King Week '89 honors slain civil rights leader

By Hayward McBride
USAIC Equal Opportunity Office

"Living the Dream: Let Freedom Ring," is the theme of this year's Martin Luther King Jr. birthday celebration.

Jan. 16 will mark the fourth observance of a federal holiday honoring the slain civil rights leader. The Martin Luther King Jr. Federal Holiday Commission has designated Monday through Saturday as "King Week '89."

Fort Benning officials have scheduled a commemorative ceremony for Jan. 13, 10 to 11:15 a.m. in Marshall Auditorium, building 4. Retired Lt. Gen. Julius W. Becton Jr., director of the Federal Emergency Management Agency is the scheduled guest speaker.

Attendees are asked to be seated 10 minutes prior to the start of the service. As director of FEMA, Becton is responsible for directing the goals of some 130 emergency programs and activities and 2,400 staff members nationwide.

The agency is the central point of contact within the federal government for emergency planning, mitigation, response and recovery to any natural or man-made disaster that might occur. In that role, FEMA is responsible for coordinating a wide variety of federal response that might be necessary to alleviate the effects of an emergency.

On Aug. 31, 1983, Becton retired from active military service at the rank of lieutenant general. His last position was at Fort Monroe, Va., where he was both the Deputy Commanding General (Training) of the Army Training and Doctrine Command and the Army Inspector of Training.

He was the Commanding General of the legendary 1st Cavalry Division at Fort Hood, Texas from February 1975 to November 1976. He also commanded the VII Corps headquartered at Stuttgart, West Germany from October 1978 to June 1981.

From December 1943 until August 1983, Becton moved through the Army ranks from private to lieutenant general. His decorations include seven awards for valor and 13 awards for meritorious service.

Iron Mike returns from TDY

By Shawn Bryson
Bayonet staff writer

He's back. After 59 days in Jacksonville, Fla., "Iron Mike," has returned to his perch in front of Building 4.

The statue, officially "The Infantryman," arrived home to Fort Benning Dec. 30 just in time for New Year's, compliments of the Atlantic Monument Company of Jacksonville.

"Mike" was sent to Florida Nov. 2 to have 28 years of wear and tear removed. The restoration was the statue's first since its creation in 1960.

According to the inspection report from AMC in October, the statue was suffering primarily from oxidation of the supporting structure, which caused the separation of the outer fiberglass shell from the framework. The report stated that the statue was being destroyed by the oxidation and needed immediate restoration.

According to AMC officials, the fiberglass shell was removed and the armature cleaned and coated with an oxidation preventative to which the fiberglass resin could bond.

Among the items on the statue that needed rebuilding were the soles of each boot, the helmet and sling, the right hand and the bayonet and receiver of the rifle.

Terry Phillips, from the Atlantic Monument Company of Jacksonville, Fla., prepares to hook the Infantryman statue to a crane to lift it to its perch in front of Building 4.

Items that required cleaning and repairs included the bayonet scabbard, cartridge belt, neck and head.

Although efforts failed to get "Mike" home before Christmas, he did make it home in time for the New Year, his 29th here.

Special events set for King Week

By Hayward McBride
USAIC Equal Opportunity Office

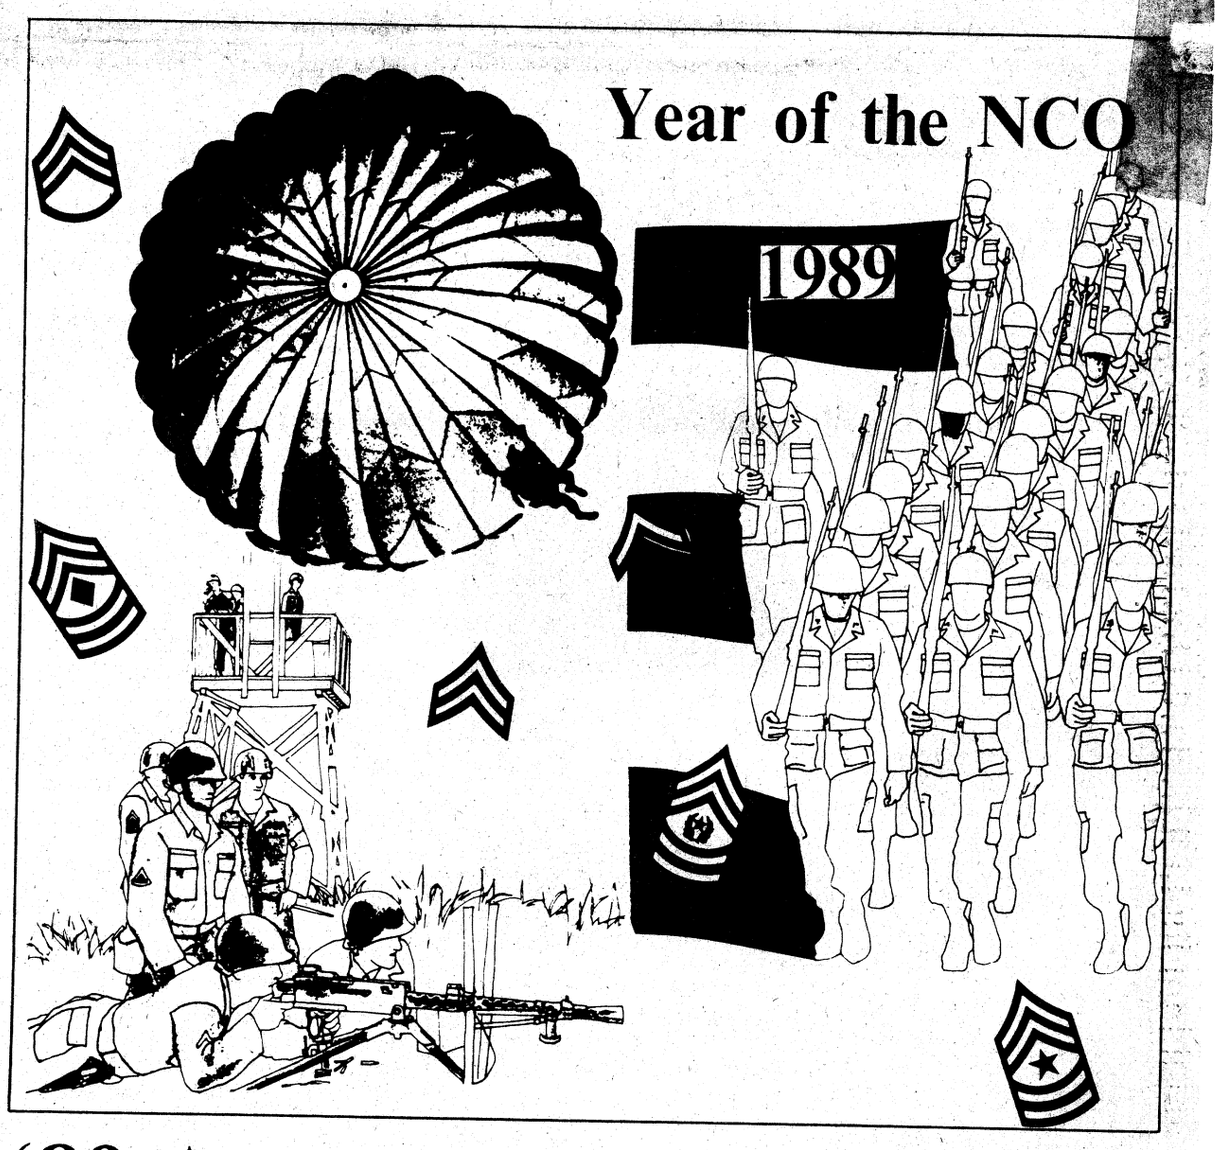
Monday through Saturday has been declared "King Week '89." Secretary of Defense, Frank C. Carlucci III, has stated that during "King Week '89" the Department of Defense has the opportunity to demonstrate our commitment to our nation's tradition of respect for individual human rights and dignity.

The Secretary of Defense has asked all DoD components to join him in commemorating Dr. King's birthday with programs, activities and special observances at DoD installations worldwide. In support of this, the United States Army Infantry Center has planned the following activities for the following dates and times:

Monday-Saturday - Fort Benning's Youth Activity Center will have a static display in which films relating to Martin Luther King will be shown. The public is invited.

Jan. 13 - At 10 a.m. there will be a commemorative service for Dr. Martin Luther King at Marshall Auditorium, Building 4,. The guest speaker for the service is retired Lt. Gen. Julius W. Becton Jr. The public is invited.

Jan. 13 - 11:30 p.m. Brig. Gen. William Hartzog is sponsoring a luncheon at the Fort Benning Officer's Club. Only selected guests are invited.



Jan. 13 - 3:30 p.m. Martin Army Community Hospital is sponsoring a commemorative service in the dining facility of the hospital. Spec. Lawrence George will perform the "I Have A Dream" speech.

Jan. 14-20 - USAIC EEO is sponsoring a static display in Building 4 to support the birthday of Martin Luther King Jr.

Jan. 16 - AAFES is sponsoring an "Entertainment Hour" in support of "King Week '89" in the Main Exchange Lobby at 2 p.m. The program will include Joann Simms and Celeste Lee performing solos and Spec. Lawrence George performing the "I Have A Dream" speech. The public is invited.

Fort Benning Schools has scheduled classroom activities including choral readings and recitals from selections such as the "I Have A Dream" speech, music and songs of social issues of the 60s and various arts activities relative to Martin Luther King's accomplishments.

'89 Army theme lauds NCOs

Army News Service

1989 will be the "Year of the NCO."

Secretary of the Army John O. Marsh Jr., Army Chief of Staff Gen. Carl E. Vuono, and Sergeant Major of the Army Julius W. Gates announced the successor to the "Year of Training" in a Dec. 29 joint proclamation lauding the accomplishments of NCOs and outlining the role of today's enlisted leadership.

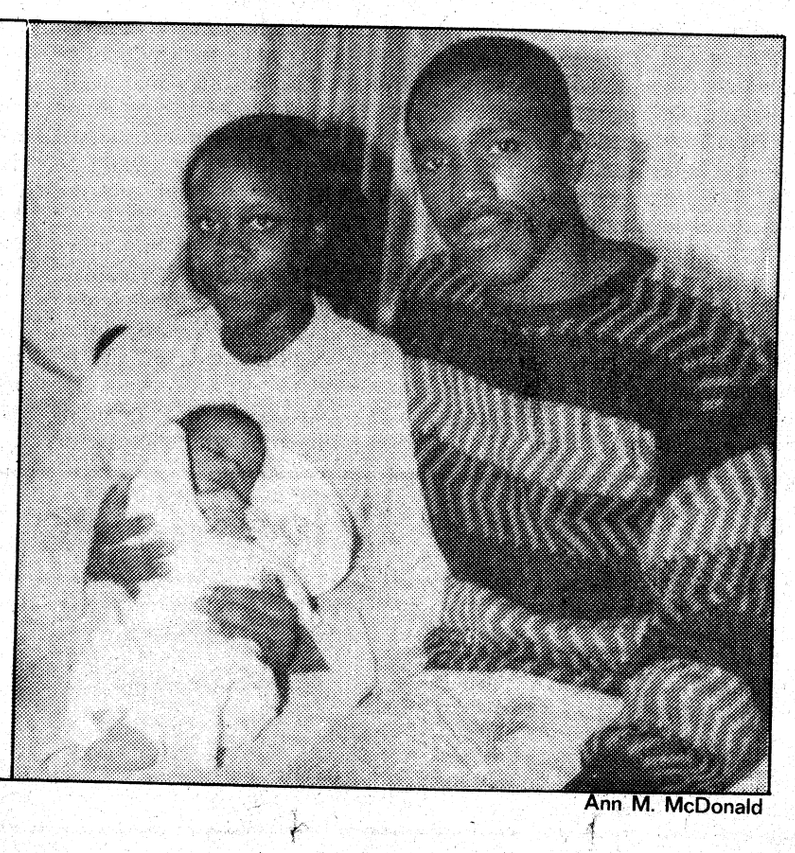
The NCO is the Army theme for 1989.

"Soldiers who wear NCO chevrons on their sleeves represent a unique Army strength upon which this year's theme will focus. The previous yearly themes of Spirit of Victory, Physical Fitness, Excellence, Families, Leadership, Values, The Constitution and Training all have a special bearing on NCOs, who have key responsibilities in accomplishing the Army's missions.

"Throughout the history of our Army, the NCO has played an indispensable role in the warfighting readiness of our force. Baron Von Steuben, in writing our first Army manual, known as the "Blue Book," acknowledged the importance of selecting the right soldiers as NCOs: "The order and discipline of a regiment depends so much upon their behavior, that too much care cannot be taken in preferring none to that trust but those who by their merit and good conduct are entitled to it." Today, we continue to expect of our NCOs the highest professional standards and a diversity of knowledge in order to lead their soldiers in ensuring our Army is trained and ready. Tomorrow we shall expect no less.



"NCOs provide day-to-day leadership to our soldiers. They ensure individual soldiers attain and maintain the required standards of proficiency and link soldier performance to unit missions. It is the NCO who must be certain of the soldier's ability to succeed in combat. With their officers, NCOs are responsible for the planning, execution and assessment of training.

"The NCO is both a leader and a role model. The process which develops NCOs as leaders has three components: institutional schooling at every level according to the Noncommissioned Officer Education System, operational experience in their respective military occupational specialties and self-development, which relies on the initiative an NCO takes to improve through

Holiday goodies show up on waist

Snively's that is

By Clyde Snively
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Bowl season is at last over.

Only for me bowl season was bowls of nuts, bowls of chips and dips, bowls of egg nog and punch and bowls of candy.

Even before the bowl season, Airborne Annie had been poking fun at my porcine figure.

"Clyde, you're getting fat," she'd call out cheerily for all to hear while she punched a red, manicured nail into my stomach as I sat at my computer terminal trying to type in a story about junk food in Army dining facilities while eating my mid-morning snack of cinnamon rolls and left over brownies, washed down by a quart of chocolate milk.

I'll admit, I'm not the trimmest soldier in the United States Army. But I'm not fat. My legs are just too short for the weight I carry.

When I go to the company for weigh-ins, I make sure I have nothing in the pockets, I don't wear underwear or socks, cut the nonessential buttons from my pockets and wear BDUs that are thread bare.

When the C.O. stops by for one of his "friendly" visits, I take a deep breath, suck in my gut and stop breathing until he leaves the area.

"Why is Snively turning purple?" I heard him asking my boss one day before I passed out. The C.O. tends to over stay his welcome.

If I've got a weight problem, it's the Army's fault. No, I'm not blaming them for making it tough on short guys. It's the food.

Before I came into the Army, I was your typical, scrawny teenager with zits. When I finished basic, I still had zits, but was no longer scrawny.

I gained 15 pounds out of basic, another 15 out of AIT. Even my long-legged drill sergeant couldn't run the calories off me. My system just didn't know how to adjust to three square meals a day and a good night's sleep.

I found out what the slogan meant when they said the Army builds men. Or is that the Marines? Whatever. I got built and haven't stopped since.

Just breathing the fumes from an Army chow line puts the weight on me. And now that we have the greasy food line, it's even worse.

Sure I know all about the changes the Army food service is going through — cutting down on cholesterol producing foods, providing salad bars. But they still serve delicious desserts. They still serve mashed potatoes and gravy.

And when I come in for lunch after a cold morning on the range, I want hot, greasy stuff that will stick to my ribs, will let my stomach know it has visitors, the more the better.

The colonel, who's also noted my portliness, said my New Year's resolution should be to lose a pound a day for the rest of my life. He estimates my life will end by June 13. Nice guy.

Well, I guess I will try to cut down on my caloric intake, get more exercise, like walk up the stairs rather than take the elevator and cut out between meal snacks. If all this fails to do any good, I have one last resort — buy lifts for my combat boots. Do they still make girdles?

Spigelmire thanks soldiers for a job well done

There have been three significant groups of visitors here in the past week — the National War College, the Chief of Staff of the Army of Ecuador and the Chief of Defense Forces of Colombia.

I have been involved personally in each of these visits and would like to thank everyone who contributed to their success. Thanks to the soldiers who made extra police calls, the sergeants major who supervised troop movements, the civilians who coordinated activities, the officer planners and briefers throughout the chain of command and all others who were part of the "team."

Fort Benning has always been known as a great post by members of the Army, but what a great feeling it is when civilian personnel make the same observation. Our friends from South America were equally effusive with their praise, not only for the quality of briefings and the high standards set at USARSA, but also the great contribution that everyone in both the military and civilian communities is making to support and cooperate with the School of the Americas. This is indeed in our national interest.

The visits mentioned above clearly demonstrated the sense of sharing and caring that exists at Fort Benning. Once again my most sincere thanks to everyone who participated in this "team effort" and my warmest greetings with continued success in the New Year. God bless you all!

Officials say too much cholesterol blocks blood flow

By Karen E. Bass
and Cheryl Thieschafer
MACH

One out of every four Americans has a high blood cholesterol level.

If too much cholesterol is in your body, it will stick to the inside of your arteries and block the blood flow. This blockage can lead to a heart attack, which 1.5 million Americans suffer from each year.

These facts are frightening, and that's why a government panel of experts was formed to set new and more specific guidelines for the public on blood cholesterol levels.

The panel aimed its guidelines at adults between the ages of 20 and 74, especially those with high risk factors for developing heart disease, such as smoking, high blood pressure or being overweight.

The panel urges everyone to have his blood cholesterol level tested regularly. Adults should aim for a desirable level of 200 milligrams or below. Levels between 200 to 239 milligrams show that adults are at borderline risk and should be concerned about lowering their cholesterol levels. And adults with levels above 240 milligrams are at a high risk and should see their doctor as soon as possible. Where can someone go to get his cholesterol level tested? Those entitled to care at Martin Army Community Hospital should get a lab slip from their doctor. The lab will take a sample of the blood, measure the cholesterol level, and send the results back to the doctor.

If your cholesterol level is high, changing your eating habits will help to lower it.

The National Heart, Lung and Blood Institute suggests that you decrease the total fat in your diet to less than 30 percent of calories, reducing your dietary intake of saturated fats to less than 10 percent of calories, and limiting your dietary intake of cholesterol to no more than 300 milligrams a day. Let's see how you can to this.

● Fats are found in both animal and vegetable products. Those that are solid at room temperature are usually saturated fats, like butter or the fat on meat. They are primarily found in foods of animal origin but are also found in a few vegetable oils. For example, coconut and palm oil are vegetable oils that contain saturated fats; they are frequently used in non-dairy creamers and whipped toppings. Saturated fats tend to raise cholesterol levels in your blood and should be avoided.

On the other hand, polyunsaturated fats tend to lower blood cholesterol levels. They are soft or liquid at room temperature and are from vegetable sources. Safflower, sunflower, corn and soybean oils contain mainly polyunsaturated fats. Use these polyunsaturated oils in place of saturated fats for cooking. Choose a tub margarine where the first ingredient listed is a liquid polyunsaturated oil.

If a vegetable oil has been "hydrogenated," it has gone through a process to make it firm, causing the oil to become more saturated.

For example, corn oil can be hydrogenated to make a solid vegetable shortening. Like saturated fats, hydrogenated fats will also raise blood cholesterol levels and should be avoided.

Cholesterol is a fat-like substance found in blood, muscle and tissue of humans and animals, such as meats, eggs and butter. It's not found in vegetable products. Naturally, foods high in cholesterol should be limited.

● As a rule, expensive cuts of meats should as T-bone steak, prime rib and filet mignon, are higher in fat and you should try to limit your intake. Organ meats, such as liver and kidney, are also very high in cholesterol. A 3.5 ounce serving of beef kidney has 770 milligrams of cholesterol.

So what kind of meats can you eat? Lean red meats, poultry without the skin, fish and shellfish are your best choices. Since shrimp is higher in cholesterol than other shellfish, it should be limited to once a week, and the portion size must be small. Avoid fried foods, since frying adds extra fat in your diet. Instead, try baking, broiling, barbecuing or boiling your meats. Also, before cooking, cut off all the visible fat.

● One egg yolk contains 280 milligrams of cholesterol, which is almost one day's limit. Eggs may be eaten, but limit the number of yolks to two or three per week. Egg whites don't contain cholesterol and may be used in place of the whole egg; so try substituting two egg whites for one egg. There are also egg substitutes that are cholesterol free and available in local grocery stores.

● Skim milk contains the same nutrients as whole and two percent milk, but has less fat. Try to avoid dairy products like cream, half and half, sour cream, cheese and ice cream, which are all high in cholesterol and fat. Better choices include skim milk, lowfat yogurt, lowfat cottage cheese and lowfat cheeses such as Farmer cheese and skim milk mozzarella.

Try substituting plain, lowfat yogurt, for sour cream in your favorite recipe or on a baked potato. And try canned, evaporated skim milk in your coffee in place of cream. For desserts, the new fruit sherbets offer a nice alternative to ice cream.

It's important to remember to decrease the total fat in your diet, reduce the dietary intake of saturated fats and limit your dietary intake of cholesterol. This diet plan can help lower your chances of developing heart disease.

E-7 promotion board brings good news

Army News Service

There is good news for staff sergeants awaiting results of the recently-adjourned E-7 promotion board, according to Army personnel officials. More than 6,000 NCOs were recommended for promotion — a selection rate near that of previous boards. Every specialty in the Army inventory had at least one soldier recommended for promotion, despite the fact that 38 MOSs were "zero objective" skills which had no projected need for E-7 promotions next year.

Personnel officials say that Congressionally directed limitations in personnel funds forced the Army to reduce the NCO corps. This move increased the number of specialties for which no promotion requirement could be projected. This meant that more and more NCOs were facing the prospect of not being selected for promotion because they're in a zero objective MOS.

This year's board was directed by Lt. Gen. Allen K. Ono, the deputy chief of staff for personnel, to find a way — if possible — to offer the top soldiers in the zero-objective skills a chance for promotion.

The board voted the files of soldiers in those skills, then searched the records of the best NCOs for a secondary or additional MOS or job performance that might qualify them for promotion in another skill.

The soldiers identified that way were then measured against the standards in the alternate MOS, and if qualified by those standards, were recommended for promotion.

The board recommended 62 soldiers from 20 of the 38 zero objective skills. Their promotions will be based upon their willingness to reclassify to the MOS in which they were recommended.

Personnel officials stress that the 62 "alternative selections" were not arbitrary. Every one came after head-to-head comparison with the best qualified soldiers in the alternate skills.

The complete promotion list is scheduled for release in February or March 1989. The soldiers recommended for promotion in an alternate MOS will be notified at that time.

Officials say that this year's unique screening procedures may carry over to future senior NCO promotion boards, but procedure decisions will be made as each board prepares to convene.

Man begins, ends 45 year career here

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

In 1941, James Mott started his first career here as a soldier and he is now ending his second career in government service right across the street from where he started 45 years ago.

Mott, a warehouse foreman, with Furnishing Management Branch, Department of Engineering and Housing, retired from the Army in 1962 with 21 years in the Army and is now retiring from civil service after 24 years.

According to Mott his career in the Army started at M Company, 24th Infantry Regiment in 1941. At that time, the unit was located in the quartels right across the street from his present office.

"That was my first assignment as a soldier," he said.

He explained that back in those days there was no basic training, and the unit to which you were assigned taught you everything you needed to know about being a soldier.

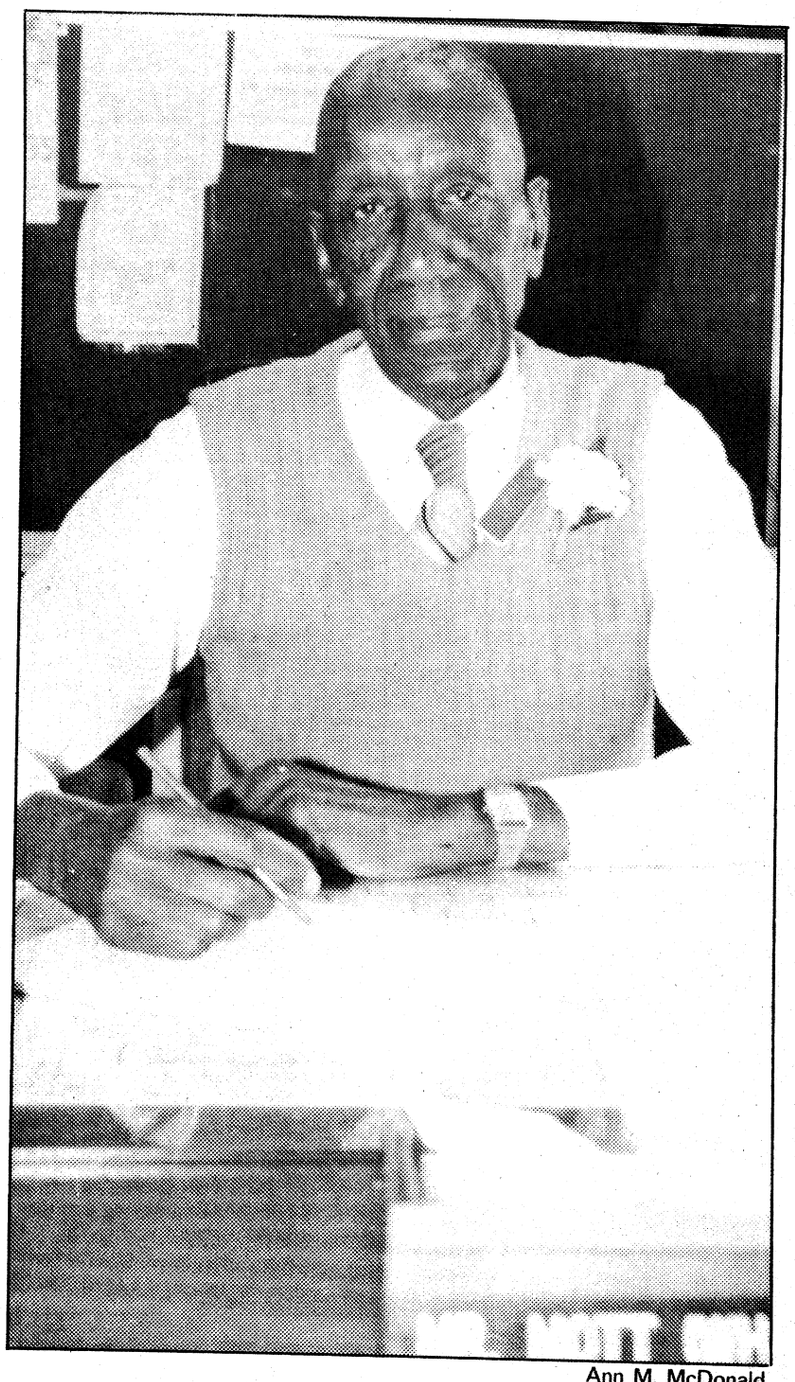
"I used to shop in the Airborne PX and go to the movie theater that is now the headquarters for the band," Mott said.

He commented that the good life didn't last long for soon they went to fight overseas during WWII.

Mott was again called to fight in the Korean War. After that he was stationed at Fort Bragg, N.C.

He retired at Bragg as a first sergeant with the 11th Airborne Division.

"Those were the days," he said. "I loved training new troops."



"Those young men would come into my company not knowing their right hand from their left hand and leave ready to fight," he said.

Mott thinks that the love of being around soldiers is what led him to embark on a second career in civil service.

"I came to Columbus because I fell in love with this city the first time I was stationed here," he said. "I decided then that I would retire from the Army here."

Mott started his career with civil service as a laborman and worked himself up to his present position.

"I didn't mind starting from the bottom again," he said, "because I still got to be around soldiers."

Ann M. McDonald

James Mott retires after 45 years of government service.

He explained that soldiers come over to the Furnishings Management Branch on a regular basis to help on details.

"When they found out that I was an old airborne trooper, they would come and ask me all kinds of questions," Mott said. "The soldiers liked my stories so much they could hardly wait to come back the next day so they could hear some more."

Mott said he has noticed some changes in soldiers over the years.

"NCOs don't get the respect they used to get," he said. "I remember a time when what an NCO said was gospel, and they were never questioned. Today it's different."

He said those changes are to be expected, and you have to accept them whether they are good or bad and that is one of the reasons he is retiring.

"It's time to move on," he said. "But, I'm not moving out, I'm going to work with the youth at the YMCA by my home."

Mott said he will also work around his house and maybe do some fishing.

Who knows he may retire from the YMCA in another 20 years.

First to register rides out 8 years

Selective Service System

LAFAYETTE, La., — Joseph Frank, a resident and city employee of Lafayette, celebrates his birthday. By turning 26, Frank unknowingly establishes a milestone for an agency of the U.S. Government and earns himself a minor place in history.

Eight years ago, Frank was the first 18-year-old man to sign up and be processed by the Selective Service System under the continuous draft registration program. From today on, however, if Congress and the president order a return to military conscription under present law, Frank is too old to be drafted. He becomes the first man since Vietnam to pass through the full, eight-year-long period of draft eligibility without being drafted.

Names and addresses of men ages 18 through 25 are kept on file by Selective Service for use in a national emergency. If Congress reinstates the draft, men most likely to be called into military service would be those who turn 20 during that calendar year. Selective Service would first conduct a birthdate lottery to determine the order of call within that age group and then, depending upon the manpower requirements of the crisis, those men whose birthdays draw low lottery numbers would be more likely to be called.

There has not been a draft since 1973 when the U.S. switched to an all-volunteer military force. In 1975, the Selective Service System was placed in "deep standby" status and the requirement for men to register was suspended. But it wasn't long before several studies and commission reports noted that a draft would be needed again if the country ever became involved in a major conflict. They predicted it would take too long to get men registered, classified, inducted and trained.

In 1980, after the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan, President Carter revitalized the Selective Service System and reinstated the registration requirement for men. On Jan. 5, 1981, registration of 18-year-old men began again and has continued. Today, using computer technology, the System can begin issuing thousands of induction orders via Western Union "Mailgrams" in three days or less, once Congress and the president give the go-ahead.

With few exceptions, federal law requires every man to register with Selective Service within 30 days of his 18th birthday. (Men have a 60-day window in which to comply with the law: from 30 days before to 30 days after turning 18).

The process is simple. Men furnish their names, addresses and telephone and Social Security numbers by completing and signing a short form at any post office. A man who is out of the country around the time of his 18th birthday can register at any U.S. embassy or consular office.

King Commission, DoD Produce Teachers Guide

By Rudi Williams
American Forces Information Svcs.

The Department of Defense and the Martin Luther King Jr. Federal Holiday Commission have jointly produced a booklet called Learn a Bration for use in schools nationwide and in Department of Defense Dependents Schools overseas.

"It's a teacher's handbook for instructing young people on the life of Martin Luther King Jr.," said Claire E. Freeman, DoD's deputy assistant secretary of defense for civilian personnel policy. "It includes his 'I Have a Dream' speech, excerpts from his well-known speeches and sermons and some of his lesser known writings that give a feel for who this man was and why we're celebrating his birthday. We gave them to the commission to distribute to schools throughout the nation."

In further explaining the booklet's contents, Allen D. Jackson, the commission's deputy executive director, said, "It's a compendium of educational material related to Dr. King for use by educators in teaching about the life and works of Martin Luther King Jr. It has something about the holiday, a bibliography of his writings and suggested teaching activities for a teach-in that's conducted in the mode of the old-fashioned sit-ins.

"In addition to teaching materials, there are education activities for children in grades K (kindergarten) through 3, the middle grades and high schools," said Jackson. "The booklet also includes poems, plays and crossword puzzles, all related to Dr. King. There is an extensive bibliography that lists films, videos and other resources.

"The idea was to pull together the material documents so teachers can't say they don't have material to conduct classes about Dr. King's life," said Jackson.

Health care is available for Fort Benning pets

Veterinary Services

Limited basic health care needs for privately owned pets are available at the Animal Disease Prevention and Control Facility located on main post.

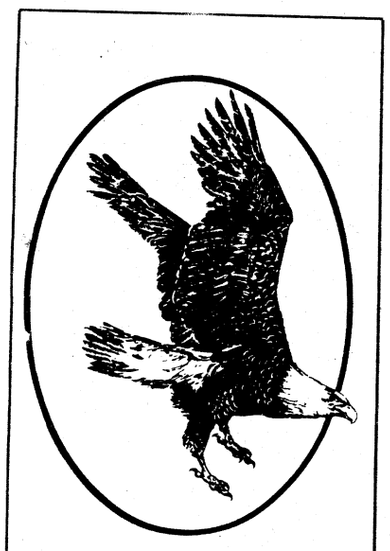
This facility is funded by both appropriated and non-appropriated funds and is authorized for the treatment and prevention of diseases that may be transmissible to humans or constitute a community health hazard.

Services provided by the facility include vaccination programs, treatment of transmissible diseases, on-post pet registration, health certificates for travel, adoption programs, impoundment/quarantine services and means to humanely euthanize and dispose of ill and unwanted pets. Diagnostic procedures are also available, which include heartworm testing, feline leukemia testing, intestinal parasite evaluation and Equine Infectious Anemia (Coggins) tests for horses quartered on post.

Normal duty hour emergencies can be treated but only to the extent of stabilization of the animal. After the animal is stabilized, it will then be referred to a civilian veterinarian for primary and follow-up care. Procedures such as surgery, radiology, heartworm treatments and hospitalization will also be referred.

All pets over three months of age will be vaccinated for rabies and revaccinated at one year of age. Other vaccination programs can be explained at the clinic. Dogs and cats over three months of age also have to be registered with Veterinary Services within two weeks of arriving at Fort Benning.

Veterinary services are provided in building 265, at the west end of 10th Mountain Division Road on main post.



The phone numbers are 545-4444/1127. Please call for appointments or if you have any problems or questions about your pets.

Alcoholic beverage labels warn consumers of hazards

By Mary A. Peterson
American Forces Information Svcs.

Within a year after becoming law, labels on alcoholic beverage containers will warn consumers of the hazards of drinking.

Contained in the Omnibus Drug Bill, the alcohol warning label will read:

"GOVERNMENT WARNING: According to the Surgeon General, women should not drink alcoholic beverages during pregnancy because of the risk of birth defects. Consumption of alcoholic beverages impairs your ability to drive a car or operate machinery, and may cause other health problems."*

The period of time between when legislation becomes law and when it's implemented "often takes 16 to 24 months; the warning label legislation will be in force in 12 months," said Christine Lubinski, Washington Representative for the National Council on Alcoholism.

"Alcohol is America's favorite drug and causes more health and safety problems than all illicit drugs combined," Lubinski said. "We are now confident that consumers will receive specific health information on alcohol containers."

Drinking during pregnancy is a leading cause of birth defects, which include low birth weight, learning impairment and mental retardation.

And according to the National Center for Statistics and Analysis, about 50 percent of all traffic fatalities occur in alcohol-related crashes.

The Defense Department's Intoxicated Driving Prevention Task Force says 21 percent of the 402 service members killed in traffic accidents in the first nine months of fiscal 1988 were intoxicated. Jerome Anderson, task force secretary, said, "It (the labeling) certainly should draw awareness to alcohol consumption."

Alcoholic beverage retail sales on Army installations in fiscal 1987 were $152 million, down from $156 million the year before. Sales on Air Force bases in fiscal 1987 were $132 million; a comparative figure for the preceding year was not available. No figures were available from the Navy or Marine Corps. Service officials say the decline in sales is directly related to the deglamorization-of-alcohol effort and continuing awareness of alcohol's effects.

Stop, drop, roll saves girl's life

TRADOC News Service

"Stop, drop and roll" is one phrase that made a difference in a 10-year-old Crocker, Mo., girl's life.

Recently, a daughter of a retired Army soldier and her 13-year-old brother were trying to burn leaves in the yard of their home in Crocker. The leaves were wet and difficult to ignite. It appears the boy attempted to boost the fire by pouring gasoline on the leaves, and in the process, spilled or splashed some gasoline on his sister. Residual fire in the leaves immediately ignited the gasoline and the little girl's clothing.

In a subsequent interview, the little girl said all she could think of when her clothing ignited was "stop, drop and roll," just as the "Sesame Street" program Fort Leonard Wood provided her school taught. Consequently, the child successfully extinguished her clothing fire and limited her injuries to third degree burns on her right arm and back.

The Fort Leonard Wood Fire Department presented its "Sesame Street" fire prevention program to the students of Crocker Elementary School. This program features the "stop, drop and roll" technique for extinguishing clothing fires. This technique is endorsed by the National Fire Protection Association (NFPA) and is advertised nationally by television personality Dick Van Dyke.

Fort Leonard Wood provides its program to off post schools and activities as a part of its community relations program in the interest of furthering fire prevention goals in the area.

CLEP tests give credit for job knowledge

American Forces Information Svcs.

In addition to the conversion of military experience to college credits, many other educational opportunities are available through the Defense Activity for Non-Traditional Education Support.

Another means of receiving college credit for knowledge gained on the job or through independent study is the College Level Examination Program, or CLEP. It is one of the more popular DANTES test programs and is widely accepted by colleges and universities.

For someone getting ready to enter college or an officer accession program, DANTES sponsors some examinations required for admission at both the undergraduate and graduate levels.

Service members can earn high school equivalency credentials by passing the General Educational Development, or GED, test or the California High School Proficiency Examination.

Another major DANTES program is the Independent Study Support System. Through this program, service members can complete correspondence courses from accredited colleges and universities. More than 6,000 courses are available.

Contact your local education services officer for information about other DANTES programs or for help planning a course of study or educational objectives.

Convert military experience to college credit at no cost

By Hal Haskins
American Forces Information Svcs.

Would you pay someone for a service that the Department of Defense provides at no charge? You wouldn't, of course, unless you didn't know the free service existed.

The potential for this to happen came to light recently, said John Gantz, deputy director of the Defense Activity for Non-Traditional Education Support.

According to him, a private organization called the United States Council on Military Education has sent articles to base newspapers throughout the United States touting a "new" educational services program. The service helps the service member—for a fee—convert military service experience into civilian college credits.

The organization, operating out of Monroe, N.C., markets a kit for $12.95, which the service member can use to outline his or her military experience. Then, for a preparation fee of $50, the organization equates the member's experiences to college credit hours according to a prescribed standard. Additional fees, ranging from $50 to $198, may be required to get the credits officially recorded at a given college.

The standard used by the organization is the Guide to the Evaluation of Educational Experiences in the Armed Services, set up in 1945 by the Department of Defense under contract with the American Council on Education. While articles sent out by the United States Council on Military Education mention the guide and the Defense Activity for Non-Traditional Education Support, officials say neither is associated with that organization.

"What this organization is charging service members for is already provided to them at no charge by DoD through DANTES," says Gantz.

Your local education services office has a copy of the guide and will help you complete the necessary paper work to have your experiences evaluated by a college or university.

Don't forget about vehicle registration

By Dennis E. Brower
Staff Judge Advocate's Office

Chattahoochee and Muscogee Counties have already begun selling 1989 license tags and re-registering vehicles. Soldiers and dependents registering their vehicles in Georgia must take special care to ensure that they do so properly and in a timely manner.

Both Muscogee and Chattahoochee counties are using the staggered system again this year. Last names beginning with A-D should register in January, E-K in February, L-R in March and S-Z in April.

If registration is not done during these periods then a late fee of $15 can be added to each registration. Registration costs $8 per vehicle. To avoid delays in getting out-of-town checks approved, cash is recommended.

If a vehicle was already registered in Muscogee or Chattahoochee counties, then the owner should receive the preprinted registration form in the mail. If the form is received in the mail, then it can be mailed to the registrar with an additional $1 for mailing fees. The new registration will then be returned in the mail. It is strongly suggested that the mail-in procedures be used. If you registered by mail in the past, but did not receive the forms in the mail, do not wait beyond the time limit. You must make an effort to find out why you have not received the forms in the mail or you may end up being late and paying the late charges. If mail-in procedures are used, ensure that the directions are followed.

If you are not a resident of Georgia, and have orders assigning you to Fort Benning,

Surveys show most adults do not get enough calcium

By Paula A. Fleming
MACH

Do you, like most adults, have a problem getting enough calcium in your diet?

Recent surveys have shown that many American adults are not taking in the recommended amount of calcium — 800 milligrams per day.

This has doctors concerned that those not receiving enough calcium may incur health problems such as gum and tooth disease and osteoporosis, a crippling bone disease.

There are calcium pills on the market that meet the recommended need for adults. But, when calcium is acquired through your diet, many other important nutrients are added as well. Some calcium pills pose a health threat because they contain chemicals that may be toxic if taken in large quantities.

Each of the four food groups contains calcium; however, the milk group is the best source of calcium in the diet. Examples of good food sources from this group are milk, cheese, yogurt and ice cream. It's close to impossible to meet the daily requirements of 800 milligrams without eating foods from the milk group.

Secondary sources of calcium come from foods belonging to the other three food groups. Canned salmon and sardines, if eaten with bones, are two foods from the meat group that supply a moderate amount of calcium. Most fruits and vegetables, such as collards, kale, broccoli and turnip greens contain calcium.

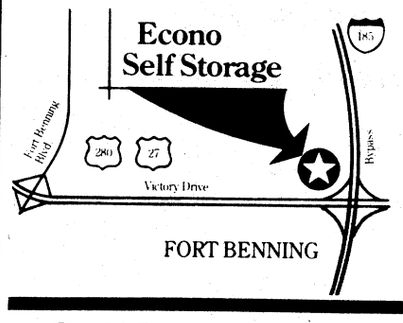
Most bread and cereals are low in calcium, unless they have been made with an added amount of milk.

If digesting milk is a problem, there are some suggestions that may help. Drink milk in smaller portions throughout the day along with solid foods. Whole and chocolate milk may be easier to tolerate than skim milk. Most aged cheeses, such as cheddar and Swiss cheese, and yogurt with active cultures are also well tolerated.

If all else fails, try the lactose-reduced milks and cheeses where the milk sugar (lactose) has already been digested. These products are available in the commissary and local supermarkets.

A variety of new products are on the market that have calcium added. Included in this category are orange juice, breakfast cereals, breads and flour. Most of these products can also be found in the commissary and local supermarkets.

The following are some helpful hints to provide more calcium for your diet:



- Add nonfat dry milk to soups, stews and casseroles.
- Add cheese to sandwiches and salads.
- Prepare canned soups with milk instead of water.
- Drink cocoa instead of coffee or tea.
- Choose calcium-rich desserts, such as puddings, ice cream or frozen yogurt.

The best reason to include calcium as part of your diet is, that with the foods consumed, the benefits of other nutrients needed to stay healthy are also present.

SPIRITUAL

Tread lightly in the new year — every step will show

By Chap. William Akridge
USAIC Chaplain's Office

"The new year lies before you,
Like a tract of new fallen snow,
Be careful how you tread it,
For every step will show.

With this picture of the New Year in our minds, let us turn our thoughts to Revelation 14:12, "Here is a call for the endurance of the saints, those who keep the commandments of God and the faith of Jesus." During the time John's Revelation was recorded, the Christians were undergoing terrific persecution. John writes the book to encourage the Christians to keep their faith through the persecution.

The persecution of Christians by the Roman Empire was started when Nero was Caesar. Paul writes about Nero in Romans 13 as a model governor. Nero went insane after pursuing the wife of one of his friends and sat on the wall playing his violin while Rome burned.

Domitian was the Emperor who followed Nero, and most of the people looked on Domitian as Nero re-incarnated. When Domitian was Emperor of the Roman empire, he made a decree. Once a year, every person had to burn incense to Domitian. However, a Christian could not burn incense and say "Kurios Kaisar" — Caesar is Lord. A Christian could only say "Kurios Jesus" — Jesus is Lord. And when a Christian said that, he knew that he would likely be tortured, burned at the stake or fed to the lions.

In the midst of the persecution and conflict, John writes the book of Revelation. Over and over again and in many different ways, John says in Jesus Christ there is victory.

It is like a great symphony. There is one theme but again and again and in many different ways, the composer comes back to dwell on the same theme. John reminds the reader that the real victory is in Jesus Christ and not in worshiping Caesar. And so John exhorts the Christians in verse 12, "Here is a call for the endurance of the saints."

In our time we need to grasp the same vision that John had. With the crime rate, the low moral standards and the power man has to annihilate himself, we need to see John's vision more plainly. In Jesus Christ there is victory.

Jesus Christ won the victory in His struggle on the cross, even unto death. We who endure the present trials will one day reign with Him.

The present age in which we are living is like the battle of New Orleans. The British were bombarding the port city with their heavy cannons. British men were sacrificing their lives on the order of their commanders in the hopes that they might win the war. But after the battle, the British received the news that the war was already over and their battle meaningless.

This is the predicament of the forces of evil today. They may or may not win their battles, but evil has already been defeated. Jesus Christ won the victory on the hill of Calvary as He bore our sins there on the cross. He overcame death by His resurrection. In Jesus Christ there is the final, unlimited, unqualified victory. And so the word of John goes out to us again in our present age, when we are tempted by evil on every side.

A former missionary was at a service at the only Christian church in an isolated village in India. He had spent time worshiping with the villagers in a hostile environment of non-Christians. As he was preparing to leave, this small group of Christians yelled, "Jesus — Victory! Jesus — Victory!

As we face the difficulties and challenges of 1989, let us remember these same words. Jesus — Victory.

Christmas cycle isn't over until Feast of Epiphany

By Debbie Galle
USAIC Chaplain's Office

As dry and yellowed Christmas trees are thrown carelessly next to trash bags on the sidewalks, we accept, although with some misgivings, that Christmas is over. Displaying a reluctance to say farewell to the holiday season and an anxiety for next year's to arrive, a recent advertisement warned, "There are only 364 days until Christmas."

In the true religious sense, however, Christmas actually has a cycle that is not completed until the Epiphany.

The feast of the Epiphany, which is actually today, will be celebrated at Catholic masses Sunday. Children returning to Catholic religious classes that day will hear about the importance of this feast, according to Phil Reilly, Director of Religious Education.

In a recent article by Rev. Ronald Modras in the "Religion Teachers Journal, "the Epiphany is one of the oldest and most important feasts of the liturgical year, in some places both a holy day and a national holiday." In the United States, it is hardly recognized as more than a church feast.

The word epiphany, sometimes theophany signifies a manifestation of divinity and sometimes also applies to events of great significance in the lives of royalty.

The Christmas cycle begins with the first Sunday of Advent and continues throughout the Advent season to the feast of the Epiphany. In the United States, that feast is always the Sunday between Jan. 2 and 8.

As the East adopted the Christmas celebration, its Epiphany feast became a solemn commemoration of Christ's baptism in the Jordan and emphasized as a baptismal feast. In the West, the emphasis was the medieval feast of the three kings, the Magi.

In the Middle Ages it was customary to bless homes with newly blessed water and with incense. The names of the Magi (Gaspar, Melchior, and Balthasar) were written with blessed chalk on or above the doors.

Among the many traditions and meanings associated with Jan. 6, are what the Roman Pontifical lists as the consecration of virgins. Because the three vows of religion are often compared to the gifts of the magi, members of some religious orders renew their vows on that day.

As the last memories of Christmas are stored carefully away in boxes and trees are discarded, the last thoughts could be of the story of the magi, which, according to Rev. Modras, "is an expression of faith in God's self-revelation to the world."

Rev. Ronald Modras is an Associate Professor of Theological Studies and codirector of the Corporate Ministry Program at St. Louis University.

Do you know the meaning of christen?

It's Interesting to Know

"Christen" is an old English word meaning to make Christian and to baptize. Since children were given their names at baptism, the word also came to signify their meaning. The names given on this occasion were called christening or Christian names.

A christening as a liturgical service includes the act of baptizing, together with the conferring of the name and all the accompanying ceremonies.

Christening was also extended to apply to the consecration and naming of church bells.

10 pounds under was just too much

By Susan Baker
On the Home Front

A weighty decision

I bought a new bathroom scale the other day.

I had my old scale for more than 15 years, ever since I landed my first job as a reporter and moved into my own apartment.

It struck me that my scale was one of the few items I had owned since the beginning of my adulthood. It had been with me through seven bathrooms, two pregnancies and countless diets. Through thick and thin and through all my ups and downs.

I had resisted buying a new scale even though the old one had seen better days. My old scale was inexpensive and not terribly accurate. It always registered about five pounds lower than the one at the doctor's office, but that was one of its endearing qualities.

Some days, I would remind myself that I actually weighed five pounds more than I thought I did. Other days, I conveniently forgot that minor detail.

A couple of years ago, we moved to our new home, It had what I considered to be a terrific bathroom off the master bedroom. Frankly, the old black scale looked a little out of place there. Still, I saw little justification for buying a new one until a massive breakdown in our bathroom plumbing put the scale under about an inch of water. After that, it registered closer to 10 pounds lower than the one at the doctor's office, a discrepancy even I found hard to justify.

Purchasing a new scale was not as simple as I anticipated. After 15 years, I was not prepared for the technological advances.

Many of the scales I looked at were digital. They were easy to read, but it seemed to me they would take some of the suspense out of the weighing ritual. On my old scale, the needle would zing back and forth for a while before coming to rest. And if I leaned a little to the right, the needle would sort of creep down a little to the left.

One of the scales was covered with suede. It cost $78. Others required batteries.

But the most amazing innovation to me was a scale that was voice-activated. I assume that means a voice would come on and read your weight.

Aloud.

Are they kidding? Who would want a scale like that?

My early morning rituals are difficult enough without a stranger's voice in my bathroom shouting numbers — probably unfriendly numbers — at me.

And what if someone just happened to be passing by outside the bathroom door? I can just hear the snickers.

Which is why I opted for a brand new $9.95 scale. It doesn't have a history yet, like my old one, but at least it has a needle. And I'm sure it is accurate to within, say, five pounds.

By using the following procedure, soldiers on the Family Housing Waiting List can use this chart to estimate when they can expect quarters:

Locate your category of housing.

Note eligibility date located on the same line as your category.

Calculate the time difference between the eligibility date listed and your eligibility date. The difference is the approximate time you still have to wait for housing.

EXAMPLE: If the latest eligibility date of the person who last received housing in your category was May 15, 1988, and your date of eligibility is Sept. 15, 1988, you can expect housing in about four months. If you do not know your eligibility date, contact the Family Housing Office at building 399, 545-3107.

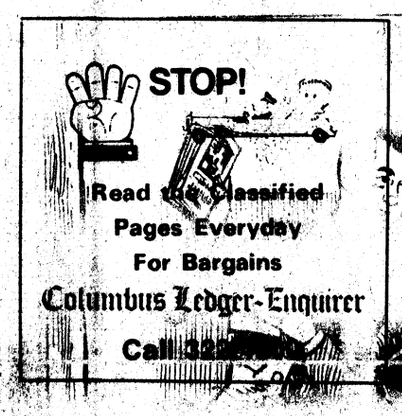
Houseplants can be poisonous; especially for young children

National Safety Council

Houseplants are one of the chief causes of children's poisonings. Although few plants are deadly, many can cause health problems ranging from skin irritations to nausea and swelling of the mouth and throat. Protect your child from plant-related poisonings with these suggestions from the National Safety Council:

- Post the number of your local poison control center next to each telephone. Keep a bottle of syrup of ipecac handy in case your child ingests a plant, but don't administer it unless the poison control center or doctor has advised it.
- Learn the scientific names of all your plants. Poison control centers have serious problems when parents who call don't know what plants their children have eaten. Most plants come with plastic name labels — don't throw them away.
- Hang your plants or put them on high shelves to keep them out of the reach of children. Don't put a plant in a child's room.

VA Qs & As



Veterans Administration

Q: My husband has been rated 100 percent for a service-connected disability and has been receiving compensation for 15 years. If he dies from other than service-connected causes, will I be entitled to Disability Indemnity Compensation (DIC)?

A: Yes. The widow of a veteran in receipt of 100-percent compensation for service-connected disabilities for 10 or more years immediately prior to death, is entitled to receive DIC benefits, regardless of the cause of death, provided that they were married two or more years or that a child was born of the marriage.

Q: I am a former prisoner of war, but have not been rated as service-connected disabled by the VA. Am I entitled to VA medical care?

A: Yes. A former POW who is not service-connected disabled is eligible for VA hospital and nursing home care without regard to ability to pay. You are also eligible for outpatient care on a priority basis second only to service-connected disabled veterans. While you are receiving treatment in an approved outpatient program you are eligible for needed medicine, glasses, hearing aids or prostheses. If your POW internment lasted 181 days or more, you are also eligible for all dental care.

Garcia reflects on career at School of the Americas

By Keith F. Johnson
USARSA Correspondent

Col. Miguel A. Garcia turns over command of the United States Army School of the Americas to Col. William A. DePalo, Jr. today in a change of command/retirement ceremony on the south lawn of USARSA, building 35. Garcia has served as commandant since Oct. 22, 1985. The following interview contains some of Garcia's views about the School and his accomplishments over the past three years.

USARSA PAO: How do you view your assignment as USARSA commandant?
GARCIA: "It has been a very rewarding experience because it is a unique Army job, one I view as very important. It's a great place to have your last assignment."
USARSA PAO: What accomplishments are the highlight of your term at USARSA?
GARCIA: "One of the major accomplishments during my tenure has been a total revision of the Command and General Staff course curriculum. That was a lot of work involving a lot of people. Gen. Maxwell R. Thurman, commanding general of the Training and Doctrine Command, wanted the course to be more relevant to Latin America.

"In addition to that, our Combat Operations department has been able to tailor each course to fit the needs of specific countries.

"For example, we have developed an officer candidate school and commando course for Salvadorean noncommissioned officers who have combat experience. This gives El Salvador officer candidates from its ranks of enlisted men. This breaks from the tradition of officers coming from military academies. But, it was important for El Salvador and a major accomplishment for the School.

"One of my goals has been to get all the participating countries involved in the school. We have achieved this through strong marketing, such as receiving visitors from different countries and by participating in international conferences.

"We also market the School by recognizing former graduates in events such as the recent hall of fame inductions. This shows how the School has had some impact on the careers of many Latin American professionals."
USARSA PAO: What is USARSA's role in the military?
GARCIA: We provide a place where American and Latin American students and instructors can learn from each other. We try to stress those factors that bond people.

"No where else is there an opportunity for people from different Latin American countries to come together, forget their differences and work toward a common task – how to be a better soldier."

USARSA PAO: The School plays host to many distinguished visitors throughout the year. What is your most memorable experience with a visiting VIP?
GARCIA: "One of the highlights of my three years here has been the recent visit by Gen. Manuel J. Guerrero Paz, Colombian minister of defense. We worked together when he served as USARSA commandant and deputy commandant. I have come to know him professionally and as a friend. To hear his expressions of gratitude about being a part of the School and his expressions of support for the School is very rewarding for me.

"A visit from a person like Guerrero has a big impact on Latin American students here who realize that being a part of USARSA is very desirable and may have an impact on their careers. This is one of the reasons countries send their best students."
USARSA PAO: What diplomatic contributions does USARSA make for the U. S. toward Latin American countries?
GARCIA: "The School acts as a conduit between TRADOC and important visitors interested in U. S. Army doctrine. Part of that is the interaction between students and instructors. Friendships are formed here between people who may be in positions of high responsibility for their respective countries. This is one important diplomatic contribution the School makes.

"We have the responsibility to teach and develop combat skills and to try to make some changes in the students' outlooks. We show the importance of democratic principles and values, which can make lasting changes in a country. What makes a great soldier – today and in the future – is not only his combat ability, but his ability to negotiate, compromise and understand people as well."
USARSA PAO: Has the influence of insurgency, terrorism and drug trafficking in Latin American countries affected the School's operation?
GARCIA: "The School will be doing more in the future in the war against drugs. We will have to tailor some courses to meet each country's specific needs. These revisions will deal with counter-terrorism and nation-building. As drugs, terrorism and insurgency become more of an international problem, it is important for us to support the fight."
USARSA PAO: As a continuation of this process, in what direction do you see the school heading?
GARCIA: "We need to continue teaching in Spanish and have an international faculty. This promotes international bonding and cooperation.

"Preservation of the School's history, traditions and identity is also vital to continued success.

"But, one of the problems the School faces is a diminishing fund for international military education and training. With less money going to the region for military scholarships, there is a danger of fewer students attending the School. We currently have between 1,500 and 2,000 students per year, which is where we should be."
USARSA PAO: What are your plans for the future?
GARCIA: "I have accepted a position with the State Department, which will take me back to Latin America. It is a job where I can put my experience in the region and military skills to good use helping to fight the war against drugs.

"It is a war that takes warriors to fight and I'm one of those."

The Montgomery GI Bill offers active duty soldiers a second chance to enroll

By Mary A. Peterson
American Forces Information Service

A second chance to sign up for the Montgomery GI Bill is now available until June 30 to active duty service members who entered the service between July 1, 1985, and June 30, 1988.

Legislation signed by the president in November provides this second enrollment period for some of the more than 260,000 service members who previously declined to enroll.

The education bill is named for Mississippi Rep. G. V. (Sonny) Montgomery, who lobbied for the second enrollment period and some important changes.

The bill provides educational benefits to attend school while in service. The bill's benefits must be used within 10 years after discharge.

Service members opting to participate must have their basic pay reduced by $1,200, either in a lump sum or as a payroll reduction plan. For the $1,200 investment, the government will provide up to $10,800 in educational benefits, but not more than $300 a month. The reduction in basic pay is non-refundable.

The payroll reduction differs from a payroll deduction, said a DoD education policy official. The reduction is subtracted from a service member's base pay, reducing the amount of taxable income. A deduction, on the other hand, is the amount subtracted after taxes have been taken.

Service members eligible to enroll must have had continuous active service since first entering the military between July 1, 1985, and June 30, 1988.

Eligibility requirements to receive benefits of the Montgomery GI Bill are:

- be a high school graduate or its equivalent before completing the initial period of obligated service;
- honorably serve the initial period of obligated service or have been honorably discharged.

Officers who received commissions through the ROTC Scholarship Program or the service academies are not eligible.

Also new to the Montgomery GI Bill is the death benefit provision. If the service member dies on active duty, the member's beneficiaries designed on the Servicemen's Group Life Insurance form can receive the member's enrollment fee. If the member used any of the funds, the amount used will be deducted from the enrollment fee.

Benefits of the Montgomery GI Bill will cover any Veterans Administration-accredited educational program, full time or part time, at a technical or occupational school, college or university. Benefits can also support refresher and remedial courses.

Up to $100 per month, not to exceed a $1,200 total, can be provided for tutorial assistance.

Students in cooperative training, such as a vo-tech, hands-on curriculum, can receive 80 percent of the monthly benefits for each month of the training.

Beginning June 1, the Montgomery GI Bill will allow six credit hours of course withdrawals without penalty to the 36-month benefit program, provided the first instance of withdrawal occurred after June 1.

The legislation also includes an extension for Vietnam-era service members to complete requirements for a high school diploma. "A member without a diploma or equivalency certificate is not eligible for the benefits of the Montgomery GI Bill," said Colin Hunter, an Air Force educational specialist. "The deadline has been extended to Dec. 1, , so more members can qualify."

The bill also extends the 10-year limit to veterans in a VA-approved, alcohol-related treatment program.

Furthermore, bill benefits also cover some service members who fail to complete their service obligations, the official said.

Reduced benefits are available for certain service members who are enrolled in the Montgomery GI Bill and who are released from active duty prior to the completion of their initial service obligations, the DoD official said.

More details and application forms are available from education centers and personnel offices.

Soldiers traveling unofficially may gain access to govt lodging

Army News Service

Army people traveling on personal matters are being extended special room rates by several national hotel chains — provided that the traveler reserve the room in advance through an office of Information, Ticketing and Registration.

This benefit of receiving the same room rates as those offered to official government travelers comes about from recent agreements between Army personnel officials and executives of the affected hotel chains, said Dan Yount.

Yount, who monitors the program for the Army's Office of the Deputy Chief of Staff for Personnel, added, "Those covered by this money-saving opportunity include active-component soldiers, DA civilians, reserve-component soldiers, and their family members."

To apply for the special rates, the traveler must have the reservation made at the local ITR office. Such offices are located throughout the United States and overseas, and are managed by the installation's director of personnel and community activities.

Yount reported that so far the following chains have signed up for participation in the new program:

Holiday Inns (including their Crowne Plaza properties).

Quality Inns.

Clarion Hotels and Resorts.

Days Inns.

Howard Johnson's (in selected locations).

Several independent hotels.

"In the months ahead, as the hotel industry becomes more receptive to the military travel market, we expect to see an increase in the number of participating hotels and motels," Yount said.

He added that persons desiring more information on the new program are encouraged to contact their local ITR office.

Army slows pace of promotion to E-4

Army News Service

The Army is slowing the pace of promotion to E-4 in an effort to trim an overgrown population of specialists and corporals.

Some 25 percent fewer privates first class will be eligible for early promotions under a policy change, which went into effect Jan. 1.

If recommended by their commander, soldiers are eligible for immediate promotion to E-4 after 26 months of service and six months' time in grade as a private first class. However, privates first class with 12-25 months in service and 3-5 months time in grade may be recommended for accelerated promotion with a time-in-service waiver.

According to Department of the Army personnel officials, the recent lag in NCO promotions has swelled the enlisted ranks with specialists and corporals. About 75 percent of advancements to E-4 are authorized under time-in-service waivers, they say, adding that the effect of the new policy should be an average promotion delay of one to two months.

Officials add that commanders should closely monitor the number of accelerated promotions within their units, to ensure that only the most deserving privates first class are selected for rapid advancement.

Fuel efficiency practices save money

By Becky Ray
Energy Branch

Americans are passionate about cars. Since the early days of the automobile, Americans have been obsessed with every aspect of driving. Unfortunately, until the early 1970s, too few Americans were concerned with fuel economy.

After the oil embargo and the long waits at gas pumps that resulted, Americans scrambled for smaller, more efficient cars. Manufacturers responded to the consumer's needs by making new cars and trucks smaller, lighter and more efficient.

The average estimated miles per gallon for passenger cars has risen from 13.3 in 1973 to 18.3 in 1986. Despite this improvement, the United States is using more gasoline than ever before. The number of privately owned motor vehicles has risen from 129.7 million in 1983 to 137.3 million in 1985. And the average mileage each of these vehicles was driven annually rose from 9,400 to 9,855 in the same time period.

Americans are taking advantage of lower oil prices by using more gasoline and buying more cars. Unfortunately, this trend only increases dependence on current oil supplies which, as we now know, aren't as dependable as we'd like them to be.

Besides the threat of interruptions in the oil supply is the threat of substantial gas taxes to spoil our driving fun. Increased federal and state gas taxes have been suggested at several levels to reduce oil demand and to subsidize highway improvements. Climbing oil prices may again make the estimated MPG of vehicles a determining factor in the consumer's car choice. The latest projections available from the Energy Information Administration predict gas prices climbing steadily by about 3.7 percent annually to the year 2000.

Regardless of gas prices, good fuel efficiency practices can save you money, improve your car's performance and extend the life of the engine and tires. To get the most from each gallon of gasoline and your car, consider the following recommendations:

○Avoid high-speed driving. Increased friction and wind resistance can reduce the fuel efficiency of your car by up to 25 percent.

○Properly tune your engine to improve performance and increase fuel economy by more than three percent.

○Replace fouled spark plugs to increase gas mileage by nine percent.

○Check your carburetor and choke operation to make sure they are working properly. They can affect gas mileage by two percent.

○Use your air conditioner sparingly. It can cause you car to use up to seven percent more gas.

○Keep tires inflated to the recommended pressure. Properly inflated tires have a lower rolling resistance and increase fuel economy.

○Consider car pooling with others. Sharing rides will save fuel and mileage.

○Consolidate trips and plan routes well to save gas and time. Plan errands so that several can be done in a single trip using the shortest route.

○Avoid long warm-ups. Begin driving after a 30-second idle, and drive at moderate speeds until the engine is warm. Don't allow a vehicle to idle for long periods.

○Make sure oil and filters are checked and changed regularly, and that the proper oil is used for the season. Oil thickens in cold weather, which can cause your car engine to waste energy.

○Cut down on wind resistance to increase fuel economy. High trailers, car top carriers and even open windows can increase wind resistance.

○Keep these tips in mind and make a habit of using them to effectively save gas. By keeping your car well-tuned and maintained, you can also extend the life of your car and avoid a few repair bills.

Former military service can help you apply all you can apply

Army News Service

Back in the fifties, probably most teen-agers would take for granted the axiom that a soldier's good record of military service not only can help him or her get a good start toward a career in civilian life, but it also can serve as a base for gaining higher earnings throughout that career.

Somewhere between then and now, however, the axiom's message got lost among later generations of young people of military-entry age, say Army recruiting officials.

"Recent studies indicate that America's youths do not believe military service can enhance their civilian careers," begins an article in the Dec. 9, 1988, issue of "Recruiter Journal," published by the U.S. Army Recruiting Command at Fort Sheridan, Ill. "Although they value activities that will further their careers, they do not see military service as among those activities," the article continues. "This led us to develop a new phase of the 'Be All You Can Be' campaign that will help change that belief."

Forming the Self-Sell

The resulting new series of advertisements aimed at attracting prospective new soldiers "will tell people they can be all they can be as a soldier and also as an Army veteran," says Maj. Bill Fellows, project manager of the TV/radio portion of the new ad campaign.

Fellows notes that the new ads will feature teamwork, leadership, self-motivation, decision-making skills, responsibility, determination, and other attributes sought by employers.

Says Fellows: "The ads will impart that values and experience developed during Army service are transferable to civilian jobs. The ads stress the intangible personal-growth characteristics enhanced through military service — those characteristics employers seek at all career levels."

He cites such employment statistics as the ones revealed by the Committee for Economic Development. Its 1985 study of hundreds of employers from Fortune 500 companies, mid-sized and small firms showed that employers value the attributes candidates develop in the Army, and will hire young people who are reliable and disciplined.

What kind of employer-sought traits did the committee's survey identify? According to the "Recruiter Journal" article, they consist of many that the Army instills, such as:

- Striving to do work well.
- Setting priorities.
- Working under pressure.
- Working well with others.
- Ability to deal with physical and safety demands.
- Mechanical and lab skills.
- Ability to learn.

A "Plus" in Earnings Potential

The article also cites a 1986 project at the Temple University School of Business and Management. Using data collected over 19 years by the U.S. Department of Labor, Temple researchers compared earnings of those who had served in the military with earnings of those who had not.

Their findings showed that military service does provide an economic advantage in civilian life. What's more, they showed that veterans experienced less unemployment than comparable non-veterans. And for minority-group veterans, the comparative economic benefits were even greater.

Those benefits, the researchers concluded, are derived from such aspects of military service as:

- Work attitudes like self-confidence, social maturity and acceptance of legitimate authority.
- Opportunities to develop and display leadership skills.
- Access to education-funding.
- The simple fact that one's resume includes reference to Army experience.

Besides those aspects of transferable development, three other "soldierly" attributes rated highly by employers surfaced in the survey conducted by the Committee for Economic Development. The employers considered these as "really key" or "vital":

- Displaying pride in and enthusiasm for doing work well.
- Being punctual and dependable in getting to work.
- Working cooperatively with other people.

Transferability of Job Skills

The article goes on to say that besides the transferability of Army-acquired positive behavioral and attitudinal traits, veterans find that their job skills have little trouble being transferred to an employer's needs.

In surveys conducted in 1984, researchers at Ohio State University found that 50 percent of the persons recently separated from service had transferred the Army-acquired occupational skills to their civilian employment. "This compares favorably," the article says, "to a 48-percent rate of transfer by graduates of business schools and vo-tech colleges."

Of course, the degree of transferability varies by occupational specialty the combat specialties, for example, reflect the lowest rate of transfer.

Army recruiters can take heart with these studies' findings: students desiring Army skills-training as a stepping stone to success in a civilian career won't be disappointed.

Aimed at those students as well as at their educators and other influencers, the new TV/radio/print ads are scheduled to start appearing within the next several weeks, USAREC officials say.

Cold weather injuries can sometimes damage as seriously as a burn

TRADOC News Service

Although cold weather can damage as seriously as a burn, it may be much more difficult to recognize when the damage is being done.

Usually, the initial damage from cold weather is not painful. There may be a stinging, tingling or aching sensation followed by numbness. In fact, when painful fingers, ears or toes stop hurting, they may well be frostbitten.

At later stages of cold weather injury, the skin may look red and then become pale or waxy white. The affected part may feel like "a block of wood." If tissue has frozen, it looks "dead white," and is hard or even brittle, with complete lack of feeling or movement.

Cold injuries are of two types — freezing and non-freezing.

The actual freezing of tissue is called "frostbite." When tissue — skin, muscle or even nerve — freezes, the water between and within the cells changes into crystals of ice. These crystals draw water out of the cells, causing the injury. Much of the damage affects the small blood vessels that bring oxygen and nutrition to the tissues. Frostbite ranges in severity from first degree, the least serious, to fourth degree.

Trench foot and hypothermia are non-freezing cold injuries.

Trench foot usually results from exposure of the feet to wet socks and boots in temperatures between 32 and 50 degrees Fahrenheit.

Hypothermia is an abnormally low body temperature. It is not always associated with low temperatures, but is often associated with becoming wet. It can be fatal even in temperatures of 50 or 60 degrees Fahrenheit. People who have been thrust suddenly into cold water sometimes die of drowning or shock, even when the temperature is well above freezing.

The human body generates heat which, if retained, can protect it from cold injury. The loss of body heat, and the kind and degree of injury that results, depend on several factors:

- The degree of cold to which the body part is exposed.
- How long it is exposed.
- Other environmental factors: humidity, precipitation, and wind.
- Insulation provided by clothing and footwear.
- Activity (too much or too little).
- Fatigue and influence of alcohol, drugs or medication.

Frostbite requires temperatures below freezing. The lower the temperature, the faster the injury will occur. If there is wind as well as low temperature, exposed skin can freeze in a few seconds. Trench foot takes longer. At the upper range of temperature, it may take as long as 12 hours of exposure to cause injury.

One can apply first aid to light frostbite (freezing of the skin only), but should never attempt to treat deep frostbite.

Here's what to do:

- Seek medical attention as soon as possible.
- If cheeks are lightly frostbitten, cover them with warm hands or clothing until sensation returns.
- If fingers are lightly frostbit, place them beneath clothing under armpits or on the stomach.
- Do not attempt to thaw severely frozen areas.
- Do not massage or bend the injured area; do not rub it with snow; do not open blisters.
- Remove all constricting items of clothing such as boots, socks or gloves from the injured area.
- Protect the injured area from further injury with blankets or clothing that is not constricting.
- If the feet or legs are injured, treat the individual as if he were a litter patient with the injured part level or slightly elevated.
- Drink hot liquids, if possible, and refrain from smoking, drinking alcohol, or applying medications or salves.

Preventing cold injuries can be easy. Specific preventive measures are directed toward conserving total body heat and avoiding unnecessary prolonged exposure to cold, moisture, and activities favoring cold injury.

Familiarize yourself with simple meteorological data such as humidity, temperature, wind and ground surface conditions which influence the risk of cold injury.

Observe others for symptoms of cold injury. If sudden blanching of the skin is noted promptly, immediate care will usually prevent the development of a more serious cold injury.

Wear adequate clothing and wear it right. Several layers of medium-weight clothing provide more insulation than one piece of heavy clothing. The layers trap air between them, adding to the insulation's effectiveness. Wear clothing loosely so as not to restrict blood circulation.

Protect the head, face, nose and ears with adequate clothing.

Wear boots loose enough to permit layers of air to provide good insulation and good circulation to the feet. Change socks as soon as possible when they become wet.

Do not touch metal, snow, or other cold objects with bare hands. Touching metal in extreme cold can give a "burn" as bad as if you had placed your hand on a hot stove.

Be sure you understand wind chill. If the temperature is -20 degrees Fahrenheit and there is a wind of 20 knots, the equivalent chill temperature is -75 degrees. Under these conditions, exposed flesh can freeze within half a minute.

Players must be active duty military, a family member or DA civilian. Those interested in playing in the intramural league should also visit the Sports Branch.

For more information, call the Sports office at 545-5777 or 545-4178.

NCO wins gold in world power lifting meet

Army News Service

An Army NCO lifted more than a ton – including a gold medal – to lead a U.S. squad to victory at the World Power Lifting championship in Perth, Australia.

Staff Sgt. O.D. Wilson of Fort Bragg, N.C., raised a combined weight of 1,102 kilograms (2,231.46 pounds) to win the super heavyweight division of the recent competition.

The U.S. power lifting team, coached by Army Maj. Bruce Takala of the Los Alamos National Laboratory and Marine Staff Sgt. Abe Roman, easily outdistanced second-place Finland, 72-48, at the meet. Twenty countries competed, with Great Britain placing third and Sweden fourth.

Wilson raised 422.5 kilograms (931.6 pounds) in the squat, 217.5 kilograms (479.59 pounds) on the bench press, and 372.5 kilograms (821.36 pounds) in the deadlift to top all super heavyweights. The division is for the plus-275-pound range.

Four other armed forces athletes placed in the competition, with Air Force Staff Sgt. Gene Bell of Homestead Air Force Base, Fla., winning his third world championship, a gold in the 198-pound division. Marine Staff Sgt. Ausby Alexander of Camp Pendleton, Calif., added a silver medal in the 165-pound division, and Air Force SrA. David Pattaway of Benwaters, England, took second in the 123-pound division. A fifth military lifter, Marine Staff Sgt. J.D. Carr of El Toro, Calif., placed sixth in the 132-pound division.

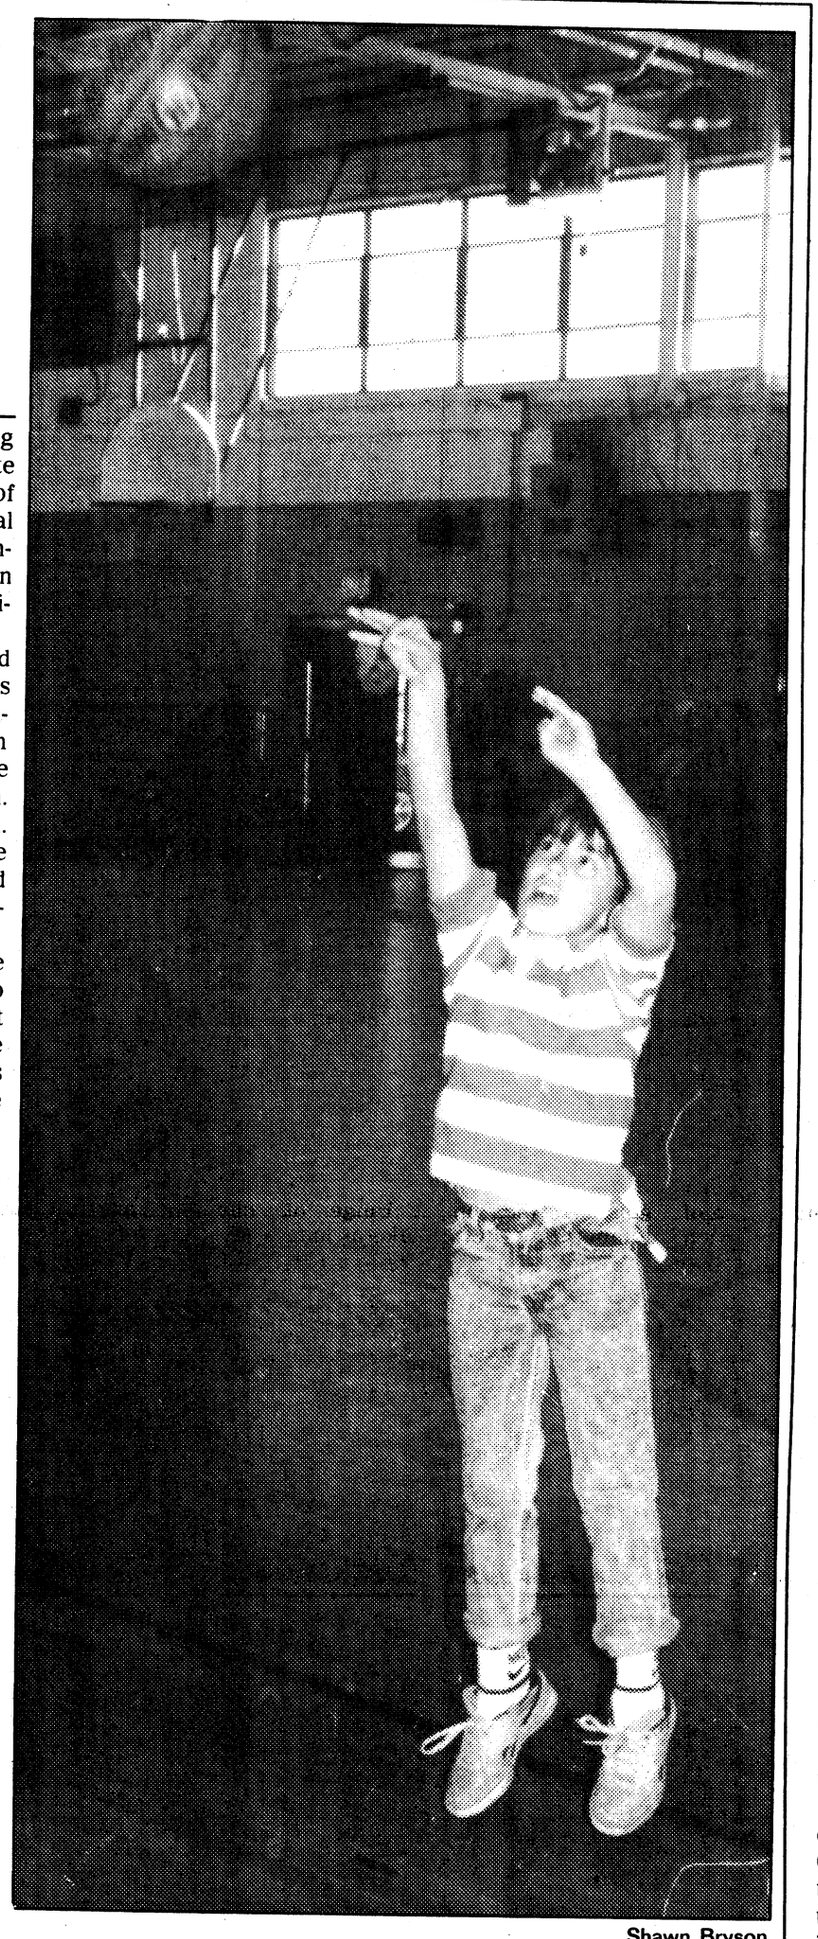
FB youths compete in free throw contest

By Shawn Bryson
Bayonet staff writer

Twenty-four Fort Benning youths are expected to compete next weekend in the first level of the Order of Elks National "Hoop Shoot" Free Throw contest, in which about 3 million children are expected to participate nationwide.

The competition will be held Jan. 14 at the Youth Activities gym, building 1055. It will involve youths ages 8-13, each with the chance to advance to the national level of the competition.

The 24 participants in the Jan. 14 contest were winners at the school level competitions held here in November and December.



The boys and girls of the competition will be divided into three age groups and will shoot 25 free throws for score. The competitors with the best scores in each age group will advance to the local competition to held at the Southside Boys Club in Columbus, Jan. 21.

Winners at the local level will advance to the district competition at Albany State College, Jan 28 and winners of that contest will move to the state competition, which will be held Feb. 25 in Milledgeville, Ga.

The regional competition will be held March 18, at Valdosta State College in Valdosta, Ga. Winners at the regionals will then advance to the national finals to held held at Market Square Arena in Indianapolis, Ind., April 14-16.

"Hoop Shoot" is designed to provide an interesting, character-building and competitive program for boys and girls. The contest also gives the winners and their families the chance to travel at no expense to the families or schools.

The Fort Benning competition will begin at 10 a.m. and end at noon. The public is invited to attend, however, photos may not be taken while the competitors are shooting.

White School student, Danny Morris, practices "hoop shooting" to prepare for upcoming free throw contest.

Wrestling clinic features former national champ

USAIC Public Affairs Office

A wrestling clinic will be conducted Jan. 11 from 3 to 6 p.m. and Jan. 12 from 1 to 4 p.m. at the Harmony Church field house. Soldiers who would like to compete in the USAIC Wrestling Tournament Jan. 13-14 should attend.

Lou Banach, a three-time All-American wrestler from 1981-83 at the University of Iowa, will be the instructor at the clinic. Banach won the national wrestling championship in 1981 and 1983, and he is a gold medal winner in the 220-pound class at the 1984 Los Angeles wrestling championships.

A retired first lieutenant, Banach holds a bachelor of science degree from the University of Iowa and a MBA from Penn State University.

For more information, call the wrestling program coach, Sgt. Anthony Thomas, at 544-6136.

Cookie Run invites military participants

USAIC Public Affairs Office

The Concharty Council of Girl Scouts will sponsor the ninth annual Cookie Run Jan. 21 at 9 a.m. at Weracoba (Lake Bottom) Park in Columbus.

The event features a 1.5-mile speed walk, a 5-mile run (including a wheelchair division), a 1.5-mile run, a 100-yard tot trot and a 1.5-mile race for handicapped persons.

Military as well as corporate and business teams are invited to participate. All participants will receive a gym bag.

Since it began, the highlight of the run has been the participation of Fort Benning units dressed in their unit athletic attire, according to Sally B. Lasseter, executive director.

First place male and female runners in the 1.5- and 5-mile runs will receive Speakeasy Pub pizzas, trophies and cookie samples. Second and third place overall male and female runners will receive trophies.

First, second and third place male and female runners in each age group will win medals. Each first place winner also receives a box of cookies.

Early bird registration continues through Jan. 9 is $5 for ages 17 and under and $7 for all others. Pre-registration by Jan. 20 is $6 for participants under 17 and $8 for anyone over 18 years of age.

Units with 20 or more runners will receive a discount of $6 per person if registered by Jan. 16. Gym bags for each runner will be delivered to the unit. Unit members who compete for the run trophies or age-level medals may register as individuals (at the group rate if the unit participates).

For run applications or more information, contact the Girl Scouts at 327-2646.

Attention runners: NCOA sponsors 5K run at Ft. Rucker

USAAC Public Affairs Office

FORT RUCKER, AL – The first annual NCOA 5K Run and 1-Mile Fun Run will be held here Jan. 21.

The run is sponsored by the Fort Rucker Chapter of the Noncommissioned Officer Association and the Wiregrass Roadrunners. Race time is 8 a.m. C.S.T. at the Fort Rucker Physical Fitness Center.

EVENTS

Planetarium plans annual Astronomy Day Jan. 14

Patterson Planetarium and Callaway Gardens present the fourth annual Astronomy Day, Saturday, Jan. 14, at Callaway Gardens. The program begins with registration at 12 noon.

Astronomy Day will include a visit by NASA astronaut Sonny Carter, a mission specialist for future space shuttle flights. Exhibits, telescope information and outside observations highlight the day-long event.

If the weather permits, participants will be able to take a look at the moons of Jupiter and Mars, the Orion nebula, the Andromeda galaxy, and the planet Mercury.

Space is limited, and preregistration is required. The cost is $7 for adults and $3 for students.

To register or for more information, call the Patterson Planetarium at 568-1730.

Columbus College presents third faculty concert

Columbus College's Schwob Department of Music will present its third concert in the 1988-89 Faculty Concert Series Jan. 8 at 3 p.m. in the Davidson Student Center recital hall.

Columbus College flutist Natalie Kruger will be joined by two visiting artists in a program of music for flute, piano and winds.

All the selections on the program have some association with France.

The program will open with the familiar "Minuet and Dance of the Blessed Spirits" from the opera "Orfeo ed Euridice" by Christoph Willibald Gluck.

The "Sonata for Flute and Piano" by Farncis Poulenc is next on the program. Dedicated to the memory of the American patroness of music, Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge, this composition was introduced at the 1957 Strasbourg Festival by flutist Jean-Pierre Rampal.

The first half of the concert will close with "Fantaisie" by Jules Demersseman.

From the great storehouse of music written for her instrument during the Baroque era, Kruger has chosen a suite of five pieces for unaccompanied flute by Joseph Bodin De Boismortier.

The final number on the concert will be "Chanson et Danses" for seven winds by Paul Marie Theodore Vincent D'Indy, who was born in Paris into a family of the ancient nobility. D'Indy was influenced by the music of Liszt and Brahms.

"Chanson et Danses" is scored for the traditional woodwind quintet (flute, oboe, clarinet, bassoon, and French horn) with the addition of another clarinet and a bassoon to add richness to the middle and lower registers. The influence of Wagner upon the music of D'Indy is never more apparent than in the charming selection.

Tickets for the concert are $5 and are available at the door or in advance at the music office in the College's Fine Arts Hall.

For more information or to request tickets, call 568-2049.

Audubon society presents wildlife program

The Columbus Audubon Society will present a program Sunday, Jan. 8 about the Nature Conservancy of Georgia. The program begins at 2:30 p.m. and will be presented at United Cities Gas Company, 1421 4th Avenue in Columbus.

Tavia McCuean will present the slide program, which will also include information about the Wood Stork Rookery.

Families are invited to the free program.

For more information, contact Carol Rutland-Groce at 568-1730.

NEWS BRIEFS

Post observes King's birthday

Today, Fort Benning will celebrate the anniversary of the birthday of the Reverend Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. This day is set aside to commemorate not only the memory of a great American, but also to remind us of the lasting influence that Dr. King has had on American society. It is a time to reflect on the past and to rededicate ourselves to the future, to the principles for which Dr. King lived and died...a dream of dignity for all.

In recognition of Dr. King's many lasting contributions to our great country, a commemorative service will be held in Marshall Auditorium today at 10 a.m. All members of the Fort Benning and Columbus communities are encouraged to participate in this service.

Radio program honors King

Peach State Radio offers a special one-hour program honoring Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. Monday at 1 p.m. The program features excepts from King's speeches and sermons and other sounds of the Civil Rights movement. It presents both musical and nonmusical tributes to King's life.

Find tax answers on TV

Ignorance is not always bliss. Especially during tax time, when knowing your rightful deductions may lower your debt to the government.

For answers to many tax-time questions, tune into "Tax Questions and Answers" on WJSP, Georgia's Public Television network, Jan. 25, 9-11 p.m.

Taxpayers can have their questions answered by calling 522-0050 in Atlanta or toll free in Georgia at 1-800-424-1040.

Sponsored by the Georgia Society of Certified Public Accountants and the Internal Revenue Service, this two-hour live program will air statewide.

"Tax Questions & Answers" is a call-in program, which features a panel of two CPAs from the Georgia Society of CPAs, two IRS representatives and a moderator.

With continuous changes in the tax laws, taxpayers need to be updated this year on several subjects including dependents, interest expense and standard deductions.

The Georgia Society of CPAs is a non-profit professional organization serving more than 7,800 members statewide.

Social Security numbers a must

Taxpayers claiming a family member who is at least 5 years old must include that dependent's taxpayer identification number on their return. For most individuals, this number is their Social Security number.

If the family member has a Social Security number, but the taxpayer does not know what it is, the taxpayer should contact a local Social Security Administration office.

To get a Social Security number, family members must have evidence of (1) date of birth, (2) U.S. citizenship or legal alien status and (3) identity. A public, hospital or religious birth record is generally sufficient for the first two items. A school record and certain other documents can be used for proof of identity.

Operation Holiday ends

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

"Operation Exodus" is over and troops have reported back to duty, bringing an end to "Operation Holiday," the Association of the U.S. Army-sponsored program designed to entertain soldiers who weren't able to go home for Christmas.

AUSA and many businesses in the community sponsored various events to keep those soldiers entertained.

Fort Benning-Chattahoochee Valley AUSA chapter president, retired Maj. Gen. Robert Sullivan, said he thinks "Operation Holiday" is the most satisfying project AUSA does for soldiers.

"It allows troops to do things they wouldn't normally be able to do," Sullivan said. "They attend major sporting events as well as tour industrial and cultural sites in the area."

He said the most important thing about "Operation Holiday" is that it truly reflects the community's feelings about caring for soldiers. Most of the funds used for the operation are donated by AUSA corporate members.

"The program is fully supported by the city leaders of Phenix City and Columbus and their respective Chambers of Commerce," Sullivan said.

Sullivan added, that besides

GTE begins laying fiber-optic cables

By Shawn Bryson
Bayonet staff writer

On Jan. 6, GTE began laying the fiber-optic trunking lines that will upgrade the quality of telephone calls at Fort Benning, according to Logistics Support Division spokesman.

With that, Benning took its first step toward catching up with telephone technology.

It's been more than 30 years since Fort Benning's present phone system was installed, but much has changed in the way of telephone technology during those 30 years.

The project to upgrade the phone system began when GTE started laying the fiber-optic trunking lines. The lines will connect the four new switches scheduled to arrive in June, according to Robin Jones, chief of the Logistics Support Division at the Information System Command.

The multi-million dollar project involves replacing the present electro-mechanical telephone switching system with a state-of-the-art electronic switching system, Jones said.

Currently, the inside plant at ISC houses a large room full of electro-mechanical switching equipment. Most of the equipment in the room will be re-

USARSA welcomes new commander

By Keith F. Johnson
USARSA

Col. William A. DePalo Jr. became the 24th commandant of the U.S. Army School of the Americas Jan. 6.

DePalo, a former instructor with the school at Fort Gulick in Panama, said he plans to continue the work of former commandant, Col. Miguel A. Garcia, in tailoring the school's curriculum to fit the needs of each Latin American country.

"I've got a mandate from General (Maxwell R.) Thurman (commanding general of Training and Doctrine Command) to focus on low-intensity conflict," said DePalo, former commander of the 4th Psychological Operations Group at Fort Bragg, N.C.

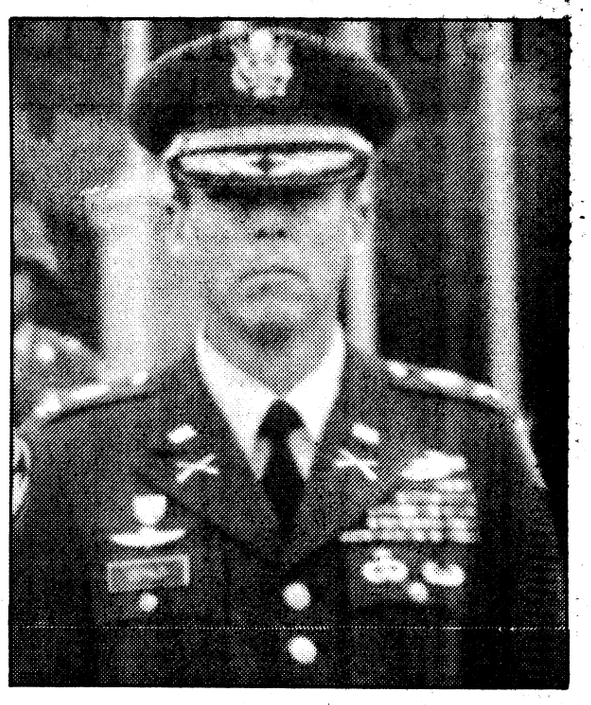
Low-intensity conflict is an act of war against a small portion of the Army or population by methods such as drug-trafficking, terrorism or subversion.

DePalo said he plans to improve the school's 45-week Command and General Staff course, which trains Latin American field grade officers for duty as commanders and general staff officers.

"We want to make sure the Command and General Staff course is equal to and as prestigious as the one at Fort Leavenworth," DePalo said.

"The course will focus more on low-intensity conflict as opposed to mechanized, heavy-intensity conflict, which only makes sense because the conflicts going on in Latin America that the officers are going to have to deal with are low-intensity in nature."

DePalo, who spent 13 months in Colombia as a foreign area specialist, cited Colombia, El Salvador, Guatemala and Peru as areas where low-intensity conflicts threaten national security.



To help combat this threat, the school, which trained over 1,400 officer's and enlisted men from 20 Latin American countries last year, will study the possibility of adding a narcotics-suppression course in the future, although the role of the U.S. Army against drug-trafficking still hasn't defined, according to DePalo.

"Congress has said it wants the Army more actively involved in narcotics suppression, but how we deal with that here in terms of a course, I don't know," said DePalo.

"Certainly we can focus on the awareness aspect and what drug-trafficking is doing to the various societies in affects."

The addition of a new course on drug-trafficking would help to enhance, what DePalo considers, the diplomatic role of USARSA,

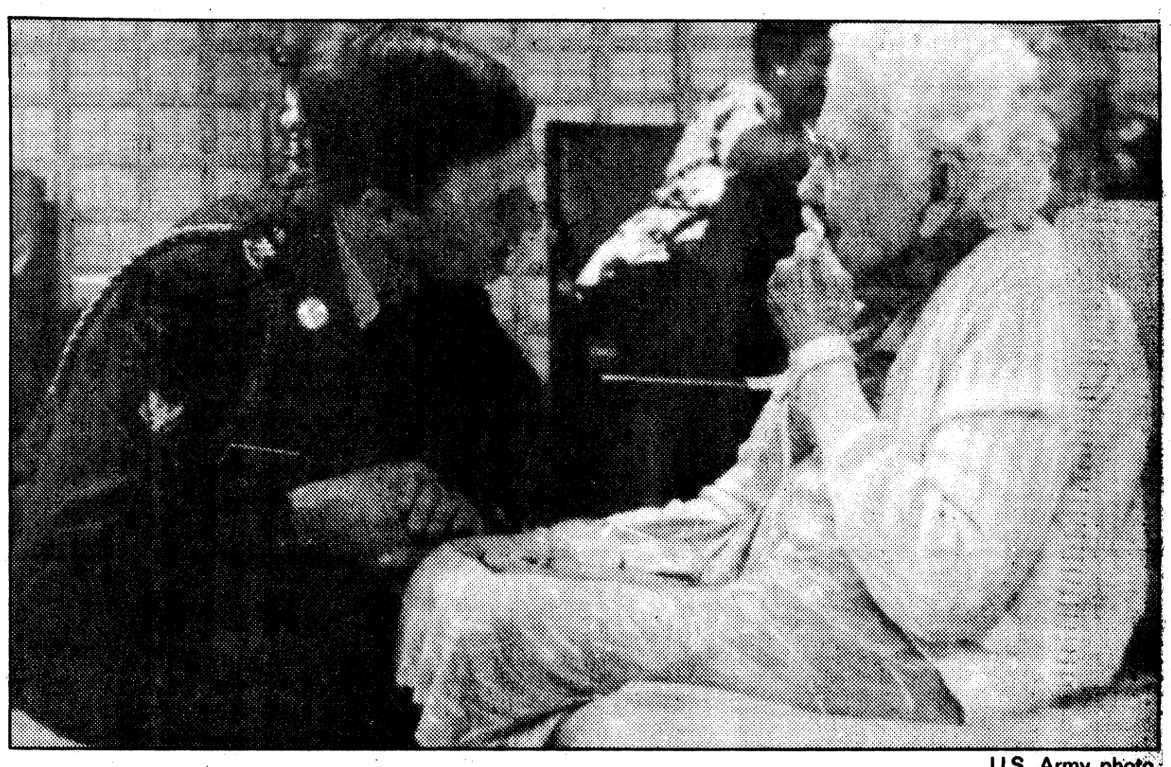
"Narcotics in very high on the list of threats to the national security of this country," DePalo said. "Everyone has to contribute if we're going to beat it."

Col. William A. DePalo Jr., the 24th commandant of the USARSA.

EOD supports inauguration

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Two members of 89th Explosive Ordnance Disposal will leave Fort Benning Sunday for a week in Washington, D.C. to help ensure a safe presidential inauguration for the president, vice president and their families.



Once in Washington, SFC Dennis L. Wilcox and SSgt. James A. Poole will join 250 other EOD experts from all branches of the service all over the world to support the Secret Service.

The Secret Service has no organic bomb searching capabilities, according to Capt. Howard Rudat, commander, 89th EOD. Therefore, it tasks EOD units from all four services nationwide for support, he said. The two EOD soldiers will return to Benning Jan. 22.

The 89th EOD has provided bomb-search support to the U.S. Secret Service since the Iowa Caucus to all presidential candidates of both parties.

Rudat said the EOD soldiers can be found

Time for tag renewal arrives

By Clyde Snively
USAIC Public Affairs Office

It's that time of year. Yep, good old income tax time — why is it everyone encourages us to file early, yet, we don't get our W2s until the end of the month? But it's also time to renew tags — those things you hang on the back (and front for you Yankees) of your cars.

Renewing a tag is a relatively easy experience if you get one of those notices in the mail. You can mail it back to the county, or you can save a dollar and spend two dollars on gas to drive in and pay in person. If you haven't registered before or if you didn't get one of those forms — they sometimes forget to mail them out — then it might be a little more difficult — you'll need to bring all sorts of paperwork.

One VERRRRRRY important piece of paper is a Soldiers' and Sailors' Civil Relief Act Affidavit. You can get it at SJA. If you live in Georgia any officer can certify it for you. If you live across the river in Alabama, you need a company commander to certify it. Or you can have the folks at SJA do it.

However you do it, do it. You'll save big bucks. Trust me. The deputy PAO who was new to this place told me the shock he had when he applied for his tags. "I took my checkbook with me, expecting to pay $30 for my two cars. The bill came to $260. 'I guess my kids don't eat this month,' I told the cashier. No sympathy. It was a bean and frank month for us," he said. He didn't know about ad valorem taxes.

Then when he got home, he caught heck from his wife. She was upset because the plates for her mini-van had two letters followed by 600 numbers. "I'll never learn this," she screamed at him."

Another public service tip I'll pass along is — don't be late. Some captain kept waiting for the people in Chattahoochee County to send him his renewal papers. They had decided not to send them out that year or something. He ended up paying a $50 fine. He was not happy.

Since lines are so long at these places and they have to bring in extra people to accommodate everyone, I wonder why they don't spread this business out over the entire year.

Why can't you renew on the month of your birth like they do here on post? It would help people remember which month they were down for. And for the lucky folks who are born after April, they'd not have a tax bill and a tag bill falling in the same time frame.

I also don't think they should charge for registering by mail. Seems to me that saves them time and trouble so they'd want to encourage the by-mail payments.

You people who live on post need to remember that most of you — those south of the Upatoi Creek — surely you know where the Upatoi is, ask any OCS candidate — need to renew in Cusseta. That includes barracks rats.

To summarize — to renew, you need a previous registration or the pre-printed form you got in the mail, proof of insurance, Soldiers' and Sailors' affidavit, and a copy of your latest LES. If the vehicle was never registered before, take a copy of your title.

Remember, when you register, depends upon the first letter of your last name: A to D, January; E to K, February; L to R, March; and the rest of you in April. Registration costs eight bucks IF you have your affidavit and don't need to pay ad valorem tax (no it won't work if you're a soldier from Georgia). My final bit of advice — if you can't register by mail, have your spouse do it for you.

Secretary of Defense, Carlucci says 'horizons have seldom been brighter'

By Tom Joyce
American Forces Information Svc.

"As we approach the start of a new decade and the beginning of a new administration, America's horizons have seldom been brighter," Secretary of Defense Frank C. Carlucci told the Society of Experimental Test Pilots recently. "Peace," he said, "seems to be breaking out all over."

The proof:

- The Soviets are committed to full withdrawal from Afghanistan by February.
- Negotiations are proceeding to have the Vietnamese withdraw from Cambodia.
- A cease-fire exists between Iran and Iraq.
- Signs indicate that U.S.-led negotiations will lead to the removal of Cubans from Angola.
- The war in the western Sahara is drawing to a close.

Carlucci also noted that country after country is rejecting state-controlled economic systems and opting for free-market economies.

"China, Africa and even the Soviet Union have recognized that Marxism is bankrupt as an economic philosophy," he said. Strong leadership and a firm commitment to U.S. allies, coupled with a steadfast resolve to rebuild U.S. military strength, have sent a clear signal to would-be adversaries that the United States will do what is necessary to protect vital national interests, Carlucci told his audience.

It is the strength and resolve that led the Soviet Union to move forward on arms control. "The lesson is clear," said Carlucci. "To bargain on arms reductions with the Soviets, you have to have the military wherewithal with which to bargain."

The commitment to rebuild military strength has not only preserved the freedom and the quality of life that America has fought so hard to attain over the last two centuries, said Carlucci, but also has resulted in the "finest quality military force we have ever had." Not only can this statement be defined in terms of equipment, said Carlucci, "but the best indicator is the quality of the people and their heightened state of readiness. When we bring that quality to bear with determination at trouble spots around the world, we can produce results favorable to our national interests."

With all that has been accomplished in the last 10 years, it would make sense for the country to stay the course, Carlucci said. But he sounded an alarm, telling his audience, "We seem to be doing just the opposite.

"At a time when our alliances are more important than ever, we are slashing vital economic and security assistance programs way out of proportion to any reasonable budget cuts," he said.

This includes the termination of 26 defense programs and the dramatic reduction of such programs to key countries like Turkey and Portugal.

Burden-sharing was another topic on Carlucci's mind. He said burden-sharing is a legitimate issue and that many U.S. allies should do more. "The only way to handle this question (the burden-sharing issue) is within the context of the alliance itself, not through punitive bilateral measures," such as those proposed during negotiations of the fiscal 1989 defense bill.

"We must always remember that we are an island nation and our alliances are essential for our survival," said Carlucci, adding "the defense of America begins well beyond our shores."

Carlucci also discussed the built-in problems associated with not having a multiyear budget plan, and the "political opportunism" inherent in the acquisition system.

"A few simple steps could go a long way toward correcting these situations," said Carlucci. His examples included a two-year defense budget; more multiyear contracting, which is a proven money saver; and fewer congressional committees that exercise jurisdiction over DoD's budget.

Carlucci concluded his remarks noting, "We must stay on the path of strong leadership and strong partnership that President Reagan has forged over the last eight years. We must not cast aside what we have all worked so hard and sacrificed so much to build. America must remain strong militarily to resist the forces of aggression wherever they may appear. The future of our great nation demands no less."

Finance boasts Soldier of Quarter

By Robert H. Sweigart
215th Finance Support Unit

Spec. Patricia A. Crenshaw of the 215th Finance Support Unit is Fort Benning's Soldier of the Quarter for the last quarter of fiscal year 1988.

Crenshaw faced stiff competition, appearing before numerous selection boards of senior NCOs. However her superior knowledge and exemplary military bearing demonstrated that she is truly outstanding among her contemporaries.

When asked how she felt about a finance soldier being named the Soldier of the Quarter on a post that hosts such distinguished units as the 10th Mountain Division, the 75th Ranger Regiment and the 197th Infantry Brigade, Crenshaw replied that finance personnel are first and foremost soldiers. She believes that every soldier, male or female, infantry or finance is critical to the Army effort, and each must be able to not only perform his MOS but be able to survive the rigors of combat and be victorious over the enemy.

She couldn't help, however, in taking a little extra pride in her accomplishments, saying that it's about time the infantry noticed they don't have a monopoly on good soldiers.

Lt. Col. Robert U. Schultz, commander of the 215th said he feels that, although Crenshaw is definitely an excellent soldier, she is not unique among soldiers assigned to finance units. Finance soldiers have always been highly competitive with the rest of the Army; Crenshaw's performance only further illustrates what the Finance Corps has known all along.

Crenshaw is currently assigned to the Systems Branch of the Finance and Accounting Division.

Spec. Patricia A. Crenshaw, 215th Fin. Spt. Unit.

She is also in her last semester at Columbus College where she is working on her bachelor's degree in management and accounting. In the little spare time that Crenshaw has, she enjoys reading, singing and dancing, working with youngsters and spending time with her husband, who incidentally, is an infantryman.

EOD

searching anything, anywhere - rafters and attics in houses, factories, restaurants, cars, boats, airplanes, the list is endless.

Anywhere a candidate campaigned, EOD and Secret Service Agents were present. This often meant extended temporary duty trips involving long drives or flights, Rudat said. The 89th EOD provided support to both the Democratic and Republican conventions and during numerous campaign stops. The support provided by 10 EOD technicians assigned to the 89th totaled more than 11,000 man hours spread across the Eastern United States, according to Rudat. In addition, 89th EOD continued to provide day-to-day support to Fort Benning and the 49 counties in Georgia and Alabama that make up the unit's area of operation.

After the inauguration, Rudat said the 89th EOD will gear up for Campaign '92, which will begin in mid 1990.

AUSA lobbies in Washington for the total Army

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

The Association of the U.S. Army is the professional organization that serves the total Army. The best comparison would be the American Medical Association for doctors.

There are 136 chapters worldwide, plus nearly 100 Army ROTC college campus chapters and 50 sub-chapters in suburban areas.

Many people belong to the association, from the rifle squad leader in the 197th Infantry Brigade to senior officers at DA.

According to chapter president, retired Maj. Gen. Robert Sullivan, Fort Benning is the second largest chapter in the world. The only chapter with more members is the one at Fort Bragg, N.C.

"Our chapter's motto is 'to serve the soldier,'" Sullivan said. "All of our events are oriented around the soldier; whether it be to educate, reward or entertain them."

Some of the best known programs are Operation Holiday, Armed Forces Day Picnic, Independence Day Celebration, Best Ranger Competition, Retiree Open House, Landpower Education Fund, Oktoberfest, Quarterly Breakfasts, NCO and Soldier of the Quarter and Year and Drill Sergeant of the Year.

Sullivan said no new programs will be added while he is president of the chapter. Instead, he will concentrate on making the present programs better and increasing membership in the chapter he said.

"Our goal this year is to have 50 percent of the assigned strength in each sub-chapter become a member," he said. "The greater our membership, the more funds we have available to conduct soldier activities."

SFC Richard Bailey and SSgt. Beryl Robertson, Company A, 1st Battalion, 507th Parachute Infantry Regiment, have seen the benefits of this association.

Bailey recently attended the national meeting in the nation's capital with the chapter delegation. "During the meeting in Washington, D.C., I learned how AUSA benefits soldiers, particularly in the materiel acquisition area, which is necessary for soldiers to do their jobs," he said.

Robertson, a member of the Fort Benning Army 10-miler team, said AUSA donated most of the funds to both the female and male teams enabling them to make the trip.

"AUSA was our last hope and they came through for us," Robertson added.

Both Robertson and Bailey noted how AUSA benefits the junior enlisted soldiers by providing them the opportunity to take trips - an incentive to do well in their jobs.

Fort Benning Soldier of the Year, Spec. Angelia Pacheco, mentioned that she received many items from AUSA, including a watch and dress blues because of her selection.

Pacheco said attending AUSA functions is a good way for soldiers to meet other soldiers and find out what they do in the Army.

According to Robertson and Pacheco, AUSA makes the Army a better place for soldiers to "be all they can be."

the monetary donations, local businesses showed their support in other ways.

"I saw several electric signs around the city promoting the program," he said.

AUSA past president, James Gallagher, coordinated the program. He said coordination for the project began in mid-October with schedules finalized when the Department of the Army designated the dates for Exodus.

Although fewer soldiers participated in "Operation Holiday" this year, Gallagher said he doesn't mind all the time it involves.

"As long as there is one soldier who stays behind during the holidays, AUSA will do something to make the days special," he said.

Gallagher added, "I know that some of the things scheduled don't seem too exciting, but soldiers always enjoy themselves once they're there."

He cited an example in which a soldier attended a tour of the Dolly Madison Bakery and commented, with delight, "I always wondered how they got the cream in the middle of the cakes."

Most soldiers said they really enjoyed having the chance to get out of the barracks, even if it was just for a couple of hours. They were happy that someone cared about them.

Those words of gratitude from the soldiers participating in the program mean that the AUSA accomplished its mission — serving the soldier.

SATO, Trans. moved to Soldiers' Plaza

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

"We moved to Soldiers' Plaza to become more visible, and instead we've become almost invisible," said Joanne Johnson, personnel movement chief, Personnel Movement, Transportation Division, Department of Logistics."

Both Transportation and the Scheduled Airline Traffic Office moved to Soldiers' Plaza Nov. 1 from their offices on Vibbert Avenue to be part of the 'one stop shop' concept recently instituted at the Plaza.

According to Johnson, when they moved, it was as if they dropped off of the face of the earth. However, they're just a few steps away from most other processing stations on post.

Transportation, now located in building 2627, schedules family travel, movement of privately owned vehicles, passport applications, various port calls and temporary duty travel.

SATO is now located in building 2628. They handle the tickets for travel designated by transportation. SATO can also handle anything from bus trips to cruises for unofficial travel.

The two offices work together to move soldiers to their destination in the most efficient manner possible.

But, they can't move soldiers if the troops don't know where they are.

Johnson said she believes part of the problem is so many people are familiar with the old office site that they keep going there themselves or sending others.

"Hopefuily, by getting the word out," she said, "people will be able to find us again, and we'll be back in business."

Tax-preparation checklists can save time, worry

Soc. of Certified Public Accts.

A tax-preparation checklist can save you time — and worry.

If you think you have all the time in the world to get ready for your tax preparer, think again. Whether in a file drawer or in a shoe box, a year's worth of bills, canceled checks, receipts and other papers is a lot to organize.

How do you know where to begin? According to the Georgia Society of CPAs, a tax-preparation checklist can get you off to a good start. The list should include the types of documents you need to attach to the return, the deductions you expect to take and the supporting documents you need to save in case of a future audit. To help you devise your own checklist, the Georgia Society of CPAs offers these guidelines.

REVIEW LAST YEAR'S RETURN

Unless your tax situation has changed drastically in the past year, your 1987 tax return may be your best guide to the types of information you need to gather. Review each section carefully, and jot down notes on which supporting documents your tax preparer attached to the return.

SORT YOUR FILES

Leaf through your papers and sort them into separate categories, such as income records, homeowner information, medical expenses, IRA contributions, business expenses and charitable donations. If you have already organized your records into categories, you are way ahead of the game. If not, there's no time like the present. Remember, too, you can use any filing system you create now to organize 1989 tax information as well.

INCOME RECORDS

Make sure you can document the amount of money you received from each of your income sources, from wages to state tax refunds.

In most cases, your employer will automatically provide you with a W-2 form, which lists your annual wages as well as the amount of taxes paid. If you're self-employed, you and your accountant will have to rely on your books and business records.

To report your interest and dividend earnings, you need Forms 1099-Int and 1099-Div, usually provided by the bank or company holding your account or securities. In addition, you should set aside the various Forms 1099 you receive for income sources such as unemployment compensation, taxable Social Security or pension benefits, or state and local income tax refunds. Finally, if you sold any securities in 1988, make sure that your broker supplies you with copies of your transaction slips as well as Form 1099-B.

HOMEOWNER DOCUMENTS

If you sold your home in 1988, you may have another form of income to report: capital gains. Be ready to show your accountant your closing statement plus any receipts for fixing up the house prior to its sale.

Other homeowner documents to collect include Form 1098, which indicates the amount of mortgage interest you paid last year. This form is usually automatically sent to you by the mortgage holder. In addition, you should gather all receipts and canceled checks for property and real estate taxes.

If you own a rental property, rummage through your files and summarize any expenses you incurred in maintaining and managing the property. Don't forget to include expenses for repairing, improving and advertising the property. In addition, you need to know the number of days you or your family used the property as well as the number of days the property was rented.

To report any job-related moving expenses for 1988, you should collect all related receipts and canceled checks, plus any information showing which expenses were paid or reimbursed by your employer.

CHECK YOUR CHECKBOOK

Your checkbook can be a treasure trove of overlooked tax deductions. Carefully review your canceled checks and pull out any that are related to your business, charitable donations, medical expenses, child-care bills, real estate activities and other miscellaneous expenses. Remember, you don't have to drag all these checks to your accountant. A summary listing and date, check number, amount, payee and purpose is usually much more efficient.

REVIEW YOUR CHARGE ACCOUNT STATEMENTS

Again, your charge account receipts and statements may support 1988 tax deductions you have since forgotten. Summarize any expenses that may be tax deductible and review them with your accountant. You should also record the amount of interest paid on each account for 1988. This figure is generally supplied on the first statement of the new year.

EXAMINE YOUR CHECK STUBS

Too often taxpayers forget that their paycheck stubs contain valuable information. Take a closer look at them and you may discover automatic payroll deductions for IRA accounts, medical insurance or donations to charities

REMEMBER YOUR PERSONAL LIFE

Marriage, divorce, a new child or a suddenly dependent parent can all have a significant impact on your taxes. Make sure that you notify your tax preparer of any change in your marital status or family life.

BRING ALL SOCIAL SECURITY NUMBERS

If you file a joint return, you and your spouse must supply your tax preparer with your Social Security numbers. In addition, you have to provide the Social Security number of any family member you claim who is at least age five. Next year, the minimum age drops to two.

TAKE YOUR TIME

Don't let the April 15 deadline jolt you into a frenzy. Remember, you can always file for an extension, if necessary. Sort through your documents and records slowly, taking time to jot down any questions you may want to discuss with your tax preparer. According to the Georgia Society of CPAs, taxpayers who invest time and care in preparing their tax returns are less likely to earn an auditor's visit — and are also more likely to save money on their tax bill.

SPIRITUAL

Holidays kept community busy

USAIC Chaplain's Office

Holiday activities for the Fort Benning spiritual community were varied, busy and enthusiastic. Aside from the many traditional activities, including the Post Christmas Tree Lighting Ceremony, Sunday School programs and extra worship services, there were also some "new traditions."

For the first time at Fort Benning, a German Catholic Mass was celebrated. About 1,000 German-speaking people are thought to be affiliated with this community. Although it isn't known how many of them are Catholic, more than 150 people attended the Mass. Many wore Bavarian dress, perhaps seeking a reminder of their heritage and homeland.

Father Frank Lane, who studied German in Austria, prepared the service and commented, "I hope that this in some way served as a memory of home for those attending." Several women from the church including "Pete" Hardman and women from the German Protestant community of Columbus worked together to make the Mass complete.

Spanish services were held at Sightseeing Road Chapel Dec. 8 and included a "Mother's Day" celebration with food and a gathering. On Dec. 12, a Mexican celebration of "Our Lady of Guadalupe" was observed; and on Christmas, two Spanish Masses were held. The cadets of Central and South America and a large Spanish community are served by these masses.

The Samoan community is a group of which many of us may not be aware. Rev. Veve L. Tafao conducts the Samoan Pentecostal services at Kelley Hill Chapel for a congregation that has doubled in size, from 25 to 47, over the past year. Although numbers are yet small, the group is quite active and has built a notable camaradie among themselves. After Christmas and New Year's Eve services, a celebration with Samoan food was held, and children exchanged gifts. For more information about the Samoan Services, contact the Kelley Hill Chapel, Chap. Bixler, at 544-1692.

Another group of notable mention are the Catholic children who helped prepare and largely participated in a Christmas Eve Mass celebrated by Father Lane at MPCC. The children provided music and a pageant as well.

Glowing candles and holiday cheer filled many churches including the Infantry Center Chapel during the traditional Candlelight Christmas Eve Services. Chaps. Roy Mathis and Don McSwain conducted services as well as many chaplains throughout Fort Benning.

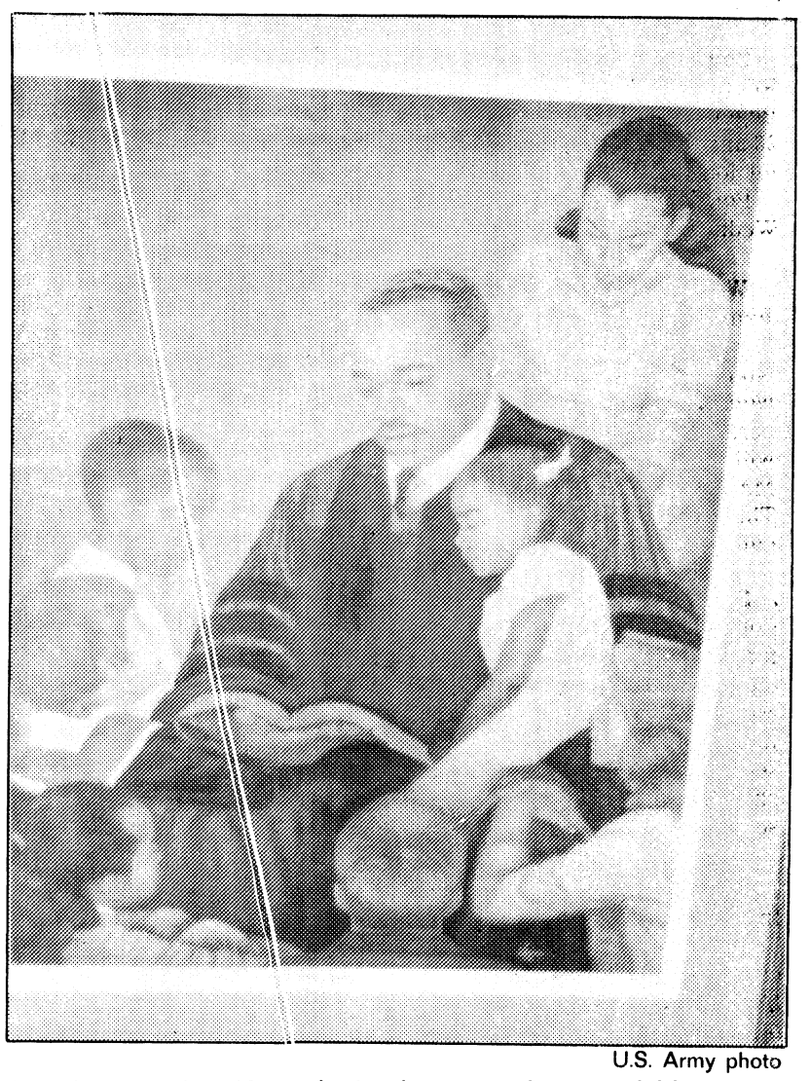
Aside from the Christmas spirit that was abundant in local churches, there was a little more yuletide greeting for our soldiers found in carefully addressed and sealed envelopes. The USAIC Chaplain's Office participated in the "Military Mail Call" and many soldiers received letters and cards from people all over America who wanted to be sure that our soldiers were not forgotten.

Although because of Exodus, (the closure of most training facilities during the holiday season and the departure of the trainees) the population of Fort Benning was smaller than usual, the chaplains helped to maintain holiday activity and spirit in the hopes of keeping Christmas year round.

Chaplain remembers King's death

By Chap. Andrew J. Bullard
2nd Infantry Training Battalion

I was about 10 years old when Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. died. My father, Reverend Andrew J. Bullard Jr. called the family together in the living room at our home in Chattanooga, Tenn. He told us that a great man had been killed, and he led us in a word of prayer. When my father mentioned his entire name, I thought he was referring to Martin Luther, the reformer, but I knew Luther was already dead. I was very confused.



I asked my father, "Why did they kill a dreamer?" He told me to read the story of Joseph in the Old Testament. Genesis 37:19 speaks of Joseph as a dreamer. "And they said one to another, behold, this dreamer cometh. Come now therefore, and let us slay him...and we shall see what will become of his dreams." Joseph's brothers wanted to kill him and in killing him, hoped that his dream would die.

"Dr. King's assassin," explained my father, "believed that in killing him, his dream would be destroyed."

Years later, while attending a Seminary at the Morehouse School of Religion in Atlanta, Ga., I had the opportunity to work with "Daddy King" on the board of trustees. I also worked with Dr. Benjamin E. Mays and other great black ministers in Atlanta.

I regret that I never met Dr. King, "The Dreamer," but I strive to live Dr. King's dream every day as I minister to soldiers and families in the U.S. Army.

I challenge every soldier and family to keep Dr. King's dream alive.

Soldiers visit nursing home residents

By John Delyons
4st Battalion, 58th Infantry

For many people, watching the face of an elderly person break into a smile is about as heartwarming and satisfying as seeing a baby smile

This was the case recently at a local nursing home when a group of soldiers from the 1st Battalion, 58th Infantry went to spread cheer by singing a number of favorite chorals. Ruby Mixon, activities coordinator at Oak Manor Nursing Home, scheduled the Christmas visit with the 1st Bn., 58th Inf.

A unit ministry team of Chaplain (Capt.) Loran C. Bulla and Spec. John A. Delyons organized the battalion choir of seven "PATRIOT" soldiers from various companies of 1st Bn., 58th Inf. Capt. Deborah Godwin, a staff officer of 197th Infantry Brigade (Mech.)(Sep.) and also pianist at the Brigade Chapel accompanied Chap. Bulla, SSgt. Michael Hagler, Sgt. Wilbert Cox, Spec. John Delyons, Spec. Christopher Sloan and PFC Travis Conger in traditional Christmas songs.

Being a resident in a nursing home during the holidays can sometimes be lonely, according to some of the residents. To hear singing echoing down the hallway may help ease that lonliness.

Clara Brown, administrator of Oak Manor Nursing Home, said she felt the residents' day was made "brighter and happier" by the choir's visit. She said, "They identify soldiers with protection."

The residents nodded their heads during the singing and even sang along. It was a time for soldiers to show they can set people's minds at ease without combat gear. Oak Manor residents smiling faces and clapping hands were proof enough that when an American soldier's on the scene-"Don't Worry, Be Happy."

Chaplain reflects on King's life

By Chap. Paul W. Gardner
Clinical Pastoral Education student

This is the time of the year we pause to reflect upon the life and teachings of Dr. Martin Luther King Jr., a man of peace and non-violence.

He was a man of freedom who was not pleased to see his people restricted from the rights and privileges of citizenship. He was a man of justice and equality, however this justice and equality was not only for blacks, but all of humanity.

He believed, as Presidents Lincoln and Kennedy, that this nation could not continue to exist half slave and half free. His dream was for a better, stronger and united America; a country where all men were created

CHAPEL BRIEFS

PROTESTANT

Service dedication - Sunday the 4 p.m. Gospel Service at ITC Chapel, building 3220, Sand Hill, will honor Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. by dedicating the service to his memory. The service will be led by Chaps. Andy Bullard and J.D. Bender, both members of the 2nd Infantry Training Brigade. For more information, call 544-3269/3458.

A Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. memorial dinner is set at the Custer Terrace Chapel Sunday, 1-3:30 p.m. The service is intended to "reaffirm the philosophy of social equality and equal opportunity for all Americans" according to Chap. (Lt. Col) Richard Goldsmith. There is no cost, but each family is asked to bring a covered dish to feed his family plus two. Call 544-2213/3179 for more information.

ASK THE JUDGE

By William F. Sutton Jr.
Staff Judge Advocate's Office

Q: I recently joined a video/camera club for a $1,200 membership fee. The club told me they would send equipment and provide services as part of my membership. As part of the deal, I could pay off my membership in installations or in full at anytime. All I supposedly had to do was pay a minimum monthly amount.

After making a couple of payments, I decided this club was not a good deal, and I wanted out. I looked over my contract. And a friend of mine told me since the club did not explain something called a "finance charge," I could get out of the contract. Is my friend right?

A: Your friend, just like many other amateur lawyers, is wrong. What you have with the camera/video club is something called an open end credit agreement. Under this type of arrangement, you and the club agree on a specific membership price. However, you have the option of paying the membership price in monthly minimum installments or in full anytime. This is the same type of plan used by credit card companies.

A finance charge is the cost you pay for an extension of credit. If an open end credit agreement is used, the club cannot tell you how much the finance charge will be when you sign the contract because they do not know how much you are going to pay each month. You could decide to pay only the minimum amount due on your membership for that month, or you could pay off your entire balance. Therefore, all the club needs to tell you at the time you sign the contract is how the finance charge will be determined. The following sentence is an example of a proper finance charge statement: "A FINANCE CHARGE of 1½ percent is imposed on the unpaid balance as of the beginning of the month without deducting payments."

Though the club cannot tell you what the finance charge will be when you sign the contract, it does have to tell you several things. They are:

★When a finance charge will be imposed (for example, no finance charge on amounts paid within 20 days of the billing date)

★The balance on which a finance charge is determined

★The elements of the finance charge (such as service fees, interest, transaction charges or loan fees).

If this information is not on your contract, then the club has violated the federal law on open and credit disclosure.

You should be very careful when dealing with companies that offer these "service" contracts. Be sure to read the contract and understand all of your obligations before signing it. Also, determine whether you really need to spend $1,200, plus interest, for photo services. These contracts often require "handling fees" for each service requested, in excess of the contract cost. If you are in doubt, call 545-3281 for help.

Phones

placed with a compact electronic switching system.

The new system is expected to stop the various problems caused by the older system. The problems range from never-ending busy signals to dead lines to wrong numbers and persistent noise.

The phones on post will not be replaced all at once, but will eventually be replaced through attrition.

Another advantage of the new system is its ability to give the rotary-dial phones here many of the same characteristics that the contemporary "touch tone" telephones feature. Some of those features are call-waiting, call forwarding and conference calling, according to Jones.

Jones explained that until the new switches arrive in June, efforts will be concentrated on installing the trunking lines and renovating phone service buildings. The entire project is to be completed by late December, Jones said.

King

equal and judged not by the color of their skin, but by the content of their character.

Dr. King's dream was to free America from racism and injustice. The words of a 17th century poet has special significance in regard to King's non-violent movement who used the words "walls do not a prison make, nor iron bars a cage." King proved that a jail cell's iron bars could not imprison ideas and issues concerning freedom and justice.

King said, after departing a courtroom in Montgomery, Ala., "Ordinarily a person leaving a court-room with a conviction behind him would wear a somber face. But I left with a smile. It was a crime of joining my people in a non-violent protest against injustice. It was the crime of seeking to install within my people a sense of dignity and self respect. It was that crime of desiring for my people the inalienable rights of life, liberty and pursuit of happiness. It was above all the crime of seeking to convince my people that non-cooperation with evil is as much a moral duty as in cooperation with good."

As we honor the memory of Dr. Martin Luther King Jr., on the anniversary of his birth, we honor the re-birth of freedom that his life's work achieved for all Americans.

I trust that the dream will continue to live within you and I.

Now two-pizza phenomenon can happen anytime, anywhere.
PIZZA HUT® DELIVERS PAIRS™ ALL DAY, EVERY DAY

In what sources are calling a bizarre plot to spoil pizza customers for anything less, Pizza Hut® now delivers two pizzas for one low price on a permanent basis.

The alleged conspiracy means that a simple phone call to Pizza Hut® Delivery brings "Pizza Hut Pairs™," as they are being called, directly to the homes of American consumers.

Experts speculate that citizens may stay home in droves to take advantage of what many are calling "the biggest thing since pepperoni."

Professor Soo Dang Goode of the Institute for Pizza Excellence told reporters, "With Pizza Hut Pairs, consumers can get two pizzas for only slightly more than the price of one. And this is not your ordinary, skimpy delivery pizza. This is Pizza Hut Pizza!"

Goode added, "It's a stunning breakthrough in pizza science."

Trends in the Soviet Union's Army

The Soviet Army Studies Office at Fort Leavenworth, Kans., has identified several trends that will affect the Soviet Union's military for the next decade, according to an article by Jim Garamone of American Forces Information Service.

Soviet Army Studies Office personnel say the Soviets are attempting to come to grips with a redefined military doctrine, and they are working to translate their current doctrine to one of "sufficiency."

According to the article, Soviet military officials are also working on the military dimensions of Mikhail Gorbachev's policies of "glasnost" and "perestroika." The Soviets are attempting to forecast the nature and requirements of future war, the article said, and they believe the world is involved in an ongoing military-technical revolution that began with nuclear weapons. Studies office officials believe this will carry on through the advent of what the Soviets call "weapons based on new physical principles" such as lasers and particle beams.

In the article, Garamone states the Soviets will concentrate on arms control and disarmament, and the development of new weapons will have tremendous impact on both negotiations and military doctrine.

Riscassi to become vice chief of staff

Gen. Robert W. Riscassi will become the 21st Vice Chief of Staff of the Army on Jan. 17, according to officials in the office of the Secretary of the Army. He succeeds Gen. Arthur E. Brown, Jr. who is retiring Feb. 1.

Riscassi formerly served as director of the Joint Staff, Organization of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, the Pentagon.

Results of Gander crash released

Ice on the wing was officially cited as the "most probable cause" of the 1985 Gander, Newfoundland, crash of a DC-8 in which 248 members of the 101st Airborne Division were killed.

According to the Canadian Aviation Safety Board's recent public report of its probe into the disaster, a 5-4 board majority ruled that ice contamination on the leading and upper surface of the plane's wing caused the aircraft to stall and subsequently crash.

The DC-8, an Arrow Air military charter, was returning the Fort Campbell, Ky., soldiers from multinational peacekeeping duties in the Sinai Desert when it crashed on Dec. 12, 1985. No one survived the crash, which also took the lives of the plane's eight-man crew.

TACOM finds new uses for M113 APCs

The U. S. Army Tank-Automotive Command is finding new uses for the M113 family of armored personnel carriers

A track-based version of the Standardized, Integrated Command Post System and a carrier vehicle for the new 120-millimeter mortar are among the latest roles being developed for APCs, say TACOM officials. Some two-dozen variants of the APC are now in use, with more in development.

Soldiers assigned overseas arriving late

Many soldiers assigned to overseas duty stations are arriving late because proper port call procedures are not being followed, according to Total Army Personnel Agency officials.

The port call window for soldiers traveling on the Military Airlift Command flights is five days, TAPA officials say. When MAC flights are not available within the five-day period, soldiers may travel by commercial air aboard a Unites States flag carrier.

Port calls must be arranged within five days of the requested travel date so the soldier arrives within the soldier's reporting month.

DoD orders two sets of dental x-rays

The Department of Defense has ordered all soldiers to have duplicate sets of panographic (dental) x-rays on file with the Central Panographic Storage Facility in Monterey, Calif., according to the Total Army Personnel Agency bulletin.

A special task force under the direction of the Adjutant General found that the Army has not met this requirement. As of Sept. 30, 1988, the Army had only 91 percent compliance.

The U. S. Army Reserve and National Guard units have until Oct. 1, 1989 to complete their requirements. Soldiers should have these x-rays taken and a duplicate filed with the CPSF prior to any moves.

Plan aligns CVI process for AR officers

Reserve lieutenants selected for active duty promotion to captain automatically will be recommended for conditional career status under a plan recently approved by Department of the Army.

The new plan aligns the promotion and career voluntary indefinite system and eliminates the need for lieutenants to apply for conditional career status.

Report recommends changes to professional military education

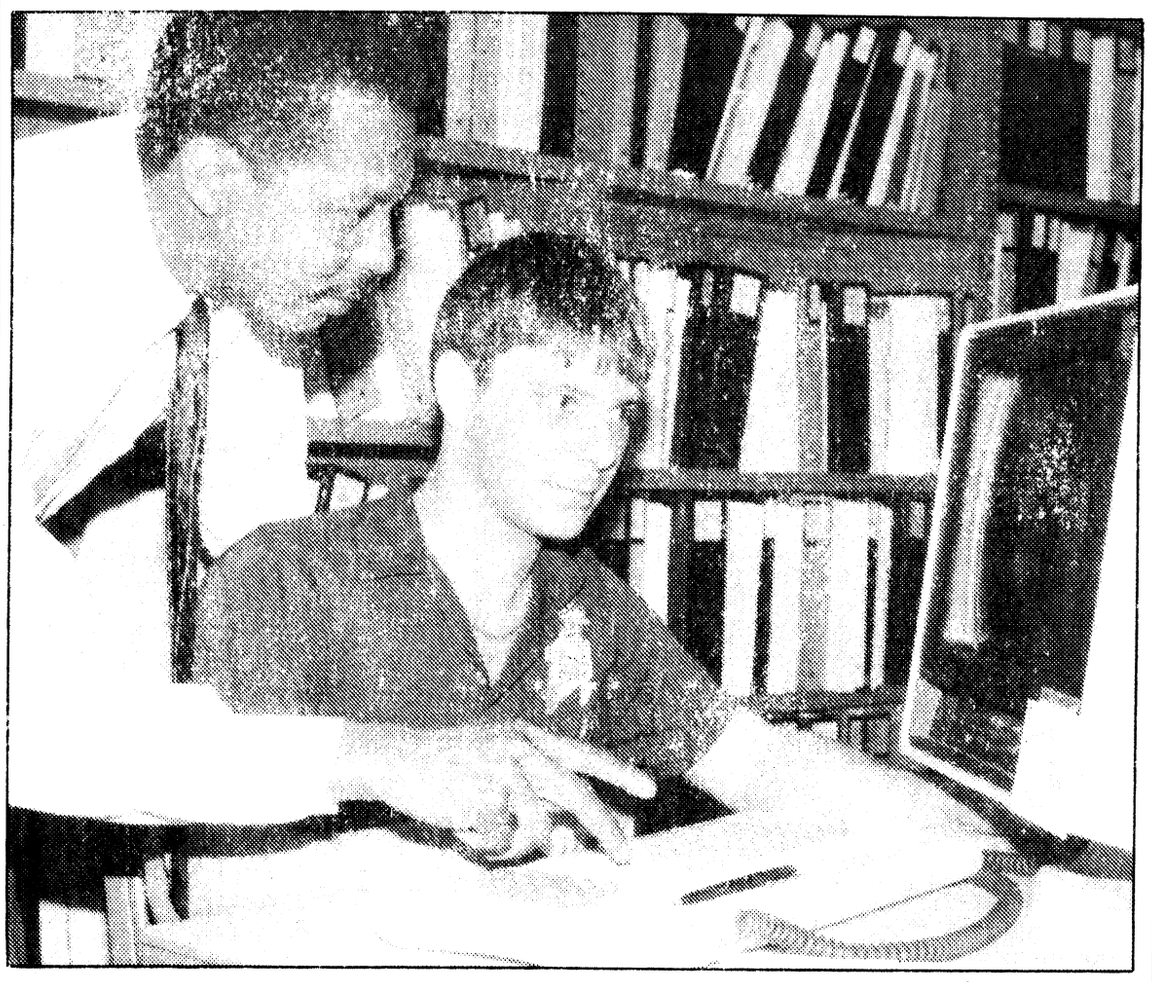
By Jim Garamone
American Forces Information Service

A congressional panel has recommended several changes to the way the services educate their officers.

The major thrust of the proposals is that joint specialist education should be done in a joint school.

The recommendations also would remake the National Defense University, expand the Capstone program for general officers, make the Armed Forces Staff College into a school for joint specialty officers and add a grading system to professional military education.

Defense officials are quick to point out that these are only recommendations. However, some are based on suggestions from the chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, Adm. William J. Crose. DoD's already studying these and will adopt some.



The House Armed Services Committee Panel on Military Education, chaired by Rep. Ike Skelton, D-Mo., delivered its report on Nov. 18.

The recommendations deal only with intermediate, senior and general officer military education. The basic and advanced courses for junior officers – while mentioned – were not studied.

The first recommendation calls for the Department of Defense to set up a framework for professional military education. The report proposes four levels and focuses of education: primary-branch or warfare speciality; intermediate-combined arms training and joint level theater planning; senior-national military strategy; and flag rank-national security strategy.

The second recommendation is to improve the faculty at military education facilities. The panel wants to make it easier to hire highly qualified civilians to teach at the schools. It also calls for more officers on the faculty "who have a clear potential for promotion and/or who have proven records of excellence." A committee spokesman said that in the past, officers "on the fast track" regarded assignment to one of the service

ACES promotes higher education

By Sonny Nolin
ACES Office

The Army Continuing Education System at Fort Benning can help you further your education. Courses are free, and a full-time staff is available to assist you.

One of the main features of the ACES program is Programmed Logic for Automated Teaching Operations or PLATO as it is more commonly known. A computer-based instruction system, PLATO offers a wide range of free courses from basic skills to graduate collegiate instruction.

ACES has PLATO terminals available at Learning Centers located at Kelley Hill, Building 9005, and Main Post, Building 2611.

PLATO originates from Fort Leavenworth, Kan. The program makes available thousands of lessons for military and civilian personnel. Academic, technical, data processing, professional development, management, finance and Military Occupational Specialty-related courses are available.

Academic Courses

Academic courses available include basic skills (reading, grammar and math), English as a second Language, Calculus 1, 2 and 3, computer literacy, geometry, physics and the General Education Development (high school equivalency).

GED Series

Anyone, military or civilian, who needs a high school equivalency may be particularly interested in the GED series. Each Learning Center provides an instructor to help students with a particular problem or subject area.

The Muscogee County School District, in association with the Fort Benning International Wives' Club, provides GED instruction to family members Mondays and Thursdays from 7 through 9 p.m. using PLATO. If you or someone you know is interested in the GED night program, call Olga Kelley at 687-6471 or Josefa Schneider at 682-8289.

College Entrance Exams

PLATO has available college entrance and graduate exam preparation courses. Lessons include preparation for the Scholastic Aptitude Test, the American College Test, Graduate Record Examination and the Miller's Analo-

Paid travel gets relatives to sick member's bed

By Mary A. Peterson
American Forces Information Service

Service members who are seriously ill or have life-threatening injuries now have the Defense Department's help in getting family members to their bedsides.

A change to the Joint Travel Regulation authorizes the services to provide free round-trip transportation for two for the service member's parents or siblings or the spouse or children from their homes to the military or civilian hospital.

The funding allows for travel reimbursement, but does not cover lodging, meal expenses or other related costs.

The presence of immediate family members "to aid in the physical recovery of the service member" must be requested by the attending physician and approved by the medical facility's commander.

Relatives can travel using a government travel request, available from the nearest military base finance office; be reimbursed for the cost of commercial transportation; or be reimbursed 21 cents per mile if traveling by car.

According to Col. M. A. Hoherz, chief of the Army's Casualty and Memorial Operations Center, in Alexandria, Va., the entitlement is not brand new. It's an expansion of a travel authorization that funded relatives' travel costs from the United States to overseas hospitals, but only from the designated port of debarkation to the overseas arrival port. It also was only for soldiers classified "very seriously ill" or "very seriously injured."

The new entitlement authorizes paid travel worldwide. And, the medical condition now includes "seriously ill" or "seriously injured."

Congress approved the entitlement, but did not approve extra funds to pay for it, Hoherz said. As a result, his office is the Army's funding authority for overseas travel. The costs of relatives' travel within the United States are paid for by the requesting installation.

All four services realize the emotional stress family members experience when their presence is requested and are prepared to assist relatives.

According to Senior MSgt. Judith Sims at the Air Force Military Personnel Center, Randolph Air Force Base, Texas, if the hospitalized airman's squadron is near the hospital, it will sponsor the relatives and coordinate their transportation, housing and personal needs.

The Army's casualty assistance offices help coordinate the travel and accommodation details with the relatives, said Hoherz. The soldier's unit, if near the hospital, would also appoint a sponsor to assist the relatives. If the soldier's unit is not nearby, the hospital's patient administration office would help coordinate the visitation details.

Take precautions to keep pipes from freezing during winter

By Becky Ray
Energy Branch

Winter's just arrived and already Georgia has had many cold nights, but the coldest part of the year lies ahead. That means it's time to take precautions to keep plumbing from freezing.

Severe damage can occur to buildings and exterior plumbing systems when water freezes in pipes. As the water freezes, it expands, bursting the pipe. Water released from burst pipes can cause extensive structural damage to a building in a short time. Furniture, equipment and rugs can be ruined, and major cleaning and repair projects are often needed to correct water damage. Families are inconvenienced by the interruption of water service until the plumbing can be replaced.

Even if a pipe break doesn't cause other types of damage, it may still be expensive because of the enormous amount of water that can be wasted, the high cost of water treatment, and the cost of labor and materials used to repair the pipe.

Clearly, it's important to take precautions to prevent frozen pipes. The following suggestions are quick, easy, and inexpensive, but are important to prevent damage in cold weather.

- First, be on the alert for hard freeze warnings. If freezing temperatures are in the forecast, take necessary precautions to protect plumbing.
- Insulate pipes in unheated areas or near exterior walls, and those exposed to outside air. This includes outside faucets and pipes in uninsulated and unheated storage rooms.
- Open cabinet doors under sinks where pipes are near exterior walls. The warm air from the room will keep the pipes from freezing.
- In temperatures below 30 degrees F, let faucets drip to keep water moving through the pipes. This prevents freezing, and the water that is wasted is minimal compared to what would be lost through a broken pipe. A drip every few seconds is all that is needed to prevent freezing even in extreme cold.
- If going away for vacation, leave the door key with a neighbor and ask him or her to turn on faucets just enough to drip if a hard freeze occurs. Have the neighbor check periodically in cold weather for frozen and broken pipes. If a neighbor has a door key, this will also make it easier for maintenance workers to gain entry to your quarters if emergency repairs are needed.
- Know the location of the water cut-off valves in your building or quarters. If a pipe breaks, you can shut the water off and minimize the damage. Call the Work Order Section at 545-2135. Operators are on duty 24 hours a day. Let the operator know the correct address or building number and the location of the break.
- If you find that a pipe has frozen, shut off the water supply to the pipe. The pipe may still break, but water damage will be kept to a minimum.
- If a building (other than family housing is to be vacated, submit a Facilities Engineering Work Request Form (DA Form 4283) to have the building moth-balled. DEH will drain the pipes and shut off the water supply to the building.
- The Unit and Housing Support Center has insulation materials for pipes and faucets. The Center is located in building 385 on Vibbert Avenue, and the phone number is 545-3633.

Don't wait until it's too late to think about preparing for a freeze. Damage can be quite extensive with even a small pipe break. In times of severe weather, maintenance crews are especially busy, and repairs may take longer. Preventing frozen pipes is a small investment of time and effort compared to the inconvenience and damage which could result from broken pipes.

gy Test.

Also, courses to prepare for the College Level Examination Program are offered.

CLEP provides college credit by examination and is an excellent way to earn college credit for knowledge gained informally.

The CLEP general exams consist of English composition, humanities, natural sciences, social sciences, history and mathematics.

Preparation courses for all these areas except the humanities are available on PLATO. By passing the general exams, an individual can earn up to 30 semester hours of college credit.

Each general exam is a 90-minute multiple choice objective tests.

Preparation courses on PLATO are free to military and civilians, but the actual tests are free only to active duty military. Persons other than active duty can take these tests through the local colleges.

Technical Courses

Technical courses, such as blueprint reading, are available.

This course presents the basics of reading, preparing, and using blueprints in vocations such as engineering, machining, pipe fitting, maintenance and welding.

The exercises in this course describe type, parts, lines and view of prints.

Data Processing

The data processing concepts curriculum offers 104 clock hours of instruction on introduction to computers, data representation, data processing concepts and BASIC programming instruction.

Typing

Basic typing and Gregg keyboarding courses provide nine hours of typing and keyboarding instruction.

Management

Management courses include Affirmative Action, Effective Supervision, How to Hire a Micro, International Travel Security, Problem Analysis and Decision Making, Resource Management, Supervisory Success and Time Management.

ASVAB and GT Scores

For soldiers who need to raise their ASVAB scores, there is an extensive list of courses to help them prepare to retest on the ASVAB.

Hundreds of soldiers have already benefited by the lessons; others who need to improve their scores should contact an education counselor.

Medical MOSs

Persons interested in medical subjects as well as soldiers holding medical MOSs will find many medical-related courses on PLATO.

Most of the medical courses were developed for PLATO by the U. S. Army Academy of Health Sciences at Fort Sam Houston, Texas.

Specific programs have been developed for the following MOSs: 91B, 91C, 91F, 91G, 91J, 91L, 91Q and 91V.

MOS and SQT Training

The Learning Centers also provide MOS and SQT training. Publications and Training Extension Course materials are available. Soldiers may sign out TEC audiovisual equipment and tapes.

Classrooms are available on a first-come, first-serve basis.

Each Learning Center is equipped with materials to provide common task as well as MOS-specific training.

Full-time personnel are available to provide assistance to individuals and units to meet training requirements.

Reading

The Time-Life video "Reading Efficiency System," hosted by Bill Cosby, is available for persons who want to improve their reading abilities. The course is designed for working adults with a 9th grade reading level.

Also, a speed reading video tape course, hosted by Dick Cavett, is available. This course has eight, 30-minute lessons which teach the skills of reading faster, yet retaining more.

Education centers are located at Sand Hill, building 3006; Sightseeing Road, building 2023 and Harmony Church, building 4635.

The centers are open Monday through Friday, 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. Active duty and retired military, DAC and NAF personnel, National Guard, Reserve and family members are authorized to use them.

Telephone numbers are: Kelley Hill, Building 9005, 544-2503; and Main Post, Building 2611, 545-1436.

If one of your New Year's resolutions was to further your education, the Learning Center is a good place to start.

colleges as the "death knell to a career. They get the reputation as an academic and not as a fighter or strategist," the spokesman said.

The Center for Strategic Studies would have four institutions:

- An institute for original thought dealing with issues faced by the chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff and senior civilian officials.
- A year-long school for senior military and civilians to study national security issues. Students would range from colonel/Navy captain to major general/rear admiral and comparably ranked civilians.
- An institute for educating newly selected general and flag officers.

The sixth recommendation deals with educating those selected for flag rank. The Capstone program – already conducted by the National Defense University – would not only continue to teach joint planning at the theater level but would expand it to include national security and national military strategy subjects.

The seventh recommendation asks for a review of the Navy military education system with an eye toward the specific needs of that service.

The eighth recommendation calls for establishing a general/flag officer slot on the joint staff with responsibilities for joint professional military education and to coordinate policies for all military education.

The ninth-and final-recommendation would require that instructors grade their students in intermediate and senior schools. Currently, while instructors and fellow students critique papers and discussions, there is no official grade.

"Many of these recommendations have been made before," said a spokesman for the committee. "In fact, this is really one of the themes behind the report."

He said the lessons learned during World War II have not been carried over. "The advent of nuclear arms meant that the emphasis on operational art was lost," he said. "Management and equipment were getting the attention. The art of operating a joint force was forgotten. It is to the services' credit that they have rediscovered this. They were the ones who brought it back to the schools."

The panel started work in November 1987. A full report on the panel's investigation should be released soon.

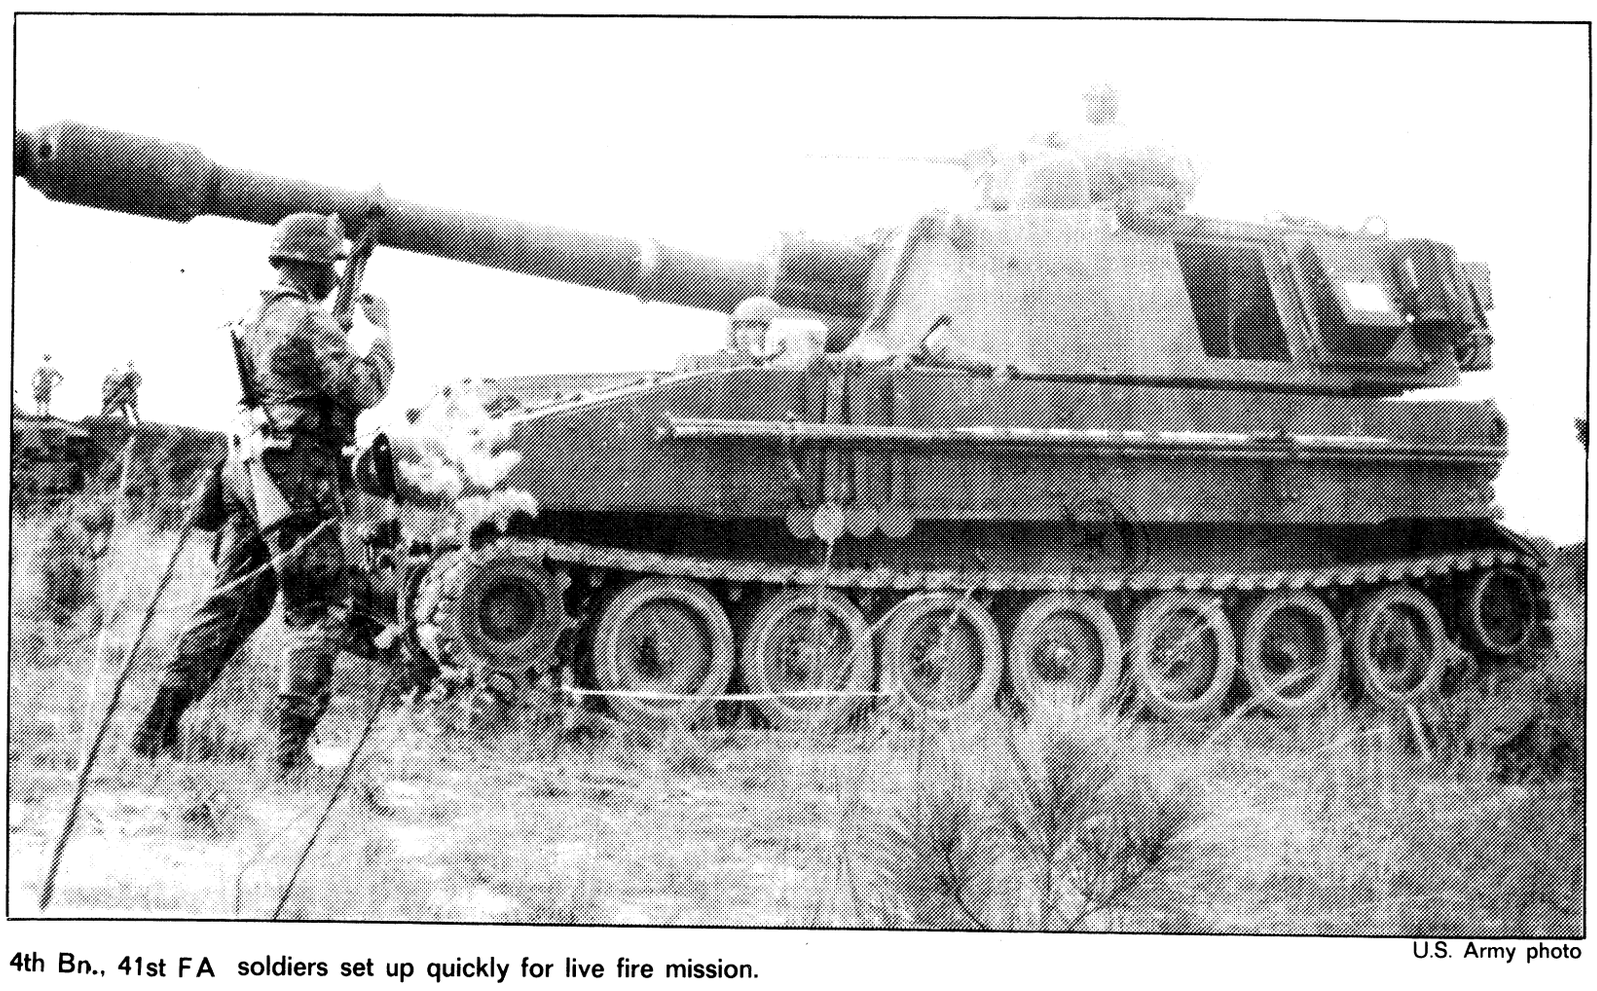
4/41st FA conducts live-fire procedure

By William Bland
4/41st Field Artillery correspondent

The 4th Battalion, 41st Field Artillery took to the field recently for the first time since being redesignated, and broke ground with a new live-fire procedure. Field Artillery batteries set up in open terrain, computed their own firing safety data, and fired into the impact area without being restricted to established firing points.



These procedures, called non-standard firing position operations, were designed and established by the battalion commander and the Post's Range Division.

The procedures call for a battery commander to reconnoiter a suitable firing position and verify an eight-digit grid to the location with the battalion Position and Azimuth Determining System. Once the grid is verified, the Battery Fire Direction Center will compute firing safety data into the impact area.

Once the battery is prepared to fire and all safety checks are complete, the Battalion Tactical Operation Center personnel call Range Control, pass on the required information — firing position grid, azimuth of fire and center grid for target area — while receiving authorization to fire live rounds.

"It was time for Fort Benning to adopt a more modern approach to indirect fire delivery," said Robert Pavey, Range Division's Operations Branch chief. "Recent technological advances have made the old 'firing point' philosophy obsolete," he said.

According to Pavey, the implementation of non-standard firing position operations is a positive step and it sets the foundation for more similar exercises.

197th soldiers obtain Expert Infantry Badge

By George Mingee
197th Inf. Brigade correspondent

Each year in November and December soldiers from the 197th Infantry Brigade try to obtain the Expert Infantry Badge – a badge centered around mastering the multiple infantry skills required of an infantryman.

Twenty soldiers from 2nd Battalion, 18th Infantry Regiment and 15 soldiers from 1st Battalion, 58th Infantry were awarded the coveted EIB recently after successfully completing the test.

For an infantryman, earning the badge means that he is one of a select group of soldiers who is very knowledgeable of infantry skills.

The badge represents a truly professional soldier in every sense of the word.

"The EIB is a sign of excellence for infantrymen," said Spec. Ronald Johnson. "It shows that a soldier is the best in his field.

"Even if one doesn't obtain the EIB, it's a chance for an infantryman to sharpen his individual skills," he added.

The 197th Inf. Bde. started out with 345 participants. By the time the test was over, only 35 came out successfully.

The soldiers are graded on a go, no/go system. Three no go's and you're out of the test. The soldiers get two chances to retest on stations, but the third failure means try again next year.

The 28-station, individual test of infantry skills includes land navigation, first aid, weapon disassembly, grenade course, physical fitness test, and other demanding tasks.

George Mingee

1st Bn., 58th Inf. EIB candidate throws a grenade for a direct hit.

"The individual movement was the hardest for me," said PFC George Stevenson of Co. E, 2nd Bn., 18th Inf. "The thick woods and sand made it hard to navigate and avoid being hit by the sniper.

"I came in the Army with nothing, and now I'm going to leave with something – my EIB," he said.

The EIB is a true sign of excellence for all infantrymen; it's always a proud moment for soldiers to earn a badge held in such high esteem.

The following 2nd Bn., 18th Inf. Regt. soldiers were awarded the EIB: PFC Charles Bobiek, Spec. Keith Meade, lst Lt. Francisco Betancourt, lst Lt. Joseph Ozoroski, SSgt. Robert Guest, 2nd Lt. Rambert Edwards, Sgt. Michael Reynolds, Ssgt. Scott Mansito, Sgt. Van Clemmons, Sgt. Herman Fleming, Cpl. Charles Bininger, Sgt. Curtis Edwards, Cpl. Vincent Garret, Spec. Jonathan Steele, Sgt. Tony Pennington, Spec. Donald Peterson, Sgt. Brian Bartholomew, Spec. David Jones, Sgt. Michael Whatley and PFC George Stevenson.

The following 1st Bn., 58th Inf. soldiers were awarded the EIB: 1st Lt. Thomas Thompson, Spec. Christopher Ryan, Sgt. Ruben Pineiro-Pagan, Spec. Arnold Estok, Spec. Timothy Treichel, 2nd Lt. Dennis Schrecegast, Sgt. Larryan French, Sgt. John Fahigren, 2nd Lt. Dennis Moran, Spec. Jay Fink, Sgt. James Vareha, 2nd Lt. Kenneth Speaks, Sgt. Albert Williams, PFC Gregory Williams and Spec. 4/41st Redlegs celebrate Saint Barbara's Day

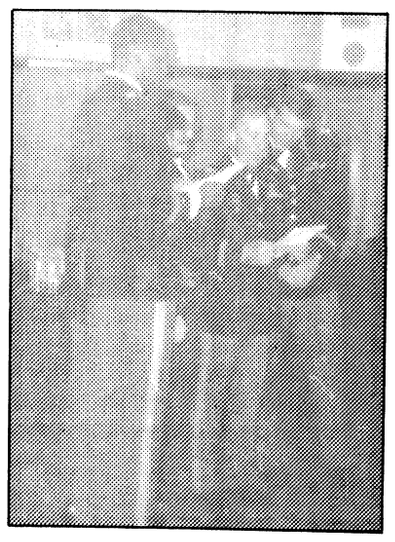
4th Bn., 41st Field Artillery Regt.



The 4th Battalion, 41st Field Artillery Regiment and invited guests joined together recently at the Fort Benning Officers' Club in riotous celebration of St. Barbara, the patron saint of the Field Artillery.

The guest of honor, Maj. Gen. Joe Skaff, commanding general of Fort Devens, Mass., delivered a rousing speech highlighting the importance of leadership in today's field artillery.

The celebration culminated with the induction of nine celebrants into the Honorable Order of St. Barbara. The coveted St. Barbara medal was awarded to Col. Harvey Watson, Capt. Bill Bland, Capt. Javier Mora, 1st Lt. John Jakub, CWO3 Terry Preslar, 1st. Sgt. Charlie Cornett, SFC Bruce Johnson, SFC Matt Nugent and SSgt. Jeffery Meadows.

St. Barbara came to be regarded as the patron saint of those in danger of thunderstorms, fires and explosions – that is to say, sudden death. Given the questionable "reliability" of early cannon (misfires, bursts and exploding weapons were not uncommon), it is easy to see why early Redlegs (artilleryman) sought the protection of St. Barbara.

Every year, Redlegs throughout the world gather to hold celebrations in honor of their patron saint.

Astronaut, astronomy van highlight Astronomy Day

Astronomy Day will be held at Callaway Gardens Saturday at the Callaway Gardens Inn. Registration begins at 12 noon.

Astronaut, Manley Lanier "Sonny" Carter, Jr. will be one of the speakers featured on the program. Other speakers include Dr. Carole Rutland Groce, Director of the Patterson Planetarium in Columbus and Michael David Reynolds of the Alexander Brest Planetarium in Jacksonville, Fla.

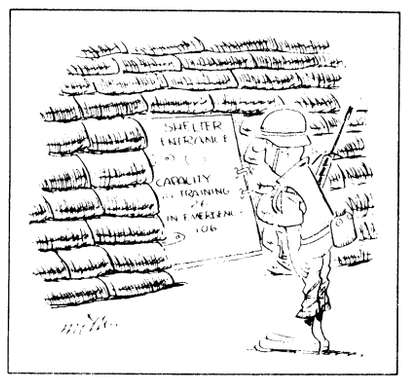
The University of Florida's "Astronomy Van" will be present as one of many exhibits. Philip R. Groce, Science Director of the Macon Museum of Arts and Sciences will exhibit "Whisper Dishes," giant parabolic dishes that "do for sound what telescopes do for light." Other exhibits are telescopes from the Middle Georgia Astronomical Society and Auburn Astronomy Club.

Carter, a mission specialist for future space shuttle flights, was selected as an astronaut candidate by NASA in 1984. He was born in Macon, and he received a degree in chemistry and a Doctorate of Medicine from Emory University.

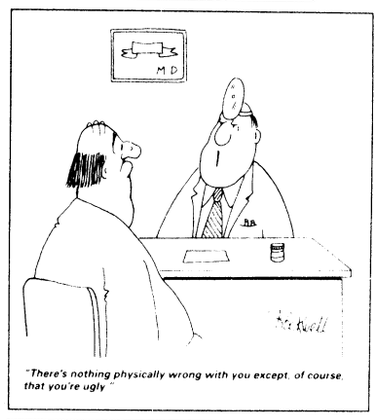
Carter has logged 2,400 flying hours and 160 carrier landings. After completing flight surgeon school and serving tours as a flight surgeon, he returned to flight training and completed the U. S. Naval Test Pilot School.

Telescope information and outside observations will be included in the day-long event.

If the weather permits, participants will be able to take a look at the moons of Jupiter and Mars, the Orion nebula, the Andromeda galaxy, and the planet Mercury.

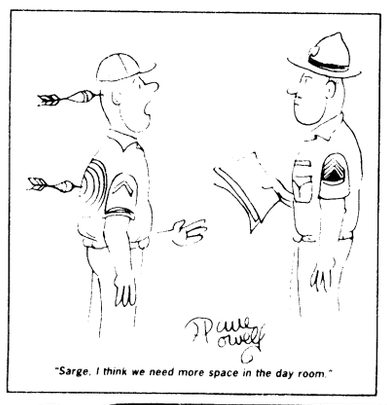


Space is limited, and preregistration is required. The cost is $7 for adults and $3 for students.



To register or for more information, call the Patterson Planetarium at 568-1730.

Symphony stages 'at the movies' concert Jan. 21



The music itself will be the star of a Columbus Symphony concert at 8 p.m. Jan. 21 at the Three Arts Theatre. Titled "At the Movies," the concert, directed by conductor George Del Gobbo, will feature nostalgic sorties into the world of films, past and present.

For ticket information, call 323-5059.

Sports enthusiasts see 'strongest man who ever lived'

By Shawn Bryson
Bayonet staff writer

Shawn Bryson

Former punter for the 1983 world champion Washington Redskins (l), Jeff Hayes, and Bill Kazmaier, "the strongest man who ever lived," talk to soldiers at Briant Wells Field House during the weight and nutrition seminar.

Fort Benning sports enthuiasts showed up at Briant Wells Field House last week to see "the strongest man who ever lived" and a former football player of the 1983 world champion Washington Redskins.

The self-proclaimed strongest man in the world, Bill Kazmaier, and former punter for the Redskins, Jeff Hayes, came to Benning Friday and Saturday to put on a weight training and nutrition seminar which was open to the public.

Both athletes spoke about their careers, participated in a question and answer session, signed autographs and posed for photographs. The seminar also focused on physical training programs and nutrition.

Kazmaier, who currently weighs about 295 pounds, has held numerous championship titles and world records dating back to more than ten year ago.

One of Kazmier's most outstanding achievements was his world-record, super heavyweight 904-pound deadlift at a powerlifting exhibition in 1983. He also established a world record at the 1984 Scottish Highland Games. One of the phases of the competition included throwing a weight over a high bar. Kazmaier set an amazing record when he hurled a 56-pound weight over a bar set at 18 feet, 3 inches high.

Two of Kazmaier's more recent achievements were runner-up at the "Ultimate Challenge " competition and winner at the "Le Defi Mark Ten" International, both in 1987.

Hayes and Kazmaier also made appearances at the commissary here to sign autographs and talk to fans.

Kazmaier will return to Fort Benning Feb. 4 for a powerlifting tournament to be held at Briant Wells Field House.

Girl Scouts plan 9th annual Cookie Run Jan. 21

Units with 20 or more runners receive a $6 discount if register by Monday

USAIC Public Affairs Office

The Concharty Council of Girl Scouts will sponsor the ninth annual Cookie Run Jan. 21 at Weracoba (Lake Bottom) Park in Columbus.

The event features a 1.5-mile speed walk, a 5-mile run (including a wheelchair division), a 1.5-mile run, a 100-yard tot trot and a 1.5-mile race for handicapped persons.

Military as well as corporate and business teams are invited to participate. Individual runners are expected from all over Georgia and Alabama, as well as other regions of the Southeast. All participants will receive a gym bag.

Since it began, the highlight of the run has been the participation of Fort Benning units dressed in their unit athletic attire, according to Sally B. Lasseter, executive director.

"Not only does it show the excellent condition of our military, it provides encouragement to our youth who are often making their first effort at a competitive athletic activity," Lasseter said.

First place male and female runners in the 1.5- and 5-mile runs will receive Speakeasy Pub pizzas, trophies and cookie samples. Second and third place overall male and female runners will receive trophies. Overall winners are not eligible for age group awards.

First, second and third place male and female runners in each age group will win medals. First place winners also receive boxes of cookies. Wheelchair division winners get trophies and cookies.

Pre-registration by Jan. 20 is $6 for participants under 17 and $8 for anyone over 18 years of age.

Registration the day of the race is $8 (under 17 years of age) and $10 (adults 18 and up). It will be conducted at St. Elmo School

Units with 20 or more runners will receive a discount of $6 per person if registered by Jan. 16, and gym bags for each runner will be delivered to the unit.

Unit members who compete for the run trophies or age-level medals may register as individuals (at the group rate if the unit participates).

For more information, call the Girl Scouts office at 327-2646.

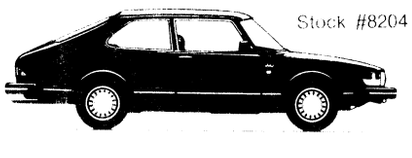
There's safety in numbers.

While a lot of cars claim to offer superior safety, the numbers speak for themselves.

As you can see, the Saab 900's injury loss rating was best in its class of small four and two-door models.



What you don't see, is that the Saab 900 also rated better than all midsize four and two-door models. And the Saab 9000 not only rated best in its class, it beat all but four of the 207 models studied.

For a copy of the complete Highway Loss Data Institute study, or to test drive a new Saab, see us today.

NEWS BRIEFS

It's in the mail

W-2 Forms - It's that time again. Nearly 1.5 million 1988 W-2 forms for soldiers will be in the mail in the last week of January. The Army Finance and Accounting Center will be mailing out W-2 forms for distribution to active and reserve component soldiers.

W-2 forms are used when filing Federal and state income tax returns.

Soldiers are cautioned to wait for their W-2 forms before filing their 1988 taxes, since tax officials won't accept copies of Leave and Earning Statements as proof of income and tax withholding.

Soldiers in transit during the distribution period will receive their W-2 forms when they sign in at their new units. For replacement W-2 forms or reissue, soldiers should contact their servicing finance office.

Unit advisors prepare for income tax season

Tax instruction for unit advisors - Income tax preparation instruction for Unit Tax Advisors is scheduled Monday through Wednesday, 8 a.m. through 5 p.m. each day in Infantry Hall, building 4, classroom 20.

Unit Tax Advisors should plan to attend all three days of instruction and bring a pencil, paper and calculator. Following the completion of the training, Unit Tax Advisors will be available to assist soldiers in preparing Federal tax forms.

The Fort Benning Tax Office will open Jan. 30. Office hours will be Monday through Friday, 8 a.m. through 5 p.m. The Tax Office will provide various Federal tax forms and some state forms. Also, various publications from the Internal Revenue Service will be available on a limited basis.

Ceremony commemorates King

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

"This type of ceremony would have been unthinkable 20 years ago, which shows how much Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. has done for this country," said the guest speaker to a standing-room-only crowd attending a commemorative celebration for King at Marshall Auditorium Jan. 13.

Retired Lt. Gen. Julius Becton was chosen as the guest speaker because he is a product of King's dream. He started his Army career as a private in 1943 and gained his commission during a time when black officers were very rare indeed.

Becton retired in 1983 and is now the Director of the Federal Emergency Management Agency. The agency is the central point of contact within the federal government for emergency planning, mitigation, response and recovery to any natural or man-made disaster.

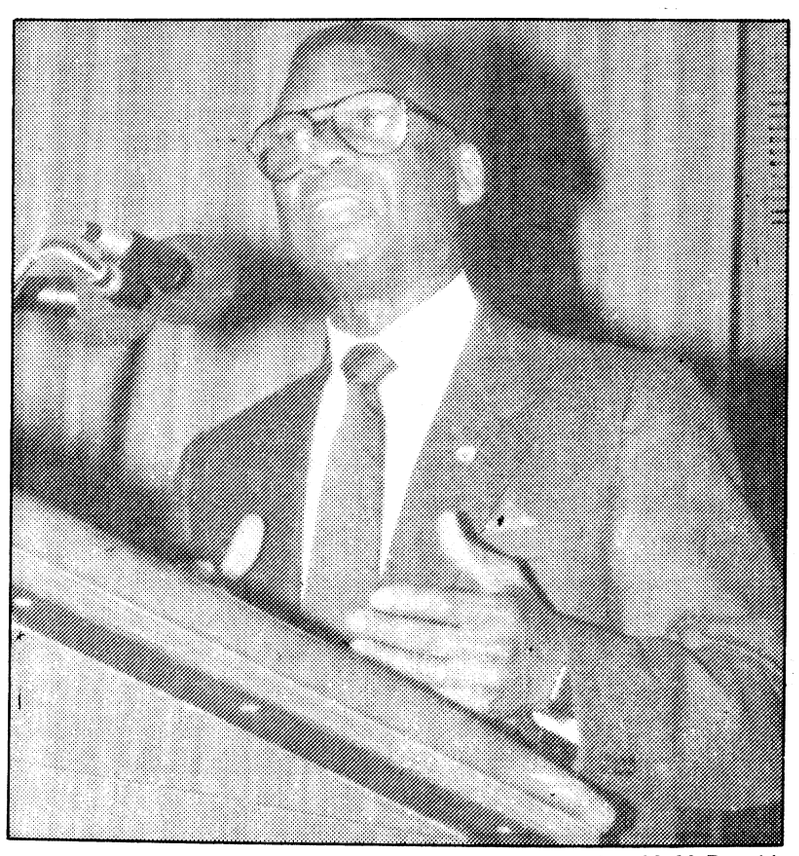
He was nominated for the position by President Ronald Reagan in 1985. It was confirmed by the Senate the same year.

During his speech, Becton spoke about the time he served at Benning and then focused on King.

"Martin Luther King was a normal American who knew freedom and justice didn't exist where even one man wasn't free," he said.

Becton added that the struggle has passed. Dr. King's dream is now a reality, but there is still some poverty in the world.

"The worst poverty is poverty of the mind," he said."That poverty is called bigotry and, left unchecked, can lead to destruction."



He stated that people don't have to agree politically, religiously or socially; they just need to live together harmoniously.

In closing, Becton said, "I'm convinced Martin Luther King's dream lives on."

Other events featured during the celebration were solo singing performances by JoAnn Sims and Celeste Lee and two selections from the Lavoie Choir.

Spec. Lawrence George's rendition of King's "I Have a Dream," speech concluded the ceremony. His performance was so well received that George was given two standing ovations.

Those ovations were from the hands of the people living the dream of Dr. Martin Luther King Jr.

Awards now authorized on Class Bs

Army News Service

Soldiers may now opt to wear their awards, badges and decorations on the shirt of the Class B uniform.

Effective immediately, the change was prompted by "strong input" from soldiers worldwide and coincides with other measures designed to improve the appearance of Class B shirts, say Department of the Army personnel officials.

According to MSgt. Kathleen Harvey of the Office of the Deputy Chief of Staff for Personnel, other changes on the way for the Army green shirt include a slightly heavier fabric; fusible construction of the collar, pocket flaps, and epaulets; a shorter collar on the men's shirt; and a longer collar on the women's shirt.

"The new material will also help support the weight of the awards and decorations on the uniform shirt," said Harvey, who works in the Soldier Policy Branch. "However, many of the soldiers who were already authorized to wear awards on the Class B shirt have found that attaching the awards to some kind of backing inside the shirt prevents drooping."

Now authorized for optional wear on the AG 415 green and AG 428 polywool green shirts are:

- Individual awards and decorations.
- Unit awards and decorations.
- Miniature (half-size) or full-size combat and special skill badges.
- Marksmanship, identification and foreign badges.
- Regimental and infantry distinctive insignia, as well as airborne triming.

"Just use the same guidelines of AR 670-1 ("Wear and Appearance of Army Uniforms and Insignia") for placing items on the shirt that you would use to put them on the jacket," Harvey said. "Everything goes on just the same."

Chaplains' insignia, still authorized for wear on the Class B shirt, will take precedence over all other badges or awards and will be worn centered over the left breast pocket above all other accouterments.

However, to ensure that their identifying insignia is not obscured by the shirt's collar, chaplains may wear no more than two other badges.

The new policy does not allow soldiers to wear distinctive unit insignia on the shirt's epaulets. In addition, no sew-on patches, badges or insignia may be worn. Soldiers authorized to wear Ranger and Special Forces tabs may wear the metal replicas as they normally would on the dress blue jacket.

Although the wear of these items with the Class B uniform is optional to the soldier, commanders may require the wear of awards and decorations only for parades, reviews, inspections, funerals and ceremonial or social occasions.

Harvey said the change was based on desires surfaced by soldiers Armywide — particularly junior soldiers and those assigned to Department of Defense and joint service duties — and is endorsed by Sergeant Major of the Army Julius W. Gates as an "enhancement of morale and esprit." Members of the other services and many allied armed forces have long worn awards on their equivalent to the Class B.

Soldiers in tropical climate zones have worn awards and decorations on their Class B uniforms as a "hot-weather Class A" uniform (with the approval of their major Army commanders) since 1979. In addition, the Army recently authorized recruiters to wear awards and decorations on their green shirts. The new policy, say personnel officials, extends that authority to the rest of the Army.

34th Medical Battalion wins post safety award

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

The 34th Medical Battalion is the safest unit on post for the second year in a row, according to post safety officials.

According to Anita Langford of the post safety office, the reduction of accidents from the previous year and the hazard factor determine who gets the award.

"The 34th Medical Battalion reduced their accidents by 45 percent," Langford said. "This includes both on and off duty accidents."

Chief of Staff Col. James I. Dailey presented the award to Lt. Col. Allen E. Rhodes, battalion commander, Jan 12.

During his remarks, Dailey said, "It gives me great pleasure to give this award to you; but as medics, you should be the safest unit on post."

2nd Lt. John Dargle, battalion adjutant, said the battalion commander makes soldiers aware of the safety program the first day they arrive at the unit and enforces it until the day they leave.

"The commander keeps us on our toes," Dargle said. "He continually makes safety a high priority and has very aggressive safety awareness programs."

Dargle added that the award made many of the soldiers in the unit even more safety conscious.

"When they discovered all the criteria that goes into winning the award; they realized being safety conscious is a 24-hour job, just like being a soldier," he said.

CW0 3 Gary Wacks, the unit safety officer, takes it one step further. His motto is "If it can't be done safely, it can't be done."

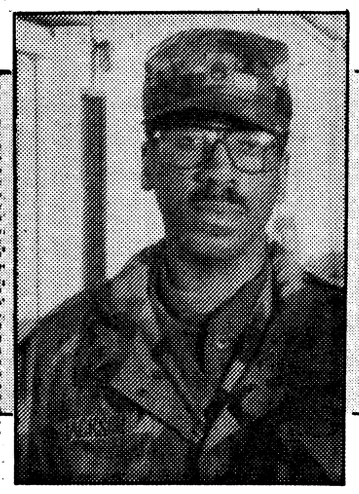
Cookie Run gets underway Saturday

USAIC Public Affairs Office

The Girl Scouts Cookie Run gets underway Saturday at 9 a.m. at Weracoba (Lake Bottom) Park in Columbus.



The event features a 1.5-mile speed walk, a 5-mile run (including a wheelchair division), a 1.5-mile run, a 100-yard tot trot and a 1.5-mile race for handicapped persons.

All participants will receive a gym bag.

Registration the day of the race is $8 (under 17 years of age) and $10 (adults 18 and up). For information, call the Girl Scouts office at 327-2646.

OPINION

VARIOUS VOICES: How do you feel about the Army dedicating 1989 to noncommissioned officers?

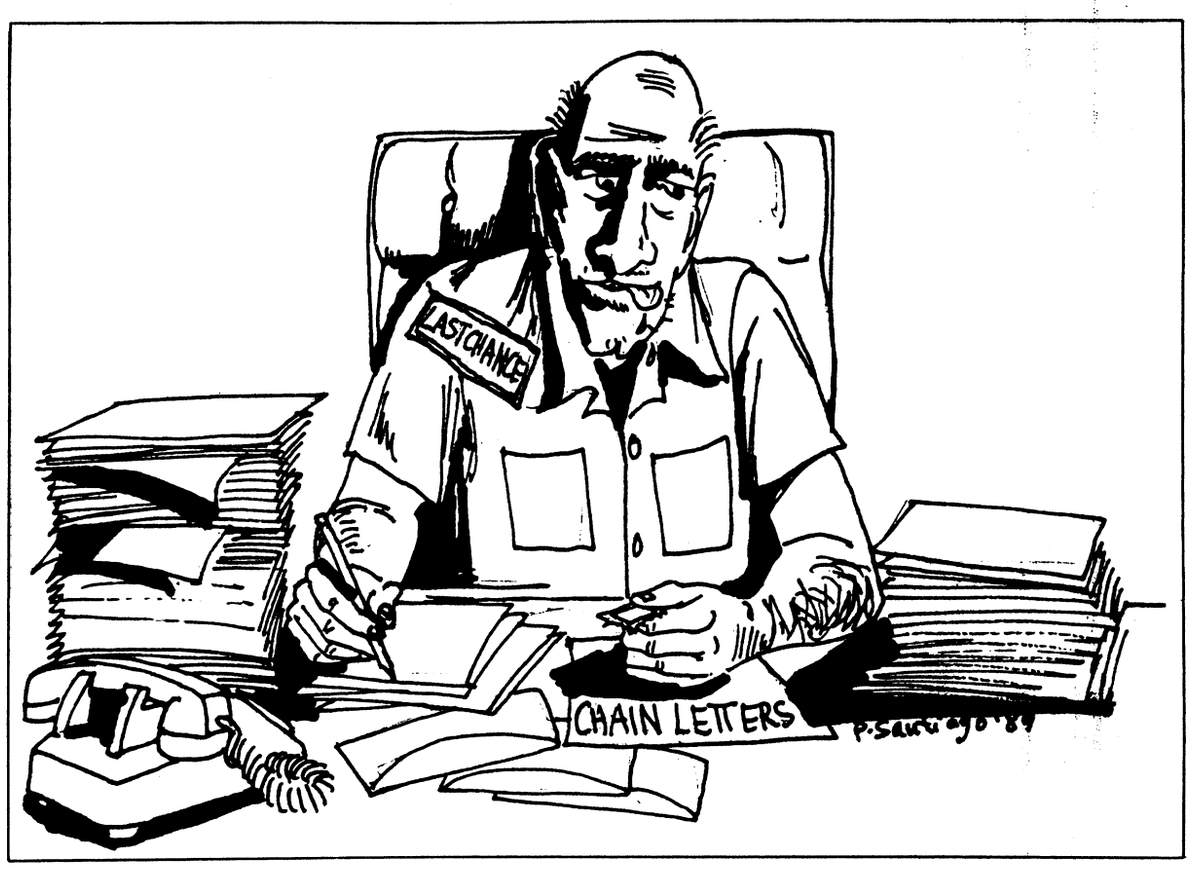
SSgt. Calvin Jackson, 598th Maint. Co., 67th Maint. Bn., 36th Eng. Grp. - "NCOs are being recognized for the support they give in accomplishing the missions of the Army. Without the troops that they motivate, the Army would not be able to accomplish those missions."

Spec. William Flaherty, Co. D, 2nd Bn., 18th Inf., 197th Inf. Bde. - "The theme gives recognition to NCOs and their role as the backbone of the Army."

Retired Sgt. Maj. Walter Reichardt - "I'm a retired sergeant major, and I've always thought NCOs played a major role in the Army. This year's theme gives them that recognition."

Spec. Neal Wiggins, Co. C, 43rd Eng., 36th Eng. Grp. - "The theme confirms what I've always thought, 'NCOs accomplish more than anyone else in the Army.' They're are finally getting recognition for that."

Pvt. Joe Degler, 3rd Rgr., Bn., 75th Rgr. Regt. - "NCOs are getting the recognition they deserve for all they've contributed to the Army. I feel that NCOs are the true leaders of today."



PFC Lucy Lopez, 608th Ord. Co., 67th Maint. Bn., 36th Eng. Grp. - "The Army is finally placing more emphasis on the major role NCOs play in the Army."

This is a public service column.

It's for the benefit of you who receive chain letters and don't know what to do with them. On the one hand, you don't want to perpetuate the chain — you know it's illegal and a silly superstition. But there's also that element of doubt — after all, look at the dire consequences suffered by those who broke the chain and all the good that came to those who continued it.

Some of you lose sleep over chain letters as you struggle with what you should do. Others are downright scared of breaking the chain.

The PAO secretary is a good example.

I was slaving away as usual, over a hot word processor, cranking out another anonymous article on energy conservation when I heard this dreadful shrieking coming from across the hall.

Thinking I had a first-hand scoop in the making, I grabbed a camera and raced around the corner. There she was, standing on her desk, umbrella in hand, fending off — a mouse?...a lion?...a cockroach? I knew not what.

All I could see was another secretary from up the hall, staring and holding out a piece of paper toward her.

"Get her away from me!" our secretary shrieked. "She's got a chain letter! Keep her away."

We finally hurried the other secretary off, got ours off the desk, and while our admin specialist fanned her with a magazine, I shoved my way through the crowd that had gathered, to get some ice.

"You're not a fan of chain letters," I said as I applied an ice pack to her fevered brow.

The mere words made her tremble.

It was then I realized what this post, state, nation, needed, was a clearing house for people who don't want to continue chain letters, but who are afraid of breaking the chain.

Therefore, out of the goodness of my heart, my desire to serve humanity and since my life is such a disaster anyway, I volunteered my office as a repository for chain letters.

Send your letters to me. This way, you won't break the chain. Yet, you won't continue it either. I will assume all risks — the loss of my first born son, fire and brimstone or permanent KP duty for a basic training battalion as I take your letters and trash them.

There is, however, one chain item I will not accept. It is called Friendship Cakes.

Emma got one of those once. It's like a small glob of dough. Harmless enough in appearance, someone at the office gives you one, you bring it home and put it on your refrigerator or some other out of the way place. It then begins to grow — like the glob monster.

In theory, once it reaches a certain size, you break chunks off and give them to your friends before the thing takes over the entire neighborhood. Once you do that, you quickly bake and eat it.

Well, Emma has a way of forgetting things.

She remembered real quick though the day she went to wash clothes (she doesn't wash clothes very often either) for the glob had taken over the laundry room, spilling out at her feet as she opened the laundry room door.

She ran screaming from the house.

By the time she and the neighbor lady got back, it had taken over the kitchen and garage and eaten the dog.

They called the fire department. The firemen attacked with their axes, but each piece continued to grow. It was like a horror movie.

Finally, someone thought to toss the pieces into the oven.

That worked, so all the ovens in south Columbus were fired up for a giant cake bake. The neighbors were only too glad to help since the glob was by now eating everything in sight to include kudzu and fire ants.

When it was over, they had enough baked cake to feed the people of Bangladesh for a week.

I have no desire to relive that experience, so if you get a Friendship Cake, you know what to do with it — eat it.

Job satisfaction, retirement benefits listed as most important reup considerations

Association of the United States Army

On the list of reasons new recruits give for enlisting in the Army, medical and dental care is rarely mentioned. But at reenlistment time, health care ranks closely behind job satisfaction and retirement benefits among the most important reasons for staying in the Army.

Yet, despite the importance of adequate health care, there is a growing uncertainty on the part of military personnel about obtaining access to proper medical treatment.

In recent years, a number of Army treatment facilities — both medical and dental — stand closed because of government squabbling over how such facilities will be funded for the work they can perform.

At a time when 11 percent of the active Army is female and 57 percent is married, a Department of Defense attitude that for a long time minimized the readiness contributions of OB/GYN physicians is seriously affecting the morale of those who serve in and those who receive the services of the Army Medical Department.

This sends a clear signal to soldiers and their families that the military health care system is not being funded to meet the needs of its beneficiaries.

In addition, in 1988 military retirees and their families have seen increasing instances where medical treatment rooms were closed to them. First in a few isolated locations, then later with near uniformity, they were denied access to dental and optometry clinics and later to the use of other medical services. Even some reciprocal agreements for treatment of retirees at Veterans Administration hospitals were discontinued by the Defense Department, allegedly because funding was not available.

Both the Administration and Congress need to be made aware of the fact that military health care is a vital benefit for soldier's, retirees and their families. It must be brought to the attention of our government that the incentive of lifelong quality family health care, so important to mid-career retention and the readiness of our military units, is being seriously eroded by reductions in the capability of military health care facilities. When that is accomplished, there may be hope that those who serve and have served will again be entitled to receive access to treatment for their health problems.

Remain open to peace negotiations - but beware

Defense Report

Last December the General Secretary of the Soviet Union, Mikhail Gorbachev, visited the United States for an historic summit meeting with President Reagan. Most people think of the INF Treaty as the key result of the summit. The more important aspect, however, was that Gorbachev became viewed as a responsible world leader — an honor never before accorded to a Soviet leader.

More recently, Gen. Sergey Akhromeyev, the head of the Soviet armed forces, toured a number of our military bases, and both he and the General Secretary suggested that the Soviet Union was assuming a more defensive posture and that we should all cooperate to reduce tensions.

Of course, we should not be cynical about this opportunity — if opportunity it is. The problems come when you look at the record. Peaceful protestations haven't kept the Soviet Union from building an extraordinary military capability nor from taking actions that violate prior agreements, such as the ABM treaty.

And while Gorbachev may be absolutely sincere, it is not clear that he can, in fact, deliver. He has faced sharp opposition to his attempts to change and liberalize the Soviet economy and, sincere or not, it is not clear that he can succeed. It can also be suggested that while he is sincere, the thing he is sincere about is establishing the Soviet Union as a true superpower and that with its basket-case economy he has no choice but to seek cooperation with the West to gain its technology and economic know-how.

Whatever the motivation, it would be irresponsible of us not to pursue every avenue that might reduce the chance of war. We should remain open to opportunities for cooperation. It would be equally irresponsible for us to allow pious platitudes and exhortations about peaceful cooperation to cause us to disarm unilaterally or to dismantle NATO — the alliance, which has kept peace in Europe for 40 years.

We Americans are optimistic, and we believe in peaceful coexistence. We don't have very long memories. So now is a time to seek cooperation — but a time to do so with caution.

USARSA selects distinguished instructors of first quarter

By Keith F. Johnson
U.S. Army School Of Americas

Two soldiers from the General Subjects Division of the Department of Combat Operations are the winners of Distinguished Instructor awards for the first quarter of fiscal year 1989 at the U.S. Army School of Americas recently.

Capt. Victor M. Esparza and SSgt. Carlos Quinn, both serve in the school's General Subjects Division of the Department of Combat Operations. Their wins came as no surprise, according to Capt. Raymond Castillo, chief of the division.

"Both are highly professional, seasoned instructors," Castillo said. Esparza, a guest instructor from Mexico, is a small unit training management instructor, while Quinn teaches military leadership.

Esparza, who has taught at the school for 15 months, said since he is Latin American he has a distinct advantage over some of the other instructors at the school in understanding the personalities of the students.

"I try to understand the students, not in a teacher-pupil relationship but man to man," Esparza said.

"That's easier for me because Latin Americans have a particular way of thinking. I understand them, and they understand me."

Quinn, a U.S. instructor with the school for more than three years, said the award adds incentive for each instructor to work harder; but he receives enough incentive from another source.

"What we teach here is important because many of the students leave here and go to combat," Quinn said.

The award program, which began in fiscal year 1988, recognizes one officer from grades O-1 through O-6 and one noncommissioned officer from grades E-5 through E-8 for their outstanding work each quarter. During the fourth quarter, the Instructors of the Year are chosen from among the year's quarterly winners. They are then eligible to compete for the U.S. Army Training and Doctrine national Instructor of the Year award.

Cheryl M. Watters, Staff and Faculty Development Division chief says the program is important because "it recognizes those instructors who are doing an outstanding job and shows them how much they are appreciated."

"Those returning to Latin America with a trophy from the school have something to show for their contribution to this educational institution that, along with their memories, they can keep the rest of their lives."

MACH expands Pediatric Clinic hours

Martin Army Community Hospital

In a continued effort to supply quality care to the Fort Benning family member population, Martin Army Community Hospital expanded the hours of the Pediatric Clinic Jan. 9.

The clinic will now remain open until 5 p.m., excluding holidays and weekends. Appointments will still be required for those seeking care before 5 p.m.

The increased hours are intended to meet the needs of working parents whose schedules require special consideration. These changes will not effect the Pediatric phone screening system designed to provide fast, efficient service when your child is ill. If the demand for care increases beyond that which can be scheduled by 5 p.m., additional care providers will be made available to meet these needs.

Parents are reminded that this clinic is available to DoD-eligible beneficiaries, newborn through 15 years old, who are not enrolled in Family Practice. It is recommended that during clinic operating hours, parents call the clinic at 544-1086 to either schedule an appointment or have your child's condition recorded by our telephone screening clerk.

All calls will be responded to by a pediatrician who will schedule an appointment for your child based upon the severity of his condition. This service is not available beyond the normal clinic hours. If care is required beyond working hours, bring your child to the hospital Emergency Room.

Martin Army honors Employee of Year

Martin Army Community Hospital

One might say one of the toughest jobs to hold would be one in a major hospital. But a job in a hospital does not necessarily classify you as being a doctor or a nurse. There is another side to a hospital in which several jobs go unrecognized but are are essential to the mission itself. We're talking of those personnel who ensure the support for the medical profession.

One such person is Dorothy Kash. Kash is Martin Army Community Hospital's Employee of the Year for 1988. It not only means she is a great worker but also that she exhibits a certain quality of care toward her work and that of others.

Kash, a management analyst, Resource Management Division, juggles several important functions in her job. She conducts management studies, directs the Capital Investment Program, maintains 80 support agreements and serves as the MEDDAC Internal Control Coordinator. She also produces a monthly statistical analysis of the MEDDAC work load, which is one of the most widely used and informative management documents within the activity, according to her co-workers.

Further, Kash implemented an Internal Control Program that is widely favored among the hospital staff. She is said to display a dynamic and cooperative spirit toward all those around her and help others to improve their management programs.

In the last year, Kash has submitted $239,443 in Capital Investments projects for MACH, which will save $261,952 annually. Through the end of September, approval of $171,827 of the projects submitted had been received, and only recently, an additional $24,926 was approved bringing the amount of funded projects to $196,753.

About 24 percent more equipment was obtained by the Fort Benning MEDDAC in the last year because of Kash's ability to successfully market the Capital Investment Program.

The end result is increased participation in this program by the entire hospital to increase productivity as well as the quality and quantity of health care delivered to eligible beneficiaries.

Shortage of Army nurses prompts special recruiting effort

Army News Service

Enlisted soldiers in the Army's medical specialties have a new opportunity to advance in their military careers while at the same time helping the Army cope with its portion of the nation's nursing shortage.

Under a program developed by the U.S. Army Reserve Officers' Training Corps Cadet Command at Fort Monroe, Va., those medically-serving soldiers who plan to leave the Army in quest of a baccalaureate degree in nursing have become the object of special recruitment.

As prospective new members of the Army Nurse Corps, these soldiers merely need to qualify for entry into the Army ROTC nursing program on their chosen campuses.

Officials at the Cadet Command view soldiers-turned-nursing students as excellent candidates for the ROTC nursing program. "Those from medical military occupational specialties are familiar with the Army and the role of Army officers serving in medical fields," said Col. Alexander Woods, the command's director of marketing and public affairs. "What's more, the medical training they've received in the Army gives them an edge in the nursing education."

Woods said the new program, called "Green to Gold," embodies a referral system to help the Cadet Command track and contact potential nursing candidates currently on active duty. "Soldiers who express an interest in the ROTC nursing program are entered into the referral system, thus allowing the Cadet Command to monitor their status.

"We call the system 'Gold Quest.' It sends data on the soldier to a national center and on to the professor of military science at the college chosen by the soldier. In turn, the soldier will be contacted by a Green-to-Gold counselor, who can help with general preparation for college admissions paperwork and scholarship applications," Woods continued.

He added that with the desperate need for active duty nurses, the time is ripe for candidates to apply for nursing scholarships. "For the year 1989, several hundred scholarships have been designated solely for nursing applicants. A percentage of those is reserved for soldiers planning to attend nursing school at an historically black college or university."

As a further incentive to nursing candidates, the Cadet Command has extended the deadline for its receipt of nursing scholarship applications.

"It's now moved from Dec. 1 to May 1," Woods said.

VA Q&A

Veterans Administration

Q: I was a WAC and was also married to a veteran who died in 1960. I received a stipend from the VA for my two children until they turned 18. I am retired now and have a very modest income. Am I entitled to a pension from the VA?

A: As a wartime veteran, you may be eligible if you are permanently and totally disabled (or age 65 or older) and if your income and assets meet certain standards. Possible entitlements based on your husband's service can be evaluated following your application for pension at your nearest VA regional office.

Q: Can I use my VA-guaranteed home loan to buy land on which I plan to build a house in the future?

A: A VA-guaranteed loan cannot be used to buy undeveloped land unless it is part of a package that includes the building of your home.

Federal government emphasizes fighting fraud

Staff Judge Advocate's Office

In these times of budget cuts and attempts to curb unnecessary spending, the federal government is placing great emphasis on the fight against fraud. But, do you know what "fraud" is?

Title 18, U.S. Code, defines "fraud" as the knowing and willful falsification, concealment or cover-up by any trick, scheme or device of a material fact; or the making of any false, fictitious or fraudulent statement or representation; or the making or use of any false writing or document knowing it contains any false, fictitious or fraudulent statement or entry.

So, what does all this legal verbiage really mean? Essentially, what many practices once commonly "ignored" or considered to be "entitlements" of the job, are, in fact, illegal and can lead to dismissal, fines and/or imprisonment.

Some of the more serious types of fraud encountered in the military deal with procurement matters, the filing of false claims with the Staff Judge Advocate for reimbursement, falsification of temporary duty vouchers and application for benefits to which one is not entitled such as requests for basic allowance for quarters or separate rations by a divorced soldier who fails to report the divorce.

More common instances of fraud include the use of government telephones for private business, the purchase of post exchange or commissary items to sell to friends and the taking of government office supplies for personal use.

While people often consider such acts as "acceptable business practices;" they don't consider the monetary loss that we, as government employees and as taxpayers, suffer every year as a result of fraud. This does not even take into account the breach of special trust that private citizens place in government officials.

Only through the cooperation and active efforts of all Department of Defense personnel can fraud be curbed. Each federal employee should exert peer pressure on his co-workers to prevent fraud. If a person is suspected of committing fraudulent acts, details should be reported to his supervisor, the Military Police or other investigative agencies.

There is also a DoD fraud and waste hotline at toll free 1-800-424-9098, autovon 223-5080 or FTS 693-5080 for reporting suspected infractions. Information may also be forwarded in writing to Defense Hotline, The Pentagon, Washington, D.C. 20301.

Locally, contact the Military Police at 545-5222 or the CID at 545-7950.

Take a bite of fraud — take a bite out of crime.

Rider's protective clothing can minimize injuries

Army Safety Office

Since cyclists don't have the protection of a steel shell, their safety depends on avoiding an accident.

Skill is an important factor in accident avoidance. But in the event of an accident, a rider's protective clothing can help to minimize injuries.

AR 385-55: Prevention of Motor Vehicle Accidents, which became effective in April 1987, requires that soldiers wear protective equipment whenever and wherever (on and off post) they ride a motorcycle or moped. Such protective equipment doesn't end with a helmet. Every soldier-rider must wear proper eye protection, long pants, long-sleeved shirt or jacket, full-fingered gloves and sturdy shoes with a heel.

The most important piece of protective equipment a motorcyclist can wear is an approved motorcycle safety helmet. Studies prove that wearing a helmet saves lives by reducing head injuries.

Helmet styles and construction materials vary — half-shell, three-quarter, full-face, kevlar, polycarbonate fiberglass. Any helmet that meets Department of Transportation requirements for motorcycle helmet construction will also comply with AR 385-55 requirements. While color, design, graphics and price may influence decisions about which helmet to buy, protection should be the primary consideration.

Installation motorcycle safety instructors, dealers, other riders, and motorcycle magazines are good sources of current information on what's available.

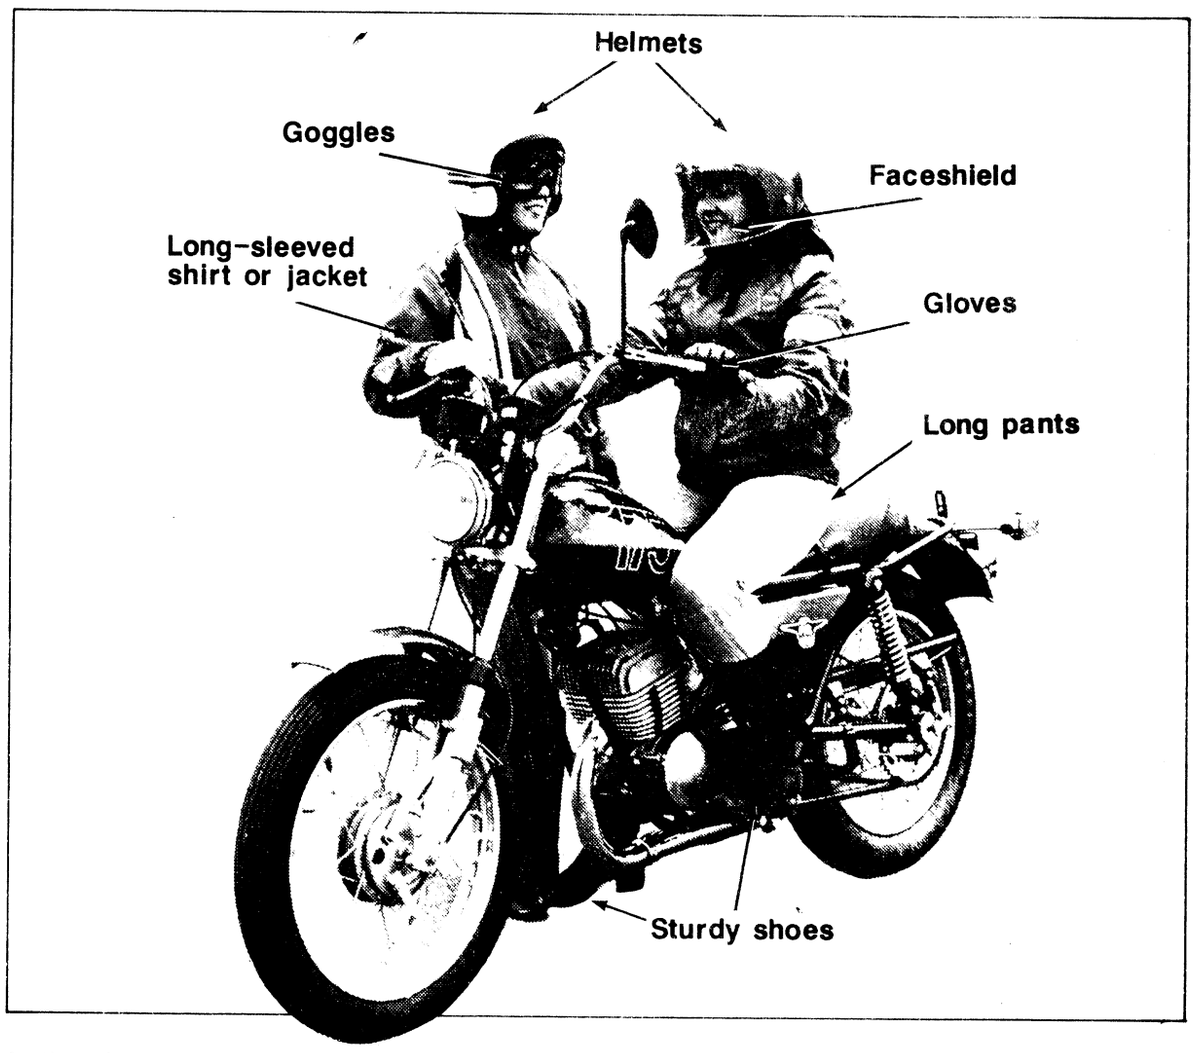
Helmets protect in two ways. The outer shell resists penetration and abrasion while the inner liner absorbs shock by slowly collapsing under impact. Both the shell and liner self-destruct during an accident, spreading impact forces throughout the helmet material. For this reason, a helmet must be replaced after an accident.

AR 385-55 also requires that helmets be properly fastened under the chin. No helmet can offer protection if it comes off during an accident.

Helmets should not be hung on mirrors, turn signals or sissy bars because the inner liner can be damaged. And spare helmets should not be carried on a sissy bar because the vibration can cause damage. If a spare helmet must be carried, it should be securely fastened to a luggage rack or carried in a tail trunk.

AR 385-55 requires soldiers to wear proper eye protection — clear goggles, shatter-resistant safety glasses, or a faceshield attached to the helmet. A windshield is not considered proper face protection.

Motorcycle riders with shields covering their faces suffer fewer and less-serious facial injuries than those who are unprotected. Helmets with full-face coverage, strong chin pieces and energy-absorbing liners are especially effective in reducing face injuries.



Faceshields may cover all or part of the face. Several types are available, including nonflip, bubble, flat and flip-up types. Whatever the type, the shield must be securely fastened and should be impact-resistant and free from scratches. (Shields with a VESC-8 or ANSI Z 87.1 standard are impact and penetration resistant.

Helmets with full-face coverage, strong chin pieces, and energy-absorbing liners are especially effective in reducing face injuries.

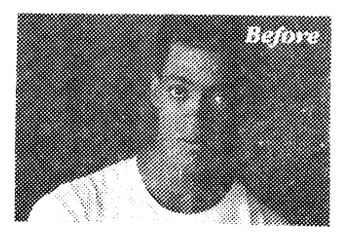
Goggles offer eye protection only. They should be clear, VESC-8 or ANSI Z 87.1 approved, and designed to be worn with helmets. Their design should also allow airflow to the face for comfort, easy breathing and to prevent fogging.

AR 385-55 requires full-fingered gloves, long pants and a long- sleeved shirt or jacket to help protect cyclists from windburn, sunburn, wind chill, dehydration, hypothermia, road debris and injuries during a fall.

Protective clothing should be made of heavy, high-visibility material; the heavier the material, the more protection it offers. Sturdy boots and shoes protect the lower legs and feet from road debris and injuries during a fall. Tennis shoes and sandals are not acceptable.

ASK THE JUDGE

By William F. Sutton Jr.
Staff Judge Advocate's Office



Q: I've been providing child care in my home on a part-time basis. I recently learned I have to pay something called a self-employment tax. What is this tax and how much will I have to pay?

A: The self-employment tax is the social security tax for people who are in business for themselves. This tax is similar to the social security tax withheld from the pay of wage earners by their employers. Since social security benefits are available to people who are self-employed just as they are to wage earners, the self-employment tax payments contribute to coverage under the social security system.

The self-employment tax is paid by people who carry on a trade or business. Any activity carried on in good faith to make a profit is considered a trade or business. You do not, however, have to have a regular full-time business to be considered self-employed.

Not all people who are self-employed must pay the self-employment tax. Only those people with net earnings of $400 or more must pay this tax. The tax is 13.02 percent of earnings in 1988. Net earnings is the difference between gross income (the amount of money you take in from your business) minus allowable business expenses (the costs of running your business). For example, Jane Smith takes in $1,000 from her part-time

By using the following procedure, soldiers on the Family Housing Waiting List can use this chart to estimate when they can expect quarters:

Locate your category of housing.

Note eligibility date located on the same line as your category.

Calculate the time difference between the eligibility date listed and your eligibility date. The difference is the approximate time you still have to wait for housing.

EXAMPLE: If the latest eligibility date of the person who last received housing in your category was May 15, 1988, and your date of eligibility is Sept. 15, 1988, you can expect housing in about four months. If you do not know your eligibility date, contact the Family Housing Office at building 399, 545-3107.

business in 1988. Her allowable business expenses for that same year were $400. Therefore, Smith's net earnings for 1988 are $600 ($1,000 in gross income minus $400 in business expenses). Her self-employment tax for 1988 is $78.12 ($600 multiplied by the 13.02 percent self-employment tax rate).

To pay the self-employment tax, you need to have Form 1040 (U.S. Individual Income Tax Return) and Form 1040 SE (Computation of Social Security Self-Employment Tax). Form 1040 SE is used to compute the tax, which is then reported on line 48 of Form 1040. It is important that these forms be filed on time to avoid penalties by the IRS.

SPIRITUAL

CCD programs teach values

By Debra Galle
USAIC Chaplain's Office

Parents of children in seventh and eighth grade Catholic Confraternity of Christian Doctrine programs are invited to a new approach of teaching children about sexuality and respect for life. The program, entitled "Valuing Values," is unique in that parents must preview the program before their children may attend.

The program will be conducted Feb. 5, 10-11 a.m. at Dexter School. It is a three-session adult introduction to an overview of the program, which will be presented to the students at a later date. Parent's attendance at the three sessions is required before the students can participate in the program.

This is a family-based education program rooted in the teachings of the Catholic Church and includes high quality video tapes and handouts, which will provide parents the setting, support and information to talk about sexuality.

According to Phil Reilly, Director of Catholic Religious Education, the program is "intended to include the parents in their children's education of the value system. Parents need to remember that this is a Catholic-based education program teaching a reverence and a respect for life."

For more information, contact Phil Reilly, 545-5508, Jim and Karen Crowley, 682-8948 or Marty and Donna Worley at 689-8330.

MCCW announces 1989 schedule

USAIC Chaplain's Office

The Fort Benning chapter of the Military Council of Catholic Women has announced the program schedule for the first quarter of 1989. This year's theme is "Christian Women in an Unchristian World."

"The aim of MCCW," according to chapter president Claudia Wolf, "is to help Catholic women of our military community to grow and develop spiritually through shared programs..."

A "mini-retreat" was held Jan. 6 and included a "Spiritual Scavenger Hunt," pot luck lunch and speech on "Women in the Bible" by Sister Mary Christine of Blessed Trinity, Ala. Upcoming events are as follows:

Feb. 3 - Guest speaker on "Love and Christian Marriage".

March 3 - Guest speaker, Andy Merritt from the Crisis Pregnancy Center.

March 21 - "The Last Hours of Christ" (evening program)

April 7 - Elections and pot luck luncheon. Guest speaker, Jim Phelps on "Medical Ethics".

May 5 - Installation of new board member and reception.

Two programs are continually sponsored.

The First Friday meetings are conducted the first Friday of every month and consist of a Rosary at 9:30 a.m., a brief business meeting followed by the program at 10 a.m., and then noon Mass at Main Post Chapel.

Community Ministry is supported through MCCW in several areas including teaching Confraterity of Christian Doctrine, cleaning the chapel, laundering altar linens and involvement in a "prayer chain".

All meetings are held at the Religious Education Center, corner of Ingersoll and Dixie, building 229. Free baby-sitting is provided there. For more information, contact Claudia Wolf, 682-2090.

God wants to give more than His Son

By Chap. Mark Benz
USAIC Chaplain's Office

God wants to give us more than the birth of His Son.

The birth of His son was a time of giving and receiving.

Do you remember a time when you searched for a "special" present to give to the one you care about?

I remember the events of the days before Christmas, how I had searched for the perfect gift for my wife. I finally found it, but it was too late to get it before Christmas.

I decided that to redeem myself, I would make gift cards for her for the things I wished I had gotten her.

I casually mentioned that there should be at least one more gift under the tree, which sent our two oldest girls scurrying to the tree. Upon reading her "card coupons," my wife smiled.

Similarly, God wants us to have one more gift besides the birth of His Son. He wants us to enjoy His presence in our lives at all times. He wants the warmth, joy, love and the giving and receiving at Christmas time to be constant and ongoing in our lives. Not only does he want us to observe the coming of the Savior into the world but also to receive His coming into our lives.

He wants His Son to be with us in every area and in every part of our lives — our ups and our downs. This is His "one more gift" — His presence. Jesus lived, died and rose up again to bridge the gap between us and Himself, so that He could be with us and we could be with Him.

Rain deserves special attention when driving

Fort Benning Safety Office

Rain, whether it's a heavy downpour or a light sprinkle, deserves special attention when you are driving. The road surface becomes dangerously slippery and your visibility is often reduced.

Most drivers realize that if it's raining hard with a lot of water on the road, they should slow down. The posted speed limit is for ideal conditions. But many people do not realize that a light shower is even more dangerous than a downpour. You see, a little water mixes with the oil and grease on the road to form a slick coating. If it is raining lightly, the oily film will not wash away very quickly.

Water puddles are a hazard because they may affect the brakes, and they may be deeper than you expect. Water completely covering a section of road is especially serious. The water current may be strong enough to wash your car away.

Visibility is also a major concern when driving in the rain. The road spray from other cars can coat your windshield with a fine oily coating that blurs your vision.

What can you do to improve your chances of avoiding an accident in the rain?

First of all, turn your headlights on. You will not only see better, but other drivers will be able to see you.

Use your defroster to keep the moisture off the inside of your windshield.

On wet pavement, a car needs more distance to stop than on dry pavement. In some cases as much as 10 times longer distances are needed to stop. Therefore, allow a lot more room between your car and the one ahead.

Pedestrians are more vulnerable in inclement weather. They are dodging puddles and balancing umbrellas, so look out for them.

Check your wipers frequently and make sure the washer solvent is full. As soon as you notice that the wipers are streaking, have them replaced.

Driving is a full-time job. Concentrate on the road, and don't let the radio, passengers or others distract you. The life you save may be your own.

DoD releases study of terrorist groups

An overview of 52 of the "more notorious" terrorist organizations and their habits has been released by the Department of Defense.

For sale to the public through U. S. Government Printing Office outlets, the 131-page "Terrorist Group Profiles" is designed to "provide the American people detailed information about key terrorist groups and thereby strip away their mystique," says a preface to the study written by Secretary of Defense Frank C. Carlucci III.

The book categories terrorist groups by geographic location and provides information on each group's membership strength, key leaders, background, ideological orientation, target audiences and objectives, and chronologies of selected incidents.

Army personnel teams to visit Europe

Officers stationed in U. S. Army Europe will have an opportunity to meet with branch management and assignment representatives during a Feb. 27 - March 10 assistance visit to European military communities by U. S. Total Army Personnel Command teams.

Three eight-member teams, composed of members of PERCOM's Officer Personnel Management Directorate's Combat Arms, Combat Support Arms, Combat Service Support, Warrant Officer and Colonel's Divisions will visit all major USAREUR communities. Each team will present Officer Personnel Management System briefings and conduct individual interviews with interested commissioned and warrant officers.

Individuals within one year of Date of Eligibility for Return from Overseas or those with specific personnel problems or concerns are encouraged to contact their local personnel service centers or Personnel Service Companies to schedule interviews with the OPMD teams.

Interviews must be requested prior to the end of January to ensure availability of the individual's Officer Record Brief and official microfiche record for the session.

Training for USAREUR driver's license

Most soldiers due for a permanent-change-of-station move to U. S. Army Europe probably realize that upon arrival, they must pass a driving test to be authorized to operate a privately owned vehicle on the streets of Germany.

But perhaps fewer soldiers know that in preparation for the test they have stateside access to the specially developed "Drivers Handbook and Examination Manual for Germany" (USAREUR Pamphlet 190-34).

Although made available in limited supply, the pamphlet may be ordered by unit publications-account holders as an aid in preparing those soldiers who intend to drive their vehicles during their tours of duty in Germany.

Requisitions may be sent, through normal publications channels, to: Commander, FORSCOM, ATTN: AFIM-ASD, Bldg. 206A, Fort McPherson, Ga. 30330.

Army helps usher in Bush administration

When George Herbert Walker Bush becomes the president of the United States today, the Army will be there, as it was when George Washington took his first oath of office in 1789, and as it has been for every inauguration since.

The Army's participation in events commemorating the new administration's ascent to the White House began in early 1988 — before the election took place.

The 1989 Armed Forces Inaugural Committee is a joint service agency chaired by Maj. Gen. Donald C. Hilbert. Originally staffed by five military personnel, the AFIC has now ballooned to more than 1,500 for the job of coordinating the efforts of some 7,000 service members involved in the inaugural spectacle.

TRADOC system manager board adjourns

The fiscal 1990 project manager —Training and Doctrine Command system manager board recently closed its proceedings, according to Army personnel officials.

The board met to consider colonels and promotable lieutenant colonels who are members of the materiel acquisition management program — skills 6T — for positions as project managers.

For the first time, the board also centrally selected eligible colonels and promotable lieutenant colonels for TRADOC system manager positions.

Board results are expected to be released along with the colonel command board results in March.

Officers selected for War College course

The Senior Service College Selection Board has selected officers to attend various service colleges and identified all officers eligible to take the nonresident Army War College Corresponding Studies Course, according to officials at the U. S. Total Army Personnel Agency.

Selection for the AWCCSC is based on an order-of-merit list ranking. Currently 180 officers are eligible for the non-resident course.

Record insurance dividends coming to veterans

Department of Veterans Service

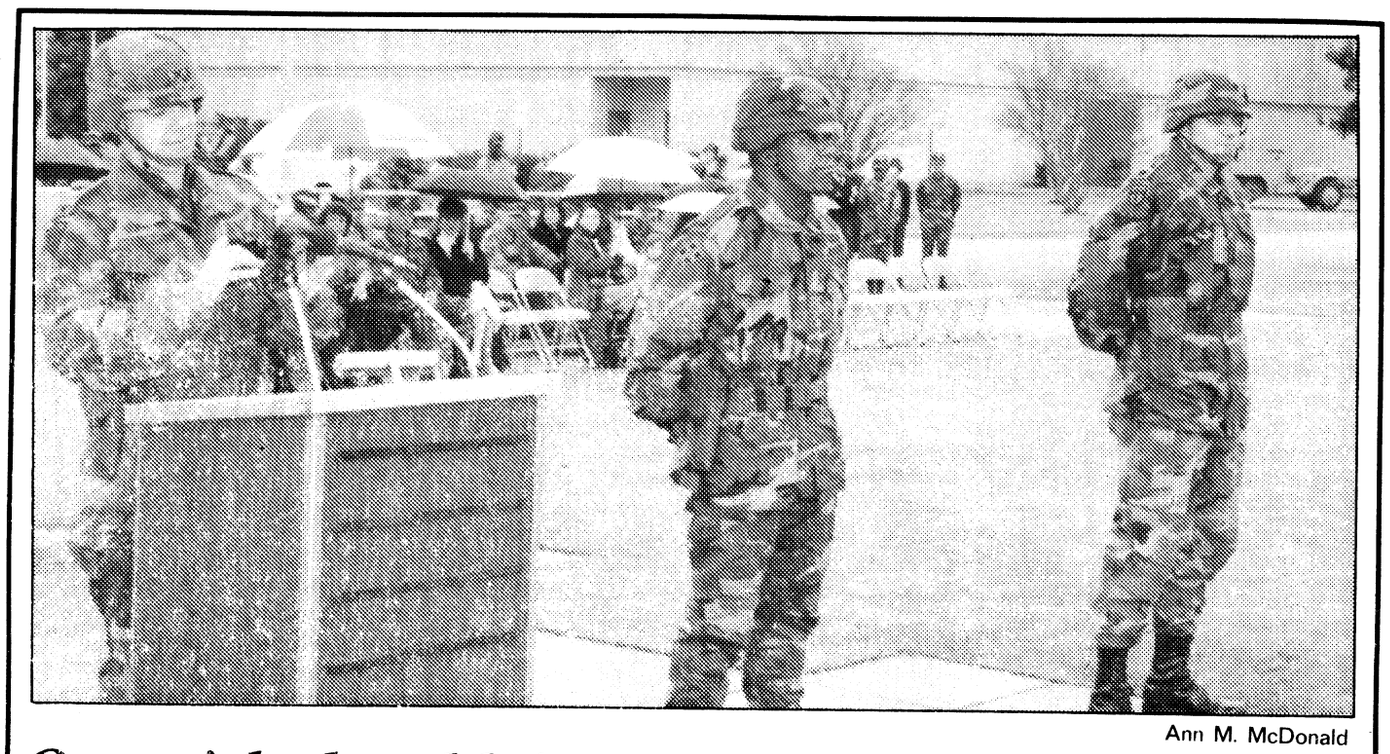
ATLANTA — About 165,000 Georgia veterans who have kept their GI life insurance in force will share in record dividends totaling $1,004,930,000 – $44 million more than was paid out last year. It is the first time that dividends have reached the billion-dollar mark.

Georgia Commissioner of Veterans Affairs Pete Wheeler said, "These dividends are payable on the anniversary dates of individual policies, and the amounts received by policyholders will vary, depending on the insurance plan under which a veteran is protected, the amount of coverage provided by the policy, the length of time the policy has been in force, and the veteran's age at the time of issue

Wheeler emphasized that no application for the annual dividend is necessary. "In fact," he said, "inquiries about dividends could cause a delay in payments. Dividend payments will be made automatically and in the manner previously selected by the policy-holder, choices range from cash to the purchase of paid-up insurance."

The average dividend payable to the approximately one thousand Georgia veterans of World War I still holding their U.S. Government Life Insurance (USGLI) policies is about $257.

Georgia has some 55,000 World War II veterans who have kept their National Service Life Insurance policies in force, and their dividends will average $453, depending on the type of policy.



The state's 6,000 Korean War veterans who still have their Veterans Special Life Insurance will receive an average dividend of $310.

The Veterans Reopened Insurance program will share in some $32.9 million in dividends being paid to some 125,000 veterans nationwide. Dividends will average $357. Around 2,400 of these veterans live in Georgia.

Dividends for individuals covered under each program will vary according to age, plan selected, and length of time the policy has been in force.

Government life insurance has been issued through various periods starting Jan. 1, 1919, through May 2, 1966, to veterans of World Wars I and II and the Korean Conflict. The only VA-administered program now open to new issues is Service Disabled Veterans Insurance. It is available, without dividends, to veterans with service on or after April 24, 1951, who have a service-connected disability.

Not affected by the dividend payout are Vietnam Era veterans and post-Vietnam Era veterans who fall under different life insurance programs. They are the Servicemen's Group Life Insurance, the Veterans Mortgage Life Insurance and the Veterans Group Life Insurance. These are group programs that do not pay individual dividends.

Cols College's MBA program is investment in the future

By Joyce L. Fowler
Columbus College

Looking for an off-hour activity that is productive and doesn't waste time? Interested in meeting professional people your age and intellectual level? Want to increase your civilian as well as military social contacts? Would you believe you can accomplish all of this and enhance your career at the same time?

Many military personnel stationed at Fort Benning have had these needs met by enrolling in the Master of Business Administration Program at Columbus College.

The MBA program is designed to fit the schedule of civilian and military students who are employed either part or full-time, as well as for full-time students. The program accommodates the non-business graduate as well as the student with an undergraduate degree in business and enhances skills in management, accounting, marketing and computer information systems.

Professional advancement in today's business world, both civilian and military, is greatly dependent on skills at a level frequently above the baccalaureate degree. For the bright, aggressive, career-minded individual, the graduate degree is almost a must for career satisfaction. Striving for all they can be, some young men and women have used their time at Fort Benning as an investment in their future.

Services open more jobs to women

American Forces Information Services

Historically, service women have been restricted from some assignments and positions open to men.

That is changing. The Secretary of Defense has agreed to service proposals to open many positions to women. As a result of this and earlier decisions, more than 24,000 new positions throughout the services were opened to women within the past year.

The changes in the rules were largely the result of a report by the Department of Defense Task Force on Women in the Military.

"Under law or related service policy, women have always been prohibited from serving in combat," said Marine Corps Lt. Col. John Gaieski, deputy director of personnel utilization for DoD. "But the rules the services were using to determine which non-combat-support positions were open or closed to women were being interpreted differently by each of the services. There was no standardization."

Now the services are using the same standard. Known as the DoD "risk rule," the standard says that non-combat units and positions can be closed to women only on grounds of risk of exposure to direct combat, hostile fire or capture.

This is provided that the type, degree and duration of risk are equal to or greater than those experienced by associated combat units (of similar land, sea or air type) in the same theater of operations.

Based on the risk rule:

The Army will open engineer combat-support equipment companies and transmission and distribution specialist positions. These changes expand positions available to women in such units as headquarters and headquarters companies; some air defense artillery battalions; signal battalions in some light infantry divisions; and division rear-area operation centers.

The Navy has opened a majority of combat logistic force ship positions, as well as those on EP-3 electronic surveillance aircraft and underwater construction teams.

The Air Force has opened construction-oriented Red Horse and Mobile Aerial Port Squadrons as well as TR-1, U-2, EC-130 and C-29 aircraft.

The Marine Corps has opened embassy security-guard programs and security-force positions at certain locations.

Gaieski said the job openings will have a major impact not only on career opportunities for women, but on promotions as well.

"Military people are evaluated for increased responsibility and promotions based to a large degree on the types of positions they have have held," he said. "To qualify for command positions in some services, for example, the service member must have held certain positions. If one of those positions is not open to women, their chances for advancement could be affected."

Most energy terms easy to understand when related to something more familiar

By Becky Ray
Energy Branch

Energy terms can be confusing, especially since each type of energy is measured differently. Watts, kilowatt hours and British thermal units don't really mean a lot to most of us unless we can relate the terms to something we're already familiar with.

To relate and compare forms of energy use, we can convert them into British Thermal Units (btu). A btu is the amount of heat required to raise the temperature of one pound of water one degree Fahrenheit. It's about the same amount of heat that is given off when a wooden match is burned completely. A 100-watt light bulb uses 340 btu in an hour. A gallon of fuel oil will provide 140,000 btu. And a ton of coal will produce 25 million btu.

Other common energy terms are:

- wattage — an amount of electric power expressed in watts; the power needed to operate an electrical appliance or device.
- Kwh — kilowatt-hour. Amount of electric energy produced by one watt for one hour.
- Mbtu — a million Btu. Last year, Fort Benning used over 2.86 million mbtu in natural gas, electricity, fuel oil and propane at a cost of almost $17.5 million dollars.
- therm — a measure of heat content. One therm equals 100,000 British thermal units.
- barrel — the standard measurement of oil in the petroleum industry, equaling 42 gallons.
- quad — A unit for measuring large quantities of energy in any form. It is one quadrillion btu, which equals about seven and a half billion gallons of gasoline. In 1987, the United States used over 76 quads.
- mbde — million barrels a day of oil equivalent. In 1980, the United States used over 19 mbde.
- mcf — thousand cubic feet. Used to measure gases, such as natural gas, at ambient pressure.

It's important to have an understanding of the amounts of energy we use and to take an interest in energy issues because our lives are so profoundly influenced by them.

The availability and cost of oil determine gasoline prices at the pump and transportation costs (ultimately paid by the consumer) for most everything we buy.

Energy is a major factor in the operation of the national economy and world political arena.

Many environmental problems can also be positively or negatively influenced by energy policies.

Because all these things have a dramatic influence on the quality of our lives, its important that we all take responsibility for our energy consumption by using energy wisely.

PERSONNEL Q&A

Total Army Personnel Agency

Q: Will there be a fiscal year 1989 early out program for enlisted personnel?

A: At the present time, there are no plans for an early out program for fiscal year 1989.

Q: Are HIV-infected soldiers eligible for reenlistment and military schooling?

A: If a soldier meets medical retention standards, the soldier may reenlist for the Regular Army Reenlistment Option or Current Station Stabilization Option and may attend career progression schools. HIV-positive soldiers will not be assigned to formal schooling that results in award of MOS, skill qualification identifier or additional skill identifier.

Veterans Administration gains cabinet-level status

Veterans Administration

The Veterans Administration becomes the Department of Veterans Affairs and the 14th member of the president's cabinet on March 15. This move gives proper federal government recognition to the service, sacrifice and needs of America's veterans," said outgoing VA Administrator Thomas K. Turnage. "They were there when the country needed them in defense of our freedom, so they should be represented at the highest councils of our government.

"VA represents something like a third of our nation, if you count the veterans, plus their families," Turnage said. "With the scope and magnitude of activities in which we're involved, we really belong at the policy-making levels, which is a benefit, not only to the veteran, but to the country as a whole."

With more than 245,000 employees and facilities in 48 continental states, the District of Columbia, Puerto Rico and the Philippines, the new department is second in size only to the Department of Defense. Nearly one-third of the nation's population are veterans (more than 27 million) or dependents and survivors (about 53 million) of deceased veterans. All of them could be eligible for VA benefits and services, Turnage said.

Veterans benefits have escaped the budget-cutting ax. "If you look at the last eight years, you'll find that there has been a continuous increase," said Turnage. "Even in the environment in which we found ourselves in 1988, we had $400 million more than we did the year before.

"But I guess more importantly, we've had a change of direction because President-elect George Bush is coming in," said Turnage. "I've gotten to speak with him in the presence of veterans, and based on his experience as a bona fide veteran hero himself, I'm of the conviction that we're going to continue to get that kind of support for veterans."

Rising in the government hierarchy and getting a new name will not result in many changes in the agency's method of operation. "There will be some cosmetic-type changes because of personnel titles resulting from the elevation in the government hierarchy, to include some deputy and assistant secretaries. But overall, I think that we will be continuing the very firm mission, which is based on the moral obligation we have to veterans."

He noted that medical care will continue being one of the agency's top priorities in the future because of an aging veteran population, medical technology advancements and other considerations.

"Many people don't understand, for example, that in our 172 medical centers, which comprise the biggest health care operation in the world, we train half of the physicians in this country," said Turnage. 'We also have a very sophisticated research and development program. Initially this was started because of the different kinds of maladies associated with war. But it has grown to complexity, sophistication and scope. For example, we have some 38 labs involved in research on the AIDS problem." VA also operates 231 outpatient clinics, 117 nursing homes and 27 domiciliaries.

The agency's chief medical director, Dr. John Gronvall, said the agency will now be able to participate fully in cabinet-level discussions concerning national health issues. VA, through its affiliations with more than 100 academic health centers and its research activities, does extensive work in national health concerns such as Alzheimer's disease and AIDS.

"VA has made major contributions to the advancement of medicine in this country," said Gronvall. "We in the Department of Medicine and Surgery look forward to an even greater role in helping to shape the nation's future health policies."

The Department of Veterans Affairs will continue coordinating services with DoD and most other major government agencies. "In defense, per se, we're involved with them in the use of records, determination of eligibility and now on a growing basis, we have some 350 different kinds of interface agreements with DoD for medical care," Turnage explained. "In some instances, you have a dual status, where not only is the individual a military retiree, but he's also a veteran."

Turnage noted that the new cabinet-level agency will also continue playing a major role in the nation's housing industry as VA has since the loan guarantee program was established nearly 45 years ago. More than 13 million veterans and their dependents have received more than $300 billion in VA home loan guarantees. "We recently celebrated the 13 millionth loan guarantee for veterans," said Turnage. "If you stop and think about it, not only in housing construction, but all of the associated businesses that relate to housing, you find that the loan guarantee program has a terrific impact on the national economy. When we change our interest rates, we notice it has an impact on the change of the private sector's rates also.

"We also have a tremendous impact on education," he continued. "In terms of numbers, we recently dedicated a program to a young man who was the 20 millionth recipient of an educational grant. I think the significant aspect of that is the fact that it has not been a net cost to the nation. It's really been a benefit to the nation. It's the most cost-effective program we've had, and it's going great. Anytime you ask a group of people if any of them have benefited from a VA educational program, you'll have a number of people who will respond yes.

"We have about the third biggest budget in the country," said Turnage. "That constitutes more than $28 billion in the current fiscal year budget." More than 95 percent of VA's budget goes for benefits and services.

After studying veterans programs of other nations around the world, Turnage has determined that the United States veterans program "is the most moral and sensitive in the world."

"I think that's only right," he said. We should on a continuing basis be sure we meet the obligation to our veterans."

MBA program

said a conversation with another West Point graduate made him realize the need for additional education and skills to insure success in the civilian business community.

With a non-business undergraduate degree, Lt. Jones took three quarters of business courses before entering the MBA program. Now in his second quarter of the MBA program, Jones is already using his newly-acquired skills in his current job. He recently automated his company's records.

SSgt. Steven Kopp with Headquarters and Headquarters Detachment, 67th Maintenance Battalion, graduated from Columbus College with a bachelor's degree in Finance before entering the MBA program. Kopp's enrollment in the MBA program is unique because he is an enlisted soldier whereas the program usually attracts officers.

Kopp has less than three months to go in his military career and less than five months until MBA graduation. A native of Long Island, Kopp plans to return to the Northeast after graduation where his goal is a position in financial management or management consulting.

Kopp states that the MBA puts an enlisted soldier in a position for early promotion with better opportunity for choice assignments and improved income. Kopp believes the MBA has increased his credibility, and he has been included in more decision making than most staff sergeants. His education has provided him with insight into better ways of personnel management and allowed him to use linear programming for solving problems.

Kopp finds the quality of the MBA program to be excellent, the work difficult and challenging and the standards high. The amount of computer work required is incredible — he has learned four or five software packages, which have provided him with computer skills that can be used with other software. He installed the computers used by his battalion and has been called on frequently by his co-workers for problem-solving advice.

Capt. Gary Baker's story is similar in part to that of Jones and Kopp. From Spokane, Wash., Baker is a graduate of Washington State University with a degree in Pharmacy. He attended college on a ROTC scholarship and entered the Medical Service Corp as a captain.

He selected Columbus College's MBA program because of the convenience and quality of the program. The master's program will improve his chances for advancement in the military as well as provide him with timely skills that can be used in civilian employment. The combination of Pharmacy and MBA degrees open career doors for Baker.

With improved computer skills, Baker has solved some computer problems at work. An advanced marketing research project gave him insight into how patients perceive the pharmacy and allowed him to do some creative and effective problem solving. Like Kopp and Jones, he recognized that the MBA degree will help him in competing with other officers for advancement.

"Some of our best students have been active duty personnel stationed at Fort Benning," said Dr. William Hamilton, MBA director. "As a matter of fact, we have more students in the Abbott Turner School of Business's MBA program who are graduates of the United States Military Academy than any other college with the exception of Columbus College and the University of Georgia."

"Dennis Fritts of the Post Army Continuing Education Office has been very supportive and cooperative," he continued. "Military personnel may take the Graduate Management Admission Test at Fort Benning on the Monday following the regular Saturday testing date. Since the test is given four times a year, Fort Benning soldiers actually have eight dates on which the test may be taken. A good MBA program requires talented students, capable and dedicated faculty and a strong curriculum; we have all of these ingredients."

Registration for the upcoming GMAT is Feb. 15, with the test being given on March 18 at Columbus College and March 20 at Fort Benning. If the Turner School of Business sounds like what you need to move you toward your career potential, there are many people who want to help you. You can contact your Education Office or call the Turner School of Business, 404-568-2044, and ask for MBA information.

Tips for job-hunting family members

Army News Service

Changes to Army procedures that affect the way family members get considered and hired for federal jobs have opened up many opportunities in the past.

Army personnel officials point out, however, that there are often fewer jobs than applicants. A job cannot be guaranteed to every family member who wants one. This is especially true today because of congressional budget cuts and hiring freezes.

Your job search, however, will be easier if you understand the new procedures and remember the following tips:

★ Keep good records of previous employment, education, training, special achievements and volunteer work. Be prepared to document complete information from your background and experience when applying for a job.

★ When moving, start your job search as soon as you know your new location. Find out about the job market and how to apply for an opening before you move. Family-member employment-assistance personnel at your local Army Community Service office can help.

Follow all application instructions. Submit a complete, neat application package by the closing date of a vacancy announcement.

★ Follow up on each application or interview. If not selected, analyze your weaknesses and correct them.

★ Be available for interviews and to start a job. To apply for a job means you're ready to work.

Representatives in the Civilian Personnel office or Army Community Service center can explain the provisions of employment programs geared to Army family members. Don't miss out by being misinformed. Arm yourself with this information and become a strong competitor.

Taylor assumes command of 1st Battalion, 11th Inf. Regt., TSB

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

It's out with the old and in with the new for both the year and the commander at 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, The School Brigade.

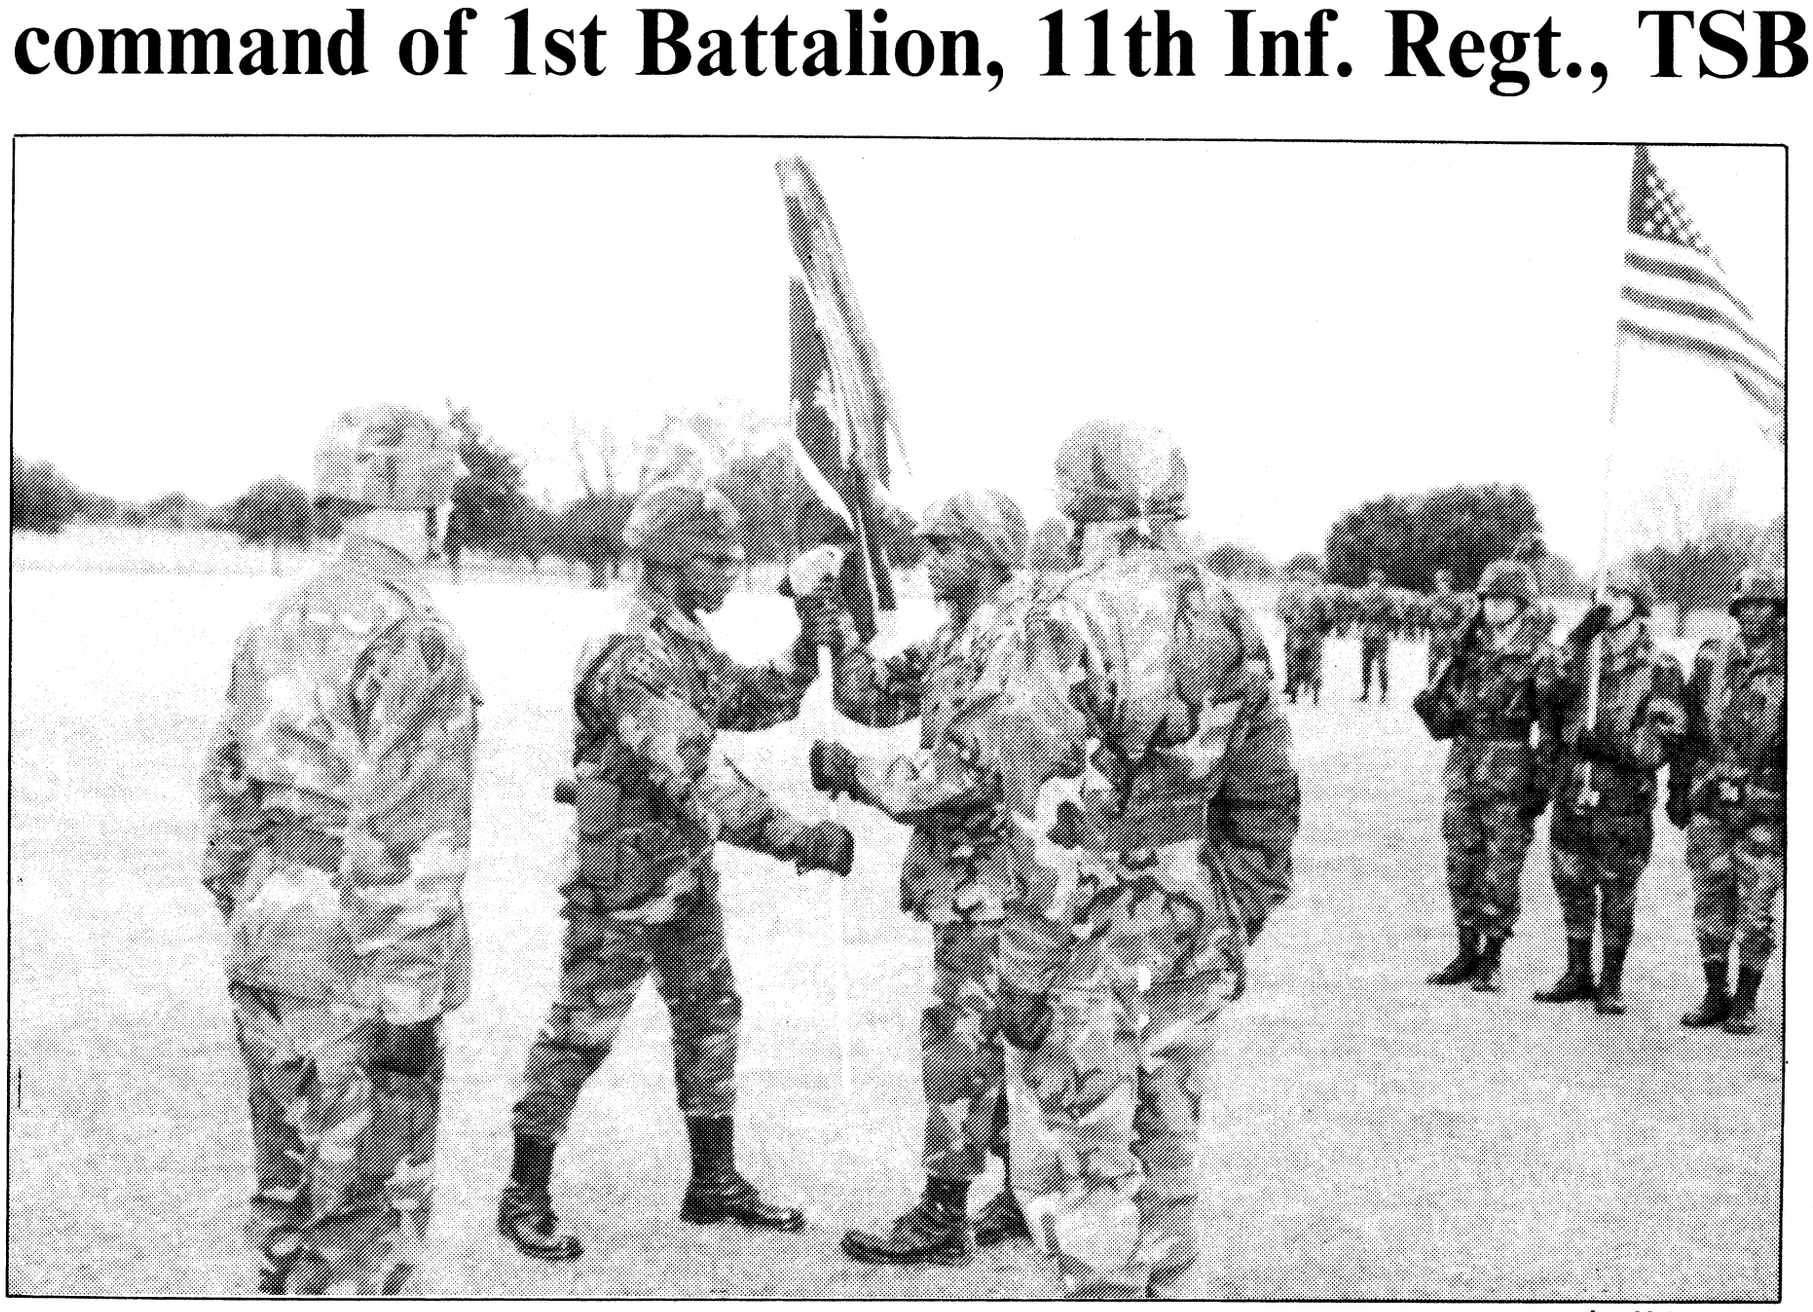
Lt. Col. Ben F. Taylor



Taylor comes here from Fort Leavenworth, Kan. where he served as a staff leader at the Combined Arms Staff School, Command and General Staff College.

He served as an enlisted soldier and noncommissioned officer from 1962 to 1970. He was commissioned by direct appointment to 1st lieutenant of Infantry in 1970.

He's had assignments in Panama, Vietnam, Kingdom of Saudi Arabia and various posts within the U.S.

Taylor earned his bachelor of science degree in history at the University of Arizona at Tucson, Ariz. His military education includes Ranger, Air Assault, Jungle Warfare and Airborne Schools.

His awards and decorations include the Combat Infantryman's Badge, Bronze Star, Defense Meritorious Service Medal, Meritorious Service Medal with three oak leaf clusters and the Army Commendation Medal.

Deer hunting permit due back Jan. 30

To avoid loss of hunting privileges, deer hunters are reminded to return the Fort Benning Deer Permit, FB (ENG) Form 48, within 15 days of the close of deer season. Permits may be returned by placing them in drop boxes located at the Outdoor Recreation Office, building 247, or the Deer Check Station, building 5883, Harmony Church. Individuals desiring receipt for turn in may mail the permits by certified mail, return receipt requested, directly to the Natural Resources Management Division, Directorate of Engineering and Housing, or personally return the permit to building 247 and obtain acknowledgement. All permits not received by close of business Jan. 30 will be considered delinquent.

YA soccer registration Jan. 30-Feb. 10

Fort Benning Youth Activities spring soccer registration begins Jan. 30 and continues until Feb. 10. The spring soccer season is open to children ages 4 through 12 of active duty and retired military personnel. Birth certificate or ID card is required at registration. Sign-ups are conducted Monday-Friday, 8 a.m.-4:30 p.m. at Youth Activities, building 1056 on McIver Street.

YA also needs soccer coaches for the upcoming season.

Youth Activities will no longer have a 13-to-15-year-old league in the spring soccer season. Children in that age group who wish to participate in soccer should register Feb. 11 at Columbus College. Registration fee for 13 to 15 age group is $25 per child.

For more information, call Youth Activities at 545-3070/3913.

Army lieutenant leads soccer All-Stars

An Army first lieutenant booted his second goal of the match to lift the Armed Forces All-Star soccer squad past Suriname to advance the U. S. into the Council of International Military Sports soccer finals.

Halfback Mark Erwin from Fort Carson, Colo., provided all the All-Stars' offensive firepower in the recent 2-1 win at Miami Dade Community College near Homestead AFB, Fla.

The U. S. had earlier won the first of their two matches in a 5-1 rout of the South American team and will now travel to Italy in June for the CISM finals.

Braves face Dodgers in opening home game

The Atlanta Braves will begin and end the home portion of their 1989 schedule with a three-game weekend series against the world champion Los Angeles Dodgers. Tommy Lasorda's crew will visit Atlanta-Fulton County Stadium April 7-9 and Sept. 29-Oct. 1.

Bowling "Pot-O-Gold" reaches $1,900

Fort Benning bowling centers' "Pot-O-Gold"cash bowling prize has toppled the $1,900 mark. Bowling officials said the pot reached $1,961 Jan. 17.

Bowlers must strike in certain frames to win the pot.

League and open bowlers who purchase a three-game ticket and pay a $1 entry fee prior to bowling are eligible to enter the tournament. For more information, call 545-4272 or 544-1985.

Open powerlifting championship Feb. 4

The Georgia Association of the U.S. Powerlifting Association will sanction the 1989 Fort Benning Open Powerlifting Championship Feb. 4, 1989 at Briant Wells Gymnasium.

USPF rules will be in effect, and all participants must have a current 1989 USPF card. These are available at the meet site. All contestants must be at least 14 years of age and have a one-piece uniform.

Weigh-ins will be at Briant Wells Gymnasium Feb. 3, 8 a.m.-6 p.m. and Feb. 4, 7-8:30 a.m.

The 114-pound class through the 181-pound class will lift on Feb. 4, 9 a.m.-1 p.m. The 198-pound class through the super heavyweight class will start lifting at 1 p.m. Feb. 4.

Lifting will be divided into open powerlifting, class II and below powerlifting, and military powerlifting.

Entry forms for the event are available at Briant Wells Gymnasium. For more information, call Danny Thompson at 298-3954

Neikro joins Braves as pitching instructor

Phil Niekro, who won 318 games in a 24-year Major League career and holds virtually every Atlanta pitching record, has joined the Braves as a roving pitching instructor, general manager Bobby Cox announced.

Niekro, 49, will travel throughout the Braves' eight-team minor league system, working with all the pitchers and critiquing the clubs.

Backpacking clinic Sat. at state park

Franklin D. Roosevelt State Park in Pine Mountain, Ga. will conduct a backpacking clinic for beginners Saturday, 9 a.m.-4 p.m. Basic instruction includes what to take, how to dress, where to go and food preparation. Lunch and a hike will be part of the program, which costs $10.

For further details, call Hal Young at (404) 663-4858.

NCOs flush officers in Rangers' Toilet Bowl

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

The 2nd annual 4th Ranger Training Battalion, Ranger Training Brigade's "Toilet Bowl" turned out to be a wet affair with the noncommissioned officers flushing the officers 14-6.

In keeping with the name, it was fitting that the game was played Jan. 13 in the rain.

According to Samuel Barlotta, the idea for the "Toilet Bowl" was conceived after the Ranger Training Brigade was formed in 1987.

Barlotta said the score is not really important. "It's more for the morale and the esprit de corps that develop during activities of this type," he said.

Barlotta added that it also gives the winners bragging rights.

Although the score wasn't important, the NCOs did win. They won by two touchdown passes caught by Jeffrey Ruwe and Spencer Abrom.

The lone scorer for the officers was Jeffrey Cook, who ran in a touchdown pass.

Brian Clark, the official refreshment person, said the event was great fun and that he feels most of his peers enjoyed it as well.

Barlotta said the battalion's officers and NCOs compete against each other in basketball and softball games, too. He added that they don't even have to go out of the battalion to get referees. "We get everyone we need from within the battalion, including certified officials."

The battalion is keeping it all in the family and having a great time by just getting together to play good, clean, hard ball.

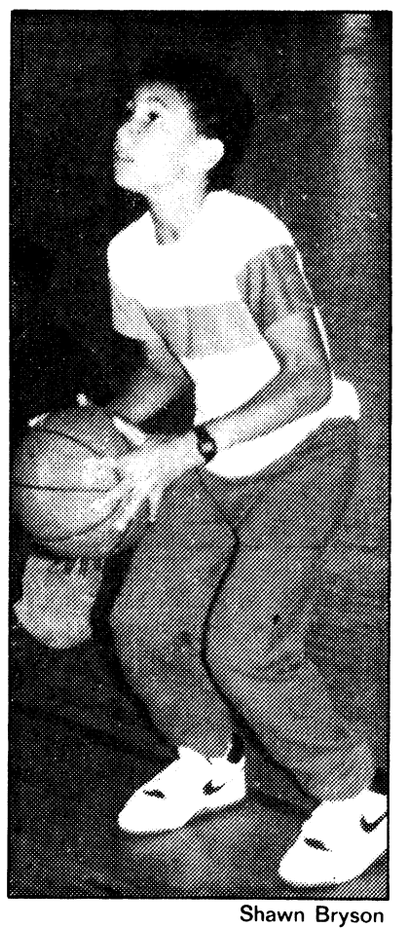
Six youngsters advance in free throw contest

By Shawn Bryson
Bayonet staff writer

Six Fort Benning youngsters are on their way up the ladder after winning last week's local competition of the Elks National "Hoop Shoot" Free Throw Contest held at the Youth Activities Gym.



Twenty-four boys and girls gave it their best shot from the free-throw line Jan. 14 in three age groups. Each competitor shot 25 free throws.

Danny Morris and Lindsi Esplin won in the 8-9 age category while Andy Landrus and Thadra Smith were the winners among the 10 and 11-year-olds. In the 12-13 age category, Jeremy Morris and Shonna Barker outshot the rest.

Each winner will advance to the Columbus level of the competition to be held Saturday at the Southside Boys Club. The top six shooters in that contest will advance to the district competition, which will be held at Albany State College, Jan. 28. The state competition will be held in Milledgeville, Ga., Feb. 25 and the regionals at Valdosta State College in Valdosta, Ga., March 18.

With a little luck and a lot of skill, one of Fort Benning's youngsters could make it to the national finals at Market Square Arena in Indianapolis, Ind., April 14-16.

The competition, in which three million children are expected to compete this year, is designed to provide interesting, character-building and competitive program for boys and girls.

Fort Benning Bass Club holds banquet, names Fisherman of the Year

Fort Benning Bass Club

The Bass Club of Fort Benning held its annual awards banquet Jan. 13 at the Columbus Hilton and named Bob Billman for the twelfth time since the club's beginning in 1972, Fisherman of the Year.

Big Fish of the Year honors went to George Mendez and Bob Billman who both caught 7-pound, 8-ounce bass in 1988 club tournaments. The Sportsman of the Year award went to Jim Southern.

Other top ten recipients were Willie Goble - 2nd place, Skip Ray - 3rd place, Don Kimbrough - 4th place, Brenda Carter - 5th place, Pat Bennett - 6th place, George Mendez - 7th place, Ben McGuire - 8th place, Porter Angel - 9th place and Joe Wikoff - 10th place. All award winners received engraved wall plaques.

Georgia Bass Club Federation president, Larry Lewis, was the keynote speaker for the occasion. Butch Jordan of Leon Jordan Marine provided door prizes.

Sunday, the club kicked off its first tournament of the year. Bob Billman with a catch of 9 pounds, 10 ounces won the tournament, while Lake Martin [illegible]

Others caught the biggest fish, a 3-pound, 14-ounce largemouth. Pat Bennett won 2nd place with a total catch of 7 pounds, 3 ounces, and Skip Ray was 3rd with 6 pounds, 10 ounces.

Anyone interested in becoming a member of the Bass Club of Fort Benning should attend one of the club's semimonthly meetings held at the Hidden Door Club on the second and fourth Mondays of each month. For more information, call John Campbell at 568-4829 or Brenda Carter at 689-7474.

Symphony stages 'at the movies' concert Saturday

The music itself will be the star of a Columbus Symphony concert Saturday at 8 p.m. at the Three Arts Theatre. Titled "At the Movies," the concert, directed by conductor George Del Gobbo, will feature nostalgic sorties into the world of films, past and present.

A medley of movie songs called "Salute to Hollywood" kicks off the program, followed by several selections by John Williams, including "Star Wars," and works by Erich Korngold ("Captain Blood Overture"), John Barry ("Out of Africa") and Bernard Herrmann ("Psycho").

Reserved seat tickets are available now from the Columbus Symphony at $15 for adults and $5 for students. For reservations and information, call 323-5059.

Columbus College exhibits works by American artists

Selections from the LaGrange National Art Exhibitions are being exhibited now through Feb.10 at Columbus College.

The exhibition includes paintings, prints, drawings, ceramics and sculpture of contemporary American artists.

The LaGrange National is an annual competition [illegible] the Chattahoochee Valley Art Association drew entries [illegible] and the District of Columbia.

Viewing is free and open to the public. For more information, contact the Columbus College Department of Art at 568-2047.

Springer Theatre offers complimentary tickets

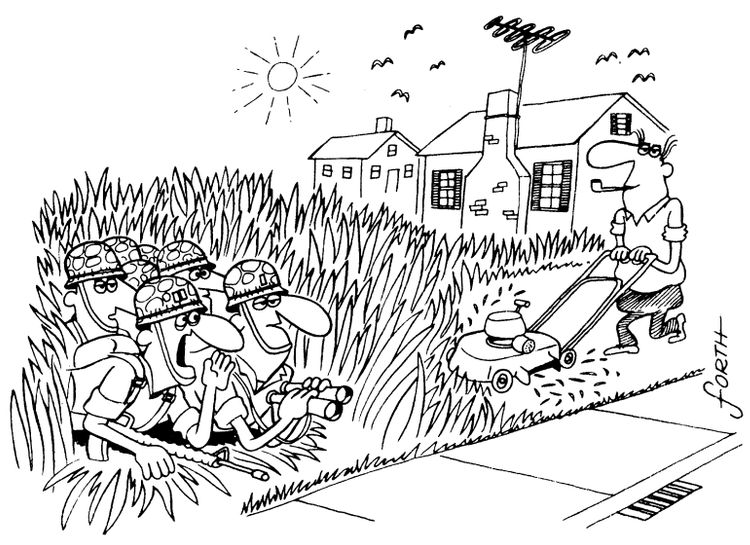
USAIC Public Affairs Office

The Springer Theatre in Columbus is offering enlisted soldiers, E-4 and below, and their family members complimentary tickets to the Feb. 2 opening night performance of "Romantic Comedy," a play by Bernard Slade. Curtain time is 8 p.m.

Interested enlisted personnel must call the Community Recreation Division prior to Jan. 25 and reserve the number of tickets desired. Telephone numbers are 545-3909, 545-7357 and 545-1248.

The complimentary tickets are available to enlisted soldiers and their immediate family members only.

Slade, a well known playwright, is author of "Same Time Next Year" and "Tribute."



"Romantic Comedy" opens on Jason Carmichael's wedding day. Jason is an already famous playwright who finds a rather schoolmarmish Phoebe Craddock, a hero-worshipping novice writer, standing in his dressing room only moments before he walks to the altar.

After a hilarious mistaken-identity scene, Jason agrees to take on Phoebe as his writing partner. What starts with the old boy-meets-girl formula ends up as one of the most unusual romances in history.

The two collaborate on both hits and flops for 11 years before they finally look up from their writing to discover that they have been sharing something quite special and that perhaps a spark of romance might reside somewhere amid the typewriters, carbon paper and coffee cups in their lives.

The show runs through Feb. 11, and show time each evening is 8 o'clock. Tickets are $9 for adults and $5 for children. Call the Springer Opera House ticket office at 327-3688 for more information.

Weight Watchers®
The New 1989 Quick Success Program

Before. Before you know it.

Join Now for a 40% Reduced Figure. Pay only $15.

Making a sizable difference in the way you look shouldn't take forever. That's why Weight Watchers created the New 1989 Quick Success Program—with its simpler-to-use, expanded food plan including more delicious choices for eating nutritiously and an optional exercise plan. All to make it easier for you to lose weight faster with no specially purchased foods and no contracts. Last year's program was faster than before and our new 1989 program is even better. Over 500 weekly meetings begin Monday, January 2. No reservations necessary. Call 395-7820 in Atlanta or 1-800-282-4565 for more information. And you'll be the size you want before you know it.

POST BRIEFS

CI-TV airs safety video

Training - Gen. Maxwell Thurman's safety video, titled 'Three-tier Approach to Safety in Training' will be shown next week on CI-TV, Channel 13 on Alert Cable Television. The 12-minute video will air once an hour following the normally scheduled programs.

Electrical service interruption set

Saturday - An interruption of electrical service is scheduled Saturday, 8 a.m. to 4 p.m. Areas affected include Lumpkin Road, Stewart Avenue, Madden Avenue, Running Avenue, BOQs, Patch School, White School and buildings 36, 37 and 38. The interruption is necessary to install new electrical lines.

Nurse Corps commemorated

York Field - Fort Benning's Medical Department Activity will commemorate the 88th anniversary of the Army Nurse Corps with a special review and retreat ceremony on York Field Feb. 3 at 4:45 p.m. The public is invited to attend.

Work begins on Hwy. 165

Alabama - Within the next few weeks the Alabama Highway Department will begin constructing additional lanes and replacing certain bridges on Alabama Highway 165 in Russell County. Some property required for the road right of way crosses Fort Benning property parallel to Alabama Highway 165. The contractor will be removing unmerchantable timber and vegetation along the road, according to Col. Robert W. Hatch, Director of Engineering and Housing. The Alabama Highway Department is responsible for providing safety and convenience to the public and to ensure the flow of Fort Benning traffic. If the Alabama Highway Department deems it necessary to temporarily impede traffic at Highway 165 and 82nd Airborne Road, they are required to notify the DEH 15 days in advance, according to Hatch.

Bicycle Jamboree slated

Military Police Activity - A Bicycle Jamboree is scheduled Saturday, 10 a.m.-noon in the parking lot of the Military Police Station, building 215. The jamboree is open to school children, 6th grade and below. Scheduled events include: bicycle skill course, bicycle registration, safety inspection and bicycle theft proofing. This event is sponsored by the MP Activity, post Fire Department and Youth Activity Center. For more information, call 545-7115/7154 and ask for Officer Friendly.

Outstanding man, woman sought

Nominations being accepted - The Columbus Jaycees are accepting nominations for the J. R. Allen Memorial Award, which recognizes the outstanding young man of Columbus for 1988. Nominations for the outstanding young woman of Columbus are being sought by the Columbus Civic League.

Nominees should be men and women, ages 21-39, who have distinguished themselves by service to the community.

Deadline for nominations is Feb. 13 at noon. For more information, call the Columbus Jaycee office at 323-7224 between 9 a.m. and 1 p.m.

Finalists and award winners will be honored at a banquet Feb. 23.

Firewood permits

Season ends for the year - Firewood cutting at Fort Benning has ended for the season. Permits are no longer being sold.

Safety Office renamed

TRADOC - The post Safety Office has been renamed to reflect branch proponency. It is now called the Infantry Branch Safety Office.

Don't forget

Vehicle license - People in Chattahoochee and Muscogee counties whose last names begins with the letters A-D are reminded that Monday is the deadline for license plate renewal. After Monday, a fine will be imposed.

1st Bn, 29th Inf takes best at TRADOC

By Shawn Bryson
Bayonet staff writer

The 29th Infantry Regiment's 1st Battalion took first place (heavy category) in the Training and Doctrine Command level of the fiscal year 1988 Chief of Staff, Army, Award for Maintenance Excellence recently.

Because of the TRADOC win, the 1st Bn, 29th Inf. Regt. is now the only Fort Benning unit competing for the award at the Department of the Army level, according to Dave Garnett, chief of Fort Benning's Maintenance and Assistance Instruction Team.

Garnett said a team of judges from DA will visit Benning Feb. 15 through 17 to evaluate the 1st Bn., 29th's maintenance operations and personnel.

The competition for the 1988 awards began Oct. 1, 1987, and ended Sept. 30, 1988 and is divided into three categories at each level of the competition - light, intermediate and heavy - Garnett explained.

Fort Benning had a total of eight units competing for the award at the post level competition. A selection board in October advanced five of those eight units to the next levels of the competition - two to TRADOC and three to Forces Command.

The 29th's 2nd Battalion also advanced to TRADOC level where it took runner-up in the intermediate category. The three units from Fort Benning that competed at FORSCOM level are the 690th Medical Company (light), 533rd Transportation Company (intermediate) and 2nd Battalion, 18th Infantry (heavy). All took runner-up in their categories at FORSCOM.

Since the first Award for Maintenance Excellence in 1982, Fort Benning has fared very well, according to Garnett. "Fort Benning has had eight Major Command winners and three Department of the Army winners in the six years of the competition," he said. "We've also had several Major Command and Department of the Army runners-up."

Garnett said that those statistics are very good considering that Fort Benning has had a relatively low number of entrants each year.

Part of the reason for the low entry rate is the extra work that goes into preparing for the competition, according to Bennie Cochran, installation maintenance officer.

"It does take some extra work, but the benefits are well worth the effort," Cochran said. "It brings credit to the maintenance personnel and gives them visibility they don't normally get."

Garnett said that each unit is judged in five areas - readiness, maintenance training, maintenance management, cost and savings and innovations.

Garnett explained that the competition focuses around Unit Maintenance Profiles put together by participating units using existing data files. "Units can save a lot of time and effort by starting work on the UMPs at the beginning of the fiscal year," Garnett said.

The competition is open to all active Army MTOE/TDA units, U.S. Army Reserve and U.S. Army National Guard MTOE units. It is sponsored by the American Defense Preparedness Association.

Garnett said units are encouraged to find out more about the program and to participate in the fiscal year 1989 competition. For more information, call Garnett at 545-3154.

Sergeant Major of the Army dedicates NCO Academy

USAIC Public Affairs Office

The instructors at the Noncommissioned Officers Academy will find "maintaining the standards" a lot easier since the opening of the new Henry Caro Noncommissioned Officers Academy, which was officially dedicated Tuesday.

Sergeant Major of the Army Julius Gates and NCOA Commandant CSM James Fowler officially cut the ribbon.

During his remarks, Gates commented on what a great addition the facility will be to the Noncommissioned Officers Education System.

He added that it was fitting the academy opened during "The Year of the NCO."

The academy, named for its first commandant, CSM Henry Caro, was originally the old Faith Middle School. It recently underwent a $2 million facelift to prepare the building for its new purpose - housing the school responsible for teaching NCOs how to lead at different levels.

The building consists of 35 classrooms, a 400-seat auditorium and a cafeteria capable of feeding 600 students.

There are five branches at the academy - the Primary Leadership Development Course, the Basic and Advanced Noncommissioned Officer courses, the Drill Sergeant School and the First Sergeant Orientation Course.

Both the Drill Sergeant School and the First Sergeant Orientation Course are recent additions to the Academy.

Drill Sergeant School was added under the direction of the Chief of Staff of the Army Carl E. Vuono and the First Sergeant Orientation Course was added under the direction of Fort Benning commanding general, Maj. Gen. Michael F. Spigelmire.

After the dedication ceremony, Freddie Caro unveiled a painting of her late husband. Also, Thomas E. Love was recognized for being the model of The Doughboy statue, which stands in front of the academy.

NCO SPOTLIGHT:

Infantry sergeant takes history seriously

By D. L. Bridges
197th Infantry Brigade

The operation order has been given and preparations for battle completed. The uniforms and weapons are checked and rechecked as the battle is about to begin. Sgt Mark Burroughs tightens the sling on his M-1 Garland and steps across the line of departure in his brown combat boots.

M-1 Garland and brown boots? What army is this?

U.S. vintage World War II is the answer.

The 28-year-old sergeant of Company D, 2nd Battalion, 18th Infantry has been a member of the World War II Reenactment Society for 10 years and an avid collector of military memorabilia twice that long.

"The first thing I ever collected was a German Luger pistol at a flea market when I was 8 years old. It wasn't difficult to get a gun 20 years ago," Burroughs explained. "I've always been interested in history and became serious about collecting when I was 10."

He started battle reenactments as a member of a Civil War group, but switched to World War II. Burroughs believes the 40s were a more innocent and special time in United States history. There were stronger family values as compared to today.

"It was a bad time in our history, but everyone pulled together to meet a threat that would have destroyed our country," he said. "I started by collecting mostly German military items; and, when I was 17, I joined an historical group that reenacted battles of the German 252nd Infantry Division. Then, a year later, I switched to American militia and battles," he said.

Burroughs, whose father is a decorated World War II veteran who saw action with the 4th Armored Divsion, joined the Army in 1980. In 1984, he was stationed at Baumholder, Federal Republic of Germany, which enabled him to search flea markets and the local population for a wealth of authentic memorabilia.

Also, he collected old period maps of World War II battlefields and spent vacations and holidays walking through such places as the Ardennes Forest, Siegfried Line and Normandy.

"I spent 10 days camping in the Ardennes Forest and walking the area of the Battle of the Band members are soldiers too

By Clyde Snively
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Army bandsmen are celebrating their 67th anniversary this week, and the Bayonet is hopping on the band wagon.

I, of course, have been invited to join in by the editor.

This is appropriate, given my great musical background. I had a grandmother who could play piano by ear, and my grandfather fiddled with his beard.

As for me, I have a tin ear. My voice wouldn't stand up to a frog. In fact, I was specifically asked not to sing along with the bouncing ball and Mitch Miller's band, nor is the shower a place I'm allowed to sing - "cracks the tiles," Emma tells me.

The only person who has not forbidden me to sing along is Sgt. Fred Catchings who leads us in song at various ceremonies on post. Not because he likes the way I sing but because he's never heard me. I always segregate myself from the crowd or stand near Dave who easily drowns me out.

But enough about me and my problems.

I'm a true supporter of our band. I'd much rather listen to good martial music than most of the stuff I hear blasting from passing cars and barracks boom boxes.

When it comes to our band, there is no such thing as "all work and no play." For them, you've got to work in order to play.

And that's where a lot of folks get confused. They think bandsmen sit around all day tooting their horns or plucking their strings. Folks forget that bandsmen are soldiers first. They forget bandsmen must possess the same basic soldiering skills as infantrymen and typewriter pounders.

They, too, own BDUs, go out on the ranges and into training areas, get wet, muddy and cold as they track compass courses fire weapons and go through the gas chamber.

After they have those skills down pat (they still have to go through refresher training), then they can pursue their second charge of promoting and maintaining the morale and esprit of us troops as well as enhancing the public image of the nation, the Army and the quality of the soldier in today's Army.

Our guys and gals in the band do this extremely well. They are one of the busiest bands in the Army and are always being sought by some organization to play - either on or off post, often two or three times a day at widely separated locations.

All I got to say is ya gotta love music to put up with the schedule they do.

About the only thing I don't understand with the 67th anniversary, is what took the Army so long to recognize the existence of bands. Heck, George Washington had Army musicians at Valley Forge. There were regimental bands since the frontier days, then division bands beginning with World War II.

We still have the division bands plus the special bands - such as the Army Field Band and the West Point Band - and separate bands, such as our Infantry Center band.

I may be prejudiced, but I think our musicians are the tops and wish y'all a happy anniversary.

Secretary of Defense Carlucci says 'horizons have seldom been brighter'

By Tom Joyce
American Forces Information Service

"As we approach the start of a new decade and the beginning of a new administration, America's horizons have seldom been brighter," Secretary of Defense Frank C. Carlucci told the Society of Experimental Test Pilots recently. "Peace," he said, "seems to be breaking out all over."

The proof:

- The Soviets are committed to full withdrawal from Afghanistan by February.
- Negotiations are proceeding to have the Vietnamese withdraw from Cambodia.
- A cease-fire exists between Iran and Iraq.
- Signs indicate that U.S.-led negotiations will lead to the removal of Cubans from Angola.
- The war in the western Sahara is drawing to a close.

Carlucci also noted that country after country is rejecting state-controlled economic systems and opting for free-market economies.

"China, Africa and even the Soviet Union have recognized that Marxism is bankrupt as an economic philosophy," he said. Strong leadership and a firm commitment to U.S. allies, coupled with a steadfast resolve to rebuild U.S. military strength, have sent a clear signal to would-be adversaries that the United States will do what is necessary to protect vital national interests, Carlucci told his audience.

It is the strength and resolve that led the Soviet Union to move forward on arms control. "The lesson is clear," said Carlucci. "To bargain on arms reductions with the Soviets, you have to have the military wherewithal with which to bargain."

The commitment to rebuild military strength has not only preserved the freedom and the quality of life that America has fought so hard to attain over the last two centuries, said Carlucci, but also has resulted in the "finest quality military force we have ever had." Not only can this statement be defined in terms of equipment, said Carlucci, "but the best indicator is the quality of the people and their heightened state of readiness. When we bring that quality to bear with determination at trouble spots around the world, we can produce results favorable to our national interests."

With all that has been accomplished in the last 10 years, it would make sense for the country to stay the course, Carlucci said. But he sounded an alarm, telling his audience, "We seem to be doing just the opposite.

"At a time when our alliances are more important than ever, we are slashing vital economic and security assistance programs way out of proportion to any reasonable budget cuts," he said.

This includes the termination of 26 defense programs and the dramatic reduction of such programs to key countries like Turkey and Portugal.

Burden-sharing was another topic on Carlucci's mind. He said burden-sharing is a legitimate issue and that many U.S. allies should do more. "The only way to handle this question (the burden-sharing issue) is within the context of the alliance itself, not through punitive bilateral measures," such as those proposed during negotiations of the fiscal 1989 defense bill.

"We must always remember that we are an island nation and our alliances are essential for our survival," said Carlucci, adding "the defense of America begins well beyond our shores."

Carlucci also discussed the built-in problems associated with not having a multiyear budget plan and the "political opportunism" inherent in the acquisition system.

"A few simple steps could go a long way toward correcting these situations," Carlucci said. His examples included a two-year defense budget; more multiyear contracting, which is a proven money saver; and fewer congressional committees that exercise jurisdiction over DoD's budget.

Carlucci concluded his remarks noting, "We must stay on the path of strong leadership and strong partnership that President Reagan has forged over the last eight years. We must not cast aside what we have all worked so hard and sacrificed so much to build. America must remain strong militarily to resist the forces of aggression wherever they may appear. The future of our great nation demands no less."

Channel 13 adds safety videos to its programming

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Fort Benning's Command Information TV now shows safety videos as part of its daily programming, according to the post command information officer.

"The safety videos we show cover such topics as swimming, camping, hunting and defensive driving, to name just a few," said Maj. Tom Fix. "These are activities in which we all participate at one time or another, and the safety videos show how to be safe doing them."

Fix said the safety videos add a new dimension to the post cable channel by providing information that may actually save people's lives.

"Since we went on the air last April, we have added several viewing options to make our channel more useful to our audience," Fix said. "After all, it gets old looking at character-generated news no matter how good the 'oldies-but-goodies' sound."

Fix said that CI-TV originally showed only "news you can use" with songs from the '50s, '60s and '70s played as background music. After several months, the channel added video spots with news from around the Army provided by the Department of Army Public Affairs Office.

Public service announcements were later added to give the post audience more information, Fix said.

The Infantry Safety Office will provide a different video each week that will emphasize one aspect of safety, Fix said. The safety video is incorporated into the hourly tape that is repeated continuously on Alert Cable, Channel 13, 9 a.m. to 4 p.m.

The new hourly format shows 20 announcements with public service videos and Army news videos intermingled with the songs. The safety videos are always shown at the last part of the hour and are about 10 to 20 minutes long.

"We really don't expect people to watch CI-TV all day," Fix said, "but a viewer can switch us on and get an hour of good music and the latest on activities and events from our 'Post Notes,' 'Sports Shorts' and 'Religious Reminders.' And now they will be able get information that one day may keep them from being hurt or killed."

NCO Academy named after its first commandant

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

When it came time to name the new Fort Benning Noncommissioned Officers Academy, there was no question that it should be named in honor of the first commandant of the academy, established here in 1974.

The Sergeant Major of the Army Julius Gates echoed those sentiments when he dedicated the CSM Henry Caro NCO Academy in a ceremony Tuesday.

Caro's wife, Freddie, was there to accept the honor for her husband who died at his next assignment following the establishment of the academy.

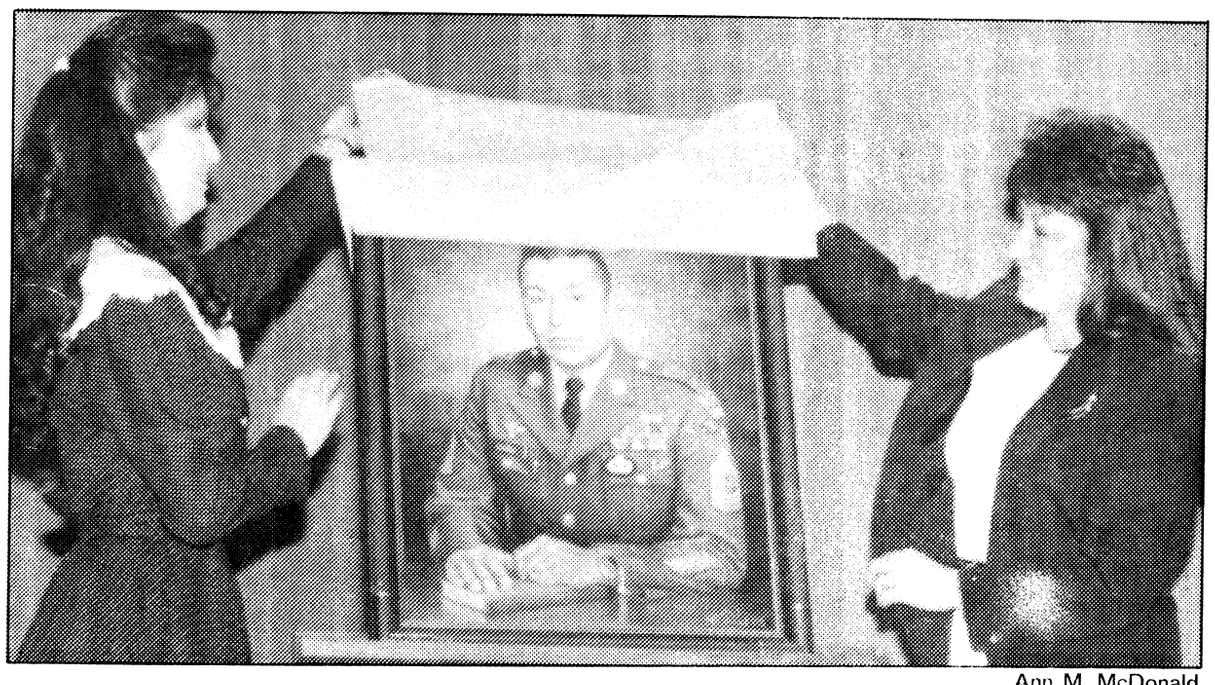
It happened during a peacetime redeployment exercise on Nov. 6, 1976. He died from injuries received during a parachuting accident with the 1st Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment, Fort Stewart, Ga.

Although he is gone, his memory lives on in the school he helped establish. He probably wouldn't even recognize the Academy today. It was recently moved into the old Faith Middle School, a multi-million dollar complex, and has added two schools to its curriculum - Drill Sergeant School and First Sergeant Orientation Course.

Gates, who officially opened the new school, served under Caro during his years with the NCO Academy, then called 5th Battalion NCOSI.

"Caro, made a great impression on me when I served under him," Gates said. "As a matter of fact, I don't think I would be where I am today if I didn't receive the guidance I did from him."

Post Command Sergeant Major Autrail Cobb served under Caro with the 1st Bn., 75th Rgr. Regt.



"Sergeant Major Caro was a soldier's soldier," Cobb said. "He was hard charging and always prepared. He was a great man."

Caro had many admirers. In Vietnam, a colonel was quoted as saying "There is a real man - one that can be counted on when all the chips are down. There is not a phoney cell in him."

During his career, Caro served with many units including ones in Iceland, Kentucky, Kansas and North Carolina.

Caro served at Benning a number of times as a Pathfinder instructor, Ranger instructor, first sergeant at the Advanced NCO Course and, of course, as commandant of the first NCO Academy.

Caro is buried in the post cemetery.

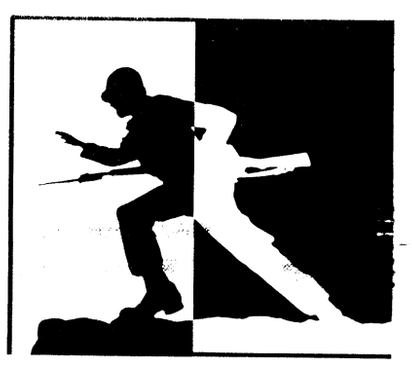
INFANTRY magazine discusses peacekeeping

INFANTRY Magazine

In the January issue of INFANTRY, Lt. Col. Charles M. Ayers discusses the kinds of peacekeeping operations a unit involved in low intensity conflict might be called upon to perform. In an article entitled "Peacekeeping Operations," Ayers says that in such operations, there is "a heavy preponderance of infantry-type units, augmented by support personnel," with "a battalion size unit...the standard." Ayers is assigned to the Army-Air Force Center for Low Intensity Conflict.



This issue also features two other articles: "Offensive Live-Fire Operations," by Lt. Col. Ronald F. Rokosz; and "Battlefield Mobility: The Counter-Obstacle Team," by Capt. John D. Lock.

Rokosz, who previously served with the 75th Ranger Regiment at Fort Benning and is now attending the Army War College, offers a common sense approach toward planning and conducting squad and platoon live-fire operations.

Lock currently commands Company C, 307th Engineer Battalion, 82nd Airborne Division. In his article, he discusses how divisional combat engineers can reasonably guarantee the maneuver of a combined arms team on a future battlefield by properly training and employing an engineer counter-obstacle team.

283rd Army Band celebrates 67th birthday

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

It just isn't a parade without the band. The driving beat of the bass drum combined with the "oompah" of the tuba and the trill of the flute put a spring in a soldiers step and a song in the hearts of almost everyone.

The band can make youngsters laugh with delight at the antics of the drum major and put a smile on the face of an elderly person reminiscing about days gone by.

Wednesday, Fort Benning's own 283rd Army Band, better known as the U.S. Infantry Center Band, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, had a birthday. There was no cake with candles, just the acknowledgment that it has been entertaining audiences for 67 years.

The band members perform in all kinds of weather. Their work days often begin way before dawn and don't end until well into the night. They do this to give that extra touch to any event whether it be a command breakfast or a dinner for the general.

The band often performs as many as a half a dozen times per day making it one of the busiest in the Army.

The band members do this without a word. They don't take bows or give speeches. They just play the melodies that have become tradition at military ceremonies.

For the most part, the band is an unsung hero. It remains the same although the faces at the ceremonies change constantly. The band performs at as many as five parades each week including the practices.

Often times people wonder if the band is a real military occupational speciality. It is. People are recruited for this field just like any other. As a matter of fact, Fort Benning's Band won the Training and Doctrine Command's recruiting award two years in a row.

Recruiting is where a band begins. A prospective soldier has to qualify on his instrument or, in the case of the vocalists, sing all the right notes.

SSgt. Victor Rios, a french horn player and recruiter, explained the procedure.

"First, a recruit takes a physical and all the tests to come into the Army," he said. "If they are qualified, then they can audition."

Rios said that recruits are sent to Fort Benning to audition. He takes them around and familiarizes them with the band and then tests them on their instrument.

If they pass, they can enlist. If they fail, they can practice and try again later.

Rochelle Branam, 17, from Largo, Fla. recently came here to audition.

She said she became interested in joining the Army and the band after a recruiter spoke to her high school class.

"I'm pretty excited about the audition," she said. "If I make it, I'd like to get stationed here so I could be close to home."

Branam auditioned later that day and just barely missed qualifying, according to Rios.

He said she will be given another chance in a month.

"We let them audition more than once because many times they are so nervous they can't play," he said. "Once they know what to expect, they do fine."

Sgt. Phillip Guilliaume, a keyboard player with the band, is a product of the recruiting system.

He auditioned for the Army Band while he was attending college working on his masters degree.

"I came into the Army because it is difficult to get a good paying job in the musical field," Guilliaume said. "I also have a family to think about, so this was one way I could play my instrument and provide for them at the same time."

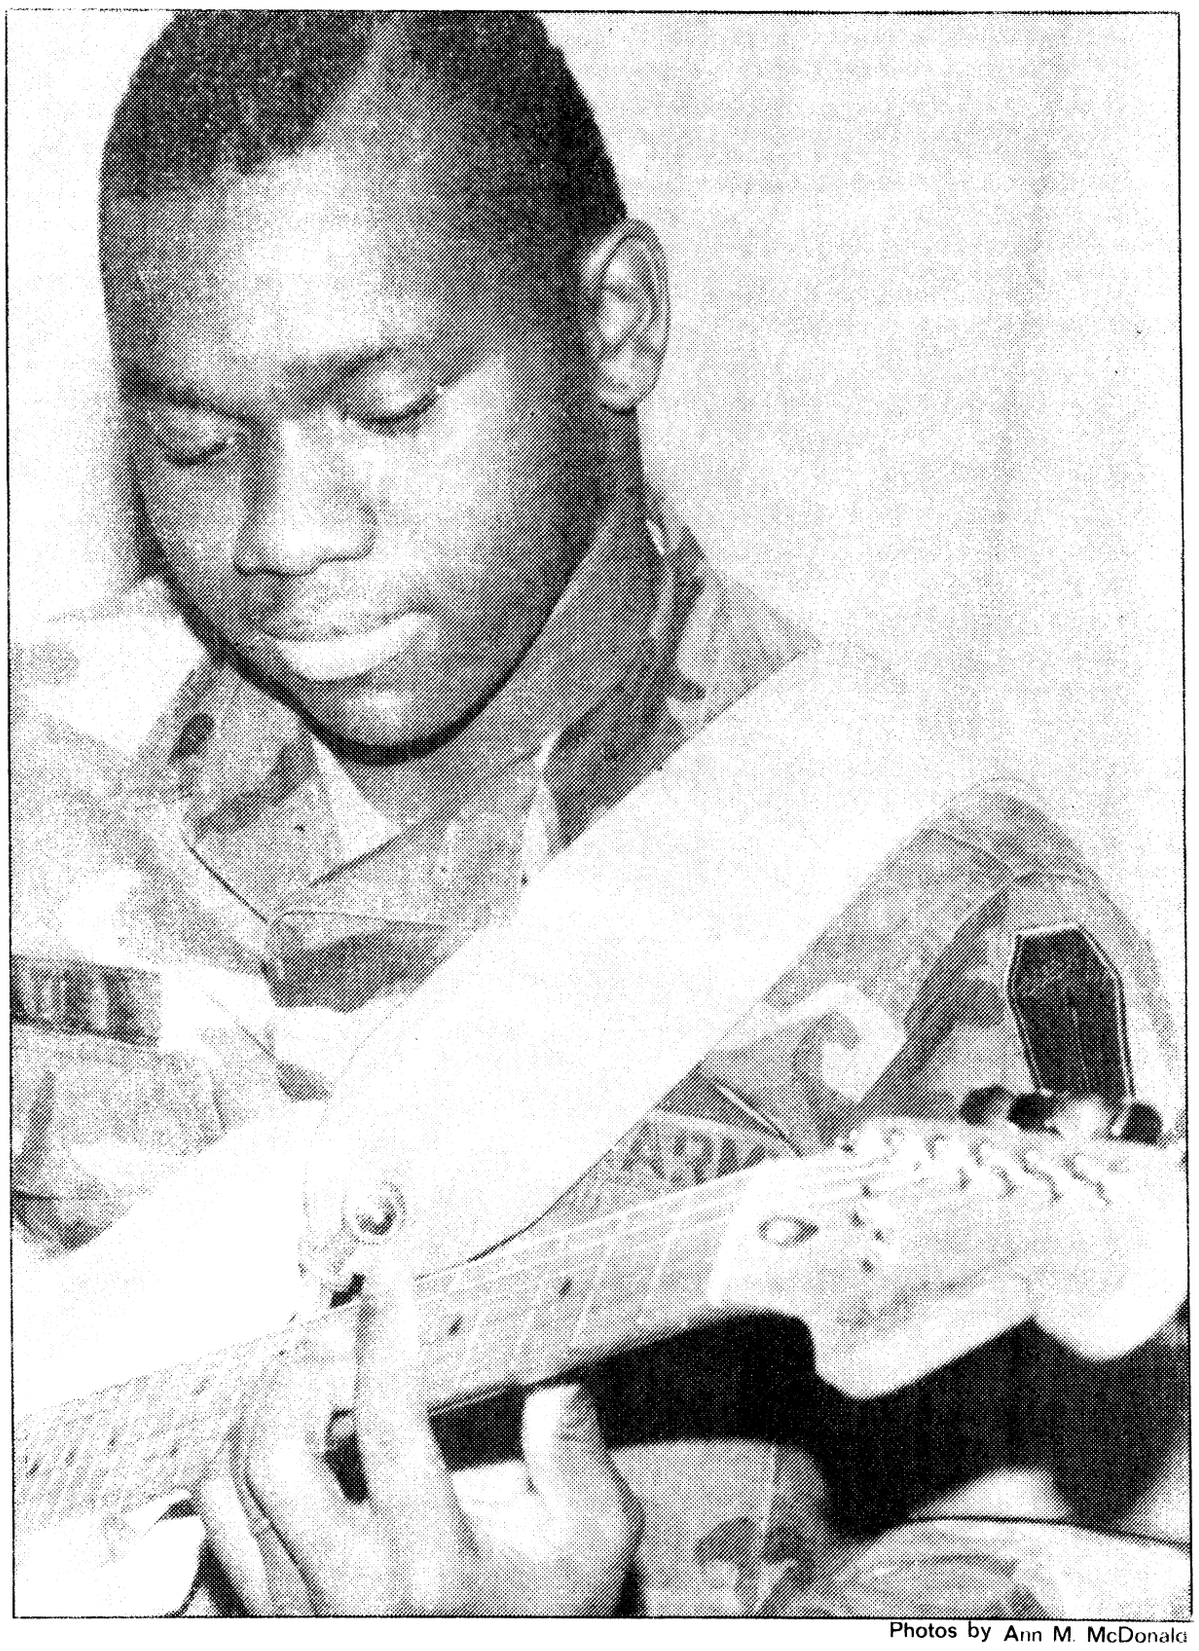
He said he really enjoys playing in the band but added that sometimes the hours get really long. You have to call on your reserves to get you through.

"Music is what I do best and is what appeals to me the most. I wouldn't have any other job in the Army," Guilliaume said. The band field obviously appeals to CWO 2 Larry Hyatt, band master, who has been in the band field for 16 years.

"Even after the more than the 800 appearances we made last year," Hyatt said, "I love my job."

Hyatt said that most of the soldiers feel the same way. "They get to play their instruments and get paid for it," he said. Sounds easy, but the band members are still soldiers. Besides playing in the band, they must perform the common tasks required of all soldiers.

1st Sgt. Joe Bates said they don't have any administrative support to help them with their soldierly duties."We do everything here," he said. "Our administrative noncommissioned officer is a trombone player, our supply sergeant is a drummer and our operations sergeant is a clarinet player."



Bates explained that the band is structured just like any other company, complete with section sergeants and squad leaders. He added that, of course, they also do physical training."The only difference between us and a regular company is our mission is not to fight or support but to entertain," he said.

Rochelle Branam, a recruit from Largo, Fla. and Spec. Paul Fletcher warm up before her audition.

'Power of Service' moves out for Costa Rica

By Bjarne Iverson
43rd Engineer Combat Battalion

"Power for Service" is the motto of the 43rd Engineer Combat Battalion (Heavy). The motto is most often used as a greeting when unit members exchange salutes. It also serves as a reminder to unit members of the tremendous equipment and construction power they provide in serving the U. S. Army and Fort Benning military community.

Bjarne Iverson
Spec. Brian J. Rowe helps a crewman tie down the first of three vehicles on a C-141 headed for Costa Rica.

Beginning Tuesday, the unit's "Power for Service" will be extended all the way to Costa Rica. During the next four weeks, the battalion will deploy by rail, sea and air as part of Task Force 36 commanded by the 36th Engineer Group commander to the Osa Peninsula located in the southwest part of the country. The mission includes seven bridges and approximately 3.2 kilometers of road.

Additionally, the battalion will support Reserve and National Guard "Prime Beef" and "Med-Ready" teams in the construction of several school houses and medical facilities and administration of medical support.

Preparations for the deployment have been underway for several months. A Costa Rica training exercise was conducted in October and November, and intensive maintenance and specialized training filled the calendar.

To ease the transition for the deploying members' families, special "family days" were organized where unit and post support representatives provided briefings, advice and information packets. The chain-of-concern, a family support group created by battalion wives, was established and continues providing support for waiting wives.

In the meantime, the battalion has not forgotten its commitment to support the Infantry Center and Fort Benning military community. Projects, such as the Ranger Training Complex and the 36th Engineer Group chapel, have been expedited to leave no unfinished business.

To continue providing support for this vital post mission, Co. B will remain behind. The company will continue to work on in-progress projects, including construction of the McKenna Drop Zone, hardened targets on Griswold Range and renovations to buildings 2512 and 2827. The 586th Assault Float Bridge Company will continue bridge training here, too.

The deployment will provide an outstanding opportunity for the battalion to train on its mission essential task list. All aspects of the mission are directly related to the METL. Personnel in all military occupations at every level will be able to fully demonstrate their technical skills.

The deployment got underway Jan. 9 with the movement of the advance party from Lawson Army Airfield. The main body with support elements will complete the deployment by land, air and sea between Tuesday and Feb. 23.

The mission will wind down in late April, and the battalion is scheduled to redeploy to Fort Benning in early May.

Now two-pizza phenomenon can happen anytime, anywhere.™
PIZZA HUT® DELIVERS PAIRS ALL DAY, EVERY DAY

In what sources are calling a bizarre plot to spoil pizza customers for anything less, Pizza Hut® now delivers two pizzas for one low price on a permanent basis.

The alleged conspiracy means that a simple phone call to Pizza Hut® Delivery brings "Pizza Hut Pairs™," as they are being called, directly to the homes of American consumers.

Experts speculate that citizens may stay home in droves to take advantage of what many are calling "the biggest thing since pepperoni."

Professor Soo Dang Goode of the Institute for Pizza Excellence told reporters, "With Pizza Hut Pairs, consumers can get two pizzas for only slightly more than the price of one. And this is not your ordinary, skimpy delivery pizza. This is Pizza Hut Pizza!"

Reported at front doors all over town, this person delivers award-winning pizza in 30 minutes or less.

SPIRITUAL

National Prayer Breakfast to focus on religious freedoms

By Debra Galle
USAIC Chaplain's Office

The Fort Benning National Prayer Breakfast will take place Feb. 10, 6:30 a.m. at the Main NCO Club.

In his invitation to Congressman Richard Ray, Major Gen. Michael F. Spigelmire, Fort Benning commanding general, asked that Ray address leaders in the Fort Benning Community about heritage of faith, our religious freedoms and our personal need as leaders for spiritual strength and moral integrity.

Guest soloist for the breakfast will be Marlesa Ball, Miss Georgia 1986-87.

Last year's breakfast featured Retired Col. Ben Purcell, a former Vietnam Prisoner of War, who spoke about the importance of spiritual and moral strength in handling adversity as he told of his experiences, which included 58 months in solitary confinement.

The Fort Benning National Prayer Breakfast is held in conjunction with the yearly National Prayer Breakfast in Washington, D.C. It is designed as a time of spiritual reflection for post leadership and is a reminder of our country's roots.

The National Prayer Breakfast, established with President Dwight D. Eisenhower in 1953, is sponsored by the U.S. Senate and House Prayer Groups. It is attended by the president, members of the House and Senate, members of the Cabinet, the Supreme Court and the military leadership of the Armed Forces. In addition, hundreds of similar events are conducted through federal and state governments, as well as military installations throughout the world.

Former Secretary of Defense, Casper W. Weinberger, once said of prayer breakfasts, "They signal to the world that we are a nation, a people, who know our heritage, who seek to live by noble convictions and high moral values and that our ultimate trust is in our creator."

Tickets are limited and may be purchased from any chaplain in advance for $3.

For more information, call Chap. (Maj.) Donald Taylor, post project officer, USAIC Chaplain's Office, 545-2288/2608.

Secretary of Defense discusses prayer

USAIC Chaplain's Office

Former Secretary of Defense, Frank Carlucci, sent a message to all military posts about the importance of prayer and offered praise to the people of the armed forces.

Thursday, the annual National Prayer Breakfast will be held in Washington D.C. Those attending include President George Bush, Vice President Dan Quayle, the Cabinet, members of Congress and the Supreme Court, government officials and military leaders.

"In this time of rapid and tumultuous change, we are given the opportunity to shape the future of the world, to influence the destiny of mankind and to establish new relationships in the affairs of governments. These times require a reference rooted and grounded in what is basic to all people and all countries. . .we need the frame of reference that only prayer can give.

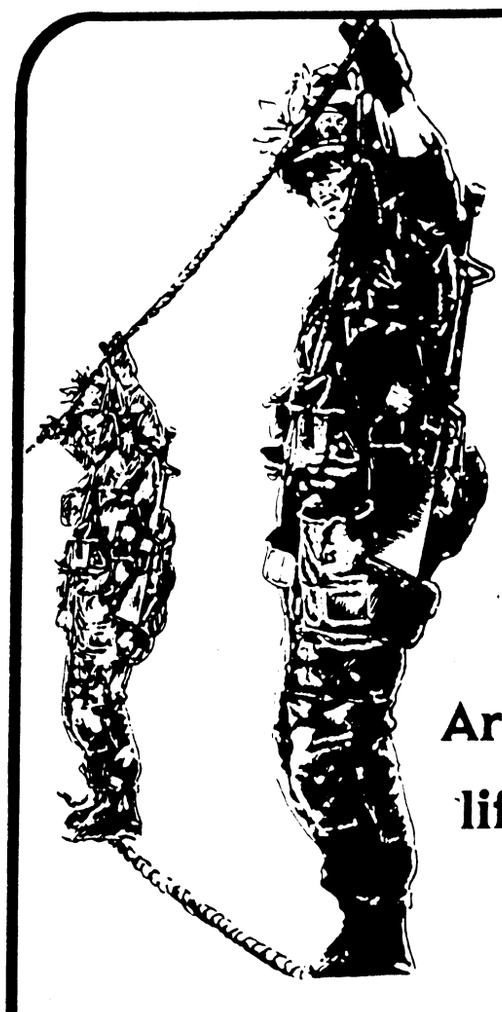
"Our people will gather in prayer breakfast meetings all over the world to petition divine guidance for our leaders. You, the people of the military, are an indispensable element in the stability and security of our nation in these crucial times. You, as individuals and as families, experience the personal sacrifice, the pain of separation from loved ones, the loneliness of isolation, the bearing of unfriendly conditions and, at times, hostile aggression that may be life-threatening, that allows America to persist as a beacon of freedom and liberty in a struggling world."

Greatness comes from seeking God

cc,12p,helb,10,11 By Chap. James E. Rayburn
Martin Army Community Hospital

One of the most significant personalities of scripture is the Psalmist David, who is referred to as "a man after God's own heart," but this title was not given to him because of his perfected life style, soldierly abilities or physical features. The historical references in scripture tell us how he orchestrated the death of a soldier after having an affair with the soldier's wife. He had character flaws as a husband, father and spiritual leader.

The greatest point about this man was not soldierly abilities, although he demonstrated bravery and remarkable natural abilities. Neither was this great title given to him because of physical stature, endurance, nor literary talents.



The primary focus of this phrase centers around David's ability to seek God. He was wise enough to realize the fallacy of trying to hide his sins, and he possessed the inner strength to confess his sins before God and to trust in the mercy and justice of God.

There are times it appears we live in a "perfected" society. A society where we cheer the uncovering of faults within the lives of others and yet fear our own faults may be known. We fail to confess our faults to God and fail to demonstrate the mercy to one another.

I remember one particular course I attended where it was discovered someone had cheated on an assignment. One of the members of our group became irritated at the thought of this break of professionalism. I certainly did not condone the cheating but was amused at how angry this particular person had become.

It is not in perfection that we become individuals after God's heart, but in the striving of perfection — seeking to do the will of God. We need to recognize our own humanness as well as the faults of others and reach for the inner strength to come before the Holiness of God in repentance and trust in His mercy.

The heart of God is touched when we show a sincere desire to please God, to confess our sins and to receive the mercy of God's forgiveness.

Bulge. It gives a person an awesome feeling of almost having been at one of the most important battles in our history," he said.

The reenactment groups stress authenticity in what they do and have by-laws for their member's conduct. The membership is composed of doctors, lawyers, factory workers and about every profession imaginable, according to Burroughs.

"We're not Hollywood actors. Our goal is to educate the public, to preserve this part of history and to show the experiencesof soldiers who fought and served at that time," noted Burroughs. "We want to leave a positive impression of what we're doing."

Reenactments are usually performed on weekends and draw large audiences.

If any organization wants a battle portrayed or just a layout of military equipment, the historical society can do so if given advance notice so members can plan their time.

Burroughs said that he finds a lot of people are interested in joining a group, "but they find the initial cost is sometimes restrictive." An average World War II layout of a uniform, equipment and weapon costs about $354, and sometimes goes higher depending on how authentic a collector wants to be, according to Burroughs.

He said he finds all the equipment he buys and trades in newspapers, trade shows, flea markets and just driving down the road. "I have a restored 1942 Ford Jeep; and a few years ago, I restored a 1943 M-16 Half Track. A farmer owned it and had used it to pull a plow in his field during the 1950s until it broke down. The farmer bought it after the war at a surplus auction."

Burroughs cautions people who are interested in collecting memorabilia about being taken in by junk merchandise or commercial copies of the real thing. He points out there are trade magazines for collectors. By joining a group, a person can learn from veteran collectors what to watch for.

"Collecting is a good investment too. I've never had anything go down in value even when the market is slow. And, it gains value pretty quick," Burroughs said.

Army assessment of Gorbachev proposal

The U. S. Army says Soviet General Secretary Gorbachev's unilateral conventional force reduction proposal is "significant" and "may bode well" for upcoming conventional force negotiations between NATO and the Warsaw Pact.

However, it is important to keep the reductions in perspective, the Army said in a recent assessment message to its forces in the field.

The assessment outlined the Soviet proposal, questions that remain, and a North Atlantic Council proposal for conventional force talks with the Warsaw Pact that begin early next year.

Although the Soviet proposal will reduce somewhat the overwhelming superiority the Warsaw Pact now enjoys, the Army assessment pointed out, "After the reductions have been taken, the Warsaw Pact will still retain an advantage over NATO of roughly 20,000 tanks and 21,000 artillery pieces."

Official photos not required for 2nd Lts.

Effective immediately second lieutenants will not be required to submit official photographs.

The next update to AR 640-30, Photographs for Military Personnel Files, will reflect this change. Second lieutenants who have already taken official photographs may still forward them to HQDA (TAPC-MSE-R), 200 Stovall Street, Alexandria, VA 22332-0400.

With this change, it becomes imperative for first lieutenants to submit their initial official photographs within 60 days of their promotions. For more information, contact Gerald Viator at autovon 221-9055.

No rucks allowed on commercial aircraft

Soldiers flying to deployments on commercial aircraft can't carry their rucksacks on board any more, according to officials in the Office of the Deputy Chief of Staff for Logistics.

Instead, loaded rucksacks will be handled as checked baggage and loaded in cargo compartments.

Federal Aviation Administration rules don't allow carry-on luggage that won't fit into overhead luggage compartments or under seats. Loaded rucksacks exceed those size restrictions.

To compensate for the new limitation, officials say commanders should allow soldiers to use small pieces of carry-on luggage for personal and comfort items. Under FAA rules, carry-on luggage can't be more than 10 inches high, 15 inches wide and 17 inches deep.

Army adopts new field training menus

The dietitians at the U. S. Army Troop Support Agency are doing their part to help the soldier to be a "lean, mean fighting machine."

They have changed the 14-day U. S. Army Reserve Component and Field Training menu, providing soldiers with a nutritious menu that will improve physical fitness and good health to combat readiness.

The menu is designed for use by the Army National Guard and U. S. Army Reserve units during annual and inactive duty training and by the active component during field training.

The new menu is the first major revision since 1982 and reflects reductions in some vital areas, as seen by today's dietitians.

Command and staff college list released

The Army Jan. 4 released the results of the 1988 Command and General Staff College selection board.

The board, which adjourned Sept. 22, considered 6,396 officers in the Army competitive category and selected 914, or 14.2 percent, according to Army personnel officials. That is slightly lower than the selection rate in previous years.

Officials say the 1988 board operated under slightly different rules that past boards. Selection ranges for each branch were provided to the board in the memorandum of instruction signed by the deputy chief of staff for personnel. These selection targets were necessary to meet both Army and joint requirements, to provide for leader development and maintain the health of the officer corps.

Another CSC selection board is scheduled to convene in April to aid in further refinement of the CSC selection process, while at the same time ensuring that the officer corps continues to have appropriate selection opportunities.

Recommend removal for overweight officers

According to a recent issue of the Army Personnel Bulletin, overweight officers should be recommended for removal from a promotion list when: after six months on a weight control program the officer still exceeds screening weight tables, has not made satisfactory progress and there is no underlying medical problems. Or, if after 12 months on a weight control program the officer still exceeds weight standards (even if satisfactory progress has been made), the officer is eligible for removal.

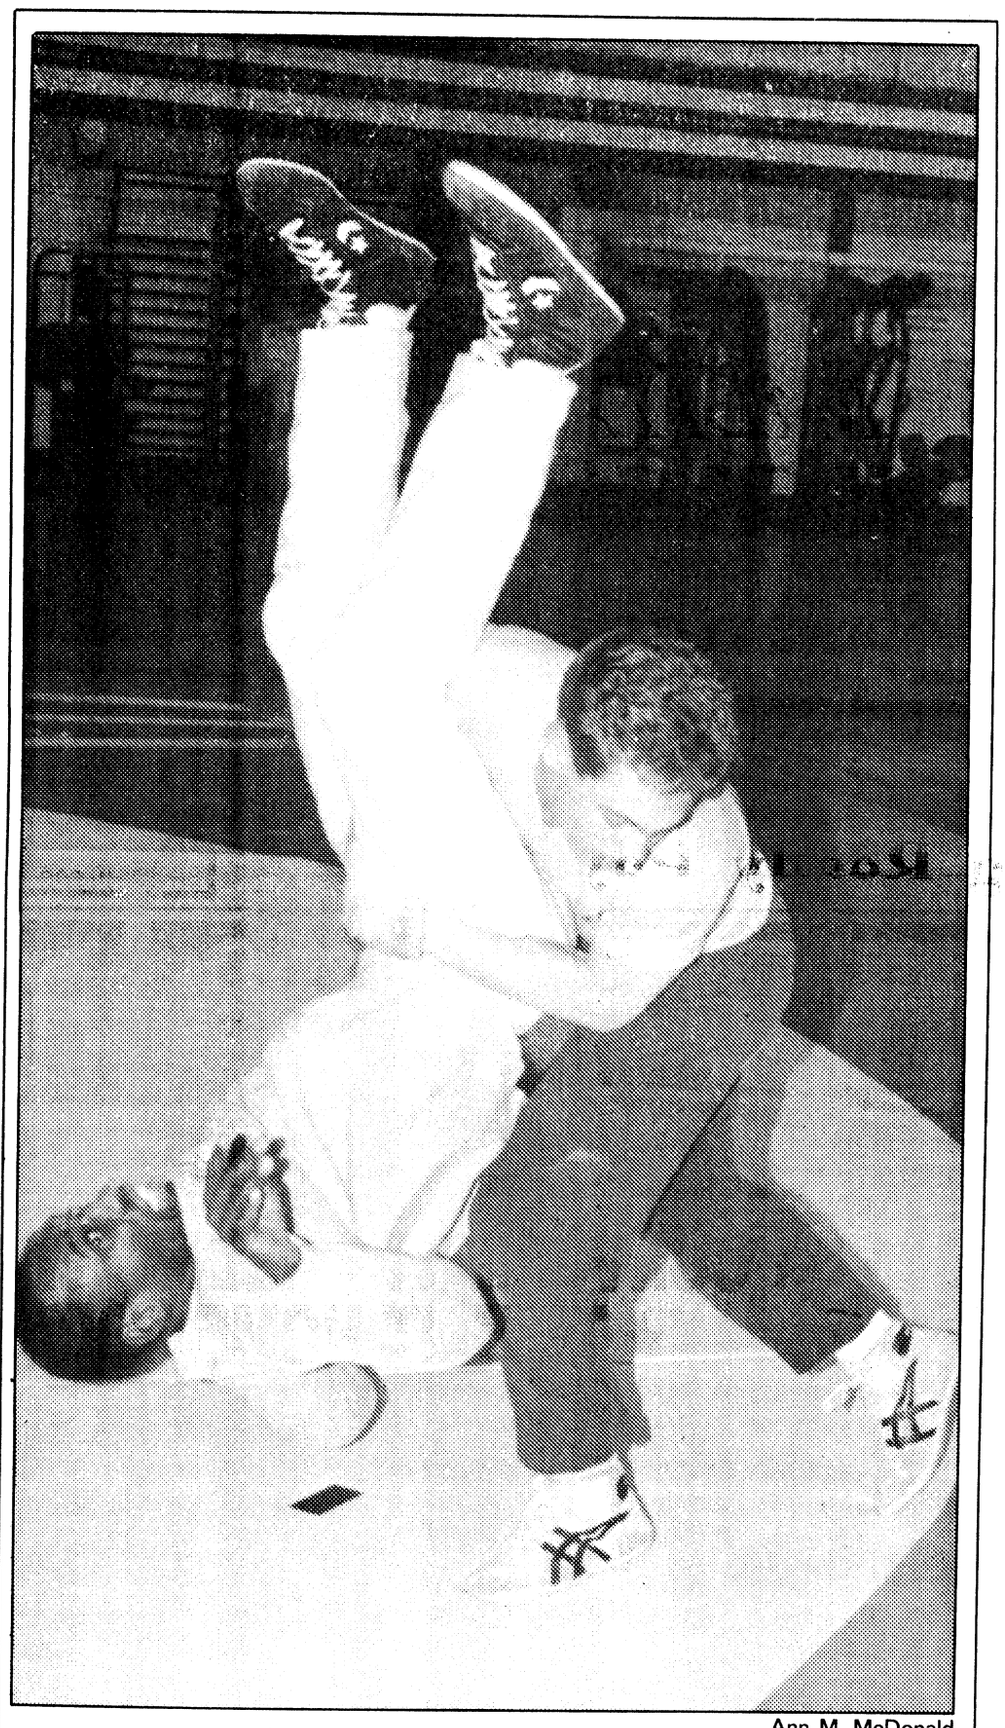
Facility does not process POVs on weekends

Army News Service

Weekend after weekend, soldiers and their families travel to the Military Ocean Terminal in Bayonne, N.J., to process privately owned vehicles for shipment or pickup. And, weekend after weekend, they find that the trip was wasted.

The Military Traffic Management Command facility has not processed POVs on weekends or holidays since 1987, when budgetary constraints closed the MOTBY POV Processing Center on weekends; eastern and Gulf states POV processing centers are also closed on weekends and holidays. Yet, say MOTBY officials, servicemembers still arrive on weekends to pick up or deliver autos.

"Military personnel continue to arrive at MOTBY either unaware or misinformed that weekends are non-processing days," wrote a MOTBY spokesperson. "The unexpected realization that MOTBY POV processing does not operate on weekends and holidays creates a great inconvenience and expense to these servicemembers who, in some cases, have imminent port calls or other time-constrained schedules."



MOTBY officials advise servicemembers and their families to contact the POV Processing Center before arriving to pick up or ship a vehicle.

They also say that carefully planning accommodations in conjunction with vehicle delivery or pickup at MOTBY will help save prevent inconvenience and save money.

No hotels are located in the city of Bayonne. While limited transient housing is available at the terminal, MOTBY officials say it is usually occupied. In addition, they say lodging and transportation in the northern New Jersey and greater New York City areas are expensive and hard to find.

Personnel whose port of embarkation is Fort Dix, N.J.; McGuire Air Force Base, N.J.; John F. Kennedy International Airport in New York; or Philadelphia International Airport in Pennsylvania can get information on transportation and accommodations from passenger service personnel. This information, sometimes available in other ports, will help plan a trip to Bayonne for POV processing, MOTBY officials say.

The MOTBY POV Processing Center is open Monday through Friday from 8 to 11:45 a.m. and 1 to 4 p.m. Vehicle owners should arrive by 1 p.m. to finish processing by close of business. For more information, call the center at (201) 823-6611 or autovon 247-6611.

DoD releases detailed information about terrorist groups

131-page booklet available to public

Army News Service

The Department of Defense has released an overview of 52 of the "more notorious" terrorist organizations and their habits.

The 131-page booklet, "Terrorist Group Profiles," is available for sale to the public through U.S. Government Printing Office outlets.

The booklet is designed to "provide the American people detailed information about key terrorist groups and thereby strip away their mystique," says a preface to the study written by Secretary of Defense Frank C. Carlucci III.

"In order to combat terrorism effectively, it is necessary to know the enemy," Carlucci wrote. "By providing such detailed information, we can help the American people understand better the terrorist phenomenon and place it in perspective as one of many challenges we must confront in this complex and sometimes violent age."

The book categorizes terrorist groups by geographic location and provides information on each group's membership strength, key leaders, background, ideological orientation, target audiences and objectives, and chronologies of selected incidents.

It also discusses the nature of the threat in the Middle Eastern, west European, Latin American, Asian and African regions.

For example, "Terrorist Group Profiles" contains an entry on the Abu Nidal Organization, which the study calls "the most wide-ranging and vicious Palestinian terrorist group." The book says the Abu Nidal Organization:

- Was formed in 1974.
- Has an estimated membership of 500.
- Is headquartered in Libya.
- Operates internationally under the leadership of Sabri Khalil al-Banna (and includes his photograph).
- Is also known as Fatah — the Revolutionary Council, the Black June Organization, Arab Revolutionary Brigades, Revolutionary Organization of Socialist Muslims and Black September Organization.

The book goes on to list five objectives and target audiences of the Abu Nidal Organization, and contains a narrative of its background and a chronology of 34 incidents attributed to the group since June 1980.

"Terrorist Group Profiles" opens with a letter from President George Bush giving his position on publicizing information about terrorists and the threat they pose.

"One key proposal (of the Task Force on Combatting Terrorism) was to launch a public awareness program to better inform the American people about the nature of terrorism and the threat it represents to our national security and to the freedoms we so deeply cherish," Bush wrote.

"I strongly favor providing the public such information because it sharpens awareness as to the individual agendas of terrorist groups, the roles of nations that support their depredations and the necessity for tailoring multiple strategies to effectively combat this scourge."

Water heater is home's 3rd largest energy user; only the heater and the air conditioner use more

By Becky Ray
Energy Branch

Hot water is a luxury most Americans take for granted. Our water heaters provide a steady supply of heated water on demand. While we may give little thought to the energy consumed, hot water heaters are the third largest energy users in our homes, with only heaters and air conditioners using more energy.

If the water heater is electric, it can consume up to 44 percent of the electricity your home uses. At standard residential electrical rates, that's about $302 a year to heat water for a family of four.

One of the largest users of hot water in a household is the washing machine. Washing in cold water will save energy and is gentler on most fabrics, especially colors. Cold rinse settings should always be used.

Plumbing leaks also waste water and energy. A faucet dripping at a rate of 90 drops per minute wastes about 1,000 gallons of water per year, in addition to the energy and expense involved in treating the water.

If the leak is hot water, the loss is substantially increased because of the energy used in heating.

All water leaks should be repaired as soon as they are found. If a repair can't be made immediately, the water supply to the leak should be shut off until it is fixed.

Showers generally use less hot water than baths, and low-flow shower heads can supply an invigorating water pressure with less water. If you use a 50-50 mixture of hot and cold water for bathing, you will save about five gallons of water each time you take a shower instead of a tub bath. Over a period of one year, you can save almost 2,000 gallons of hot water by taking a shower instead of a bath each day.

Letting hot water run while shaving or brushing teeth will waste lots of water heating energy in a short period of time. Faucets should always be shut off completely when the water is not being used.

Dishwashers use about 14 gallons of hot water each time they're used and should only be used for full loads. Be careful not to overload, or dishes won't be cleaned properly. When rinsing dishes before loading, use cold water.

In general, use hot water only when cold water won't do the job. Make a habit of conserving all water, both hot and cold.

197th Spt. Bn. edges past 72nd Eng.

Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 197th Support Battalion, edged past 72nd Engineers Company (Combat) in 197th basketball play this week 47-45.

Warren Ferguson of 72nd Eng. scored 20 of his team's 45 points. He scored 12 points in the second half only to have Eric Reed of Spt. Bn. nail two game-ending foul shots.

Post basketball championship games

The 1988-89 second season post-level basketball championship will be conducted Feb. 14-17 at Briant Wells Fieldhouse and Audie Murphy Gymnasium.

Youth soccer registration begins

Fort Benning youth soccer registration will begin Monday and continue through Feb. 10. Children 4-12 years old of active duty or retired military personnel may register. Birth certificate or identification card will be required.

Registration will be conducted Monday through Friday from 8 a.m.-4:30 p.m. at Youth Activities, building 1056, on McIver Street. Soccer coaches are also needed for the upcoming season.

For more information, call Youth Activities at 545-3070/3913.

Deer hunting permit due back Monday

To avoid loss of hunting privileges, deer hunters are reminded to return the Fort Benning Deer Permit, FB (ENG) Form 48, within 15 days of the close of deer season. Permits may be returned by placing them in drop boxes located at the Outdoor Recreation Office, building 247, or the Deer Check Station, building 5883, Harmony Church. Individuals desiring receipt for turn in may mail the permits by certified mail, return receipt requested, directly to the Natural Resources Management Division, Directorate of Engineering and Housing, or personally return the permit to building 247 and obtain acknowledgement. All permits not received by close of business Monday will be considered delinquent.

Bowling "Pot-O-Gold" reaches $2,067

Fort Benning bowling centers' "Pot-O-Gold"cash bowling prize has topped the $2,000 mark. Bowling officials said the pot reached $2,067 on Jan. 24.

Bowlers must strike in certain frames to win the pot.

League and open bowlers who purchase a three-game ticket and pay a $1 entry fee prior to bowling are eligible to enter the tournament. For more information, call 545-4272 or 544-1985.

Open power lifting championship Feb. 4

The Georgia Association of the U.S. Power lifting Association will sanction the 1989 Fort Benning Open Power lifting Championship Feb. 4, 1989 at Briant Wells Gymnasium.

USPF rules will be in effect, and all participants must have a current 1989 USPF card. These are available at the meet site. All contestants must be at least 14 years of age and have a one-piece uniform.

Weigh-ins will be at Briant Wells Gymnasium Feb. 3, 8 a.m.-6 p.m. and Feb. 4, 7-8:30 a.m.

The 114-pound class through the 181-pound class will lift on Feb. 4, 9 a.m.-1 p.m. The 198-pound class through the super heavyweight class will start lifting at 1 p.m. Feb. 4.

Lifting will be divided into open power lifting, class II and below power lifting, and military power lifting.

The cost is $20 for the first division and $10 for each additional division. Team fee is $25. Awards will be determined by the Schwartz and Malone formulas.

Entry forms for the event are available at Briant Wells Gymnasium. For more information, call Danny Thompson at 298-3954 after 5 p.m.

Men's basketball announcements

Fort Benning Doughboys won five of eight games played during the 1988-89 basketball season. Six games remain to be played, and when they are confirmed, announcements will be made. All games will be played at Briant Wells Field House, building 933. The public is invited.

Disabled vets compete in sports program

Disabled veterans from across the country will gather in Colorado next month to participate in a winter sports program conducted by Veterans Administration rehabilitation specialists.

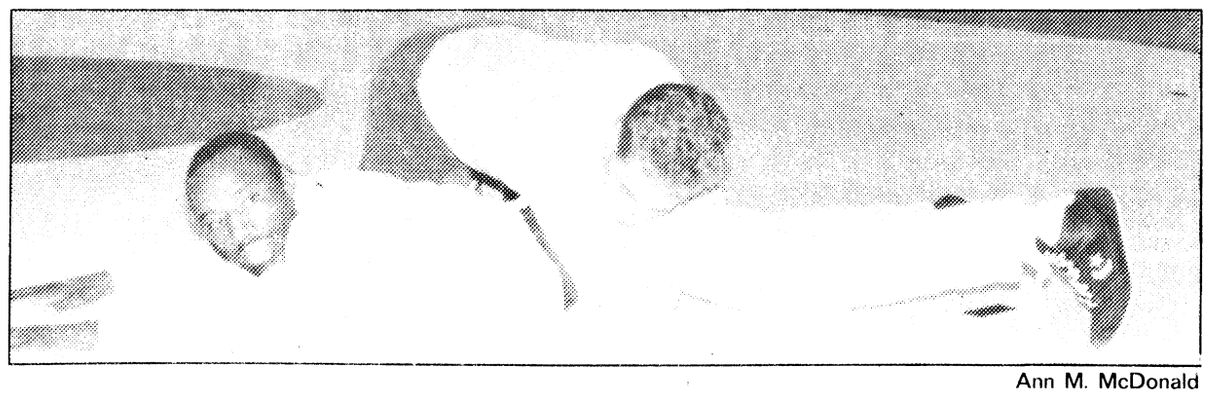
The third annual VA Winter Sports Clinic will emphasize the therapeutic and recreational benefits typical winter activities offer for the physically and visually impaired. More than 130 veterans from 30 states are expected to participate.

29th Inf. captures wrestling tourney's team title

66 wrestlers compete for individual titles

USAIC Public Affairs Office

The Fort Benning Freestyle Wrestling championship was held Jan. 13-14 at Harmony Church Field House. Sixty-six entrants competed before a crowd of about 100 spectators.



The team champion was the 29th Infantry Regiment with 29 points. The 197th Infantry Brigade captured second place with 19 points. The 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment came in third place, while 2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry captured fourth place.

Michael Lindsey, who was the tournament's outstanding wrestler, led the 29th Inf. Regt. He defeated the 197th's former national junior college champion, Ron McFarland, 11-3 in the finals.

In the 149.5-pound class, Kevin Merriweather of HHC, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry, defeated David Hinks of E Co., 2nd Bn., 11th Inf. by pinning him 59 seconds into the match to capture first place.

Fred Lassiter, former National Collegiate Athletic Association Division I-AA champion accumulated enough points early to win the 125.5-pound class.

At 180.5 pounds, Charles Baker of D Co., 1st Battalion, 507th Parachute Infantry Regiment, rebounded from an early 7-3 loss to Clifton Woods of B Co., 43rd Engineer Battalion pinning his opponent to capture first in his weight class.

In the 114.5-pound class, Ron Burlas was uncontested.

The 197th with 16 entries was led by two champions, Kevin Synder and Andrew Cazier. Snyder defeated Joagin Maldonado of 2nd Bn., 11th Inf. by injury default. At 220 pounds, Cazier put on a freestyle clinic by pinning three straight opponents to capture first place before the finals.

The 75th Rangers also had a champion. Chris Pease, former All-Army champion, showed why he is a great military wrestler by pinning two straight opponents, one in 20 seconds and the other in 37 seconds. Pease won the 220-plus category.

In the finals, 198-pounder Howard H. Mullen, Jr. of C Co., 4th Ranger Training Battalion, pinned three opponents, including George Brimer of C Co., 197th Support Battalion, to capture first.

McDonald wins 5-mile event in Girl Scouts Cookie Run

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

Fort Benning's Lloyd McDonald ran a blistering 26:12 five-mile run, winning that event at the annual Girl Scouts Cookie Run at Weracoba Park Saturday.

McDonald, who has been a prominent runner on post for a number of years said he felt really good during the race and was pleased with his performance.

"This means that my training for the Infantry Marathon is right on track," he said.

He added that he is right where he wants to be as far as conditioning, and he will continue to train for the marathon.

McDonald said he will run with the Fort Benning team for the marathon.

"We have a team set up, but we're still looking for strong runners as alternates or possibly a B team," he said. "Also, we are still looking for runners interested in forming half-marathon teams for both active duty men and women."

McDonald said they are interested in forming a women's team for the full marathon if enough women are interested. For more information about the marathon or forming a team, call McDonald at 545-4178.

Although the main event for the Cookie Run was the five-mile run, there were other races for people of all ages and physical conditions.

Everyone participated, from wee toddlers in the Tot Trot to physically impaired individuals in the handicapped event.

Girl Scouts from various troops cheered on the runners with signs on which words of encouragement were written.

The purpose of the race is to benefit the Girl Scouts in the area. Proceeds will be used to further programs for the Concharty Council of Girl Scouts.

Infantry Marathon takes place March 4

USAIC Public Affairs Office

The U.S. Army Infantry Center will conduct its annual Infantry Marathon and Half-Marathon March 4. The marathon will start at 9 a.m. and the half-marathon at 9:30 a.m.

Registration forms may be picked up at Doughboy Stadium, Door #8. The pre-registration fee is $10 and the fee for registration after Feb. 15 is $15.

Marathon registration forms may be returned to Door #8 at Doughboy Stadium or mailed to: Infantry Marathon, P.O. Box 53323, Fort Benning, Ga., 31905.

Race packets will be available March 3 at Briant Wells Field House, 8 a.m.-4:30 p.m. or at the Carbo Supper at the Noncommissioned Officers' Club, 5:30-8 p.m. Race packets will include a T-shirt (for early registrants), race number, safety pins and administrative instructions.

Late registration will be accepted until 8:45 a.m. for the marathon and until 9:15 a.m. for the half marathon.

Awards will include trophies for the top three overall finishers, male and female. The top five finishers by age and sex will receive Olympic style medallions.

For more information, call Capt. Russell Walker at 544-I-RUN or 544-I-WIN.

Springer presents comedy; soldiers get free tickets

The Springer Theatre in Columbus will present its opening night performance of "Romantic Comedy," a play by Bernard Slade, Thursday at 8 p.m. before an audience of enlisted soldiers and their family members.

The theatre provided complimentary tickets to the soldiers for promotional purposes according to Ed Hensley, administrative officer of the Community Recreation Division.

To get the tickets to Thursday's performance, enlisted soldiers called the CRD office to reserve tickets. Carolyn Shelton, budget assistance, said 53 soldiers and family members responded to the free offer.

Plans are underway to get soldiers complimentary tickets to other Springer productions. Hensley said the Theatre may be willing to offer free tickets for other opening night performances, and he is negotiating with springer officials.

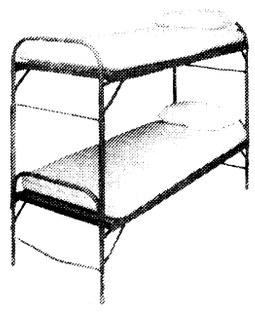
The show runs through Feb. 11, and show time each evening is 8 p.m. Tickets are $9 for adults and $5 for children. Call the Springer Opera House ticket office at 327-3688 for more information.

Opera live from the Met

Enjoy the magnificence of the Metropolitan Opera in performance Thursday at 7:10 p.m.

"La Boheme," one of the most popular operas of all times, will be offered on large screen at the Elizabeth Bradley Turner Center at Columbus College.

The cost is $10. To register, call 568-2023/2317.



Foreign film to be shown

Columbus College will present the third in a series of foreign films Feb. 9 in the Davidson Student Center auditorium at noon and at 7:30 p.m. The German film, Die Weisse Rose (The White Rose), will be shown. The film's dialogue is in the original language with English subtitles.

Blacks' contributions recognized

In recognition of the numerous contributions of Black Americans to America's diverse ethnic, racial, social, political and religious history, the month of February is proclaimed "Black History Month" at Fort Benning. This year's theme is "The Role of Afro-American Churches in Economic, Political and Social Development at Home and Abroad."

Black Americans' meaningful roles in American society have, historically, not been well recognized. "Black History Month" is a tool to help rectify any historical inaccuracies and is intended to increase awareness and improve understanding between all Americans.

All personnel at this installation and in surrounding communities are encouraged to join with fellow soldiers and citizens in enjoying activities here during "Black History Month 1989."

Patterson, Hall of Fame ceremonies set for Feb. 10

USAIC Public Affairs Office

The 37th annual Robert P. Patterson Memorial Award ceremony will be held in conjunction with the Officer Candidate School Hall of Fame inductions here Feb. 10.

The public is invited to attend the ceremonies in Building 4's Marshall Auditorium at 10 a.m.

2nd Lt. Dana Foley, 32, of Newton, Mass., is this year's Patterson Award recipient.

The award goes to the officer selected as the outstanding infantry graduate of OCS during the previous year. It is based on qualities of leadership, academic effectiveness, aptitude and character.

Patterson, for whom the award is named, served as a captain in the United States Army during World War I and glorified his soldiering career as the recipient of the Distinguished Service Cross, Distinguished Service Medal, Silver Star and Purple Heart. He later served as Judge of the U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals and as Secretary of War in the Truman administration.

When he died in 1952, a trust fund for the award was established with monetary contributions from several personal friends.

Foley, currently assigned to Headquarters, 4th Battalion, 15th Infantry Regiment, Fort Knox, Ky., entered the Army in July 1980, and completed One Station Unit Training at Fort Benning.

He is also graduate of airborne and ranger training at Fort Benning; the Small Arms School, Emergency Medical Technician, and Jump Master schools at Fort Lewis, Wash., and the Intelligence Terrorism School, Hurlburt Air Force Base, Fla.

Foley graduated from OCS in February 1988 and the Infantry Officer Basic Course in June. He was the distinguished honor graduate of his OCS class.

The lieutenant is married and has two sons. His hobbies are baseball, football and basketball.

Foley will receive a Department of the Army Certificate signed by the Secretary of the Army, an engraved 9mm Beretta pistol and a $2,000 check.

The Governor of Kansas, John M. Hayden; the chairman of the U.S. Securities and Exchange

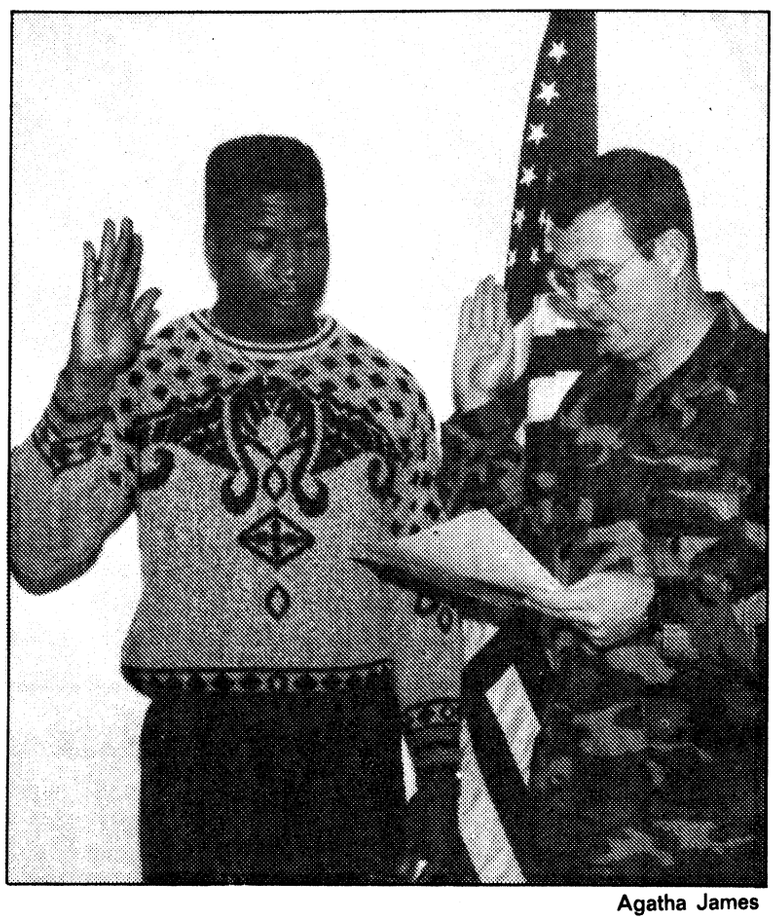
USAIC Public Affairs Office



Two Fort Benning officers are among this year's inductees to the Officer Candidate School Hall of Fame.

Col. Fred W. Liebe, OCS class of April 1967, is the commander of the Military Police Activity and the post Provost Marshal. Col. William F. Kernan, OCS class of November 1968, is the deputy commanding officer of the 75th Ranger Regiment.

Both will be honored in the induction ceremony Feb. 10 in Marshall Auditorium, building 4, 10 a.m.

Olympic boxing medalist joins Reserves here

By Agatha H. James
Bayonet staff writer

Agatha James

Spec. Ray Mercer repeats the oath administered by Sgt. Maj. Claude L. Brown Jr. as he enlists in the Individual Ready Reserves.

Spec. Ray Mercer, Olympic boxing gold medalist and 1988 Armed Forces Athlete of the Year, joined the Individual Ready Reserves Jan. 20 at Fort Benning's In-Service Recruiting Office.

Mercer, with almost nine years of active duty, signed up with Sgt. Maj. Claude L. Brown, Jr. chief in-service retention noncommissioned officer at the post's In-Service Retention office in Soldiers' Plaza.

Mercer, former 197th Infantry Brigade infantryman, said he decided to go on reserve status after his tour of active duty ended because his mother encouraged him to do so.

"She told me that the Army had been good to me and that I should not break all ties," he said. "And, she was right."

Mercer, who was stationed in Baumholder, West Germany, prior to his last stint at Fort Benning, said he plans to pursue a career in professional boxing.

He said that by joining the reserves, he would like to continue his affiliation with the military.

"The Army got me started," he said. "They taught me everything I know about boxing. The military has a good boxing program. By being in the Reserves, I can continue to train with Army boxers."

Mercer said he would like to be a role model for other soldiers. "I hope my success can be a source of encouragement for other soldiers who compete in sports or any other physical activity."

Mercer said that in pursuit of the heavyweight championship of the world, he will be using the skills the Army has taught him.

The Olympic gold medalist won in the heavyweight boxing division at the 1988 Summer Games in Seoul, South Korea.

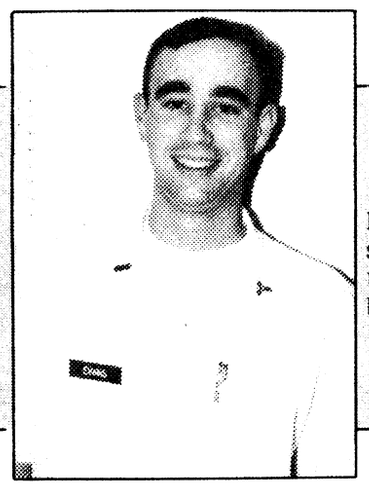
Marsh visits NCOA

By Shawn Bryson
Bayonet staff writer

The Honorable John O. Marsh Jr., Secretary of the Army, visited here Monday as the guest speaker at the Henry Caro Noncommissioned Officers Academy.



Marsh's speech to NCOA students in the academy's auditorium focused on the 1989 Army theme, "Year of the NCO." Marsh said this year's theme is important because it emphasizes, "an important area of Army life."

The theme is targeted at four groups - NCOs, soldiers, officers and the public - according to Marsh. He said the public is more likely to support the Army if it knows the Army is being led by professional, high quality NCOs.

Marsh explained how the role of the NCO has evolved since the Revolutionary War and pointed out great differences between today's NCO and those of yesterday. Marsh said that NCOs are now and must continue to be highly skilled in all of the requisites.

OPINION

VARIOUS VOICES: What does it mean to be an Army nurse?

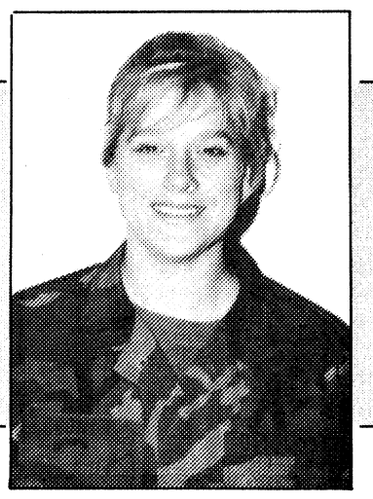
2nd Lt. Richard Evans, MEDDAC - "Being part of a professional and dedicated organization here to care for and stand behind our active duty force."

Capt. Earldine Cisco, MEDDAC - "It's great being an Army nurse because I have increased responsibility and autonomy of practice."



Col. Susie Sherrod, MEDDAC - "Being part of a professional corps that is proud to care.""

Maj. William Koehler, MEDDAC - "It's an opportunity to be a soldier as well as a nurse. By being a soldier and a nurse, I know the skills of combat arms, which allows the greatest degree of organization in the delivery of health care."

Lt. Col. Carolyn Bulliner, MEDDAC - "It allows me the opportunity to serve my country and practice my chosen profession, which is caring for people."

1st Lt. Cynthia Cronin, MEDDAC - "Being an Army nurse allows me to serve a variety of people that I would probably never meet - active duty soldiers, retirees and their family members."

Guns don't kill, people do

By Clyde Snively
USAIC Public Affairs Office

This column is of a sensitive and explicit nature and should be reviewed by an adult before non adults are allowed to read it.

The latest slaughter of school children by a gunman armed with an AK-47 has got the gun control advocates all stirred up.

They just can't seem to understand the need for people to have AK-47s, Uzis and M-16s. They reason that hunters can only shoot one deer at a time, so what's the need for a gun that can fire a spree of rounds in a matter of seconds?

Various gun lobbyists, led by the National Rifle Association immediately jumped into the breech, fending off arguments with their cliche shields of "guns don't kill, people do," and "if you outlaw guns, only outlaws will have guns."

They are absolutely correct you know. If people didn't have guns, they'd resort to something else to kill with - like maybe oranges, or go back to clubs.

Why I bet an adroit human, quick of foot and armed with a good hickory club, using the proper wrist action, could mow down two or three kids before anyone realized what had happened.

And it takes little imagination to think of how you could temporarily blind your victim with a spray of orange juice, then, while the person is clutching his eyes, you could cram the orange down his throat, killing him through strangulation.

These ways may not seem to be as effective as AK-47s, but remember, people kill, not guns.

I also firmly agree with the NRA and others that if you outlaw guns, only outlaws will have guns. With the possible exception of police and the military.

If that's the case, then it would stand to reason that if I saw someone with a gun, I could immediately assume he's a criminal and call my local policeman to come out and do something about it.

If the NRA reasoning appears weak at times, you must also remember these are the same people who think law-abiding citizens need armor piercing rounds to hunt deer and rabbits.

Since cliches seem to be what it takes to win over law makers, perhaps the gun control advocates need to come up with their own set of cliches. One popular one that everyone seems to use, from seat belt advocates to DUI patrols to those who put adult-proof caps on medicine bottles is, "If it saves one life, it's worth it."

I think banning the sale of semi-automatic weapons and restricting the sale of hand guns would certainly save more than one life. But then again, our freedom to bear arms is probably worth a few lives.

Motorcyclists who like to feel the wind in their hair are good examples of this.

Money makes some forget morals

By Joseph L. Allred
Army News Service

When individuals enter the military service they swear, or affirm, to support and defend the Constitution of the United States against all enemies, foreign and domestic and to bear true faith and allegiance to that Constitution.

In a time when our nation is celebrating the bicentennial of the Constitution of the United States, it is difficult to understand why an individual would betray the national values and traditions of this country while wearing the uniform of military service.

During the past few years, and as recently as the past few months, cases of notoriety have crossed the pages of America's newspapers with tales of how members, and former members, of the military have been caught, tried and imprisoned for selling military secrets to foreign countries.

What would make individuals who have received all the benefits of living under the Constitution of the United States become so callous in their regard for the welfare of this nation, and their fellow citizens, that they would sell their honor and loyalty to a foreign power?

Such disregard for the welfare of their nation and fellow soldiers, sailors, airmen or Marines is something that is not fully understood by those who also stand in defense of the Constitution. This behavior appears to be in direct contrast to the sacrifice of thousands who have given their lives for the preservation of American liberty and values.

Greed, anger, retaliation for perceived grievances; these are some of the reasons given by those who are caught in the web of espionage against America.

The Walker case recently pointed out the efforts to which one person went to obtain wealth and power at the expense of his family and country.

John Walker subverted his brother, his son and his friend in convincing them that what they did couldn't hurt anybody. But it did! In fact, the full extent of their espionage is still being calculated today.

Army Sgt. Daniel W. Richardson, recently convicted of passing U.S. defense information with the intent that it be used to injure the United States, alledgedly committed espionage purely for money and out of anger against those he felt had persecuted him.

The most recent case, the arrest of Army Warrant Officer James W. Hall III, is presently being investigated.

As a traffic analyist technician in the Intelligence section of the 24th Infantry Division (Mechanized) Hall had access to classified information. In fact, throughout his military career, both as an enlisted man and warrant officer, he was afforded a top secret clearance.

Perhaps we can never know what causes members of the military to disregard their oath of office and seek to do irrepairable damage to the security and safety of this nation, but we can all take a second look at our own lives and values regarding this nation.

When the values of this nation are no longer accepted as the rule - rather the exception - and military service is seen as a means to get gain rather than defending time-honored traditions, then America is heading for moral chaos.

It is up to those in the military who have remained loyal to their oath, faith and trust in the values of America to ensure that defense of the Constitution and this country are never subverted by those who have lost their honor in a moment of greed and misdirected passion.

The American citizen must ever be confident in those selected and trained to protect this country. It is our responsibility to maintain that confidence by seeking to protect our nation from enemies, from without and from within, being ever vigilant to the cause of constitutional values and freedom.

533rd Trans. soldiers add to string of accomplishments

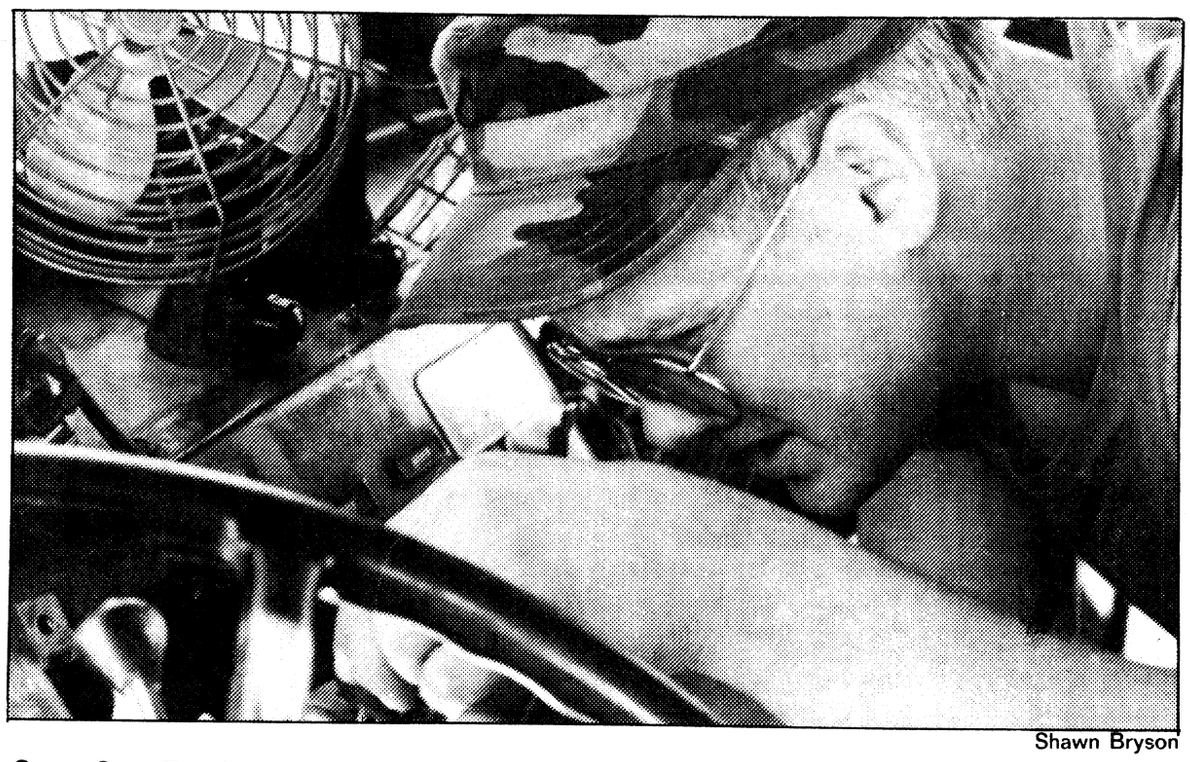
By Shawn Bryson
Bayonet staff writer

The soldiers of the 533rd Transportation Company have done it again.

They have placed in the top two at either the Forces Command or Department of the Army levels of the Chief of Staff, Army, Maintenance Excellence Award every year since the formation of the competition in 1982.

In honor of the 533rd's maintenance excellence, Maj. Gen. Michael Spigelmire, post commander, awarded them a plaque recognizing the latest of the soldiers' string of accomplishments—first runner-up (intermediate category) at FORSCOM for fiscal year 1988.

The competition starts at installation level, and the 533rd has won the intermediate category at Fort Benning every year.

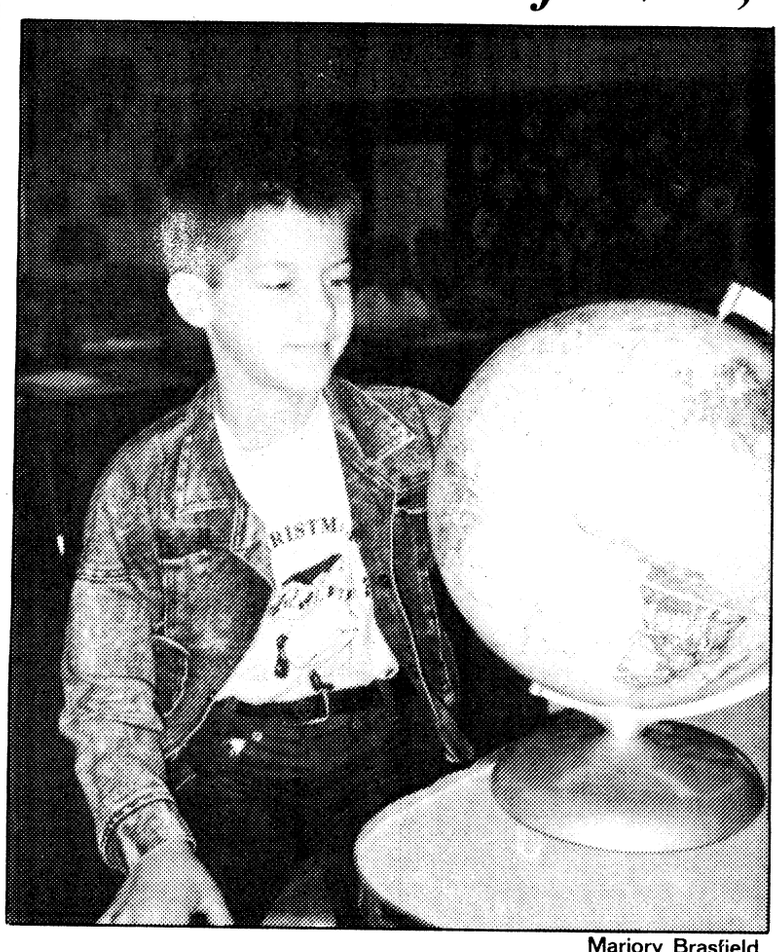


The 533rd advanced to the Forces Command level of the competition after each of its installation wins. For four of the six years, the 533rd has won at FORSCOM level and taken first runner-up the other two years.

Winners at FORSCOM and other major commands advance to the Department of the Army level. The 533rd has had two victories at the DA level as well as first runner-up in 1987.

According to CWO 2 David Baker, 533rd maintenance technician, the maintenance record of the 533rd is due to the hard work of soldiers of the company. Baker explained that although the competition is judged primarily on Unit Maintenance Profiles compiled from existing data files, the 533rd soldiers are responsible for the statistics that make up the UMP. "Our soldiers drove 541,000 miles during fiscal year 1988, and we did not have a single accident," Baker said.

Baker also said that the company's 85 soldiers have a big responsibility as they maintain the unit's 54 tractor trailers and five CUCVs. "With that many vehicles, our soldiers must keep down time to a minimum by regularly pulling Preventative Maintenance Check Systems," Baker said. He also said proper ordering of parts and scheduling of maintenance services are another way the soldiers contributed to the award.



Although the soldiers of the 533rd would have liked to have gone further in the most recent competition, it is evident that the unit has made its mark in maintenance excellence and will more than likely continue to in the future.

Tom Wisdom brushes up on his geography in preparation for a Geography Bee competition.

By Beth Middlemiss
Fort Benning Schools

Tom Wisdom, a fifth grade student at Herbert J. Dexter School, won the school's Geography Bee and a chance at a $25,000 scholarship.

The school-level Bee, in which students answered oral questions on geography, was the first round in the National Geography Bee that is being sponsored by National Geographic World, the National Geographic Society's magazine for children.

The Bee featured questions on the broad subject of geography — the study of the earth and its inhabitants.

Dexter School is one of thousands of schools throughout the United States and in four territories that is participating. Tom Wisdom, along with the other individual school winners, will be eligible to compete in the state Geography Bee to the held on April 7.

State winners will be eligible to compete in the national finals in May. The first place national winner will receive a $25,000 scholarship.

Award

Commission, David S. Ruder, Washington, D.C. and four general officers, both active and retired, will be among the approximately 55 military and civilians inducted into the OCS Hall of Fame, during a ceremony immediately following the Patterson Award presentation.

Some will be present for the ceremony, while others will be inducted in absentia.

Hayden, 44, is expected to attend the ceremony. He was commissioned an infantry officer second lieutenant, upon graduation from OCS on Aug. 22, 1968. His first duty assignment was TAC officer with 91st Company, 9th Student Battalion at Fort Benning. He served in Vietnam and was a first lieutenant when he left active duty in 1970.

Ruder was commissioned as a military intelligence officer second lieutenant upon graduation from OCS in September 1952. His first assignment was with the Army Intelligence School, Fort Riley, Kan. as a student. He, then served in Washington, D.C., until he left active duty as a first lieutenant in April 1954.

Wigle Hall, which houses the OCS Hall of Fame, was dedicated in June 1958 to honor graduates of the infantry OCS program who have distinguished themselves in military or civilian pursuits. It is named for 2nd Lt. Thomas W. Wigle, a 1943 graduate of OCS. Wigle received the Medal of Honor posthumously for his courageous action on Sept. 14, 1944, which resulted in the capture of 36 enemy soldiers and the seizure of an enemy strong point.

Selection of OCS Hall of Fame candidates must have been commissioned from the Officer Candidate School at Fort Benning or the Ground General School at Fort Riley, Kan. and accomplished one of the following:

- The candidate must have been awarded the Medal of Honor (regardless of rank) attained the rank of colonel while serving on active duty or duty in a reserve component, been elected or appointed to an office of prominence in national or state government, or been recognized and recommended by the commandant of the Infantry School for outstanding service.

The guest speaker for the occasion will be retired Gen. Frederick J. Kroesen Jr., former commander in chief, U.S. Army, Europe.

Special tax rules apply to divorced, separated parents

American Forces Information Service

Divorced or separated parents must use special rules to decide whether they or their former spouses can claim the exemption for their child when they file their tax returns. The special rules for divorced or separated parents apply only if:

1) The parents are divorced or legally separated under a decree of divorce or separate maintenance, are separated under a written separation agreement or lived apart at all times during the last six months of the year; and

2) One or both parents provide more than half the child's total support for the calendar year; and

3) One or both parents have custody of the child for more than half the calendar year.

Although there are some exceptions, the parent who has custody of the child for most of the year is usually treated as the parent who provides more than half the child's support. It does not matter whether the parent with custody has been actually providing more than half of the child's support.

A non-custodial parent may claim the exemption for the child if either (1) the custodial parent signs a written declaration that he or she will not claim the exemption for the child and the non-custodial parent attaches this written declaration to this or her return, or (2) a decree or agreement executed before 1985 provides that the non-custodial parent is entitled to the exemption and he or she provides at least $600 for the child's support during the year, unless the pre-1985 decree or agreement is modified after 1984 to specify that this provision will not apply.

UNIT TAX ADVISORS

'A Healthy Smile Shows Your Style'

By Evelyn D. Harris
American Forces Information Service

February 1989 marks the 41st National Children's Dental Health Month. The American Dental Association sponsors the annual observance and is using the slogan, "A Healthy Smile Shows Your Style."

According to the American Dental Association, four out of 10 children today have never had tooth decay. By contrast, in 1945, before fluoride was added to most communities' drinking water, almost every child did.

Navy Capt. Tom McDavid, special assistant for dental affairs to the assistant secretary of defense for health affairs said that in addition to fluoride, other advances such as the use of sealants on children's permanent molars play a role.

Greater awareness of the importance of dental hygiene is also a factor. He said that the success of the Dependent Dental Program allows military dental facilities to focus on a program to increase that awareness during this month.

Here are some dental health tips from McDavid and the American Dental Association:

- Parents should take children to a dentist by the age of 12 months. This allows the dentist to detect potential problems when they can more easily be corrected and helps the child develop a positive attitude toward dental care.
- Parents need to help children brush their teeth until they're about 5 years old.
- Avoid "baby-bottle tooth-decay syndrome." Putting a baby to bed with a bottle of milk or juice may result in rampant decay and early loss of baby teeth. This can lead to toothaches and infection and even cause problems in eating and talking. There may be problems when the permanent teeth come in with no baby teeth to guide them, which means expensive orthodontic treatment to correct the resulting misaligned teeth.
- Discourage your children from eating too many sugary snacks.
- If a pregnant woman takes the antibiotic tetracycline, her baby's teeth may come in stained. Therefore, if you may be pregnant, tell your doctor. Tetracycline may still be the drug of choice, but let your doctor make a fully informed decision.

February is Heart Month

American Forces Information Service

February is American Heart Month. Observed every February since 1964, it has been an opportunity to educate the public about prevention and treatment of heart disease.

According to the American Heart Association, 63 million Americans have some degree of cardiovascular disease, from high blood pressure to severe coronary artery disease. Some 991,300 Americans died from cardiovascular (heart and blood vessel) disease in 1985. Of these, more than half died of heart attacks, making it the leading cause of death in America today.

The second most common form of heart disease is stroke. Some 500,000 Americans have a stroke every year; and more than 150,000 die, making it the third leading cause of death in America (cancer is number two).

Nurse shortage continues

American Forces Information Service

The response to a recent letter sent by Assistant Secretary of Defense (Health Affairs) William E. Mayer to recruit nurses for Reserve duty has been excellent.

As of July 1, 5,410 nurses, or more than five percent of the 106,333 who received the letter, had indicated an interest in joining the Reserve forces, said Maj. Donna Owen, deputy director for Reserve affairs in the health affairs office.

"According to marketing specialists, a response rate of .7 to one percent is considered average, while two percent is excellent," she said. Mayer's letter outlined benefits of joining the Reserve force as a nurse, such as training travel and "the opportunity to work in some of the best hospitals in the world." The letter was sent to nurses specializing in critical care and emergency and operating room nursing and to nurse anesthetists.

DoD is actively recruiting nurses for all branches of the Guard and Reserve. Some nurses recruited for the Individual Ready Reserve may fill vacant active duty positions for up to a year, but the prime purpose of the Reserve recruitment program is to address DoD's wartime shortage of Reserve nurses — 31,000. The Reserves will supply most of the nurses in the event of mobilization.

DoD is not alone in suffering a shortage. A panel appointed by Secretary of Health and Human Services Otis R. Bowen called the problem "real, widespread and of significant magnitude." Nationwide, hospitals are short 117,000 nurses, while nursing homes have 21,000 vacant jobs for registered nurses. Experts attribute the nursing shortage as much to increased demand for trained nurses as to decreases in the number of new nurses.

Community dentists plan education activities

Dental Hygienists' Society

National Children's Dental Health Month, observed annually in February, has brought together dental professionals from Columbus and Fort Benning to plan public education activities to promote good oral health for children.

On Feb. 18, a community Dental Health Fair is planned, 1-5 p.m. at Peachtree Mall. The fair will feature dental screening exams for children 13 years old and under. There will also be puppet shows, a tooth fairy, clowns, helium balloons, games with prizes, a toothbrush trade-in, table clinics and videos - all free to the public.

Fluoride credited with reducing cavities

American Dental Association

Fluoride is credited with a dramatic and continuing reduction of children's cavities over the past 40 years, according to the Fort Benning DENTAC.

Half of 43 million U.S. school children have no decay in their permanent teeth, according to a 1986-87 study by the National Institute of Dental Research. This is due primarily to the enamel strengthening mineral easily obtained in fluoridated water supplies, toothpastes, mouth rinses and topical applications at the dental office.

In contrast, 40 years ago, tooth decay was a major public health problem creating much tooth loss. In fact, missing teeth caused almost nine percent of the rejections of service recruits when the U.S. entered World War II. Military recognition of tooth decay as a serious health concern provided impetus for increased dental research.

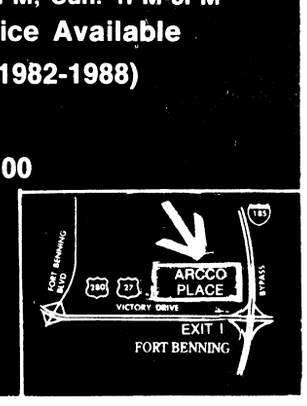
The efficiency of fluoride in preventing cavities was painstakingly discovered in a 30-year search by Dr. Frederick McKay, a Colorado Springs dentist, who puzzled over the mottled stains, but surprisingly little decay, in the tooth enamel of his local patients known as fluorosis, the stained enamel was caused by concentrations of natural in the region's water.

Dr. H. Trendley Dean, a public health dentist, and Dr. McKay discovered that one part per million fluoride in drinking water reduced tooth decay but did not cause enamel discoloration.

In 1945, the fluoride-free water supply of Grand Rapids, Mich. was the first to be fluoridated to the optimum level. Results were quick and positive. The NIDR was established in 1948, and with the American Dental Association, waged a comprehensive public health effort — community water fluoridation. Today, about 60 percent of Americans drink fluoridated water, and periodontal diseases have replaced tooth decay as the major oral health concern.

Such massive public health programs have an important impact on the nation's enormous health bills, the Fort Bening DENTAC emphasizes. NIDR estimates that the decline in tooth decay has sliced about two million annually from dental care costs. By preserving their natural teeth, Americans also have decreased their need for full or partial dentures, which saved them about $5.5 billion between 1974 and 1981.

Although the exact mechanism isn't known, fluoride appears to reduce tooth decay in several ways. First, it seems to promote "remineralization" - the natural process by which calcium moves in and out of tooth enamel - to strengthen resistance to tooth decay and to "heal" the beginnings of a cavity. Fluoride also may interfere with the decay process in which bacterial plaque uses carbohydrates in food to create decay-causing acids. It may reduce acid production or actually change the bacterial composition of plaque.



The Fort Benning DENTAC notes that fluoride alone is not considered the single most effective weapon against tooth decay. Dental researchers believe a virtually cavity-free generation achieved if the use of fluoride is coupled with daily brushing and flossing, healthful eating, regular professional dental care and use of sealants on children's permanent molars.

Swindlers see senior citizens as easy targets

By Barry Price
Provost Marshal's Office

Con artists dupe, defraud and cheat unsuspecting Americans out of several billion dollars each year. People of all ages are victims, but senior citizens are prime targets for swindlers.

Swindlers see the elderly and retirees as easy marks for many reasons. Many older people live on the fixed incomes of Social Security and pensions, supplemented by savings. They may be looking for ways to increase their income through investments, business opportunities or real estate. Some such business ventures may be profitable, but others are ideal traps for fraud.

Con artists promise "incredible bargains" or "quick money." Invariably, they offer the victim "something for nothing."

Some things to be wary of are insurance rip-offs and work-at-home enterprises. Health "cures" and health machines are another racket. Inexpensive eye glasses and hearing aids may not be such a good deal. Check with your doctor or local health clinic if you think you need glasses or a hearing aid. They must fit properly. A bargain is not a bargain if you can't use it.

Phony health insurance snares many older people. Many senior citizens worry about getting sick and being unable to pay for the medical expenses Medicare doesn't cover. There are several health insurance coverages on the market that are supposed to pick up where Medicare leaves off. However, many of these policies offer inadequate coverage. Before you buy a "medi-gap" policy, check with the state insurance commission, a lawyer or the Better Business Bureau.

Some precautions to take are:

- Do not be afraid to say "no." High pressure tactics can convince you to buy something you don't want or need.
- Get a receipt for all transactions.
- Do not give any large sums of cash for any reason.
- Do not pay in advance for goods or services.
- Do not expect something for nothing.

To report fraud, call the CID Office at 545-3948 and leave your recorded message. You do not have to identify yourself. Help Take a Bite Out of Crime.

ASK THE JUDGE

By Jane M. Winand
Staff Judge Advocate's Office

Q: I got a great brochure in the mail. A large retail store chain is offering a legal services plan for a low monthly fee. Although I'm in the Army and know that there are lawyers at the Staff Judge Advocate's Office, wouldn't it be a good idea to sign up for this plan? The lawyers that provide the services under the plan are licensed in my state and wouldn't they be better able to help me than the JAG lawyers? Enclosed is the brochure.

A: As with any offer to provide services, it is important to look closely at the specific provisions and the services that will be provided. For a few dollars a month, the brochure states that the participants in the plan will be provided with very limited legal assistance such as the drafting of simple wills, the review of documents like contracts and leases and the writing of letters. The number of letters that will be written each year is limited to two or three in some states. There may be an additional charge for each letter. The plan does not pay for an attorney to go with you into court. Such additional services are only available if you pay more money.

Under this plan, the services you would get are no better (and in some instances, such as the writing of letters, may be much less) than those services provided free on a daily basis at the Fort Benning Legal Assistance office.

There is also the possibility that legal services under the plan may not be conveniently available to you should you be reassigned to another location.

Unless you have money to burn, there is no reason to pay for legal services you can get free as a soldier or family member.

All of the Judge Advocate General's Corps attorneys are licensed to practice law in at least one state. The JAGC attorneys are also uniquely qualified to handle military administrative matters with which civilian attorneys have little or no experience. In addition, there is an attorney in the Fort Benning Legal Assistance Office who is licensed to practice law by the state of Georgia and who, along with the other JAGC attorneys, is familiar with the Georgia laws and regulations. The JAGC attorneys will be able to professionally and competently handle the routine legal services this plan would provide free to the soldiers or family members.

The Legal Assistance Office gives advice, makes telephone calls, drafts documents and prepares correspondence as necessary for problems involving divorce, legal separations, adoptions, custody, support, paternity, contracts, credit problems, automobile and residential leases, taxation, accidents, insurance, wills, powers of attorney and problems unique to the military such as reports of survey and line of duty investigations.

An appointment to see a JAGC lawyer may be made by calling 545-3281/3282 or by stopping by the Legal Assistance Office in building 5.

By using the following procedure, soldiers on the Family housing waiting List can use this chart to estimate when they can expect quarters:

Locate your category of housing.

Note eligibility date located on the same line as your category.

Calculate the time difference between the eligibility date listed and your eligibility date. The difference is the approximate time you still have to wait for housing.

EXAMPLE: If the latest eligibility date of the person who last received housing in your category was May 15, 1988, and your date of eligibility is Sept. 15, 1988, you can expect housing in about four months. If you do not know your eligibility date, contact the Family Housing Office at building 399, 545-3107.

Prayer Breakfast scheduled Tuesday

By Debra Galle
USAIC Chaplain's Office

The Fort Benning National Prayer Breakfast will be held at the Main NCO Club Tuesday, 6:30 a.m. Leaders from varied backgrounds will gather in a time of prayer for America, its leaders and one another.

The guest speaker will be fourth-term Congressman, Richard Belmont Ray, Democrat. Ray is from the third district of Georgia of which he is a lifetime resident.

A strong supporter of a cost-efficient national defense, Ray served on three subcommittees of the Armed Services Committee — Procurement and Military Nuclear Systems, Readiness and Military Personnel and Compensation. He also served on the Defense Policy Panel, the Special Operations Panel, the Strategic Defense Initiative Panel and the U.S. Air Force Academy Board of Visitors. In addition, he was appointed to the Special Panel on Arms Control and Disarmament and served in the 100th Congress as the Chairman of the Environmental Restoration Panel of the Readiness Subcommittee.

Ray enlisted in the United States Navy in 1944 and served on destroyers in the Far East. Following active duty, he returned to Georgia and became a farmer. Later, he began a 23-year career in the pest control business. His political career began in 1962 when he was elected a member of the Perry town council.

Musical entertainment for the breakfast will be provided by Marlesa Ball, Miss Georgia 1986-87. Her distinctively gospel/patriotic style has resulted in numerous appearances including television programs such as "Richard Roberts Live" and the "700 Club." A student of dance, music and drama, Ball appeared as a soloist for the 1988 Miss America Pageant in Atlantic City, N.J.

Seating at the breakfast is strictly limited to 500. For more information, call the USAIC Chaplain's Office at 545-2288.

Symbols represent profound realities

By Frank P. Lane
Reception Station Chaplain Battalion

Often we fail to realize how important and ever-present symbols are in our lives. Stop and think. The uniform is a symbol of our commitment to the military. The flag is a symbol of our nation. A wedding ring is a symbol of the marriage covenant. And there are many, many more. In our faith life, symbols are also very important and signify very profound realities.

Wednesday we will observe Ash Wednesday, the beginning of Lent. On that day, ashes are place on the forehead of believers with the words, "Remember you are dust and unto dust you shall return" or "Repent and believe the good news." It is a symbolic act but, again, there is a reality present. Jesus went into the desert for 40 days and 40 nights (symbolizing Israel's forty years in the desert) where he fasted and prayed before beginning his public ministry. For the forty days and forty nights of Lent, Christians are asked to pray and to fast before, once again, proclaiming salvation to the world through the death and resurrection of the Lord — the church's public ministry.

If we are unaware of our own mortality and lose sight of our final destination, we can easily lose sight of the importance of sharing Jesus's life now. If we're not concerned about sharing His life with Him in eternity, why would we be concerned about sharing it now?

Ash Wednesday is both a reminder and an invitation. The ashes themselves are a reminder of death and our own mortality. The day begins our Lenten invitation to repent so we may more effectively share Jesus' life and ministry today. What we share with Him today, we hope to share more fully in eternity.

The symbol reflects the reality. Our bodies will certainly return to dust. Through repentance we are invited to allow our pride, our selfishness, our faithlessness to return to dust. The truth of our own mortality confronts us. The hope of eternal life invites us to die to sinfulness in order to live forever.

The symbols of death and repentance — the ashes, prayer and fasting — help us to believe in the new birth of Jesus in our lives. From the ashes of Lent to the celebration of the Resurrection on Easter, the Christian is brought through the temptations in the desert, the struggle of public ministry, the suffering of the cross to the triumph of the Resurrection. We believe a life shared today is a life shared forever. Through a strengthening of faith, the symbols became the reality.

Congressional committee reviews future NATO, Warsaw Pact balance of power

With the signing of the Intermediate-Range Nuclear Forces Treaty, conventional forces have become more important in the balance of power between NATO and the Warsaw Pact.

But the styles of manning and mobilization of both will mean that NATO will have a tougher time fielding a credible conventional force by the year 2000, while the Warsaw Pact will find it easier.

This is the conclusion drawn by Jeffrey Simon, a senior fellow with the Mobilization Concepts Development Center of the Institute for National Strategic Studies in Washington, D. C.

Simon testified before the House Armed Services Committee on the trends affecting NATO and the Warsaw Pact into the next century.

The major trend is demographics. "Both alliances have exhibited a declining share of the world's population and gross world product over the last 35 years since their creation," he said. In addition, the youth group needed to man the armed forces will grow in the Warsaw Pact and shrink in NATO.

Carlucci: 'Industrial base is strategic asset'

"It should be evident that only a healthy industrial base can provide the kind of innovative technological advances we will rely on to ensure our national security."

That's the view of former Secretary of Defense Frank C. Carlucci expressed in remarks recently before the National Security Industrial Association in Washington, D. C.

Referring to the "erosion of our defense industrial base," Carlucci said several changes were needed in the way government conducts its defense business to restore conditions to a healthy level. He suggested changes in acquisition and procurement policy and the defense budget process.

"One of the central reasons for the current erosion of our defense industrial base," Carlucci noted, " is that we ask defense contractors to inhabit a business climate that is – to be perfectly candid – inhospitable to innovation and efficiency." And contractors themselves, he added, have made two points especially clear: "The current system is highly unstable and excessively complex."

Citing the ups and downs of defense spending from the 1970s to the present, he said, "The United States could have obtained more defense for its dollar had spending followed a steady and predictable course, rather than alternating between feast and famine."

Commissary sales exceed $1.84 billion

The U. S. Army Troop Support Agency enjoyed one of its most productive fiscal years as record gross sales figures totaling $1.84 billion represented a leap of more than $97 million in comparison to 1987 fiscal year figures.

The 5.4 percent increase represented a trend, particularly in foreign commissaries, where sales to military families are reflective of a devalued dollar.

Major promotion list released Jan. 26

Army personnel officials on Jan. 26 released the names of 2,402 captains recommended by a board that adjourned last November for the "major, Army competitive category" promotion list for fiscal year 1989. The Secretary of the Army approved the board's recommendations on Dec. 20, 1988.

Officials say the selection rate for first-time considered officers was 68.7 percent (slightly higher than the 1987 board, which chose 64.8 percent), with 4.6 percent of the selections being officers below the zone. The board selected 18.5 percent of the officers previously considered by the fiscal year 1988 promotion board.

Officials project that promotions from this list will begin in the summer of 1990.

Nurse shortage prompts recruiting effort

Enlisted soldiers in the Army's medical specialties have a new opportunity to advance in their military careers while at the same time helping the Army cope with its portion of the nation's nursing shortage.

Under a program developed by the U. S. Army Reserve Officers' Training Corps Cadet Command at Fort Monroe, Va., those medically-serving soldiers who plan to leave the Army in quest of a baccalaureate degree in nursing have become the object of special recruitment.

As prospective new members in the Army Nurse Corps, these soldiers merely need to qualify for entry into the Army ROTC nursing program on their chosen campuses.

The new program, called "Green to Gold," embodies a referral system to help the Cadet Command track and contact potential nursing candidates currently on active duty.

The command has extended the deadline for nursing scholarship applications. It's now moved from Dec. 1, 1988 to May 1.

DA boards require current photo and physical

By Melissa L. Meyer
Enlisted Records, AG

Current photographs and physicals are key items for Department of Army Boards. Officers and noncommissioned officers alike are guilty of not complying with the regulations.

Army regulation 340-30 states that upon promotion to E-6 and 1st Lt. or initial appointment to warrant officer and command sergeant major, an initial photograph must be made.

Each person should then have a periodic photograph taken every third year during his or her birth month. If your photograph no longer represents your present appearance, have it remade.

Soldiers are hurting themselves by not maintaining their DA photo. When boards meet, that photo is the only physical representation of you in addition to your records.

The photograph facility is located in building 108 (across from the main post car wash). Photos can be taken on Monday, Wednesday and Friday from 8 to 11:45 a.m. on a walk-in basis.

As for physicals, according to AR 40-501, every person must update his or her physical every five years in their birth month. This means that even if you had a physical to attend Airborne School when you were 24 years old, you must still have a periodic physical when you turn 25, and every five years thereafter. This also assists the Personnel Records section in maintaining your correct physical capacity, upper and lower extremities, hearing, vision and psychiatric profile.

The Physical Exam Branch is located in building 323 (behind the Infantry Museum). Physicals for males are conducted on a walk-in basis at 8 a.m. Tuesday through Thursday. For females, the physicals are conducted at 8 a.m. on Mondays and Fridays.

Notices for all personnel requiring DA photos and physical exams are sent to the unit commanders. Please assist your soldiers in their endeavors to be promoted by ensuring that they update their photos and physicals.

CID clamps down on drug activities

By Agatha H. James
Bayonet staff writer

Fort Benning's Criminal Investigation Division is clamping down on drug activities on post with a new drug hot line and through a series of battalion drug awareness briefings, according to C. Michael Moudy, special agent and the division's Drug Suppression Team chief.

DST investigates illegal drug dealings and activities from possessions to sales. Moudy said the DST's main function is to investigate felony drug possession cases and the sale of drugs.

"We want the Fort Benning community, especially commanders and other soldiers, to know we're out there fighting the war on drugs," Moudy said. "We're here to help, and we're available 24 hours a day."

The team recently implemented a drug hot line for callers to report any kind of drug activity. The number is 545-1703, and callers do not have to leave their name or number. The calls will be recorded and later erased. They will not be used as evidence against anyone.

Moudy said when calling the hot line, callers should report as much information as they can. "Give us a name, date, time and location if possible," he said. "That way, we will have something to go on. We can't conduct an investigation if we don't have enough information."

Moudy said callers should use the line to report a drug pusher or to report a user. "CID will not contact the caller unless he or she specifically requests to be contacted," he said.

CID investigates possession of all narcotic drugs such as heroin or morphine, and they investigate the possession of cocaine. Also, the CID investigates the sale of any drug. The Military Police Activity investigates possessions of non-narcotic drugs such as marijuana.

Moudy said CID investigators are here to support commanders and to get drugs out of the units. "Some commanders will call us about drug problems, but others won't," he said. "We want everyone to know that we are always there - 24 hours a day - for assistance.

CID can be reached during normal duty hours at 545-7950. After duty hours, callers should contact the Military Police office and ask for a DST member.

This year, DST will begin drug awareness briefings for all battalions on Fort Benning. DST would like to conduct up to two briefings per year at the request of each battalion. Commanders or the unit training office should call CID to schedule the briefings as part of professional development.

"We want to do two briefings for every battalion at Fort Benning," Moudy said. "All they have to do is call us."

The briefings will last one to two hours. They are designed for E-8s and above and will give the participants a hands-on look at drugs and who to contact if there is a drug problem in their unit.

"We'll show them pictures. We'll show them drugs. And we'll give the commanders a face-to-face look at DST," Moudy said.

'Triple Nickels' proved Blacks could jump from planes

By Rudi Williams
American Forces Information Service

When the Army formed its elite 82nd Airborne Division during World War II, the rule was "whites only." Blacks allegedly "couldn't handle" the tough training and didn't have enough "guts" to jump out of airplanes.

Blacks were supposed to guard the all-white paratrooper school and packing shed and patrol the area as they watched the white soldiers train.

But there was one man who knew that black soldiers could do just as well as whites and decided to prove it. The year was 1944.

"Since we were in the vicinity, I decided we would emulate the white paratroopers," said Walter Morris, who was first sergeant of the black service company. "We observed them when they did their calisthenics and double-

ITC's energy savings plan pays off big bucks

By Becky Ray
Energy Branch

A commitment to saving energy, along with planning and coordination, payed off big bucks in energy savings for the 1st and 2nd Infantry Training Brigades during EXODUS '88. During the winter holiday break, the U. S. Army Infantry Training Center consolidated the few troops remaining in the barracks, winterized and closed down vacated areas and consolidated dining facility operations for the 15-day period.

The project was a great success, saving Fort Benning about $1,485 a day in natural gas costs in the Sand Hill area alone. Total energy savings for Sand Hill and Harmony Church exceeded $25,000. Daily meter readings were taken to determine natural gas savings, which exceeded $22,000. Electricity savings from the shutdown of air handlers was about $3,480.

Colonel Perry, ITC Commander, said, "During this time of austerity, it is important that we make every dollar count. Supporting the energy conservation program is one way to do this. Money saved ultimately will be returned to benefit our soldiers in many other productive ways."

Members of the 1st and 2nd ITBs planned, coordinated and executed the project. Instrumental in the project were Capt. David Wait, 3rd Battalion, 32nd Infantry executive officer, Capt. William Hearn, 2nd ITB adjutant, Maj. Richard Hagan, 1st ITB executive officer and Capt Vitullo, 2nd ITB supply officer.

1st quarter energy figures down

Energy consumption for the first quarter of fiscal year 1989 was .47 percent below the Training and Doctrine Command's target for Fort Benning.

However, the most critical period in meeting the annual goal is still ahead. The wide range of temperatures during January and March make planning for the weather tricky. Warmer than normal temperatures and subsequent goal adjustments downward make meeting the goals even more difficult.

TRADOC reduces goals during periods of warmer than average weather in winter to compensate for the expected reduction in energy use. The use of heating energy at Fort Benning, however, often exceeds the adjustment.

Because of the unpredictability of the winter weather in the area, post energy managers are concerned that winter energy consumption may exceed goals. That would mean more stringent limitations for air conditioning use in the upcoming spring and summer seasons to keep consumption for the year on or below target. Last year, air conditioning was continued beyond the regular cooling season because energy consumption was below goal.

To ensure that we meet our goal and can enjoy heating and cooling as we need it later in the year, it's critical that post residents and employees make every effort to use all forms of energy wisely and avoid waste.

USAMU's skilled craftsmen produce custom weapons

By Sally Roberts
USAMU

At the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit, the shooting team extends beyond the marksmen who ultimately stand at the firing line.

Before a weapon is of the high quality required by these world class shooters, it passes through the hands of several skilled individuals in the unit's Custom Firearms Shop.

It is here that a blank barrel is modified to meet all the special requirements of the match in which it will be fired; and of the shooter.

Then the rifle is fitted to a stock.

[illegible]craftsmen. Part of each [illegible] won before the weapons ever leaves the shop.

"Shooting is a mental sport," said Sgt. Mark Palmer, a stock and grip maker.

"If we provide the shooters with a rifle that is capable of winning, then doubts about the weapon are not on his mind during a match."

The soldiers and civilians who work in the "shop" are each reluctant to take credit for the custom weapons produced here. No weapon is the effort of just one person.

Marvin Aldrich is a shop machinist who takes a blank barrel, which resembles a steel club with a hole down the center, and shapes it to meet the specific shape we want and puts the threads on the end (where the chamber will be attached).

"A lot of times we have to trim the outside of the barrel to bring down the weight," said Aldrich.

"When it's finished, each barrel weighs about 2.3 kilograms (about five pounds)," he said.

Then the machinists add the "action" or working parts to the weapon.

"We do a lot of fabrication," Aldrich added. "We build triggers, scope mounts, site bases and other parts for the weapons."

The weapon is then test fired to check its accuracy. If it isn't just right, it goes back for more work.

When they are satisfied with the accuracy, it is passed on to the stock makers for the wooden parts.

> "Without them, we couldn't do our job and win the medals and trophies that we win."

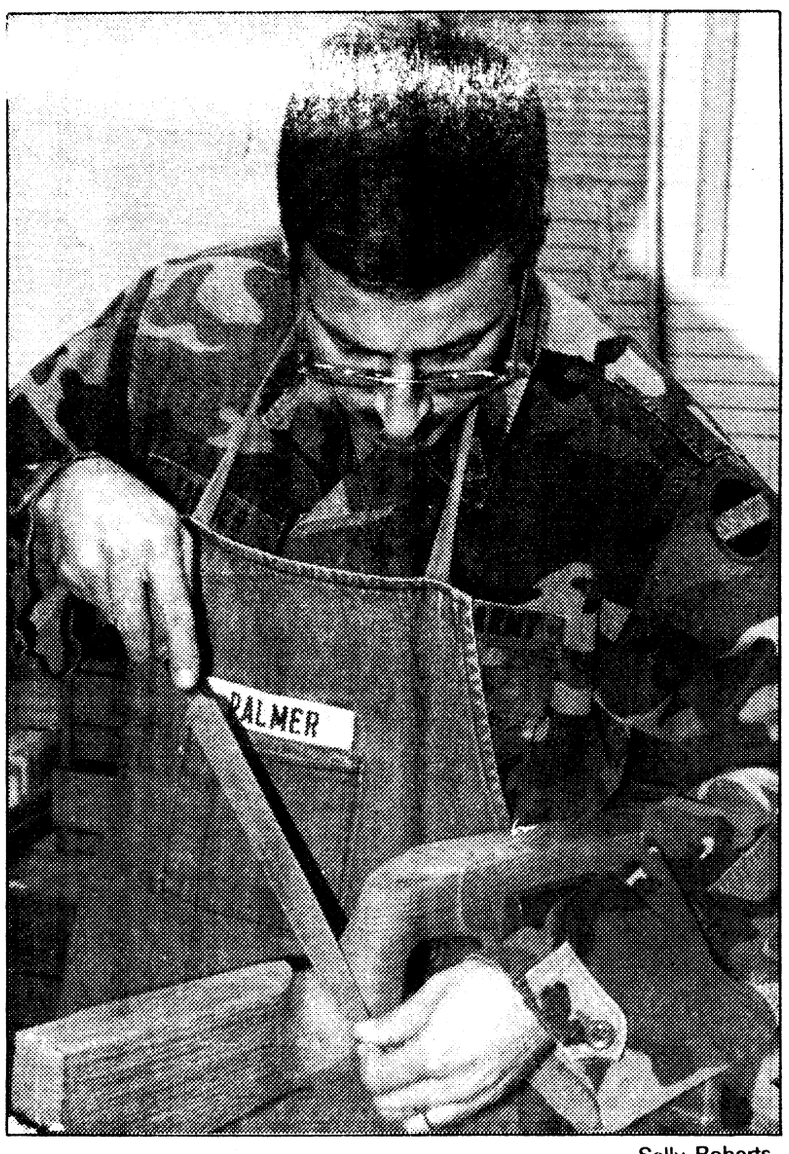
"When we put the wood on the weapon, we cannot take away from the accuracy of the barrel," Sgt. Palmer said.

"We begin with a piece of wood in the rough shape of a stock and start carving the parts," he added.

Palmer explained that carving the stock to fit the individual shooter is the technical part.

The grip must be carved for a perfect fit with the shooter's firing hand. The area where the shooter rests his cheek against the stock is also shaped for the individual.

"We may have to work with a shooter who wants a heavier barrel, for example, so we have to make up for the weight requirements," Palmer said.



When the barrel is fitted to the stock, a plastic epoxy compound is used to fill in all the space between the wood and the barrel, a process called glass bedding.

"The wood has to be a perfect duplication of the gun so that everything remains the same for each shot," Palmer added.

"No other barrel will fit that stock."

The creativity and skill with which these weapons are made is appreciated most by the men and women who represent the unit in competition.

"Without them, we couldn't do our job and win the medals and trophies that we win," said Capt. Wanda Jewell, who competes in Women's Standard Rifle events.

Marathon's winding curves, rolling hills challenge mind and body

By John M. Henderson
Martin Army Community Hospital

WHAT: 1989 Infantry Marathon and Half Marathon
WHEN: March 4, 1989. Marathon starts at 9 a.m.; half marathon begins at 9:30 a.m.
WHERE: Intersection of Dixie Road and Eckel Street.

The Infantry Marathon is one month away.

As we prepare physically to run the 26-mile course, now is also the time to mentally prepare for the course as well.

A look at the maps and a car ride through the course itself will get the runner in the right frame of mind.

There are rolling hills, semi-desolate inclined curves and winding downhill stretches. Of course this doesn't last forever, only 2.75 miles.

Sunshine dumps onto Jamestown Road on an uphill, left-hand turn. Jamestown is a favorite of cyclist. I have never seen a runner on that stretch. I wonder why?

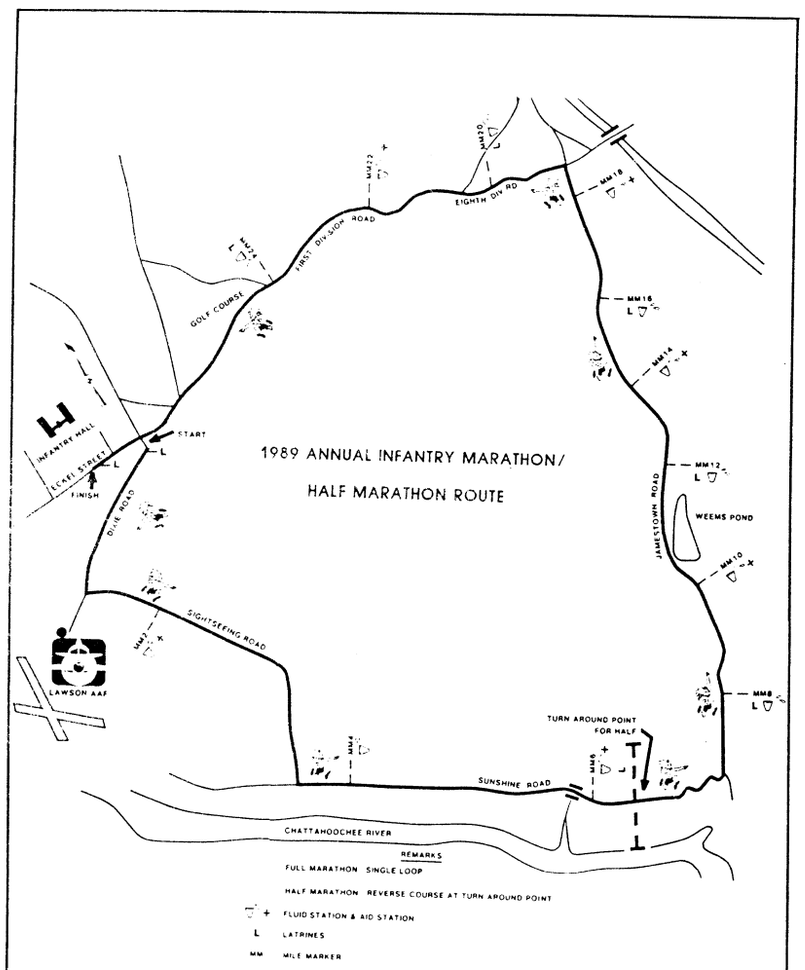
As Jamestown comes toward the firehouse, you may think you've re-entered civilization. But, think again.

Eighth Division Road begins downhill, but watch those banked berms.

This empties onto First Division Road for what you may think is the home stretch. Not so.

First Division winds downhill a bit once the 197th Infantry Brigade is passed. Then there is a phenomenal uphill climb toward Dental Clinic #1.

Finally, Dixie Road is approached. Another series of rolling hills, with the final one curving downward into the old Splinter Village.



Now, only now, is the final 1.25 miles flat.

If you come from West Virginia, this course may seem flat.

Is it too hilly? If it wasn't a challenge, it wouldn't be a marathon. Each hill confirms the need for adherence to a pre-run plan: discipline, steady pace, avoid the urge to "race" down Dixie past the ranges and military police billets; avoid overstriding down Sightseeing Road and avoid the desperate feeling so common in the desolate segments out along the Harmony Church area.

The course is a great one, more scenic than ever, more challenging and less monotonous. This will, however, require mature discipline.

See you on the road.

Ray Mercer turns professional

Agatha H. James

Ray Mercer, Olympic gold medalist, throws a few punches at Briant Wells gymnasium.

By Agatha H. James
Bayonet staff writer

Mike Tyson, look out.

Ray Mercer wants you.

Your title, that is. And, all the money and fame that goes along with it.

Keep your personal and professional problems; Mercer wants only boxing's heavyweight champion of the world title. And, he says, if that means defeating you, then so be it.

At 6 feet, 1-1/2 inches tall and weighing 210 pounds, Mercer, looks like an average guy. But, when this former infantryman puts on a pair of boxing gloves and gets into the ring, he's a literal powerhouse. In fact, his opponents at the 1988 Summer Olympic games in Seoul, South Korea, can probably attest to that. Mercer knocked out all of them to win the gold at the games last June.

At 27, Mercer has about five years of experience under his belt. In that short time, he has punched his way to the top of the amateur arena. Now, he's turning professional, and his goal is to reach the top.

Dressed in a full-length black leather coat, he sports a look of ostentation like some other professional athletes. As he talks and gestures, one can't help but notice his two gold chains, a gold tooth and two gold rings, including the black and gold Olympic ring with its five intertwined circles.

Mercer says he wants to travel down the same road as other boxing greats such as Joe Louis and Muhammad Ali, who also went on to capture the heavyweight boxing title after winning Olympic gold medals.

Mercer, who was voted the 1988 Armed Forces Athlete of the Year, has already signed a contract with promoter Bob Arum, Chairman of the Board of Top Rank, Inc., a firm that promotes boxing matches. And, he has hired Marc Roberts as his manager. His contract calls for 10 fights over the next two years with his first professional bout to be held Feb. 24 at Donald J. Trump's Plaza and Casino in Atlantic City, N. J.

Mercer doesn't even know who his opponent will be, but he said that doesn't matter. "I still have to train like it's a title fight," he said.

For him, it may as well be a title fight because it could make all the difference in the world as far as his professional career is concerned.

A eight-year Army veteran, Mercer said he was in the Army two years before he ever put on a pair of boxing gloves. "It was a cold day in December, 1983, in Schweinfurt, West Germany," he said when asked how it all began.

"I was walking around the motor pool getting ready to go the field the next day and dreading every minute of it. There was a boxing team on post, but there was only one heavyweight fighter on the team. He was in my company,

598th Maintenance Company wins CG's intramural sports trophy

Shawn Bryson

Sgt. Darrell Dixon (r) accepts trophy from the post commanding general, Maj. Gen. Michael F. Spigelmire.

By Shawn Bryson
Bayonet staff writer

The soldiers of the 598th Maintenance Company recently won Fort Benning's Commanding General's Trophy for the third consecutive time since 1986.

At a 67th Maintenance Battalion awards ceremony Jan. 27, commanding general Michael F. Spigelmire represented the 598th with the trophy, which was created in 1985. The only other unit to hold the trophy was Company A, 1st Battalion, The School Brigade.

The competition for the trophy centers around five sports - basketball, bowling, volleyball, softball and flag football. Two seasons of each of the sports are played each year.

Individual units receive points for entry into the league, participation and for team record. Fifty points are given to a unit that enters the league. If the unit participates throughout the season, it receives another 50 points. One hundred points are given to the winning team from each league. Points are also given to units that place at post championships and to units who have soldiers that participate on or tryout for all-Army teams.

Strong bowling, volleyball and softball teams were just part of the sports program that won the trophy for the 598th again. The unit racked up 200 points in the first season of volleyball and 400 points for their first place finishes in the second seasons of bowling and softball.

The unit also took second places in the first seasons of basketball and bowling. The 598th's final point total was 1,575.

According to Sgt. Darrell Dixon, sports spokesman for the 598th, "It's a lot of hard work but our first sergeant and commander know how important it is and give us plenty of time to practice," he said.

"The main reason the 598th soldiers have been so successful is because they are supported by the entire chain of command - from the company level to all the way to the 36th Engineer Group Headquarters," said Capt. Arthur L. Clark, III, 598th commander.

Whatever their secret is, the 598th soldiers are "kings of the trophy" and have shown that taking it away won't be easy.

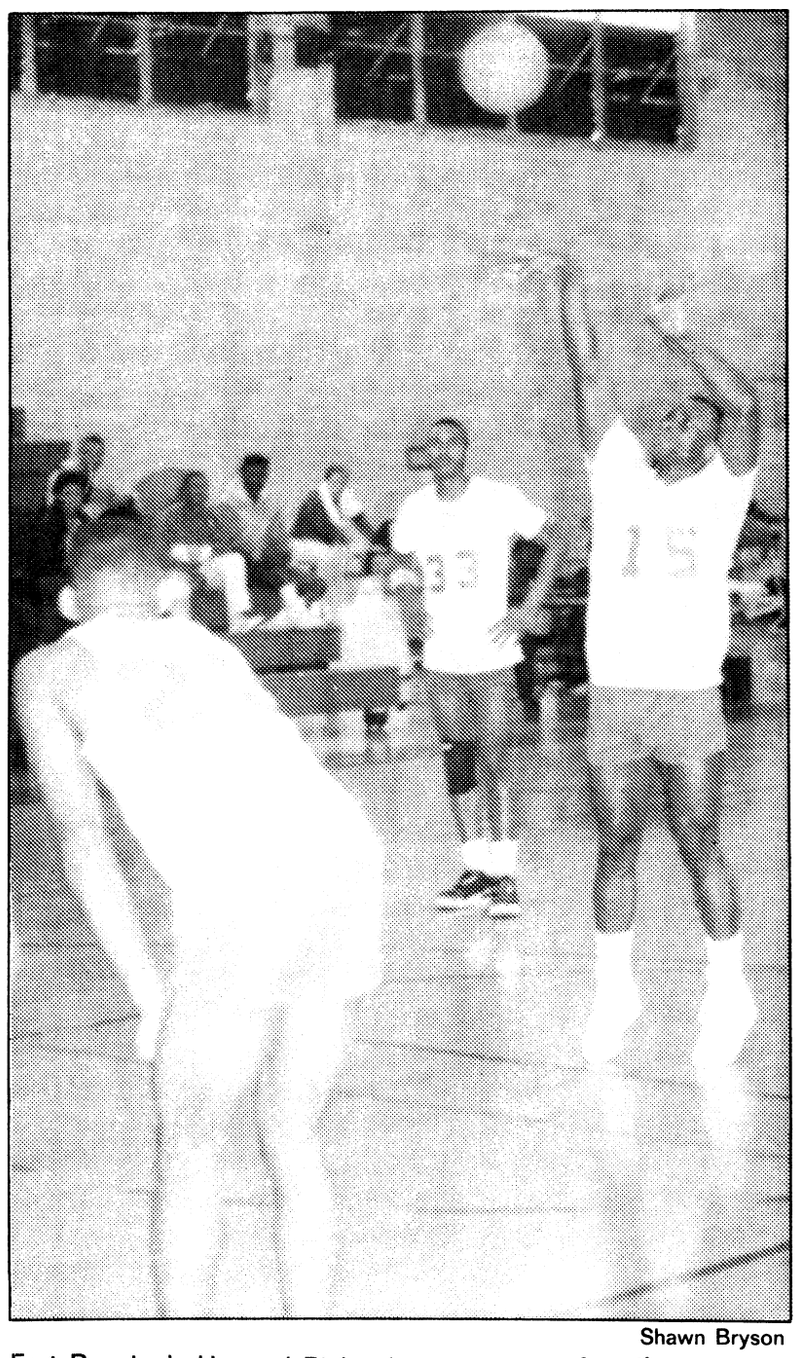
Benning, Redstone Arsenal swap wins

By Shawn Bryson
Bayonet staff writer

As part of an effort to reinstitute post-versus-post athletics, a basketball team from Redstone Arsenal, Ala. visited Fort Benning recently to take on a Benning team in two games at Briant Wells Field House.

Fort Benning won the first game Jan. 21, 93-71. Benning came out strong with leading scorer Kevin Arnold scoring 12 first-half points. Despite 12 points from Redstone's Howard Lawson, Arnold, assisted by Alphonso Thomas with 8 first-half points, Benning led at half time, 40-31.

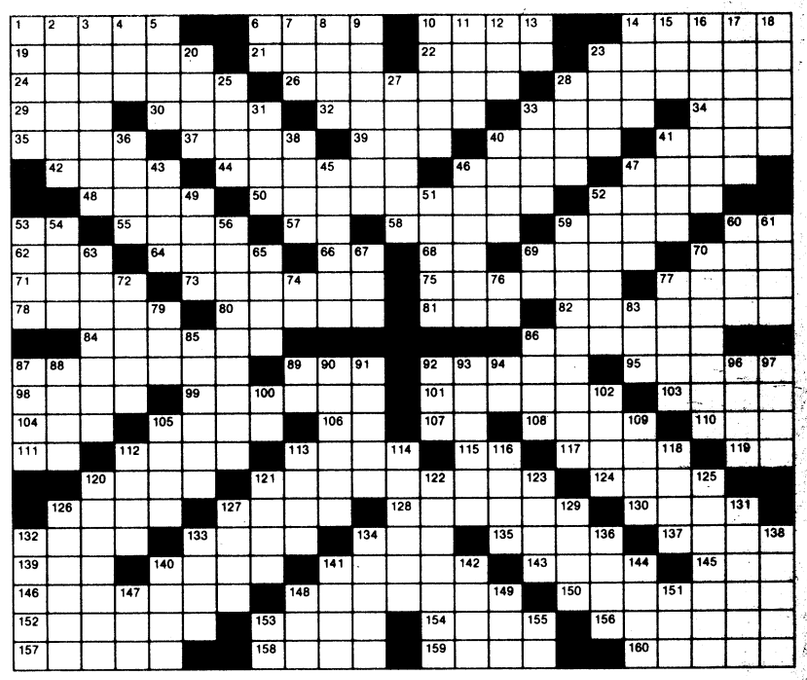
Benning's Gary Slayton teamed up with Arnold in the second half as both added 12 points each to the scoreboard with Howard Richardson right behind with 11.



Redstone's leading scorers were Lawson with 20 and Albert Johnson with 16.

A dual effort from Redstone's Albert Johnson and Cornelius Williams made game two a different story as Redstone defeated Benning, 91-79.

Johnson and Williams both had 11 first-half points leading their team to a 44-36 half-time lead.



Down, but not out of it, Benning struggled through the second half, giving up 19 points in fouls. Benning's leading scorer, Gary Slayton, had 22 points, but Redstone still walked away with the win.

According to sports office officials, the two teams will possibly meet again before the end of the season.

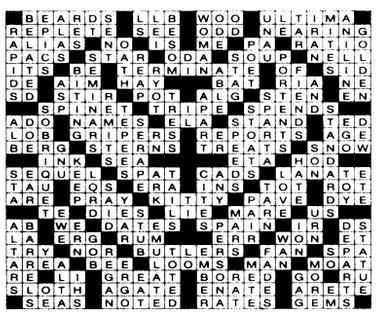
197th Spt. Bn defeats 72nd Eng. Co.

George Mingee
Charles Fleming scores an easy two with a lay-up.

By George Mingee
197th Infantry Brigade

Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 197th Support Battalion, barely edged past 72nd Engineers Company (Combat) in 197th basketball play, 47-45.



Warren Ferguson of 72nd scored 20 points of his teams 45, scoring 12 points in the second-half only to have Eric Reed of Spt Bn nail two game ending foul shots.

The first half was all 72nd with their offense and defense working hand in hand. HHC Spt defense struggled, however; its offense kept it close for a half-time score of 24-22 in favor of 72nd.

As the 2nd Half started so did HHC Spt offense led by Charles Fleming and Reed both with 12 points a peice. As the clock ticked down, so did the 72nd defense allowing HHC Spt a 43 to 43 score with 49 seconds left in the game.

The final six seconds of the game put Reed of HHC Spt on the foul-line with a score of 45-45. Reed sank the two pressure shots and the score held as his team prevented 72nd from scoring in the last few seconds.

Morris advances to state level of free throw contest

By Shawn Bryson
Bayonet staff writer

Danny Morris is on his way to the state level of the Elks' National "Hoop Shoot" Free Throw contest after hitting 22 of 25 shots at the district level of the competition at Albany State College on Jan. 21.

Morris, who competed in the 8-9 age group, won the Fort Benning and local levels held recently en route to the district.

He is a student at White school and the only youngster from Fort Benning advancing to the state level of the competition which will be held in Milledgeville Feb. 25.

If Morris walks away with another win at the state level, he will advance to the regionals March 18 at Valdosta State College in Valdosta, Ga.

After regionals, the national finals will be held at Market Square Areana in Indianapolis, In. April 14-16.

Other Benning youngsters who competed at Albany State were Lindsi Esplin, Jereme Morris and Shonna Barker. Esplin placed second in the 8 to 9-year-old girls and Jerome Morris placed third in the 12 to 13-year-old boys. Barker and Morris are students at Faith School.

About 3 million children are expected to compete at all levels of the 1989 Elk's "Hoop Shoot."

The contest gives the winners and their families a chance to compete at no expense to the families or the schools.

The competition is designed to provide an interesting, character-building program for boys and girls.

Mercer

and he needed a sparring partner.

"The coach, who was also my my company, asked me if I would be this guy's sparring partner. I told him I would think about it. But, when he said that if I would do it, I wouldn't have to go to the field, that's all I needed to know. The next day, I was in the gym putting on the gloves.

"From there, I went to the Army camp where I had two fights, then I moved on from the intra-service competition to the nationals to the Olympic trials and on to the Olympics." The rest is history - at least up to now.

Mercer said he feels he is just as good as anyone else. "I can remember people saying I couldn't do it (win in the Olympic games), and that got next to me. So I trained hard, and, I told myself that if I don't win, at least I could say I did my best." In this case, his best was good enough.

"After winning the gold medal, I told myself I will never put myself down again," he said. "If I put my mind to it, I can do anything."

His optimism and self-confidence keeps him going. "If I have tension, I go to the gym and hit the bag. I look forward to taking out all my stress and tension on the bag."

Mercer grew up in a close-knit family and was a military brat. His family continues to remain very close. His father, Raymond, who is a retired SFC, and his mother, Betty, live in Augusta, Ga. "I go home a lot," he said. "When I was stationed at Fort Benning, I would go home almost every weekend."

One of five children, Mercer has four sisters. "We grew up in good neighborhoods," he said. "We traveled a lot, but most of the time we lived in military housing. You feel safe there because it's good, clean living. I was never around what you would call 'bad' kids, and I never lived in what you would call 'bad' neighborhoods."

"My father is a fun type of guy," Mercer said. "He likes fishing, and many times while I was growing up, he would say, 'Son, let's go fishing.' We grew very close that way, and he always told me if I had problems, I could always talk to him."

Mercer said his wife of four years, Connie, and his trainer, Hank Johnson, who was also his coach while he was in the Army, are his closest confidants. "When I need someone to talk to, I talk to one of them," he said.

Mercer has already begun training for his upcoming bout. He is training in Arizona and for four weeks, his days will begin at 6 a.m. "The first thing I do is run about two to three miles," he said. "After showering and eating a good breakfast, I begin condition training. This involves a lot of sit-ups, waist bends and endurance type exercises." After lunch, he hits the pads for nine rounds. Then, he hits the bags for three rounds in 30-second and one-minute drills.

Mercer's life has been a series of moves, and his latest decision has brought about one more move. He and his wife and their two children - Tovores, his 12-year old stepson, and Tierra, their 10-month old daughter - have already moved to Atlantic City where they will live for at least the next few years while he is still under contract.

"Since all my fights will be in Atlantic City, we decided to go ahead and move there," he said. "Also, my manager felt that I could get a lot of publicity along the boardwalk since it is one of the major boxing capitals of the world."

Mercer said one of his most memorable moments is when he got to meet then President Ronald Reagan. "It was after the Olympics when all the athletes were visiting the White House," he said.

"The President was walking down the line, greeting us, and I wanted to do something so he would remember me. So, when he got to me, I tried to put my medal around his neck, and the Secret Service men came rushing over because it looked suspicious and they thought I was trying to harm the President.

"Later, after I was seated on the bus to return to our hotel, the President's secretary came and told me the he wanted to see me. I didn't know what to think. All I could think was 'I'm in trouble now.' I really didn't want to go, and my coach sort of ordered me to go.

"When I reached the President's office, he came out and started apologizing about the actions of the Secret Service men. I couldn't believe it - here was the President of the United States apologizing to me. Then, he let me put my medal around his neck, and we took some photographs. I'll never forget that moment."

Mercer said all the attention and limelight has not changed him. 'I'm still the same person," he said. "And, when I get to be heavyweight champion of the world, I'll still be the same."

timed everywhere they went. So we copied some of the things they were doing. But we didn't have any paratrooper boots.

"We caught the attention of the general (Lt. Gen. Ridgely Gaither, who commanded the parachute school) when he was making an inspection," said Morris, who is retired from the construction business in New York and now lives with his wife in Palm Coast, Fla. "He was impressed when he saw us doing our calisthenics. We were showing off to show him that we could do as well as the white paratroopers."

Morris and his soldiers got a lot of prideful satisfaction out of proving blacks could endure the same training as whites. But little did they know that by emulating the white paratroopers they would become a part of airborne history.

Not long after the calisthenics demonstration, Gaither summoned Morris to his office. "He let me know that President (Franklin Delano) Roosevelt had ordered Gen. (George C. Marshall) to form an all-black paratrooper unit. The decision was made in response to complaints by A. Philip Randolph, organizer of the Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters and president of the National Negro Congress, and the black press," Morris said. "Blacks were asking, 'Why can't we have black paratroopers, too?'"

Morris' efforts toward black soldiers proving their mettle paid off. "Gen. Gaither selected me as the first sergeant and the first black paratrooper in the first all-black paratrooper company in American history," Morris said. That was the 555th Parachute Infantry Company.

"I then waited until a cadre was brought in from the 92nd Infantry Division at Fort Huachuca, Ariz.," Morris said. "There were originally 20 of us, but only 16 graduated from the jump training; two didn't make it for medical reasons, one had a death in the family and the fourth one just couldn't jump. Since we needed cooks and he was one, we decided to let him stay. But he wasn't on jump status.

"Of course, all of the instructors were white," said Morris. "Being a paratrooper was a big thing at that time, and there weren't a heck of a lot of whites jumping out of airplanes. We got along pretty well with the white troopers. The only problem we had was that the entire post at Fort Benning, Ga., both officers and enlisted, were making bets that we wouldn't jump — we'd be too afraid. The thing that inspired us was that this was the only black combat outfit then, and it was an opportunity for black troops to do something they could be proud of."

The black paratrooper students were segregated from the whites, both on and off post. But that didn't deter them. "It was not a big thing to us, because we had been conditioned," said Morris. "It was something we had learned to live with and accept."

It was a grueling, exhausting four weeks of training for the black paratrooper pioneers — push-ups, sit-ups, push-ups, sit-ups, running — from morning 'til night the first week. The second week had more calisthenics and an introduction to the 35-foot jump tower. The third week had the 250-foot tower. The fourth week was packing and repacking parachutes and jumping every day, ending with a night jump on Friday. Saturday was graduation day when they received their silver airborne wings.

Post BRIEFS

Ceremonies set for today

OCS Hall of Fame, Patterson - The 37th annual Robert P. Patterson Memorial Award ceremony will be held in conjunction with the Officer Candidate School Hall of Fame inductions today at 10 a.m. in Building 4's Marshall Auditorium. The public is invited.

Water interruption scheduled

Feb. 10 - An interruption of water service is scheduled for Feb. 10, 8 a.m.-4 p.m. Occupants of Doane Loop will be affected. The interruption is necessary to install new water lines.

Tax assistance available at PX

Free - Assistance with the preparation of Federal income tax forms will be available free at the Post Exchange Saturday, 10 a.m.-1 p.m. If you need assistance, bring a copy of your W-2 Form and any tax forms you may need.

Tot Town raises its rates

50 to 80 cents - With general expenses rising and to operate without financial losses, Tot Town Child Development Center has to raise the hourly rates from 50 to 80 cents for each additional child effective immediately. Tot Town's rates have not been raised in three years.

Refueling for GSA vehicles

For proper billing - All users of GSA vehicles at Fort Benning are reminded that the only authorized refueling points are TMP, Sand Hill, building 3553 and the Main TMP, building 1260. Using other points for refueling disallow proper billing to GSA.

4 officers branched

Four new lieutenants were branched into the aviation when the Officers Candidate School class graduated Jan. 27. One was pinned by his aviator father.

Col. James H. Fitzgerald a U.S. Army Reserve adviser at the U.S. Army Aviation Center was the guest speaker at the branching ceremony and pinned the aviator wings on his son, 2nd Lt. James H. Fitzgerald, III.

The other soldiers branched were 2nd Lts. Bernard C. Green, Nancy A. Shultz and Mark P. Souza.

The officers were also presented an Aviation Branch letter of welcome from Maj. Gen. Ellis D. Parker, the commanding general of the Aviation Center, Fort Rucker, Ala.

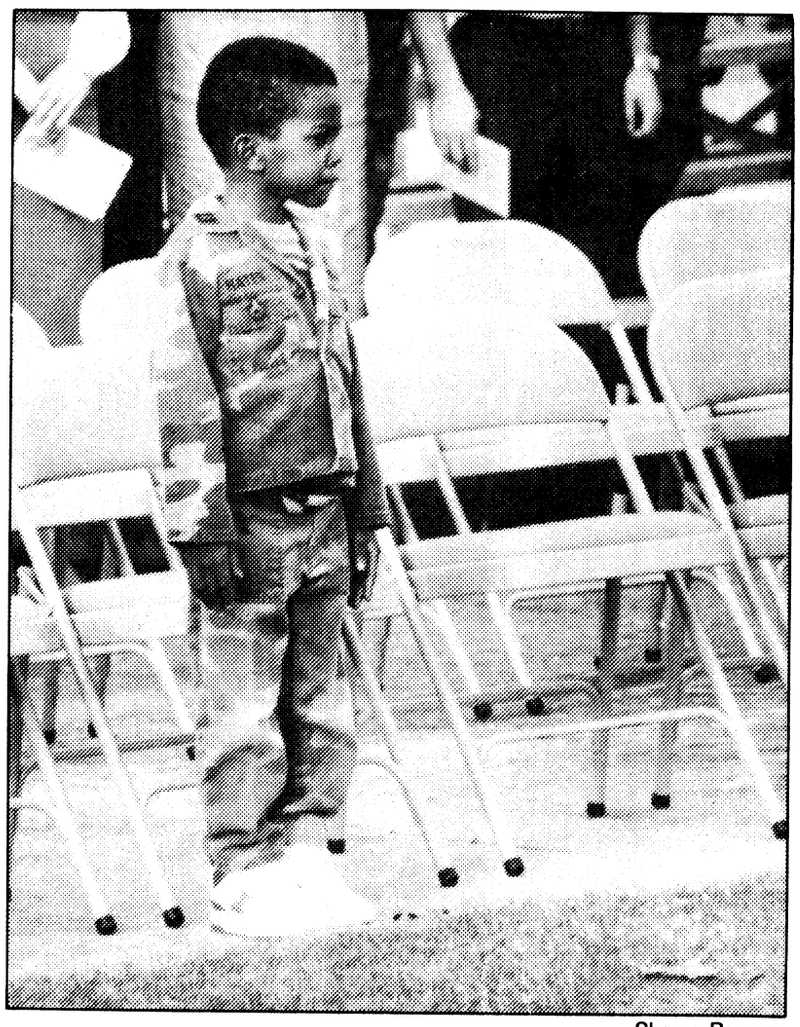
Resource materials available

Bicentennial - The Secretary of the Army's Bicentennial Committee in Washington wants you to know that they have free resource materials available for the asking.

They include the second and latest supplement to the original resource guide, "Establishment of the Federal Government and National Defense." This year marks the third in a five-year commemoration of the Bicentennial of the Constitution.

It focuses on the Bicentennial of the Presidency, with special emphasis on those presidents who served in the military. The committee has available a new pamphlet containing brief biographies of each president of the United States since George Washington.

They also have a new 1989 Soldier-Statesman-Presidents poster. Other items include a pocket-sized constitution booklet, documents of freedom sets printed on parchment-like paper, speech material and crossword puzzles and quizzes.



If you'd like an order blank listing all the materials available, send your request to the committee at HQDA, SABC, The Pentagon, Room 3E524, Washington, D.C. 20310-0107. Quantities are limited. (ArNews)

Latasha S. Morris balances her bicycle along a confidence course under the watchful eye of Spec. Tony Bailey at a recent Bicycle Jamboree sponsored by USAIC's MP Co. The Jamboree, held twice a year, taught post children about bicycle safety and control. It also allowed children to register their bikes. Parents may still register their children's bikes at the Crime Prevention Office, Room 120, the Main Post MP Station located at Wold Avenue and Edwards Street.

Prayer Breakfast attracts hundreds

USAIC Public Affairs Office

The Fort Benning National Prayer Breakfast attracted about 500 people to the NCO Club Tuesday and included Georgia notables, Congressman Richard B. Ray and Marlesa Ball, 1987 Miss Georgia.

Richard B. Ray

Ray, a fourth-term Democrat from the third district of Georgia, and Ball, who was one of the top-10 finalists in the 1987 Miss America Pageant, had simple messages about religion that they described as a very important part of their lives.

Ray said that church is a place to turn not only in times of sorrow but also in times of joy.

Ray said that although many politicians leave religion behind when they enter politics, religion is a very important part of his life. About others in his profession Ray said, "Politicians who brag about their religion are more pharisees than prophets."

Ball showed her love of God by singing two gospel songs and giving a testimonial during the breakfast. She said that God directed her to re-enter the Miss Georgia Pageant a third time after finishing as the fourth and third runner-up for two years. She won the contest on her third try and went on to the 1987 Miss America Pageant where she said she sang "Amazing Grace" during the talent phase of the competition as a tribute to God.

The breakfast was held in conjunction with a prayer breakfast held in Washington D.C. Feb. 2. According to the Post Chaplain's Office, all the tickets to the event were sold.

Post nurses celebrate Corps' 88th anniversary

USAIC Public Affairs Office

The Fort Benning Medical Department Activity observed the 88th anniversary of the Army Nurse Corps with a special review and retreat ceremony Feb. 3 at York Field. This was the first time ever the Nurse Corps' anniversary has been officially recognized here.

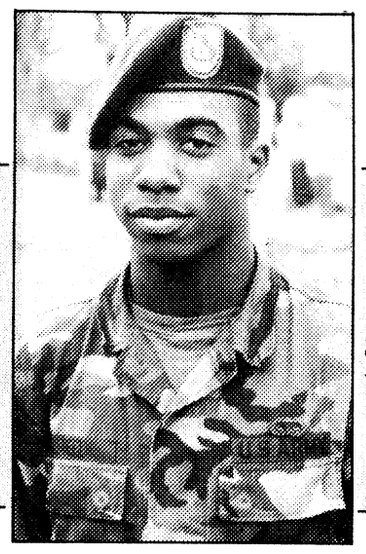
On hand for the event were about 70 nurses from Benning's MEDDAC and the 2nd Mobile Army Surgical Hospital.

After reviewing the troops, Col. Susie M. Sherrod, chief of the Department of Nursing at Martin Army Community Hospital, and Brig. Gen. William W. Hartzog, deputy commanding general, commented on the outstanding reputation of the Army Nurse Corps throughout history.

Although the Nurse Corps did not become an official part of the Army's Medical Department until 1901, women and men have served as nurses for the armed forces for more than 200 years.

During the Revolutionary War, women tended sick and wounded soldiers. Many of their duties included cleaning, washing, feeding and caring for the general needs of these soldiers. These women were not nurses in the professional sense, but they provided a foundation for their followers to build upon. Simultaneously, the soldiers who helped each other during times of illness and injury paved the way for future male nurses.

During the Civil War, women and men from all walks of life tended to those in need. Nurses included family members of well-known national leaders, writers such as Louisa May Alcott and Walt Whitman, as well as people of various religious affiliations. Despite low pay and extensive demands, many people served as nurses in both Union and Confederate Army hospitals.



In 1898, with the onset of the Spanish-American War, women nurses were hired under government contract for $30 per month, plus one daily ration. These nurses performed so well and gained such respect that military nursing became a valued profession in this country. Under the supervision of Dr. Anita Newcomb McGee, a Nurse Corps Division was established in the Office of the Surgeon General.

A bill presented to Congress established a permanent Nurse Corps, and on Feb. 2, 1901, the Nurse Corps

OPINION

VARIOUS VOICES: What's it like working on a movie?

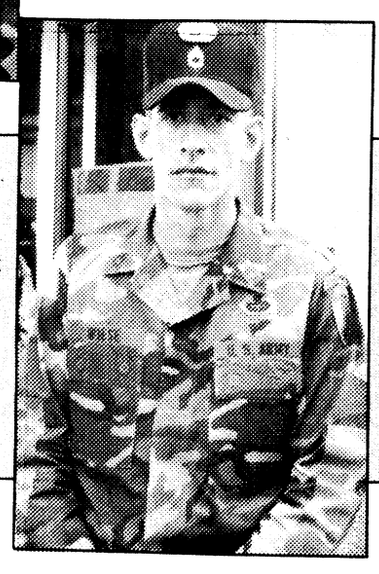
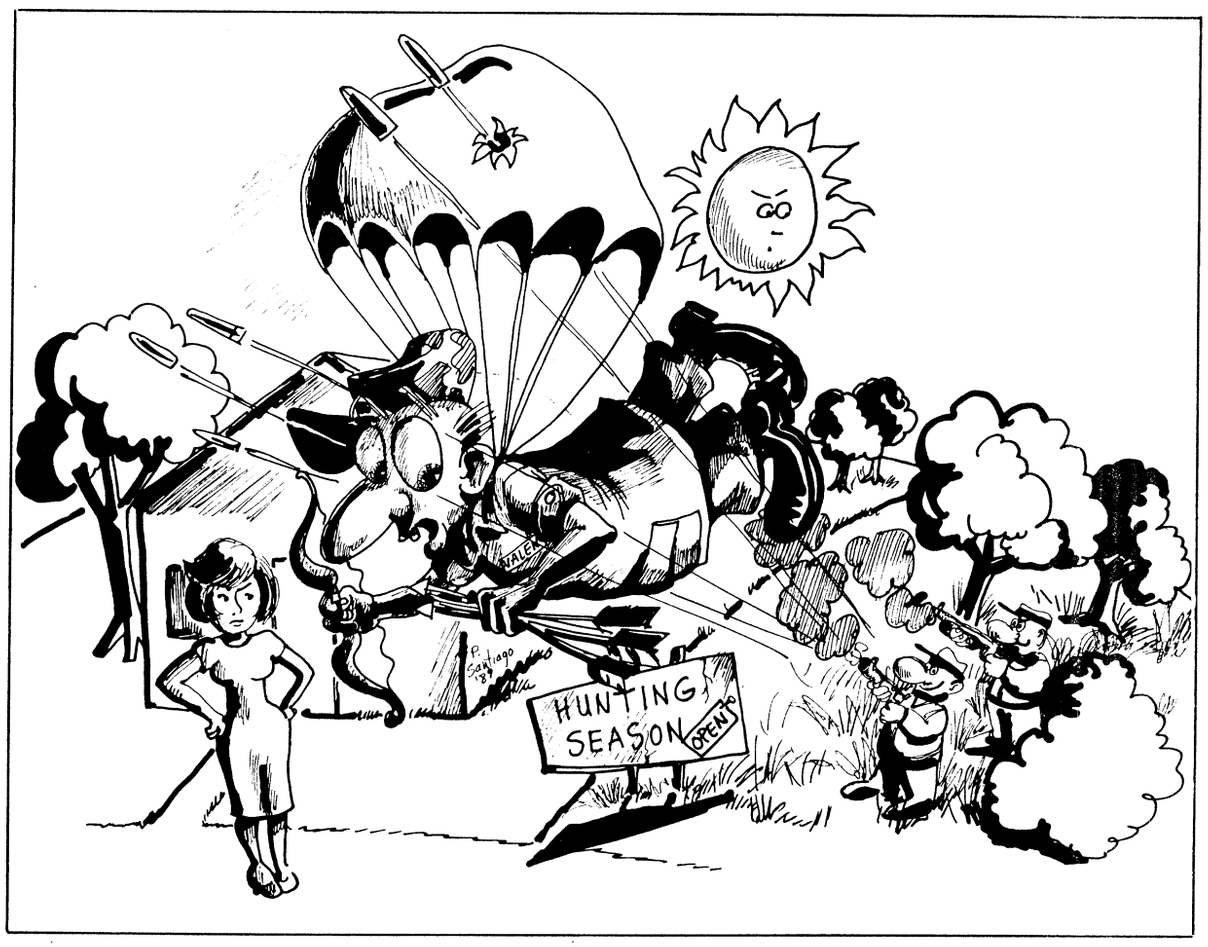
Pvt. Michael Teel, HQ Co., 1st Bn., 507th PIR - "It's a lot of fun. You get to meet new people. I'm doing something that I probably won't ever get to do again."

Pvt. Edward Lopez, HQ Co., 1st Bn., 507th PIR - "I don't really think it's a big thing. It takes a lot of hours to make a movie, but I'm having fun."



SSgt. Ron Veasey, HQ Co., 1st Bn., 507th PIR - "It's great! Normally, you don't get the opportunity to see all the things that are done to make a scene work. It's amazing. It really is a lot of hard work."

1st Sgt. Gary Jenkins, HQ Co., 1st Bn., 507th PIR - "It's very enjoyable. It's an experience I'll never forget."



Spec. Cheryl Knott, HHC, 29th Inf. Regt. - "It's interesting as well as enlightening. Acting no longer seems like such a glamorous job. I've found there's a lot of work involved in making a movie."

SFC Bob Wiese, HQ Co., 1st Bn., 507th PIR - "Great! It's an experience I'll never forget."

NCO slings arrows at Snively

By Clyde Snively
USAIC Public Affairs Office

This newspaper, if nothing else, is efficient.

Madam editor has gotten things so well organized, it hurts. She's even assigned me my own NCO. The NCO's job is to feed me column ideas. She does this well in advance so she can tell our artist what to draw.

Sometimes, though, the NCO carries it to an extreme. Like when she came up to me and said, "Your column for 10 Feb. (she even talks Army) will be about Valentine's Day."

I was still pulling pine straw from my hair since I'd only just lugged my Christmas tree out of the house the night before so was in no mood to hear about a column more than a month out.

"What is this 'V-Day' stuff?" I asked, "sounds like the end of the war?"

"No," she said with great patience. "It's actually a saint's day."

"Oh, is that the day we salute the presidents? " I said brightly.

"No, read my lips. Valentine's Day. I spell phonetically, Victor, Alpha, Lima, Echo, November, Tango, India, November, Echo."

"Oh, yeah, I think I've heard of that one. It's the day founded by Hallmark Cards because there was too large a gap between Christmas and Easter, and they needed some income to tide them over," I said.

"Snively, you're impossible. Go look it up, and do a column."

I did, and in keeping with what I learned is the spirit of the day, I dedicate this column to SSgt. Luz, my whip cracking, hard-nosed NCO.

First I learned that Hallmark Cards is not the originator of Valentine's Day. In fact, no one really knows who is.

Some say it was named after St. Valentine who, the day before he was beheaded, passed a note to the blind daughter of his jailer. The note read, "from your Valentine."

Valentine was beheaded on Feb. 14. That we know. What we are not sure of is how many Valentines there were - some say two - nor which year the beheading took place. The dates range from 270 to 278 A.D.

While the day is obviously named after St. Valentine, who somehow, I guess because of the note, became the patron saint of lovers; the custom of carrying on and making a fool of yourself over a member of the opposite sex didn't start with him.

Ancient Romans were losing their heads over girls long before Valentine lost his. The Romans did this while celebrating the feast of Lupercalia, which featured purification and fertility rites. During these rites, nubile maidens would place their names in a large urn. The names were drawn by virile young men who would then commence a-courtin' these gals.

Similar rites were held throughout Europe in the late middle ages. The rites coincided closely to the date birds began to mate.

I'm not really sure what the impact all this has on the Year of the NCO, or readiness in today's Army; but I can tell you without a doubt that if I miss sending Emma a card and a posie or two, my career in this here Army will end - unless the Army's given to granting waivers to folks with broken knee caps.

Reader questions Snively's facts about NRA

The purpose of this letter is to correct a gross misstatement of fact about the National Rifle Association made by Clyde Snively in his column Feb. 3 ("Guns don't kill, people do.").

Mr. Snively's caustic assertion that NRA members are "the same people who think law-abiding citizens need armor piercing rounds to hunt deer and rabbits" is not only malicious and irresponsible in tone, it is also erroneous in fact.

Had Mr. Snively bothered to check his facts, he would have found that the NRA worked with key members of Congress to rewrite the bill signed into law by President Reagan over two years ago that banned the sale to the public of armor-piercing handgun ammunition. The NRA properly opposed the initial draft of that bill, which was so sloppily worded that it would have outlawed virtually all centerfire rifle cartridges, including those as old (and widely-used) as the 30-30 Winchester.

The members of the NRA, law-abiding men and women from all walks of life, including the military, do not expect that members of the press will always agree with the NRA's concerns about Second Amendment issues. What we do expect, and rightfully so, is that in their exercise of First Amendment rights, members of the press go through the inconvenient but responsible process of getting their facts straight.

Tall tales from a special forces man

By Wendell D. Owens
Guest writer

> "I could swim a river carrying two men. . .just using my feet and not even splashing the water. They taught us how to be quiet up at Langley, Virginia."

(Cream and Steam are owners of a barbershop.)

Cream enters the barbershop, walks over to the wall and straightens up the pictures of Jesus, Reverend Martin Luther King Jr., and John Kennedy. Then he dusts all of them off, which makes them crooked again.

"Good morning Skeeter Jeeter. And my best to the rest. I'm feeling fine. Looking better than I did when I first started talking. Myyy. So much can happen in a minute. Why. . .I was there when Satan was looking for an apartment and the people in the rental office told him to go to hell. I'm not lying! I was the one who told Willie Mays to buy his hats too big, so that they would fly off when he chased fly balls. It made the boy look like he was performing a ballet in center field."

"Cream. Boy, why don't you stop all that lying this early in the morning," Melvin said. "Don't nobody believe you."

"Melvin, I resent the implications of that statement," said Cream.

"Cream, you can't open your mouth without telling a lie. You are a very sick man," said Melvin.

"Boy, I know I'm sick! Do you want to know how I got sick?"

"I want to know how you got sick, Cream." Steam said.

"I am sick," Cream said, "because of the terrible things I had to endure during the war. . ."

"Boy, pu. . .lease! You haven't been in no war!" exclaimed Melvin.

"I WAS in the military! I was in the 'SPECIAL FORCES.' We were on private missions. Boys, I tell you. I had to do more. . .before four o'clock in the morning. . .than the regular Army did all day. I had to learn to swim while carrying a man under each arm."

"Cream, stop lying!" yelled Melvin. "Boy, you can't swim if both your arms are full."

"A regular soldier can't. . .but we special forces men can. You have all heard of a professional foot soldier. . .well. . .I was what you call a professional foot swimmer. I could swim a river carrying two men. . .just using my feet and not even splashing the water. They taught us how to be quiet up at Langley, Virginia. We always had to keep quiet, you know. That is why. . .I have big, bad feet today."

"You were born with big feet, and you have bad feet because you stand up cutting hair all day and lying," Melvin said.

"I'm not lying, Melvin. I learned a lot of special things in the special forces."

"Like what?" asked Steam.

"Well. . .I can whistle in a certain way, and it'll kill everybody except dogs. Fellows, I can kill a man with a handshake. Paralyze you with a hug. I can kill you with a sheet of paper. . .or. . .even with a feather. Men, I'm telling you the truth. They just ruined me in the special forces. They have turned poor Cream into a lethal killing machine."

"Give us a taste of that whistle, Cream," Steam said.

"Naw, man. You all are friends. I'm not going to have the death of any of you on my conscience. Besides, I executed a letter saying that I would not whistle for 30 years.

"Boy, are you trying to tell me that you have gone and 'killed' a letter?" asked Melvin in amazement.

"No Melvin. I mean that I 'signed' a letter promising that I would not whistle for 30 years."

"Well, can you tell us how you killed a man with a feather?" Skeeter asked.

"Skeeter! I can tell you have never been in the Army. Don't you know anything about military aggression? You see, me and three of the men from my platoon were holed up in this French barn, which was also used as a wine cellar. We had already lost the few weapons we had on our way to getting behind the German lines. Well, we were lying there, planning our next move when we were attacked by 20 German soldiers."

Sri Lankan officer, family spend spare time seeing U.S.

By Shawn Bryson
Bayonet staff writer

The average American motorist drives 12,000 miles annually. However, Lt. Col. Nandasena G. Rajapakse from Sri Lanka, an allied student at Fort Benning, recently drove 8,000 miles in 16 days to see as much of the United States as he could before returning to Sri Lanka.

Rajapakse, who came to Fort Benning six months ago to attend the Infantry Officer Advanced Course, said he got the idea for the trip after visiting Washington, D.C. with IOAC.

"After seeing Washington, I decided I wanted to learn more about this country and its people. I also wanted to show it to my family," Rajapakse said.

Rajapakse; his wife, Ioma; son, Manoj and one of their friends covered 25 states during their coast-to-coast exploration of the U.S., averaging 500 miles a day.

According to Rajapakse, the trip took a month to plan. Preparations for the trip began when he joined the American Automobile Association, which provided him maps and travel routes. Planning also included finding a car rental service that charged by the day rather than the mile.

Amazingly, aside from the rental car, Rajapakse's only expenses were gas, souvenirs and food. He explained that he knows a fellow Sri Lankan in Columbus who helped arrange for the Rajapakses to stay with Sri Lankans throughout the U.S.

"My friend gave me the addresses and helped me contact these people," Rajapakse said. He said that there were only two occasions where he and his family had to stay in a hotel.

The first day of the trip began at Benning and ended hundreds of miles away in Greenville, S.C.

Day two took the Rajapakses to Richmond, Va. and then over to Washington, D.C. where they stopped and toured most of the monuments in the late evening and some the next morning.

From Washington, the family headed north to New York. While in the "Big Apple," they visited 42nd Street, the United Nations, the World Trade Center and the Statue of Liberty.

A day later, the family was in Knoxville, Tenn. via Harrisburg, Penn. and Roanoke, Va.

On Dec. 22, the family passed through Nashville and Memphis. They ended the day in Oklahoma City, Okla., after visiting Little Rock, Ark.

The next two days took the family through Albuquerque, N.M., the Grand Canyon and the Mojave Desert to Los Angeles, Calif. where they took a well-deserved, five-day layover with Ioma's relatives. They visited San Diego and Sea World while in California.

The three-day trip home from California brought the Rajapakses through Phoenix and Tucson, Ariz., El Paso, San Antonio and Houston, Texas, Baton Rouge, La., Mobile and Montgomery, Ala. and finally to Columbus.

"We were really impressed with the monuments in Washington, D.C., especially the Lincoln and Vietnam War memorials," Rajapakse said. "We also enjoyed Grand Canyon Village and the high-rise buildings in New York."

"My son really enjoyed himself and experienced snow and the desert for the first time," he said.

Rajapakse said the trip was flawless, and the only people not totally thrilled about the vacation were the people at the rental car service. Rajapakse said they couldn't believe he had driven so far in such a short period of time.

As if the family hadn't had enough, they returned to California for two weeks before heading back to Sri Lanka.

Insurance dividend hoax continues to plague veterans

Veterans Administration

A GI insurance dividend hoax that first appeared more than 25 years ago continues to plague veterans.

The Veterans Administration insurance center in Philadelphia reports it is receiving between 7,000 and 15,000 applications a week for a non-existent dividend.

For many years, the victims of the rumor were World War II and Korean Conflict veterans, who were told that the VA was sending a check for hundreds of dollars – a so-called insurance dividend – to any veteran who requested. In recent years, however, bogus brochures also have been targeting veterans of the Vietnam Conflict.

The phony applications claim dividends have been authorized by recent Congressional legislation. In fact, there is no insurance dividend for veterans who do not keep their insurance in force and no dividend legislation has been proposed in Congress.

The hoax causes thousands of veterans and family members wasted effort and generates needless labor and mailing expense at the VA's 58 regional offices across the country.

The hoax applications usually are unwittingly printed in magazines, newspapers and newsletters or distributed in handbills. When notified of the error, editors have been cooperative about publishing retractions. Attempts to trace the origin of hoax have been unsuccessful, but it is believed that its life has been perpetuated by the innocent duplication of bogus information.

The VA's legitimate insurance dividends are paid annually to current policy holders. More than three million veterans share in an annual dividend distribution, but payments are automatic; and no application is needed.

Veterans and family members with questions about government life insurance policies can phone a VA insurance specialist toll-free from throughout the U.S. Insurance holders and beneficiaries can obtain immediate service on address or policy changes, dividend information and other actions by dialing 1-800-422-8079, from 8 a.m. to 5:30 p.m. EST.

Nurse

(female) became a permanent part of the Medical Department. Nurses at that time were appointed to their duty - they were not commissioned as officers until 46 years later. By the Army Reorganization Act of 1918, the Nurse Corps (female) was redesignated the Army Nurse Corps - it remained open only to women.

During World War I, nurses served proudly wherever they were needed, including stateside and European locations, plus Siberia, Hawaii, Puerto Rico and the Philippines. The Red Cross provided reserve nurses during the war. By Armistice Day, the peak strength of 21,480 nurses were serving in the ANC.

Soon after, during World War II, nurses again served with distinction in many worldwide locations. The peak strength of this war was 57,000 nurses during August 1945 - a record that still remains. Sixty-seven nurses were held as prisoners during the war.

When hostilities arose in Korea in 1950, again went where they were needed. MASH units became well-known for their expedient care. In combination with air evacuation, many lives were saved because of early trauma intervention. More than 500 Army nurses served in Korea.

Following the Korean War, legislation was finally passed that allowed men to be commissioned as Army Nurse Corps officers. In October 1955, the first male was commissioned. Within a few years, from 1962 to 1973, Army nurses served in the Republic of Vietnam - both men and women - for a total of more than 5,000 nurses.

Following these major wars, Army nurses have also served in low-intensity conflicts, such as Grenada. Today, nurses are always ready for immediate mobilization to provide care during war of peace-time endeavors, to include natural disasters.

Post children's safety is community's responsibility

DRIVE CAREFULLY

THEIR LIVES ARE YOUR RESPONSIBILITY

By Barry Price
Provost Marshal's Office

Although it's cold now, the warm weather months are on the way. During those warm months ahead, the safety of children, especially in the housing areas requires special attention.

The greatest danger is children playing in the streets. Foremost, it's an immediate danger to the children. It's also a hazard to the driver who, while attempting to avoid the children, risks striking another car, fixed object or even another person.

With the slow speed limits and traffic controls in Fort Benning's housing areas, children may be lulled into a false sense of security. So it's up to drivers to look out for them.

Parents can help prevent their children from becoming statistics by aggressively educating and controlling their children. Children must never be allowed to play in the streets.

Vehicle operators must observe speed limits and obey traffic control devices. Drivers must be alert to the possibility of a child chasing a ball into the street, chasing another child across the street, running out from behind a parked car or any other sudden acts that put children in the path of a moving vehicle.

The bottom line is that to preserve the lives of our children – our most precious resource – demands vehicle operators' constant awareness to avoid tragedy and a concerted effort by parents to teach their children the dangers of playing in streets.

The Military Police make every effort assist. However, their coverage of residential areas is limited. They can't be at all places at all times.

It's up to the residents of Fort Benning to make the community a safer place. Help us protect you and your family accidents and crime.

Crime Prevention Week focuses on public awareness

By Barry Price
Provost Marshal's Office

Fort Benning Military Police Crime Prevention Section is in business to educate, inspect, advise and assist unit commanders, directors and other agencies on post regarding programs to decrease the incidence of crime.

Crime Prevention is an ongoing effort to prevent the loss or damage to property, to ensure the safety and security of residents and to maintain a peaceful environment. Throughout the year, the participation of the entire community is critical. Sunday through Feb. 18 is Crime Prevention Week. To focus on a campaign of public awareness of criminal activity.

Units and other agencies at Fort Benning that desire to receive special crime prevention training, a courtesy inspection of their areas of responsibility or assistance or advice addressing specific problems should contact the MP Crime Prevention Section by calling 545-7154/7115, or visiting us at Room #120 of the MP Station.

Take the time to get involved. It will pay off.

ASK THE JUDGE

By Dennis E. Brower
Staff Judge Advocate's Office

Q: My spouse and I are both legal residents of a state other than Georgia. In addition to my military duties at Fort Benning, I have a part-time job. My spouse has worked full-time at a Columbus store. We heard that we both have to pay income taxes in Georgia and in our home state where we kept our legal residence. Is this correct? Isn't this illegal double taxation?

A: The information you received is correct. Both your legal residence and Georgia can tax your income. Although this may seem very unfair, it is not illegal. However, there are certain limitations concerning dual taxation.

The Soldiers' and Sailors' Civil Relief Act protects soldiers from having their military pay taxed by the state in which they live because of military orders (if different from their state of legal residence). Accordingly, the soldiers military pay will only be taxed by his state of legal residence. However, the pay the soldier received for his part-time work in Georgia can be taxed by both the state of legal residence and Georgia. An example of this would be: Soldier's military pay was $10,000; soldier's part-time pay was $2,000; and the spouse's pay was $5,000. The joint married income was $17,000. The taxpayers's state of legal residence could tax them on the total income of $17,000. Georgia would be able to tax them on the income of $7,000.

It is not illegal for the state of legal residence to tax the soldier and his spouse on the entire amount, even if Georgia also taxes them on the income earned in Georgia. However, almost all states allow for the income tax paid to Georgia to be deducted, as a "tax credit," from the tax owed to the state of legal residence. Soldiers must be sure that the state they claim as their legal residence is the legally correct one and review their state tax forms to ensure they take all "tax credit" deductions allowed.

Soldiers with tax questions should first see their unit tax advisors. Those without unit tax advisors should contact ACS at 544-4969/545-7517 or the legal assistance office at 545-3281. Most state and federal tax forms are available from the tax office located at building 5.

3 major factors lead to heart disease

By Evelyn D. Harris
American Forces Information Service

"Your mirror is no guide to whether you're a candidate for cardiovascular disease - heart attack or stroke," said Army Lt. Col. Antionette Hagey, senior program specialist for health promotion in the Office of the Assistant Secretary of Defense (Health Affairs).

Obesity is the risk factor you can see in the mirror, but it's not the only one. The three major factors are smoking, high blood pressure and elevated cholesterol — any one of which doubles your risk of heart disease. If you have all three, your risk is eight to 10 times that of someone with no risk factors.

"You have to be aware of the risk factors and develop good health habits early enough to prevent heart disease - you shouldn't wait until you're 45 and experiencing chest pain," said Hagey.

Lack of exercise can also contribute to heart disease, as does poorly managed stress, according to researchers.

For most people, those risk factors can be corrected by diet and life style changes, but there are others that can't be changed. Some people inherit a tendency to heart disease. Black Americans have a greater risk of heart attack due to greater rate of high blood pressure. Certain medical conditions, such as diabetes, also increase the risk of heart disease.

Hagey said military people should have their cholesterol checked at least once every five years, more often for certain job categories, age and other factors. If you have a family history of heart disease or any other risk factor, let your doctor know. He may advise more frequent or extensive checkups.

"It's important not to be lulled into false complacency because you look and feel well," said Hagey. "Most of us probably know or know of a fit-looking person whose life was tragically cut off by heart disease, or someone who was saved because his heart attack occurred in a doctor's office or his clogged arteries were discovered in a physical."

And if you ever experience any of the following, said Hagey, get help immediately; every minute counts:

- Uncomfortable pressure, fullness, squeezing or pain in the center of the chest for more than two minutes.
- Pain that spreads to the shoulders, neck or arms.
- Severe pain, dizziness, fainting, sweating, nausea or shortness of breath.

These signals are not always present. Other times, they may subside and then return.

Most heart attack victims survive if they recognize the early-warning symptoms and get medical care at once. If you have those symptoms, call an emergency rescue service or have someone drive you to the hospital. If you're with someone experiencing these symptoms, get help for him. If you know CPR (mouth-to-mouth breathing and rhythmic pressure on the chest), give it to him if indicated.

Don't let him tell you it's just indigestion. Being "tough" can be fatal.

SPIRITUAL

God's love gives us a sense of worth

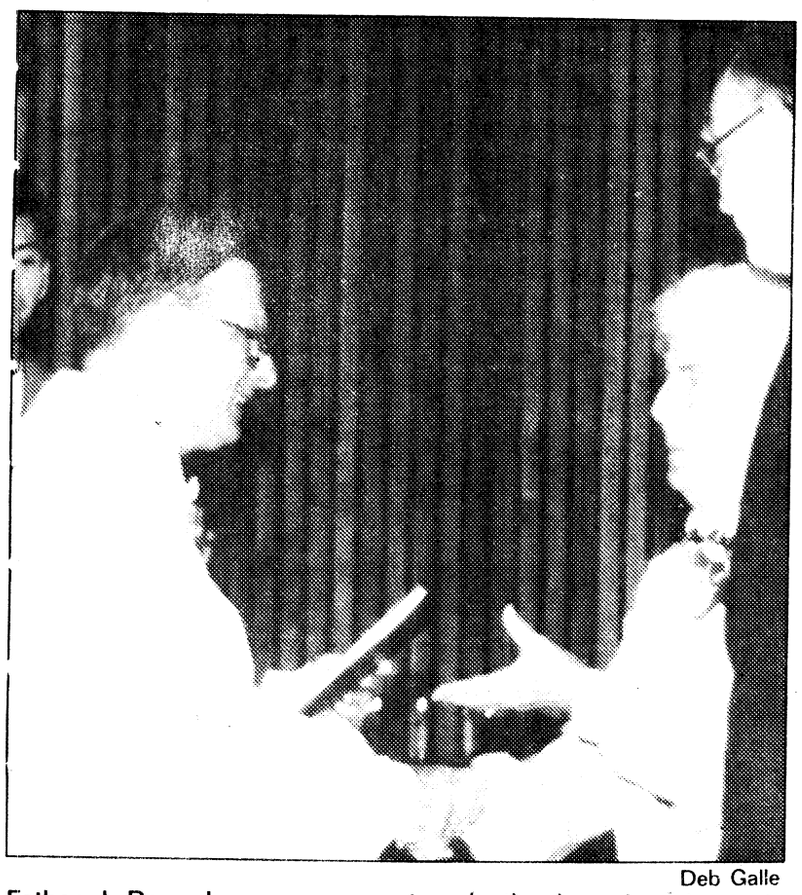
By Chap. Tom Wheatley
1st Battalion, 19th Infantry

Valentine's Day has many origins and legends associated with it. One or two early Christians named Valentine were martyred around 269 A.D. and were later celebrated as saints. One was a priest in Rome and the other was the Bishop of Terni, near Rome. It is possible that only one Valentine existed with two versions of his identity.

Christians celebrated Saint(s) Valentine with a feast each year on Feb. 14. Later, this became a "lover's festival." In medieval times, young people drew names and sent love notes to their "valentines."

Do you remember sending and receiving valentines when you were a youngster? Do you remember the excitement you felt when someone asked you to "be mine?"

There is a human need to feel loved by someone and also to love someone in return. This desire to love and be loved is one of the main reasons we enter into relationships and, eventually, become married. We get a sense of belonging and purpose when we know we are loved. We feel we are truly worth something.



We can always have that excitement and sense of worth. We can reach this attitude of thought and feeling by trusting and understanding God's love for each of us. God, our one true parent, created us and loves us always, no matter what.

A famous Bible passage states that "God so loved the world, that He gave his only begotton Son, that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish, but have everlasting life." (John 3:16) This love that God has for us creates in us a response: "We love Him, because He first loved us." (I John 4:19

If human love should fail us, if we receive not one valentine on Feb. 14, we can still turn to God, who is ever present and whose love for us never fails. We are worthy of being loved. God's love for us fills us with a sense of peace and satisfaction. We find we have an infinite amount of love to share since the source of this love is infinite. We find all of our human relationships becoming stronger and healthier as we base them on the fact of God's love for us.

This is true love!

Five candidates chosen for Makovec Award

Five candidates were selected for the 1988 John J. "Big John" Makovec award: Robert Nett, James and Ann Slover and Martin and Donna Worley. The awards were presented last Sunday at the 11:30 a.m. Mass at MPCC.

Robert Nett, a recipient of the Congressional Medal of Honor, retired from the Army as a colonel after a remarkable 33 years of service. He also retired in 1987 as an industrial arts teacher in Muscogee County." He has donated many hours to the beautification of the MPCC and also serves as a Lay Eucharistic minister. Robert and his wife, Frances, were personal friends of Big John. The couple recently returned from Washington, D.C. where they were guests at the Inaguration of President George Bush.

James and Ann Slover served this community with much dedication. Ann made alter cloths for the chapels where Mass is celebrated and cleaned the alter linens for four chapels. She is a Lay Eucharistic minister, most notably serving the Infantry Training Center. She is also a volunteer for the "One Stop Inprocessing Center" and greets new personnel on behalf of the Fort Benning religious program.

Martin and Donna Worley are enthusiastically involved in the Catholic Youth Organization. They are Catholic religious education teachers, Lay Eucharistic ministers and members of the Pastoral Council. The Catholic youth involved in the Worley's programs worked in dozens of community projects including the House of Mercy, the Mayor's Christmas Motorcade and Santa's Castle.

Big John's legend lives on at Benning

By Debra Galle
USAIC Chaplain's Office

Many years ago, an old man toiled in the yard of the Main Post Catholic Chapel raking leaves. People around post affectionately called him "Big John." He was born in Austria in 1899, and his English was sometimes rough and accented. Although he was husky, he was gentle.

On that day while retired MSgt. John J. Makovec labored at the never-ending task of raking autumn leaves, a teen-ager stopped to talk. They lingered over the leave and talked as a still-warm, autumn wind nipped at their hair and clothing. The old man talked of the past, of his days in the military. The boy talked of the future and his dream of going to West Point.

As time went by, this unlikely pair became close friends. Big John taught the boy the "old ways" of soldiering, drawing on his vast experiences in the military. He served in the Austrian Army in World War I and immigrated to the United States in the '20s. He later enlisted in the American Army as an infantryman during World War II.

The young man listened with fascination as the man told him of the decorations he sported on his uniform They included the Combat Infantry Badge, Europe-Middle East Campaign Medal with two bronze Service Stars, World War II Victory Medal, Army Occupation Medal in Germany, National Service Defense Medal and several Good Conduct Medals. He was also given several Certificates of Achievement.

John Makovec told him how he retired from the Army in 1958 after 20 years of service and why he chose to remain at Fort Benning and offer his services to the Catholic community.

His experience, character and faith made him an extraordinary example for the youth who treasured Big John's advice. A few years later the young man was appointed to West Point and went away to school. However, he didn't forget his friend. He corresponded regularly over the years with Big John.

On the day Philip Gage Jr. would be commissioned a second lieutenant, Big John took the money he had saved from his small monthly pension to the train station where he bought a ticket to New York. With the rest of the money he bought a gift for the young lieutenant. Philip's father, a former Fort Benning commanding general, Brig. Gen. Philip Gage, was also present at the West Point graduation ceremony, 2nd Lt. Gage served many faithful years in the military and retired as a lieutenant colonel. Throughout the years, he kept in touch with Big John who continued to serve the Fort Benning priests and community until his death Aug. 9, 1976.

Thirteen priests celebrated Big John's funeral Mass. The chapel was filled with his many friends; friends of a man who had worked without pay for 20 years for the priests and people of MPCC.

Big John had lived a simple life in the basement of what was then the "rectory" at 201 Sigerfoos Road.

"He loved taking care of the priests. That was his joy in life," remembers Barbara Vining, USAIC Chaplain's secretary for the past 22 years. He has been described as a "legend of dedicated service to the Catholic community of Fort Benning".

In 1977, Philip Gage Jr. created a $2,000 trust in memory of Big John. The interest from the trust was to be used to purchase flowers to decorate his grave and to purchase awards for "outstanding individuals (male or female, civilian or military) who exemplified Big John's love of God, Church and Flag."

Kindergarten class celebrates Australia's 201st birthday

By Beth Middlemiss
Fort Benning Schools

The strains of "Waltzing Matilda" echoed through Carolyn Phillips' kindergarten class at Patch School recently as the class joined in when Brendan Reid's parents, CWO 2 Noel and Ruth Reid, came for the day to share their celebration of Australia's 201st birthday. Reid is an Australian officer serving on an exchange program at Benning.

The day began with a slide projection about Australia. Reid explained about the harbors, the deserts, the animals and the people.

Next came a stuffed animal zoo made up of a kookaburra, a koala, a kangaroo, a platypus and an emu — to name just a few. The creatures sat on tables or were held by the children as they moved through a variety of activities.

Mrs. Reid assisted the students in making kangaroo puppets from paper bags, while Mr. Reid helped them with boomerangs and showed them how Aboriginal art could be used for decoration. They also painted Australian flags and drew pictures of koalas.

The day ended with a birthday party. Students ate cake and Australian snacks — chocolate crackles and vegimite sandwiches.

"I like the way Mr. Reid talks," said one kindergartner, Clay DeRogatis, during the party. Several of the students tried to immitate Mr. Reid's accent and made references to each other as "mate."

"The Reids are examples of the incredible parental support received at Fort Benning," said Carolyn Phillips. "They have made Australia a reality for these children. I am sure that at school and at home, my students will be talking about what has happened today for a long time.

Faith focuses on arts

By Beth Middlemiss
Fort Benning Schools

Faith Middle School is focusing on the arts as they bring Sally Alvarez, a documentary film maker in as Artist-In-Residence for nine weeks. The residency is sponsored by the Georgia Council for the Arts, the National Endowment for the Arts and the Fort Benning School System.

Alvarez is the fourth artist in residence to come to Faith School. Previous artists specialized in the areas of writing, photography and performing arts.

Alvarez is a documentary film maker who lives and works in Columbus. A graduate of Duke University with training in journalism and film/television production from the University of North Carolina, Alvarez currently teaches television production in the Department of Speech Communication at Auburn University. She recently completed a video documentary on well-known Columbus artist, Henry Nordhausen.

Alvarez will teach sixth, seventh, and eighth graders about producing documentary video and film, about ways to use video arts to express ideas and about ways in which students can critically analyze a variety of programs that they now watch on television.

As the residency progresses, a selected group of students will go into greater depth by preparing their own video productions.

Alvarez believes that once students understand the processes involved in video production, they are free to explore new ways to express their ideas.

Reserve soldiers gain access to post gymnasiums

An expanded avenue for physical fitness awaits reserve-component soldiers and their families.

The expansion, said Judy Minzes, consists of "a new Army patronage policy to allow soldiers in the Army National Guard and the U.S. Army Reserve use of non-commercial-type activities, such as gymnasiums, for fitness purposes."

Minzes, a program analyst with the U.S. Army Community and Family Support Center in Alexandria, Va., added that the new policy authorizes installation commanders to make the fitness facilities available.

RC soldiers' use of retail services remains limited to their periods of active duty for training or inactive-duty training."

Leave home without it!

Your checkbook, that is - because the commissary takes traveler's checks, too.

In fact, traveler's checks represent a good method to pay for items purchased in U.S. Army Troop Support Agency commissaries. The procedures for using traveler's checks are simple.

Basically much of the same standard information on the front of personal checks is also required for traveler's checks. Included are:

- Name and rank/grade
- Service/status
- Social Security number
- Current address and telephone number

Family members need to include name and social security number in addition to the aforementioned information.

The major difference between a traveler's check and a personal check is that a traveler's check must be endorsed a second time in the cashier's presence. So, if you're scheduled for leave, temporary duty or even if you are staying in town, remember there's no need to worry that you left your checkbook. Because if you have traveler's, they're just as good.

Bonus program broadened

Under a plan effective Feb. 1, the Selective Reenlistment Bonus program was expanded to include more soldiers, SRB's were added or increased for 75 skills and five more added to the Bonus Extension and Retraining Program, known as BEAR.

The new SRB program allows some soldiers on a two-year initial enlistment to receive a bonus when they reenlist. Under the plan, soldiers in grade E- 3 who have served at least 21 months of their enlistment and are otherwise qualified may re-enlist and receive the SRB multiplier listed for E-4's in their skill.

The total bonus - the sum of base pay times the term of reenlistment times the SRB multiplier - can't exceed $20,000. A minimum three-year term of reenlistment is still required to qualify for the SRB.

U.S. Army personnel officials say the new plan may not last very long. The SRB program will be re-evaluated and could be reduced April 1.

USAMU's Black marksmen among best in nation

By Sally Roberts
USAMU

Since the organization of the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit in 1956, many Black marksmen have distinguished themselves among the best shooters in the nation.

MSgt. James Nettles and SFC Hezekiah L. Clark are two of the unit's accomplished marksmen.

Nettles, a bronze star recipient who served in the Korean Conflict and in Vietnam, also represented his country as a competitive marksman. Nettles took first place in the 1963 Pan American games, firing an M-1 Garand.

In the years to follow, Nettles competed in individual and team matches with the M-14 rifle. He was an accomplished Army marksman throughout his 26-year career.

In 1976, Nettles was a member of the champion Interservice Rifle Team and a recipient of the High Infantryman National Trophy.

Clark, a Vietnam veteran who was awarded the Silver Star, was recognized as a triple distinguished marksman, an honor awarded to competitive marksmen, and a member of the 1977 champion Conseil International du Sports Militaire team, an international military competition.

Clark was also a member of the "President's Hundred," an elite group of champion marksmen.

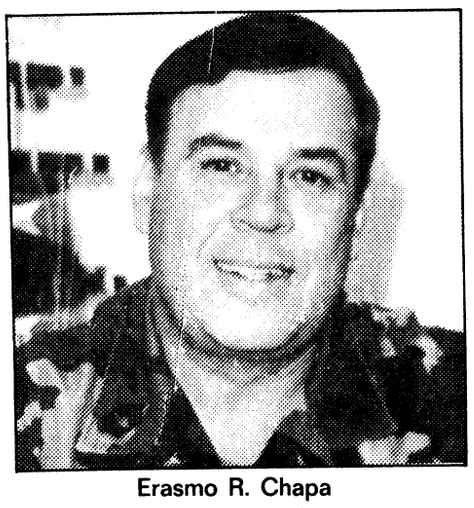
Other black marksmen who distinguished themselves in the USAMU history are SFC Meriwether Jones, whose accomplishments include standing as a member of the 1962 and 1966 National Trophy Teams, and SFC Albert Gibson, also a member of the 1966 National Trophy Team.

Sgt. Irving Henry was a member of the 1962 National Match Service Pistol team and a 1959 CISM team member.

One black marksman who currently represents the unit with his marksmanship skills and knowledge is MSgt. Joe Steed. A member of the 1983 CISM team, Steed still trains and competes in pistol events and serves as a small arms instructor.

Retiring NCO proud to be an American

By Keith F. Johnson
USARSA



I'm proud to be an American
Where at least I know I'm free
And I won't forget the men who died
Who gave that right to me

These words from the song by Lee Greenwood are an inspiration to many American soldiers who contribute to the security of the nation.

After 26 years of service, MSgt. Erasmo R. Chapa, U.S. Army School of the Americas, Directorate of Training and Doctrine Noncommissioned Officer in charge, uses the song to describe how he feels about himself and his relationship with the Army.

"There is no other country as great as this one," Chapa said. "I'm proud of this country and proud to be an American."

Chapa, who will retire April 1, was drafted in March 1963 after a brief minor league baseball career as a pitcher, which included a stint with the Columbus Astros. He also performed in a semi-professional football league as a punter for the Augusta Eagles.

Erasmo R. Chapa

Raised in a small town in south Texas called Raymondville, he decided to remain in the service because it gave him the opportunity to experience the rest of the world.

"It certainly wasn't the money because when I came in, I earned only $77 a month," Chapa said. "It was a sense of adventure, the travel and meeting people. People have always been my cup of tea. I love people. I love being with them."

Chapa has visited more than 40 countries including three tours in Vietnam between 1965-1971. His years of service in Vietnam left him with some bittersweet memories.

Recruiters seek warrant officer candidates

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Army recruiters want to talk to you, especially if you qualify for warrant officer training.

A special recruiting team will be at Fort Benning on Feb. 23 to receive applications from qualified enlisted soldiers for the Warrant Officers' Program.

The team specifies that they will be recruiting candidates for training, not for warrant officer selection. Specialty branches must train, certify and appoint the candidate to warrant officer status. Specialties for which candidates are accepted are targeted to meet available training quotas.

The recruiting team will accept applications in Building 4, classroom 5. Briefings will be held at 9 a.m. and 1 p.m. The team is particularly interested in talking to soldiers about aviation warrant officer opportunities. For information, contact Mrs. Lee or Ms. Evans at the Adjutant General's Personnel Actions Office at 545-3341/4702.

USAMU wants to train soldiers in marksmanship fundamentals

By Sally Roberts
USAMU

Commanders! Do you want to improve marksmanship training in your unit? The United States Army Marksmanship Unit will train your soldiers in the fundamentals of marksmanship at Fort Benning Apr. 3 to Aug. 15.

The USAMU's National Trophy Team will be practicing for the interservice and national matches during this time. Your soldiers will train with and be trained by the best marksmen in the world and will return fully capable of improving marksmanship in your unit through train-the-trainer classes.

Limited slots are available. The USAMU will provide equipment and instructions. For more information, please call Jack Hyder or MSgt. Shelley at 545-5922/3117.

Stay warm while saving energy

By Becky Ray
Energy Branch

Winter has finally arrived at Fort Benning. With temperatures dropping, post workers and residents are probably more concerned with staying warm than with saving energy. However, tough energy goals set for the post this year mean we have to make the most of the energy we use. The following tips can help you stay warm and save energy at the same time:

- Close drapes, curtains and shades on cold nights to keep warm air inside and cold air out.
- Open drapes and blinds on sunny days to warm the indoors with sunshine.
- Install weather stripping and caulking around doors and windows to stop drafts. Weatherproofing materials are available at the Unit and Housing Support Center, building 385, on Vibbert Avenue.
- Cover window air conditioning units to keep cold air out.
- Check heater filters often and replace them when necessary to keep the heating unit running efficiently and cleanly. During heating season filters should generally be changed each month.
- Close fireplace dampers to cut heat losses substantially. Opening dampers in a chimney when the fireplace is not in use can cause heat loss of up to eight percent for a 48-inch square fireplace.
- Close vents in and seal off unused rooms to help save heating energy. This is not recommended for houses with heat pumps, since it may damage the system.
- Keep ducts, vents and registers clean to help heating systems run efficiently.
- Use vent fans only when needed. Kitchen and bathroom exhaust fans send heated air outside and can expel an entire houseful of heated air in just one hour.
- After baking or broiling, turn the oven off but leave the door open.
- Set the thermostat as low as possible to save operating costs of up to six percent per degree.

Staying warm and comfortable and conserving energy don't have to be conflicting goals. With a little thought and planning, both goals can be met at the same time.

was [illegible] ashamed to call myself a soldier, but I was ashamed that the country I represented was so much against us," Chapa said.

"For the most part, the United States was against our involvement in Vietnam. There were a lot of protests in the United States, a lot of dissension and division within our country."

"We were looked at with mixed emotions, some people loved us because we were patriotic and doing our duty; some people hated us because they felt we were in Vietnam killing a lot of people where there was no need."

Chapa said he still remembers someone spitting on him at the airport in Los Angeles when he came home following his second tour. The next time he came home everyone was ordered to take off their uniforms and wear civilian clothes.

"You really had to feel in your heart that you were doing the right thing," Chapa said. "There were times when I questioned my involvement in the military. [illegible] and medals for his part in the war including a Purple Heart and two Bronze Stars for valor. He jokingly refers to his Purple Heart as a no go award for failing his skill qualification test in combat. He said he is most proud of his Bronze Stars because they were for combat action in Cambodia.

We moved into Cambodia during the assault in the summer of 1970, which helped to quail the border dispute. The Viet Cong were using the Cambodian border as a sanctuary to attack our guys inside the border and then run back and hide. We were able to move over 20 miles into Cambodia and wipe out just about their whole sanctuary. For many months after that, the border area was pretty quiet. A lot of our guys were spared because of that."

The harsh and sometimes cruel realities of being a soldier starkly contrasts with the volunteer work Chapa has done throughout the world during his career. He has been actively involved in youth activities since 1964 as a coach, commissioner [illegible] Columbus and Phenix City.

Since November 1984, he has served as the tri-city commissioner for youth activities. He considers his work important in bringing members of each community closer to one another.

"While the leaders of the communities were moving the adults together, I was working with the children," Chapa said. "I've always enjoyed my relations with children. I honor and treasure the honesty in them, and I feel I can contribute to their growth."

His devotion has gone beyond the playing field. Chapa and his wife, Christela are certified as foster parents. They have welcomed abused, orphaned and underprivileged children as well as children from parents who needed marriage counseling into their home.

"Our doors will never be closed to a child," Chapa said. The Chapa's concern for the well-being of children and countless hours of community service were awarded when they received the Army's Great American Family of the Year award in [illegible] a military citizen of Georgia by Governor Joe F. Harris.

"I consider Georgia and Fort Benning as my home away from home," Chapa said.

Chapa said he has received many job offers here in Columbus but feels it's time to go back home to Raymondville. Where there he will work with his father on the family's cattle and farming ranch and plans to remain involved in youth activities.

"I've never looked forward to retiring from the military, or as commissioner of youth activities. But I always knew in the back of my mind that as long as the young people I trained on the battlefield or baseball field lived, I would be immortal. I would always be on active duty. That's a good feeling."

Before leaving for home Chapa had one last message for all his friends and co-workers.

"I would like to take this opportunity to thank all my friends at Fort Benning, Columbus, Phenix City and Bibb City, good-bye."

as well as the fact that the company had not had the opportunity to deploy to the field as an intact unit since June.

The exercise was designed to refamiliarize old soldiers to tactical standards and acquaint new soldiers with standards and with how the company operates in the field.

The first two days of the FTX focused on maneuver and survivability skills.

Round-robin classes were taught on fighting positions, crew served weapons range cards, sector sketches, OPSEC/SAEPA, quartering party operations, and erecting camouflage netting systems. Upon completion of the classes, the tasks were executed and completed to standard, not time.

Based on guidance from war time affiliations, a special emphasis was placed on NBC tasks one day three of the exercise. Round- robin training was set up pany's line platoons prepared for River Operations that began on Dec. 5.

In conjunction with Bravo Company, 43rd Engineer Battalion (Combat) (Heavy), the 586th conducted rafting operations that consisted of ferrying engineer equipment — scrapers, graders, and compaction equipment — to support a Bravo Company equipment rollout.

As the day moved to night the 586th changed gears and constructed a full closure of the Chattahoochee River at Cody Landing with a simulated chemical attack requiring the bridge to be built in MOPP level IV. This was the first such exercise many of the soldiers had participated in.

Without a doubt, the earlier emphasis on NBC training proved beneficial, and the entire experience increased the confidence level of the entire unit to operate in individual protective overgarments.

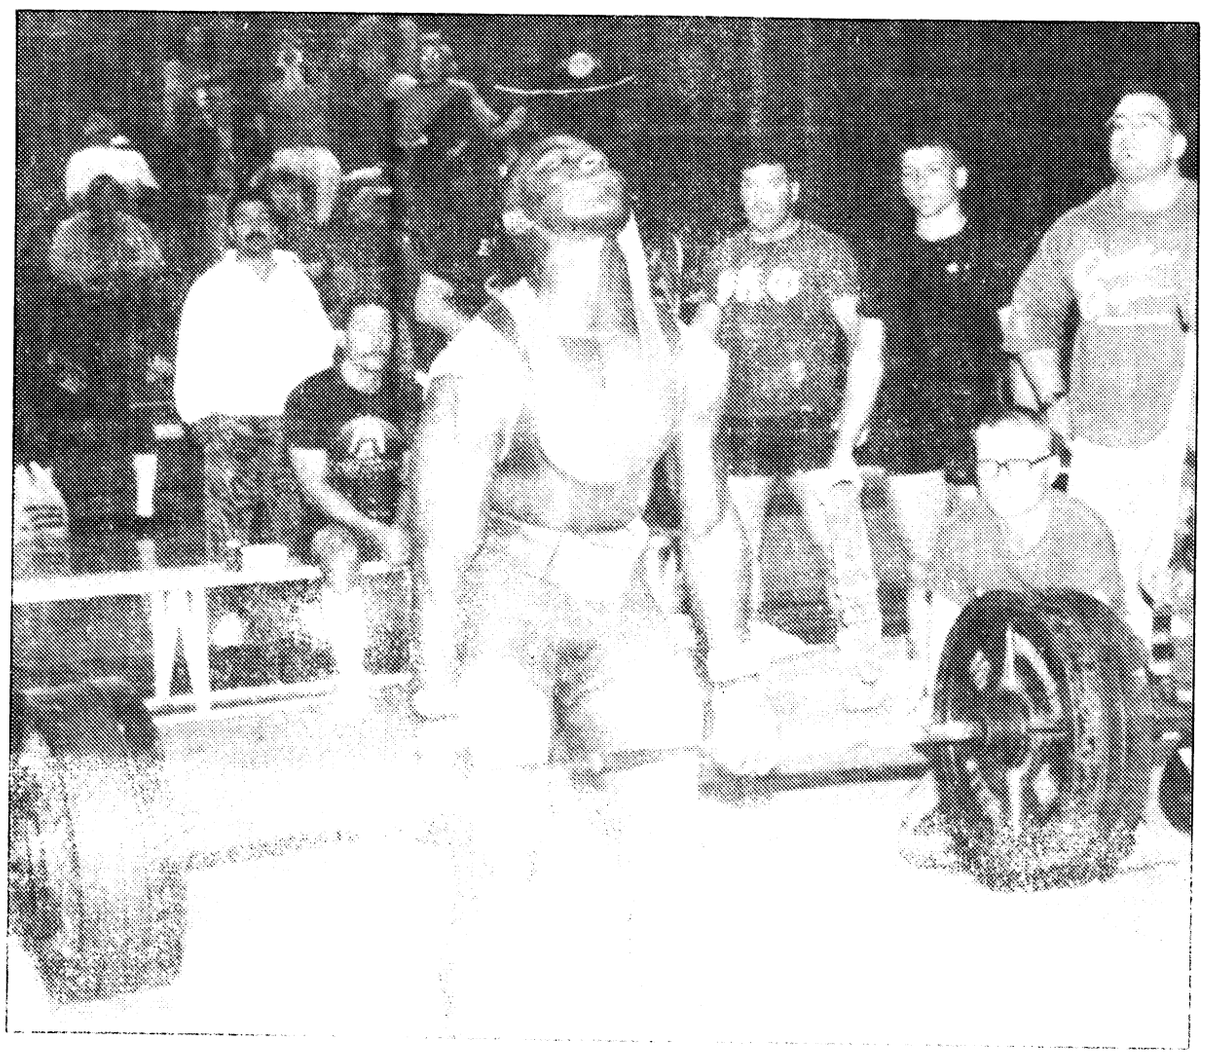
Strong men squat, lift, press in post power-lifting meet

By Shawn Bryson
Bayonet staff writer

Briant Wells Field House was filled with power last weekend as weight lifters from all over Georgia and Alabama competed in the Fort Benning Power-Lifting Invitational.

Lifters competed in three divisions - open, class II and military - which included the squat, dead lift and bench press.



Fort Benning's Garnet Boudreau took honors as the top heavy weight lifter in both the open and military divisions. Boudreau competed in the 242-pound class and lifted a total of 1,818 pounds, more than any other competitor of the day.

Just behind Boudreau, was heavyweight Franklin Roach, who won the Mr. Fort Benning title just last year. Roach had a 1,774-pound total, which won him first place in the 275-pound class of the military division.

Clement Green, another Benning soldier, also made the spotlight by lifting a total of 1,409 pounds, making him the best light weight lifter in the open and military divisions.

Other "Best Lifters" included Chuck Karr (lightweight, class II), Joe Pybunn (heavyweight class II) and Kim Snyder of the women's division.

The self-proclaimed "world's strongest man," Bill Kazmaier, and Jeff Hayes,a former state [illegible] Washington Redskins, made appearances at the competition. Both sports stars were at Benning in January for a nutrition and weightlifting seminar.

Chuck Dunbar was the contest's guest lifter. Dunbar, a midget, is a national champion power lifter and hoisted an incredible 1,114 pounds during his exhibition at the field house.

Don't waste your military experience.

Guard it.

It took you years of study and hard work to master a military skill. So, why throw that experience away?

Instead, lend your know-how to your hometown Army National Guard. Spend one weekend a month and two weeks a year protecting your community and country.

And in return, you'll get a good paycheck, plus many of the military benefits you've enjoyed as a full-time soldier.

For more information, see your local in-service recruiter or unit re-enlistment NCO.

And find out how your military experience will pay off in your hometown Army Guard.

Runners need 'racer's edge' in marathon

By John M. Henderson
Martin Army Community Hospital

Everyone wants to know how to get that "Racer's Edge," that little secret that will allow them to get along up on the competition.

Since ancients competed for buffalo tusks, athletes have ingested, rubbed on, worn, injected, prayed to and bathed in some of the most unusual things.

For instance, in Rome the gladiators would bathe in the urine of people who ate cabbage. The urine of cabbage-eaters was thought to be medical.

More recently, some long-distance runners have taken to chewing carnuba wax impregnated with bee pollen.

Things intended to enhance your ability to work, or run, are called ergogenic aides. There are many types. Natural legal substances such as bee pollen and ginsing root have been tried.

Natural illegal substances such as marijuana and peyote have been tried.

Synthetic legal substances such as caffeine and vitamin C have been tried.

Synthetic illegal substance such as anabolic steroids and amphetamines have been tried. Boosting the body's energy stores (glycogen) by depleting and then engorging the body with complex carbohydrates (pasta and fruits) has been tried.

Replenishing lost body salts with "balanced sports drinks" has been tried.

Hypnosis, biofeedback and even prayer to mainstream orthodox and not-so-familiar Californian diets has been tried.

WHAT: 1989 Infantry Marathon and Half Marathon
WHEN: March 4, 1989. Marathon starts at 9 a.m.; half marathon begins at 9:30 a.m.
WHERE: Intersection of Dixie Road and Eckel Street.

Equipment can be thought of as ergogenic too. For example, tight-weave Lycra racing togs, aluminum Taffeta windbreakers, gel-cushioned curve-lasted shoes, knee braces, mouth braces and even a Walk-man radio! All are expensive, none work.

None of the above mentioned "aides" can replace a solid training program. Well-designed scientific studies performed by reputable folks cannot show a significant work enhancement applicable to long-distance running.

It is a fact that basic powerhouse of the body, the mitochondria in the cell, can be "trained" to use fuels (carbohydrates, protein, fat) more efficiently. Pushing your aerobic limits further by progressively lengthening your training run will do this.

It is a fact that certain fuels "burn" better. Simple sugars, like candy, processed sugar and sugar-sweetened soft drinks, are used rapidly. The blood glucose level rises quickly and falls quickly. This fall leaves the person in worse shape than originally.

Complex carbohydrates,, sugar that are strung together to make starch, are used evenly, at a more consistent pace, so there is no high nor no low, but rather fairly even blood sugar.

When we "carbo load" we are trying to ingest these complex carbohydrates and store enough muscle glycogen (sugar) for the long haul.

As you have probably guessed by now, there is no magic pill.

Work and long hours of training cannot be replaced by some Madison Avenue gimmick.

Despite any short-term benefit, chemicals have long-term side effects that over balance the health ledger.

A balanced lifestyle including three square meals (with 60 percent of your calories eaten before 4 p.m., 7-8 hours of sleep per night, stress management and learning to enjoy life are the best ergogenic aids.

See you on the road.

Take precaution when running on roads

Infantry Safety Office

Fort Benning has many excellent places to run. One of the more well designed and maintained tracks here is in front of the Building 4.

Another track near the golf course is specifically designed for exercising and jogging. Other facilities, such as Blue and French fields, afford plenty of space for running.

However, many people choose for various reasons to jog on the roadways, despite the fact that roads are the most dangerous places to run.

These runners do not even restrict themselves to the less hazardous housing area roads but can be seen at all hours running on highly-traveled roads such as Dixie Road, Ingersoll Street, Lumpkin Road, and First Division Avenue. Not only do they pick hazardous roads, but they also tempt fate by not yielding to vehicles. If, as a runner, you feel you absolutely must run along roadways, at least take these precautions:

- Run off the paved roadway facing traffic.
- Yield to vehicles.
- Stay on lightly traveled roads.
- Run during daylight.
- Listen for traffic (never wear head phones).

Paragraph 6-4 of U. S. Army Infantry Center regulation states: "All personnel, family members and guests utilizing roadways for jogging, running or walking who are not part of a military formation, will wear brightly colored clothing during daylight hours and will wear reflective clothing, a reflective safety vest or a reflective sash with arm and leg bands during the period from a half hour before dusk and a half hour after sunrise and during other periods of limited visibility.

The following items are available at the post exchange:

- Reflective wrist wallet, $3.95
- Reflective tape (27"), $2.75
- Fluorescent stick-ons, $1.80
- Fluorescent head band, $3.75
- Reflective vest (orange), $7.95
- Reflective vest (blue), $7.99
- HIVIZ visibility vest, $14.50
- Sew-on reflective strip, 3 cents an inch

An emergency information badge is available at Self Service Supply at a cost of 41 cents for active duty members. The national stock number is OT335373.

When you compare these prices to all the pain and suffering being hit by a vehicle can cause; it is very cheap insurance indeed.

SPORTS SHORTS

Boxing coaches needed

The School Brigade League and the Combined League need boxing coaches (post level). Experience is preferred.

If interested, call Speedy Austin at the Sports Office at 545-4726 or 545-4388.

Benning's Baker places 3rd

Fort Benning wrestler, Antonyo Baker, came in third place in the 180.5-pound weight division in the FORSCOM wrestling championships at Fort Carson Jan. 23-26. Benning's only other participant in the matches, Clifton Woods, came in fifth in the same division.

Fort Bragg took top honors among all teams. Fort Ord came in a close second, followed by Fort Campbell. Fort Benning placed 9th. Other installations that placed well were Forts Sill, Hood and Lewis.

In all, over 15 stateside posts grappled for glory in the annual competition.

Engineers close Russ Pond

The Directorate of Engineering and Housing has closed Russ Pond until further notice. For information, call DEH at 545-6120.

Heart Run is March 11

The American Heart Association will sponsor the 1989 Heart Run March 11 at 10 a.m. in front of the Columbus Ironworks Convention and Trade Center. The one-mile fun run begins at 10 a.m., and the 6.2-mile race begins at 10:30 a.m.

Registration for individuals is $9; it's $10 the day of the race.

Corporate and military relays will run concurrently with the 6.2-mile race. Three team members will run approximately two miles each. Registration is $60 for corporate relay and $30 for the military relay.

Awards will be given in various age groups for individual runners. The first five teams in the military relay will receive a trophy.

For more information, contact Karen Ledford at 324-0173.

Basketball tourney slated

The 1988-89 second season post-level basketball championship will be conducted Feb. 14-17 at Briant Wells Field House and Audie Murphy Gymnasium.

The public is invited.

Soccer registration underway

Fort Benning youth soccer registration is underway and continues until Feb. 10. Children, 4-15 years old, of active duty or retired military personnel may register. Birth certificate or identification card will be required.

Registration will be conducted Monday-Friday from 8 a.m.-4:30 p.m. at Youth Activities, building 1056, on McIver Street. Soccer coaches are also needed for the upcoming season.

For information, call Youth Activities at 545-3070 or 545-3913.

Pot-O-Gold reaches $2,252

Fort Benning bowling centers' "Pot-O-Gold"cash bowling prize has reached $2,252 bowling officials said Tuesday.

Bowlers must strike in certain frames to win the pot.

League and open bowlers who purchase a three-game ticket and pay a $1 entry fee prior to bowling are eligible to enter the tournament. For more information, call 545-4272 or 544-1985.

Racquetball applications due

The 1989 All-Army racquetball applications for elimination trials camp and the Armed Forces championship are due no later than Feb. 24 at Headquarters, Training and Doctrine Command. Applications should be submitted to the Sports Office, building 394 no later than Feb. 17. The authorized age limitations for divisions of play are as follows:

Men
Open Div - 34 and under
Senior Div - 35-39
Master's Div - 40 and over

Women
Open Div - 29 and under
Senior - 30 and over

Call 545-7519 for more information.

Boating class Tuesday

The Muscogee Power Squadron, the local unit of a national boating safety organization, will begin a seven-week Spring boating class for the public at the National Reserve Training Center (next to the Municipal Auditorium) Tuesday at 7:30 p.m. Classes will meet for two hours each Tuesday evening.

For information, call 327-3435.

Now two-pizza phenomenon can happen anytime, anywhere.

PIZZA HUT® DELIVERS PAIRS™ ALL DAY, EVERY DAY

In what sources are calling a bizarre plot to spoil pizza customers for anything less, Pizza Hut® now delivers two pizzas for one low price on a permanent basis.

The alleged conspiracy means that a simple phone call to Pizza Hut® Delivery brings "Pizza Hut Pairs™," as they are being called, directly to the homes of American consumers.

Experts speculate that citizens may stay home in droves to take advantage of what many are calling "the biggest thing since pepperoni."

Professor Soo Dang Goode of the Institute for Pizza Excellence told reporters, "With Pizza Hut Pairs, consumers can get two pizzas for only slightly more than the price of one. And this is not your ordinary, skimpy delivery pizza. This is Pizza Hut Pizza!"

Goode added, "It's a stunning breakthrough in pizza science."

Spend Valentine's Day with a Legend

This day of love is legendary. So it's the perfect time to bring your Valentine to Steak and Ale, the Legend in Steak. For over 20 years, Steak and Ale has been serving the finest cuts of succulent steaks—each grilled to perfection. Like the Chateau for One, tender Filet or famous Prime Rib. As always, each entrée comes with a fluffy baked potato or rice pilaf, vegetable medley, unlimited salad bar and homemade hot bread.

So make your reservations today. And, of course, bring along the Card that's known for its convenience. The American Express® Card. Don't leave home without it.®

POST BRIEFS

Red Cross crusades for blood

March 1 - The Fort Benning American Red Cross in conjunction with Martin Army Community Hospital will hold a blood drive March 1, 8 a.m.-3 p.m. in Building 4, Room 6.

Electrical outage to affect Sand Hill

Today - An electrical outage is scheduled Monday, 8 a.m.-6 p.m. The following buildings in the Sand Hill area will be affected: Chapel Headquarters Infantry Training Center (buildings 3001-3004), buildings 3005-3012, 3080-3097, 3805 and 3806. The interruption is necessary to complete the aerial electrical distribution system for the Sand Hill area.

Recruiters seek WO applicants

Thursday - Army recruiters are seeking soldiers to apply for warrant officer training.

A special recruiting team has scheduled briefings at Fort Benning Thursday at 9 a.m. and again at 1 p.m. Additionally there is a briefing at 3-4 p.m. for soldiers who have just graduated advanced individual training and are interested in Aviation Warrant Officer opportunities.

The team specifies that they will be recruiting candidates for training, not for warrant officer selection. Specialty branches must train, certify and appoint the candidate to warrant officer status. Specialties for which candidates are accepted are targeted to meet available training quotas.

Retiree recall information

Where to call - Retirees who have questions about the Army's Retiree Recall Program, may call Bob Hymes, mobilization planner in the post Adjutant General's Office, 545-2817.

Post plays role in unique recall of retirees

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Next week Fort Benning will participate in a unique recall of retirees. While retiree recalls have occurred before, this recall is one of the first in the country to test the overseas deployability of retirees.

Forty area retirees will report to Soldiers' Plaza Welcome Center Feb. 24 for a three-day test of the Army's Retiree Recall Program, called Exercise Certain Sage.

In March 1988, the Department of Army changed the recall program so that 20-year, active duty retirees could be involuntarily deployed overseas if medically qualified and if they met Preparation for Overseas Replacement requirements.

When retirees arrive on post at the start of the exercise, they will be given a physical by Martin Army Community Hospital staff members and inprocessed by the post adjutant general, said Lt. Col. George R. Johnson, mobilization and plans coordinator of the directorate of plans, training and mobilization. Retirees will then have POR requirements checked and some will be assigned an escort from a post unit.

On the morning of the second day, retirees will join assigned units, Johnson said, while those not assigned to a particular unit will take a series of tests. In the afternoon, retirees will visit ranges for an update on the latest training techniques.

On the final day of the exercise, Johnson said retirees will be given additional instructions on what to do in case of a real mobilization. In an actual situation, retirees who do not qualify for overseas deployment will remain at Fort Benning.

Thirty-eight of the retirees live in Columbus, one in Cusseta and one in Waverly Hall. All retirees in the recall volunteered to take part in test and served at least 20 years on active duty.

Along with Fort Benning, 21 other installations in the United States, Europe and Hawaii will participate in Exercise Certain Sage over the next six months.

USARSA employee gets foreign award

By Keith F. Johnson
U.S. Army School of Americas

For the first time at the U.S. Army School of the Americas, a civilian employee has been presented an award from a foreign country.

Maria Margarita Barcenas received the Meritorious Collaborator of the Brazilian Army award from Col. Paulo C. Pavan, a guest instructor from Brazil, during the School's end of month awards formation.

"She is a wonderful person who has always been available to help the Brazilian people at the school both in Panama and at Fort Benning," Pavan said.

Pavan cited several examples of how Barcenas has supported Brazil, including her work as an interpreter for Maj. Gen. Pericles F. Gomes during an American Armies symposium at USARSA in March 1987 that

OCS Hall of Famers inducted here

By Shawn Bryson
Bayonet staff writer

Three Fort Benning officers were among 51 former graduates of the Officer Candidate School inducted into the OCS Hall of Fame Feb. 10.

The inductees from Benning, Col. William F. Kernan, Col. Frederick W. Liebe and retired Lt. Col. Albert N. Garland, were inducted during a ceremony held in Building 4's Marshall Auditorium. The ceremony also named this year's Robert P. Patterson Memorial Award winner.

Kernan is currently the deputy regimental commander of the 75th Ranger Regiment. He graduated from OCS in November 1968. Some of his duty assignments were company commander in the 82nd Airborne Division at the Republic of Vietnam, company commander of the British Parachute Regiment, United Kingdom and commander of the 1st Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment at Hunter Army Airfield, Ga.

Liebe is Fort Benning's provost marshal and commander of Military Police Activities. Liebe came to Fort Benning from Fort Lewis, Wash. where he was the commander of the Criminal Investigation Division there. He also served as a military police advisor in Vietnam. Liebe graduated from OCS in April 1967.

A graduate of OCS Class 244 in 1943, Garland served as deputy editor of Infantry Magazine from 1974 until 1983. He has been the editor since 1983. Garland is the co-author of "Sicily and the Surrender of Italy" as well as editor of several military books including "Infantry in Vietnam."

Also inducted into the Hall of Fame was the Honorable John M. Hayden, governor of Kansas. Hayden was a graduate of OCS in August 1968.

The 51 inductees bring the total number of Hall of Famers to 1,301. The OCS Hall of Fame originated in 1958.

OPINION

VARIOUS VOICES: What do you think will make "Your Mother Wears Combat Boot" worth watching?

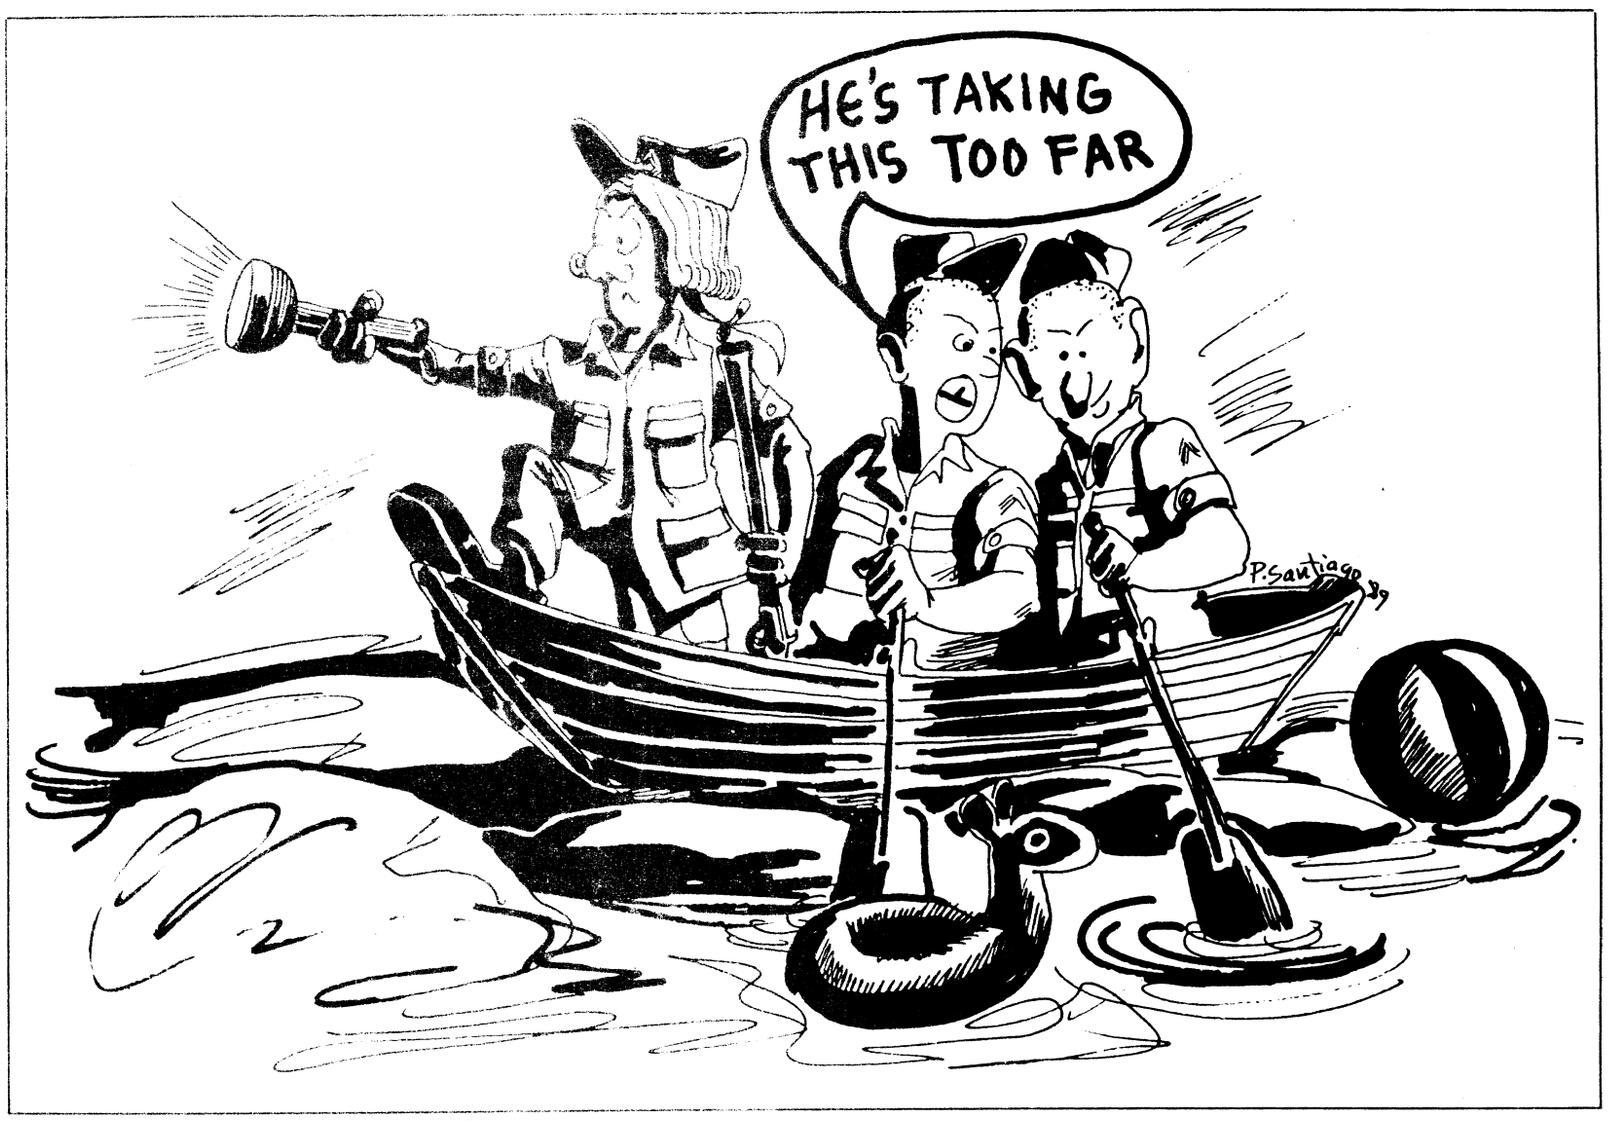
Anson Williams, director - "I think it will be an entertaining two hours. This movie has a tremendous amount of humor, action and emotion in it. It's inspiring to watch because it shows that you can make your dreams happen if you try."

Barbara Eden, leading actress - "I think the airborne soldiers and the authenticity of the location will make people watch this movie."

Joe Kelly, key grip - "I think the stunts and the location plus the comic nature of the movie will make it worth seeing. They don't make many comedies like this anymore."



Roger Sassen, gaffer - chief lighting technician - "I think the fact that Barbara Eden is in this movie will make people watch it. But, it's also a good comedy and it shows a lot of good points about the Army."

Jonathon Debin, head of production - "This movie makes you feel good. There's no sex, drugs or violence in this movie. I think it shows the Army off in its best light."

Hector Elizondo, leading actor - "I think it will be worth seeing because the characters are very likable, and this movie shows a typical slice of Army life. It shows a positive image of the Army."

Test your knowledge of presidents

By Clyde Snively
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Got us another holiday coming up Monday. And I don't even know who to thank for it.

It's called Presidents' Day on one official Army calendar and President's Day on another.

Soooo, my question is, are we celebrating one president or more than one? And, which one or ones are we commemorating?

Washington is a likely choice if we are celebrating President's Day since, under the revised calendar, his birthday is Feb. 22 and most non-military calendars still call it Washington's Birthday.

If not Washington, then who would it be?

If we are celebrating more than one president, how many and who? Could it be just Lincoln, since his birthday was Feb. 12? Did you know that back in the olden days, the federal government alternated between the two, celebrating Lincoln one year, Washington next?

But maybe we are honoring more than two presidents. Who could they be?

The guys whose faces look down on us from Mount Rushmore?

Or maybe [illegible] presidents? Living and dead [illegible] include guys on which list [illegible] doesn't look too favorably? [illegible] on those who died after [illegible] a few days in office? Do [illegible] celebrate their birthdays, t[illegible]

Since I'm [illegible]sking all these questions, maybe a spot quiz would be in order to see just how much people know about their presidents.

Like how many have we had, and who are the presidents memorialized on Mount Rushmore. How were they selected, and are there plans to add more?

So those of you not into quizzes, now's the time to cut out.

1. Who's buried in Grant's tomb?

2. Who minted the silver dollar Washington threw across the Delaware River?

3. Where was Washington headed when he crossed the Delaware in a row boat?

Did he ever get there?

4. Name two things Lincoln and Kennedy had in common beside the fact they were both assassinated in office.

5. How many presidents died while in office? Of those, how many were assassinated?

6. Which president used the slogan "log cabin and hard cider?"

7. Which president served as a member of the House of Representatives after his presidency?

8. Which president served as the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court after his presidency?

9. Which president was elected to the Confederate Congress after his presidency, but died before he could serve?

10. Which two presidents died on July 4 of the same year? What was the year?

11. How many presidents had a middle name? How many had more than three names?

12. Who was the bachelor president?

13. Who was president when the Battle of Yorktown was being fought?

14. Who was president when Hawaii became a state? How about Alaska?

15. Who was president during the War of 1812?

16. Who were the father-son presidents?

17. Essay question. Who do you think we are honoring Monday? Support and defend your theory.

18. Did you expect me to provide answers? I hope not, but I guess if you tell the editor I'm harassing you by not doing so and she gets on my case, I could provide the answers next week if you're too lazy to look them up during Monday's holiday.

Thought for the day: "Don't look a gift horse in the mouth, enjoy your day off."

Special forces take on storm troopers

By Wendell D. Owens
guest correspondent

When we left off last time, Cream and his special forces men were surrounded by German soldiers in a barn in France.

"There were 20 German soldiers attacking us," explained Cream. "Me and my special forces men. . .we closed ranks. Since we were the only U.S. representatives there, I knew that we were going to have to return this punt the Germans had kicked our way. So, I said to my men, "Fellows, this is where the fat lady sings." To their credit, not one of my special forces brothers shrank back an inch. Then, the fighting commenced, with me leading the charge. That was the day I got my nickname."

"What did they call you, Cream?" Skeeter asked.

"Son, they called me 'Whipping Cream.' That's right, baby."

"Were you whipping them, Cream? I have seen you fight, so I know you can be crazy," Steam said.

"You're not lying. Why. . .I whipped so many of them there

> "They didn't have any regular troopers bad enough to send after us special forces men. Naww baby. We were too tough for regular soldiers. The Germans were forced to sic their 'weather troopers' on us."

German boys up in that barn that at one point my own men were scared to fight near me."

"Nawww Cream. Did you really carry on like that," asked Skeeter in a tone of amazement.

"Don't you all be encouraging that boy to lie like that," Melvin cautioned.

"I'm not lying, Melvin. I got scars to prove it."

"Don't listen to Melvin, Cream. Tell your story," Steam pleaded.

"The furious battle raged on all over that barn. You have heard Stevie Wonder's song about 'The answer my friend, is blowing in the wind.' Well, there weren't any answers blowing in the wind that day. It was strictly straw and chicken feathers, baby. The dust was choking my air off as I was choking the air out of those German storm troopers."

"You were fighting 'storm troopers?" Skeeter asked.

"Yeah. They didn't have any regular troopers bad enough to send after us special forces men. Naww baby. We were too tough for regular soldiers. The Germans were forced to sic their 'weather troopers' on us. They sent their boys who had fought hurricanes and tornadoes. And let me tell you. . .I see why those German boys could fight the weather and win. Fellows. I have been in a lot of fights in my day. But, you have never been in a low-down, gut-tussling battle until you have fought German weather troopers. They are some tough customers.

"If they were so bad, what did you do?" Steam asked.

"Will you stop egging that boy on," Melvin said.

"Come on now Cream, what did you do?" Skeeter asked.

"Why me and my special forces men acted like wash ladies on Saturday."

"What does that mean?" Skeeter asked.

"It means that we beat everything we saw hanging around. I will admit that at one point I got scared."

"Of one of those German boys?" Steam asked.

"Naww! I was swinging so hard, I got scared of myself."

"Boy, shut up!" Melvin yelled.

"Finish your story Cream," Skeeter pleaded.

"Well, we took care of them all, except for three soldiers. The only weapons we had left were a few chicken feathers. With our special forces training, we didn't hesitate one micro-second. We picked up those feathers and commenced to tickling those German soldiers so bad that one of them died laughing, and the other two joined the French Resistance Movement.

When the 'Battle of the Barn' was over, we cracked open some of the French wine and fried four of those confused chickens. As I was cleaning one of those laying hens, I said to my men, 'Gentlemen. It looks like it's going to be another slow day.'"

SPIRIT competitors save millions for post

By Shawn Bryson
Bayonet staff writer

Fort Benning recently honored first-quarter, 1989 Project SPIRIT competitors who together, documented 39 actions resulting in a $7.5 million annual savings to the post.

Heading the list of competitors at an award ceremony in Building 4 Feb. 9 was the U.S. Army Infantry Training Center. The ITC won the Command/Major Unit competition by implementing one suggestion and five management improvement initiatives. Because of these improvements, Fort Benning will save $580,000 annually.

Two suggestions, two capital investments and one management improvement won the Directorate of Logistics the SPIRIT award for the Directorate Staff competition. DOL will save the post $195,000 annually with the changes.

The Personal and Special Staff competition was won by the Equal Employment Opportunity Office for the third consecutive quarter. Four actions, including two capital investments and two management improvements, added up to a $12,000-per-year savings by the EEO.

Fort Benning also recognized individuals who "contributed significantly toward attaining the SPIRIT objective of maximizing Army resourses."

Lt. Col. Robert A. Frizzo, from the ITC, won a SPIRIT award for his decision to allow soldiers to immediately retrain at firing ranges when they fail to meet training standards. Placing extra ammunition on ranges eliminated three additional training hours, extra transportation costs and another safety briefing. Frizzo's decision will save the government $294,809 annually.

Two other ITC soldiers, 1st Lt. Nikita Chavis and Msgt. Elroid S. Lights, initiated a program to use troop labor to complete modifications at the Kauffman Bayonet Assault Course. Their action resulted in a $147,700 annual government savings.

Ben Smith, acting chief of the Directorate of Engineering and Housing's Water Treatment Plant, won an indivdual SPIRIT award for his suggestion to reuse doors and hardware as replacement items in other buildings instead of selling them for scrap metal. Smith's initiative will save the government $49,775 annually.

Other individual award recipients were:

Name	Org	Savings
Edward H. Spidle	DOL	$23,918
Jimmie Tefft	DEH	$14,422
Freddie Hood	DPTM	$8,791
Frank Willoughby	DEH	$5,949

etta pistol and a $2,000 check from the ceremony's guest speaker, retired Gen. Frederick J. Kroesen Jr.

"I'm really kind of speechless because this has been such a great honor," Foley said after the ceremony. Foley knew of his nomination for the award in October of last year. "I knew my shot at the award was as good as anybody's, but I was still surprised when I learned I had won," Foley said.

Foley, 32, said his wife Andrea and his children, Noel and Evan, have been his greatest supporters since his military career began at basic training in July of 1980 at Fort Benning.

He also attended Advanced Individual Training and Basic Airborne Training at Benning before going to his first duty assignment with the 2nd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment at Fort Lewis, Wash.

Foley's military schooling includes Ranger, Small Arms, Emergency Medical Technology, Jumpmaster and Dynamic Intelligence Terrorism courses.

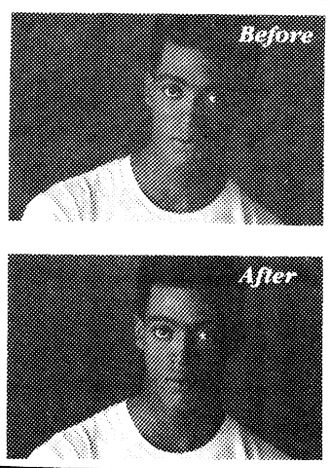
dealt with low-intensity conflict, terrorism and drug trafficking in Latin America. Gomes is currently chief of the Brazilian peace keeping mission, which will supervise the withdrawal of Cuban troops from Angola, Africa.

Pavan also noted her work with Maj. Gen. Leo U. LeBarbenchon, military attache at the Brazilian Embassy in Washington,D.C., during the Training and Military Education Conference at USARSA Oct. 1988.

According to Lt. Col. Robert B. Cairns,assistant deputy commandant at USARSA,the award "acknowledges the support she's given to Brazilian guest instructors and families for over 30 years."



"She has gone out of her way to make the Brazil contingent feel at home. The award officially recognizes the part she's played in contributing to one part of the mission of the school,which is to foster better relations with our neighbors."

Barcenas,born in Colon, Republic of Panama, came to the school July 9, 1956, when it was the U.S. Army Caribbean School at Fort Gulick in Panama. She works in the school's Language Services Division as a lexicographer, translator and interpreter.

Barcenas' close ties with Brazil began in Panama when several of her neighbors and friends were Brazilian, including retired Col. Jose C. Portoalegre,former chief of staff of the First Armed Division; Col. Luis F. Reis, a division cabinet chief of the Army General Staff; Col. Joao Zaleski Jr., division cabinet member of the Army General Staff; and Col. Jose B. Queiroz, also a division cabinet member of the Army General Staff. Reis, Queiroz and Zaleski are former guest instructors at USARSA. Those friendships led to her helping newcomers to the school at Fort Benning.

"Usually they look for me when they get here because my friends from Brazil tell them to look for Margarita," Barcenas said.

Barcenas is also a sponsor for the school's Hosts of Latin Americans program,which is designed to introduce North American family life and culture to Latin American students,guest instructors and their families at USARSA.

Benning's 'Certain Sage' exercise recalls 40 retirees to test their overseas deployability

USAIC Public Affairs Office

The retiree recall exercise, Certain Sage, Feb. 24 through 26, will test the overseas deployability of 40 area retirees.

These former soldiers are only a fraction of the 234,000 retiree man power pool the Army could order to active duty in national emergencies.

Although the Army has about 520,000 members on its retiree rolls, current DA policy states that roughly 286,000 are not eligible for involuntary recall because of medical reasons or age.

Presently, the Army has identified 161,000 positions in the United States that could be filled by eligible retirees if mobilization occurred. To help decide which retirees could best fill these positions, the Army classifies retirees into three categories.

Category I consists of retirees who have been retired less than 5 years, have no physical disabilities and are under 60 years of age.

Category II retirees have been retired more than 5 years, have no physical disabilities and are under 60 years of age.

Category III consists of all other retirees.

Only categories I and II can be involuntarily recalled to active duty. Retirees in category III are not eligible for recall but may volunteer their service; they are then handled as category I or II retirees.

To date, the Army has issued 124,000 involuntary, preassigned orders, commonly called "hip pocket" orders. These orders require retirees to report to an installation the Army chooses within seven days of a mobilization.

The retirees recalled for exercise Certain Sage are all category I and II.

Today, many more retirees can be mobilized if needed

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Since the early 1980s Military retirees have lived under the cloud that one day they could be recalled to active duty in cases of national emergency.

Until the 1980s August 1977 that possibility was minimal since the U.S. Army Reserve Personnel Center in St. Louis, Mo., kept little retiree information.

Today that is all changed. Mobilization recall now applies to 20-year, active duty regular Army and reserve retirees for both partial and full mobilization. It also applies for USAR retirees, but only after Congress has declared a national emergency and then only under full mobilization.

According to Mel Schelich, a retiree mobilization planner at ARPERCEN, the evolution began in 1977, when the Army began developing a retiree data base that improved the Army's ability to quickly draw on trained manpower to fill an expanding Army in the case of war or national emergency.

The initial Retiree Recall Program dealt only with regular Army soldiers who had served on active duty for 20 years or more and were drawing retired pay.

According to Schelich, the first "hip pocket" orders went to 51,000 regular Army retirees in October 1981. These orders assigned retirees installations to report to if the Secretary of the Army ordered a recall in the national interest.

In September 1983, the president modified the Defense Authorization Act, which placed reserve soldiers, who served on active duty for 20 years or more and who were receiving retired pay, in the same recall status as regular Army retirees.

In December 1983, the Department of the Army changed this policy to say that recall of 20-year, active duty retirees, both regular and reserve, applied under partial and full mobilization.

The next step in the evolution came when DoD announced that U.S. Army Reserve retirees who had completed 20 qualifying years of service toward retirement, and who would draw retired pay at age 60, were subject to recall in special situations. This class of retiree is known as the "gray-area" retiree.

According to Schelich, the Secretary of the Army can recall "gray-area" retirees only with the consent of the Secretary of Defense and only if Congress has declared war or a national emergency. Additionally, "gray-area" retirees can be recalled only if there are not enough other qualified reservists available and then only under full mobilization.

Schelich said the final step in the evolution came in March 1988. The Department of the Army said retirees could be assigned to deploying units by mobilization station commanders if they were medically qualified and met all POR requirements.

It is this overseas deployability of retirees that Exercise Certain Sage, Feb. 24-26 will test.

All 40 retirees in the exercise served at least 20 years on active duty.

Key to suicide prevention is positive leadership, concern

By James Ford
TRADOC OCPA

Suicide prevention must be the business of every Army leader, supervisor, soldier and civilian employee.

The key to preventing suicide is positive leadership and deep concern for any military personnel and civilian employees who might be at increased risk of suicide.

Every member of the Army family has the potential to come in contact with a person who is at increased risk of suicide. A crucial step in preventing suicide is recognizing the variables and life stress events that put individuals at risk.

Ultimately, all members of the Army family should be aware enough of the problem that could identify problems and refer co-workers, friends and family members who are in a crisis to an appropriate source of help.

Signs of depression and immediate danger signals that could signify suicidal behavior are:

- Poor (or increased) appetite or significant weight loss or gain.
- Change in sleep habits - excessive sleep or inability to sleep.
- Behavioral agitation or a slowing of movement.
- Loss of energy, fatigue.
- Complaints or evidence of diminished ability to think or concentrate.
- Feelings of worthlessness, self-reproach or excessive guilt.
- Withdrawal from family and friends.
- Drastic mood swings.
- Sudden change in behavior.

Immediate danger signals include:

- Talking about or hinting at suicide.
- Giving away possessions or making a will.
- Obsession with death, sad music or sad poetry; including "death themes" in letters or art work.
- Making specific plans to commit suicide and access to lethal means.
- Buying a gun.

It is easier for leaders and other individuals who are aware of suicide risk factors to identify persons who may be in such a crisis situation, and intervene as appropriate. Early involvement is a critical factor in reducing suicide risk.

Leaders, supervisors and other members of the Army community are often in the best position to identify persons at risk.

Intervention may include listening, referring and taking the persons to helping agencies.

The reasons, motives and psychological intentions of suicidal persons are quite complex. To help understand why a person is suicidal or why he committed suicide, Army medical specialists employ the pyschological autopsy. It is a thorough, retrospective investigation of how intentions of the victim might relate to his or her death. It is also a reconstruction of the motivations, philosophy, psychodynamics and existential crisis of the decedent.

Some of the prominent mental trends in suicidal persons are:

- A wish to escape from mental or physical pain.
- A fantasy of eternal rest or life with a loved one.
- Anger, rage, revenge.

Guilt, shame, atonement.

- A wish to be rescued, reborn, start over.
- A wish to make an important statement or communicate.

Distructive ideas or impulses that are ordinarily well controlled or mostly unconscious can be activated or released under the influence of emotional stress, physical exhaustion or alcohol.

Let's look at a psychological autopsy conducted on a 26-year-old soldier assigned to a TRADOC school who committed suicide. The soldier's profile provides the best reasoned guess as to the "mindset of the individual" prior to the suicide.

Close, stable, happy marriage, no family problems; no financial or legal problems.

An intense and competitive over achiever whose sense of self-worth was based on achieving prestigious external goals and required the positive opinion of others.

Physically strong, attractive, extroverted and socially skillful; an athlete, weight lifter and body builder; health enthusiast.

Lobbied extensively to attend course; "pumped up" in anticipation of training; completion of course was considered a major step in his career plan.

During training he was noted to be highly motivated, but he only achieved marginal performance. His normal response was to "try harder" in a rigid hypermasculine style. He was usually successful but had no other way of coping with stress.

As training progressed, he began to manifest signs of stress: - short-term memory loss; - decreased tolerance for frustration; irritable; - inappropriate anger at minor problems; - inability to relax or sleep; - overdetermined behavior; - withdrawal from social contact;- managed food poorly; ate two to three days' rations at once.

Under extreme personal pressure to successfully complete the course; anticipated possible loss of 'life-plan' was devastating; viewed failure in this course as the end to his career.

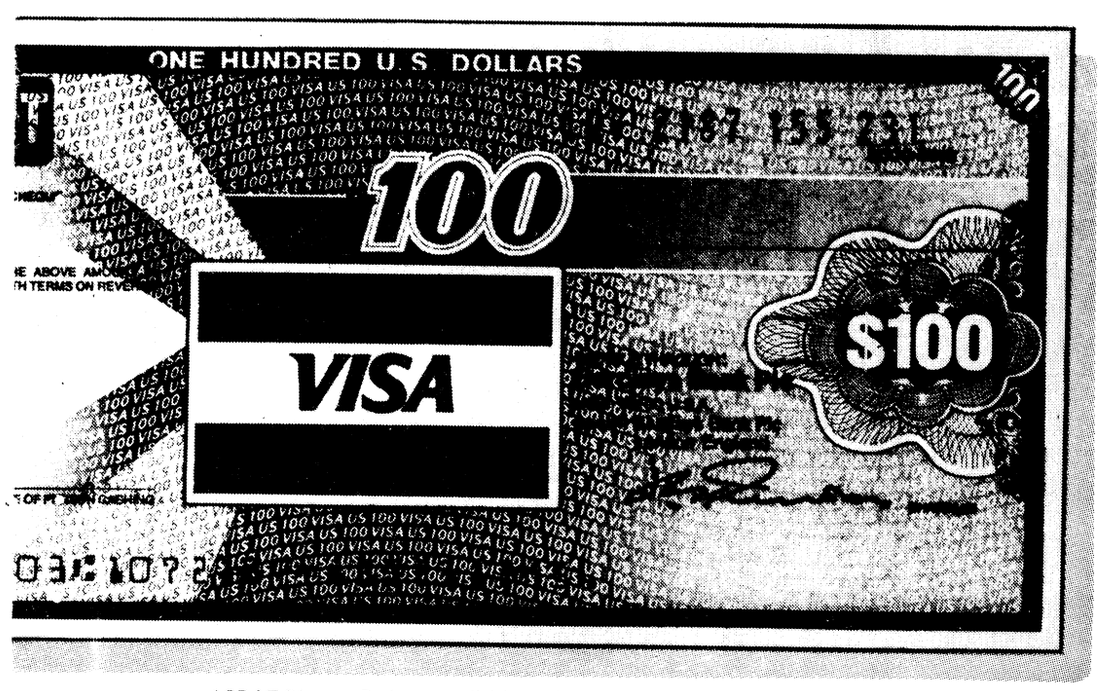
Facing failure, he discussed suicide indirectly; mentioned to fellow students that "he had hit his limit." He said, "I don't want it like I used to; it's been nice knowing you."

The "final straw" was failure to perform in a leadership position. When informed of his poor performance, he quit.

Cadre had trouble "controlling" him. Later that evening he was required to submit a formal letter of resignation "for lack of motivation." He was then required to rewrite the letter due to lack of clarity.

He told others around him that he regretted his resignation and could not see how he could return to his unit or wife. Pending elimination, he was assigned to a two-man guard post at a remote location and issued live ammunition. A fellow guard was concerned that the soldier may hurt himself, but he did not convey it to his relief. The relief did not observe any unusual behavior during the brief time before the suicide. The soldier made a final call to his wife and then shot himself.

This case describes his mind set at the time of death: Loss of self-worth; sense of failure to achieve life's goal; "loss of face" with peers and family; isolation from peers and cadre; and the perception that all doors were slammed shut with no way out but suicide.



Unfortunately, in a society plagued with many problems, suicide becomes the only way out too frequently. All military and civilian supervisors must do more to identify employees - military and civilian - who might be at risk. You must become more responsive to warning signals individuals display when dealing with career - or life-threatening information.

Fellow employees, also, must become more sensitive to the impact bad news may have on individuals. All must be ready to provide timely and adequate assistance to restore their sense of well being.

Leadership responsibility begins with knowing and caring for soldiers, civilian employees and their family members. Suicide prevention is an essential part of that responsibility.

Wilson students get a taste of Hollywood

By Beth Middlemiss
Fort Benning Schools

Quiet on the set! Background! Action! Rolling!

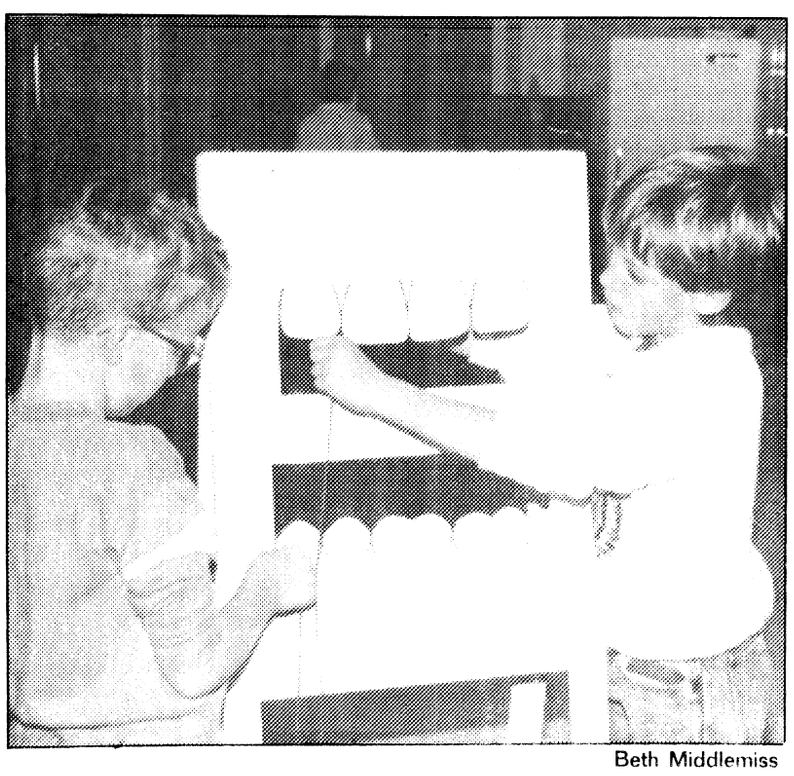
Twenty-six students from Glenn Hughes' 5th grade class from Richard G. Wilson School listened as these words were shouted on the set of "Your Mother Wears Combat Boots" Wednesday morning when the class visited the movie location.

This movie being made for television will air in March.

Shortly after the students were on location, they met Kathy Rozell, the assistant director, who talked with them about movie production. Kathy explained the lengthy process of making a movie, terminology used by directors and the jobs of the many specialists the students were seeing on the set.

Much of the students' amazement, the 90 minutes of filming they observed will produce only three minutes of the actual movie. The students learned reasons for the many re-takes and the process the director goes through in editing a days' worth of shots.

Watching the director, Anson Williams, known as "Potsie" on "Happy Days" was exciting, according to many of the students. However, having a picture taken and being able to talk with the star of the movie, Barbara Eden, was the highlight of the experience.



"She's just a regular person like we are." "If she's a movie star, then where's her limo?" "Boy this is neat, I want to be in the movies." "I want to be a director." "Did you see that man who directed Top Gun?" "Let's make our own movie!" "I can't wait to see this on TV." "I liked that long feathery microphone they used." "Let's do this again." Mr. Hughes, when can we come back?"

These quotes were heard as the fifth graders returned to their classroom planning careers as directors, make-up specialists, extras, or just about any of the other jobs that would land them a career with the movie industry

Creatures visit Wilbur School

By Beth Middlemiss
Fort Benning Schools

Roxanne is one of many live creatures who either resides with or comes to visit Wilbur's two 5th grade classes.

Other permanent residents are Freckles, an African toad, who began his stay as a tadpole; another hamster named Precious; and two box turtles named Spike and Bobo.

A recent guest list shows the following visitors: a black widow spider, a tarantula, a parakeet, three goldfish, a crayfish, a chipmunk, a green rough snake, a salamander, dragonfly larvae and a display of poisonous and non-poisonous snakes. Science is coming alive in the classrooms as students care for and seek to learn more about creatures living in the world around them.

ASK THE JUDGE

By Jane M. Winand
Staff Judge Advocate's Office

Q: I own a mobile home in Seale, Ala., and I think that the Alabama authorities are trying to pull a fast one on me. In past years I've gotten an ad valorem tax exemption form from the JAG Office so I didn't have to pay ad valorem taxes on my mobile home. Well, this year when I presented the ad valorem exemption form to the tax official, he said that the law had changed and that I was no longer exempt from the tax. What gives?

A: That Alabama tax official is correct. The Alabama legislature passed a new law that became effective on Oct. 1, 1988, that provides that owners have to pay ad valorem taxes on mobile homes just as if they were real estate. Mobile homes that are now taxable are those structures that are not designed normally to be drawn or pulled on the highway except to change permanent locations. These are mobile homes that are designed to be used as dwellings when connected to required utilities. Consequently, travel trailers that are frequently moved from location to location and are used most typically for vacations and recreational trips would not be subject to the ad valorem tax.

My advice is to pay the ad valorem tax. The new law sets up a system of checks to ensure that all mobile homes that fall within the statutory definition are taxed. Consequently, the law requires the owner or lessor of real estate on which a mobile home is located to report the name and address of the mobile home owner to the Alabama Commissioner of Revenue when required. Any public or private company that provides a mobile home owner with gas or electric services must report the name and address of each mobile home owner given services to the Commissioner of Revenue every month. There is no way to trick your landlord or a utility company into believing that you have paid the tax when you haven't because those who have paid the tax are given a decal. The decal must be prominently displayed on or near the front of the mobile home. If you don't have a current decal for that year, it is obvious to everyone you haven't paid the tax.

So you're feeling wild and crazy and are thinking about not paying the ad valorem tax just to see what they'll do to you? Well, they're ready for you. All delinquent ad valorem taxes will have a penalty of 12 percent interest per year added on to the total tax that you owe. The Alabama authorities also have the discretion to sell your mobile home to recover the delinquent ad valorem taxes and accrued annual interest. The payment of the tax could be a small investment to protect your home from a delinquent tax sale.

It appears that the Alabama legislature has severely altered the immunity that soldiers had against taxes on mobile homes as provided in the Soldiers' and Sailors' Civil Relief Act. There is some question about whether a state can arbitrarily change its definition of "tangible non-business personal property" to tax mobile homes, that up until that time had not been subject to the tax. The Office of The Judge Advocate General of the Army in Washington is researching this problem. Nonetheless, in the meantime, to protect your own property, you must pay the tax.

Checkbooks must be secured

By Barry R. Price
Provost Marshal's Office

You lay your checkbook down for just a moment. When you turn around, it's gone. Perhaps your wallet or your purse is missing also. You call the military police.

There is no physical evidence to determine the thief, and now you're in a bind. Soon, your checks start turning up all over post with a forged signature, and you're forced to prove you did not write them. The unfortunate story is beginning to sound too familiar to Fort Benning law enforcement officials.

You can help prevent this from happening. First, you must realize your information may be printed on your checks and it's not difficult to produce supporting identification. It is necessary to take precautionary measures to secure checkbooks.

Around the work place, your checkbook should never be left unsecured. Do not leave your checkbooks in plain view in your car; and by all means, lock your car. Always be aware of where your checkbook is when you are in a public place. If you have to lay it down, keep it in visual contact at all times.

It's tough enough to manage money with today's inflation. Don't jeapardize your financial well being by giving a thief access to your funds.

By using the following procedure, soldiers on the Family Housing waiting list can use this chart to estimate when they can expect quarters:

Locate your category of housing.

Note eligibility date located on the same line as your category.

Calculate the time difference between the eligibility date listed and your eligibility date. The difference is the approximate time you still have to wait for housing.

EXAMPLE: If the latest eligibility date of the person who last received housing in your category was May 15, 1988, and your date of eligibility is Sept. 15, 1988, you can expect housing in about four months. If you do not know your eligibility date, contact the Family Housing Office at building 399, 545-3107.

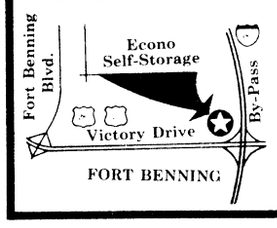
Unintended beneficiaries may collect insurance

Department of Veterans Service

According to Georgia Commissioner of Veterans Affairs Pete Wheeler, many Georgia veterans may be running the risk of having unintended beneficiaries collect on their insurance because of outdated beneficiary designations on their GI insurance policies.

Citing several examples, Wheeler said that if a veteran marries after taking out his GI insurance and doesn't think to name his bride as beneficiary, most likely the veteran's parents would still be listed as beneficiaries.



Then there's the all-too-frequent instance where a veteran gets a divorce, then remarries but doesn't remember to update his insurance by naming his new wife as beneficiary. Consequently, the veteran's first wife remains the legal beneficiary.

Another unfortunate situation develops when a veteran has additional children born since he last made a beneficiary designation, and he fails to add their names as beneficiaries. The result is that these later children do not share in the veteran's insurance benefits when he dies.

"It is vitally important for veterans to keep the VA advised of any changes in their family situations," Wheeler said, "because insurance policy beneficiaries cannot be changed by a last will and testament. By periodically reviewing their insurance policies and making any necessary changes to keep designated beneficiaries up to date, veterans can help their families avoid a lot of confusion and unpleasantness."

Mobile ministry provides Ash Wednesday services for Fort Benning soldiers

USAIC Chaplain's Office

Ash Wednesday was celebrated a little differently this year at Fort Benning. Ordinarily, the Catholic community gathers in post chapels to celebrate the beginning of Lent with the distribution of ashes made from the blessed palm branches of the previous year's Palm Sunday celebration. But this year, the services were taken to the community.

The majority of Fort Benning Catholics are in the Infantry Training Center. This presented a challenge to provide services to the scattered groups in the training area.

A plan to bring the celebration to the trainees was devised. At the crack of dawn, a van left the ITC chapel and headed for the training area where services were performed until sundown. The group consisted of a Jewish chaplain, two Protestant chaplains, two Catholic Lay Eucharistic ministers, and a chaplain's assistant.

At each site, the van stopped and opened its doors. Within five minutes, the soldiers were gathered, and a field alter was prepared. The simple services consisted of prayer, scripture readings, sermons and the imposition of ashes.

While the Catholic team performed the service, the Jewish and Protestant chaplains moved among the remaining trainees to counsel and pray with them. Each session took about seven Masses.

The cooperation of the unit chaplains, their commanders and the Catholic team made the experience possible. A real need of the soldiers and trainees was met, and the command was able to see the total Unit Ministry Team in action.

This mobile ministry was a powerful training experience, especially for the younger chaplains. They learned first-hand about the importance of cooperation and religious accommodation.

Through faith we learn to trust God rather than ourselves

By Chap. John L. Krider
USAIC Chaplain's Office

A strong faith in God fills the heart with assurance. Through faith we can learn to trust in Him rather than in ourselves.

Solomon said, "Trust in the Lord with all thine heart; and lean not unto thine own understanding" (Proverbs 3:5). This assurance is our sustaining strength to face every eventuality of life. It dries our tears, heals our broken hearts, strengthens our hands and gives direction to our feet.

God gives us strength to equal our needs. The real meaning of this heartening promise is expressed in the Bible: "As thy days, so shall thy strength be" (Deuteronomy 33:25). This is why we often become tired in life's journey and are tempted to drop in our tracks, but then find strength to triumph over adversity.

The Lord helps us with our daily troubles. Jesus said in the sermon on the mount: "Take no thought for the tomorrow, for tomorrow shall take thought for the things of itself. Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof," (Matthew 6:33). This does not teach against plans for tomorrow, but to take care of life's duties day by day, free of anxiety. After all, this is the best preparation anyone can make for the future.

Many of our problems are due to our failure to take care of one day at a time. Each day brings enough trouble without worrying about tomorrow's problems, most of which may never happen. True, there will be some adversities tomorrow because the world is not heaven. God will give us sufficient grace to bear our problems.

God is with us, and He will see us through life even with our failures. He gives us the courage to go a little farther and face many challenges.

When faced with many adversities in her life, song-writer Fanny J. Crosby, looked to God for help and deliverance. She paints these immortal words in song for us today:

"Blessed Assurance, Jesus is mine! O what a fortaste of glory devine!

Heir of salvation, purchase of God, born of His spirit, washed in His blood.

This is my story, this is my song, praising my Savior all the day long."

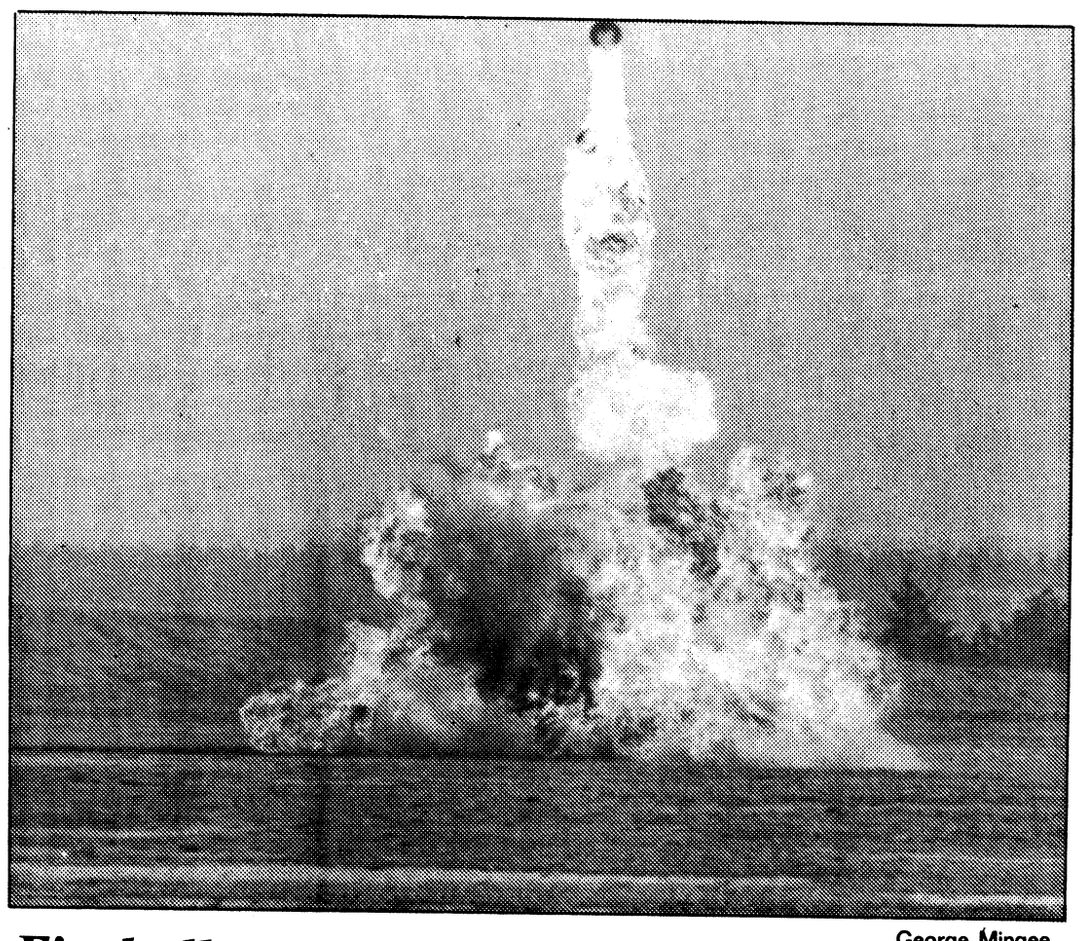
NCO promotion prospects good in FY '89

Army News Service

The Army's year of "The NCO" will be very good to its honored namesakes in terms of promotions, according to Army personnel officials.

Figures recently released forecast 18,000 more top five NCO promotions this year over fiscal 1988 levels - an increase of 48 percent.



Altogether, more than 55,000 NCOs will put on new stripes this year.

The biggest percentage increase will be for staff sergeants awaiting the step to E-7.

Promotions to sergeant first class this year will jump 70 percent over last year. The smallest category - E-9 promotions - will still show a 28 percent increase.

Here is the breakout of projected fiscal 1989 promotions and the net increase for each grade over fiscal 1988:

Drug testing policy for recruits remains unchanged

Army will not allow drug users into its ranks

Army News Service

The Army reiterated Feb. 8 that it will not allow into its ranks recruits who test positive for drugs and alcohol during inprocessing.

Reports had circulated recently in the civilian media that some recruits would be allowed to remain in the service after testing positive for drugs or alcohol use during inprocessing.

"Our policy isn't changing," declared Col. Walt Stowell, Chief, Human Resources for the Army's Deputy Chief of Staff for Personnel.

"We aren't taking recruits who are drug and alcohol abusers. All recruits who test positive for drugs and alcohol during inprocessing will be discharged," he said.

The site of Dept. of Defense's trainee testing program is being changed at the direction of Congress. Instead of being conducted at the Dept. of Defense' Military Entrance Processing Stations, the testing will be done at the reception stations of the respective services.

Details of how the the change will be implemented within Dept. of Defense are being worked out.

Of Army recruits who were tested for drug and alcohol use during the last seven months of 1988, 4.1 percent were rejected for marijuana and cocaine use and .10 percent for alcohol use. About 100,000 were tested.

Recruits testing positive for marijuana or alcohol use can reapply to join the service after six months. Those testing positive for cocaine must wait a year before reapplying.

Soldiers' house-finding process gets additional support

Army News Service

If you're a soldier facing a permanent change of station, the last thing you want to add to your things-to-do list is the hassle of do-it-yourself house-finding.

To help ease the emotional (and often financial) burden of that perennial chore, Army personnel officials are seeking to place a symbolic pot of gold at the end of the house-finding rainbow.

That "pot" consists of expanding the house-finding support offered by the various Housing Referral Offices at Army installations. U.S. Army Housing Referral Offices, Europe, are not participating in the program.

"Traditionally, Housing Referral Offices always would make available pertinent brochures, packets, flyers and other publications to guide house-hunting soldiers due to resettle," explained Denis Keating in the Army's Office of the Deputy Chief of Staff for Personnel.

"Now, they're expanding their support by encouraging local and national real estate firms to offer stateside home-finding assistance geared toward the special needs of soldiers," Keating added.

For example, the realtors might choose to offer information on mortgage discounts and on rental assistance. They could make such material available at both old and new duty stations by having it displayed free-of-charge at the Housing Referral Office.

Similar to a successful program tested by the Air Force, the Army version entails the realtors' development of such promotional items as prequalification of prospective home buyers, pre-approval of mortgage applications, lowered fees for loan origination, reduced commissions, reduced fees for loan processing, and rental assistance.

Keating stressed that presentation of any benefits or assistance is to be provided "strictly on a member-to-vendor basis. The government will neither endorse a civilian home-finding agency nor 'steer' a soldier toward a specific company," he said. "Companies won't be authorized to use the Army's name, or to imply Army involvement in the development or endorsement of their packages."

Besides helping soldiers in the relocation process, the new addition of mortgage discount packages is expected to help vendors of housing and rental property to:

★Reach a financially stable market.
★Reach a mobile market.
★Increase the volume of potential customers.
★Increase the potential for "repeat" customers.

Thus, soldiers and vendors will find a mutual interest in maintaining that pot of informational gold at the end of the house-finding rainbow.

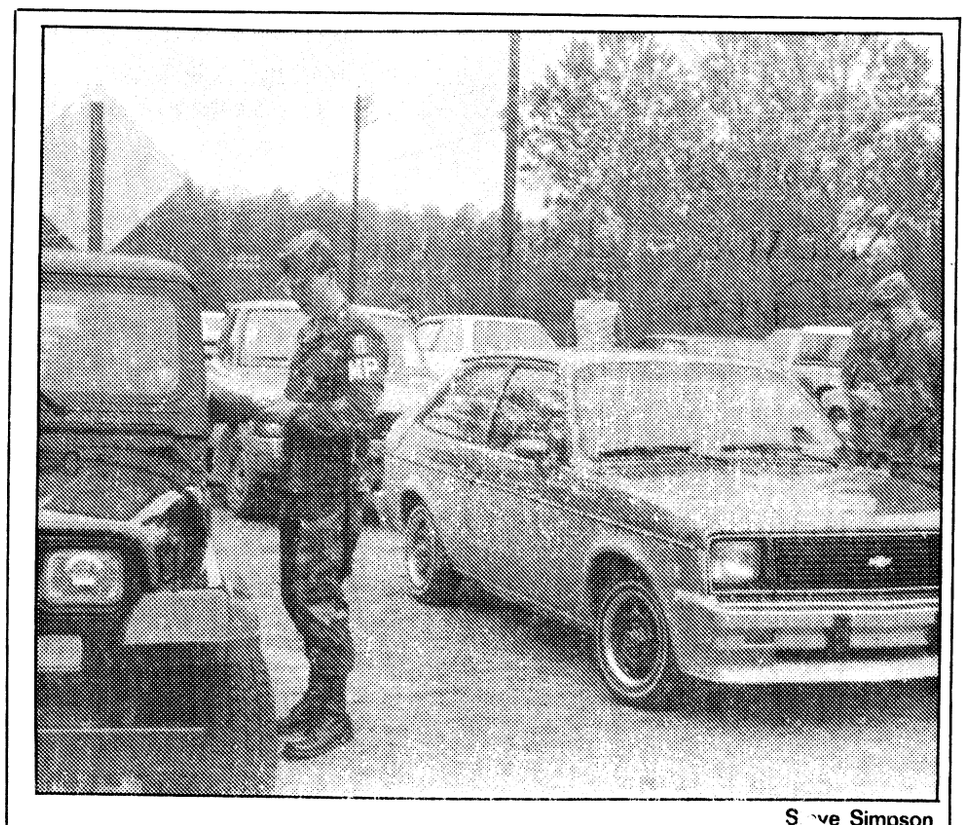
Soldiers may pay interest and fees on in-service debts

Army News Service

Soldiers who owe money to the Army could be charged fees for late payment, say Army finance officials.

According to officials at the U.S. Army Finance and Accounting Center at Fort Benjamin Harrison, Ind., the Army is now procedurally able to closely enforce the Debt Assessment Act of 1982, which requires interest charges and administrative fees to be levied on late payment of in-service debts.

Finance officials said that each soldier's case will be considered individually before additional charges are mounted for late payment.



They added that charges and fees could be waived if indications show no sign of fault of lack of good faith by the soldier, if the debt was incurred due to an administrative error without misrepresentation or fraud by the soldier, or under extenuating circumstances.

Examples of debt categories for which the Army may charge interest or administrative fees are:

- Failure to complete a course for which government tuition assistance was provided.
- Debts incurred following a report of survey.
- Government property loss or destruction.
- Drawing full cost-of-living allowance while living in barracks.
- Receiving variable housing allowance or overseas housing allowance without documentation to support expenses.
- Receiving basic allowance for quarters while living in government quarters, or receiving more BAQ than legally entitled.
- Shipment of excess household goods.

USAFAC officials explained that soldiers will be notified when they incur in-service debts, and will be allowed to make their case against the debt and charges or fees by presenting documentary evidence.

They added that soldiers should respond immediately when notified of an in-service debt to insure ample time to work out the details of a repayment plan, as well as any necessary charges and fees.

Reenlistments run high in first quarter of FY '89

The Army continues to exceed its reenlistment goals, with more than 23,000 soldiers reenlisted during the first quarter of fiscal year '89.

Reenlistments were running at 103.7 percent of the Army's stated goal. First-termers' reenlistments were at 105.7 percent, mid-terms' at 104.7 percent and career soldiers' at 100.4 percent.

Personnel officials say the first and second quarters are traditionally the highest in reenlistments, and they are hopeful of a similarly successful second quarter.

New reserve commissary access rules apply to all

If you are a member of the Army Reserve and you performed active duty for training or annual training in 1988 or will train during the first six months of 1989 and you have a set of orders for that training and a valid red identification card (DD Form 2A, Reserve), then you can use the commissary as often as you like between now and June 30. Family members may also use the commissary if they have a valid Army Guard/Reserve Family Member ID card.

Army Reserve Personnel Center officials say that this and other new reserve component commissary rules apply to all Reserve soldiers and their families.

All reserve members will be allowed unlimited commissary use during periods of active duty for training for annual training. Members of troop units and the Individual Mobilization Augmentation program will receive a privilege card allowing them 12 additional "discretionary" commissary visits during a 12-month period.

After July 1, having the appropriate ID card and the new privilege card will get reserve soldiers and their family members into the commissary 12 times a year when the soldiers isn't on active duty.

ROTC scholarships now available for some soldiers

Active-duty enlisted soldiers interested in applying for Army scholarships to attend college as cadets in the Reserve Officers' Training Corps now have an added incentive - a four-year program aimed at attracting applicants to historically black colleges.

"Up to now," said June Reams, "the U.S. Army ROTC Cadet Command offered only two- and three-year scholarship programs to prospective new cadets from the enlisted ranks. This new opportunity to attend one of the 20 historically black colleges that host ROTC aims both to help advance soldiers' career interests and help sustain the colleges' enrollment base."

Recipients of the new, four-year scholarship must agree to enroll, and remain enrolled, at a host-ROTC historically black college or university for the duration of the scholarship.

Deadline for receipt of applications at Cadet Command is March 15, Reams said. She noted that persons pursuing nursing have until May 1.

Application packets are available at most post education centers, as well as at the Cadet Command.

Update on driver-training handbook for overseas

A recent article on the availability of the "Drivers Handbook and Examination Manual for Germany" has prompted the following clarification for those interested in obtaining copies.

Since the handbook is considered, in part, as "test material," it is subject to controlled distribution within the Continental United States. Officials with the Forces Command at Fort McPherson, Ga., point out that only those FORSCOM-supported units that are deployable overseas, plus those in REFORGER status, are granted access through their test officials to copies of the handbook.

Accordingly, requests made from outside the intended audience cannot be filled by the FORSCOM office that stocks the handbook, officials say.

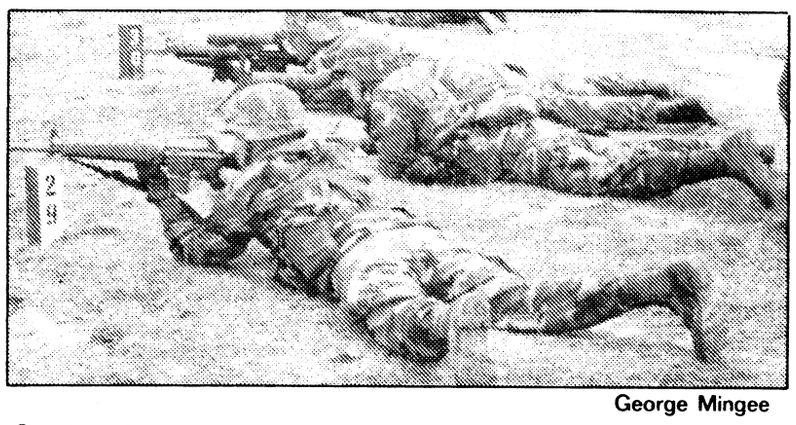
197th Inf. Brigade marksmen compete in 18th Airborne match

George Mingee

The soldier standing loads a magazine in his M-16 rifle while the coach looks downrange with the aid of a sharpshooter's scope to record hits.

By George Mingee
197th Infantry Brigade correspondent

Soldiers of the 197th Infantry Brigade recently traveled to Fort Bragg, N.C., to represent Fort Benning in the 18th Airborne Corps Markmanship match. The 18 soldiers from Benning who competed are inexperienced in markmanship competition. However, they placed in three out of four firing categories.



Competition was tough as more than 200 soldiers participated in the match, including soldiers from Fort Knox, Ky.; Fort Stewart, Ga. and Fort Bragg. It consisted of five days of firing M-16 rifles, M-60 machine guns, 9mm pistols and M-14 rifles on a cold and windy range at Fort Bragg.

"Our gamble during the Infantry Trophy competition paid off," said SSgt. James L Sparks Jr. of B Company, 2nd Battalion, 18th Infantry. "Our team decided to take a chance which resulted in squaring the targets on the 400- and 300-meter yard line. This added to our team total to move us up in the rankings."

The 2nd Bn., 18th Inf. team made headway in the Infantry Trophy competition by smartly and skillfully firing and scoring on the targets at the greatest distance. The results reflected a great number of points for the team because they made a lot of hits on the distant targets, which had higher point values.

Equally important was the performance by the team prior to engaging the targets. The shooters were challenged to run two miles in full combat gear before mounting the firing line. Each team was alloted 25 minutes to reach the firing line; however, the 2nd Bn., 18th Inf. team reached the line in 19:20 minutes, allowing extra time to load their rifles and to engage the targets downrange.

Displaying this type of effort enabled the soldiers of Fort Benning to take third place overall in both the M-16 team match and the Infantry Trophy match. Both matches involved firing at stationary targets at distances of 100m, 200m, 300m, and 400m, with the trophy match consisting of a two-mile run.

George Mingee

Soldiers fire at 300-meter targets.

In the individual M-16 match, one soldier stood tall for Fort Benning. Spec. Raul Fragoso of B Co., 2nd Bn., 18th Inf. scored 221 out of a possible 250 points. This score put Fragoso in the top ten percent of shooters and earned him the Bronze Distinguished Shooter Badge, which replaces his markmanship shooter badge on his dress greens.

"I give thanks to SSgt. Sparks who taught me how to shoot in competition. He showed me a better way to hold a steady position and a technique to decrease my movements, which enabled me to shoot as well as I did," said Fragoso.

Another category that was equally competitive involved the M-60 machine gun match. The two-man machine gun crews were also challenged to run two miles in full combat gear.

"Taking first place in the two-mile run certainly helped because it gave us extra time to shoot," said SSgt. William Odom, coach of the M-60 machine gun teams.

"Even though our weapons double fed during critical time periods we were still able to take third in the competition," said Spec. Richard Shock, an M-60 gunner.

Rounding out the competition was the 9mm match. This involved the competitors taking a total of 90 shots per firer from various positions including prone and kneeling. Competitors were required to seriously concentrate in the areas of sight alignment, trigger control and except movement.

"In 9mm firing, 'except movement' is the hardest thing to overcome," said SSgt. Bernard Thomas of the U.S. Army Markmanship Training Unit.

The 9mm team representing Fort Benning didn't place high enough to win a trophy, but they will have another chance in the All-Army match later this year.

The overall performance by these Fort Benning soldiers is almost certain to benefit the team as they look forward to the All-Army match in the spring.

43rd Engineers construct new training facilities at rangers' main post location

By Bjarne M. Iverson and Jim P. Kelly
43rd Engineer Battalion

The new budget constraints imposed throughout the Army have caused installations to review space utilization and other activities to reduce waste and ensure the most economical use of resources.

One of Fort Benning's solutions has been "Operation Tighten-Up." A major objective of this operation was to relocate the 3rd Ranger Battalion from Harmony Church to Main Post.

The relocation was not just a matter of moving soldiers into new barracks. Many of the essential training facilities located adjacent to the Harmony Church Ranger compound could not be relocated. To contract the construction of these training facilities would be costly in terms of time and money. An alternative was to enlist the help of the 43rd Engineer Combat Battalion (Heavy). The 43rd, with its construction capability, accomplished the mission expeditiously and economically.

The 43rd Engrs. were quick to respond to the needs of the installation and the Ranger Regiment. Four platoons were mobilized to plan and execute the construction mission, which included a parachute landing fall pit, full scale C-130 and C-141 training mock-ups, outdoor physical training structures, five security gates and a gravel parking lot.

Construction was phased to minimize impact on other battalion projects on the installation. Company A initiated the project in August. This portion, which ended in November, included 4th Bn., 41st Field Artillery defeats 197th Spt. Bn.

The Officers Basketball Team of 4th Battalion, 41st Field Artillery battled long and hard for a victory against the 197th Support Battalion at Kelley Hill Physical Fitness Center recently in a triple overtime, 52-47.

Tabb Benzinger led the artillerymen to the hard-fought victory as he poured in 17 points.

With spectators cheering both sides at Kelley Hill Physical Fitness Center, Benzinger made four foul shots during the third overtime to clench the game for 4th Bn., 41st Fld. Arty.

The artillerymen are currently undefeated and looking forward to winning the 197th Brigade Officers Basketball League championship again this year.

Courthouse I sponsors racquetball tourney

Courthouse I is sponsoring a racquetball tournament Feb. 24, 25 and 26 at 1500 54th Street. The entry deadline is Tuesday. Trophies will be awarded and food will be served. All proceeds will benefit the American Lung Association.

For more information, call 324-2211.

Boxing coaches needed

The School Brigade League and the Combined League need boxing coaches (post level). Experience is preferred.

If interested, call Speedy Austin at the Sports Office at 545-4726 or 545-4388.

Heart Run is March 11

The American Heart Association will sponsor the 1989 Heart Run March 11 at 10 a.m. in front of the Columbus Ironworks Convention and Trade Center. The one-mile fun run begins at 10 a.m., and the 6.2-mile race begins at 10:30 a.m.

Registration for individuals is $9; it's $10 the day of the race.

Corporate and military relays will run concurrently with the 6.2-mile race. Three team members will run approximately two miles each. Registration is $60 for corporate relay and $30 for the military relay.

Awards will be given in various age groups for individual runners. The first five teams in the military relay will receive a trophy.

For more information, contact Karen Ledford at 324-0173.

Pot-O-Gold reaches $2,362

Fort Benning bowling centers' "Pot-O-Gold"cash bowling prize has reached $2,362 bowling officials said Tuesday.

Bowlers must strike in certain frames to win the pot.

Infantry marathon challenges mind, body

By John M. Henderson
Martin Army Community Hospital

Watching television scenes of the recent arctic cold wave hurting Alaska makes one shiver.

Watching the opening of the Winter Olympics in Calgary makes one shiver. It's sort of like setting out on the middle 15 miles of the marathon route when it's 17 degrees Fahrenheit with 15-mile-per-hour winds.

Are you motivated?

Are you dedicated?

Sure you are.

And now, with only two weeks of hard training left, each run gains more importance.

Just as the long training runs teach your body to endure the pounding in the joints, the exhaustion in the viscera and the isolation in the brain, you must also teach yourself how to prepare for March the day before.

WHAT: 1989 Infantry Marathon and Half Marathon

WHEN: March 4. Marathon starts at 9 a.m.; half marathon begins at 9:30 a.m.

WHERE: Eckel Street in front of Infantry Hall, building 4.

REGISTRATION: $15 (Make check payable to MWR Fund)

POINT OF CONTACT: Capt. Russell L. Walker, 544-I-RUN or 544-I-WIN.

Take for instance "carboloading." This is the practice of eating lots of carbohydrates in hopes of storing up enough energy for the long haul.

You body doesn't tolerate gorging well. You'll feel bloated, have lots of gas, belly cramps and headaches.

Since you have been taking long training runs recently, you can afford to "practice" carboloading. An extra bagel, a slice of pecan pie, warm sticky Danish, scoop of pasta or a few cookies will do nicely.

Don't worry. By doing that 20-mile training run, you just put 2,000 calories on the deficit side of the ledger.

What else can you practice?

Striding: Stride length and speed must be relatively slow at the outset of the race. It takes discipline to control the urge to burst out of the pack.

Shoe tightness: Over a long haul, your foot might increase in size. A tightly laced shoe may feel supportive at first; but an hour later, it will be agony. Make it comfortably snug, so the heel won't shimmy.

Accumulate your race day sundries. It's a good idea to make a list of the things you'll need, such as four little safety pins, a jar of Vaseline, a cap, favorite socks and running clothes.

Remember to bring a towel, an extra set of dry clothes and don't forget your race number.

Bodily functions: Yes, you need to practice emptying the bladder and colon before a long run. You really have to take the time to "practice" this one.

Cutting tangents: This refers to the practice of cutting across a road so as to take the straightest (and thereby the shortest) route through a curve. It is best done on uphill curves.

Run-walk-run: As you make it through the course of the race, you may notice that your body just isn't working. It could be worthwhile to alternate running and walking.

For instance, run 10 minutes, walk five minutes and run 10 minutes. As long as you are still heading toward Building 4, you have lost no ground.

I hope these tips come in handy during the last few weeks.

Next week, "The Sniffle Zone." See you on the road.

197th Inf. Brigade and 29th Inf. Regiment meet in freestyle wrestling tournament

By John C. Prosch Jr.
29th Infantry Regiment

The 197th "Sledgehammer" Infantry Brigade will meet the 29th Infantry Regiment in a freestyle wrestling tournament Thursday from 4-6 p.m. at Kelley Hill gym.

Both teams recently participated in the post wrestling championship matches where the 29th Inf. came in first, and the 197th Inf. came in second.

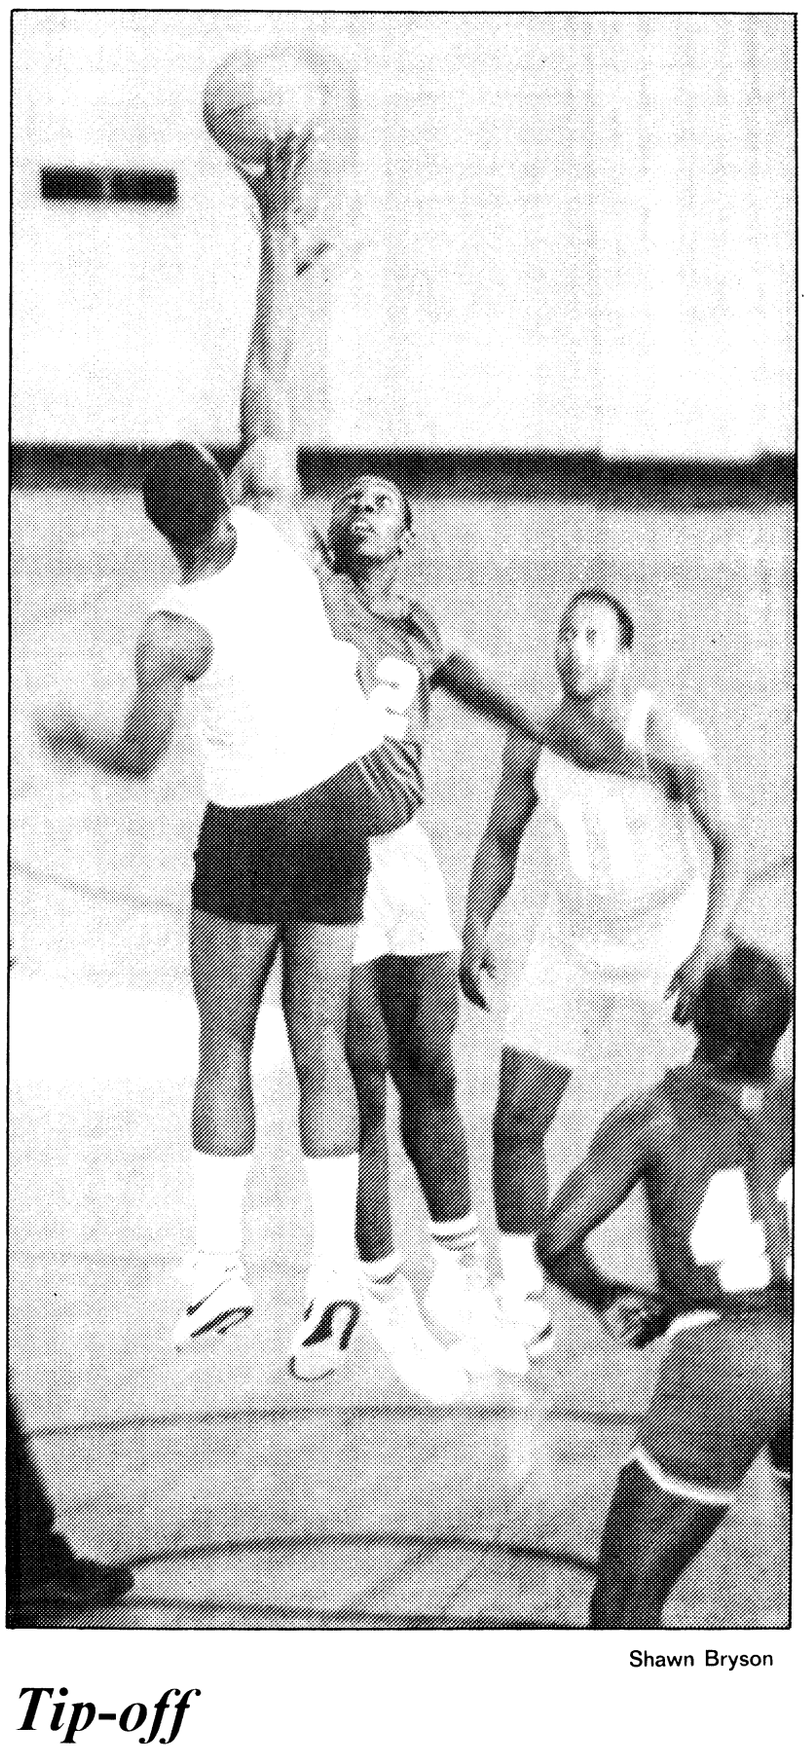
Ten freestyle matches will take place in eight weight categories.

The dual meet is the first time brigade level organizations have wrestled head to head.

According to 29th Inf. Regt. commander, Col. John D. Fuller, efforts are being made to bring the All-Army wrestling camp to Fort Benning.

"We have a large number of soldiers with extensive high school and collegiate wrestling experience," he said. "The talent is here; we just need to provide the opportunity to practice and compete."

"Several of us who share an interest in wrestling believe that hosting an All-Army sport will be good for Fort Benning," he added. "Since we discontinued boxing several years ago, we haven't had an individual contact sport (on post) in which our soldiers could compete.



"Unlike boxing, wrestling is safe and it embodies the qualities – such as strength, speed, intelligence, endurance, motivation and guts– that we look for in infantry soldiers. There is no reason why Fort Benning can't be as successful in wrestling in All-Army competitions as Fort Bragg and Fort Hood have been in boxing," he said.

"The dual meet between the 29th Inf. Regt. and the 197th Inf. Bde. was Col. Watson's idea, and we accepted the challenge," he continued.

"We've always had hard competitions with the 197th. We respect each other, but we both like to win. No one will enter Kelley Hill gym thinking they're going to lose," he said.

Col. Harvey D. Watson of the 197th Inf. Bde. has challenged Col. Fuller to a one-on-one match.

Everyone is invited.

Tip-off

Gregory Caldwell (#22), A Co., 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry, gets the tip against Kenneth Walker, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, 58th Infantry, during the first game of the United States Army Infantry Center's second season basketball championships. HHC downed A Co., 65-50. The finals of the championship will be held tonight at Briant Wells field house at 6 p.m.

Air Force Detachment provides support for Benning units

197th Infantry Brigade

There were a few times in recent wars when Army commanders were actually glad to see the Air Force. Friendly rivalry was replaced with cooperation, and for a good reason. They were under enemy fire and needed "a little something special" to convince an otherwise unfriendly enemy that perhaps he ought to surrender or maybe even run for his life. Napalm, 500 pound bombs, and thousands of high explosive 20mm rounds are very "convincing" when trying to make a point. In military vernacular it's called CAS (Close Air Support).

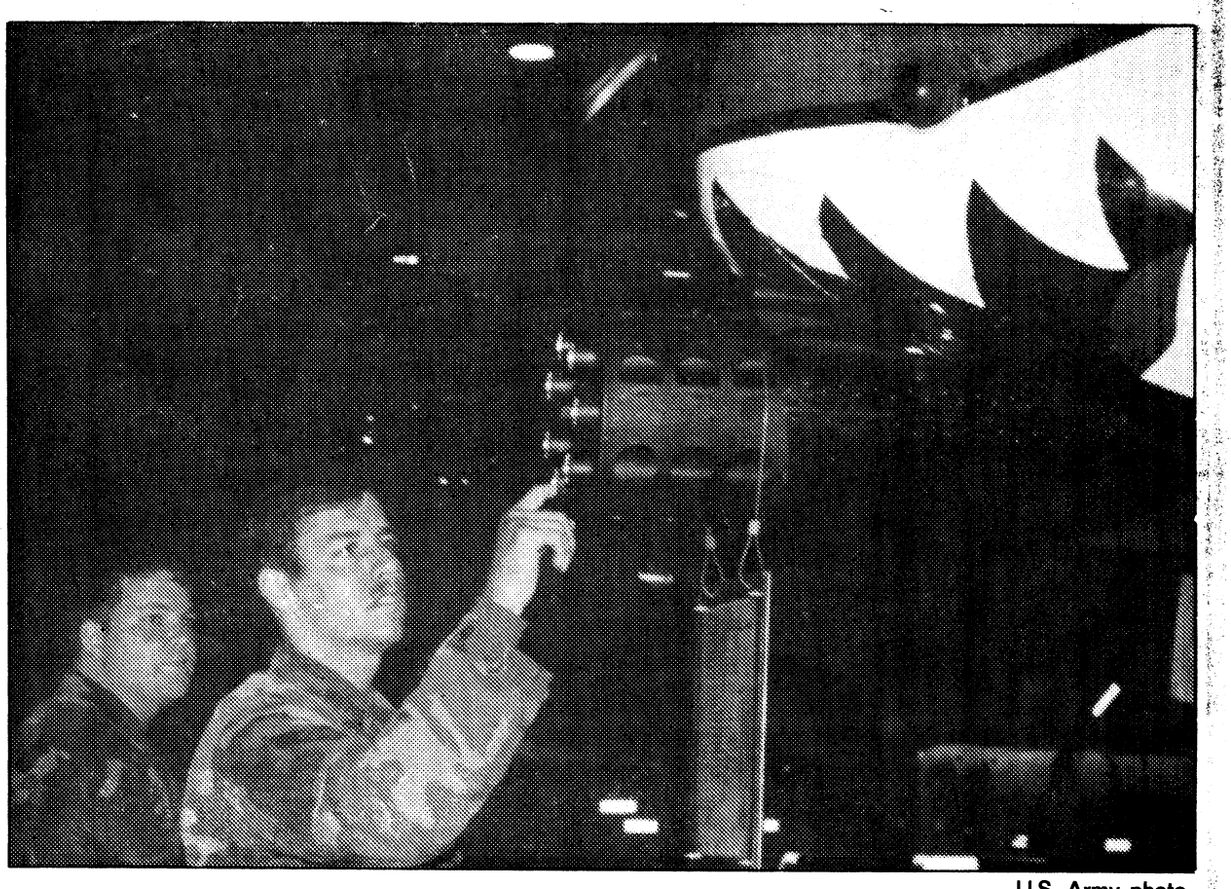
Detachment 4 of the 507th Tactical Air Control Wing at Fort Benning is responsible for providing CAS on the battlefield for the 197th Infantry Brigade and the 75th Ranger Regiment. So just recently, in order to exercise CAS missions, Det. 4 traveled to England Air Force Base, La.

The execution of a CAS mission is not as easy as you would imagine. In fact, it's a major challenge for CAS aircraft and Army commanders. Even the most advanced tactical fighter aircraft have difficulty distinguishing good guys from bad guys when passing over the ground force skirmish, without some assistance. This assistance to the pilots to determine which battle is most in need of their services is provided by Forward Air Controllers, such as the FACs assigned with Det 4.

"Controlling close air support missions is just a matter of common sense and good communication," says Capt. Heriberto Ruiz-Ramos, Det. 4 fighter liaison officer. "And being able to think ahead and on your feet is vital, because very few combat missions go as planned. That other guy trying to kill you almost always manages to screw up your plans."

There are two types of FACs: Ground FACs and Air FACs. The AFACs are usually young fighter-qualified Air Force pilots who fly observation aircraft. Their presence in the skies is limited, unless friendly aircraft have control of the skys and the anti-aircraft threat is minimal. And even when AFACs are available, GFACs are needed to brief them on targets, threats, etc. Primarily, the GFAC is the means of getting the right ordnance on the right target.

"Anyone can talk on the radio, but you have to know exactly what you want to say, say it as clearly and concisely as possible, and say it at the right time, says Capt. Bob Daniels Det. 4 standard evaluation officer. And you must sound confident and competent! Fighter pilots are a demanding and untrusting lot, so if you do not sound confident they will be hesitant to follow your instructions. And that is dangerous for him, you, and the troops on the ground you are tasked to support."



Det. 4, which has its home base at Shaw AFB, S.C. conducts most of its training at Fort Benning. However, there are not enough close air support missions flown on Fort Benning to provide annual training for certified FACs and give upgrade training to FACs.

On the other hand, England AFB has approximately one-hundred A-10s (fighter aircraft) that use several tactical ranges in the immediate vicinity. And because they have so many aircraft, they can never get enough FAC support for all their training missions. So several inexperienced FACs from Fort Benning were able to benefit from controlling tactical aircraft on unfamiliar ranges.

Fort Benning's FACs consists of fighter pilots, fighter weapons systems officers, tactical air command and control specialists, and aviator mechanics. The officers usually only serve in the capacity of FAC once during their career and a majority of fighter pilots never receive a tour as a FAC. That underscores the reliance the Air Force has on their enlisted FACs.

These young enlistees don't just jump into controlling fighters with live bombs straight out of basic training. Before they can be certified as qualified GFACs, they must be a non commissioned officer, receive a recommendation by the detachment commander, pass a Class III flight physical, take formal academics on a variety of subjects, control numerous air sorties, and be formally evaluated and certified. Once certified, they are re-evaluated annually and must fulfill all annual training requirements.

The next time you're deployed to the field and see friendly fighters overhead, look for those guys on the ground in black berets with an attached upside down insignia. They're present to support you when you need it the most.

Selective early retirement board results recently released

Army News Service

Some 243 officers - 142 colonels and 101 lieutenant colonels - must retire no later than Aug. 1, following the Secretary of the Army's approval on Jan. 31 of the latest Selective Early Retirement Board recommendations.

"Action of this kind is agonizing because it involves selecting officers who have served the nation faithfully and well. Be assured the senior Army leadership considered all possible alternatives before approving the results," said Lt. Gen. Allen K. Ono, the Army's deputy chief of staff for personnel.

This management action is necessary to comply with congressionally mandated fiscal year 1989 Army officer strength cuts. The Army was originally directed to cut approximately 2,200 officers per year during fiscal years '89 and '90. However, a compromise was reached with Congress which reduced the cut to approximately 500 officers per year over the next two years.

Congress further directed that the Army take a balanced approach to achieve these reductions, i.e., the cut could not come solely from junior officer accessions.

Notification to early retirees was completed Wednesday through the first general officer in their chain of command.

A review of critical skill requirements was made during the selective retirement approval process. Approval of subsequent requests for recall of individual officers selected for early retirement is not anticipated.

The selection boards convened Jan. 10 under authority of Section 638, Title 10, U.S. Code. Although the law dictates that those selected must be retired on the first day of the seventh month - August - after the month in which the Secretary of the Army approved the results of the boards, the officer may voluntarily request an earlier retirement date.

To ensure the privacy of individual officers, a by-name selection list will not be released. A special "hot-line" became operational Feb. 7 at the U.S. Total Army Personnel Command.

Those officers having questions should call between 7 a.m. and 6 p.m., Monday through Friday. The telephone numbers are autovon 221-0928 or commercial (202) 325-0928.

Engineers

construction of the C-141 training mock-up and the demolition of several old Military Police dog kennels to make way for the parking lot. Though Company B was deployed to Honduras, its rear detachment constructed the C-130 training mock-up from October 1988 to January 1989. Company C provided the bulk of the manpower, constructing the physical training center, the PLF pit and security gates. Construction began in August 1988 and was completed in January. The completed project was signed over to the 3rd Ranger Battalion on Feb. 1.

The 43rd Engrs. have placed much emphasis on training and supporting the Infantry Center. Their construction efforts have provided economical and improved training facilities throughout Fort Benning. A forward landing strip, located adjacent to the military operations in urbanized terrain training site (also constructed by the 43rd), was completed last year. Currently the 43rd is constructing a 3,000 x 800-meter tactical drop zone in the McKenna training area adjacent to the MOUT and FLS sites. The completed drop zone will provide added training value because it will conform to the existing hilly terrain. Standard drop zones now in use on Fort Benning are flat.

The 43rd Engs. have played a major role in the implementation of plans which support the Infantry Center and provide challenges for engineer soldiers as they hone their skills toward combat readiness. To this end, the 43rd has been successful. The Battalion has undertaken those construction missions which are directly related to their mission essential task list while benefiting the Fort Benning military community as a whole.

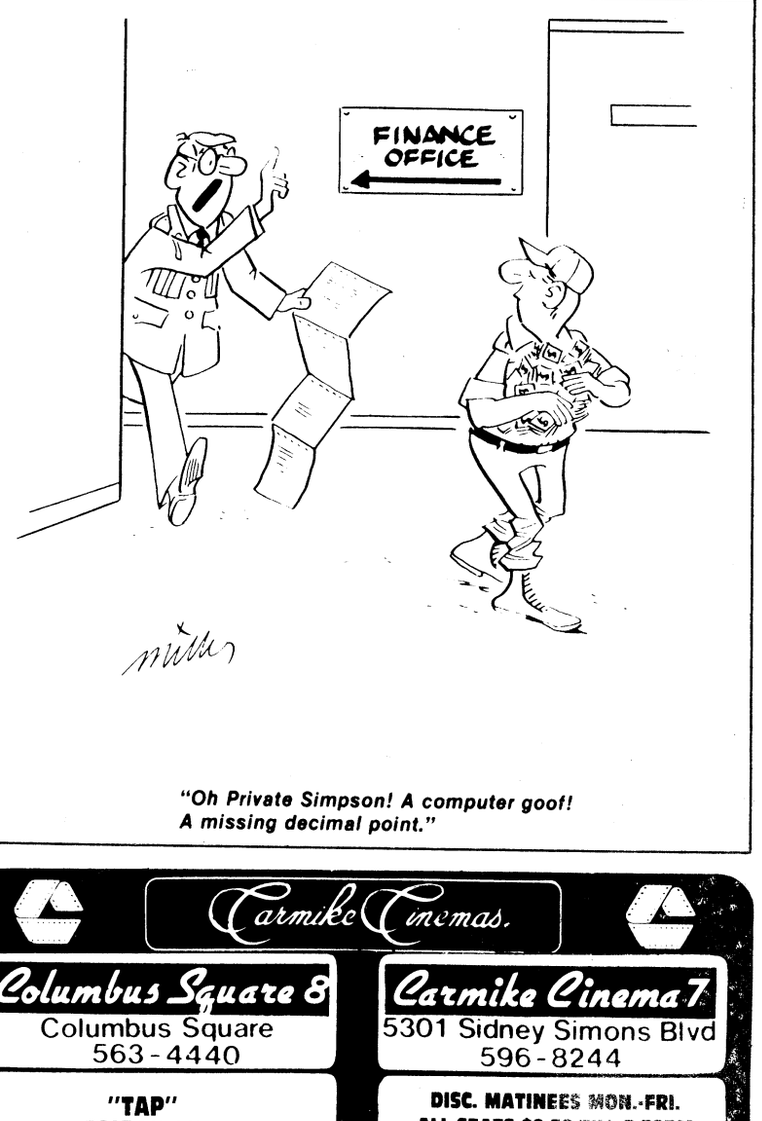
Columbus Symphony presents 'Tuesday at the Springer' concert

Columbus Symphony Orchestra

The Columbus Symphony Chamber Orchestra, conducted by music director George Del Gobbo, will present the third and final concert in the symphony's "Tuesday at the Springer" series on Tuesday at 8 p.m. at the Springer Opera House.

Guest pianist for the concert will be Santiago Rodriguez, who will perform Mozart's Concerto No. 17 in G Major, K.453. The orchestra will be heard in Milhaud's "Creation of the World" and "Sinfonietta" by Poulence.



Rodriguez was propelled into the international spotlight upon winning the silver medal at the 1981 Van Cliburn International Piano Competition, where he was awarded special prize for best performance of Leonard Bernstein's composition "Touches." A top prize winner in many important competitions, such as the Naumburg and Leventritt, he was also named recipient of an Avery Fisher Career Grant. In December, 1986, he was named the recipient of the first "Shura Cherkassky Recital Award," established and given by New York's prestigious 92nd Street YM-YWHA.

A native of Cuba, Santiago Rodriguez made his debut at age nine with the New Orleans Philharmonic, with which he has made several return appearances. His extensive concertizing has included performances with such orchestras as the Baltimore, Houston, St. Louis, and National Symphonies.

The pianist's busy schedule has included a recent tour of Japan, orchestral engagements throughout the U.S., Canada, and Mexico, plus television appearances on CBS and the Cable News Network. His discography includes critically acclaimed recordings of Brahms' Paganini Variations, Debussy's Preludes, Book II, Ginastera's Sonatas I and II, and a collection of Spanish piano works, all on the Elan lable.

Tickets are on sale now in the symphony office, 1445 Second Ave., at $10 for adults and $3 for students. For information, call 323-5059.

POST BRIEFS

Black Employment committee plans its first meeting

Today - The Black Employment Program Committee will have its first meeting today, 10 a.m.-noon in Building 2507. All primary and alternate representatives are requested to attend since officers will be elected.

Energy cost savings pleases CG

It was with considerable pleasure and pride that I received notification from the Training and Doctrine Command commander, General Thurman, that Fort Benning had beaten the fiscal year '88 energy goal. I sincerely appreciate the energy conservation efforts and contributions of our soldiers, family members and civilian employees.

Of nine TRADOC installations whose energy consumption was better than that goal, Fort Benning ranked fourth. Based on this performance, we have received an energy award check of $207,000 from General (Maxwell R.) Thurman. The award is equal to 50 cents returned for each dollar of energy cost avoidance below goal. The energy cost savings will be applied toward continued improvement in our ability to save energy. In addition, I intend to financially reward specific unit initiatives that result in significant energy savings.

In our current constraint resource environment, we all must continually strive to find more efficient ways to accomplish our mission. You have proved that energy conservation can be attained while maintaining a comfortable and productive environment in our facilities.

I encourage your continued support in conserving Army energy.

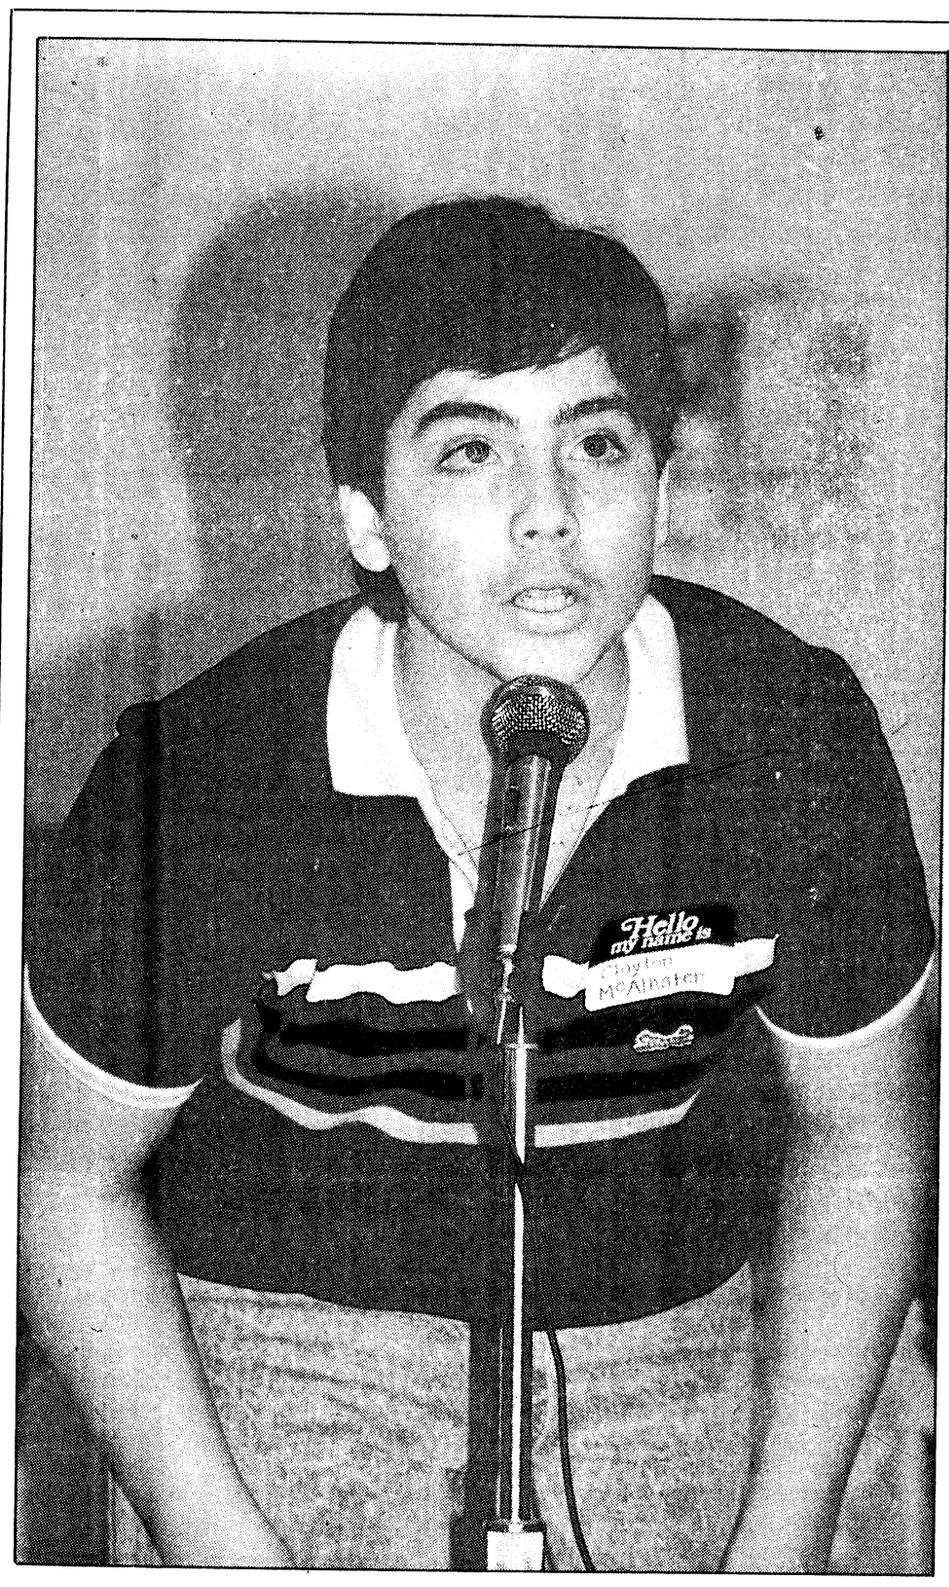
Retiree recall information

Where to call - Retirees who have questions about the Army's Retiree Recall Program, "Certain Sage," may call Bob Hymes, mobilization planner in the post Adjutant General's Office, 545-2817.

DPCA conducts yard selection

Yard of the Quarter - Fort Benning's DPCA, Community Life Office will conduct its quarterly selection for Yard of the Quarter March 20, 9 a.m. Selection criteria will be accomplished using the checklist in USAIC Regulation 210-12, page 15. Community residents are encouraged to contact their respective Community Life Center noncommissioned officer in charge.



Post schedules spring cleanup

Residents encouraged to participate - By working together March 17-24, we can make Fort Benning safer and more attractive. Many commanders are doing their parts by allowing their on-post soldiers a half day off to join their families in this undertaking. Some units, along with DEH, will provide vehicle support to assist with the disposal of large debris. If you have questions, call your area coordinator, mayor or Community Life noncommissioned officer in charge.

Hunting safety course slated

Volunteer instructors needed - Volunteers are needed to become Georgia Hunter Safety Instructors. As an instructor, you will have the opportunity to develop good hunting habits and safety in young hunters. If you are interested in becoming an instructor, call the Infantry Branch Safety Office, 545-3267, and leave your name and telephone number. The course is nine hours and will be held March 20, 21 and 22, 7-10 p.m. in Building 4, Classroom 8.

Clayton McAllister, Faith School, ponders a word during the spelling bee. McAllister took first place at the bee.

Benning youth wins local bee

By Shawn Bryson
Bayonet staff writer

Clayton McAllister won the Fort Benning level of the annual G.A.E./Atlanta Daily World Spelling Bee Feb. 14 at Faith Middle School.

McAllister, an 8th-grader at Faith Middle School, will go next to Tabor Junior High School at Warner Robins, Ga. to compete in the District 3 competition March 25.

The runner-up at the Fort Benning spelling bee was Solange Guillaume. She is a 5th-grader at Dexter School and will serve as Fort Benning's alternate at the District 3 contest.

Other participants in the spelling bee were Melanie Czapla, Loyd School, Ashanti Jackson, White School, Christiane Gouveia, Wilbur School and Dereen Green from Wilson School.

The participants are in grades four through eight and won their school spelling bees held recently.

The Fort Benning Educators Association has conducted this spelling bee for about 15 years.

Variable housing rate changes based on 1988 survey

By Mary A. Peterson
American Forces Information Service

Along with the 4.1 percent raise in base pay and subsistence allowance and as much as an eight percent raise in quarters allowance, end-of-January paychecks also included new variable housing allowance rates for nearly 900,000 service members.

The new rates provide for increases or decreases in the allowances based on median housing costs of service members or their family members living in the United States.

Median housing costs used to determine 1989 rates were obtained from a survey of about 400,000 service members conducted in early 1988. The rates were also affected by a congressional action that limits the amount of money that can be spent on the variable housing allowance program in fiscal 1989 to $1.12 million.

The program, started in 1980, is intended to supplement quarters allowance to help standardize a service member's housing purchasing power regardless of where he is assigned. The compensation helps equalize out-of-pocket housing costs for service members of the same pay grade and dependency status no matter where in the United States they are assigned, said Army Col. Richard W. Lind, director of DoD's Per Diem, Travel and Transportation Allowance Committee.

Many service members living in coastal states where housing costs have skyrocketed received increases of up to 23.5 percent. Many of those living in the Gulf Coast area, southern oil-producing states and Alaska, where housing costs have declined, received small increases or even lost some compared to what they received in 1988.

The biennial variable housing allowance survey determined that fewer than 9,000 service members received more quarters allowance and variable housing allowance than was needed to meet average housing costs, Lind said. Fewer than one percent of service members in the United States suffered a reduction in their monthly net pay, he said.

Those service members may be getting less take-home pay but should not be paying any more money for housing costs from their regular pay than service members anywhere else in the United States, said Dave Pomeroy, the allowance program director.

"A married E-5 at Fort Hood, Texas, gets $6.38; a married E-5 in Washington, D.C., gets $264.50 because his out-of-pocket expenses should be no more than at Fort Hood," said Lind.

"One-fifth of housing expenses are expected to be paid out-of-pocket by the military population nationwide," Pomeroy said. "We surveyed every place military personnel are assigned — sparsely populated areas, densely populated areas. The variable housing allowance plus the basic allowance for quarters should provide 80 percent of the housing costs for each grade in each area."

Whether the service member rents or owns has no bearing on how the allowance is determined. "Most rent their housing. We convert the homeowners' costs to what the renter would pay for the same home," Pomeroy said.

67th Maint dining facility tops winner's list

Keith F. Johnson

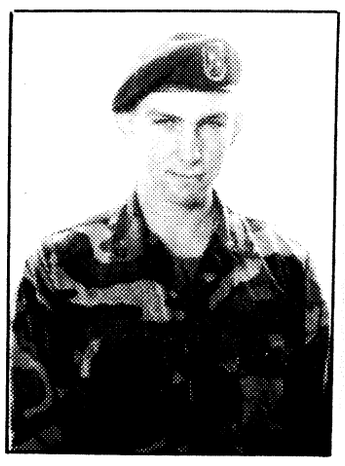
Spec. Curtis B. Holmes, Chef of the Quarter, serves diners at the USARSA dining facility.

By Shawn Bryson
Bayonet staff writer

Fort Benning recently recognized winners of the Installation Food Service Quarterly Awards for the fourth quarter of 1988.

The 67th Maintenance Battalion, 36th Engineer Group, topped the list of winners, taking first place in the best military operated dining facility competition, large unit category.

The 67th also won the competition for the award in the first and third quarters of 1988. Led by food service officer Capt. Carla Gibson and food service sergeant, SFC Robert Burton, the soldiers of the 67th dining facility also represented Fort Benning at this year's Philip A. Connelly Awards Program.



The IFS also presented the Fort Benning Chef of the Quarter award to Spec. Curtis B. Holmes, food service specialist for the U.S. Army School of the Americas dining facility. Holmes, a native of Jacksonville, Fla., was chosen for his excellence in food preparation, cooking and knowledge of military and food services areas. "I think this award is great because it brings recognition to all food service personnel," Holmes said. Holmes has also attended the Primary Leadership Development Course since his assignment to USARSA.

Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 2nd Battalion, 18th Infantry, 197th Infantry Brigade won the small unit competition for military operated dining facilities. Eight other dining facilities competed for this award.

Winners of the best government-owned, contract-operated dining facilities included Rice Services, Ltd., building 2760, (large category) and Rice Services, Ltd., building 2067, (small category). Joseph Gebhardt, Rice Services Ltd., building 5021, won the contractor Food Service Chef of the Quarter competition.

OPINION

VARIOUS VOICES: How do you ensure you eat a well balanced diet?

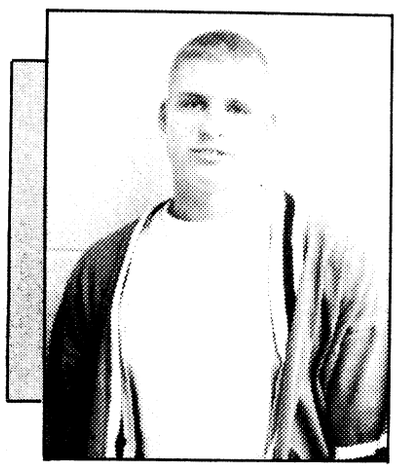
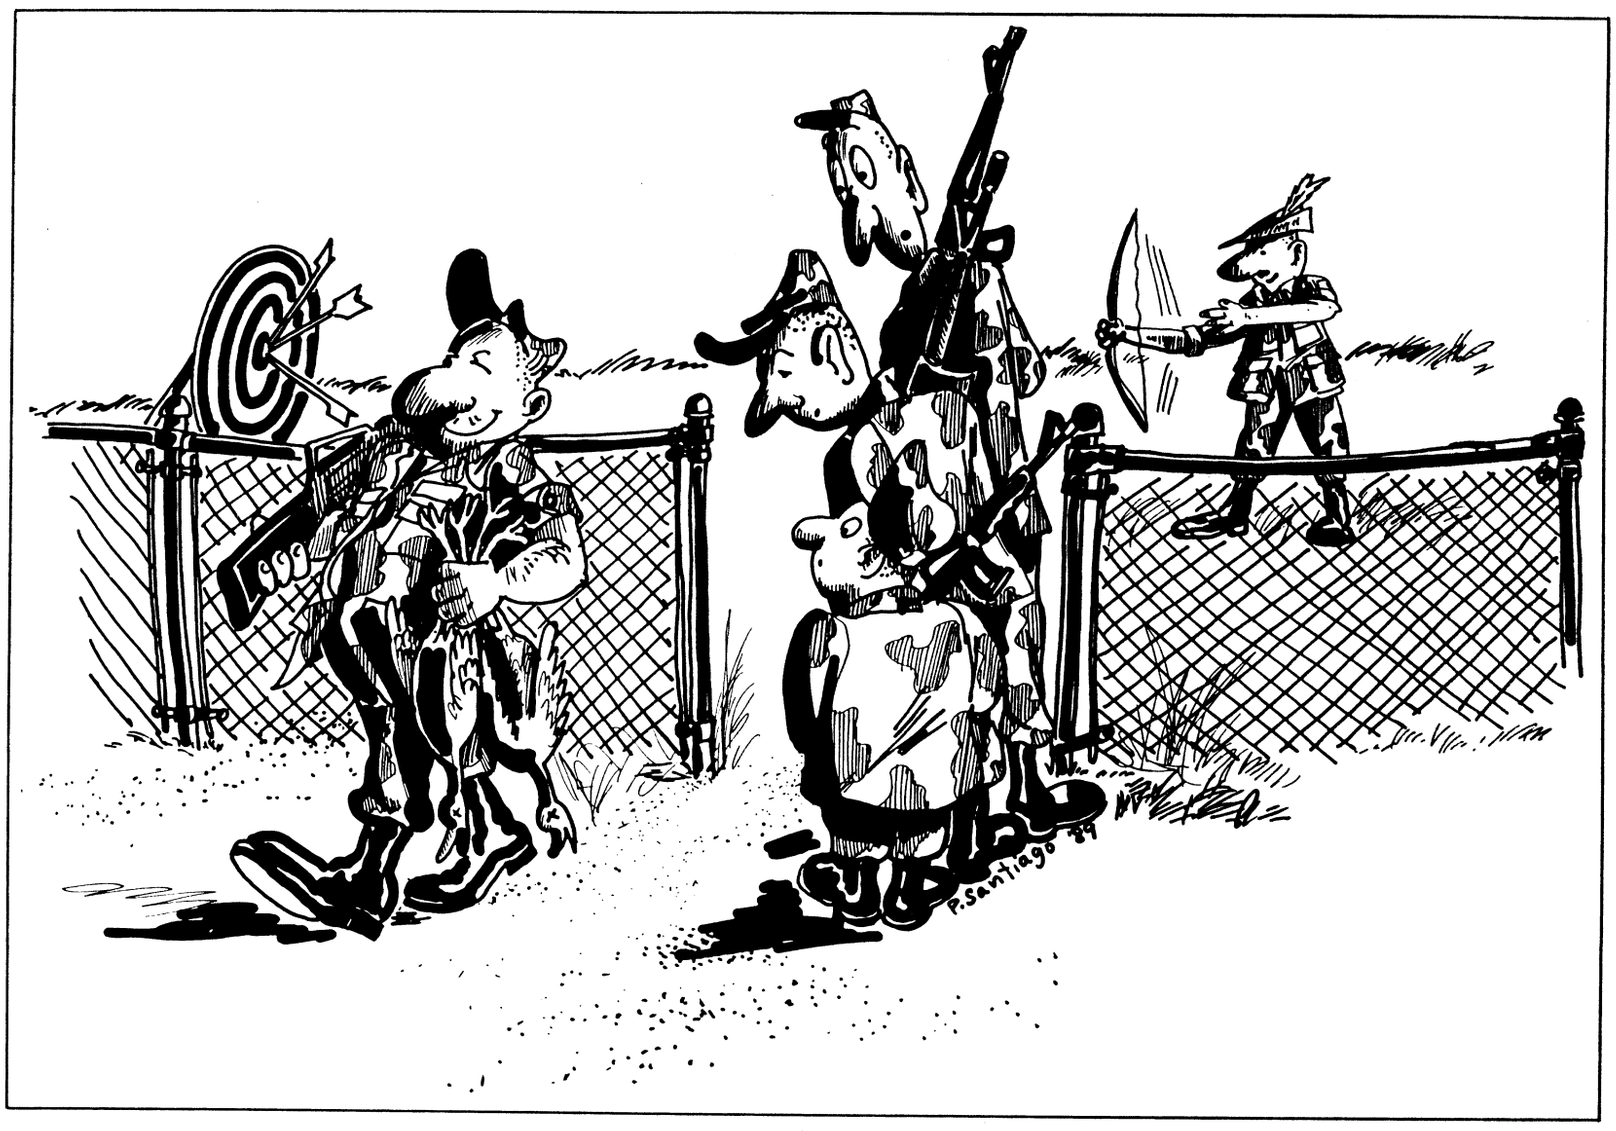
PFC Matt Williams, Co. C, 3rd Bn., 75th Rgr. Regt. - "I try to stay away from fatty foods. I try to eat a lot of salads and basically balance my meals."



Spec. Lee Wells-Weatherspoon, HQ Co., 1st Bn., 11th Inf. - "I try to eat something out of all the four food groups everyday. I also try to stay away from greasy foods."

Pvt. Frederick Madison, Co. A, 1st Bn., 507th PIR - "I look at the cards in the cafeteria and find out how many calories I'm eating. I eat something out of each of the four food groups."



Mary Jones, Anthony's Pizza - "I eat fresh fruit, vegetables and yogurt and just basically healthy foods."

Pvt. 2 Jeff Phillips, HQ Co. 1st Bn., 11th Inf. - "I try to watch my caloric intake and make sure I'm burning as much as I take in."

Spec. Christine Wittkop - Co. A, 2nd Bn., 78th Inf. - "I try to eat something out each of the four basic food groups and stay within my caloric intake range."

Firing range is no piece of cake

By Clyde Snively
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Once a year, we chairborne weenies get a chance to go out in the field - not the real field mind you, just a range - to do our stuff with the infantryman's basic tool, the M-16 rifle.

While I like to go out, anything to get away from the office, I usually approach these things with fear and trepidation.

Fear, because I remember my drill sergeant breathing down my neck as I attempted to zero my rifle, yelling in my ear each time I jerked the trigger, breathed at the wrong time or failed to maintain the proper position.

Y'all remember the proper positions.

When it was the prone position, that meant we contorted ourselves into the letter L, mashed our ankles into the ground for stabilization and propped ourselves up on our knobby elbows, digging them into the rough sand. If it was summer, as it was for me, we also had to hope the sweat balls forming on our brows wouldn't fall into our eyes before we had a chance to squeeze off a shot.

Then there was the squatting position. The only thing I'll say about it, is I wouldn't take it on stage in Columbus, I might get thrown into jail for violating their lewdness ordnance.

The position was as painful as it was obscene. About the only thing I could hit when squatting, was the ground.

Then there was the good old standing position, supported and unsupported. "Get those elbows up, lean into your weapon, trainee," the drill sergeant would shout.

Heck, it was hard enough to keep my bullet launcher pointed in the right direction while standing, and now they want my arms up in the air like a chicken readying for take off!

Who designed those positions anyway?

The only position I was apt to hit anything from, was the foxhole, supported.

I think I could probably have done very well from the foxhole supported, but for one minor detail.

I kept worrying about all the critters that might be down there waiting to take a nip out of my ankles.

"What a paranoid," you might think; but hey, what am I to think when the first thing the drill sergeant does after removing the foxhole cover is to jab a stick down in the hole explaining, "just checking for snakes."

In case you've forgotten, they've got snakes here; and as far as I can tell, they're all large and very poisonous - rats too. That's nearly as bad.

So there I am, left wrist braced against the sandbag, right cheekbone pressed against the rifle's stock, trigger finger resting lightly on the trigger above the first joint, ready to squeeze off that shot when, ever so softly..."what was that scurrying noise?" I ask myself, conjuring up images of evil spirits preparing to attack my lower extremities.

Jerk, and there goes another shot over the left field bleachers.

But this year, I was bound and determined to do well.

First, I took the lieutenant up on his offer to use the Multi-purpose Arcade Simulator.

Now that's what I call training.

You're indoors, the simulator doesn't hurt you with its recoil, it's not noisy and you don't have to clean it afterward.

I did very well on it and knew the range would be a snap.

It wasn't.

First, there was the rain delay. The hard-core sergeants said it wasn't the rain holding things up, but the lightning. I bought that excuse.

That afternoon, after the rain stopped, I hustled down to the range. And there was Large Sarge. Hadn't seen him since he left to have a baby. Actually, his wife had a baby. But there he was, passing out the weapons.

When it came my turn, he had a gleam in his eye that I couldn't quite figure.

Weapon in hand, I picked up my three magazines of three rounds each for zeroing.

Now hitting a target at 25 meters is something any fool can do. But I guess I'm not a fool because I just couldn't seem to get a tight shot group.

I could get two bullets to hit close together, but that third one always eluded me.

After firing off about 600 magazines, three rounds each, the NCO finally decided a shot group of two would do - "Don't want the ASP to run out of 5.56 ammo now do we Snively," he said, sending me off to stand in the potential qualifiers' line.

Taking my position in a previously used foxhole, which I figured was free of vermin, I prepared to do my best in knocking down all the targets and qualifying expert so the major would give me a three-day pass.

My first shot ran straight and true to the 50-meter target, knocking it down. On my second shot, the gun, er weapon jammed.

Not me, the lane NCO, the safety NCO, none of us could get that gun to work.

I was on the verge of tears when the sarge said, "Well, Snively, I guess you'll have to come back tomorrow and start all over with zeroing so you can qualify."

I think I'll see our lieutenant about qualifying on the Multi-purpose Arcade Simulator.

Basic doesn't change, soldiers do

By Ray Chattman
Gray Ghost, Fort Belvoir, Va.

During a recent visit to an Army post not my own, I spoke with a couple of squeaky-fresh soldiers. You know the type: real young, buzz-saw haircuts, uniforms so new they still smell like the inside of a duffel bag.

It's been some 14 years since I went through basic, and I was anxious to get their perspectives on their recently-completed rigors of initial military training.

I figured they'd moan and groan about the treatment of trainees by the drill sergeants. I know I did for months after my graduation from basic.

I thought they'd relive every agonizing push-up and road march. I know I swore I'd never forget these things.

I felt they'd tell me about the military's strict, regimented approach to life. After two weeks in basic, I thought I knew what life on death row must be like.

But they didn't talk about any of that stuff. Rather than becoming swamped in details about the hard side of basic training, they all told me what they'd learned.

They learned how to keep physically fit. The PT and the running was difficult for them, but the repetition had made it easy to pass their Army physical fitness test...and to feel good each time they pulled on their sweatsocks.

They learned about discipline. Each of them mentioned how important it had been to them personally - and as a unit - to keep focused on the mission, the goal. Whether it was to get through a 20-mile road march or get through basic itself, they acquired the mental toughness they needed to do what was required of them, under a variety of circumstances.

They learned about military courtesy and respect. At first, when they kept addressing me as "sergeant first class," I found it kind of annoying. But it occurred to me that they didn't know me from Adam...I was merely a representative of the military establishment. They were addressing my uniform and the rank on my collar with a studied respect bordering on awe. And from what I saw, they treated everyone that way.

But most of all, they learned about doing what you're expected to do, when you're expected to do it. They had a formation to go to after lunch; they intended to be there 10 minutes early. And that said, they left - cutting the conversation right there. Sorry, we've got to go.

As I thought about it, I realized that basic training hasn't changed that much, and that the ideals taught there today are probably the same we all learned way back when.

So here's what I want to know: what happened to us that we've forgotten so much? And how can we get it back?

Former Benning soldier excels in ROTC

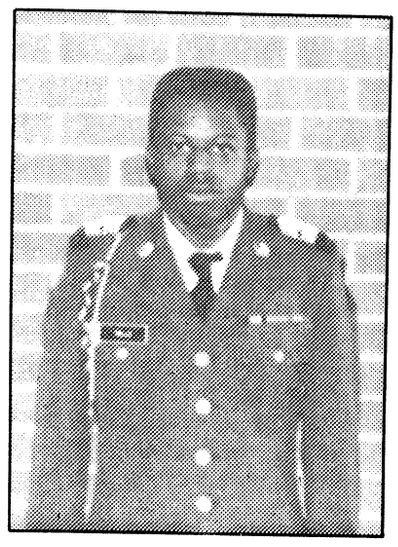
Charles J. Winn
Tuskegee University ROTC Battalion

Bernard Wills, who served for 2-1/2 years as a 52C with the Delta Support Company was recently selected as the sergeant major of Tuskegee University's Army ROTC Battalion.

The former specialist is in his second year at Tuskegee majoring in mechanical engineering. He entered the university in September 1987 after winning a four-year Army ROTC scholarship while serving at Fort Benning.

Upon completion of his mechanical engineering degree, Wills will be commissioned as a second lieutenant.

"Most young soldiers are unaware of this opportunity to earn a college degree at government expense while pursuing an Army officer's commission through ROTC," he said. "They seem to thing that ROTC is like being at West Point or in OCS (Officer Candidate School). What they don't realize is that an ROTC scholarship winner is separated from active duty to attend college as a civilian in a Reserve status."



The 23-year-old native of Forman, Ark., has earned top academic honors thus far and plans to go for a masters degree and possibly a Phd. Commenting on his career plans after college, Wills said, "I either want to be a project manager or a general, depending on whether I stay in."

Considering the track record of many ROTC graduates who have left the active Army for highly successful careers in private industry while staying active in the Army Reserve, he could very well become both.

Tuskegee University's Army ROTC Department is currently seeking active duty soldiers to apply for three-year Army ROTC scholarships. Maj. Ken Price, the enrollment officer for the battalion stressed that soldiers interested should apply now to meet the April 15 suspense. To be eligible for the scholarship soldiers must:

- Be a U.S. citizen no older than 25 as of June 1, 1992. (Age credit is given based on years of active duty.)
- Have completed 20-30 semesters/30-50 quarter hours of college work with a grade point average of 2.5 or better.
- Be able to meet medical qualifications for enrollment.

Soldiers who meet these criteria and are interested in pursuing a degree and a commission at Tuskegee University, rivaled only by West Point for the number of black general officer alumni, should contact Maj. Kenneth W. Price collect at (205) 727-8789. Callers should inform the operator to identify them by military rank and as an interested scholarship applicant.

Cadet Bernard Wills makes ROTC sergeant major.

Recovering alcoholic celebrates 12th sober year

After 33 years of drinking he spends his time helping others recover.

By Agatha H. James
Bayonet staff writer

Monday, George Neely celebrated 12 years of sobriety. For a recovering alcoholic, that's quite an accomplishment.

After 33 years of drinking, the retired Air Force technical sergeant now spends his time trying to help other alcoholics. His message is quite simple: "I am an overcomer; and, if I can do it, others can do it as well."

Saga of a drunkard

Neely , who is an electronics mechanic at Shop 5, Directorate of Logistics, said his problem began after he joined the Navy at age 16. "It was two months before my 17th birthday, and World War II was going on. I was okay at first, but then I began to feel the pressures of war. Plus, I was trying to fit in with the other sailors," he said. "They would drink, so I did, too. This was my way of proving that I was a man.

"I lost control when I took the first drink," he continued. "With me, every time I drank, I drank to get drunk. I wasn't satisfied until I got drunk.

Neely was in the Navy from 1943 to 1949. "As long as I was at sea, I was okay. But, once I hit port, I would get drunk, then I would get busted."

In 1950, he joined the Air Force. "As soon as I got in the Air Force, I started doing the same thing that I was doing in the Navy - getting drunk on weekends," he said. "At that time, I was not an everyday drinker; but, I was already in the critical stages of alcoholism.

"You can be an alcoholic and get drunk only once a year," he said. "It's not how often you drink that makes you an alcoholic. It's when you lose control."

Neely's Air Force career progressed rapidly. "But, I was drinking the whole time," he said. His high test scores enabled him to go to an electronics training course. Later, he went to train with a fighter squadron in Michigan.

"I would work long and hard hours; but, on weekends, I got drunk," he said. "On Mondays, I would be sick, sick, sick." He repeats the words and gestures to show just how sick. "I would go to work sick, and there would be a lot of other sick people, too. So, I really didn't seem odd. I would vomit a little, drink some water, take some oxygen and keep on working. Even though I was sick, I would come to work.

"By May, 1954, my alcoholism is a progressing disease," he continued. "It gets worse and worse. My squadron goes overseas, and they don't take me. I found out later that it was because of my alcoholism, and my squadron commander didn't even tell me. He knew or suspected that I had a problem, but he never approached me. In fact, he kept telling me I was a good guy and that I was doing a good job."

Neely admonishes commanders to get help for their soldiers who have alcohol problems. He says commanders are not helping their soldiers by ignoring the problem.

Later, he accepted a position with the 85th Fighter Squadron at Scott Air Force Base, Ill. Neely said he never had a problem getting a job. I was a hard worker, and my record looked good.

"They had all kinds of electronic problems at Scott Air Force Base," he said. "I jumped right in and corrected them. That made me a number one soldier. Without me, they couldn't fly. So, they promoted me to technical sergeant even though I didn't have the required time in grade.

"My commander promoted me and never mentioned my alcohol problem. Sometimes, I would get into trouble downtown, but my commander, my NCOIC or my buddies would get me out. My superiors never reprimanded me for my behavior. If anything, they protected me."

His problem grew progressively worse, and he began to experience blackouts. "I remember one incident in particular," he said. "I went to school at a Naval base in California for a radioactive instruments instructors course. I don't even remember coming back. It was around Christmas. I remember getting on the train with my bag, and the next thing I knew I was in St. Louis. I don't remember changing trains in Kansas City or anything.

Blackouts , or memory lapses, are dangerous, he said, because the alcoholic is able to function but doesn't remember the things he has done. "There are many alcoholics in jail who don't remember committing the crime," he said. "Blackouts are dangerous especially in marriages because the alcoholic may abuse his spouse and not even remember doing it."

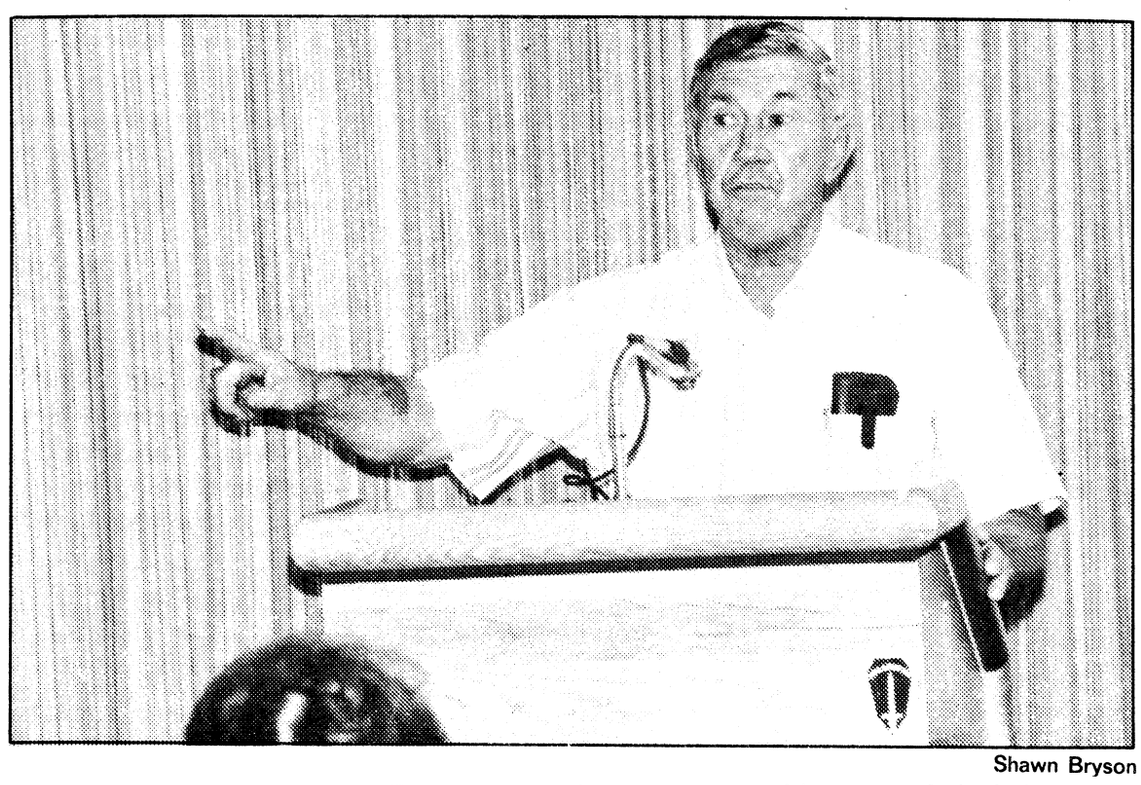
His military career included a stint in Japan where he was the noncommissioned officer in charge of air electronics for all the Far East. "The job was too big for me," he said. "I was making decisions that I really didn't need to be making. The stress and the pressure just made my alcoholism worse. Again, I was protected. What's more, my commanding officer was an alcoholic. He would go to the Officers' Club every day and get drunk. I had two automobile accidents while I was over there. But, it was no problem. I always got out of it."

In April 1965, he retired from the Air Force after 22 years of service. "All during my military career, no one ever said to me, 'George, maybe you drink too much or maybe you should stop,'" he said.

Neely's civilian life was not much different. He had no trouble finding civilian employment. If things started to go wrong on the job, he would quit before he would get fired. And, he said none of his supervisors ever mentioned his alcohol problem.

"My first job after my military career was in Newport News, Va.," he said. "I had the job before I got out of the Air Force. It was with a company calibrating test equipment for NASA. I didn't stay three weeks. I was getting drunk every day because I wasn't in the military any longer, and I didn't have the military code of justice hanging over my head.

"After that, I moved to California and got a job at Edwards Air Force Base. After two months there, I called it quits, and moved to East St. Louis, Ill. where I got a job with Emerson Electronics. I started out as a technician. Then, I was promoted to work leader and later to shop foreman. After being there a year, I resigned."



His next job was with General Testing Laboratory in Washington, D. C. "I was a test engineer. I improved what they had, and they loved me," he said. "The vice-president promoted me to chief engineer, then later to general manager. By, this time, I would drink a beer at noon; and I couldn't quit. So my afternoons would be ruined. I resigned after two years."

Alcohol became such a problem in Neely's life that when he went to work at Gillette Research in Rockville, Md., he kept a pint of liquor in his desk drawer.

In 1975, he took a job at Warner Robins Air Force Base near Macon, Ga. "I was in the critical stages then. I would drink every day, all day," he said.

The road to recovery

To road to recovery for Neely began when he admitted himself to the Veterans Hospital in Dublin, Ga. in August 1976. "I was scared and shaking," he said. "I stayed there 30 days and earned my white chip, which is Alcoholics Anonymous' token that represents the first step that an alcoholic must take. It says you want to start trying to do something about your alcoholism."

Shawn Bryson

George Neely tells the story at Fort Benning of 33 years wasted because of alcoholism.

Neely's recovery wasn't a quick fix. He began attending AA meetings, but eventually slacked off. In November 1976, he had his first beer after attending AA. "It was like someone had taken a baseball bat and hit me in back of the head," he said. "My drinking started all over again.

"I started checking myself in and out of the hospital on a daily basis. I went from beer right back to hard liquor."

Despite his drinking problems during this time, Neely got promoted from a WG-8 to a WG-10. "This shows how managers and supervisors will cover up things," he said. "My supervisor was my friend, and he never approached me about enrolling in a program on alcoholism. He was my friend, and he protected me."

Eventually, he was readmitted to the VA Hospital in Dublin. With the help of a chaplain there, he accepted Jesus Christ as his personal saviour. But, he still went back to drinking. "I was released on Feb. 2, 1977, but I was drunk before I got back to Macon," he said. "I was near death at this point. I was coughing up and passing blood. I was at the point where I couldn't run out of liquor or I would go into DTs, or delirium tremens. A person can die in this stage. You hallucinate. I would see giant snakes and squirrels that appeared to be very real."

His journey to eventual recovery began Feb 19, 1977, when he loaded a cooler with beer and whiskey, got into his pickup truck and started driving south on Interstate 75. "I had no idea where I was going," he said. "This was just another geographical change for me. I drove all day. When dark came, I was in Tallahassee, Fla. I knew I was in trouble, so I stopped at a Majik Market and called a cab. I told him to take me to a motel. He took me to the Quality Court Motel across from the University of Florida.

"The next morning, I had a few drinks. I shaved and ran a tub of water. I sat my liquor on the side of the bathtub. I got a glass of water to use as a chaser. I soaked in the tub a while, but

ASK THE JUDGE

By Dennis E. Brower
Staff Judge Advocate's Office

I recently went to Fort Benning on 30 days temporary duty and stayed on post at the visitor's quarters. I used the phone in my room for calls back home and charged them on my credit card. I just got my credit card bill and was shocked to see a bill for $832.17. The charges were more than 10 times the amount for similar charges from my regular, well known, national phone company. These charges are way out of line. Aren't phone companies regulated somehow? Can't I get this bill reduced?

Many people are having the same problem you have. Unfortunately, there is very little that can be done to lower the bill.

There are now more than 40 companies that provide long distance service. These are called "alternative-operator service" companies, and the federal government does not regulate their operations or the amount they charge for long distance services. So, each of these 40 companies can charge whatever they want.

The federal government does regulate the large national phone companies, but that does not help you with any of these small independent ones.

When you make a call from a phone other than your own, you must be very careful to find out with which company you are dealing so you can protect yourself.

Many of the large companies have toll-free numbers to make sure you are able to connect to their service. Otherwise when you make a call from a hotel, pay or visiting military quarters phone, ask the operator to name the company handling the call. If it is not the company you want, ask the operator to connect you with the proper one. If the operator won't, or can't, connect you, and you still complete the call, be prepared to pay a high bill.

Many times you can negotiate with an "alternative-operator service" company to lower the bill after you receive it. Sometimes they will help you as they are beginning to receive pressure from the government and and many customer groups to clean up their act before it is done for them.

You can have an additional problem in that you charged your calls to a credit card. Your credit card company has already paid the telephone company, so it will be very hard to negotiate with someone who already has your money. You may be able to work with your credit card company, but you must complain in writing within 30 days after the receipt of the bill to the credit card company about the excessive charges.

You should also make an appointment with the Legal Assistance Office for guidance on how to make the best argument for lowering the bill.

By using the following procedure, soldiers on the family housing waiting list can use this chart to estimate when they can expect quarters:

Locate your category of housing.

Note eligibility date located on the same line as your category.

Calculate the time difference between the eligibility date listed and your eligibility date. The difference is the approximate time you still have to wait for housing.

EXAMPLE: If the latest eligibility date of the person who last received housing in your category was May 15, 1988, and your date of eligibility is Sept. 15, 1988, you can expect housing in about four months. If you do not know your eligibility date, contact the Family Housing Office at building 399, 545-3107.

when I got out, something happened. The only way I know how to describe it is that it was a spiritual experience," he said.

Neely said he has no explanation for what he did next other than the Holy Spirit told him to do it. He drove to the Greyhound Bus terminal, purchased a ticket to Gulfport, Miss. When he arrived, he checked himself into an Alcohol Treatment Center. "I almost died on that bus," he said. "I wasn't admitted until around midnight, and I was shaking terribly because I had not had anything to drink. That was Feb. 20, 1977. I have not had anything to drink since that day."

"When I got out, I returned home; but, my wife wouldn't let me in the house, so I went to Warner Robins and got me a trailer," he said.

Now, a minister, Neely returns to Gulfport several times a year to speak; and he travels to Van Cleeve, Miss. to minister at the Home of Grace, which is a Christian home for alcoholics. Locally, he preaches at the Valley Rescue Mission in Columbus every weekday at 5 p.m. And, he serves as a chaplain for the Self-Discovery Chemical Dependency Treatment program at Randolph County Hospital in Roanoke, Ala.

His message for management

Neely said commanders and supervisors should intervene if they suspect an employee has a problem. "If they don't, they're permitting people to continue to go downhill; and they are costing the government hundreds of thousands of dollars because an alcoholic employee can't perform at 100 percent efficiency," he said. "Ultimately jobs, careers and homes will be destroyed."

Home life with an alcoholic

"My home life was terrible," he said. "My wife and I had son, who was born in 1962. Things would get so bad that she would leave me, then come back and leave again. This went on for a while. She lived a horrible life with me. But, she never said anything to me about my alcohol problem. If anything, she felt she was the problem."

Neely's relationship with his son is still impaired even to this day. "I tried to be a good father," he said. "But, I couldn't. The alcohol had control of me. I haven't seen my son in several years. In fact, when my wife died a year ago, my son didn't even contact me. He wants nothing to do with me. I didn't attend my wife's funeral because I didn't know about it.

Yvonne Linsenbigler, civilian program coordinator for the Alcohol and Drug Control Office, said alcoholism is a family illness. "Everyone in the family suffers, not just the alcoholic. Family members, including children, sometimes begin to feel they are to blame. They feel guilty, resentful and helpless."

According to Linsenbigler, the impact of alcohol abuse on the family is astounding. The separation/divorce rate is four to eight times more than the general population. There is 50 percent more violence. Child abuse is up 25 percent in alcoholics' homes, and child neglect is higher. Children of alcoholics are more prone to get psychosomatic illnesses or illnesses that originate in the mind as opposed to the body. Also, children of alcoholics are considered more at risk of becoming alcoholics themselves.

Help is available

Personal problems such as alcohol or drug abuse, marital or other problems can affect work performance and conduct of soldiers and civilians. For this reason, the post has established the Alcohol and Drug Abuse Prevention and Control Program and the Civilian Counseling Service. Commanders and supervisors should refer soldiers or employees who need help. However, voluntary or self-referral is encouraged. Counseling services are strictly confidential, and management will not be notified unless authorized by the employee.

Civilian employees can make an appointment with Linsenbigler without fear of reprisal. "They don't have to tell their supervisor, and they can even use sick leave," she said. "And, everything is strictly confidential."

WHY DOES THIS YOUNG WOMEN HAVE A "MOON FACE"?
The "moon face" can be one of the visible signs of lupus. A rounded, full face is the result of steroids, frequently prescribed by physicians to treat lupus patients. Although medication can significantly control the disease, some of the side effects may damage a woman's self-image and self-esteem.

MISCELLANEOUS

Physicals - The Physical Examination Service, building 323 will be closed today, 8 a.m.-12:30 p.m. Females requiring physicals should report Monday or March 3, 8 a.m. For more information, call 545-1660/4408.

Pre-Retirement Orientation - The 1989 Winter/Spring Pre-Retirement Orientation is set for March 8, 8:30 a.m. in Building 4, Classroom 6. If you have 18 years or more of active duty, you should plan to attend for information concerning retirement benefit changes. If you are married, your spouse should know what to expect since your family is an important part of your planning. The program is not intended for personnel who have already submitted their retirement applications, however you, too, are invited to attend. At 1 p.m., there will be a financial planning and money management seminar for anyone who is interested. Pre-register by calling the Retirement Services Office, building 2635, 545-2715/5369. Uniform is duty uniform or appropriate civilian attire.

RECREATION CENTERS

Video Camcorders Club - The first meeting of the Video Camcorder Club will be held at the Kelley Hill Recreation Center March 22. Meeting time will be announced in upcoming announcements. The purpose of the first meeting is to introduce potential members and to determine what activities and classes the club will desire in becoming more professional in their video recording efforts. If club members need particular training or request specific field trips then efforts will be made to schedule these events. For more information, call 544-3079/1721.

RED CROSS

March 1 - The Fort Benning American Red Cross in conjunction with Martin Army Community Hospital will hold a blood drive Wednesday, 8 a.m.-3 p.m. in Building 4, Room 6.

VOLUNTEERS

Volunteer - The following volunteer opportunities are available at Fort Benning:

Volunteers are needed by "First Steps," a new program designed to identify and provide continuing support to new parents and infants in various high risk categories.

Coaches are needed for coed soccer teams at Youth Activities. Practice begins March 4 and continues through April 15.

The Family Members with Special Needs Program needs volunteers. Aides are needed in such programs as bowling, swimming, miniature golf, arts and crafts and special events such as the upcoming Easter egg hunt.

Volunteers are needed for the First Steps Program, which is designed to identify and provide continuing support to new parents and their high-risk category infants.

Red Cross has openings in the Adopt-A-Clinic Program and other clinics.

For more information on these opportunities or a listing of others, call Karen Crowley at the Volunteer Resource Center, 545-5602.

WIVES' CLUBS

Officers' Wives' Club

OWC officer elections - The election of OWC officers for 1989-90 is approaching. Positions to be filled are president, first vice-president, second vice-president, corresponding secretary, recording secretary, treasurer and assistant treasurer. The nominating committee will present a slate of one or more nominees for each office to the membership at the March luncheon. Nominations may be made from the floor at that time and written nominations will be accepted for 10 days following the luncheon. All nominations must have the approval of the person being nominated. An election will be held by secret ballot at the April luncheon and the new officers will be installed in May. Job descriptions explaining the responsibilities of the positions are available in the OWC office. If you are interested in running for an OWC office or know someone who might be, call Debby Dickinson, nominating committee chairman, at 685-0398.

Dinner/Fashion Show - The Fort Benning Officers' Wives' Club will hold a "Step Into Spring" Fashion Show March 3, 7:30 p.m., in the Regimental Ballroom at the Officers' Club. Early checkups may reduce fear

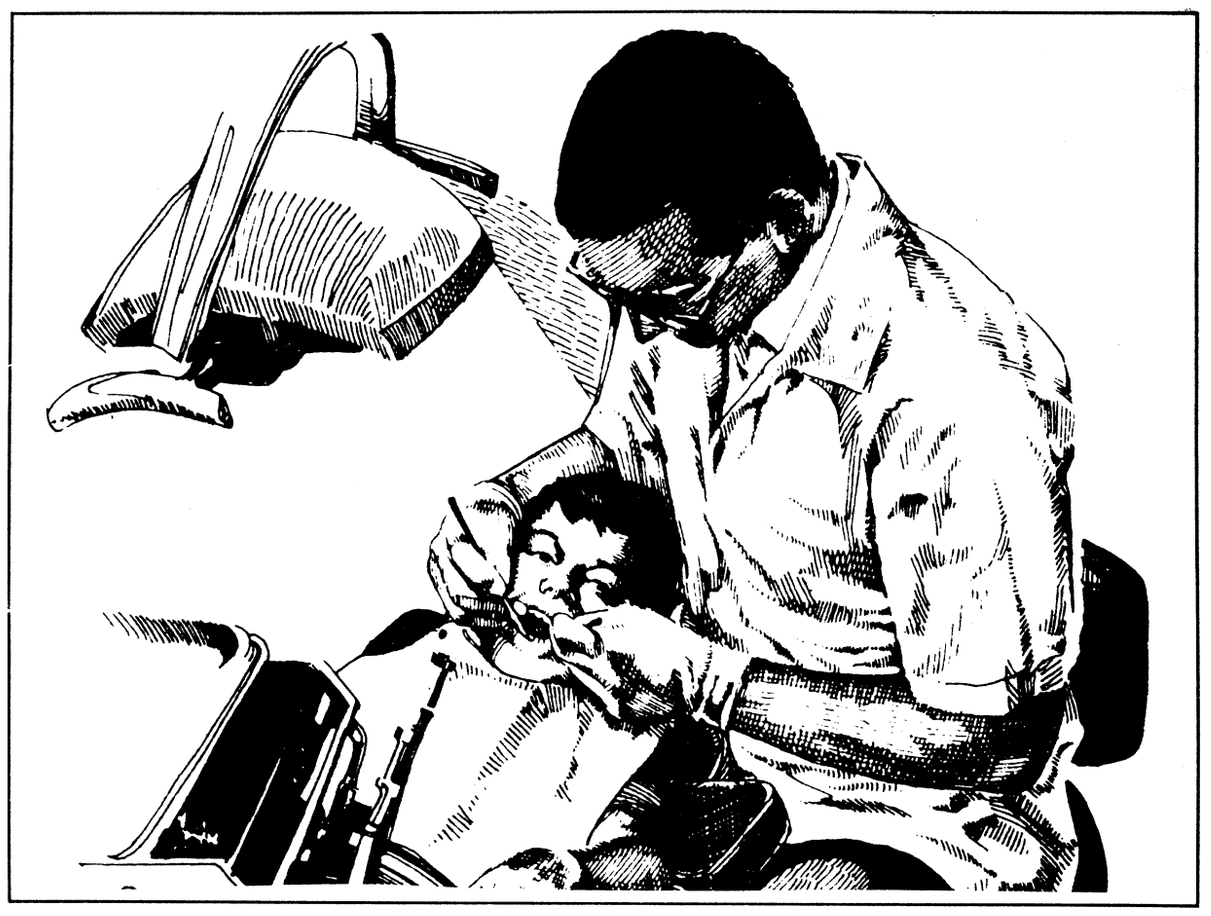
Fort Benning DENTAC

Fewer children experience anxiety toward dental care due to early dental visits and advances in dental treatment, according to the Fort Benning DENTAC.

Parents are now more aware of the importance of early regular dental visits. In 1983, 28 percent of children between two and four years of age and 67 percent of children between 5 and 17 years of age, had visited a dentist the previous year, but by 1986 these percentages increased to 33 and 71 percent, respectively.

General dentists and pediatric dentists, who specialize in care of children, can provide many tips to parents about preparing their children for dental visits and about preventing dental diseases.



Both dental professionals and parents are becoming skilled in making dental care a positive experience. Dentists normally recommend that care begin immediately after birth. Cleaning infant's gums with a soft, damp washcloth or clean gauze pad after each feeding establishes hygiene as a pleasant, daily routine.

By age 1, parents should use a soft toothbrush and a dab of toothpaste to clean their child's teeth. This is an optimum time for the first dental visit. Not only have several of the baby's primary teeth come in, but these visits also help accustom the child to dental procedures.

Parents are instructed in the care and development of their child's teeth and in prevention of baby bottle tooth decay. In this condition, liquids containing sugars, such as milk or juices, are left in the infant's mouth for long periods of time, damaging the infant's teeth.

Some children initially experience dental anxiety. In particular, they fear injections, drilling and the possibility of choking, but by using a number of behavioral modification techniques, dentists can relax their young patients.

One of the most common techniques is role playing. Unlike adults who can be told what to expect of a procedure, children have difficulty understanding abstractions, so they are shown — or role play — what will happen. Before treatment, for example, children are introduced to the sounds of vacuum, the spray and the handpiece. When it comes time for treatment, they have already experienced many of the sensations of the dental environment.

SPIRITUAL

Lent is season for self-denial, self-sacrifice

By Chap. Andrew Bullard
USAIC Chaplain's Office

Lent is a season for retreat and self-denial, self-sacrifice and preparation. Lent is an immense time of preparation for the day we meet our resurrected Lord Jesus.

My story is one shared in hopes of inspiring those who are resisting God's call to carry out His plan.

As one of nine children, I was taught to prepare myself and make personal sacrifices to pursue my goals. My father was a Baptist preacher and my mother a devout Christian. As a young man, I resented their constant reminders of my responsibility to God, family, my fellow man and myself.

Like any other teen-ager, I just wanted to enjoy life and have carefree fun. At times, I felt I hated my parents for their advice and guidance; but deep inside, I knew they were right.

I didn't want to go to college or follow my father's example and become a minister. Each time I felt the calling to God's work, I ran away from it. I stopped running while attending the ROTC Advance Camp at Fort Riley, Kansas.

I called my father and told him I was finally answering God's call and becoming a preacher. I suppose he somehow always knew I would. The following events in my life were, what I believe, part of God's plan of preparation.

After obtaining a bachelors degree in philosophy and religion from the University of Tennessee, I attended the ITC at the Morehouse School of Religion.

After one year of seminary, I was one of four black men selected to go to Europe as acting Army chaplains. It was 1979, and black chaplains were rare in the Army. The barriers before me were torn down by a white chaplain who thought of people and not color.

Chap. Roy Mathis, then a major, was instrumental in starting a program for black seminarians to come on active duty for a training period. This program and the influence of the active duty chaplains inspired me to enter the Army chaplaincy.

God truly prepares his preachers for ministry.

I believe that all of this could not have happened if I hadn't responded to life's responsibilities and pressures. The sacrifices and preparation for life helped me to find my place as an Army minister.

Lent calls us to practice self-denial and sacrifice in preparation for our time in the life hereafter, much the same as childhood and adolescence prepares us to carry out our place as an adult in God's plan.

We all have obstacles to overcome in order to answer God's call wherever that may lead. It is not supposed to be easy. Barriers to our goals may be our age, background, religious affiliation and yes, sometimes the color of our skin. These are only challenges that we must overcome to pursue what we know is right.

Lent is our time to gather strength and knock the barriers down.

Amen and Glory!

A Fort Benning couple lights a candle during a recent Valentine's Day celebration.

Couples renew marriage vows in Valentine's Day ceremony

USAIC Chaplain's Office

Two Valentine's Day celebrations were observed in the Catholic and Protestant communities recently. There were celebrations of joy and joviality, filled with symbolic reference to the greatest facet of human experience - love.

Chap. (Col.) Roy Mathis, post chaplain, was included in the entertainment of the program offered by the Protestant Women of the Chapel. The "Great Mathak," coined by Chap. Steve Paschall, mysteriously "read" thoughts of love, courtship, marriage and even in-laws at a dinner held at the Fort Benning Follow-Me Golf Course Club House and was attended by about 50 people.

Chap. Paschall gave a presentation on the psychological meanings of love and bonding as a covenant in marriage. He circulated a questionnaire to be filled out by couples to see if they knew each other as well as they thought they did.

The Catholic community also sponsored a Valentine celebration. A Candlelight and Mass, which included the renewal of marriage vows was followed by dinner and dancing at the Golf Club.

Five priests celebrated the evening candlelight Mass. It was a moment to express love for one another and renew the vows they had made to each other months or years ago. Each couple lit a candle and placed it before the alter to symbolize the light of God's love that they share in the covenant of holy matrimony.

ARMY NEWS

New brochure offers tips for parents

Parents of children who attend Army installation child development centers have access to a new brochure designed to facilitate parents' involvement in the centers' operations.

Titled "Parents as Partners: Check Us Out," the new brochure is published by Child Development Services of the U. S. Army Community and Family Support Center.

The center's Joy Guenther explained that the brochure evolved from a recent revision of the CDS regulation (AR 608-10), from major concerns voiced by parents during congressional hearings last fall, and from study findings reflecting patron satisfaction.

Said Guenther: "Its content addresses the necessary partnership between center and parent to accomplish successful programs for children and identifies key players in the installation of CDC program. It includes a 'Check Us Out' checklist for reviewing characteristics of the CDC program. And, it describes the roles of parents in the partnership."

The brochure is a useful tool for CDC directors and parents involved in pre-admission interviews, Guenther said. It also can be used to encourage ongoing feedback, monitor patron satisfaction and perform a periodic program review.

For more information, contact the local child development center.

Walter Reed offers dialysis technician course

If you're a sergeant or staff sergeant, possess the 91C military occupational specialty of practical nurse, believe you're among the best in your field and are looking for a career-enhancing move, then Sgt. 1st Class Eddie Phelps has a deal for you – the Dialysis Technician Course.

"Walter Reed Army Medical Center in Washington admits only 12 soldiers to the course annually," Phelps said, "and it's the only place it's offered.'

According to Phelps, becoming a dialysis tech helps soldiers become more competitive for promotions and enables them to acquire additional technical skills.

"Although there are about 4,100 soldiers serving in the Army today with the 91C MOS, only about 100 of them have the dialysis technical additional skill identifier," he adds. "Those selected to take this course are definitely considered the cream of the crop.

"Since it's one of only two courses offered past the basic 91C, successful completion increases promotion potential," he emphasizes. "The other option is the physician's assistant.

"It's a nice career progression," Phelps continued. "Soldiers in the 91C MOS can stay in the dialysis field through the rank of master sergeant. Some techs go on to become registered nurses or physician's assistants."

PX shopping means 'families helping families'

When your thoughts turn to your local post exchange, you can't help conjuring an image of family patronage throughout the PX system – from barber shops and movie theaters to shopettes and clothing stores.

But the system offers another family element, one perhaps not as readily observed as the clientele of family members going to and from.

That element, say officials at the Army and Air Force Exchange Service in Dallas, consists of the body of family members employed by AAFES activities. "AAFES is the single largest employer of military family members," officials say. The reason for that record: "We give your family members preference over other categories of job applicants," officials say.

Latest figures show that 56 percent of the AAFES hourly-paid employees in the United States are family members of active-duty servicemembers. What's more, many serve AAFES in overseas locations where employment would otherwise be unavailable.

DoD reaffirms anti-sexual harassment policy

By Evelyn D. Harris
American Forces Information Service

DoD officials have undertaken a program reaffirming that is is department policy not to tolerate sexual harassment. With assistance from agency inspectors general, eradication and prevention of sexual harassment in the civilian work force has become a matter of priority review.

Organizations have submitted their plans for implementing DoD instructions in an eight-point program for eradicating sexual harassment:

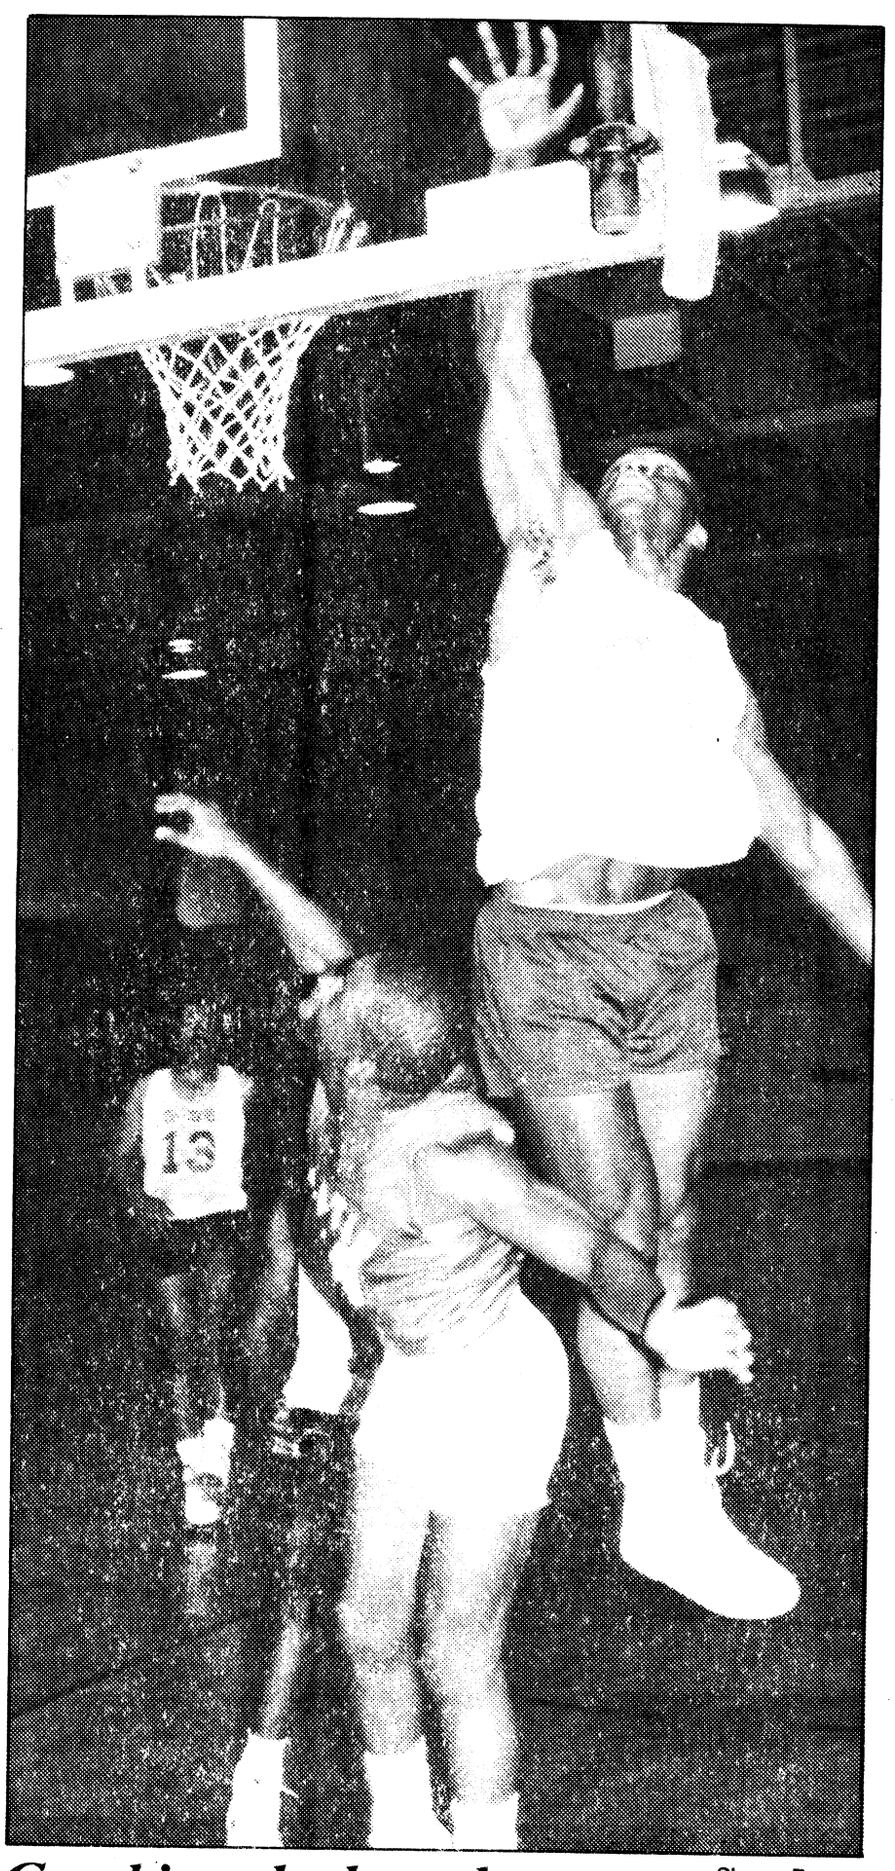
1. Each component will issue an annual statement to reaffirm DoD policy in this area at the beginning of each fiscal year, starting with fiscal 1989.

2. Managers and supervisors – including military supervisors – are responsible for ensuring that civilian employees understand the definition of sexual harassment.

3. Civilians are to be informed of the avenues to file complaints and seek redress. The "avenue" may vary in different organizations, but it will usually be the equal employment opportunity counselor. However, said a DoD official, employees can also go to their Federal Women's Program manager or call the DoD Hotline for Fraud, Waste and Abuse at 1-800-424-9098 or they can write: Defense Hotline, The Pentagon, Washington, D. C. 20301-1900.

4. Sexual harassment prevention training is to be given to all civilian employees as well as military supervisors/managers of civilian employees at all levels.

5. A quality control mechanism (such as a test) is to be included in training programs.



6. All civilian complaints of sexual harassment are to be investigated thoroughly, impartially and promptly resolved, with corrective actions taken indicated and penalties levied.

7. The full range of penalties – from a letter of reprimand to dismissal – is to be used for non-compliance with the policy.

8. Violations of the sexual harassment policy will be reflected in annual performance ratings.

At a technical assistance workshop held recently at the Pentagon, some organizations reported that their training includes "coping techniques" to enable an employee to head off harassment. However, this part of the training does not mean that the harassment is the victim's fault.

As DoD's Director of Administration and Management David O. Cooke put it: "Individuals who are sexually harassed are encouraged to confront the offender, making it clear that such behavior is offensive, and should fully use the established procedures to report all cases of repeated sexual harassment. Sexual harassment is not a personal problem. It is a management and personnel problem."

USARSA students tour Columbus, visit sites

By Keith F. Johnson
USARSA

Columbus and the U.S. Army School of the Americas became better acquainted when the students and cadre of four of the school's courses toured parts of the city Feb. 7 through 10.

The trips included visits to Bradley Library, the Naval Museum, United Technologies Pratt and Whitney plant, the Columbus Ledger-Enquirer, Tom's Foods, Lummus Industry and the historic district.

The Command and General Staff College course students began their tour Feb. 10 with a visit to Mayor James Jernigan's chambers. The mayor presented each student with a certificate making them honorary citizens of Columbus.

"I feel like I am the luckiest mayor in the United States because I am able to meet high-ranking officials such as yourselves from our neighboring Latin American countries," Jernigan said. "The city of Columbus is lucky to have the School of the Americas in our community."

Afterward, the students learned about how the government system works in Columbus.

"It was interesting to hear about all the things the government is doing for the people of Columbus," Lt. Col. Sergio Mavila said. Mavila, who is from Peru, is class president of the C&GSC course.

The Officer's Advanced Course had a chance to discuss "the role of the press in America" with Jack Swift, executive editor of the Columbus Ledger-Enquirer, during their visit to the newspaper last Wednesday.

According to Swift, the students are always interested in how much freedom the press receives from the government. He explained that the newspaper can print whatever it wants — as long as it's the truth — without fear of government control.

"I always learn a great deal when representatives of the school visit the Columbus Ledger-Enquirer," Swift said. "The exchange is always vigorous and enlightening."

Not only are the tours enlightening for Swift, but also for the Latin American students who, many for the first time, are able to experience what life is like in the United States.

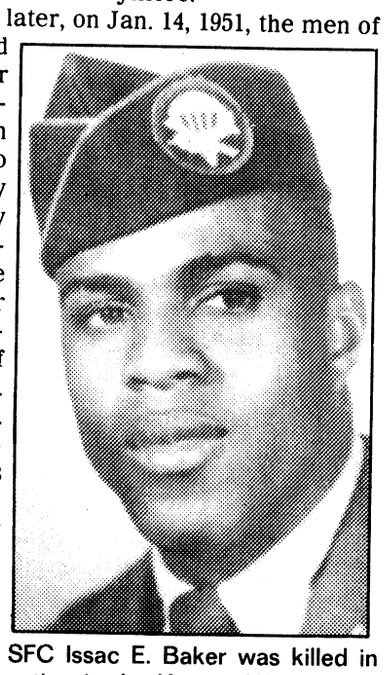
Focus on Black History

Many Black rangers fought in Korean War, paid the ultimate price

By Emmett E. Fike
Ranger Infantry Companies (Airborne)

The 2nd Ranger Company (Airborne) was probably the last all-Black airborne unit in the United States Army. The majority of the volunteers came from the 3rd Battalion, 505th or the 80th Airborne Battalion. Several were veterans of the famous "Triple Nickels" airborne battalion, and many were World War II veterans.

The 2nd Ranger Company arrived in Korea on Dec. 30, 1950. It was the middle of the coldest winter in Asia in 50 years.



One of their first combat assignments was the mission of securing the area around a medical aid collecting station.

In 1951, Correspondent Cpl. C. E. Garmaker wrote in the Feb. 24, 1951 issue of "Stars and Stripes", "They travel light and fast. They're durable, strong, hardy men, small in number, yet large enough to tackle jobs big enough to make larger units falter. They are the men of the 2nd Ranger Company, a new unit in Korea attached to the 7th Infantry Division."

Three days after their landing in Korea, they were at the front. They moved in quietly and inconspicuously. They were set up adjacent to a medical aid station, and that's where they first saw action.

Guerrillas were harassing the area, sneaking down the mountains at night to raid the villages. They crept down from the mountains at an early morning hour, about 150 strong, and opened fire from close range on the medics. The rangers jumped into action. A wall of expertly aimed ranger firepower jarred the unsuspecting Reds to a halt. The battle raged until dawn. Crippled remnants of the guerrillas crawled back into the mountains. The guerrillas didn't fire on the aid station anymore.

Days later, on Jan. 14, 1951, the men of the 2nd Ranger Company ran into heavy enemy resistance near the village of Majori. Cpl. J. T. Holley was mortally wounded. He refused to be evacuated.

SFC Issac E. Baker was killed in action in the Korean War.

Holley had been firing a bazooka from behind a large rock when he ran out of ammunition. Just as he was about to make a run for more, he was hit. When the order to pull back was given, the aid men wanted to take him with them. "I'll only be a burden," he said. "I'm not fooling anybody. I won't last much longer, and I'm going to stay right here."

Lt. Allen, the company commander, tried to convince him to come along, to no avail. As Allen attempted to move the

Energy Branch

Think you know all there is to know about saving energy? Take this quick quiz, answering true or false to each question. Then compare your answers to ours on page B-6.

1. Homes with fireplaces are more energy-efficient.

2. Lighting uses the greatest percentage of the energy in most homes.

3. A faucet dripping at a rate of 90 drops per second wastes about 20 gallons of water a week.

4. Changing the air filter in a heater keeps the heater running cleanly, but won't affect the amount of energy it uses.

5. Using a microwave oven, toaster oven and electric skillet to prepare a meal will usually use more energy than using the conventional oven alone.

6. The only purpose of an air conditioner is to cool the air.

7. A bathroom or kitchen exhaust fan can empty a houseful of heated or cooled air in about six hours.

8. The electricity used to operate a light bulb costs about four to six times the price of the bulb.

9. Watering lawns each day for a short period of time is better for the grass than watering twice a week for longer periods.

10. Lowering the heater thermostat can save up to six percent of the energy used per degree.

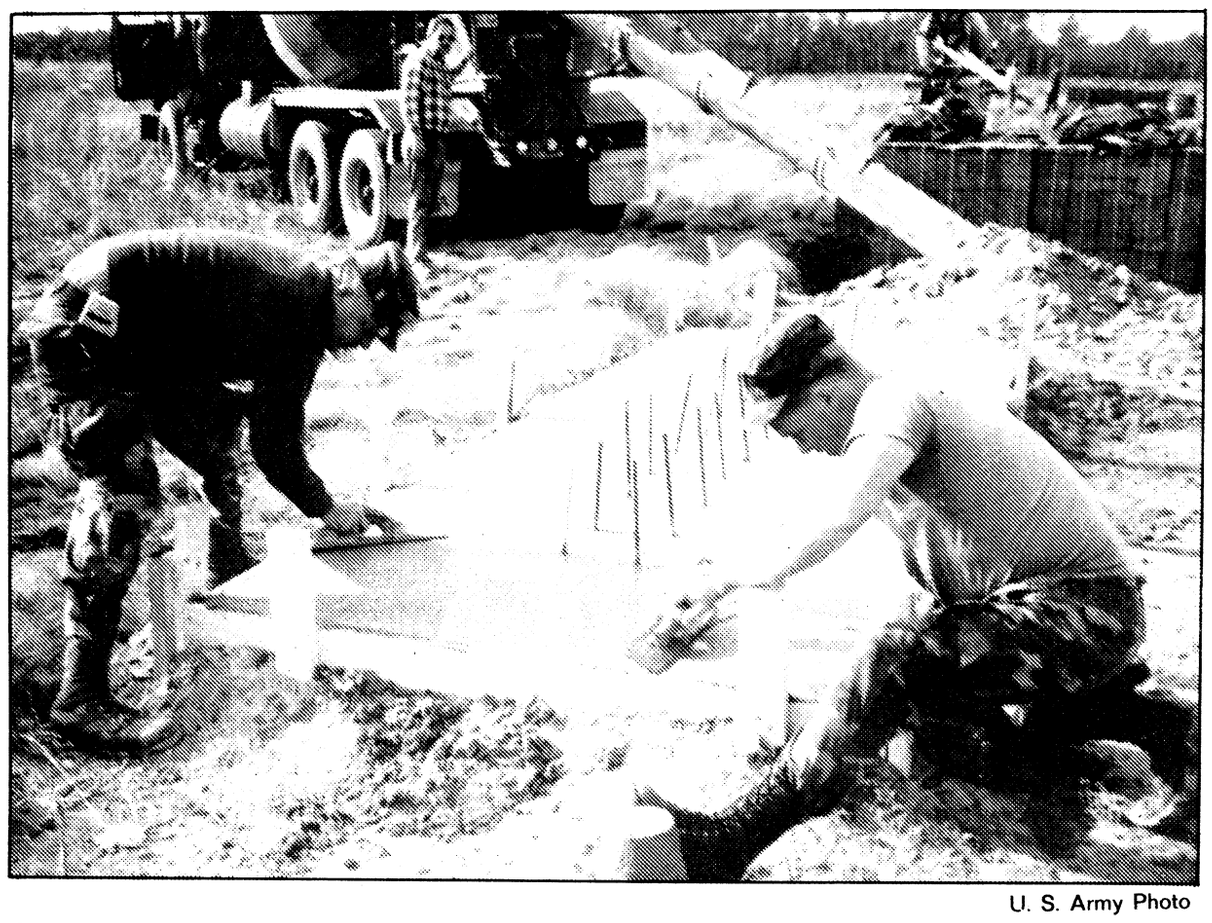
Engineers build targets on Griswold range

43rd Engineer Battalion



Members of the 2nd Platoon, B Company, 43rd Engineer Battalion, sweated and toiled for days under the hot Georgia sun to complete 14 massive targets on Griswold Range just in time for two competing companies to come in and blast them to rubble.

Four timber bunkers, four 10-foot reinforced concrete walls, two 10-foot triple brick walls and four accuracy targets were constructed last month.

They were tasked by the Infantry Board to build these targets on Griswold Range to help the Army test anti-tank weapons systems.

On March 16 and 21, Honeywell and Brunswick will compete with each other to see whose anti-tank weapon will be declared most effective. The winning company will try to sell its weapon to the government.

Members of 2nd Platoon will be on Griswold Range March 16 and 21 cheering for the stability of their work. Several members admit that building the targets was a challenge, but seeing them get blown up will be fun.

Survey reveals status of spouse employment

By J. C. Bean
Army News Service

In a survey of Army families, Army spouses reported the following about their employment:

Sixty-three percent of Army wives were in the labor force - 44 percent worked in paying jobs while 19 percent were out of work.

The report also indicated that during the several years before the survey was conducted, the percentage of working Army spouses with young children was the same as that for working spouses of civilians with young children. Of Army spouses with a youngest child under 3 years of age, 49 percent worked. For those whose youngest child was age three to five years, almost 60 percent were in the labor force. Among Army spouses with children these ages, wives of enlisted soldiers were more likely to be in the labor force.

Data comparisons between spouses of servicemembers and spouses of civilians indicated that more spouses of servicemembers were unemployed than those married to civilians.

Statistics reveal, however, that since 1985 the percentage of unemployed spouses of enlisted soldiers' rose from 14 percent to 21 percent. Most of this increase appeared to result from an increase in the number of spouses who were unemployed and looking for a job.

Of Army spouses surveyed, unemployment was highest among wives of E-1s through E-4s - 27 percent reported they were unemployed and among wives of enlisted soldiers with young children. They are often those same people, young women married to junior enlisted soldiers with young children. These data suggest that spouses of E-1s through E-4s are under considerable financial pressure to get paid jobs rather than staying home with their children. For these families, researchers say, programs and policies that support employment, such as child care, job search assistance, job skills training, are important for family financial well being.

Other areas of concern for Army wives involved job satisfaction and the ability to find jobs. About 30 percent of those spouses surveyed who wanted a paying job but didn't have one reported goal achievement opportunities as a serious problem.

In addition, survey researchers found out a connection existed between spousal employment and satisfaction with Army life. Of spouses who didn't want a paid job, 65 percent reported higher satisfaction. This compared to 61 percent who had paying jobs and the 56 percent who did not have but wanted paid jobs. Among employed spouses, those able to progress within their jobs appeared more satisfied with the Army as a way of life than those dissatisfied with their job progression - 64 percent compared to 54 percent.

Army Community Service's family member employment assistance programs can help spouses who want to find employment.

USAMU couple shares shooting interest

By Sally Roberts
U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit

PFCs Audrey and Stan Hayes are a unique Army couple whose interests in competitive shooting brought them together in college and later led them both to join the Army.

As members of the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit's pistol section, the Hayes' face the rigors of climbing to the top as individual competitors while supporting each other's goals and careers as husband and wife.

Stan has been a competitive shooter since his youth in Texas. He was a member of the U.S. National Team in 1982 at age 18. In 1983, he won national titles in five events, bringing home gold medals in free pistol, air pistol, standard pistol, rapid fire and junior sport pistol. In the same year, he won the overall aggregate for conventional pistol at the national matches at Camp Perry, Ohio, and won three gold and one bronze medal at the Benito Juarez International match.

Audrey began shooting under the coaching of a friend of the family and heightened her talent and interest in the sport by attending summer training camps for shooters.

Originally from New Mexico, she accepted a scholarship to the University of Texas in Arlington. First she shot International Pistol, one event in which she now competes, at collegiate level in 1985. By 1987 she was the collegiate Women's Air Pistol champion. As a USAMU shooter, she was a member of the 1988 U.S. CISM team, which competed in Finland.

Audrey explained that shooting had become a priority in their lives. Enlisting in the Army and choosing USAMU as a unit of choice enlistment option seemed a logical step in their careers.

The Hayes' also feel that the daily training with the champion marksmen at USAMU is invaluable to their development as shooters.

"Here we have a total commitment to train, and we are working with the best shooters in the world," Audrey said.

"This unit has so many veteran shooters. If we have a common problem, we talk about it and usually one person will have an answer," Stan added.

Another benefit is participating in national and international matches.

"The match experience is really important," Audrey said. "A shooter has to be exposed to that pressure and situation. The higher the quality of the match, the more pressure we face."

Fortunately, the Hayes' don't face pressure in competing against each other. In fact they remain quite separate in their matches.

Much concentration is required in shooting the winning score, and at times, that limits their participation in each other's successes.

"You can't get too involved in what the other is doing," Stan said. "When I am on the line, I can only be thinking about what I am doing."

"But we are there to watch each other and talk about our shooting," Audrey added.

Stan and Audrey agree that it takes at least 10 years of quality training and competition to "bring home the gold" in international events. If perseverance and a love for competitive shooting are any indication, these two may someday reach that goal.

Now two-pizza phenomenon can happen anytime, anywhere.
PIZZA HUT® DELIVERS PAIRS™ ALL DAY, EVERY DAY

In what sources are calling a bizarre plot to spoil pizza customers for anything less, Pizza Hut® now delivers two pizzas for one low price on a permanent basis.

The alleged conspiracy means that a simple phone call to Pizza Hut® Delivery brings "Pizza Hut Pairs™," as they are being called, directly to the homes of American consumers.

Experts speculate that citizens may stay home in droves to take advantage of what many are calling "the biggest thing since pepperoni."

Professor Soo Dang Goode of the Institute for Pizza Excellence told reporters, "With Pizza Hut Pairs, consumers can get two pizzas for only slightly more than the price of one. And this is not your ordinary, skimpy delivery pizza. This is Pizza Hut Pizza!"

Goode added, "It's a stunning breakthrough in pizza science."

HHC, 1/29th Inf., MEDDAC teams capture basketball first-place honors

By Shawn Bryson
Bayonet staff writer

Briant Wells field house was the site of the USAIC 2nd season basketball championships which took place Feb. 17 and 21.

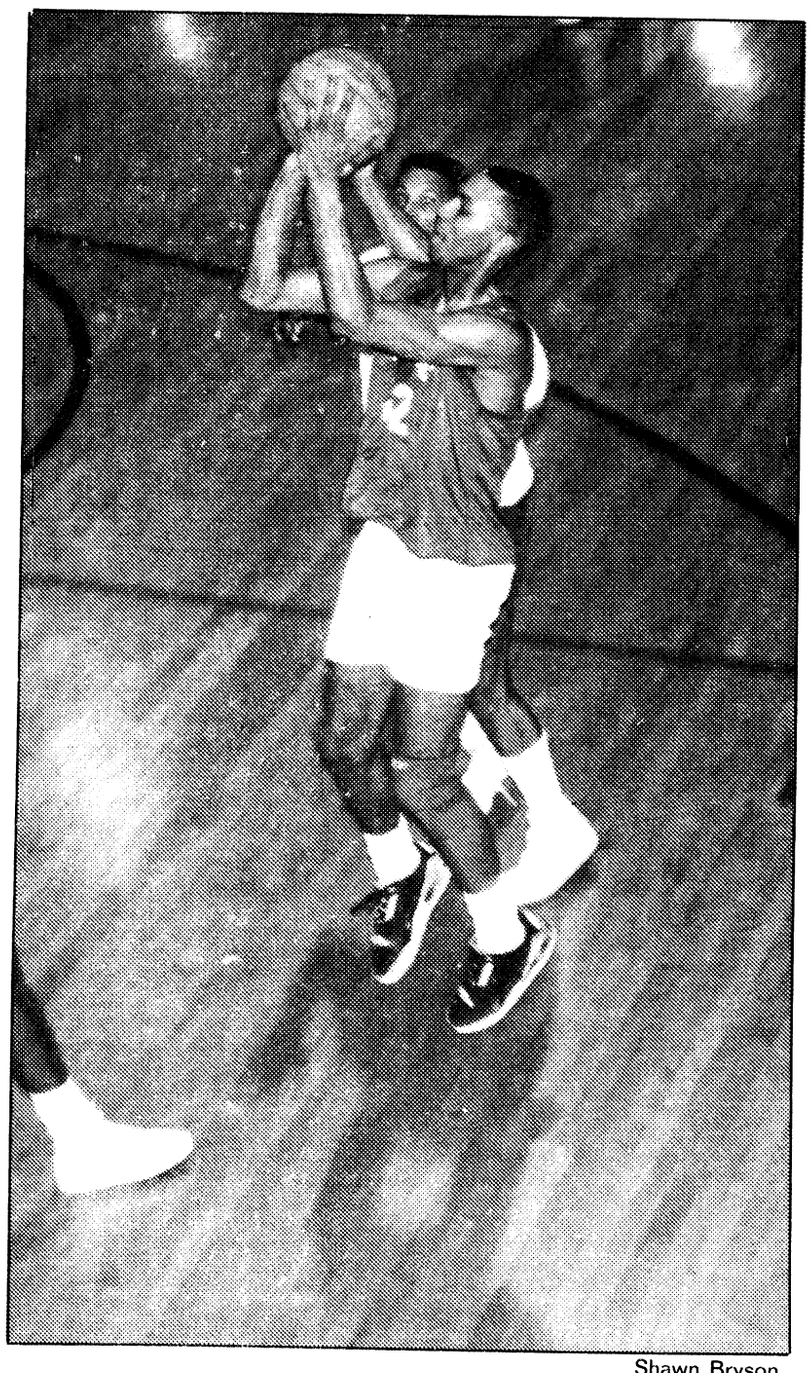
It was like deja vu for the "Static" of Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry as they shocked C Company, 3rd Battalion, 32nd Infantry, 52-46, claiming their second straight USAIC basketball championship.

Both teams bobbled the lead during what turned out to be a very offensive first half. HHC's Gary Slayton led the "Static" with 13 first-half points followed by Gregory Widget who had 8.

HHC took advantage of early Co. C foul trouble, dropping 8 from the line, and went on to a 33-30 half-time edge.

The second half turned defensive and despite the attack of Co. C's leading scorer, Mandue Singleton with 22 game points, HHC's Slayton and Widget again teamed up to bring the "Static" to the 2nd season championship.

The 67th Maintenance Battalion took third place in the championships due to a forfeit by HHC 197th Inf. Bde.



The women's championship was a double elimination between the Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 197th Infantry Brigade and the Medical Deparment Activity's "Stallions."

Game one went to the 197th as they slid by the "Stallions," 36-33. Leading scorers for the 197th were Cynthia McMillian with 12 points and Valerte Rawls with 10.

"Stallion" leading scorers for game one were Tracy Wadley with 10 points and Lynn Barbee with 7.

The 197th took the title after defeating the "Stallions" in game two, 38-27. Although the "Stallions" went into the second half down by only 2 points, they were not able to stop the 197th's Karen Frierson who put away 12 game points, and Cozetta Lewis and Rawls, each with 8 points.

The "Bandits" defeated the 197th Inf. Bde. to take the championship title for the "Over 35" competition. The "Over 35" league was comprised of 10 teams from around post with all players age 35 and over.

"Wildbunch" barrage eliminates 4/41st FA

By George Mingee
197th Infantry Brigade correspondent

Woosh! That's the sound heard recently when two teams dribbled it out during the post basketball playoffs. 3rd Battalion, 32nd Infantry Regiment's "Wildbunch" defeated Service Battery, 4th Battalion, 41st Field Artillery's, "Service leads the way" team 52-44 in a very physical game.

The two teams met at Briant Wells field house to determine who would move up in the playoff bracket. The "Wildbunch" stayed ahead in the game by swishing numerous free throw shots; but the tough defense and shot-blocking ability of Svc. Btry. kept the game close.

With a halftime score of 24-20, the "Wildbunch" held a slight lead over Svc. Btry., Hitting six times from the free throw line and twice from the court, Howard Richardson lead the "Wildbunch" with 10 points. Closing the gap was teammate George Harris with eight points. Svc. Btry. player Kenneth Roney hit 10 points in the first half to lead Service in scoring.

It was all "Wildbunch" in the second half as Richardson and Harris teamed together to shoot from almost anywhere on the court. At the same time, Svc. Btry. met an unfortunate fate - two players fouled out of the game.

With 1:30 left on the clock, the score was 47-41 in favor of the "Wildbunch" with Richardson hitting at will, as he appeared to sense a victory. He ended up with a team high of 26 points.

This win boosted the "Wildbunch" to a 10-0 record and put them in the winner's bracket of the fourth round of the post championships.

34th Med 'MASH'es 58th Infantry Bulldogs

By George Mingee
197th Infantry Brigade correspondent

2nd MASH, 34th Medical Battalion's "Deuce" defeated HHC, 1st Battalion, 58th Infantry's "Bulldogs" 54-41 in the post basketball championship playoffs.

The game was played with lots of excitement and aggressiveness as players constantly battled for position on the court. But, the final three minutes of the game belonged to the Deuce as they scored 13 points to wrap up the game 54-41.

The game showed two styles of play. The Bulldogs ran the court with fast breaks, while the Deuce attacked with outside shooting and quick passing.

The Deuce trailed 23-21 going into the second half. Bulldog Kenneth Walker had nine points followed by teammate Charles Banks with six points. Patrick Meeks added five points to the team total rounding out the top scorers.

Deuce, not happy with the halftime score, came out hot under the hand of Anthony Thomas who netted 16 points in the second half. Close behind was Curtis Poole with nine points.

With 3:00 left in the game, and the score 43-41 in favor of Deuce, the Bulldogs had a chance to even up the score. But, the Deuce came alive and scored 13 unanswered points to close the game out 54-41 and boost their record to 8-2. This win pushed them farther up the ladder in the post playoffs and increased their chances to be in the championship game.

Beware of the 'Sniffle Zone' during marathon

By John M. Henderson

Editor's note: This article is designed to prepare the average runner for the Infantry Marathon.

WHAT: 1989 Infantry Marathon and Half Marathon
WHEN: March 4. Marathon starts at 9 a.m.; half marathon begins at 9:30 a.m.
WHERE: Eckel Street in front of Infantry Hall, building 4.
REGISTRATION: $15 (Make check payable to MWR Fund)
POINT OF CONTACT: Capt. Russell L. Walker, 544-I-RUN or 544-I-WIN.

Many times during one's life there are episodes of some certain ill-feeling and despair that would make a lesser person cave in. But, we keep a stiff upper lip and trundle through toward brighter days.

Would you believe that endurance athletics are mirrors of life? There are those people who have no direction in their lives, go many directions with no goals and never complete anything. For those people, once adversity is met, they back off or shrink away from the challenge.

Then comes the sour grapes. "I really didn't want it anyway," weakly rationalizing and leaving part of their spirit along life's highway.

These folks never got out of the "Sniffle Zone".

All through history, great Americans have approached the hard reality of the sniffle zone, then they bore through it to victory of accomplishment.

Whether it was the bitterly cold travail of a Valley Forge winter; digging trenches around Petersburg during a hot, humid summer; crawling through the thicket of Argonne Forest; scaling the cliffs along Omaha Beach, staggering through a Korean snow or a sweltering Vietnamese jungle, the sniffle zones have been conquered.

One airborne commander described it as a "vapor lock in the cranial cavity." He's correct of course. "It" is in your head, quit or continue, drive on or pack it in.

During the marathon, you will think "this is ridiculous" when you're at 10 or 15 miles. Then at 18 or 20 miles, it's even worse. "I didn't think it would be this bad! I don't know what to do! I'm desperate! I want to quit!"

Sure you want to stop; some people may not complete this very formidable, arduous course. But under no circumstances, even though you don't cross the finish line, do you quit inside your mind.

If you decide that discretion is the better part of valor and you must stop short of victory, then do an "after-action report." Decide where you went wrong and return next year.

If you approach the sniffle zone three quarters of the way through, try saying to yourself, "I know what this is, and I'm mentally tougher."

The feeling will pass (eventually) but the challenge will never come again. Reach for it! Grab it! This is THE MARATHON! Those preliminary miles are just fluff!

"That which does not destroy you makes you stronger," thus spoke Zarathustra or Nietsche. Maybe it was Larry Nietsche who lived in the brown two-story down the street. He ran cross country for Slippery Rock U. and went on to be a prolific marathoner in northwestern Pennsylvania.

Don't get caught in the sniffle zone.

See you on the road.

Benning Bass Club holds February fishing contest

By Pat Bennett
Fort Benning Bass Club

The Bass Club of Fort Benning held its February Fish Off at Florence Marina on Lake Walter F. George Saturday. Eighteen club members braved a very cold and windy day to chase the coveted quarry, bass.

When the weigh-in was over, Bob Billman won first place with six fish weighing a total of 19 pounds, 9 ounces. He also took big fish honors with a 10-pound, 4-ounce monster. Otis Carter won second place with a catch totaling 19 pounds, 3 ounces, and Porter Angel captured third with 12 pounds, 3 ounces.

A variety of lures were used with spinnerbaits, worms and crankbaits getting the best results. It was a good tournament, and members returned all the fish to Lake Walter F. George.

The next tournament is scheduled March 18-19 at Lake Seminole. Anyone interested in becoming a member of the Bass Club of Fort Benning should attend a club meeting. They are held the second and fourth Monday of each month at Building 2616.

For more information, call John Campbell at 568-4829 or Brenda Carter at 689-7474.

Meredith takes consecutive victories in rifle championship

U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit

James Meredith took consecutive victories in the three- and four-position small-bore rifle championships recently held at Fort Benning.

Meredith posted 1,182 out of 1,200 in the three-position match, one point ahead of teammate Kurt Fitz-Randolph with 1,181, followed by Steve Goff in third place with 1,177.

In the four-position match, Meredith led the pack with a perfect score of 800. Tom Tamas took second with a score of 797, followed by Troy Baker also with 797. Tamas led Baker in "center shots" 72 to 65.

The U.S. Army Blue squad swept both the small-bore rifle, three-position and four-position team championships with aggregate scores of 4,713 out of 4,800 and 1,596 out of 1,600.

Members of the winning three-position team were Meredith, Fitz-Randolph, Goff and Baker. The four-position team members were Meredith, Baker, Goff and Tamas.

Both squads were coached by William Krilling, USAMU's international rifle training coach.

NATIONAL SPRINT CAR STARS AND STOCKCARS OPEN EAST ALABAMA MOTOR SPEEDWAY

Phenix City—Top ranked national sprint car drivers including World of Outlaw champions STEVE KINSER and SAMMY SWINDELL will join a full field of 100 mile per hour winged sprint cars in the season opener Friday and Saturday night March 3rd and 4th at East Alabama Motor Speedway. Sprint cars put on a tremendous show that you have to see to believe. The one time event will be your only chance to catch the action so plan a party and get out to the speedway. Top drivers from the local late model, street stock, cadet, enduro, bomber and modified classes will also be in action in the first point meet of the season with over 100 cars and 12 racing events each night, this race may well be the biggest and best of the season. MILITARY SAVE $$$$ by showing ID on Friday night at ticket booth. Families save too with free admission Friday for kids under 12. Seating is limited so come early and see the USA sanctioned Alabama National Championship for sprint cars and stock cars. You won't get a second chance.

Lakers defeat Hawks

Fort Benning's Pee Wee League Lakers recently defeated the Hawks 26-24 at the Youth Activity Center.

The Lakers were led in scoring by Antanoine Morris, Rodney Sellers, Jason Franklin and Marvin Johnson who each scored 6 points.

The Lakers built an 11-point lead at half time, 17-6, which was mainly due to their aggressive full-court press.

During the second half, the Hawks mounted a come back by scoring consecutive 3-point baskets. They managed to come within 2 points, 26-24, but time expired.

Jaycees will sponsor bike challenge April 1

The Columbus Jaycees are sponsoring a 50- and 25-mile Bike Challenge April 1 at Flat Rock Park in Columbus.

Registration starts at 7 a.m. the day of the race. Ride starts at 8 a.m. sharp.

The registration fee is $10 before ride day, and $12 on ride day.

Riders under 14 will be allowed to ride with an adult sponsor. Riders under 18 must have a release form signed at registration by their parent or guardian. All riders must wear their helmets to register, and they must wear their helmets on the ride.

Tee-shirts will be given to all participants. Trophies will be presented to the top three finishers in the 50-mile ride. Also, trophies will be presented to top three finishers in each age group.

For an entry blank or more information, write: JCC, P. O. Box 2703, Columbus, Ga., 31902, or call 323-7224.

Pig calling contest Mar 1

Can you oink, snort, squeal or suey? Here's your chance to show your stuff. To celebrate National Pig Day, Fort Benning will hold its first-ever pig calling contest March 1 at 6:30 p.m.

For more information, call the Kelley Hill Recreation Center at 544-1721/3079.

Heart Run is March 11

The American Heart Association will sponsor the 1989 Heart Run March 11. The run gets underway at 10 a.m. in front of the Columbus Ironworks Convention and Trade Center. The one-mile fun run begins at 10 a.m., and the 6.2-mile race begins at 10:30 a.m.

Registration for individuals is $9; it's $10 the day of the race.

Corporate and military relays will run concurrently with the 6.2-mile race. Three team members will run approximately two miles each. Registration is $60 for corporate relay and $30 for the military relay.

Awards will be given in various age groups for individual runners. The first five teams in the military relay will receive a trophy.

For more information, contact Karen Ledford at 324-0173.

Energy Quiz Answers

1. False. Fireplaces can actually waste energy because warm air from the heater is drawn up the chimney. Lowering the thermostat to 50 degrees while a fire's burning, and making sure the damper is tightly closed when there's no fire, can keep the fireplace from wasting up to eight percent of energy.

2. False. About 48 percent of a home's energy is used for heating and cooling, and 16 percent for heating water. Refrigerators and freezers use about 12 percent; the remaining 24 percent is used in lighting, cooking and other appliances.

3. True. That little drip from your faucet could be a larger waste than you thought. And if the water has been heated, the energy used to heat it has gone down the drain, too.

4. False. The dirtier the filter, the harder the heater has to work to force air through it. If your heater has a dirty filter, you may also be running the risk of damaging it.

5. False. Smaller appliances can use much less energy than a single larger one, even when several are used. Microwave ovens and pressure cookers save time and nutrients, too.

6. False. Air conditioners also remove humidity from the air. And as air passes through the filter, dust and dirt are removed. To avoid excess humidity, and keep your building or house more comfortable, do laundry, bathing, cooking and cleaning with water in the cooler morning or evening hours. You'll also be saving energy.

7. False. It only takes one hour for an exhaust fan to empty a houseful of air. Give your heater and air conditioner a break by using vent fans only for short periods of time, and only when they're needed.

8. True. Two light bulbs purchased for $1.50 will use about $6 to $8 to operate over the life of the bulbs.

9. False. Experts say that watering lawns too often can cause shallow roots, resulting in grass that wilts easily in hot weather. Watering too frequently also encourages the growth of crabgrass and other pesky weeds.

10. True. Because heating is the largest wintertime user of energy in buildings, a small change in the thermostat setting can make a big difference in the amount of energy the heater uses.

PFC Robert St. Thomas fought in Korea.

Rangers

wounded Ranger out, he was hit twice, clean wounds through his left side. A third bullet hit his dog tags, tore through his Bible, punctured his map, and left him untouched. Another bullet ricocheted off his pistol.

Sgt. Lerol White of New York City said, "I was just about ten feet away from one of the Rangers that got killed yesterday. I saw the medics try to take him out, and Lt. Allen tried too; but, he wouldn't go. He knew he was hit too bad and didn't want to be a burden. He finally persuaded some of the men to give him a rifle and plenty of ammunition. Then, he had the men prop him up alongside a rock and told them to leave. When we withdrew, I looked back and saw him lying there, still firing away." Sgt. White dropped his head as he finished.

The next day when a detail was sent out to pick up the dead, Cpl. Holley's body was found, rifle in the firing position.

Ranger Holley was brought back home and buried in the Long Island National Cemetery.

In addition to losing Cpl. Holley, the 2nd Ranger Company also lost Corporals Frank King Jr., Richard Glover, Herman L. Rembert, Lawrence Williams, Milton Johnson, Robert St. Thomas and PFC Charles Scott, who were all killed in action on January 14, 1951. The rank of corporal was a very unhealthy status that day.

The 2nd Ranger Company had several men killed in the Korean War. Others were: MSgt. Jack Murphy, SFC Issac Baker, Cpl. James Oakley, Cpl. Ralph Sutton and Cpl. James Petteress.

The Airborne Rangers of the Korean War had many from their era to serve later in the Vietnam War. Over a dozen survived Korea only to be killed in action years later in Vietnam.

POST BRIEFS

Annual AER campaign begins

Continues through July 1 - The annual Army Emergency Relief campaign began Wednesday and continues through July 1. Gen. Carl E. Vuono wrote in a Department of the Army message, "Since AER is a unique organization of importance to us all, I seek your personal interest and involvement to ensure that all soldiers, active and retired, are reminded of the importance of AER and have the opportunity to contribute, voluntarily, to its support."

Marathon to affect traffic

Saturday - These reminders will help drivers get around post Saturday during the Infantry Marathon and Half Marathon.

- Traffic to Building 4 on Michael will be stopped at 8:50 a.m.
- Dixie Road, between Lumpkin and Sightseeing Road, will be closed at 9 a.m.
- All other roads on post will remain open. Five roads will be used for one way traffic:

—82nd Airborne Division Road, around the airfield
—Vibbert Avenue
—Indianhead Road
—Anderson Street
—Sightseeing Road

- Guides at 67 military police traffic control points will momentarily stop traffic at crucial intersections, giving the right of way to runners.
- Guides will also direct traffic on one-way streets.
- Traffic flow will return to normal when the race ends around 3 p.m.

Radon testing begins at Benning March 20

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Fort Benning will begin radon testing March 20 as part of an Armywide detection program.

Department of Engineering and Housing officials said testing will start with priority one areas on post — Martin Army Community Hospital and other medical facilities, dependent schools, day care centers, family housing and military housing, including BOQs, BEQs and troop billets.

Army-approved alpha-track detectors will be used to measure the level of radon gas, according to Alice Howard, environmental specialist, DEH. These detectors are not radioactive; each contains a piece of plastic film that detects the presence of radon.

Howard said firemen and other DEH personnel will hang the detectors in homes and facilities. The detectors will remain for 90 days; then they will be taken down and sent to a laboratory for testing. When the lab returns the results, DEH will notify residents of the findings. No significant readings are expected, according to DEH.

The Army's radon-detection program is in response to a Department of Defense memorandum that directed all services to establish radon programs to meet criteria established by the U. S. Environmental Protection Agency .

TRADOC installations are among some of the first Army installations to get radon detectors, and Fort Benning received its detectors in mid-February.

Benning CID busts crime ring

3 apprehended

By Shawn Bryson
Bayonet staff writer

An estimated $40,000-$50,000 worth of stolen government property was recovered earlier this week in areas of Georgia and Alabama after the apprehension of three Fort Benning soldiers by the Criminal Investigation Division.

Field camouflage sets, PRC-77 field radios, AT-4 rocket launchers, training Light Antitank Weapons and thousands of M-16 and M-60 blank rounds were among the property recovered from a storage facility on Victory Drive in Columbus and a field near Eufaula, Ala., according to Lt. Col. Sladen J. Mohl, Fort Benning CID commander.

Mohl said the soldiers, all from the 197th Infantry Brigade, were apprehended for various offenses to include conspiracy, larceny of government equipment and wrongful disposition of government property. In addition, one of the soldiers was apprehended for receiving stolen property, while the other two have been accused of housebreaking and larceny.

The apprehension of the first soldier occurred Feb. 24 at Fort Stewart, Ga. The other soldiers were apprehended at Fort Benning Feb 26.

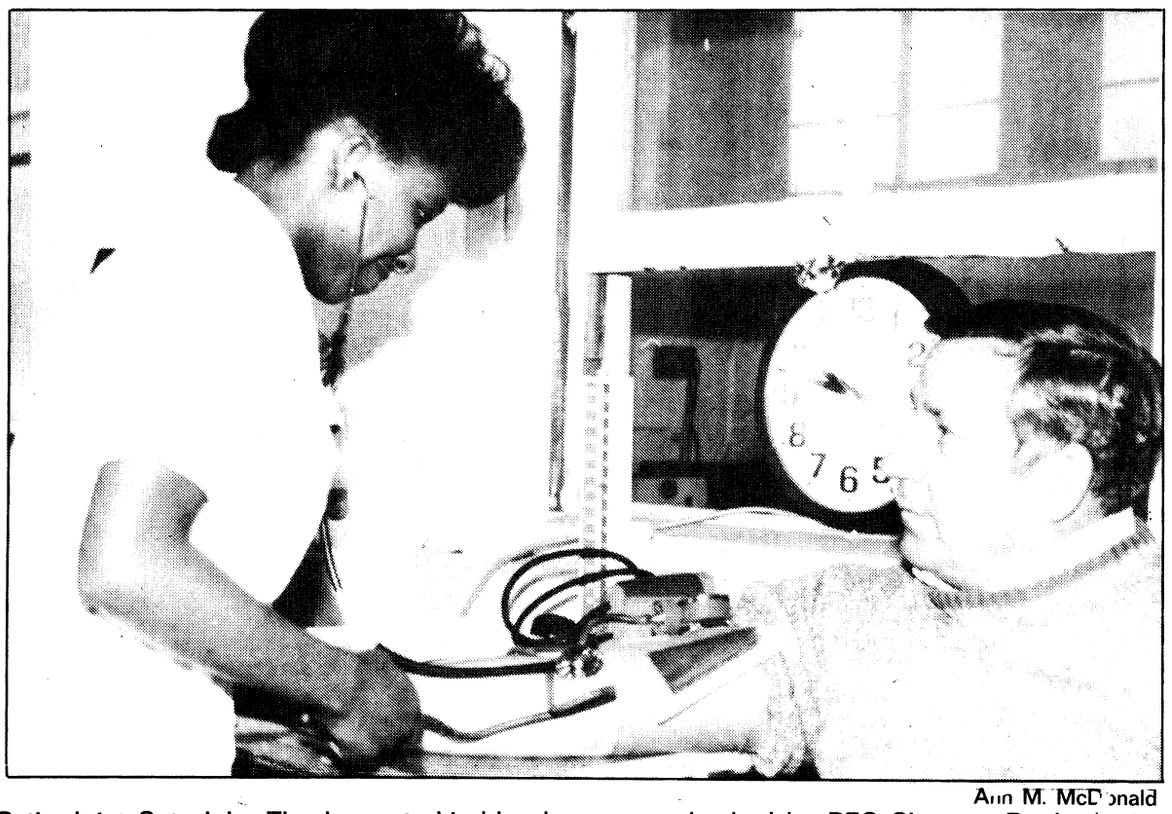
Mohl said the recovery was the single, largest recovery of stolen property at Fort Benning in recent years.

The soldiers are restricted to their companies pending consideration of disciplinary action.

Recalled retirees say 'Army hasn't changed'

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

"The Army still hasn't changed. It's still hurry and wait," said retired 1st Sgt. John Thacker during the first day of the recall of retirees for operation "Certain Sage."



They were waiting at the different stations for their initial physical examination, which is part of the recall process.

Although Thacker said it was hurry up and wait, he still was happy to be a part of the exercise.

"I had a choice, and I wanted to be here," he said. "When they contacted me about this exercise, I didn't hesitate before giving my answer."

Thacker explained that he is a plant engineer at a heating and air conditioning plant, and this is a nice change of pace.

He said that the physical examination phase has become more efficient since his time. He retired in 1980.

Retired 1st Sgt. John Thacker gets his blood pressure checked by PFC Shawton Rooks during the physical examination phase of "Certain Sage."

Retired Maj. Cleveland Ashley said, "Everything is still the same here, including the eye charts, the needles and the doctor's cold hands."

Ashley retired from the 197th Infantry Brigade two years ago.

"I'm still pretty current," he said."

He said he's physically fit as well. "The emphasis that was placed on physical training the last few years before I retired made me realize how important it is. I still exercise regularly."

"I am prepared to deploy if the need arises," Ashley said.

During the exercise, the men were divided into two groups, A and B. The only difference was A worked with a unit while B evaluated the whole exercise.

Retired Lt. Col. Wayne Andrews who was in Group A saw some glitches in the operation but thought it went well.

"The Department of Plans Training and Mobilization did a super job," he said, "but, I think if we had a little card with all the information, we wouldn't have to do some of the paperwork."

Andrews added that doing the exercise will help get rid of those glitches. He said he was proud to be a part of it.

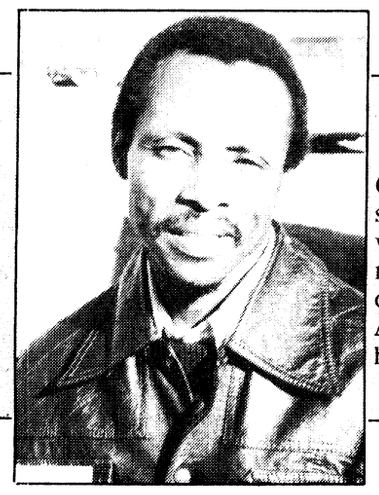
As part of his duties with group A, Andrews went out to Sand Hill to work with the people at the Infantry Training Center.

He commented that he and the rest of the members of his group who were assigned at ITC had a really good time. He said he felt everyone learned something.

"I stay active in the military community, so I am pretty well informed," Andrews said, "but, many others don't, so this exercise is ideal.

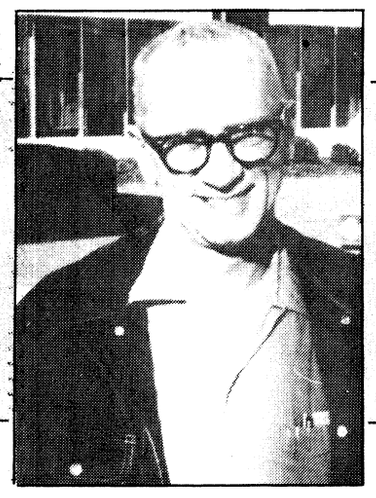
Those remarks were the general consensus of the men recalled for "Certain Sage." After 20 years or more as a soldier, you don't ever forget.

OPINION



VARIOUS VOICES:
What's it like being on active duty again?

Retired Lt. Col. Wayne Andrews - "It's reassuring that there is a mobilization plan for a national emergency. I think it is important that Fort Benning plays such a key role in this plan, and I am proud to be a part of it."



Retired 1st Sgt. John Thacker - "Right now we're trying to see if this plan is feasible. This is an ideal time to see if this will work and fine tune it."

Retired 1st Sgt. Henry L. Collins - "I've had a chance to see a lot of people I've served with before I retired. I haven't noticed any changes though because I've only been out of the Army for two years, and there haven't been many changes."

Retired SFC Donald H. Parks - "It's interesting. Because of this recall, we get to come back and see what has been changed and how much."

Retired SFC Charles Main - "Well, it's a change of pace. It is an opportunity to see if the recall system works."

Retired 1st Sgt. David E. Frank - "It's good to be back doing my part to help the Army. I just wish we could stay longer."

Snively prefers snakes to dentists

By Clyde Snively
USAIC Public Affairs Office

The Dental Corps celebrates an anniversary today, but I'd sooner wade across a Florida swamp filled with water moccasins than face a dentist. At least the snakes don't cram your mouth full of cotton and plastic and dangle tools from your lips then ask if you've been flossing.

Sure I realize good dental health can go a long way toward good physical health. I also know broccoli and liver are good for you, but you don't see me eating either one.

Another thing I don't like about dentists is they always know if you've been following good dental practices, plus they keep a record on how often you come by to see them.

Ain't no foolin' those masked men and women.

Additionally they have long, evil sounding names for whatever it is that seems to be ailing you — like gingivitis.

I can't spell it, I can't pronounce it. But I've got it.

And so do you.

Well, probably 50 percent of you do.

What's bad about this disease besides the fact it's tough to spell, is it's also painless. "That's bad?" you ask in astonishment.

Yeah, verily. For it's insidious. If you don't treat it, your teeth start to fall out, one at a time, clink, clink, and your gums bleed bright red when you brush your teeth.

It's caused by plaque, and that's why those folks in white tell us to floss. So there.

If you're like me, though, you think of a thousand reasons not to floss. "But sir, my teeth are set too close together. I can't get the floss to fit between them."

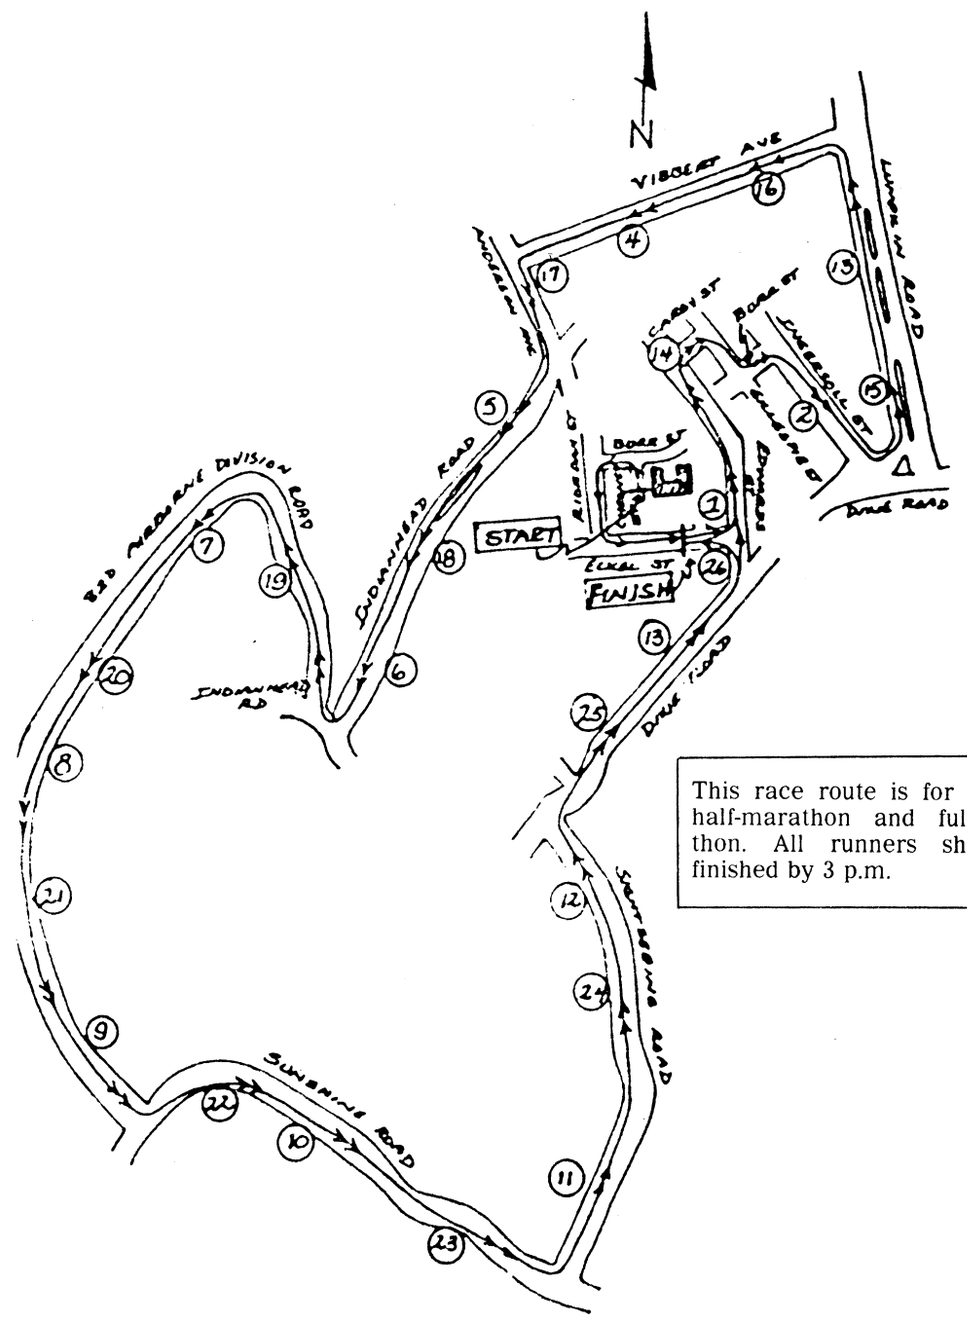
"We got an opening soon for a root canal?" the dentist casually asks the dental assistant as his way of answering your complaint.

"Yes sir, we can probably work Mr. Snively in sometime early next month," she responds sweetly.

At that point I offer them my first born son and swear that I will forever floss like any good soldier should.

Maybe if I'd been brought up in this age of enlightenment, I wouldn't have this fear of dentists.

Nowadays parents are told to start cleaning their kids' gums at birth, and the first dental check up should come at age 1.



About the time parents are told about baby-bottle tooth decay, they are counseled about preparing the baby for his first visit to the dentist.

Sometimes the parents and dental staff do role playing and all that other stuff so the kid won't bite the dentist on the hand once the probing begins.

As for me, I'm scrubbing my teeth vigorously, chasing away all that funky, colorless plaque, and what the brush misses, I try to eliminate with a good flossing — despite how close my teeth are to one another.

Somehow I've got to think prevention is the easy way out when the alternative is loss of teeth or bleeding gums. I wonder if I could visit my dentist four times a year?

Good nutrition benefits health

March has been designated by the president as National Nutrition Month. This is a worthy effort to encourage all Americans to improve their nutrition knowledge for making healthy food choices. The health benefits of good nutrition are substantiated and well-known.

This year, the Army's theme for promoting sound nutritional habits is "Controlling Fat — That's Where It's At." With the recent Surgeon General's Report on Nutrition and Health, the consumption of fat, particularly cholesterol, is of interest to us all.

I strongly urge all military and civilian personnel, family members and retirees to take advantage of the many nutrition education opportunities that will be available during the month. As a lifetime decision — choose good nutrition.

Nation recognizes women's contributions

In recognition of the numerous contributions of women to every aspect of our nation, the month of March is proclaimed "Women's History Month." This observance began as Women's History Week in Sonoma County, Calif., in 1978. Later, Public Law 100-9, enacted in 1987, designated March as National Women's History Month.

This year's theme, "Heritage of Strength and Vision," reflects the courage and dedication of women in America. Women have been among the greatest contributors to our nation. However, their meaningful role in American society has not been well recognized in our history textbooks. "Women's History Month" is a tool to help correct such historical omissions and is intended to increase awareness and improve understanding among all Americans.

All personnel at this installation and in surrounding communities are encouraged to join with fellow soldiers and citizens in enjoying activities at Fort Benning during "Women's History Month 1989."

I am here to destroy - who am I?

I am more powerful than the combined armies of the world. I have destroyed more men than all the wars of all nations. I massacre thousands of people every year. I am more deadly than bullets.

In the United States alone, I steal more than $30 billion each year. I spare no one, and I find victims among the rich and poor alike, the young and the old, the strong and the weak. Widows and widowers know me through their everlasting sorrow. I loom up in such proportions that I cast my shadow over every field of labor. I lurk in unseen places and do most of my work silently.

You are warned against me, yet you heed me not. I am relentless, merciless and cruel. I am everywhere, in the home, on the streets, in the factory, at railroad crossings, on land, in the air and on the sea. I bring sickness, degradation and death, yet few seek me out to destroy me. I crush. I maim. I will give you nothing. I may rob you of everything you have. I am your worst enemy.

I am carelessness.

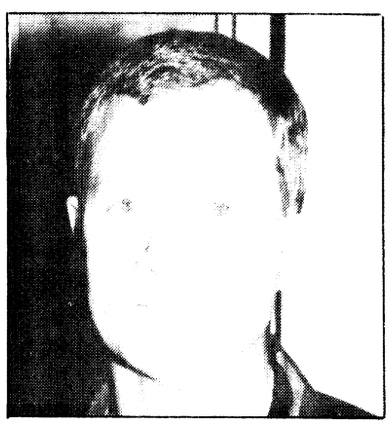
Inspector General changes watchdog image



By Agatha H. James
Bayonet staff writer

The Inspector General should no longer be perceived as a watchdog according to Fort Benning's IG.

Col. Mayo A. Hadden, III, the IG here since Sept. 1988, said the IG's primary responsibility is to assist with and inquire into individual problems for soldiers, to assist the commander with the Command Inspection Program and to conduct special inspections.

Hadden, who was inducted into the OCS Hall of Fame Feb. 10, said the IG used to be primarily concerned with inspections for compliance reasons. While the IG still wants everyone to follow regulations, the responsibility for conducting inspections to check for compliance no longer rests solely on the IG's shoulders.

Command/Compliance oriented inspections are now the unit commander's responsibility. The IG simply provides assistance, according to Hadden.

Col. Mayo A. Hadden III

"Our job is not to simply go in conscience of the command and tell a commander he's doing something that he can't do," he said. "If he is doing something wrong, we will provide him with counsel and advice. Also, we will not direct a commander how to correct a problem. We will, however, provide options, recommendations, or alternatives if he requests them."

"The bottom line is that the IG acts as an honest broker between a soldier and the command, Hadden said. "We strive to be the unbiased eyes, ears and mand." The primary inspections the IG are responsible for are special inspections where the emphasis is on the installation, major units and programs/services in terms of compliance with resource management as it crosses multiple command levels, according to Hadden.

Minor problems that surface during routine command inspections are the responsibility of the respective staff section and the unit commander for correction, he said. The IG's office is primarily concerned with the root cause of the problem itself.

"What we look at is why the problem occurred," he added. "We ask is there a training deficiency, is there a regulation that is contradictory, are we getting improper or invalid guidance from different levels in the chain of command above Fort Benning. When we identify a systemic problem, we walk the issue through the Army's IG system and try to bring about resolution.

"As a result, we are system oriented. We look at the system behind the problem and attempt to make sure it is corrected."

Hadden, who came to Fort Benning from the University of Akron in Ohio where he served as professor of Military Science/Battalion Commander for the Ohio Volunteer Battalion (ROTC) and commander of the 4th Brigade, 2nd ROTC Region, USA Cadet Command, said he didn't think the IG's role has lessened. He said its primary responsibility, in addition to inspections, is assisting soldiers, active duty and retired, and civilians in resolving problems that the normal chain of command is either unable or unwilling to handle.

"In that sense, our role has not lessened," he said. "On the inspection side, we are doing what we should be doing - that is working toward assisting the Army in becoming more efficient and more effective."

Day-to-day problems are the commander's responsibility, he said. "Our job is to help that commander in sorting out problems that go beyond his span of control or that part of the command that he cannot directly influence.

"When a person comes to see us, he comes because he perceives mistreatment or misconduct, either administratively or in the things around him. We will look into the situation and collect the facts." If a systemic problem is discovered, Hadden said the IG will assist in getting it resolved.

In 95-97 percent of its cases, the IG finds that everything is correct. "In other cases, we find that there is, in fact, a violation of regulations or misconduct of one kind or another," he said. "When that happens, we pass it along to the chain of command at the appropriate level for correction. It is then the commander's responsibility to correct it."

The IG office sometimes gets problems that should be handled by other agencies. When that occurs, Hadden said initially the facts are collected. Then, the problem is turned over to the appropriate agency.

Anonymous reports are also investigated. "How we handle each problem depends on the particular information that is reported and the facts we collect," he said.

Hadden emphasized that under no circumstances should retribution ever be taken against an individual who comes to the IG. And, all information is treated with the strictest confidentiality, he said.

Hadden said integrity is the watchword in the Inspector General's office in both fact and in perception. "There are two things I try to remember constantly," he said. "One, I work for the commanding general; two, I don't direct anything. I provide service and counsel. Our responsibility is to assist with and inquire into individual problems for soldiers and civilians and to assist the commander with the Command Inspection Program and to conduct special inspections."

Post soldiers benefit when using SATO

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

Not only are soldiers getting a discount on airline tickets for unofficial travel at the Scheduled Airline Traffic Office, but they are also benefiting from three percent of that money being channeled back into post.

That is the bargain SATO made with the military when it began operating an office on post.

SATO gave Maj. Gen. Michael F. Spigelmire, post commander, a check for $141,309, which resulted from tickets sold in the last fiscal year.

According to Mike McFarland, post SATO manager, SATO's fiscal year runs from October through September.

He said this fiscal year, Fort Benning has already generated $88,610 through this year's sales.

This year's check will go directly into the Morale, Welfare and Recreation Fund.

The money will buy equipment and help support the intramural sports program, according to the Directorate of the Personnel and Community Activities commander, Lt. Col. James Milling.

Certain Sage retirees report here

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Forty area retirees who are participating in Exercise Certain Sage reported to Fort Benning's welcome center at Soldiers' Plaza Feb. 24 to begin inprocessing.

Certain Sage, a unique three-day test of the Army's Retiree Recall Program, is designed to test the recall program that changed in March 1988. Under the new program, 20-year, active duty retirees who meet Preparation for Overseas Replacement requirements and qualify medically, can be involuntarily deployed overseas.

Each retiree was given a physical examination by staff members of Martin Army Community Hospital the first day of Hospital. Day one also included inprocessing by the post adjutant general.

Retirees joined assigned units during the second day of the exercise. Those who weren't assigned to units took a series of tests before all the retirees were updated on the latest training techniques at various ranges.

Additional mobilization instructions were given to the retirees on the last day of the exercise.

Of the retirees, 38 live in Columbus, one in Cusseta and one in Waverly Hall.

Twenty-one other installations in the United States, Europe and Hawaii will participate in Exercise Certain Sage over the next six months.

Livsey says rough times ahead

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

"Tough times are ahead. Those tough times are why you have to look toward the Association of the U.S. Army for support," said retired Gen. William J. Livsey Jr., former Fort Benning commander, to a group of 300 at the recent AUSA general membership meeting held at the Main Post Noncommissioned Officers Club.

"Since joining AUSA as a young officer, I have watched AUSA grow and become the one force that represents soldiers in Washington D.C.," he said. "I feel every member of the U.S. Army should be educated on the purpose of AUSA."

Livsey added that gaining members shouldn't be done by "arm twisting" but by telling the prospective members all the good things the organization offers.

"AUSA is going to need as much support as possible because money is going to be tight, manpower is shrinking and soldiers will need AUSA's support."

Livsey admitted that soldiers will have to tighten their belts, but he had no doubt that the best soldiers in the world could handle this situation.

"Our NCO Corps is the strongest it has ever been, and the young officers are the best I have ever seen." he said.

He said the manpower shrinkage was because recruiting objectives have not been met, and he noted that the contract for next year was way behind."

"It's going to be different than what most soldiers are used to," Livsey said, "but, if you lean toward AUSA, the only professional agency that lobbies for you in Congress, you will be okay."

Livsey commanded Benning from July 1977 through April 1979. He now travels throughout the world as a consultant.

Task Force Desert becomes 7th Ranger Battalion

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

The Ranger Training Brigade's Task Force Desert will be deactivated and redesignated 7th Ranger Battalion, Rgr. Tng. Bde. March 8, thus completing the reorganization of the unit that began in 1987.

The assistant commandant of the U.S. Army Infantry Center, Brig. Gen. William W. Hartzog, will be the reviewing officer for the ceremony. Ranger Training Brigade commander, Col. Keith M. Nightingale, will turn the colors over to Lt. Col. Douglas E. Macfarlane, who will assume command of the battalion.

The mission of Task Force Desert, located at Dugway Proving Ground, Utah, trains ranger students in desert warfare.

The new battalion will consist of a headquarters company and three ranger companies, according to Capt. Vincent Alonso, HHD commander, Rgr. Tng. Bde.

Desert training has become the capstone of the course, he said.

"This is not to diminish the value of the other battalions," Alonso said, "but, live-fire exercises will be done extensively. That type of training is becoming increasingly important throughout the Army."

He said the next battle involving U.S. forces could very possibly be fought in this type of environment.

7th Battalion's two-week phase of training begins with force-on-force training with Multiple Laser Engagement System Equipment and moves into realistic live-fire exercises consisting of ambushes and raids using realistic objectives and targets.

The activation of the 7th Ranger Battalion at Dugway completes the reorganization of the Ranger Department to the Ranger Training Brigade.

The changes began in 1987 when the Ranger Department was redesignated the Ranger Training Brigade. At that time, the 4th, 5th and 6th Ranger Battalions were activated.

TAX BREAK

Georgia Society of CPAs

Today, more than half of all mothers with babies under one year old work outside the home. That figure has increased significantly since 1976, when only 31 percent of mothers with infants worked.

One reason for the increase in working mothers is the average family's desire for additional financial support. But, ironically, when mom enters the work force to bring in extra income, the family often faces a new financial challenge: paying for child care.

If you are too aware of how child-care costs can throw a budget off course, the Georgia Society of CPAs suggests you find out how certain tax rules can help you get back on track.

Dependent Exemptions

As a parent, you can generally claim an additional exemption for each of your dependent children, as long as you supply more than one-half of their annual support. Each exemption is $1,950 for 1988 and $2,000 for 1989. Translated into dollars and cents, claiming two additional exemptions can save someone in the 28 percent tax bracket as much as $1,092 in federal taxes.

Just remember that you are not entitled to the exemption if your child has personal gross income of more than $1,950, unless he or she is under age 19 or is enrolled as a full-time student. (Next year, you will not be allowed to claim an exemption for any child who is at least 24 years of age, unless the child's income is less than the exemption amount.)

Dependent-Care Tax Credit

Do you pay a baby-sitter to care for your children while you and your spouse work? If so, you may be entitled to a dependent-care tax credit. To qualify for the credit, you and your spouse must be gainfully employed, unless one of you is physically or mentally disabled or is enrolled as a full-time student. In addition, the child-care expenses must be for a dependent under age 15 for 1988, and under age 13 starting in 1989. You should also note that in 1990 you will be required to supply the name, address, and Social Security number of the person providing the child-care services.

How much is the credit worth? Depending on your adjusted gross income, the credit equals 20 to 30 percent of your qualified child-care expenses. However, the amount of allowable expenses is capped at $2,400 for one dependent and at $4,800 for two or more dependents. You should also note that the allowable expenses cannot exceed the earned income of the lower-paid spouse.

Calculating the credit amount is really not as complicated as you may think. To summarize, if your combined AGI is under $10,000, the credit maximum is $720 for one child and $1,440 for more than one. If your AGI is more than $28,000, the credit maximum is $480 for one dependent and $960 for two or more dependents. If your AGI falls between those two figures, you determine your credit percentage by reducing the 30 percent rate by one percentage point for each $2,000 of adjusted gross income above the $10,000 floor. For example, Tom and Mary have an AGI of $24,000. They must therefore reduce the 30 percent credit rate by seven points, making their maximum credit $552 (23 percent of $2,400) for one dependent of $1,104 (23 percent of 4,800) for two or more dependents.

Finally, if you regularly pay a baby-sitter to care for your children, be sure to withhold the appropriate Social Security taxes. If you don't, the IRS will hold you liable not only for the unpaid tax but also for any penalties and interest due.

Employer-Sponsored Dependent-Care Assistance

You may be able to pay for child care with tax-free dollars if your employer offers a dependent-care assistance plan. How do these plans work? First, you provide your employer with an estimate of your annual child-care costs, up to a maximum of $5,000 if you file a joint return. Your employer will then withhold this amount from your paycheck in equal portions over the year. The money that the company sets aside is excluded from federal income tax. If this process sounds familiar, it should. The automatic deduction of pre-tax dollars is basically the same procedure as the one normally used in company IRA and 401(K) plans.

At regular intervals, you will have to inform your employer of your actual child-care costs as well as the name and the Social Security number of the person or organization providing the service. The company will then reimburse you from the untaxed money it has deducted from your regular pay.

Be away that, in most cases, you can no longer take advantage of both the dependent-care tax credit and the employer-sponsored assistance plan if your child-care expenses exceed $5,000. For 1989, you must choose between the two tax breaks.

As a general rule, married couples with lower incomes (a combined AGI of $29,750 or less) and child-care expenses under $3,200 will probably do better with the dependent-care credit. On the other hand, higher-paid employees may find company assistance plans more beneficial. For instance, Mary is in the 33 percent bracket and pays 7.51 percent in Social Security payroll tax. She pays $5,000 a year to a daycare center for her five-year-old daughter. Through an employer-sponsored assistance plan, she can save as much as $2,025 in tax. If she applies the same $5,000 to the dependent-care tax credit instead, the most she can save in taxes is $480.

Tax rules can take some of the bite out of your child-care bills, but make sure that you have all the facts. CPAs point out that many participants in employer-sponsored assistance plans don't realize that they cannot get a refund if their actual child-care expenses are less than what they originally estimated.

Benning seventh-grader wins trip to Ireland

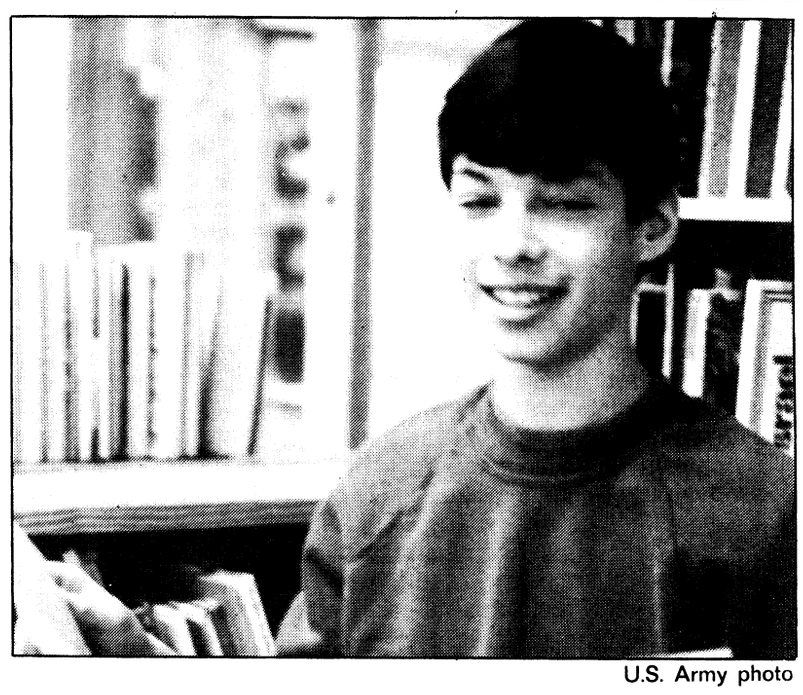
By Beth Middlemiss
Fort Benning Schools

Danny Segal, seventh-grader at Faith Middle School, will leave family and friends at home as he takes a 10-day trip to Ireland in April.

Segal won the trip when he took the grand prize in the Young Columbus Contest sponsored by the Columbus Ledger-Enquirer and Parade Magazine.

With winners from competitions throughout the United States, Segal will visit castles and cathedrals, meet with the Lord Mayor of Dublin, attend a medieval banquet, visit a Viking center, attend an exhibition hurling match, have dinner with the Gaelic Athletic Association and visit at least nine cities in the "Emerald Isle."

"I've never been to Ireland, so I'm excited about seeing it all."



The Young Columbus Contest was open to seventh- and eighth-grade students in school systems located in the readership area of the Columbus Ledger-Enquirer. It required students to submit a project in which newspapers were the main sources of information.

Segal's winning project incorporated more than 100 newspaper articles related to the 1988 presidential election. Comparing the election to a boxing match, Segal's project looked at different "rounds," which included the political conventions, the economy, the environment and the campaigns.

While Segal took first place in the Young Columbus Contest, he was not the only winner from Faith School. Scott Kyser, Faith eighth-grader, won second place; Benjie Wisdom, Faith seventh-grader, won third place; and Josie Chavez, Faith seventh-grader, won fourth place. Fifth place was won by Jason Vaugh, a student from Richards Junior High in Muscogee County. Each of these students won $100.

This is the second year that Faith School, under the sponsorship of teacher, Libbie Kurinec, has participated in the Young Columbus Contest. It is the second year that a Faith student has captured first place and the trip. Last year, Faith student, Jose Pluguez, toured England and Scotland.

"I can't say what I'm looking forward to most," said Segal. "I've never been to Ireland, so I'm excited about seeing it all. I've sent for my passport, and I can't wait to go."

Artist brings Creative Dramatics to schools

By Beth Middlemiss
Fort Benning Schools

Kay Rosenblum, a specialist in bringing Creative Dramatics to children, will work as an Artist-in-Residence at Alexander M. Patch Elementary School Monday through March 24.

"I have worked with Artists-in-Residence for the last four years," said Patch principal, Gail Wilson, "and I find bringing professional artists into classrooms one of the most motivating programs we bring to children. We are particularly pleased to have Ms. Rosenblum at Patch because we feel that her skills lend themselves so well to exploring the creative process with our kindergarten and first-grade students."

Kay Rosenblum

Rosenblum uses a blend of physical exercises, dance movements, music, art and games to help children freely use their imaginations. "In many ways Creative Dramatics can be called organized play," Rosenblum said. "I have used Creative Dramatics not only as a media for the expression of the imagination, but also to present ideas about geography, history and sociology."

Rosenblum became interested in working with children when she lived across the street from a school. "I was working as an actress but hearing the children's bright voices every day acted as a lure for me. Sort of a reverse Pied Piper effect."

Now, with a child of her own, her involvement with children has steadily increased, "Creative Dramatics is a creative outlet for me. It's fun, and I feel the work is important," she said.

Rosenblum currently teaches at Georgia State University's School for Scholars, Horizon Theatre and Mary Lin Elementary in Atlanta. She enjoys participating in the Arts Program for Children every fall at the Piedmont Arts Festival. Each summer, she works with Open City Theatre's Artsbuster's Camp. She is certified by the Georgia Council for the Arts as an Artist-in-Residence.

During her three weeks at Patch Elementary, Rosenblum will work extensively with the children, making up stories and acting them out for classmates and parents. Also planned is a workshop for the teachers on how to bring Creative Dramatics into the classroom.

Just for Fun, a workshop for Patch School children and their parents will be held March 14 at 7 p.m. Information will be sent to Patch School parents prior to this workshop.

Shut-ins will also be provided assistance. Call Margaret Whitehead, RSVP Office, 324-4347.

Residents encouraged to participate - By working together March 17 - 24, we can clean up Fort Benning during Post Clean-up. Many commanders are doing their parts by allowing their on-post soldiers a half day off to join their families in this undertaking. Some units, along with Directorate of Engineering and Housing, will provide vehicle support to assist with the disposal of large debris. If you have questions, call your area coordinator, mayor or Community Life noncommissioned officer in charge.

Pre-Retirement Orientation - A Pre-Retirement Orientation will be held Wednesday, 8:30 a.m. in Building 4, Classroom 6. If you have 18 years or more of active duty, you should plan to attend for information concerning retirement benefit changes. If you are married, your spouse should know what to expect since your family is an important part of your planning. The program is not intended for personnel who have already submitted their retirement applications. However, you, too, are invited to attend. At 1 p.m., there will be a financial planning and money management seminar for anyone who is interested. Pre-register by calling the Retirement Services Office, building 2635, 545-2715/5369. Uniform is duty uniform or appropriate civilian attire.

Prayer groups help families in times of need

By Debra Galle
USAIC Chaplain's Office

A Fort Benning family was devastated by a fire in their home recently. They had lost almost everything.

Within hours, food, clothing and other essentials were delivered to their door by women who heard of the emergency via a telephone network or more specifically, a "prayer chain".

Prayer groups and chains have long been popular in civilian churches and have been a welcome addition to many community-minded Army families.

Several years ago, members of the Protestant church began a prayer ministry known as the Protestant Women of the Chapel at Fort Benning. Following their lead, the post chapter of the Military Council of Catholic Women adopted a similar practice.

The PWOLC and MCCW groups enlist the method of chain calling to send prayer intentions and news of praise and thanksgiving for prayers they feel have been answered. The groups of volunteers are relatively small, but most consider their private efforts of prayer an important ministry to the community, church and one another.

"I enjoy being part of the prayer chain," confided one volunteer. "It makes me feel like even I can help someone who is in more need than I am."

Several of the volunteers are service member's widows who remain active in the groups, and they seem to find the ministry especially gratifying.

These volunteers represent the community as a whole. The Protestant and Catholic groups often combine information and intentions.

The story of these little known spiritual groups provides an example of another way the military community seeks to help itself. That these groups of women are moved to informally provide an avenue of fervent prayer for others is indcative of the belief that God answers prayers.

Prayer has power to change lives

By Chap. Donald W. McSwain
Chief, Chapel Centers/Religious Activities Branch

The model of prayer that Jesus taught proclaims God's open-door policy to all those who come to Him as Father. On this World Day of Prayer, we are again reminded of this ecumenical family of faith into which we have been called.

Jesus startled his disciples when he taught them to pray the Lord's Prayer. Slowly, but certainly, this small group of believers began to understand there is no way to exclude others when you begin prayer with "Our Father. . ."

Hal Lynch of San Antonio, Texas, a prisoner of war during WWII, recalls an event in his life that enlarged his understanding of a worldwide family. Listen to the story in his words:

"Good Friday began like any other for the men in Stalag Luft IV B.

The year was 1945. The place was Langwasser, near Nuremberg, Germany.

The majority of the men in the POW compound were U.A. Army Air Corps personnel; however, there were many British RAF men and a few U.S. Infantry tank men.

The adjacent compound was crowded with Russian and Siberian prisoners.

On this cold, dark morning in March, we answered the roll call whistle with our usual reluctance. The POWs formed a long line near the center of the compound for the daily head count.

Shortly after the count started, a prisoner whispered 'I think today is Good Friday.'

The only response was a muttered, 'So what?'

The ranking American officer in the compound was a middle-aged West Pointer named Col. Paul Goode. Because of his age, we called him Pop.

Pop Goode had been captured during the Battle of the Bulge, Hitler's well-remembered attack through the Ardennes in Belgium. At the time, Pop Goode was one of Gen. George Patton's tank commanders.

Following morning count, Goode called a few of us together to talk about Good Friday. He felt that we should have services on this holy day. A POW who spoke German was detailed to ask a guard for help in getting a clergyman for us.

By noon, the compound was buzzing with rumors that there was a chaplain — a paratrooper captured on D-Day — in one of the other compounds.

The word was that he was making the rounds and would reach our compound in the late afternoon. Surprisingly, the rumor proved to be true.

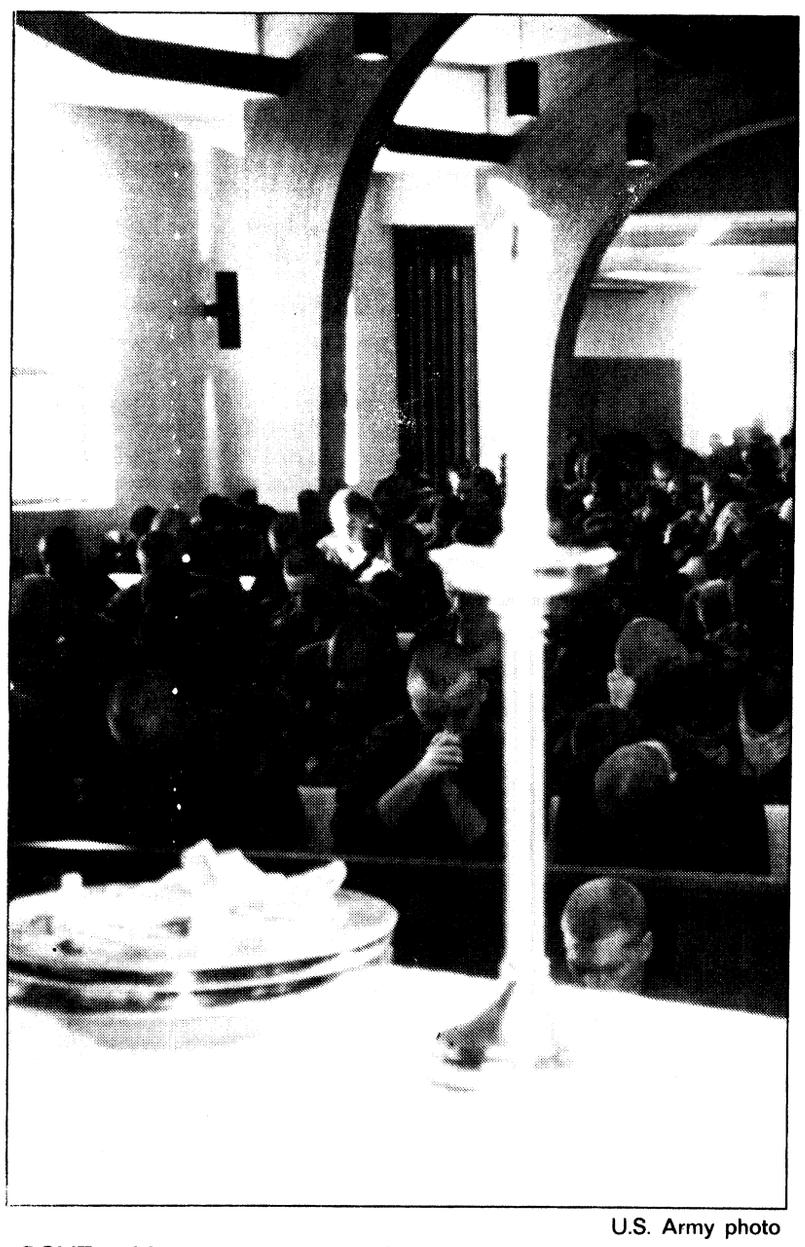
Shortly before sundown, the chaplain was brought to our compound. He wasn't a big man, but it was obvious he was a paratrooper. He was trim, neat and rugged in appearance. He carried three small leather-bound books in his hand.

A large, hangar-sized tent was cleared for services, and soon the chaplain issued a call for Protestant POWs to enter the tent. Russians and Serbs in the neighboring compound crowded close to the fence to listen to the singing.

When the service had been concluded, the chaplain then invited the Catholic POWs to join him in the tent in worship

About 30 minutes later, the Catholic POWs filed out. The chaplain came out of the tent and asked for silence. When we were quiet, he spoke:

'I'd like to invite members of the Hebrew faith into the tent to worship with me. It is after sundown and the Sabbath has arrived.'



The Jewish prisoners entered the tent. For the next half hour, they worshiped God in their own manner on their Sabbath, led by an Army chaplain.

After the chaplain left, we milled around in silence. The look on the faces of POWs indicated clearly how important the paratrooper's visit had been.

That night, as we tried to sleep, one of the men remarked, 'I wonder what faith that chaplain belongs to.'

No one said a word for a while, and then a POW spoke up.

'I hope I never find out. Truly, that chaplain was one of God's own men.'"

Pray for my soul.
More things are wrought

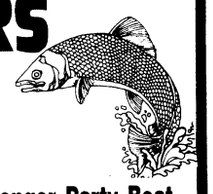
VA Q&A

Veterans Administration

Q — My firm has a contract to provide services to the Veterans Administration. Is the contract still binding after March 15, 1989, when the VA becomes the Department of Veterans Affairs?

A — Yes. The legislation making VA a cabinet department contains what is called a "savings provision" that ensures the continued validity of all legal documents concerning the Veterans Administration.



Q — Are the proceeds from National Service Life Insurance considered as income for VA's Improved Pension?

A — Yes, under the current pension program, proceeds are considered as income.

Q — I am interested in purchasing a motor home. Can I use my VA home loan guaranty?

A — No. Motor homes are not included in the VA Loan Guaranty Program.

Colonel promotion board for fiscal 1989 convenes

The Army colonel promotion selection board for fiscal 1989 convened Feb. 21. The board will consider 1,719 officers in and above the promotion zone and will also review the files of 3,413 lieutenant colonels from year-groups 1969 and 1970 for below-the-zone consideration.

The board is expected to adjourn March 22, and results will be released in early July.

Marsh sets tenure record

When Secretary of the Army John O. Marsh Jr. finished work Feb. 2, he set a record. With eight years, four days in office, Marsh became the longest-serving Army secretary in American history.

That breaks the 180-year-old record set by Henry Dearborn during the presidency of Thomas Jefferson. Dearborn served as Jefferson's secretary of war for eight years, three days in 1801-1809.

Marsh's tenure in office is more than three times longer than the average of his predecessors. He is also one of the few senior Defense Department officials to have served throughout the eight years of the Reagan administration.

Marsh expects to turn over his job as secretary of the Army to a Bush administration appointee soon. He's noncommittal about what he will do next, saying only that he intends to return to his first love, practicing law.

Army Families bulletin available in Soldiers' Plaza

A trip to your local commissary, post exchange, medical treatment facility, dental clinic, ACS office and other centers of family activities can bring you an eyeful of helpful information from the winter issue of Army Families.

Now at Army installations worldwide, the latest issue is dedicated to quality-of-life issues for Army family members to help them better meet the special demands of military living.

The Army family publication features the latest information on the family-member dental plan, an update on the Army Family Action Plan, plus new and simple rules for reserve–component soldiers and their family members using commissaries. It also provides money-saving ideas for all.

Copies are available at the Welcome Center, building 2634, in Soldiers' Plaza.

TAPC urges officers to keep records up to date

The U.S. Total Army Personnel Command urges all officers to request a copy of their microfiche record from PERSCOM and review it.

Correct, up-to-date information in an officer's service record is imperative.

An incomplete record of service can affect financial entitlements and future retirement benefits. Missing documents can also delay personnel actions such as publishing retirement orders.

The 10 most important documents to include are:

★ DD Form 214, Discharge Certificate
★ DD Form 4, Record of Enlistment
★ DD Form 47, Record of Induction
★ DA Form 249, DA Form 1383 or AGUZ Form 115, Annual or Terminal Statement of Retirement Points
★ National Guard Service Form 23, Retirement Credit Records
★ Active duty orders
★ Medical/dental school transcripts
★ Medical school internship statements
★ DA Form 71 and National Guard Form 337, Oath of Office
★ All statements of service from the Navy, Marines, Air Force, Coast
★ Guard or Public Health Service

Officer microfiche may be requested from Commander, PERSCOM, ATTN: TAPC-MSR-S, 200 Stovall St., Alexandria, Va. 22332.

Test offers move choices to advanced course officers

By Darrel Cochran
Army News Service

A test of an advanced assignment program for officers bound for their branch advanced course will begin April 1 and run through March 31, 1990, according to Army personnel officials.

During the test period, officers en route to the advanced course may choose one of three options:

- Leave their families in place in the United States.
- Move their families to the advanced course location.
- Move their families to their next projected duty location in the United States.

Officers must enroll in the program through their career managers.

The Officer Advanced Course orders of those enrolled will have a statement to that effect in the special instructions block.

For test purposes, the following changes to housing policies will apply:

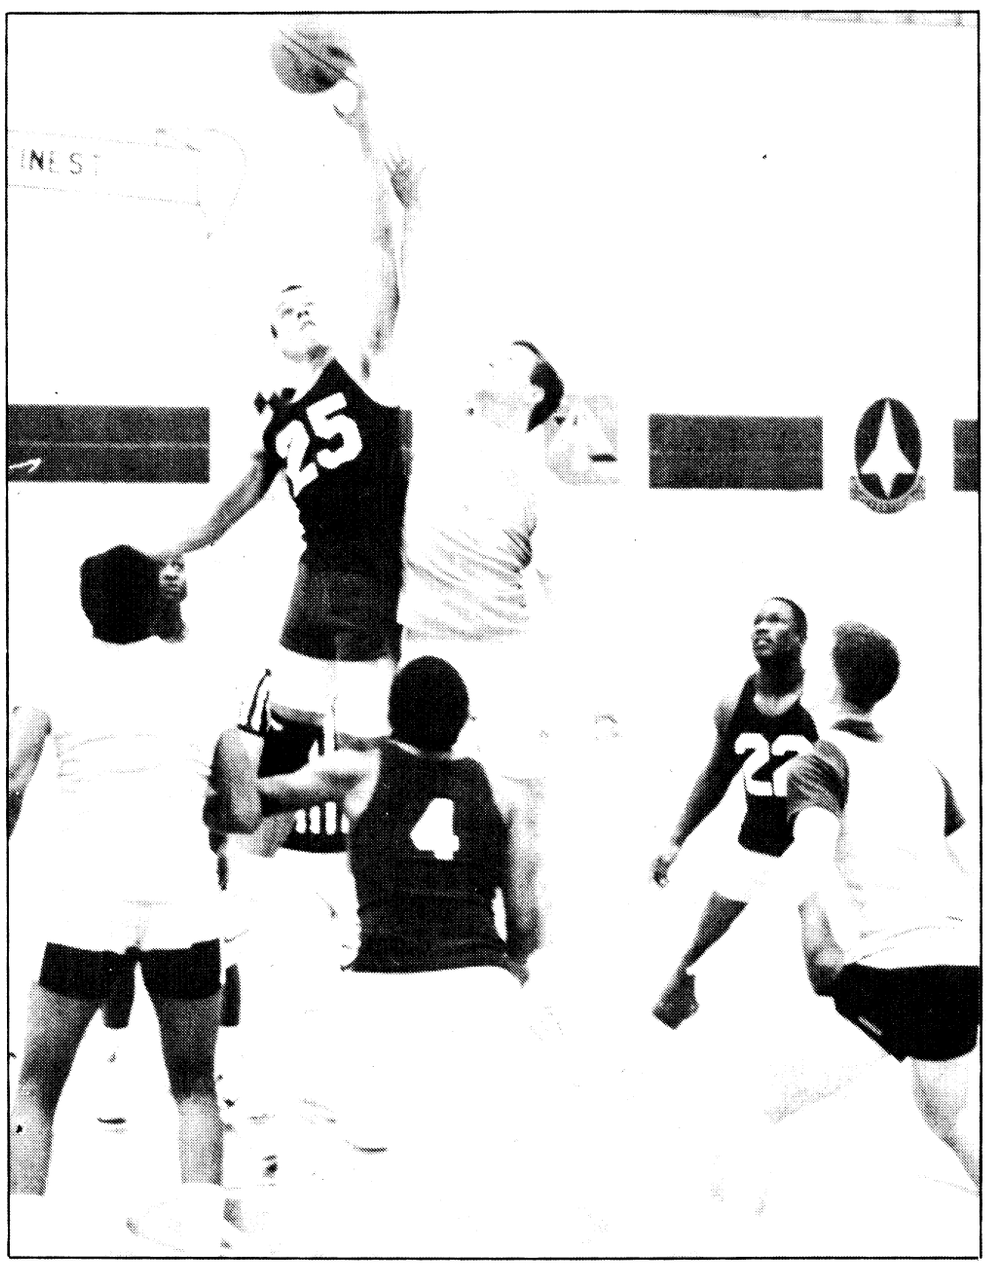
If the officer is occupying family quarters at the current U.S. duty station, the family will be permitted to remain in quarters until the officer completes the course. This option is not open to officers serving outside CONUS, except in Alaska and Hawaii.

If the officer elects to move his or her family to the follow-on duty station, the spouse may apply and sign for family quarters.

Officers departing an installation operated by another service may not retain their government quarters. Officers whose follow-on assignment is to an installation operated by another service will not be allowed to apply for quarters at the follow-on duty station.

Officers who do elect to go to their school location unaccompanied should be advised that BOQ may not be available, and that no additional allowance for lodging will be authorized.

Therefore, to avoid unexpected financial hardship, they should determine housing availability before departing.



Payment of the variable housing allowance will be based on the officer's location, not the location of the family.

Officers electing to move their families to their follow-on duty station must be scheduled for an assignment in CONUS.

The U.S. Total Army Personnel Command will monitor and evaluate the test for participation and cost savings. Officers wishing additional information about enrollment in the program should contact their career manager at PERSCOM.

Other points of contact are Maj. Kuhn at PERSCOM, autovon 221-5191 for program policy, and Virginia Hiilsmeier at the office of the Deputy Chief of Stafff for Personnel, autovon 225-3149 for housing issues.

Program will place workers displaced by base closings

By Jim Garamone
American Forces Information Service

A total of 9,000 civilian jobs will be eliminated if the base closure and realignment recommendations are approved by Congress, said defense civilian personnel policy officials.

But people holding those jobs will not be left in the lurch. They will be eligible for the priority placement program, and officials expect little trouble in placing employees in new jobs.

In all, 25,000 civilian positions will be affected by the proposed closures and realignments, according to Frank P. Cipolla, director of personnel management in DoD's Office of Civilian Personnel Policy. The majority of the jobs will transfer with the organizations, and employees will have the option to transfer along with their jobs.

For those whose jobs are eliminated or who elect not to transfer with them, there should not be a significant problem absorbing that number of workers within the system. "If historical statistics hold true, then we should be able to place 60 percent of those displaced workers, mostly within their commuting areas," said Cipolla. "Another 20 percent exercise either optional retirement or early retirement. A final 20 percent take jobs with other government agencies or jobs in the private sector or just resign and receive severance pay."

Cipolla said that the priority placement system should be able to accommodate everybody except those in the more remote locations who don't wish to relocate.

The priority placement program is the main Defense Department system used to find jobs for employees whose jobs are abolished. There is also an Office of Personnel Management program — called the Displaced Employee Program — which gives employees whose jobs are abolished priority status.

This is how the system works:

If the base closures and realignments are approved by Congress, then the services and defense agencies will work out specific plants to close and realign the bases. If approved, the actions will start in January 1990 and must be finished by September 1995.

Employees affected will receive counseling from their local civilian personnel offices on how the changes will affect them. If their jobs are being transferred, then they will be given the option of going along with them. If they elect not to go — or if their jobs are being abolished — then they are eligible for the priority placement system.

Slowing the flow of water makes every drop count

By Becky Ray
Energy Branch

In the 1900s the average American used about 20 gallons of water a day. Today, because of better hygiene and more labor-saving devices, we use about 50 to 75 gallons per person each day. Water use also increases in summer, because we bathe more often, water lawns, wash cars and fill swimming pools.

Meeting the huge demand for water at Fort Benning has in past years been a challenge for the post's water treatment plant. The process of pumping water from Upatoi Creek, cleaning and treating the water to make it drinkable, and pumping it to areas all over post is a time and energy-intensive effort. Although water is free at the source, treatment is a very expensive process. That's why it's important that water not be wasted.

- Although most of the best ways to save water are more obvious, such as turning off faucets when the water isn't used, others are less obvious.
- Permanent press cycles on some washing machines use up to 20 gallons more than a normal cycle.
- A toilet can waste 200 gallons of water a day through a slow leak that you might not be able to hear. To test, put a few drops of food coloring in the toilet tank and wait 15 minutes. If color shows in the bowl and the toilet has not been flushed, there's a leak.
- Low-flow shower heads reduce the amount of water used per minute while providing plenty of pressure for a comfortable shower.
- Water-saving or short cycles on dishwashers use about 7.5 gallons of water, less than half that used in normal cycles.
- Mulching around trees, flowers and shrubs helps control weeds and also holds moisture in the ground, so you can water less.
- In a garden, a soaker hose is the most efficient way to water because water is directed at the roots and less evaporates.
- Water leaks, even small ones, can waste hundreds of gallons of water a day. If you find a leak that can't be repaired through self-help, call the DEH Work Order Section at 545-2135. If the leak is severe and you can locate the cut-off valve, turn the water off until a repair can be made.

Water conservation is important all through the year. Increased demands, however, could cause water shortages if too much is wasted. Please "slow the flow" and make every drop count.

American life foreign to Indonesian-born 36th Eng. soldier

By Shawn Bryson
Bayonet staff writer

For most soldiers, the United States is home. It's where they are born and raised.

For Spec. Douglas J. Gulleson, an American since birth, the American way of life is somewhat foreign.

Gulleson, 21, was born in Indonesia and raised there for 18 years. The son of American missionaries, he has only spent about four and a half years in his homeland and says he's still adjusting.

"I had only been to the United States for about six months every five years," Gulleson said. "That wasn't really enough time to meet friends or learn much about this country."

Gulleson returned when he was 18 and attended a Bible school in Alberta, Canada for one semester.

"When I came back to the U.S., I had sort of a loss of identity," he said. "Most 21-year-old Americans know all about football, popular music and T.V. I never saw a television show until I was 7 years old."

He said, too, that conversations with peers sometimes become confusing because of the differences in backgrounds.

An NBC specialist for Headquarters and Service Company, 43rd Engineer Battalion, 36th Engineer Group, Gulleson joined the Army two years ago for several reasons.

"I needed time to think about my future, and the college fund was important too," he said. "But I guess I also joined out of patriotism. I think that living in a foreign country like Indonesia, where there's a lot of poverty, made me more patriotic."

Gulleson's education included five years of tutoring from his parents. After that, he attended international schools in Indonesia. "The high school I went to had students from 52 different nationalities, and my graduating class had 18 nationalities."

Eighteen years in the country made Gulleson fluent in Indonesian. In fact, he feels as though he speaks the language better than English. But two languages are not enough for Gulleson. He is currently awaiting acceptance into the Defense Language Institute in Monterey, Calif., where he hopes to learn Arabic. "After DLI, I want to go to Fort Huachuca, Ariz. to train as an intelligence analyst," he said.

Gulleson said he would like to go to school at Georgetown University in Washington, D.C., and that his ultimate goal is to put his language skills to work for the Federal Bureau of Investigation or the Central Intelligence Agency.

Questions help officers decide about advanced assignment program

Army News Service

The following questions and answers about the officer advanced assignment program test are provided by the U.S. Total Army Personnel Command to help eligible officers decide whether or not they wish to participate.

Q: What is the advanced assignment program?

Currently, when officers are assigned as students to a permanent change of station school, they move their families to the school location while they attend school. The advanced assignment program will give them the choice of taking their families with them to school, leaving their families at their current duty station or sending their families to the officer's post-school assignment location.

Q: Who will be eligible for this program?

For purposes of the test, officers selected to attend their branch officer advanced course during the period April 1, 1989 to March 30, 1990 are eligible. Officers electing to leave their families at their current station must be assigned to an Army installation in the 50 United States.

Officers electing to move their families to their post-school location must be scheduled for assignment to an Army installation in the 50 United States.

Q: Is this program voluntary?

Yes, and officers will be allowed to change their minds and not participate any time prior to actually beginning their move.

Q: How successful is the Total Army Personnel Command in making follow-on assignments work?

PERSCOM currently satisfies 98 percent of assignments made in the Home Base and Advanced Assignment Program and Officer Advanced Course Assignment Program. Officers who extend their tours in dependent-restricted areas account for most HAAP assignment cancellations.

Q: How many officers will participate in this program?

The test seeks to determine that. The Army will send about 5,000 officers to advanced courses during the test period.

Q: What happens if the follow-on assignment cannot be honored?

New assignment instructions will be issued and the officers and families will be moved to the new location. The assignment failure will be included in the evaluation of the program.

Q: Will officers be authorized additional travel and transportation allowances?

As an exception to policy, the Army will pay mileage to officers when they accompany their families from the old duty station to the new duty station, in addition to mileage from the old duty station to the school location and from there to the new duty station. The Army will not pay additional per diem for "designated location" moves, nor will officers be authorized extra travel time. Additional travel time will be charged as ordinary leave.

Q: Will officers and families be authorized to use more than one privately owned vehicle when they move?

Yes. Officers will be authorized a mileage allowance in lieu of transportation. However, they will only be entitled to ship one privately owned vehicle at government expense.

Q: Will officers receive extra allowances or preference for bachelor office quarters if they elect to participate in this program?

Since the officers will be assigned PCS to their schools they won't be entitled to additional housing allowances. Participants will have priority 3A for BOQs, which means they will have priority over geographical bachelors. Officers won't be entitled to additional household goods weight allowances.

Q: What will be the housing policy for families?

Officers will be paid VHA based on the officer's location if the families don't occupy government quarters. Families occupying government quarters at the old station will be allowed to remain in quarters. For families moving to follow-on assignment locations, spouses will be allowed to place the family on waiting lists and to sign for government quarters.

Q: What will be the effect on families?

Families will be separated for approximately six months. They will be maintaining two households without additional entitlements. However, they won't be required to move twice within six months and school-age children won't face the potential of two disruptions of their educations Working spouses would either be able to stay in their jobs longer or get a head start on finding new employment.

Q: How will success or failure be determined?

The program will be considered successful if officers participate without experiencing undue financial hardship and the Army saves PCS funds. The program fails if officers don't participate, if participants experience financial or family hardship, or if the Army can't document PCS savings.

Q: If the program proves successful, will it be extended or made mandatory?

If the program proves successful it will be considered for extension. HQDA will evaluate the potential for honoring follow-on assignments prior to recommending extending the program. The Army can't recommend making the program mandatory since there is no statutory authority for separating families in CONUS.

Q: How will HQDA document costs and make cost comparisons?

Assignment managers will provide data on each officer participating to the office of the deputy chief of staff for personnel. By knowing departure station, school location, post-school duty station and family demographics, personnel officials can determine the cost of the move.

Displaced

Employees will register for the program at the local civilian personnel offices. In addition to normal job qualifications, they can also list up to five skill specialties they are qualified in and the areas they would relocate to. According to Cipolla, most of those applying — about 60 percent — will find suitable employment within commuting distance of their homes.

If the commuting area is not likely to produce sufficient job opportunities, the employees may register for a wider geographic area. These registrations are maintained by the DoD Data Support Center in Dayton, Ohio. Computerized listings are sent every two weeks to every DoD civilian personnel office in the world. This listing is known as the "stopper list," and its name implies the actions that are taken. If there is a match between an employee's qualifications and a job at a place the employee has listed, then all other employment actions stop, and the job is offered to the employee on the list.

If the offer is turned down, the employee is taken off the list. The employee can still be considered for other government jobs, but will not receive the same priority for placement.

"That's why it is critical that employees be serious when listing desired geographical areas," Cipolla said. "They should not list an area if they have no desire to work and live there."

The skills employees have will dictate where they can find employment. "While there are many skills common throughout the Department of Defense, there are others that are specialized and can be found at only a few places," Cipolla said. "When employees come in for their initial counseling, they will be told where in the Department of Defense their specialties are, and they can use this information when registering with the priority placement program."

One factor working in employees' favor is time. If the base closings and realignments are approved, employees will have up to a year's general notice. "Normal reduction-in-force notification is 60 days," Cipolla said. Employees will have at least that much time and possibly more since they can stay on the priority placement list for up to a year.

Employees who must move — including those who must move because they are transferring with their jobs — will have relocation costs picked up by the government.

The priority placement program started in the mid-1960s when about 900 bases and posts were closed. To date, it has helped place more than 90,000 civilian employees in new jobs.

The program will kick into high gear if Congress approves the base closures.

Schools and education among subjects covered in Army's 1988 family survey

By J. C. Bean
Army News Service

More than 12,000 spouses answered questions on schools and education for the first survey of Army families released in mid-1988. Here's what researchers found out:

The report showed that children of Army families attended a variety of schools, ranging from Department of Defense Dependent Schools, or DoDDS, overseas; military-post schools, also referred to as Section 6; on- and off-post public schools to private and parochial ones.

Families with children in kindergarten through grade 12 had them enrolled mainly in two types of schools: DoDDS for families who live outside the United States and off-post public schools for those families living stateside.

Of the Army families stationed overseas with school-aged children, about 80 percent reported their oldest child was enrolled in a DoDDS school.

For those families who lived in the United States with school-aged children, almost three-fourths of them said their oldest child attended public schools off-post.

Respondents with one or more school-aged child were asked how satisfied they were with the quality of education provided by the school their child or children attended.

Researchers asked this question for two reason. First, they wanted to get an indication of the distribution of families by types of schools. Second, they wanted to find out how satisfied families were with the different types of schools.

Data results showed that about three-quarters of spouses reported they were satisfied with the quality of education provided by the schools their children attended.

Important differences in levels of satisfaction existed between wives of enlisted soldiers and those of officers, researchers say.

According to the survey results, officers' wives said they were less satisfied with DoDDS and somewhat more satisfied with off-post public schools, 77 percent versus 71 percent. Results showed they were also more satisfied with private or parochial schools, 90 percent versus 70 percent.

According to researchers, these differences may reflect several factors, including children's ages and thus the proportion of them in high school or grade school.

Also, they may possibly reflect the differences in expectations for the schools, researchers say. They say, too, that the data reported on satisfaction with aspects of schools help increase the understanding of parents' concerns about the schools their children attend.

Although satisfaction varied by certain aspects of schools, generally it was high for curriculum, quality of teaching and placement in schools or classes, the report said.

Lower satisfaction rates with DoDDS' summer school, school lunch and sports programs, as well as their bus monitors, probably reflects the lack of programs or limited development rather than the quality of available programs, researchers say.

Researchers remind interested readers that copies of the survey report may be obtained from the U.S. Army Community and Family Support Center, Hoffman Building 1, 2461 Eisenhower Avenue, Alexandria, Va., 22331-0500 on a first-come, first-served basis.

Spec. Carlos Bones digs into the volcanic rock of the mountains of Camp Santiago, Puerto Rico.

18th Infantry soldiers deploy to Camp Santiago, Puerto Rico

By D. L. Bridges
197th Infantry Brigade correspondent

Company D, 2nd Battalion, 18th Infantry deployed to Camp Santiago, Puerto Rico, last month to serve as the Opposing Forces for the 3rd Battalion, 75th Infantry Ranger Regiment and to train on local training sites.

Co. D, which was acting the part of a guerrilla force named the "Puerto Ricardos," immediately noticed a change in their environment during the first six days in Puerto Rico. The soldiers left early morning 30-degree temperatures and landed in 80 degree temperatures at Roosevelt Roads Naval Air Station.

After moving to battle positions to begin preparing for the ranger attack, the company discovered the terrain of mountains and rock was its next worst enemy.

"The temperature and rugged terrain have slowed the work pace because the men aren't acclimated yet," said SSgt. Benjamin Dowdy. "We really have to enforce heat and water discipline to avoid heat casualties."

Puerto Rico's terrain is the result of volcanic reactions and is strewn with rocks.

"I've been in the Army over five years, and I've never dug into anything like this," noted Spec. Darrell Watson, a Co. D infantryman. "It's all rocks and cacti."

"I had to get use to climbing up and down the mountains because I'm used to the Texas flatland," said PFC David White, a Co. D infantryman. "But, I love this job and the people I work with."

Heat and the stress of building the fighting positions in such inhospitable surroundings caused the men to work harder to accomplish the mission. The soldiers stayed in good spirits, but their sense of humor diminished slightly as time wore on.

"It's always great to get a chance to train in different parts of the world," said PFC Noel Vickers, a Co. D medic.

Once the company had prepared positions, they waited for the enemy. The rangers' arrival began with a parachute drop at Camp Santiago and culminated with a night road march and an attack of another guerrilla mountain position. After probing for the guerrillas and locating their positions, the Rangers raided each camp.

"I think we did a good job preparing our defense, and, if we had been using real bullets, we would have annihilated them. With the smoke, explosions and shooting going on everywhere, it seemed real authentic," said Spec. Aaron Wright, Co. D infantryman.

"It was a well constructed scenario and very realistic," said Spec. Richard Grecol. "I learned to respect the rangers, too. They had to run up the mountain through our obstacles. They were virtually out of water, but still they came. Once they reached the top of the mountain, they remained disciplined and didn't lose control of their emotions," noted Grecol. "It was also the best Multiple Integrated Laser Engagement System iteration I've been a part of in my two and a half years in the Army."

Early the following morning after the Rangers left the mountains, the Co. D guerrillas went about the task of filling in the fighting positions created through the effort of blistered hands and recovering concertina wire and building supplies.

The guerrillas moved on to the next mission of providing daily OPFOR elements against ranger platoons on two objectives using MILES equipment and blank ammunition.

Transportation of personnel and supplies was handled by a detachment from Support Battalion, 197th Infantry Brigade.

"We deployed 13 soldiers to support Co. D and the rangers," said Spec. Rahn Murrell, the Spt. Bn. attachment leader. "We worked 12-14 hours everyday to make sure they had food and transportation, and we made all our missions with no problems." I like being here, and I look forward to going to the beach during rest and recreation time to relax," he added.

"Our job was really important," said Spec. Gary Wood, a Co. D infantryman. "The rangers relied heavily on us, and we worked late to get everything done. The rangers were good to us and gave us the opportunity to do some training with weapons and equipment."

Co. D. benefited especially from the support element's assets because of the distances to many of the training areas.

"The support people did a good job, and they got us to our training areas day in and day out in some pretty desolate areas," said Cpl. Vincent Garret, a Co. D infantryman. "It was certainly better than walking in the heat and dust."

Soldiers visit St. Thomas, other sites

By D. L. Bridges
197th Infantry Brigade correspondent

Company D, 2nd Battalion, 18th Infantry soldiers received a well deserved break from their duties as opposing forces for the 3rd Battalion, 75th Infantry Ranger Regiment in Puerto Rico February 10-12.

The soldiers had a choice of a trip to St. Thomas in the Virgin Islands or Roosevelt Roads Naval Air Station on Puerto Rico's east coast.

All facilities at Roosevelt Roads were available to soldiers who chose that trip. Many took advantage of the club and dining facilities, PX and beaches. Many could be found at the beach swimming and getting a tan.

"I've had a really good time here," said Spec. Joey Cardwell. "I've spent my time at the beach swimming and snorkeling and just taking it easy."

"Everything's been great," said Sgt. Dennis Gregory. "The clubs are great, and the chow is really good. The water at the beaches is really clear, so I've collected some sea shells while I had the chance."

"Rest and relaxation have been a welcome relief," said Spec. Michael Mitchum. "Roosevelt Roads has a great night life, and the pina colada here is awesome. I wish we could be here longer so I could see more of the sights of Puerto Rico."

Soldiers who decided to go to St. Thomas received the chance to experience the charms and sights of one of the most famous vacationing areas in the Virgin Islands.

The soldiers took a ferry to St. Thomas and stayed at the Virgin Isle Hotel. They were welcomed by a luau with a band and lots of food and dancing at the hotel.

"It was a big party for everyone," said SSgt. David Gunn. "There were free scuba lessons and a jazz band and plenty of chances to buy souvenirs. What made it even more special was our trip away from the tourist areas.

"We found a neighborhood bar that was founded in 1972 by two Chicago Bears football players, one of whom was a Vietnam veteran," said Gunn. "After an initiation ceremony, they made us members and awarded us wild-colored bandanas."

"We told them we'd start a Georgia chapter when we returned to Fort Benning," said SSgt. Scott Mansits.

Infantrymen test water skills on Juaca Bay in Puerto Rico

By D. L. Bridges
197th Infantry Brigade correspondent

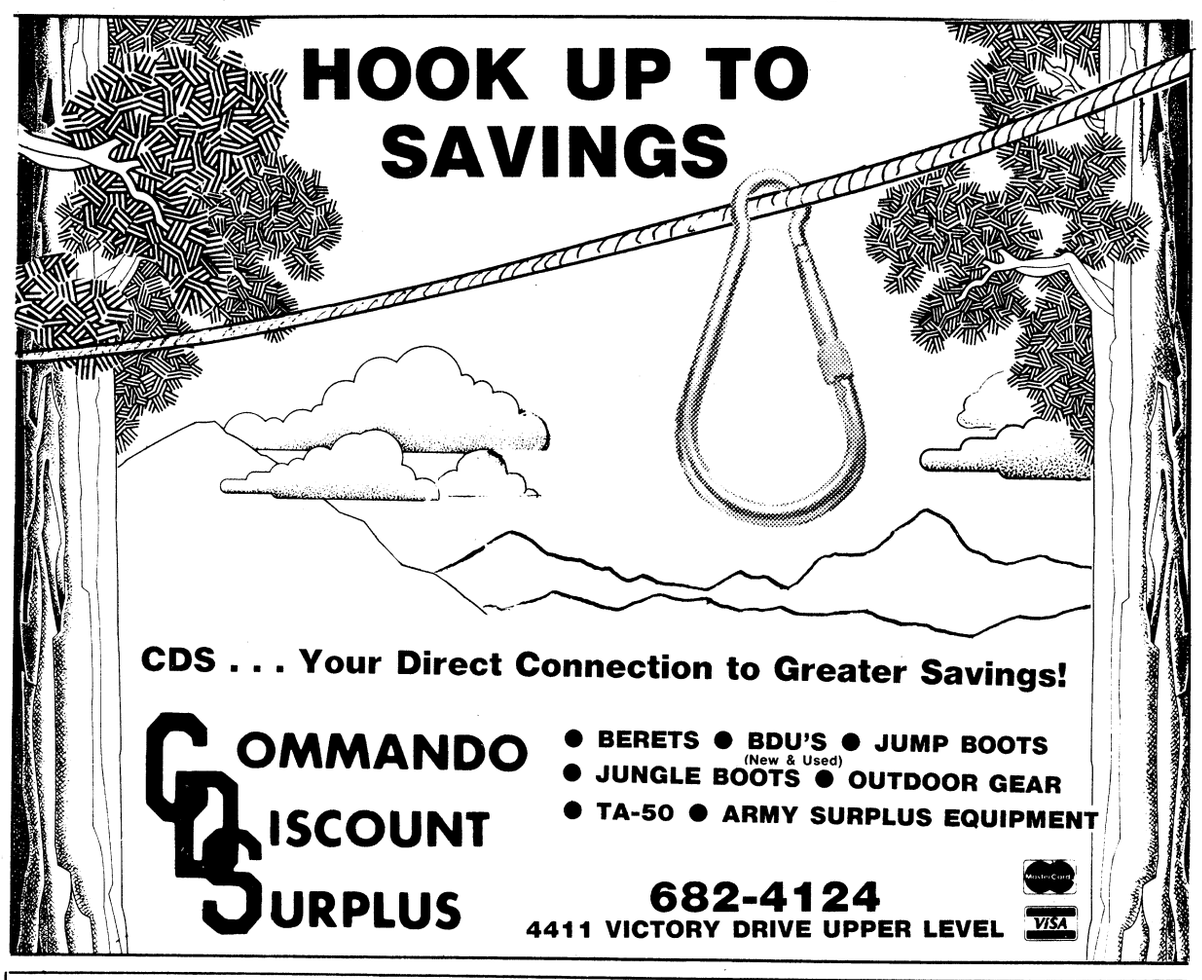
Soldiers of Company D, 2nd Battalion, 18th Infantry joined the rangers of 3rd Battalion, 75th Infantry to learn waterborne operations, tactics and procedures. The training was held on Juaca Bay, Puerto Rico.

The classes covered instructions on waterproofing and packing equipment, the proper uniform to wear and boating procedures for the Zodiac boat.

Soldiers received instruction and practice on how to carry, load equipment, protect equipment against water damage, inflate, enter, exit and maneuver the Zodiac boats.

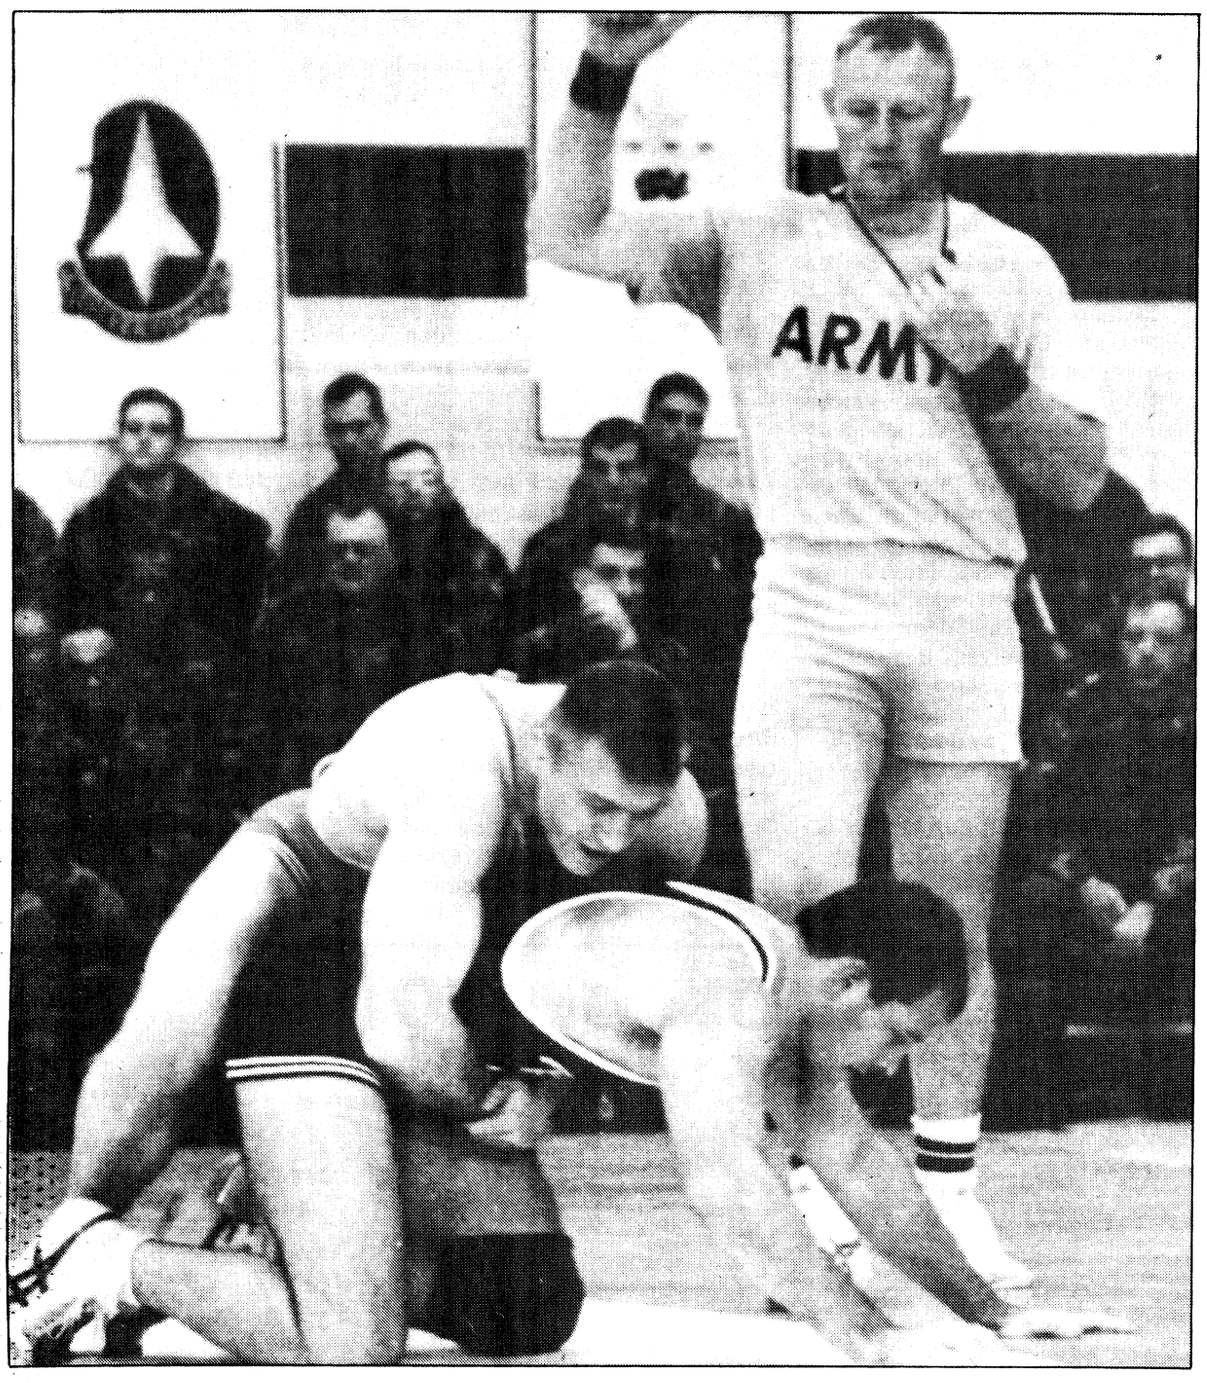
"The boats can carry a lot of equipment," said SSgt. John Price, primary boat instructor. "When you load the boat to the maximum and once you've landed, usually there aren't enough people to carry all the equipment. This is a special consideration we have to make when planning our missions."

After the class instruction, Co. D soldiers integrated with ranger platoons to test their new skills on Juaca Bay. The platoons divided into one squad per boat and rowed their boats into the bay where they practiced rowing, personnel accounting, and capsizing procedures.



"It was great learning to use the Zodiac boat," said Spec. Michael Mitchum, a Co. D infantryman. "It's a different type of warfare, but it uses some of the same concepts of mounting and dismounting and maneuvering that we use in the mechanized infantry."

After the platoons completed their training, they squared-off for a best platoon competition using the same skills. A platoon from the 75th Rangers won the competition.



"The teamwork was outstanding, and it was a lot of fun," said Sgt. Martin Gulbrand, one of the winners of the competition." "But it wears you out. People don't realize the effort it takes to carry the boat, row and return to the beach."

"I really enjoyed this," said Spec. Michael Francis, a Co. D infantryman. "I wish we could do it more often."

"This was really good training, and having the guys from the 197th with us was all right, too, said Sgt. Den Short of the 75th Rangers. "We should train together more often."

197th wrestlers tangle with 29th Inf.

It's a tie. The 197th "Sledgehammer" Infantry Brigade got its revenge on post wrestling champs 29th Infantry Regiment in a dual freestyle wrestling tournament that took place recently at the Kelley Hill Gym.

The 197th had placed second to the 29th in the post championship held earlier this year.

The rematch of these two top post teams heated up quickly with Col. Harvey D. Watson and Col. John D. Fuller taking to the mat for three rounds. When the grappling finished, the referee raised both their hands declaring a tie.

Following the exhibition match, the wrestling got serious.

The "Sledgehammers" had the eye of the tiger and were ripe with revenge. They took to the mats with a vengeance.

Head to head, the wrestlers went at each other, but the 197th wanted it worse and won nine out of ten matches outright.

The dual meet was a first for Benning, and, if the shouts of approval from the more than 1,000 soldiers who packed into the gym is any indication, it won't be the last.

Military golf tourney set for May

72-hole scratch tourney features individual and team competition

Army News Service

Army golfers can swing for regional bragging rights during the 26th annual Southeast Military Invitational Golf Tournament May 9-12 at Naval Air Station, Jacksonville, Fla.

The 72-hole scratch tournament will feature both team and individual competition under U.S. Golf Association and local medal play rules.

The tournament field will be cut to 120 competitors, including all members of the top 15 teams, after 54 holes. Rules, course assignments and tee times will be discussed at a 7 p.m. May 8 pre-tourney meeting.

All entries must be received by the tourney organizers by April 26.

Entries must include the first and last name, rank and rate, and handicap of each golfer (both team members and individuals). Entry packages should state whether participants will require billeting. In addition, a $25 registration fee is required for each player.

Entry packages should be sent to: MWRF, Box 14, Naval Air Station, Jacksonville, Fla., 32212-5000. Interested golfers can find out more about the tournament by calling (904) 722-3239 or autovon 942-3239.

Benning soldier, other Army lifters dominate armed forces tournament

Army News Service

Sgt. Miguel Taoy of Fort Benning was one of the Army lifters to dominate the 1989 Armed Forces Power Lifting championships at Naval Station Long Beach, Calif., Feb. 15 and 16. Taoy won in the 148-pound category by lifting 697.5 kilos.

Army power lifters topped seven of 11 weight classes to dominate the other services at the meet.

The Army squad set two national records and eight armed forces marks en route to 46 team points, easily distancing the second-place Air Force, last year's champions.

Teams in the competition earned five points for each gold medal, three for silver medals and two for bronze medals. Air Force lifters combined for 31 points at the meet, while the Marines and Navy totaled 23 and 15, respectively.

Staff Sgt. O.D. Wilson of Fort Bragg, N.C., highlighted Army performances at the meet by continuing his reign over superheavyweight lifters (275 pounds and up). Setting a national record, Wilson lifted a combined 1,102.5 kilograms (2,425.5 pounds) to surpass his nearest competitor. His 454.5-kilo squat was also a national mark, and his 250.5-kilo bench press and 397.5-kilo dead lift set armed forces records. In November, Wilson won a gold medal at the World Power Lifting championships in Perth, Australia.

Other Army winners were:

Spec. Henry Garcia in the 114-pound division. Assigned to the Pentagon, Garcia lifted a combined 477.5 kilos to edge another Army lifter.

SSgt. Roosevelt Thomas of U.S. Army Europe finished second in the division with a 465-kilo total.

Spec. Bobby Adams in the 123-pound division. Adams, of Fort Hood, Texas, lifted 582.5 kilos to edge the Air Force's three-time world champion, Sgt. David Pattaway. In addition, Adams' bench press (142.5 kilos) and total both set armed forces records.

Sgt. Joseph Culliver of Fort Stewart, Ga., lifted 652.5 kilos for a second-place division finish in the 148-pound category.

Spec. Steve Goggins in the 220-pound division. Assigned to Fort Hood. Goggins lifted a combined 960 kilos for an armed forces record. His 375-kilo squat also set an armed forces record.

Spec. James Bornhop in the 242-pound division. Bornhop, of U.S. Army Europe, totaled 950 kilos in his three lifts.

Staff Sgt. Lance Ross in the 275-pound category. Ross, assigned to Fort Bliss, Texas, lifted 942.5 kilos for his win. His 235-kilo bench press and 370-kilo dead lift were also new armed forces marks.

U.S. Army Europe's 2nd Lt. Michael Hancock added a second-place finish in the 165-pound category with a 712.5-kilo total, and Staff Sgt. Robert Patterson of Fort Bliss earned a third-place Army finish in the 242-pound division. Patterson lifted a combined 917.5 kilos.

The Army led with 24 points – only four points more than the Air Force – after the first day of competition, which featured the six lighter weight classes. However, the Army won four of five division titles the second day for a 15-point margin of victory.

Taoy, Garcia, Adams, Goggins, Ross and Wilson will represent the Army on the armed forces squad at the National Senior U.S. Power Lifting Federation Championships in Las Vegas July 6. In addition, Army Coach Maj. Bruce Takala will head up the armed forces team. Takala coached the U.S. national team during the Perth world meet.

HUNTING/FISHING

Deer season summary shows kill of 1,865

By Deck Major
Fish and Wildlife Specialist

The 1988-1989 Fort Benning deer season has been over for a month. Most of the kill cards have been returned, and the data has been summarized. Before these balmy days turn our thoughts toward spring for good, let's take a few moments to reflect on the highs and lows of the past season.

As far as hunters are concerned, the white-tailed deer is king at Fort Benning. Of nearly 3,250 permits issued during the 1988-1989 hunting season, only a small percentage of quail and night hunters had no interest in adding some deer meat to their freezer.

A total of 3,044 deer kill cards were issued during this past season, and 44 percent of our hunters were successful in taking at least one deer. This is an extremely high rate of hunter success for most regions of the country. Three obvious factors contribute to this high rate, and, unfortunately, hunter skill doesn't fit into the equation.

Because of high deer densities, a 70-plus-day season and any-sex shooting, most of us who hunted long enough were bound to bump into a deer sooner or later.

On the negative side, the total kill (1,865 deer) was down from the record high of 1,910 last season. It's hard to imagine that less deer were killed this year, knowing that 37 additional any-sex days existed, but it's true. Perhaps we reached a hunter saturation point with 40 any-sex days offered during 1987-1988. That is, anyone interested in taking advantage of any-sex hunting is able to fill his needs in 40 days and does not need the entire season.

Other contributing factors may have been the full moon and rainy weekends early in the season. Also, those does may just be getting a bit smarter.

On the positive side, average yearling buck and doe weights increased for the first time in many years. Although one year does not make a trend, this is a very encouraging sign and is probably a result of the past liberal any-sex seasons.

If this trend continues, the result will be heavier but fewer deer. This of course has been the goal of the Natural Resources Management Division for the past several years. No one wants to decrease our present hunter success rate, but we can't have our cake and eat it too. If you want to drag one out of the field that you can be proud of, you'll have to be prepared to hunt harder because the only way to produce larger deer is to reduce the number of animals sharing a common food source.

Speaking of large deer, the heaviest buck examined at the deer check station this season was an eight-pointer that tipped the scales at 142 pounds. The buck with the best rack was a nine-pointer with a 19-inch, inside spread. It weighed 127 pounds. If you shot a doe that weighed over 70 pounds, it was a nice one.

The post average for yearling and older does was 62 pounds. Compare these statistics with your trophies. If yours doesn't measure up, you've got some goals to shoot for. If you shot a bigger deer this past season, you missed out on the record book. Next year, please bring your deer by the check station if at all possible.

March marks best bass fishing of year

By Earl Bentz and Steve Price
Outboard Marine Corporation

Across much of the United States, March marks some of the best bass fishing of the year. This is when largemouth bass start moving into shallow water looking for spawning sites.

What's the best way to catch those fish?

"Use a crank bait and try to cover a lot of water near rocky shorelines and points, or work flats where vegetation may be present," explains Evinrude pro staff member Larry Nixon.

"Practically any type of warming trend this time of year will start bass moving from deeper water. I like to work depths between 4 and about 8 feet with a vibrating crank bait, just casting and reeling it back with a steady retrieve."

Bass are very aggressive at this time, Nixon points out, but the fish are likely to be fairly scattered. That's why a fast-retrieve lure like a crank bait can be effective.

"You can work a point or shoreline and catch several bass," continues the Evinrude pro, "but then turn around and fish it again and not catch anything. My advice is to simply try to cover as much water as possible at this time of year."

Nixon believes this is an excellent time to catch larger bass, too. He feels the larger bass always seem to move shallow first and possibly be the earliest ones to spawn.

"Another thing to remember," says the 1983 Bass Masters Classic champion, "is that this is the one time of year when bass do not use cover quite as much. They will be near it, or over it, but they won't be in it.

"As the water continues to warm, however, the fish will use it more and more."

Often, a brief warming trend in March will be followed by a sudden cold front that cools water temperatures again. When this happens, the bass quickly leave the shallow pre-spawn areas, but they may not travel that far.

"I start looking for bass along the first depth break near the shallow water," says Nixon. "All you need to do is turn your boat around from where you've been catching fish and start looking for a channel bank, ledge or deep cut that makes a sharp depth change.

"There you might find bass stacked up like the proverbial cord wood. I've done it on Toledo Bend and on other major lakes. You can often catch fish after fish from the same spot."

In conditions like this, Nixon advises changing from a crank bait to a slower lure like a jig, plastic worm, or grub, and crawling or hopping it along the bottom.

Duck season not much to quack about

By Deck Major
Fish and Wildlife Specialist

The 1988-1989 duck season is now history. It wasn't much to shout about. As most "quack trackers" could tell you, severe drought in the major North American prairies as well as continued loss of habitat led to poor production and thus a terrible fall flight. Season length, what there was of it, and daily bags reflected these conditions.

Many of the ducks have rested from their grueling flight south and, believe it or not, are already northward bound, counting on open water in rivers and large reservoirs as they go. Although most duck species nest further north, one faithful species of duck will remain, calling this region and Fort Benning its home. Wet river oxbows and backwaters as well as our abundant beaver ponds provide good nestling and brooding habitat for the wood duck or "woody." It has little reason to leave.

Unlike most ducks that nest on the ground or over water, "woodies" nest in tree cavities. This trait has prompted personnel of the Fort Benning Fish and Wildlife Branch, Directorate of Engineering and Housing, as well as other conservationists, to help the bird through an artificial nest box program.

Between December 1988 and January 1989, all boxes (129) on 67 Fort Benning wetlands were surveyed for nest success. In addition, the boxes, which sit on poles in open water, were checked for needed repairs. Brush surrounding the boxes was removed and new materials for this year's nesting season added.

Nesting success during summer 1988 was good for local wood ducks. Forty-two or 33 percent of the boxes were used and roughly 330 ducklings were produced at Fort Benning. Although only a small fraction of the "woodies" use our boxes, the box program, in addition to providing nesting habitat for some ducks, allows wildlife personnel to gain easy access to a representative sample of the post wood duck population. Thus, if ducks using boxes are doing well, we can safely assume that our other ducks are doing likewise.

Wood ducks begin breeding and nesting by late February. After an incubation period of 28 to 30 days, nine to 11 ducklings are hatched. If you're afield sometime during the next few months and you see a wood duck nest box, take a minute to reflect on the wondrous miracle going on inside. If you're lucky enough to see a "woody" brood later this spring, wish them well, they will need all the help they can get to make it past alligators, largemouth bass, snapping turtles and great horned owls.

Here's hoping for a wet spring and summer. The ducks, as well as many other fish and wildlife species, need it.

POST BRIEFS

Storm plan test meeting today

Wednesday — Fort Benning will test the USAIC Storm Plan Monday. If there is a threat of actual severe weather on that day, the test will be postponed until Thursday. Information about the ability of personnel to hear the warning is needed to evaluate the effectiveness of our communication system. Send correspondence concerning the test to DPTM, Plans and Operations Division, Fort Benning, Ga. 31905.

MACH presents health fair

"Your Health is our Business" — Martin Army Community Hospital will present its annual Health Fair at the Main Post Exchange Saturday, 9 a.m.-3:30 p.m. Following the theme, "Your Health is our Business," various hospital departments and community agencies will provide medical screenings and health information.

Post housing volunteers needed

Campaign continues — The U.S. Army Infantry Center's Mayoral Election Campaign is already underway in the six housing communities. Residents interested in running for these positions may contact the Community Life Office at 545-2910/2830/1389. Applications from interested candidates will be screened to ensure eligibility criteria are met. Applications may be picked-up at each Community Life Center between 8 a.m. and 4 p.m. daily until March 24. The cutoff for applications is March 24. The target date for publication of approved ballots is April 11. Ballots will be provided to each sponsor and his or her spouse for voting purposes in each of the six communities. Voting will take place at the Community Life Centers in each of the housing areas April 20 and 21 between 8 a.m. and 5 p.m. Do your part for your community. If you are a family member, run for mayor or vice-mayor. Help make your community a better place to live. Above all else, get out and vote for the candidate of your choice.

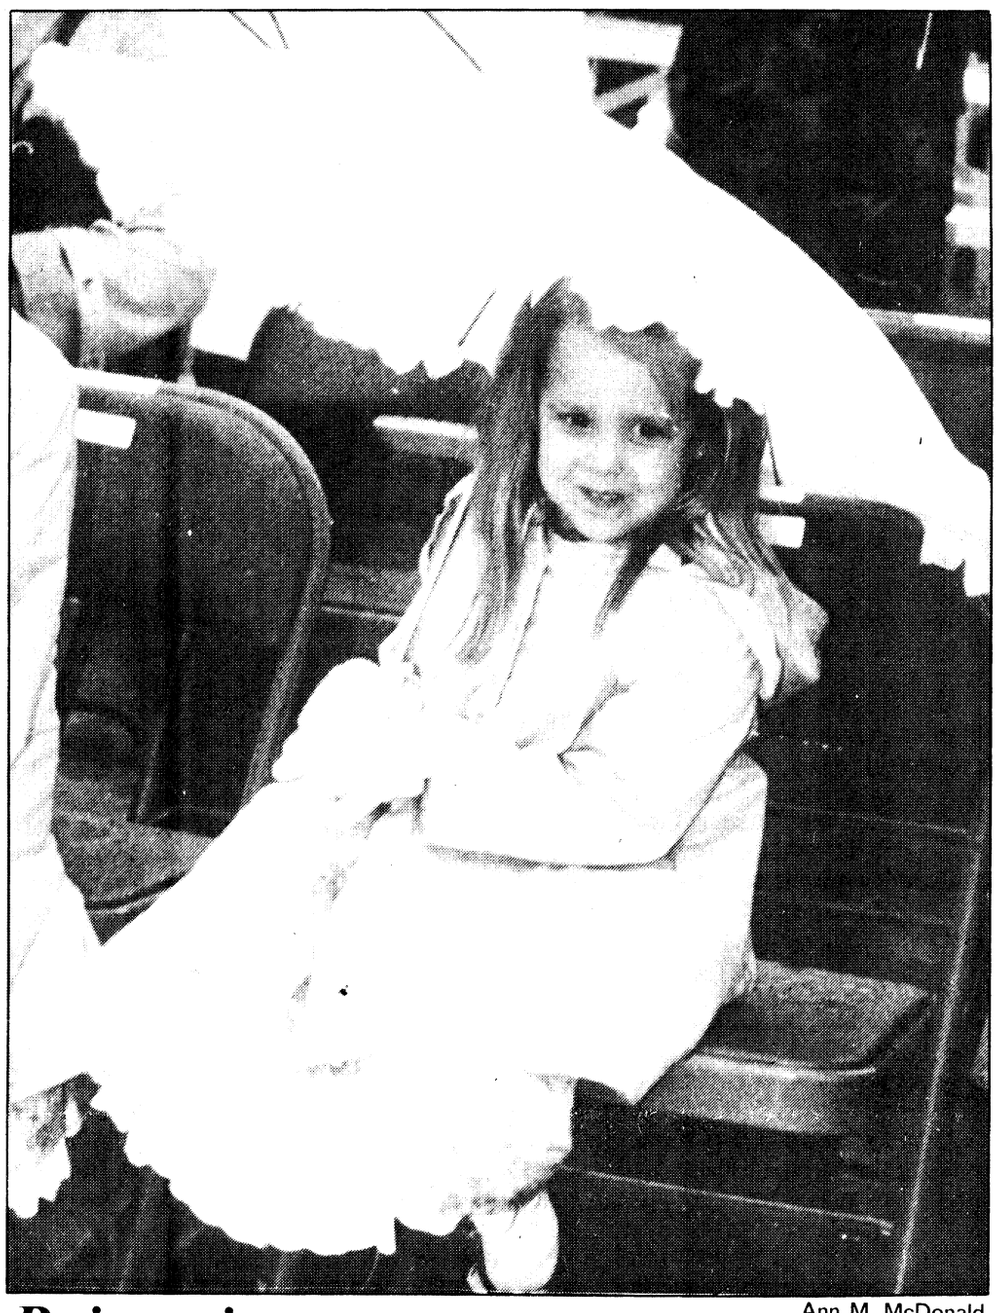
Expired IDs cause problems

Medical care denied — Expired military identification cards and improper enrollment in the Defense Enrollment Eligibility Reporting System have caused several military beneficiaries to be denied care at the PRIMUS Clinic. To ensure that you and your eligible family members are properly enrolled, call 1-800-538-9522. If not properly enrolled, visit the ID card issuing office in building 2638, Soldiers' Plaza, or call 545-4742.

Airborne plans 50th reunion

Washington, D.C. — The airborne forces of the U.S. Army will celebrate their 50th anniversary in Washington, D.C., July 5 - 8, 1990. Anyone who has had airborne training is invited to attend. For complete information, write to Static Line, P.O. Box 87518, College Park, Ga. 30337 or call (404) 478-5301.

Relocating unit needs volunteers



67th Maintenance Battalion — Headquarters and Headquarters Detachment, 67th Maintenance Battalion is relocating to Fort Ord, Calif., in June 1989.

Volunteer soldiers who must have been assigned to Fort Benning before October 1988 and not be on levy/orders are needed to deploy with the unit.

The following are needed:

Branch/MOS	Rank	Quantity
QM, OD, AG, TC	1st Lt. or Capt.	3
31	E1-E4	2
31K	E1-E4	2
72E	E1-E4	1
96B	E6 or E7	1
63H	E6 or E7	2
62B	E6 or E7	1
54B	E6 or E7	1
39X	E7 or E8	1
63Z	E7 or E8	1

Volunteers who are interested must submit a DA Form 4187 through their chain of command to USAIC, ATZB-AG-ESMB, Fort Benning, Ga. 31905. For more information, call Capt. Jones, adjutant, HHD, 67th Maintenance Battalion, at 545-1081/1771.

Women's contributions recognized, celebrated

Equal Opportunity Office

Women's History Month is designated in March to recognize the contributions of women throughout U.S. history.

The observance began as Women's History Week in Sonama County, Calif. in 1978. In 1987, March was designated National Women's History Month.

This year's USAIC Women's History Month observance will be held March 23 from 10:30 to 11:30 a.m. in Marshall Auditorium, Building 4. The primary speaker is Brig. Gen. Sherian G. Cadoria, deputy commanding general and director of Mobilization and Operations, Total Army Personnel Command, Alexandria, Va.

Cadoria was born in Marksville, La., Jan. 26, 1940. She received a direct commission in 1961 and is a graduate of Southern University and A&M College in Louisiana, with a bachelor of science in business education. She also holds a master of arts in social work from the University of Oklahoma.

Her military education includes the Women's Army Corps Basic Officer Course, the Adjutant General Advanced Officer Course, the U.S Army Command and General Staff College, the U.S. Army War College and the National Defense University Institute of Higher Defense Studies.

She has held a variety of command and staff positions culminating in her current assignment. Other key assignments include director of Manpower and Personnel, J-1, Organization of the Joint Chiefs of Staff; chief, Law Enforcement Division, Human Resources Development Directorate, Office of the deputy Chief of Staff for Personnel, Department of the Army; commander of the First Region U.S Army Criminal Investigation Command; special assistant to the Provost Marshal and chief of the Physical Security Division in the Provost Marshal's Office, U.S. Army Europe and Seventh Army.

Brig. Gen. Sherian G. Cadoria

Cadoria was a personnel staff officer in the Law Enforcement Division, Office of the Deputy Chief of Staff for Personnel and Social Aide to the president of the United States. She commanded the student battalion of the Military Police School Training Brigade at Fort McClellan, Ala., prior to attendance at the United States Army War College.

Her awards and decorations include the Defense Superior Service Medal, Legion of Merit, Bronze Star Medal with two oak leaf clusters, Meritorious Service Medal with oak leaf cluster, Air Medal and the Army Commendation Medal with three oak leaf clusters.

The public is invited.

USARSA activates new department

By Keith Johnson
U.S. Army School of Americas

A new department activated at the U.S. Army School of Americas will emphasize the problems terrorism, insurgency and drug-trafficking pose to our Latin American allies.

The Department of Special Operations and Low-Intensity Conflict, which began operations Feb. 27, will begin expanding existing courses to fit the needs of each Latin American country.

The emphasis is the result of a mandate school Commandant Col. William A. DePalo Jr. received from Gen. Maxwell R. Thurman, commanding general of the Training and Doctrine Command, to increase emphasis on the development of low-intensity, conflict-type instruction at the school.

"We are going to strive for the U.S. Army School of the Americas to be the Army's proponent for low-intensity conflict," DePalo said.

"This will reiterate the role of the school as the primary instructional and educational institution for Latin American and Central American republics in the sense that we will be evolving the course offerings to fit the threat and the requirement our allies face now," said Lt. Col. Robert E. Watson, director of the new department.

Low-intensity conflict has received added attention Army-wide as a result of the establishment in 1986 of a new unified combatant command, the U.S. Special Operations Command. In addition, the position of Assistant Secretary of Defense for Special Operations and Low-Intensity Conflict was created, as well as an advisory board on the National Security Council, according to Watson.

Watson added that the department will be "looking at developing courses in counter-insurgency and drug-trafficking, along with an advanced military intelligence course. We will be developing these courses with TRADOC and other U.S. agencies."

Benning families honored

By Shawn Bryson
Bayonet staff writer

Two instructors with the Combined Arms and Tactics Department of the Infantry School and their families have been selected as Fort Benning's Great American Families.

Capt. Lawrence Saul and Capt. Jeffrey W. Yaeger and their families were honored for their contributions to Army family life March 1 in Building 4 by Maj. Gen. Michael F. Spigelmire, post commander.

The next step for both families is nomination to the Training and Doctrine Command for a further selection process, which could lead to national recognition at a White House awards ceremony in June.

The Saul family has been at Fort Benning since August 1986 and has contributed, individually and as a whole, to the Fort Benning community in a variety of different ways.

Saul is currently an instructor of Fire Support. He has been the Instructor of the Month and Quarter and is currently being evaluated for Instructor of the Year at the Infantry School.

His wife, Annette, is the vice president of the Protestant Women's Organization and an active member of the choir at Bethel Baptist Church in Columbus. She is also a key leader in the Combined Arms Wives' Group.

The Sauls have two daughters, Lauren, 6, and Alana, 2. Lauren, a first-grader at Patch Elementary School, played in the Dependent Youth Activities T-Ball League for 6-8 year olds last summer. Alana, an active supporter at her sister's games, also enjoys cheering her parents on at various running events.

The Sauls are both members of the Patch Parent Teachers Association at Patch School.

The Yaegers have been a part of the Fort Benning community since their arrival in April 1986.

Yaeger recently completed the Air Force Command and Staff Course by correspondance.

Yaeger and his wife, Yolie, have two sons, Luke, 8, and Calvin, 4.

Yolie's list of accomplishments at Fort Benning includes being an active member of the Officers' Wives' Club, participation in the Women's Bowling League on post and teaching Vacation Bible School here. She is also a den leader and treasurer of the Loyd School Parent Teachers Association.

Luke is a second-grader at Loyd and excels in academics as well as sports, including soccer, T-ball, flag football and basketball.

Calvin is a preschooler at Patch Elementary School and recently began running competitively.

OPINION

VARIOUS VOICES: What motivated you to run the Infantry Marathon or Half Marathon?

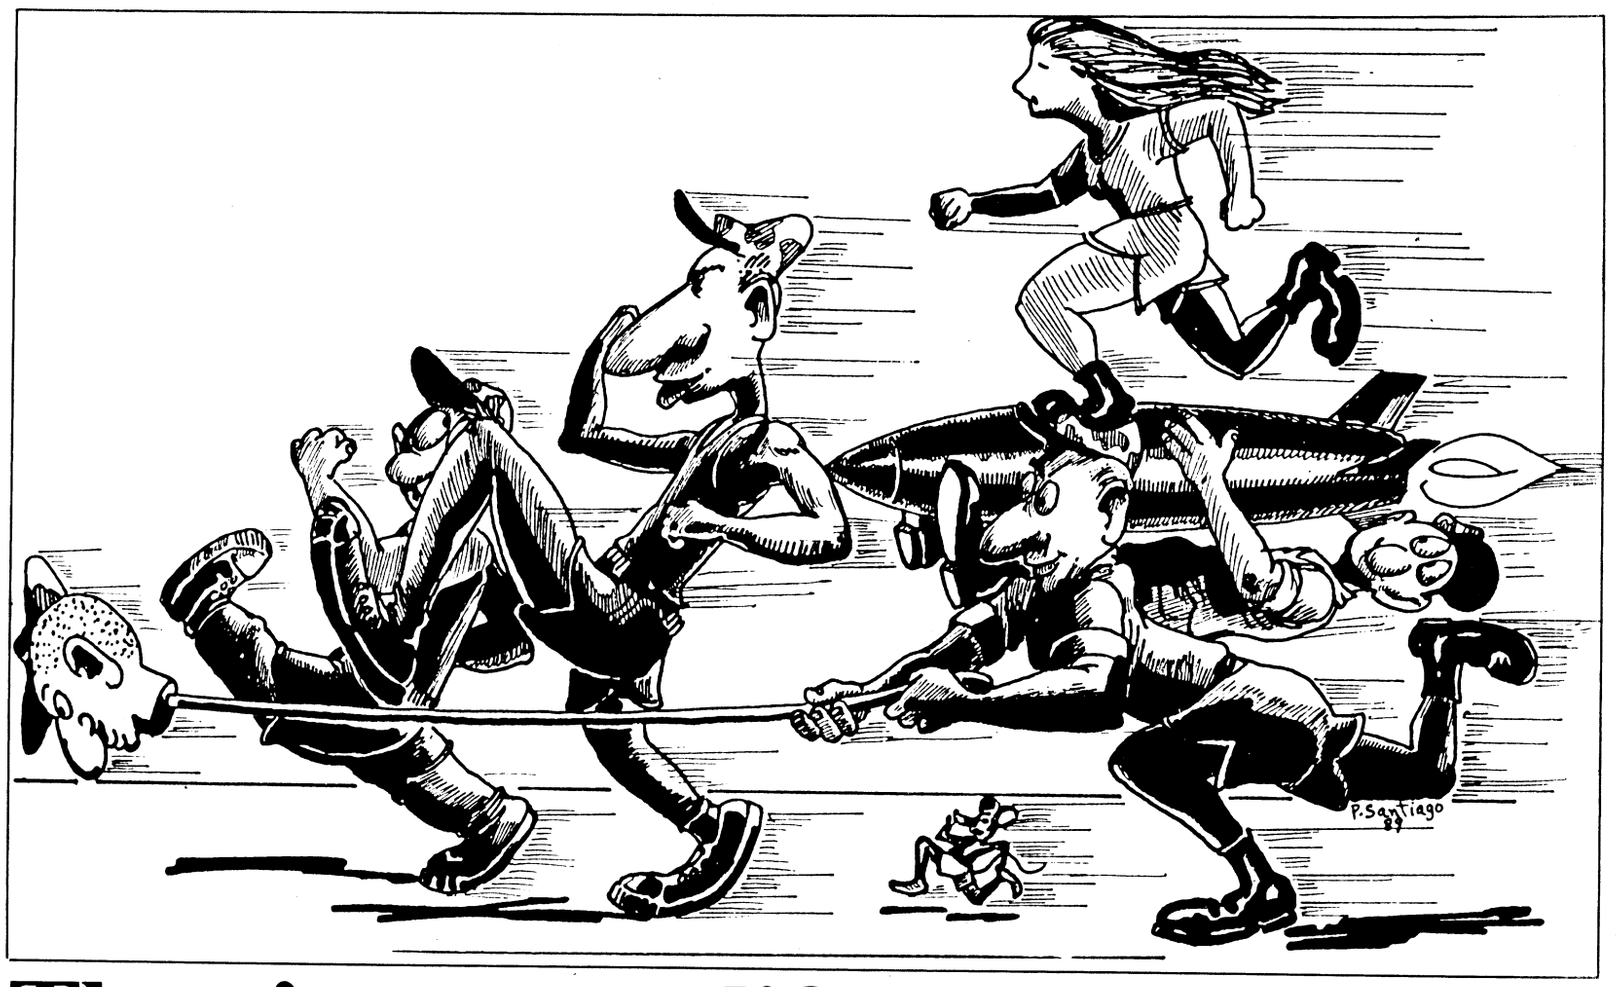
Dana Dorman, family member (marathon) - "This is my first marathon. I did it just to see if I could finish."

Lt. Col. Jeri Graham, MEDDAC (half-marathon) - "I wanted to be a part of the MEDDAC representation at the meet and the challenge of the distance of the race."

Anne McChrystal, family member (marathon) - "I did it for self fulfillment. The marathon was a personal goal I set for myself."



Capt. Kelly Hoskins, Walter Reed Medical Center, Washington, D.C. (marathon) - "I did it so I could come to Fort Benning and have a good time. I really enjoy running; the longer the distance the better."

Lt. Col. Elliott Fellman, USMC Liaison Officer (marathon) - "This is the only one in the area. I have run in a marathon every year for the past several years, so I ran this one."

Lt. Col. Larry Camp, Military District of Washington, D.C. (marathon) - "I did it for the competition. It's also a good way to support the Army. My fellow teammates and I are going to represent the Army in an upcoming race."

There's more to life than marathons

By Clyde Snively
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Of all the thousands of marathons run in the world the Infantry Marathon has to be the most appropriate.

The marathon traces its beginnings to the run of a Greek messenger from Marathon to Athens to announce the Greek victory over the Persians. Naturally, it was an infantry battle with the cavalry in support.

The only change I'd make to our marathon would be to make it more closely resemble the first run by routing the runners along wooded trails where they could dodge mud holes and leap over roots instead of cars, trucks and curbs.

I don't think I'd have them running in circles either. Who wants to run over the same terrain? Yuk.

But, I've come to praise marathon runners, not to critique the run's route.

I've always placed marathoners on a special pedestal, wondering what could motivate a person to subject his body to such grueling punishment.

One of our rangers had a simple answer, "Because it's there." He then admitted that next on his list was Mt. Everest.

Others talked about goals and self-fulfillment. "I just want to run one marathon in my life," Airborne Annie admitted after finishing the half marathon as a member of the Fort Benning women's team, which won the team race.

When I told her I thought she was borderline crazy, she quickly ran off a list of all the medical people who ran the marathon and half marathon and won.

Still not totally convinced, I told her I lumped running marathons with beating your head against the wall - it feels so good when you stop.

But then, after watching the marathoners lying about the "water buffalo," moaning, groaning and discussing their pains or even just walking about post the next day - they weren't hard to spot - I decided maybe it didn't feel so good then either.

They all seemed to walk like old folks, arms held out from their sides, legs bowed, feet gingerly touching the ground as though it were on fire.

Even Airborne Annie was feeling the effects. She walked about the office as though she'd been hit by a car. She even admitted she felt sore, which is unusual since she seems to thrive on pain.

But her problem may have been caused by the gal who ran beside her. "She wouldn't shut up. Talk. That's all she did was talk. I finally ran off and tried to leave her, but I could still hear her talking. I wanted to belt her," Airborne Annie said.

I talked to my friend Alex after the race. "How can you push yourself to run sub-six-minute miles for 26 miles?" I asked. "I can't even do one mile that fast."

"How can you stand to run for six straight hours?" was his answer.

Naturally he wasn't talking about me, although that's how long it would take me to run a marathon. I mean, I'll defend the right of people to run 120 miles a week to train for those things and to compete in all the races they desire and wear all the $10 marathon T-shirts they can get on their skimpy frames, but running's not for me.

Our ancestors may have had to run to survive. And many New Yorkers and other denizens of large cities should diligently practice running, but I personally don't find running civilized.

Surviving the by-pass is more in line with my idea of sport.

NCO support channel misunderstood

By J.C. Mathews
Army News Service

Soldiers appearing before promotion boards are often asked what it is. At many posts, organizational charts have been published in an effort to make it easier to use. What's more, many soldiers are part of it without even knowing it.

It's the most "low-tech," "user-friendly," and readily available device soldiers have at their disposal; nevertheless, it — the NCO support channel — is arguably the most misunderstood and ill-used communications tool the Army employs. And, in the "Year of The NCO," that's inexcusable.

There are a number of formal definitions and winding explanations that nail-biting, sweaty junior troops commit to memory in a hopeless effort to impress stone-faced promotion board members (whose job is to be unimpressed). Unfortunately, what they learn about the NCO support channel in the process bears little relationship to the "real McCoy;" the bureaucratic language used in the "Army" definition violates, by necessity, the spirit of the NCO support channel.

In plain language, the NCO support channel is an enlisted leadership network designed to solve problems at the lowest possible level. It supports the chain of command by keeping individual soldier issues out of officers' hair — when possible — and enhances the problem-solving process by bringing grassroots expertise to bear before a problem escalates to unmanageable levels.

Quietly diplomatic, it helps soldiers solve problems without standing in front of the commander.

Or, at least, it should.

Like their commissioned counterparts, NCOs are not without political motivations. The Army has never been able to claim inter-unit and inter-staff coordination as its strongest attribute, and at enlisted levels, disagreements get loud faster. So, under the weight of provincial interests, the NCO support channel often collapses upon itself — and on the soldiers it is intended to support.

There was a time, not too long ago, when quiet diplomacy among NCOs was branded as a "good ol' boy network," and in many cases the criticism was deserved. But the NCO support channel is based on a friendly, soldier-to-soldier way of doing business in which everyone benefits and feathers remain unruffled.

In most cases, when a soldier has a problem, he should be able to solve it without seeing anyone other than his NCO. That NCO may have to spend some time on the phone with his counterparts, but that's what NCOs are for. That's also why an open channel of communication between NCOs throughout a unit or installation is so important; day-to-day soldierly business can best be conducted without giving the brass an extra headache.

The NCO support channel should be neither a "good ol' boy network" nor an avenue to circumvent procedures. It should be a chain of expertise linked by two common goals — the well-being of soldiers and the accomplishment of the Army's missions. But that chain holds strong only so long as its links are joined.

The "Year of The NCO" offers a unique opportunity for the Army to strengthen that chain. Supported by a united NCO corps, soldiers can't help but succeed.

Unsupported, they can't help but fail.

Benning Brownie sells most cookies ever sold in Concharty Council

Jennifer L. McCaughey

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

Concharty Council had a deal for the Girl Scouts in its district. If a girl sold 750 boxes of cookies during this year's annual cookie drive, she could get a free week at camp. One Brownie, however, sold enough cookies to conceivably go twice.

Jennifer L. McCaughey, 7, of Brownie Troop 34, Fort Benning, Concharty Council, sold 1,522 boxes of cookies during the annual sale. This translates into $3,044; 30 cents from each box of cookies sold will go directly into her troop. That's $913.20 for her troop to use in whatever way it wishes.

According to her mother, Patty, the cookie distributor for the troop, this is the largest amount of cookies ever sold in Concharty Council.

She accomplished this feat by selling door to door and at booth sales.

Jennifer's achievement earned her an award from Concharty and Fort Benning Girl Scout councils and a chance to go to the camp of her choice.

Jennifer's choice is horse camp.

"I've always liked horses," she said. "So, I wanted to learn how to ride them, and this will give me the chance."

Her mother surmises Jennifer sold so many cookies after reaching her initial goal of going to camp because she realized she could break the record of most cookies sold.

"It was pretty rough there for awhile," Patty said, "but my husband and I supported her the best we could so she could accomplish her goal."

Jennifer's father, SFC Paul McCaughey, is assigned to the Ranger Training Brigade.

As the distributor of the cookies, Patty had many more duties than just helping Jennifer sell and deliver her cookies. She distributed cookies for the entire troop. The 100 cases her daughter sold, plus all the cookies for the rest of the troop equated to a houseful of cookies.

"We had a wall of cookies all through the house," she said. "The only way we could get through the rooms was with a path we made from the kitchen, through to the couch in the living room, and into the bedrooms."

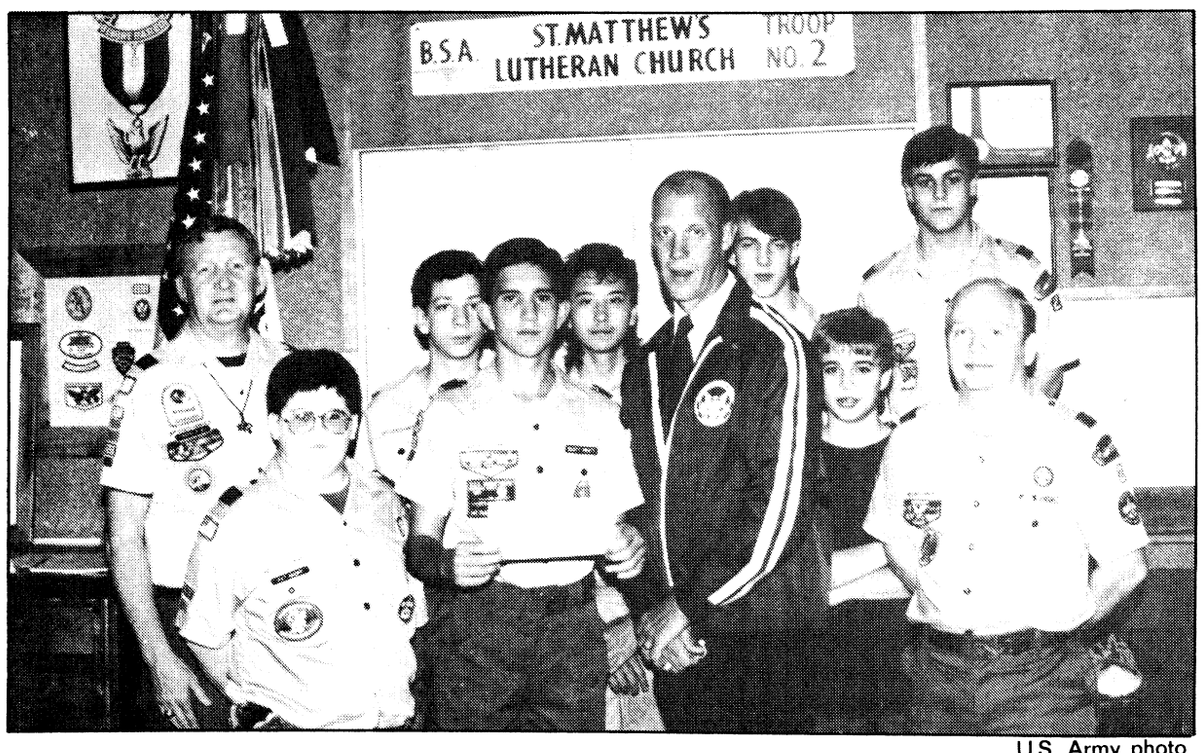
All that trouble didn't matter to Jennifer's parents, though. "We are really proud of her," Patty said.

What about Jennifer? "I don't think I ever want to sell cookies again," she said.

Counselor donates $100 to Boy Scouts

Noncommissioned Officers Association

Boy Scout Troop 2 in Columbus is the recipient of a $100 gift from a Noncommissioned Officer Association counselor.



Blaine Souerwine won the money in an NCOA promotion for which the prize was a donation of $100 to the charity of his choice.

"This $100 may not seem like much to most people, but it's a lot to the Boy Scouts," Souerwine said. "No one realizes how much of a difference even a small amount like this can make."

Souerwine has been supportive of scouting for nearly 15 years. His two sons, Brian, 15, and Blaine Jr., 14, continue that tradition, with the eldest now working on his Eagle Scout badge.

Scoutmaster Fred Seig was very pleased with the donation. "Now we can send a boy to camp and buy a few badges we've needed," he said.

Seig, a U.S. Army retired captain, started Troop 2 and has worked as a scouting volunteer all his life.

U.S. Army photo

Members of Boy Scout Troop 2 accept a $100 donation from Blaine Souerwine.

Souerwine is also retired from the U.S. Army, after 20 years service. He and his wife, Donna, reside in Columbus with their two sons.

The NCOA is a federally chartered, non-profit, fraternal organization founded in 1960 to promote and protect the rights and benefits of active duty and veteran noncommissioned and petty officers in all five branches of the Armed Forces, the Reserves and National Guard.

Prevention week focuses on poisonings

Infantry Branch Safety Office

Accidental poisonings are the focus of the 28th annual Poison Prevention Week, March 19 through 25.

An assessment of the number of poisonings reported annually reveals that there has been an overall decrease in the number of accidental poisonings in recent years.

Almost any drug or chemical is potentially dangerous. If you get too much of any substance into the body, it can be toxic. However, most poisonings involve a limited group of toxic substances. These toxic substances include: caustic agents found in household cleaning agents, petroleum distillates, aspirin, acetaminophen, iron (including nutritional supplementation), narcotics, methanol (found in antifreeze and window washer solutions), antihistamines, sedatives, tranquilizers and antidepressants.

Preventive measures can be undertaken to reduce both the frequency of poisonings and the severity of poisonings that do occur. Poison prevention requires active measures on the part of concerned parents and adults.

There are at least three good methods that can be used to prevent poisonings: safe storage and use of hazardous chemicals and drugs, use of child-resistant safety packaging whenever possible, and participating in child-oriented education and/or sticker programs, such as the poison control phone number for the regional poison control center.

In spite of best efforts, not all poisonings can be prevented. In a recent survey, it was found that while safe storage and child-resistant closures are extremely important, three-fourths of a group of household products were in use at the time the children got into them.

Every household should obtain a one-ounce bottle of ipecac syrup, have posted the telephone number of the regional poison control center, and have an outline for basic emergency measures to be carried out in the event of a poisoning.

The pharmacy service at Martin Army Community Hospital provides information to help reduce the risk of poisoning.

For information concerning an accidental poisoning, call the emergency room at Martin Army Community Hospital at 544-1502/1123 or the regional poison control center in Atlanta, at 1-800-282-5846.

Radon testing to begin at medical, day care facilities

By Agatha H. James
Bayonet staff writer

The first facilities on post to be tested for radon will be Fort Benning's dependent schools, Martin Army Community Hospital, other medical facilities and day care centers, Directorate of Engineering and Housing officials said.

Alice Howard, environmental specialist, DEH, said firemen will begin hanging alpha-track radon detectors in schools during spring vacation, which begins March 20.

Testing for family housing and military housing, including BOQs, BEQs and troop billets will take place sometime in May. Contractor personnel will hang the detectors in each of 4,082 family housing units and every 2,000 square feet in military housing units by the end of May.

"A 'Testing for Radon - Do Not Disturb' label will accompany each detector," said Howard. "The detectors will be hung with a thumbtack or a sticky material at breathing level or higher. It's important that the detectors not be disturbed," she added.

Since the goal of testing is to measure dosage at the worst possible time of the year, the detectors will be left in place for 90 days, which will include some of the heating season as well as all of the season when buildings are closed up with air conditioning, Howard said.

The detectors are harmless and will be placed on an inside wall of structures. A hanger strip is attached to the back of the detector so the detector can be hung from a joist or ceiling or can be tacked to a wall. The detector will be placed in an area away from concrete or masonry walls or sources of excessive heat such as fireplaces.

Servicemembers, civilian personnel and family members should make sure the detectors are not disturbed.

What is radon?

Environmental Protection Agency
TRADOC News Service

Almost every day humans are subject to exposure to potentially hazardous substances. Of more concern are those chemicals or gases that cannot be seen, smelled or tasted.

One gas that falls into that category is radon. It is a radioactive gas, which occurs in nature and is odorless, tasteless and invisible.

Radon results from the radioactive decay of uranium. High concentrations of the gas can be found in soil and rocks containing uranium, granite, shale, phosphate and pitchblende.

It can also be found in soils contaminated with certain types of industrial wastes, such as the by-products from uranium or phosphate mining. Although radon is found in the outdoor air, it is reduced to such low concentrations that it is usually nothing to worry about.

However, the problems begin once the gas is inside an enclosed space, such as a home, where it can accumulate. Indoor levels depend both on a building's construction and the concentration of radon in the underlying soil.

Radon can seep into a home through dirt floors, cracks in concrete floors and walls, floor drains, sumps, joints and tiny cracks or pores in hollow block walls. It can also get into water in private wells and be released into a home when the water is used.

However, the only known health effect associated with exposure to elevated levels of radon is an increased risk of developing lung cancer.

When radon naturally breaks down, it forms radioactive decay products. When one breathes, the radon decay products can become trapped in the lungs. As the products break down further, they release small bursts of energy which can damage lung tissue and lead to lung cancer.

A smoker/radon association is thought to increase the risk of getting lung cancer by a factor of 15.

Not everyone exposed to elevated levels of radon will develop lung cancer.

The risk of developing lung cancer from exposure to radon depends upon the concentration of radon and the length of time exposed.

Exposure to a slightly elevated radon level for a long time may present a greater risk of developing lung cancer than exposure to a significantly elevated level for a short time. Generally, the risk increases as the level of radon and the length of exposure increase.

Based on information today, no significant levels of the gas are expected to be detected here at Fort Benning.

Surgeon General says control fats

By Doug Davant
Army News Service

This year's American Dietetics Association slogan, "A Lifetime Decision - Choose Good Nutrition," is also being adopted at the U.S. Army Troop Support Agency with the subscript: "Controlling Fat - That's Where It's At."

Stressing nutrition needs and fat control, in fact, is a continuing objective for the Army. But for March —"National Nutrition Month" — special goals have been developed.

During March, emphasis will be aimed at soldiers to educate them about the benefits of lowering fat and cholesterol intake. Also, Army commissaries will feature a special "National Nutrition Month" promotion where many low calorie brand-name products have be targeted for industry-sponsored voluntary price reductions.

Nutrition consciousness, however, is not limited to one month. Already in Army dining facilities the serving of eggs — allegedly associated with high cholesterol — has been reduced to six days per week. And, as an alternate to the traditional menu, items have been programmed into the Army Master Menu. For example, soldiers can choose a steak biscuit, turkey or tuna melt sandwich (turkey and cheese or tuna and cheese) for breakfast.

The changes are here to stay, too, because Army has made its lifetime decision. So, now, when soldiers are asked what they want to eat, the answer might come back, "foods that support good nutrition".

Controlling fat easy

By Christa Gardner
Registered Dietitian, MACH

"Controlling Fat. . .That's Where It's At" is the Army's theme for National Nutrition Month, 1989. Why? Because the cholesterol issue is of high interest, not only to Army dietitians but the Army leadership as well. The U.S. Surgeon General's 1988 report on nutrition and health indicated that what we eat and drink may affect our risk for leading causes of death such as coronary heart disease, diabetes, arteriosclerosis and stroke. To protect against these killers, the Surgeon General recommended that Americans reduce consumption of fat, especially saturated fat, and cholesterol.

The following are practical ways to decrease fat and cholesterol in the diet:

- Drink skim milk or reconstituted non-fat dry milk instead of whole milk — for a difference of seven grams of fat and 60 calories in each cup.
- Eat non-fat yogurt instead of regular yogurt. There are some delicious fruit flavored non-fat yogurts only at 150 calories for a six-ounce serving.
- If you must have cream in your coffee or in recipes, use skim milk or evaporated skim milk. Remember, many dry cream substitutes contain saturated fats and should be avoided. In certain recipes, evaporated skim milk or reconstituted non-fat dry milk can be whipped and substituted for whipped cream.
- Use low-fat cottage cheese instead of creamed cottage cheese.
- Replace sour cream with plain non-fat yogurt or "mock" sour cream. Make this by combining two tablespoons skim milk, one tablespoon lemon juice and one cup low-fat cottage cheese and mixing in a blender.
- Instead of butter, use margarine. Tub or soft margarine is less saturated. The "light" margarine contains 25 percent fewer calories. In cooking you may substitute oil for butter or margarine.
- Finally, for dessert or a special treat, replace ice cream with sherbets, ice milk or low-fat frozen yogurt.

With these simple changes, you are on your way to a healthier lifestyle — and a longer one.

Soldier jumps from communism

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

"In my country you have to be like a watermelon, green outside and red inside. I'm not red inside, so that's why I escaped," said PFC Narcyz Piasecki, Company C, 1st Battalion, 507th Parachute Infantry Regiment.

Piasecki escaped from communist Poland in December 1983.

He made his escape using a false passport and wearing a disguise. He obtained the passport through an underground agency in Poland. It cost him $5,000 and a long separation from his wife and child.

Although the price for his freedom was high, it would have cost Piasecki a lot more if he got caught.

"If I had gotten caught when I escaped, the government could have done anything to me," he said. "My country doesn't have protection laws like America, and I could have been killed."

After his escape, he stayed in West Berlin, Germany. A few years later, he was able to get his wife and child out of Poland using the same method.

"Then we moved to the United States," he said, "and settled in Salt Lake City, Utah."

Piasecki was drawn to the U.S. Army because he liked the idea of being a soldier.

"I served in the Polish Army, and I liked the military as a profession," Piasecki said. "But, they only allow you to serve for a few years. The fact that I don't have communist beliefs didn't help either."

Late last year after settling his family in Utah, he joined the U.S. Army.

He completed One Step Unit Training for Infantryman and recently graduated from airborne school.

"I was airborne in my country as well," he said, "but the school in Poland is much different than the U.S. Army Airborne School."

"The American Airborne School is much longer than the Polish Jump School," 35 year-old Piasecki said.

Piasecki said the Army is a great big adventure. A person should do everything he can while serving.

He really likes the Army and hopes to retire. "I want to put my thoughts of Poland behind me," he said.

Faith teams win history competition

Beth Middlemiss
Fort Benning Schools

Four teams represented Faith Middle School in the district competition of Georgia History Day recently, and all four teams returned from the competition as winners.

The teams will represent the district at the state competition at Agnes Scott College in Atlanta May 6.

Roberto Bryan, Tanja McIntosh, Jose Miranda and Sher'ee Peters are entrants in the video competition. They are preparing a video documentary.

Ty Poe, Christine Powell and Ken Winfrey are preparing a project with visual information mounted on a blackboard.

Juli Broussard, Jennifer Campbell and Luis Negron have written and performed a skit, and Sterling Harris has submitted an essay.

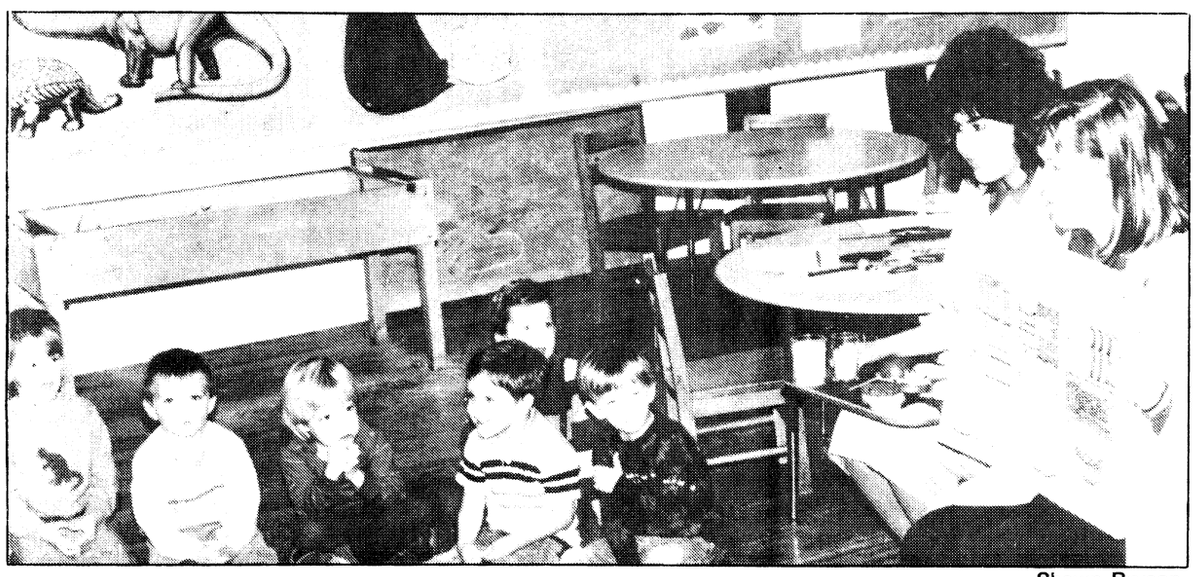
Though the teams are submitting different types of entries, their topic is the same — Christa McAuliffe, who died in the Space Shuttle disaster. They also interviewed Dr. Sonny Carter, a shuttle astronaut who will be going up in the shuttle in August.

In Columbus, they visited Dr. Ernest Riggsby at Columbus College and Dr. Carole Rutland-Groce at the planetarium to get additional information on space flight.

Finally, they spoke with CWO 2 Charles and Marsha Winfrey, team member Ken Winfrey's parents. Ken's family gave additional insight into McAuliffe's life since McAuliffe was Winfrey's sister-in-law.

Beth Middlemiss

Jose Miranda holds a camera while Sher'ee Peters directs as they refine a video presentation for Georgia History Day.



Compiling and editing the information garnered from interviews as well as additional hours of library research made this a project that has demanded long hours after school from the history team members and their teachers.

The group members, using information learned from this project, discuss the terminology related to rockets and to space travel with ease. They also discuss the respect they have developed for McAuliffe

"Through this project, we have found that history doesn't have to be boring. We've had some great opportunities here," said team member, Luis Negron. "How many people my age have actually interviewed an astronaut?"

This is the second year that Faith's history students have represented the district in the same competition. Last year, Faith's teams went on to represent the State of Georgia at the National History Day competition at the University of Maryland.

"We're hoping to win the state competition this year," said Roberto Bryan.

Dietitians fill children's heads with food

By Shawn Bryson
Bayonet staff writer

Children at Patch Preschool had their heads full of food during a visit from Martin Army Community Hospital dietitians last week.

Two Auburn University student dietitians, Patricia Morgan and Kelli Williams, both affiliated with MACH, visited 13 Fort Benning Schools classes March 1 and 2.

The visits done in conjunction with the start of National Nutrition Month, were an attempt to better educate the children about the importance of a healthy diet, according to 2nd Lt. Cheryl Thieschafer, clinical dietitian at MACH.

The 3- and 4-year-old children joined Williams and Morgan in discussions of the four basic food groups and healthy snacks versus unhealthy snacks.

The goal of the visits was to start good eating habits in children while they're still young, according to Thieschafer.

Thieschafer said dietitians from MACH have made similar visits over the past few years, and it's becoming a tradition.

Volunteers turn gray skies blue

By Pamela Louis
Co. C, 2nd Bn., 11th Inf.

Students from Company C, 2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry and volunteers from the surrounding area turned a gray February day into an outing at the pool for several children from the People Able to Love and Share program.

Several of the volunteers said that although Feb. 18 was rather gray, inside the Columbus indoor swimming pool area there was plenty of sunshine.

Students from 2nd Bn., 11th Inf., volunteers from the surrounding area and children from the PALS program gathered there for a day of swimming.

Some children learned how to swim, others learned they couldn't, and others found they were ready for the Olympics. However, everyone had fun and everyone got wet.

Larry Shaw is the director; Mary Blackmon is the coordinator, and Ann Allison serves as a counselor of PALS. They, along with Maj. Jimmy Duhaime of Co. C, 2nd Battn., 11th Inf., have become the backbone of the program for this area.

If you would like to become involved in the PALS program, contact the Columbus Family Counseling Center at 327-3238.

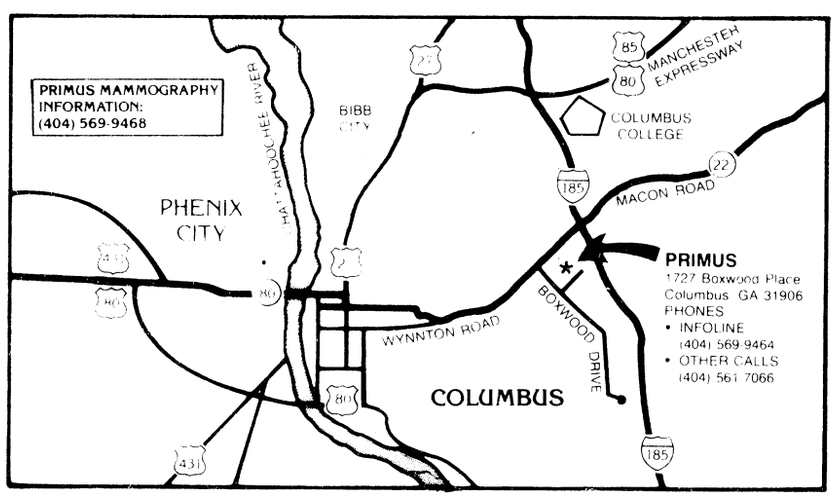
By using the following procedure, soldiers on the family housing waiting list can use this chart to estimate when they can expect quarters:

Locate your category of housing.

Note eligibility date located on the same line as your category.



Calculate the time difference between the eligibility date listed and your eligibility date. The difference is the approximate time you still have to wait for housing.

EXAMPLE: If the latest eligibility date of the person who last received housing in your category was May 15, 1988, and your date of eligibility is Sept. 15, 1988, you can expect housing in about four months. If you do not know your eligibility date, contact the Family Housing Office at building 399, 545-3107.

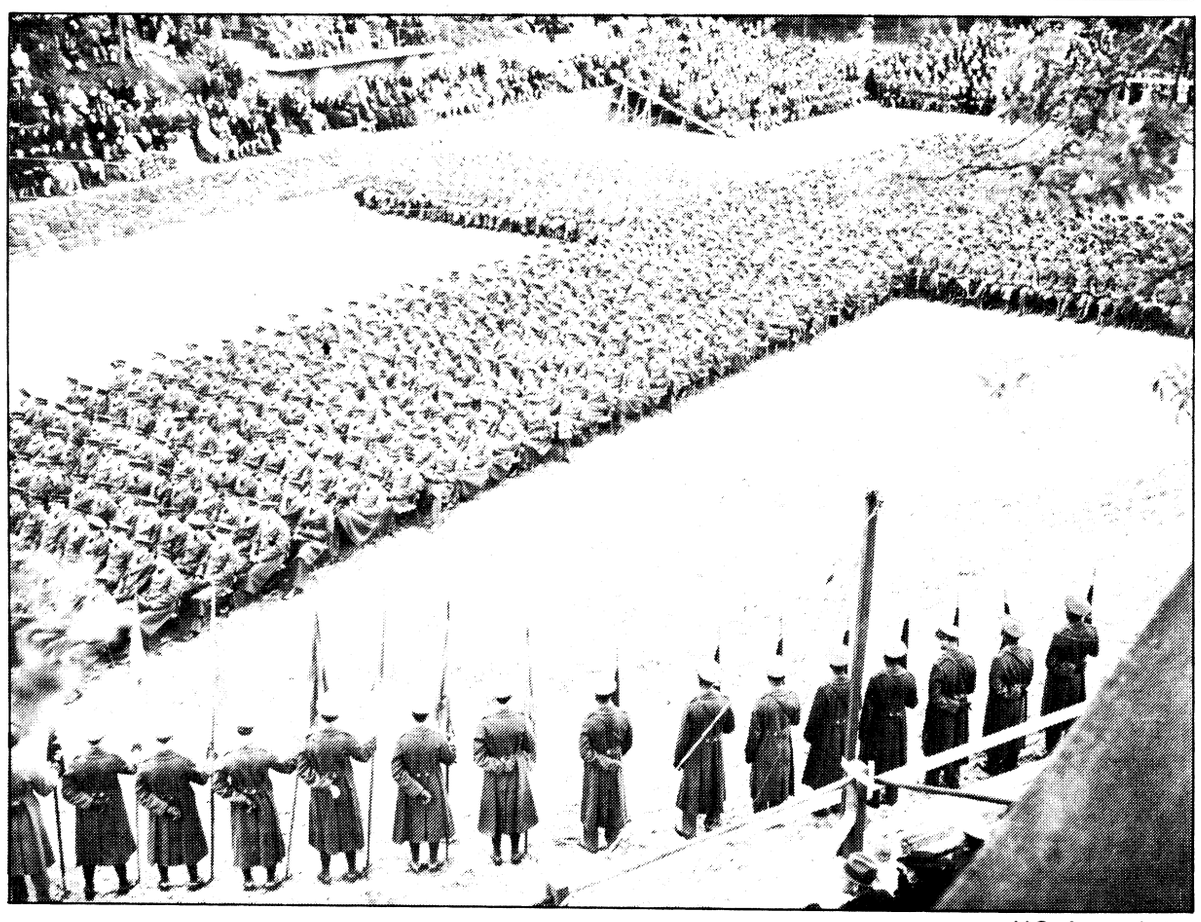
USARSA students gather for breakfast, prayer, reflection

Debra Galle
USAIC Chaplains Office



In an effort to introduce officers of the School of the Americas to an activity familiar to most Army leaders, the "International Prayer Breakfast" was held last week at the Officers' Club.

Officers from 13 Latin American countries gathered for a breakfast buffet and moments of prayer and reflection. The Fort Benning Army Band provided entertainment. Col. Jose Feliciano, commander, 1st Training Brigade, Infantry Training Center, spoke about Army traditions and professionalism.

Father George G. Gonzalez, the first chaplain to be assigned to USARSA, who started the International Prayer Breakfasts in 1988, gave the invocation.

Col. William A. DePalo, USARSA commandant, presented Col. Feliciano with a small gift from USARSA as a gesture of camaraderie and team spirit.

"I learned about Army Prayer Breakfasts and felt it would be an interesting addition to the education of the students," Father Gonzalez, a 1986 graduate of the USARSA OGSC Course, recalls. "I think the officers enjoy gathering together for this. It is an opportunity to teach Latin American Officers one of our finest traditions."

USAIC Chaplain's Office

About 25 people from many nations and cultures gather each Tuesday morning at the Religious Education Center for one purpose and challenge — to learn English.

These students from Central and South America, Korea and Vietnam are separated into groups according to levels of proficiency. They're given books to study in an out of class.

The classes are designed to expand knowledge of English and American ways of life.

The program has been in effect for 20 years. It began as a program for foreign-born spouses of soldiers. Since the addition of U.S. Army School of America students, it has expanded.

The course is free and open to anyone. For more information, call Bill Putman, director of Religious Education, at 545-2366. The group meets Tuesdays from 9:30 to 11:30 a.m. at the Religious Education Center, building 229.

Fraud is trickery, deceit, breach of confidence

By Barry Price
Provost Marshal's Office

Fraud is not an offense under the Uniform Code of Military Justice. However, government employees are subject to being charged with fraud. The term designates a category of criminal offenses involving fraudulent behavior. (Fraud is deceit, trickery or breach of confidence to gain some unfair or dishonest advantage).

Although fraud is difficult to detect, there are "indicators" of fraudulent activities that can signal a potential problem. Supervisors at all levels should be alert to their organization's vulnerability to fraud and must be knowledgeable of the appropriate action to take in the event fraud is detected.

What appears to be a minor administrative discrepancy, a bookkeeping error, an accountability oversight, may in fact be fraud. Supervisors are responsible to conduct inquires into any actions that appear fraudulent. If reasonable belief exists that the crime of fraud is being or has been committed, the Military Police or CID should be immediately notified.

Fort Benning is not immune to this growing Armywide problem. There have been several reported incidents of travel fraud on Fort Benning.

Although names and locations have been changed, the following story describes what happened here recently.

Sgt. H. Ben and Spec. J. Doe were to travel from Camp Swampy, S.C. to Fort Benning for temporary duty. The soldiers were to meet at the battalion motor pool at 9 a.m. Doe showed up on time and waited for about an hour. Ben did not show up. Doe finally gave up waiting for Ben. He dispatched a government vehicle, and he proceeded on his mission.

Ben finally arrived at the motor pool, was dispatched a government vehicle and proceeded on his mission. Upon his arrival at Fort Benning, he went to the finance office to settle his travel claim of $98.16, in which he claimed he had used his privately owned vehicle for the travel, when, in fact, he had used a government vehicle from his motor pool in Camp Swampy.

Corrective actions

This is a difficult situation for a commander or supervisor to detect because the fraud is completed at finance after the person has completed his travel. The only hint the commander or supervisor may have is an overheard statement or a tip from another party.

To help combat this costly crime, call your local CID office at 545-3984 and leave your tape-recorded message. You do not have to identify yourself.

Help us take a bite out of fraud.

Fast food is not always junk food

Barbara B. McCarty
Registered Dietitian

Fast food is not necessarily junk food. In fact, you can find all the basic four food groups represented at most of the popular restaurants.

Besides the meat group, dairy group, bread/cereal group and vegetable/fruit group, you will also find a generous portion from the other group. This is the fifth group, and it includes fats, sweets and alcohol; offers little protein, vitamins and minerals; is high in calories, sugar and fats. There is a reason the system is known as the basic four.

A quick stop for a jumbo burger, french fries and a chocolate shake can cost you almost 1,200 calories, much of it in fat. However, if you practice moderation and variety, you can enjoy fast food and have your nutrition, too.

Begin by making sure you eat a variety of foods.

Eat at various places. Because fast food is high in calories, fat, sugar and salt, eat frequently in places where you can choose lower alternatives (such as the dining facility or your home).

A heart-healthy suggestion for fast food restaurants is to limit consumption of jumbo hamburgers with all the fixings, fried fish, fried chicken and french fries.

Oil and vinegar salad dressings are much lower in fat than creamy dressings (such as Thousand Island, sour cream, and blue cheese).

Watch out for other high-calorie items on the salad bar; croutons, bacon bits, olives, sweet pickles, seeds and nuts.

When ordering pizza, get green peppers, mushrooms and other vegetables and limit the sausage and other fatty meats.

The choice is really yours. When selecting meals, remember to choose the basic four and limit the "fifth group" (fats, sweets, alcohol). By practicing moderation and variety at fast food restaurants, it's easier to eat what's right!

For more information, contact a registered dietitian at Martin Army Community Hospital, 544-1542.

Colonel, command series board tells results

The results of the colonel, command series selection board will be released March 6, according to Army personnel officials.

The boards met in October and November 1988 to consider eligible colonels for command positions in the combat arms, combat support and combat service support fields.

Following are the statistical results of the board:

Area	Eligible	Selected	Pct.
Combat Arms	988	75	7.5
Combat Spt	441	43	9.7
Combat Svc Spt	616	56	9.0

A total of 2,045 colonels were considered; 174 were selected, for an overall select rate of 8.5 percent.

Jump school, assignments open for Ranger personnel

Ranger personnel who have not been given the chance to attend airborne training may now apply.

Personnel will be sent to airborne training TDY en route, with an ultimate assignment to either the 75th Ranger Regiment or the Ranger Training Brigade.

Soldiers can request their preference of assignment, and every effort will be made to accommodate it. However, it cannot be guaranteed.

Interested personnel may contact the Ranger Career Advisor, SFC Boyd, at PERSCOM, autovon 221-5493/5494.

MOS 23R to be established

In conjunction with the plan to support fielding of the HAWK Product Improvement Program, version III weapon system, MOS 24C (HAWK Firing System Mechanic), 24G (HAWK Information Coordination Central Mechanic), and 24R (HAWK Master Mechanic) will eventually be deleted from the total force and be replaced by MOS 23R (HAWK Master Mechanic).

Soldiers who have previously received PIP II training in the above MOSs will receive PIP III New Equipment Training when their units convert to the newer HAWK system.

Once a soldier possessing a 24C or 24G MOS successfully completes PIP III NET, he will be awarded the additional Skill Identifier of Y2 and will attend a tracked resident transition course upon PCS or reenlistment.

Upon completion of this course, these soldiers will be awarded MOS 23R.

Soldiers with MOS 24R will automatically be awarded MOS 23R upon finishing PIP III New Equipment Training.

Cavalry scouts needed

The Infantry-Armor branch has a continuous need for airborne-qualified cavalry scouts, MOS 19D, at both Fort Bragg, N.C., and at the Joint Readiness Training Center at Fort Chaffee, Ark.

Soldiers nearing the end of an overseas tour are urged to volunteer for airborne training and an assignment as a Cavalry Scout.

Interested Cavalry Scouts should apply for this option at least six months prior to their return to the United States.

AR 614-200 gives the criteria for airborne training applicants.

PERSCOM announces ROTC openings for NCOs

The Combat Arms Career Division is looking for senior NCOs to fill ROTC instructor positions in all four of the ROTC regions.

Applicants should have successfully served as either drill sergeants, platoon sergeants and/or first sergeants. Additionally, the Cadet Command prefers that all instructors be graduates of the U. S. Army Sergeants Major Academy. However, this is not mandatory.

Interested combat arms NCOs should contact their respective career branches at PERSCOM to initiate the application process.

AIT soldiers train in Fast Track program

By Darryl Fields
Army News Service

Some soldiers in Advanced Individual Training will get an edge in training under a new program begun in October called Fast Track.

The Fast Track program seeks to identify exceptional soldiers and enhance their MOS technical proficiency by providing them with additional and enrichment training during their AIT. The program has already been implemented in several of the Quartermaster School's departments and is expected to be in full operation soon. Fast Track training will include 13 MOSs at the school's five AIT departments.

The Fast Track idea was begun at Training and Doctrine Command under the direction of Gen. Maxwell R. Thurman, commanding general. It was developed and planned locally by the Quartermaster School's Directorate of Training and Doctrine and will be implemented by individual proponents.

"The reasoning behind Fast Track is to send a more highly qualified soldier to the field and also to help retain quality soldiers," explained Vivian Williams, education specialist for DOTD's course development division. "Basically, it's a program that should enhance the soldier's career and contribute to the Army's productivity." According to Williams, Fast Trackers will be selected by the proponent after a two-week observation period at the beginning of AIT. Fast Trackers will be soldiers who have demonstrated the potential and desire to excel beyond established classroom training standards.

However, academic excellence alone will not entitle a soldier to participate in Fast Track. Fast Trackers must be good soldiers as well as good students. School departments will solicit and consider recommendations from the 23rd Quartermaster Brigade - to which all AIT soldiers here are assigned - before selecting Fast Trackers.

Participation in the program will be voluntary.

Col. John R. Zepke, assistant commandant of the Quartermaster School, has observed preparation and execution of Fast Track classes in the school's departments. "I am impressed with the enthusiasm I've seen in the program - not only from the students, but from the instructors and drill sergeants."

"The students understand that the extra training is going to make them better soldiers," Zepke said. "And the instructors and drill sergeants have done a lot of hard work on their own time to make the program work well."

Some incentives for Fast Trackers have already been approved, and others are being considered. The soldiers will receive a Letter of Commendation signed by the Quartermaster School commandant which will go in their permanent file. Fast Trackers will also receive a special seal denoting their accomplishment on their AIT diploma.

Extra credit for promotion consideration and the award of an additional skill identifier are two of several proposals being studied as further incentives.

Williams noted that TRADOC had instructed all of its installations to implement Fast Track. Although initially targeted for about 20 percent of AIT soldiers, it has now been left up to the individual proponents as to how many students they select for the program.

The Quartermaster School will be closely monitoring and evaluating results of the program - particularly in its infant stages, Williams said. An important part of this process will be evaluating how beneficial the Fast Track skills are to the soldier after he graduates from AIT and goes to the field.

"As we see results, we will make whatever changes are necessary to further benefit the soldier and the Army," Williams said.

West Point seeks officers for teaching positions

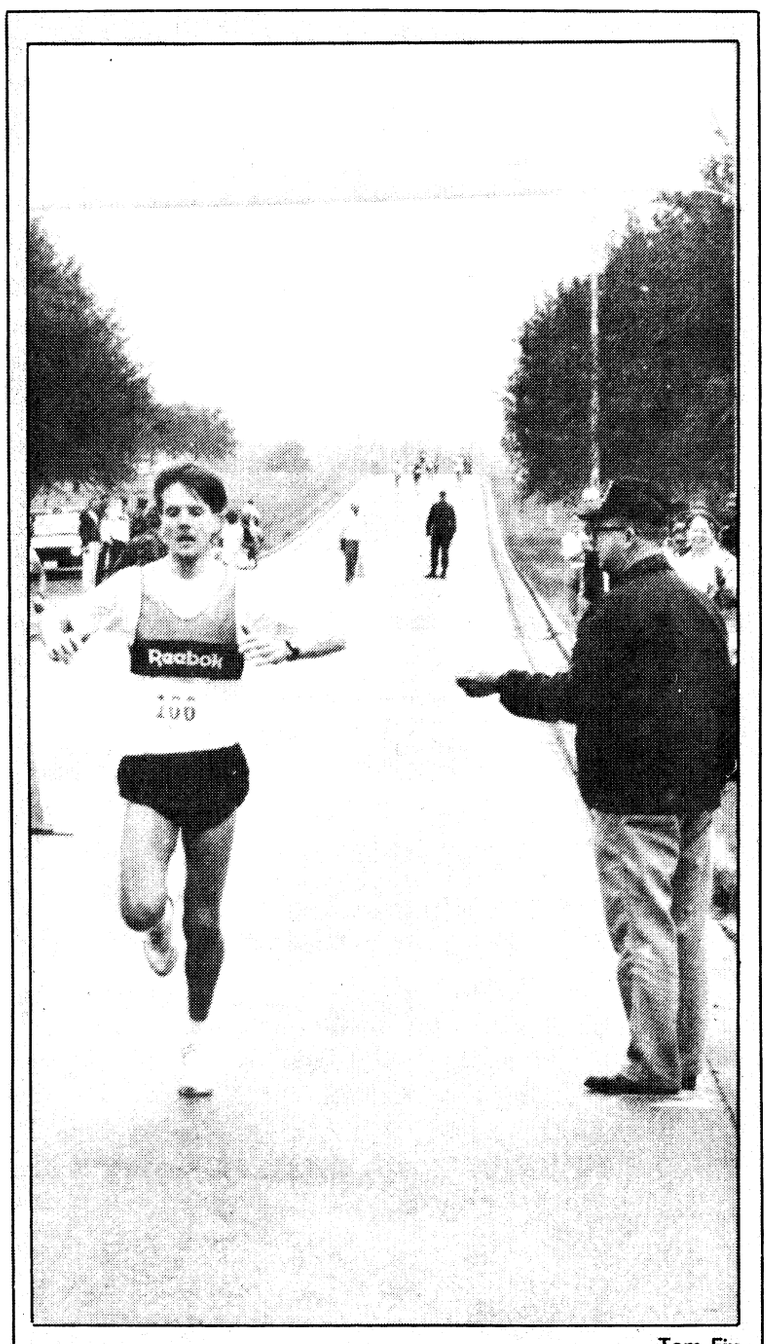
Army News Service

The U. S. Military Academy is looking for associate professors for the departments of electrical engineering and computer science, chemistry and systems engineering.

The USMA superintendent has appointed a committee to recommend active duty officers with approximately 15 years of service for permanent assignment to West Point as associate professors.

Breadth of military experience, depth achieved in military specialties, and evidence of leadership are all factors that will be evaluated.

The individuals selected will be responsible for the design, administration, instruction and research in their academic disciplines, as well as the supervision and development of other officer instructors.



The department of electrical engineering and computer science is looking for one permanent associate professor of electrical engineering, with an advanced degree in electrical engineering or the physical sciences for assignment in the Photonics Research Center.

The associate professor of chemistry position for assignment in the Photonics Research Center requires an advanced degree in physical or analytical chemistry. The candidate should have experience in both theory and applications of laser spectroscopy and be capable of establishing and executing an original and independent research program in laser spectroscopy or a related area.

The department of systems engineering is seeking one permanent associate professor of computer-aided engineering, with an advanced degree in mechanical engineering, systems engineering, manufacturing or industrial engineering.

Candidates lacking a Ph.D. should have a master's degree in the appropriate discipline for each of the two Photonics Center research positions and the computer-aided engineering position. They should also be capable of obtaining a Ph.D. within three years.

Officers interested in applying should contact Capt. Jim Perry, Office of the Dean, United States Military Academy, West Point, NY, 10996-5000 by March 31, 1989. Call commercial (914) 938-2105 or autovon 688-2105/2695 for information.

Quiz tests knowledge of national affairs, energy

By Becky Ray
Energy Branch

Are you knowledgeable of national affairs and current events? Are you familiar with the energy problems the United States faces?

Try to answer "true" or "false" to the following questions. See page B-6 for answers.

1. The United States spends about $10 billion a year on imported oil.

2. Coal-fired power plants contribute to acid rain.

3. Americans use less energy to produce a given number of goods than any other industrialized nation. Technology has made us energy efficient.

4. Solar energy is inexhaustible and cheap and requires little technology for small-scale conversion.

5. Energy waste makes your grocery bill larger.

6. Two-thirds of the oil used in the United States is for transportation.

7. In 1984, 88 percent of American homes had color televisions.

8. Imported oil accounts for one-fifth of the national trade deficit.

9. In 1984 (the most recent year for which data is available) Americans spent about $97 billion for household air conditioning.

10. In 1987, the world's largest producer of energy was the U.S.S.R.

11. The number of nuclear generating units operating in the United States declined in 1987.

12. The U.S. Postal Service is the largest U.S. Government energy user, followed by the Department of Defense.

EFMB test scheduled

34th Medical Battalion

The 34th Medical Battalion will conduct the U. S. Army Infantry Center Expert Field Medical Badge test April 18-28.

The EFMB is a prestigious badge, commensurate with the Expert Infantryman Badge in stature. It is awarded in recognition of exceptional field medical skills after completing a series of grueling physical and mental tasks.

The EFMP test is an evaluation of general military training and medical proficiency of Army Medical Department personnel.

The 34th Medical Battalion conducts the USAIC EFMB training and testing annually. The battalion provides this training/testing to about 150 soldiers annually from active duty, Army National Guard and reserve units in the region.

The 34th Medical Battalion EFMB program consists of a train-up phase that preceeds the actual testing phase.

In addition to a comprehensive written exam and the APFT, a variety of tasks must be satisfactorily completed: land navigation, weapons qualifications, NBC operations, communications, survival tasks, forced road march, emergency medical treatment, evacuation of the sick and wounded, litter obstacle course and cardiopulmonary resuscitation.

A rigorous physical training program, in addition to concentrated training on the hands-on portion of the test, is vital to each candidate for successful completion of the test.

The EFMB is the mark of a professional in the AMEDD; one who cares and one who has taken it upon himself to demonstrate he possesses the skills to be identified as an expert.

Maj. Gen. Michael F. Spigelmire will officiate at the awards ceremony at 11 a.m. April 28. He will present the badge to those soldiers who successfully complete the training and testing.

NCO evaluation report gets high marks in field

By J. C. Mathews
Army News Service

Comments from 1988 sergeant first class selection board members and from the Army at large testify that the Non-commissioned Officer Evaluation Report is getting a warm reception from the NCO corps.

According to indicators used by the Total Army Personnel Command to track the new system's acceptance, the NCO-ER has been "extremely well-received" and "adopted by the NCO corps as their own," says Jack Miller, head of the PERSCOM Evaluation Systems Office.

It's been a dramatic change — a new format and new rules," said Miller. "But the feedback we're getting from NCOs and commanders, as well as from the SFC and Advanced Noncommissioned Officer Course selection board, has been very positive."

More than half of the personnel files under review by the command sergeant major and sergeant major selection board that convened Feb. 22 contain at least one NCO-ER. Although "only a handful" of personnel files reviewed by the 1988 sergeant first class selection board contained an NCO-ER, a majority of board members felt the system provides better information than the Enlisted Evaluation Report, said SGM Clyne Goode, chief of PERSCOM enlisted evaluation policy.

"They especially liked the bullet narratives," Goode said. "They felt it will make the selection process easier because the NCO-ER is almost impossible to inflate."

Ratings of "excellence" or "needs improvement," or a "no" rating in the "Values" section, must be justified in short "bullet" narratives on the NCO-ER; no narrative is required for a rating of "success." Goode said inflated numerical ratings on the EER made it difficult for selection boards to choose one NCO over another and helped prompt the transition to the NCO-ER.

"Selection boards now have the chance to decide for themselves, based on the bullet narratives, if a rating is justified and which NCOs merit selection," he said. "That's why, when we brief selection board members on the NCO-ER, we tell them that an unjustified 'excellence' or 'needs improvement' should be considered as 'success.'"

Miller conceded that challenges remain before the transition can be called complete. One of these, he says, is fear among NCOs that a rating of "success" is not high enough to merit promotion. Selection boards are briefed to regard a "success" rating as a indication to promote the NCO.

"We're trying to develop the trust of the NCO corps in the system, but we have to uphold that trust by promoting NCOs with 'success' ratings," he said.

Questions about ratings in the Physical Fitness and Military Bearing section of the form have also prompted concern at PERSCOM. Miller explained that

Co. A, 2nd Bn., 54th Inf. soldiers assault bayonet course

Samuel Padgett

Pvt. Derek D. Valley thrusts at a target.

By Samuel J. Padgett Jr.
Company A, 2nd Battalion, 54th Inf.

The families of soldiers in Company A, 2nd Battalion, 54th Infantry, 2nd Brigade received a special treat last week when the soldiers demonstrated the "Spirit of the Bayonet."

Parents, wives and relatives traveled from as far as California and Nevada to see their sons and grandsons.

The day began with a static display of small arms, machine guns and mortars.

Later, soldiers took on the "Bayonet Assault Course."

Machinegun fire, explosions and smoke permeated the air as each infantryman low crawled, thrusted and assaulted his way through the course.

Some family members and relatives brought cameras and video cameras to catch the soldiers in motion.

Excitement continued as SSgt. Guy M. Homann briefed each group, "be motivated, be aggressive and attack as you have been taught."

Ron Bowers, parent of Brad A Bowers, stated, "I can't believe how things have changed. The barracks are impressive, and the soldiers look great!"

Afterward, SSgt. Clement R. Remington showed family members video tapes of "One Station Unit Training" and "I am the Infantry." Also, 1st Sgt. McCaffarie of Co. B, 4th Bn., 87th Inf., 25th Inf. Div., gave a briefing to the families of the Hawaii COHORT platoons.

Lt. Col. Robert M. Hensler passes the battalion's colors to Col. Wesley B. Taylor, regimental commander.

3rd Bn., 75th Ranger Regt. changes command

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

Undaunted by the downpour, soldiers of the 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment, braved the elements so the regiment's change of command March 2 could be conducted outdoors in true ranger spirit.

Although the men appeared to be standing in a lake instead of York Field, they didn't move a muscle as Lt. Col. Robert M. Hensler and Lt. Col. Joseph F. Hunt went through the pomp and circumstance of the ceremony.

Col. Wesley B. Taylor, 75th Ranger Regiment commander, took the podium first and spoke words of praise about the incoming and outgoing commanders. "Lieutenant Colonel Hensler has done a fantastic job with this battalion. I'm sure that Lieutenant Colonel Hunt will do equally well," he said.

Hensler headed up many exercises during his command, including "Bright Star" in Egypt; two rotations at the Joint Readiness Training Center at Fort Chaffee, Ark.; the Jungle Operations Training Center in Panama and, more recently, Puerto Rico.

Hunt said he plans to take up where Hensler left off.

"It's my job to train you men how to fight and win the next battle we encounter, and I intend to do just that," he said.

His awards include a Silver Star, Bronze Star with six oak leaf clusters, a Purple Heart, Meritorious Service Medal with four oak leaf clusters, Air Medal with five oak leaf clusters, Vietnam Service Medal, Armed Forces Expeditionary Medal and the Combat Infantryman's Badge.

Hunt comes to Benning from Fort Ord, Calif. with his wife Carol and his daughters, Monica and Kimberly. He commanded 3rd Battalion, 27th Infantry, 7 Infantry Division.

Junior shooters bring home bronze and silver medals

By Sally Roberts
United States Army Marksmanship Unit

Young shooters in Fort Benning's Junior Pistol Club recently showed their talent at the Georgia State Pistol Championship in Augusta, and returned to Columbus with a silver and bronze medal in individual events and a third place finish in the team event.

Tara Snow took second place in the sub-junior women's category, scoring 301 out of a possible 400 points.

"I was really surprised that I did that well," said Tara.

"My score was 20 points higher than I usually shoot," she said.

Nicole Leutenegger took third place with 293.

Amanda Brinke placed fifth, and Mac Crews placed ninth in the junior men category

Snow, Leutenegger and Crews participated in the team event.

This match marked the first time these young shooters competed in a high stakes match since the organization of the program approximately 18 months ago.

The first place finishers in the junior women and junior men categories were invited to a training camp at the Olympic Training Center in Colorado Springs.

"The Junior experience is really important for a shooter," said SSgt. John Ulrich, a member of the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit who donates his time to the program.

"Now that they have a match under their belts, they've gained a little more confidence and learned how challenging the competition can be," he said.

For more information on enrolling in the Junior Pistol Program, call 545-1027 from 7:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. weekdays.

Biathlon, 5-mile run scheduled April 8

USAIC Public Affairs Office

The Medical Department Activity and Dental Activity will sponsor the annual Fort Benning Biathlon and 5-mile run April 8 at 8 a.m.

The biathlon will begin at Building 4 with a 5-mile run followed by a 30-mile bike ride.

A separate 5-mile run will begin 30 minutes after the biathlon. The course will be on paved roads and scenic rolling hills throughout the reservation.

Proceeds will benefit the Combat Medic Museum.

T-shirts will be available to all participants, and all biathlon registrants will be eligible for a 12-speed bike, which will be given away.

Awards will be presented to the top three overall male and female biathlon and 5-mile run finishers.

Also, the top male, female and mixed biathlon teams will receive an award.

The top three individual biathlon and 5-mile run winners in each age group will receive awards. The overall top three winners will be excluded from age group winners.

Entry fees for biathlon before March 30 are $10 for individuals; $18 for the relay; and $30 per team.

The entry fee for the separate 5-mile run before March 30 is $8.

After March 30, biathlon entry fees will be $10 for individuals; $24 for the relay; and $38 per team.

Checks should be made payable to MEDDAC/DENTAC Fitness Association and should be mailed along with a completed entry blank to:

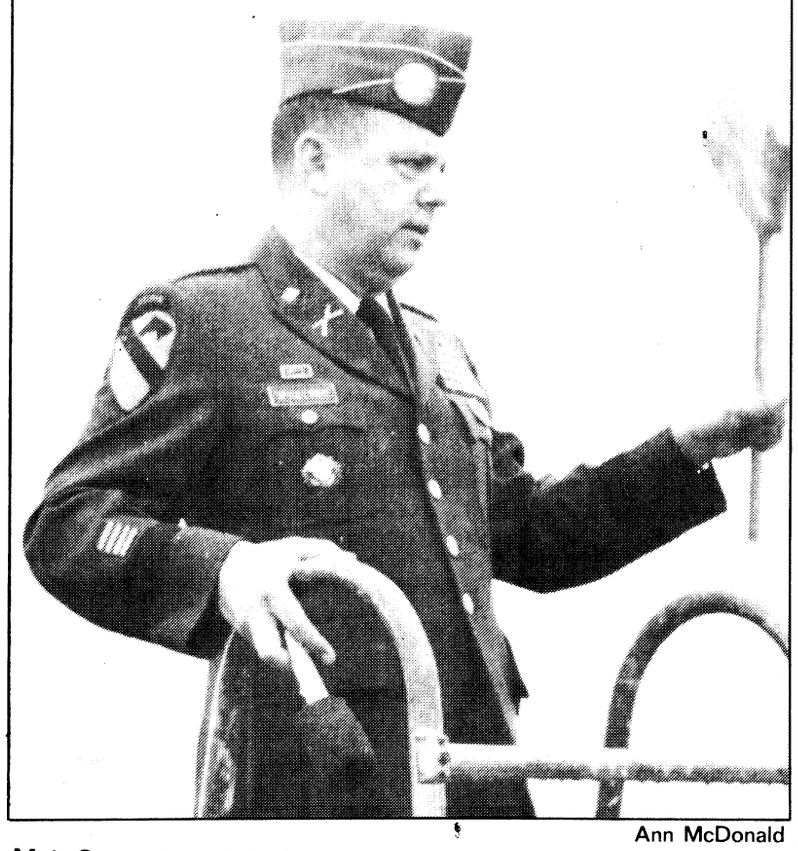
USAIC Public Affairs Office

More than 500 runners took to the streets of Fort Benning Saturday to compete in the sixth annual Infantry Marathon and Half Marathon.

The weather was the same as last year, drizzly. But, the face that crossed the finish line first was different.



Although the course was much flatter than last year's, it didn't boost the winning time. Mark Van Alstyne of Jacksonville, Fla., ran the 26.2-mile course with a time of 2:27:05, nearly two minutes off last year's time.

On the other hand, Kelly Hoskins of Walter Reed Army Medical Center bettered last year's women's marathon mark by nearly two minutes. She breezed in at 3:22:42.2

First-place male runner of the half marathon was Spec. Jay L. Woods from Co. C, 1475th Engr. Bn., Utah Army National Guard. Woods finished with a time of 1:09:42.

First-place female runner of the half marathon was 2nd Lt. Carolyn Machovina, MEDDAC, Fort Jackson, S.C. with a time of 1:22:09.

Post teams fared well in the competition. The women's half marathon team took first place. The men's teams took second place in the marathon team competition and third place in the half marathon.

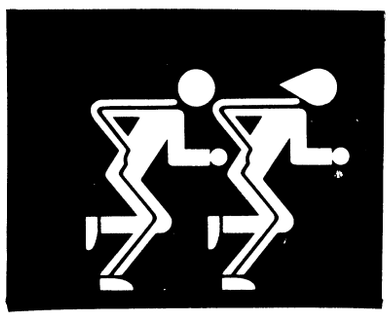
Running remains a popular exercise



President's Council on Physical Fitness

It began as a craze in the 1970s, and continues today as one of the most popular ways to get in shape — running for fitness.

According to the National Sporting Goods Association, 25 million men and women were running or jogging for fitness in 1987, the latest sports participation statistics. They run for health, tension release, improved performance in sports and other activities, and enjoyment.

To get the most fitness benefits from running (or jogging which is basically running at a slower speed), it is wise to follow some basic guidelines. This will help prevent injury and keep you on the road longer.

If you are new to running, check with your physician first. You may want to get a fitness evaluation to assess your starting level. While no one can tell you exactly how far to go at the beginning, a rule of thumb is to begin with a warmup and then walk briskly until you are moving easily and comfortably. Then, run at a comfortable pace until you feel a little fatigued.

Switch to walking and then run when you feel ready again. Repeat this cycle for 20 minutes. Try this every other day until you are running continuously for 20 minutes.

The intensity should remain fairly constant over the 20 minutes, as your heart and breathing rates increase. After four to six weeks, if you practice three to four times per week, you should be running consistently for 20 minutes. (Older people may take longer to reach that point). Then you can start adding on time to a total of 40 minutes. For aerobic benefits to take place, a 20-40 minute workout is recommended. Of course, if you set a goal for yourself of completing a marathon, you will have to outline a very specific training program.

As I mentioned before, a warmup should always be included. A proper warmup includes low level movements (i.e. knee lifts, walking in place, arm circles) combined with stretching for 3-5 minutes before starting on your run. This helps get your body ready for more intense activity.

Also important is to gradually cool down when you are done. Finish your run by easing into a slow walk and then continue walking until you feel that your heart and breathing rates are approaching your resting level. Then finish with some stretching exercises.

Running is a fairly inexpensive way to get in shape. About all that is necessary is a good, well-constructed and comfortable pair of running shoes and comfortable clothing. Training shoes with heavy, cushioned soles and arch supports are preferable to flimsy sneakers. Several running magazines annually rate the major brands and popular models and any sports or shoe store with a qualified staff will be happy to answer your questions. Whatever shoe you choose, make sure it is comfortable.

As for running style, run in an unright position keeping your head up and your back straight. Carry your arms slightly away from your body with your elbows slightly bent. Occasionally shake and relax your arms to prevent tightness in the shoulders. Land on your heel and rock forward to drive off the ball of your foot. Keep your stride relatively short and breathe with your mouth open.

Listen to your body when you run. If you develop pain, or any other unusual symptom, slow down or gradually stop. If the problem persists, see your physician before running again. You may have to switch to a combination of aerobic exercises or run on a different surface.

Running is a great endurance exercise, but it is not a total conditioning program. Include flexibility and muscular strength and endurance exercises on a regular basis to give your fitness regimen proper balance and make you better prepared for running. For more information, write to the President's Council on Physical Fitness and Sports, Department 119, Washington, D.C., 20001.

NCO

an NCO must score 290 or higher on the Army Physical Fitness Test to earn an "excellence" rating based solely on the APFT; an NCO may also earn an "excellence" by "significant achievement in sports or recognition based on military bearing" — if that NCO also passes the APFT.

But, he added, NCOs cannot be rated "needs improvement" for failing to meet unit fitness standards if that NCO passes the APFT. "The Army standard takes precedence over local standards," he said.

Administratively, the transition has been equally smooth. The newest Tactical Army Combat Service Support Computer System software change package will include the NCO-ER form "shell" and a suspense roster to track deadlines in the evaluation process; it is expected to reach the field in April. In addition, Goode says the NCO-ER's error and late submission rates also reflect the field's acceptance.

A 53-percent error rate in the early months under the system was slashed to 3.5 percent by January; late reports are averaging about 4.6 percent. Goode called both figures "tremendous," saying "it took years" to reach those levels after the last rating system change.

"Whenever there's a change, it's tough to get the word out," he said.

"But we've had a lot of help from SMA (Julius W.) Gates, who's been behind us all the way. He's regularly updated command sergeants major throughout the Army on the progress of the transition, and he's challenged them to become experts on the system.

"We also have to credit a lot of professional, dedicated personnel workers in the field. Without them, it couldn't have been done."

PERSCOM distributes a quarterly "NCO-ER Update" to command sergeants major, military personnel offices and key adjutant general sections.

Designed to promote the new rating system, the "NCO-ER Update" contains rating tips, examples of common submission errors and feedback from selection boards.

Energy Quiz Answers

1. False. We spend about $38 billion each year on imported oil.

2. True. When coal is burned to generate electricity, sulfur and nitrogen oxide are emitted from the power plant, causing acid rain.

3. False. Many other countries, such as Japan, West Germany and Italy, use only half as much energy to produce the same amount of goods.

4. True. However, large-scale conversion of solar energy to usable forms currently requires large collection areas, so its use is limited.

5. True. Energy costs in production facilities and transportation are part of the overhead in producing consumer goods. They're part of what you pay for when you buy almost anything. If a producer wastes $50,000 a month through poor energy use, you pay a part of the bill when you buy the product.

6. True. And because 97 percent of transportation in the United States depends upon oil, a disruption in the oil supply could play havoc on industry, the economy and our national security.

7. True. That's 75,900,000 households.

8. False. It's one-third the trade deficit and growing. The American Council for an Energy Efficient Economy warned in a recent report that the figure could reach $100 billion a year by the year 2000 if measures aren't taken to remedy it.

9. True. Also, energy for appliance operation costs $38 billion, and space heating costs $37 billion.

10. True. The United States was the world's second largest overall energy producer, followed by China, Canada, Saudi Arabia and the United Kingdom. The United States was the world's largest consumer of oil in 1986; the U.S.S.R. used the most dry natural gas and China the most coal.

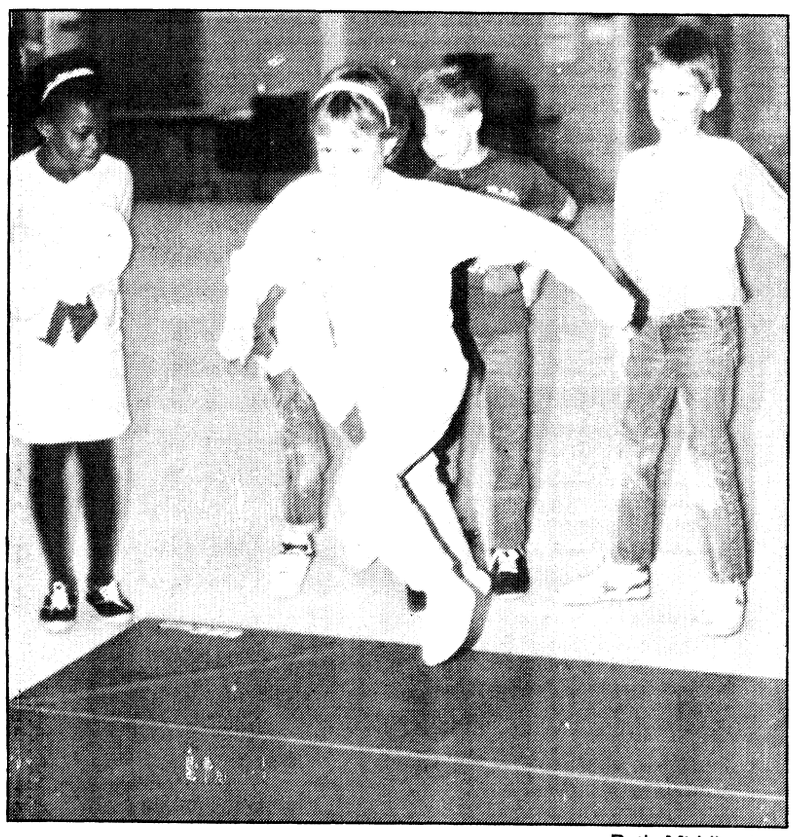
11. False. The number of operational units was at an all-time high of 107.

12. False. In 1987, the Postal Service used 53.4 trillion BTUs. The Department of Defense used 1,497.8 trillion BTUs, more than 28 times that amount.

Catalog is key to the PX

Army News Service

If you were stranded on a deserted island, there's one item of reading material you'd just as soon not have in your possession: the mail-order catalog published by the Army and Air Force Exchange Service.



Why so?

The frustration of seeing all those products displayed so near to you but ever so far away would simply add to your misery.

Of course, few soldiers or their families will ever find themselves beyond reach of their local post exchange or local post office – via which they may order copies of the catalog, and from which they can expect their mail orders to arrive promptly right at their doorsteps.

"When you're not near a post, when you need a novel gift item or when you prefer the convenience of shopping from your barracks or living room, we provide the medium for your expression," say AAFES officials in Dallas.

They point out that the catalog features more than 16,000 items. Besides being available by mail, copies of the catalog are available, for $3 each, in the United States by dialing the AAFES toll-free number, 1-800-527-2345.

Metric long jump

Robbin Henning does the "long jump" while Candice Draughn, Peter Heinlein and Patrick Newly wait their turns at Dexter School's "Metric Fair." They did not just jump; they had to measure how far they jumped in meters and centimeters. Third graders took metric measurements of all kinds -- volume, weight and distance.

POST BRIEFS

Commissary clears shelves of Chilean fruit

Cyanide warning — The Fort Benning commissary cleared its shelves Tuesday of all fruits from Chile following a warning of a cyanide poisoning attempt.

The safety measure was taken after traces of the poison were found in Chilean seedless red grapes shipped to Philadelphia.

Testing of all Chilean fruit was ordered by Food and Drug Administration officials after U.S. embassy officials in Chile received an anonymous threat of the poisoning

Those Chilean fruits removed from commissary shelves include Granny Smith apples, all grapes, plums, peaches and nectarines

No refunds are being given for fruits purchased in the commissary, according to a commissary officer.

AER Campaign begins April 1 continues through July 1

Soldier and family support — Fort Benning will conduct its annual Army Emergency Relief Campaign from April 1 to July 1. The campaign has two main purposes. First, to replenish the fund for grants, scholarships and unpaid loans of 1988; second, to increase awareness of this immediate source of financial support for soldiers and their family members. Last year, $186,427 was contributed to AER. AER needs your help again this year. For more information, contact your unit project officer.

WIC has new number

Food program — The Fort Benning WIC Clinic's new telephone number is 682-8369. The WIC program is a federally-funded, supplemental food program for pregnant, postpartum, breast-feeding women, infants and children up to 5 years old. For more information on this free service, call the new number Monday or Thursday, 8 a.m. - 4:30 p.m.

Commissary takes holiday

Easter — The Fort Benning Commissary will be closed March 26 to observe Easter.

Reclamation sale slated

Reclamation sale — The Installation Supply and Services Division will conduct a reclamation sale March 31 in building 224A from 1 - 3 p.m. Sale items will be priced at 25 percent of the acquisition cost (depending upon the condition of the item). Individual customers will be limited to $150 total purchase. Items offered for sale include 1,000 pairs of speed lace boots and approximately 100 pairs of dress shoes (low quarters) in assorted sizes. The sale is opened to active duty military personnel only. For additional information, call the Clothing Turn-In Point, 545-1972 or Storage Section, 545-1104 or 544-4869.

Children's talent show set

Talent Show — Pre-registration for the second annual Month of the Military Child Talent Show begins Tuesday.

Rehearsals begin April 21. Entry forms must be submitted to Youth Activities, building 1056, no later than one week prior to rehearsals. For more information, call 545-3070 or 545-3913.

Easter egg hunt March 25

Building 1056 — Youth Activities will have its annual youth Easter egg hunt March 25, 10 a.m., at building 1056. This program is open to children 18 months to 9 years old of active duty and retired military personnel. For more information, call 545-3070/3913.

Toastmaster oven recalled

Post Exchange — Toastmaster has issued a voluntary recall of their model 5200 toaster oven with EK244, EK245 date codes because of abnormally high glass breakage. The date code is impressed on the back of the unit and on the outside of the carton. Customers who purchased a Toastmaster 5200 oven broiler with EK244 or EK245 date codes should return the unit to any Army and Air Force Exchange customer service desk for a replacement unit or full refund.

Army's top dentist visits, discusses care

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

The Army's top dentist made a brief stop at Fort Benning last week to tour post dental facilities and to attend a reception at the Officers' Club's Regimental Hall.

Maj. Gen. Bill B. Lefler, assistant surgeon general and chief of the Army Dental Corps had words of praise for Fort Benning's dental program. He said he is concerned about Army dentists today and gave the status of the insurance program.

Lefler said the dental staff at Fort Benning provides quality dental care, and the command supports it totally.

He is, however, concerned about the recruiting of new dentists for the Army. At this point, the Army is receiving one application per position open, he said.

Lefler said he believes the problem stems from the number of dental schools that are closing and the thought that there are too many dentists right now.

"Green suit dentists have been reduced by eighty-one and were going to be reduced by eighty-six more," he said. "We were able to stop that reduction and retain the six-hundred, seventy-two dentists we have."

Those 672 dentists are important because any less would not allow the Army to maintain the quality programs it has today, he said.

"At Fort Benning, there is the general practice training program," Lefler said. "It's the thing that attracts young dentists into the Army."

He explained this program gives young dentists five years experience in one year. After one year they go to another unit and eventually go on to graduate programs.

There are six general practice programs in the Army, with eight students in each.

The new insurance program is excellent, Lefler said.

"The Army has tried to get a program like this for as long as I have been in the Army," he said. "I entered the Army in 1957."

The program is designed for the young soldier with a young family, according to Lefler.

Presently, the program doesn't cover as much as some would like, but that is related to money, he said.

The problems surrounding the program are currently being addressed, and Lefler said he feels they will soon be ironed out.

"As the chief of the Army Dental Corps, I am keeping abreast of all the problems and trying to fix them," he said. "Currently, the major commands are satisfied with our program and are backing it one hundred percent."

Former Army dentist honored

By Agatha H. James
Bayonet staff writer

The highest award a civilian can receive was presented here March 10 to a former Army dentist, now in private practice, for his private contributions to the Army's dental program.

Charles C. Alling, III, a doctor of dental surgery with a specialty in oral and maxillofacial surgery, was presented the Decoration for Exceptional Civilian Service award at a reception and dinner at the Officers' Club on March 10 by Maj. Gen. Bill B. Lefler, assistant surgeon general and chief of the U. S. Army Dental Corps.

Alling provided formal training to dental residents, served as a consultant at various Army installations and presented lectures and seminars to staff dentists and clinical demonstrations to oral surgery staff members for 20 years since his retirement from the Army Dental Corps in 1969.

The Corps first chief of Professional Services in the Surgeon General's office, Alling left the military in 1969 to become professor and chairman of the department of Oral and Maxillofacial Surgery at the University of Alabama in Birmingham. He went into private practice in 1981.

"The Army has a real strong training program in all the surgical specialties and dental specialties," he said, "including my specialty, which is oral and maxillofacial surgery.

"An oral and maxillofacial surgeon is one who has three to five years additional residency training," he added. "We operate on things associated with the mouth from facial trauma to deformed faces to impacted teeth. Maxillofacial trauma can result from an automobile accident, gunshot wound or other type accident."

A former staff oral surgeon at William Beaumont, Letterman and Walter Reed Army Medical Centers, Alling became a Diplomate of the American Board of Oral Surgery in 1954. He served as professor of Dentistry and chairman of the department of Oral and Maxillofacial Surgery at the University of Alabama in Birmingham from 1969 to 1981.

An accomplished author, Alling has written more than 100 professional journal articles as well as several textbooks.

Alling has contributed to the dental education programs at Fort Benning, Fort Knox, Fort Jackson, Fort Riley, Fort Bragg, Fort Sam Houston, Letterman Army Medical Center, Beaumont Army Medical Center, Walter Reed Army Medical Center, the European annual Dental Specialty Conference and the 8th U. S. Army in Korea.

He serves as a consultant to the Veterans Administration, the American Cancer Society, American Academy of General Dentistry, American Heart Association and the American Dental Association.

Quarters cleanup begins today

USAIC Public Affairs Office

The Spring Post Housing Cleanup, which begins today and runs through March 24, is a yearly event designed to make Fort Benning a more attractive and safer place to live and work.

In conjunction with the cleanup, the Community Life Office will conduct a post-wide inspection of the six Benning housing areas Monday. One resident will be awarded "Yard Of The Quarter" for the second quarter of 1989.

The inspection will include policing of yards, mowing of lawns, edgings of walks and driveways, raking, trimming, maintenance of garbage container areas, fencing, gutter and storm drains, pet care responsibilities and security of private property.

The winner will receive a certificate from the post commanding general and a weed eater from the Post Exchange.

Many commanders are doing their part by allowing on-post soldiers a half day off to join their families in this undertaking. Some units, along with the Directorate of Engineering and Housing, will even provide vehicle support to assist with disposal of large debris.

The U-Do-It Shop, located in building 385, will have tillers, trimmers, rakes and many other items that can be signed out on a permanent or

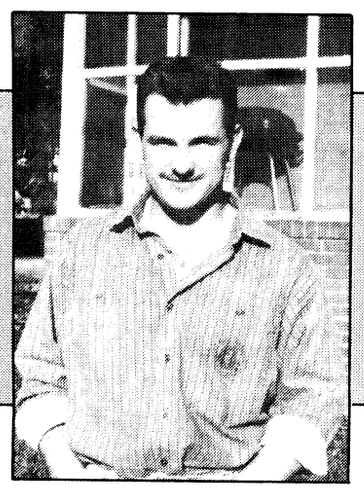
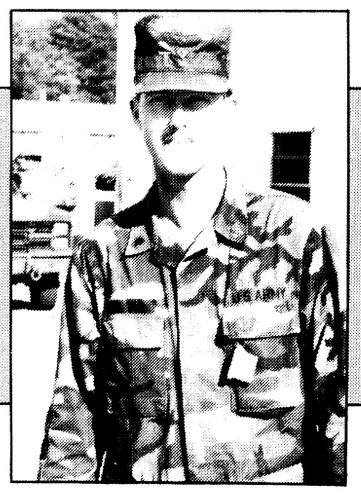
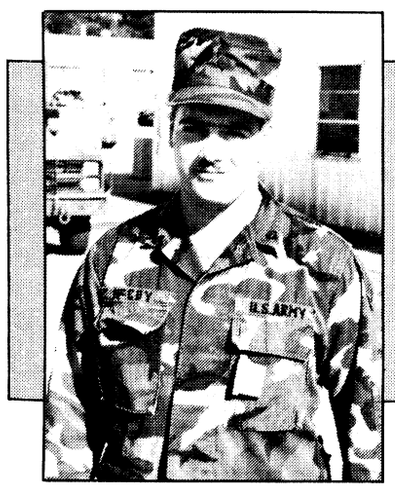
OPINION



VARIOUS VOICES: Why do you think the 29th Infantry Regiment was so successful in TRADOC's Maintenance of Excellence competition?



Maj. Thomas Suitt, HQ Co., 1st Bn., 29th Inf. Regt. - "We were primarily successful because of the soldiers. The soldiers take pride in their work, and their SQTs are above average. I also believe we have good management at all levels."



SFC Anthony Rouser, HQ Co., 1st Bn., 29th Inf. Regt. - "I think consistency is why we did so well. There is no way we could fix everything the day before the inspectors came. We did it all year like we are supposed to. We have a very smooth operation."

Sgt. Jerry Golbienko, HQ Co., 1st Bn., 29th Inf. Regt. - "I think a lot of it is due to our battalion motor officer, Capt. Ricky Finch. He has been around for a while, and he's really familiar with all aspects of the operation. We were graded on paperwork, and that is what he does best."

Spec. Tracy Taylor, HQ Co., 2nd Bn., 29th Inf. Regt. - "We try to keep the vehicles working all of the time with no downtime."

Spec. Wayne McCoy, HQ Co., 2nd Bn., 29th Inf. Regt. - "I just got here, but from what I have observed, this is a good motor pool with good people working in it."

Spec. Clarence Schmig, HQ Co., 2nd Bn., 29th Inf. Regt. - "I think it's just basically good teamwork between the sections. The troops are very knowledgeable in their MOS."

Snively procrastinates as usual

By Clyde Snively
USAIC Public Affairs Office

National Procrastination Week was scheduled the first week of March. Members of the Procrastinators' Club of America got around to recognizing that fact, the following week.

They used that time "to promote the benefits of relaxing by putting off until tomorrow everything that needn't be done today."

I really support their goals and would like to join this 6,500-member organization. But, like millions of other procrastinators, I just haven't gotten around to it.

What I really want to do, is get in so I can take an inactive voice in getting the club's acting president, Les Waas, elected president.

He's been acting president since the club was formed in 1956, but the club just hasn't gotten around to acting on either getting a new president, or making Waas its bona-fide president.

It's also important the club meet so more inactivities can be planned for coming years.

I wanted to join the club bad enough that I had my membership application in hand, but just never got around to filling it out before I went into the Army - something I probably wouldn't have gotten around to if the nice sergeant hadn't filled my application out for me - all I needed to do was sign and date it.

Well, you know how things are in basic training. First, there's no room in your brain for anything that's not O.D. in color. Ya gotta memorize your general orders, the differences between heat stroke and heat exhaustion, what to do in case of chemical attack and a lot more things I have a hard time remembering.

It's the same at the basic journalism course. They got you memorizing all these rules for writing good. That involves four (or was it five?) Ws and an H.

After that I went to my unit, and while I had time to fill out the application and send it in, by then I'd lost it. I never got around to getting another one.

But if you really think about it, we need to get more Army guys into this club. Just think how much stress we could reduce if one day some drill sergeant were to walk up to his platoon and say, "Soldiers, we're doing nothing today. Everything we were scheduled for, we're putting off until tomorrow, so just lay back and take it easy the rest of the day. Go back to bed if you want."

Can you imagine what a great positive impact that would have. All those troops with nothing to do but reflect on how great the Army must be if some sergeant can just decide to give them a day off?

Then, by the end of the day, they'd be so bored from doing nothing, they'd be happy to get back in the grind of basic training and do better than ever.

The same in a unit. A company commander gets up in the morning, sees what a great day it is and tells his troops, "It's too nice a day for training. Go fishing, play golf, get out of here. We can do Army stuff tomorrow."

Wow, would his stock go up in the eyes of his men.

I wonder how long he and the drill sergeant would last.

Well, enough dreaming. This column is already three weeks late, I've still got income taxes to file, and my car registration is coming due.

Miss the deadline on either of these, and you're talking big-time late fee.

Wouldn't it be nice if the IRS and the State of Georgia could just kick back and say, "Hey, you haven't got your taxes in, don't have your car registered? Don't worry, be happy, we'll catch you tomorrow."

Supervisors, writers should follow same philosophy, be clear, concise

By Bill Roche
Army News Service

I hate it when I'm asked to write about something and I don't have any idea what to say.

It happened recently. I was asked to write about how supervisors and subordinates can get their wires crossed.

It's my own fault. I brought the topic up and talked about it with LouAnn, our editor, at length. So, she figured I had something more to say. I didn't.

A few days later, though, a thought came to me. I was sitting at my desk, poring over some other stories, when a flashbulb went off in my head - writing is communicating; supervising is communicating.

"Well, isn't that special?" I thought. The gears were beginning to turn. What they turned out was one of life's great lessons, so listen up: good supervision is just like good writing.

The best writers stick to things they know about and feel strongly about. Somehow I don't think Shakespeare would've been much of a dime store sci-fi author.

A good supervisor, in dealing with his people, doesn't try to get outside of his own realm, either.

On those days when whatever mission he's on requires him to step outside the box of his own specialty, he goes to the experts to get his facts - much like Stephen King, who consults with doctors to find out what really happens when the main character eats his own toes. Steve writes not of what he knows not — at least, not before talking to the experts.

Good writing is clear. If a writer wants his readers to know that a character — let's say 'Alfredo' — was shot, he writes, "Alfredo was shot," not, "Alfredo received a bullet." (Maybe in the mail?)

Same for the boss. If he wants a worker to go the main gate to meet the general at 9 a.m. when he arrives, he says so. He doesn't say something muddy like, "There will be a general meeting at the gate this morning."

Along with clear goes concise. In fact, they're almost the same. If Dr. Killjoy is a good doctor, and he intends to remove a wart from his patient's index finger, he certainly wouldn't point vaguely to the patient's hand and say, "I'm going to cut this off."

Once I did see a nurse put a cast on a patient's good leg, though. Think the doctor's orders to her were concise? Right.

In the news business, we have to be concise. Our reputations depend on it. One way we remind ourselves of the need to be concise is to look at some "un-concise" headlines. Here are few that actually appeared in newspapers.

They're good for a chuckle, too:

"N.J. Assembly passes drunk driving test"

"Man with two broken legs saves one from drowning"

"Relatives served at family dinner"

"Engineers to hear ground water talk"

"Glacier Lake still up in the air"

I think you get the idea.

We also have to be correct. If we don't have our facts straight, we shouldn't try to communicate them. Things should be the same at work. If someone doesn't "have their ducks in order," they shouldn't take them to the pond. Period.

One last point, which I consider most important, in newswriting, you must be consistent. If you use the abbreviation "N.Y." for New York, use it every time. That keeps your readers from getting confused and sets a standard.

The same is true with work relationships. As an NCO, I feel one of the worst things a sergeant can do is be inconsistent in his dealings with subordinates. I've seen it happen many times.

Here's the scenario: At work, SFC Schmoe is normally pretty relaxed with his troops. He usually doesn't put a lot of pressure on them and acts as if he encourages casual and open communication and respects their feelings. He tries to be a "buddy."

But let one of his soldiers say something he doesn't like, or treat him the way he acts as if he wants to be treated — like "one of the guys" — and Schmoe chews up his troop like a shark in uniform that just heard the lunch bell ring and decided a feeding frenzy sounded like a good idea.

The soldiers thought they had a boss they could talk to. All they got was confused and hurt.

So the moral is this: If you approach supervisor-subordinate relationships as if you were writing the great American novel — keeping communication clear, concise, correct and consistent — chances are you and those with whom you work will live happily ever after.

29th Inf Regiment soldiers make good things happen

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

"Good people make (good) things happen, and these battalions are filled with good people," said the 29th Infantry Regiment commander, after both of his battalions were presented Training and Doctrine Awards Monday for maintenance excellence

1st Bn., 29th Inf. Regt. took first place in the heavy category, and 2nd Bn. was awarded runner-up in the intermediate category.

This is the fifth year that 2nd Bn. has been recognized at TRADOC and the first year for 1st Bn.

Col. John D. Fuller, regimental commander, attributed the success of the battalions to the "great" military and civilians working within his command.

"The privates on through to the NCOs, civilians and officers in charge of the motor pool are responsible for making the system work," he said. "They are very committed."

Capt. Ricky Finch, 1st Bn. motor officer, and CWO 4 Neil LaClair, 2nd Bn. motor officer, were singled out by Fuller as being the two people who masterminded the success.

The troops echoed Fuller's sentiments about the two men.

"They were responsible for all of the paperwork," said Sgt. Jerry Golbienko, HQ Co., 1st Bn., 29th Inf. Regt. "It (paperwork) is where it all begins. If the paperwork isn't done right, everything can get screwed up."

Golbienko said although the 1st Bn. motor pool has a tremendous amount of machinery rolling through its doors, the troops try to keep downtime to a minimum. The numbers reflect that.

Sgt. Kevin Benner, Co. D, 1st Bn., 29th Inf. Regt., affirmed Golbienko's comments and added, "Ninety-five percent of our vehicles are up at all times, which is comparatively higher than the Army average of eighty percent."

"We achieved this high average because of the combined efforts of everyone in the motor pool," Benner said.

According to SSgt. Michael Livingston with HQ Co., 2nd Bn., 29th Inf. Regt., 2nd Battalion's awards give the soldiers an opportunity to protect their reputation and possibly add to it.

"They are highly motivated soldiers. They know what to do to get the job done, and they do it," Livingston said. "They strive for excellence."

Excellence seems to be running rampant within the sister battalions at the 29th Inf. Regt., and with any luck, it will run all the way up to Department of the Army competition where 1st Bn. is currently competing. The results of the competition should be announced soon.

CG visits German infantry

By Agatha H. James
Bayonet staff writer

A recent visit and tour of German Army training schools provided Fort Benning's chief of the infantry a complete overview of the German infantry.

Maj. Gen. Michael F. Spigelmire, while on a trip to West Germany to attend the Senior Leaders Conference, visited the German Army Office, the German Armor School, Infantry School, International Long-Range Reconnaissance School and Airborne School.

Fort Benning's German Liaison officer, Lt. Col. Walter Conze, arranged the visits and accompanied Spigelmire.

"We started in Cologne at the German Army Office, which is equivalent to your Training and Doctrine Command," he said.

Spigelmire met with the chief of German combat troops, Maj. Gen. Carl Helmuth Lichel, who briefed him about the future of the German infantry and new equipment.

The visits were interrupted by a three-day Senior Leaders Conference in Grafenwoehr.

After the conference, Spigelmire visited the German Armor School, which is responsible for all mechanized training in the German army. While there, he saw a display of all German weapon systems and a demonstration of some of them. Spigelmire was especially interested in the new German multi-purpose vehicle, which was demonstrated as a nuclear-biological-chemical detection car, according to Conze. The multi-purpose vehicle is able to transport infantry and armored cavalry. In the future, the Germans will use the multi-purpose vehicle as a carrier for light infantry, Conze said.

More than 70 percent of the German infantry is mechanized infantry equipped with the "Marder" fighting vehicle, which is equivalent to the Bradley fighting vehicle, Conze said.

In Munster at the German armor school, soldiers displayed the latest version of the "Marder" vehicle and the German anti-tank rocket system, which is mounted on a tracked vehicle.

Next, Spigelmire traveled to the German Infantry School, located in Hammelburg, where he met German Infantry School commander, Brig. Gen Klaus-Peter Schoetensack, and the American liaison officer, Maj. John Lovejoy. The German Infantry School put on two demonstrations for Spigelmire: One was the attack of a mechanized infantry company in an urban terrain area; the second was a demonstration of the logistics support of the company right after the attack.

Spigelmire then visited the International Long-Range Reconnaissance School where American, German, English, Belgium, Greek and Portuguese soldiers are trained. School commander, Lt. Col. Karl-Dieter Wendeborn, trains nearly 500 American soldiers there annually. The curriculum is basically the same as the Long-Range Surveillance course at Fort Benning. According to Conze, the American liaison officer keeps in touch with the Ranger Training Brigade at Fort Benning.

The German Airborne School, commanded by Col. Ernst Richstein, rounded out the 10-day trip. Conze said they visited German ranger training, which is part of the Airborne School.

Due to inclement weather, Spigelmire did not get the opportunity to earn his German Airborne wings. He promised Richstein that he would return.

17 Latin American officers graduate USARSA

By Keith Johnson
U.S. Army School of Americas

Seventeen Latin American officers graduated from the U.S. Army School of the Americas' Joint Operations course Friday during a graduation ceremony at Fort Benning's Infantry Museum.

Before the graduation, the students and guest instructors of the course attended a "farewell breakfast" at the Follow Me Golf Course clubhouse. After the breakfast, Col. Paulo C. Pavan, a guest instructor from Brazil and course manager, had some parting words for the graduating students.

"I hope you apply what you have learned here to your respective jobs in your countries and we can all meet again in the future," Pavan said.

The course, which lasts five weeks is designed to prepare field grade Latin American officers of all services with the doctrinal fundamentals and a general orientation of Joint Operations and experience of preparing for a Joint Task-force operation through a map experience.

"We learned about the development of Joint Operations, addressing problems such as subversion and terrorism and how they effect the internal security and development of our countries, " said Lt. Col. Hernan Aguilera, a student from Bolivia.

The students also had the opportunity to take a tour of Columbus' Historical District and Naval Museum while assigned to USARSA.

"This was a good opportunity for us to learn a little more about this great country, the leader in the world in all aspects," Aguilera said.

2nd MASH soldier saves ranger's life

Joseph B. Peake

SSgt. Steven Ellis opens a litter.

By Joseph B. Peake
USAIC Public Affairs Office

A member of the 2nd Mobile Army Surgical Hospital, 34th Medical Battalion received an Impact Award for saving a ranger student's life while supporting the 5th Ranger Training Battalion at Camp Frank D. Merrill, Dahlonega, Ga.

SSgt. Steven Ellis received an Army Achievement Medal from Lt. Col. Robert Brownfield, commander, 5th Ranger Training Battalion at the 34th Medical Battalion Headquarters, last week.

Ellis said he had just dispatched the ambulance back to the troop medical clinic when SFC Mike Davis, a ranger instructor, burst into the medical tent and said a ranger student had collapsed.

"I grabbed my M-5 bag, jumped into his van and took off across the road to the training site," Ellis said.

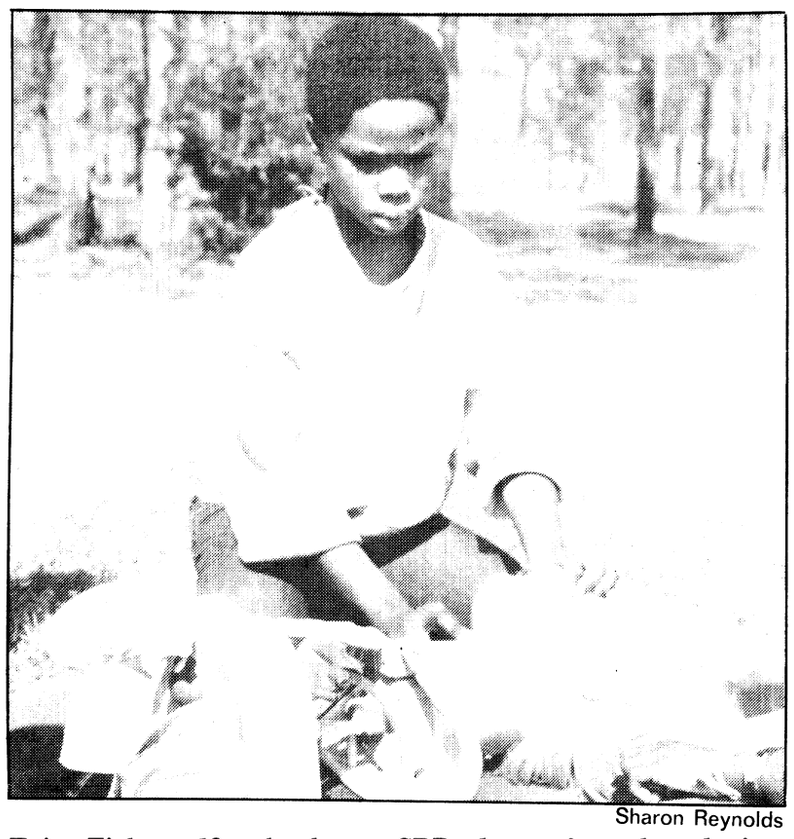
"Initial reports were kind of sketchy, but it sounded like he was a hypothermia case. It also sounded like he was in real serious trouble," said Brownfield.

Upon arrival, there were two ranger students standing on either side of the casuality, holding him up under his arms.

"The student was doubled over and was hanging limp, like a rag doll. After assessing his level of consciousness and seeing that he was not going to be able to walk, respond or cooperate in any way, he had them carry the student to the van and put him in the back."

On the way to the TMC, the soldier's condition continued to deteriorate. Ellis talked to the patient and tried to calm him.

Moments later, the patient had a respiratory arrest. Davis stopped the vehicle so that Ellis could get the patient on his back.



After cutting through several layers of clothing, he put a blood pressure cup on the patient's arm but was unable to get a reading.

Ellis began giving CPR to restore breathing. Finally, the patient was breathing, but was hyperventilating.

While he was still breathing on his own, Ellis told Davis to take off again. About 15 minutes later, the soldier had another respiratory arrest, Ellis again had to start him breathing.

"After what seemed eternity, we arrived at the gate of Camp Merrill where an ambulance was waiting to take the patient to the hospital.

"The man did not die. I don't know whether he would have died or not if staff sergeant Ellis hadn't been there, but I'll tell you that the soldier thought he was going to die. I'm very happy this staff sergeant was there at the critical time, doing the thing he does best," Brownfield said.

Soldiers, family members certify during Red Cross' 'CPR Saturday'

By Sharon Reynolds
Bayonet staff

Nine American Red Cross volunteers certified more than 50 soldiers and family members for cardio pulmonary resuscitation during a special CPR class here Saturday.

About 10 child care providers from Tot Town, some 20 soldiers from U.S. Army School of Americas and several family members went through the one-and-one-half- to two-hour certification course called "CPR Saturday," according to Maurice Franklin, assistant station manager of Benning's American Red Cross.

Franklin explained that child care providers are required to recertify their CPR skills every year. Although the course is not required for USARSA students, Maj. Rod Propst, chief of Tactics Division at USARSA, encouraged his soldiers to become certified.

He explained that during an incident in which CPR was required, he discovered a few of his men were apprehensive about thier skills. He said he felt his soldiers would benefit from the class.

Franklin said yearly recertification is important for the "fear factor." When CPR skills are not used, a person may become apprehensive about what to do when faced with an actual emergency. He said the CPR class is especially important for soldiers because a medic is not always readily available in tactical situations.

"The most important thing we learned at this class is to not wait to see if a soldier is playing around, react quickly and recognize the symptoms of an emergency where CPR might be necessary," Propst said.

He added he thought his soldiers were going to have to pay a lot of money for the class and was surprised to discover the class is free.

"Red Cross pays for everything except the books," Propst said. Course books cost $7.50.

Another thing that made Saturday's class popular is spouses were welcomed. "That's very important," Propst said.

Only two people failed to complete the course and, according to Franklin, that's an excellent success rate. He attributed the rate to the individualized attention given the students. Since there were nine volunteer instructors, groups could be kept small.

Franklin said he would like to offer the CPR course to more people.

"I'd like to see the mayors (of the post housing areas) incorporate our programs into their family member activities," Franklin said.

In addition to special classes such as "CPR Saturday," Red Cross offers regular CPR classes the first Thursday of each month at the American Red Cross, building 1699. For more information, call Franklin at 545-5194.

Drinking drivers kill

Infantry Branch Safety Office

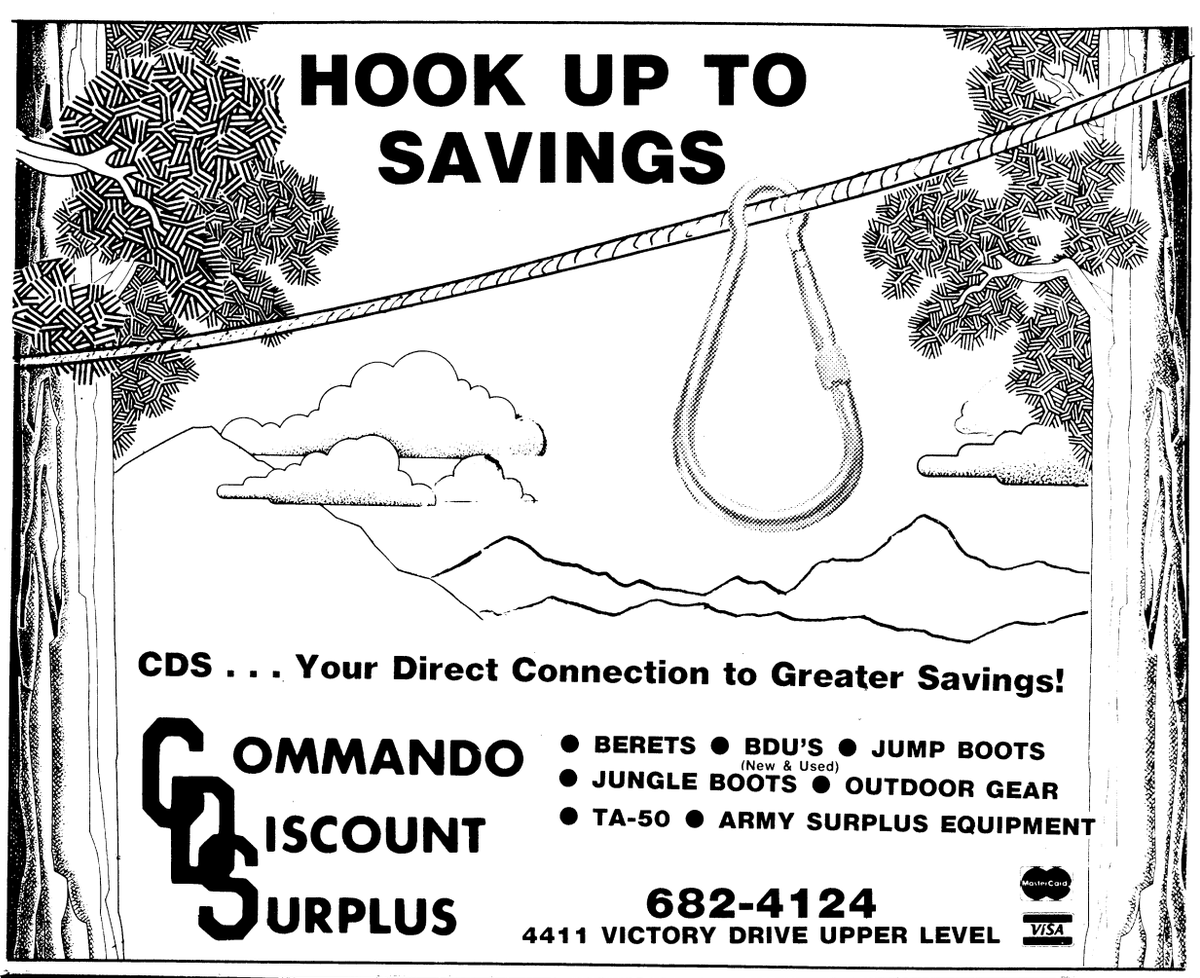
They kill themselves.
They kill their passengers.
They kill people they love.
They kill people they don't even know.

Why? For one thing most of them do not realize how badly alcohol affects their mental and physical functioning. Since alcohol depresses the central nervous system, it makes them less alert and slows reaction time; it dulls the senses and interferes with coordination.

For another, drinking drivers don't believe they're going to get caught.

According to the National Safety Council, the odds of getting picked up are about one in 2,000 in most places. Most drivers believe if they are convicted, the sentence will be light

There is still another factor that allows drinking and drunk drivers on the highway. Drinking and driving is socially accepted behavior. It may not be endorsed or approved behavior, but it is accepted.



How many times do you drink and drive? How often do you let someone you know drink and drive? With the spring and summer months approaching, soldiers and civilians will be vacationing, going away for weekends, picnicking and partying.

Safety meetings, promotion and education on the dangers of drinking and driving are important; and supervisors should do more than meet mandatory requirements in these areas.

Special safety meetings should focus on dangerous drinking practices. The dangers of trying to travel too far on a weekend and partying beside should be emphasized. Both civil and military penalties for drinking while driving should be clearly impressed upon people.

While drinking may be a socially acceptable practice, killing and injuring people are not. Too often they go hand-in-hand.

Plans set for parent aide program

Social Work Services

Plans are under way by Social Work Services to initiate a parent aide program at Martin Army Community Hospital in May.

Volunteers are currently being recruited for this program.

There are no specific qualifications other than a desire to meet and assist others. All volunteers must attend an 18-hour class prior to working in the program. Interested individuals should contact Karen Crowley at the Volunteer Resource Center, 545-5602.

The parent aide program, or "First Steps" as it will be called, has been initiated at several hospitals throughout Georgia. The goal of the program is to connect new, inexperienced parents with a trained volunteer while the parent is still on the maternity ward.

The new parent will be given a child development calendar so the new parent will be familiar with normal child development, a resource list of agencies in the military and civilian communities who can offer free assistance of various types and a monthly newsletter that discusses parenting techniques. The volunteer will also offer to visit the new parent at home or make telephone contact.

According to Lt. Col. Paul Tessier, chief of Social Work Services, this program can be especially helpful to military families since new military parents are often long distances from home and cannot easily turn to family and friends for assistance. The First Step volunteer can fill this void by either offering guidance or helping the parents locate appropriate resources.

Leon Rodgers, a social worker at Martin Army Community Hospital, will oversee the program. He points out that while sponsored by Social Work Services, many other agencies are assisting by training the volunteers and offering program guidance.

Agencies assisting in this new effort include the American Red Cross, Community Health Nurse, Child Development Services, Department of Nursing, Post Volunteer Coordinator, Army Family Advocacy Program, University of Georgia Extension Services and the Columbus Regional Chartered Council on Child Abuse, Inc.

ASK THE JUDGE

Susan McKeeman
Staff Judge Advocate's Office

Q: My family lives on post. My husband is a drill sergeant. With his schedule over the past year, he hasn't had much time to spend with me and the kids and we've drifted apart. Last week he said he wanted a separation.

I don't think we need to separate at all. My husband doesn't see it that way. So on his own, he just packed up and moved into the barracks.

Now he tells me that our family has to leave government housing. Is this true, even if I'm not the one who left? How will I move all of our things out of quarters? Don't I have any rights?

A: The Army gives the soldier, not his family members, a housing entitlement. It means he is the one with the right to make decisions on accepting or terminating quarters. Therefore, your husband can indeed terminate the quarters, at any time, for any reason, even if you don't want to leave.

Who wanted the separation, and the reason for leaving do not matter. To remain eligible for government housing, the soldier must live there. When the soldier moves out, and does not intend to return, the government considers him to have voluntarily terminated his quarters. The soldier's family has no legal right to stay.

A short separation of a few days, or a week, does not terminate the quarters. However, longer separations, or the soldier's statements to others that he won't move back, can start the process of having the quarters terminated.

Once notified the soldier no longer lives in the quarters, or when the soldier terminates the quarters, the housing office will terminate the entitlement and notify you to leave. Under Army regulations, you have 30 days from the date you receive the letter to clear the quarters.

What happens to your household goods depends on where you intend to go after you leave the quarters. The soldier has the right to make one shipment of household goods, at government expense, to either a local address or permanent storage for a time up until his next permanent change of station or local move. Household goods cannot be shipped anywhere else without the soldier having military transfer orders.

The government will not pay for any other type move. You can ask your husband to use his entitlement to put your things in storage. Then, either get his written agreement to ship your things at his expense when you are ready for them, or wait until you are able to move them yourself.

Many times a soldier will voluntarily terminate quarters just to "get even" with his spouses. A soldier can legally do this, but it is not a good idea. It not only hurts the spouse.

Although the soldier cannot be ordered to keep his quarters, the spouse could file for a divorce in the local courts and ask that the judge order the soldier to pay for housing, child support and other expenses. Because the soldier has "kicked" his family out of the quarters, most judges will grant this temporary order.

Problems are not solved by soldiers terminating their quarters. Usually newer, more expensive ones, replace them. Other alternatives should be looked at before taking this step. Counseling is available through the Chaplain's Office and the Army Family Advocacy Program. Also, voluntary separation agreements may be available from the legal Assistance Office.

Many fatal poisoning victims are adults

National Safety Council

More than 5,000 Americans died in 1987 from accidental poisoning, according to the National Safety Council, and while most poisoning incidents involve children, many fatal poisoning victims are adults.

Misuse of medications and accidental carbon monoxide poisoning are common types of adult poisonings in the home. In accordance with National Poison Prevention Week, March 19 through 25, the Council suggests these tips to prevent accidental poisoning by medicines and carbon monoxide:

Medications

● Read medicine labels carefully, and obey your prescriptions. Do not take medicine in dim light or darkness. You may not be able to read warning labels.

Never mix medications, take more than what is prescribed or use someone else's prescribed medicine.

● If you take medication, don't use alcohol or other drugs. Such combinations can produce dangerous chemical reactions.

● Keep detailed records of the medications you take, the dosages administered and the times of day when the medication is ingested. Include in your records both prescription and over-the-counter drugs. Show your physician your records if you experience any side effects from a medication, receive a prescription for a new medication and during routine examinations.

● Clean out medicine cabinets periodically. Discard unlabeled or outdated medications.

Carbon Monoxide

Carbon monoxide is a colorless, odorless, tasteless gas formed as a normal by-product of combustion. It is naturally found in small, harmless concentrations in the atmosphere. But when a home has incomplete combustion or inadequate ventilation, a larger-than-normal concentration of this toxic gas results.

To help prevent carbon monoxide poisoning in your home, follow these tips:

● Keep chimneys, stovepipes, flues and connections clean and in good repair. Have them inspected annually by a qualified individual.

● Use fuel burning stoves, space heaters and other appliances only in strict compliance with the manufacturer's recommendations. If you use them, keep your home well-ventilated.

● Never run internal combustion engines (autos, boats, lawn mowers) indoors or in enclosed areas.

● Do not operate charcoal grills indoors or in enclosed areas.

● Install a carbon monoxide monitor in your home. This is a small, inexpensive device that indicates hazardous levels of carbon monoxide by changing color.

By using the following procedure, soldiers on the family housing waiting list can use this chart to estimate when they can expect quarters:

Locate your category of housing.

Note eligibility date located on the same line as your category.

Calculate the time difference between the eligibility date listed and your eligibility date. The difference is the approximate time you still have to wait for housing.

EXAMPLE: If the latest eligibility date of the person who last received housing in your category was May 15, 1988, and your date of eligibility is Sept. 15, 1988, you can expect housing in about four months. If you do not know your eligibility date, contact the Family Housing Office at building 399, 545-3107.

Liaison officer decorated by Queen of England

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

The British liaison officer at the U.S. Army Infantry Center went to Buckingham Palace in London, England, Tuesday to accept a citation into the Order of the British Empire from the Queen.

Lt. Col. David H. A. Shepard was selected for this award for outstanding contributions to the British Army during the fielding of that nation's newest fighting vehicle, the "Warrior."

David H.A. Shepard

He headed up the task force responsible for the training systems to match the Warrior as well as wrote the tactical doctrine at platoon and company levels.

Shepard admitted that he used a lot of ideas he got from the U.S. Army.

"The Warrior is very similar to the Bradley Fighting Vehicle," he commented. "So, I traveled to several American installations that have the Bradley.

Shepard said he learned from the mistakes made at those units and was able to better prepare his program.

"I wasn't the only one responsible for this operation," he said. "There were several soldiers who helped it become successful."

He said he felt very fortunate to be selected for the fielding mission and to be recognized by his country for his efforts. His father was given the same award several years ago.

Shepard explained that this award is for civilians or military citizens of England and is given for outstanding contributions to the country.

An interesting aspect of the award is that the initials of the award are permanently added to the awardee's name. For example, Shepard will now be Lt. Col. David H.A. Shepard, OBE.

Shepard came to Benning from his assignment with the task force.

He is a liaison between the British and U.S. Army. He gives lectures at some surrounding military installations.

Shepard is married and has two children, who are presently attending school in England.

The family joined Shepard at Buckingham Palace for the ceremony. The third generation of Shepards watched history repeat itself.

TAX BREAK

Georgia Society of CPAs

Today, more than half of all mothers with babies under one year old work outside the home. That figure has increased significantly since 1976 when only 31 percent of mothers with infants worked.

One reason for the increase in working mothers is the average family's desire for additional financial support. But, ironically, when Mom enters the work force to bring in extra income, the family often faces a new financial challenge: paying for child care.

If you are too aware of how child-care costs can throw a budget off course, the Georgia Society of CPAs suggests you find out how certain tax rules can help you get back on track.

Dependent Exemptions

As a parent, you can generally claim an additional exemption for each of your dependent children, as long as you supply more than one-half of their annual support. Each exemption is $1,950 for 1988 and $2,000 for 1989. Translated into dollars and cents, claiming two additional exemptions can save someone in the 28 percent tax bracket as much as $1,092 in federal taxes.

Just remember that you are not entitled to the exemption if your child has personal gross income of more than $1,950, unless he or she is under age 19 or is enrolled as a full-time student. (Next year, you will not be allowed to claim an exemption for any child who is at least 24 years of age, unless the child's income is less than the exemption amount.)

Dependent-Care Tax Credit

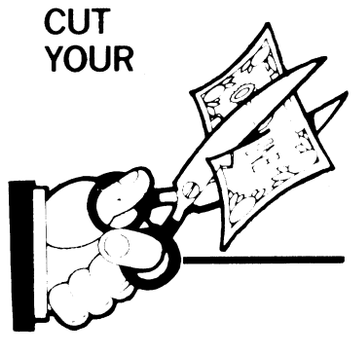
Do you pay a baby-sitter to care for your children while you and your spouse work? If so, you may be entitled to a dependent-care tax credit. To qualify for the credit, you and your spouse must be gainfully employed, unless one of you is physically or mentally disabled or is enrolled as a full-time student. In addition, the child-care expenses must be for a dependent under age 15 for 1988, and under age 13 starting in 1989. You should also note that in 1990 you will be required to supply the name, address, and Social Security number of the person providing the child-care services.

How much is the credit worth? Depending on your adjusted gross income, the credit equals 20 to 30 percent of your qualified child-care expenses. However, the amount of allowable expenses is capped at $2,400 for one dependent and at $4,800 for two or more dependents. You should also note that the allowable expenses cannot exceed the earned income of the lower-paid spouse.

Calculating the credit amount is really not as complicated as you may think. To summarize, if your combined AGI is under $10,000, the credit maximum is $720 for one child and $1,440 for more than one. If your AGI is more than $28,000, the credit maximum is $480 for one dependent and $960 for two or more dependents. If your AGI falls between those two figures, you determine your credit percentage by reducing the 30 percent rate by one percentage point for each $2,000 of adjusted gross income above the $10,000 floor. For example, Tom and Mary have an AGI of $24,000. They must therefore reduce the 30 percent credit rate by seven points, making their maximum credit $552 (23 percent of $2,400) for one dependent of $1,104 (23 percent of 4,800) for two or more dependents.

Finally, if you regularly pay a baby-sitter to care for your children, be sure to withhold the appropriate Social Security taxes. If you don't, the IRS will hold you liable not only for the unpaid tax but also for any penalties and interest due.

Dependent-Care Assistance



You may be able to pay for child care with tax-free dollars if your employer offers a dependent-care assistance plan. How do these plans work? First, you provide your employer with an estimate of your annual child-care costs, up to a maximum of $5,000 if you file a joint return. Your employer will then withhold this amount from your paycheck in equal portions over the year. The money that the company sets aside is excluded from federal income tax. If this process sounds familiar, it should. The automatic deduction of pre-tax dollars is basically the same procedure as the one normally used in company IRA and 401(K) plans.

At regular intervals, you will have to inform your employer of your actual child-care costs as well as the name and the Social Security number of the person or organization providing the service. The company will then reimburse you from the untaxed money it has deducted from your regular pay.

As a general rule, married couples with lower incomes (a combined AGI of $29,750 or less) and child-care expenses under $3,200 will probably do better with the dependent-care credit. On the other hand, higher-paid employees may find company assistance plans more beneficial. For instance, Mary is in the 33 percent bracket and pays 7.51 percent in Social Security payroll tax. She pays $5,000 a year to a daycare center for her five-year-old daughter. Through an employer-sponsored assistance plan, she can save as much as $2,025 in tax. If she applies the same $5,000 to the dependent-care tax credit instead, the most she can save in taxes is $480.

Tax rules can take some of the bite out of your child-care bills, but make sure that you have all the facts. CPAs point out that many participants in employer-sponsored assistance plans don't realize that they cannot get a refund if their actual child-care expenses are less than what they originally estimated. For further information on the tax breaks discussed in this article, consult your own tax advisor.

How will you welcome Jesus

By Chap. James D. Bender
USAIC Chaplain's Office

When you think of Palm Sunday, picture Christ's triumphal entry into Jerusalem in my mind.

The King of Kings and Savior of all humankind humbled himself by riding upon a donkey.

According to the gospel, there were mixed feelings within the crowd gathered that day. Some welcomed the Lord by singing his praises. Others were just curious to see the man who performed miracles. Some wanted to destroy him because they didn't understand who he was and why he drew people to him.

Jesus was criticized, ridiculed, mistreated and doubted as he performed his ministry. People flocked to him, hoping to see a miracle, but often they refused to see the truth. Even his disciples sometimes misunderstood him. But, on Palm Sunday, Jesus experienced a moment of public triumph. The crowds thronged to sing his praise as he rode into Jerusalem.

"Hosanna!" The crowd sang out, "blessed is the King who comes in the name of the Lord!" They cheered and shouted, waving palm branches and laying cloaks before Jesus.

Just as the people 2,000 years ago, people today have different degrees of belief. Some are happy and rejoice when they receive Christ in their lives. They make every opportunity to help build God's Kingdom upon this earth.

There are others who are curious and want to see and hear about Christ, but they have reservations. They do not invite Christ into their lives and struggle for a reality of things.

There are those who denounce the reality and authenticity of Christ. They know of him and know what he did, but they do not admit his reality.

How will we welcome Jesus Christ on Palm Sunday? Will we reject him? Will we only be curious onlookers? Or will we sing praises and honor and welcome him into our lives with joy and happiness?

Whatever we choose, Jesus said, "Even if we remain silent, the stones will shout out God's praises!" (Luke 19:28-40)

Shroud of Turin mystery examined

By Debra A. Galle
USAIC Chaplain's Office

An ancient cloth believed by many to be the burial cloth of Jesus Christ, The Shroud of Turin, is the subject of a presentation to be given Good Friday at The Infantry Center Chapel.

A presentation, "The Shroud of Turin: A Review of the Evidence," will be given by Russell A. Breault, noted authority and researcher of the Shroud. The presentation is described as a comprehensive and fully documented investigation comprised of a slide show, special stage lighting and dramatic narration.

Russell Breault has personally researched the Shroud since 1978 and has conducted more than 200 lectures since 1980. He has written a number of articles and has been featured on several television talk shows.

Some of the absolute conclusions of the Shroud of Turin Research Project and other research, according to program information, include that the man pictured on the Shroud was crucified in a manner consistent in every detail with the crucifixion of Jesus Christ as recorded in the Gospels.

The apparent blood stains on the Shroud are human blood, and the image is clearly that of a human being.

Another significant find is the lack of body decomposition stains on the Shroud. Every other burial cloth in existence is covered with decomposition stains. (The gospels record that Jesus arose from death on the third day.)

Scientists remain in controversy over many studies of the Shroud, but they do agree on a number of facts. Breault's lecture focuses on these.

Everyone is invited to attend the service and lecture.

IT TAKES MORE THAN A HUG TO MAKE A BIG PERSON FEEL SECURE.

That's why it helps to be in the Army.

Because the Army has a range of benefits and services that give you and your family a real sense of security.

Benefits like knowing your family is covered by medical and dental insurance. Or knowing who is taking care of your children, and that your older kids are enjoying safe, supervised activities.

There's security in knowing there are places to turn for financial assistance. That there are programs to help your wife or husband find employment.

It's reassuring to know there are places to shop, like the commissary and the PX, where your money goes farther.

And nothing makes a family feel more secure than knowing they've got a steady income and job security.

Not everyone has that kind of security. Army families do. Because the Army provides many things to help make your life easier. We do it because we're committed to you. We want you to use the services we offer. We want you to stay in the Army family.

In this family, we take care of our own. And you won't find a more secure feeling anywhere else.

ARMY FAMILY. BE ALL YOU CAN BE.®

Army standardizes numerals on awards

Soldiers will wear an unadorned ribbon to denote the first award of any Army award or decoration when a uniform policy change takes effect March 30.

The change, announced by the Office of the Deputy Chief of Staff for Personnel in a Feb. 28 message, standardizes the wear of numerals on Army awards by eliminating numerals on first-time awards and denoting second-level awards with a "2."

The new policy eliminates the wearing of "1" devices, except as part of a two-digit numeral, on any award. Each second award will be denoted by a "2," and subsequent awards will increase the numeral as appropriate.

The change will also eliminate the wearing of a "5" on the NCO Professional Development Ribbon for completion of the Sergeant Majors Academy; all soldiers will wear a "4" to denote completion of the highest level of NCOES.

Awards and decorations requiring other appurtenances, such as "V" devices or oak leaf clusters, are unaffected by the change.

Although the change takes effect March 30, soldiers have until June 30 to replace numerals which will be incorrect under the new policy.

Military families have safeguards for support

Do you know what to do if your sponsor fails to support you or your family?

Army Regulation 608-99 (Family Support, Child Custody and Paternity), which has been in effect since Nov. 4, 1985 addresses every possible family situation. It specifies who is to be supported and how much money a soldier has to pay in each case, based on an allocation of basic allowance for quarters.

Sponsoring soldiers are required to comply with court orders and support agreements. In the absence of these, the minimum-support requirements outlined in the regulation must be followed. Army personnel officials explain that this provision prevents soldiers from evading their family financial support obligations and child custody court orders.

Boards to select Army Reserve NCOs for CSM

Department of the Army selection boards will convene twice in 1989 to consider eligible Reserve NCOs for appointment to command sergeant major, according to Army Reserve Personnel Center officials.

The boards will consider applicants from Army Reserve Troop Program Units, the Individual Mobilization Augmentation Program and members of the Individual Ready Reserve.

The first board will convene on May 1 to consider NCOs under the provisions of chapter 6 of AR 135-205, which directs that soldiers be selected based on "best qualified" criteria.

The second board will gather on Sept. 11 to consider NCOs under chapters 5 and 6 of AR 135-205. Under chapter 5, soldiers are selected based on "fully qualified" criteria.

Army automates 25 personnel actions

New software for the Tactical Army Combat Service Support Computer System will automate requests for 25 personnel actions which soldiers now apply for by manually completing a Department of Army Form 4187.

Among the personnel actions that may be requested using the new software are extensions of overseas tours, compassionate reassignments, voluntary consecutive overseas tours, recruiting duty and voluntary reclassifications. These, and others to be included in the new package, must now be applied for using a manually completed DA Form 4187.

Using the updated system, personnel clerks will be able to determine a soldier's eligibility for a personnel action simply by entering the type of action requested and the soldier's Social Security number into the TACCS.

'Best Ranger' competition begins April 28

USAIC Public Affairs Office

The eighth annual David E. Grange Jr. Best Ranger competition will be conducted April 28 through May 1.

Forty-eight units with Ranger positions, from the active Army, National Guard and Army Reserve, are being invited to send two-man teams to compete in head-to-head competition for the title of "Best Ranger."

The three-day, non-stop event begins at 6:30 a.m. April 28, with a physical training test, and concludes nearly 60 hours later, at about 5 p.m., April 30, with a 2.7-mile buddy run from Victory Pond to the Ranger Training Brigade headquarters.

Other events testing the mettle of the two-man teams includes: marksmanship, parachute spot jump, forced road march, the 60-foot prusik climb/rappel, canoe course, bayonet assault course, night land navigation, Darby Queen obstacle course, water confidence test and the helocast/swim.

Awards will be presented at 10:30 a.m., May 1 at Victory Pond, with members of the winning team receiving engraved 9mm pistols and the Meritorious Service Medal.

The public is invited to observe the competition and award ceremony.

GI bill benefits running out

Veterans Administration

The most widely used GI Bill of all time is in its final year, and the Veterans Administration is alerting thousands of Vietnam Era veterans that their eligibility period is about to end.

On Dec. 31, 1989, education benefits will expire for some 750,000 veterans the VA estimates are still potentially eligible, some of whom are enrolled in schools and receiving assistance.

Under the law, the VA will stop sending GI Bill payments to veterans attending school or in training programs resulting from qualifying active-duty service between Jan. 31, 1955 and Jan. 1, 1977.

Some 60,000 currently enrolled veterans will receive periodic reminders of the December 31 deadline with their VA educational checks this year.

The VA encourages veterans to take advantage of their remaining eligibility by enrolling in classes before the end of the year. However, all VA assistance will end on Dec. 31, the VA cautions.

Not affected by the expiration date are veterans enrolled in the VA's other current education programs, including those enrolled in the Veteran's Educational Assistance Program and the Montgomery GI Bill for active duty, reserve and National Guard members who served after June 30, 1985.

Veterans in doubt about their eligibility for education benefits should contact the nearest VA Regional Office.

The Vietnam Era GI Bill has so far provided benefits to some 8.1 million veterans, which exceeds the 7.8 million using the original World War II bill benefits. Korean Conflict veterans who participated in the GI Bill totaled 2.8 million.

Prep school announces deadline

U. S. Military Academy Prep School

Fort Benning soldiers interested in applying to the United States Military Academy Preparatory School class of 1990 should keep in mind the May 1 deadline for application.

The purpose of the Prep School is to prepare young soldiers to qualify academically and physically for entrance to the United States Military academy and to increase their potential for success while there.

Since 1945, the Prep School has existed to give Regular Army soldiers the opportunity to work toward an officer's commission by attending West Point. Of the approximately 1,000 applications received each year, an average of 165 soldiers will be accepted at the Prep School for an intensive ten-month program of academic, military and physical training.

To qualify, a soldier must be a U.S. citizen or able to become one prior to entering West Point, single, medically qualified, a high school graduate or possess a GED equivalent, of high moral character and under 21 years of age prior to July 1, 1989.

A soldier must fill out a standard USMAPS application form for a file to be opened. The admissions Section of the Prep School will keep the soldier informed of what papers are necessary to complete the file.

The USMAPS application form and additional information may be found at your local education center, in AR 351-12, or by writing Commandant, USMA Prep School, Attn: Admissions, Fort Monmouth, N.J. 07703-5509, or by calling Admissions at autovon 992-1807/8.

Oil supply disruption would wreak havoc on U. S. economy

By Becky Ray
Energy Branch

Disruptions in the imported oil supply could have serious implications for the United States. A shortage of imported oil, or even significant fluctuations in oil prices, could affect almost every aspect of our economy, national defense and lifestyle. Because we rely on petroleum products for such a wide range of end-uses, including heating, transportation and production of consumer goods, a steady supply of oil is critical.

Energy security is currently a hotly debated topic, and recent reports indicating an expected increase inour dependence on foreign oil has added fuel to the fire. The Government Accounting Office (GAO) recently conducted a study to determine the United States' real vulnerability to changes in the oil market. The GAO examined our dependence on oil, the real risk of a disruption in supply and our ability to respond to an oil crisis.

The United States now used about the same amount of oil as in 1976. Oil use by the industrial sector is down, mostly in response to other more competitively priced energy sources as well as increased efficiency. Oil use by the transportation sector, however, has grown considerably. The United States still depends almost entirely on oil for transportation. Residential and commercial oil use is up as well.

In 1986, oil comprised 40 percent of the energy used in the U.S. and Canada. Almost half of Japan's, Western Europe's and other non-communist countries' energy needs were supplied by oil.

As world oil prices climbed during the 1970s, U.S. demand for oil decreased. The U.S. began to shift to non-OPEC suppliers, including the United Kingdom, Canada and Mexico. Development of these reserves drove oil prices up and resulted in the decreased demand. Between 1976 and 1986, the United States reduced the percentage of im ported oil from OPEC sources by 44 percent.

In 1986, however, as oil prices dropped, the demand for imported oil began to increase, and continues to climb. Projections show increased demand for imported oil through 1995. At the same time, non-OPEC oil production will probably drop off.

Several initiatives have been take to reduce the United States' vulnerability to an oil crisis. These include the establishment of the Strategic Petroleum Reserve, increased fuel-switching capabilities, the development of alternative fuels, involvement in international programs and greater emphasis on efficiency.

The Strategic Petroleum Reserve is soil that has been stockpiled by the U.S. government to moderate the effects of an oil crisis. The SPR began in 1977 and has grown each year since. It currently contains 540 million barrels of oil, and recent legislation allows for an additional 50,000 barrels per day to be added in 1989.

Emphasis is also being placed on the capability of industrial-sized boilers to switch fuels. In the event of an oil shortage, boilers which normally burn oil could switch to natural gas.

The development of alternative fuels would also decrease the nation's vulnerability to an oil shortage or drastically increased prices by providing other energy sources for transportation energy.

The U.S. is a member of the International Energy Agency, a group of non-communist countries organized to decrease international effects of an oil supply disruption. Each member nation agrees to stockpile a 90-day supply of oil which can be shared in an emergency, and to develop plans to reduce oil demand if a crisis occurs.

Increased energy efficiency can also reduce the nation's vulnerability to an oil crisis simply by reducing the demand for oil.

Past experience has proven that lack of planning can have drastic effects in the event of oil supply disruptions.

New travel rules affect non-unit Reserve soldiers

Army News Service

Several changes in Army finance rules and procedures will affect the way Army Reserve soldiers who aren't members of Troop Program Units are paid when they complete short periods of active duty for training or annual training.

The changes affect most of the 300,000-plus Reserve soldiers who aren't unit members — more than 281,000 members of the Individual Ready Reserve and another 12,000 members of the Individual Mobilization Augmentation program.

According to officials at the Army Reserve Personnel Center, the major change concerns settling up at the end of the active duty period.

Previously, IRR and IMA soldiers would complete their travel vouchers after arriving home at the end of their tours and file them by mail.

Now these soldiers will file a settlement voucher with the servicing Army finance office not less than three days before they depart the active duty site, and at the same time file for constructive travel for their return home.

IRR and IMA soldiers also must now outprocess through finance on their last duty day, when they will file their lodging and other receipts.

At that time, they will receive full settlement of all travel and per diem allowances and any outstanding balance from their travel advances will be collected.

Soldiers whose actual return transportation expenses differ from their constructive travel settlements still may file supplemental claims after returning home.

ARPERCEN officials say that the new procedures should improve the way non-unit Reserve soldiers are paid, as well as improving the collection of travel advances.

IRR and IMA soldiers who train at a duty site not serviced by an Army finance office are not affected by the changes.

These soldiers will continue to file for pay, allowances and reimbursable expenses by mail after returning home.

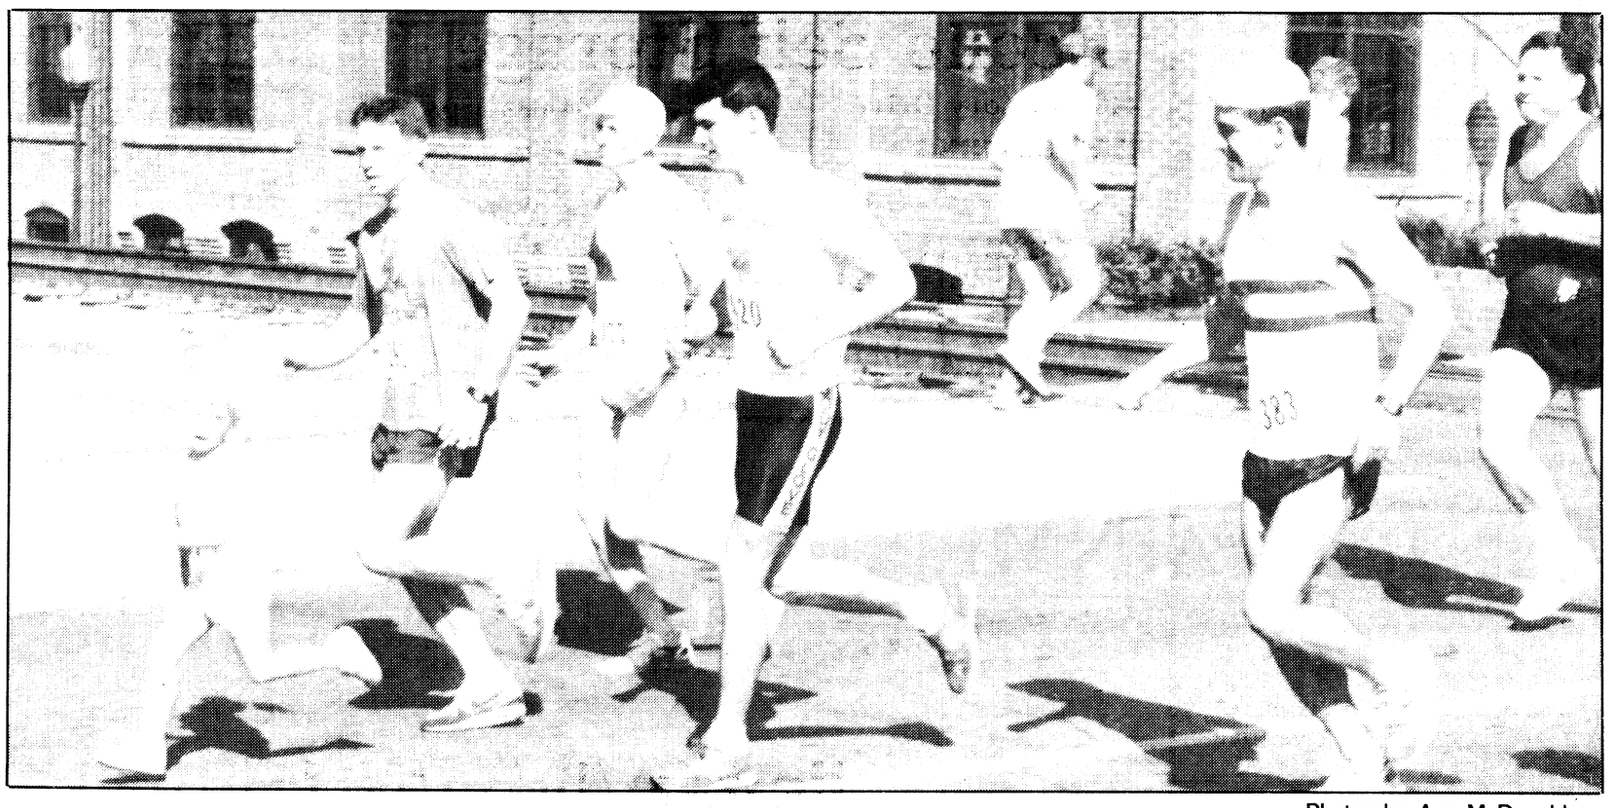
Military teams outdistance others in Heart Run

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

Military relay teams from the surrounding area outdistanced other relay teams during Saturday's "Heart Run." They beat every other type team that was entered in the race.

Todd Child sprints to the finish line winning the one-mile race.



According to race officials there were nine military teams entered and more than twice that number of corporate teams.

There were three different races featured in the "Heart Run"– the one-mile run, the 10-kilometer run, and the combination military and corporate relay. Proceeds from the race will benefit the Heart Association.

Todd Child won the male one-mile competition with a time of 4:51, and Lisa Harbour breezed in the female competition with a time of 5:42.4

J.D. Evilsizer won the 10-K with a time of 34:20, and Penny Dillon smoked the womens field with a time of 40:38.

Fort Benning's "A team" was fast enough to take first in the military relay. Pratt and Whitney took first place in the male corporate competition, and TSYS Ladies won the female competition.

Cruise-matics will host rugby championship here

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

The Fort Benning-Columbus Cruise-matics will host the Eastern Military Rugby championships here April 1 and 2.

The tournament will include representatives from the Navy, Air Force and Marines.

According to a team spokesman, the club asked to host the tournament so they could show off the tri-community area.

The tournament could prove to be a battle not to miss with powerhouses from different branches of the Armed Forces going head to head for the championship.

To prepare for the tournament, the Cruise-matics have played many seasonal games on the team field located behind the Dolly Madison Outlet on Victory Drive.

This week they will travel to Savannah, Ga., for a Saint Patrick's Day tournament.

Masters' golf tourney series badges for sale

Community Operations Division

The Community Operations Division will sell a limited number of series badges for the 1989 Masters Golf Tournament at Augusta, Ga., April 6-9.

Due to the limited number of badges, selection of individuals to purchase these badges will be determined by a priority drawing to be held March 24 at the Follow Me Golf Course Pro Shop, building 390.

The badges are available to active duty military personnel only on the basis of one badge per person. Each badge costs $90 and is good for daily entry for the four days of championship competition. Selected individuals must travel on leave status and at their own expense. Billeting at Fort Gordon, Ga., and Fort Jackson, S.C., during this period is not available.

Applications to enter the drawing to purchase badges must be submitted in writing to the Golf Pro Shop no later than 5 p.m. March 24 and must include name, rank, social security number, organization and both office and residence phone numbers. A $90 check or money order payable to IMWRF Fort Benning, Ga., must accompany application. Money will be refunded if an individual is not drawn in priority to receive one of the available badges.

Individuals receiving badges will be required to sign a statement certifying that the badge is for personal use and is not transferable.

Individuals selected will be personally notified and a priority list of personnel will be published in the Benning Bulletin around March 27. Badges must be claimed at the Golf Pro Shop no later than 5 p.m. March 31. Badges must be returned to Golf Pro Shop no later than April 14.

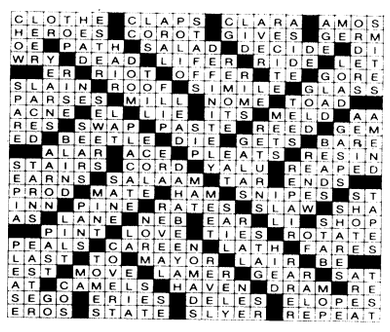
Little leaguers celebrate 50th anniversary

USAIC Public Affairs Office

The little leaguers of Georgia's District 8 will celebrate the 50th Anniversary of Little League baseball Saturday at Columbus College's Cougar Field beginning at 1 p.m.

The theme this year is "Little Leagues — Just Say No To Drugs." The U.S. Army Infantry Center Band and Fort Benning's "Silver Wings" jump team will join the celebration.

Action for Saturday's celebration includes the Columbus College Cougars, at 8-2, battling Bellarmine College in NCAA baseball at 1:30 p.m.



Special guests, who will be on hand for photographs and autographs, include Miami Dolphins' Ron Davenport, San Diego Chargers' Woodrow Lowe, Washington Redskins' Joe Harris, Kansas City Chiefs' Billy Jackson and former Oakland Athletics' pitcher Tony Pierce.

The Silver Wings will jump in at 5 p.m. Fire works will begin at dusk.

Prize drawings for children will be held and the Blue Cross and Blue Shield "Blue Bear" and robots, Lt. Pluggie and Officer S.C.O.T.T. will be on hand.

Call 568-1056 for information.

Soldiers adapt at Costa Rican camp

John M. Boyd

43rd Eng. Bn., 36th Eng. Grp., soldiers put their base camp in order.

By Greg Markley
USARSO Public Affairs Office

For the several hundred Fort Benning-based soldiers and civilians on exercise Camino de La Paz '89, the base camp on the Osa Peninsula is beginning to look like home. It doesn't have the feel of home yet, but there's a spirit in the air that says "Let's make our four months or so here pleasant as well as productive."

You see it in the long hours spent building this base camp, working under floodlights to finish tent pads and wooden latrines that will improve living conditions. You see it in the opening of a small post exchange and enlisted club. And you see it in the faces of soldiers as they hurry about their business despite the intense heat.

"Setting up a camp for an exercise takes long hours and hard work, but it's a good experience," remarked Pvt. 2 Corey Young, Company C, 43rd Engineer Battalion.

"We just returned a while back from Honduras, so we know what to do to make a place liveable," added Sgt. David Miller, Co. B, 43rd Eng.

The 43rd Eng. Bn., 36th Eng. Grp. is the major element participating in Camino de La Paz '89. Between now and mid-May, battalion personnel will deploy to this camp, sat up living and headquarters arrangements, and then go out into the field to build seven Bailey bridges in the Osa Peninsula between the communities of Rincon and Puerto Jimenez. In conjunction with the bridge building, they will also construct 3.2 kilometers of single-lane, unpaved road.

Other units from Fort Benning that will play a role are the 598th Maintenance Company, 67th Maintenance Battalion and the Financial Support Team, 215th Army Finance Support Unit, both aligned with the 36th Engineer Group.

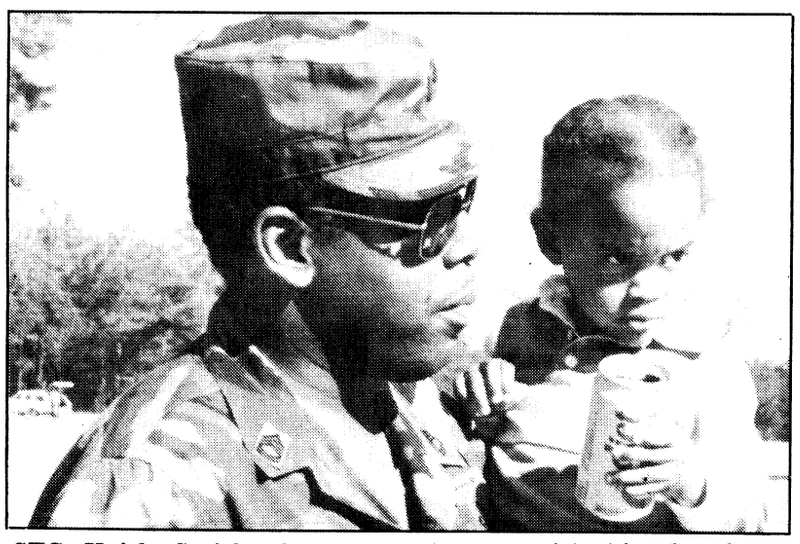
Elements from U.S. Army South, based at Fort Clayton, Panama, will provide logistics, signal, medical and aviation support. The 536th Engineer Battalion, a USARSO element that has participated in Costa Rica bridge-building efforts for several years, has other commitments this year. Thus the 36th Engineer Group was given the mission, to gain experience in deployments of this nature.

Soldiers recognized the value of this field training right off. "When I was assigned to Germany, we built a small Bailey bridge," recalled SPC Bratt Buttz, Co. C, 43rd Eng. "But we never did anything on a high scale like this. My company will be involved in the construction of five bridges.

"At Fort Benning, our company built a Physical Training field for a Physical Training for a ranger unit, and spent five months building walls and installing electricity in a church. But this will be even better training and more demanding because we have to build a mess hall, small PX and enlisted club, plus the bridges."

Sgt. Leslie Brooks, Co. B,43rd Eng., pointed out that even something as routine as driving is a challenge here. The roads feature sloping curves and plenty of potholes, "but we can handle it," he said.

Being separated from family and friends is never easy, but "some of us are in MOSs where performing in the field is our main mission," according to SFC Furman Turner, NCOIC, 16th Field Service Company, Fort Lee, Va.



Turner had been stationed at Fort Lee for seven years, but sometimes feels that he's seen more of Central America than he has southern Virginia. "I've been on the last four Kindle Liberty exercises in Panama and went to Honduras twice. This is my second time in Costa Rica."

1st Lt. Donald Peperak, HSC, 43rd Eng. Bn., S-3 special projects officer has been tasked to establish and operate a field PX.

"My initial reaction, like anyone's would probably be, was 'What a get over job?' But with all the coordination and planning I have to do, it has turned into quite an involved undertaking. It's high visibility because it's a real morale factor."

"I'd like to be doing something more technical, but it's good to support other soldiers, which is why we're here," said PFC Cordell Gray, also from the 16th Field Service Company.

That type of selfless support is turning Camp Rugged Seahorse, a converted cow pasture, into a home for contented campers.

1st Bn., 29th Inf. Regt. celebrates history with organization day

By Cheryl Knott
29th Infantry correspondent

A day filled with games and frolic was set a side recently for family members and soldiers of 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment to celebrate the unit's 88-year history.

During the organization day, a variety of activities were available for entertainment.

The activities included volleyball, softball, an egg toss and the three-legged race. Bradley fighting vehicle rides and weapons qualifications were available for the children.

A 12-kilometer cross-country run concluded the day's events. More than 80 people participated in the race. PFC Shane Anthony took top honors in the individual category, and Headquarters Company took team honors.

SFC Anthony Rouser of HHC, 1st Bn., 29th Inf. Regt. spent the day at the barbecue pit.

"We must have fed more than 400 people," he said. "We had plenty of food for everyone."

CSM Jimmie G. Bowles, the battalion command sergeant major, was very happy with attendance. "We had no idea this many people would show up," he said. "I'm thrilled that the day was such a success."

4th Bn., 41st FA changes command

Lt. Col. William F. Engel is the battalion's new commander

By Paul McCloud
4th Bn., 41st Fld. Arty. correspondent

With M-109 howitzers as the backdrop on the cold, hazy morning of March 7, the soldiers of the 4th Battalion, 41st Field Artillery changed commanders from Lt. Col. Glenn G. Lackey to Lt. Col. William F. Engel.

As commander of troops, Lackey directed the Redlegs through the ceremony. Col. Harvey D. Watson, commander of the 197th Infantry Brigade (Mechanized) (Separate), talked about the accomplishments made under Lackey's great leadership and guidance.

"After the exercise in Europe (REFORGER '88), an infantryman and a tanker asked me who is the real killer on the battlefield," Watson said. "What I told them, they really did not want to hear. It is the artillerymen who kill more of the enemy," he said.

Lackey's accomplishments as 4th Bn., 41st Fld. Arty. commander include a successful rotation to the National Training Center, deployment to REFORGER '88, close out of two technical assistance visits and the best combat battalion safety record in the 197th Inf. Bde.

Lackey and his wife, Micky, anticipate being assigned to 2nd Army at Fort Gillem, Ga.

Watson said during the ceremony, "Lieutenant Colonel Engel and his wife, Linda, are no strangers to the 197th family."

Watson also said that he has every confidence that with Engel at the helm, 4th Bn., 41st Fld. Arty. can do nothing but great things.

During his comments, Engel said the target of his focus will be the men, mission and maintenance posture of the battalion.

"As your commander," he said, "I will do everything within my power to ensure that the needs of you, the individual soldier, are met."

Engel's awards include the Meritorious Service Medal with two oak leaf clusters, Army Commendation Medal with two oak leaf clusters and the Army Achievement Medal.

Engel comes to the battalion from the U.S. Army School of Americas here at Benning.

He and his wife, Linda, have three children, Lisa, Benjamin and Tiffany.

CHARLES LEVY MOTOR CO.

Is proud to announce that he is now the dealer for another fine Japanese Car. Stop in and see this new line of fine automobiles.

Open for summer.

Closed for the winter.

We call the new Suzuki Sidekick(TM) an all year 'round, 4-wheel drive, sport utility. vehicle. You'll call it an all 'round excuse to say young.

Off with the optinal removable hard top and you have a summer Sidekick. Secure the top back on and there you have it. Your winter Sidekick. That easy. And with a handy 5-speed stick and tusty 4-wheel drive, let it snow. No more spinning wheels. No more going nowhere fast.

Come in and test drive the new Sidekick soft top. After all, we're open all year 'round.

Seed, fertilizer seasonal items

Correction — In the March 17 issue of the The Bayonet, it was incorrectly implied that seed and fertilizer were available at the Family Housing Issue Point. These items are available only on a seasonal basis. For more information on what is available, call the Issue Point at 545-3633. See a related story on page B-1 for more information on what is available and when.

Children's talent show set

Talent Show — Pre-registration for the second annual Month of the Military Child Talent Show begins Tuesday. Competition is open to family members ages 6 - 18 of active duty, retired military and DoD civilians. Entry forms may be picked up at Youth Activities facilities on main post and McGraw and Indianhead Terrace family housing areas. Rehearsals begin April 21. All entry forms must be submitted to Youth Activities, building 1056, no later than one week prior to rehearsals. For more information, call 545-3070 or 545-3913.

Scholarships being offered

Engineering — A $600 scholarship is being offered to students enrolled in a two, three and four year curriculum leading to a degree by the Fort Benning-Columbus Post of the Society of American Military Engineers.

Priority consideration will be given to a student enrolled in an engineering curriculum.

Applications will be accepted until April 30 and award of the scholarship will be made during May. The award will be based on the type of curriculum, academic attainment, student activities, ability of the student to pay his way by other means, the students desire to pursue goals and recommendations from teachers or advisors.

Application forms or information may be obtained from the Scholarship Committee, John Mills, 571-7322 or Alice Howard, 545-4766.

Keep MACH appointments or take time to cancel

Give notice before canceling: Individuals who have made an appointment at Martin Army Community Hospital must either keep that appointment or call to cancel no less than 24 hours before the appointment, according to a memorandum from Col. James I. Daily, chief of staff. Patients who miss an appointment will be sent a letter by the hospital commander advising the patient of the consequences of missing the appointment and its affects on hospital operations, according to the memorandum. For those on active duty, a letter will be sent to the unit commander. To cancel or reschedule appointments during duty hours, call the clinic directly. After duty hours, call 544-3862.

'MP of Year' puts soldiers first

By Shawn Bryson
Bayonet staff writer

To be the military policeman of the year, an MP doesn't have to bust 50 drug pushers, write 250 traffic citations or solve numerous crimes.

So what did SSgt. Johnnie Jones III do to earn the title of "1988 Fort Benning MP of the Year."

"He never stopped until the mission was complete," said his first sergeant, Roy L. Taylor of the U.S. Army Infantry Center Military Police Company. Tayler is also a former winner of the same competition.

In charge of unit training for his company for the past year and a half, Jones' mission is to ensure that the soldiers in the unit are properly and frequently trained, according to Taylor.

Taylor said Jones' outstanding duty performance and his ability to put soldiers before himself are what earned the soldier the title.

Jones, 27, was one of eight MPs competing for the award in January. After winning the competition, Jones joined three area law officers at a local banquet, in February, where all were honored as "Officers of the Year" for 1988.

Jones said he didn't start 1988 with intentions of winning MP of the Year. "When they started nominating people for the award, my first sergeant and company commander saw the work I was putting in and encouraged me to go for it," Jones said.

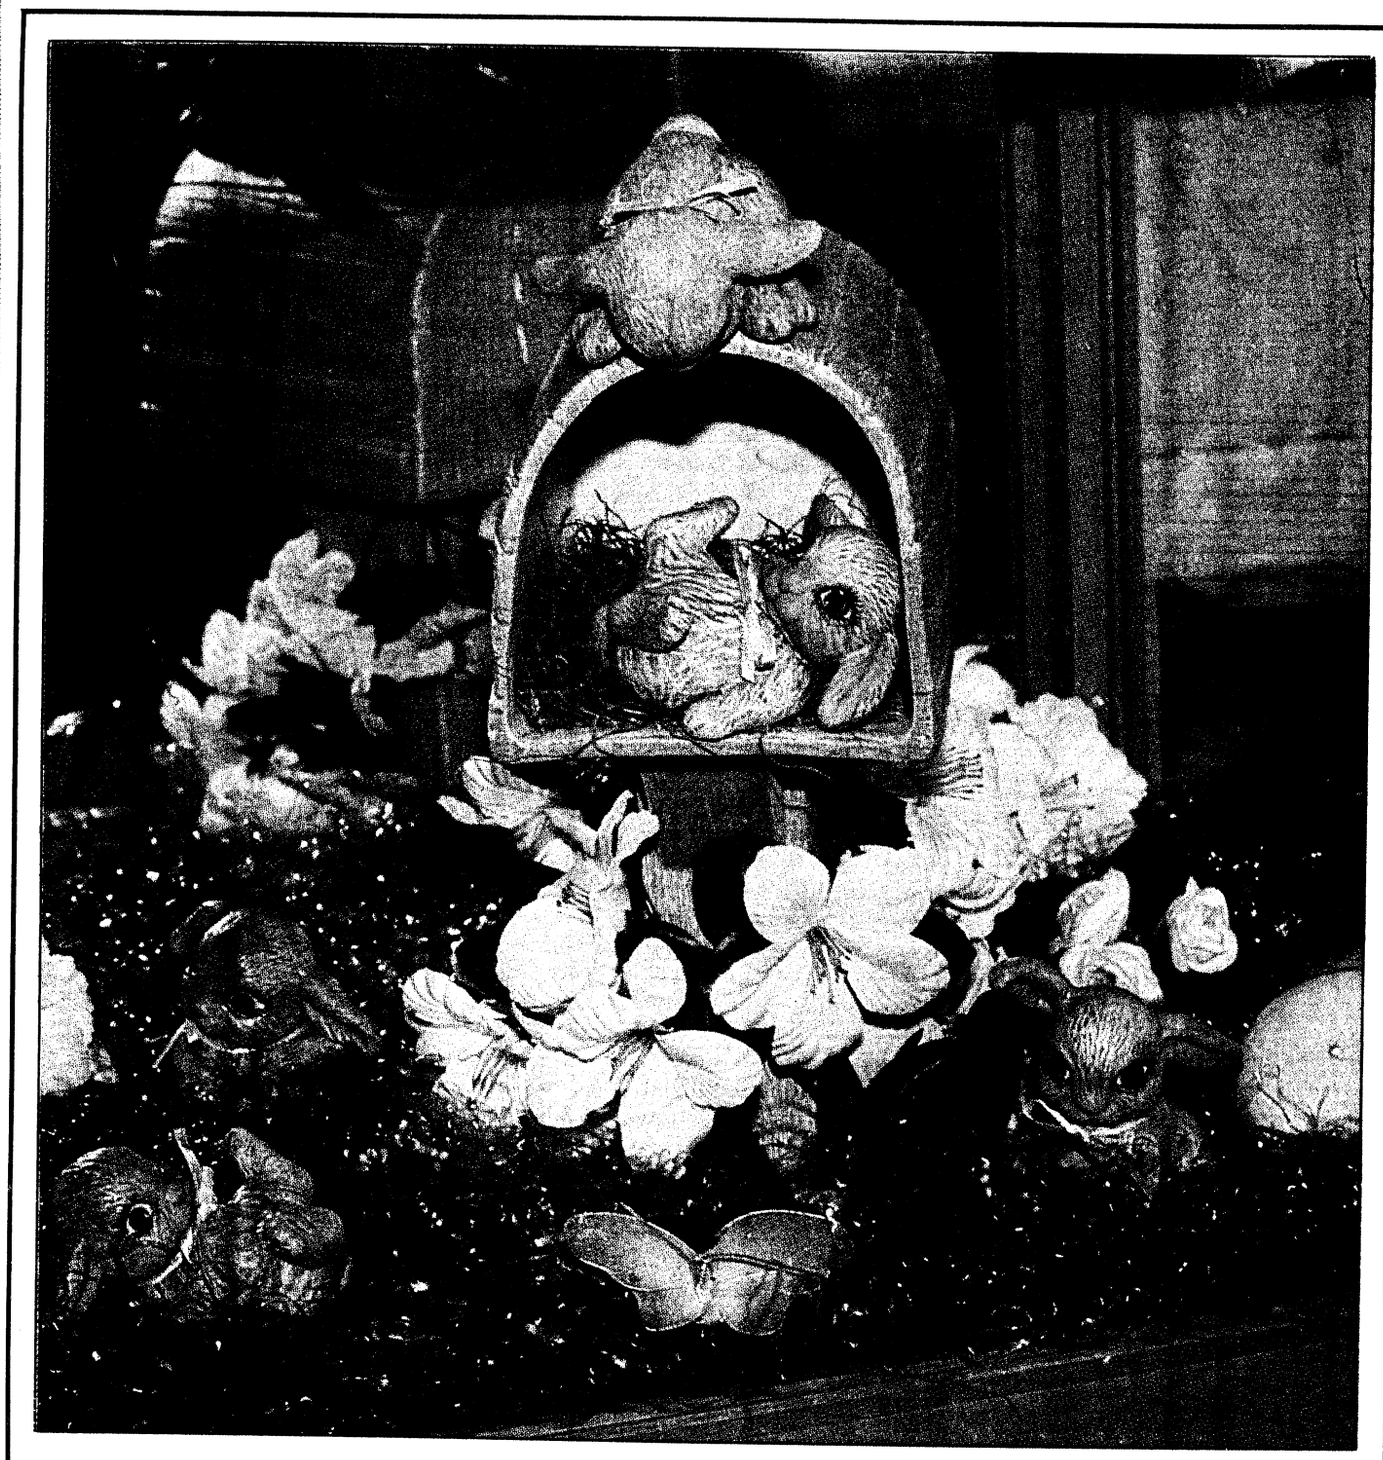
"My top priorities are soldiers and training," Jones said. He has to take his job day by day, he said, which often makes for some long days. "I'm sometimes at work by five in the morning and don't go home until seven at night. It's my job to make sure everything gets done, but I also work as hard as I do for my own self pride and esteem."

"Johnnie passes all inspections, stays abreast of all changes and is the type of soldier who will be an achiever throughout his military career," Taylor said.

Jones is married and has three children, Shawnte, 7, Rekeshia, 3, and Jay Ryan, 7 months. He said that his job sometimes takes away from his family time.

"It does get hard, but my wife, SSgt. Dixie Jones, understands what is expected of me. I give her a lot of the credit for my success."

Working hard and winning honors is not new to Jones, who has been in the Army for nine years. For example, he was selected as the Soldier of the Month and Soldier of the Quarter in 1985.



According to Taylor, as MP of the Year, Jones will represent Benning's Military Police Activity at various functions throughout the year.

Jones' plans for the future are clear. He said he will continue with the Military Police and hopes to make command sergeant major. According to Taylor, if any soldier can do it, Jones can.

Drill Sgt of Year selected

By Shawn Bryson
Bayonet staff writer

It's well known that being a drill sergeant can be one of the toughest jobs in the Army.

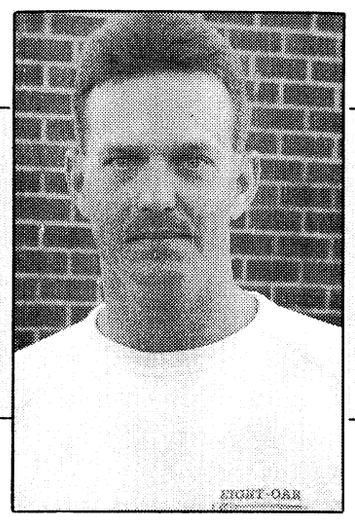
However, for SSgt. Louis D. Tinsley, the hard work has payed off. He is Fort Benning's "1989 Drill Sergeant of the Year."

Tinsley, from Company E, 2nd Battalion, 58th Infantry, 1st Infantry Training Brigade, was recognized for his appointment as Drill Sergeant of the Year March 16 at Sand Hill's Theater #3.

Tinsley is the 10th Drill Sergeant of the Year since the competition originated in 1980. He received a 9mm Beretta pistol with an engraved case, a plaque, a dress blue uniform, an AUSA warm-up jacket and a wristwatch from the Chattahoochee Valley-Fort Benning Chapter of the Association of the United States Army.

A native of Saginaw, Mich., Tinsley, 27, said he is very proud of the award and gives a lot of the credit for it to his wife, Johnnie Mae and 11-year-old daughter, Roina.

"They understand that my assignment as a drill sergeant requires a personal commitment to my soldiers and many long hours."



Because of his love of his job, being a good soldier and drill sergeant was the easy part of earning the award, according to Tinsley.

"The hardest part was performing my regular duties along

OPINION

VARIOUS VOICES: What did you do to your yard for post clean-up?

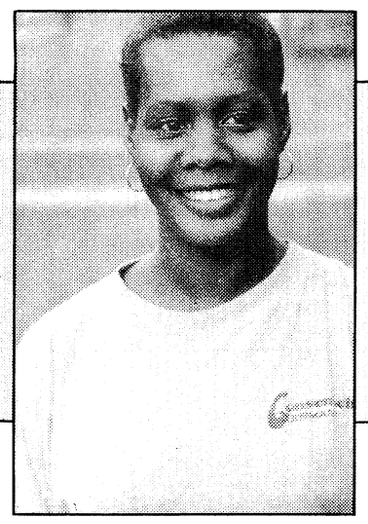
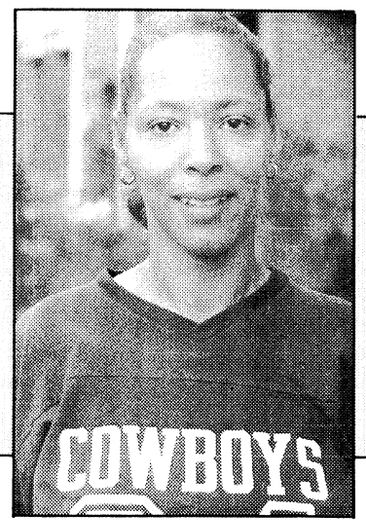
SFC Walter Frost, Co. C, 2nd Bn., 29th Inf. Regt. — "I didn't do anything to my yard. I maintain it all year so I don't have to do anything at the last minute for post clean-up.



SSgt. Manuel Morales, USAR-SA — "I fertilized my yard, and I put up small fences to protect the flowers I'm going to plant."



Spec. Tom Horner, MEDDAC — "I cut and edged it, and we might plant some flowers."

Julie Cazier, family member — "I trimmed, edged, mowed and raked my yard. Then I planted some flowers. I do this all the time because I really enjoy being outside."

Delilah Miles, family member — "I hoed and weeded the flower beds. I'm going to finish by cutting the grass and edging it."

Patricia Miller, family member — "I watered down my yard to get it moist so it would be easier to till the soil. Then I weeded the parts that needed weeding. I also picked up all the litter around my house and pruned the trees."

Buyer beware

By Clyde Snively
USAIC Public Affairs Office

In grade school, it was great sport to put signs on people's backs, such as "kick me."

We'd sit back and chortle as people tried to kick the unsuspecting victim.

Sometimes, when going downtown, I think I'm wearing one of those signs.

If you don't believe me, go into someone's business, like a car dealership, and watch the salesman's eyes light up with dollar signs as he gleefully wrings his hands and asks how he can help you.

This is not to imply that all merchants are blood suckers out to separate a soldier from his hard-earned money. But there are enough of them out there to make a soldier want to tread carefully when contemplating a major purchase or when he think's he's "getting something for nothing."

As the folks at the Better Business Bureau are fond of pointing out, "If it sounds too good to be true, it probably is."

Then there are people like me. I probably miss good, legitimate deals because I don't trust anyone. I'm overly cautious. In fact, I'm so tight with my money, I still bend over and pick up pennies I see lying about.

Penny pincher, or spend thrift, there are some rules to follow to help you avoid the unscrupulous salesman.

First and foremost is never, ever, buy anything major on the spot. Take a night to sleep on it to see if you really need that item, and if you do need it, do you need all the accessories?

Next, don't sign a contract without reading it. All of it. And don't let the salesman explain it to you. If you don't understand what it says, bring it back to post and let the folks in Legal Assistance explain it to you. If the salesman resists and tells you "but this is a once in a lifetime deal, you walk out, you lose," then you really need to worry about what he's trying to sell you and what kind of agreement you might be entering.

The offshoot of all this is you may end up going some place else for your purchase, which is perfectly all right.

If you live on post, the government tries to protect you from house-to-house peddlers.

If you are visited by one, ask to see a solicitation permit. Chances are he won't have one since about the only merchants authorized to push products door-to-door on post are Girl Scouts with their cookies.

This certainly includes encyclopedia salesmen. They are only too happy to sell you books, which will be outdated by the time your child's in school, for "just the cost of a pack of cigarettes a day." Add it up friend — $1,600 is the ultimate bill.

You get one of these salesmen, call the MPs.

Also, beware of anything you find in your car door or stuck to the windshield. These things are poison. You'll lose big bucks if you accept the "fabulous offer" or "free gift."

First, you can buy their product cheaper at the PX. Second, what they don't tell you, is the charge is a revolving charge, like a credit card, so if you buy a $1,500 item and only pay the monthly minimum of, say $50, of which $40 is interest, you could be paying the rest of your life for a VCR.

If you see anyone affixing fliers on cars — call the MPs.

Let's run these crooks off post.

One area the post can't protect you, is the mail. Unscrupulous merchants use the mails to sucker you into any number of schemes.

These range from envelope stuffing to the lastest fad of setting up a fake business. For a "mere" $20 investment, plus untold dollars in mailing, printing and so on, you stand to make a quarter of a million dollars.

What a great deal. Too bad you're bucking the odds. The only person getting rich off this scheme is the guy who started it.

Everyone seems to pick on car dealers. The good ones have it tough, living down the reputation the bad ones give them. So it pays to shop around, not only for that special car, but for a legitimate deal.

Car leasing seems to be the latest way of getting money from soldiers.

Great deal, no money down.

You sign up to pay a certain amount a month for a certain period of time. At the end of the time, you still don't own the car. At which time, the salesman is either very happy to sell it to you for an amount far in excess of what it's worth, or to start you over on another lease.

Something else to bear in mind — you can't take it overseas with you. Nor can you sell it. You don't own it. So what do you do? Get someone else to take over the lease payments?

Fine, what happens if he totals it or skips town? You're still liable since the contract is with you.

One final point. Guess who pays the ad valorem tax of about $300 EVERY year? You do, your out-of-state residence doesn't apply here since you don't own the car.

Health Spas are also known for causing grief.

You get Spec. Studley going down to the mall to scope out the situation. He sees a display put on by a health spa. "Wow, look at all those fabulous women," he tells his buddies. They sign up, $600 for two years. They show up ready to strut their stuff in front of all the gals and impress them with their manliness. Guess what, guys? Separate facilities for men and women.

Honest, you'd do better on post. It's free, and there are more apparatus to do your thing on. Remember, you can't take the local spa to the field or on maneuvers, and you still owe, use it or not.

A few words to the wise.

Most of the contracts are binding. You renege on them and there goes the old credit rating. "What about my cooling off period?" you protest. Good only for door-to-door salesmen. "Caveat Emptor" or "Buyer Beware," still rings true.

Happy shopping.

Soldiers fall victim to rip-offs

By Ron Allen
USAIC Public Affairs Office

My boss informed me that soldiers are getting ripped off again. "It's time to wise them up, do another article for the Bayonet," he said.

"Not again," I thought. There is such a variety of rip-offs, it's hard to decide which con to write about. Last year, we wound up doing more than one. In fact it turned out to be a whole series of articles spanning several weeks. A lot of work went into that series of articles, but, apparently, some folks out there didn't read them.

We started off with one about a soldier who got a "Phone-a-Gram" on his windshield. It read, "If you call today you've won a 35mm camera." When he went to get his camera, he got a high-pressure sales pitch and stuck with a $1,600 bill for film and processing. The camera turned out to be a plastic toy, and believe me, the PX is cheaper for film and processing.

"These types of fliers are prohibited on post," said Janice K. Kyle, Family Support Division (Commercial Solicitation). "However, it's extremely difficult to catch the people doing it. Kyle recommends that if you see someone putting fliers on cars or on housing area doors, call the Military Police at 545-5222/5223/5224 immediately."

In another story, we covered a family member who, while her husband was in the field, fell for a flier that read "Buy $2,000 worth of meat for only $300. When she got home, she found she had only $20 worth of meat not fit for a dog. To add insult to injury, the $300 was financed at 20 percent interest. She couldn't get her money back, because the meat store where she got this "great buy" moved out of town after about 300 sales.

My favorite is the encyclopedia scam. If a salesman goes door-to-door through post housing, it should be a dead give away to the wary buyer. Salesman are not allowed to go door-to-door on post. They are authorized to come to your home by appointment only, according to Kyle. What happened was this salesman got a soldier and his wife to commit to purchasing a set of encyclopedias at an outrageously low price. The books would be mailed to the couple within three weeks. The con artist said he needed a personal check or cash for half the purchase price. The soldier opted to give him a check. The check cleared the bank in two days, the books never arrived and the soldier found there was no such company.

"If a salesman comes to your door, ask for his name and the name of his company," Kyle said. "Then ask to see his post permit. If he has a permit, call the Family Support Division at 545-5931. We can revoke his permit or take other necessary action to correct the problem. If he doesn't have a permit, call the Military Police."

These are only three of an inexhaustible supply of cons devised to separate you from your money. However, there are a few rules to follow to keep from being ripped-off. If you're offered something for nothing or at a ridiculously low price - beware. Compare. Just like Momma said, "You better shop around." Check with the Better Business Bureau. It will have a file of any complaints lodged against the company. Check with JAG, it has the experts on post when it comes to contracts and criminal con-people.

We in the military are prime targets for rip-offs, and we really don't get paid enough to afford it. Don't jump at those "great buys." Take time to think about what you're buying. Don't let pushy sales people talk you into buying something you don't want or need.

You've probably heard the one about "A fool and his money," but it doesn't take a fool to fall for one of these cons. The con artists are professionals at what they do, that's how they make their living.

If you do fall prey to a con, report it. It may save a fellow soldier from the same fate.

Faith teams win regional Odyssey

By Beth Middlemiss
Fort Benning Schools

Faith Middle School sent two teams to the southern regional Odyssey of the Mind competition at Columbus College March 18, and both teams won first place in their division and the Renatra Fusca Award for creativity.

The teams will go on to compete in the state Odyssey of the Mind competition in Macon April 8.

The Odyssey of the Mind competition was begun 11 years ago by a New Jersey college professor. It is a program that provides students a mental challenge through problem-solving activities. The two categories are long-term problem solving in which students have several months to find a solution and short-term problem solving in which students must find a solution during the competition.

This year, Gina Barlotta, Ben Engel, Sterling Harris, Troy Hutchins, Chris Moore, Tara Norton and Jason Rivest are the "Ye Gods" team. The "Ye Gods" problem required team members to select one or more mythical characters and to write, produce and perform a skit that would familiarize the audience with the myth.

The skit also had to include an advertising campaign for a product, service or political candidate that related to the myth. The Faith "Ye Gods" team was awarded the Renatra Fusca Award for creativity for consistent, outstanding creative responses in their short-term problem in addition to winning first place in their division.

The Fables team — Juli Broussard, Allison Davis, Juan Escbar, Tracy George, Robyn Hartzog, Bart Hensler and Ahmad Hernandez — had to create a fable and perform the team's interpretation of how the moral of the fable came to be. The Fables team was awarded the Renatra Fusca Award for its creativity during this long-term project, as well as winning first place in its division.

This is the third year that Faith Middle School students under the direction of teacher-coach, Libbie Kurinec, and parent-coach, Joan Hutchins, have competed in Odyssey of the Mind. In 1987, both Faith teams won the state competition and went on to compete in the World Finals. In 1988, both teams competed in the World Finals and the "Comics" team won first place.

The teams want to do as well this year, according to teacher, Kurinec. "The teams are working hard to be as ready as they can be for the state competition in Macon in April. We're not even considering the World competition right now," Kurinec.

'Infantry' discusses changes in Ranger Training Brigade

Infantry Magazine

In the March-April 1989 issue of Infantry, Lt. Col. Robert J. Hoffman describes the conversion of the old Ranger Department of the Infantry School to the Ranger Training Brigade. Colonel Hoffman, formerly commander of the brigades's 4th Battalion at Fort Benning, discusses the changes that took place with the conversion and the way these changes have affected ranger training.

Other articles of particular interest are three that came out of training at the National Training Center: "Counter-Reconnaissance Planning," by 1st Lt. Daniel Thomas; "The NTC and the Battalion S-2," by Capt. Daniel J. McRoberts; and "Motorized at the NTC," by Lt. Col. Steven D. Vermillion. Thomas and McRoberts are members of the 197th Infantry Brigade; Vermillion is assigned to the 9th Infantry Division (Motorized) at Fort Lewis, Wash.

Three articles by noncommissioned officers also appear: "Thoughts on Leadership," by William R. Freeman, a retired sergeant major; "Aerial Photographs," by SFC John E. Foley; and "Squad Training: A Squad Leader's Thoughts," by Sgt. Don F. Metters.

Information about Infantry, including subscription rates and writers guidelines, is available from the Editor, P.O. Box 2005, Fort Benning, Ga. 31905-0605; autovon 784-4951, commercial (404) 544-4951.

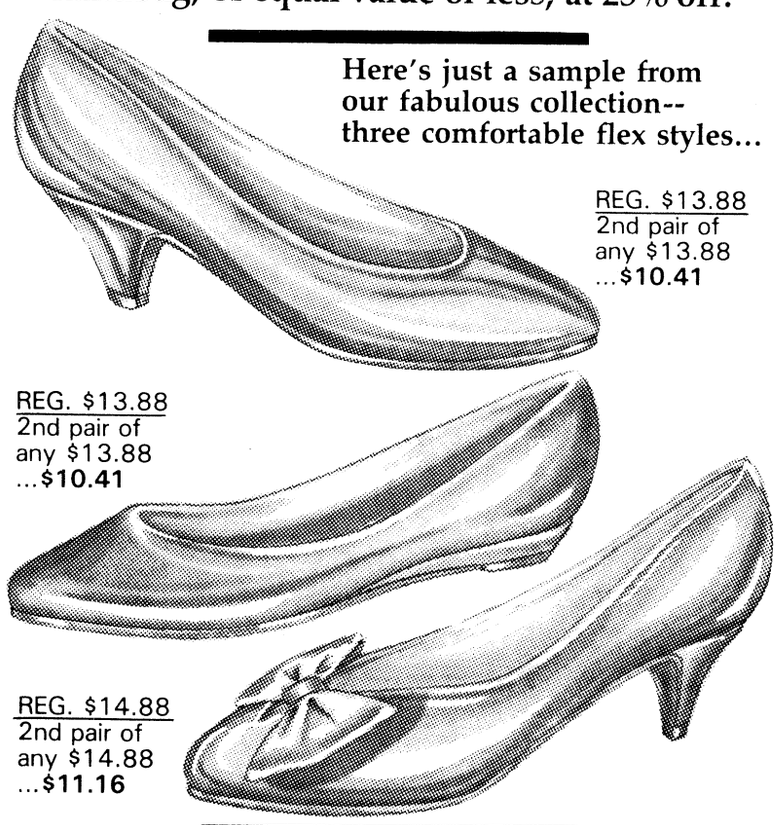
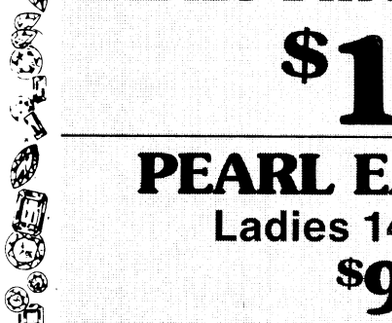
with preparing for the board. But my supervisors and fellow cadre knew I wanted to win and gave me time to study," he said.



Tinsley, an eight-year veteran, said the most rewarding part of his job as a drill sergeant comes from the soldiers. "Training soldiers keeps me motivated. I enjoy it when my soldiers do well on the end-of-cycle or physical fitness tests. My proudest moment is when they walk across the graduation field."



SFC Curtis Ray Stables, Company D, 2nd Battalion, 54th Infantry, 2nd Infantry Training Brigade, was also recognized at the ceremony as the runner-up for drill sergeant of the year.

Shoeshiner adds sparkle to Building 4

By Agatha H. James
Bayonet staff writer

The smell of Kiwi shoe polish, paste and wax hits a soldier's nose as he rounds the corner heading to Building 4's Room 109. As he enters the room, a faint scent of cigar smoke and hair tonic is added to the mixture of smells in the air. He makes his way to the far left corner, hops up in the dark brown, leather chair, props his boots on the footrests and begins to read a newspaper.

"You want wax on them?" asks a warm, friendly voice. "You need it in this hot weather," the voice adds, as his arms begin a rapid, vibrating motion cleaning, slapping on polish and brushing the boots.

The voice belongs to Clarence Lee Walton, the shoeshiner in Building 4. He is a short, 5-foot 5-inch, somewhat stocky, Black man. But, when it comes to the tall order of shining boots, Clarence can fill the bill.

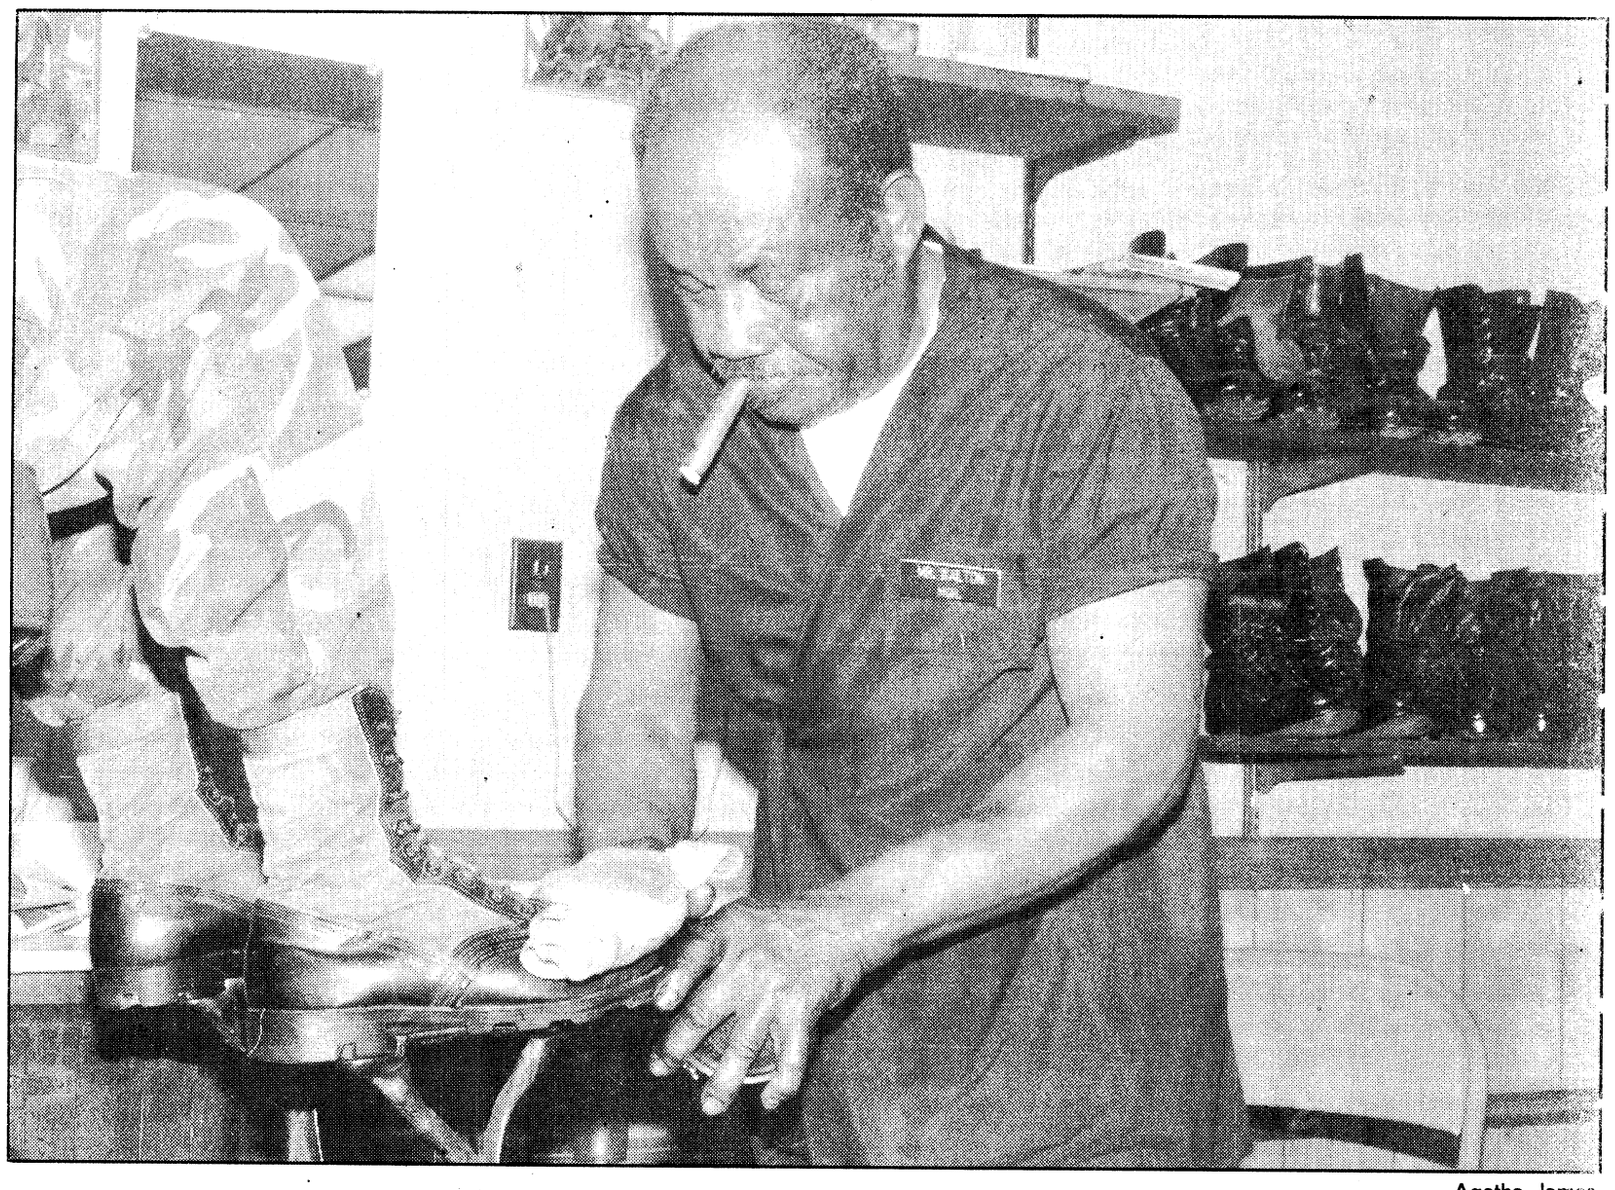
He's been shining soldiers' boots for more than 50 years, 21 of which have been at Infantry Hall.

"I started in 1938 when I was 13 years old," he said spitting the words out between teeth clamped onto a Tampa Nugget cigar. "I've shined boots for three generations of soldiers. I've shined generals' boots when they were captains. I've seen father, son and grandson go through Officer Candidate School here, and I've shined boots for all three."

Although shoeshining as a profession is slowly fading, Clarence is one individual who has stuck with it. "I like what I'm doing," he said. "I try to do the best job I can, and I try to treat people nice. That goes a long way, and it helps bring customers back."

For the hundreds of soldiers who enter his shop over the course of a week, Clarence's services are something they'd rather pay for than do themselves. He shines anywhere from 20 to 30 pairs of boots and low quarters a day. His prices are set by the Army Air Force Exchange Service. Currently, a spit shine for boots costs $3, a brush shine costs $2, and a shine for low quarters is $1.50.

His clients extend beyond Building 4 employees. "I shine for people from all over post," he said, mentioning Col. Keith M. Nightingale, commander of the Ranger Training Brigade at Harmony Church as one of his customers.



Clarence has had as many generals in and out of his shop as Fort Benning has had commanding generals. His clientele has included Gens. Livsey, Lindsay, Burba, Leuer, Westmoreland, Latham, Grange, Wetzel and Foss. His corner of the room even has a wall display of autographed photographs of some of the generals who have been his customers.

Clarence has seen a lot of changes in the Army over the years. He said he remembers when boots were brown, officers wore pink overcoats, a boot shine was 25 cents and a shine for low quarters was 10 cents. In fact, when Clarence started shining boots on post in 1938, the 1st Training Battalion was housed in tents instead of buildings. What's more, he said some soldiers' attitudes about their attire have changed.

"I can remember when commanders would make sure their soldiers' boots were shined. Now, things are different. You see some soldiers whose boots are nice and shiny, and you see others whose boots are dull and sometimes dirty."

Clarence has not only seen a lot of changes in the Army, he has weathered the storms of change in his job, as well. "Initially, shoeshiners got to keep all their money," he said. Now, shoeshining is contracted out, and we're paid a percentage of what we make." He has worked for three different contractors since shoeshining was first contracted out.

A Navy veteran, Clarence takes a great deal of pride in what he does. "He does a good job," said Lt. Col. Barry Mahek, deputy post commander and one of Clarence's customers. "A shine will last me three to four days, and I like the convenience."

Agatha James

Clarence Walton adds the finishing touches to a customer's boots.

"He never takes anything for granted," Mahek continued. "He always checks with me to see if I want wax on my boots. Even though I always do, he still checks with me to be sure."

After many years of hard work and long hours, Clarence does not plan to retire anytime soon. "Next June when I reach age 65, I plan to apply for Social Security," he said. "But, I plan to continue working. I'm going to work as long as my health is good."

After a hard day's work, Clarence Lee Walton "knocks off" around 2:30 p.m., washes up and goes home around 3 p.m. He relaxes and watches television and goes to bed between 7 and 8 p.m. At 3 a.m., he'll wake up and start his routine all over again. He will arrive at Building 4 around 4:30 a.m., clean the shop, wash his tools. Next, he'll eat breakfast. He'll start shining boots around 7:30 a.m. He's been doing this for a long time now.

That's what Clarence Walton does. He's a shoeshiner, and he puts in a day's work for a day's pay.

Soldier dies in collision

Infantry Branch Safety Office

During the President's Day holiday weekend, a Fort Benning lieutenant was killed in a head on collision on I-185. Three other friends, all Fort Benning soldiers, were in the car with him. Two are still in the hospital with serious spinal injuries.

It was a clear, dry afternoon. They had just turned onto I-185 coming from Atlanta. A police car was on the side of the road giving someone a ticket. The lieutenant looked ahead to see another car traveling in his lane the wrong direction. Before he could even hit his brakes, they collided.

The driver of the other car was confused and got on the interstate going the wrong way.

The car that does not have the right of way in a fatal accident can be responsible for a head-on collision in which several persons may be injured or killed. The car that follows too closely, infringing on the rights of the car ahead, is guilty of not sharing the road. Additionally, the car that illegally passes other traffic on the highway violates the share the road principle. Failure to keep right on the center line or improper turning and improper parking or starting contributes to many traffic accidents and deaths, which could easily be prevented by a little giving or sharing by one or both of the parties involved.

Nearly every accident on the roads can be traced to some human fault — some driver error. And if it could be analyzed further, the demon of selfishness would be discovered as the underlying cause of most of these tragedies. Unwillingness on the part of motorists to take time to be thoughtful or courteous — unwillingness to be generous and share the road with the other fellows.

You may be thinking: "I believe I consistently share the road whenever I drive." About 80 percent of all motorists try to do the right thing in traffic. That belief is substantiated by the fact that some 80 percent of drivers do not have accidents. However, in case you are not absolutely sure what you should do to help keep the accident and death rate down, the following are good guidelines.

First of all, the driver must stay alert — no time for distraction or daydreaming. He must develop defensive driving techniques. He must study the road ahead for possible accident situations; the higher the speed, the farther ahead his attention must be focused.

He must think ahead and plan any needed emergency measures. It goes without saying that he must know his car and its capabilities. If the car ahead should suddenly block his lane, would he be able to stop? Would he be able to safely swerve clear to avoid a collision?

The driver must make every possible effort to avoid sudden lane changes. He must signal before changing lanes; and, when preparing to leave a superhighway, he must move into the lane designated for lower speeds well in advance of leaving. No U-turns are permitted on any modern highway.

You must always be ready to share the road and drive defensively in order to ensure your safety on the road.

When will your number come up?

Infantry Branch Safety Office

If you are between the ages of 17 and 25, have two to three years of military service and are planning to drive somewhere this weekend — don't.

In fact, Wednesday is a bad day, as well. And if the weekend falls in March or April you are in worse shape.

The Safety Office made a survey and found that these are the times and conditions under which you are most likely to have a fatal car accident.

Statistics show that if you fall into that general group, chances are that if you take to a highway, turnpike or throughway between 8 p.m. and 3 a.m. on weekends, your accident will most likely be because you were either drinking, driving too fast or driving while fatigued and that you will lose control of your car and hit a fixed object such as a tree or bridge abutment.

The Army's highest rate of motor vehicle accidents occurs in the region including Alabama, Florida, Georgia, Mississippi, North Carolina, South Carolina and Tennessee. The rate is 1:40 accidents per 100,000 man days. The national military rate of accidents is 1.01.

Ninety-six percent of those fatally injured in non-government car accidents were enlisted personnel. About 64 percent were in the age group 17 to 25.

Saturdays and Sundays had the largest number of deaths in all years studied. In all but one year, the hours from 1 a.m. to 4 a.m. on Saturday and Sunday were the most hazardous.

Among the officers, second lieutenants have the highest number of injuries per 1,000 persons. It's 3.78 per 1,000 second lieutenants and the rate declines through colonel were only .628 per 1,000 are involved in car accidents. It is interesting to note in the survey that most of the accidents were not caused by unsafe mechanical or physical conditions of the car. In other words, it wasn't the car's fault that there was an accident, it was the result of a hazardous road surface or the fault of the driver.

The number of deaths per 100 motor vehicle injury admissions was highest on weekends and Wednesdays. March and April were the most dangerous months.

Summary. All this might give the average reader the impression that military men are bent on committing suicide on our highways and are dangerous drivers.

Actually, the records of military personnel, although they drive more, is generally better than that of civilians of the same age.

For the past five years an average of 80 out of every 100,000 civilians in the 20 to 24 age bracket have died as a result of car accidents. The military rate is 78 out of every 100,000.

The Army accident rate is .77 per 100,000 miles of driving for its personnel. The national rate according to the National Safety Council is 1.3 per 100,000 miles of driving.

Tutorial program is 'smart' idea

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

Tri-community kids are getting smarter because a Columbus resident saw the need for a tutorial program and did something about it.

Lonnie Jackson, a retired sergeant first class, founded the Combined Communities of Southeast Columbus, an organization designed to enhance and promote the growth of residents in that area.

In June 1983 Jackson helped establish a summer tutorial program. The overall program was founded in 1982.

"The tutorial program was originally set up to meet the basic needs of students in the primary grades during the summer," he said. "Now, we also have a sessions from ten until noon every Saturday."

Since the program started, more than 2,400 students in grades 2 through 8 have been served, he said.

Jackson said students concentrate on math and reading during the summer. During school months, the students are asked to bring their school books on subjects in which they are having trouble.

Jackson explained that he retains a set of volunteers from various organizations on a monthly basis. He usually recruits them from sororities and colleges in the area.

One volunteer, Frances C. Johnson, a retired school teacher did a monthly rotation with her sorority in October. The rotation time for her sorority ended, but she still volunteers.

"When I first came here to tutor, I found I really liked it, so I come every Saturday," she said. "I get a great sense of fulfillment when I teach these children."

Johnson said the parents are usually the first to tell her that what she is doing is getting results.

"Recently, a mother came up to tell me her child's grade rose from a D to a B," Johnson said, "That made me feel great."

Fort Benning soldier, SFC Billie E. Jordan, sends his son, Christopher, to the program and is getting great results.

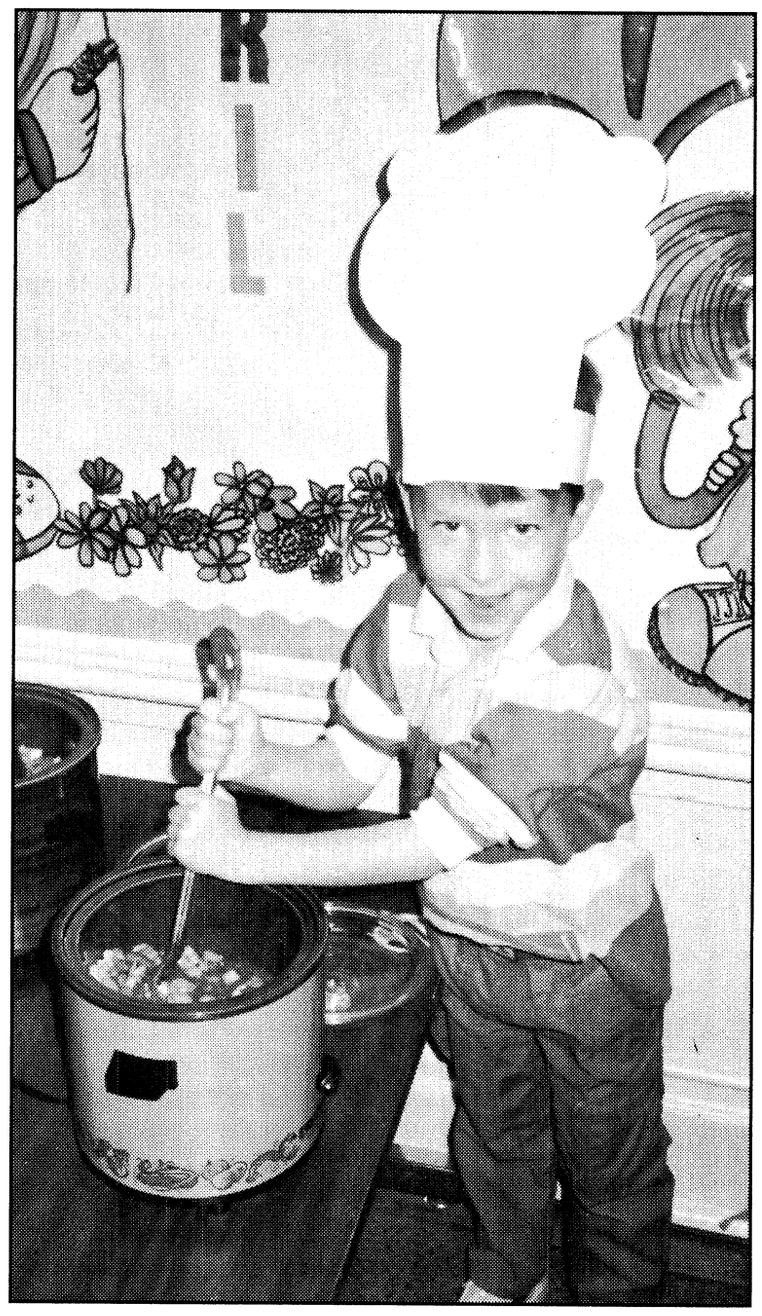
His wife, Marilyn, said Christopher got involved in the program last year. During the regular summer courses at the school, she learned of the tutorial program.

"I decided to send him to the CCSC program because I wanted him to get the most he could out of school," Mrs. Jordan said, "My son's grades weren't that bad but they could have been better."

She said since her son started going to CCSC, he's been on the honor roll.

"Johnson and Christopher Jordan are typical of the program," Jackson said, "We get volunteers and students from all over the city."

It really makes me feel wonderful when I see the results of the program I started, he said. Although tutoring is the primary thing the organization does, it is not the only thing.



"This whole program is kind of like the Army," he said. "Good training gives you good results, and that's what we are giving these kids."

Some of the program's results have had nationwide coverage from ABC recently.

Jackson said ABC came here to film the organization at work. The station will air the footage of CCSC during the entire month of March.

"Hopefully, people will see those spots on ABC and start organizations of their own," Jackson said.

For more information on volunteering or enrolling your child in the tutorial program, contact Lonnie Jackson at 687-5357 or Daisy Honor at 687-8808.

Soup anyone?

John Callaghan stirs the soup he and his Patch School kindergarten classmates prepared during their study of nutrition. Each child brought in a fresh or canned vegetable, and the students cut up the vegetables and stirred the soup themselves.

Excuse me, don't pass the salt

By Barbara McCarty
Registered Dietitian

Please don't pass the salt. . . not yet anyway.

Do you reach for the salt automatically? Do you add a liberal number of sprinkles before you even taste the food? Do you really know what the food tastes like?

Why should you ask yourself these questions? Avoiding too much sodium is one of seven dietary guidelines for Americans. The guidelines are general recommendations for people in the United States aimed at improving our health and decreasing the risk of certain conditions such as heart disease, high blood pressure, diabetes and cancer.

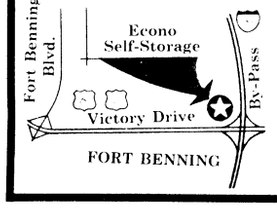
Sodium is a mineral that's involved in fluid balance in the body, and, thus, blood pressure. High blood pressure is a concern because it increases the chances of having a heart attack — currently the number one killer in the country. It also can damage the small blood vessels, especially in the eye and kidneys.

It is estimated that one in very four American adults have high blood pressure. Once discovered, high blood pressure is treated by a physician with diet, drugs or both. However, since we cannot predict who will develop high blood pressure, it's a good idea for everyone to make sure sodium intake is moderate.

Sodium is found naturally in many foods. Salt is a combination of sodium and another mineral — chloride. Other foods especially high in sodium include cured, smoked and canned meats — ham, lunch meats and canned tuna — and many convenience foods. This includes frozen dinners, canned soups and vegetables and snacks such potato chips.

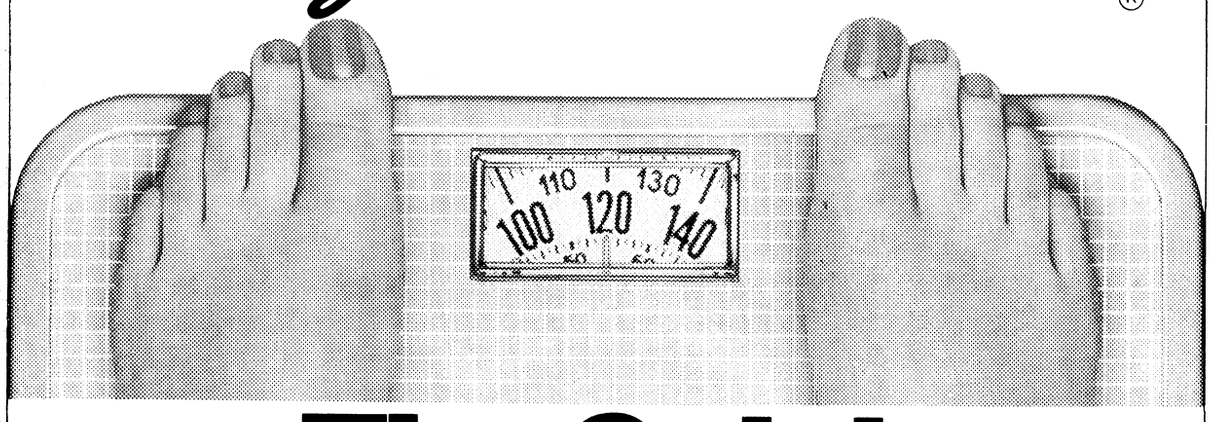
You can make a good start at a moderate sodium intake by not using the salt shaker at the table. Try seasoning your food with other herbs and spices that do not have salt as an ingredient. You can buy sodium-free herbal spice mixes at the commissary or any grocery store, or try making one.

Here's a simple recipe for a start:



1 tsp onion powder
1 tsp paprika
1 tsp dry mustard
1 tsp garlic powder
¼ tsp cayenne pepper (optional).

Don't think of this as getting rid of an old favorite, instead look forward to trying new tastes.



Improve how you feel and look by "eating what's right."

For more information, contact a registered dietitian at Martin Army Community Hospital, 544-1542.

Residents responsible for control of pets here

By Barry Price
Provost Marshal's Office

The control of pets is becoming more and more of a problem at Fort Benning.

In accordance with USAIC Regulation 40-905, Pet and Animal Disease Control, owners or harborers of animals on post, to include Battle Park homes, are responsible for preventing their animals from becoming a public nuisance.

Uncontrolled pets, unduly noisy animals and other similar problems will be considered a nuisance and a detriment to the peaceful enjoyment of property and public safety.

Pet owners should be considerate of their neighbors and especially cognizant of the health, safety and tranquillity requirements inherent of pet ownership.

Because of the severity of the pet control problem and concern for the safety for the residents of the installation, a tougher policy has been put into effect by the command. The new policy allows the housing office to remove a pet from the installation when:

- It has been impounded for running astray twice or been declared a nuisance three times.
- It has been involved in an unprovoked biting or scratching incident.

We, as pet owners, have the personal responsibility to control them.

ASK THE JUDGE

By Jane Winand
Staff Judge Advocate's Office

Q: I was stopped by a policeman in Columbus and something he said really confused me. The police were doing routine driver's license, registration and insurance checks when I was stopped.

The policeman asked for my proof of insurance, I whipped out the paperwork I'd just received from the company that financed my car. As part of the purchase price of my 1989 Corvette, I pay a little each month for insurance to the same national company that financed my car.

Well, the policeman said my insurance wasn't the right kind to meet the requirements of Georgia law, and I got a ticket. How can that be? I'm really burned up over this.

A: The policeman was correct in saying you do not have the right kind of insurance on your vehicle. Georgia law requires owners and drivers of motor vehicles in Georgia to have at least minimum insurance coverage on that vehicle for bodily injury, property damage, medical expenses, loss of income during injury, disability expenses and funeral and burial expenses.

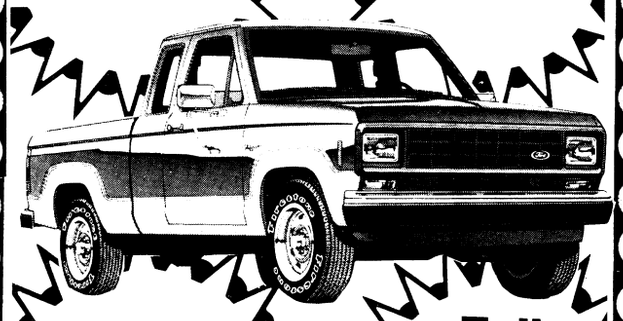
Failure to show proof of this insurance when requested by law enforcement personnel is a violation of Georgia law and can result in the imposition of a heavy fine.

Note that the obligation to have insurance not only applies to owners and drivers of vehicles, but also to anyone else who authorizes another to operate a vehicle.

So why wasn't the insurance adequate under Georgia law? Look closely at the provisions of the insurance policy issued to you.

Most insurance policies issued through large nationwide automobile finance companies closely affiliated with American car manufacturers such as Ford or Chrysler are for protecting that finance company to pay off the loan on the car should it be totaled.

This form of insurance is not to cover bodily injuries and property damages (except for those injuries to your car) resulting from an accident. Thus, Georgia law views you as a motorist with no insurance to pay damages that your driving may cause.



You must purchase automobile insurance as soon as possible if you plan to continue driving in Georgia. Fort Benning also requires proof of this insurance coverage before your car can be registered on post.

Accidents kill more children than 5 leading diseases

Army News Service

Injuring about 140,000 infants each year, mishaps involving nursery equipment and furniture are the leading cause of death and injury to children under 4 years old.

According to figures supplied by the Army Safety Center at Fort Rucker, Ala., accidents have killed more children than the five leading fatal diseases combined. These statistics, say organizers of the center's Family Accident Prevention Program, make a strong case for extreme care in choosing and using nursery equipment.

Although cribs have been regulated for safety since 1974, a Safety Center fact sheet says crib accidents claim the lives of more children than those involving any other children's product. When choosing a crib, parents should ensure that its slats are no more than 2 3/8 inches apart and that foot and head board openings can not catch or trap a child's head.

Mattresses must fit snugly inside cribs, with no more than two fingers' space between crib and mattress. Bumper pads should also fit the entire crib and have ties or straps. At least six straps are recommended.

In addition, parents who repaint a crib should use only lead-free quality household enamel.

Bassinets and cradles also take lives — about 18 annually, say Safety Center figures. Parents should make sure that these fit the child well and have wide, sturdy bases and bottoms.

Playpen accidents result in some 4,000 infant injuries each year.

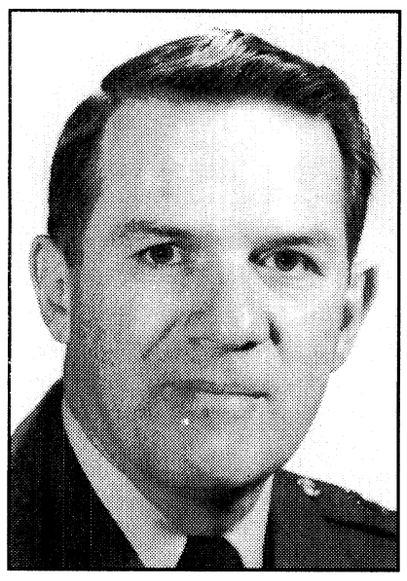
Safety Center officials say drop-side mesh playpens and cribs are particularly dangerous when used with a side in the down position. This allows children to roll into a "pocket" in the playpen and sometimes suffocate.

Parents can minimize the danger by choosing a mesh playpen with a weave smaller than the buttons on baby clothing. On wooden playpens, the slats should be no less the 2 3/8 inches apart. Regular checks should also be made on vinyl padding; cracks must be repaired before an infant can chew on damaged areas.

Most injuries and deaths related to changing table accidents are caused by falls. According to a Safety Center fact sheet, the number of children injured in these accidents — about 1,330 annually — might be trimmed if more parents used the restraining straps on the tables.

Accounting for 9,000 injuries yearly, a quarter of them to children under two years old, high chairs require caution as well. Chairs with a wide base provide more stability, but they should always be placed far enough from other objects so that a child cannot push against them. Again, as most high chair injuries result from falls, restraining straps should be used and supervision must be constant.

Another 11,000 children under five are injured annually in strollers and carriages. Parents should pick a stroller or carriage with a wide base, then make sure their children are strapped in before wheeling away.



Some 16,000 infants under two years old are injured in overturning walkers each year. Aside from choosing a walker with a stable base, parents should never leave a child unattended in a walker. Parents should also keep children in walkers away from stairs. If possible, plastic sleeves should be used over coils and joints.

With 90 child deaths in 1986 alone due to falls, stairs are an extreme hazard to small children. Baby gates should always be used, but parents must ensure that the gates themselves are safe. Gates that open with expanding pressure bars should be installed with the bar away from the child.

When it comes to the threat of injury and even death, extra care in choosing children's furniture and equipment is a small effort that can pay off big — in a safe, happy childhood.

SPIRITUAL

Special guest speaker to address Easter Sunrise Service congregation

Chap. Charles T. Clanton

By Debra Galle
USAIC Chaplain's Office

At first glance, the guest speaker of this year's annual Easter Sunrise Service may look like any other Army colonel because of the colorful array of ribbons and awards on his uniform. However, the shiny crosses that dot his lapels tell a story of their own.

Considered by his peers to be an excellent and provocative preacher, Chap. (Col.) Charles T. Clanton is the commandant of the U.S. Army Chaplain Center and School, Fort Monmouth, N.J. He will speak at 6:30 a.m. during the Main Post Sunrise Service at the Field of Four Chaplains. At 8:30 a.m., he will speak at the service at the ITC Duckpond, Sand Hill.

An impressive list of accomplishments follow this chaplain who began his Army career not in the ministry, but as an armor officer.

Commissioned a second lieutenant from ROTC, Clanton served on active duty and in the reserves for eight years. After completing seminary training, he was rebranched as a chaplain with concurrent active duty in 1966.

Before Fort Monmouth, Clanton was assigned as corps and post chaplain, Headquarters, III Corps and Fort Hood, Fort Hood, Texas. Prior to that, he served as staff chaplain Army Reserve Personnel Center, St. Louis, Mo., and as division chaplain and community chaplain, 8th Infantry Division, Bad Kreuznach in Germany.

His early assignments include two tours of duty in the Republic of Vietnam. He was stationed in England and Germany and completed several stateside assignments.

His awards and decorations include the Silver Star, Bronze Star with four oak leaf clusters, Meritorious Service Medal with five oak leaf clusters, Purple Heart, Air Medal with three oak leaf clusters and Vietnam Service Medal with seven stars.

Special music will be provided for the Easter Sunrise Service, an annual Fort Benning event, by the 283rd USAIC Army Band and Bobby Michaels. Babysitting will be provided in the Chapel Annex. Refreshments will be served on the annex patio following the ceremony. The public is invited to attend.

Only Messiah can bring life from death

By Chap. Donald Taylor
USAIC Chaplain's Office

His home was a grave in a Jewish graveyard. His story wasn't known until the Nuremburg War Trials, but his poetry paints WWII drama as described in a book by Paul Tillich, "The Shaking of the Foundations."

The old man had survived with many others and was living with them in the graveyard, hiding from the enemy. They had evaded the Nazis and escaped the gas chambers.

The 80-year-old grave-digger wrote poetry, and in one poem, he described a birth of a boy, which took place in a nearby grave. The old man assisted, wrapped in a shroud. When the newborn uttered his first cry, the old man prayed out loud.

"Great God, hast thou finally sent the Messiah to us? For who else other than the Messiah himself can be born in a grave?" He felt that only the Messiah could bring life from death. Such an event is not natural, but the way of the Messiah (Mark 10:32-36).

This weekend, Christians return to the roots of Christiandom. They focus upon the meaning of the death, burial and resurrection of the Savior, Jesus Christ. These central events are the very core of the Christian faith. The hope that's offered to one and all is that Jesus Christ overcame betrayal, loneliness, abandonment, agony and death to bring God's redeeming love to all who would follow him (1 Cor. 15).

ARMY NEWS

Committee looks into Army's use of NVGs

Army aviators' use of night vision goggles is the subject of a House Armed Services Investigation Subcommittee evaluation.

Recent criticism by a California news reporter over the use of the Army's night vision goggles and interest on the part of Rep. Frank McCloskey, D-Ind., led to the investigation.

In a separate action, the Army aviation community has followed up on a year-long discussion over possible distortion in night vision goggles and ordered a one-time evaluation on the goggles used by aviators. The evaluation procedure will enable experienced pilots to determine within 20 minutes whether a pair of goggles can be used for flight or if further evaluation is needed.

Progress of the Women in Military Service for America Memorial Foundation, Inc., a non-profit organization fostering development of a memorial to U. S. women servicemembers, now includes the Defense Department's endorsement and a toll-free number.

Prospective registrants in the memorial's computerized registration system for collecting and displaying career history, memorable military experiences and photographs now have access to a toll-free telephone number by which they and prospective sponsors may call for more information: (800) 222-2294; the commercial number is 1-703-533-1155. The mailing address is Dept. 560, Washington, D. C. 20042-0560

The approved site for this national memorial to honor past, current and future servicewomen occupies the memorial gate area of Arlington National Cemetery in Arlington, Va.

Army finance leaders get automation update

Some 300 Army finance and accounting officials recently gathered in Indianapolis for an intensive five-day training program on managing automated systems.

The attendees, military and civilian, included finance and accounting officers for pay and examination, disbursing and accounting.

Clyde E. Jeffcoat, the Army's director of finance and accounting, told the conferees that most prior training efforts had been directed toward technical and clerical personnel, but further training was needed for management as well. "This program," he said, "will emphasize those actions that finance and accounting officers need to personally oversee to ensure the success of the Army's new automated financial systems."

TRADOC symposium emphasizes safety

During the recent Training and Doctrine Command's second annual General Officer Safety Symposium, TRADOC's chief trainer emphasized the need for soldiers and leaders to develop a "safety mindset."

"We need to teach all of our officers and noncommissioned officers safety in peacetime to ensure good tactical decisions in combat," said Gen. Maxwell Thurman, TRADOC's commanding general. More than 30 generals and 70 commanders and commandants, along with dozens of safety officials from TRADOC installations, participated in discussions on safety strategies and plans for the future.

Major topics of discussion included: privately owned vehicle accident prevention, results of high risk/high stress and Federal Employees Compensation Act.

According to TRADOC officials, the greatest challenge faced today by TRADOC is the reduction of POV accidents, a major killer of soldiers.

Warrant officer pleads guilty to espionage

Gets 40-year sentence

Army News Service

Warrant Officer James W. Hall III was convicted by a general court martial of espionage, attempted espionage and failure to follow regulations on March 9.

He was sentenced by Army Judge Col. Howard Eggers to 40 years confinement, forfeiture of all pay and allowances, a $50,000 fine and a dishonorable discharge.

As the sentence stands, Hall would be eligible for parole in 10 years.

Hall was arrested by Federal Bureau of Investigation and Army Intelligence agents on the evening of Dec. 20, 1988, after he met with a fictional "Soviet" agent and offered to sell secrets.

He had pleaded guilty March 6 to all charges and specifications and agreed to assist the government in future court cases and with extensive debriefings of his activities.

During the trial, Hall admitted he accepted more than $100,000 in gifts and military awards from the German Democratic Republic and the Soviet Union in exchange for signal communications intelligence.

Hall's apparent motivation was monetary gain. He carried out his activities from 1983 to 1988.

Since Hall was sentenced to more than one year's confinement, his case will automatically be reviewed by the U. S. Army Court of Military Review.

Upon completion of that review, Hall may petition the U. S. Court of Military Appeals in Washington, D. C., to review the case.

He will initially be confined at Fort George G. Meade, Md. Then, he'll be transferred to the U. S. Disciplinary Barracks at Fort Leavenworth, Kan.

Change of command road march

4th Ranger Training Battalion soldiers are enroute to a battalion change of command ceremony at Uchee Creek recreation area. They road marched from Fryar Drop Zone under the leadership of outgoing commander, Lt. Col. Robert J. Hoffman. After the road march, Hoffman turned the battalion colors over to Lt. Col. Michael J. Pearce.

Training program helped boost soldiers' careers

By Louis Keefer
Guest writer

Do you know those old barracks they want to finish tearing down out in the Harmony Church area? Back in 1943-1944, they helped provide housing for three regiments of special young men slated for college classes under the Army Specialized Training Program.

While it lasted, ASTP was the single biggest college education program in the nation's history. Many now-famous men might be called "alumni," and a lot of them took basic training in that same Harmony Church area.

Some of the best known former ASTPers are diplomat, Henry Kissinger; New York City mayor, Edward Koch; Governor Arch Moore of West Virginia; the late Senator Frank Church; TV newscaster, Roger Mudd; writer, Gore Vidal; film star, Mel Brooks; and now-retired, four-star general, James Hartinger; former commander-in-chief, North American Air Defense Command. There are many, many more.

That so many became successful is not surprising. Eligibility for ASTP was based on brains and previous education: trainees had to be high school graduates with an Armed Forces Classification Test score of at least 115. But lots of them had AFCTs ranging from 150 to 160 and even higher. Many, like Kissinger and the late think-tanker, Herman Kahn, were real geniuses.

What was ASTP?

Now mostly forgotten except by the ASTPers themselves — and the many thousands of old-line regulars who gave them basic training out in Harmony Church and at camps elsewhere — the program sent more than 200,000 soldiers to more than 200 colleges for accelerated courses in engineering, medicine, dentistry, personnel, psychology and 34 foreign languages.

Journalist teaches Faith seventh-graders how to design, put together a newspaper

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

When a seventh-grade class from Faith Middle School decided to put together a newspaper for one of their assignments in English, they sought out the Fort Benning Public Affairs Office for guidance. By coincidence an expert was here from the Department of Defense.

Bonnie Kingsbury from the Editorial Department at the Defense Information School, Fort Benjamin Harrison, Ind., was here providing guidance to The Bayonet and at the same time finding out more about how Army newspapers are run.

She was approached by Beth Middlemiss, Director of Staff Development, Fort Benning Schools, with the idea of teaching the class and readily agreed.

After contacting Robin Coe, the English teacher, and discussing criteria for the class, Kingsbury gathered the necessary materials and was ready to teach the class.

The props she brought to demonstrate each step of newspaper creation included odd-sounding items like dummy sheets, a pica pole, flats and copy.

The students' articles were taken from books they'd been reading. Other contents of the paper included comics, news, advice columns, sports and even obituaries, much as a daily newspaper.

Each section of the students' paper had two editors. Kingsbury explained the role editors play in putting out a quality paper.

"Teaching that class was the most fun I've had in a long time," Kingsbury said. "The students were so bright. They asked a lot of intelligent questions."

Kingsbury is used to questions; she has been teaching for almost 20 years.

Kingsbury has had articles published in several Indianapolis, Ind. magazines. She is currently working on an article for Redbook.

"Several of the students asked me what it's like working in the journalism field," she said. "My advice to them was to work hard, constantly educate themselves and be prepared not to make much money."

"It's an interesting business," she said.

Now is time to begin care for a healthy lawn

By Becky Ray
Energy Branch

The recent burst of spring-like weather has driven many family housing residents from their sofas to their lawns. Appropriately, it's time to start thinking of lawn care.

The Unit and Housing Support Branch, Directorate of Engineering and Housing, is here to help you. It has a variety of tools and materials available for issue now and even more ordered for the months to come.

Available now for permanent issue (one per family quarters) are leaf and garden rakes, pruning and hedge shears and lawn sprinklers. Other tools are loaned for 48-hour periods. These are fertilizer spreaders, leaf blowers, post hole diggers, tillers, wheel barrows, lawn edgers and weed eaters.

Lime, pine straw and topsoil are available now.

Beginning in April, fertilizer, azaleas, juniper and holly bushes will be available. Bermuda grass seed, St. Augustine grass sprigs, and bedding plants have been ordered for May.

Pine nuggets have been issued in the past, but won't be stocked this year because they often encourage insect infestation.

The Unit and Housing Support Branch (U-Do-It Center) is located on Vibbert Avenue. Hours of operation are 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. Tuesday through Friday and 9 a.m. to 2 p.m. Saturday.

Tips for a healthy lawn

To many Americans, lawn care is an art form. To others, it's recreation.

Regardless of your attitude toward your lawn, you and your grass may benefit from expert advice.

Mowing grass too short encourages shallow root growth and increases the amount of water the grass will need to stay healthy. Longer grass tends to shade out undesirable weeds such as crabgrass, according to U.S. Department of Agriculture studies.

Watering too often and too heavily can cause shallow grass roots. Shallow roots make grass less tolerant of hot or dry weather, causing it to wilt easily. Water-loving weeds, like crabgrass, will also thrive if the lawn is over-watered.

Over watering can erode topsoil and may displace too much oxygen in the soil, literally drowning grass roots.

Experts seem to agree that in general, lawns need about one inch of water per week. If rain doesn't supply an inch, lawn sprinklers are the next best method for an even, gentle soaking. The Georgia Cooperative Extention Service recommends using pie pans or cans to measure the amount of water being distributed.

In his book "Lawns," agronomist Melvin Robey, suggests feeling the soil to determine if it needs to be watered. If the soil is dry at a depth of three to four inches, it should be watered.

If water doesn't absorb quickly, it can puddle or run off, causing erosion. A pitchfork or soil aerator can be used to punch small holes in the soil to aid absorption. A more gentle sprinkler spray with smaller droplets will also help water get into the soil.

Shade trees shield the grass below from rain. They also have shallow root systems that compete with the grass for water. Extra attention in watering may help establish healthy, lush grass beneath trees.

The Sayers Memorial Library, located next to the Main Post Theater, has many books on lawn care, landscaping and gardening. In addition, the library has an up-to-date reference system for magazine articles in publications such as Southern Living, which specialize in lawn and gardening subjects written especially for this region.

Watering hours

Fort Benning has designated lawn watering hours for family housing and administrative areas. Family housing areas (except Custer Terrace) should water lawns only between 5 p.m. and midnight Monday, Wednesday and Friday. Custer Terrace watering hours are 5 p.m. to midnight Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday. All administrative and commercial facility lawns may be watered Monday, Wednesday and Friday from 5-9 a.m. These staggered hours and days will ensure a uniform distribution of water for the entire post.

Training

early 1943 had the first shot at ASTP. Since they'd had their basic training, they simply were screened to see if they met the requirements and then sent on to college.

Many of the young men still in high school in early 1943, on the other hand, who passed a nationally-offered Army ASTP/Navy V-12 "pre-qualification test" and asked for the Army program were, after being drafted, sent to Fort Benning for basic training before going on to college.

One of the first things they got when they arrived in the Harmony Church area was a 15-page "Trainees Hand Book" that told them on page one: "You are a soldier. You are not a student!"

The Army wanted to make sure all these "quiz kids" wouldn't think they were such hotshots.

It said right off: "You have no special privileges. You will not be treated any differently than the thousands of G.I. Joes who have preceded you in your country's Mobilization Training Program."

Though most ASTPers completed their basic successfully, some felt they had tougher-than-usual training because the cadre knew they were headed for the so-called "soft" college life and wanted to make sure they never forgot what real soldiering was all about.

They did the then-standard, 13-week basic, learning to fire the M-1, the .30-caliber light machinegun and the 60mm mortar and watching larger weapons demonstrated.

Like everybody else, they learned to creep and crawl (through the usual poison ivy), to do KP and guard duty, to do close-order drill and make long, forced marches and to share bivouac tents with snakes and bugs in the pine woods bordering the Upatoi.

The ASTPers published a weekly newspaper called the "Pine-Bur" (now a collector's item), and it regularly carried news of the war, of their training progress, of their various after-hours athletic leagues and, of course, it always included the latest episode of the "Terry and the Pirates" cartoon strip, featuring the late Milton Caniff's curvaceous Miss Lace.

They also maintained an ambitious musical program, developing about 25 individual band organizations down through the units, put on drives supporting the War Bond drives and March of Dimes efforts, happily attended occasional dances in Columbus arranged by local women's groups, and were careful to stay out of trouble in Phenix City.

Their "Trainees Hand Book" told them that while commercial buses ran between Harmony Church and Columbus, they were often terribly overcrowded.

Even so, they were cautioned, "This condition will not be acceptable as an excuse for returning to the area late from pass or for missing bed check." (Since few got passes into Columbus until all training was completed and nobody wanted to spoil his college chances, such warning was largely unnecessary.)

Although it was some 45 years ago, it all sounds pretty familiar, doesn't it?

Too bad for most ASTPers, the number in colleges was slashed in early 1944 from about 145,000 to only 35,000.

Roughly 80,000 of the 110,000 released from their studies were assigned to ground forces. Thirty-five infantry, airborne and armored divisions received an average of about 1,500 ASTPers each.

Most of these divisions were bound for Europe, many getting there as early as September or October.

ASTPers helped capture Aachen, fought in the Huertgen Forest, stopped Panthers with bazookas during the Battle of the Bulge and moved through Germany right up to the Elbe River to meet the Russians at the war's end.

Hardly any of the ASTPers had a chance to get degrees and few ever got into OCS for an opportunity to earn their commissions.

Most went into divisions as buck privates and only got their PFC ratings or NCO stripes as casualties created T/O vacancies.

Most authorities say the ASTPers made good soldiers. Although nobody knows how many casualties they suffered (records simply weren't kept on who was or was not an ASTPer), ASTP losses were known to be heavy in some continuously active divisions .

After ASTP ended in early 1944 — largely because the Army, thinking ahead to D-Day, knew it would need infantrymen much more than potential officer candidates — the Harmony Church ASTP Basic Training Center was closed.

Between May 26, 1943, when ASTP was activated, and mid-March 1944, more than 17,000 men passed through the Center.

An "obituary" story in the April 13, 1944 Bayonet reviewed the Center's brief history, and said that many of those who weren't sent to college remained at Fort Benning or were sent to other camps as cadre.

Some, long-since retired, are probably still living in the Columbus area.

For most of its existence, the ASTP Basic Training Center was commanded by Col. Wilson M. Spann, with a staff headed by Lt. Col. Burriss E. Claypool, executive officer; Lt. Col. Jack I. Davis, adjutant; Major Russell L. Tuttle, S-2; Major John G. Macfarlan, Special Service and Public Relations officer; Col. Herbert B. Laux, S-3; Lt. Col. Harold J. Lipscomb, S-4; and Lt. Col. Lysle W. Croft, classification and testing officer.

Did ASTP help win the war?

Most people, including a great majority of ex-ASTPers themselves, would say absolutely no way! Yet, had the war lasted as long as first anticipated, the program might have proved invaluable.

Where else would the college-trained engineers and other professionals have come from?

Thanks to the war-ending atomic bomb, the question never had to be answered.

Though most of their barracks are already gone, it's possible now and then to see some fellow in his 60s driving slowly through Harmony Church looking for his old company area.

If you see such a character, stop and give him directions. Chances are he was an ASTPer and would enjoy hearing what's new today.

REENLIST.
BE ALL YOU CAN BE.

IT TAKES MORE THAN A HUG TO MAKE A BIG PERSON FEEL SECURE.

That's why it helps to be in the Army.

Because the Army has a range of benefits and services that give you and your family a real sense of security.

Benefits like knowing your family is covered by medical and dental insurance. Or knowing who is taking care of your children, and that your older kids are enjoying safe, supervised activities.

There's security in knowing there are places to turn for financial assistance. That there are programs to help your wife or husband find employment.

It's reassuring to know there are places to shop, like the commissary and the PX, where your money goes farther.

And nothing makes a family feel more secure than knowing they've got a steady income and job security.

Not everyone has that kind of security. Army families do. Because the Army provides many things to help make your life easier. We do it because we're committed to you. We want you to use the services we offer. We want you to stay in the Army family.

In this family, we take care of our own. And you won't find a more secure feeling anywhere else.

ARMY FAMILY. BE ALL YOU CAN BE.®

USAMU soldiers selected for '89 U.S. Shooting Team

By Tom Pool
U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit

Several soldiers from the U.S. Army. Marksmanship Unit were recently selected to compete as firing members on the 1989 U.S. Shooting Team.

Spec. Michael Moore and Spec. Martin Edmonson were the first Marksmanship Unit soldiers to be selected during tryouts held in February. More recently, Maj. James Meredith and MSgt. Erich Buljung made the U.S. squad during tryouts held at the Olympic Training Center in Colorado Springs, Colo., March 17 through 19.

For Moore and Edmonson, this will be the first time the young shooters will compete on the U.S. team. They are scheduled to participate in the running target matches during the Championship of the Americas events, April 2 through 8, in Guatemala City, Guatemala.

Both Meredith and Buljung are veteran competitors and have been members of several U.S. shooting teams. They are scheduled to compete in the World Air Gun Championships in Sarajevo, Yugoslavia April 24 through 30.

Buljung, a silver medalist at last year's Olympic Games in Seoul, South Korea, is considered an early favorite in the 10-meter air pistol event. Meredith will compete in the air rifle event.

More than 200 competitors from 40 nations are expected for the championships in Sarajevo.

58th Inf. NCOs conduct FTX

By George Mingee
197th Infantry Brigade

Noncommissioned officers took control of 1st Battalion, 58th Infantry, and conducted a week-long training exercise while the battalion's officers were away in the California deserts.

The NCOs had total control of the operation. They planned and executed every move the soldiers made.

"The squad leaders were given the opportunity to lead and prepare the training themselves," said 1st Sgt. David Morrison, Company A., 1st Bn., 58th Inf. "They were able to do it without someone standing over their shoulders, which gave them more confidence in themselves.

"This is the first time the squad leaders have had total control of their squads," Morrison added. "Because of this, the NCOs learned more about navigation and how to prepare their squads for combat."

The training consisted of squad-sized elements receiving reconnaissance information, formulating plans and dispersing information to the squad members. The squads were evaluated on their performance.

The objective of the week-long training was to develop the NCOs' ability to lead soldiers and build confidence in the troops under them.

"When the NCOs made the decisions, it was more organized," said Pvt. 2 James Durham, Co. A, 1st Bn., 58th Inf. "The NCOs led us the way they're trained to do."

According to CSM Wayne Gibney, 1st Bn., 58th Inf., this training was a chance for the NCOs to carry out and execute all the tasks they are capable of.

The training was done to prepare the NCOs and the soldiers for a trip to the National Training Center at Fort Irwin, Calif. They will act as opposing forces in an exercise at the center.

Bowlers needed to represent Benning in TRADOC tourney

USAIC Public Affairs Office

A bowling roll-off to select a team of six men and six women to represent Fort Benning in the TRADOC Telegraphic Bowling Championship will be conducted at Main Post Bowling Center March 28 through 30 at 12 noon.

The TRADOC Championship will be bowled on April 7 through 9. Entries can be obtained at the Mall or Main Post Bowling Centers. Entry cut-off date is close of business Monday.

The tournament is open to anyone above 18 years of age authorized to bowl at Fort Benning. This includes active duty, retired personnel and their spouses, and DoD civilians. A $1 game fee will be charged.

Engineers' families send video to Costa Rica

USAIC Public Affairs Office

About 650 soldiers from the 36th Engineer Group, most from the Group's 43rd Engineer Battalion, have been in Costa Rica since January and February for Task Force 36.

The soldiers are not expected to return until May as they continue to construct access bridges for the citizens of the country's Osa Peninsula to use during periods of high water.

Four of five months is a long time to be so far away from families and friends, but the soldiers and their families have come up with a unique way of communicating — video postcards.

Nearly 120 family members and friends of the engineer soldiers gathered March 18 at the Sightseeing Road Chapel for a Costa Rican pot luck dinner, at which a video of the occasion was recorded to send to the soldiers in Costa Rica.

Taping of the video included the dinner, activities and messages to the engineer soldiers from family members and friends.

The families also viewed video tapes of the soldiers and their Costa Rican base camp, as well as individual soldier interviews.

Glover, Slappy, Rich maul opponents in Dog Fight

By Ron Allen
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Talmage Glover, James Slappy and Bob Rich teamed up to win the 1989 Spring Dog Fight at the Follow Me Golf Course Saturday.

This year's battle turned out to be a real "Dog Fight" as five teams finished within three points of each other.

The winning team scored a +14 followed by two teams at +13. A tie-breaker determined second and third.

Earl Brown, Sandy Maupin and Steve Bellamy placed second followed by Brooks Hallford, Gil Solis and Fred Wadsworth in third.

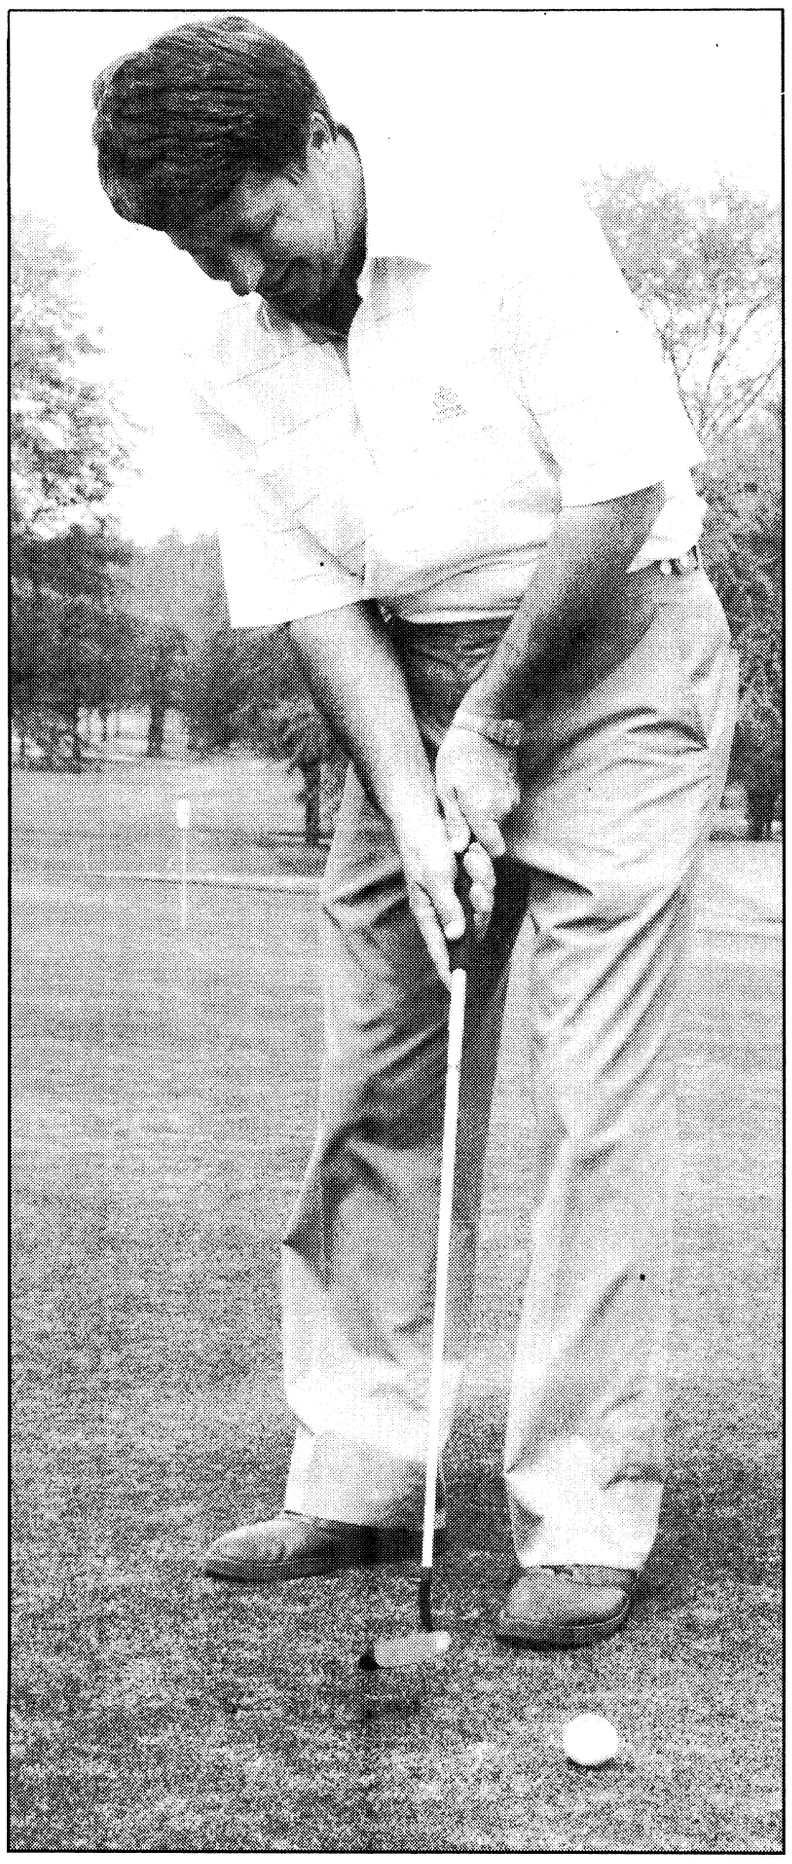
Fourth place went to Robert Cochran, Jim Young and Robert Kelley at +12. Joe Mattingly, Tom Mull and Frank Mobley finished up the top five with +11.

Closest-To-The-Hole awards went to Bob Knight on the 4th hole, Roger Hewitt on the 7th, Ron Martere on the 15th and Robi Kelley on the 17th.

The Dog Fight format is based on a point system with +1 for a bogey, +2 for par, +4 for a birdie and +8 for an eagle.

Each golfer is assigned a set amount of points to shoot for based on his handicap. The golfer then ends up with a score of plus or minus from the assigned points.

Then the two top shooters' scores for each team are added together for a final team score.



"We had a good turnout for the tournament," said George F. Cliff, the Follow Me Golf pro, "Seventy-two players showed up making a field of 24 three-man teams."

"It could have been even larger except for recent changes in the eligibility requirements," Cliff said.

"We now require players to have an established handicap to compete," he added. "This makes the tournaments more competitive and fair."

The next scheduled tournament is the 1989 Spring Handicap April 15-16.

For more information, call the Follow Me Golf Course at 687-1940.

USARSA cadets win honors in Columbus Heart Run

By Keith F. Johnson
U.S. Army School of Americas

Four Dominican Republic cadets from the U.S. Army School of the Americas' Infantry Officer Qualification Course won trophies for outstanding finishes in the Heart Run in Columbus March 11.

Yunis Tejada, Pascual Gonzalez, Francisco Bloise and Andres Pacheco finished second through fifth, respectively, in the 21-24 male age group in the 10-kilometer race. More than 500 runners of all ages participated in the race sponsored by the Columbus Heart Association.

Eight other cadets ran in the event, as well as Bravo company personnel Lazaro Ramirez, Spec. Secundino Rosario, administration specialist, and Silvio Hernandora, supply specialist.

"I feel proud the school gave me the opportunity to participate, and I am happy I reached my goal of finishing the race," Pacheco said reflecting a sentiment shared by his countrymen.

For many of the cadets, this was only their second race. Eighteen cadets ran recently in Fort Benning's Infantry Half-marathon.

"There seemed to be more camaraderie in the race at Fort Benning," Tejada said. "The whole crowd cheered for everybody who finished that race, not just the winners."

In addition to participating in local marathons, the 96 cadets in the course will also be taking trips to Walt Disney World, Panama City, Fla., Atlanta and Six Flags Over Georgia during their 21 weeks at USARSA.

"They need to be exposed to our way of living," said Ramirez. "I try very hard to explain to them on a daily basis the differences between their culture and our culture, why some things are different here and why we live the way we do — not necessarily better, just different."

Although the cadets lacked competitive running experience, they felt prepared to race due to a running exercise performed around a swimming pool at their Armed Forces Academy "Batalla de las Carreras," Dominican Republic public.

During their senior year, the cadets come to USARSA for the Infantry Officer Qualification Course. The course is designed to qualify senior cadets for duty as infantry officers or for service in other branches upon completion of additional specialized branch training. Emphasis is placed on squad, platoon and company tactics; small unit patrolling operations and employment of basic infantry weapons; and internal defense and development.

Other cadets who ran were Rafael Nunez, Eddy Pena, Juan Solano, Rafael Alvarez, Laniel Martinez, Freddy Pena, Dario Hildalgo and Antonio Valdez.

Bass club holds contest

By Pat Bennett
Fort Benning Bass Club

The Bass Club at Fort Benning held its March Fish-Off at Lake Seminole the March 18 and 19. The first-place winners were Willie Goble and George Mendez with a combined weight of 26 pounds, 5 ounces. Second place went to the first-day leaders, Skip Ray and Greg Wikoff. Third place went to Ben McGuire and Pat Bennett with a combined weight of 20 pounds, 6 ounces. Will Marsh won big fish honors with a 9-pound, 2-ounce catch.

In April, the club will send its top six fishermen to the Georgia State Top Six Classic to be held on Lake Clark Hill. The top six members are Bob Billman, Willie Goble, Skip Ray, Don Kimbrough, Brenda Carter (the first women to make the Benning top six) and Pat Bennett.

The April tournament is scheduled April 22 on Lake Walter F. George out of Hatchechubee landing.

For more information, call John Campbell at 568-4829.

Folk musicians to perform at YA

Child Development Services

Carol Stober, folk music artist, will perform with her daughter Jackie and six-year-old granddaughter, Rebekah, at Youth Activities, building 1056, April 3 at 7 p.m. The concert is sponsored by Child Development Services and presented free to the community as part of The Month of the Military Child activities.

The group will perform with autoharp, guitar, bass, mandolin, and dulcimer. They encourage audience participation with sing-a-long songs.

Stober is an Alabama artist-in-residence from Talladega. She is an education graduate from the University of Maryland and has taught in public and private schools. She has toured the Midwest and Southeast and was on the staff of Old Town School of Folk Music in Chicago.

With her daughter Jackie, she has recorded two albums, "Patchwork" and "Country Sampler," featuring a variety of mountain music and country flavor originals.

Her goal is to develop in young people an awareness and appreciation for our heritage of the past through listening, imitating and participating in singing activities with a folk music approach.

PERSCOM explains mobile army, relocation assistance

By J.C. Bean
Army News Service

With more than 40 percent of its force located outside the continental United States, the Army must relocate many soldiers throughout the year as their duty assignments come to an end.

It's an ongoing process that appears never to stop.

Have you ever asked yourself why this constant rotation occurs? Why it's necessary? Why do some soldiers receive "pinpoint" assignments and others don't? How does the lack of such an assignment affect sponsorship and relocation assistance?

Officials at the U.S. Total Army Personnel Command, also known as PERSCOM, in Alexandria, Va., have an answer to these and other related questions.

"Not everyone goes overseas at the same time, nor do they stay overseas for the same length of time," says MSgt. Philip Parkinson, a senior staff noncommissioned officer in the enlisted personnel management directorate.

"So, soldiers are steadily returning from overseas tours.

"Those stationed overseas have what we call a DEROS — date of estimated return from overseas," Parkinson explains.

"That means they have a set tour length that depends on where they're stationed, whether they're married or single and if they have their family members with them."

Basically, hardship tours last one year. Some tours are two years in duration.

The bulk of them — like the soldiers in U.S. Army-Europe — will be there for three years, if married and have their families with them.

"We refer to the continental United States as the sustaining base," Parkinson says, "from which we draw our replacements for overseas returnees."

According to Parkinson, most enlisted soldiers don't move from one CONUS duty station to another in CONUS, but stay in one location until it's their turn to go overseas, where they serve a stipulated tour length.

A problem occurs when there's no pinpoint assignment, according to Col. Jim Weiskopf, an assignments division chief also with PERSCOM.

"It would be ideal," Weiskopf says, "if we could tell the enlisted soldiers the exact units to which they're going.

"Then someone in that unit could say, 'Ah hah, so and so is coming to my unit. We'll appoint a sponsor. We'll get the soldier on the phone. We'll write a letter, and everything will be fine.' But, it doesn't work that way for several reasons.

"Units are required to report monthly their readiness status of equipment and personnel, most of whom are enlisted soldiers.

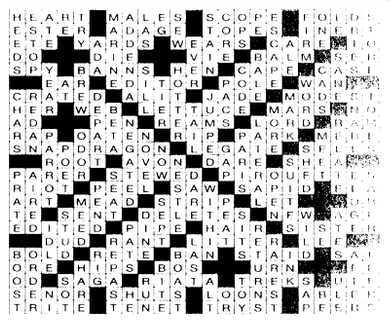
"Because commanders want the flexibility of assigning soldiers where they need them for readiness purposes," he continued, " we can't pinpoint our enlisted soldiers in grades E-1 through E-4 to specific units, say in Germany, for example.

"So, we assign them to a replacement unit there.

"That way, commanders can assign their soldiers within their commands where they need them the most".

Once the specific geographic area and unit of assignment is known, the overseas commander confirms this information with the soldier's personnel officer in CONUS.

If family is involved, the soldier is given housing availability information for that geographic area, Weiskopf explains.



"Ironically, it's the E-1 through E-4 soldiers who most need the sponsorship and relocation assistance.

They're the ones unfamiliar with the area, who don't know all the local customs and so on.

"On the other hand, more senior NCOs can receive pinpoint assignments early in the process because its easier to forecast where they'll be needed," Weiskopf emphasizes.

In the meantime, Weiskopf says, personnel managers at PERSCOM continue to work with the relocation and sponsorship of people at the U.S. Army Community and Family Support Center, also located in Alexandria, to come up with ideas for new policies and programs to help resolve some of the problems associated with relocating soldiers around the Army.

Soldier earns status as super learner

Army News Service

An Army noncommissioned officer from Seneca Army Depot made the nation's 1989 honor roll of adult learners.

Staff Sgt. Alejandro Torres, a special weapons maintenance specialist at the New York installation, shares the honors of Outstanding Adult Learner with eight other persons chosen for their exceptional achievement and determination.

Army education officials point out that in just six years Torres has gone from a non-English-speaking, ninth-grade dropout to an associate-degree holder qualified for Officer Candidate School.

"I'm hooked on education," Torres said. "The more you learn, the more you want. Certainly, it begins with military education - basic and advanced courses and the like. But the role of civilian education can't be overlooked. It not only helps you with job skills but also helps you as an individual."

The Mexico native credits continuing education with his academic success.

In 1981, he had begun taking English at his first duty station, Fort Polk, La. By 1983, his basic-skills studies allowed him not just the chance to earn a general education development certificate (of high-school diploma value) but also entry into college studies off duty.

An assignment to Germany meant 50-to-70-hour work weeks, but Torres still found time for his off-duty college work.

By 1986, he had earned his associate degree, thereafter pursuing a bachelor's degree in business.

Today, the career soldier nearly has the four-year degree and now eagerly awaits the results of the March OCS selection board.

He and the other awardees received their awards at a national awards breakfast in Washington March 15.

His congressional representative presented the award to Torres. The breakfast was coordinated by the American Association for Adult and Continuing Education as part of observance of National Adult and Continuing Education Week, which was March 12-18.

Army education officials note that the annual awards program is conducted under auspices of more than 30 national associations and corporations.

This year's search for finalists in the judging included some 307 nominations from 41 states.

ARMY NEWS

First Steps needs volunteers

Social Work Services — Volunteers are still being recruited by Social Work Services for Martin Army Community Hospital's First Steps Program. First Steps is a parenting aide program whereby trained volunteers offer support and guidance to new, first-time parents.

Many first-time parents are young, with little child-rearing experience. Being connected with the military, they are often far from home. Therefore, the guidance and support family and friends offer to new parents are often not available. First Steps volunteers are working to fill that gap.

Many readers can recall being far from family and friends when their first child was born and how much it would have meant to have someone to call when they were unsure of what to do.

If you would like to be part of the First Steps training to be offered in early April, please call Karen Crowley, post volunteer coordinator, at 545-5602 as soon as possible.

Fisher-Price replaces foam piece on infant car seats

AAFES — Fisher-Price is replacing a foam piece found in two of its car seats. The company found that the piece, which is sandwiched between the car seat pad and the hard plastic shell, does not comply with federal flammability standards.

The car seats, Models 9100 and 9101, are both stocked at Army and Air Force exchanges. Only models manufactured before Jan. 26, 1989 are affected.

Exchange patrons who own one of the car seats can obtain a free replacement by contacting Fisher-Price. Customers should call the company toll free at 1-800-334-5439.

Fisher-Price officials stress that the car seat pad meets all flammability requirements. In addition, the crash worthiness of the seat is not affected. For that reason, company officials advise that consumers continue to use the seat while waiting for the replacement foam piece.

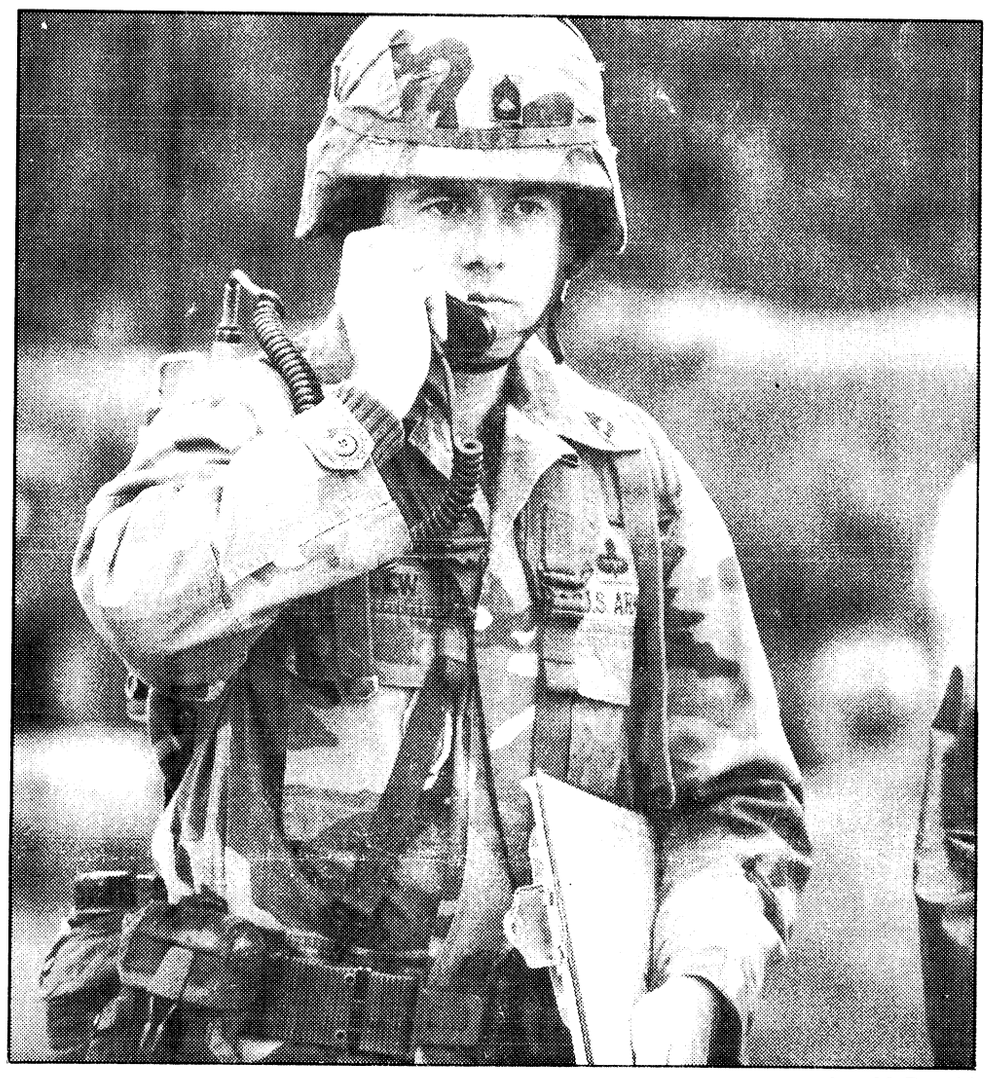
Numeral 1 takes hike

Obsolete — Since March 30 the Army stopped using the numeral one device except when used as part of a two digit number, according to a Department of the Army message. The numeral two will be used to depict the second award of the Air Medal, Multinational Force and Observers Medal, Overseas Service Ribbon and the Army Reserve components Overseas Training Ribbon. The bar ribbon device will depict the first award of these honors.

The NCO professional development ribbon (bar ribbon device) will denote attending the Primary Leadership Development Course. The number two will reflect completion of Basic Noncommissioned Officers Course.

U-Do-It closes for inventory

Monday and Tuesday — The U-Do-It Store and Self-Help Issue counter, Unit and Housing Support Branch, Directorate of Engineering and Housing, will close for semiannual inventory Monday and Tuesday. Normal operating hours will resume Wednesday.



Nameplates have arrived

Quarters residents — Quarters nameplates for residents who moved into quarters on or before March 6 may be picked up between 8 a.m. and 4 p.m. Monday through Friday at the Unit and Housing Support Branch, building 385.

Expired IDs cause confusion

Medical care denied — Expired military identification cards and improper enrollment in the Defense Enrollment Eligibility Reporting System have caused several military beneficiaries to be denied care at the PRIMUS Clinic. To ensure that you and your eligible family members are properly enrolled, call 1-800-538-9552. If not properly enrolled, visit the ID card issuing office in building 2638, Soldiers' Plaza, or call 545-4742.

1-29th puts on show with live-fire exercise

Ann McDonald

SFC Ken Belew, Co. B, 1st Bn., 11th Inf. Regt., radios commanders in the field at a CALFEX at Cactus Observation Point.

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

An M-1 Abrams whisks by leaving a trail of smoke, masking the Bradley Infantry Fighting Vehicle moving behind it. Then, almost in the blink of an eye, the vehicles disappear into the wood line concluding act one.

In the combined arms live-fire exercise conducted last week at Cactus Observation Point by 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, there are two acts conducted on two stages. Within those acts, the capabilities of the Army's most modern equipment are demonstrated to an audience of soldiers and civilians.

There are six CALFEX performances yearly at Fort Benning as part of the Infantry Officers Advanced Course. The exercises are designed to teach soon-to-be company commanders how to integrate a battle plan.

Bradley and Abrams tanks are the stars of the show, and weather permitting, Apaches and Air Force fighter planes make guest appearances. But, these vehicles can't move without operators and, the operators don't know where to go, or shoot if someone doesn't tell them.

That's where the fire support officer, SFC Ken Belew, Company B, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment enters the scene. His job compares to that of a director.

He walks behind the bleachers filled with people observing the CALFEX with a radio on his back and a clipboard in his hand. From there, Belew transmits numbers and call signs to the commanders who in turn tell the troops when to move and fire.

"I keep radio contact with the commanders and let them know exactly what the narrator is saying to the audience so they can cue their troops," he said.

In this case, Lt. Col. Robert Tesdahl, 1st Bn., 29th Inf. Regt. is the narrator telling the audience step-by-step what is happening on the simulated battlefield in front of them.

According Capt. Jeffrey Yaeger, Co. B, 1st Bn., 11th Inf. Regt., if Tesdahl gives a cue and Belew transmits it but the person on the other end misses it, there will be silence when the narrator says something should be exploding.

Yaeger explained that if it were a real battle, Belew would have his own vehicle and be in a closer proximity to the action so he could call in fire.

When the narrator is finished with his demonstration, Belew is done, too, but if it were real it would be much different, Yaeger said.

Women should be inspired by strength, others' examples

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

"It wasn't always easy, and it wasn't always fair, but women are getting somewhere," said a speaker at Marshall Auditorium recently.

The speaker wore evidence of that progress on each shoulder — she is a brigadier general in the U.S. Army.

Brig. Gen. Sherian G. Cadoria, deputy commanding general and director of mobilization and Operations, Total Army Personnel Command Alexandria, Va., made a brief stop at the Home of the Infantry to be the guest speaker at the Women's History Month celebration.

Cadoria said women should be inspired by the visions, strength and examples set by women in the past. Their endeavors made it easier for women today.

"They laid a strong foundation for the women of today," she said. "We need to display that same self confidence, so we can build on that foundation."

Society has culturally conditioned women to be dominated, and it's taking a long time to change it, she said.

"But, it is changing," Cadoria said, "and we must learn and appreciate those lessons from the past or we're condemned to repeat them."

She urged the men in the audience give their female counterparts the opportunity to succeed.

"Let women walk by your side," she said, "and, if necessary, push them ahead of you to seize those opportunities."

Cadoria said women are the masters of their fate.

"Use the abilities God gave you," she said. "Pace yourselves."

Cadoria's definition of pace is: P, for taking pride in oneself and her job; A, for attitude, be positive; C, character, competence, commitment, courage and candor; E, enthusiasm for excellence.

"Use successful women for role models," she said, "and look to yesterday for experience and to tomorrow with confidence and hope."

USARSA upgrades curriculum standards

By Keith Johnson
U.S. Army School of Americas

The Command & General Staff College course at the United States Army School of the Americas has been upgrading its curriculum to meet the standards set at the Fort Leavenworth course and to better fill the needs of the Latin American students.

"We have regionalized the course to fill the needs of each Latin American country, said Lt. Col. Julio C. Campos, Department of Command and Staff director. "We will continue to teach the same subjects as Fort Leavenworth but adapt them to focus on Latin America."

"As part of the regionalization of the course, we have increased ten-fold the time spent on matters related to low-intensity conflict since last year."

Blocks of instruction receiving added emphasis in the course include psychological operations, unconventional warfare, preparation of the battlefield and insurgency and counterinsurgency instruction, Campos added.

For the first time this year, the school faculty includes two visiting professors. Dr. Jose Z. Garcia from New Mexico State University, who teaches international political theory, and Dr. Richard A. Gorell from Kansas University, who teaches military history and social forces in Latin America, Campos said.

"Due to the support we have received from General (Maxwell) Thurman (Training and Doctrine Command commander), we are able to include visiting professors in our faculty. We are also receiving the best qualified and most experienced U.S. and Latin officers. These officers have experience as commanders at battalion and brigade level and can relate their experience in the unit to the instruction they give," Campos said.

According to Campos, only 50 percent of majors in the U.S. Army are selected to attend a resident C&GSC course. Upon graduation, they are in high demand for positions in high-level commands, such as SOUTHCOM. There are currently 46 students in the course at USARSA, 14 from the United States.

Campos added that the Latin American officers here are the "cream of the crop" in their country and are their country's future generals.

It is this blend of talent in a unique situation that Campos considers the most important aspect of the course.

OPINION

VARIOUS VOICES: What did you think of the movie "Your Mother Wears Combat Boots"?

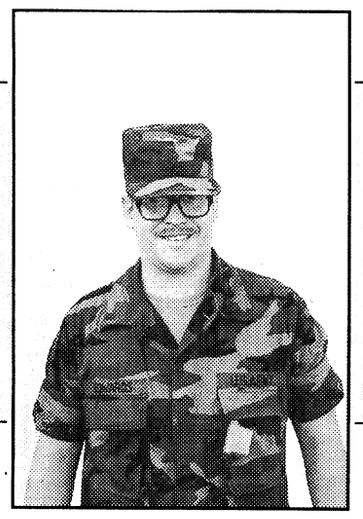
Sgt. Floyd Wilson, HHC, 1st Bn., 58th Inf., 197th Inf. Bde. — "I enjoyed it. I thought it was hilarious because it was so unrealistic."



Venita Daniels, DPTM — "I thought it was cute. I enjoyed seeing Fort Benning in a movie."

Spec. Kent Smoaks, 598th Maint. Co., 67th Maint. Bn., 36th Eng. Grp. — "I think it was along the same lines as 'Private Benjamin.' The movie was entertaining. I think it gave Fort Benning some good exposure."

Capt. Douglas Fenton, Co. A, 1st Bn., 507th PIR — "I thought it was pretty corny. It was a typical Monday night movie."

Spec. Frederick Edwards Edwards, 598th Maint. Co., 67th Maint. Bn., 36th Eng. Grp. — "I thought it was outstanding. I think it showed Army life in a good way."

Kathy Aikens, Anthony's Pizza — "I thought it was entertaining, but it made the Army look like camp."

'No business like show business'

By Clyde Snively
USAIC Public Affairs Office

There's a saying, "There's no business like show business."

For many of the soldiers tasked to support the NBC movie, "Your Mother Wears Combat Boots," they want no more show business. For them, there's no business like Army business.

For four weeks,they found out what "hurry up and wait" really meant. They went from long periods of heightened boredom to moments of hyperactivity.

One day, they could be freezing on the tarmac of Lawson Army Airfield, the next, sweltering in the heat of Eubanks Field, waiting for the director to call them to take their places.

Even when they were doing something, they were often doing nothing, since many of the scenes called for them to be bleacher sitters. Then the long awaited words, "cut and print," became music to their ears.

'Did they say the "P" word?' became the question of the moment as the soldier actors went through the same sequence over and over again until the director was satisfied he had what he wanted.

Was it worth it? Was the movie any good?

Answers ranged from this week's avant garde word of "hokey" to "tremendous." I noted it was all in direct proportion to the amount of air time the person got.

If the soldier "star" never got any air time once the movie came out, the movie was "hokey," if it was a passing shot, the movie was "okay" and for those who were recognizable without a program, the movie was, "the best thing Hollywood ever did."

Those who got no or just minimal visibility (they needed to point themselves out to their mothers) critiqued the movie with as, "Whoever heard of airborne soldiers doing obstacle courses," or, "We don't do KP in airborne."

They also mention the platoon's run on some distant planet with the black hat riding instead of running and using a bull horn instead of his lungs as being totally wrong.

The truck trip from Fort Jackson to Fort Benning was considered "hokey" as was the phrase "O.T.E at 10,000 feet."

One sergeant questioned the use of a 400 pound, 20-year vet who is still a specialist. Another soldier wanted to know how Brenda (Barbara Eden) happened to have a framed picture of her husband and son in her wall locker considering she'd arrived at airborne school with someone else's gear.

One of the female soldiers who was in the movie said it was hard work but worth it. "It was like giving birth, worse pain in the world. But later, as you look at your baby, and this movie was certainly our child, you forget all the pains of labor."

Emma, who watched the movie with me, was incredulous that Brenda was able to drag her duffle bag around post without any soldiers offering to help her. "They won't even talk to her? What's the matter with those soldiers anyway?"

I guess that's why she liked the bar scene. At least the good old boys proved they were red-blooded, American men by showing Barbara some attention.

So what did the real airborne troops, the folks in the 507th, think of the movie? For the most part, they thought it showed them in a good light. Too bad the script was, what was that word, "hokey."

The part I liked about the movie was the part before everyone arrived. I had weekend duty when Anson Williams came to town to scout locations.

I was his guide. I enjoyed watching people giving him the eye, trying to decide if that really was Potsie of "Happy Days" fame here in Columbus, Ga.

Barbara Eden proved to be a real down-to-earth person, as she mingled with the on-lookers and signed autographs or posed for pictures.

She even had her sister take pictures of her with a bunch of lieutenants visiting from Fort Rucker. She promised to send them autographed pictures once the film was developed.

"So, the cast of characters were real humans, but did I like the movie," you ask. Actually I thought it was kind of hokey.

NCO-ER holds up, proves its worth

By John M. Shalikashvili
Army News Service

As a senior rater or reviewer of noncommissioned officers in my unit, I was skeptical of the Noncommissioned Officer Evaluation Report. Now that I've sat on a Department of the Army centralized selection board, I'm convinced of its worth.

From board president to panel members, the feedback was consistent. The new NCO-ER is a winner. The recently adjourned command sergeant major/sergeant major selection board was the first real measure of the year-old evaluation report.

More than half of the 10,000 records reviewed included at least one NCO evaluation report. Some had two. Where present, the NCO-ER served its intended purpose very well. It enabled board members to select the very best for appointment to command sergeant major or promotion to sergeant major. The NCO-ER for promotion selection if not its only purpose, it's no doubt the most important to any NCO whose records are going before a selection board. Panel members were pleased to see notations of counseling, the positive comments on values, and the short "to the point" bullets telling what each NCO had accomplished against specific job standards.

"With the scores gone, we had to pay more attention to the words. The bullets become all important, especially for 'excellence' and 'needs improvement' ratings," commented a command sergeant major whose panel reviewed nearly 1,500 records of NCOs in the zones of consideration.

A word about inflation: Very few reports had all the "excellence' blocks checked. That's the good news on inflation. The bad news is that we still have problems matching the "excellence" ratings that we do have with bullets that clearly identify excellence rather than just success.

Those reports where all the "excellence" blocks are checked and the bullets reflect "success," don't fool board members. On the contrary, the report reflecting "success" in all areas with solid, hard hitting, specific bullets often carries more weight.

With only one or two NCO-ERs in each file, board members were careful to weigh the new form as an extension of the former enlisted evaluation reports. Panels agreed that where patterns or trends of improving or worsening performance were indicated on the old EER, these patterns were confirmed by the new NCO-ER.

Two other points panel members agreed on were the importance of the duty description and the senior rater's role.

It's no secret that NCOs being promoted are those who do well in leadership positions and other tough jobs. The duty description is the key. When properly completed, the combination of daily duties, areas of special emphasis and appointed duties give the board a good idea of how tough the job is.

The senior rater focuses on potential. That's a key area for a selection board. When the senior rater categorizes an NCO's potential for promotion as "superior," that NCO is normally "fully qualified" for promotion in the eyes of the board.

That's not to say that all "fully qualified" NCOs are promoted or appointed to command sergeant major. The actual numbers depend on allocations for each MOS or career management field as determined by Department of the Army.

Appointment to command sergeant major or promotion to sergeant major is for the very best. The new NCO-ER is already proving to be right on the mark in helping boards identify the very best.

NCO wives share military experience

By Shawn Bryson
Bayonet staff writer

Four wives of high ranking Fort Benning noncommissioned officers recently volunteered their time to help several wives of future infantry company commanders.

Laurie Bolt, Jo-Ann Bowles, Wanda Jones and Terry Morgan related many of their Army experiences to participants of the Wives' Leadership Seminar March 22 at The School Brigade Chapel .

The seminar, which primarily focuses on wives of Infantry Officers Advanced Course students, is a five-day program designed to improve the readiness and retention of young infantry officers by better educating their spouses about the Army's goals.

Called "Bridging the Gap," the segment the NCO wives paneled was an hour-long, question-and-answer session aimed at showing the wives of future company commanders how to develop a comfortable family atmosphere between themselves and the families of their husbands' commands.

The spirit that enables them to volunteer to help the seminar wives is the same spirit needed to bridge the gap between officers' wives and wives of the enlisted soldiers, according to the NCO wives.

"There is such a separation in the Army between officers and enlisted soldiers, and it usually carries over the wives," said Jones, wife of CSM John W. Jones, 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment. Enlisted wives are almost always conscious of that, she said.

"They (the enlisted wives) feel intimidated by the title 'The Commander's Wife,' said Morgan, wife of 1st Sgt. William Morgan, Co. E, 1st Bn., 29th Inf. Regt. "They are sometimes even in intimidated by my title, 'The First Sergeant's Wife.'"

The key to overcoming the natural intimidation is communication, according to Bowles, wife of CSM Jimmie Bowles, 1st Bn., 29th Inf. Regt. "Learning to communicate with each other is the only way to bridge the gap," she said.

Once a communication system has been established, compromises must be made to further develop the relationship between the families of a unit, according to Bolt wife of SFC Carey Bolt, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 29th Infantry Regiment.

With years of experience in helping organize unit family activities, the four NCO wives also provided some insight on making those activities, such as socials, auctions and bake sales, a success.

When the session was over, the NCO wives stayed around to answer one-on-one questions from seminar participants.

"I think what we are doing here will be very helpful not only to these women, but to the families they'll be associated with. My husband and I have had leaders who helped us along the way and in return, we like to help whenever we can," Bowles said.

Wives' club donates car seats to MACH

MEDDAC-DENTAC Officers' Wives Club

The MEDDAC-DENTAC Officers' Wives' Club presented 10 car seats to the Community Health Nurse at Martin Army Community Hospital recently.

The car seats are an addition to the Car Seat Loan Program already in effect at the hospital, according to Lt. Col. Hazel I. Ivey who accepted the car seats.

The program is designed to teach car seat safety to new parents and the importance of car seat use, she said.

The seats are loaned for 60 days. However, according to Ivey, if at the end of this period, there is a need to keep the seat longer, the contract may be extended to 90 days.

Ivey said there is a great need for car seats. The limited number of car seats the hospital has to loan to patients now are in constant use and in short supply. Therefore, eligibility is based on need.

For more information, call Ivey at 545-4041 or 4603.

Course

"This is an excellent opportunity for the students to nurture relationships," Campos said. "This is the only U.S. institution that has officers from so many different countries together for one or more years. Undoubtedly, later on in their careers, they will see each other again at a much higher rank."

The course also offers a good opportunity for the students to experience U.S. culture, according to Campos.

Trips to Washington, D.C. and Atlanta as well as east coast military installations such as West Point, Annapolis, Fort Bragg, N.C., Fort Stewart, Ga., and Red Stone Arsenal and Fort McClellan in Alabama are included in the course so the students can observe the daily operations of units such as the 4th Psychological Operations Group, the 82nd Airborne Division, and the 18th Airborne Corps at Fort Bragg.

In addition, each year the students participate in a symposium on strategic studies, at the University of Miami, hosted by Ambassador Ambler Moss, dean of the college of international studies. The symposium deals with insurgency, economics and the war against drug-trafficking in Latin America.
