Recycling hits lofty heights

By Tina Cook
Energy Branch

Recycling dollars are being scattered in the attics of office buildings in the 2600 block of Soldiers' Plaza.

The dollars are in the form of insulation, and the funds are available through the efforts of those participating in the recycling program.

Recycling is not a new idea at Fort Benning. More than 45 buildings currently participate in the white paper recycle program, saving not only valuable space at the post's sanitary landfill, but also generating money for the installation.

The largest percentage of revenue generated from the recycle program comes from brass, copper and other high-cost metals turned in to Defense Reutilization and Marketing Office. These and other scrap metals are sorted, saved and turned in by military units, the Directorate of Logistics, contractors, the Directorate of Engineering and Housing and other activities.

This is done in lieu of scrap being dumped in the sanitary landfill.

According to DRMO, no salable property, refuse or trash with use or sales potential should be disposed of by dumping in the landfill.

All proceeds from sales conducted through the DRMO are returned to Fort Benning and are used to cover operating costs of the recycle program and for safety, energy, environment and Morale Support projects.

Many of the World War II vintage buildings in Soldiers' Plaza do not have attic insulation.

Since most of the offices are cooled by FM receiver-controlled window units and heated with gas furnaces, the absence of insulation significantly decreases the effectiveness of the cooling units and allows valuable heat to escape.

The project entails modifications to 42 buildings covering 91,300 square feet.

The contractor will use a combination of blown fiberglass and batt insulation about six to eight inches thick, resulting in an R-value of 25.

R-value is a technical term for resistance to heat flow. The R-value is determined by the thickness of the insulation.

These numbers indicate the resistance of insulation material to winter heat loss or summer heat gain. The higher the R number, the more effective the insulating capability.

Estimates are that this insulation may save up to $15,256 in energy costs every year.

Recycling certainly has its rewards, and for the personnel working in the 2600 block of Soldiers' Plaza, it's a pretty cool idea.

If you have any questions regarding this or other energy-related subjects, call the Energy Management Branch, 545-4652 or 545-SWAT.

Crime Stoppers searches for robbers

Columbus Crime Stoppers

Columbus Crime Stoppers and the Columbus Police Department are looking for the two white males responsible for the armed robbery of a Columbus drug store and possibly responsible for the armed robbery of a second store.

On Aug. 4 around 7:10 p.m., two white males entered the Revco Discount Drug Store located at 3716 Gentian Blvd., and robbed the pharmacy at gunpoint of a large quantity of Schedule 2 drugs.

According to the victim and witnesses, one suspect walked behind the restricted drug counter toward the pharmacist and pulled out a small blue steel revolver and a brown paper bag and demanded he fill the bag with Schedule 2 drugs.

After the bag was filled, the suspect left the store with a second white male who had been standing watch at the front of the counter. They drove away in a blue 1973 Ford F-210 pick-up truck.

The truck was believed to have been stolen.

One white male suspect has been identified as 39-year-old Jimmy Earl Snell. Warrants have been issued for his arrest.

The second suspect has not been identified and no description has been given.

On Aug. 21 a second armed robbery by two white males took place at Eckard Drugs, located at 3205 Manchester Expressway (Peachtree Mall), around 8 p.m.

According to the victim, the suspects entered the store through the rear entrance. One suspect came behind the drug counter to the restricted area. He pulled out a small blue steel revolver and pointed it at the pharmacist who was talking on the phone.

The suspect demanded all Schedule 2 drugs to be put into a brown paper bag. The second suspect stood guard at the front of the counter. The suspects left the store through the rear entrance. No vehicle was seen.

Suspects are described as:

Suspect number one — White male, 40 to 45 years old, 5 feet 10 inches to 6 feet tall, slender build, bad complexion, sandy medium length hair, wearing dark colored pants, faded shirt and armed with a small blue steel revolver.

Suspect number two — white male, 30 to 35 years old, 5 feet 8 inches tall, heavy set, black hair, wearing a yellow short sleeve T-shirt and jeans.

Anyone having any information concerning these cases should call Columbus Crime Stoppers at 571-5858.

If your information leads to the arrest and indictment of these person(s), you could receive up to $1,000 in reward money.

Columbus Crime Stoppers also pays for information on other criminal activities, wanted fugitives and stolen property.

The Crime Stoppers phone lines are open from 10 a.m. to 10 p.m. Monday through Friday. Crime Stoppers serves the Columbus, Fort Benning, Phenix City and Russell County areas.

Snazzy ads may not live up to expectations

By Shawn Bryson
Bayonet staff writer

Many people are attracted to newspaper, magazine and television "Earn Money at Home" advertisements and wonder if they are just too good to be true.

The ads offer jazzy, get-rich-quick schemes designed to take advantage of people who have family obligations or physical handicaps that prevent them from working outside the home.

Most of these schemes have a common denominator — anyone interested must buy something before starting work.

People who answer ads offering huge profits for work-at-home projects may lose money rather than make money.

In many cases, those who pay for information about making money at home get very little information.

The information they receive usually instructs them to send money for more information or for materials.

Stuffing and addressing envelopes, doing seamstress work, raising animals and clipping newspapers are a few examples of not-so-profitable work-at-home business opportunities.

Although not all of these kinds of schemes are rip-offs, it would be wise to keep in mind a common rule — if it sounds too good to be true, it probably is.

Some home-work scheme promoters will:

- Never offer regular salaried employment.
- Promise huge profits and big part-time earnings.
- Use personal testimonials but never identify the person, preventing any investigation attempts by skeptics.
- Require money for instruction or merchandise before explaining how the plan operates.
- Assure guaranteed markets and a huge demand for the work.
- Claim that no experience is necessary.
- Take a person's money and give him little or nothing in return.

The safest way to deal with home-work schemes is to investigate before investing.

It is usually a warning sign when a worker must buy something to start the program.

Those who invest in a home-work scheme might well be perpetrating a fraud by selling the program to others and, therefore, may risk investigation by postal authorities.

For more information about work-at-home schemes, call the Better Business Bureau of west Georgia and east Alabama at 324-0712.

Drug

Casteel said the skills include demolitions, operation of the squad automatic weapon, land navigation and patrolling.

"The use of small-team tactics in a combat environment is the best way to sum it up," he said.

Essentially, DEA wants it's agents to learn everything ranger students learn.

"But, we are by no means trying to turn our policemen into soldiers," Casteel said. "And, we don't think sleep deprivation is necessary. We want to their minds tested not their bodies."

"However," Casteel quickly added, "it doesn't mean that we don't expect them to be in good physical shape. They have to pass a PT test and score well or they wouldn't be allowed to come to the course. We take only the elite."

Maj. Karl Horst, training officer, Ranger Training Brigade, said they took the requirements, tailored a program and presented it to the DEA. Once the okay was given, the instructors were hand picked based on their technical and tactical expertise and experience.

"All of the instructors have experience in a ranger battalion and most have combat experience," he said.

One of the instructors for the basic course, Staff Sgt. Mannifred Yates, said he feels really good about training the agents.

"My initial reaction was, 'it's about time,'" he said. "Although they are experts in their field, we have skills necessary to help them be more effective."

Yates said the most important thing the instructors are teaching the agents is to work as a team. The agents are used to working alone, and although they will be doing that part of the time, they must know how to train someone else.

One of Yate's students, an agent who spent three years on the streets of Miami, said the training was excellent.

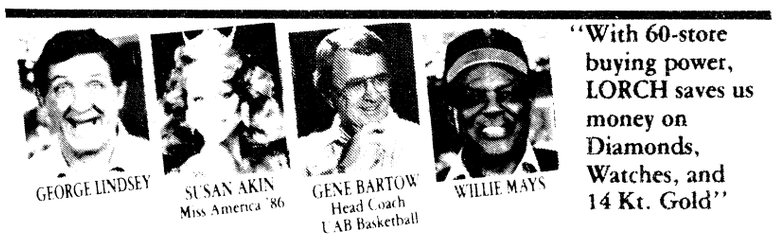
"I've never had anything to do with the military, so all the things I'm learning here will make me much more effective once I get there," he said.

Because he already is fluent in Spanish, he will be sent right to South America. His Spanish background is part of the reason he wanted to go, he said. The other is because he said he felt he would be much more effective there than Miami.

Another agent, an ex-Marine and a Ranger School graduate volunteered for the mission so he would have more variety.

He added that he found all the instructors very bright and knowledgeable in those fields.

It seems as if the agents and instructors gained respect for one another during their time together.



Yates said he has only one regret.

"The agents are using their new skills in a real-world mission," Yates said, "and the Rangers can't be a part of it."

Benning marksmen on target in Puerto Rico

By Sally Roberts
U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit

Marksmen from the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit shot their way to top honors at the fifth Championship of the Americas in Puerto Rico.

Capt. John McNally won the gold in the individual rapid-fire pistol competition and led the U.S. rapid fire team to victory, edging out teams from Colombia and Brazil.

Master Sgt. Erich Buljung took top honors in the air pistol event, less than one-half point ahead of the second place finisher from Colombia.

In the center fire pistol event, Buljung stole the top seat from the same Colombian competitor by a greater margin of nine points. He also won a silver medal in the free pistol event.

In the free pistol team event, SSgt. Jimmie McCoy joined Buljung and a civilian competitor of the winning U.S. team. The team solidly out-scored the second place team from Canada by 40 points.

Pvt. Ed Suarez and Buljung were on the winning U.S. team in the air pistol and center fire pistol events.

Buljung and McNally were members of the winning standard pistol team.

In the small-bore rifle events, Capt. Glenn Dubis won the gold in the kneeling and silver medals in the standing and 3 x 40 portions of the event.

Dubis and Spec. Brad Carnes were on the winning U.S. team in this event, one point ahead of the second-place team from Cuba.

These soldiers faced more than 200 competitors from North, Central and South America and the Caribbean nations.

Meanwhile, soldiers from USAMU's shotgun section returned from the World Moving Target Championships in Montacatini, Italy with a silver and bronze medal.

PFC Cindy Raahauge earned a silver medal as a member of the second-place U.S. Women's Skeet team.

Pvt. Shane Schwickerath, who only recently joined AMU, made the U.S. team during trials here in June. He earned a bronze medal in Italy, competing in his first World Championship as a member of the Junior Men's Skeet Team.

Marksmen set sights for Santaigo, Chile

By Sally Roberts
U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit

Shooters from the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit at Fort Benning will take aim next week for the CISM match in Santaigo, Chile.

The 13 Army rifle and pistol shooters from Fort Benning are joined by three U.S. Marines and one member of the U.S. Air Force in the competition.

CISM is a French acronym for the International Military Sports Council that organizes annual matches in up to 22 sporting events. Military competitors from the 82-nation membership are invited each year to promote understanding, respect and friendship through sport.

The matches begin with the opening ceremony Monday and will conclude Saturday. The soldiers will return to Fort Benning Oct. 2.

Shooters need protection to prevent hearing loss

By Aaron Pass
PM Editorial Service

It holds that the most common word in a veteran shooter's vocabulary is "Huh?"

Shooting firearms without having protection for your ears will eventually cause hearing loss. Repeated exposure to sounds above 100 decibels damages the sensitive "sound receptor" cells of the inner ear. All firearms exceed this decibel level.

The .308 Winchester, a popular deer caliber, sounds off at 160 db. Shotguns of 20, 16 and 12 gauge emit noise in the 130- to 140-db range. Even the pip-squeak .410 shotgun and .22 rimfire rifles are in the potentially damaging 120-db range.

In theory, even one occurrence of any loud noise of 130 db or more causes some damage. Repeated exposure to damaging sound levels causes the most serious problems.

Shooters who fire frequently, in time, suffer tinnitus (a constant ringing in the ears) and irreversible hearing loss.

It does not have to be this way. Effective hearing protection is cheap and readily available. Cheapest are the disposable foam earplugs at about a quarter a pair, found at most firing ranges and gun shops. They give about a 30-db sound reduction and are adequate for occasional, limited shooting sessions.

It's best to keep several pairs of these in your shooting kit and vehicle. Remember, too, bystanders and onlookers can suffer ear damage so offer them protection.

Next in protection are various nondisposable earplugs. These cost from $6 to $12 and offer more sound reduction than the disposables.

Even better sound protection and comfort are achieved by custom-molded earplugs. A fluid mixture of silicone is poured into the ear and allowed to "set" for a custom fit. This process costs (15 to $25, and for serious shooters is well worth it.

Earmuff-type protectors offer the most sound protection. A set costs $20 to $40.

Unfortunately, many people do not start taking care of their ears until they have already caused hearing damage.

REDEYE

Air Defense Artillery Team shows off explosive skills

By Willie Hay
197th Infantry Bde

Two soldiers leap from a Bradley infantry fighting vehicle and scramble to a fighting position in the field.

One of the soldiers hefts a Redeye missile to his shoulder, while the other maintains radio contact with his section sergeant and uses a pair of binoculars to identify enemy aircraft flying over their position.

When the pair detects a metal flare — a Ballistic Aerial Target System simulating a low-flying enemy plane — the gunner launches the Redeye, which travels at speeds up to Mach 1 (the speed of sound) and detonates on its target.

The demonstration was part of the U.S. Army Infantry Center's Combined Arms Live-Fire Exercise at Cactus Observation Point.

It was an operation designed to show visiting dignitaries, infantry officer basic candidates, initial entry trainees and other spectators the capabilities of infantry squads, tactical vehicles and weaponry.

The Redeye soldiers make up one of 16 two-man teams assigned to the Air Defense Artillery Platoon, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 197th Infantry Brigade. According to 1st Lt. Thomas Thornton, platoon leader, the Redeye/Stringer missilemen are the only air defense artillery soldiers at Fort Benning.

"The Redeye Platoon is divided into four sections. Its mission is to provide the entire air defense umbrella for the brigade's four maneuver units," Thornton said.

"Each team consists of a team chief and a gunner, who operate interchangeably. The team chief's job is communication with his supervisor, identifying enemy aircraft and signaling the gunner to fire on the target.

> All U.S. aircraft transmit on one code, all NATO aircraft identify themselves on another code and enemy aircraft use still another.

The gunner also searches and scans for unfriendly aircraft and makes the final decision on whether or not to fire the missile."

According to Thornton, the Redeye is a 29-pound, shoulder-fired weapon encased in a fiberglass launcher equipped with a carrying strap and sight that also serves as a carrying case.

The term "Redeye" refers to the infrared sensor in the missile's nose that enables it to locate the source of heat from aircraft passing overhead, lock onto that heat source and engage the target.

"The soldiers in my platoon are 16-Sierras, trained to operate both the Redeye and Stinger portable antiaircraft missiles," Thornton said. "That's because the Army is gradually replacing its stocks of Redeyes with the more versatile Stinger.

"The Redeye is the older system, dating back to the mid-1960s and can only engage targets moving across your position or away from your position," he said.

"The Stinger, on the other hand, can engage targets head-on and uses an IFF — identification of friend and foe — computer to 'interrogate' approaching aircraft.

"All U.S. aircraft transmit on one code, all NATO aircraft identify themselves on another code and enemy aircraft use still another. The IFF picks up the aircraft's code and signals the gunner which of the three categories the aircraft falls into through a series of beeps."

Until the Army retires the Redeye, the 16S Soldiers will continue to train on that system as well as the Stinger.

Because of the Redeye's $32,000 price tag, the soldiers are not required to fire it to remain proficient in their MOS, according to Thornton.

"My soldiers qualify four times a year on a moving target simulator at Fort Stewart, Ga., and are required to participate once a year in a live-fire event," he said.

"However, they train regularly on both missiles systems and receive frequent classes on aircraft recognition."

Although the Redeye takes one step closer to becoming obsolete every time it's fired, the missilemen of the 197th are proud of their unique status in the infantry brigade.

"You could probably show almost anyone how to fire the Redeye or the Stinger, but there's a lot more to our MOS than that," said Spec. Alden Ickes.

"It takes a lot of training to perform the seven checks for serviceability on the Redeye and the 13 checks on the Stinger. And, especially with the Redeye, you've got to be sure you've properly identified your target before you launch the missile."

Willie Hay

Sgt. Jose Sepulveda, Redeye team chief, points to a passing Ballistic Aerial Target simulator as gunner, Pfc. David Houston aims the portable anti-aircraft missile.

4-41st evaluates soldiers' job skills

By Aurelio Feliberty
197th Infantry Brigade

The 4th Battalion, 41st Field Artillery, recently participated in a battalion Standard External Evaluation.

"This evaluation tests our knowledge of our MOS and common soldiers tasks to see how proficient we would be in combat," said Sgt. Brooks Cunningham.

"This exercise gives the us the opportunity to show the evaluators we know our job.

"Although we're graded on many tasks, probably the most important is our coordinating abilities with the Fire Direction Center and Forward Observers."

"Periodically, graders come to watch and ask the soldiers questions concerning their common tasks," said Spec. Eliseo Arambulo.

"This type of training is excellent because the crew members become more proficient in their duties, while increasing their speed at performing them," said Spec. Reginald Oliver.

NOW'S YOUR CHANCE TO LET THE ARMY KNOW WHAT YOU WANT TO DO.

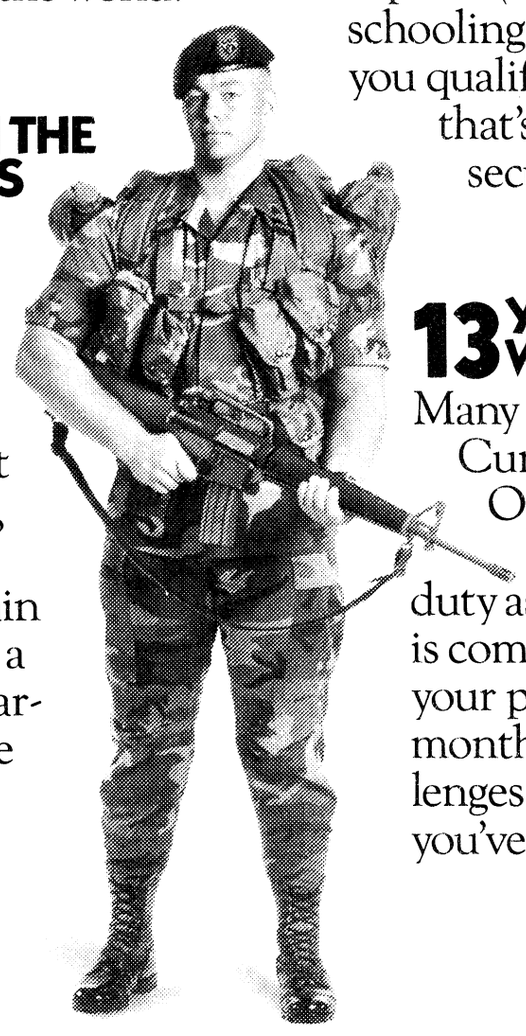
1 YOU CAN CHANGE YOUR MOS. There are hundreds of new MOS's to choose from under the Army Training Reenlistment Option. Or, you may be able to reenlist with the same MOS, for airborne training.

2 YOU CAN STAY WITH YOUR PRESENT REGIMENT.
Under the Regiment of Choice Option, you can reenlist and stay with your present regiment, or try a different one. If you're not presently in a regiment, you may be able to get into one. This option lets you make long-range plans, because you'll know where your regiment will be located.

3 YOU CAN GO TO BERLIN.
If you want to be on the front line of freedom, you may be able to reenlist under the Berlin Brigade Option. It isn't an easy duty, but it is an important one. The Berlin Brigade symbolizes our country's commitment to peace in Europe.

4 YOU CAN JOIN THE "BIG RED ONE."
Under the Combat Arms Unit of Choice Option, you could reenlist to become part of the "Big Red One," or any one of a number of the Army's best units. You don't have to be in a combat unit now, and most of these units have vacancies in almost every MOS.

5 YOU CAN SEE MORE OF AMERICA.
With the CONUS to CONUS Option, you can reenlist to relocate in a different part of the United States. Naturally, it all depends on whether your MOS is needed at your desired location.



6 YOU CAN LEARN A HIGH-TECH SKILL. Under the USAISC Option, you may qualify for the U.S. Army Information Systems Command. There, you can learn high-tech skills like radio teletype operation or satellite communications repair. There are over 140 MOS's, and you can serve in CONUS or overseas.

7 YOU CAN COME BACK TO THE STATES.
If you're overseas and want to come home, the CONUS Station Option can make it happen. Of course, a lot depends on what your MOS is, and where you want to go, but the Army will make every effort to relocate you, upon completion of your overseas tour, at a location of your choice.

8 YOU CAN GO OVERSEAS.
The Overseas Reenlistment Option makes it possible for you to spend a minimum of 12 months in Germany, Korea, or some other exciting part of the world.

9 YOU CAN JOIN THE SPECIAL FORCES OR RANGERS.
If you're special, the Special Forces or Ranger Regiment Option may be just right for you. You must be Airborne qualified, have an MOS that's needed (or agree to train in one) and qualify for a SECRET Security clearance. The demands are great, but so are the rewards.

10 YOU CAN JOIN THE OLD GUARD. If you'd like to march with one of the Army's oldest and most prestigious outfits, then reenlist for the Old Guard Option. If you make it, you're guaranteed assignment in Washington, D.C., for up to 3 years.

11 YOU CAN LEARN A NEW LANGUAGE.
Under the Language School Option, you could learn a second language of your own choosing, provided the Army's need matches your choice. Once you've completed your training, you could serve in a foreign country. And, of course, there's great satisfaction in being bilingual.

12 YOU CAN JOIN AN INSCOM UNIT.
Under the Intelligence and Security Command and Electronic Warfare/Cryptologic Units and Training Option (INSCOM/EW), your schooling will be intensive. But if you qualify, you'll be part of a group that's essential to our nation's security efforts.

13 YOU CAN STAY RIGHT WHERE YOU ARE.
Many soldiers do. Under the Current Station Stabilization Option, you can reenlist to stay at your present duty assignment after your tour is completed. You're guaranteed your present duty for 12 to 14 months. You can find new challenges and rewards at a place you've come to know.

As you can see, reenlisting opens up a world of opportunities for you. Of course, qualifications are different for each option. But if you qualify, you'll be well on your way to expanding your Army, and your life, experience.

To find out more details about each reenlistment option, talk to your Retention NCO. They are there to make sure you know what your choices are, and to help you chart the best course for your future.

REENLIST. BE ALL YOU CAN BE.®

Keep rolling with bicycle safety

Infantry Branch Safety Office

Is a bicycle a dangerous vehicle?

The answer, of course, is yes.

Bicycles can be and are dangerous for the biker as well as pedestrians and two- or four-wheeled vehicle operators.

The numbers support this. Since the early 1940s, the bicycle population nationwide has grown from 8 million to a total today of more than 100 million.

Nationally, more than 1,100 accidental deaths are attributed to bicycle operation. Forty-two percent of these deaths occur in the age group below 15 years old, and 25 percent in the 25 and over category.

So you see, it is a problem that spans the generations.

National Safety Council statistics show more than 41,000 people are injured annually in bicycle accidents, with 21,000 alone being in the 5 to 14 age group.

The operation of any vehicle has some intrinsic dangers. The goal is to minimize the hazards through proper maintenance of equipment, proper operation and appropriate education on how to do it safely.

The equipment checklist for safe operation of bicycles include:

● Headlamp — Should be clean and visible during nighttime operations.

● Horn — Operates properly and is loud enough to attract attention.

● Saddle and handlebars — Adjusted to the correct height and angle and tightly fastened to prevent inadvertent movement.

● Reflectors — Clean and visible from 300 feet at night.

● Tires — Check tire pressure and tread wear. Check for cuts or gouges. The tire valve should be straight and uncut.

● Wheels — Should roll free and evenly without wobbling or rubbing on the forks. Make sure spoke reflectors are in place and check for broken or bent spokes.

● Pedals — Should be tight and not excessively worn. Pedal reflectors should be unbroken and clearly visible?

● Chain — Check for broken or damaged links or for too much play.

● Brakes — Smooth, effective operation.

As a minimum, the following bicycle rules of the road should be observed:

★ Obey all traffic regulations, signs, signals, and markings.

★ Ride in single file only. Don't ride alongside cars and trucks.

★ Ride on the right side of the road always.

★ Don't carry passengers or oversized packages.

★ Use hand signals for turns and stops.

★ Have reflectors and a bright light at night or wear light colored clothing.

★ Wear an approved bicycle helmet.

ASK THE JUDGE

By Richard Parker
Staff Judge Advocate's Office

Q. My wife and I are considering buying a house in Columbus and have found one we like.

The owner and I have reached a "hand-shake" agreement on the price, but I've heard that I need a written contract. My friends tell me I ought to make a "contingency contract."

Do I need a written contract with the owner, and if so, what is this "contingency" business?

What if there's something wrong with the house that I don't find out about until after I sign the contract.

A. If you are serious about buying a house, you would be well advised to have a properly drawn, written contract.

The contract between the seller and buyer of a house is the most important part of the home-buying process.

This document will not only set out the price of the house, but will also set out all rights and duties of both parties.

It is an enforceable contract between the seller and the buyer. Thus, in your case, without a written contract, the owner of the house you want to buy is free to sell it to someone else who might make a better offer.

With a written contract, you can force the seller to go through with the sale, better offer or not.

On the other hand, with a written contract, if you decide not to go through with the sale, you may lose your earnest money (deposit) and possibly could be sued for other damages.

A "contingency" is an event that must happen before a party to a contract is required to complete obligations under the contract.

Most contingencies are for the buyer's benefit, the most common being the financing contingency. This involves the buyer's promise to buy the house provided he can get a loan.

Usually, the loan is described very specifically; that is, a buyer will agree to buy the house provided he can get a loan of say, $50,000 at an interest rate of 10 percent over a period of 30 years.

If the loan is not available, or the buyer's application for the loan is denied, then the contract becomes void, and the buyer gets his earnest money back. The buyer must, however, do his best to get the loan.

Another important, and highly recommended, contingency is an inspection contingency. Here, the buyer agrees to buy the house provided it passes an inspection.

The inspection is usually at the buyer's expense and must take place within a short time after the contract is signed — say 10 days.

A good inspection contingency will require the house to pass muster as to its systems (i.e., electrical, plumbing, air conditioning and heating system, doors and windows) and its structure (including roof, basement and the like).

The type of inspection just mentioned is different from other inspections or rights of inspection one might find in a real estate contract.

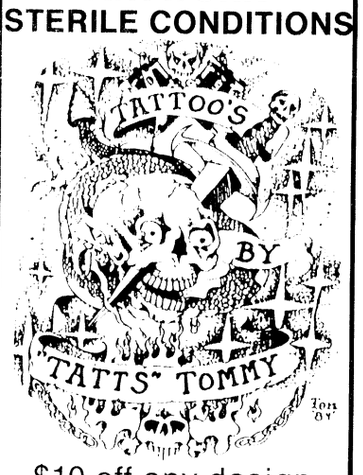
However, the systems check only requires the seller be able to show the systems are in normal operating condition at the time of closing. It is not a warranty of these systems beyond that time.

If you are going to have any warranties at all from the seller, they should be in writing in the contract, or there will be no warranties.

This is not intended to cover everything there is to know about real estate contracts. Consultation with a lawyer before you sign, either as a buyer or a seller, is recommended.

Attorneys at the Legal Assistance Office are available to assist in reviewing a potential contract.

If you have been presented with a contract by the other party or his agent, you usually have only a short period of time to respond to the offer.



If that's the case with your contract, be sure to let the Legal Assistance Office know when you call for an appointment.

The telephone number for the Legal Assistance Office is 545-3281.

Former prisoners gather on their special day

By Shawn Bryson
Bayonet staff writer

Fort Benning joined the rest of the nation last week in honoring America's Prisoners of War and Missing In Action at a special awards ceremony in Infantry Hall.

Sixteen former POWs attended the POW/MIA Recognition Day Ceremony Sept. 15 and were recognized for their sacrifices as Brig. Gen. William M. Steele, deputy commanding general and host of the ceremony, awarded each the POW medal.

All of the awardees were former World War II POWs, with the exception of one, a former POW in the Korean War.

Air Force Col. Edward L. Hubbard, a former POW in Vietnam, was the guest speaker for the ceremony.

Hubbard spent more than six years and seven months as a POW in North Vietnam and now speaks around the nation about his experiences. He was captured by the Viet Cong after his aircraft was shot down in enemy territory July 20, 1966.

Hubbard's message centered around the positive things that came from his experience as a POW. He said he learned that people are physically and mentally capable of far more than they ever realize.

Hubbard said almost seven years of "spare time" made him realize the potential everyone has.

For example, he told how he learned more than 5,000 words of Spanish. He said although he had never heard or spoken the language, he learned to communicate with a Hispanic fellow POW in the next cell by using a tap code.

After his release March 4, 1973, Hubbard went to a university where he tested out of years of Spanish.

Hubbard is currently the deputy for Safety, Armament Division, Eglin Air Force Base.

Any former POW who was taken captive after April 15, 1917, is eligible to receive the POW medal. It is estimated about 142,000 service members are eligible.

The awardees at the ceremony were:

Rufus B. Austin — Dec. 23, 1941, through Sept. 14, 1945.

Carl J. Bishop — Dec. 14, 1944, through May 8, 1945.

Richard A. Brewer — 116 days.

Lloyd R. Cornwell — Dec. 1, 1950, through Sept. 1, 1953.

Rayford F. Cummings — January 1944, through May 1945.

John H. Daniels — Jan. 12, 1944, through May 15, 1945.

Rex M. Ellis — February 1944, through May 13, 1945.

Dewayne P. Flanigan — returned to control May 10, 1945 (wife Dora accepted for the deceased).

Thomas M. Fort Jr. — June 16, 1944, through April 29, 1945.

William O. Fryer — December 1944, through April 1945.

William D. Jenkins — Dec. 16, 1944, through April 1945.

King D. Knight — Dec. 15, 1944, through April 29, 1945.

Wesley P. Newton — Dec. 16, 1944, through April 16, 1945.

Stanley W. Petrasek — Dec. 20, 1944, through April 2, 1945.

Fred Petty — May 1, 1942, through Sept. 1945 (wife Elsie accepted for the deceased).

Sam T. Prophet — Dec. 19, 1944, through April 23, 1945.

Anyone interested in obtaining more information about the POW medal may call 1-800-873-3768.

Air Force colonel talks about experiences during 6-year, 7-month, 2-day internment

By Shawn Bryson
Bayonet staff writer

"If you stop and think about it, any time someone offers you the opportunity to excel in life, the first thing that crosses your mind is you're already at your maximum; you're already doing your best," said the guest speaker at Benning's 1989 Prisoner of War/Missing in Action Recognition Ceremony Sept. 15.

"That's exactly what we thought when we were flying combat over North Vietnam," Air Force Col. Edward Hubbard said.

Hubbard said he and the plane's crew felt they were operating at their maximum capacity July 20, 1966, during a reconnaissance mission that had them dodging bullets left and right.

After being shot down, Hubbard came to a shocking realization.

"About 30 seconds after our feet hit the ground in North Vietnam, we realized we were wrong. Every single thing we had ever done in our lives was insignificant compared to what we were going to get to do," Hubbard said.

Hubbard, then 28 years old, and the crew were captured by the Viet Cong later that day. Hubbard's capture began his six years, seven months and two days in prison at the "Hanoi Hilton."

Col. Edward Hubbard

"We entered a world where there were a lot bad things and a few good things. But, we had one thing that was a luxury.

"The luxury was spare time. The reason I consider that a luxury is because it allowed us to do things we had never done before and probably will never do again," he said.

One of the first things Hubbard learned was how important competition is. He said Americans compete every day -- whether it's for a good place in line at the bank or a job that 20 other people want. Competition is what makes people set goals and gives them direction.

He said when he was captured, he was stripped of competition as most people know it, and his only competition or goal was pure survival.

Hubbard said he lived that way -- terrified -- for about 18 months until the senior-ranking POW started a physical fitness program. That gave Hubbard the idea of bringing competition and goals back into his life.

Hubbard began a monthly push-up competition with a Navy man a few cells down. After threes months of daily workouts, Hubbard was able to do 300 push-ups without stopping. "That was way beyond anything I ever dreamed I could do; I couldn't believe it," he said.

Hubbard then changed the competition to sit-ups and a month later he was able to do sit-ups for four hours without stopping. Again, he said he didn't think that was possible.

From sit-ups, the two started a jump rope competition. Hubbard said they made the rope from strips of a ragged, old shirt. The competition lasted four and a half years and Hubbard peaked at more than 3,600 skips in about an hour without a miss.

Hubbard said he didn't think anyone could accomplish those kinds of physical tasks, let alone himself. But those feats are

Staff sergeant donates kidney to mother

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

What would you do if your mom needed a kidney and you were the only compatible donor?

Well one Fort Benning noncommissioned officer didn't hesitate for a second, he immediately said yes.

Staff Sgt. Jeffrey Hughes a member of the Bradley Instructor Detachment, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment recently underwent the transplant operation. He and his mother are doing fine.

Although the operation was a success and he wouldn't hesitate to do it again, it was not an easy decision. And, it's not a decision you make by yourself. Uncle Sam has some input too.

According to Hughes you start with your commander and work your way up until you get an answer from the surgeon general's office.

"Everyone was very supportive," he said. "As a matter of fact, my commander, Major Sparrow, helped me get permission from the surgeon general's office."

Even though Uncle Sam was involved, the decision was still ultimately Hughes, and he still had his family to think about because he is a husband and a father of two boys.

Once he put all that aside, he prepared himself for surgery and put on a brave front for his mother so she wouldn't be nervous.

"When they wheeled us in for surgery, I told her I was going to take a nap and that I would see her when I woke up," he said. "I wasn't exactly that cheerful when I woke up, but when I saw how well my mom was responding, I felt much better.

Hughes said the procedure took about two and a half hours.

During that time doctors took out one of his kidneys and transplanted it to his mother.

What a trade-off! For the short amount of time she spent in surgery, his mother said is feeling better than she has years.

"The doctors were impressed with both of us," Hughes said. "One reason is my mom was doing so well. The second one is I was in much better physical condition than their regular transplant patients."

He explained there were two other patients who had the same type of surgery, and the doctors said he recovered leaps and bounds ahead of them.

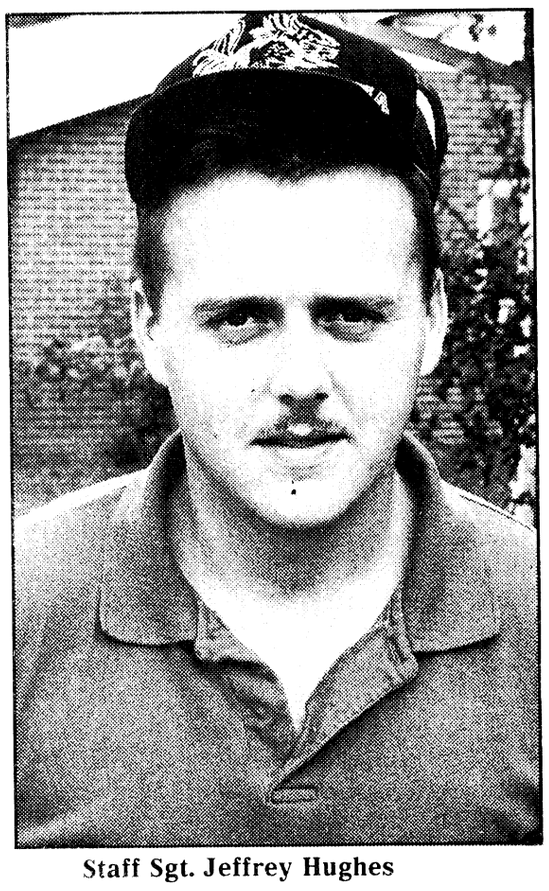
Hughes attributed his fast recovery rate to the Army and the conditioning soldiers go through regularly.

"I think my attitude has helped me too," he said. "I want to get well as fast as I can so I can go back to work."

Hughes, an eight-year veteran works with the unit conduct of fire trainer at the Collins Training Center. He teaches troops attending different Bradley Courses how to operate that particular piece of equipment.

A recent NCO of the month board winner, Hughes is always striving to achieve.

It's no wonder. The Army is a part of his life.



He jokes that if you every wanted to do a story about a military family his would be it.

"My dad retired from the Army, all of my brothers are in the Army and so is my brother-in-law," he said. "As a matter of fact, I met my wife in the Army."

The Army will have to wait at least a month for this go getter. Because he can't go back to work until the doctors give him the okay.

And his mom? Hughes said that she's doing so well local media in Birmingham are doing a story on her and a youngster at the same hospital who underwent similar surgery.

"I'm really happy for her," he said. "Although she said she's feeling good, now I know she's going to feel even better."

Run of the Americas Sept. 16 highlights Hispanic celebration

By Keith Johnson
U.S. Army School of Americas

The first "Run of the Americas," sponsored by the U.S. Army School of the Americas, held Sept. 16 at the Promenade along Columbus' Historic District, represented "a spirit of solidarity" between the Columbus and Hispanic communities.

Mayor James J. Jernigan addressed a crowd of nearly 500 people and proclaimed Sept. 15 through Oct. 15, "a month of celebration of the Hispanic heritage in Columbus, Ga."

Two hundred eighty-four runners, from 13 to 79 years old, participated in the 5- and 10-kilometer races.

Lloyd McDonald outdistanced 105 other runners to win the 10K (6.2-mile) race with a time of 32:52.

McDonald, a supply sergeant with Company A, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry, and attached to the physical activities branch, is a member of the Fort Benning Army 10-miler team.

"Today was a good test to monitor the success of our training," McDonald said.

"So far, everything is on target for the Army 10-miler."

McDonald and the team of five men and five women from Fort Benning will compete for the Commander's Trophy in Washington, D.C. along with about 5,000 other soldiers in the fifth annual Army 10-miler.

McDonald said he also has plans for another race in 1992.

"My ultimate goal is to qualify for the 1992 Olympics in Barcelona," McDonald said.

McDonald runs 40 to 50 miles a week, as well as enduring "speed work" to prepare himself to meet his goals.

"I need to cut two minutes off my 10-mile time to run it in under 50 minutes," McDonald explained.

According to McDonald, a sub-50 minute, 10-mile time is needed to qualify for the Olympic trials.

Another runner, who was a source of inspiration to everybody, was 79-year-old Mark Sternberg. Sternberg finished the 10K race with a time of 1:54:34.

Sternberg, who said his last name translates to "star mountain," added a touch of showmanship to the race. Nearing the finish line, he waved and saluted the cheering crowd that lined the finish.

Sternberg was born and has lived in Columbus all his life. He said he began running about 10 years ago and runs about 18 races each year.

"Running makes you feel good, and you sleep so well," Sternberg said.

The run was sponsored by the Latin American Student Association, Columbus Bank and Trust and the American Family Life Assurance Corporation.

U.S. Army School of the Americas' personnel responsible for coordinating the race were Salome A. Carrasco, Thomas G. Foster, Ramon Valle, Rafael Colondres, Francisco J. Flores, Anthony Garcia and Manuel Rodrigues.

The top three finishers in each race were:

Latin Americans share background, traditions, support in religious group

By Debra Galle
USAIC Chaplain's Office

Excited about a visit to a new and grand country, Maria went through the motions of moving her family to America where her husband would attend the School of the Americas at Fort Benning.

She wasn't sure what the United States would be like, but she was a bit anxious about the language barriers and leaving all that was familiar to her behind — even if only one year.

Friendly people awaited Maria's family at Fort Benning, and she was awed by how different the American culture was from her own. She enjoyed learning about the United States and knew what her husband was doing was important, but somehow she felt something was missing.

She learned she would be able to attend Catholic mass done in Spanish. Thinking perhaps this would help abate her homesickness, she and her husband attended with nearly 500 others at the Sightseeing Road Chapel.

Father George Gonzalez, School of the Americas Chaplain, Celebrated the mass. Maria made a point to speak to him afterward and was pleased to learn of "Las Damas Catolicas," or "The Catholic Women" of the Chapel.

Through this relatively small, ever-changing group of women, Maria quickly found what she felt she needed. She was able to tie her strong religious background and traditions in with companionship and support from other Latin American women with shared experiences.

The women in the group are bound together by common heritage and present situations. They meet monthly to share religious traditions and community spirit.

One community project they have participated in included visiting the patients at Martin Army Community Hospital.

Many of the women's husbands are affiliated with the School of the Americas. Most are students, but several wives have husbands who have retired in the surrounding communities. These women offer stability within the ever-changing group.

The women's group meets the first Friday of each month at 10:30 a.m. at Sightseeing Road Chapel.

Fort Benning offers a range of Spanish-speaking religious activities at the Sightseeing Road Chapel.

Two Catholic masses are held each Sunday in the chapel. The 9:30 a.m. mass is primarily held for the present population of about 400 School of the Americas cadets. A 12:30 p.m. mass is held in the same chapel for the general Spanish-speaking community.

Bible studies are held each Monday at 7 p.m. Marriage and baptism preparation is each Sunday at 2 p.m. The Spanish Catholic Women of the Chapel meet for first Fridays at 10:30 a.m.

Anyone interested in attending Spanish-speaking masses or participating in the Spanish Religious Education Program or Las Damas Catolicas may contact Chap. (Maj.) George Gonzalez, 545-5494/1926/7721, or call the Sightseeing Road Chapel, building 2820, 545-2169/4787/1541.

Editor's Note: Maria is a fictional character used to depict many Spanish-speaking women.

Give your child your greatest gift: your time

By Chap. Robert E. Reese
USAIC Chaplain's Office

A recent survey revealed that the typical father in the United States spends an average of only eight minutes each day in serious conversation with his children.

Considering the hectic way we live and the way we determine our values, it is probably an accurate finding.

The Scriptures occasionally mention those who are "foolish and simple," as in Proverbs 1:22 which reads: "How long, you simple ones, will you love simplicity? For scorners delight in their scorning, and fools hate knowledge."

The original term means "thick, dull, sluggish." It's the picture of mental and emotional dullness Proverbs is presenting; one who is virtually blind toward others, failing to feel others' feelings and to sense others' needs.

Perhaps many of us are truly sharp on the job, but dull and sluggish when it comes to spending time with our children.

This is what that survey is indicating.

The Scriptures also tell us in Proverbs 20 that our children "make themselves known by their deeds and actions."

We are then reminded that we have "ears and eyes that ought to see and hear." (Prov. 20:11-12)

Everyday your child drops hints by both word and deed that ask for help, attention or reassurance.

But, how often do we fail to notice these hints because we are too busy to notice. How often do we just brush them off with the lame excuse, "I'm too busy."?

A child is infinitely valuable, unique, irreplaceable; and children really grow up fast.

Yet, we often spend less time with our children than we spend with the people at work or watching television.

Parents have the responsibility to build self-esteem and confidence in their children.

You are the person your child looks to for love, understanding, acceptance and companionship.

Your children turn to you to learn how to believe in themselves and to be told and shown they are worthwhile and acceptable as persons.

A sharp, alert parent takes the time to respond to these needs.

An insensitive, sluggish parent will either ignore the needs or make empty promises.

In his book, "Hide Or Seek," Dr. James Dobson lists the five most common barriers that cause children to doubt their worth even when they are deeply loved.

The first barrier on the list is "parental insensitivity." Failure to be sensitive to children and to spend time with them can result in serious struggles with inferiority, low self-esteem and a basic feeling of insecurity.

The key is sensitivity and taking the time to listen, to care, to give of yourself, to share.

The greatest gift you can give your child is not the most expensive toy at the mall, but rather, the gift of your time spent with your child listening, talking, sharing together, often.

POW

among the many lessons that strengthen his current philosophy of life. "I believe that human potential is nothing more than a state of mind," he said.

A part of the potential Hubbard talked about included the communication system used by the prisoners. He said they used a faint tapping code to avoid getting in trouble for talking. The code involved an imaginary grid with 25 squares. Each square represented a letter of the alphabet and the prisoners devised a way of using the grid to tap out messages. (The letter C was used in place of K due to the lack of a 26th square on the grid.)

Hubbard said mental conditioning was the hardest thing of all while in prison. He said it was easier to keep his mind occupied during the first three years because there were guards right outside the cells. But, in 1969, Hubbard entered the part of his captivity that he called "the doldrums." He said that for some unknown reason, the guards had lightened up and left the prisoners to themselves for the most part, although talking was still not allowed. He defined that as "three years of nothing to do, no place to go and nobody harassing you."

So they memorized things. Most had already replayed the events of their lives in their minds over and over. The only thing left to do besides physical conditioning was communicate things to one another and memorize the material.

One of the things Hubbard learned and memorized was the Spanish language, without books, pencils or paper. He had become so proficient at tapping that he learned more than 5,000 words of the language. He said he had never seen or really heard Spanish in his life until a Hispanic prisoner in the cell next to his taught him, using only the tap codes. He knew the language so well that soon after he was released Sept. 2, 1973, he tested out of years of Spanish courses at a university.

Another accomplishment he recalled happened when he and most of the prisoners around him memorized all 44 verses to the poem "The Battle of East and West." A fellow prisoner had learned the poem when he was only 10 years old and over a period of 44 days, taught it to the others, Hubbard said. When he got out of prison, Hubbard went to a library and looked up the poem and found that it was "virtually word perfect." The prisoners had learned the poem strictly by using the tap code. He said that he learned more from his experience as a POW than he had during the first 28 years of his life. He said the most important thing he learned though, was that people can do more, physically and mentally, than they ever dreamed of, provided they have the right state of mind and are willing to put forth the effort it takes to accomplish their goals. Hubbard now serves as the deputy for Safety at Eglin Air Force Base in Florida.

THE BAYONET

Home of the Infantry

Flames rage for safety

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

"Lights, camera, roll em," said the director, "Wait a minute. Stop. Is your camera set right? Okay, start them up."

Although that's the usual banter heard around a film set, this director is a little more cautious than normal.

The reason is the shot can only be done once. Why is it so special? Because they can only burn a helicopter once.

It's all part of a film the Training and Doctrine Command directed the post Safety Office to make for Armywide distribution, according to Al Brown, Safety Office representative.

This is Brown's fifth safety film, so he is comfortable in his role as coordinator for the movie.

After he got the script from the U.S. Safety Center at Fort Rucker, Ala., Brown said it took him two months to set up everything for the film and two days to actually make it. The longest part was the filming.

"The film is 10 minutes long and depicts an Army aviation accident," Brown said. "The Army is using selective fatalities to promote safety."

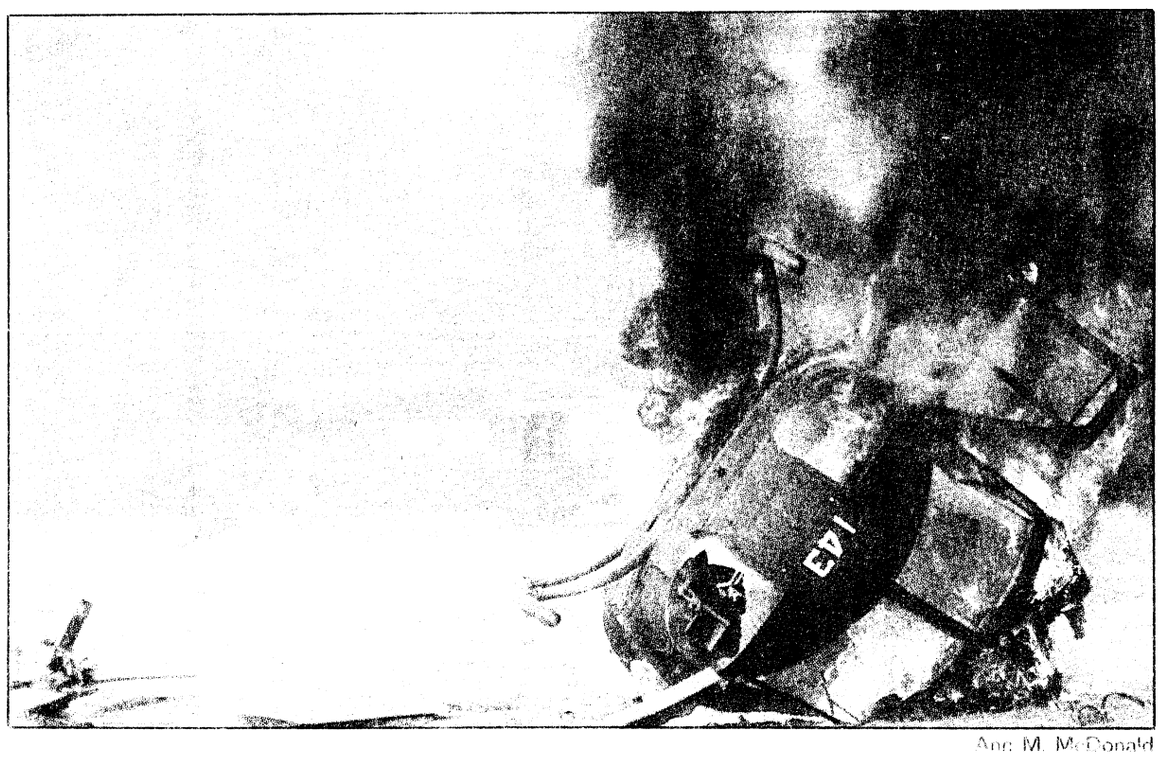
He said the Safety Center has discovered that it's more effective to use short renactments of real accidents instead of long, drawn out movies.

"These accidents stay in soldiers' minds and make them more safety conscious when they are working," Brown said.

In the movie, viewers will be watching real soldiers and not actors. Every element of the film is real.

A total of 51 people, 3 helicopters, 2 fire trucks and an audio-visual truck went into the filming. The helicopter used for the burning was provided by Fort Rucker.

The tally of people used in the film included soldiers from the Infantry Training Center; 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry; 197th Infantry Brigade, 34th Medical Battalion, 89th Explosive Ordnance Detachment, 36th Engineer Group and civilian firefighters.

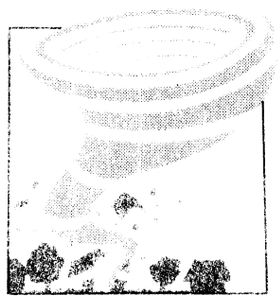


The site for the film was Amfreeville, which is used to train soldiers attending pathfinder school at 1st Battalion, 507th Parachute Infantry Regiment.

Brown said getting support from the units was easy. The problem was getting support on the same day.

"In most cases I find they want to do something like this because it's great training," he said.

"EOD started the fire, the fire department put it out and the 34th Medical Battalion rescued the simulated injured.



All, of course, was done safely.

POST BRIEFS

Post to test weather siren

The installation siren system will be tested at noon the first Saturday of each month beginning Oct. 7.

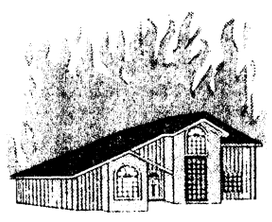
The testing is necessary to ensure all personnel are warned of severe weather conditions.

POV registration policy

All military and civilian personnel must remove their registration decals as part of required post clearance procedures.

Remnants are to be turned in to the vehicle registration office at the time of clearance. The decal does not transfer with the privately owned vehicle from owner to owner or from installation to installation.

All newly assigned personnel at Fort Benning will be issued a new decal.



If the decal from the previous installation has not yet been removed, it should be scraped off and replaced by the new decal, installation tab and expiration tab.

Fire Prevention Week stresses safety Oct. 9-14

Oct. 9 through 14 marks this year's Fire Prevention Week.

Observed annually, Fire Prevention Week always falls during the Sunday through Saturday period that includes Oct. 9.

Post Commander Maj. Gen. Michael F. Spigelmire urges all soldiers and civilians to help departments this month and all year long to keep their homes and community as safe as possible from the dangers of fire.

This year's Fire Prevention Week theme is "Big Fires Start Small."

According to the post commander's proclamation, Fort Benning has scheduled several events during this week to emphasize the importance of fire prevention to include a display at the Fort Benning Mall, puppet shows at post schools and "Open House" at the post fire stations.

Senate approves funds for post school

By Beth Middlemiss
Fort Benning Schools

U.S. Senator Wyche Fowler Jr. has announced that the U.S. Senate has approved funds for construction of a new elementary school at Fort Benning and for improvements to the existing White School.

The funds were part of the recently approved Senate appropriations bill for military construction. They include $7,350,000 for construction of the Bouton Heights Elementary School, which would replace Wilbur School. An additional $1,250,000 is designated for a new media center and other additions to White School.

According to Senator Fowler, the House of Representatives has approved a similar bill. The bill will soon go to a conference committee; upon agreement by the conference committee, the bill then goes to President Bush for his signature.

About Wilbur School, which was built in 1951 and currently has students housed in seven temporary structures, Senator Fowler said, "While the Fort Benning School System has done a heroic job of maintaining quality educational standards, it is time it received some assistance from Congress.

"There is nothing more important than the education of our children, and we must do all we can to provide an exemplary education for the children of our military community."

The proposed Bouton Heights Elementary School would be built to house 620 students in kindergarten through fifth grade from the Bouton Heights and Davis Hill housing areas.

The 62,000-square-foot facility would contain 30 classrooms as well as a media center, a computer instruction room, a multipurpose room (combination auditorium and cafeteria), special education rooms and office areas.

The White School expansion and modernization project would include a 7,500-square-foot expansion to include a media center, as well as rooms for art, music and special education.

The project would also centrally air condition the entire White School plant, replacing window air-conditioning units currently in use.

The site and plans for the Bouton Heights Elementary School, as well as the plans for the expansion and modernization at White School, have been developed for some time. Funding considerations were postponed when the issue of possible transfer of students from schools for military family members to the public school system arose.

"Now that the transfer issue is behind us, we are very grateful for Senator Fowler's support of the Bouton Heights and White School projects," said Dr. Rolla Baumgartner, superintendent of the Fort Benning Schools.

"We are excited about this important step in bringing about funding for our construction needs," she said.

Nett Hall named after WWII hero

By Michelle Le Roy Harrison
Bayonet staff writer

In an emotional ceremony, a World War II hero and the post commander unveiled a commemorative plaque for the Officer Candidate School and named the building Nett Hall.

The Officer Candidate School headquarters building was dedicated to one of its distinguished graduates and former battalion commanders, retired Col. Robert B. Nett, for his actions in the Philippines.

In December 1944, 1st Lt. Nett, company commander of 305th Infantry Regiment, near Cognon, Leyte, Philippine Islands, led his company in an attack against an enemy battalion.

During the assault, Nett, although severely wounded, managed to kill seven Japanese with his rifle and bayonet. He refused to surrender his command and gave orders to continue the advance.

Finally, Nett turned over command and walked unaided to the rear for medical treatment. He was given the Medal of Honor for his courage.

Most dedication ceremonies honor individuals who are deceased. Maj. Gen. Michael Spigelmire, post commander, said he was happy this dedication could be made to "someone who is still with us and still a vital member of our community."

Nett lives with his wife Frances in Columbus where he retired in 1973.

Clothing Sales to boost prices

BDUs to go up significantly

By Shawn Lorimer
Bayonet staff writer

Clothing sales will boost prices on 54 percent of its military items beginning Sunday.

There is proposed increase in the uniform clothing allowance soldiers receive, but it may not be enough to offset the price hikes, according to Eleanor Windham, manager at the main post clothing sales.

Most of the items going up in price will be uniforms, with BDUs going up significantly, Windham said.

A pair of winter BDUs will be $5.80 more while the hot weather BDUs will be go up $5.45 a pair.

Most of the issued TA-50 items will experience little or no increase.

One piece of equipment that will go up in cost is the large ruck sack, which is not an issued item. The ruck sack, now $28.50, will be $35.75 after the Oct. 1.

Although some items will drop in price at the start of the new fiscal year, individuals may wish to purchase ahead of time to avoid price increases, Windham said.

To make it easier to stock up on uniforms and equipment ahead of time, clothing sales offers a deferred-payment plan.

It allows soldiers to make up to $250 in purchases and pay it off at a rate of $25 a month with no interest.

Items purchased on the deferred-payment plan are restricted to "non-novelty items," and there is a $25 deposit.

Helicopters, crews wait out Hugo here

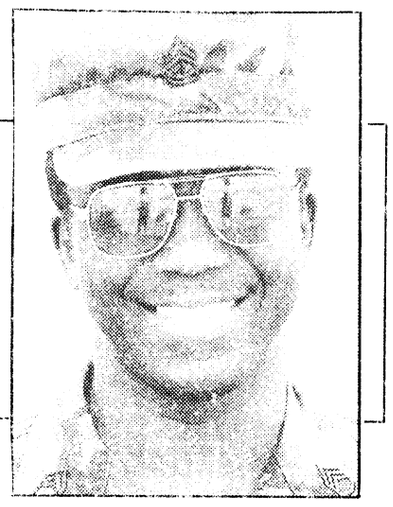
By Shawn Lorimer
Bayonet staff writer

Except for a little rain and wind, the effects of hurricane Hugo were virtually unnoticeable at Fort Benning, making it an ideal refuge for 56 helicopters and crews and two fixed-wing aircraft from Fort Stewart.

Expecting high winds and torrential rains, Fort Stewart and the Army National Guard in Jacksonville, Fla., began sending aircraft here Sept. 20 to ride out the storm.

Since Benning is far inland and relatively safe from hurricane force winds, it has been designated as an aircraft refuge for Fort Stewart, Fort Rucker and Florida.

Part of a contingency plan to protect aircraft from storm damage was implemented last week.



Hugo hit the lower east coast late in the night Sept. 21, and the afternoon of Sept. 22, the helicopters began their return trip to the coast.

Lying leaders: bad examples

By Joe Ferrare
Army News Service

A friend of mine once told me a story that was supposed to convince me the very idea of morals and ethics had been repealed. Instead, it showed me the laws of education by experience are still in force.

The story was about an aging couple and their son. It seems the couple wanted the son to have their house and most of their worldly goods after they died, a good standard wish. But they also wanted to avoid the little unpleasantries — like taxes — so they came up with a scheme.

They 'sold' the house and whatever else was involved to their son for some paltry sum. The son promptly took the house and all their worldly goods and booted them out onto the street.

My friend thought this was terrible. They were trying to do their son a favor, and he took advantage of them.

I thought it was only natural: they taught their son how to cheat, then were surprised when he brought the lesson home. Sure, there's a difference.

Dodging taxes is winked at, while evicting your parents will bring down the wrath of your neighbors faster than putting their aquarium on the stove. But it is, essentially, the same thing: cheating an authority figure. That's why I was so amazed that my friend was surprised.

This all relates, of course, to the Army theme for this year: the NCO. It relates because I feel the same amazement when some NCOIC or first sergeant gets indignant when one of his troops lies to him.

You see, we teach our soldiers to lie. How?

We lead by example.

The same way those parents taught their son to cheat, we show our soldiers it's okay to lie — by omission or commission — to other people.

We teach them.

It's okay to lie to the boss if it keeps us out of trouble or lets us get away with something the boss would probably nix.

It's okay to lie to the commanding officer if telling the truth would probably start a lot of trouble.

It's okay to fake a form, fudge numbers and change dates if doing it right seems like a lot of work or would hold things up.

And the list goes on.

This teaches soldiers it's all right to lie. That lying is, in fact, a smart way to do business.

NCOs might think they're teaching their soldiers you can trust NCOs more than officers or civilians — itself a wrong-headed concept — but what they're really telling them is that it's okay to lie to authority figures if you think the reason is good enough.

So soldiers lie to their sergeants, and sergeants lie to their senior sergeants, who lie to officers who lie to their senior officers, and pretty soon, everybody's lying to everybody else.

Not all the time, of course — only when we think it's okay. We become what's known in journalism as "gatekeepers," deciding what gets through and what doesn't.

And then we're surprised when we get lied to, don't know what's going on or can't believe the truth.

(Ferrare is the PA supervisor for the Fort Eustis, Va., PAO.)

Snively looks back on Army's 200 years

By Clyde Snively
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Guess what today is. It's the Army's 200th birthday.

"Like heck it is," you say. "This country is more than 200 years old, our Army was here before the country, so how can it just be 200 years old?"

"Easy dog face. You can't have an Army until you have a country. Washington led an Army but it wasn't a federal Army. It couldn't be without a federation.

The Constitution made it possible once it was ratified. So on Sept. 29, 1789, the War Department, which itself, had just been established, formed the Army. So there.

Then came the war. If people think the Revolutionary War soldiers had it tough, it was worse after the war.

First, Congress looked on the Army as a heavy and unnecessary expense (does anything really change?).

There was also the fear that a standing Army might be turned to the coercion of the states or become an instrument of despotism.

Congress hoped that the dangerous and objectionable features of a permanent military organization could be avoided by reliance on a "well-regulated and disciplined militia sufficiently armed and accoutered."

The Army really sank into the mud in June of 1784 when Congress, as an expedient, adopted a resolution, which allowed for 25 privates to guard supplies at Fort Pitt and 55 more to guard stores at West Point.

Officers for this minuscule force could be appointed in proportion to its size, but no officer could hold rank above captain.

In 1785 the terms of service were extended to three years and in 1787 the men in service, fewer than 600, were offered another three-year term.

Then on Sept. 29, 1789, this force became the permanent Military Establishment under the newly adopted Constitution.

Even back then, they had recruiting posters. One dated 1798-99, showed a soldier going through the manual of arms.

Above the drawing was the announcement that all brave, healthy, able bodied and well disposed young men were invited to join troops now raising under General Washington.

In the body of the ad, the recruiters really made it difficult to turn down such a deal: "The encouragement at this time, to enlist is truly liberal and generous, namely, a bounty of $12, an annual and fully sufficient supply of good and handsome clothing, a daily allowance of a large and ample ration of provisions, together with $60 a year in gold and silver."

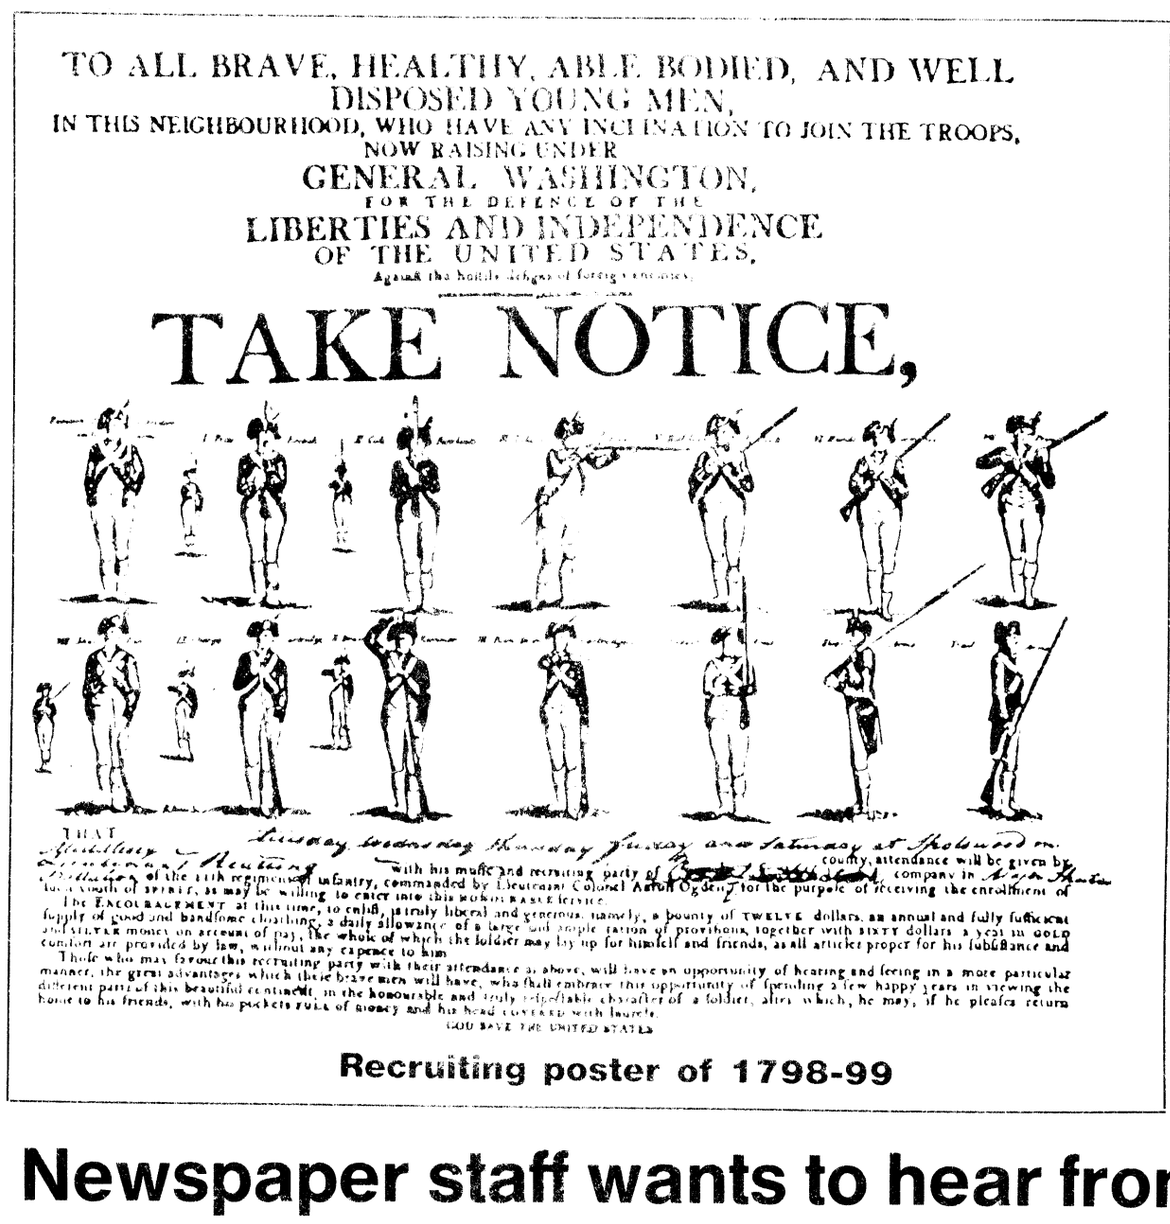
If I were a young man back then, I know I'd have difficulty resisting, even with a college fund inducement.

I wonder what basic training was like in those days. Can you imagine drill and ceremony with a musket?

I know one thing, there were no C-Rats or MREs. You either lived off the land or ate your hard biscuit (your generous daily ration?).

Instead of fire and maneuver, you learned to walk in tightly packed squares. And you walked everywhere. No cattle cars to take you to the ranges.

I bet drill sergeants were just as big and mean, though. "Hey, trainee, straighten that pom pom, line up those three corners on your hat, your brass buttons are tarnished.



No females. I find that hard to imagine, an Army without women. I guess if I were stuck in some remote infantry unit my entire career, I could imagine it, and no, I don't mean One Station Unit Training.

Speaking of OSUT, PAO's driver, a seasoned veteran of six months, is already complaining about how soft OSUT's getting since he went through.

I heard a guy from California complaining because he'd signed on for "no stress" basic, and he was finding it stressful.

"Can you believe that?" the indignant driver asked.

"War's hell," I told him. "And happy 200th birthday, too."

TO ALL BRAVE, HEALTHY, ABLE BODIED, AND WELL DISPOSED YOUNG MEN, IN THIS NEIGHBOURHOOD, WHO HAVE ANY INCLINATION TO JOIN THE TROOPS, NOW RAISING UNDER GENERAL WASHINGTON, FOR THE DEFENCE OF THE LIBERTIES AND INDEPENDENCE OF THE UNITED STATES,
Against the hostile designs of foreign enemies.

TAKE NOTICE,

THAT
Lieutenant Keating with his muster and recruiting party of [illegible] company in [illegible] county, attendance will be given by the Lieutenant of the 11th regiment of infantry, commanded by Lieutenant Colonel Aaron Ogden, for the purpose of receiving the enrollment of such worthy of SPIRIT, as may be willing to enlist into this noble BASE service.

The ENCOURAGEMENT at this time, to enlist, is truly liberal and generous, namely, a bounty of TWELVE dollars, an annual and fully sufficient supply of good and handsome clothing, a daily allowance of a large and ample ration of provisions, together with SIXTY dollars a year in GOLD and SILVER money on account of pay, the whole of which the soldier may lay up for himself and friends, as all articles proper for his subsistance and comfort are provided by law, without any expence to him.

Those who may favour this recruiting party with their attendance as above, will have an opportunity of hearing and seeing in a more particular manner, the great advantages which these brave men will have, who shall embrace this opportunity of spending a few happy years in viewing the different parts of this beautiful continent, in the honourable and truly respectable character of a soldier, after which, he may, if he pleases return home to his friends, with his pockets FULL of money and his head COVERED with laurels.

GOD SAVE THE UNITED STATES

Medical team returns from Alaska cleanup

By Shawn Lorimer
Bayonet staff writer

A C-5 Galaxy touched down at Lawson Army Airfield with its cargo of three UH-60 blackhawks and 15 crewmembers from the 498th air ambulance company early Friday evening.

Twenty-five percent of the company has been in Alaska since April 19, providing air medical support for the clean-up efforts in Alaska.

"We rotated our people in and out every 45 to 60 days to keep them from getting burned out," said Capt Kenneth L. Quagilo, company operations officer.

There was one medic, however, who was not afforded the luxury of rotation and remained in Alaska for the entire five-month deployment.

Spec Bryan Gilbrech said he was glad to be back but pointed out they had performed some essential missions in Alaska.

While there, he said he had more than his share of the emergencies with which to deal.

Although he treated such cases as a burn victim who had been smoking next to diesel fuel, Gilbrech said his most serious patient wasn't part of the clean-up effort.

While dining at a fast-food restaurant, Gilbrech was the only medic on the scene when a civilian fell from the top of a nearby flagpole. Although the victim suffered serious injuries, Gilbrech helped save him.

Other rescues were not as spontaneous but just as critical. For example, a two-man crew of a civilian aircraft had set up a shelter from part of their wrecked aircraft and were catching fish on which to survive when they were rescued by Capt K. David Severace and his crew.

The light plane had gone down three days earlier in bad weather when the crew got lost and ran out of fuel.

They signaled a Marine C-47 helicopter with a mirror, which reported the location of the downed plane.

According to Severace, the crew was in good condition when they were rescued from a beach about 20 miles from the rescue ship that launched the UH-60 blackhawk medivac.

Members of the 498th were also involved in the search for a sinking ship with a crew of three on board. The search was unsuccessful and the three crewmen were lost at sea.

The 498th also flew medical support for the vice-presidential visit to the clean-up site.

Back home again, it took twenty minutes for the C-5 at Lawson Field to open its doors.

Family and friends of the 15 returning members of the 498th anxiously awaited their return.

Once the doors of the giant bird opened, it was obvious that the pilots and their crews were glad to be home.

The operation in Alaska lasted five months and involved the Army, Navy and Coastguard.

Annual fund drive kicks off here

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

The Combined Federal Campaign officially kicked off it's annual fund drive Monday in a small ceremony at the Fort Benning Golf Course Clubhouse.

For the next 45 days, (Oct. 1 through Nov. 15) Fort Benning and the surrounding community will be making efforts to reach the $565,000 goal set by Post Commander Maj. Gen. Michael F. Spigelmire during the ceremony.

According to Spigelmire, this goal is obtainable, but it will require the support of every command on post.

To gear up for the drive, key personnel met Wednesday with CFC administrators so they could be fully educated on how to conduct the campaign.

Cathy White, the head administrator for CFC said the attendees at the meeting were given pledge cards, campaign materials and posters.

CFC is unique in that individuals can select specific agencies in which to contribute. For the soldiers convenience, the donation can be given by allotment.

People who wish to contribute to the campaign should seek out their unit representatives or drop off their donation at the CFC office at the First Union Bank, 2nd Floor.

For more information, call Cathy White at 545-4937.

CG encourages soldier support

The Combined Federal Campaign is once again under way at Fort Benning. Each year, through the United Way, our CFC campaign gives every soldier, civilian, and family member an opportunity to contribute to many humanitarian agencies, both on and off post.

I am firmly committed to supporting CFC and the good that can be accomplished through our contributions. I urge each of you to give to the 1989-1900 campaign effort.

Schools host Parent Evening to introduce DARE

By Beth Middlemiss
Fort Benning Schools

Faith Middle School is sponsoring a Parent Evening Oct. 12, from 6:15 to 8:15 p.m. to introduce Drug Abuse Resistance Education.

The prevention of substance use among school-age children is a major concern in every community in our nation today.

To address this problem, the Military Police Activity in cooperation with the Fort Benning Schools is presenting DARE.

DARE is a substance use prevention program introduced to the Fort Beening Schools last year and about to begin its second year with Faith School sixth-graders.

This year, the program will be expanded to include students in all of the eight Fort Benning Schools.

Lt. Walter L. Jackson and Spec. Daniel Burton, uniformed officers who have been trained to teach the program, will conduct the DARE program with Benning students.

Parents of students in the Benning schools are invited to this Parent Evening during which the goals of Project Dare will be explained.

Jackson will present a message that may be helpful to parents as they work to provide positive influences on their children's lives.

'Angels' gather for 11th Airborne reunion

The 11th Airborne Division gained its nickname from a daring raid behind the Japanese lines.

By Judge Marion
11th Airborne Division

Veterans of the 11th Airborne Division who, together with the First Cavalry Division and the 37th Infantry Division, liberated Manila in 1945, will meet in Columbus, Ga., Oct. 12 through 15, to celebrate the 46th anniversary of the division's activation at Camp Mackall, N.C., in 1943.

Commanded by Maj. Gen. Joseph M. Swing, the 11th landed at Batangas, south of Manila, while the 511th Parachute Infantry and the 457th Parachute Field Artillery RCT team dropped by parachute on Tagatay Ridge near Lake Taal on Feb. 3, 1945.

The 11th Airborne Division gained its nickname "The Angels" from a daring raid behind the Japanese lines to liberate 2,147 internees at the Los Banos prison camp by land, water and parachute.

The defending Japanese force was wiped out and the internees who had suffered more than three years of imprisonment declared that the paratroopers looked like "Angels" descending from Heaven.

After Luzon was secured, the 11th was the first American unit to land in Japan for the surrender and occupied that country until 1950 when the unit moved to Fort Campbell, Ky.

Several units of the division were withdrawn to move to Korea and served with distinction there.

The entire division rotated to Germany in early 1956 and remained until mid 1958. The move to Germany gave the 11th another first, being the first U.S. airborne division to be assigned overseas since WWII.

To the "Angels," also went the distinction of being the first airborne division to serve both in the Far East and Europe.

Additionally, the division was the first tactical unit to experience the actual blast of an atomic bomb in April 1954 at close range, and it was the first airborne division to develop the Air Assault techniques.

For more information about the reunion, contact the National Secretary, Paul E. Brown, 14 Deer Meadows, Canyon Lake, Texas 78133.

Well Baby schedules change

By Shawn Bryson
Bayonet staff writer

Schedules of Martin Army Community Hospital's Well Baby Clinic have changed due to a turnover in staff.

To provide care for the largest number of patients, parents are asked to call for appointments for examinations and immunizations.

A newborn's first appointment, a two-week checkup, is scheduled by the MACH nursery. The appointment may not be rescheduled because it is not mandatory.

Two-month Well Baby checkups are done Tuesdays, four-month checkups Thursdays and six-month checkups Wednesdays.

These visits include a physical examination of the baby, Diphtheria-Pertussis-Tetanus/Oral Polio Vaccine immunizations and education for parents.

Appointments for checkups are made by calling 544-3061.

Other services provided are the 12-month Tuberculous Tine Test, the 15-month Measles, Mumps and Rubella, the 18-month DPT/OPV and the Haemophilus-B, as well as "make up" immunizations for those who have missed regularly scheduled immunizations. These are given Tuesday mornings and Friday afternoons.

HIB, the so-called "2-year-old shot," was originally developed for use at 24 months of age to immunize against a bacteria that can cause meningitis.

Recent improvements in the vaccine permit babies to be immunized at 18 months old, at the same time they are given the regularly scheduled DPT/OPV, thereby protecting them six months earlier and eliminating a special visit for one immunization at 24 months.

The Pediatric Clinic will perform a Well Baby or Well Child examination, without immunizations, at any time by appointment.

Appointments for care, other than the Well Baby checkups described above, may be made by calling 544-1086/1087/1088.

Members of Family Practice should contact their clinic for examinations and immunizations.

Children over 2 years old will be given immunizations in the Immunization Clinic staff on the ninth floor.

Marksmanship unit has record-setting weekend

By Sally Roberts
U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit

It was a record-setting weekend at Fort Benning's Hook International Range as the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit sponsored the 29th U.S. International 300-meter championships and team tryouts.

Capt. Glen Dubis set a new Hook Range record in the kneeling portion of the three-position, free-rifle event and tied his old record in the standing position.

Dubis took top honors in the event, nearly 30 points ahead of the second-place finisher and led the three-man team to a first-place finish in the event.

This was Dubis' last match as a member of USAMU.

He is headed for the 2nd Armored Division in Europe. He said he will continue his competitive training while overseas.

Spec. Tommy Tamas shot two perfect scores in the Free Rifle English Match, tying the National Record.

Tamas, Dubis and Sgt. Brad Carnes made up the winning three-man team in this event.

Meanwhile, Carnes had his own individual triumph in the Standard Rifle event.

He won the match only one point ahead of the second-place finisher Capt. Steve Goff from USAMU.

Carnes also took third place in the three-position, free rifle and the English Match.

More than 40 military and civilian competitors participated in the events.

2-18th wins best small dining facility

By Aurelio Feliberty
197th Infantry Brigade

The 2nd Battalion, 18th Infantry dining facility has won the award for the best small dining facility at Fort Benning.

Maj. Gen. Michael F. Spigelmire, post commander, presented the award to Sgt. 1st Class Aurelio Colon, 2nd Bn., 18th's dining facility manager.

It was a double award ceremony for 2nd Bn., 18th Inf. when Col. Harvey D. Watson, 197th Infantry Brigade commander, presented a plaque to Colon, naming his facility the best in the brigade for the second quarter.

According to Chief Warrant Officer James E. Richardson, brigade food adviser, the Philip A. Connelly award was named after the late Philip A. Connelly, former president of the International Food Services Executives Association, the organization that sponsors the competition.

"This award is an annual event to recognize the dining facility that excels above others in its daily activities," said Richardson.

"Each dining facility underwent several competitions within the brigade. The best facility was then chosen for the installation competition. As the Fort Benning winner, 2nd Bn., 18th Inf. will compete for the top dining facility in TRADOC," said Richardson.

"I'm hoping to win the Training and Doctrine Command competition next month. I feel good about this, and the soldiers enjoy the competition. There's a lot of work involved, but it sure pays off in the end," Colon said.

Marksmen set records in New York at Running Target Championships

By Sally Roberts
U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit

Members of the the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit team combined forces recently during the New York State Running Target Championships to set a new National and Service record in the 10-meter Air Rifle team event.

According to Sgt. 1st Class Michael Delk, he, Sgt. Troy Lawton and Spec. Michael Moore combined talents to beat the old record by more than 30 points.

Shooters from the USAMU Running Target team spent the better part of September on the road, competing in the New York match and the Virginia State Running Target Championships in Quantico, Va.

The three-man combination of Delk, Lawton and Moore seemed unstoppable as they won each team event of the two matches. These soldiers now look forward to several weeks of training and local matches before they travel to the Olympic Training Center in Colorado Springs in November to shoot with the Hungarian rifle team.

1st Bn., 18th Inf. maneuvers through training

By Willie Hay
197th Infantry Brigade

An 11-man infantry squad slips cautiously through dense vegetation toward its first objective.

Gunfire startles them into action. The squad leader orders half of his men — the lead team — to provide a protective base of fire, while the second team bounds around to the left and right to seize the objective.

Once the squad has taken the objective, the squad leader assesses the status of ammunition, casualties and equipment and gives his "ACE report" to the platoon leader, the officer in charge of the maneuver.

Infantry squads of the 1st Battalion, 18th Infantry carried out this maneuver last week in a live-fire exercise at Ware Range, while their leaders evaluated their proficiency in preparation for next year's rotation to the National Training Center at Fort Irwin, Calif.

Five of the battalion's six companies — Company A was deployed to Fort Bragg, N.C. — stayed in the field Sept. 19 through 27 for training.

Each squad spent two and one half days honing individual movement techniques on Ware Range, while other squads fired their assigned weapons at Ruth Range, and still others fired antitank weapons at Hartell Observation Point.

"Whenever you have soldiers carrying live ammunition and making any type flanking movement, safety has to be the top priority of the officers and NCOs," said 2nd Lt. Todd Frye, one of the battalion's training officers and acting officer-in-charge of Ware Range during the exercise.

"All of the soldiers received safety briefings before coming to the field as part of their operations order and prior to all movements and rehearsals," said Staff Sgt. Rocky Noland, platoon sergeant of 2nd Plt., Co. B, 1st Bn., 18th Inf.

"Our goal was to make the training as realistic as possible, while ensuring no one was injured," Noland said.

The officers and NCOs evaluated their soldiers on every aspect of the training, often requiring squads to repeat tasks until every soldier met the standards.

Training in basic infantry skills was another priority of the exercise.

"Fundamentals are perishable unless the soldiers drill repeatedly as a squad," said Capt. Steven Banach, Co. B commander. "We expect to have three more squad live-fire events this year and probably another three or four before our next rotation to NTC."

Perhaps the chief outcome of the training is the increased confidence it builds.

"I've got the greatest soldiers in the Army, and I trust my NCOs to train them in the fundamentals of infantry squad tactics," Banach said.

Firing antitank weapons at Hartell Observation Point was also a confidence builder for the soldiers of Co. E, according to its commander, Capt. John M. Brasher.

"We don't normally have the opportunity to fire antitank weapons more than once a year," said Brasher, whose soldiers fired the TOW, Dragon and Flash missiles. "That's what makes this exercise particularly beneficial in building the confidence of my gunners."

"Qualification with the TOW and Dragon is an annual or, in some cases, quarterly requirement, but that's accomplished on the M-70 trainer set," said Sgt. 1st Class Chris Bregovi, Co. E first sergeant. "The gunners don't lose their qualification if the missile fails to engage the target."

"The main purpose of the live fire is to train realistically in a tactical setting," Bregovi said "Each track is operated by a four-man squad, and teamwork is essential to their mission."

Benning aluminum recycling center to open

The on-post program will make it easier for Fort Benning residents to recycle aluminum products.

By Michelle Le Roy Harrison
Bayonet staff writer

Individuals looking for an easy way to get a little extra cash or units wanting to earn money for parties, trips or equipment for dayrooms, hold on to those soda cans. Aluminum recycling might be the answer.

Fort Benning's Installation Morale, Welfare and Recreation has established a commercial aluminum recycling program scheduled to begin Wednesday.

The on-post program will make it easier for Fort Benning residents to turn in aluminum, rather than make trips to civilian recycling centers.

The program will offer monetary incentives equivalent to those paid at off-post facilities.

Also, collecting aluminum will "help clean up the post," according to John Reynolds, assistant chief of community operations.

Products suitable for recycling include all-aluminum products such as soda cans, pie plates, and aluminum foil.

Aluminum products mixed with steel, fiber, plastic or debris will not be accepted. There is a 24-aluminum-can minimum to process.

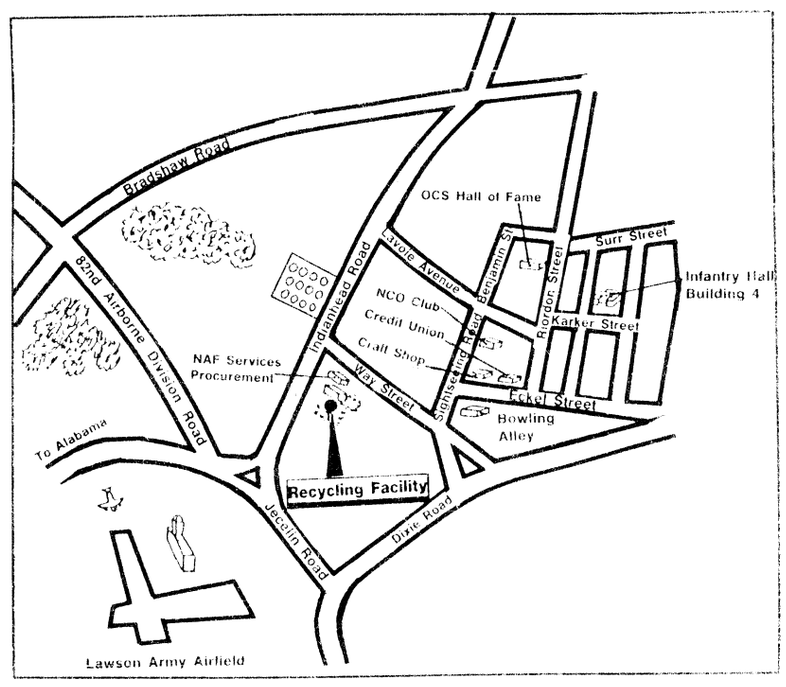
The recycling point will have a crushing machine so there is no need to prepare aluminum beforehand.

The program is open to all soldiers, their family members, Department of Defense civilians, retirees, contractors and anyone who is authorized to use MWR facilities.

Troop units and MWR activities will receive credit to their unit fund or MWR accounts for the full cash value of aluminum products turned in.

Directorates, organizations and tenant units that do not have MWR accounts will have the value of their turn-in reported.

Their contributions will be recognized with a certificate issued by the installation recycle committee under the commander's signature.



According to Reynolds, the recycle committee will make daily contact with the aluminum market and offer an equivalent price of the going rate.

Last week, the current rate for one pound of aluminum was 25 cents, according to a spokesman from a Columbus aluminum recycling center. The value of aluminum can vary day to day.

Cash will be paid on-the-spot by a cashier. In the event a cashier is not available, a voucher, redeemable for cash at Fort Benning Officer or NCO clubs, will be given.

Times determining when a cashier will be present will be based on customer demand.

The recycling point will be located adjacent to building 2288 on Alekno Street. Hours of operation will be Tuesday through Saturday, 10 a.m. to 3:30 p.m. For more information, call 687-8000/8920.

ASK THE JUDGE

Q. I recently had to have the catalytic converter replaced on my car. It cost more than $500. Since the warranty had just run out, I had to pay the entire amount myself.

Afterward, I read something about catalytic converters and other motor parts being covered by a warranty the federal government ordered the car dealers to have. Is this true?

A. The Clean Air Act requires car manufacturers to equip their cars so that they comply with federal emissions standards.

These emissions standards are required to be maintained at the proper levels for at least five years or 50,000 miles, whichever comes first.

To make sure this happens, the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency requires all car manufacturers to warrant certain parts of the motor and exhaust system on every new car for at least five years or 50,000 miles.

Some of the parts covered are the catalytic converter, intake and exhaust manifolds, electronic engine module, carburetor parts, fuel injection, air-cleaner-duct valves and motors, ignition module and turbo chargers.

The warranty also covers other smaller, less expensive parts, such as spark plugs and other minor adjustments.

However, these smaller parts are usually limited to only two years or 24,000 miles and replacement is governed by the cost of the part.

In your case the catalytic converter was still under warranty and the manufacturer was required to replace it, at no expense to you.

You should request reimbursement of the cost of the new catalytic converter from the manufacturer.

These warranties are very extensive and cover many expensive parts of the motor and exhaust system.

When you have car problems in these areas, make sure to ask the dealer if this emissions warranty will cover the repair expenses your other warranties don't.

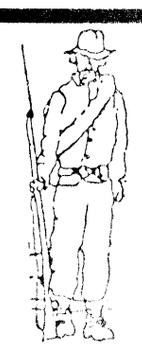
The only way for you to protect yourself is to learn about this warranty and hold the manufacturer to it.

Most manufacturers rarely advertise this warranty and even have the warranty in a small separate brochure.

Many new car owners only read the new car manual and never see this additional extensive warranty.

Another point to remember is this warranty is automatically transferred to any other buyer of the car. As long as the car is properly maintained, is less than five years old, or has less than 50,000 miles, the warranty is still effective and must be honored by the manufacturer.

Learn what your rights are. Don't be afraid to ask questions and make the manufacturer pay what he is legally required to. Don't take no for an answer.



Should you have any questions, call your legal assistance office at 545-3281.

Engel swings to All-Army team

Artilleryman leads Army to interservice championship victory

By Willie Hay
197th Infantry Brigade

A hundred practice balls a day and low scores dropped a 4th Battalion, 41st Field Artillery lieutenant colonel onto the green.

Lt. Col. Bill Engel was selected as one of the best by the All-Army team during competition Sept. 5 through 8 at Fort Sam Houston in San Antonio, Texas.

"I really hadn't been playing much golf at all this year when Col. (Harvey D.) Watson (commander of the 197th Infantry Brigade) received a call from the Department of the Army Sports Office to request that I return to All-Army since I was last year's champion," said Engel, who competed in the Army's top tournaments in 1972, 1973, 1974 and again in 1988.

A week after his selection for the All-Army team, he helped lead the Army to victory in the interservice championships at Wright-Patterson Air Force Base in Dayton, Ohio.

His next stop was the United Services Life Classic in Washington, D.C., where he was one of 32 military golfers who joined 32 professionals on the links.

Again, the Army finished first among the four military services, followed by the Navy, Air Force and Marines, respectively.

Then, it was back to Fort Benning for last week's Redleg Open, his battalion's annual tournament to raise money to purchase a Christmas present for each young family member in 4th Bn., 41st Inf. to be given at the unit Christmas party.

But all of this month's golfing would never have occurred without Engel's long string of past successes in the sport, along with a phone call from Washington to his brigade commander.

"It was my performance last year that led to my going to this year's championships because I not only won last year's senior division for men 40 and older, but also came out with the lowest score among all the men and women in the All-Army tournaments," he said.

Willie Hay

Lt. Col. Bill Engel takes a swing on the green.

There are probably a lot of people at Fort Benning who play more golf than Engel, but there may be only one or two who practice like he does, he said.

"Before I won last year's All-Army title, I hit at least 100 practice balls a day for three months. When I found out I was going to play again this year, I hit 100 practice balls a night for 10 days.

"You see, in a round of golf you usually hit only 35 to 40 shots, but it takes four hours to play the course," he explained. "I can hit 35 to 40 practice balls in my back yard in 20 minutes.

Engel says he took up the sport as a teen-ager when he discovered he wasn't cut out for baseball.

"My goal as a young boy was to win a college letter someday," he said. "When I was 15, I sat down with my dad after batting just .085 in baseball in my freshman year in high school. I told him I couldn't see myself winning a college letter in baseball, but I thought I might have better luck trying to hit a ball that wasn't moving."

He went on to play golf for the next three years in high school and throughout his four years at Virginia Tech, in Blacksburg, Va.

While he was in college, Engel achieved what he still considers his greatest success with the sport.

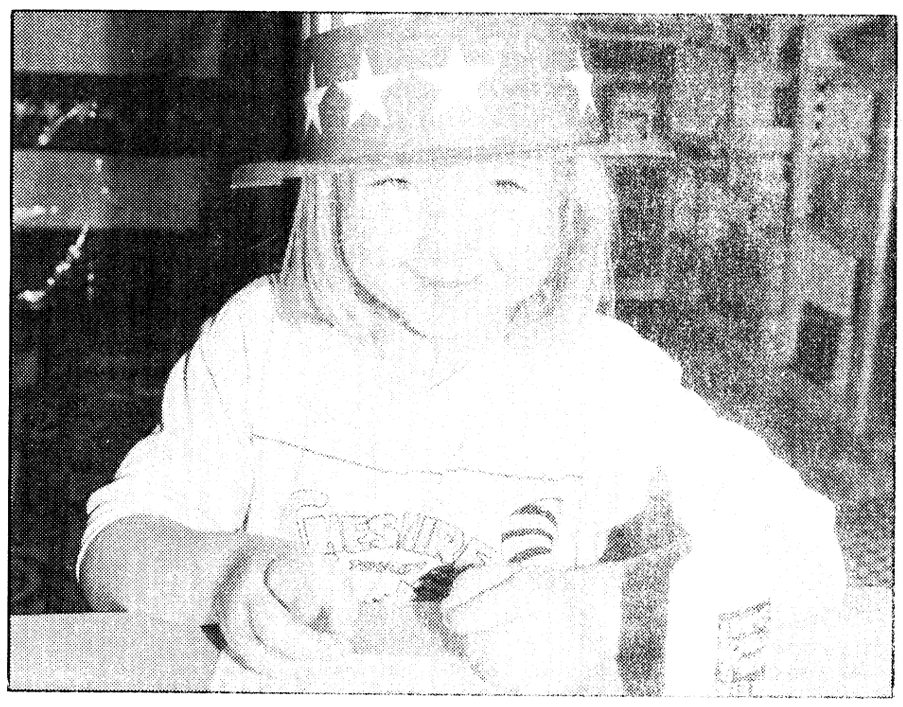
"I was a member of Virginia Tech's team in the 1967 NCAA (National Collegiate Athletic Association) golf championship," he recalled. "We finished fifth nationwide, but that was my school's best finish up to that time, and it wasn't until last year that the Virginia Tech cross-country team finally broke that long-standing record."

Engel said he considers golf the greatest sport ever invented and says he's happy to see it growing in popularity.

"It's a thinking person's game, which I think turns some people off, but it happens to turn me on," he said.

"For example, the Southern Open draws thousands of spectators to the Green Island golf course here in Columbus, but you can hear a pin drop during the conduct of a stroke. A hush falls over the crowd because everyone realizes that a golfer must have complete concentration on his shot," Engel said.

"Golf is the one sport that pits you entirely against the elements, and you've got no one but yourself to blame if you don't have a good game," he said.



According to Engel, golfing is one of only a handful of sports a person can enjoy throughout his or her lifetime.

"My father is a great example of someone for whom golf is a lifetime sport," he said.

"He took up the game about 20 years ago and now, at the age of 77, he still plays 18 holes of golf five days a week.

Engel says golf is a sport than can be enjoyed by all soldiers, regardless of rank and the military duties that go along with it.

"The Army has always fostered participation in athletics at the highest levels," he said.

Fort Benning celebrates Constitution Week

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

The National Infantry Museum kicked off Constitution Week, Sept. 17 through 23, with a bell-ringing ceremony at the museum.

It was part of "Bells Across America," a program where participants from across the nation rang a bell at a designated time to celebrate the Constitution.

To depict the week, The Staff Judge Advocate set up a special exhibit in Infantry Hall which focused on the 200th anniversary of Judiciary Act of 1789.

The act established the Supreme Court, three circuit courts and the Office of the Attorney General.

Flyers hung all week long above Infantry Hall to the bicentennial of the Constitution.

To round out the activities, the chaplain's office conducted "Religious Freedom Day."

Deer hunting season begins Oct. 21

Hunters who take care of their firearms can have safe season

Infantry Branch Safety Office

Deer hunting season officially opens Oct. 21 on post. Hunters everywhere are getting ready for the upcoming season. By planning and taking some precautions, many will have a successful season.

What many seasonal hunters forgot last year was thorough cleaning of the firearm. Now it's almost too late to take "old thunderstick" to the gun shop and get it back before big game season starts.

Many of those difficulties can be remedied in the comfort of your home, especially maladies such as misfires, firing pins, ejectors, hangs and faulty trigger release.

Misfires are caused by a couple of reasons. The first one is because of a dirty bolt. This keeps the face of the bolt from seating or getting a firm grip on the rim of the shell, thereby, not allowing the firing pin to exert sufficient striking pressure on the primer for each and every shell to fire.

The second most common cause is a broken or worn firing pin. Both causes can generally be fixed by the user.

Removal and a good scrubbing of the bolt face will take care of the buildup of carbon and dirt on the face of the bolt. Check it closely to make sure it's free of metal burrs that would inhibit proper seating of the shell. If you find a burred area, look for a cause — there could be more problems. A good honing stone or jeweler's file will normally clear up this problem.

A broken or worn firing pin is, as a general rule, easily repaired by replacing the part. Attention must be taken in the take down of the bolt. If you're not familiar with the take down procedure then start by laying the parts out in sequential line as you disassemble, replace the firing pin, and reassembled in the reverse order.

If the gun won't eject the spent cartridge, take a look and see if the ejector is clogged with grit and grime. Check out the ejector itself and see if it's broken. Cleaning and replacement of the part will remedy this one also.

Shells hanging when attempting to load can be caused by a weak magazine spring. Pull the spring and minutely stretch to increase tension. Rarely is this spring found broken. The main cause for a weak spring is that the weapon has been stored loaded. This type of storing practice compresses the spring which reduces tension. It is also a dangerous practice.

A faulty trigger release isn't that common, but again, the normal cause is just plain old dirt and grime. Clean it up, check for undue wear and replace or hone as necessary.

Tighten those loose screws up. Just for the want of replacement screw, hunting could pass you by while trying to find one.

As in all cases, a supplier for replacement parts is necessary. There are many suppliers available. It's up to you to find one that will fit your needs. A federal firearms license isn't required to order many replacement parts. When you get into the ordering of receivers (and some barrels), an FFL is normally required.

Here are "Ten Commandments of Gun Safety" for the sport shooter.

- Treat every gun with the respect due a loaded gun.
- Carry only empty guns, taken down or with the action open, into your automobile, camp or home.
- Always be sure that the barrel and action are clear of obstructions.
- Always carry your gun so that you can control the direction of the muzzle even if you stumble.
- Be sure of your target before you pull the trigger.
- Never point a gun at anything you do not want to shoot.
- Never leave your gun unattended unless you unload it first.
- Never climb a tree or fence with a loaded gun.
- Never shoot at a flat, hard surface or the surface of water.
- Do not mix gunpowder and alcohol.

Whenever these rules are applied to hunting or target shooting, the wealth of safety is unquestionable. One of the most important rules to follow is that of common sense. When in doubt, don't.

Be aware of firearm safety every time you pick one up.

The Dougherty County Public Library will once again sponsor "Authors: Up Close & Personal."

Funded through a library services and construction act grant, this series of 1989-90 programs will feature noted Southern authors who will speak on the art of writing as well as their own published works. A segment of each program is designed to allow the audience to question the authors.

Two authors are scheduled for October. Phillip Lee Williams will appear Oct. 17, and Larry Brown will appear Oct. 24. Both programs will be held at the Central Library at 7:30 p.m. Alex Haley is scheduled to appear at the newly renovated Municipal Auditorium March 8, 1990.

All programs are free and open to the public. Call (912) 431-2900 for further information.

Jewish holidays mark the beginning of the new year

By Chap. Barry R. Baron
Jewish Chaplain

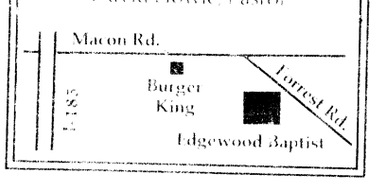
The turning of summer into fall marks a shift in most people's lives from the laziness of vacation time to renewed concern with school and work.

As our schedules gear up once again, we begin to think of new goals while looking back over the past year's achievements.

This is the season for two of Judaism's most important holidays, Rosh Hashanah and Yom Kippur.

Rosh Hashanah (Hebrew for "Head of the Year") marks the beginning of the Jewish liturgical calendar year and inaugurates a solemn 10-day period of prayer, contemplation and self-examination known as the "Days of Awe."

On Rosh Hashanah, God judges the conduct of humanity. The Shofar (ram's horn) is sounded, symbolizing God's summons to self-judgment, self-improvement and atonement. Apples are dipped in honey on the first evening of the holiday to usher in a sweet new year.



Yom Kippur (Hebrew for "Day of Atonement") is the holiest day of the Jewish year. The intensive self-examination begun 10 days earlier culminates in a full day of fasting, worship, study, confession and prayer.

This year, Rosh Hashanah occurs Saturday and Sunday while Yom Kippur falls on Oct. 9. Jews everywhere pray that these days will inaugurate a year filled with hope, health and happiness for all.

Benning soldiers star in Springer's 'The Nerd'

Springer Opera House

Two Fort Benning soldiers are leading characters in the Springer Opera House's production of Larry Shue's comedy, "The Nerd."

Maj. Neal Pearce, chief, Small Arms Test Division and Cpl. Martin Howley, a driver with the Infantry Training Center, have key parts in the play.

A third soldier, Capt. Christopher Mulloney, who is assigned to Fort Campbell, Ky., also plays one of the leading characters.

Mulloney and Howley play the two main characters who meet in the Army in the play.

The Nerd, which is being performed at the Springer Opera house through Sept. 30, presents a rare example of the late playwright's work.

The young Shue was killed in a 1985 airplane crash just as his first major hit, "The Foreigner," was breaking box office records in New York and in the American regional theatres.

Springer managing artistic director, Paul R. Pierce, stages the show, which opened Thursday and continues through Saturday.

"It's a pity we lost this inspiring playwright just as his career was beginning," Pierce said. "He had a unique gift for putting totally improbable events into naturalistic situations that we somehow accept.

"That's where the comedy of his writing is. Larry Shue had a great interest in the plight of the outcast, the outsider. In his plays, the oddball is the center of attention and usually winds up the hero."

In "The Nerd," Rick saved Willum's life in Vietnam 25 years ago and drops in for a surprise visit. Willum feels compelled to welcome Rick into his home even though the visitor is a thick-skinned cretin and one-man demolition squad.

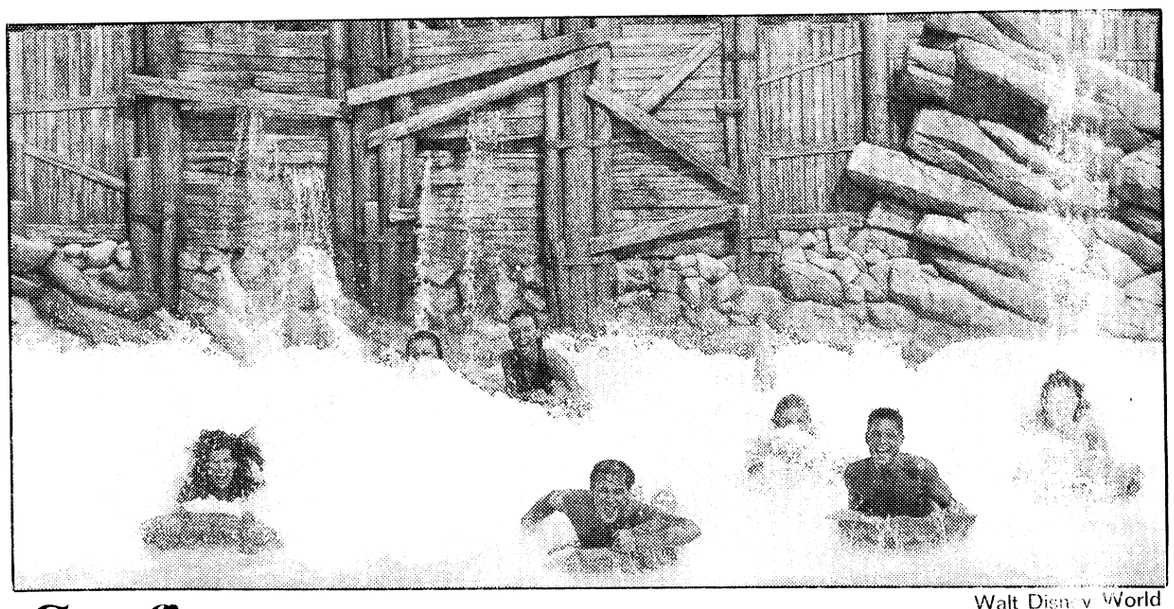
Rick moves in with a tambourine, his brother Bo[illegible] credit cards, his autographed picture of Hugh Downs and expects his chihuahua to be shipped in any day.

After six days of torture, Willum reluctantly agrees to join in his friends in an elaborate all-out war on the nerd. As in all of Shue's plays, there is a happy resolution and a surprise twist ending.

Several artists associated with this production of "The Nerd" have a special relationship to their assignments.

Columbus Ledger-Enquirer drama critic Ric "Bric" Barker portrays Willum's friend Alex Hammond, the flamboyant drama critic for a Terre Haute, Indiana newspaper.

Peter Cranton, a young local architect (and scenic designer for last season's Steel Magnolia's), has designed the set for "The Nerd" The set is the home of Willum Cubbert himself a rising young architect.



"The Nerd" runs through Saturday on the Springer main stage. Performances begin at 8 p.m.

WHEN: Friday and Saturday at 8 p.m.

CG stresses safety during long weekend

This year we celebrate Columbus Day on Monday. This three-day holiday weekend signals a special need to be alert to the ever present and real threat of traffic accidents.

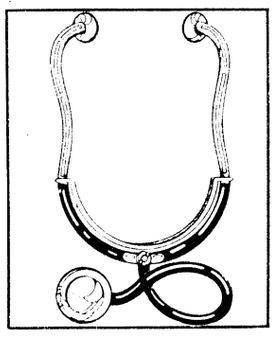
Our most effective weapons against traffic accidents are awareness and preparedness. Not only do our vehicles need to be in top operating condition, but so do we.

Before starting off on any trip, we must ensure our vehicles are road worthy, have good brakes and tires and everything works the way it was meant to work.

We must be mentally alert and physically rested. We need to stay sober and constantly aware of our environment, adjusting our driving to match road and weather conditions.

We need to obey all traffic laws, especially posted speed limits, wear seat belts and be mindful of the other driver, whose proficiency may be less than ours.

If we take all these precautions, we should be able to enjoy a much-deserved three-day break and return to work rested and healthy.



Have a good, safe weekend.

Cooks prepare to turn the roasted pig during the Hawaiian Luau held at Fort Benning

Columbus celebrates

Bayonet staff writer

Columbus starts buzzing tonight and promises a little bit of something for everyone this weekend as "Celebrate Columbus" gets underway.

Oktoberfest, which kicks off tonight, is the first of a long line of events scheduled to entertain folks in the tri-community area through Oct. 14.

Sponsored by the Chattahoochee Valley/Fort Benning Chapter of the Association of the United States Army, Oktoberfest begins tonight at 6 p.m., at the Ironworks Convention & Trade Center, and runs through Sunday.

In the past, Oktoberfest was a one-night event, but its success warranted the new weekend schedule, according to Command Sgt. Maj. (Retired) Jim Gallagher, special events coordinator for AUSA.

German food, music and entertainment are among the festivities planned for Oktoberfest, now in its sixth year.

Miss Georgia, Miss Columbus and Miss Phenix City will make appearances Saturday, as well as a Rock and Top 40 band.

The hours for the event are 6 p.m. to midnight, Friday, noon to midnight, Saturday and 1 p.m. to midnight, Sunday.

Daily tickets are $3. A two-day ticket can be purchased for $5 and a three-day ticket for $6. Tickets are available at Fort Benning through unit command sergeants major and at post banks.

Several other "Celebrate Columbus" events also begin this weekend.

The Classic 10K Race begins early Saturday morning at the Ironworks. The race includes a fun run at 8 a.m., with the 10K following at 8:30 a.m. Both races will be run through uptown Columbus. The entry fee is $8 today and $9 Saturday before the race.

The Heritage Festival will be held Saturday, 9 a.m. to 8 p.m. on Broadway between 9th and 10th streets. The festival is free to the public and will provide an indepth look at the diversity of ethnic heritages in Columbus. Arts, crafts, clothing, foods and lifestyles of each heritage will be on display at the festival.

Benning hosts Hawaiian Luau

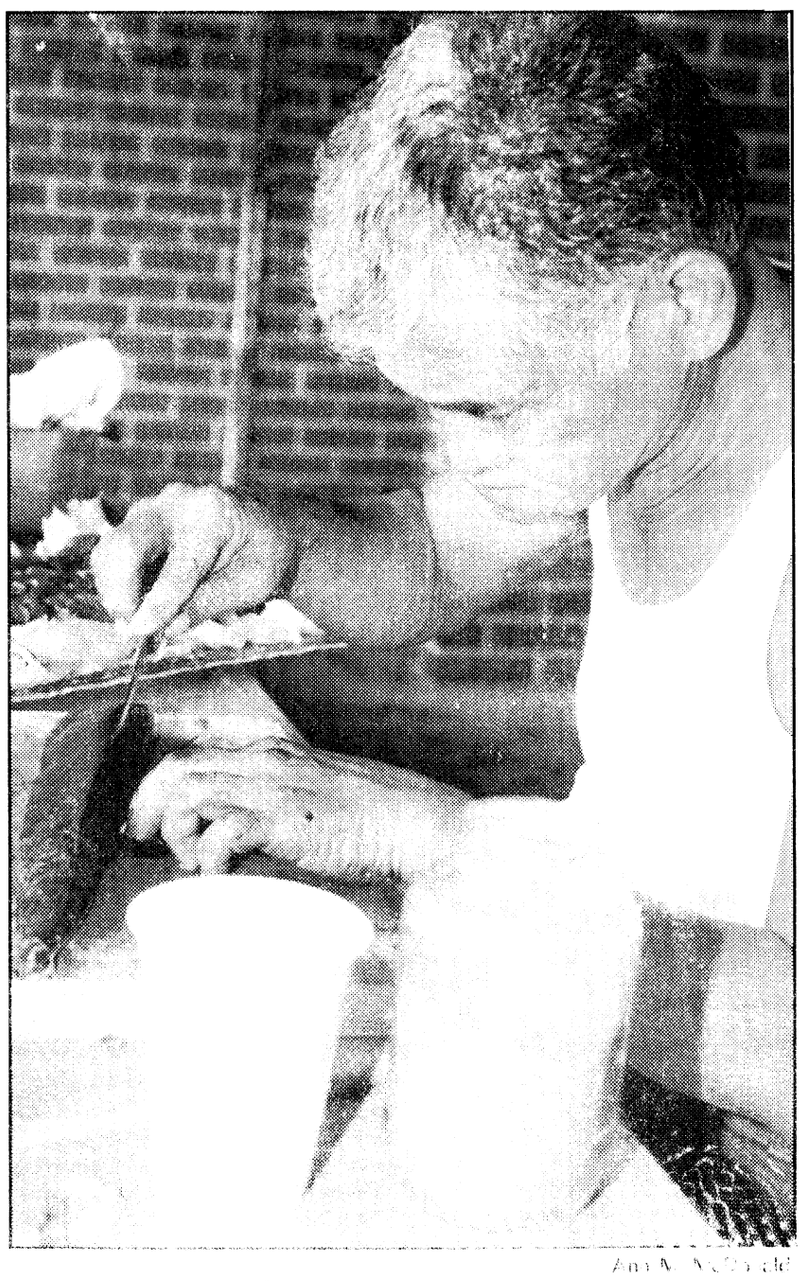
By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

Fort Benning's Riverside took on the look of the South Pacific last week during the Tri-Community Buffet conducted on the grounds of the commanding general's quarters.

The quarters were the site of a genuine Hawaiian luau complete with hula dancers, ukulele players and the traditional roasted pig.

The buffet is an annual affair conducted to recognize people in the tri-community area who continually give their support to Fort Benning.

Former Phenix City mayor, Jane Gullatt, was given special tribute as she has now stepped down from her post.



But, the food and the entertainment couldn't be genuine without a lot of prior preparation.

Sgt. 1st Class Curtis Lamho and his friends, Sgt. 1st Class Curtis Krutz, Sgt. Larry Castro, Sgt. 1st Class Greg Scharsch, Staff Sgt. Steven Jerrel, Sgt. 1st Class Wesley Batalona and Joe Kekaualua gathered at Russ Pond on Sept. 28 to start preparing the pigs for the next day's festivities.

According to Lamho they had to start early because it takes a long time to properly roast a pig Hawaiian style.

"We camped out at the pond all night preparing the meat," he said.

With each of the hogs weighing in at more than 200 pounds it was necessary to have that many people just to turn over the meat, Lamho said.

Conference attracts 40 agencies

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

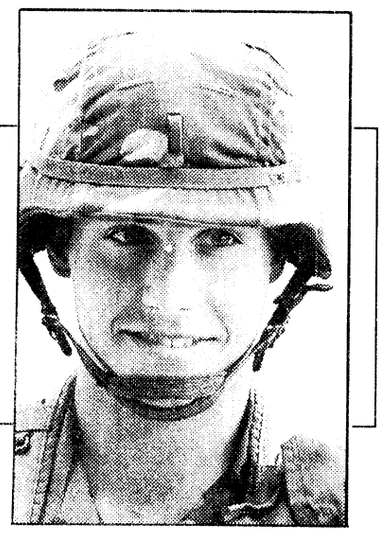
The Ranger Training Brigade played host to more than 40 different agencies for the 1989 Long Range Surveillance Conference conducted here last week.

The purpose of the three-day conference was to provide a forum in which the invited agencies could discuss and develop positions on a wide range of issues in the areas of training, doctrine, combat developments, organization and other aspects of LRS.

Through the knowledge gained at the conference it is hoped that communication on LRS will continue to develop. This will aid RTB in conducting its' LRS course.

The course builds on the experiences of Rangers and Special Forces and is taught using the most current tactical doctrine. The emphasis is placed on developing military skills in the planning and conduct of dismounted, airborne, airmobile, and waterborne patrolling operations.

The emphasis placed in these areas gives the leader the oppportunity to develop and prove himself in a rugged course of instruction. The course is stress oriented which develops the students ability to lead and command under heavy mental, emotional, and physical pressures. The emphasis is on practical, realistic, and strenuous field exercises using the six-man teams.



During the conference, experts spoke on different aspects of LRS and equipment.

Who discovered America?

Despite claims by others, Columbus gets the credit

By Clyde Snively
Bayonet staff writer

Looking over the official "what's happening calendar" published by the Department of the Army, I noticed we celebrate Oct. 9 by not coming to work.

Many of you already know the holiday as Columbus Day. That's what the calendar calls it.

But it also notes that Oct. 9 is Yom Kippur, no surprise; that Oct. 9, 1930, was the day Laura Ingalls became the first woman to fly across the U.S. — I assume she used a plane and was the pilot — not a passenger.

Then, almost escaping my attention, I saw that Leif Ericsson was being honored. "I wonder when they slipped that one in on us," I said to myself.

Now I've heard of Leif Ericsson. As a school kid I learned he was the son of Eric the Red who was run out of Norway for killing someone, then run out of Iceland for some more killing, so for want of anything else to do, he explored Greenland, finally settling there in about 1000 A.D.

Of course we all know the story behind the names of those two islands — Iceland is beautiful and lush (comparatively speaking), whereas Greenland is a barren wasteland, but to trick the unwary into settling Greenland and laying off Iceland, the crafty Norseman came up with those respective names.

Which brings us back to this holiday we're celebrating. Sure, Columbus sailed the ocean blue in 1492, using borrowed money from a foreign government since his own countrymen thought he was crazy.

Old Chris had the presence of mind to write a few things down, even though he wasn't anywhere close to where he thought he was (does this sound anything like today's bureaucracy?) thus documenting what he'd done, where he'd been and when.

So, when looking around for an opportunity to give federal workers some time off, Congress came up with Columbus Day.

Well, the Scandinavian contingent, headquartered in some ice house in northern Minnesota, Kensington, I believe, finally unthawed and put in a bid for their ancestors being the ones to discover the new world. They even faked some stones that placed Scandanavian adventurers in Minnesota as early as the 1300s. Their excuse for not making them public sooner was the stones had been frozen all that time and who can read Runic under ice?

But they did have a lot of support for their cause. Historians will tell you about Bjarne Herjulfson who got lost and missed Greenland on the way back from Scandinavia. He ended up discovering Labrador and Baffin. He knew he was in the wrong place right away because he could see trees growing on the land.

When he told Leif about the trees, Leif then set off — remember, Greenland ain't got trees — to get some.

Leif liked the place so much, he ended up settling there and called the place Vinland.

Interestingly enough no one's ever been able to figure out just where Vinland was although Nova Scotia is promoted by some while others prefer to think it's in New England (no wine grapes could survive north of Maine).

Well the Scandinavian lobby wasn't strong enough to replace Columbus' name with Ericsson's, but some calendar makers did grant them a concession by renaming Oct. 9 (actually the second Monday in October) Discovery Day or, in some instances, Pioneer Day. These calendar makers are smart. Now they've got everyone covered, such as the American Indians who may also want to stake a claim since they were here long before any pale faces. Those little bitty squares can hold just so much writing.

Also, taking ol' Chris' name off the calendar would certainly spoil some big plans for communities named after the gent who never did reach the coast of North America and who insisted to his death that he'd discovered a new route to the Orient instead of a new continent. After all, what else can we celebrate in this country that's 500 years old?

I guess the moral of the story is — are you listening IOBC lieutenants — no matter how lost you are, keep trucking. You never know what you'll discover, or how famous you'll become in the process.

Defending soldiers' interests

An NCO's tale

By J.C. Mathews
Army News Service

A lone NCO at the Presidio of San Francisco took up the Arthurian role of kitchen boy Beaumains, laying seige against the military's own Castle Perilous to rescue a soldier in distress.

Clad in Class-B armor, armed only with a sense of duty and of outrage, Sgt. 1st Class Gerald J. Gallegos challenged the dark and mysterious forces in the Pentagon that ply the black art of personnel assignments.

Twelve hours later, Gallegos' banner waved above his dazed and fallen enemy.

The story was reported in the July 14 issue of the Presidio's Star Presidian. Gallegos' quest was to help a soldier whose orders for an overseas assignment were unexpectedly cancelled the day before he was to leave for his new unit. The soldier's family had already left 32-year-old showed utter disdain for the potential consequences of his actions, and saw to it that the soldier got the help he needed.

In a day when soldiering is often regarded as more of a federal career than a profession of arms, Gallegos' dedication to the welfare of a single soldier among thousands is more than refreshing; it's a reaffirmation of the role of the NCO in today's Army.

Soldiers look to their NCOs for more than just training and guidance. They depend on their sergeants for protection against what can seem a huge, faceless, Army-green machine. The best of intentions notwithstanding, the sheer enormity of the organizational machine sometimes places individual soldiers in its path of destruction. And, once set in motion, the machine's irresistible forces can only be stopped by an immovable object.

It is the specified duty of NCOs to be that immovable object the San Francisco area, and their household goods had been shipped ahead to the new duty station.

In short, the soldier badly needed help, and he needed it fast.

He got it.

Gallegos' assistant recounted the incident, saying the furious re-up NCO challenged the responsible Pentagon official to "meet with pistols at sunset" if that's what it would take to help the soldier.

"Send me a nasty gram," Gallegos told the official. "If you want me to sign it in blood and send it back, I'll do it. You can come down on me, but don't hurt this soldier."

In less than 12 hours, the soldier's orders were reinstated.

Doing battle with the Pentagon is never the road to success in the Army, but obviously Gallegos felt the soldier had to be defended. The when necessary.

"Accomplishment of the mission" and "welfare of the troops" may sometimes seem irreconcilable, but there's usually a way to get the job done while keeping soldiers' interests at heart — if an NCO is willing to work hard enough at it.

Sgt. 1st Class Gerald J. Gallegos was willing to work hard at it.

He was apparently even willing to lay his stripes on the line, something NCOs must be prepared to do from time to time, to help a soldier. Unlike Mallory's Beaumains, who was knighted Sir Gareth for his courage, Gallegos will take a seat at no "Round Table" for his act. Since Gallegos was just doing what every NCO should do — protect soldiers — perhaps it's better that way.

If what Gallegos did seems extraordinary, perhaps it's because few NCOs are willing to do the same.

43rd engineers go to aid Hugo victims

Ann M. McDonald

Sgt. John Harbison, Co. A, 43rd Eng. Bn., 36th Eng. Grp. makes some last minute adjustments to his vehicle before heading out with his battalion to help the victims of Hurricane Hugo in South Carolina.

Ledger-Enquirer Staff Writer

CAMDEN, S.C. — As South Carolina continues on the road to recovery following the devastation brought on by Hurricane Hugo more than a week ago, about 350 soldiers from Fort Benning were called in to help.

"If it wasn't for the Army, and all of the people coming from everywhere to help, this town wouldn't survive," said Camden city police officer, Sgt. Don Farrow.

More than 200 soldiers from 43rd Engineer Battalion's Company A, Headquarters Support Company and Company C were sent to work in areas around Lee County.

Arriving late Tuesday night, the soldiers jumped right in the next morning clearing roadways to allow power companies access so that utilities could be restored.

"We're making good progress," said Staff Sgt. Rodney Vanlandingham, a squad leader for Co. A, 43rd Eng. Bn. "In the short time we have been here, I've already seen a lot of improvements."

Anything the Army did, however, was an improvement over what Hugo had done.

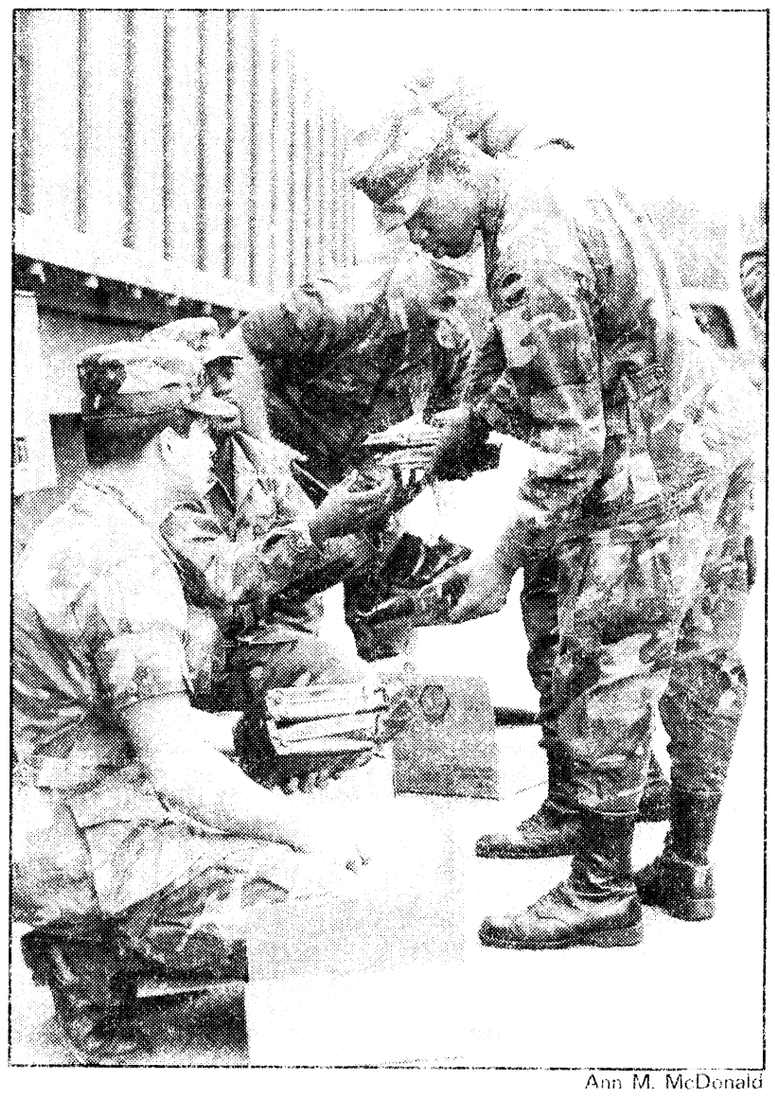
Located more than 100 miles inland, Camden and Lee County would seem to be unlikely candidates for such serious and severe damage from a hurricane. When Vanlandingham saw the condition of the town he was responsible for clearing, he said he was shocked.

"It's such a small town," he said. "It's hard to believe the amount of devastation."

What he saw were trees that had been sheared off at the top or torn from the ground completely. The trees landed all over the roads and lawns, and several cars were destroyed by the fallen trees.

Having been vaguely warned about the severity of the damage, the 43rd Eng. Bn. came to South Carolina prepared to handle anything Hugo had dealt. According to Staff Sgt. Ronald Jenkins, a platoon sergeant for HSC's heavy equipment platoon, 43rd Eng. Bn., the battalion had come here to live up to their motto "Power for Service."

"We knew there would be a lot of damage, so we brought a lot of heavy equipment to equalize the effort," he said.



Morale among the troops thus far is high despite unstable weather conditions. The soldiers have had to adjust to the weather varying from hot and sunny, to cool and rainy. The rain slowed down progress a little earlier this week by making the wood more difficult to cut, but the troops plugged away regardless using hand tools whenever necessary.

"We've got a mission," Vanlandingham said. "We're hot, and ready to go."

Another factor motivating the troops to do a good job, aside from wanting to complete their mission, is the reception they have received from the local residents.

"The people are living up to their reputation for southern hospitality," said Pvt. 2 Neal Poole, 2nd Plt., Co. A, 43rd Eng. Bn.

One soldier claims to have never said, "thank you" so frequently, and to so many people in his life. "There's always someone offering you something to drink," said Poole.

Ann M. McDonald

Meals Ready to Eat were the menu of the soldiers getting ready to move out to the hurricane victims.

The amount of hospitality being shown by the residents is, according to Farrow, the only way they can show how grateful they are for what the Army is doing.

The 43rd Eng. Bn. has already completed several of the projects the city assigned them initially, but as one project is completed, another is assigned. Officials estimate that the soldiers could be working on the clean-up project for as long as a month.

(Story by Kevin Hudson, a photojournalist with the 14th Public Affairs Detachment from Fort Carson, Colo.)

Army assists hurricane cleanup

Army News Service

More than 650 Army engineers are on their way to Charleston, S.C., to help the ravaged city recover from the devastation wrought by Hurricane Hugo Sept. 22.

Lead elements of the 43rd Engineer Battalion from Fort Benning, Ga., and the 3rd Engineer Battalion, 24th Infantry Division (Mechanized) from Fort Stewart, Ga., arrived in Charleston early Sept. 26.

According to an Army spokesman, the Benning soldiers will assist efforts to remove fallen trees and debris and perform some road repairs and limited construction.

A bridging company from the 3rd Engineer Battalion will set up a bridge ferry between the Charleston suburb of Mount Pleasant and Sullivan's Island. Hugo wrecked the pivot bridge over the intracoastal waterway — the only road access between Charleston and Sullivan's Island and Isle of Palms.

In addition to the engineer units, the 7th Transportation Group from Fort Eustis, Va., is on hand to determine other bridge ferry requirements for the Charleston area.

Army officials said the engineers are joined the relief effort in response to a request from the governor of South Carolina.

Rangers tackle Squad Stakes

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

For many soldiers, there's nothing better than a little friendly competition.

For Rangers, who go above and beyond everyday, friendly competition has a whole new meaning.

Company A, 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment recently completed a company squad competition, the Squad Stakes, fashioned after the Best Ranger Competition.

The Squad Stakes consisted of an Army Physical Fitness Test, 12 mile road march, a variety of orienteering tasks, land navigation, the Darby Queen Obstacle Course, log walk, rope drop suspension traverse and a helocast followed with a swim to shore.

According to platoon leader 1st Lt. Kevin Applebaum the company was broken down into 12 squads and scores were computed by squad, not individual. The men were given three days prior to the competion to train for the three-day event.

"We computed it by squad so they would act as a team," he said. "And, we didn't let them load up the good guys on any one squad. We used the squads they were normally assigned to."

Additionally, Applebaum said the competition was designed specifically to be used as a training aid.

Company Executive Officer 1st Lt. Loren Ramos explained that as useful as a training aid the squad leaders can evaluate their soldiers in a new way. Another plus is the soldiers get to test themselves.

"A lot of these privates have never done the log walk or a helocast," Ramos said, "both of which are pretty frightening when you do them for the first time."

He said all of these new things will build their confidence to new levels. But, that's not all that's being built. The level of comraderie amongst the squads is reaching new levels.

Ramos noted that soldiers were seen carrying in two weapons or an extra rucksack at the finish line of the road march.

"These men didn't do this for themselves they did it to help their squad," he said. "All of the squads reacted like this and as a result, the spread between first and second place was one point."

The squad who came out on top was 1st squad, 1st platoon, consisting of Staff Sgt. Wayne Jordan, Sgt. Byron Griffin, Spec. John Hoover and Pfcs. Patrick Zenk, David Cross and Derek Bleiler.

Jordan, the squad's leader, attributed their win to consistancy.

"We didn't place first on any of the events," he said, "but, we did consistantly score at least second."

Another bonus the squad had was Griffin competed in the Best Ranger Competition.

"I discovered a few tricks during my training for Best Ranger so I was able to help some of the guys out in some of the events," he said.

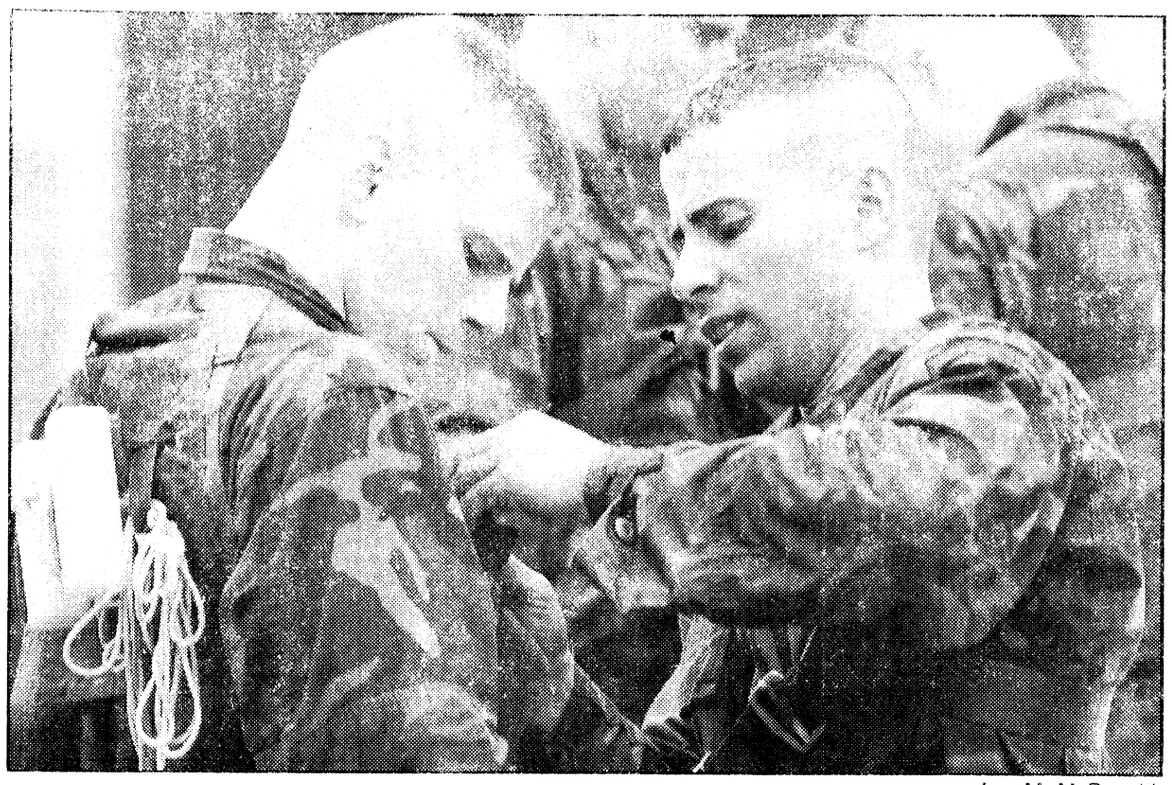
An added incentive for all of the squads was that one of the Best Ranger winners, Sgt. Michael Sonnenschein, is assigned to the company and was competing in one of the squads.

"We all wanted to catch Sgt. Sonnenschein because of his title," Zenk said.

Jordan added the squads were all driving hard which made his squad push even harder.

"I just told my men to give it all they had," Jordan said.

The men had to give it their all under a lot of adverse conditions. They did the helocast and swim on the coldest day of the season and they ran out of water during the road march.



"We had to get water from a creek," Jordan said. "It was either that or not be able to complete the road march."

As for the cold weather Hoover said, "Sometimes that works in your favor because you jump in and hurry up, so it's done with and you can get comfortable again."

Ramos said for their efforts they will be given a plaque with their names engraved a three day pass.

What does the squad leader think is the best thing his soldiers are getting out of it?

"They now know that if there is an opening they have what it takes to get to the top," he said.

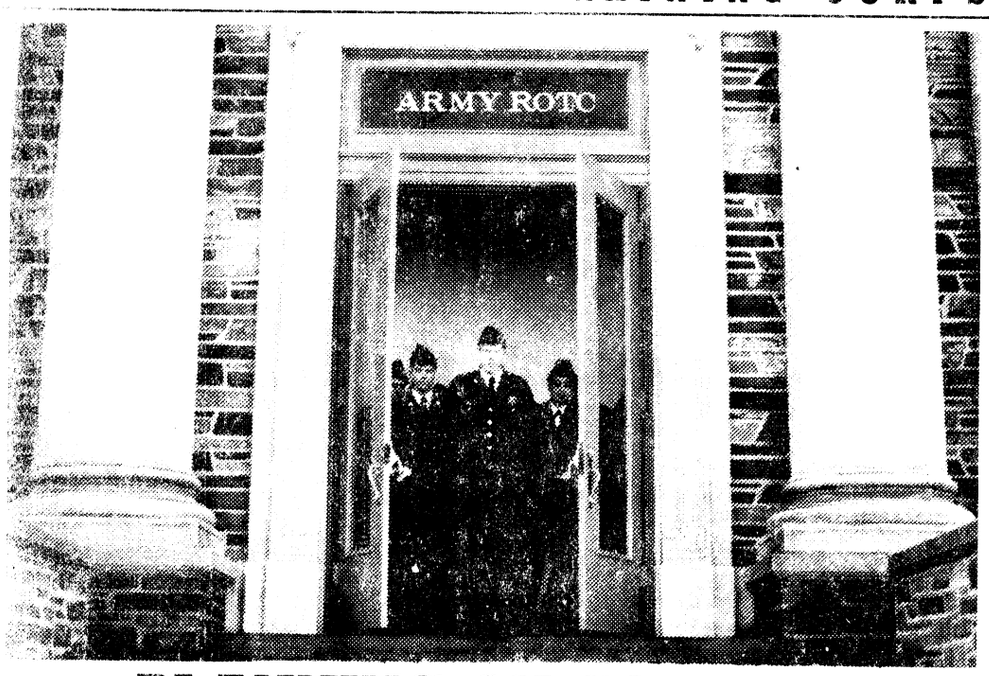
By using the following procedure, soldiers on the Family Housing Waiting List can use this chart to estimate when they can expect quarters.

Locate your category of housing.

Note eligibility date located on the same line as your category.

Calculate the time difference between the eligibility date listed and your eligibility date. The difference is the approximate time you still have to wait for housing.



EXAMPLE: If the latest eligibility date of the person who last received housing in your category was May 15, 1989, and your date of eligibility is Sept. 15, 1989, you can expect housing in about four months. If you do not know your eligibility date, contact the Family Housing Office at building 399, 545-3107.

Dining facility keeps 'em comin' back

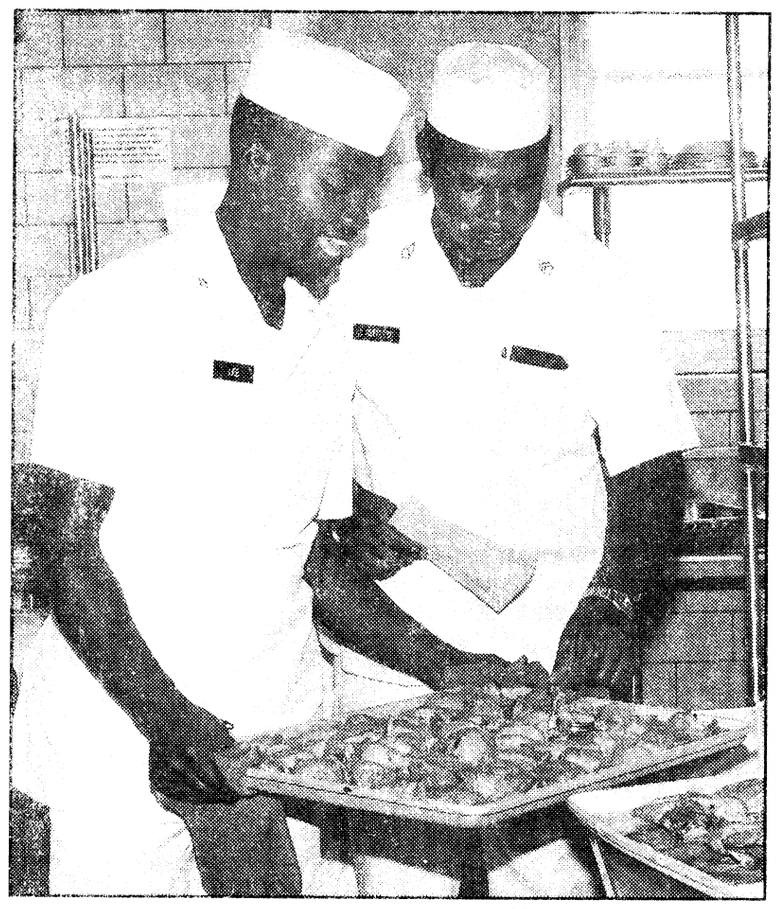
By Michelle Le Roy Harrison
Staff writer

What does an Army dining facility have that keeps its customers coming back for more...and wanting to?

The military and civilian cooks of the 43rd Engineer Battalion Dining Facility know the answer and have proof to back it up.

They were recently awarded as the Best Dining Facility of the Quarter (large category) at Fort Benning. The award was presented by post commander Gen. Michael F. Spigelmire.

What's the secret ingredients for winning? According to Sgt. 1st Class Freddie Walker, dining facility manager, it's listening to soldiers and trying to give them what they want.



An advisory committee meets monthly to hear comments from one soldier from each company.

Soldiers act as spokesmen relaying comments and questions from other soldiers. Most of the committee members are meal card holders themselves.

And, Walker said, feedback does bring changes.

"We've actually changed several things because of customers comments," he said.

For whatever the reason, whether it's more available selections, self-serve items, sack lunches or the breakfast bar, some of the cooks claim they have been receiving positive feedback from soldiers.

Staff Sgt. William Stitts (r) checks the work of Spec. Jackie Lee at the 43rd Eng. Bn. Dining Facility.

"It used to be you could never satisfy anyone," Spec. Andre Chambers said. "Now, they (soldiers) tell you the food looks good or tastes good."

"I hear a lot of good comments after hours in the barracks," said Pfc. Terenna Johnson.

Walker said the praise is encouraging to himself and the other cooks.

"When you know you're appreciated, you want to do more and do better," he said.

Because the dining facility has kept its standards most consistent this year, they have been selected to compete in the annual Philip A. Connelly Award competition.

They will first compete at the TRADOC level. If they win there, they will go on to compete Army wide.

Walker said consistently maintaining good standards and troop preferences are a couple of the criteria evaluators look for when selecting the winner.

Walker said he feels winning the Connelly award would confirm the praise the cooks receive from their chain of command.

"Sometimes it's just not enough to hear it from your leaders."

Job fair attracts 500 people

By Anne W. McDonald
Staff writer

Service family members and veterans found themselves gainfully employed thanks to the information they received at the Association of the U.S. Army and the Fort Benning Retirement Services Job Fair, conducted at

About 50 employers participated and officials estimate more than 500 people took advantage of the service the job fair offered.

There was no charge for the services offered at the fair.

Although the job fair was not heavily linked to the Army, one of the local employers paid tribute to the 200th anniversary of the ratification of the Army on Sept. 29, 1789 with a large birthday cake.

Six Non-Commissioned Officers (NCO) did last week.

At the fair were representatives varying from local businesses to national corporations and government defense contractors. They were on hand to answer questions, accept resumes, and in some cases, test on site.

USARSA conducts Exercise Panther

By Keith F. Johnson
U.S. Army School of Americas

Efforts toward upgrading low-intensity conflict-type instruction continued this week at Fort Benning with "Exercise Panther".

This exercise was a computer-assisted, counter-insurgency training simulation that started in Building 4 Monday, and runs through today.

Seventy members of the faculty and students from the U.S. Army School of the Americas, as well as 30 observers from different Latin American countries, U.S. Army South and the Department of Defense's Center for Low-intensity Conflict, took part in the exercise.

"The Panther is a conflict training simulation used to train battalion staffs in a number of different low-intensity scenarios," said Lt. Col. Steven Roy, USARSA director of Training and Doctrine. Roy added that a counter-insurgency scenario was used for the validation exercise at USARSA.

"The school is supporting the TRADOC Combined Arms Training Activity from Fort Leavenworth, Kan., in development of the Army's first battalion-level, computer-assisted simulation for use in low-intensity conflict," Roy said.

According to Lt. Col. Ronald Parker, from U.S. Army South and director of the exercise support group, CATA began developing the simulation in July. This was the first test to see whether the simulation was realistic and what kinds of adjustments will be needed.

"The game will not be perfect," Parker said. "The rules, computer programs, and so on, are still being developed and changed. This exercise will let us know how far we need to go to play by December."

The first practical use of the simulation will take place Dec. 4 through 8 in Peru, said Parker, adding that officials from Colombia and Peru were helpful in the development of the simulation.

"USARSA has embarked on a long-range program to improve and expand classroom instruction in low-intensity conflict," Roy said.

"The Panther exercise is an ideal training vehicle for improving instruction. Ultimately, the school would like to use Panther in all three training departments."

Murder task force members recognized for their efforts

By Agatha H. James
Bayonet staff writer

Six soldiers and three local law enforcement officials were recognized Tuesday for their efforts in solving a local murder case.

Members of the Dunlap Murder Task Force, an investigative body made up of Fort Benning Criminal Investigation Division officials and local law enforcement officials, received awards and certificates of appreciation at a ceremony at Fort Benning's CID headquarters. The task force was formed to investigate the murders of Todd Dunlap and Debra Nichols, who were found murdered Nov. 21, 1987 in a Fort Mitchell trailer park.

Col. Mark Mueller, commander of U.S. Army Criminal Investigation Command, 3rd Region, Fort Gillem, Ga., presented certificates of appreciation to Joseph Edwards, an investigator from the Russell County District Attorney's Office; Special Agent Geroia Grice with the Alabama Bureau of Investigation; Lieutenant John O'Steen, a detective with the Russell County Sheriff's Office and Capt. Donald Powers with Fort Benning's Staff Judge Advocate's Office.

Army achievement Medals were presented to Chief Warrant Officers Charles E. Shipley, CID and Larry Miller, a crime lab investigator who is also with the Alabama Attorney General's office and Sgt. Rex Winters of the U.S. Army Infantry Center's Military Police Company.

Meritorious Service Medals were awarded to Warrant Officer Jimmy Townsend of Fort Benning's CID and Chief Warrant Officer David Zeh of the CID office at Fort Stewart, Ga.

In his remarks, Mueller said the case could not have been solved without the cooperation of [illegible] agencies involved. Adding an added [illegible] of the case [illegible] a grisly murder was involved," he said. "We feel that regardless of the location of the murder, cooperation with local authorities is extremely necessary."

Lee Davis, Russell County's District Attorney, said the task force was a great example of what agencies can pool their resources to [illegible] with positive results.

"Russell County Sheriff Tommy Carter [illegible] on hand for the press conference. We're proud to have been a part of this joint operation," he said.

Special Agent [illegible] Meeks, a Fort Benning resident, was [illegible] the loss of two friends [illegible] murdered couple. In the case of [illegible] a life sentence at hard labor in the Georgia Department of Corrections, [illegible] Leavenworth, Kan.

Fire department asks for awareness during upcoming Fire Prevention Week

Fort Benning Inc. Dig addresses

Fire Prevention Week, Oct. 8 through 14, is a good time for the Fort Benning community to renew its efforts in preventing fires here. It is also important to take time to recognize the loyal group of fire fighters who protect the community day and night.

Every day missions of training infantry soldiers is the priority of everyone here, from drill instructors to carpenters in the Directorate of Engineering and Housing. However, there is a group of dedicated support professionals in DEH who occasionally go without recognition.

They're also vital to the successful accomplishment of the training mission. They are members of the Fort Benning Fire Department.

Around the clock, seven days a week, 365 days a year, firefighters stand ready to risk their lives, if required, to provide the highest quality of fire fighting and fire prevention available.

The response takes place independent of time of day or weather conditions. All "ready" could be that moment they, like Rangers, never know when the next call may come. For a fire fighter, every call is for real. There are no practice runs when human life and property is at risk.

Some people take the military for granted and assume they will be there when required. They count every day to assure the [illegible]

ASK THE JUDGE

By Deborah B. Montgomery
Staff Judge Advocate's Office

Q The minimum insurance on my vehicle was more than I could afford, so I canceled the insurance.

Since then I have received a notice from the Georgia Department of Public Safety requesting information about why the insurance coverage on the vehicle was canceled.

The notice also listed certain penalties for failing to properly insure the vehicle.

Do I really have to have insurance? What will happen to me if I don't get it?

A You must have vehicle insurance to operate a vehicle in Georgia. The obligation to maintain the minimum coverage is permanent.

If your insurance is canceled, for any reason, the insurer, (a person or company insuring others against loses or damage), is required by law to notify the Department of Public Safety within 15 days after the cancellation and inform the department of the cancellation and the reason for it.

The department then sends a notice informing the owner of the penalties. The owner then has an obligation to respond.

You must respond to the department within 30 days after the notification was first sent. If the owner can show that the minimum insurance coverage is now in effect and was only a lapse, he only has to pay a $25 lapse fee.

If the owner responds within the 30-day time period and indicates that the minimum insurance coverage is not in effect, the owners' license will be suspended indefinitely.

Once proof of the minimum coverage is produced, and the owner pays a lapsefee of $25 and a restoration fee of $25, the suspension is terminated.

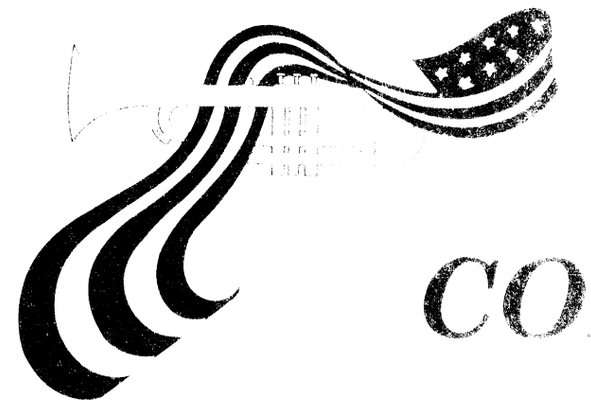
If the owner fails to respond within the 30 days, the owner's driver's license will be suspended. The only way to get the suspension lifted is to provide proof of a prepaid six-month minimum insurance policy.

In addition, you must pay a $25 lapse fee and a $25 restoration fee.

However, if you simply failed to respond within the 30 days and can later show that you were continuously covered, you will only be required to pay a $25 restoration fee, which will reinstate your driving privileges.

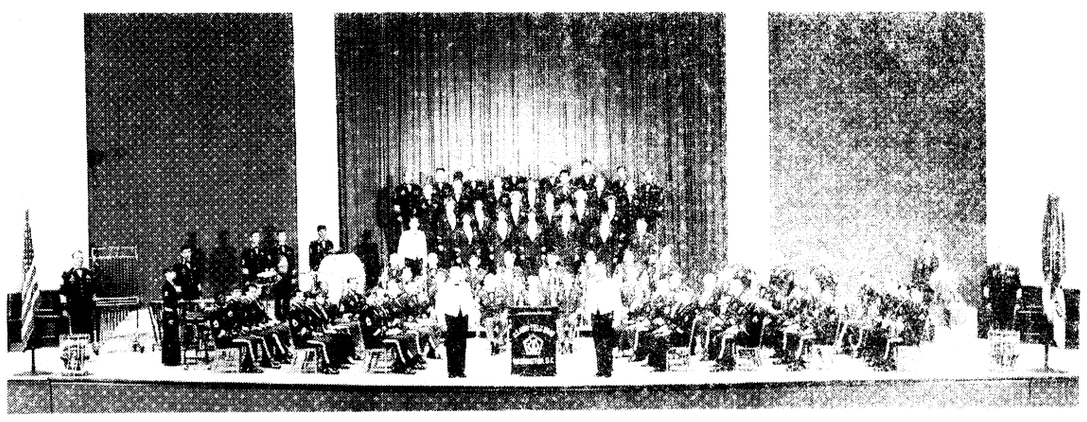
In the event of a second or subsequent offense during a five-year period, the department will suspend not only the driver's license, but the license tag and registration for 90 days.

The suspension can only be terminated after the 90 days pass. You then must provide proof of a prepaid six-month minimum insurance policy and pay the $25 lapse fee and $25 restoration fee.



Even if you decide to change insurance companys, it is your obligation to inform the insurance company that you are changing companys and provide the necessary proof so that the proper information can be provided to the department.

If you decide to cancel your policy and continue to drive, there is a chance that you will be stopped by a law enforcement officer. If you are asked to produce proof of minimum insurance coverage and fail to do so, you can be charged, and if convicted, you will be subject to fines or imprisonment.



It is your obligation to properly insure your vehicle and keep proof of insurance in the vehicle.

If you have any questions about your obligations with regard to automobile insurance, contact the Legal Assistance Office at 545-3281.

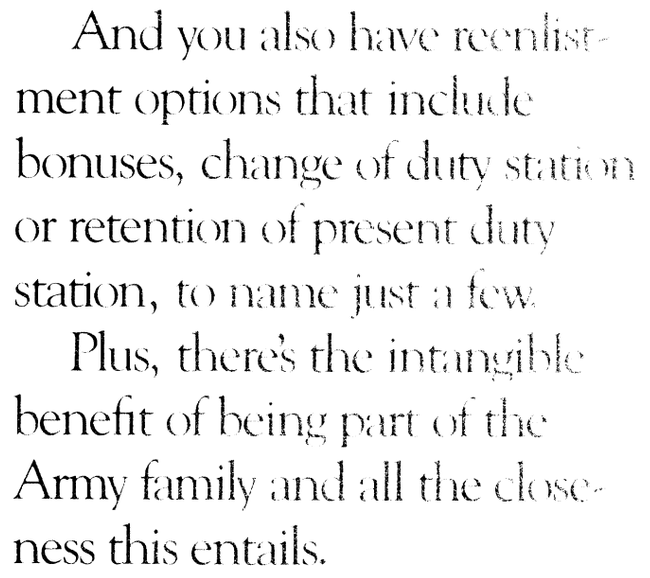
ADVANTAGES THE ARMY OFFERS YOU AND YOUR FAMILY.



If you're married, there are many benefits available to you and your family that are not easily duplicated in civilian life.

You and your family get comprehensive medical and dental care, commissary and post exchange privileges, thirty days annual leave and use of a variety of post facilities.

And you also have reenlistment options that include bonuses, change of duty station or retention of present duty station, to name just a few.

Plus, there's the intangible benefit of being part of the Army family and all the closeness this entails.

When you take all this into consideration, reenlistment makes a lot of sense for a lot of reasons. We can show you even more. Come talk to us, and bring your spouse.

IT TAKES MORE THAN A HUG TO MAKE A BIG PERSON FEEL SECURE.

That's why it helps to be in the Army. Because the Army has a range of benefits and services that give you and your family a real sense of security.

Benefits like knowing your family is covered by medical and dental insurance. Or knowing who is taking care of your children, and that your older kids are enjoying safe, supervised activities.

There's security in knowing there are places to turn for financial assistance. That there are programs to help your wife or husband find employment.

It's reassuring to know there are places to shop, like the commissary and the PX, where your money goes farther.

And nothing makes a family feel more secure than knowing they've got a steady income and job security.

Not everyone has that kind of security. Army families do. Because the Army provides many things to help make your life easier. We do it because we're committed to you. We want you to use the services we offer. We want you to stay in the Army family.

In this family, we take care of our own. And you won't find a more secure feeling anywhere else.

ARMY FAMILY. BE ALL YOU CAN BE.

Infantryman's goal: to make world laugh

By Troy A. Pearson
Bayonet staff writer

Spec. Kevin Major has kept audiences laughing for the past few years with comedy skits. He has performed at clubs such as Chas, in Indianapolis, Ind., and Shakkers, in Columbus.

Major is a young, upcoming comedian who really enjoys his work.

"I started in the comedy business when I was in junior high school, and I've been doing it ever since," he said.

"I came from the rough side of town — Broad Ripple — in Indianapolis, Indiana. What I try to do is take all the bad things I see and make them positive by making them funny," Major said.

Major, 21, is an infantryman assigned to 1st Battalion, 18th Infantry, where he works as a petroleum, oil and lubricant clerk.

Although he says he has a comic outlook on life, he takes his work at the headquarters company motor pool seriously.

"I write all my own material for my skits," he said, adding that his talents were recognized in the U.S. Forces Talent Search competitions in 1986 and again in 1988 while he was stationed in Stuttgart, West Germany.

He was also featured on the American Forces Network Europe talk show, "Gasthaus."

Although he has been involved in such diverse activities as local television commercials and high school musicals, Major says his first love is comedy.

"One of my long-term goals is to someday work with a famous comedian like Eddie Murphy or Robin Williams," he said.

"My dream is to have everyone in the world laughing at the same time, if only for one second."

AUSA members meet, hold fish fry

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

The crisp fall air intermingling with the smell of fish frying underneath the open rafters of the Bovinity Pavillion at the Chattahoochee Valley Fairgrounds set the stage for the Association of the U.S. Army General Membership Meeting and Fish Fry conducted Sept. 26.

AUSA corporate members and soldiers took advantage of the informal atmosphere and relaxed and renewed friendships or made new ones.

The close proximity of time to the AUSA and Retired Services Job Fair lured AUSA 3rd Region President, Hal Van Meter to the gathering.

Local officials included Mayor James Jernigan, Brig. Gen. William Steele, Command Sgt. Maj. Edward Garrett and 2nd Vice President, Bob Poydasheff who filled in for the current chapter president Chuck McClure.

A number of past presidents of the chapter were also present.

Although their importance is recognized, the soldiers were the stars of the show and were given plaques for their achievements at the meeting.

Recognized were:

● Command Sgt. Maj. Cleophus Childress, 2nd Bn., 29th Inf. Regt., for significant increase in membership;

● Command Sgt. Maj. Isaac Ingram, 3rd Bn., 11th Inf., for 100 percent membership in his battalion;

● Command Sgt. Maj. Samuel Lawerence, 1st Bn., 29th Inf. Regt., for significant increase in membership;

● Command Sgt. Maj. Charles Lewis, 2nd Bn., 11th Inf., for two years of 100 percent membership in his battalion;

● Command Sgt. Maj. Eddie Roberts, TSB, for 100 percent membership at his headquarters;

● Command Sgt. Maj. Edmund Thompson, 1st Bn., 507th PIR, for three years of 100 percent cadre membership in his battalion;

● 1st Sgt. Julio Peterson, Co. D, 2nd Bn., 29th Inf. Regt., for greatest increase in members during a membership drive at his company;

● Sgt. James Brown, 1st Bn., 50th Inf. NCO of the Quarter, fourth quarter, 1989;

● Sgt. Karen Kilburn, 197th Inf. Bde., NCO of the Quarter, fourth quarter, 1989;

● Spec. Cedrick Farrior, 1st Bn., 50th Inf. Soldier of the Quarter, fourth quarter, 1989

● and Pvt. 1st. Class Bill Chuan, 197th Inf. Bde. Soldier of the Quarter, fourth quarter, 1989.

AUSA jackets were given to Spec. Barbara Holloway, AUSA Queen, and 1st Sgt. Arturo De Los Reyes for his contributions to AUSA during his assignment here.

Schools celebrate Hispanic Month

Fort Benning Schools

Hispanic Month was full of events in the eight Fort Benning schools.

The events brought evidence of the diversity and the richness in the cultures that make up the Hispanic population. Music, costumes, native dances, art, food, geography, customs and games were only a few of the topics covered by Benning students during the month.

Students at post schools were treated to a special program coordinated by Dr. Jose Velez and Sue Arroyo in connection with the School of the Americas. Hispanic students performed dances and participated in fashion shows, which featured costumes and music native to their own countries.

The diversity of Hispanic countries was emphasized at Faith Middle School when each grade chose a country or region and featured it through decorations and displays in their wing of the building. The sixth grade highlighted South America. The seventh grade featured Spain and the eighth grade honored Central America and Mexico.

McBride, Wilbur and Loyd schools had displays featuring Hispanic clothing, crafts and flags.

Fiestas of all sorts took place at Patch, Loyd, Wilbur and White schools as parents brought in Hispanic foods for tasting parties.

Wilson School placed special emphasis on Hispanic musical instruments. Wilson students also concentrated on geography as they traced a journey by map from Washington, D.C., to the Central American countries.

"I feel the Hispanic programs are helping our boys and girls as we continue to study about the various countries and regions of the world," said White School principal, Spurgeon Glenn. "These programs enable us to become better neighbors as we gain a better understanding of Hispanic cultures."

Students study Native Americans

Fort Benning Schools

Native American Day was celebrated Indian-style by Dexter School students Sept. 22.

Five members of the Indian Dance Team from the Boy Scouts' organization of the Order of the Arrow performed several dances in authentic costumes.

The dances included the grand entry dance, two types of round dances and war dances, and a seven-minute and two-minute stomp dance.

From the Greater Columbus District were Eric Litz, Troop 365; Matthew Tommey, Troop 400; Coaty Brown and Steve Parnell, Troop 100; and Dennis Crowder from Troop 143 of the Creek District.

The boys performed three times for the students and spent the rest of the day visiting classes.

They discussed their traditional Plains Indian costumes and artifacts and gave general information about their costume time period, which included the early 1890s to 1930s era.

Dexter School students were thrilled with the Indian visitors, especially when members of the faculty participated in a final social round dance to end the day that featured the Native American culture.

Wrestler set sights on All-Army team

By Marilyn Balzarini
Infantry Training Center

What began as an ordinary clean up detail for Ryan Jibben turned out to be the beginning of a career in Army wrestling.

Always looking for new talent, Anthony Thomas, coach of the All-Army Wrestling Team, routinely asks leaders to provide detail personnel who have wrestling experience for the All-Army Wrestling Center.

After chores, the coach gives these soldiers a chance to wrestle.

When Thomas asked the drill sergeants at Jibben's unit, Company A, 1st Battalion, 19th Infantry, for wrestlers, Jibben was chosen. He had been a wrestler in high school.

"The drill sergeants at Jibben's unit were really excited about him, but I was skeptical," Thomas said.

"Lots of times kids have wrestled in high school, but they're not good enough to make the All-Army Team," he saids.

Jibben turned out to be an exception. After two days of practice with members of the All-Army Team, he had won their support.

"The guys on the team were really impressed with Jibben," Thomas said.

"They said he was a good wrestler and that he should compete in the Fort Benning tournament we were putting together."

In the tournament, Jibben won three of four matches.

He beat the All-Army Team's number two man in the 180-pound weight class by a decisive 12-2.

Jibben's performance in the tournament convinced Thomas.

In fact, he was so impressed that Jibben has been assigned to Fort Benning — the new home of the All-Army Wrestling Team.

"I want Jibben where I can work with him on a daily basis," Thomas said.

"He is very talented and hard working," he said. "

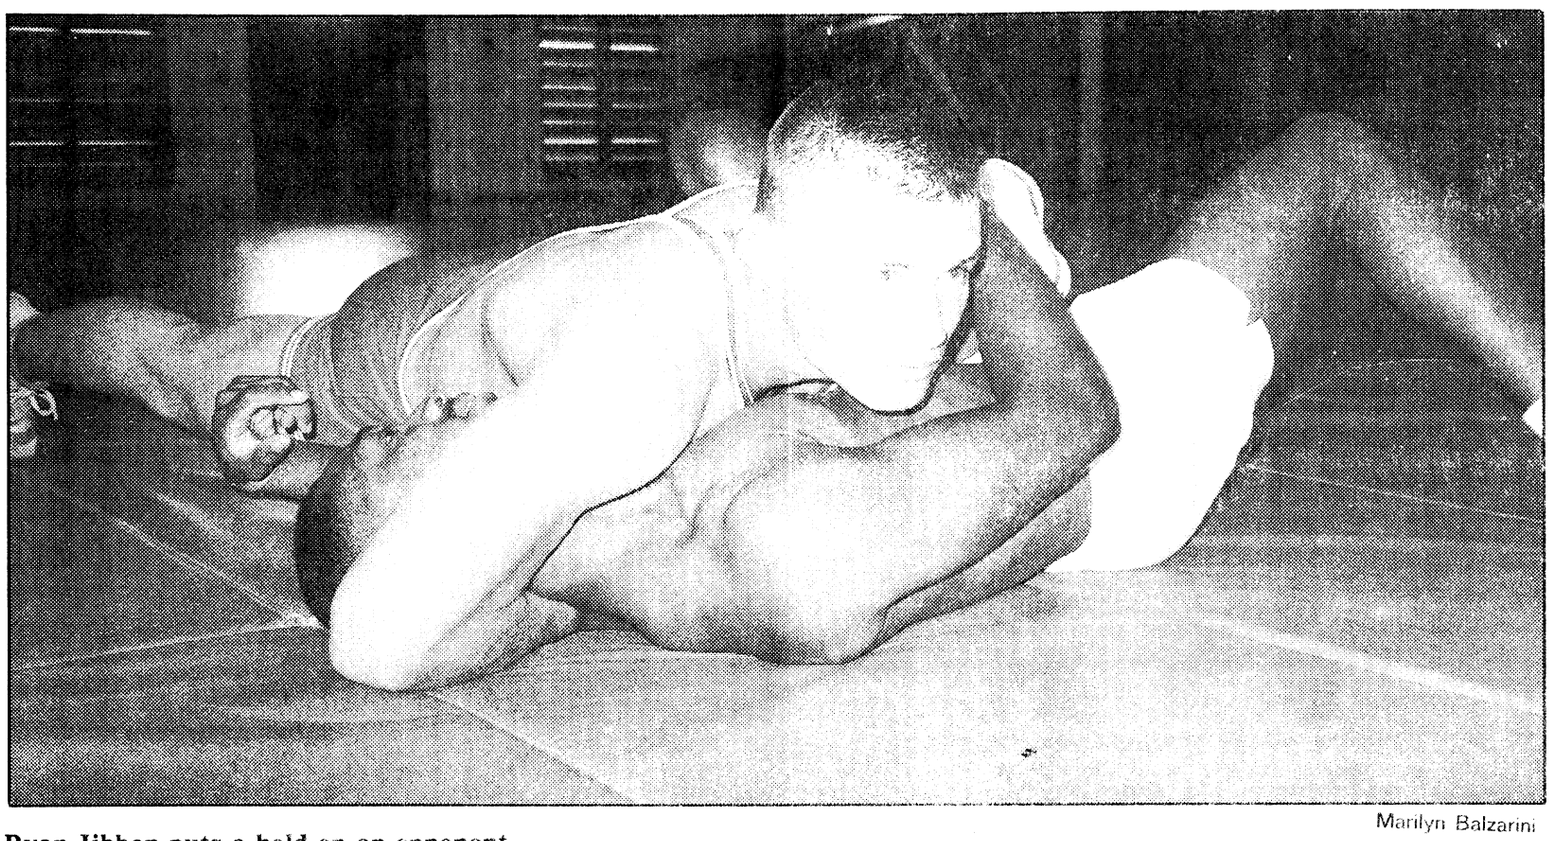
He definitely has what it takes to make the All-Army Team."

Winning is not a new experience for Jibben.

This year, his senior year of high school, he was the South Dakota State Champion wrestler in the 167-pound weight class.

He passed up wrestling scholarships to the University of Wyoming and Iowa to join the Army.

Jibben also received offers from West Point and The Naval Academy at Annapolis after he had enlisted.

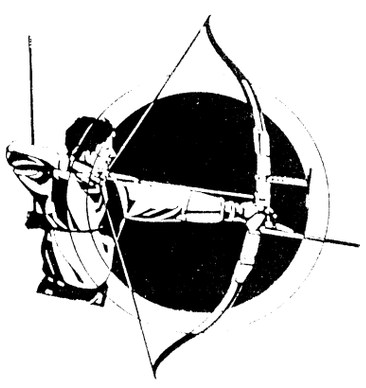


Jibben said he chose the Army instead of college because, "I wanted to experience the challenges I would face in the Army.

"I want to complete my three years of enlisted time, then go to college on the Army College Fund and return as an officer," he said.

While Jibben has plenty of hard work ahead of him, Thomas accepts nothing less than total dedication from his wrestlers.

"I'm really looking forward to the opportunity to wrestle with the All-Army Team," Jibben said.



"Not only will I be able to realize my goals as a wrestler, but if I work hard enough, I may get the opportunity to represent my country — as a wrestler in international competition."

1/11th Inf. grabs first golf tourney

USAIC Public Affairs Office

The 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry, grabbed its first golf championship of 1989 at the final U.S. Army Infantry Center tournament of the year Sept. 29 at the Follow Me Golf Course.

The 11th Inf. placed second in the third tournament with a team total of 657, but improved to a 645 for this fourth battle of the year to take home the first-place trophy.

The USAIC golf season is broken down into four tournaments per year with teams and individual golfers vying for trophy.

James Osbourne was the driving force behind the 11th Inf. with a 4 over par on both days of the tournament for a 152 two-day total.

That score was good enough to give Osbourne a second place finish in the championship flight.

The 29th Infantry Regiment took home its fifth USAIC golf title of the year when Headquarters and Headquarters Company placed second.

They shot a 331 on the first day and a 330 on day two for a 661 total, 16 strokes behind the 11th Inf.

HHC also won the second and third tournaments of the year.

The 1st Bn., 29th Inf. place second in the first tournament and the 2nd Bn., 29th Inf. took second in the third tournament.

Ron Greene led HHC, 29th Inf. Regt. to all three of their successes.

In this latest outing, Greene fired at 70, 2 under par, for the first day and a 74 on the second day for a 144 two-day-par total.

This was enough to give him the first place finish in the championship flight for the second time in as many outing.

"I was just lucky this time," Greene said. "I was able to keep my shots up around the green.

"My strategy going into the tournament was not to get into any trouble," he said.

Greene also placed second in the second tournament after losing a tie breaker to Kelly Church of the Ranger Training Brigade.

In a ironic twist, Greene won the third tournament by winning the championship in a tie breaker against Michael Hale also of the 29th Inf.

Church placed first in the first flight this tournament and Hale did not play.

Other winners were: Troy Dickerson, 2nd Bn., 29th Inf., second first flight; Richard Morgan, 1st Bn., 29th Inf., first second flight; Robert Easley, 1st Bn., 29th Inf., second second flight; Alexander Martinez, NCOA, first third flight; and James Butler, 1st Bn., 11th Inf., second third flight.

"These tournaments are a great opportunity for the soldiers to get out and meet other players," Greene said. "I find it very rewarding."

SPIRITUAL

In life, hold on to hope

By Chap. Benjamin L. Morrow
Chief, Installation Support Troops

In 1st Corinthians the 13th chapter, the writer lists a triad of life's indispensable values that last. In this triad, hope is second only to love. Hope is absolutely essential if an individual is to cultivate a healthy view of life.

Values that motivate us to live positive, up-to-date, meaningful lives will always include the ingredient called hope. In our world of good times and times not so good, no human life can last without hope.

Someone once said that where you stand in life determines what you see, and what you see, is determined by what you look for. I hasten to say that the values we cherish provide the platform from which we look. You may rest assured that those who look without hope will see only a distorted world.

The myth of Pandora's Box veils a great lesson behind a fable. Pandora was the first created woman of Greek legendary lore. She brought into the world all woe through her curiosity. Pandora was gifted because Vulcan, the mythical god, gave her her voice and vigor; Minerva endowed her with artistic knowledge; Venus gave her beauty; and Mercury bestowed upon her an artful and winning disposition. While the seasons and graces attired her, Mercury brought her to the dwelling of Epimetheus, who ignored the warning of his brother and yielded to her charms. He then made her his wife.

A closed jar or casket stood in the house; it was forbidden to open. Pandora, raised the lid however out of curiosity to see what the box contained and from there escaped evils before unknown to man. These evils rapidly spread over the face of the earth. In fear, Pandora shut the box but only in time to keep hope from escaping. The fable says hope has remained with mankind, and it is our salvation from lasting despair.

While faith looks at the unseen and while love lays hold on the unselfish, hope reaches toward the future, grounded in God and undaunted by trials and troubles. Hope gives the assurance of a better day.

In times like these, you need an anchor. When the bottom of your security falls out, when you have come to your extremity or your wits end, when family life overwhelms you or opportunity and promotions pass you by, don't despair; hope in God. He will always see you through.

Personal evangelism workshop offered

[illegible] Chaplain's Office

A workshop, sponsored by the Officers' Christian Fellowship and designed to help men and women effectively share their faith in Jesus Christ, is scheduled Oct. 13 and 14 at the Religious Education Center.

In the workshop, participants will be offered a combined lecture/videotape format dealing with the subject of "Lifestyle Evangelism."

The central theme of the training is that personal evangelism is a "process" most effectively communicating the message of the Gospel through relationships, not through a once-a-week "event."

Videotape segments include talks by authorities on evangelism such as Joe Aidrich, college president and author of best-selling book, "Lifestyle Evangelism"; author-consultant Walt Henrichsen; and Ted DeMoss, president of the Christian Business Men's Committee, which produced the workshop.

The workshop begins Friday night from 7 p.m. to 10 p.m. and continues Saturday from 8:30 a.m. to 12:30 p.m. Cost is $15 per person.

Pastors and wives normally attend as guests at no charge.

To register or for more information, contact Lt. Col. Mike Teslaar at 545-1915 or 687-0068.

Celebrate Columbus

Activities continue

By Michelle Le Roy Harrison
Bayonet staff writer

After a week filled with activities, Celebrate Columbus rounds down its festivities this weekend. Officials said that for its first year, the celebration has been great.

The celebration kicked off Oct. 6 with Oktoberfest, sponsored by the Chattahoochee Valley/Fort Benning Chapter of the Association of the United States Army.

The three-day fest was held at the Ironworks Convention and Trade Center.

Fest goers were entertained by a rock and top-40 band as well as a genuine German "oompa" band. Guests filled themselves with German delicacies from a menu that included bratwurst, sauerkraut and potato salad.

Miss Georgia, Miss Columbus and Miss Phenix City, who made guest appearances, were favorites with the male side of the audience.

Jerry Dunham, winner of a $50 cash prize from an AUSA corporate sponsor, said, "The Oktoberfest gets better and better every year."

Just down the road from the Oktoberfest was, judging from the crowd, one of the weekend's most popular attractions, the Heritage Festival. The festival provided the public with a look at the diversity of ethnic heritages in Columbus.

A wide variety of entertainment took audiences around the world.

A Scottish bag piper lured people to the festival in a pied piper manner while Japanese dancers performed an Okinawan fan dance.

The Filipinos performed their rendition of the traditional "stick" dance for the crowd.

At the height of the day, there was standing room only as more and more people crowded around the stage to catch a glimpse of the performers and their colorful costumes. Most of the costumes had been made especially for the festival.

The stage was provided by the 197th Support Battalion.

While the crowd munched on Filipino pastries and Korean cuisine, they washed it down with about 400 cups of Colombian coffee.

Booths provided information on the lifestyles and culture of the different countries.

People with Scottish backgrounds had a chance to find out what clan they originated from and what their family crest and kilt pattern looked liked.

But, claimed one of the festival's coordinators, the best part of the day was that it didn't rain.

Good weather prevailed Oct. 8, as Columbus residents gathered at the City Docks behind the Ironworks Convention and Trade Center for a free "Jazz on the River."

Most people opted to bring a blanket and relax in the grass while they listened to the music of the 283rd Army Band.

The audience satisfied their appetites with hotdogs and beverages from a nearby concession stand.

In continuing Celebrate Columbus, today's events include "An Evening of Magic and Illusion" at the Columbus Museum at 7:30 p.m. Admission is $15 for museum members and $20 for nonmembers.

The Columbus College Alumni Association Art Auction begins at 7 p.m. at the St. Thomas Episcopal Church. Admission is $3. For more information, call 568-2280.

Saturday's Tuskegee/Morehouse football game at Memorial Stadium wraps up Celebrate Columbus.

Benning expands services for handicapped students

Fort Benning Schools

An amendment to the Education of the Handicapped Act, will go into effect for students in all Georgia school systems during the 1990-91 school year if funding is allocated.

This law mandates special education services for preschool handicapped children.

Fort Benning Schools, anticipating this law, is moving now to implement the law by expanding its special education program.

The program will include services for 3- and 4-year-old, handicapped children who are residing on post.

A "Child Find" project has been initiated to locate post-residing 3- and 4-year-olds who require special services or who may be currently receiving special services.

Psychological, speech, occupational and physical therapy evaluations will be available to assess those children who are referred.

> "Early intervention is an important part of special education."
>
> — Tommye Wentland

Areas of concern may be:

- Learning
- Speech/language
- Vision
- Hearing
- Motor development and/or behavior

Referrals may be made by parents, educators, physicians, Exceptional Family Member Program and community agencies.

Direct services, such as home-based programs, speech therapy and parent training will begin around January 1990 for students who meet placement criteria according to Georgia guidelines.

Preschool handicapped students currently enrolled in certified educational programs may apply for psychological services, occupational or physical therapy and may qualify for limited transportation to their current setting.

"Early intervention is an important part of special education," said Tommye Wentland, director of Fort Benning's Special Education Department. "We feel fortunate that we are able to begin these services now."

For information on this program, call Carolyn McClellan, preschool special education coordinator at 545-5725.

Civilian layoffs only a rumor

TRADOC negotiations ongoing

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Despite headlines in Tuesday's Ledger-Enquirer, post officials are not currently considering reductions in the civilian work force.

As the article noted, post officials are still negotiating with the Training and Doctrine Command over the size of the fiscal year '90 budget.

Until that's decided, post officials won't know what cost-cutting measures will need to be implemented, if any.

Energy Conservation Week

Army Energy Awareness Week is today through Oct. 22.

The week has been set aside as a time to reevaluate our use of and dependence on energy resources.

It is an opportunity to learn more about how energy affects our daily lives and how we may better use our limited energy resources.

It is, most importantly, a time for us to renew our commitment to the conservation of energy.

"Conserve with comfort and common sense" is this year's energy conservation theme.

Comfort describes the intent of the Army Communities of Excellence Program.

Through the efforts of the entire Army family, our community not only improves itself but also fosters commitment and pride among the members. Common sense is simply doing what is smart.

When we apply this theme to our use of energy, we will produce savings that can be reinvested in quality of life, training and readiness.

We must plan and act today to be prepared for the energy challenges of the future.

We must learn to change our attitudes and habits if we are to maintain our standards of living within our energy goals.

It takes a team effort to achieve good energy management. All members of the Fort Benning community must work together to get the best results.

I encourage your sincere efforts at eliminating all forms of energy waste and abuse.

The success of the Army Energy Program cannot be attained by the efforts of a few individuals.

Everyone living and working at Fort Benning is challenged to play a positive and significant role in the Energy Program.

Name calling doesn't reflect organizations' esprit de corps

By Clyde Snively
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Army Times recently did a post guide about Fort Benning. The cover photo, among other things, showed a Bradley Fighting Vehicle parked beneath the 250-foot jump towers.

Seeing the photo the other day, reminded me of the comment made by a sergeant from the 29th Infantry who owned the Bradley used in the shot.

Says he, while casting a scornful look at the 34-foot towers going full tilt, the 250-foot towers dropping would-be paratroopers, and the swing landing trainers unceremoniously dumping soldiers on their keisters, "the real Army comes to Disneyland."

I know those sentiments won't sit well with airborne soldiers, just as airborne comments of "leg," don't go over well with earthbound infantrymen.

Those who participate in name calling chalk it up to "unit esprit," putting it in the same category as berets and unit insignias.

But there's a difference. The berets, unit insignia and the like don't put anyone down.

I just wonder why we have to tear down something or someone else to build up our units or ourselves.

Sure, some of it's done in fun, such as when the artilleryman, standing in the midst of an infantry social function, loudly declares that he's only one there "to lend dignity to what otherwise would be a bawdy affair."

But I have to think that each one is the best in its own right.

For instance, who among you ever left a unit that was second best? Who among you, upon reaching your new unit hasn't uttered those infamous words, "that's not the way we did it at Fort Leech," or "at Fort Plinket, we used to do it this way."

But that doesn't put the kebash on some of these unit jingoists who think a particular branch or specialty is the only way to go.

I was reading an airborne newsletter recently and on nearly every page was some put down of "legs" or "leg units."

It's as if they think the airborne single-handedly won all our wars dating back to the Revolution.

I ain't got nuthin' against airborne, but ground troops pulled their behinds out of more than one fire.

Yet grunts don't go around disparaging airborne troops for getting cut off and needing to be rescued. They just take it in stride as another mission that needs to be done.

Even rangers have been known to get themselves in binds. And I never heard of them checking I.D. cards to make sure their rescuers had the right pedigree to rescue them.

Read your history. You'll see leg infantry rescuing tankers, cavalry rescuing infantry and artillery supporting them all.

That's why our doctrine is based on teams and task forces with a mix of all branches.

So let us continue to shout up the virtues of our units. Tell the world how great we are, but let's avoid the name calling.

We've all got the same mission, and that's to protect this great land of ours.

Now if you guys and gals would only give us journalists a little more respect.

Child's memory makes permanent mark at Martin Army Community Hospital

A parents' wish to give their child's death meaning led to an unselfish act that will help many.

By Michelle Le Roy Harrison
Bayonet staff writer

Tara Danielle McCarville was pronounced dead — stillborn — at Martin Army Community Hospital on March 8, 1987.

Two years and seven months later, the memory of Tara is permanent in the Newborn Nursery at MACH in the form of a new "dinamap neonatal digital blood pressure monitor."

The monitor, which reads blood pressure either on demand or in cycles, was donated to the nursery, in memory of Tara, by her parents, Capt. Matthew H. and Karen McCarville.

The ceremony took place in the Newborn Nursery Sept. 29.

"We wanted something positive to come of our experience," McCarville said.

McCarville and Karen decided "something positive" would be to donate something to the nursery.

They discussed their idea with Dr. Ehrman Eldridge, the doctor present during delivery, and asked him what would be appropriate in the way of a donation.

The doctor helped them decide on the piece of equipment the nursery needed. With that, the McCarville's started their personal campaign in memory of Tara.

McCarville, who was attending the Infantry Officer Advance Course at the time, said his former executive officer was the one who got the ball rolling.

"I had just graduated (from the course). He passed the hat around in my class and in his, as well. That started us out," he said.

McCarville permanently changed stations about two months later. He attributes a lot of the work accomplished to their chaplain, Chap. (Capt.) Phillip Touw.

"Chap. Touw was instrumental in helping us with a year's worth of hurdles," he said.

Donations from family, friends and caring strangers started to accumulate. Even McCarville's mother took up a collection at the junior high school in New York where she is principal.

Still, after contributing their own part to the donation, the McCarville's were still short a quarter of the cost of the monitor.

> "We wanted something positive to come of our experience.
>
> — Matthew H. McCarville.

The MEDDAC/DENTAC Officers' Wives' Club came to their aid.

"Because of Chap. Touw's efforts, we heard about the McCarvilles' need," said Joan Hutchins, welfare chairman at the time. "The organization decided it was a worthy cause."

According to Hutchins, the organization often contributes to the benefit of patients in all medical fields or wherever patient welfare is involved.

Then began the long process of paperwork.

"My concern was that (what we donated) would be something that could be used here permanently. I wanted to make sure it would be serviced and maintained and entered into the property books," McCarville said.

"We wanted the money to be earmarked for use at the hospital. When I was finally given that guarantee, I gave the money to (the hospital)," he said.

The McCarvilles then found out the monitor would cost more than the money they had raised.

However, the hospital was able to fund the rest and the monitor was purchased.

The McCarville's and their two children, Matthew, 4, and Caitlin, 1, now live in Charleston, S.C., where McCarville is assigned to the Citadel. They left the aftermath of Hurricane Hugo in Charleston, and drove here for the ceremony.

"It's funny," McCarville said. "As we were driving out of Charleston, there were all of these trucks coming in (to town) to donate things. We were on our way out to do the same thing. It's nice to see people donating things."

Because of generosity of others, a much-needed piece of equipment has a place in the nursery. On top, a small plaque bears Tara's name. Every child the monitor helps will unknowingly keep Tara's memory alive.

Cashing deadline placed on VA checks

Department of Veterans Affairs

The Department of Veterans Affairs announced that recipients of VA benefit checks have one year to cash them.

Before this policy became effective Oct. 1, there was no time limit on cashing government checks.

The new policy, the result of legislation bringing federal check-cashing policies in line with the private sector, requires that checks issued by the U.S. Treasury Department on or after Oct. 1, 1989, carry the notation "Void after one year."

Also affected are uncashed checks issued prior to that date.

The Treasury Department will cancel checks issued before Oct. 1. Recipients will have to request the authorizing agency or department to reissue them.

The check-cashing deadlines do not affect an individual's entitlement to the benefit payment.

Also not affected are direct deposits of government checks.

VA encourages veterans and family members who receive monthly VA benefit checks to request that their payments be transmitted electronically from the Federal Reserve to the beneficiary's bank account.

To obtain direct deposit, request the necessary form from the nearest VA regional office.

Of the four million VA compensation and pension payments processed each month, nearly 50 percent are released through the direct-deposit program.

Dental residents graduate

Department of the Army

In addition to serving the Fort Benning community by providing comprehensive dental care, one of the major missions of the Dental Activity is to conduct the General Dentistry Residency Program.

Five dental officers graduated from the program in a ceremony at the Infantry Center Chapel Sept. 22. The officers and their assignments are:

Capt. M. Wan Choe, Korea; Capt. John Kitzmiller, Germany; Capt. Kurt Obeck, Germany; Capt. Gamaliel Rodriguez, Germany; Capt. William Runyon, Airborne Training, Korea, then Germany.

Selected officers are given comprehensive clinical and didactic training during their first year of active duty in the U.S. Army Dental Corps in all major areas of dental practice.

The majority of training is conducted at Dental Clinic No. 1, with graduates being skilled practitioners in Restorative and Pediatric Dentistry, Fixed and Removeable Prosthodontics, Endodontics, Periodontics, Orthodontics and Oral Surgery.

This program is fully accredited by the American Dental Association as a program of post doctoral education.

The DENTAC now has eight officers who began the program Oct. 2.

Look for an article in the near future on the residency program and the services it provides to the Fort Benning community.

Gators lock jaws at Market Square

By Bradley D. Yale
197th Infantry Brigade

The "Gators" of Company A, 1st Battalion, 18th Infantry recently combined forces with several other elements of the 197th Infantry Brigade for Market Square III.

Market Square III is a joint service field exercise involving some 14,000 paratroopers of the 82nd Airborne Division at Fort Bragg, N.C.

According to XVIII Airborne Corps officials, about 25,000 soldiers, Marines, airmen and sailors took part in the exercise, which was conducted Sept. 11 to 20 over a five-state area.

The objective was to improve coordination and joint operations among the services.

After paratroopers of the 82nd jumped into position on an air assault operation at Fort Bragg, the mechanized/light infantrymen of Team Gator drew their equipment and prepared to assault 82nd's position.

By the end of the first attack, the Gators had tallied lower "casualty" rate than the troops they were attacking.

The light fighters moved in close to the opposition to gather the intelligence reports necessary for their main attack.

However, the tide turned when the opposing forces fortified all avenues of approach over the predominately swampy terrain.

As the full-scale assault got under way, Team Gator suffered heavy losses due to the terrain and obstacles thrown in its path.

Switching to defense, the Gators were fighting a hopeless battle when munitions ran low with no resupply in sight.

Hurricane Hugo brought an end to the exercise when all participating units received orders to move into barracks and start recovering their equipment to return home.

Team Gator came back to Fort Benning to absorb the full impact of the lessons learned.

"The light unit learned how to use the mobility of mechanized elements, as well as how to stop them," said Pvt. 2 Matthew Tracey.

Spec. Ralf Green, a Gator track commander, said, "Deployments like this not only give us valuable training, but also build unit morale."

Reunion

29th Infantry Regiment vets return to share memories

By Michelle Le Roy Harrison
Bayonet staff writer

A little bit of Army history was reenacted here when former soldiers of the 29th Infantry Regiment gathered for the regiment's annual reunion, Oct. 6 to 8.

"It was like a history lesson," said Spec. Ronald W. Harrison, Company D, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment.

"There was someone here from nearly every era," he said.

About 200 retirees, wives and children traveled from all over the country to revisit their old post.

"I was raised in Columbus until we moved to California," said Kaye King, daughter of one of the retirees. "I thought it would be nice to bring my dad back again."

During the three-day visit, guests were taken on a tour of the post, including stops at Soldiers' Plaza, the NCO Academy, Infantry Museum and Collins Training Center.

The Collins Center is the Bradley Training Center for the Army and headquarters for the 29th Infantry Regiment.

Guests were treated to a tour of the center and the infantry's state-of-the-art equipment.

Instructors gave a brief explanation and mini-lesson in a battle simulator called the Unit Conduct of Fire Trainer.

The UCOFT resembles a large video game. As targets appear on the monitor, the gunner and Bradley commander must use proper fire commands to engage the target.

Retirees climbed inside the UCOFT to test their skill while wives watched the action on monitors and listened on headphones.

Outside, the retirees were shown an M2-A1 and M2-A2 Bradley Infantry Fighting Vehicle. They had the opportunity to climb inside the turret and in the vehicle.

One of the center's instructors was on hand to answer the many questions the retirees had about the "new" vehicles.

"This is just like my car," Henry Dayman said of the vehicles. "It only goes 55 miles per hour, too."

Lunch at the Main NCO Club gave the retirees a chance to reacquaint themselves with old buddies and reminisce about the good old days.

Harrison and some of the 29th's other younger soldiers were invited to join them. According to Harrison, that was a learning experience in itself.

"We got a chance to see how different things were back then. One guy said he only made $21 a month," he said.

John Rumfield told some of the soldiers how different the post looks now compared to when he was here in 1942.

"You guys have it easy," Rumfield said. "When I was here, we didn't have roads. We had to hike."

Harrison said a lot of the retirees were intrigued with the Bradley Infantry Fighting Vehicle.

"One guy said to me, 'if we'd only of had the equipment you guys have now, there would have been a lot more of us at the reunion today,'" Harrison said.

Infant Death Syndrome can strike anytime

National SIDS Foundation

August 13, 1988, 12:10 p.m.

With that antiseptic smell that lingers in hospitals surrounding her, Kriste senses that someone is in the room with her, yet, she doesn't say anything.

From across the room, her best friend looks at her while she searches for the right words.

The door opens slowly and through it enter five white coats, which seem to be floating in on their own.

The largest white coat kneels beside her and takes her hand. She looks up and there is a kind, yet sad face.

"Mrs. Joy," the white coat spoke, making her flinch slightly, "I'm sorry, there is nothing more we can do, your son has died."

Without thinking what she was saying, Kriste thanked the doctors and assured them that they had done all they could have.

The following weeks went by in a blur for the Joy family.

One evening while crying on her husband's shoulder, Kriste sobbed, "Isn't there anyone in the world who feels the way I do?"

About a week later, there was a phone call. "May I speak to Kriste Joy please?"

"Speaking", she replied while thinking, "I'm not in the mood for another one-time-only special offer. Not now! Not today!"

"My name is Brenda Rogers. I am from the National Sudden Infant Death Syndrome Foundation. I wanted to call and let you know if there is anything I can do, please call me. Kriste, you are not alone."

The healing begins...

Joshua Garrett Joy was born on June 15, 1988. Like 7000 infants a year in the United States, Joshua did not make it to his first birthday.

Georgia Govenor Joe Frank Harris signed a proclamation on Sept. 15, making October SIDS Awareness Month in Georgia. The SIDS Foundation encourages everyone to become aware of the dangers of SIDS and the effects it has on the family.

Sudden Infant Death Syndrome is the number one killer of children in the United States from the age of 1 week to 1 year.

Statistics from the National SIDS Foundation show that two out of every 1,000 live births will end in tragedy due to SIDS.

SIDS is commonly refered to as "crib death" or "cot death." This disease, according to the National SIDS Foundation, has been around and robbing children of their lives since biblical times.

Each year, the disease will claim more lives than childhood cystic fibrosis, childhood cancer, childhood heart disease and child abuse combined.

The National SIDS Foundation provides support to those who have been touched by this tragedy.

SIDS is neither preventable nor is it predictable. Often, people ignore the disease until it hits a member of the family or a close friend.

The SIDS Foundation encourages individuals to educate themselves and their families about SIDS.

For more information contact: K.G. Joy at 689-2195, The Atlanta Chapter NSIDSF at 1-800-541-1783 or write to NSIDSF 4404 Brandon Court, Marrietta, Ga. 30066.

Conserve with comfort

By Tina Cook
Energy Branch

Today through October 22 has been declared Army Energy Awareness Week. The theme this year is "Conserve With Comfort and Common Sense."

Each fall, the Army sets aside one week to focus on progress in energy conservation over the past year and to make a renewed commitment for the upcoming year.

Special attention is also placed on educating the Army community on the need to conserve energy and ways in which to do it. At Fort Benning, special activities emphasizing the purpose of the energy program have become tradition. This year's campaign is no exception.

In the dependent schools, students are being "licensed" as energy detectives.

After studying blocks of instruction on energy conservation techniques, the students will be awarded certificates and badges. They then take on missions of fighting energy waste and abuse at home, in their schools or any other place where they feel conservation measures are needed.

Unit energy conservation officers will be observing many facilities around the post and rewarding those practicing good energy conservation habits with promotional items.

The commanding general will send a letter to family housing occupants emphasizing their roles in conserving energy to help achieve the post's energy goals.

Planning guides, which include calendars and energy conservation tips for the home, will accompany the letter.

In addition, commanders will contribute to the energy awareness efforts by distributing letters to their units regarding energy waste and abuse.

For more information on Army Energy Awareness Week activities, call 545-SWAT (Save Watts And Therms).

Visibility key factor in pedestrian safety

Night runners place themselves in danger

Infantry Branch Safety Office

"It'll either kill me or cure me."

People have used that phrase for years to justify everything from rolling in the snow after a sauna to fighting a hangover with raw eggs.

These days, it often describes a gung ho approach to jogging. People get out there and run too far too fast, as if the nobility of their attempt to get in shape gives them some sort of special status on the road.

Many joggers, especially those who run at night, are tipping the scales on the "kill" rather than the "cure" side.

They forget about the most important factor in pedestrian safety — visibility, not only the ability to see but to be seen.

Each year, more than 9,000 pedestrians are killed in traffic accidents, half of them in the dark — a percentage far out of proportion to the amount of traffic at night.

Much of the reason for this is the simple fact that drivers can't see as well after dark.

Compound already reduced vision with dirty headlights, rain or snow on windshields, fatigue or the effects of alcohol, and joggers don't stand a chance.

Many runners think they have the problem licked with white or fluorescent clothing, but, in fact, they are still in the dark about visibility.

White is better than black, but it isn't nearly as visible to drivers as most people think. It does not "pick up" or reflect light. It only makes objects within close range of a strong light source more visible.

Fluorescent is commonly misunderstood to mean "glow-in-the-dark," which it will, but only under ultraviolet light.

It's great in the daytime, but worse than white at night.

The best way to be seen after dark is to use reflective materials, which can triple the distance at which you can be seen in a headlight's beam.

This fabric is coated with microscopic glass beads, which capture light from any angle and redirect it back to its source.

Most running suits come equipped with reflective strips, and there are vests, ankle, wrist and head bands and mitten and shoe strips on the market.

But don't buy products called "safety tape" without making sure they are reflective. If they are not, they won't do the job.

It's up to you to decide whether jogging will make you a healthier, happier person.

If you do decide to run, tip the scales in your favor .

Private health insurance usually pays before CHAMPUS

Other private policies must, by law, pay whatever they're going to pay before CHAMPUS begins cost-sharing medical bills.

Army News Service

If you have private health insurance coverage along with your CHAMPUS benefits, remember that the other plan usually must pay first for your medical care.

The only exceptions are for Medicaid, a public assistance program, and for private health policies that are specifically designated as supplemental policies to your Civilian Health and Medical Program of the Uniformed Services benefits. These pay after CHAMPUS picks up its share of the costs for covered health care.

Other private policies must, by law, pay whatever they're going to pay before CHAMPUS begins cost-sharing medical bills.

When your other health insurance has processed your claim, then CHAMPUS will share the cost of covered services — up to what it would have paid had there been no other health benefits plan. If your other plan pays the entire bill, then CHAMPUS pays nothing; it won't duplicate other health coverage.

Even if CHAMPUS doesn't have anything to pay, you're required still to submit a claim to the CHAMPUS claims processor. This will ensure that the amounts paid by the other plan are credited to your CHAMPUS deductible, so you won't be charged the deductible on other claims you subject to CHAMPUS. It'll also help ensure that the amounts paid by the other plan are credited to the cap-on cost-share and deductibles that limit how much you have to pay for CHAMPUS-covered care in any one fiscal year, $1,000 for active-duty facsimiles; $10,000 for all others.

When filing a claim with CHAMPUS, the form now is DD Form 2520 but you may still use the "old" CHAMPUS Form 500, indicate in Block 14 if you have other health insurance. This alerts the CHAMPUS claims processor to look for other documents that should be attached to the claim, such as the explanation of benefits from the other insurance company telling how much they paid, and a copy of the itemized bill. Keep the original for your records, and keep a copy of everything you send in.

If your other insurance is a CHAMPUS supplemental policy, indicate that in Block 14a on the claim form.

On the white CHAMPUS Claim Form 501, usually sent in by physicians and other health-care providers, Block 8 is used to indicate other insurance.

When you become eligible for Medicare Part A coverage (hospital benefits), you lose CHAMPUS eligibility unless you're the dependent of an active-duty sponsor. This is true even if you live overseas, where Medicare benefits aren't available

If you're not eligible for Medicare Part A when you reach age 65, you must file a Social Security Administration "Note of Disallowance" with the uniformed service that issues your ID card.

They'll issue you a new card showing CHAMPUS eligibility and will update the DEERS computer files. Otherwise, if you're 65 years of age or older, the claims processor will assume you have Medicare.

ASK THE JUDGE

By Michael H. Lane
Staff Judge Advocate's Office

Q. I leased a car in July at a cost of $250 per month for 60 months.

The cost of leasing the car was less than buying ($300 per month for 60 months).

The salesman explained that this is because I don't make payments on the "residual value" of my car, which is the $4,000 they think they can sell the car for at the end of the lease.

It seemed like a good deal. However, now I'm on orders to Europe, and I'm told I can't even ship the car out of state.

I'm considering just giving them the car back and stopping payments, but don't want to hurt my credit. Please advise.

A. Don't do anything until you discuss the situation with an attorney. If you simply stop payments and turn in the car, you will be in default under the lease contract, which can cost you $6,000 or more.

The default clause is the most expensive hidden cost involved with leasing.

The default clause and the no-transport provision (no transport out of state or the United States) are two good reasons for military personnel to avoid leases in most cases.

Almost everyone has heard of auto repossession. This is where missing payments allows a lender to seize your car, sell it and charge you the difference between the contract amount owed, expenses incurred and the sale price.

This usually results in a "deficiency" you have to pay. If you don't pay, it goes on your credit record, and you can be sued.

Leasing default is somewhat similar, but it is much more expensive in most cases.

A typical lease default clause allows the lessor to repossess the car, to keep deposits and payments already made, to bill you for all unpaid lease payment, to sell the car (deducting the residual value from any amount credited to your account) and to collect any deficiency.

The following example will illustrate:

Assume the cash price of the lease car was $12,000 and that a lender's sale will bring in $8,500 after expenses. Residual value of the car is $4,000 under the lease. Using the above figures:

- Under the Sale Default Clause:

  Payoff on the car $11,500
  Sale proceeds 8,500
  Deficiency amount $3,000

- Under the Lease Default Clause:

  Lease payments still due (45 x $250) $11,250
  Sale proceeds ($8,500 — $4,000) 4,500
  Deficiency amount $6,750

The actual difference between a leasing default and a sale default situation will become less and less as the end of the lease approaches, so the actual figures must be worked out in each individual case.

Under either contract, you will owe a deficiency. This can lead to letters to the command, a lawsuit and a bad credit rating.

If it appears you may be in such a situation, call the Legal Assistance Office at 545-3282.

To prevent this from happening to you, be very careful about car leases.

No matter what the salesperson says, a lease will almost always cause more problems for the soldier than a sale.

Soldier pleads guilty in tax case

Army News Service

A Tennessee soldier has pleaded guilty in U.S. District Court in Memphis to charges that she filed a false claim against the Internal Revenue Service to obtain a tax refund check.

Spec. Denise A. Lewis pleaded guilty before Judge Jerome Turner to one count of a two-count indictment alleging that she filed a false 1987 tax return in the name of another soldier claiming a refund in the amount of $1,766.

Lewis filed the return with the IRS service center in Memphis and directed the IRS to send the refund check to her mother's post office box in Grand Junction, Tenn.

The second count of the indictment, which will be dismissed as part of a plea agreement, charged that Lewis produced a false military identification card as part of her scheme to cash the refund check.

The indictment, which was returned in June by a federal grand jury in Memphis, was the result of a joint investigation by special agents of the IRS (International) and the U.S. Army Criminal Investigation Command, Ansbach Resident Agency, West Germany, where Lewis was stationed at the time the return was filed.

Lewis faces up to five years in jail and a maximum fine of $250,000 as a result of her conviction.

Sentencing is currently scheduled for Nov. 11.

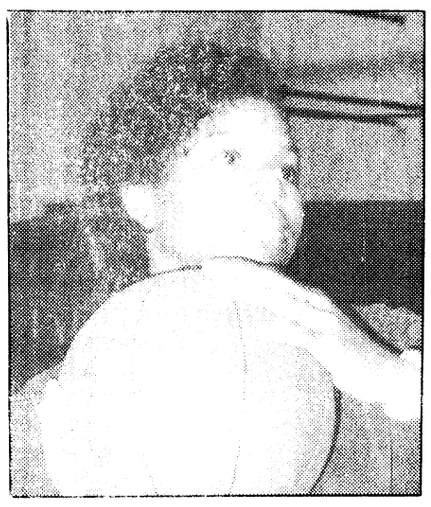
Ogden, Holloway earn ITC's NCO, Soldier of Year titles



By Marilyn Balzarini
Infantry Training Center

Staff Sgt. Patrick Ogden and Spec. Barbara Holloway share a unique distinction. They are the Infantry Training Center's Noncommissioned Officer and Soldier of the Year for 1989.

Both soldiers earned their titles after first defeating soldiers from the eight other battalions in the ITC during quarterly competitions. Then, they had to beat the three other quarterly winners.

The ITC NCOs of the Quarter who competed again Ogden were Staff Sgt. Robert Thomas, assigned to 4th Battalion, 30th Infantry; Staff Sgt. Willie Jackson of the 30th Adjutant General Battalion; and Sgt. Flora Hunt of 2nd Battalion, 58th Infantry.

The Soldiers of the Quarter who opposed Holloway were Spec. Denean Ambersley of 2nd Battalion, 54th Infantry; Spec. Thomas Rice assigned to the 30th AG Bn.; and Spec. Sally Durden also of the 30th AG Bn.

Spec. Barbara Holloway

Ogden, a drill sergeant in 1st Battalion, 19th Infantry, has other military achievements to his credit. Most noteworthy is his membership in the Sergeant Morales Club.

He is one of only 1,500 or so members of the exclusive club for exceptional enlisted soldiers.

I like the challenge of boards," Ogden said. "They are a good way for me to check my military knowledge."

Ogden feels that boards improve communications skills and boost confidence. "They (boards) definitely build confidence," he said. "Think about it. You have to stand in front of five sergeants major, who represent about 125 years of experience, and convince them you know what you're talking about."

Besides his love of the Army, he also enjoys running and his pet rattle snake, Kill Zone.

Holloway, an administrative specialist at 2nd Battalion, 58th Inf., also enjoys a challenge. Since she was new to the unit, she felt that a good first impression would be a lasting one.

"I really wanted to win this competition," she said. "I felt that doing well in this competition would benefit me during my assignment here and throughout my Army career."

Besides military competitions, Holloway is active in sports — especially basketball. She played on teams in high school and during her tour in Germany.

Since arriving at Fort Benning, Holloway has participated in another aspect of the sport — coaching. "I was the assistant coach of the battalion team last season, and I hope to coach again this year," she said.

Supply clerk sheds pounds and inches through civilian personnel fitness program

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

Before a supply clerk from the U.S. Army Infantry Center Information Systems Command started the fitness program offered by the Civilian Personnel Office, many of her friends thought she was about to die.

According Bobbi Ellis, they had good reason to. She weighed 320 pounds and could hardly walk from her desk to the restroom.

"I was a mess," she said, "until I started the CPO program."

The program consists of exercise and a series of classes on nutrition and other health-related subjects.

Ellis enrolled in the aqua aerobics class.

"That was the biggest hurdle for me," she said. "Although I love the water, when you're my size, it's very difficult to go out in public in a bathing suit."

But she did it, and the pounds started coming off. She said before long, the swimsuit was too big and she had to buy another, two sizes smaller.

Losing inches and pounds was not the biggest bonus, Ellis said. It was the newly found energy she gained as a result of heeding what was taught in the nutritional classes and keeping up with the exercise.

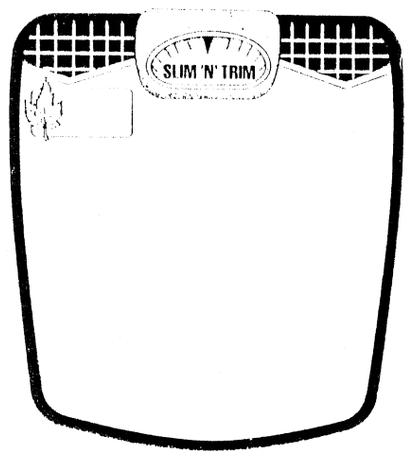
"All of the things the instructors spoke about in those classes really hit home," she said. "I began to realize it was not good to reach for that chocolate cake, and I began reaching for popcorn and fruit instead."

Another incentive for Ellis is her 6-year-old son. A recent widow, she is his sole provider.

"I am a diabetic, I was more overweight than I am now and my health was failing fast," she said. "The things I learned in the classes made me realize I was killing myself."

She said she is grateful she attended the classes before it was too late.

Now her health has not only improved but so has her job performance.



Ellis said she believes every civilian employee would benefit from the classes, whether they're overweight or not.

"Convenience foods are the mainstay of American diets," she said. "So many of us are not aware of what we are doing to our bodies when we eat those type foods."

She said she is now aware of what she eats and has continued with her exercise program. She has lost 30 pounds and 23 and one-half inches.

"I know I have a long way to go," Ellis said. "The program sent me on my way down that path, and I'm grateful for it."

She said she is so grateful, she would be willing to take leave if she could enroll in this program every time it was offered. Unfortunately, CPO has to allow each of civilian employee a chance before they start allowing people to participate in the program a second time.

Nevertheless, she said that's not going to stop her from her goal of 170 pounds.

"I can do things now that I haven't been able to do for a long time," she said. "I have a little boy who needs me, so I can't stop now."

Educational television facility wins award

By Michelle Le Roy Harrison
Bayonet staff writer

The Educational Television Facility at the U.S. Infantry School was presented the state plaque of Nebraska by the Nebraska Army National Guard.

The award was in appreciation for the assistance the television facility has given the Guard in the past.

Every year the Nebraska Guard sends a platoon of new recruits to Fort Benning for one-station-unit-training. For the past seven years, the television facilty has assisted the Guard with the production of 30-second recruiting and retention public service announcements involving the platoon.

The public service announcements are seen on 32 public and cable stations in Nebraska and four other states.

According to Morris Norris, audio visual production officer/supervisor, the television facility's primary mission is to provide training support to units at Fort Benning, but it does support Army National Guard units when it can.

"We've had a long-standing relationship with the Nebraska (Army) National Guard," Norris said.

This year, though, the Guard wanted to put together a 15-minute training film for prospective recruits to see.

According to Nebraska's Sgt. 1st Class Don Coleman, state marketing noncommissioned officer, the television facility was responsible for the entire project.

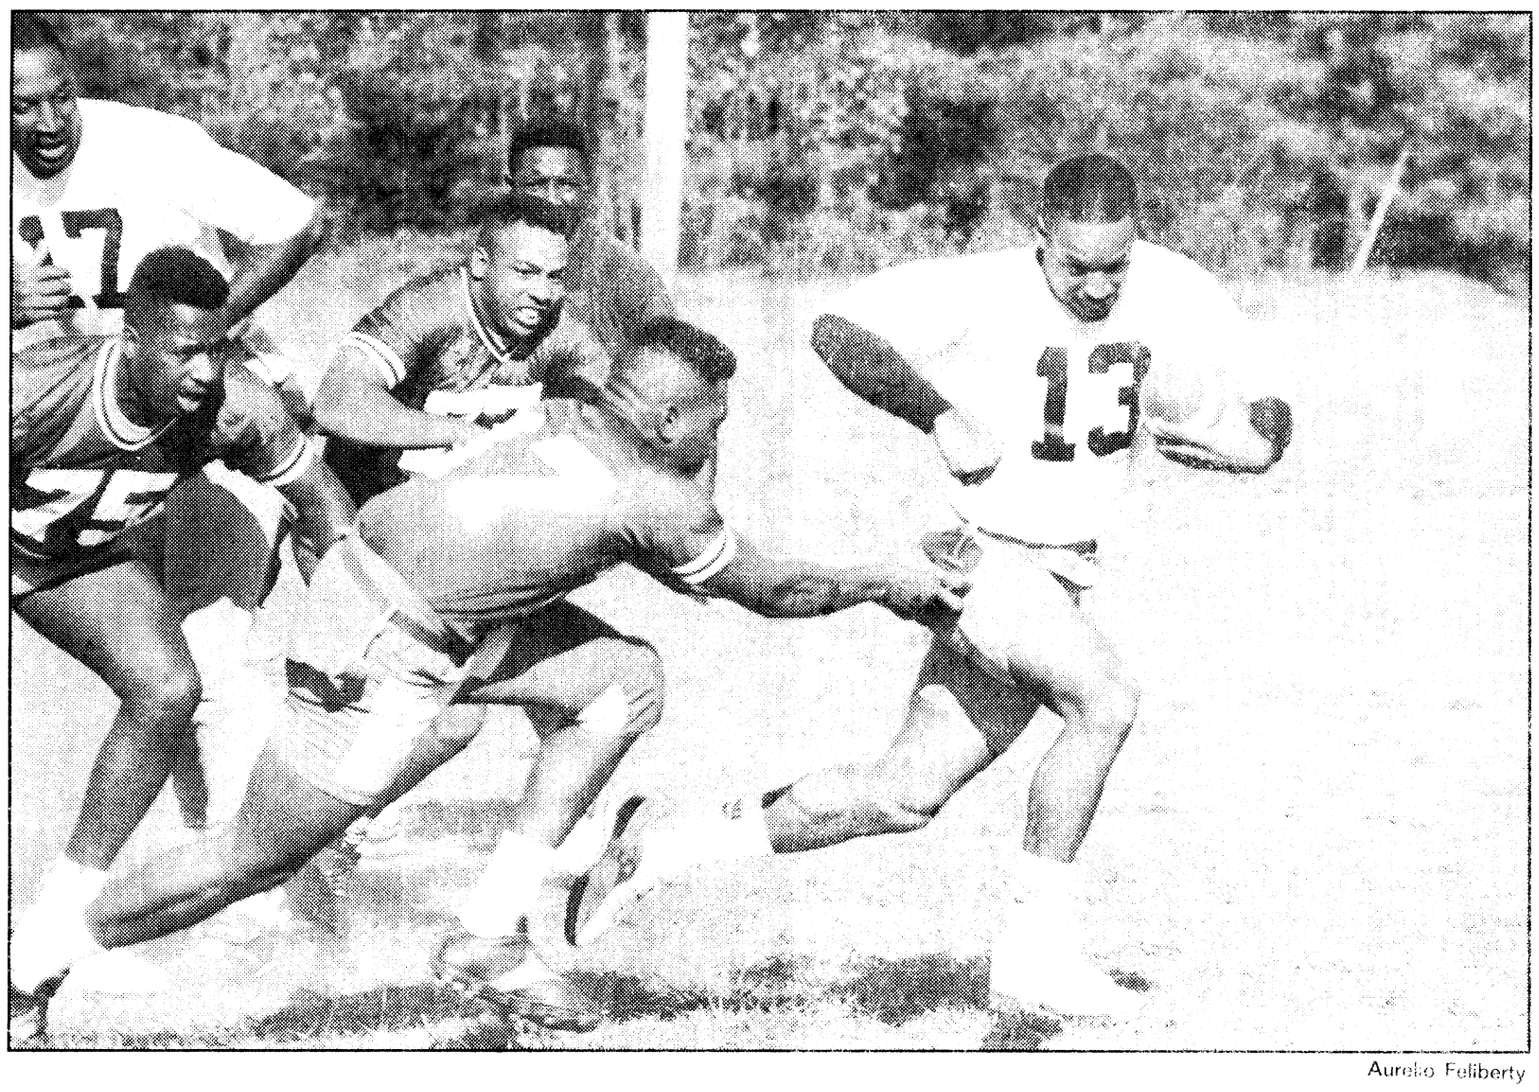
"I sent the script down and Mr. (James L.) Banks (audio visual production officer) oversaw the whole project. He coordinated with the units involved, produced, videotaped and edited the film," Coleman said.

According to Lt. Col Thomas P. Kay, Nebraska's state recruiting and retention manager, the training film "will be seen by every new member of the Nebraska Army National Guard."

The film shows new soldiers going from the military entrance processing station to basic training to advanced individual training.

Although the Guard has always shown its appreciation, its members felt it was time that others knew what the television facility had been doing for them.

Nebraska Guard's adjutant general, Maj. Gen. Stanley M. Heng and Kay sent letters of appreciation to Norris and Banks. Coleman presented the plaque on behalf of Heng.



"It's hard to just say 'thanks,'" Coleman said. "They have been so supportive. They've never turned their backs on us. We wanted to show them how deeply we appreciated their help and expertise."

"There is no way we could get the same quality, production and superior work from a contract service at the same cost it takes ETF to do it."

Norris, on the other hand, feels that it's all in a day's work.

"We were just doing what we were suppose to do," he said.

4th Cavalry's Wayne Jefferies tries to escape the clutches of HHC's Larry Walker.

4th Cavalry shuts out HHC

By Aurelio Feliberty
197th Infantry Brigade

Delta 4th Cavalry earned a slot in the separate company division of the post flag football championships when they shut out Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 197th Infantry Brigade, 14-0, in a fierce game Oct. 4 on Kelley Hill's Essebagger Field.

Despite the final score, both teams were motivated and ready at the start of the contest. Cav went into the game with an impressive 4-0 record.

Cav's Wayne Jefferies said at the start of the game, "Our team is performing exceptionally well despite our lack of practice. We are undefeated, and we're up for this game."

"We've had numerous field exercises, which have limited our ability to practice as a team," said Cav coach Kenneth Millwater. "But, we were able to pull together and use the four league games prior to this one as practice."

Alphonso Boone of HHC said at the start of the contest, "All of our players are seasoned, and we know the game due to the two weeks of practice we had in preparation for this game. We have a strong defense, but we need to work on our offense. We're going to take the game."

"We have a lot of spirit, we're in shape, and we want to win," added his teammate, Harold Bennett.

HHC team members William White and James Curry demonstrated HHC's determination as they repeatedly dashed toward the goal posts with the ball, only to be flagged by the Cav defense.

However, all HHC attempts failed, and both teams remained scoreless until the second half, when Cav's Russell Chase put his team in the lead 6-0 with the first touchdown. Jay Johnson caught the ball between the goal lines for the extra point.

Jefferies sealed the Cav victory when his quick running produced the second, and final, touchdown of the game.

HHC continued to push toward the goal line until the referees called the game, but the Cav defense stopped them every time.

Soldiers selected for 850-mile Flag Run

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Seven Fort Benning runners make up the 11-man team that will join in the American Flag Run Nov. 3 to 10.

The 850-mile trek begins in Washington, D.C., at Arlington Cemetery's Tomb of the Unknown Soldier and winds its way south to Columbus.

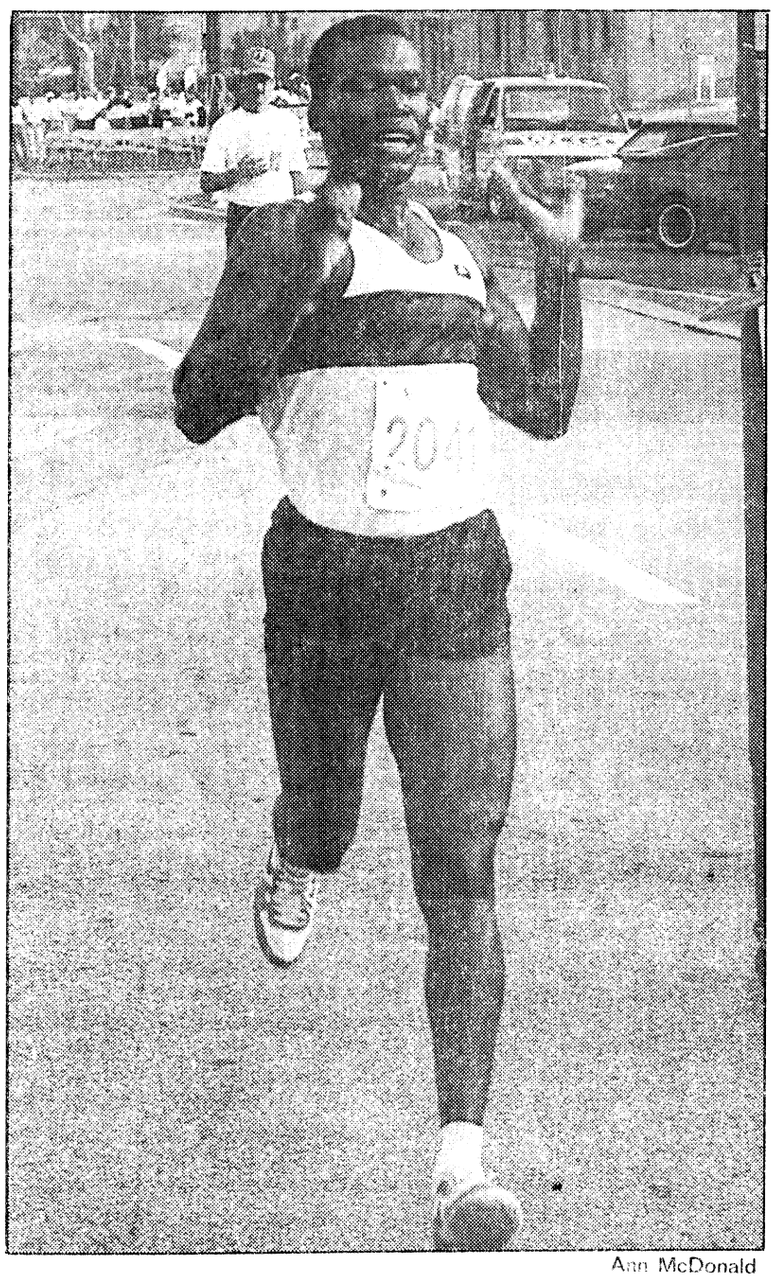
The runners will carry the American Flag as they run legs averaging 10 to 20 miles per day.

Lise Cote, Richard Schick, Ron Gorday, Herb Segal, Juan Padilla, Tom Brophy and Ann McDonald will join local runners Jim Accordino, Jim Musselman Marty Steele and John Henderson on the journey.

The run was started to honor veterans and make people aware of the ongoing battle against arthritis.

Padilla, who is assigned to Company B, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry participated in last year's event and said he is doing it again because he likes the challenge.

"It's a great accomplishment to finish a run of that distance with a team," he said. "It's an honor and a privilege for me to carry the American flag and represent the people of Columbus and Fort Benning."



Cote, a doctor at Martin Army Community Hospital, is one of two females on the team, both soldiers assigned here. She said she wants to represent fitness and the Army.

"I believe I can contribute to the team physically and professionally," she said.

Accordino summed it up by saying, "I can't think of a better way to honor our flag and our nation's veterans than by running the flag."

Presently the runners are gearing up for the event by participating in local and Army-wide races. Cote and McDonald are on the post Army 10-miler team, which will be run Sunday in Washington D.C.

The tournament was a boat-versus-boat tournament to decide first through third places.

The first-place honors went to Otis Carter and Jackie Marsh with a two-day total of 22 pounds, 3 ounces.

Joe Wikoff and George Mendez took second place with 18 pounds, 5 ounces.

Otis Carter also took the big fish award with 4 pounds, 12 ounces.

There was more than 125 pounds of fish caught in one and one-half days of fishing.

Most of the fish caught in the tournament were caught with Carolina-Rigged worm rods, Pig-and-Jigs and Spinnerbaits.

The following merchants provided donations and door prices:

Benning runners dominate race

By Ann M. McDonald
Ledger-Enquirer staff writer

Fort Benning runners dominated the competition at the Celebrate Columbus one-mile Fun Run and 10-kilometer race in downtown Columbus.

Molly Sinclair and Lloyd McDonald were the overall winners for the 10-kilometer race. Sinclair and McDonald are both members of their respective post Army 10-miler teams.

"I ran this race for one last warm-up before the race on Sunday," Sinclair said. "I felt pretty good, and I'm looking forward to the race in Washington."

Although Sinclair said she didn't feel she ran as well as she could have at the Columbus race, she blazed past more than half the field of runners at the race.

McDonald was followed by two of his teammates for Sunday's race, Gregory Krammerer and Jeffrey Huff. The 10-miler teammates took first, second and third respectively.

The race kicked off the communities' events in the downtown area, which included dancing, food and the Oktoberfest sponsored by the Association of the U.S. Army.

SPIRITUAL

The mission is possible

By Chap. Jarvis E. Bailey
2nd MASH, 34th Medical Battalion

Reflections

History records that Mohandas K. Gandhi came in contact with Christianity early in his life. He was quite impressed with the teachings of Christ and the emphasis of the Gospel message.

He was not, however, impressed by the actions of Christians, who subjected him to the same discrimination and prejudice he had known in India.

He later wrote: "We need your Christ; we don't want your Christianity."

The need for Christ, throughout the world, has always been known by His followers. The very nature of Christianity is one of missions: the sharing of the good news that God is love, and that he seeks to reconcile us to himself and to one another through Jesus Christ.

From the beginning, the proclamation of the Gospel to all the nations has been a vital component of the Christian faith.

Today, many Christians are, indeed, proclaiming the Gospel message. But, the way they live is inconsistent with the doctrine they espouse. In other words, they don't practice what they preach.

Christians, having rationalized their shortcomings for so long, though they see the evidence of them every day, have put themselves out of touch with the true tenets of their religion.

It is possible to be a missionary in today's society. But, our lives must reflect the standards of the faith we profess.

We must be that light of the world that shines before humanity that they may see our good works and glorify our Father in heaven.

Yes, the mission is possible. As we go forth to accomplish this task, let us remember the words of Edgar Guest:

"I'd rather see a sermon than hear one any day. I'd rather one walk with me that merly show the way...I can soon learn how to do it if you'll let me see it done. I can watch your hands in action, but your tongue too fast may run...For I may misunderstand you and the high advice you give. But, there's no misunderstanding how you act and how you live."

Eufaula hosts Indian Festival

Eufaula Chamber of Commerce

Historic Eufaula will be the site of the 11th annual Indian Summer Arts and Crafts Festival Saturday and Sunday.

Entertainment and handiwork by several of the Eufaula area's talented artisans and craftsmen will be among the many attractions featured at the festival.

Sixty-two craftsmen and artists from throughout the state have already confirmed to showcase and sell their wares during the two-day event, which lines the parkways of the historic Seth Lore District in Bluff City.

Exhibits will be open from 10 a.m. until 5 p.m. Saturday and from 1 until 5 p.m. Sunday.

Many local artists and craftsmen are scheduled to display their wares.

Adding to the festive atmosphere will be a wide array of entertainment — from gospel singing to clogging and square dancing.

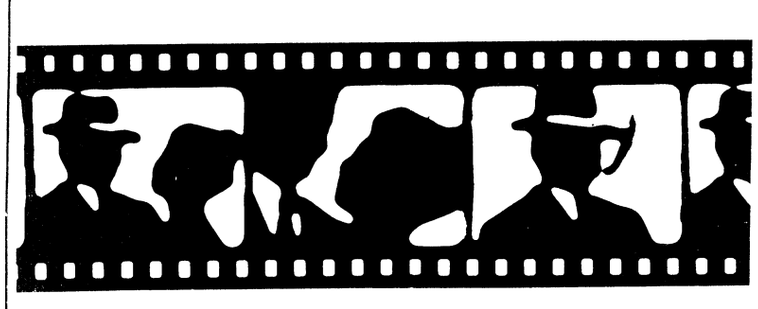
Members of the Eufaula Elementary Chorus, under the auspices of Wanda Styles, will make a repeat appearance at the festival, and the Alabama State Choral Explosion will also be in concert.

The Eufaula High School Band is scheduled to play during the two-day festival, and the Cross Creek Cloggers and Lake City Squares will also perform.

Entertainment this year has been greatly expanded. Sunday a one-and-a-half hour gospel music show is planned, featuring five local gospel groups. The gospel show is scheduled Sunday from 3 until 4:30 p.m.

Another popular attraction of the Indian Summer Festival is the "Hog-Wild" barbecue cook-off.

Business and corporate entrants will compete.



The third annual Indian Summer Antique and Classic Car Show will also take place Saturday during the arts and crafts festival. This year's event will feature two car clubs — Dothan's Corvette Club and the Model A Club from Panama City, Fla.

For more information, contact the Chamber at (205) 687-6664.

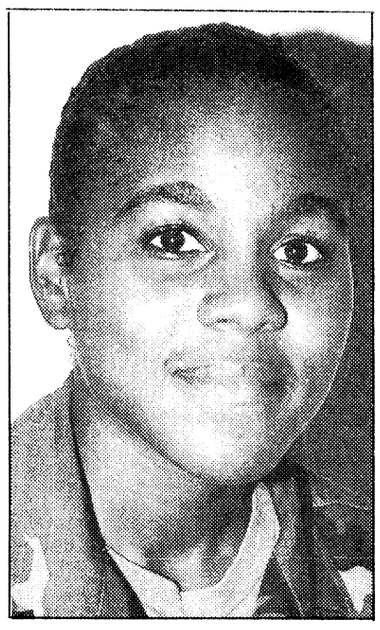
598th Maint. soldier proves BSEP works

By Michelle Le Roy Harrison
Bayonet staff writer

A 598th Maintenance Company soldier is living proof the Basic Skills Education Program works.

When Sgt. Arlene Hall joined the Army in June 1984, she had a general technical score of 98. Seeking improvement, she enrolled in BSEP at Fort Carson, Colo. BSEP is an education program designed to help raise GT scores.

After completing the course, she retested. Her score rose to 104, but she still wasn't satisfied.



Hall enrolled in BSEP in again, this time at Fort Benning. She retested once more and now has a score of 129.

Not only did she surpass her goal of raising her score over 110, but she has also achieved the highest score among soldiers who have attended BSEP here. The highest score possible for retesting is 130.

"She put forth a lot of concentrated effort (in the program)," said Glory McMillian, education service specialist. "She had a goal, and she reached it. She really deserves a 'gold star.'"

The Basic Skills Education Program helps soldiers raise their GT scores by improving their reading and math skills.

Soldiers first take the Test Adult Basic Education evaluation to determine where they should be placed in BSEP.

Sgt. Arlene Hall

All 10 sections of the Armed Services Vocational Aptitude Battery test are covered in reading and math lessons.

Soldiers in BSEP are retested on the sections in the Armed Forces Classification Test.

The program's goal is to have soldiers performing above the 10th-grade level after completing BSEP.

Any soldier who has a GT score under 100 is strongly encouraged to attend BSEP.

Those soldiers whose score is over 100, but still want to raise it higher, must request a place in the program.

According to McMillan, there are several reasons a soldier would want to raise his GT score.

"The GT score is the main score looked at for assignments, military occupational specialities and reenlistments," McMillan said. "You need a GT score of at least 110 for Officer Candidate School, 115 to apply for an ROTC scholarship and between 110 to 120 to apply for warrant officer school."

Hall's future career goal is to enter the retention and recruiting field, which requires a minimum GT score of 110.

As her unit's reenlistment noncommissioned officer, Hall realized that many MOSs require this minimum score.

"I talk to soldiers about BSEP and tell them to ask members in their chains of command about getting into it," Hall said.

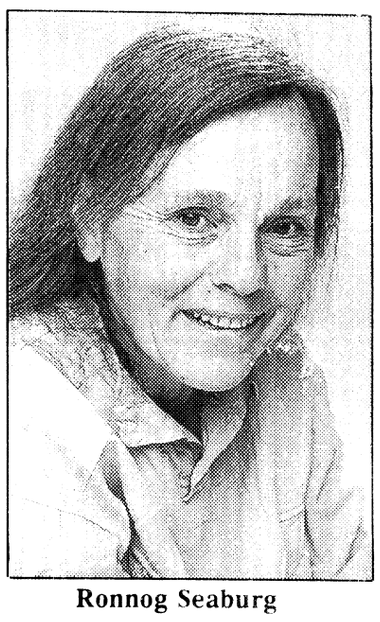
"I encourage anyone who is not happy with his present GT score to attend BSEP. It will not only raise your score but increase self-confidence and pride and give you a sense of accomplishment. I feel I can reach my educational goals and fulfill my dreams not only now as a soldier, but in the future as a civilian," she said.

When Hall talks to soldiers about BSEP, she can honestly say she is living proof the program works.

"I can show them it can be done," Hall said.

Loyd School welcomes Artist in Residence

Fort Benning Schools



During nine weeks in October and November, the Swedish-born poet, critic and novelist Ronnog Seaburg of Atlanta, will work as Artist in Residence with students at Frank R. Loyd School.

Seaburg is a published writer in English as well as in her native language, Swedish. In all, she has published 12 books, not counting numerous newspaper, magazine, stage or radio works.

At Loyd School, plans are being made for every student to take part in the program. Poems-of-the-day, public readings and a published book of student work will all be generated.

With even the youngest students, Seaburg will conduct exercises of imagination, story telling and discussions of poetry.

While temporarily living at Fort Benning, Seaburg said she looks forward to working with Loyd School parents and other Fort Benning adults, as well as with Loyd School students. Announcements of times and dates of adult activities will be made later.

Ronnog Seaburg

The Artist in Residence program, sponsored in part by the Georgia Council for the Arts, National Endowment for the Arts and the Fort Benning School System, encourages the visiting artist to spend a portion of her time doing her own writing. Seaburg said she plans to outline another book and to do some "bread-and-butter" writing while doing her residency at Loyd School.

"This is the second year we have had an Artist in Residence program at Loyd School," said Dell Karr, Loyd's principal. "This is a fantastic opportunity for children to work with a published author, and we're delighted to have Seaburg with us."

Old dogs learn new tricks

By Troy A. Pearson
197th Infantry Brigade

The old saying, "You can't teach an old dog new tricks," just isn't true.

The Kelley Hill Recreation Center offers several evening classes for soldiers and their family members to increase the obedience of their pet pooches.

The course instructor, Armand DeBois, has been working with dogs for the past 30 years. A recently retired sergeant first class, DeBois spent more than 20 years as a senior military dog trainer and was one of the first persons to train scout dogs for the Army, Navy and Marines.

"This class is really more for the dog owner than for the dog," said DeBois' wife, Shelia. "What we do is teach the master how to train the dog. With the proper skill, dedication and love, you can teach your pet to do almost anything."

Three classes are currently offered at the center: puppy kindergarten, for puppies eight weeks or older; a basic course for dogs six months to two years old; and an advanced course for dogs two years and older.

For more information, visit the Kelley Hill Recreation Center or call 544-3079.

Hunter Control hours are 4 a.m. to 8 p.m. Telephone numbers for commercial phones are 682-1589, 682-1622 or 682-1778. When using a 544 or 545 prefix telephone, call 544-4226. Only call this number when a commercial phone is not available.

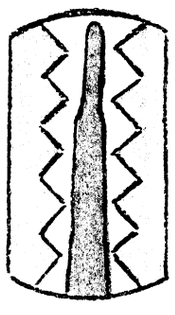
Don't throw money away

Save your aluminum cans and recycle them. There is now a recycling facility conveniently located on post. This is an excellent way to raise a little extra money.

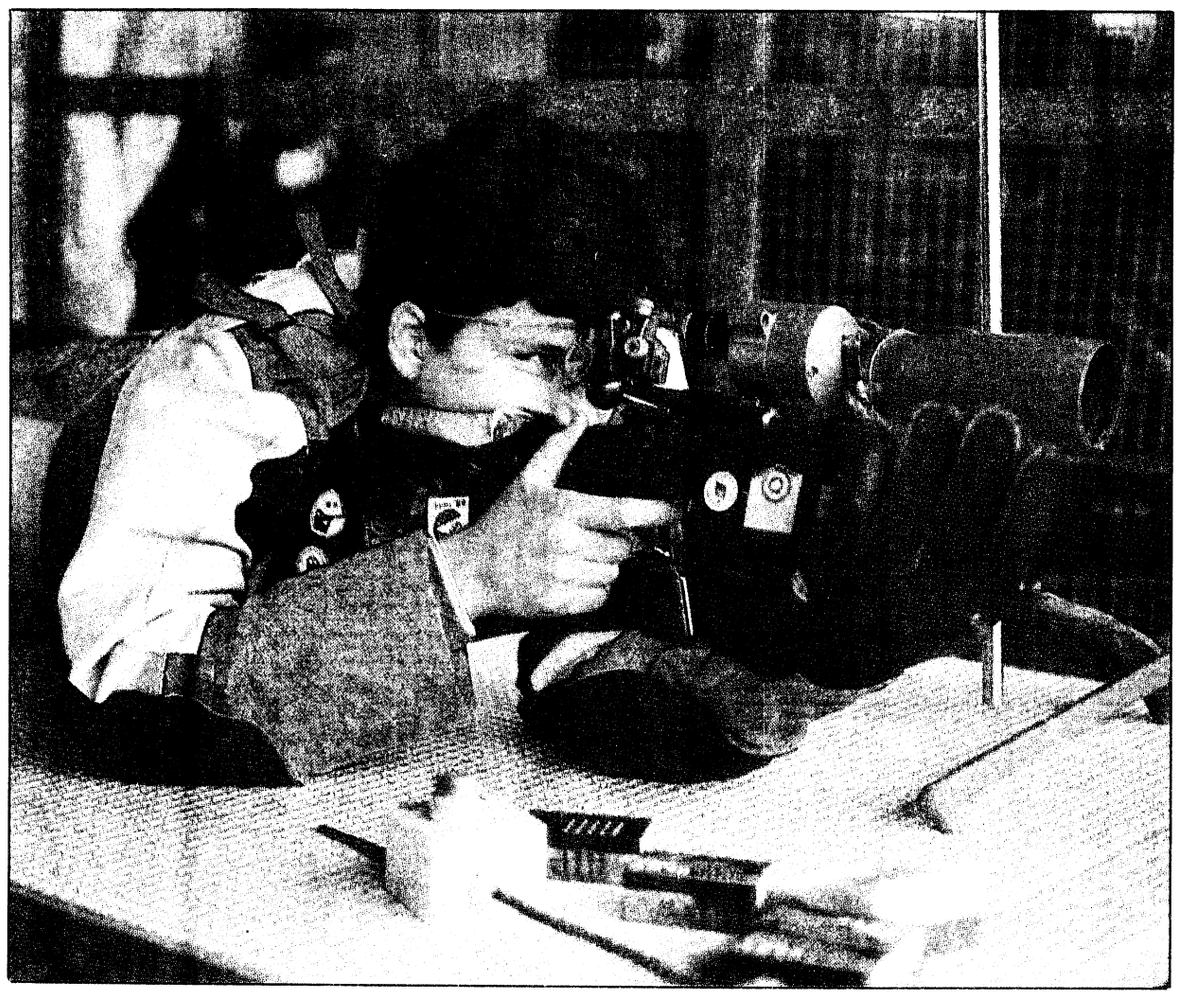
All units, soldiers, family members, Department of Defense personnel, contractors and private organizations authorized to operate on post may use the facility.



Pitch in as a group and make a little money. Plus, help keep the post clean by recycling aluminum cans.

Payment will either be cash payment or cash voucher to be redeemed at the cashier's cage at either the Officers' Club or NCO Club. For military units, the unit fund will be credited.

The recycle facility is located adjacent to building 2288 on Alenko Street. Call 687-8000 for more information. Operating hours are Tuesday through Saturday, 10 a.m. to 3:30 p.m.



197th changes hands

Col. Theodore W. Reid will assume command of the 197th Infantry Brigade Thursday, 10 a.m., at York Field.

He succeeds Col. Harvey D. Watson, who has commanded the brigade — the largest of its kind in the Army — since Oct. 27.

The change of command ceremony will feature 30 marching elements representing each company in the 4,400-soldier brigade.

Marksmanship unit blasts competition

Gold, silver and bronze medal performances captured the title of top military shooting team for the eighth year in a row.

By Sally Roberts
U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit

The U.S. team earned the title of top military shooting team for the eighth consecutive year during the XXIV CISM Shooting Championship in Santiago, Chile.

The title was cinched by gold, silver and bronze medal performances by members of the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit, Air Force and Marine Corps personnel who emerged ahead of competitors from 22 nations.

CISM is a French acronym for the military sports council that organizes annual matches in up to 22 sporting events such as volleyball, boxing, track and field, parachuting and orienteering.

The U.S. Men's rifle team took first place in the 300m Standard Rifle and 300m Military Rapid Fire Rifle matches.

The U.S. team emerged ahead of teams from France and Switzerland who battled for second and third places in the events.

Members of the U.S. team included: Sgt. Brad Carnes, Capt. Dave Erickson, Capt. Kurt Fitz-Randolph, Capt. Stephen Goff, Spec. Tom Tamas and Maj. James Meredith (rifle team captain), all from USAMU.

Erickson won individual silver medals in both these events. Fitz-Randolph took the bronze in the Standard Rifle event and Carnes took the bronze in the Rapid Fire match.

Capt. Wanda Jewell and 1st Lt. Rhonda Barush took first and second respectively in the 50m Ladies Rifle three-position match and then traded places on the winner's podium in the 50m Ladies Standard Rifle (prone) match, with Barush taking the gold and Jewell the silver medal.

In the Ladies Sport Pistol matches, USAF Staff Sgt. Barbara Holterman took the top individual honors and led the team to victory in the event over teams from Korea and Chile.

Other members of the U.S. team in this event were Spec. Audrey Hayes, USAMU, and Sgt. Roxanne Conrad, USMC. Conrad also won the individual title in the Ladies Military Rapid Fire Pistol Match.

The Men's pistol team also added to the U.S. team's overall win by earning silver medals in the Center Fire and Military Rapid Fire Pistol team events.

Members of the Men's Pistol team were: Master Sgt. Erich Buljung, Staff Sgt. Gary Marsh, Sgt. 1st Class Jimmie McCoy, Capt. John McNally of USAMU and John O'Ryan, USMC.

Alabama passes new law on taxing mobile homes

By Dennis E. Brower
Staff Judge Advocate's Office

In 1988, Alabama passed new laws regulating the ad valorem taxation of mobile homes that were located in the state.

These new state laws purported to change the rules of taxation by making all mobile homes that were attached or connected to utilities to be subject to the tax.

In past years, soldiers who were temporarily assigned to Fort Benning and were not permanent residents of the State of Alabama, were exempt from this mobile home taxation on the basis of the Soldiers' and Sailors' Civil Relief Act.

Soldiers only needed to return any ad valorem bills to the county tax office, with a Soldiers' and Sailors' Civil Relief Affidavit, and they would not have to pay the tax.

Since this new law was passed in the fall of 1988, several soldiers have reported to the Legal Assistance Office that the local Alabama county tax offices would not accept their affidavits for tax exemption on their mobile homes.

There apparently were some questions within the tax departments as to whether soldiers were still entitled to use the exemption under this new Alabama tax law.

The questions concerning the exemption have now been clarified by the State of Alabama's Department of Revenue.

That Department recently issued a ruling to all its county tax offices that the Soldiers' and Sailors' Civil Relief Act is still applicable and nonresident soldiers, who are assigned to Fort Benning under military orders, are exempt from this mobile home ad valorem tax upon the filing of the affidavit.

This information should now be in the hands of all of the Alabama tax authorities, and there should be no additional misunderstandings.

Soldiers who submitted an affidavit this past year, but were still made to pay the tax, should request a refund from the county tax office where the tax was paid.

Should you have any questions, contact the Legal Assistance Office at 545-3281/3282.

They've never met, but in their new positions, they'll meet soon; and, they'll find they have more in common than some sisters.

Sgt. Patricia Crenshaw

They are the U.S. Army Infantry Center Noncommissioned Officer and Soldier of the Year, respectively — Sgt. Patricia Crenshaw of 215th Finance Support Unit, 36th Engineer Group, and Spec. Julie Grantham, 988th Military Police Company.

In these positions, they represent each soldier at Fort Benning. But, the similarities don't stop there. Each has been in the Army a little more than two years and both have positions not normally associated with a soldier representing the "Home of the Infantry." Also each was the only woman on their respective boards.

Although the two received some ribbing because they are women, they said it doesn't bother them in the least.

Spec. Julie Grantham

Grantham said, "The other soldiers had the same chance I did. It's just that on that particular day, I was better than they were."

She quickly added it didn't mean she felt she was better than anyone else because she knows there are a heck of a lot of good soldiers at Fort Benning who weren't there.

Crenshaw said she was more nervous at this board than at any other.

"I had only 48 hours to prepare for the board," she said. "If it wasn't for my sister and my squad leader, I don't know what I would have done."

She discovered what she could do rather quickly, as she won the board.

Crenshaw recalled that after she found out she'd won, she and her squad leader jumped for joy.

Grantham said, "I just breathed a sigh of relief. I liked the challenge and really felt I had accomplished something, but I was really glad when it was over."

They agreed that challenge, is what got them interested in going to the board in the first place.

Grantham said that's why she joined the Army. A graduate of Air Assault and Airborne schools, she said she truly believes in the Army's theme — be all you can be.

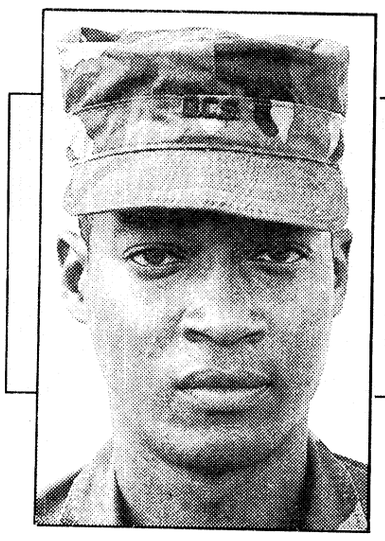
She became an MP so she could help others, especially children, said Grantham.

Crenshaw, originally from Columbus, is also interested in helping children. She is active in a local children's track club. She is a coach and an administrative assistant for the organization.

She is also active in the church choir.

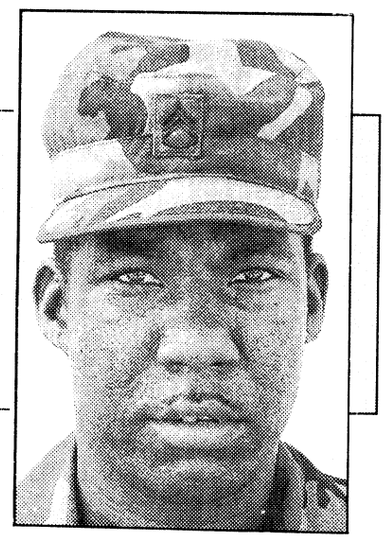
Describing herself as an achiever, Crenshaw is currently pursuing her bachelors degree at Columbus College. She hopes to graduate this winter.

In the Army, Crenshaw's specialty is computers. In that position, she writes and modifies computer programs. She also trains others to use the programs. If another unit on post has a problem in her area of expertise, she said she fixes it.



"I strive to be on top," she said. "So do a lot of other people, but if you don't try it won't happen."

"If you go around thinking and acting like it won't happen, you'll be a dud," Crenshaw said. "It's your choice."



It's clear, these women aren't waiting around. They've grabbed the brass ring and are holding on tight.

OPINION

VARIOUS VOICES: What are your feelings about the current emphasis to reinforce Army regulations on starch-free Battle Dress Uniforms?

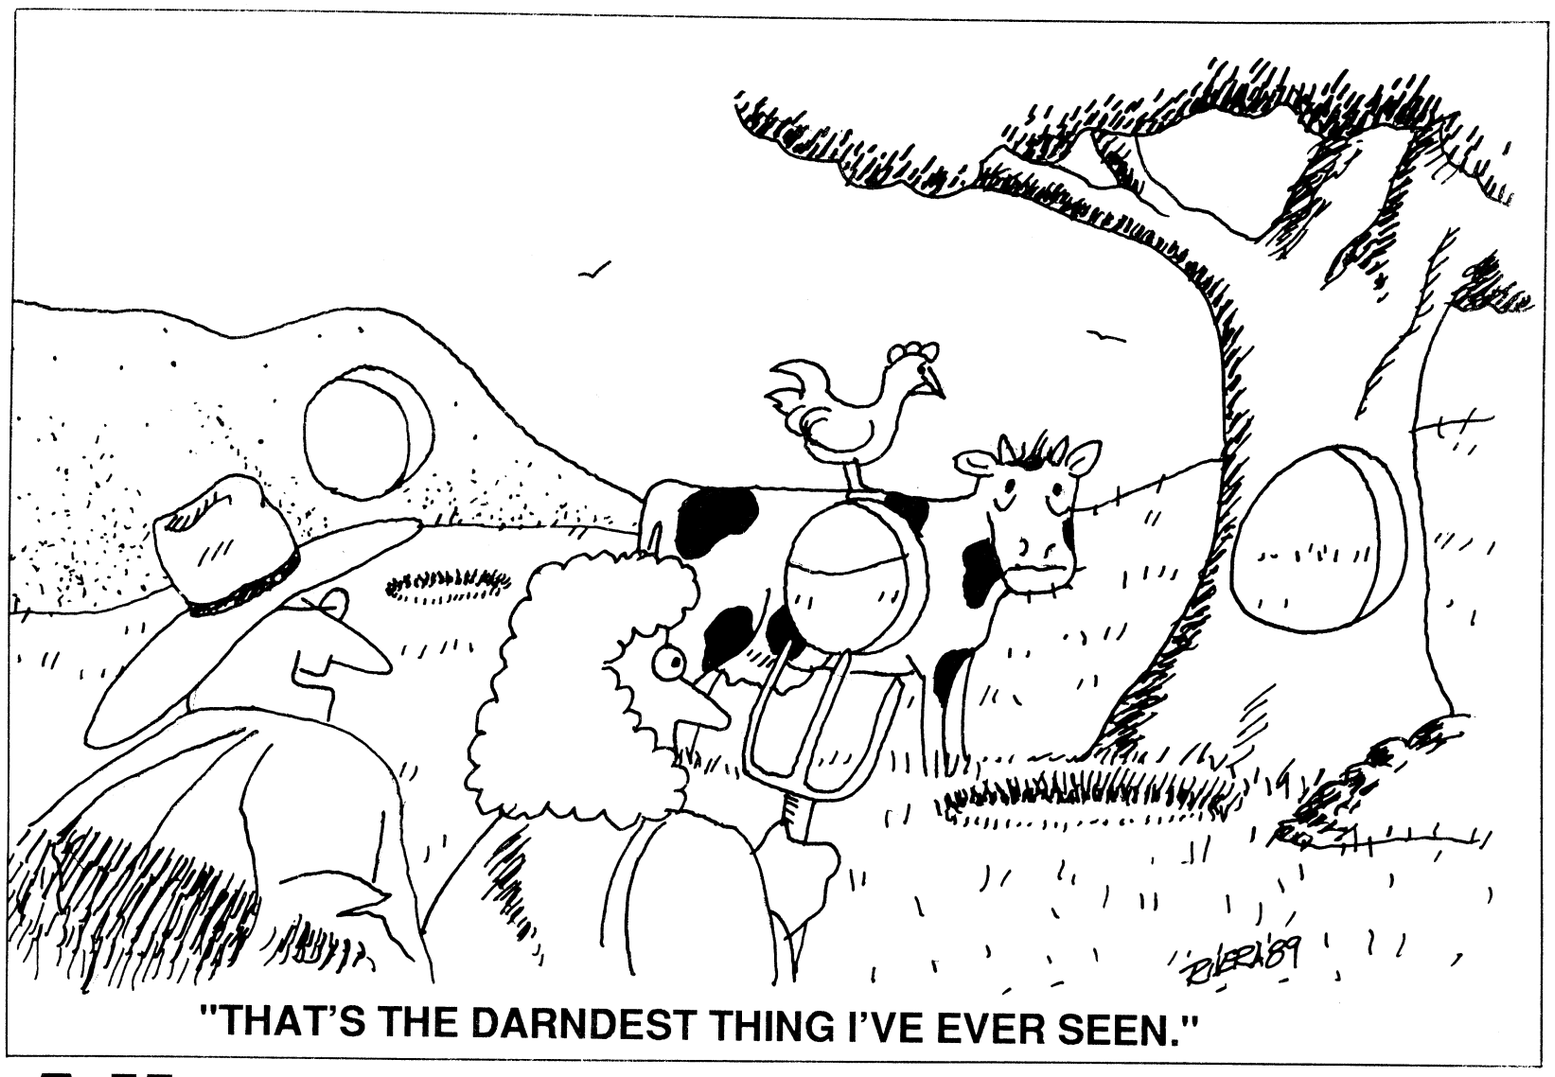
OCS cadet Roger R. Berry, Co. A, 3rd Bn., 11th Inf. Regt. — "Soldiers should feel sharp, look sharp and be sharp. Starching BDUs makes a soldier look sharp. It wouldn't be necessary in wartime, but I think it's fine in peacetime."

Staff Sgt. John Jackson, Co. A, 2nd Bn., 29th Inf. Regt. — "Young soldiers are going to role model after someone. Starch makes BDUs look good and helps set a good example."

Pvt. Herbert E. Webber, Co. A, 1st Bn., 507th PIR — "I see two sides to the issue. A regulation is a regulation, but soldiers shouldn't always look like they just came out of the field."



2nd Lt. Robert Volk, Co. B, 2nd Bn., 11th Inf. Regt. — "I think BDUs look better starched. They give a nice, neat appearance and a professional look."

Sgt. Arlene Hall, 598th Maint. Co., 67th Maint. Bn., 36th Engr. Grp. — "I like starched BDUs. They show that soldiers take pride in their uniforms."

Sgt. David Dees, Co. D, 3rd Bn., 32nd Inf. Regt. — "I think the decision should be left up to the individual soldiers."

Aliens make headlines

By Clyde Snively
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Aliens from other planets are making news big time.

The Russians are claiming to see monsters three meters (Russians speak in metric) tall with three eyes. And not to be outdone, the ever-patriotic folks in Georgia and Alabama are seeing spaceships.

Being from La La Land, I don't discount UFO sightings out of hand.

I remember pilgrimages to Joshua Tree National Park where a witch, who claimed to have a direct line (this was before the break up of Ma Bell) to extraterrestrials would pop out of a Joshua tree, do a funny dance, make incantations, then stand aside so she wouldn't get parked on by a flying saucer.

The flying saucers used to land all the time, and she'd carry on conversations with these people then share it with the rest of us via the news media.

Of course, one never landed while I was there. One never land while news media were present, either. She explained that away by saying the visitors could sense hostility in the crowd, so refused to show themselves.

Well, I hope I wasn't considered a hostile force. I WANTED to believe.

After all, didn't people from outer space build the giant runways in Peru? Didn't they have a hand in the mammoth heads on Easter Island? And what about the pyramids?

Yep, mortal man had some outside help. No doubt about it.

You scoff.

You pooh pooh stories of aliens from outer space.

But why? The universe is a big place. There's lots of room for other civilizations.

What prevented God from being bored watching over earthlings and going off to some other corner of the universe and designing a new model, perhaps a more intelligent model.

Or, vice versa?

I don't see it written in my Bible where God only set up one planet. I mean, who's going to tell him he can't have more than one colony of intelligent life?

"Hey, you there, God, watcha think you're doing. We earthlings demand your full attention. Set up another race of people on another planet and you might forget us.

"Then what happens. We get into all sorts of trouble, start wars, build nuclear bombs, abuse drugs, and, before you know it, we won't be around.

"So let's not have any other creations in this universe. You pay strict attention to us."

"Amscra," would be God's answer. That translates into "get lost."

So who's to say those UFO sightings by people in Fort Mitchell and Columbus are fanciful flights of the imagination.

People have been claiming they've seen spacecraft since millennium. The Air Force got into it real heavy, keeping track of all reported sightings, to include those by their own pilots who aren't prone to exaggeration.

We've all heard how the Air Force actually has the bodies of four extraterrestrials stowed away in an abandoned hangar out west.

"Yeah, but why did they stop the study?" you ask. Did you ever think they just might have all the information they need?

"Okay, so if they're flying around, stirring folks up, why don't they land and be recognized?" you ask. Who says they haven't?

Lots of folks claim to have talked to these people, even gone into their space ships for scientific experiments.

Don't forget, we're sending out space probes all the time that don't land and would probably scare the bejeebers out of people who might inhabit some other planet.

And finally, who's to say these outer space people aren't actually living with us today, perhaps trying to either straighten us out, or undermine us from within?

After all, if there could be communists under every bed in the 50s, who's to say there aren't creatures from another planet lurking about.

Look at Shirley MacLaine and Gen. George S. Patton, they and others thought they were reincarnations from past lives. Maybe they were actually from another world.

Maybe, just maybe the person you're sitting next to...wellllll.

Vuono stresses energy awareness

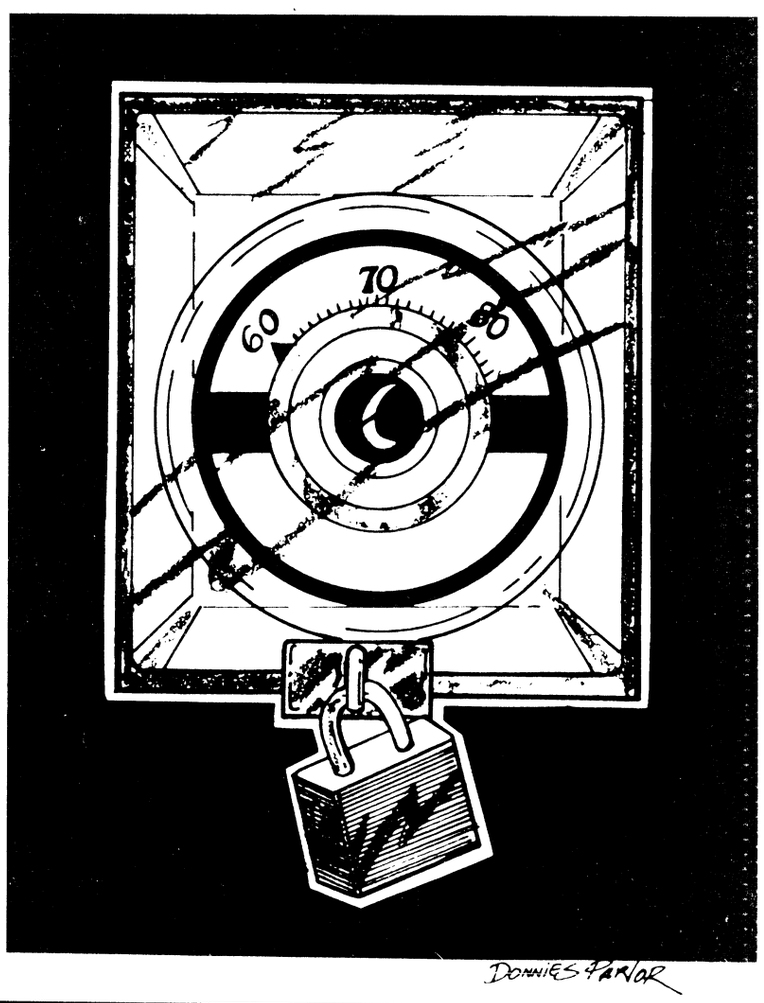
Army News Service

Declaring "Conserve With Comfort and Common Sense" as the Army's theme for this year's Energy Awareness Month, set for October, Army Chief of Staff Carl E. Vuono emphasized the importance of conserving and managing energy resources.

In a prepared statement, Vuono linked the month-long observance to the Army's Communities of Excellence program and asked the help of Army community members worldwide.

"Comfort describes the intent of the Army Communities of Excellence program," Vuono said.

"Through the involvement of the entire Army family, communities not only improve themselves but also foster commitment and pride among their members."



"Common sense is simply doing what is smart," Vuono added.

"Applying this theme to our use of energy, we will produce savings that can be reinvested in quality of life, training and readiness initiatives."

Vuono said that commanders, staffs, energy managers, tenant activities and consumers must work together to get the best results from energy management.

"We can be proud of our energy conservation record, but we must plan today to be prepared for tomorrow's energy challenges," Vuono said.

"During energy awareness month let's redouble our efforts to use energy efficiently and to be innovative and resourceful in shaping our energy future."

Whether you lead a squad or command a battalion, your ability to help keep good soldiers in the Army is a strong reflection of your effectiveness as a leader.

From the day a young person begins Basic Training, to the last day of his or her enlistment, you make a critical difference. Because the way you lead your soldiers has a lot to do with their decision to reenlist.

Aside from teaching and training, as well as instilling in your people Army values to make them better soldiers, one of the most important things you do is to be a good listener. It lets your soldiers know you care. You make them feel needed. Respected. Appreciated. And, in turn, more likely to want to continue their Army experience.

You can give your soldiers dozens of great reasons to stay in the Army. But the greatest reason of all is the one staring back at you in the mirror: your soldiers are yours to keep.

ARMY. BE ALL YOU CAN BE.

11th Airborne vets return to old unit

By Shawn Lorimer
Bayonet staff writer

The 11th Airborne Division, the first American unit to successfully complete a rescue mission behind enemy lines, chose Fort Benning as the site of its 1989 reunion.

Beginning Oct. 11, members of the unit, which during WWII rescued 2,146 prisoners held at Los Banos prison camp in the Philippines, began arriving in Columbus.

More than 1,000 former infantrymen, ex-POWs and their families gathered in Columbus for the occasion. This seems only appropriate since the 11th Airborne was formed at Fort Benning during WWII.

As members of the unit began to fill the South Hall of the Columbus Ironworks Convention & Trade Center, they signed in for the reunion, sought out old friends and relived old adventures.

The people there were from many walks of life. There were tile setters, carpenters, businessmen and authors, and almost everyone had badges, pins and crests from different units.

The most common badge was miniature airborne wings, but also worn were silver stars, Combat Infantryman's Badges and even the old glider wings.

Members attending the reunion had a chance to compete in a golf tournament held at the Fort Benning golf course Oct. 11.

On Oct. 12, 11th Airborne Association members were welcomed to Fort Benning by post Commanding General Maj. Gen. Michael F. Spigelmire in Marshall Auditorium.

While the crowd was being seated, one of the members addressed the audience and asked if anyone knew the whereabouts of a friend he had not been able to locate since WWII.

As it turned out, his long lost friend was sitting in the crowd.

The highlight of the reunion was the dedication of the 11th Airborne Memorial, also Oct. 12, at the National Infantry Museum.

The life-size statue is made of bronze and is a replica of a photo that appeared on the Sept. 14, 1945, cover of "Yank" magazine.

The statue depicts a WWII soldier with his weapon in his right hand raised over his head. The statue sits on a granite base, which weighs more than 130,000 pounds. It is surrounded by a short wall, also made of granite, which bears inscriptions telling about the campaigns in which the 11th Airborne participated.

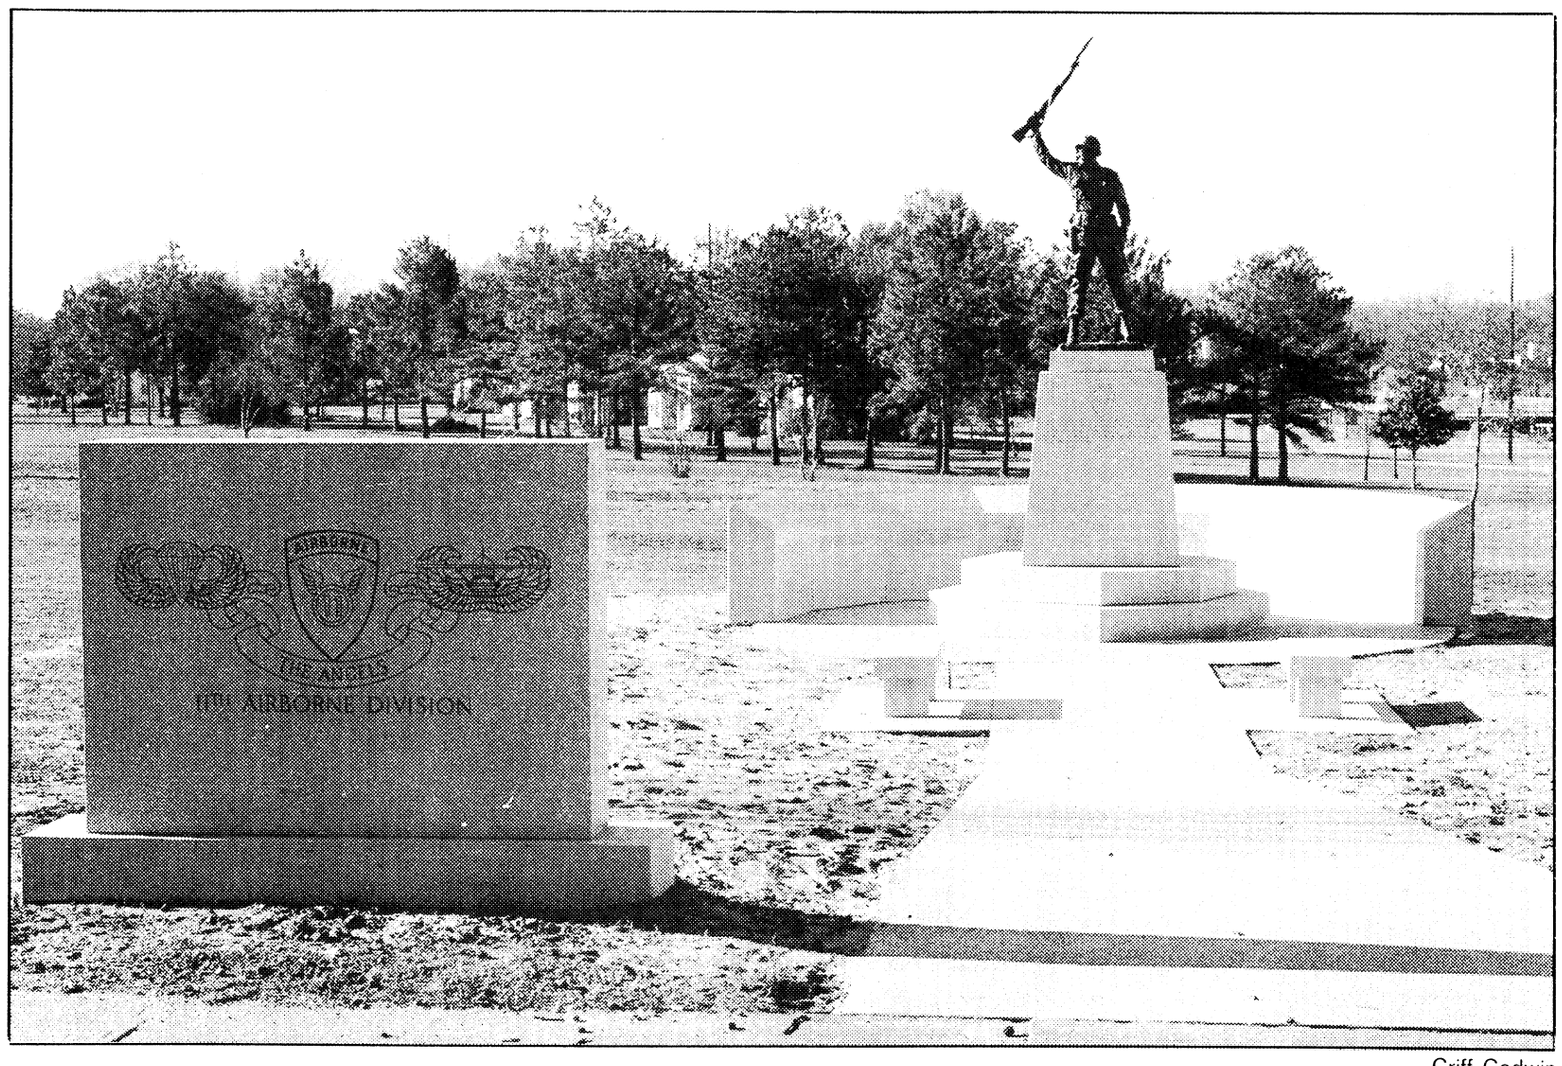
The monument cost nearly $150,000 and took artist Bill Porteus seven years to plan and create. Porteus is a member of the 11th Airborne Association.

The dedication of the memorial began with a free-fall parachute jump by the Silver Wings jump team.

One old paratrooper remarked, "They sure land a lot more gently than I remember." That's because the team uses special chutes with which they can control their rate of descent.

Brig. Gen. William M. Steele, the assistant commandant of the Infantry School and 11th Airborne Association president, retired Lt. Col. Henry A Burgess spoke at the ceremony.

Finally at 2:25 p.m., the crowd, some dressed in old khaki uniforms, cheered and applauded as the camouflage shroud was removed and the statue revealed. A pair of wreaths were laid at the base of the monument.



In the closing moments of the ceremony, many, in the now quiet crowd, fought back tears as the U.S. Army Band played Taps.

The reunion festivities were concluded with a dinner banquet Saturday night at the Convention & Trade Center. The guest speaker, Gen. James J. Lindsey from Special Operations Command at McDill Air Force Base, told the 11th Airborne, "there is no such thing as an ex-paratrooper," and he reminded them that they will always be airborne.

Also at the banquet, Carol Talbot, former POW and author of the book, "Raid at Dawn," presented a special copy of the book to Brig. Gen. William M. Steele.

"I never got a chance to thank the paratroopers who rescued us," Talbot said.

As friends remembered old times and couples danced to a group playing big-band music, one retired soldier said, "You might see old, distinguished gentlemen now, but during their day, this was the meanest, wildest bunch around."

The 11th Airborne memorial stands as a constant reminder of the bravery of "The Angels."

Former POW describes rescue

By Shawn Lorimer

"Hearing gunfire, I hid among my luggage, hoping to find protection.

"But when I looked on the floor in front of me, there were two jump boots.

"As I looked up, the boots, I realized, belonged to an American paratrooper."

Carol Talbot was one of 2,146 American and allied prisoners rescued by the 11th Airborne Division in the Philippines on February 23, 1945.

Talbot was a passenger on the cruise liner, President Grant, when the Japanese attacked Pearl Harbor Dec. 7, 1941.

When news of the attack reached the Philippines, Talbot along with other passengers, returned to the ship, which was docked in Manila Harbor.

However, the ship's captain showed the passengers the fine print on the reverse of the ticket, which read, "This contract void in case of war."

The passengers were asked to leave the ship, which quietly slipped out of the harbor later that night. Talbot and other passengers were later taken prisoner in Manila.

The rescue of those prisoners years later, according to retired Col. Edward Lahti, was one of most successful airborne operations ever mounted. Lahti was made commander of the 511th Parachute Infantry Regiment when its commanding officer was fatally wounded.

The rescue operation involved a simple five-part plan.

First, the camp would be attacked during the hours of darkness, and the Japanese guards would be taken out by a small recon element.

Second, the Japanese garrison near the camp would be destroyed by a company-size airborne unit.

Third, an overland operation would establish a safe route to evacuate the prisoners on armored amphibious vehicles, then called "amphtracks."

Fourth, a strong diversionary attack by glider troops would be mounted to draw the enemy's attention away from the rescue operation.

Drill sergeants, spouses voice concerns

Stress management techniques are being taught here to help drill sergeants and their spouses cope with a tough job.

By Marilyn Balzarini
Infantry Training Center

Drill sergeants and their spouses spent a day sharing professional experience and discussing issues of concern last week.

The Main Post NCO Club played host to the Infantry Training Center's first Drill Sergeant Reunion.

Featured were stress management techniques for the drill sergeants and assertiveness training for the wives.

The reunion, which will become a quarterly event, is designed for drill sergeants who are nine through 12 months into their tours.

"We target drill sergeants who are at about the one year point in their tours because they have been working as drill sergeants long enough to know what's going on."

Sgt. Maj. William Mayo, the Infantry Training Center's command sergeant major, said, "They have also experienced the stress that comes with a demanding job and working long hours over an extended period of time."

The reunions address issues, both professional and personal, that effect drill sergeants because of their special work environment and the added demands of their job.

By sharing ideas and experiences, the Infantry Training Center hopes to reduce some of the pressure placed on its drill sergeants.

Spouses are also targeted for the reunions. Unique problems exist for family members as well.

The aim is to get the wives involved in their husband's job, give them a chance to meet with other women with similar concerns and educate them in a variety of areas to improve their ability to cope.

Strengthening family ties ensures a good support system, which is crucial for a successful tour as a drill sergeant.

Staff Sgt. Louis Tinsley, Drill Sergeant of the Year for 1989, said he feels that an understanding wife is essential for a married drill sergeant.

"A good marriage is really important." Tinsley said, "A wife who participates and is enthusiastic about what you're doing makes all the difference."

Diane Miles, whose husband is a drill sergeant at Company C, 1st Battalion, 19th Infantry Brigade, said the reunion would be good for all spouses of soldiers.

"This reunion could benefit anyone whose husband is in the Army, not just drill sergeants' wives," Miles said.

Some drill sergeants said they already have informal support units in their battalions.

However, a more structured atmosphere with classes taught by experts like Lt. Col. Donald Dickinson and Maj. George Mabry both of the Infantry Training Center and Capt. Mary Laedtke, an occupation health specialist, is very beneficial.

The goal of the reunions is to make drill sergeant duty a more rewarding experience and provide better quality training for Initial Entry soldiers.

Rescue

plan included setting up a holding area and aid station for the POWs behind friendly lines.

According to Talbot, conditions inside the camp were horrible. She said people often ask her if she remembers moments of compassion from the Japanese captors.

She said most of the time they were strict disciplinarians, but there were a few times when they were kind.

"Once a Japanese guard gave his entire canteen, it had tea in it I think, to any mother traveling with children while being transfered from one camp to another," she said.

She recalled another incident where a prisoner was caught playing the violin.

She said, "Playing musical instruments was forbidden, and one of the Japanese soldiers caught him.

"The guard shouted, 'Mozart,'" and quickly the man played Mozart. Next the guard yelled, 'Beethoven,'" she said, "and the man played Beethoven."

From that day on, the musician would play classical music and the guard, in exchange, would give him food for his children, she said.

Other memories were not as pleasant. "My hardest moment was when a man was shot while returning to the camp with food for his children," she said.

"Ironically, the man had escaped to find food and was scaling the inside fence to return to his children when he was shot."

She said the Japanese officers ran the camp and were the ones who conducted the executions. However, she said, disease and lack of food were two of the biggest problems faced by the prisoners.

She explained that the disease beriberi is caused by a lack of fiber in the diet, and the prisoners tried to supplement their diets by grinding rice with stones for fiber. Just to survive, the prisoners would eat slugs, weeds and worms, she said.

Lahti said he noticed yellow jaundice and signs of malnutrition among the rescued prisoners.

What little medical supplies, food and mail that was available came through Carmen Rivera, a nurse with the Filipino underground.

A few nights before the rescue, a POW slipped out of the camp and traveled via river boat with a Filipino helmsman to give the rescue force information about the camp.

The rescuers were told that every day, half of the Japanese garrison would stack arms and conduct physical training while the remaining guards supervised prisoner roll call.

On the night of the Feb. 22, 1943, the POWs at Los Banos were already aware of the forthcoming rescue when the recon unit moved out with a combination of American infantrymen and Filipino guerrillas.

A relatively small force of about 300 men caught the Japanese guards unarmed around 5 a.m. Feb. 23 and killed them all.

Meanwhile, the main body of the force was a combined attack of paratroopers and a ground-based element.

Maj. Henry Burgess was in command of the ground force with 23 amphtracks, while 1st Lt. John Ringler was in charge of the airborne forces.

> "My hardest moment was when a man was shot while returning to the camp with food for his children."
>
> — Carol Talbot

Ringler was to hit the garrison in the prison camp and organize the prisoners for evacuation.

At 7 a.m., Feb. 23, the first silk canopy blossomed over the Los Banos prison camp. A total of 155 paratroopers from Company B, 511th Parachute Infantry Regiment and attached machine gunners from Headquarters Company wiped out the entire Japanese garrison.

"When the attack came," Talbot said, "we thought the entire American Army had come. We didn't realize the camp was surrounded by thousands of Japanese."

She said the soldiers had trouble getting the frightened prisoners out of the barracks. But when one of the buildings was accidentally set on fire, the rescuers saw the prisoners quickly run into the open, making their rescue possible. The American rescue force quickly set fire to the rest of the buildings.

Before her rescue, Talbot said she managed to run to an adjacent weed patch and dig up her diary. She along with 1,500 other prisoners were herded into amphtracks while the remaining 600 POWs began the journey on foot, escorted by the rescuers.

With the rescue over, there were no Americans killed and three wounded.

Although Lahti was badly wounded, he continued to fight after having his arm stitched in the field. The other two injuries were sprained ankles. The Japanese loss totaled 243.

According to Lahti, John O. Marsh told the members of the 11th Airborne that their feat was one of the three most successful airborne operations in history.

The rescued prisoners would probably agree since they referred to the descending paratroopers as "The Angles," giving the 11th Airborne its nickname.

Ingenuity, hard work earns bonus for inventor

By Shawn Bryson
Bayonet staff writer

A little ingenuity, a little hard work and a lot of determination earned a Fort Benning soldier a sizable bonus last week.

Capt. W. Adrian Winget is now $2,688 richer, thanks to his invention, the "Winget Semi-automatic Sear Machine."

Winget, a Bradley NETT team captain with the 29th Infantry Regiment, accepted the award Oct. 13, from Col. Barry Mahek, Benning's deputy post commander.

The invention, which will save the Army $87,847.80 annually, will be used as a training aid on sub-caliber gunnery tables of the Bradley Infantry Fighting Vehicle (Series M-1, M-2 and M-3).

According to Winget, his sear machine will take the place of the currently fielded Brewster Reavis Device. The Brewster is a device that converts the M-240C series machine guns on the Bradleys from fully automatic to semi-automatic fire. So does Winget's machine, but his takes only a few minutes to install, whereas the Brewster takes about two hours to install and align.

Winget's invention allows the soldiers more training time and also enables them to use 30-cent bullets as opposed to $25 rounds, saving even more money.

His parents, retired Lt. Col. Kingston M. and Odessa Winget, traveled from Yorktown, Va., to be with their son at the awards ceremony. They explained that Winget's grandfather had been an inventor and that it really rubbed off on their son.

Winget is not through, however. He said he is currently working on five other inventions and is confident they will go over as well as the sear machine.

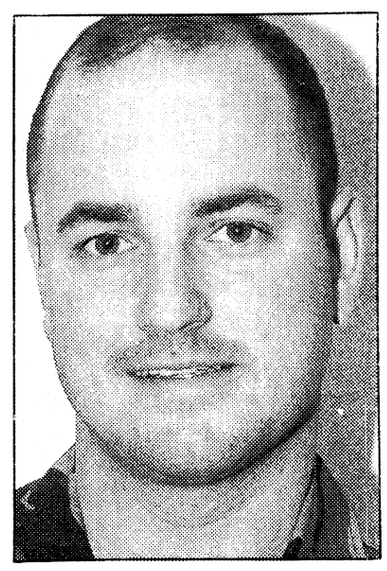
He said all of his upcoming inventions are for the Bradley and include a bolt hold cleaning brush for the vehicle's armor plate, a track adjustment wrench, a muzzle rifling system, an M-16 sub-caliber mount for the vehicle and main gun sub-caliber rounds.

Winget explained that he enjoys inventing and works on most of his projects on the back porch of his apartment, in between temporary duty assignments with the NETT.

Three other cash awards were given out through the suggestion program earlier in this month.

The first went to Laverne N. Grooms of the U.S. Army Infantry School Library in Building 4. Grooms proposed that the Data Base III and the software program she developed be used to renovate the current system of keeping records of official publications on loan.

Not only does the new system increase the accuracy of records maintenance, but it also eliminates the use of loan cards and reduces paperwork and man hours required for the task.



Grooms suggestion will save $29,515 annually and earned her a cash award of $1,685.45.

Russell Rhea, of the Directorate of Logistics, was awarded $1,216.62 for a suggestion that will produce a $17,220.83 annual government savings. Rhea suggested that the three models of relay currently used on the target holding mechanism M-31A1 relay control panel be replaced with a single model.

Another suggestion on the M-31A1 came from Justino Centeno, DOL. His suggestion was that the present limit switches of the target mechanism be converted to mercury filled switches, which allows smoother operation of the mechanism and saves the government $44,833.37.

Centeno's award was $2,045.

Anyone interested in the Army Suggestion Program should call 545-IDEA.

Journalists explain media coverage to allied students

By Keith F. Johnson
U.S. Army School of Americas

The U.S. Army School of the Americas' Command and General Staff College Course students and four professionals from the field of journalism participated in a Media Roundtable Oct. 13 at the course classroom in building 359

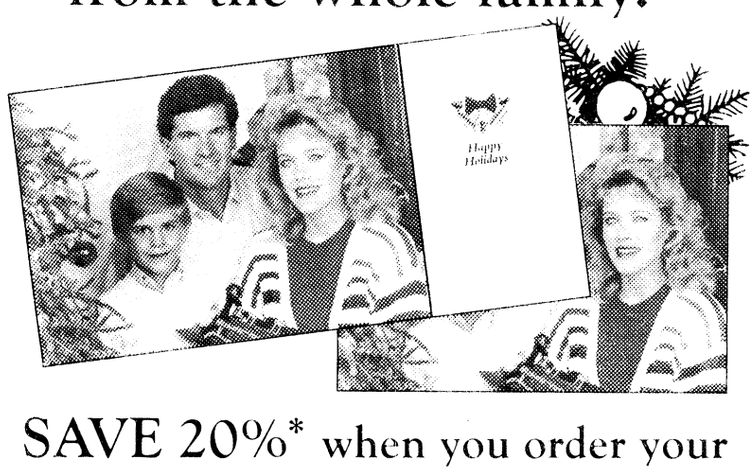
The roundtable gave the 46 students, representing 11 countries, a chance to question the journalists about the role of the press in America.

The journalists were Jack Swift, vice-president and executive editor of the Columbus Ledger-Enquirer; Don Podesta, sub-director of Latin American affairs for the Washington Post; Elliot Minor, south Georgia correspondent for the Associated Press and Gary Abramson, staff writer for the Atlanta Journal-Constitution.

The students fielded questions ranging from freedom of the press in America to coverage of events concerning Latin America in U.S. newspapers.

"We covered many important issues today that these officers will be facing in their countries," Abramson said. "They should return with a better idea of what free press means to Americans."

For many of the Latin American officers, it was a chance to "vent their frustrations" for the lack of coverage of what is happening in their countries, according to Maj. Richard A. Ekman, a U.S. student in the course.



"The American people aren't interested in what is happening in Latin America unless it's a crisis," Ekman said. "It's a shame because they are our neighbors; their destiny will have an effect on us."

For the four members of the press, it was a chance to explain why only certain events are reported.

"The reason most news stories are about the bad things in the world is because good news happens slowly," said Podesta, citing a rise in the economy as an example. "There is no 'film at eleven.'"

Questions of censorship and leakage of classified information as well as where the press draws the line on release of information, especially when people's lives could be damaged, were also heated topics of discussion between the students and panel members.

197th Inf. Bde. rolls out with latest technology

By Aurelio Feliberty
197th Infantry Brigade

Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 197th Support Battalion rolled out recently for their quarterly training exercise using the Honeywell Decentralized Automated Service Support System (DAS-3) computer.

"It was an ideal time to show the new personnel how to work the system and how to emplace it within the six-hour time limit for performance measures," said Maj. Robert Bauerle, brigade data automation officer, with HHC, 197th Spt. Bn.

"It was also a battalion preparation for the upcoming National Training Center rotation," he added.

"The DAS-3 computer is housed in a trailer, which is equipped with the cooling equipment needed to operate the system at a safe temperature," said Spec. Mitchell Phillips, one of the computer operators at HHC, 197th Spt. Bn.

"Both the DAS-3 and the cooling system are run by a 60-kilowatt generator, which is alternated with another 60-kilowatt generator every 12 hours to allow the generators time to cool off," Mitchell said.

According to Bauerle, the DAS-3 is normally operated by three people at a time.

The Brigade Data Center currently runs two Standard Army Multicommand Management Information Systems, which are software packages, on the DAS-3. They are the Direct Support Unit Standard Supply System (DS4) and the Tactical Unit Financial Management Information System.

Using DS4, the DAS-3 not only keeps track of the brigade stock on hand in the warehouse, but also keeps track of the demand history. It calculates and recommends the needed stockage level for the warehouse to maintain its inventory.

"The DAS-3 will then reorder the items needed by the warehouse, so that it doesn't fall below its minimum stockage level.

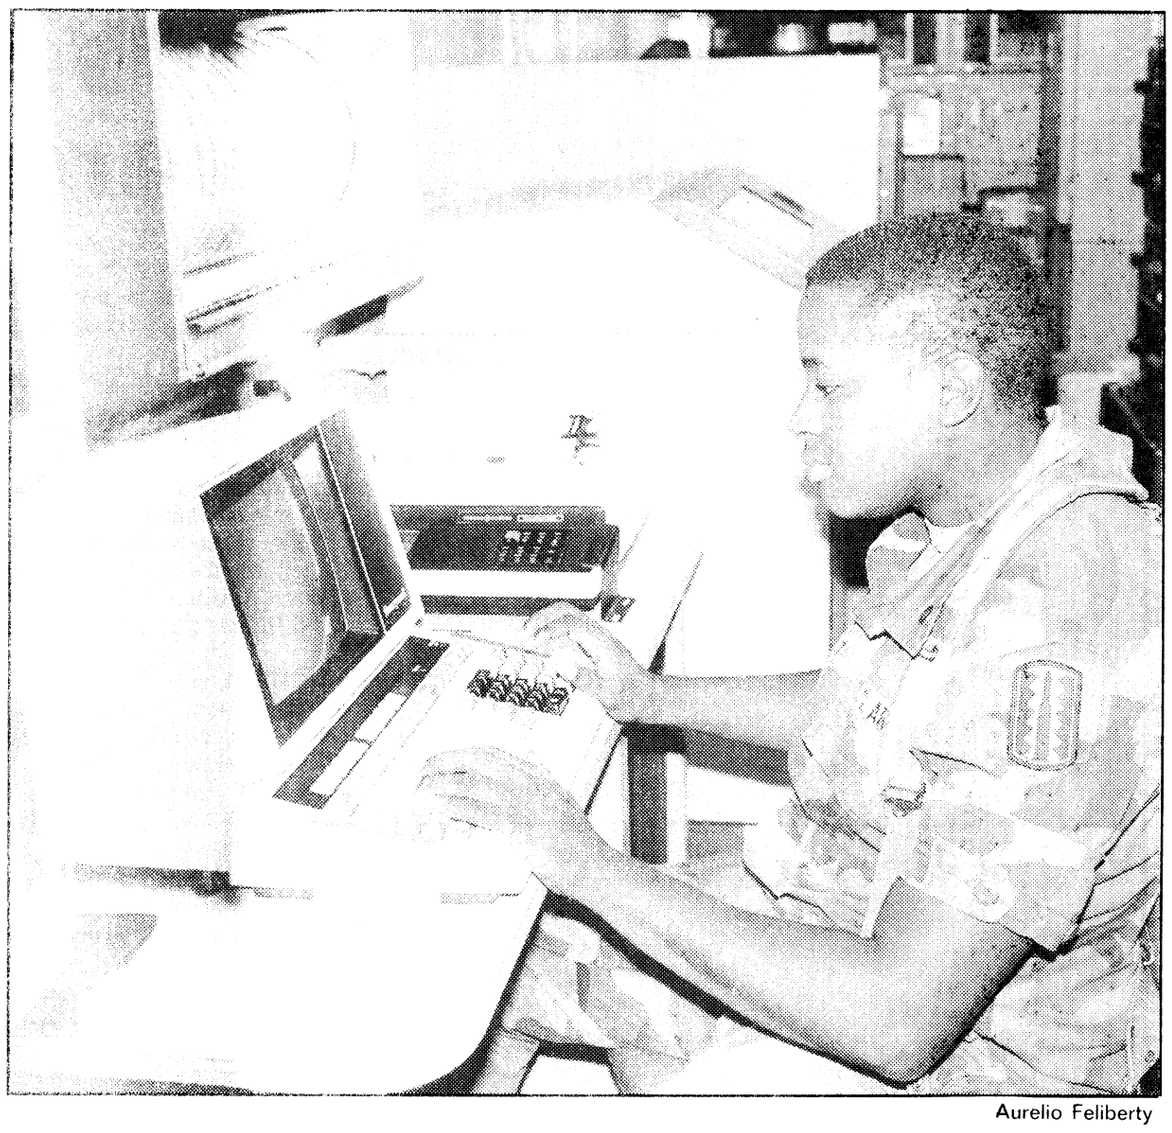
The minimum stockage level is the least amount of stock the warehouse will have on-hand to maintain unit readiness," said Sgt. Jerry Wright, a DAS-3 console operator, with HHC, Spt. Bn.

"The system processes requisitions for class two supplies, class three package products, class four construction, and class nine repair parts, along with class seven property book items," Bauerle said.

"In addition to keeping accountability of items, TUFMIS interfaces with the DS4 requisition program.

Using TUFMIS, the DAS-3 processes equipment requisitions and totals the amount spent by the brigade for each day," Bauerle explained.

TUFMIS output is then sent to the Directorate of Information Management where it enters the Standard Army Installation Logistical System, according to Bauerle.



"Under SAILS, items may be requisitioned through higher sources when they are not on hand in the warehouse," he said.

"The steps involved in the whole process are:

The warehouse or property book office processes customer requisitions and puts the information on floppy disk using a Tactical Army Combat Computer System computer.

This floppy disk goes to DAS-3 personnel, who then transfer the information onto hard disks. The information is used to update the master files.

The requisitions that cannot be filled from warehouse stock are forwarded to SAILS on magnetic tape," Wright said.

ASK THE JUDGE

By Rick Parker
Staff Judge Advocate's Office

Q. I had some bad credit problems a couple of years ago and had to file bankruptcy.

I now feel like I can handle credit again, and want to reestablish a good credit rating.

I don't believe I can get a bank to give me a loan, but I saw an ad in the paper recently about being able to get a loan even though I have had bad credit.

I called the telephone number in the ad. They said they can find me a loan but that I have to pay a fee in advance. Is this legal and on the up-and up?

A. It's pretty clear that the person or company to whom you spoke is a "loan broker" or someone whose job it is to find financing for customers.

While there probably isn't anything illegal about doing this, it isn't the best way to go, for a variety of reasons.

First, you must understand that the broker is not the one who actually lends you the money.

His primary mission is to find a bank or finance company who might lend money to a person who would normally be considered a poor credit risk.

Additionally, the good brokers will assist clients in applying for the loan, will assist in pushing the loan through the lender and will keep clients informed throughout the process of its progress.

The most obvious problem with the situation you describe is the advance fee being required. Based on what you have described, aside from the fact that the broker has told you that he can find a loan for you, and that he will charge an advance free, you seem to have very little information about what you are getting for your money.

Certainly, before paying a fee, you would want to know more about what the loan the broker anticipates getting for you.

For example, you would want to find out how much is being borrowed, what the interest rate will be and whether or not there will be other costs associated with getting the loan.

You may find that the cost of the money being borrowed, finance charges, costs and broker's fee, will be more than you are willing or able to pay.

Also, what will the broker be willing to do for you in connection with getting the loan? Will he assist you with the application? Will the broker stay in contact with the lender once the loan application is submitted?

Finally, is there really a guarantee that a loan can be found for you? While the ad seems to guarantee the broker will find a lender for you, no matter what, there is a possibility a willing lender cannot be found. As a result your advance fee is money down the drain.

Probably the easiest way to achieve your goal is to take the money you would have paid to the broker, go to a local bank, set up a savings account and then ask the bank for a credit card using your savings account as collateral.

In many instances, banks will issue a card with a credit limit the same as your savings.

Of course, you cannot withdraw or use the money in the savings account for as long as you have that credit card, but in the meantime, you can be improving your credit rating.

ARMY. BE ALL YOU CAN BE.® REENLIST.

NOW'S YOUR CHANCE TO LET THE ARMY KNOW WHAT YOU WANT TO DO.

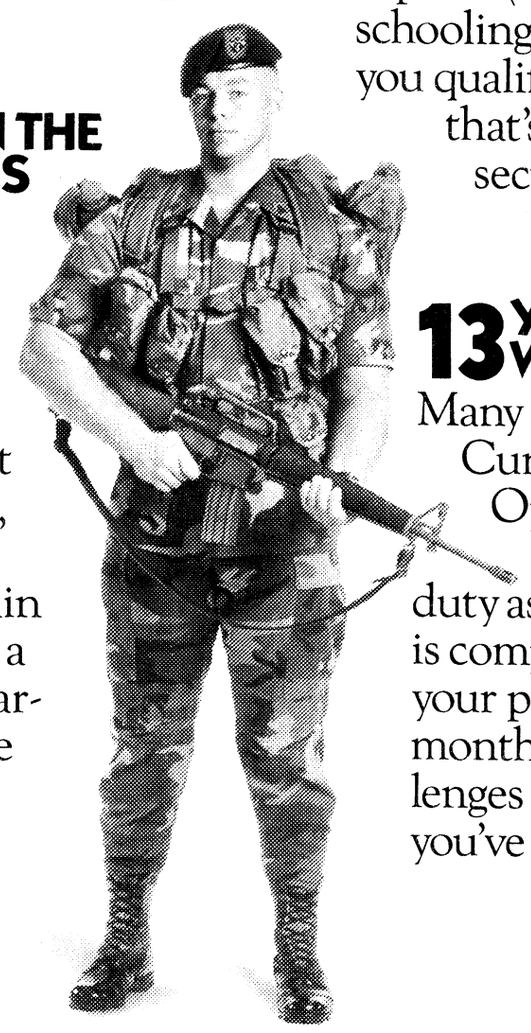
1 YOU CAN CHANGE YOUR MOS. There are hundreds of new MOS's to choose from under the Army Training Reenlistment Option. Or, you may be able to reenlist with the same MOS, for airborne training.

2 YOU CAN STAY WITH YOUR PRESENT REGIMENT. Under the Regiment of Choice Option, you can reenlist and stay with your present regiment, or try a different one. If you're not presently in a regiment, you may be able to get into one. This option lets you make long-range plans, because you'll know where your regiment will be located.

3 YOU CAN GO TO BERLIN. If you want to be on the front line of freedom, you may be able to reenlist under the Berlin Brigade Option. It isn't an easy duty, but it is an important one. The Berlin Brigade symbolizes our country's commitment to peace in Europe.

4 YOU CAN JOIN THE "BIG RED ONE." Under the Combat Arms Unit of Choice Option, you could reenlist to become part of the "Big Red One," or any one of a number of the Army's best units. You don't have to be in a combat unit now, and most of these units have vacancies in almost every MOS.

5 YOU CAN SEE MORE OF AMERICA. With the CONUS to CONUS Option, you can reenlist to relocate in a different part of the United States. Naturally, it all depends on whether your MOS is needed at your desired location.



6 YOU CAN LEARN A HIGH-TECH SKILL. Under the USAISC Option, you may qualify for the U.S. Army Information Systems Command. There, you can learn high-tech skills like radio teletype operation or satellite communications repair. There are over 140 MOS's, and you can serve in CONUS or overseas.

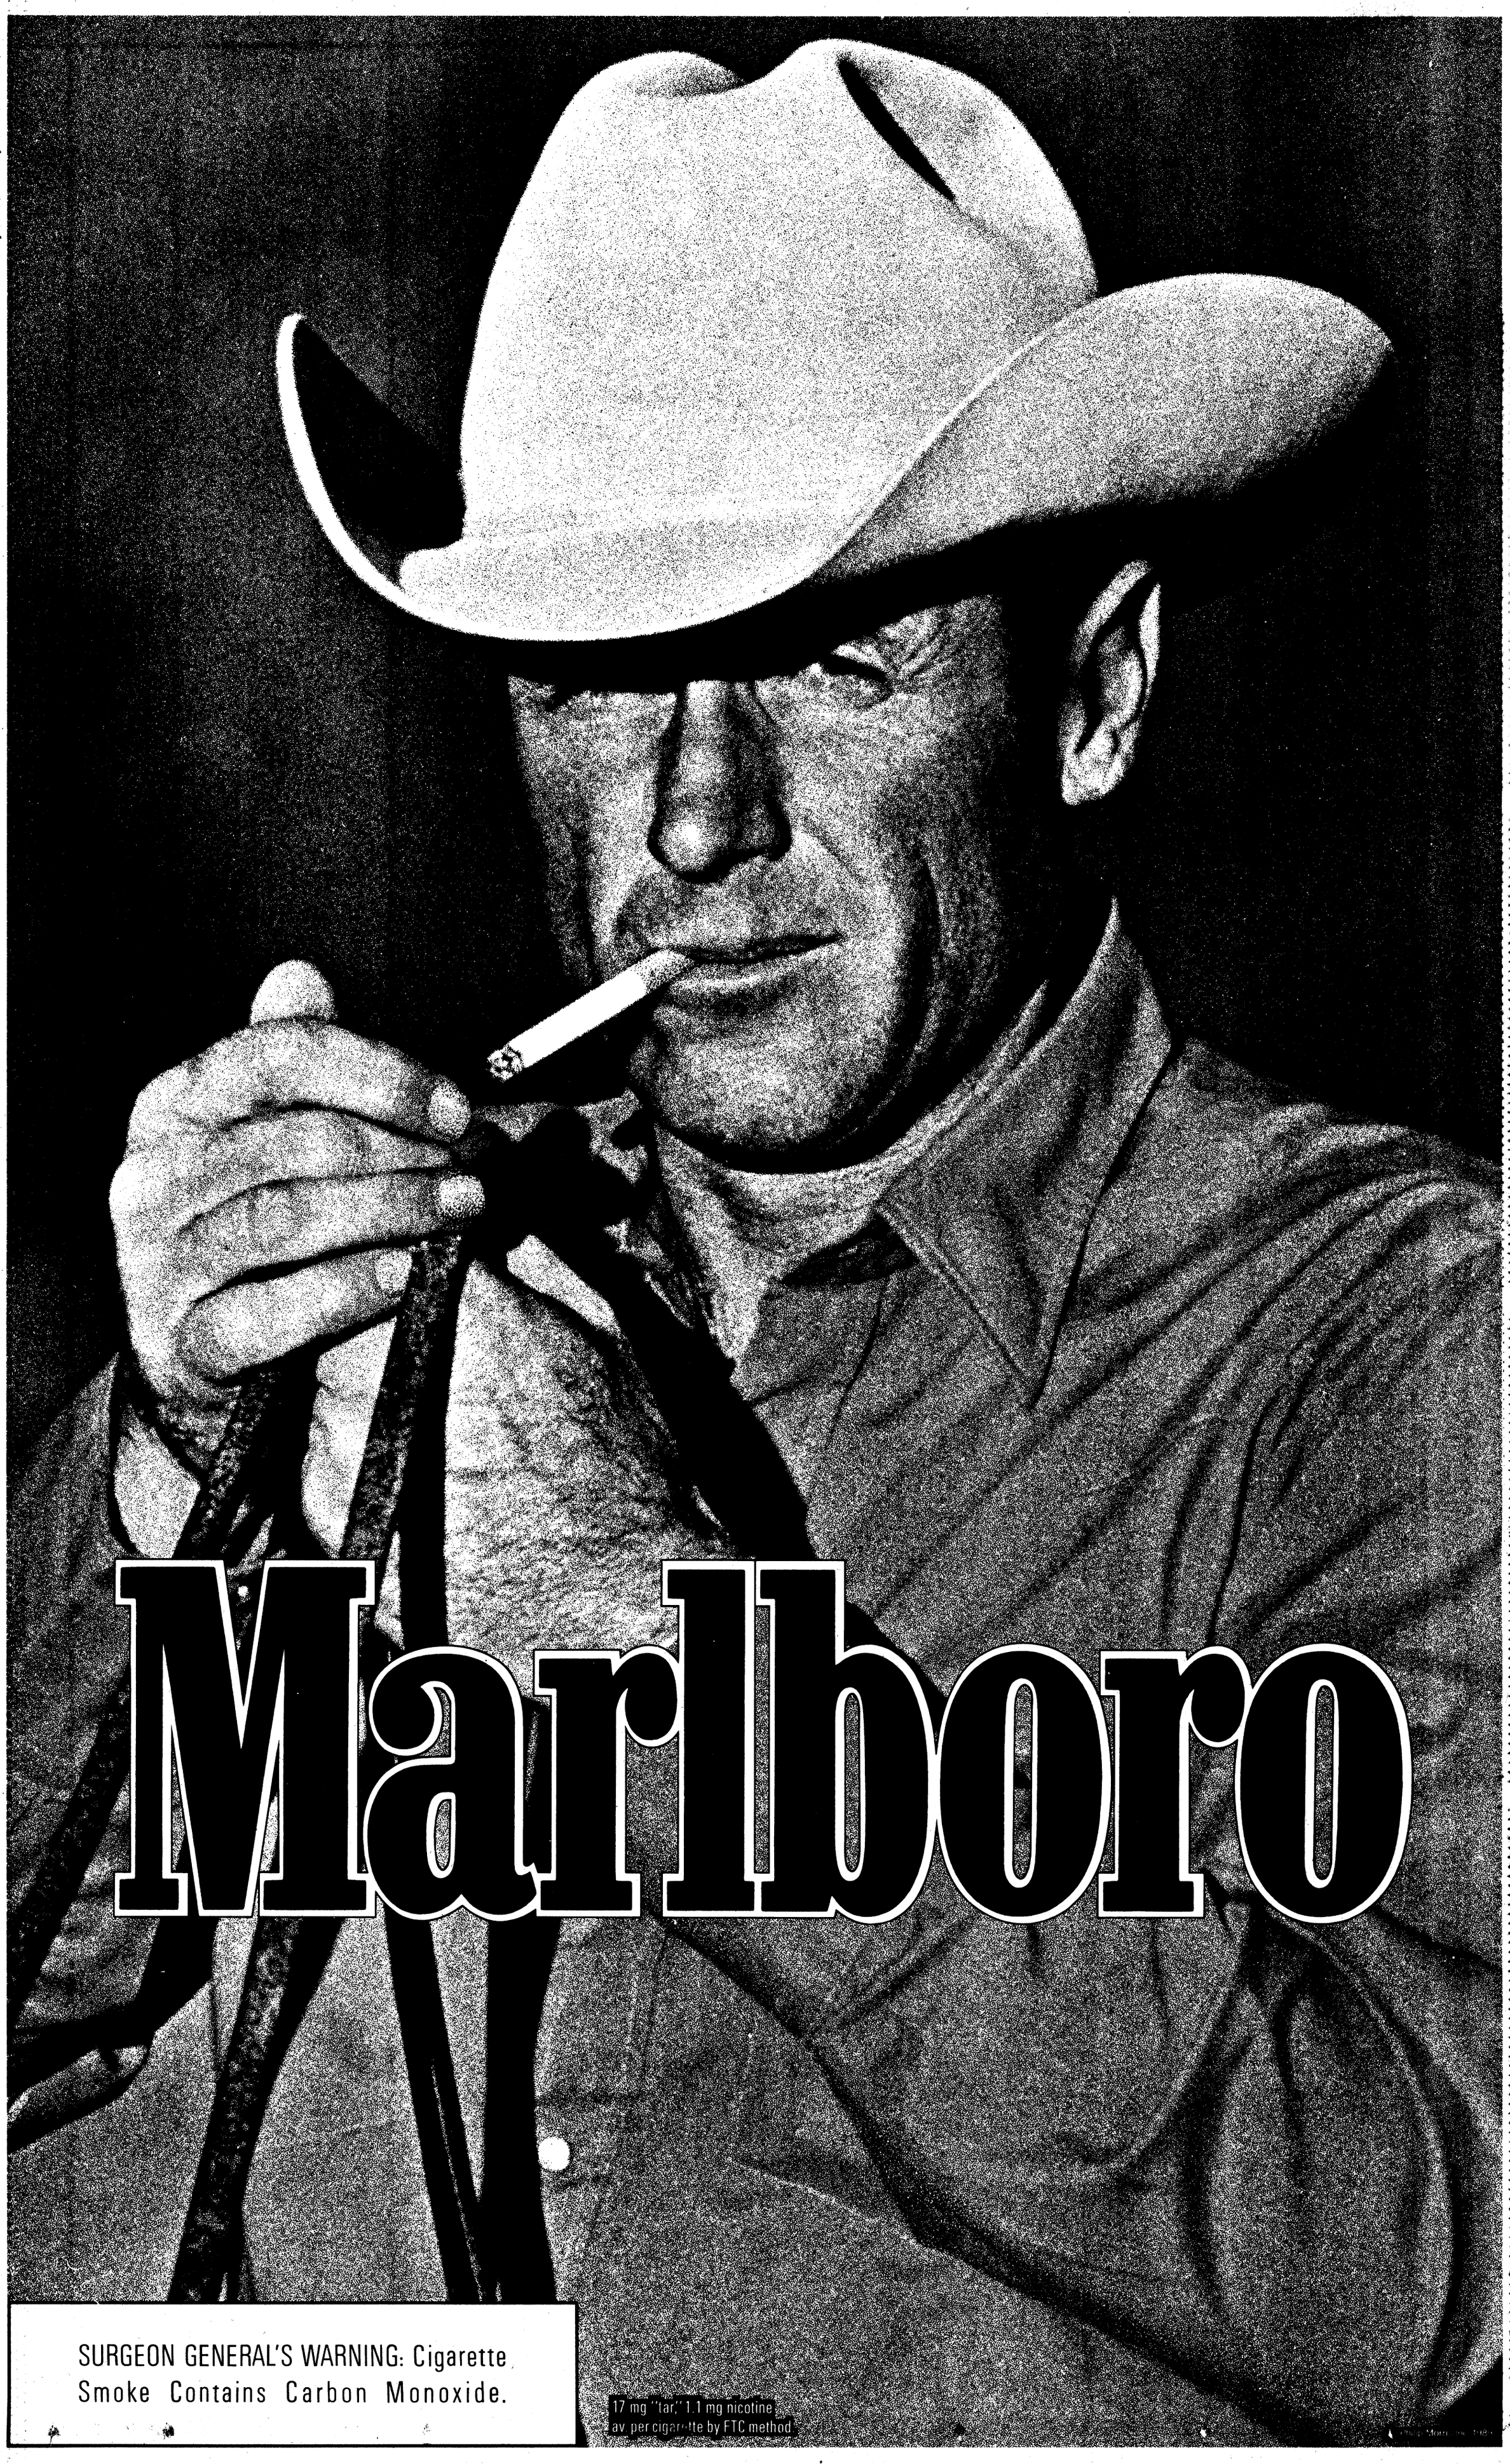
7 YOU CAN COME BACK TO THE STATES. If you're overseas and want to come home, the CONUS Station Option can make it happen. Of course, a lot depends on what your MOS is, and where you want to go, but the Army will make every effort to relocate you, upon completion of your overseas tour, at a location of your choice.

8 YOU CAN GO OVERSEAS. The Overseas Reenlistment Option makes it possible for you to spend a minimum of 12 months in Germany, Korea, or some other exciting part of the world.

9 YOU CAN JOIN THE SPECIAL FORCES OR RANGERS. If you're special, the Special Forces or Ranger Regiment Option may be just right for you. You must be Airborne qualified, have an MOS that's needed (or agree to train in one) and qualify for a SECRET Security clearance. The demands are great, but so are the rewards.

10 YOU CAN JOIN THE OLD GUARD. If you'd like to march with one of the Army's oldest and most prestigious outfits, then reenlist for the Old Guard Option. If you make it, you're guaranteed assignment in Washington, D.C., for up to 3 years.

11 YOU CAN LEARN A NEW LANGUAGE. Under the Language School Option, you could learn a second language of your own choosing, provided the Army's need matches your choice. Once you've completed your training, you could serve in a foreign country. And, of course, there's great satisfaction in being bilingual.



12 YOU CAN JOIN AN INSCOM UNIT. Under the Intelligence and Security Command and Electronic Warfare/Cryptologic Units and Training Option (INSCOM/EW), your schooling will be intensive. But if you qualify, you'll be part of a group that's essential to our nation's security efforts.

13 YOU CAN STAY RIGHT WHERE YOU ARE. Many soldiers do. Under the Current Station Stabilization Option, you can reenlist to stay at your present duty assignment after your tour is completed. You're guaranteed your present duty for 12 to 14 months. You can find new challenges and rewards at a place you've come to know.

As you can see, reenlisting opens up a world of opportunities for you. Of course, qualifications are different for each option. But if you qualify, you'll be well on your way to expanding your Army, and your life, experience.

To find out more details about each reenlistment option, talk to your Retention NCO. They are there to make sure you know what your choices are, and to help you chart the best course for your future.

Brothers reunite at Benning

By Willie Hay
197th Infantry Brigade

In 1968, when Melvin Woodruff left his hometown, Thomasville, Ga., some 50 miles south of Albany, as a draftee headed for Vietnam, his mother, sisters and four brothers accompanied him to the airport in Moultrie, Ga., to show their support for his service to his country.

In the intervening 21 years, all four of Woodruff's younger brothers have served in the Army.

The youngest, Jeffrey, rose to the rank of sergeant before he developed colon cancer, received a medical discharge and died at the age of 25. The oldest, Luther, served one enlistment and left the Army to get a degree in business and become a contractor.

Today, Melvin, 41, is a construction supervisor assigned to Headquarters Support Company, 43rd Engineer Battalion.

His younger brother, Gregory Woodruff, 31, is a telecommunications specialist with Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 197th Infantry Brigade. His youngest surviving brother, Todd Robinson, 28, is an infantryman with HHC, 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment.

All three brothers are staff sergeants, and for the first time in 10 years, they are together at their station of choice, Fort Benning. They have a total of 43 years of military service.

> "I hardly ever saw Melvin or Greg during the last 10 years, but now we get together regularly."
>
> — Todd Robinson

"Once, when we were all stationed overseas at the same time, but not in the same place, our mother called someone in Washington to complain," Gregory recalled. "She was told that stationing all her sons overseas wasn't against Army policy unless we were in combat.

"Somebody must have remembered her call, though, because the three of us have been together for 14 months now at Fort Benning, he said.

"I think it's just a coincidence because my last name isn't Woodruff, and someone would have had to screen our records together to find out we have the same mother," said Todd, whose mother, the former Jessie Lee Woodruff, remarried before her last two sons were born.

Coincidence or not, the three-way joint assignment has been a source of family unity for the brothers.

"I hardly ever saw Melvin or Greg during the last 10 years, but now we get together regularly to play basketball or socialize with our families," said Todd. "Besides, what better place for an airborne Ranger than the 'Home of the Infantry?'"

"I'm tired of being called a 'leg,' and I'm going to put that behind me when I attend Jump School," said Greg, whose name is first on his company's list of applicants for the school.

"I'll pick up my 'jump wings' when I retire in three months and jump into civilian life," joked Melvin, who would like to put his engineer skills to good use as a civil service employee for the Army.

Although they all have attained the same rank, the brothers deny any sibling rivalry as far as their military careers are concerned.

"I don't think Greg or I ever thought of the Army as a way to outrank our older brothers," said Todd, who has been selected for promotion to sergeant first class. "Instead, we always looked up to Melvin, as our oldest brother, and asked him for advice and encouragement when we were growing up."

"I always encouraged them to make their own career decisions," said Melvin, "and neither Greg nor Todd decided to follow me into engineering when they joined the Army."

Greg and Todd cited different reasons for enlisting in the Army.

"After hearing my older brothers talk about the places they had been, I decided to join the Army in 1976 to see the world," said Greg.

"Joining the Army wasn't the only career opportunity we had in Thomasville, but I wanted the educational benefits the Army offers," said Todd. "I think the Army offers an excellent chance for young people to broaden their knowledge of the world and establish a college fund to continue their education past high school."

Will the tradition of military service continue when the next generation of Woodruffs and Robinsons come of age?

"My 17-year-old daughter took junior ROTC, and you could call her 'officer material' because she loves to give orders," Melvin joked. "But she hasn't made up her mind yet to join the Army or apply for a commission when she goes to college."

"My son is just 2 months old, but I hope to open up avenues for him if he decides to join the Army when he grows up," Todd said.

"My wife is a school teacher, and we would like him to think about going to college before joining the service," he added. "But, we want him to know he would serve three years and use the Army College Fund to save $25,000 toward his education."

Hospital secretary retires

By Jeanne Dickerson
Martin Army Community Hospital

Olivia Browning, an executive secretary at Martin Army Community Hospital, retired on Sept. 29 after 32 years with the medical facility.

Browning, "Ollie" to her friends, began working at MACH before it was moved from what is now the Infantry Museum to its present location, building 9200.

Prior to her selection as secretary to the commander, Browning was secretary to the chief, Department of Medicine.

Browning was awarded a singular honor when she was nominated for induction into the Order of Military Medical Merit, a prestigious order of military members who have made significant contributions to the Army Medical Department.

There are very few non-physicians in this Order. The nomination was approved by Health Services Command, and Browning was inducted in 1983 by Maj. Gen. Floyd Baker, then commander of Health Services Command.

Browning said she once refused an opportunity for a promotion, after much soul searching, because it meant leaving MACH.

he said she has been fortunate to work for the Army's best commanders, all of whom were deserving of respect, and was grateful to have made friends with so many great people.

Several of Browning's co-workers said she will be truly missed. They explained that she was always very helpful when asked for assistance and always had time to answer questions and to explain policies to secretaries who asked for help.

One co-worker, who worked with Browning for six years, said she learned a lot from "Ollie" and that Browning's exceptional secretarial skills, broad knowledge of hospital operations and vast institutional memory have been invaluable to hospital commanders and staff members.

Another former co-worker said, "Ollie

Infantrymen to spearhead toy drive

By D.L. Bridges
197th Infantry Brigade

Soldiers of the 2nd Battalion, 18th Infantry and their family members are heading this year's efforts at Kelley Hill to collect toys for children who otherwise may not receive any for Christmas.

As a special project, the battalion has adopted Santa's Castle, the annual collection center for post-wide distribution of Christmas toys. Last year alone, the center distributed toys to nearly 650 children.

The battalion kicked off its campaign by placing toy collection boxes in each battalion of the 197th Infantry Brigade and by conducting a bake sale at the Main Post Exchange. The sale netted more than $120 to be used to purchase gifts for Santa's Castle.

"I've seen similar projects at other posts help a lot of kids have a good Christmas," said Sgt. 1st Class Glenn Brown, of the battalion's 2nd Platoon, Company D.

"This is especially worthwhile because it's the military taking care of the military," said Spec. Hugh Baugus III, also of Co. D.

Volunteers operate Santa's Castle preparing both new and used toys for holiday distribution.

Donated toys and stuffed animals are cleaned and refurbished, as necessary, before they are given away. Game and puzzle pieces are counted, and pencil marks and smudges are removed from donated children's books.

According to Santa's Castle officials, the toys will be handed out during late November and early December this year.

Unit chaplains, commanders and first sergeants should make referrals no later than Nov. 12 to ensure families recommended for the toys receive them.

"Individual donations and help are welcome year round," said an official. "Gift wrapping is left up to the donor, and our standard is five toys per child."

People interested in working at Santa's Castle or in checking out a bag of toys to refurbish at home should visit building 2639 in Soldiers' Plaza, Santa's Castle, from 9 a.m. to 2 p.m. Tuesday through Thursdays, or call 545-1233.

School students taught how to prevent fires

Fort Benning Schools

Fire Prevention Week, Oct. 8 through 14, brought a variety of meaningful programs and activities to Fort Benning Schools' students.

Post fire department personnel brought puppet shows, fire truck exhibits and fire prevention talks to students in kindergarten through fifth grade.

This year's theme, "Big Fires Start Small — Keep Matches and Lighters in the Right Hands," was a special topic of discussion in Benning classrooms during the week.

The Fort Benning Fire Department sponsored essay and poster contests to encourage students to give the topic extra consideration.

First and second-place poster winners from each grade level (kindergarten through third grade) won $50 savings bonds.

First place essay contest winners (fourth through eighth grades) won $75 bonds, and second place winners won $50 bonds.

Col. Robert Hatch, Director of Engineering and Housing, presented the bonds to poster and essay contest winners in student assemblies.

While all the winners and their families will remember this Fire Prevention Week, this week will be a very special memory for the family of SFC Willie J. Reynolds.

Brother and sister, William and Trenisha Reynolds, were both first place essay winners.

Trenisha, it seems, is an old hand at fire prevention; she was also a winner in last year's fire prevention contest.

DENTAC employee retires after 35 years of service

By Paula Dansereau
Dental Activity

While it is not uncommon for civilian employees to work 35 continuous years at Fort Benning, it is unique for the entire tour to be spent with one organization.

Easter Hardaway, who retired last month, began working at the Fort Benning Dental Activity in April 1955 with an annual salary of $2,900. She has seen 22 post commanding generals and 15 DENTAC commanders come and go.

She was a dental assistant to Maj. Richard T. Brown in 1971 when he was a resident in prosthodontics. In 1985, he returned as commander of DENTAC.

Hardaway said she was devoted to her job and to her "family" at Bernheim Dental Clinic.

Despite her length of service, she was able to maintain an enthusiastic attitude and desire to excel.

According to Hardaway, she will miss her dental family.

She said her plans for retirement for the time being are to relax and watch the grass grow.

Bass fishermen test waters at Lake Sinclair

Jackie Marsh

Will Marsh tries to lure a big one.

By Jackie Marsh
Fort Benning Bass Club

The Fort Benning Bass Club held a two-day tournament Oct. 14 and 15 at Lake Sinclair in Milledgeville, Ga.

The first-place honors went to Steve McCorkle with a two-day total of 15 pounds, 4 ounces.

Will Marsh took second place with 14 pounds, 2 ounces.

Joe Wikoff came in third place with 13 pounds, 5 ounces.

Bob Billman captured the big fish award with 5 pounds, 8 ounces.

More than 135 pounds of fish was caught in the two-day event.

Most of the fish were caught with Carolina-rigged worm rods and spinnerbaits.

The water was extremely muddy, making fishing more difficult.

The Fort Benning Bass Club holds a points tournament every month of the year.

The next tournament will be in November at Hatchachubbee Creek on the Chattahoochee River.

Many active duty soldiers are members and fish regularly with the club.

Some of the organizations represented in the club's membership are the U.S. Army Infantry School, U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit, U.S. Army School of the Americas, 197th Infantry Brigade and the 29th Infantry Regiment.

The club currently has two active female members, one of whom made it to the state Top-Six tournament last year.

The Fort Benning Bass Club sponsors and/or participates in a number of civic functions throughout the year.

Anyone interested in becoming a part of a fishing club that promotes conservation, good sportsmanship, community pride and catching fish should contact Porter Angel at 569-9100 or Joe Wikoff at 685-0301 or attend one of the meetings.

Meetings are held the second and fourth Monday of each month at 7:30 p.m. in Building 2616 on the second floor.

250 don walking shoes in OWC's Volksmarch

By Shawn Bryson
Bayonet staff writer

More than 250 people donned their walking shoes and showed up at Benning's Doughboy Stadium Saturday for the first-ever, Officers' Wives Club's Volksmarch.

The Volksmarch, which included a six-mile and a three-and-a-half-mile walk, was a community event with a German theme.

After walking, and in some cases running, the participants were treated to traditional German food.

The Volksmarch, a German tradition, wound through Benning's main post area.

Participants were given information guides, which described each of the 21 points of interest featured in the Volksmarch.

Some of the points of interest were the U.S. Army School of the Americas, the Infantryman's Statue, Airborne Walk, the National Infantry Museum and Riverside, home of the post commander, Maj. Gen. Michael F. Spigelmire.

Spigelmire, and his wife, Diane, participated in the festivities, and both took turns at the grill. They helped prepare the knackwurst and bratwurst for those finishing the walks.

"We held the Volksmarch just to do something nice for the community," said LeLone Jones, OWC president. "We also wanted to let people know a little more about the history of Fort Benning."

Jones said the profits from the Volksmarch will go back to the community in one form or another. "Every dollar (of profit) will go into our welfare fund, which is used for things like scholarships and donations to post and national charity organizations," Jones said.

The OWC will hold an Arts and Crafts Fair Nov. 4. It will be open to the public and held at Faith Middle School from 10 a.m. through 5 p.m. Handmade arts and crafts will be for sale.

Power lifters grab victories

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

The Fort Benning Power Lifting team is heaving their way to victory in meets in the southeast region.

Heading up the team is Franklin Roach, Company E, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment. According to Roach, the core of the team is based at the company. The unit team has won the last two post-level power lifting team competitions.

Recently, they took to the road for the Peanut Festival Power Lifting Competition at Fort Rucker, Ala.

To gear up for the meet, the team traveled to Moody Air Force Base for an invitational meet where they placed second.

Roach said the team has been training together since December 1988 and has the potential to be formidable competitors in the southeast region.

"We work hard and are improving every day," he said. "At this rate, we're going to be very powerful."

Benning team wins Army 10-Miler

By Shawn Lorimer
Bayonet staff writer

"We won!" blurted Kathy Wass with an impish grin and her voice full of pride.

Wass, along with teammates Lise A. Cote, Susan E. Davis, Beverly E. Wedda, Molly J. Sinclair and Ann McDonald, came in first at the fifth annual Army 10-Miler.

The race was held in Washington, D.C. and occurs at the same time as the Association of the U.S. Army convention.

The Fort Benning team put in lots of after-duty hours to train in preparation for the race, according to McDonald. The effort paid off. Not only did the team win the event, but they came in approximately seven minutes ahead of the second-place team.

Post schools to hold Halloween carnivals

Fort Benning Schools

The frost is on the pumpkin, and the trees are ablaze with the colors of autumn.

Okay, maybe that's not the case here, but it's still fall. And tradition dictates we observe certain harvest time rituals.

We're not talking football or corn shucking, we're talking carnivals.

Four Fort Benning schools will host annual Halloween carnivals the evening of Oct. 27. Patch, McBride, Dexter and Wilbur will be transformed by the magic of the season into cornucopias of games, food and surprises.

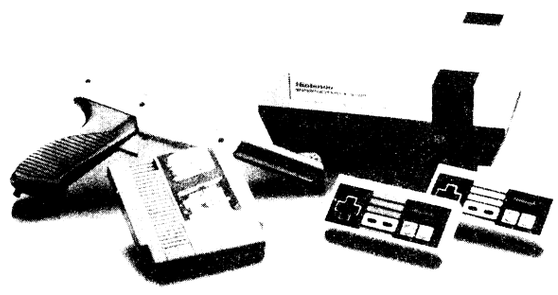
There will be a wide range of activities at all four schools, such as bean bag toss, ring toss, go fish and face painting. Two schools, McBride and Dexter, will have haunted houses.

Patch school will offer train rides and a dunking booth. At Dexter, children can visit with McGruff and see a patrol car.

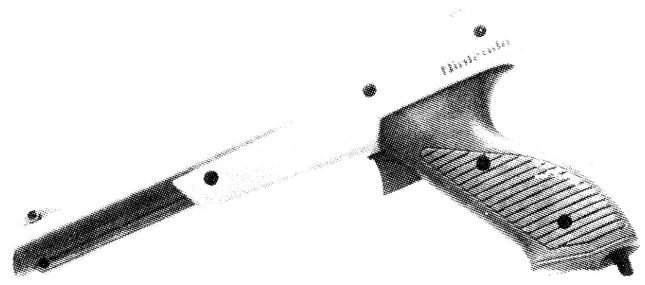
McGruff will be busy that evening because he plans to visit Wilbur School, too. Wilbur is also hosting the first Great American Pumpkin Shoot Out.

At McBride, everyone will have an opportunity to go to "jail."

Hotdogs, popcorn, chips and soft drinks will be in abundance at the carnivals. For cotton candy and candied apples, McBride's the place. And for the first time, Wilbur will be selling pizza.



The attire for the evening is costume optional. Most of the schools will have costume parades of fashion shows, so the little ones can give their Halloween identities a dry run.



All of the schools will start and end their carnivals at different times. Check the Community Section above for that information, as well as ticket information.

Stained glass window to be installed at ITC Chapel

By Debra Galle
USAIC Chaplain's Office

It all began with a few grains of dirt tossed aside.

Shovels held by Maj. Gen. (now Gen.) Edwin Burba, Chap. (Brig. Gen.) (now retired) Charles McDonnel and Col. (now Maj. Gen.) Siegfried broke the red Georgia clay on a hot and steamy afternoon in April, 1987.

The ground-breaking ceremony at Sand hill was followed 15 months later by the dedication of the Infantry Training Center Chapel on the Chaplains' Corps 213th birthday.

The chapel is for the soldiers — especially designed for their needs. It has a 600-seat capacity and cost a million and a half dollars to build. Protestant, Catholic and Jewish services are conducted in the facility. It has two classrooms, offices, reception areas and a kitchen complete with kosher facilities.

Covering every possible need, it also has an immersible baptistery.

It had just about everything one could perceive necessary for a soldiers' chapel — except for that huge window above the cross and altar. Although it did provide an Eastern exposure of sunshine, it was just a simple, ordinary window.

That ordinary window was not exactly an accident. Originally intended to one day hold a stained-glass window, the designers were aware of that potential.

After months of contributions and volunteer work by the soldiers, there will finally be a special window above the cross.

It is a window in which the rays of light pass through an unnamed soldier's battle dress uniform and boots. The soldier is an infantryman, with rifle in hand as he rests his weight upon his knee, his head bowed in prayer.

It is a soldier all the trainees know well, yet no one can identify. He is the "Praying Infantryman."

The window will be officially dedicated Sunday at 2 p.m. at the ITC chapel.

Chap. (Col.) Alfred E. Brough, U.S. Army Training and Doctrine Command chaplain, will deliver the dedication message.

Although it is a soldier's chapel, everyone is invited to share in the spirit of the occasion and attend the ceremony.

Celebrate All Saints Eve Tuesday beginning at 5

By Debra Galle
USAIC Chaplain's Office

Tired of the constant spooky, evil emphasis on Halloween and the effects it has on your children?

The Fort Benning Catholic Community will offer an old-fashioned batch of fun on the Eve of All Saints Day.

The emphasis for this celebration is quite different than the one we find with horrifying creatures and misbegotten souls that haunt theaters and posters in the mall.

Michelle Borden, a member of the Military Council of Catholic Women, heads up a committee for the project, which is fueled by community support and donations.

There will be games and refreshments from 6 to 8 p.m. at the Infantry Center Chapel Annex Oct. 31, according to Borden.

Games for children ages 2 to 12 will include a fish pond, dart boards and cake walks.

Borden said children and parents are invited to come to a special mass at 5 p.m. at Main Post Catholic Chapel. Children costumes at the mass are asked to be conservative.

"The emphasis will be away from evil characters," Borden explained.

For more information, call Borden at 682-8476.

Cast of "The Nerd" acts out a scene.

3 soldiers star in comedy, 'The Nerd'

By Ann M. McDonald

It's been said the world is a stage, and we're all actors in the play of life. But, for three Fort Benning soldiers, those words have a literal meaning.

They each had a part in "The Nerd," the opening production of The Springer Opera House's 1989-90 main stage season.

For Capt. Christopher D. Mulloney, an infantry officer who is completing his degree at Columbus College, getting a part in the play happened in a round about way.

He went to the audition to give moral support to a friend and ended up trying out for the play himself.

He left the audition with the lead in the play. His friend, unfortunately, didn't get a part at all.

Cpl. Martin A. Howley, a driver at the Infantry Training Center, saw a flyer for auditions and gave it a try. He landed the other lead in the play.

Maj. Neil A. Pearce, who is with the Infantry Board, and his wife tried out for a part in the play. They were taking a drama class at the theater and thought it would be fun to try out for the play. He got the part of Howley's client.

Four members of the local community shared the stage with the soldiers in the two-act play.

Although there was a fee to see the production, the actors received no money for their roles.

Having the soldiers act in the play was a bonus for director Paul Pierce. Although the soldiers were selected for their talent, it fits nicely into his plan to get the tri-community area more involved in the Springer.

Mulloney said he's all for it.

"I'd encourage other soldiers to come down and work at the Springer," he said. "It gave me a whole new perspective on the community, and it made me realize that it is important that we support the community we live in."

Additionally, Mulloney said it allows Fort Benning the chance to show its troops aren't just a bunch of war mongers. They are real people who have many varied personalities, he said.

"I really enjoyed doing the play and working with Paul Pierce," he said. "He's different than any other director I've worked with because he just sits back and gives pointers; he doesn't constantly stand over you."

Mulloney can compare Pierce to other directors because he's acted in several plays in the past as have Howley and Pearce.

Mulloney and Pearce have mainly done Shakespearean plays, while Howley has dabbled in a variety of roles.

Although Howley's parts were varied in the past, he wasn't prepared for the part he played in "The Nerd."

"I was a straight man who stayed straight while everything was breaking up around him," he said. "I thoroughly enjoyed the role and working on the historical stage."

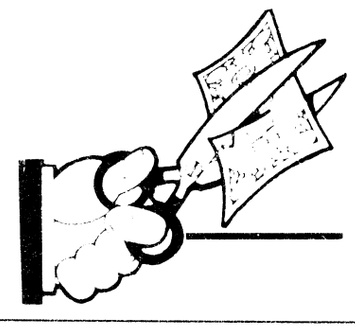
Howley said he'd like to try out for another play, but he is scheduled to attend Officer Candidate School, which he said will take up all of his spare time.

Pearce and Mulloney do plan to audition for future productions.

"Even if you don't get a part, you interact with strangers, and it makes you a better public speaker," Pearce said. "And, if you're not quite sure you're ready, but you're interested in acting, you can always take some of the courses offered at the Springer."

Pearce said the classes are inexpensive, and they help give you the confidence to try out for a play.

"You also get a chance to stand on the stage, which is a great honor and a lot of fun," he said.



Neither soldier is sure when he will try out for another production, but Mulloney said he knows it won't be too soon.

"Most of the upcoming productions are musicals, and I can't sing," he said.

Although you won't see Mulloney on stage in the near future, you might see him around Fort Benning. He's finishing up his degree at Columbus College and will be assigned to 2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, as a platoon trainer for infantry lieutenants.

For more information about what's offered at the Springer, call 324-1100.

Cutting firewood at Fort Benning is in designated areas by permit only.

Permits are sold from 9 to 11:30 a.m. and 1 to 4 p.m. Tuesday through Thursday.

Cutting is allowed Thursday through Saturday each week and holidays.

Child care services morning hours change

Child Development Services announces an early opening test period of six weeks for special needs of Fort Benning soldiers.

From Nov. 6 to Dec. 15 Tot Town will open at 5:30 a.m. to accommodate soldiers who have problems meeting early physical training obligations.

Paid reservations must be made 48 hours in advance. If plans change, the reservation must be canceled 24 hours in advance for a full refund.

Tot Town will also have a change in the weekend reservation scheduling.

Weekend reservations (Fridays and Saturdays) may be made only with a call-in number. No $1 reservations will be accepted.

Cancellations made less than 24 hours in advance will be penalized. The penalty will be three hours of child care fee.

This is the minimum Tot Town must pay child care givers who have been called in on the basis of reservations.

Repeated violations of this policy will result in the loss of weekend reservation privileges.

For more information, call Tot Town at 689-3604.

Scouts gather food for needy

The Boy Scouts of America will strike a blow against hunger as it undertakes a massive food appeal.

Scouts from the Chattahoochee Council will join millions of fellow Cub, Boy and Varsity scouts and Explorers in a door-to-door collection of canned food, which will be donated to local food pantries for distribution to the needy.

The Scouts will distribute plastic food bags door-to-door Nov. 11

The following Saturday, Nov. 18, the Scouts will return for the bags, which they are asking be placed outside of doors.

The collected items will be taken to various collection centers where they will be marked as donated items, sorted and passed along to various food banks serving west Georgia and east Alabama.

Military Police Activity

It's the season for ghosts and goblins, haunts and horrors and trick or treat. It's Halloween!

On Oct. 31, between 6 and 8 p.m., children at Fort Benning will be out in the housing areas trick or treating.

They'll be wearing dark costumes and crossing post roads without a care.

Motorists are cautioned to be especially careful and watch out for children while driving in the housing areas that night.

To help ensure Halloween safety, the Fort Benning Military Police will increase patrols within the housing areas.

Additionally, 130 candidates from Company A, 3rd Battalion, 11th Infantry, Officer Candidate School, will be in Custer Terrace, Bouton Heights and Main Post housing areas between 6 and 8 p.m. that night to act as road crossing guards, according to Capt. Nick Nead, Co. A commander.

Nead said the candidates, who will be wearing their baby blue helmets, will work in cooperation with the military police to help ensure the safety of Fort Benning children.

McGruff the Crime Dog will make appearances throughout the Fort Benning housing areas, handing out candy and ensuring safety at the following times and locations:

6 to 7 p.m. — McGraw Manor, Custer Terrace, Battle Park and Upatoi Terrace.

Is there room in the woods for women with shotguns?

By Clyde Snively
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Huntin', where I come from, is a man's sport.

Up in the North Country, ya don't go out for buck until the first blush of snow's covered the ground.

Then ya pull on your LL Bean boots, your flannel shirt, huntin cap, shove a wad of chew in your mouth, pull ol' Bessie off the wall, climb into the '57 Ford pickup with fenders about ready to fall off and go hunt deer.

Up there, some sissies wait in tree stands, but real men track.

Real men want that buck with a rack as wide as a man's wing span, a rack with so many points you could hang enough hats 'n coats to open a Goodwill Store.

Yep. Up North, if ya didn't cuss, spit terbacky on the floor 'n scratch fer fleas, ya jist wasn't cut out to be a hunter.

Course, I knew men who hunted fer 20 years and never got a buck.

But they were real men and kept comin' back, year after year. For them it was the hunt, not the kill.

Hunting is the hike in the woods, cold wind blowin' across your cheekbones, branches stinging your face as they snapped back across your nose, eyes waterin' from the wind, toes and fingers so numb you wondered if they were still attached.

It is the gathering of men in smoke-filled bars, a hat collection hanging from the rafters, french fries, so greasy they'd slide outta your fingers, chased down with cold beer and rot gut whiskey that churned your gut and warmed your toes.

Late at night with the bars closed, you'd retire to your huntin' shack, fire up the potbelly stove, till it glowed bright red, fix yourself some grilled cheese sandwiches laced with jalapenos, then sit around swapping lies and playing cards till the wee hours of the morning.

But, at the crack of dawn, you'd be up and ready to try again.

Twarn't no women out there. They wuz home, doin' what womenfolk do in the winter — stay home.

That's up North. Down here, hunting seems to be different. Why they even allow women to hunt.

In fact, just across the hall from us, is a woman who went hunting — first time ever. She took the hunters' safety course, practiced with a .22-caliber rifle and was ready.

Naturally she went out on a warm day and stayed in a nice comfortable tree stand. Just minutes after settling down, she raised her shotgun to her shoulder, drew down on a six-point buck and shot it.

She then climbed down, followed the blood trail a piece, took a shot at another buck enroute and finally caught up with the first buck, which was now dead.

A male companion cleaned it for her, another male acquaintance will process it for her and yet another male will mount the rack for her.

Now is that what you call hunting?

"What next," she's probably asking herself.

I mean you've got this female who gets up when the sun is high, fixes her hair, does her nails, has a nice big breakfast in the comfort of her condo, gets picked up and chauffeured to her hunting stand where she immediately sees and shoots a deer.

Anyone with her luck (she had a third shot on the way back) is going to be spoiled.

How many days of not spotting a buck before she gives up hunting entirely?

Oh, sure, she'll last through the season. After all, the tree stand probably needs curtains, and she's probably already down at Klein's Outdoor Store pricing deer stand furniture.

After all, no woman should have to sit on hard wood for hours on end.

After that she'll need to color coordinate her hunting outfit. What goes best with International Orange?

In the meantime, she'll be impossible to live with, making us eat such words as, "You ain't even goin' to see a buck, much less shoot one."

Or, "You? You're going hunting? Hah, just wait till the chiggers get you, or you fall out of a tree stand, or another hunter takes a pot shot at you or you rip your Calvin Kleins climbing some farmer's barbed wire fence. This will be your first and last hunting trip."

We were all wrong. She was right. She got her deer just like she said she would.

She shot Bambi's daddy and didn't even break a nail.

By the way, she did have to gut the next deer.

Maybe there is a place for women in the woods. Now, what about combat?

Cafeteria customer complains of price hikes

One of the conveniences offered to the military and civilian personnel working and studying in Infantry Hall is the cafeteria run by the the Army Air Force Exchange Service.

This cafeteria offers breakfast and lunch and has been enjoyed by personnel for many years as a place to gather early in the morning for breakfast (prior to work), during breaks and at lunch.

Food is prepared by friendly personnel, many have been there for years.

Just recently, within the last three or four months, prices have increased tremendously — some have doubled.

The excuse provided by the manager of the cafeteria is that she doesn't set the prices. The excuse provided by the Post Exchange Food Service Manager is the prices were too low when she came here and had to be increased to make a profit, plus they were too low compared to downtown food prices.

Some examples of price increases are:

- Breakfast special, formerly $1.99, now $2.90. The meal consists of two pieces of toast, grits and a hard boiled egg.
- A small container of milk is 50 cents. The same container of milk can be purchased in the AAFES bookstore around the corner for 15 cents.

Some of the soldiers who attend classes in this building are still growing young men with voracious appetites. They eat as if they are in a dining facility and receive quite a shock when they get to the cash register.

Prices are posted but not conspicuously.

We never know whether we will be charged for a cup of water or not. It just depends on what day it is.

I realize AAFES is in the profit-making business, but I believe its recent price increases are outrageous and uncontrolled.

Charlotte B. Conner

Dear Ms. Conner,

According to Adrian Sanders, manager, Fort Benning Exchange, it has been two years since the last survey of food services, and prices had not kept up with inflation and labor costs.

Prices are established to be equal to or 10 percent below off-post average prices.

We are pleased that you have experienced friendly, courteous service at the AAFES cafeteria and hope that when you compare prices with downtown establishments, you will realize that you are still getting a bargain.

Infantry Museum celebrates 30th birthday

Infantry Museum

The National Infantry Museum celebrated its 30th birthday Thursday.

Established by proclamation of Maj Gen Paul L. Freeman Jr., commandant of Fort Benning, the museum concept was first developed as early as 1954.

A museum devoted exclusively to the history and tradition of the infantry was needed to recognize and preserve its heritage for the morale and education of infantrymen and to give a better understanding of the history and present status of the infantry to civilian visitors.

The museum's first home was building 1234, one large room located on Ingersoll Street.

A wooden World War II temporary building, it had previously seen service as a theatre, chapel and recreation hall.

The museum met with enthusiastic community support, and artifacts and funds were donated.

The command began to acquire additional artifacts from other museums and posts and to gather obsolete and unserviceable equipment on post.

By the time it opened in 1959, there was a nucleus of a collection.

As the collection grew, the building was enlarged by construction of a hallway connecting it to an old barracks building and a smaller building that had formerly been a latrine.

The collection continued to grow, and an additional barracks building was acquired for office and storage space. It was called the museum annex.

Until July 1966, when the operation of the museum was made a function of the Infantry Center to ensure more regular and sufficient funding and secure additional personnel, the museum was operated as a nonappropriated sundry fund activity.

The Infantry Museum Society funds, which continued after appropriated funding was begun, were administered by an 11-member council made up of commanders of major staff elements and commands at Fort Benning. Membership in the society was open to anyone.

In the mid-1960s an effort was begun to raise $6,000,000 in nontax funds to build a suitable permanent home for the museum.

The collection had continued to grow and the number of visitors to increase. Even with the expansions noted before, only a small number of artifacts could be shown due to space limitations.

There was also a need to provide fireproof, environmentally-controlled housing for the artifacts.

The fund raising effort was supported by the local military and civilian community, and nationally by such well known persons Gen. Omar Bradley, Arkansas Governor Winthrop Rockefeller, John Wayne, Henry Cabot Lodge, Mamie Eisenhower and Citadel President, retired Gen. Hugh P. Harris.

Even Bob Hope put on a benefit performance for the museum. But, with the deaths of the cochairman, Governor Rockefeller and Columbus' Jim Woodruff Jr., and skyrocketing construction costs, the plans had to be scaled back.

Instead of the $6,000,000 new building, an existing building was selected to be renovated for the Infantry Museum.

That building was the old station hospital, completed in 1925 and one of the oldest permanent structures on post.

In addition to serving the needs of the post, many wounded soldiers of World War II and the Korean Conflict were cared for there, and the building served as an outpatient annex until 1975.

It seemed fitting that this historic building would become home for the museum's priceless collection of military artifacts.

It afforded ample space for display and storage, could be properly secured and conditioned for an adequate protective environment. It provided ample parking and was familiar to soldiers and their families.

The building was renovated, except for the third floor, and on July 1, 1977, Gen. Omar Nelson Bradley cut the ribbon, opening the permanent home of the National Infantry Museum.

In October 1982, federal funds were allocated for the renovation of the third floor, and on July 1, 1983, Secretary of the Army John O. Marsh cut the ribbon opening that floor.

The collection has grown to about 25,000 items now and visitation to over 100,000 annually. It has a permanent staff of seven.

At present, the Museum's exhibits are being redone to improve and update its story line. Pieces that have not been shown before are included.

An invitation is extended to all to visit the National Infantry Museum.

AUSA

called "the nation's largest landpower forum in the free world," was headquartered at the Sheraton Washington Hotel, but, because of the ever-growing scope of events, some activities were held at the Omni Shoreham Hotel.

This year, the industry and military exhibits and demonstrations were increased to about 250.

"The meeting is partially designed to expose soldiers to new weapon systems, communications equipment, vehicles and other innovative advancements and to allow them the opportunity to meet and hear the ideas of the senior leadership of the Army," said Sgt. 1st Class Robert Croker, Fort Benning's volunteer AUSA Administrator.

"These soldiers can go back to their units more informed and relay this information to their fellow soldiers."

The many leaders who addressed the meeting included Deputy Secretary of Defense Donald J. Atwood, Secretary of the Army Michael P.W. Stone, Chief of Staff of the Army Gen. Carl E. Vuono, Vice Chief of Staff of the Army Gen. Robert W. RisCassi, Commanding General U.S. Army Training and Doctrine Command Gen. John W. Foss and Sergeant Major of the Army J. W. Gates.

The U.S. Forces Command staged a special presentation, entitled "The Sergeant," Oct. 17 to promote the current state of readiness in the Army, show how new technology is providing more effective training and highlight the history and contributions of the NCO during the Army's 214-year history.

Also, as a salute to "The Year of the NCO," AUSA hosted a concert, featuring country music star Lee Greenwood who sings the unofficial song of Americans in uniform, "I'm Proud To Be An American."

Oct. 15, prior to the start of the annual meeting, AUSA sponsored the 5th annual Army 10-Miler "Run the River Bridges," which gave Fort Benning a first-place finish for the post's women's team and eight place for the men's team.

The 10-Miler is the largest of its kind in the nation and attracted an estimated 4,600 runners from around the world.

"AUSA's annual meeting just keeps getting bigger and better, with more people and industrial exhibitors attending every year," said Sgt. Wade Shell, Fort Benning's volunteer assistant AUSA Administrator.

"Not only does the meeting get better, but the quality of soldier sent to represent Fort Benning continues to be the best in the Army," Shell said.

ACS catches state's attention

By John Robinson
Bayonet staff writer

Georgia state Senator Gary Parker was on post Oct. 19, to familiarize himself with the many benefits of Army Community Services.

Parker, representing local district 15, was genuinely interested in ACS because a great many of his constituents are either E-4 and below or widowed. These people, who are apt to live in trailer parks, are the most likely candidates for ACS services.

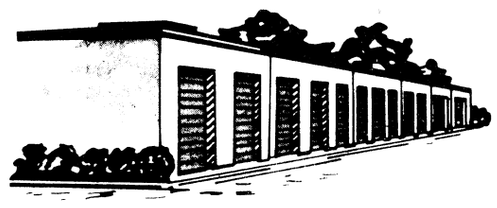
His visit began with a luncheon at the Officers' Club, followed by a briefing, slide presentation and, finally, a tour of the many ACS-related buildings.

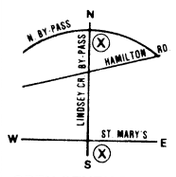
Particular points of interest along the way included offices for financial counseling, family advocacy, supplemental food program, lender's closet and Army Emergency Relief.

The tour was conducted by ACS Director Carla Cary.

Cary said she was pleased to be able to further relations between post and off-post family assistance agencies.

Parker, who has a background in consumer affairs, said he was very impressed. He urged Cary to let him know if he could assist in any way with problems that seemed to be recurring off-post.





A basic training graduate of Fort Benning in 1968, Parker said ACS was still a "pots and pans concept" back then but noted of the day's events, "I was very informed; I learned a great deal."

Cary pointed out that increased response to Army community-related services came as a direct result of post command directives toward that end.

MWR dollars benefit soldiers, families

Morale Welfare and Recreation Fund

Fort Benning's Morale Welfare and Recreation Fund operation is one of the most successful in the Army, permitting Fort Benning to reduce the impact of budget cuts in the MWR area.

The local fund generates earnings of $4 to $5 million annually to meet MWR needs.

Fort Benning's Morale Welfare and Recreation Fund is a centrally administered organization of nonappropriated fund (not taxpayer supported) business activities run for soldiers and their families, retirees and DOD civilians working on the installation.

Businesses vary from self-supporting operations such as clubs, bowling centers, golf course, car washes, equipment rental, the guest house, to child development centers, youth activities programs, gyms, two libraries, the Vet Activity and the Infantry Museum, which receive some tax support.

Earnings from the IMWRF are paid directly to the soldier and authorized users in the form of new or improved facilities, services, programs and rental equipment.

Facilities, services and programs are established based on feedback from soldiers, MWR users and family members through surveys and directly from unit commanders and soldiers through their representatives or the Installation Morale Support Fund Advisory Council.

In the past two years, more than $10 million has been spent on capital purchases or major construction projects for single and married soldiers and their families.

A partial list of major projects completed in the last year or currently under way includes the following:

The following projects were completed in fiscal year 1988 and 1989:

Steroid testing began in October

Army News Service

Testing of randomly selected urine specimens to detect anabolic steroid use by soldiers began in October as a result of Defense Department policy handed down to all services about a month ago.

"The Army will test 15 anonymous urine specimens a month for a three-month period," said Maj. John Algner, who serves with the human resources division in the Army's Office of the Deputy Chief of Staff for Personnel at the Pentagon.

"These specimens will be selected from those originally submitted to the Army's forensic toxicology drug testing laboratories."

Beginning in January 1990, he said that the Army expects to begin command-directed testing aimed at those suspected of anabolic steroid abuse and those involved in certain athletic competition, including interservice, national and international events.

"While the drug-testing laboratory at Fort Meade, Md., will serve as the Army's central collection point and will provide the first month's specimens," Algner said, "specimens also will come from two other locations — Tripler Army Medical Center, Hawaii and the drug-testing laboratory at Wiesbaden, Germany — until command-directed testing begins. Only the UCLA Olympic Analytical Laboratory in Los Angeles, Calif., will test the specimens.

"Our ultimate objectives," he continued, "are to deter use, determine the extent of the problem and counsel those who test positive. Therefore, the Army's policy will focus on education against anabolic steroid use and will require soldiers with positive test results to undergo a medical evaluation and receive counseling."

The U.S. Drug and Alcohol Operations Agency will oversee the program and issue implementing instructions and quotas.

Adverse reactions to prolonged use of anabolic steroids include liver cysts and tumors, jaundice, infertility, breast and prostate enlargement, blood lipid changes, elevated blood pressure, depression, joint diseases and states of rage.

Post cleanup begins Monday

Community Life Office

The Fort Benning 1989 cantonment and housing area cleanup will be conducted beginning Monday and continuing through November.

All of those who live at Fort Benning are encouraged to give extra emphasis to the cleanliness and neatness of their living areas during this special week.

The sponsoring unit for each area will be actively involved to remove large concentrations of debris and rubbish.

Area coordinators will organize cleanup operations within assigned areas.

The purpose of this Fall Cleanup Campaign is to improve the appearance of Fort Benning and enhance the quality of life. To be successful, all residents will have to put forth maximum effort.

Twice each year, Fort Benning sets aside a week to focus attention on the cleanliness and upkeep of our living areas.

With everyone doing their share, Fort Benning can be a better looking and safer place to live and work.

Competition for Yard of the Quarter (1st quarter of fiscal year '90) will take place during this period. Final selection will be made Nov. 6.

For more information, contact your area coordinator, mayor or Community Life NCOIC.

MARTIN CARE

By Jeanne Dickerson
Martin Army Community Hospital

Martin Army Community Hospital has increased the staffing in the Outpatient Clinic, making it easier to get a same-day appointment.

The Patient Affairs Liaison Officer reports that complaints are decreasing and compliments are increasing. This clinic staff is now able to see about 125 patients a day.

The increase in staffing was justified by the number of patients calling in for appointments after the available appointments were filled.

Unfortunately, 12 to 15 of these appointments are left unfilled daily.

Patients are asked to take advantage of this increased availability of care.

Appointments may be made by calling 544-1705/1569/3760 between 7:30 and 11:30 a.m. and 12:30 and 4 p.m. People who call in the morning can be given an appointment for that day.

Later in the afternoon, appointments may be made for the following day.

One comment made by patients who use this clinic is that you do not have a long wait in the clinic. By making appointments, waiting time is reduced.

Other appointments can also be made in advance, such as follow-up visits, which may be made as the patient leaves the clinic, when the doctor instructs the patient to return for test results or a repeat visit for evaluation after finishing a course of medication.

Patients being treated for hypertension may book appointments up to six weeks in advance and will be seen Wednesdays or Fridays at 12:45 p.m.

Another advantage of using this clinic is patients may have prescriptions rewritten by requesting them by telephone.

Patients calling for prescription refills should have the prescription bottles handy to provide the information from the labels.

The clinic staff will pull the patient's health records, and a doctor will review those records and write a prescription.

The physician may prefer to have the patient come in for evaluation and, if so, will leave a note with the prescription instructing the patient to make an appointment.

Prescriptions called in before noon may be picked up after 9 a.m. three working days later.

The most obvious advantage for patients in using the Outpatient Clinic at Martin Army Community Hospital is it's closer to Fort Benning. Another is that it costs taxpayers $51 for a PRIMUS Clinic visit while the MACH Outpatient Clinic costs $24.

The PRIMUS Clinic is open until 8 p.m. Monday through Friday and Saturdays, Sundays and holidays from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m.

The MACH Emergency Room is frequently extremely busy on weekends with true medical emergencies, causing waiting times for those with non-emergency conditions to reach three to four hours.

Efforts to increase the available appointments in the Outpatient Clinic and the use of the PRIMUS Clinic on weekends to receive non-emergency care offer increased access to medical care with less waiting time for beneficiaries, continuing the Martin Care tradition of quality.

Armor Division veterans hold reunion

By Aurelio Feliberty
197th Infantry Brigade

Veterans of Company F, 2nd Armor Division, 67th Regiment visited Fort Benning Oct. 20 for their seventh reunion.

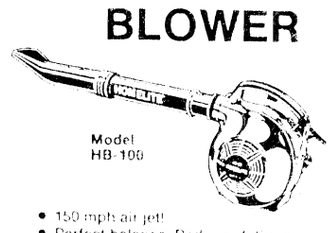
Escorted by Maj. Ernest Morgan III, executive officer of 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor, the veterans visited Infantry Hall where they saw the "I am the Infantry" film.

They also went to Lawson Army Airfield where they sat in and saw some of today's latest helicopters. Later they were bused to a tank simulator where they had the chance to operate the device.

The veterans next toured the 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor motor pool where they were able to step into and see today's M-60A2 tank and the latest M-1A1 Abrams.

"This is some fine equipment. There is no comparison with the old equipment we used," said veteran Oscar Carson.

"I would have liked to have these tanks when we fought the Germans in World War II," said veteran George D. Hore.



"I enjoyed the tour. It was very informative and the soldiers were very helpful and courteous in answering all of our questions," said Pauline Carson, wife of Oscar Carson.

The tour ended with an airborne demonstration behind Infantry Hall.

NTC preparation shifts into high gear

By Willie Hay
197th Infantry Bde

The 197th Infantry Brigade has shifted its preparations on a February and March rotation to the National Training Center at Fort Irwin, Calif., into high gear, according to the brigade operations officer.

"Our train-up for next year's rotation is in full swing but, at the same time, we won't neglect Infantry Center support and affiliation with two National Guard separate infantry brigades," said Maj. John Batiste. The exercise will be known as Desert Hammer III.

"We have a great deal to accomplish in a short time," Batiste said. "While we're preparing to fight on the California desert, we must continue to pull our share of post and reserve component support."

According to Batiste, the brigade was notified Aug. 8 of its selection by the XVIII Airborne Corps to train at NTC. "Of course, at that time we were operating under a totally different annual training plan, and the brigade redirected efforts toward getting ready for NTC," he said.

"When the brigade goes to war, we depend on the corps to give us a slice of combat support and combat service support," Batiste said.

"The timing of next year's rotation is especially critical because 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor is going through a transition from M-60A3 to M-1 tanks."

Filling in for the companies in transition will be two tank companies from 1st Battalion, 10th Cavalry (Armor), from Fort Knox, Ky.

Among the other corps elements supporting the brigade for Desert Hammer III will be 2nd Battalion, 504th Parachute Infantry Regiment; aviation units; a field artillery battery; an engineer company and part of a signal company from Fort Bragg, N.C.; an air defense artillery battery from Fort Stewart, Ga.; a chemical company (smoke and a light truck platoon from Fort Campbell, Ky.; and transportation and magazine platoons from Fort Benning's 36th Engineer Group.

"This rotation will be unique in that it will be another heavy/light rotation in which the 197th will be the controlling headquarters, and the 82nd Airborne Division will provide the light infantry battalion task force," Batiste said.

"This will pose new challenges for the brigade commander and staff in the integration of light and heavy forces at the NTC."

According to Batiste, the 1st and 2nd Battalions, 18th Infantry, will serve as the 197th's own task forces for the exercise.

During the remainder of this quarter, both battalions will conduct intensive live-fire lane training and squad- and platoon-level preparation with multiple-integrated, laser engagement system equipment.

At the same time, the 197th's battalion commanders and selected staff officers will take part in a FORSCOM leader's training program in November.

Preparations in December will include a brigade command post exercise, a logistics reconnaissance at the NTC for key leaders and a training exercise without troops just before Christmas.

"Then, in January, we'll run through a series of brigade-centralized, company team lanes here," Batiste said.

Predeployment training will culminate in Sledgehammer IV, a field training exercise scheduled Jan. 22 through 29 at Fort Benning.

"Our intent during this large FTX will be to bring in all of our attached units from Bragg, Stewart, Knox and Campbell to train with us prior to the start of deployment in February," Batiste said.

"The brigade has accepted the challenge and looks forward to the rotation," he said.

There is help for parents of SIDS victims

Although Sudden Infant Death Syndrome is incurable, there are some signs that can be watched for.

By Shawn Lorimer
Bayonet staff writer

"Seven thousand Americans will die in their sleep this year," according to the Nation Sudden Infant Death Syndrom Foundation.

NSIDSF also points out that SIDS is the number one killer of children in the United States between the ages of one week and one year.

SIDS is not curable, and there is no known cause for the disease. It is also undetectable until death actually occurs.

SIDS, according to the foundation, has been around since Biblical times.

Until 1977, when SIDS became widely known within the medical community, death cirtificates would often incorrectly list suffocation or regurgitaion as a cause of death.

The Atlanta chapter of the SIDS Foundation points out that such mistakes in determining the cause of death can worsen the grief felt by the parents of the child.

A parent's natural reaction is to wonder, "Is it my fault?"

Although very little is known about the disease, the good news is that it is not contageous or hereditary. It is not a virus that children an contract from another person.

The primary goal of the SIDS Foundation, according to NSIDSF area contact Kriste Joy, is ongoing research of the disease and assistance to parents who have had a child die of SIDS.

The SIDS Foundation now believes that there is probably more that just one factor that causes SIDS. They also speculate that although SIDS victims appear normal, it is likely that they have defects in common that are not detectable with current technology.

There are, however, several small factors that do put certain children at risk.

Mothers who are below the age of 19 and mothers who smoke stand a greater chance of having a SIDS child than do other parents.

This does not mean that either smoking or bearing children at an early age is a cause of SIDS.

Other signs that a child is at risk are if they stop breathing on occasion and have blue spells.

Blue spells occur when a child has stopped breathing for a time, and, even though respiration has been restored, parts of the child's body may appear blue due to lack of oxygen in the blood.

Parents who notice any of these signs or think their child is at risk should consult their family doctor.

SIDS also has a dramatic effect on the parents of the victim.

Most commonly, parents tend to blame themselves and experience a sense of guilt and depression.

Epperly agreed with doctors from NSIDSF, saying that parents experience emotional as well as physical reactions.

He added that, "Any problems they had before (the loss of the child) will reoccur or become worse."

In an article published by NSIDSF, Psychotherapist Randy Oven said the parents of a SIDS child experienced a tightness in the throat or heaviness in the chest.

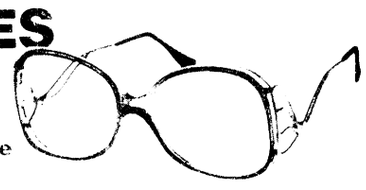
Loss of appetite and an empty feeling in the stomach along with the lack of sleep were also common.

Kriste Joy said that when she lost her child, she experienced a pain in her arms, which her doctor told her was caused by her desire to hold her child.

Parents go through a great deal of emotional trauma, as well. Depression, denial and anger are among the simplest of the parents' problems.

According to Epperly, "Some type of activity is needed to get the parents back into life again." Yet, an immediate return to the job can be detrimental and sometimes dangerous, he said.

He recommends seven to 10 days before parents return to work but cautions that each individual will react differently.



There is help and hope for the family that has lost a child to SIDS. Friends and relatives along with professional counseling can be a tremendous support.

Joy said although no one referred her to the Family Advocacy Program, it was of great help once she and her husband attended.

The SIDS Foundation is also available for help and support.

Area contact for NSIDSF, Kriste Joy, can be reached at 689-2195 or call the Atlanta Chapter at 1-800-541-1783.

ASK THE JUDGE

By Susan McKeeman
Staff Judge Advocate's Office

Q. The other night I was run off the road, and my truck hit a stop sign.

It snapped the post in half and bent up the metal sign.

I waited in the rain and flagged down the Military Police. They found no evidence of the other car and wrote me a ticket for speeding/excessive speed for conditions (slippery and dark).

A few weeks later, I got a letter from the claims office. It said under the Federal Claims Collection Act, the United States was claiming $136 in damages (labor to remove old post, install new post, plus materials), from the incident. The letter even said that if I gave my insurance company's address and my policy number, the claims office would make the claim directly against my insurance company.

Why should I have to pay? Can the government do this to me? Will I still have to pay if the traffic judge finds me not guilty on the ticket?

I could let my insurance cover this, but won't my rates go up?

A. The Federal Claims Collection Act requires government agencies to collect civil damages when government property is lost, damaged or destroyed. The claims office must enforce this federal law.

The Army requires the claims office to review all property damage on post.

If the evidence shows that someone's negligence caused the damage, the claims office must try to collect the cost of repairing the damage. They do this by sending a letter showing the amount of the claim, and asking if you have insurance.

> Protecting your insurance company makes as much sense as protecting your body guard — you keep them from doing what you pay them to do.

For military and civilian employees, Army regulations state that if a person has insurance, the claims office should collect the full amount of damages, up to the policy limits if needed.

If a person doesn't have insurance, the claims office can collect only the cost of damages up to an amount equal to one month's basic pay at the time of the loss.

The claims office may collect even if the judge finds you not guilty of the speeding offense.

The ticket is for a criminal offense, which requires a high burden of proof.

However, liability for damaging government property is not based totally on the criminal act.

You may also be liable if you did a negligent act, which is a civil offense and requires less evidence.

If you are found not guilty of the crime, the claims office certainly will consider that fact.

However, they might still find enough evidence that you did a negligent act.

Each case is different and the particular circumstances will determine what happens.

Unless you accidently run over stop signs on a regular basis, when you call your insurance company, they will assure you your insurance rates will not go up for this one incident.

If you have insurance but do not want your insurance to pay for the damage, then you must pay for the damages yourself.

Insurance is like hiring a body guard. You pay to have a person stand in the way and take any blows intended for you.

If one tries to hurt you, the body guard keeps the money even though he hasn't suffered for you.

If the body guard gets hit, well, that's how body guards earn a living, that's what you have been giving him money for.

Similarly, your insurance company has figured the risk of taking a financial hit instead of you.

Like the body guard's salary, they charge you for this — it is called the premium.

You pay them so that if an accident happens, they absorb the financial blow.

If you don't have an accident, they get to keep the money without having done anything.

Protecting your insurance company makes as much sense as protecting your body guard — you keep them from doing what you pay them to do.

If your insurance company does not answer your questions about insurance, contact the Legal Assistance Office at 545-3281/1714.

For questions about government property claims, contact the Claims Office at 545-2285/3711.

Pilot is Benning's first Master WO

By Michelle Le Roy Harrison
Bayonet staff writer

A Fort Benning pilot is one of a kind.

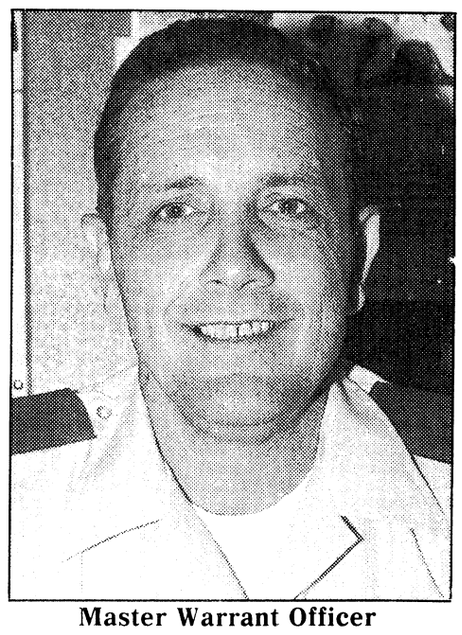
Master Warrant Officer James Preston is currently the only master warrant four at Fort Benning. He is one of only 94 warrant officers in the Army to wear the rank.

According to an October 1987 article in The Officer magazine, the Army Chief of Staff "approved submission of a legislative package that includes provisions for creation of warrant officer grade W-5."

The new system will have three rank groups: warrant officer (W-1 to W-2), senior warrant officer (W-3 to W-4) and master warrant officer (W-5).

While the new grade of W-5 waits for congressional approval and in the event that the grade is not approved, "selected W-4s will receive the master warrant officer designation and be assigned to master warrant officer positions."

"Right now, master warrant officer four is an interim position between the pay grade W-4 and W-5," Preston said. "We still remain in the W-4 pay grade, but we hold the designation as master warrant."



Preston, who is the assistant operations and scheduling officer for the Fixed Wing Flight detachment at Lawson Airfield, said he feels the new grade will open up doors for warrant officers and enhance retention.

"Before, there was nowhere for a W-4 to advance," he said. "The historic age of the warrant officer is getting younger.

"Because the need for warrant officers is greater, applicants are being accepted at an earlier age. Warrant officers were peaking out in their promotion grades early," Preston said.

According to Preston, the average time for a warrant officer to go from W-1 to W-4 is about 12 to 15 years.

"If he is a 30-year, career soldier, he would have 15 years as a W-4. There would be nothing to look forward to," he said.

Master Warrant Officer James Preston

Preston went to the first selection board two years ago.

To be selected for the designation rank, a senior warrant officer has to have 20 years as a warrant officer. Records are reviewed, and a percentage of warrant officers in each military occupational specialty are chosen.

Preston had to complete 100 hours of correspondence course work before attending an eight-week master warrant training course at Fort Rucker, Ala.

If the new grade is approved, Preston and other master warrant fours would have their records reviewed again and go before a promotion board.

Preston admits that the new rank would probably not have affected his retirement date.

Although he hasn't made any definite plans for retirement, he says he'll include his wife in the decision making.

"She has been around almost as long as I've been in the Army," Preston said.

Whatever his plans, he claims he will always fly, even if it is just for recreation.

90th Inf. presents memento to museum

By John Robinson
Bayonet staff writer

A stained glass replica of the 90th Infantry Division's unit patch was presented to the Infantry Museum, Oct. 18, in a brief ceremony in the WWII section on the museum's third floor.

Retired Lt. Col. Eames Yates and retired Maj. Carl Everett, both former members of the 90th Inf. Div.'s "Tough 'Ombres," were on hand to donate the memento on behalf of the National 90th Division Association.

"We wanted to make sure people who visited the museum knew who we were," said Everett.

Representing the museum was Col. Ted Chilcote and Frank Hanner.

Chilcote, a war veteran himself, was very pleased with the addition. "They (90th Inf. Div.) had a very impressive combat record in Europe," said Chilcote.

Activated March 25, 1942, at Camp Barkeley, Texas, the "Tough 'Ombres" saw their first action on the beaches of Normandy. "Normandy was a real bloodbath," said Yates.

Having been thrown into such a pressing situation from the start did not help the 90th Inf. Div., which had been victim to poor leadership and tactics.

It was not until Maj. Gen. Raymond S. McLain took over command of the division in August 1944 that, "We rose up from the ashes and got our money's worth," quipped Yates. "That's the enduring strength of the American infantry." said Chilcote. "They learn awfully fast."

Benning's Breakfast Club captures Army 10-Miler title

By Shawn Lorimer
Bayonet staff writer

The fog slowly lifted in the early morning hours of October 15 as more than 4,600 runners gathered for the fifth annual Army 10-Miler.

Fort Benning's women's team —The Benning Breakfast Club — had some trouble locating the starting line because of the weather, according to Kathy Wass. But, once the race began, things got better.

The team, which was made up of Lise A. Cote, Molly J. Sinclair, Ann McDonald, Beverly E. Wedda, Kathy Wass and Susan E. Davis, ran to a first-place finish in the women's team division.

Cote said the opening moments of the race were probably the most difficult.

"I was trying to keep up with Molly Sinclair," she said. "I needed to run my own race."

She went on to say that once she slowed down and developed a steady pace, her confidence grew.

Most of the runners experienced problems early in the race but felt much better during the last three miles, after the Haynes Point turnaround.

Sinclair said that the first part of the run was difficult because prior to reaching Haynes Point there was no visible mile markers, and she had no idea what her time was.

Sinclair also said she had cramps throughout the race, but they dissipated in the last mile when she knew the finish was coming up.

In addition to being a member of the winning women's team, Sinclair also took second place for overall times in her age category.

Each member of the team finished the 10-mile race, even though only the top four times are used to compute the total time for the team.

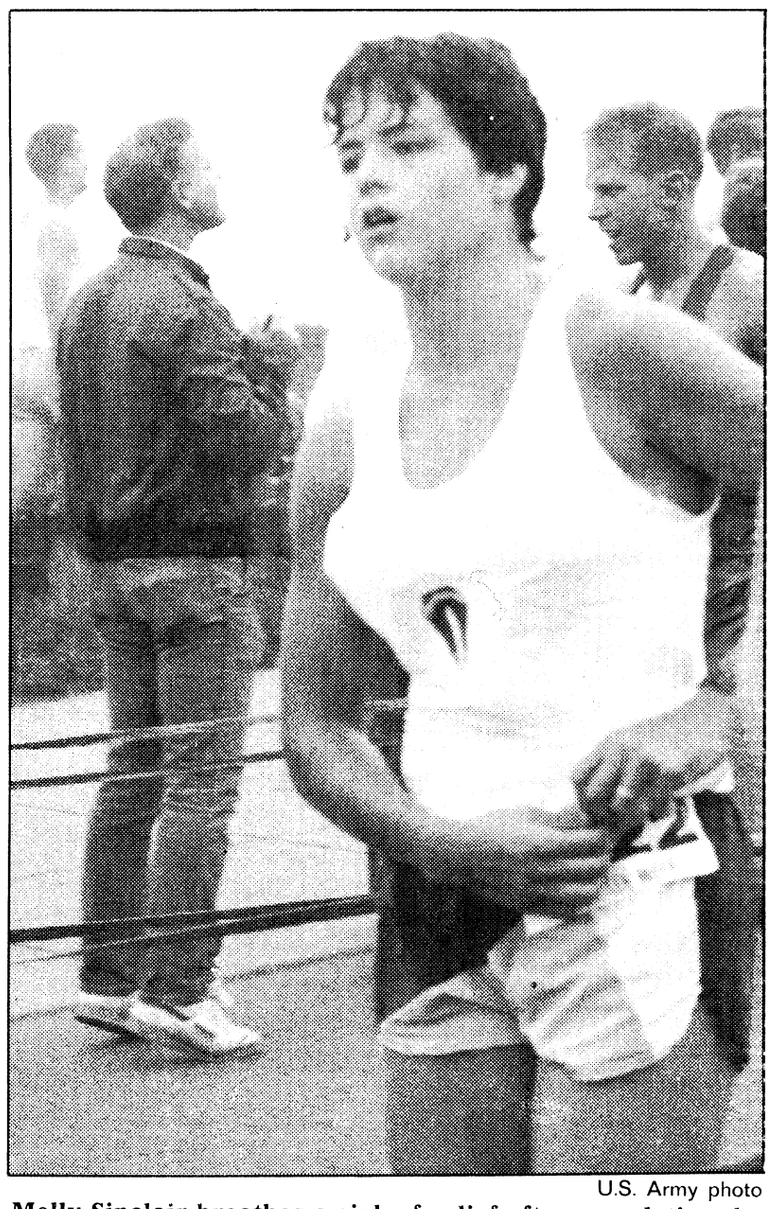
"Although only four runners have their times counted, we needed the whole team to win," said McDonald. "The runners whose times are not used are there in case someone drops out or becomes a casualty."

The race was not without controversy because Fort Bliss' women's team was mistakenly announced as the winners of the race.

Apparently the race computer had failed to include any of the times of the Fort Benning women.

"If we had not added up our times on our own, we wouldn't have realized that we beat them," said McDonald.

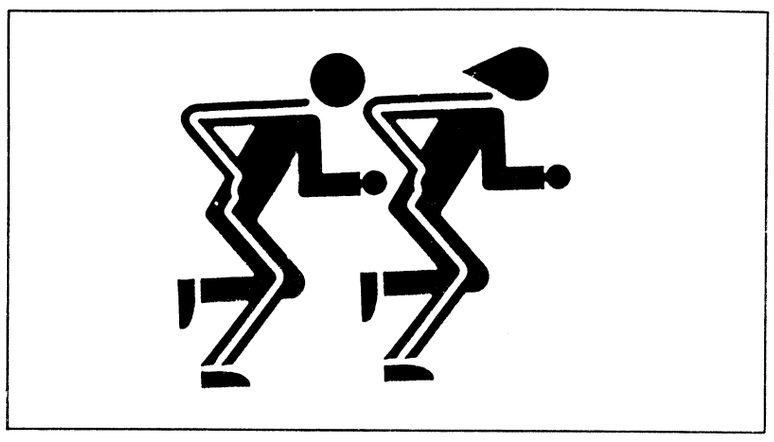
The race director apologized and corrected the announcement although trophies had already been given out.



"The worst part was that it was a logistical nightmare," said one team member.

"Not only was the course itself crowded, but the streets were lined with the largest crowd ever to attend a 10-mile race in the United States."

The race, which occurs at the same time as the annual Association of the U.S. Army convention, included women from the active Army, reservists, ROTC cadets, government employees and an open division along with numerous men's categories.



Now that it's over and the team anxiously awaits the delivery of their long-awaited trophies, the runners can assume their normal duties knowing they are the fastest six women in the Army in a 10-mile race.

Wass summed it up by saying, "I'm glad it's over, and I won't be able to run next year. But, if you're asking if I'd do it again — you bet!"

Washingtonian battles fog to win Army 10-miler run

Army News Service

Michael Regan of Washington, D.C., and Laura DeWald of Grand Rapids, Mich., battled the D.C. fog to claim top honors in the fifth annual Army 10-Miler run along the Potomac River Oct. 15 Washington.

Regan took the lead from Jay Woods of Orem, Utah, and Calvin Biesecker of Arlington near the two-mile point after the three had led the 4,600 runners from the Pentagon to the Arlington Memorial Bridge.

Regan then kept pace with wheelchair competitor David Cruse and stayed behind the lead truck as much as possible in keeping his pace at five minutes per mile.

The native Washingtonian then broke away from Cruse at the Jefferson Memorial and ran the final leg of the course, crossing the George Mason Memorial Bridge to the Pentagon finish line and completing the race with a time of 50:10.

That time matched the winning time set by last year's winner, Darrell General of Temple Hills, Md.

General, holder of the course record and winner of the last two Army 10-milers, was slated to defend his title, but withdrew, opting to compete in North Carolina.

Woods claimed second place after passing Biesecker near the seven mile point, crossing the finish line at 51:20.

Biesecker settled for third.

Gordon Hyde, also of Orem, Utah, finished fourth and John Carper of New York captured fifth.

DeWald captured her first Army 10-miler championship by running the course in 1:00:42, 56 seconds ahead of Cathy Ventura-Merkel of Arlington.

Ventura-Merkel was followed by Kelly Watkins of Salt Lake City, Diane Palentino of Newport News, Va., and Bernadette Creed of Fairfax.

Marianne Dickerson, the three-time women's champion from Arlington, did not register for this year's race.

In the men's team competition, the Commander's Trophy, awarded annually to best military team, went to the Marine Corps' Warriors of Alexandria, Va.

The team of Greg Mislick, Greg Kaplan, Thomas Bailey and Virgil Griffin recorded a time of 3:34:23, finishing 82 seconds ahead of an Army team from the Bad Kreuznach Military Community.

The defending champions from the U.S. Army Military District of Washington finished third.

The Fort Benning Breakfast Club captured the women's team title, with Molly Sinclair, Ann McDonald, Lisa Cote and Beverly Wedda setting the winning team's pace.

Fort Bliss finished second, followed by the women of the U.S. Army Engineer School of Fort Leonard Wood.

More than 5,600 runners registered to compete in 20 individual age categories for men and women.

The race is sponsored annually by Headquarters, Army Recreational Service, the U.S. Army Military District of Washington and the Association of the United States Army.

Officers' wives to hold Folk Art Fair Nov. 4

By Christine Turner
Officers' Wives' Club

The annual Officers' Wives' Club Folk Art Fair will be held Nov. 4 at Faith Middle School from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m.

A variety of vendors from the military and civilian communities will be featured at this year's fair, with many specialty foods available.

Annette Santiago

Catherine Stauss (l), Vickie Edwards and Brenda Couturier display hand-stitched quilt and other items that will be available at Folk Art Fair.

Admission to the Folk Art Fair is $1. Tickets for the quilt drawing cost $1 and are available at the OWC office or at the door.

Vickie Edwards, Patsy Chilcote, Eileen Reid, Brenda Couturier and Mary Anne Charlson are a few of the vendors from the Fort Benning community who will be exhibiting their talents at this year's Folk Art Fair.

Edwards is bringing her stained glass work to the fair, but many people may already recognize her work from her stained glass classes on post and at Columbus College or her show at Columbus Square Mall.

Edwards keeps up on all the latest techniques with trips to her native Tennessee.

This devotion to the craft is evident in both her teaching and her custom stained glass.

Chilcote and Reid realized a need for a comprehensive guide to this area's many antique stores, thrift shops, outlets, discount and specialty shops and other points of interest.

The two family members collaborated for over nine months on their newly released book, "Millin' Around," a necessity for any new arrival and an excellent guide even for established natives.

"Millin' Around" covers a 75-mile radius around Columbus/Fort Benning in a town-by-town format, complete with maps.

Patsy Chilcote is also known for her work, which she will bring to the Folk Art Fair.

Couturier will make her decorative folk art available at the fair — painted wooden and stuffed Santas.

After learning this art in Lansing, Mich., Couturier taught for three years in Germany, but she will only be here for a few months.

She uses a method of painting and stuffing canvas and then antiquing it.

The final product looks like fine leather.

Charlson, another artist and teacher, though new at her craft, is turning out one-of-a-kind corn husk dolls and Christmas tree-top angels.

Charlson takes special orders and teaches classes on post.

She learned corn husk art at Fort Leavenworth last year.

Shoppers can bring their Christmas lists and see all the arts and crafts at this year's Folk Art Fair.

Also, specialty foods will be available.

For more information, call Annette Santiago at 689-6930.

NATO had a word for it: Situation Firebreak. A full-scale Soviet invasion of Northern Europe. Now, the unthinkable had happened. Ivan was coming. And the only things standing between the rampaging Soviet army and the rest of Europe were four men and one extraordinary tank, billed to be the hottest thing in killing machines, an XM-F3 nicknamed No-Slack...

"Tankwar" is the first novel in Larry Steelbaugh's blistering new series of men and machines and guts that makes for glory. Look for Book II in the series in Spring 1990.

'Praying Infantryman'

Stained glass window dedicated at ITC chapel

By Debra Galle
USAIC Chaplain's Office

Soft shades of comfortable blue filled the chapel Sunday as the afternoon sunlight filtered through the colored glass.

More than 550 pairs of black boots filed into the Infantry Training Center Chapel with careful deliberate steps — boots belonging to soldiers whose eyes were drawn to the covering on the wall behind the altar.

The trainees were there to see something that they had contributed to become a reality.

Their donations had been used for the project, and many of the soldiers had helped to install it as well.

The service began and soon the curtain was dropped to reveal "The Praying Infantryman," a new stained-glass window.

Chap. (Col.) Alfred E. Brough, Training and Doctrine Command Chaplain, was the guest speaker.

The service was centered on the meanings and purposes of prayer and belief, and strength gained from God's presence in a soldier's life.

"We must remember that prayer does not change things," explained Chaplain Brough. "Prayer changes us, and we in turn change things.

"I ask you to feel the spirit represented in this image. If someday you find yourself praying on a battlefield, I hope you remember this old chaplain who once talked about the power of prayer..."

Before the dream of a beautiful, meaningful window in the ITC chapel could become a reality, much planning and hard work had to take place.

Pfc. Michael Hall and Cpl. Mike Chestnut, both chaplains assistants assigned to the ITC chapel, worked closely with the installation and dedication service.

"It was really a good feeling to work on this project," said Chestnut. "I feel like we are a part of the window, and someday we can look back and know we were a part of history here."

One man attending the service had been at Sand Hill for the dedication of the barracks there between 1977 and 1979. Bob Andrews now had left a permanent mark on the history of Fort Benning — he helped finish the window.

The window was made by The Columbus Studio, managed by Diane Topor and owned by Bob and Bea Andrews.

All of the stained glass windows in the Martin Army Community Hospital chapel were made by them, as well as the large window in the front of the School of the Americas.

The "Praying Infantryman" was an especially large and involved project, according to Topor.

"It is very special for us to be here for the dedication and see the soldiers for whom the window was made," said Topor.

"I wish Bea (Andrews) could have been here to see this; she also put many hours of work into the project."

Andrews and Topor both mentioned how Chap. (Lt. Col.) Barry Lonergan was instrumental in the completion of this project.

"Father Lonergan was a lot of help to us," said Topor.

"He had to leave before the window was finished, so he took pictures of all three pieces so he could put them together to get a feel for the finished project."

In an interview while still the Chief, Administration Operations of the Fort Benning USAIC Chaplain's office, Father Lonergan recalled his first impression of the ITC Chapel when he arrived here in 1988.

"The moment I walked in the chapel, I immediately focused my attention on the plain window above the altar," said Lonergan.

In the months to come, he handled the plans for acquisition, design, and installation.

When he was transferred to the War College this spring, Chap. (Lt. Col.) Douglas Stephenson, ITC Chaplain, took over the responsibility and saw the project through the final stages.

Soldiers have many symbols at Fort Benning.

Among them are Iron Mike, Ranger berets, Airborne wings and crossed rifles.

These symbols show a side of the infantryman — the side of his professionalism and physical abilities.

The "Praying Infantryman" stained-glass window is a new symbol that represents the depth and complexity of the whole process of becoming a soldier.

The image is taken from a picture of Valley Forge and is meant to encompass all races and faiths.

Chap. (Capt.) Robert Reese, an ITC staff chaplain, summed it up by saying the ITC chapel belongs to the infantry soldier — each of them and all of them.

The window is meant to be a reflection of their identities — a recognition of their beliefs and virtues he said.

By using the following procedure, soldiers on the Family Housing Waiting List can use this chart to estimate when they can expect quarters:

Locate your category of housing.

Note eligibility date located on the same line as your category.

Calculate the time difference between the eligibility date listed and your eligibility date. The difference is the approximate time you still have to wait for housing.

EXAMPLE: If the latest eligibility date of the person who last received housing in your category was May 15, 1988, and your date of eligibility is Sept. 15, 1988, you can expect housing in about four months. If you do not know your eligibility date, contact the Family Housing Office at building 399, 545-3107.

29th Inf. has best motor pool in Army

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment has the best motor pool of its type in the Army.

The Army Chief of Staff Award For Maintenance Excellence in the heavy density category was presented to the unit in a ceremony last week by Training and Doctrine Command Commander Gen. John W. Foss.

During the ceremony, Foss said, "I've given this award to this unit before but that was before the transition to the Bradley's was made." (The unit won the award in 1985.)

"It was said this unit couldn't win this award again once the Bradley's were here, but 29th has proved the skeptics wrong," Foss said to the audience and formation of soldiers at the ceremony.

He said it shows the entire Army what infantrymen are capable of doing.

"You've established a high standard of excellence here, and I'd like to see you repeat your performance," Foss said.

The soldier who accepted the award, battalion motor pool officer, Capt. Ricky Finch, stood proudly by the TRADOC commander as he commended the battalion for its outstanding achievement.

"The whole battalion deserves to be commended for this award," he said, "because the unit would not have won if it hadn't been for everyone working as a team."

Finch explained the process

Open season set for health benefits

Civilian Personnel Office

A Federal Employee Health Benefits Program open season will be held Nov. 13 through Dec. 8 for appropriated fund employees.

Temporary employees with 365 days of continuous Federal service are eligible for health benefits.

The Directorate of Civilian Personnel will host a Health Fair Wednesday and Thursday in Classroom 54, Building 4 from 9 a.m. to noon and from 1 p.m. to 5 p.m.

The purpose of the health benefits fair is to allow appropriated fund civilian employees to receive personal counseling from a representative of the health plans available under the Federal Employees' Health Benefits Program.

Under open season regulations, any eligible employee who is not currently registered may enroll, and an enrolled employee may change from one plan or option to another or from self only to self and family or any combination of these.

Employees desiring to enroll or change enrollment must make appointments through the Administrative Office prior to visiting the Recruitment and Placement Division, Room 110, Building 35.

The Aetna Life Insurance Company will end its participation with the FEHB Program effective Dec. 31, 1989.

This announcement does not change or diminish Aetna enrollees' current health benefits coverage.

Employees currently enrolled with Aetna who desire to be covered by insurance in 1990 must change their enrollment to another company.

Rangers teach SWAT teams tricks of trade

By John Robinson
Bayonet staff writer

Voices echoing "he's a cop, he's a cop," rang throughout the make-believe town.

That was the atmosphere Oct. 24 as representatives from five police SWAT teams from North and South Carolina came here for urban training with Fort Benning rangers.

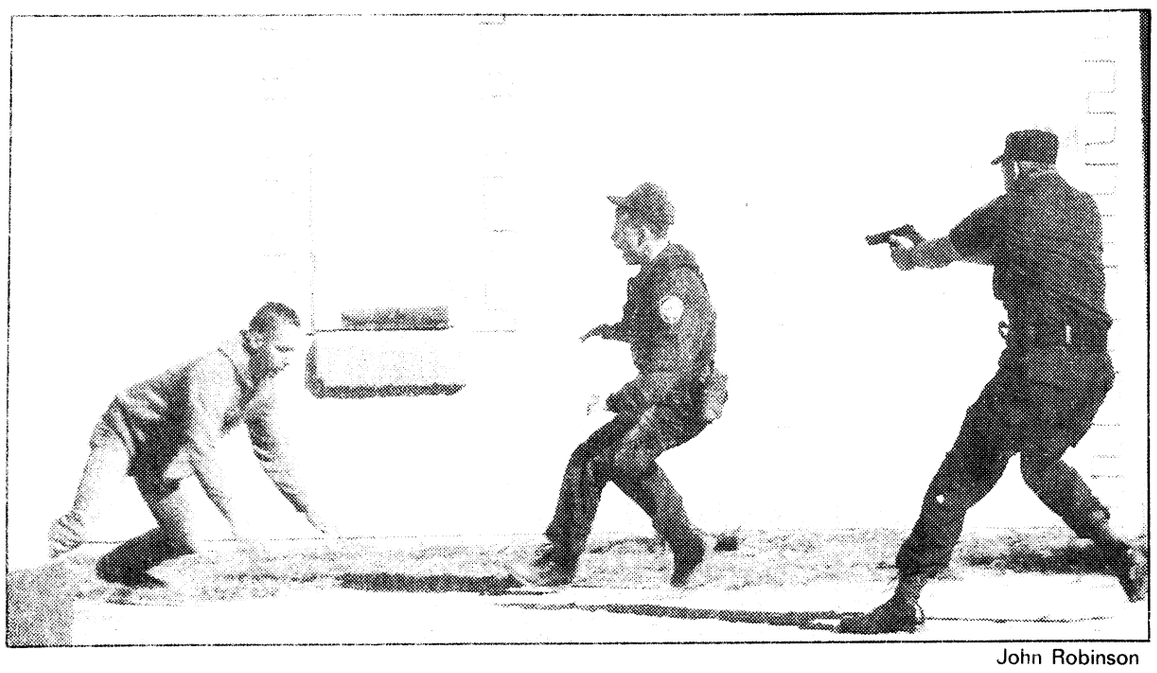
Officers came from the Buncombe and Henderson, N.C., counties sheriff departments, the Ashville, N.C., police department, as well as the nearby Greenville, S.C., city and county police departments.

McKenna MOUT site, a city mock-up complete with multi-story buildings and numerous streets, was constructed by the U.S. Army's Corps of Engineers specifically for urban combat training.

The SWAT teams conducted various scenarios with ranger role players. These scenarios included high felony warrant arrests, "buy/busts" or "reverse stings," street sweeps and jump-out raids, such as those conducted on crack houses.

In addition, the officers practiced building-scaling techniques, as well as stealth-type approaches from wooded areas.

The rangers coordinated the facilities for the week's training, as well as supplying rules, guidance and role players who acted as the "bad guys."



"Basically, they're doing their own training, we're just lending our expertise," said Staff Sgt. Mannifred Yates, of Company A, 4th Ranger Training Brigade.

Yates was in charge of the operation from the ranger's end.

The rangers tried to make things as real as possible by giving the SWAT teams a "run for their money."

Rangers were instructed by Yates to struggle when appropriate, and struggle they did.

Although no live ammunition was used, the "felons" would run from the site of an impending bust or, if captured, put up a struggle to either break free or wrestle a weapon out of an officer's hand.

John Robinson

SWAT team members bust a ranger who's playing the part of a drug dealer.

"This is real-world stuff. What we learn today we can use tomorrow. It happens," said Sgt. Anthony Coggiola of the Buncombe Co. Sheriff's Department.

Coggiola was in charge of training for the SWAT members. He is also a lieutenant in 20th Group Special Forces, a Florida National Guard unit.

Coggiola said in the past 14 months, he and his team had been on 46 missions, ranging from rescue SCUBA dives to crack raids. Included in these were two actual gun fights.

The standard sidearm for the SWAT officers is the 92F Beretta, a nine-millimeter semi-automatic pistol.

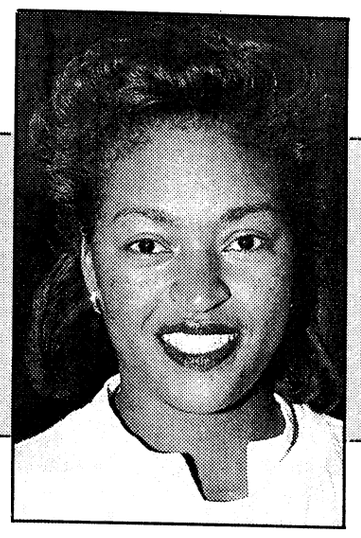
They also use Uzi sub-machine guns and Heckler and Koch's MP5.

Coggiola described the MP5 as "the creme de la creme for this type of work."

To qualify to go to the advanced SWAT training school, a police officer must have at least two years "street time," an unblemished record and pass various psychological assessments.

"There's a lot of experience out here as far as police officers are concerned," said Coggiola, "and there's a dedication from our sheriffs for the best training possible."

"We train at two major facilities a year for eight to nine days each time," he said. "We usually use the MOUT site at Fort Bragg, N.C., but we have to supply our own role players so that takes away from the unpredictability of the training."



In addition, he said the teams train two days a month for 12 hours each day.

The SWAT delegation finished their training at Fort Benning Oct. 27 with a live-fire exercise on near by Buchanan Range.

They left the next day richer in experience thanks in part to a few U.S. Army rangers.

OPINION

VARIOUS VOICES: What did you do to make sure Fort Benning children had a safe Halloween?

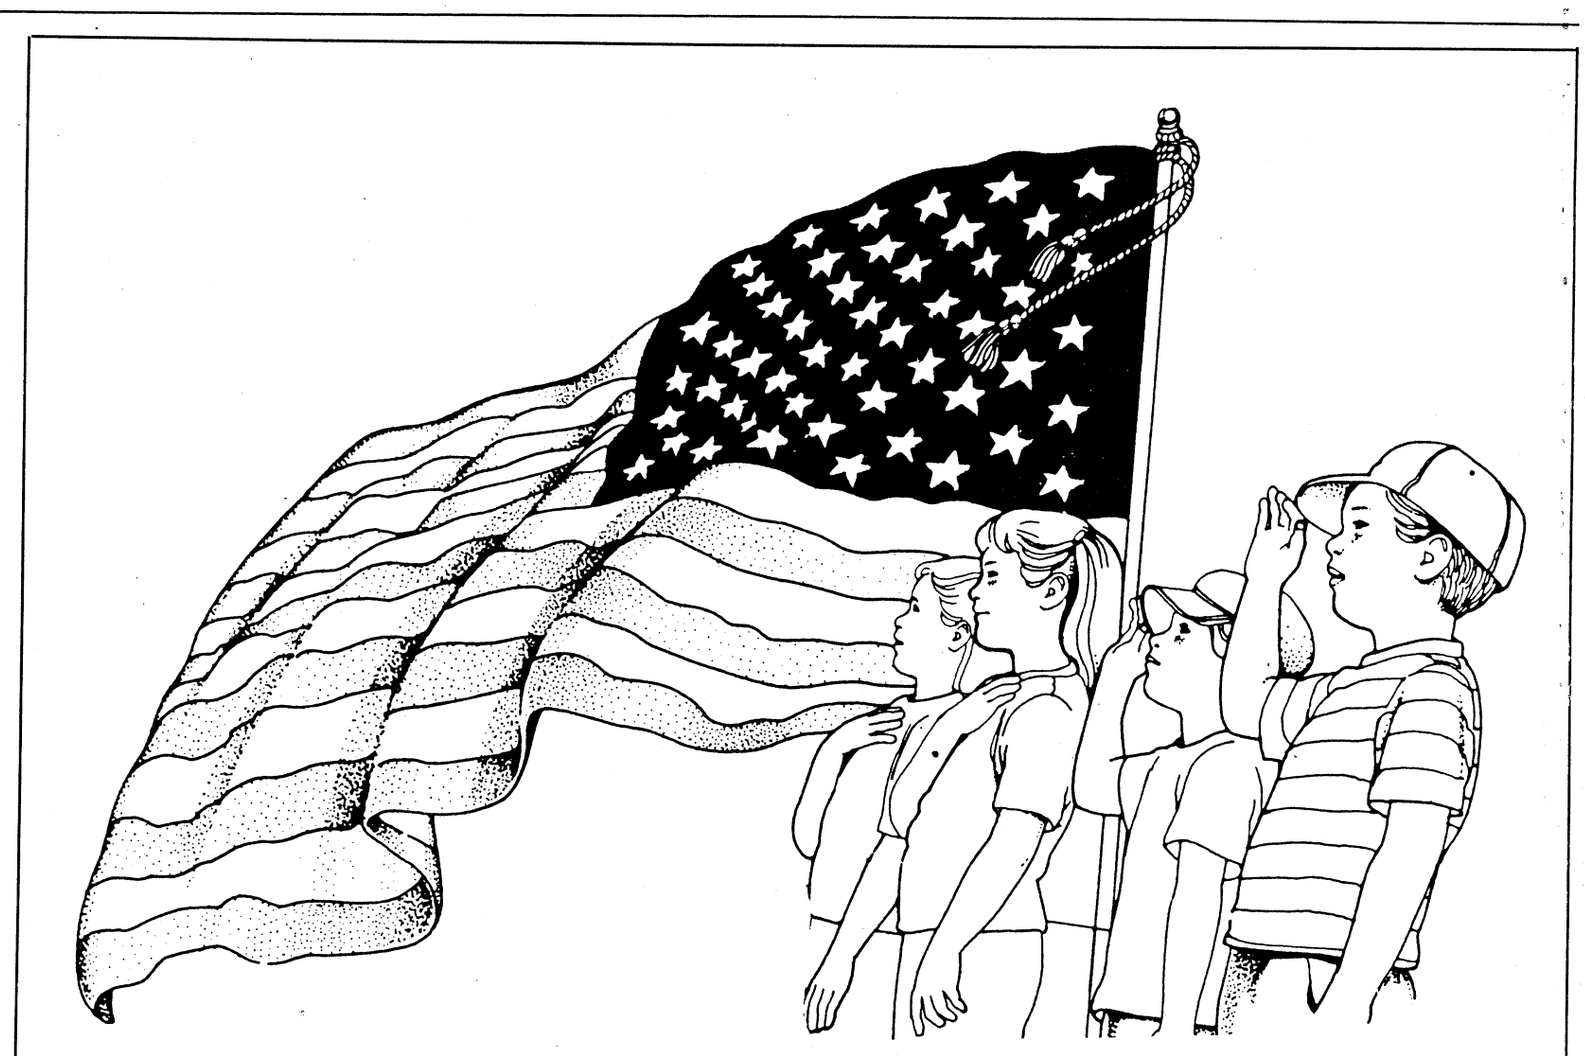
Charlotte Jordan, family member — "I inspected my children's candy before they ate anything. I made sure that their costumes were not loose fitting. I kept my eye on not only my kids, but others, too."

Karen Arthurs, family member — "I took my child out right at 6 o'clock and came back before dark. I put up all the candy until I could look at it."

Holly Lair, family member — "I only went to houses of people I knew and stayed with my kids the whole time. My kids had chem lights all over their costumes. I also checked the candy before they ate it."



Estella Ondeck, family member — "We only went to houses that had porch lights on or where the people were sitting outside the houses. We also carried safety lights."

Genia Jones, family member — "I only gave out candy that was wrapped. I kept the area well lit and watched out for the children."

McGruff, crime dog — "I told the kids to make sure they didn't eat any candy until their parents checked it out. I also reminded them to wear reflective strips or carryflashlights. RRRRuuuuuffff."

Fireproof flags aren't necessary if pride, respect are shown

By Clyde Snively
USAIC Public Affairs Office

A firm in Columbus is offering to make our American Flags fireproof.

They'll put a fire retardant chemical on it free during November.

The offer is noble, but the chemical needs to be applied to the retards who go around burning flags.

First, those people aren't going to be walking up to the houses of Mr. and Mrs. Citizen, pulling the flag off the front porch and torching it.

No publicity there.

No national television coverage.

As I watch these Neanderthals on TV or read about them in the paper, I can only wonder what's going on in their heads.

I picture abstruse ideas ricocheting off the empty walls inside their skulls so much like ping pong balls.

But I still can't even begin to come up with a clue as to what they're doing. They rant and rave about freedom, about how people who don't think like they do are all fascists and out to get them with restrictive laws.

So how do they go about changing laws?

By burning Old Glory, by using our nation's colors as a floor mat in some perverted art exhibit.

And what restrictions do they complain about?

A law that says you can't desecrate the Stars and Stripes. This is their "cause celebre?" Give me a break.

Don't they have something better to do? Surely, there are more repressive laws that these geeks could be campaigning against than a law that protects our nation's flag.

Next week we commemorate Veterans Day.

We honor all those who served and are serving our nation in uniform.

What will those cretins be doing? Will they too be taking the day off?

Will they be enjoying a day earned for them by those who fought for our freedoms? Probably not.

The typical answer to these bums is to tell them to vote — "vote with your feet bub. Go find a country whose flag you will respect."

But then we're missing the point. Our flag does guarantee us certain freedoms and inalienable rights, even if exercising those freedoms causes our blood to boil and makes us want to jump into our pickup trucks and drive up to those flag desecrators and shoot them where it hurts most.

Our flag has survived a long time.

It survived the British, it was there when our country was reunited following the War between the States and it survived the burnings in other nations.

What it can't survive though is apathy. And maybe the flag burners are actually doing us a favor.

They're awakening us to the fact that we need to love and respect our flag, that we can't take it for granted, or take it for granted that everyone in this country respects it.

Prior to the Supreme Court action that found burning the flag was protected under the Freedom of Speech Amendment, how aware of our flag were people?

How many people off post, or on post for that matter, were flying the flag on national holidays?

How many times do you see people continue to drive or walk when retreat or reveille is played?

If they do anything at all, it's just to walk or drive faster.

How erect do they stand during the playing of the National Anthem?

Do those in civilian clothes place their right hands over their hearts and stand at attention, or do they continue to gab with a neighbor, ignoring the Red Man or John Deere caps still sitting on their heads.

I say, combat the flag-burning scum by proudly displaying our country's colors, by showing the flag the respect it deserves. Then it shouldn't really matter what those other vermin do.

Time for new look at regimental system

By Joseph L. Allred
Army News Service

Over the past several years, Army branches have been actively involved in the development of regimental systems.

These regimental affiliations seek to give continuity and esprit de corps to the branches and the people who man them.

In too many cases, though, regimental affiliation is just a paperwork drill and one that means little more than a line in a personnel record.

With the congressionally mandated budget cuts, which will affect manpower strengths over the next 10 years, now is probably the best time to take another look at the U.S. Army Regimental System and improve it to meet the needs of the future.

Developing a true regimental system would allow recruiters, personnel managers and assignment officers to have a clearer picture on the needs and demands of Army manpower.

A regimental system fully functioned and staffed would eliminate the need for the often-recurring reclassification process among enlisted branches, since each regiment would have an exact fill rate for personnel in required positions.

A true regimental system may also eliminate the numerous promotion boards at Department of the Army level and would leave promotions up to regimental leadership to move the best and brightest to positions of responsibility.

Some may counter this argument by saying that this would lead to blatant patronage for promotions and assignments.

Not necessarily, if selection boards were held by number, not by name. Then records and selections would truly be made as "best qualified" the only criteria.

Above regimental level, positions that need to be filled could be staffed by members of the various regiments on a rotating basis, with each regiment required to provide personnel assets — another way of selecting the very best. This would also tend to eliminate the homesteading factor of many assignments.

With the current concerns over manpower strengths and budgetary limits, the regimental system needs to be looked at as a viable way to preserve unit integrity, raise morale and esprit de corps, and foster pride in service.

It just may be that the regimental system is the best new, old idea to come around in a long time. At least we can think about it.

Allred heads the print media branch in the Office of the Chief of Public Affairs.

In last week's edition of The Bayonet, Gen. Edwin H. Burba Jr. was incorrectly listed as the commanding general of the Training and Doctrine Command. It should have read he is the commanding general of Forces Command.

New leader takes ITC helm

By Marilyn Balzarini
Infantry Training Center

The Infantry Training Center welcomed a battalion commander and bid a heartfelt farewell to another last week.

Lt. Col. Thomas Miller took the helm of the 1st Battalion, 38th Infantry, from Lt. Col. Jose Alvarez Oct. 24.

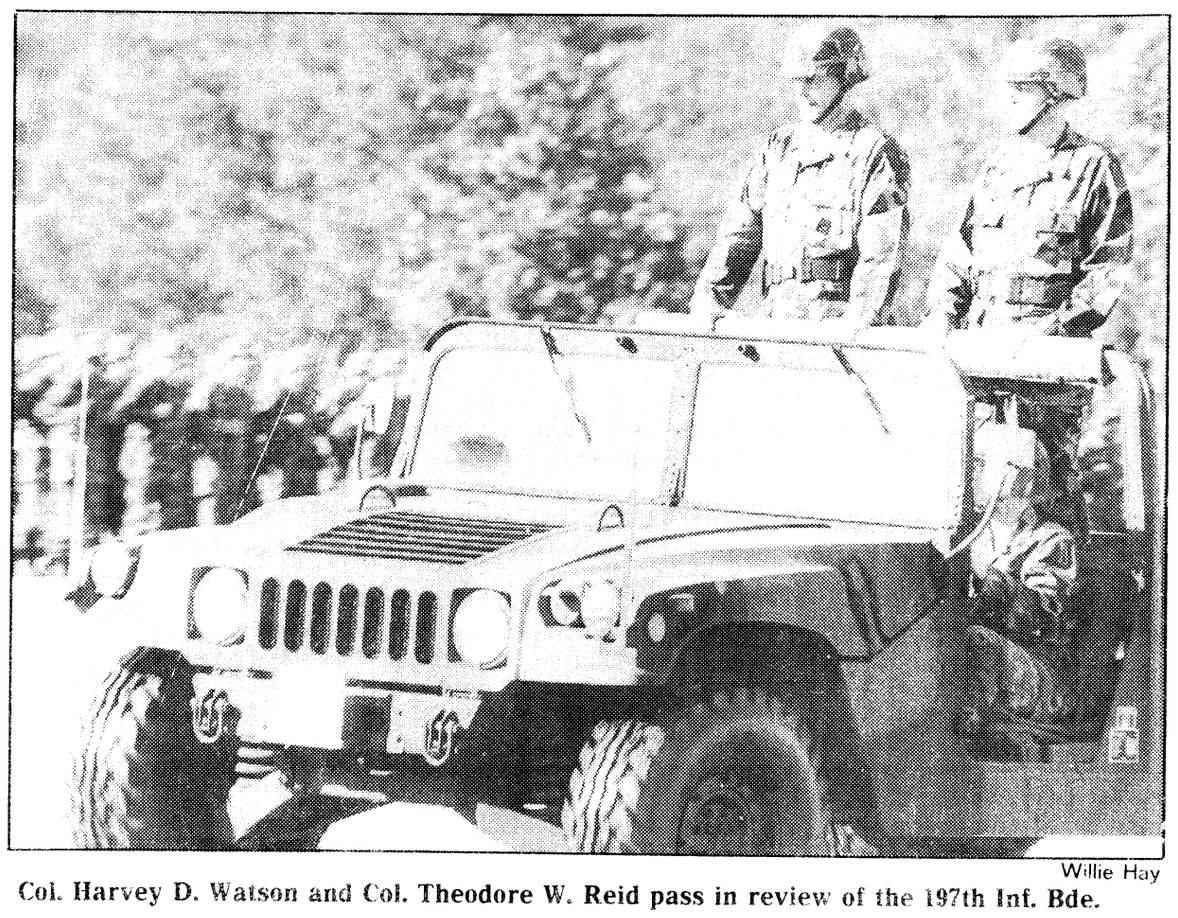
Miller comes to ITC from the 101st Airborne Division, Fort Campbell, Ky.

He brings 16 years of experience to the job. His assignments include the 82nd Airborne Division, 2nd Infantry Division, 7th Special Forces Group and the Infantry School's Directorate of Combat Developments.

During the change of command ceremony, Miller said, "It is a privilege of the highest order to command, particularly when the mission is to take America's sons and mold them into soldiers."

Marilyn Balzarini

Lt. Col. Thomas Miller talks to the soldiers of 1st Bn., 38th Inf. on the day he took command.



Miller said he is looking forward to the challenges of being trusted with the stewardship of soldiers and their families.

He said his goal is to train soldiers who are capable of fighting as members of squads and platoons to win in battle.

Alvarez commanded the 1st Bn., 38th Inf. for two years. He has taken the position of assistant chief of staff for Fort Benning.

During his last address to the 1st Bn., 38th Inf., Alvarez told the drill sergeants that the soldiers they train will always measure future leaders with them as a standard.

"Forever you are (the OSUT soldiers') definition of a leader." Alvarez said "Don't ever let up, and don't ever let your soldiers down."

197th Infantry Brigade hails new commander

By Willie Hay
197th Infantry Brigade

As more than 1,800 soldiers stood at attention on York Field Oct. 26, command of the 197th Infantry Brigade (Mech.) (Sep.) passed from Col. Harvey D. Watson to Col. Theodore W. Reid.

"There is not another brigade in the Army that is as capable as yours, and there is not one with readiness, spirit and professional excellence that will even come close to yours," declared Lt. Gen. Carl W. Stiner, commander of the XVIII Airborne Corps, the 197th's parent unit, presiding officer for the ceremony.

In praising Watson for his two years of leadership, Stiner told the soldiers, "He has brought you to where you are today. His dedication has been absolute, and his motivation has been for selfless reasons," Stiner said.

"Some changes can be disruptive, but not this one," Stiner continued. "Although you have lost an outstanding commander, you have gained an outstanding commander."

Stiner described Reid as "no stranger to mechanized infantry units or to the requirements of combat," adding that Reid was the best qualified officer in the Army to assume command of the 197th.

In an emotional farewell, Watson called command of the 197th the best job for an infantry colonel in the Army.

"Deployments, testing of new equipment, assisting in the training of infantrymen at Fort Benning and support to the School of the Americas — the soldiers, NCOs and officers of the 197th have performed all of these missions in an outstanding fashion that our nation can be proud of," Watson said.

"The real strength of this unit is in its people — those who stand before us today, and those who are out working their buns off doing something else," he continued.

"I ask you to keep thinking about those key words I always use — professionalism, discipline, cohesion, teamwork and patriotism and what it means to serve your nation. I know you will render your support to your new command team as well as you did to the one that's fading away."

Reid thanked Watson for turning over command of a brigade that he described as well-trained and combat-ready. He said, "Always remember, you will be a member of the Sledgehammer Brigade forever."

Reid pledged 100 percent of his efforts toward ensuring that the 197th remains ready for its warfighting mission.

"Not to do so would be a disservice to our country, our Army and the soldiers standing on the field today," he said.

Reid comes to his command on Kelley Hill from Main Post, where he served as secretary of the Infantry School for the past two years.

During his 23 years of service, he has served as a counterintelligence officer and province operations adviser in Vietnam; assistant professor of military science at the Valley Forge, Pa., Military Academy; and chief of both the Infantry Branch at the U.S. Army Military Personnel Center in Alexandria, Va., and the Tactics Division, Combined Arms and Tactics Department of the Infantry School.

Reid and his wife, Eileen, have two children, Amanda, 10, a student at the University of Hawaii, and Gregory, 16, a student at Spencer High School.

Watson was awarded the Legion of Merit for his service as the brigade commander, and his wife Dixie received a DA Certificate of Appreciation for her contributions to the quality of life at Fort Benning.

Watson has been reassigned to Headquarters, U.S. Army Central Command, MacDill Air Force Base, Tampa, Fla.

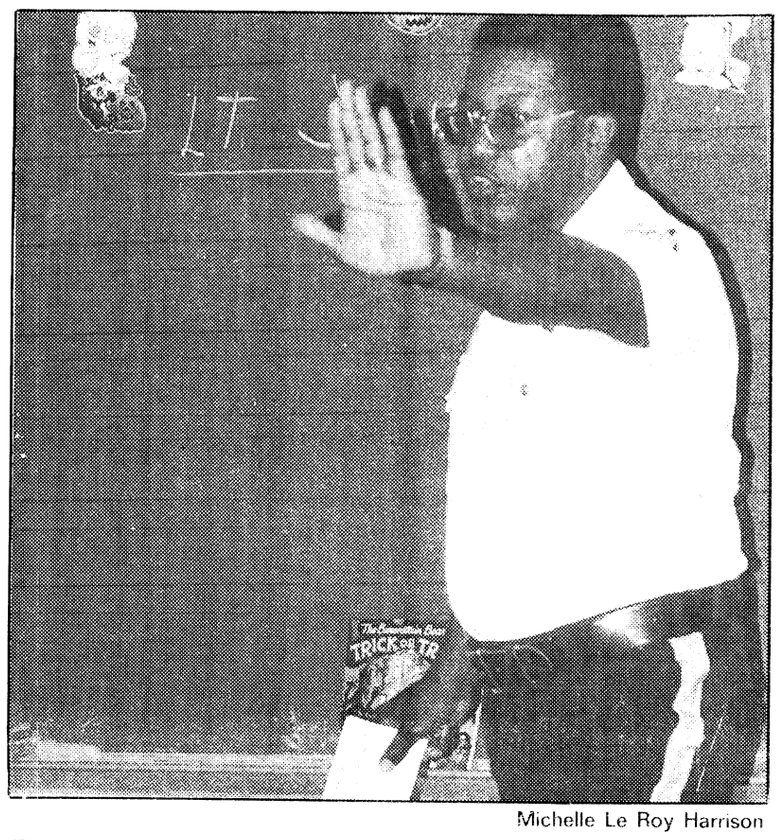
School students prepare for war

By Michelle Le Roy Harrison
Bayonet staff writer

America's youth is being trained for war.

Law enforcement officials are setting up defenses in elementary and junior high schools.

The enemy out to get our children is tobacco, drugs and alcohol; but there is a secret weapon. It's known as "DARE."



The Drug Abuse Resistance Education program's goal is to "reach children at an age when they are most receptive to drug prevention education.

It targets children before they are likely to have been led by their peers to experiment with tobacco, drugs and alcohol.

Department of Defense policeman, Lt. Walter Jackson and Spec. Danny Burton, of the Military Police Activity, could be considered heros in this war against drugs.

They're taking part in a crusade at the schools to teach children from kindergarten through sixth grade about the DARE program.

While the program is designed to educate children before they come into contact with drugs, Jackson and Burton say that the majority of children already know a lot about drugs, that sixth-graders know and use words, such as "pot" and "crack."

Michelle Le Roy Harrison

Department of Defense policeman, Lt. Walter Jackson, gives a class on how to say no to drugs.

A two-week course is set up at 13 sites in the United States to train civilian and military policeman to become DARE officers.

The program directors are serious about who they choose to become DARE officers, according to Burton.

"While I was at the course, five people were sent back (to their units) because (the directors) felt they weren't committed

Society of Military Enineers awards college scholarships

By Alice Howard
Directorate of Engineering and Housing

The Fort Benning Chapter of the Society of Military Engineers has awarded two $600 scholarships.

The scholarships went to Tanya Jackson, Shiloh, Ga., and Freda Washington, Tuskegee, Ala.

Jackson graduated from Central High School in Talbot County where she was president of her class, vice president of the student government, cheerleader, coeditor of the yearbook and top graduate in her class.

She is a freshman at Tuskegee University, majoring in electrical engineering.

Washington is a sophomore at Tuskegee University, majoring in electrical engineering and participating in the ROTC program.

While in high school, she was valedictorian at Tuskegee High School. She plans a career in the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers upon graduation.

Selection of scholarship recipients is based on academics and economic need.

The recipients must be majoring in an engineering field and attending a college within a 100-mile radius of Fort Benning.

Award

the unit went through to win the award.

The first step is a packet sent to Department of the Army "selling" the unit.

Once DA determines which unit looks the best on paper, they send a team to inspect the units chosen.

He said before the packet was sent forth, the unit didn't do anything different to prepare for the annual competition.

However, once the unit discovered it was to be inspected, some extra hours were put in.

"The inspectors spent four days here looking over every aspect of our organization," he said. "This included readiness, cost savings and innovative execution."

Finch said, in the readiness area, the inspectors look at how many vehicles are serviceable at that time.

Cost savings includes how the funds are used and innovative execution includes ideas used to make jobs easier.

It can't be easy maintaining every Bradley on post, but that's what the battalion does.

1st Sgt. Grover Marshall said the fact that the unit does maintain every Bradley on post is why it is so special that the unit was given the award.

"Most units in our category have one third less vehicles than we do, and they don't use theirs half as much as we do," he said.

"Winning this award in spite of that shows what a good job the people in this battalion do."

DARE

enough to the program, Burton said.

Although DARE's overall objective is the same for all school children, a more advanced curriculum is used for fifth- and sixth-graders.

For them, the program is organized into 17 classroom sessions. The children are taught a variety of lessons using question and answer sessions, group discussion and role-playing.

Among some of the topics taught are drug use and misuse, peer pressures and decision making and risk taking.

One of the lessons includes resistance techniques. The children learn how to say no to their peers in different situations.

They practice these techniques by role playing with their peers.

According to Beth Middlemiss, director of staff development for the schools, the role playing allows children to prepare themselves for situations in which they may someday find themselves.

"It is going to be a lot easier for them to say 'no' if they have actually said it a few times," she said.

Both Jackson and Burton cited examples of former students of the program who had to use their resistance techniques.

"One kid had been approached by another in his neighborhood and offered drugs. He said he used one of the ways he learned in DARE to say no to him," Jackson said.

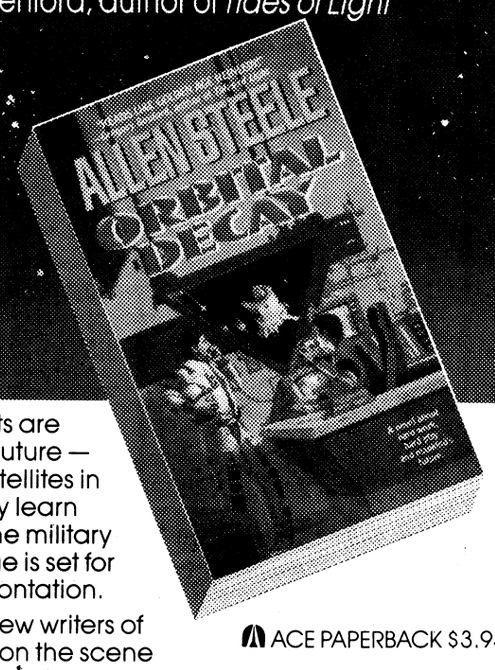
Because peer pressure is so great, there is also a lesson that involves bringing in 11th- and 12th-grade students to talk to the children about peer pressure in high school.

"This was one of the best exercises last year," said Olin Harp, Faith Middle School principal.

"Two groups from the high school came," Harp said. It was very effective because many of the kids here knew the (high schoolers), so what they said really made a difference. The program has been very successful."

Children in lower grades are given four to five sessions that emphasize personal safety, drug safety, learning to say no and building self-esteem.

"We teach them that everyone is special and needs to feel special," Burton said. "Someone who feels good about himself won't need to do drugs."



At the end of the program, the children are given a verbal quiz about what they have learned.

"I was very surprised to see how much the kids had really paid attention," Jackson said.

"They are going home and telling their brothers and sisters, cousins and friends what they are learning," Burton said.

Fort Benning children are becoming the crusaders who will carry on the never ending battle against an insidious enemy — drugs.

Officers find their way in land nav course

Infantry Officer Basic Course

Company C, 2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment Infantry Officer Basic Course class number 1-90 conducted land navigation exercises Oct. 23 to 27.

The newly commissioned officers received classroom instruction prior to negotiating the actual graded course.

"We were taught by Infantry School instructors in the basics of map reading, to include terrain association, intersection/resection problems, terrain features and the use of the M-2 lensatic compass, said 2nd Lt. Timothy J. Schultz, public relations officer, Co. C, 2nd Bn., 11th Inf. Regt.

"It's a very important leadership skill to have the ability to read and understand how to use a map," he said.

The officers of Co. C conducted a pretest of both the day and night courses to give additional training prior to the actual test.

"Thus, we were prepared to tackle the course, to do the best job that could be done," Schultz said.

"The motivation and the can do attitude had settled in," Schultz said. "Co. C was ready to navigate its mission to successfully complete the land navigation course."

When the results were finalized, Co. C had done better during the night phase than the day phase.

The good weather played an important role in the overall success of the mission, according to Schultz. He said the training was demanding both mentally and physically, but it wasn't over yet.

Each platoon established defensive positions and learned how to construct M-16 and M-60 fighting positions.

"Now through all the hard work, we have passed a prerequisite of a military leader to maintain proficiency in Land Navigation skills — shoot, move, communicate," Schultz said.

Lieutenants overcome physical obstacles with mind over matter

By Bradley D. Bouldin
2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry

Infantry Officer Basic Course students from Company B, 2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry conducted an overnight exercise followed by an 8.2-mile road march and a live-fire exercise at Ferguson Range Oct. 10 through 13.

The company was divided into two sections for the exercise. Section one took the students to the field Oct. 13.

On the first day, the students developed a defensive plan and began digging in and preparing for night reconnaissance patrols.

During the night, opposing forces from 197th Infantry Brigade probed the defensive position, and that portion of the exercise culminated in a predawn mechanized attack.

Section two of the field problem entailed an 8.2-mile road march to Ferguson Range.

As pack straps dug into shoulders and feet ached, the lieutenants were rudely reminded that the ability to continue under adverse conditions is often more a matter of mental toughness rather than mere physical ability.

Upon reaching Ferguson Range, the students conducted a live-fire defensive exercise consisting of a Relief In Place followed by an "attack" on the breastworks.

By then, the lieutenants of class 10-89 were tired but many lessons that simply cannot be learned in the classroom were driven home in the field.

MARTIN CARE

By Jeanne Dickerson
Martin Army Community Hospital

Sunday through Nov. 11 is set aside by the American Hospital Association as the time to give recognition to radiologic technologists — professionals who play an important role in health care.

The "techs," as they are usually called, see more patients in any one day than many doctors or nurses on a ward.

They only spend a few minutes with each patient and, consequently, are not usually remembered or complimented as frequently as the more visible providers, according to the radiology floor supervisor, Staff Sgt. Crystal Pollard.

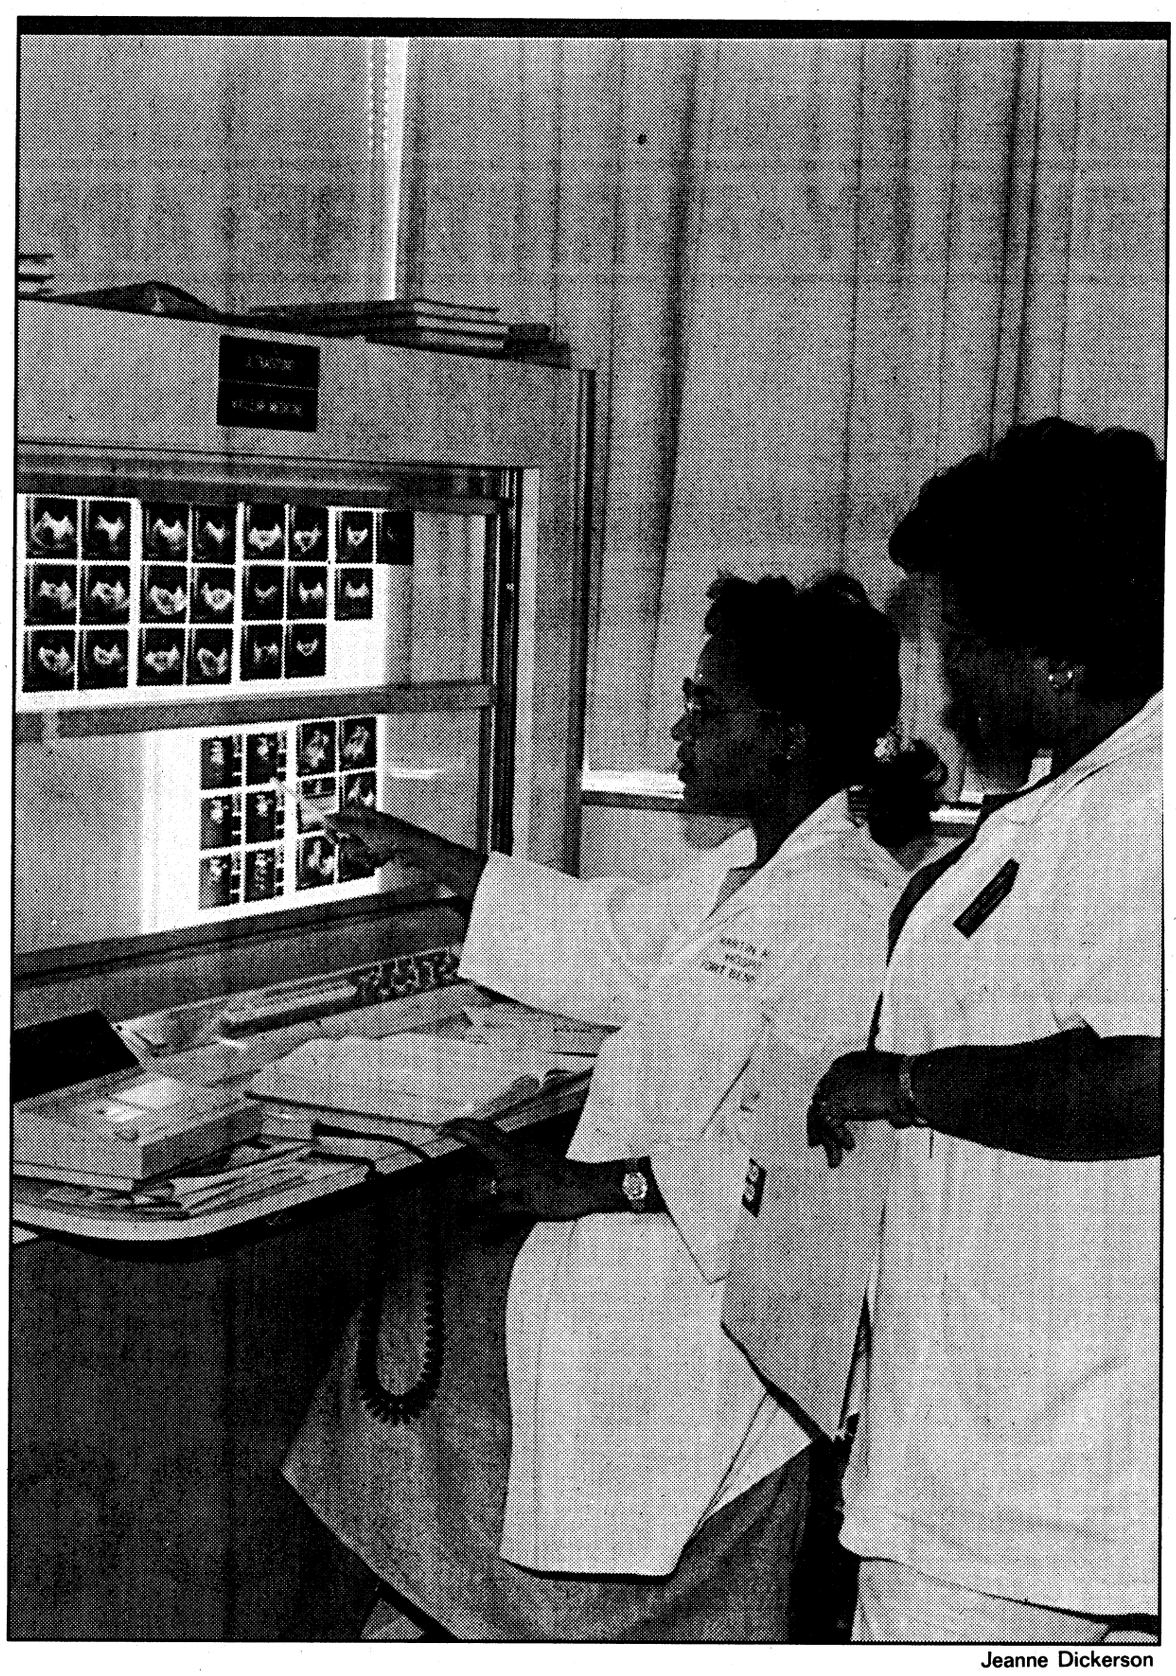
"This is because they are valuable members of the health care team. Without their skills, the diagnosis of many illnesses and disease processes would be much more difficult," Pollard said.

X-rays were first discovered in 1895 by professor Wilhelm Conrad Roentgen, a physicist in Germany.

In the early days of this specialty, the radiologists personally attended to every detail of performing X-rays.

As X-rays became more widely used, it became obvious that radiologists needed trained personnel to assist, freeing them to perform special procedures and to read the films taken by technologists.

Today, the quality of service rendered depends largely on the skill of the techs.



The Radiology Department at Martin Army Community Hospital has six rooms, three of which are dedicated to special procedures.

The remaining three are used for patients requiring X-rays of the head, neck, abdomen and extremities.

The other three are used from 8:30 to 10:30 a.m. and 1 to 3:30 p.m. for barium studies, arthrograms, intravenous pyelograms and other special studies requiring a radiologist.

MACH's Radiology Department sees an average of 250 patients daily, some of whom require multiple views.

While about 75 of these are for special examinations, the remaining 175 are for routine X-rays, which are read by radiologists.

Jeanne Dickerson

Dr. Sandra Willis points out something out of the ordinary on an x-ray film to Miriam Jackson, ultrasound technician.

If you need routine X-rays, you can shorten your waiting time by going between 10:30 a.m. and 1 p.m. or 3:30 and 4 p.m., when there are six rooms available.

At the present time, MACH is unable to perform Nuclear Medicine studies due to the lack of a qualified technologist.

MACH has a state of the art CT scanner (computerized axial tomography) and do an average of 10 to 15 studies daily.

If you come in for X-rays this week, let your tech know that you are aware of his contribution to health care.

Fireplace heat may go up in smoke

By Tina Cook
Energy Branch

With football season underway and many of us enjoying those wonderful "armchair Sundays," it's time to start thinking about cooler weather and steps we can take to ensure warmth and comfort in our homes.

Many Benning residents may use their fireplaces as a source of heat.

If this is the case, they should be aware of potential dangers, and take the necessary precautions to ensure a safe fire.

Getting ready for the first fire of the season requires a little preparation.

Check the chimney for excess dirt or creosote. Creosote is an unavoidable by-product of burning wood that clings to chimney walls. A good chimney sweep might be the solution.

Check for birds' nests, leaves and Frisbees that have gone astray.

It is important to remember that warmth from a fire generally does not radiate through the house. To retain the heat generated by the fireplace, close off the room.

If the furnace is on, a considerable amount of heated air from the rest of the house flows into the fireplace and goes wastefully up the chimney.

When this happens, the temperature in other rooms goes down and the furnace has to use more fuel rather than less.

The best thing to do to take advantage of the heat of a fireplace, is to lower the furnace's thermostat setting to 55 degrees.

Some warm air will be lost, but the furnace won't have to use as much fuel to heat the rest of the house.

Fireplace dampers should be closed when not in use to prevent heated air from escaping up the chimney. An open damper can allow as much as 8 percent of the heat generated by your furnace to slip away.

In the summer, dampers should be closed to prevent cooled air from escaping, as well.

After accomplishing the necessary preparations for the safe use of the fireplace, it's time to sit back and enjoy the benefits of a warm and comfortable fire.

For information on any energy-related subject, call 545-4652 or 545-SWAT.

Update on fitness uniform

Army News Service

Recent rules on how soldiers must possess and account for the physical fitness uniform are being phased in over a four-year period.

The earliest policy change consists of the physical fitness uniform's being transferred from its original management as an organization-issue item to a clothing-bag item, explained Master Sgt. Kathleen M. Harvey.

That changeover took effect Oct. 1, and newly enlisted soldiers will receive the uniform from clothing issue points, Harvey said from her office with the Army's personnel chief at the Pentagon. "A year later — Oct. 1, 1990 — all soldiers in the active component will have to possess one T-shirt and one pair of trunks. Then, by Oct. 1, 1991, they'll be required to own a second T-shirt, a second pair of trunks, one sweatshirt and one pair of sweatpants."

She went on to say that soldiers in the U.S. Army Reserve are required to possess, by Sept. 30, 1992, the first T-shirt and first pair of trunks. Thereafter, by Sept. 30, 1993, the USAR soldiers will have to possess the second T-shirt and second pair of trunks, plus one sweatshirt and one pair of sweatpants.

Possession dates for soldiers in the Army National Guard are expected to be announced shortly.

Harvey noted that current policy allows for soldiers to possess the uniform's facsimile offered by military clothing sales stores in place of the issue uniform.

"Commanders may not require their soldiers to buy the look-alike version," Harvey said. "And commanders may continue to allow physical training to be conducted in utility uniforms or in individually purchased athletic uniforms until Sept. 30, 1991," she said.

The uniform's style (including color and logo) remains the same as the grey organizational uniform.

The policy on uniform wear published in AR 670-1 is being updated accordingly, she concluded.

By Willie Hay
197th Infantry Bde

The Cannoneers of the 197th Infantry Brigade's field artillery battalion proved they could "shoot, move, communicate" — and more — with the best artillerymen in the Army during a standardized external evaluation Oct. 15 through 18 at Fort Benning.

"The old phrase 'shoot, move, communicate' is still a good description of what we do," said Capt. Rex Davis, fire direction officer for the 4th Battalion, 41st Field Artillery.

"Once we complete a fire mission, we have to move to a new position and establish communications before we shoot again," he said.

"If we stayed in the same place, we would be vulnerable to counterattack by the enemy."

According to Davis, the battalion received a nearly perfect rating from an evaluation team from the 24th Infantry Division Artillery, Fort Stewart, Ga., along with members of the 197th, who rated them in nuclear, biological and chemical warfare; mass casualty evacuation; and other operational tasks.

"Gunnery tasks — putting steel on target — are our bread and butter, but we did more than that in this SEE," Davis said. "The evaluators from Fort Stewart were amazed because gunnery tasks are the only ones that must be performed.

"We went a couple of steps further by bringing in NBC play, engineer support and passing intelligence reports over the brigade operations and intelligence net," he continued.

"At one time, we had one battery firing in MOPP 4, another conducting mass casualty evacuation during a fire mission and a third digging in to increase its chances of survival under battlefield conditions," Davis said.

Davis compared the digging-in operation to infantrymen fighting from foxholes, except that, in this case, the soldiers didn't have to dig their own holes.

Instead, the engineers of the 197th bulldozed holes large enough for the artillerymen to drive their howitzers into.

"This enabled us to fire the howitzers from an almost underground position," he said. "Getting that type of protection from incoming artillery is something we would like to have in combat, but we rarely have the opportunity to simulate in a training situation."

Changing weather provided realism of another sort during the evaluation when warm temperatures and sunshine gave way to autumn chill and driving rain.

"The weather affects not only troop morale, which remained high throughout the SEE, but also how we get our rounds on target," Davis explained.

"Artillery fire is an exact science where wind direction, air density and other factors determine how the round spins as it travels downrange.

"We fly what's called a 'MET' that delivers weather reports on different levels of the atmosphere to our howitzer section computer, and we try to get weather readings every four hours to keep our information current," he continued.

"The track commander and his crew also rely on enemy target locations from teams on the ground and from readings on our new ground vehicular locator laser designator that pinpoints the exact location of hostile artillery."

However, no technology could replace the human element — teamwork — in the field artillery equation, Davis said.

"Nine men make up the howitzer section, and each one has to perform his job to get the round downrange," he said. "While the gunner is laying the tube for direction, the assistant gunner determines the quadrant, or elevation, one cannoneer cuts the powder charge, another fuzes the round, another carries it up to the tube and still another puts it into the tube as the chief keeps a close eye on the entire operation.

"The SEE provides a great opportunity for the teams because they get to practice with a live round and prove their team can get the job done," Davis said.

Each of the three batteries in the battalion has six howitzer sections and received about 24 fire missions during the evaluation, Davis said.

"We received a 100-percent satisfactory rating for all of our missions and the same rating on our nuclear capability to fire special weapons," he said.

"There was a lot of competition for best battery in the battalion, but ours was the best," said Pfc. Tracy Bunting, of Battery B, whose job as a member of the advance party is to accompany the battery commander and gunnery sergeant to reconnoiter and secure firing positions and take laser readings to the target.

"A good recon by the advance party is critical to the success of the fire mission," Bunting said.

"The SEE showed us our weaknesses and should make us a better team the next time we go out," said Spec. Joseph Ledet, assistant gunner.

According to Davis, the battalion SEE is the culmination of a series of tests that began earlier this year with a gunner's test for individual performance and continued with howitzer section and battery evaluations.

"Along with our annual rotation to the National Training Center, it provides one of our two major training events not only to train for combat, but also to prove we can meet the standard under an external evaluation," Davis said.

ASK THE JUDGE

Deborah B. Montgomery
Staff Judge Advocate's Office

Q. Before I enlisted in the U.S. Army, I attended college. While a student, I received a Guaranteed Student Loan.

Recently I received a letter stating that I had failed to make the monthly payments on the loan, and as a result, any tax refund that I would be entitled to receive would be collected in order to satisfy the debt.

I have never heard of this. Can this actually be done?

A. Yes, it is possible for your tax refund to be used to satisfy the debt.

As a way to reduce the number of debts owed to the federal government, the Debt Collection Act of 1982 was enacted.

The provisions of the DCA allow federal agencies three separate and distinct ways to collect a debt.

One way is by salary offset. This means that on a monthly basis, up to 15 percent of disposable pay can be deducted to pay past debts.

Disposable pay is that amount which remains after required deductions.

Another way is through administrative offset. Money paid to an individual by the U.S. government may be taken to satisfy any debt that person owes the United States.

All amounts that the government pays to an individual may be subject to offset.

This includes basic allowance for quarters and other payments not generally included in the definition of "salary."

The tax refund offset you mentioned is another way to collect a debt owed to the federal government.

With this method of collection, your tax refund could be used to pay the debt owed to the federal agency.

When you received the loan from the college, a federal agency guaranteed repayment.

When you failed to pay the loan, the agency was required to pay off the loan.

That federal agency is now seeking payment from you.

Before an agency submits an account to the Internal Revenue Service for offset, certain requirements should be followed.

You should receive a notice detailing what your rights are.

If you neglect to respond to the notice, your tax refund may be used to pay the debt.

Once the refund is taken, it is generally too late to complain.

As you may be aware, failure to pay your debts could cause other problems as well. The information could be included in your credit report.

Whether or not the government agency uses the salary, administrative, or the tax refund set-off, depends on many factors.

If you are unsure whether the remedy used by the agency is correct, or if you have questions regarding your rights or the procedure that was followed by the agency, contact our office and schedule an appointment.

Uninflated balloons present suffocation hazard

Army News Service

The U.S. Consumer Product Safety Commission warns parents and guardians of young children about the suffocation hazard of uninflated balloons or pieces of burst ones.

Of all the toys children play with, balloons represent the leading cause of suffocation deaths.

Since 1973 more than 110 children have died from suffocating on uninflated balloons or pieces of them.

Most of the victims were under age 6, but the commission does know of several older children who have suffocated on balloons.

Accidents involving balloons tend to occur in two ways. Some children have sucked uninflated balloons into their mouths, often while trying to inflate them.

This can happen when a child who's blowing up a balloon inhales or takes a breath to prepare for the next blow and draws the balloon back into the mouth and throat.

Some deaths may have resulted when children swallowed uninflated balloons they were sucking or chewing on.

The commission knows of one case in which a child was chewing on an uninflated balloon when she fell from a swing. The child hit the ground and, in a reflex action, inhaled sharply. She suffocated on the balloon.

The second kind of accident involves balloon pieces.

Children have drawn pieces of broken balloons they were playing with into their throats.

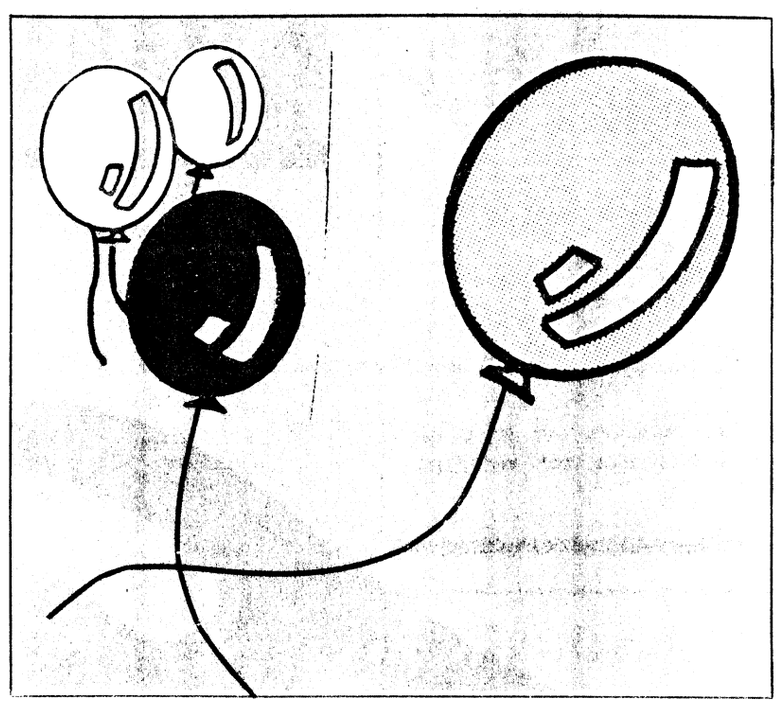
If a balloon bursts and is not thrown away, for example, some children may continue to play with it, chewing on pieces of the balloon or trying to stretch it across their mouths to suck on or to blow bubbles in it.

These balloon pieces are easily sucked into the windpipe.

Balloons, by their very nature, are made to hold air inside and to prevent any air from passing through.

Should a balloon or a piece of one be drawn into the windpipe, it'll be just as effective in preventing the passage of air into the lungs.

Furthermore, balloons easily mold to the throat's contours and adhere. An uninflated balloon or piece of one can completely cover and block the breathing passage.



Because of the danger of suffocation, the CPSC recommends parents and guardians not allow children under the age of 6 to play with uninflated balloons without supervision.

The commission does not believe that a completely inflated balloon presents a hazard to young children. If the balloon breaks, however, it recommends parents immediately collect the pieces of the burst balloon and dispose of them out of the reach of young children.

The Toy Manufacturers of America have taken the initiative by asking manufacturers and importers to put a safety warning message on balloon packages.

Consumers should look for, read and adhere the message when buying balloons.

Children develop a false sense of security when allowed to play in housing area streets

Infantry Branch Safety Office

The safety of the children in the housing areas requires our serious concern.

The most hazardous situation is children playing in the streets.

This a two-pronged hazard. First, it is an immediate danger to the child playing in a street, and to the driver of a vehicle who attempts to dodge a child playing in the street, and strikes another car, fixed object or even another person.

The second threat is the false sense of security that the child develops by being permitted to run and play in the streets under the more protective speed limits and other traffic controls present at Fort Benning.

Countermeasures for that double hazard must also be two-pronged.

First, parents must aggressively educate and train their children to stay off the streets, except when crossing them or entering/exiting a vehicle parked on a street.

Second, vehicle operators must conform to speed limits and other traffic controls and always be alert to the possibility of a child chasing a ball into the street, chasing another child across the street, running out from behind a parked car, or any of the other child like acts that may put the child in the path of a moving vehicle.

The bottom line is to preserve the lives of our children.

That will require drivers' constant awareness of children to avoid tragedy, and efforts by parents to teach their children of the dangerous of playing in the street.

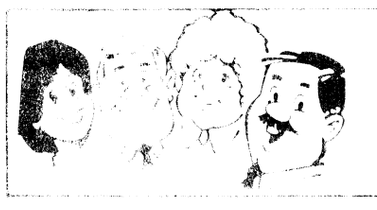
The military police assist in this effort. However, their coverage of the residential areas is limited.

The basic responsibility lies with parents and vehicle drivers.

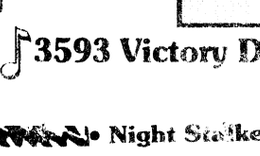
Access to ranges restricted

Infantry Branch Safety Office

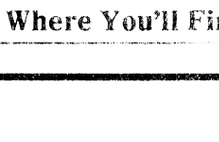
Except when authorized to be on the ranges and impact areas, entry to these areas is illegal and dangerous.



Parents are advised to warn their children that they are not to enter these areas, ever.



Serious injury from exploding duds has occurred in the past and is an ever present hazard.



Unauthorized entry into an impact area could result in being trapped in a fatal barrage of fire.

Army Field Band, Soldiers' Chorus bring house down

By John Robinson
Bayonet staff writer

The internationally famous U.S. Army Field Band and Soldiers' Chorus, of Washington, D.C., performed Oct. 25 to a capacity audience at the Columbus College Fine Arts Hall.

Sponsored by the Columbus Ledger-Enquirer and presented to the public free of charge, the "official touring musical representatives of the U.S. Army" brought down the house with a repertoire of numbers ranging from classical to contemporary.

Opening with the Patriotic Prologue, featuring the narration of Master Sgt. Orvel H. Lee, the band set the tone for the evening.

On a classical note, the band included works by both Shostakovich and Mozart.

The latter featured a performance by french horn soloist Staff Sgt. Elizabeth F. Halloin.

The lighter side of the program saw "Irving Berlin: A Vaudeville Salute," and for the young at heart, "Indiana Jones and the Temple of Doom."

After a brief intermission, the audience was treated to the varying talents of The Soldiers' Chorus.

"The Music Man," featuring a barbershop quartet, as well as the vocals of Sgt. Maj. Lance H. Sweigart was matched only by its successive number, the stirring "National Emblem."

As a special treat, retired Col. Hal J. Gibson, the former commander of the U.S. Army Field Band and now director of bands at Columbus College, was presented as the guest conductor for "National Emblem."

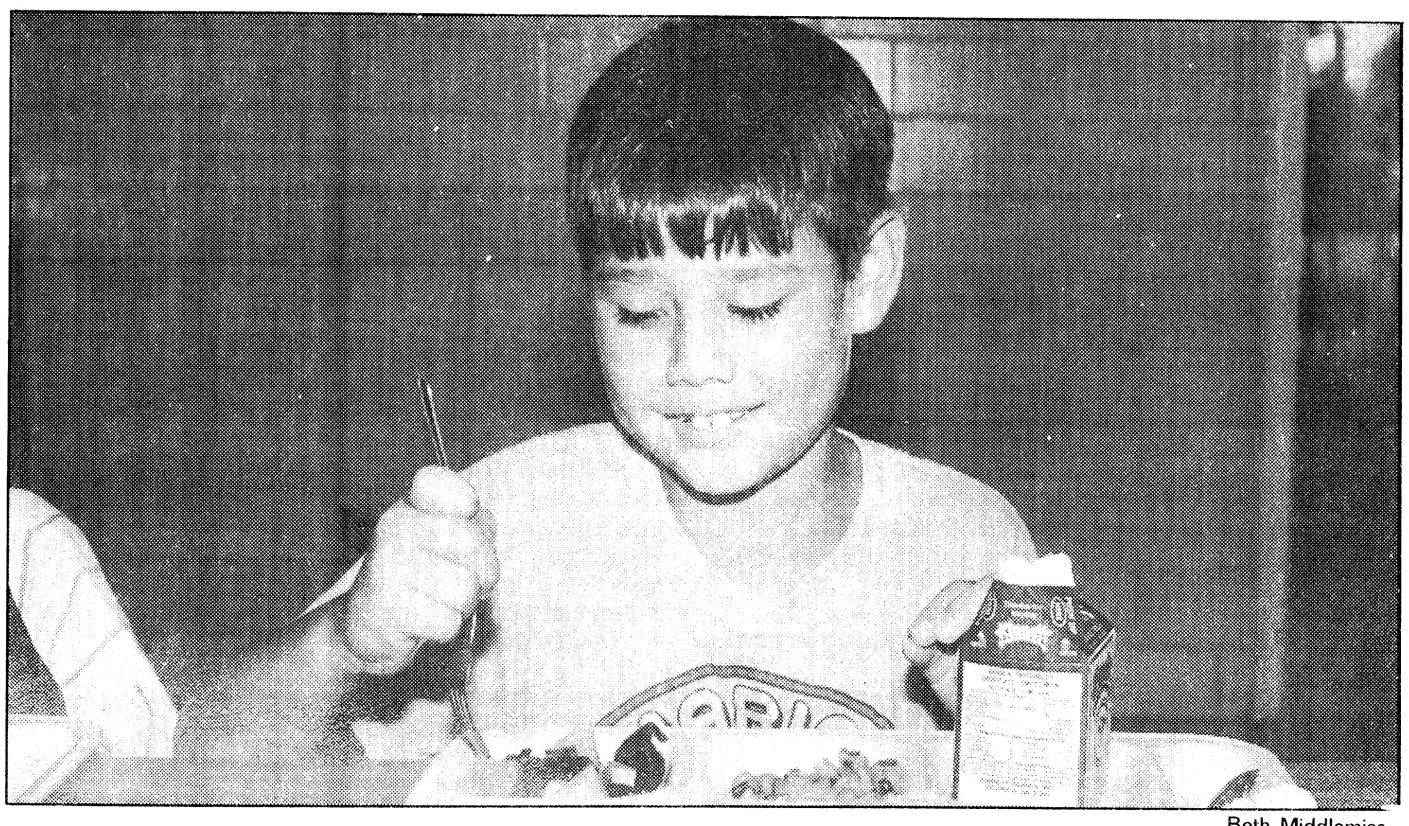
Concluding with "Armed Forces Medley" and "The Stars and Stripes Forever," the band received thunderous applause from the audience.

Known as the "Musical Ambassadors of the Army," the Field Band travels thousands of miles each year on at least two major concert tours and is considered by music critics to be one of the most distinctive musical organizations now appearing before the public.

All concert tours are conducted at the discretion of the Secretary of the Army, and performances are open to the general public, free of charge.

Many of the Field Band's soldier-musicians have studied at the country's leading conservatories and schools of music; many have performed with major symphonies and leading dance orchestras before entering the service.

The Soldiers' Chorus, an integral part of the band, is made up of 29 highly-trained vocalists under the direction of Capt. Robert A. McCormick of Brentwood, N.Y.



Adding to the uniqueness of the performance was the appearance of the bandsmen attired in distinctive Army dress blue uniform.

Though in striking contrast to the dress of the soldier in combat, the blue uniform has a tradition dating back to the early 1800s, when it was worn by the officers and men of the then young U.S. Army.

As a token of appreciation from both the post and the community, Fort Benning commander, Maj. Gen. Michael F. Spigelmire, presented band commander and conductor, Col. William E. Clark, an authentic U.S. Army Infantry coin.

Beth Middlemiss

Billy Mims, Wilson School third-grader, is one of many Benning students who regularly enjoys the fruits offered as part of his school lunch.

Schools provide nutritious lunches

Fort Benning Schools

Ninety percent of Fort Benning students eat the school lunch each day.

School lunches in the Fort Benning schools are designed to provide a variety of nutritious foods every day.

The school lunch program is also designed to help children develop healthy eating habits in and away from school.

Menus are planned to meet one-third of the student's daily nutritional needs. These menus are planned according to standards set by Georgia's State Department of Education Child Nutrition programs.

Fort Benning's cafeteria staffs focus on reducing the amount of sugar, salt and fat in meals and on increasing the amount of fiber.

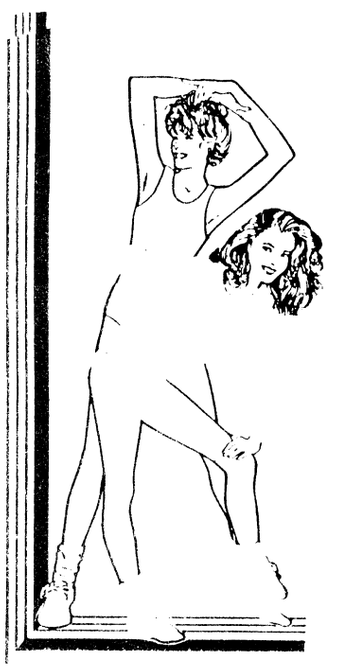
When cakes and cookies are prepared, fresh and frozen fruit are added to reduce the sugar content.

Fresh fruit is often served as a dessert. In fact, students have the option to choose fruit as a dessert every day. If ice cream is offered as a dessert, the cafeterias serve an ice fruit bar, containing 100 percent fruit juice.

When vegetables and soups are prepared, they are seasoned with spices, garlic powder, basil, oregano, fresh onions, lemon and parsley. This makes the food tasty without using salt.

The Fort Benning Food Service staff is very conscious of fat content of foods. They only purchase lean meat and trim all fat possible from meat products. Vegetable oil is used when cooking oil is required.

Lunchtime also serves as a learning environment for Fort Benning students. Students at each grade level become actively involved in planning school lunch menus at some time during each year.



These student menus provide students opportunities to plan nutritious meals for themselves and their classmates using a variety of foods that they enjoy.

For the last six years, Trudy Finley, Food Service director, and the Fort Benning Food Service staff have been commended by Auburn University for excellence in teaching nutrition to the six Auburn college students who have served as dietetic interns at Benning.

"We have a very dedicated School Food Service staff that helps teachers motivate children to learn strong nutritional habits," said Finley.

"The Fort Benning School Food Service employees are constantly seeking ways to enhance the Food Service programs," she said.

"Parents are always invited to join us for lunch. All that we ask is that they call the principal to reserve a lunch on the day that they would like to come," she said.

Woman receives civilian award

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

A former member of the International Student Training Detachment was honored by the Fort Benning and Columbus-Phenix City communities for her contributions.

Charlotte Osterburg, who retired from ISTD after serving 15 years as the program officer for the allied students was given the Meritorious Civilian Service Award during the ceremony.

Charlotte Osterburg

The award was presented by Maj. Gen. Michael F. Spigelmire, post commanding general.

The presentation was just the beginning of the ceremony, which included a variety of mementos given to Osterburg by individuals and units, including Columbus Mayor James Jernigan.

Osterburg instituting the civilian sponsorship program.

The program matches up civilian and military sponsors with allied students from more than 100 countries.

The purpose of the sponsorship program is to welcome international military students to Fort Benning and make their cultural transition a smooth one.

Although Osterburg is no longer a member of the ISTD, she said she will continue to sponsor students.

Parents, students learn together

Fort Benning Schools

A learning opportunity is now available for Faith School parents and sponsors to share with middle school students.

Faith School is initiating Parent/Student Night each Tuesday in the computer room from 6:30 to 8:30 p.m.

On these evenings, students will learn a variety of subjects as parents and students use Apple IIE and Apple IIGS computers.

Computer experience is not necessary for parent participation.

In fact, it does not matter whether the parent has ever touched a computer before.

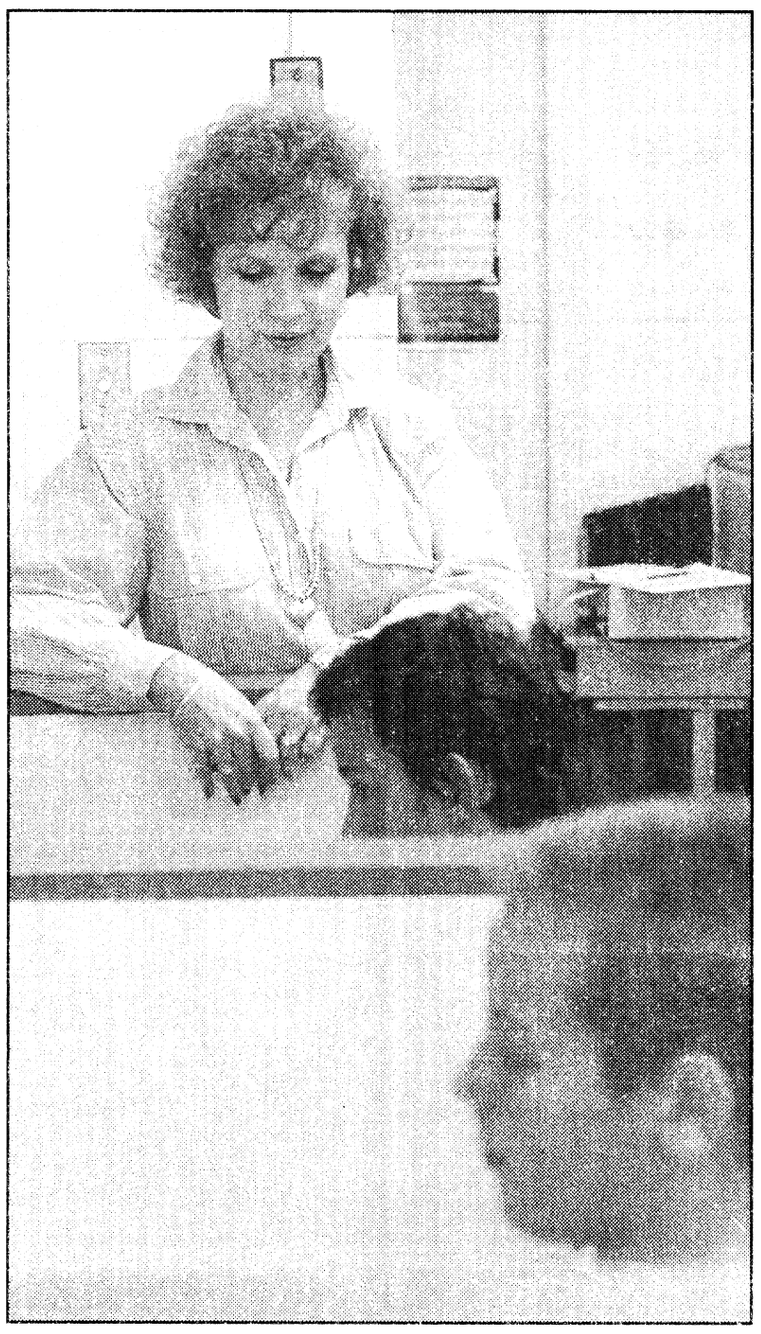
Diane Hilt, Faith School computer instructor, will be on hand each Tuesday evening to work with parent/student teams on school-related subject matter.

Perhaps the student would like to work algebraic equations, solve some long division problems, learn some geographic terms or compose an essay; Hilt has programs in the computer lab to do these and much more.

Perhaps students and parents just want to learn more about the operation of the computer or simple word processing. These are also possible.

From the most simple to the most sophisticated, there are a wealth of opportunities for students and adults working together.

Parent/student teams can come once or as often as they like to participate in Parent/Student night. The only requirements for participation are as follows:



- Each student must be accompanied by a parent. Both parents can attend if they wish to.
- Only Faith students are eligible.
- A reservation must be made for each session either by phone or by note.
- Reservations are accepted up through the day of the session.

The session is for parents, sponsors and Faith students only. No baby-sitting services for other children in the family are provided.

Benning schools and parents are partners working together to prepare students for the future. Instructional opportunities have changed since most middle school parents were in school.

Parent/student computer nights will help parents acquire a knowledge of computers, as well as a knowledge of the learning opportunities that computers provide.

These nights together at Faith School will also provide interesting, enjoyable learning experiences for both the parent and the child.

TQM eliminates needless work and waste

By Jan Chervenak
Total Quality Management

Needless work and waste is being eliminated.

This is being accomplished through a new approach to doing business that can best be summed up in the simple phrase — do it right the first time, every time. This is the goal of Total Quality Management.

Total Quality Management is an approach to doing business based on the premise that as quality improves, productivity increases and cost decreases.

TQM is dedicated to controlling quality during the process of production, instead of inspecting quality after the fact.

This concept is customer-focused, looks at the long term and emphasizes continuous improvement in work processes.

This no-nonsense approach to doing business has made Fort Benning the winner of the SPIRIT Award two years running. It is this mindset that can make Fort Benning a leader in Army Communities of Excellence.

Most people know from their experiences as customers, quality is serious business. No one like to be on the "short end of the quality stick."

In any business, costs are driven by waste, scrap and rework. Whether we work in an office, shop or in the field training troops, producing quality means "doing it right — the first time — every time."

If you see something that you think is not being done right, say something. Take steps to make changes.

If you don't take this attitude and stick to it, everyone gets to set his own standards, and the last person in line determines what gets out the door.

Telephone scam involves credit card

Army News Service

It seems there's a new credit scam cropping up daily.

The latest telemarketing fraud works this way: A caller tells you you've won a prize, then asks for your credit card number so charges may be made for the sales tax, or whatever. The newest credit-rating hoax finds "credit doctors" stealing data from computerized files of people with good credit records, and for a fee of between $500 to $1,500, they sell the information to people with the same names but bad credit. Along with your credit history, pilferers have access to your Social Security number, job and salary history and credit account numbers.

Regardless of the manner, victims find unexplained charges on their credit-card bills.

Because of this, you should protect yourself by not giving out your credit card account number over the telephone unless you're absolutely sure the caller is legitimate.

Some experts suggest also that you examine your file at your local credit bureau at least once a year — sooner, if you suspect there's a problem. By law, you have the right to do this and to have the erroneous information in your credit record corrected.

If, despite all precautions, you should discover an unauthorized charge on your charge-card bill, call or visit your local legal assistance office. Most likely, you'll be advised to contact the merchant and explain that you didn't buy the goods. Then, you'll have to contact the credit-card issuer.

Remember, for your own protection, examine your credit-card bills carefully as soon as you get them. Time may prove to be your best defense.

New award to recognize customer service

Army News Service

Army people who excel in serving their customers at installations throughout the Army have a new means by which to be recognized for that service.

Called "Department of the Army Certificate of Customer Service Excellence," the new award covers four categories of eligible personnel: appropriated-fund employees, non-appropriated-fund employees, volunteer staffs and soldiers in service-oriented functions.

Lt. Col. Bruce Greenfield explained, "We here in the Army Communities of Excellence Office realize that the criteria for this award are best set by officials at the installation level," he said.

> "The key indicators include attitude, courtesy, helpfulness and promptness."
>
> — Lt. Col. Bruce Greenfield

He went on to define "customer" as "anyone seeking and/or requiring assistance at a particular moment and/or place."

In considering a candidate for the certificate, nominators should focus on service found to exceed levels normally expected by the customer, he added.

"The key indicators include attitude, courtesy, helpfulness and promptness. While sustained customer-service excellence is most noteworthy, a single customer service initiative of extraordinary merit also qualifies," he said.

Greenfield continued, "There's no bureaucratic hassle associated with the award.

"Our office will not second-guess installations. So we require no justification statements or headquarters panel reviews of nominations — none of that stuff.

"It's as simple as just sending in the awardee's name and office identification.

"The certificate will go out immediately. All we ask is that the certificate be presented by a leader or supervisor, and that it be displayed."

Prospective nominators may discuss details of the new award program directly with Greenfield at autovon 225-7815.

Flag runners set to begin week-long trek for veterans

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Six soldiers and one civilian are among 11 runners who will begin the 850-mile American Flag Run Saturday.

The 24-hour-a-day trek, which honors veterans, begins at 4 p.m. at the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier in Arlington, Va.

Runners carrying an American flag are scheduled to cross four states, loop into Phenix City, Ala., and arrive in Columbus Nov. 10.

The runners from Fort Benning are: Thomas Brophy, Company B, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry; Lise Cote, a physician at Martin Army Community Hospital; Ann Marie McDonald, a staff writer for the Bayonet; Juan Padilla, Co. B, 1st Bn., 11th Inf.; Richard Schick, a physician's assistant at Troop Medical Clinic #6; Herb Segal, commander, MACH; and Ron Gorday, a supervisory education specialist, Directorate of Training and Doctrine.

Other runners include Jim Accordino of Total Systems, John M. Henderson, a physician at Hughston Sports Medicine Hospital, Marty Steele of the Columbus Mudcats and Jim Musselman, a maintenance engineer with Woodruff Management.

The run will go through the capitals of Washington, D.C.; Richmond, Va.; Raleigh, N.C.; Columbia, S.C.; and Atlanta, Ga.

"We have two teams," said Gorday, who is also a retired military officer.

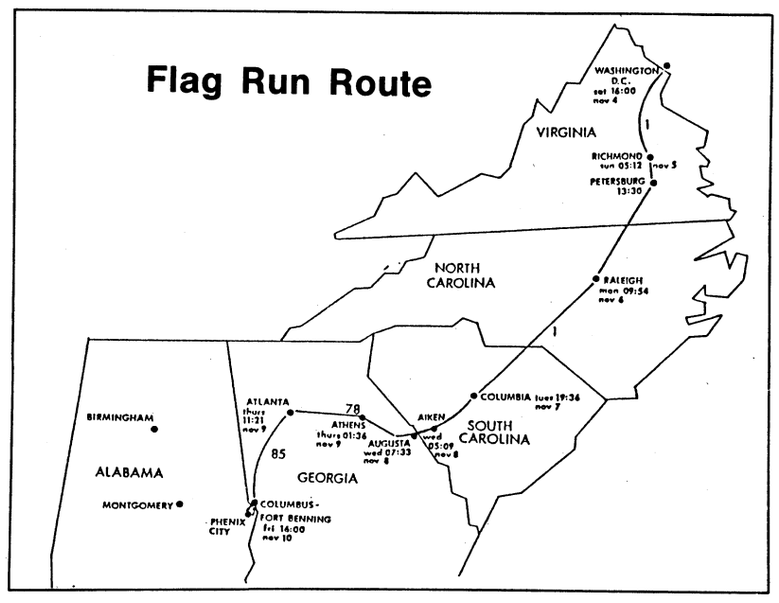
Gorday is captain of his team and said the teams will alternate 50-mile legs.

"Since the runners will divide the 50 miles among themselves, each person will cover several miles per day," he said. "When one team completes a leg, the other team will take the flag and run."

Gorday said once the run begins, the flag, which each participant will carry while running, will not be put down until the runners reach their destination in Columbus.

"We are honoring veterans who have served this country," said Accordino.

"Through their sacrifices, we have the freedom that affords us one of the best lifestyles in the world," he said.



Today at 3:45 p.m. at the Ironworks Convention and Trade Center, Fort Benning's Commanding General Maj. Gen. Michael F. Spigelmire, Columbus Mayor James Jernigan and Phenix City Mayor Sonny Coulter will officially send the teams on their way to Washington, D.C.

The runners will return to the Columbus-Phenix City area Nov. 10 and finish the final one-mile leg of the week-long trek, with Benning's commander, Spigelmire, carrying the flag.

The public is invited to run the final one-mile leg, according to Joe Smith, assistant chairman of the run.

It will begin at 3:30 p.m. Nov. 10 in Phenix City in the First Alabama Bank parking lot on Broad Street and end at the Ironworks Convention and Trade Center in Columbus.

"Anyone who wants to enter the one-mile welcome run can just show up at the site and pay a $1 entry fee," Smith said.

Runners invited to Veterans Day 10K

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Runners are invited to a 10-kilometer race, which will be held Veterans Day, Nov. 11, in downtown Columbus.

The race begins at 8 a.m. in front of the Ironworks Convention and Trade Center.

Benning soldiers are especially invited to participate, according to Joe Smith of the Chattahoochee Valley Veterans Council. "We have sent entry forms to all major units on post, and soldiers may contact their unit sergeant majors for copies," he said.

The entry fee is $8 in advance and $10 the day of the race.

Entry forms are also available at all sports shops in Columbus Square Mall and Peachtree Mall.

The race is sponsored by the American Flag Run Association and the Chattahoochee Valley Arthritis Club.

Net proceeds from the race will benefit the local chapter of the Georgia Arthritis Foundation.

29th's 'Misfits' post flag football champs

John Robinson

4th Cavalry's Joseph "Big J" Roberts scampers down the sideline in game one of the post flag football championships.

By John Robinson
Bayonet staff writer

The "Misfits" of Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment captured the post flag football championship, 16-8, Oct. 16, on a game-winning catch by Ronald Penn with 42 seconds left in the contest.

Penn's catch broke an 8-8 tie that had threatened to send the game into sudden death.

The championship playoffs, held under the lights at Fort Benning's Doughboy Stadium, consisted of two games — one for third-place honors, and the other for the first- and second-place titles.

Game one featured 4th Cavalry in an 8-0 victory over 3rd Battalion, 32nd Infantry Regiment, earning them a respectable third-place trophy. It was a defensive battle to the finish.

4th Cav's Wayne Jefferies scored the game's only touchdown early in the first half, but "Cav" failed to capitalize with the ensuing two-point conversion.

Jefferies, who also had a key interception late in the game, was set up for the touchdown by a spectacular 30-yard catch by Joseph Roberts to put "Cav" in excellent field position.

4th Cav went on to shut down 3rd Bn., 32nd Inf. Regt.'s offense, and after scoring a safety late in the game, emerged with an 8-0 win.

Game two, between the HHC, 1st Bn., 29th Inf. Regt. Misfits and the Infantry Board's Terminators, started slowly, but ended in a nail-biter.

After a safety early in the game and a touchdown near the half, the Misfits led at the midway mark 8-0.

The Terminators' Nolan "Hollywood" Halliburton answered back in the second half with a touchdown to narrow the gap to 8-6.

Anthony Traham, who had an interception earlier in the game, added the two-point conversion to tie the game 8-8 with five minutes left on the clock.

After numerous foiled offensive plays by both sides, the Misfit's Anthony Hoffman swiped an interception late in the game that would prove to be the turning point.

Hoffman's interception paved the way for Penn's touchdown and two-point conversion with 42 seconds left on the game clock.

The Misfits ate up the last few seconds and emerged with a 16-8 victory.

Col. Barry Mahek, the deputy post commander, was on hand to present the winner's trophies.

"That was an excellent championship game by two excellent teams," said Mahek as he handed the first-place trophy to 1st Bn., 29th Inf. Regt.'s battalion commander Lt. Col. John Spears.

Capt. Michael Hale, company commander for HHC, 1st Bn., 29th Inf. Regt., said of the game that he had played in as well, "It was too close for me, I don't know if I could handle that kind of excitement again."

Hopefuls wrestle for spot in post championship

By John Robinson
Bayonet staff writer

Forty-three wrestling hopefuls weighed in Oct. 21 for Fort Benning's last preliminary wrestling tournament before the post championships.

The tournament was a round-robin, double-elimination format with the wrestlers scoring the most points having a "wrestle-down" to the last man in each weight class.

Although not an official competitive category, the "fastest pin" looked to have been wrapped up in the first round by Johnny Bilbay.

Bilbay, a basic trainee in Company D, 4th Battalion, 30th Infantry Regiment, pinned Steven Staggs of Company C, 1st Battalion, 507th Parachute Infantry Regiment in a mere 26 seconds.

The pin title was challenged, however, when Johnny Braden, also of Co. D, 4th Bn., 30th Inf. Regt., pinned his opponent in 16 seconds to end the second round.

As expected, Fort Benning's premier wrestler and assistant coach, Derrick Waldroup walked away with top honors.

Waldroup, a Chicagoan presently assigned to Headquarters Company, 29th Infantry Regiment, has already won numerous titles and awards.

To his credit, Waldroup can include being All-Army at least four times, a silver medal in the Pan-Am Games and Army Athlete of the Year for 1987.

A two-time defending national champion, Waldroup moved to the 198-pound class for the Fort Benning competition, although he normally wrestles in the 180.5-pound class on the U.S. team.

A fresh surprise came by way of Jerry Jackson who pinned three opponents in less than two minutes to capture the 220-pound weight class.

Jackson, just out of IOBC and presently with Co. C, 1st Bn., 507th PIR, is a two-time state champion, as well being a former college football Kodak All-American.

Thomas said Jackson could provide much-needed support to the team and hoped that Jackson could be permanently assigned to the post.

Also noteworthy was Sgt. Geogory Wilson of HHC, 2nd Bn., 11th Inf. Regt., who pinned four opponents to secure first place in the 180.5-pound class.

The participants came from all over post. Both permanent party and soldiers from basic, advanced individual training, airborne and infantry officers' basic course schools were represented.

Sgt. 1st Class Tony Thomas, head coach of the Fort Benning team and organizer of the wrestling tournament program, said he was more than pleased with the turnout. "I didn't expect that many," he said.

"We've (Fort Benning team) really come a long way over the past few years," Thomas said.

"Fort Gordon has been using basic trainees for three years, while we just got permission to use them this year."

Of the 10 weight classes allowed in the tournament, only seven were present in Saturday's event.

Missing were the 105.5-pound, 114.5-pound and heavyweight-class representatives.

However, Thomas said he did have a 105-pound wrestler, but since he had no competition, he had no need to show before the finals.

Awards for Saturday's matches were given as gold, silver and bronze medals. The winners of each weight class were as follows:

105.5-pound, uncontested.

114.5-pound, uncontested.

125.5-pound, Matt Hile, Co D, 4th Bn., 30th Inf. Regt.

136.5-pound, Michael Linday, HHC, 29th Inf. Regt.

149.5-pound, Charles Burkes, HHB, 4th Bn., 41st Fld. Arty.

163-pound, Rodney Smith, Co. D, 197th Spt. Bn.

180.5-pound, Geogory Wilson, HHC, 2nd Bn., 11th Inf. Regt.

198-pound, Derrick Waldroup, HHC, 29th Inf. Regt.

220-pound, Jerry Jackson, Co. C, 1st Bn., 507th PIR

Heavyweight, uncontested.

In the team standings, HHC, 29th Inf. Regt. leads with 24 points over a distant, three-way tie for second at 10 points each.

Practices and preparations are now under way for the post championship, which will be held Nov. 17 and 18 at Briant Wells Field House.

The tournament will follow the same elimination-type format.

The two-day schedule will be to accommodate the projected 80 wrestlers expected to show for the final event.

The winner in each individual weight class will advance to the Forces Command championship, which will be held Dec. 11 through 15 at Fort Hood, Texas.

Move yourself and save — Are you ETSing or PCSing in the near future? If you are and you are not afraid of work you could make a little money by moving yourself.

The Army will pay you instead of a commercial mover to do the work

Along with the Army reimbursing you and the prices on U-Haul equipment you can rent at the Equipment Checkout Center, you can make a little money. Besides the savings you will have the satisfaction of knowing that your belongings were handled the way you wanted, because you did it!

At the Equipment Checkout Center there is a very wide variety of U-Haul equipment, just about everything you need to move, except time and labor. Some of the equipment available is trailers, trucks, car top carriers, hitches, packing materials and more.

The trailers range in size from a 4 feet x 6 feet van trailer to a 6 by 12 foot open trailer. Trucks are available in several lengths, ranging from 14 to 26 feet. For packing materials you can purchase boxes, foam packing, bubble pack or rent packing blankets or tarps.

If you are just going on vacation and need extra space, then try a car top carrier. Need to tow a car? There are auto transporters available.

If you don't have a trailer hitch, they are also available. Plus you can purchase the wiring harness needed for hooking up lights and receive free installation of the harness. If you already have a hitch and wiring but it is different from the U-Haul's you can purchase a different hitch ball or wiring adapter.

Come to the Equipment Checkout Center at 1707 Gillespie (behind the car wash and laundromat, near the Mini Mall) or phone 545-7978/3504.

Prices will vary according to time and distance for which you require the rental. Call ahead and reserve your rental.

Folk Art Fair Saturday

By Christine Turner
Officers' Wives' Club

The annual Officers' Wives' Club Folk Art Fair will be held Saturday at Faith Middle School from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m.

A variety of vendors from the military and civilian communities will be featured at this year's fair, with many speciality foods available.

Admission to the Folk Art Fair is $1. Tickets for the quilt drawing cost $1 and are available at the OWC office or at the door.

Vickie Edwards, Patsy Chilcote, Eileen Reid, Brenda Couturier and Mary Anne Charlson are a few of the vendors from the Fort Benning community who will be exhibiting their talents at this year's Folk Art Fair.

Edwards is bringing her stained glass work to the fair, but many people may already recognize her work from her stained glass classes on post and at Columbus College or her show at Columbus Square Mall.

Edwards keeps up on all the latest techniques with trips to her native Tennessee.

Her devotion to the craft is evident in both her teaching and her custom stained glass business.

Chilcote and Reid realized a need for a comprehensive guide to the area's many antique stores, thrift shops, outlets, discount and specialty shops and other points of interest.

The two family members collaborated for over nine months on their newly released book, "Millin' Around," a necessity for any new arrival and an excellent guide even for established natives.

"Millin' Around" covers a 75-mile radius around Columbus/Fort Benning in a town-by-town format, complete with maps.

Patsy Chilcote is also known for her work, which she will bring to the Folk Art Fair.

Couturier will make her decorative folk art available at the fair — painted wooden and stuffed Santas.

Charlson, another artist and teacher, though new at her craft, is turning out one-of-a-kind corn husk dolls and Christmas treetop angels.

Charlson takes special orders and teaches classes on post.

She learned corn husk art at Fort Leavenworth last year.

Shoppers can bring their Christmas lists and see all the arts and crafts at this year's Folk Art Fair.

Also, specialty foods will be available.

For more information, call Annette Santiago at 689-6930.

Benning's 1st pianist returns

Debra Galle

Lonnie Hicks plays during Oct. 29 services at The Infantry Center Chapel while Chap. (Lt. Col.) Donald McSwain watches.

By Debra Galle
USAIC Chaplain's Office

The piano was placed in the center aisle, and a chaplain's assistant wheeled the elderly, white-haired woman to the front of the church.

Several people scurried about to make her comfortable, and the hymn number was announced.

She was asked where the hymnal should be placed for her, since her eyes were weak.

Quietly she said to the young man assisting her, "I don't need a book. Just put my finger on middle C." She raised her eyes to meet his, and in a stern, determined voice continued, "Then stand back."

According to Chap. (Lt. Col.) Donald W. McSwain, the Infantry Center Chaplain, the hymns were spry and upbeat. She played songs such as "When the Roll is Called up Yonder, We'll be There." The closing hymn was the first song Hicks remembered playing at Camp Benning in 1918, "Come we That Love the Lord, we are Marching on to Zion."

The songs she played may have brought back memories of when she was 18 years old and volunteered to accompany local civilian clergy at the first religious services on Camp Benning.

"There wasn't a church here then," Hicks explained. "It was in a little wooden building that was a serviceman's center, a canteen of sorts."

It was in this small building, services were given by local clergy until the first chaplains were stationed here in the spring of 1919.

Hicks has been presented several awards for her contributions to the religious program. Among these is the Legion of Honor Chapel of Four Chaplains Award, from Philadelphia, Penn., a Certificate of Recognition from the Chief of Chaplains, and a Certificate of Appreciation from Maj. Gen. Michael F. Spigelmire, commanding general of Fort Benning.

She began playing at special services at the Infantry Center Chapel four years ago.

Chap. McSwain was contacted by Reverend Ellis, a Pentecostal minister from Columbus who made it a part of her ministry to visit elderly patients in local care homes.

Rev. Ellis learned about Lonnie Hicks and her affiliation with the history of Fort Benning, and asked Chap. McSwain if he would be interested in meeting her.

"We decided it would be nice to have her come out and play for us on the occasion of the anniversary of Camp Benning in October," said Chap. McSwain."We look forward to her sharing her talents with us."

It may be more than a coincidence that Chap. McSwain's sermon Sunday was about an unnamed, unselfish woman in the Bible.

The title of the sermon was "She has done what she could." He said he wanted to get the point across that the most important thing people can do on this planet is to simply do whatever they can, and that will make a difference.

He explained to the congregation that 3,000 new flowers had been planted around the church by a handful of people who were doing what they could.

A 4-year-old girl, a pregnant woman and a woman in a wheel chair planted all the flowers in the front of the church, while an 84-year-old man and a young 2nd lieutenant finished the sides.

The point was that when people do what they can, it benefits everyone.

"Many people who are unknown and unnamed helped Fort Benning grow to what it is today simply by doing their own parts, no matter how insignificant they felt they were, McSwain said.

Lonnie Hicks still plays the piano at the religious services at Pine Manor where she now resides.

The tempo is upbeat, and she does what she can to contribute to the quality of life around here.

"I look so forward from one October to the next. I just love everyone here," Hicks said in a soft but solid voice.

Chap. McSwain presented a bouquet of flowers to Hicks and thanked her for sharing her talents.

At 89-years-old, Lonnie Hicks is just doing what she can, the best way that she can.

Chaplain: Telling children to just say no is not enough

By David R. Penland
Chaplain, Clinical Pastoral Education

Giving children slogans to live by such as "just say no to drugs" may be a comfortable way for us to convince our consciences we're taking a stand against an obvious evil.

Somehow, I believe we're missing the point.

If by example and communication throughout their development we have not endowed our children with an attitude that says — be morally accountable to your creator, your neighbor and yourself, then telling them at age 13 to "just say no to drugs" is a hollow slogan.

A child knows when he has been treated with respect and has clear moral guidelines. They will only hear your plea if you have spent their lifetime sharing these principles and convictions within.

The key to this enjoyment or freedom is responsibility.

God gave us a moral code. This code is called the Ten Commandments. Some would call them a burden, a cross, a constraint against enjoyment of life; but I call them a gift of love from a wise God.

The Creator says if we will live within the bounds of these rules for living, there will be peace between God and man, among mankind and within individuals.

What does God command of us — reverence, to not put money or position, possessions or relationships before him in importance.

He asks us not to idolize anything or anyone above Him, cocaine or alcohol, sports heros or rock or country musicians. The list can be long.

He commands us not to misuse this name by referring to damn as his surname. He says he will hold no one guiltless who does so.

He commands us to worship Him. I believe community is an important part of worship, where we can hear God's word, share our insights and support one another in our goal to live full and right with God's help.

Worship also helps us to know God's displeasure and forgiveness when we don't.

God's intent is for each of us to have loving and responsible parents who follow his moral code, and in turn, parents are to be respected by their children.

Because God gives us freedom to choose to revere Him and His laws for life, or to reject them, not all children are blessed with parents whose lifestyles are shaped by a loving relationship with a loving creator.

Society, churches, synagogues, teachers and caring mentors must pick up where parents fail.

Don't tell your children to "just say no to drugs." Take a lifetime to share with them an attitude that says "yes to life — life lived happily and responsibly toward God, others and themselves.

When they stumble — and they will — teach them that you are there to love and forgive and point them in the right way, just as your God has been there for you.

Sea World

Mom Namu and her newborn, Baby Namu, join Kandu and year-old Baby Shamu for a swim at Sea World, where military personnel and their dependents can receive a 30% discount off the admission price.

Sea World invites military with discount rate in Nov.

Sea World

Sea World of Florida recognizes November as "Military Month" by offering special discounts for all military personnel.

Upon presenting valid military identification, active duty personnel, reservists and their family members will receive 30 percent (normally 20 percent) off the regular price of park admission, a savings of more than $7.50 per person.

At Sea World, military guests can experience an up-close view of some of the ocean's most exciting creatures in an electrifying array of more than 20 shows and exhibits.

At Shamu Stadium, an entire killer whale family, including the newest addition, Baby Namut, born July 11, 1989, performs inspiring displays of natural behaviors in "The Legend of Shamu" show.

The all new "USO Water Ski Show" pays tribute to the men and women in the Armed Forces and combines fascinating waterskiing feats, colorful costumes and zany comedy.

Other shows and exhibits include "Sea Lions of the Silver Screen," "New Friends," Penguin Encounter, "Sharks!" and feeding pools for dolphins, seals, sea lions and stingrays.

For more information on special military discounts, contact your local Information Tour and Travel office or call Sea World Group Sales at 1-800-327-2424.

Sea World, located at the intersection of I-4 and the Bee Line Expressway, is open year-round from 9 a.m. to 9 p.m. daily.

Ibsen's 'Enemy of the People' opens at Springer Theatre

Springer Theatre

The Springer Studio Theatre launches its 1989-90 performance series Nov. 2 with Henrick Ibsen's world-acclaimed play, "An Enemy of the People".

Dennis Friedman, a liberal arts adviser at Auburn University, directs the production for staging in the Springer's intimate 150-seat second space.

"This is not only one of the world's major pieces of dramatic literature, but a unique theatre experience for audiences," explained Springer Artistic Director Paul R. Pierce. "An Enemy of the People" is not really 'heavy drama' in the popular sense of the term. It's more of a personal adventure story in the vain of Jimmy Stewart's "Mr. Smith Goes to Washington" — one good, regular guy against the system. Its an exciting and often humorous tale."

"An Enemy of the People" is set in a small Norwegian village that has begun to win fame and prosperity for its healing mineral spring waters. Dr. Stockman, the doctor-in-charge at the springs, discovers that the waters are poisoned, polluted by a tannery upstream. He immediately reports the problem to the town officials and is shocked to find out that, instead of being thanked for his discovery, he is looked upon as a dangerous crank who is out to wreck their way of life.

Pierce notes that "An Enemy of the People" should hold special interest for the community in light of recent events. "With current concern about the Chattahoochee River's pollution level affecting the future of our economy and development and the discussions about regional toxic waste dumping, Ibsen's play will ring fresh and contemporary in the modern ear.

"An Enemy of the People" runs today and Saturday and Nov. 9, 10 and 11 at 8 p.m. in the Springer Studio Theatre. Tickets are $7, $6 for Springer season ticket-holders and Springer Society members.

Glass Menagerie opens Thursday

Columbus College Theatre's fall production, "The Glass Menagerie," opens Thursday at the Experimental Theatre located in the Fine Arts Hall on campus.

Admission to the play is $5 for adults and $3 for children, ages 11 and under.

Season tickets are available for $15.50 and $9.

To make reservations, call 563-3801 or 568-2048.

By using the following procedure, soldiers on the Family Housing Waiting List can use this chart to estimate when they can expect quarters:

Locate your category of housing.

Note eligibility date located on the same line as your category.

Calculate the time difference between the eligibility date listed and your eligibility date. The difference is the approximate time you still have to wait for housing.

EXAMPLE: If the latest eligibility date of the person who last received housing in your category was May 15, 1988, and your date of eligibility is Sept. 15, 1988, you can expect housing in about four months. If you do not know your eligibility date, contact the Family Housing Office at building 399, 545-3107.

Infantry Hall occupants to get cleaner air

Occupants of Infantry Hall can look forward to breathing cleaner air.

The Posey Company of Columbus was awarded a $348,748 contract to clean and decontaminate the air handling system of the post's headquarters building.

Work started this week and could last as long as three months.

Larry Foster, a Posey Company representative said his company also did the work on Martin Army Community Hospital. He said the company is working with the contracting office to allow them to work from 5 p.m. to 1 a.m. to reduce disruption in many offices.

"About the only difference people in Building 4 will notice when we're through is the air will be cleaner and easier to breathe," he said.

They're off, running

Runners from Fort Benning began the 850-mile trek from Washington, D.C., to Columbus Nov. 4.

By John Robinson
Bayonet staff writer

With 850 miles to go, the Columbus Track Club and other runners from all over the United States took their first steps Nov. 4 in a run scheduled to end Friday

Prior to the runners' departure, a press conference was held at the Iron Works Convention & Trade Center to send the 11 runners off to Washington, D.C., for the beginning of the grueling 850-mile run, honoring American Veterans.

The run began last Saturday at the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier at Arlington National Cemetery in Arlington, Va.

Before finishing the run Friday, runners will cross four states, loop into Phenix City, Ala., and cross the finish line in Columbus, Ga.

The run will go through the capitals of Washington, D.C., Richmond, Va., Raleigh, N.C., Columbia, S.C., and Atlanta, Ga.

Each runner is scheduled to run 10 to 20 miles a day and a total of 80 to 90 miles during the run.

"We are honoring veterans who have served this country," said Jim Accordino, team captain. "Through their sacrifices, we have the freedom that affords us one of the best life-styles in the world."

He urged everyone to "put out their flags" in memory of veterans and in the spirit of the run.

Col. James I. Daily, Chief of Staff, was present on behalf of Post Commander Maj. Gen. Michael F. Spigelmire. He pointed out how appropriate this event was in light of recent talk of flag desecration.

Friday, Spigelmire will join the runners in a one-mile welcome run. The run will start at First Alabama Bank's parking lot on Broad Street in Phenix City and will finish at the Iron Works Convention and Trade Center.

Anyone wishing to participate in the run should be in the First Alabama Bank parking lot no later than 3 p.m. Friday.

There will be a $1 dollar fee for each runner. The money will be collected by the Phenix City Chamber of Commerce and the American Veterans Post 98.

Congressman Richard Ray, Columbus Mayor James Jernigan and Phenix City Mayor Sonny Coulter will be among the dignitaries welcoming the runners home from their 850-mile journey.

Benning dazzles Science Board

By Shawn Bryson
Bayonet staff writer

The world's finest tank raced toward its target, spewing mud from beneath its tracks. The driver slammed on the brakes as the gunner began the rotation of the turret.

A second later, about 90 of the Army's greatest scientific minds, soaking wet from the morning's rain, found themselves staring down the barrel of an M-1 Abrams.

It was all a part of a Fort Benning capabilities exercise at Red Cloud Range last week for members of the Army Science Board.

The senior scientific advisory group to the Secretary of the Army, the ASB met at Benning Oct. 30 through Nov. 2.

"Each year, the board has a fall meeting and travels around to get familiar with different aspects of the Army," said Robert Norwood, science board member and director of Space and Strategic Systems, office of the assistant secretary for Research Development and Acquisition.

The science board assists major Army programs in need of attention by providing technical review and management support.

The board represents the Army with commercial research and development activities. ASB also provides scientific and technical consultations.

Other activities at Red Cloud included live-fire demonstrations of small arms and the Bradley Infantry Fighting Vehicle, as well as weapons firing by members of the board.

"I was really impressed with the esprit de corps, cohesiveness and motivation of the soldiers here," Norwood said.

Norwood said he was also impressed with how easily Benning soldiers fired the weapons systems.

Craig Gavin, the director of Information Systems at the Pentagon, said he truly enjoyed the weapons firing. "I think it's wonderful. It gives the science board the opportunity to get hands-on experience," Gavin said.

"More importantly, they get to meet the outstanding young men of the infantry."

Day one of ASB's visit to Benning included a command briefing and an "I Am The Infantry" presentation at Marshall Auditorium in Infantry Hall.

From there, board members were treated to an "Airborne-in-Action" demonstration put on by members of the 1st Battalion, 507th Parachute Infantry Regiment, including the Silver Wings.

That same day, the ASB received a briefing on One Station Unit Training at the Infantry Training Center and later viewed a "Rangers-in-Action" demo by the 75th Ranger Regiment at Victory Pond.

The two days that followed included tours of the National Infantry Museum and the 29th Infantry Regiment's Collins Training Center.

"I was really surprised at the quality of the soldiers in Army today," said Catherine Little, board guest and deputy director of the Board on Army Science Technology at the Pentagon. "I think today's Army is much better than it was 20 years ago."

The ASB was originally called the Army Scientific Advisory Panel when it was established on a trial basis in 1951.

The 10-member panel was increased to 25 in 1954 when the board became a permanent Department of the Army organization.

Members are selected for the board by nominations from the government and the private sector and have superior qualifications in one or more of the following fields: science, technology, engineering, testing, acquisition and management.

ASB membership is now limited to no more than 100, and each member may serve three consecutive terms.

Scouts begin fight against local hunger

By John Robinson
Bayonet staff writer

About 5,000 Cub Scouts, Boy Scouts, Varsity Scouts and Explorers in the Chattahoochee area will turn bagmen Saturday.

They will distribute more than 100,000 plastic bags for residents to fill with canned goods for hungry people in the West Georgia and East Alabama area.

This is the first step of a national Good Turn designed to fill emergency food banks across the country.

Youth from the Chattahoochee Council will be distributing the bags, which were donated by American Family Life, Columbus Bank and Trust Company, Goolsby Foods, Burnham Service Corporation, WGSY "Sunny 100," WTVM Channel 9 and the Columbus Ledger-Enquirer.

Scouts will pick up the sacks filled with donated canned goods Nov. 18. They'll be sorted, marked as donated and sent to food pantries in the council territory for distribution to the needy.

Scout officials said they hope the appeal will provide a supply of food that will go to helping the hungry for many months.

Maj. Nathan Godwin, Fort Benning project chairman, said the program calls for unopened canned goods and unopened boxes. He stressed that they will not accept any foodstuffs showing evidence of tampering or broken seals.

He also discouraged donations such as meats or jarred goods.

Bags will be available at all Goolsby Food stores and can be picked up there for those who do not receive one at their homes.

Godwin said although bags will not be distributed to soldiers' billets, he encourages commanders to collect goods from within their units, as well.

Scout officials in Columbus said they hoped to collect 175,000 food items.

Pit Stop replaces service station

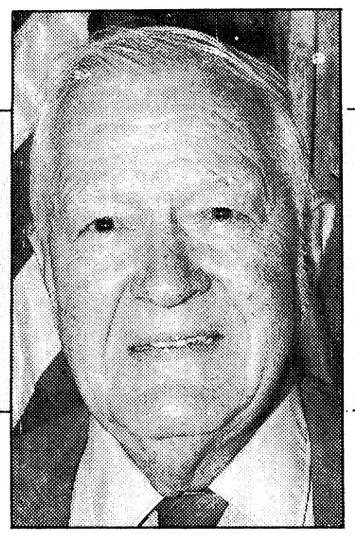
Army, Air Force Exchange Service

The garage doors at the main post service station are once again opened to customers, but don't look for specials on a tune up or an oil change.

The Pit Stop, AAFES newest food facility at Fort Benning, held its grand opening last week.

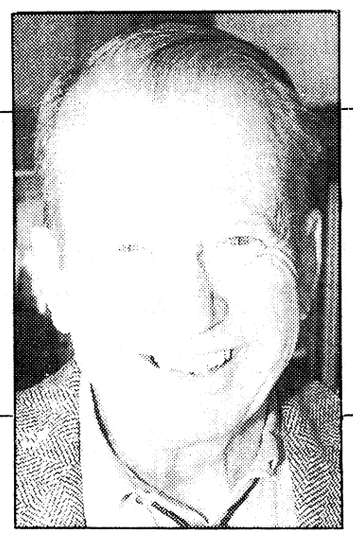
The two garage bays have been stripped of their automobile lifts and now house a newly decorated dining room.

The Pit Stop will be open from 4:30 to 10 p.m. Sunday through Thursday and from 4:30 p.m. to midnight Friday and Saturday.



Free popcorn and peanuts will be served and a variety of cold sandwiches, pizza and beverages will be offered at AAFES prices.

Besides the food and drinks, a large screen TV and video games will be installed.



AAFES is planning another grand-opening at a time and date to be announced.

OPINION

VARIOUS VOICES: What facilities or services could be improved or added at Fort Benning for retirees?

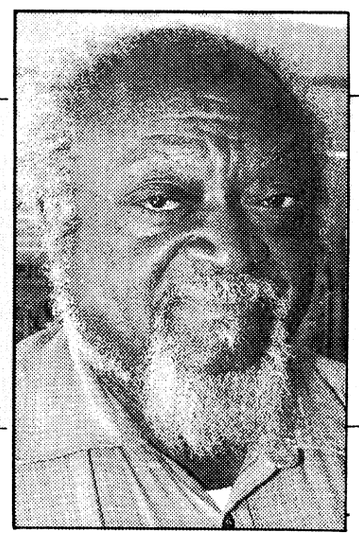
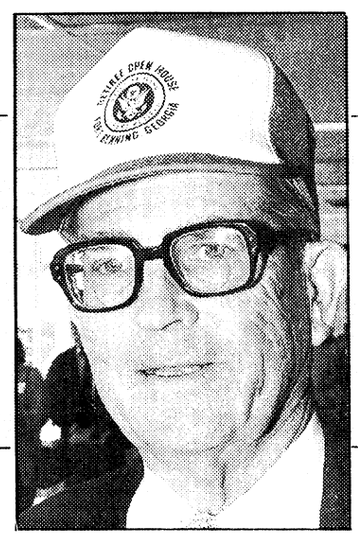
Retired Col. Roy Brooks, Columbus, Ga. — "I don't think anything needs to be changed. Fort Benning provides for all of my needs. I think the retirees are taken good care of here."



Retired Maj. Paul D. Linnevold, Phenix City, Ala. — "I've had problems with the pharmacy at the hospital. The procedures to pick up prescriptions are not consistent. Sometimes I need just my ID card to pick up my wife's medicine, and sometimes I need both of our ID cards."



Retired Sgt. 1st Class Glen Yettaw, Columbus, Ga. — "Nothing should be changed or added. I think they are doing an excellent job. I work at the volunteer retiree branch here, so I see everything that is being done for the retirees."

Retired Maj. Joseph Hamilton, Arabi, Ga. — "I haven't found anything it needs. Anytime I have asked for anything, I've been able to get it. Everyone is really helpful."

Retired Staff Sgt. James B. Billingsley, Columbus, Ga. — "They need to get an orthopedics clinic. There is none here for retirees. Everything else is fine. The commissary is very nice."

Retired Lt. Col. Harry V. Ellis Jr., Montgomery, Ala. — "They need more handicap parking places on post. I haven't seen very many. I couldn't find any at the Officers' Club. We only need one or two at every facility."

Welcome home and thank you

We couldn't have done better ourselves

You can make a difference on America's upcoming Veterans Day by expressing a simple "Welcome Home."

Another year has passed as we prepare to observe and pay tribute to our nations veterans, the gallant boys who held our ground through the best and worst of times.

I am a Vietnam combat veteran who will hurt and suffer, deep within, as we move closer to our day in the sun. Only on Memorial Day is the pain greater.

Since returning home, I have not been able to talk about my experiences and service to our country, as there is a fear and hurt that never leaves my side, for being an American soldier, doing a job so many have done in the past with pride, honor and respect.

The difference between our nation's past wars and conflicts is that our fighting men and women have always come home to flag waving and open arms expressing a job well done and appreciation from all.

Vietnam veterans are not special people and surely no more deserving than those who have gone before us, but the Vietnam veteran deserves more than our nation has allowed.

Our country, leaders and military owe much to the boys, our most deficient group of Americans who have ever served our nation and way of life.

We, as boys, were instructed, trained, directed and supervised by our military in the art of warfare.

When we succeeded, we were praised, honored and awarded.

When we failed, we paid with blood and lives.

Those of us who survived have struggled to understand, accept and cope with ourselves and the society we left behind years ago.

Vietnam veterans are real people who deserve much more.

Veterans deserve the right to equal employment and guaranteed equality, guaranteed to each and every American by the very Constitution we fought for.

For many of our veterans, our military is the only institution that will truly understand us and holds any true meaning.

"It is of great importance not only to guard society against the oppressionof its rules but to guard one part of society against the injustices of the other party.

If men were angels, no government would be necessary." James Madison, 1787.

On behalf of myself and thousands of American Veterans, I would like to simply say "Welcome Home."

The gallant young boys who left home to defend our way of life didn't return men, rather. . .hard, numb, depressed, angry boys, having done a man's job, the bloody business of war.

Snively offers incentive to quit smoking

By Clyde Snively
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Quitting smoking is easy. I've done it hundreds of times, Mark Twain used to quip. That was my motto, too.

I used to quit, then I'd see someone sucking on a Pall Mall, and my entire system would start begging me, "just one cigarette, take it, smoke it, inhale it — soothing, smoothing, relaxing breath of tobacco. Ohhhh, so good."

And so I'd walk up to complete strangers and bum a Pall Mall. This, months, even years after my last cigarette.

Next thing I'd know, I'd be buming Marlboros and Winstons and Salems from co-workers, telling myself that since I wasn't buying cigarettes, it really didn't count.

Eventually, I'd get tired of those limp, filtered cigarettes and begin buying my own again.

Ahhhhh, those long, deep, dark, delicious Pall Malis, so full of great taste.

It's been three years now since my last cigarette. Yet, I still get a craving when I see someone puffing away contentedly.

I guess it's a lot like being an alcoholic. Once you are, you always are.

You may finally get all the nicotine out of your system, but your mind never forgets how great that cigarette tasted.

What keeps me from going back now is I'm a lot wiser than I used to be.

Back in the good old days, the worse threats people could come up with were, "Smoking will stunt your growth," or, if you were into athletics, "Smoking will cut your wind."

I didn't believe either one.

What does scare me though is the idea of dying from a heart attack. My father did. He was a heavy smoker.

He made a feeble attempt at quitting, but didn't stick with it. Even after four heart attacks, he kept on puffing.

"I enjoy it too much," and "I'm going to die of something someday, so it may as well be smoking," he used to say.

But I've got to think if it hadn't been for smoking, he'd still be around. He'd still be able to enjoy his grandchildren, still be out there in his retirement years, chasing a little white ball into a stubborn hole on the golf course.

Heart attack's not what killed my mother. She died of cancer. I remember the last years of her life as she underwent chemotherapy treatment and then was put on drugs to ease the pain.

We never knew from minute to minute what she was aware of. We couldn't appreciate the pain she was going through as the medication wore off.

That scares me, too. I don't like pain.

I heard a doctor once compare lung cancer to planting a tree in concrete. "Try getting it out without hurting the roots."

Get lung cancer my friend, and it's just a matter of time.

The good news about smoking is that if you quit and can stay quit, they say your mortality rate after 10 years of no smoking will be about the same as a person who never smoked.

This, of course, presuming you don't live with a smoker. The American Lung Association says slip stream or second-hand smoke is more harmful than smoke out of the cigarette — at least smoke from the cigarette is filtered.

While I've always been a do-it-yourself, stop cold turkey type, I can tell you there are a lot of excellent programs designed to help people stop smoking.

American Cancer, American Heart and American Lung all have them, as do the people here on post.

They all have a couple of things in common.

First, a person has to really want to quit.

Second,they try to help you modify your life style, something like for dieters.

They also encourage you to find someone to give you support, something like Alcoholics Anonymous.

If you're married, and you want to quit but your spouse doesn't, I wouldn't even try it.

Nov. 16 is Great American Smokeout Day. I urge smokers to try it for just one day.

Who knows, you may try it for a second day, then a third.

Nonsmokers, adopt a smoker. Help him or her. Encourage him or her.

Bring your adoptee candy, or celery sticks or carrots. Hide your smoker's smoking implements.

Smokers, do yourselves a favor. Give yourselves the gift of freedom — freedom from the bondage of cigarettes. If only for a day.

Education centers offer array of opportunities

Continuing Education System Office

Through the Army Continuing Education System Office, Directorate of Community Activities, an expansive array of educational opportunities is available to Fort Benning's active duty military, family members, civilian employees, reservists and retirees.

Four Branch Education Centers strategically located post-wide offer programs ranging from Basic Skills (to improve reading, writing, speaking, listening and computational skills; upgrade General Technical score and/or earn a high school equivalency certificate), Military Occupational Specialty improvements and college programs leading to a variety of associate, baccalaureate and master degree offerings.

In addition, ACES' Learning Centers currently provide more than 100 self-paced and user-friendly, computerized courses to assist in military-related training and educational, professional and personal development.

Some services rendered by the Branch Education Centers include testing (high school GED, college-level examination programs, undergraduate and graduate admissions, certification), career counseling and financial assistance (tuition assistance, GI Bill, Veterans Education Assistance Program and information on grants and loans).

The Continuing Education System Office's mission is to provide quality education in support of Total Army goals, to enhance the quality of life within the entire military community and to offer personal growth experience through career development and other voluntary educational programs.

Success calls for an intricate combination of knowledge and skills, and the counselors are there help meet those needs for success.

School of Americas gets scholarly advice

By Keith F. Johnson
U.S. Army School of Americas

The U.S. Army School of the Americas' Command and General Staff Course students and 10 scholars from the field of Latin American affairs participated in a conference on "The Armed Forces in Latin America: Perspectives for the 1990s" Nov 2 and 3 in Building 359.

"This is discussion of key issues in an open dialogue with the future leaders of the Latin American militaries," said Dr. Jose Z. Garcia referring to the opportunity for the 10 scholars to offer their points of view to the students of the course.

Each of the scholars spoke for about an hour and then answered questions and discussed their topics with the students.

"These people represent the best scholars available in the United States today on the issue of armed forces in Latin America," said Garcia, visiting professor at USARSA.

Topics ranged from "Military and Civilian Relations in Latin America: Perspectives and Problems" to "Internal War, Democratization and the Armed Forces: The Case of Guatemala, 1979-1989." According to Garcia, a conference of this type can help encourage the growth of democratization in Latin America.

"During the mid 70s only Colombia, Costa Rica, Venezuela and Mexico were not under military dictatorships," Garcia said. "By the late 80s, only Cuba and Nicaragua are under military rule."

"This is not a policy forum, this is simply an academic forum in which academicians can present their views to members of the Latin American military," Garcia said.

The scholars were Dr. Didier Opertti Badan, Uruguay ambassador to the organization of American States; Dr Louis Goodman, Dean of the School of International Studies at American University; Dr. Stanley Hilton, an instructor at the U.S. Air War College; Phyllis Walker form Georgetown University; Dr. Richard Millett from the University of Southern Illinois; Dr. D. Scott Palmer from the University of Boston; Dr. Sam Fitch from the University of Colorado; Lt. Col. Richard A. Phalan from the U.S. National Defense University; Dr. Cesar Sereseres from the University of California-Irvine and Dr. Steve Ropp from the University of Wyoming.

Correction

In last week's edition of The Bayonet, the new commander of 197th Infantry Brigade, Col. Theodore W. Reid's daughter, Amanda, was incorrectly listed as a 10 year old. She is a 20-year-old student of the University of Hawaii.

Commanding General stresses education

American Education Week will be observed Sunday through 18.

Educational programs and services available to each member of the Fort Benning Community — whether active duty military, family members, civilian employees, reservists or retirees — are both unique and extensive.

Preparation for present and future changes as they rapidly occur demands meeting ever-increasing challenges successfully.

Increased formal education and skills development programs contribute notably to attracting and retaining qualified and highly-motivated individuals to today's Total Army.

Knowing that strong educational programs are available for youngsters in Army families also contributes to this effort.

Education at every level is an investment in your future.

The Fort Benning Schools and the Army Continuing Education System strongly support and champion the professional and personal growth of all participants within their respective systems.

I encourage each of you — not only during this week of heightened emphasis on education — but, at all times, to maximize your educational opportunities.

Become a partner with the elementary, middle and high schools in the education of your children by visiting their school.

Visit our Branch Education Centers to determine which curriculum can best fulfill your specific needs.

Comprehensive, flexible and innovative programs await your active involvement today.

EEO, Upward Mobility councils reward significant actions

By Michelle Le Roy Harrison
Bayonet staff writer

Managers and supervisors who made significant contributions in supporting affirmative actions and upward mobility programs were recognized at the first Equal Employment Opportunity Committee and Upward Mobility Council Awards Luncheon Oct. 26.

Affirmative actions are the employment of minorities, women, handicapped and disabled veterans and reemployment of injured employees.

The Upward Mobility Program allows managers and supervisors to identify certain jobs that are at high grade levels and restructure them to a trainee level.

Eight awards were given in two categories: directors and commanders of directorates and tenant activities that employ more than 400 civilian personnel and activities employing less than 400 civilians.

For the first time, two employees were recognized as Fort Benning's Handicapped Employee of the Year.

Health Services Command's Patricia Barnett and Training and Doctrine Command's Glory McMillan, were recognized for their accomplishments in spite of their handicaps.

Margaret L. Kambitz, from the Infantry Training Center, was recognized as the Mayor's Committee Handicapped Employee of the Year.

Fort Benning's Equal Employment Opportunity and Directorate of Civilian Personnel received awards earlier this year for "outstanding accomplishments" in their respective fields.

Both of these officers were recognized as best within the command by TRADOC.

The luncheon was hosted by post commander Maj. Gen. Michael F. Spigelmire. Columbus Mayor James E. Jernigan was guest speaker.

The Great American Smokeout

Take a one-day break from tobacco products

Smokers continue to light up despite facts

The Wirthlin Group

Despite a nearly universal view among smokers that they will develop serious lung problems if they continue smoking, they continue to light up.

Eighty-three percent of American smokers interviewed in a national survey believe they are at risk for emphysema and chronic bronchitis, and two-thirds of them consider themselves addicted to smoking.

"Chronic obstructive lung disease, which includes emphysema and bronchitis, is the fifth leading cause of death in the United States," said Roger Bone, Md., chief of Pulmonary and Critical Care Medicine at Rush-Presbyterian-St. Luke's Medical Center in Chicago.

"And its prevalence as a cause of death continues to grow faster than any other cause of death," Bone said.

The survey also showed that only 18 percent of smokers said they would seek medical help when trying to quit.

"As physicians," Dr. Bone added, "we need to reach our patients who smoke and let them know there are medically supervised programs available to help them quit."

The survey revealed Americans' fatalism about smoking: 44 percent of current smokers and 52 percent of heavy smokers (more than a pack a day) believe they have already damaged their lungs as a result of smoking.

"Clearly smokers know and feel the harmful effects of cigarettes," said Sharon Jaycox, manager of Smoking or Health Programs at the American Lung Association.

"The real challenge is not only to motivate more smokers to quit, but also to encourage those who have made an unsuccessful quit attempt to try again," Jaycox said.

The survey interviewed 1,000 adult Americans, including 336 current smokers. The margin of error among all respondents is plus-or-minus 3.1 percent, and among smokers the margin of error is plus-or-minus 5.4 percent.

The survey was conducted by The Wirthlin Group, a national public opinion research firm based in McLean, Virginia and was funded by Boehringer Ingelheim Pharmaceuticals Inc. of Ridgefield, Conn.

Number 13 may prove lucky this year

American Forces Information Service

Army Lt. Col. Antionette Hagey hopes that 13 will be a lucky number this year for military people who smoke.

Department of Defense's senior program specialist for health promotion was referring to the 13th Great American Smokeout to occur Nov. 16.

"When you look at a pie graph of American civilians, three-fourths of that American pie are nonsmokers.

A pie of military personnel would show that 60 percent, or less than two-thirds, are nonsmokers, so we don't compare well in that area.

Our job in the military is to be ready so we can keep the peace and part of readiness is to play a leadership role in areas of health and fitness," Hagey said.

"Smoking is a physical readiness issue. Research has shown that smokers and persons who use smokeless tobacco don't perform as well on military fitness tests. Smokers are also sick more often. That hurts readiness," she added.

"But another aspect of smokeout participation by military people is that it gives us a chance to be a part of the America we defend.

"Last year, many posts and bases played a leadership role in their communities' smokeouts — making the cities, counties and states where they were stationed look good in the friendly competition between localities that goes on every smokeout.

> Some installations will sponsor "lock-ups," in which smokers are locked away.

"That may not seem important, but it contributes to good community relations," Hagey added.

The Great American Smokeout is held each year on the third Thursday of November. This year's theme is "Leave the Pack Behind."

The American Cancer Society has provided posters, postcards and tent cards showing this theme by MAD Magazine cartoonist Jack Davis for use in smokeout observations on military installations.

Another smokeout poster will feature Star Trek's Mr. Spock, actor Leonard Nimoy, with the message "Don't Smoke, Live Long and Prosper."

Also taking part in the campaign will be retired Surgeon General C. Everett Koop.

Hagey said many installations will hold smokeout activities such as races, athletic events and contests.

Some will sponsor "lock-ups," in which smokers are locked away and entertained to keep their minds off their tobacco habits. Smokeless happy hours are also gaining in popularity.

According to the American Cancer Society, last year some 5.4 million people, or 10.7 percent of the nation's smokers, gave up cigarettes for the entire 24 hours of the smokeout.

One to three days later, 3.4 million of those people were still not smoking.

Said Hagey, "At one time, drill instructors signaled breaks by saying, 'Smoke' em if you got 'em.' Those days are gone."

AMERICAN CANCER SOCIETY

Keep a lookout for the smokeout Nov. 16

Army News Service

For those tobacco-hooked soldiers who feel they need an extra boost from friends and associates to kick the habit, the Army offers the "Great Army Smokeout."

Coinciding with the American Cancer Society's 13th annual Great American Smokeout scheduled for Nov. 16, the Army version will adopt the national smokeout theme, said Lt. Col. Beverly Antopol.

"It fits right in with the Army's anti-tobacco use program," said Antopol, a staff officer in the Army's Office of the Deputy Chief of Staff for Personnel.

As in the past, this year's Great Army Smokeout is intended to be, in Antopol's words, "a light-hearted, upbeat event with a serious purpose to reduce the ranks of tobacco users by encouraging them to quit for just 24 hours."

She added, "A successful quitting experience can, and often does, lead to a permanent decision to give up the habit."

As in past years, the smokeout focuses on cigarette smokers and on users of smokeless tobacco.

For their part, nonsmokers are being encouraged to lend moral support to those persons who choose to join the smokeout.

The most common form of support entails "adopting" one's tobacco-using family members, friends and co-workers.

Antopol noted that the event usually receives special emphasis at the level of posts, camps and stations throughout the Army.

"This includes coordinated efforts on the part of installation 'Fit to Win' coordinators or other health promotion officials. They usually work in concert with representatives from the local chapters of the American Cancer Society.

"And they're available to help plan activities, provide literature handouts, offer cessation aids, operate video presentations and make referrals for persons interested in attending stop-smoking clinics."

Past smokeouts have proved their worth in helping raise the consciousness of the Army family toward avoiding tobacco products, Antopol said.

President proclaims Veterans Day

Department of Veterans Affairs

President Bush has proclaimed Nov. 11, as Veterans Day and has called upon all Americans to "express our respect and gratitude for the millions of men and women who have served our nation as members of the United States Armed Forces."

This year's Veterans Day theme is "A Grateful Nation Remembers," and the president urged Americans to honor those who have helped keep our nation strong and our freedom secure.

Secretary of Veterans Affairs, Edward J. Derwinski, who serves as the chairman of the Veterans Day National Committee, said, "We Americans owe a great debt to those veterans who have shown us, in peacetime as well as in war, the value of individual liberty and democracy."

In Washington, the 36th annual Veterans Day observance at Arlington National Cemetery will be held in the Memorial Amphitheater where Gen. Colin Powell, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, will deliver the principal address following the traditional 11 a.m. wreath-laying at the Tomb of the Unknowns. The program also includes patriotic music by the U.S. Army Band.

The veterans of World War I of the USA Inc., a national veterans service organization, will host this year's activities at Arlington.

Derwinski pointed out that while Arlington captures much of the national attention on Veterans Day, the rest of the nation's observances are just as meaningful.

"While the VA is the means by which all Americans are able to express the spirit of Veterans Day year round, it is on this special day that we all can gather to voice our gratitude," he said.

To support nationwide activities, Derwinski has asked all state governors to name Veterans Day chairpersons to coordinate the various activities throughout the state and to represent the governor in working with service organizations, military officials and communities planning parades, ceremonies and other observances.

The Veterans Day National Committee has designated Albany, Oregon; Auburn, Wash.; Austin, Texas; Barnhart, Mo.; Birmingham, Ala.; Columbus, Ohio; Indianapolis, Ind., Kansas City, Mo.; Lake Elsinor, Calif.; Milwaukee, Wis.; Mobile, Ala.; Nashville, Tenn.; Oakland, Calif.; San Jose, Calif.; and Stone Mountain, Ga., as sites for official regional Veterans Day observances.

The committee has also sent a variety of materials to state and civic organizations and to more than 92,000 schools encouraging greater awareness of and involvement in Veterans Day.

Spigelmire wishes all a safe holiday

Members of this command will join Americans throughout this great nation of ours by celebrating a holiday of singular significance to members of the Armed Forces. That special holiday is Veterans Day.

Saturday, we pay homage to the veterans who, through the years, sacrificed so much that we may remain a free nation.

Veterans Day will be a three-day weekend. That means many vehicles on the road, hurrying to get places and under conditions that are often dangerous.

I urge each of you to approach this holiday with the safety of yourself and others foremost in your minds.

Preplan your trips. Make sure both you and your vehicle are in top operating condition, and, by all means, wear your seat belts and drive defensively.

I want each of you to return safely.

Enjoy your holiday.

Veterans Day messages from Vuono, Stone

On this day of remembrance, Americans pause to honor the millions of our countrymen who have served our nation and have committed their lives to its defense.

Born amidst the carnage and sacrifice of World War I, Veterans Day is now a tradition that recognizes the special role our men and women in uniform have played in securing the blessings of freedom and liberty for the entire nation.

The history of our Veterans is a reflection of America itself: men and women from every walk of life, from across our nation, answering the call of duty to protect their country.

This calling took them far away from family and loved ones to every corner of the world, to serve and sometimes to die in the defense of freedom.

We, as a nation, owe them the peace and prosperity we enjoy today.

This year, as we commemorate the Bicentennial of the establishment of our Constitution and the 200th anniversary of the War Department, the challenges facing America have not diminished.

The principles for which the soldier of the past fought and died, the soldier of today must protect.

Your responsibilities are great; your burden is heavy, and you are doing a superb job.

You, the next generation of veterans, have joined a sacred roll of honor, and you are adding your own chapter to the long and glorious history written by the men and women of the U.S. Army.

On behalf of a free and prosperous nation, thank you for continuing the tradition of proud and honorable service established by the veterans we remember today.

May we always prove worthy of their legacy.

Tankers await Abrams

By Troy A. Pearson
197th Infantry Brigade

Tankers of 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor are awaiting with great expectations on the final railcars to arrive with the M-1A1 improved Abrams.

Planning has been ongoing for several months for the 197th Infantry Brigade's armor battalion to transition from the M-60A3 main battle tank to the state-of-the-art Abrams.

The battalion already has a few in its possession and is in the process of replacing the old M-60A3 with the new M-1A1s.

The M-1s are being railed in from Anniston Army Depot, Ala., in four separate shipments. 2nd Bn., 69th Armor will receive 44 Abrams tanks.

Since the Army first fielded the M-1 prototype in 1980 at Fort Hood, Texas, the service has begun efforts to equip its European-based armored battalions and regimental cavalry squadrons with an upgraded M-1A1 Abrams, while returning all basic M-1 tanks to the continental United States.

Upon arrival of a shipment at the Sand Hill railhead, a Material Fielding Team from Fort Polk, La., will serve as the controlling agency for movement of the tanks to the 2nd Bn., 69th Armor motor pool.

Drivers, tank commanders and petroleum, oil and lubrication specialists are provided by 2nd Bn., 69th Armor in the fueling and down-loading of the tanks.

Each tank will then be fully fueled, a security inspection conducted and movement will begin under wheel vehicle escort to the motor pool.

Acquisition of the M-1s is only part of the battalion's transition program, according to Capt. Joseph O'Donnell, S1.

The soldiers who will be working with the Abrams must change their MOS from 19E, M-60A3 crewman, to 19K, M-1A1 crewman.

Hull mechanics will be required to change their MOS from 63N to 63E before they are qualified to work on the Abrams. Also, turret mechanics have to be retrained from 45N to 45E.

A team of trainers from Fort Campbell, Ky., is expected to arrive at 2nd Bn., 69th Armor in December to assist with the MOS changeovers, O'Donnell said.

"The Abrams is superior to the M-60A3 in both the design of its armor and its improved suspension system and fire power," O'Donnell said.

"The Abrams will increase the speed, firepower and shock effect of the our Panther battalion on the battlefield," he predicted.

1st Bn., 18th takes post-level maintenance award

By Aurelio Feliberty
197th Infantry Brigade

1st Battalion, 18th Infantry, maintenance team took the post-level victory in the competition for the Chief of Staff, Army, Award for Maintenance Excellence.

Maj. Gen. Michael F. Spigelmire, Fort Benning commanding general, presented awards to the teammembers.

Lt. Col. Archibald V. Arnold III, 1st Bn., 18th Inf., commander, was also presented a plaque for the unit's performance in the annual competition, which is open to all units at Fort Benning.

The 197th Infantry Brigade battalion was judged the post's best in the "heavy" category for units with a total of 1,001 or more items of equipment.

"The evaluators not only based the results of the inspection on equipment and the Unit Maintenance Profile but also reviewed the soldiers' skill qualification test results," said 1st Lt. Thomas A. Thompson, battalion maintenance officer.

According to Thompson, the UMP is an annual record of the unit's performance in six areas: mission statement, readiness, training, management, cost/savings and innovation.

It also provides an up-to-date account of the unit's activities and guidelines for daily performance.

"Our UMP, combined with the soldiers' great attitude and motivation for success, was used in the battalion's preparation to become the best," Thompson said.

"The battalion conducts monthly competitions in areas such as NCO of the Month, maintenance team, best wheel and best track," Thompson said.

"In conjunction with these events, we have a battalion road march to the motor pool, where the brigade commander conducts crewmember and vehicle inspections," he added.

According to Thompson, the maintenance team conducts weekly MOS/SQT training to ensure that the soldiers maintain proficiency in all areas of their jobs.

This hard work and effort from the maintenance crew paid off in the long run during the 197th's National Training Center rotation on April 1989.

"The battalion task force maintained the highest operational readiness rating in the brigade and set an NTC record for the number of simulated battle-damaged vehicles recovered, fixed and returned to the unit for any single battle," according to the battalion's mission statement.

According to Thompson, 1st Bn., 18th Inf.'s UMP has been forwarded to Forces Command, the next level of competition for the Chief of Staff, Army, Award for Maintenance Excellence.

IOBC students share time with pals

By Shawn Lorimer
Bayonet staff writer

Over the past two years, the youngsters of the People Able to Love and Share program have spent several weekends with the officers of Company C, 2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry, Infantry Officers Basic Course.

Since the PALS program normally requires a one-year commitment to sponsor a child, the organization came up with the Pal for a Day Program.

The program gives soldiers the opportunity to get involved while on temporary duty here.

"Since these are single-parent children," says PALS counselor Stephanie Leaming, "we need to find people who are going to be around for a while."

There are currently about 50 children with sponsors and another 50 unmatched youngsters.

Unmatched children, who range in age from 7 to 15 years old, are placed on a waiting list and participate in the Pal for a Day Program.

"We have planned activities every-other month for those children who are on the waiting list for sponsors.

"It lets them know that we have not forgotten about them," Leaming said.

In the past, the sponsors from 2nd Bn., 11th Inf. have taken the children to the circus, various parks around town, the Water Slide and the movies.

The soldiers also conducted a Survival Day at Fort Benning for the children.

According to Maj. Jimmy R. Duhaime, former commander of Co. C, 2nd Bn., 11th Inf., the sponsored children are not the only ones who enjoy the program.

"This type of program makes people aware that fighting the enemy is not the only part of being a soldier," Duhaime said.

"They also get satisfaction in the feeling they are helping someone else," he said.

Co. C, 2nd Bn., 11th Inf., has been continuing to provide Pals for a Day under the guidance of Company Commander Maj. Rodney Davis.

Even though their free time is limited, the IOBC lieutenants not only donate their time but also pay $2 for insurance and provide whatever money is required for the day's activities.

The next activity for those children without permanent sponsors will be a visit to the Animal General Hospital Saturday.

The PALS program, which will change its name to Big Brothers and Big Sisters of America, is a United Way agency.

The program is not only in need of sponsors for just one day, but also needs people for longer commitments.

After an interested sponsor signs up for the program, a background check is done and the sponsors home is visited to determine the type of environment to which the child will be exposed.

Once the sponsor is assigned a child, he spends three to five hours per week with a child for a minimum of one year.

The program welcomes unmarried sponsors, as well as married couples with or without children.

For more information, contact PALS at 327-3238 or for information regarding the Pal for a Day Program call Maj. Rodney Davis at 545-7439/5770.

Commission on Cancer

Glenn L. Goldstein, Md., FACS of Columbus, Ga., recently received a three-year appointment as Cancer Liaison Physician for the Cancer Program at Martin Army Community Hospital, Fort Benning.

The Cancer Liaison Program is an integral part of the Commission on Cancer of the American College of Surgeons.

Goldstein is among a national network of 2,300 volunteer Cancer Liaison physicians who provide leadership support to the Hospital Cancer Program and other commissions on cancer activities.

Goldstein, who has a significant interest in the diagnosis and treatment of patients with malignant diseases, also provides local leadership for the annual national clinical goal of the Cancer Liaison Program; the 1989 goal is the promotion and utilization of tumor modes metastases staging.

Established in 1956, the Commission on Cancer, which is composed of Fellows of the College and liaison members representing 23 other cancer-related organizations, has approved more than 1,200 cancer programs in hospitals across the country.

The commission reviews each hospital's cancer program for conformity to high standards set by the commission and encourages participating hospitals to equip and staff themselves so that they are able to provide the best in diagnosing and treating cancer.

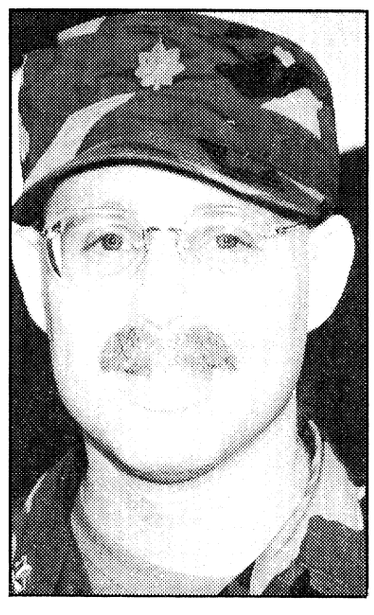
Recognizing that cancer is a complex group of diseases, the Cancer Liaison Physician promotes extensive communications and consultation among family physicians, surgeons, medical oncologists, diagnostic and therapeutic radiologists, pathologists and other cancer specialists as a means of providing better patient care.

An integral part of a hospital's cancer program is its tumor registry.

The Cancer Liaison Physician provides support and technical expertise to the hospital's tumor registrar and encourages medical staff to use data generated by the registry.

All patients who are diagnosed as having cancer or are being treated for the disease are listed in the registry so the hospital can maintain contact with them and make sure they receive continuing care and assistance with rehabilitation.

Information collected through the registry allows Goldstein's institution to participate in national studies designed to improve patient care.



Each year since 1976, more than 500 hospital cancer programs have collaborated with the commission on these studies.

Some of the most extensive incidence and survival statistics in the world have been amassed through this nationwide effort, resulting in the publication of 54 manuscripts in professional journals.

The American Cancer Society estimates 985,000 cases of cancer (exclusive of carcinoma in situ — or noninvasive cancer — and nonmelanoma skin cancer) will be diagnosed during 1989.

Although only one-sixth of the hospitals in the United States have cancer programs approved by the Commission on Cancer, 68 percent of new cancer patients are treated in these hospitals.

For more information on the Cancer Liaison Physician Program, the Hospital Cancer Program or the Commission on Cancer, contact the Cancer Department at the American College of Surgeons, 55 East Erie Street, Chicago, Ill. 60611, (312) 664-4050.

Q. After going through a financial crisis last year, our family's credit is ruined.

We want to retire in a few years and buy a home, but are worried about getting a mortgage.

A telephone solicitation company has told us that they can guarantee a $4,000 line of credit, even with bankruptcy or bad credit, that they can get us a Visa or Mastercard and that they can get our credit rating back to normal six times as fast as usual methods, all for two $95 payments.

This sounds like the answer to all our problems, but my wife says to ask you first. What about it?

A. We inquired into this offer and found that this company was offering a two-step program.

If you do not have any credit, they will help you establish it or if you have bad credit, correct it.

Step one: for $95, this company will issue you a new credit card, good for charging purchases from several merchandise catalogs the company will send later.

Once you buy $1,000 in merchandise in the catalogs, your credit line on the card increases to $5,000.

Step two: for another $95, they can arrange a "secured" Visa or Mastercard for you.

You deposit $500 in the bank, and you have a $500 line of credit on your card.

The company states that if you make your payments on time to the company, they will report to the credit bureaus each month, and since other creditors only report twice a year, your credit is cleaned up six times as fast.

Suspicious yet? Here are some facts about this "deal:"

● Credit bureaus have reportedly never heard of this company, most creditors file monthly reports anyway and all credit bureaus maintain credit reports from seven to 10 years.

● For $3, you can get a list of banks that issue secured Visa or Mastercards, some without any fees at all, from Bankcard Holders of America, 460 Spring Park Place, Suite 1000, Herndon, Va. 22070.

● For your $95 fee, the new credit card offers an opportunity to order more items on credit from catalogs "tied into" or connected with the company.

● It is very likely that the merchandise is overpriced and that the card carries a high interest rate.

This "scam" is particularly vicious because it preys upon people struggling to get their finances back on track and even offers them the opportunity to go deeper and deeper into debt.

Call 545-3281 for an appointment at the legal assistance office before you commit to something that sounds too good to be true; it usually is.

Education specialist says life is miracle

By Michelle Le Roy Harrison
Bayonet staff writer

"It can be done."

These words are taped to the wall by Glory McMillan's desk. It is a simple statement, but one that she lives by.

McMillan is evidence that "it can be done." She overcame obstacles caused by a crippling disease and now leads a productive life.

She was recently recognized for her accomplishments and named Fort Benning's Training and Doctrine Command Handicapped Employee of the Year at an Equal Employment Opportunity awards luncheon Oct. 26.

McMillan began to gradually lose strength in her muscles in 1970. The changes in her body were so gradual that she didn't notice them.

"My hands would fall asleep. I thought the changes were happening because I was clumsy and overweight," she said.

McMillan was diagnosed as having a peroneal muscular atrophy disease called Charcot-Marie-Tooth.

Victims of this disease usually start noticing symptoms at age 15. McMillan was 32.

This was one of the first signs that she would break all of life's rules.

"I inherited the disease from my mother. She is now unable to stand. All her leg muscles have deteriorated; she doesn't have any knee muscles," she said.

"The doctors say there is no medical cure for it. I was told by my doctor, who was the best neurosurgeon in Columbus at the time, that I would never walk again.

"He told me to just go home and get in my rocking chair."

She ignored his advice.

"If I had done that at the age of 32, I wouldn't be here today."

The following years were not easy. McMillan quit teaching special education classes and elementary school.

Her future didn't look bright.

"My last working day was Dec. 17, 1970. When I left that day, I had nothing to look forward to.

Glory McMillan

"I spent about two months in very deep depression," she said.

As a licensed minister, McMillan turned to God for strength. She began to read the Bible.

"I researched all the portions of scripture about the miracles of Jesus," she said.

McMillan said she found additional encouragement from the people at her church.

"I've always worked with the children in church. There is nothing in this world as strong as a child's faith. With them praying for me, I couldn't stay down."

Instead of the disease progressing as predicted, there was a very slow progression.

McMillan attributes this to her faith and to a miracle.

"I am a miracle," she said. "The doctor use to see me walking up and down the halls of the hospital, and he would shake his head as if he couldn't believe I was walking — as if I wasn't suppose to be."

Clerk accomplishes much by beating odds

USAIC Public Affairs Office

A medical clerk at the information desk at Martin Army Community Hospital, Patricia Barnett is familiar with winning. Her entire life has been dedicated to trying to beat the odds.

Now she is winning recognition, too.

Barnett was named Fort Benning's Health Services Command Handicapped Employee of the Year during an Equal Opportunity Committee and Upward Mobility Council Awards Luncheon Oct. 26.

Also this year, Barnett was second runner-up to Ms. Georgia Wheelchair and won Ms. Congeniality.

She was named the Columbus Mayor's Committee Handicapped Employee of the Year in 1988, and in 1987, she was named Mayor's Committee Handicapped Person of the Year and first runner-up to Ms. Georgia Wheelchair.

"I feel very proud of my accomplishments," she said. "The Lord has been my helping hand through it all."

Barnett has been a victim of the neuromuscular disease called Limb-Girdle Muscular Dystrophy since the age of 4.

She has been confined to a wheelchair for five years.

After she obtained her high school

Patricia Barnett

equivalency certificate, she enrolled in Columbus Technical School's Custom Dressmaking and Tailoring course.

After graduating two years later, she supplemented her welfare check by sewing for individuals at home.

Not satisfied with the part-time job, Barnett knew that getting an education would improve her chances of getting a full-time job with a steady income.

She earned her Bachelor of Science degree six years later.

After submitting hundreds of applications, she was hired for her present job at MACH.

Although she works full time, Barnett continues to be involved in many community programs.

She serves with Freedom for Handicaps, the Muscular Dystrophy Association's Labor Day Telethon and as a volunteer coordinator for MACH Hospice Program.

She was deputized in the ACCESS of Columbus Support Group, which allows her to enforce proper use of handicap parking places.

She was also instrumental in organizing the local MDA Patient Support Group.

Barnett said she feels that having a support group has opened a lot of doors for the disabled. She said her goal now is to match up people in the support group with others who have similar disabilities.

"A buddy will give them additional support to that the group gives," she said.

Barnett said she would like to continue her education and earn a Master of Science degree in Community Counseling.

"I'm an advocate for the disabled. I feel that with a degree, I will be able to make the community more aware of the needs of the 'special population.'"

She said she wants to work on, among other things, improving employment, shelter workshops and housing for the disabled.

Before Barnett was confined to a wheelchair, she said many of her friends were abled.

"I didn't realize what a disability I had because my family and friends did not treat me any different."

She said when she was a child she was assigned chores by her mother equal to those of her sisters.

Though it took her longer to wash dishes or clean the bathroom, she was never left out. She was expected to accomplish her tasks.

Barnett said she believes it was the push her mother gave her that has made her the independent woman she is today.

She said that she feels since she was never pampered, she will be able to help other disabled people whose family and friends pampered them to become more independent.

ITC clerk typist receives mayor's award

By Marilyn Balzarini
Infantry Training Center

Margaret Kambitz, a clerk typist for the S3 Section of the 30th Adjutant General Battalion (Reception), is the Mayor's Committee Handicapped Employee of the Year.

Kambitz accepted the award at an Equal Employment Opportunity and Upward Mobility Council luncheon held at the Fort Benning Officers Club.

Many would say without a doubt there is no one more deserving of this award. However, after meeting Kambitz and learning about her personal life, her talents, her education and her participation in various organizations, committees and volunteer groups, the title of the award seems somehow inappropriate.

To most of us "handicapped" means a person is unable to do something, such as walking, and that keeps them from doing certain other things.

This is not the case with Kambitz.

The wheelchair to which she is confined has never stopped her from doing anything. For instance, it hasn't kept her from dancing — she does it every Friday night.

Kambitz has been paralyzed since she was 22. She injured her back in an accident during a high school gymnastics class.

The problem grew worse over the years and eventually left her without the use of her legs.

"I was bitter at first," Kambitz said. "I had only been married a short time (before losing use of her legs), and I felt cheated."

But that didn't last long. Kambitz said she remembered the day a nurse took her to see a little girl who was in a coma and who would never regain consciousness.

She said the nurse pointed out how much more fortunate she was than the little girl.

Kambitz said with that in mind, she went on with her life and has never looked back.

When her first marriage ended in divorce, she began pursuing her education. She earned her bachelor's degree in psychology.

One night she went dancing and met her husband to be.

"My cousin sang with a band. He had been asking me to come listen to the band at the night club where they performed," Kambitz said.

"When I finally went, I met my second husband the first night."

Now remarried, Kambitz said she thought about having a child.

"I wanted a baby, but I wanted to be sure I could care for it by myself," she said. "So I convinced a friend who had a baby to let me take care of it for her."

With a few innovations, she found she could care for baby without assistance.

Her son, Michael, is now 22 years old and is an employee at Royal Oldsmobile in Columbus.

"My son's friends and other kids in the neighborhood always came to me when they wanted to talk. I enjoyed helping them so much that I decided to study counseling," Kambitz said.

She returned to school and earned her master's degree in counseling.

Kambitz is also a gifted artist. "I paint, sketch and make pottery," she said. "These days, I enjoy pottery most. It's wonderful therapy."

Although Kambitz has sold much of her art over the years, she also makes gifts.

Several of her departing co-workers have taken her pictures to new offices — forever reminders of her affection.

Kambitz has been at the 30th AG Battalion for five years. "This was my first job," she said. "Originally I wanted to get into counseling, but I've come to really enjoy my job here."

Responsible for many important tasks

Margaret Kambitz

at the 30th AG, Kambitz has been an "inspiration" to all and a role model, according to her peers.

"Margaret is an excellent employee," said Command Sgt. Maj. Hazel Taylor, Kambitz's supervisor. "The fact that she is handicapped has never been significant."

Quality must begin in the work place

By Jan Chervenak
TQM Manager

The first step is to switch from the old "efficiency-oriented" mindset to a "quality" approach.

Those of us who lived through the 1980s are aware that Japan, a nation about the size of Montana, has taken the lead in high quality manufacturing.

This realization has stimulated a nationwide call for quality in our products and in the work place.

Clearly, the work place is where quality must begin — if we want to get quality, we must be prepared to give quality.

Many private and public sector leaders have concluded that our organizations — including military organizations like Fort Benning — have become too soft in our demand for quality.

Sure, we're good, and we're proud of it.

But, if given a piece of paper and instructions to list all of things under our control that leave no room for improvement, how long would the list be?

For us to provide quality to our "customers," we must make some changes.

The first step is to switch from the old "efficiency-oriented" mind set to a "quality" approach.

Fort Benning's commanding general "signed up" for this quality approach.

The old efficiency-oriented approach has its roots in medieval Europe, where owners and managers were distanced from workers.

In this approach, managers do the thinking for less knowledgeable workers.

This approach is bound by rules and regulations and tends to be unresponsive and inflexible.

The quality approach is different. Its special characteristic is an emphasis on giving the customer what is wanted, when it is wanted.

And not just this time, but the next time and every time.

All this is accomplished through prevention of errors in work as it is being accomplished.

It sounds simple, and it is. If we get it right in our minds and hearts, we can do any job right the first time, every time.

We need help. . .we need to pull together.

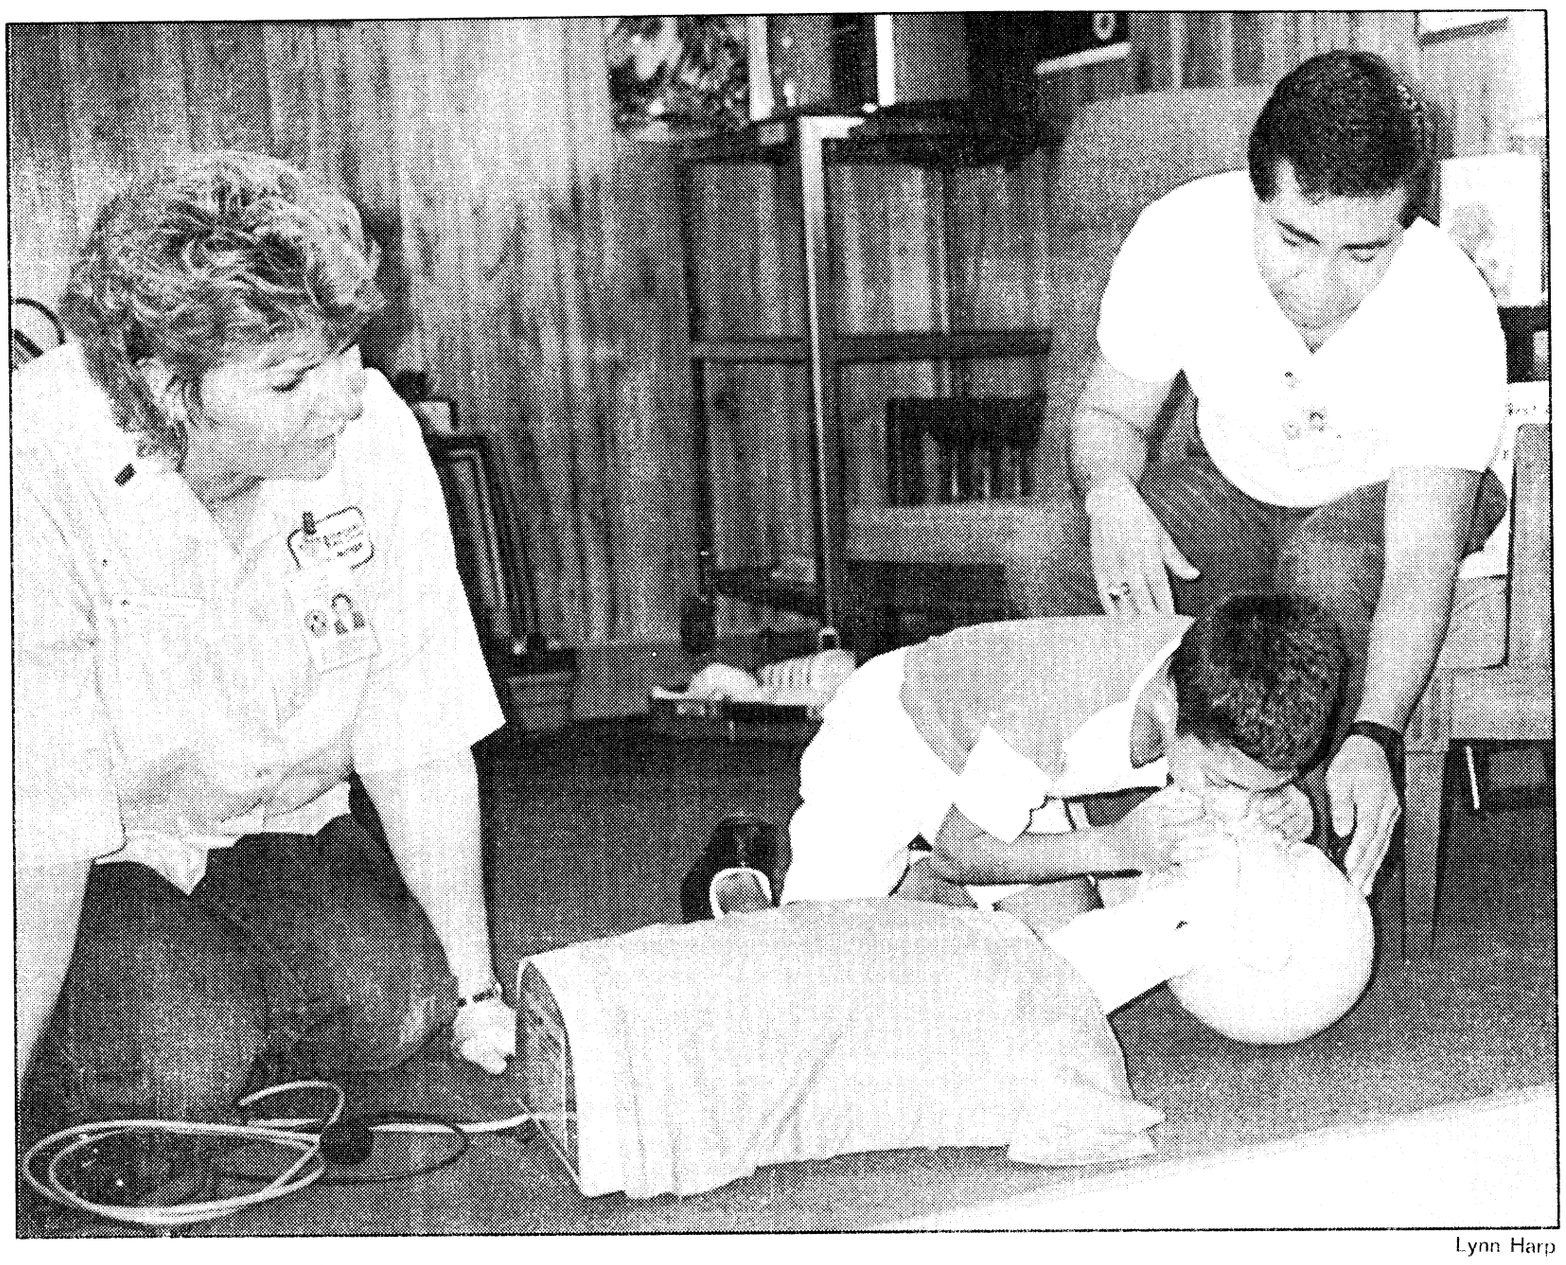
In the quality approach, work is designed so that each of us has a clear role in getting quality to the customer.

Each internal process is as a single step in a long march, with each step adding significantly to the overall journey.

We may not be in control of everything, but we are surely in control of our portion of the overall product, whatever it may be.

We can provide the "help" by providing feedback to supervisors and co-workers on aspects of the job for which we are individual experts.

This is where the power of large numbers comes into play.



With the quality approach, knowledge is spread throughout the system rather than retained at the top.

More correctly, the vast knowledge of the worker-experts is recognized for what it is — the key to quality.

In this system, workers themselves take the initiative to exceed quality expectations.

Workers are empowered to control the work flow, to pinpoint problems, and — as full partners in quality with their supervisors — to continuously improve their performance, just like athletes on a team.

On a quality team, it is the workers who have that "Passion for Excellence."

depression she had sunk into, McMillan went to work as a volunteer at the hospital in the pediatric playroom with recovering children.

She said that was one of the things that helped her face the future.

"I found out I could do something. I didn't have to sit in a rocking chair and do nothing," she said.

She said the most significant turning point in her life happened when she was watching the Jerry Lewis Muscular Dystrophy Telethon.

On the program, she found out that CMT was one of the diseases "under the umbrella of Jerry's Kids."

She got in contact with the Columbus chapter of the Muscular Dystrophy Association and found out that CMT was covered.

The association sent her to a clinic in Warm Springs, Ga., where she received treatment and "helping appliances," such as braces, special shoes and crutches.

She said she learned that MDA would help pay some of the cost to go back to school.

So she continued her education and earned another Bachelor of Science degree and a Master of Science degree.

She also became an ordained minister.

McMillan is currently involved with post graduate studies here.

She said receiving Handicapped Employee of the Year award came at a significant time in her life.

The anniversary of her comeback is coming up Nov. 30.

"Eleven years after being told that I would never work again, I am back," she said. "Don't ever tell me that I can't do something."

McMillan said she plans to keep on working as long as she can.

She said she plans to someday work with handicap children and their families.

"When I was first diagnosed, I had no counseling, no support group, nothing.

"It just wasn't available, or I didn't know where to look.

"I don't want anybody else to go through the trauma I went through without any help."

Things are still not easy for McMillan, but she has proved to herself and others that "it can be done."

Job improvement requires commitment

By Jan Chervenak
TQM Manager

Yesterday as I was walking from the parking lot, a friend began sharing with me his hopes and goals for quality improvement in his small slice of this great installation.

His obvious desire to "get on" with quality improvement and the sincerity of his side of the conversation gave me pause to reflect on what we can all do to "get on with it."

Here are some thoughts:

- Make your commitment to the quality approach total; be a quality fanatic. Resistance to change from the efficiency-oriented approach will be widespread.
- Participate in Total Quality Management education to create the will to change. Become a quality expert and lead in the "quality revolution." But don't judge too harshly; sometimes the best supervisors and workers show the greatest resistance to change.
- Trust the work force. Leaders and co-workers must be committed to the belief that worker-experts know what needs fixing and will accept more responsibility of quality.
- Foster customer-oriented behavior. Leaders and team members need to continually seek each other's needs and suggestions for improving the work flow, and, therefore, the product. Talk to your co-workers, leaders and supervisors.
- Be responsible to customers. Provide exactly what is needed, when it is needed. If a change is needed in the work process to be able to do it right the first time, then say so; belly up to your responsibility for quality.
- Enhance processes that add value to the customer; eliminate those that don't. Quality consciousness means recognizing actual and potential quality shortfall — and fixing it.
- Provide feedback. Job performance information needs to be timely and "user friendly." The focus is on fixing quality — not fixing blame.
- Remember, quality is a never-ending value and never truly attained. Once begun, it requires continued vigilence and discipline for continued improvement.

If it's not broken, improve it!

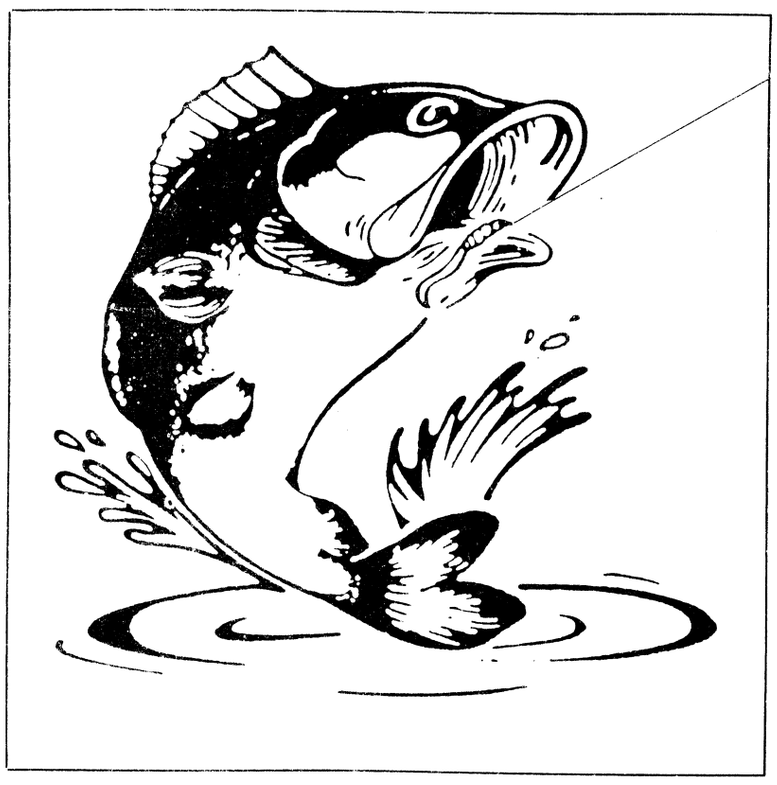
When water's cold and muddy, search for different conditions



By Earl Bentz and Steve Price
Outboard Marine Corporation

Sometime this fall or winter, you're going to encounter what most bass anglers consider the worst of all possible conditions: cold, muddy water.

It's a time when even the best pros in the business think about other things they'd rather do than be fishing.

"Cold, muddy water can really be tough," said angler Randy Dearman, a Lake Livingston, Texas, fishing guide and tournament angler who has seen his share of bad conditions.

"I've seen a lot of fishermen simply give up, put their boats on the trailer and head home when they have to fish in cold, muddy water.

> "The first thing I recommend fishermen do is try to find either clear water or warmer water."
>
> — Randy Dearman Fishing guide

"The first thing I recommend fishermen do is try to find some different conditions, either clear water or warmer water."

"Look for natural springs where the water will be warmer, or fish around a power discharge area because the water will be warmer there, too.

"Even rain may actually warm the water a little. If it is raining, look for runoff areas."

Just a few degrees of temperature change can help make bass more active, says Dearman.

As you move around a lake, check the temperature regularly, since it will not be constant throughout the lake.

"The colder the water, the more channel-oriented bass become," he adds. "Bass may suspend, but they may be near the bottom if the water has been cold for a long time.

"One of the key areas to look for bass is where different channels, such as a tributary creek and a larger river channel, intersect. Even two creek channels can be a good spot, especially if the channels are well-defined and offer a good break line."

Among Dearman's favorite lures for fishing under these conditions are jigs, spoons and spinnerbaits.

He said he especially likes to slow-roll a spinnerbait over the edge of a channel drop, letting the lure fall as deep as 20 feet at times.

"For this type of fishing, I use a one-ounce spinnerbait with a single, size six blade and with a pork trailer," Dearman said.

"I use a six and one-half foot medium, action rod and 15- to 20-pound test line. The important thing is to stay in contact with the lure as it falls.

"Strikes will usually be light, and if you feel the blade stop turning, just set the hook."

SPIRITUAL

Mothers and fathers should avoid the 'good' parent syndrome

By Richard Garrison
USAIC Chaplain's Office

"One of the greatest handicaps a child can suffer is to be raised by a 'good' parent,'" according to The Parents Handbook by Don Dinkmeyer and Gary D. McKay.

What a startling statement. Most parents hope and pray they are good parents.

To understand how "good" can be a handicap requires knowing a little about the philosophy behind the STEP (Systematic Training for Effective Parenting) program .

STEP suggests that "good" parents "are those who are so involved with their children that they believe they must do everything for the children."

In effect, "good" parents actually become "servants" to their children. They say things like "hurry up and get dressed," "eat your breakfast," "don't be late," "don't forget your lunch," "tuck in your shirt," "do your homework " and so on.

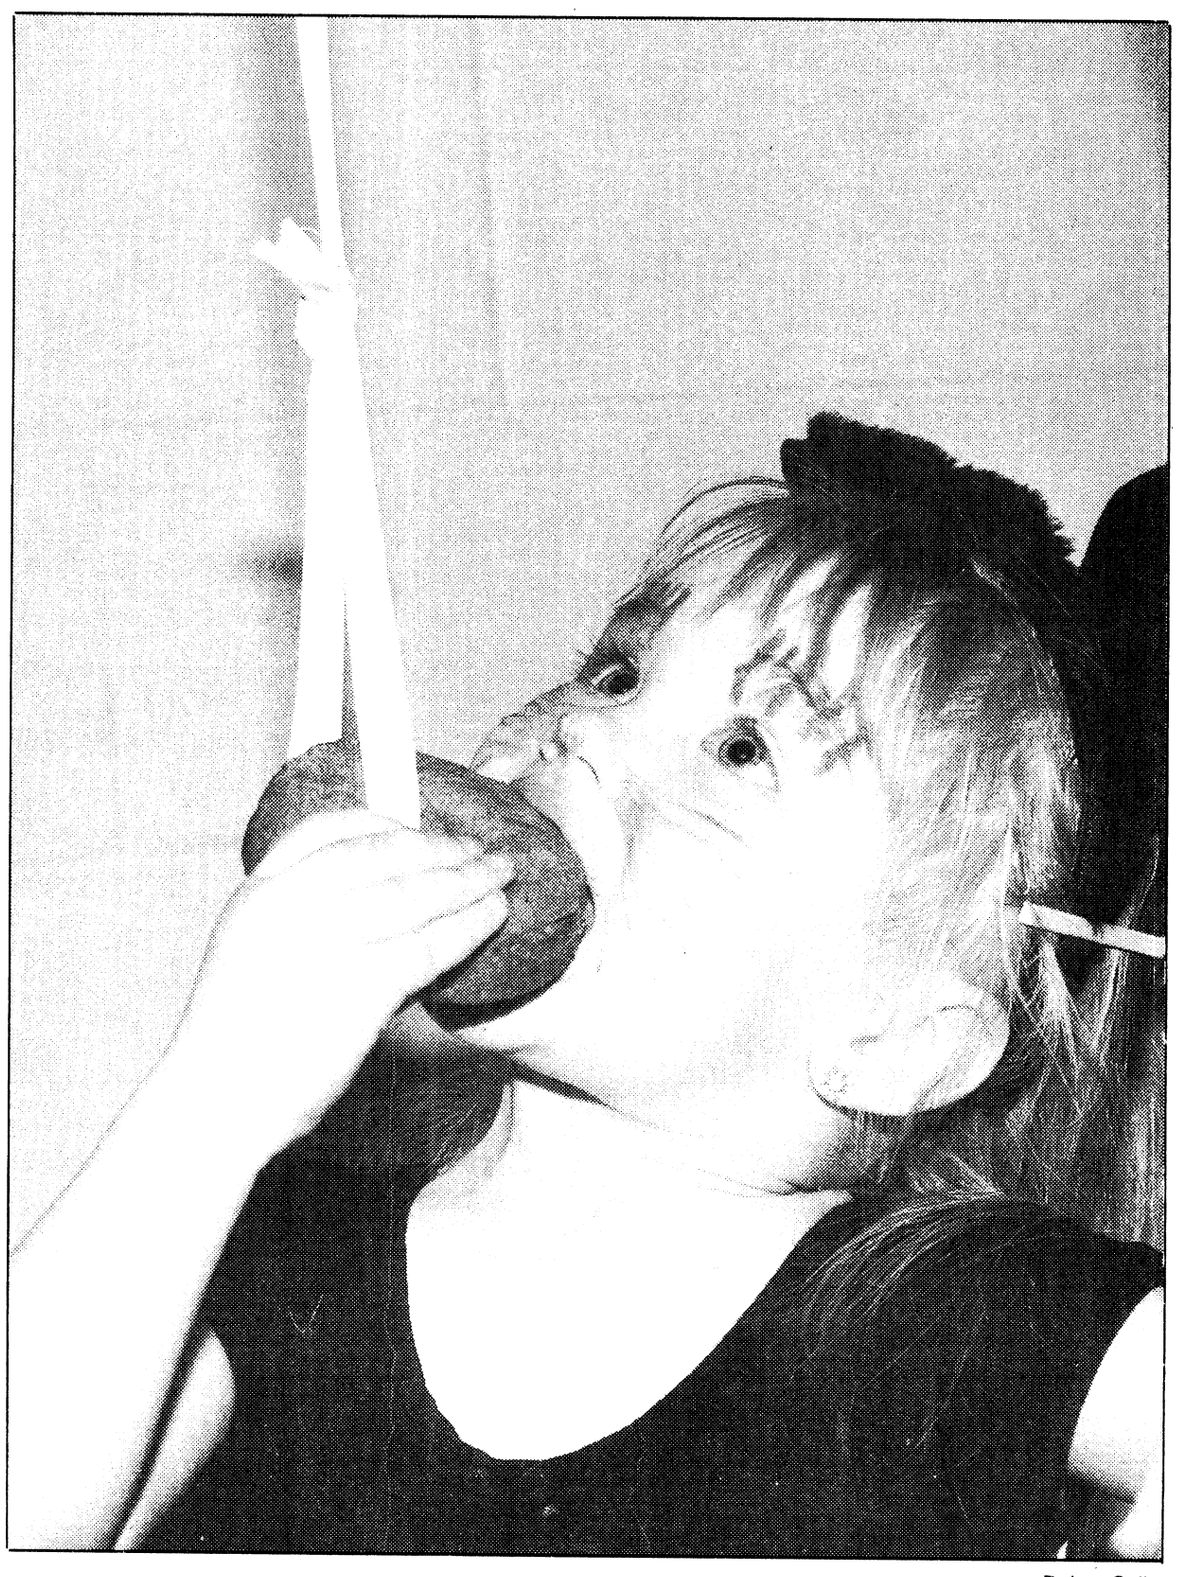
Though well-intentioned, these parents actually rob their children of learning responsibility and independence.

In their attempts to shield their children from difficulties and to protect them from mistakes, "good" parents actually rob their children of self-confidence and self-reliance.

The STEP philosophy maintains that "good" parents assume responsibility for everything their children do, believing that "their children's behavior reflects on their competence as parents."

In contrast to "good" parents, "responsible" parents are concerned with allowing children to learn from their mistakes, which, in turn, builds self-confidence and responsibility.

"Responsible" parents permit choices, encourage independence, promote equality and focus on strengths of children. Instead of overindulging their children, they encourage mutual respect and contribution.



Their goal is to be firm, but not domineering; giving direction without dictation.

This tells the child "you are important," "you are capable," or "you have the freedom to choose" within reasonable boundaries.

No one would argue that effective parenting is hard work, but it is possible.

With a few simple principles correctly applied, it can be an enjoyable experience.

For more information on the next STEP class, which begins Jan. 9, 1990, call the Family Life Center at 545-1760.

Martin Army chaplains lend ear, helping hand to patients in need

By Debra Galle
USAIC Chaplain's Office

Among the many things a Martin Army Community Hospital patient can count on is the ear of a chaplain.

Chap. (Maj.) James Phelps, hospital staff chaplain, says he realizes the importance and vital need for the presence of chaplains at the hospital.

"We are there when a crisis occurs," Phelps said. "Even the most routine visit to a hospital raises a person's anxiety and concern.

"It's the spiritual dimension that brings many people to us, as they search for hope and strength.

"As chaplains, we try to offer care, comfort and courage to everyone around us," he said.

The chaplains are not only there for MACH patients and family, but for health care professionals as well.

Phelps said it is not unusual for staff members to drop into the chaplain's office for advice on how to handle their everyday stresses and concerns.

"The beauty of the hospital chaplaincy is that the ministry needs are so great and you feel as if you can make a difference in someone's life every day," Phelps said.

Chap. (Capt.) Robert Reese, USAIC Chaplain's Office, has many memories of the three years he spent as a MACH chaplain.

Reese said the hospital is constantly filled with people in need, and sometimes their needs are simply to heal loneliness.

He said he could often find older people who basically visit MACH just to be around others.

The tiny chapel in the basement of the hospital is next to the chaplain's office and is a point of refuge, introspection and sometimes simply a place to pause for a moment, Phelps said.

Post soldiers perform in Ibsen's 'Enemy'

By John Robinson
Bayonet staff writer

Two Fort Benning soldiers have stars in their eyes.

The currently-running "An Enemy of the People" includes as members of its cast Maj. Gregory P. Smith and Sgt. 1st Class Arturo Otero, both of the Dental Activity.

The production, put on at Columbus' Springer Studio Theatre, is one of drama and humor.

Authored by Henrik Ibsen, the story centers around a Norwegian town, circa 1890, which claims that its waters are beneficial to the health of tourists.

There is a problem, however, with pollutants in the waters, and the townspeople wish to keep this fact a secret from the public.

What follows is a tale in morality, ethics and stubbornness.

Smith and Otero, although not main characters, enjoy their roles as "townspeople."

"It's (acting) something I wanted to do for many years but never had the time," said Smith. "It's really a challenge trying to act like someone you're not."

Otero, also new to the stage, was convinced immediately. "Now I know why I always wanted to do it," he said.

The play opened Nov. 2 and was well received, according to both actors.

"It went off real well; the audience really liked it," said Smith.

Otero agreed that it went pretty well and added, "It's a good play; we had a lot of fun doing it for the opening."

What does the future hold for these budding actors?

Smith will be the only military performer in "Annie," which opens Nov. 30. He said this next production will offer him four or five parts, a "promotion" from his bit part in "Enemy."

Otero admitted "I'd like to (perform again), but it does take take a lot of time."

"An Enemy of the People" will wrap up with evening shows today, Friday and Saturday.

Flu shots available

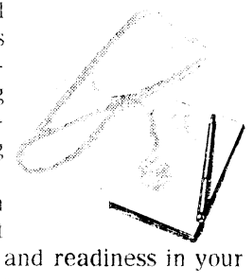
Martin Army Community Hospital is now offering flu shots to beneficiaries.

While most people who come down with flu are ill for only a few days, some have much more serious cases and require hospitalization.

Each year, thousands of people die from the flu or flu-related complications.

Flu is not usually life threatening in otherwise healthy individuals. However, persons with other health problems can become seriously ill or even die from the flu or complications from flu.

Special high-risk individuals who should be vaccinated include: adults over 65 years of age, persons with a history of lung, heart or kidney problems or a type of cancer or immunological disorder that lowers the body's normal resistance to infection.



The new flu vaccine is safe for all ages over six months and has fewer side effects than those used in the past.

Flu shots are available now through December at the Allergy/Immunization Clinic on the ninth floor at MACH.

For more information, call the clinic at 544-4710/1221, unless you are a member of Family Practice. Family Practice members should call their clinic.

Runners return

By Shawn Bryson
Bayonet staff writer

Eleven exhausted runners, civilian and military, were welcomed home with cheers of praise as a last burst of energy carried them across the finish line of the second annual American Flag Run in downtown Columbus Nov. 9.

Maj. Gen. Michael F. Spigelmire, Fort Benning commander, and more than 200 other supporters, joined the crew of flag runners for the last mile of the journey, which began 850 miles earlier at the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier at Arlington National Cemetery in Arlington, Va.

Spigelmire carried the flag throughout the last mile, which began in Phenix City, Ala., and crossed the Chattahoochee River into Columbus, ending at the Promenade near the Columbus Ironworks Trade and Convention Center.

"I don't think it could have been more perfect," said Ron Gorday, one of two team captains for the run. "The weather and runner conditions were just great."

Gorday said that aside from a minor mechanical problem with one of the vans used for transporting supplies, the entire run went like clockwork.

The 11 runners were divided into two teams, A and B, and carried the flag every step of the 850-miles in celebration of Veterans Day, Gorday said.

The runners from Fort Benning were: Thomas Brophy, Company B, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry; Lise Cote, a physician at Martin Army Community Hospital; Ann M. McDonald, a staff writer for The Bayonet; Juan Padilla, Co. B, 1st Bn., 11th Inf.; Richard Schick, a physician's assistant at Troop Medical Clinic #6; Herb Segal, commander, MACH; and Ron Gorday, a supervisory education specialist, Directorate of Training and Doctrine.

> Each team ran 50-mile legs, with each member running 10 miles before handing off to another member.

Other runners were Jim Accordino of Total Systems; John M. Henderson, a physician at Hughston Sports Medicine Hospital; Marty Steele of the Columbus Mudcats; and Jim Musselman, a maintenance engineer with Woodruff Management.

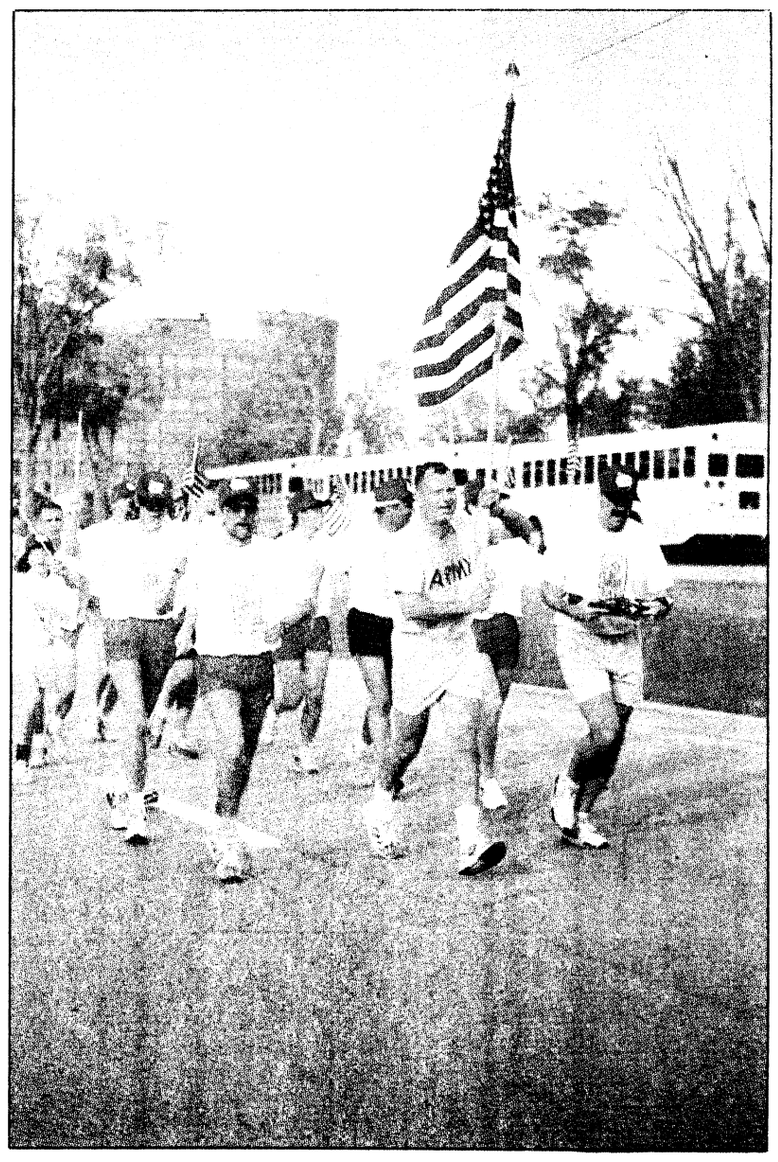
He said that each team ran 50-mile legs, with each member running 10 miles before handing off to another member.

Gorday said while one team was running, the other team was already on its way to the next transfer point where they would shower, eat and rest.

Gorday said the only difference between this and last year's run, other than a slightly altered route, was that this year, the 11 runners completed the run without any help.

"Last year some other track clubs and soldiers from the 82nd Airborne Division at Fort Bragg, N.C., ran with us," he said.

The route took the runners from the National Cemetery to Richmond, Va., and then through the Carolinas.



They entered Georgia at Augusta and headed north to Athens. From there, the runners swept through Atlanta and headed south toward Columbus.

Upon arrival at Peachtree Mall in north Columbus, all 11 runners began the last nine miles of the run. They then ran to Phenix City where about 200 runners joined them for the last mile.

Gorday said the only time the enthusiasm of the runners slipped a little was in a stretch between Raleigh, N.C., and Columbia, S.C.

"It was just the length of that stretch," he said. "Once we got to Columbia, everybody started to feel better and was eager to get home."

Each of the runners received a commanding general's gold coin for their efforts and was treated to a reception at the Columbus Hilton following the finish of the run.

Vets dedicate memorial to comrades

By John Robinson
Bayonet staff writer

Veterans of the Korean War from several ranger airborne companies gathered near York Field to dedicate a memorial to the killed and missing of that war.

"This is not a monument to death but to courage and sacrifice," said Emmett Fike, president of The Ranger Infantry Companies (Airborne) of The Korean War.

Fike and his senior comrades gathered Nov. 9 in front of Infantry Hall to pay tribute to their fallen comrades and to offer a monument to the same.

"The setting is appropriate," said Daily near the shady, tree-lined area just east of Building 4. He was referring to the large ranger population at Fort Benning.

That population was well represented. Rangers from Ranger Training Brigade, 75th Ranger

Scouts to collect food bags Saturday

By John Robinson
Bayonet staff writer

Local scouts will pick up the food bags they distributed Nov. 11, hopefully brimming with canned goods, Saturday, at 8:30 a.m.

For the past month, Boy Scouts from the Chattahoochee Council have been conducting operation Scouting For Food.

This mission has involved scouts and volunteer leaders in west Georgia and east Alabama in an effort to collect 100 tons of canned food.

The local appeal is part of a national Good Turn being conducted by the Boy Scouts of America.

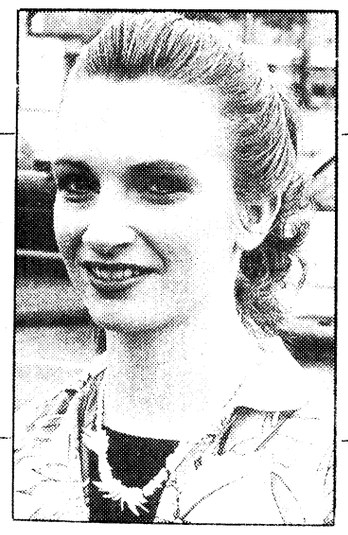
The bags will be dropped off at Building 2612, in Fort Benning's Soldiers' Plaza where Brig. Gen. Michael Steele, deputy commanding general and assistant commandant, USAIC, and Col. James I. Daily, chief of staff, will be on hand from 11 a.m. to noon to congratulate the scouts on their efforts during the past two weeks.

Persons wishing to turn in their own bags may do so at that time.

Bags are still available at all Goolsby Food stores.

Maj. Nathan Godwin, Fort Benning project chairman, said they prefer canned goods and unopened boxes. He said that no seals should be broken or opened. He discouraged donating meats and jarred goods.

"This project is one of the most remarkable statements of the scouting spirit that we can make," said Charles Hecht, III, local council chairman, "and one of the most worthwhile efforts we can offer the community.



"Hunger is a problem we can address, and our neighbors facing the pain of hunger are people we can help."

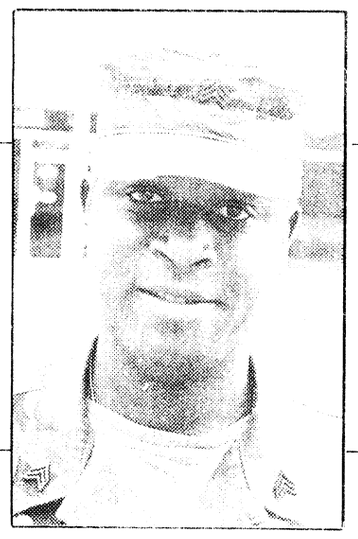
What's the significance of opening the Berlin Wall?



Valerie Grimes, Fort Benning Flower Shop — "I think it's good. I think it will be nice for those people who have been separated from their families to have a chance to reunite."

Vanessa Reese, Fort Benning Flower Shop — "I think there is an ulterior motive behind this. Maybe the Soviets are trying to give so they can get something in return, although I'm not sure what."

2nd Lt. John Stanton, Co. A, 2nd Bn., 11th Inf. Regt. — "The opportunity for the families that have been separated to reunite is first and foremost. The end of an historic landmark is significant. The potential that Germany might be reunited is also great."

Sgt. Allen Ricks, HHC, 197th Inf. Bde. — "Sending out a message that there are no more obstacles standing between East Germany and freedom is very significant."

Sgt. Sandy Hoover, AG Repl. Co., 1st Bn., 11th Inf. — "To me it just shows change and the beginning of the unification of Germany."

Sgt. Paul Morrissette, AG Repl. Co., 1st Bn., 11th Inf. — "I think it shows the end of hostility and, hopefully, the beginning of world peace. I think it's great."

Runner: 'We did it for veterans'

Last week I ran the longest race of my life — from Arlington National Cemetery to Columbus.

Even though my legs still ache, if I was told we were going to do it again tommorrow, I'd say, "What time do we leave."

I'd do it because I truly believe that there is no better way to honor our nation's veterans.

Running from Arlington to Columbus is very fitting because Fort Benning is the home of the infantry, the place where all infantrymen are trained to fight for our country. And Arlington National Cemetery is where many of the brave men who trained here were laid to rest.

Training for this run began at the end of July when the coordinator for the event, Jim Accordino, asked me if I would be a flag runner.

Since I had been training for the Army 10-miler, I thought I would be in fairly good shape for the Flag Run.

I didn't realize it would take so much more than just physical stamina. I couldn't even begin to understand what it would take mentally.

We drove to Washington and split up into teams.

Since I was a woman on a team of five men, I felt I had to prove myself. I figured they were thinking, "Can she do it?"

Heck, I don't blame them. At that point, I wasn't sure myself.

The time finally came for me to run. I was the last runner in my shift. We were nine miles out of Richmond, Va.

As I knocked out those miles one by one, armed with the flag, the only thing that kept me company at 6 a.m. that Sunday morning was the van behind me carrying the rest of the team.

A short distance outside of Richmond, a patrolman pulled up in front of me with his sirens blaring and escorted me the rest of the way into the city.

When I arrived at the steps of the capital building, my teammates gave me a hug.

I had passed the first test. But there was a long way to go yet.

As I shared my thoughts with a woman on the other team, Lise Cote, I realized that this was bigger than both of us.

What we were doing was nothing compared to what the veterans in our group, Ron Gorday, Rick Schick and Juan Padilla had done.

They were there. They fought for our country.

The impact of it all hit me on my second run. It started at dusk.

The temperature dropped, and I was wearing shorts.

I was cold and miserable. My legs felt like ice blocks, and I was beginning to sniffle when I passed a church.

Light was streaming from the windows where a service was being conducted. People were praying. For what? Life, I thought. A better life for themselves and their families.

It dawned on me then that that's what our veterans had done for us. They had fought for a better life, a life of freedom. Not just for themselves, but for all of us.

Tears welled up in my eyes. I realized this wasn't for me; I wasn't important. Getting the flag to Columbus was the mission.

I'd do it for them, I decided. I'd carry Old Glory just as they did — with pride and determination.

From then on when it was my turn to run, I eagerly jumped out of the van ready to do my part or more so if needed.

Come hell or high water we would get that flag home.

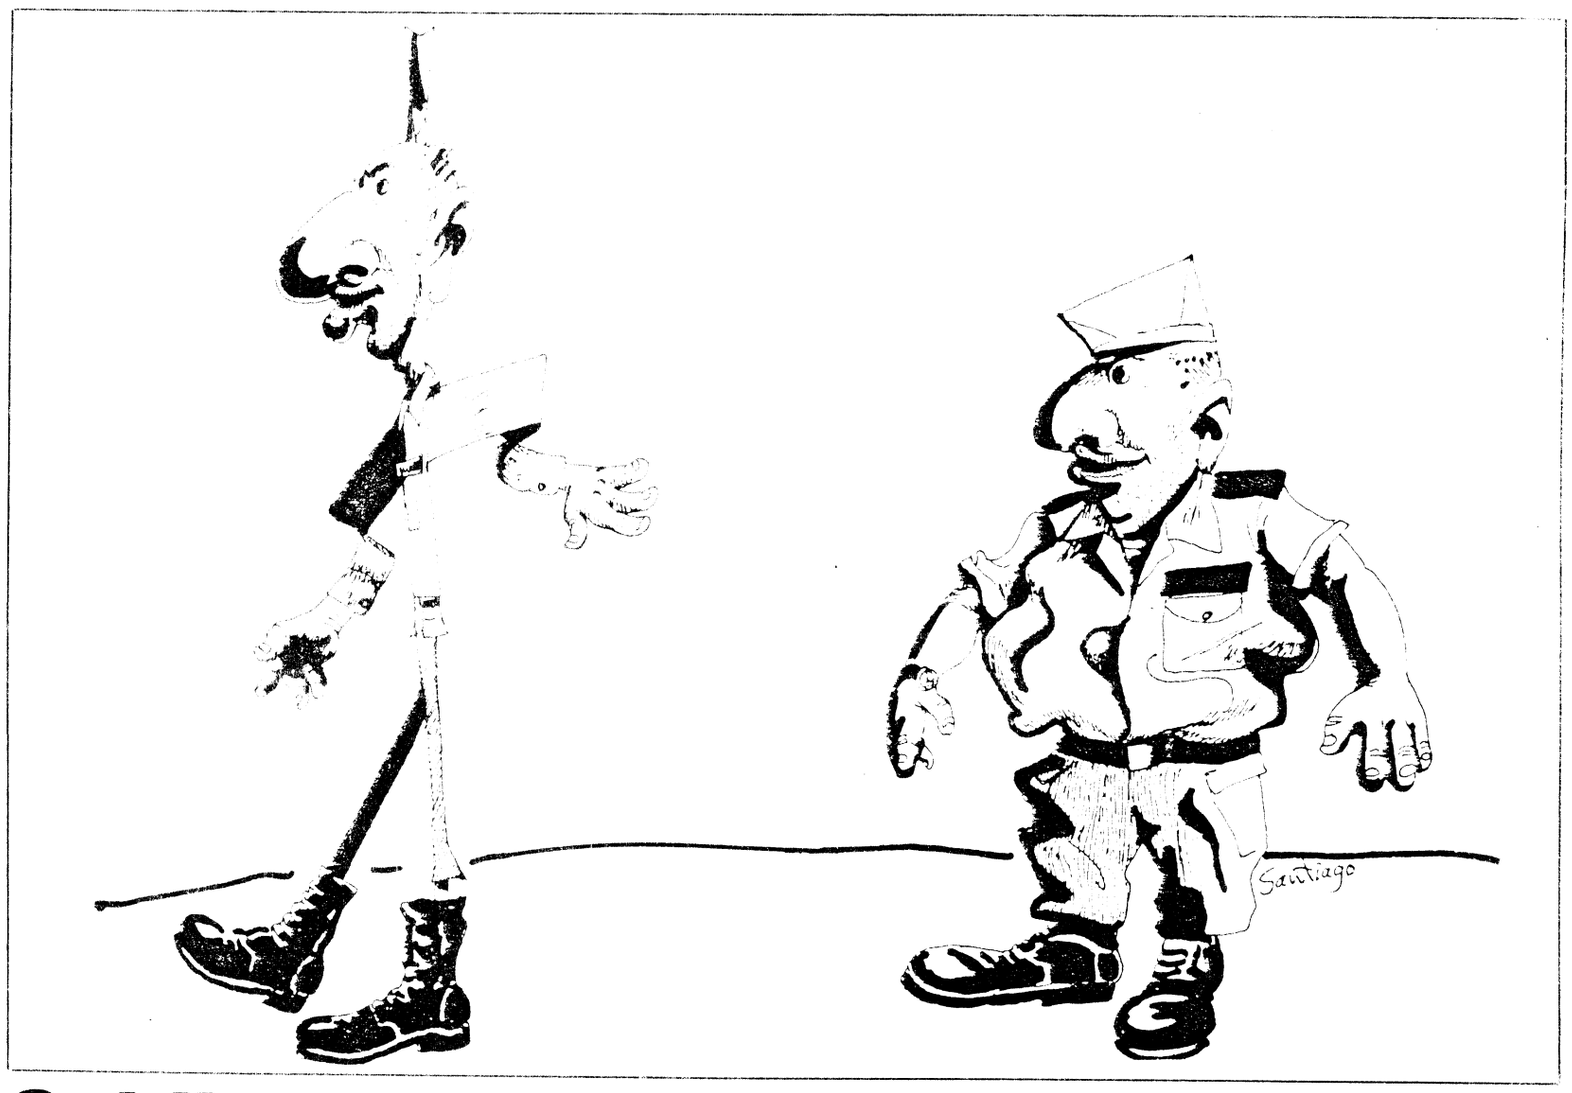
Our last major stop before home was Atlanta, having already passed through Raleigh, N.C.; Columbia, S.C.; Augusta, Ga.

We were no longer a group of runners, we were family by then. We laughed when we battled off dogs with pizza and cried at ceremonies such as the one in Augusta.

In Atlanta, the runners had a chance to get together for the first time since leaving the Capital. I think the energy radiating from the group could have lit up Atlanta.

That spirit carried us through Manchester where we picked up some youngsters from the Roosevelt Wilderness Camp, a camp for troubled young men and women.

Those youngsters ran with us in five-mile stretches. They were so happy to run with us that even in the heat they weren't ready to quit until we pulled them into the van to rest.



Finally at Peachtree Mall, we rallied up for our last nine miles to the Promenade.

We started at the cemetary in Virginia as a group and crossed the finish line as a family.

I like to think this has made us veterans in some way.

We battled the roadways, the dogs, a broken-down van and our own minds. We won.

Soldiers don't make best dressed list

By Clyde Snively
USAIC Public Affairs Office

The fashion guru for the Columbus newspaper released his list of best dressed this past Sunday. Once again, no military made the list.

It's not hard to understand why.

Have you ever seen an Army type in civilian clothes?

They may just as well be in uniform. They all look alike when they are in what they consider to be "dress up clothes." (This excludes us EMs. We know how to dress when off duty.)

First, if they wear a suit, it's usually one of those polyester jobs that sags and bags.

I think they must all order from the same magazine: "Your choice of slacks, olive drab, tan, gray, three for $29.95."

Sports clothes, same story.

All officers and senior NCOs must buy their sports coats from the same rack at the same time — they come in two varieties, tweed or houndstooth.

The ones who really stand out are those who do undercover work, like investigators, or those guys with secret units that go about the country coordinating secret exercises.

Part of the disguise seems to be to let their military haircuts get a little long and shaggy. Next come those dreadful civilian uniforms.

They then look exactly like military undercover gents with shaggy haircuts.

I'm happy to report that most have at least given up wearing their black corcorans with civilian clothes. But some of them should go back to the military shoe.

Now they're wearing athletic shoes with their civilian dress up ensemble. Maybe in case they have to chase someone.

On the military side, maybe we can get someone onto Josiah's list next year. Have you seen where the Army is going back to Zoot suits.

Those are the wide-shouldered, narrow-waisted suits of the 40s.

Since the Army green coat's going to be cut that way, why not go the entire 9.5 yards and put pleats and cuffs on the pants. And give us pointy-toed shoes.

Folks who better not make Josiah's best dressed list are those desk-borne warriors. You know the ones.

The guys with the starched BDUs and spit-shined boots who never leave the office.

Commanders at the highest level proclaim the BDU as a uniform for the field. It's designed to be sloppy, they say.

Yet, right off post is a cleaner that advertises: "We starch BDUs." It's because they know, that no matter what the commander commands, there will be soldiers who want starched BDUs.

Starch is part of the military mind set.

According to Polybius, Spartans were starching their little battle dress skirts, and Marco Polo recorded that Ghengis Khan starched his braid.

In fact, it wasn't that long ago that in order to climb into your fatigues you had to run a knife through the pants leg to get them apart.

To me, the solution is simple. If in an office environment, wear office-type clothes — Class Bs or As.

If in the field, wear BDUs. Make them soft and floppy and don't spit shine the boots.

After all, we don't want to give away our location to the enemy by wearing BDUs that have the IR reducer all starched out and by having boots that reflect for miles around.

Laundries and bootblacks might not be happy with this, but think of the money and time it'll save your every-day soldier.

No more sitting around spit shining boots or ironing BDUs. Fatigue and field work should be just that — doing something that gets you dirty and sweaty.

For parades, why not dress up. We don't march in that many, so let's show off when we do.

Let's hop in our Class Bs or As. I certainly don't think it will detract from our military readiness posture if we march in something other than BDUs.

Nor do I think our image as warriors will suffer in the eyes of the people downtown. In fact, I suspect they'd like to see us in our finery. How often do they get the chance?

Wait 'til next year Josiah.

Some confused over policy change

Department of the Army message

There is still some confusion as to the March 30, 1989, policy change regarding wearing of numerals on awards.

Numerals starting with number two are to be used to denote second and subsequent awards of several service medals, ribbons and level of NCO military education.

The Army no longer uses the numeral one device except when used as part of a two-digit number.

Soldiers are required to replace numerals to comply with the changed policy. This change will be included in the update 15 to AR 672-5-1, tentatively scheduled for publication in February 1990.

The numeral two is used to depict the second award of the air medal, multinational force and observers medal and the Army Reserve components overseas training ribbon. The bar ribbon device depicts the first award of these honors.

The NCO Professional Development Ribbon emblem (bar ribbon device) denotes primary level. The numeral two used on the NPDR reflects completion of BNCOC. Numbers three and four on the NPDR indicate completion of advanced and senior levels to depict sergeants major course graduates.

Retirees gather for open house

By Michelle Le Roy Harrison
Bayonet staff writer

Despite inclement weather, about 660 military retirees and spouses visited Fort Benning for the ninth annual Military Retiree Open House, Nov. 2 through 4.

According to Barbara Youngs, retirement services officer, retirees and spouses visited from Georgia, Alabama, Florida and as far as Louisiana.

"A lot of them had served at Fort Benning at one time and just wanted to come home again," Youngs said.

Retirees and spouses were treated to three days of specially-planned events, starting off with a golf game at the Follow Me Golf Course and a Health Fair sponsored by Martin Army Community Hospital.

At the Health Fair, visitors were offered free physical examinations that included cholesterol tests, blood pressure and blood glucose screening, oral cancer examination and pap smears.

According to Capt. Melinda Fuentes, health fair project officer, the Health Fair is convenient for retirees who don't live by a military hospital.

At the fair, retirees and their families could get examinations without any wait.

Part of the three-day schedule included a One Station Unit Training graduation ceremony that included a parade and military demonstrations.

The Ranger Training Brigade put on a "Rangers-in-Action" show and the 36th Engineer Group held a ribbon bridge demonstration.

Some retirees attended the 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment's annual retreat ceremony.

The commissary and Army, Air Force Exchange Service held special sales and shopping sprees for retirees. Local business also gave away prizes.

A county fair was held on the last day of the open house.

Normally, said Youngs, only military and Department of Defense services are present.

This year, local civilian businesses that would be of interest to retirees and their families were available.

Fort Benning's post commanding general, Maj. Gen. Michael F. Spigelmire presented awards to two special retirees.

Retired Sgt. 1st. Class June V. Maxfield was named the Retirement Service Office Volunteer of the Year for her dedication.

Retired Chief Warrant Officer Coates Brown was also recognized for the art work he does for the RSO.

According to Youngs, next year's open house will focus on Air Force retirees.

War

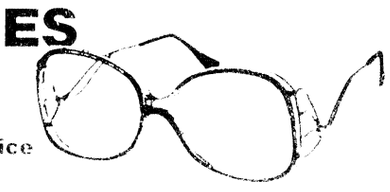
Regiment and 3rd Ranger Battalion were on hand for a ceremony in which young, present-day rangers symbolized their fallen counterparts in the Korean War.

"These young men are representative of the best America had to offer," said Bob Black, veteran of 8th Rgr. Co.



Chap. (Capt.) Glenn L. Bloomstrom, of 3rd Rgr. Bn., said, "Their courage never dies; they will always be our inspiration."

Fike, along with those who "lost a limb in battle" gathered around the monument and unveiled it.

Fike then transferred the "roster of the dead" to Daily, symbolizing the change in ownership from the rangers to the Fort Benning community.

"This represents the sacrifice we made," said Daily. "It is important that young soldiers do not lose what this monument represents.

Infantry Board tests new mortar system

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

The Army may soon have a new 120mm, carrier-mounted Battalion Mortar System in its inventory, pending the outcome of TEXCOM Infantry Board's recent testing.

The Material Developer provided six BMS-120 systems and 2,050 rounds of ammunition to INFBD for the test.

A composite TOE Heavy Mortar Platoon (Mechanized) of two firing sections (three squads each) of Indirect Fire Crewmen — one from the 1st Battalion and one from the 2nd Battalion, 18th Infantry and two Small Arms Repairers comprised the test soldiers.

All of the test soldiers came from the 197th Infantry Brigade except one Small Arms Repairer who came from the 36th Engineer Group.

197th soldiers were selected because they scored the highest on the annual gunnery exams, according to Michael Hayes, Heavy Weapons Test Division, The Infantry Board.

The 29th Infantry Regiment provided one week of individual and crew training on the BMS-120 prior to the start of testing.

The test was conducted from Aug. 28 to Oct. 13.

Planning for the execution of the test has been an on-going process since 1985, said test designer, Hayes.

Hayes wrote the test the soldiers conducted. Capt. Michael R. Wagers was test officer responsible for the execution of the INFB test.

Results of the test will be sent to the Training and Doctrine Command for a decision.

The BMS-120 is a smoothbore, muzzle-loading, 120mm mortar system with a minimum range of 200 meters and a maximum range of 7,200 meters designed to replace the 4.2-inch mortar in the mechanized infantry, motorized infantry and armor units.

The test soldiers wore the Battle Dress Uniform and mission-oriented Protected Posture 4 as they examined the mission performance, detectability, reliability, availability, maintainability, logistic supportability, training, human factors and safety aspects of the system.

"The human factor is safety of the weapon and what the soldiers think and feel about the weapon," Wagers said. "The human factor is probably the most important part of the test because it is input from the soldiers who will ultimately be using the new equipment."

"And that," he added, "is the opinion that matters most to officials who will decide to buy this mortar."

One of the squads that made up the "human factor" included Cpl. Kenneth Gee, Spec. Shannon Perry, Pvt. 2 Steven Lemponen and Pfc. Robert Bauman. They are part of a 4.2-inch mortar team in their unit.

The squad was enthusiastic about the testing because they were the first soldiers to lay their hands on the equipment.

"There's something pretty special about doing something before anyone else," Perry said. "You have to make room for advancement, and I like having input."

He said the 120mm mortar is a good system, and it will make the total overall mission faster and better.

"I like the fact that it's lighter, too," he said. "This makes it a lot more mobile."

Perry said the BMS-120 is a good system, and it will make the indirect fire crewman's mission of placing steel on target more quicker and easier.

Gee said that he was impressed with the horizontal manner in which the HE and illumination rounds are stowed in the "pizza-like oven" racks on either side of the interior of the carrier.

Staff Sgt. Patrick Noble, a section sergeant, said he has served 10 years as a mortarman and is highly impressed with the BMS-120.

"It's got a longer range," he said, "and anytime you can engage the enemy at a greater range, it is to our advantage," Noble said.

Although the opinions of the soldiers are important to the test, Wagers said that the statistics taken during the test are also very important.

"We have to look at this mortar from every perspective, and, to make sure that happened, we started gearing up for this test a year ago," he said.

According to Wagers, it took a year to determine the types of test that were needed.

This included training personnel to properly evaluate the test and to maintain the vehicle so everything would resemble the vehicle as it would actually be used in a unit.

With all that included and the testing wrapped up here, the results go to the Training and Doctrine Command to weigh the pros and cons.

If they weigh in the mortar's favor the 120mm mortar will be a part of the Army's inventory.

The INFBD continues to work on the BMS-120 by preparing the final test report due to be published Dec. 12.

Detention Facility observes 50th year of operation

By Michelle Le Roy Harrison
Bayonet staff writer

The Installation Detention Facility observes its 50th year at Fort Benning today.

The facility went into operation and received its first prisoners Nov. 17, 1939.

Prior to that, a temporary facility was located in the Harmony Church area.

The facility's name and responsibilities have changed throughout the years.

It was first called the Area Confinement Facility and was responsible for prisoners from several posts.

After the Vietnam War, it changed to its current status of Installation Detention Facility.

Although it still has prisoners from several area posts, it now holds them only for a short period of time while those prisoners await pre-trial or serve sentences of four months or less.

The facility provides confinement and correctional treatment of military prisoners for Department of Defense installations within the states of Georgia, Alabama, South Carolina, Mississippi, Florida and the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico.

An interservice agreement allows the facility to accept prisoners from other services.

Currently, the facility can house about 122 inmates during standard conditions and 201 during emergencies.

The average daily population during 1988 was about 21 prisoners.

The detention facility has five buildings within the compound that include an in-house chapel during facility, work employment shop, library and medical dispensary. Space is provided for prisoners according to their status, grade and sex.

'Early Bird' service to make getting refills easier

By Jeanne Dickerson
Martin Army Community Hospital

Comment cards and patient satisfaction surveys reveal that waiting time at the pharmacy is often frustrating to medical beneficiaries.

The Refill Pharmacy at the Post Exchange Mall was opened to make getting refills more convenient.

While it has helped to reduce the waiting time, there are still times when the number of incoming prescriptions is large enough to cause a backlog.

Recognizing that many of our beneficiaries are not acutely ill and have jobs during duty hours, Lt. Col. Roger Williams, chief, Pharmacy Service, has announced an "Early Bird" service at the Main Outpatient Pharmacy.

Patients may leave refill prescription forms in the drop box next to the pharmacy intake window, located just inside the clinic entrance.

This service is only available for refills when the original prescription was filled at Martin Army Community Hospital and only when there are refills remaining.

New prescriptions must still be turned in during normal hours of operation.

The box will be provided from 5 p.m., when the pharmacy closed, until 8 a.m., when it opens.

You may leave your prescription forms during these hours, following the instructions on the special refill form provided at the box, and pick up your medication after 11 a.m. that same day.

When you pick up your medication, bring the empty medicine container from the previous prescription, your claim slip and your military identification card.

Most prescriptions cannot be refilled if the date of the original prescription, found on the lower left corner of the label, is more than six months old.

For more information about the "Early Bird" service call the Outpatient Pharmacy at 544-4771/1583 during duty hours.

Q. Are Merchant Marine seamen considered veterans for the purpose of Department of Veterans Affairs benefits?

A. The Defense Department has declared that certain Merchant Marine seamen who served in active, ocean-going service from Dec. 7, 1941, to Aug. 15, 1945, are veterans for VA benefits purposes.

The decision also affects Civil Service crew members aboard U.S. Army Transport Service and Naval Transportation Service vessels in ocean-going service during the same period.

TRADOC commander tells posts to tighten belts

TRADOC News Release

Commanders throughout Training and Doctrine Command have been told by TRADOC Commander Gen. John W. Foss to conduct operations at "bare bones" levels in response to budget reductions.

The directions were contained in a recent message Foss sent to commanders.

"While we do not yet have our fiscal year '90 budget, the outlook is grim," the message read. "fiscal year '91 will be worse. Therefore, tough decisions will be required this year even though the payoff is next year."

Foss said commanders must also "reduce travel to the absolute minimum, execute only essential training, sustain basic quality of life for our soldiers and their families" and "defer commitments until the fund and manpower picture firms up."

"This is the third straight year of negative growth," said Larry Stallings, deputy budget director in TRADOC's deputy chief of staff for resource management. "TRADOC's budget has been going down since fiscal year '87."

In fiscal 1987, the TRADOC operating budget was about $2.6 billion. For fiscal 1990, the requested budget is $2.48 billion.

"That figure (the fiscal year '90 budget) will definitely go down," Stallings said.

About 80 percent of TRADOC's budget is for personnel — about 42 percent for civilian employees and 38 percent for contracted services and programs.

The military payroll is centrally funded by the Army.

Although there will be a significant reduction in the amount of funds available for civilian hiring, Stallings is optimistic that the existing work force can be protected.

"TRADOC commanders have done a super job in meeting most of our past budget reductions by selective hiring constraints at the local level," he said.

"For that reason, the headquarters has been reluctant to order any command-wide freezes. Most installations have been in a constrained hiring mode since fiscal year '88, anyway.

"The reductions we have experienced for the past three years have been reflected in all areas. There have been reductions in the numbers of courses, lengths of courses and in base operations.

"The result in base operations reductions is a backlog of engineering projects; repair and maintenance of facilities cannot be done," Stallings said.

Army Policy on HIV-positive soldiers explained

By David Bell
Army News Service

Army policy on soldiers infected with the human immunodeficiency virus has undergone some subtle but important changes in the past few months.

These changes or clarifications of Army policy have been distributed to the field by electronic messages and in an interim change to Army Regulation 600-110.

The Army's HIV policies were first spelled out in AR 600-110.

The regulation was based on the existing Department of Defense policy. Changes to Army policy occurred mainly because of changes to the DoD policy in August 1988.

One of the changes to DoD's policy allowed the service secretaries to limit assignment of HIV-positive soldiers to non-deployable units or positions for force readiness reasons.

In September 1988 the Office of the Army's Deputy Chief of Staff for Personnel indicated that "a list of deployable units that will be closed to HIV-positive soldiers will be announced by message within the next 90 days."

The memorandum further noted that "commanders are not authorized to designate any of their units as restricted units."

Although the proposal to close certain units to HIV-positive soldiers was staffed to the field and received favorable recommendations, it was not approved.

However, the deputy chief of staff for personnel recently clarified the Army policy regarding the assignment of HIV-positive soldiers as follows:

- An HIV-positive soldier who is medically evaluated and determined to be fit for duty will be returned to duty in his military occupational specialty, except that the soldier will not be assigned to Ranger, Special Operation Command or COHORT units or to military-sponsored education programs that result in an additional service obligation, such as ROTC.

The fact that the HIV-positive soldier is non-deployable does not prevent the soldier's assignment to a deployable unit in the United States, except for Ranger, SOCOM and COHORT units.

Commanders may not impose additional assignment restrictions on HIV-positive soldiers without first obtaining approval from the Office of the Army Deputy Chief of Staff for Personnel, which may be granted on a case-by-case basis.

In summary, HIV-positive soldiers fit for duty will continue to be assigned to units based on their MOS.

Commanders are not authorized to close any of their units to HIV-positive soldiers without first obtaining ODCSPER approval.

External evaluation tests medical units

34th Medical Battalion

Medic! Medic! Cries for help come from casualties at roadside, from ambulance exchange points and from requests over the wire and FM.

Ambulances were in the air and on the roads evacuating casualties to the nearest MASH within minutes of the first call.

This was the setting when 2nd Mobile Army Surgical Hospital and the 690th Medical Company underwent an external evaluation the week of Oct. 16.

Doctrinal distances and realistic evacuation times set the pace for this intense exercise.

The evaluation was based on a high-intensity battle and situationally driven by the 34th Medical Battalion staff.

The 2nd MASH mission is to provide resuscitative surgery and medical treatment to critically injured or wounded soldiers in the CORPS area and, as necessary, prepare patients for further evacuation.

Also, it runs four operating rooms and provides pre-operative and post-operative intensive care for 60 patients.

The 2nd MASH was evaluated in 578 separate tasks of which 97 percent received a satisfactory rating.

The 690th Medical Company's mission is to provide ground ambulance evacuation of patients in the CORPS area of operation.

The unit has the capability to provide a single lift of 144 litters or 288 ambulatory patients.

690th was evaluated in 188 separate tasks, of which, 91 percent received a satisfactory rating.

Major accomplishments during the EXEVAL were that both units deployed with less than their full authorized strength and available assigned strength.

Units medically reacted to the diverse change in weather, which produced different types of patients.

The entire battalion had continuous wire and FM communications with each subordinate unit and every patient was evacuated and treated within the appropriate time frames.

The 197th Infantry Brigade provided soldiers to portray casualties. Without their support and ability to act as casualties, the EXEVAL would have been much more difficult to conduct.

This also provided an opportunity for them to understand the medical support doctrine and medical services available on the battlefield.

This reinforced the soldier's will to fight by providing them a personal experience, which showed them the medical evacuation and treatment system which exists solely for their benefit.

The EXEVAL was a success for both units and the battalion staff which, in effect, participated in a CPX.

This dual EXEVAL allowed optimum use of evaluators and support personnel and permitted the evaluation to follow the casualty through the evacuation system.

It also provided an excellent education for the participating soldiers to see the entire system completely functioning at one time.

498th Air Ambulance Company saves lives in Honduran jungles

By Shawn W. Lorimer
Bayonet staff writer

After flying 29 medivac missions in Honduras this summer, 13 crew members and three aircraft of the 498th Air Ambulance Company returned to Fort Benning Nov. 10.

Their return originally scheduled for Nov. 8 was delayed because of logistical problems.

The 498th spent the last 129 days in Honduras providing areo-medical support to the various U.S. military services, the Honduran Army and the civilian population.

Besides the medivac missions flown, the 498th also participated in a 28-day Medical Readiness Training Exercise.

"You really got to see the poverty out there and do something (to help). It was satisfying," said 2nd Lt. Steven G. Millward.

"The medical teams would go out to a village in the country and administer inmunizations to the entire village for two or three days, then move on to the next location," said Chief Warrant Officer Perry J. Mathew.

According to Mathew and Millward, fight operations encountered several challenges.

"Often the weather reports were not accurate and (radio) communication was very bad," Millward said.

The Hondurans have very limited communication capabilities and the 498th medical teams carried their own TACSAT (Tactical Satellite System) to establish communication once they arrived at the landing zone.

In it's effort to support the U.S. policy of giving humanitarian aid to the Hondurans, the three aircraft and crews of the 498th were literally life-savers.

Late one night, in the middle of the sub-tropical Hunduran rain forest somewhere near La-Cieba, 498th's crew was called upon to evacuate seven victims who had fragmentation wounds.

Three of the victims were in critical condition and one was not expected to live.

Despite the fact that the aircraft and crew were ready, the Honduran air-traffic control denied the crew permission to fly during the hours of darkness.

Finally at 5:15 a.m., Mathew and his crew were given clearance.

Within an hour, there was a medical team on site, and the three most serious victims were flown to Golosun Airport at Soto Cano.

There they were met by a C-141 air ambulance, which flew them to a hospital in the United States. The 498th received word later that all three survived.

1/29 Motor Pool soldiers roll out for Recovery Rodeo

1st Battalion, 29th Infantry

The soldiers of 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Motor Pool rolled out with M-88s, M-578s, HEMMITs and all sorts of other ugly-looking but appreciated recovery vehicles Oct. 19.

They rolled to Suiter Hill for a pioneer version of a Wild West O-K Corral showdown — a recovery showdown.

The rodeo conceived by the Pioneers' maintenance noncommissioned officers stressed knowledge, teamwork and equipment reliability.

Each crew was required to use the vehicles' basic issue items.

Sgt. 1st Class Grover Marshal, the battalion maintenance NCOIC, was the chief evaluator and stressed the rodeo's primary purpose — refine and hone basic skills through an innovative and creative morale-building exercise.

The day began with a vehicle inspection and basic load area inspection by the Maintenance NCOs and the battalion commander, Lt. Col. John A. Spears.

The inspection was followed by a tactical road march in which the crews were evaluated on travel formations and communications procedures.

Upon arrival at Suiter Hill, the crews were evaluated on their ability to perform basic recovery tasks as outlined in the soldiers manual, job book and recovery manual.

Each crew rotated through stations requiring oxygen and acetylene cutting, use of the fuel transfer system and impact wrench operation.

The training required the crews to recover mired and damaged vehicles, using correct recovery and rigging methods. (This article is the combined effort of Nathan Godwin, Sgt. Marshall and Richey Beach all of 1st Bn., 29th Inf.)

72nd Engrs. go to field for demolition training

By Joseph G. Fridley
72nd Engineer Company

The men of the 72nd Engineer Company deployed for a one-week field training exercise of advanced demolition training, basic skills and squad evaluations at Fort Benning Oct. 31.

Since this was the 72nd's first deployment with a completely new chain of command — from platoon leaders up to commander. The soldiers had to make adjustments and fine-tune their performance to the new command style.

"There was a lot of prior planning and coordination to train the soldiers for this exercise," said Staff Sgt. Raymond Weis, unit training NCO.

According to Weis, the FTX was designed to verify and train on the 197th Infantry Brigade's tactical SOP and company's field SOP.

"We also wanted to evaluate squad competency in selected Mission Training Plan Tasks and battle drills," Weis said, "as well as verify standard patterns and bills of material for the four types of countermobility obstacles — disrupting, turning, fixing and blocking."

The first two days of training were concentrated on the advance demolitions training at the Brown Demo Range.

"Brown Demo was a live-fire exercise for conducting hasty battle drills," said 2nd Lt. Dean Moore, officer in charge of the range. "Each combat sapper squad practiced the battle drill for breaching a Soviet mine field, using a technique called the 'line main' method.

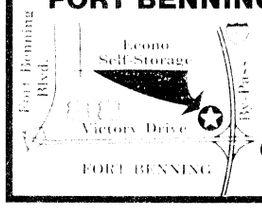
"Squads practiced this drill first with inert training demolitions, then with smoke in MOPP 4 and, finally, conducted the breach through a Soviet mine field using live demolitions." Moore said.

After four days of training, Pvt. Jeffery Silver, a new soldier assigned to 2nd Platoon, said, "I learned a lot of new tactical operations that will be useful in wartime. The obstacles we emplaced and defended were the best part of the field exercise."

"I used this time to train on the four obstacles we will be using at NTC," said Sgt. John F. Keith, of 3rd Platoon, referring to the unit's scheduled rotation to the National Training Center, Fort Irwin, Calif., early next year.

"I trained my soldiers on breaching obstacles that the opposing forces will be using against us at NTC," Keith said.

The squad evaluations were set up as three lanes: U.S. obstacles, Soviet-type obstacles and engineer reconnaissance and breaching. Each day's evaluation ran nonstop for 20 hours.



The FTX was the first in a series of exercises designed to train the soldiers of the 72nd to perform and win at NTC next year.

"Train to standards! Execute to standards! Execute vigorously!" is the engineers' motto as they gear up for NTC.

43rd elements participate in S.C. disaster relief

By Todd Wang
43rd Engineer Battalion

Elements from the 43rd Engineer Battalion (Combat) (Heavy) deployed to South Carolina to participate in the recent disaster relief missions.

Within hours of notification, Company C was out the gate and convoying toward Lee County, S.C. A few hours later, Company A and Headquarters Service Company were setting up operations in Kershaw County.

Substantial damage to utilities and property by Hugo's 100-plus mph winds, literally blew trees over and ripped roofs off of buildings.

Fort Benning engineers' primary concern was to open roads for traffic throughout the counties.

Many families were left homeless and 40 percent of Kershaw County remained without power up to two weeks after the disaster.

Upon completion of these missions, the battalion organized a specialized task force to relocate in Myrtle Beach and, later, Charleston.

Headed by Co. A, the task force continued disaster relief missions until Oct. 14.

This operation enabled the units to train on a number of mission essential tasks, as well as help the communities in need.

IOBC students take to field for light week

By Cadet Robert Cook

Company A, 2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry took its Infantry Officer Basic Course students to the field recently for light week.

Light week is an exercise designed to expose the students to missions a light infantry platoon will conduct and conditions they will operate under.

The missions performed included a movement to contact, establishing a patrol base, conducting a raid, performing a sector defense, a 12-mile, tactical road march, a MOUT attack and a live-fire exercise.

These missions were selected because of their difficulty, plus they brought out valuable teaching points, according to James Market, an IOBC student.

Three of the missions — the tactical road march, the MOUT attack and the live-fire exercise — demonstrated the developmental nature of the exercises.

The 12-mile, tactical road march was valuable for several reasons, not the less, of which was it was a physical challenge.

One lesson learned was how a soldier's combat load will affect his motivation and movement. The rotation of the M60s and PRC-77 radios among the squads gave everyone a better understanding of how combat loads should be crosstraveled and rotated.

The next major operation was the attack on the village at McKenna MOUT site.

This mission was challenging because it was conducted by breaking Co. A into two companies of two platoons each and putting the fifth platoon of Co. A in the city to defend.

This gave the attackers a favorable four to one ratio. The combination of a difficult company-level operation and fighting in closed quarters of urban terrain educated everyone on a few issues.

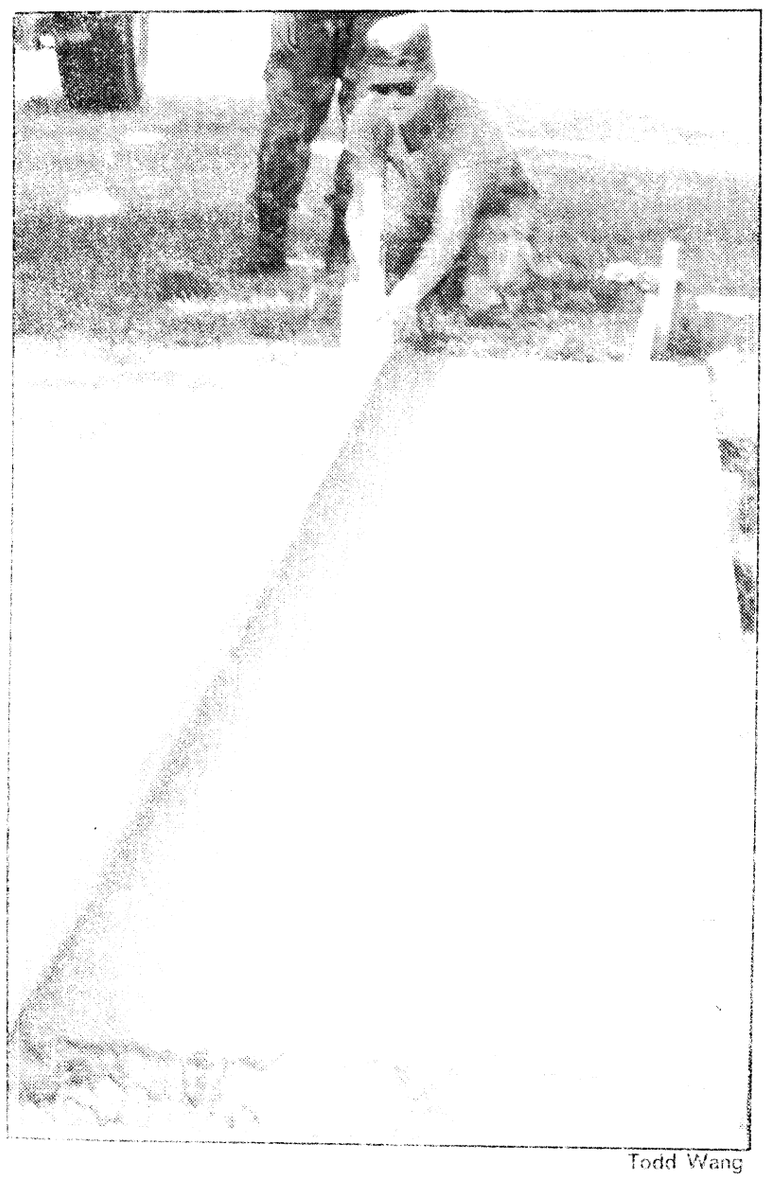
Even if the company commanders have a flawless plan, it will not be successful unless the squads find carry out the mission understand it, Market said.

The closed quarters of the MOUT site rapidly broke units down to their smallest elements, and only the subordinate leaders who understood the commander's intent were able to accomplish it.

When communication with superiors was lost, knowledge of the intent allowed the leaders to change their actions without changing the focus of the mission.

The last exercise of the week was a platoon-level live-fire exercise.

"The live rounds made everyone a bit hesitant, and the platoon leaders had to force things to happen," Market said.



"This brought out the need for confidence in our abilities as members of the platoon. If soldiers are confident that leaders will effectively control friendly fires that threaten them while suppressing the enemy, they will worry less and act more," he said.

"This confidence can be developed in realistic training that only a live-fire exercise represents, but that brings up another issue.

"As platoon leaders, we will have to balance competing training objectives such as realism and safety to achieve the maximum benefits of the training," Market said.

For the young lieutenants of Co. A, light week was an educational experience on different levels.

"On its most basic sense, it gave us a chance to perform the tasks we will soon require of our own platoons," Market said. "In a more complex and important way, it gave us an insight into the leadership challenges we will face with our platoons as we attempt to train them in preparation for the battlefield."

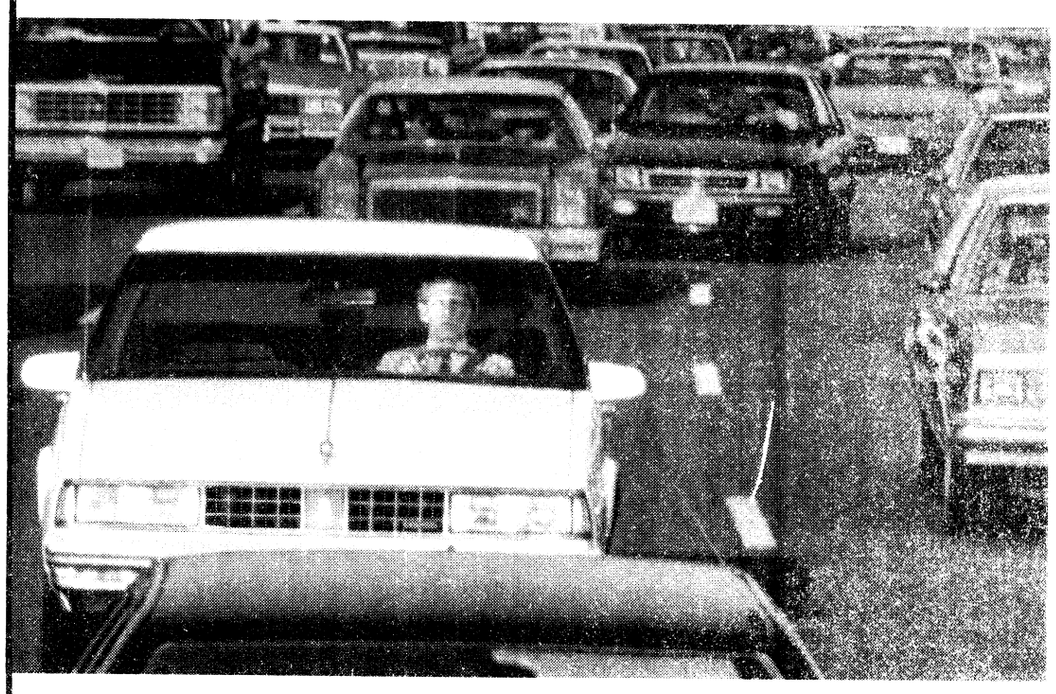
43rd Engineer product benefits Airborne School

By Todd Wang
Staff Engineer Soldier

1st Platoon, Company A, 43rd Engineer Battalion (Combat) (Heavy) recently completed two concrete pads on Eubanks Field for the Airborne School.

The two pads are 220 feet by 28 feet and 32 feet by 22 feet, designed to stabilize and level bleachers used during instruction and demonstrations.



Not only did the Airborne School get a quality product but the hands-on training in concrete placement and form construction provided excellent training for the engineers.

Spec. Andrew Riggins of 1st Platoon was commended for his contribution to the project and training fellow soldiers in concrete/masonry construction.

The Earthmoving Platoon of Co. A and numerous soldiers provided by the Airborne School assisted throughout the mission.

Marksmen blast barriers

By Sally Roberts
U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit

Sport has become a common bond between people of all nations, regardless of language or cultural barriers that exist between them.

Events such as the Olympics and Pan American Games demonstrate this by their popularity with competitors and spectators alike.

Recently, members of the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit's rifle and pistol teams reinforced that bond through a friendship exchange match with the Hungarian People's Army in Budapest, Hungary.

The competition consisted of 11 rifle and pistol events. USAMU won four of the six team matches and five of 11 individual matches.

Master Sgt. Erich Buljung and Sgt. 1st Class Jimmy McCoy dominated the men's pistol matches taking first and second places respectively in both the air pistol and free pistol events.

The team of Buljung, Pfc. Ed Suarez and Staff Sgt. John Ulrich won the air pistol event followed by the team of McCoy, Spec. Stan Hayes and Staff Sgt. Jonathan Frazer in second and Hungarian team in third.

Buljung, McCoy and Ulrich also won the free pistol team event.

In the rapid-fire pistol event, the Hungarians placed in the top individual slots and won the team competition.

Team USAMU, consisting of Suarez, Hayes and Frazer took second.

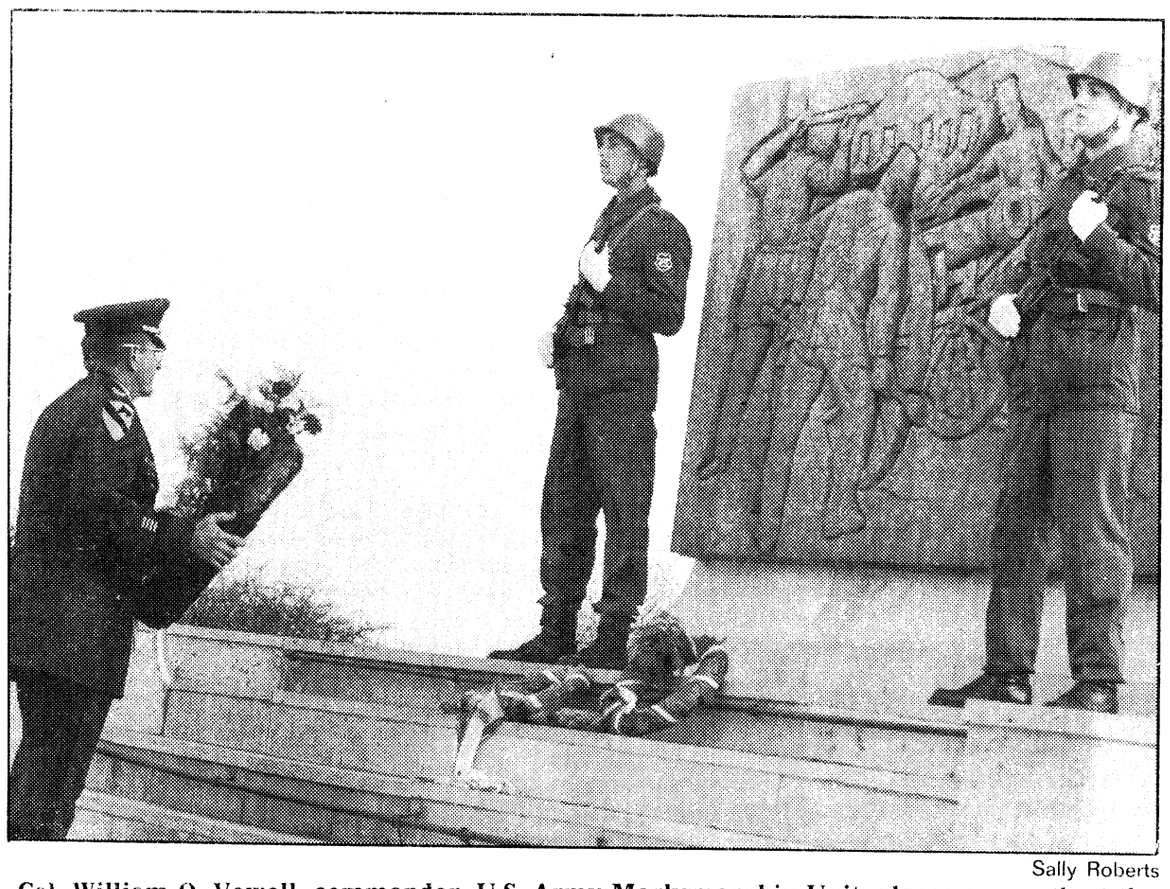
Spec. Tommy Tamas won two of the three men's rifle events.

Tamas, who recently tied the national record in the English Match, won this event, beating Hungarian Sandor Bereczky, a former world champion in the event.

Tamas, Sgt. Brad Carnes and Sgt. Troy Baker made up the winning U.S. team in this match. Tamas also won the individual portion of the free rifle, three-position match.

The Hungarian team won the event, and the U.S. team of Tamas, Baker and Maj. James Meredith placed second.

In the air rifle event, Hungary's Atilla Zahonyi, the 1988 Olympic bronze medalist in air rifle, won the event.



Tamas and Capt. Steve Goff took second and third places. USAMU also won the team portion of the event.

1st Lt. Rhonda Barush won the women's air rifle event, and Capt. Wanda Jewell placed second ahead of Hungary's Aniko Molnar.

In addition to fellowship through sport, the team members had the opportunity to learn about Hungary's history, as well as current events.

Col. William O. Vowell, USAMU commander, led the delegation in placing a wreath at the monument of the Pakozd Battle of 1848.

The group also visited sites in historic Budapest and toured along the Danube River, which forms the northern border between Hungary and Czechoslovakia.

USAMU rounds off fall season

By Sally Roberts
U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit

The U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit's running target team has rounded off their fall season by proving what teamwork is all about.

In a match held recently at Fort Benning, the group set two team national records in the two- and three-man air rifle events.

At the Oklahoma Running Target Championship, the group outshot teams from the U.S. Army Reserve, U.S. Marine Corps and the U.S. Olympic Training Center to win all team events in the match.

While in Oklahoma, Spec. Martin Edmondson placed second in the individual 10-meter air rifle, and Sgt. Troy Lawton placed third. In the 50-meter, mixed run, Lawton placed second and Edmondson placed third.

Members of the winning teams include: Edmondson, Lawton, Spec. Michael Moore and Sgt. 1st Class Michael Delk.

Shooters face off in interservice match

By Sally Roberts
U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit

Soldiers and Airmen recently faced off in the Interservice Pistol matches at Fort Benning's Phillips Range.

Participants from the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit, Army Reserve, National Guard and Air Force competed in seven pistol events.

USAMU won team events in rapid fire, standard, center fire and air pistol. The USAR team won the free pistol event.

Competition was close between USAMU and the USAR in the individual matches of the men's events.

In free pistol, Army Reservist, Eugene Ross, placed first with USAMU's John Ulrich second and Darius Young (USAR) third.

USAMU's John McNally and Ed Suarez placed first and second in rapid fire followed by Terry Anderson (USAR) third.

Erich Buljung (USAMU) won the air gun match and led USAMU's sweep of the center fire match with Suarez and McNally in second and third places.

Suarez also won the standard pistol event with Jimmie McCoy (USAMU) in second.

Reservist Ruby Fox won both the women's air pistol and sport pistol events. Barbara Holterman and Gail Rutledge, both USAF, placed second and third in air pistol. Elizabeth Callahan (USAR) took second in sport pistol and Audrey Hayes (USAMU) placed third.

Marksmen take expertise to Honduras

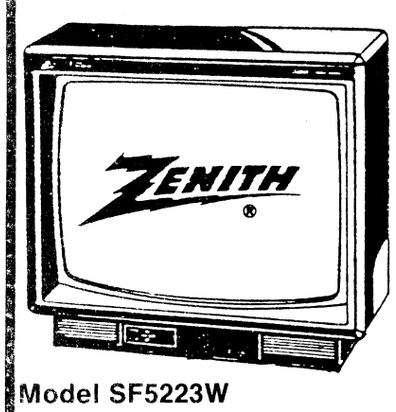
By Sally Roberts
U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit

U.S. servicemen in Honduras recently got a shot at some of the best marksmanship training the Army has to offer thanks to six shooting instructors from the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit.

The instructors traveled to Soto Cano Air Base in Honduras to provide reinforcement training with the M-16A2 rifle and M-9 pistol to U.S. Army and Air Force personnel there. They also gave classes on the M-9 pistol to Honduran Air Force security personnel.

"Another aspect of our mission was to offer technical advice on raising the proficiency level of the (American) personnel, dealing with on and off-duty marksmanship training," said Staff Sgt. Rand Albrecht.

Following the training, rifle and pistol teams comprised of USAMU and American personnel stationed there, participated in a Honduran-U.S. Forces challenge match, proposed by the Honduran Minister of Defense.



The U.S. teams won both the rifle and pistol team events. Sgt. Eric Uptagraf won the individual rifle title and Sgt. 1st Class Ronald Hale won the pistol title.

Test program to monitor TRADOC communications cost

Training and Doctrine Command

Training and Doctrine Command organizations will have to budget and pay for phone calls and automation services by fiscal year 1992 if a test currently underway is successful.

The test, called Chargeback, is being conducted at Fort Monroe, Fort Lewis, Wash., and Letterkenny Army Depot, Pa.

Under the current system, a major command like TRADOC budgets and pays the communications bill for the entire command. When Chargeback takes effect, individual organizations will budget and pay for their own electronic communications.

Installation test managers are currently developing and testing procedures to meter and prepare bills for all office phone calls, computer and telefax transmissions and other data automation services.

The program was approved in 1988 by Secretary of the Army Michael P.W. Stone, when he was the undersecretary of the Army.

"It was felt that if commanders knew how much money their organizations spent on communications, the dollar resources would be better utilized," said Don Ward, chief, Resource Management, Plans, Training and Security Division for the Directorate of Information Management at Fort Monroe.

At Fort Monroe, staff agencies have begun receiving telephone bills. Agency chiefs will not have to pay those bills, however.

"These monthly bills are merely to show commanders how their phone lines are being used, for how often and how long," Ward said.

"The bills won't look like your private telephone bills, but they will list the calling number, the time of each call, the number called, how long each call lasted, if it was long distance or local, commercial or AUTOVON and how much each call cost," he said.

Test administrators stress that phone calls will only be logged; no conversations will be recorded or monitored during the test.

When Chargeback is operational, phone users will not only have to pay for calls, but they will be charged for other communications services.

Such services include relocating telephones and installing new service lines.

Every organization will also pay a basic monthly fee for each telephone number.

Yvonne Powell, DOIM budget analyst, works with Fort Monroe communications users to find ways to lower costs. One way is to analyze use patterns.

"Through the billings, we may see that several calls are made to the same number every day," she said. "In that case, we would suggest, instead of calling the same place many times, to make one call to take care of all the business."

When Chargeback is in full operation, each installation DOIM office will have a person providing the same assistance as Powell.

"We want to work with users to lower costs and make the system more efficient," she said.

ASK THE JUDGE

Q. I recently got my first credit card and am finally on my way to establishing credit for myself.

The other day, the credit card company sent me some material about a credit card protection plan they are offering.

The first six months are free if I sign up, but after that, the plan costs $25 a year.

According to the material, if my credit card is lost or stolen, the plan will automatically notify the credit card company so that I won't be liable for any unauthorized charges.

Also, they say they can arrange to send emergency funds to me if I'm traveling and lose my card.

Are these plans worthwhile? Do they have any drawbacks?

A. Anybody who ever gets a credit card will undoubtedly be flooded with offers of credit card protection, not only from the companies who issue the credit cards, but also from independent companies.

Unless you have a large number of credit cards, such plans don't make a whole lot of sense.

In order to evaluate the value of such a plan, you first need to know what your potential liability is in the event your card is lost or stolen.

Under Federal Law, a credit card holder is only liable for $50 of any unauthorized charges that take place before the credit card company is notified.

There is no liability for charges that take place after notification.

Notification usually takes place by picking up the telephone and calling the credit card company.

In other words, you let them know that your card has been lost or stolen, at which point you no longer have any responsibility for use of the card by someone else.

The card protection plans basically offer to inform your credit card companies of a theft or loss for you. When the loss occurs, you call the plan, and they, in turn, call the creditors.

Where you lose a wallet-full of credit cards, the advantage of the plan becomes obvious — you only make one telephone call instead of several.

However, check the terms of the plan carefully — will it protect you from liability for charges made before you notify the plan? Does it guarantee to reimburse you for liability to the credit card companies for charges made between the time you notify the plan and the time the plan notifies the credit card companies?

Also, as to the fringe benefit of emergency cash, you need to determine if this is tied to whether or not you have credit available on a major credit card.

In some cases, particularly plans offered by a major credit card company, the emergency cash is simply a cash advance from your credit line on that account.

If the card is already charged to the limit, the emergency funds may not be available.

The question simply becomes one of whether or not the annual fee is worth the service to you.

In deciding this, please keep in mind that most of the annual fees are billed to your credit account, and thus, with interest, the fee is actually more than the stated amount.

If you have any questions about the subject, or questions about consumer credit in general, the Legal Assistance Office will assist you. Call 545-3281.

DEH civilian employees gather for meeting

By Sue H. O'Dell
Directorate of Engineering and Housing

Directorate of Engineering and Housing civilian employees gathered in Marshall Auditorium for the first quarterly directorate meeting of the new fiscal year Oct. 17.

The director, Col. Robert W. Hatch, reviewed DEH accomplishments over the past year, pointing out significant actions from each division.

With a look into the new fiscal year, Col. Hatch discussed some of the challenges the directorate would face.

Of importance to many DEH employees is the upcoming relocation of portions of DEH from Building 35 into Building 75, pending a permanent move to the administrative building under construction near Infantry Hall.

Ricky Neal of Supply and Storage Division was given a cash award for his adopted suggestion to replace the three-gallon insecticide sprayer used by DEH pest controllers with a one-gallon container.

The one-gallon container is less bulky and reduces the possibility of hitting furniture and walls while spraying and places less strain on the pest controller's back.

Adopted suggestion cash awards were also presented to Harry Williamson and Delbert Rodeheaver for their suggestion to install directional dampers in the duct system of Building 390 to control air distribution for both heating and cooling systems.

The installation of dampers will provide a much more efficient heating and cooling system.

Employee of the Quarter selections were announced in both GS and WG categories.

William Bates, a motor vehicle operator in the Range, Roads and Grounds Branch, of the Facilities Maintenance and Operations Division, was selected as the WG winner.

Bates was commended for his outstanding work in landscaping various areas of the installation and was personally responsible for the successful completion of the McIver Street landscaping project.

James Spence, a construction inspector with the Engineering Division, was selected as the GS winner.

Spence served as acting chief of the Construction Inspection Branch for almost a year while continuing to carry his full load of inspection duties.

Through his efforts, emergency contracts for critical repair of chillers at the commissary and the hospital were processed rapidly and successfully.

Microwave helps out during holidays

By Tina Cook
Energy Branch

Many people have already planned expansive spreads of foods for Thanksgiving and Christmas holidays.

While spending a lot of time preparing for these meals, other meals often become rush, rush affairs.

This is where your microwave can become a major helping hand.

Preparing a nutritious meal used to require a great deal of time and effort, not to mention mess.

Cooks long dreamed of a fast, clean, cool way to prepare meals.

The answer came in the form of the microwave.

In recent years, microwave prices have gone down considerably, and the amount of energy saved in microwave cooking over the conventional oven and stove top is considerable.

One example is baking potatoes.

Based on national average electricity rates of 76.7 cents per kilowatt hour, the following comparison can be made between cooking in a conventional oven and a microwave.

Baking a potato in a conventional oven takes 67 minutes and uses .94 kilowatts of energy, costing about 7 cents.

Microwaving a potato takes only 12 minutes and uses .27 kilowatts of energy, costing about 2 cents.

Although both costs seem small, cooking in a microwave uses one-third of the energy of a conventional oven.

Many people let all the buttons on the microwave intimidate them — especially people who have used a conventional oven for many years.

It usually takes only a few minutes of reading the instructions to get the basics of operating a microwave. Additionally, there are many books on the market to teach you everything you need to know about microwave cooking.

Go ahead, give microwave cooking a try.

For information on any energy-related subjects, call the Energy Branch at 545-4652 or 545-SWAT.

Videos deliver message against drinking, driving

Infantry Branch Safety Office

The Army's number one killer doesn't carry a gun.

Leaving for a promotion party, a young soldier kisses his wife and son good-bye.

"Have a good time and be careful," she says with a smile.

The party was terrific, but on the way home the young soldier's promising future fades to black.

This scene, from one of the new Army Driver Improvement Program videotapes, is a re-creation of an actual accident.

Privately-owned vehicle accidents are the number one cause of soldier deaths, claiming about 250 lives each year.

Historically, most deaths occur between 6 p.m.

Friday night and 6 a.m. Monday morning and are caused by driver errors such as speeding, drunk driving and failure to wear seat belts.

ADIP's message is delivered in a 12-part series of videotapes, the first three of which are shown during initial entry training.

Later modules are delivered at a soldiers's first permanent duty station.

The aim is to change soldier attitude and behavior behind the wheel and make soldiers aware of the personal and professional consequences of bad driving habits.

Military role models deliver a message to the Army's highest risk group — young enlisted soldiers.

The message is clear: Speeding, drunk driving and failure to wear seat belts kill.

The new ADIP video series is available at the installation audiovisual support center.

ARMY.
BE ALL YOU CAN BE.®
REENLIST.

NOW'S YOUR CHANCE TO LET THE ARMY KNOW WHAT YOU WANT TO DO.

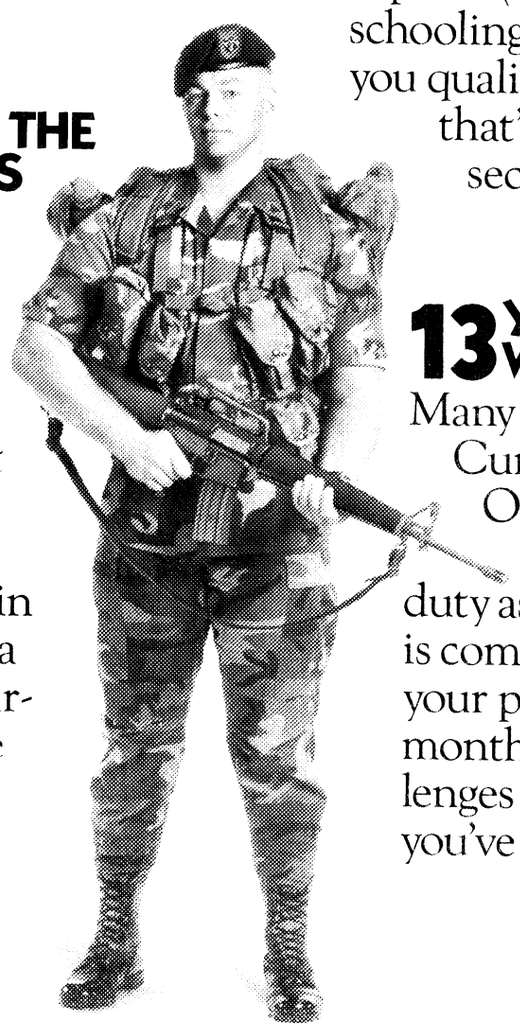
1 YOU CAN CHANGE YOUR MOS. There are hundreds of new MOS's to choose from under the Army Training Reenlistment Option. Or, you may be able to reenlist with the same MOS, for airborne training.

2 YOU CAN STAY WITH YOUR PRESENT REGIMENT. Under the Regiment of Choice Option, you can reenlist and stay with your present regiment, or try a different one. If you're not presently in a regiment, you may be able to get into one. This option lets you make long-range plans, because you'll know where your regiment will be located.

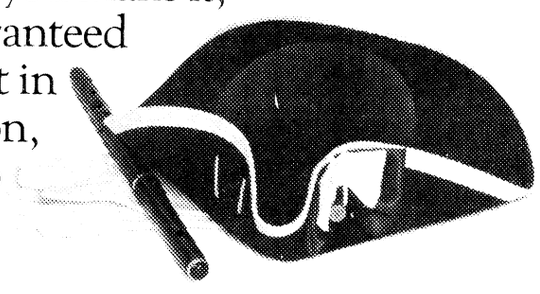
3 YOU CAN GO TO BERLIN. If you want to be on the front line of freedom, you may be able to reenlist under the Berlin Brigade Option. It isn't an easy duty, but it is an important one. The Berlin Brigade symbolizes our country's commitment to peace in Europe.

4 YOU CAN JOIN THE "BIG RED ONE." Under the Combat Arms Unit of Choice Option, you could reenlist to become part of the "Big Red One," or any one of a number of the Army's best units. You don't have to be in a combat unit now, and most of these units have vacancies in almost every MOS.

5 YOU CAN SEE MORE OF AMERICA. With the CONUS to CONUS Option, you can reenlist to relocate in a different part of the United States. Naturally, it all depends on whether your MOS is needed at your desired location.



6 YOU CAN LEARN A HIGH-TECH SKILL. Under the USAISC Option, you may qualify for the U.S. Army Information Systems Command. There, you can learn high-tech skills like radio teletype operation or satellite communications repair. There are over 140 MOS's, and you can serve in CONUS or overseas.



7 YOU CAN COME BACK TO THE STATES. If you're overseas and want to come home, the CONUS Station Option can make it happen. Of course, a lot depends on what your MOS is, and where you want to go, but the Army will make every effort to relocate you, upon completion of your overseas tour, at a location of your choice.

8 YOU CAN GO OVERSEAS. The Overseas Reenlistment Option makes it possible for you to spend a minimum of 12 months in Germany, Korea, or some other exciting part of the world.

9 YOU CAN JOIN THE SPECIAL FORCES OR RANGERS. If you're special, the Special Forces or Ranger Regiment Option may be just right for you. You must be Airborne qualified, have an MOS that's needed (or agree to train in one) and qualify for a SECRET Security clearance. The demands are great, but so are the rewards.

10 YOU CAN JOIN THE OLD GUARD. If you'd like to march with one of the Army's oldest and most prestigious outfits, then reenlist for the Old Guard Option. If you make it, you're guaranteed assignment in Washington, D.C., for up to 3 years.

11 YOU CAN LEARN A NEW LANGUAGE. Under the Language School Option, you could learn a second language of your own choosing, provided the Army's need matches your choice. Once you've completed your training, you could serve in a foreign country. And, of course, there's great satisfaction in being bilingual.

12 YOU CAN JOIN AN INSCOM UNIT. Under the Intelligence and Security Command and Electronic Warfare/Cryptologic Units and Training Option (INSCOM/EW), your schooling will be intensive. But if you qualify, you'll be part of a group that's essential to our nation's security efforts.

13 YOU CAN STAY RIGHT WHERE YOU ARE. Many soldiers do. Under the Current Station Stabilization Option, you can reenlist to stay at your present duty assignment after your tour is completed. You're guaranteed your present duty for 12 to 14 months. You can find new challenges and rewards at a place you've come to know.

As you can see, reenlisting opens up a world of opportunities for you. Of course, qualifications are different for each option. But if you qualify, you'll be well on your way to expanding your Army, and your life, experience.

To find out more details about each reenlistment option, talk to your Retention NCO. They are there to make sure you know what your choices are, and to help you chart the best course for your future.

Spec. Danny Burton talks to McBride School kindergartners about personal safety.

This MP wears several hats

Specialist plays many roles in name of crime prevention

By Michelle Le Roy Harrison
Bayonet staff writer

The office walls looked more like the refrigerator door of a proud parent showing off the latest creations from his child than that of a military office.

In a way, Spec. Danny Burton is a proud parent. The walls of the Drug Abuse Resistance Education office are an art gallery prominently displaying the drawings of his children — all 200 hundred of them.

Actually, Burton is single and has no children of his own. But, the way children attract to him when he is working, one would think he was experienced in child rearing.

Burton is a military policeman with the Crime Prevention Office. Besides his duties in crime prevention, he is Burton the DARE officer, McGruff, the Crime Dog, and inevitably, Burton, the public relations man.

"This job is sort of a public relations job for the military police," Burton said. "Most times, kids just see us as someone who gives out tickets or arrests people.

"They think we are bad. So we have to get out there and show them that we aren't bad, that we are here to help."

Burton was a military patrolman before he made the switch to crime prevention.

With the switch came added responsibilities. He teaches several classes to the public, such as DUI and rape prevention classes and bicycle rodeos.

His favorite part of the job, he said, is working with children.

Burton and DARE coordinator, Department of Defense policeman Walter Jackson, teach children at Fort Benning schools to say no to drugs.

The program's goal is to "reach children at an age when they are most receptive to drug prevention education.

It targets children before they are likely to have been led by their peers to experiment with tobacco, drugs and alcohol."

Burton and Jackson go to the schools to teach children from kindergarten through sixth grade about the program.

From the moment Burton walks into the classroom, the effect he has on children is evident. He has an energetic personality and talks to people easily. He talks rapidly with a twangy Louisiana accent.

Children crowd around him, calling him "Danny" or Spec. Burton, flooding him with questions or telling him about their day.

"Some of the teachers say they like the way I treat the kids — like an adult. I'm not really treating them like an adult, I'm treating them like a kid.

"I don't want to say that I act like a kid, either, but I do get down on their level."

Burton has a "big brother" relationship with the children, as well as a professional one.

"They see me as someone they know and trust," Burton said. "They tell me things they would never tell their teachers."

"They really trust me. I want them to talk to me as their friend," he said.

Every child participates in the classroom and wants to. Their hands shoot up to answer a question or volunteer to help.

His classes aren't taught in a formal manner, although the subjects are treated with seriousness. Instead, Burton has the children interacting with him and their peers.

"I don't like the word 'teaching' even though that is what I do. I like to use the word 'talking.' I talk to and with them," he said.

Talking is something Burton said he feels parents and kids need to do more of. Burton said that children these days know much more about drugs than he did at their age.

"I'm from the backwoods of Louisiana, and basically, I didn't know what a drug looked like, even when I was in high school."

On top of his in-box, which overflows with more drawings from children is a much-handled teddy bear.

"This is DARE Bear," Burton explained. "The DARE school gave it to me.

"Each class has a different name for it.

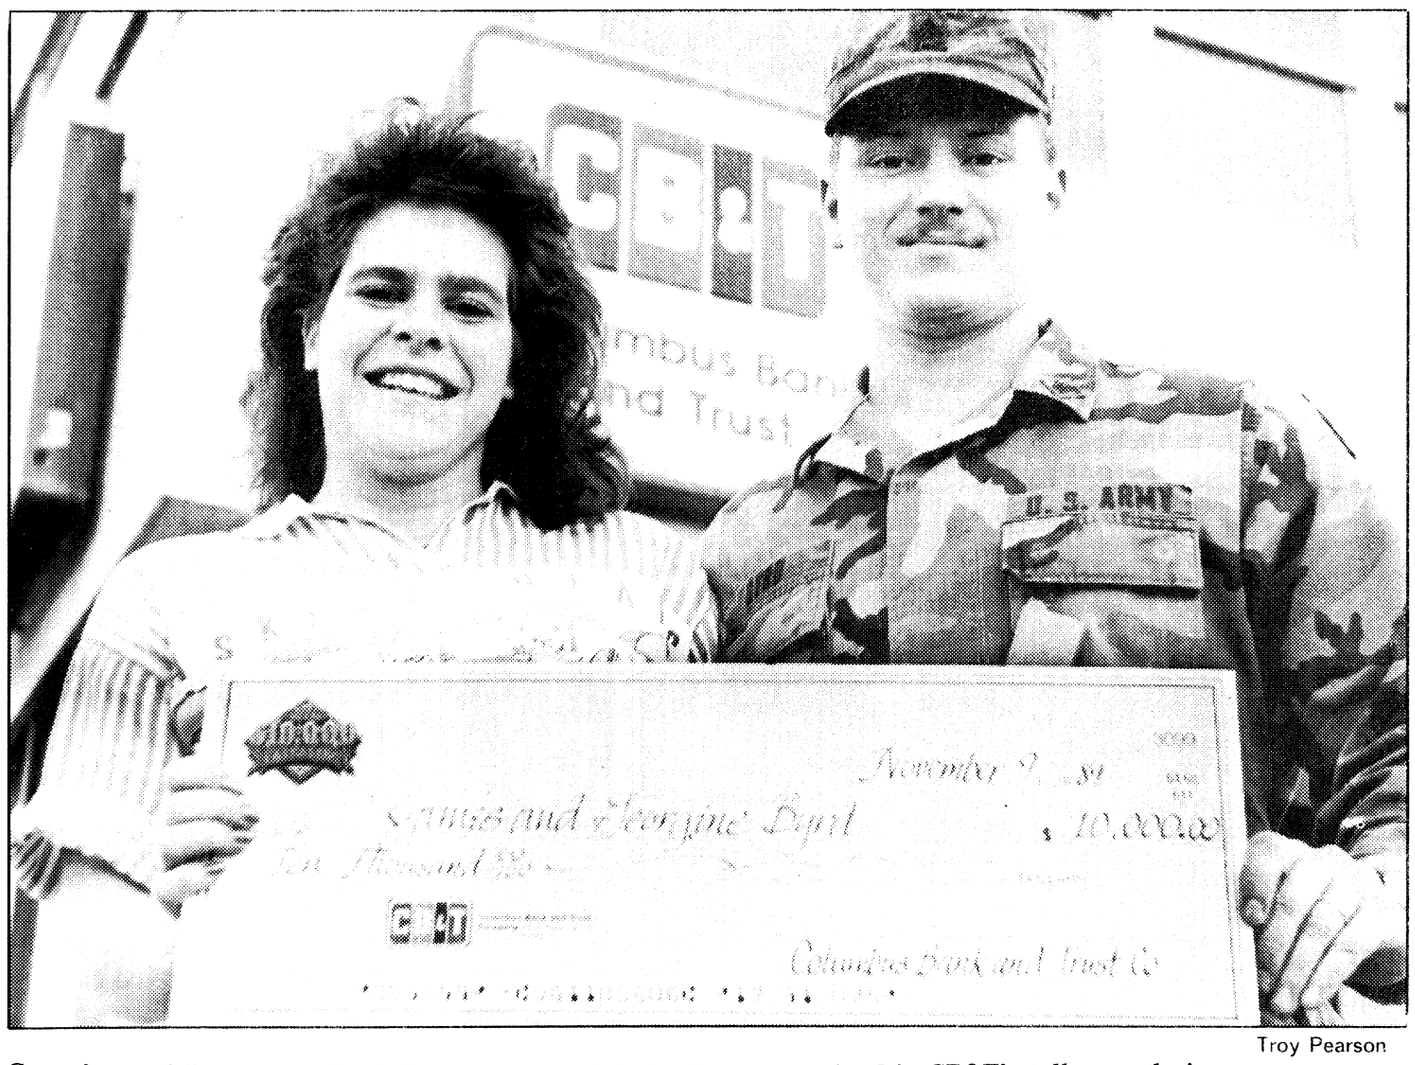
Couple wins $10,000 in bank giveaway

By Troy A. Pearson
197th Infantry Brigade

What a 197th Infantry Brigade couple was told would be an unexpected meeting with their congressman turned out to be a bigger surprise than they had bargained for.

When Sgt. James Byrd and his wife, Georgine, entered the main office of Columbus Bank and Trust Company Nov. 9, they were greeted — not by their congressman — but by bank officials who gave them a check for $10,000.



Earlier that week, Columbus Bank and Trust Company officials had called Byrd's company commander, Capt. Eric Grasman, of Company B, 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor, with news that Byrd had won CB&T's first-ever teller card giveaway.

Grasman kept the news secret from everyone except Byrd's first sergeant and battalion commander.

Instead, a story was concocted to get the Byrds to go to downtown Columbus for a "meeting with the U.S. congressman from their home district in Florida to discuss how to improve military life," according to Grasman.

But when the Byrds arrived at the supposed meeting point, they were escorted into CB&T's main office, where they were immediately surrounded by bank officials and TV and radio crews awaiting their expressions on hearing the news of their windfall.

Within seconds, band card vice president Walter Miller handed the astonished couple an oversize $10,000 check, explaining that the Byrds' name was randomly selected for the prize after Georgine had made a small withdrawal with their card at a local supermarket teller machine.

Georgine and Sgt. James Byrd display the $10,000 check they received in CB&T's teller card giveaway.

"I can't believe it's true. I've never won anything in my life," said Byrd.

However, the Byrds were quick to say that they would have no trouble deciding what to do with the money. "We'll buy a few certificates of depost, start our Christmas shopping early, shop for some things we've always wanted and, of course, get ready for the birth of our first child later this month," Byrd said.

Policeman

from B-1

When a kid gives me a really good answer, he gets to hold it," he said.

Burton said he knows that the program is having an effect on children. "You can see it in their faces. They soak in everything you tell them. They think you know it all."

Burton's supervisor said Burton is the ideal person for the job.

"He's got spunk," said Staff Sgt. Karles Jackson, noncommissioned officer in charge of crime prevention, "He definitely is not shy. He's got the personality needed for this job."

"He is a professional," Jackson said. "Nobody before has done this job with as much enthusiasm as he has."

Along with the anti-drug artwork children have drawn for Burton, his office is covered with more DARE paraphernalia.

A cartoon poster with the message "pot hurts" hangs on the wall over Burton's desk. On the floor is a large remote controlled police car named "Blinky." The car is used to teach safety to smaller children.

On a hanger in the corner of the room is a pair of plaid pants and a wrinkled trench coat. This is the McGruff costume, Burton's pride and joy.

"Nobody knows who I am. Sometimes I kind of feel left out because everyone says 'there's McGruff,' but nobody knows who it is," he said.

"But then again, I like the idea of nobody knowing. One time when I was playing McGruff, I went right up to the CG and shook his hand. I wasn't a lowly E-4 in the Army, I was McGruff, the Crime Dog."

Burton said he doesn't take his responsibilities as McGruff, and the message for which McGruff stands, lightly.

He took great pains in developing the McGruff voice and practicing it until he had it down just right.

He has memorized McGruff's history in case a child should ask him a question. He has even memorized the "Users are Losers" song from the television commercial and sings it to children.

When Burton puts on the large head of McGruff, he said, he is McGruff. He stays in character until he takes the costume off.

"I never let people see me in half of my costume. It ruins McGruff's image," he said.

Burton has played the role of McGruff quite often, recently, much of it on his own time, said Jackson.

"He works with the Columbus and Phenix City police departments as well as Fort Benning's," Jackson said. "A lot of times the (functions) are held after regular duty hours."

On Halloween night, Burton rode around the housing areas as McGruff, passing out candy to the children and giving them tips on how to have a safe Halloween.

Earlier that day, McGruff was at a local shopping mall doing the same thing. That day, Burton was in his costume for about six hours.

He has also starred on television in a Halloween safety message, but again, Columbus citizens saw only McGruff and not the person inside.

Burton said he doesn't mind because when the children flock around him, it makes everything worthwhile.

"Kids all over America know McGruff. I was walking outside of Loyd school one day and every kid on the playground yelled, 'It's McGruff, it's McGruff.' I felt like a movie star, like Elvis Presley.

"They'll grab on to you and latch on to your leg and say 'McGruff, I love you.' It makes me feel good," he said.

Although Burton said he enjoys his different jobs, he said he is a soldier first. He will be putting an extra emphasis on that full-time job when he goes to the E-5 promotion board and to the Primary Leadership Development Course this month.

"I still miss working the road and enforcing the law," he said. "That's what I joined the Army for. But, this job makes up for it."

"I like being there with the children and helping them. I want to inform them about the harmful things that could happen to them now and later on in life," he said. "I like making a difference."

Sleep tight, Fort Benning. No matter what "hat" he is wearing, Spec. Danny Burton is on our side.

CG stresses quality management

I recognize that quality is a very popular subject today. Department of Defense, Department of the Army and Training and Doctrine Command are concerned about it.

Nationally, the business community is concerned about it, and we, as a command, and as individuals, are concerned about it. We know we are good. But, we can be better.

We have done a great deal of investigation on the subject of quality and have learned quite a bit.

One thing has come through very clearly: There are no simple, painless cures for improving quality. It takes determination, education and then a clear process of implementation.

Studies and experience show that an organization improves quickly when it takes quality seriously. It's also true that it takes several years before a "quality" mind-set becomes a way of life.

I believe that, like everything else that's important, quality begins with senior leaders and managers.

So, all Fort Benning leaders and managers will attend special classes to help us develop a common language of quality and to recognize what our individual roles are.

Everyone in the command will eventually attend classes on this subject.

We are going to deliver error-free training, products and services to our customers, our soldiers and our support organizations.

After all, this is what we have told them we would do in our recruiting advertisements and, more importantly, in the high traditions of military and civilian federal service.

There is no more important task for our Fort Benning team to accomplish than: "Do It Right the First Time, Every Time."

The organization that delivers what it says it will is the organization that leads in the quest for quality.

Organizational quality is the sum of individual quality efforts. For total quality, each employee in our work force, uniformed and civilian, must be involved, committed.

At Fort Benning, we have the people, the equipment and the knowledge to make it all happen.

We are committed to quality forever.

Fort Benning's Quality Policy

The U.S. Army Infantry Center is dedicated to quality management, services and facilities in every area of our operations.

We are committed to delivering error-free products and services to soldiers, civilians, military retirees and their families on time, every time.

As the worldwide proponent for Infantry, we will provide products and systems, which ensure our infantrymen are ready to fight and win on the modern battlefield.

The responsibility for quality is shared by everyone. We must be dedicated to: "Do It Right the First Time, Every Time."

Soldiers hit trail in Pine Mountain

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

Forty-six miles is quite a distance no matter how you choose to travel.

For some Fort Benning folks, the mode of choice was their feet and the ground they covered was the Pine Mountain Trail Run.

Joe Ulibarri of Company C, 4th Ranger Training Battalion, Ranger Training Brigade, finished second overall with a time of 7:57.

Richard Schick, a physician's assistant at Troop Medical Clinic #6, finished fourth overall and first in the master's division with a time of 8:11.

Although Ulibarri finished second, this race was a first for Ulibarri.

He said he was pleased with his performance and is interested in running more races of this sort.

Two other soldiers from his unit also completed the race, Junior Chacon and Allan Malaise.

According to the race founder Richard Schick, they all should feel a great sense of accomplishment in finishing the race.

He said the terrain is hilly, and, in some places, there are rocks covered with a black, slippery mud that makes running difficult.

Schick should feel a great sense of accomplishment, as well.

He and Jimmy Musselman, who finished ninth overall, were participants in the 850-mile American Flag Run from Arlington National Cemetery to Columbus.

They arrived in Columbus Friday and rose early Saturday morning to run in the Pine Mountain Trail Run.

Schick said that neither he nor Musselman was willing to give up either one of the events so they just bowed their heads and drove on.

"I've been doing this for 11 years," he said. "What I did isn't impressive, but what Jimmy did is."

He explained that Musselman has only been doing ultra marathons for a short time, and he improved his time in the run by almost an hour after running with the flag all week.

Schick said they paid the toll for running both events. "It was worth it though," he said. "I'd run it all over again if I had to."

Faith School Race set December 2

An event for the entire family

Fort Benning Schools

The 11th annual Faith School Race is only a couple of weeks away.

Families and individual runners who are interested in running the race should be marking the race date, Dec. 2, on their calendars.

The race is sponsored this year by the Don C. Faith Middle School physical education department and the Noncommissioned Officers' Wives Club.

Students, parents, teachers and members of the Fort Benning and surrounding communities are invited to participate.

Entire families can participate in the race together if they wish to do so.

Each year, 500 to 1,100 runners have participated in the race.

The race began 11 years ago as an outgrowth of the Faith physical education program and the Faith Jogging Club, which had begun that same year.

All proceeds from the race go to the Faith physical education program to provide additional equipment and incentive awards for students.

The Faith Race is made up of three different races that begin and end at Don C. Faith Middle School at 1375 Ingersoll Street. The one-mile race for boys and girls 14 years old and under begins at 8:30 a.m.; the two-mile race begins at 9:15 a.m.; and the five-mile race begins at 10 a.m.

The two- and five-mile races are open to all age categories.

There are 19 age categories within the three races, and awards will be presented in each category at the awards ceremony in the Faith School gym. T-shirts will be presented to all finishers.

Pre-registration fees are $4 per race for ages 14 and under and $6 per race for ages 15 and over.

Registration fees on the day of the race increase to $5 and $7 respectively.

Anyone needing further information can contact physical education teacher, Susan Emerson, at Faith Middle School at 545-5524.

Race entry forms and maps of the race route are available at Faith School.

Army-Navy Classic December 9

As in the recent past, CBS Sports expects to air the game around 2:30 p.m. Eastern Standard Time.

For this game, West Point is soliciting Army-Navy Spirit Videos from units in the field.

During the last several seasons, the Army has been extremely successful in having short (15- to 20-second) videos showing soldiers in tanks, attack helicopters in formation or parachute teams sending a single message — "Go Army, Beat Navy."

The network is eager to show videos from subordinate commands. Their advice is "the more clever and unusual the better."

If your command would be interested in preparing three-quarter-inch Army-Navy spirit videos for CBS to air during this year's game, send them to the following address:

Directorate of Academy Relations, Attention: Lt. Col. Bruce K. Bell, U.S. Military Academy, West Point, N.Y. 10996-1788.

To allow adequate time for CBS to use these videos, please ensure they arrive at West Point no later than Nov. 28.

Redskins crush Eagles, 30-14

By Charles Gonzalez
Youth Activities coach

The Fort Benning Redskins won the championship for the Youth Activities Seniors Football League Saturday at Doughboy Stadium by defeating the Eagles 30-14.

The Redskins came back from a first-quarter touchdown by the Eagles to tie and never looked back.

The Redskins' first score came on a 40-yard pass from quarterback Lovel Trotter to wide receiver Charles Graham.

In the third quarter, Jose Perez set the offense on fire.

First, he blocked a punt for a safety to tie the score 8 to 8. Following a fumble, Perez capped off a drive with a 10-yard end sweep for a touchdown with Trotter's two-point conversion put the Redskins ahead 16-8.

The defense, lead by Hector Cendeno, Brain Jones, Andra Jones, Chris Bashay, caused another turnover. After that, Jose Perez scampered 45 yards from the line of scrimmage for a touchdown. Chris Bashay added the two-point conversion for a 24-8 lead over the Eagles.

The door was closed on the Eagles when Trotter scored in the fourth quarter on an 18-yard sweep for a touchdown with a two-point conversion by Richard Niver to close out the scoring. The final score was 30-14.

With this wih, the Redskins clinched the championship and finished the year with a 7-1 record.

200 hit pavement in Veterans Day 10-K

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

More than 200 runners hit the pavement Saturday for the second annual Veterans Day 10-K Race, which began in front of the Columbus Ironworks Trade and Convention Center.

John Sprage won the race with a blistering time of 33:58. Following him into the finish line was Pablo Sanchez with a 34:12. Mark Bermin, a doctor at Martin Army Community Hospital, finished third with a 34:54.

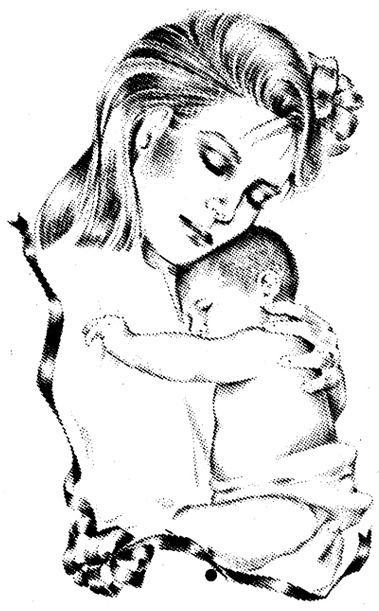
Although the youngsters had the speed, the veterans were the stars of the show as this is the only race in Columbus that has a category just for them.

David McCormick finished on top of the veterans field with a 39:35. Chuck Wakefield followed with 40:04, and Robert Haywood came in third with 45:21.

The female athletes made quite a showing.

Sue Norwood came streaming in at 43:25 to take top honors in the female division. She was closely followed by Margery Roddy at 44:39 and Florencia Rodgers at 48:09.

Race coordinator, Andy Young, said the entire race went very well.



"Conditions were great for running," he said. "All of the athletes seemed very pleased with the course."

Russell Sweatland finished first in the masters male category with a time of 39:53. Jean Jones came in at 51:06 to capture the top spot in the masters female category. The grandmasters male top finisher was Benny Wade at 37:09. Nancy Holbrook finished first in the grandmasters female category at 52:30.

Earn money, move yourself

Equipment Checkout Center

Are you moving in the near future? If you are and you are not afraid of work, you could make a little money by moving yourself.

The Army will pay you instead of a commercial mover to do the work

Along with the Army reimbursing you and the prices on U-Haul equipment available at the Equipment Checkout Center, you can make a little money.

Besides the savings, you will have the satisfaction of knowing that your belongings were handled the way you wanted, because you did it.

At the Equipment Checkout Center there is a very wide variety of U-Haul equipment, just about everything you need to move, except time and labor.

The equipment available include trailers, trucks, car-top carriers, hitches, packing materials and more.

The trailers range in size from a four-feet-by-six-feet van trailer to a six by 12-foot open trailer.

Trucks are available in several lengths, ranging from 14 to 26 feet.

For packing materials you can purchase boxes, foam packing, bubble pack or rent packing blankets or tarps.

If you are just going on vacation and need extra space, then try a car-top carrier. Need to tow a car? There are auto transporters available.

If you don't have a trailer hitch, they are also available. Plus you can purchase the wiring harness needed for hooking up lights and receive free installation of the harness.

If you already have a hitch and wiring but it is different from the on on the U-Haul, you can purchase a different hitch ball or wiring adapter.

Come to the Equipment Checkout Center at 1707 Gillespie (behind the car wash and laundromat, near the Mini Mall) or phone 545-7978/3504.

Prices will vary according to time and distance for which you require the rental. Call ahead and reserve your rental.

ITR

Vacation — Come visit the Information Travel and Recreation Office for a getaway weekend or for a full-blown, fun-filled Florida vacation. The Destin Recreation Area offers some of the most beautiful beaches on the gulf, emerald waters, charter fishing and a night life that is second to none.

Available at this location are completely-equipped cottages of various types and sizes and two 10-unit motels. In addition to the new community center, snack bar and game room, there are two deep-sea fishing vessels, inshore fishing boats and motors and various sports equipment for charter and rental.

For those of you who prefer to camp, camper pads and sites are available.

For additional information, contact the ITR Office at 545-4155 or visit building 247.

★ ★ ★

Lodging facilities — The ITR Office is now booking lodging facilities at military rates. Call the ITR Office for a list of eligible hotels.

This is a special offer sure to appeal to anyone who has ever arrived with their family at a special duty station only to find government quarters were not available.

To begin with, the soldier has to bear the expense for a commercial hotel out of his own pocket. Then, because they're new to the area it is hard to know how to find a good hotel, let alone one with reasonable rates.

Don't take chances, ITR can tell you which hotels are available, whether they have a swimming pool, fitness center, laundry facilities and baby-sitting services.

The best part is you won't have to pay full price.

If you plan to travel on vacation or just want to get away for a weekend, remember to book your discount lodging reservations with the ITR Office.

Also, the same discounts apply if you need to reserve rooms for parents, family members or other personal guests who plan to visit you at the installation.

SPIRITUAL

Freedom, democracy have high price

By Chap. Edward Bowen
Clinical Pastoral Education Student

Along with most of you, I am watching the fast-paced events in Europe during the past few weeks. Was it just yesterday I was on the "Hof Border Tour," looking through my camera's zoom lens at the poker-faced East German guards, hoping that I wouldn't meet any of them across the battlefield anytime soon.

The pictures are coming almost faster than we can take them in — yesterday, impervious concrete and machine guns — today, people chipping away at the wall with hammers and happy couples dancing in no man's land.

Not since the walls of Jericho came tumbling down has the crumbling of man-made barriers caused such a stir.

Even the leader of the Soviet Union proclaims his approval of the upside-down political movements of his former allies. Does this mean we will have to rewrite a whole generation of "Jody" calls?

Here come the pilgrims of the '90s, crossing the borders to see freedom and democracy first-hand, to taste what has been denied to them for decades, to experience what has only been in their dreams and to grasp what could only be obtained by wild balloon rides through the night or terror-filled dashes across closely-guarded borders.

The Bible tells of another visit made in ancient times. Hezekiah achieved visible success as a leader, and it had come to the attention of foreign neighbors.

But when they came to see him, he vainly showed them his wealth instead of taking the opportunity to reveal to them the benefits of "one nation, under God."

The prophet Isaiah asked a simple question: "What have they seen in your house?" He wanted to know what good came from their visit or if he told them of God's care of the people instead.

What will these visitors from the East find during their excited forays into the Western world?

Today's turn of political events thrusts a great opportunity into our laps.

Haven't we been telling the people on the other side of the wall for years now that the "enlightened" Western way of life is the way to go?

Haven't we been telling them that our quest for workable governments of, by and for the people has resulted in peace, freedom and justice for all?

We must be honest with them; we don't have it all together yet.

All that glitters is not gold. And before they line up for tickets to Disney World, I hope they get to see other things.

I hope they see a Western world struggling with great issues, focusing on things that really matter.

I hope they see people putting major effort into major things, rather than minor ones.

Gary Trudeau pointed out in his comic strip that while we put effort, money and media into the newsy hard drug trade, hundreds are dying each month of alcohol and tobacco-related illness and accidents.

It is also ironic, and sad, that while we spend millions persuading Americans to buy new cars every year, a majority of our children can't read road maps.

Isn't it a paradox that we rejoice in adults finding freedom in Europe, yet stand by while unborn children do not have the freedom to live in our own country?

Are we simply "straining at gnats, while swallowing camels?"

When all the excitement is over, what will they have seen in "our house"?

I hope and pray that they see a people still working for liberty and justice for all, a people who accept diversity as a strength, but work together for the common good of all mankind, a people who know there are no easy answers, but search for answers anyway.

May freedom ring throughout the land and throughout the world.

Museum exhibit features ' unusual ' pieces of art

Columbus Museum

Paintings, sculpture, video and performance art by 25 contemporary Southern artists will be on view at the Columbus Museum when the exhibition "Looking South: A Different Dixie" opens today.

Organized by the Birmingham Museum of Art, "Looking South" focuses on nationally- and internationally-known artists living and working below the Mason-Dixon line, from Washington, D.C., to Texas.

"The aim of the exhibition is to present the finest art being made in the South," said exhibition curator Ruth Applehof.

"Looking South" challenges the viewer with alternative media and works of unorthodox materials.

North Carolina artist Patrick Dougherty has designed an environmental sculpture especially for the exhibit.

Dougherty used maple saplings to create powerful organic forms which are held together by natural snagging, without nails or glue. "As each sapling is added, the texture and the structure accumulate simultaneously," says Dougherty.

Some of his designs are free standing while others are supported by the architectural constructions of the space in which he works. His sculptures are often left to weather the elements and disintegrate naturally or are destroyed at the conclusion of an exhibition.

"I like the idea that the piece has a life of its own and is a temporary piece, and that people have to enjoy it while it's here," says the artist.

WHAT: "Looking South: A Different Dixie" art exhibition

WHEN: Now through Jan. 30, 1990.

WHERE: Columbus Museum, 1251 Wynnton Road.

INFO: 322-0400

Since the early 1980s, Dougherty has exhibited with increasing frequency throughout the country, from the World Trade Center in New York City to Marion County, Calif. In the last year his work has been on display at the Birmingham Museum of Art, Atlanta's High Museum of Art, and the North Carolina Museum of Art. He has also designed pieces of theatre and dance performances.

Robert Rauschenberg's "The Parade of the Wicked Thoughts of the Priest," combines seemingly unrelated objects: a coffee pot, ladder and washboard.

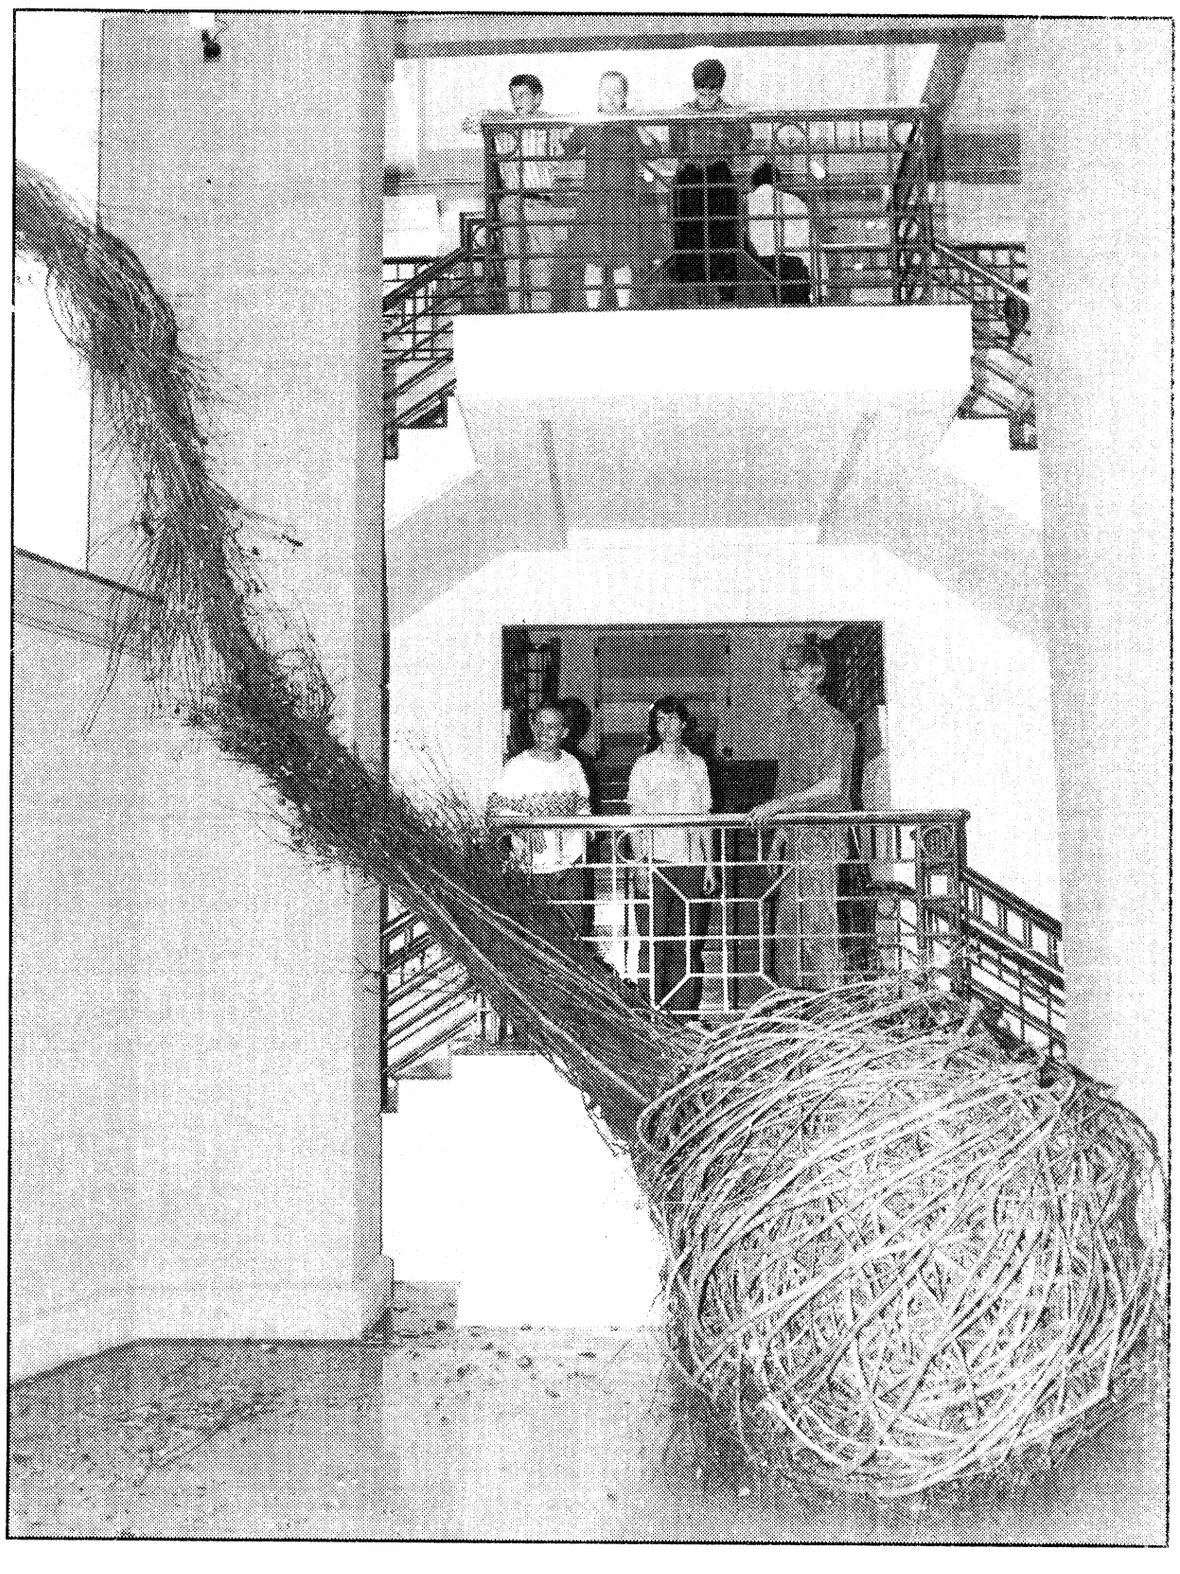
Industrial supplies such as pipes and ball bearings are prominent in the works of Ed Hendricks.

Marilyn Gottlieb-Roberts combines theatre, dance, story-telling and audience participation in her performance art based on Greek mythology.

The exhibition also includes alternative video productions by Laurie McDonald.

The public will have the opportunity to meet several artists whose works are included in the exhibition.

Artists Benny Andrews, William Christenberry and Sidney Guberman participated in a panel discussion at the Museum Thursday.



Lisa Tuttle, director of the Atlanta College of Art Gallery, moderated the discussion, examining the expressive images of these three artists and the influence of their Southern heritage on their work.

"Looking South" also includes works by John Chamberlain, Clyde Connell, William Dunlap, George Dureau, Vernon Fisher, Frank Fleming, Ke Francis, Sam Gilliam, Linda Goodine, Robert Gordy, Will Hindle, Frances de la Rosa, Melissa Miller, Andy Nasisse, James Rosenquist, James Surls, Russ Warren and Robert Warrens.

The exhibition will be on display at the Columbus Museum through Jan. 30, 1990.

"Looking South" was sponsored in part by the city of Birmingham, the Henry Luce Foundation Inc., the Alabama Humanities Foundation, the Birmingham Art Association, Southern Arts Federation, Hoar Construction Company, Wolfson Campus-Miami-Dade Community College and the Alabama State Council on the Arts.

For additional information, call Chris Henson at (404) 322-0400.

Commanding general wishes all a safe holiday

Thursday through Sunday, members of this command will join Americans throughout this great nation of ours in celebrating Thanksgiving.

Since this holiday will be a four-day weekend, many of you will be on the road, hurrying to get places, often under dangerous conditions.

I urge each of you to approach this holiday with the safety of yourself and others foremost in mind.

Preplan your trips. Don't mix drinking with driving. Make sure you and your vehicle are in top operating condition, and, by all means, wear your seat belts and drive defensively.

I want each of you to enjoy your holiday and return safely.

Colombian Ambassador visits here

By Richard A. Rail
U.S. Army School of Americas

The U.S. Ambassador to Colombia was at Fort Benning Nov. 15 to speak to the students of the U.S. Army School of Americas' Command and General Staff College.

The Honorable Thomas E. McNamara delivered general remarks and answered questions from the multi-national student body of the prestigious school for Latin American and U.S. military officers.

"Colombia is less a cultivator of cocaine than a processor and trans-shipment center for coca leaves grown in Peru and Bolivia," McNamara said.

"Efforts to shut down this drug traffic need to have a carrot and stick character. The carrot has to be economic incentives for producers to turn to other products.

"Since no other product will pay what cocaine pays, the stick must come into play as a disincentive in the form of strong interdiction programs," McNamara said.

The School of Americas, which trained some 500 Colombian soldiers in 1989, plays a role in helping to prepare the Colombian Army for drug interdiction and other missions.

McNamara said he foresees no need for more direct U.S. Army participation in Colombia.

New academy to train Reserve, Guard

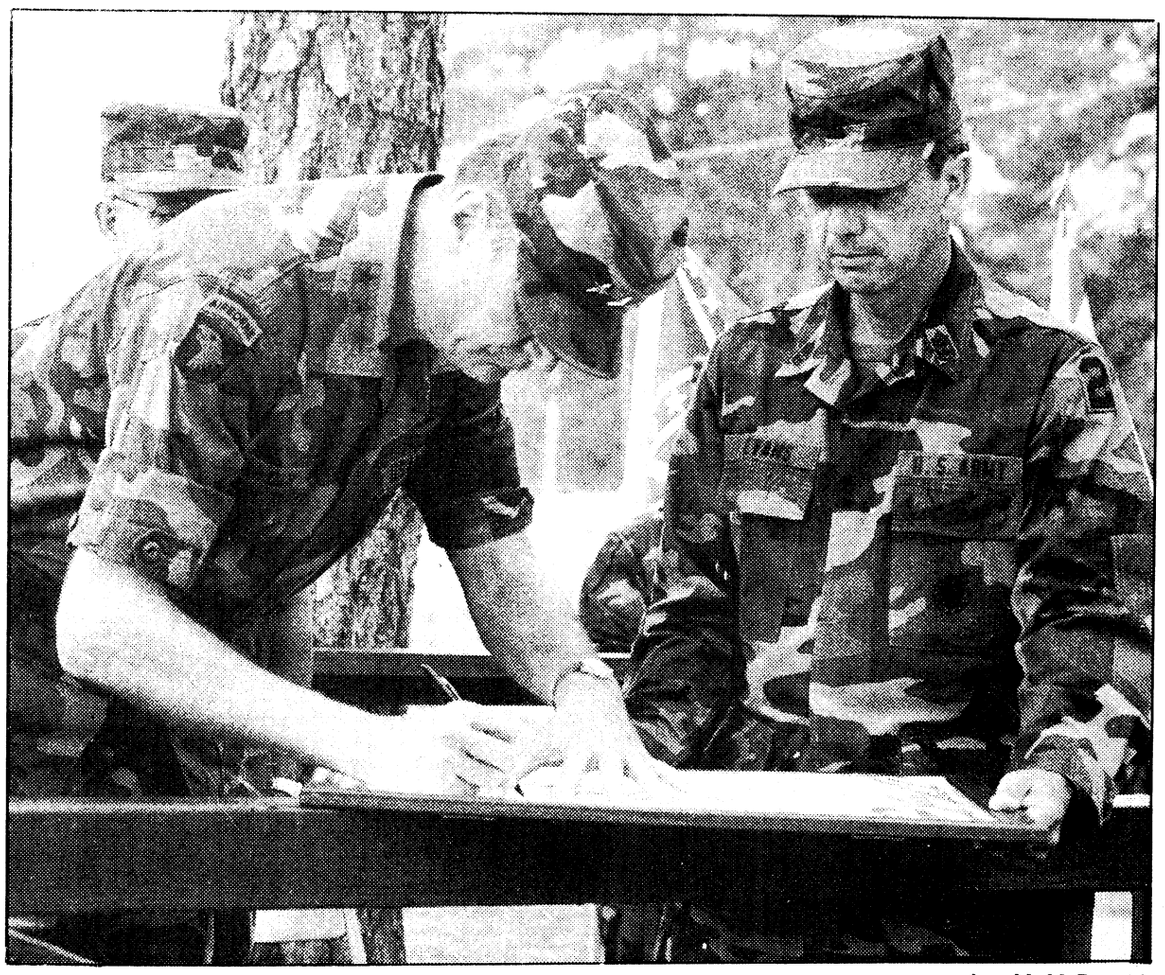
The Second U.S. Army Noncommissioned Officers Academy will give members of the Army Reserves and National Guard a taste of what it means to lead.

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

Already famous for training troops, Fort Benning has yet another academy to add to its list of schools.

The Second U.S. Army Noncommissioned Officers Academy officially opened its doors last week in a ceremony that included appearances by the Second Army Commander Lt. Gen. Orren R. Whiddon and Command Sergeant Major Julio G. Diaz.

During his remarks, Whiddon thanked Maj. Gen. Michael F. Spigelmire, post commander, for his support in getting the academy off the ground.



"This academy gives young men and women in the Army Reserves and National Guard a taste of what it means to lead," he said. "Hopefully, this academy will set the spark inside them."

Whiddon recalled years ago as he was making the transition from private first class to noncommissioned officer, he attended leadership transition training.

"What I learned there gave me more confidence than any other course I have attended since," he said.

Being an NCO is special, and NCOs are what make our Army better than any other country's Army, Whiddon said.

He added that our Army is better because we are willing to pay the price to build an NCO corps and educate it.

Ann M. McDonald

Lt. Gen. Orren R. Whiddon signs the proclamation officially opening the Second U.S. Army Noncommissioned Officers Academy. Sgt. Maj. Elton Y. Evans looks on.

Whiddon said only two short years ago, they decided to make the move from Fort Bragg. The quality of facilities has increased dramatically since then, he said.

Prior to moving the facilities to Benning, it was headquartered at Fort Bragg, and the academy was only given the use of the facilities for a portion of the year.

Here, the academy has 29 buildings and a motor pool.

Included in the number of buildings are 12 barracks, which can comfortably house 350 soldiers.

The academy's chief mission is instruction of the Reserve Component Primary Leadership Development Course, Basic Noncommissioned Officers Course and the Advanced Noncommissioned Officers Course.

Instructors will also teach the Reserve Component 1st Sergeant Course and the Battle Staff Course.

The academy has 18 full-time soldiers on Active Guard Reserve status, two active component soldiers and two Department of the Army civilians.

During fiscal year 1990, the staff expects to train 2,100 Reserve component soldiers from the Southeast, Puerto Rico and the U.S. Virgin Islands.

"TURKEY CONCENTRATION CAMP"

Thanksgiving at the Snivelys

By Clyde Snively
USAIC Public Affairs Office

For anyone who may have been lost at sea for the past year or so, Thanksgiving is tomorrow.

Thanksgiving is a time to count our blessings. Everyone has his own way of doing this and different reasons for being thankful.

For merchants, Thanksgiving signifies the kickoff of the Christmas sales season, and, normally, Friday is the biggest sales day of the year.

Football fans see Thanksgiving as a chance to get up late and then tune into a football game after stuffing themselves with turkey and all the accouterments, knowing that key college games will soon be played.

For soldiers, Thanksgiving is a four-day weekend. A chance to pig out at the unit dining facility or drive 750 miles one way to be with family members.

Of course it's especially nice if you happen to be stationed at a post with built-in relatives.

That's the case with the Snively family this year. Emma invited all the in-laws and out-laws over to our place for Thanksgiving.

Then when all 14 accepted, she went into a tailspin, worrying about where they'd all eat and how to cram enough Turkey into the oven at one time so the cooking wouldn't have to be done over a four-day period.

I was my usual helpful self. "I'll dig a pit in the back yard, and we'll cook the bird or birds outdoors." I'll bet that's the way the Pilgrims did it.

"Then to add to the authenticity of the occasion, we can pass out tall, black hats, black robes with white bibs and go outside and sit on the ground and eat."

I ducked in time for a wooden spoon to go flying past my right ear.

But I have faith in Emma. I know she'll overcome all the logistical problems, and there'll be plenty of food for everyone to eat and for the little ones to spill on the carpet.

I'll be thankful the clan was able to get together, and I'll keep telling myself this as I dry and put away plate number 463 while reaching for plate number 464 in a never-ending succession of dirty dishes.

I can also be thankful that four other members of Emma's clan, and no members of the Snively tribe were able to make the trip.

But actually, as a soldier, I have much to be thankful for.

First, being stationed at Fort Benning is a blessing.

There's a lot of caring people here who work hard to make our lives as pleasant as possible.

Opportunities abound for inexpensive ways to entertain ourselves and family members and to pursue an education.

The downtown community, be it Phenix City or Columbus, is supportive of the military.

You don't feel like a pariah when you go downtown and feel like all the merchants are out to rip you off like you do in some communities.

Above all, I like being in the Army. It's like being a part of one big family and, at least with this family, no dirty dishes to wash after eating.

I hope ya'll enjoy your Thanksgiving, and for those of you driving half-way across the country, please be careful. You don't want to lose a family member.

President Bush offers Thanksgiving greetings

On Thanksgiving Day, we pause with our families, friends and neighbors to give thanks to God for the many gifts he has bestowed upon us.

We are also mindful of the many brave and selfless individuals who have struggled and sacrificed to build this great nation.

When they observed Thanksgiving in the autumn of 1621, the Pilgrims at Plymouth Colony gave thanks for a fine harvest following a long and bitter winter.

They also gave thanks for the political and religious freedom they had gained in their new land.

The indomitable spirit of these hardy people, sustained by faith and rooted in a deep sense of community, has remained a hallmark of the American character.

Today, our hearts are full of gratitude for the continued blessings of peace and prosperity.

This Thanksgiving, we Americans have additional reason to rejoice, for "Freedom's holy light" has begun to pierce the Iron Curtain, bringing the hope of a new day to countries in Eastern Europe and around the world.

Our nation is deeply indebted to you, the members of the United States Armed Forces, for your role in ensuring our safety and advancing the universal cause of freedom.

Your willingness to accept hardship and sacrifice for the sake of others has won the respect and gratitude of all Americans.

So, on this day, dedicated to giving thanks to our Creator, the loving source of all life and liberty, we also remember each one of you with appreciation and with pride.

On behalf of our fellow citizens, Barbara and I send you our heartfelt thanks and warmest wishes for a Happy Thanksgiving. God bless you, and God bless the United States of America.

George Bush
President

Army leaders offer joint Thanksgiving message

Army News Service

This year's observance of Thanksgiving brings dual greetings from Secretary of the Army Michael P.W. Stone and Army Chief of Staff Gen. Carl E. Vuono.

Here is the text of their jointly signed message to the field:

"On this national day of thanks, Americans throughout the world pause in their daily pursuits to recognize the blessings of peace and prosperity that are our national birthright.

The Thanksgiving tradition, born amidst the hardships of 17th Century America and formally proclaimed by George Washington exactly 200 years ago, has been an enduring aspect of our lives and is as appropriate today as it was in the time of the Pilgrims.

"For we are a nation truly blessed — blessed with a heritage of unbridled opportunities and undiminished respect for the dignity of each individual American.

We are a nation committed to the principles of freedom, peace and liberty to which people throughout the world aspire.

"The U.S. Army plays an indispensable role in the preservation of these blessings.

"Whether forward-deployed along freedom's frontiers or serving within the United States, our soldiers and their families proudly stand as the ultimate guardians of the nation and as the first line of defense against tyranny and oppression.

"The dedicated men and women who make up our ranks are the guarantors that future generations of Americans can give thanks for the same blessings that we celebrate today.

"To every soldier, civilian and family member of the Total Army, thank you for your selfless sacrifice and for your commitment to the principles that have kept our country strong.

"Happy Thanksgiving."

INFANTRY Magazine gives sneak preview

INFANTRY Magazine

The November-December 1989 issue of INFANTRY features "KMAG and the 7th ROK Division," by Lt. Thomas A. Hall, and "NTC: Winning in the Engagement Area," by Lt. Col. Robert J. Greenwalt Jr.

Hall presents a detailed account of the 1950 invasion of the North Korean People's Army across the 38th Parallel into the Republic of Korea.

His article is based on the Korean Military Advisory Group Detachment's previously unpublished daily journal for June 25 and 26, which was saved from destruction by the author's father, a KMAG clerk at the time.

The author served with the 2nd Infantry Division in Korea and is now assigned to the 101st Airborne Division.

Greenwalt, an engineer officer, discusses the need to integrate maneuver, fire and terrain at the National Training Center to give a defender every possible advantage.

Heavy traffic to pose holiday safety threat

By Karles G. Jackson
Safety Promotion Officer

Fort Benning personnel will be exposed to the heavy holiday traffic this Thanksgiving on the state highways and in the local area, which means defensive driving practices must be exercised.

Be sure you know how to make the highway and local roads a "happy way" for your Thanksgiving holiday.

The ability to drive safely prevents the disability that may spoil your life.

For safety's sake, know and observe these fundamentals:

- Don't take chances with fatigue — change drivers or stop and rest.
- Don't drink and drive.
- Adjust your speed while driving in inclement weather.
- Remember that posted speed limits are for dry pavement ideal condtions only.

Keep in mind, that no matter what your occupation, when you are behind the wheel of your car, safe driving is a full-time job — a job that requires the use of knowledge, skill and good judgment.

Remember, the possibility of traffic accidents is higher during holiday periods.

Chances are an accident won't happen if the established rules of safe driving are followed.

Let's all apply courtesy, caution and common sense while traveling during the Thanksgiving holiday, and try, by example, to encourage others to do the same.

Have a safe and happy Thanksgiving holiday.

Commissaries stock shelves for holidays

Troop Support Agency

It's time to say hello to the colder months of fall and winter, "pick" those sweet potatoes and "bag" that special turkey for the holiday feast.

This task is much easier than it sounds because U.S. Army Troop Support Agency commissaries are stocking all those traditional holiday goodies.

Among the essentials customers can expect to find are large pumpkins, assorted bags of holiday candy, cake and cookie mixes, turkeys, hams and whole tenderloins; party mints, cranberries, candied yams and sweet potatoes; appetizers and snack items; paper plates, cups and napkins; candles, economy packs of batteries, plus flowers and greenery such as Indian corn, mistletoe and poinsettias.

There will also be the traditional holiday drinks such as eggnog and hot cocoa and cider mixes.

The commissary bakery section will be a good place to look for those special desserts to top off that holiday feast.

And don't forget the party platters and special cuts of meat, which can be prepared upon request.

Customers will notice special prices on some of their favorite holiday items, as commissaries will be running regional and local promotions on seasonal items.

So, for warm holiday savings in the colder months, customers need go no farther than their post commissary.

According to McNamara, the drug problem emanating from the Andean nations has clearly reached worldwide proportions.

"The drug market in the United States appears to have leveled off," McNamara said. "As our saturation point is achieved, the cartels look for other markets. Thus, we have witnessed a rise in traffic to Europe and within the producer nations themselves."

Ambassador McNamara followed his USARSA stop with a visit to Maj. Gen. Michael F. Spigelmire, Fort Benning commander, and a tour of the post.

Dedicated battalion of volunteers provide a much-needed service

By Michelle Le Roy Harrison
Bayonet staff writer

There is a small, but dedicated battalion of volunteers at Fort Benning who provide a service rarely acknowledged by the community.

While Fort Benning has volunteers helping the community in many different activities, there are seven women who, because of the odd hours they volunteer, don't get the recognition they deserve.

Yet, without them, the Fort Benning Spouse Abuse Shelter could not operate as it does.

These women make up the Concerned, Assistance, Resource and Education, or CARE, committee.

The job permits them to work at home on an on-call basis once a month.

They must be ready anytime, at night and on weekends, to assist abused women.

Each woman's motivation for volunteering is different, but they all have one thing in common — they volunteer to help the women in the community.

"People need to know that they have a place to go," said Carol Sumner, a volunteer on the CARE committee for three years.

Besides volunteering at the Fort Benning shelter, Sumner is on the board of directors at the Columbus Shelter for Battered Woman and works full time as the Fit-to-Win coordinator.

"Few people volunteer these days because they work full time," she said.

Sumner said she has no problem finding time to volunteer.

"I'm an Army spouse who has always believed in volunteering. But this is where I felt I was needed the most. This is something I believe in," she said.

Eva Serrano's reason for volunteering stemmed from a desire to help other Hispanics.

"I saw the increase of Hispanics in our community," Serrano said. "I knew that there was a need for someone who was bilingual."

She said that she hopes this will encourage woman who were once hesitant because of a language barrier to come to the shelter for help.

Serrano, a mother of three children, said that volunteering at the shelter doesn't interfere with her family.

"It works perfectly," she said. "I can volunteer right at home. "Most of the calls come at night, so my husband is home to watch the kids if I have to leave."

"My husband is very supportive (of my job)," Serrano said.

Roxann Campbell and Lyn Davis are one of two mother-daughter teams on the CARE committee. They were going to college and minoring and majoring, respectively, in sociology when they decided to volunteer.

"I saw the need for (volunteers at the shelter)," said Campbell, who said she had personal reasons for volunteering.

Her daughter followed in her footsteps in 1984 and seven months later began volunteering.

"I thought it would be good background experience for me (while I was studying sociology)," Davis said.

A degree, a job at the Columbus Health Department and five years later, Davis is still working at the shelter.

"I like working with people, especially those who are hurting, she said."

Rosalyn and Muriel Gaither are the other mother-daughter team at the shelter.

Daughter, Muriel, just completed her training and started working three weeks ago. She will pull her first on-call shift soon.

"I think I'll be able to handle it," Muriel said. "If I have any problems, there are a lot of people I can call."

Muriel said she was surprised to find out how many women today are abused.

"Everyone needs to be educated on (abuse)," she said. "I want to do what I can to help."

Her mother, Rosalyn has been volunteering for more than a year.

She said she has been lucky because in that year, she has not had to admit anyone to the shelter.

"Unless, of course, that is because women are not reporting (the abuse)," she said.

Rosalyn said she believes she can help abused women to feel better about themselves because she feels good about herself.

"I think a lot of the women feel bad about themselves," she said. "I want to help build their self-esteem."

All the women agree that one doesn't need to have a degree in sociology to volunteer.

"A lot of people are scared to volunteer because they don't have any experience," Sumner "But all they need are skills they probably already have."

Campbell agrees. "All you need is to have the willingness and compassion to help," she said, "and be able to talk and listen."

According to Sumner, most times, that is all the women want — someone to talk to.

Any training the volunteers need is provided by Army Community Services.

Most of them agreed that one of the reasons they continue to work with the CARE committee is because of the camaraderie they feel toward each other and because of ACS.

"ACS knows how to treat its volunteers," Sumner said. "They are treated well."

People who are interested in volunteering at the Spouse Abuse Shelter can contact Debra Howell, family advisor or Andrea Williams, volunteer supervisor at 545-1235/1061 for more information.

Korean speaking women are needed as bilingualists.

1,600 killed in firearm accidents each year

Infantry Branch Safety Office

Annually, more than 1,600 Americans are killed in firearm accidents, and at least another 12,000 are injured.

These totals include Army personnel who had been trained in firearm safety, yet they were killed or seriously injured from the accidental discharge of their weapons.

Firearms have become common place in most American homes. Some are used for recreation, such as hunting or target and skeet shooting; others provide the hobbyist or collector with hours of enjoyment.

Regardless of their purpose, firearms by themselves are safe. It is only when they are in the hands of an unskilled, nonthinking or careless person that they become dangerous.

Accidents with firearms are needless and can be prevented through conscientious adherence to the following 10 commandments of shooting safety:

- Treat every gun with the respect due a loaded gun.
- Always control the weapon's muzzle.
- Unload guns when not in use.
- Be sure the barrel is clear of obstructions.
- Be sure of your target before you pull the trigger.
- Never point a gun at anything you do not want to shoot.
- Never climb a tree or fence or jump a ditch with a loaded gun.
- Never shoot a bullet at a flat, hard surface or water.
- Store guns and ammunition separately, under lock and key.
- Avoid horseplay, and, above all, do not drink alcoholic beverages before or during shooting.

All personnel hunting within the Fort Benning military reservation should familiarize themselves with the Fort Benning hunting regulations contained in USAIC Regulation 210-2 and USAIC Circular 210-4.

Appointment no-shows cost time, money

Dental Activity

Dental appointment no-shows at Fort Benning continue to increase and many people don't realize the consequences of failing to call in a dental appointment cancellation.

In most cases, each failure to cancel an appointment can cost Fort Benning as much as $150 in unfilled time for dentists and dental assistants.

While money loss is a big consequence, that there are people on waiting lists to see a dentist who could use the appointments is another consideration.

Even though it is sometimes possible to fill unexpected appointment vacancies with people waiting for appointments, it doesn't always solve the problem.

No-shows tend to increase during summer and holiday seasons when children are out of school, families are on vacations and dental appointments are the last things on people's minds.

The people of Benning's Dental Activity understand that all appointments cannot be kept, but ask that people give the clinics as much notice as possible, even if it is only 10 minutes prior to the appointment.

Holiday driving safety tips

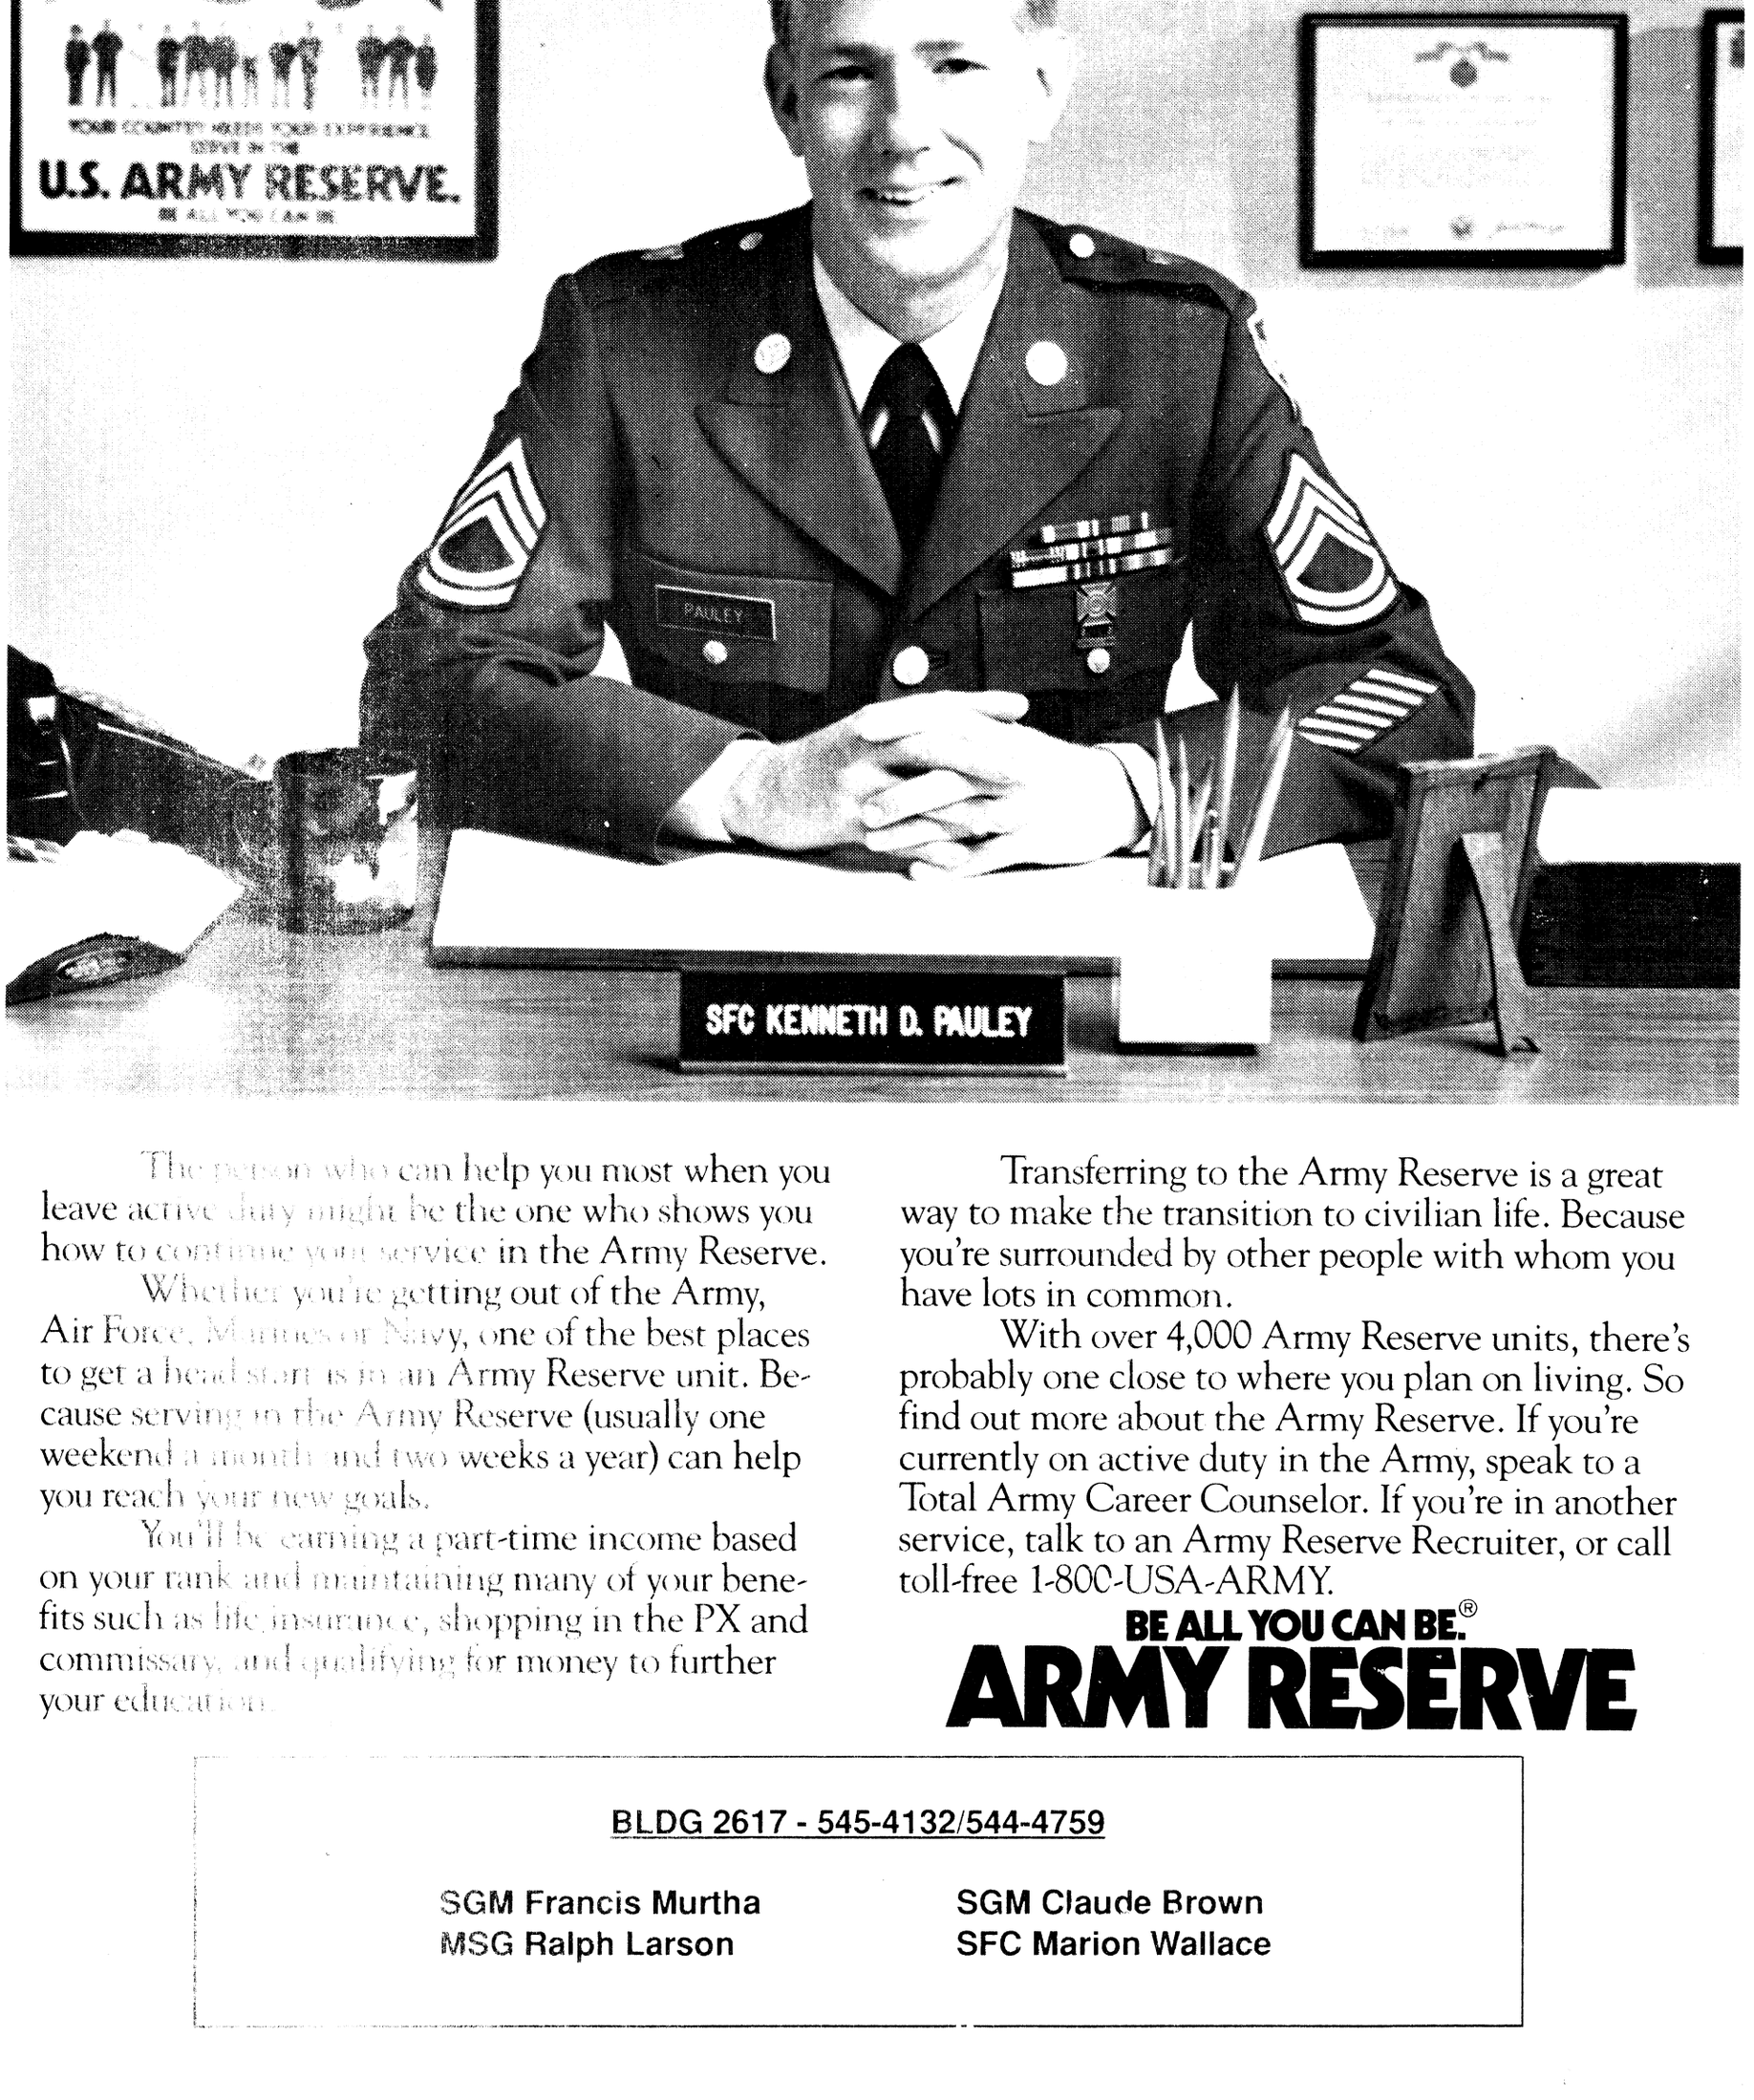
Infantry Branch Safety Office

When traveling over the Thanksgiving holiday weekend, your and your families' safety may be assured by following these precautions:

- Travel slower as the weather changes (fog, rain or snow).
- Have all vehicle windows cleared of frost and ice.
- Always allow adequate maneuvering room.
- Never exceed the posted speed limit.
- Obey traffic laws.
- Start your trip early after a good night's sleep.
- Giving the other driver the right of way to prevent accidents.
- Inspect your vehicle, especially the exhaust system.
- View vehicle operation as dangerous.
- Never drive until seat belts are buckled by everyone.
- Give traffic safety your number one priority.

Commissaries crack down on shoplifting

U.S. Army Troop Support Agency



Like the famous dog, McGruff, the U.S. Army Troop Support Agency's commissaries are going to try to "Take A Bite Out of Crime."

Traditionally, 45 percent of all annual shoplifting occurs during the winter holiday season, and TSA wants to remind customers that "shoplifting is stealing!"

Commissary shoppers are reminded that if they are caught shoplifting, they face stiff penalties, to include mandatory loss of privileges. A soldier may face court martial or administrative action taken against him by his commander.

Civilian family members can get a criminal record, a suspended jail sentence and a fine.

McGruff won't be the only one "Taking A Bite Out of Crime" this holiday season, so . . . shoplifters beware.

The person who can help you most when you leave active duty might be the one who shows you how to continue your service in the Army Reserve.

Whether you're getting out of the Army, Air Force, Marines or Navy, one of the best places to get a head start is in an Army Reserve unit. Because serving in the Army Reserve (usually one weekend a month and two weeks a year) can help you reach your new goals.

You'll be earning a part-time income based on your rank and maintaining many of your benefits such as life insurance, shopping in the PX and commissary, and qualifying for money to further your education.

Transferring to the Army Reserve is a great way to make the transition to civilian life. Because you're surrounded by other people with whom you have lots in common.

With over 4,000 Army Reserve units, there's probably one close to where you plan on living. So find out more about the Army Reserve. Engineers assemble children's bridge

By Aurelio Feliberty
197th Infantry Brigade

The 72nd Engineer Company (Combat), 197th Infantry Brigade, recently assembled a children's play bridge with slides for Tot Town, the child development center at the corner of First Division Road and McIver Street.

"The employees of Tot Town decided it was time to replace a few of the old slides with this bridge. We collected the money for the purchase of the $6,000 bridge from a civilian firm," said Tot Town supervisor, Ida Barnes.

"Having the 72nd Engineers assemble it for us saved Tot Town nearly $1,000," she added.

In early October, 3rd Platoon began working on the project. Platoon leader 2nd Lt. Todd Kennedy supervised the work, and Sgt. Jeffrey Boren served as the NCOIC.

"The men enjoyed this project because they were doing something outside their combat engineer MOS. Besides, we were happy to do it for the kids," Kennedy said.

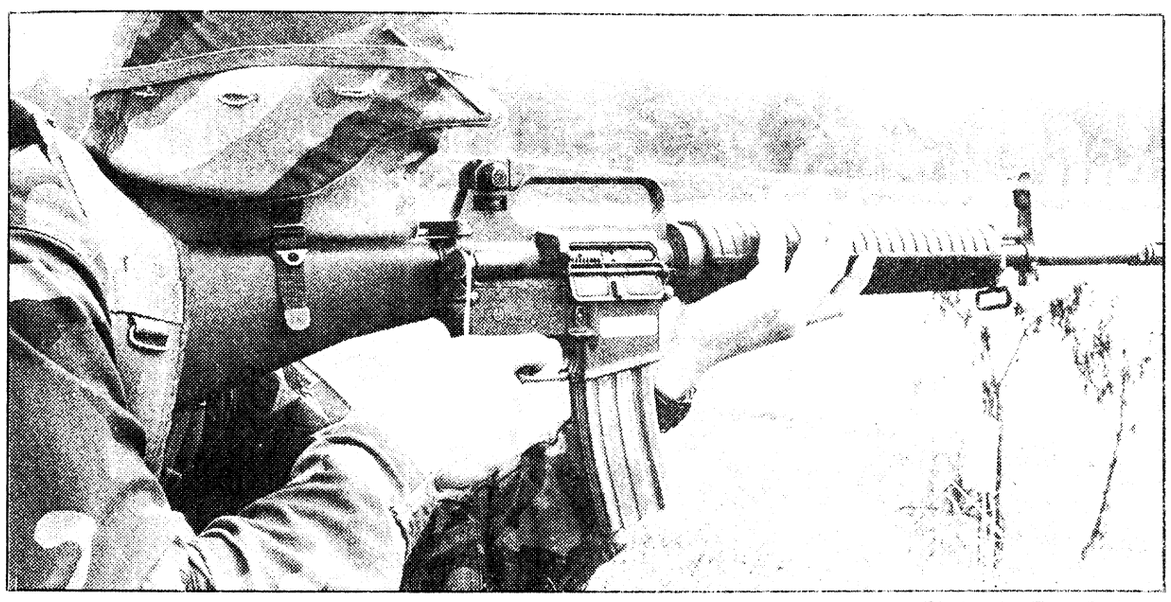
IOBC students tackle basic rifle marksmanship

By Kent Doane
2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry



As the alarm clock rings at 5 a.m., Oct. 30, the men of 2nd Platoon, Company C, 2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry, arise to greet a new week at IOBC.

After a week of inprocessing and a week of land navigation, most of the members of IOBC class 1-90 were looking forward to the challenge of Basic Rifle Marksmanship.

Oct. 30 was spent on practice or dry firing, and then grouping and zeroing the M-16A2 rifle.

Oct. 31 started off with a five-mile road march, then the students went to practice fire and practice record fire at McAndrews and English Ranges.

Each student was given a chance to fire at least twice; about 15 people scored expert. Many more scored 34 of 35.

Helicopter crews from 498th train for disaster

By Shawn Lorimer
Bayonet staff writer

Two UH-60 Blackhawk helicopters and their crews from the 498th Air Ambulance Company left Lawson Army Airfield to participate in the National Disaster Medical System Exercise Nov. 13.

The NDMS exercise was held at Fort Gordon, Ga., and involved more than 20 government and private agencies.

The purpose of this exercise, according to operations officer, Lt. Col. Ron Reed, was to prepare for the handling of mass casualties during either a natural disaster or a national security emergency.

This particular exercise began when 266 mock casualties were flown to Bush Field from a fictitious European battlefield.

Earlier, the casualties, from the U.S. Army Signal Corps School at Fort Gordon, had been made up with simulated wounds.

The C-130, provided by the Georgia Air National Guard, touched down at 8:30 a.m. and by 9 a.m., the casualties had been off-loaded by members of the local Civil Air Patrol, and the evaluation process had begun.

Doctors from University Hospital, in Augusta, provided support in a make-shift treatment facility, which had been set up in an aircraft hangar at Bush Field.

A nurse at the scene, 1st Lt. Jimmie Owens-Osborne explained, "This is where we divide the casualties into different categories for evacuation to the different hospitals in the area."

> "This is the first medical exercise of this magnitude done with the community."
>
> — Maj. John Coakley

At this point, the mode of transportation to one of the eight area hospitals was determined.

Evacuation by ground ambulance was provided by seven civilian hospitals in the area and by Dwight David Eisenhower Medical Center, which was the federal coordinating center for this exercise.

The mission of the two crews and aircraft of the 498th Air Ambulance Company was to evacuate casualties to predesignated landing zones where they would be met by evacuation teams.

These teams would then complete the evacuation on the ground to the appropriate hospital.

The previous evening, Capt. Kenneth Quaglio had flown his crew on a reconnaissance of the various hospitals and landing sites.

During the recon, Warrant Officer Alan Phillips took his turn at the controls in a second Blackhawk.

When it came time to fly the mock casualties, most of the missions were accomplished in less that 30 minutes.

In most cases, the helicopters were back loading more patients in less than an hour.

According to Quaglio, the missions could have been run faster had the civilian air traffic been diverted to other airports, as it would during a real medical emergency.

Maj. John Coakley called the entire exercise a success.

He said that there were a few problems to be ironed out, but that was the purpose of the exercise.

"We need to speed up the evaluation process as the casualties come in," he said.

Capt. Patricia Hayes said, "it was good because it dealt with both the military and civilians, but we still need better communication with the ambulances."

Communication is one problem in the NDMS that has yet to be resolved.

"The Army will not buy radios that can communicate with civilian agencies," said Coakley, referring to the lack of radio contact between ground-based medics and the Army helicopters.

Despite the logistical problems, Coakley said it was a learning experience and noted, "This is the first medical exercise of this magnitude done with the community."

11th Infantry Regiment holds annual retreat

By Capt. Payton Long
1st Battalion, 11th Infantry

The 11th Infantry Regiment held its annual retreat ceremony in conjunction with the Retiree Open House Nov. 3 on York Field.

This retreat ceremony commemorates the historic regiment organization day, celebrating the brilliant crossing of the Meuse River in World War I.

It was hosted by The School Brigade, which has all three of the regimental battalions.

The School Brigade is commanded by Col. James M. Jones Jr.

The reviewing official for the ceremony was retired Brig. Gen. Walter J. Bickston, the honorary colonel of the regiment.

Units participating in the ceremony were 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry, commanded by Lt. Col. Ben F. Taylor; 2nd Bn., 11th Inf., commanded by Lt. Col. Barrie A. Town; and 1st Bn, 507th Parachute Infantry Regiment (Airborne), commanded by Lt. Col. Mark Lewis.

The retreat showcased soldiers from the Infantry School and the Infantry Center.

Plaques were presented to The School Brigade Noncommissioned Officer of the Year, fiscal year 1990, and the Soldier of the Year, fiscal year 1990, by the 11th Infantry Regiment Association.

Highlights included the reaffirmation of the officer oath of office and the enlisted soldiers' oath of enlistment.

Clothing sales prices not set by Army, Air Force Exchange Service

Army News Service

True or false? The prices of Army issue items sold in Army Military Clothing Sales Stores are set by the Army and Air Force Exchange Service. These prices include a markup.

False, say officials at the U.S. Army Troop Support Agency.

"This is what the majority of soldiers think," said William C. Davis, director of clothing and services at TSA.

"But prices for these items are established at the Defense Personnel Support Center in Philadelphia and are listed on the Army Master Data File available in unit supply rooms.

"There is no markup. Items are sold at cost, and prices are the same whether the items are sold in clothing sales stores, issued at reception centers or requested through the Army supply system," Davis said.

At the beginning of each fiscal year, the customer may notice a price change on some issue garments.

These changes are DPSC-directed and not arbitrarily imposed by AAFES.

Davis added that clothing sales stores provide one-stop shopping for military uniforms and accessories and allow the customer to choose between purchasing Army issue or AAFES commercial items.

The sales tags are color-coded so the soldier can tell at a glance which type of item he is looking at.

A buff-colored tag indicates an issue item and a dark brown tag indicates an AAFES-procured item.

"Some soldiers also think that the clothing sales stores belong to the Post Exchange, but this isn't true, either," Davis said.

Since 1981, AAFES has managed the stores under a memorandum of understanding with the Army's deputy chief of staff for logistics.

According to the memorandum, the Army retains ownership of the stores and pays AAFES to manage and staff them.

From a Troop Support Agency release.

IOBC students meet October's challenges

2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry

Land navigation was the first task Company E, 2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry Officers Basic Course, encountered during the month of October.

The students met the challenge and successfully negotiated the Yankee Road Land Navigation Course.

Those who did exceptionally well were further challenged by an extended land navigation course in which they moved tactically through a course, which had points from 2,000 to 6,000 meters apart.

Those who participated said they considered it a tough course and felt the training was beneficial, as well as fun.

The week of Oct. 10 through 13 saw the students tackle the challenges of Basic Rifle Marksmanship.

The task of firing "expert" was a difficult one, which the students said they gave top priority.

Many met the standard; those who did not say they are eager to fire again.

Oct. 20 the students were trained in individual movement techniques.

They will use it in conjunction with the close-combat, live-fire exercise Nov. 1 and 2.

These tasks are designed to build knowledge and experience in moving individually, as well as teach working together as a team at the squad level.

ASK THE JUDGE

By Mark A. Gomez
Staff Judge Advocate's Office

Q. I recently purchased an item from a store in downtown Columbus. I used a check from my local bank.

When I got home, I decided that I really didn't need this item. I returned to the store to get my money back.

The store manager refused to give me a refund.

Feeling cheated, I stopped payment on the check. My friend told me I could get in trouble for doing this. Is he right?

A. Your friend may be correct. Under the law, when you write a check you are really making a contract. As with all contracts, you are promising to do something.

When you wrote the check to the merchant, you promised him your bank would pay him the amount on the check.

You also promised the merchant that if your bank doesn't pay, then you will personally pay him.

Under this contract, the merchant can require you pay him cash if the bank won't pay.

Of course most of us don't really think about all these promises each time we write a check, but the law will hold you to them.

When you stopped payment on the check, you told the bank not to pay the merchant.

This means you must personally pay the merchant.

However, because the check is a contract, if one party doesn't meet his promises, the other party may be released from his promises.

This is called a breach of contract. If the merchant sold you goods that did not live up to your expectations, then he may have breached his side of the contract.

Let's assume the item you bought was a Michael Jordan basketball. When you got home you decided to go to the gym and shoot some baskets.

You discover that the ball is so lopsided that even Michael couldn't make a lay up with it.

The merchant has sold you a ball that does not live up to your expectations of how a basketball should perform.

Under your contract, he should provide you with a new ball or return your check.

If he won't cooperate with you, you would have a legitimate reason to stop payment on the check.

Another situation that sometimes arises is that the purchaser gets home and decides that he doesn't really need the item.

There is nothing wrong with the basketball, but your friend just bought one. You decide to use his instead.

Under your contract, the merchant has fulfilled all his promises by selling you a perfectly good basketball.

If you stop payment on the check, you have breached the contract. The merchant can take you to civil court for breach of contract or worse, swear out a warrant against you for passing bad checks.

Georgia and Army law impose harsh penalties against people who write bad checks.

Stopping payment on a check without a legitimate dispute as to the goods or services that were provided is considered passing bad checks.

Imprisonment and stiff fines are sometimes imposed. The enforcement of these criminal sanctions still does not release you from your debt to the store owner.

Stopping payment on a check is a serious matter.

If you find yourself in a situation where you think stopping payment on a check is an option, be safe and call the Legal Assistance Office first at 545-3281/3282.

MARTIN CARE

By Jeanne Dickerson
Martin Army Community Hospital

Many families keep a crib in the family for years, passing from one generation to the next.

It's heartwarming to think that your grandchild is sleeping in the crib your firstborn child slept in.

Additionally, many expectant parents feel buying a used crib makes more economic sense than investing in a new piece of furniture that will only be used for a short time.

Unfortunately, many older cribs did not meet safety requirements set by the U.S. Consumer Product Safety Commission since 1974.

Older cribs have pretty cutout areas on the end panels through which a baby could slip his head and get caught.

The slats on many older cribs are more than 2-3/8 inches apart, the standard set by the commission.

Mattresses in older cribs do not always fit snugly against the sides and ends of the crib to keep the baby from slipping into the space between.

The mechanism to lock the side rail up is not always secure from accidental release by a curious baby.

Some even have decorative posts on the corners that stand higher than the rest of the sides, giving the baby a place to catch ties or strings on their clothing.

When buying a used crib, or if you have access to an older crib from family or friends, be sure to check its overall condition before your baby is placed at risk.

Be sure all slats, bolts and any other fasteners are in place. If something's missing, replace it before your baby uses the crib.

If you paint or refinish the crib, read the paint can label to ensure the manufacturer does not recommend against using the product on such items as cribs.

If you can fit more than two fingers between the mattress and the crib, the mattress is too small. An infant can suffocate by wedging its head between the crib and mattress.

Be sure the distance between the top of the side rail and the mattress is large enough to prevent your baby from climbing over the rail; most crib accidents occur when babies fall while trying to climb out of the crib.

If you use bumper pads, look for those with snaps. If you have one with ties, cut off excess tie that the baby might chew on or get tangled in.

When your baby can stand in the crib, remove the bumper pads; they give baby something to stand on when trying to climb out.

Regardless of the age of your crib, there are several safety precautions you should take to prevent injury to your baby. The Commission suggests the following:

- Set the mattress at the lowest position as soon as your child can pull up to a standing position.
- Do not leave toys or other articles in the crib your child can use to help him climb out.
- Never hang stringed objects, such as toys on strings, laundry bags and the like on the crib or close enough that a child could become caught in it and strangle.

If you have toys with cords or elastic for hanging, cut the strings off. Never put a loop of ribbon on a cord (as with a pacifier) around your child's neck.

- If you place a crib near a window, be sure there are no drapery or venetian blind cords within the baby's reach. Children can strangle on such cords.
- Never use plastic bags as mattress covers. The soft flexible plastic can cling to a baby's face and cause suffocation.
- When your child has reached 35-inches in height, it's time to take him out of the crib.

If you have questions on purchasing a crib or using one available through friends or family, call the Community Health Nurse, Lt. Col. Hazel Ivey, at 545-4041/4603.

TWINS
tough out OSUT training at Benning together

By Marilyn Balzarini
Infantry Training Center

Russell and Scott Kimberling weren't ready to start college right away. They wanted to face a real challenge first, so they joined the Army.

They are undergoing their 13 weeks of training at Company A, 2nd Battalion, 54th Infantry.

Joining the Army together was just like all of the other things the Kimberling twins have done together.

Born just minutes apart (Russell is older), they have always been together so experiencing infantry training separately just wouldn't have been "natural."

The Kimberlings' drill sergeant thinks of them as one. "Kimberling twice" is the expression the drill sergeants have adopted when referring to the twins.

"If either of us messes up we both have to do push ups," Scott said.

The Kimberlings feel that having someone to share the experience with is a definite advantage.

Cadre members at 2nd Bn, 54th Inf. agree. "Soldiers who go through training under the Buddy System seem to have less trouble adjusting," said the Kimberlings' drill sergeant, Staff Sgt. Terrance O'Neal.

"Buddies have someone to talk to from the very beginning. They also do better because they usually start competing against each other to see who can do things better."

The Kimberlings are currently attending 11C mortar training and will graduate from one station unit training in December.

The brothers plan to attend college after their Army commitment is over. Of course, they plan to attend the same school and share an apartment.

Scott intends to major in pre-law and Russell wants to major in business.

Both say returning to the Army as an officer after completing their education is a possibility.

"Our older brother was in the Army but, he wasn't in the infantry," they said. "We wanted to do something exciting."

Ex-football pro now staff member at a Benning gym

By John Robinson
Bayonet staff writer

The NFL, where men are men, finds one its ex-pros here at Fort Benning.

Otis Sistrunk, a bone-crushing lineman with the former Oakland Raiders, who saw 10 seasons, numerous playoffs and a super bowl is now a member of the staff at the Santiago Gym.

The soft-spoken giant serves as a "recreation aid" for drill sergeants, officers, family members and trainees.

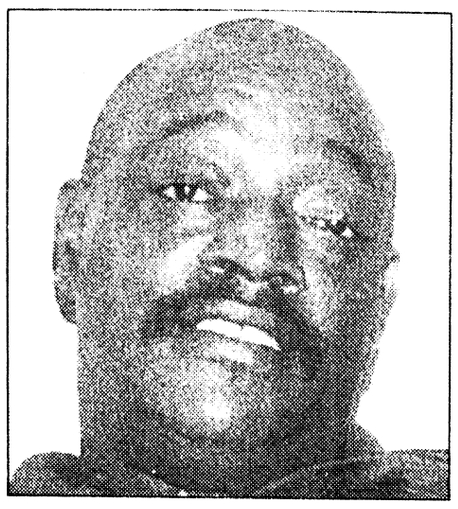
He only works part-time, however, and says he's been waiting on a full-time slot for four years.

Old habits die hard, though.

The ex-defensive end/tackle volunteers his time as a line coach with the Phenix City Colonels.

The Colonels are members of a 12-team, southern-based, semi-pro league.

He says he'd also like to coach in the new NFL farm-team league being formed in 1991 or possibly go overseas.



Whatever his future plans, Sistrunk's past speaks for itself.

A high school star who went straight to the now-defunct Continental Football Leagues Norfolk (Va.) Neptunes semi-pro team, Sistrunk found himself drafted by the Los Angeles Rams after only three years in the "minors."

Before he could don the blue and gold, he was traded to Oakland's dynasty team of the 1970s.

His 1971 to 1981 career was highlighted by the Raiders 1976 Super Bowl win over Minnesota, 34 to 14.

Those were the days when Sistrunk played with the likes of future hall-of-famers Gene Upshaw and still-star quarterback Kenny Stabler.

Otis Sistrunk

So, how about that super bowl ring? Fearing damage, he leaves the sentimentally priceless bauble at home.

He retired for reasons he terms as "injuries and age."

He says one knee was definately the deciding factor in his retirement.

Asked what the life span of a present-day NFL player is, Sistrunk responded matter-of-factly, "four years, you get hurt and you get put out."

"Guys don't play hurt as much anymore, and there's a lot of hitting but there's still too much fighting going on."

The veteran speaks from experience. "I was thrown out in Cleveland once for fighting. I learned my lesson, it was my fault."

"I thought a guy hit me in the back

'Before Breakfast Club' receives 10-miler trophy

By Shawn Lorimer
Bayonet staff writer

Fort Benning's women's running team, "The Before Breakfast Club," was recognized by Maj. Gen. Michael F. Spiglemire Nov. 16 for its Oct. 15 win at the Army 10-Miler in Washington, D.C.

At the end of the race in Washington, the scores were miscalculated, and the trophies were mistakenly issued to the women's team from Fort Bliss, Texas.

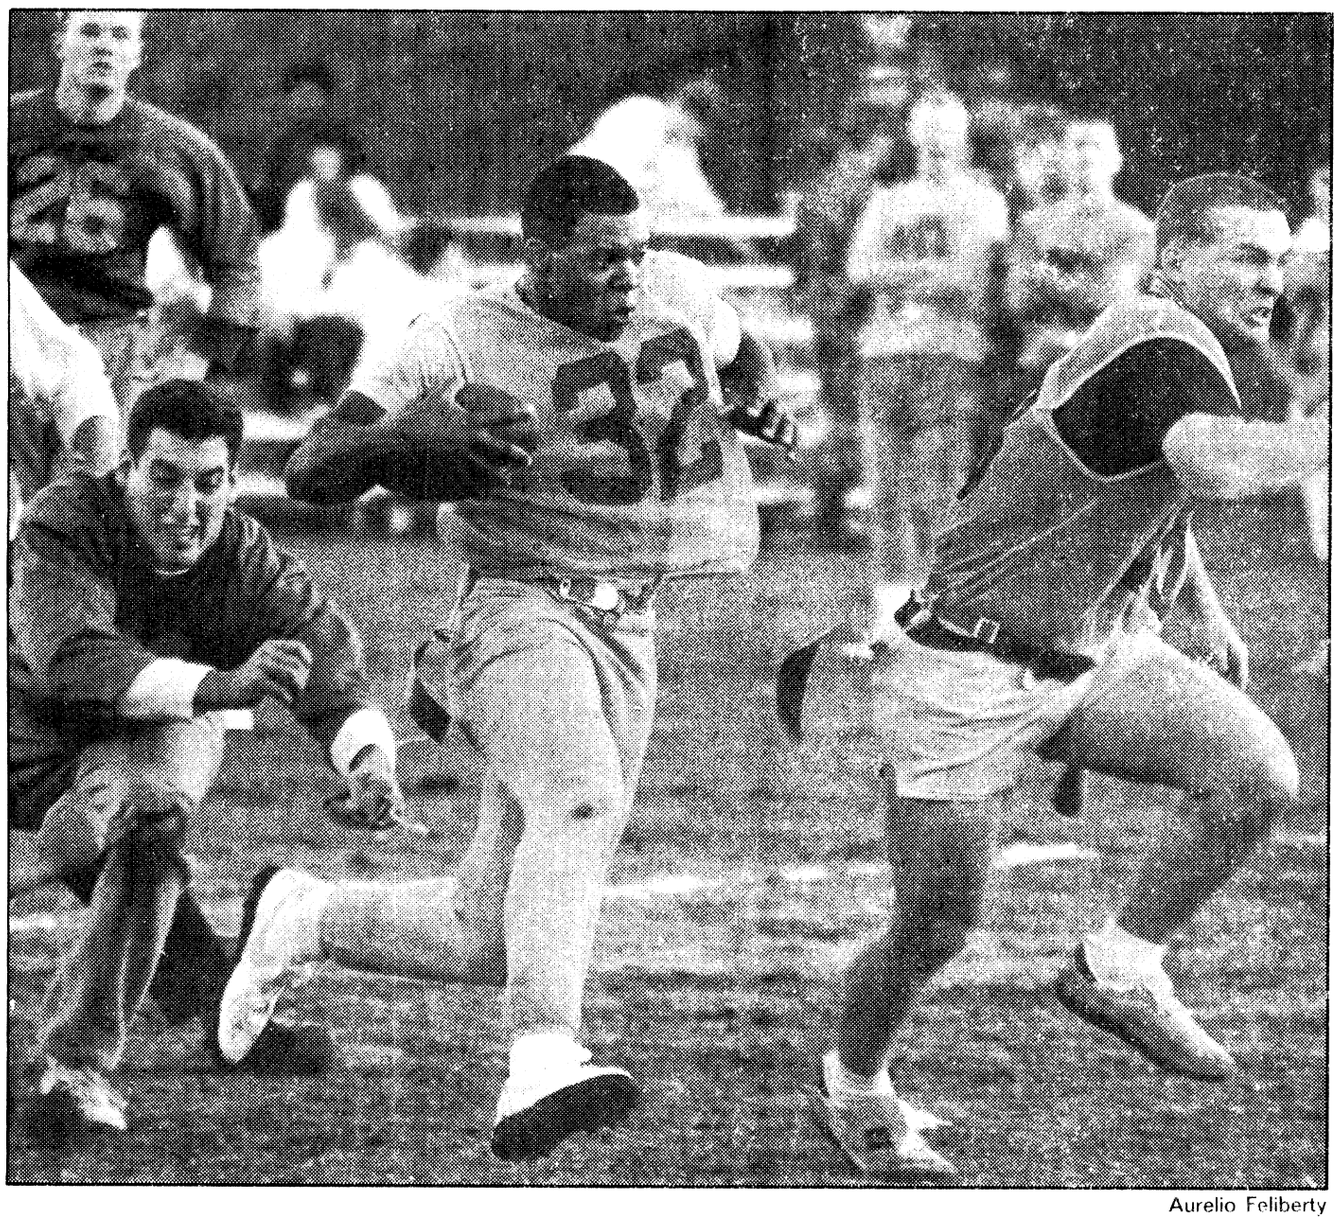
During the brief ceremony Nov. 16, the post commanding general remarked, "This ceremony is especially important because these runners were not properly recognized in Washington."

The team was then awarded a trophy for their victory. Team members were also each awarded the Army Achievement Medal and a gold medal for athletic achievement.

"We were all touched that the commanding general recognized us in that way," said team member, Ann McDonald.

According to the team members, the diversity of their various assignments required them to put in many before-duty hours to practice for the race.

Team members Lisc A. Cote and Susan E. Davis are assigned to Martin Army Community Hospital.



Molly J. Sinclair is a student at Columbus College and will attend the Signal Officer Basic Course at Fort Gordon, Ga., upon graduation.

Ann McDonald is a member of The Bayonet staff, and Kathy Wass is assigned to Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry, The School Brigade.

Davis and Wass are also currently attending airborne school with 1st Battalion, 507th Parachute Infantry Regiment.

197th Infantry Brigade

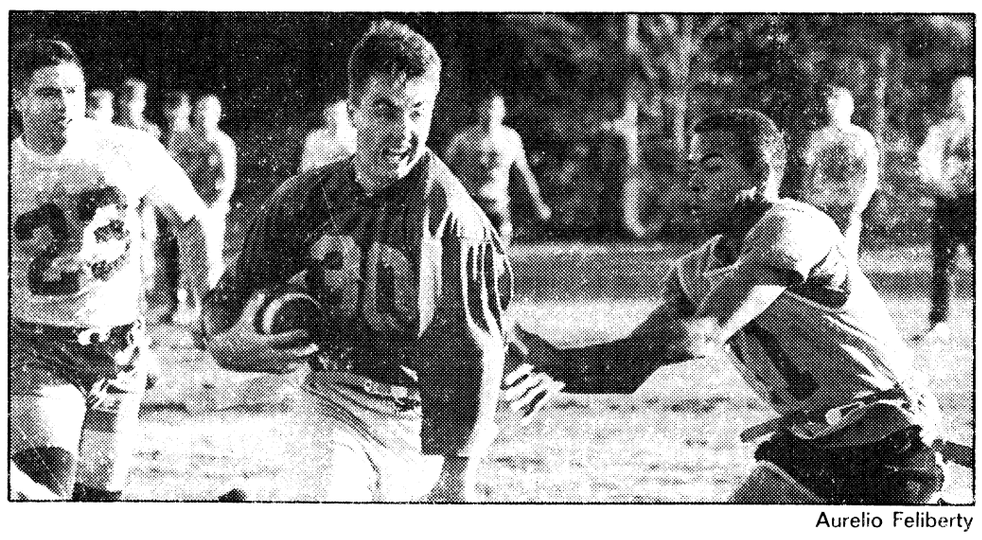
The 4th Battalion, 41st Field Artillery Redlegs outgunned 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor Panthers, 18-6, Nov. 9 to win the Kelley Hill Officer's Flag Football Championship.

"The team is performing well. We have improved our offense as well as our defense since the beginning of the season. We'll pull this game off," the Redleg coach, Michael Jones, predicted at the start of the game.

"We're ready. We have a great chance at winning. Our defense and offense tactics have improved," said Panthers coach, John Salvetti.

The Redlegs wasted no time scoring, as the team members stormed forward repeatedly, gaining ground on every play.

Several Panther defensive attempts were made to halt the Redlegs advances but all failed and Randy Cephus scored the Redleg's first touchdown bringing the game to 6-0.



The Panthers blew next drive when Redleg Tab Benzinger,from out of nowhere, came up with the game's first interception, setting the stage for the second Redleg touchdown.

The Redlegs lost their hope for a shut-out as Gary Branch put the Panthers on the board on a TD run with just minutes left in the game.

Undaunted, the Redlegs turned up the heat and Sean Edwards broke away for a touchdown.

The Panthers through away all chances for recovery right into the arms of Redleg Mickey Sanzota. Time ran out just after the interception, Panthers victorious at 18-6.

According to Jones, the win gave the Redlegs their third consecutive flag football title. "This almost makes a clean sweep, since we've already taken both the basketball and softball titles for this year, only failing to capture the volley title," he said.

Training center's HSC fares well at playoffs

By Troy A. Pearson
197th Infantry Brigade

Headquarters Service Company, Infantry Training Center tasted victory in the opening round of the post flag football playoffs, as they edged Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 197th Infantry Brigade, 8-6.

Both teams came defensively ready to play as was indicated by the close score.

HSC went into the game with a proud 6-2 record, while HHC put its 5-2 mark to the test.

"If all the players keep their motivation up and don't let their minds stray from what we're here for, we'll come out on top," said Carthell Granison of HSC at the start of the game.

"We have two players missing from the game tonight due to field training, which will put us somewhat at a disadvantage; however, we'll still give 110 percent," said Robert Anthony of HHC.

The game opened slow and remained scoreless until HSC capitalized on a crucial mistake made by HHC.

Gary Bush, quarterback of HHC, was unable to get his hands on an errant snap of the ball by the center, and an HSC defender trapped him in the end zone for a safety, brining the game to 6-0.

Following HSC's possession and failure to move the ball, Bush took advantage of his next possession and scored quickly on a 45-yard touchdown pass to Anthony. The rest of the first half was scoreless and the half ended at 6-2.

The second half also opened with a slow start as both teams committed costly offensive and defensive mistakes.

With HHC clinging onto its slim lead and less than a minute remaining, it appeared a victory was at hand.

However, these hopes soon vanished when HSC's Granison latched onto a desperation pass made by his quarterback and fell into the end zone to put his team on top.

HSC survived three last-second attempts by HHC to score, before celebrating an 8-6 victory to advance to the next round.

SPIRITUAL

Thanksgiving is the essence of spirituality

By Chap. Orlando Sunga
197th Infantry Brigade

Did you ever ask, "Why is Thanksgiving Day set on a Thursday?"

The real Thanksgiving was initiated on a Thursday — the real Thanksgiving, of course, is the Eucharist.

The word "Eucharist" means "Thanksgiving."

It would be wonderful if each community would gather together in their churches to celebrate Thanksgiving Day.

The essence of our spiritual life is thanksgiving. All that is good, we have received from God through no merit of our own.

God called us to salvation through his son, Jesus Christ.

Paul, the Apostle tells us, "Every good and perfect gift comes down from above."

There are three parts of thanksgiving: recognition of the gift, expression of appreciation and the desire to give in return.

When we go to church, we recognize all the blessings that we enjoy in life.

All these gifts come through Jesus, the Lord.

At the same time we express our appreciation by our participation in the celebration of the word of God and the Eucharist.

Finally, we must have the desire to give in return by offering ourselves in union with Christ to do the will of the Father — service to our fellow men.

The early Christians appeared before the Lord several times each year to present to God the best that they had.

From the first fruits of their harvest to the last, they offered them to the Lord to thank him for his blessings.

Christians could only give a token back to God from the gifts of produce of the fields.

In our thanksgiving, we give ourselves.

When we give ourselves in perfect union with the Lord, our faith takes on a new dimension. It becomes a worthy gift.

Thanksgiving is a secular holiday. But it is one we could well assimilate into our spirituality and our liturgical tradition.

It is rather silly that we only have one official day in the year to stop and give thanks to God for all the blessings of our lives.

We should thank God every day of our lives.

All things come from God as a gift, and we are only stewards. That we are specially fortunate in this land of ours, America, with its rich earth and bountiful crops and diverse people.

Today, we come to recognize God as the giver of all good gifts. We should show our gratitude for all the blessings that is given to us. The Lord has given us so much in this world, let us pledge that we shall be generous in sharing and caring for others.

Religious education of kids is more than Sunday School

By Debra Galle
USAIC Chaplain's Office

"Mommy, where does God live?"

Everyone may have an answer to this question, one that they are reasonably comfortable with, but when do we know everything about our faith?

The answer to that is never. Faith in itself is a continuing process of inquiry, research and understanding.

It is hoped that eventually we experience some of the delightful moments of "Oh yeah, that makes sense to me now."

No one tells graduating senior high school students that they have reached the end of their quest for knowledge. Yet many people feel they can reach an end to their religious education.

The Sunday School and CCD teachers say they marvel at how many of the children in their classes do not attend worship services.

"The parents simply feel the children will get all they need out of one hour of religious instruction a week," said Phil Reilly, director of Catholic Religious Education.

He explained that this gives children two obviously opposite messages: Learn about God, but don't go to church.

The need for education in these circumstances is not as great for the children as it is for the parents.

If the parents are learning and allowing their faith to be a part of their lives, it naturally trickles down to their children.

The most wonderful and useful thing a person could have when they face the world alone is the comfort and strength of their own faith.

Unfortunately, most people are not enately qualified to supply their children with all of the information and guidance they need above and beyond their formal academic and religious education.

Many of us find ourselves studying up on the latest first grade computer skills and watching with intense concentration as a tap dance instructor demonstrates the "Buffalo" (just in case she needs help when she practices at home).

In the same regard, we can't pass by the literature table in the religious without taking information about raising children in faith.

There is a woman at Fort Benning who has five young children. Her husband is stationed in Korea and will be away for another four months.

They all seem so contented and happy.

She said, "I have five children, and sometimes I think people feel sorry for me and wonder how I get along while my husband is away.

"But I tell them I am just fine because of the strength I get from God."

She said she spends most of her time associated with the Samoan Pentecostal Church at Kelley Hill.

Her activities include Bible studies, womens groups and worship, she said.

She said her two oldest sons look forward to Friday evenings when they have youth Bible studies.

Her 2-year-old girl, Lupe quotes her Bible verse for the day with great excitement, "Jesus loves me."

Although those five children will face difficulties in life, Lupe, like her brothers and sisters, will probably always have the comfort of the joy of faith in their lives.

What in this world could be more valuable than that?

'Around the World on Ice' is Busch Gardens new attraction

Busch Gardens

Visitors to Tampa's Busch Gardens can experience exotic foreign locales, ranging from a steamy South American jungle to the interior of an Egyptian tomb, at a dazzling new ice show, "Around the World on Ice," which debuted at the African-themed park this month.

Shown in the park's Moroccan Palace, the new show features lavish costumes and sets, dramatic special effects and music that runs the gamut from authentic folk pieces to upbeat, contemporary songs.

The production takes visitors on a whirlwind visit to the sights and sounds of six countries.

The show opens in a misty South American jungle, where a large stone idol comes to life by blasting fireballs as birds of paradise, a jaguar and black panther perform a frenzied dance.

Inside an Egyptian tomb, King Tut is awakened from his coffin by special lighting effects, as four mummies perform a comical dance to the song, "Walk Like an Egyptian."

Then it's on to Russia, featuring a grand procession of the Czar and Czariana in a majestic troika sleigh pulled by three horses.

Other settings include a Paris street scene, where a fountain statue comes to life, an English park and a rousing finale featuring a "Liberty Fanfare" and the patriotic sounds of Neil Diamond's song, "America."

"'Around the World on Ice' promises to be a spectacular ice show," said Joseph C. Fincher, general manager of the Tampa theme park. "With its cast of 15 professional skaters, exotic sets and beautiful costumes, the show represents an outstanding addition to Busch Gardens' live entertainment lineup."

Busch Gardens

A tribal high priest protects a sacred idol during the South American jungle sequence in the new ice show.

The show utilizes more than 300 lighting fixtures, which are operated by a computerized console to create the special lighting effects, as well as more than 20 sets and 750 costume pieces.

Bush Gardens is a 300-acre theme park, offering thrill rides, live entertainment, animal shows and exhibits and shops.

The park ranks as one of the nation's top zoos with more than 3,300 animals displayed in natural habitats.

Pro

with his fist after the play was over, turns out he was only blocking me."

Sistrunk offers his own hard-line suggestions to prevent fighting in the NFL.

"I think they should start fining the guys in the NFL such that if you get thrown out of the game you don't get your check that week. I think that would stop a lot of the fighting."

"I don't care how much money you're making, you can still get hurt when they take a check."

"Now, if you hurt somebody, you hurt somebody, but do it in a clean way. Don't go out there and try to be a cheap shot. I hate to see cheap-shot football."

Featured on an ESPN half-time presentation titled 'Half-Time', Nov. 12, Sistrunk was caught in action helping drill sergeants and trainees keep in condition during their off-time.

The feature was part of ESPNs recent spotlights on former pros.

Modesty prevents Sistrunk from elaborating on his role in the nationally-televised special.

However, he was quick to point out that no one else was featured with him. "It was just me," he said, enjoying the moment of personal glory.

No stranger behind the camera, he joins a roster of greats, including Randy White, Larry Czonka, Bert Jones, L.C. Greenwood and Hacksaw Reynolds for Miller Lites latest "all-pro lineup commercial."

So, is it less filling or does it taste great?

"It tastes great," quips the former star, "but I also believe in the charitable spirit of the Miller Brewing Company."

"They do a lot of charity work and things for the community, and I support things like that."

Sistrunk's 1990 Superbowl prediction? The Raiders, of course. "Once a Raider, always a Raider," he said.

Army-Navy Classic December 9

The Army-Navy Football Classic will be held Dec. 9 in Giant Stadium at the Meadowlands.

As in the recent past, CBS Sports expects to air the game around 2:30 p.m. Eastern Standard Time.

For this game, West Point is soliciting Army-Navy Spirit Videos from units in the field.

During the last several seasons, the Army has been extremely successful in having short (15- to 20-second) videos showing soldiers in tanks, attack helicopters in formation or parachute teams sending a single message — "Go Army, Beat Navy."

The network is eager to show videos from subordinate commands. Their advice is "the more clever and unusual the better."

If your command would be interested in preparing three-quarter-inch Army-Navy spirit videos for CBS to air during this year's game, send them to the following address:

Directorate of Academy Relations, Attention: Lt. Col. Bruce K. Bell, U.S. Military Academy, West Point, N.Y. 10996-1788.

To allow adequate time for CBS to use these videos, please ensure they arrive at West Point no later than Nov. 28.

Area scouts set food drive record

By John Robinson
Bayonet staff writer

The largest single food drive in the area's recent history wrapped up Nov. 18 with a record number of collected food items.

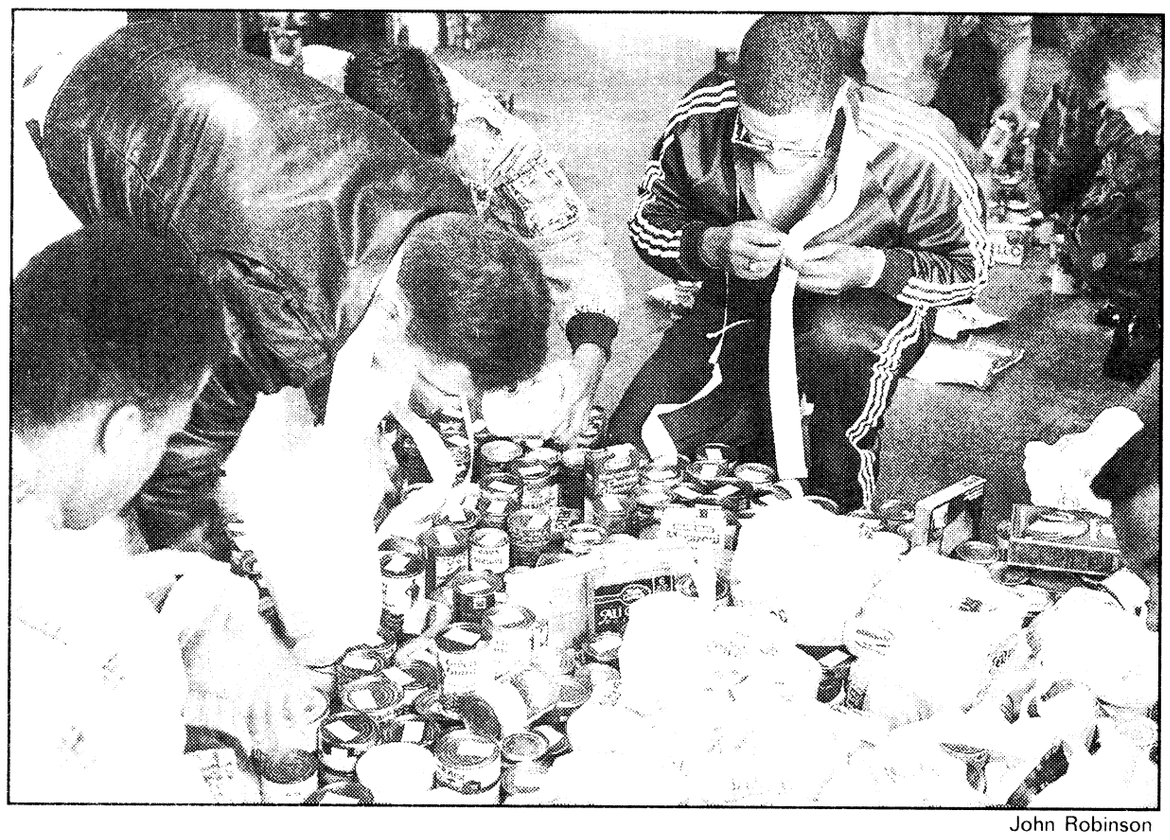
"Scouting For Food," an annual project spearheaded by the Chattahoochee Council of the Boy Scouts of America, was an effort to collect canned goods to donate to needy families in the west Georgia and east Alabama area.

Approximately 130,000 food items have been collected, equaling nearly 65 tons, according to Earl Burkett, Scout Explorer director.

Burkett said that last year's tally was 104,000 food items.

Dudley Wells, project publicity chairman, said the collection at Fort Benning more than doubled last year's donation.

"We're deeming the whole thing absolutely successful," he said. "Now people in need of food will have more access.



"This also provides the scouts with a great opportunity for their 'good turn.' That's what scouting's all about."

The Army Community Service Food Locker received 5,946 cans and 766 boxes from the food drive. This was a 15.23 percent increase in the number of cans over last year.

This holiday season, the projected number of families who will be assisted is 198 compared to last year's 172.

ACS normally gives out 30 cans of food per family of four.

In addition to ACS, other Columbus area agencies will benefit from the drive, including Interface Food Bank, Valley Rescue Mission, House of Mercy and the Childrens Emergency Center.

John Robinson

Volunteers sort the food collected during the Scout's annual food drive.

According to Hecht, some 20 million Americans, including four million children, go hungry at some time every month.

"Hunger is a problem we can do something about by working together and our Scouting For Food Good Turn is a starting point," said Chuck Hecht, council chairman for the appeal.

"This is one of the most dramatic opportunities we have ever had to demonstrate the worth of the scouting movement," Hecht said.

Benning continues phone system upgrade

By Michelle Le Roy Harrison
Bayonet staff writer

Fort Benning is continuing to upgrade its more than 30-year-old telephone system in a three-phase project, to bring the post up to speed with other modern-day telephone systems.

Twelve million dollars worth of improvements to the telephone system began in January when the post's primary contractor, GTE, broke ground to lay new fiber-optic cable.

According to Lt. Col. Glenn J. Link, director of information management, the new telephone system will eliminate some of the problems the old system had developed over the years.

Some of those problems include noisy lines, cross talk and line disconnections. The new system will bring better lines and quicker connections.

This is a very big project, and engineers are working as quickly as possible, Link said.

A target date of May 1990 has been set for completion of the project, although this is subject to change slightly, according to Link.

At the time of completion, all the fiber-optic cables will be in place, and the system will "cut over" to four GTE electrical switching systems.

The electrical switching systems will replace the present electro-mechanical telephone switching system.

According to Sgt. Maj. Harry Scruggs, sergeant major of information system command, by late May, customers will see the benefit of all the labor put into the project.

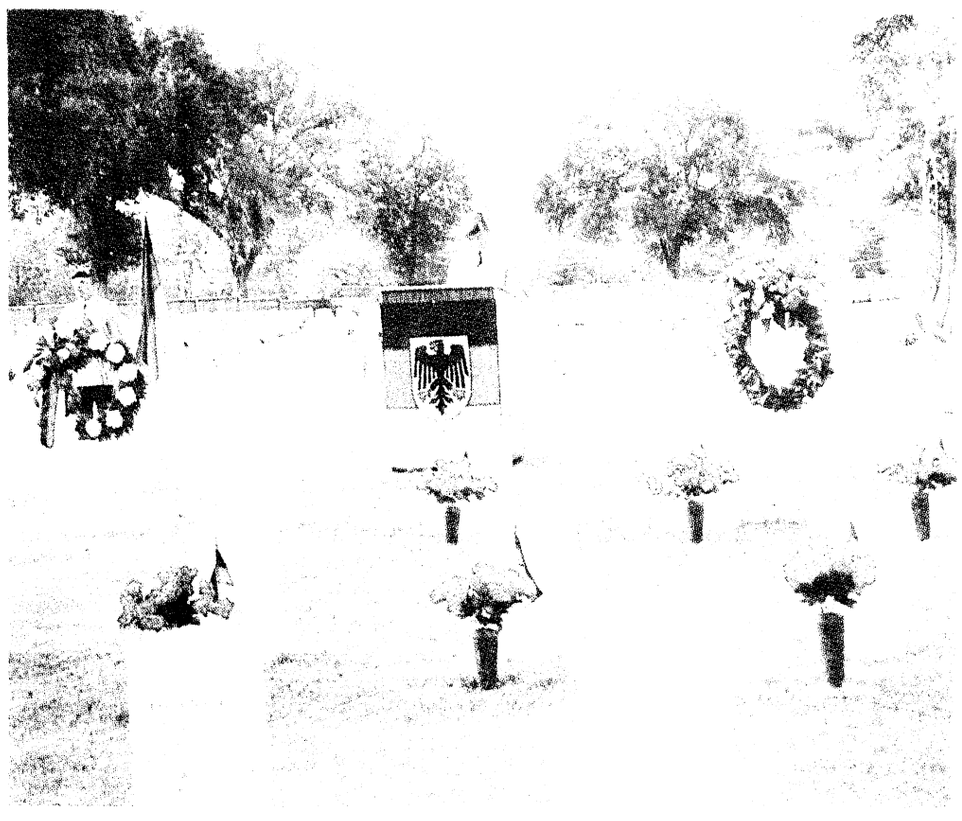
In the second phase of the upgrading project, 20 percent of the total continental U.S. budget has been put into an Outside Cable Rehabilitation contract.

This procedure will replace old lead cable with a more advanced copper cable.

The lead sheeting of the old cable has been perforated throughout the years.

This causes the lines to partially short out when moisture seeps through to the cable.

The new cable is usable with the old switches and is functional as soon as it is installed.



Telephone users on the other side of the cable will see an immediate improvement in the quality of the lines, Link said.

The third phase of upgrading the system includes local maintenance projects. Contractors are hired in response to emergency situations.

Currently, engineers are working to repair the telephone system at Kelley Hill. Future plans include installing new cables and a building to house an electrical switching system.

At Harmony Church, the present building that houses the main telephone switch has deteriorated since its construction during World War II. Repairing the building wasn't feasible so a new building was built.

Installation of the equipment into the new building is scheduled to begin today.

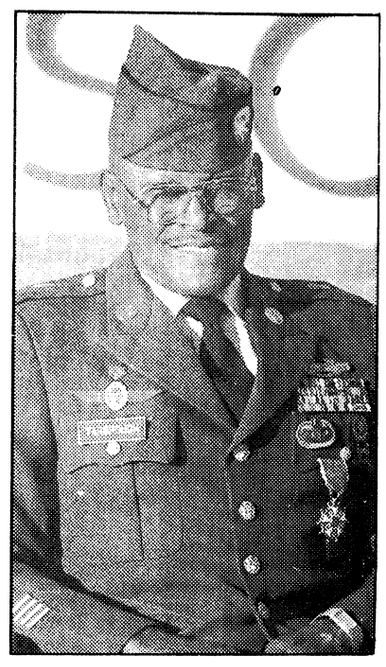
USAIS sergeant major retires

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer



The U.S. Army Infantry School sergeant major, a 29 year veteran, retired last week in a ceremony in front of Infantry Hall.

Yarbrough said, "All of us strive for this day. This couldn't be more perfect."

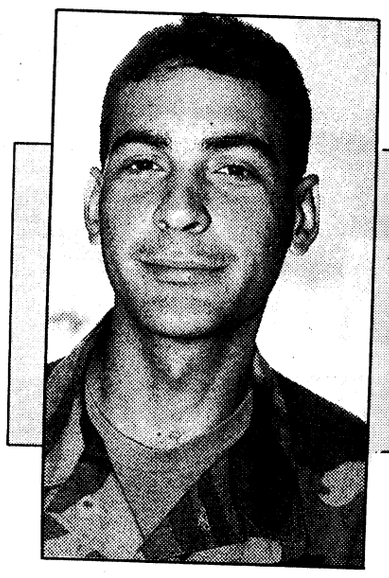
He said he was proud to be surrounded by soldiers because soldiers have been touching his life in some way his entire time in the Army.

Brig. Gen. William Steele, the assistant commander of Fort Benning noted that there were letters sent from all over wishing Yarbrough well in his future endeavors.

Gen. Edwin Burba, Forces Command commander and former commander of Fort Benning wrote to Yarbrough, "I'm proud to have served with the best of the best, and I consider Sergeant Major Yarbrough to be an outstanding soldier."

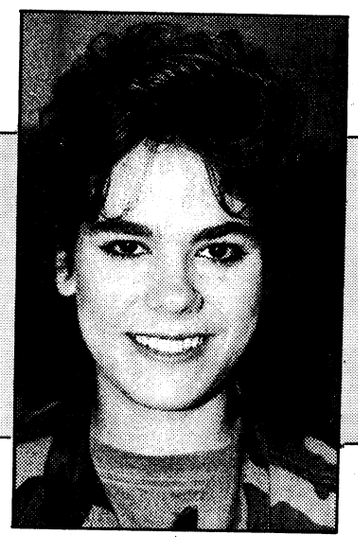
Jeffree Yarbrough

According to Steele, many letters echoed those remarks, and he said he was grateful for the time he served with Yarbrough.



Yarbrough spent 14 of his 29 years overseas, including two tours in Vietnam.

During the ceremony, he was awarded the Legion of Merit.



He plans to reside in Florida.

VARIOUS VOICES: What lessons did the Army learn from Pearl Harbor?

Staff Sgt. Nathanial Benitez, Svc. Btry., 4th Bn., 41st Fld. Arty., 197th Inf. Bde. — "To be ready at all times, because you never know what's going on behind your back."

Cut out the 'Admin' bashing; writer sets Snively straight

I am writing in reference to the editorial you ran on Nov. 17 by Clyde Snively.

I feel it's about time to bring all this Admin bashing to an end. Let's get real — desk-borne warriors with spit-shined boots who never leave the office.

Let me fill you in on a few things. Soldiers have problems with pay, emergency leave, leave adjustments, applications for school and promotions. We do not create these problems; but we are expected to fix them, and fix them we do.

So you see, when one of your soldiers creates a problem, you send him to S-1 (Admin). Why? Because we know what to do and where to send the soldier to get his situation fixed, cleared up or approved.

Admin soldiers must always keep current on Army regulations, administrative procedures and keep the commander informed of policy changes.

The Admin soldiers who serve with the Infantry Training Center Headquarters are very professional and dedicated.

We support more than 8,000 infantry soldiers on a constant basis, and we do so with pride. To refer to them as desk-borne warriors is a great injustice.

In the future, refer to them as what they are, professional noncommissioned officers and soldiers who care.

Maybe what you wrote was in jest, but enough is enough.

The Army could not function without Admin soldiers. We know it and so should you.

I doubt this letter will get printed. Well, that's status quo with you!

Philip C. DeMello
Staff Sgt., USA

Letter complains about PLATO hours

The Fort Benning Education Center has available for use by military, civilians and family members, free, computer-based instruction courses called PLATO.

These courses range in subjects from math to computer literacy and technical fields to management techniques. Many of these courses are available for college credit.

The only drawback to these courses is that they are only available Monday through Friday from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m.

These limited hours nearly negate the possibility of participation by employed individuals.

The Education Center staff seems more than willing to see the PLATO courses offered after the normal duty hours, but budget constraints are cited as an obstacle to that possibility.

I would like to point out that to send an individual TDY or pay for a soldier to attend one college class would cost about the same as paying a person for a few after duty hours.

Another course of action would be to tap into the volunteer pool, which could man the center, as well as offer valuable training to the volunteer.

The Army stresses formal education because it is essential for any soldier, enlisted or officer, who plans to make a career in the military to have and continue a formal education.

Of course, the Army is mission oriented, and, many times, the mission is accomplished at the expense of a soldier's formal education.

It is therefore essential that every opportunity be afforded to the soldier to accomplish his mission and "be all he can be" with the help of this type of training.

I have talked with multitudes of soldiers and civilians who would like to see PLATO available after normal duty hours and even went so far as to see if I could circulate a petition to indicate interest. However, my calls for permission to petition were not returned.

Something needs to be done to increase the use of this valuable resource of education.

Extended hours will benefit a majority of soldiers and civilians on this installation.

Kathy Romero
Family member and DA civilian

Learning Center personnel consider alternatives to keeping longer hours

First, let me thank you for your letter concerning the operating hours of the Army Learning Centers.

Many personnel, both military and civilian, have voiced their concerns about the limited operating hours.

Unfortunately, there seems to be no easy solution to this problem.

Prior to March 1988, the Learning Centers were open after normal duty hours. However, due to budget cuts, Learning Center operating hours were decreased.

Funding to keep the Learning Centers open after normal duty hours still remains a problem.

This is not to say that we are not looking at alternative ways to make PLATO available after hours.

One means that will allow access to PLATO after normal duty hours will be the installation of dial-up equipment.

Installation of dial-up equipment is scheduled to take place in the very near future.

Dial-up capability will allow personnel to take PLATO courses from their work station or for that matter, from their homes.

To access PLATO, an IBM compatible PC with a graphics card, modem and access software will be required.

The required software will be made available to Fort Benning users at no cost.

Most offices at Fort Benning have the computer hardware needed to access PLATO.

Although dial-up capability will not solve the problem entirely, it will certainly improve accessibility to the many training and education courses on PLATO.

In addition, we are evaluating alternative means to keep the Learning Centers open after normal duty hours.

Making the Learning Centers available during times when everyone can use them is a major concern and will remain so until an acceptable solution can be found.

Your continued interest and support in encouraging soldiers, civilian employees, family members and other eligible individuals to use the Learning Centers would be deeply appreciated.

If you need additional information, please contact Sonny Nolin, Learning Center coordinator, 545-3093/5826, or myself at 545-1774/1681.

Safety folks worry about everyone's welfare

By Clyde Snively
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Have you ever seen a happy safety officer?

You may have seen grim ones, or stoic ones, but I doubt if you ever saw one smile.

I wonder if they ever have a nice day.

I mean, how'd you like to have to worry about the safety of 27,000 soldiers and nearly 10,000 civilians every day?

Something happens to one of them, and who's the first person to get asked, "What happened?" in a tone of voice that really wants to know "why did you let that accident happen."

Safety officers don't just keep records on the number of accidents we have on post. They go out and investigate to see why the accident occurred.

They also have to advise commanders on how to prevent accidents from happening.

Even if it's a piece of equipment no one's seen before, let alone knows if it's dangerous.

I think, too often, in the case of the safety officer, the messenger gets shot.

Right now, the safety people are banging their heads against the wall trying to figure out how they can help cut down on the number of drunken drivers.

They aren't alone, of course, but they have a vested interest because they know a drunk behind the wheel is an accident waiting to happen.

I feel for them, too. How do you get through to a person who's willing to risk a fine approaching $1,000, plus lose his driving privileges.

If threats of that magnitude don't work, I sure don't know what will.

Maybe we need to start fining people who allow drunks to drive away from wherever it was they had too much to drink, be it a home or place of business.

I can see a boom in the self-administered sobriety test business.

I can also see the Maalox cocktail coming into vogue for hosts who serve alcoholic beverages.

But, as I noted, DUIs aren't the only concerns of the safety folks.

They also have to track fingers that get smashed by tank hatches, airborne accidents, people falling into holes out on night navigation courses, plus the industrial accidents. And yes, they are concerned with accidents stemming from athletic events such as flag football.

Flag football, in fact, must be a real favorite with the safety office.

This past season, besides the usual strains and sprains, one player came up with a broken jaw.

And here I'd always looked on flag football as a kinder, gentler sport. At least more so than tackle football. Guess I'm wrong. Maybe we should go back to tackle football and see what happens.

We could test the system by pitting the 507th folks against the Ranger Training Brigade. Call it the Beret bowl.

Didn't they do this before? Anyway, I got dibbs on the band-aid concession.

Even better than tackle football, would be Rugby. I always thought this was a sport for manly men who enjoyed gouging out people's eyes or biting off their ears.

But I must be mistaken because I don't recall seeing any stats on rugby injuries this past year.

I guess what this all boils down to is awareness. Before doing something, we need to weigh the risks, decide if we're trained enough to try whatever it is we're about to do.

If we aren't, then we get trained and try the task later.

We can't keep falling back on the old saw, "accidents will happen." They are preventable.

Former 197th Spt. Bn. senior NCO retires

By Willie Hay
197th Infantry Brigade

When the need arises, a staff sergeant can fill the first sergeant's shoes.

Just ask Command Sgt. Maj. Horace Hughes, who retired Nov. 17 after 30 years of military service.

The former senior noncommissioned officer of the 197th Support Battalion can tell you that during the height of the Vietnam War, he was called upon to do just that.

"I was a unit supply sergeant in the 1st Battalion, 16th Infantry (Rangers) during the Tet Offensive in 1966 when I was chosen acting first sergeant of Bravo Company for a two-month period," Hughes recalled.

Willie Hay

Command Sgt. Maj. Horace Hughes and his wife Ursula stand at attention after receiving awards.

"Since I was the highest ranking surviving NCO, I was put in charge until we got back up to strength," he said.

Rather than considering his experience unique, Hughes believes all NCOs can — and should — be ready for the challenge of leading soldiers.

"I think any well-trained NCO will rise to the occasion whenever called upon to do so, regardless of his MOS," Hughes said.

"If leadership is instilled in you as an individual, you can lead soldiers whenever the situation calls for it."

Hughes went on to serve a second tour in Vietnam with the 82nd Airborne Division, choosing to remain there with the 1st Infantry Division in 1970 when the 82nd returned to the States, and finishing his tour with the 42nd Transportation Group in Long Binh.

"I've worked in all phases of logistics throughout my career, and I think the 197th Support Battalion ranks with the top units in the Army in combat readiness," he said. "I've seen none better trained or organized to perform in a combat environment.

"What many soldiers in the line units don't understand is that the 'Dependables' of 197th Support do the same job they would do in combat every day," he continued. "If they ever had to go to war, I don't think the NCOs of the 197th would be at any handicap whatsoever."

However, as the battalion's senior noncommissioned leader, Hughes never told his fellow NCOs that the Army would give them a free ride.

"Times ahead are going to be difficult for career-minded NCOs because the criteria for retention and promotions will be tougher in light of the proposed 62,000 reduction in forces," he said.

"If you're not willing to put soldiering first in your life, you ought to think about looking for a different career."

Hughes believes showing initiative is the key to success in the Army.

"I sat on three E-9 promotion boards, and the people who were selected were those whose records showed they always took the initiative to improve their education and proficiency as NCOs," he said. "By taking the initiative, you not only set the example for others but automatically become a leader."

That was the point Hughes stressed to his soldiers at the retirement review ceremony the noncommissioned officers of the battalion gave him at Kelley Hill's Artillery Field.

"I challenge each of you to strive for excellence and take the initiative to become a professional," he said. "If you take the initiative to do what you know is right, 30 years of your life doesn't seem quite so long."

Command Sgt. Maj. Jimmie Bowles, 197th Infantry Brigade command sergeant major, and Command Sgt. Maj. John L. Wright Jr., Hughes' successor, both saluted his leadership of the battalion during the Army's Year of the NCO.

"Your expertise and experience have helped to make the 197th Support Battalion a unit to be proud of, and we, the Dependables, will miss you," Wright said. "Good luck in all your future endeavors."

Hughes, who was awarded the Legion of Merit, plans to seek civil service employment in logistics. He and his wife Ursula reside in Columbus.

Manufacturer recalls infant car seats

Army, Air Force Exchange Service

Evenflo Juvenile Furniture Company is notifying all customers who purchased their Evenflo or Dyn-O-Mite Infant Car seats manufactured prior to February 1989 about a possible safety problem.

This problem only exists when the car seat is in its lowest recline position using only the automobile's lap seat belt.

The only unit involved in this alert, which was sold through AAFES is the Dyn-O-Mite Infant Car Seat model 443.

Instructions concerning the safe use of the Dyn-O-Mite Infant Car Seat applies to the following models manufactured by Evenflo Juvenile Furniture Company.

"Model numbers 441, 442, 443, 444, 445, 446 and 448 with tubular steel frames, manufactured from 1985 up to and including January 1989 should not be used in the fourth most reclined position when using only the automobile's lap seat belt.

The Evenflo Infant Car Seat models 456 and 458, with a molded pedestal base, should not be used in position two, its most reclined position, using only the automobile's lap seat belt.

Units produced after last April 10, contain this revision to the instruction sheet.

The date of manufacture for all model numbers can be found stamped on a label on either the side or the back of the unit.

Although there have been no reports of injury as a result of using the most reclined positions, it has been found in some cases, that the seat back can exceed the 70-degree, maximum angle allowed by the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration.

An automobile's lap seat belt is sufficient for the other positions on these models.

All the listed models can be used in the most reclined position if your automobile also has a shoulder seat belt and the shoulder seat belt is threaded through the built-in plastic clip on the back side of the infant car seat.

If the shoulder belt is not self tightening, you must use a locking clip.

A warning label is available for you to attach to your car seat concerning this change in instructions with respect to the use of the most reclined position.

To receive a warning label to attach to your product or for more information, call the CONUS toll-free number 1-800-233-5921.

'Veterans Benefits Day' scheduled in Athens, Ga.

Department of Veterans Affairs

Georgia veterans and their family members will have an opportunity to get information and assistance from some 25 municipal, state and federal agencies about benefits when the Georgia Department of Veterans Service together with the U.S. Department of Veterans Affairs conduct a one-day, one-stop service and information session.

The session will be held in the Bishop Park Gymnasium, 805 Sunset Drive, Athens, Ga., from 10 a.m. until 4 p.m., Thursday, which coincides with the 48th anniversary of the Japanese attack on Pearl Harbor in 1941.

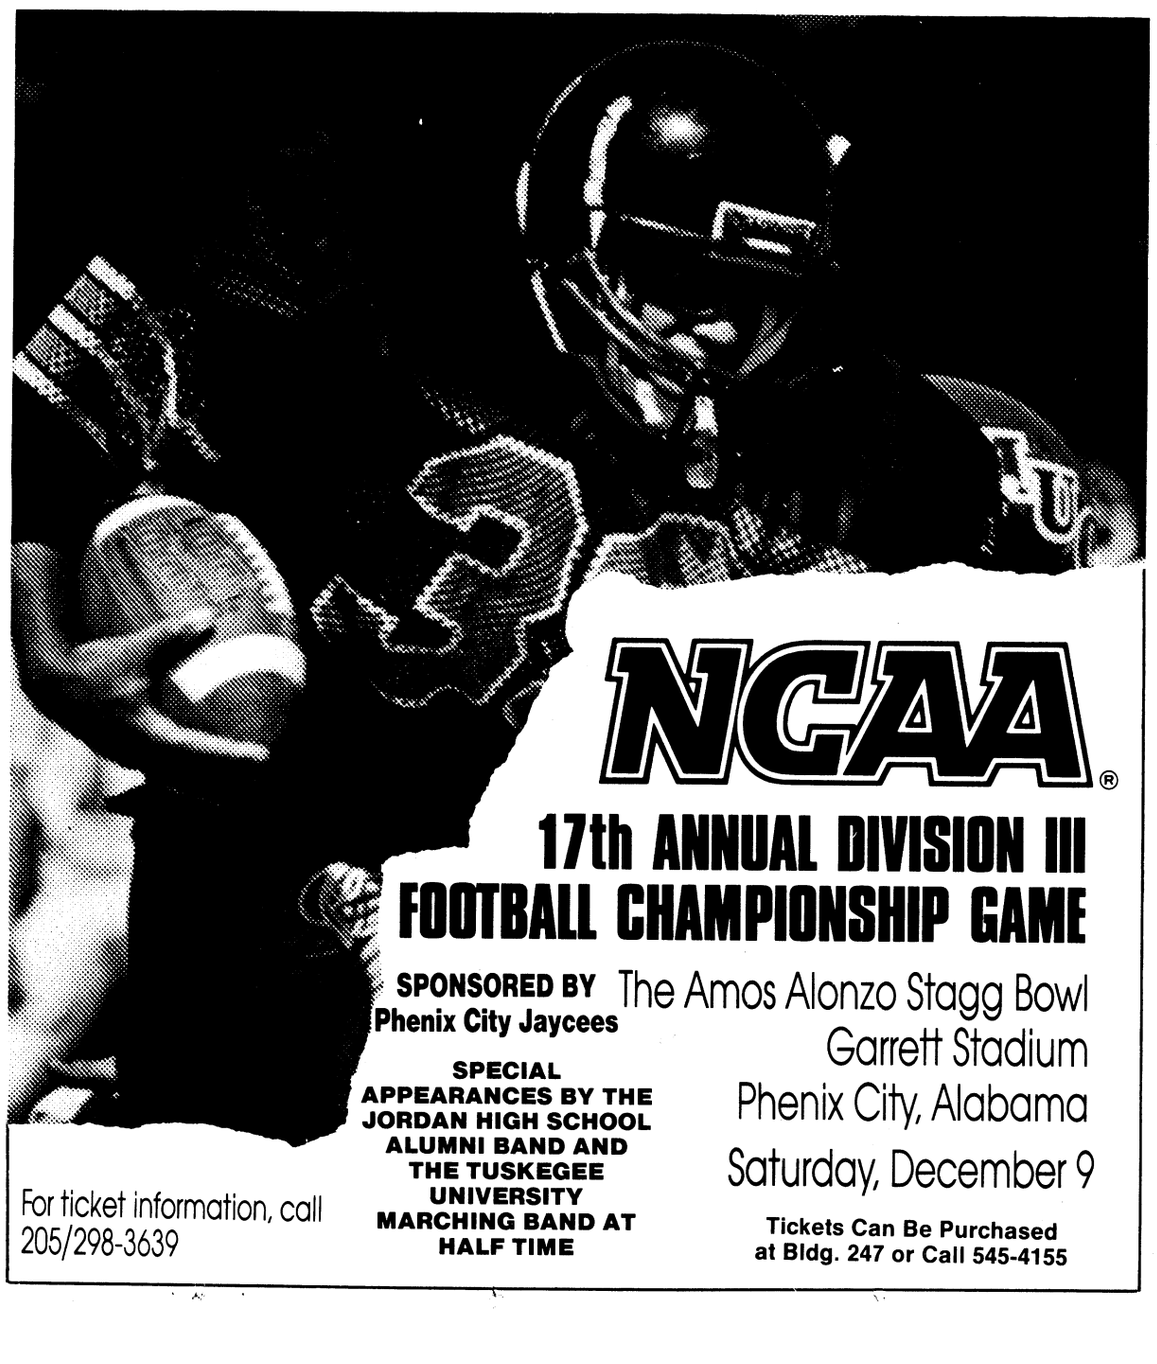
Georgia commissioner of Veterans Affairs, Pete Wheeler, and Atlanta VA Regional Office director, Charles Wickes, explained the program during a meeting with Athens Mayor Dwain P. Chambers.

Chambers signed a proclamation, designating Dec. 7, 1989, as "Supermarket of Veterans Benefits Day" in Athens.

In a joint statement, Wheeler and Wickes said, "There may be many thousands of veterans and family members who are eligible for various benefits but who, for some reason, have never applied for them.

"In this one-day session, we will place every agency that has any connection with veterans' benefits within easy reach of those eligible veterans and their families.

"This includes dependent parents, wives and children. We will not just answer questions and shuffle people from one agency to another, but we will find out what can be done, and, in many cases, do it on the spot. We expect to actually file hundreds of claims Thursday."



The 1989 Veterans Supermarket will be the first such event hosted by Athens.

Since the Georgia Department of Veterans Service originated these one-day, one-stop programs 24 years ago in Columbus, more than 109,000 persons have received on-the-spot assistance at "Supermarkets" in Augusta, Rome, Macon, Albany, Atlanta, Gainesville, Waycross, Dalton, Savannah and Valdosta.

In addition to the Department of Veterans Service and DVA, some of the other agencies expected to participate include the Small Business Administration, the Social Security Administration, the Georgia Department of Public Safety, the State and U.S. Departments of Labor, the Georgia Game and Fish Division of the Department of Natural Resources, the Georgia State Merit System of Personnel Administration, the representatives of state and federal veterans facilities, the American Red Cross and local government representatives.

"All participating agencies are involved with veterans' benefits in some respect," said Wheeler. "By having all in one place at the same time, it eliminates the necessity of a veteran or his family member having to go several places to have questions answered and to get help with individual problems.

Veterans and their family members anywhere in Georgia are urged to attend this free service in Athens in the Bishop Park gymnasium.

ACS, Columbus Police renew ties

Army Community Service and the Columbus Police Department renewed their aquaintance recently with a tour of ACS and lunch at the Officers' Club.

Although they have an ongoing working relationship with the Police Department, Carla Cary and other ACS representatives met with Chief Jim Weatherington and other police officials to touch base on their respective duties.

Cary explained that ACS has an agreement with the local police so that if a spouse has a problem off post, whether it be rape or abuse, the family members can be escorted to Benning where ACS agencies can help.

"We have a memorandum of agreement that exercises guidelines concerning the jurisdiction and administration of incidents involving military personnel off post," she said. "The police department supports this very closely, and our meeting ensures this is being achieved.

El Salvadoran soldiers graduate leader's course

By Keith F. Johnson
U.S. Army School of Americas

As the civil war in El Salvador continues, 51 soldiers from that country graduated from the U.S. Army School of the Americas' Officer Candidate School Nov. 20 in front of building 2816.

The 25-week course prepares students for duty as infantry platoon leaders.

Taught in Spanish, the course is equivalent to the U.S. Officer Candidate Course with the addition of Ranger School, the 51 students from El Salvador, three from Colombia and one from Honduras completed the training.

"The students will return to El Salvador where they will be commissioned as officers," said Capt. Juan Renta, course manager.

"Most of the students have already seen combat; many came here wounded," Renta said. "Most, if not all, will return to combat in the present-day, low-intensity conflict in El Salvador."

Gen. Adolfo O. Blandon, defense attache from El Salvador in Washington, D.C., was the graduation speaker.

Blandon, a former student of the school's Command and General Staff Course, spoke to the students about the importance of what they have learned while at USARSA.

"You will return with a clear idea of the fight to preserve liberty for future generations," Blandon said. "We are fighting to maintain and strengthen a democratic process and win peace."

New civilian professional development program offers dramatic change in career progression

Army News Service

A new professional development program offers a dramatic change in civilian career progression, says an Army personnel official.

"Efforts are under way to make civilian training requirements for professional development similar to that of the military," said Karen Rightor of the U.S. Total Army Personnel Command in Alexandria, Va.

Known as the Army Civilian Training, Education and Development System, "ACTEDS matches jobs and grade levels with formal training and developmental assignments as employees progress from entry- to senior-level positions."

Rightor goes on to say that the two programs established under ACTEDS include the Civilian Leadership Training Program and the Army Management Staff College.

CLTP provides training at three stages of of development — intern, supervisor and manager.

AMSC, the civilian counterpart to the Army's Command and General Staff College, offers a 13.5-week resident course designed to train civilian managers in grades GS/GM 12 — 14 in philosophies, systems and operating procedures used in the Army's sustaining base environment.

Rightor says that the caliber of its steering committee members reflects the Army's commitment to the program.

Made up of program functional chiefs and the commanders in chief, Europe and Forces Command, the committee's three objectives include evaluating the program for the civilian executive resources board, giving direction to the program for the Army's deputy chief of staff for personnel and overseeing the AMSC.

"The Army currently is putting ACTEDS in place in 25 civilian career programs," she said. "Each career program has a plan that outlines both the unique technical and core managerial training requirements for both supervisors and employees. Twelve ACTEDS plans are being readied for publication as official Department of the Army Pamphlets, called DA pams, while planners are putting 11 others into final form. Two have yet to be submitted.

"As ACTEDS plans are finalized, they are being automated under a central network that will allow all Army installations immediate access to them before publication. ACTEDS will be expanded through this system to cover those civilians in non-career program positions as civilian work-force management mirrors the military's personnel proponent system.

"Army civilians must receive proper professional development to meet current and future personnel needs," Rightor said.

"Having and maintaining a top-quality civilian professional, technical and managerial work force is essential to Army readiness."

Historic bridge destroyed

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

Although history and monuments from the past are important to the future, sometimes they have to be destroyed to make room for progress.

This is the case of the Buena Vista Road Bridge, which spanned the Upatoi Creek, in the Eelbeck vicinity of Muscogee County.

The concrete arch bridge had to be destroyed so a new one could be built in its place.

According Linda Howard, Directorate of Engineering of Housing, there was no alternative.

"It was in such bad shape that it wasn't even safe to walk on," she said. "Because of its poor location, saving it for tourists to view couldn't be justified."

Howard said once the decision was made to destroy the bridge, DEH had to get permission from the Advisory Council on Historic Preservation. The only stipulation was that the bridge be properly recorded both visually and in print before destruction.

Once proper documentation was made and forwarded, the okay was given.

Although the bridge is no longer a part of the Fort Benning scenery, a record of its existence will always be available at the Library of Congress.

Don't make it easy for thieves

National Safety Council

If you're going away for the holidays, protect your home from burglary with these tips:

- Try not to let too many people know you'll be leaving. Do not leave a note pinned to your door or a "going away" message on your answering machine.
- Make your home look occupied. Set your lights, radio or TV on timers with a staggered schedule, so it looks as if someone is always home. Ask a friend or neighbor to pick up your mail and newspapers and shovel your walk, if necessary.
- If someone will be coming into your house to care for pets or plants, give him or her a key. Don't hide keys under your doormat, in the mailbox or on top of the door frame — these are the first places burglars look.

197th holds military skills competition

By Willie Hay
197th Infantry Brigade

With his buddies cheering him on, Spec. Lynn Lipari quickly breaks down an M-60 machine gun. Hardly pausing for breath, he reassembles the weapon and performs a functions check.

"You win!" came shouts from the onlookers. Lipari, of Company B, 1st Battalion, 18th Infantry, had proved himself the best man to represent the company in the M-60 event at the battalion's first military skills competition, held recently at Kelley Hill.

Willie Hay

Spec. Lynn Lipari of Co. B., 1st Bn., 18th Inf., races against the clock to assemble an M-60 machine gun.

Despite appearances to the contrary, the competition wasn't designed to be a sporting event, according to Command Sgt. Maj. Wayne L. Gibney, battalion command sergeant major.

"Our goals were to test individual and collective military skills and to build unit cohesion at both company and battalion levels," Gibney said.

"If the competition seemed as much fun as a sporting event, I think that shows the soldiers' morale and esprit de corps ran high."

Of that there could be no doubt as the soldiers vied to outdo each other in the six events.

Except for the platoon drill competition, each event was timed, and the individual and team representatives raced to earn points toward the commander's trophy for best overall unit on the field.

When the competition ended, Co. B had narrowly defeated Co. D for the top trophy, Co. C had taken top honors in the TOW team event, Co. D soldiers had recorded the fastest time to rotate the tires on a HUMMWV and a Co. E soldier had beaten the other contestants in assembling two weapons in a footlocker.

The top three winners in each individual event received a medallion, and the top three finishers in the team events received a trophy from Lt. Col. Archibald V. Arnold III, the battalion commander.

According to Gibney, the trophy for best overall company in the battalion will pass to the unit that wins the competition every year it is held.

"I was very pleased with all the individuals and teams that competed," Gibney said, "and I think the closeness of the competition shows that the level of training is excellent throughout the battalion.

Willie Hay

Spec. John Sites (left) and Spec. Tony Akers, both of Co. D, 1st Bn., 18th Inf., race to rotate two tires on a HUMMWV

"Credit goes to all the noncommissioned officers who organized and conducted the competition, which was based entirely on standards from the Soldier's Manual of Common Tasks," Gibney said.

According to Gibney, none of the soldiers who failed to win an event should have any reason to be discouraged.

"The value of this competition is that it motivates the soldiers to bone up on their military skills so they can demonstrate their proficiency to leaders and peers," he said. "It also enables the NCOs to identify possible weaknesses and plan follow-up training to bring the soldiers up to standard in those skills."

U.S. Olympic Committee

Erich Buljung, USAMU, was a guest of the U.S. Olympic Committee and participated in a Master's Pistol and Rifle Camp at the Olympic Training Center in Colorado Springs, Colo., from Nov. 12 to 18.

Athletes are chosen to train at the Olympic Training Centers by their respective sport's National Governing Body, which in this case would be the U.S. Shooting Team.

The training centers are used by Olympics and Pan American Games hopefuls.

The Colorado Springs OTC has housing, dining and recreational accommodations for 600 athletes, an outdoor track with an artificial turf infield and comprehensive sports medicine and sports science divisions.

The center can accommodate training requirements for 13 Olympic and Pan American sports.

The International Aquatic Research Center, which features a swimming flume that is used for training and testing swimming athletes, was completed and opened in 1988.

The USOC also operates a world-class cycling facility, the 7-Eleven Velodrome, that experts consider among the top three in the world and inside the track is a roller skating facility.

Another OTC attraction is an indoor shooting center that opened in 1985.

The shooting center is the largest in the Western Hemisphere and the third largest in the world.

Hair-raising course offers realistic battles

By Sean Pastic
Infantry Officer Basic Course

"Alpha Team, lay down suppressive fire! Bravo Team, bound up on line!"

The crackle of small arms fire and the occasional roar of an M-60 machine gun are heard through the billowing smoke curtain, which lies ahead of the advancing squad.

The squad leader, hurling a spewing smoke canister, signals his personnel to initiate a barrage of hand grenades into the trench blocking their progress.

With a loud report, the grenades do their decisive work. The squad leader shouts for his teams to follow. Within seconds, a screaming wall of green descends upon the helpless defenders of the trench.

This scenario may bring to mind a picture of the future battlefield or give a taste of what combat may actually be like?

For the new lieutenants of Company E, 2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry, Infantry Officer Basic Course, the pulse-pounding, hair-raising Close Combat I course did just that.

This particular facet of infantry lieutenant training provides an excellent opportunity for future leaders to perform under simulated battlefield conditions.

Given a squad operation order, a selected student is required to perform the necessary troop leading procedures to guide his element through the course.

The morning began early for the selected squad leader. The situation he faced required prompt movement to Pierce Range by foot.

At the designated assembly area, the leader was required to coordinate supply of his element and to give a detailed briefing of his plan for taking the hilltop that lay at the far end of Pierce Range.

The situation also demanded that he thoroughly brief his subordinates as to the safety regulations of a live-fire range.

Once he finished the necessary preparations for the mission, he was to execute his plan with no accident or injury.

Seasoned soldiers might chuckle at the seeming simplicity of the task.

Several lieutenants, however, held at bay their fears of mishap and injury to tackle this new challenge.

When it was all over and the dust had cleared, the positive training values of the course began to show clearly.

The members of the squads who executed the mission were given the opportunity to air their opinions on simulated close combat in a series of after-action reviews.

Most said they learned what it was like to lead an element while dealing with the constraints of the battlefield.

Voice communications became greatly limited while visual signals were often concealed by individual fighting positions and terrain.

More importantly, consideration was given to the fact that live rounds were being used.

Masking. a supporting element's fire took on a much greater significance than when MILES gear is used during training.

Whatever the reason, most of the students were able to gain some valuable experience from the training.

To heighten the learning value of the exercise, cadre members provided video-taped footage of the squad movements. This enabled many soldiers to identify individual and group problems with movements to contact.

The principles each student learned during this test of skills would be applied throughout the course and the remainder of each lieutenant's military career. This was evident in their application during the Tactical Leadership Course the following week.

TLC is a week-long exercise designed to familiarize lieutenants with common battle drills needed for combat leadership.

Upon reaching their units of assignment, the lieutenants will be expected to train their platoons to the highest standards on many of these specific tasks.

Among these are reconnaissance of a zone or area and crossing a danger area. As presented by the cadre instructors of the course, TLC was given as a challenging leadership environment, as well.

All of the principles learned beforehand were to be incorporated into teaching and executing a particular task.

The leader was evaluated on his performance during each phase of the mission. The exercise is conducted over the span of one week in the field.

CS gas was used to teach the importance of the M-17 Protective Mask in a tactical environment, while MILES was used to show the effectiveness of various plans.

Simply put, the training given during these weeks are important in the technical and tactical development of a wise infantry lieutenant.

This brief insight to the training of an infantry leader sheds much light upon the importance of developing intelligent officers within a peacetime Army.

The Infantry Officer Basic Course provides a young leader with a basis upon which to build the wisdom and tactical proficiency of a combat leader.

As the training progresses, each student is constantly challenged to prove to his peers and evaluators that he has what it takes to be a successful leader on today's battlefield.

Cadets compete in challenge shootout

Columbus College

Cadets from the Columbus College Reserve Officers' Training Corps recently competed in the annual 5th Brigade Ranger Challenge Shoot-Out at Camp Blanding, Fla.

Cadet Ranger Challenge teams from 22 other colleges and universities throughout Georgia, Florida and Puerto Rico, competed in a two-day competition that included weapons assembly, bridge construction, Army physical fitness and a 10-kilometer forced march.

In the weapons assembly competition, teams of nine ROTC cadets race against the stopwatch in sorting and assembling the jumbled parts of an M-16 rifle and an M-60 machine gun.

Bridge construction consisted of ranger teams building a 60-foot bridge between two poles and getting each person and his equipment across an imaginary obstacle.

Cadets could use only one rope, a few snap rings and around-the-waist "Swiss seats."

The Army physical fitness test included sit-ups, push-ups and a timed, two-mile run.

The Columbus College Ranger Challenge team, in full pack and carrying a rifle, covered the 10-kilometer (6.2-mile) road march in one hour and nine minutes.

The team captain, Trey Cannington, said the level of competition was tougher this year.

"Winning scores last year would have been middle of the pack this year," said Cannington.

In addition to Cannington, other team members included cadets Richard Ray, Tom Mulhall, Tom Greer, Jermaine Sabbat, Mike Litzleman, Rick Pelham and Anthony Dupuy.

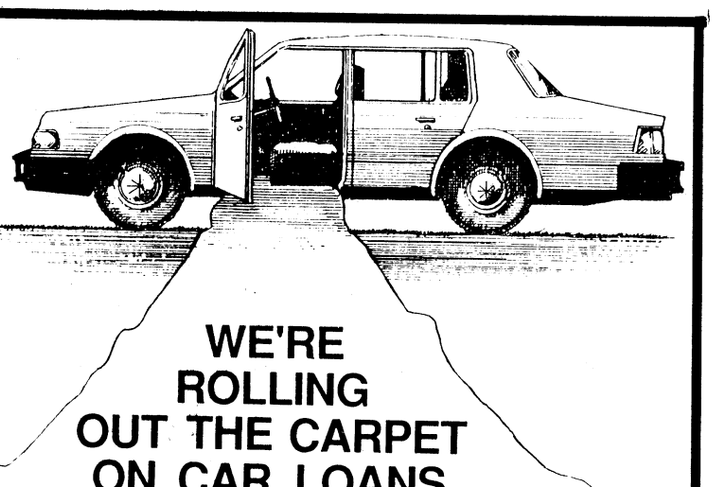
Warrior run cuts holiday pounds

By Marilyn Balzarini
Infantry Training Center

To get rid of those extra calories from Thanksgiving dinner the entire Infantry Training Center participated in the "Warrior" run Nov. 24.

More than 5,000 soldiers made the four-and-a-half-mile trek that encircled Sand Hill and ended at Wetherby Field.



The soldiers who had been in training longest ran the farthest. Those who recently began training joined the run closer to the end.

The focus of the run was to teach esprit de corps and unit cohesion to new infantry soldiers.

The formation extended over two miles and included the ITC's eight infantry battalions, the 30th AG Reception Battalion and the Headquarters and Service Company.

Following the run, the Infantry Training Center commander, Col. Charles Viale, addressed the soldiers. He emphasized their role in the national defense, and how fitness and esprit de corps enhanced their ability to complete the mission.

A drawing was held for prizes donated by local vendors. Prizes included gift certificates from Columbus Square Mall, ARCCO, Holiday Inn, AAFES, The Fort Benning Burger King and others.

ITC Wives' Tour

Spouses get first-hand look at infantry training

By Marilyn Balzarini
Infantry Training Center

More than 20 wives of Infantry Training Center cadre put aside their regular Saturday activities Nov. 18 to get a first-hand look at infantry training during an ITC Wives' Tour.

The tour began with a briefing on Infantry One Station Unit Training.

The briefing was given by members of the ITC Headquarters staff and the ITC commander, Col. Charles Viale.

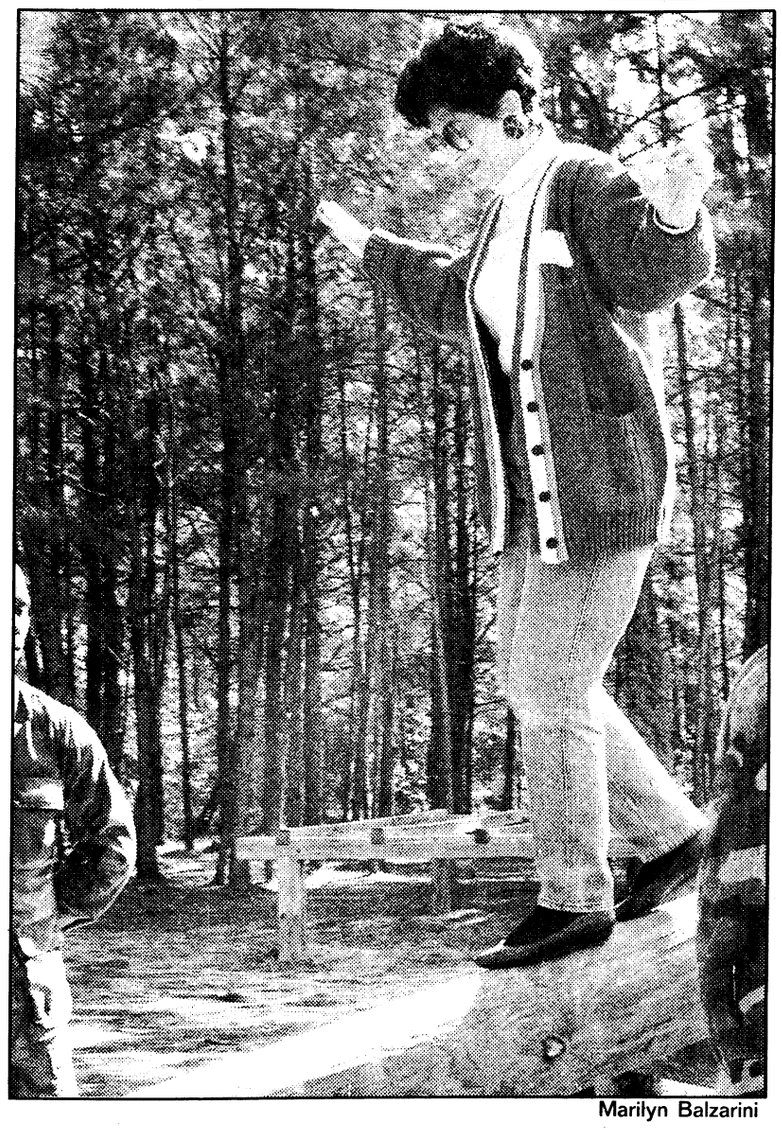
Equipped with a better understanding of Infantry OSUT, the wives toured the confidence course, the 30th AG Reception Battalion and the ITC Chapel.

They also took a look around the 2nd Battalion, 54th Infantry "starship."

Lunch was served at the 2nd Bn., 54th Inf., dining facility. The wives had a chance to sample a typical meal prepared for ITC soldiers.

The confidence course gave the wives a chance to see some Infantry training. The tour included a demonstration of the obstacles by OSUT soldiers while Capt. Geoffrey Coleman of Company D, 1st Battalion, 50th Infantry explained their purposes.

Things got even more exciting when some of the wives gave one of the obstacles a try to test their "confidence."



Vicki Edwards, whose husband is a drill sergeant assigned to Company C, 4th Battalion, 30th Infantry, said she felt the tour was informative.

"I'm glad I went on the tour," She said. "I learned a lot of things I didn't already know about the ITC."

Marilyn Balzarini

Merrilee Esplin, wife of Maj. Dee Esplin of ITC, joins other wives at the dining facility.

IOBC students receive instruction in combat critical skills

By Robert Paddock and Gilbert Petruska
Infantry Officers Basic Course

Company C, 2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry, Infantry Officers Basic Course, recently received its primary training in observed fire procedures and the M-203, 40mm grenade launcher.

The short-term purpose of these classes is for the IOBC students to successfully complete their course of instruction, with the long-term goal being to produce more knowledgeable and skilled platoon leaders.

The training was run over a two-day period, Nov. 15 and 16. Using the round-robin method, the company was able to give each lieutenant ample hands-on training time.

The observed fire class was taught with the understanding that although more platoons have a forward observer with it, this in no way frees the platoon leader from being skilled in call-for-fire procedures.

All classes were trained in the different methods of calling for fire support: grid, shift from a known point and polar.

Special emphasis was placed on using proper format when transmitting data so that the fire direction center and platoon leader clearly understand one another.

Finally, after learning to place a first shot, instruction in adjustment techniques were given to bring the shots to within 50 meters of the target.

Further instruction was given to the company to prepare them for their examination in call-for-fire techniques.

The M-203 training was conducted at Warner Range and focused on three areas: weapons familiarization, employment and qualification.

As an organic combat multiplier to the infantry platoon, the M-203 is a very vital asset.

The familiarization included assembly and disassembly, immediate action and maintenance: of the things necessary to keep the system in working order.

Proper employment of the weapon was next in the course of instruction. Areas of emphasis were aiming techniques and the various methods of firing the M-203.

Finally, qualification time arrived, and it was during this phase of training the lieutenants were able to show their stuff.

Many of the students did quite well, while others got first-hand experience with the complexities of "Kentucky Windage."

The training Class 1-90 received will increase their effectiveness as leaders of infantrymen in peace or war.

ASK THE JUDGE

By Dennis E. Brower
Staff Judge Advocate's Office

Q. I put some toys on layaway at a local store in October. I had made several payments when my son just told me that he hated those types of toys and would only accept the toys he saw on TV.

Well, I wanted to strangle the little darling, but it was for Christmas, so I decided to stop my layaway purchases and buy the new toys from another store.

The store did cancel my layaway but kept one-half of my money as a "cancellation" charge.

They did have some signs at the layaway counter that mentioned they could to this, but it isn't fair.

They got $25.60 of my money and the toys. Is it legal for the store to keep my money?

A. Layaways can be a problem for consumers.

The first thing you must realize is that a layaway is not a purchase.

You and the store are agreeing to a plan where you select merchandise to purchase, and the store holds that merchandise for you until you make final payment.

Problems usually arise during the time the merchandise is still being held by the store and you are still paying.

During this time, the merchandise is the store's, and you must abide by any reasonable rule that the store makes in regard to the layaway.

In this case, the store had a posted policy that they could keep the merchandise and a portion of your payments should you cancel the layaway.

This may not seem fair, but it is legal.

There is no federal or Georgia law that specifically regulates layaways.

As long as the store does not use unfair or deceptive sales practices, as defined in federal law, the store is free to make its own rules in regard to layaways.

To protect yourself, you must make sure you know and understand all the store's rules.

Make sure to ask for a copy of the rules. If they don't have any printed, have the store write them down on your receipt and have the salesperson sign it.

Make sure you know the refund policy. Keep good records of the description of the merchandise and of all your payments.

Remember, the store keeps the ownership of the merchandise; and, should anything happen to it, fire, flood, theft or bankruptcy, you may not be able to receive the merchandise or a full refund.

Layaways can be a good idea, but you must understand the rules before you decide to play the game.

Call Legal Assistance at 545-3282 for more information.

Hot liquids cause more burns than fire

National Safety Council

Hot liquids — not fire — are the most common cause of burns to young children.

Protect your children from scalds with these tips from the National Safety Council:

- Keep hot foods and drinks away from the edges of tables and counters.
- When you cook, keep children away from the stove. Turn pot handles toward the back of the stove, out of children's reach. Watch for dangling appliance cords.
- Set your water heater no higher than 230 degrees Fahrenheit. Always test the water temperature before placing children in the bathtub — a child's skin burns more easily than an adult's.
- Supervise children in the tub. Young children can turn on the hot water by themselves.

MARTIN CARE

CHAMPUS deductible amount follows fiscal year

By Jeanne Dickerson
Martin Army Community Hospital

Oct. 1 was the beginning of the deductible year (fiscal year '90) for patients using CHAMPUS.

The deductible amount, for which you are responsible, follows the fiscal year, not the calendar year.

Services provided under CHAMPUS have a deductible of $50 per person or $100 per family.

This means that you are responsible for the deductible amount before CHAMPUS begins to pay its portion. This deductible may be met on one bill or by combining bills until the user pays his share.

Claims should be sent as they normally are; the CHAMPUS claims processor will keep track of your account and let you know when your deductible has been met.

Should you have other insurance that pays a portion of your outpatient bills, you must attach a copy of the "explanation of benefits" statement provided by that insurance company to your CHAMPUS claim, as well as copies of itemized bills.

For more information on CHAMPUS, call your Health Benefits Advisors, Nancy Lance or Pat Wood, at 544-3461.

CHAMPUS users should be aware of expanded services available at Martin Army Community Hospital.

To reduce the cost of medical services, patients should check MACH to see if the needed care is available.

The Outpatient Clinic has added providers to increase the number of appointments available each day.

The Pediatric Clinic has extended its hours to 5 p.m., to accommodate working mothers.

Several specialty clinics have increased medical staff and are now seeing patients from all categories.

With the addition of the Partnership Program, patients can be seen at MACH by a civilian provider who has contracted to file a CHAMPUS claim and accept, as full payment, the amount paid by CHAMPUS.

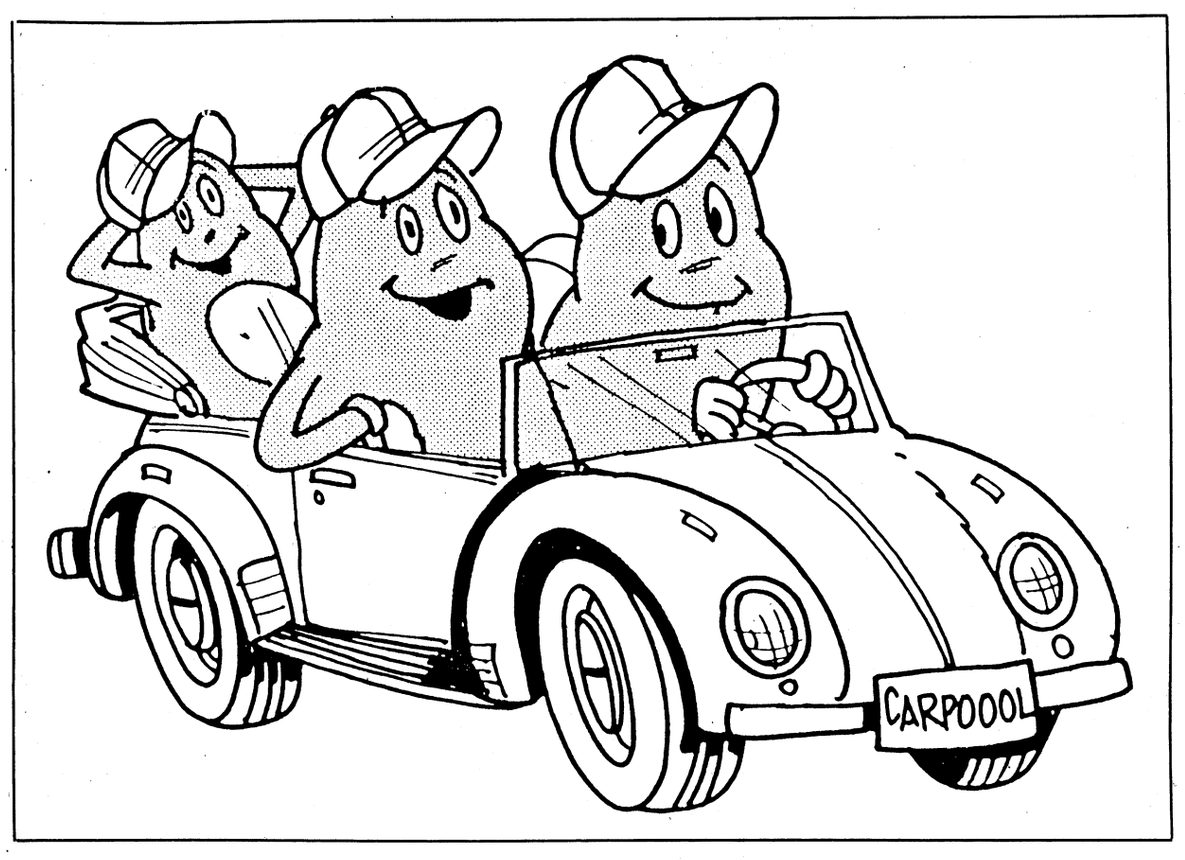
This allows CHAMPUS-eligible family members and retirees to be seen by a specialist at no cost, saving them money and the time required to file insurance claims.

Before starting your CHAMPUS deductible for fiscal year '90, call for information regarding services available at MACH.

Call Sue Jones, supervisor, Patient Appointment System, at 544-1611/4356 for more information.

Americans obsessed with driving, not conserving energy

By Tina Cook
Energy Branch



Since the early days of the automobile, Americans have been obsessed with every aspect of driving.

Unfortunately, until the early 1970s, too few Americans were concerned with fuel economy.

After the oil embargo and the long wait at the gas pumps that resulted, Americans scrambled for smaller, more efficient cars.

Manufacturers responded to the consumer's needs by making new cars and trucks smaller, lighter and more efficient.

Despite these improvements, the United States is using more gasoline than ever. The number of privately-owned motor vehicles and the average mileage driven yearly have increased.

Americans are taking advantage of lower oil prices. Unfortunately, this trend only increases dependence on current oil supplies which, as we know, aren't as dependable as we'd like them to be.

Besides the threat of interruptions in the oil supply, is the threat of substantial gas taxes to spoil our driving fun.

Increased federal and state gas taxes have been suggested at several levels to reduce oil demand and to subsidize highway improvements.

Climbing oil prices may again make the estimated MPG of vehicles a determining factor in the consumer's car choice.

The latest projections available from the Energy Information Administration predict gas prices climbing steadily by about 3.7 percent annually to the year 2000.

Regardless of gas prices, good fuel efficiency practices can save you money, improve your car's performance and extend the life of the engine and tires.

To get the most from each gallon of gasoline and your car, consider the following recommendations offered by Amoco:

- Avoid high-speed driving. Increased friction and wind resistance can reduce the fuel efficiency of your car by up to 25 percent.
- Avoid quick stops and starts. Driving at a steady pace can increase gasoline mileage by 18 percent.
- A properly tuned engine will improve performance and increase fuel economy by more than three percent.
- Replacing fouled spark plugs will increase gas mileage by nine percent.
- Carburetor and choke operations can effect gas mileage by over two percent.
- Air conditioners can cause your car to use up to seven percent more gas.
- Keep tires inflated to the recommended pressure. Properly inflated tires have a lower rolling resistance and increase fuel economy.
- Consider carpooling with others. Sharing rides will save fuel and mileage.
- Consolidating trips and planning routes can also save gas and time. Plan errands so that several can be done in a single trip using the shortest route.
- Avoid long warm-ups. Begin driving after a 30-second idle, and drive at moderate speeds until the engine is warm. Don't allow a vehicle to idle for long periods.
- Make sure oil and filters are checked and changed regularly, and that the proper oil is used for the season. Oil thickens in cold weather, which can cause your car engine to waste energy.
- Wind resistance cuts fuel economy. High trailers, cartop carriers and even open windows can increase wind resistance.

Keeping these tips in mind and making a habit of using them, can effectively save gas. And by keeping your car well-tuned and maintained, you can also extend the life of your car and avoid a few repair bills.

If you have any questions regarding this or any energy-related subject, call 545-4652 or 545-SWAT.

Airborne school is family affair for these students

Father, son & twins jump together

By Ann McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

The family that jumps together stays together could have been the theme of the graduating Airborne Class of Company C, 1st Battalion, 507th Parachute Infantry Regiment.

Not only did it have a father and son as students but a set of twins to boot.

Maj. Rodger Glenn and son, Spec. Scott Glenn, went through the course together as did twin brothers Sgts. Mark and Michael McGhee.

Maj. Glenn said that it is something that very few people have the opportunity to do, and he was grateful for that.

"We're are fortunate that my wife and daughter gave us their full support," he said. "This truly was a family effort."

It's been a family effort for the McGhee twins ever since their birth 22 years ago.

They said they have done everything together — built cars, bought homes, dated best friends, and of course, joined the Army.

They consider themselves to be one of the best teams in the Army.

Michael attributed their effectiveness to knowing what the other is thinking and balancing out each other's weaknesses.

The two came from an assignment at Fort Ord, Calif., where they demonstrated their effectiveness as members of the same unit.

Ann McDonald

Maj. Rodger Glenn (l) and his son, Spec. Scott Glenn, share a moment prior to a jumping.

Ann McDonald

Mark (l) and Michael McGhee relax between jumps.

Initially, the Glenns did not plan on attending the course together. The elder Glenn who is assigned to the Dental Activity at Fort Bragg, N.C. came to the school once before, but because of medical reasons, he was sent back.

According to Glenn, he rectified the situation and prepared to come back to the course.

When he learned his son would be going to school during the same time frame, he made arrangements to be in the same class.

Their association didn't stop with them being in the same class. In fact, the father and son and the twins were in the same platoon and the same squad.

Maj. Glenn was the squad leader.

So how did the youngest Glenn feel having the person who guided him through his childhood years become his leader in airborne school?

"It didn't make any difference to me," Spec. Glenn said. "He treated me the same as he did everyone else as I expected him to do."

The younger Glenn added that they both were there to learn a new skill, and the fact that they were related didn't make a difference.

He quickly added that he wouldn't have traded his father being in the same class for anything in the world.

"The first time we sat across from each other in the plane filled me with the biggest sense of pride," he said.

"I believe Fort Benning is one of the first installations to have a program of this type," she added.

She said her office has received a lot of requests for information on how to establish similar programs at other installations.

Paape said she considers that an indication that the program is pretty successful.

But, she quickly adds that it wouldn't be that way without a staff of volunteers.

Paape said she began volunteering because she said she wanted to put her money where her mouth is, so to speak, and to help with the transition she knows is so difficult.

The wife of a company commander and the mother of two girls, she said she has experienced the loneliness associated with being a military spouse and the negativeness one can feel in that situation.

She said she believes most parents have felt that to some degree, but her target area is spouses of the lower enlisted.

"I'm not saying they are any different, they are just the least educated, and that is the biggest problem — lack of knowledge," she said.

At the end of the three-month program, new parents should have the knowledge to help them adjust to the challenges of parenting.

After that, Paape said she and the First Steps staff are just a phone call away.

They can be reached at 545-5602.

ed their effectiveness as members of the same unit.

"We get a lot of kidding for doing everything together," Mark said. "But at the same time, we meet a lot of friends."

They both agreed that going to airborne school together was really nice because when the training got real tough, they always had someone to lean on.

That leaning may stop at their next assignment as Fort Bragg, N.C. They are assigned to the same brigade but not the same company.

Presently they are trying to solve that problem. They both understand that the Army's needs have to be met but would like to be together.

"Fortunately," they said, "the Army has been understanding and has assigned them together."

That separation will be a first for the men. But, that's not the only first they experienced recently.

Mark explained that Michael was born first and has led the way in everything. This week, however was different.

"It worked out that I was the first out the door on all of our five jumps," Mark said. "It was nice being the leader for a change."

Next on the twin's agenda is Ranger School. "That is if the Army will let them," Michael said.

Attending Ranger School together should be easy compared to another goal of theirs — finding twins to marry.

Volunteer helps new mothers

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

Most volunteers touch the lives of many people, however, the organization for which the Volunteer of the Quarter works touches the lives of future generations.

Peggy Paape is the volunteer, and First Steps is the organization.

First Steps is geared toward new mothers and the problems they face after delivery.

Her belief is that reaching new parents and solving early problems leads to happy children and future happy adults.

According to Paape, she and other First Steps volunteers come into play while the child and mother are still in the hospital.

"We zero in on the parent who is having trouble bonding with her newborn because this type situation could lead to abuse if left alone," she said.

She said it's not anybody's fault that this happens.

The parents really love the children; it's just that they don't know what to do.

She explained that part of the problem lies in the hormonal changes women experience after childbirth.

"This is known as postpartum blues or baby blues," she said. "And, it can be difficult to deal with."

Paape said the volunteers explain to the mother what is happening and try to help her overcome this period of depression.

To help them feel special, new mothers are given a kit filled with items especially for her.

> "We zero in on the parent who is having trouble bonding with her newborn because this type situation could lead to abuse if left alone.
>
> — Peggy Paape

Another way to help mothers overcome depression is to give them somewhere to turn.

This is done by educating them about the resources available on post.

Most importantly, the volunteers provide a sympathetic and knowledgeable ear 24 hours a day.

Paape said although the program is relatively new, it has received the help of the community, with items donated by United Way, Red Cross and Martin Army Community Hospital.

"Our First Steps program stems from the one in Atlanta," she said.

Faith team places 2nd

Loses by only 15 points in local junior high academic challenge

Fort Benning Schools

Faith Middle School's Head to Head team came in second in this year's city-wide competition.

The junior high academic bowl finals found Faith only 15 points behind Arnold Junior High, this year's winner.

Josie Chavez, Ahmad Hernandez and Danny Segal were this year's Head to Head competitors. Other team members were Kerry Meade, Lillian Peligreen and Tunesia Sims.

Olin Harp, Faith School's principal, was very proud of the Faith students' efforts in their first year of Head to Head competition. "Our rookie team had less than a month's preparation before first round competition," he said.

Judi Ebert, the team's academic coach, attributed this year's success to hard work from dedicated team members.

"We may be a small system compared to others in the state," she said. "But, the talent and spirit of Fort Benning students equals that found anywhere."

Rider captures win at Steeple Chase

By Shawn Lorimer
Bayonet staff writer

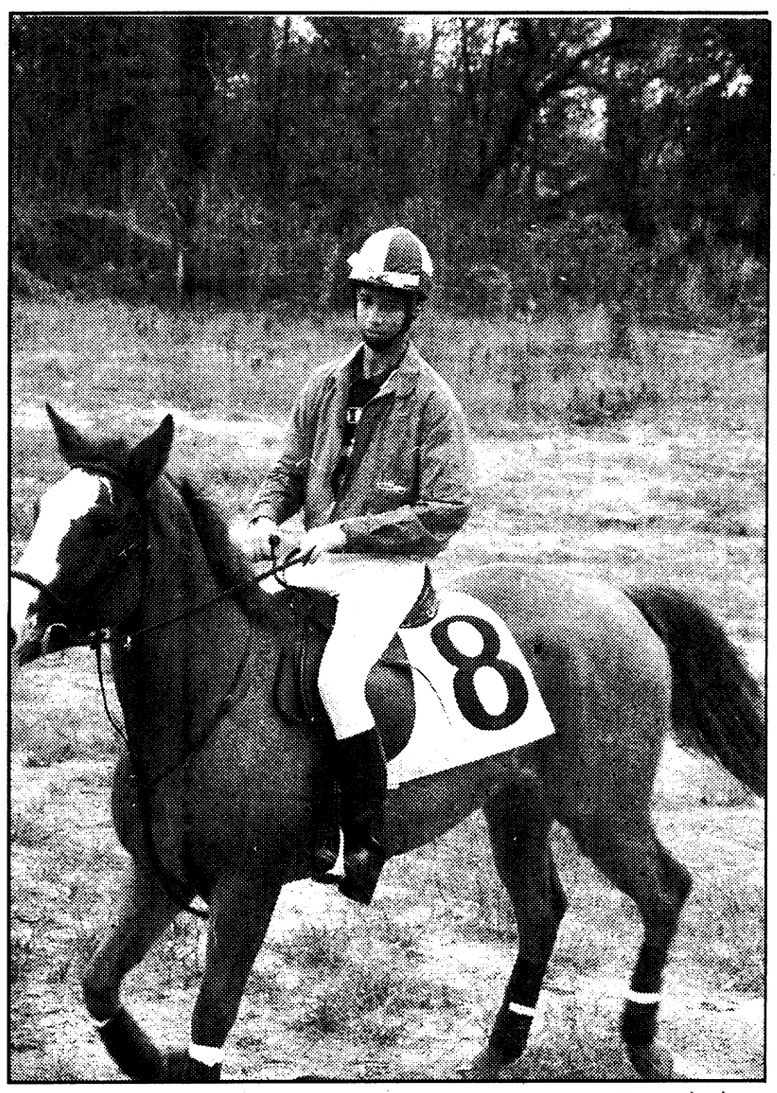
Sixteen-year-old Lonnie Williams, a rider from the Fort Benning Hunt Club, won an event in the Steeple Chase this year.

The annual event, held Nov. 18 at Callaway Gardens, drew more than 18,000 fans, according to race officials.

Williams and his horse, Sue Ellen King, competed in the Large Pony Race in the 16-year-old and under category.

The race was a 500-yard sprint with 11 horses and riders.

Williams said he has been riding for about 10 years, but this is the first time he has won at Callaway Gardens.



"I would have won last year," he said, "but the race official made us back up and turn around."

By the time Williams and Sue Ellen got turned around, the race had already started; and, as a result, they came in fourth.

This year, they again asked Williams to reposition his horse, but he would not budge. Consequently, he won his division.

Sue Ellen King is a quarter horse rather than a pony but was able to compete as a large pony because of her size.

The horse is boarded at the Fort Benning Hunt Club where Williams practices riding and jumping regularly.

Shawn Lorimer

Lonnie Williams and his quarter horse, Sue Ellen King, take a breather.

The Hunt Club has about 90 members, according to club president, Capt. Alex Steel.

"We have one of the largest clubs in the country, and it's privately owned," said Steel.

He added that the club would like to see more soldiers come out and ride. There is a $20 one-time fee and monthly dues of $10 to join the privately run club.

According to Steel there are 14 horses available for rent. Rental fees are $8 per hour for non-members and $4 per hour for members.

Membership is open to active and retired military and their family members and Fort Benning employees.

Quality takes commitment

By Jan Chervenak
Total Quality Management

At Fort Benning, everyone is for quality; no one is against it — but quality rarely happens by itself, unaided. Quality takes commitment.

Quality improvement requires a long-term commitment of time and effort. For organizations to produce quality products and develop a "quality" mind-set, each of us in the organization must become involved.

The first step to improve quality is commitment by the management of an organization to an ongoing process for quality improvement. The post commanding general and Fort Benning's senior leaders and managers have taken this step.

To get everyone involved, leaders and managers must provide the methods for improvement. One of the most important of these is quality education.

In turn, when each of us takes the time and puts forth the effort to learn how to improve the quality of our work, we take the first step to fulfill our role in the process. This not only makes it possible to do our own part, but allows us to begin to work together with others to improve quality.

Like the commitment of the organization, our individual commitment to improvement must be long term and ongoing.

We must bring to the job the same high standards we expect and insist on in our personal lives.

It requires that we fully participate in improvement efforts and continuously look for new ways to improve.

When we make this commitment to quality improvement, we start on a journey to meet the needs of our customers every time.

This week, we discussed the Quality Education System geared for leaders, managers and supervisors.

In a future article, we will discuss the Quality Awareness Experience targeted at all employees, military and non-military.

The Quality Education System is designed to introduce tools and techniques that can help us make quality a part of our jobs.

At Fort Benning, 1,200 leaders, managers and supervisors will attend this training as a part of their commitment to quality.

There are 10 two-hour sessions over a 10-week period:

Session one — Managing Quality introduces the basic concepts that guide our efforts to improve.

Session two — Identifying Requirements discusses the work process and how to identify requirements for our jobs.

Session three — Using Prevention continues to focus on requirements with an emphasis on preventing problems.

Session four — Understanding the Error Free attitude discusses the commitment we must make to meet the requirements for our jobs.

Session five — Calculating the Price of Nonconformance introduces techniques for measuring quality.

Session six — Developing Teamwork discusses methods for working together to make quality happen.

Session seven — Measuring to Improve helps us decide what to measure in our work place and how to communicate the results.

Session eight — Analyzing Problems looks at problems in the work place and present a logical method for eliminating nonconformance.

Session 9 — Eliminating Problem Causes continues to focus on problems and discusses how they can be prevented.

Session 10 — Improving Supplier/Customer Relationships helps us learn to work with our suppliers and customers and focuses on our individual roles in quality improvement.

Each session consists of:

- Text: There will be assigned readings that include text questions. These questions should be answered before the class for each session because they will be reviewed during the classroom discussion.
- Videotapes: There will be videotapes highlighting concepts and their application in the work place.
- An overview: The instructor will conduct an overview of the subject matter covered in the text and videotapes.
- A workshop: The workshop allows practice using the concepts and tools introduced in the session before applying them in the work place.
- An assignment: There will be an assignment to help apply the material covered in each session. This assignment involves a discussion between each student and the immediate manager or supervisor.

Infantry Board clinches football championship

Team edges out 533rd Trans. in tie-breaker

By Michelle Le Roy Harrison
Bayonet staff writer

The Infantry Board edged out 533rd Transportation, 36th Engineer Group, in a tie-breaker to determine the 1989 Post Flag Football Second Season champions. The Board gained the most yards in a final drive after a 6-6 tie.

The victory was clinched at Doughboy Stadium Nov. 17.

The score was tied when regulation time ran out. This left the Infantry Board and the 533rd to battle it out in a tie-breaker.

Coming in to the championship with a 7-1 record, the Infantry Board took the lead from the beginning with a touchdown thrown to running back Stephen Byndon. Quarterback Anthony Trahan managed to play despite an injured ankle.

533rd's quarterback Tony White tied the score during the second half with a touchdown run.

Infantry Board's coach Arthur Hawkins' strategy going into the game, paid off.

"We were going to establish short, ground gains, then we were going to go deep," Hawkins said before the game. "We were going to stay with our bread and butter — that is what got us here."

Hawkins said the Infantry Board team has come a long way since the beginning of the season.

"When we first started practicing, (the players) were all nomads. We got tough and learned to play as a team," he said. "We had that decisive spirit to win and excel. They did it for their unit. No one really hears much about the Infantry Board."

The 533rd came into the championship with an 11-1 record. Coach "Uncle" Lester Randall said the team's strategy was to keep the ball on the ground and "hit 'em with an air attack when they didn't expect it."

Fort Benning's top wrestlers head to FORSCOM championship

By Shawn Bryson
Bayonet staff writer

Nine Benning wrestlers are headed to the Forces Command Wrestling Championship after clinching their weight classes at the Fort Benning Wrestling Championship Nov. 17 and 18 at Briant Wells Field House.

Two of the individual champions, Michael Lindsey and Derrick Waldroup, came from a team from Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 29th Infantry Regiment, which also came away from the championship victorious.

Although HHC finished a mere sixth in this the last of the season's four tournaments, its huge lead in the point standings going into the tournament (24 points) was simply too much for any team to catch, and its wrestlers were crowned post champions for the season.

Wrestlers from 2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, won the tournament with 35 points. Just behind was the 43rd Engineer Battalion, edging the 197th Support Battalion for second place, 30-27.

Two teams — 2nd Bn., 11th Inf., and 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry — were tied after the tournament at 15 points each for the season, but the 29th was awarded the season's second place honors since it fared better overall during season tournaments.

The performances of the 197th Spt. Bn. and the 43rd Eng. Bn. gave the teams fourth and fifth place respectively in the overall season championship.

The rest of the wrestlers bound for the FORSCOM championship are Jay Walz, Damon Olson, Shannon McLaughlin, Rodney Smith, Clifton Woods, Darrell Granville and Jerry Jackson.

Waldroup not only wrestles, but he is also the post's team coach.

The FORSCOM championship will be held Dec. 11 through 15, at Fort Hood, Texas.

Bass fishermen test waters in Hatchachubbee

By Jackie Marsh
Fort Benning Bass Club

The Fort Benning Bass Club held its November tournament at Hatchachubbee Creek on the Chattahoochee River Nov. 19.

The first-place honors went to George Mendez of Headquarters Company, U.S. Army School of the Americas, with a total catch of 11 pounds, 13 ounces. Mendez also took the Big Fish Award with a 7-pound, 4-ounce bass.

Skip Ray took second place with 10 pounds, 5 ounces. Otis Carter came in third place with 8 pounds, 13 ounces.

Most of the fish were caught on rods rigged with pig and jig lures on river ledges.

The next tournament will be Dec. 16 on a "mystery lake" to be picked from a hat at the next meeting.

Many active duty soldiers are members and fish regularly with the club. Some of the organizations represented are the U.S. Army Infantry School, U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit, U.S. Army School of the Americas, 197th Infantry Brigade, and the 29th Infantry Regiment.

The Fort Benning Bass Club sponsors and/or participates in a number of civic functions throughout the year.

Anyone interested in joining the club should contact Joe Wikoff at 685-0301 or Otis Carter at 689-7474 or attend one of the meetings.

Beginning Jan. 9, meetings will be held the second and fourth Tuesday of each month at 7:30 p.m. in Building 2616 on the second floor.

There's still time to register for Faith Race

Race starts at 8:30 a.m. Saturday in front of Faith Middle School

Fort Benning Schools

Saturday is race day at Faith School, and there is still time to register for it.

This will be the 11th annual Faith School race. This year, it is being sponsored by the physical education department at Faith School and the Noncommissioned Officers' Wives' Club.

"Our race has grown each year," said Susan Emerson, Faith physical education teacher and race coordinator.

"Students, parents, teachers, members of the Fort Benning and adjoining communities and runners who have once served at Fort Benning, all come out to make this an exciting day for everyone.

"It has become a family affair with entire families running the race together," Emerson said.

The race, involving 500 to 1,100 runners each year, began 11 years ago as an outgrowth of the Faith physical education program and the Faith Jogging Club which began that same year.

All proceeds from the race go to the Faith physical education program to provide additional equipment and incentive awards for students.

The Faith Race is made up of three different races that begin and end at Don C. Faith Middle School at 1375 Ingersoll Street.

The one-mile race for boys and girls 14 years old and under, begins at 8:30 a.m.; the two-mile race begins at 9:15 a.m.; and the five-mile race begins at 10 a.m.

The two- and five-mile races are open to all age categories.

There are 19 age categories within the three races, and awards will be presented in each category at the awards ceremony in the Faith School gym. Faith Race T-shirts will be presented to all finishers.

Pre-registration fees are $4 per race for ages 14 and under and $6 per race for ages 15 and over.

Registration fees on the day of the race increase to $5 and $7 respectively. Anyone needing further information about the race should contact physical education teacher, Susan Emerson, Faith Middle School, at 545-5524.

Race entry forms and maps of the race route are available at Faith School now.

Post runners dominate Columbus 10-mile race

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Fort Benning runners dominated the field of competitors at the Columbus 10-miler taking three of the six overall positions in the standings.

Gregory Kammerer took second place in the male category while Ann McDonald and Molly Sinclair took second and third respectively in female competition.

All three were members of the Fort Benning 10-miler teams that went to Washington to compete in the annual Army 10-miler.

Although it was the first time Shaw High School conducted a race of this type, they did an excellent job, said one competitor.

"The splits at the mile markers were accurate, and they had sufficient water points," Sinclair said.

"The scenery along the course was really nice and the hilly route offered some challenge to the race," she said.

She noted that the Shaw High School Band playing at both the start and the finish line was a great motivating tool.

Sinclair said that with more participants, the Columbus 10-miler had the potential to be a first-class race.

Chaplains make donation to local listening ministry

USAIC Chaplain's Office

Thousands of dollars were gathered by the Fort Benning religious community and contributed to local agencies for disaster relief recently.

Fort Benning is involved in the total community, explained Chap. (Lt. Col.) Benjamin Morrow, chief Installation Support Troops.

"We not only count our benefits from the community, but we give back to programs that support us."

Chap. (Col.) Roy N. Mathis, post chaplain, said a contribution of more than $5,200 from the U.S. Army Infantry Center's Chaplains Fund was made this month to CONTACT, a local telephone listening ministry.

Morrow explained that "CONTACT is important to the military community in that those who may not seek help from the chaplaincy may choose to call CONTACT."

According to Morrow, one way the Fort Benning chaplaincy supports the larger community is by serving actively on committees for the Salvation Army and CONTACT.

In a letter to the post commander, Maj. Gen. Michael F. Spigelmire, Susan S. Wissing, director of CONTACT, wrote, "CONTACT receives thousands of telephone calls annually. . .Fort Benning's generous annual contributions help maintain this service on a 24-hour-a-day basis."

CONTACT is a confidential listening ministry. Special volunteers who have completed a rigorous training course are ready to listen, counsel, give referrals and be a confidential friend.

It is a unique service in Columbus — the only 24-hour help line.

A 15-member board of directors organizes this nonprofit, nondenominational organization sponsored by the Columbus Ministerial Alliance.

CONTACT may be reached at 327-3999. For more information, call the post chaplains office, 545-2288.

Kenny Rogers

Kenny Rogers' concert airs Saturday on GPTV

Georgia Public Television

From the first exuberant notes of "High Life" to the final stirring strains of "O Holy Night," Kenny Rogers' concert for public television will be packed with chart-busting hits, new favorites and holiday classics.

The show airs Saturday at 7:15 p.m. on Georgia Public Television.

Performing in his first concert for public television, Rogers is joined by special guests The Forester Sisters.

Last December, Rogers fans packed the house at Atlanta's historic Fox Theatre.

As Rogers performs for his enthusiastic audience, it's obvious how he has become one of the world's top entertainers.

The concert has three sets. The first two celebrate Rogers' hits and introduce a couple of new tunes.

In the third set, the Forester Sisters — a sibling quartet from Lookout Mountain, Ga. — join Rogers for the holiday portion of the show, singing seasonal favorites and Christmas carols.

The concert kicks off with the hits "High Life" and "Working for a Living," followed by a medly of romantic ballads: "Share Your Love With Me," Crazy For You" and "You Don't Need Me."

His Christmas Party begins quietly with "Christmas Song," and moves onto "White Christmas."

After "My Favorite Thing," special guests The Forester Sisters join Rogers for "Ill Be Home For Christmas."

The Lee College Singers join Rogers and the Foresters for a stirring rendition of "Carol of the Bells," followed by the chorus performing "Beautiful Savior."

The Christmas classis "O Holy Night" — with Rogers, the Foresters and the Lee College chorus — is the unforgettable climax to an evening of music.

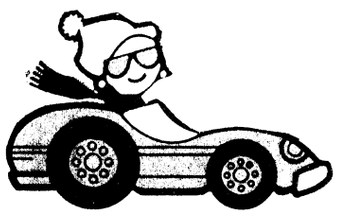
Frequent flyer policy clarified

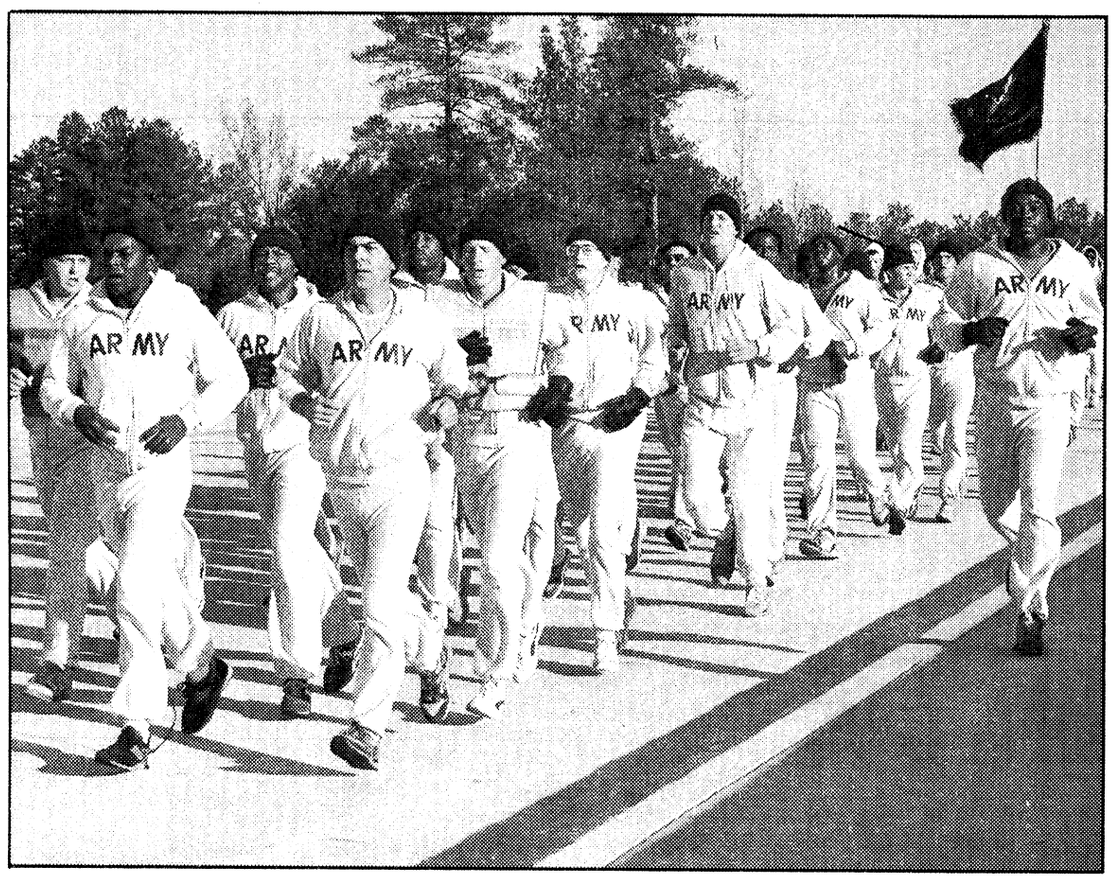
On Nov. 15, the General Services Administration changed the Federal Travel Regulation. The change authorizes agency heads to allow frequent flyer credits earned from official travel to be used to upgrade to business class or first class air accommodations while on official travel.



However, this authority has not yet been implemented within the Department of the Army.

Therefore, the policy remains as follows: Frequent flyer mileage credits received as a result of official travel will not be used for any purpose other than to obtain coach or tourist tickets for official travel.

A special task force is reviewing current policies regarding Army frequent flyer programs. Further guidance will be provided upon completion of that review.



Traffic problems to be addressed

The Fort Benning Traffic Quarterly Sub-Council will hold its quarterly meeting Wednesday at 9 a.m. in the Provost Marshal Conference Room in building 215. Suggestions, complaints, or comments, should be addressed at this meeting.

Early-morning child care available at Tot Town, YA

By Shawn Bryson
Bayonet staff writer

Early-morning child care is now available to soldiers who must be at work before the birds chirp.

The service is available at Tot Town and the Youth Activities building through Youth Services' Latchkey program. Due to popular demand, Tot Town and Youth Services began an early-morning child care program Nov. 6.

The program is designed to provide child care beginning at 5:30 a.m. Monday through Friday since many soldiers have to be at work or physical training by 6 a.m.

Normal operating hours at both facilities had been 6:30 a.m. to 6:30 p.m.

Since the doors opened, however, there have been no users of the program, according to Jennifer Williams, Supplemental Programs director for Child Development Services.

Williams said there may be two reasons for the lack of utilization of the program.

One reason might be that soldiers aren't aware of the program despite publicity efforts by CDS, she explained.

Another reason, suggested Williams, is that most parents have already made arrangements for early-morning child care. Many might also find it inconvenient to get the children out of bed so early, drop them off and pick them up again in an hour or so.

Whatever the reason, Williams said the service will continue for now but has been put on a by-reservation status until business picks up.

Tot Town provides child care for children ages 3 months to school age and has always required reservations.

The Latchkey Program at Youth Services provides child care for children in kindergarten to 12th grade.

CDS officials have yet to make a decision about whether the early-morning service will be provided during the holiday season (Dec. 16 to 29). Williams said that will basically depend on the need of soldiers.

Child care at Tot Town costs $1 per hour for the first child and 80 cents per hour for each additional child. Children must be registered in the Latchkey Program, and the cost is $30 per week.

Williams said personnel at CDS hope the early-morning program takes off soon. She said it was created after numerous requests from unit commanders and soldiers.

For more information about the program, call 545-5246.

Reenlistment personnel recognized

By Shawn Bryson
Bayonet staff writer

Reenlistment was on the minds of hundreds of soldiers who sat down to breakfast Nov. 30.

In fact, retention was the reason for the gathering of more than 250 Fort Benning soldiers at the Noncommissioned Officers' Club for the 1989 commanding general's Reenlistment Awards Breakfast.

An annual event, the breakfast recognizes units, individuals and reenlistment personnel for their efforts toward maximizing postwide retention.

TRADOC budget faces grim outlook

Army News Service

Commanders throughout the Training and Doctrine Command have been told by Gen. John W. Foss, TRADOC commanding general, to conduct operations at "bare bones" levels in response to budget reductions.

The directions were contained in a recent message Foss sent to commanders. "While we do not yet have your fiscal year '90 budget, the outlook is grim," the message read. "fiscal year '91 will be worse.

"Therefore, tough decisions will be required this year even though the payoff is next year."

Foss said commanders must also "reduce travel to the absolute minimum, execute only essential training, sustain basic quality of life for our soldiers and their families" and "defer commitments until the fund and man power picture firms up."

"This is the third straight year of negative growth," said Larry Stalings, deputy budget director in TRADOC's deputy chief of staff for resource management. "TRADOC's budget has been going down since fiscal year '87."

In fiscal year '87, the TRADOC operating budget was about $2.6 billion. For fiscal year '90, the requested budget is $2.48 billion.

"That figure (the fiscal year 90 budget) will definitely go down," Stallings said.

Stallings feels that when Congress passes the budget, TRADOC will receive less than the requested amount.

About 80 percent of TRADOC's budget is for personnel — approximately 42 percent for civilian employees and 38 percent for contracted services and programs. Military payroll is centrally funded by the Army.

Although there will be a significant reduction in the amount of funds available for civilian hiring, Stallings is optimistic that the existing work force can be protected.

"TRADOC commanders have done a super job in meeting most of our past budget reductions by selective hiring constraints at the local level," he said. "For that reason, the headquarters has been reluctant to order any command-wide freezes. Most installations have been in a constrained hiring mode since fiscal year '88, anyway.

"The reductions we have experienced for the past three years have been reflected in all areas. There have been reductions in the numbers of courses, lengths of courses and in base operations.

"The result in base operations reductions is a backlog of engineering projects; repair and maintenance of facilities cannot be done," Stallings said.

Pvt. Shane Moore, Co. A, 4th Bn., 30th Inf., ITC — "I don't agree with it because when the driver isn't drinking and other people in the car are, he is the one who is going to get ticketed."

'Tis the season for cons, pickpockets & shoplifters

By Clyde Snively
USAIC Public Affairs Office

'Tis the season to be jolly.

It's also the season for pickpockets, scam artists and shop lifters.

People get all pumped up with goodwill toward mankind, making them easy prey for the shylocks of the world, while others, wanting to experience the joys of giving, but lacking financial resources — money or plastic — resort to helping themselves at a store's expense and walking out without paying.

One place I'd be very reluctant to shoplift is the post exchange.

They've got some real eagle-eyed store detectives, for which I'm grateful since shoplifting not only results in a rise in the cost of items, but reduces the amount of money pumped back into the morale welfare fund.

They snatch people up who think no one will notice a missing Baby Ruth candy bar, or the apparent favorite — chewing tobacco.

It's amazing the number of soldiers who think no one will notice them helping themselves to that vile Copenhagen or Red Man.

Guess again. Everyday someone loses his PX privileges and ends up facing other disciplinary action because he thought those thoughts.

A word for you kids, the eye in the sky also zooms in on you as you try to walk off with video games, cassettes and Trojan condoms.

I haven't met a parent yet who enjoys being called down to the PX manager's office or Military Police station to bail out his kid because he happened to have sticky fingers.

"I meant to pay, but my hands were full, so I put that pack of gum in my pocket and just forgot about it when I checked out. See I paid for all the other stuff."

All these are excuses the detectives have heard before.

They've also heard from parents who extol the virtues of the child, "He's such a good kid, I know he meant to pay, he just forgot."

While being snatched up for shoplifting is one way to take the edge off a joyous Christmas season, it's not the only way.

Sports fans, when you're out shopping, mingling with the masses, hold onto your money.

Carry that purse like Andre Ware busting through a defensive line, move the billfold to a front pocket and above all, don't talk to strangers.

Well, it's all right to talk to strangers, but if they offer you a deal you can't refuse, a deal that sounds too good to be true, a deal that involves you putting up front money or earnest money, turn tail and flee — to the nearest policeman. Especially if you're stopped in a busy parking lot.

These are the flimflam men and women, the con artists, the people you thought no longer existed because Americans had gotten too smart to fall for the old ploys — "I just found this money, and we'd like you to hold onto it, but to make sure we can count on you..." or, "I'm a bank examiner; we suspect that teller, and we need your help..."

And finally, for those of you with hearts as big as the great outdoors, know who you're giving your hard-earned money to.

You'll recognize the Salvation Army bell ringers by their kettles. You know about Christmas Seals and the Combined Federal Campaign.

But what about some of these other outfits that claim your money will help needy children.

Don't give out credit card numbers to those who solicit you.

Do check out those charities before sending them a check. Chances are, if you never heard of them, the only ones benefiting from your largess are the ones doing the soliciting.

Sometimes a bah humbug attitude is the right attitude.

Have a merry Christmas anyway.

Reserve families have stake in family-action planning

By Ron Becker
Army News Service

If you were to ask a number of reserve component soldiers what they expect from the Army's family action initiatives, they'd offer a variety of answers. These would range from "I don't know" to a whole litany of necessary reforms and refinements.

Judging from my informal survey of family-issue sentiment within the Guard and Reserve community, there's much room for improving the extent of RC family-member involvement in, and understanding of, the process by which family issues are identified and resolved.

Part of the process consists of the annual Army Family Action Planning Conference.

As in the past, only a modicum of reserve-component representation occurred at this year's conference, held Oct. 23-27 in Falls Church, Va. Besides the presence of paid personnel from the family support program, there were a number of family members on hand. But perhaps not enough.

The Army National Guard and U.S. Army Reserve were limited to 12 delegates each. This meant that only two delegates from each of the USAR Continental U.S. Armies could be represented. What's more, the Army National Guard could not possibly have had all the states and territories represented individually.

We know that, in too many areas of the country, there are commands lacking active family support programs. It's time for all commanders and family members to realize the importance of having strong support projects.

Just as the overall program has seen numerous improvements for soldiers and their families in the active component, so, too, has it been able to improve the quality of life for their counterparts in the reserve component.

Thus far, the results have included the Reserve Component Family Member Identification Card, the Commissary Privilege Card, increased use of morale/welfare/recreation facilities by RC soldiers, and multiple unit training assemblies for families.

Each year new issues are raised to the Army leaders at all levels in an effort to expand the success story.

Who can help contribute more to the record of success? All RC family members can. By choosing to participate in the Army Family Action Plan's developmental and execution process, they can acquire such practical wisdom as appreciating the role of reserve soldiers during their away-from-home service and realizing the value of "networking" among groups with similar concerns.

The process starts at your home. If you have yet to get involved in a family support group, call your unit and ask about it. If the unit has no such group, look into how you can get one going. When you do, don't be surprised to find your voice being heard at one of the future Army Family Action Planning Conferences.

VA pensions

Veterans to see slight increase in Dec. 31 checks

Department of Veterans Affairs

More than 700,000 veterans and family members will receive up to a 4.7 percent increase in Department of Veterans Affairs Improved Pension checks payable Dec. 31.

VA Secretary Edward J. Derwinski said he hopes to announce a similar increase in disability compensation rates for disabled veterans before the year is out.

VA pensions are paid to wartime veterans totally and permanently disabled from circumstances unrelated to their military service and to needy survivors of wartime veterans.

The pension increase applies to 436,505 veterans of wartime service and 260,708 surviving spouses and children.

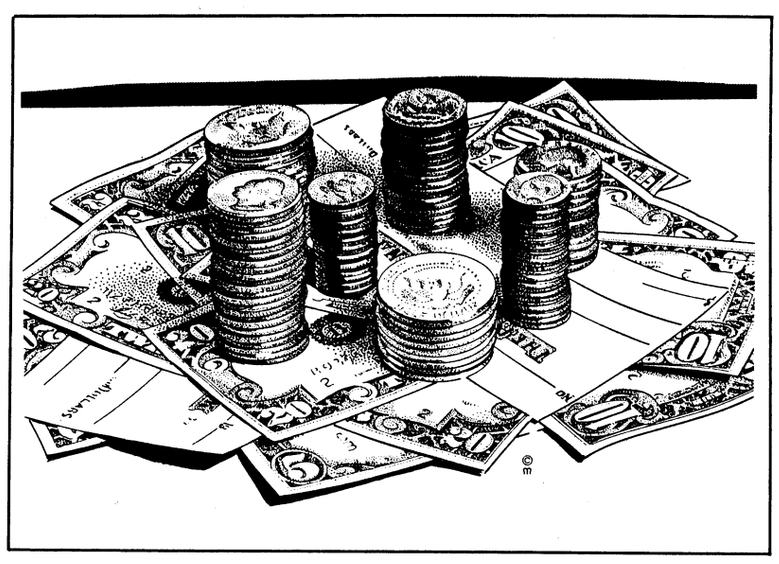
Payment increases will also go to 31,311 parents of deceased veterans receiving Dependency and Indemnity Compensation benefits.

The increase in monthly payments is automatic and requires no action by recipients.

Pension benefits range from annual maximums of $6,767 for a veteran without dependents to $15,222 for a veteran with three dependents who are in need of regular aid and attendance.

Unlike compensation benefits paid to veterans disabled by illness or injuries related to military service, pensions are affected by income from other sources, so the exact amount of the increase varies.

Increases in Improved Pension to wartime veterans and their family members and DIC payments to deceased veterans' parents are set by law at the same rate and date as Social Security increases.



VA pensions other than the Improved Pension remain fixed at the rates in effect in 1978.

The income limits that control eligibility for these programs, however, also are increased by 4.7 percent, effective Dec. 1.

Recipients of these pensions may request transfer to the Improved Pension plan at any time.

The VA reviews each request to advise beneficiaries which program would be most advantageous.

Veterans and family members with questions about pensions should contact the nearest VA Regional Office.

VA awaits further research before making decision on Agent Orange

Department of Veterans Affairs

The Veterans Administration will await further research before a decision will be made on whether Vietnam veterans should be entitled to disability payments based on their exposure to the herbicide Agent Orange, VA officials have announced.

Secretary of Veterans Affairs Edward J. Derwinski said he will wait for the results of a major federal study due next spring before making a determination.

Derwinski explained that the outcome of a study begun in 1985 by the U.S. Centers for Disease Control focusing on cancer incidence among Vietnam veterans should be weighed before he makes a decision.

A Department of Veterans Affairs advisory committee recently reviewed more than 30 studies and scientific papers and told Derwinski it could find no significant statistical association between non-Hodgkins lymphoma — a rare form of cancer — and human exposure to the types of chemicals used as defoliants in Vietnam, but that such an association couldn't be ruled out.

The committee was guided by new VA regulations that went into effect Nov. 1, following a ruling earlier this year by a federal court that said VA's cause-and-effect standards had been too strict in considering claims that the defoliant caused health problems.

Derwinski said he based his decision to wait for the CDC results on the advisory committee's findings and comments by several members that the study's outcome could weigh heavily in their recommendations.

"I am as determined now to resolve this issue as I was when I decided not to appeal the court's decision," Derwinski said. "But, it's logical to wait a few months for results of the CDC study."

CDC officials are analyzing several thousand health records to determine if Vietnam veterans are at risk for lymphoma, soft tissue sarcoma, nasal, nasopharyngeal and liver cancer.

Allowances for PCS moves increase

Army News Service

Turn on the electricity, hook up the phone, have the heat turned on, and don't forget the gas.

These are some of the requirements servicemembers must meet in their frequent moves.

So where does the money for all this come from? As a servicemember, you'll find that the moves often entail some out-of-pocket payments.

If you're a Department of Defense civilian, the majority of the expenses are picked up by the government.

Don't start playing the violins yet; help has arrived.

As of Oct. 1, servicemembers' dislocation allowance doubled, according to Lt Col. Matthew Fleumer and Lt. Col. Joe Zehnder.

Fleumer, the Army's member on the DoD per diem, travel and transportation allowance committee, works closely with Zehnder, who heads the compensation entitlements policy branch for the Army's personnel chief at the Pentagon.

Dislocation allowances partially offset a soldier's incidental expenses when relocating a household.

These expenses, according to Fleumer, include forced sale of household goods, loss of rent deposits, telephone service reconnection, utility hookups and other such expenses.

The dislocation allowance equals two months' basic allowance for quarters. "Single soldiers assigned to barracks are ineligible for the payment," says Zehnder, "unless they are stationed in an area where government housing is not provided."

Fleumer and Zehnder caution soldiers to remember that, unlike BAQ, DLA is taxable and must be reported as income.

A recent ruling by Department of Defense also allows enlisted soldiers on permanent change of station or travel duty since Oct. 1 to draw that portion of per diem (Normally $5.70 per day) that had been reduced by the Basic Allowance for Subsistence amount.

Soldiers who have gone TDY or moved on a PCS since 1 Oct. should check with their servicing finance office to determine if they have more money coming.

Soldiers should take all the documents concerning their moves with them when checking with servicing finance offices.

GI education benefits to end December 31

Department of Veterans Affairs

The nation's most widely used GI Bill education benefits are coming to an end.

After nearly 24 years of helping some 8.2 million Vietnam era veterans with school and training expenses, the Department of Veterans Affairs will be mailing the program's final checks at the end of December.

Some 60,000 veterans currently enrolled in schools and receiving assistance have been notified that their payments will be stopped when the Vietnam Era Veterans GI Bill expires on Dec. 31, 1989.

The program's termination date was spelled out in legislation passed in 1976 and has been widely publicized by VA.

Educational benefits for Post-Korean Conflict and Vietnam Era veterans were earned by serving on active duty between Jan. 31, 1955, and Jan. 1, 1977, and were available for 10 years after discharge, but no later than Dec. 31, 1989.

Many of these veterans, however, will be eligible to begin receiving benefits starting Jan. 1, 1990, under the Montgomery GI Bill.

Those qualifying are veterans who served until June 30, 1988.

Also eligible are veterans who were discharged under qualifying circumstances before June 30, 1988, but after June 30, 1985.

The qualifying discharges are hardship, disability, convenience of the government with at least 30 months service after June 30, 1985, and — in certain cases — military reductions in force.

The Vietnam Era GI Bill is the third "readjustment assistance" act passed by the Congress to assist former military members with service during hostile-fire periods.

The GI Bill for World War II provided training for 7.8 million veterans.

Participants in the Korean Conflict GI Bill totaled 2.8 million.

In total, the VA has delivered more than $70 billion in educational and training assistance to more than 20 million veterans, family members, active duty members and reservists since the first GI Bill was approved by Congress in 1944.

Not affected by the Dec. 31 expiration date are veterans enrolled in other VA education programs, including those in the Veterans' Educational Assistance Program and the Montgomery GI Bill for active duty, reserve and national guard members who served after June 30, 1985.

Veterans, service members, reservists and family members of veterans in doubt about their eligibility for education benefits should contact the nearest VA Regional Office.

Warfighting Conference

Veterans tell IOBC students about war, battlefield

By John Robinson
Bayonet staff writer

A Medal of Honor winner and a former Green Beret were two of five speakers at Warfighting Conference VI, held Nov. 29 at Infantry Hall.

Medal of Honor winner retired Col. Robert B. Nett and former Green Beret and Congressional Medal of Honor winner retired Col. Ola L. Mize spoke to Infantry Officer Basic Course students.

The conference, a series of lectures by prominent veteran battlefield commanders, was directed toward three classes of IOBC students.

Mize, a veteran of 31 years of both enlisted and commissioned service, attacked the class with a verbal barrage of wit and wisdom. His sharp-tongued humor and no-nonsense approach to battle drew constant chuckles from the young company-grade officers.

"As long as I got something to fight back with, I ain't giving up to any S.O.B.," he said.

Having received a direct commission in 1956 in Korea after turning down both Officer Candidate School and West Point, Mize voiced his contempt for larger-than-life commanders. "We haven't turned out a half-dozen combat leader generals since the Civil War," he said.

The son of Alabama sharecroppers, Mize, a former high-school dropout, is a self-described workaholic. "Remember men," he said to the young first liuetenants and captains, "mission comes first, your personal pleasure comes last.

"Read, read, read," he advised the students.

Mize, then a sergeant, distinguished himself in Korea by defending a strategically valuable "Outpost Harry," subsequently earning the Medal of Honor.

Blown down by artillery and grenade blasts three times, he tenaciously repelled repeated attacks, eventually killing more than 10 enemy soldiers and dispersing many more.

He saved at least two comrade's lives and directed a counterattack, which successfully drove the enemy from the outpost.

As an officer, he spent the majority of his service with the 5th Special Forces Group, eventually being designated in 1975 as the Chief of Field Training, Special Forces at Fort Bragg, N.C.

Mize's awards include the Congressional Medal of Honor, Siver Star, Legion of Merit, Bronze Star, Air Medal, Combat Infantryman's Badge, Master Parachute Badge and the Scuba Badge.

He is a graduate of Ranger School, Command and General Staff College, Special Forces Training Group, Jumpmaster Course, SAND Institute of Language and the USA Intelligence School.

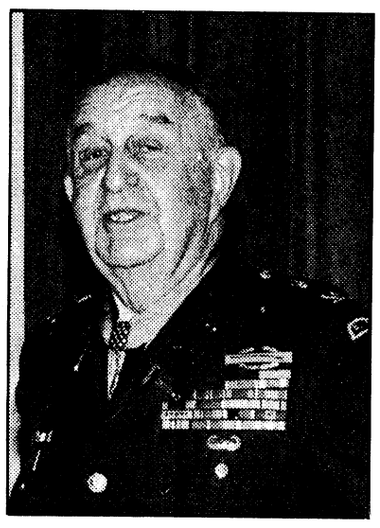
Additionally, he is a graduate of both the University of North Carolina and the University of Maryland.

Speaking candidly about the atrocities of war, Nett often left little to the imagination.

"No one says combat is nice, and no one says that you have to be polite and cordial, either."

Speaking to three classes of students from the Infantry Officers Advanced Course, he cautioned the captains and first lieutenants of their responsibilities in the event of war.

"The bulk of the fighting is right within the company commander's grasp. We can take our hats off to the company commanders."



He advised the young officers, the vast majority of which are without combat experience, that training and personal knowledge are key elements to continually be built upon.

"In battle, the men don't see you just as a leader but also as the man who will save their lives through your knowledge."

Having spent time as a National Guard platoon sergeant with Company C, 102nd Infantry, in the Pacific War Zone Task Force, Nett returned to Fort Benning in 1942 to attend Officer Candidate School.

He then returned to the Pacific where he saw duty with the Co. E, 305th Inf., 77th Inf. Div. and later became its company commander.

It was there the first lieutenant was awarded the Medal of

Col. Robert B. Nett

Col. Ola L. Mize

Honor for spearheading an assault against a reinforced enemy battalion. Although twice severely wounded, he pressed on, killing seven enemy soldiers in hand-to-hand fighting with rifle and bayonet.

Since his days in the South Pacific, the veteran has worn many hats.

He served with the Artillery Center School Troops, Fort Sill, Oklahoma and 19th Inf. Regt., 24th Inf. Div., Japan, where he became the Inspector General of Kobe Base.

During the Korean War, he served as Inspector General of Headquarters Southwestern Command, doing classified missions for Gen. MacArthur's Far East Headquarters.

Before being sent to Vietnam as an advisor, he also served as the chairman of the Attack Committee in the Ranger Department of the Infantry School.

His final assignment was as Chief of Reserve Affairs for Europe, the Middle East and North Africa in Heidelberg, Germany. He retired in 1973 and continues to lecture for the Infantry School when needed.

Nett's decorations include the Medal of Honor, Legion of Merit, Bronze Star Medal with "V" device and two oak leaf clusters, Purple Heart with oak leaf cluster, Meritorious Service Medal, Air Medal, Army Commendation Medal, Combat Infantryman Badge, Ranger Tab, Airborne, Gliderman, Air Assault and Grand Cross of Malta.

MARTIN CARE

MACH's mascot 'doggone' perfect

By Jeanne Dickerson
Martin Army Community Hospital

The newest staff member at Martin Army Community Hospital is easily identifiable. She weighs about 24 pounds, has one blue and one brown eye and specializes in tender loving care.

She's Martina, an Australian shepherd, who was brought to MACH for an interview with Col. Herbert E. Segal, hospital commander. Her size, appearance and disposition made her "doggone" near perfect for a career in medicine.

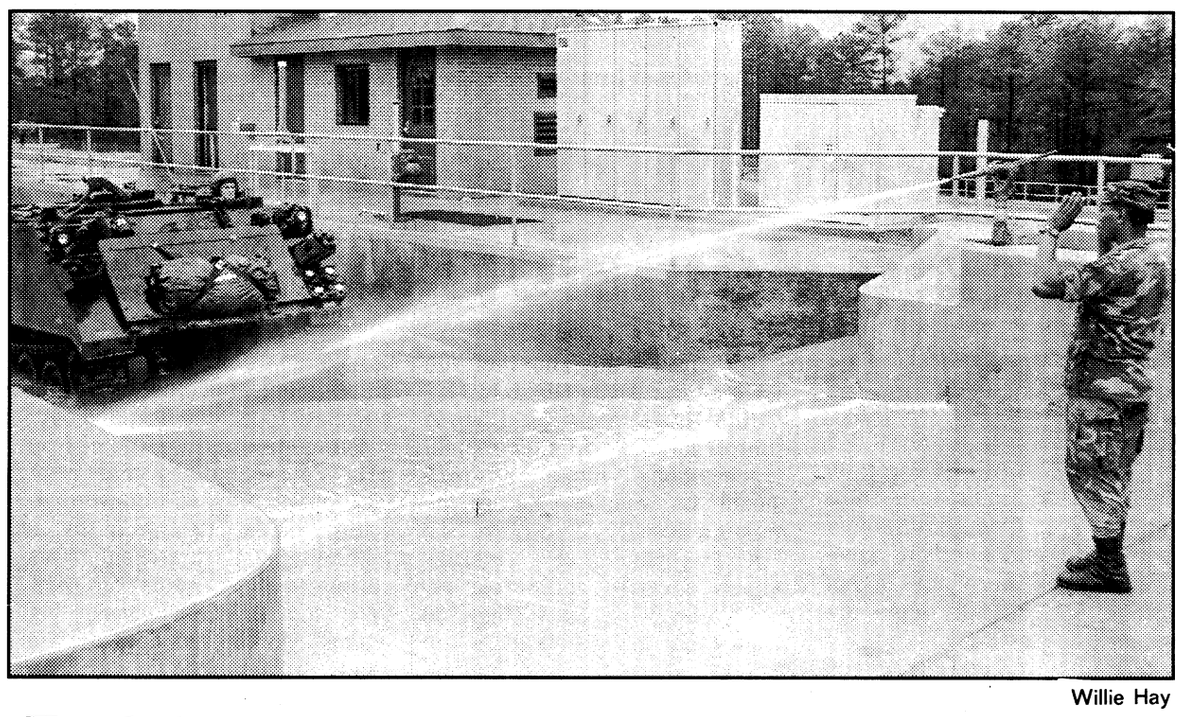
Martina loves to be around people and is especially fond of children. She was raised at the Veterinarian Clinic.

She has completed her "internship" (housebreaking) and is almost through her "residency" (obedience training).

Orders were cut Oct. 1 making Martina the official mascot for MACH. She did so well with her "internship" that she was promoted to Pfc. Nov. 29.

Segal said he was impressed with the growing recognition of the role of pets in the recovery process.

Studies indicate that the elderly living alone, except for a pet, have increased longevity as compared to those without pets.



Col. Segal and Lt. Col. Harold M. Smith, deputy commander for Veterinary Services, agreed to search for the right animal to initiate this human/animal bonding program at MACH.

Martina will be on call to visit patients who request a routine visit or, in some cases, where a physician may recommend a special visit.

When she "makes rounds," Martina will be accompanied by a staff member from the Veterinarian Clinic.

The value of pet therapy was demonstrated at MACH when a family pet accompanied one patient during his hospitalization.

With the addition of Martina to the staff, MACH again demonstrates that caring is an important part of Martin Care.

Infantry students tackle land nav, orienteering

Infantry Officer Basic Course

The Infantry Officer Basic Course Class 2-90, Company A 2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, began land navigation training while most soldiers and civilians prepared for a short holiday week Nov. 20.

Company A earned a long weekend during this short week by confronting a challenging land navigation course along with receiving integrated training on infantry fighting positions.

Starting with classroom instruction on the fundamentals of land navigation and orienteering, that included classes on intersection, resection and modified resection, the officers of Co. A began to learn a critical task of their profession.

Upon completion of the classroom work, Co. A moved to the Tricolor road land navigation site for practical application of the classroom lessons.

The Tricolor site was as difficult, if not more difficult, than the final test site located south of Yankee Road.

After a night of sleeping under the stars like true light infantry fighters, Co. A conducted an after-action review of the previous day's training.

In order to work on lessons learned from Monday, Co. A performed one more practice test before attacking the challenging Yankee site.

Breaking through "wait-a-minute vines" and wading through Oswichee Creek, 65 percent of Co. A completed the mission on the first attempt.

Those who did not fare as well performed a second test.

The soldiers of Co. A said the Yankee Road course was not only a lesson in land navigation but also a course in orienteering.

According to Capt. Alfred Parham, the primary instructor and officer in charge, "This is not just a compass course. You cannot just shoot an azimuth and go. You must develop skills in terrain association in order to ensure yourself success in passing the examination."

Despite this disadvantage, Co. A also integrated training on the construction and operation of infantry fighting positions.

Students passing both day and night land navigation tests constructed M-16, M-60 and dragon fighting positions to be viewed by the entire class.

The class then received a brief lecture on each position so they could see the standards they are expected to uphold throughout their career.

Additionally, this integrated training will allow the student to concentrate more on leader tasks when preparing, occupying, and conducting a defense during defense training.

For some of the soldiers, this training was a refresher course.

For others, it was an introduction. But for all of Co. A agreed that land navigation was a challenge.

School of Americas' instructors use computers for training aids

By Keith F. Johnson
U.S. Army School of the Americas

The growing use of computers by soldiers in the U.S. Army has spread to the instructors at the U.S. Army School of the Americas.

For the first time the School's Instructor Training Course is giving new USARSA instructors hands-on training to prepare them to meet training standards.

Six rangers, who will be instructors with the school's 58-day Commando Course, were the first to receive the computer training classes Nov. 29 to 30.

"To become an instructor at USARSA each soldier must complete the Instructor Training Course," said Antonio Cartegena, education specialist supervisor. "Now, they have to learn to use the computer because they must write and develop their own lesson plans using the computer."

The computer instruction includes training with Multitext and Harvard Graphics.

According to the rangers, the students of the Commando Course, which is equivalent to the U.S. Ranger Course, receive classroom instruction where the training aids help prepare them to put into practice in the field what they have learned in the classroom.

Before the course, none of the six Rangers had ever worked with computers to prepare training aids. Instead, they relied on outside sources for their materials.

"In today's Army, in order to prepare training aids and be better NCOs, we need to use the computers to do it in classroom/ job," said Sgt. 1st Class Rafael R. Pinero, a student in the course.

The other rangers in the course were Sgt. 1st Class Amaury Cofresi, Sgt. 1st Class Jose F. Escalera, Staff Sgt. Felix L. Davila, Staff Sgt. Waldemar Garcia and Staff Sgt. Edwin Rodriguez.

Redlegs celebrate Saint Barbara's Day

197th Infantry Brigade

How does the Field Artillery honor its patron saint?

The Redlegs of the 4th Battalion, 41st Field Artillery, kicked off their Saint Barbara's Day festivities Dec. 1 with a thunderous boom from a howitzer parked outside the Fort Benning Officers' Club.

Then, some 125 officers and NCOs from the 197th Infantry Brigade and other Fort Benning units gathered in the club for the battalion's annual dining-in. Special guests for the dress blues affair included Maj. Gen. Travis N. Dyer, director of personnel, JT, Forces Command; Col. Theodore W. Reid, commander of the 197th; Col. Harvey F. Watson, former commander of the 197th; and Command Sgt. Maj. Jimmie G. Bowles, command sergeant major of the 197th.

Next came traditional toasts, a roast prime rib of beef dinner, an address by Dyer, and induction into the Honorable Order of Saint Barbara for those individuals who contributed to the success of the combined arms team during the past year.

Topping off the evening was the mixing of "Artillerymen's punch." Each battery commander and first sergeant poured symbolic ingredients into the brew, which all the Redlegs had the opportunity to sample before the party ended.

Post schools install parent information line

Fort Benning Schools

A new information line begins Monday in each of the eight Fort Benning Schools.

The VIP (Very Informed Parent) Line will be a source of school information available to parents each day from 5 p.m. through 7 a.m.

Each school will have its own VIP Line, which will provide information about happenings at the school.

Through a recorded message the parent can learn about report card dates, information being sent home with students, school activities during the school day, parent-teacher organization meetings and a variety of other school related topics.

Flyers will be sent home to all Fort Benning parents to inform them about this new communication program.

Benning schools already communicate on a regular basis with parents through monthly newsletters and by sending home additional information as needed.

VIP phone lines have been designed so that parents can check during evenings or on weekends to make sure that they have received all current information.

"The VIP phone lines were an idea that came from a committee of Benning educators and parents," said Beth Middlemiss, Director of Staff Development.

"Because we recognized the importance of communication between school and home, we were looking for ways to ensure that communication occurs regularly.

"We're hoping that the VIP lines will prove to be a convenient, effective method for conveying school information."

Benning Energy Office stresses ways to save

By Tina Cook
Energy Branch

Driving around Fort Benning or Columbus during the evening hours, it's obvious that Fort Benning homes and offices are preparing for the most festive time of the year, Christmas.

In keeping with the spirit of the holidays, energy conservation and safety are probably the last things on everyone's mind.

Nevertheless, there are several areas that should be of concern to post residents.

While personnel from the Energy Branch want everyone to enjoy the holidays, they stress the importance of doing so in a safe and energy-efficient manner.

Below are a few tips for a safe and energy-efficient holiday:

- When expecting a crowd, lower the thermostat. Body heat will raise the temperature.
- Keep the heat indoors. Don't keep doors open longer than necessary when guests enter or leave.
- Keep the fireplace damper closed when not in use.
- Whenever possible, cook with small appliances, such as a toaster or microwave. If using the oven, try preparing all other dishes for the meal in the oven, as well.
- When decorating offices on post, the use of electric lights on a tree or elsewhere is prohibited. This policy is postwide and strictly enforced.
- Be prudent with lights at home, as well. Remember that flashing miniature ornamental lights use less energy than most others. It takes 250 of these to use as much energy as a 100-watt bulb.
- Before using electric lights, check each string to ensure that there are no loose or broken sockets or exposed wiring. Wiring that shows signs of wearing or cracking should be discarded. When purchasing Christmas lights, look for the Underwriters Laboratory label on the package.

If you plan to decorate the exterior of your home with strings of lights, be sure to purchase lights designed for that purpose. Don't be excessive with your decorations, and wait until dark to turn the lights on.

Exterior lighting in family housing is authorized one week prior to and one week after Christmas. Consider the possibility of putting the lights on a timer so you don't forget to turn them off before going to bed each evening.

- When putting up a live tree, make sure there is always plenty of water in the stand.

The traditional evergreen tree can be a fire hazard. When selecting a tree, ensure that it has springy branches and green needles.

If you use an artificial tree, make sure it has been treated with a fire retardant chemical.

If you use a metal tree, do not use electric lights.

Under no circumstances should lit candles ever be placed on a Christmas tree of any type.

- Don't place packages too close to tree lights or electrical circuits.
- Keep a fire extinguisher handy. Never use water on an electrical fire.

This time of year is especially important in trying to achieve energy goals. Smart, efficient energy use now will allow more energy for later in the year when the temperatures drop.

Best wishes for a safe and happy holiday season.

World AIDS Day activities focus on educating public

By Michelle Le Roy Harrison
Bayonet staff writer

As of spring 1989, more than 18,000 people aged 20 to 29 have been diagnosed with acquired immunodeficiency syndrome, according to the U.S. Center for Disease Control.

Because a person can be infected with the virus that causes AIDS for 10 or more years before the signs of AIDS appear, a significant number of these people were infected when they were teen-agers, say CDC officials.

To help focus attention on the worldwide efforts against AIDS, the World Health Organization declared Dec. 1 as World AIDS Day.

Fort Benning took part in the second annual recognition day Dec. 1 by setting up an information booth at Martin Army Community Hospital.

Representatives from the Fort Benning Red Cross and the Community Health Nurse office were available to answer questions and provide information on AIDS.

Patients in the waiting room of the pharmacy watched videos about people with AIDS.

According Capt. Teresa Hall, community health nurse and HIV program manager, this year officials concentrated on educating the civilian population on Fort Benning.

According to David E. De Leon, Fort Benning Red Cross assistant station manager, the booth attracted about 100 people, much more than expected.

"Hopefully, we will get even more next year," De Leon said.

Hall said all types of people, from service members to family members to retirees, stopped by the booth to ask questions.

"I think this is the first time that many people have seen an information booth about AIDS where they can just come up and ask questions," Hall said.

"Many people are shy about asking questions," she said. "But this (booth) gives them a chance to clarify certain things and gives us a chance to clear up misinformation."

For more information about AIDS, call 545-2930/4041.

Reenlistment

as the ceremony's guest speaker and presented 26 retention awards to soldiers from all over post.

In keeping with the spirit of the ceremony, Spigelmire swore Leon, a career counselor with the 34th Medical Battalion, reenlisted for three years, and Spec. Ronald D. Riggins, Company B, 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment, reenlisted for six years for present duty assignment.

Each of 18 Benning units received certificates of achievement and letters of appreciation for their participation in reenlistment efforts. Another five units received reenlistment plaques for their successes.

Trophies were awarded in three categories.

The Infantry Training Center was awarded a trophy for having the best reenlistment statistics of all the major units on post.

The top battalion trophy went to 3rd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, The School Brigade, while the U.S. Army School of the Americas took home the top separate unit reenlistment trophy.

Spigelmire commented that most young people come into the Army, among other reasons, looking for adventure and challenges.

He said Army leaders, at all levels, should provide the kinds of training and challenges that will retain these young men and women.

ASK THE JUDGE

By Jane M. Winand
Staff Judge Advocate's Office

Q. I bought a house at my last duty station — Fort Carson, Colo. It's not news that the housing market has been really slow.

Well, when I relocated to Fort Benning, I couldn't sell the house in Colorado. I haven't been able to rent it, either.

I've decided to retire after this assignment and stay in Columbus. I'd like to buy a home here in Columbus but can't afford two mortgage payments.

I've heard that I can just let the bank that gave me the mortgage have the house. No more headaches for me, right?

A. The answer depends upon the terms of the mortgage that the bank gave you. A standard security deed, the contract that you signed to get mortgage money to buy the house, provides that if the borrower defaults by failing to make the monthly payments, the lending institution automatically can take possession of the property.

The bank can sell the house to get the balance of the mortgage money.

If the bank, in your situation, can sell the house for a high enough price to cover the outstanding mortgage balance, you are off the hook.

However, since you haven't owned the house for very long, odds are that you still owe most of the original principal sum you borrowed.

With the housing market such as it is, the bank probably will not be able to sell the house for the full mortgage balance.

Bear in mind that lending institutions that take over such real estate are not in the business of selling land.

Thus, the bank will try to sell the house as quickly as possible at probably a bargain price.

If the proceeds from the sale don't cover the mortgage balance plus the bank's costs to sell the property, you are responsible to pay the rest.

You also may have to pay the bank's legal costs if it must sue you to get the money. Thus, you not only have lost the house, you also may have to pay an additional amount.

Also important to consider is the fact that such a default will be entered on your credit rating and could affect you for years to come, such as resulting in the denial of your application for a loan on a house here in Columbus.

You may want to consider selling the house at a bit of a loss or contacting a rental agency to aggressively look for a tenant.

The bank or another lending institution may be able to refinance your current mortgage for lower payments at a lower interest rate.

Save your smile with root canal treatment

By Robert Loushine
Endodontic Department

Today we know how to keep teeth for a lifetime, and more and more of us are doing so.

Most people already know the main principles: a sensible diet, good oral hygiene (brushing and flossing), the use of fluorides and regular checkups.

However, there is a lesser-known aspect of dentistry called endodontics.

"Endo" means inside; "odontics" means tooth. Thus, endodontics is treatment for the inside of the tooth.

While the majority of the population has never heard the word endodontics, most have heard of it by its more common name — root canal therapy.

Root canal therapy saves teeth after other preventive measures have failed.

Before root canal therapy was refined, many teeth were extracted because of decay that damaged the inner tissues.

Today, endodontics can save the vast majority of those teeth, even if neglect has caused them to become severely abscessed and painful.

To understand how root canal therapy saves teeth, several facts about the anatomy of the tooth should be understood.

The tooth is made up of two main parts — the crown, with the outer enamel visible in the mouth, and the root, which anchors the tooth in the socket.

Inside both the crown and the root is a chamber that contains the pulp, a soft tissue composed of nerves and blood vessels.

Endodontic therapy is needed when the pulp is so damaged that it cannot repair itself.

Damage is usually caused by decay or a severe blow to the tooth.

Treatment consists of making an opening into the crown, removing the damaged pulp and filling the canal space with a sterile material to prevent future infection.

Because the pulp has been removed, many people incorrectly call the tooth "dead."

Actually, the tooth continues to draw nourishment from the surrounding gums and jaw and is "alive" as long as it is anchored in the socket.

Just as it's no longer necessary to lose your teeth, it's no longer necessary for root canal therapy to be painful.

There are excellent anesthetics available today, and the techniques used to perform the endodontic procedures are very gentle.

A national survey is 1,000 people showed some interesting results on pain perception.

Although about half of the people surveyed described root canal therapy as painful, those who actually experienced the procedure were four to five times more likely to call it painless than were those who had never had root canal therapy.

So, the perception of pain is based largely on what people have heard over the years, not on current experience.

Another point to keep in mind is that people who need endodontic therapy often are in pain. The visit to the endodontist stops the pain.

There are a few myths concerning root canal therapy that should be dispelled.

Myth: Endodontically treated teeth turn black and die.

Fact: As stated earlier, the tooth continues to be nourished from the surrounding tissues.

Occasionally the tooth becomes discolored, but can be made natural looking with capping or bleaching.

Myth: Tooth canal therapy is a temporary treatment, and the tooth will eventually fall out or have to be extracted.

Fact: In the vast majority of cases, a tooth treated with root canal therapy will last and function for a lifetime.

Myth: Senior citizens can't be treated with tooth canal therapy.

Fact: They can be successfully treated, as long as the tooth has sufficient bone support. People in their 80s and 90s have had root canal therapy with excellent results.

Until recently, losing teeth was considered a normal part of the aging process. However, today more and more people are maintaining their teeth for a lifetime.

By understanding the benefits of root canal therapy, you may be able to save your smile.

'Annie' features 3 Benning actors

By John Robinson
Bayonet staff writer

"Annie," the charmer of Broadway, has made its mark on the Columbus-Fort Benning area.

Amidst numerous sold-out performances and standing ovations, the Springer Theatre Company has once again called upon the acting abilities of Dental Activities' Maj. Gregory P. Smith, as well as two Fort Benning family members.

Smith, rich from his experience in Springer's recent "Enemy of the People," contributes a lion's share of roles in the latest box office smash.

Ledger-Enquirer file photo

Laura Keys, choreographer of "Annie" dances with the "orphan brigade."

Playing at least four parts, including the chauffeur for the saintly Daddy Warbucks, Smith admits the nearly 200 rehearsal hours have taken their toll. He said he will "take a break" after the final curtain closes Saturday.

He said there are no regrets, however.

"It's all been worth it. All the actors are very nice people, and there's been great public support," said Smith after the company received three standing ovations the first weekend.

Stage veteran of sorts Solange Guillaume also makes her second appearance as part of the Springer troupe.

Guillaume, daughter of Sgt. and Mrs. Phillip Guillaume of the 283rd Army Band, plays one of the young charges of the "orphan brigade," a choral group that sparks the play with musical and dance numbers throughout the show.

The 11-year-old prodigy from Faith Middle School is a veteran of past Springer production "Willie Wonka and the Chocolate Factory." She said she'll "probably try to get into the next production," as well.

Making her acting debut is fellow school-mate, Elizabeth Moore.

Moore, daughter of Col. and Mrs. Reginald Moore of Martin Army Community Hospital, is also part of the talented and highly-choreographed "orphan brigade."

Moore, a newcomer to the world of sound and stage, said she "really likes it down there (Springer Opera House)" and "hopes to do more (productions)" in the near future.

Moore and Guillaume were among the more than 100 who girls tried out for the coveted 22 positions in the orphan chorale. The rehearsals were even more demanding than the auditions.

Proud father Phillip Guillaume admitted that although his daughter was enjoying herself and doing very well, "she will definitely need a break. It (the rehearsals) can be very taxing both physically and mentally."

The results are self-evident. The 50-member cast of "Annie" has put forth nearly three months of work, which has resulted in box office sell-out records for the Springer Opera House and the Springer company.

The successes of the local venture can be attributed, in part, to the fine showing of Fort Benning's own talented actor and young actresses.

Three shows are still on tap before the final curtain call.

The cast will appear tonight at 8 p.m. and twice Saturday, the first at 2:30 p.m. and again at 8 p.m. The shows may already be sold out, so the public is advised to call the Springer Theatre ahead to be sure of ticket availability.

Soldier wins Pioneer Leadership Award

By Michelle Le Roy Harrison
Bayonet staff writer

The 29th Infantry Regiment has developed a program to identify its best noncommissioned officer, and, recently, one soldier was chosen as 29th's best NCO.

Sgt. 1st Class Clifford Adams, Co. C, 2nd Bn., 29th Inf. Regt., won the Pioneer Leadership Award for the regiment, beating 13 other NCOs.

The competition is open to all noncommissioned officers, male or female, up to the rank of E-7, regardless of military occupational specialty.

"I wanted to have a program that was targeted toward the NCOs," said regiment Command Sgt. Maj. Gary L. Cupit said.

"I wanted to show that if you do a good job, you'll be rewarded."

According to Cupit, competitors are recommended for the competition by their company commanders.

The competition is based on scores from a physical fitness test, weapons qualification, a board, an autobiography the soldier writes and a previously-taken skills qualification test.

In his biography, Adams wrote about his 13 years in the Army and how much the Army has changed his life.

"The Army has been very rewarding to me," he said. "It has made a significant change in my life. I value things a lot more now."

Adams said he normally shys away from boards but that he wanted to compete for the award.

"I wanted to show that I was proud of my unit and willing to support it," he said. "Charlie company is one of the best companies I've been assigned to."

According to Adams, he didn't have to prepare much for the board.

"I just left the NCO Academy in Korea where I was senior instructor. We taught most of the things that were asked on the board," Clifford said. "I guess I had kind of an advantage there."

But where he had an advantage in one area, he made up with hard work in another.

"I have my own individual P.T. program in addition to the Army's," he said. "I work out seven days a week, running and working out at the gym."

At 41-years-old, Adams said he likes competing against the "younger generation." He said that a lot of them think the older guys aren't as in shape as they are.

Adams proved different by scoring the highest on the P.T. test. He was also the only person to fire expert during the weapons qualification.

These, he said, are some of the qualities that an infantryman needs to survive on the battle field.

Cupit said that although the competition was very close, he thinks that Adams came out ahead because of his excellent physical fitness.

"He is a horse," he said.

Adams won an array of prizes along with the prestigious title.

His awards included an Army Commendation award, a Certificate of Achievement, a plaque from the Association of the United States Army, an NCO Creed plaque, a trophy and a regimental coin.

Local AUSA corporate members contributed gifts, as well. Adams received a dress blue uniform, leather jacket, color television, $100 gift certificate and two $100 savings bonds.

Both Cupit and Adams expressed appreciation to all AUSA corporate members.

"I want to especially thank all the people and business that contributed gifts," Adams said.

On a closing note, Adams said his advise to younger soldiers is "always do the best you can do. Don't settle for being number two."

Adams doesn't. Right now, he is number one.

Santa parachutes into unit Christmas party

By Keith F. Johnson
U.S. Army School of the Americas

U.S. Army School of the Americas' military and civilian personnel, students and family members participated in a Christmas party Dec. 1 on the front lawn of building 35.

The party began with the ceremonial lighting of the tree by USARSA commandant, Col. William A. DePalo Jr.

Following the lighting ceremony, Christmas songs were sung by performers from the Officers' Wives Club and Continuing Education at Columbus College.

The singers, ranging in age from 6 to 13, sang "Rockin' Around the Christmas Tree," "Up On the Housetop," "Here Comes Santa Claus," and "Grandma Got Run Over By A Reindeer." The whole crowd then sang "Rudolph the Red-Nosed Reindeer."

At the end of the song, everybody's heads turned skyward as six members of the U.S. Army Silver Wings parachuted to the lawn in front of the School. One parachuter, dressed in red, landed behind the Officers' Club.

The children feared he had crash landed behind the club, but their fears and worried faces turned to smiles as Santa Claus strode out the front door of the club, dragging his bag of gifts behind.

Following his arrival, the children were able to sit with Santa Claus and ask him for their holiday wishes.

Sgt. 1st Class Gary W. Acker played the role of Santa Claus for the second time at USARSA.

Tighter budgets make ensuring quality essential

By Jan Chervenak
Total Quality Management

"Quality is free. It is not a gift, but it is free. What costs money are the unquality things — all the actions that involve not doing jobs right the first time."

Those words, and many of the following ideas, were written by Phil Crosby in 1979. They are even more true now then.

Why? Simply because with our tighter military budgets, poor quality costs federal jobs.

Poor quality drives costs up and makes the federal work force less cost effective than contract alternatives.

Quality is not only free, it is a job maker. Every penny we don't spend doing things wrong or over becomes an investment in our careers here.

In these days of "who knows what's going to happen to our budget," some say there aren't many ways left for individuals to make a difference.

If we concentrate on building quality into our work, we can increase not only our own individual value, but the value of our entire organization as well.

It is difficult to have a meaningful discussion of quality or any other subject until we have a common vocabulary and understanding of ideas surrounding the subject.

Sometimes this must include dealing with basic erroneous assumptions that cloud our ability to deal with new ideas.

To understand quality, it is necessary to examine five erroneous assumptions that are held by many individuals.

These assumptions cause most of the communication problems between those of us who want quality and those who haven't given as much thought to the subject.

The first erroneous assumption is that quality means goodness or luxury or shininess or weight.

The word "quality" is used to signify the relative worth of things in such phrases as "good quality," "bad quality," or "high quality," "low quality." In each of these usages, "quality" is a cliche.

Each speaker and listener assumes that the other understands exactly what he or she means by the phrase.

It is a situation in which individuals talk with great conviction about something without ever defining it.

This is an excellent example of true miscommunication.

Such miscommunication is precisely the reason we must define quality once and for all.

Our definition must be simple and apply equally to all situations.

In Total Quality Management, we define quality as "conformance to requirements."

That definition is easy to understand and is manageable. Requirements must be clearly stated so that they cannot be misunderstood.

Output is monitored to determine conformance to established requirements. Any "nonconformance" detected is the absence of quality.

Quality problems become nonconformance problems, and quality become definable.

The second erroneous assumption is that quality is an intangible and therefore not measurable.

In fact, quality is precisely measurable by the oldest and most respected of measurements — cold, hard cash.

Quality is measured by the cost of quality which is the expense of nonconformance — the cost of doing things wrong.

In our business at Fort Benning, examples of nonconformance could range from not training to standard to publishing inaccurate training or doctrinal literature or from maintenance rework to inaccurate supply requisitions.

Regardless of the nonconformance, there is an adverse impact on costs.

Higher costs means diminished mission accomplishment.

Ignorance of this fact has led many to dismiss quality as something beyond handling.

They are thinking of quality as goodness and spend their time having emotional discussions which make it impossible to take specific, logical actions to attain quality.

The third erroneous assumption is that "our business is different." What is usually meant is that they can't afford quality work.

This line of reasoning generally results in the recounting of some case of "gold plating," where a decision maker made a product nonviable by insisting on adding an unnecessary "bells and whistles" component.

The point to be made here is that it is always cheaper to do things right the first time: to provide exactly what is required; no more, no less.

We must not get faked out by words that have no meaning, and "our business is different" certainly has no meaning.

The fourth assumption that causes problems is the one that says all the problems of quality are originated by the workers, particularly those who are producing end products.

In our case, this would be the work force conducting training producing training and doctrinal literature or providing some end service, such as maintenance, supply or payroll.

It is hardly possible to read a magazine or newspaper that doesn't have some article about the falling standards of workers. The low quality of products made in the United State is contributing to our losing the competitive edge in world marketplace.

The fact is that people work as well as they ever did and are much more productive than in the past.

They probably contribute a lot fewer problems than the complex bureaucracies in which they labor.

The fifth erroneous assumption is that quality somehow "springs" from quality control.

This is the notion that quality can be "inspected-in" or that defects can be "tested-out." We are all too familiar with these "cures" for poor quality.

The brutal truth is that nonconformances creep into our work processes. It is there we must deal with them.

Doing work right the first time — every time, means identifying soft spots in work processes where they originate and eliminating them there.

Total Quality Management is a systematic way of guaranteeing that organized activities happen the way they are planned.

It is a management discipline concerned with preventing problems from occurring by creating the attitudes and controls that make prevention possible.

For you and me, it means a personal commitment to do it right the first time, every time.

Four records broken at Faith Holiday Race

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

Runners in the Faith School Holiday Race really got into the spirit of things. They ran so fast four records were broken.

Ashar Smith age 7 broke the record for females in the one mile race by running the course in 8:00 beating the old record by 25 seconds.

Sean Shuttleworth, 8, broke the record for the male one-mile race with a blistering 6:46, beating the old record by 25 seconds.

The females record in the two-mile race was broken by Jasmine Watford, age 12. She ran a 12:44, cutting the time by 12 seconds.

Molly Sinclair, a member of the Fort Benning championship 10-miler team, set a new record in the five mile.

The speedster ran a 32:27, shaving 16 seconds off the old record.

Sinclair said she really liked the course.

"It was pretty flat with a couple of hills thrown in to keep it challenging," she said. "Plus, it was really interesting how it wound around the airborne towers and some of the other scenery at Fort Benning."

She added she was pleased she broke the record but was surprised, considering she hasn't been training much. She said she has been concentrating on her final exams at Columbus College.

Sinclair said Mother Nature also gave her a boost.

"The weather was perfect for the race," she said. "It was cool, no wind, which I think are ideal conditions."

The winner of the males' race Gregory Kammerer was also the second-place winner in the five-mile race. J. Sprague won the five-mile race.

AUSA hosts fall golf tournament

By Ann McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

The Association of the U.S. Army Golf Tournament hosted the Scramble Fall Tournament at the Follow Me Golf Tournament last week.

According to golf pro, George Cliff, a four-ball scramble is when all four players tee-off and then they play off the ball that was hit the farthest.

"For example," he said, "a player hits the ball, it goes the farthest, so the other players place their golf balls at that point to continue playing."

Cliff said this method is used to take advantage of the talents of the teams.

The players said it was more fun that way because then, each has a part in how well the team does.

Another feature in this particular tournament was the closest-to-the-hole awards that are given for holes 4, 7, 14 and 16.

Cheryl Stall, who helped set up the tournament, said AUSA does this so thateveryone can go out and have a good time.

"Of course, there is some friendly competition, but, for the most part, everyone is here to enjoy themselves," she said.

Stagg Bowl set to thrill fans

USAIC Public Affairs Office

This weekend's 1989 Stagg Bowl promises to be a good one as the Dayton (Ohio) Flyers and their 12-0-1 record take on Dutchmen of Union College (13-0) at Schenectady, N.Y.

Kick-off at Saturday's game, sponsored by the Phenix City Jaycees, will be at 11 a.m. at Phenix City's Garrett Stadium. Admission is $7.

Dayton comes to the game looking to even its Stagg Bowl record.

This will be the Flyers' fourth Stagg Bowl (all in this decade), and they're hungry for a win.

Dayton's first and only Stagg Bowl win came in 1980.

In 1981, the Flyers lost the title to Widener College, and two years ago, they lost to Wagner college.

A win in Saturday's game would give them a 2-2 Stagg Bowl record.

On the other side of the scrimmage line will be Union.

The black horse Dutchmen come into their first Stagg Bowl performance without a lot to lose, or at least under less pressure than Dayton.

While the Dutchmen would love to take home the NCAA Division III title, it's not as though they have anything to prove.

They've already proved themselves with a surprising perfect season, preceded by lukewarm records of 5-5 last year and 4-4 in 1987.

Strong rushing backed by a solid offensive line has been Dayton's main gun throughout the season. However, quarterback, Dan Sharley, has successfully completed 61 percent of his passing attempts.

Union, on the other hand, relies heavily on a killer defense that has allowed only 6.3 points per game on the average.

An experienced crew, the defensive unit boasts five seniors and four juniors, including linebacker Thom McMahon, whose 122 season tackles set a new Union record.

Stagg Bowl Fan Night will be at the Roy Martin Recreation Center in Phenix City tonight.

Admission is by Stagg Bowl ticket or the purchase of a ticket at the door.

Fan Night, 7:30 to 10 p.m., will include entertainment, food and refreshments.

Benning shooters teach at Olympic Masters Camp

USAMU Public Affairs Office

U.S. biathlon team shooting coach Troy Baker, of the U.S. Army Marksmanship, is coaching 14 athletes at the Olympic Training Center's Rifle Masters Camp this week.

Baker and 30-year veteran shooter and Dick Doney of Pullman, Wash., will lead a training program that includes an average of eight hours a day on the Olympic Shooting Center's rifle range and in classes.

"We want to see them develop technically sound positions and to learn about all aspects of shooting — mental, physical and analytical," said Baker.

Baker, a member of the U.S. Shooting Team, joined rifle shooters Bob Foth and James Meredith to set a team world record.

Additionally, U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit shooter and 1988 Olympic silver medalist, Erich Buljung, has led his own brand of basic training at the Olympic Training Center's Pistol Masters Camp this week.

"We worked on the basic elements — stance, position, grip, sight alignment and trigger control," said Buljung. "They (the shooters) all basically knew what they needed before they came here.

"Our goal is to make them (the shooters) more aware of what they're doing and to refine their fundamentals," Buljung said.

Buljung was joined by former Air Force shooter Gail Liberty of San Antonio, Texas, in leading a training program. The program included an average of seven hours a day on the Olympic Shooting Center's pistol range.

The camp also included lectures on nutrition, weight-training and sport psychology by OTC staff.

Benning wrestlers hold their own at meet

By John Robinson
Bayonet staff writer

Fort Benning's scrappy wrestlers held their last meet, a dual matchup with Fort Bragg, N.C., Dec. 1, at Fort Benning's Briant Wells Gym.

The match, although technically won by Fort Benning 6-5, was, in actuality, a tie since one match was wrestled purely for exhibition. Matches like this often take place during the course of a dual meet and count only toward overall team standings.

Not to be sold short, the team from Fort Bragg has a past history of being a formidable opponent.

"They have a strong team and are two-time defending FORSCOM champions," said Derrick Waldroup, head coach of the Benning squad.

Richard Kichman, assistant coach of Bragg's entourage, admitted he had made the trip without two of their normal starters. He said "They would have made the difference."

Nevertheless, it was all in preparation for the big game.

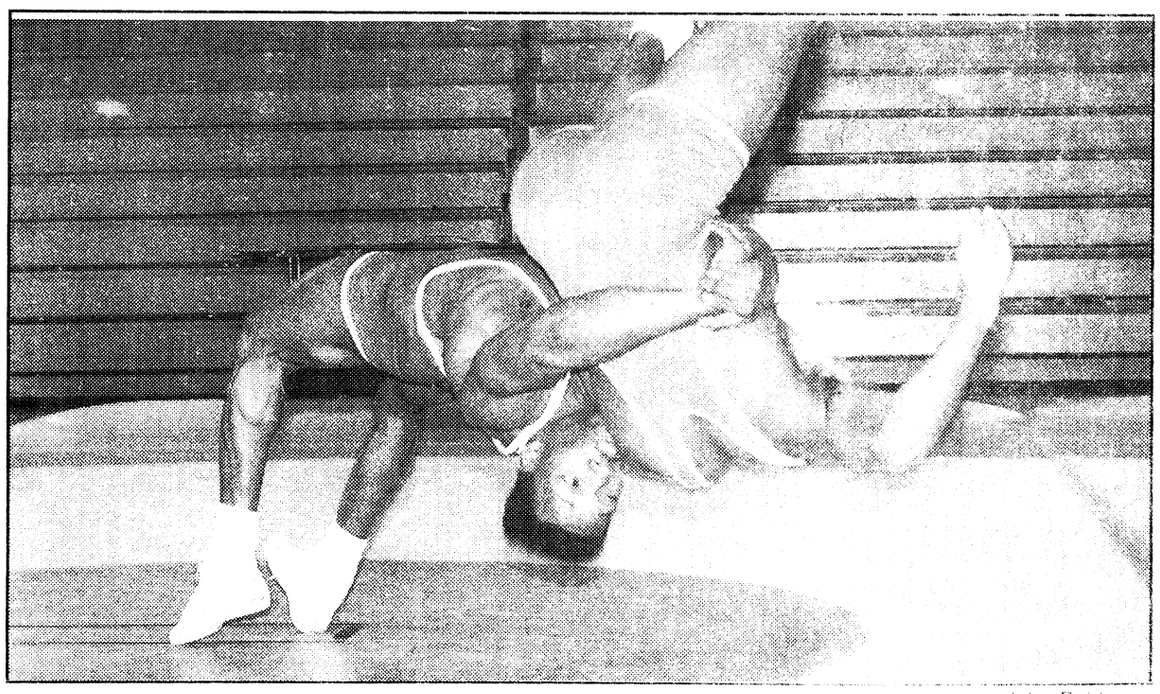
Fort Benning's grapplers are scheduled to leave Saturday for Fort Hood, Texas, for this year's FORSCOM championships.

From Dec. 11 through Dec. 15, the annual event will provide Waldroup's young charges with the opportunity to "prove we're the best soldiers in the U.S. Army and Fort Benning," he said.

Now working out three times a day, the 11-man traveling squad is "pushing it to the limit," according to Waldroup. The squad been on special duty status since Nov. 27 to better facilitate their training schedule.

What stands in the way between a good showing and a great showing is the fact that many other Army teams have been on special duty status for at least three months, according to Waldroup.

"That kind of preparation really shows on the mat," Waldroup said. "Our guys have a lot of heart, though. I think we're gonna surprise a lot of people."



Bragg's team, described by Waldroup as "solid," will also attend the FORSCOM event.

"We're looking for a repeat. There's no doubt about it," said Bragg's Kichman.

Some indication of just that may have been seen during the dual meet between the two powers.

Chancey Watson, a 1988 All-Army wrestler from Fort Bragg, captured the gold in the highly-competitive, 180-pound weight class over Benning's Clifton Woods, an All-Army wrestler from this past year.

Undaunted by the loss, Woods confided, "I know we'll (Fort Benning team) be ready for FORSCOM."

All Army wrestlers, Chancey Watson and Clifton Woods, battle it out on the mat.

Christians celebrate Advent

By Chap. Douglas McSwain
USAIC Chaplain's Office

Last Sunday was the beginning of Advent.

Advent candles were lit during Christian services around the world.

Although most people have heard of Advent, many do not know the significance of the time or the traditional lighting of the candles.

The word Advent means coming. When the candles on the Advent wreath are lit, it should remind us of the coming of our Lord.

At Christmas, we will celebrate not only his coming 2,000 years ago, but we will celebrate his continued coming into our lives and hearts today.

Evergreen branches encircle four candles. The evergreen wreath symbolizes everlasting life found in Christ. Because the green branches come from nature when it is in winter sleep, the evergreen testifies to the continuation of life. The branches are bent to form a circle which symbolizes life without end.

Flames from the candles symbolize that God's Son is the light of the world. A violet candle reminds us of our need to repent and prepare for the coming of Christ.

A Rose candle stands for the joy Christ brings to us in His Advent. A white candle is the Christ candle, lit on Christmas morning. It is the reminder that Jesus continues to come each day, bringing the light of God into a darkened world.

As we prepare to celebrate the birth of Jesus Christ, we may remember that His coming was destined to bring peace to our lives.

We search for fulfillment in life and often come away frustrated and unsatisfied. We deceive ourselves into thinking happiness consists of acquiring possessions.

Advent calls us back to the realization that our fulfillment and peace arefound only in Christ.

We could thank the Lord for the fulfillment He brings to our lives with his Son, and open the door of our hearts to him and invite him in.

Advent — time of customs, traditions celebrating coming of Jesus Christ

USAIC Chaplain's Office

Advent is a time of customs, traditions and prayers centered on the celebration of the coming of Christ.

One of the most well known customs for the season is an old German practice of the Advent wreath.

Although it has no direct liturgical significance, the wreath of evergreens and glowing candles is rich in symbolism and tradition.

The advent wreath has a long history. It is thought that the first Advent wreaths were fashioned in the form of the sun, the symbol of God.

Some believe the idea of the wreath originated in Scandinavia. There men lighted candles on a wheel and prayed to the god of light that he would turn the wheel of the earth's orbit to the sun to lengthen the short days of the year.

Since Advent sets a mood of waiting in the dark, and since Christ was born on the day when the light begins to gain over the darkness, it turned out to be an appropriate custom.

The evergreen tree was used as a symbol of Christmas and Advent because of a mystic connection with God.

He said, "I am like the green fir tree, and from me thy fruit is formed."

The wood from the tree was used for the cradle, and each branch of the tree has the shape of the cross.

Advent wreaths were hung by violet ribbons from the ceiling. The candles were lighted and prayers were said during the weeks of Advent.

The violet ribbons signified the death of grace in souls before the Redemption.

When the final candle was lit, the violet ribbons were changed to white or red to signify the joy of Christmas.

Columbus Symphony to feature dual artists

Columbus Symphony Orchestra

The Columbus Symphony Orchestra will present the second concert of the 1989-90 Masterpiece Series at 8 p.m., Saturday, at the Three Arts Theatre.

Patricio Cobos, CSO's assistant conductor and concertmaster, will conduct.

The concert is sponsored by The Jordan Company of Columbus.

Guest soloists are violinist Sergiu Schwartz and cellist Claudio Jaffe who will perform Brahms' Double Concerto for violin and cello with the orchestra.

Other selections are Serenade for Strings in E Minor by Edward Elgar and Felix Mendelssohn's Symphony No. 3 in A Minor ("Scotch").

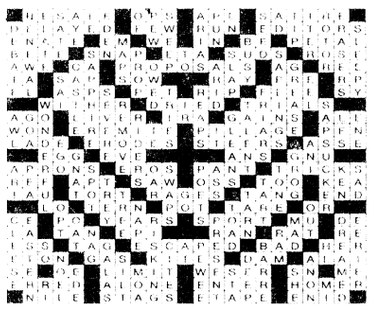
Both soloists are of international renown.

Schwartz, a native of Israel, is a graduate of the Rubin Academy of Music in Tel-Aviv and in 1980 was awarded a scholarship to the Juilliard School of Music where he studied with Dorothy Delay and Felix Galimir.

Brazilian-born Jaffe began studying cello at 7 years old.

After training in his native country, he was invited to the United States to study cello on a special scholarship.

Prior to the performance, conductor Cobos will give a lecture on the music ("Know the Score") at 7 p.m. in the Three Arts auditorium. The lecture is free to all CSO ticket holders.



Tickets are on sale at the symphony office at 1445 Second Avenue until the day of the performance when they go on sale at the theatre.

All seats are reserved, and the cost is $10 for adults and $3 for students. For more information, call 323-5059.

POST BRIEFS

Christmas tree lighting today

Maj. Gen. Michael F. Spigelmire, post commanding general, officially kicks off the holiday season here by lighting the 30-foot, Christmas tree today at 6 p.m. on the Field of Four Chaplains.

The 283rd Army Band will present a concert of Christmas music at 5:30 p.m.

The band will accompany Christmas carolers, after the invocation by the USAIC staff chaplain, and scripture readings by unit chaplains.

The children from the Catholic CCD will reenact the Christmas Nativity.

Refreshments will be served on the annex patio of the Infantry Center Chapel after the tree-lighting ceremony.

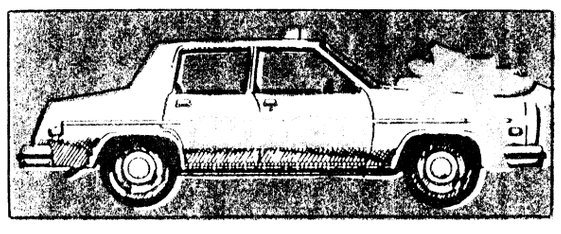
Finally, Santa will arrive in a fire truck, with gifts for the children.

Baby-sitting will be provided in the Infantry Center Chapel annex.

The Fort Benning community is invited.

ITC Band presents concert

Get into the "Christmas Spirit" with the 283rd Army Infantry Center Band concert Sunday at 3 p.m. in Marshall Auditorium, Building 4.



Chief Warrant Officer Larry G. Hyatt will conduct the 50-member ensemble in a performance of contemporary and traditional yuletide music.

Russian Christmas music by composer, Alfred Reed, and vocalists from the band are highlights of the program.

More than 800 performances are logged by the Infantry Center Band each year, from furnishing a bugler for a military funeral to performing in parades and concerts.

Various members of the 283rd also make up other musical groups, including a jazz combo, top 40 contemporary and Dixieland bands.

Soldiers and their families are invited.

Safety Cab offers alternative to driving drunk

Soldiers who find they have had too much to drink, at a restaurant or bar or while attending a party, during the holidays, can call Safety Cab for a free ride home.

Starting today and ending Jan. 2, soldiers can call 576-9800 from 7 p.m. to 3 a.m. and ask for the service.

With Safety Cab as an alternative, there is no need to drive under the influence of alcohol.

Michelle Le Roy Harrison

Accident

During a heavy rain, two HHC, 1st Bn., 18th Inf., soldiers were injured when the five-ton cargo truck in which they were riding hydroplaned and flipped on its top. According the Military Police operations sergeant, Master Sgt. Brian Shaughnessy the driver was cited for driving too fast for road conditions. The Fort Benning safety manager, Regis Beighley, said speed limits are designed for the best road conditions and when road conditions deteriorate, drivers should reduce the vehicle's speed. The accident is still under investigation.

Operation Holiday activities to get under way Wednesday

By Scott Garrigus
Bayonet staff writer

The 10th annual "Operation Holiday" kicks off with a ceremony at the Government Center Wednesday.

"Operation Holiday" is a program designed for single soldiers and geographic bachelors who remain at Fort Benning during the holidays. "Operation Holiday" activities will continue through Jan. 2.

A trip to the Omni in Atlanta to see the Hawks play the Chicago Bulls is one of "Operation Holiday's" highlights.

Other sporting events include, the Blue/Gray bowl game, the Atlanta Falcons vs. the Detroit Lions at Fulton County Stadium and a post bowling tournament.

Tours of local businesses include, Pratt and Whitney, Dolly Madison, the Columbus Ledger-Enquirer and Sunshine Bakery.

Trips to the Little White House, Confederate Naval Museum and Callaway Gardens are also planned.

Overnight stays at local hotels and television appearances on Channel 54 and the Good Day Show will be offered.

The uniform for all events/tours will be Class B with black sweater or jacket. Class As may also be worn.

All participants will ride military transportation to from the event. Tickets for each event will be given out when boarding the bus.

This service is sponsored by Ray M. Wright inc.; Culpepper Vending; Pratt and Whitney; United Oil Corporation; Southside Realty; Sprouse, Tucker and Ford; Retired Officers Association; Trust Company Bank and Georgia Power Company.

The Chattahoochee Valley-Fort Benning chapter of the Association of the U.S. Army is the organizer of all events.

It gives citizens and local businesses a chance to express appreciation to soldiers for their contributions to the nation.

Millions saved earns another million

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

"More Army for your Dollar," is a reality here as Fort Benning gained another $1 million through Project Spirit.

The people who assisted in gaining $1 million were honored in a luncheon at the Officers' Club last week.

Points of contact from each of the units and their commanders gathered with guests of honor, Fort Benning Commander Maj. Gen. Michael F. Spigelmire and Congressman Richard Ray for the luncheon.

Spigelmire awarded the Army Communities of Excellence Award for the best U-Do-It project in the Training and Doctrine Command to Post Chaplain (Col.) Roy N. Mathis.

The spotlight was then placed on the people who made Project Spirit successful.

"I really would like to thank all the civilians who made this program what it is today," Spigelmire said. "You lend a continuity that is important to any facility."

Spigelmire said he realizes a lot of hard work and sacrifice went into making the program work.

An example of that, he said, is the $234.4 million savings that led to winning the $1 million award last year.

"We know what it takes to win," he said, "and we have the experience to be successful next year."

Awards were made in the following categories:

Personal and Special Staff Category

First place: Most Actions Submitted — Chaplain's Office

Largest Dollar Savings — Equal Employment Opportunity Office

Second place: Most Actions Submitted — Secretary General Staff Office

Largest Dollar Savings — Staff Judge Advocate's Office

Command and Major Unit Category

First place: U.S. Army Infantry Training Center

Second place: U.S. Army Infantry School

Directorate Staff Category

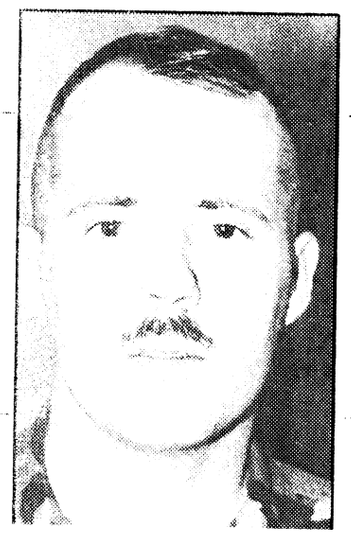
First place: Directorate of Engineering and Housing

Second place: Directorate of Logistics

Outstanding Points of Contact

Personal and Special Staff — Mary Hewson, Equal Opportunity Office



Command and Major Unit — Susan Piland

Directorate Staff — Jeanette Zuback

The Installation "Spirit of the Year" Award was presented to Charles Orr, Directorate of Engineering and Housing.

OPINION

VARIOUS VOICES: What did you gain from attending the Infantry Instructor Conference?

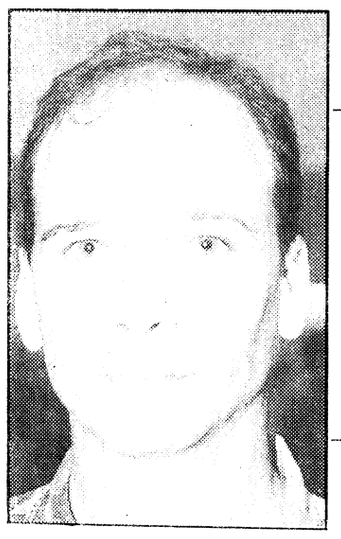
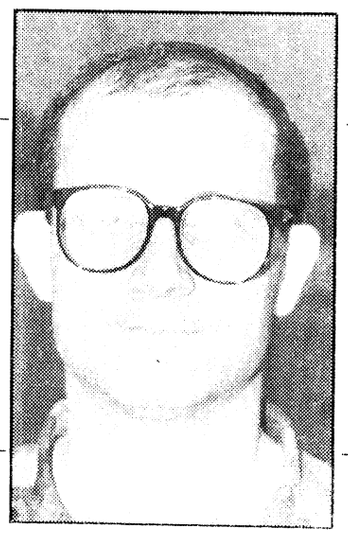
Staff Sgt. Russell Godwin, Signal Leadership Dept., Fort Gordon, Ga. — "I learned new things on the primary order of instruction and what's been deleted. I also observed instructors here and learned new techniques in teaching."



Master Sgt. Steve Kaylor, Signal Leadership Dept., Fort Gordon, Ga. — "I learned new things about training and doctrine. I also learned about the latest weapons and how they fit into the overall picture."



Maj. Joseph Dubyel, West Point, N.Y. — "I was updated on training and doctrine, which will enable me to train soldiers with the latest techniques."

Maj. Dennis Teitge, Trinity University, San Antonio, Texas — "Unbelievable amounts of information were put out at this conference. I learned more here than I could have any other place."

Sgt. 1st Class Gary Haner, Readiness Group Steward, Newburg, N.Y. — "I've gained information that I can use to train National Guard Troops. Usually, it takes a long time to get this information, but I got it all at the conference."

Capt. Michael Giangregorio, Readiness Group, Fort Devons, Md. — "I learned what's happening now, which is exactly what I was after."

Bah humbug

Snively warns of holiday doldrums

By Clyde Snively
USAIC Public Affairs Office

At the risk of doing two columns dealing with Christmas, I thought I'd get this one out early to explain some of my idiosyncrasies so no one will be caught short.

In other words, it's directed at my fellow Bayonet workers who seem to think everyone should be of good cheer this time of year.

The rest of you may want to turn the page so you won't pick up any of my "bah, humbugisms."

Okay, fellow workers, here it is.

First, let me get into the Christmas mood in my own way in my own sweet time (say around 11 p.m., Dec. 24).

In other words, stop coming by my desk with decorations to dangle from my in-box or my computer screen.

So help me, if you try to hang that musical Christmas card on the door again, I'll tear down the door.

There's nothing worse than hearing the same off-key tune six million times a day, unless it's some joker trying to hum along with it.

Don't send me Christmas cards either. I'll wish you a Merry Christmas sometime between now and Dec. 25.

I'll save myself the cost of the card and price of the stamp, so please do the same.

By the way, the distribution center is not the way to get out your Christmas cards. I think there's a regulation against it.

If you guys want to decorate a tree in the office or hang wreaths and stuff from the door, that's all right with me.

Just don't come to me for help when it's time to take it down.

Having to supervise Emma, Bubba and Clydette at home is enough to give me hives, so don't complicate matters by seeking my help at work.

Oh yes, please have all your decorations down by the time I walk in on the morning of Jan. 2.

I'll already be sulking over my team losing its bowl game, so I won't need wilted decorations to add to my doldrums.

Plus, having had to walk past offices that have had their decorations up since Thanksgiving is getting to me.

The holiday spirit kinda fizzles out like stale ginger-ale after looking at the same fake trees and wreaths for 32 straight days.

Yes, I will participate in the office Christmas party if it's during duty hours. I'll bring a bag of chips and some cheese dip. I'll even help clean up so we can be out of here by 5 p.m., but NOTHING you do will entice me to sing carols, although that would be a good way to wreak revenge on y'all.

Another thing, don't invite me to your home Christmas parties. I won't invite you to mine, so please return the favor.

I don't go out at night this time of year because it means crossing Macon Road and because other people coming and going to Christmas parties will be out there.

I don't think I'd be safe in an M-1 tank from 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor, let alone in my hupmobile.

Right now, I'm trying to screw up my courage for my annual mad dash to some store where I think I can buy everyone on my list a present in less than 30 minutes on Dec. 24.

Some cities have stores that remain open 24 hours a day during the Christmas buying frenzy.

I've found that 5 a.m. is a good time to hit them. About all you have to contend with at that hour are a few sleepy clerks.

Maybe our PX or a major discount store will try it around here. I'll wait and see.

I know, fellow staffers. I know I have no Christmas spirit. Not quite true.

I'm always ready to eat any baked goodies you might bring in. I need to boost my cholesterol level.

DEAR EDITOR

I found the cartoon on A-2 in the Nov. 22 issue, "Turkey Concentration Camp," offensive and extremely insensitive.

I'm sure it was not your intent to offend. However, you failed in your responsibility as an editor by allowing that kind of garbage to print.

Members of my family were interned in concentration camps by the Germans and Japanese during World War II.

I can not invision any context where the words "concentration camp" can be viewed as humorous. I can only imagine how offended your Jewish or Japanese-American readers were.

Bayonet to be a publication of great quality. It serves the Fort Benning community well.

This cartoon is certainly an exception.

Eric T. Grasman
Capt., Armor
Commanding

Dear Capt. Grasman,

In our endeavors to deliver a newspaper, we don't always hit the nail on the head. This is one such case.

Thank you for bringing to my attention what hundreds of others may have felt when they saw that cartoon.

My sincerest apologies. I'll try to be more thoughtful in the future.

Sharon Reynolds

Headline misleading; Santa isn't airborne

In last week's issue of The Bayonet, a headline read that Santa parachuted into a unit Christmas party. The article and headline led readers to believe the parachutist was dressed as Santa. In fact, Army Regulation 360-61 states "Do not use Army aviation assets to transport persons costumed as Santa Claus . . . whether the person is military or civilian, on or off a military installation."

CB&T salutes NCOs

The Fort Benning Branch of CB&T shows its support of the Army's theme, "Year of the NCO."

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

The Fort Benning Branch of the Columbus Bank and Trust saluted noncommissioned officers last week to show appreciation and support the Army's theme "Year of the NCO."

A display was set up at the bank, showing some of the history of the NCO, courtesy of Dick Grube, The Infantry Museum.

According to James K. Smith, vice president of Military Banking, the bank normally has a customer appreciation week, but he said they wanted to do something for NCOs.

"We wanted to recognize NCOs for the same reason the Army did," he said. "They are the backbone of the Army, and we think they are important."

Smith said the program has been very successful.

"CB&T is happy to do this for NCOs. We feel fortunate to be a part of the community," he said.

"We salute the NCOs for the important role they play in the community."

Infantry instructors gather here for up-to-date info

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

Subjects ranging from air/land battle to nuclear, biological and chemical training were covered at the Infantry Instructor Update Conference in Building 4 last week.

Infantrymen from bases all over the world attended the three-day conference.

Included were Reserve Officer Training Instructors as well as troops from other branches of the Armed Forces, according to Capt. Wendell Shelton, Combined Arms and Tactics Division, U.S. Army Infantry School.

Shelton was the officer in charge of setting up the conference.

He said the conference is important to infantry instructors because this is one of the only avenues they have to gather up-to-date information on instructing troops.

"The attendees were able to see how small-group training works," Shelton said.

"This is important because the small-group instruction here has been used as an Army-wide model."

The tour of the Collins Training Center was beneficial to the attendees of the conference, according to Shelton.

"Some of these instructors have never seen a Bradley up close," Shelton said. "The tour of the center gives them a chance to see the Bradley and the training equipment that goes with it."

During the conference, Shelton said the attendees reviewed and ordered training publications that will benefit them most in the long run.

"The best thing for them was finding out what's new in doctrine and getting the latest information on all phases of infantry instruction," he said. "They wouldn't be able to get this anywhere else."

Follow these safety tips if stranded in cold

National Safety Council

If you become marooned in your car during a winter storm, you'll be safer if you stay inside the car, according to safety officials.

The National Safety Council suggests these precautions while waiting for help:

- Keep the car's interior warm by running the heater a few minutes each hour (every half-hour in severe cold).
- Be sure to clear an area around the exhaust pipe and outside heater vents to reduce the risk of carbon monoxide poisoning.
- Keep a window cracked open so freezing air and wet snow will not seal windows shut.
- Signal for help by using flares, a flashlight or a bright piece of cloth tied around the car's antenna.

ASK THE JUDGE

By Deborah B. Montgomery
Staff Judge Advocate's Office

Q. I decided to build a screened porch on my home and hired a contractor to do the work for me.

He did a good job, and I paid him in full.

Recently, I received a letter from an attorney stating that a "materialman's lien" was placed on my home.

The letter explained that the contractor had failed to pay the lumber company for the supplies used in building the porch and that the law allowed the lumber company to collect from me.

Is this really a law? How will this "lien" affect my property?

A. Yes, there really is a law that provides protection for persons supplying materials, when contractors or subcontractors fail to pay for the materials.

When a contractor uses materials furnished by a supplier to make repairs on a home builder or other property, he is obligated to pay the supplier.

If he doesn't pay the supplier, and leaves the state, files bankruptcy or, for any reason, a final judgment cannot be rendered against him for the value of the material, the supplier can look to the homeowner for payment.

It makes no difference that you have paid the contractor in full.

As a property owner, there are ways to protect yourself.

One way is to obtain from the contractor an affidavit essentially stating that he has paid in full or has satisfied all obligations for materials obtained and equipment furnished.

If there is a lien on the property, it will be difficult but not impossible to sell the home.

The lien on the property will generally be released if a bond is posted. In some cases, the bond must be double the amount of the claim.

The materialman's lien is not limited to materials that have been provided. It is also applicable to labor or services provided.

Additionally, the persons furnishing material for the improvement of real estate are not the only persons entitled to place a lien against the property.

If you are unsure as to whether you have adequately protected yourself or that the person who filed the lien has a right to do so, contact the legal assistance office. The telephone numbers are 545-3281/3282.

House plants may be answer to indoor pollution

By Tina Cook
Army Reporter

Airborne synthetic particles, cigarette smoke, ozone, formaldehyde, benzene and carbon monoxide are just a few of the components that make up the air in buildings, and, according to The National Aeronautics and Space Administration, household plants virtually absorb these pollutants.

NASA's documented studies show that common office and house plants, such as the philodendron, spider plant and golden pathos, can reduce indoor pollutant levels in sealed plexiglass compartments by 80 percent in a 24-hour period. Four to five potted plants can purify a 12 by 12 foot room.

The National Aeronautics and Space Administration and the Associated Landscape Contractors of America jointly funded a two-year study to measure the abilities of certain plants to remove or reduce dangerous indoor pollutants.

NASA's interest stemmed from problems they encounter with the air quality within a sealed spacecraft.

Although filtration is the most popular means of combating indoor pollution these systems, at best, trap the largest particles, and do little to remove the harmful gases.

NASA discovered that plants could function as part of the biological life-support system.

Common office and house plants absorb dangerous gases from the air in concentrations that by law the same substances can be applied to any building's indoor air pollution.

With the construction of energy efficient office buildings, there has been a concerted effort to seal windows and use the air present in buildings and recirculate it through the heating, ventilation and air conditioning system.

Bringing in fresh air from outside requires energy to reheat or recool it, so outdoor ventilation is kept at a minimum.

The problem with this type of construction is the air pollutant levels build and may have an adverse effect on the people working there.

Pollutants may trigger allergic reactions and contribute to a high absentee rate and chronic illnesses.

This is usually the result of continuously inhaling the recirculating, trapped organic and nonorganic particles and toxic gases.

Plants are a solution to cleaning up the polluted indoor air.

The process that enables plants to live is called photosynthesis. This process requires gaseous compounds to be constantly exchanged between the plant's leaves and the air.

Most of us are familiar with the exchange of carbon dioxide into water vapor and oxygen. However, research shows that plants' leaves take in many other gaseous compounds, as well. The root system also removes pollutants.

Formaldehyde is one of the most abundant and toxic indoor pollutants.

Formaldehyde is found in wall panels, new carpeting, grocery bags, waxed paper, facial tissue, paper towels and certain types of foam insulation.

Household cleaning products, fire retardants and permanent-press clothing all contain formaldehyde.

It is also a compound in tobacco smoke, natural gas and kerosene.

Plants not only improve the looks of a home or office, they also improve the quality of air.

For more information on this or any energy-related subject, call 545-4652 or 545-SWAT.

Crime Stoppers needs your help in search for suspects

Columbus Police Department

Columbus Crime Stoppers and the Columbus Police Department are looking for the unknown white woman and black woman who were involved in a series of theft by deception incidents involving elderly white women in the Columbus area.

A white woman and black woman have teamed up and are running a "pigeon drop scheme" on elderly white women in the Columbus area.

In the scheme, one of the suspects approaching an elderly white woman. She says she has found a wallet or bag and asks the victim if it belongs to her.

After the victim says it doesn't belong to her, the second suspect walks up.

The wallet or bag will be opened, and it will contain a large amount of money.

One of the suspects will suggest they keep the money and split it among themselves.

The suspects tell the victim they must not spend any of the money for some time so as not to draw attention to themselves.

Then they ask the victim to prove she has ample money of her own so they will feel confident she won't spend her newfound money.

The suspects persuade the victim to go to her bank, withdraw money and bring it to them as proof.

After the money is withdrawn and shown to the two suspects, it is either switched with fake money or paper while the victim's further attention diverted by one of the suspects or she is talked into giving the money to one of the suspects who says she will invest it for her.

In some cases, the suspects have even driven the victims to the bank and helped with the withdrawal.

The reported cases have occured at either Columbus Square Mall or Peachtree Mall.

The suspects are described as:

- White female, 30 to 40 years old, slender built with short brownish-blond hair, about 5 feet 6 inches tall, about 110 pounds.
- Black female, 20 to 30 years old, light skinned, stocky built, short hair with the top of her hair having a reddish-blond tint, about 150 pounds.

The suspects are reported to be nicely dressed and have good manners.

Anyone with information concerning any of these cases should call Columbus Crime Stoppers at 571-5858.

If your information leads to the arrest and indictment of these persons, you could receive up to a $1,000 reward.

Columbus Crime Stoppers also pays for information on other criminal activities.

The Crime Stoppers phone lines are open from 10 a.m. to 10 p.m. Monday through Friday.

Crime Stoppers serves the Columbus, Fort Benning, Phenix City and Russell County areas.

Decorating tips for a safe holiday

Protection and Prevention

Christmas trees

The traditional Evergreen Christmas tree is a fire hazard say Fire Protection and Prevention officials.

When selecting a tree, ensure that it has springy branches and green needles.

A good way to test the freshness of a tree is to tap it on the ground to be sure only a few needles fall out.

Be sure to keep the butt of the tree immersed in water. This will slow the drying out process.

When using an artificial tree, make sure that it has been treated with a fire retardant substance.

If the tree is made of metal, do not use electric lights. A loose connection could cause an electrical shock.

Under no circumstances should lit candles be placed on a Christmas tree of any type.

Decorations

Before using electric lights, check each string to ensure that there are no loose or broken sockets or exposed wiring.

Wiring that shows signs of wearing or cracking should be discarded.

When purchasing Christmas lights, look for the Underwriters Laboratory label on the package.

When purchasing lights to decorate the exterior of the house, be sure they are designed for that purpose.

Unplug the inside and outside lights before leaving the house or retiring for the evening.

When using decorative Christmas candles, be sure they have been placed away from trees, wreaths, packages, curtains and other possible sources of ignition.

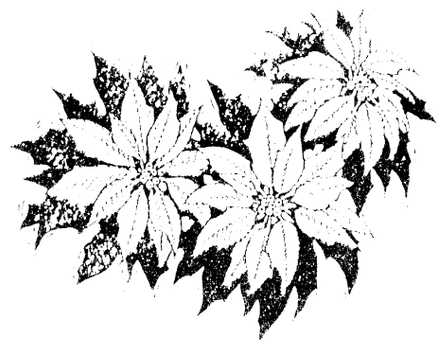
Dangerous plants

Keep in mind that many of the traditional Christmas plants are extremely poisonous.

Young children may not be aware that poinsettia leaves, mistletoe berries and holly berries are poisonous and may find them very temping.

Keep these plants out of reach of curious fingers and mouths.

Toys



When selecting toys for children, choose toys that are appropriate for their ages and abilities.

For younger children, avoid toys with sharp edges or parts that could be pulled off and swallowed. Avoid toys that shoot projectiles.

When choosing an electrical toy, look for the Underwriters label.

Electrically heated toys, such as stoves, wood-burning tools and plastic molding toys get just as hot as many electric stove burners. Parents should supervise closely the use of all such toys.

Before permitting unsupervised use of a bike, ensure that the child can operate it skillfully, and will observe regulations and precautions.

Tuskegee offers unique opportunity for medical soldiers to go into nursing

By Beverly A. Grant
Department of the Army

Active duty enlisted medical soldiers have a unique opportunity to earn a bachelor's degree in nursing and a commission as a 2nd lieutenant in the Army Nurse Corps.

Tuskegee University's Division of Nursing is a four-year program that leads to a Bachelor of Science degree in nursing.

Licensed Practical Nurses, hospital and field medics, as well as other medical specialists who meet program requirements are being sought for this program.

Tuskegee's nursing curriculum consists of the following basic prerequisites: chemistry, anatomy and physiology.

Clinics, which offer hands-on experience in patient care, are available in Montgomery, Ala., Fort Benning, Ga., Auburn, Ala., and Tuskegee's Veteran's Administration Medical Center.

During the junior year, students must spend one semester in Atlanta, Ga., for clinical experience in one of the city's largest public hospitals, Grady Memorial.

Student's applying as freshman in the division of nursing must have a minimum Scholastic Achievement Test Score of 700 or an ACT score of 15 (applicants with 650 to 699 may be considered on an individual basis).

Additionally, individuals must posses a high school grade point average of 2.5 or above on a 4.0 scale, submit recommendations from school officials and must have taken high school courses in the general sciences such as biology and chemistry.

Nurses already in practice are required to submit a copy of their most recent transcript from each college, university, technical or vocational school attended and a copy of their license.

The Tuskegee Army ROTC program offers two-, three- and four-year nursing scholarships.

The scholarships pay tuition, laboratory fees, a fixed fee for textbooks, (currently $180 per semester), other required expenses and a $100 monthly stipend.

In some instances, if the cadet meets certain requirements Tuskegee University will pay for their room and board.

AROTC scholarship applicants must also undergo a personal interview, pass a physical aptitude examination and score 850 on the SAT and 17 on the ACT.

Upon receiving the AROTC scholarship, these students are required to attend Military Science courses that begin at basic level and lead up the advanced program courses, (MSIII) and MSIV), which usually correspond to the student's junior and senior years.

Scholarship cadets must attend physical training, and, during the Military Science II year, cadets become involved in field training that prepares them for Summer Advanced Camp.

Alert takes 197th company to Fort Bragg

By Willie Hay
197th Infantry Brigade

A day in November started earlier than usual for the soldiers of the 197th Infantry Brigade when they received a 4 a.m. wake-up call.

Instead of Monday morning physical training, they were told to report for duty with their field gear and await further instructions.

Although the entire brigade responded to the alert — called by the XVIII Airborne Corps, 197th's parent unit — the only unit to receive move-out orders was Company B, 1st Battalion, 18th Infantry.

The company was tasked to provide the bulk of a "mechanized company team" for an emergency deployment readiness exercise at Fort Bragg, N.C.

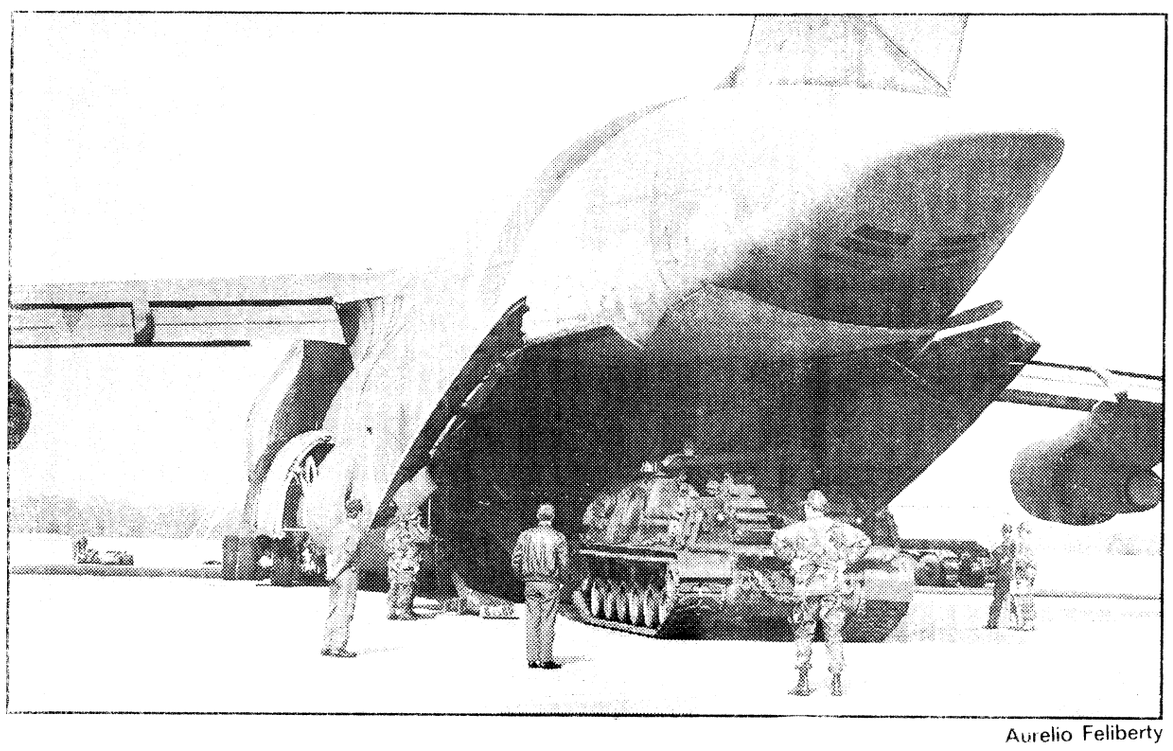
"The team concept affords the ability to multiply your combat power," said Capt. Stefan J. Banach, commander of Co. B and "Team Bravo" for the EDRE.

"Combining mechanized infantry and armor elements, not only enables the infantry to win against an armored force but also improves tank survivability because the infantry is protecting its flanks," Banach said.

According to Banach, 70 soldiers from his company deployed to Fort Bragg, along with four M-1 tank crews from Company C, 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor, and support teams consisting of fire support, air defense, maintenance and medical personnel.

"We rail-loaded all of our company vehicles and traveled by bus to Warner Robins Air Force Base, some 100 miles northeast of Fort Benning," he said.

"There, we performed a second railhead operation and air-loaded M-1 tanks and armored personnel carriers aboard a C-5 for the flight to Fort Bragg."



At Fort Bragg, Team Bravo down-loaded its equipment, performed another tactical movement, and conducted a company/team live fire with four M-1 tank crews and two mechanized platoons.

Banach called the EDRE a success, praising the soldiers for their performance throughout the deployment.

"It was undoubtedly the smoothest exercise I've ever seen, and the soldiers maintained a high level of intensity and commitment from start to finish," he said.

"Then, as soon as we came back from the EDRE, we turned around the very next day and went to the field here for three days of platoon live-fire exercises," Banach said.

"What we've just had is two weeks of intense, 'real world' deployment training, highlighted by a live fire at Bragg, redeployment and another live fire here," Banach said. "I couldn't be more proud of my guys."

4/41st soldiers said to be extraordinary

By Willie Hay
197th Infantry Brigade

"If you're not out making it happen on the ground in infantry land, then it ain't happening."

Those were the words of Brig. Gen. John C. Ellerson, assistant commandant of the U.S. Army Field Artillery School, Fort Still, Okla., to the "Redlegs" of 4th Battalion, 41st Field Artillery, during his recent visit to Fort Benning.

The occasion was an awards ceremony for members of the 197th Infantry Brigade field artillery battalion's top fire support teams.

According to Lt. Col. William F. Engel, battalion commander, the unit's 16 fire support teams were evaluated last month as the last in a series of annual battalion standardized tests.

"What we did was put together an evaluation for the fire support team members, just like we do for the howitzer sections and the fire teams," Engel explained.

"These guys demonstrated their excellence with every piece of equipment they have on hand," Engel continued. "They proved they are gunslingers extraordinaire."

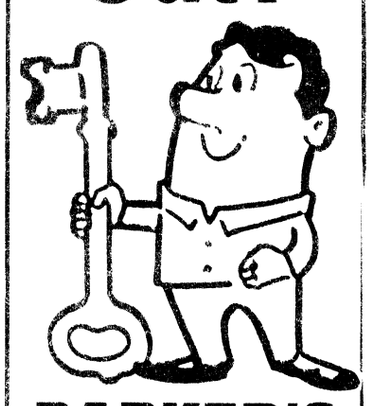
Two soldiers on the top-rated fire support team, Spec. Elvin N. Lee and Spec. Thaddeus V. Fussell, received Army Achievement medals for their performances during the evaluation.

Additionally, Staff Sgt. David Rivera, leader of the second-place team, received an Army Achievement Medal. His crew members, Spec. Donald L. Baker, Spec. John E. Russ and Pvt. Romaldus Hearn Jr. were awarded battalion certificates of achievement.

Ellerson presented battalion certificates of achievement to Staff Sgt. Michael R. Montgomery, the battalion's Nuclear, Biological and Chemical noncommissioned officer; and Spec. Edward M. Lopez, radio repair evaluator.

"Excellence doesn't just happen," Ellerson said. "It takes a lot of work.

"Competition is tough," he continued. "We've got a lot of great soldiers and lot of great teams. To show up in front really says a lot for you.



Ellerson declared "You're doing a tremendous job. Drive on!"

IOBC's Co. C tackles the dragon, M-60

By Laurence Hopper
Infantry Officer Basic Course

Charlie Company, 2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, Infantry Officer Basic Course, trained on both the Dragon and the M-60, from Nov. 6 through 9.

The Company divided into two sections. Each section spent two days on each weapon system.

On the first day, the students learned to prepare the Dragon for firing. The next day the students qualified with the Dragon by shooting at a moving target.

"I felt that the M-47 Dragon class was the most interesting and informative of all the classes we have had in IOBC so far," said 2nd Lt. Robert Hackett.

On the third day, section two went on a seven-mile road march through cold and heavy rain to the M-60 range. The lieutenants arrived soaked, with teeth chattering and hands shaking. "It was the most brutal weather of the cycle so far, but we all fought off the cold and mastered the M-60 fundamentals," said 2nd Lt. Ben Tuck.

The students qualified on the M-60 range before returning home. "The M-60 ranges gave us the information and knowledge necessary to employ the weapon in a combat situation," said 2nd Lt. Valery Keavany.

The week's training provided confidence and competence in both weapons systems.

Infantry officers learn basics of leading

By George F. Allers Jr.
Infantry Officers Basic Course

Like a silent and deadly snake, the squad moved to within striking distance.

They had stalked their prey carefully over six miles of grueling terrain, their backs loaded with everything, including the kitchen sink.

They had trained hard, going over the operation to come until it was engraved in their minds.

They would have just one shot. It was time to see if the hard work would pay off.

This describes the scenario encountered by Company C, Infantry Officers Basic Course 1-90 the week of Nov. 20 and Nov. 27.

The training was conducted in a manner that would enable the future platoon leaders to get a clear and concise picture of the function of each squad member.

Each platoon was broken down into four squads, which were subsequently divided into two fire teams.

During the first day, the platoon was instructed by their respective cadre in individual movement techniques, Cover and Concealment, Negotiating Obstacles and Squad Level Movement to Contact Techniques.

On the second day, the squads were given a mission. The squad leader took advantage of all of the squad's newly-acquired talents.

2nd Lt. Derek Bradley, squad leader in charge of 4th Squad, 1st Platoon, assembled his men at 8 a.m. on D-Day to outline the mission.

Bradley instructed his team leaders, 2nd Lt. Royce Weaver and 2nd Lt. Craig Weaver to prepare their teams for a rehearsal of the mission.

Then, after two rehearsals, the squad traveled to the attack position.

The squad waited for the field artillery to prepare the objective. After the artillery rounds finished their barrage, the order was given to move forward.

The squad encountered barbed wire, log barriers, machine gun fire, tank ditches and manned bunkers.

Squad members assaulted the position using buddy rushes, smoke grenades for cover, basic rifle marksmanship skills with live ammo and bayonet assault skills.

With the objective seized, the squad prepared for a counter attack and redistributed ammo.

The IOBC students said they received a real opportunity to feel like "John Wayne."

By going courses such as CCI, they said they are able to see first-hand just how hard it is to be a squad member, and just how hard they must train and develop their platoons.

Planning, rehearsing prevents mistakes

By Clarence Pittman III
197th Infantry Brigade

The failure to plan and rehearse tactical operations can cause grave mistakes on the battlefield for a combined arms team.

The 197th Infantry Brigade implemented these procedures during its recent command post exercise at Kelley Hill.

"We conducted rehearsals, using a terrain model that represented an area we'll likely be maneuvering on at the National Training Center at Fort Irwin, Calif.," said Maj. Lee R. Barnes Jr., brigade executive officer.

About 200 staff members participated in this 56-hour, fast-paced, scenario, according to Maj. John Batiste, brigade operations officer.

The brigade units, along with 13 attached units from XVIII Airborne Corps, will form a heavy/light force at the NTC in February.

"One of the primary benefits of this CPX was the presence of our attached staff representatives," said Lt. Col. William E. Lewellyn Jr., brigade deputy commander.

"It's critical that they understand how we operate and how we'll combine the elements of heavy and light forces," Lewellyn said.

"It is critical for our success at the NTC to work with our attached units ahead of time," said Maj. Dale Barnett, operations officer of 2nd Battalion, 18th Infantry.

"Being able work with the airborne, air defense, engineers, aviators and other external and internal units of the 197th is an opportunity we aren't able to repeat often," Barnett said.

By using a 16-by-16 square foot terrain model of Fort Irwin, the unit staffs maneuvered friendly board pieces against the opposing forces.

This simulated the Soviet tactical doctrine maneuvers and operations.

"Using the NTC terrain model allowed the staffs to do an initial intelligence preparation of the battlefield of the NTC, which puts us ahead in planning," Lewellyn said.

"When we get on the ground at Fort Irwin, we will again analyze the plan and terrain to determine if it is feasible," he continued.

"This CPX allowed us to develop and wargame the orders we intend to execute during the Training Exercise Without Troops," Barnes said.

"We did a lot of the paperwork drill here, so, when we hit the ground at the NTC, we can get involved in the use of terrain, troop leading procedures and battalion and company level tactics," Barnes said.

The brigade staff and attachments will conduct a TEWT at Fort Irwin before taking a Christmas break.

"Whether our Tactical Operations Center gets the opportunity to exercise during a field training exercise or a CPX, it's always beneficial," said Cpl. David Sherwood, radio teletype operator for 1st Battalion, 18th Infantry.

"A TOC is fast paced and complicated when you have new people operating in it, so this was very helpful," Sherwood said.

"There's no doubt that these rehearsals and discussions with our brigade units and the attachments will prove beneficial," Batiste said.

Father, son have airborne connection; keeping up with the Joneses is tradition

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

When The School Brigade commander went to airborne school in 1967, he not only became a paratrooper, he started a family tradition.

Col. James Jones and his five brothers are all airborne school graduates and now a new generation has met the challenge.

Jones has a nephew in the Marine Corps who is a paratrooper and his son has just graduated from Airborne School, making him the seventh member of the Jones family to earn silver wings.

According to Jones, he was the first in his family to serve in the armed forces.

He explained that his father had wanted to enlist, but was needed on their farm.

It seems the next generation more than made up for the lost opportunity.

The intrigue of going to airborne school drew Jones into the Army, and his brother followed.

"The only thing we did differently was attend Airborne School right after basic training," he said. "I went after graduating from OCS."

There are still two Jones brothers on jump status. One here and one at Fort Bragg, N.C.

> "She prayed the whole time we were in the air on Mark's first jump."
>
> — Col. James Jones

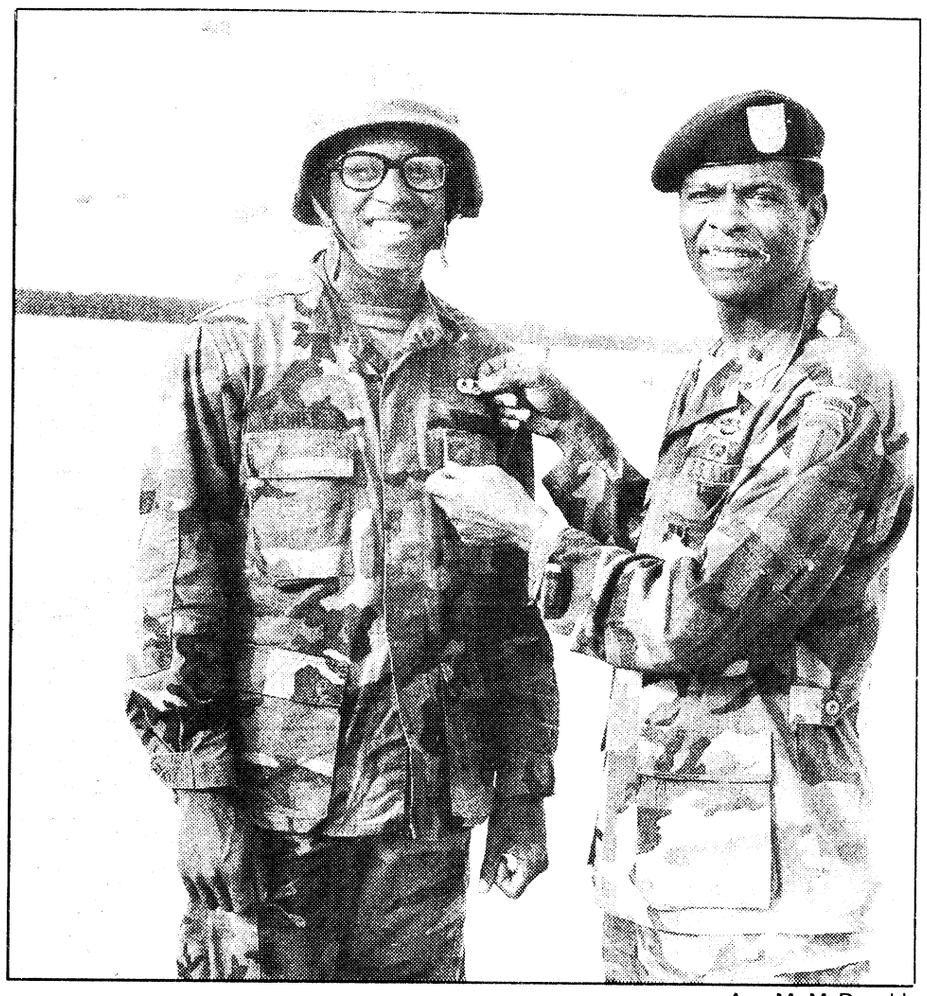
"My son will be going on airborne status at Fort Bragg, as well," Jones said. "He'll be there with my brother."



It truly is an airborne connection. Jones is here, where they make soldiers into paratroopers and his brother is where they break them in.

The person who made it possible for the Jones brothers to be paratroopers, their mother, was able to see one of her family in action for the first time when her grandson graduated.

"She told me she prayed the whole time we were in the air on Mark's first jump," Jones said.

"But, after she saw how much we enjoyed it, she felt better."

Jones said he thinks the tradition of the family going through airborne school will continue for a long time.

Benning ranger gives up sergeant stripes for gold

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

A Fort Benning soldier took off his staff sergeant pins and left the Ranger Training Brigade aiming for higher echelons of leadership.

Through the Green to Gold program, Tom Greer is now a Reserve Officers Training Corps cadet at Columbus College.

Green to Gold is an ROTC program in which a soldier can get an early release from the Army, go to college full-time and gain a commission upon completion of his bachelor's degree.

There are two programs — scholarship and nonscholarship.

Greer left the service on the nonscholarship program and is using the Veterans Education Assistance Program to pay for his education.

Greer said it's going to be tough not being able to rely on the benefits of an active duty soldier, but he said he feels it will be worth it in the long run.

"I was in an ROTC program prior to enlisting, and I really enjoyed it," he said. "But, I wasn't very responsible then and wanted to do other things."

"I realized that, saw a commercial and joined the Army," Greer said.

He said it's the best decision he's ever made.

After six and a half years in the Army, he said he is ready to move into the higher echelons of leadership.

"I'll be accomplishing a number of things at once," he said. "I'll earn my degree, gain my commission and have some adjustment time before I become an officer."

Greer said he likes the challenge of getting out and becoming a full-time student.

He said he's use to the challenges of being a ranger, but that's not the only challenge he has met and overcome.

Greer is a cancer victim.

He has Hodgkin's Disease, currently in remission. Because of this, he said he had a difficult time getting into the program. He said he persisted and won.

"I'm really grateful I was given the chance to be a cadet. I really want to get my commission," Greer said. "It's not for the money. I made more than I knew what to do with as a staff sergeant."

It's back to the basics for Greer who said he's accustomed to giving orders instead of taking them.

"I don't mind going back to the basics though," he said. "I don't think you can ever get too much.

Soldiers interested in the Green to Gold program must meet the following requirements:

- Have a GT score of 110 or higher
- Complete two years of active service
- Complete three months of active service for each month of specialized training. (Can be waivered).
- Be no older than age 25 at time of commissioning. (Can be waivered up to age 34).
- Provide a letter of acceptance, showing junior or sophomore standing, from the college the soldier plans to attend. At least 90 percent of the sophomore requirement for a baccalaureate degree must to be completed.
- Provide a letter of acceptance from the Professor of Military Science at the college the soldier plans to attend. The letter must state that the soldier is qualified to participate in that school's ROTC program
- Provide a letter of recommendation from immediate commander, with an endorsement from the next higher echelon in the chain of command (field grade officer).
- Applicants who have dependent children under age 18 and are married to an active duty service member are ineligible.
- Have less than 10 years of active duty service.

Officers' wives bring Christmas cheer

USAIC Public Affairs Office

All the decorations, assistance, parties and Christmas spirit donated by the 34th Medical Battalion Officer's Wives will certainly guarantee the battalion's soldiers a visit from Santa.

Thanks to the officers' wives, the battalion area "is beginning to look a lot like Christmas."

The officers' wives brought a little Christmas cheer into the barracks by decorating the battalion's dayrooms and offices.

They spent an entire day cutting, taping and hanging decorations.

On Wednesday, they provided their assistance in the battalion dining facility by cooking, serving and waiting tables.

Soldiers from the battalion, AG Replacement Company, and 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry said they were both surprised and thankful.

Tomorrow, Santa will arrive for the battalion's family party.

Fort Benning scholar chosen for leadership program

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Dr. Rolla Baumgartner, superintendent of Fort Benning Schools, is one of 38 educators from Georgia who were selected for Education Leadership Georgia, a program for leaders in Georgia schools.

The program is conducted by the Georgia Education Leadership Academy.

"The special program provides leadership development for existing and emerging educational leaders," said Jim Puckett, director of the Georgia Education Leadership Academy.

"Activities are designed to challenge, inspire, inform, enhance and motivate participants to reach for excellence in their roles as educational leaders," Puckett said.

The 38 educators were selected from 60 applicants by a steering committee of the Georgia Education Leadership Academy.

Participants represent a cross-section of sex, race and position in school systems.

Instructional lead teachers, principals, assistant principals, central office administrators, superintendents, Georgia Department of Education personnel and school board members are eligible to participate.

The year-long program began with a retreat Oct. 6 through 8 at Pine Mountain and will end with a retreat in June 1990.

There will be a day and a half of sessions in December, February and April in regional locations.

1988 Outboard Marine Corp.

If you limit your cold water bass fishing strictly to deep water jigs, you're usually missing a lot of different opportunities that often yield some excellent action.

Spinnerbaits, crankbaits, even topwater chuggers and poppers can, at times, be used in cold water.

"The overall key is the weather itself," explained Johnson Outboard's pro staff angler Fredda Lee, who fishes year-round, regardless of the weather conditions.

"Very often, winter weather is broken by several warm, sunny days between fronts," she says. "These types of days can cause bass to move into more shallow water and make them more active.

"You still have to retrieve your lures slowly and deliberately, but sometimes the activity level of bass on days like this can be a pleasant surprise."

For example, said the attractive Johnson Outboard's pro, bass may be enticed to hit a topwater popper or chugger fished over shallow moss, even in the dead of winter.

Likewise, spinnerbaits and crankbaits can often draw strikes around rocky riprap.

"Vegetation usually holds bass year-round," said Lee. "It provides cover, warmer water and food; so the bass don't really need to leave. They're just not as active.

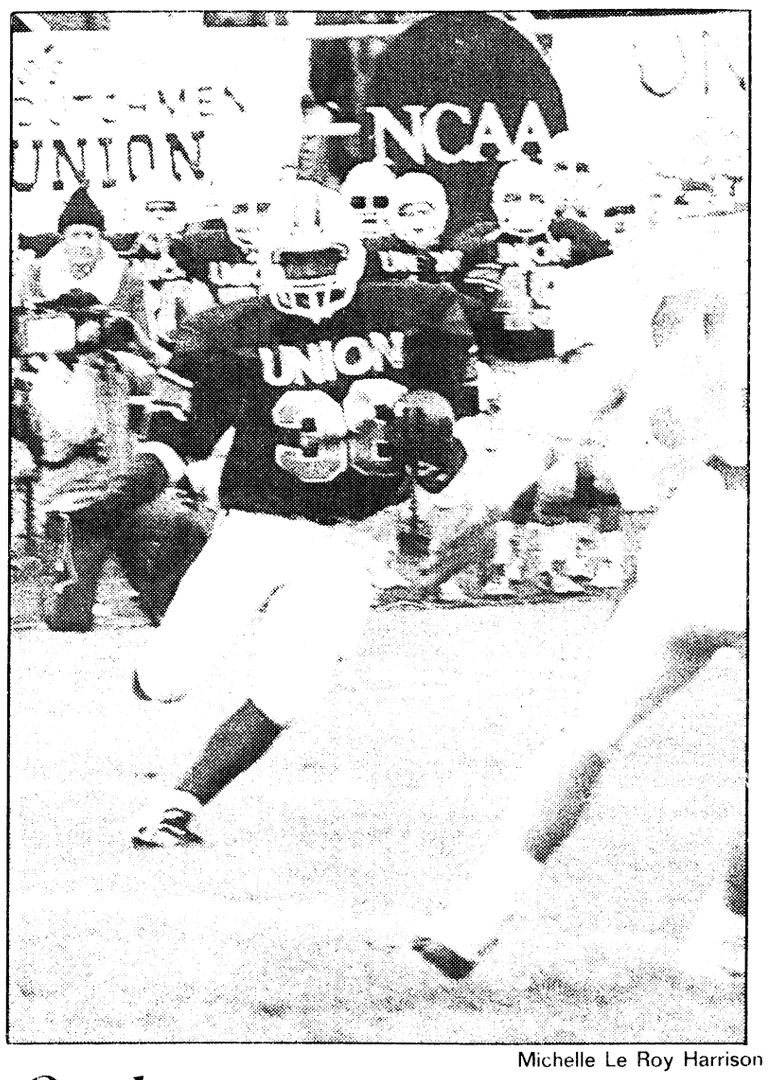
"Instead of really popping a plug across the top of a mossbed, work it very slowly with a lot of pauses. You may need to switch to a smaller lure and make repeated casts, but don't ever start thinking a bass isn't there."

Lee works crankbaits in the same deliberate manner. She likes to fish points, stumpy flats and boathouses with a diving plug that gets quickly to the bottom and then chugs and digs its way back to the boat.

"Stump flats can really be surprising," she noted, "because they may hold winter bass even when the water depth is less than five feet. The most effective flats are those edged by a deeper channel the fish can use when the weather turns cold again.

"On a warm day, bass frequently move up onto a flat to feed, particularly in mid-afternoon after the sun has been out several hours.

"My lure choice here is a crankbait or spinnerbait worked carefully around the cover and bouncing off the stumps."



The spinnerbait term for this type of fishing is known as "slow-rolling," explained Lee, and does not mean rolling the lure over the cover. It refers to the spinnerbait blades, which rotate or "roll over" more slowly due to the slow retrieve.

Lee's winter spinnerbait choice is a single small willow leaf or Colorado blade model, either of which produces good vibration and flash.

Rocky riprap, the stones placed along a shoreline to add support for roadways and bridges, are excellent winter fishing spots, according to the former-model-turned-angler.

Bass move very shallow and close to the rocks to gain added warmth, she said.

"Fish a crankbait or spinnerbait parallel to the riprap," Lee suggests, "and work very shallow depths. Pay particular attention to odd places in the rocks where logs or other cover may be present."

Georgia hunters asked to kill more doe deer

Department of Natural Resources

After years of continued growth, Georgia's deer herd declined last year by about 100,000 animals, from 1.25 million to 1.15 million. The harvest was 326,300 deer, 131,000 of which were does.

The goal of the Department of Natural Resources Game and Fish division this year is for hunters to take the same number of does while reducing the buck killed by about 5,000.

This will enable Georgia to have the best deer hunting in the southeast and, in the next few years, the bucks should gain in body and antler size.

According to Game Management Chief Joe Kurz, "We have about reached the peak in deer harvest in the northern zone, and, in some areas, the excess numbers of deer have been removed.

There are still some areas, particularly in the upper Coastal Plain and portions of the Piedmont that need a reduction in the deer population.

"We need to lower it by about another 150,000 in the state. This would still give us excellent hunting," Kurz said.

"To achieve this goal," he continued, "cooperation from the hunting public is imperative, and that means taking doe deer whenever possible."

He explained that one doe killed removes up to three deer from the herd--the doe and the two fawns she will bear in the spring. Killing a buck only removes one.

This gives each deer more space and allows a larger share of the food supply.

There seems to be plenty of fodder for deer this year as a result of Georgia's recovery from the drought conditions of the past few years, according to Kurz.

The result should be larger deer in the future with better antler development on the bucks.

During the firearms season for deer, hunters may take up to three does and Game Biologists of the Department of Natural Resources encourage them to do so.

Many hunting clubs have rules that forbid the killing of doe deer. Kurz asks these groups to reconsider their policy for the betterment of deer hunting. Since there are plenty of doe deer, no one should pass up the opportunity to put some excellent venison in the freezer. Most areas of the state have very liberal seasons for either sex hunting and many hunters believe that the venison from a doe is better tasting meat.

SPIRITUAL

Chaplain says there are many ways to go home for Christmas

By Chap. Richard Roggia
Family Life Center

Even if your Christmas plans don't include a trip home, there is still a way you can include the feelings of home in the holiday season.

Christmas means many things to each of us — holly and holiday, tinsel and lighted trees, presents and feasts. It's a time of cheer, family and friends. For some, it is a day of worship and holy thoughts.

The songs and traditions of Christmas come from many lands and cultures. Although they vary from country to country they bridge continents and centuries.

Behind the unique customs and traditions are universal feelings and meanings we all identify with this festive season.

Many of us love every aspect of Christmas, including the religious, sentimental, under planned, overdone, commercial and sometimes confusing aspects of it.

We love the legends and the myths as well as the tender truth of its beginning as recorded in the word of God.

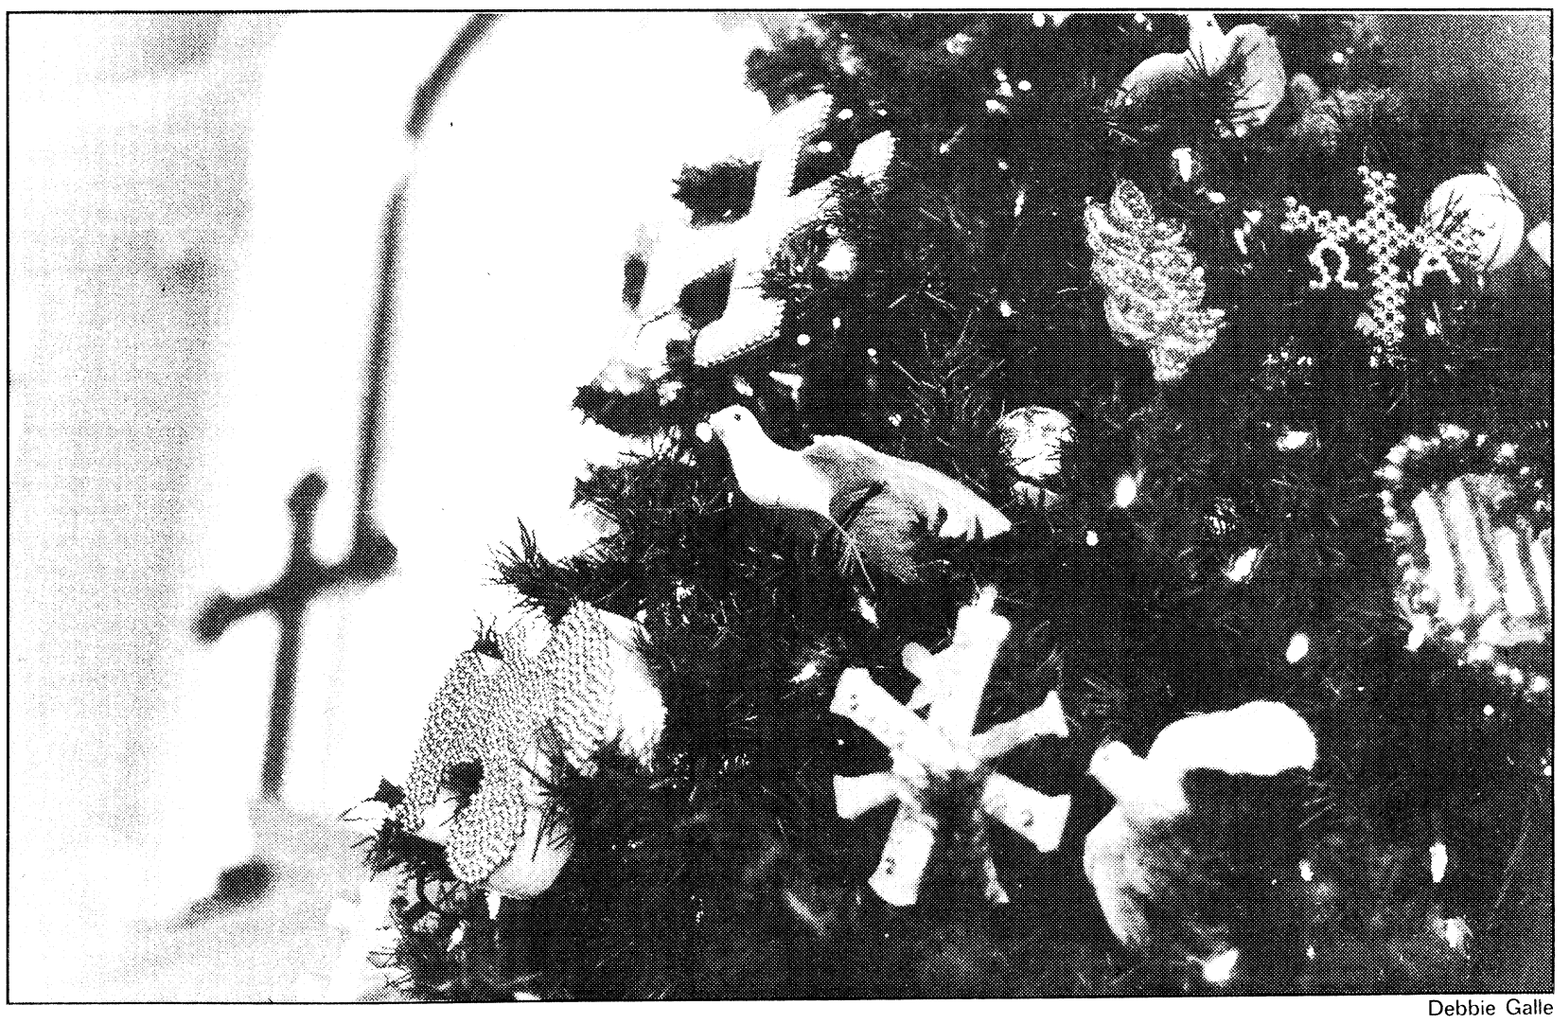
For Christmas, it's that wondrous time when Christ was born in Bethlehem. Anything that holds that much importance should be shared with loved ones.

Christmas is a time of family traditions. It's a time to deck the halls, decorate yule logs and sing carols. Many of us read the story of Christmas and decorate the tree.

According to some psychiatrists, people continue to celebrate certain Christmas traditions simply because they have a subconscious craving for their own roots.

A person maintains a strong sense of personal identity when he maintains connections with his past.

Christmas offers a chance to do just that. Christmas is that continuity that's needed in a changing world. It is a way home.



The birth of Christ promises a way home and not merely in the ultimate sense.

Love for one another is an emblem of the love of Christ that can make us one.

There is no substitute for being home. But just as "home is where the heart is," the heart can take us home or nearly there.

Christ's love reaches across the time and distance of creation to call us home to our Father, so our love for one another can be a bridge between family members pulling us closer together.

Because of Jesus, because of his birth and ultimate sacrifice, because of Christmas, no one is without home or a way to find it.

Springer to perform 'Nutcracker'

Springer Theatre

"The Nutcracker" will be performed in the Springer main stage today at 8 p.m., Saturday at 2:30 and 8 p.m. and Sunday at 2:30 p.m.

Ticket prices are $7 for adults and $5 for students, children, senior adults and groups. Reservations may be made by calling the Springer Box Office at (404) 324-1100.

Dancing features flamenco in the Spanish dance, acrobats for candy canes, leaps in the Russian dance, slithering in the Arabian segment and a Grand Pas de Deux between the Sugarplum Fairy and the Nutcracker Prince.

The story is based on E.T.A. Hoffmann's "Nutcracker and the King of Mice."

It presents a 90-year-old heroine who helps vanquish an evil force and is rewarded with a trip to a wonderland of magic.

Director and choreographer Sonja Manzi stages the ballet.

Leslie Hughes, now in her fifth season with the Atlanta Ballet, performs the role of the Sugar Plum Fairy. Hughes studied with the world-acclaimed Joffrey Ballet and has danced with the Hamburg Ballet in Germany and France's Ballet du Tours. She has been seen in principal roles in The Transfigured Night, Dialogues, Song of Remembrance and last year's production of Giselle at the Atlanta Ballet.

Hughes will be dancing with another Atlanta Ballet regular, Thomas Shoemaker who will dance the part of the Nutcracker Prince.

Shoemaker is in his third year as principal dancer at the Atlanta Ballet.

Learn firearm safety rules

Infantry Branch Safety Office

Annually, more than 1,600 Americans are killed in firearm accidents and at least another 12,000 are injured.

These totals include Army personnel who had been trained in firearm safety, yet were killed or seriously injured from the accidental discharge of their weapons.

Firearms have become common place in most American homes.

Some are used for recreation, such as hunting or target and skeet shooting; others provide the hobbyist or collector with hours of enjoyment.

Regardless of their purpose, firearms by themselves are safe. It is only when they are in the hands of an unskilled, nonthinking or careless person that they become dangerous.

Accidents with firearms are needless and can be prevented through conscientious adherence to the following 10 commandments of shooting safety:

- 1. Treat every gun with the respect due a loaded gun.
- 2. Watch the muzzle, always control your muzzle.
- 3. Unload guns when not in use.
- 4. Be sure barrel is clear of obstructions.
- 5. Be sure of your target before you pull the trigger.
- 6. Never point a gun at anything you do not want to shoot.
- 7. Never climb a tree or fence or jump a ditch with a loaded gun.
- 8. Never shoot a bullet at a flat, hard surface or water.
- 9. Store guns and ammunition separately, under lock and key.
- 10. Avoid horseplay, and above all, do not drink alcoholic beverages before or during shooting.

All personnel hunting within the Fort Benning military reservation should familiarize themselves with the Fort Benning hunting regulations contained in USAIC Regulation 210-2 and USAIC Circular 210-4.

Doctors picked for training

By Jeanne Dickerson
Martin Army Community Hospital

Sixteen physicians from Martin Army Community Hospital have been selected for Graduate Medical Education.

When their training is complete, the physicians will not only be able to provide medical care for patients, they will also be able to train future physicians.

The selection of the physicians was based on stiff competition among their peers in the U.S. Army Medical Corps.

Eight of the physicians will remain at MACH for the Family Practice Residency Program.

They are: Capt. Mark Berman, Capt. Mark W. Cotton, Capt. Perry E. Jones, Capt. Randle T. Middleton, Capt. Koji Nishimura, Capt. Joseph P. Schuette, Capt. David A. Stein and Capt. Davis M. Zlotnicki.

Three physicians will study at Brooke Army Medical Center: Capt. Brian D. Allgood, Orthopedics; Capt. Gary Cooper, Cytopathology and Capt. Michael Lecce, an internal medicine specialist who will train in Cardiology.

Christmas music from around the world was featured at the 283rd Army Infantry Center Band Concert conducted last week in Marshall Auditorium, building 4.

The 50-member ensemble played to an audience that included soldiers, their families and troops attending courses at Fort Benning.

Included in the program were selections ranging from Bach to Tschaikowsky.

The Benning Belles performed an arrangement of yuletide carols.

The finale included verses from well known Christmas carols and a special appearance from Santa Claus.

Christmas goodwill makes soldier feel 'at home'

By John Robinson
Bayonet staff writer

A Fort Benning soldier, left homeless by a merciless housefire, is now sitting warm and comfortable in post housing and has replaced many household items thanks to a display of Christmas goodwill and generosity by the Fort Benning community.

Staff Sgt. Steven Jarrell, of Directorate of Plans, Training and Mobilization, awoke Nov. 26 to a house in flames, the sound of shotgun shells exploding and his 70-pound dog raising the dead.

Staff Sgt. Steven Jarrell

An electrical fire devastated Jarrell's $52,000 residence on Macon Road.

Although covered by insurance for the balance owed on the house, he was not protected against this type of catastrophe.

Jarrell said his pooch, part pit and part chow, was more hindrance than help during the whole affair.

"When the dog wasn't knocking me and the neighbor down, we were dodging bullets," said Jarrell.

His small supply of personal ammunition stored in the house was set off by the flames, causing damage not only to his house but his neighbor's house, as well.

The aluminum siding on the neighbor's house was damaged but was covered by insurance.

Jarrell, married with two children, was assigned three-bedroom quarters in Indianhead Terrace almost immediately.

Additionally, thanks to the generosity of the personnel in DPTM, Finance and Accounting, Directorate of Resource Management and Directorate of Logistics, who all took up a collection, he was provided with more than $1,200 and what he described as "a complete kitchen."

He was also re-issued BDUs complete with name-tags and boots.

Jarrell said he is thankful to everyone who contributed in any way to help him get back into the mainstream.

"If it weren't for the chain of command, things would never have gotten done," he said.

He was referring in particular to DPTM Director Col. Ted Chilcote and Sgt. Maj. Donald Taylor, who were both instrumental in the collection efforts.

Jarrell, who has only one year before retirement, was in good spirits despite the loss.

"You think you're ready to get out and this happens," he said.

He estimated a loss of more than 70 percent of all his personal belongings.

Included in the list of lost items are a $10,000 coin collection, a collection of 76 beer steins from all over the world and numerous pieces of priceless furniture from overseas.

The Night before Christmas

By Clyde Snively
USAIC Public Affairs Office

'Twas the night before Christmas, when all through the billets,
Not a soldier was stirring, not even the privates;
The stockings were hung by the fire escape with care,
In hopes the Old Man soon would be there;
The trainees were nestled all snug in their bunks,
Dreaming of passes, into sleep they sunk;
And Top in his dress greens, and I in my cammies,
Had traded our Kevlars for a long johns and jammies;
When out on the parade field there arose such a clatter,
I sprang from the bunk to see what was the matter.
Away to the window I flew in a flash,
Tore open the curtains and threw up the sash.
The moon, on the puddle of new-fallen rain,
Gave the luster of mid-day to the rough terrain,
When, what to my wondering eyes should appear,
But a deuce-and-a-half, and eight men to fear,
With a company-grade officer, so lively and quick,
I knew in a moment it must be C.O. McSchick;
More rapid than eagles, his drill sergeants came,
And he whistled, and shouted and called them by name;
"Now, Vilnacek! now, Hernadez! now, Spereisen! and Crowalt!
On Hitchings! on, Dickson! on McDonald! and Landman!
To the top of the stairwell! to the top of the wall!
'Now stand at ease, stand at ease, stand at ease all!"
As dry leaves that before the wild hurricane fly,
When they meet with an obstacle, mount to the sky;
So up to the barracks roof the drill sergeants flew,
With duffel bags full of goodies and the C.O. too.
And then, in a twinkling, I heard on the roof,
The stomping and marching of each combat boot;
As I drew in my head and was turning around,
Down the fire escape the Old Man came with a bound.
He was dressed in BDUs, from his head to his foot,
And his uniform was smudged with red mud and soot;
A bundle of MREs he had flung in his rucksack,
And he looked like a Ranger as he opened his pack.
His eyes scanned the room for enemy presence,
As he reached in the bag for what had to be presents.
But the wink of his eye and the twist of his head,
Soon made me think I had something to dread;
He spoke not a word, but went straight to his work,
Posting the duty roster, the big hairy jerk.
Were we to spend Christmas guarding this dive,
Or pulling police call on one-eighty-five?
With a snap of his fingers they all departed,
Driving off in the deuce-and-a-half once it was started.
As they left, I crept forward to have a good look,
It wasn't a roster but the Operation Holiday book,
With football and basketball games galore,
Plus visits and tours, free motel rooms and more.
Then I heard him exclaim as he drove out of sight,
"Merry Christmas to all, and to all a good night."

With apologies to Clement G. Moore.

May the spirit of Christmas inspire us to work harder than ever toward that noble goal.

Many of you will be traveling during the holiday season to visit with family and friends.

Medical battalion proves maintenance capabilities

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

Although the mission of the 690th Medical Company, 34th Medical Battalion is maintaining soldiers, they have proven they are equally adept to maintaining vehicles.

The unit was recently awarded the post Maintenance of Excellence Award in the light density category.

During the ceremony, Fort Benning Commanding General Maj. Gen. Michael F. Spigelmire said, "It's significant that a medical unit is going to represent Fort Benning in higher levels of competition.

"I know people don't like to do maintenance, but it has to be done," he said.

Spigelmire explained that soldiers in unit's that don't maintain vehicles can't do their job.

"It's awful embarrassing when a commander goes out on a field exercise, and units only have half of their equipment up," he said. "It's like fighting with one hand tied behind your back."

The 690th Med. Co. has kept its hands free. It keeps it 33 ambulances, two five-ton vehicles, two two-and-a-half-ton vehicles, eight three-quarter-ton vehicles and six generators 85 to 90 percent operational at all times, according to motor pool officer 2nd Lt. Philip Davidson.

It was Davidson along with his motor pool noncommissioned officer in charge, Sgt. 1st Class Bobby Stewart, who guided the staff of five soldiers to excellence.

Stewart said they enforced the basics with occasional spot checks on the vehicles.

"We also conducted classes to ensure they fully understood their mission," he said.

"We don't have a lot of mechanics so we have to ensure they are proficient," Stewart said.

Davidson said the ambulances roll every day to provide support for all the hazardous training on post, so the medical soldiers have to ensure the ambulances are proficient.

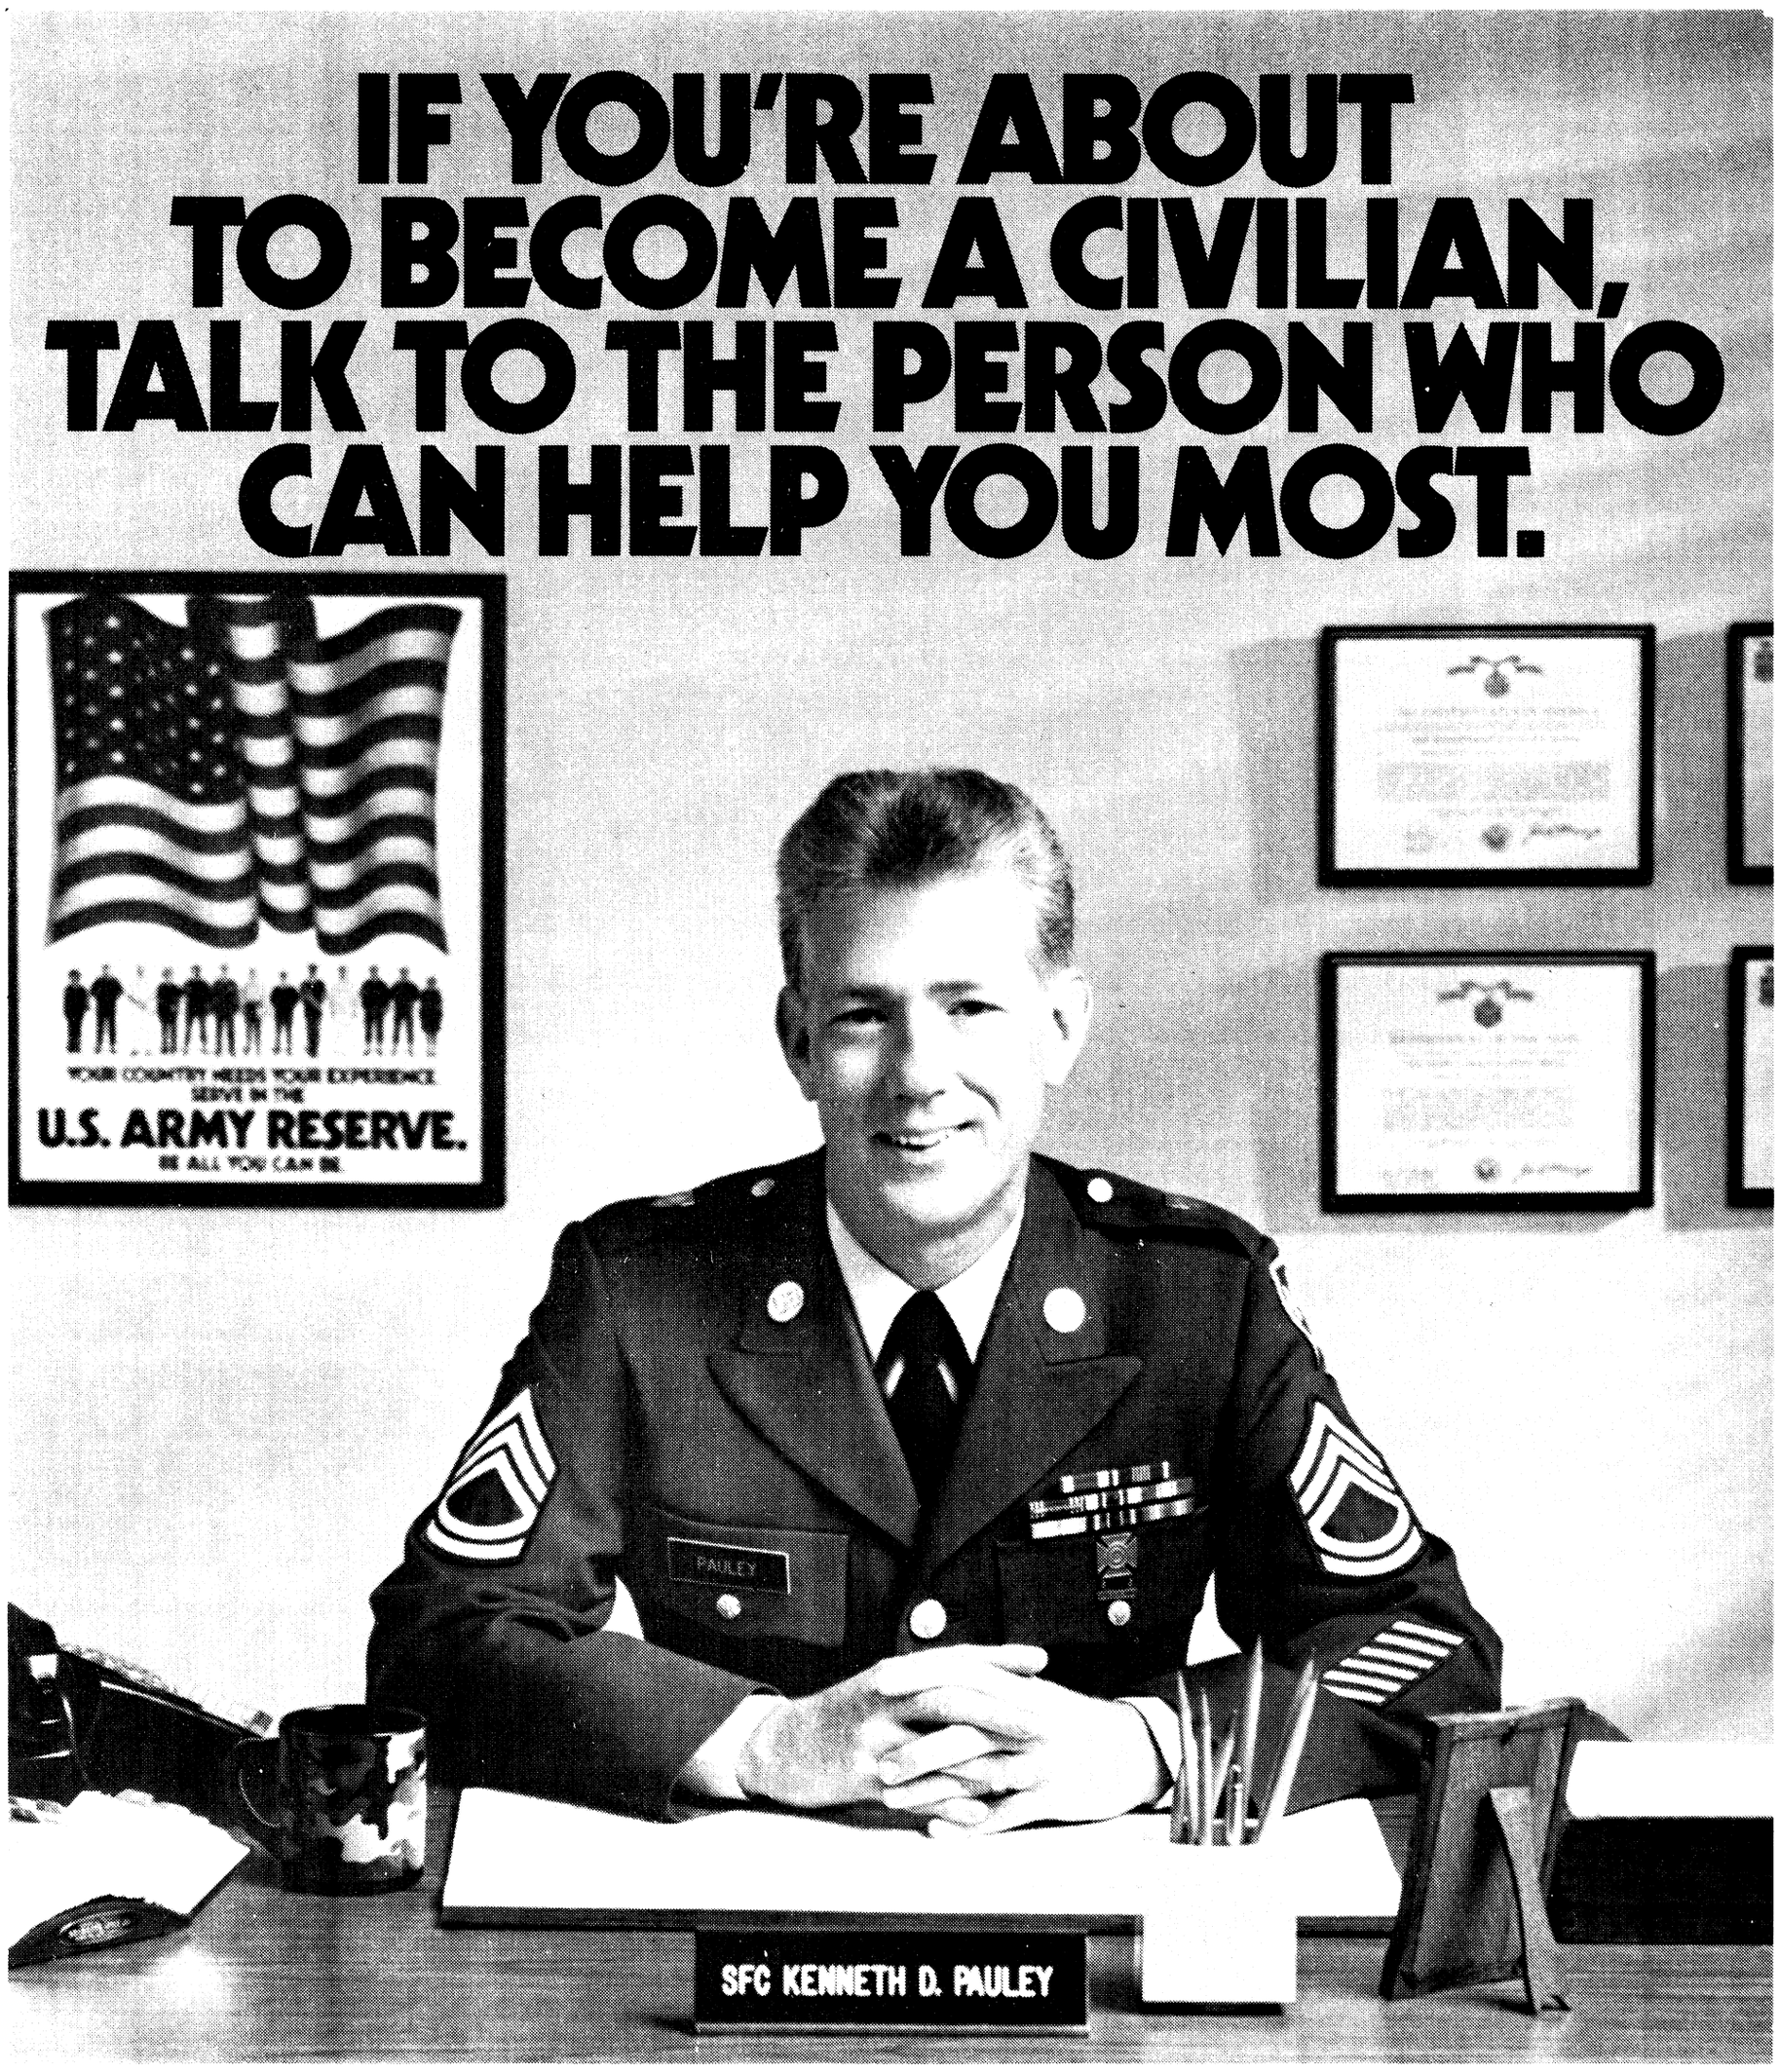
According to Davidson it starts when the medic checks out the vehicle.

"A vehicle is only allowed out of the motor pool after it has been thoroughly checked by the medic," he said. "It he doesn't do a thorough check, he doesn't get the vehicle."

The opposite is applied when there is a problem with a vehicle.

"We stay here until it is fixed," Davidson said, "We have to. Otherwise we'd get so backlogged, we'd never get finished."

Stewart stressed that although their hours are sometimes long, they have a good team. That is how they won the award, he said.



Other units recognized were the 1st and 2nd battalions of the 29th Infantry Regiment.

Five units lauded for safety excellence

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

Five units received special recognition from the Fort Benning commanding general last week for safety excellence.

The Military Police Activity was recognized for reducing accidents 52 percent. 1st Battalion, 507th Parachute Infantry Regiment reduced accidents 38 percent, 36th Engineer Group 34 percent, 197th Infantry Regiment 26 percent and the U.S. Army Infantry Training Center 17 percent.

According to Regis P. Beighley of the Infantry Branch Safety Office, these reductions were obtained in a number of ways.

For example, he said the MPs attributed their reduction to fewer traffic accidents. 1st Bn., 507th PIR reduced accidents by plowing Fryar Drop Zone.

Beighley said it has been command emphasis that has made a difference.

"By command emphasis, I don't just mean commanders; I'm talking NCOs," he said. "NCOs have the most influence over the soldiers."

He explained that this emphasis helps reduce accidents and conserve resources. It all adds up to combat readiness, he said.

Beighley said the emphasis on safety makes soldiers realize they are cared for.

In addition to human lives, an emphasis on safety also saves the Army thousands of dollars, according to Beighley.

43rd Engineer Battalion soldiers hit the roof

By Alex Lucas
Company A, 43rd Engineer Battalion

1st Platoon, Company A, 43rd Engineer Battalion, has completed construction and repair of the roof of a horse barn located in the vicinity of the Fort Benning Hunt Club, building 297.

This construction mission supervised by Sgt. 1st Class Marcus Clay and Staff Sgt. Steve Ruger was broken down into 11 tasks, ranging from site preparation to water proofing the fascia board along the edge of the roof.

Damaged rafter members and decking were removed and replaced once all the existing shingles were cleared off the roof structure.

"The scope of the mission was considered to be dangerous in that personnel of 1st Platoon were required to work on a roof that was steeply sloped," said Ruger.

To prevent soldiers from falling, a wire cable was installed along the ridge of the roof. Soldiers then fastened safety lines to the cable.

The soldiers also wore gym shoes while working on the roof to maintain stability.

This construction mission afforded the platoon members the opportunity to enhance their carpentry and roofing skills, according to Clay.

There are three soldiers in the platoon who have prior roofing experience, Clay said.

Specs. Andrew Riggins, William Davis and Fredrick Wardlow, contributed immensely to the mission with their prior roofing experience, Clay said.

Peter Grenier

Members of 1st Plt., Co. A, 43rd Engr. Bn., remove old shingles from the horse barn.

"We at the Hunt Club have received a quality finished roof constructed in accordance with the Corps of Engineers design and specifications," said Larry McGlaun, manager of the Fort Benning Hunt Club, .

The new roof has provided overhead coverage for more than 30 horse stalls, a large tack room and a storage room.

School of Americas graduates 90 infantry officers

By Keith F. Johnson
U.S. Army School of Americas

Newly-commissioned officers and senior cadets from four Latin American countries graduated from the U.S. Army School of the Americas' Infantry Officer Basic Course Dec. 7 in Marshall Auditorium.

Ninety students from Costa Rica, Bolivia, Honduras and El Salvador completed the 22-week course, which provides comprehensive training in the tactics and use of combined arms at squad, platoon and company levels, based on U.S. Army doctrine.

For many of the students, the successful completion of the course is a prerequisite for further advancement in their own armed forces.

One aspect of the course the students didn't anticipate was the grueling physical regimen demanded by the school.

"When the students arrived, they had in mind that to be successful in the course meant only fulfilling the academic requirements," said Capt. J.M. Bernadel, course director. "They soon realized that physical training was also a major part of the curriculum, as well as the strict adherence to the code of conduct and personal behavior throughout their stay."

In addition to the classroom activities, the students were exposed to other facets of the American way of life.

"Trips to Atlanta, Columbus, Disney World and local sporting events provided a unique opportunity to experience our way of life," Bernadel said.

The guest speaker at the graduation ceremony was Brig. Gen. William A. Steele, assistant commandant of the U.S. Army Infantry School.

Steele talked to the students about the importance of junior-grade officers in the structure of the Army and the values of an officer.

"For many of the students, the comments of Steele were made more valuable by the fact that they will be returning to possible situations of armed conflict in their own countries, where the skills and knowledge gained at the school will be put to the test," Bernadel said.

ASK THE JUDGE

By Michael H. Lane
Legal Assistance Attorney

Q. I have read about people who say how bad probate is and advise that it should be avoided. What is probate? Should it be avoided? How can this be done?

A. Avoiding probate has become a sort of media buzzword that has taken on a life of its own and has helped to get publicity for a number of authors.

The term has also needlessly alarmed a number of people who, in fact, have little or nothing to fear from the procedure.

Probate is a court proceeding with one major purpose: to clear title to property passing from the decedent to those persons named in his will or entitled to take under the laws of intestacy.

Probate procedures perform three functions in passing title: (1) collecting and inventorying the assets subject to probate; (2) ensuring that creditors and taxes are paid; and (3) assuring correct transfer and distribution of the property to the proper beneficiaries.

The major advantage to probate is that beneficiaries are protected by the supervision of the court.

That is, the court makes sure the property goes where the deceased wanted it to go or as the law provides.

There are perceived disadvantages: costs, delay, publicity and psychological trauma to the survivors.

For a smaller estate (under $600,000), only the psychological trauma is a real concern.

Although there are times when it's difficult for the surviving spouse to perform the tasks required of an executor or administrator, it is still recommended that the spouse be appointed for this job.

It generally allows the property to pass quickly and without the involvement of others.

If you should decide to avoid probate, there are four main ways to do so: (1) the joint tenancy with right of survivorship; (2) the Totten trust; (3) contracts that avoid probate; and (4) the funded revocable (living) trust.

The joint tenancy, in which property passes to the survivor without going through probate, is a simple procedure.

The Totten trust, so named for a court case of that name, involves the deposit of money in a band or savings institution in the name of the depositor in trust for a beneficiary.

If it remains in the account until the death of the depositor, the money passes to the beneficiary without passing through probate.

It is similar to the joint tenancy, but allows the depositor to keep the other party, the beneficiary, from withdrawing the money.

This is not possible in a joint tenancy situation.

Contracts to avoid probate include life insurance, deferred compensation arrangements, pension and profit sharing, some stock and mutual fund agreements, to name a few.

In these arrangements, a contract provides for the payment of proceeds to a named party upon the death of the maker of the contract.

If the named person is deceased or no one is named, the proceeds go into the probate estate.

This is a common and well-known example of avoiding probate.

The funded revocable or "living trust" involves the transfer of assets to a trustee independent of the maker of the trust.

The maker reserves the right to amend or revoke the trust.

At the maker's death, the trust is carried out by the trustee without going through probate because the property is in the trustee's name.

It is a way to avoid probate, but can cost in excess of $3,000 at a minimum in most localities.

Since the cost of probate is usually much lower in a simple case, it is hardly practical unless the estate exceeds $600,000.

Should your estate be that large, you should seek professional estate/tax planning help.

In summary, probate is not the drain on an estate that many believe. It can be avoided in most cases using the joint tenancy and contractual methods that are inexpensive and simple.

The Totten trust and the "living will" should be reserved in most cases for large estates or those with special problems.

ENERGY WATCH

By Tina Cook
Energy Branch

The Directorate of Engineering and Housing has responsibilities ranging from wildlife management to fire protection and includes energy conservation.

This program sets guidelines for establishing and maintaining energy goals set by TRADOC.

The first step in any major effort to conserve energy is to ensure the right attitude toward energy consumption within the community.

Conserving energy does not mean depriving yourself of comforts and conveniences. It simply means guarding against waste, being aware of the inefficient ways electricity, gas and water can be used and doing something about it.

Fort Benning has about 4,100 family housing units, 9,000 buildings and 22 million square feet of heated and air-conditioned space.

Electricity for heating and cooling family housing units can cost from $425 to $2,000 a year, depending upon the type of equipment used, the construction of the house and the amount of care families take to conserve energy.

Heating water accounts for about 20 percent of the energy used in a home.

An electric water heater, for a family of four, costs about $315 a year.

Because water heaters consume such a large percentage of household energy, they provide a great opportunity to cut energy waste.

Water heated about 120 degrees Fahrenheit not only wastes energy, but is also considered a safety hazard, in that it can burn or scald.

DEH Prevention Maintenance personnel can check the water temperature in your housing unit.

The largest use of hot water by household is in washing clothes. Energy use can be cut substantially by using cold water when possible, along with energy-saving features on some models.

Washing full loads and using short cycles save time and energy, as well as being easier on fabrics.

Dishwashers also use a lot of hot water, about 15 gallons per load.

To conserve energy, fill the dishwasher as full as possible without blocking the spray arm.

Scrape and rinse dishes well. This will prevent having to use the rinse and hold cycle, which uses about three to seven gallons of hot water.

If you can get by, try to use your dishwasher once a day.

This will generally use less hot water than it takes to wash dishes by hand three times a day.

Taking a shower rather than a bath is energy-efficient.

Be aware of water running in the sink while shaving or brushing your teeth.

Dripping faucets and leaky pipes waste water. A faucet dripping at a rate of 90 drops per minute wastes about 1,000 gallons of water a year.

Usually this problem can be corrected by replacing a washer. Washers are issued at Self Help, building 385 on Vibbert Avenue.

If that doesn't do the trick, inform DEH Preventive Maintenance.

Broken water lines and water heaters should be reported to the Work Order Section, 545-2135.

These are only a few of the areas to consider when planning energy-saving strategies.

Everyone living or working at Fort Benning has an obligation to practice energy-saving in day-to-day activities.

Twice a year, in the spring and fall, the Energy Branch is responsible for igniting energy conservation efforts.

Energy Awareness campaigns require a great deal of planning and effort and generally are well received.

The objective is not only to raise public awareness, but to change habits that affect energy consumption every day.

The campaigns include exhibits, lectures, and essay and poster contests at the schools.

As you prepare for the holiday season, don't forget the efforts of Energy Awareness Week. Practice energy-saving measures all year.

As a team, we can achieve our energy goals.

For more information on energy-related subjects, contact the Energy Branch at 545-4652 or 545-SWAT.

Proper electric blanket safety use explained by a safety expert

By Evelyn D. Harris
American Forces Information Service

An electric blanket may feel cozy on a cold night, but you'll rest more safely if you follow some precautions.

Allan Zenowitz, chairman of the Department of Defense Fire Protection Board, suggested, "After you buy an electric blanket or any other electrical appliance, read the instructions on the package before using the product."

"You should never fold an electric blanket tightly or use safety pins with it, and always store it properly when not in use," said Zenowitz.

According to the Consumer Product Safety Commission, at least 171 injuries in 1988 and 354 in 1987 were related to electric blankets.

The commission got those figures from 62 hospitals nationwide that are part of its Nationwide Injury Surveillance System.

Here are some more tips for keeping safe while keeping warm:

- Don't use the blanket with infants or young children, invalids or anyone who is insensitive to heat.
- Don't bunch the blanket — wires can overlap and overheat.
- Turn the blanket off and unplug it when not in use.
- Don't let pets sleep on the blanket.
- Don't tuck the wired area of the blanket under the mattress.
- Don't put anything on top of the blanket when in use, not even folded at the foot of the bed.
- Don't use the blanket in front of an open window — it could overheat.
- Don't use it near a heating system — it may not operate.

It should be noted that researchers doing a study commissioned by the Congressional Office of Technology Assessment recommended limiting use of electric blankets to warming up the bed before getting in and then turning it off.

The researchers made the recommendation based on the possibility of excessive exposure to electromagnetic fields.

Some scientists believe such exposure can increase the risk of getting cancer.

The Year of the NCO

CB&T Salutes the Men and Women Who've Earned Their Stripes!

At CB&T, we know the kind of dedication it takes to be a noncommissioned officer...and we're proud that 1989 has been designated the "Year of the NCO."

We'd like to thank all of you who stopped by CB&T's Fort Benning branch for our NCO open house. Special congratulations go to the winner of our NCO drawing: Staff Sgt. Eustace Noble of the 4th Battalion, 36th Infantry Regiment, U.S. Army Infantry Training Center!

Sgt. Noble has been presented with a $100 savings bond, and the NCO his battalion chooses as "NCO of the Year" will receive a dress blue uniform in Sgt. Noble's name!

Once again, we'd like to thank all the NCOs for a job well done. And to Sgt. Noble... congratulations!

Virus-like infectious agent proves treatable

Army News Service

A treatable, virus-like infectious agent has been linked to diseases in some AIDS patients three years after it was first discovered in a human host, according to researchers at the Armed Forces Institute of Pathology and the Warren Grant Magnuson Clinical Center, National Institutes of Health in Bethesda, Md.

Dr. Shyh-Ching Lo, chief of AFIP's geographic pathology division and head of its AIDS pathobiology lab, wrote several articles published in the "American Journal of Tropical Medicine and Hygiene."

Lo's work led to discovery of the existence of the microorganism, dubbed VLIA, in 1986.

It was found originally in a Kaposi's-sarcoma tumor removed from an AIDS patient.

Lo identified the VLIA as "mycoplasma incognitus," the smallest and simplest free-living organisms known.

Laboratory tests found the agent both infectious and deadly, the report said.

"We think many of the symptoms associated with AIDS patients may be treatable and may be caused by this previously unrecognized pathogen," Lo said during a recent interview by Soldiers Radio and Television in Washington.

Unlike a viral infection, a mycoplasma is potentially treatable.

The agent has responded to a at least six antibiotics, including Tetracycline, in lab tests.

The articles describe the microorganism as the main cause of the diseases in the patients with AIDS.

Researchers report that the agent is related directly to unexpected deaths of patients without AIDS.

In 22 of the 32 AIDS patients examined, evidence of systemic infections caused by the newly-discovered mycoplasma were found in tissues of the brain, liver, spleen, lymph nodes and thymus gland.

In addition, placentas delivered by two other AIDS patients also were found to be infected with the agent.

Scientists identified and confirmed the microorganism's existence by its genetic imprint and other qualities using an electron microscope.

An earlier report stated that DNA of mycoplasma incognitus had turned up in the blood of 12 of 23, or 52 percent, of living patients with AIDS but not in 22 healthy blood donors.

Mycoplasma first were discovered 100 years ago in legume plants.

Only a few mycoplasma were known to cause human disease.

The newly discovered agent causes such diseases from pneumonia to genital infections.

Mycoplasma incognitus is closely related to but distinct from mycoplasma fermentens, a mycoplasma isolated from bone marrow of patients with leukemia.

Researchers caution that while they have no doubt about the medical importance of their discovery and continuing research, the role, if any, mycoplasma incognitus plays in the AIDS pandemic remains unknown.

Suicide may take a holiday, but prevention never stops

By Scott Gibson
Army News Service

Suicide rates do not show any substantial increase during the holidays, according to a March 1986 article in "Soldiers" magazine.

According to that article, a rise in holiday suicide rates is one of the biggest myths people have concerning suicide.

That fact is, nationally, December has the lowest suicide rate of any month.

During the Christmas and New Year's holiday, people experience some sort of belonging and have hope that things will get better, according to the article.

Some of the reasons people consider suicide are relationship problems, such as a recent or pending divorce, difficulties with jobs, financial problems, death of a loved one and serious medical problems. Drug and alcohol abuse also often contributes to suicide.

There are many factors that make a person want to commit suicide, explained Capt. James B. Durand, chief of community mental health services at Andrew Rader Health Clinic, Fort Myer, Va.

Simply saying that someone is depressed about the holidays is usually not in itself a motive for suicide, he said.

With the Christmas message of giving and the New Year's traditions of resolutions and new beginnings, what better time for people to stop and take a look around them.

It's a good time to become aware of the feelings of others and reach out to someone who may be displaying some of the signs of depression and isolation.

The "Soldiers" article suggests the following should be done if you think that someone may be suicidal:

● Take threats seriously. Trust your suspicions...the warning signs from many people are very subtle. Something such as telling a loved one "goodbye" instead of "good night" may be the only clue.

● Answer cries for help. Once you are alerted to clues that may constitute a cry for help from a loved one, friend or co-worker, you can help in several ways.

The most important thing is not to ignore the issue. It is better to offer help early than to regret later not having done anything at all.

The first step is to offer support, understanding and compassion, no matter what the problem may be.

The suicidal person is truly hurting, so take the pain seriously.

Too often, because of uneasiness or fear, a friend can laugh off a plea or ignore a clue. Show concern.

Confront the problem. If you suspect a person is suicidal, begin by asking non-judgmental questions, such as, "Are you feeling depressed?" or "How long have you felt this way?"

These questions give the person a chance to vent feelings.

Be direct. Don't be afraid to ask the person if he's thinking about committing suicide. Asking about suicide won't put the idea into someone's head.

Getting people to talk about their desire to kill themselves is a positive step.

Be a good listener and a good friend. Don't make moral judgments, act shocked or make light of the situation.

Don't tell people they have everything to live for, because it may deepen the sense of guilt they probably already feel.

Don't tell them to snap out of it. That's like telling someone with two broken legs to get up and walk.

Get professional help. The most useful thing you can do is to encourage suicidal persons to get professional help.

If necessary, offer to go with them or take them to help.

The Army community offers many sources of help.

After duty hours, the hospital emergency room would be the best source.

When danger is less immediate, the Family Life Center and the chaplains offer counseling services.

Other sources of help include the alcohol and drug community counseling center, Army Community Service and the chain of command.

What to avoid:

● Don't leave anyone alone if you believe the risk of suicide is imminent.

● Don't assume anyone isn't the suicidal "type."

● Don't debate the morality of self-destruction or talk about how it may hurt others. This may induce more guilt.

● Don't keep a deadly secret. Tell someone what you suspect.

At this time of gift giving, why not give a little of your time and understanding.

Reach out to people who you see in need of a friend. It could be a gift we can all live with.

MARTIN CARE

By Jeanne Dickerson
Martin Army Community Hospital

The Outpatient Clinic at Martin Army Community Hospital has received numerous complaints about telephone access.

Although the telephone system at Fort Benning is undergoing an upgrade, in the meantime, callers often get a "busy circuit" signal when dialing a military phone number.

This leaves patients who need appointments unable to make them, while the Outpatient Clinic is left with 15 to 20 unfilled appointments daily.

To make Martin Care more accessible to beneficiaries, MACH has installed a commercial line in the Outpatient Clinic.

You may now call 682-0486 to make Outpatient Clinic appointments, as well as the existing numbers, 544-3760/1705/1569.

To further alleviate telephone problems, MACH has gone on the AIR.

This telephone information system in Columbus has added many Fort Benning facilities to their information service, including MACH.

Call 649-6000 and use MACH (6224) as the four-digit code to access MACH information.

Messages contain information about visiting hours, clinic hours (including PRIMUS), Pharmacy hours, CHAMPUS, Dental services and items of special interest such as schedules for Women's Health Night and smoking cessation classes.

This should help eliminate the frustration caused by trying to call the Fort Benning telephone system from Columbus/Phenix City numbers.

Hanukkah history explained

By Chap. Barry R. Baron
JBAIC Jewish Chaplain

Hanukkah is the eight-day Jewish festival of lights. It recalls the first fight for religious freedom in recorded history.

In the second century BC, Jews rejected King Antiochus' claim to be God and his demand that all his subjects worship in the approved Greek manner.

The king retaliated harshly, invading Jerusalem on the Sabbath, burning the Books of the Law, desecrating the alter of the Temple with idol-worship, forbidding circumcision and slaughtering or enslaving resistant Jews.

From the village of Modin, the priest Mattathias led the revolt against Antiochus.

When Mattathias died in 166 BC, his son, Judah the Maccabee, succeeded him.

Judah and his forces recaptured Jerusalem and purified the Temple, which was rededicated to the one God, on the 25th day of the Hebrew month of Kislev in 165 BC.

The celebration lasted eight days. It was decreed that the festival of Hanukkah be observed annually for the same eight days.

According to legend, when the Jews rededicated their Temple, they searched for pure oil with which to light the Menorah, the seven-branched lamp, which was supposed to be kept lit continually.

They found enough oil to burn for only one day, yet miraculously it burned for eight.

Today, a special Hanukkah menorah is placed in the windows of Jewish homes to "advertise" this miracle.

On each of the eight nights of Hanukkah, candles are lit by a "servant" candle, one on the first night, two on the second and an additional one on each successive night.

Other Hanukkah customs including giving gifts, eating latkes (potato pancakes) and spinning a dreydel, a four-sided top with Hebrew initials of the phrase, "A great miracle happened there."

This year, Hanukkah will be celebrated from today through Dec. 30.

At Fort Benning, the regular Jewish Friday evening service, at 8 p.m., will center around themes of the holidays.

A special Hanukkah menorah will be set up outside the ITC Chapel, building 3220, at Sand Hill.

LAST WEEK

Celebrate traditional Christmas

Westville

A tradition-filled Yuletide Season will be observed at Westville, the 1850 museum village near Lumpkin, Ga. Until Dec. 30, the Westville buildings, decorated with fruit, native greens and berries in the 1850 manner, will bustle with many activities, including doll making, candle-dipping and holiday baking.

The German custom of lighting the Christmas tree will be featured at 2 p.m., Saturday.

In 1850, the Christmas tree was still mainly a German tradition and in this way, Westville commemorates the customs of a German pioneer family.

Along with the lighting of the Christmas tree, the Christmas Story and "The Night Before Christmas," will be read and Christmas carols sung.

The end of the Christmas Season is marked by a ceremony called the Burning of the Greens, at 2 p.m., Dec. 30.

All of the greenery used to decorate the houses is taken down and carried to the town square, where it is burned to symbolize the passing of the old year. Then as the wreaths, garlands and other decorations go up in flames, the bells in the village are rung to welcome in the New Year.

The village will be open everyday of the holidays except Christmas Day and New Year's Day. Westville is located one-half mile from Lumpkin in southwest Georgia, and is open 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. (EST), Monday through Saturday, and 1 to 5 p.m. (EST) on Sunday.

For further information, contact the Westville office, P.O. 1850, Lumpkin, Ga.

Poetry contest ends soon

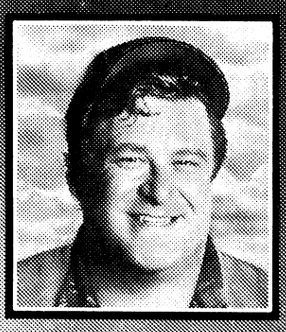
American Poetry Association

The deadline for entering the American Poetry Association's contest is Dec. 31. Entry is free, and everyone is welcome to enter.

The grand prize is $1,000 and first prize is $500. A total of 152 poets will win cash and publication prizes worth $11,000.

"Poets from the military send us some memorable poems, so I urge every poet in the service to enter this contest," said Robert Nelson, publisher for the association. "Unknown poets are the ones we look for. We want to discover them and give them the recognition they deserve."

Poets may enter the contest by sending up to six poems, each no more than 20 lines, with name and address on each page to: American Poetry Association, Dept. CT-92, 250-A Potrero St., P.O. Box 1803, Santa Cruz, Calif. 95061.



Entries should be mailed by Dec. 31. A new contest starts Jan. 1.

Poems are also considered for publication in the American Poetry Anthology, a leading collection of today's poems.

More than 600 Benning troops participate in 'Just Cause'

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

More than 600 soldiers from Fort Benning's 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment, and Headquarters, 75th Rgr. Regt., parachuted into Panama at H-hour last week as a part of the initial assault force for Operation Just Cause.

According to a special operations command spokesman, Benning elements were divided into two groups.

One company from 3rd Bn. joined forces with 1st Bn., 75th Rgr. Regt., Hunter Army Airfield, Ga. They parachuted in and secured the international and military airfields at Torrijos and Tocumen, Panama.

Within two hours, the rangers had cleared the way for follow-on troops.

The remainder of 3rd Bn. linked up with the 2nd Bn., 75th Rgr. Regt., Fort Lewis, Wash., and parachuted onto the airfield at Rio Hato, 90 kilometers southwest of Panama City.

Although they weren't deployed in conjunction with Operation Just Cause, the 988th Military Police Company is also doing its part in Panama.

The unit arrived in Panama Dec. 13 as part of a routine 128-day rotation.

"They're now performing their mission in support of combat operations," said Military Police Activity Commander Col. Fred Liebe.

Liebe said there have been no reported casualties from the unit. The rangers, however, were not as fortunate.

Two Fort Benning rangers, Staff Sgt. Larry R. Barnard, Co. B, 3rd Bn., 75th Rgr. Regt., and Pfc. Roy D. Brown, Co. A, 3rd Bn., 75th Rgr. Regt., lost their lives.

Officials said Brown and Barnard are among the 18 Army soldiers who died in Panama.

So far, 257 soldiers have been reported wounded.

President George Bush told reporters at a Dec. 21, press conference, "Military casualties are a burden which a nation must endure, and all presidents have to face up to, but which we can never accept.

"But, particularly at this time of the year my heart goes out to the families of those who have died in Panama, those who have been wounded."

Although Manuel Noriega surrendered to the Vatican on Christmas Eve, it was apparent that Fort Benning soldiers would not make it home for Christmas.

Most families' sentiments were expressed by Marianne Kernan, wife of the 75th Rgr. Regt. commander, Col. Buck Kernan, who said concern over her husband's absence for the holidays was far outweighed by concern for his welfare.

"As far as I am concerned, Dec. 25 was the birth of Christ, but we'll celebrate Christmas when the men come home."

Portions of this article were taken from an Army News Service release.

'Operation Just Cuz' keeps wives informed

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

Just hours after the initial assault on Panama, wives of soldiers from the 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment, were in the Sightseeing Road Chapel forming a task force of their own.

Spurred on by concern for the wives, Marianne Kernan, wife of the 75th Ranger Regiment commander, Col. Buck Kernan, began putting the links of the "chain of concern" together.

Kernan said it's designed to ensure family members of soldiers in combat are taken care of in a structured manner.

The home base for the chain of concern is the Sightseeing Road Chapel, where briefings are conducted daily.

At those briefings, Capt. Al Ornoski, a representative from the regiment, and Kernan, give as much information as regulations allow to the family members.

Ornoski fields questions from family members and makes lists of the problems they are encountering in their spouses' absence.

Kernan provides moral support and briefs the families on less technical issues.

Although the chapel has been deemed the official headquarters for the chain of concern, the Kernan residence has become the unofficial command post with someone on call 24-hours a day.

A canvas sign posted above the entrance reads "Ranger Wive's CP, Operation Just Cuz."

In light of the situation, some may think the play on words inappropriate, but Kernan explained the meaning behind the sign.

"I'm doing this 'just cuz,' just because I care about these women and my husband," she said.

"This is part of what being the wife of a commander is all about."

She added that it doesn't mean she wears her husband's rank.

"In times of crisis, wives look to the wife of the highest commander, and I happen to be that," Kernan said.

The burden is a big one. More than 150 wives look to her for support.

This doesn't include the other battalions that fall under her husband's command, for which she feels equally responsible.

She has already made two trips to Hunter Army Airfield, Ga., to talk to the spouses of soldiers from 1st Battalion.

She said she wants desperately to personally talk to the wives of soldiers from 2nd Battalion, based at Fort Lewis, Wash.

She said words of wisdom from Chap. Ray Velez keep her going.

"He said God never gives you more burdens than you can handle.

"I firmly believe that," she said. "I know my husband wouldn't let anything happen to his men, so I have to do the same for the wives."

The only difference between her and her husband's command is there is no rank among the wives.

However, she said there is a type of command structure much like the military.

Barbara Thomas, wife of Capt. Raymond Thomas, Co. A, 3rd Bn., 75th Rgr. Regt., said she already had a close group with the wives of soldiers in her husband's company, so they just banded even closer together.

The wives realized the single soldiers need support as much as the husbands, so they sent Christmas cards to the men," she said.

"Basically, all of the wives are really strong, although there have been some weak points, especially when the women thought their husbands might come home and then didn't."

Commissary vendors donate sales proceeds to community

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

A lack of funds would have prevented some post soldiers from having a traditional holiday meal, but commissary vendors saved the day by donating sales proceeds to various organizations on post to be used as commissary gift certificates.

According to Commissary Official Larry Bentley, this is not the first time vendors have given money back to the commissary.

He said this is an ongoing program in which vendor representatives promote certain items in the store, and a certain percentage from each item sold goes into a predesignated fund.

Funds, earmarked for commissary gift certificates, are distributed to an organization. The organization decides who could use the money the most.

Chap. (Maj.) Donald Taylor, Main Post Chaplain's Office was put in charge of the funds designated for soldiers on Main Post.

Taylor said recommendations from units are reviewed, and a decision is made on who gets the money and how much.

"The amount of money they receive is based on family size," Taylor said. "We try to give $20 per family member."

He said there was one case where a soldier had 10 family members.

"Through the funds we received, we were able to help 23 families," Taylor said.

The Main Post Chaplain's Office received $2,095, the 197th Infantry Brigade was given $4,911 and the Directorate of Community Activities was given $950.

Contributing vendors were Lever Brothers, Overseas Services, Eurpac, Webco, Durkee/French and Proctor & Gamble.

Operation Holiday activities in full swing

USAIC Public Affairs Office

The 10th annual "Operation Holiday," is in full swing with events to keep post soldiers entertained during the holidays.

The program is designed for single soldiers and geographic bachelors who remain at Fort Benning during the holidays.

Activities, organized by the Chattahoochee Valley-Fort Benning Chapter of the Association of the U.S. Army, will continue through Jan. 2

Last week soldiers appeared on the Good Day Show and attended a party at the Hilton and several sporting events.

Activities planned this week include tours of local businesses and trips to local attractions and sporting events.

The uniform for all events is Class B with black sweater or jacket. Class As may also be worn.

Bayonet founder dies

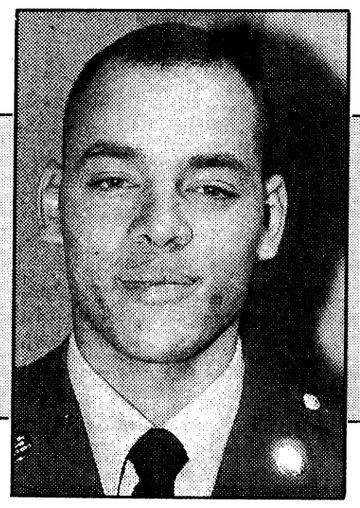
USAIC Public Affairs Office

The founder of the Fort Benning Bayonet, Maynard Ashworth, 95, died Dec. 20 at St. Francis Hospital after an extended illness.

Ashworth founded The Bayonet when Gen. Mike O'Daniel asked him to start a weekly newspaper for military personnel. The paper is still going after 47 years.

Although Ashworth is most known to soldiers for his affiliation with The Bayonet, he also was responsible for founding the Citizens and Military Council.

He received the 1985 Spirit of Fort Benning Award and the Gen. Creighton Abrams Medal given by the National Association of the U.S. Army.



Ashworth was buried with a copy of The Bayonet.

OPINION

VARIOUS VOICES:

Pvt. 1 James Leabres, Co. B, 1st Bn., 38th Inf. — "I think it's an excellent program and a good break for us. It's a great way to relieve depression and enjoy the holiday season."

Pfc. Joshua Cavazos, Co. B, 1st Bn., 19th Inf. — "It's nice for those of us staying here for the holidays. It's nice to see the community spirit that exists here for the soldiers."

Master Sgt. Dudley Jones, HHC, 29th Inf. Regt. — "It's a great program for soldiers who don't get to go home. It keeps them active and out of trouble."

Snively casts bowl predictions

By Clyde Snively
USAIC Public Affairs Office

If you've never lived on the West Coast, you can't appreciate what dedication is until you've partied hardy on New Year's Eve, then gotten up to watch the Rose Parade at 7 a.m., followed by the first football games at 10 a.m.

I used to do that, flicking between the Sugar and Cotton bowls, while awaiting the granddaddy of them all, the Rose Bowl, followed by the Orange Bowl, which, in those days, was BORING.

But out here, life's easier. The first games don't begin until 1 p.m. And, this year, partying gets off to a late start since most bars will be closed on New Year's Eve thanks to Sunday Blue Laws.

Also don't go trying to dance in the New Year or the New Decade because dancing on a Sunday in a bar is strictly taboo in Georgia.

There are so many bowl games nowadays, you wish they'd combine them into one and call it the Punch Bowl. That's how you feel after watching so many — punch drunk.

Do you realize six bowl games have already been played?

Such juggernauts as Fresno State and Ball State played in the California Bowl (it should be called the Date Bowl because that's about how hard they hit).

Oregon and Tulsa went at it in the Independence Bowl. It was probably the first bowl appearance ever for Tulsa, and Oregon hasn't been to one since Hula Hoops were popular.

Then, there was the Michigan State and Hawaii game (I didn't even know Hawaii had a football team.)

The Blue played the Gray, and Duke, one of those basketball schools went against Texas Tech.

Air Force and Mississippi engaged in a set to, while Penn State, which used to field real football teams, went against Brigham Young, which fattens up on high school teams somewhere in the Rocky Mountains.

This brings us to the car maker bowl, the insurance bowl, the foreign investment bowl, the toilet bowl, oooops, got carried away, to name a few.

You can completely ruin a decent Saturday by trying to watch four football games, involving teams coming off mediocre seasons designed to put even the most avid fan asleep.

I predict:

● John Hancock Bowl pits Pittsburgh and Texas A&M. The Panthers who will still be trying to defrost themselves at opening kickoff, will never get untracked and will fall to the Aggies, but not as fast as viewers fall asleep.

● Freedom Bowl brings teams from one end of the country to the other, and fans ask why as Florida Gator players pocket their money but forget to play.

Fortunately, the Washington Huskies are still thinking of Mickey and Minnie Mouse, thus failing to take advantage of the reptiles, but managing to win anyway.

● Peach Bowl, normally noted for its foul weather rather than the caliber of its opponents, really outdid itself this time bringing in teams that barely came off with winning seasons.

Maybe both teams will come to their senses and decide not to waste our time by showing up. If they do, look for a tie. At least this time it won't be Pat's.

● For those still conscious and who have ESPN, the Gator Bowl gets the Mazdas off the field just in time for West Virginia and Clemson to play.

Clemson must come to the Gator Bowl as penance for being such bad boys. They continue by beating the Mountaineers.

● If you didn't have enough mediocrity Saturday, you get one more chance Sunday as a 7-4 North Carolina plays a 7-4 Arizona in the Copper Bowl.

Obviously they can only be there for the money. The Tar Heels have done all the winning they can for one season.

Then comes New Year's Day:

● The Hall of Fame Bowl, which somehow sneaked onto the day, sees Auburn taking on Ohio State. Both teams make me want to puke.

But despite Pat Dye crying about the big bad boys from Ohio State, Auburn has to be favored as long as Dye keeps his bail money handy. But just for sentimental reasons, I'll go with OSU.

● The Citrus Bowl is another pretender to the New Year's day reign of the Big Four.

The pretending is over as it matches two teams, which, despite their records, should be watching games on TV.

No way will Virginia beat Illinois, a Big Ten team.

● The last of the pretenders to New Year's Day sees Nebraska and Florida State in the Fiesta Bowl.

Nebraska is still trying to figure out how it lost to Colorado while Florida State never had difficulty figuring out the Big Eight.

I go with the Seminoles, brains over brawn, (Huskers think the "N" on their helmets stands for "knowledge."

Now for the Big Four.:

● I must have been asleep for Arkansas and Tennessee to sneak in with 10-1 records. Arkansas I can almost believe, but Tennessee!

Tennessee falls to 10-2 after Monday's Cotton Bowl.

● The Sugar Bowl finds two teams looking to be number one, Alabama and Miami. I find it hard to believe Alabama can be expected to beat Miami when they floundered so badly against Auburn.

But I hate Miami so much, I'll go with Alabama.

● The Rose Bowl, the last bowl not to prostitute itself to some shill, puts the double "N" in ennui this year, with a ho-hum Southern Cal, taking on a somewhat-decent Michigan team.

Bo Schembechler's retirement notwithstanding, he can't seem to win in Pasadena, so I'll stay with the hometown boys.

● And finally the Orange Bowl. I predict complete boredom for the fans as two teams knock heads for the national title. Notre Dame will win just because.

And now, to see if my ticket out of town is still valid.

January: time to review the past; make plans for a successful future

The month of January gets its name from the Roman god, Janus?

Janus was a double-faced god who always looked forward and backward at the same time.

In reflecting on this pivotal month of January, it is apparent how appropriately it is named.

As we enter yet another New Year, we are challenged to remember the past, and to make plans for the future; to look behind and to look ahead.

This forms the basis for our custom of New Year's resolutions.

If we were honest, we would probably have to admit one thing.

Few of the resolutions we intentionally set are actually carried out and most of them are rather selfish, such as, we are going to lose weight or cut down on our smoking or find alternatives to over-drinking.

Perhaps we'll say we are finally going to enroll in that school, write that book or take that trip.

These seem to be reasonable goals. Yet, we keep falling short in our lives, tripping over shoelaces that we never took time to tie.

What about that temper that keeps getting you in trouble at home or at work? What about that project you have been promising your children or spouse?

What about that letter or phone call that you keep putting off?

What about that character of honesty, kindness and decency that you seem to have for everyone except those who love you?

These and other noble resolutions seem to collect annual dust as we continue our ambitious quests onward and upward.

Yet, they are among the most crucial if we are to live truly successful lives.

The problem is that we are not really sure what a successful life should be.

It is hard to accept that, ultimately, we are a success not because of what we do, built because of who we are.

When the Lord calls us home, our friends and families will not remember our medals but our righteousness; not our glory but our goodness.

The Apostle Paul was trying to remind us of this when he said: "You were taught, with regard to your former way of life, to put off your old self, which is being corrupted by its deceitful desires; to be made new in the attitude of your minds; and to put on the new self, created to be like God in true righteouness and holiness." (Eph. 4:22-24, NIV).

A great preacher, Jonathan Edwards, once wrote these New Year resolutions. They capture the commands of Paul and are worthy of consideration:

● I resolve never to lose one moment of time but improve it in the most profitable way I can.

● I resolve never to do anything I should despise or think meanly of in another.

● I resolve never to do anything out of revenge.

● I resolve never to do anything I should be afraid to do if it were the last hour of my life.

These are the resolutions of a successful life. How do they measure up to ours?

Consider these words by an anonymous poet: "The new year lies before you like a spotless tract of snow; be careful how you tread on it for every mark will show."

The marks we make in the new year will depend upon how deliberately we are willing to walk ahead.

We just need to make certain that our shoelaces are tied.

Deadline for filing 1989 CHAMPUS claims nears

CHAMPUS

The deadline for filing claims with CHAMPUS for civilian health care received — or provided — in 1988 is Dec. 31.

If you received, or provided, civilian care in 1988 and haven't filed a claim with CHAMPUS yet, your claim must be in the hands of your state's claims processor by Dec. 31.

The claim must be filed with the processor who serves the state in which you received (or provided) care. For example, if you received care in Kansas and now live in Ohio, the claim must be sent to the claims processor responsible for Kansas claims.

If you don't know where to send the claim, contact the Health Benefits Advisor at Martin Army Community Hospital for more information.

Wives

Charles Cooley, Co. B, 3rd Bn., 75th Rgr. Regt., said she feels she is kept well informed through the chain of concern and knows that she will be updated whenever necessary.

Cooley said she is proud of what her husband is doing in Panama.

"I'm confident he's safe because I know what he's capable of. I know he's well trained and has a good leader."

The leader of the 75th Rgr. Regt. is equally proud of his men. In an excerpt from a letter sent to his wife, Marianne, he wrote, "Things are as well as could be expected.

"I can't comment on the specifics, but suffice it to say that the rangers performed magnificently.

"I could not have asked for more, and have never been more proud than I was of their actions.

"Despite some awesome conditions, they lived up to our motto.

"As is always the case, we lost some good men, but the casualties have been remarkably light considering the situation.

"This was primarily due to their discipline, determination, toughness and strong belief in what they are doing.

"I am equally proud of their restraint. Scores of Panamanian lives were spared due to their alertness and coolness under fire."

Safety Cab offers free ride home

Soldiers who find they have had too much to drink, at a restaurant or bar or while attending a party, during the holidays, can call Safety Cab for a free ride home.

Through Jan. 2, soldiers can call 576-9800 from 7 p.m. to 3 a.m. and ask for the service.

With Safety Cab as an alternative, there is no need to drive under the influence of alcohol.

Send your guests home sober

Infantry Branch Safety Office

If you plan to entertain friends this year, send them home sober by following these simple suggestions.

- Serve food first. Eating slows absorption of alcohol.
- Measure the drinks. Use a shot glass so your guests aren't getting stronger cocktails than they're used to.
- Make soft drinks available. If alcohol is all you're serving, some people who would rather not drink may find themselves with a cocktail in hand.
- Close the bar early. Stop serving alcohol about an hour before you expect the party to break up.
- Serve coffee and desserts, and encourage your guests to stay.
- Don't let a drinking guest drive.
- Arrange a ride with someone else, call a cab, take the guest home yourself or invite him to stay overnight.
- Try these nonalcoholic beverage ideas as an an alternative to or a change of pace from traditional alcoholic drinks:
