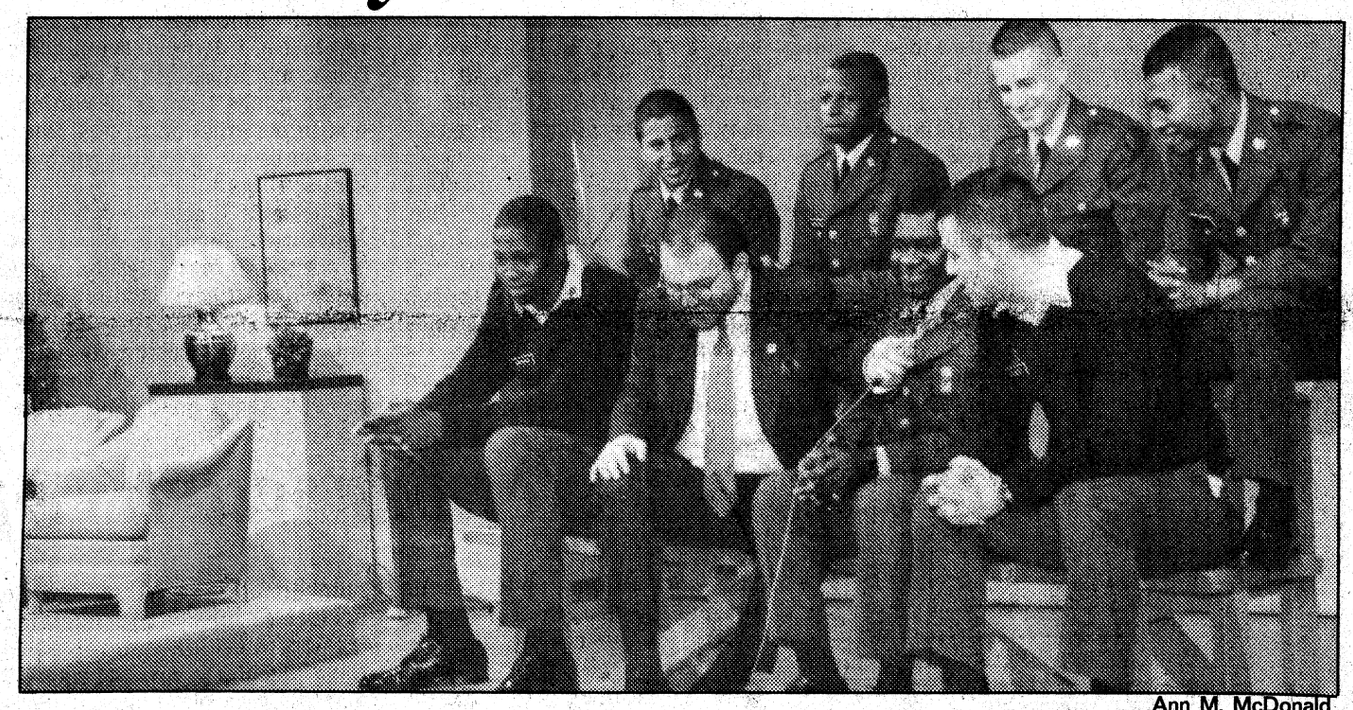
Since the opening of this program, soldiers have toured several parks and factories in the local area and attended different sporting events.

Several soldiers appeared on the Good Day Show last Friday. During the program, the station surprised three soldiers with a telephone call from a family member in their hometown.

The station randomly selected names prior to the day the soldiers were scheduled to appear on the program. Since none of the selected soldiers knew this was being done, their reactions were spontaneous.

Spec. Mike Powers from the 72nd Engineer Company, 197th Infantry Brigade was one of the soldiers who received a call.

"I just talked to my brother last week," he said, "but, it was really nice to talk to him again before Christmas."



Powers said he stayed at Fort Benning for financial reasons. He said he plans to visit his family after the first of the year."

He commented that the events he has attended helped eased the emptiness of being away from his family during the holidays.

Operation Holiday events are made possible each year by the Chattahoochee Valley - Fort Benning Chapter of the Association of the U.S. Army and local citizens.

Today soldiers will tour Dolly Madison and attend a Columbus College basketball game

Benning wins reenlistment awards

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

Fort Benning was awarded a Certificate of Achievement by the Training and Doctrine Command for exceeding its quota for reenlistment of soldiers for active duty and reserve positions here Dec. 20.

Maj. Gen. Michael F. Spigelmire, Fort Benning commanding general accepted the active duty award and Sgt. Maj. Sidney Brown, Reserve Reenlistment Chief accepted the reservist award for Fort Benning during a breakfast gathering at the Main Post Noncommissioned Officers' Club for the 1988 Commanding General Reenlistment Awards.

The Infantry Training Center came out the winner in the major unit competition for soldier retention. SFC Andrea Huntsburger, the unit's retention NCO, was awarded a plaque and a letter from the post commander for her success in reenlisting soldiers in her unit.

In battalion competition, 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment was named the winner. Unit Retention NCO, SSgt. Jeffrey Dreitzler, was awarded a plaque and a letter from the post commander for his efforts in keeping soldiers in the Army.

Headquarters Company, U.S. Army School of the Americas won the company competition. SSgt. David DeCamp, the company reenlistment NCO, was given a plaque and a letter from Spigelmire for his contributions in the unit's win.

According to SFC William G. Hleback, Fort Benning did a good job retaining soldiers in 1988 and said he hopes they can do the same next year.

Vehicle registration begins Tuesday

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Chattahoochee and Muscogee counties will begin selling license tags and re-registering automobiles Tuesday.

If a vehicle has already been registered in one of these counties, then the owner should receive the preprinted registration form in the mail. If the form is received in the mail, then it can be mailed to the registrar with an additional $1 for mailing fees. The new registration will then be returned in the mail. We strongly suggest that the mail-in procedures be used.

Additionally enclose a Soldiers' and Sailors' Civil Relief Act Affidavit, which may be obtained from the Legal Assistance Office. Alabama requires that the commanding officer sign the certificate. Georgia allows any officer who can attest to the legal residency sign the certificate. The authenticity of residency may be shown by reviewing a Leave and Earnings Statement, or other equivalent documentation. Legal Assistance Office attorneys can sign the certificate there. This will exempt nonresident soldiers from paying the state ad valorem tax on their vehicle. If the vehicle is in the spouse's name or if it is leased, the exemption cannot be applied.

The soldier must register in the proper county. If a soldier lives in Columbus, then registration is in Muscogee County. All individuals who live in housing or units north of the Upatoi Creek are in Muscogee County also. This includes units in Sand Hill and residents of McGraw Manor, Custer Terrace, Upatoi Terrace, Battle Park and Old Officer Capehart. All other Fort Benning residents and units are located in Chattahoochee County.

Unauthorized hunting discovered

By Shawn Bryson
Bayonet staff writer

The deer hunting season at Fort Benning will soon come to end. But, according to post officials, that's no reason for hunters to forget about the hunting rules and regulations.

According to Benny Wright, Chief of the Department of Defense Military Police at Fort Benning, the biggest problem this hunting season has been hunting in unauthorized areas.

Wright explained that hunters are restricted from all dud areas, ranges and areas marked off limits. He said, however, that many hunters have been found in these areas.

Greedy hunters are another problem, Wright said. By regulation, hunters are allowed three kills each deer season. Hunters are required to tag deer and mark their kill cards immediately after each kill, Wright said. But, Wright said it's very possible that some hunters are taking more than the authorized limit of three.

He explained that anyone caught with a deer that has not been properly tagged will have his license suspended for one year.

Wright said that the only authorized hunters at Fort Benning are:

— Active duty Armed Forces
— Retired Armed Forces
— Disabled veterans with a service connected disability of not less than 30 percent
— Appropriated and nonappropriated funds civilian employees at Fort Benning
— National Guardsmen and Reservists currently being paid at drill strength status who live in Russell or Lee counties, Ala. or Chattahoochee, Muscogee, Harris or Marion counties
— Primary dependents of all of the above

Benning has safest year on record

The United States Army and Fort Benning have just completed the safest year on record. The number of accidents recorded for active duty, reserve forces, and civilian workers is the lowest ever. Accomplishing this, while increasing the tempo of training, and operating in a demanding, high technical environment was indeed a significant achievement. Fort Benning has done an outstanding job in accident prevention.

The decrease in the number of accidents resulted in fewer injuries and deaths to our personnel, less equipment damaged or destroyed and increased mission capabilities when compared to previous years. This significant accomplishment can be attributed to the personal attention and involvement of every leader, military and civilian, in the chain of command.

One of our most effective accident prevention tools is accident investigation. Weaknesses in our safety program can be identified through expeditious investigation and reporting of accidents and hazards. I want each leader to stress the importance of reporting all accidents and hazards and to develop a system for instituting corrective actions.

We have made major improvements this past fiscal year. I challenge you to continue this superb record and improve upon it during fiscal year 1989. Let's keep Fort Benning a safe place to work and live.

Resolutions offered on silver platter

Snively says 'No way'

By Clyde Snively
USAIC Public Affairs Office

For those of you just returning to consciousness, New Years is just around the corner...like the day after tomorrow.

With the approach of the new year, I've been under a lot of pressure at the office to reform. In fact, some helpful, but impatient souls even drafted up a set of resolutions for me. I'll share a few:

"I resolve to keep my work area clean and neat like Shawn.

"I resolve to use a dictionary when I don't know how to spell a word, like Agatha.

"I resolve to get my column in on time (the editor's time, not mine) like Airborne Annie."

Naturally I thought it was very kind of the Bayonet staff to help me with my list of resolutions and to show me people I could emulate. There are just a couple of problems with the entire thing.

First, I think a neat work area is a sign of a sick mind. How is a person supposed to find things if his life's work isn't piled on his desk? Take the major for example.

He's got a neat desk. But he loses everything. Why. Because he files stuff, then forgets where he filed it. He has one very large file titled "stuff I gotta get to." If he didn't spend all his time filing, he'd have more time to get to that stuff.

If I used a dictionary to look up all the words I don't know how to spell, I'd never make anyone's deadline. I'd still be working on my Halloween column. Besides, how can you look up a word without knowing how to spell it? What are editors for? It's to correct spelling and grammar errors.

Unfortunately for me, this new policy came down from the PAO (we're talking lieutenant colonel level here, something like Moses' coming off the mount with the Ten Commandments).

It's his directive that copy will be turned in as though there were no editor. In other words, flawless, or at least as error free as we are capable of making it. I may have to go to a monthly column.

Which brings us to meeting deadlines. I'm sure you readers can see that we have a major problem here, what with all these new demands, even though Madam editor can't. So thanks anyway guys, but no thanks.

If the truth be known I do make one New Year's resolution each year. It's to not make any resolutions I can't keep.

While that may be my only resolution, I do have some goals I set for myself. (I'll bet the major thinks I never pay attention in his office meetings. But I pick up a lot of things, such as goal setting.)

One goal I set and which is appropriate this time of year, is to not abuse my body. By that I mean I won't get stinking, falling down, drunk. Drinking can be fun, but over doing it isn't. Besides, I like to know whether or not I had a good time at the party.

Drinking to moderation is pretty easy for me. As I approach my limit all I need do is remind myself of how I hate spending the next day hugging the toilet bowl.

Sure, Safety Cab will get me home in one piece if I'm too far gone to drive, but then I have myself to deal with the next day. Calling Ralf and having trains running through my brains is not what I call a good time.

Best wishes for the new year to all of you.

Army Safety Center warns of dangers

Army Safety Center

It was 2:30 a.m. a few nights before Christmas. The sergeant, home on leave after two years of overseas duty, was speeding along the highway when his front left tire struck the median. The car crossed the left lane, came back across the right and crashed through a guardrail.

Since he wasn't wearing a safety belt, the sergeant was thrown from the vehicle. The sergeant died, another victim of speeding and not using seat belts.

Another soldier was killed and two more seriously injured on the last Saturday of the holiday season because they combined speeding, drinking and driving and not wearing safety belts. Driving too fast, the soldier lost control of the car. It slid sideways across the left lane, off the road and down an embankment.

The car vaulted and flipped several times. One soldier was thrown out and killed. The driver's blood-alcohol content was .09 at the time of the accident. None of the car's occupants were wearing safety belts.

During the holiday season a greater than usual number of people travel the highways; more of them speed, drink and drive, and many of them fail to use safety belts. One or more of these factors are involved in most of the deaths and injuries of service members in privately owned vehicles.

Drinking and driving is the number one cause of vehicle accidents involving fatalities. Soldiers most often involved in these accidents are between 17 and 25 years old. Many of these young people are new to driving and to drinking.

Alcohol not only slows a person's reaction time but also affects judgment. Drinking drivers tend to be more reckless. They lose their ability to recognize hazards. They become threats to themselves, their passengers and to others on the road.

Not buckling up is another big cause of traffic fatalities during the holiday season. At least half the soldiers killed in car wrecks last year may have lived if they had been buckled in. More people are killed from being thrown around inside the car or out of it than from the crash itself.

In fact, the chances of being killed are 30 times greater if a person is thrown out of the car. Accident records show that soldiers wearing safety belts are 70 percent less likely to be killed or seriously hurt than unbelted drivers — and shoulder harnesses reduce the chance of injury up to 90 percent.

The season for good feelings is also a dangerous season. Developing good sense about the life-threatening dangers of drinking and driving and the life-saving benefits of wearing safety belts will help to ensure not only a happy holiday season but also a safe one.

NCOA president says he's impressed with post soldiers

During my recent visit to Fort Benning, Ga., I visited a majority of units on the installation and observed the conduct of many noncommissioned officers and soldiers. I was tremendously impressed with their professionalism.

To cite just one example, while visiting 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, two noncommissioned officers, SSgt. Jack Stokes Jr., and SSgt. Clay B. Antonio, briefed me relative to their responsibilities for training soldiers on the Bradley Infantry Fighting Vehicle.

What I found so admirable about the entire visit was that the noncommissioned officers corps was indeed "in charge," knew their business and absolutely emulated the Army Chief of Staff's emphasis on training. There is absolutely no way you could leave Fort Benning, Ga., without feeling a sense of pride and accomplishment.

Soldiers get more for housing

By Mary A. Peterson
American Forces Information

The 1989 Defense Authorization Bill, signed by President Ronald Reagan in late September, included a variable raise in basic allowance for quarters.

While basic pay and subsistence allowance were increased by 4.1 percent, the raise in quarters allowance ranges from slightly more than 4 percent to more than 23 percent, depending upon the pay grade, said a DoD compensation official.

The large variance in rates gives almost everyone 61 percent of housing expenses, based on the national median housing costs, he said. "The VHA survey from last year was used to help determine the increases," he said.

In fact, analysts were in the midst of processing that survey when the raise in rates was approved. This caused some delay in determining what the rates were going to be, for which grades and so on.

Most enlisted and officer mid-grades will receive a bigger percentage. An E-6 will receive more than 10 percent if drawing the "without dependents" rate; 6 percent at the "with dependents" rate. An 0-4 drawing the "without dependents" rate will gain more than 8 percent; more than 5 percent, "with dependents" rate. Warrant officers will gain up to 7 percent.

Large increases have been targeted for junior officers with prior enlisted service. An 0-1 "without dependents" will get a 23 percent increase; 22.3 percent, "with dependents." An 0-2 "without dependents" will get 22.7 percent; 18.6 percent, "with dependents." An 0-3 "without dependents" will see a 16 percent raise; 12.7 percent, "with dependents."

Overall, all ranks who draw housing allowance at the "without dependents" rate gained more with the raise than those with dependents.

The partial rate for service members without dependents was not included in the raise this year and has not been since 1977. The partial rate is a rebate, of sorts, for single service members at sea or living in quarters who do not get the full housing allowance. A change to the partial rate is caused by a reallocation of the basic pay raise.

As an example, he said, if the president directs that 3 percent of a 4 percent raise be apportioned to basic allowance for quarters, the single service member in the dorm would see only a 1 percent raise in his check. Meanwhile, the service member living off post and receiving quarters allowance would see a full 4 percent increase. The partial rate is designed to offset that shortage, the official said.

AAFES says raise won't affect prices

Army News Service

Sidebar to pay story

The Jan. 1 Military Pay raise is good news to most members, so is the fact that the Army and Air Force Exchange Service won't raise prices because of it.

The idea that price increases are timed to pay raises is a myth that AAFES officials want to explode.

"We don't arbitrarily raise prices," declared Brig. Gen. Jeffery D. Kahla, AAFES Commander. "Pay raise or no pay raise, we're here to help your dollar buy more, not less, we try to get the best items at the best prices, day in, day out."

"Our people are aggressive when it comes to getting the best prices and terms." Said Gerald Saperstein, Deputy Director of Purchasing at Headquarters AAFES. In addition, there are regional specials — items bought for a specific geographical area, continued Saperstein. These are usually only available within that area. Other special money-savings buys are available AAFES-wide: for example: one-time purchases of stereo components. In all cases, the savings are passed on to customers, he added.

Saperstein explained that with 178,000 items in the basic AAFES stock allotment, thousands of items are being added or deleted every month. "We don't raise prices unless the manufacturer charges us more," he said.

"Increases can happen anytime we renegociate a contract or place an order. But we work very hard to keep the prices down, and so far this year, we have saved customers nearly $26.9 million dollars by getting manufactures to voluntarily reduce prices."

Additions to the AAFES stock assortment are always restricted to individual items; sometimes whole categories or services are approved to provide more goods and services for the military and their families. For example, so far this year AAFES has added stereo components to CONUS stores; merged the all service mail order catalog into a single worldwide book and increased the home computer stock assortment.

The improvements will continue in 1989: AAFES will sell televisions in CONUS exchanges for the first time; AAFES assumes operation of class six stores, and AAFES will add new services requested by customers.

One of the services being introduced is nationally known car care repair facilities. Now being tested in Hawaii, another is tax preparation service at locations yet to be identified. The Army and Air Force will select the sites, establish the operating guidelines and help evaluate customer response and satisfaction before either of these test programs is dropped or continued.

"We're a military command, part of the community, and we try hard to find the best value possible. We're your store and we're going to keep your desires in mind." said Kahla.

previous registration, or the preprinted form received in the mail, proof of insurance, Soldiers' and Sailors' affidavit, and a copy of the latest LES. If the vehicle has not been registered here, then the soldier should take a copy of the title if he has one in his possession.

Both counties are using the staggered registration system again this year. Last names beginning with A-D should register in January; E-K should register in February; L-R should register in March; and S-Z should register in April. Registration costs $8, but if not done during the proper time period then a fine can be imposed. To avoid delays we recommend soldiers bring cash.

For Muscogee County, soldiers may register in the Government Center located between First and Second avenues and 9th and 10th streets (phone: 571-4795/4796). A small office is also located in the Columbus Square Mall. For Chattahoochee County, registration is at the Cusseta City Hall. From Fort Benning take Highway 27/280 South approximately 10 miles, turn left on to Highway 55, Business, into Cusseta, and go four or five blocks to the Courthouse on the left. The Chattahoochee County Office is closed between noon and 1 p.m. (phone: 989-3897).

Loyd students learn from secret shop

Fort Benning Schools

"Santa's Secret Shop" was no secret to Loyd School students.

A small store of gifts was set up at Loyd School through the efforts of the Loyd School PTO to give students the opportunity to select and purchase presents for family and friends "in secret."

Children were encouraged to earn their own spending money by doing extra chores at home. Although the project was designed to be fun, it also provided the children with experience in budgeting and responsible spending. There were about 70 items to choose from with prices ranging from 30 cents to $9.95.

After shopping, the children had a chance to wrap their gifts in their classrooms with supplies that had been donated by parents.

The only problem for some of the children may have been keeping the secret a secret until Christmas Day.

Larcenies present problems here

By Sterling Smith and Barry Price
Provost Marshal's Office

Fort Benning is currently experiencing a serious problem with larcenies in the Central Main Post and Kelly Hill areas. Cars in parking lots are a prime target, especially unsecured privately owned vehicles. Radios, cassette players, and radar detectors are easily taken. Any articles left in the interior of a car can be easily seen from the outside. The thief walks by the POV and sees something in plain view and decides he wants it.

Many people go shopping and leave what they just bought in the back seat as they go from store to store. This is a good way to let thieves do their shopping!

The MPs alone cannot prevent larcenies. They need the assistance and cooperation of all who live and work at Fort Benning. After all, these incidents cost you and the government money in the form of increased insurance rates and tax dollars.

The MPs offer these tips to keep you from getting ripped off:

— Always secure your vehicle, and put any high value items in the trunk or take them with you.

— Engraving your Social Security Number on high value items makes them easy to identify and discourages a thief from taking them.

— Record the brand names, model numbers, and serial numbers of your high value and other items, so the MPs will be able to return recovered property.

— Report any suspicious activity to the MPs immediately.

— Avoid parking your POV in poorly secured, poorly lit, high crime areas.

Remember, if you leave valuables unsecured you provide thieves the opportunity to make you a victim. For further information on crime prevention and physical security, call 545-7154/1146.

Soldiers face damaging enemy — cold

Army News Service

Soldiers face an insidious enemy. An enemy frequently ignored as a hazard, yet as potentially damaging as a bullet. The insidious enemy is cold.

Cold is all the more insidious because it's often difficult to recognize when the damage is being done and it isn't always painful.

The human body generates heat, which, if retained, protects it from cold injury. The loss of body heat, and the kind and degree of injury that results, depends on several factors:

—The degree of cold to which the body part is exposed
—How long it is exposed
—Humidity, precipitation, and wind
—Insulation provided by clothing and footwear —Activity (too much or too little)
—Fatigue and influence of alcohol, drugs or medication

Preventing cold injuries is easy. Specific preventive measures will conserve total body heat and avoid unnecessary prolonged exposure to cold, moisture, and activities favoring cold injury.

Familiarize yourself with simple meteorological data such as humidity, temperature, wind and ground surface conditions which influence the risk of cold injury.

Wear adequate clothing and wear it right. Several layers of medium-weight clothing provide more insulation than one piece of heavy clothing. The layers trap air between them, adding to the insulation's effectiveness. Wear clothing loosely so as not to restrict blood circulation. Protect your head, face, nose and ears with adequate clothing.

Wear boots loose enough to permit layers of air to provide good insulation and good circulation to the feet. Change socks as soon as possible when they become wet.

Don't touch metal, snow, or other cold objects with your bare hands.

Touching metal in extreme cold can cause a 'burn' as bad as if you had placed your hand on a hot stove.

Learn to understand wind chill. If the temperature is minus 20 degrees Fahrenheit and there is a wind of 20 knots, the equivalent chill temperature is 68 degrees below zero. Under these conditions, exposed flesh can freeze within 30 seconds.

Observe others for symptoms of cold injury. If sudden blanching of the skin is noted promptly, immediate care will usually prevent the development of a more serious cold injury.

There are two types of cold injuries: freezing and non-freezing.

The actual freezing of tissue is called "frostbite."

When tissue — skin, muscle or even nerve — freezes, the water between and within the cells changes into crystals of ice. These crystals draw water out of the cells, causing the injury. Much of the damage affects the small blood vessels that bring oxygen and nutrition to the tissues. Frostbite ranges in severity from first degree, the least serious, to fourth degree.

Trench foot and hypothermia are non-freezing cold injuries. Trench foot usually results from exposure of the feet to wet socks and boots in temperatures between 32 and 50 degrees Fahrenheit. At the upper range of temperature, it may take as long as 12 hours of exposure to cause injury.

Hypothermia is an abnormally low body temperature. It isn't always associated with low temperatures — it can be fatal even in temperatures of 50 or 60 degrees Fahrenheit.

Frostbite requires temperatures below freezing. The lower the temperature, the faster the injury will occur. If there is wind as well as low temperature, exposed skin can freeze in a few seconds.

You can apply first aid to light frostbite (freezing of the skin only), but you should never attempt to treat deep frostbite.

Here's what to do:

Seek medical attention as soon as possible.

If cheeks are lightly frostbitten, cover them with warm hands or clothing until sensation returns.

If fingers are lightly frostbitten, place them beneath clothing under armpits or on the stomach.

Don't attempt to thaw severely frozen areas.

Don't massage or bend the injured area; don't rub it with snow; don't open blisters.

Remove all constricting items of clothing such as boots, socks or gloves from the injured area.

Protect the injured area from further injury with blankets or clothing that is not constricting.

If the feet or legs are injured, treat the individual as if he were a litter patient with the injured part level or slightly elevated.

Drink hot liquids, if possible, and refrain from smoking, drinking alcohol, or applying medications or salves.

Hunt

— Primary dependents of deceased sponsors of the above categories

Unauthorized hunters at Fort Benning will initially be ejected from the installation. That ejection will later become permanent, Wright said.

To ensure that hunters abide by the rules through the rest of the season, the military police continue to have from four to six patrols at any one time in addition to the game warden and his staff, according to Wright.

Deer hunting season will officially end Jan. 8 on the Georgia side of Fort Benning and Jan. 15 on the Alabama side.

The next hunting season at Fort Benning will be turkey season which will begin March 20 on Fort Benning's Alabama side and March 25 on the Georgia side.

Youngest son joins airborne family

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

Peter Knott jumped off of a 34-foot mock airplane tower for the first time when he was three years old. He was so light he got stuck in the middle of the tension wire and had to be towed to the other side.

"I remember it like it was yesterday," said CSM James Knott, his dad. "He was so little you could hardly see his face underneath the steel pot."

Peter, now a PFC, can clearly be seen under his helmet. Furthermore, he no longer gets stuck on the tension wire of the tower.

He recently proved that when he completed jump school with Company D, 1st Battalion 507th Parachute Infantry Regiment.

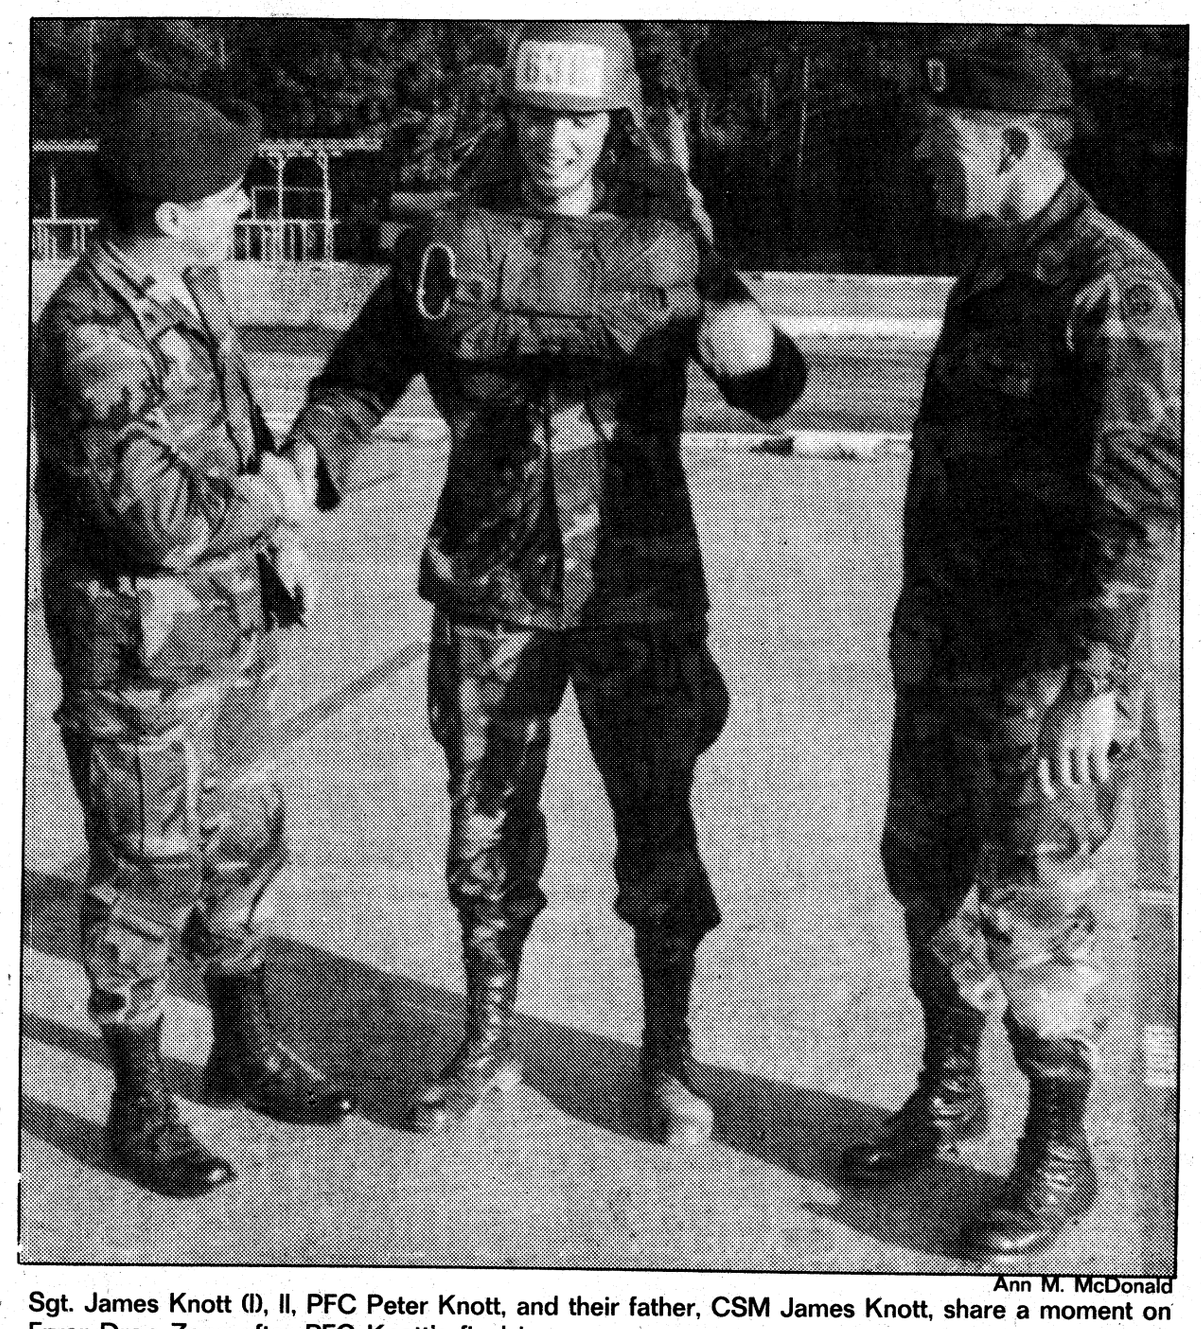
Now, all the men in his family are airborne qualified.

His father, who is the command sergeant major for the 82nd Aviation Brigade, 82nd Airborne Division, Fort Bragg, N.C., and his brother, Sgt. James Knott II, a scout in Troop A, 17th Cavalry of the same brigade, are already jump qualified and have been for some time.

They came to Benning recently to make a jump with the youngest Knott.

Now, he too has earned his wings and will be assigned to the 82nd.

All this might sound planned, but it wasn't.



CSM Knott said he never pushed his sons into doing anything.

"I didn't want them to come back to me and say 'I hate the Army,'" CSM Knott said.

Both of the boys agreed with their father and said that they have wanted to be airborne all their lives.

They have made their dream come true; and now they will serve with their dad.

Their mother, Delores, said she is honored to have all of her men airborne qualified. "My sons have wanted to be airborne soldiers all their lives, and that's what they've done."

Ann M. McDonald

Sgt. James Knott (l), II, PFC Peter Knott, and their father, CSM James Knott, share a moment on Fryar Drop Zone after PFC Knott's final jump.

ACS helps in times of need

Army Community Service

With the holidays upon us, it is important to remember that from time to time we may find ourselves in a situation where unforeseen and emergency situations arise suddenly.

It can and does happen to soldiers everywhere. And when it does, soldiers can always count on Army Community Service to be there. Unfortunately, many soldiers don't know about the ACS program and therefore miss out on many of its services and programs.

ACS is the commander's primary resource agency for delivering soldier and family support services. The family programs, services and activities offered by ACS play a vital role in preparing our soldiers and their families to accept the challenges of readiness.

During the holidays, ACS organizations prepare food baskets for Army families. But did you know that emergency food assistance is available through ACS year-round?

Some ACS centers are beginning to work closely with area food banks to make this service even more accessible.

Other available ACS programs include:

Relocation Assistance Program: This program helps individuals moving to or arriving from other military duty stations settle into their new environments by operating welcome centers and lending closets; conducting orientations, briefings, or tours; and providing installation welcome packets. Other activities include services to bi-cultural families and waiting families and support for the Army's Sponsorship Program.

Information, Referral and Follow-up Program: The program links soldiers and families with other military or civilian helping agencies. It maintains and provides comprehensive and accurate information about local military and civilian community human service agencies that may be of further assistance to the family.

Outreach Program: Outreach focuses on three main areas: education and prevention; direct services; and support networks to encourage self-help. The program targets junior enlisted and first-term families; it creates a sense of belonging to the military family. The desired results include increased retention and better readiness among soldiers.

Family Member Employment Assistance Program: Representatives at Civilian Personnel Offices and ACS work together to provide the full range of employment services needed by relocating family members. FMEAP offers information on local civilian employment, education and volunteer opportunities. It provides job search training workshops, individual job/career assistance and counseling, and training classes for highly marketable job skills. Consumer Affairs and Financial Assistance Program: The Consumer Affairs and Financial Assistance Program offers checkbook management classes, family budget planning, credit and life insurance information, and debt liquidation assistance.

Consumer Affairs is designed to inform soldiers and families about their rights as consumers and assist with consumer and product-related complaints.

Exceptional Family Member Program: We want to make sure our children receive every opportunity to achieve their full potential. For some, making this happen is easy. For others it requires special support. This program offers comprehensive social support for exceptional family members who may have special social, medical or educational needs. Other activities include respite care; information and referral; special recreational services; support groups; and networking with other agencies providing programs for handicapped family members.

Family Advocacy Program: The Family Advocacy Program addresses the problems of spouse abuse and child abuse and neglect. It provides training on prevention, education, awareness, identification, reporting and treatment. The Medical Treatment Facility coordinates direct child or spouse abuse medical intervention services and clinical treatment for the abuser and the victim.

These are only some of the "soldier support" programs available through ACS. Call or stop by your local ACS to get more information on programs and services they offer.

ASK THE JUDGE

By Dennis E. Brower
Staff Judge Advocate's Office

Q. Recently, a neighbor's child accidently ran his bicycle into the side of my car, which was legally parked on the street in front of my house. The side of the car was dented and all scratched up. I talked to the parents and they said they would pay for the damage and to get an estimate. The estimate of repair was for $349, but the parents said it was too much and that they had changed their minds about paying. What am I going to do? How can I get the parents to pay for damage their child caused?

A. You have a big problem. Parents are not automatically responsible for property damage caused by their children. Parental responsibility is generally limited to willful, malicious or intentional acts of minors. Since the child did not intentionally damage your car, the parents may not be legally responsible.

Of course there are exceptions to this rule. If you can show that the parents committed a negligent or careless act in the supervision or control of the child, and that negligent act was the main cause of the damage, then the parents might be held liable. However, this is usually very difficult to prove.

In your case, the child just lost control of his bicycle and hit your car. You would have to prove that it is the parent's fault that the child lost control of the bicycle. If you could prove that the child was too young to be left unattended, or that the child had a history of losing control of the bicyle, and the parents knew this and did nothing, then you might be able to persuade a court to hold the parents liable.

However, the law states that as long as the child does not commit a willful, malicious or intentional act, and the parents take reasonable care to discipline and supervise the child, then the parents usually cannot be held liable for the acts of their child.

In the case you have described, it does not appear likely that you have any legal reason to make the parents pay for the damage. Most parents understand that they are morally responsible for the acts of their children and will pay for damage caused by them. However, if they do not want to be good neighbors and responsible citizens, then there is very little you can legally do to make them pay.

USO offers free housing in emergencies

By Monica Manganaro
Military District of Washington

A special program, co-sponsored by the USO and the Apartment and Office Building Association of Metropolitan Washington, makes it possible for eligible servicemembers and their families to stay rent-free in the area. The first of its kind, the USO/AOBA Emergency Housing Program provides apartment living for junior enlisted military members and their families during financial distress or medical emergencies for up to 60 days. The maximum two-month stay is normally enough time for families to resolve the immediate problem, according to Randy Ford, USO deputy director.

The program began in July, 1986, as an alternative to the lack of on-post housing and high cost of living in the metro area. For soldiers subsisting on $7,000 to $12,000 per year, the program filled a real need.

It still does, but it also helps those brought to Washington for medical treatment.

Whether for medical or financial reason, the USO and AOBA couldn't do it alone. "This program is built on teamwork," Ford said. "It's military and civilians working together."

For its part, the AOBA has donated nine apartments, including utilities, free of rent.

Since the USO receives no funding from the federal or local governments, it relies on donations and funds from outside sources.

Contributions from the private sector have made it possible to furnish the apartments.

There's still work to be done. "Our goal is to have 15 apartments for next year," Ford said.

Though that number does not begin to cover the vast number of servicemembers moving to the metro area, it does ensure housing for at least six families per year for each apartment.

The USA-Metro serves more than 200,000 each year, including those assigned to temporary duty. In spite of the large numbers served under other programs, the Emergency Housing Program is a high impact program.

"It touches literally thousands during the year," Ford said, "and the program is starting up in other major cities."

Continued success depends on the generosity of local property owners and builders, according to Ford. There is always the possibility that some apartment donors will pull out of the program. "It's not just dollars and cents, it has to come from the heart," said Ford. For now, though, the program is surviving. Interested soldiers need a referral from their NCOIC, CPO, or housing officer, and must meet strict criteria. From this, Senior Enlisted Advisory Council members identify eligible families.

By using the following procedure, soldiers on the Family Housing Waiting List can use this chart to estimate when they can expect quarters:

Locate your category of housing.

Note eligibility date located on the same line as your category.

Calculate the time difference between the eligibility date listed and your eligibility date. The difference is the approximate time you still have to wait for housing.

EXAMPLE: If the latest eligibility date of the person who last received housing in your category was May 15, 1988, and your date of eligibility is Sept. 15, 1988, you can expect housing in about four months. If you do not know your eligibility date, contact the Family Housing Office at building 399, 545-3107.

'Eldorado' — an elusive dream of youth, happiness

By Gregory L. Black
Clinical Pastoral Education

"Eldorado"

Gaily Bedight, a gallant knight,
In sunshine and in shadow
Had journeyed long, singing a song,
In search of Eldorado.
But he grew old, this knight so bold,
And o're his heart a shadow fell,

As he found no spot of ground
That looked like Eldorado.
And when his strength failed him at length,
He met a pilgrim shadow.
Shadow, said he, where can it be?
This land called Eldorado?
Over the mountain of the moon,
Down the valley of the shadow,
Ride boldly, ride, the shade replied,
If you seek for Eldorado.

Edgar Allen Poe

"Eldorado," that place of perpetual youth and vigor. Poe sought for it all of his life in alcohol, drugs and the occult, never to be satisfied. The illusive dream of "Eldorado" is only to be found as one becomes thankful for the moment called "now".

I remember the day when I began to reflect on my lifestyle of "Eldorado" chasing. I had imagined that happiness would come from outside myself, as some event would affirm me. Getting my driver's license didn't do it, or did graduation from high school. College graduation was no different: none of these events brought that ultimate affirmation, and with it, happiness.

Then, one day as I sat in a seminary class, I began to daydream of yet another graduation which might bring that "Eldorado" experience for which I had sought. Suddenly, I asked myself, "Self, when will you be happy?" Quickly, the answer came. "Self", I said, "You'll not be happy till you give yourself permission." As the conversation continued inside my head, and the professor continued to lecture, I gave myself permission to be happy!

Perhaps 1988 has been a happy year for you, perhaps not. My challenge to you is to reflect on this past year, and, as you revisit key events in your life, look for the good that might reside therein. Count your blessings, and be thankful.

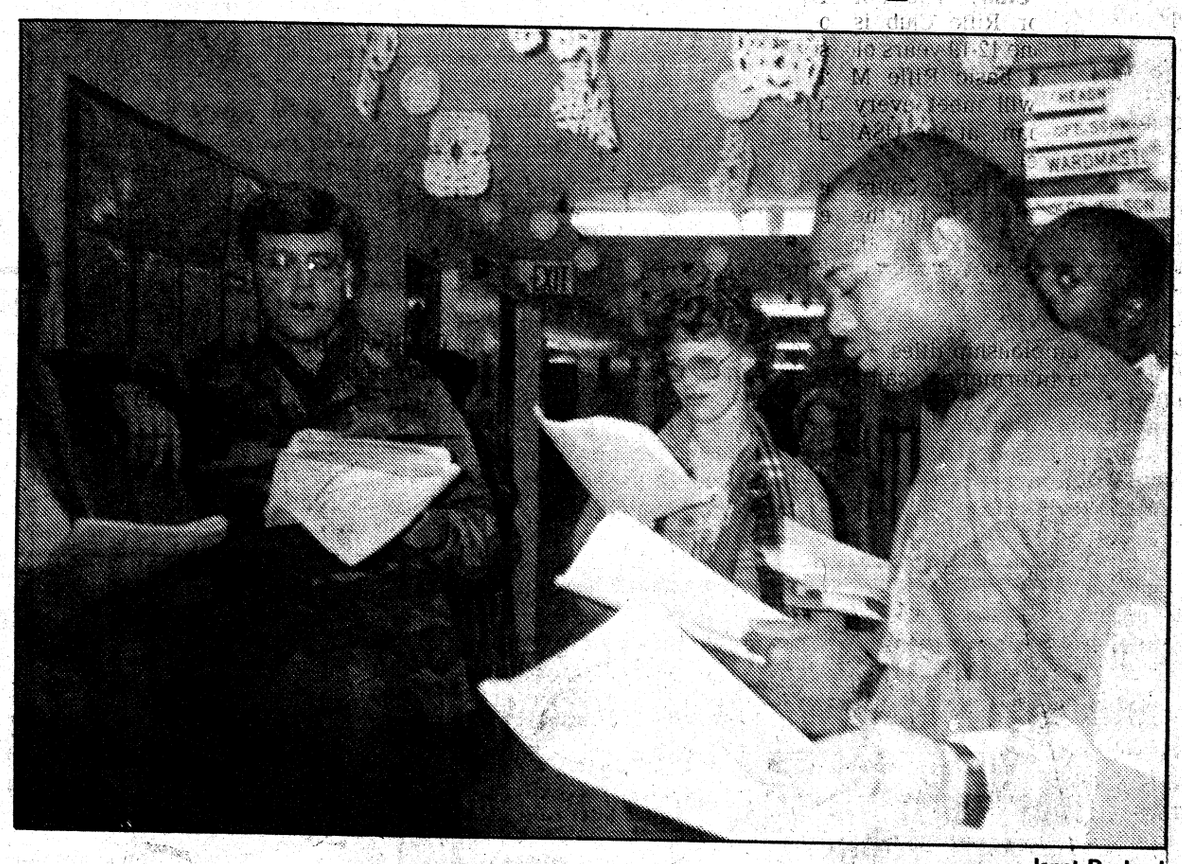
Sightseeing Road carolers bring cheer to patients

USAIC Chaplain's Office



Carolers from Sightseeing Road Chapel gathered at Martin Army Community Hospital Dec. 21 to sing traditional Christmas songs and share Christmas spirit.

They began in the emergency room and continued on to each floor lifting voices in praise of Jesus. The doctors and nurses gave an especially warm welcome, and many joined in the fun, according to Chap. (Maj.) David R. Penland, Sightseeing Road Chaplain.

To share a song at Christmas may not seem like much, but the looks of appreciation in the eyes of the patients and staff were reward enough for the carolers, Penland said.

Christmas will hold special memories for the carolers this year because of the hugs from the children on the pediatric ward and the grins from soldiers confined to the hospital for the holidays, he said.

As carolers, we can only say that we received more than we gave, he added.

Janet Penland

Chap. (Maj.) David R. Penland and Sightseeing Road Chapel carolers visit patients and staff at MACH during the holidays.

Military women will not be evacuated if crisis occurs

By Rudi Williams
American Forces Information Service

To quash rumors that the Department of Defense plans to evacuate military women from overseas areas along with dependents during mobilization or other crises, Secretary of Defense Frank C. Carlucci has sent a memorandum to service secretaries.

In the memorandum, Carlucci asks service secretaries to review assignment policies and to ensure that all service members understand DoD policy.

This misperception of the policy, voiced by both male and female service members, was brought to Carlucci's attention by the executive committee of the Defense Advisory Committee on Women in the Services.

"During our trip overseas, and also during visits to military installations in the United States, we found that it had become the perception of both male and female service members that women will be evacuated from their positions in the event of a conflict contingency in forward areas – Europe and Korea," said Jacquelyn K. Davis DACOWITS chairperson.

"Moreover, from talking with military personnel overseas, there seems to be an impression that the services have devised an evacuation plan and policy that would take the women out of forward areas at the same time dependents would be evacuated in a crisis situation," said Davis, whose three-year tenure as DACOWITS chairperson ends on Dec. 31. She served on the committee five years.

Davis, who is also the executive vice president of the Institute for Foreign Policy Analysis in Cambridge, Mass., said, " The memorandum he (Secretary Carlucci) issued we found to be entirely in keeping with what we understood our problem to be and with the requirement of the services themselves."

In emphasizing the importance of maintaining and protecting readiness, Carlucci said, " Decisions that military women may be assigned to certain missions and units under existing combat exclusion statutes and policies must be made with the understanding that they will be assigned both in peacetime and in times of conflict.

"Military women should be assigned to duties which they could not fulfill in the event of mobilization or other national emergency since there will be no plans in instructions to remove or evacuate them."

Davis is pleased with the number of jobs that were opened to women during the five she has been with DACOWITS. "In the Air Force, women are now on missile silo air crews, AWACS (airborne warning and control) aircraft, a variety of reconnaissance aircraft and pilots of refueling tankers," she said.

"In the Army, jobs in elements of forward-support battalions and in intelligence have been opened to women.

"In the Navy, the big one of the mobile logistics support vessels, and they serve aboard Military Sealift Command ships.

"In the Marine Corps, women can now serve as embassy security personnel. Those are some of the job categories that have been opened to women during the past five years.

"But most importantly, I've seen a very great change in the attitude of the leadership of the services with regard to the role and contribution that women are making and can make in the services," she said.

"As long as we are taking women into the services in roles that are not restricted by the combat exclusion policy and laws, we must understand that they are volunteering for the same risks and opportunities as their male counterparts. They should be allowed to do their jobs.

"It's not fair to the male or female if women would be pulled out in wartime," Davis continued. "If we're going to pull them out, they shouldn't be there in the first place. The purpose of the military force structure is to provide for the defensive capabilities."

Davis said it's not only important to welcome women into the military services. "It's also important to recognize that women are as important members of the team as are males in the services today.

"The military leaders have recognized that women are here to stay and form a very important component of the force structure," Davis said.

Defense Department opens new inland POV processing center

By Rudi Williams
American Forces Information Service

The Department of Defense opened its first inland vehicle processing center on Dec. 1 at the Charles Melvin Price Support Center in Granite City, Ill.

"It's for the convenience and welfare of military personnel and civilian employees and their dependents and will save the government millions of dollars in permanent change of station costs," according to a Military Traffic Management Command spokesman.

"The center is primarily for people stationed in the Midwest and anyone traveling to or from overseas via Lambert-St. Louis (Mo.) International Airport," said Capt. Ron Ellis, a transportation management officer in the command's International Traffic Directorate in Falls Church, Va.

Military travelers should not ship a vehicle before checking with their transportation office because they could be charged for shipment from Granite City to the nearest ocean terminal. For instance, said Ellis, "A service member at Fort Bragg, N. C., (on the East Coast) is assigned to West Germany. He drives homne to St. Louis on leave. He could ship a vehicle back to the East Coast, since the government will pay only for shipment from the port nearest the person's duty station."

On the other hand, "If the same soldier at Fort Bragg received a port call out of Los Angeles and he drove to St. Louis and dropped off the car, he wouldn't have any excess charges because he saved the government half the distance of getting the vehicle across country," Ellis noted. "He should get a briefing about this at his duty station."

Vehicles turned in at Granite City will be transported to ocean terminals via commercial car carriers.

The new processing center will reduce travel time for those going overseas or returning to the Midwest.

It takes 41 days to ship a vehicle overseas from the East Coast to West Germany. Travelers using the inland processing center should add three days for vehicles being shipped to or from the East Coast and Gulf Coast and five days for those shipped through the West Coast ports.

Vehicles being shipped to and from overseas are handled at nine ports around the country – Bayonne, N. J.; Oakland, Calif.; Baltimore, Md.; Norfolk, Va,; New Orleans; Seattle; Charleston, S. C.; Cape Canaveral, Fla., and Los Angeles.

"Don't leave anything of value or personal items when you ship a vehicle," Ellis warned. "If you have expensive tools, ship them separately or get them crated. The ports have boxing materials."

The inland center has the same processing services as the ocean terminals – from inprocessing to complete documentation for overseas shipment. Customs documentation for vehicles shipped to Granite City from overseas are completed at the port of debarkation. They have been cleared through customs when the owner arrives to pick them up.

Those seeking information about the new processing center should call autovon 892-4650/4651. The commercial number is (618) 452-4650/4651.

Cleland addresses Troy State graduates

The Honorable Max Cleland, Georgia Secretary of State, spoke to graduates at the Troy State University Fort Benning commencement ceremony, Dec. 15 at Marshall Auditorium in Building 4. The university presented 149 degrees, many of which went to Fort Benning soldiers. A Vietnam veteran, Cleland was wounded by a grenade in 1968. He received the Bronze and Silver Stars for his active duty service.

Domestic electricity usage adds up quickly and can be expensive

By Becky Ray
Energy Branch

Although Fort Benning used less electricity than natural gas last year, electricity was the costliest utility in 1988. The post spent over $9 million dollars on electricity to cool buildings and run appliances.

Natural gas accounted for over 60 percent of Fort Benning's energy consumption, but the total bill for last year was just under $7 million.

Because electricity is so expensive, it's important that electricity be conserved as much as possible.

Electricity is measured and billed in kilowatt-hours. One kilowatt-hour will:

- heat four gallons of water to 140 degrees in an electric water heater
- burn a 100-watt bulb for ten hours
- let you iron for two to three hours
- let you watch TV for six hours
- operate an electric clock for one month
- allow you to brush your teeth with an electric toothbrush for two years

Heating and cooling your home with electricity can use from 8,500 KWH to 40,000 KWH in a year, depending upon the type of equipment used, the construction of the house, and the amount of care your family takes to conserve energy.

Appliance	Estimated KWH Per Month	Estimated Cost Per Month
Refrigerator (20 cu. ft., 2-door auto defrost)	160	$ 8.00
Refrigerator (25 cu. ft., side-by-side, auto defrost	185	$ 9.25
Electric range, manual cleaning	100	$ 5.00
Microwave oven	15	$ .75
Coffee maker	9	$ .44
Toaster oven	8	$ .40
Clothes washer (30 loads)	200	$10.00
Clothes dryer (30 loads)	90	$ 4.50
Hand iron (1.5 hours/week)	5	$ .25
Television, color, tube (6 hours/day)	55	$ 2.75
Television, color, solid state (6 hours/day)	37	$ 1.85
Radio (3 hours/day)	7	$ .35
Stereo (3 hours/day)	11	$ .55
Lighting (3-bedroom house)	219	$10.95
Hair dryer	4	$ .20
Vacuum cleaner	4	$ .20
Attic fan	25	$ 1.25
Air conditioner (window unit)	116	$ 5.80
Air conditioner (central unit)	417	$20.83
Electric water heater	525	$20.25

Water heating accounts for about 20 percent of the energy used in a home. Electric water heaters use about 6,300 KWH a year for a family of four, and costs about $315.00, based on the price that Fort Benning pays for electricity.

Post occupants and residents may not pay directly for electricity used on post, but they should remember it is paid out of the installation's operating budget.

By saving energy, money can be used in other ways to improve the quality of life for everyone.

Civilian drug testing given green light; may begin in Jan.

By Jim Garamone
American Forces Information Service

Drug testing of almost 200,000 civilian employees of the Department of Defense could begin as early as January.

David J. Armor principal deputy secretary of defense for force management and personnel, announced that 60-day employee notices have approval from the Department of Justice and that a collection system has approval from the Department of Health and Human Services.

DoD is encouraging all services and defense agencies to send their 60-day notices out as soon as possible, informing all employees that a program of drug testing will begin for persons in special testing-designated positions. These employees will receive 30-day test-notices alerts.

Not all employees in testing-designated positions will be tested.

"The agencies will test an average of about 15 percent to 18 percent of those people in testing-designated positions," said Sharon H. Cooper, the director of domestic drug programs for DoD. "We don't anticipate hitting this average right off the bat; we will build up to it."

Military drug testing labs and DoD-certified civilian labs will test samples.

They will test urine for THC (the active ingredient in marijuana), cocaine, PCP, opiates, barbituates and amphetamines.

"The agencies have determined which substances they want to test for," Cooper said. "While we are providing guidance, we want the program to be run by the services and agencies as much as possible."

The urinalyses will include applicant testing, testing for reasonable suspicion, follow-up, government-related accidents and random testing.

Employees who are in testing-designated positions canappeal their inclusion if they feel the positions they occupy should not be included in the testing pool.

The Army has performed limited civilian drug testing already. Armor said in a memo asking about progress that, "I believe that it is imperative for DoD to continue to be a leader in the administration's fight to end drug abuse in our society."

Military prepares to support Bush inauguration

By Jim Garamone
American Forces Information Service

When President-elect George Bush is inaugurated Jan. 20, the United States will also be inaugurating a new commander in chief of the armed forces.

The services will support the effort through the Armed Forces Inaugural Committee, which oversees the efforts of about 6,500 service members taking part in the inauguration of the nation's 41st president.

The committee will coordinate military participation in the inaugural parade. In addition,the committee will provide emergency medical support and communications and will assist local law enforcement agencies in control of military personnel within the staging, assembly and dispersal areas of the parade.

The committee also handles other logistical aspects: service members' transportation, feeding and housing, as well as duty assignments and on-time arrival at duty areas.

The Armed Forces Inaugural Committee supports two others: The Presidential Inaugural Committee and the Joint Congressional Committee on Inaugural Ceremonies. The presidential committee organizes most of the inaugural events. The congressional committee is responsible for the swearing-in ceremony at the Capitol.

Military participation in inaugural activities goes back to the first inaugural in 1789. George Washington was escorted to his swearing-in in New York by six Continental Army soldiers. The scope has increased since. The largest and most obvious military involvement, according to committee officials, was during the swearing-in of Abraham Lincoln in 1861. In addition to the normal inaugural activities, troops were used to protect the president.

The Bush inauguration anticipates the smallest military participation in recent years. In 1981, 10,700 service members participated in the transfer of power from Jimmy Carter to Ronald Reagan. In Reagan's second inaugural in 1985, 8,400 service members took part.

Peace Corps needs experienced teachers to serve year as assistants in Philippines

Subs and retirees especially needed

Peace Corps

Peace Corps officials have announced that there is an urgent need for experienced teachers to serve one-year assignments in the Philippines as associate volunteers.

The American teachers would serve as assistants and advisors to Filipino teacher trainers for both primary and secondary educators. They would be assigned to village, provincial, municipal and national schools on the big island of Luzon in the Philippines.

"We are particularly looking for qualified substitute and retired teachers to spend a year overseas," Peace Corps Director Loret Miller Ruppe said. "They are needed to share their knowledge with their counterparts in this key Pacific nation."

Ruppe, who calls teachers "the backbone of the Peace Corps," said that the Peace corps is shifting its program focus from individual classroom instruction in host countries. With teacher education as the main focus today, more emphasis is being placed on formal transfer of skills to host country teachers.

While many volunteers continue to teach in classrooms around the world, other volunteers are being sought to help retained teachers improve their skills, develop instructional materials and methodologies, and identify local resources, she said.

Teachers with at least five years of professional classroom experience are being recruited to leave for the Philippines next spring. They would take part in a pre-departure orientation in San Francisco on April 5 and arrive in the Philippines on April 9 to begin eight weeks of special training.

Peace Corps recruiters hope to attract 10 primary level educators and 20 secondary level teachers for the Philippines teacher trainer assistant positions. At the secondary level, there is a specific need for seven math teachers, seven science teachers and six English teachers to assist in the teacher training program on Luzon.

The aim of the teacher training assistants program is to reduce the severe shortage of trained teachers in the Philippines, improve the morale of faculty and staff, and improve the achievement rates of students. Although the traditional Pease Corps length of service is for two years plus training, the urgent need for teacher educators and others in scarce-skill areas has prompted the Peace Corps to organize a one-year Associate Volunteer Program.

Peace Corps volunteers must be U.S. citizens and in good health. There is no upper age limit for service. To learn more about the Teacher Education Program, call toll-free 1-800-424-8580 and ask for extension 293.

Graduate program beckons scientists and engineers

Army News Service

Persons pursuing careers in science and engineering have access to a career-enhancing program aimed at helping restore a strong U.S. presence in the world community of advanced-degree holders in science and engineering.

Called the National Defense Science and Engineering Graduate Fellowship Program, it intends to award about 150 new three-year graduate fellowships in April.

The $10-million program, said DoD spokeswoman Jan Bodanyi, reflects concern that a declining number of U.S. citizens have been gaining advanced degrees in science and engineering fields important to national defense.

Bodanyi listed the following subject categories covered by the program: Mathematics, computer science, physics, bioscience, chemistry, chemical engineering, toxicology, geosciences, cognitive/neural/behavioral sciences, materials science, manufacturing sciences, electrical engineering, mechanical engineering, naval architecture, ocean engineering, aeronautical/astronautical engineering and oceanography.

She explained that only U.S. citizens and native residents of U.S. possessions are eligible to apply for the fellowships, and the deadline is March 1.

Persons desiring to apply may obtain application forms from: Battelle-Columbus Division, Graduate Fellowship Program, P.O. Box 12297, Research Triangle Park, N.C. 27709. The telephone number is (919) 549-8291.

Commissaries make donation

Army News Service

A mock check for $17,863 was recently presented to the U.S. Army Troop Support Agency, representing the amount donated to the Ronald McDonald House program in TSA's name by the Scott Paper Company of Philadelphia.

Edward L. Ebert, military sales manager for Scott, presented the check to Brig. Gen. James S. Hayes, TSA commander.

The donation was the result of a two-month sales promotion of Scott Paper products in Army commissaries, during which Scott donated five cents to the charity for every case sold.

The amount reveals a 22.3 percent increase compared with last year's promotion.

Army commissaries worldwide participated in the event, selling 104,275 cases.

The commissary at Fort Bragg, N.C., was the largest single contributor with a $575 donation, while the European Commissary Region led the way among the Agency's five commissary regions with $7,900 donated.

Stealth fighter disclosed

American Forces Information Service

The existence of the F-117A "stealth" fighter aircraft was announced recently. The single seat, dual-engine aircraft has been operational since October 1983 and its first flight occurred in June 1981.

Pentagon spokesman Dan Howard said the Air Force revealed the plane's existence mainly so that it can fly the aircraft under less secrecy, go fully operational and fly in the daytime.

"When you're running a program where you can only fly the aircraft for a limited number of hours, with very little interface with other units, it's difficult to go into a full-scale, integrated operation," said Howard, assistant secretary of defense for public affairs. Previously, the aircraft was flown only at night.

With the disclosure of the program, the F-117A moves closer toward supporting worldwide defense commitments, thus adding to the deterrent strength of the U. S. military forces.

Fifty-two of the aircraft have already been delivered to the 4450th Tactical Group at Nellis Air Force Base, Nev., and another seven are in production.

Former All-Army boxer trains for competition

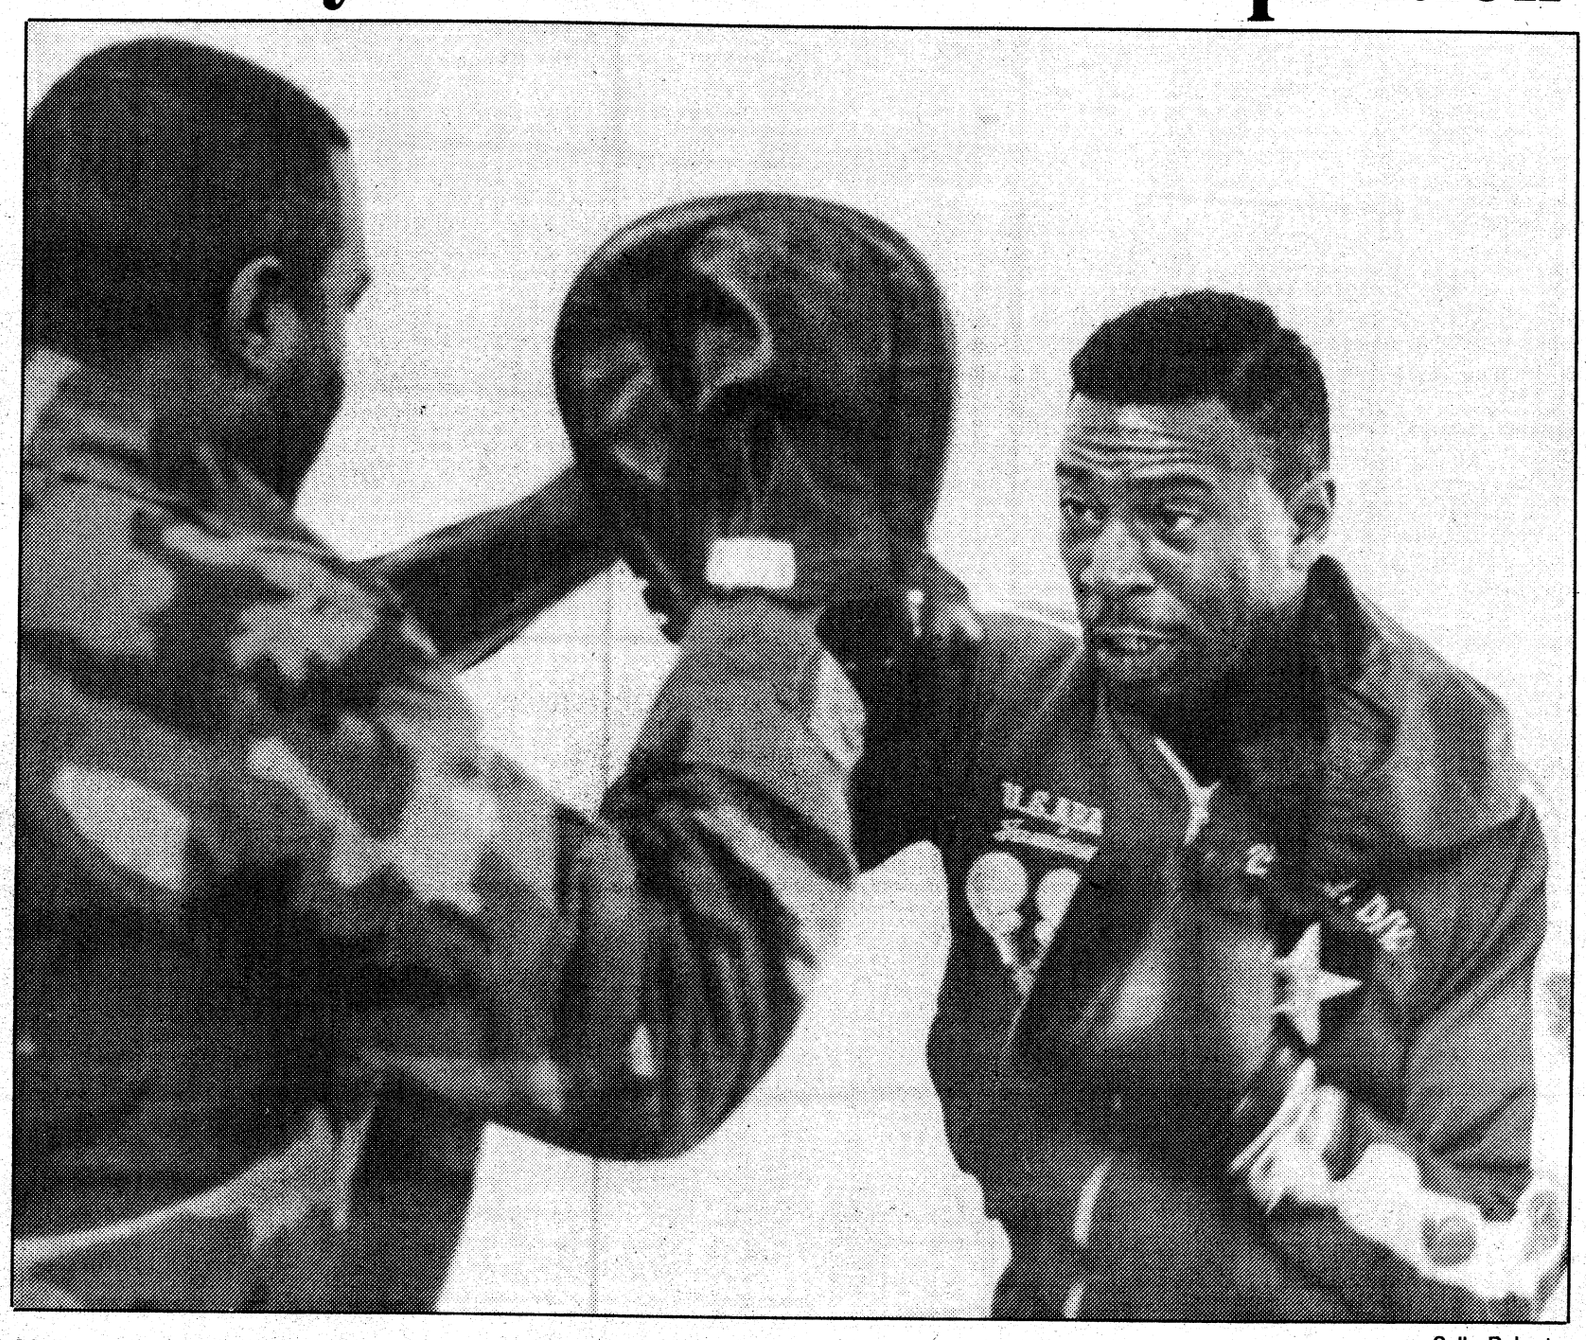
By Sally Roberts
197th Infantry Brigade

Spec. Michael Jamison, HHB, 4th Battalion, 41st Field Artillery, 197th Infantry Brigade, a former All-Army boxer has a chance to represent Fort Benning in the upcoming Army boxing trials.

Jamison, who has been at Fort Benning only a few months, was previously stationed in Korea.

While there, he was selected for the All-Army boxing team but found little time to train because of his duties as an artilleryman with the 2nd Infantry Division and his pending permanent change of station to Fort Benning.

Recently, he attended a boxing camp sponsored by Forces Command (FORSCOM) with hopes of advancing to the All-Army trials.



"Now I have to reestablish myself and make up for all the training I missed," Jamison said.

Jamison, who became interested in boxing in high school, has taken honors in the Colorado, Alabama, Mississippi and Tennessee Golden Gloves programs.

Since entering the Army, Jamison boxed on the Fort Carson, Colo. boxing team and was the 2nd Infantry Division champion in his weight class and the runner up in the 8th Army championship in Korea.

"Boxing is the only sport I tried that I liked," he said. "It's just one-on-one competition, and that's what I like most about it."

Jamison faced other boxers in the 147-pound or welterweight class at the FORSCOM camp.

Army boxers compete in Forces Command championships

By Steven Hoover
Army News Service

Approximately 100 boxers competed in the 1988 Forces Command Boxing Championships at Fort Meade, Md., ending title bouts on Dec. 17.

A team from Fort Hood dominated the competition with six individual titles and the team trophy. The victory gave Hood its fifth team title in the past six years; Fort Bragg, N.C., won the 1987 title before a home crowd.

Soldiers from Army installations across the United States, including Alaska, converged on Meade, hoping to earn a trip to the All-Army Boxing Trials in February at Fort Huachuca, Ariz. Also at stake were eight chances to travel and train with the U.S. boxing team when they face a Korean national team Jan. 7 in Atlantic City, N.J.

"The boxers who win at the FORSCOM level definitely have the potential to go on and represent the United States nationally and then eventually turn professional," said Tom Hlavacek, the deputy director of Armed Forces Sports and the ring announcer for the event.

James Harmon, a Baltimore native boxing for Fort Campbell, Ky., was the first champion crowned during the tourney. Harmon decisioned Fort Knox's Charles Butler to capture the 106-pound light flyweight division title.

Then Fort Hood's "parade of champions" began.

Hood's Brian Lonon stopped Alex Villalobos of Fort Eustis, Va., at 2:01 of the first round to claim the 112-pound flyweight division championship. Lonon won by "referee stops contest" — basically the same as a technical knockout in professional boxing.

The first of three head-to-head match-ups between perennial powerhouses Hood and Bragg saw Lonon's teammate Eddie Cook win a battle with Bragg bantamweight Anthony DeJesus 21 seconds into the second round on a RSC.

In the second championship bout between the two posts, Bragg's Runnell Doll defeated Hood's William Jenkins. Doll is ranked number two in the Amateur Boxing Federation's featherweight division.

Hood's Rodney Garnett captured his team's third title when he won the lightweight division (132 pounds) by RSC over Bernis McGill of Fort Polk, La. Garnett stopped McGill at the 2:51 mark of the first round.

Welterweight Alton Rice picked up the next Fort Hood win with a decision over Troy Browning of Fort Campbell, Ky.

Gregory Lonon, the older brother of 112-pound champion Brian, added to the family and post titles by defeating Fort Carson's Jeffrey Plunkett in the light middleweight division.

The overall team championship had already been decided by the time Fort Hood heavyweight Karl Rivers entered the ring, but that didn't take anything away from his performance. Rivers had been beaten by three-time FORSCOM champion Emilio Amatine of Fort Ord, Calif., in last year's title bout, but came back in 1988 to defeat Fort Bragg's Pasquale Laino by RSC at 1:19 in the third round.

The super heavyweight title bout pitted Robert Salters of Fort Bragg against Fort Campbell's Daniel Fikes. Easily the two most imposing figures at the championships, Fikes and Salters had advanced to the finals with impressive wins. But Salters, the top-ranked amateur in his class, stopped Fikes in the second round to claim the title.

Overall, Fort Campbell finished second, while Bragg wound up in third.

Girl Scouts will conduct annual Cookie Run

USAIC Public Affairs Office

The Concharty Council of Girl Scouts is sponsoring the ninth annual Cookie Run Jan. 21 at Weracoba (Lake Bottom) Park in Columbus.

The event features a 1.5-mile speed walk, a 5-mile run (including a wheelchair division), a 1.5-mile run, a 100-yard tot trot and a 1.5-mile race for handicapped persons.

Military as well as corporate and business teams are invited to participate. Individual runners are expected from all over Georgia and Alabama, as well as other regions of the Southeast. All participants will receive a gym bag.

Since it began, the highlight of the run has been the participation of Fort Benning units dressed in their unit athletic attire, according to Sally B. Lasseter, executive director.

"Not only does it show the excellent condition of our military, it provides encouragement to our youth who are often making their first effort at a competitive athletic activity," Lasseter said.

"First place male and female runners in the 1.5- and 5-mile run[illegible]ve Speakeasy Pub pig[illegible] trophies and cookie samples. Second and third place ove[illegible]d female runners will receive trophies. Overall winners are not eligible for age group awards.

Early bird registration before Jan. 9 is $5 for ages 17 and under and $7 for all others. Preregistration by Jan. 20 is $6 for participants under 17 and $8 for anyone over 18 years of age.

Registration the day of the race is $8 (under 17 years of age) and $10 (adults 18 and up). It will be conducted at St. Elmo School (across from the park).

Units with 20 or more runners will receive a discount of $6 per person if registered by Jan. 16, and gym bags for each runner will be delivered to the unit.

Unit members who compete for the run trophies or age-level medals may register as individuals (at the group rate if the unit participates).

EVENTS

Planetarium plans annual Astronomy Day Jan. 14

Patterson Planetarium and Callaway Gardens present the fourth annual Astronomy Day, Saturday, Jan. 14, at Callaway Gardens. The program begins with registration at 12 noon.

Astronomy Day will include a visit by NASA astronaut Sonny Carter, a mission specialist for future space shuttle flights. Exhibits, telescope information and outside observations highlight the day-long event.

If the weather permits, participants will be able to take a look at the moons of Jupiter and Mars, the Orion nebula, the Andromeda galaxy and the planet Mercury.

Space is limited, and preregistration is required. The cost is $7 for adults and $3 for students.

To register or for more information, call the Patterson Planetarium at 568-1730.

Audubon society presents wildlife program

The Columbus Audubon Society will present a program Sunday, Jan. 8 about the Nature Conservancy of Georgia. The program begins at 2:30 p.m. and will be presented at United Cities Gas Company, 1421 4th Avenue in Columbus.

Tavia McCuean will present the slide program, which will also include information about the Wood Stork Rookery.

Families are invited to the free program.

For more information, contact Carol Rutland Groce at 568-1730.

Columbus College will present faculty concert

Columbus College's Schwob Department of Music will present its third concert in the 1988-89 Faculty Concert Series Jan. 8 at 3 p.m. in the Davidson Student Center recital hall.

Columbus College flutist Natalie Kruger will be joined by two visiting artists in a program of music for flute, piano and winds.

All the selections on the program have some association with France.

The program will open with the familiar "Minuet and Dance of the Blessed Spirits" from the opera "Orfeo ed Euridice" by Christoph Willibald Gluck.

The "Sonata for Flute and Piano" by Francis Poulenc is next on the program. Dedicated to the memory of the American patroness of music, Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge, this composition was introduced at the 1957 Strasbourg Festival by flutist Jean-Pierre Rampal.

The first half of the concert will close with "Fantaisie" by Jules Demersseman. He was one of several great flute virtuosos who wrote prolifically during the Romantic era. His compositions for the flute encompassed a multitude of virtuosic airs, varies, and solos de concert, all combining elegance, originality and brilliance.

From the great storehouse of music written for her instrument during the Baroque era, Kruger has chosen a suite of five pieces for unaccompanied flute by Joseph Bodin De Boismortier. This composer lived and worked most of his life in Paris where he became a wealthy man through the sale of music to the amateur market. His career was in sharp contradiction to his unfortunate surname.

Tickets for this concert are $5 and are available at the door or in advance at the music office in the College's Fine Arts Hall.

For more information or to request tickets, call 568-2049.
