Graduation: 5 chaplains earn CPE certificates

By Debra Galle
USAIC Chaplain's Office

Five chaplains graduated from the Clinical Pastoral Education Program in a recent ceremony at Fort Benning's Custer Terrace Chapel.

Graduating chaplains were: Maj. William H. Akridge, Maj. Jerry L. Leverett, Maj. Paul W. Gardner, Capt. Gregory L. Black and Capt. Marilyn H. Brannon.

The class of 89-2 is small, but the impact of the program is given great acclaim by the Chaplain Corps.

The program is described by Chap. (Col.) Roy N. Mathis, as significant to a resident's growth as a chaplain, a minister and as a person.

Chap. (Lt. Col.) Richard Goldsmith, chief of CPE Training, said the most important thing about the program is that it allows the chaplain to grow as an individual.

The students, who must be competitively selected to enroll in the program, learn a variety of ministerial approaches to the military community, Goldsmith said.

Phases of the CPE program include ministry training at the Installation Detention Facility, Martin Army Community Hospital, The Family Life Center, the Counseling Center for Alcohol and Drug Abuse and Custer Terrace Chapel.

Each chaplain chooses four areas of study and spends one quarter learning the unique dynamics of each area.

The CPE Center, one of only three in the Army, is located at Custer Terrace Chapel.

The Fort Benning model is the only community model in operation. It provides professional training for selected active duty Army Chaplains at the midpoint of their careers.

The program is described as one of the best methods of preparing chaplains for the complex and critical military ministry.

"I was taught the meaning of CPE by a wounded soldier in Vietnam," said Goldsmith in his remarks.

"His legs were badly wounded, and he lay face down with his head resting on his arms," Goldsmith said. "I laid down next to him, in the same manner, so I could look him in the face and try to comfort him as we awaited the medics.

"He looked at me intently, and said, 'Chaplain, Jesus is here.'

"Jesus was there," Goldsmith continued, " in the dirt, the pain, the fear and the death.

"And," he continued, "He is here now. The hope, the vision and the renewal is ours."

Goldsmith said the CPE resident had this message to spread to the patient, the prisoner, the alcoholic, the distressed family and the soldier.

The residents had to learn how to always communicate to others that "the Lord is here."

Real faith produces visible results in the form of works

By Chap. Loran C. Bulla
197th Infantry Bde Chaplain

"If it works, don't fix it."

The idea is that if a something works, everything is fine. If it doesn't, it needs to be examined. Americans just love to believe in things that bring practical results.

This attitude usually carries over into the area of religion. Folks generally want a belief that has some visible results to it. If the results aren't there or if they are too long in coming, disinterest can set in and belief begins to wither.

Being pragmatic isn't exclusively American nor is it confined to the 20th century. Nearly 2,000 years ago, a carpenter from a tiny place called Nazareth was busy teaching people about a belief that got results.

On one occasion, a hungry Jesus came upon a barren fig tree looking for fruit. Finding none, he promptly commanded the tree to never again bear fruit — the tree withered and died. While Jesus took this occasion to teach the disciples about faith, the episode clearly shows something about what the Lord expects.

Jesus has the same kind of expectations for his disciples. In the Gospel of John (15:1-8) Jesus taught that our lives should bear fruit. This means that if we believe in the Lord, there should be some visible results.

What kind of results should be visible in the life of a believer? Should there be answered prayer? Should our belief make us better people? Are these the results Jesus is looking for? What is your idea of a faith that works?

Certainly the Lord has a great deal to say about the results our belief should bring. But have you considered that both you and the Lord are interested in the same thing — a faith that bears fruit.

Is your faith working? Great. Don't fix it. But if not, it doesn't have to be that way.

For a real change, begin by sitting down with the Bible and through prayer, asking the Lord for a faith that works.

Be persistent, things will begin to change.

CHAPEL BRIEFS

Ecumenical

Religious Education Center Library — Several thousand volumes of Catholic, Protestant, and Jewish material are available at the Religious Education Center Library. There are commentaries, Bible dictionaries, Bible handbooks and many other reference books and other religious material.

The library, located in the Religious Education Center, building 229, Crain Hall, is open during duty hours, Monday through Friday. Everyone is invited to use the library for inspiration, study and research.

Drama camp begins July 10 at the Springer Opera House

Springer Opera House

There's a summer camp in Columbus that begins July 10 but don't look for canoes, horses, basket weaving or fireside marshmallow roasts.

It's a drama camp and the only required gear is a creative mind and an active imagination.

The Springer Opera House School of Theatre Arts is holding a two-week drama day camp in which campers develop skills in play making, actually writing a play and performing the show on the final day for an invited audience.

Every student will be involved in some facet of the performance. The camp runs Monday through Friday, July 10 through 14 and 17 through 21 from 9 a.m. to noon.

The Springer drama camp is designed as a positive experience in group creativity that promotes cooperation, teamwork and the artistic value of individual ideas.

It is suggested for both experienced and novice performers ages 8 to 14 years old.

The fee for the two-week camp is $85 and will be conducted by Theatre School director, Betty Britto, and school staff.

In addition to the drama camp, the Springer will have four summer theatre workshops on a variety of topics.

In the first workshop, entitled "Physical Approach," students go through a series of theatre exercises that emphasizes the physical side of acting and have the opportunity to critique their own work through the use of video tape.

By reviewing and clarifying physical action, the actor gains control over his performance in new and surprising ways.

Britto conducts the session July 8 from 1 to 4 p.m. for 15-year-olds through adults. The fee is $20.

"Radio Drama" is both a vocalization workshop and a characterization workshop in which participants learn how to create characters without the benefit of physical action or stage pictures.

A whole new world of possibilities emerge when the artist concentrates on portraying characters only through the voice.

For more information about summer drama camp and theatre workshops, call the Springer School of Theatre Arts at 324-3601 or 561-5595.

Spend July 4 in historic Westville

Westville Historic Handicrafts, Inc.

Westville, an 1850 Living History Museum, will celebrate Independence Day on Tuesday, July 4.

Visitors will see a comprehensive re-enactment of a typical West Georgia antebellum celebration of Independence Day. The celebration will begin at 11 a.m. with a parade followed by a special program featuring a patriotic oration by Dr. Joseph Mahan of Columbus.

Food will follow 1850 West Georgia menus, including barbecue, vegetables, and cake.

Commonly played games of the time will allow visitors young and old to compete in good-natured fun. There will be sack and three-legged races, a greased pole climb, and watermelon eating contest.

Westville consists of over 27 buildings of the 1850 time period. Costumed craftsmen demonstrate traditional work activities such as blacksmithing, basket making, spinning, weaving, quilting and woodworking.

For more information, call (912) 838-6310. The village is open Monday through Saturday, 10 a.m. to 5 p.m.; Sundays, 1 to 5 p.m.

Purple and Gold golf tourney Saturday

The 10th Annual Purple and Gold Golf Tournament will be held Saturday and Sunday at the Follow Me Golf Course.

The tournament, which is sponsored annually by the Lambda Iota Chapter of the Omega Psi Phi Fraternity, Inc. of Columbus, is open to the public.

The tournament will be a gross score tournament based on individual medal play. Flighting will occur after the first round June 24 with up to eight flights. There will be four prizes in each flight. 1st prize is a set of custom golf clubs; second prize is a set of metal woods; third is a pair of golf shoes and 4th is a dozen golf balls. First, second and third prize winners will also receive trophies.

The entry fee is $45 per person, and it includes refreshments. Participants should sign up early.

For more information, interested persons should contact George Cliff at the Follow Me Golf Course at 687-1940.

Golf clinic Tuesday

A Junior Golf Clinic will be held at Follow Me Golf Course Tuesday through Thursday from 9:30 to 11 a.m. for youths ages 7 to 17. Interested persons should contact the Pro Shop at 687-1940 for more details.

Benning Bass Club wants members

Active duty and retired soldiers, Department of the Army civilians and family members, 16 years and older are eligible to join the Fort Benning Bass Club.

Beginners and experienced fishermen, boaters and non-boaters are welcome.

Meetings are held on the second and fourth Mondays of each month at 7:30 p.m. on the second floor of Building 2616 (the Boys Scout Building in Soldier's Plaza).

If you are interested in becoming a part of this organization, attend a meeting or call Porter Angel at 569-9100, Joe Wikoff at 685-0301 or Jackie Marsh at 297-7352.

Post powerlifting meet June 24

The 2nd Annual Fort Benning Powerlifting Competition will be held Saturday at Briant Wells Gym. Lifters will squat, bench press and dead lift. Current U.S. Powerlifting Federation rules will be in effect, and regulation one-piece suits are mandatory. There is no entry fee.

Competition is open to all Fort Benning male and female active duty military, military dependents, retirees, Department of Army and Department of Defense civilians and Non-appropriated Fund civilians.

Awards will be presented to the top male finishers in each weight category. Women awards will be determined by formula.

For the first time at Fort Benning, a team powerlifting competition will be held. Lifters may compete in the team competition as well as individually. The top three teams will receive awards.

Weigh-ins will be held at Briant Wells Gym June 23 from 4 to 7 p.m. and on June 24 from 8 to 9:15 a.m. A meeting will be held for all lifters on June 24 at 9 a.m.

Lifters may sign up at any post gym or show up for the weigh-in and lifters meeting. For more information, contact Speedy Austin at 545-4726/4388.

We all must pay for cleaner air

By Becky Ray
Energy Branch

President Bush proposed amendments to the Clean Air Act in an effort to reduce acid rain, ozone pollution and toxic chemical emissions June 12.

The Associated Press reported that by limiting emissions from automobiles and electrical plants, Bush hopes to reduce acid rain sharply and to decrease urban smog by the year 2000.

One part of Bush's proposal focuses on ozone pollution, or smog, which is caused by the emission of hydrocarbon and nitrogen oxide gas from automobiles and industries. Ozone is beneficial to the earth at high altitudes, but close to the earth, ozone pollution stunts plant growth and causes respiratory problems in people.

To reduce these levels of ozone pollution, Bush has proposed that automobile manufacturers be required to build and sell cars powered by methanol in some urban areas to reduce hydrocarbon emissions. He has also asked that limits on hydrocarbon emissions from existing cars be reduced by 40 percent.

In addition, President Bush has recommended decreasing sulfur dioxide emission, a leading contributor to acid rain, from coal-fired electrical plants. The proposal asks for a 50 percent cut of 10 million tons in emissions. The plan also calls for reductions in emissions of toxic chemicals.

The benefits of cleaner air are not free, however. The Environmental Protection Agency expects the program to cost between $14 billion and $19 billion per year by the year 2000.

Consumers will be paying higher costs for coal-generated electricity as well, as the costs of plant modifications are passed to utility customers. Customers of the affected plants may have rate increases of up to 10 percent.

Although costly, the Clean Air proposal is expected to be beneficial to air quality in the Columbus-Fort Benning area.

According to a June 13 Columbus Ledger-Enquirer article, however, Georgia Tech professor Bill Chameides says the pollutant most responsible for ozone pollution is nitrogen oxide emissions, which he feels will not be adequately affected by Bush's plan.

Ozone pollution has been of particular concern in this area, where levels exceeded federal standards in the early 1980s. Ozone levels have dropped slightly in recent years but are still higher here than in most other comparably sized cities in Georgia. The federal standard is .12 parts per million of air. Last year, the area's average maximum ozone pollution was .114 parts per million.

Editor's Note: Portions of this article were taken from Associated Press and Columbus Ledger-Enquirer articles.

Faith School teams represent state in history competition

By Beth Middlemiss
Fort Benning Schools

Two teams from Faith Middle School represented the state of Georgia June 11 through 16 at the National History Day Competition at the University of Maryland.

Though neither team took top honors, both teams performed extremely well, scoring superior ratings from all six judges. This is the second year Faith School has participated in the national competition.

One team — Juli Broussard, Jennifer Campbell and Luis Negron — wrote and performed a play, "I Touch The Future." The play was based on the life of Christa McAuliffe, first teacher in space.

The other team — Roberto Bryan, Tanja McIntosh, Jose Miranda and Sher'ee Peters — developed a videotape. This team received a special award in addition to the superior scores given by the History Day judges. It was awarded the Arab-American Award by the Najda: Women Concerned about the Middle East. This is a new award for research that relates to Arabs or Abra-Americans. Christa McAuliffe, the subject of the team's videotape, was of Lebanese ancestry.

The videotape team members each received individual plaques, medals and $50 as part of the Arab-American Award.

While there, the teams toured Washington, D.C., and visited Congressman Richard Ray.

The trip to the University of Maryland will be a memorable one for the team members and their sponsors, Mary Barnette and Pam Tate.

By using the following procedure, soldiers on the Family Housing Waiting List can use this chart to estimate when they can expect quarters:

Locate your category of housing.

Note the eligibility date located on the same line as your category.

Calculate the time difference between the eligibility date listed and your eligibility date. The difference is the approximate time you still have to wait for housing.

EXAMPLE: If the latest eligibility date of the person who last received housing in your category was May 15, 1988, and your date of eligibility is Sept. 15, 1988, you can expect housing in about four months. If you do not know your eligibility date, call the Family Housing Office, building 399, at 545-3107.

Hall Of Fame gets another inductee

Shawn Bryson

Walter Santemaria, USARSA, translates for the speakers at the USARSA Hall of Fame induction ceremony.

An 11th inductee has been added to U.S. Army School of America's Hall of Fame. The commander of the Colombian army joins two fellow Colombians previously inducted.

By Shawn Bryson
Bayonet staff writer

The commander of the Colombian army became the 11th inductee in the Hall of Fame at the U.S. Army School of the Americas during a ceremony held at the school June 21.

Gen. Nelson Mejia-Henao joins two fellow Colombians in USARSA's Hall of Fame, which originated last fall.

Mejia first came into contact with the School of the Americas shortly after he began his military career in 1954. He graduated from USARSA's Infantry and Guerrilla Warfare courses while the school was still located at Fort Gulick, Panama.

Mejia also served as a guest instructor at USARSA from 1966 to 1967.

The keynote speaker at the induction ceremony was Lt. Gen. Charles W. Brown, director of the Defense Security Assistance Agency. Brown presented the certificate of induction to Mejia.

USARSA's Hall of Fame was initiated "to honor graduates that have gone on to become senior leaders in the militaries of the nations," according to Brown.

"Today, we induct an officer who has risen to the highest position in the army of the Republic of Colombia, and who, during the course of his career, has served as a model of military professionalism and devotion to duty," Brown said at the ceremony.

Mejia is an instructor at the Colombian Infantry School and Military Academy. He has also commanded at battalion and brigade levels, and served as the director of Army Instruction and Training in Colombia.

In 1981, Mejia was appointed as the director of the Colombian Military Academy and later made use of his law degree as the Staff Judge Advocate General of the Colombian army.

Mejia took over as the commander of the army in November 1988 and according to Brown, holds a demanding position.

"As commander of the Colombian army, General Mejia faces a number of difficult challenges, including leftist conservative groups that challenge the authority of Colombia's government," Brown said, "as well as heavily armed and increasingly violent narcotics traffickers." Mejia has met those challenges with great success.

Gen. Nelson Mejia Henao speaks at the induction ceremony.

Brown said Mejia has begun an ambitious program to restructure the Colombian army training program and acted aggressively to seize the initiative in counterinsurgency actions, Brown said.

Mejia plans to retire next year with the approval of the Colombian government.

Drug Suppression Team honored for successes

USAIC Public Affairs Office

The Fort Benning Drug Suppression Team was recognized by the post commanding general recently for its success in the interdiction of illegal drugs onto Fort Benning.

Maj. Gen. Michael F. Spigelmire presented awards to Special Agents Robert M. Jolley and Harold D. Feltenberger and Investigators Dianne Drawdy, Yvonne R. Turner and Lynda L. Aul.

"Our job is not normally recognized," Feltenberger said. "We appreciate the recognition for the long hours we've put in combating drugs at Fort Benning and the surrounding area."

Between Feb. 20 and May 5, the team seized cocaine and marijuana with a street value of over $1 million. This represents more illegal drugs seized by this office than in the last three years, according to the citation.

"The job of our five-man team is to identify drug activities and suppress them by making undercover purchases from drug dealers," Jolley said. "We then arrest military members involved in those drug dealings.

"We also work with the Metro Narcotics Task Force in Columbus to help identify civilians dealing drugs," he said.

Livingston awarded to Columbus woman

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

The woman who received the sixth annual Livingston Award at the Chattahoochee Valley-Fort Benning Chapter, Association of the U.S. Army summer general membership meeting here last week was born here.

Since she considers the post and surrounding areas her home, Lenora Smith has kept close ties with the community. She is a member of the Columbus and Phenix City Chamber of Commerce Military Affairs Committee, has served as president of the AUSA chapter and held various other positions within the chapter.

As a civilian sponsor for the Allied Officers in the International Student Training Detachment, she has had entire classes of the Allied Officers at her home.

Lenora Smith, winner of this year's Livingston Award.

Smith said that rarely does anyone surprise her with anything, but she was genuinely surprised that she was honored with the award.

"I'm thrilled they selected me," she said.

The Livingston Award was instituted by Cliff Livingston Sr. to honor unsung local citizens who enhance communication between soldiers and civilians in the Fort Benning, Columbus and Phenix City communities.

Tom Highland of the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit provided the handiwork for the painting.

The other winners of the Livingston Award are Art Chriss, ARCCO; Billy Key, First Union; Jon Hill, Mutual of Omaha; Paul Timm, Ledger-Enquirer and Jim Mattews, Dixie Beer.

AUSA gets new president; new officers installed

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

Charles A. McClure succeeded retired Maj. Gen. Robert Sullivan as president of the Chattahoochee Valley-Fort Benning Chapter, Association of the U.S. Army during the summer general membership meeting here last week.

Also installed into office were Ben F. Williams, 1st vice president; retired Col. Robert Poydasheff, 2nd vice president; Lt. Col Barry Mahek, secretary-treasurer and Lt. Col. McDonald Plummer Jr., assistant secretary-treasurer.

The newly installed board of directors are Perrin Trotter, retired Lt. Gen. Ben Register, retired Maj. Gen. Kenneth C. Leuer, John Boland, Dr. Frank D. Brown, Frank Etheridge, Larry Cardin.

McClure was unable to attend the meeting to officially accept his installation into office.

He is the owner of several broadcasting stations in the community and has been associated with AUSA for a number of years.

Guest speaker for the evening was Lt. Gen. Jimmy D. Ross, deputy chief of Staff Logistics, Department of the Army.

"Tough years are ahead for the Army," Ross said, "but, we will be continuing to modernize the Army."

He cited, for example, a number of new weapons and equipment already fielded. Among them were the Bradley Fighting Vehicle, M-1 Tank and Apache Helicopters.

In addition to weapons, he said soldiers will be seeing a new raincoat and wind breaker and cold weather gear.

"We are almost fully automated," he said. "The Army is more ready than it has been since Vietnam."

Other highlights were the presentation of the Livingston Award to Lenora Smith, as well as the Presidents Award to Forces Command NCO of the Year, Staff Sgt. Michael Delaney.

Another bonus for AUSA was a $10,800 check donated to the chapter from commissary officer, Jim Hobbit. The money was raised by General Foods, Webco Inc. and C. Lloyd Johnson, distributors that conducted promotions in the commissary.

OPINION

VARIOUS VOICES: Why are you serving in the Armed Forces?

Cadet John Boucher, Co. D, 1st Bn., 507th PIR — "I'm serving because I think I have good leadership qualities, and they will be best put to use in the Army."

Pvt. 2 John Raymond, 2nd Rgr. Bn., 75th Rgr. Regt., Fort Lewis, Wash. — "I joined because I wanted to be a ranger. It's something I've wanted to do since I was 14 years old."

Staff Sgt. William Rundle, Btry. C, 4th Bn., 41st Fld. Arty., 197th Inf. Bde. — "I joined to uphold the Constitution. I feel it's my patriotic duty."

Cadet Charles Salomons, Co. D, 1st Bn., 507th PIR — "Serving in the military is a good way to gain leadership experience. You can't get training like this anywhere in the civilian world."

Master Sgt. Dennis Shaffer, HQ, 1st Bn., 11th Inf. — "I joined to protect and defend. It's an American way of life."

Pvt. 2 Patrick Gower, Co. A, 3rd Bn., 75th Rgr. Regt. — "I joined to gain experience and earn money for college."

Vuono sends '4th' greetings

On the Fourth of July, our nation celebrates its 213th birthday. Across our great land and in many nations overseas, Americans will join together to proudly display their love of country and their commitment to its ideals.

You, the soldiers and civilians who serve the United States Army, display that same patriotism and dedication, not just on Independence Day but every single day of the year. Your sacrifices and selfless service have truly made a difference — keeping our country strong and allowing the flames of freedom to grow and spread worldwide.

As we celebrate our independence, it is most appropriate to familiarize ourselves with the document that announced our freedom, the Declaration of Independence, and the document that preserves it, the Constitution. The Constitution gives structure to our system of self-government and meaning to the freedom that was born in the Declaration of Independence.

This year, as we celebrate the Bicentennial of the establishment of our government under the Constitution, we appreciate even more the fulfillment of our Founding Fathers' dream to preserve our rights and protect our liberties.

On this Independence Day, the course to follow remains clear. We must continue to be vigilant, ready and strong. Peace will be our legacy and freedom the gift to our posterity.

CG offers advise to holiday travelers

Our nation declared its independence on the Fourth of July, 1776. For more than 200 years since then, Americans have celebrated Independence Day to pay annual tribute to the ideals expressed in the Declaration of Independence.

This year Independence Day falls on a Tuesday. Many families will plan a long weekend and travel great distances to be with relatives in a traditional renewal of family ties. Others may prefer to spend the holiday fishing, boating, swimming or enjoying other outdoor activities, such as those planned at Fort Benning.

We must all be alert to the fact that there are many hazards associated with our summertime holiday activities. The two hazards that cause most of the deaths during this period are automobile accidents and drownings.

Ignoring good safety practices costs lives. Fasten seat belts when you drive, take needed rest breaks and do not drink and drive. Swim only in approved areas, and, for boaters, wear personal flotation devices.

Be safe, have fun and enjoy an accident-free holiday.

GF7 saves first inaugural day

By Clyde Snively
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Our nation celebrates its 213th anniversary this year, yet this is only the 200th anniversary of the Constitution, which was finally adopted 200 years ago this past March.

It's also the bicentennial anniversary of the presidency, of congress and of the establishment of most cabinet positions, including the War Department and the Department of Army.

Since all these things have been around for 200 years, we take them for granted. But can you imagine the turmoil they went through when the founders of our country were first getting started.

I can, since my great, great, great, great, great, great, great grandfather, also known as great grandfather to the seventh power or GF7, Chauncey Bradley Sniffly was there.

GF7 Sniffly was George Washington's gardener. George trusted ol' Chauncey's common sense and good judgment so much, he gave him the additional duty of driver. It's a good thing for this country he did, too, for ol' Chauncey saved the day on Inauguration Day.

There was the usual New York City traffic that day. And while the congressmen and others couldn't make it to their first session on time, Chauncey got George to Federal Hall with time to spare.

In fact they were early, and Chauncey noticed some of the congressmen standing around with their heads together.

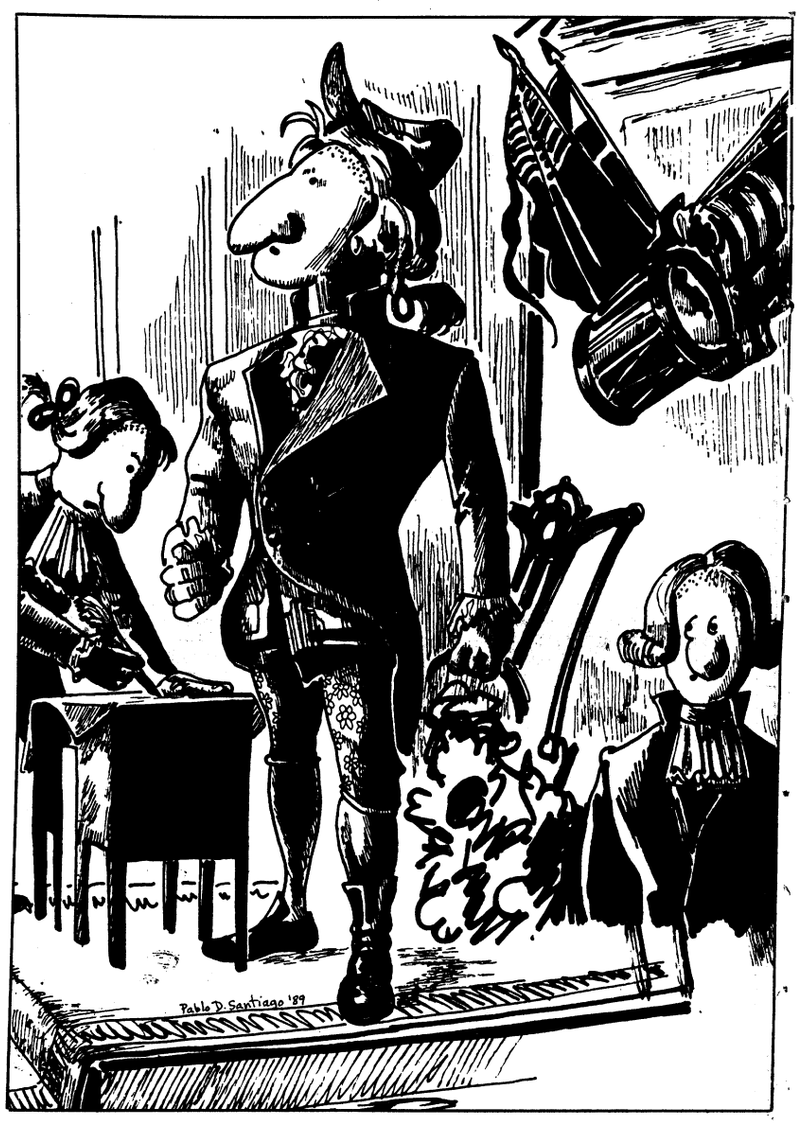
"What should we call him?" he heard congressmen asking one another. Someone suggested "Excellency," another wanted "His Highness." Some, who apparently would never find themselves in a rush or at a loss for words, thought "His Highness, the President of the United States and Protector of its Liberties" would do quite nicely.

For short, they recommended, "His Serene Highness" or "His Mightiness." He'd even been addressed as "The President General of the United States."

"What does the Constitution say?" one asked.

"Nothing," another replied.

It was then, Chauncey was spotted. Knowing how Washington respected his gardener's opinions, they asked him what he thought our first president should be called.



"Mr. President," Chauncey spoke up promptly, and that's what it's been ever since.

Hearing Chauncey's wise decision, John Adams, who was vice president, and thus president of the senate, then came up to Chauncey.

"I also have a problem, and hearing what you just told my colleagues, I thought I'd ask you for some help," the vice president said.

"Glad to be of service to my country," Chauncey replied.

"Great," Adams said, "What I need to know is where we should seat the president when he enters the senate chambers. As vice president of the United States, I feel I should give up my beautiful crimson seat, but as president of the senate, I don't feel I should. What do you say Mr. Sniffly."

GF7 thought about that one for a minute, then replied. "Why is the president coming to the senate?" he asked rhetorically. "To give a speech," Adams answered, realizing the solution. "Therefore he won't need a seat."

I'll bet the people in our protocol office who entertain a zillion or so visitors each year are glad most everything's been done before, and they don't have to beat new paths like that first congress did 200 years ago.

Following is as important as leading

By Santiago Acevedo
Army News Service

Whole courses and schools are devoted to leadership.

But nobody says much about being a good follower. That's a shame, because good followers are vital to the Army.

I did some research on being a good follower. I couldn't find much written on the topic, so I went to experts — followers.

Based on my research, I've come up with some suggestions for successful "followership."

First of all, understand your values and those of your leaders. Do your values coincide with your leader's? Values are the guiding lights that show you which way to go.

Be flexible. Change occurs so rapidly today.

Learn to anticipate problems, but don't be destroyed by an occasional foul-up. Learn to achieve your objective by adapting to unfavorable conditions.

Learn patience. Wait for the right moment to shine.

Don't lie. The worst thing that can happen to a follower is to be caught in a lie. It's not worth it.

Loyalty is another mark of a good follower. This entails supporting a leader's decision whether you agree or not. You can disagree with a supervisor and you're free to have opinions, but in the end, you must act according to your supervisor's positions.

Successful followers are positive thinkers. They don't gripe about problems, they solve them or get them solved.

Get along with your fellow soldiers. Internal battles mean less productivity.

Don't discuss office business with outsiders. Protect your organization's reputation and privacy.

Choose your battles with care and be realistic about your chances of winning.

Know more than people expect you to know. Stay on top of important and changing situations in your unit. Develop your MOS skills and basic soldier skills. Get to know your peers in the unit and try to learn what other units are doing.

Carry more than your share. Don't be satisfied with just being one of the masses who does only what is assigned. Ask for difficult assignments to show off your skills and understanding of the unit.

Above all, learn to communicate well. Listening often takes a back seat to talking. Good listening skills are vital to successful followers. Learn not to be confused by conflicting signals.

By now, you may have concluded that the rules for being a good follower parallel those for being a good leader. That shouldn't be a big surprise — after all, you've probably heard the old saying, "Those who would lead must first learn to follow."

SPIRIT

office hopes to get campaign back on track

By Shawn Bryson
Bayonet staff writer

Although the results of "SPIRIT Roundup Week," held here June 19 through 23, are not yet known, the SPIRIT office hopes the week will put Benning's SPIRIT campaign back on track.

Benning's total SPIRIT savings for 1989 are well beneath those of 1988 and 1987 at this point in the fiscal year, according to Sarah McLaney, installation SPIRIT coordinator.

McLaney said about 90 actions submitted so far this year put Fort Benning's SPIRIT savings at about $18 million going into the week. SPIRIT savings were considerably higher going into last year's campaign, called "Catch the SPIRIT Week."

One of the reasons the SPIRIT savings are lagging this year is because of a change in submitting procedures, McLaney said. "To cut down on paperwork, certain suggestions are being carried over into the fourth quarter," she said. Some suggestions are ongoing and dollar savings amounts cannot be determined until the end of the year.

"We proclaimed 'SPIRIT Roundup Week' to motivate people to look deeper for savings possibilities," McLaney said. "Although some people might think their organizations are too small to offer any substantial savings, participation is strongly encouraged, McLaney said. "Even the little things can add up to big dollars," she said.

Examples of savings actions include:

- Improvements in procedures, service, products or forms saving man-hours or actual dollars.
- Savings of time, money, supplies or other resources.
- Elimination or reduction of waste, expense or errors resulting in dollar savings to the government, either in man-hours of actual dollars.
- Increase in productivity, coordination or efficiency.

McLaney said the post has a long way to go to equal last year's $191.2 million total. That amount put Fort Benning ahead of all other Training and Doctrine Command installations and won the million-dollar prize for the second consecutive year.

SPIRIT goals for each of TRADOC's installations are set by TRADOC, and Benning's 1989 goal is $20 million McLaney explained. However, the last two years have shown Benning's ability to surpass the goals set by TRADOC, she said.

To promote the savings campaign, SPIRIT competitions are held every quarter. Organizations compete in three categories, directorate staffs; major command and personal and special staffs.

"It's definitely not too late to submit actions," McLaney said. "People just need to notify their SPIRIT points of contact."

New AAFES annex opens

By Cheryl Stall
29th Infantry Regiment

Amidst a downpour of rain and several power outages, more than 80 people gathered June 16, for the grand-opening and ribbon-cutting ceremony of the newest AAFES annex.

Thanks to the Army Communities of Excellence Program, the 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment soldiers now have the convenience of an exchange annex in the unit area.

"The store was opened in a combined effort between AAFES and the post chain of command," said Brenda Augustus, post exchange branch store manager.

"The store has not been as busy as was expected," Augustus said, and attributed that to many soldiers not yet knowing about the new store. She added that "Management is listening to all suggestions that would make the store more attractive by increasing the convenience to the customers."

The new post exchange is open 11 a.m. to 8 p.m., Sunday through Saturday.

VACATION HAZARDS

may bring your holiday activities to a screeching halt

Infantry Branch Safety Office

Vacation activities vary from fishing, golfing and camping — to swimming, hiking and sightseeing — to going to the seashore or mountains — to staying at home and taking it easy.

One person's work, such as painting a house, working in the garden or building a patio, may be another person's vacation.

Although vacation activities differ widely, they have one thing in common — each can be ruined by an accident.

Don't let an outdoor accident keep you indoors. Know the special hazards of your vacation area. Learn to identify poisonous plants and snakes. When camping in state or national forests, be extra careful with fire. Put out camp fires. When the heat is on, take your first baskings a little at a time — you don't need a light meter to tell you when the sun's bright enough to burn.

However, many people don't know it's possible to get a bad sunburn on hazy days if exposed long enough.

Swimming, boating and fishing are fun, but taking chances while having fun can spell disaster. Know and observe your swimming limitations.

- Never swim alone.
- Be aware of the tide and currents and the depth of the water.
- Never overload a boat or canoe.
- Keep sufficient and adequate "preservers" on hand.
- If your boat overturns, stay with it until help arrives.
- When fishing, watch the hook — learn to cast properly to protect yourself and others.
- Immediate first aid can prevent an injury from becoming infected.
- When water skiing, even expert swimmers should wear a life vest. Also, the boat needs two people in it — one to watch the skier.
- Know the waterway rules, and comply with all coast guard regulations.
- Be alert for swimmers and fallen skiers.

Backyard wading pools can create severe hazards to children.

Small children should be closely supervised when using such pools, and pools containing water should never be left unattended.

Military and civilian employees as well as their family members should be encouraged to use approved swimming pools only. Such locations should meet health and safety requirements and be under constant supervision by personnel trained in rescue and lifesaving techniques.

For the stay-at-homer, accidents can also happen, such as, falls, burns, strains, shock, over exertion and overexposure to sun. Each job or task and outdoor vacation activity requires accident prevention planning and procedures to ensure an injury free holiday.

Take it easy. Trying to crowd a year's exercise into a few weeks can not only cause you to become exhausted, but also contribute to a heart attack. Don't tax your energy — relax and renew it.

If you don't try to do too much and you do it safely, your vacation will pay off in fun, health and enjoyment.

C5-A returns for training mission

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

The Air Forces' largest aircraft, the C5-A Galaxy, made a return trip to Fort Benning this month to conduct an airborne training mission with members of the 1st Battalion, 507th Parachute Infantry Regiment.

The paratroopers were scheduled for an exercise with the aircraft earlier this month, but it was canceled due to mission requirements, according to Maj. Charles Busick, executive officer and S-3 of the battalion.

Busick, who coordinated the mission for the soldiers, said they conducted the air insertion from the aircraft to maintain proficiency in their jobs.

The soldiers did an insertion into Fryar Drop Zone.

Busick said the troops do exercises like this monthly besides performing their regular duties as trainers for the basic airborne course.

By using the following procedure, soldiers on the Family Housing Waiting List can use this chart to estimate when they can expect quarters:

Locate your category of housing.

Note the eligibility date located on the same line as your category.

Calculate the time difference between the eligibility date listed and your eligibility date. The difference is the approximate time you still have to wait for housing.

EXAMPLE: If the latest eligibility date of the person who last received housing in your category was May 15, 1988, and your date of eligibility is Sept. 15, 1988, you can expect housing in about four months. If you do not know your eligibility date, call the Family Housing Office, building 399, at 545-3107.

M-60A3 tanks move down range engaging targets during a recent gunnery at Fort Benning.

69th Armor shows off shocking firepower

By Aurelio Feliberty
197th Infantry Brigade

Displaying their deadly accuracy and shocking firepower, tankers of Company B, 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor recently qualified at the range here.

"The object of the gunnery is to prove you can become "High Tanker," and that's what I did," said Sgt. Henry Thornton, an M-60A3 tank gunner, who achieved the title of "High Tanker."

"Despite the bad weather and malfunctions we encountered, teamwork got us through the exercise," he said.

This exercise is held periodically to maintain crew gunnery standards, while putting more emphasis on the gunners to enhance their striking ability.

The exercise is competitive, matching tank crews against each another, which results in increasing the determination to excel. The gunner with the most points wins the title of "High Tanker."

With this qualification, Thornton's crew contributed to the platoon being designated most outstanding in the battalion, according to Staff Sgt. Francisco Colon.

"This exercise took a lot out of everybody, but we managed to win top honors," said Sgt. 1st Class Pedro A. San Miguel, a tank commander.

San Miguel added, "I am

197th Infantry Brigade gets new commander

By Andrew P. Wiese
197th Infantry Brigade

A recent ceremony at Kelley Hill, marked the beginning of a career move for one and the end of a career move for another as Lt. Col. Jefferson D. Huffam took command of the 197th Support Battalion from Lt. Col. Gene Lewellyn.

"I feel very confident in placing the command of the 197th Support Battalion 'Dependables' into Jeff Huffam's control, said Col. Harvey D. Watson, commander of the 197th Infantry Brigade. "He is an outstanding and dependable combat veteran with a vast amount of command and staff experience under his belt. I don't think the battalion will miss a beat."

Huffam served several years as an enlisted member before being commissioned as a second lieutenant in the infantry through Officer Candidate School in July 1972.

His assignments include being a drill instructor at Fort Gordon, Ga. and Fort Campbell, Ky; a platoon sergeant in Vietnam; a company commander at Fort Jackson, S.C. and various logistical staff and operations positions at Fort Bragg, N.C. and in Germany.

Huffam's decorations include the Meritorious Service Medal (1st oak leaf cluster), Army Commendation Medal (V device with 3rd oak leaf cluster) and the Army Achievement Medal. He has also been awarded the Combat Infantry Badge and the Drill Sergeant Badge.

"I think this is a great opportunity for me to charge each of you as members of the 197th Support Battalion to make it bigger and better than ever before," Huffam said, in his first address to his soldiers.

Lewellyn said, "Even though I'm relinquishing command of the Dependables, I can't think of a better person to turn over the command to than Lieutenant Colonel Jeff Huffam.

Huffam joins the 197th family with his wife Sarah and their two daughters, Sharnette and Danyelle.

3 commissioned into aviation

Three OCS candidates were commissioned into Army Aviation in ceremonies conducted at Fort Benning June 21.

The officers are 2nd Lts. Lloyd S. Ashby, Harold A. Christy Jr., and David A. Toon.

Colonel Lynn Handy, deputy assistant commandant, United States Army Aviation Center spoke to and presented aviation brass, courtesy of the USAAVNC Chapter Army Aviation Association of America to the officers during a special branching ceremony prior to their graduation.

They each received an aviation branch letter of welcome from Maj. Gen. Ellis D. Parker, the commanding general of the Aviation Center, Fort Rucker, Ala.

The officers will continue their training at Fort Rucker where they will attend the Aviation Officer Basic Course and Initial Entry Rotary Wing Flight Training.

197th Infantry soldiers tested on readiness

By Aurelio Feliberty
197th Infantry Brigade

4th Battalion, 41st Field Artillery, 197th Infantry Brigade recently conducted a rapid deployment exercise at Fort Benning to test its readiness.

This was the first time the unit loaded its howitzer gun systems on a C-5A Air Force aircraft, according to Capt. Javier Mora, Batttery C commander.

The C-5A aircraft, which is one of the largest troop and cargo carriers in the world, provided a tremendous opportunity for 4th Bn., 41st Fld. Arty., to exercise its rapid deployment capability without any additional costs.

"This was an excellent training exercise backed up by a good training scenario, which was accomplished at no expense to the battalion. The C-5A initially flew in for another exercise scheduled for the day after," said Capt. Lillian D. Common, 197th transportation officer.

"Taking advantage of this opportunity allowed batteries of 4th Bn. to test their abilities to rapidly deploy a heavy task force at any given time," Commons said.

"This allowed the soldiers to receive adequate training in loading and unloading different types of vehicles," Mora said, "which resulted in working with 30 vehicles."

The battery had been notified three days prior to the mock departure, so in essence, they were combat ready in 96 hours.

The battery was tested in all phases of these 96 hours of deployment, including resolving possible "game stoppers." One problem encountered was that the self-propelled howitzer drivers were not given clearance to drive on the roads to Lawson Airfield, forcing the battalion to find a quick solution.

Through coordination, the battalion was able to use 2nd Battalion, 12th Transportation, a reserve unit from Chattanooga, Tenn., which was conducting its yearly training exercise at Fort Benning.

"This unit greatly assisted by transporting the howitzers to the airfield with their Heavy Equipment Transports," Commons said.

"This was a hot day, so it was no easy job loading the howitzers, a 50,000-pound tank, along with other vehicles such as 2-1/2-ton trucks, High Mobility Multipurpose Wheeled Vehicles and M-548 cargo carriers then unloading them," said Mora.

TRADOC keeps tabs on unit equipment

TRADOC News Release

After a four-year absence, the Training and Doctrine Command's Equipment Survey Team is back in business.

Budget constraints in 1985 eliminated the team's personnel and funding, which essentially meant it could no longer conduct business. The revamped team is leaner and more technologically oriented.

"In 1984, there were eight people on the team," said Joe Schuetz, team chief. "Now there are four of us."

The team's job is to ensure that the $5.6 billion worth of equipment in the command is where it's supposed to be and that it is being effectively used. Team members rely heavily on automation to make up for the difference in man power.

"In the old days, the team did everything by hand," Schuetz said. "They looked at every line item on a unit's Table of Distribution and Allowance, calculated costs of equipment and checked the individual hand receipts to account for all the equipment the TDA said the unit had. That was extremely time-consuming.

"We have built a lot of computer programs to do that for us. And we use portable computers in the field. However, we still deal personally with every installation hand receipt holder.

Every request by a unit for an equipment change to its TDA is routed through the team at TRADOC. The team members, working with subject matter experts at headquarters, scrutinize justifications to ensure that facts are fully presented.

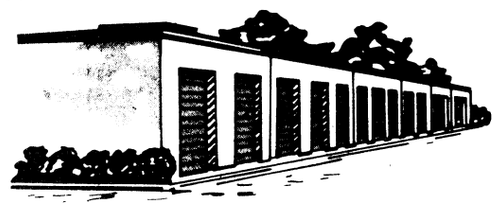
In some cases, they will correct submissions to help ensure their approval. But with a limited staff, and an average of 150 actions on hand at any given time, the team has to return some requests for the submitters to correct.

"We try to help the commander and his people get the authorization for equipment they need to do a job," Schuetz said. "Or we help them turn equipment in when it is no longer needed."

On the team's first trip to Fort Bragg, N.C., it helped JFK Special Warfare Center officials prepare and justify more than 100 requests for $1.7 million worth of new equipment.

The team also helped to identify equipment no longer needed. By doing so, they removed more than $7 million worth of equipment from the center's account.

Center officials were so pleased with the assistance provided by the team that they funded a trip for the team to provide the same service to a detached unit.



Tank

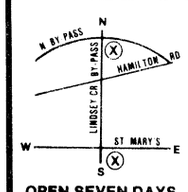
pleased with the platoon's performance and especially with seeing everyone pull for one another. This is what allowed our platoon to get "High Tanker."



Pfc. William James, an ammo loader said, "For the first field exercise I've been on after Advanced Individual Training, it's been a great experience. I had never encountered something like this."

FORT BENNING

YOU MAY BE ELIGIBLE FOR LANGUAGE SCHOOL. BUT YOU WON'T KNOW UNLESS YOU ASK.

Have a talent for languages? If so, we can help you fine-tune that talent at the Army's Foreign Language Institute.

We have openings for linguists, and if you have the skills and qualifications, this might be a reenlistment option worth considering.

You may be able to study Russian, German, Korean, Arabic, Spanish or Czech. And upon completion of language school, you could be assigned to an Army Cryptologic Support Unit where you'll use high-tech electronic equipment and sophisticated analysis techniques.

Assignments are throughout the United States, as well as overseas. Sound interesting? Let's talk, and bring your spouse along.

ARMY. BE ALL YOU CAN BE.® REENLIST.

Q: WHAT'S THE MOST IMPORTANT JOB IN THE ARMY?

A: EVERYONE'S.

That's right. Even though it may seem tedious or insignificant, we know the job you're doing is important. More important than you even realize.

Because it's part of a much larger picture.

For the Army to run smoothly and efficiently, it needs the efforts of all its soldiers. From the generals to the privates in basic training, the Army needs bright, skilled, dedicated soldiers. Soldiers who really care. Soldiers who try to do their best, in whatever they're asked to do.

Because when soldiers do their part, they keep the Army running strong. And that's what helps keep America strong.

REENLIST ARMY.
BE ALL YOU CAN BE.

ASK THE JUDGE

By Jane M. Winand
Civilian attorney

Q. My husband, who retired after 30 years in the Army, recently passed away. I went to a civilian attorney for some help with his estate.

I thought that I wouldn't have any problems because my husband had a will that left everything to me. However, the attorney I spoke with was very concerned that my husband's will was signed in January 1970 and didn't have a self-proving clause with it. What is the big deal about a self-proving clause? Is the will any good?

A. The first thing you should be aware of is that as a family member of a retired soldier, you may be entitled to legal assistance at the JAG Office to probate the will. This could save you a lot of money because the JAG attorneys do not charge for the services that they render.

I advise you to check with the Legal Assistance Office as to whether you are entitled to such assistance.

The civilian attorney you spoke with was justified in mentioning the lack of a self-proving clause because its absence could make the probate of your husband's estate much more time consuming and involved than it need be.

In the early 1980s, most state legislatures enacted provisions sanctioning the use of self-proving clauses. Thus, when an individual made a new will, another page was attached to the back of the will that attested to the fact that the testator signed the will and witnesses watched him sign it.

This additional document was then signed by a notary public, and the notary seal placed on the clause. The significance of this document is that it is no longer necessary to locate the witnesses to have them testify they watched the testator sign the will. For those soldiers who had wills signed years ago at old duty stations using witnesses who happened to be present in the legal office at the time, big problems can arise when, years later, it is necessary to locate those witnesses.

Imagine someone trying to locate a witness 15 years from now at the apartment that they rented while attended IOAC at Fort Benning.

Fortunately, Georgia law provides that Georgia residents' wills may still be probated, even if the original witnesses cannot be located and no self-proving clause was used.

In this situation, two disinterested witnesses must come to the Probate Court and testify that they had watched the testator sign his signature on several occasions and, after examining the will, they can testify the signature is that of the testator.

This process requires that two witnesses take their own time to come to the court and that they be suitably qualified to testify as to the appearance of the testator's signature. It is so much simpler to merely present the self-proving clause with the will and have the probate procedure over quickly.

The law of other states may not provide such an alternative method to probate wills if the original witnesses cannot be located.

To be safe, it's best to review your will at least every four to five years to ensure your estate will benefit not only from the specific distribution plans you have, but also the latest changes in the law, such as self-proving clauses.

Call the Legal Assistance Office at 545-3281 to have your will reviewed and another drafted if needed. We have the capability in most situations of having you meet with an attorney and having the will drafted and signed by you, all within about an hour.

2 marathoners save ranger student's life

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

When two Fort Benning soldiers were out running recently, they didn't think they'd end up saving someone's life, but they did.

It happened to ultra runners Staff Sgt. Carl Barshinger, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 75th Ranger Regiment, and Chief Warrant Officer Richard Schick while they were out for a 14-mile jaunt on Lightning Road.

They said they heard something in the woods and assumed it was ranger students on the compass course. They said it wasn't uncommon to hear students out there.

However, the men realized the sound was a little different so they stopped to investigate.

What they found was a ranger student, Cpl. Tommy L. Jones, who had been stung by a bee.

Jones explained his allergy to bee stings. He said he had treated himself with a bee sting kit but still needed help.

"We took immediate action," Barshinger said.

Although Schick is a physician assistant and trained in medical procedures, he is the faster runner so he ran for help.

Additionally, Schick said since he is known by the medical staff, he would be able to summon help faster.

"Although I have more medical experience, I felt confident leaving the student with Sergeant Barshinger because I know he has had medic training," Schick said.

"Also, we had no equipment with us so I couldn't do anymore than he could."

As soon as Schick left for help, the student's condition got worse.

Barshinger said the soldier began swelling and lost control of his breathing.

"I turned him on his side and made sure his airway was kept clear," he said.

"Then, I just kept assuring him he would be all right and made sure he remained calm until help arrived."

"When I got back with help, I couldn't believe how much his condition had deteriorated," Schick said. "I started an IV and stabilized him as we drove to the hospital."

"The doctors at the hospital said if Barshinger hadn't reacted the way he did, the soldier would be dead."

"Thank God we were there at the right time," Barshinger said, "I'm just glad I had the training."

The soldier they saved is well and has gone back to his home station in Fort Ord, Calif.

As for the heroes, it's duty as usual. Barshinger is preparing to move to another post, and Schick is continuing his medical work.

Company contributes car seats to ACS

Donations will help keep families safe

By Shawn Bryson
Bayonet staff writer

A local insurance company recently pitched in to help the efforts of Fort Benning's Army Community Services.

GEICO and Affiliates donated seven used, but practically new, child car seats to ACS.

James M. Irvin, a general field representative with the company, presented the car seats to Carla Cary, director of ACS, June 20.

The car seats, he explained, had been used by some of the company's policy holders and then turned back in.

Irvin said his company enjoys serving the military and wants to support the Armed Forces as much as it can.

He added that the company plans to continue to provide car seats to ACS when it can.

"I think this is just great," Cary said. "The donation will help keep our families safe.

"Additionally, it ties right in to our Outreach Program. For example, soldiers who get to Fort Benning before their household goods arrive can borrow a car seat from us for 30 days," she said.

Geico had originally planned to donate 10 car seats, but the other three weren't attainable, according to Irvin.

Anyone interested in borrowing a car seat or donating one, may call 545-4043 or visit the Linen Closet in building 2634 in Soldier's Plaza.

Employees landscape Food Service grounds

By Beverly Howell
Management Analysis Division

Army Communities of Excellence means excellence in facilities as well as services.

Excellence in facilities is evident in landscaping and building upkeep.

Recently, Food Services employees at Building 2613 improved the looks of their area by landscaping around the building. They built two flower beds out of railroad ties and filled them with flowers, seeded and fertilized the grass, planted trees and neatly trimmed the shrubs and grass.

Later, they have plans to gravel the loading area and plant shrubs near the loading dock.

However, excellence in services is not as noticeable and often goes unrewarded.

The Management Analysis Division would like to hear about anyone in the Fort Benning community who has shown excellence in service.

If you know of someone who has gone out of their way to improved their area, call the Management Analysis Division at 545-5382 or 545-2557.

DEH shuts off air to comply with post power contract

By Becky Ray
Energy Branch

Occasionally, the Directorate of Engineering and Housing's Energy Management and Control System is used to curtail, or turn off, air conditioning in most Fort Benning facilities when electricity is at great demand.

A common misconception is that curtailment is a means to meet energy goals by cutting back on electrical use.

The true reason for curtailment is to comply with the contractual agreement Fort Benning has made with Georgia Power Company, from which the post's electricity is purchased.

Fort Benning is the largest single electrical consumer in southwest Georgia and the eighth largest electrical user in the state.

When Georgia Power is operating at maximum capacity, users with special agreements are asked to curtail demand to meet needs for all customers.

Fort Benning has such an agreement and complies with these requests by reducing electrical loads, or load shedding.

In return, Georgia Power allows Fort Benning to purchase electricity at reduced rates.

The substantial savings realized from these rates allows the post to provide air conditioning earlier and later in the season than would be possible otherwise.

Cost savings in 1988 totaled $607,000, and the same amount is expected to be saved in 1989.

The money saved is used to cool buildings before and after the normal cooling season.

Even though curtailments normally occur during very warm weather, air conditioning systems are cycled on as conditions permit to maintain a degree of comfort for building occupants.

In 1987, there were six curtailment periods.

In 1988, in spite of record high temperatures, there were only eight.

By curtailing electrical use during peak periods, Fort Benning is able to buy electricity cheaper during the hot summer months.

The curtailments may cause an inconvenience to some personnel and residents, but overall it's a small price to pay for the benefits gained.

First Step joins new, inexperienced parents with trained volunteers

By Karen T. Crowley
Installation Volunteer Coordinator

First Step is a new program designed to bridge the gap for new parents who find themselves a long way from home and the support of the families and friends.

The goal of the program is to connect new, inexperienced parents with trained volunteers while the mother is still expecting or at the maternity ward at Martin Army Community Hospital.

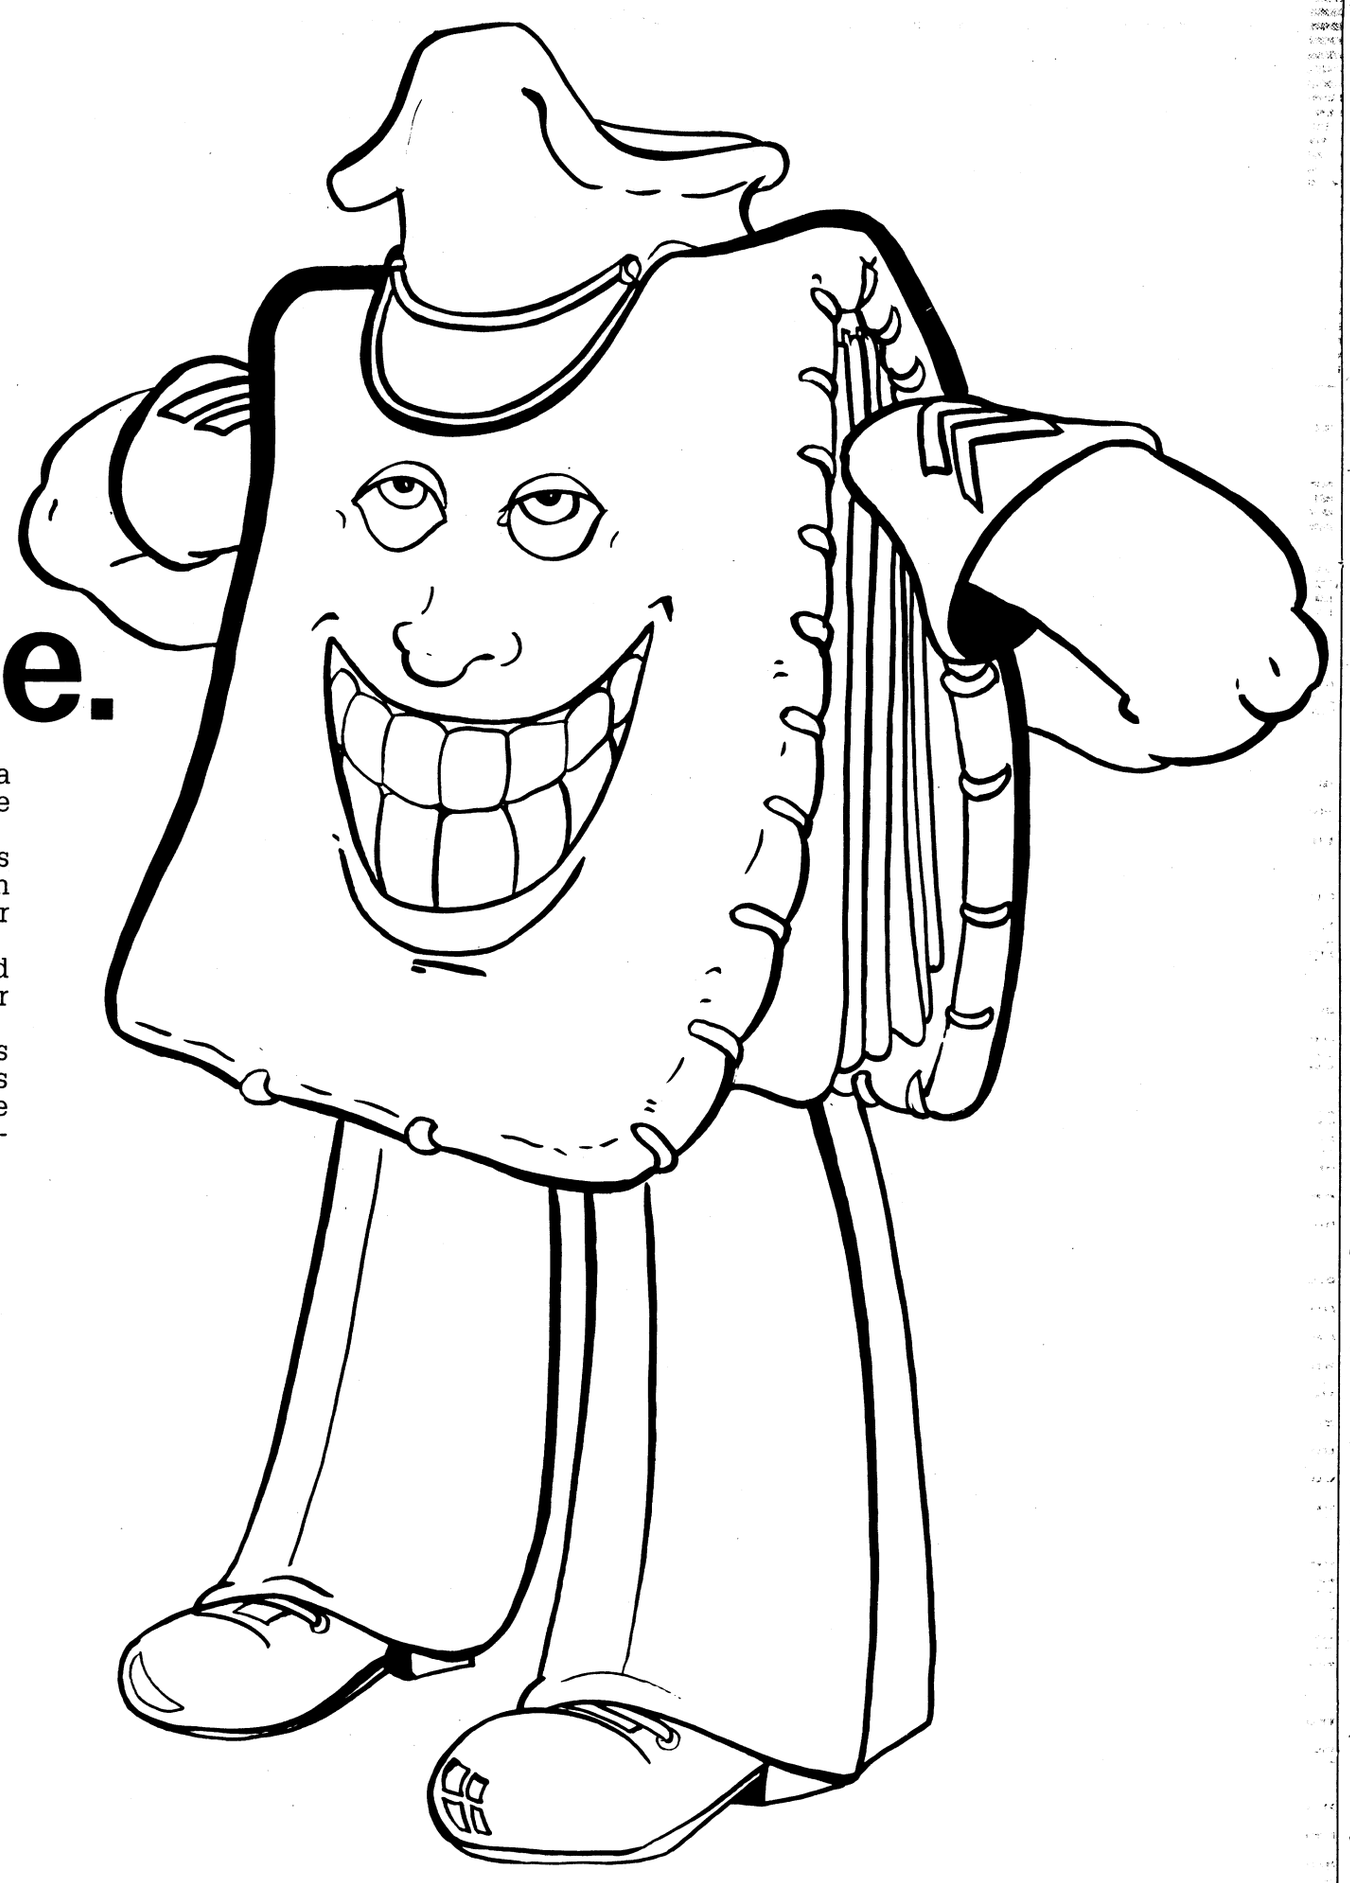
The program "is all about daring to care about our fellow military members and taking the first step toward ensuring a healthy start for our new military families," said Peggy Paape, First Step coordinator.

First Step volunteers come as friends and "voices of experience."

Volunteers willingly offer to listen to concerns of new parents. When appropriate, they offer guidance or help parents locate military and community agencies to help ensure a healthy start for baby and family.

The new parent receives a child development calendar to familiarize parents with normal child development sequences.

New parents are offered home visits or telephone contact with volunteers.



Volunteers are currently being recruited for the August training program.

Training includes 18 hours of orientation from American Red Cross, Community Health Nurse, Child Development Services, Department of Nursing, Army Family Advocacy Program, Social Services, University of Georgia Extension Services, the Columbus Regional Chartered Council on Child Abuse, Inc. and the Post Volunteer Resource Center.

Individuals interested in becoming a First Step volunteer may call 545-5602 for more information.

Golfer's 10 under wins tournament

By Shawn Bryson
Bayonet staff writer

The second-place finisher in last week's Bi-City Golf Tournament at Fort Benning went 10 under par Sunday en route to an unchallenged victory at the 10th annual Purple and Gold Golf Tournament at the Follow Me Golf Course.

Jeff Darrah, of Columbus, was the only one of 52 competitors to finish below par in the two-day tournament. He showed at eight strokes under the course's par 72 in the first of two rounds in the championship flight. Darrah's second round of 70 kept him under par for the day.

"I hit the ball and putted well, and everything worked out great," Darrah said at the awards ceremony. This was Darrah's first try at the Purple and Gold. "I didn't know whether I'd win or not, but I felt pretty confident."

Robert Price chipped in for a birdie on the 10th hole capturing second place in a sudden-death playoff with Robert Kelley. Both shot a two-game 147, 11 strokes behind Darrah's 136. Fourth place went to George Harrell with 149.

Darrah also took home prizes for having the longest drive on the ninth hole Sunday, as well as being closest to the hole on the 16th. R.C. Price won Sunday's special competition for closest to the hole on the 4th hole.

Saturday's special competitions went to Ben Toombs, longest drive, and Melvin Neal and James Starling, closest to the hole.

This was the first time the Purple and Gold Tournament has been played at Fort Benning, according to Robert Anderson, member of Omega Psi Phi, the fraternity that started the tournament in 1979.

Anderson said the tournament was created not only for fun, but also to raise funds for charities and scholarships.

Finishers in flights one through four are as follows:

FLIGHT #1

Wes Brown	81-77—158
Melvin Neal	81-79—160
James Holloway	80-82—162

FLIGHT #2

Willie Watkins	85-86—171

MEDDAC slips past IOBC to capture post championship

By Ron Allen
Bayonet staff writer

The Medical Department Activity slipped by IOBC 2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry, 4-2, to win the 1989 USAIC Softball Championship June 23.

"We displayed a lot of teamwork throughout the tournament," said Davey "Dip" Parker, the MEDDAC coach. "I believe that's why we won."

"We have a lot of power hitters, but when they weren't hot, the defense was," Parker said. "If I had to pick an MVP (most valuable player), it would have to be the whole team."

"Last year we were ranked second and just didn't get the recognition I felt we deserved," Parker said. "This year, we made sure."

MEDDAC toppled 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry in the first round of play, 7-5, and went on to drop 2nd Battalion, 58th Infantry and 4th Battalion, 41st Field Artillery to get to the championship game.

The IOBC team battled through 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry; Company C, 43rd Engineers and Military Policy Activity to make its way to the finals. IOBC finished up its semi-final game against MPA just minutes before the championship game against MEDDAC. They crushed MPA 14-3.

"I congratulate MEDDAC on winning the tournament," said Peter Galgani, the IOBC coach. "I still feel we are the better team. If we played them 10 times, we'd win seven. We were just tired."

"Due to rain on Thursday, we had to play our semi-final game right before the championship game," Galgani said. "While we were playing, MEDDAC was sitting in the stands taking it easy."

"We had some dramatic moments during the tournament," Galgani said. "Darryl Baker hit a grand slam pinch hit against the 29th. We beat them 13-9. In the second game, we shut out 43rd Engr. 6-0, and then we beat 41st Fld. Arty. 4-3 in a very tough game just before we had to take on MEDDAC. I have no doubt we'll win the second half season tournament."

MEDDAC's winning pitcher was Keith "Ferg" Ferguson. The losing pitcher for IOBC was Galgani.

The battle for third place in the tournament was between MPA, who had lost minutes before to IOBC, and 41st Fld. Arty. The 41st Fld. Arty. won 5-4.

"We never forgot to have fun," said Fred Heldt, the 41st coach. "I'd like to thank the other teams, it was a lot of fun."

Scouts learn about a bass boat.

Bass Club sponsors clinic for area Boy Scout troops

By Jackie Marsh
Fort Benning Bass Club

A Boy Scout merit badge clinic was sponsored by the Fort Benning Bass Club June 24 at the Uchee Creek Recreation Area.

Forty to 50 scouts attended the clinic, which was open and free to all local and surrounding area Boy Scout troops.

The merit badge clinic gives scouts an opportunity to earn a merit badge they might not otherwise be unable to earn.

The clinic is broken into five stations, which each group visits in a round-robin manner. Each station has specific subjects that are taught, and each lasts about 50 minutes.

Subjects taught at the various stations include care and use of different types of rods and reels, demonstrations on knot tying and casting, fishing safety practices, fish and game regulations, good sportsmanlike behavior, parts of the boat, required safety equipment and safe boating operation.

Each scout was allowed to operate a motorboat and was taken out by Bass Club members to attempt to catch three species of fish. Bass Club member volunteers manned all of the stations.

At least one group said they traveled almost an hour to participate in the clinic.

Leon Jordan Marine provided a new Skeeter bass boat for the demonstration at the motorboat station, and Calvin's Outdoor World provided a complimentary package of plastic worms for each scout.

The Fort Benning Bass Club sponsors and participates in a number of civic functions throughout the year. Anyone interested in becoming a part of a fishing club that not only catches fish but promotes conservation, good sportsmanship and community pride as well may contact Porter Angel at 569-9100 or Joe Wikoff at 685-0301 or attend a club meeting.

Meetings are held the second and fourth Monday of each month in Building 2616 on the second floor at 7:30 p.m.

4th Bn., 41st FA battles MEDDAC

By Andrew P. Wiese
197th Infantry Brigade

The 4th Battalion, 41st Field Artillery recently battled the Medical Department Activity for two days in a post softball playoff game.

MEDDAC went on to defeat 4th Bn., 41st Fld. Arty., 4-3.

The game started with two scoreless innings. But in the third inning, the Fld. Arty. team scored three runs.

MEDDAC brought two runs home in the fourth.

"Hard work, good organization and a lot of practice got our team this far," said Fred Heldt, 4th Bn., 41st Fld. Arty. team captain.

MEDDAC's team captain Davey Parker said, "We have received great team support, and practice has made our defense unbeatable. We may not come out strong at first, but we will win."

As the top of the fifth inning came around, so did the rain, which quickly turned into a downpour. Officials postponed the game until the next day.

When the game continued, both teams were pumped up and ready to finish the game.

In the bottom of the sixth, MEDDAC players batted in RBI singles to take the lead, 4-3 which they held until the end.

The victory put MEDDAC into the post championship game and knocked 41st Fld. Arty. into the consolation game for third or fourth place.

"After the postponement, we returned with the weakest part of our lineup batting," said Robert Headrick, a 4th Bn., 41st Fld. Arty. player. "We lost this one, but we will take third place."

Youth fishing event today in Eufaula

Fish World Inc.

One of the largest youth fishing events ever, will be held today in Eufaula, Ala.

Tom Mann's Junior Fisherman Tournament will be held in conjunction with the Research Angler Rally and will take place across from Fish World on U.S. Highway 431 North in Eufaula.

Over 600 children attend Bible School

By Debra Galle
USAIC Chaplain's Office

More than 600 children attended Vacation Bible School for a "Journey with Jesus through time and space" at Fort Benning's Patch and Faith Schools last week.

The children were given an intergalactic flight pass aboard the Joyship Energize, on which they embarked on an adventure back in time to learn about Jesus.

"Joy Trek," as the series of study was called, had an outer space theme with a down-to-earth purpose.

Apolla Koala, a fictional koala bear, was one of the special friends of the grade school children that helped present each day's lesson.

An annual, post-wide event, Vacation Bible School is part of the Religious Education Program. The program for children, third grade through high school ages, was held at Faith School under the direction of Chap. (Lt. Col.) Doug Stephenson, chief installation support troops and ITC chaplain. Students attended under the supervision of nearly 60 volunteers and 27 soldiers. The soldiers who participated were from the Reception Battalion or in transition from Advanced Individual Training or Airborne School.

"The devotion and commitment of the many volunteers, including chaplains and their wives, made the program a great success," Stephenson said.

Chap. (Col.) Roy N. Mathis, installation staff chaplain, said he places great importance in the religious education program at Fort Benning. Vacation Bible School is a critical facet of this education.

"Nearly half of the chaplains on post participated in some way with this year's program, which touched so many of our children," Mathis said.

Younger children attended classes at Patch School. According to Chap. (Capt.) James Leston, faces and attitudes remained cheerful throughout the week.

"One little boy told me he wanted VBS to last 1,000 days," said Leston, whose wife, Patty was one of the directors of the Patch program. "The kids were always happy and seemed to enjoy each day. The enthusiasm of the teachers, aids and student helpers kept everyone in high spirits, and that was the important thing."

Daily student attendance at Patch school was about 175 along with about 25 teachers, aids and helpers.

Activities of the days were varied, fast-paced and designed for quality time. Music was filled with joyous and upbeat material, as well as the ever-popular, "Jesus Loves Me." The theme of Jesus as a loving source of hope and guidance to the children even carried over into the recreation activities. Crafts kept young minds and hands busy making mementos of their days aboard the Joyship Energize.

God's word points out human imperfections

By Chap. Dale V. Heinlein
727th Support Battalion

As you gaze into a mirror, you are reminded that you're not flawless.

You may think despairingly, "Oh, no, another wrinkle." Like it or not, mirrors don't lie.

The word of God acts like a mirror. It reveals that our imperfections go much deeper than our skin. According to God's word, our imperfections go deep down into our very heart and soul as a result of sin.

Because of sin we're imperfect. If left on our own, we would be helpless to do anything to change our hopeless situation.

A woman who wanted to change her appearance read a sign in the hair stylist's window that advertised, "Come on in; we'll do you justice." She entered and said with disgust, "I don't need justice; I need mercy."

Mercy is a blessing that is an act of God's favor or compassion. Mercy is the message of God's good news to afflicted individuals who are poor sinners in critical need of God's promised Liberator, His Son, Jesus Christ.

Chapter 61 of Isaiah presents a powerful description of God's Liberator: "The Spirit of the Lord God is upon me, because the Lord has anointed me to bring good news to the afflicted. He has sent me to bind up the broken hearted, to proclaim liberty to the captives and freedom to prisoners."

Compassionately, God came to our rescue. In Christ, He offers "Liberty to the captives and freedom to prisoners."

We are held captive by sin's strong grip on our lives. Yet, God demands us to be perfect, and we can't meet His demands no matter how hard we try. 1st John 1:18 declares, "If we say we have no sin, we are deceiving ourselves, and the truth is not in us."

As we fight daily spiritual battles between the forces of good and evil, we are encouraged by the fact that God is on our side.

In the mirror of His word, we see God's love for us, His commitment to us, in Christ Jesus — our Deliverer. Through Jesus we are released from the eternal penalty of our sins because He shed His blood on a cross at Calvary.

You are invited to become a mirror of His reflection in the Fort Benning worshiping community where you will hear God's news and be strengthened by the fellowship of believers.

For information concerning worship and religious education opportunities on post, call the post chaplain's office at 545-2288.

CHAPEL BRIEFS

Ecumenical

Library — Several thousand volumes of Catholic, Protestant, and Jewish material are available at the Religious Education Center Library. There are commentaries, Bible dictionaries, Bible handbooks and many other reference books and other religious material.

The library, located in the Religious Education Center, building 229, Crain Hall, is open during duty hours, Monday through Friday.

Protestant

Women's general meeting — The general meeting of the Protestant Women of the Chapel will be 9:30 a.m. at the Religious Education Center. Baby-sitting is provided. Call Beth Light at 689-5721 for more information.

Youth Alive — Two non-denominational youth groups meet each Sunday from 6:30 to 8 p.m. The junior high group meets in the Infantry Center Chapel Annex, and the senior high group meets in the Religious Education Center. Youths are encouraged to attend for fun and fellowship.

Sunday School bus — A bus is available to transport individuals who live in McGraw Manor and Davis Hill/Bouton Heights to Sunday School at the Main Post Sunday School.

The route begins in McGraw Manor at approximately 8:55 a.m. and proceeds through Davis Hill, Bouton Heights and on to the Religious Education Center where Sunday School is held. At approximately 10:35 a.m., the bus departs the REC.

For more information, call 545-2366.

Catholic

First Friday Meeting — The First Friday Meeting of the Military Council of Catholic Women will be July 7 at the Religious Education Center. Rosary will begin at 9:30 a.m. followed by fellowship and rosary-making workshop. Baby-sitting is provided. For more information, call Bobbie Pearce, 687-6145.

Drama camp focuses on acting, playwright skills

Springer Opera House

There's a summer camp in Columbus that begins July 10 but don't look for canoes, horses, basket weaving or fireside marshmallow roasts.

It's a drama camp and the only required gear is a creative mind and an active imagination.

The Springer Opera House School of Theatre Arts is holding a two-week drama day camp in which campers develop skills in play making, actually writing a play and performing the show on the final day for an invited audience.

Every student will be involved in some facet of the performance. The camp runs Monday through Friday, July 10 through 14 and 17 through 21 from 9 a.m. to noon.

The Springer drama camp is designed as a positive experience in group creativity that promotes cooperation, teamwork and the artistic value of individual ideas.

It is suggested for both experienced and novice performers ages 8 to 14 years old.

The fee for the two-week camp is $85 and will be conducted by Theatre School director, Betty Britto, and school staff.

In addition to the drama camp, the Springer will have four summer theatre workshops on a variety of topics.

In the first workshop, entitled "Physical Approach," students go through a series of theatre exercises that emphasize the physical side of acting and have the opportunity to critique their own work through the use of video tape.

By reviewing and clarifying physical action, the actor gains control over his performance in new and surprising ways.

Britto conducts the session July 8 from 1 to 4 p.m. for 15-year-olds through adults. The fee is $20.

"Radio Drama" is both a vocalization workshop and characterization workshop in which participants learn how to create characters without the benefit of physical action or stage pictures.

A whole new world of possibilities emerge when the actor concentrates on portraying characters only through the voice.

For more information about summer drama camp and theatre workshops, call the Springer School of Theatre Arts at 324-3601 or 561-5595.

Providence Canyon offering guided hikes, ranger programs

Georgia Dept. of Natural Resources

Providence Canyon State Park will be offering guided hikes of the canyons at 2 p.m. on Saturdays and Sundays during the months of July and August.

The one to two-hour hikes will begin at the park's Interpretive Center and will be directed by park naturalist, Julian Singer. Come and enjoy the outdoors and learn about wildflowers, trees, and geology on a guided tour of Providence Canyon State Park.

Junior Ranger Program

On Wednesdays from 10 a.m. to 1 p.m. starting July 26, the park will offer its annual Junior Ranger programs.

The weekly sessions are for 8-14 year olds and will use nature as an outdoor classroom to instruct kids through fun, natural experiences.

The programs will be directed by a seasonal naturalist, who will put together hikes, games and projects to teach the children the purpose of the Department of Natural Resources, the division and history of DNR, and the importance of conservation ecology.

Special emphasis will be placed on man's relationship with our environment and ways to improve our ties to nature.

The programs will begin at the park's Interpretive Center. Registration is at the Interpretive Center any time before the first meeting. The children will need to bring a sack lunch.

For more information, contact Julian Singer, Seasonal Naturalist at (912) 838-6202.

Providence Canyon State Park, operated by the Georgia Department of Natural Resources, is located 7 miles west of Lumpkin, Georgia on Highway 39-C. The park is open to the general public and admission is free.

Callaway plans 4th festivities

Callaway Gardens

The annual Fourth of July festivities at Callaway Gardens will begin with two popular attractions at Robin Lake Beach — Florida State University's "Flying High" Circus at 3:30 p.m. and the Callaway Gardens' "Butterfly Daze" Water Ski Show at 4 p.m.

At 5 p.m., two bands will provide the audience with musical entertainment. The "Girls Next Door" will present a stage show featuring contemporary country music.

Back by popular demand, The Spurrlows will perform a star-spangled salute to the birth of our nation, featuring numerous patriotic favorites.

Then at twilight, the circus and ski team will put on a special demonstration.

The climax to the Fourth of July festivities comes at sundown as Callaway Gardens presents a fireworks and laser show set to music over Robin Lake.

Robin Lake Beach opens at 8 a.m. Admission for the Fourth is $12 for adults and $5 for children ages 6 through 11. Children under 6 and annual membership holders are admitted free.

Included in the price of admission are rides on the Robert E. Lee Riverboat, the Whistlin' Dixie Miniature Train, paddleboats and canoes, shuffleboard, Ping-Pong, miniature golf, plus special entertainment at the beach. Beach admission includes entry into the Gardens.

For more information about the Fourth of July activities, write or call Callaway Gardens, Pine Mountain, Ga. 31822, (404) 663-2281.

Spend the day at Providence Canyon

Department of Natural Resources

Bring a picnic lunch and spend the day at Providence Canyon State Park Tuesday.

Activities planned include sack races, three-legged races, water balloon toss and foot races. Ribbons will be presented to winners in each event.

Activities will begin at the picnic area at 2 p.m. and end at 5 p.m.

For more information, call Julian Singer, seasonal naturalist, at (912) 838-6202.

Providence Canyon State Park, operated by the Georgia Department of Natural Resources, is located seven miles west of Lumpkin, Ga., on Highway 39-C. Providence Canyon State Park is open to the general public. Admission is free.

Fireworks safety may prevent injuries

Infantry Branch Safety Office

Every Fourth of July, Americans celebrate with more fireworks than are used for any other national holiday in the world. They've been a part of our Independence Day revels since 1776.

Americans pay tribute to this country and the founding fathers when celebrating this national holiday. However, we need to be mindful of the inherent dangers of fireworks, lest our tribute turn into tragedy.

The Consumer Product Safety Commission estimates that in 1988, 9,000 injuries associated with fireworks were treated in hospital emergency rooms.

More than half the injuries were burns and many involved the head and face. Fifty percent of the victims were under 15 years of age. Many of these injuries were from illegal fireworks.

The federal government works to control the number of illegal fireworks entering the country. In March 1988, several government agencies working together confiscated 3.2 million units of illegal fireworks in San Francisco with a retail value of about $750,000.

The government sets standards for fireworks produced and sold United States. Fireworks are thoroughly checked for everything from improper warning labels to defective fuses.

However, illegal fireworks continue to be a serious problem.

In instances where legal types of fireworks were involved in accidents, either from misuse or malfunction, the resulting injuries were usually relatively minor and did not require hospitalization. The majority of injuries from "Class C," or family-type fireworks, involved misuse rather than malfunction.

As the Fourth of July approaches, know these facts about fireworks:

- Fireworks are illegal unless specifically authorized as a public display.

Illegal explosive devices kill. The following are especially dangerous: M-80s, silver salutes, blockbusters, quarterpounders and cherry bombs. These items will not contain a manufacturer's name and are usually unlabeled.

- Homemade fireworks are equally dangerous. Never attempt to make your own fireworks. Mixing and loading chemical powders is extremely dangerous.
- Pyrotechnics and simulators designed for military use are strictly banned because they are more powerful than most fireworks.

Declaration of Independence wasn't signed on July 4

Aug. 2 marks the anniversary of the actual signing of the Declaration of Independence in 1776.

Although July 4, 1776, appears on the document and is generally held to be the date of the signing, members of the Continental Congress did not actually sign the Declaration of Independence until a month later. Even then, some members were unavailable and had to sign at a later date.

Only John Hancock, president of the Continental Congress, signed a copy of the Declaration of Independence on behalf of the entire Congress on July 4.

75th Ranger Regiment changes command in ceremony at York Field

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Soldiers of the 75th Ranger Regiment welcomed a new commander in the unit's change of command ceremony June 30 at York Field.

Col. Wesley B. Taylor Jr. relinquished command of the 75th to Col. William F. Kernan, who, until the ceremony, had served as the regiment's deputy commander.

Kernan has served with the 75th since his graduation from the Army War College in June 1987 when he assumed command of the regiment's 1st Battalion.

Taylor began his command of the 75th two years ago and will serve as the assistant division commander for the 1st Armored Division in Nurnberg, Germany. He was selected for promotion to brigadier general in August 1988. Among Taylor's achievements is the invasion of Grenada. Taylor led the combat parachute assault onto the island of Grenada as commander of the 1st Ranger Battalion in October 1983.

During his farewell speech, Taylor expressed his pride in the rangers of the regiment saying, "Know you are special. You are special because you've singled yourselves out for a higher calling; a calling that demands great personal sacrifices and a commitment to something beyond yourselves — your mission and your country. Remember that when you are called, the stakes are going to be very high."

Kernan said during the ceremony, "I feel truly blessed to have been selected as the sixth colonel of the regiment.

Safety policy reemphasized

During a recent training exercise, 22 soldiers were overcome by smoke from an AN-M8 HC Smoke Grenade.

This occurrence and other similar incidents, indicate the need for reemphasis of the Department of the Army safety policy regarding training in smoke. The following precautions apply to all smoke training, including HE, WP, PWP, fog oil, red phosphorous, colored smoke and diesel smoke:

Soldiers will carry protective masks when participating in exercises that include the use of smoke.

Soldiers will mask:

- Before exposure to any concentration of smoke produced by M-8 white smoke grenades, smoke pots or metallic power obscurants.
- When passing through or operating in dense smoke (visibility less than 50 meters).
- When operating in or passing through a smoke haze (visibility greater than 50 meters), and the duration of exposure will exceed four hours.
- Anytime exposure to smoke produces breathing difficulty, eye irritation or discomfort. Such effects in one individual will serve as a signal for all similarly exposed personnel to mask.
- When using smoke during military operations in urban terrain training when operating in enclosed spaces.

NOTE: The protective mask is not effective in oxygen deficient atmospheres. Care must be taken not to enter confined spaces where oxygen may have been displaced. (Infantry Branch Safety Office)

New barracks dedicated at Sand Hill

USAIC Public Affairs Office

A new barracks, located on Third Street in the Sand Hill area, was dedicated here Wednesday.

Building 3105, constructed for housing One Station Unit Training soldiers, will be home for the 4th Battalion, 36th Infantry Regiment.

The new building is among seven other battalion-size barracks in Sand Hill. They contain, among other things, support and administration offices, classrooms and dining facilities for 1,154 trainees and instructors.

The building, which cost in excess of $16 million, is named for Sgt. Matthew Leonard, who was awarded the Medal of Honor posthumously for his actions in Vietnam.

His widow, Lois, a resident of Birmingham, Ala., participated in the dedication ceremony.

Leonard distinguished himself during combat operations with Company B, 1st Battalion, 16th Infantry, on Feb. 28, 1967, near Suoi Da, Republic of Vietnam, when his platoon was attacked by a large enemy force. His platoon leader and several key leaders were among the first wounded.

Leonard quickly rallied his men to throw back the initial enemy assault, and during a short pause in the fighting, organized a defensive perimeter, redistributing ammunition, while at the same time inspiring his comrades through forceful leadership and encouragement.

At one point, he was wounded in the left hand by a sniper as he dragged a wounded soldier to safety.

Refusing medical attention, Leonard continuously exposed himself to increasing enemy fire, moving from position to position to direct friendly fire on the well-camouflaged foe.

Leonard was mortally wounded as he charged an enemy machine gun crew, which was sweeping the entire perimeter.

Afterward, he moved to a tree, propped himself against it and continued engaging the enemy until he died from his many wounds.

Funds approved for more child care facilities here

Office of Congressman Richard Ray

Congressman Richard Ray announced recently that the Committee on Armed Services of the House of Representatives has approved $10,100,000 for military construction at Fort Benning in the fiscal year 1990 budget.

In addition to the items requested in the president's budget, Congressman Ray asked for and received $2,600,000 for construction of two child care facilities. This will allow Fort Benning to move the project up from fiscal year 1993, when it was slated to occur.

Congressman Ray notified the Committee of the need for additional child care facilities at Fort Benning due the lengthy waiting list. One of the facilities will services 198 children, the other will service 99.

> "I will do all I can to have these funds retained through final consideration by the House of Representatives, the Senate and President Bush."
> — Richard Ray

Additionally, $3,650,000 has been slated for a Fuel Storage Facility, which will centralize fuel storage for Fort Benning and allow for increased quality assurance.

A Tactical Equipment Shop has been approved at $2,600,000. This will provide a repair and storage facility for the 72nd Engineering Company at Kelley Hill.

$1,250,000 is slated for an Urban Terrain Assault Course. This will be a live-fire course with seven stations used for city combat training.

"I am pleased the committee has approved these budget requests. This is the first big step in securing these funding levels. I will do all I can to have these funds retained through final consideration by the House of Representatives, the Senate and President Bush," Congressman Ray said.

Dress code violations increase as thermometer readings rise

USAIC Public Affairs Office

The number of people who violate Fort Benning's clothing regulations is increasing, according to a spokesman from the Directorate of Community Activities.

According to U.S. Army Infantry Center Regulation 600-5, the standards for the wearing of civilian clothing in Fort Benning establishments applies to active duty military, reserve component soldiers, retirees, family members over 10 years old, Department of the Army civilians and their guests.

DCA's Linda MaGee said that each summer brings an increase in the number of people who violate the regulation. She said the problem usually only happens in the summer when people wear cooler clothing.

MaGee said to avoid ignorance of the regulation, copies of the clothing standards have been posted at the Main Post Exchange and Commissary. Photographs of examples of the wrong attire will soon be posted there, too, she said.

The following are items that cannot be worn in on-post facilities as defined in the regulation:

- Underwear when worn as an outer garment.
- "Tank tops, muscle shirts, mesh shirts" or shirts from which the sleeves have been removed.
- Bare feet or shower shoes except when at swimming pools or gymnasiums.
- Modified items of military clothing such as cut-off trousers or fatigue jackets without sleeves.
- Hair curlers or shower caps worn by males or females.
- Summer physical training uniforms (Army issue).
- Running shorts (shorts without outside pockets — male or female).

The wearing of those items listed does not apply to people in need of emergency medical or dental treatment.

OPINION

VARIOUS VOICES: What are some of the things you do to ensure the safety of airborne students?

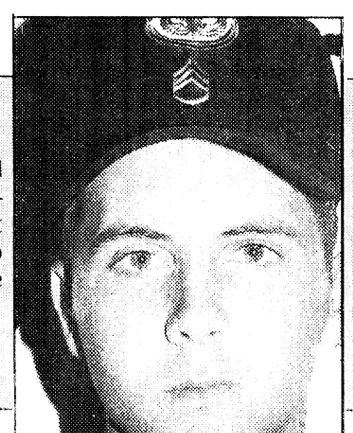
Sgt. Raymond Wolf, 3rd Plt., Co. C, 1st Bn., 507th PIR — "I think one of the most important safety procedures we use is the Jump Master Personnel Inspection done before a jump. JMPIs are done for each student at least seven times before a jump."

Sgt. 1st Class Eddie L. Alston, 3rd Plt., Co. C, 1st Bn., 507th PIR — "I ensure the students don't do any running during weather categories three or four. I make sure they drink a lot of water. Students with prior heat injuries have an orange mark on their uniforms and are watched closely."



Staff Sgt. Daniel R. Thacker, 1st Plt., Co. C, 1st Bn., 507th PIR — "One way we ensure safety is by having jumpers exit the aircraft at proper intervals. We have an audio system that takes over from there, and even more instructions are given when students reach 100 feet."

Staff Sgt. Marsha L. Baker, 3rd Plt., Co. C, 1st Bn., 507th PIR — "We make sure the students drink water before and after physical training. All students stretch as a group before PT, but we also give them time to stretch on their own."

Staff Sgt. Clarence Billodeaux, 2nd Plt., Co. C, 1st Bn., 507th PIR — "We only drop students from the 250-foot towers when they're facing away from the towers. The wind meters are checked constantly, and students are given instructions from the time they drop from the tower."

Staff Sgt. Joseph J. Singer, 2nd Plt., Co. C, 1st Bn., 507th PIR — "If the weather is bad, we won't use the jump towers. We want to use the towers as much as we can, but safety comes first."

Five myths about national security

By Carl E. Vuono
Army Chief of Staff

In this time of transition, it is important to examine carefully the premises that underlie our policies. Unfortunately, several myths distort public debate on national security.

Myth No. 1: "America doesn't have a military strategy, and all of our national security problems stem from that fact."

On the contrary, our military strategy of flexible response has worked well. Flexible response means having the power to counter threats and attacks at the right level, thus discouraging aggression. We have deterred global war since 1945.

This strategy is effective at every combat level, from major war to low-intensity conflict.

The positive changes in the Soviet Union are due in part to our military power and our constancy of purpose, which undergird our strategy.

We will have to adjust elements of our strategy to a changing environment, but this is commonplace. What is new is the great change that appears to be in the wind. While exploiting opportunities inherent in change, we must also proceed with caution.

Myth No. 2: "Thanks to Mikhail Gorbachev, the Soviet threat, particularly in Europe, has disappeared. He has cut back his military and generally made the world safer."

Most of his promised military checks are still in the mail. He has promised to cut his forces by 500,000 (about 10 percent of the total) and to lower the Soviet defense budget by more than 14 percent.

While the force cut appears to be starting, production of military equipment continues apace. We have only Gorbachev's promise on the budget reduction, since he is citing an unpublished budget.

Even after Gorbachev's unilateral cut, NATO will face a severe force imbalance. As was the case with the intermediate-range missiles, modernization remains an irreplaceable incentive for the East to negotiate in good faith on conventional forces.

Although we welcome change in the Soviet Union, we cannot rely on promises or perceived intentions.

Myth No. 3: "We should stop subsidizing our allies, bring our forces home and cut our military expenditures."

Defense dollars offer a convenient target for budget cutting. However, cutters often disregard important strategic realities.

Forward-deployed, land-based forces are our strongest, most credible form of commitment. We station them to deter a major war in areas of U.S. vital interests.

Our allies, particularly in Europe and South Korea, contribute much more than they are given credit for, especially if measures such as forces on the ground are considered.

Bringing home forces from Europe now would weaken deterrence, unhinge the alliance, undercut our arms control efforts and incur significant short-term costs.

Unless the Soviet Union reduces its forces to parity with ours, as President Bush proposed, our withdrawn forces would have to be garrisoned stateside. We would have to have enough long-range aircraft and ships, and prepositioned materiel, to return quickly in the event of hostilities.

Replacing highly ready active forces with less ready, less expensive reserves is a popular notion. Army reliance on reserves is already substantial. Reserves total 50 percent of combat and 60 percent of support forces.

Greater reliance on reserves is currently not warranted, because they have inherent limits.

Myth No 4: "We spent enough on the military under Ronald Reagan. We can afford to cut back across the board."

Military forces, like athletes, need continuous training and nourishment. The improvements begun in this decade cannot be maintained without stable funding.

Despite the growth in Soviet and non-Soviet threats to our interests, U.S. defense purchasing power has declined for the fifth consecutive year.

We had to slash many important programs, and the Army, small to begin with, cut its active strength 16,000 soldiers in the last two years.

The Soviet Union has been building its forces for 25 years, and real growth in defense spending has continued under Gorbachev.

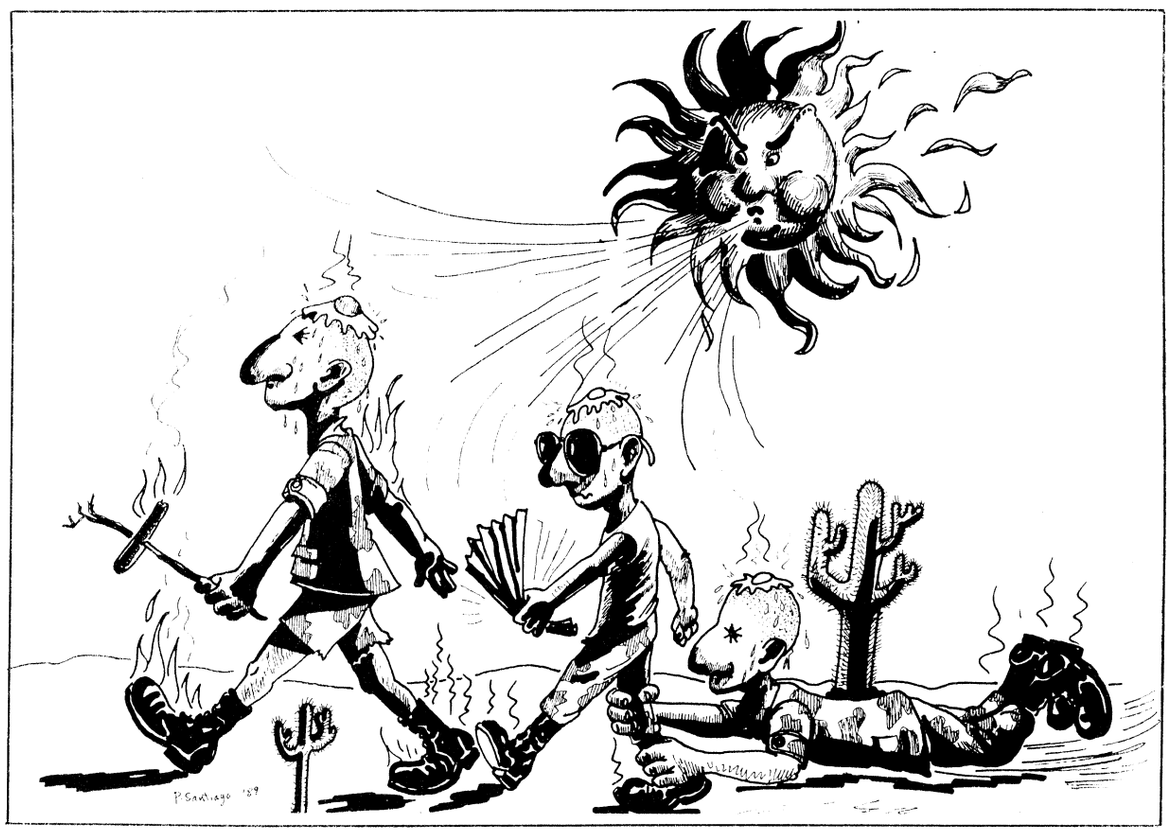
Our buildup ended long before the end of the Reagan Administration.

Myth No. 5: "The future security environment will lead us to move away from traditional commitments and toward new commitments that will require highly mobile forces or high-technology weaponry."

This myth stems from truths. The Soviet Union is changing, we have increasingly important interests outside of Europe, and the third world is experiencing an explosion of military power. A dozen developing countries, some hostile, now have more than 1,000 tanks each; an equal number have acquired missile technology, and some have chemical weapons.

However, we cannot afford to choose among our interests. We will have to maintain our national security commitments while being watchful of our legitimate interests in the developing world. For all contingencies, allies will be a key factor, and strategic mobility will be essential.

High-technology weapons will be necessary. But without high quality, trained and ready forces, they are insufficient. These forces must be adept at operations from the improbable major war down to the less risky but constant low-intensity conflicts.



In the future, our defense posture must assure survival and freedom. That's no myth.

Old Sarge heats up in debate

Old soldier says salt is the cure

By Clyde Snively
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Old Sarge came up to see me last week.

"How old is Old Sarge?" you ask.

Old Sarge is so old he remembers the white-name-tag Army, the days when the "U.S. Army" on fatigues was black and gold and fatigues were so full of starch, it took a knife to pry them open to get an arm or leg in. He remembers when soldiers ran in boots, and the PT test consisted of five events, including the dreaded low crawl and the heinous horizontal ladder.

But the reason Old Sarge came up to visit last week is because he also remembers when "salt" was the watchword of all soldiers.

"You been monitoring the heat casualties?" he asked as he walked into the Bayonet office, shoved a stack of Bayonets off a chair and flipped it around so he could rest his arms on the back of it while he leaned into my face.

"Not exactly," I said. "Why d'ya ask?"

"I been follering 'em, and I don't like whut I see. Too many."

"You got a solution?" I asked needlessly, knowing he wouldn't be in the office unless he did.

"Dern right I do," he said. "Fust thing the Army's gotta do is go back to settin' up them salt tablet dispensers in all the mess halls."

"Dining facilities," I corrected him.

"Them too," he continued, not missing a beat. "Need to set 'em up at the water coolers, too. Troops need to take at least six to eight of those a day."

"Uhm, excuse me," I said, "but it's been proved salt is bad for you, causes high blood pressure, leads to heart attacks and all sorts of bad stuff."

"Hells bells!" he exploded. "You think heat stroke ain't! When I went through basic, we ate salt tablets like they wuz candy. Plus we only got a canteen of water a day. Drill sergeants said we needed to toughen up. By gosh, we did.

"Just like football players. Yuh ever seen football players drinking water on the sidelines during a game? Dern right yuh didn't. Not in practice neither. Not back in those days. And they played 60 minutes, too. Now they sit on the sidelines drinkin' Gatorade and only playin' a few minutes each quarter. Buncha wimps.

"We Army guys wuz even tougher. I mean we'd be out there in fatigues so starched there'd be no air comin' or goin', and the only time we got to drink somethin' not in our canteens wuz with our meals. Warn't no one comin' down with no heat injuries neither."

"I think I'd rather risk heat stroke while I'm young than glob down on salt, then get zapped with a massive coronary later on in life," I said. "Besides, I'm not convinced over-dosing with salt and going without water is what kept soldiers from getting heat stroke and stuff.

"I mean, everyone knows the earth's a lot hotter now than it was when you were a young soldier, what with the ozone being depleted and such. And don't forget all those chemicals in the air and water. Heck, phosphorous, lead, zinc, copper, acid, no wonder people suffer heat injuries," I said.

"Snively," he said, "as usual, you're full of it.

"But I'll tell yuh this, now that yuh bring it up. Americans back then were tougher. Phys Ed was required in schools, plus we wuz accustomed to the heat 'cuz we didn't drive no one block to the corner store in an air-conditioned car. We walked or rode bicycles. Futha, we didn't have no air-conditioned barracks to sleep in. We went to bed hot. We slept hot. We got up hot.

"Now you're givin' these kids contrast baths — runnin' 'em out of air-conditioned barracks, PXs, dispensaries, what have yuh, into the heat of the day then back to air conditioning then back to heat again.

"Shoot, some doctor told us we couldn't have airborne and ranger students take those showers because it messed up the body's thermostat, whadda ya call movin' 'em in and out of air conditioning?"

As usual, Old Sarge had his point. But as I sit here in an unair-conditioned Bayonet office, sweat running off my wrists, shorting out my keyboard, I can only think I'd just as soon run the risk of heat injury and have a place with air conditioning on these hot summer days.

1st Battalion, 507th PIR wins safety award

By Shawn Bryson
Bayonet staff writer

Caring and awareness are the most important concepts of any safety program, according to the commander of 1st Battalion, 507th Parachute Infantry Regiment.

Lt. Col. Mark R. Lewis knows what he's talking about when it comes to safety. His unit's latest achievement, the third quarter safety award, is proof of that.

"We don't drive people. The training conducted at the airborne school is not an 'ironman' contest or survival of the fittest," Lewis said.

Safety comes first, even if it means massively overhauling a training schedule, he said.

The 1st Bn., 507th, which trains about 23,000 students each year, received the safety award from Maj. Gen. Michael F. Spigelmire, post commander, at the Airborne Tower Branch June 27.

1st Sgt. Gary Jenkins, acting command sergeant major of the battalion, accepted the award on behalf of the unit for a very special reason, according to Lewis. "I wanted an NCO to receive the award because NCOs are the ones who make it happen." He said the NCOs are responsible for the unit having the fewest number of accidents for the third quarter.

Lewis said keeping a strong safety program is sometimes more difficult in a training unit such as the 507th because hundreds of new students come in each week.

"We don't know what we're getting. We don't know where they're from, if they have been sick recently or how susceptible they are to heat injuries," he said. "We have to assess the students very quickly to prevent injuries."

Two potential problems facing the airborne instructors include students with prior head or heat injuries. The 507th has an identification system to aid instructors in the prevention of further injuries to those students.

"All students with a prior head injury are required to wear the letter 'H' on their helmets, and students who have had a heat injury in the past must wear orange tape on their uniforms," Lewis explained.

1st Bn., 507th also has medics at every training site, "100 percent of the time," according to Lewis. He said mini-thermometers are worn by all instructors, enabling them to check the temperature outside any time.

Lewis said he also gives the trainers special authority that helps make the safety program successful.

"Everybody in my chain of command understands that if they think the students have had enough (training), then they say enough. If a trainer feels he needs an immediate emergency evacuation (for an injured student), he gets it himself with no restrictions."

Because the weather plays a major role in the training conducted at the airborne school, whether it be the temperature during physical training or wind speed at the drop zone, Lewis said company commanders in the battalion are allowed to fluctuate training schedules.

For example, if it is expected to be a hot day, regular training may be conducted in the early morning with minimum outdoor activity during the afternoon.

Lewis said he and the 507th instructors are proud of their safety achievements, and while it may seem like they have their bases covered, he said they're always looking for new ways to train safely.

Bowles becomes a 'Sledgehammer'

By Andrew P. Wiese
197th Infantry Brigade

The 197th Infantry Brigade command sergeant major turned over the highest non-commissioned officer position in the brigade during a recent farewell and retreat ceremony at Kelley Hill.

"I am very pleased to be a member of this great brigade," said Jimmie G. Bowles, who accepted the position from the outgoing command sergeant major, Tony L. Salter. "I want you all to know I feel proud to be a Sledgehammer."

Salter said, "I fully believe the soldiers standing before us are ready for anything thrown at them. It has been my pleasure to have worked with this great brigade."

Bowles entered the Army in October 1961 at Fort Chaffee, Ark. He has served as command sergeant major in four units, including Fort McPherson, Ga.; Wildflecken, Germany; and since 1988, the 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry. His overseas assignments have taken him to Vietnam, Korea and Germany.

Bowles' decorations include the Combat Infantryman's Badge, NCO Professional Development Ribbon (5), Good Conduct Medal (9 awards), Army Achievement Medal (1st oak leaf cluster), Army Commendation Medal, Meritorious Service Medal (5th oak leaf cluster) and Bronze Star.

The commander of 197th, Col. Harvey D. Watson, said, "I am very confident that Jimmie Bowles will be as proficient in maintaining this brigade as Tony Salter has. He is an outstanding and dependable leader with a lot of time and experience behind him.

Bowles joins the 197th with his wife Jo Ann and their daughter Denise.

Since January 1988, Salter has guided the soldiers on numerous missions highlighted by The Return of Forces to Germany in 1988 and this year's deployment to the National Training Center at Fort Irwin, Calif.

HERO

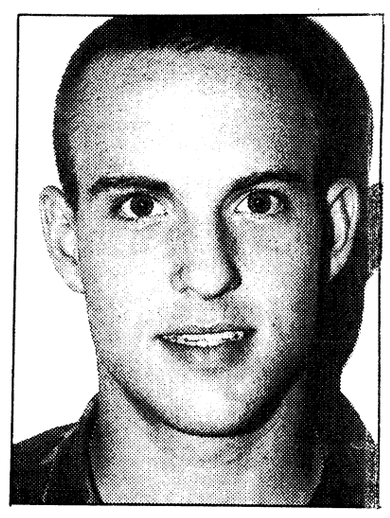
uses Heimlich maneuver to save soldier's life

By Sharon S. Reynolds
Bayonet editor

Breakfast almost killed an infantry soldier.

Not that there was anything wrong with the food, he got some of it lodged in his windpipe and was choking.

"I was eating breakfast, and I saw this guy standing by the tray holders coughing. Another guy was beating him on the back. But then, he stopped coughing," said Pvt. 2 Paul R. Brigner, Company E, 1st Battalion, 50th Infantry.



According to Brigner, the Company C soldier had stopped breathing and was in a dazed state. "I was afraid he might die," Brigner said.

According to witnesses, Brigner rushed to the soldier and performed the Heimlich maneuver to clear the soldier's airway.

"I did the maneuver about 10 times before he was breathing properly," Brigner said. "Then a drill sergeant took over. I heard he's okay now."

The 18-year-old hero, originally from Dallas, Texas, was given an Army Achievement Medal.

Brigner will be leaving Fort Benning July 30 to attend a one-year West Point Prep School in Fort Monmouth, N.J.

Headline identifies woman with wrong city

USAIC Public Affairs Office

In last week's Bayonet, we ran a story about the Livingston Award going to Lenora Smith, a recent president of the Chattahoochee Valley — Fort Benning Chapter of the Association of the U.S. Army and a staunch supporter of the military in the Tri-Community for many years.

Unfortunately, the headline over the story read: "Livingston awarded to Columbus woman."

Smith is actually from Phenix City. In fact, she has been key in ensuring that Phenix City gets its due recognition in all it does to support the military in the area and see that the military feels welcome in that part of the Tri-Community.

We apologize for failing to properly identify Lenora Smith with Phenix City.

ABUSE

Child abuse happens — often. No one wants to talk about it. No one wants to hear about it. But, it happens.

Crime Prevention Section

Child abuse can happen anywhere — in poor, middle-class or well-to-do homes; in rural areas, suburbs or cities. It can involve one or both parents.

Child abuse isn't always physical. Parents don't have to shake, beat, burn or fail to provide the necessities of life to abuse their children.

Abuse can be something as simple as yelling or even teasing the child. Parents can belittle a child so often that he believes they are right.

"You're so stupid," and "You can't do anything right," are often said before thinking. Think about your words. What effect will they have? How will your child feel when he hears that he's no good, that you wish he'd never been born?

Remember, a child looks to his parents as the ones who know everything. If they say it's so, it must be so.

Emotional abuse is described as failing to provide warmth, attention, supervision and normal living experiences children need.

Sexual abuse of children happens, too. We see it on the news, in documentaries and sometimes right next door.

It's estimated that as many as a million cases of abuse or neglect happen each year.

The effects of this abuse are severe. An abused child may never be able to love and trust other people and may always have a poor self-image. Often abused children grow up to be abusers.

Parents who habitually abuse their children may very well end up killing them. Hundreds of such cases happen every year.

Child abuse is a symptom that can be treated successfully, but first people have to understand and care.

Every parent has the potential to abuse a child at some time. These are just a few of the reasons why abuse happens:

● Immaturity — Very young, insecure parents often can't understand their child's behavior and needs.

● Unrealistic expectations — Parents expect children to behave like adults at all stages of development.

● Lack of parenting knowledge — Parents don't know the various stages of child development, how to raise a child. Parents have no "models" of successful family relationships from which to learn.

● Social isolation — There are no friends or family to help with the heavy demands of small children.

● Unmet emotional needs — Parents who can't relate well to adults may expect children to take care of them, satisfy their need for love, protection and self-esteem.

● Frequent crises — Financial, job, legal problems and major illness may cause a parent to "take it out" on a child.

● Poor childhood experiences — Many abusive adults were abused children and have a poor self-image.

● Drug or alcohol problems — Such problems limit parental ability to care properly for their children.

Child abuse is a tragedy that affects us all. It's a vicious circle usually passed on from generation to generation.

To break the abuse circle, you have to get involved. Become aware of how serious the problem really is, and do something about it.

Every parent makes errors in judgment sometimes, but when it becomes apparent that this is a pattern or becoming one, it's time for help.

Detecting and reporting child abuse to the people who can help are vital first steps. Too often, child abuse goes unreported because people don't want to get involved.

ASK THE JUDGE

By Dennis E. Brower
Staff Judge Advocates Office

Q. I recently bought a used car. The salesman told me if anything went wrong with the car, the dealer would work with me to make it right.

Only two days later, the alternator and battery failed. I went to see the salesman and asked how long it would take to get the car fixed.

He told me the car was mine now and so were the repairs. He explained the sale was "AS IS," and that meant no promises or warranty on the car.

Is he right? He promised me the dealer would take care of it. Isn't there a "Lemon Law" or something?

A. Unfortunately you have got yourself into a real trap, and there is no legal way out.

Federal law requires that when you buy a used car from a dealer, the car must be clearly marked "AS IS" or with "WARRANTY." If the car is sold "AS IS," then there is no warranty. Any defects discovered later are the sole responsibility of the buyer.

In your case, you will be responsible for the purchase of a new battery and alternator. If you can prove the salesman knew of these defects, but hid them from you, then you may be able to prove fraud and make the dealer pay for the repairs. However, this is very difficult to do and rarely happens.

Although the salesman told you the dealer would take care of any problems, this was not put into writing and made a part of the contract.

Therefore, the "AS IS" provision takes over and shows that the parties did not have a warranty. Unless the dealer wants to admit that he verbally promised you something, you have little chance for making him repair the car.

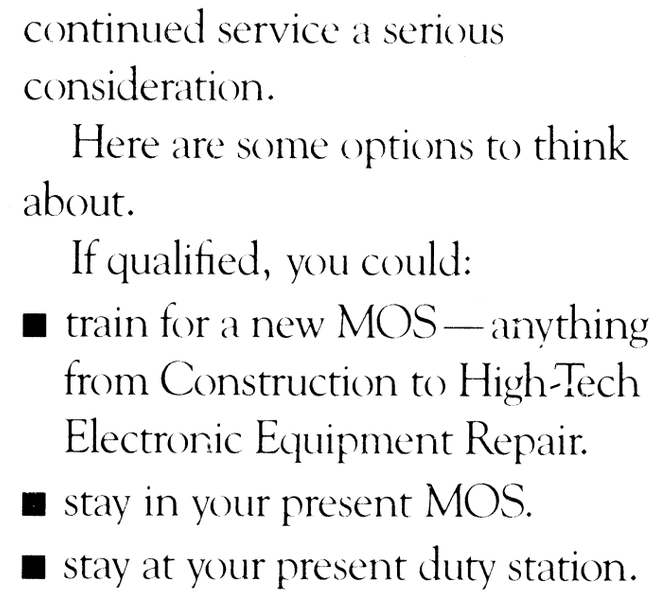
Georgia does not have a "Lemon Law" in regard to car sales. Many other states do have laws that protect car buyers by offering them greater protections against defective cars and "AS IS" sales.

Even if you have a warranty, you have to look carefully at what it covers. Most warranties do not cover batteries and only cover internal moving parts, which usually do not break. Even then, most warranties only cover a certain portion of the cost of repairs.

You must be very careful when buying a used car. If it is not in writing, then the promise does not exist.

If you do get a warranty, look carefully at what is covered, what it will cost you and whether it is worth the extra expense.

Remember, the warranty is nothing more than repair insurance, and like any insurance, you may not receive a good deal.



If you have any questions concerning a warranty or contract, do not sign. Let a representative of the Legal Assistance Office review it first. An honest dealership will not care if you do that. Call Legal Assistance at 545-3282.

REENLIST
UNITED STATES ARMY
Fort Benning
THE ARMY OFFERS MORE OPTIONS THAN YOU'RE AWARE OF.
When planning for the future, it's always best to know what your options are. This is especially true if your present enlistment time is growing short.
The Army, like any large organization, wants to keep its good people. To do this, we offer a variety of opportunities that make continued service a serious consideration.
Here are some options to think about.
If qualified, you could:
■ train for a new MOS — anything from Construction to High-Tech Electronic Equipment Repair.
■ stay in your present MOS.
■ stay at your present duty station.
■ change to a new duty station.
■ be eligible for a reenlistment bonus.
It is worthwhile to investigate your reenlistment options. Come talk to us. And bring your spouse, too.

ARMY. BE ALL YOU CAN BE.® REENLIST.

Q: WHAT'S THE MOST IMPORTANT JOB IN THE ARMY?

A: EVERYONE'S.

That's right. Even though it may seem tedious or insignificant, we know the job you're doing is important. More important than you even realize.

Because it's part of a much larger picture.

For the Army to run smoothly and efficiently, it needs the efforts of all its soldiers. From the generals to the privates in basic training, the Army needs bright, skilled, dedicated soldiers. Soldiers who really care. Soldiers who try to do their best, in whatever they're asked to do.

Because when soldiers do their part, they keep the Army running strong. And that's what helps keep America strong.

REENLIST ARMY.
BE ALL YOU CAN BE.

Don't let your child play in traffic

Infantry Branch Safety Office

Would you allow your child to play in the traffic? If you allow your child to ride in a car without a safety seat, you are.

Vehicle accidents are still the number one killer of children under age 5. More than 50,000 children under the age of 5 are injured every year in cars. Every year, 600 to 700 children under age 5 die as vehicle passengers.

According to the American Academy of Pediatricians, the trauma suffered by children involved in accidents without restraint is the major cause of epilepsy and paraplegia in children.

During a sudden stop, swerve or crash, occupants of a motor vehicle need protection from impact with the car's interior. Additionally, restraints prevent ejection from the vehicle.

Unrestrained, infants and children are thrown around the vehicle like flying missiles. Events happen so fast, even in low-speed, quick stops, that without restraint, violent impact against unyielding surfaces is inevitable.

In a 30-mph crash, a child is thrown forward with a force equal to 30 times his own weight. That's equal to falling from the roof of a three-story building.

These deaths and injuries are happening even though every state requires that infants and children ride in safety seats.

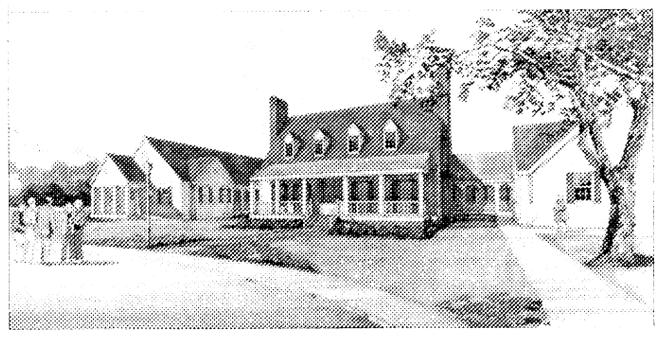
Child restraint seats are designed to spread the force of stopping over the child's strongest body areas. Spreading this force is very important for children under 4 years old as they are top heavy and have stronger bones.

Certified child safety seats have a label showing they meet federal safety standards.

Seat requirements differ with the age and size of the child.

Infant safety seats should be used for children from birth to about 9 to 12 months or a weight of 20 pounds. Children face backward in infant seats. A harness built into the carrier holds the child, and the carrier is fastened by the car's safety belts.

Use convertible safety seats for children from birth to 4 years old, or a weight of 40 pounds. While infants ride facing backward, toddlers may be converted to a forward-facing seat that they can use until they are 40 pounds or around 4 years old.



Toddler seats are for children who can sit up without support (20 to 43 pounds). Toddlers face forward in these seats. Approved seats of this type have a five-point harness. Some may have an adjustable shield as well.

Booster seats face forward and may be used for children weighing 30 to 60 pounds. These seats have no back and have at least a partial shield. They elevate children so the car's lap belt fits across their hips and pelvic bones. Children under 55 inches tall should not wear shoulder belts.

Although child restraints can be fairly expensive, you can buy a restraint that meets specifications for about the price of two tanks of gas. A small price to pay for what could save your child's life.

Just What Kind Of Care Is Personal Care?
Sometimes we need to provide more than love when loved ones reach their late 70's. A hospital stay, mild confusion, medication reminders; all can mean that more attention needs to be given than you can give, but not so much for a nursing home. Personal Care may be the answer. At Brookside Glen that means 24 beautiful residential suites, a professionally trained staff, a warm, homelike environment, activities, 24 hour attention, delicious meals, and careful observance of doctor's prescriptions and instructions. When a loved one needs more attention than you can give, but does not need a nursing home, consider Brookside Glen, the new First Choice for personal care in Columbus.

All runners must follow safety rules

Military Police Activity

At 6:30 a.m., many soldiers at Fort Benning have just completed morning stretches and physical exercises. However, the physical training is just beginning.

Before starting that long run, supervisors are reminded of rules from USAIC Regulation 385-2 and 190-5.

RUNNERS

Formations will not consist of more than three ranks.

The only people allowed outside the formation are the cadence caller, noncommissioned officer in charge and commander. They, too, must remain right of the highway centerline to allow traffic to pass.

Road guards will be placed 50 meters behind and ahead of all formations and equipped with reflective vests and flashlights.

All unit runs should be completed by 7 a.m.

There are several roads at Fort Benning that are off limits to soldiers running in formation. They are:

- 10th Division Road
- Dixie Road, except the portion from the Infantry Board Test Facility to the Lawson Army Airfield
- Sightseeing Road from Dixie Road to Sunshine Road
- Sunshine Road

Safety not only applies to formations but also to enthusiasts who crave more than just the normal PT or casual runners who are trying to lose a few pounds.

For safety's sake, there are a few precautions to follow:

- Wear reflective vests or bands.
- Always run facing traffic.
- Don't run on the roadway, stay on the shoulder of the road.
- Never challenge moving vehicles for the right of way.
- Wearing headphones that cover ears is prohibited.
- Joggers must obey the same rules as pedestrians

MOTORISTS

Motorists who are rushing to work should proceed past a formation cautiously at a speed of not more that 10 miles per hour.

Motorists should also keep in mind that troops in formation have the right of way over all other traffic except emergency vehicles.

Formations and joggers who violate the safety precautions run the risk of being cited by the military police.

Running in formation or running alone improves your health and motivation. Don't be counterproductive and needlessly endanger your life or the lives of others.

Don't waste your military experience.

Guard it.

It took you years of study and hard work to master a military skill. So, why throw that experience away?

Instead, lend your know-how to your hometown Army National Guard. Spend one weekend a month and two weeks a year protecting your community and country.

And in return, you'll get a good paycheck, plus many of the military benefits you've enjoyed as a full-time soldier.

For more information, see your local in-service recruiter or unit re-enlistment NCO.

And find out how your military experience will pay off in your hometown Army Guard.

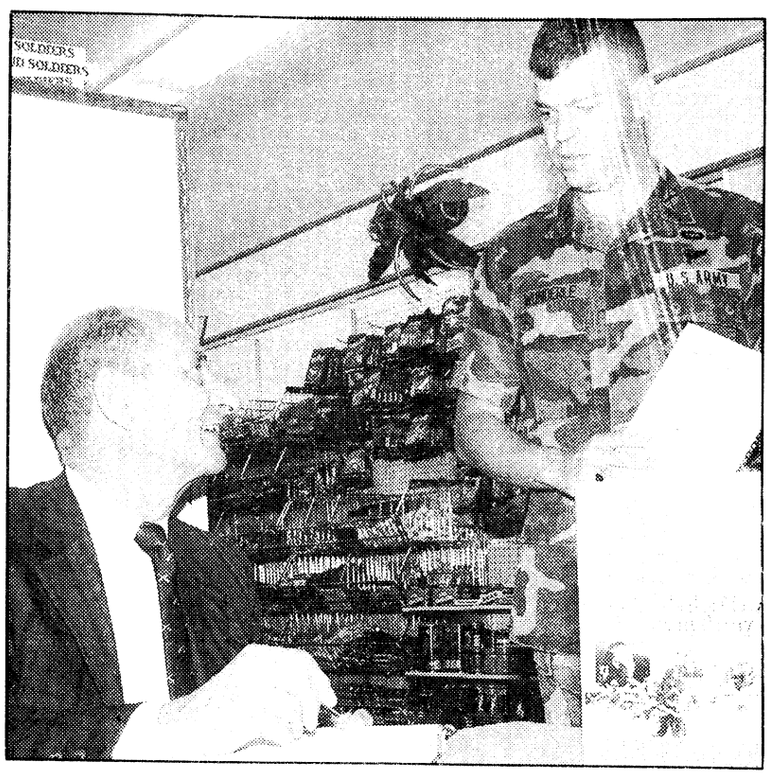
Americans At Their Best.

'Mud Soldiers' author discusses training here



USAIC Public Affairs Office

The author of "Mud Soldiers" came back to Fort Benning last week after nearly two years to talk about his recently released book, which had its genesis at Sand Hill.

George C. Wilson's book, subtitled, "Life Inside the New American Army," got its start shortly after his earlier piece, "Supercarrier," came out.

"(Brig. Gen.) Lou Hennies asked me why we were always writing good things about the Navy, but never about the Army. I told him it was because the Navy gave us unlimited access without some officer shadowing us. He said he thought that could be arranged with the Army."

It was decided Wilson would follow infantry soldiers through One Station Unit Training at Fort Benning, go with them to their first unit and deploy with them to the National Training Center.

Shawn Bryson

George C. Wilson autographs a book for Capt. Bill Wunderle.

COHORT soldiers of Company D, 2nd Battalion, 54th Infantry, were selected since the scenario called for them to do the most once they got to their first duty station, Company C, 2nd Battalion, 16th Infantry, at Fort Riley, Kan.

In the book, Wilson not only follows the soldiers through their training and deployment to Fort Riley but also visits with parents and friends in the soldier's home towns to see what type of soldier the Army is getting.

He discovered many of the young men were coming in because of difficulties or lack of opportunity back home, but were opting for a shot at the Army because they were motivated by varying degrees of patriotism.

While Wilson had some good things to say about the training at Fort Benning, "The discipline is good. A boy becomes a man, and when he leaves, he's a pretty good apprentice infantryman," he notes there is room for improvement.

"Training often lacks imagination. Take your basic marksmanship. You're training smart, well-motivated volunteers, but all you do is yell at them, sit them in a bleachers and try to teach them to fire a weapon. Instead, why don't you put computer games in the barracks that teach these techniques. This will reinforce the training."

He also called into question the shock treatment that went on, saying drill sergeants tended to overdo the humiliation aspect of it.

> "The Army needs to identify the combat leaders and let them lead instead of running them through all these other jobs."
> — George C. Wilson

Drill sergeants, Wilson noted, are being asked to do too much. "They're burning out." He said family lives are being ruined because of the long hours they put in for too many weeks on end.

"When a drill is having trouble at home, he takes it out on the first available target — the trainees."

Wilson said he was impressed with the company commander, Capt. James R. Fleenor II, who he said was sincerely interested in the welfare of his men and who allowed the NCOs to train their soldiers.

"He wasn't a micro manager like so many officers are today."

After graduation, Wilson flew to Fort Riley with the soldiers. En route, he asked them whether or not they intended to reenlist. At that time, only four were having doubts about the military. Such was not the case when Wilson met up with these soldiers a year later after having watched their reception at Fort Riley.

"Too much emphasis on problems the soldiers would be facing, instead of building esprit," followed them through training for NTC and into "battle" at NTC. "Soldiers were basically training aids for the officers and NCOs."

After a year, most had become disillusioned with the Army, with one soldier wanting out so bad he jumped from a second floor barracks window, and surviving that, jumped from a speeding car — he survived that too. Wilson lays the blame on leaders who don't show they care for their soldiers and the soldiers' families.

"One wife said her greatest disappointment was that she'd never met her husband's company commander whom she'd heard so much about."

Another soldier nearly died because he'd had to walk in freezing rain without wet weather gear and because no one noticed the problems he was having breathing.

Wilson notes the system is often at fault for the way leaders are rotated in and out of command positions in order for them to get their tickets punched.

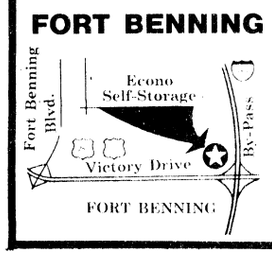
"The Army needs to identify the combat leaders and let them lead instead of running them through all these other jobs."

Again, leaders need imagination. Wilson said leaders need to let soldiers take part in planning, to tell them what happened after a mission and give them a chance to lead small unit patrols.

He faulted leaders and the NTC for the way troops became nothing more than expensive training aids — officers deploying TOW weapons systems without input from gunners who were specifically trained in TOW deployment — and soldiers blindly bumping about in the back of armored personnel carriers day and night with no idea as to what was going on.

"Why can't they throw a sheet up on the side of a track and project the after-action videos, which are excellent, so these soldiers can see what happened?"

For Wilson, the most satisfactory outcome of the book involved his prologue, a re-creation of a battle that same Charlie Company fought in 20 years earlier in Vietnam. While that one chapter took the most time to write, he said it was well worth it.



"It reunited them, helped them get rid of the burden they'd been carrying around as survivors (80 percent of the soldiers were casualties)."

Would today's young infantrymen stand and fight...and die...if necessary, as those of 1966's Charlie Company did? Wilson said he thinks they would.

HHC, 2/18th slides by Co. B, 8-7

By Andrew P. Wiese
197th Infantry Brigade

Under the scorching rays of the late afternoon, Ronald Royer of HHC, 2nd Battalion, 18th Infantry singled in the game-winning run in the seventh inning against Company B of the same battalion recently, recording an 8-7 victory.

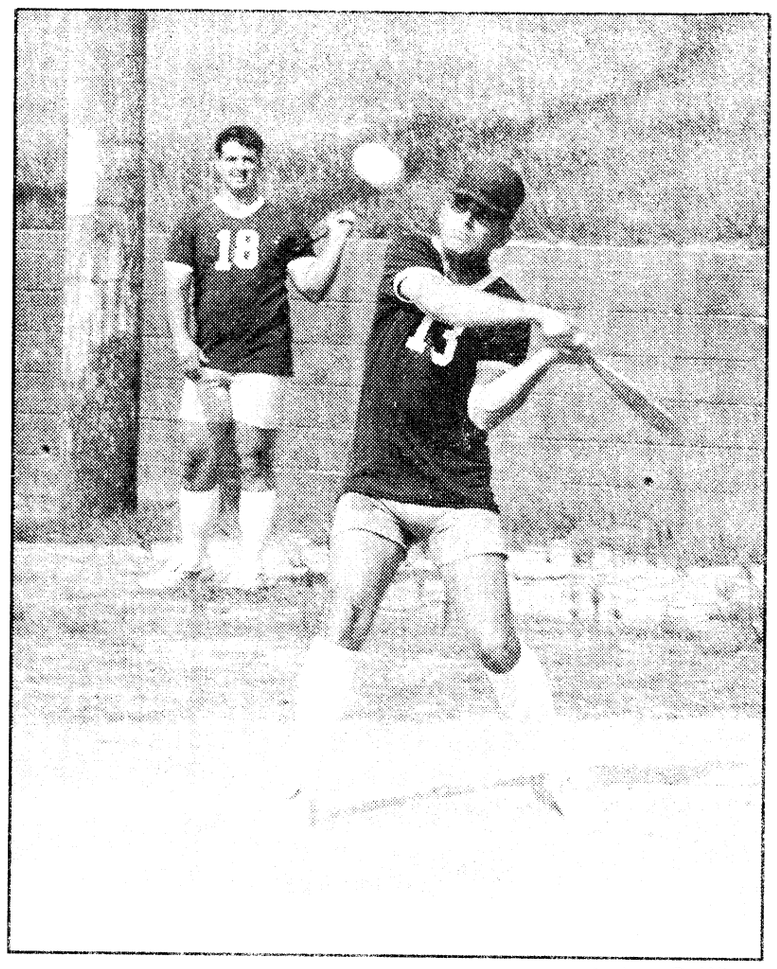
"The sun is so hot today that we are going to slow our pace down a little," said Co. B's team captain, Roy McCage. "With some good hitting and limited errors, we'll win."

"We have improved so much on defense this season," said HHC's team captain, David Bolding. "We can't lose if our hitting is any good."

In the first two innings, Co. B knocked in two runs with hard-hit singles, while HHC was unable to score.

However, during the third inning, this slow-paced game took a new turn. With two men on base in the top of the third, Kevin Gaylord smashed a three-run homer out of the park, boosting Co. B's lead to five runs.

In the bottom of the third, HHC's Royer came to the plate with two men on and cracked a triple, which brought in both runners and started a rally.



The team got a few more singles to score the third run before Marvin Chattman stepped up to the plate and smacked a three-run homer. By the end of the third inning, HHC had taken a 6-5 lead.

In the fifth inning, Gaylord again showed his power as he hit a two-run homer, putting Co. B back to the lead. The lead didn't last long as Gil Salinas came to the plate for HHC and cracked a solo homer, which tied the score.

The score remained at 7-7 until the bottom of the seventh inning when Royer drove a run home with a single-base hit, which finally won the game for HHC, 8-7.

"We started this game by playing hard, and we were doing great," said Raymond Frazier of Co B. "We started to play a little sloppy as we got tired and wound up losing, but it was a great game all the way around."

"When we were down by five runs, we had to get a lot more aggressive to win," said Gregory Thompson of HHC. "I think it was a very close match up, and it feels great to walk away the winner."

USAMU shoots well, places at championships

By Sally Roberts
U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit

The results are in from the first half of the 29th U.S. International Shooting Championships in Prado Tiero, Calif., and members of Fort Benning's U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit showed their presence in several top-finishing spots.

MSgt. Erich Buljung took first in the Men's Free Pistol and Men's Air Pistol. Pvt. Ed Suarez, a newcomer to USAMU's team, but an established shooter in his own right, took second in the Air Pistol.

The USAMU team in the Free Pistol Event, consisting of Buljung, SSgt. Jimmy McCoy, and SSgt. John Elrich took second behind the U.S. Army Reserve team.

The USAMU Blue team also won the Air Pistol team match, and the USAMU Gray team took third.

In the Rapid Fire Pistol championships, USAMU shooters nearly swept the competition, taking all but second place in the top six slots. Capt. John McNally won the event, followed by Suarez in third, MSgt. Joe Steed in fourth, Sgt. Jon Frazier in fifth and SSgt. Ray Arredondo in sixth. The USAMU Blue and Gray teams took first and second in the Rapid Fire Pistol team matches.

Spec. Bret Erickson won the U.S. International Championships for Trap by breaking 415 of 425 targets. Erickson broke 391 of 400 birds, landing a top spot in the six-man final shoot-off. In the finals, Erickson broke 24 of 25 birds and landed first, two birds ahead of the second-place finisher.

For Erickson, who was a member of USAMU from 1984-1987, this was a great come-from-behind effort. Erickson recently returned to the Army and USAMU with clear determination to pick up where he'd left off. In April, Erickson won the Interservice Trap match held here, and his first-place finish in California has seated him on the U.S. team, heading for the World Cup Moving Target Championships in Monticatini, Italy, in September.

Capt. Denise Morrison made the U.S. Women's team by taking third in the Trap, and PFC William Roberts made the U.S. Juniors team by taking third in the Junior-level Trap.

Soldiers representing the Running Target section competed in individual and team events in the 50-meter, mixed run; the 50-meter, 30 + 30; and 10-meter, 30 + 30 matches of the championships.

In the 30 + 30 event, 60 shots are fired in two series of 30 runs each. The first series consists of 30 slow runs in which the "running boar" target is exposed for five seconds and then 30 fast runs in which the target is exposed for 2-1/2 seconds. Only one shot may be fired at each target with a value of up to 10 points.

The mixed run is similar except 40 shots are fired at 40 targets, and the shooter does not know if the next run will be fast or slow.

Sgt. Troy Lawton and Spec. Martin Edmondson took first in the two-man team event of the 50-meter, mixed run and first in the same three-man event with the addition of Spec. Michael Moore's score. The team of Lawton, Edmondson and Moore also took second in the 10-meter, 30 + 30 team event.

In individual events, Lawton and Moore took second and third respectively in the 50-meter, 30 + 30 championship, and Lawton placed third in the 50-meter, mixed run.

Bass fishermen should prepare to do a lot of waiting during the hot season

By Earl Bentz & Steve Price
Outboard Marine Corporation

It's summertime. The weather's warm and the bass are slow.

The problem is not catching fish, but simply staying alert enough to feel a strike when it happens.

"It's a tough problem," admits Johnson Pro Staff member Charlie Reed, winner of the 1986 BASS Masters Classic. "There have been times when I could have actually gone to sleep while I was standing up fishing."

The greatest aid in combating the fishing doldrums, says Reed, is experience. Fish don't bite more than they bite, so you simply learn to expect long lulls during a day on the water.

"There are some lakes where you may only get one strike every two hours," he said. "You prepare yourself for this mentally, and keep telling yourself a bass is going to bite each time you make a cast. Then, when it finally happens, you're ready."

Reed also offers several other suggestions for staying alert on the water. Among them are standing to fish, rather than sitting; changing activities; dressing comfortably for the weather; eating properly and staying physically fit.

"If you'll notice," said the Johnson angler, "virtually all the pros stand when they're fishing. Of course, this makes casting easier, but another reason is that it forces them to stay alert.

"When you're sitting, you become too comfortable, and then it's easy to lose concentration."

Changing activities also helps, Reed explains, simply because it exercises different muscles and makes you think about something else, however briefly.

"I suggest stepping to the back of the boat and studying a map, getting a drink of water, or simply putting a rod in the rod locker and then getting it back out," said Reed. "You can also crank up your outboard and move to a new location.

"It doesn't take much of a change, just something to alert the routine of casting for a few minutes."

Dressing comfortably is extremely important, Reed emphasizes, because it makes you feel better while you're fishing. The Johnson pro recommends wearing cotton material because it's cooler. If you take precautions to avoid sunburn, shorts can also be recommended.

"I also believe it's important to be physically fit, to eat well, and get a good night's rest before a long day on the water," Reed adds. "If you're not physically fit, you won't be mentally fit, and if you don't eat or sleep well, you certainly won't feel like concentrating."

Reed performs light calisthenics each morning before fishing, and enjoys walking or swimming when time permits. He also prefers to eat an early dinner, get at least eight hours sleep, and then start the day with a full breakfast. He doesn't eat lunch while fishing, and he drinks only water.

SPORTS SHORTS

Youth Services to sponsor football camp

Youth Services will sponsor a free youth football mini camp July 17 through 28, 5 to 9 p.m.

Children will be taught the basic fundamentals of football during two weeks of Nautilus training, physical exercise, water aerobics and play formations.

The camp is open to children ages 9 through 15 of active duty and retired military personnel.

Registration and weigh-in will be held July 15, 9 a.m. through 3 p.m. at Youth Services gym, building 1055, McIver Street. Parents must be present at the time of registration.

For more information about the camp or if you would like to volunteer as a coach, call Youth Services at 545-3070/3913.

Post needs wrestlers

Fort Benning soldiers who are interested in wrestling or joining the post wrestling team, are invited to a meeting Aug. 3 at 4 p.m. at Briant Wells Field House. For more information, call Sgt. 1st Class Tony T. Thomas, All-Army wrestling coach, 544-6802.

Bicycle Jamboree to be held Saturday

A Bicycle Jamboree will be held July 8 at 10 a.m. behind the Custer Terrace Shoppette.

The event is open to all children in the sixth grade and below and parents.

Scheduled events include a bicycle skills course, safety inspections, how to prevent theft of bicycles, safety diplomas and safety manuals.

McGruff, the Crime Dog, will be on hand as well as Officer Friendly. Also, a bicycle safety film will be shown, and a Fort Benning Fire Department fire truck will be displayed.

The jamboree is sponsored by the Military Police Activity crime prevention section, Fort Benning Fire Department and the Custer Terrace Community Life Center.

For more information, contact the MPA's crime prevention section at 545-4164 or 545-7610 and ask for Officer Friendly.

OCS Alumni Association — A general membership meeting is scheduled by the U.S. Army Officer Candidate Alumni Association at Fort Benning Aug. 30 through Sept. 1.

A number of activities are planned during the three days, including a business meeting, military demonstrations and a visit with officer candidates in their battalion area.

A new constitution and bylaws will be presented at the business meeting for the membership's consideration.

Three types of memberships are available in the association. Active membership for persons of any branch of the army who graduated from the Officer Candidate School at Fort Benning or the Ground General School at Fort Riley, Kan.

Associate memberships are available to officers who did not graduate from OCS, but served as cadre at the Fort Benning or Fort Riley OCS.

Corporate memberships are also available.

For information, contact the secretary at P.O. Box 2192, Fort Benning, Ga., 31905.

Airborne veterans to meet

11th Airborne Division

Veterans of the famed 11th Airborne Division who, together with the 1st Calvary Division and the 37th Infantry Division, liberated Manila in 1945, will meet in Columbus, Oct. 12 through 15, to celebrate the 46th anniversary of the division's activation at Camp Mackall, N.C., in 1943.

Commanded by Maj. Gen. Joseph M. Swing, the 11th landed at Batangas, south of Manila, while the 511th Parachute Infantry and the 457th Parachute Field Artillery RCT team dropped by parachute on Tagatay Ridge near Lake Taal on Feb. 3, 1945.

The 11th Airborne Division gained its nickname, "The Angels," from a daring raid behind the Japanese lines to liberate 2,147 internees at the Los Banos prison camp, by land, water and parachute. The defending Japanese force was wiped out and the Internees who had been imprisoned for more than three years declared the paratroopers looked like "Angels" descending from Heaven.

The division set many firsts for the U.S. Army.

After Luzon was secured, the 11th was the first American unit to land in Japan for the surrender and occupied that country until 1950 when it moved to Fort Campbell, Ky. Several units were withdrawn from the division to move to Korea.

The entire Division rotated to Germany in early 1956 and served there until mid-1958. That move gave the 11th another first, being the first U.S. airborne division to be assigned overseas since World War II.

To the "Angels," also went the distinction of being the first airborne division to serve both in the Far East and Europe.

The division had the first tactical troops to experience the actual blast of an atomic bomb at close range in April 1954.

It was the first airborne division to develop the air assault techniques. For more information about the reunion in Columbus, contact the National Secretary, Paul E. Brown, 14 Deer Meadows, Canyon Lake, Texas, 78133.

New Mexican bishop visits post

By Debbie Galle
USAIC Chaplain's Office

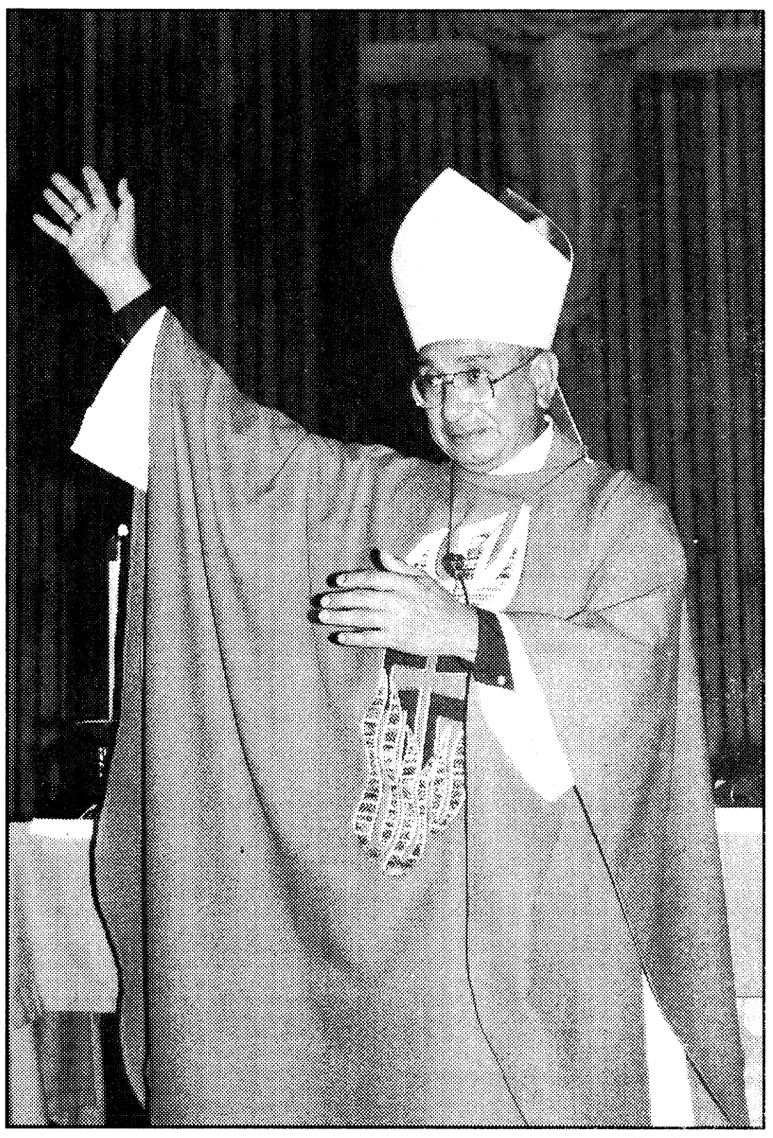
The Most Rev. Ricardo Ramirez, first bishop of the Las Cruces diocese, N.M., administered the sacrament of confirmation to 22 candidates at a recent special service at the Main Post Catholic Chapel.

The Mass, in Spanish, was highlighted by a personal message to the candidates and congregation.

"We learn love and the testimony of our faith from our families," said Bishop Ramirez. He described the importance of the special influence parents have on a child's faith.

Those receiving the sacrament of confirmation had completed extensive studies of the Catholic faith.

After the service, Father George Gonzalez, U.S. Army School of the Americas chaplain, presented Bishop Ramirez with an engraved, wooden plaque from the Fort Benning Spanish community as a gesture of appreciation for his visit. He was also given a plaque from USARSA students in gratitude for the speeches he gave the day before the Mass.



Bishop Ramirez discussed the "Theology of Liberation" when he addressed USARSA students and faculty. He discussed the origin and Biblical basis of theology, as well as the impact of the liberation theology throughout Latin America.

"I thoroughly enjoyed speaking with the students and soldiers at Fort Benning," said Bishop Ramirez. "I welcome the opportunity for dialogue between leaders in the church and soldiers of all countries. It is important that meetings such as this take place because we have such need for a better understanding."

Bishop Ramirez, born in Bay City, Texas, was ordained in 1966 and appointed Titular Bishop of Vatarba and Auxiliary of San Antonio in 1981. He was appointed first Bishop of Las Cruces in 1982.

A member of the Congregation of Priests of Saint Basil, Toronto, Canada, Bishop Ramirez has a rich background, which includes completing Seminary schools in Canada and Mexico, receiving a master of arts degree from the University of Detroit and attending missionary school in Manila, Philippines.

Bishop Ramirez served as committee president for the church in Latin America and has served as a member of the commission of the History of the Church in Latin America for more than 12 years. As a result, he has traveled extensively throughout Latin America.

Choosing a church can be difficult

By Chap. Mark W. Kayser
2nd Battalion, 18th Infantry

Is a Fort Benning chapel on your church "shopping list"?

When I was a civilian pastor, I introduced myself to new visitors who sometimes exclaimed "We're just church shopping!"

It is difficult to choose a place of worship. The choices abound, and there are many things to consider when making this important decision.

Sociologists of religion have conducted numerous studies on how people choose a place of worship. Some of their conclusions are surprising.

Location is naturally a big factor. Few people are willing to drive more than a short distance to worship.

The size of the church is also an important ingredient in the decision. Churches of varying sizes seem to have different personalities. For example, a small church may invite participation, while a larger church may allow anonymity.

Social and economic factors determine the choices of many, as do cultural and racial influences. However, many analysts agree that denominational distinctives are playing a lesser role in the choice of a church today. Folks are looking for a church that helps them feel both at home and welcome.

There are many things that make the chapel a unique and special place.

There is a rich diversity of people who attend worship on post. Soldiers and their families from all parts of the globe are called together.

The focus of the chapel is naturally that of common faith, that which brings people together and unites them, not that which divides. One of the most rewarding aspects of chapel worship is the experience of unity in the midst of such diversity.

As fellow sojourners, both in the faith and in the military, worshipers are interested and concerned for one another. The chapel community is a group of people who unite to share both their gifts and their needs.

The chapel is a place to grow in one's faith. Many chapels have a number of chaplains who serve by leading worship on a rotating schedule. This exposes the worshiper to a rich variety of sermons. These messages are the product of a wide diversity of education, perspective and experience.

Don't forget to include the chapel on your "shopping list."

CHAPEL BRIEFS

ECUMENICAL

Monthly Prayer Breakfast — The Monthly Prayer Breakfast will be July 18, 6:30 to 7:30 a.m., in the Infantry Center Chapel Annex. The guest speaker will be Chap. (Col.) Richard K. Martin, U.S. Army, retired. All interested personnel are invited to attend. Call the TIC Chapel, 545-2050 if you would like to attend.

Library — Several thousand volumes of Catholic, Protestant and Jewish material are available at the Religious Education Center Library. There are commentaries, Bible dictionaries, Bible handbooks and many other reference books and other religious material.

The library, located in the Religious Education Center, building 229, Crain Hall, is open Monday through Friday.

PROTESTANT

Weekly Women's meeting — The Protestant Women of the Chapel meet each Thursday from 9:30 to 11:30 a.m. at the Religious Education Center. Baby-sitting is provided. Contact Beth Light at 689-5721, for more information.

Sunday School bus — A bus is available to transport individuals who live in McGraw Manor and Davis Hill/Bouton Heights to Sunday School at the Main Post Sunday School.

The route begins in McGraw Manor at approximately 8:55 a.m. and proceeds through Davis Hill, Bouton Heights and on to the Religious Education Center where Sunday School is held. At approximately 10:35 a.m., the bus departs the REC.

For more information, call 545-2366.

CATHOLIC

Rosary-making workshop — Women interested in making rosaries for Fort Benning soldiers are invited to meet Wednesday mornings from 9:30 a.m. to noon at the Religious Education Center. Materials are provided. For more information contact Monica James, 682-8713.

ISLAMIC

'Id Celebration — The 'Id al-Adha will be Thursday at 8 a.m. with activities continuing throughout the day at the newly constructed Masjid as-Jannah, 6550 Forrest Rd. (half mile from Shatulga Road).

There will be no Id prayer at Olsen Hall this year.

The celebration will continue on July 15, all day, and will include a picnic on masjid grounds.

Fort Benning's Muslims are invited to take part in the masjid inauguration on Sunday starting with salat adh-dhuhr at 1:30 p.m., and featuring Qur'an recitation, a khutbah by Akeel Saheb of Griffin, Ga., and a picnic at the masjid.

For more information, speakers of either Arabic or English may contact 1st Lt. Voss or Abdelaziz Dhrif at 689-4367, or Ibrahim al-Marzouq at 689-2126.

Chapel has services in Spanish

By Debbie Galle
USAIC Chaplain's Office

A wide-range of Spanish-speaking religious activities are offered at the Sightseeing Road Chapel.

The two Catholic Masses held each Sunday are a 9:30 a.m. Mass primarily held for about 400 U.S. Army School of the Americas cadets and a 12:30 p.m. Mass for the general Spanish-speaking community.

Bible studies are each Monday at 7 p.m. Marriage and Baptism preparation classes are each Sunday at 2 p.m. The Spanish Catholic Women of the Chapel meet for First Fridays at 10:30 a.m.

Anyone interested in attending Spanish-speaking Masses or participating in the Spanish Religious Education Program may call Chap. (Maj.) George Gonzalez at 545-5494/1926/7721 or visit the Sightseeing Road Chapel, building 2820, 545-2169/4787/1541.

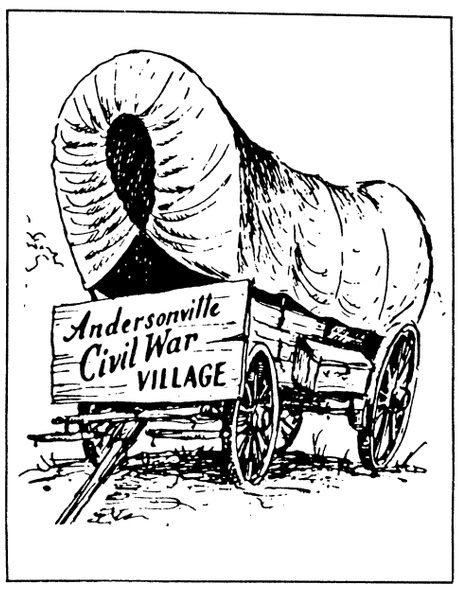
Town invites all to history fair

USAIC Public Affairs Office

The people of Andersonville, Ga. are gearing up for the Andersonville Historic Fair which will be held October 7 through 8.

Although the fair is still three months away, preparations are already underway for the event which will host a number of activities for all.

Confederate and Yankee encampments and old time craftsmen at work will be among the sites to see at the fair.



Clogging and square dancing, as well as military, blue grass and country music will also be featured.

About 200 dealers in arts, crafts, antiques and collectibles will set up shop for the two-day event.

Other event are as follows:

- Hot air balloon rides – Oct. 7-8
- Mock Civil War battle – Oct. 7, 3:30 p.m. and Oct. 8, 2 p.m.
- Log church service – Oct. 8, 10:30 a.m.

For more information, call (912) 924-2558.

WHAT TO DO

If someone complains of a neck injury or numbness after an accident, a spinal cord injury may have occurred. Don't move the person; you can cause greater damage. Tell the ambulance crew you suspect a spinal cord injury.

If you think someone has been injured in the water, don't pull the victim out. Instead, keep the head above water and the neck still. If the body is face down, carefully turn it over, supporting the head, neck and back as a unit. To support the body, use water skis or a long board for the trunk, and sandbags or a life jacket for the neck.

For more information on spinal cord injury prevention and programs and how you can help, contact: National Spinal Cord Injury Association, 149 California Street, Newton, Massachusetts 02158. Tel: (617) 964-0521.

Post readies for evaluation

The community buzzes with activity as it manicures the post for the Training and Doctrine Command ACOE inspection

By Sharon Reynolds
Bayonet Editor

The post commander has designated July 17 through 23 Army Communities of Excellence Week at Fort Benning.

This is a week set aside to get the post manicured and ready for the six-man Training and Doctrine Command inspection team, which will arrive here July 24, according to Beverly Howell, management analyst at Directorate of Resource Management.

ACOE is a program designed to enhance facilities and services to improve the lives of soldiers and civilians and their families who live and work at Fort Benning, according to Kay O'Brien, chief of productivity, DRM.

According to Post Commander Maj. Gen. Micheal F. Spigelmire, all areas of the post, to include family housing, troop billets, administrative and training areas and facilities need to look their best for the evaluation.

Although much has been done, much still needs to be done, according to O'Brien, and this week, ACOE Week, soldiers and civilians will need to maximize their efforts to get ready for the evaluation team.

Chief of Staff James I. Daily has asked everyone to work together in an all-out installation effort to clean up the post. Get out the lawn mowers, hedge trimmers, rakes, paint brushes and cleaning equipment and make the post a winner in the TRADOC competition, he said.

Howell said employees have to realize they're here to serve. "ACOE is not just for competition, it's to improve service, to make life better for soldiers and civilians and their family members. We're here to serve each other."

The team, which will consist of officer and enlisted soldiers and civilians, will arrive here July 24, according to Howell. The first day, she said, they'll roam around and visit anything they want to see. They'll have photographers along to take photos of anything the team wants photos of.

O'Brien said the team will only look at facilities this year and emphasized they are looking for good things. She said TRADOC expects to add services to their evaluation next year.

Just a few of the predesignated places the team will visit include one of the dental clinics, gas stations, dining facilities and ranges.

On July 27, the team will present spot awards for outstanding areas, then they'll take their findings back to TRADOC for the judging. Fort Benning will be judged overall and in specific areas the team requested to see during their stay here.

"Pride," said Gen. Carl E. Vuono, chief of staff of the Army, "is the fuel of human accomplishment."

The human accomplishment is evident here in instances of landscaping, recently painted buildings, paneled offices and improved waiting areas, according to O'Brien who said, "We're proud of our post. We think it's one of the most naturally beautiful in TRADOC. This program has resulted in enhancements all over post."

ACOE is a soldiers' program, according to O'Brien. She said most of the improvements have been accomplished through Self Help and U-Do-It programs with labor provided by the soldiers and civilians who work in the improved facilities.

People here are taking pride in their areas and service, O'Brien said. Fort Benning wants to be the best.

POST BRIEFS

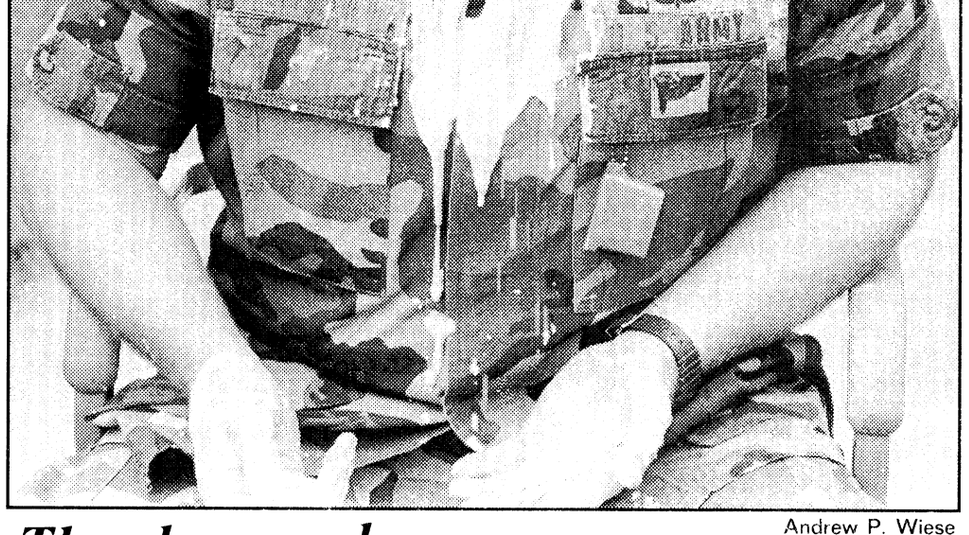
ACS financial counseling available for big spenders

If you are still paying for last year's holiday gifts, paying more than 20 percent of your take-home pay to creditors (excluding mortgage), receiving overdue notices from creditors or depending on bonuses or moonlighting to cover expenses, you may want to work with a financial counselor.

This counseling service is available through Army Community Service at Fort Benning. Counselors will provide assistance in setting up a spending plan, organizing financial records and, if necessary, negotiating debt repayment with creditors.



Call 545-5516 to set up an interview. Be prepared to answer a few questions about your financial situation so the most appropriate counselor can be assigned to your case. This is a free and confidential service.

Ranges get face lift

By Shawn Bryson
Bayonet staff writer

One important aspect of Army Communities of Excellence is the appearance of the community.

While ranges and training areas at Fort Benning are not as visible as the common areas on post, they are still a part of the community, according to Kay O'Brien, an ACOE representative.

However, an ongoing cleanup of the ranges and training areas on post indicates these areas were not receiving the attention needed to further the efforts of making Fort Benning a community of excellence, according to John T. Burke, chief of the Range Division, Directorate of Plans, Training and Mobilization.

The cleanup, which began in mid-May and will continue through next week, has harvested large amounts of trash throughout the installation, Burke said.

As of Wednesday, 112 5-ton truckloads of trash, 149 truckloads of used concertina wire and 75 tractor-trailer loads of scrap metal had been policed from Benning's ranges and training areas, Burke said.

Most of the trash has been recovered from areas in the northern and southern sections of the post, Burke said, but large amounts have also been picked up all along the outskirts of Fort Benning.

Burke said the trash has been taken to the post landfill. The scrap metal, including everything from old vehicle bodies to washing machines and stoves, has been turned in to the Defense Reutilization and Marketing Office for resale.

The massive amount of concertina wire recovered has been stockpiled at one of the ranges and will later be packaged for resale, according to Burke. Also, 156 rolls of unused concertina wire were found and turned in to the supply division for reissue, he said.

Participants in the cleanup included hundreds of soldiers from the 197th Infantry Brigade, 36th Engineer Group and 34th Medical Battalion and employees of the Range Division.

Because of their familiarity with the areas that needed work, the Range Division coordinated the cleanup, according to the division's A.J. Smith.

Each day, 30 soldiers, supervised by five noncommissioned officers, worked on the project.

Unfortunately, according to Burke, some of the soldiers' hard work was done in vain as some of the areas already policed are in need of it again.

Although no one group of people can be held responsible for the trash, unit leaders need to look on ranges and training areas as they would their own barracks areas, according to Steve Gibbon, acting deputy DPTM director. He said most leaders would not allow their unit areas to become trashy, and they shouldn't allow the ranges and training areas to become littered.

Burke said much of the refuse had been in the areas for years. Post officials are currently urging people to be aware of the balloon affect that can occur when many people leave just a little trash behind, as evidenced by the statistics of the cleanup.

ACS celebrates 24 years of service dedicated to the community

By Shawn Bryson
Bayonet staff writer

Army Community Service is as much a part of Army Communities of Excellence as a soldier is a part of the Army.

Serving the community is what the people at ACS do, and, as of next month, they will have been doing it for almost a quarter century.

ACS will celebrate its 24th birthday Aug. 25, and there have been a lot of changes through the years. The most obvious is the steady expansion of the services offered by ACS, according to ACS director, Carla Cary.

Cary, who has been in the ACS business since 1976, explained that the services of ACS 13 years ago don't even compare to what is provided to the community by ACS today. She said ACS services back then were basically limited to a linen closet that loaned out simple household supplies for military families in need.

Today, ACS consists of nine individual programs aimed at making the lives of the people in the Fort Benning community a little, and sometimes a lot, easier, according to Cary.

Those programs include: Army Emergency Relief, Emergency Food Locker, Welcome Center, Consumer Affairs and Financial Assistance, Relocation Assistance, Family Member Employment Assistance, Army Family Advocacy and Exceptional Family Member and Outreach programs.

Cary said ACS currently has 20 full-time employees and a volunteer work force that averages about 65 people.

"Our volunteers put in a lot of hours every month. We couldn't function without them," Cary said.

One of the primary missions of ACS is to help families in need of financial assistance. "About 65 clients come to AER each week, and about 25 clients receive budget counseling through the Consumer Affairs and Financial Assistance Program," Cary said. AER makes funds available for loans and sometimes grants to families under special circumstances beyond their control.

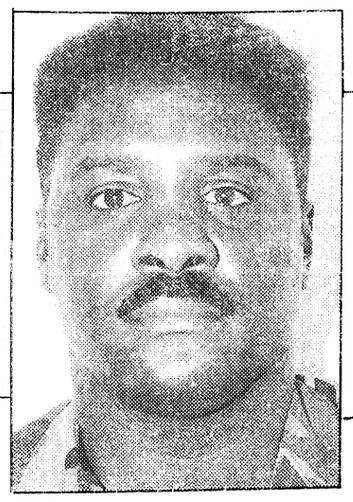
"Our Relocation Assistance and Family Member Employment Assistance programs are also great assets of ACS," Cary said.

The relocation program helps families just arriving to Fort Benning by providing information about the post and surrounding areas to make the move here much smoother.

FMEAP makes job-hunting easier for spouses by providing information on the availability of jobs in the area and by promoting the value of its clients to local organizations.

In celebration of its birthday, ACS will have a display in Building 4 today through July 21. The display will later be moved to the Main Post Exchange.

For more information about the services of ACS, call 545-4043.



OPINION

VARIOUS VOICES: What services does your organization offer the Fort Benning community?

NOTE: This week's Various Voices is directly related to the ACS birthday story. The following people are employees of ACS.

Pat Sneed, Family Member Employment Assistance Program director — "We provide employment and education assistance to family members of all active duty, reserve and retired military personnel. We also assist family members in taking skill development classes such as typing."

Master Sgt. William E. Johnson, Army Emergency Relief — "AER is a program designed to help soldiers in need financially, generally due to an emergency. Sometimes we find that soldiers think they have a financial problem, but they really only need to make minor lifestyle adjustments."

Huey Bridgman, Consumer Affairs and Financial Assistance Program — "We help soldiers get a picture of where they are financially and help them map out where they need to be going. We also help them look at all their choices when buying things like cars or houses."

Andrea Williams, ACS volunteer supervisor — "The volunteers at ACS have put in more than 5,000 hours since January. Our volunteers do work in almost all areas of ACS. They do budget counseling, clerical work and put welcome packets together, among other things."

Debra Howell, Family Advocacy Program coordinator — "We address the issues of family violence in terms of putting on educational and informational briefings for the units and in the community. We also have a battered wives' shelter on post."

Fannie Johnson, Information and Referrals — "We provide welcome packets for Fort Benning, and we can refer people to just about any agency on post."

Chemical, biological weapons

Where do we stand?

By Rudi Williams
American Forces Information Service

The United States and its allies have a lot to worry about when it comes to chemical and biological warfare.

More nations than ever have acquired these capabilities since the United States began its moratorium on production and testing in the late 1960s, said Thomas J. Welch.

The former deputy assistant secretary of defense for chemical matters said it's widely known that the Soviet Union has the world's greatest capability to conduct chemical and biological warfare. But, he noted, there is also a serious threat from Third World countries such as Iraq, Syria and Libya.

About seven other countries also have biological weapons programs, some of which are signatories to the 1972 Biological Weapons Convention that prohibits possession of such weapons.

The continued proliferation of chemical and biological weapons makes the world a much more dangerous place, and the United States must have a strong and effective defense and retaliatory capability; otherwise, there is no credible deterrent, Welch said.

He said DoD is concerned about "the lack of a credible deterrent to chemical and biological attacks on our forces and those of our allies. We will not begin production of the binary Bigeye bomb and the Multiple-Launch Rocket System binary chemical warhead until 1991 and 1992, respectively."

Although the United States is making good progress in its defensive programs, wearing protective masks, gloves, over boots and overgarments hampers service members' ability to perform their missions. A person's ability to perform drops about 50 percent during the first two to four hours of exposure and continues to deteriorate as time passes, according to Welch.

"This often means our forces cannot effectively execute their assigned missions while operating in a contaminated environment," he said. "We need to make our potential adversaries know that because of our chemical retaliation, they will labor under the same conditions if they use chemical or biological weapons — they cannot be allowed to have this advantage.

"We've also received convincing evidence our adversaries are developing new agents for which we may not have adequate defense," said Welch. "If they think these new or existing agents give them a military advantage, they may not hesitate (in) using them.

"An adversary must recognize that our capability to retaliate will place his forces in a posture at least as cumbersome and degrading as our forces must face," Welch continued. "This advantage must be denied throughout the entire battlefield, from the front-line combatants through second-echelon reinforcements to air bases, logistics units and command and control sites in the rear areas."

The United States' old stockpile of unitary munitions doesn't provide a credible deterrent. But Welch emphasized that programs to produce binary chemical weapons enhance deterrence and make it credible.

"Our Triad of binary chemical warfare systems — the 155mm artillery round, the Bigeye bomb and the binary chemical warhead for the Multiple-Launch Rocket System — will provide a safe and effective retaliation capability throughout the depth of the battlefield," he said.

Welch said DoD is working on defensive systems and items to protect troops on the battlefield. "We're designing our system to detect, defend or protect against the growing number of chemical and biological infectious and toxic agents," he noted.

The United States will begin fielding new detectors and alarms, decontamination systems and material, such as the integrated protective ensemble and collective protection for the heavy force modernization, in the early to mid-1990s, according to Welch.

"We'll also complete development of and field new pretreatment drugs for improved protection, a skin decontamination kit, an improved antidote for nerve agents and enhanced medical treatment capabilities," said Welch.

All U.S. biological weapons were destroyed long ago, but Welch said DoD is engaged in a biological defense research program and plans to field new toxin antidotes, a broad spectrum antiviral drug for treatment of hemorrhagic fevers and new vaccines for protection against infectious biological agents.

"We will not perform any research, development, testing, production or stockpiling of these weapons," he emphasized.

"The thrust of the defensive procurement program is to increase our stocks of readiness-related equipment — masks, chemical agent alarms, vaccines and antidotes — while improving the ability of our forces to sustain effective operations in a contaminated environment."

Welch emphasized that DoD is committed to achieving a global, comprehensive and effectively verifiable ban on chemical weapons.

"We will not use chemical weapons first," he said, "but we must be prepared and willing to effectively respond to a chemical or biological attack.

Only his barber knows for sure

By Clyde Snively
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Some folks call them "high and tights," others, "Bert and Ernies," and those who just aren't with it anymore, call them "white sidewalls."

I'm referring, of course, to ranger haircuts, realizing that the haircuts aren't limited to rangers but are worn to some degree by airborne folks and even OSUT soldiers.

These haircuts picked up some notoriety not too long ago when some rangers were mistaken for skin heads and were attacked in a mall in Tacoma, Wash. Surprise, surprise.

I'd sure hate to unknowingly attack a ranger. But anyway, the attack took place, so the Army, which is forever studying something, decided it should study whether or not to change the ranger haircut policy.

Last I heard, it was a dead issue, but the fact the haircut affair did come up, got me to thinking why soldiers wear their hair cut close.

A standard answer is, "cleanliness, neatness and you don't get so hot that way." But I think those are just answers leaders come up with when they really don't know the answer.

After all, it isn't that tough to keep longer hair clean, and if you wear a hat, who cares if the part isn't quite there. As for coolness, Ralf, my dog doesn't wear high and tights, and she stays cool. In fact, the hair insulates her from the heat — and she's a Yankee dog, too.

Being the intrepid reporter that I am, I decided to do some research to see just why short haircuts are in vogue.

The first person I turned to was Brad since he's the self-proclaimed expert on everything.

The only problem with consulting Brad, however, is you don't get an answer, you get a dissertation.

"Clyde, the only thing constant about hirsute fashions, if you take the entire spectrum of mankind into consideration, is the lack of constancy," he began.

"For instance, we know that man first began to shave during the Bronze Age. After that, haircuts worn by warriors, pretty much reflected the fashion trends of the rest of society.

"Alexander the Great had long curls as did the Greek statesmen. The Khan boys, Genghis and Kublai, they had short hair, but wore a ponytail and a beard as did nearly all Mongols. The Caesar family had curly hair, but theirs was cropped close to reflect the Roman Senate. And, of course, the Bonaparte men had their hair short, yet distinctive.

"Peter the Great was a real trend setter. He wanted his people to be clean shaven, so he decreed — 'shave your face or lose your head.'"

Brad was really on a roll, and I could tell he wasn't going to stop, so I pulled out my notebook so I wouldn't miss anything.

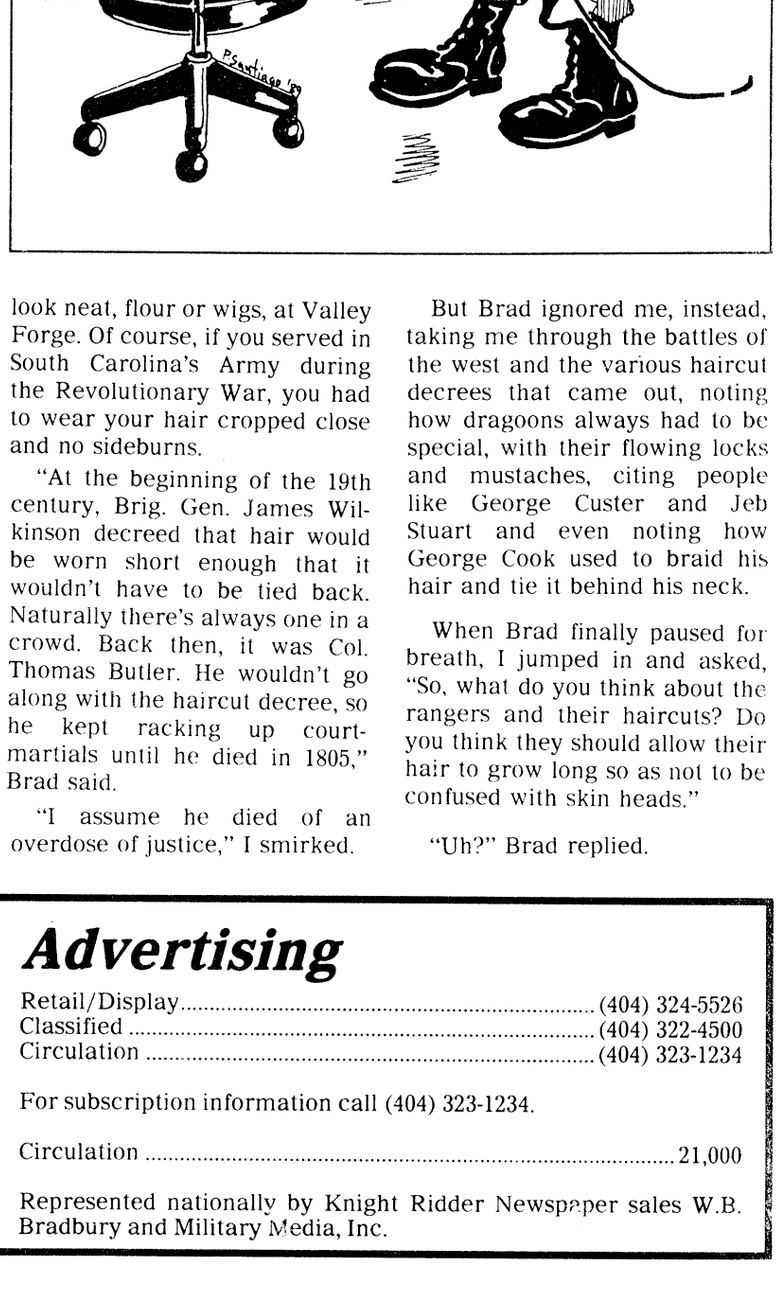
"I'll bet you thought George Washington wore a wig as he led the Continental Army to battle," Brad said.

I admitted I did.

"Wrong-oh," he said. "George powdered his hair with flour. What you saw was his own hair, only full of flour."

"Did all the soldiers in the American Army wear long hair with flour in it?" I asked him, mystified.

"Nope, some wore wigs. But Washington insisted the men look neat, flour or wigs, at Valley Forge. Of course, if you served in South Carolina's Army during the Revolutionary War, you had to wear your hair cropped close and no sideburns.



"At the beginning of the 19th century, Brig. Gen. James Wilkinson decreed that hair would be worn short enough that it wouldn't have to be tied back. Naturally there's always one in a crowd. Back then, it was Col. Thomas Butler. He wouldn't go along with the haircut decree, so he kept racking up court-martials until he died in 1805," Brad said.

"I assume he died of an overdose of justice," I smirked.

But Brad ignored me, instead, taking me through the battles of the west and the various haircut decrees that came out, noting how dragoons always had to be special, with their flowing locks and mustaches, citing people like George Custer and Jeb Stuart and even noting how George Cook used to braid his hair and tie it behind his neck.

When Brad finally paused for breath, I jumped in and asked, "So, what do you think about the rangers and their haircuts? Do you think they should allow their hair to grow long so as not to be confused with skin heads."

"Uh?" Brad replied.

LEONARD BARRACKS

4th Battalion, 36th Infantry's home is named after a Medal of Honor winner.

By Marilyn Balzarini
Infantry Training Center

The home of the 4th Battalion, 36th Infantry, previously known only by its building number, has a name this week — Leonard Barracks.

The building was officially named after Medal of Honor winner Platoon Sgt. Matthew Leonard during a ceremony held July 5. Brig. Gen. William Steele, deputy post commander, and Lois, Leonard's widow, unveiled a portrait of Leonard. The portrait will hang in the "starship's" main lobby.

In his remarks, Steele said Leonard's courage and skill served as an inspiration to his platoon in Vietnam. Now he will serve as an inspiration to countless young infantry soldiers who come here for training.

Steele went on to say Leonard would be pleased to be a part of the 4th Bn., 36th Inf. The unit's motto — Deeds not Words — is one he believed in.

Leonard's name was selected because Command Sgt. Maj. Donald LeNoble, 4th Bn., 36th Inf., said the unit wanted a noncommissioned officer. "The primary mission of this unit is carried out by NCOs — the drill sergeants. Also, this is the Army's Year of the NCO."

Marilyn Balzarini

Lois Leonard admires her late husband's portrait.

In Steele's words, "Sergeant Leonard sacrificed his life for his soldiers, ultimately his country." Leonard Barracks will allow his memory to live on, according to Steele.

"I am pleased that the Army has not forgotten my husband and his contributions." Leonard's widow said, "Now there is a place that his grandchildren and great-grandchildren can come to see and be proud of. It is a great honor."

Kinnett milk cases continue to pour in

Kinnett Dairies

Many Fort Benning residents and employees saw the recent article on the "missing" milk cases in the Columbus paper and responded, reports Harry Hall, Kinnett Dairies manager for Fort Benning.

Since the article appeared, more than $5,000 worth of milk cases have been turned in to the local dairy. It has been a case of "how do I get rid of these things?" More than 300 cases have been picked-up from quarters. The schools have turned them in as have various military activities, which "just accumulated them."

The dairies are happy to get the cases back and are certainly not interested in penalizing anyone who wants to turn in these valuable containers.

Many people think of a milk case as just another expendable box since they are stacked outside local stores, PXs and dining facilities. Health regulations require this outside storage.

The cases became popular as storage containers with the advent of the brightly-colored, light-weight, plastic case. Since that time, the loss of cases has gone up dramatically.

The Georgia dairies alone during 1988 lost nearly $3 million worth of cases. The dairy associations years ago agreed that to stop the misappropriation of the milk cases, to never sell them to the public.

As Tommy Irvin, the Georgia Agriculture commissioner points out, the loss of milk cases has become so great, it has added 3 cents to the cost of a gallon of milk. The local dairy uses more than $10,000 worth of milk cases to make a single day's delivery to the Fort Benning community. This is a lot of milk cases. They cost an average of $5.50 each.

Cases can be turned in without question in several ways. Leave them on the south dock of building 100, bring them to where Kaydie the cow grazes (I-185 and Manchester Expressway) or call 571-6181/6182 for a pick up. The dairies greatly appreciate your assistance.

VA lifts suspension of treatment

Department of Veterans Affairs

The Department of Veterans Affairs will lift the recent national suspension of treatment for veterans whose eligibility depends on available VA resources as a result of the passage of emergency supplemental funding for fiscal year 1989.

VA Secretary Edward J. Derwinski said, "On behalf of VA employees and the veterans they serve, I appreciate the Congressional action on our current budget shortfall. It gives us some relief for the medical care system and time to look for other ways to meet the increasing demand for VA health-care services."

Derwinski had previously reacted to the legislative impasse in Congress, announcing on May 26 a cutback in medical services for veterans with nonservice-connected status whose incomes are above limits set by law (categories "B" and "C") and a curtailment of expenditures.

The supplemental appropriation will enable the Department to support additional outpatient visits, gradually restore employment levels and purchase drugs, supplies and prosthetic devices. Some previously closed programs will be reopened with an emphasis on alcohol and drug abuse treatment units. Additional funding will be provided for other medical programs, such as community nursing home care and the contract program for veterans outreach.

Previously frozen funding for capital accounts and the activation of 96 recently completed construction projects also will be released.

Additional health care option opens up for beneficiaries

Martin Army Community Hospital

Health care beneficiaries now have an additional setting in which they may elect to receive primary care through the Medical Center Family Practice Residency Program, which offers health care to beneficiaries at CHAMPUS discounts.

The program is an addition to Martin Army's health care program, which increases the number of health care providers in the Columbus area offering care at a discount.

What this means to the eligible health care beneficiary is that the provider will abide by all requirements of the CHAMPUS program, file all claims and extend a minimum 10-percent discount.

As with all CHAMPUS claims, beneficiaries will be responsible for a yearly deductible and cost share for each visit. However, the 10 percent discount does reduce this cost share as well as the governments' share.

A Statement of Non-Availability is still required for nonemergency hospitalization and for obstetric care.

Chickamauga Battlefield park ranger, Doug Towne, demonstrates the proper way to prepare a Civil War musket for firing to officers of 2nd Bn., 18th Inf. Regt.

2nd Bn., 18th Inf. officers study battles of the past

While the unit's NCOs prepare for battles of the future

By D. L. Bridges
197th Infantry Brigade

The officers and noncommissioned officers of 2nd Battalion, 18th Infantry Regiment recently took some time to study leadership skills in two different methods that were not the average professional development classes.

While the officers toured Chickamauga and Lookout Mountain Civil War battlefields, near Chattanooga, Tenn., the NCOs conducted first-line leadership training here.

The officers' tour, which was conducted over a three-day period, included historical classes given by individual officers and a group walk through important battlefield sites. The 18th Inf. Regt. was one of the Union participants in the Battle of Chickamauga in September 1863 as part of the Army of the Cumberland under General Rosecrans.

The trip familiarized the officers with the regiment's historical beginnings.

"I was really surprised at the size of the small battle sites and how many soldiers fit into the thick woods," said 1st Lt. Paul Lehto. "Add to that the fact that the water supply was under Confederate control, and you get a real feeling of the suffering they endured," he said.

The tour included stops at museums at Chickamauga and Lookout Mountain battlefields where the officers viewed weapons and equipment displays.

"The weaponry was primitive," said 1st Lt. Brian Maka, "A lot of people think everybody had repeating rifles, but it was mostly single-shot muskets of various types."

However, the Battle of Chickamauga did see the limited but devastating use of repeating rifles by a Union brigade and one of the few times during the Civil War that Confederate forces outnumbered Union forces, according to Civil War historians.

"This has been an eye-opener for me. I'd like to study some of the other battlefields," Lehto said.

"When you see Lookout Mountain, you wonder how anyone had the courage to climb up the steep rocks to fight. Without the ability to evacuate casualties right away, it meant wounded soldiers sometimes laid on the battlefield for hours or days before they received attention," said 1st Lt. Thomas Greaner.

The NCO professional development actually was an exercise that included evaluations of squads performing operations orders; a 12-mile, forced road march; leaders' reconnaissance; set up of a hasty defense; set up of sectors of fire; hand and arm signals; control of weapons fires; Nuclear, Biological and Chemical reports and reconsolidation operations.

"The whole exercise tested the knowledge and abilities of soldiers at the squad-leader level," said Sgt. 1st Class Glen Brown, lane evaluator. "The squad leaders found out their weaknesses and strengths and what they can do to improve their fighting abilities and leadership skills," he said.

The biggest benefit of the exercise was the teamwork it generated and the chance to practice leadership techniques as a squad leader," said Sgt. Dennis Gregory, a squad leader. "What we need now is another exercise to correct the mistakes we made this time."

Nahas takes reins at TEXCOM Infantry Board

By James Grugin
TEXCOM Infantry Board

Col. Albert J. Nahas assumed command of the TEXCOM Infantry Board, replacing Col. Barrie E. Zais June 16.

Nahas is arriving from the 197th Infantry Brigade where he served 15 months as the deputy commanding officer. He was previously assigned as a division chief in the Directorate of Combat Developments, USAIS.

Zais is being reassigned as the commanding officer of the 3rd Infantry Regiment (The Old Guard) at Fort Myer, Va.

The TEXCOM Infantry Board, a tenant unit at Fort Benning, is subordinate to the TRADOC Test and Experimentation Command located at Fort Hood, Texas.

TEXCOM is charged with conducting operational and force development tests and with developing test and experimentation methodology.

The TEXCOM Infantry Board plans, conducts and publishes reports on user tests involving doctrine, training, organization and material relating to infantry operations. User tests are con-

U.S. Army Field Band plans concert here

U.S. Army Field Band

The internationally famous U.S. Army Field Band of Washington, D.C., the official touring musical representative of the United States Army will have a concert and soldier chorus presentation at Columbus College, Fine Arts Hall Oct. 25 at 8 p.m.

As a distinguished member of Congress aptly described the band, "It is a great instrument for stirring patriotic emotions."

Known as the "Musical Ambassadors of the Army," the Field Band travels thousands of miles each year on at least two major concert tours and is considered by music critics to be one of the most distinctive musical organizations now appearing before the public. All concert tours are conducted at the direction of the Secretary of the Army, and performances are open to the general public, free of charge.

The Field Band is composed of the Army's finest soldier-musicians. Many have studied at the country's leading conservatories and schools of music. Many performed with major symphonies and leading dance orchestras before entering the service. All of the musicians — by personal audition — have been specially selected for assignment to the Field Band.

The Soldiers' Chorus, an integral part of the band, is made up of 29 highly-trained and talented vocalists under the direction of Maj. Robert A. McCormick of Brentwood, N.Y. The Chorus presents its own arrangements of well-known compositions at each Field Band performance.

The band's concert repertoire is designed to appeal to all audiences, offering classical, semi-classical and popular selections, choral arrangements, novelty numbers and military marches on each of its programs. On tours of other nations, the Field Band has performed the works of American composers as well as music indigenous to that country.

The band has earned considerable fame outside the United States on multiple tours sponsored by the Department of Army and the State Department.

The first of these tours included eight countries in the United Kingdom and Europe and was highlighted by performances at London's Royal Festival Hall and the opening of the Edinburgh Music Festival. Major concerts were also presented in Berlin, Paris and Amsterdam.

On its second European tour, the Field Band appeared in 12 countries. This was the first service band of the United States ever to play Yugoslavia. The concerts in Belgrade and Zagreb proved to be a significant "cultural dent in the Iron Curtain."

The Field Band became the first major U.S. Army band to appear in Norway, Denmark, Portugal and Monaco. Concert sites included the Municipal Stadium in Belgrade, St. Mark's Square in Venice and Tivoli Park in Copenhagen.

The Field Band's third overseas trip was an all-airborne tour to Hawaii, Japan, Korea and Okinawa, in which 45 concerts were presented in 41 days.

There were special performances for U.S. and U.N. troops and the president of Korea, as well as a television broadcast to all parts of Japan. The Field Band was the first group of visiting artists ever to receive a standing ovation in Yokohama.

In January, 1970, the Field Band and Soldier's Chorus performed, in 15 days, 12 times in Guatemala, Nicaragua, Costa Rica, Panama, the Canal Zone, Ecuador, Colombia, Venezuela, Puerto Rico and the U.S. Virgin Islands. Thus, the "Musical Ambassadors of the Army" became the first U.S.-based Army band to tour Latin America.

In 1987, the Concert Band and Soldier's Chorus toured Korea, Okinawa and Japan on a Far East Tour, celebrated the 750th anniversary of the city of Berlin, Germany and toured several cities in the Federal Republic of Germany.

In February 1989, the Field Band traveled to the Republic of India to perform at the Eighth Indian Engineering Trade Fair for which the United States was the "Partner Country."

The performances featured American themes and a total of 96 were given in 12 days.

The Concert Band and Soldier's Chorus performed for President R. Venkataraman and Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi of India. The Concert Band also performed two days of concerts and clinics for the Indian Army Band.

This was the first time a Washington-based premier military band has toured in India and the first time a U.S. Army unit has been allowed on an Indian Army Base.

This tour was an overwhelming success and created a very positive public relations atmosphere for the U.S. Army and the United States.

On its tours within the continental U.S., the Field Band has performed at most of the country's finest halls and amphitheaters, including the Hollywood Bowl, the Red Rocks Theater in Denver, Philadelphia's Robin Hood Dell, New Jersey's Garden State Arts Center, the Hatch Shell in Boston, the San Francisco Opera House and the Ford Auditorium in Detroit.

In New York's Carnegie Hall, the Field Band was the first military band to present a full-dress concert.

The band has appeared at the New York and Seattle World's Fairs and represented the United States Army at Expo '67 in Montreal and at the Liberty Weekend celebration in New York on July 4, 1986.

As impressive as the performance of their music, is the outstanding appearances of the bandsmen attired in the distinctive Army dress blue uniforms.

Though in striking contrast to the dress of the soldier in combat, the blue uniform has a tradition dating back to the early 1800s when it was worn by the officers and men of the then young United States Army.

The person who can hel you most when you leave active duty might be the ne who shows you how to continue your service in the Army Reserve.

Whether you're getting ut of the Army, Air Force, Marines or Navy, or of the best places to get a head start is in an Army Reserve unit. Because serving in the Army Resrve (usually one weekend a month and two weeks a year) can help you reach your new goals.

You'll be earning a part-me income based on your rank and maintaining many of your benefits such as life insurance, shoping in the PX and commissary, and qualifying for money to further your education.

Transferring to the Army Reserve is a great way to make the transition to civilian life. Because you're surrounded by other people with whom you have lots in common.

With over 4,000 Army Reserve units, there's probably one close to where you plan on living. So find out more about the Army Reserve. Man pleads guilty to fraud

Selective Service System

The first man to be prosecuted for fraudulently stating on a federal student loan form that he had registered with Selective Service has pleaded guilty.

Carl N. Veilleux stated on forms for a federal student college financial aid grant that he had registered with the Selective Service System when, in fact, he had not.

The Solomon Amendment to the Military Selective Service Act, sponsored by Rep. Gerald Solomon (R-NY), states that men who are required to register with Selective Service and fail to do so are ineligible for student financial aid under Title IV of the Higher Education Act of 1965.

The categories of aid covered by the Solomon Amendment include Pell Grants, Supplemental Education Opportunity Grants, College Work-Study, National Direct Student Loans and State Student Incentive Grant programs.

Applicants for Title IV student aid who are of registration age must sign a Statement of Compliance certifying they are registered or they are not required to be registered.

A Memorandum of Understanding between Selective Service and the Department of Education was signed in December 1985. Under the agreement, DOE provides Selective Service with lists of Pell Grant applicants and recipients. These names are checked against registration files. The registration status of young men receiving other types of loans is also verified.

Veilleux is the first man to be prosecuted under this program.

Selective Service Director Samuel K. Lessey Jr., said, "We are pleased with the cooperation Selective Service has received over the past several years from the Department of Education. Their assistance has helped us to carry out the intent of the Solomon Amendment."

Veilleux entered a plea of guilty to one count of student loan fraud. As part of the agreement, Veilleux, not yet 26 years old, agreed to register with the Selective Service System. Once a young man turns 26, Selective Service can no longer accept his registration. He further agreed to pay back to the United States government the $5,088 fraudulently obtained. In addition, United States Magistrates Jerome Niedermeier sentenced Veilleux to a suspended sentence, placed him on an 18-month probation and made an express condition of probation that he repay the $5,088.

Representative Solomon said, "If a young man is going to accept the benefits his country has to offer, then he must be willing to accept the responsibilities that come wth them."

Young men mst register with Selective Servic within 30 days of their 18th birdday at any U.S. post office. Failre to register is a felony punishole by a fine of up to $250,000, o to 5 years in prison and possile loss of some federal benefits.

DEH rewards its employees for helpful suggestions

By Sue H. O'Dell
Directorate of Engineering & Housing

Directorate of Engineering and Housing Civilian employees met in Marshall Auditorium June 29 for a quarterly directorate meeting.

These meetings, first held several years ago, were reinstated this past year. Through the years, they have included such topics as health and safety, DEH reorganization, the Army Communities of Excellence program and general question-and-answer sessions.

The guest speaker for this quarter's meeting was Yvonne Linsenbigler who presented a program on services available to civilian employees through the installation Civilian Counseling Service.

Col. Robert W. Hatch, DEH, presented surprise cash awards to Danny Means and Azzell P. Benton for their suggestions for improving DEH operations. Their suggestions resulted in increased efficiency and production.

Awards were also presented to Billie J. McKenzie and Johnny L. Wilson whose prompt response to a power outage and initiative in resolving the problem precluded having to relocate troops to other buildings.

Employee of the Quarter selections were announced in both GS and WG categories.

Jennie McRae, secretary of the Chief of Facilities and Maintenance and Operations Division, was selected as the GS winner based on her knowledge of policies and procedures, which has increased productivity in the office and for her courtesy and patience with customers and fellow employees.

Equally impressive were the credentials of the WG winner, George D. Marks, foreman of the Kitchen Equipment Section, whose management skills resulted in establishment of a 24-hour service order response time and a policy of accomplishing preventive maintenance during the same service call.

Marks has recycled for future use much of the equipment from condemned buildings in Harmony Church, resulting in large dollar savings to the government.

Successful arms reductions place greater reliance on reserve forces

Reserve Officer Association

Success in negotiating conventional arms reductions with the Soviets will place greater reliance on reserve forces, according to the National Security Council's senior director for defense and arms control.

Speaking in Houston June 24 at the national convention of the Reserve Officers Association of the U.S., Dr. Arnold Kanter said successful negotiations will substantially reduce "the capacity of the Soviet Union and the Warsaw Pact to launch a surprise or short-warning attack against NATO.

"Because of the massive reductions this agreement would force them to make, they would need a relatively long period of mobilization and training in order to mount a successful attack. Such an agreement would play NATO's strength, but it would also increase our reliance on and the value of our reserve forces.

"We would have the time necessary to mobilize these forces, and we would need them more than ever if the Soviets decided ever to take the route of military aggression."

Reserves have another advantage, he added. "As we look ahead over the next several years, the defense budget simply will not keep up with the need. Our forces will ave to become leaner and miner, and our reliance on the reserves to perform many of the functions now done by more expensive active forces is likely to grow."

Kanter predied two choices for the future: "Active forces will be increasingly hollowed out by progressive budget cuts, and we will rely increangly on reserve and cadre force"

OBC Class 5-89 passes testing, 117 receive infantry cords

By David Terrell
Infantry Officer Basic Course

If you happened to be in the vicinity of Marshall Auditorium June 23 around 3 p.m., you probably wouldn't have been able to ignore the roar barely contained by the closed doors.

The source of this cacophony was the 117 graduating students of Class 5-89 of the Infantry Officer Basic Course, Company A, 2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry.

The course began March 5, bringing students from as far away as Saudi Arabia and as near as Columbus. The school combined a large contingent of active duty personnel with National Guard and Reserve and allied soldiers.

The program is designed to test every aspect of battlefield leadership. The 16-week course moves the lieutenants from individual skills up to company-sized movements.

In the first weeks, the students qualified with the M-16A2 rifle. Of the 117 students firing, 111 qualified expert

Another crucial skill learned is land navigation. 100 percent of Co. A personnel passed this four-day test, working both the day and night phases.

As they mastered these skills separately, the students then had to bring all they learned together to complete each of four field problems spanning 20 days.

To compliment the tangible hands-on skills, the students spent extensive hours working on the finer points of being an infantry officer. Such classes as Military History, Army Writing, Staff Communications, Evaluation Reports and Counseling assist in providing the Army with a well-rounded leader who can produce the correct solution to any situation at all times.

So if the uproar that Friday afternoon disturbed you, forgive them. The Army's newest warrior class had just walked its last steps without its coveted infantry cords.

Warm weather brings increase in biking accidents

By Karles C. Jackson
Crime Prevention Office

More than 1,000 bicyclists were killed and 40,000 injured in the United States in accidents last year.

The majority of these victims were between 5 and 15 years old.

With the advent of hot summer weather, Fort Benning should see a marked increase in the number of bicycles involved in accidents.

While bicycling can be both enjoyable and healthy, it can also be dangerous. Although collisions involving bicycles and cars are often the fault of the car driver, it's the bicyclist who is more prone to be seriously injured.

These sobering thoughts make it imperative upon both parents and their children to do all in their power to decrease the likelihood of becoming involved in a bicycle accident. For starters, when planning to purchase a bicycle for a child, every parent should be aware of the responsibilities that must be assumed. Several questions a parent might ask are:

- Is my child old enough to understand traffic laws?
- Is the neighborhood safe for children on bicycles?
- Do I have the patience to teach my children traffic laws and rules?
- Bicyclists of all ages must understand that, just as in operating an automobile, adhering to safe-riding practices is of the utmost importance. The following are some pointers to help you and your family to "ride right with a bike."
- Obey all traffic signals.
- Be seen at night. Be sure to have a white light in the front of your bike and a red reflector on the rear. Always wear light or reflectorized clothing when riding at night.
- Keep to the right — ride in the same lane as vehicles, but just as close to the edge of the road as possible.
- Ride in a single file — always ride with one bicycle behind the other and never side by side.
- Slow down at intersections — look in all directions.
- Use proper hand signals — give signals before turning, not while turning.
- Ride in a straight line — don't weave or swerve in traffic. Don't be a show off.
- Slow down going downhill — you may have to stop quickly.
- Keep your eyes straight ahead — watch where you are going.
- Only one on a bike — bicycles made for one rider should never carry two.
- Don't ride a bike that's not in good condition — it's not safe. Check your brakes and steering before you ride.

Remember the above rules and teach them to your loved ones. By working together and observing the rules of the road, we can make our community a safer place in which to live, work and play. Accident prevention is the community business.

ASK THE JUDGE

By Deborah B. Montgomery
Staff Judge Advocate's Office

Q. My spouse and I are having marital problems. He came home today with a document called a "separation agreement." Please explain what this document is. How can I be sure my interests are being represented before I agree to sign it?

A. A separation agreement is a contract between you and your spouse.

Although you and your spouse will remain legally married, you will live separate as though you are not.

This does not mean either party has the right to cohabit with a third party.

The separation agreement sets out the terms you both agree to live with as part of the separation, such as child custody, child visitation rights, child support, spouse support and division of property.

In the event you eventually get divorced, the separation agreement may be used as part of a final divorce settlement.

Since a separation agreement can affect you and your children from the marriage, if you have any, for years to come, it is crucial that you understand the provisions of the agreement before signing.

If you do not feel the separation agreement is fair, you do not have to sign.

You have the right to discuss any proposed separation agreement with an attorney to make sure the agreement is fair to you.

For your own protection, you should contact the legal assistance office for an appointment before you sign any papers.

The Fort Benning Legal Assistance Office phone number is 545-3281/3282.

Home gyms can be dangerous

Using home workout equipment can be more convenient and less expensive than joining a health club, but poorly constructed equipment can break and cause injuries, according to the National Safety Council

When shopping for a home gym, look for a marker from a recognized testing laboratory. Make sure the equipment is constructed with heavy steel and strong bolts, rather than lightweight tubing and thin screws or pins.

Moving parts should be guarded, and cables should be made of strong steel. Always ask to test equipment before buying it — make sure it feels sturdy and comfortable when you use it.

Board

ducted on equipment and related items to be used by infantry units and soldiers.

Several of the items the Infantry Board is currently involved in testing or is planning to test, are:

- The Advanced Combat Rifle to assess the hit performance and dispersion characteristics of four ACR weapon systems in comparison with those characteristics of the M-16A2 rifle. The test results will form the basis to make a decision to continue or accelerate the program to determine a successor for the current service rifle.

The ACR test will be conducted on various ranges at Fort Benning. However, the primary test facility will be Buckner Range where computerized instrumentation is being installed to collect hit and miss distance data on stationary and moving targets out to 300 meters and hit data on stationary targets out to 600 meters for all candidate weapons systems.

- The 120mm Heavy Mortar to determine the operational effectiveness and suitability of the carrier-mounted BMS-120. Test results will support a type classification decision.
- The M-72E4 LAW, a product-improvement version of current M-72A2 is designed to be issued as a round of ammunition. An infantry platoon will employ the LAW in a series of realistic field exercises based on ARTEP requirements. Testing will consist of live-fire, field exercises with emphasis on M-72E4 hit capabilities, engagement time, training, reliability, man-portability and weapon compatibility with standard uniforms and equipment.
- The Multipurpose Individual Munition to examine the feasibility of using M-16-mounted munitions against bunkers and light armored vehicles. Two candidates are M-16-mounted, and one candidate is an individual weapon system, such as the LAW or AT4, with a range of 400 meters. The test will examine the suitability of each MPIM candidate to meet the operational needs of the infantry soldier.
- The Night Vision Goggles to determine the extent of problems encountered by vehicle drivers using goggles that have varying amounts of distortion. Test results will find the limit of distortion in AN/PVS-5 acceptable for use by wheeled vehicle operators.

Foss nominated TRADOC commander

Lt. Gen. John W. Foss, currently the Army's deputy chief of staff for operations and plans, as well as the Army senior member of the military staff committee to the United Nations, has been nominated by the president to become commander of the Training and Doctrine Command.

Foss, a 1957 West Point graduate, succeeds Gen. Maxwell R. Thurman, who will retire from the Army Sept. 1 after more than 36 years of service.

Foss served at TRADOC headquarters from 1973-76 as a combat developments staff officer. He was the commanding general, U.S. Army Infantry Center, Fort Benning, Ga., from March 1984 to January 1986. Before assuming his current position, Foss commanded the XVIII Airborne Corps, Fort Bragg, N.C.

A change of command ceremony has been scheduled for Aug. 2 at TRADOC headquarters on Fort Monroe, Va.

Tanker returns to Benning

Odis Edwards stares at bust of his former boss, Gen. Douglas McArthur.

USAIC Public Affairs Office

After nearly half a century, a former instructor at the Tank School Detachment returned to his old duty station here.

Retired Chief Warrant Officer Odis Edwards was 21 years old when he first arrived at Benning in 1932. He came back recently to visit his old unit, meet young soldiers and generally see how the Army has changed.

He visited the Infantry Museum, the Airborne School and saw a "Rangers in Action" demonstration.

During his assignment here as an automotive and tank maintenance instructor, Edwards trained many young officers who later became generals. "Walker, Williams, Ennis, Hammond and Holly," came to mind when asked who they were.

Edwards said he was in charge of the post swimming team and participated in both football and track.

He said one of his most memorable moments was when he played handball with General Patton.

He said he was on the handball court practicing by himself when a voice from above shouted, "Hey, are you going to play by yourself the whole time?" Edwards replied, "My friend didn't show up." Edwards said the man said his friend didn't show up either and the stranger wanted to know if he could play with Edwards.

"Neither of us knew each other," Edwards said. "He came down, and we were having a real battle. I beat him the first game real quick, about 21-5. After that game he said, 'You're not through are you?' I told him not unless he wanted to quit.

"About then, another voice came from above and said, 'General, I'm sorry I'm late.' The general replied, 'You should be,' and excused himself for a few minutes," Edwards said.

Edwards said since he had learned who his opponent was, he eased up a little the next couple of games. Edwards said that the general was a good sport and that they played again on several occasions.

He also mentioned that while the general was noted for swearing, he had seen him aggravated, and he never heard him utter a curse word.

While an instructor at the tank school, Edwards met Gen. Riley Ennis who later assigned him to the embassy in Tokyo to be the transportation sergeant for Gen. Douglas MacArthur.

"When I got to the embassy, I was told by an aide, 'You're on your own. . .take care of all the transportation. I had 50 people to select from to take care of the ambassador and his staff," Edwards said. Then a master sergeant, he, along with Sgt. Buster Keaton were the general's drivers.

In fact, it is mentioned in the book "American Caesar" that, "the general commuted daily between the American embassy and his headquarters in a sleek, black 1941 Cadillac driven by Master Sergeant Odis Edwards."

The car bore fender flags and the license number "1" with five silver stars on a bright blue background .

While assigned to the general's staff, Edwards became very close to the MacArthur family. "Knowing my background as a swimming coach when I was stationed at Benning, he asked me to teach his son Arthur to swim." Edwards said he also took home movies, and on one occasion, asked the general if he could take some footage of the family opening presents on Christmas morning.

"General MacArthur was a real human being," he said. "He cared about the soldiers around him. The general always liked to watch a movie, preferably a western. A movie was shown every night except on Sunday. If there weren't many boys, then he would lean over to Mrs. MacArthur and ask, 'Where are the boys?' When he mentioned

Families needed to host foreign students who wish to attend local high schools

International Education Forum

Host families are needed for foreign students who will be attending high school here.

International Education Forum, a non-profit organization, has a large number of teen-age English-speaking students from Europe and Asia, who have not placed with an American host family.

The students, who come from various countries, are coming to attend an American high school for 10 months. Some would like to live in the Fort Benning and Muscogee County area.

The students, ages 15-18, both boys and girls, will arrive in the United States Aug. 19.

The students are from Sweden, Norway, Denmark, Finland, Holland, Belgium, Austria, Switzerland, West Germany, Spain, France, Italy, Ecuador, Australia and Japan.

Host family homes are needed now so the students can obtain their visas. The students will attend a local high school and return to their homes in late June, 1990.

The students all speak some English, have been screened by their local school representatives and have their own pocket money, medical and liability insurance.

The students, ages 15 to 18, all speak English. Prospective host families should have a genuine interest in learning about the customs and culture of another country and the desire to share American traditions with a foreign student.

American families with small children, grown children, teen-agers as well as those with no children at all, single parent and single persons are welcome to participate in this program.

Prospective host families should enjoy teen-agers, have a genuine interest in learning about the customs and culture of another country and the desire to share American traditions with a foreign student.

Host families are asked to provide room, board and enthusiasm to share their family life with a teen-age visitor from abroad.

An IEF coordinator will assist in the process of matching the host family and student. Coordinators match the family's and student's interests, hobbies and activities, and are responsible as local contacts during the year for any problems or questions.

The organization also has state, regional and national coordinators that are available to work with local coordinators, families and students.

IEF is also looking for American students who would like to spend 6 to 11 months in Australia. The students will leave the United States in January, 1990.

For more information about either program, write to Steven Morris, 1913 - 18th Avenue, Columbus, Ga. 31901 or call him at (404) 327-7967 or 1-800-346-2826.

The International Education Forum is a non-profit educational foundation, operating under the auspices of the U.S. Information Agency, with headquarters in Danville, Calif.

TSA provides marketplace for workers' products

Army News Service

Practically every government employee, military or civilian, has at one time used a familiar retractable black plastic ball point pen bearing the title "Skilcraft-U.S. Government."

Skilcraft pens been used to produce virtually every kind of government document, from top secret drafts to top sergeants' doodles. Famous autographs, works of art, even noted manuscripts have all originated at the tip of these commonplace writing instruments.

But the pen's creators never see their product perform.

Skilcraft pens are manufactured by the National Industries for the Blind, and pens aren't the only items bearing their trademark.

In fact, most NIB products can't be found in government storage cabinets. They are found more often in Troop Support Agency commissaries.

The NIB got its start when two Congressional members from the New York delegation, Sen. Robert F. Wagner and Rep. Caroline O'Day, persuaded fellow lawmakers to approve an act creating a government market for blind worker-made items. The act quickly caught the attention and approval of another New Yorker, President Franklin D. Roosevelt. He signed it into law on June 25, 1938.

Commissary association with Skilcraft began approximately a dozen years later. For part of that 12-year interlude, NIB workshops turned out products for the World War II effort, so there was little to market to military commissaries. The 1950s brought a move toward the commissary market, but it took seven more years for NIB products to reach commissary shelves.

When the products finally got there, commissary customers received them with great enthusiasm. In July 1957, NIB reported that commissary sales had provided 277,991 hours of employment for blind workers.

NIB's association with military commissaries has now grown to a multi-million dollar business. Skilcraft sells over 100 items to Army commissaries — mostly household goods, such as brooms, mops, clothes lines and pins. And, along the way have come many innovations.

In 1988, Skilcraft introduced its 'J' hook program to TSA. The program consists of 10 kitchen gadget items hung on hooks near a related product. For instance, can openers are located on hooks near cans of vegetables, pet food and other products. Bottle openers are located near sodas and bottled water, and pizza cutters are placed near delicatessens and frozen pizzas.

Sales of the products have been phenomenal, say TSA officials.

Total sales of "J " hook items totals $118,000 for the year they have been displayed in TSA commissaries, and TSA officials hope that trend will continue.

In its recent annual report, Skilcraft estimated that its military retail sales now account for 650 jobs — 650 examples of how TSA's motto, "Serving the Most Deserving," can have a double meaning.

'the boys,' he was talking about the soldiers," Edwards said.

While touring the National Infantry Museum, which was the post hospital when Edwards was at Fort Benning, he stopped off to look over the tanks on display, saying, "I sure wish I could look at the engine."

Upon signing in at the museum and finding the elevator was not operating, he inched his way slowly up three flights of stairs with the aid of his wife, Mary, and his cane.

Inside the museum, Edwards was looking at one of the manikins when he started to talk about how he used to have to wrap his leggings. "We used to start at the top and wrap down, but we found it was better to start at the bottom and work our way up."

Learning there was a bust of Gen. MacArthur, his eyes lit up, and he really got excited. "I wonder if it looks as good as I remember him," he said. Coming upon the bust he stared at it with a proud expression on his face. As he leaned on the stand and gazed at MacArthur, he began talking about the general's cap.

He had an expression of joy in his eyes as he looked up at his old boss and close friend. Edwards said he was very proud to have worked for such a famous general.

According to Edwards, the general's hat was kind of greasy and Mrs. MacArthur wanted to get it cleaned. Edwards said he told her the hat was too old and would fall apart. She took his advice and didn't have it taken out.

A couple of years ago while visiting the museum at Norfolk, Va., Edwards learned the top of the hat had been taken out and replaced with a new one. He said he was very disappointed that it had been done.

After watching the hand-to-hand combatants go at it in the Rangers In Action demonstration, Edwards said, "That's really slick. I bet that guy's ribs are sore. I wish all my buddies could see this."

After the demonstration, he eased his way slowly down the bleachers and up the long path to the awaiting bus. It had been a long day for the gray-haired man full of memories past, but not long enough to see all he wanted to see, such as General Patton's old headquarters and the grave of a friend.

But that's no problem for the 78-year-old Edwards. "I guess I'll just have to come back next year. Maybe I'll play some golf then, too."

Small things may reduce your air conditioner's cooling effectiveness

By Becky Ray
Energy Branch

Fort Benning's air conditioning mechanics are finding that many residents are decreasing the effectiveness of their air conditioners by doing things to make their houses and offices warmer or more humid.

For instance, leaving doors and windows open, even a small amount, allows cooled air to escape to the outdoors.

Make sure doors and windows stay tightly closed when air conditioners are on.

Even after air conditioners in offices have gone off for the evening, buildings will remain cool for some time if windows and doors are left closed.

Turning on an attic fan when an air conditioner is on rapidly blows cool air out and pulls hot air into the house.

Attic fans should never be used while air conditioning is being used.

Bathroom and kitchen ventilation fans also blow cool air out of a building and should be used only when absolutely necessary.

Storm doors that allow sunlight to enter a house can cause the house to be several degrees warmer.

Windows also permit sunlight to heat up inside air.

All doors should be kept closed to keep out warming rays of the sun, and window shades or blinds should be used to block direct sunlight.

Many appliances can heat houses quickly and add to the humidity in the air.

Ovens and stoves are good examples. Cooking should be done in the cooler early morning or evening hours.

Use quick-cooking foods or serve cold dishes to avoid excess heat and humidity in preparing meals.

Microwave ovens are especially helpful in reducing heat added to your kitchen because no heating elements are used. Cooking times are also substantially reduced.

Hot water use adds heat and humidity to the air as well.

Showering, washing dishes, doing laundry and cleaning with water are prime examples.

Limit use of hot water in the hot hours of the day to keep temperatures and humidity down.

Televisions, lights, stoves, stereos and other appliances should be turned off when they aren't being used.

Most electrical appliances radiate heat that increases room temperatures.

There are many misconceptions about getting the most benefit from air-conditioning systems and keeping homes and offices cool.

If you have questions regarding this or any other energy-related subject, call the Energy Branch at 545-4465 or 545-SWAT.

FORSCOM announces essay contest

Army News Service

U.S. Army Forces Command is sponsoring an Army theme essay contest until Nov. 11, according to FORSCOM officials.

"This gives FORSCOM corporals through sergeants major the opportunity to tell it in their own words," said FORSCOM Command Sgt. Maj. Robert F. Beach.

The NCO stories must have leading, caring, training or maintaining as their focus and be based on actual observations or experiences. No fictional accounts will be considered.

Four winners in each category from active, National Guard and Reserve NCOs will receive $500 U.S. Savings Bonds and Army Achievement Medals. The 12 winning essays, along with those written by 12 runners-up, will be published in FORSCOM's Army theme book, "The NCO: In their own words."

The winners will be honored by Beach in a ceremony and reception Dec. 15 at Fort McPherson.

"In this NCO year, NCOs in FORSCOM should take pride in their achievements by leaving behind a written record of what NCOs mean to the Army," said Beach. Essays will be evaluated on six criteria: audience appropriateness, factuality, readability, style and mechanics.

By using the following procedure, soldiers on the Family Housing Waiting List can use this chart to estimate when they can expect quarters:

Locate your category of housing.

Note eligibility date located on the same line as your category.

Calculate the time difference between the eligibility date listed and your eligibility date. The difference is the approximate time you still have to wait for housing.

EXAMPLE: If the latest eligibility date of the person who last received housing in your category was May 15, 1988, and your date of eligibility is Sept. 15, 1988, you can expect housing in about four months. If you do not know your eligibility date, contact the Family Housing Office at building 399, 545-3107.

29th Inf. Regt. sponsors annual bass tournament

By Cheryl K. Stall
29th Infantry Regiment

Members of the 29th Infantry Regiment hit the water recently.

However, it was not in the usual 29th fashion; there was not a swimming Bradley Fighting Vehicle in sight. Boats, fishing poles and tackle boxes were the only equipment to be found as 50 participants took part in the fourth annual 29th Infantry Bass Tournament.

The tournament, held at Florence Marina, was open to members of the 29th Inf. Regt., their guests and corporate members of the Association of the U.S. Army. Teams of two spent the day vying for a cash award as well as various prizes donated by local businesses.

Col. Richard L. St. John, commander of the 29th Inf. Regt., was on hand at the awards ceremony to present the winning teams their prizes.

Although the tournament had less participants than last year, the competitors said it "went very well."

The catch of the day was brought in by Vern Collins and Matt Hopson, with a total weight of 16 pounds, 4 ounces.

In second place was Sunny Buttrum and James Lewis with 9 pounds, 8 ounces.

Third place finishers were Long and Marshall with 9 pounds, 3 ounces.

The big fish of the day was caught by Daury and Bob Faircloth weighing in at 5 pounds, 8 ounces.

Benning soldier tops world wrestlers

Army News Service

A Fort Benning soldier won in his class in an international wrestling meet recently.

Spec. Derrick Waldroup of HHC, 29th Infantry Regiment, topped four of the world's best wrestlers to win the 90-kg class at the Concord International Tournament in Concord, Calif., recently.

Waldroup bested Japanese Olympian Yasutoshi Moriyama, 21-8, then went on to pin Reyaldo Peno, the Cuban national champion, and Tod Giles, the second-ranked U.S. wrestler.

In the championship match, Waldroup jumped to a commanding lead and held on for an 18-6 decision over former Army wrestler Randy Coutoure. Coutoure, now a student at Oklahoma State University, is ranked ninth among NCAA wrestlers.

Sgt. Phil Lanzatella of Fort Campbell, Ky., took fifth place in the 110-kg division. After initial victories over Americans James Hoskinson and Steve Lawson, Lanzatella lost to the Polish wrestler who eventually won the 110-kg championship.

Three other Army wrestlers competed in the meet: Spec. Doug House and Sgt. Robert Goode, both of Fort Campbell, and Sgt. Troy Owens, of Friedberg, Germany.

Waldroup is currently in Stillwater, Okla., where he is competing in the U.S. Olympic Sports Festival.

Edwards leads artillerymen to victory

By Tabb Benzinger
197th Infantry Brigade

Sean Edwards was credited with the game-winning hit with a single to center field as 4th Battalion, 41st Field Artillery struck for six runs in the sixth inning en route to a 10-9 victory over 1st Battalion, 18th Infantry.

4th Bn., 41st Fld. Arty. fell behind early with the help of some untimely fielding errors and silent bats.

Tabb Benzinger got the artillerymen on the board with a solo shot over the left field fence in the second inning. The 4th Bn., 41st bats were silent again until the fourth inning when both Brian Lamar and Clarence Christian crushed home runs.

As the game wore on, it proved to be a classic confrontation. The infantry battalion punched out singles as the Redlegs continued to take the ball deep. The field artillery battalion was down by five runs heading into the bottom of the sixth when it appeared they decided to fire for effect.

When the dust settled, six runs had scored and 4th Bn., 41st was leading 10-9. 1st Bn., 18th's bid for victory was snuffed out in the top of the seventh by solid defensive efforts.

CLASSES

Financial counseling — The Fort Benning Army Community Service, in cooperation with the University of Georgia Cooperative Service and the Columbus Consumer Credit Counseling Service is offering a financial counseling seminar to train volunteers to assist military families in managing their money.

The Seminar will consist of three days of intensive study at the Columbus Hilton Hotel, Aug. 29 through 31. It will enable counselors to assist military family members in managing credit, budgeting and financial record keeping. They are taught counseling techniques and made aware of community resources.

Following the seminar, the volunteers will be given case studies to solve during a period of on-the-job training. An experienced counselor will act as a consultant to each volunteer.

Volunteers who complete the three-day seminar will be asked to spend a minimum one day per week for six months as a financial counselor in the Fort Benning Consumer Affairs and Financial Counseling Program. To become a volunteer financial counselor and take part in this training, contact Karen Crowley at 545-5602.

LUPUS: A Chronic Disease

Q. What is lupus?

A. Systemic lupus erythematosus, commonly called lupus or SLE, is an autoimmune disease of unknown cause and cure that can affect practically every tissue and organ in the body, including the skin, joints, blood, nervous system, heart and lungs, among others.

The disease varies considerably from patient to patient, with spontaneous improvement or even remission (total disappearance of symptoms) occurring between periods of active disease. The periods of improvement may last for weeks, months, or perhaps years.

Lupus, a chronic disease, may be triggered by infection, injury, surgery, certain drugs such as sulfa compounds, and possibly nervous tension and emotional upsets. Symptoms are varied and diverse, and include fatigue, persistent low grade fever, pain and joint swelling and the classic "butterfly rash."

Lupus can become a serious threat to life when the kidneys, central nervous system or other vital organs are involved. However, while mortality was once high in patients with these severe manifestations, improvements in therapy have dramatically altered the outlook. In fact, the majority do quite well now. Some lupus patients only infrequently develop more severe complications and some never do.

A World Class Military Supply Store

June was an active month for bestowing honors on some very deserving individuals dedicated to the military service. These honors included the presentation of the 1989 AUSA Livingston Award to Mrs. Lenora Smith and the Change of Command Ceremony of the 75th Ranger Regiment honoring Colonel (P) Wesley B. Taylor, Jr. and Colonel William F. Kernan.

The Livingston Award began six years ago when Cliff Livingson, Sr. felt certain individuals should be honored for their commitment to promoting and improving the relationships between the military and civilian communities. Mrs. Lenora Coghlan Smith has continuously proven her devotion to the armed services. Her life began at Fort Benning, Georgia, where her father, James J. Coghlan (Major USA retired) and mother, Lenora Bowen Coghlan resided. In 1943 she married Joseph Wilson Smith. He was 2nd Vice President of AUSA when he passed away in 1982.

Mrs. Smith became involved in numerous leadership positions in the community. She is a member of the D.A.R., Southern Growth Policies Board, Russell County Historical Commission, and the Ambassador's Group with the Phenix City-Russell County Chamber of Commerce.

Presently, she invests a great deal of her time in the AUSA. For the 1986-87 year , she served as President of the Chattahoochee Valley-Ft. Benning Chapter. Her talents also led her to become a vital part of the Board of Directors and Executive Committee of Chattahoochee Valley-Ft. Benning Chapter and Third Region Affairs. In 1987-1988, she served as Chairman of the Long Range Planning Committee in which she filed the completed Long Range (Master Plan). Mrs. Smith is not only involved with the local AUSA, but also demonstrates her leadership capabilities in the Chapter and Company Development Advisory Committee of the AUSA National Headquarters. She regularly attends committee and general membership meetings in Washington, D.C.

Mrs. Smith's dedication was instrumental in the establishment of the marble lectern on the Field of Four Chaplains. She serves as a civilian sponsor for Allied Officers in the International Student Training Detachment and for the Officers in the School of Americas.

Although Mrs. Smith is continuously dedicated to others, she does find time for herself. She is a member of the Trinity Episcopal Church , Kappa Alpha Theta Sorority, Columbus Country Club, Ft. Benning Officers' Club, Big Eddy Club, Willow Point Country Club, and the Gracious Ladies of Columbus. Mrs. Smith has four children: Sydney S. Smith, Lenora S. Gregory , Joseph W. Smith, Jr., and Walter C. Smith, III; and five grandchildren.

Art Chriss and the entire staff at ARCCO are proud to honor such deserving individuals as Mrs. Lenora Smith and Mr. Cliff Livingston, Sr. They truly believe in those who serve our country and dedicate themselves wholeheartedly to the advancement of military and civilian communication. Congratulations to Mrs. Smith for earning this year's Livingston Award.

On June 30, 1989, we witnessed the Change of Command Ceremony of the 75th Ranger Regiment honoring Colonel (P) Wesley B. Taylor Jr., Outgoing Commander and Colonel William F. Kernan, Incoming Commander. We wish the best of luck to Colonel (P) and Mrs. Taylor and to Colonel and Mrs. Kernan with their new assignments. Our sincere congratulations to these professionals.

SPIRITUAL

God's word reveals that He cares for you

By Chap. Robert D. Hester Jr.
4th Battalion, 41st Field Artillery

I don't know about other people, but I love to read bumper stickers and those little yellow signs that people hang in the windows of their cars.

Some people reveal more about themselves and their attitudes through bumper stickers than they realize.

Of course, people also send us "mixed" signals through the messages that stickers and signs communicate. One pick-up truck roared past me on Victory Drive with a bumper sticker that read, "I Support M.A.D.D." (Mothers Against Drunk Driving). Next to it was a "Bud Lite" sticker. Then I saw a car with a sticker that warned "Jesus is coming soon" and next to it was the advice: "Escape to Wisconsin."

We can laugh at a sticker that reads, "Eat more lamb, 10,000 coyotes can't be wrong," but do we catch the message someone is trying to tell us when they hang a sign in their window that coldly reads, "Who cares?"

"Who cares?" We often feel that way, don't we? We get so tired and fed up with it all that we really are not concerned about others, or we feel like no one cares about us.

However, the good news from God's Word is that God does care. Tucked away in the fifth chapter of Peter's first New Testament letter is this verse of Scripture: "Cast all of your anxiety on Him (God), for He (God) cares for you."

Isn't that great? The God of this universe cares for you and for me. He is deeply interested in your circumstances, in your problems and in your life.

In fact, God cares so much that Jesus Christ left the glory of heaven, came to earth, became man and died on a cross for you and me so that we might have a relationship with Him. If that's not the ultimate in caring, then what is?

Remember, if you feel alone, depressed, rejected, despondent or emotionally hurt, take heart in the promise of God's Word. If you feel overwhelmed by life, remember, God cares for you. "God Cares" could just be a slogan hung in the window of celestial cosmic Cadillac but it is so much more. God wrote it on the cross of Calvary when Jesus Christ hung there, suspended between earth and heaven, to die for you and me. In that caring moment, He provided salvation from sin's consequences and life with God.

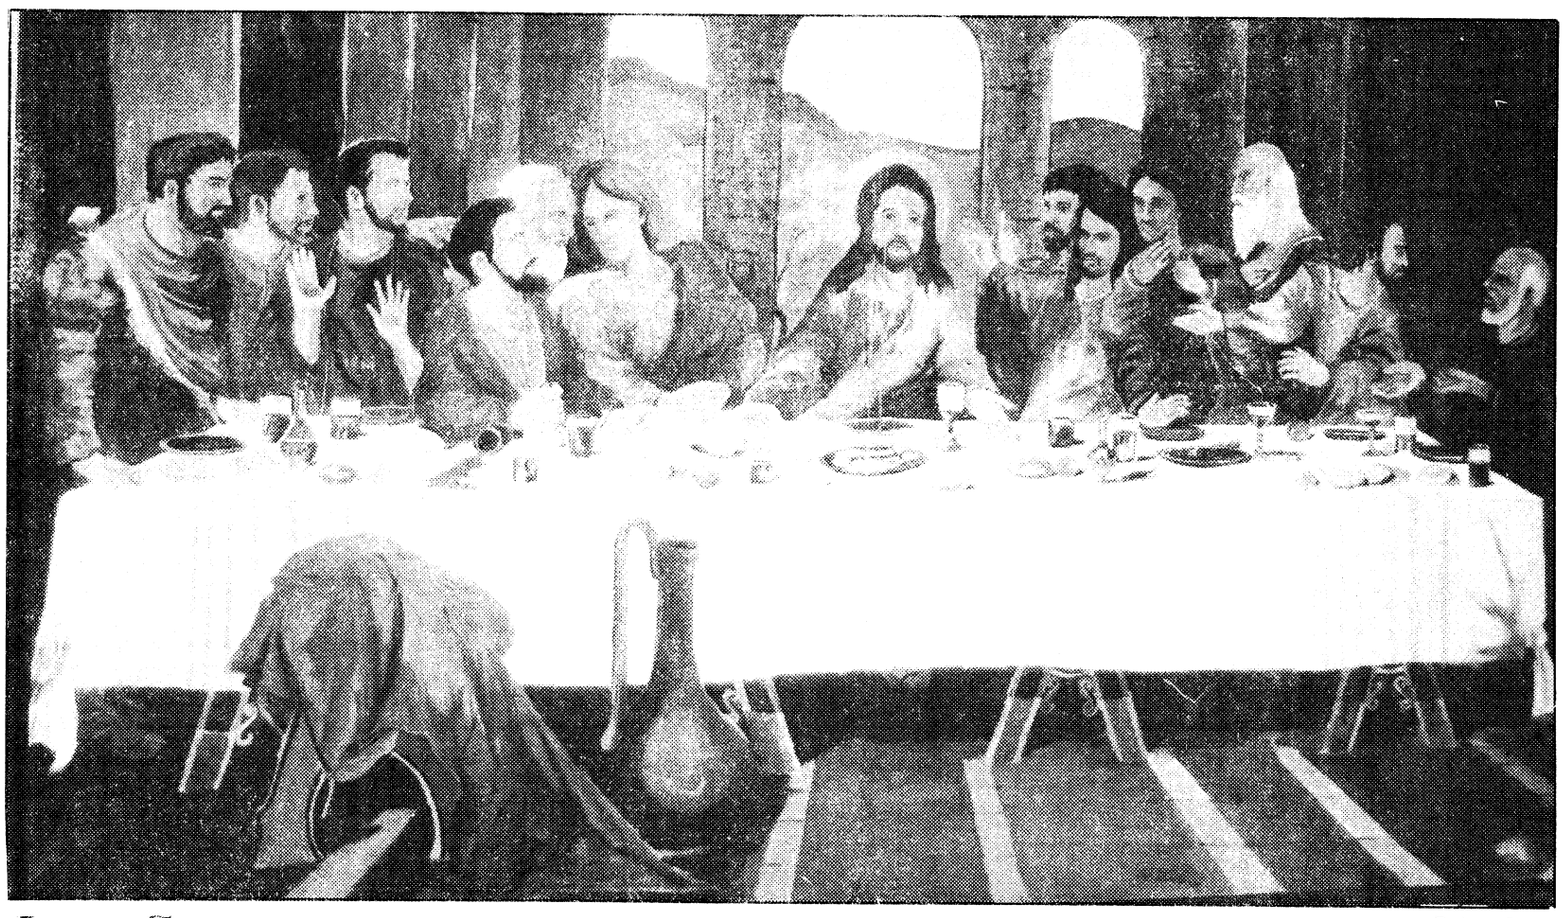
Yes, God does care for us. He cared for us then, and He still cares for us today.

Residents begin CPE program

By Debra Galle
USAIC Chaplain's Office

Five new residents of the Clinical Pastoral Education Program, located at Custer Terrace, began orientation Monday.

The CPE program also begins class 90-3 with a new supervisor, Chap. (Maj.) Herb Marbury.



Chaplains participating in the present program are: Chap. (Capt.) Edwin W. Bowen, Chap. (Maj.) Paul E. Clark, Chap. (Capt.) Richard B. Garrison, Chap. (Capt.) Arthur C. Pace, and Chap. (Maj.) David R. Penland.

Each chaplain will choose a "satellite" of residence from several community ministry opportunities.

These include hospital ministry, Family Life Center, Drug and Alcohol Abuse program, Detention Facility and counseling at Custer Terrace.

An additional facet of the CPE community program is the "Hour of Power," a Bible Study and devotional time held each Wednesday at noon at the Custer Terrace Chapel. This is open to everyone.

For more information on the CPE program or Custer Terrace chapel activities, call 544-2213/3170 or the U.S. Army Infantry Center Chaplain's Office at 545-2288.

Hal Holbrook to play Mark Twain at Springer

Springer Opera House

Actor Hal Holbrook joins the celebrated roster of artists who have trod the boards at the Springer Opera House when he performs his world-acclaimed one-man show, "Mark Twain Tonight!" Aug. 4 at 8 p.m.

Indeed, Holbrook has much in common with the likes of Edwin Booth, James O'Neill, Joseph Jefferson and Mrs. John Drew; immensely talented, hardworking American troupers who traveled the roads and back roads of the country and built their popularity steadily, audience by audience.

Holbrook's career more closely resembles the rise and preeminence of the early American theatre's stars than today's top film and television celebrities.

The Twain characterization grew out of an honors project at Denison University in Ohio where the young Hal Holbrook majored in theatre. He toured the show on the school assembly circuit, in colleges and in Greenwich Village nightclubs before landing a spot on the nationally-televised Ed Sullivan Show.

In 1959, after five years of research and honing the play in front of audiences in small towns all over America, he opened in a tiny Off-Broadway theatre in New York. It was a stunning success — more stunning to Holbrook than anyone else.

After a 22-week run in New York, he toured the country again, twice, performed for President Eisenhower and at the Edinburgh Festival. The State Department sent him on a tour of Europe. He was a star who had never appeared in a Broadway play, a major television show or a movie.

In 1966, after a period of doing Shakespeare, acting in repertory and his first movie, Holbrook did Twain again, in a Broadway theatre. The engagement won him a Tony Award, a Drama Critic's Circle Award and a 90-minute television special of "Mark Twain Tonight!" which was nominated for an Emmy.

Through the years, his career has soared and Holbrook has claimed every opportunity available to the entertainment industry's top talent. But Holbrook has never been able to quit "Mark Twain Tonight!" and probably never will.

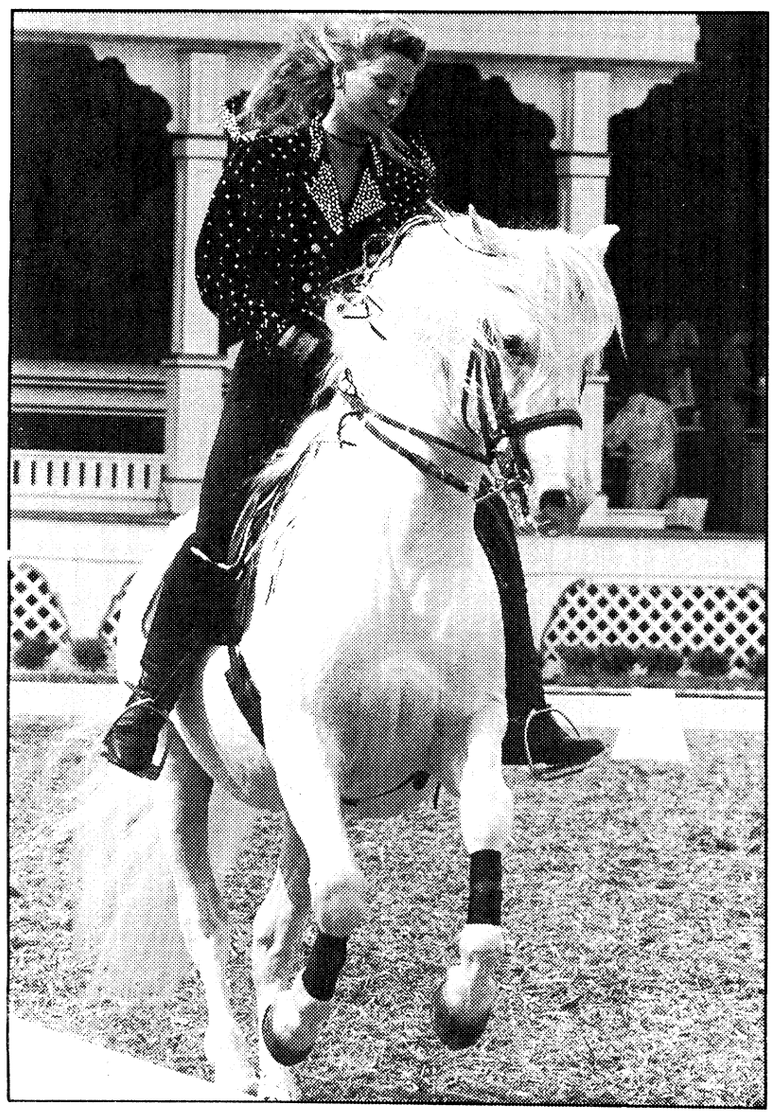
He has toured the show in some part of every year since 1954, thus making 1989 the 35th consecutive year for this remarkable one-man show. And through it all, he has been able to avoid the stigma of type-casting. "Mark Twain Tonight!" has become a popular classic attraction and one of the longest-running shows in theatre history.

Holbrook adds to his Twain material nearly every year, editing and changing it to fit the times. After 1,800 shows, he has mined over 12 hours of Twain with more coming all the time. He has no set show — he makes up the program as he goes along. It has the remarkable quality of being a completely refined performance while, at the same time, being completely spontaneous.

Columbus Ledger-Enquirer sponsors the one-night-only event, which is presented in memory of distinguished Columbus journalist and lifelong Springer Trustee Mary Margaret Byrne.

Aug. 3, at 5:30 p.m., the Springer will dedicate its second-floor Blue Museum Room in memory of Miss Byrne who was among the original group of community leaders involved in the saving and restoration of the Springer Opera House.

The public is invited to the dedication ceremony and reception following.



"We're thrilled about the opportunity to have Mr. Holbrook here at the Springer and to have the Ledger-Enquirer join us as a sponsor for the project. We could not have been able to offer it otherwise," remarked the managing artistic director, Paul R. Pierce. "This will be a historical performance on a par with the greatest actors who ever appeared on the Springer stage.

"James O'Neill played his signature role, 'The Count of Monte Cristo' on the road for 30 years and Joseph Jefferson toured for 30 years in Rip Van Winkle," Pierce continued. "These were roles they could not put down — roles that they claimed exclusively for their own.

"This is what Hal Holbrook has done with 'Mark Twain Tonight!' and over a longer period of time. There's nothing else in American theatre to match it."

Pierce noted that Holbrook's appearance is in the third event in the Springer's "Legend at the Legend" program begun by the late Trustee Glesca Marshall in which contemporary theatre giants were brought to the Springer for special presentations. Joshua Logan appeared in 1980 and Alan Jan Lerner appeared in 1982.

Tickets for "Mark Twain Tonight!" are $25 and may be purchased at the Springer box office beginning July 26 at 10 a.m. The box office phone number is 327-3688.

Boardwalk and Baseball, Inc.

The world famous Royal Lipizzan Stallion Show is one of the features at Boardwalk and Baseball.

Orlando's Boardwalk and Baseball features family entertainment, rides

Boardwalk and Baseball, Inc.

BASEBALL CITY, Fla. — Boardwalk and Baseball, located 25 minutes southwest of Orlando, features family entertainment, shows, a midway and thrill rides along a beautifully-landscaped boardwalk.

The 135-acre park contains more than 50 rides, shows and attractions connected by a mile-long boardwalk. It also features the Royal Lipizzan Stallion Show.

It's also the only amusement park in the world to integrate baseball throughout its theme. An 8,000-seat stadium and six major league playing fields are spring training home to the 1985 World Champion Kansas City Royals.

Baseball exhibits, gift shops and amusements are featured throughout the park. "A Taste of Cooperstown" is the only National Baseball Hall of Fame and Museum display located outside the famed institution.

Cooperstown Curator Ted Spencer arranged more than 100 artifacts on loan from baseball's shrine, including a 1930s locker from Yankee Stadium, housing Babe Ruth's glove, bat, cleats and autographed ball along with his famous Yankee pin stripes.

A 27-minute film entitled "The Eternal Game" is a continuous feature in the park's Baseball Theatre Building (sponsored by Kodak), and relives great moments in baseball through rare footage.

Lou Gehrig's farewell speech at Yankee Stadium, Bobby Thompson's "Shot Heard Round The World" and Hank Aaron's home run to surpass Babe Ruth's career record are a few of the events chronicled in the movie.

Park shops carry the same jerseys and caps worn by major league players, and a large selection of Rawlings baseball equipment.

Sportswear is available from all 26 major league teams, as are hundreds of other baseball souvenirs including two sets of baseball cards that were specially commissioned for Boardwalk and Baseball by the Topps Chewing Gum company.

Speaking of baseball cards, fans can make up their very own cards, complete with statistics, wearing the major league uniform of choice at the Faceball Card Studio.

The energetic visitor can don a batting helmet, step into one of nine batting cages and swing at mechanically pitched balls.

Baseball and softball cages are available, as well as a tee-ball cage for the younger set. Next door, two fielding machines "hit" grounders to participants, who throw to a "first base" target area. A reader board displays the amount of time it takes the player to field the ball and throw to first.

Pitching skills can be honed at Boardwalk and Baseball's indoor bull pens.

Standing on a pitcher's mound, fans attempt to strike out a "batter" by throwing toward a targeted backdrop area. An electronic reader board registers the velocity of each pitch and "calls" a ball or strike, continuing until the "batter" either walks or strikes out.

Boardwalk and Baseball is just off Interstate 4, 15 minutes southwest of Walt Disney World in Baseball City, Fla.

One admission price covers entrance to all shows, 30 thrill rides and minor league ballgames.

For more information, call 1-800-826-1939 or 1-800-367-2249 (Fla.).

The park is a member of the Sea World attractions family which includes Cypress Gardens and the Sea World parks in Florida, Ohio, California and Texas.

Jazz concert Saturday

Jasmine Hill Arts Council

Jazz great Erskine Hawkins, a native of Birmingham, returns to his home state of Alabama with a concert Saturday in the Jasmine Hill Amphitheater near Montgomery.

After becoming leader of the "Bama State Collegians" while attending Alabama State University, Hawkins went on to international fame as a band leader and trumpeter.

Once dubbed "The Twentieth Century Gabriel," Hawkins formed his own band which became extremely popular during the Second World War.

J.L. Lowe, founder of the Alabama Jazz Hall of Fame, states "Erskine Hawkins was more popular with dancers than Duke Ellington. People listened to Ellington, but they danced to Hawkins."

Along with Hawkins will be many of Alabama's finest jazz musicians who played with Duke Ellington, Louis Armstrong, Cab Calloway, Fess Whatley, Ike Williams and others.

The concert begins at 8 p.m. Free parking is available inside the garden, and the amphitheater concession stand offers hamburgers, snacks and soft drinks for those who do not pack their own picnic.

Jasmine Hill is located north of Montgomery on U.S. 231 toward Wetumpka. Exit Jasmine Hill Road and follow the signs.

For information, phone (205) 567-9444.

Bring your lawn chairs or blankets for seating on the grass terraces, as seating is limited on a first-come basis.

Tickets at the gate are $13 for adults and $8 for children.

NURSING AT SAINT FRANCIS HOSPITAL

"Speaking from an ICU nursing perspective, there are three reasons why St. Francis Hospital is the best choice for me First, it is personally very important to me to implement the best possible holistic care to my patients. Because of the low patient/nurse ratio, I am able to give my patients the care I feel they need. Second, the personable environment of a small Catholic hospital enables me to feel much more comfortable than in a large medical center environment. Finally, the flexibility of my schedule, as a result of my head nurses efforts, makes it possible to enjoy my professional life, as well as, my family life."
Renee J. Pennington, RN

COME JOIN THE BEST NURSING TEAM IN TOWN!!!

Positions available:

CRITICAL CARE - New expanded units with flexible hours.
OPERATING ROOM - RN's and ORT's The Columbus area open heart surgery facilities.

We offer good working conditions, competitive salary, specialty differentials, good fringe benefits and a professional working atmosphere.

CID increases reward in search of murderer

The Fort Benning Criminal Investigation Division is offering a $25,000 reward for information leading to the apprehension and conviction of the person(s) responsible for the murder of Staff Sgt. Enrique Flores, which took place around 5:15 a.m., April 14, in the parking lot of building 2752A, Marchant Street, Fort Benning.

Any information concerning this offense should be provided to the CID at 545-1518/7950 or the Military Police at 545-5222/5223.

This reward expires Oct. 17.

Board considers SFCs for promotion

Some 4,200 sergeants first class will be selected for promotion to master sergeant by the centralized Army board that convened July 11 at Fort Benjamin Harrison, Ind., say Army personnel officials.

Scheduled to adjourn on Aug. 4, the board will review the records of some 25,000 sergeants first class eligible for promotion in the primary and secondary zones.

In the primary zone are sergeants first class whose dates of rank are Oct. 31, 1984, or earlier. The secondary zone will comprise sergeants first class with dates of rank from Nov. 1, 1984, to Oct. 31, 1985.

To be eligible in either zone, soldiers must have basic active service dates earlier than Jan. 1, 1982.

Army personnel officials say the board results should be announced in November.

Day Camp for girls begins Aug. 7

"Safari to Adventure" is a week-long day camp to be held Aug. 7 through 11 for girls entering kindergarten through 6th grade. The camp, which will be located at Camp Hideaway off Marne Road, is sponsored by the Fort Benning Girl Scout Association. The cost is $15 for registered Girl Scouts and $19 for nonregistered girls.

Information about the camp is available by calling Wanda Campbell at 689-1293. You may receive an application by writing Fort Benning Girl Scouts, P.O. Box 2235, Fort Benning, Ga. 31905. The deadline for all registrations will be July 28.

A typical day at camp includes arts and crafts, sing-alongs, safaris (nature trails) and much more. The cost of camp pays for a T-shirt, patch, program supplies and daily snack to be provided for the girls.

Parents wishing to be part of the fun are encouraged to volunteer. Training and discounted rates will be provided to volunteers.

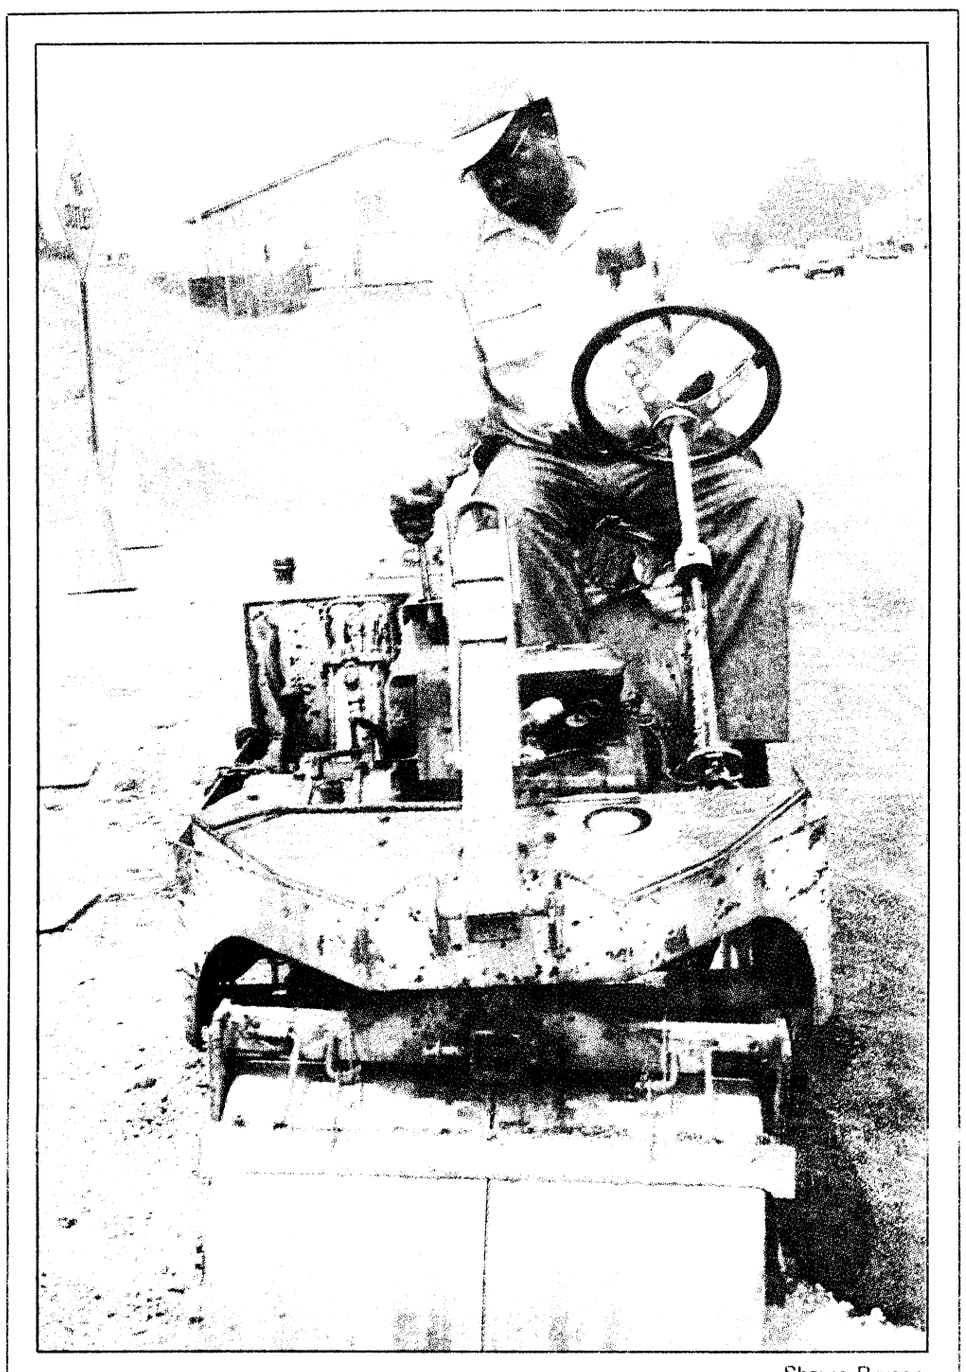
What is the cost of credit?



The cost of credit depends on the following:

- Who you borrow from
- Your credit rating
- How much you borrow
- How long you take to repay

If you have trouble making payments, visit your creditor. Try to work out a solution. Perhaps you can make smaller payments or delay payments for a while.

Do not avoid your creditor. Don't act as if you have no intention of paying your bill. This will hurt your credit rating seriously and make it hard for you to get credit again.

For further information, call Consumer Affairs at 545-5516/7517.

Paving the way to excellence

Jesse Benning, from DEH's Ranges, Roads and Grounds Division, operates an asphalt roller at the intersection of Anderson and 10th Mountain Division roads. DEH recently paved several sections of road that had been ripped up when the railroad tracks on post were removed a few months ago. Efforts to get the post ready for the Army Communities of Excellence inspection continue. The team will arrive Monday.

AER

donations exceed last year's

By Agatha H. James
Bayonet staff writer

The 1989 Army Emergency Relief Fund campaign ended June 30 with $200,187 in contributions, according to AER officials.

Campaign figures show soldiers, civilians and retirees gave almost $14,000 more in 1989 than they did in 1988.

AER Officer Carla Cary said the funds will be used to make non-interest loans and grants to active duty servicemembers, retirees and widows in emergency situations and for some educational loans.

"We get quite a few requests for the funds," she said. "In fact, last year we paid out more than $507,000 or $42,000 per month in loans and grants. That's $300,000 more than we took in, so the donations are really needed."

According to Cary, AER is one way the Army takes care of its own. "We like to think of it as the Army helping itself," she said. "The donations this year will make even more money available for soldiers, retirees and widows when emergencies arise."

Officials said contributions were made in cash and through payroll allotments. Cash contributions totaled almost $12,000, and payroll allotments came to more than $188,000.

The three-month campaign began April 4 and ran until June 30.

Soldiers who need funds in emergency situations should contact their first sergeant or company commander. For more information, contact the AER coordinator, Master Sgt. Jerry Tillman, in building 2634 in Soldiers' Plaza.

Latchkey program expands options

Child Development Services

Fort Benning Child Development Services will expand its program to provide child care for kindergarten through 3rd grade age children of dual military couples, single soldiers and dual working couples Aug. 29.

The School-Age Latchkey Program will provide supervised activities before and after school hours, as well as on school holidays, teacher in-service days and during summer vacations.

Children who enroll in the Latchkey Program will have opportunities to participate in field trips and community activities such as music and dance lessons, sports and scouts. They also will receive breakfast, snacks and transportation between the center and school.

The CDS Latchkey Program will operate in the Main Post area at the Youth Services Building. In the Custer Terrace area, the program will operate at Custer Terrace Child Development Center. Programs will be staffed by trained Child Development Services employees and specific adult/child ratios will be maintained.

For more information, or to enroll your child this fall, call Kaye Elliott at the Custer Terrace Child Development Center, 689-8527, or the CDS Administrative Office, 687-4508.

Army announces August promotions

Army News Service

More than 7,300 officers, warrant officers and NCOs will move up the ranks during August, according to promotion figures released by the Army Office of the Deputy Chief of Staff for Personnel.

In addition, 37 warrant officers will advance to chief warrant officer four and 87 will become chief warrant officers three.

Women's Equality Day to be observed Aug. 26

Equal Opportunity Office

Women's Equality Day will be observed Aug. 26 as designated by President Jimmy Carter.

It denotes the ratification of the 19th Amendment to the U.S. Constitution that gave women the right to vote. From its radical beginning, it was a long, uphill fight for the women in the suffrage movement.

Significant events are:

- It began in 1848 at the Seneca Falls, N.Y., Women's Rights Convention. Elizabeth Cady Stanton drafted the Declaration of Sentiments and listed the legal disadvantages of women.
- 1851: Suffrage convention, Akron, Ohio — Sojourner Truth addressed her now famous "And Ain't I A Woman" speech.
- 1868: The first women's suffrage amendment was introduced to congress.
- 1869: Wyoming became the first territory to allow women to vote and serve on juries.
- 1878: The "Anthony Amendment" was introduced to congress by Senator Sargent of California.
- 1870-1910: There were 480 campaigns in 33 states for passage of the amendment. It resulted in 17 referenda, only two of which (Colorado and Idaho) were successful.
- 1890: The Georgia Women's Suffrage Association was founded in Columbus, Ga., by H. Augusta Howard.
- Wyoming was the front runner state for women's rights as stated in their constitution.
- 1910 — Mary Bellamy was elected to state legislature.
- 1917 — Jeanette Rankin was elected to the U.S. House of Representatives.
- 1925 — Nellie Taylor was elected governor.
- 1919: President Woodrow Wilson publicly supported women's suffrage.
- Aug. 26, 1920 — Tennessee became the 36th state to ratify the 19th Amendment, and it became part of the U.S. Constitution.
- 1970: Georgia General Assembly voted to ratify the amendment.
- 1984: Mississippi was the last state to ratify the amendment.

The right to vote is a precious privilege that should not be taken lightly by those who enjoy it. The entire governmental process is enhanced by both men and women who cast their vote. A recent New York poll revealed that women represent 56 percent of all American votes. Therefore, about 10 million more women than men are eligible to vote.

Women's Equality Day is an excellent opportunity for both men and women to acknowledge their responsibility to voice their choices for elected officials.

OPINION

VARIOUS VOICES: What is the best part about being a Fort Benning Barracuda?

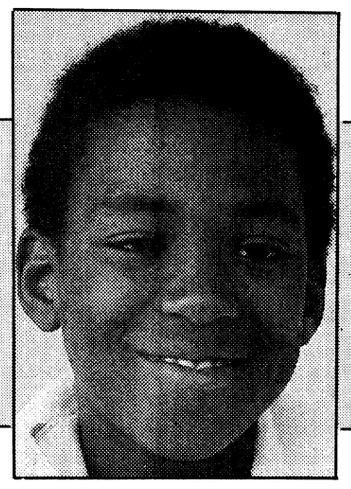
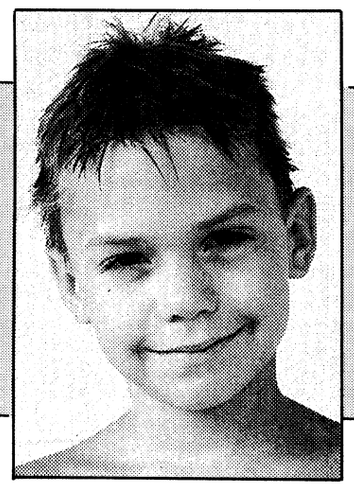
*SEE PAGE B-1 for related story.



Paula Clark, 12, family member — "I like going to the swim meets. I've been swimming for seven years and really like to compete."

Jonathan Warner, 11, family member — "It's fun because when you're racing against other teams, you can see how good you are and learn a lot more by watching the other swimmers."



Curtis Fleener, 11, family member — "At the meets, you get to compete against other people and most of the time everybody gets a ribbon so everybody is happy."

Shaun Clark, 10, family member — "I've only been on the team for a week but I think I will like it better when I go to a meet. I like the free time after practice because we get to use the diving boards."

Melanie Czapla, 10, family — "I have been on the team for a year, and it's fun because we learn lots of new strokes and meet lots of people."

William Warner, 6, family member — "I like to swim. I like my coach because he teaches us a lot and gives us free time. I like the medals, too. I won one for 3rd place in the butterfly."

Studies show soldiers act differently in combat

Recently, an Army News Service article appeared in the Bayonet entitled, "Army studies ways to 'Lighten the load' with PT." Its focus was a new study on the relationship between PT programs and soldiers ability to "lug rucksacks and weapons to the battlefield."

No reference was made to the many studies done on this subject in the past, and it is obvious that the researchers have not read them or the focus of the study would be very different.

Studies have clearly shown that no amount of PT (practice) can change the physiological reactions to carrying an overweight rucksack. (The study mentioned 110-pound rucksacks).

More important is this principle. What a soldier can carry on a hard road march in training has no relation to what he can (or should) carry in combat. Once the fighting begins, we are dealing with another man.

SLA Marshall in "The Load of the Soldier" gives many examples of how men in combat experience a loss of muscular strength. They become unable to carry loads and move as they could in training — even when they are not actually under fire. No amount of conditioning can train a man to carry an excess load in combat.

General Fuller wrote "The soldier cannot be a fighter and a pack animal at one and the same time." Instead of developing PT programs to train "pack animals," we need to train fighters and lighten their load.

The first step is to abolish rucksacks in Light Infantry Units. The new Tactical Load Bearing Vest with its Small Assault Pack is more than adequate. Everything else goes with the Company Trains.

For further study, I recommend SLA Marshall's "The Load of the Soldier" and "On Infantry" by John English.

Flurry of sprucing up is going on here

Benning cleans up for a visit from the in-laws

By Clyde Snively
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Driving about post this past week, seeing people out mowing lawns, hauling trash, painting buildings, reminds me of Emma buzzing about the Snively household after getting word that in-laws are inbound for a visit.

It's not that she doesn't keep the place up on a daily basis, it's just that when company comes, she wants to make the best possible impression.

And that's what we at Fort Benning are up to. The in-laws from TRADOC, also known as the Army Communities of Excellence Team, are coming so that means a flurry of sprucing up activities.

Now I've always looked on Fort Benning as one of the prettiest and cleanest posts — especially if you drive in on Benning Road — but when you have important visitors, you really want to put on the dog, no matter how strack you may already be.

I also know Fort Benning didn't get to looking the way it does by accident. It takes a great deal of hard work and constant attention to detail — some details so minor that most of us would overlook them. Fortunately, we have minute detail overseers who do tend to these things and, as a result, keep us out of trouble and help us attain that professional "polished" look.

I also know there are nay sayers in the crowd who complain about all the upkeep. "We came in the Army to fight wars, not pick up trash all the time," is a common gripe. Or, "The money we spend on paint around this place could be better spent on other things, such as cheaper entertainment for soldiers" (a dancing girl for every barracks?) is another.

There may be some truth to this. But the alternative is living and working in a dump heap. I personally find that repulsive and demoralizing.

I live off post, and every morning when I drive down a public highway, I get angry at the scum who litter our roads with all their trash. I get depressed just looking at it. Even quiet residential areas need occasional policing because of the inconsiderate poltroons who think the world is their litter barrel.

But driving about the post is uplifting in that the grass is cut, the roadsides policed and buildings don't look like they're about to fall apart for want of paint.

This makes for a more pleasant work environment, which in turn makes for more pleasant workers. I know I'd much sooner deal with a pleasant worker than an unpleasant one. Unpleasant ones can ruin my entire day.

On the other hand, dealing with people who act as though they enjoy their work can give me a high for a week. I come out of places like that actually beaming. Even a trip to the dentist can be a pleasant experience when you're treated like a human being — which you are at the dental clinics here.

So, I for one look forward to these visits by the in-laws from TRADOC.

Now if I can only get this brown paint out of my BDUs.

We want to hear from Bayonet readers

USAIC Public Affairs Office

If you'd like to voice your concerns or questions about the post or have something to crow about, put it in a letter to the editor. We want to hear from you.

We will also accept articles and black-and-white photos and color slides relating to activities and events at Fort Benning. We ask that articles be typed, double-spaced and no longer than three pages.

Combat medal turns 207

P.M. Editorial Services

The 207th anniversary of the Purple Heart, a medal that recognizes Americans wounded or killed in action, will be observed Aug. 7.

At Newburgh, N.Y., on Aug. 7, 1782, Gen. George Washington ordered the creation of the Badge of Military Merit. The badge was a purple cloth heart with a silver-braided edge. In the Revolutionary War, only three are known to have been awarded.

It wasn't until the bicentennial of Washington's birth, Feb. 22, 1932, that the medal was reinstated as the Purple Heart and awarded retroactively to deserving American World War I soldiers. Today, it continues to be one of the highest honors received for combat duty.

According to records of the Military Order of the Purple Heart, an association for recipients of the award, approximately 1,744,804 Purple Heart medals have been awarded since its reinstatement.

Commissary's goal: courteous service

By James W. Hobbins
Commissary Officer

A major part of the Fort Benning Commissary mission is to provide sufficient friendly, courteous employees to provide efficient, prompt service at all times.

The following methods are available to assist in accomplishing this mission:

● Customer comment cards are available at the Identification Desk. These cards go directly to Brig. Gen. James S. Hayes, commander, Troop Support Agency, who will contact the store and customer with any necessary action to be taken.

● Comment cards are available throughout the commissary. These cards will be answered within five days by commissary personnel.

● Random customers will be asked to talk to employees they encounter during their shopping trip, and then record the level of service received from each employee.

● Customers will be asked to rate employee service on ballots handed out at the cash register. They will be rating who, in their opinion, was the most courteous, friendliest employee. Employees receiving the highest and second highest number of customer votes will receive an "on the spot cash award".

Other improvements in service include, enforcing the community dress code in a consistent, firm and friendly manner, responding to customer requests and questions immediately. Also to ensure that no customer has to wait longer than 15 minutes to be checked out.

"Serving the most deserving the best way possible," that is the commissary's goal.

Leaders discuss training in INFANTRY Magazine

Infantry Magazine

In the July-August 1989 issue of INFANTRY, Maj. Gen. Michael F. Spigelmire, chief of Infantry, discusses safety in field training.

Basing his remarks on a recent study, he says "Most accidents during FTXs occur because soldiers do not perform to standards, and. . .leaders do not enforce the standards."

Also in that issue is "Why Men Really Fight," Harry F. Noyes III analyzes combat motivation. He says men do not fight just for their "buddy group" or just for "God, country and the admiration of their womenfolk." Rather, he says, they fight for "a complex alloy of values" that leaders must understand if they are to give their soldiers effective leadership.

Other main articles in the issue are "TOW Gunnery With A Motorized Twist," by Col. A.J. Bergeron and Capt. Lee F. Taylor, commander and assistant S-3 of the 3rd Brigade, 9th Infantry Division; and "Infantry in Action: Saturation Operations," by retired Col. Philip D. Grimm.

Bergeron and Taylor discuss the evolution of the division's TOW gunnery program and its use in a brigade training session. Grimm's article, taken from a tape recording he made in Vietnam in the summer of 1970, details some effective techniques his battalion was using at the time.

Other articles in that issue include "OSUT Fast Track Program," by Capt. Brian G. Gronsdahl, assistant S-3 at the U.S. Army Infantry Training Center; "Weapons, Terrain and Tactics," by Maj. Anthony M. Coroalles, G-3 operations officer in the 25th Infantry Division; and "On Loyalty," by Maj. Robert B. Adolph Jr., who recently volunteered for United Nations Military Observer duty in the Middle East.

Information about INFANTRY Magazine, including subscription rates, is available by writing to Editor, P.O. Box 2005, Fort Benning, Ga. 31905-0605, or by calling autovon 835-2350 or commercial (404) 545-2350.

Waters around Benning can be just as deadly as a shark-infested ocean

Infantry Branch Safety Office

Don't look back!

I can still remember the scene vividly. I was perched on the edge of my seat, mouth agape, eyes layed open in terror, popcorn forgotten. Two locals had skewered a roast onto a hook that was attached to a rope. They secured the rope to the dock they were standing on. Then they slung the beef into the ocean to catch Jaws.

Jaws took the bait, ran out the rope, and jerked the dock, with one of the fisherman, into the surf. He was now frantically swimming for shore, his friend screaming, "Swim! Don't Look Back! Swim!" Jaws was hot on pursuit.

That movie probably scared many of us enough to stay out of the ocean. And although the ocean isn't close to Fort Benning, and Jaws is not a real threat here, the waters can be as deadly.

In 1986, some 5,600 Americans drowned. Many of these deaths could have been prevented by following sensible safety precautions.

One basic precaution is to realize your limitations as a swimmer and not to exceed them. Develop your swimming skills, but don't try to progress from the wading pool to crossing the English Channel in a week.

Don't handicap yourself. Your body needs the chance to devote its energies to digesting a recent meal. So don't overload your body by swimming shortly after eating.

As far as swimming is concerned, alcohol and water don't mix. Alcohol can impair your balance, judgment and reflexes. Don't stack the deck against yourself by drinking and swimming.

You also need to know the characteristics of the swimming area. Never dive into unfamiliar waters. Be prepared for currents, tides, deep holes, stumps and rocks. Beach, lake and swimming pool regulations are established for your safety. Abide by them.

Swim with a buddy. Companionship is a basic safe swimming practice. Even the most experienced swimmer can be struck by a muscle cramp and need assistance. If you're set on swimming across a lake and can't get someone to swim with you, have a boater follow you.

Panic will kill a swimmer just as surely as Jaws will. No matter how desperate the situation seems, never panic or lose control. If you encounter a dangerous situation, such as a severe cramp or irresistible current, stay calm.

You should have a buddy or a lifeguard nearby to help or advise you. Otherwise, depend on previous training. If that's not applicable, use common sense to arrive at a solution.

But always stay calm. Realize that it takes very little effort to float. And as long as you stay afloat, you won't drown. That will give you a chance to massage a cramp or calmly decide on a course of action.

Although Jaws is not a significant threat to swimmers, swimming is hazards.Know you limitations, know your swimming area and swim with a buddy. If trouble arises, depend on common sense and your abilities. And remember, whatever you do, don't look back.

ASK THE JUDGE

Q. Recently I received a letter in the mail that said I had been selected for a big prize giveaway.

It listed three great gifts and had my name and another person's next to one stating "At least one of the following two people will receive this, if he responds before the expiration date, odds 5: 150,000."

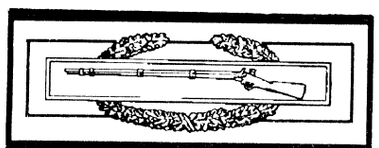
Further down it stated that "In the event your name is not listed above or you do not receive one of the items listed above, you will automatically receive a 19-inch, portable color television."

It sounds as if all I have to do is go out and look at the property that is being advertised, and, at least, I'll get a color television. Right?

A. Wrong. You need to read any offer such as the one you mentioned very closely because there is usually a catch involved.

In your case, the promoter has listed your name along with others as having a chance to win a great prize.

Look at the prizes listed. In this letter, there are three prizes and the color television. Chances are one of those fabulous prizes has a high percentage of winners.



In this case, the letter indicates that the odds of winning some cheap jewelry are 149,998 out of 150,000. This shows that all but a select few people will "win" the jewelry and thus receive no other prize. Your chances of receiving a color TV are listed as only 5 out of 150,000.

Free prize giveaways such as this are regulated by Georgia law. Section 10-1-393 (b) (16) (E) of the Georgia Code, requires that a person who is offered an opportunity to participate in a promotion must be told which prize he will receive upon arriving at the sponsor's place of business, and the prize must be given at the time the person is so informed.

In addition, section (I) of the same law states that in the event the represented prize is unavailable, the person will be presented with a certificate, which the sponsor will honor within 30 days by shipping the prize to the person at no cost to that person.

Here you have a cleverly worded offer designed to trick you into thinking that you won something of value, but all you will get is a hard sell on something you don't need and can't afford.

Should you have any questions, contact the Legal Assistance Office at 545-3281.

Infantry students tackle 'Mech Week'

By Roger Landrum
2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry

Although the students of Infantry Officer Basic Course, Class 6-89, will not graduate for another week, the mechanized infantry field training exercise is considered to be the graduation exercise.

"Mech Week," as the final exercise is referred to, is the culmination of 16 weeks of classroom and field instruction designed to certify young infantry second lieutenants as qualified infantry platoon leaders.

All the individual and collective training tasks the students have learned throughout the course are put to the test on the final field training exercise.

The student officers receive extensive instruction on mechanized infantry tactics, techniques and preventive maintenance checks and services prior to deploying to the field.

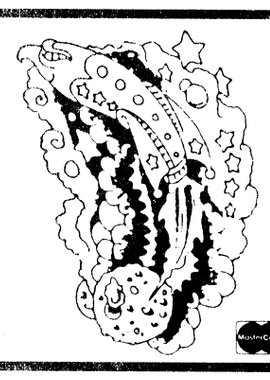
The first three days of "Mech Week" for Class 6-89 were spent conducting mechanized infantry battle drills to educate the students in the basic skills required to survive on the modern battlefield.

Next, the students conducted various situational training exercises designed to improve their collective training skills. The final event of the exercise was a company-level, MILES-supported, force-on-force scenario that pitted the students against one another in a mock battle.

The lessons learned during the exercise were that basic skills are extremely important during mechanized training and that dismounted forces must be properly employed to be successful.

1st Bn., 18th Inf. reactivates here while 1st Bn, 58th Inf. folds colors

By Aurelio Feliberty
197th Infantry Brigade



After some 19 years, the 1st Battalion, 18th Infantry Regiment, has been reactivated at Fort Benning, taking the place of 1st Battalion, 58th Infantry, which has lowered its colors.

The 1st Bn., 18th Inf. Regt., has taken part in many major battles, including the invasion of North Africa and the famous Normandy invasion. These and numerous other battles accounted for the 18th Inf. Regt. being recognized as one of the most highly decorated units in the U.S. Army with 52 battle streamers on its flag.

During the ceremony, guest speaker retired Col. Edward W. McGregor, honorary colonel of the 18th Inf. Regt., addressed the newly reactivated battalion, reminding the soldiers of the 1st Bn., 18th Inf. Regt. of their responsibilities in maintaining the unit's integrity.

Col. Harvey D. Watson, 197th Infantry Brigade commander, talked to his once Patriots and reminisced about the 1st Bn., 58th's past achievements, Reforger '88 and the numerous field training exercises at the National Training Center at Fort Irwin, Calif.

Watson's final word was "Vanguard's."

Where you'll find out.

What kind of smoker are you?

This test is designed to provide a score on each of six factors that describe many people's smoking behavior. How do your scores add up?

Dept. of Health and Human Services

WHY DO YOU SMOKE?

Here is a list of things people say about why they smoke. Next to each one, write the number that applies to you:

5—often; 3—sometimes; 1—doesn't apply

Then see page opposite for scoring.

A. I smoke in order to keep from slowing down. _____

B. Handling a cigarette is part of the enjoyment of smoking it. _____

C. Smoking cigarettes is pleasant and relaxing. _____

D. I light up when I feel angry about something. _____

E. If I run out of cigarettes, I can't stand it until I get more. _____

F. I smoke without being aware that I'm smoking. _____

G. I smoke to perk myself up. _____

H. Part of the pleasure of smoking is lighting up. _____

I. I get great pleasure out of smoking. _____

J. When I'm upset, I like to have a smoke. _____

K. I'm very aware of when I'm not smoking. _____

L. I light a cigarette without noticing I have one burning in the ashtray. _____

M. I smoke to give myself a lift. _____

N. I like watching the smoke when I exhale. _____

O. I want a cigarette the most when I feel relaxed. _____

P. If I feel worried or upset it helps to smoke. _____

Q. I get a gnawing hunger for a cigarette if I haven't smoked for a while. _____

R. I find a cigarette in my mouth I don't even remember putting there. _____

HOW TO SCORE

Smokers can be divided into two major groups, based on their reasons for smoking. To find out which one you belong to, take your answer from each statement and put it over the matching letter below. Next, add the numbers across to get your total.

				TOTALS
GROUP I
Stimulation	___ A	___ G	___ M	= ___
Handling	___ B	___ H	___ N	= ___
Relaxation	___ C	___ I	___ O	= ___
GROUP II
Help for Tension	___ D	___ J	___ P	= ___
Craving	___ E	___ K	___ Q	= ___
Habit	___ F	___ L	___ R	= ___

Any total of 11 or over means that smoking fills this important need for you. The hints on the following pages will tell you how you can deal with these needs as you begin to quit smoking. Of course, the higher you score, the more you'll have to watch out for that need.

What kind of smoker are you? What do you get out of smoking? What does it do for you?

Your smoking may be characterized by only one of these factors or by a combination of factors. In any event, this test will help you identify what you use smoking for and what kind of satisfaction you think you get from it.

The six factors measured by this test describe different ways of experiencing or managing certain kinds of feelings.

Three of these feeling-states represent the positive feelings people get from smoking: a sense of increased energy or stimulation, the satisfaction of handling or manipulating things and the enhancing of pleasurable feelings accompanying a state of well-being.

The fourth is the decreasing of negative feelings by reducing a state of tension or feelings of anxiety, anger, shame and so on.

The fifth is a complex pattern of increasing and decreasing "craving" for a cigarette, representing a psychological addiction to smoking.

The sixth is habit smoking, which takes place in an absence of feeling — purely automatic smoking.

A score of 11 or above on any factor indicates that this factor is an important source of satisfaction for you. The higher your score (15 is the highest), the more important a particular factor is in your smoking and the more useful the discussion of that factor can be in your efforts to quit.

When you give up smoking, you may have to learn to get along without the satisfaction that smoking gives you. Either that, or you will have to find some more acceptable way of getting this satisfaction.

In either case, you need to know just what it is you get out of smoking before you can decide whether to forego the satisfactions it gives you or to find another way to achieve them.

1. Stimulation

If you score high or fairly high on this factor, it means you are one of those smokers who is stimulated by the cigarette — you feel that it helps wake you up, organize your energies and keep you going.

If you try to give up smoking, you may want a safe substitute: a brisk walk or moderate exercise, for example, whenever you feel the urge to smoke.

2. Handling

Handling things can be satisfying, but there are many ways to keep your hands busy without lighting up or playing with a cigarette.

Why not toy with a pen or pencil, or try doodling. Play with a coin, a piece of jewelry or some other harmless object instead.

There are plastic cigarettes to play with, or you might even use a real cigarette if you can trust yourself not to light it.

3. Accentuation of pleasure

It is not always easy to find out whether you use the cigarette to feel good, that is, to get real pleasure out of smoking (factor 3) or to keep from feeling so bad (factor 4).

About two-thirds of smokers score high or fairly high on accentuation of pleasure, and about half of those also score as high or higher on reduction of negative feelings.

Those who do get real pleasure out of smoking often find that an honest consideration of the harmful effects of their habit is enough to help them quit. They substitute eating, drinking, social activities and physical activities — within reasonable bounds — and find they do not seriously miss their cigarettes.

4. Reduction of negative feelings or "crutch"

Many smokers use the cigarette as a kind of crutch in moments of stress or discomfort. On occasion it may work, the cigarette is sometimes used as a tranquilizer.

But the heavy smoker, the person who tries to handle severe personal problems by smoking many times a day, is apt to discover that cigarettes do not help him deal with his problems effectively.

When it comes to quitting, this kind of smoker may find it easy to stop when everything is going well, but may be tempted to start again in a time of crisis.

Again, physical exertion, eating, drinking or social activity — in moderation — may serve as useful substitutes for cigarettes, even in times of tension. The choice of a substitute depends on what will achieve the same effects without having any appreciable risk.

5. "Craving" or psychological addiction

Quitting smoking is difficult for the person who scores high on the factor of psychological addiction.

For him, the craving for the next cigarette begins to build up the moment he puts one out, so tapering off is not likely to work. He must go "cold turkey."

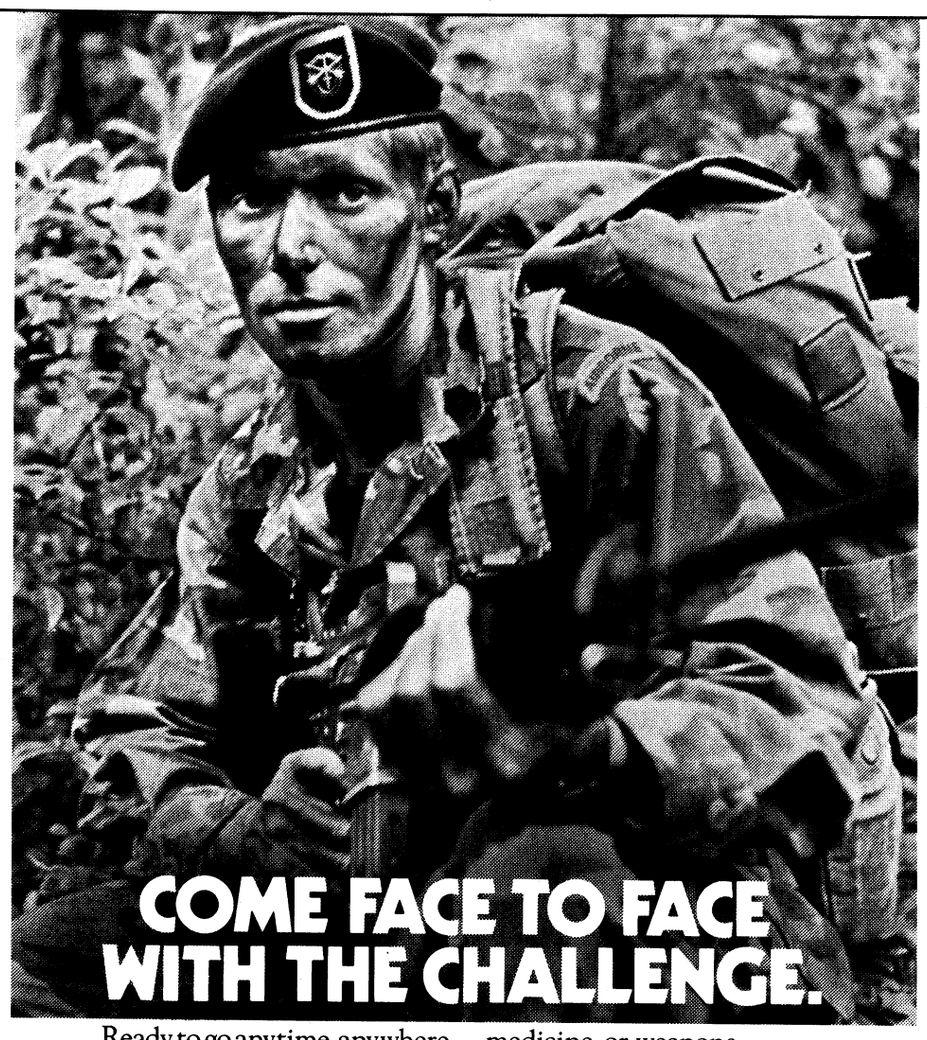
It may be helpful for him to smoke more than usual for a day or two, so that the taste for cigarettes is spoiled and then isolate himself completely from cigarettes until the craving is gone.

Giving up cigarettes may be so difficult and cause so much discomfort that once he does quit, he will find it easy to resist the temptation to go back to smoking. Otherwise, he knows that some day he will have to go through the same agony again.

6. Habit

This kind of smoker is no longer getting much satisfaction from his cigarettes. He just lights them frequently without even realizing he is doing it.

He may find it easy to quit and stay off if he can break the habit patterns he has built up.



Cutting down gradually may be quite effective if there is a change in the way the cigarettes are smoked and the conditions under which they are smoked.

The key to success is becoming aware of each cigarette you smoke. This can be done by asking yourself, "Do I really want this cigarette?" You may be surprised at how many you do not want.

Summary

If you do not score high on any of the six factors, chances are

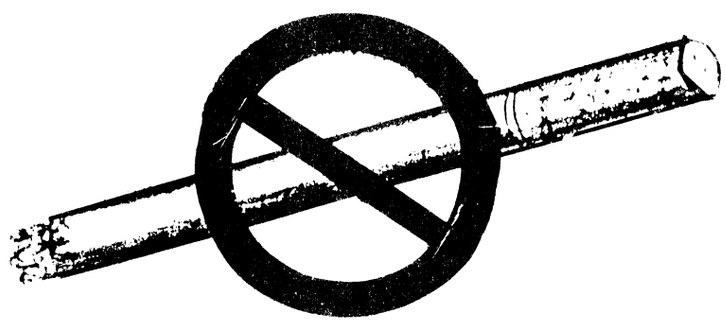
that you do not smoke very much or have not been smoking for very many years. If so, giving up smoking and staying off should be easy.

If you score high on several categories, you apparently get several kinds of satisfaction from smoking and will have to find several solutions.

Certain combinations of scores may indicate that giving up smoking will be especially difficult.

Those who score high on factors 4 and 5, reduction of negative feelings and craving, may have a particularly hard time in quitting smoking and staying off.

However, there are ways to do it. Many smokers represented by this combination have been able to quit.



Others who score high on factors 1 and 5 may find it useful to change their patterns of smoking and cut down at the same time.

They can try to smoke fewer cigarettes, smoke them only half-way down, use low-tar/nicotine cigarettes and inhale less often and less deeply.

After several months of this temporary solution, they may find it easier to stop completely.

You must make two important decisions: (1) whether to try to do without the satisfactions you get from smoking or find an appropriate, less hazardous substitute and (2) whether to try to cut out cigarettes all at once or taper off.

Your scores should guide you in making both of these decisions.

YOUNG BARRACUDAS Swimming is their game

By Shawn Bryson
Bayonet staff writer

Fort Benning's Barracuda swim team is bottom-heavy. That doesn't mean the team's swimmers are having trouble staying afloat; their buoyancy is fine. What it means is that the team needs more older swimmers, according to its coach.

"We currently have about 25 swimmers," said the Barracudas' coach Shannon Gaither. Most of the swimmers are between 5 and 12 years old Gaither indicated. "Right now we only have a couple of kids above age 12," he said.

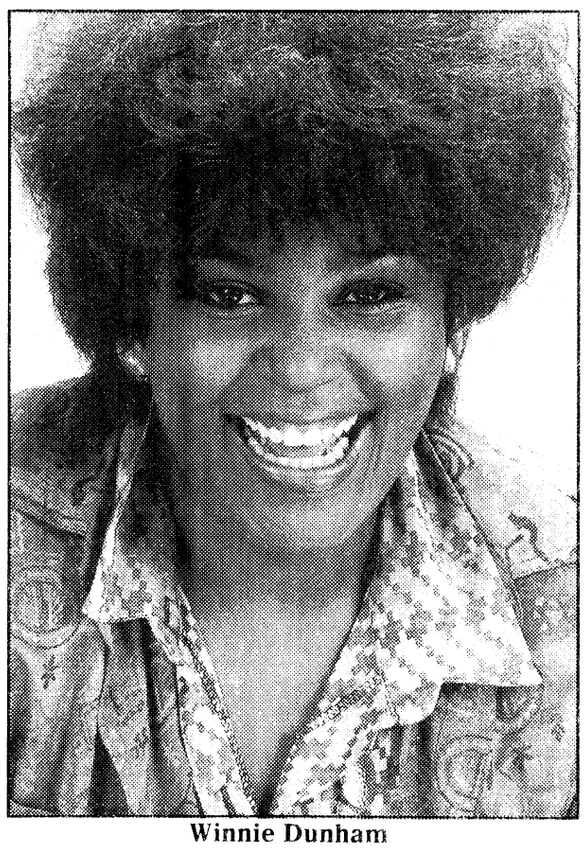
Gaither, who has coached the Barracudas for a little more than a year and has 10 years of experience as a swim coach, said one of the reasons for the shortage of swimmers is the frequent relocations of the swimmers' parents.

Another reason is that the team practices and competes year-round, and many of the swimmers have other activities that prevent them from swimming all year, Gaither explained.

While Gaither would like to balance out the team, the team's need for swimmers is not restricted to older children, however. Gaither said the team is always open to all children of active duty military, reserve component and Department of the Army employees, ages 18 and under. He said the only prerequisite is that swimmers be able to swim at least one length of a 25-meter pool.

Although the Barracudas do not belong to an official league or association, they do swim in a variety of competitions throughout the year. The team travels to places such as Macon, Newnan and Carrollton in Georgia, and Anderson, Ala., to compete in swimming invitationals, Gaither said.

He said the Barracudas also compete against swimmers from other recreation centers — Fort Gordon and Fort McPherson for example — as well as the Columbus YMCA and the Columbus Aquatics swim teams.



Gaither explained that swimmers compete in six different age groups, and children who are exceptional swimmers are allowed to swim in a higher age group if they wish.

Gaither said aside from learning each of the four swimming strokes, having fun and learning sportsmanship from the competition, the swim team has another purpose.

"My main goal is to make this a lifetime sport for the kids. They're building endurance and learning to be strong swimmers, but they're also building skills they will always be able to depend upon," he said.

Swimming practices are held weekdays, except Fridays, at the Youth Activities Center. Two practices are held each day, one at 7:30 a.m. and one at 8:30 a.m., Gaither said. A $15 monthly fee is required of all swimmers.

Winnie Dunham

Civilian leaves the ITC, embarks on singing career

By Marilyn Balzarini
Infantry Training Center

A civilian employee at the U.S. Army Infantry Training Center has resigned to devote all her time to singing "backup" for a big recording star.

Winnie Dunham begins a tour of the United States this week, supplying background vocals for rhythm and blues singer Millie Jackson. In September, Dunham will accompany Jackson to Africa. They will join the well-known group Earth, Wind and Fire and rock-and-roll singer Tina Turner for a month-long tour.

After landing the singing job, Dunham intended to continue working as the secretary to the ITC adjutant. "But when I was given the tour schedule, I knew I would have to make a choice," Dunham said. "There was no way I could do both."

Dunham started her civil service career as secretary at the Water Treatment Section of Directorate of Engineering and Housing in 1986. In July 1988, she transfered to the ITC S-1.

Dunham's family made Columbus home after her father retired at Fort Benning. Following graduation from Baker High School, she attended Columbus College and studied drama.

Encouraged by a musical family and blessed with a double dose of talent, she began singing at the age of 8. She also writes music, dances and acts.

Her latest work was a starring role in a recent Springer Theatre production of "A Funny Thing Happened On The Way To The Forum." She has worked with such celebrities as gospel singer Al Green and dancer/choreographer, Sissy King of Lawrence Welk fame.

Highlights of her career in entertainment include work with the Alliance Theater in Atlanta and Six Flags Over Texas. Also to her credit are major roles in local productions of "Bye Bye Birdie," "Sweet Charity" and "Side By Side."

Her goal is a successful career in musical theater. Her dream, "A starring role in a Broadway musical," Dunham said.

HHB's catcher makes a play at home plate against Btry. C player.

Btry. C Redlegs grab lead, hold on to defeat HHB

By Andrew P. Wiese
197th Infantry Brigade

Battery C, 4th Battalion, 41st Field Artillery, grabbed the lead and never looked back, beating Headquarters and Headquarters Battery, 4th Battalion, 41st Field Artillery, with a final score of 12-9.

"Our record is 2-1, and HHB's is 3-0, but we are going to show them how to really play ball," said Greg Hopkins of Btry. C, 4th Bn., 41st Fld. Arty.

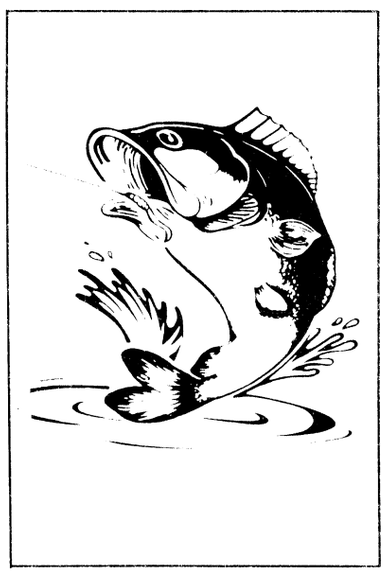
By the end of the first inning, Btry. C had taken an early three-run lead due to some errors made in HHB's outfield. After the second inning, things looked even worse for HHB as Btry. C's John Dillion cracked a double to bring in three more runs, giving Btry. C a 6-1 lead.

"Well, we're down by five, but we will come around," said Robert Headrick of HHB's team, "You can see by our record that we are a good team. You can also see by this score right now that we haven't been practicing lately."

In the third inning, HHB started to come around as Sean Edwards hit a double and Headrick a single. Both men were brought in when Jeffery Cheseldine smashed a home run. However, the rally soon fell short, and the inning ended with the score 6-4.

Things heated up in the fourth inning as Btry C. gained three more runs on the errors of HHB's outfield. But when HHB got to the plate, they were determined to make up for their mistakes.

Three HHB players singled to load the bases, and Napolean Cunningham's double brought all the runners home. For the first time, the game seemed to be a real contest with a score of 9-8 at the top of the fifth.



"We started with the lead. We still have the lead, and now we're going to increase the lead," said Dillon as he stepped up to the plate.

Dillon lived up to his word, hitting a triple to bring in two more runs. By the end of the sixth, the score was 12-9, and it

Benning Bass Club sponsors tourney

By Jackie Marsh
Fort Benning Bass Club

The Fort Benning Bass Club held its monthly tournament July 16 at Old Town Creek State Park on Lake Walter F. George with 20 bass club members participating in the tournament.

First-place honors went to Steve Jones with a whopping total catch for the day of 20 pounds, 5 ounces.

George Mendez captured second place with 17 pounds, 4 ounces.

Ben McGuire's third-place total of 11 pounds, 1 ounce, was certainly nothing to be ashamed of.

Steve Jones also took the big fish award with 5 pounds, 12 ounces.

Most of the fish caught in the tournament were caught in the early morning in weed and grass beds using spinner baits and buzz baits.

Most of the fish caught after 11 a.m. were caught on river ledges with Carolina-rigged worm rods.

The Fort Benning Bass Club will have an evening tournament on Lake Harding in August.

The club sponsors and participates in a number of civic functions throughout the year.

Anyone interested in becoming a part of a fishing club that promotes conservation, good sportsmanship and community pride, as well as catching fish, should contact Porter Angel at 569-9100 or Joe Wikoff at 685-0301.

Or, prospective members may attend one of the club's meetings held the second and fourth Monday of every month in Building 2616 on the second floor at 7:30 p.m.

Goodwill Industries to hold golf tourney

Goodwill Industries of the Chattahoochee Valley Inc., is proud to announce the first Goodwill Golf Tournament at Fort Benning's Follow Me Golf Course Aug. 19.

Participation in the one-day event will be by two-men teams scored as a "Dog-Fight." The winners from each course earn the opportunity to participate in a "Play-Off Dog-Fight" to be held at the Bull Creek Golf Course in Columbus Sept. 11.

Playoff winners win the opportunity to play in the Sept. 18 Southern Open Pro/Am and a chance at a travel vacation package, according to Kermit Blaney, tournament chairman.

The entrance fee is $50 per player.

Call George Cliff at the Follow Me Course at 687-1940 for more details and sign-up information.

Speedway holds military night

East Alabama Motor Speedway is having military night Aug. 19.

Soldiers, their friends and family members will be admitted on a two-for-one basis. For every paid admission by a Fort Benning soldier, one person will be admitted free. Proper identification is required.

Gates open at 6:30 p.m., practice is at 7:30 p.m. and the race begins at 8:30 p.m.

The Fort Benning Army Band will play, and the color guard will be on hand.

Bowling league seeks members

The Fort Benning Officers Mixed Doubles League will begin Sept. 13, and the league is in search of bowlers. League members will bowl at the Main Post Bowling Center, building 2785, located at the corner of Sightseeing Road and Eckel Street.

Each team will consist of four members — two men and two women. Individuals who want to bowl but don't have a partner may sign up anyway. To sign up, call Carla Liebe at 682-0054 or Bob Johnson at 685-0862 or drop by the Main Post Bowling Center and sign the list.

Golf clinics to be held at Follow Me

Two golf clinics are scheduled at Follow Me Golf Course. A Ladies Golf Clinic will be held Tuesday through Thursday from 5:30 to 6:45 p.m. On Aug. 1, 2 and 3 from 9:30 to 11 a.m., a Junior Golf Clinic will be held for ages 7 to 17.

60 golfers vie for best team

All-Army champ walks away with individual victory

By Chris Karamitsos
4th Battalion, 41st Field Artillery

Fort Benning's first-season, post golf championship was decided July 12 and July 14 in a 36-hole, stroke play team competition.

The event, which was played on the 6,606-yard, par-72 Pineside Golf Course, brought 10 organizations and more than 60 players to compete for the title of Fort Benning's best golf team.

As the first 18 holes came to an end, the team from the 4th Battalion, 41st Field Artillery, consisting of Bill Engel, Brian LaMar, Chris Knowlton, Sean Edwards, Ron Rice and Chris Karamitsos, took a commanding 25-stroke lead over 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry.

4th Bn., 41st Fld. Arty.'s four lowest scores totaled 316, which provided a comfortable margin going into the final round.

On July 14, the 4th Bn., 41st duplicated its efforts by posting another 316.

The Artillery's 632 total virtually demolished the field. 1st Bn., 39th finished second with a 680.

Though the team competition was a one-horse race, the individual competition was anything but.

The Artillery's Engel and Karamitsos each opened with a 77. Their teammate Knowlton shot 79. Mike Hale of the 1st Bn., 29th shot 78. The low round of the day came when Earl Goins of the 2nd Bn., 29th posted a 75.

On July 14, however, Goins and Karamitsos faltered to 80 and 82 respectively, leaving the door wide open for the field.

When it was all over, the 1988 All-Army champion, Bill Engel, finished with a 75 and a 36-hole total of 152, which would give him the championship — thus a double victory for the Redlegs.

Mike Hale bettered his first-round score by one stroke. His total 155 was good enough to win second place. Knowlton finished with a total 157 and Karamitsos with 159.

Odds favor new face winning DieHard 500

By Ron Allen
Bayonet staff writer

One of the drawing cards of the DieHard 500 in Talladega, Ala. is its unpredictability, which includes a new face in victory lane almost every year.

The odds are good, according to race officials, that there will be still another one when the checkered flag falls on the 1989 DieHard July 30.

Richard Brickhouse started the streak of 18 different winners for 20 runnings of the DieHard in 1969 driving a winged Dodge Daytona, and only two men since have won more than once, Darrell Waltrip and Dale Earnhardt.

One man with a shot at becoming number 19 is the winner of the 1989 Winston 500, Davey Allison.

"When we left Talladega after the Winston 500, I felt like we had the strongest team for that size race track," said Allison.

"That factor, plus all the experience I have at Talladega, makes me confident that we can win the DieHard, also."

Allison will, indeed, be hard to beat. The Ford he will be bringing to Talladega has run only two other races, the Winston 500 and the Pepsi 400 in Daytona. Allison won both of them.

"Hey, until somebody beats that car, we've got to be considered the favorite."

At least a dozen drivers who have never won the DieHard are capable of pulling that off.

Possibilities include Terry Labonte, Mark Martin and Morgan Shepherd, who all finished in the top four at the Winston 500.

Add to the list veterans Geoff Bodine, Rusty Wallace, Harry Gant, Phil Parsons, Lake Speed and Ricky Rudd.

There are also several drivers who are still looking for their first Winston Cup victory with a shot at a DieHard win, such as Sterling Marlin, Rick Wilson, Michael Waltrip, Brett Bodine and Dick Trickle.

The possibility of a 19th different winner is very, very real, according to Talladega Superspeedway officials.

For someone who is still looking for his first Winston Cup win, Michael Waltrip is greatly optimistic about his chances of winning

"There are several reasons that I feel really good about our chances, and surprisingly, none of them have to do with Talladega's reputation for first-time winners," Waltrip said.

"First, we have been improving race by race," he said. "The second factor is that I'm comfortable running at Talladega. I haven't wound up with any great finishes there yet, but that will come."

This year the DieHard is an official Alabama Reunion event and Alabama Governor Guy Hunt will be the Grand Marshal.

"The races at Talladega have, for years, drawn national attention to Alabama and have also generated a tremendous economic impact throughout the state," Hunt said.

"We are pleased that the Diehard 500 is an Alabama Reunion event, and I am personally thrilled to be participating."

Tickets for the DieHard 500, as well as for the ARCA 500K on July 29, are on sale now at the speedway ticket office.

For ticket information and seat selection, call (205) 362-9064.

CLASSES

Financial counseling — The Fort Benning Army Community Service, in cooperation with the University of Georgia Cooperative Service and the Columbus Consumer Credit Counseling Service is offering a financial counseling seminar to train volunteers to assist military families in managing their money.

The seminar will consist of three days of intensive study at the Columbus Hilton Hotel, Aug. 29 through 31. It will enable counselors to assist military family members in managing credit, budgeting and financial record keeping. They are taught counseling techniques and made aware of community resources.

Following the seminar, the volunteers will be given case studies to solve during a period of on-the-job training. An experienced counselor will act as a consultant to each volunteer.

Volunteers who complete the three-day seminar will be asked to spend a minimum one day per week for six months as a financial counselor in the Fort Benning Consumer Affairs and Financial Counseling Program. To become a volunteer financial counselor and take part in this training, call Karen Crowley at 545-5602.

Pvt. 1 Michael LaRue raises his hand in baptismal pledge with Chap. (Capt.) Thomas Wheatley. Debra Galle

Soldiers baptized at ITC pond

By Debra Galle
USAIC Chaplain's Office

As a morning mist hovered over the water of the small duck pond near the Infantry Training Center, dozens of black boots carried young recruits to the water's edge.

Voices fell together to sing "Amazing Grace," a hymn familiar to most soldiers and one that seems to embody feelings of all denominations. The soldiers sang as solidly as they would blurt out "yes sir," or "airborne," when mandated by a ranking individual. The words covered the group in a common time and space, for they were all gathered to seek grace.

Some recruits were there to be baptized or watch their friends commit themselves to a Christian life. Several men from other companies were present merely to offer support and witness the process.

Chap. (Col.) Roy Mathis and Chap. (Capt.) Tom Wheatly, walked silently into the water, turning as the water covered them to their waists. One by one, 18 soldiers stepped into the muddy water and were baptized.

During the warm months, many soldiers prefer baptism in the pond. A baptistery has been built in the ITC chapel and is used throughout the year, but many prefer the "old fashioned way."

Wheatley explained that many soldiers come forward during the protestant services at ITC each week. These soldiers are considered "new Christian inquirers."

If a soldier requests baptism and wants to become a Christian, he is enrolled in a "New Believer's Class," which eventually leads to baptism. Most protestant churches' baptism is normally connected with church membership.

"The Army chapel," said Mathis, "in keeping with the separation of church and state, does not have a church membership in the same way civilian churches do. Therefore, when chaplains baptize soldiers, they do so with the authority of their own denomination or in connection with the soldiers own church."

One of the baptismal candidates, Pvt. 1 Shawn Huebner, received cards and letters of support from friends and relatives at home who celebrated his baptism long distance. Although he was baptized at Fort Benning, he became a member of his own hometown church.

According to Mathis, Fort Benning has more baptisms than any other Army post at this time. In the past year, the ITC has averaged more than 30 young soldiers making decisions on their Christian lives. The fact that so many recruits rotate through here adds greatly to that number.

A large number of soldiers usually have some affiliation with a church in their youth, but many have strayed away from their church's teachings. Many of them who feel they are now on their own, some for the first time, have a chance to make decisions about their future. These decisions encompass their mental, physical and spiritual needs.

Wheatly explained that the protestant chaplains are simply following the "great commission," as given in the Bible, which reads:

"Go therefore and make disciples of all the nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Spirit." (Matthew 28:19)

JEKYLL ISLAND
A vacationer's getaway

By Agatha H. James
Bayonet staff writer

Jekyll Island, one of Georgia's Golden Isles, has something for just about every vacationer.

Located six miles from Brunswick in the lower southeastern portion of the state, Jekyll sports 10 miles of Atlantic Ocean beach, four golf courses, a 240-acre historic district plus a natural barrier island environment of dunes, palms and oaks. Visitors can enjoy the island year-round because its moderate climate brings comfortably warm summers and mild winters.

Accommodations on the island range from hotel rooms, rental cottages and campsites to luxurious suites and villas.

For golfers, Jekyll has four courses with 63 holes on rolling fairways. Those who like a touch of history with their golf can play Georgia's oldest course, the nine-hole, par-36 Oceanside. Also, there are two 18-hole miniature golf courses.

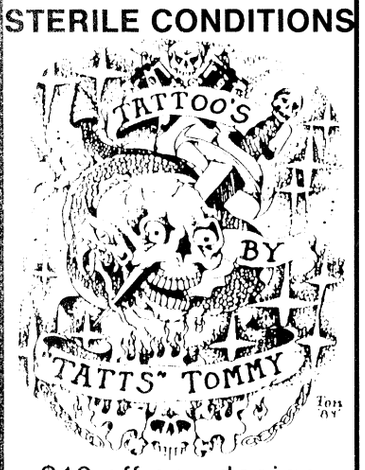
For tennis players, the Jekyll Island Tennis Center offers 13 clay courts, including a center court with grandstands, courts lighted for night play and a pro shop. Tournaments, tennis camps, lessons and other activities are available for all skill levels.

Water enthusiasts can visit Summer Waves, a water amusement park featuring five attractions including a wave pool, speed slides, an endless river and a children's water playground. The park is open daily through Labor Day with special events nightly.

Vacationers can be as lazy or as active as they like on Jekyll Island. It has 10 miles of beach for sunbathing or swimming, beachcombing or jogging. There's even a summer youth program for youngsters, which offers something every day from sand sculpture contests to scavenger hunts.

Jekyll has a lot of history and visitors are invited to tour its historic district. At the turn of the century, millionaires like J.P. Morgan and Nelson Rockefeller bought the island, formed the Jekyll Island Club and made it their exclusive winter retreat. Visitors can see the spacious cottages where the Rockefellers and Morgans lived in what was then one of the world's most exclusive resorts.

For vacationers with an interest in art, the Jekyll Island Club Historic District is the place to see fascinating examples of decorative art. Stained glass masterpieces highlight one of the island's religious chapels, and the island has an art center that features exhibits and programs.



For dining, the island has everything from a fish sandwich at the wharf to steaks and seafood overlooking the ocean to shaded picnic areas.

For nature lovers, deer, wild turkey and quail still populate the woods, and bird watchers can get an eyeful. Also, local naturalists present nature classes for photographers or nature lovers.

For fishermen and boating enthusiasts, deep-sea charters, pier fishing, moonlight cruises and public boat ramps are available.

Jekyll

Joggers and bikers have their own trails on Jekyll. The terrain is level and the scenery is beautiful. Twenty miles of paths circle the island and take you past moss-draped oaks, through the woods and along the golden marshes.

If that's not enough, visitors can try cable waterskiing — waterskiing without a boat, or they can work out at the island's fitness center, which is complete with Nautilus equipment plus whirpool, steam room and sauna.

Transportation to and from Jekyll Island is no problem. The island is located 10 miles from I-95 at exit 6, six miles from Brunswick, Ga. Jacksonville International Airport is 60 miles away or fly from Atlanta to Glynco Jet Port, 15 miles from Jekyll. For private planes, Jekyll Island has its own airport with a 3,700-foot runway.

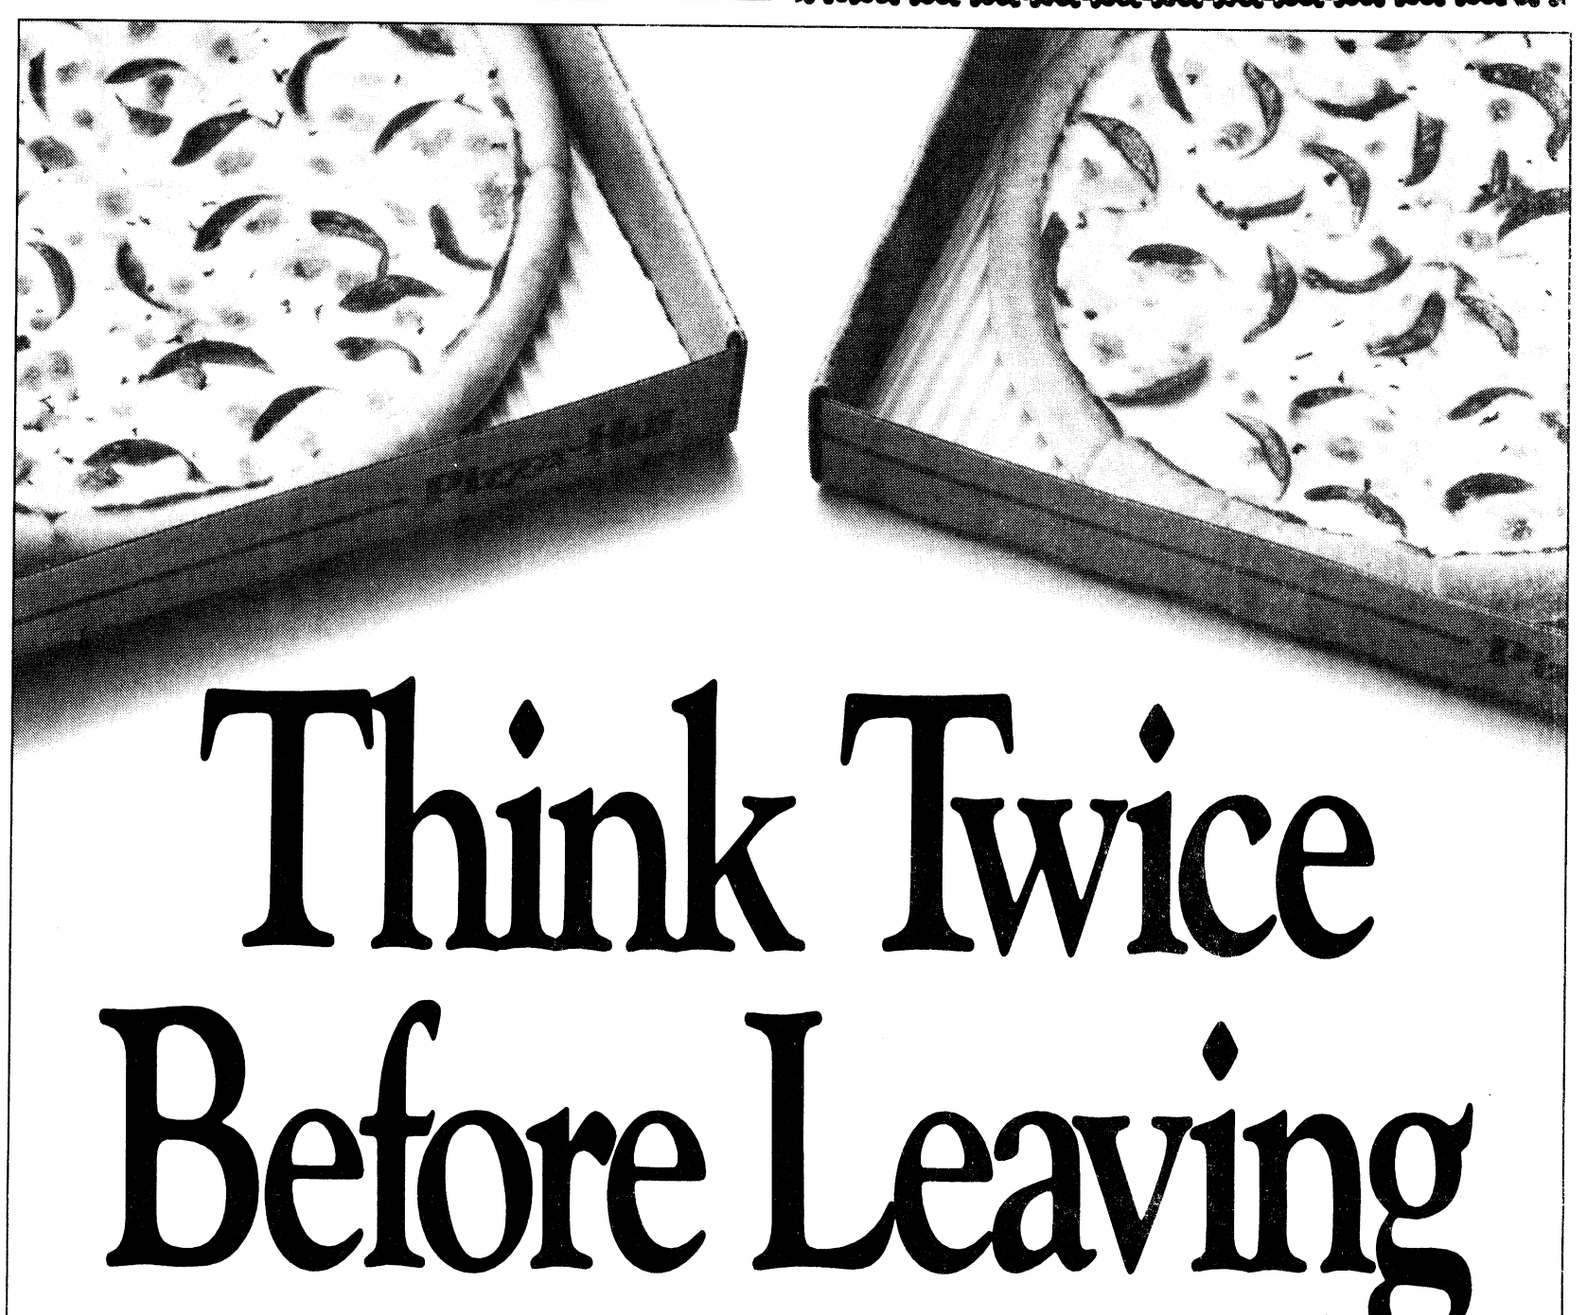
Callaway Gardens celebrates Prunifolia Day Saturday

Callaway Gardens

From July until early September, blazes of color seem to ignite throughout the wooded areas of Callaway Gardens. It is the Prunifolia Azalea blooming in hot clusters of orange and red.

On Prunifolia Day, Saturday from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m., Callaway Gardens is honoring and celebrating the beauty of the prunifolia azalea.



Special activities will include music, clowns, jugglers, banjos and much more. Visitors may pick up some canning tips or picnic along the banks of Mountain Creek Lake.

Callaway Gardens is located on U.S. highway 27 South in Pine Mountain, Ga. Admission is $5 for adults, $1 for children ages 6 to 11, and children under 6 are admitted free. The gardens are open daily from 7 a.m. to 7 p.m. For information, call (404) 663-5186.

More efficient lighting could reduce fuel costs $30 billion

By Becky Ray
Energy Branch

More efficient lighting in the U.S. could save $30 billion a year in fuel costs and could eliminate the need for the equivalent of 120 large power plants.

According to Robert Sardinsky, a lighting consultant with the Rocky Mountain Institute of Colorado, most commercial, industrial and residential buildings are overly lit, and lighting is generally inefficient.

Sardinsky says more efficient lighting could reduce lighting energy requirements in many commercial buildings by up to 93 percent.

The Environmental and Energy Study Institute says that by simply replacing a 75-watt incandescent bulb with an 18-watt compact fluorescent bulb, one ton of carbon dioxide and 20 pounds of sulfur dioxide emissions from a coal-fired electrical plant could be avoided over the life of the bulb.

Compact fluorescent lights last up to 13 times longer than incandescents. (It's important to note that the wattage of a bulb or tube does not determine the amount of light it will produce. The wattage only determines how much electricity the bulb will use in operation.)

Compact fluorescents are relatively new. They can be used in standard sockets designed for incandescent bulbs.

They cost more to buy, but save money in electricity and replacement costs.

Incandescent lights must be replaced much more often than fluorescents and are much more expensive to operate.

The cost of the electricity incandescents use is about four to six times the cost of the bulbs themselves.

Lighting accounts for a substantial amount of the energy used at Fort Benning, but much can be done to improve lighting efficiency.

- In incandescent fixtures with more than one socket, it's better to use one 100-watt bulb than two 60-watt bulbs. The same amount of light will be produced. Smaller wattage bulbs don't produce light as efficiently as larger wattage bulbs.
- 100-watt bulbs should never be used in fixtures that have Underwriter's Laboratories listings for 60-watt bulbs. This can cause the fixture to overheat.
- "Long-life" bulbs use more electricity than regular bulbs and should only be used in hard-to-reach places. "Energy Miser" or "Super Saver" bulbs, however, use five to 13 percent less energy than standard bulbs and are a good idea.
- Fluorescent lighting is far more efficient than incandescent lighting and should be used instead of incandescent whenever possible.
- Light buttons (small discs inserted in the bulb socket) are advertised as energy savers, but they actually decrease the amount of light the bulb puts out more than decreasing the amount of energy used.

They simply decrease the efficiency of the bulb. If you can get by with less light, just switch to a lower wattage bulb or use a dimmer switch.

- Outdoor lights are big energy users. The most efficient types are metal halide or high pressure sodium lamps, which are better than fluorescent types. The least efficient lights are incandescent.
- Perhaps the best way to save lighting energy and to extend the life of bulbs and tubes as well is to turn lights off when they aren't needed.

Assist Fort Benning in saving lighting energy by reporting outside lights burning in the daytime or unused outside lights burning at night. Call 545-4652 or 545-SWAT (7928).

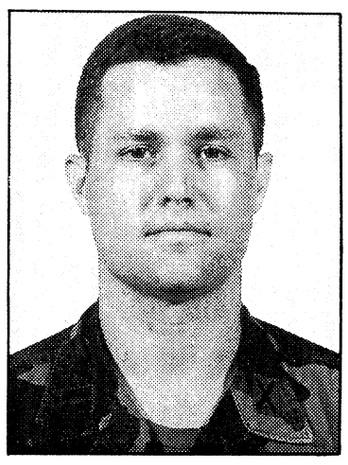
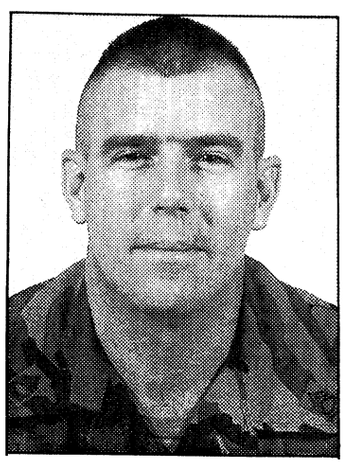
Sr. Off-4 BR	May 19, 1989

By using the following procedure, soldiers on the Family Housing Waiting List can use this chart to estimate when they can expect quarters:



Locate your category of housing.

Note eligibility date located on the same line as your category.



Calculate the time difference between the eligibility date listed and your eligibility date. The difference is the approximate time you still have to wait for housing.

EXAMPLE: If the latest eligibility date of the person who last received housing in your category was May 15, 1988, and your date of eligibility is Sept. 15, 1988, you can expect housing in about four months. If you do not know your eligibility date, contact the Family Housing Office at building 399, 545-3107.

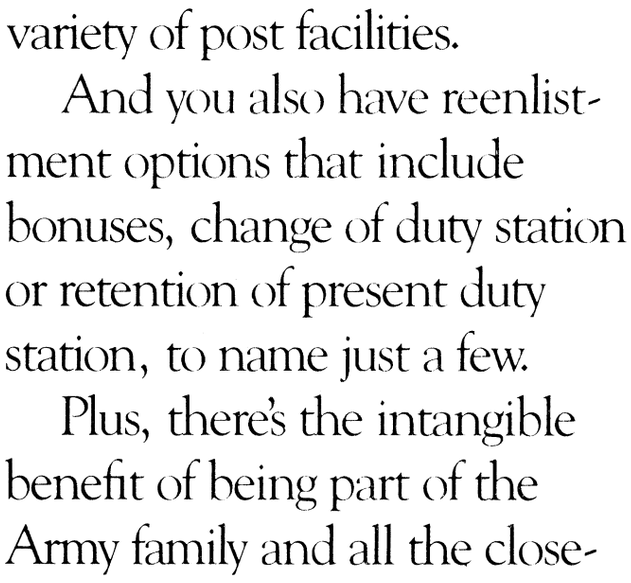
ADVANTAGES THE ARMY OFFERS YOU AND YOUR FAMILY.



If you're married, there are many benefits available to you and your family that are not easily duplicated in civilian life.

You and your family get comprehensive medical and dental care, commissary and post exchange privileges, thirty days annual leave and use of a variety of post facilities.

And you also have reenlistment options that include bonuses, change of duty station or retention of present duty station, to name just a few.

Plus, there's the intangible benefit of being part of the Army family and all the closeness this entails.

When you take all this into consideration, reenlistment makes a lot of sense for a lot of reasons. We can show you even more. Come talk to us, and bring your spouse.

ARMY. BE ALL YOU CAN BE.® REENLIST.

IT TAKES MORE THAN A HUG TO MAKE A BIG PERSON FEEL SECURE.

That's why it helps to be in the Army. Because the Army has a range of benefits and services that give you and your family a real sense of security.

Benefits like knowing your family is covered by medical and dental insurance. Or knowing who is taking care of your children, and that your older kids are enjoying safe, supervised activities.

There's security in knowing there are places to turn for financial assistance. That there are programs to help your wife or husband find employment.

It's reassuring to know there are places to shop, like the commissary and the PX, where your money goes farther.

And nothing makes a family feel more secure than knowing they've got a steady income and job security.

Not everyone has that kind of security. Army families do. Because the Army provides many things to help make your life easier. We do it because we're committed to you. We want you to use the services we offer. We want you to stay in the Army family.

In this family, we take care of our own. And you won't find a more secure feeling anywhere else.

POST BRIEFS

Farewell ceremony set for Gen. Thurman today

A farewell ceremony will be held for Gen. Maxwell R. Thurman today at 4:45 p.m. in front of Infantry Hall, building 4.

Thurman, commander of the U.S. Army's Training and Doctrine Command, Fort Monroe, Va., since July 1987, is leaving TRADOC to become commander-in-chief, U.S. Southern Command in Panama.

He was originally scheduled to retire from the Army Aug. 31, with 35 years of Army service, but the President nominated him to succeed retiring Gen. Frederick F. Woerner as commander-in-chief, USSOUTHCOM. Woerner who has more than 34 years of Army service, has commanded SOUTHCOM since June 1987.

Secretary of Defense Richard Cheney recommended Thurman's mandatory retirement date be deferred until September 1991.

Eleven units from post will be represented at the ceremony by their commanders and colors. There will also be a 17-gun salute.

Should it rain, an abbreviated ceremony will be held in Marshall Auditorium, Building 4.

Besides commanding TRADOC, Thurman's past assignments include: vice chief of staff of the Army, Army deputy chief of staff for Personnel, and commander of the Army Recruiting Command at Fort Sheridan, Ill., and the 82nd Airborne Division Artillery at Fort Bragg, N.C. His other assignments include the Pentagon and Vietnam.

Thurman, 58, is from High Point, N.C.

Fort Benning firemen attempt to put the boom in place during a mock oil spill.

Firemen learn valuable lesson from raging river

By Shawn Bryson
Bayonet staff writer

A mock oil spill brought about 20 Fort Benning firefighters to Engineer Landing July 21 with the purpose cleaning it up.

As the dual-engine MK-1 bridge erection boats, supplied by the 586th Engineer Company, 43rd Engineer Battalion, fired their powerful engines that morning, firefighters climbed aboard the vessels unsure of how the training exercise might turn out. Their plan was to stretch a boom across the river to contain the straw (used to simulate oil) thrown into river upstream and then clean the mess up, according to fire department officials.

"To the best of my knowledge, this is the first time the Army has ever tried to cross a major river such as this with a boom," said Arthur E. Simmons, Fort Benning's fire chief. "We just wanted to see if it could be done," he said.

Despite the efforts of firefighters and the MACH II pilots, the river proved dominant. "The current was just too strong. Our cables and connectors kept breaking because of the force," Simmons said. "There probably isn't any equipment strong enough for that river," he said.

Simmons quickly pointed out that the exercise was actually a great success, despite the problems with the current. He said the point of the exercise was to train and learn from the training. "It gave us some good ideas," Simmons said. If an actual oil spill were to happen today, the fire department would know not to boom the river. Instead, according to Simmons, firefighters would redirect the spill to a calm, wide spot.

Simmons said the chances of a major chemical or oil spill making its way to Fort Benning are slim anyway. He said there are two damns between Benning and Atlanta and both could slow the river's flow and hold back most of the spill.

If a major spill did occur, Simmons said the firefighters would probably try to stop it near Uchee Creek because the river widens there and the current is much slower.

The primary purpose of the exercise was to provide training as part of a Department of Defense hazardous materials school put on by the Fort Benning Fire Department twice a year.

Simmons said Benning firefighters successfully cleaned up a fuel spill in February. That spill involved a gas tanker that crashed, spilling 750 to 1,000 gallons of diesel fuel into Uchee Creek in Russell County, Ala. Simmons said efforts by the firefighters prevented the fuel from flowing into the river.

USARSA guest talks on reserve readiness

By Keith F. Johnson
U.S. Army School of Americas

William D. Clark, principle deputy assistant secretary of the Army (Manpower and Reserve Affairs) since 1979, was a guest speaker July 20 of the U.S. Army School of the Americas' Command and General Staff College Course.

Clark, who was born at Fort Benning in 1925, spoke to the class about the foundation of civilian control of the U.S. Armed Forces as well as the role of reserve components in the U.S. and Latin America.

According to Clark, almost half of the Army's combat support elements and 69 percent of the tactical support elements belong to reserve components, with units located at more than 5,000 separate places in the U.S. Reserve personnel are on duty 38 days per year.

"The readiness of our reserve components is the major challenge of today's part-time Army, as well as maintaining skill proficiency with equipment that continually becomes more complicated," Clark said.

"Because of the United States' reliance on its reserve components, it is important our reserve component standards and performances are as high as active Army units."

According to Clark, many reserve members have civilian jobs that are closely related to their military jobs. Also, many reserve soldiers are former active duty personnel.

"A strength not measurable in military standards is the successful business people from many different fields who are part of our reserve defense," Clark said. "These people are representatives and spokesmen for the Armed Forces who support the needs of national security in their respective hometowns. That is a very important ingredient in our own nation's defense."

Post to bid farewell to Cobb

■ Departure and welcome ceremony for the post's command sergeant major and his successor, Monday at 9 a.m. in front of Building 4.

By Agatha H. James
Bayonet staff writer

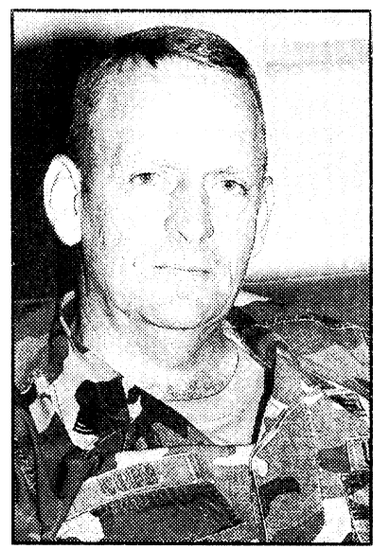
Command Sgt. Major Autrail Cobb, the post sergeant major, is leaving Fort Benning July 31 to become the command sergeant major at the Joint Readiness Training Center at Little Rock Air Force Base, Little Rock, Ark, which is headquarters for light infantry training conducted at Fort Chaffee, Ark.

Since Cobb became the top enlisted soldier here in 1987, he's frequently said, "At Fort Benning, we don't paint the train as it goes by, we lay the tracks in front of it!"

The Bayonet asked him to reflect on his tenure as the post's command sergeant major, his years at Benning and his Army career.

What changes have you seen at Fort Benning over the years?

The biggest change at Fort Benning has been the community relationship. I have seen a "we-they attitude" change to a "we" attitude with everybody working together for the benefit of the U.S. Army and for the soldiers stationed at Fort Benning, Georgia. I think many Columbus residents now think of Fort Benning as a part of their community.



What do you think it takes to become the command sergeant major at a post after being a private there?

It takes many years of hard work, tough leadership assignments, being with the soldiers, being what is called a "dirty boot infantryman," getting out there on the ground with soldiers and dealing with good people, bad people and those in between.

What directions do you foresee for the Henry Caro Noncommissioned Officer Academy?

The NCO Academy has one standard: The right thing. Its leaders enforce rules and regulations; they enforce policies that have been written; they ensure that each noncommissioned officer on this post understands that his reason for existence is to enforce rules, regulations and policies and not to make them.

> "At Fort Benning, we don't paint the train as it goes by, we lay the tracks in front of it!"
> — Autrail Cobb

Autrail Cobb

Our NCO Academy leans in the direction that every enlisted soldier here falls under an NCO. How well the NCO corps is trained determines how well the soldiers — E-4 and below — are trained. We have very simple rules here — prompt obedience and self discipline.

When you became command sergeant major here, what goals did you set, and how do they compare to what you have accomplished?

I had basically four things in mind. One, I wanted to turn the NCO Academy into a model and

See COBB A-3

OPINION

VARIOUS VOICES: What qualities make a good NCO?

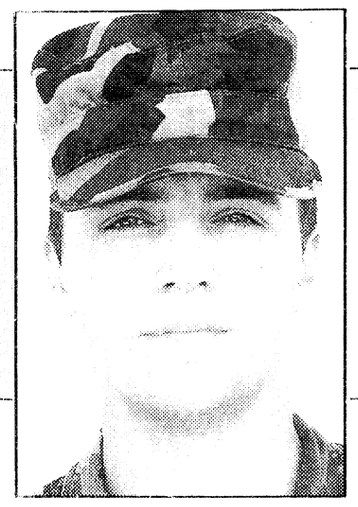
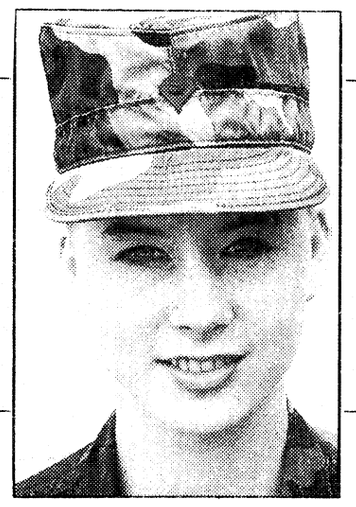
Sgt. Bartholomew Padron, Co. D, 197th Spt. Bn., 197th Inf. Bde. — "NCOs should take care of the soldiers and give them recognition when they do a good job."



Sgt. Timothy Jones, HHC, 1st Bn., 507th PIR, TSB — "Looking out for the troops and keeping them out of trouble are two NCO responsibilities. NCOs should set good examples for soldiers to follow, and make sure soldiers don't make the same mistake twice."



Maj. Steven Wendell, 3292nd USARF School — "A good NCO can take overall guidance, use good judgment and develop the details of the execution."

Spec. Harry Henry, 197th Inf. Bde. — "A good NCO shouldn't make soldiers do anything he wouldn't be willing to do himself. NCOs have to be physically and mentally fit."

Pvt. Douglas Schlenker, Co. B, 1st Bn., 507th PIR, TSB — "Good NCOs listen to lower-ranking soldiers when they have problems. They remember what it was like to be lower ranking. They need to have a sense of humor when the time is right."

Spec. Beverly Soto, HHC, 36th Eng. Grp. — "A good NCO supports and takes care of soldiers, displays good leadership and serves as a role model for all soldiers."

U.S. can still afford the luxury of world leadership

But we must maintain our defense spending

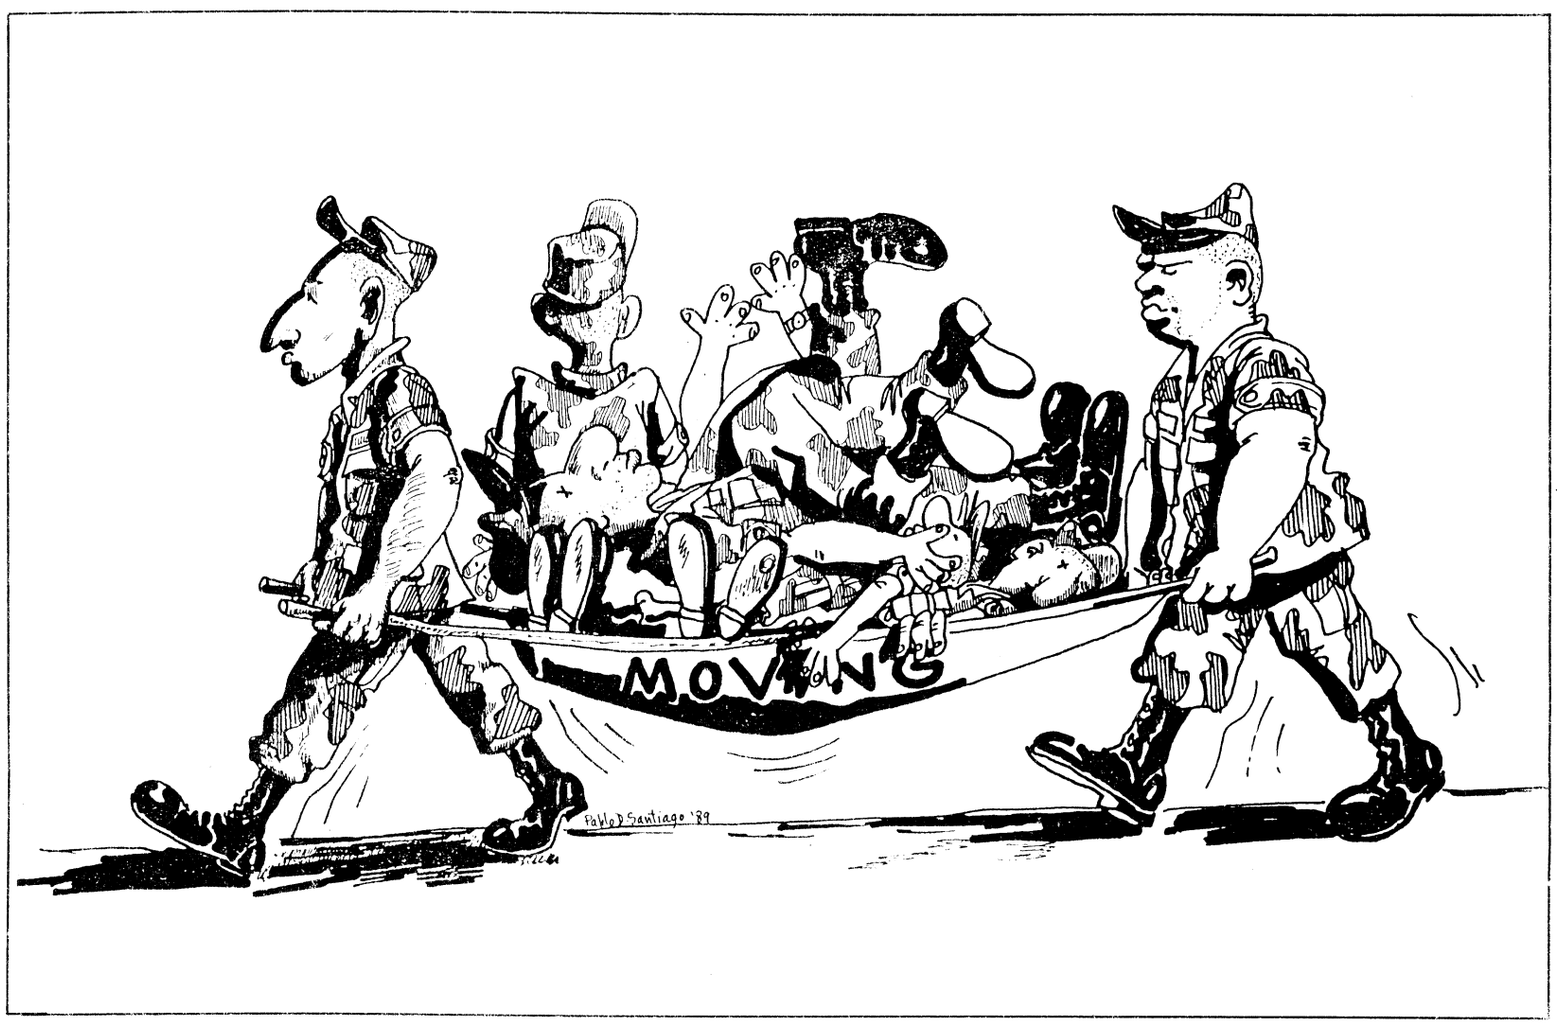
Association of the U.S. Army

Recently we have witnessed a parade of critics who loudly proclaim the United States can no longer afford the luxury of world leadership.

These nay sayers use the trade imbalance, the budget deficit and the national debt to back their argument. Many even go so far as to suggest that, with the advent of Gorbachev, the need to maintain our military strength is of decreasing relevance. Therefore they postulate, there is some hope that by radically reducing our defense budget, we may somehow survive.

This clouded thinking seems to overlook the fact that, whatever Gorbachev's interests, they are certainly not related to the advancement of American democracy, but rather to the continued pursuit of great power status — economic as well as military.

With that in mind, there is every likelihood that internal tension and external coercion will continue to characterize Soviet affairs for many years.



It is the view of the aforementioned critics that we should reduce our spending for defense because it has been excessive, and it is becoming increasingly unnecessary. Such faulty reasoning ignores the fact that, with a $4.7 trillion Gross National Product, we are hardly paupers.

Concerns about our economic situation are only relative, as other nations have prospered — to a large extent as the result of American largess since World War II. But we also need to recognize that our incredible economic dominance was both a product of the markets we created and of our willingness to protect our destiny by having the military strength to ensure stability and to extend our influence.

We have succeeded dramatically in providing a more stable world for free people and free markets, and we cannot afford to withdraw now. We do pay a price for leadership but not to preserve the interests of Japan, or Korea or Europe. The price we pay is to preserve American interests — and it's worth every penny.

Upon serious appraisal, it is difficult to believe that tension and opposition inside China and the Soviet Union or terrorism and conventional weapons proliferation elsewhere can somehow promise a more stable world.

The question is, can we afford to preserve our own destiny — to lead? The answer is we cannot afford not to do so.

All dressed up and no place to go; Snively discovers the DITY move

By Clyde Snively
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Back in April, the people who hand out assignments to us specs said I could expect to be sent to Korea this fall. So I studied up on Korea and learned to say "kimchee," as in indigenous cabbage used to start fires.

In May, I was told, "No, Specialist Morales extended, so we're sending you to Fort Polk." So I went out and learned to say, "blackened," as in blackened redfish or okra.

In June, I was told, "No, Specialist Francois decided to re-up for station of choice, so there's no longer an opening."

So here I am. All ready to move but no place to go.

Each time I got alerted, I made a trip to the transportation office to bone up on overseas moves, then on in-country moves. I got all this knowledge but nothing to do with it, except, write a column. So I decided to share my pearls of wisdom, give you my book knowledge and my school of hard knocks knowledge.

As anyone who's been in the Army long enough to have heard the phrases, "whole ball of wax," and "high speed, low drag," knows, there are two ways to accomplish a state-side PCS.

One is the moving company moves you, the other is, a do-it-yourself move. Naturally there are advantages and disadvantages to both.

When you use movers, these folks come in, pack everything that's not tied down and move it for you. Then when you reach your destination, they lug it into your new quarters and unpack it for you, and where they've disassembled something, they will reassemble it.

But beware, when you tell them where to put a piece of furniture, that's it. The next time it's moved — you do it.

There are some disadvantages. For instance, you never know who you're going to get to move you. While the driver might have his act together, the packers might be some good old boys he picked up on the street corner on his way in that morning.

Also, beware of the driver who's too friendly. He might just be trying to disarm you as he marks letters and numbers after each item he inspects, so even a brand new, just-out-of-the-showroom piece of furniture, by the time he's finished with it, would have a claims officer thinking it'd been through a war.

Also, don't buy the "we'll wrap it and crate it when we get to the warehouse," song and dance. You'll end up watching the truck trundle down the street with grandma's wicker rocker dangling from the tailgate. Your antique rocker is liable to turn into antique toothpicks.

Nor are all of them as honest as they might appear. While you're busy checking off boxes in one location, someone might decide he needs a chain saw, and there you'll be in your new apartment, looking all over for the chain saw. Only then will you notice it didn't even make the inventory.

DITY, or do-it-yourself moves are great in that you have complete control over your furniture at all times. Further, you get money back — a percentage of what the move would have cost the government.

To me, this is the best way to go if you don't have large appliances. Sure, you may have big friends with bulging biceps to help you move out of your current quarters. But what happens when you get to your new assignment where you don't know anyone and you end up in an upstairs apartment with a piano, washer and dryer and refrigerator to tote up the stairs.

If you can't move into a location right away, you can always stash your stuff in one of those mini-storage sites. Then when you get a place to stay, rent another U-Haul, and you're on your way. (Maybe by then you will have met someone at work with muscles. I'm sure for infantrymen, this is no problem. For journalists, used to no heavier lifting than our toothbrushes, it is.)

Save your receipts. You get reimbursed for your temporary storage. Also, don't forget to weigh your transporter, be it POV or U-Haul, both empty and filled. No weighee, no payee.

Good luck on your move. Maybe I'll get mine next year.

Benning Management Association seeks scholarship applicants

Fort Benning Management Association

Scholarship applicants are being sought by the Fort Benning Management Association for its yearly program.

All active duty or retired military personnel and active or retired federal civil service employees and their family members residing within a 50-mile radius of the Tri-Community area are eligible for the scholarships.

The scholarships are intended for graduate applicants who are interested in studying in the field of management or business.

The association will select two recipients for a $1,200-per-year scholarship to Troy State at Fort Benning.

This primary scholarship must be used during the period of Fall 1989 and Summer 1990 and will comprise nine courses.

The association will also be awarding two additional scholarships: a $300-per-quarter or $900-per-year scholarship to Troy State at Fort Benning, and a $200-per-quarter or $600-per-year scholarship to any accredited college or university.

Applicants applying for the scholarship are required to write a letter to the FBMA formally requesting consideration for the scholarship, including highlights of academic career and extracurricular activities. The letter should also explain why the applicant should be selected to receive the scholarship. Along with the letter, applicants should include a copy of their high school transcript and a completed application to Troy State College.

Applicants must also submit three letters of recommendation, with one, if applicable, from their high school principal or guidance counselor, transcripts from any college attended and a statement of employment indicating applicant's employer, address, telephone number and applicant's job title.

Submit applications no later than Aug. 25 to Patty Pfeiffer, Building 2509 or call 545-5656/5580 for more information.

Fort Benning has done that. Two, I wanted to be part of the solution and not part of the problem. Three, I wanted to ensure that all units from the smallest to the largest were taking care of their soldiers and training their noncommissioned officers. Four, I wanted to make sure the families here were being taken care.

Everything at Fort Benning is based on personnel coming together and agreeing on something for the betterment of the soldiers. When you talk about the Noncommissioned Officer Academy, you can attribute that to the commanding general, the chief of staff, the directorates of logistics, resource management, and plans, training and mobilization.

The only thing an NCO does is ensure everything is done properly. He has neither the authority nor the desire to be able to move large sums of money or to ensure contracts are being met. What we (NCOs) do is make sure that what is supposed to be happening is happening. The NCO Academy, Soldiers' Plaza, family member programs, a better training safety record — they all happened as a result of several people's efforts, not just one person's.

You will become the command sergeant major for the Joint Readiness Training Center, which is headquartered at LRAFB, Little Rock, Ark. What are your plans for there?

The JRTC is to light forces what the National Training Center in California is to the heavy forces. Light infantry battalions rotate through Fort Chaffee operating in their scenario or their mission to determine where they are and what they need to do to get where they want to go. My concern right now is that the U.S. Army Infantry School is turning out some of the best trained soldiers — noncommissioned and officers — in the world and has been for many years, but when these soldiers reach their units, something goes wrong.

We teach soldiers to do the right thing, but that's not what we hear from the field. I want to determine what's wrong, and I want to try to correct it by sticking strictly to the basics — clean your weapon, clean your body, camouflage, dig your fighting position and move with the fighting team. It seems when they get to the field, they all get brain dead. I want to know why.

I suspect the standards are not being maintained in the field. I believe they (commanders) want to do right; but there are a lot of outside influences like cycle support, post support and training support that prevent them from having their whole units do training. If that's one of the problems, I want to make sure it's identified.

This is the "Year of the NCO." What is the one thing you want to tell noncommissioned officers about the Army?

As a noncommissioned officer, you're looked upon as a leader, trainer of enlisted soldiers and sometimes as a guide for officers. Whatever you do, it must be right. It cannot be questionable. From the time you get up in the morning to the time you go to bed at night, you must emulate the pride of the U.S. Army's noncommissioned officer corps.

I think every year is the year of the NCO at Fort Benning. NCOs perform 90 percent of the instruction that is done here. In fact, the 29th Infantry Regiment has probably one of the largest groups of NCOs at one place, and their primary mission is to train. Our NCOs receive nothing but praise from visitors. Fort Benning is just an example of the U.S. Army. Sometimes we (NCOs) do things better (than is done at other posts), sometimes we do things worse. But, we do exactly as we are told.

If you could tell higher Army officials one thing about noncommissioned officers, what would you tell them and why?

Army officials need to know NCOs have responsibilities, and they need to make sure they carry them out. The only time we have trouble is when officers and NCOs cross over their lines of responsibility and confusion occurs. First of all, know what your noncommissioned officers should be doing, and let them do it. It's as simple as that. If an NCO fails to do something right, then correct him. If he fails to do it again, then rearrange his pay rate, so he won't have so much responsibility.

What makes Fort Benning a good place to work and live?

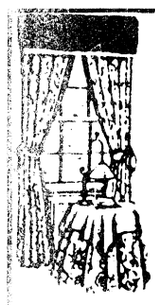
Fort Benning is a good post because of the people who work here and their desire to do a good job. Everyone is here to do a job for the soldier, and I think most people try to do their best. There are always a few werewolves out there, but they are quickly identified and dealt with accordingly. Fort Benning has some of the best people I've ever worked with.

Another thing I like about this post is new ideas are implemented. Take Soldiers' Plaza, which used to be referred to as Splinter Village, for example. That system came about because one person had an idea that soldiers should not have to run all over post to in- and out-process. That person's idea was for soldiers who are in-processing to have a place they can take their family, the kids can play, and the spouse can look for a job. The idea was implemented, and it works.

What are some challenges facing your replacement?

Short resources and bigger demands will be his biggest challenges. It seems we are having to do more with less. That will be his biggest challenge. Another challenge will be to find out what's going on with soldiers and to keep the commanding general informed. The CG likes to be kept abreast of the "pulse of the post."

What is the one thing you have found works with soldiers?



Daily contact in one way or another is important to soldiers. They don't even have to know who you are; they just know it's a sergeant major talking to them about what's bothering them. I don't think they always expect change, but they like having someone listen. I tried to let them know I was concerned about what was bothering them. Sometimes I was able to find solutions and sometimes I wasn't. But, at least, I was able to relay this information to the commander and keep him informed about what was going on.

What is the one accomplishment during your career that you're most proud of?

In 1974, I was at Benning as a platoon sergeant, and I helped form the 1st Ranger Battalion. Ten years later, I was a sergeant major helping to form a second ranger battalion — the 3rd Ranger Battalion. That is a unique accomplishment because you're lucky to be involved in forming one elite unit. I was darn lucky to be involved with two. I'm hoping before I get out of the Army I'll be able to help form another.

Cobb, 43, has been in the Army for 27 years. He is one of six brothers who have all served in the military. Cobb said he is the only one of his brothers to jump out of an airplane, and he is the only one to wear the coveted ranger tab.

He and his wife, Alice, have two sons and two daughters — Danny, Richard, Bonnie and Audrina Lynn.

Officers may attend law school at Army's expense

By Sharon Reynolds
Bayonet Editor

Up to 17 active duty officers may attend law school in the fall of 1990 with the Army footing the bill through its Funded Legal Education Program.

According to Lt. Col. William Adams, Deputy Staff Judge Advocate here, applications for the program must arrive at the Office of the Judge Advocate General in the Pentagon by Nov. 1 to be considered for fall 1990 classroom seats.

OTJAG officials project that 17 officers will be selected for 1990, but add that funding limitations may further restrict the number of selections. They advise interested officers to submit applications well in advance of the Nov. 1 deadline.

"It's an outstanding program," Adams said. "It's an excellent way to practice law."

Adams is the point of contact for officers who are interested in applying for the program here.

To be eligible for the program, officers must have completed at least two but no more than six years of active duty by the time they would begin law school. Additional eligibility requirements and application procedures are outlined in AR 351-22, "The Judge Advocate General's Funded Legal Assistance Program."

According to Adams, some of the other requirements are that officers must:

- Be a captain or below when school begins.
- Have a bachelor's degree
- Contact, apply to and be accepted by a law school
- Take and pass a law school admissions test and submit those test scores with the application packet. The scores are used as part of the reviewing process. Information about where law school admissions tests are given locally may be obtained by writing to Law School Admissions Services, Box 2000, Newtown, Pa. 18940.
- Be in a voluntary indefinite status.
- Be interviewed and recommended by a Staff Judge Advocate representative.
- Send applications through command channels, including candidates' branch managers at the Total Army Personnel Command.

Adams said if past application submissions are any indication of this year's number of applicants, there should be around 170 vying for a seat in law school. He said only about 10 percent of the applicants, the best qualified, will be selected.

Officers who wish to apply for the program should contact Adams at 544-4261 or 545-4611 for more information.

MACH sponsors nursing symposium

Martin Army Community Hospital

The Department of Nursing at Martin Army Community Hospital sponsored a one-day symposium July 14, "Army Nurse Corps: The Cutting Edge."

The focus of the presentation was nursing research as it relates to Army readiness. Fifty nurses attended the conference.

Lt. Col. Susan A. McMarlin, chief nurse, U.S. Army Medical Research and Development Command, Fort Detrick, Md., discussed the use of research in Army nursing today.

Maj. Eileen Munn, Fort Benning; Capt. Lois Borsay, Fort Jackson and Capt. Vickie B. Stamp, Fort Bragg, presented current research studies.

The afternoon program focused on examining the specific role nursing plays in the Medical Research and Development Command. Lt. Col. Molly Burgess, head nurse of the Critical Care Unit, institute of Surgical Research, San Antonio, Texas, discussed the nursing role in the world-famous burn unit.

Maj. Kizzie Baker, chief of Nursing Service, U.S. Army Medical Research Institute of Infectious Disease reviewed the unique opportunities for nursing personnel.

A general overview of nursing responsibilities in the Medical Research and Development Command was provided by McMarlin.

In addition to providing invaluable information about Research and Development Command, the conference encouraged "networking" between the Nurse Corps officers at different facilities.

IF YOU'RE ABOUT TO BECOME A CIVILIAN, TALK TO THE PERSON WHO CAN HELP YOU MOST.

The person who can help you most when you leave active duty might be the one who shows you how to continue your service in the Army Reserve.

Whether you're getting out of the Army, Air Force, Marines or Navy, one of the best places to get a head start is in an Army Reserve unit. Because serving in the Army Reserve (usually one weekend a month and two weeks a year) can help you reach your new goals.

You'll be earning a part-time income based on your rank and maintaining many of your benefits such as life insurance, shopping in the PX and commissary, and qualifying for money to further your education.

Transferring to the Army Reserve is a great way to make the transition to civilian life. Because you're surrounded by other people with whom you have lots in common.

With over 4,000 Army Reserve units, there's probably one close to where you plan on living. So find out more about the Army Reserve. If you're currently on active duty in the Army, speak to a Total Army Career Counselor. If you're in another service, talk to an Army Reserve Recruiter, or call toll-free 1-800-USA-ARMY.

Suggestions pay off for two men here

Glenn P. Smith

Haroldean Peace

By Shawn Bryson
Bayonet staff writer

Two men were recently awarded more than $2,800 each for suggestions that will save the government about $144,000 annually.

A former employee of the Directorate of Training and Development, U.S. Army Infantry School, Haroldean Peace, and Glenn P. Smith, Housing Division, Directorate of Engineering and Housing, received awards July 19 from Lt. Col. Barry Mahek, deputy post commander.

Peace was awarded a check for $2,845.90 for a suggestion that will save the government $71,530 each year, while Smith's suggestion earned him $2,890 and saved the government $73,237.50 annually.

Peace submitted his suggestion in December, 1985. He said he feels one of the reasons for the delay in his award was because not only will the Army benefit from his suggestion, but so will the Air Force and the Marine Corps.

The rounds of the 81mm mortar, a weapon that has not yet been fielded, according to Peace, can be recovered after training and demonstrations and reused. However, Peace explained, the original tool kit issued by the contractor of the weapon was too bulky and complicated. "We needed to have something more compact," he said. That's when he drew up sketches of a new tool kit. "We really only needed two tools to get the job done faster and cheaper," Peace said.

The tools designed by Peace are simple and can be made from sheet metal, which significantly brought down the price of reutilizing the 81mm rounds, according to Ron Gorday, chief of the Training Devices Branch, New Systems Division, Directorate of Training and Doctrine.

Smith's suggestion to redesign the registration desk at Fort Benning's guest house improved the efficiency of the operation as well as the satisfaction of the customers. He said the front desk at the guest house is now run like that of a hotel.

Smith explained that in the past, three offices were responsible for procedures such as key check-out, customer files, the status of rooms in need of maintenance or cleaning and guest registration. Now, however, the front desk is responsible for all those areas. The annual savings from the suggestion comes mainly from cost avoidance, Smith said. "We have 2,065 beds and our personnel used to have to do a lot waiting and running between the three offices to get the information needed to do their jobs," Smith said. The new operation cuts down on the time spent at the three offices and makes more efficient use of the personnel, he added.

The guest house customers are more satisfied, too, Smith said. "It used to take 30 to 45 minutes to process one customer," he said. With the new system, customers are basically in and out of there, he explained.

No REFORGER '89; plans call for smaller exercises

By Darrell Cochran
Army News Service

The 1989 Return of Forces to Germany exercise commonly called REFORGER has been cancelled.

Cancellation of the exercise is part of the REFORGER Enhancement Program announced earlier this year. NATO Commander Gen. John Galvin said also that the decision was based partly on German appeals to help protect the environment there.

Conducted 20 times since 1967, REFORGER is an annual strategic deployment and maneuver exercise designed to demonstrate U.S. ability to reinforce NATO; to honor a 1967 agreement between the United States, the United Kingdom and West Germany and to enhance to combat capability of both deploying and in-theater forces in Europe.

Instead of REFORGER '89, a series of smaller maneuvers will be conducted by troops already stationed in Europe.

The REFORGER Enhancement Program will integrate new computer simulation technology, command post exercises and field training exercises. Also, a "command field exercise," which encompasses aspects of both a CPX and an FTX, will be used. A command field exercise focuses on the training of commanders and their staffs at different levels rather than on evaluation of the tactical and technical skills of soldiers in the field.

Scheduled for January through March 1990, the enhanced REFORGER will still enable the United States to deploy significant numbers of soldiers from CONUS. However, officials say, using the mix of simulations, FTXs, CPXs and CFXs will reduce the number of troops actually in the field. This will consequently lower maneuver damage, which has become a major issue with the German public over the past few years.

Officials say REFORGER will continue to exercise all the logistical and administrative tasks of moving large forces from the United States to Europe.

Expert Field Medical Badge

Army medics prove they can perform in combat

By Willie Hay
197th Infantry Brigade

Six Army medics proved they could perform in combat alongside front-line infantrymen when they received the Expert Field Medical Badge July 21 at the end of week-long testing conducted by the 197th Infantry Brigade.

Recipients of the EFMB were 2nd Lt. Douglas Kelly and Spec. John Lawlor, both with Company B, 197th Support Battalion; 2nd Lt. Robert S. Boham, Headquarters and Headquarters Detachment, 34th Medical Battalion; Pfcs. Scott Coleman and Gregory Cook, HHD, 34th Med. Bn.; and Sgt. Mark Ford, 1st Battalion, 3rd Infantry (The Old Guard), Fort Meyer, Va.

"I think this is the toughest badge a soldier can earn in peacetime," said 1st Lt. Harry Hays, EFMB project officer, noting that the testing began with a field of 102 candidates. "It's even harder than the Expert Infantry Badge, because you don't get a retest if you fail any portion of the testing, and you must demonstrate basic soldier skills as well as medical proficiency."

The brigade's EFMB program began with a training phase July 10 through 14. Testing started July 15 with a physical training test followed by a written exam July 16. Candidates who passed these first two hurdles went on to day and night land navigation courses and hands-on testing in survival techniques, emergency medical treatment, evacuation of the sick and wounded and a litter obstacle course. The final challenge was a 12-mile, forced march that had to be completed in three hours.

"This was my first try for the EFMB, and I didn't expect it to be so hard," said Lawlor. "The hardest part was the night navigation course, but I improvised by breaking off a stick every 100 meters to keep my pace count."

Kelly said the toughest challenge for him came at the emergency medical treatment station where candidates had to treat five victims of a simulated explosion.

"I didn't get a lot of practical experience with medical skills in my Officer Basic Course," said Kelly, who received an ROTC commission after serving 11 years as an enlisted soldier. "I really had to improvise to treat the simulated casualties during the EMT part of this test."

Kelly received praise for his performance from Chief Warrant Officer John Nelson, officer in charge of the EMT portion of the program.

"He was the most resourceful candidate I saw on the course," Nelson said. "He not only used the casualties' equipment to render first aid, but he also made a sling for a fractured arm out of an abdominal bandage in his medical bag."

"Although the majority of the original EFMB candidates lost out on the written exam and land navigation, emergency medical treatment is really the meat and potatoes of a combat medic's job," said Capt. Eric Timmens, commander of Co. B, 197th Spt. Bn., the unit tasked to provide most of the support for the test. "That's where a medic has to sort out the casualties according to the type and severity of their injuries while he's facing the stress of combat."

Nelson agreed. "Some of the candidates were so taken aback when they came upon 'casualties' with simulated missing limbs and blood gushing from their wounds that they couldn't deal with the situation. But that's what you have to deal with in combat," he said.

According to Timmens, the brigade's EFMB program involved trainers, evaluators and logistical support personnel from all of the medical assets at Kelley Hill. Maj. (Dr.) Donn Richards served as president of the board administering the test. Other members of the board were Timmens, Hays and Sgt. 1st Class Johnnie W. Baker, NCOIC of the program.

Training Circular 8-100 governs the Expert Field Medical Badge Test, which is given quarterly to officers and enlisted soldiers serving in the Medical Service Corps. All EFMB testing must be approved by the U.S. Army Academy of Health Sciences at Fort Sam Houston, Texas.

2nd Bn, 18th Inf becomes the enemy at NTC

Spec. Shawn McMillian sweeps water from his barracks.

By D.L. Bridges
197th Infantry Brigade

Four companies of 2nd Battalion, 18th Infantry deployed to the National Training Center at Fort Irwin, Calif., for a three-week rotation in the Mojave Desert as Opposing Forces against a brigade of the 1st Cavalry Division from Fort Hood, Texas.

The soldiers drew equipment and received three days of briefings and training on Soviet tactics, rules of engagement, safety and survival in the desert.

"I've been here two years, and I like the assignment," said Staff Sgt. Kerry Hart, OPFOR academy instructor. "This is a rugged place to live and work, but it provides ideal terrain for training combat units."

The safety briefing strongly emphasized the need for soldiers to pay attention to their surroundings to survive the harsh desert environment. The desert is habitat for many poisonous and nonpoisonous snakes, spiders, lizards, scorpions and coyotes. Daily temperature changes average as much as 60 degrees at night. Soldiers are required to travel in pairs to prevent accidents and provide immediate assistance in case of an injury.

Average annual rainfall is four inches, which comes in twice yearly downpours. On their sixth day at Fort Irwin, the "Vanguard" soldiers were greeted by an early evening rain, which dropped more than two inches in half an hour. The rain flooded streets and the barracks where the soldiers stayed, and the soldiers spent several hours mopping water and mud from the floors and drying their equipment.

"This is my fourth rotation to NTC, and I'd never been rained on before," said Pfc. Keith Lisznyai. "I've never seen it rain like this any place I've been. We're lucky no one got hurt."

"This is harsh, unforgiving terrain, and nothing comes easy when you're not used to the high temperatures and dry desert heat. But I've done some of my best training here," said Sgt. 1st Class Israel Rodriguez. "The isolation really makes me appreciate going home to my family when the mission is over, though," he added.

Time off for the soldiers is spent at Fort Irwin. The post has a modern gymnasium, swimming pool, basketball courts, new commissary, post exchange, bowling alley and theater.

"When I first got here, the heat seemed to drain all the energy out of me, but now I take advantage of the pool and weight room whenever I can," said Pfc. Joe Dorman. "This deployment is nowhere near as bad as I thought it would be, and I'm considering trying to get assigned here some day."

ASK THE JUDGE

By Jane M. Winand
Staff Judge Advocate's Office

Q. Last week, while on an ARTEP, I was tasked with some other guys in the platoon to dig foxholes. My platoon sergeant told us to put our load bearing equipment and Kevlar helmets in a pile by our truck and start digging.

I expressed concern over my equipment, but the sergeant told me he would worry about it. After the foxholes were dug, the platoon sergeant sent us to help with communications at the tactical operations center.

I asked about my equipment again, and the sergeant started getting ticked at me.

"I'll worry about the equipment," he said.

After three other jobs that took four more hours, the platoon sergeant finally let me go. I immediately went back to where I was told to leave my equipment, and it was gone. A couple of the other guys who had been told to leave their gear there also got ripped off.

The platoon sergeant said he didn't know anything about it. He also said I was signed for the equipment, and I'd have to pay for it. The company gave me a statement of charges to sign. What do I do?

A. First — think before you sign. A statement of charges is like a check or credit card. Sign your name and the money comes right out of your pay from the government — end of story.

If you know you're responsible for the loss, damage or destruction of government property, signing a statement of charges is a quick way of taking care of the matter and getting on with your life.

However, if there is a little nagging thought in the back of your mind that you don't think it is your fault, don't sign.

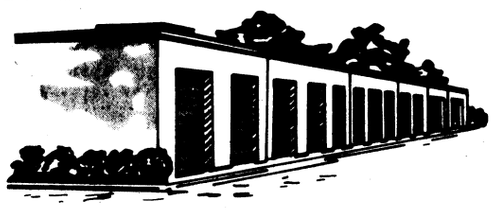
If you don't sign the statement of charges, the unit will initiate a report of survey to determine who, if anyone, will be responsible for the loss.

A report of survey is an investigation to determine what was lost or damaged, what was the value of the items, and who, if anyone, will have to pay to replace the items.

A surveying officer is appointed, and he will get statements from all of the relevant witnesses and examine the damaged property, it any, and the scene of the damage or loss. He will also check all of the pertinent regulations and seek legal advice from the Administrative Law section of the JAG Office.

If, after the investigation is complete, the surveying officer recommends that you pay for the loss or damage, you must be given a complete copy of the survey and a reasonable time to seek legal counsel. Although you will have an additional time to appeal any finding of liability, this is the best time to submit a rebuttal to the surveying officer. Call the Legal Assistance Office at 545-3281 and make an appointment.

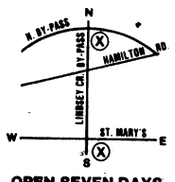
Bring to the appointment the copy of the survey, all of the statements and exhibits and anything else that you think will be helpful. You'll also need to prepare a detailed written statement giving your version of the facts. At this appointment, the Legal Assistance attorney will review the evidence and recommend a course of action.



Although you might think it hopeless, you will be surprised that AR 735-5 ensures that a survey is properly conducted.

For instance, in your situation, your platoon sergeant, as your supervisor, had supervisory responsibility over the property for which you signed. That means he had to provide proper guidance and direction, enforce security, safety and accounting requirements and to maintain a proper physical and psychological environment for the proper care and use of government property.

From what you said, the platoon sergeant appears to have prevented you from safeguarding your own property and thus, by his actions, may be responsible for all of the missing property he said he would take care of.



The Legal Assistance Office can't always help in every case, but make an appointment, learn your rights.

Drunk driving is a sure fire way to 'kill' time

By Karles Jackson
Provost Marshal's Office

Each year people who drive under the influence of alcohol or drugs kill or injure thousands of people.

We are all affected by drunk drivers in one way or another. Drunk driving is the nation's number one highway safety problem. It is also the most often committed violent crime. The devastating results are 26,000 Americans killed each year, 1,500,000 injured and related economic cost approaching $25 billion (this includes lost production, health and medical cost and criminal justice and social welfare system costs).

Law enforcement agencies, both the Military Police and the Columbus Police Department DUI Task Force, are stepping up their efforts to get drunk drivers off the road and to educate the public on the consequences of drunk driving.

The rest is up to you. Here are a few measures that will sharply reduce the number of drunk drivers on the road:

- If you know someone has been drinking, offer to take him home, let him spend the night or call a cab for him.
- Designate a driver in your group who agrees not to drink when going to a party. That individual can ensure the group gets home safely.
- If you observe a drunk driver, get a description and license number of the vehicle and notify the appropriate agency.
- Remember, the alcohol content in a 12-ounce beer is equal to four ounces of wine or one and one-half ounces of whiskey.

Penalties for drunk driving may range from stiff monetary fines to confinement in a penal institution. First offenders who are convicted of DUI could pay a fine of up to $300, second offenders could pay a fine of up to $600, for those third time offenders who are convicted could pay up to a $1,000 fine.

All offenders' licenses will be placed on probation for 12 months and will be supervised by a United States Probation Officer.

Offenders who violate the 12-month probation could receive a minimum of 30 days in the county detention facility.

The Columbus Police Department has a DUI Task Force, which concentrates strictly on drunk drivers, as well as the Military Police who ensure safety on post roads.

Drinking impairs the ability to drive by slowing down physical and mental reflexes and reactions. Be honest with yourself. If you know you have had too many drinks to be in control of your mind and body, STOP.

Be smart and be sober. Know your limit. Remember, "friends don't let friends drive drunk."

More Soldiers Are Killed In POV Accidents Each Year Than In All Other Types Of Accidents Combined.

Be Smart, Be Sober, Be Alive.

Beware; dangers may lurk within your own camp

Infantry Branch Safety Office

It's growing. Right now. Secure in your home, you try to ignore it. You try to forget it. You try to deny it. You can run, but you can't hide. And, sooner or later, you're going to have to face it. The longer you wait, the worse it gets. It's your lawn.

Come to grips with it. Steel yourself for combat. Your trusty steed awaits. He's eager to perform, to face the foe. Your lawn mower longs for his release.

Despite the terror your lawn causes and the loyal service your mower provides — beware. Dangers lurk within your own camp. Beneath the paint and wires of your mower, a terrible potential resides. The potential for serious injury.

With every grass-cutting campaign, the number of injuries requiring hospital treatment because of mower accidents increases. The U.S. Consumer Product Safety Commission estimates that more than 70,000 Americans are injured yearly. Statistics reveal that about 50 percent of push mower injuries occur from blade contact.

Power mower accidents happen due to carelessness and a disregard of basic safety procedures. Ignorance of how mowers work and neglect of the machines contribute to injuries as well.

Most injuries are caused by blade strike. This usually happens while clearing the discharge chute or adjusting the machine without turning it off and waiting for the blade to stop.

Propelled objects injure both mower operators and bystanders. Almost 90 percent of all mowers are rotary mowers. Their blades can reach speeds of 200 mph and without a deflector can hurl objects 50 feet or more.

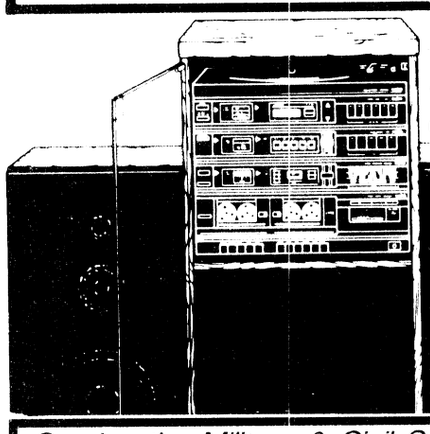
Operators who are familiar with the mower can avoid accidents. They should understand how the machine works, as well as its capabilities, limitations, safety features and emergency stopping procedures.

The engine and muffler can burn. Belts and rotating parts can catch fingers and loose clothing.

Mower operators should dress for safety. They should wear long slacks and heavy-duty shoes with non-slip soles. Avoid loose clothing and tie up long hair.

Safe grass cutting requires common sense and alertness. Never remove safety guards, and avoid the discharge chute. Stop the engine before crossing a gravel driveway or leaving it unattended.

Refill the gas tank outdoors to prevent vapors from building up. Wipe up any spills immediately to avoid fire. Never smoke while filling the tank. Before refueling, disconnect the plug and allow the engine to cool for 10 minutes, gas spilled on hot engine parts can ignite.



Now you're better armed to enter combat. Follow these safety precautions to avoid being your own worst enemy.

DoD honors quiet benefactor

By Mary A. Peterson
American Forces Information Service

Zachary Fisher never served a day in the armed forces. He couldn't because of a 4-F draft classification for a bad leg. But that never stopped him from appreciating what the people in uniform do or from sharing his bountiful success with service members — past and present and their families.

When a turret blast killed 47 sailors aboard the USS Iowa on April 19, their families heard from Fisher. So did the families of the two sailors washed overboard from the USS Barbel two weeks later and the five Marines who died in a helicopter crash in France the next day. He's somewhat like the character John Beresford Tipton, who, in a 1955 television program, quietly gave small fortunes by today's standard to ordinary people.

Fisher, a well-to-do New York City real estate developer, has, in one form or another, supported the military services for decades.

In May, the Department of Defense honored him with the Department of Defense Distinguished Public Service Award.

He was recognized not only for his monetary generosity to military families, but also for his service-related civic activities. Fisher, now in his 80s, has spent his adult life forging a bond between the military and civilian sectors.

Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff Adm. William J. Crowe Jr., said as he presented Fisher with the medal, "For hospitalized veterans, college-bound children of defense people, for the loved ones of servicemen killed in action -- when they needed it most, you have personally intervened to ease the burden of military life."

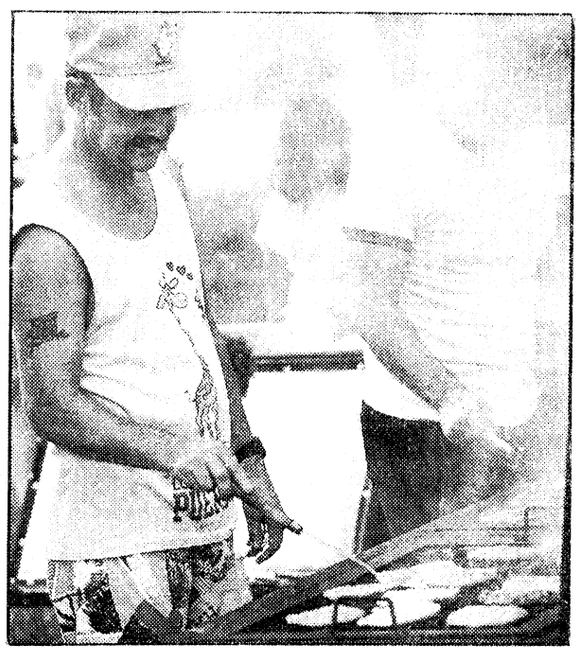
Among the many efforts Fisher has been involved with is the Intrepid Sea-Air-Space Museum in New York City. Fisher is the founder and chairman. He is also the founder of the Beirut Fund, created to assist the families of those killed in the 1983 Marine barracks bombing, and founder of the Veterans Bedside Network — an outreach program. He and his wife, Elizabeth, are founders of the Armed Services Foundation — a college scholarship fund for children of service members, retirees and veterans.

He was overwhelmed at the pomp and ceremony of the honors in the Pentagon's Hall of Heroes.

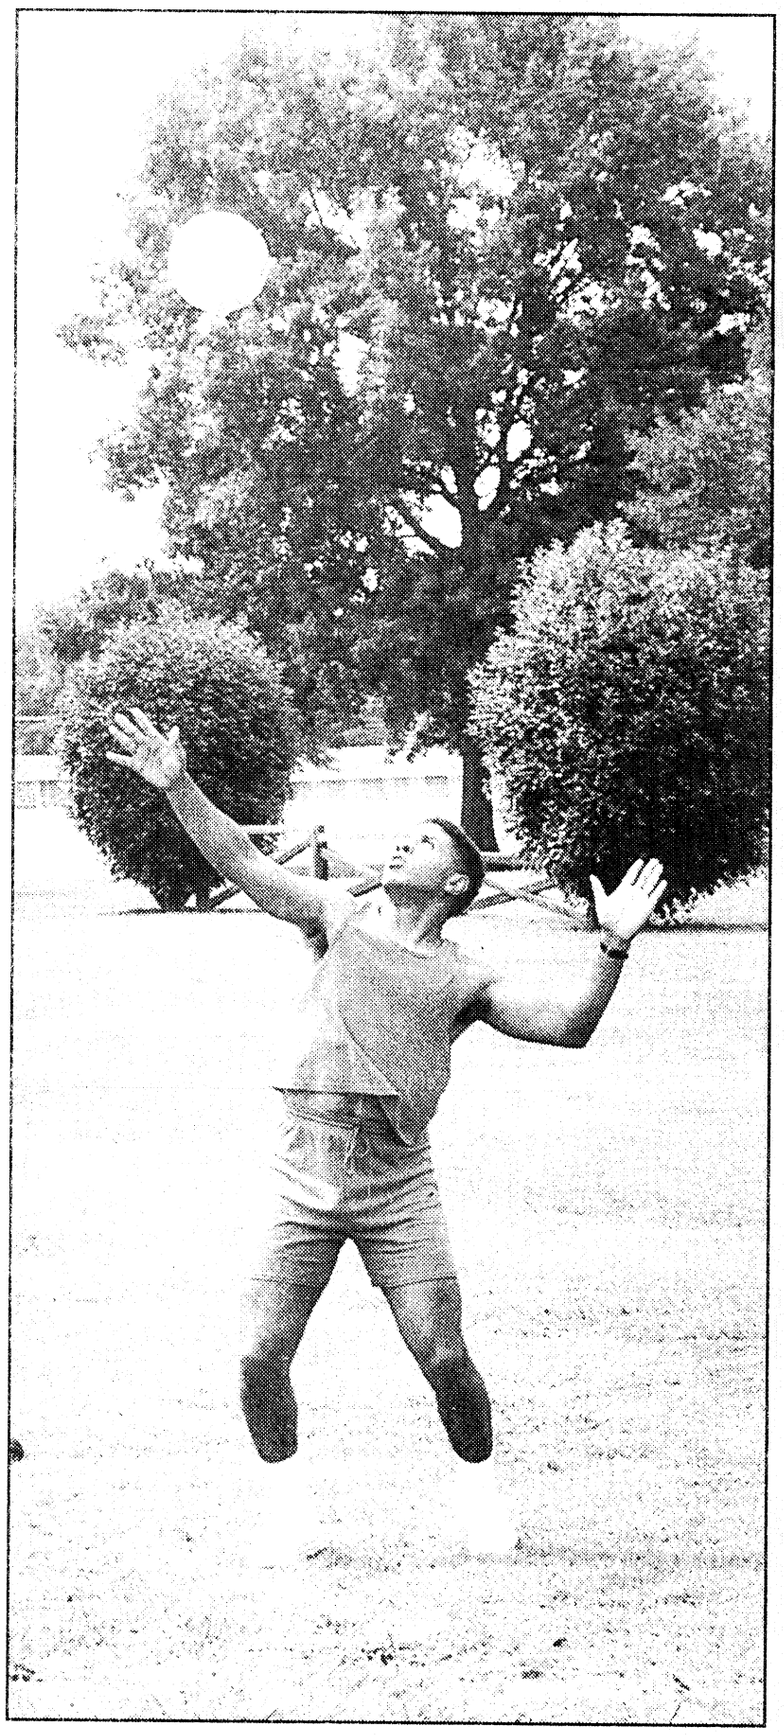
"You have referred to my efforts to recognize the achievements of the many men and women throughout the world who live to defend our shores and our precious liberty," Fisher told the audience of the Defense Department's senior leadership. "It is they who deserve our gratitude, and it is on their behalf that I accept this award. I have experienced great pleasure and pride in my association with the armed forces.

"As you know, I have been identified with the Intrepid Museum and regard it as a living monument to the heroism of all the armed forces," Fisher said. He spearheaded the effort to make the World War II aircraft carrier a museum.

"It's a pleasure to see the hundreds of thousands of Americans, young and old, who come and are educated in our great American heritage. I am proud to be a part of continuing that heritage and assure you of my continuing efforts to acknowledge our great debt to those two million valued men and women of the military and their families on guard around the world."



What drives Fisher to share the fruits of his business success? "Success is only dependent upon what you can give back," Fisher said. "Without that, success is meaningless."



He also holds a deep patriotic conviction. "It's my entire life," he admitted. "How can you explain patriotism? You have to be there when (members of the armed forces) are needed."

Sports Day

Infantry Officer Advanced Course students, staff and faculty and their families gathered at French Field July 22 for the annual IOAC Sports Day. Among the competitions were soccer, softball, horse shoes, tug-of-war, volleyball and a variety of children's competitions. Clockwise, 1st Lt. Phil Helbling watches as teammate Maj. Bill McDaniels lets a horse shoe fly; 1st Lt. Tim Buennemeyer prepares to blast a serve during the volleyball competition and 1st Sgt. Charles D. Jones flips burgers for hungry competitors.

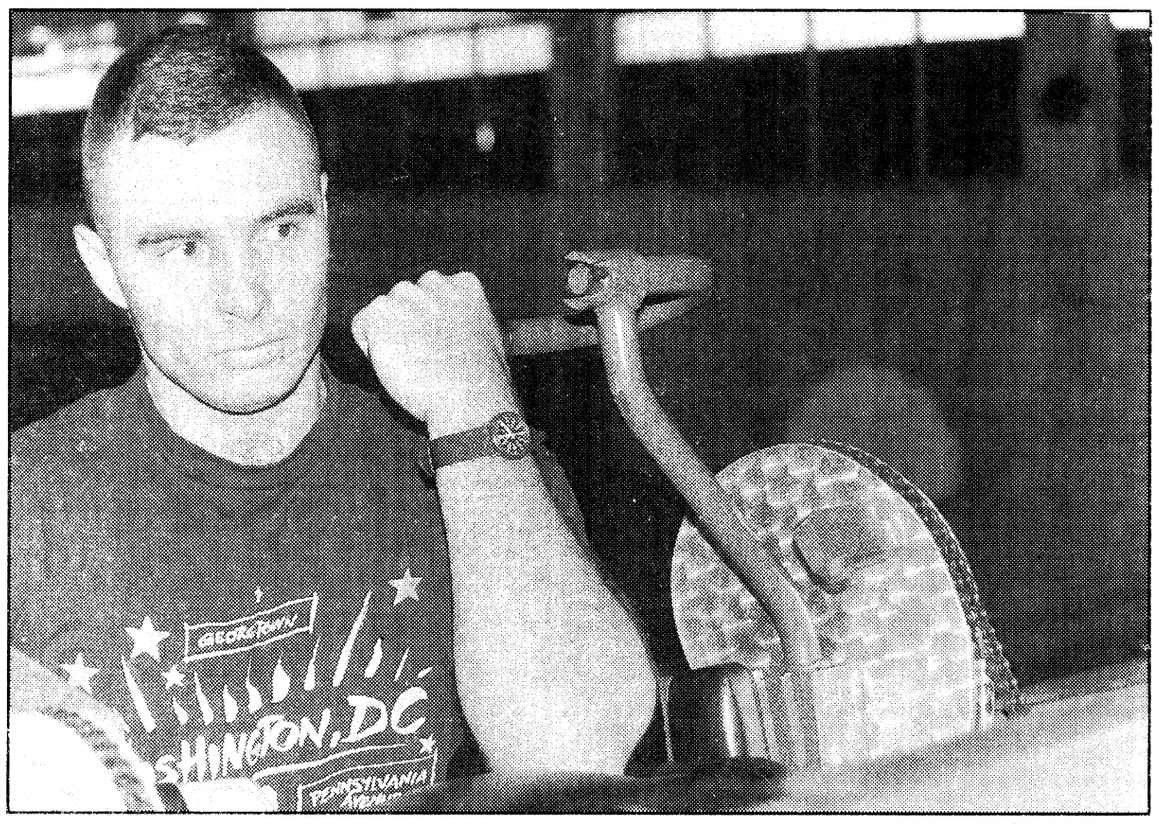
American Flag Run

850-mile run begins Nov. 3 at Arlington Cemetery

USAIC Public Affairs Office

The 1989 American Flag Run will begin Nov. 3 at the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier and end Nov. 10 in Columbus, the American Flag Run Association announced in a recent release.

Members of the Columbus Track Club, the U.S. Armed Forces and other participants will carry an American flag, which will be flown over the nation's capitol Columbus Day, Oct. 12, over an 850-mile course through five states — Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia and Alabama. The final leg will pass through Phenix City and end in Columbus.



President George Bush has been invited to run the first leg and Fort Benning's commanding general, Maj. Gen. Michael F. Spigelmire, has been invited to complete the historic 850-mile trek. The mayors of Columbus and Phenix City will be on hand to receive the flag.

There will be a welcome ceremony at the Columbus Trade Center, and the flag will be presented to the Gold Star Wives.

The event was begun as a way of honoring the nation's veterans.

A Veterans Day 10K race will be held Nov. 11, the day following the completion of the Flag Run. The Veterans Day race begins at 8 a.m. Proceeds from this race will benefit arthritis victims.

Charging Charlie stomps Echo's Eagles, 17-7

Andrew P. Wiese
h Infantry Brigade

With two inches of mud and er on the field, Charging rlie of the 1st Battalion, 18th ntry, stomped Echo's Eagles he 1st Battalion, 18th Infan- 17-7, during recent softball on at Kelley Hill.

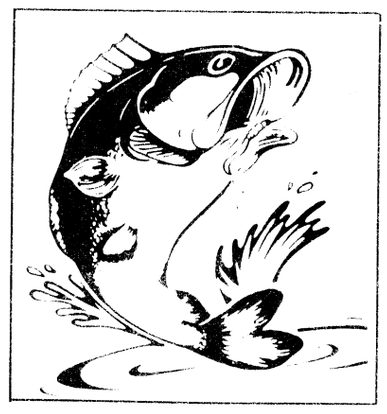
This field is in terrible condi- . The game should be can- d," said Brandon Wigg of Co "If we can keep from sliding und too much, we should win game."

We've been on so many mitments, we haven't had to practice very much ly," said Jeff Hanson of Echo's team. "But with a little luck, we should be able to pull off this game."

Early in the game, it became easy to see that the wet field would have a big impact on the outcome. In the first inning, Co. E outfielders couldn't keep their feet on the ground, and they let four singles get by. Then, Richard Barlow's double brought in the runners, giving Co. C an early lead, 4-0.

In the top of the second inning, Charging Charlie began to expand their lead as Keith Ferrell hit a double to bring in two more runs. In the bottom of the second inning, Co. E, down by eight runs, knew it would have to get on the board to keep the game alive. With two outs, things didn't look very promising for the Eagles until Daryl Randall approached the plate and smashed the ball out of the park for a home run. The inning ended at 8-1.

"I was hoping my homer would start a rally, but we just couldn't seem to keep it going," said Randall. "But at least I was able to keep the game alive."



In the third and fourth innings, Charging Charlie increased their lead by five runs on the strength of a string of singles. But with their chances dwindling, Echo's Eagles rallied in the bottom of the forth. With one man on first, Jason Gamble hit a triple which seemed to get things moving for the team. After a few more singles Bradley Myers hit a triple to bring the runners home. The score was 13-6 at the bottom of the fourth inning.

During the fifth inning, both teams added one run to their scores, and in the sixth, Charlie added another.

"For an undeveloped team and bad field conditions, we played fantastic," said Richard Mosher of Co C. "Echo's team just made to many costly errors."

"Between the wet field and our lack of practice, we couldn't seem to stop making errors," said Jeff Page of Co E.

Hot, hazy days not best time for fishing

By Aaron Pass
PM Editorial Services

Dog days, the doldrums, the summer slump — call it what you will — the hot, hazy days of midsummer are not noted for great fishing. The species doesn't much matter. Bass, walleye, trout, crappie, whatever, all seem to be "off their feed."

In a way, this is true. The voracious feeding and spawning activity of spring is past, and the upswing of autumn angling is still some time away. The popular misconception is that the fish have quit feeding and "gone deep" to avoid the heat.

But the fish have not quit eating; fish feed all summer long. They have gone deep, but this is only partially to avoid the heat. Light is their, and your, real problem.

Most game fish dislike intense light, particularly the type penetrating deeply into the water from a high-angle, midday midsummer sun. If deep, dark waters are available, the fish will go there for relief. Otherwise they will seek shade in another form. Knowing this and what to do about it is the key to summer fishing success.

Of course, one way to beat the heat (and light) is to go deep as well. Deep jigging, deep trolling (lead lines, down riggers) and other deep-water tactics will put your bait down with the fish. Most of these tactics require cumbersome and/or specialized equipment, but they do work.

Another method, which employs more conventional gear and tactics, is to think like the fish and avoid the light. Fish early in the morning and late in the evening when the angle of the sun's rays do not penetrate so deeply into the water. In many cases and for many species, fishing at night is the answer. Be warned, however, that night fishing is not as easy as it sounds. Even tying a lure on your line is a major task in the dark, not to mention navigation. Go with an expert and note what equipment and techniques are de rigueur for after-hours angling.

For daytime fishing, remember that fish seek shade. Floating mats of aquatic vegetation and the shady side of weeds and brush piles are good bets. Boat docks, bridge abutments, piers and other structures that cast a shadow on the water are well worth a try.

Cloudy, rainy days are the summer angler's friend. Not only do they cut down the light level, but they also discourage the "fun-in-the-sun" crowd, particularly the water skiers. A good summer freshet cools the water and washes in food (insects, worms) from the shore. This can get the fish into a feeding mood.

Another big advantage to rain is that it murks up the water. Summer waters are often the clearest of the year. This water clarity makes the light factor more troublesome and the fish more easily spooked.

Finally, go with lighter test lines and smaller lures in clear water. Sure, you may lose a few fish, but isn't that better than no action at all?

SPIRITUAL

Chaplains have rich history

By Debra Galle
USAIC Chaplain's Office

Early settlers in Massachusetts and Connecticut were involved in a desperate campaign against the Pequot Indians in 1637. Soldiers with make-shift uniforms and weapons left wives, children and parents to go fight and die. In the middle of a battle, a wounded soldier cried out in despair, "Preacher!" Soon, a minister was by his side offering comfort and companionship. Two ministers were with these early settlers in new America. They represent the beginning of the history of Army chaplaincy.

This history is colorful and began with the birth of our nation. In 1758, the colony of Virginia was served by civilian chaplains and George Washington was known to fill in as a chaplain when none were available during his campaign. Chaplains were with Washington as he crossed the Delaware and beside him during the bloody battle of Yorktown.

It was George Washington, when serving as chairman for a committee to draft rules and regulations for the U.S. Army, who urged employing ministers in the military.

The Continental Congress gave its approval and clergymen were recruited and brought into the Army as captains, complete with a $20-a-month salary.

On July 29, 1775, the military chaplaincy was officially established.

Sixteen years later, after the formation of Congress, the president and the senate were empowered to recruit clergymen as chaplains.

They were first hired to serve in many other capacities other than spiritual ministries. Some began as mess officers, legal counselors, librarians, adjutants and recreational officers.

In the 1840s, they "performed the duties of schoolmaster" at Army posts as required by law. Some operated post exchanges, ran mail post offices and sold war bonds.

More than 3,686 chaplains served on both sides of a divided nation during the Civil War.

During World War I, 363 chaplains served on active duty.

When the extreme value of clergy in the military was recognized, a Chief of Chaplains office was formed in 1920. This office was headquarters for the many growing religious programs of the Army.

During World War II, the churches stated emphatically the spiritual responsibilities and vital importance of the chaplains. Nearly 8,000 chaplains served during that war, 51 were killed in action and 76 were wounded.

During the Korean War, 1,600 chaplains served in the Army, 13 died and 26 were wounded.

Army chaplains faithfully carried out their duties during the Vietnam conflict, transported by helicopter to reach soldiers wherever they fought.

Today, there are more than 800 chapels on military installations in the United States and abroad. Approximately 1,500 chaplains serve in the Army Chaplain Corps.

An Army chaplain still has a dual function – serving not only as a spiritual minister but as a soldier in all capacities.

Chaplains in ranger battalions are physically and mentally prepared for the same challenges as the troops to whom they minister. Many chaplains are airborne qualified and serve in all aspects of military functions.

The chaplains' motto, "Pro Deo et Patria," means "For God and Country." Throughout the history of the United States of America, clergy have offered their special talents to the men and women of the armed forces.

Chaplains celebrate 214th anniversary

Correction

In the July 21 edition of the Bayonet, the "Soldiers baptized at ITC pond" story stated, "In the past year, the ITC has averaged more than 30 young soldiers making decisions on their Christian lives." It should have read, "more than 30 young soldiers per week. . ."

Relationship with God improves family relations

By Gregory Kimble
USAIC Chaplain's Office

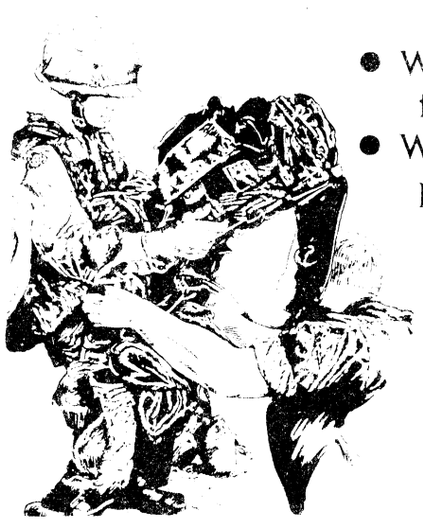
The summer months often find families gathering for reunions and visits. The term "family" means that which is familiar and having common origin and knowledge.

The Holy Bible tells us that God said, "Let us make men. . ." (Gen. 1:26). The narrative goes on to describe the gift of the woman Eve to Adam. This begins the institution of the family.

The account of their children, Abel and Cain, is an example of poor family relations. Cain killed his brother because of conceit, envy and jealousy.

What does it take to promote an atmosphere for building better family relationships?

Positive attributes ready the environment for healthy relations. There are no positive influences greater than the fruits of the spirit — love, joy, peace, patience, kindness, goodness, faithfulness, gentleness and self-control. Relationships built on the fruits of the spirit can survive.



Not only should the atmosphere be right for building better relationships, but we should not overlook the conditions for better relationships.

The conditions for good relationships begin with one basic truth: a right relationship with everyone begins with a right relationship with God.

The book of Acts tells us in Cornelius, "He and all his family were devout and God-fearing; he gave generously to those in need and prayed to God regularly." (Acts 10:2) A family with a right relationship with God will relate better to one another because God is love. (This quotation uses the term "God-fearing", which means to give reverence to God.)

This basic truth sets a foundation for building family relationships. A right relationship with God brings the fruits of His Spirit with the end product of better family relations.

Koalas make their debut at Tampa's Busch Gardens

Busch Gardens

TAMPA, Fla. — Two furry koalas have made their public debut at Busch Gardens, a family entertainment park and one of the nation's top zoos.

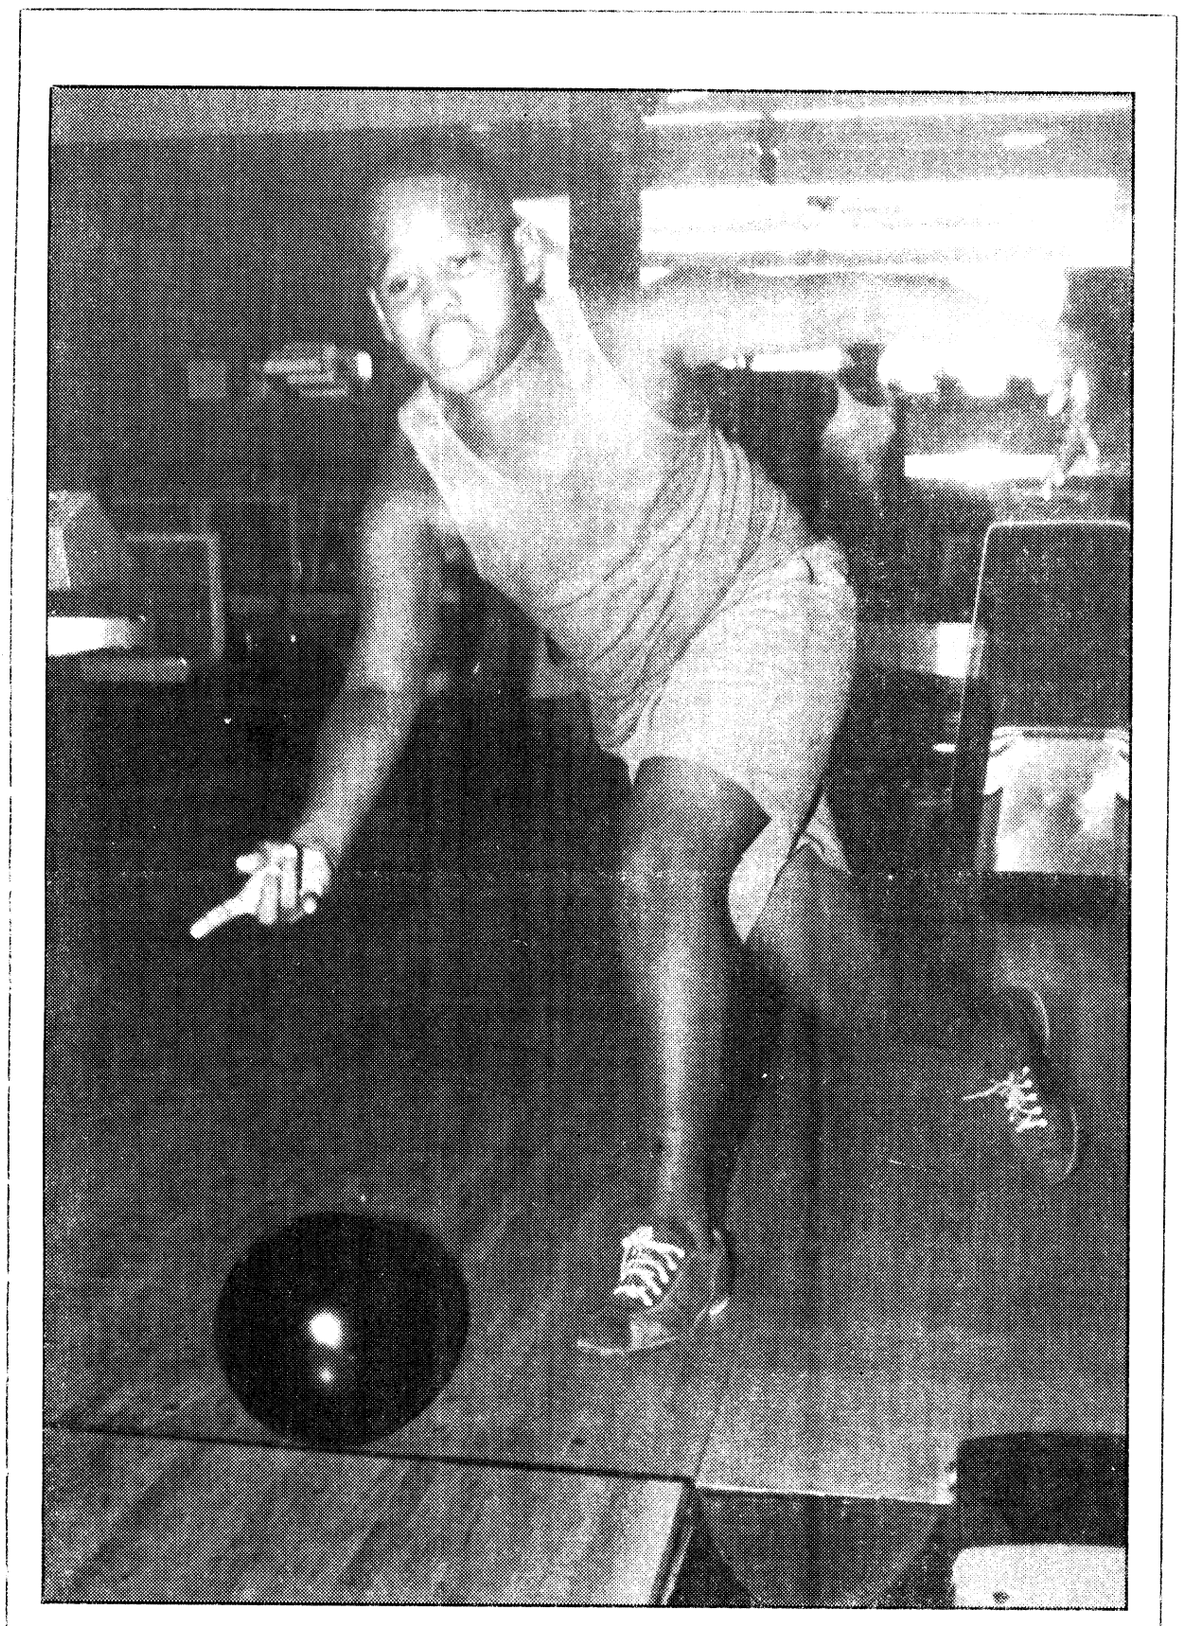
Koobor, an 11-year-old male, and Mueseli, a 5-year-old female, are at home in a large animal habitat formerly occupied by giant pandas. The two koalas are at Busch Gardens on an indefinite breeding loan from the San Diego Zoo.

"We are very excited about this opportunity to provide our guests with information about koalas," said Joseph C. Fincher, general manager of Busch Gardens. "Although conservation efforts and laws have contributed to a steady increase in the number of koalas, many people have never seen these beautiful and highly revered creatures."

Before European settlement in Australia, koalas were present in the millions throughout he continent's southeastern forests. The animals then were hunted for their fur, which brought the species nearly to the point of extinction. Since the 1920s, conservation efforts and laws have helped the koalas to make a comeback despite their low birth rate and losses due to disease.

Busch Gardens and the San Diego Zoo have been working together to facilitate the koalas' move to the park. Busch Gardens sent members of its zoo staff to San Diego to learn about the care and breeding of koalas, and a San Diego Zoo representative spent several weeks at the Tampa park to help with the transition.

The koala exhibit at Busch Gardens features the two koalas as well as Dama wallabies and rose-breasted cockatoos. Because of their solitary nature, the koalas each have their own living areas separated by glass. Each area has two eucalyptus trees for climbing and sleeping and several varieties of eucalyptus branches for munching. The wallabies and rose-breasted cockatoos are featured among rock formations, sand, ground covering, logs and trees.



Inside the exhibit, guests can observe the animals from a slow-moving people-mover or an elevated gallery. Original paintings by park artist Lyn Ash, an educational video and other informative materials are also presented to visitors at the koala exhibit.

Located on Busch Boulevard, two miles east of I-275 and two miles west of I-75, Busch Gardens is open daily from 9:30 a.m. to 6 p.m., except during summer and selected holidays when hours are extended.

ENERGY USE

A topic of everyone's concern

By Becky Ray
Energy Branch

Issues of energy budgets and national security aside, the environmental impact of our nation's wasteful use of energy and natural resources is becoming a heated topic across boardroom tables and coffee tables alike.

A new environmental consciousness is rapidly evolving, with topics of acid rain, global warming and atmospheric ozone holes grabbing headlines on a regular basis.

Responsible utilities, industries and governments are becoming aware that these problems are realities.

Like the famous ozone hole, they're growing.

The nation at last seems to be coming to the conclusion that unless changes are made, we'll do severe and possibly permanent damage to Earth.

President Bush's recent clean air proposal is a step in the right direction.

This proposal, aimed at reducing pollution from utilities and automobiles, could play a major role in solving a few of our more pressing environmental ailments.

Increases in recycling of aluminum, glass and paper are encouraging, as are new advances in plastics recycling.

Industries are becoming responsive to a growing consumer demand that the products they buy be safe for the environment.

But the burden of cleaning up the environment can't be placed solely on industries and utilities.

Individuals also control their impact on the environment through the use of energy and all other natural resources.

For instance, the seemingly insignificant act of throwing a can in the trash means 95 percent of the energy and raw materials that were used to manufacture the can are wasted because the can isn't recycled.

Electricity needed to replace the can could be generated from burning coal, adding to sulfur dioxide emissions, which cause acid rain.

The can will also take up rapidly decreasing landfill space.

Individual demands for petroleum products increase the risk of accidents such as oil spills.

Our growing thirst for oil also threatens some of the most beautiful and pristine parts of our nation, such as the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge.

Although it's encouraging to see big energy and natural resource users take responsibility for environmental concerns, we as individuals should be responsible in making wise choices in the marketplace and in our lifestyles.

We're all ultimately responsible for condition of our water, air and land.

Thurman bids farewell to Benning

Gen. Maxwell R. Thurman
Former commander
Training and Doctrine Command

By Shawn Bryson
Bayonet staff writer

Gen. Maxwell R. Thurman, former commander of the Training and Doctrine Command, was honored by soldiers and civilians from all over Fort Benning in a farewell ceremony July 28 in front of Building 4.

Thurman, who served as the TRADOC commander for two of his 36-year Army career, was to make the visit here his last before his retirement.

However, President George Bush recently called on Thurman to serve his country at least two more years. Bush singled Thurman out to be the commander of the Southern Command in Panama. But, Thurman said the Senate has yet to determine where he'll serve.

How does the general feel about the delayed retiremen!? Thurman said "I do whatever the government asks me to do." He said he has thoroughly enjoyed the 36 years and looks forward to continued service.

Thurman commented on the status of the quality of life programs of the Army and continuing cuts to the Department of Defense budget.

"There are going to be budget reductions, no ifs, ands or buts," he said. "But there's going to be enough money for community support activities simply because we happen to be a married Army." He said nearly 60 percent of the Army's soldiers are married and "we must continue to support the community activities business."

Thurman said the main way to keep ambitious young soldiers is for the Army to promote fully the ranks it is authorized to promote. He said the Army knows how to recruit and that the G.I. Bill and Army College Fund are two of the best recruiting tools being used.

He noted a flaw in the recruitment system saying "We're restricted (by congress) on the number of troops we can bring in on a two-year tour of duty, and, therefore, bonus money or college incentive money cannot be used for combat service support (personnel). It can only be used for combat arms." He said that cost the Army about 5,000 high-quality people last year. "We want congress to let us go back to managing it."

Thurman, who has brought much visibility to U.S. School of the Americas, said the school is on a "success path" and that it will bring "aggrandizement" to itself. "I've had an abiding interest in Latin America...and one of my contributions to assisting in Latin America as the TRADOC commander would be to make sure this school was operating at the very top drawer," Thurman said.

A definite date has not been set for Thurman's departure. He was one of the original members of the TRADOC team when it formed in 1973 and has had five tours with the command.

"I do want to say to the citizens of Phenix City and Columbus that the relationship between Fort Benning and those two great cities, and all of Georgia and Alabama, is unique in our system and is probably one of the best (relationships) in the country between any Army post and surrounding area," Thurman said.

ACOE team commends post's excellence

In search of the best

By Shawn Bryson
Bayonet staff writer

The Army Communities of Excelence team from the Training and Doctrine Command came to Fort Benning last week in search of excellence and, according to its team leader, excellence was found.

The six-man team, made up of five soldiers, officer and enlisted, and one civilian, communicated its satisfaction with the overall looks of Fort Benning.

"We're not here on a witch hunt," said Col. Dominic Ruggerio, team leader. "We came to recognize great people and great efforts."

Recognize they did, as team members passed out dozens of hats of excellence to people all over the Fort Benning community, both in on-the-spot visits around post, and during the out briefing July 27.

Ruggerio said the team didn't have to look hard to find excellence during its three-day stay at the Home of the Infantry. He said visitors to Benning should get a good taste of excellence. "All along the road network at Fort Benning, the flowers and greenery make for a great first impression," Ruggerio said.

After using their first day here to travel around and get a feel for the post, the team members began the formal portion of the inspection.

One thing the team noticed, according to Ruggerio, was the post's ACOE logo. "We observed the Fort Benning communities of excellence logo on a number of signs, and that's a real innovative approach to instilling the competition," he said. "Benning is the first community that has a logo."

The team divided up and visited a variety of places during its stay, including the Henry Caro Noncommissioned Officer Academy, Red Cloud Range, the Main NCO Club, Army Air Force Exchange Service facilities, training institutions such as the Collins Center, soldiers' barracks and dining facilities, to name a few.

The team put the NCO Academy high atop its list of excellence at Benning. "I'll be honest," Ruggerio said, "the NCO academy is probably the finest I've seen in my 27 years (in the Army)."

Photographers accompanied the team and took pictures of the excellence noticed by the team members. The photographs were used in a slide presentation at the out briefing and will be used to compare Benning to other TRADOC posts.

This year, according to Kay O'Brien, chief of productivity, Directorate of Resource Management, the evaluation team is grading each of TRADOC's 17 installations only on the basis of appearence. She said the team expects to also concentrate on services next year.

"It's obvious at Fort Benning, that the ACOE program is well entrenched," Ruggerio said.

Fort Benning was the eighth post visited by the team so far this year. The overall TRADOC results are expected later in the year.

Garrett takes over as Fort Benning's top NCO

By Agatha H. James
Bayonet staff writer

Command Sgt. Maj. Edward E. Garrett became the U.S. Army Infantry Center's top noncommissioned officer Monday, following a departure ceremony for outgoing Command Sgt. Maj. Autrail Cobb.

Garrett comes to Fort Benning's top enlisted position from the the Infantry Training Center where he was the command sergeant major.

The Bayonet asked the post's new command sergeant major his ideas about his new position.

What are the duties of a post's command sergeant major; what does the job entail?

The command sergeant major of a post is the eyes and ears of the commander. He (oversees) the enlisted soldiers' morale, discipline and training.

What differences are there in being a division sergeant major and being the post command sergeant major?

Basically, there is a lot of commonality. Of course, the higher a position, the more responsibility that goes along with it.

As you reflect on your 32-year military career, how have the roles and duties of noncommissioned officers changed?

Noncommissioned officers' duties have changed tremendously over the past 30 years.

In the '50s, I saw sergeants in the basic drilling, marching, disciplining and follow-me type training modes.

Then, along came the '60s and the Vietnam conflict, which we were not fully prepared for at the mid-supervision level.

The Army realized this and, as a result, quickly produced the "shake and bake" or instant NCOs. These were competent (enlisted) soldiers who were knowledgeable and well versed about the applications of warfare on paper and on drill fields. But, their application of that warfare on the battlefield didn't measure up to expectations and standards, so they fell short of the mark in providing for the total Army.

The '70s gave us the modern, volunteer Army, where we (NCOs) were criticized and chastised by officers who thought we were not competent in our jobs.

Then came the '80s, and it suddenly dawned on (Army officials) that for 30 years NCOs had not measured up to standards. That's not my opinion; that just seemed to be the general consensus. But, many (people) felt the NCO had not measured up to standards.

However, I lived through those 30 years, so I feel qualified to say the technical competency and expertise of NCOs today does meet standards, and

Meeting to discuss Flying Club; Building 4, Thursday

A meeting to discuss the possibility of re-establishing a Flying Club at Fort Benning will be held in Building 4, Room 50, Thursday at 5:30 p.m. For more information, call 545-7357.

CIF begins issuing drill instructor hats

Effective immediately, drill instructor hats will no longer be issued or exchanged at the Clothing Initial Issue Point, building 3020. Initial issue and direct exchanges will be accomplished at the Central Issue Facility, Main Post, building 234.

Initial issue of two hats will be accomplished in conjunction with OCIE turn-in by Drill Instructor Course graduates. Direct exchanges will be made Mondays and Thursdays of each week between 7 a.m. and 2 p.m. Drill instructors are required to bring the duplicate copy of their OCIE Record (DA Form 3645) to CIF when requesting direct exchanges.

Water, air conditioning outages affect Benning areas

There will be a water outage for Building 69 Aug. 14, 9 a.m. through 3 p.m., to tie in a sprinkler system. The following buildings will also be affected: buildings 67, 71, 85, 107, 108, 122, 128, 214, 215, 248, 329, 1689, 1690, 1692, 1693, 1710, 1711, 1712 and 1730. The outage is also expected to affect air conditioning in buildings 1711, 1712 and 1713.

Athletic examinations at Winder Health Clinic

Preseason athletic examinations for high school students will be offered at Winder Health Clinic Monday and Aug. 28 from 1 to 4 p.m.

A physician will be available from 4 to 5 p.m. to discuss and answer questions concerning athletic conditioning.

Family members participating in organized athletics may call 544-3855/3919 if an examination is required. Appointments will be made on a first-come, first-served basis.

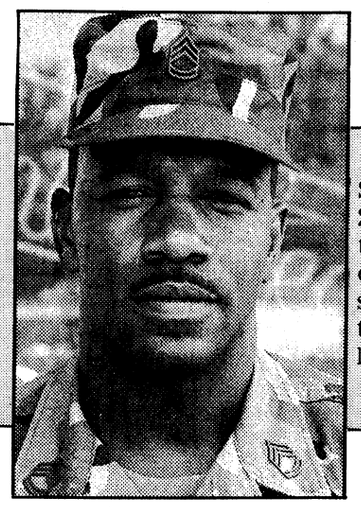
Eye care available at Martin Army

Complete eye care services are available for Active Duty personnel and limited services are available for retirees and family members at the Optometry Clinic of Martin Army Hospital,.

For active duty soldiers, same-day appointments are provided by calling the clinic appointment lines, 544-3041/3042/3043, at 8:30 a.m. Monday through Friday.

Complete eye care services are available except for contact lens prescriptions and fittings. This limitation is due to the current manpower shortage for optometrists.



For retirees and family members, routine eye examinations are not available. Limited eye care such as glaucoma screening checks are available on a walk-in basis. Some specialized eye care involving eye disease, infections or injuries is available but only by referral.

It should be pointed out that retirees are authorized one pair of military glasses each year. To obtain these glasses, bring a current spectacles prescription to Room 15 at the Optometry Clinic.

The optometrists and staff of the Optometry Clinic at MACH are committed to providing quality eye care for the military community at Fort Benning. In evidence of this commitment, the clinic has completed a recent accreditation inspection by the Council on Clinical Optometric Care of the American Optometric Association. Such efforts will be continued so that the high level of care provided will be maintained.

OPINION

VARIOUS VOICES: How do you feel about the Supreme Court's decision on flag burning?

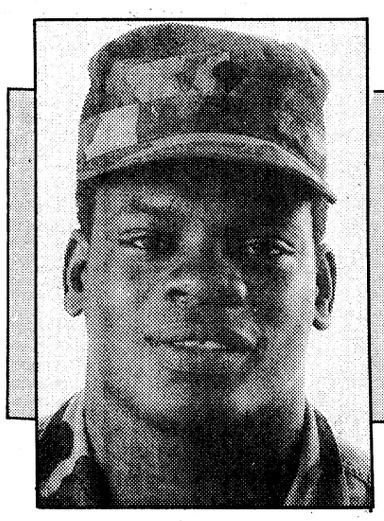
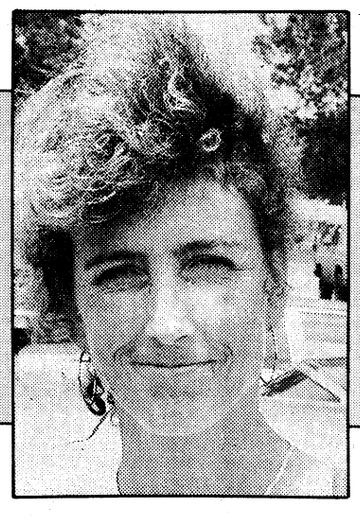
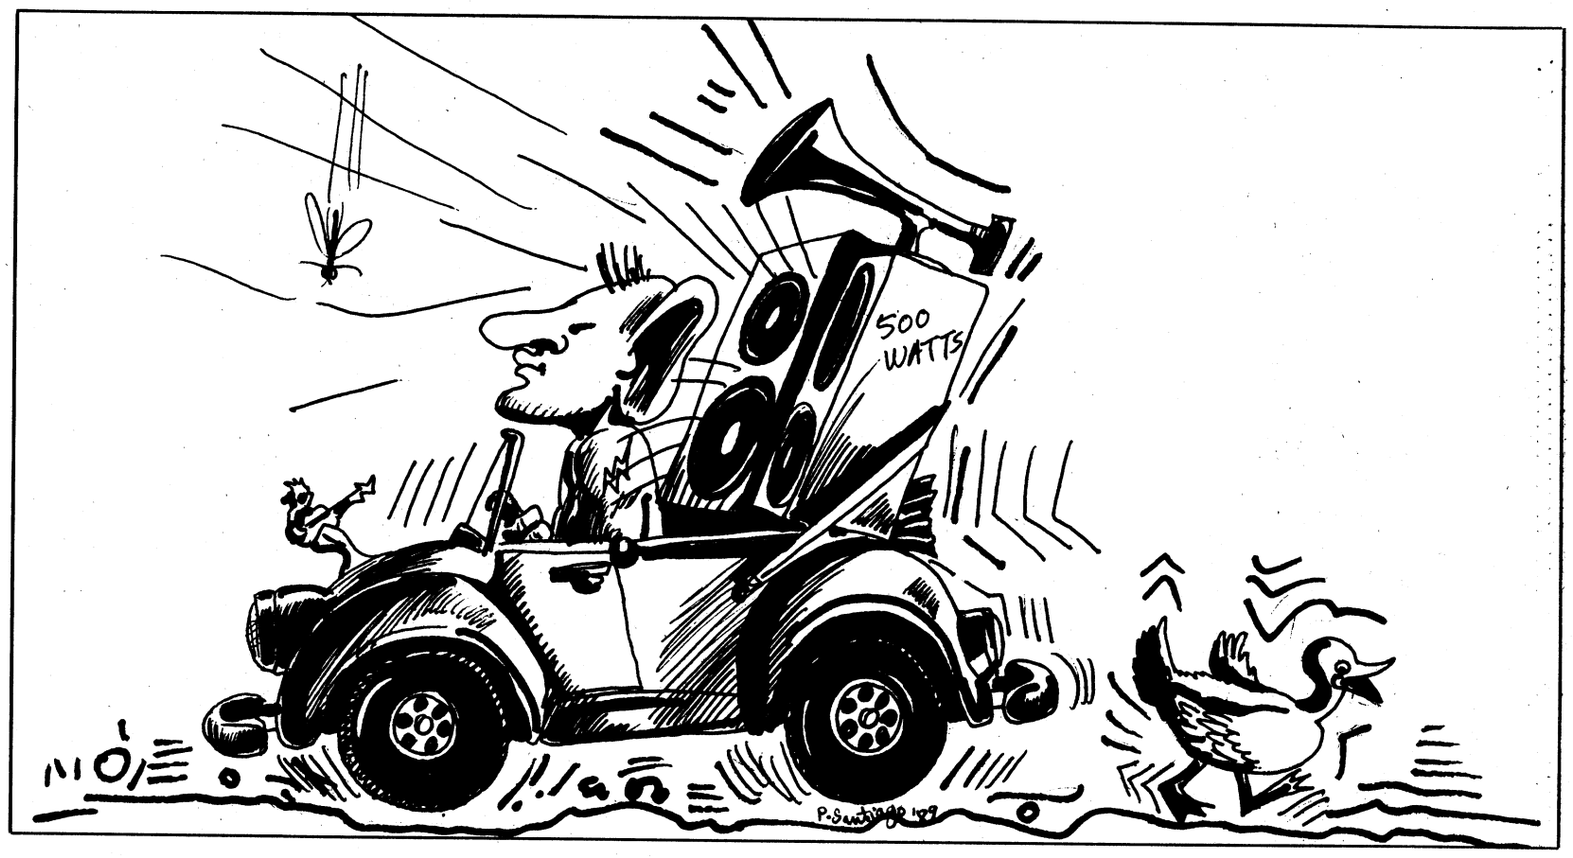
Sgt. 1st Class Willie Snow, Co. B, 2nd Bn., 29th Inf. Regt. — "I think it's a disgrace to this country that our legal system says it's okay to burn the flag. I think it's unconstitutional to allow people to burn the flag."



Mariana Gracia, family member — "I don't think it's right to burn the symbol of this country. People should respect it."



1st Lt. Gregory Gaweda, Co. C, 1st Bn., 11th Inf. Regt. — "I think saying that someone is burning the flag to express themselves is like me going out and shooting someone to express myself. It's not right to do that, and it's not right to burn the flag."



Willie Thomas, Youth Services — "I have mixed feelings about the situation. I think that if someone has to burn the flag to prove a point then so be it. But, on the other hand, if someone else is going to get arrested for removing the same symbol off a flagpole then the person burning the flag should be arrested, too."

Spec. Frankie Delesline, Co. A, 43rd Eng. Bn., 36th Eng. Grp. — "I think it's a disgrace. There are a lot of people who fought for the flag and for the freedom for which it stands."

Ellen Carrick, family member — "I'd rather they didn't allow them to burn the flag."

Billy Bob suffers melt down on Beallwood Connector

By Clyde Snively
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Billy Bob is s specialist assigned to the 29th Infantry. He's typical of most infantry soldiers out there — he likes what he's doing and is enthusiastic about doing it.

He's the kind of troop all squad leaders want to have in their squads because, in addition to being motivated, he's smart. In fact, he's an electronics whiz.

On duty, he gives 110 percent. Off duty, he believes in being free. Freedom to Billy Bob is his Trans Am, consisting of an engine two seats and a stereo system. When he cranks that sucker up, the sides of the car pulsate. It's like the darn thing's breathing, the sides heaving in and out with each boom of the bass.

Billy Bob treats his car like a fisherman treats a rappala. He uses it as a lure to attract girls — obviously deaf girls.

Well, the other day, he was trolling the sea by Carmike Cinema, not having learned his lesson from a ranger a few weeks earlier. His woofers were woofing and his tweeters were tweeting and the concrete was breaking loose from the theater.

The manager didn't like the scene, so he called the police. They hauled Billy Bob off to jail, charging him with being a public nuisance.

Naturally, I was curious as to why Billy Bob played his car stereo so loudly, so I asked him.

"Billy Bob, why do you turn that infernal machine up so loud? You want to go deaf?"

"Ehh?" he asked, cupping his hand to his ear.

"Why in tarnation do you play your car stereo so loud?" I yelled, already knowing the answer to the question.

"Girls, man, girls," he shouted back.

"Do loud stereos really attract girls?" I asked, wondering what a rig like that would cost.

"Oh, they notice you all right," he said.

"But will they actually get into a car with you with that thing blasting away?" I persisted.

"Once in a while," he admitted. "But when they do, hey, that's when this set up pays for itself," he said, eyes gleaming.

"Oh," I said, lascivious thoughts running through my mind.

"Yeah," he continued. "With that thing blasting away, I don't need to worry about carrying on a conversation. See girls make me nervous. I get tongue-tied. I can never think of anything to say. So with my stereo cranking out 165 amps per, I can just tool about town with some good-looking gal at my side. I'm the envy of all the guys in the unit when they see me."

I couldn't believe he'd risk paying a fine, or even jail time if he didn't have the bucks to get out, just so he could vibrate the buildings while driving with a girl whose name he probably never learned because the boom-ba-da-booms (I also noticed he didn't play music, just boom-ba-da-booms) were too loud to talk.

Well, Billy Bob needn't worry any more. His story came to an inglorious end the other night as he was cruising the Beallwood Connector, a blond at his side, her long hair billowing behind in the night air.

Nope, it wasn't cops or a jealous boyfriend with a shotgun. Seems that whoever wired his rig, didn't do it quite right — melt down on the connector. Five thousand dollars worth of car, five thousand dollars worth of amps and woofs and tweets, bubbled in a pool of melted metal in the passing lane of the Beallwood Connector. Insurance? Are you kidding? What 20-year-old can afford comprehensive for that kind of set up.

Car paid for? No way. Now, he needs to learn to walk and maybe even talk again.

By the way, Columbus isn't the only place that believes sound should be limited to those within a few feet. Fort Benning has that law on the books as does the city of Savannah.

DEAR EDITOR

The Battle Dress Uniform has been out for about seven years now, and I have about 25 sets.

If you wash them, they fade. If you starch them, they fade and tear. The top is always lighter than the bottom. They're hot as (a *%¢$ in the summer and worthless in the winter.

A set of BDUs only lasts an average of four months. Then they fade. The Army gives you about $16.50 per month for clothing costs, which totals about $179 per year. A set of BDUs costs $37.

When they're worn out or looking like a pair of cook whites, you can't wear them for fashion on post. After a while, you have more sets of BDUs than you can believe.

My question is, can they be DXed (turned in) for recycle or is this my 20-year present from the Army. What do other soldiers at Fort Benning have to say about this.

P.S. Out of 10 pockets on the uniform, you only use maybe four.

Staff Sgt. Danny Barker
HQ, 1st Bn., 11th Inf.

Sergeant Barker

First I'll answer your question, then I'll tell you what I found out about the Battle Dress Uniform.

No. You cannot DX your uniforms. They're yours to keep. You may treat them just as you would your other clothing.

From what I read in your letter, I think most of your problem is linked to your method of cleaning the uniforms.

I'm not sure whether you're making reference to the Temperate Weather or Hot Weather uniform or both, so I'll tell you what FM 21-15 recommends for cleaning both.

Assuming you or your spouse clean your uniforms, the FM recommends:

- Temperate Weather Uniform, made of 50-percent nylon and 50-percent cotton twill — synthetic fabrics should be washed in lukewarm water with mild soap or detergent. Do not use hot water or harsh soap.
- Hot Weather Uniform, made of 100-percent ripstop cotton — cotton should be washed in hot water.

I disagree strongly with using hot water for the Hot Weather Uniform.

Most people know from experience that washing cotton in hot water is a definite no no. Hot water will not only enhance any problems with fading, but it will also cause the material to shrink. Additionally, hot water will cause the material to wrinkle more than ever.

If the BDUs are washed at home, do yourself a favor and wash and rinse the uniforms in lukewarm water regardless of whether they're Temperate or Hot Weather uniforms.

Now, assuming you send your uniforms to a professional cleaners to be cleaned, which many soldiers do, there is still a way to ensure your BDUs are properly cared for. In your letter, you mentioned that if you starch the uniform, it fades and tears. Quite frankly, you're not supposed to starch them, but I shouldn't have to tell you that. Good old AR 670-1 states very plainly, "uniforms may be pressed but not starched." If you're starching them or sending them to a cleaners to be starched, then you can't expect the Army to look upon your complaint with compassion once it finds out you've done what you specifically have been instructed not to do.

Many cleaners will starch your uniforms unless you give them instructions not to do so. If you don't let them know not to starch your uniforms, then you'll have to suffer the consequences.

As far as the sets of BDUs that have a lighter top than bottom, I'm assuming you mean lighter in color. That happened to me once when I broke up a set. The top was worn a couple of times with a different pair of pants. The top was also washed a couple of times more than the pants that originally went with the top. The end result was the top was a little more faded than the pants.

All I can recommend is buy BDUs as a set, wear them as a set and clean them as a set. If you do that, they should remain very close to the same color.

If that was not the case, then you may have bought a defective set of BDUs. Mistakes do happen. If so, they should have been returned right away to the clothing sales store. The store requires that if uniforms are brought in to be returned or exchanged, you can't have washed or worn the uniforms or had anything sewn on them.

Thank you Staff Sergeant Barker for writing in.

Anyone who has any further suggestions on his dilemma is welcome to send a letter to Editor, Building 4, Room 601, Fort Benning, Ga. 31905.

P.S. While you may only use four of the 10 pockets now, imagine how useful they would be if your were in combat and having to carry everything you own with you.

Infantry Training Center

ITC Command Sgt. Maj. anxious to tackle responsibilities

By Marilyn Balzarini
Infantry Training Center

The new command sergeant major of the Infantry Training Center is anxious to tackle the responsibilities that go along with being the top enlisted soldier of a major Fort Benning command.

William Mayo

Command Sgt. Maj. William Mayo replaced Command Sgt. Maj. Edward Garrett at the Infantry Training Center July 29.

Mayo, whose last assignment was command sergeant major of the 30th Adjutant General Battalion, brings 29 years of experience to the job. He has held positions as command sergeant major of Fort Monroe, Va., and command sergeant major of 1st Brigade, 2nd Infantry Division, in Korea.

Mayo is also a combat veteran and has been awarded the Silver Star, the Bronze Star, the Purple Heart and the Republic of Vietnam Cross of Gallantry for his service in Vietnam.

Mayo shared his views on a number of subjects. He said he feels that standardizing routine taskings and activities is one of the biggest challenges he faces. "Capitalizing on the innovation of my predecessor," Mayo said is another.

"My most important role is that of mentor. Good and positive advice must be readily available to soldiers," Mayo said about his role at the ITC.

Involving family members in the ITC mission is one of Mayo's goals. "Families need to know what happens at the ITC and how important their soldiers' roles are to that mission." He said he believes family involvement is the best remedy for stress, especially for drill sergeants. "A supportive family can do a great deal to reduce stress," Mayo said.

Mayo intends to support the Army's Year of the NCO by giving ITC soldiers every opportunity to improve both their military and civilian educations. Also, he wants to give the NCOs a bigger role in the planning phase of infantry training. "The drill sergeants know the training needs of their soldiers better than anyone else," Mayo said.

According to Mayo, working as a team is the most valuable lesson Army trainers can teach an infantry soldier.

"Operating as a team is essential to successfully completing any mission," Mayo said. He added that instilling in new soldiers a greater sense of pride in the history of the Army and its customs and traditions is important. "We need to make new soldiers understand the importance of their role in national defense," he said.

Many people think we (NCOs) are at the apex of our competency. Well, I say we're not. I say we need to continue to be consistent in measuring up to standards throughout the '80s and stay on firm ground. Our consistency will take us into the year 2000 and beyond to lock in the perception and the clear understanding that (NCOs) are what (NCOs) are suppose to be. In every area — training and discipline — we need to be consistent.

What are your goals for the post?

One of my goals is to increase proficiency and technical expertise of all the noncommissioned officers associated with Fort Benning.

If we are required to train infantrymen to do battle, we just can't simply ask a guy to give up his life in battle and not equip him with all the tools to do battle. In order for us to do that, we have to train him exceptionally well, and that means we, ourselves, have to be trained exceptionally well.

Another goal I have is to ensure that every unit on the installation is given due recognition for accomplishments.

What message do you have for NCOs everywhere?

Be consistent in meeting standards, enforce standards and accept nothing less.

How do you feel about being selected command sergeant major for Fort Benning?

I am quite familiar with Fort Benning. If there is any one installation that we would consider home, Fort Benning is it.

I have a daughter that was born at Martin Army. My children grew up here and went to school on and off post. We've gone overseas and returned to Fort Benning several times.

In the civilian community, we have quite a few friends.

In performing my duties here as the post sergeant major, I will only be complementing the efforts of others who have trained me.

What are your plans as the post command sergeant major?

I've been in a variety of the units at Fort Benning — the Airborne Department, the 29th, the 197th, ITC, the School — so, I am quite familiar with what takes place here and what we do for the infantry and for the rest of the Army. I just plan to do my best, be a good soldier and make this a better place for soldiers and their families.

This is the year of the NCO; how do you plan to support that theme?

I plan to support it just like I have been supporting it for the past 32 years — by being a good NCO, which in my opinion means being consistent in doing your job with the knowledge you have and ensuring that others who are responsible to you do the same.

Everybody is hung up on the year of the NCO; in my book, it's been the year of the NCO for 31 years. That's how long I've been an NCO. It's just that they (Army officials) decided to recognize us with a specific year.

Garrett has served in a variety of noncommissioned officer leadership position. His assignments include: command sergeant major for 1st Battalion 39th Infantry, 8th Infantry Division; the 5th Transportation Battalion, 101st Airborne and the 24th Infantry Division and the Combined Field Army, 8th Army.

He has served as the commandant of the 8th Infantry Division Noncommissioned Officer Academy. Garrett has attended numerous Army schools and courses including Advanced Noncommissioned Officers Course, the Sergeants Major Academy, Jungle Warfare, Airborne, Air Assault, Pathfinder and the Ranger Course.

His awards and decorations include the Silver Star, Legion of Merit with oak leaf cluster, Bronze Star with "V" Device and oak leaf cluster and the Meritorious Service Medal with 2nd oak leaf cluster. He is the recipient of the Combat Infantrymen's Badge, Master Parachutist Badge, Ranger Tab, Pathfinder Badge and Air Assault Badge.

He and his wife, Lola, have one son and three daughters — Michael, Stephanie, Edna and Lesleigh.

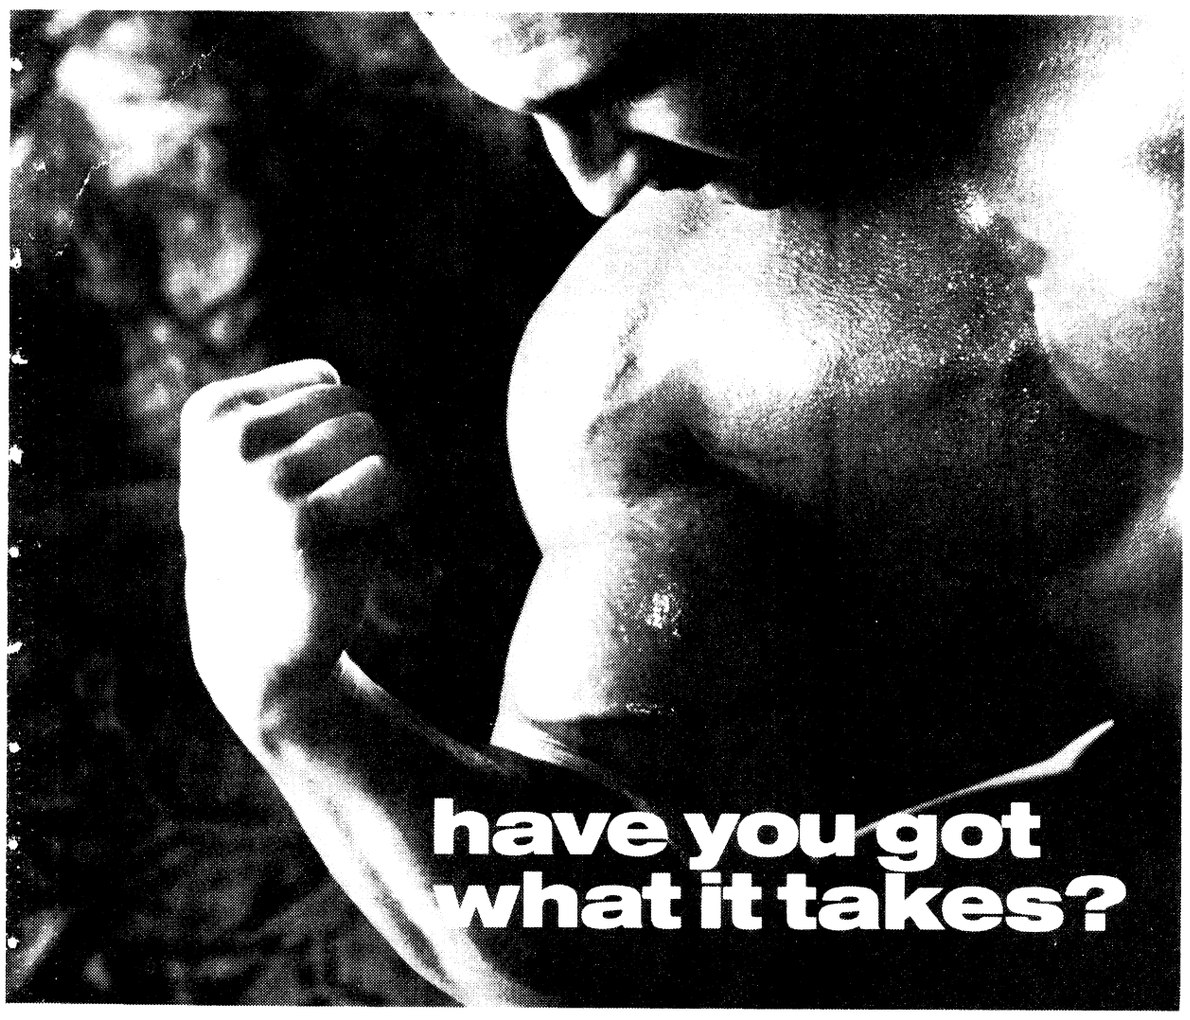
Fellowship status offered to MACH's Col. Brown

Martin Army Community Hospital

H. Dale Brown Jr.

The deputy commander for Administration of Martin Army Community Hospital, Fort Benning, was advanced to Fellowship status in the American College of Health Care Executives at its 55th Convocation Ceremony held July 30, at the Fairmont Hotel in Chicago.

Fellowship is the highest level of professional achievement in the college. With the advancement of Col. H. Dale Brown Jr. to Fellow, Martin Army Community Hospital is one of only four Army hospitals whose chief administrator has achieved that level of professional status.



The college is a Chicago-based international professional society representing more than 22,000 health care executives.

Ceremonies in Chicago marked the 56th anniversary of the group, which was founded in 1933. The college is dedicated to the promotion of excellence in health care administration.

The Convocation also marked the beginning of the society's 55th annual meeting held concurrent with the convention of the American Hospital Association.

Fellows must demonstrate their education, experience and leadership in the health care field over a period of over 10 years. They must also complete a significant project on a subject related to health care management and must have successfully passed a stringent membership examination.

Brown was assigned to Martin Army Community Hospital in June 1988. He was previously assigned to Fort Lewis, Wash., where he served as the commander of the 62nd Medical Group.

Peruvian officers observe IBOC instruction

By Scott Murdoch
2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry

The deputy director of training, Col. Ciero Ilerena, and several other officers from Peru's Military Academy observed the final block of instruction in basic rifle bayonet fighting taught to Infantry Officers Basic Course students recently at the Edwards Bayonet Assault Course.

"The purpose of the Peruvian's visit to Fort Benning was to observe officer and NCO professional development training," said Capt. Danny Denney, IOBC platoon trainer.

"I was impressed with the quality and realistic nature of the training," said Ilerena, speaking through IOBC student, 2nd Lt. Louis Perozo, who acted as interpreter. "I was also impressed by the high degree of motivation in the American officers," Ilerena said.

Representatives of the Peruvian Army were not the only observers in attendance. The IOBC Charlie Company Wives' Club/Association, was also present. The wives were able to watch as their husbands actually negotiated the assault course.

Students response to the presence of their wives was positive.

"I like the idea of my wife watching me train. It really motivates me to do well," said 2nd Lt. Gary Reiger.

The wives club also took the opportunity to have a fund-raising bake sale at the conclusion of the training. Like the assault course, the bake sale was a success, raising more than $270.

All students attending the Infantry Officers Basic Course learn the aggressive techniques of rifle bayonet fighting.

This training is to improve efficiency and confidence in the students' abilities to destroy the enemy in close combat.

The training is divided into two phases. Phase one teaches students the basic offensive and defensive movements of rifle bayonet fighting. During phase two, students apply the basics while negotiating the Edwards Bayonet Assault Course.

The Edwards Bayonet Assault Course is the culmination of hours of student-taught basic rifle bayonet training.

2nd Army PLDC begins its training

81st U.S. Army Reserve Command

"This is no rose garden, but I'll be up front with you all the way," was the terse greeting by Command Sgt. Maj. Steven Foust to the attendees at the Second Army Primary Leadership Development Course being conducted at Fort Benning.

Approximately 100 perspiring soldiers, grades E-5 and below, sat attentively in a nonair-conditioned theater to hear orientation remarks.

Class 1-89 is the first at Fort Benning under Second Army's guidance. The school's commandant said they course has been condensed. They packed 10 days' training into seven, he said.

"There will be some long hours, count on it," the commandant said. "The NCOs are here to help you. We work as a team. Safety is our watchword. So is military courtesy.

The commandant advised the students that they would constantly practice leadership roles in the company area, during a three-day field problem and even during off-duty time.

"The heat, the humidity, and fatigue will always be present. Your efforts at this course will help make the Second Army NCOA credible."

Later, Foust continued his explanation of the NCO school's mission as the troops took a break outside under the pine trees. He projected four seven-day classes here and three 15-day courses during fiscal year '89. The length of the class would vary depending on how much the soldier may have completed at his home station.

Foust said, " I look for 900 people to have attended this school by October 1. We have 29 refurbished buildings at our disposal and two dozen veteran cadre, capable and anxious to help, 24 hours a day."

We have what we need to do the job," said Sgt. 1st Class Bobby Carmickle, the school's chief instructor, "which is lead, train

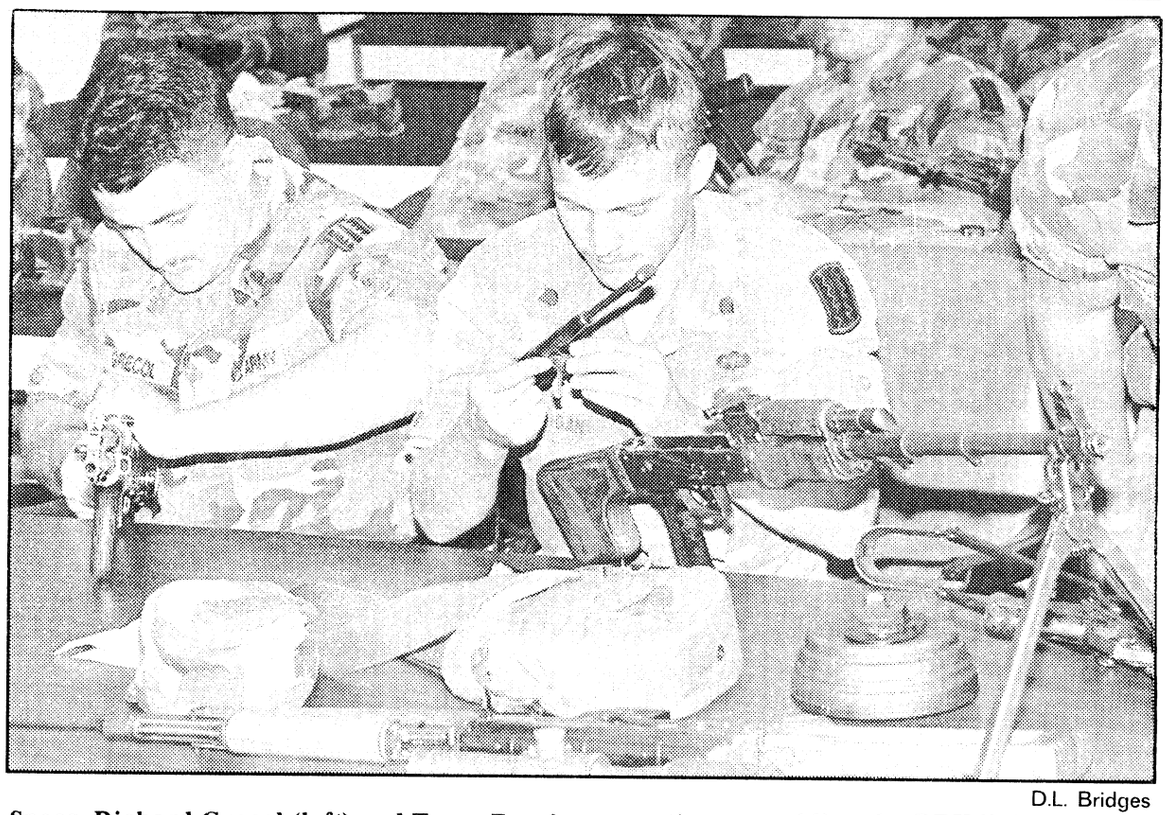
Infantry soldiers study enemy's weapons

By By D.L. Bridges
197th Infantry Brigade

Company D, 2nd Battalion, 18th Infantry soldiers received hands-on training with Soviet-manufactured weapons in a class given by instructors from the Foreign Materials Intelligence Group at the National Training Center, Fort Irwin, Calif., recently.

Co. D is part of a Red Force rotation at the NTC and, while not on desert missions, received training on Soviet, Chinese and North Korean versions of the AK-47 assault rifle, RPK light machine gun and rocket-propelled grenade launchers. The soldiers learned assembly and disassembly, operation and effective employment of the weapons, as well as comparisons to U.S. military weaponry.

"We're the last unit in the military to explicitly test, evaluate and train soldiers on foreign weapon systems," said Staff Sgt. William Robb, FMIG instructor. "We're an integral part of the Opposing Forces at Fort Irwin, and we're available to train deployed soldiers on the weapons."



> "It's always good to know about your enemy's weapons and how to use one, if necessary."
> — Cpl. Vance Zimmer

"Among all the military branches, including the National Guard and Reserve that come here each year, we train about 20,000 to 30,000 on Soviet military equipment, including Soviet vehicles," said Spec. David Marley, FMIG instructor.

For the majority of Co. D soldiers, it was the first time they had trained on — or even held — a Soviet weapon.

"I thought it was good training because I had never trained with Soviet weapons before," said Cpl. Vance Zimmer. "It's always good to know about your enemy's weapons and how to use one, if necessary, on the battlefield."

"Any unit that comes through as opposing forces should take advantage of the opportunity to learn about Soviet lifestyle from intelligence tapes they have here and weapons instruction at FMIG," said Sgt. Cornell Christian.

New stairways allow easy access to sports field

By Willie Hay
197th Infantry Brigade

Folks at Kelley Hill won't have to tramp through the dirt or mud anymore to get to Essebagger Field, the main sports field on the hill, thanks to the efforts of soldiers from the 197th Infantry Brigade's 72nd Engineer Company.

The engineers of 1st Platoon recently constructed three wooden stairways to allow easy access to the field for the soldiers who have unit physical training or play sports there, according to 2nd Lt. Jerry Schafer, platoon leader in charge of the project.

"Family members who come out to cheer for their sponsor's team won't have to worry about losing their footing on the eroded bank, and the stairways are wide enough — 8 feet — to double as extra bleachers," Schafer said.

Another benefit was the cross-training the soldiers received, Schafer pointed out.

"All my soldiers are combat engineers who don't normally deal with this kind of construction, so this was an excellent opportunity for them to get some hands-on experience in this area," he said.

"It's good training for us because we get to see the project through from beginning to end, and the NCOs let each of us take turns using all the tools in our carpenter's tool box," said Pvt. 1 Scott Darrah.

According to Schafer, an average of 10 to 15 soldiers per day spent nearly two weeks on the project, which was directed by the 197th Inf. Bde. engineers.

The Fort Benning Directorate of Engineering and Housing provided the wood.

Tank gunnery qualification challenges 4th Cavalry

By Aurelio Feliberty
197th Brigade correspondent

Delta Troop, 4th Cavalry recently had their yearly tank gunnery qualification at Hastings Range at Fort Benning.

"We had to hit at least seven out of 10 engagements to qualify with 700 points, each target being worth 100 points," said Sgt. Martin G. Schoeh, a gunner.

"Despite common mechanical problems, the men of Delta Troop managed to repair two of the M-60A3 tanks and had them fire tank table seven," said Sgt. David D. Hendricks, a member of one of the nine crews undergoing the qualification.

"We depend on our equipment to work, but the crews are also trained to make adjustments when the equipment is faulty," said Schoeh, adding, "It's my job to see that the round hits home whether all our controls are working or not, since I am the gunner."

According to one crew member, Pfc. William G. Woodall, who fired down tank table seven, "The training is fun because the tank crew I was with worked excellently together, and we had good communication," Woodall added.

29th tests new weapons

By Jose E. Labiosa
2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment

Infantry soldiers from Company C, 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment here and several Air Force airmen are conducting a follow-on field experiment from August 1989 through April 1990 to test prototype Army Combat Rifles under simulated combat conditions on a specially designed range.

"I appreciate their dedication and devotion to the project," said Capt. Stanley Trader, commander, Co. C, 2nd Bn., 29th Inf. Regt.

The ACR prototypes are being tested by the Army. Four prototypes are undergoing a one-year period of extensive engineering, safety and performance testing at the Armament Research Development and Engineering Center, Picatinny Arsenal, N.J.

The four prototype weapons were developed by AAI Corporation, Colt Industries, Heckler and Koch and Steyr-Mannlicher.

PRIMUS
NEW ARMY PRIMUS CENTER PROVIDES WALK-IN MEDICAL CARE
PRIMUS Walk-In centers are a new approach to providing military beneficiaries access to primary health care. PRIMUS Columbus will be open 365 days each year—from 0700 to 2000 weekdays and from 0900 to 1600 Saturdays, Sundays and Holidays (Effective 10-1-88).
No appointment is necessary and there is no cost to patients for treatment and medication.
All military beneficiaries, including family members, entitled to care at military treatment facilities and enrolled in the DEERS are eligible for care. Basic laboratory and X-ray services are provided on site. Licensed and credentialed physicians and staff provide medical care.
PRIMUS Columbus is located at 1727 Boxwood Place
Columbus, GA 31906
Infoline: (404) 569-9464
Other Calls: (404) 561-7066
PRIMUS Mammography Information: (404) 569-9468

Critically ill or seriously injured patients should go to a hospital emergency room.
Services are provided by PHP Healthcare Corporation, Alexandria, Virginia, under contract to the US Army Health Services Command.

ASK THE JUDGE

By Deborah B. Montgomery
Staff Judge Advocate's Office

Q. I am thinking about buying a used car. What are some of the legal considerations?

A. A used car can be a blessing, but there are some facts you need to know before buying one.

You first need to find out whether a warranty is offered, and if so, what specific warranty protection will be provided.

Any used car without a warranty is sold "as is." That means that if you have problems with the car after you buy it, you will have to pay for any needed repairs.

In most situations, the dealer has no further responsibility for the car once the sale is complete and you drive off the lot. If you purchase the vehicle from a private car owner, the car is probably sold "as is."

If the car comes with a warranty, make sure you get it get it in writing. If you rely on oral promises, chances are you will be disappointed in the future.

The warranty may be a "full" or "limited" warranty. If the warranty is indeed a full warranty, service should be provided to anyone who owns the vehicle during the warranty period when a problem is reported; warranty service is provided free of charge and the service is provided without requiring that you return a warranty registration card.

If a limited warranty is given, there are some costs or responsibilities the dealer will not assume. With a full or limited warranty, the dealer need not cover the entire vehicle. For instance, the tires on the car might not be covered under the warranty.

Whatever the type coverage, never neglect to read the warranty. There may be a deductible charge, and the warranty may only cover parts and not labor.

When you buy a used car, you may be offered a service contract. Service contracts are not warranties, but instead come separately from the car at extra cost to the purchaser.

Before purchasing a service contract, determine whether the warranty covers the same repairs that you would get under the service contract. Another consideration is to compare the length of the service contract with the warranty.

Before purchasing a vehicle, every buyer should have a reputable, independent mechanic inspect the vehicle. That way, you will have the chance to find out about the mechanical condition of the vehicle before you make the purchase.

If you are going to buy a used car and want to speak to an attorney about legal aspects of the sale, call the legal assistance office at 545-3281/3282.

Burglars look for advertisements

By Karles Jackson
Provost Marshal's Office

This summer, while people are enjoying their vacations, burglars will be hard at work taking items of value from vacant homes, apartments and barracks rooms.

Burglars realize they can be assured a greater "haul" and greater safety by striking unoccupied dwellings.

While mom, dad and the kids are away enjoying the season's delights, the burglar is hard at work.

There are some steps vacationers, can take to minimize the chances of being burglarized.

- If you live at Fort Benning, you may come by the Military Police station and request that your quarters be checked by MP patrols.
- Stop all deliveries, or have someone pick up deliveries daily.
- Use a timer or photo electric relay to turn lights on and off, giving the house an occupied look.
- Don't discuss your absence in public, and don't give details about your vacation to other than close and trusted friends or neighbors.
- Have lawns mowed and yard work kept up while you are away.
- Don't close blinds or pull shades down. Doing so might advertise that the house is empty.
- Arrange for periodic inspections of the quarters by a trusted friend. If they notice any suspicious activity during the day, have them notify the Military Police. This is all part of the neighborhood watch program.

The Military Police Activity wishes you a happy and safe vacation. Don't spoil it for yourself by failing to take these few simple, but practical, burglary prevention tips.

By using the following procedure, soldiers on the Family Housing Waiting List can use this chart to estimate when they can expect quarters:

Locate your category of housing.

Note eligibility date located on the same line as your category.

Calculate the time difference between the eligibility date listed and your eligibility date. The difference is the approximate time you still have to wait for housing.

EXAMPLE: If the latest eligibility date of the person who last received housing in your category was May 15, 1988, and your date of eligibility is Sept. 15, 1988, you can expect housing in about four months. If you do not know your eligibility date, contact the

The person who can help you most when you leave active duty might be the one who shows you how to continue your service in the Army Reserve.

Whether you're getting out of the Army, Air Force, Marines or Navy, one of the best places to get a head start is in an Army Reserve unit. Because serving in the Army Reserve (usually one weekend a month and two weeks a year) can help you reach your new goals.

You'll be earning a part-time income based on your rank and maintaining many of your benefits such as life insurance, shopping in the PX and commissary, and qualifying for money to further your education.

Transferring to the Army Reserve is a great way to make the transition to civilian life. Because you're surrounded by other people with whom you have lots in common.

With over 4,000 Army Reserve units, there's probably one close to where you plan on living. So find out more about the Army Reserve. If you're currently on active duty in the Army, speak to a Total Army Career Counselor. If you're in another service, talk to an Army Reserve Recruiter, or call toll-free 1-800-USA-ARMY.

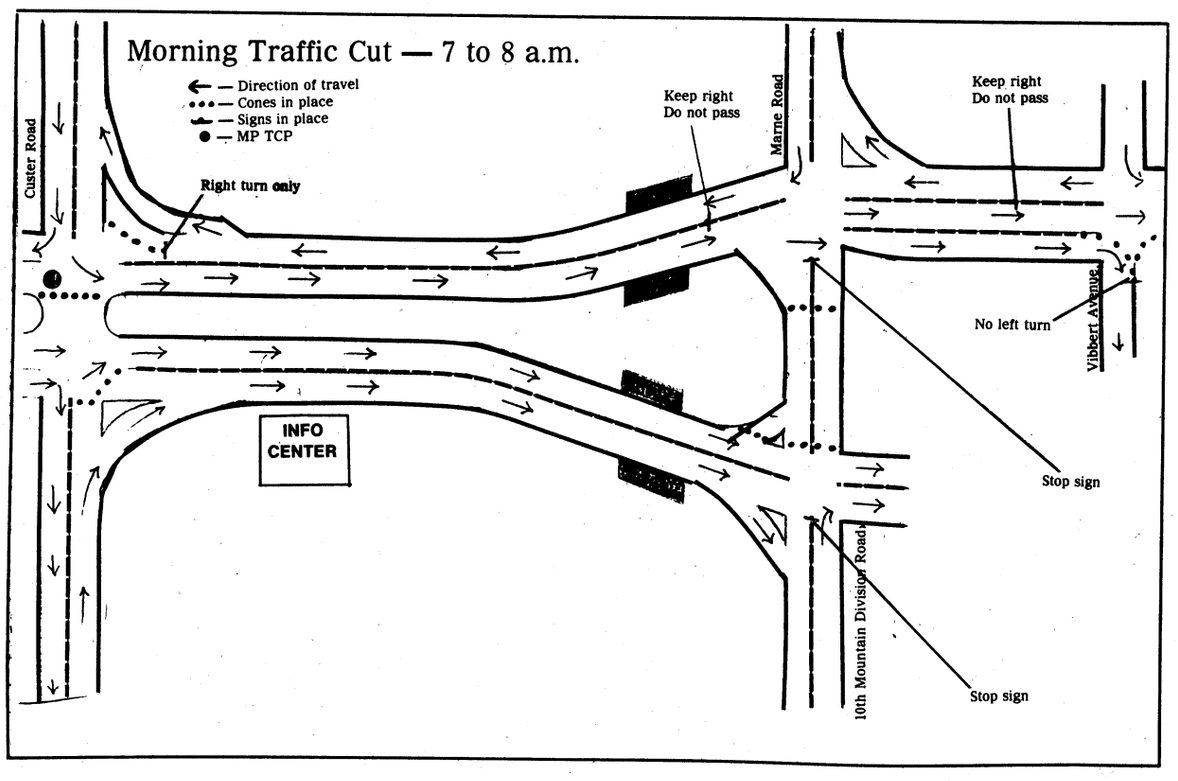
Traffic cut designed to ease overflow of traffic

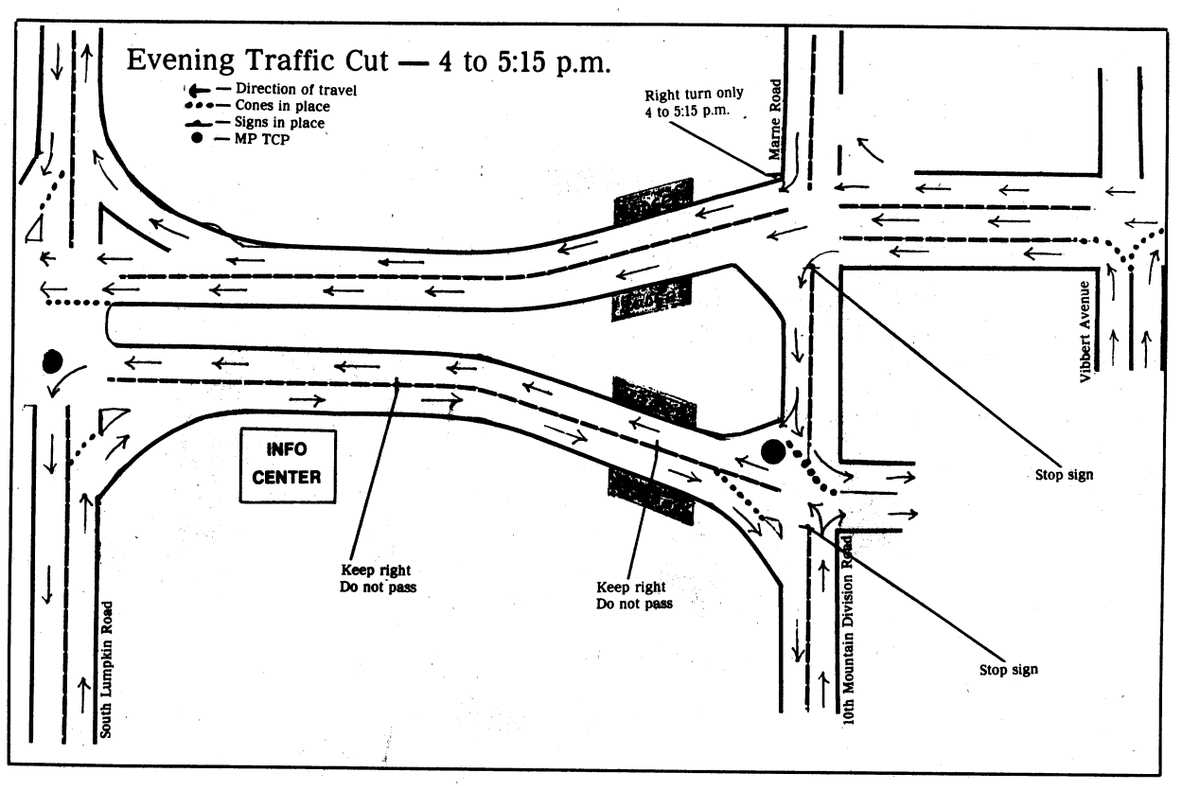
By Karl Morgan
Military Police

There are two times during the normal work day when an excessive amount of vehicular traffic arrives and departs Fort Benning, which causes an overflow of traffic.

To ease this problem, "Traffic Cut" was developed. Traffic cut alters the flow of traffic, giving an additional lane of access on or off Fort Benning.



With the exception of weekends and holidays, traffic cut is operational twice a day, between 7 and 8 a.m. and 4 and 5:15 p.m. in the afternoon.



Traffic cones, signs and military policemen are placed in certain key spots to help guide traffic. As you can see from the diagrams, the morning traffic cut is designed to allow traffic to flow smoothly onto post and the afternoon traffic cut is designed to allow traffic to flow smoothly off post.

Problems do occur while both traffic cuts are being set up. We ask that you become familiar with traffic cut and abide by all directions given by either the military policemen or the traffic control devices.

Please drive at a moderate speed and avoid moving the cones. For more information or questions pertaining to traffic cut, call Staff Sgt. Adriane Williams or Sgt. Karl Morgan, Traffic Section, building 215 (Main Post), 545-7241/2238.

Remember, drive safely and use your seat belts.

Fire detection and alarm systems only help if they're working

By Becky Ray
Energy Branch

A few things in life we commonly take for granted until we need them are auto insurance a good flashlight and fire detection and alarm systems.

Fire detection and alarm systems are quite complex. When a detection device is disabled by vandalism, all other devices downstream on that system by be disabled as well. This domino effect can cause any number of fire detectors in the building to stop working, without the occupants' knowledge.

A person who disables a fire detection device endangers the lives of all building occupants.

Fort Benning currently has two technicians assigned to maintain and repair the fire alarm systems on post. Vandalism to these systems is making their jobs difficult. Lately, 75 percent to 95 percent of the crew's work involves repairing vandalized fire detection and alarm systems.

Vandalism of fire detection alarms has become an expensive and dangerous problem. Those involved risk personal legal responsibility for damages to others and to property.

If there is a problem with the system in your building at any time, call the Work Order Section at 545-2135. Never tamper with the system or allow anyone else to do so.

Creating a masterpiece

These kindergartners are creating a work of art. Kindergarten classes at Fort Benning Schools are full-day programs consisting of all the academic areas of reading, math, science, social studies, health and computer education as well as art, music and physical education.

School system plans expanded programs

Fort Benning Schools

Just as students and parents are beginning to look forward to and plan for the upcoming school year, Fort Benning educators are putting the finishing touches on plans for the 1989-90 year.

When students return to school Aug. 29, the Fort Benning Schools will feature a new Spanish language program in the middle school, an expanded counseling program in the elementary schools, an increased focus on the use of computers and emphasis on composition.

The school system will also be expanding the Drug Abuse Resistance Education program, which was introduced at the sixth-grade level and will be introduced at the elementary school level this coming year.

New Spanish Program

The Spanish program will begin at the sixth-grade level as a six-week, daily exploratory class, which almost all sixth graders will experience. In that class, students will learn common phrases and simple vocabulary and will be introduced to the Spanish culture.

Seventh-grade students will have the opportunity to elect a nine-week course in Spanish, which will include both language and culture, while students in the eighth grade will be offered a year-long course in Spanish. Upon successful completion, the eighth-grade class students will be ready for Spanish II in high school.

Additional School Counselors

The employment of two additional elementary school counselors will provide a full-time counselor each for the McBride, Wilbur, Loyd, Wilson and White schools. Dexter and Patch schools will share a counselor, while Faith School will continue to have two counselors. The counseling program will emphasize preventive counseling provided in a group setting.

Children meet with the counselors to discuss problems associated with adjusting to a new school and friends, dealing with peer pressure, ways of handling difficult situations, the development of strong self-concepts, the building of good study habits and the solving of many problems. Counselors will also work with individual students as needed.

Computers

Computers have been used in the Fort Benning Schools for several years, however, the focus of the program has changed. Originally, instruction focused on preparing children to program a computer. The focus has now moved toward using the comput-

School begins Aug. 29

Fort Benning Schools

The Fort Benning Schools will begin its 1989-90 school year Aug. 29. It's time for all students — kindergarten through eighth grade — to register.

This year registration will be conducted during two weeks in August in all eight post schools. Rather than asking parents to come one or two days, parents are asked to choose the date and time that best fits their needs.

Past practice indicates that there are large crowds on the first couple of days of the registration process. Parents who wish to avoid a long wait should consider this when choosing a registration time.

Parents should bring certain items to the school when they register. The items are determined by the students' age, grade and whether the child has previously attended a Fort Benning School.

Parents of students (except kindergarten) should complete and sign registration forms — nothing needs to be brought to the school.

Parents of students who are new to the Fort Benning School System should bring last year's report card or grade placement record and an immunization certificate.

REGISTRATION DATES
Aug. 7 - 11
Aug. 14 - 18

REGISTRATION TIMES
8:30 - 11:30 a.m.
1:00 - 3:00 p.m.

Parents of all kindergarten students and first grade students who are new to the Fort Benning School System should also bring a birth certificate and proof of a physical examination.

A student must be 5 years old on or before Sept. 1, 1989, to enter kindergarten in the Fort Benning Schools.

The school assignments are subject to change by school board action if increased enrollments in certain schools or grade levels make these changes necessary.

Sixth, seventh, and eighth grade students from all housing areas should report to Faith Middle School for registration.

High school students (grades 9-12) who did not attend a public school in Muscogee County last year and who have not already pre-registered for the 1989-90 school year, should report immediately to the Columbus Roberts Center at 539 Brown Avenue (Columbus) to pre-register.

Those high school students who attended a local public high school during the 1987-88 school year and those students who are new to Fort Benning but have already obtained their school assignment from Columbus Roberts Center and pre-registered during the summer, must report to their school of assignment on Aug. 22 between 9 a.m. and 3 p.m. to confirm their registrations, obtain their class schedules and school bus pass, and complete any other required processing. All high school students must present evidence of immunization. School will begin in Muscogee County on Aug. 28.

For further information regarding registration in the Fort Benning Schools, phone Fort Benning Schools at 545-2500.

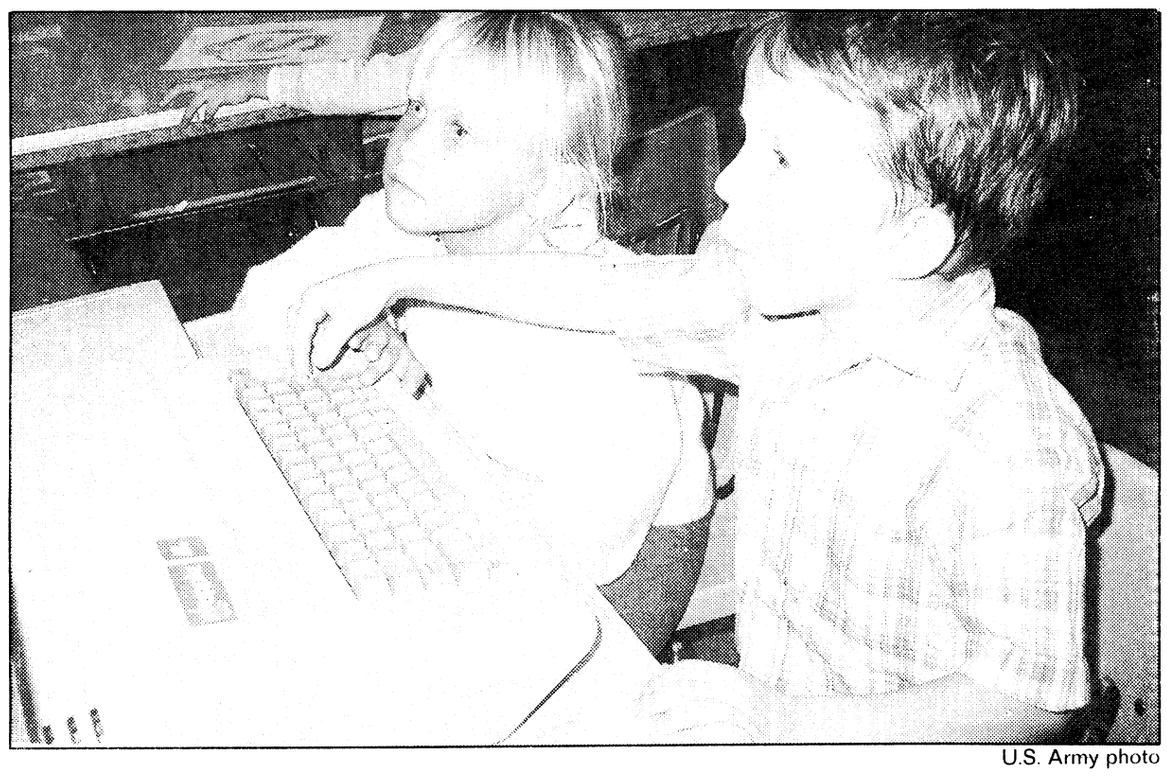
Anne Shaw, industrial arts teacher at Faith Middle School, works with a student on a project that he is designing himself. Industrial arts is one of seven elective subjects available to Fort Benning's middle school students.

Students use computers in the learning process

Fort Benning Schools

Computers have a place in today's schools. In the Fort Benning Schools that place is in the hands of learners: students learning new ideas and means of expression and teachers learning new methods and exploring possibilities never before available within the confines of the classroom.



Over the past five years the Fort Benning Schools' computer education program has evolved from an initial awareness level to its present focus on utilization of the computer as a tool. Rather than teaching and learning about computers, users will be better served by teaching and learning with computers. Toward this end, access to computer equipment includes early learning experiences with computer-assisted instruction for kindergarten students and carries through with problem solving and "real world" word processing for upper elementary and middle school students.

Several of our schools feature computer labs staffed by teacher aides who assist classroom teachers with software preparation and student monitoring. The lab provides the opportunity for whole class or large group instruction when needed.

Other schools utilize computers as learning aids in the classroom. This is generally accomplished through the use of a computer as a learning center in which children work individually, in pairs or in small groups.

In either setting, one effect of computer assisted instruction obvious to even the most casual observer is that of children learning from each other. This "peer tutoring" usually involves guiding a classmate through the operation of a particular program, but also extends to discussion of the possible outcomes of a shared decision.

Whether in a lab or the regular classroom, every child in the Fort Benning Schools will have access to these powerful learning tools and software appropriate to their needs.

Project DARE teaches students to say no to drug use

Fort Benning Schools

School year 1989-90 will see all students in the Fort Benning Schools actively participating in Project DARE.

DARE — Drug Abuse Resistance Education — is a substance use prevention education program designed to equip students with skills for resisting peer pressure to experiment with tobacco, drugs and alcohol.

The project was developed through the combined efforts of the Los Angeles Police Department and that city's United School District in 1983. Fort Benning's school system is among the first to provide the DARE program.

The most striking difference between this drug education program and others is that DARE lessons are taught by active duty, uniformed police officers. At Fort Benning, Lt. Walter Jackson, a Department of Defense policeman, will serve as DARE coordinator and primary instructor. Jackson will teach 17, one-hour lessons dealing with decision-making skills and techniques for resisting peer pressure in a variety of situations not strictly related to substance abuse.

As preparation for his assignment, Jackson attended a two-week Project DARE training institute conducted by the Lexington Fayette County Police Department in Lexington, Ky. His training focused on teaching techniques and included a great deal of role playing.

The DARE program uses a positive approach to substance abuse education and focuses attention in four major areas:

- Accurate information about tobacco, alcohol and drugs
- Teaching students decision-making skills
- Showing students how to resist peer pressure
- Giving students ideas for alternatives to drug use

Though sixth-grade students at Faith Middle School will be the primary audience, the program contains a modified component for grades kindergarten through four, which Jackson will deliver as well.

Fort Benning schools accredited since 1963

Fort Benning Schools

Fort Benning schools have been accredited since 1963. The organization for accreditation, the Southern Association for Colleges and Schools, first proposed standards for the accreditation of elementary schools at that time. Fort Benning Schools were among the first in this region to be accredited.

What is accreditation and why is it desirable? The Southern Association has developed a comprehensive set of standards covering all facets of the organization and functioning of schools. Demonstrating that a school or school system meets these standards qualifies it for accreditation and ensures a quality program is in place.

Parents entering their children in a school for the first time may be assured the school is operating within stringent guidelines for excellence when they see the certificate of accreditation posted in the office.

Fort Benning Schools have been accredited continuously for more than 25 years. Accreditation is maintained by the schools through filing annual reports with SACS and through involvement in in-depth, on-site inspections by a team of trained educators every five years. The last on-site visit occurred in the fall of 1988, and the team recommended continuing accreditation in all eight schools at that time.

Each SACS accreditation team visit brings not only commendations for things well done but recommendations for continued growth and improvement. Fort Benning Schools are heeding many of those recommendations and looking forward to continued excellence as they remain accredited by Southern Association of Colleges and Schools.

Transportation provided for students in elementary school

Fort Benning Schools

The Fort Benning School System provides transportation for elementary school students who live one mile or more, by the nearest traveled route, from the school they will attend and for middle school students who live more than a one-and-one-half-mile radius from Faith Middle School.

The school system is required to contract for transportation services each year. The contractor for the 1988-89 school year is James M. Smith, Incorporated. Buses are used for normal daily operations as well as numerous school-related field trips. Buses are inspected annually by the Georgia Highway Patrol to ensure they meet all Georgia requirements.

If parents have questions or concerns regarding school bus transportation, they may contact Alice Harrell in the superintendent's office at 545-2500.

Due to the yearly differences in grades and locations of the students transported, there are always changes made in bus routes during the first few weeks of school. Please bear with the school system and the contractor as they attempt to implement the necessary changes as quickly as possible.

The school system also requests the assistance of parents in implementing the Bus Safety Program. Parents will receive a brief list of bus rules at registration, which, if followed, will help to provide a safe and pleasant atmosphere on the bus. Parents are asked to review these rules with their children.

Students must be eligible to attend schools on post

Fort Benning Schools

To be eligible to attend on-post schools, children must reside on post or fit one of two exceptions to the residency requirement.

As an exception, children living off-post may attend on-post schools if the sponsor has a written notice from Family Housing indicating that post quarters will be available for the family within 90 school days. The second exception allows a child to continue to attend on-post schools for the remainder of the year with when the family moves off post due to the sponsor's retirement or permanent change of station move.

Periodically families move from post housing into the local community and ask to leave their children in the Fort Benning Schools. If the move is not connected with the retirement of the sponsor or PCS move, the children must be withdrawn from school by no later than the end of the grading period during which the sponsor cleared post quarters. Eligibility for attending Fort Benning Schools is governed by federal law.

Fort Benning has eight schools for grades K-8

Fort Benning Schools

Herbert J. Dexter Elementary School

Herbert J. Dexter Elementary School is located on Yeager Avenue and serves children in grades kindergarten through five who live on south Main Post.

The facility is Fort Benning's newest elementary school, having been built in 1969 and added this past year. The school serves 375 students to include students from throughout the post who are enrolled in programs for the gifted.

Nan Mathews

In addition to the standard elementary program offered, special instruction is available in art, music and physical education as well as programs in special education and counseling. The building is centrally air conditioned and carpeted throughout.

Nan Mathews, the principal at Dexter School, has been a principal with the Fort Benning Schools for the past 13 years, having previously served as principal at McBride and Wilson Schools. Prior to that, Mathews was an elementary school teacher at Fort Benning and in Greensboro, Ala. She holds a bachelor's degree from Judson College in Marion, Ala., and a master's degree from Georgia State University.

Don C. Faith Middle School

Don C. Faith Middle School is Fort Benning's newest facility, having been completed in the spring of 1987. The building houses about 875 children from throughout the post in grades six through eight and is one of the area's only true middle schools.

The school was constructed in wings with each grade level having essentially a self-containing wing. Special area subjects such as music, art, physical education, industrial arts, home economics and computers are available to all students in a central area.

Olin Harp

The school has a large multi-purpose room used as both an auditorium and a gymnasium and contains a separate cafeteria that doubles as a large group meeting room.

The media center is at the center of the school and is one of the most active parts of the school.

As a true middle school, Faith features teams in which groups of students are together with the same teachers for English, math, social studies and science each day with the focus being on providing a child-centered program that helps the child make the transition from elementary school to the highly structured secondary school.

Olin Harp has been the principal of Faith Middle School for the past 11 years, having served prior to that as assistant principal and teacher at Faith. Harp, a Cusseta native, holds a bachelor's degree from LaGrange College and a master's degree from the University of Georgia.

Harp is assisted by David Murray and Phyllis Parker. Murray has been an assistant principal at Faith for the past three years. Prior to that, he was a classroom teacher and served as an elementary school principal in Missouri. Parker has taught both at Faith and in Talbot County and will be starting her second year as assistant principal at Faith.

Frank R Loyd Elementary School

Frank R. Loyd Elementary School is located on Santa Fe Road adjacent to Spencer High School. Children in grades kindergarten through five who reside in north Bouton Heights, Upatoi Terrace and the Davis Hill communities attend the school.

Dell Karr

The school opened in September of 1959 and currently serves about 425 children, providing a standard program for elementary students to include special instruction in music, art and physical education, a library media program, counselor, nurse and program in special education. Additionally, Loyd School serves all mentally handicapped children of elementary school age at Fort Benning and provides special programs for the physically handicapped. The building, while an older building, is a light, spacious facility that is carpeted throughout and centrally air conditioned.

Dell Karr is beginning her second year at Loyd School this year. Prior to that, Karr served as an assistant principal, director of The Health Improvement Program and a classroom teacher in the Muscogee County Schools. Karr holds a bachelor's and master's degree from Columbus College, a sixth-year degree from Georgia State University and is currently working on a doctorate at Auburn University.

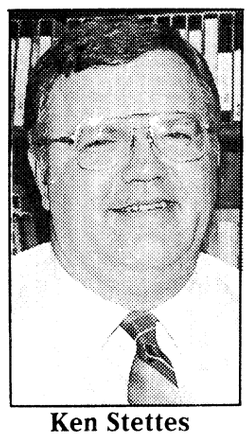
Morris R. McBride School

Morris R. McBride School, located on Custer Road, was built in 1965 and serves 525 children in grades kindergarten through three living in the McGraw Manor community.

Del Hicks

The McBride School offers a standard program for elementary students to include special instruction in music, art and physical education, a library media program, counselor, nurse, and program in special education. The building is centrally air conditioned and carpeted throughout.

Del Hicks is beginning his second year as principal of McBride School. He is a native of Illinois, has previously served as principal of the Dexter and Wilbur Schools at Fort Benning; and was a superintendent, principal and classroom teacher in Illinois prior to coming to Fort Benning six years ago. Hicks holds a bachelor's and master's degree in education from Northern Illinois University.



Janet Wynn begins her first year as half-time assistant principal at McBride School, having moved into that position in January of the last school year. Prior to her work as assistant principal, Wynn taught kindergarten at Fort Benning. Before coming to Benning, Wynn taught in school systems in Colorado and Florida. Wynn received her bachelor's degree and master's degree from Florida State University and master's level certification in school administration from Columbus College.

Alexander M. Patch Elementary School

Alexander M. Patch Elementary School, located at the corner of Lumpkin Road and Baltzell Avenue, is Fort Benning's oldest school, having been built in 1931.

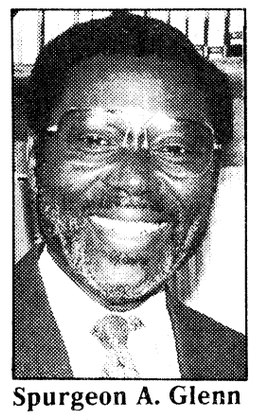
For several years following its construction, it was the only Fort Benning School. Currently Patch School serves those students in kindergarten and first grade who live in south and central Main Post.

Patch is a small school, enrolling only about 150 students, and the Fort Benning Schools share the building with the Patch Pre-Kindergarten School, which operates a program for 3 and 4-year-olds.

Ken Stettes

The Patch building has many of the advantages of an older school to include high ceilings, lots of space and a charm not found in newer schools. Classrooms are carpeted, and the building is air conditioned.

Ken Stettes returns to Patch School this year as principal. He will also serve as a coordinator for special projects with the school system. Stettes has served previously as a principal at Wilbur School and at Patch School and as a physical education teacher in the Fort Benning system. He also taught in the Harris County Schools prior to coming to Fort Benning. A native of Missouri, Stettes holds a bachelor's degree from South Missouri College and an educational specialist's degree from Georgia State University.



Edward A. White School

Edward A. White School, located on First Division Road, serves children in grades two through five who reside in the north center Main Post area and the south portion of Bouton Heights and grades four and five who live in McGraw Manor, enrolling approximately 400 students.

The school was built in 1962 and consists of four classroom pods and a main building containing the office, library media center, multi-purpose room and two classrooms. Each pod contains several classrooms and restrooms and is essentially a self-contained unit.

This year, to the extent that enrollment permits, each pod will house students at a specific grade level. The school is carpeted throughout and is air conditioned. White School offers a standard elementary school program to include opportunities for students needing special education, a school counselor, a school nurse, and specialists in art, music and physical education. Students have access to Apple IIE computers and the computer education program is ongoing.

White School is adjacent to the Youth Activities facility and uses the YA gymnasium for physical education classes.

Spurgeon A. Glenn

The principal of Edward White School is Spurgeon A. Glenn Jr., who is beginning his third year as principal at White. Prior to that, Glenn served as principal of Loyd School for seven years and worked in the Muscogee County Schools as an assistant principal, career education coordinator and teacher of grades four through six. Glenn holds a bachelor's degree from Claflin College in Orangeburg, S.C., and a master's degree from Fort Valley State College. He has also worked with local government, having served as the Columbus Mayor's special assistant for community relations.

Outside of his school work, Glenn is well known in the area for his musical talents, having performed as a singer at various events.

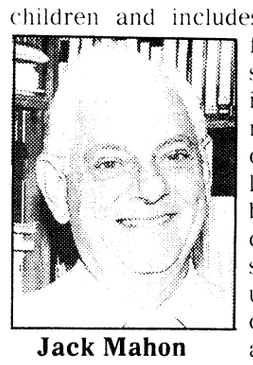
William H. Wilbur School

William H. Wilbur School is located on Custer Road and serves children in grades kindergarten through five who live in Custer Terrace, Battle Park and Old Officer Capehart.

Gail Wilson

The building was constructed in 1950 and underwent extensive remodeling recently. The facility is carpeted throughout and has air conditioning in all classrooms.

Wilbur School provides a standard educational program to about 450 children in grades kindergarten through five to include special programs in music, art, physical education, counseling and special education services.



Gail Wilson begins her first year as principal of Wilbur School this year. She has previously served as the principal of Patch School, as assistant principal at Faith School, and as a special education teacher in the Fort Benning system. Wilson holds a master of education degree from Columbus College and an educational specialist's degree from West Georgia College.

Janet Wynn begins her first full year as half-time assistant principal at Wilbur School. She also serves as half-time assistant principal at McBride School.

Richard G. Wilson Elementary School

The Richard G. Wilson Elementary School, located on Lavoie Avenue, serves children in the Lavoie Manor community in grades kindergarten through five. The building was constructed in 1965, with an addition being completed last year.

The school enrolls about 425 children and includes facilities for instruction in art and music, a computer lab, a library media center, special education facilities and a multi-purpose room serving as auditorium, gymnasium and lunchroom.

Jack Mahon

The school is carpeted throughout and centrally air conditioned. Children experience a standard elementary school program with additional opportunities to work with computers, a counseling program, physical education, music and art.

For students with special needs, a special education teacher and speech language teacher are assigned to the school. A school counselor and school nurse also serve Wilson School.

Jack Mahon has served as principal of the Wilson School for the past eight years and has been an administrator in the Fort Benning system for the past 24 years. Mahon is a native of Florida, having earned both a bachelor's and master's degree from Florida State University.

He has been named district and state principal of the year and was a runner-up for the national principal of the year award. Prior to coming to Fort Benning, Mahon served as a health education coordinator for the state of Florida, a curriculum director, assistant principal and teacher.

Plans

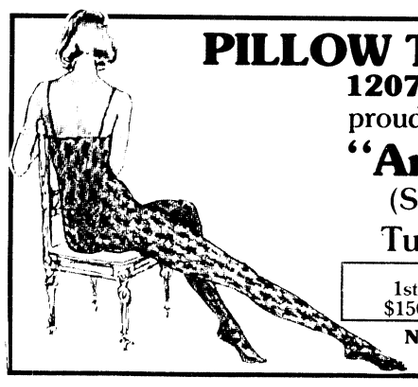
er as a learning aide using it to solve problems.

The school system has purchased computer software that permits the computer to be used as a word processor. Children write stories using the computer soon after they learn languages. As the children progress in language skills, they will learn to use the computer to edit what they have written. The computer is a powerful tool for the improvement of student writing. The schools are planning for the integration of computers into all academic areas and are providing quality software to compliment curriculum objectives in each discipline.

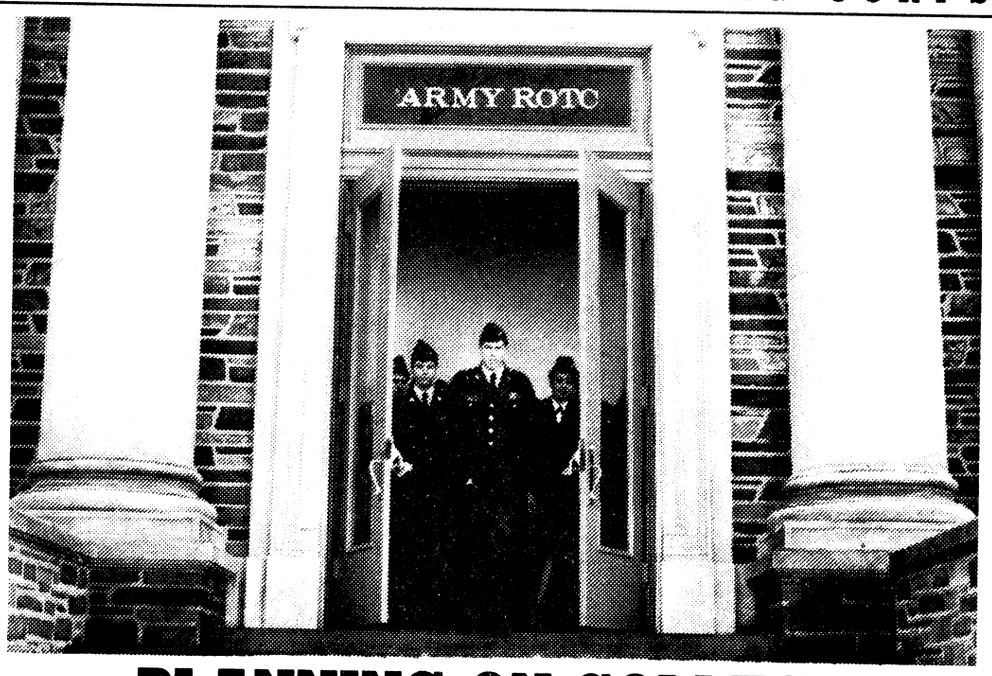


DARE

The Drug Abuse Resistance Education program, introduced last year in to sixth-grader, will be expanded to include the elementary grades.

DARE is taught by specially trained police officers and is designed to teach children to resist the peer pressure that frequently pulls children into drugs. Through discussion and role playing, children learn about drugs and to be comfortable when declining drugs offered to them.

The DARE program has been very successful in several U.S. school systems as well as in the DODDS schools. The program operates in the Fort Benning Schools through a cooperative arrangement between the Fort Benning Schools and the post Provost Marshall.



As new programs are introduced this fall, the school system will continue the system of curriculum review, which ensures that all courses of study are revised and new materials selected as needed every six years. This curriculum review process assures parents that school programs are no more than six years old. This year, a committee of teachers will begin the review of the science program with the selection of new materials to follow the review next year.

Faith Race attracts hundreds of runners

Fort Benning Schools

The first Faith Race was held, Dec. 8, 1979. The attendance far surpassed what was anticipated.

The attendance each year has varied from 500 to more than 1,000 runners. The Faith Race has established a reputation of being the best family-oriented event on post, according to a former commanding general of Fort Benning.

Three distances are offered to appeal to children of all ages and abilities. A one-mile race is conducted for runners who are 14 years old or younger. The two-mile and five-mile runs are open to all ages. All entrants get a T-shirt with the traditional Faith mouse on it. Awards are given to over-all, open division winners and to the top three in each age group.

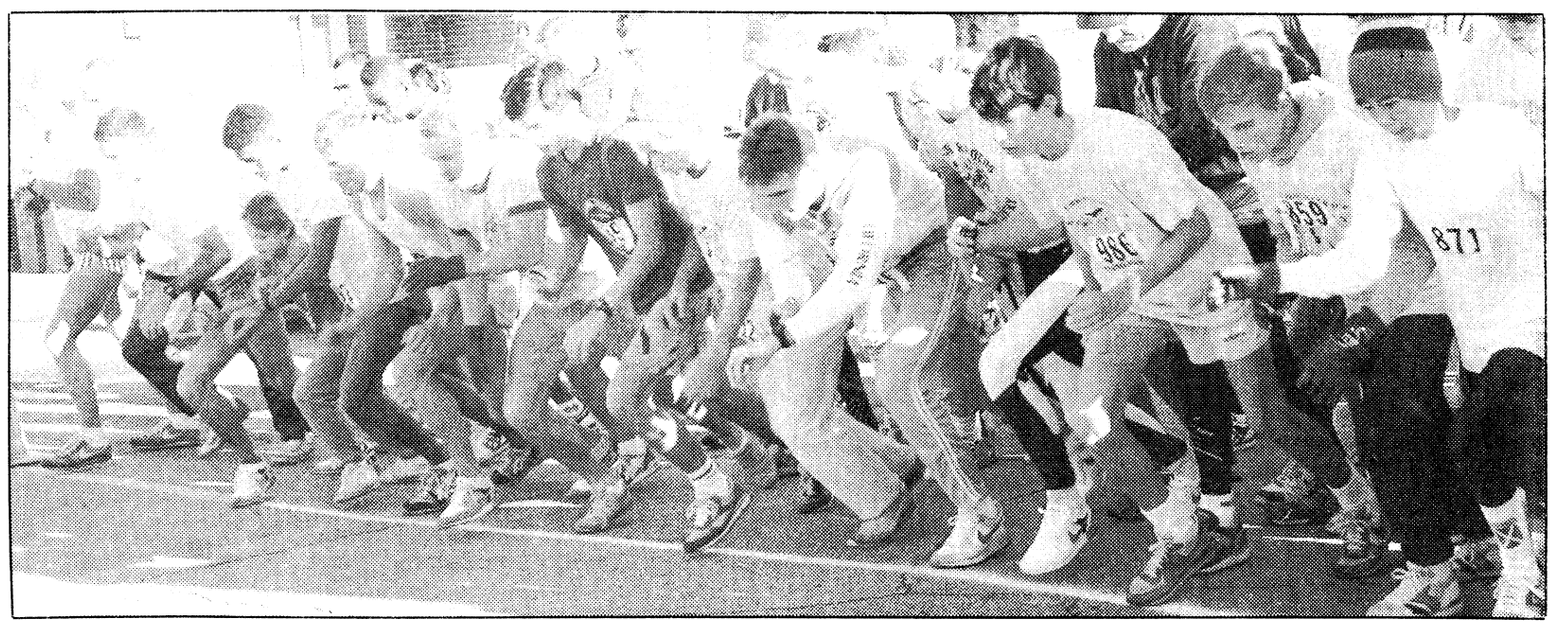
The original race course was changed when Faith School moved into its new building. New course records have been established and are currently held by:

Five Mile — Male — Lloyd McDonald — 26:22

Five Mile — Female — Alicia Livsey — 32:43

Two Mile — Male — Bradley Sievers — 10:01

Two Mile — Female — Dorothea Macon — 12:56



One Mile — (0-8) — Male — George Bunyea — 7:05

One Mile — (0-8) — Female — Katheryn Wells — 8:25

One Mile — (9-14) — Male — Scott Teixeira — 5:12

One Mile — (9-14) — Female — Heather Dickson — 5:53

The 11th annual race is scheduled for Dec. 2 this year. Mark your calendars, and make plans to participate.

Runners of all ages participate each year in the Faith School Race held the first Saturday in December.

Faith Middle School for 6th, 7th, 8th grades

Fort Benning Schools

Faith Middle School, built in 1986-87 is the only school at Fort Benning that houses the sixth, seventh and eighth grades. Faith, located on Ingersoll Street, is located near the old Don C. Faith Middle School building that had served students since 1952.

Faith Middle School was named after Lt. Col. Don Carlos Faith Jr., who was awarded the Congressional Medal of Honor for bravery and service in Korea in 1950.

Faith School is a true middle school. Instruction at Faith is accomplished through the use of teaming. A team is a group of teachers who, although they teach different subjects, are assigned and teach the same group of students.

The teachers plan together and coordinate their teaching plans to provide activities that complement the material being taught in other classrooms.

This approach helps students understand and how all the subject areas fit together and how they might relate them to real life situations.

The staff at Faith School believes that the school exists and functions primarily for the children and that a program of quality education should be provided for every student. They further believe that this quality education must be designed to meet each pupil's needs in the following areas of growth: aesthetic, emotional, intellectual, physical and social.

It is the responsibility of a middle school to meet the educational needs of the general population of its students and at the same time to provide for the needs of special students. For that reason, Faith Middle School's curriculum includes a common core of academic subjects as well as exploratory courses. Exploratory courses include: art, home living, industrial arts, computers, choral and instrumental music and Spanish.

Sixth-grade students go through a full rotation, taking six of the electives, while seventh-grade students may choose to take band and chorus on a full-year basis. Eighth-graders have the same options as seventh-graders.

Faith School began making the transition to the "Middle School Concept" about 10 years ago. Since that time there has been an increasing emphasis on the special needs of individual students. Primary to the concern for individual needs is the necessity for an effective guidance and counseling service in the school. Faith school has such a program. Counselors use the developmental, preventive guidance model. Counseling is offered to students on an individual basis as well as on a group basis.

Meeting student needs on an individual basis is at the heart of what the middle school is all about. Throughout the years, Faith has served as an example and has often been used as a model for those seeking to provide quality middle school programs throughout Georgia and the nation.

Constitution bicentennial celebration continues

Fort Benning Schools

Birthday parties, parades, time capsules, musicals and awards programs marked the bicentennial celebration of the Constitution by Fort Benning's children. The focus on this special document continues as we move into the third year of celebration.

Children at one school will constantly be reminded of the impact of the Constitution on their lives as they care for their commemorative oak. This tree, planted by students in 1988, serves as a tangible symbol of the freedom granted by the Constitution.

Primary children honor the Constitution and the meaning of citizenship through "red, white and blue" birthday parties, featuring patriotic hats and dress, topped off with a decorated cake.

The celebration will continue during the 1989-90 school year.

Physical education at Faith can be fun

Fort Benning Schools

You're in the seventh grade, and here you are, changing schools again. At the last school, the other girls whispered and snickered at "dressing out" time, and you know they were calling you names. You knew that six weeks of volleyball would find you being the last asked for a team every time. And thinking of the long weeks of softball ahead gives you a real headache. It's all just too boring and humiliating.

But wait. This is Faith Middle School. You're in luck. The word boring should be unknown in physical education classes here. First, there is no dressing out (unless you are in gymnastics, wrestling or track and field where safety is accommodated by the student wearing his choice of shorts and sweats.) They allow jeans here along with athletic shoes, no one ever has to buy a special gym suit.

At Faith, 875 students are presented no less than 36 different physical education activities.

Success is the key word here. Even a student who has been teased in physical education classes before can be successful in many parts of the program, as can a child with cerebral palsy or artificial arms. No activity lasts more than 10 days, and there are several mini-courses.

In addition to meeting the special needs of middle school students, the program is tailored to the needs of a transient population. As a Department of Defense school on a military base, Faith teachers have found that only 12 percent of the students stay at Faith for all three years. Many are at Faith for only three or four months. Since none of the activities lasts more than two weeks, every child finds some activity in which he or she can succeed and build self-esteem.

Intramural activities offered at Faith during 1988-89 include: volleyball, jogging, self improvement (aerobics, fitness activities and nutrition), basketball, weight training, gymnastics, badminton and softball.

Intramural activities are offered at least twice weekly. Normally one hour of activity is scheduled.

Schools operate under elected school board

Fort Benning Schools

The Fort Benning Schools operate under the direction of a school board elected by parents of children attending the schools. Board members are elected on the second Tuesday each May to two-year terms, with terms being staggered to provide continuity.

Half the 10-member board comes up for election each year. The board includes a president, a chaplain and one representative from each of the eight schools. The president and chaplain are elected by parents of all eight schools while the individual school representatives are elected by the parents of the individual school they represent.

The school board is a policy-making group that has ultimate responsibility for the operation of the schools. The board also approves the school budget, selects the school superintendent, and approves educational programs and materials. The board functions very much like school boards do in local communities.

Board meetings are open to the public and are held in the school administration building on NCO Drive. Persons interested in attending meetings may call 545-2500/3500 to learn when meetings will be held.

Schools' gifted program provides challenging, stimulating environment

Fort Benning Schools

The program for gifted education is committed to serving the ever changing needs of gifted students by providing a challenging and stimulating environment. The curriculum emphasizes higher level thinking skills, creative problem-solving skills, development of self-concept, aesthetic awareness and interpersonal relations.

Students in grades two through five are served at Dexter School in a self-contained program which groups gifted students together in a classroom setting providing accelerated academics and enrichment activities. A resource room is used at Faith Middle School (grades six through eight) providing enrichment activities a class period per day. Accelerated academic studies are addressed within the regular classroom.

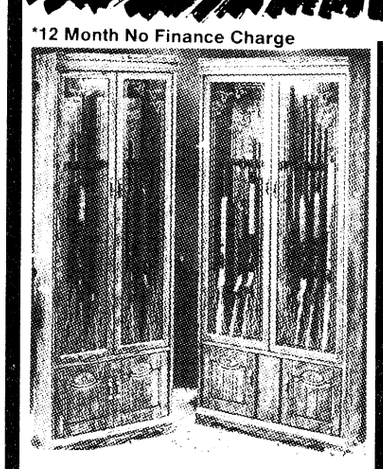
USMA
ASSOCIATE PROFESSOR SOUGHT

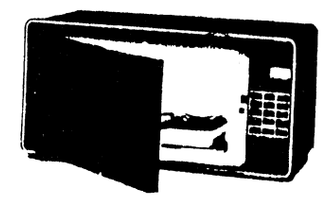
The Superintendent of the United States Military Academy has appointed a committee to recommend active duty officers with approximately 15 years of service for permanent assignment to West Point as an associate professor (PAP) for two positions in the Department of Social Sciences. The two individuals selected will be responsible for teaching, planning and directing undergraduate core and elective courses in the department, contributing to an extensive program of extracurricular academic activities, and assisting in an extensive research program.

PAP of Economics: The applicant must have previous college teaching experience and a Ph.D. in economics or a related discipline. Candidates lacking a Ph.D. should have a master's degree in economics or a related discipline and be capable of and willing to obtain a Ph.D. within 3 years, as well as have a high capacity for further academic achievement.



PAP of Political Science: The applicant must have previous college teaching experience and a Ph.D. in political science in the field(s) of Comparative, American, or International politics. Candidates lacking a Ph.D. should have a master s degree in one of the above subjects and be capable of and willing to obtain a Ph.D. within 3 years, as well as have a high capacity for further academic achievement.

In addition, the committee will evaluate breadth of military experience, depth achieved in military specialties, and evidence of leadership.



Female and Minority Officers are encouraged to apply. USMA is an Equal Opportunity Employer.

Officers interested in applying for this position may obtain more information by contacting CPT Jim Perry, Selection Committees Secretary, or LTC John Robertson, Office of the Dean, United States Military Academy, West Point, 10996-5000 by 1 September 1989.

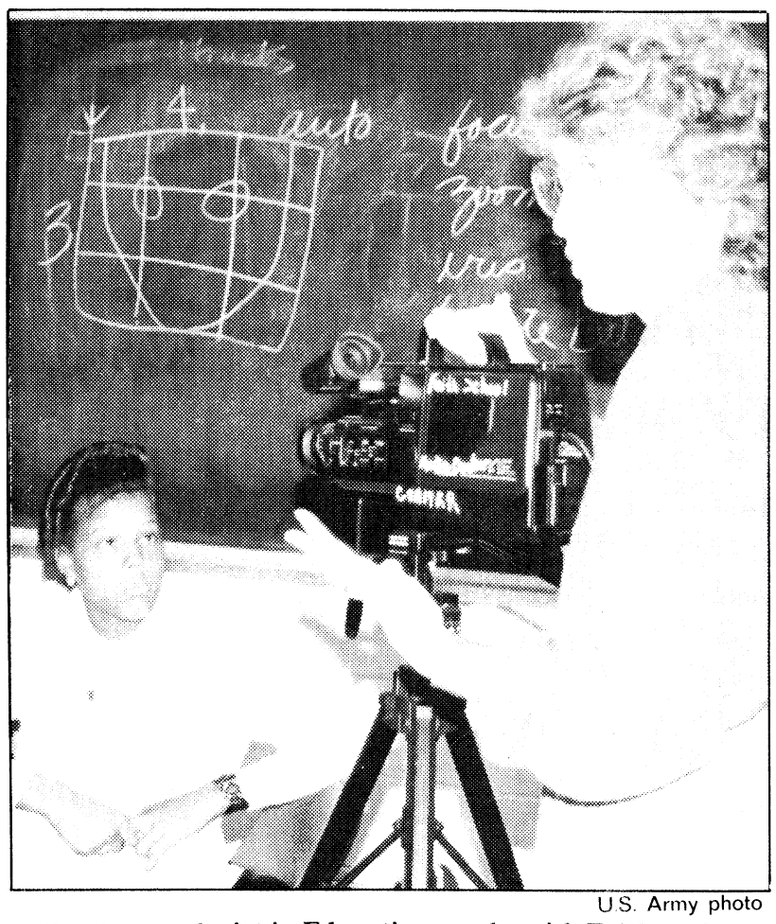
Professional artists to perform in schools

Fort Benning Schools

Professional performing artists will be working in the Fort Benning Schools again this year thanks to the generosity of the Fort Benning Officers' Wives' Club and the Georgia Council for the Arts.

The Officers' Wives' Club funds a Fine Arts Series, which provides four concerts each year for each of the eight Fort Benning Schools while the Georgia Council for the Arts partially funds visiting artists who will be working in three of the schools next year. Both the OWC Fine Arts Series and Visiting Artist program supplement the fine arts instruction provided students by Fort Benning teachers.



The OWC Fine Arts Series has for the past several years brought four musicians per year to perform in the schools. The performers are all professional musicians, with many being faculty members in the music department of Columbus College. The intent of the series is to provide children with quality live performances of good music while teaching the children appropriate behavior in a concert setting.

In past years, performers have consistently praised Fort Benning children for their behavior during the concerts.

Last year, students heard a string bass player, a female vocalist, a trombone player and a violinist. Each of the performers performed for 20 to 30 minutes in each school, performing both familiar and unfamiliar music. The artists also talked about their instruments and gave the students the opportunity to ask questions. While the performers for the 1989-90 school year have not been selected, the program will continue under OWC funding.

The Georgia Council for the Arts brings professional artists into the schools who will teach as well as perform. The artists spend from two to 12 weeks in a school and share their talents with the children. During this coming year, an instrumentalist who makes some of the instruments he plays will be working at Faith, a sculptor will be working with students at Patch and a creative writer will be working with students at Loyd School.

Visiting artists in years past have ranged from a mime to a film maker to a story teller. In each case, the artists have provided a rich experience to supplement the instruction provided by Fort Benning teachers.

Teachers, principals take training course

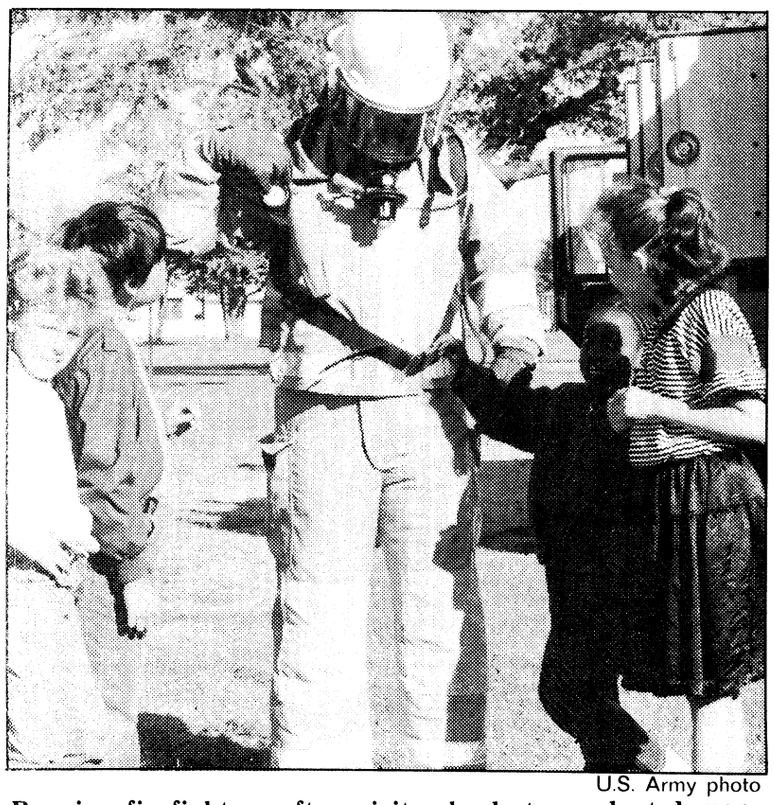
Fort Benning Schools

Computers, reading skills, science experiments, literature and a host of effective teaching practices have been the focus of training for Fort Bennings' teachers and principals this summer.

While school was out for the summer, almost half of Fort Benning's teaching staff and many of Fort Benning principals were participating in a variety of courses designed to enrich learning experiences for Fort Benning's students.

Fort Benning Schools have an on-going staff development program that creates and runs courses designed to meet the specific needs of Fort Benning personnel. Courses are taught after school hours or on weekends during the school year and during the day throughout summer vacation.

Dr. Tik Liem, a nationally known science educator, taught a course this summer involving 50 Benning teachers and several Benning administrators. They learned a host of ways to make science exciting through use of experiments and thought-provoking scientific demonstrations.



Almost a fourth of Benning's teachers participated in a week-long course focusing on implementation of effective teaching strategies.

The Junior Great Books Foundation taught a course for teachers and principals who will be leaders of groups that meet regularly in the schools to discuss books in the Junior Great Books series.

Teachers also took courses dealing with art, history, strategies for teaching reading and teaching the writing process by using computers.

"Fort Benning teachers and principals are a wonderful group to work with," said Beth Middlemiss, director of Staff Development. "Their participation in course work reflects their serious commitment to quality instruction for our students. This summer has been a very productive one. I am sure students will benefit from ideas generated in these courses throughout the coming year and for a long time to come."

COMMUNITY INVOLVEMENT

Benning firefighters often visit schools to conduct demonstrations and talk with students.

Post agencies show support for schools

Fort Benning Schools

The agencies and individuals who make up the Fort Benning community care about Fort Benning Schools and Fort Benning children.

This is shown through the various safety precautions taken as they make their way to and from school and other programs directed at keeping Fort Benning children safe and happy.

Early each year, professionals from the provost marshal's office coordinate with the schools to provide instructions and materials to remind students of the need for safe practices when walking or riding their bicycles to school.

Throughout the school year, these dedicated individuals make themselves available to visit the schools and to provide programs on crime prevention, substance abuse and safety practices.

In addition to the military police, several other post agencies reach out to the schools.

During October, the firemen help the children "learn not to burn" bringing puppet shows and fire fighting equipment — the big trucks — to the school sites to emphasize their message.

In fall and spring, the Fort Benning energy office provides materials for teachers and incentives for students to become involved in the worldwide effort for energy conservation.

Before the break for winter holidays, the 82nd Ordnance Detachment instructs the students on safety procedures with ammunition and duds that might accidentally be found by a child at play during the holiday season.

Soon after the new year begins, teams from the Dental Activity set up fairs at the schools that show children how to care for their teeth and provide on-the-spot, dental health screening for each child.

Later in the spring, Benning residents observe the Month of the Military Child, and children and families are drawn together in a variety of activities to celebrate the uniqueness of the experience of having a military child.

The Judge Advocate General's office provides a host of speakers and learning opportunities for students in the springtime, which leads up to an exciting Law Day observance in each of the schools in May.

Throughout the year, regardless of the need, the Fort Benning community is responsive to the Fort Benning Schools and the children.

From Martin Army Community Hospital to the Youth Activities Center to the host of volunteers that give so freely of their time to the schools, the people of the community show they care and demonstrate that caring through action and involvement.

Fort Benning Schools are unique because they serve and are served by very special and unique agencies and individuals within the Fort Benning community.

Schools plan open houses

Fort Benning Schools

Fort Benning Schools will be welcoming parents back to school in September, too. Each school will hold its own open house — a time for group conferences when parents meet teachers and principals and see the classrooms.

Parent group conferences also provide an opportunity to briefly review curriculum and classroom guidelines.

Before the end of the first grading period, an individual conference will be scheduled to allow the teachers and parents to talk together regarding each child's achievement and progress. At this conference, the first report card will be given and the grading system explained.

Fort Benning educators look forward to seeing all parents at both the group conferences and the individual conferences. Working together, school staff and parents can provide success and a rewarding school experience for all involved.

Open houses will occur on the following dates. Parents will receive notices regarding the time of each open house.

Faith students win Odyssey of Mind

Two teams compete at district, state and world levels

Fort Benning Schools

For the last three years, Faith School students participating in Odyssey of the Mind have competed in the district, state and world competitions, and one of the teams won the world competition in 1988.

Odyssey of the Mind, an international creative problem-solving competition, was founded by Dr. Sam Micklus, a New Jersey college professor who wanted to encourage creative thinking.

Corporate sponsor of the Odyssey of the Mind is the IBM Corporation, which has given grants to prepare and distribute curriculum materials to more than 7,000 schools worldwide. These materials help teachers relate Odyssey of the Mind problem assignments to class work in science, mathematics, social studies, language arts and technology education.

The 1988-89 teams that represented Faith School were the "Ye Gods" team — Gina Barlotta, Ben Engel, Sterling Harris, Troy Hutchins, Chris Moore, Tara Norton and Jason Rivest — and the "Fabulous Fables" team — Juli Broussard, Allison Davis, Juan Escobar, Tracy George, Robyn Hartzog, Bart Hesler and Ahmad Hernandez.

The "Fabulous Fables" team placed fifth, and the "Ye Gods" team placed ninth in the world finals.

Team coaches were Libbie Kurinec and Joan Hutchins.

Faith students and teachers believe that Odyssey of the Mind presents a rewarding challenge.

History Club competes in national contest

Fort Benning Schools

The History Club of Faith Middle School has represented Fort Benning Schools and the state of Georgia in the National History Day competition for the past two years.

Students and their sponsors, Mary Barnette and Pam Tate, devote many hours to researching the History Day theme.

The theme for 1988-89 was "The Individual in History." To depict their theme, students selected Christa McAuliffe, first teacher in space. Club members cleverly and poignantly depicted Christa McAuliffe's influence on history through an original play and performance, a video productions and a visual display.

The video production and the performance each won first place in the state competition. Team members then competed for national honors at the University of Maryland.

One team — Juli Broussard, Jennifer Campbell and Luis Negron — wrote and performed a play based on the life of Christa McAuliffe, entitled "I Touch the Future."

Another team — Roberto Bryan, Tanya McIntosh, Jose Miranda and Sheree Peters — developed an exciting video based on their research.

Tuesdays are special days at FB schools

Fort Benning Schools

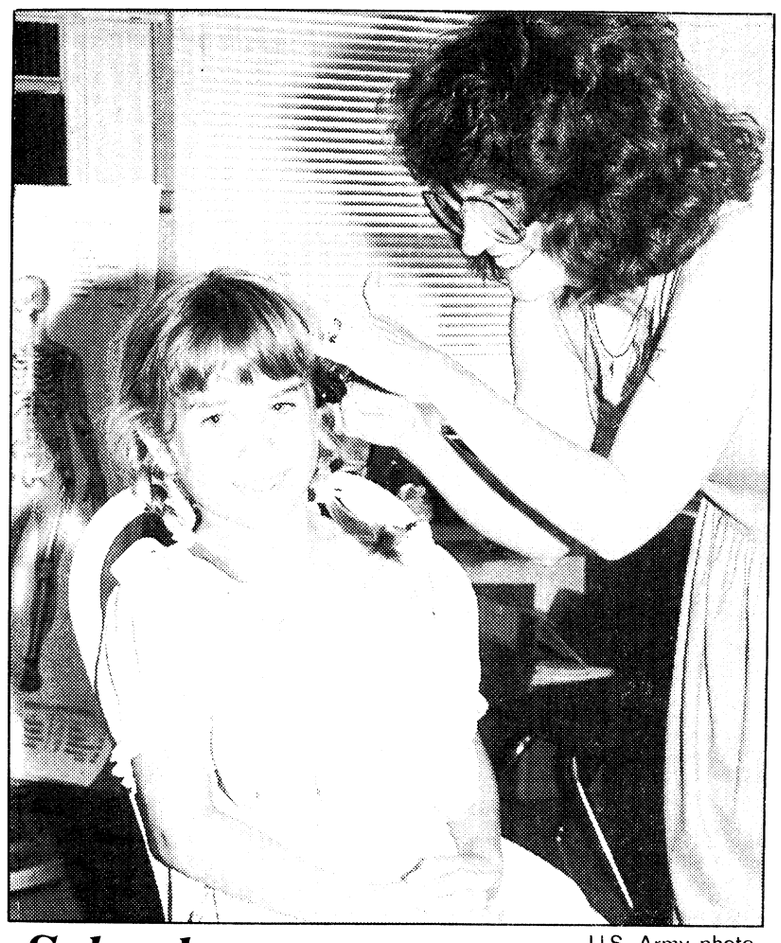
Why is Tuesday a shorter day for Fort Benning Schools?

The weekly required hours of attendance for Fort Benning School children meet state standards for school attendance in Georgia, but the schedule has been arranged to add 15 minutes to every day to permit students to be dismissed an hour early on Tuesday.

Teachers, however, are on duty until 4 p.m. on Tuesday giving them a two-hour block of time on that day for parent conferences, staff meetings or in-service training.

This time on Tuesday afternoons is a positive and unique feature of the school system that permits on-going development of professional knowledge and skills.

New programs, new materials, new teaching techniques, and updates on current techniques and requirements are all covered during sessions that take place Tuesday afternoons.



It is a time in which teachers can work together in their individual school or can work with teachers from throughout the school system.

Tuesday afternoons also promote better communication between school and home and school and community.

Additional time is provided then for parent conferences and for coordination of teaching activities with agencies on post who contribute their time and talents to providing learning experiences for students.

Fort Benning Schools' staff is always searching for ways to better the schools.

Tuesday afternoons provide increased opportunities for professional development and for communication.

Loyd School nurse, Kathy Brinkman, checks a student's ear before giving a hearing test. Fort Benning Schools have five registered nurses on the faculty, and each school has a well-equipped clinic. School nurses are educators as well as health care workers.

Special services available for special children

Fort Benning Schools

Fort Benning Schools offer services to many "special" children, including programs for specific learning disabilities, behavior disorders, speech-language disorders, physical and mental handicaps.

Two new positions have been added to the Fort Benning Special Education staff: a half-time occupational therapist and a part-time physical therapist. These new members provide specialized support for students with specific therapeutic/educational needs and serve students in all eight schools. Special programs are available in each school including educational screening, evaluation and individualized educational services for the handicapped.

Some students with severe handicaps may be served in an adjoining school district with Fort Benning Schools providing transportation, tuition and professional support.

New students entering Fort Benning with special education records will be placed in programs based on their current individualized education plan. Parents and teachers may refer students to the Child Study Committee in their home school. The Child Study Committee may include the principal, classroom teachers, special education teachers, counselors, nurses and parents. This committee screens referrals, evaluates school achievement and makes educational recommendations to meet the specific needs of students.

Parents are an integral part of referral, evaluation and placement in special education. Parents are encouraged to attend conferences and assist teachers in planning and implementing individualized educational goals.

If you have a handicapped child or if you want to know more, call your school principal, your child's classroom or special education teacher or Tommye Wentland, director of Special Education, 545-5520.

Schools offer students varied programs, activities

Fort Benning Schools

Students who attend Fort Benning schools have a variety of activities and programs available.

Learning Resource Center

"I get to go to the LRC." "I found it in the LRC." "I learned about that in the LRC." What is the LRC, and why is it a special part of your child's school life?

The letters LRC represent the concept of a Learning Resource Center, that area at school once known as the library. But in this information age, the function of the library has moved far beyond the housing of books.

In the Fort Benning Schools, the Learning Resource Centers have individual learning centers where children go for practice and reinforcement of basic skills.

In the Learning Resource Centers, filmstrips are shown, the computer may be used, tutorial devices such as the robot, Charlie, or the Combo-8 film stick machine provide drill and practice on math and reading skills and board games that teachers employ to make learning fun.

The Learning Resource Center functions as the hub of the school. It is a busy, bustling place where students come and go as their needs dictate, sometimes under teacher supervision and sometimes independently, working with the learning center staff to find appropriate materials or to engage in appropriate activities.

The old horse-drawn library is a thing of the past; enter the space-age technology of the Learning Resource Center.

Field Trips

Callaway Gardens, Westville, Sunshine Bakery and the Infantry Museum are just a few of the exciting places Fort Benning Schools' children visit on field trips during the school year.

The Fort Benning Schools' philosophy is "We believe real situations should be used in providing learning experiences, whenever feasible." Teachers do that throughout the year as they plan field trips to correlate with their various units of study.

Children at all grade levels and at every school may be involved in field trips. Parents are often invited to share the experience and to assist by being chaperons.

So hop aboard, the bus is leaving momentarily as we embark on a real-life learning experience — our field trip to adventure.

Lunch Program

The Fort Benning schools participate in the National School Lunch Program as governed by the U.S. Department of Agriculture through the Georgia State Food Service Program.

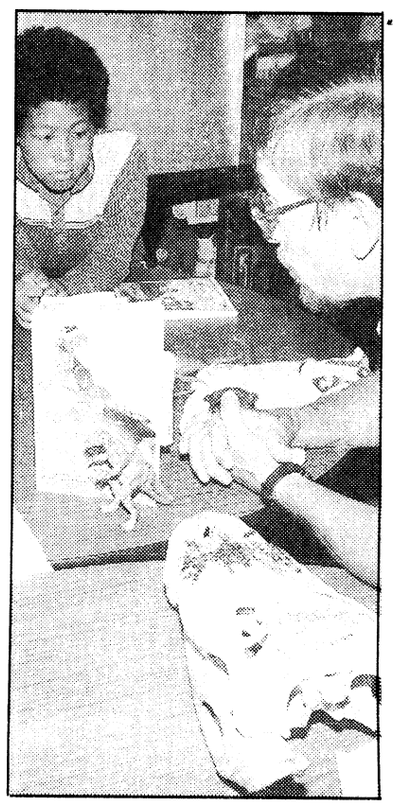
In addition to regular-priced meals, free or reduced meals are available for children of families whose income falls below certain levels established by the U.S. Department of Agriculture.

All Fort Benning Schools offer a hot lunch program each day. Three schools, McBride, Wilbur and Wilson also offer a breakfast program. Information regarding the free and reduced meal program will be available at each school during registration, and applications may be completed at that time.

English as Second Language

The English as a Second Language programs, at White School for second through fifth grades and at Faith Middle School for sixth, seventh and eighth, assist those students whose native language is not English.

Students who speak no English receive support from a specialized teacher to make their school experience a profitable one. The classes are taught in English with the ESL teacher acting as a consultant to the classroom teacher. Students in kindergarten and first grade are served within their home school.



Because of the many countries represented by Fort Benning Schools' students, the ESL program is a vital component in the educational process for children from all over the world.

Guidance and counseling curriculum

The guidance and counseling curriculum's primary goal is to help develop happy well-adjusted individuals who can function in our ever-changing society.

The program provides information on self-understanding, interpersonal relations, expressing ideas, gathering and processing information, rights and responsibilities, decision making, achievement, motivation and problem solving.

Each school is staffed by a school counselor who provides group guidance, individual counseling and consultation with teachers and parents.

Schools to provide services for handicapped children

Fort Benning Schools

The passage of a new law will require all school systems to provide services for handicapped children ages 3 and 4 by 1990-91.

Public Law 99-457 is an amendment to the landmark legislation Education of The Handicapped Act and outlines educational services for preschool children who are handicapped.

Fort Benning Schools will initiate a "Child Find" project in August 1989 to locate 3- and 4-year-old handicapped students who live on post and who require special education services. Psychological, speech, occupational and physical therapy evaluations will be available to identify the specific needs of these handicapped children.

By January 1990, Fort Benning Schools will begin some home-based programs such as speech therapy and parent education and training. Preschool handicapped students currently enrolled in certified educational programs may apply for psychological services, OT, PT and may qualify for limited transportation to their current setting.

If your handicapped child will be 3 or 4 years old by Sept. 1, 1989, and lives on the military reservation, contact the Fort Benning Schools Special Education Department, 545-5520. If you have questions regarding this program, call Tommye Wentland, director of Special Education, or Jackie Stansel, school psychologist, for more information.

Volunteers

Sybil Brandenburg was just one of several Patch parents who volunteered to prepare and serve foods from around the world for Patch students. Working in a variety of capacities, volunteers assist teachers and students with activities, work on special projects, serve as officers and committee members of parent-teacher organizations and serve as resource speakers. Fort Benning Schools invite community members to share their time and talent as a school volunteer. Information about volunteering is available from any school principal.

Kindergarten offers creativity, challenges for young minds

Fort Benning Schools

Exploration, new experiences, independence, discovery, curiosity, creativity, spontaneity and having a good feeling for "me," is what kindergarten at Fort Benning is all about.

The schools welcome these youngsters to their first school experience and strive to make it a positive and rewarding one.

Children must be 5 years old on or before Sept. 1 of the year they enter the Fort Benning kindergarten program. At registration, both birth certificate and certificate of immunization are required as is verification of physical examination, which has been completed within the year. Kindergarten registration will occur in August at the same time as registration for other grades.

Kindergarten at Fort Benning is a regular, full-day program consisting of all of the academic areas of reading, math, science, social studies, health and computer education. In addition, kindergarten students attend classes in art, music and physical education taught by specialists on a weekly basis. The kindergarten experience is rich and varied with particular focus on the development of the self concept and confidence of the student.

Plan now for dental exams

Don't wait till school starts to get your child to the dentist. Call Dental Clinic No. 1 at 544-2051/2052/2053 for an appointment for the records class and/or an exam appointment. Exam appointments are readily available for children ages 9 and over. Children ages 8 and under must be placed on a waiting list for an exam appointment. This will be accomplished at the records class or by stopping by the dental clinic if the child has a dental record on file. Individuals on the Delta Dental Plan are not eligible.

MACH receives accreditation

Martin Army Community Hospital will receive its accreditation certificate today at 10 a.m., in the lobby of the hospital.

Fort Benning Commander Maj. Gen. Michael F. Spigelmire will present the certificate to Col. Herbert E. Segal, MACH commander.

The Joint Commission on Accreditation of Health Care Organizations issued the certificate following a survey visit from representatives of the commission, Sept. 12 to 13, 1988. All Army hospitals within the continental United States are required to undergo JCAHO surveys every three years.

JCAHO inspected departments within the facility for such things as safety, organization, compliance with Health Service Command and Army regulations and policy.

BOSS ASKS

what do the soldiers want?

TRADOC news release

Fort Benning is one of two Training and Doctrine Command installations that will participate in a Department of the Army pilot program designed to give single soldiers a voice in selecting recreational programs.

Along with Fort Benning, Fort Jackson, S.C., will take part in an initiative called Better Opportunities for Single Soldiers, or BOSS. The program targets single soldiers through innovative recreational activities. BOSS is also in the pilot stage at other major commands' installations.

"Most MWR programs have been designed to appeal to the Army community in general," said Bill Sport, a program analyst for TRADOC's community and family activities directorate. "While they are excellent programs, they do not necessarily target young single men and women. BOSS is intended to provide some of the activities that young single soldiers want."

Army and TRADOC morale, welfare and recreation representatives will kick off the program at a forum here Aug. 24 and 25.

Attending the forum will be installation MWR officials and a council of about 15 single soldiers representing a cross section of the single soldier community here — men, women, trainees, permanent party soldiers, tenant units and other groups. A similar forum will be held at Fort Jackson in September.

"The purpose of each forum is to explain how the initiative will operate," Sport said. "But more importantly, it is to find out directly from the single soldiers what programs and activities best meet their needs.

"A $10,000 grant will be given to each installation to be spent on activities selected by single soldiers for single soldiers. The money can be spent all at one time on a large activity, or it can be used to pay for several different activities."

DA officials hope to begin the program Army-wide during fiscal 1990. They are currently exploring ways to fund the expanded BOSS program.

When the program is fully established, each installation will have a single soldiers council to select activities for the community.

"The results achieved and lessons learned at both Benning and Jackson will be used to help other TRADOC and Army installations set up similar programs," Sport said.

Civilian management key to post's mission

By Patty P. Pfeiffer
Fort Benning Management Association

Brig. Gen. William M. Steele, assistant commandant, USAIS, spoke to a Fort Benning Management Association group about management here July 20 .

According to Steele, civilian management is the key ingredient to the performance of Fort Benning's mission. This is due to the increased civilian strength and the decreased military strength.

"We must continue to train our career civilian employees and provide them with professional development. Fort Benning spent more than half a million dollars on civilian training last year and trained more than 10,000 employees. These are impressive figures," Steele said.

Military and civilian supervisors must know each other's personnel systems, according to Steele. "Military personnel have a high rate of attendance at civilian personnel management training courses. We must get civilian supervisors trained in military personnel management."

"The closing of some bases by DA and force reduction of troops from Europe may impact on Fort Benning." According to Steele, Fort Benning has the capability of facilitating these additional missions.

Steele said the challenges in the future are the Army Communities of Excellence Program, energy conservation, winning Project Spirit Awards and a $34 million deficit for fiscal year '90. "In the future we must steward our resources wisely — we must do more with less — we must look to the future."

The Fort Benning Management Association hosts a luncheon meeting the third Thursday of each month at the Main Post NCO Club, 11:30 a.m. The Association is open to anyone interested in leadership and management. For membership information, call Kathy Corizzo, 545-7612.

Valley Rescue Mission's meals beefed up

Soldiers' donation

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

Dinner plates at the Valley Rescue Mission in Columbus were beefed up for at least a week when cadre members of Company B, 3rd Battalion, 32nd Infantry, Infantry Training Center donated 150 pounds of beef to the mission.

According to 1st Lt. Lynn Hinman, executive officer, the donation resulted from his commander's, Capt. Patrick Strothers, decision to slaughter a bull he had raised to supplement the company party.

Hinman said the commander's intent was to cook as much meat as needed for the party and then divide up the rest of the beef among the 19 members of the company. However, the cadre decided they would like to see the beef go to someone who really needed it.

"My commander tasked me with finding a needy organization, so I consulted my pastor who recommended the mission," he said.

The mission gladly accepted the offer, Hinman said.

Sgt. 1st Class Robert Hillenburg, Staff Sgt. Lynn Martin, Staff Sgt. Mark Conley, Strothers and Hinman made the delivery of the beef to the downtown location.

Rev. Wallace P. Sellers, director of the mission, was on hand to greet the men.

"This is the first time someone has given us a donation of this type, and we are glad to get it," he said. "This much meat will supplement the cafeteria for a week."

Sellers said more than 300 people eat daily in the mission's cafeteria.

The mission serves the whole Chattahoochee Valley. It's purpose is to provide shelter for the area's needy.

The mission has four male dormitories and four houses to shelter women and children. At present, the mission is housing 86 people, according to Sellers.

The current residents, along with anyone who walks in off the street hungry will benefit from the soldier's donation.

Sellers added that although this is not the first time someone from Fort Benning has given a donation, it was the first of this type.

"We certainly can use it," he said.

OPINION

VARIOUS VOICES: What does your unit do to promote NCO development?

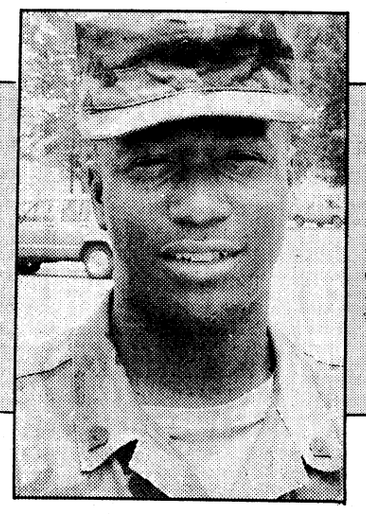
Staff Sgt. Danny McGaha, 533rd Tran. Co., 43rd Eng. Bn., 36th Eng. Grp. — "In my company, all the NCOs get to attend the schools available to them, and an NCOPD class is conducted monthly."



Sgt. 1st Class John Wade, Co. A, 2nd Bn., 54th Inf. — "The sergeant major promotes reenlistment to get careers on line. He emphasizes the importance of military and civilian schooling, then he provides his soldiers the opportunity to get it."

Sgt. Donald Ward, Co. C, 2nd Bn., 11th Inf. — "We have an NCOPD class once a month, and schools are available if soldiers want to go."

1st Lt. Jay Kashouty, Co. C, 3rd Bn., 75th Rgr. Regt. — "We have NCOPD training coordinated through the first sergeant and the sergeant major. This is done on a daily basis. We also send our NCOs to school in the NCOES chain as well as courses such as Sniper and Ranger schools."

Spec. Stanley Mayers, HHC, 197th Inf. Bde. — "We conduct NCOPD classes weekly, and we are encouraged to attend college courses, as well as pursue advanced military education."

SFC Freddie Walker, HQ Co., 43rd Eng. Bn., 36th Eng. Grp. — "Our company has training daily with both NCOs and officers. We also have informal meetings in which NCOs can really talk to each other."

CG commends post for showing excellence

During the period July 24 to 27, we were visited by the TRADOC Communities of Excellence Evaluation team. While we don't know how we did in comparison to other TRADOC installations, I can tell you we came out as winners.

Where ever I go about post, I continue to make Fort Benning a see evidence of pride in self, pride in work place and pride in living areas. It's seen in the freshly mown lawns, the newly painted buildings, but above all in the willing, eager service to customers.

I see this "can-do" spirit at the inprocessing centers, in various offices, at the finance center. It abounds throughout the post and results in a more pleasant place to live and work, raising the morale of all.

The TRADOC evaluation team saw this, too. The team members were impressed with what they saw and told me they appreciated all the hard work that went into getting ready for the visit and in the way we treated them.

We've got the ball rolling now. Let's keep it moving. Let's great place to live and work, a place where our Community of Excellence is a way of life.

My sincerest thanks to all who have and will continue to support this vital Community Program.

HOME SWEET HOME
Lock the doors and pull the shades

Sgt. John Smith gets the unwanted opportunity to experience an inspection of his home when a white-gloved sergeant major comes knocking at the door.

By James Whorton
Army News Service

Someone was knocking at the door — knocking hard.

And when Sgt. John Smith answered the door, what he planned to say ("Who the heck do you think you are, banging on my door on Friday night?") froze in his mouth.

Standing at the door, in dress greens with white gloves, was the biggest, meanest-looking person Smith had ever seen.

"I'm Command Sergeant Major Buster Buttox, IG quarters inspection team," the sergeant major bellowed. "You have two minutes to prepare your quarters for inspection. You will unlock everything that is locked, open every door or drawer that is closed, and have your family fall out here in the living room. DO IT NOW!!!"

Smith started to protest, but one look at the hard face in the doorway changed his mind. He called out for his wife Sara and his son Curt. Sarah came out of the kitchen with Curt right behind.

"What's going on?" Sarah asked.

"I'm not sure," Smith responded.

Buttox strode into the living room and began speaking, reading from a clipboard in his gloved hands.

"I am Command Sergeant Major Buster Buttox, IG quarters inspection team. This evening, I will conduct a health and welfare inspection of your quarters. If I find any deficiencies, you will be required to undergo a reinspection within 24 hours. I will begin with your TA-50 Sergeant Smith."

Smith led Buttox to the hall closet. Inside, in a couple of duffle bags, a laundry bag and two gym bags, was Smith's gear.

"No-go," Buttox said, writing on his clipboard. "Your TA-50 should be ready and packed according to unit SOP at all times. You are obviously not ready to deploy."

"Give me a break," Smith responded. "I didn't know you were coming."

"If you found one of your soldier's gear looking like this, what would happen?" Buttox asked.

Smith didn't respond.

Buttox ran his finger over a shelf in the closet and drew it back, showing Smith the thick gray dust on the white glove.

"No-go."

"But sergeant major, that's the closet," Smith said.

"Just how often do you GI this place, sergeant?" Buttox asked.

"Well, Sarah cleans every couple of weeks, but..."

"Are you telling me you don't have regularly scheduled GI parties, sergeant?" Buttox bellowed. "This is government-furnished housing. It is just as important to keep this place clean as it is to keep the barracks clean. You WILL institute a weekly GI party schedule, and I will be around for the first few to make sure you're doing it right. Do you understand?"

"Yes, sergeant major."

Sarah shook her head and walked away.

"Now, let's see the bedroom."

Buttox walked into the master bedroom. "Where are your clothes?" he asked Smith.

"In the closet here and that set of drawers."

Buttox went to the closet and started tossing clothes out. When he came to Smith's greens, he threw them on the floor.

"Don't you have any organization? Haven't you gotten the clothing diagrams yet? They show you how to set up your closet and arrange things in your drawers. Let's look at those drawers," Buttox said.

He strode over to the drawers, looked at the top drawer, pulled it out and dumped its contents on the floor.

"Wrong! Wrong! Wrong!" he yelled. "Your socks aren't rolled! Your undershorts look as if they were just thrown in there! And your military and civilian T-shirts are all mixed up! Can't you do anything right?"

"But sergeant major, my wife does that for me. And besides," Smith said, summoning up his courage, "I'm an NCO. This isn't the barracks; this is my home. What's going on here anyway?"

"At ease, sergeant!" Buttox yelled. "This isn't your home. This is government quarters, just like the barracks. Why do you think people live in the barracks anyway? Because they're single. Did you know that 60 percent of the Army is married now? Did you know that many of your own enlisted soldiers are living off post, in government quarters or on the economy now? But you spend most of your time on your soldiers who happen to live in the barracks because they're single. How often do you visit the barracks? How often do you visit your married soldiers? Why do you have a different standard for each of them? Why, Smith?"

"I don't know, sergeant major," Smith said.

"Well, I've seen enough," Buttox said. "This place is a no-go. Get hold of our new quarters SOP today. It has all the diagrams you need to get ready for tomorrow night."

"But I've got plans for Saturday," Smith said.

"You HAD plans, sergeant! You WILL GI this place Saturday, and I WILL inspect at 1800. And I want to see a GI party schedule with family member duties listed when I come back. I want to see this place spotless. By the way, how long since you really scrubbed your toilet bowls? They better shine when I come back, sergeant. I can see I'm gonna be spending a lot of time with you," Buttox said.

Smith woke up, his wife tugging at his arm. His body was covered with sweat.

"You must have been having a bad dream," Sarah said. "You were moaning and tossing and turning. Are you okay?"

"Yeah, yeah, I'm fine. I guess it's about time to get up. I need to go in a little early today. We've got barracks inspection this morning. I might do things a little differently today. After all, it is their home.

DEAR EDITOR

I have a question. On page A-5 of the July 21 issue of The Bayonet, there is a full-page advertisement for cigarettes. On page A-7 is an article entitled, "What kind of smoker are you?" The purpose of this article was to assist smokers in recognizing their behavior in the hopes that it would help them quit. On page A-8 is a DON'T SMOKE sign. Now, my question is why are you advertising cigarettes when the Army's goal is to have a smoke-free Army?

Capt. Lynne M. Marrard
Military Police Activity

Your question has been asked by many people before you. In fact, the subject is presently the subject of some pretty heated debates in Washington.

The answer to your question is although the Army's goal is to have a smoke-free Army, it can't tell publishers what to and what not to advertise because of certain inalienable rights granted under the First Amendment.

Our publisher, the Ledger-Enquirer, is responsible for selling the advertisement space in The Bayonet. It has the right, as provided by freedom of the press, to sell an ad to just about anyone at their own discretion.

However, ads sold for inclusion in The Bayonet must meet the standards set down in the regulation that governs military newspapers. The ads must conform to the requirements stated in paragraph 3-14 of AR 360-81, which reads:

"No Army newspaper or CE publication may:

- Contain material that implies that the Army or any of its components endorses or favors a specific commercial product, commodity or service.

All that means is if our publisher only ran the ads of one particular tobacco product, it would begin to look as if The Bayonet endorsed that particular brand. If the publisher accepts one brand for advertisement, it must accept other brands that wish to advertise and meet the publisher's terms.

- Subscribe, even at no cost, to a commercial or feature wire or other services whose primary purpose is the advertisement or promotion of commercial products, commodities or services.

This means we cannot use the articles we write or obtain from wire services to promote or, I would assume, demean a particular commercial product, commodity or service. I could put an article in the paper that stated, "don't smoke," but it would be against the regulation if the article stated, "don't smoke X-BRAND cigarettes, or just the reverse, "smoke X-BRAND cigarettes."

- Carry any advertisement that implies discrimination.

Tobacco product ads do not discriminate against any race, creed, color, sex or national origin of purchasers, users or patrons. The advertisements may be offensive to some, but still, this rule is not broken by running tobacco product advertisements.

I'm sure that all ads are capable of offending someone, somewhere in some way at some time. As it stands now, however, the only alternative to being offended is to turn the page, quickly.

MACH implements systematic approach to care

Martin Army Community Hospital

MARTIN CARE is a systematic approach to health care delivery that encompasses both the health care delivered at Martin Army and the care arranged for by MACH but provided by the PRIMUS Clinic, by partnership providers, under CHAMPUS and supplemental care programs and through evacuation arranged with other DOD medical treatment facilities such as Walter Reed or Eisenhower Army Medical Center.

It is a total system to provide caring, responsive health care support to the total beneficiary population.

Some of the things Martin Care is doing to make things better for our beneficiaries include:

Outpatient Clinic — same day appointments have been increased from about 60 per day six months ago to 100 in July 1989. There are an average of about 12 unused appointments on any given day. It is suggested you call for an appointment before seeking care under CHAMPUS or the PRIMUS Clinic. It is hoped to increase the Outpatient Clinic same-day appointments to 125 per day for September 1989. There will be virtually no waiting for those who have an appointment. The number to call for an appointment is 544-1569/1705.

Parking — The large main parking area adjacent to the hospital, which was previously reserved for staff, has been designated for patient parking during normal duty hours. This should increase the number of parking spaces close to the hospital allocated for patients.

Additionally, handicapped parking has been doubled in the last year and is carefully monitored by the Military Police.

Full-service pharmacy — MACH is working with Army-Air Force Exchange Service to expand to a full-service Pharmacy at the Post Exhange Mall. This action will depend on the availability of additional space being provided by AAFES.

The Pharmacy will be testing a new refill service modeled after the "early bird" car service programs. Patients will have the opportunity to drop off prescription refills prior to the Pharmacy opening and have them ready for pickup later the same day.

Emergency Room renovation — The Martin Army Community Hospital Emergency Room will undergo total renovation beginning in late 1989. The Emergency Room renovation project will improve patient flow from the reception desk, through triage, to the treatment room. Additionally, the design will increase patient privacy. The cost of this project is $700,000.

The Emergency Room will temporarily relocate to the present Outpatient Clinic during the year it will take to complete the renovation.

The Outpatient Clinic will move to the Women's Health Clinic in the old hospital area near the Infantry Museum while the Women's Health Clinic mission will be accomplished by the MACH Ob-Gyn Clinic.

Expanded treatment — MACH has established 11 Partnership Agreements in six specialty areas that will result in 6,500 retirees and family members being seen each year who would otherwise have to go downtown under CHAMPUS.

Improved processing of clinic consults — Recently MACH implemented a new system to ensure patients receive timely specialty care. Patients are sent a card as soon as a specialty clinic referral is requested either informing them of the appointment date or letting them know they should seek care elsewhere under CHAMPUS. Questions should be referred to Sue Jones, 544-1611.

Arrangements were made for Magnetic Resonance Imaging studies to be performed in Columbus so the patients needing these highly technical radiology examinations wouldn't have to drive to Montgomery, Ala., to get them.

The contract for this service was negotiated at a considerable cost savings and provides more timely response on appointments and test results.

Hospital appearance — In July 1988, considerable effort was made to upgrade the internal appearance of the 31-year-old main hospital building and its outlying clinics and TMCs.

During fiscal year 1988, the Medical Department Activity spent $480,000 on new furnishings to make clinic waiting areas and patient dayrooms more comfortable for patients and staff. This year, during Phase II of the upgrade program, we expect to expand at least as much to continue the program. This does not include the support in interior painting and other maintenance accomplished for MACH by the Department of Engineering and Housing.

Pediatric Clinic — This year, the hours of operation of the Pediatric Clinic were extended into the early evening for the convenience of working parents to bring their children to the clinic. Questions should be referred to the Pediatric Clinic, 544-3218.

Surgeons and physicians — The number of general surgeons, orthopedic surgeons and physician assistants assigned to Martin Army Community Hospital will increase dramatically over previous months by September 1989. This, plus the above described Partnership Provider agreements, should significantly increase the hospital's ability to provide specialty and subspecialty care to patients.

Life Style Center — A Life Style Center was recently opened to help noninsulin-dependent diabetes patients reorient their life styles to better cope with their medical condition.

The programs available now are Cardiac Rehabilitation, Diabetes Management, Smoking Cessation, Coumadin Clinic, and the hospital staff has plans to expand the programs offered to include Chronic Hypertension and Obesity clinics in the future. The telephone number for the Life Style Center is 544-1275.

If you are interested in learning more about good nutrition and eating for a healthy life style, come to the "Art of Healthy Eating" presented monthly in the recently expanded Nutrition Clinic at Martin Army Community Hospital. The lecture is open to anyone entitled to care and is taught by Maj. Carol Handley, chief, Community Nutrition, a registered dietitian. Reserve a space by calling 544-1542.

Family Practice Residency Program — Martin Army Community Hospital has the oldest and most well known Family Practice Residency Program in the Army. Seventy-five percent of active duty Army families are currently enrolled in Family Practice at one of its four locations at Fort Benning. The telephone number of Family Practice at Martin Army Community Hospital is 544-1710.

Don't waste your military experience.

Guard it.

It took you years of study and hard work to master a military skill. So, why throw that experience away?

Instead, lend your know-how to your hometown Army National Guard. Spend one weekend a month and two weeks a year protecting your community and country.

And in return, you'll get a good paycheck, plus many of the military benefits you've enjoyed as a full-time soldier.

For more information, see your local in-service recruiter or unit re-enlistment NCO.

And find out how your military experience will pay off in your hometown Army Guard.

Reserves train in the rain

By Dorothy Young
The Wildcat Magazine

The summer of '89 is going to be remembered as one of the rainiest summers in year's for Georgia.

A drought gripped much of the nation for the last two years, and all that collective praying (for rain) has produced downpours that have flooded basements and cities, and made it almost impossible to do a full day's work on any construction site.

In the midst of the rain, the 370th Engineer Detachment, Fort Stewart, Ga., was at Fort Benning for two weeks of annual training to build a retaining wall for the 2nd Army Noncommissioned Officers Academy in the Harmony Church area.

"It hasn't been easy, that's for sure," said 1st Lt. Frank Eubanks, detachment commander. "We had six days of rain that created the biggest delay in the project. The other delay was due to lack of supplies. If it weren't for Larry Jones of the post's Director of Engineering and Housing, we wouldn't have gotten most of what we needed. The NCOs here at the academy were also extremely helpful," he said.

Building a wall 8 feet tall and about 200 feet long is a new experience for the unit.

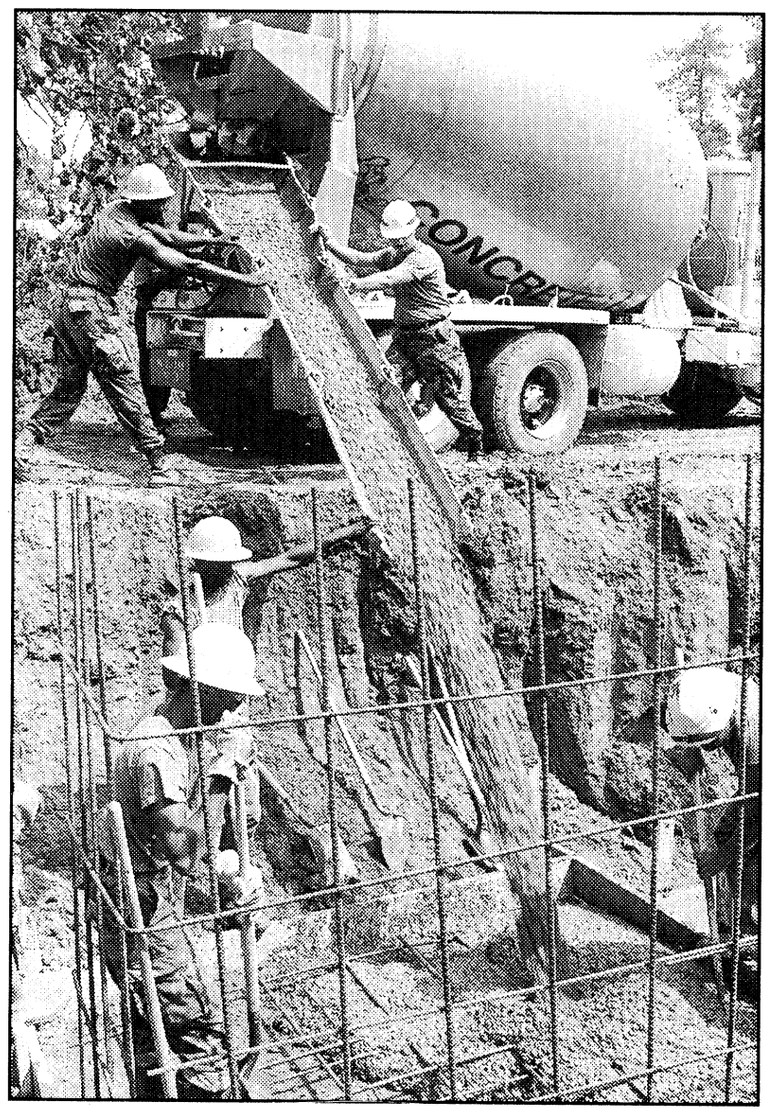
"We've done concrete work before but never a job of this size," said Sgt. 1st Class Robert Knight, the detachment's first sergeant. "We dug the hole for the wall by digging up 300 cubic yards of dirt, and we did everything else except mix and pour the concrete. That was done by a commercial supplier."

The 26-person detachment worked long days, which began at 5 a.m. and lasted until 10 or 11 at night. The rain put the soldiers behind schedule building the wall, but they managed to stay busy when they couldn't work outside.

"We tried not to let the rain get us too far behind," said Spec. Deon Gibson. "We built the forms, which are wooden boards to hold the cement in place. We actually got ahead of schedule sometimes because we had races to see who could bend the rebars the fastest. We made a game out of the work so we could have some fun. This has been a tough project, but we managed to do a good job. Were proud of it," he said.

While most of the soldiers were building the wall, four were going through MOS training building cement pads for two dumpsters in the academy area. Sgt. Jerry P. Dennis of the 3294th USARF School, Macon, Ga., was the instructor. For six months prior to his visit here, Dennis traveled from his home in Warner Robins, Ga., to Fort Stewart to conduct MOS training during the 370th's drill weekends. The second phase of training included the hands-on projects the soldiers completed during their AT.

"I joined the 3294th in January, and this is my first class," said Dennis. "It's been a good experience for me because I'm getting to teach something I know very well. I did construction work in the regular Army, and I build forms and pour concrete for a living in Warner Robins. It's also been a learning experience for me because I'll do things a little differently with my next class," he said



The unit had two days left to finish the wall, and managed to pour the last cubic yards of concrete on the last day before going home.

"If it hadn't been for the rain, we wouldn't have had so many delays. But in spite of that, I think we've done very well," said the commander.

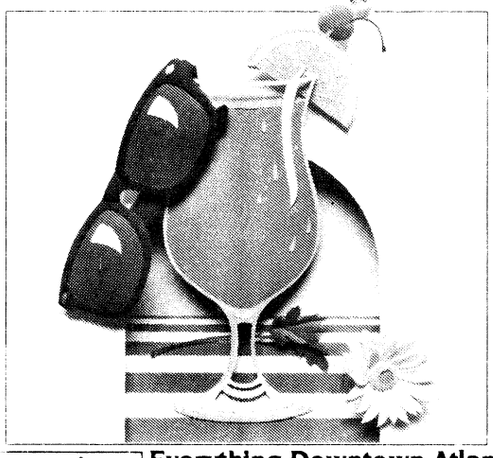
Atlanta's mayor inspires OSUTsoldiers

By Marilyn Balzarini
Infantry Training Center

Soldiers at the Infantry Training Center were inspired by the message of a distinguished speaker last week.

Atlanta's Mayor Andrew Young addressed graduates of One Station Unit Training from 1st Battalion, 38th Infantry and 4th Battalion, 30th Infantry.



Young said the graduating infantrymen had learned three important lessons. They had learned to be men. They had learned that they are children of God. And they had learned to accept people who are different from themselves.

Young said he feels infantry training is a valuable experience. "These men have learned discipline and respect for themselves." "This type of training would be beneficial for all young Americans."

Young said watching the graduation ceremony made him even more aware of the need to promote world peace. Seeing the men who will risk their lives to defend our nation emphasizes the need to avoid sending them into battle, he said.

H&R Block Tax Course Starts September 6th

Thousands of people are learning the skill of income tax preparation from H&R Block and are earning money as income tax preparers.

H&R Block, the world's largest tax preparation service, is offering a basic income tax course starting September 6th with morning, evening and Saturday classes available. Classes will be offered in Columbus, Phenix City and other area locations.

During the 13-week course, in addition to learning the nuts and bolts of tax preparation, you will also receive clear explanations of the 1989 tax law changes and how they will affect your situation. You will discover how to benefit from the changes and how to use the new tax laws to your advantage. You'll receive this information from some of the finest and most experienced tax preparation instructors in the country. And you'll have the opportunity to expand or enhance your job-related skills.

Courses are ideally suited for people who want to increase their tax knowledge and learn how to save money on taxes or who are looking for a rewarding career. No prerequisites are required to enroll.

Qualified course graduates may be offered job interviews for positions with Block. Many accept employment with Block because of the flexible hours available. However, Block is under no obligation to offer employment, nor are graduates under any obligation to accept employment with H&R Block.

One low course fee includes all textbooks, supplies and tax forms necessary for completion of the course. Certificates and 7.5 continuing education units will be awarded upon successful completion of the course.

Registration forms and a brochure for the income tax course may be obtained by contacting the H&R Block office at 2511 Airport Thruway, Columbus, GA 31904. Telephone 324-5603.

Sgt. Wendell Cole, a howitzer crew section chief, directs the movement of his crew's howitzer.

Hard training pays at evaluation

By Eric J. Kuyper
197th Infantry Brigade

All 18 sections of the 4th Battalion, 41st Field Artillery underwent a Howitzer Section Evaluation July 24 through 29, attempting to prove they are the best at supporting the mission.

The primary mission of the 4th Battalion, 41st Field Artillery Regiment, is to provide timely and accurate fires in support of the 197th Infantry Brigade.

Soldiers were tested in all field artillery gunnery tasks and a variety of other tasks designed to evaluate every aspect of their jobs and their section's ability to perform as a team.

This year's Howitzer Section Evaluation resulted in the highest average scores in the past four years. The section average improved more than 10 percent since last year, pushing the battalion's average to 84.2 percent and into the "Band of Excellence." Not one section scored below 70 percent, indicating a high level of proficiency throughout the battalion.

But none did better than the men of 1st section, Charlie Battery. Led by Sgt. Larry D. Dawson, this team of "Charlie Dawgs" outshot, outmoved and outperformed all other sections, scoring 98.1 percent, the highest score ever recorded by a section.

Capt. Javier Mora, Btry. C commander, said he is delighted by their performance and the performance of his battery overall. "Sgt. Dawson is an excellent leader, and we knew it was only a matter of time before he would prove it to the rest of the battalion.

"I attribute our success to the training we received during our recent rotation to the National Training Center and to the time made available for the battery-level FTXs. While under battery-level control, we could evaluate and train our weak areas to standard."

As a whole , the battalion has been training long and hard in preparation for its annual Standardized External Evaluation, which tests the entire battalion and incorporates those skills emphasized by the Howitzer Section Evaluation.

With the scores achieved, the Howitzer Section Evaluation validates the entire training program of the battalion, demonstrating 4th Bn., 41st Fld. Arty.'s ability to provide "Steel on Target," and setting the standards for which future evaluations will be judged.

Computers keep Howitzers on track

By Willie Hay
197th Infantry Brigade

When the soldiers of 4th Battalion, 41st Field Artillery go to the field, they can be sure their howitzers are right on target because of a computer.

The computer is the tactical fire direction system — the heart of the battalion's tactical command and control capability. It's an automated system that ensures both accuracy and timeliness of artillery fire.

"The field artillery must do two basic things for the maneuver commander on the ground — provide both accuracy and responsiveness of fire in support of maneuver operations," said Capt. Rex Davis, fire direction officer for the battalion, during its recent field training exercise.

"Accuracy of fire is assured by the battery computer system, or BCS, located at each fire direction center," Davis said. "The computer provides a unique, separate aim point and set of firing commands for each howitzer."

According to Davis, BCS is the successor of the "parallel sheaf" method, under which all howitzers in a battery fired from the same data based on a center-of-battery to center-of-target solution.

"That meant all the rounds landed parallel to each other, even though all the howitzers were on the same azimuth of fire," Davis said.

"But because the TACFIRE system enables us to determine individual aim points, all the rounds fired can now be programmed to converge on a single target, if desired," he added.

Timely response to calls for fire is another outcome of the TACFIRE computer, which links communications devices in the battalion's tactical operations center with those of each forward observer and battery in the field, Davis said.

"The computer has automated such previously manual tasks as plotting targets on the map, compiling target lists and passing them verbally or hand-carrying them between all the various elements in the field," he said. "This dramatically improves our ability to respond quickly to ground forces in the planning and execution of field artillery fires."

According to Davis, the main TACFIRE computer receives all message traffic, analyzes the data, and determines which howitzers will fire, along with the type and amount of ammunition that should be expended on the target.

"It also ensures the safety of all units on the ground by alerting the artillery control console operator whenever the location of a call for fire would pass over friendly troops," Davis said.

"But even though TACFIRE is a highly automated system, it wouldn't work without the soldiers who operate it," he added. "The forward observers must provide accurate data in the proper format for the system to analyze, and the console operator has to properly process that data to get effective and responsive artillery fire."

REENLIST UNITED STATES ARMY

FORT BENNING

MAKE A CAREER DECISION.

This is your chance to become part of an elite team of soldiers who collect and analyze a variety of electronic transmissions as well as voice communications.

It also could afford you the opportunity to study a foreign language such as Russian, German, Korean, Arabic, Spanish or Czech.

If you're completing your tour of duty, it may be worth considering reenlistment for training in this vital area.

In conjunction with your duties, you'll be using some of the most high-tech electronic equipment available as well as employing sophisticated analysis techniques.

This field features assignments throughout the United States, and also overseas.

Interested? Come talk to me, and we'll review your qualifications. And, if you wish, bring your spouse along.

ARMY. BE ALL YOU CAN BE.® REENLIST.

NOW'S YOUR CHANCE TO LET THE ARMY KNOW WHAT YOU WANT TO DO.

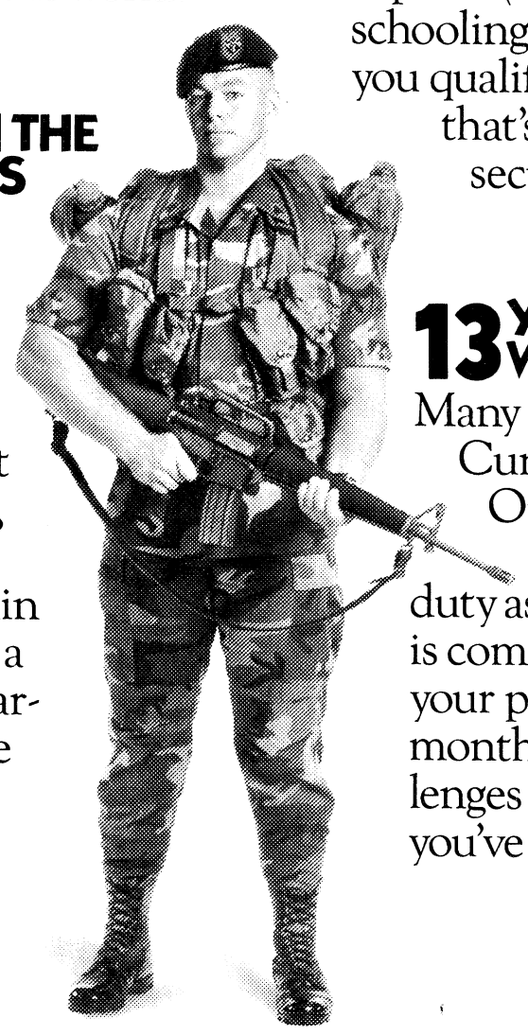
1 YOU CAN CHANGE YOUR MOS. There are hundreds of new MOS's to choose from under the Army Training Reenlistment Option. Or, you may be able to reenlist with the same MOS, for airborne training.

2 YOU CAN STAY WITH YOUR PRESENT REGIMENT. Under the Regiment of Choice Option, you can reenlist and stay with your present regiment, or try a different one. If you're not presently in a regiment, you may be able to get into one. This option lets you make long-range plans, because you'll know where your regiment will be located.

3 YOU CAN GO TO BERLIN. If you want to be on the front line of freedom, you may be able to reenlist under the Berlin Brigade Option. It isn't an easy duty, but it is an important one. The Berlin Brigade symbolizes our country's commitment to peace in Europe.

4 YOU CAN JOIN THE "BIG RED ONE." Under the Combat Arms Unit of Choice Option, you could reenlist to become part of the "Big Red One," or any one of a number of the Army's best units. You don't have to be in a combat unit now, and most of these units have vacancies in almost every MOS.

5 YOU CAN SEE MORE OF AMERICA. With the CONUS to CONUS Option, you can reenlist to relocate in a different part of the United States. Naturally, it all depends on whether your MOS is needed at your desired location.



6 YOU CAN LEARN A HIGH-TECH SKILL. Under the USAISC Option, you may qualify for the U.S. Army Information Systems Command. There, you can learn high-tech skills like radio teletype operation or satellite communications repair. There are over 140 MOS's, and you can serve in CONUS or overseas.

7 YOU CAN COME BACK TO THE STATES. If you're overseas and want to come home, the CONUS Station Option can make it happen. Of course, a lot depends on what your MOS is, and where you want to go, but the Army will make every effort to relocate you, upon completion of your overseas tour, at a location of your choice.

8 YOU CAN GO OVERSEAS. The Overseas Reenlistment Option makes it possible for you to spend a minimum of 12 months in Germany, Korea, or some other exciting part of the world.

9 YOU CAN JOIN THE SPECIAL FORCES OR RANGERS. If you're special, the Special Forces or Ranger Regiment Option may be just right for you. You must be Airborne qualified, have an MOS that's needed (or agree to train in one) and qualify for a SECRET Security clearance. The demands are great, but so are the rewards.

10 YOU CAN JOIN THE OLD GUARD. If you'd like to march with one of the Army's oldest and most prestigious outfits, then reenlist for the Old Guard Option. If you make it, you're guaranteed assignment in Washington, D.C., for up to 3 years.

11 YOU CAN LEARN A NEW LANGUAGE. Under the Language School Option, you could learn a second language of your own choosing, provided the Army's need matches your choice. Once you've completed your training, you could serve in a foreign country. And, of course, there's great satisfaction in being bilingual.

12 YOU CAN JOIN AN INSCOM UNIT. Under the Intelligence and Security Command and Electronic Warfare/Cryptologic Units and Training Option (INSCOM/EW), your schooling will be intensive. But if you qualify, you'll be part of a group that's essential to our nation's security efforts.

13 YOU CAN STAY RIGHT WHERE YOU ARE. Many soldiers do. Under the Current Station Stabilization Option, you can reenlist to stay at your present duty assignment after your tour is completed. You're guaranteed your present duty for 12 to 14 months. You can find new challenges and rewards at a place you've come to know.

As you can see, reenlisting opens up a world of opportunities for you. Of course, qualifications are different for each option. But if you qualify, you'll be well on your way to expanding your Army, and your life, experience.

To find out more details about each reenlistment option, talk to your Retention NCO. They are there to make sure you know what your choices are, and to help you chart the best course for your future.

REENLIST. BE ALL YOU CAN BE.®

ASK THE JUDGE

By Michael H. Lane
Legal Assistance Attorney

Q. My wife and I have been married for just over a year, and we just found the perfect home. Both of us work, so our combined salaries are high enough, and we could get a VA loan so that there would be no down payment.

But when the mortgage lender sent in to check our credit, he said we could not have the loan. My wife and I have never been late in paying bills, but the lender said that the bills that I had before we got married disqualified us.

Can he do this to us? And what can we do about it?

A. Your situation is not unusual. Because of the millions of credit applications that take place daily, most businesses use credit reports to qualify borrowers for all types of transactions.

This credit reporting industry keeps records on most people who have ever sought credit.

Until 1971, the operations of this industry were not federally regulated, and the reason anyone was denied credit was not released unless the lender voluntarily did so. As a result of horror stories about inaccurate records ruined reputations and lost job opportunities, Congress passed the Fair Credit Reporting Act in that year and placed the agencies under the jurisdiction of the Federal Trade Commission.

The act sets down rules, which in general give the applicant for credit certain rights:

A person denied credit is entitled to:

- The name and address of the consumer reporting agency that reported the information to the lender.
- The right of access to information and sources in his file in most cases.
- The right to have inaccurate entries reinvestigated by the consumer reporting agency.
- The right to have an explanation of a dispute placed in the file when the creditor refuses to change erroneous or outdated information.
- Time limits on the amount of time certain information may be retained in the file.

Your premarital credit record is the problem, so that is where your efforts must focus. Since you were denied credit, you are entitled to a free summary of your file if you write to the credit bureau within 30 days. From the file, you will be able to review each old account, which has a rating on it from "1" (pays on time) to "9" (bad debt).

Any account you paid off, even if it was years later, should be no worse than "5" (paid off in more than 120 days). Many creditors do not update the information, so many files continue to reflect entries that are no longer accurate. A repossessed auto is an "8." Once it's paid off, it can be upgraded to "5." This may be the difference in getting a loan or being turned down. Once you correct inaccurate matter in your file, you may find you can get that home loan.

You have already started clearing your credit record by maintaining good credit after your marriage. An account must be removed after seven years (10 for bankruptcy), but at your request the consumer agency may remove it sooner if it's deemed to be "stale" or obsolete.

By checking the credit record, removing inaccurate data and keeping new credit on time, your record clears itself. If you have questions, make an appointment with a legal assistance attorney at 545-3281.

Female blackhats join 507th

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

For the first time in two years, females are in the ranks of the cadre at The U.S. Army Airborne School, 1st Battalion, 507th Parachute Infantry Regiment.

Although being airborne qualified is traditionally associated with infantrymen, women have been attending the course since the early '70s and there have been female instructors off and on during that time.

The recent void was due to a lack of qualified female soldiers who were available for assignment to the unit, according to unit commander, Mark L. Lewis.

"Ideally, I would like to have two females per company," he said, "but there aren't enough to go around."

Lewis said that doesn't just pertain to women, he said he'd like to see more MOSs represented within the ranks.

"Although this is the Parachute Infantry Regiment, all MOSs and branches of the service attend this course," he said, "so, they should be represented."

It seems as if Lewis' wishes are partially being met with the reassignment of the two post soldiers.

The first to arrive was Staff Sgt. Beryl Robertson, formerly with The Infantry School.

Staff Sgt. Marsha Baker, who was with the Parachute Rigger Platoon, followed shortly thereafter.

Robertson is assigned to Company A, and Baker is with Company C.

Both have earned the blackhat, which labels them as full-fledged instructors.

Robertson earned hers in January, and Baker donned the coveted headgear in April.

When the women earned their blackhats, they not only partially made Lewis' wishes come true but realized a dream for themselves.

Both women have aspired to become blackhats since they attended the course.

Blackhat, not female blackhat is the key word.

Robertson said she doesn't look at herself as being the first female blackhat with the unit after the long void, but, rather, she sees herself as just another instructor.

Baker has the same opinion.

"I look at myself as an instructor, period," she said. "And, I'm just as good as anyone else."

It seems their chain of command has the same attitude.

"As far as I'm concerned, Staff Sergeant Robertson is another part of my platoon," said her platoon sergeant, Sgt. 1st Class Richard Bailey. "She's an outstanding instructor, and, although I consider her just another instructor, she is a good role model for the female students in the company."

Baker's commander, Capt. David Coburn, said, "It's hard to talk about her as a female. She's a blackhat; and she brings a lot to this company, as an instructor, a rigger and a jumpmaster."

He added that her experience as a parachute rigger is invaluable during jumpweek when jumpmaster preinspections are being conducted on the parachutes the students have donned.

Robertson is also a qualified jumpmaster. She graduated from the course early this summer. Another thing she has accomplished is becoming a member of the Silver Wings Command Exhibition Parachute Team.

Although, she is still is on student status with the team, the noncommissioned officer in charge, Sgt. 1st Class James Walker, said she has great drive and ability, and he is happy with her ability thus far.

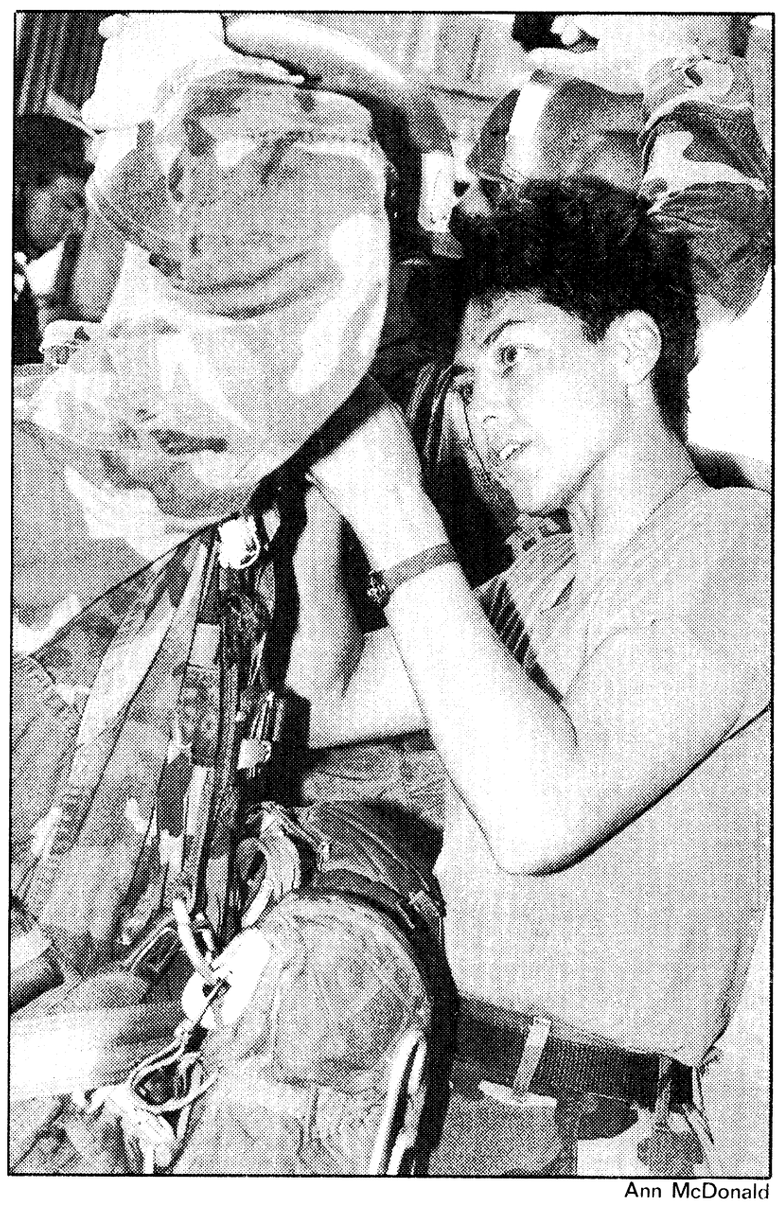
However, personal accomplishments are not what is most important to Robertson or Baker. The students attending the course are their number one concern.

"Training them to jump and seeing the changes they go through in those three weeks is very rewarding," Robertson said.

Baker said she feels like she is helping other people make their dreams come true.

"That's what's in my heart, and that's why I feel I'm doing a good job," she said.

Their job starts at 5:30 a.m. with daily physical training.



The women are very comfortable with the schedule and run right along with the formations, which means both are in excellent condition.

The conditioning didn't come overnight. They both have individual training programs to help keep them in shape.

"This is the most challenging position I've had since I've been in the Army," Robertson said. "It's also the most rewarding."

It's very rewarding for Baker, as well. She was recently awarded the title of the most unusual occupation at her 10-year high school reunion.

What else is on the horizon at the 507th? Another female soldier, Staff Sgt. Linda Carter has just started training for her blackhat.

Soldier wins cash, cruise

By Shawn Bryson
Bayonet staff writer

When a Fort Benning soldier bought about $10 worth of tickets for the 1989 Armed Forces Day in advance, he thought they were to be used to purchase food at the event.

To his surprise and delight, the tickets won him the first and second-place prizes in the day's big drawing.

Pvt. Anthony Akina won $200 cash and a two-day cruise for two out of Tampa Bay, Fla.

"After I found out the tickets weren't for food, I thought they were useless," said Akina, a native of Hawaii whose home is now in Seattle.

"But then I found out I could use them for the drawing, so I put all my tickets in the bag," he said.

Although the cash was awarded to Akina at the drawing, he had to wait for the cruise for more than two months.

The wait was not due to a lack of cruise tickets, but rather a lack of the winner.

According to SFC Robert Croker, one of the AUSA coordinators of Armed Forces Day, Akina was very hard to reach.

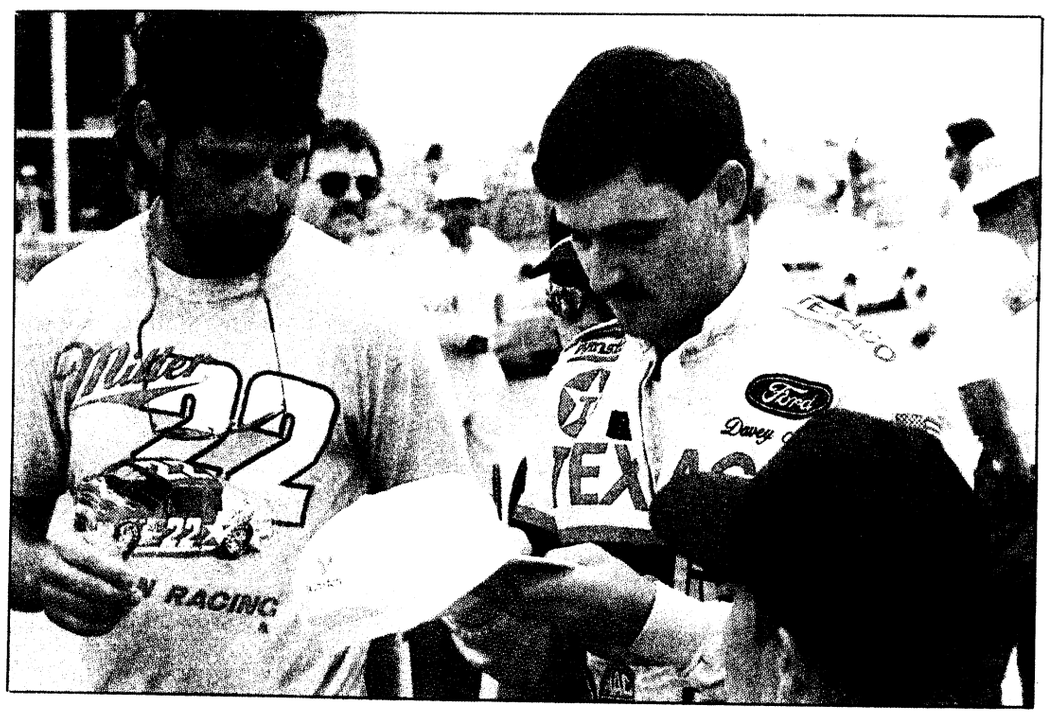
At the time of the event, Akina was in One Station Unit Training with the 2nd Battalion, 58th Infantry, 1st Infantry Training Brigade, where he took basic and advanced individual training.

From there, he went to airborne school, Croker said.

Croker said they finally were able to present him the cruise tickets just prior to Akina's entry into the Ranger Indoctrination Program at Fort Benning.

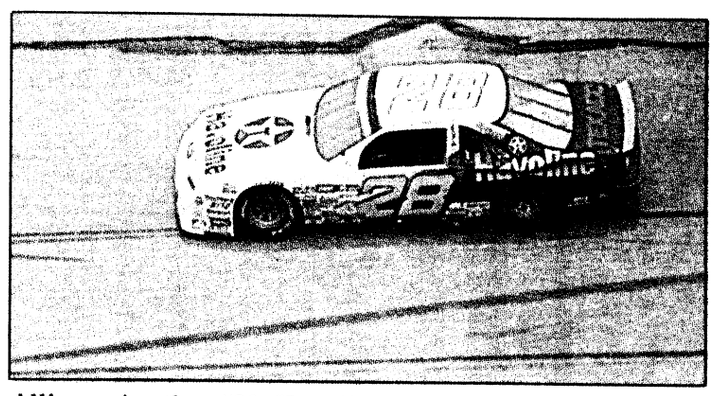
It was a long time coming, but Akina finally claimed his prize.

Akina received his cruise tickets from Joe Harrell of A-1 Travel in Columbus, which, in coordination with the Association of the United States Army, sponsored the drawing.



As if he hasn't waited long enough to enjoy his cruise, Akina said he'll probably have to wait some more.

Pvt. Anthony Akina



"I probably won't be able to take the cruise until after RIP or whenever I get some leave," he said.

Spec. John McIntyre, 2nd Battalion, 18th Infantry, showed the battalion what it meant to be the best.

After working in the battalion facility for about two and one-half months, McIntyre has earned the title of "Chef of the Month."

"After three years of service, I finally achieved what I wanted," said McIntyre.

"It takes long hours of hard work being a cook, but I love cooking," he added.

"Someday I'd like to be a professional chef."

McIntyre received the award from Lt. Col. William E. Lewellyn, deputy brigade commander of the 197th Infantry Brigade.

Labonte wins DieHard

Stops Waltrip's bid to become first three-time winner

By Ron Allen
USAIC Public Affairs Office

"Let me gain about three seconds in the right situations, and I'll be the biggest winner in Talladega history," declared Terry Labonte prior to the start of the recent DieHard 500 in Talladega.

Labonte, driver of the Budweiser Ford, didn't gain three seconds, but he did gain a half-car length over Darrell Waltrip to win the 21st running of NASCAR's DieHard 500.

Labonte and Waltrip ran 1-2 for the final 13 laps of the race. Waltrip, in the Tide Chevrolet, attempted to pass Labonte in the trioval on the last lap but wasn't strong enough to get by. Labonte becomes the 19th different winner of the DieHard and thwarted Waltrip's bid to become the first three-time winner.

"I would rather win here at Talladega than anywhere I've been because we have come so close so often," Labonte said.

In May Labonte finished one car length behind winner Davey Allison in the Winston 500 at Talladega, his third runner-up finish at the 2.66-mile trioval. He was second to Allison in the 1987 Winston 500, and crossed the line one car length behind Waltrip in the 1982 Winston 500. Labonte has also finished in third twice at Talladega.

Pole sitter Mark Martin was third in this year's DieHard followed by last year's winner Ken Schrader in fourth. Rick Wilson, Morgan Shepherd, Kyle Petty, Harry Gant, Davey Allison and Neil Bonnett round out the top 10 finishers.

Allison had been running with the leaders until he spun on lap 180 and brought out the final caution flag of the day. He still managed to work his way back up to ninth place in the final five laps of green.

The average speed of this year's Diehard was 157.354 with 25 laps ran under six caution flags. The race took three hours, 10 minutes and 41 seconds with 49 lead changes among 10 drivers. The Associated Press estimated attendance at 90,000.

Winston Cup points leader Dale Earnhardt finished 11th. By finishing second, Waltrip moved into second place in the point standings, 90 points behind Earnhardt. Rusty Wallace, who had been in second, was involved in a five-car accident on lap 27 and finished 37th. He dropped to fifth in the point standings, 165 behind Earnhardt.

Labonte's purse for winning the race was $73,000.

Bass fishing halted at King's Pond

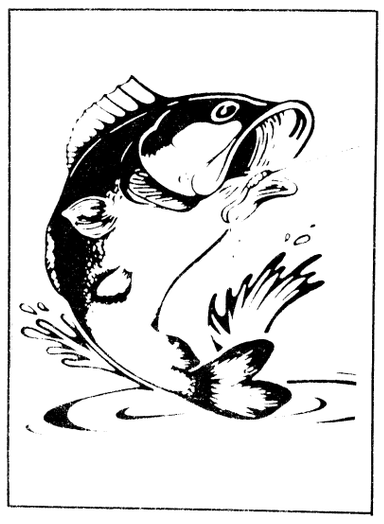
By Deck Major
Fish and Wildlife Specialist

Paul Loska's face was grim. The seine had been hauled three different times at three different locations in King's Pond, and the results were the same each time.

Loska is the Georgia Fish and Game's Fisheries Biologist for this region of the state.

He came to Fort Benning earlier this summer to assist post Fish and Wildlife personnel in assessing game fish populations in several Fort Benning ponds.

"You need to halt bass fishing on this pond as soon as possible," he said.



Each time the seine haul was examined, an abundant amount of two to three-inch bream were found with no or few three to five-inch bass.

In all cases, the bream were undernourished and bug-eyed, indicating a severe imbalance of predators (bass) and prey (bream).

To be sure efforts with Loska were accurate, post Fish and Wildlife personnel sampled the pond again a few weeks later, hoping that different results might be obtained.

No luck! Three seine hauls again showed an abundance of pan fish and no or few bass

Seine samples taken in August 1988 showed the pond to be in proper predator-prey balance.

How did things change? Loska and his staff at the Steve Cocke Fish Hatchery in Dawson, Ga., explained that it often takes a short time for a pond to become out of balance.

Contributing factors usually include illegal fishing activities such as "snatching" bass from their beds and/or simply not obeying creel and size limits.

Increased fishing pressure at King's Pond after publicity from the 12-pound bas. caught this summer may have also contributed.

Unfortunately, it takes longer for a pond to become balanced than to become out of balance. Remedies include stocking, and, of course, prohibiting bass fishing.

On July 20, 500 three-inch bass were stocked in the pond. However, they cannot be expected to get the job of balancing the pond done by themselves. Fishermen, all fishermen, must help.

How can you help the King's Pond fishery?

First, don't stop fishing for bream at King's Pond.

Second, don't throw any bream back into the pond that you don't intend to keep.

It's best for future fishing to throw these small fish up on the bank if you don't want them.

Raccoons, crows and other scavengers will police them up.

Third, don't fish for bass.

As of Aug. 19, harvest of bass at King's Pond is prohibited. If you put a bass on your stringer or in your cooler, you'll be breaking the law.

Last, if you accidently catch a bass, even a lunker, release it immediately.

Every bass you save will help King's Pond obtain a speedy recovery.

Remember, too, that fishing with minnows is illegal.

Sometimes these fish escape the hook and survive. Their production then causes additional imbalance problems.

Seine samples showed that several of these "rough" fish were present in King's Pond.

The most common source of these fish is from illegal fishing methods.

Male, female runners needed for Army's annual 10-miler

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

The Fort Benning Physical Activities Section is looking for qualified men and women to form teams for the annual Army 10-miler in Washington, D.C., Oct. 15.

The first run-off for selection of the team will be conducted Aug. 19 at 7 a.m. starting at the Santiago Gym located on Sand Hill.

Tryouts are being conducted early so that the teams have ample time to train together, according to Staff Sgt. Lloyd McDonald, the team captain for the past two Fort Benning teams.

McDonald said it's a good race, which starts at the steps of the Pentagon and winds around some of the historic sites in our nation's capital.

He said those selected for the team will be provided uniforms, transportation and amenities for the race.

For more information, call McDonald at 545-2332.

Chaplains coming, going in catholic community

By Debra Galle
USAIC Chaplain's Office

One thing the new senior priest may notice when he arrives at Fort Benning is he's not alone in making transitions.

The catholic community here has been experiencing major changes for many months. For a community whose total attendance at services is nearly 3,000 per week, summer has been a season of sacrifice and change.

Chap. (Lt. Col.) George Gudz is not only the new senior priest, but also the Chief, Administrations Operations for the chaplains.

He is replacing Father Barry Lonergan who is presently attending the Army War College in Pennsylvania.

Thirteen years ago, Father Gudz was stationed here as a captain. He lived in what was then the Main Post Catholic Chapel's Rectory on Sigerfoos Street.

For the past six years, Father Gudz was stationed in Germany in Aschaffenburg, Wurzburg and Stuttgart. Although he has spent much time overseas, he said if there was one place he would call home again, it would be Fort Benning.

Chaplain (Maj.) Frank Lane recently filled the senior priest slot and has been the Reception Battalion chaplain since September 1989. Prior to that, he was in the Army Reserves. He is being recalled to fill a need at Kenyon College in Gambler, Ohio, as the Catholic chaplain and staff member of the college, in addition to duties as the theological adviser to the bishop.

Father Michael Travaglione has been attending the Command and General Staff Course at the School of the Americas for the past year and will take the place of Father George Gonzalez in December.

Father Gonzalez was the first chaplain for the School of the Americas and has guided the community of over 700 people. Father Gonzalez will be leaving in December.

Chap. (Capt.) Orlando Sunga is the chaplain at 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor, and he will also be leaving in December for an assignment in Korea.

Catholics celebrate Feast of Assumption

By Chap. George Gonzalez
School of the Americas

Tuesday is a Catholic Holy Day of Obligation to celebrate the Assumption of Mary.

This feast has deep meaning of life after death.

"If Christ has not risen, vain then is our preaching, vain too is your faith. (I Corinthians 15:14).

The new life brought by Christ is a life transforming us totally.

Mary is one of us. She is not only an ideal but also was a real woman — a sister in faith and a believer with her own journey of faith to survive.

Far from passive sweetness, her image takes on contours of strength. She is intelligent in asking questions at the annunciation, risk-taking in giving her free assent, prophetic and articulate in proclaiming the coming of the reign of God in the Magnificat, courageous in the suffering endured out of love for another and spirit-filled as a member of the early praying community.

Her virginity signifies the whole-hearted gift of herself in faith as well as emancipation from dependence on the male.

Her motherhood involves creative collaboration with the source and spirit of life. She is understood to be a disciple among the disciples.

She is one who simultaneously represents to the whole community (not just women) what we are all called to be.

Christ and Mary together signify the victory of the reign of God, restoring peace and justice and overcoming all oppression.

Popular devotion to Mary, the compassionate mother and singer of the song of justice energizes a suffering people to hope for meaning and dignity and to struggle for liberation from violence.

The life of Mary is a legitimate projection into her death and life thereafter. It gives realistic meaning of her courageous life here on earth and encourages those of us still struggling with day-to-day challenges.

Sunday School bus service to expand September 10

By Debra Galle
USAIC Chaplain's Office

The Protestant Sunday School has announced plans to make a new bus route available Sept. 10 for students, parents and teachers.

The new schedule will include bus service to all housing areas each Sunday.

"Our goal," explained Chap. (Col.) Roy N. Mathis, post chaplain, "is to provide transportation to those who wish to bring their children to Sunday School and are unable because of lack of transportation."

A Sunday School bus currently services the McGraw Manor and Davis Hill/Bouton Heights area.

The new service will include all housing areas.

"Those who are already attending classes in Custer Terrace and Lavoie Manor will not be affected by this additional coverage," said Mathis.

He said the intention is to be sure unavailable transportation is not a reason for children to miss the religious education.

Jekyll Island Authority

Thousands of fans flock to Jekyll Island's Beach Music Festival.

Beach Music Festival hosts the Rhondels, Impressions

Jekyll Island Authority

WHAT: Jekyll Island Beach Music Festival. Free and open to the public.
WHEN: Aug. 19, beginning at 11:15 a.m. and ending at 6 p.m.
WHERE: On the beach at Jekyll Island, Ga.
FOR INFORMATION: Call the Jekyll Island Convention and Visitors Bureau at (912) 635-3636 or toll free, 1-800-342-1042 in Georgia, 1-800-841-6586 outside Georgia.

What do sun, surf, beach music and more than 20,000 fans "shagging in the sand" have in common?

The sixth annual Jekyll Island Beach Music Festival, of course!

Beach music lovers from up and down the East Coast will flock to Jekyll Island Aug. 19 to revel in the music, enjoying more popularity today than when it evolved "Under the Boardwalk" on the Carolina coast in the early '60s.

Designated a "Top 20 Event in the Southeast" by the Southeast Tourism Society for the third consecutive year, the Beach Music Festival '89 will feature The Sixty Minute Men, Swingin Medallions, The Impressions and The Rhondels.

Beginning at 11:15 a.m., Hands of Time, a local band, will warm up the crowd for the event which will last until 6 p.m.

The festival is free and open to the public.

Fans are urged to come early to avoid traffic congestion and to get a good spot on the beach.

The Sixty Minute Men, a local seven-member band, delighted the '87 festival crowd with an assortment of golden oldies featuring strong horns and harmonizing vocals.

The Swingin Medallions performed at the '88 festival and are best known for their hit "Double Shot (Of My Baby's Love)," considered one of the all-time great party tunes. The Impressions ("Gypsy Woman" and "Amen") have recorded 27 albums and had 42 chart singles.

Culminating the afternoon will be The Rhondels ("Hooked On A Feeling" and "I've Been Hurt").

The Rhondels will also perform at a party prior to the Beach Music Festival in the Recreation Center "A" Hall on Friday, Aug. 18 from 9 p.m. to 1 a.m.

Admission is $5 per person, and a cash bar and food booth will be available.

Georgia law prohibits powered vessels from coming within 1,000 feet of the beach.

Powered vessels will not be allowed to float or drift within the 1,000-foot safety zone.

Only nonpowered sailboats will be allowed in this area.

Food, beverages and souvenirs will be available.

For the safety and enjoyment of everyone, no glass containers or coolers will be allowed at the festival site.

For more information, call the Jekyll Island Convention and Visitors Bureau at 912/635-3636 or 1-800-342-1042 in Georgia or 1-800-841-6586 outside Georgia.

By using the following procedure, soldiers on the Family Housing Waiting List can use this chart to estimate when they can expect quarters:

Locate your category of housing.

Note eligibility date located on the same line as your category.

Calculate the time difference between the eligibility date listed and your eligibility date. The difference is the approximate time you still have to wait for housing.

EXAMPLE: If the latest eligibility date of the person who last received housing in your category was May 15, 1988, and your date of eligibility is Sept. 15, 1988, you can expect housing in about four months. If you do not know your eligibility date, contact the Family Housing Office at building 599, 545-3107.

The Marsh years: a legacy still evolving

By Larry W. Bryant
Army News Service

When he took his turn as the Army's top civilian leader, Secretary of the Army John O. Marsh Jr. brought with him a wealth of experience from both public and private life.

Now, as outgoing secretary, Marsh can add another memorable notch to his public service career. From the start, his goal was self-evident: to help the Army revitalize and modernize at a time of widespread concern about the state of America's military preparedness and capability.

The following recap highlights Marsh's tenure as pathfinder for, and hands-on overseer of, an Army ready, willing and able to serve in the interest of worldwide peace, freedom and security.

"The reality of past and present conflicts confirms there is no substitute for the well-trained soldier who is physically tough and mentally conditioned, possessing the individual skills for combat and survival. We will always need leadership of NCOs and officers who are professionally qualified and courageous." (From Marsh's remarks delivered to the U.S. House of Representatives in January 1983.)

That back-to-basics sentiment became the hallmark of the Marsh era. Delivery of those remarks to congressional members typified his zeal and prowess in presenting issues and proposals to Capitol Hill for swift clarification and resolution.

> "We will always need leadership of NCOs and officers who are professionally qualified and courageous."
> — John O. Marsh Jr.

As part of his emphasis on physical fitness, Marsh chose to "lead by example," often joining troops in their regular fitness-training sessions.

Just as history teaches us the inevitability of change, so does it provide the perspective for coping with change. Ever mindful of that truism, Marsh, in 1986, noted: "By focusing on our roots as an Army, we have rekindled our patriotism. We have also brightened the Army's awareness of the lessons of history as contributors to readiness. Soldiers everywhere are absorbing these lessons through case studies, terrain walks and staff rides."

Thus came Marsh's emphasis on the "Spirit of Victory at Yorktown." Then followed the Army-led observance by servicemembers of the bicentennial of the Constitution and, most recently, of the bicentennial of the founding of the War Department.

In an essay on today's Army, published in the October 1988 issue of Army magazine, Marsh reviewed a number of initiatives that span the eight years of his leadership. They range from development and acquisition of state-of-the-art weapon systems; fielding of automated simulation systems; restructuring of the field Army into a flexible mix of heavy and light divisions; revitalizing the role of special operations forces; recruiting and retaining high-quality enlisted men and women; and expanding resource support to the reserve components. Throughout this evolutionary process, Marsh dwelt on quality-of-life interests, "concentrating," he said, "on our families and where our soldiers work and live."

The series of Marsh-inspired annual "themes" — e.g., Family, Leadership, Values, Training, The NCO — set the tone for the Marsh years. From the theme Excellence evolved the localized, Army-wide program called Army Communities of Excellence. Today, the program serves as both incentive and rewarder to all its participants.

If there was one theme that could embrace elements of all the others, it likely would be the one for 1985 — Leadership.

In their joint proclamation announcing the theme, Marsh and then-Army Chief of Staff Gen. John A. Wickham Jr. declared:

"In today's world, leadership remains the key ingredient that enables our Army to meet successfully the challenges we face.

"Leadership is vital for melding Army members' aspirations, skills and capabilities into an organization able to deter, fight and win in defense of our national interest.

"No matter what the leader's rank, or organizational level, each leader has the same obligation. That obligation is to inspire and develop excellence in individuals and organizations; train members toward professional competency; instill members with a spirit to win; see to their needs and well-being; and to set standards that will be emulated by those they lead."

Marsh stops here on his way out of office

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

Former Secretary of the Army John O. Marsh Jr. made a brief stop at Fort Benning last week, his last in official capacity as he stepped down Monday.

During his visit he toured the Ranger Training Brigade, spoke to a group of Infantry Officers Basic and Advanced Course students, toured the 1st Battalion, 507th training area and visited the weapons pool.

Marsh said his visit to Benning brings back many memories of the training he received at both the Officer Candidate and Airborne schools.

Although he is not on active duty, he still maintains his airborne skills, and recently made a jump here.

For all his influence during his record-length tour as Army secretary, Marsh maintained the delicate balance of civilian control and military command over the Army's active and reserve forces.

Has Marsh fulfilled his obligation as the service's top civilian leader? As his legacy evolves, history — his mentor and confidant — will record he has.

Civil service retirement options to change

Civilian Personnel Division

Civilian employees contemplating retirement have only a few weeks left to take advantage of the 60/40 lump sum option.

This alternative form of annuity, AFA 60/40 payoff option, expires Sept. 30, 1989.

Army's Personnel Services Command has provided the Fort Benning Directorate of Civilian Personnel with information on current congressional action concerning the AFA 60/40 payoff issue, which affects civilians under the Civil Service Retirement System and the Federal Employees' Retirement System.

Congressional staffers indicate the administration and the congressional budget leadership have agreed to extend for two years the method of paying out the AFA lump sum on a 50/50 payout basis instead of the current 60/40 basis.

Legislation for such extension has passed both the Senate and House of Representatives as ridders to their respective appropriation bills.

However, the proposal legislation has not yet left Congress and is still subject to change. While it is highly probable that an appropriation bill containing a 50/50 payout will be signed before Oct. 1, it is also possible it may not.

If the appropriation bill is not signed until after Sept. 30, it more than likely will have a retroactive 50/50 AFA provision for annuities commencing after that date.

Therefore, in light of the above, employees eligible for immediate retirement desiring to avail themselves of the 60/40 AFA payout, and who want to guarantee that 60/40 payout, must retire as follows:

- CSRS employees - on or before Sept. 3, 1989
- FERS employees - by Aug. 31, 1989

Employees retiring after these dates would be covered under any revised payout schedule enacted.

The determination remains with the employees to apply their own judgment as to what may occur and when — and determine what is best for them. It is not possible to predict with assurance how Congress will resolve this issue.

For retirement-related information, contact the Management-Employee Relations Division, DCP, at 545-7320/7657.

Congressman Ray addresses issues involving veteran's

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

Congressman Richard Ray of the Georgia Third Congressional District, addressed issues involving veterans at a press conference conducted at the National Infantry Museum last week.

Many retirees from Columbus and Phenix City as well as active duty soldiers were present at the conference and were able to ask the congressman questions pertaining to the programs on which he is presently working.

Some of the issues addressed were the Veterans Administration Community Services Program, funding for veterans' programs, a Cemetery Bill, Veterans' Disability Compensation, changes in the Lump Sum Benefit and taxation of the Lump Sum Benefit.

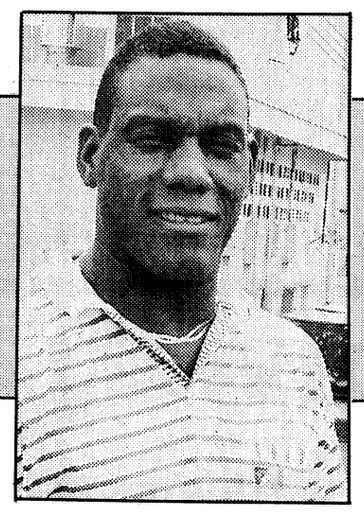
VA community services in Columbus will be upgraded, according to Ray. He said a recent cutback of VA care, done in conjunction with the Columbus Community Services Program facility, to three half-days a week will be increased to five half days in October.

Ray said the house approved a funding bill for VA programs, which appropriates $11.6 billion for medical care and treatment of eligible beneficiaries. This is $679 million more than the fiscal year 1989 funding level.

The Cemetery Bill, which Ray introduced to Congress, will allow weekend burials in national cemeteries. This would provide families an option not available at present.

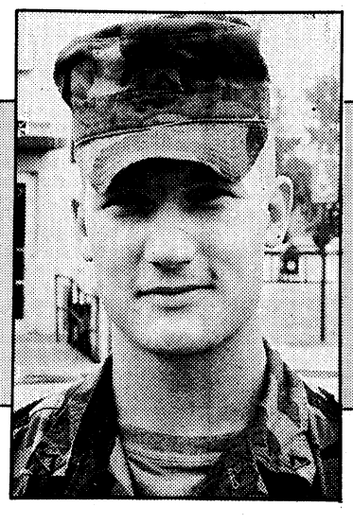
If the Veterans' Disability Compensation Bill is approved, certain veterans would be allowed to receive compensation concurrently with retired pay without an offset, Ray said.

However, this measure has been introduced before and nothing resulted from it.



Ray reported that changes in the Lump Sum Benefit could be eliminated as proposed by President George Bush. This benefit allows federal employees to withdraw their contributions to the retirement system in a lump sum of 60 percent the first year and 40 percent the following year. Ray said the house has recommended the bill be changed to 50/50.

Ray said negotiations are being held between government lawyers and attorneys representing retirees on taxation on the Lump Sum Benefit. Presently, retirees are taxed twice, once when they put the money in the retirement fund and again when they take the money out. A decision on whether to eliminate this could come as early as April 1990.



After the issues were introduced and questions fielded by Congressman Ray, John T. Slovenz, a member of the audience surprised Ray and Fort Benning commander, Maj. Gen. Michael F. Spigelmire, with a framed poem he had written about the American Flag.

OPINION

VARIOUS VOICES: What can individuals do to contribute to energy conservation on post?

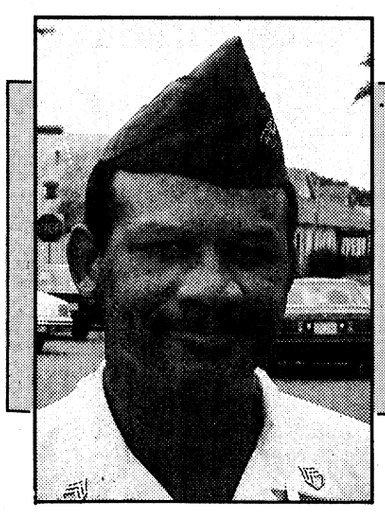
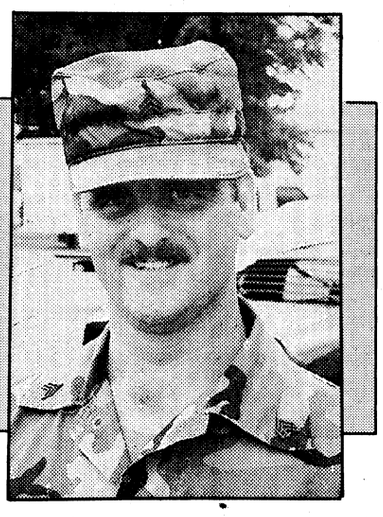
Staff Sgt. James Alexander, Co. B, 2nd Bn., 29th Inf. Regt. — "If you live in post housing you can turn the air conditioner and lights off when you are not home."



Pvt. Gary Thies, Co. C, 3rd Bn., 75th Rgr. Regt. — "If you have air conditioning in your barracks, don't open the windows. Make sure the lights are off when you leave. You have to pay attention because it's real easy to walk out without thinking about it."



Sgt. 1st Class Earl Johnson, HQ, Svc. Co., ITC — "Keep the thermostat at 70 degrees. Cook out more and lower the wattage of the light bulbs in your home. At work, you can alternate the fluorescent lights to save energy."

Vickie Mowery, family member — "When you're not watching TV, turn it off. If you're not using the lights, turn them off. If you live on post, pretend you have to pay for the energy you use."

Staff Sgt. Gordon Looney, MEDDAC — "Make sure water faucets are turned off. A dripping faucet wastes a lot of water. In the hospital where I work, we have to make sure the lights are off in the rooms not being used."

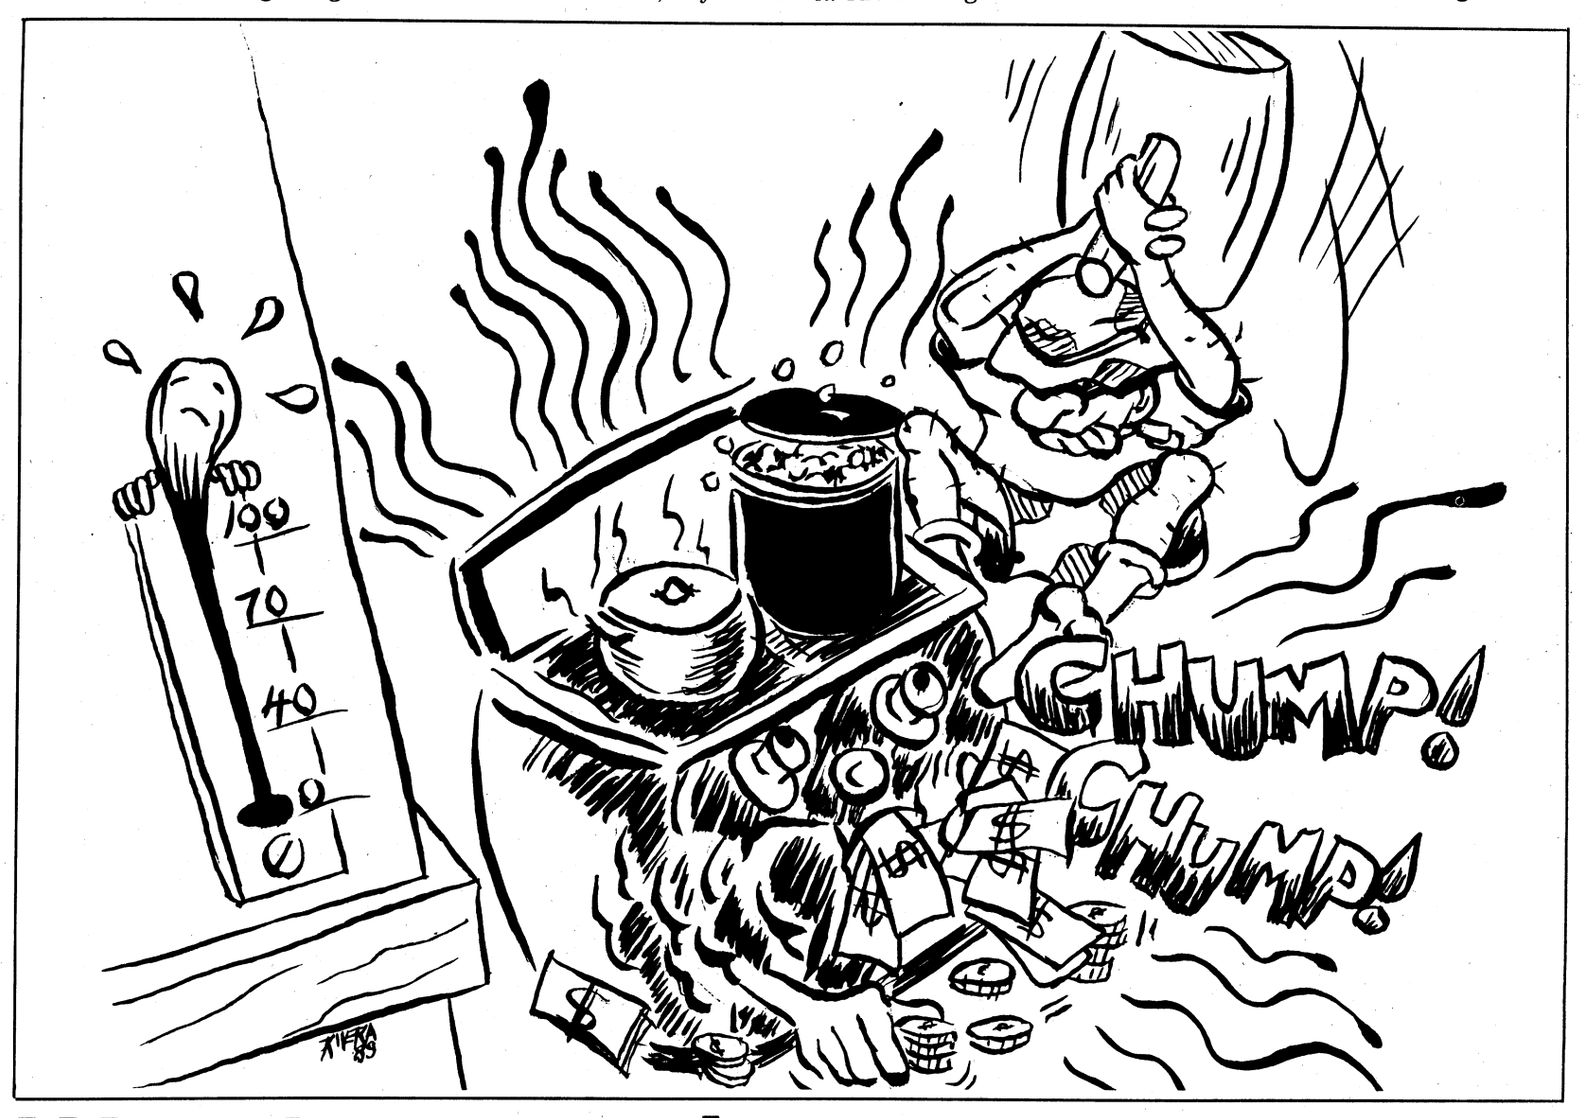
Sgt. Jaime Mroposki, 533rd Trans. Co., 67th Maint. Bn., 36th Eng. Grp. — "Whether you're in your home or at work, if you're not using it, turn it off."

GAINING WOMEN'S RIGHTS has been a long uphill fight

Department of the Army

Aug. 26, 1973, was designated Women's Equality Day by then President Richard M. Nixon.

It denotes the ratification of the 19th Amendment to the U.S. Constitution giving women the right to vote and reminds us of women's continuing efforts toward equality in all spheres of our society.



From its radical beginning in 1848 at the Seneca Falls, New York Women's Rights Convention, it was a long uphill fight for the women in the suffrage movement.

Elizabeth Cody Stanton drafted the Declaration of Sentiments that listed the legal disadvantages of women. It became the catalyst for future Suffrage Conventions.

From 1870 to 1910, there were 480 campaigns in 33 states for passage of the amendment. They resulted in 17 referenda; only two of which (Colorado and Idaho) were successful. Wyoming was the front runner state for women's rights as stated in its Constitution. Finally, on Aug. 26, 1920, Tennessee became the 36th state to ratify the 19th Amendment, and it became part of the U.S. Constitution.

The right to vote is a precious privilege that should not be taken lightly by those who enjoy it. The entire governmental process is enhanced by men and women who cast their votes. Women's Equality Day is an excellent opportunity for soldiers and civilians at Fort Benning to acknowledge their responsibilities to vote and to acknowledge the continuing efforts toward equality in the United States.

Wasting post's energy now may be very costly later

By Clyde Snively
USAIC Public Affairs Office

If we meet, or do better than our goal, not only do we not have to pull money from other accounts, but TRADOC will match the amount we save, so we actually get money back.

Fort Benning in August is hot.

It's actually quite unbearable.

Those of us who have air-conditioned buildings in which to work are most fortunate, even if the thermostat is set at "sweat." The alternative is no air conditioning or even to be out on some range.

And speaking of not having air conditioning in August, that's not completely out of the realm of possibilities.

Campers, we haven't been doin' too good this year. In fact, we aren't meeting our energy goal.

"So what," you say.

So, we can't afford not to meet the goal. If we don't, we come out losers twice over.

First, exceed the amount of energy we're budgeted for and we pay for the excess out of our operational budget.

If your budget is like ours, you know there isn't any money there. Shoot, come to us for money and we'd have to hawk our pencils to come up with any.

On the other hand, if we meet, or do better than our goal, not only do we not have to pull money from other accounts, but TRADOC will match the amount we save, so we actually get money back.

So why aren't we meeting our goals this year?

Ordinary people like you and me is why.

We aren't thinking energy conservation. We're being wasteful, and some are actually being criminal about it.

For instance, folks in family housing...folks who don't pay for the energy they consume... are wasting energy.

Sure, sure, you forfeit your housing allowance. Big deal. Try living off post and paying rent for quarters like you've got on post plus your electric bill. I can guarantee you your housing stipend won't cover it.

Naturally, not all housing residents are guilty of wasting energy, but it doesn't take many waste-mongers to run up the bill.

Take for example, the family housing occupants who jumped their air conditioner's FM receivers or hired someone to do it for them.

Do this once and shame on you. Do it twice, and you'll be living off post, paying for your energy extravagances.

I don't know if it's true or not, but I heard one person set up a can of sterno under his thermostat. Apparently, he was real cool until the smoke alarm went off.

What makes my blood boil is when I drive into a housing area to visit people and see all these front doors wide open while the old compressor is churning away, making a valiant effort to cool all of Fort Benning.

Periodically, we hear rumblings about how posts are going to start metering all family housing and make the occupants pay. I wouldn't get too smug, post housing dwellers, if the Army decides that's the only way to conserve energy, it could happen.

In the meantime, each of us needs to be energy aware. For instance next week is "let it all hang out week." In other words, instead of doing your clothes in the dryer, use a clothesline.

I think that's a great idea. Clothes smell fresher, the clothes hanger-outer gets some good exercise and can even catch a few rays (oops, sorry MEDDAC, use your sun block).

Another simple thing for us Building 4 occupants is to turn the lights off in the restrooms when we leave and to not turn those on in the ante-rooms when we go in.

Whatsa matter men, (women too?) can't find your way across a three-foot space in the dark?

I know, I know, you were taught it takes more energy to keep clicking lights on and off. True for fluorescent lights, false for incandescent lights. And anyway, you need to get into the light-clicking-off mode. Sure, you're coming right back, always are. Then you forget or something comes up.

Just turn off the light when you're the last to leave a room.

Changes to take place at commissary

Contractor to take over operation of grocery department

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Young-Robinson Associates, 4249 Lomac St., Montgomery, Ala., will operate the grocery department of the Fort Benning Commissary, beginning Oct. 15 under the commercial activity program.

The amount of the contract is $1,067,149 for four years. It is expected to save the government $409,895 during that time period.

The contract is awarded only if private industry's proposal represents a 10 percent savings of personnel-related costs to the government. The government has the option to renew the contract each fiscal year through 1993.

Under the terms of the contract, the 33 government employees, of whom seven were full-time employees, who were performing that work, will have right of first refusal. In other words, if they wish to continue stocking shelves for Young-Robinson, that firm must hire them before hiring anyone else.

If they elect to not continue working at the commissary, the Directorate of Civilian Personnel will provide counseling services for the commissary employees to help them find other jobs either on post or in the civilian community.

The total number of other people employed at the commissary, both full and part time is currently 134. These employees are not affected by the commercial activity contract. Those positions range from sales store checkers, to meat cutters, to supervisors.

Bag boys and girls are not considered part of the employees since they work for tips.

Young-Robinson will now run the grocery department, which means its employees will stock the grocery shelves at night, provide custodial service in the commissary at night and have some day-time employees who will spot stock shelves and provide cleanup as necessary.

Affected government employees were briefed by the Directorate of Civilian Personnel concerning their rights and the right of first refusal for job openings with the contractor in positions for which they are qualified.

Career and career conditional employees willing to relocate, will be registered in the priority placement program for receiving preferential consideration in Department of Defense and other federal agencies for vacancies for which they are qualified and available.

Other placement assistance is provided by the department of Labor and State Employment services to help employees locate positions in private industry. Where appropriate, they may be retrained.

Army refines, expands drug testing policy

Army News Service

Army policy now requires that soldiers who test positive for drugs that can be prescribed legally must undergo a medical review to confirm legal use before commanders may take judicial or other administrative actions, an Army personnel official said Aug. 1.

"The new policy seeks to protect soldiers who properly are taking prescribed medicines that might result in a positive drug test and to identify and refer for treatment any soldier who may be taking illicit drugs, including drugs prescribed for someone else," said Maj. John Algner. He serves with the human resources division of the Office of the Deputy Chief of Staff for Personnel at the Pentagon. "Also, the policy is designed to ensure the integrity and accuracy of the Army's drug testing program."

Algner added the Army currently tests all soldiers for THC (found in marijuana and hashish) and cocaine. The expanded drug testing program will add a third drug test, which will be randomly selected from a group that includes opiates (such as morphine and codeine), amphetamines (speed, for example) and phenclydine (PCP, angel dust).

He said in Europe, cocaine is included in the rotational drug group rather than the mandatory group.

The medical-review referral allows soldiers the chance to provide important information and present documentation that supports the legal use of the identified substance, Algner explained.

After the review, physicians must report their findings to the affected soldier's commander for further appropriate action.

Meantime, the policy allows commanders to take limited action before the medical review and evaluation process, including limiting access to classified information and temporarily suspending the soldier from sensitive duty, Algner said.

Algner added that commanders retain the authority to consult with local legal staffs before deciding to proceed with administrative or other action under the Uniform Code of Military Justice.

Algner said that soldiers and Department of the Army civilians subject to drug testing should rest easy when submitting specimens.

"The lab technicians handle each specimen as if it were their own," he said, "and each positive specimen is analyzed by two independent tests using state-of-the-art and highly sophisticated technology."

Drinking with the guys takes on a whole new meaning

By Evelyn D. Harris
American Forces Information Service

In the early 1980s, light drinking was okay.

In those years, respected medical journals as well as supermarket tabloids reported the news that people who take a couple of alcoholic drinks a day live longer than teetotalers or those whose intake exceeds two drinks a day (two shots, two beers or two glasses of wine).

The reports were based on several independent studies — all of which linked the lower mortality of light drinkers to a lower rate of heart attacks. Light drinkers were found to have higher levels of protective HDL-cholesterol than did nondrinkers.

Now, health newsletters — such as the Harvard Medical School Health Letter — are saying, "Never mind."

A new study, published in the British medical journal, Lancet, shows that the earlier study findings were based on faulty data interpretation.

The British study is good news for Peter Brock, director of alcoholism and mental health programs, Office of the Assistant Secretary of Defense for Health Affairs.

"We're trying to deglamorize alcohol," said Brock. "It's a little harder for us, perhaps, than it is for civilians — alcohol has long been part of the military lifestyle. Getting drunk together was considered important to male bonding — drinking has been part of the image of the American fighting man.

"The reports that came out early in the '80s saying that moderate drinking was more healthy than not drinking were not helpful. Now we know that those studies came to the conclusions they did because they were done wrong. They were including in the number of non-drinkers people who were former drinkers — people who had to quit because they'd damaged their hearts and livers by heavy drinking.

"It's good to see the newest research turning that around," said Brock.

Solicitation here requires special permit

Military Police Activity

Anyone wanting to solicit business on the installation must first contact the Family Support Division, Directorate of Community Activities, and obtain a permit.

Restrictions are placed on commercial solicitation at Fort Benning to keep members of the Armed Forces from being subjected to fraudulent or unethical business practices.

Solicitation at Fort Benning is governed by Army Regulation 210-7 and USAIC Supplement 1 to AR 210-7. USAIC Circular 210-7 is a current listing of agents and companies approved to solicit at Fort Benning.

The Commercial Solicitation Office is located in Building 241, Room 213, (next to the Infantry Museum), and the hours for receiving permits are 10 a.m. to 3 p.m. (excluding noon to 1 p.m. lunch), Tuesdays and Wednesdays each week. This permit can be obtained only after certain licensing requirements have been met.

The Department of the Army does not endorse any seller or product.

Military personnel and their family members may be solicited by specific appointment only.

"Door-to-door" solicitation without a prior appointment, including solicitation by personnel whose ultimate purpose is to obtain sales (e.g., soliciting future appointments), is prohibited.

If someone knocks at your door, you may first ask to see a Solicitors Permit. If he doesn't have one then call the Military Police (545-5223) to report an unauthorized solicitation.

Having a Solicitors Permit does not give the right to knock on doors for solicitation purposes. Solicitors may contact prospective clients initially by methods such as advertising in The Bayonet, direct mail and telephone.

If you receive an unwanted solicitation over the telephone, you may inform the solicitor you're not interested and hang up.

USAIC Garrison Regulation 210-5, concerning commercial advertisement, states that no off-post firm or charitable organization may advertise on the installation by the use of pamphlets, flyers, posters, business cards, etc.

This regulation is intended to prevent companies such as Phone-A-Gram from leaving notices attached to automobiles and pizza vendors from leaving discount advertisements at billets, on the front door of quarters or on the windshield of automobiles. These practices cause trash problems for our soldiers to clean up.

At Fort Benning, commercial solicitation is never permitted in Initial Entry Training units. Solicitation in the 75th Ranger Regiment is also prohibited due to the sensitivity of their mission.

Other company commanders are responsible for monitoring commercial solicitation within their respective areas. They will enforce the following hours for solicitation: 6 to 10:30 p.m., Monday through Friday (no weekend or lunchtime solicitation will be permitted).

Commanders are to report any alleged violations to the Military Police at 545-5223. Reports should be made as expeditiously as possible, reporting the agent's name and address together with the name of the firm the agent claims to represent and, if possible, a description of the types of items or services the agent was alleged to offer.

Military Police will apprehend the violators, return them to the MP desk for processing and issuance of an ejection order and escort them off the installation.

The same procedure applies to military and their family members living in the housing areas

Auto air bags may become mandatory

Army News Service

Air bags will be "popping up" as one option the government has said automakers may select as mandatory safety equipment in all cars beginning with 1990 models. The other two are motorized or mechanical automatic shoulder harnesses.

Working together for years, government agencies and private industry have researched and developed an automatic device they say will give maximum protection to motorists in the event of a collision.

That research has led to the development of the air bag — an automatic crash protection system that's quicker than a blink of an eye.

Like the manual safety belts in use for more than 20 years, air bags are designed to save lives and prevent serious injuries.

An air bag lies concealed in a car's steering wheel and/or dashboard until activated by a crash. In a serious front-end crash, a sensor activates the air bag. In one-tenth of a second after impact, the bag fills to create a protective cushion between the person and the steering wheel, dashboard and windshield. It takes less than one second for the air bag to inflate and deflate.

Accidental inflation is rare, experts say. Even if one occurs, it would not likely cause the driver to lose control because of its small size and the rapid inflation-deflation cycle.

Neither a panic stop, hammer blows to the front of the car nor low speed accidents, such as those that occur in parking lots, will cause accidental inflation.

During manufacturers' research tests, drivers didn't lose control when exposed to unexpected air-bag inflations.

Air bags are more effective when used in combination with safety belts. Multiple collisions dictate that safety belts should be worn, even in a car equipped with air bags. Second impacts generally take place so rapidly that the air bag still provides some protection. Safety belts add protection in the first impact and takes over where the air bag leaves off, providing even more protection during the second collision.

Although air bags aren't designed to inflate in most side, rear or roll-over crashes, they are designed to provide protection in frontal crashes — the leading cause of deaths and injuries in motor vehicle collisions.

While air bags alone can reduce the chance of fatality in crashes by 20 percent to 40 percent, an air bag with a lap belt lowers the risk by 40 percent to 50 percent. Better yet, air bags with a lap and shoulder harness decrease the chance of fatality another 5 percent to 15 percent.

Nitrogen, a harmless gas that's the key ingredient in the air we breathe, inflates the air bag. At impact, the inflation process is triggered by a chemical called "sodium azide," sealed in a metal container.

Air bags will add an estimated $300 to $400 to the sticker price of new cars.

(EDITOR'S NOTE: Article derived from "Facts you should know about air bags," a brochure of the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration, U.S. Department of Transportation.)

Knowing the rules smooths sailing on boat shipments

Army News Service

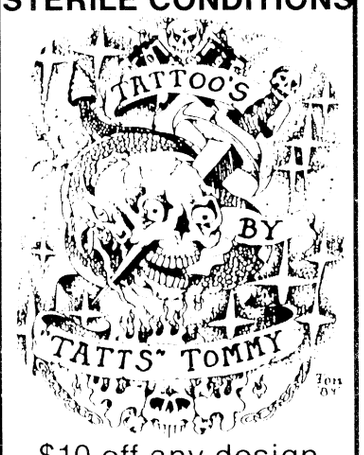
For nearly a year, boats have been on the list of items servicemembers can ship at government expense.

But, according to officials in the Military Traffic Management Command, unfamiliarity with the rules on this relatively new entitlement could run aground a soldier's boat-shipping plans.

According to Diane J. Coleman, a traffic management specialist at MTMC headquarters in Falls Church, Va., the following rules apply for domestic shipments.

All kinds of boats under 14 feet in length without trailers may be shipped as household goods after Nov. 1. Boats larger than that may be shipped via commercial boat and mobile home carriers.

When using a commercial boat carrier, servicemembers are responsible for making all arrangements and paying for lift-on, lift-off and storage. The company will provide line haul but is not required to make a firm pick-up or delivery date.



Mobile home carriers provide hook-and-go and storage in transit. MTMC will solicit tow-away service or a commercial boat carrier.

For more information on domestic boat shipments, contact Coleman at (703) 756-2577 or 2578 (autovon 289-2577 or 2578).

ASK THE JUDGE

By Rick Parker
Legal Assistance Attorney

Q. My sister has an 8-year-old son she can't properly take care of. She asked to let him live with me.

With the beginning of school coming up, I went to register him, but was told I didn't have the proper papers. I have a power of attorney from my sister, but they said I needed either custody or guardianship.

My sister doesn't want to give up the boy permanently, so I guess I need guardianship. What is guardianship, and how do I go about getting it?

A. To register a child in a local school, the school board requires that the person registering the child have parental power over him.

A power of attorney is not sufficient to transfer parental power to another person because in Georgia, as in most states, parental power is only exercised by way of legal custody or guardianship. Unless you are the natural parent of the child, both of these would require a court order.

A guardian of a minor child stands in the place of the child's parents and exercises the same power over a child that a parent would. To be a guardian not only means the exercise of power over the child, but also means taking on the responsibilities and duties of a parent. Thus, a guardian is responsible for seeing to it that the child has shelter, food and clothing and access to a proper education.

There are two types of guardians — guardians of a person and guardians of property.

A guardian of a person is empowered to make decisions about where the child lives, where he goes to school and various other decisions about what the child can and cannot do.

A guardian of property exercises control over and is responsible for managing the property of a child. Where a child has property, this type of guardian may have to post a bond with the court to ensure that he carries out his duties properly.

In Georgia, guardianships are obtained by filing an appropriate petition in the probate court of the county where the child is located.

The probate courts of most counties have preprinted forms available for this, which are completed by essentially filling in the blanks. The petition is filed along with a relinquishment of parental rights signed by the parents, and, in the case of a child age 14 or over, the consent of the child.

Please note that although the parents sign a relinquishment, this does not mean that all parental rights are terminated. Once all of this is filed, and it is in good order, the probate judge can sign an order immediately appointing you as the guardian.

The filing cost for the guardianship is $32.50, plus $1.50 per page filed in both Muscogee and Chattahoochee counties.

You would be well advised to seek legal advice before actually obtaining a guardianship to make sure that this route is the best way to go for your particular situation. Call Legal Assistance at 545-3281.

MPs teach students to say no to drugs

Military Police Activity

The prevention of substance use among school-age children is a major concern in our community, as it is elsewhere in the nation.

To address this problem, the Fort Benning Military Police (Crime Prevention) Activity in cooperation with the Fort Benning Schools, is presenting, for the second year, a substance use prevention education program entitled Drug Abuse Resistance Education and called DARE.

DARE will be presented to sixth-graders one day a week for 17 weeks by a uniformed officer who has been trained to teach this program.

The curriculum includes such topics as how to say no to peers, self-esteem, assertiveness, social influences contributing to the use of drugs and positive alternatives to drug use. An abbreviated program will also be given to children in kindergarten through fourth grade.

The officer teaching this class will also present a program for parents and will cooperate with parents to ensure that children are well-informed regarding the dangers of drug use.

For more information, call Lt. Jackson or Spec. Burton at 545-4164/1308.

Motorcyclists given rules of the road

Infantry Branch Safety Office

Seven Fort Benning soldiers have been seriously injured in motorcycle accidents during this fiscal year, one of them was permanently disabled.

The injury costs of these accidents were $128,340.

Prior to registering a two-wheeled vehicle on post, owners must complete the Army Motorcycle Safety Course. The course is offered on alternating Fridays and Saturdays. Call 545-3267 for a reservation.

Fort Benning motorcyclists will wear a high-visibility, reflective jacket or vest, an approved helmet, leather gloves, leather boots or shoes with heels, long-legged pants, long-sleeved shirt or jacket and eye protection (shatter-resistant glasses, goggles or face shield).

Motorcycles will be driven with their lights on and equipped with rear view mirrors on each side of the handle bars. Riders should always drive sober and be especially alert during the first half hour of driving, which accounts for 90 percent of all motorcycle accidents.

Never loan a motorcycle to anyone unfamiliar with it. USAIC Regulation 190-5 states that "Owners who allow unqualified individuals to operate their vehicles and the unqualified operators who operate vehicles owned by others will have their on-post driving privileges suspended for six months."

Riding motorcycles can be a lot of fun — but it can also end in tragedy. Whenever an accident involves a motorcycle and another vehicle, the motorcyclist is always injured more severly than the vehicle occupants.

Mortar men achieve high marks during annual readiness testing

The gunnery portion was no problem for the brigade's mortar men who achieved a standard of 90 percent or higher in all tasks.

By Bill Carter
197th Infantry Brigade

All mortar crews of the 197th Infantry Brigade were put to the test recently during their annual Army Readiness Training and Evaluation Program.

Fire support elements of the 4th Battalion, 41st Field Artillery and Company B, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry, administered the week-long evaluation, which consisted of 38 ARTEP tasks in two major areas: gunnery and operations.

The gunnery portion was no problem for the brigade's mortar men, with each crew achieving the standard of 90 percent or higher in all tasks. The Fire Direction Center, using the mortar ballistic computer, provided the necessary information in seconds, and the mortar crews executed their missions immediately.

"This is the best mortar shooting I've ever seen," said Capt. Mark Lewza, fire support officer for 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor.

Under the watchful eye of evaluators from the Infantry Mortar Platoon Operations Course, the crews were judged on the timeliness and accuracy of engaging their targets.

2nd Battalion, 18th Infantry provided aggressors for the operations portion of the evaluation, but despite their enthusiasm in making life miserable for the mortar men, the crews continued their mission without missing a step.

Other tasks such as "occupy an assembly area," "move mounted," and "react to a chemical attack" were performed with the same level of proficiency.

Throughout the testing, the 1st Battalion, 18th Infantry ran neck and neck with the 2nd Battalion, 18th Infantry. Only one percentage point separated the two battalions at the end of the ARTEP, with 1st Bn. coming out on top. Troop D, 4th Cavalry and 2nd Bn., 69th Armor finished third and fourth, respectively.

These standings will be used to determine who will test the Army's new 120-millimeter mortar.

Fire Direction Centers live up to nickname of 'Brains'

By Rex Davis
4th Battalion, 41st Field Artillery

The three battery Fire Direction Centers of 4th Battalion, 41st Field Artillery recently lived up to their nickname, "brains" of the field artillery.

Battery C's Fire Direction Center proved to be the brainiest of the trio by scoring 1,243 out of a possible 1,300 points in performing a range of tasks from basic soldier skills to field artillery gunnery procedures.

The FDCs, which provide the vital link between the forward observer and the field artillery cannon battery, are evaluated semiannually in conjunction with the battalion's howitzer section evaluations.

Phase one of the four-part evaluation measures proficiency in maintenance, nuclear-biological-chemical and common soldiers tasks. The second phase evaluates each section's ability to occupy a position tactically and prepare to compute firing data for the howitzers.

Receiving, processing and executing all of the data necessary to send firing commands to the howitzers are included in phase three, the longest and most critical portion of the evaluation.

Each mission has a unique set of circumstances and each is processed in a different manner. Coupled with strict time standards, this tests the FDC crew's overall knowledge of field artillery gunnery.

After completing the three phases of field testing, the soldiers took a written test covering both manual and automated gunnery skills and some additional common tasks.

Infantry leaders face tough obstacles

Dean Whitmore

Mark Stock teaches a class to IOBC students during the Tactical Leadership Course.

By Peter Lucht
Infantry Officers Basic Course

Tough, realistic, squad-level training coupled with plenty of opportunity to test leadership and teaching abilities made the Infantry School's Tactical Leadership Course a valuable experience, according to the students of the Infantry Officer Basic Course, Class 8-89.

"A lot of the training was taken very seriously. Stress was on training for actual war rather than just to pass ARTEP evaluations. That's vital if you're going to keep your soldiers alive," said 2nd Lt. Mark Kneram, an IOBC student with Company C, 2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry.

The five-day course, conducted entirely in the field, was divided into 20 situational training exercises.

These exercises consisted of collective infantry tasks such as knocking out enemy bunkers, emplacing obstacles and conducting ambushes.

Charlie Company students were separated from their squads on the first day.

The students were trained on two different exercises by cadre of the Tactical Leadership Branch. Each student was taught how to perform and teach his tasks according to the latest School doctrine.

Student officers were then responsible for teaching their squads their assigned tasks and for acting as squad leaders in the actual execution of the tasks.

Teaching and leadership were rated by TLB cadre and evaluations sent to Co. C trainers for integration into the students' overall course performance valuations. Each STX was worth a potential 50 points.

"Fellowship was pretty important out there," said 1st Lt. David Hodo, a Charlie Company student. "Everyone had to back up fellow squad members when they taught and did their lanes. Everyone wanted everyone else to do well."

The pace of training was fast and furious during the four days the exercises were actually executed. Squads woke before dawn and trained until late afternoon in temperatures that hovered in the mid-90s.

Five exercises were performed daily, each of which took several hours to teach, perform and review.

"One lane would have us doing live fire and maneuvering up a hill and the next, throwing live hand grenades," said 2nd Lt. Dean Knight. "We ate on the run when we got the chance. We were on the go all day, every day."

Night training consisted of tactics and leadership classes taught in the field by Charlie Company cadre.

Formerly, STXs were conducted at night, but 2nd Bn., 11th Inf. cadre determined that the training value of the more important daylanes had suffered and time after the day training could be better spent instructing the student officers in tactical planning.

"The night tactics classes gave us a preview of the tactic's training we'd get later in the course," said 2nd Lt. Scott Zuffanti, a basic course student. "I have a better understanding of the planning process that goes into a tactical operation."

Lt. Col. Pat McDonald, 2nd Bn., 11th Inf. commander, said "TLC is the first collective training IOBC students do and perhaps the first chance they have to teach, which is basically what leaders do their whole time in the Army."

McDonald said TLC is an excellent chance for IOBC students to practice squad level training. He said he would like to see the development of a platoon TLC and move the squad course from week seven to week five.

Infantry Officer Basic Course students spend about four weeks out of the 16-week course in the field learning and practicing infantry skills.

Training exercises include defense, light and mechanized infantry operations.

OCS candidates commissioned into aviation

Officer Candidate School

Ten OCS candidates were commissioned into Army Aviation at ceremonies conducted at Fort Benning Aug. 11. The officers are: 2nd Lts. Jeffery R. Connell, Antonio F. Framarini, Scott K. Johnson, Laurie Ludovici, Edwin D. Miller, Sally L. Paul, James N. Peavey, Gerard P. Schlembach, Robert C. Soper and Craig A. Temmer.

Each officer was also presented an Aviation Branch letter of welcome from Maj. Gen. Ellis D. Parker, commanding general of the Aviation Center, Fort Rucker, Ala.

The officers will later continue their training at Fort Rucker where they will attend the Aviation Officer Basic Course and Initial Entry Rotary Wing Flight Training.

OSUT graduate flies home with dad

Oklahoma senator Gerald "Ged" Wright and his son, Pfc Brent Wright, prepare for the flight home

Marilyn Balzarini

Makes unusual departure

Oklahoma state senator and Air National Guard pilot flies to Fort Benning to attend his son's graduation from One Station Unit Training at the 2nd Battalion, 54th Infantry. Son serves as father's co-pilot for the trip home.

By Marilyn Balzarini
Infantry Training Center

It's not unusual for soldiers who have completed Infantry One Station Unit Training to return home with their parents after graduation.

Most ride in the family car or catch a flight out of Atlanta. But, none left Fort Benning as the "co-pilot" of an Air Force fighter plane — until last week.

Pfc. Brent Wright, Company D, 2nd Battalion, 54th Infantry, flew home aboard an A7 jet fighter piloted by his father, Oklahoma state senator Gerald "Ged" Wright after completing his training.

It was the younger Wright's first flight in a fighter plane. He didn't appear nervous though, probably because he had just finished 13 weeks of infantry training.

Wright will put his infantry skills to work as a member of the 1st Battalion, 279th Infantry Brigade, 45th Infantry Division, Oklahoma National Guard.

"I hope my unit continues to build on the training I got here," Wright said.

He said he wants to attend Airborne and Ranger schools and eventually become an officer. He could have received a commission but chose to enlist because he said he feels the experience will make him a better leader.

"The discipline and motivation I learned here will help me reach my goals in civilian life," Wright said. This fall, he said he plans to attend the Tulsa College of Law.

Senator Wright is a lieutenant colonel with 25 years of military service. He is assigned to the 138th Tactical Fighter Group of the Oklahoma Air National Guard.

When he's not flying, Senator Wright represents Oklahoma's 54th district in the state senate.

"The graduation ceremony was impressive," Senator Wright said. "I'm happy my son decided to serve his country.

Nebraska employer group observes its hometown trainees

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

There is nothing more uplifting to a soldier in training than seeing a familiar face from home.

A Nebraska-based platoon of soldiers, Company E, 1st Battalion, 19th Infantry, Infantry Training Center, were able to see more than one familiar face last week when members of the Nebraska Committee, Employer Support of the National Guard and Reserve came to visit them.

According to Lt. Col. Leonard Krenk, spokesman for the group, members of the group included employers of the part-time soldiers, National Guard and Reserve first sergeants and sergeants major, a town mayor, high school teachers and counselors and two parents.

> "We could show them a film, but it wouldn't have the same effect as seeing their employees in action."
> — Lt. Col. Leonard Krenk

During their two-day visit, they dined with the soldiers, toured the barracks, exchange facilities and observed the soldiers during training. They also toured the Collins Training Center and were given a ride on a helicopter.

Krenk said that each of the visitors is in some way affected by the soldiers either when they are on duty or off. For instance, employers lose a worker when a soldier trains, and high school teachers and counselors need information when a student approaches them with questions about the Army.

The soldiers with the group need to keep up to date on training conducted in the regular Army so they can integrate it into training conducted at their National Guard and Reserve units.

"When employers see the soldiers in action, it dispels the belief that they are going away on vacation," Krenk said.

"We could show them a film," he added, "but it wouldn't have the same effect as seeing their employees in action."

Krenk said in addition to the tour to Benning, they occasionally take groups such as this to the field and let them fire weapons and eat MREs.

"Letting these people see how their tax dollars are being spent is the best possible way to establish a rapport with and educate them on what the Army is all about," Krenk said.

Coveted Darby Award distinguishes its owner as a cut above the rest

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

As a graduate of Ranger School, there is no greater honor than receiving the William O. Darby Award, which distinguishes a graduate as a cut above the others.

The award is given out very infrequently. Only one has been awarded this year, according to Sgt. 1st Class Mark Kazierczak, Ranger Training Brigade TAC.

Although the award is rarely given, the award will continue to be given for a long time to come. The death of one of the award's founders has ensured that.

Jerry Nadeau, from Clearwater, Fla., willed his home to the fund, Kazierczak said. When the home was sold, more than $70,000 was entered into the account earmarked for the award.

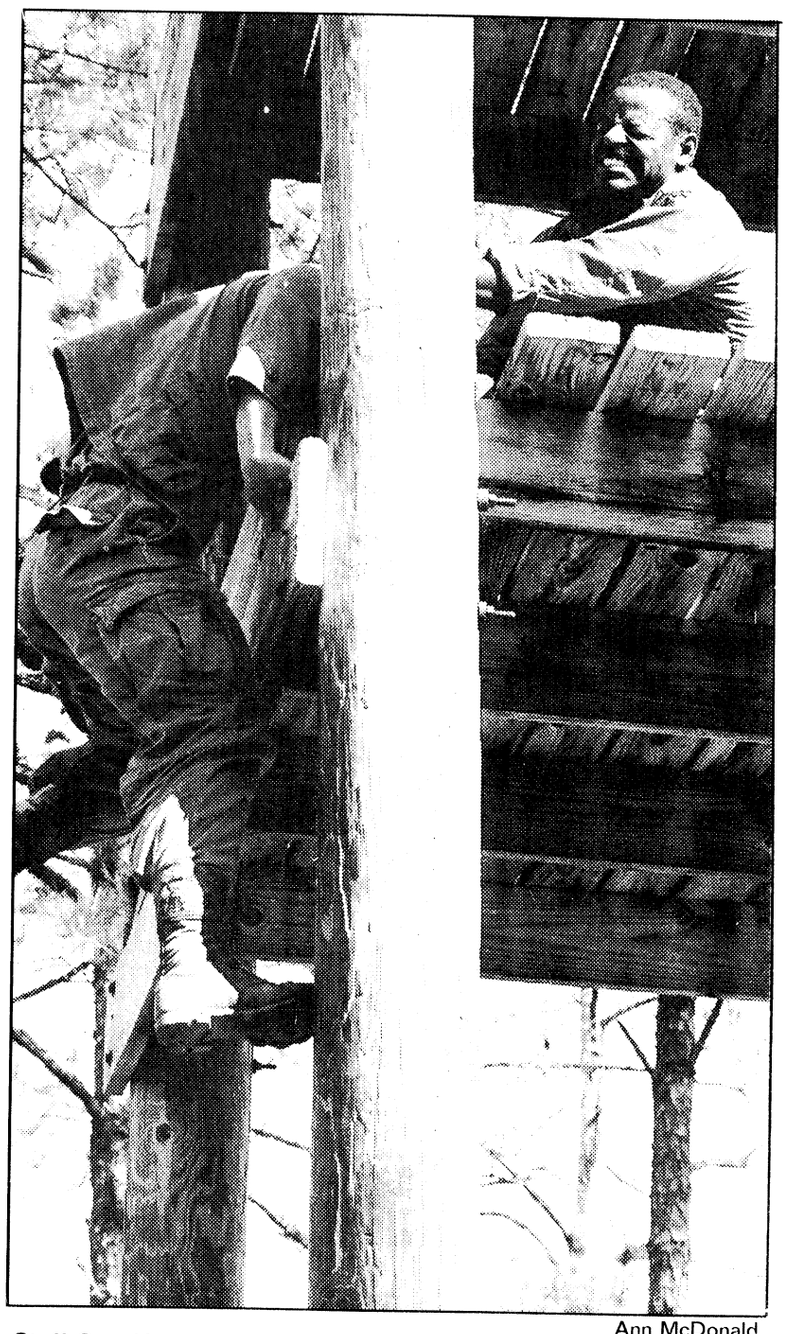
Nadeau was a member of the Ranger Battalion's Association of WWII (Darby's Rangers). The association established the award in 1964 in honor of William O. Darby.

Historical data indicates that Darby was one of the most outstanding and brilliant combat commanders of WWII. It was Darby who organized the 1st Ranger Battalion in June, 1942. Hence the name Darby's Rangers.

As a lieutenant colonel, Darby led the 1st Battalion in the initial North African landing at Arzew, Algeria. He won a Presidential Citation for distinguished action and was later promoted to colonel.

He was killed in action while leading the Fifth Army spearhead in Po Valley.

Darby was posthumously promoted to brigadier general.



Although the coveted Darby Award is a part of Ranger School, it isn't the first thing that graduates think about when they reflect on their experiences.

Camp William O. Darby is what pops into their heads, Kazierczak said. It's where, during one week of training, the students learn survival and patrolling skills. It is also where they meet her highness, the Darby Queen, the obstacle course.

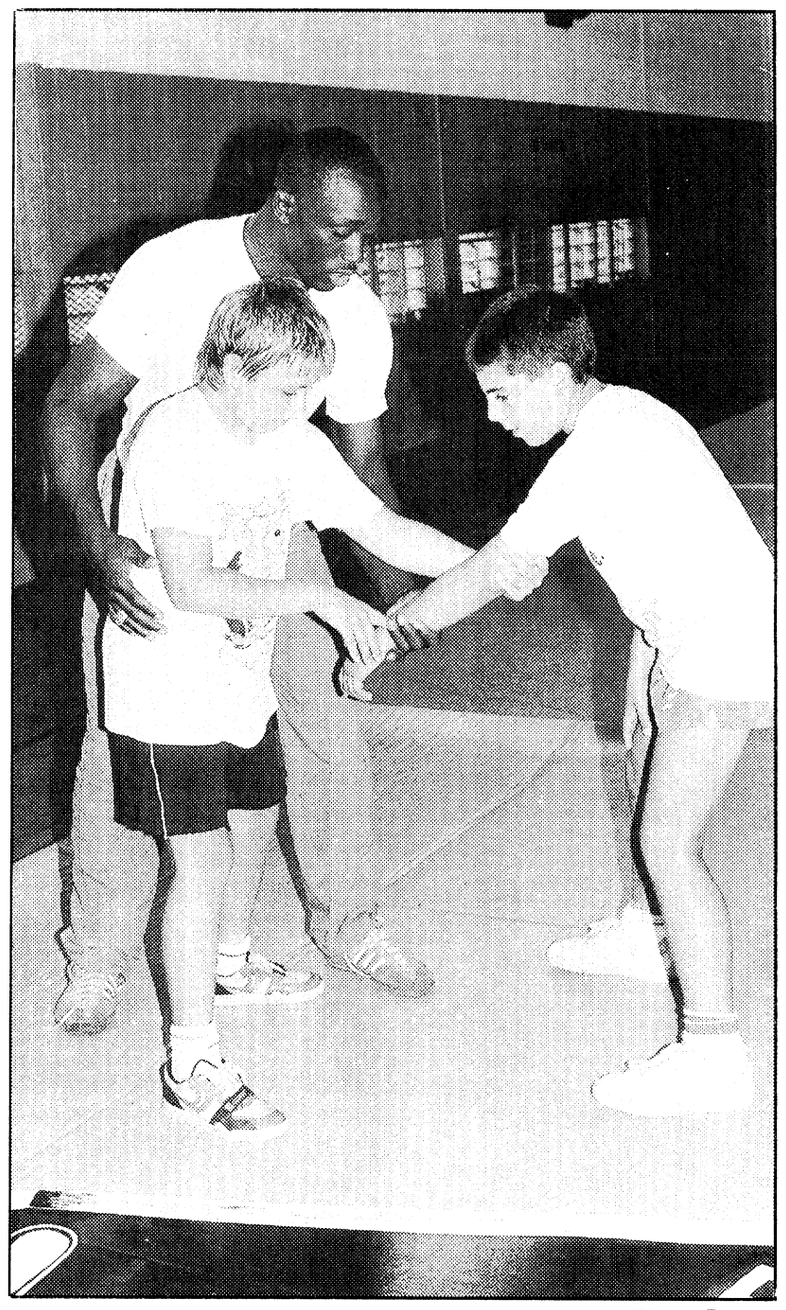
All-Army wrestlers give tips to youths

By Shawn Bryson
Bayonet staff writer

Today is the last day for Fort Benning youths to get help with their wrestling techniques from seven soldiers of last year's All-Army wrestling team.

According to Army wrestling coach Anthony Thomas, the wrestlers will wind up the first-ever Fort Benning Youth Wrestling Camp at about 11:30 a.m. today.



The instruction is being given at the Youth Activities Center gymnasium.

Among those giving the wrestling tips is Darrick Waldroup. Waldroup is a two-time national Greco-Roman wrestling champion. He earned those titles in 1986 and 1987.

More recently, Waldroup took 2nd place in his weight class at the 1987 Pan American Games at Fort Benjamin Harrison, Ind., and he was a silver medalist at this year's U.S. Olympic Festival. Waldroup will compete for the World Cup in Oslo, Norway this November.

"Darrick is probably the best wrestler in the country right now," Thomas said.

Thomas, who was recently selected as Fort Benning's first-ever athlete of the year, said the camp has gone well and had a variety of young wrestlers, some trying the sport for the first time and others who are seasoned wrestlers.

Championship nears

USAIC Public Affairs Office

The 1989 USAIC Open Freestyle Wrestling Championship will be conducted Aug. 24 to 26 at Briant Wells Field House, building 933.

Weigh-ins for the event will be held Aug. 24, 6 through 9 p.m.

Wrestling will begin Aug. 25 at 5 p.m., and 9 a.m. Aug. 26.

The championship is open to all active duty and reserve military personnel assigned to Fort Benning.

Weigh-in arrangements can be made for anyone who cannot make the scheduled weigh-ins by calling Anthony Thomas at 544-7122/6802.

The purpose of the championship is to provide interested wrestlers the opportunity to qualify for the 1989 Fort Benning post team.

The Fort Benning post team will compete against other installations from Sept. 1 through Dec. 20.

Pros remind fishermen to take their time

By Earl Bentz and Steve Price
1988 Outboard Marine Corp.

Slow down, you're moving too fast.

You may remember these words of advice from a popular song years ago, but they're just as important today — especially to bass fishermen.

"We're all fishing too fast," said Johnson Outboards Pro Staff member Charlie Reed, winner of the 1986 BASS Masters Classic, "and as a result, we're passing right over fish we could catch."

"If you slow down your fishing, you'll keep your lure in the strike zone longer and that always increases your chances of getting a hit. Depending on water clarity, I'd say the actual strike zone of a bass is normally only a foot or less. That's why accurate casting to specific targets is so important, but once you're at that target you need to keep the lure there."

For years, bass fishermen have tried to slow their fishing, but the run-and-gun style of tournament action makes it difficult. Now, however, Reed sees the trend to slower fishing becoming stronger and more widespread.

"I honestly think we're fishing for smarter bass today than we were several years ago," he said. "The bass have become conditioned to seeing lures and the constant pressure has made them more wary.

"I believe fish are looking at lures more carefully because the majority of the time they're striking from hunger, not impulse or anger."

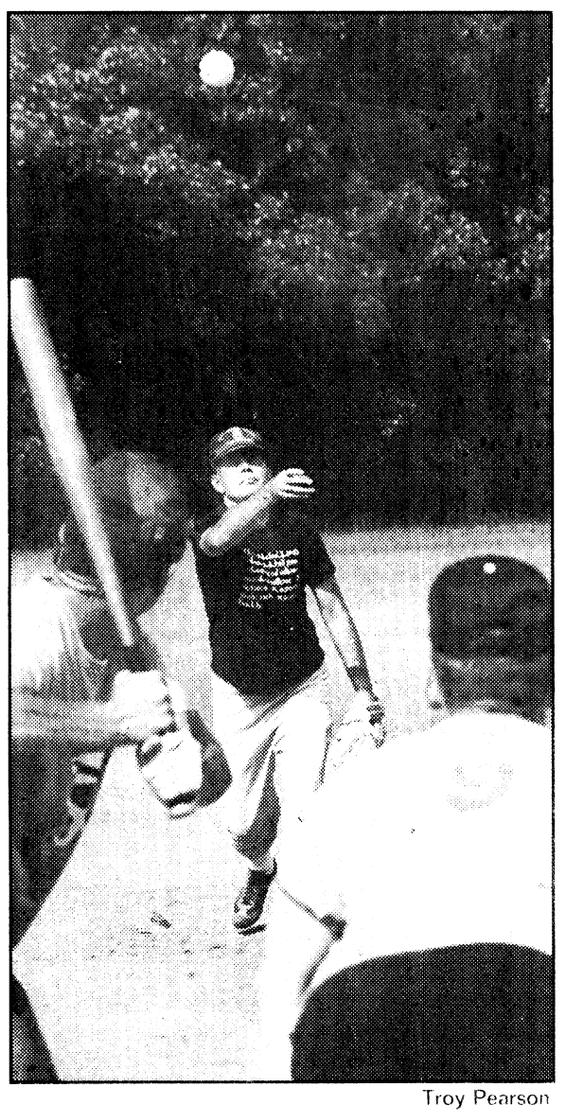
One way anglers traditionally slow their fishing is by changing lures. Jigs, for example, will fall slower if they're worked with heavier lines and used with a large, buoyant port chunk trailer.

"Now," said the Johnson Outboards pro, "manufacturers are beginning to design lures that can be fished slower. There is a new jig on the market with a plastic-coated head that falls as slowly as one foot every three seconds. Normally, jigs fall at the rate of a foot every second.

"When bass are suspended in flooded brush or around boat docks and pier pilings, a lure like this will not only be easier to control but much more effective, too.

"I think in the near future we'll also see manufacturers producing other lures that can be fished slower. There are already spinnerbaits and buzz baits with plastic instead of wire in them so they don't fall as fast."

Anglers need to remember bass are predators, Reed explains, and they usually try to attack young, old, or crippled prey that moves slowly and has little chance of escape. Thus, anytime an angler can slow his lure, he improves his chances.



"The only time you really don't want to use a slow-falling lure, particularly a jig, is when the fish are really deep," he notes. "In those situations you want a lure that falls quickly down to the fish.

"The majority of the time, however, slower is definitely better."

2nd Bn., 18th Inf., teams up with officers, downs staff

Troy Pearson

Gene Lewellyn lets a pitch fly.

By Troy A. Pearson
197th Infantry Brigade

The officers of 2nd Battalion, 18th Infantry Brigade (Vanguards), teamed up with the officers from Separate Units and squeezed by the brigade staff, 12-10 in a recent game at Kelly Hill .

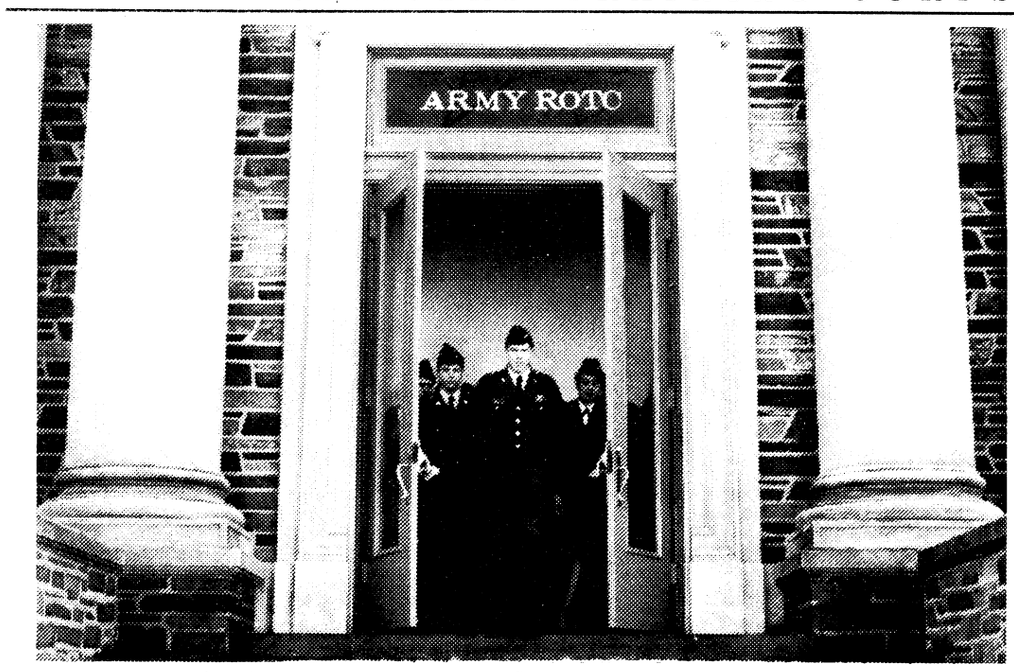
"We've had a fair amount of practice, and we're looking forward to doing really well today, despite all the injuries we've encountered up to this point," said Bob Goodrich, captain of the Brigade staff team, before the start of the game.

Early in the season, brigade staff was victorious over 2nd Bn., 18th Inf., with an 8-4 score. Entering this game with similar records, both teams were looking forward to winning.

"We have a strong defense and a very good base hitting record," said Chip Holton, team captain, at the beginning of the game. "We should do quite well if we don't try to kill the ball."

Brigade staff was the first to score with an RBI. In the bottom of the first with 2nd Bn., 18th Inf. taking the plate, Mo Hammond hit a grand slam, bringing in Allen Edwards, Joe Ozoroski and Lee Enloe, setting the score at 4-1, in favor of 18th Inf.

Clarence Pittman added another run for Brigade at the top of the third. Then, 2nd Bn., 18th put on the heat when John Segar brought in three more runs to put them on top 7-2 in the bottom of the third.



The top of the fifth was the best inning for Brigade as they added five more runs, only to have 2/18th come back and score five.

Phillippe Upperman, Harry Williams, John Seagars and Rick Niebending of HHC all batted a round during the bottom of the sixth, which narrowed the 2nd Bn., 18th's lead to 12-10.

Brigade took their last swing in an effort to tie the game in the top of the seventh, however, the good fielding efforts of 18th ended the game.

Chip Holton summed it up best, "Vanguards second to none."

Colonel's driver drives home golf championship

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

Driving seems to be a way of life for a Ranger Training Brigade duffer who shot four over par during both days of the recent post golf tournament earning him the post championship.

Kelly Church, driver for the RTB commander, attributed his win to good drives on the fairway and a lot of practice before the tournament.

Ann McDonald

Kelly Church concentrates through his backswing.

Church, who describes himself as a natural, has been playing golf since age 5. He said he has had no formal lessons but has played with some talented people who gave him pointers.

"The support I have gotten from my commander has helped me, as well," he said, "but, I don't let it interfere with my job. When it's time to work, I work, and if not, then I'm on the golf course."

Church said he has his sights set on the upcoming Army tournament, and, at this point, it looks like he has a good chance of going.

Although Church fared well in individual play, the 29th Infantry Regiment demonstrated its golf prowess by taking home both the first and second-place trophies.

HHC, 29th Inf. Regt. won the first-place trophy. The team consisted of Warren Frier, Ron Green, Jack Eley, John Prosch, Ben Davis and James Merriken.

2nd Bn., 29th Inf. Regt. took second-place honors. Team members were Edward Goins, Roger Denny, Baron Brasell, Wilber Simmons and John Clabby.

Soldiers help Colonels shutout Cowboys in semi-pro football

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

Three Fort Benning soldiers shared victory with their teammates as the Phenix City Colonels shutout the Chattanooga Cowboys 19-0 in semi-pro football play at the Gwinnett High School Stadium in Phenix City Saturday.

This brought the team record to 2-0.

First blood was drawn when Henry Wilson scored with a six-yard run during the first quarter.

The Colonels scored again in the second quarter when quarterback Eddie Mitchell scrambled 12 yards for the second touchdown of the game.

Quarterback Keith Gardner threw a 26-yard touchdown pass to Rueben Hurston in the third quarter to make it 19-0.

Post players in the line-up were Lestley Haywood, Terry Hildbrandt and Freddie Williams.

The team is in a three-way tie in the Southern Football League.

The Colonels play the Forrest-Park Vikings Saturday at 8 p.m. in Phenix City.

Runners needed for Army's 10-miler

The Fort Benning Physical Activities Section is looking for qualified men and women to form teams for the annual Army 10-miler in Washington, D.C., Oct. 15.

The first run-off for selection of the team will be conducted Aug. 19 at 7 a.m. starting at the Santiago Fitness Center, building 3350, located on Sand Hill.

Tryouts are being conducted early so that the teams have ample time to train together, according to Staff Sgt. Lloyd McDonald, the team captain for the past two Fort Benning teams.

McDonald said "it's a good race, which starts at the steps of the Pentagon and winds around some of the historic sites in our nation's capital.

He said those selected for the team will be provided uniforms, transportation and amenities for the race.

For more information, call McDonald at 545-2332.

Creek Bowmen will help set bow sights

Creek Bowmen offers all archers broadhead zero pits for setting their sight pins for the upcoming deer season. Zero pits are set at 20 yards, 30 yards and 40 yards. Bale targets are at 20, 30, 40, 50 and 60 yards.

Zero days will be Aug. 26 and 27 from 8:30 to 3 p.m. each day. Range assistance and technical assistance will be available for minor adjustments.

The range is located on Sightseeing Road in the A-3 Range area. Come and set your sights and remember to hunt ethically. For more information, contact Jeff Becvar, 687-7027.

CLASSES

Columbus Museum — The Columbus Museum has openings in several classes in August for children and adults.

Alabama artist TaMara Beane will demonstrate the art of prehistoric style pottery at the Columbus Museum today through Sunday. Her program is presented in conjunction with the Lost and Found Traditions exhibition on display at the Museum through Oct. 15.

Of Choctaw/Cherokee descent, Beane works from archaeological site reports, pot sherds and photographs to authentically duplicate original prehistoric Native American pottery pieces. She studies the style, temper and method of construction used by the original prehistoric potter.

She will be in the Museum's Hardaway Gallery today, 1 to 5 p.m.; Saturday, 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. and Sunday, 1 to 5 p.m. For more information, contact the Museum Education Department at 322-0400.

Shirley Ingram will show teens and adults how to fashion a basketry masterpiece from natural fibers today.

Local artist, Linda Elliott, will show teens and adults how to create personal cards and sculptures using paper, small found objects and the techniques of watercolor, printmaking, marbleizing and collage Saturday.

For additional information on these classes, call the Museum Education Department at 322-0400.

SPIRITUAL

Added religions give challenge to Army commanders

By Cleo Zizos
Fort Monroe PAO

The 13 religious groups which existed in the United States at the time the Constitution first guaranteed free exercise of religion have mushroomed to over 2,050 today.

This burgeoning of faiths has naturally spread to the Army, and according to Chaplain (Lt. Col.) John Brinsfield, commanders now must face "the challenge that the multiplicity of faiths in civil and Army communities presents." Brinsfield is chief of the unit and individual training division of the U.S. Army Chaplain Center and School

"Chaplains may advise commanders, supervisors, soldiers and family members," he said, "but the command makes the final determination whether to approve or disapprove most requests for accommodating religious practices as part of a soldier's free exercise rights."

The challenge to commanders lies largely in the effort to accommodate a wide variety of religious practices.

To emphasize this point, Chaplain Brinsfield referred to several inquiries received at the Chaplain's School, and cited command decisions:

From Fort Ord, Calif. — Should a commander grant a Muslim's request to take physical training after sundown during the Holy Month of Ramadan? Yes, since many Muslims cannot eat or drink during the day.

From Fort Bliss, Texas — May a female soldier legitimately claim that a long-sleeved jogging suit is religious apparel because of a religious requirement to cover exposed flesh? Yes.

From Fort Jackson, S.C. — Does a Muslim have a religious duty to live with his wife if she is at an Army post? This was a student who wanted to get out of the barracks; the answer was no.

The Deputy Chief of Staff for Personnel at the Pentagon has established a committee to consider questions involving religious practices. However, most decisions rest with the commander, beginning at the unit level, Brinsfield said.

The Army from its origins in the Revolutionary War has always implicitly recognized the value which religion has for undergirding the spiritual strength and morale of American soldiers, Brinsfield said. The military was the first model for the free exercise of religion on a large scale.

"The unfettered practice of religion is deeply embedded in our national consciousness and in the traditions of the U.S. Army," he said.

Brinsfield cited AR 600-20, Army Command Policy, as confirmation of Army support of the free exercise of religion. Paragraph 5-6 states:

"It is the Army's policy to approve requests for accommodation of religious practices when they will not have an adverse impact on military readiness, unit cohesion, standards, health, safety, or discipline, or otherwise interfere with the performance of the soldier's military duties. However, accommodation of a soldier's religious practices cannot be guaranteed at all times but must depend on military necessity.

"Commanders provide support in the form of facilities, funds, personnel, material, information, transportation and communications and time," he said. "Chaplains advise commanders and implement the commander's religious program."

Although 80 percent of today's soldiers identify themselves as Christians, one-fifth of the Army list themselves as Jewish, Muslim, Buddhist, other or none.

Brinsfield expects the future will hold a wider variety of requests for the accommodation of religious practices than ever before.

"But our directive to care for them (the soldiers and their religious needs) began long before the Constitution was written or the Army mustered, or the earliest settlements in America were begun, "Brinsfield said. "It comes from one of the oldest regulations in the world, the Book of Leviticus, in the Bible: But the stranger that dwelleth with you shall be unto you as one born among you, and thou shalt love him as thyself."

Soldiers make many sacrifices as did the Savior, Jesus Christ

By Dennis S. Krumlauf

What do you think of when you hear the word sacrifice?

If you are a school teacher, you might think of long hours away from your home and family in order to teach.

If you are overweight or on a diet, you will certainly think of those delicious foods you are sacrificing to achieve or maintain an ideal weight.

If you are an executive, flying around the world, settling some corporate dispute, you might think of the sacrifice you are making of familiar surroundings and home.

If you are a chaplain, you think of the Old Testament and the sacrificial system of laying down a life.

For the soldier all of these sacrifices have to be faced. He will have to leave all the comforts of home for training. He may be ordered to fly to a remote part of the world, where he may have to lay down his life for the purpose of maintaining peace.

There is also sacrifice for the soldier's family. They are faced with mom or dad being gone on deployment or away from home for extended training. There are constant adjustments to a new post, schools, friends and environment.

There is one however, who has given his life for the sins of the world. He was not a soldier, but a savior.

He lived and died as an example of sacrifice and what it means to lay down your life for a friend. He did that by dying for us and for our sins in order to reunite sinful mankind to a Holy Creator and God.

Through the sacrifice of soldiers we are able to enjoy the freedoms of our great country, and through the ultimate sacrifice of Jesus Christ we are able to enjoy abundant life here and now, as well as the hope of eternal life with him.

TSB chapel holds "Celebration of Life"

USAIC Chaplains Office

"Then they brought little children to Him, that He might touch them. . .

"Let the little children come to Me, and do not forbid them; for of such is the kingdom of God.

"And He took them up in His arms. . ." (Mark 14:16)

A unique "Celebration of Life Ceremony" was given last Sunday at the School Brigade Chapel.

Four families participated in the ceremony in honor of their infants. Families of Louis Andrew Bastone, Margaret Elizabeth Bearden, Alicia Marie Dietz and James Solomon Jr., gathered with members of the Infantry Officer Basic Course, 2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry; and 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry of the School Brigade to recognize them in a special way.

Capt. Steven Paschall, School Brigade chaplain, said the ceremony has been celebrated as a TSB function for more than a year. It is a social and spiritual practice designed to honor families and offer fellowship within the brigade.

"The Celebration of Life Ceremony," according to Chap. (Capt.) Tom Wheatley, "was an effort to recognize new births within our groups. It was not a dedication or baptism but a joyful recognition and celebration with members of their battalions."

The significance of sharing the joy of new children was enhanced as Dixie Paschall sang "Cradle Song," by Christian singer/songwriter Sandy Patti.

"The song was a tribute," said Wheatley. "It was a very touching moment and seemed meaningful to the families and friends."

ENTERTAINMENT

Have fun competing at mini-triathlon

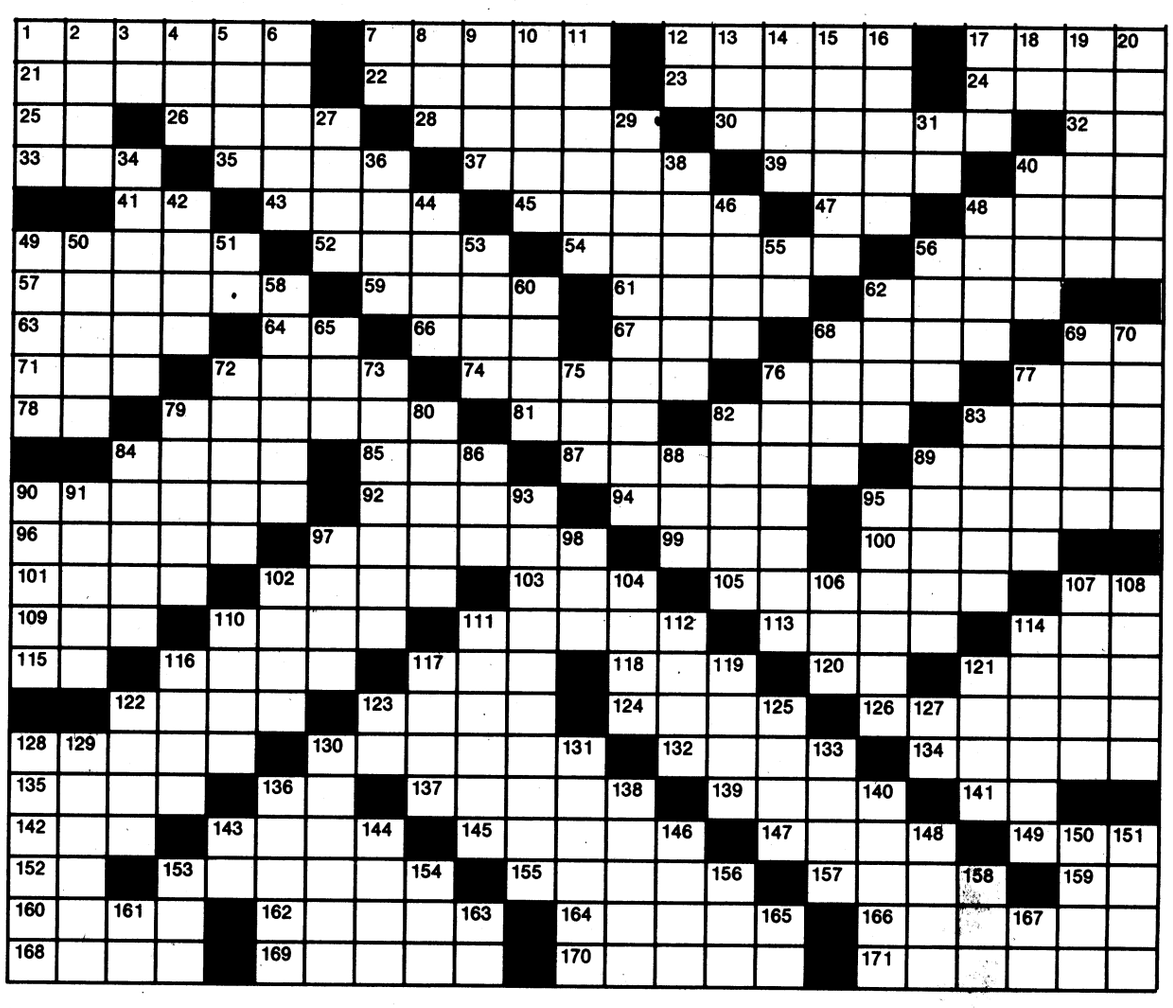
Jekyll Island

The Jekyll Island Recreation Department will host the Jekyll Island-Bud Light Mini Triathlon, Aug. 26.

Beginning at 8 a.m. at the South Bathhouse on Beachview Drive, the event will consist of a one-half-kilometer swim in the Atlantic Ocean followed by a 20-kilometer bicycle race and a five-kilometer run.

"This is the first event in the Jekyll Island-Bud Light Triathlon/Biathlon Series, which will include the Fifth Annual Triathlon in September and the Fourth Annual Biathlon in October," said Laurie Lester, Jekyll Island Authority superintendent of recreation. "The Mini-Triathlon distances are exactly half of those in the Triathlon, which should encourage people who have wanted to compete but have been apprehensive about attempting the longer distances," she added.

The entry fee is $10 per person before Aug. 23 and $12 after that date. Registration will be available the morning of the event from 6:30 to 7:30 a.m. Entry blanks are available at the Jekyll Island Recreation Department, Athletic Attic stores in Glynn County and at the Casino on St. Simons Island, Ga.



There will be six men's and women's age divisions from 14 and under to 51 and over. Trophies will be awarded to men's and women's overall winners and to division winners. Awards will be given to second- and third-place division winners. Each participant will receive a T-shirt. Lockers, restrooms, showers and refreshments after the event will be available for participants.

For more information about the Jekyll Island-Bud Light Mini Triathlon and the Triathlon/Biathlon Series, contact the Jekyll Island Recreation Department at (912) 635-2232.

Museum to exhibit local's art

The Columbus Museum

The Art of A. Henry Nordhausen, a retrospective exhibition of the works of this Columbus-based painter, opens Sept. 10 at the Columbus Museum. The exhibition reflects the artist's lifelong commitment to representational art during a period of time when abstract art attracted more attention. The artists's belief in the human figure as the ultimate subject for artistic expression is evidenced by the great number of figure studies in this selection of more than 130 works.

Nordhausen did not come to the South until relatively late in his career. Born in Hoboken, N.Y., in 1901, he studied at the New York School of Fine and Applied Arts and at the Academy of Fine Arts in Munich in the early 1920s. For a short time in 1925 he shared a studio with Alexander Calder. He was elected to the Salmagundi Club in 1927 and returned to Munich in 1928 on a Tiffany Foundation Scholarship.

The exhibition reflects the life experiences of the young painter in Munich. Landscapes, street scenes, and Bavarians in peasant dress were the subject for many of Nordhausen's early works. The exhibition includes "Bavarian Peasant" (1928), "Man With A Cane" (1929), "Sky Over Eichstadt, Germany" 1929, and "Houses In Nuremberg" (1929). The artist exhibited many of these early works in 1930 at a solo exhibition at the High Museum of Art in Atlanta.

The economic turbulence of the next decade did not hamper Nordhausen's artistic efforts. During the 1930s he resided primarily in New York City and

1989 USAIC tennis championship nears

1989 USAIC Summer Tennis Championship will be conducted Thursday through Aug. 30 at the Community Recreation Division hard surface tennis courts on Anderson Street.

Brigade/battalion teams at Fort Benning will consist of two male players in the Open Division, two in the Jr. Veteran Division (35-44 years of age), one in the Senior Division (45 or over) and two female players in the Women's division. Entry deadline is Wednesday. Application forms or memorandum request must be submitted to the Sports Director, building 394, or phone 545-5777 for further information.

Ladies golf clinic August 22-24

A Ladies Golf Clinic will be held at Follow Me Golf Course Aug. 22, 23 and 24 from 5:30 to 6:45 p.m.

For more information, call 687-1940.

Sign up now for racquetball tourney

Register now for the 1989 USAIC annual Racquetball Championships Sept. 28-30. Women's Division include active duty military and family members, DA employees and AAFES employees at Fort Benning. Divisions will include men division, open; B division; Novice division; Senior division (35-39); Masters (40 and over). Contact The Sports Office at 545-7519 or Briant Wells Field House, 545-4726 for further information.

Golfers to compete for championship

The third USAIC Battalion Golf Championship will be conducted Sept. 6 and 8 at the Follow Me Golf Course.

All information concerning the USAIC Championship will be directed to the Sports Office, building 394 or phone 545-4300/7519. Also, applications must be submitted with full name and unit of team members of Physical Activities Sports Office no later than Sept. 1.

Teams sought for shootout tournament

Teams are being sought for a Basketball Shootout Tournament which will be held at the Santiago Gymnasium at Sand Hill beginning Sept. 1, 5 p.m. and ending Sept. 3, 3 p.m.

Sixteen teams limited to 14 players each will be accepted.

The shootout is open to all of Fort Benning and male and female teams can be formed.

The registration deadline is Aug. 25. A small entrance donation will be required to help pay for first and second place and MVP trophies. Refreshments will be provided for the players.

For more information or to register, call 1st Lt. Wilbur Draughn at 544-1274 or Santiago Gymnasium staff at 544-2486/1595.

Semi-pro football in Phenix City

The Phenix City Colonels, a newly formed semi-pro football team, are playing in Phenix City.

Home games are played at Glenwood Stadium in Phenix City.

The next game will be against the Forest Park Vikings Saturday at 8 p.m. at the stadium. Some members of the team are Fort Benning soldiers, so come out and cheer them on.

Coaches needed for youth sports

Youth Services is in need of soccer, flag football and cheerleader coaches.

Basic requirements for coaching positions are that you have a true desire to work with children, you wish to devote your time and you feel you can teach the values of teamwork and sportsmanship.

Persons interested in coaching should call Youth Services at 545-3070/3913.

Goodwill Industries to hold golf tourney

Goodwill Industries of the Chattahoochee Valley Inc. is proud to announce the first Goodwill Golf Tournament at Fort Benning's Follow Me Golf Course Saturday.

Participation in the one-day event will be by two-men teams scored as a "Dog-Fight." The winners from each course earn the opportunity to participate in a "Play-Off Dog-Fight" to be held at the Bull Creek Golf Course in Columbus Sept. 11.

Playoff winners win the opportunity to play in the Sept. 18 Southern Open Pro/Am and a chance at a travel vacation package, according to Kermit Blaney, tournament chairman.

The entrance fee is $50 per player.

Call George Cliff at the Follow Me Golf Course at 687-1940 for more details and registration information.

Speedway holds military night

East Alabama Motor Speedway, located in Phenix City, Ala., is having its annual "Military Night" Saturday at 8:30 p.m.

Soldiers, their friends and family members will be admitted on a two-for-one basis. For every paid admission by a Fort Benning soldier, one person will be admitted free. Proper military identification is required.

Gates open at 6:30 p.m., practice is at 7:30 p.m. and the race begins at 8:30 p.m.

The Infantry Center Band and color guard will participate in prerace ceremonies.

For more information, call Madge Logan at 297-2594.

Bowling league seeks members

The Fort Benning Officers Mixed Doubles League will begin Sept. 13, and the league is in search of bowlers.

League members will bowl at the Main Post Bowling Center, building 2785, located at the corner of Sightseeing Road and Eckel Street.

Each team will consist of four members — two men and two women. Individuals who want to bowl but don't have a partner may sign up anyway. To sign up, call Carla Liebe at 682-0054 or Bob Johnson at 685-0862 or drop by the Main Post Bowling Center and sign the list.

Bowling Pot-O-Gold reaches $4,658

Fort Benning bowling centers' "Pot-O-Gold" cash prize has reached $4,658.

Bowlers must strike in certain frames to win the pot.

League and open bowlers who purchase a three-game ticket and pay a $1 entry fee prior to bowling are eligible to enter the tournament.

For more information, call the Main Post Bowling Center at 545-4272 or 545-1949.

Post bass club wants members

Active duty and retired soldiers, Department of the Army civilians and family members, 16 years and older are eligible to join the Fort Benning Bass Club.

Beginners and experienced fishermen, boaters and nonboaters are welcome.

Meetings are held the second and fourth Mondays of each month at 7:30 p.m. on the second floor of Building 2616 (the Boy Scout building in Soldiers' Plaza).

If you are interested in becoming a part of this organization, attend a meeting or call Porter Angel at 569-9100, Joe Wikoff at 685-0301 or Jackie Marsh at 297-7352.

Art

participated in nationally competitive exhibitions. He continued to paint a variety of subjects, such as "Susanna and the Elders" (1936) and "The Green Hat" (ca. 1940).

After serving with the military in World War II, Nordhausen spent six months in Florida with the Ringling Brothers-Barnum & Bailey circus, painting clowns, burlesque dancers, aerialists, acrobats, and parades. Paintings such as "Under the Big Top" (1948), "Burlesque on Stage" (1945), and "Flying Trapeze" (1948) record the artist's fascination with the circus world.

His travels to Italy in the early 1950s are reflected in several landscape paintings included in the exhibition: "Pietramarazzi, Italy" (1950), "Camagana, Italy" (1952), and "Pecceto and Valenza, Italy" (1950).

Throughout his career Nordhausen painted portraits, even during his early years of study in Munich. The exhibition includes his 1974 portrait of Dean Rusk, as well as two self portraits, one executed in 1939 and a later one painted in 1971. Since establishing a studio in Columbus in 1960, Nordhausen has been in great demand as a commissioned portrait artist and has painted well over 500 portraits.

Nordhausen has received many awards during his career. In 1949 he received an award from the National Academy for "Circus Friends". In 1951, his painting of a Chilean girl, Natalia, received the Allied Artists of American Gold Medal Award. In 1957, he received an award from the American Watercolor Society for "Seated Nude". He also has received numerous awards from the Salmagundi Club, and served as President of the Club from 1959 to 1963.

Service stations convert to sale of unleaded only

The Fort Benning Exchange service stations will be converting to the sale of three grades of unleaded gasoline within the next 30 to 60 days.

These grades will be super unleaded, 91 octane; premium unleaded, 89 octane; and regular unleaded, 87 octane.

Due to an EPA requirement calling for the removal of all lead from gasoline, leaded gasoline will no longer be carried. The majority of vehicles currently using regular leaded gasoline should operate properly on the 89 octane unleaded gasoline, however, the stations do carry lead substitutes for those vehicles that need an additional anti-knock compound.

Toy company issues safety notice for big wheels

The Empire of Carolina Inc. Toy Company has issued a safety notice to anyone who may have purchased a battery-operated big wheel riding toy. Some models have been sold in exchanges worldwide in 1986.

The on/off switches may overheat and stick in the "on" position, which could result in a burn to the operator's hand or loss of control of the riding toy.

The affected models are: Kawasaki KLT 250 Prairie Big Wheel, numbers 1215, 1220, 1223, 1221 and the Sweet-Tee-Nuff Big Wheel.

If your children have one of these battery-operated big wheel riding toys, they should stop using it immediately until the switch is replaced. This repair is necessary even for a previously replaced switch, according to the manufacturer.

A new switch will be provided free by calling the manufacturer, Empire of Carolina Inc. toll free at 1-800-334-5666. Please have the model name and number of your toy ready when you call.

Inquiries can also be sent to Empire Campaign in care of Empire of Carolina Inc., P.O. Box 427, Daniel Street Extension, Tarboro, N.C. 27886.

COVER STORY

Benning to be featured in future Army Times

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

Fort Benning will be the star of Army Times in a feature that should appear sometime in September.

Times staffers recently spent a week here interviewing commanders, directors and soldiers for a post guide similar to previous editions that have featured other installations.

A reporter and photographer covered nearly all major activities, and commands, including the 75th Rangers, 36th Engineers, 197th Infantry Brigade, family housing, family support services, the hospital and dental activity and even Destin Recreation Center.

A special capabilities exercise was conducted on Eubanks Field so the staff members could gain more insight into what post soldiers are capable of doing.

Doughboy Award presented here

USAIC Public Affairs Office

The winner of this year's prestigious Doughboy Award is the first commander of the Training and Doctrine Command and principle author of the major revisions to Field Manual 100-5, which established the Army's overall doctrine for combat operations.

Retired Gen. William E. DePuy was presented the award Tuesday during a banquet at the Fort Benning Officers' Club in his honor.

The award, a chrome replica of a World War I helmet, is given to individuals for outstanding contributions to the infantry force, on behalf of all infantrymen, past and present.

Washington D.C.'s National Infantry Ball is normally where the award is presented, but it was decided it would be given at the "Home of the Infantry" this year.

Past recipients of the award are: Bob Hope, H. Ross Perot, William Maudlin, retired Maj. Gen. Aubrey Newman, former Senator John Tower, retired Gen. Matthew Ridgway, Senator Robert Dole, former Secretary of the Army John O. Marsh Jr. and retired Gen. Fredrick Kroesen Jr.

DePuy, 69, was born in Jamestown, N.D. He graduated from South Dakota State College and was commissioned a 2nd lieutenant of infantry in June 1941. His first assignment was with the 20th Infantry Regiment, Fort Leonard Wood, Mo.

DePuy fought in Normandy, Northern France, the Ardeones, Rhineland and Central Europe campaigns.

In May 1964, he was assigned to Vietnam as assistant chief of staff for operations, Military Assistance Command. He became commanding general of the 1st Infantry Division in March 1966.

DePuy also served as Assistant Military Attache and later the Acting Army Attache in Budapest, Hungary; with the Central Intelligence Agency as director of Special Warfare, Office of the Deputy Chief of Staff for Military Operations; as Special Assistant for Counterinsurgency and Special Activities, Office of the Joint Chiefs of Staff; and as Assistant Vice Chief of Staff of the Army.

He commanded the 2nd Battalion, 8th Infantry Regiment and the 1st Battle Group, 30th Infantry, 3rd Infantry Division. In June 1973, he became the first commander of TRADOC.

Fort Benning honors SPIRIT competitors

A whopping $6 million was saved for Fort Benning due to the efforts of dedicated post employees

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

Fort Benning recently honored third-quarter, 1989 Project SPIRIT competitors who together documented 81 actions resulting in a $6 million annual savings to the post.

Also recognized at the ceremony were winners of the recent SPIRIT Roundup Week.

Heading up the list of competitors at an award ceremony in Building 4, Aug. 16 was the U.S. Army Training Center.

ITC has captured the Command/Major Unit Command trophy for the fourth consecutive quarter. Some of their actions were: reduction of engraving contracts, use of troop labor to move ITC offices, restructure of ITC, elimination of overtime and shut down of the the 2nd Bn., 54th Inf. Regt. dining facility.

The Directorate of Plans Training and Mobilization took the Directorate Staff award for actions such as a new way of cleaning coffins on firing ranges, acquisition of a shredder and the purchase of range division trenching machine.

The Personal and Special Staff award went to the Equal Employment Opportunity Office for conducting Federal Employees' Week activities without cost to the government.

Ken Hankins, chief, Housing Division, Directorate of Engineering of Housing, was honored with an individual SPIRIT award for saving $1.932 million annually for his initiative to discontinue issuing Statements of Nonavailability for meals to enlisted soldiers and officers who are on temporary duty at this installation.

Another individual winner, Jean Whitehead was recognized for her initiative in working with the solicitations for awarding contracts to commercial vendors. This resulted in low bids being accepted for completion of projects at this installation, saving the government $353,000 annually.

Other individual awardees are:

Leigh Smith, USAIS — $5,000
John Ridgley, DPTM — $10,000
Deborah A. Dresser, DPTM — $15,000
Craig Taylor, DEH — $71,000
Dominik DeCarlo, DEH — $106,000
William T. Brannen,Sr., DEH — $124,000
Richard Mize, DEH — $880,000

SPIRIT Roundup Week Winners are:

Command/Major Unit Winner, Lt. Col. Don Dickinson, ITC
2nd place, Elizabeth Erickson, USAIS
Directorate Staff Winner, Craig Taylor, DEH
2nd place, John Baggett, DEH
Personal and Special Staff Winner, Winnie Torain, EEO Office;
2nd Place, Chap. (Col.) Roy Mathis

Classes begin Tuesday

By Beth Middlemiss
Fort Benning Schools

Fort Benning Schools will open their doors for the first day of the 1989-90 school year Tuesday.

Teachers reported back to work Monday and are making their final preparations for the opening day.

All students must register each year to attend the Fort Benning Schools. Though formal registration times are now over, it is important for any parent who has not registered his child to visit the child's school to register today from 8 to 11 a.m. or Monday from 8:30 to 11 a.m. or from 1 to 3 p.m. (Schools will be closed this afternoon.)

Fort Benning Schools have different school hours on Tuesdays than on other days of the week. Though students leave earlier, teachers stay later and use the two-hour block of time for parent conferences, staff meetings and inservice training.

Parents should note that the first day of school is on a Tuesday, and the Tuesday hours will apply.

OPINION

VARIOUS VOICES: Do you think women should be admitted into combat MOSs?

Sgt. Wade Shell, HQ Co., 1st Bn., 11th Inf. Regt. — "No. I don't believe the majority of the women in the Army would want to be in combat MOSs. Some women are capable but we still need to look at the majority."

Sgt. 1st Class Steven A. Kelly, 3rd Bn., 11th Inf. Regt. — "Yes. There are quite a few other countries that employ women in combat roles, and they are doing a good job."

Staff Sgt. Terry Littlejohn, Co. C, 1st Bn., 29th Inf. Regt. — "I personally don't think they can deal with the fear and the stress that go along with a combat MOS."

Bobbie Christiansen, family member — "No. I know a lot of women libbers would disagree, but women have many limitations that wouldn't allow them to do the job. I think it might deter from the mission instead of advance it. Whether it be physically or mentally, women are simply made different than men."

Spec. Yvette Lewis, 498th Med. Co., 34th Med. Bn. — "I personally wouldn't do it, but if a woman feels she can do the job, she should by all means do it."

Staff Sgt. Luis Colon, 301st MP Co., Puerto Rico — "Yes. I think men and women are equal, and women can do the job in combat."

Have I got a bargain for you

Not necessarily

By Clyde Snively
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Someone is trying to tell me something.

I went out to the parking lot the other day to get in my car and go home and someone, a car dealer, had inserted his business card in my car door.

On the back, he'd written a little note, saying how he'd noticed my car and thought I might want to trade it in. He continued that maximum trade-ins were available, based on close inspection.

Naturally, I was insulted. Wouldn't you be if the car you'd been driving for the past eight years, the car you'd put 110,000 loving miles on, was being singled out by some car dealer as a likely candidate for trade in.

Sure, I have a little rust here and there. What can you expect from a car that has lived half it's life near the ocean and the other half in the rust belt of up-state New York.

But by golly, that little sucker keeps running and every morning and every evening as I pass all those fancy cars sitting like grazing cows alongside the by-pass, I pat Fritz on the dashboard and say, "way to go girl."

Another thing. I'd never buy a car, or any other product for that matter, from someone who puts business cards or flyers on cars in a parking lot on post.

Why, because it's illegal. Just like I'd never buy anything from these guys who slip into the office and whisper what a great deal they have for me in jewelry, ceramics, plastic-ware, telephones, insurance, you name it. No, I'm more apt to call the MPs and have them dragged off post.

But back to the car business. I finally did wander about some car lots, gazing at cars.

I usually don't like to do this unless I'm seriously considering a car.

You know how it goes. You pull into a car lot, and, before you know it, 28 salesmen are encircling you, drawn to you like flies to sugar.

Words like, "I'm not seriously looking, just mildly looking," don't deter them as they foist their business cards on you and take down your name, address, phone number and so on.

After this, they try to ease you behind the wheel of a car you know you can't afford. Urge you to test drive it, knowing that after driving whatever car you drove up in, their car will put yours to shame.

And it does. It's mighty tough to go back to my sweat-stained seat covers, heel holes in the floor covering and cracked dashboard after gliding about in a car that easily sprints up to 60 mph without having to push off on the pavement with the left foot, and which blows a cool stream of air across your brow, while the car stereo beats out a steady rhythm without crackling and snapping.

Sure, I could get used to something like that, but who wants the monthly car payments.

I expressed my concerns to the car dealer.

"For you Mr. Snively," he says, using mister and my last name to gain my trust and confidence, "we can work out a special deal."

Naturally the special deal is too good to be true and after several trips back and forth to the managers office, da dum, the MANAGER HIMSELF, finally appears.

"Son," he says, using this term to make me feel small and meek, like a son, "I just can't let my dealer sell that car to you for that price. You're already taking away his commission with the previous offer, which I approved only because we want you to have that car, but I just can't let you take more from him. You understand."

Of course I understand. Mr. Big Bucks Manager's cut might be reduced.

When they see I ain't budging, they try another ploy.

"How about leasing a car," they say all bright and cheery again. "We'll give you cash for your car, cash that you can do anything you want with, and your monthly payments will be soooo loooow."

"Ha, ha," I say. "I know about some of those lease deals. Sure it sounds sweet, but you restrict my mileage, make me pay extra for just about everything except gas, then take the car from me, leaving me with nothing when the term of the lease is up. No thanks. No leases for me without my going by SJA to have the contract checked."

I leave with old Fritz, adjusting my rear to miss the broken spring, driving off to reflect on another near miss at the car dealer.

Guard's image synonymous with emergencies

By Larry W. Bryant
Army News Service

Throughout its modern history, the Army National Guard's public image has been synonymous with response to emergencies.

Known in Guard parlance as "military support missions," these responses, or "call ups," cover a wide range of activity, such as:

- Water hauling (in a recent case, several Alabama Guard soldiers were placed on state active duty to help civil authorities provide potable water for a community faced with fuel-contaminated wells).
- Engineer support (more than two dozen Alabama Guard soldiers recently saw state active duty in providing a temporary bridge for a community during construction of a new bridge).
- Fire-fighting support (in Arizona, several Guard soldiers recently concluded their active-duty service of providing housing for fire fighters from the federal and state forest services).
- Medical evacuation (several Guard soldiers in California recently provided aerial "medevac" support for an injured hiker).
- Disaster relief (in a recent airliner crash in Iowa, more than a dozen state-activated Guard soldiers assisted civil authorities by providing security and by picking up and marking crash debris).

Besides such customary cases of calling up support from Guard units, both the federal and the various state governments have been relying on selective use of Guard soldiers in an expanded war against drug trafficking.

In recent weeks, for example, federal and state law enforcement authorities have enlisted Guard aid in actions throughout some 42 states. These actions ranged from ground/aerial surveillance and cargo inspections to aerial transportation of law officers and communications/administrative support.

For the scores of Guard soldiers assigned to those actions, the immediate benefits of their participation can be measured in terms of experience gained under realistic operations. Experience that readily can be applied to their standard training programs.

And for the rest of America, the long-term benefits of such special "Guard duty" can be measured in terms of property protected, lives saved and hopes extended.

Army PAs may get commissions

By Jerry Harben
Army News Service

Army physician assistants may join their peers from the other services in becoming commissioned officers if a proposal from the Army surgeon general is approved.

Army PAs are currently warrant officers. The Air Force has commissioned PAs since 1978, while the Navy and the U.S. Public Health Service began commissioning PAs this year.

This should address the disparity with PA counterparts in the other services," said Col. John Sierra, chief of personnel management for the Office of the Surgeon General's directorate of personnel. Army health officials say the difference between services causes difficulty for the Army in recruiting and retaining physician assistants.

Commissions would also make physician assistants comparable to other nonphysician healthcare commissioned officers and their civilian equivalents.

According to Lt. Col. Bruce Griffin, also of the directorate of personnel in the surgeon general's office, the responsibilities of PAs are similar to those of nurses, dietitians, physical therapists and occupational therapists.

"The predominant PA role will remain primary patient care," Griffin said.

Currently, physician assistants' duties include medical training, first aid, sanitation, evacuation, injury prevention, medical aid station operations, sick call and resuscitation care. As commissioned officers, they could take on additional duties, such as officer-in-charge at a troop medical clinic, advanced cardiac life support and advanced trauma management review, major command consultants and professional managers.

Commissioned physician assistants would become members of the Army Medical Specialist Corps under the proposal.

The surgeon general's proposal is now being staffed among the Army's leadership; a decision is expected from the secretary of the Army in the fall. If approved, the proposal would make commissions available to PAs by late 1990.

The Army Medical Department personnel proponent division of the Academy of Health Sciences at Fort Sam Houston, Texas, conducted the study recommending commissions for PAs.

Army health officials say commissions would increase physician assistant accession sources by allowing PAs to enter the Army through ROTC or direct commission.

For a commission, the Army would require PAs to have a bachelor's degree, certification by the National Commission on Certification of Physician Assistants, and graduation from and approved training program.

Plans call for a five-year transition period to allow current PAs to meet commissioning requirements, Army health officials say.

Of the 506 active duty physician assistants authorized in the Army, the AMEDD personnel proponent division estimates that 210 currently meet the proposed requirements for a commission. A formal selection board would approve current PAs for commissioning.

The grade structure for commissioned PAs would range from second lieutenant to colonel, with a large number of captains.

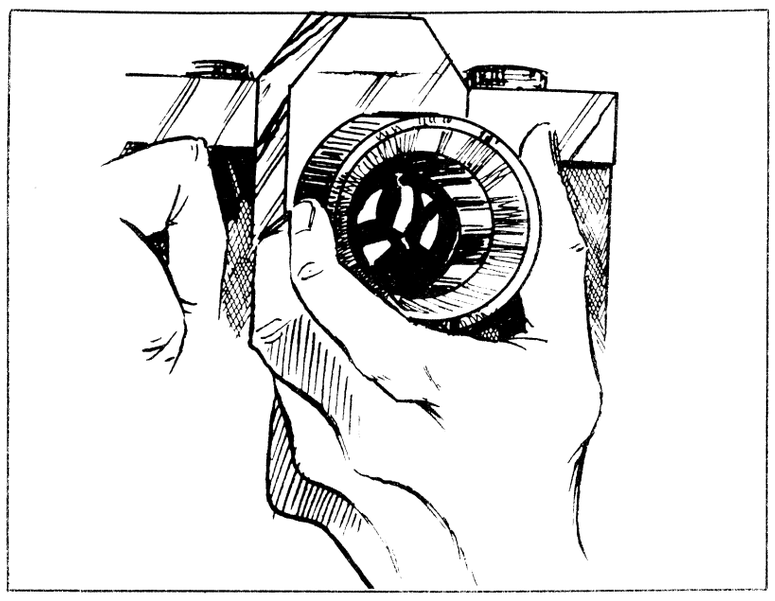
Former Sgt. Maj. of Army visits on behalf of NCOA

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

The former Sergeant Major of the Army made a brief stop here last week to serve as guest speaker at the Noncommissioned Officers Association chapter luncheon conducted at the Main Post NCO Club.

Retired Sergeant Major Glen E. Morrell who currently serves as a special assistant to NCOA President Walter W. Krueger makes public appearances on behalf of the organization and was available before and after his speech to talk with installation soldiers.

More than 300 troops attended the chapter luncheon and stayed for Morrell's remarks about the association and the projects on which it is currently working.



NCOA was founded in 1960 to promote and protect the rights and benefits of active duty and veteran noncommissioned and petty officers in all five branches of the Armed Forces, the Reserves and National Guard.

People, who are eligible to join the organization was one of the issues covered in his speech. Morrell disputed the belief that only retired veterans could be members of the association.

"Anyone who has served enlisted time in the Armed Services is eligible for membership," Morrell said.

For more information on NCOA, call Blaine Souerwine, 682-2988.

FTC holds camera clubs responsible for false claims

If everyone who is eligible to cancel his contract with Traditional Industries Inc. does so, the cost to the company could exceed $50 million.

Federal Trade Commission

The director of the Seattle Regional Office of the Federal Trade Commission announced today that the FTC has charged Traditional Industries Inc. with making false claims about the quality of photographic packages sold to consumers for $300 to $1,500.

In a consent decree filed in federal court, the company agreed to settle the charges by changing its sales practices and by permitting some consumers to cancel their contracts. Depending on the number of consumers that qualify and choose to cancel contracts, the total cost to Traditional could exceed $50 million.

Traditional and its subsidiaries sell, usually on credit, books containing 400 or more coupons redeemable by mail for film and enlargements.

Prospective customers receive notices informing them they have "won" a prize. Those claiming the prize typically receive a sales pitch urging them to buy Traditional's coupon book.

They are told they can obtain professional-quality "custom" photo processing while saving hundreds or thousands of dollars. Defendants often target newlyweds and new parents.

In its complaint, the FTC charges that the defendants' claims regarding custom-quality processing and substantial savings are false.

The defendants allegedly fail to perform custom services they promise to provide either when necessary to improve the quality of enlargements or when specifically requested by a consumer. Moreover, photo processing services using similar equipment and producing similar results are available at lower cost from many retail outlets.

According to the complaint, "The virtual worthlessness of the package is demonstrated by the fact that customers' usage of the services they have purchased is negligible."

The complaint further charges that the defendants violated the FTC's Cooling-Off Rule, which requires that consumers be given three days to cancel sales made at locations other than the seller's usual "place of business."

When making sales out of hotel and motel rooms, defendants failed to notify consumers adequately of the cooling-off period and failed to honor requests for cancellation during the three-day period.

In addition, the complaint alleges that the defendants violated the Truth in Lending Act when extending credit for the purchase of photo processing packages by failing to disclose, among other things, the dollar amount of finance charges.

Under the consent decree, the defendants agreed to a permanent injunction prohibiting future misrepresentations and requiring them to perform services as promised. The decree also prohibits future violations of the Cooling-Off Rule and the Truth in Lending Act.

The defendants also agreed to offer contract cancellation to certain past purchasers. Consumers who purchased between Jan. 1, 1985, and Dec. 31, 1988, and still owe money on their contracts, will receive — or have already received — a questionnaire from an accounting firm regarding their purchase. For consumers whose answers show they qualify, the defendants will offer to cancel their remaining debt.

The defendants will also offer debt cancellation to consumers who purchased after Dec. 31, 1988, and who complain to the company within certain time limits about quality of services or about violation of their cancellation rights. Some of these consumers will also receive refunds from a $250,000 fund established by the defendants.

In addition to Traditional, the complaint and consent decree name its following subsidiaries: PhotoMagic Industries Inc., PhotoMagic Joint Venture, United Network International Ltd., Video Keepsakes Inc., American Industries of Oregon Inc., Direct Sales of America Inc., AJK Inc., Pacific Image Film Productions Inc., and Scherling Film Club Inc. They also name Arland D. Dunn and Michael J. Sales, officers of Traditional Industries.

According to its filings with the Securities and Exchange Commission, Traditional Industries is "the leading specialty marketer of custom photographic packages in the United States," operating 47 states. Traditional reported sales during the year ending June 30, 1988, of $41.5 million.

Traditional Industries is based in Agoura Hills, Calif. The FTC's Seattle Regional Office handled the investigation.

The complaint and consent decree were filed in the U.S. District Court for the Western District of Washington, in Seattle. The consent decree will not take effect until it is approved by the court. The consent decree is for settlement purposes only and does not constitute an admission of a law violation.

For further information, contact Maxine Stansell in the FTC's Seattle Regional Office, 206-442-4656. Press may contact Linda Wang at the same phone number.

The Fort Benning Legal Assistance Office has handled numerous complaints concerning Traditional Industries (sometimes known as World Wide Distributors) over the past year. Customers of this photo package who have had problems in the past are urged to complete questionnaires they receive and return them.

For customers who have not received a questionnaire, the Legal Assistance Office has additional copies. If there are any questions, do not hesitate to call the Legal Assistance Office at 545-3281/3282.

This may be your one chance to correct this problem, according to a Legal Assistance Office spokesman.

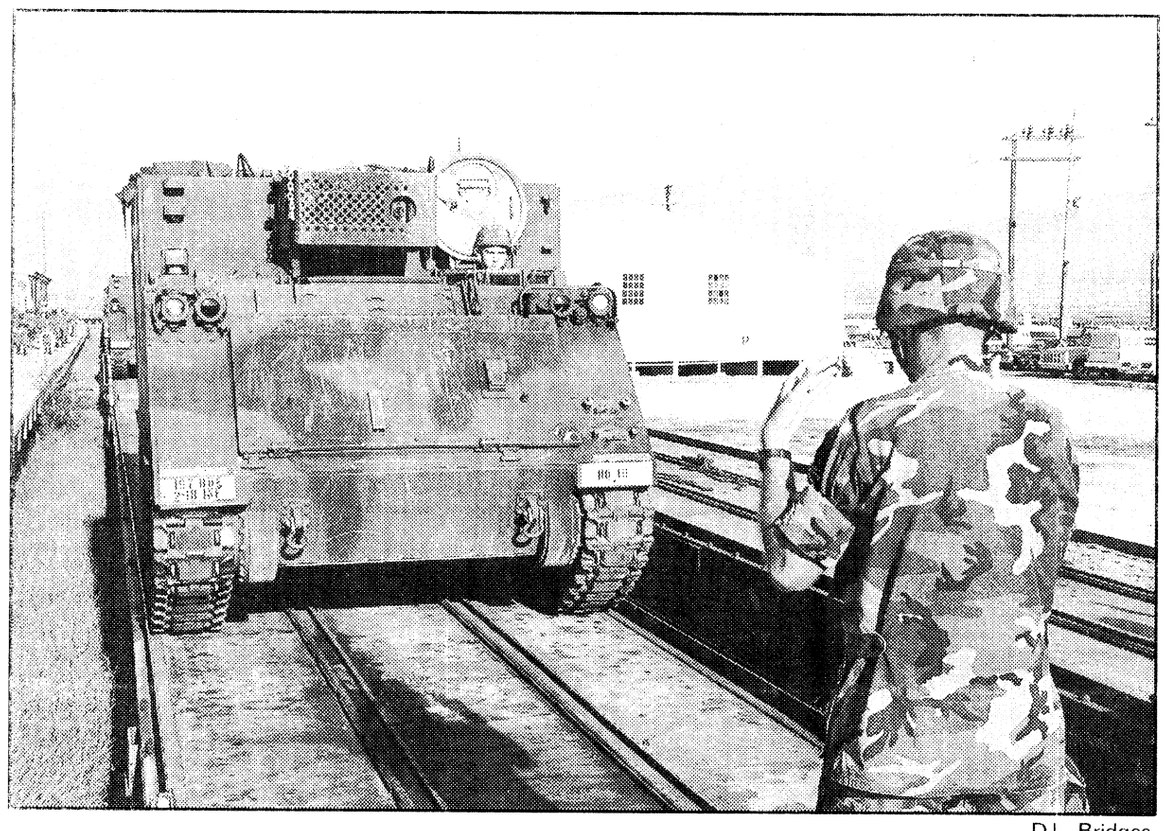
18th Infantry deploys for Desert Vanguard

By D.L. Bridges
197th Infantry Brigade

Equipment reception teams for the 2nd Battalion, 18th Infantry arrived at Fort Bliss, Texas, Aug. 14 to prepare for the battalion's deployment there for desert training.

The battalion's soldiers, including attachments from the 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor; 4th Battalion, 41st Field Artillery; 72nd Engineer Company and 197th Support Battalion worked in 95-degree heat to unload vehicles and equipment from the 96 rail cars that arrived from Fort Benning.

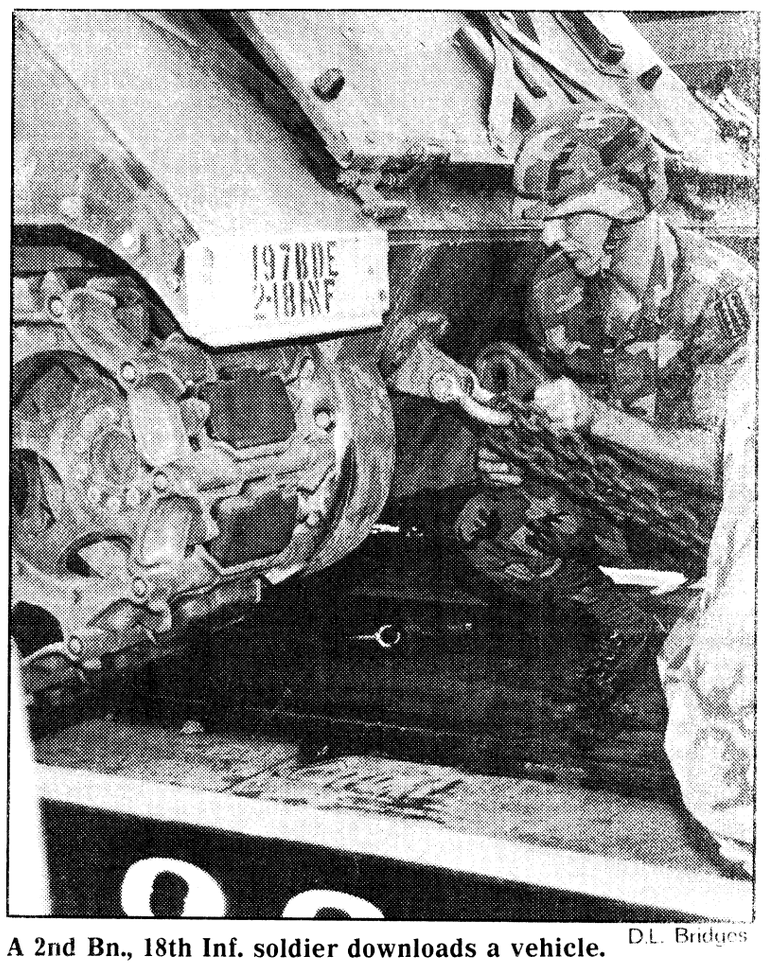
"I don't know if there are any records kept on this kind of thing, but we down-loaded seven companies worth of equipment in 12 hours with no accidents. That's pretty amazing," said Maj. Dan Gritton, 2nd Bn., 18th Inf. executive officer. "A big contributing factor in that is the high state of discipline displayed by these soldiers."



"Everybody has pitched in to make this work, and there's no individualism here, just good, dedicated teamwork," said 2nd Bn., 18th Inf. Command Sgt. Maj. Francis McIntosh. "I've probably been involved in 100 railhead operations during my career, and I'd say this is one of the best operated because of the initiative I've seen on the part of the soldiers and the maintenance personnel."

"So far, I like this better than NTC because we don't have to work in the dirt, and this is a different kind of desert than the Mojave," said Sgt. Olga Alfonso, 197th Spt. Bn. "I think the railhead went perfect; I've never seen one done so quickly and safely."

The battalion will move to Fort Bliss training areas to conduct weapons qualifications and small unit training before a three-day Combined Arms Live Fire Exercise at the end of August.



Until the main body arrives, the Equipment Readiness Teams will finish equipment preparation and take the opportunity to see some of the Fort Bliss and El Paso area on scheduled tours.

Fort Bliss is the U.S. Army's Air Defense Center and home of the Sergeants Major Academy.

197th officers prepare early for next rotation to NTC

By Willie Hay
197th Infantry Brigade

Battalion commanders and staff officers of the 197th Infantry Brigade recently got an early start on preparing for the brigade's next rotation to the National Training Center.

The brigade's Battle Simulation Center at Kelley Hill was the setting for the leaders' week-long training with the Army Training Battle Simulation System.

The XVIII Airborne Corps, from Fort Bragg, N.C., provided the computers and an ARTBASS team to supervise the training, which was geared toward meeting specific objectives established by each battalion.

Participating units of the 197th included 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor and 1st and 2nd Battalions, 18th Infantry. These units were organized into task forces encompassing both mechanized and air assault infantry and armor to enhance their war-fighting capabilities.

> "ARTBASS isn't designed to train an entire unit, just the commanders and their staffs."
> — Capt Michael Shows

"ARTBASS isn't designed to train an entire unit, just the commanders and their staffs," said Capt. Michael Shows, officer in charge of the plans section of the brigade S-3. "Computer simulation exercises achieve the commander's training objectives for unit leaders without the tremendous expense of sending an entire unit and its equipment to the field."

However, each battalion commander and his staff did go to the field to establish a tactical operations center and an administration and logistics center. The company commanders, on the other hand, worked from the Battle Simulation Center.

"The TOC orchestrated the battle, relying on current unit status reports, combat strengths and situation updates provided by the company commanders," Shows explained.

"Each battalion received both a defensive and offensive operations order simulated to occur on National Training Center terrain," Shows said. "Our scenario called for a regiment to attack the battalion task force when it was on the defensive, while the offensive goal was to destroy a company-sized element."

According to Shows, battle realism was enhanced by an assault company commander and a lift pilot from the 101st Airborne Division, Fort Campbell, Ky., and by the 197th's Air Force liaison officer, who provided sorties to the battalions through tactical air control parties.

Rifle Day: the culmination of extensive IOBC training

By Anthony Lieggi and Eutemo Ohno
2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry

On the ground ruck sacks lie dress right dress with anxious soldiers standing behind.

The command of "Fall-in" sounds and the 2nd lieutenants of Company A, 2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry, come to attention. Today is rifle marksmanship qualification day.

This day is the culmination of a week of training in the classroom and at three ranges. The company is also met with the challenge set by Battalion Commander Lt. Col. Patrick McDonald that each lieutenant must fire expert.

McDonald explained that the Army as a whole is weak in basic rifle marksmanship.

His solution to this problem is to give quality instruction and to spend time at the range. Upon graduation from Infantry Officers Basic Course, every officer will have fired expert.

"I'm happy to see the attitude on marksmanship change. The standard of (firing) expert should be Armywide," said 2nd Lt. Andrew Alder. "Firing expert isn't easy, but knowing that I'll have more time on the range will ensure that I go to a new unit with better firing skills."

The allied students attending the course are also expected to meet the same standard. This task may be a little more difficult for them because they have never trained with the M-16A2 before.

David Attard, a lieutenant from Malta, explained, "In learning marksmanship, there isn't a big language barrier to handicap training. I agree with the standard," Attard said. "I like firing the M-16. It's a much more accurate weapon than the AK-M, which we use in Malta."

The students attending the Infantry Officers Basic Course learn BRM techniques not only to improve their skills, but also to take these techniques to their new units.

Training for marksmanship is divided into three phases, much like crawling, walking and running.

Phase one is a day of classroom lectures covering introduction to weapons drills, opening and running a marksmanship range and firing skills.

Phase two moves to the range. Students learn to battle sight zero their weapons; conduct practical exercises on the firing techniques of breath, aim, squeeze; and practice the dime/washer drill and target box drill.

Also during phase two, the soldiers conduct a night fire during which they are expected to hit seven of 20 targets in the prone position.

Phase three is qualification day. This day is payday. The soldiers must cash-in on the skills learned during the week to earn expert.

At the end of the day and a half of firing, 54 percent of the company had qualified expert. For some the training paid off, for others attaining the level of expert is still in the future.

Stressful exercise tests limits of student's skills

By Mark Sechrest
2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry

A stressful 36-hour defensive exercise tested the limits of the skills of Infantry Officer Basic Course students from Company E, 2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry recently.

The exercise gave the lieutenants the opportunity to plan for a defense at the platoon level and enabled them to apply the training they had received at the Tactical Leadership Course two weeks before.

While continually being harassed by opposing forces, the platoon leaders designated locations for fighting positions, antitank weapons and M-60 machine guns; supervised the laying of wire obstacles and mines; and coordinated with friendly units adjacent to their positions.

The exercise culminated with a mechanized attack by the opposing forces from Company D, 1st Battalion, 18th Infantry.

Mark Sechrest

2nd Lt. Michael A. Austin, an IOBC student, sights a dragon.

This was the first force-on-force exercise in which the students participated. Its purpose was to make the lieutenants aware of the difficulty of their tasks as future platoon leaders.

Their units will benefit from their experience and lessons learned while at the course.

Maltese forces practice their marksmanship skills on the Army's latest M-16 simulator

By Marilyn Balzarini
Infantry Training Center

A delegation from the Maltese Armed Forces visited the 1st Battalion, 50th Infantry recently to practice their marksmanship skills on one of the Army's latest M-16 simulators.

After a short demonstration given by drill sergeants, Sgt. 1st Class Curtis Shanklin and Staff Sgt. Robert Linschoten, Company B, 1st Battalion, 50th Infantry, the Mediteranean soldiers fired the Multipurpose Arcade Combat Simulator with accuracy.

Much like a video game, the MACS uses a display terminal and computer hardware along with a mock M-16 rifle to teach the fundamentals of marksmanship.

"MACS is the most portable marksmanship simulator we have," said Capt. Mark Campbell, executive officer, 1st Bn., 50th Inf. "We also have the Weaponeer, which is a good simulator, but it can't be used in the dayroom or the barracks like the MACS can."

Each of the Infantry Training Center's eight battalions have MACS systems. The soldiers use them during their personal time to improve Basic Rifle Marksmanship scores.

Brig. Gen. John Spiteri, commander, Malta Armed Forces, agreed that the MACS is a valuable training aid. "It is definitely beneficial for training soldiers to fire the M-16 effectively."

ADVANTAGES THE ARMY OFFERS YOU AND YOUR FAMILY.

If you're married, there are many benefits available to you and your family that are not easily duplicated in civilian life.

You and your family get comprehensive medical and dental care, commissary and post exchange privileges, thirty days annual leave and use of a variety of post facilities.

And you also have reenlistment options that include bonuses, change of duty station or retention of present duty station, to name just a few.

Plus, there's the intangible benefit of being part of the Army family and all the closeness this entails.

When you take all this into consideration, reenlistment makes a lot of sense for a lot of reasons. We can show you even more. Come talk to us, and bring your spouse.

ARMY. BE ALL YOU CAN BE.® REENLIST.

Q: WHAT'S THE MOST IMPORTANT JOB IN THE ARMY?

A: EVERYONE'S.

That's right. Even though it may seem tedious or insignificant, we know the job you're doing is important. More important than you even realize.

Because it's part of a much larger picture.

For the Army to run smoothly and efficiently, it needs the efforts of all its soldiers. From the generals to the privates in basic training, the Army needs bright, skilled, dedicated soldiers. Soldiers who really care. Soldiers who try to do their best, in whatever they're asked to do.

Because when soldiers do their part, they keep the Army running strong. And that's what helps keep America strong.

ASK THE JUDGE

By Jane M. Winand
Staff Judge Advocates' Office

Q. I got divorced in Texas in 1984. At the time, I was only concerned with getting the divorce and would have agreed to anything my first wife demanded.

I agreed to pay $500 per month as child support for my two children until they reached the age of 18. The children are 12 and 13 now so I have several more years of child support to pay.

They are still living in the same county in Texas where I got my divorce. I met the most wonderful lady two years ago, and we got married. It has been really tough making the child support payments, and now my new wife and I are expecting a baby.

I have been thinking about trying to change the amount of the child support that I have to pay. Can JAG help me with this?

A. In your situation, the only way to change the amount of court-ordered child support is to go back to the court in Texas that entered the original decree of divorce and request a modification.

Although it may be possible to represent yourself in this action, it would probably be best to obtain a civilian attorney to appear with you in court.

Although JAG attorneys do some limited court representation, it is unlikely that a JAG lawyer would be able to represent you in court on this matter.

It would be wise to investigate the current child support guidelines for the state of Texas before deciding to seek a modification of the child support amount.

The current trend is for states to develop standardized child support guidelines. Thus, when a court has to decide an amount of child support, they use a formula based factors such as the amount of income of the custodial parent and noncustodial parent, the number of children to be supported and other obligations the supporting parent may have such as children from other marriages or relationships.

The problem you may face is that the amount of child support for your situation, as determined by the new guidelines, may be substantially higher now than it was in 1984 when the original divorce was entered.

If you seek a modification of the amount of the child support, you also face the risk of having the new child support guidelines applied to your situation and may be ordered to pay more child support rather than less.

If you are considering going back to court to seek a modification of child support, it is advisable to make an appointment with a Legal Assistance attorney at 545-3281/3282 first.

It is often possible for the Legal Assistance attorney to contact another JAG Office in the area where the court is located and determine the current child support guidelines and typical amounts of child support.

This information will enable you to make a well-reasoned decision as to whether or not you should seek a modification.

Soldiers celebrate unit's heritage

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet Staff Writer

Members of 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, gathered last week to celebrate its heritage and at the same time enjoy some time with their families.

The soldiers were honoring the reactivation of the unit which occurred on Aug. 14, 1957.

Although the unit was inactive for a number of years, historical data shows the unit was active during the Indian Wars earning one soldier, Pvt. Franklin M. McDonald, Co. G, 11th Inf. the medal of honor for his actions.

The unit was also active in World War I and World War II.

Today, the battalion's cadre trains young officers to be commanders, is the home of the Infantry Center Band and houses a company that contains the only parachute packing platoon on post.

Entertainment included races and games for the children, static displays, McGruff the Crime Dog and an exhibition from the Silver Wings.

Food and drink were available to carve the appetites created from all the activity.

Latin American children learn English through efforts of support group

By Keith R. Johnson
U.S. Army School of Americas

Imagine you're in grade school again and you're the new kid in town. You're faced with the age-old dilemma of trying to fit in and make new friends.

No problem you say. Okay, pretend you're in a foreign country and everyone else speaks a different language. How will you communicate?

For 28 Latin American children ages 5 to 14, the answer came in the form of a five-week English as a Second Language Course.

The children, whose fathers are Latin American armed forces personnel assigned to the U.S. Army School of the Americas, graduated Aug. 18 better prepared to cope at school.

The students will continue to study English during the school year.

"It is important during the summer for the children to continue learning English," said Jean B. Castaneda, a teacher with the program. "The young are anxious to communicate.

"They want to learn so they can talk to their friends and participate in school activities."

The course met each weekday for an hour and a half. During this time the children engaged in a variety of activities designed to improve their English such as games, singing, plays and nature walks, as well as completing their workbooks.

The students began the graduation ceremony by singing two songs, first in English and then in Spanish.

The songs were "The Days of the Week" and "The Months of the Year."

Six of the older students then performed a series of short skits in English.

Following the performances, the students were presented with diplomas and gifts from their teachers, Castaneda, Martha M. Mullinax and Gina R. Vasquez.

The guest speaker at the graduation was Elena Amos who congratulated the children and gave each one a gift certificate for a free banana split.

Commissary employees attend staff college

U.S. Army Support Agency

Two U.S. Army Troop Support Agency employees, James W. Hobbins and James E. Smith, are attending the Army Management Staff College, TSA officials announced recently.

Hobbins, Fort Benning commissary officer, has been with TSA for seven years; two of those years spent at his present assignment.

The 41-year-old Madison, Wis., native is also an experienced grocer in the private sector having run the gambit from bag boy to store owner.

Hobbins has owned and operated grocery stores in Minot, N.D., and Clinton, Iowa. Prior to coming to Fort Benning, he spent five years in Germany running commissaries.

Smith is assigned to TSA's Western Commissary Region, Fort Lewis, Wash., as a supervisory commissary management specialist.

The Army Management Staff College, located in Linthicum, Md., is often referred to as the civilian equivalent to the Army's Command and General Staff College.

Team discovers practice does not make perfect

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

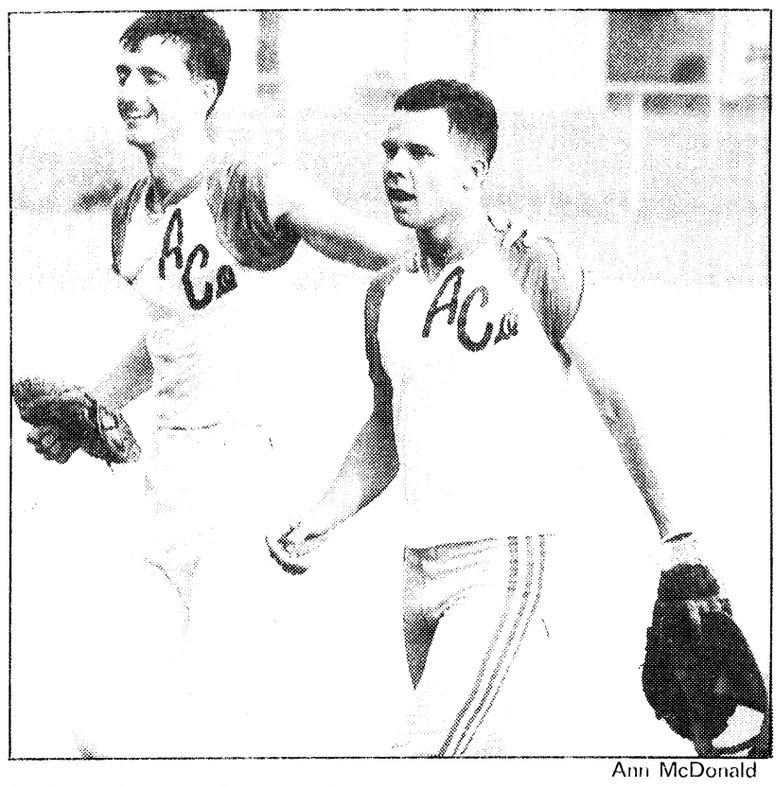
The old cliche "practice makes perfect" doesn't apply to the second season post softball champions who discovered they play better without any practice at all.

Company A, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, downed Company B, 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, 10-8, in post softball championship play at Gowdy Field last week.

According to team coach, Vincent Andrews, the team has been playing together since the beginning of the first season and initially had been practicing once weekly and realized they played better with no practice at all.

Andrews said although they don't practice, it was a total team effort, with the exception of Will Graham and Kermy Leon.

"They hit the ball and batted in runs when we really needed them," he said, "and Graham made a couple of key plays in the field."



Although those men outshined their teammates during the tournament, the team wasn't sure it had enough to make it to the top until the fifth inning.

"It was those back-to-back hits in that inning that really turned the game around for us," Andrew said.

The adrenaline was flowing freely by then, and the men breezed home for the championship.

"Everyone is really excited about our win," Andrews said.

"It's the first time a team from TSB has gone to this level, and it was done by a total effort from everyone."

Benning Bass Club sponsors tourney

By Jackie Marsh
Fort Benning Bass Club

The Fort Benning Bass Club held its monthly tournament Aug. 19 at Lake Hardin.

Eighteen Bass Club members participated in the 12-hour tournament, which began at 7 p.m. Saturday and ended at 7 a.m. Sunday.

First-place honors went to Otis Carter who had a whopping catch for the day of 15 pounds, 2 ounces.

Skip Ray took second place with 7 pounds, 14 ounces.

Jesse Waugh captured third with 7 pounds, 8 ounces.

The Big Fish award also went to Carter who made a 4-pound, 7-ounce catch.

Most fish caught in the tournament were caught on rock ledges and riprap along bridges with Carolina-rigged worm rods and pig-and-jigs.

The club will hold a one and one-half day tournament along with a picnic at Uchee Creek Recreation Area in September.

The Fort Benning Bass Club sponsors and participates in a number of civic functions throughout the year.

Anyone interested in becoming a part of a fishing club that promotes conservation, good sportsmanship, community pride as well as fishing, contact Porter Angel at 569-9100 or Joe Wikoff at 685-0301.

Prospective members are invited to attend one of the club's meetings held the second and fourth Monday each month in Building 2616 on the second floor at 7:30 p.m.

Army 10-miler tryouts held

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

The first run-off for the selection of the post's male and female teams for the Army 10-miler was conducted Saturday, and the field looks promising, according to the team spokesman.

Staff Sgt. Lloyd McDonald spokesman and team captain for the past two teams said with ample training both teams could bring home a championship trophy.

Although the field looks good, McDonald said another tryout will be conducted Sept. 9 at 7 a.m. at the Santiago Gym for those who were unable to make the first tryouts.

"We want to take the best possible teams up to Washington," he said.

More than 3,000 runners from all over the Army participate in the race which winds around some of the historic sites in the nation's capital.

Top five male and female finishers were:

Lloyd McDonald - 54:06
Mark Bermin - 56:51
Jeff Huff - 58:30
Douglas Davis - 59:03
Richard Schick - 59:51
Lisa Cote - 1:08:30
Ann McDonald - 1:13:43
Kathy Wass - 1:19:19
Susan Davis - 1:19:23
Beryl Robertson - 1:21:59

Benning team bench presses to 1st place in regional contest

By Ron Allen
USAIC Public Affairs Office

The Fort Benning Bench Press Team lifted first place at the Southeastern U.S. Bench Press Contest Aug. 19 in Auburn, Ala.

This was the recently-formed team's first competition. They will compete again in October at the Harvest Festival Bench Press Competition in Donalsonville, Ga.

Milton Ligon, Martin Army Community Hospital, placed first in the novice division and took second in the open of the 165-pound class. His best lift was 335 pounds, which led to the team's only individual first-place finish.

Five second-place successes along with two thirds, one fourth and one fifth were enough to give the team first place.

Richard M. Armour, Company D, 2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry, took a second-place win in the novice and the open of the 242-pound class. Armour, team coach, had a best lift of 445 pounds.

Other team members who placed in the contest were:

Mike Franck, Ranger Battalion, 165-pound class, second in the novice and third in the open, best lift - 320 pounds.

Gregory Grant, Company C, 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry, 220-pound class, second in the novice and third in the open, best lift - 400 pounds.

Chester Charles, MACH, 181-pound class, fourth in the novice, best lift - 300 pounds.

Renoda A. Crews, MACH, women's class, fifth place, best lift - 115 pounds.

Flag Run Night at Golden Park to benefit run

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

The American Flag Run Association and the Columbus Mudcats are sponsoring "American Flag Run Night in the Park," Thursday, 7:30 p.m., at Golden Park.

This is the last game of the season for the Mudcats and the beginning of the season for the Flag Run Association, which is raising funds for the second annual Flag Run.

The run, which honors American Veterans, will begin at the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier in Arlington, Va., on Nov. 4 and wind down an 850-mile stretch with a leg going through Phenix City and ending in Columbus Nov. 10.

Each advance ticket sold by veterans will result in $1 being added to the association's fund.

Although the final game of the Mudcats will be the premiere event that evening, other attractions will include dignitaries from the tri-cities area, the Silver Wings, a flag-raising ceremony and an appearance by the American Flag runners with coordinator Jim Accordino throwing out the first pitch of the game.

The $2 tickets can be purchased at Neil's Sport Shop, Athletes Foot, Sports Fantasy, South 106-FM, Phenix City Chamber of Commerce and at the Buena Vista Road Walmart on Saturday and Sunday.

58th Infantry edges past HHC, 197th Inf. Bde., 1-0

By Aurelio Feliberty
197th Infantry Brigade

Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 197th Infantry Brigade took on the 2nd Battalion, 58th Infantry Training Center in the first round of the post playoffs, which ended, 1-0.

"I feel pretty good about the game, and I hope to win," said David Fitch of HHC, before the opening pitch.

HHC Bde opened up at the top of the first with a single from Larry Walker, followed up by another single from Todd Rector, putting two men on base, but failing to score.

2nd Bn., 58th Inf., opened up with an easy walk by Richard Rosen. Gregory Ellerbee then hit a single to center field, making it to first as Rosen hustled to third. Ralph Dudley brought Rosen home with an RBI.

"I feel strongly this time about this game, despite our last setback at the end of the season," said Ellerbee.

"I'm pumped up and ready to go all the way," added teammate Wilbert L. Gasket.

Pumped up they were, as 2nd Bn., 58th, played superb defense, catching almost every stray pop-up and making good throws to tag out runners.

However, HHC didn't give up. Their defense played just as strong.

"The game was slow, but if we could have hit the ball better, we could have beat them," said Chuck Johnson of HHC, as his team took its last swing at the plate.

Johnson's hope faded as 2nd Bn., 58th Inf., denied HHC players another chance at home plate.

Membership and Activities Sign Up — The Officers' Wives' Club of Fort Benning will have its Fall Membership and Activities Sign Up Thursday at the Officers' Club. All officers' wives are invited to attend. Dues are $12 per year and $6 for half-year membership.

Coffee groups that plan to have meetings that evening are welcome to use the Main Club from 7 to 8 p.m. There will be individual seating for each group. During this period, individuals may purchase dessert (a choice of pineapple upside down cake, apple strudel or fresh fruit), coffee/tea and an opportunity ticket for the prize drawing for $1. There will be a pay-as-you-go bar available. Coffee groups should contact C. Stauss at 687-1157 to reserve seats and areas.

Whether individuals plan to attend with a coffee group or on an individual basis, the membership and activities sign up portion of the evening will begin at 8 p.m. in the Supper Club.

There are more than 30 classes being offered and 15 on-post activities. Some of the classes being offered include: basket weaving, calligraphy, paper earrings, buying and care of antiques, quilting, wool rug braiding, stained glass, crocheting, knitting, needlepoint, decorative folk art, bowmaking and a cornice class, plus a variety of others. Activities include: bowling, golf, tennis, bridge, music school (piano, guitar), dance school (aerobics, ballet, tap, jazz, gymnastics), Red Cross, ACS, Weight Watchers, PWOC, MCCW and more. To sign up for any activities, a membership in the OWC or NCOWC is required.

For more information, please contact C. Stauss at 687-1157.

YOUTH ACTIVITIES

Hobby Club — Youth Services is forming a Hobby Club. The club is open to youths ages 6 to 19 years old of active duty and retired military.

Meetings will be held the first Saturday of each month, 2 p.m., at the Youth Services Center, building 1056.

The club's purpose is to share hobbies with other youths, as well as experience a new hobby.

Interested youths may call 545-3070 or come by the center and see Ginny for more information.

Community mayors sponsor safety information carnival

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Fort Benning Community Mayors are sponsoring a health, safety and information carnival at the Youth Activities Center, building 1054, (across from the Infantry Museum) Sept. 23 from 11 a.m. until 3 p.m.

The Military Police will fingerprint children (accompanied by their parents), present a bicycle rodeo and bicycle registration and distribute drug and alcohol prevention flyers. McGruff, the crime prevention dog and "Binky," the talking police car, will make special appearances.

The Fort Benning Fire Department will provide a fire truck and fire safety brochures, and the Army Community Service and the Outreach Program have reserved a ballroom at the Youth Activity Center where representatives will set up a nutrition awareness program.

Other agencies invited to participate are the Red Cross, Army Emergency Relief, Fort Benning scouts and Martin Army Community Hospital.

Everyone is welcome. Bring family, friends and neighbors from on and off post.

SPIRITUAL

Protestant women announce programs

By Debra Galle
USAIC Chaplains Office

The Protestant Women of the Chapel offer many opportunities for Bible studies and fellowship this fall. Meetings will begin Sept. 7.

PWOC meets at the Religious Education Center the first Thursday of each month for a general meeting, and every other Thursday for Bible studies. Baby-sitting is available in the REC at no charge. A time of fellowship is followed by a time of praise and prayer, then they break up into study groups.

The fall studies will be:

● II Timothy (Precept): A Study In Discipleship — Paul wanted a man who was like-minded to send in his place, to carry on his ministry; so he poured his life into Timothy, his son in the faith. We are allowed a personal glimpse of those things which Paul was compelled to share time with Timothy because he knew his days on earth were ending. You will study principles of discipleship, marks of apostasy, and God's proof that His word is truly inspired.

● David, A Man After God's Own Heart — David is a study of contrasts: an unknown shepherd lad who became king, a rugged warrior who wrote tender Psalms, a strong leader who was weak at home, a man of God with a rebellious son. Although David is dead, his life still speaks.

● A Mother's Touch — As mother-teacher in your home, you prepare your children for life. No one can replace your love and care in their early years. And no one else can teach them, as you can, of Jesus' love and of his world.

For many years, individual chaplains have encouraged women's groups within the chapel activities. These were sometimes merely study and prayer groups, but they met a need in the lives of the women, particularly overseas.

In 1955, the PWOC began to take official form. A conference in Berchtesgaden, Germany was attended by 250 women. In 1956, the first PWOC convention was held there with twice as many attending.

The official motto "We are workers together with Christ" became official in 1957 and by 1959, newsletters were being published on local, district, and area levels.

The Fort Benning PWOC group began Dec. 1, 1957. Chaplain Albert C. Wildman, Post Chaplain, had just returned from Europe and was inspired by the PWOC movement there. He organized the first chapter. Several other small chapters were formed on post including a Student Brigade Chapter and one for the 197th Infantry Brigade. Throughout the years, denominational groups such as Episcopal and Lutheran have been formed.

In 1963, a PWOC Council was organized. The purpose was to unite and assist the chapters in accomplishing aims and purposes of individual groups and to sponsor major activities such as retreats, mission studies and bible study groups.

Some of the activities and projects the protestant women have offered their time to are: Martin Army Community Hospital, Armed Services YMCA, local Cancer Society, nursing homes, children's home, overseas needs, mission and local chapels needs.

Today, the Fort Benning chapter of PWOC is active in providing studies, fellowship and community service. If you are interested in becoming involved with this group, contact an officer or committee member.

Comedy show at Theatre #3

USAIC Public Affairs Office

A team of comedians will entertain trainees and cadre personnel at Theater No. 3 Wednesday at 8 p.m.

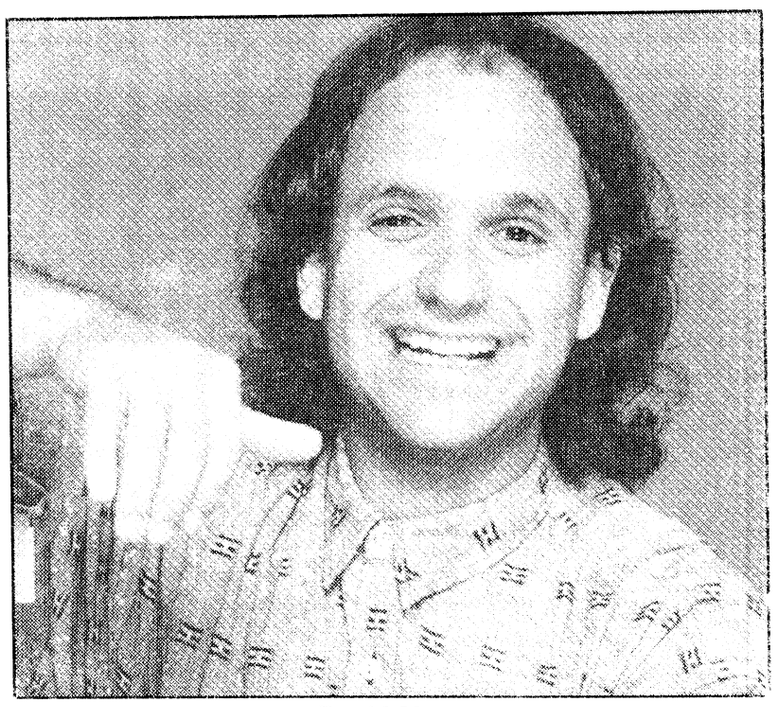
Featured on the show will be the duo, Mary Wong and David Naster, a noted comic mime.

Ali and Tim Miller make up the duo known as Mary Wong. They hail from the Far East... side of Chicago. Combining hip urban wit and sophisticated satire, Mary Wong brings a new wave of comedy to the stage.

They have appeared at the nation's top comedy clubs; on television shows such as Comedy Tonight, PM Magazine, USA's Night Flight, and at concerts with Whitney Houston, Ray Charles, The Temptations and Kool and the Gang.

David Naster is one of the most sought after performers today, according to Variety magazine. After graduating from the University of Kansas with degrees in theatre and music, Naster toured Great Britian and was featured at the Edinburgh Festival for two years.

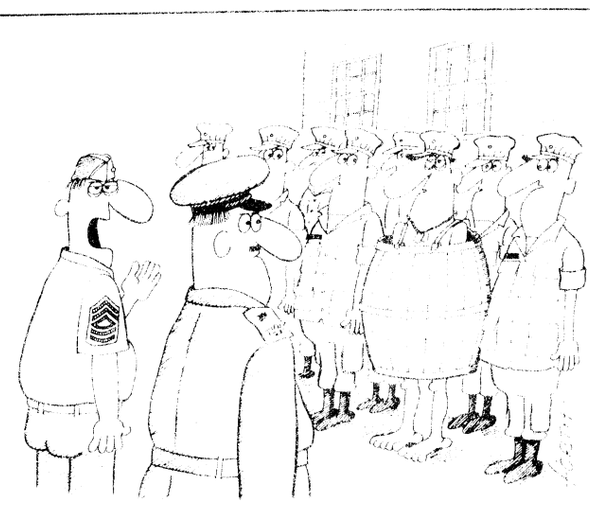
Naster has headlined most of the major Comedy Clubs in addition to 100 plus concerts each year.



Also, he has taken his talents to TV with great success appearing on two HBO Specials as well as USA Cables Nightflight, George Schlatter's Comedy Club, Showtimes Comedy Spotlight and Comedy Tonight.

In 1988 and 1989, Naster was nominated for Campus Entertainer of the Year and Campus Comedy Artist of the Year.

Trainee personnel have priority seating until 7:45 p.m. The public will be seated after 7:45. Admission is free.



Ali and Tim Miller are Mary Wong.

Jekyll Island Authority

A custom Toyota Tercel will be given away culminating Jekyll Island's Splashathon.

Splashathon Saturday at Jekyll Island

Jekyll Island Authority

The Summer Waves Splashathon, a fun-filled afternoon of games, activities and prizes at Jekyll's water park, will be held Saturday. Culminating a summer-long promotion, the Splashathon will climax with the 5 p.m. drawing for the giveaway of a custom Pitts Toyota Tercel. Entries will be taken at Summer Waves and Pitts Toyota until 4 p.m. that afternoon.

"We are inviting everyone to grab the family or form a team of friends for the games throughout the afternoon," said Rick Root, Summer Waves general manager. "Beginning at noon, we will have sack races, three-legged races, volleyball, tug-of-war, horseshoes, golf putting and river relay races. There will be plenty of prizes, instant winner giveaways and the last chance to register for the Toyota Tercel giveaway," he added.

Other activities will include a Country 102.5 FM live remote broadcast from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m., fresh-cut watermelon served mid-afternoon, inner tube rides on the Hurricane serpentine slide and a 25 percent off sale at the Summer Stuff gift shop.

"The Splashathon will be our last major event at Summer Waves this season, and we want everyone to have a great day and to carry home something to remember Summer Waves '89," Root said.

After working up a sweat in the Splashathon games, guests can cool off on an inner tube in the Slow Motion Ocean endless river or the Frantic Atlantic wave pool. Others may opt for wild rides on the Hurricane and Tornado serpentine slides or breathtaking drops on the Big Bounce speed slides. For the toddlers, The Pee Wee Puddle has numerous adventures in a carefully-supervised water playground.

Full-day admission to Summer Waves is $7.95 for adults, $5.95 for children ages 4 to 8 and ages 3 and under free. The park will be open from 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. Lockers and inner tubes are available for a small charge. No food, beverages or floats may be brought into the park.

For more information about the Summer Waves Splashathon, call (912) 635-2074.

Local artist's work displayed at museum

Columbus Museum

The art of A. Henry Nordhausen, a retrospective exhibition of the works of this Columbus-based painter, opens Sept. 10 at the Columbus Museum.

The exhibition reflects the artist's lifelong commitment to representational art during a period of time when abstract art attracted more attention.

The artist's belief in the human figure as the ultimate subject for artistic expression is evidenced by the great number of figure studies in this selection of more than 130 works.

Nordhausen did not come to the South until relatively late in his career. Born in Hoboken, N.J., in 1901, he studied at the New York School of Fine and Applied Arts and at the Academy of Fine Arts in Munich in the early 1920s.

For a short time in 1925, he shared a studio with Alexander Calder. He was elected to the Salmagundi Club in 1927 and returned to Munich in 1928 on a Tiffany Foundation Scholarship.

The exhibition reflects the life experiences of the young painter in Munich. Landscapes, street scenes, and Bavarians in peasant dress were the subject for many of Nordhausen's early works. The artist exhibited many of his early works in 1930 at a solo exhibition at the High Museum of Art in Atlanta.

The economic turbulence of the next decade did not hamper Nordhausen's artistic efforts. During the 1930s, he resided primarily in New York City and participated in nationally competitive exhibitions. He continued to paint a variety of subjects, such as Susanna and the Elders and the Green Hat.

After serving with the military in World War II, Nordhausen spent six months in Florida with the Ringling Brothers-Barnum and Bailey circus, painting clowns, burlesque dancers, aerialists, acrobats and parades.

His travels to Italy in the early 1950s are reflected in several landscape paintings included in the exhibition.

Throughout his career, Nordhausen painted portraits, even during his early years of study in Munich. The exhibition includes his 1974 portrait of Dean Rusk, as well as two self portraits, one executed in 1939 and a later one painted in 1971. Since establishing a studio in Columbus in 1969, Nordhausen has been in great demand as a commissioned portrait artists and has painted well over 500 portraits.

Nordhausen has received many awards during his career. In 1949, he received an award from the National Academy for Circus Friends. In 1951, his painting of a Chilean girl, Natalia, received the Allied Artists of America Gold Medal Award. In 1957, he received an award from the American Watercolor Society for Seated Nude. Also, he has received numerous awards from the Salmagundi Club and served as the club's president from 1959 to 1963.

Nordhausen's works are represented in the collections of many colleges and universities on the East Coast.

The exhibition will be on display at the Columbus Museum through December 31.

The museum is open Tuesday through Saturday from 10 a.m. until 5 p.m. and on Sunday from 1 until 5 p.m. Admission is free.

Speedway gives military a look at life in fast lane

By Shawn Bryson
Bayonet staff writer

Some Fort Benning soldiers checked out life in the fast lane, Saturday as East Alabama Motor Speedway hosted its annual military night.

Members of the 283rd Army Band were among the many soldiers who showed up to watch six classes of stock cars tear their way around the three-eighth mile dirt oval, located just west of Phenix City on Highway 80.

Several heat races to determine feature starting positions warmed the fans up to what would be a fast night of racing.

First out in the features were the street stock cars.

Michael Martin led the rest of the field to the checkered flag in the 20-lap race.

Bobby Ieland was one of three Ieland drivers to place well in feature races. He took first in the thunder division.

His cousin, Bug Ieland, also took home the checkered, winning the 10-lap Endura feature.

Another Ieland cousin, Dana, finished third in the 40-lap late model division. Jimmy Tarywick was the late model winner and Mike Parkerson took second.

The open-wheeled modified feature went to Steve Mathews while Glenn McWaters crossed the finish line first in the 25-lap cadet feature.

EAMS spokeswoman Madge Logan said members of the military are always welcome at the speedway, and military night is just a way of showing appreciation for the soldiers.

Every soldier who bought a ticket to the event received a second ticket free.

South 106 and Team Valvoline will be at the Speedway Saturday to help promote the national "Just Say No To Drugs" campaign, according to Logan.

She said they'll be giving out racing and campaign posters and stickers in support of the campaign.

The Speedway has races every Saturday. Gates open at 6:30 p.m., with practice at 7:30 p.m. and heat races at 8:30 p.m.

For more information, call 297-2594.

By using the following procedure, soldiers on the Family Housing Waiting List can use this chart to estimate when they can expect quarters.

Locate your category of housing.

Note eligibility date (month) on the same line as your category.

Calculate the time difference between the eligibility date listed and your eligibility date. The difference is the approximate time you still have to wait for housing.

EXAMPLE: If the latest eligibility date of the person who last received housing in your category was May 15, 1988, and your date of eligibility is Sept. 15, 1988, you can expect housing in about four months. If you do not know your eligibility date, contact the Family Housing Office at building 399, 545-3107.

Kevlar helmets available for exchange at CIF

Soldiers throughout the Fort Benning installation who still have the steel helmet and helmet liner may exchange them for the Kevlar helmet at the Central Issue Facility.

Lunchtime seminars begin September 21

The Directorate of Community Activities in conjunction with the Bradley Center and the Pastoral Institute is sponsoring three lunchtime professional development seminars. The seminars will be held at the Officers' Club from 11:30 a.m. to 1 p.m. the following dates:

- Sept. 21 — Teen-agers and the Occult. Claudette McShane, assistant professor of social work at Carroll College in Waukesha, Wis. will be the speaker.
- Oct. 19 — Faith Development and its Impact on the Family. James Fowler, Ph.D, author of Faith Development and Pastoral Care, will be the speaker.
- Nov. 30 — Principles of Marital Therapy. Robert Beavers, M.D., president of the American Association for Marriage and Family Therapy, will be the speaker.

The seminars are free and open to active duty military, civilians and family members. However, participants must pay for their lunch. The first luncheon is $3.85; the second $5.23; and the third $4.46.

Civilian employees should complete a DD Form 1556 and contact the Training and Development office at 545-2742 to receive credit for attending the seminars.

All persons interested in attending must call Yvonne Linsenbigler at 545-2475/4821 or Judy Kirk at 545-4993 to make reservations, which must be made and the luncheon paid for at least 10 days prior to each seminar. The deadline for the first seminar is Sept. 11. Make checks payable to the Fort Benning Officers' Club.

Authorities investigate strangulation

USAIC Public Affairs Office

The Federal Bureau of Investigation is currently conducting an investigation into the death of a female soldier found August 23 in a Fort Benning housing area.

The body of 32-year-old Spec. Karla N. Calvey was discovered by searchers about 11:15 a.m. in a wooded area behind some quarters near her Baker Street home in the McGraw Manor housing area.

Calvey, a member of Company A, U.S. Army School of the Americas, was reported missing by her husband when she failed to return the previous night after walking her dog.

According to medical authorities, it appears she died several hours before her body was discovered. Cause of death was listed as strangulation.

A Military Police Activity spokesman said, "While we cannot divulge specific details relative to the investigation, there is substantial evidence to indicate that this death is an isolated incident with an insular set of circumstances."

Stone sworn in as secretary of Army

Army News Service

Michael P.W. Stone, the 15th secretary of the Army, took his oath of office Monday during a Pentagon ceremony and received a full-honors welcome there Tuesday.

Michael P. W. Stone

The day after Army General Counsel Susan J. Crawford swore in Stone, Army Chief of Staff Gen. Carl E. Vuono introduced him as "an experienced leader with a long and proven record of distinguished service."

During his remarks, Stone contrasted today's Army with that of former Secretary of War Robert Todd Lincoln in 1881.

"I strongly support adequate compensation for our soldiers, and thus I support the military pay raise currently before Congress (an initiative) that was endorsed yesterday by the president," Stone said.

He went on to compare current recruiting rates, retention factors and weaponry with that of Secretary Lincoln's Army.

He talked of modernization and of the reserve components' role in today's total force. He stressed quality — of the force, of today's soldiers and of their lives.

"Unlike Lincoln," Stone emphasized, "I inherit a strong Army, a proud one, a well-trained one, one whose soldiers serve today on freedom's frontiers around the globe. And, it is one ready to defend the interests of the United States if called upon anywhere in that world."

Stone said he looked forward to leading soldiers into the 1990s and referred to today's as a "cross section of the best of our youth and the expert practitioners of an honorable profession."

He concluded, "I hope that God gives me the sagacity to lead them well. Certainly, they give me the inspiration to try."

Since May 24, 1988, Stone has served as the Under Secretary of the Army. While the Under Secretary, he also served simultaneously as the Army Acquisition Executive and Senior Procurement Executive from May 1988 until May 1989.

Stone began his military service in March 1943 at the age of 17, when he joined the British Royal Navy. He was sent to the United States for pilot training and served first at Grosse Ile Naval Air Station in Detroit.

Stone was born in London, England in 1925 and has resided in the United States (except for his military service) since 1929.

He received a bachelor of arts degree from Yale University in 1948 and later studied at New York University Law School.

He is married and is the father of two sons.

Warrant officer saves UH-60 during in-flight emergency

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

Late last fall a UH-60 Blackhawk medical evacuation pilot and his crew took off from Lawson Army Airfield in response to an emergency call. However, it never reached its destination because two minutes after takeoff the aircraft malfunctioned.

According to the pilot, Chief Warrant Officer C.E. Brown, 498th Medical Company (air ambulance), 34th Medical Battalion, not only was there a problem with the aircraft but the emergency computer lights weren't registering what the problem was.

"There was no emergency procedure for this so we had to figure out what to do on our own," he said. "Luckily we switched the right switch or we would have ended up in the river."

Correctly assessing the situation gave the pilot enough time to reduce power and search for somewhere to land safely.

The spot he found was a freshly plowed peanut field on the other side of the Chattahoochee River. He landed it without any further damage to the $6 million plus aircraft.

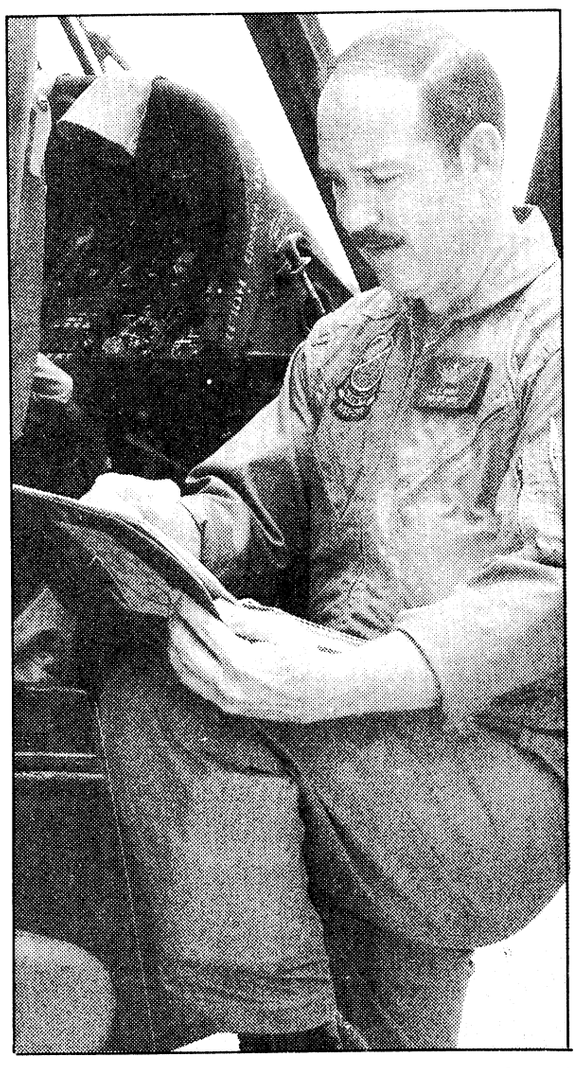
For his efforts he was recently awarded the Broken Wing Award. Guidelines for the award state the pilot must have demonstrated extraordinary skill while recovering an aircraft from an in-flight emergency.

"I'm a soldier and a pilot," he said. "It's my job to fly and if something happens during that time, I'm supposed to get the bird down without any further damage to it or the passengers."

Does an incident like this make him hesitant to get back in the pilot's seat? "No, not at all," he said, "You have to forget it happened and continue with the mission."

Brown added that the knowledge he gained will make him a better pilot.

"The whole crew reacted in the same way," he said. "They were and are very professional. We strive for professionalism because in a costly machine there is no room for mistakes."



Brown is thankful that the incident occurred here instead of somewhere else.

He said he's familiar with the terrain here, but some of the missions he's been on would not have afforded him the familiarity. He's been to Honduras, Yellowstone National Park and Alaska.

Now he's going somewhere else. His next assignment is Korea where his pilot skills will be tested in a new way as he will be part of an air assault unit at Camp Stanley, Korea.

The 18-year Army veteran is excited about this new phase in his career. He started his career as an enlisted man, was a drill sergeant and climbed the ladder to sergeant first class before attending flight school.

Although Brown's latest addition to his list of accomplishments ultimately was earned by something no pilot ever wants to have happen. The mere sight of the Broken Wing lapel pin will tell anyone in the aviation community how good he is without him having to say a word.

It's be kind to journalists month

By Clyde Snively
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Finally "they" have done something sensible.

"They," in this case are the people who dream up special days, weeks and months, as in, "Child Health Care Day," "Fire Prevention Week," and "National Sudden Infant Death Syndrome Awareness Month."

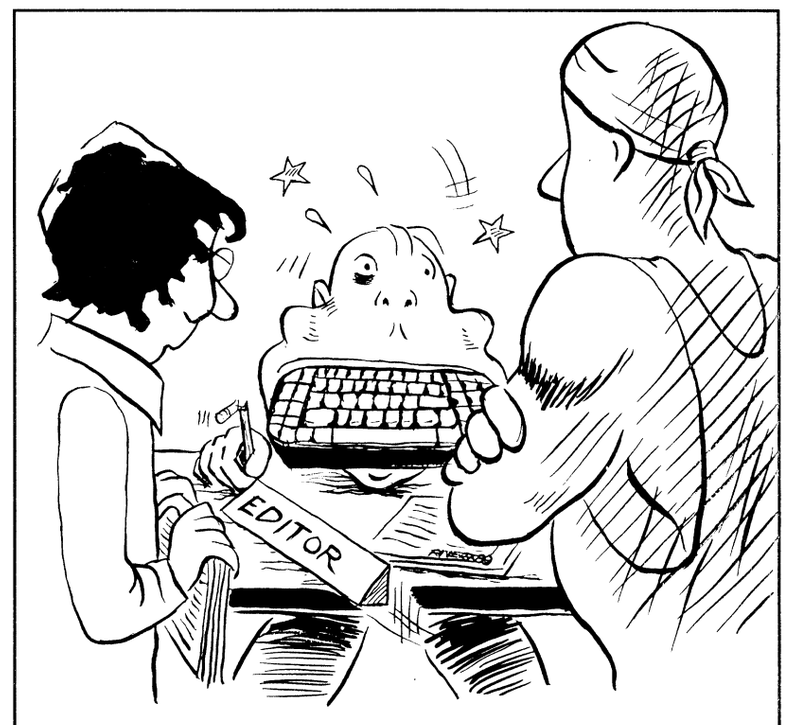
"We've always bemoaned the number of such occasions, figuring if there were any worthy ones on the list, they'd be buried by all the others. Well, "they" finally came up with one that should be at the top of everyone's list. Beginning today, we have 30 days of "Be Kind to Editors and Writers."

Now isn't that, special. I know, you infantrymen out there are sitting in your foxholes and wondering why writers and editors need anything special, let alone an entire month. In fact you're probably dreaming up ways to make our lives miserable. Dream no further, they already are.

First, much of our business is conducted by phone. Do I need to explain? You infantry guys plunk a battery in a radio, squeeze a button, say some mumbo jumbo call sign and talk away.

We, on the other hand to reach an on post number, "please, God, don't make me call Sand Hill," have to dial seven digits, all the while hoping the phone doesn't cutoff. I won't even discuss what we need to do to call off post, much less autovon and FTS.

Then there's the incoming rounds.



You infantrymen may take a few incoming rounds during combat, but when's the last time you were in combat? In training, it's a little C4 in demo pits, or perhaps lasers that set off alarms on your uniform or your PC.

But those of us who write for publication, catch heat rounds each time the newspaper comes out. Sure, we recognize our shortcomings, admit we make errors, but many of the errors are beyond our control. After the newspaper is turned over to the publisher, whose name you'll find at the bottom of this page, it's out of our hands.

Some people are more critical than others and if their unit or personal name is in an article, they are sure to dissect unmercifully. There used to be a commander here who seemed to take delight in being the first person to read the Bayonet.

He'd show that fact off by calling the Public Affairs Officer every Friday morning to point out at least one error. After his call, the PAO would call in the Command Information Officer, who'd call in the offending editor and, or reporter. We really dreaded coming to work Friday mornings.

If we survived the Friday morning fusillade, we'd still have to make it through the rest of the day.

First the critics from down the hall would drop by to snicker at our errors, then when we'd go out to what we hoped was a kinder, more friendly world, we'd run into you guys and you'd bend our ear about, "why does that unit get all the coverage?" or "how come you didn't cover the command inspection of our mess kits and boot laces? It was held at the base of the Concord observation tower."

Looking on the bright side, I've got to think the purgatory you readers put us through on earth is just paving the path to heaven for us writers and editors.

But still, it wouldn't hurt for you to get into the spirit of this month and be kind to us for at least the next 30 days. (I'm surprised "they" didn't select February for our month.)

CG wants everyone to have safe holiday

Every Labor Day weekend the highways are usually crowded with people enjoying the last summer holiday of the year. Unfortunately, traffic accidents and drownings reach their peak during this holiday.

Commanders and assistant safety officers or noncommissioned officers have worked to achieve a good safety record. This has been accomplished through hard work and increased safety awareness.

Continued emphasis should be placed on inspecting vehicles prior to the holiday and briefing soldiers about water and driving safety. Positive actions which should be stressed in briefings include:

- Sober swimming in authorized/supervised areas.
- Arranging schedules for alert and sober driving.
- Following all traffic laws, especially the speed limits.
- Encouraging the use of seat belts.
- Testing the condition of vehicles, e.g. brakes, lights, horns, etc.
- Yielding to the less capable driver.

My desire is a safe and enjoyable holiday for every member of the Fort Benning community. I urge everyone to give their best efforts in support of this goal.

Michael F. Spigelmire
Major General, USA
Commanding

DEAR EDITOR

Leaders are always told to take care of their troops. Troop health and welfare should be at the top of their priorities. If a leader does not do this, he will not complete a single mission in garrison or in the field.

Yet, here I am at Fort Benning, "Home of the Infantry," where infantry officers are introduced to the Army way of life.

I am staying at the Bachelor Officers Quarters on post. For the past week, the building has not had hot water. I called the BOQ operator to complain and was told that since I was military, I could not get a refund. The operator told me that military might go for months without hot water and that this was nothing to be alarmed about.

I cannot get a statement of nonavailability for housing. Yet, I pay $450 a month for a small room with no hot water.

The fire alarm went off four times one day. No one pays attention to the damn things anymore, so why have fire alarms in the building. People won't move in the event of a fire until it's too late.

One night the electricity was off for a few hours.

All this for $15 a day.

Why can Keesler Air Force Base in Biloxi, Miss., provide much better for $6 a night. It has free coffee in the room, a coffee maker, an iron, an ironing board and cable television.

The AFB is only two blocks from the ocean. Keesler AFB had hot water, the fire alarm doesn't ring four times a day and washers and dryers work there.

As a leader, if I hear about one of my men who is getting a raw deal from a crooked landlord, I take action. I help him find a better, less expensive place to live.

I also ensure he gets three meals a day, even in the most pressing field situation, yet my class has not been able to eat the lunch meal in the last two weeks, and we do not get "nonavailability" pay for the meals.

One student has a meal card and gets NO money for meals. He can buy a burger and soda from the AAFES truck for $3.

Our class leader has been to the inspector general, and a meeting was set up with a battalion executive officer to justify our cause. The executive officer did not show. Two weeks and no action.

Our junior officers in the infantry are being given a "good example" of how to take care of troops from IOBC and other courses.

Good job Fort Benning, perhaps the officers who have been here for a while really know how to take care of the troops.

Pretty soon, we may have to draft enlisted soldiers and officers in the Army due to all the "taking care of troops."

Donald R. Mudford
1st Lt., Infantry
E Co., 1st Bn., 61st Inf.
Fort Polk, La.

Dear Lt. Mudford:

We apologize to you and to more than 1,900 hotel guests for being unable to provide them with hot water for more than a week.

The heating plant equipment is old and worn out and had to be replaced. There was no other facility in the area that could have provided hot water.

It was estimated that the repair or replacement of the old equipment would take about 24 hours, however, some unexpected problems were encountered that extended the estimated job time.

We did not issue statements of nonavailability to our guests because each day we expected to have the problem corrected. If we had issued SNAs, we would have issued them for only one day at a time, making it necessary for the 1,900 guests to return to the hotel desk each day to renew their SNAs.

It was necessary to turn the electricity off for several hours while a transformer was being replaced. It was replaced as quickly and safely as possible, and the electricity was restored immediately.

The Fire Department has inspected the fire alarm system in the hotel very thoroughly. Each time the alarm sounded, it was traced back to someone cooking in his room.

The hotel puts notices in each room informing guests that cooking in the rooms is prohibited, however, some guests continue to ignore the warning.

When a fire alarm sounds, regardless of the frequency or the reason, all guests should leave the building until the Fire Department declares it safe.

Class commanders can make arrangements with Food Service (545-3750/7970) for field ration mess to be provided whenever their units will be unable to use the installation's dining facilities.

A soldier with a meal card is not entitled to receive money for meals that he can eat free by presenting the card.

Again, I apologize for any inconvenience our guests may have experienced due to this unavoidable steam outage.

State superintendent urges Benning teachers to be committed to vocation, set high goals

By Beth Middlemiss
Fort Benning Schools

Georgia's State Superintendent of Schools was the featured speaker at the opening general session for teachers and administrators of Fort Benning's eight schools Aug. 21.

Dr. Werner Rogers spoke to Benning's educators about the nature of the teaching job itself and about his plans and hopes for the future of education in Georgia.

Though Benning schools are federally operated and completely federally funded, the schools are required by law to be comparable to schools in the state in which they are located.

Fort Benning schools, therefore, work closely with the Georgia Department of Education to ensure comparability with state schools in the areas of educational programs, personnel certification, personnel evaluation, salaries and staff development.

As Rogers spoke of teaching, he acknowledged the emotional and physical requirements of teaching and of the necessity for teachers and administrators to have commitment to teaching as a vocation.

He stressed that educators must teach the importance of excellence and set high expectations for themselves and their students.

"Excellence does not mean perfection," he said. "It means knowing how far we have to go. And it means getting there with joy and enthusiasm that spill over to students and colleagues.

In Georgia, Rogers said he is looking toward new and improved programs in the areas of math, science and foreign languages and intensive programs for students at risk. His top priority, he told the Benning educators, is to obtain significant improvements in teacher salaries to attract and to retain the best and brightest teachers for Georgia's classrooms.

"We are very fortunate to have Dr. Rogers with us, considering his numerous responsibilities throughout the state," said Janet Wynn, assistant principal at McBride and Wilbur schools. "I think his visit symbolizes the degree of cooperation between Georgia's Department of Education and the Fort Benning schools and is one example of the way we work together to provide quality educational programs for our students."

AUSA Job Fair Sept. 29 & 30

By Cheryl Stall
AUSA member

The Association of the United States Army and Retirement Services are teaming up for a tri-state AUSA Job Fair Sept. 29 and 30 at the Fort Benning Main Post Noncommissioned Officers' Club.

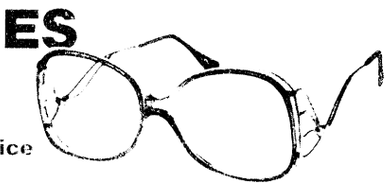
The fair is free to soldiers who are retiring or separating from the service, their family members and all AUSA members, individual or corporate.

The fair will provide an opportunity to meet with businesses seeking employees with military experience.

This event will include servicemembers and their families from a variety of military installations throughout the Southeast.

All branches of the service are being invited to attend.

About 100 employers are expected to participate, varying from local businesses to national corporations and government defense contractors.



Applications and resumes will be taken by recruiters or employers and some corporations will test on site.

Retired Command Sgt. Maj. Douglas Russell, director of Retiree Activities, AUSA National Headquarters, is the key organizer of the job fair.

"We have had very good responses from several large companies," Russell said. "We expect it to be a great success."

Plans for the job fair were coordinated by the national and local AUSA offices and is co-hosted by Retirement Services at Fort Benning.

"Cooperation with the command at Fort Benning has been wonderful," Russell said. "Without their assistance, we would not be able to have the fair."

DEVELOPING CONFIDENCE

197th infantrymen are put to the test at Camp Darby

By Troy Pearson
197th Infantry Brigade

Picture a four-mile run one day, plus a 12-mile road march the next. Add the Darby confidence course and on top of that a drown-proofing class.

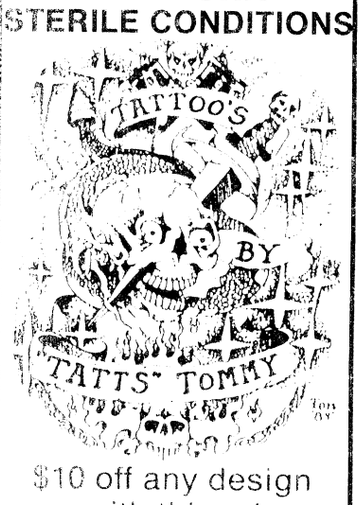
This is an idea of what the soldiers of Company C, 1st Battalion, 18th Infantry did this past week.

"This is an excellent course to physically and mentally prepare us for some of the obstacles we may encounter during war or peacetime," said 1st Lt. Daryl Johnson, acting executive officer of Charlie Company.

"Not often do we have a chance to use this type of training aids. We find it to be an asset, which tears down not only physical barriers but a lot of mental barriers as well."

One of the members of Charlie Company, Pfc. Ricardo Torres, noted, "We do a lot of physical conditioning in this company. The more we do, the better off we are."

Shortly after a safety briefing, Charlie Company soldiers were on the course and going strong.



The first few obstacles were no problem. Toward the middle of the course, some of the soldiers were slowing down a little, but not giving up.

With dirt from head to combat boots, everyone who started the course finished in good time.

"This has been an excellent course for me to run and also to guide my team members through," said Sgt. John Soloman.

Staff Sgt. Earnest J. Stull added, "This type of training promotes esprit de corps throughout the company.

Co. A., 1st Bn., 18th Inf. soldiers take over for NCOs during training at Dixie Village.

TRADING PLACES

Privates and NCOs switch hats for a day

By Troy Pearson
197th Infantry Brigade

Company C, 1st Battalion, 18th Infantry soldiers recently traded places during training at Dixie Village on Fort Benning.

Almost 40 soldiers from Charlie Company switched hats for the day, as privates assumed the non-commissioned officer leadership positions, with sergeants and lieutenants under their command.

Dixie Village is a training area consisting of 14 water obstacles.

Before the day began, the privates acting as squad leaders were given the task of maneuvering their men from point A to point B, with the sounds of gunfire, bombs and an air raid blaring all around them.

Capt. David Mallard explained,"This type of training is excellent. In an enemy environment, you never know when you may be placed in charge of soldiers.

"Also, while it's important to complete the mission as quickly as possible, we're emphasizing doing so with the least number of casualties possible," he said.

1st Sgt. David Morrison added, "This type of training lets the lower-ranking soldiers see by first-hand experience just a few of the decisions that an NCO has to make on a daily basis when working with soldiers."

Spec. Ralph Green, one of the NCO leaders for the day, said, "It isn't as easy as I thought it would be.

"Being in a NCO position is rough. But, with this type of training, I'm sure I'll be ready for an NCO position soon."

Marksmen, sharpshooters qualify on grenade launcher

By Aurelio Feliberty
197th Infantry Brigade

Good training produced marksmen, sharpshooters and a handful of experts when the grenadiers of Charlie Company, 1st Battalion, 18th Infantry underwent their annual qualifications on the M203 grenade launcher.

"Prior to the qualification the soldiers were given an instructional class and a prequalification shooting of the M203 in order to allow them to become familiar with the weapon," said Sgt. 1st Class Warren Taylor, the noncommissioned officer in charge of the training exercise.

"The soldiers were tasked to engage the targets using the prone, foxhole, and kneeling supported positions," he added.

"The training went well," said Taylor. "Once the soldiers got comfortable firing the M203 they were able to hit the targets better."

"This was my first time firing the M203," said Spec. Richard McTere. "I found the grenade launcher easy to fire after we went through the prequalification shoot."

Sgt. Robert Emerick said, "This was exciting, because this is what a soldier is supposed to do after he's been trained."

Scouts study dragon, TOW

By Jack Lannen
Troop D, 4th Calvary, 197th Inf. Bde.

WOOOSH! The dragon missile exploded in a ball of orange flame on impact with an enemy vehicle a few seconds after bursting from the shoulder of Sgt. Michael Johnson, an expert cavalry scout.

This was the scene on an otherwise peaceful Saturday morning at Hartell observation point on the north end of Fort Benning. The scouts of Troop D, 4th Cavalry were culminating a week of rigorous training with a live-fire exercise with the Dragon and the tube-launched, optically tracked, wire-guided, antitank missile.

The Scouts had just worked throughout the night on such operations as actions upon enemy contact, screening missions, and armored reconnaissance.

"Scouts have no time for rest in the dark; this is when we must do our job," said 2nd Lt. Christopher Q. Hupp, 2nd Scout platoon leader. Many successful missions performed by the 4th Cav. during its recent National Training Center rotation were conducted at night.

As the forward element of the 197th Infantry Brigade, the 4th Cav. must rely on stealth and guile to win on the modern battlefield. The scouts are trained to conduct continuous operations for 72 hours to provide the brigade commander with accurate information.

Sgt. 1st Class Daniel Nelms, 2nd Scout platoon sergeant, described the field training and live fire as "a super opportunity to train young scouts." The officer in charge, 1st Lt. Rick Nieberding, called the training an opportunity to perform necessary combat skills in a realistic environment ideal for both newly assigned NCOs and their subordinates alike.

Both the TOW and dragon are antitank weapons systems used by the scouts to destroy lead elements of enemy armor units. And 4th Cav destroyed the enemy. Missile after missile landed right on target.

MADD campaign focuses on sober driving

USAIC Public Affairs Office and MADD

As part of the third annual Drive for Life, a national awareness campaign to reduce drunk driving deaths, the local president of Mothers of Drunk Driving and Ken Thomas Volkswagen are asking all Columbus residents to pledge to drive sober Saturday and throughout the year.

Sponsored by MADD and Volkswagen U.S., this public education program was launched last Wednesday with a petition-signing rally at Ken Thomas Volkswagen.

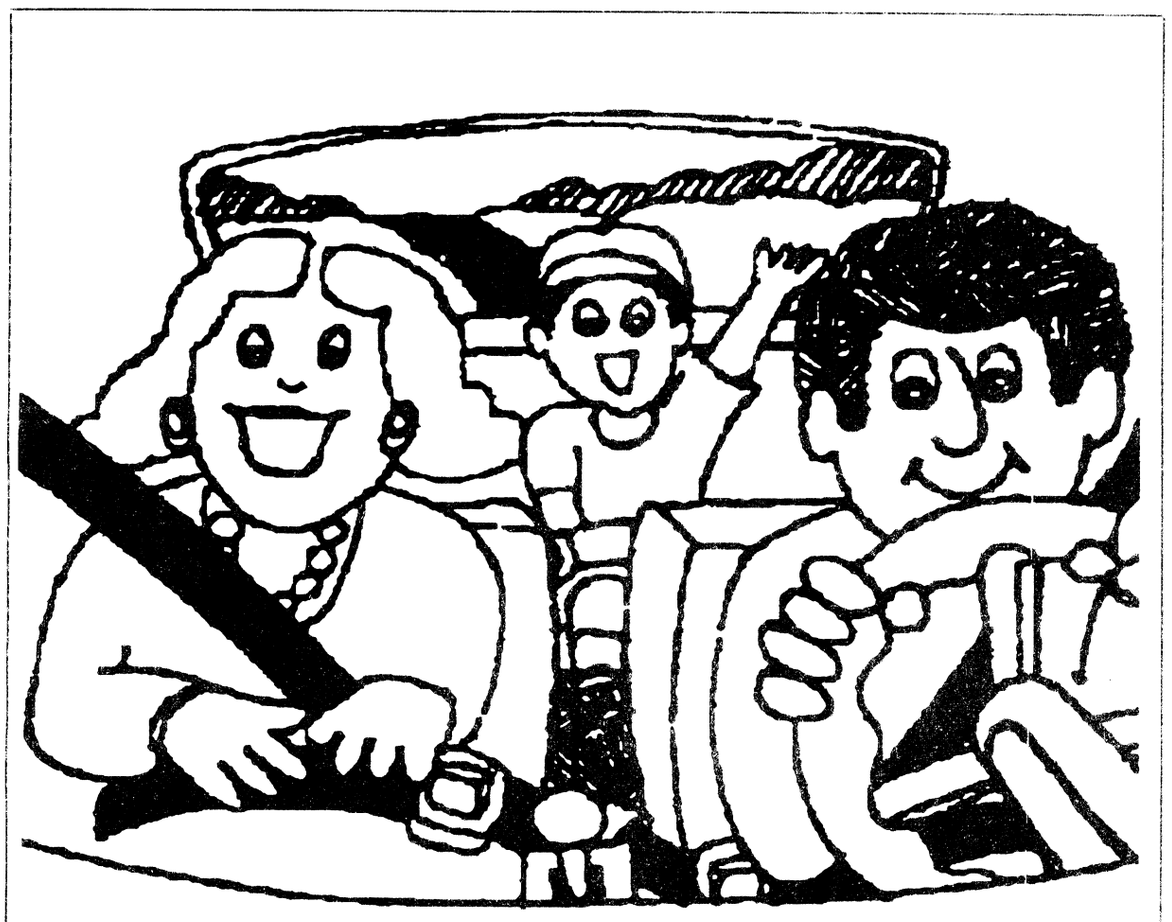
Both local dignitaries and community residents attended the kickoff.

According to Pat Hardy, MADD president for the Muscogee County Chapter, the campaign is being launched because research suggests that two out of every five people will be in an alcohol-related crash at some point in their lives.

"With Drive for Life, we're trying to lower those odds and save lives in Columbus and throughout the U.S.," she said.

Ken Thomas Volkswagen explains that while the Drive For Life program focuses on one day, its aim is a long-term change in public attitude.

"We're encouraging everyone to pledge to drive responsibly, and if they're going to drink, to explore alternatives like taking a cab or calling a friend. It's actually easy to avoid the lethal combination of alcohol and automobiles," says, Louise Thomas.



Hardy added that they are not against alcohol — just being smart behind the wheel.

"This is what will save lives," she said. "According to a poll of all 50 state highway patrol offices, last year's Drive For Life helped reduce Labor Day weekend drunk driving deaths by a total of 28.6 percent from the year before.

"This year we're hoping for even more encouraging results," Hardy said.

Drive For Life asks all Americans to pledge to be responsible by driving sober, and encouraging others to do the same on Labor Day weekend and throughout the year.

Drivers also are asked to shine their headlights in remembrance of those people senselessly killed and injured in drunk driving crashes.

You have the authority and the responsibility to have everyone buckle up every trip.

Seat belts save lives

Bad injury could have been avoided

Infantry Brigade Safety Office

It was noon on a hot August afternoon.

As I returned to a friends car, after a cool summer salad and my favorite iced tea with lemon, the last thing on my mind was fastening my safety belt.

I never had the chance to respond to the approaching car. The other car came out of nowhere fast.

I remember coming to with people all around me. My friend, holding my head and calling my name, had a strange look in her face.

I soon realized it was because of the warmth flowing down my left cheek and turning her sleeve into a red wetness.

People were staring. People I didn't know. My head felt heavy, and I just wanted everyone to go away so I could go to sleep.

And then, the harsh realization hit.

My left eye had found the darkness. . .no faces, no smashed white sports car, no approaching ambulances, no blue police lights.

I became a statistic. No safety belt fastened after lunch that day, no vision in my left eye today.

Every week approximately 500 Americans die, and 10,000 more are injured in motor vehicle accidents.

Motor vehicle accidents are the third leading cause of death in America.

A motor vehicle death occurs every 10 minutes, an injury every 16 seconds.

The annual motor vehicle death toll is 50,500.

Studies show that half of these people could have lived if they had worn their seat belts.

Seat belt use is mandatory on Ft. Benning and in Georgia.

But not everyone wears them.

The Army has a few requirements concerning safety belts, as well.

Drivers and passengers in any vehicle must wear safety belts while traveling on or through a military installation.

Studies, based on those famous seat belt dummies, have found that the second collision is usually the one that causes injuries and death.

The first collision occurs when a car hits another or an object. The second collision occurs when the unbelted occupants are thrown into the car's windshield, steering wheel, doors, dashboard, or other hard interior surfaces.

Unbelted back seat passengers are often flung forward, injuring front seat passengers.

Other injuries occur when occupants are thrown into each other on the same seat.

Wearing safety belts and encouraging others to wear them shows you care.

Fastening your safety belt should be an automatic as turning on the ignition.

Taking time to develop the seat belt habit could add years to your life.

Require seat belt use for passengers in your car. Sure, buckling in takes a few seconds. . .but the one time that you don't could be the one time you wish you had.

Drinking and driving can net stiff penalties

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Individuals who are apprehended for drinking and driving face some stiff penalties whether apprehended on or off post.

Driving under the influence of alcohol can net offenders fines of up to $1,000 and sentences of up to 30 days to one year in jail.

In the Fort Benning-Columbus area, soldiers apprehended and convicted of DUI, either on or off post, whose blood alcohol level is .10 or higher face the following possible consequences:

First offense — normal fine of $300 plus court costs. A 12-month probation may be imposed during which time if probation is violated, the offender may be sentenced to a maximum of one year in jail.

Second offense — the normal fine is $600 plus court costs. Sentence may be 30 days to one year in jail if probation violated.

Third offense — the normal fine is $1,000 plus court costs. Offender may have to serve anywhere from 30 days to one year in jail if probation violated.

All offenders receive a point assessment against their driver's license, and their driver's license may be suspended or revoked.

Furthermore, driving privileges on post may be suspended or revoked, and the individual is referred to the Alcohol and Drug Abuse Prevention and Control Program, faces possible separation from the service, is given a general officer administrative letter of reprimand and faces other administrative action.

Soldiers apprehended on post for DUI whose BA level is between .05 and .09 face the same consequences when they are also at fault for other traffic violations. If DUI is the only offense, the soldier is referred to his unit commander for administrative action.

Under the State of Georgia Implied Consent Law, apprehended DUI offenders who refuse to submit to BA testing are still often convicted for DUI.

Although on-post traffic offenses are normally handled by magistrate court, commanders may request permission to withdraw a case from the jurisdiction of the magistrate and dispose of the charges under the Uniform Code of Military Justice if unusual or compelling reasons exist.

Civilians and family members are subject to the same consequences.

More Soldiers Are Killed In POV Accidents Each Year Than In All Other Types Of Accidents Combined.

Be Smart, Be Sober, Be Alive.

POV accidents leading soldier killer

Infantry Branch Safety Office

Automobiles kill more soldiers in a private war than field exercises, tactical vehicles, or any other soldiering activity.

The war, fought by each individual on public streets and highways, gambles with the lives of families and friends as well as strangers.

More than half of the soldiers killed in accidents last fiscal year died as a result of off-duty privately owned vehicle accidents. Year after year, POV accidents account for almost three out of every five military fatalities.

Most deaths involve one or more of three key factors that gamble with the lives of soldiers, their families and John Q. Public.

Speeders may be chasing coffin

Army accident records show that, in most fatal auto accidents, the driver was speeding.

This included driving too fast for road and weather conditions.

Posted speed limits aren't necessarily safe speed limits. They're posted for optimum conditions. Road, weather, time of day, and the amount and type of traffic all dictate safe driving speed.

Slower speeds give drivers more time to react. In addition, slower speeds lower the crash forces in instances where accidents cannot be avoided.

Alcohol, automobiles don't mix

Drinking and driving is the number one cause of fatal private motor vehicle accidents.

Alcohol not only slows a person's reaction time, it also affects judgment.

Drinking drivers tend to become reckless. They lose their ability to recognize hazards. They become a threat to themselves, their passengers and to others.

Stick around; use seat belts!

More people are killed from being thrown around inside a car or from being thrown out of one than from the crash itself.

In fact, the chances of being killed are 30 times greater if a person is thrown out of the car.

Accident records show that soldiers wearing safety belts are 70 percent less likely to be killed or seriously hurt than unbelted drivers.

Shoulder harnesses reduce the chance of injury up to nine percent. If all the 243 soldiers killed in off-duty POV accidents last year had been wearing safety belts, two out of three of them would probably be alive today.

Soldiers are not unarmed in their private war. Their best weapons are safe and sober driving tactics and proper safety equipment. That means not driving after drinking, observing safe speed limits for road conditions and wearing safety belts every time they get in an automobile.

Tooth cleaning starts in crib

U.S. Army Dental Activity

Immediately after a baby is born, parents can start to do something about their child's good dental health.

Specialists in pediatric dentistry believe parents should start cleaning their baby's mouth even before his teeth start coming in.

Pediatric dentists have developed a simple way to clean a baby's mouth that you can do anywhere anytime.

Wrap a piece of gauze, a square of about two inches, around your index finger and between your thumb and forefinger. Then gently wipe the gum pads in the child's mouth.

These gum pads are covered with the same tissue that covers newly emergent teeth. By keeping the gum pads clean, you remove food residue and reduce oral bacteria in the mouth.

Continue using the gauze pad when the child's first teeth emerge. After the child grows older and more teeth appear, then use a small, soft bristled toothbrush.

The best way to hold baby during this exercise is to keep his head in your lap, feet pointing away.

Clean baby's teeth twice a day, after breakfast and after the last meal in the evening.

It can be done anywhere — a bedroom den or wherever you and the child are most comfortable.

At age three, children usually have all 20 of their primary teeth.

This is the time to begin involving the child in the habit of brushing his or her teeth.

If motivating your youngster to brush is a problem, pediatric dentists are trained to counsel parents regarding such matters.

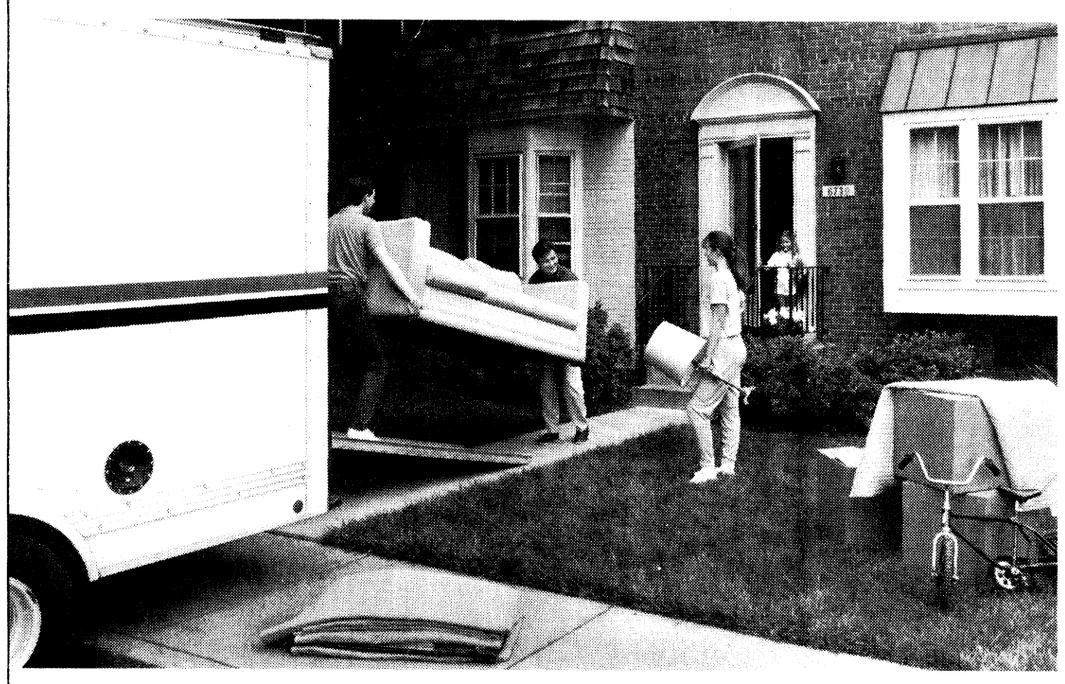
What is most important is to get the child to do as much of the brushing as possible.

Until proper dexterity is developed, you should assist your child. A good indicator of such ability is whether or not your child can handle a knife and fork. If not, he or she is going to need your help.

You and your child can make brushing a fun-filled activity and you both will be rewarded.

Labor Day is almost here

Infantry Branch Safety Office



The fun-filled days of summer are growing shorter and Labor Day is just around the corner. The Labor Day holiday, by tradition, accounts for more accidents than any other holiday — particularly for serious traffic mishaps and accidents associated with water sports.

On the average, more than 650 people die each year over the Labor Day weekend in traffic accidents. They plan for a trip to the beach or to a park for that last long weekend of the summer season. They attempt to cover too much ground in the short time available, party too much and set themselves up for the classic accident involving speed, fatigue and alcohol.

Water sports are extremely popular because fall and its chilly weather will put an end to these activities for several months.

Over past holiday weekends Fort Benning personnel have celebrated the weekend with a minimum of accident involvement. We must continue to emphasize the hazards of speed, overextending oneself and excessive consumption of alcohol.

will be revoked for one year. You may think that you are being penalized twice for the same offense, but that is not the case. The revocation of post driving privileges is an administrative action authorized under AR 190-5 and USAIC Reg 190-5. Any punishment imposed by the court is a separate judicial action relating to the criminal charges involved.

In some instances, an initial DUI charge is reduced to reckless driving or dismissed altogether. Depending on the circumstances, you may be entitled to reinstatement of your post driving privileges. According to AR 190-5, Para 2-10, the suspension of driving privileges will be rescinded whenever there is a finding of not guilty or when the DUI charge has been dismissed or reduced to an offense not amounting to intoxicated driving except in the following cases:

a. The preliminary suspension was based on a refusal to take a blood alcohol content (BAC) test;

b. The preliminary suspension resulted from a valid BAC test; or,

c. The person was driving a motor vehicle while under a preliminary suspension or relocation.

If any of the above three reasons apply, it would mean a continued loss of your post driving privileges even after the DUI charge is reduced or after a finding of not guilty.

Sgt. Dave Parker moves a chess piece during a recent game.

Benning's best goes for All-Army

By Shawn Bryson
Bayonet staff writer

It doesn't take long for opponents of Fort Benning's number one chess player to find out just how good he is.

A friendly game of chess with Sgt. Dave Parker could turn out to be more of an embarrassment for about 90 percent of the chess players in the United States.

He quickly shows all who dare to play him how his dedication, natural talent and love of the game have earned him the rating of "expert" in the U.S. Chess Federation.

Parker's most recent achievements were winning the Fort Benning Chess Championship and being selected by a Fort Meade, Md. chess committee to be one of only 11 soldiers Army-wide who will compete Sept. 8 through 16 in the Army Chess Qualification Tournament.

The competition will occur at Fort Belvoir, Va., where six of the competitors will earn a slot on the All-Army chess team.

If selected for the Army team, Parker will compete in the Armed Forces Chess Championship to be held Sept. 18 through 27 at Andrews Air Force Base.

The team will also do battle in the North Atlantic Treaty Organization Chess Tournament Oct. 22 through 28.

During a recent visit to the Kelley Hill recreation center, Parker displayed his determination to make the Army team as he quickly thumbed through the USCF rating book, sizing up each of the competitors he'll face in a few weeks.

Parker, 30, found that of the Army competitors listed in the rating book, his rating of 2047 seeded him third going into the upcoming qualification tourney. But, he was quick to point out that some of those he'll square off against are falling in the ratings (they have been beaten in tournament play recently).

With a confident attitude, Parker hinted that he shouldn't have too many problems making the team.

Parker, assigned to 1st Battalion, 18th Infantry Regiment, 197th Infantry Brigade, has steadily climbed the ratings after two losses last year lowered his rating to 1,942. He said that reaching 2,000 (expert) basically put him in the top 10 percent in the United States.

Parker has played chess since he was about 10 years old. He explained that he played his first tournament in fifth grade and lost in only four moves. That was his shortest game ever until a recent training deployment to the National Training Center at Fort Irwin, Calif. "I beat a guy in two moves. It's called 'fool's mate' and it's the quickest way to beat someone."

Parker's longest game occurred during a tournament. "We played for five hours and had to adjourn so the rest of the players could continue the tourney. Then we came back and played two more hours and I lost," Parker said.

He said he doesn't mind losing games like that because they further his knowledge of the game. He said he basically only plays from tournament to tournament because he can't find anyone at his skill level to play with and playing lesser skilled opponents doesn't really help him. In fact, the last time he lost to a fellow soldier was last year.

Monthly USCF tournaments held at the Kelley Hill Recreation Center are where Parker gets most of his practice. He said there are some good players from Columbus at the tourney's, but the last time he didn't win was more than a year ago and it was a draw.

Parker attributed his success to a natural talent for the game, but more importantly to a lot of studying. Parker dedicated much of his time to chess while attending St. Cloud University in Minnesota. "I had a friend there who was really good at chess and I wanted to beat him, so I studied the game." He checked out countless books about chess from the library and eventually beat his friend.

Since then, Parker has continued to study the game. He credits another friend, Spec. Frederick Watson, for helping him research the game.

"I consider chess a sport and kind of a discipline. It's almost like a science," he said. "I would play everyday if I could."

Parker's goal is to reach the title of "master," which requires at least a 2,200 rating. In the meantime, he said "I'll just keep trying to find the ultimate truth of the game."

50-YEAR-OLD

civilian author graduates from airborne school

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

Gordon R. Elwell

"For thirty years I've seen soldiers proudly sporting a pair of wings on their chest and in a few minutes I'm going to have some of my own and it's gonna feel great," said a 50-year old civilian airborne school student right before his graduation ceremony last week.

Civilian? 50? No, your eyes aren't playing tricks on you.

Gordon R. Elwell a part-time historian with the Georgia National Guard just completed three weeks of airborne training with Company C, 1st Battalion, 507th Parachute Infantry Regiment.

He said he was able to do this through coordination with post officials. He was given special permission because of a book he is writing about airborne training past and present.

Although he is a Chief Warrant Officer in the National Guard and has been associated with them for 30 years, he was unable to attend the course in that capacity.

However, when he was given the assignment to write the book it was suggested he attend the school to get a first hand view of what airborne training is all about.

Elwell pursued that idea and made it reality.

In preparation for that reality Elwell said he worked really hard to insure he would make it through the course.

"One of the stipulations," he said, "was that I had to pass a PT test at the 17-21 age level."

He did. As a matter of fact he scored a 285.

That score and a extensive physical got him into the course. But, once he was there how prepared was he?

"PT wasn't difficult because I was prepared for it," Elwell said, "but, I'm not as agile as I used to be and for me, PLF's are an unnatural act."

He added that while the younger students were springing up from doing a PLF he was getting up on one knee.

That's where the help of the blackhat payed off. Elwell said he demonstrated a lot of patience with himself and his fellow students. He wanted to make sure we were prepared to jump from an aircraft in flight.

Elwell noted that when he did make those jumps it was quite an experience.

"I was just as scared the last time I jumped as I was the first time," he said, "but I wouldn't trade it for the world."

Now that he is a full-fledged member of the airborne fraternity, he is continuing on with his book.

Incidently, a member of the original test platoon pinned his wings on during the graduation.

He met Louis Davis, the test platoon member, during the initial research for his book. The research for that portion of his book is complete and with the completion of his airborne training the 'now' portion of his book will also be complete.

Elwell explained that all he has to do now is fill in the gaps.

It should be complete just in time for the golden anniversary of airborne in 1990.

Powell speaks of caring for soldiers

By John K. D'Amato
Sergeants Major Academy

"Caring for soldiers" was the theme when Gen. Colin L. Powell, recently nominated by President George Bush to be the next chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, addressed 471 new students in the six-month Sergeants Major Course at the Fort Bliss, Texas, Sergeants Major Academy recently.

Powell, still serving as commander in chief of Forces Command, sprinkled his remarks with anecdotes from his own career to illustrate NCOs caring for soldiers and families.

One of his stories centered on a young soldier he had spoken to earlier in that same day, during a tour of training facilities on post.

"I was walking along the parade field looking at a layout of air defense systems," Powell said, "and visiting each part of a HAWK battery, each part of a Patriot battery, and talking to those young soldiers. It just turns you on... "But to walk up to a young E-3, and he tells you about this radar system and how it emits energy, and 'it goes out there and hits something and it's reflected back and, general, it goes in there and it goes through the computer, and then we know what to do with it.' I don't know what he's talking about," Powell admitted sheepishly, prompting laughter in the audience.

"And this man is 18 years old and he's telling me all this," Powell said, "And I'm listening, trying to capture it all in and understand it."

"And I say to him, 'How long have you been doing this?'"

Post employee commends clothing manufacturer

By James W. Thornberry
Defense Contract Admin. Services

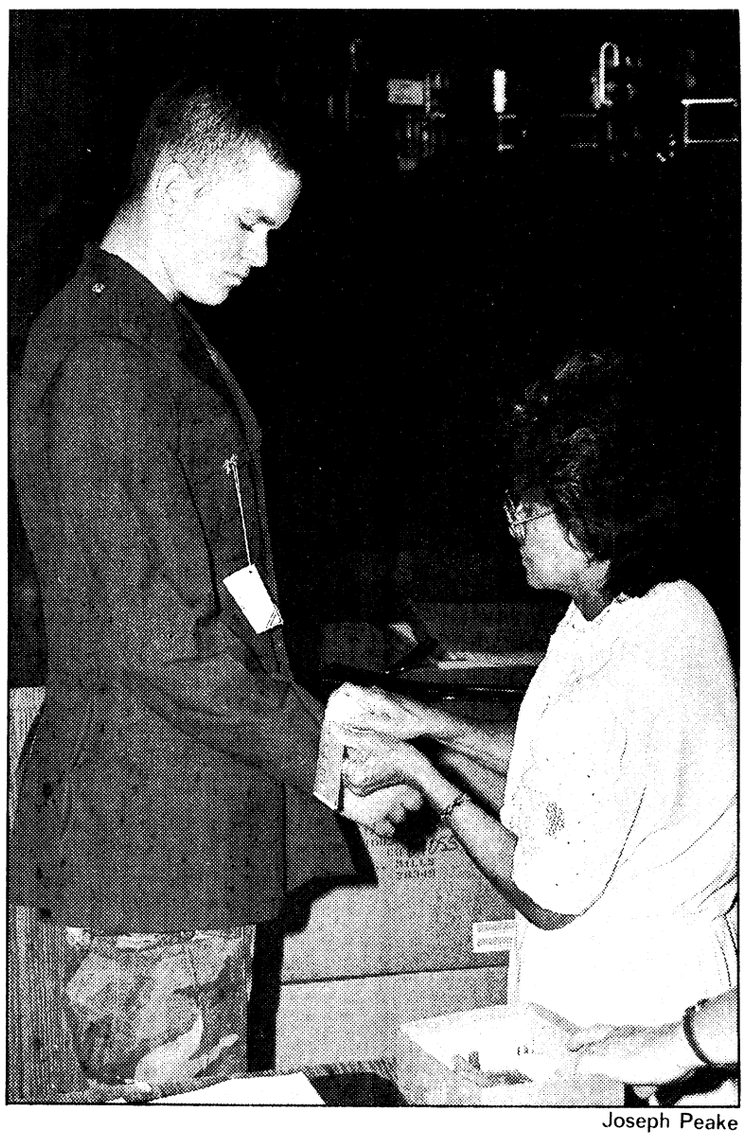
Gilda Diolosa thinks a clothing manufacturer in Louisiana has one of the "best and finest tailored coats" being issued to new Army recruits, and she wrote the company a letter to tell them just that.

Gilda, employed at the Clothing Initial Issue Point at the Army Infantry Center at Fort Benning, Ga., wrote to Deansgate, Inc., New Orleans, to tell them her opinion of the Class A uniforms she issues all day long.

She also had a suggestion — placing two snaps instead of one on the flaps of the upper front pockets.

"I am proud and happy to see (that) the uniforms I issue to the soldiers are neat," Gilda wrote to Deansgate.

Gilda is the final point in the contracting process, which provides all of the weapons, materials and services used by the military forces.



In this case, a bid for the manufacture of the coats is issued by the Defense Logistics Agency's Defense Personnel Support Center in Philadelphia.

Once the bids are in, the lowest and best bidder is determined in accordance with the Federal Acquisition Regulations and Department of Defense regulations. Once Deansgate, Inc., is determined to be the winner of the contract, the contract is turned over to the New Orleans office of the Defense Contract Administration Services Region headquartered in Dallas. DCASR Dallas, another field activity of the Defense Logistics Agency, will administer the contract for the government.

The nearly 1,900 civilian and 45 military employees of the Dallas region administer 35,000 awarded to private organizations in Texas, Oklahoma, Arkansas, Louisiana, New Mexico and Arizona. These contracts have an obligated value of almost $26 billion.

Quality assurance representative Nancy Zucconi of the Dallas region's New Orleans office is primarily responsible for insuring that Deansgate complies with the terms of the contact for the Class A uniform coats. Once Zucconi has certified that the costs meet the rigid standards imposed by the Defense Personnel Support Center, the Dallas region pays Deansgate.

The Dallas region pays out an average of $17 million each day for material and services delivered to the Army and other military departments.

Care

"He says, 'eight months.'"

"And I say, 'Did you come right here out of AIT (Advanced Individual Training)?'"

"Yes, sir."

"And I say to him, 'What were you doing in civilian life before that?'"

"And he says, 'I was a short-order cook.'"

"And I'm flabbergasted that we have the ability to do this with our young men and women. I'm even more impressed that we have that kind of young man, that kind of young woman, in our country that we can do that with.

But, while I was talking to him, I glanced over his shoulder, because I've been around this Army for a while. There, about ten meters back, tucked around a corner, hiding behind a radar set, trying to be in camouflage was an E-7 going–" Powell gave his impression of a nervous NCO biting his knuckles.

"I know what was going on," Powell said, laughing with the audience. "I know how it's done." "I know what that sergeant said to him. I know that that sergeant cued him about and briefed him about and rehearsed him over and over until he got it just right. And I saw him back there, ... putting every word in his mouth from a distance." "But you see," he continued, "he had already done his job. He had done it for the eight months before. People had done it for him at AIT, and now he had done it again the night before."

"And I also knew as I walked off to go see the next piece of equipment ... I didn't have to glance over my shoulder. I knew it was happening."

"As soon as I walked away and disaster had not struck, that sergeant was going to come up and pat that soldier on the back..."

Powell reminded the senior NCOs in the audience that caring for soldiers is "what we do." "When you examine our profession closely ... is there really anything else?," he asked. "Doesn't taking care of soldiers encompass everything our profession means?"

Training, he said, is the most important element of caring for soldiers.

"The only reason we exist in the Army is to be ready to fight," he said. "By that readiness, our national leaders hope to deter war. But, if it comes, they also intend to win it."

"We can draw up all the distinctions we want about individual training being the responsibility of the NCOs and collective training bring the responsibility of the officers ... but you and I and all the rest of the Army know that if NCOs aren't taking care of soldiers, there isn't going to be any meaningful training going on at any level."

Caring for soldiers, he said, creates an important by-product.

"It's generated by the caring, by the discipline, by the hard work, by the challenging training, by the high standards, and ultimately by the principle of doing what's right - by all the key ingredients of taking care of soldiers.

"It's called pride."

Powell concluded by challenging the class to learn all they could at the academy and then take that knowledge back to where "the rifle racks, and the motor pools, and the barracks dominate the scene.

Bush and Cheney reaffirm commitment to POW/MIAs

Army News Service

"We will do everything that a government can do" to resolve the fate of Americans still missing after the Vietnam War, President George Bush told a recent gathering of the National League of Families of American Prisoners and Missing in Southeast Asia.

Bush, along with Defense Secretary Dick Cheney, presidential emissary John Vessey and members of Congress, spoke to the league's members during their annual convention in Washington, D.C. "And, so long as you must live without knowing the fate of your loved ones,' Bush said, 'the United States will insist, in the name of humanity, that the governments of Indochina give the fullest possible accounting."

The league convention preceded by three days the arrival of two teams of U.S. technical experts in Hanoi to investigate incidents involving missing Americans in Vietnam. Comprising members of the Joint Casualty Resolution Center and the Army's Central Identification Laboratory, Hawaii, the teams are joined in North Vietnam by their counterparts from the Vietnamese Office for Seeking Missing Persons.

In addition, officials in Hanoi were expected to repatriate 15 remains which may be those of Americans on July 31. These latest repatriations would bring to 227 the number of remains provided to the U.S. by the Vietnamese since Vessey's 1987 mission to Hanoi.

"We appreciate Vietnam's increased responsiveness," Bush told league members. "An unprecedented level of joint operations has already brought significant progress. But despite our increased activities, many questions remain."

"Once again, I call on Hanoi to swiftly dispel the shadow of doubt, to shed light on the fate of your loved ones."

In his remarks, Cheney recounted Defense Department efforts to obtain information on POW/MIAs from Ganshin Yoshida, the elderly Japanese monk recently returned to Japan from Vietnam.

"Since then, we have interviewed him twice, and as you are aware, we have discovered that his mental and physical ailments make his recollections cloudy," Cheney said. "I share you disappointment that thus far this source has not proven as useful as we had hoped.

"We will continue to pursue this case and the information attributed to the monk by his daughter. Moreover, it is incumbent on the Vietnamese to give us details of Yoshida's captivity. The Vietnamese must recognize that these questions are not going to go away."Cheney also announced that he had appointed Henry Rowen, assistant secretary of defense for international security affairs, to be his "special advisor on POW/MIA issues."

"He will be open to your specific concerns and continue the long, close working relationship with Ann (Mills Griffiths, league executive director) to make sure you remain fully informed," he said. "Just as important, Assistant Secretary Rowen will ensure that there are no bureaucratic bottlenecks to our resolving these issues.

If we ever hear the sound of dragging feet, we'll administer the kick where it's needed."

Army women take fourth straight softball tourney

Army News Service

The All-Army women's softball team swept through the Armed Forces Softball Championships undefeated to win their fourth consecutive armed forces title.

The team posted a perfect 6-0 record to distance the second-place Marine Corps squad during the August tourney at the Marine Corps Recruiting Depot in San Diego, Calif. Navy and Air Force teams finished third and fourth, respectively.

A 8-0 shutout of the Marines in the Army squad's fifth game clinched the title. Jackie Ross of Kaiserlautern, Germany, led off the game with her first of four singles on the day, and Paula Cates of Fort Lee, Va., advanced her to third with a single of her own. A sacrifice fly from Fort Lee's Karen Kelly — the 1988 female Army athlete of the year — brought Ross home for the Army's only run of the inning.

In the top of the fourth, Ross again led off with a single, followed by singles from Kelly and Cates. Sonja Carter of Fort Knox, Ky., smacked the Army's fourth single of the inning, scoring Ross, and a hard grounder from Sheila Grainger of Fort Polk, La., drove in Cates to end the scoring at 3-0.

Ross and Velma Dampiers of Wuerzburg, Germany, both got on the basepaths with singles in the sixth. Cates' followed with a long triple to score both runners, and Kelly's single brought in Cates.

The Army padded its lead in the seventh inning with two runs on four singles.

In other action, the Army women topped the Marines 3-2, the Navy 3-1 and 7-3, and the Air Force 4-0 and 9-8.

Army head coach Willie Bourda and assistant coach David Brice of Fort McPherson, Ga., both credited the win to the team's hard work and preparation. Only four players on the squad — Kelly, Grainger, Ross and Cates, were returnees from the 1988 team.

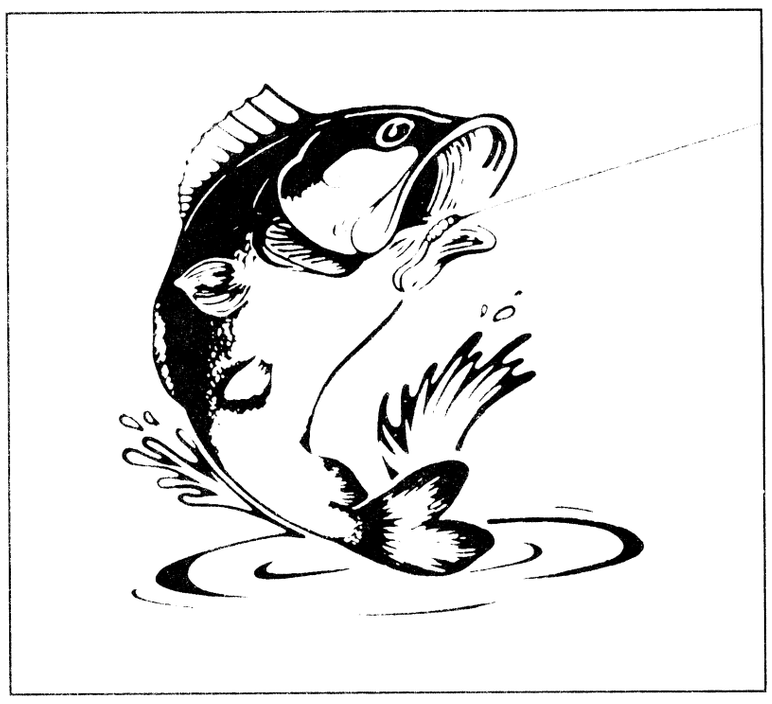
Lt. Col. David Rogers, chief of the Army Sports Office, added his praise to the coaches', lauding Bourda and Brice as well.

"The experience, leadership and strong play of all the veterans pulled us through," Rogers said.

"Willie Bourda and David Brice are two very technically competent coaches, as good as they come. But even more important is the way they work as a team and their skill in relating to the Army players."

"It seems they know when to chen them out and when to pat them on the back."

The Army women's team under Bourda and Brice has won every armed forces championship since 1984.



Eight Army players were selected to attend a training camp and compete for positions on the Armed Force All-Star team. They are:

Grainger, Kelly, Ross, Cates, Carter, Dampiers, Noel Geddes of Fort Huachuca, Ariz., and Evelyn Kimbrough of Camp Casey, Korea. The Armed Forces All-Stars will compete in the 1989 Class A National Championships Sept. 1-4 in Savannah, Ga.

Pro says to always look for possible big bass hideouts

By Earl Bentz and Steve Price

Outboard Marine Corp.

Isolated cover, shallow water very near a sharp drop into deeper depths and a big lure presented very slowly and deliberately are the key ingredients to catching big bass on practically any lake anywhere, according to top tournament angler and Evinrude Outboards Pro Staff member, Larry Nixon.

"There are practically always two distinct patterns for small 'limit' bass and for larger, heavier bass," Nixon explains. "Normally, in tournaments we go after the smaller fish first because they're easier to catch, but then we try for the quality fish that really add weight to a stringer, and it will normally be a different technique entirely."

The first thing to realize, Nixon points out, is that big bass patterns are generally one-bass patterns. It is extremely rare to locate a school of big bass in one spot. This means going from place to place looking for similar conditions. On the hand, you may catch several big fish out of the same spot over a period of two or three days.

"I believe the big bass push the smaller bass away when they find the perfect cover," Nixon said. "Then, when you remove that big fish, another big one moves in."

"Normally, larger bass seem to hold around isolated underwater cover rather than visible cover. This may be a retreat from fishing pressure, because the visible cover above water, such as sticks and logs, gets fished by more anglers.

"The key ingredient I've always found," adds the Evinrude pro, "is that the cover is very, very close to deep water. I believe big bass may use this depth as a form of cover, and simply move deeper when they feel threatened."

During the hot summer and into early autumn, Nixon recommends anglers try to locate areas where creek or river channels run close to shorelines when searching for big bass. The shallow water along the shore should have heavy cover, such as vegetation, stumps or fallen timber.

"Another important part of catching big bass is using big lures," Nixon continues. "My favorite is a jig adorned with a large pork chunk, which I fish year-round. I also like large plastic worms, a tandem willow leaf spinnerbait and for early morning and late afternoon fishing, a topwater plug or a buzz bait.

"I firmly believe you need big lures when you specifically want to catch big bass. Small lures will catch big fish, too, but not as consistently."

Fishing these lures slowly is critical, adds Nixon, whose largest tournament bass weighed nine-pounds, four-ounces. Big bass seem to be more cautious than smaller fish, so it's important to slow the lure and let the fish have a chance to study it.

"Sometimes I'll let a plastic worm sit motionless on the bottom 10 or 15 seconds," he said, "then just barely crawl it back. You may have to make repeated casts to the same spot, too, before you finally get a bite.

"One thing to keep in mind while you're fishing," concludes Nixon, "is to always be looking for possible hideouts for a big bass. Work the shoreline cover the way you always do, but never pass up the chance to cast to a single log or stump out by itself."

SPIRITUAL

MCCW announces slate of activities for women

By Debra Galle
USAIC Chaplain's Office

Women who wish to become more involved with the Catholic community and feel they want to expand their own commitment to their faith have many opportunities ahead of them. The Fort Benning chapter of the Military Council of Catholic Women announces a full slate of activities and gatherings designed for ladies in this community.

"Our purpose, both locally and internationally, is to make available to women opportunities to find more spiritual and enriching lives," said Bobbie Pearce, MCCW president. "We encourage each woman to discover her own needs and share openly in an atmosphre of understanding, love and prayer. We hope this atmosphere of growth will spread from our group to our families and our communities."

The group meets at least once a month on or near the "First Friday." The first Friday of each month is revered day in the Catholic religion in honor of Mary, the mother of God.

The group will meet at the TIC Annex Sept. 8. A rosary will be said and a special Mass will follow. Father George Gudz, senior priest and chief of administrative operations, is the moderator for the Fort Benning MCCW.

In October, the groups plans a special mini-retreat to the Blessed Trinity Convent in Alabama. Many successful retreats have been held there in the past, making this one of the most requested events.

"This gives women a chance to take time out for herself," Pearce explained.

Debra Galle

Brenda Davis (l) and Bobbie Pearce hold the handmade MCCW bannerwhich depicts Mary.

A special "All Saints Eve" celebration for the children of the community will be held at the TIC Annex Oct. 31. A special Mass of Anticipation will be celebrated at 5 p.m. at the Main Post Chapel, followed by games and joviality at the annex. Michelle Borden heads the committee for the party.

"This will give children an alternative to the ghost and ghoulie celebration of Halloween," explained Borden. "We will encourage children to wear costumes from the Bible and the games will be old fashioned fun with lots of prizes and treats."

A Southeastern Conference will be held in Cullman Alabama in November, offering a unique experience for those attending because they will stay in a history filled monastery.

Other events and speakers planned for ladies of the MCCW are designed to offer something for everyone.

For more information, call Bobbie Pearce at 687-6145 or Debbie Galle at 687-2175.

Rosary workshop needs helpers

USAIC Chaplain's Office

A rosary-making workshop, sponsored by the Fort Benning chapter of the Military Council of Catholic Women, is held each Wednesday at the Religious Education Center.

The main purpose for the workshop is to fulfill a need for rosaries at Fort Benning. More than 30,000 trainees pass through Fort Benning each year. Nearly one third of those troops are Catholic. Thousands of rosaries made by local church groups have been given to trainees in the past.

The workshop, led by Monica James, MCCW secretary, is the first of it's kind within the Army.

Anyone interested in attending the workshops can call James at 682-8713.

The use of freedom brings many added responsibilities

By Chap. Lyn H. Brannon
30th AG Battalion

Freedom is a word heard and used often in the Army. Most usually think of freedom in the patriotic sense, and naturally so. The very reason we are soldiers is to defend freedom. It is proper that we speak of freedom, acclaim its worth, and value it highly as patriots.

But the word freedom also has a spiritual meaning. II Corinthians 3:17 says, "Where the Spirit of the Lord is, there is freedom." The same biblical author while addressing Christ followers at Galatia spoke again of freedom. This time he added a caution.

"You were called to freedom, brethren; only do not use your freedom as an opportunity for the flesh, but through love be servants of one another (Galatians 5:13)."

New soldiers who are away from home for the first time are "free" from the dominance and restriction under which Mom or Dad used to place them. When that first pass comes during Basic Training the sense of new-found freedom is strong. The soldier is "free" to. . .(fulfill his greatest fantasy).

The permanent party soldier who is TDY and no longer under his wife's watch eye is also "free" to. . .(fulfill his greatest fantasy). Yes, these soldiers are free to. . ., but they are also free not to. . .

It behooves us to remember in any context that freedom is accompanied by responsibility. We are never free from the law. We are free within the law.

For example, try convincing a traffic cop who has stopped you for speeding that you are exempt from the laws of the State of Georgia.

He will assure you that you are not free from the law. If you had traveled within the limits of the law, however, you would not have encountered a uniformed enforcer of the law and would be free to go on your way.

ENTERTAINMENT

September Fest at DeSoto Caverns Park helps needy kids and promises fun time

DeSoto Caverns Park

September Fest enters into its 14th year at DeSoto Caverns Park in Childersburg, Ala. Sept. 23 and 24. The popular festival attracts thousands of visitors each year and is a benefit for The Kings Ranch. The Ranch has grown from one home in 1977 to over 20 homes across Alabama providing for several hundred boys and girls who have been abandoned, abused or need help.

The festival features arts & crafts with many exhibitors demonstrating their skills. Enjoy top regional clogging exhibitions and a clogging competition. The Clogging Competition — one of Alabama's first, now in its fourth year, is divided into three categories: Show Team, Line Team and Duet. There are three age divisions in each category: Elementary — under 12, Young Adult — ages 12-24, and Adult Ages 25 and older. The competition results will be determined by qualified judges. On Saturday night, Dollar Bill Lawson of WZZK in Birmingham, will be MC for the Show and Line Team Clogging Competition, as well as the Band Jam. On Sunday, in addition to other entertainment, there will be a Duet Clogging Competition.

Live bluegrass performances throughout the weekend will include popular bands like Auburn's Saugahatachee Bluegrass and Birmingham's Lickety Split. Laughter rules the day when the Bunkhouse Boys take the stage with their comic gunfight skits. The 3rd Alabama Cavalry will present a "living history" of camp life as a soldier (Union and Confederate) during the Civil War, with authentic music from this period, cannon and artillery displays, and re-enacted skirmishes, plus cavalry pony rides for the kids.

Festival hours are from 9 a.m. to 11 a.m. on Saturday and 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. on Sunday. The festival gate is $2.50, under age 4, free. DeSoto Caverns Park is on Highway 76, 5 miles east of Childersburg and is shown as an Attraction (No. 44) on all 1989-1990 Alabama maps. For camping and more detailed festival information, contact DeSoto Caverns park at (205) 378-7252.

Hikers and backpackers encouraged to visit north Georgia's state parks

Georgia Department of Natural Resources

As the summer months come to a close, north Georgia's state parks are gearing up for another exciting series of backpacking clinics and backcountry weekend adventures for the 1989 fall season.

Novice and experienced hiking enthusiasts are encouraged to kick off the fall outdoor season by participating in the Red Top Mountain State Park backpacking clinic Sept. 16, 10:30 a.m. to 5 p.m., in Cartersville. Instructors from Smokey Mountain Sports in Decatur, will demonstrate outdoor cooking (instant vs. freeze dried food), types of utensils and gear associated with backpacking, and list items needed for a day and/or weekend trip (i.e. map, compass). Hiking etiquette, first aid, weather tips, cleaning the campsite and conservation safety will be discussed during the clinic. Participants are to bring a picnic lunch and wear comfortable clothing. The cost for the program is $10 per person. Preregistration is not required, but suggested.

From July 1, 1988 to June 30, 1989, Red Top Mountain was host to over 1,404,809 visitors. Located on an 1,726-acre peninsula along Lake Allatoona, this park offers a wide range of outdoor recreational activities including tennis, hiking, boating and fishing. Overnight accommodations include 286 tent and trailer sites and 18 rental cottages. Families and single individuals who are interested in fun, safe and exciting escapes should head for the mountains to participate in DNR backcountry weekend adventures.

Fall. . . images of red, yellow and brown leaves scattered throughout north Georgia's mountains — the state parks offer a series of dramatic and breathtaking views where novice and experienced hikers can capture glimpses of these vibrant colors while participating in the many backcountry weekend adventures offered at the end of September and every weekend in October.

Busch Gardens adds world-famous Clydesdales to list of attractions

Busch Gardens

A group of world-famous Budweiser Clydesdale horse – the mighty "Gentle Giants" often seen pulling their historic red wagon at major public events – recently made their debut at Busch Gardens' new Clydesdale Hamlet. The Clydesdales are displayed in a permanent, Victorian-themed stable at the family entertainment park and zoo.

Busch Gardens

Located near the monorail station on the African-themed park's Serengeti Plain, the stable will feature four Clydesdales that were formerly with traveling hitches, plus a mare and a foal. Guests may observe these Clydesdales, all from the Grant's Farm breeding facility in St. Louis, Mo., as they are groomed and fed in their new home. An antique beer wagon, display of harness gear used for Clydesdale hitches, and an area for visitors to be photographed with these majestic creatures also are part of the exhibit.

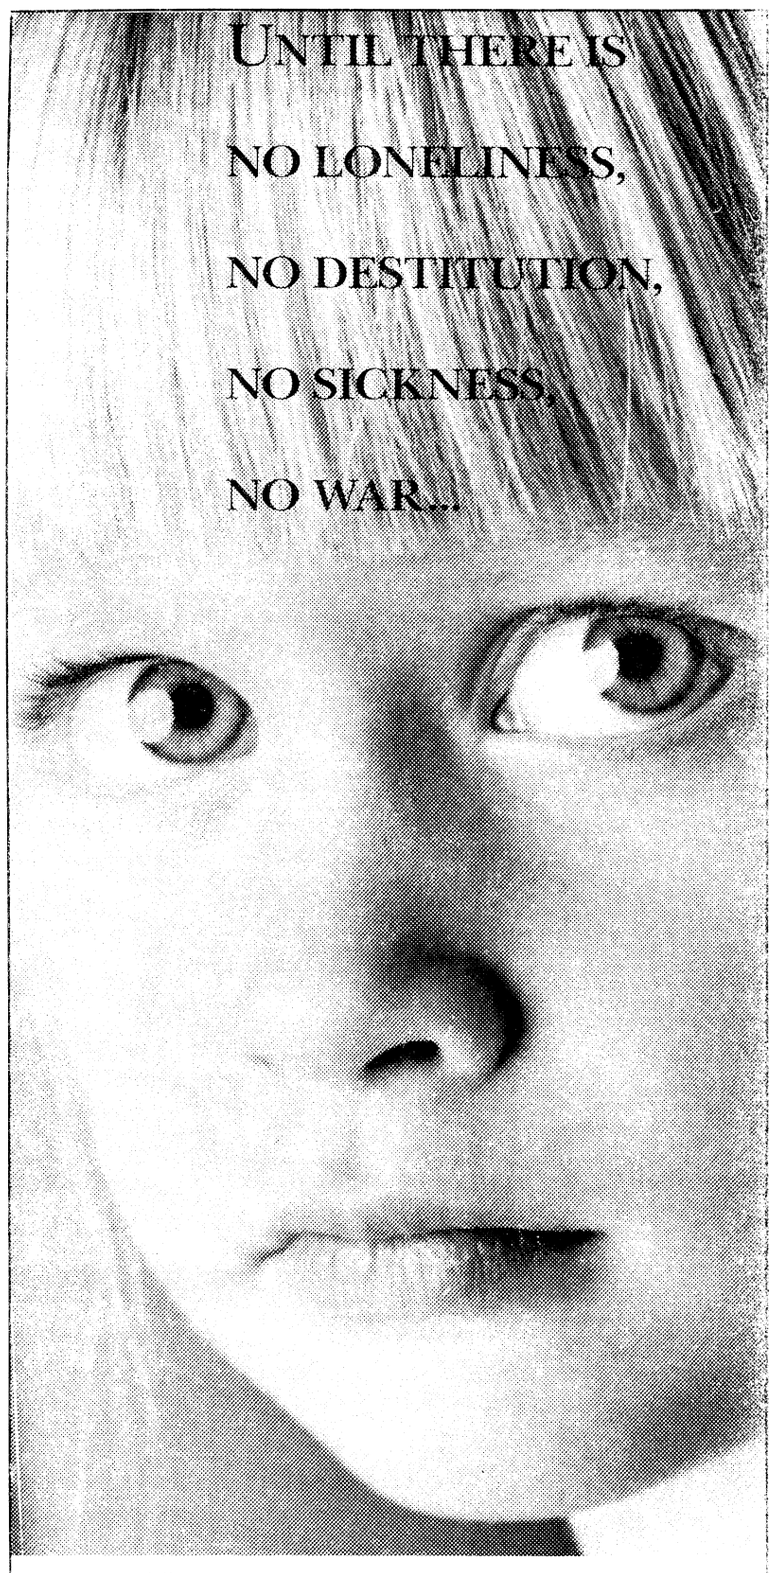
The Budweiser Clydesdales have become one of the world's most famous corporate symbols, appearing at hundreds of major parades and other special events across the country each year. But for many people, this will be a unique opportunity to see first hand and up close the impressive qualities of these highly popular, beautiful animals.

With their proud Scottish heritage, stately bearing and confident gait, the Clydesdales are surprisingly approachable – a necessary trait considering the attention lavished on these horses.

Today, Budweiser Clydesdales are even larger than their Scottish ancestors. To qualify for the eight-horse hitch, a Clydesdale must meet certain requirements. Standing at 18 hands high (about six feet) at the shoulder when fully mature, they must weigh between 1,800 and 2,300 pounds. They must be geldings, bay in color, have four white stocking feet and a blaze of white on the face, as well as a black mane and tail.

The forerunner of the Clydesdale is the Great Flemish White Horse. Farmers living in the 18th century along the banks of the River Clyde in Lanarkshire, Scotland bred these first draft horses which pulled loads of more than one ton at a walkint speed of five miles per hour. Soon their reputation spread beyond the Scottish borders. Canadians of Scottish descent brought the first Clydesdales to the United States in the mid-1800s where the draft horses resumed their existence on farms. Today, the Clydesdales are used primarily for breeding and show.

We've always looked forward to hosting the Clydesdales hitches when they've made special visits to Busch Gardens each year," said Busch Gardens general manager Joseph C. Fincher. "But, to have a permanent exhibit of the Clydesdales is even more exciting for us and our guests who now can enjoy these beautiful animals year round."



Located at the corner of Busch Boulevard and 40th Street, Busch Gardens is eight miles norhteast of downtown Tampa, Fla. two miles east of interstate 275 and two miles west of Interstate 75.

Hike

Fort Mountain, and Vogel State Parks all feature guided overnight trips. Each trip begins at 10:30 a.m. on Saturday and ends at 3 p.m. on Sunday. Backpackers must provide their own equipment, food and transportation to the park. The fee for the overnight excursion is $15 per person. DNR staff will guide participants safely along the trail interpreting the natural and cultural history of the area. Preregistration is required for all overnight excursions.

The Red Top Mountain State Park backpacking clinic and north Georgia mountain backcountry weekend adventures are sponsored by the Georgia Department of Natural Resources. For additional information, contact Bill Thoman, at (404) 865-7150 or call toll-free, 1-800-3GA-PARK (inside Georgia).

Loud noises to be heard Sept. 17 through 30

There will be loud noises in the northeast section of Fort Benning from Sept. 17 through 30. These loud noises will be produced by howitzers, mortars, Bradley main guns, main tank guns, machine guns and TOW missiles.

In addition to these weapons, there will be tactical aircraft Sept. 24. Hours of firing will vary each day.

Soldier Show auditions September 28 and 29

Auditions for the 1990 Army Soldier Show will be held at Kelley Hill Recreation Center Sept. 28 and 29 from 6 to 8 p.m. Interested personnel must make an appointment for the audition and pick up the audition application from the recreation center prior to Sept. 25.

Auditions will be videotaped and sent to the Department of Army for final selection. Applicants must be on permanent assignment, have a minimum of nine months remaining in the service after March, 1990, and have a letter signed by the unit commander authorizing release from the unit from mid-March through Aug. 31, 1990.

Personnel selected will begin rehearsals at Fort Knox, Ky. in mid-March.

NEW DROP ZONE

Benning CG first to drop in

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

The Earth Moving Platoon, Company B, 43rd Engineer Battalion, 36th Engineer Group just completed a project which will make airborne operations much more realistic.

Operations will be made easier because of the new drop zone the unit built next to the McKenna MOUT (military operation on urban terrain) Site and Airstrip.

The unit's accomplishment was celebrated with an opening ceremony Tuesday at the site.

But, the story began last November when the Engineers were strapped with the mission of clearing more than 320 acres to provide a realistic battalion-sized tactical drop zone, conforming to natural terrain.

Although the unit had another mission in Costa Rica, it managed to not only stay on schedule but complete the task early. The unit was slated to finish the job on Oct. 31. It finished two months under schedule.

New administration building to be constructed near Bldg. 4

USAIC Public Affairs Office

A new administration building is being constructed in the parking lot adjacent to Building 4, Infantry Hall.

Construction for what will be known as Building 6 began Aug. 28.

A fence has been built around the site, and it is requested that personnel working in or traveling to Infantry Hall not park within the perimeter of the fence.

According to Sgt. Maj. Harry Scruggs of the Directorate of Information Management, the building will house personnel from Building 35, U.S. Army School of Americas.

He said the Directorate of Engineering and the Civilian Personnel Office both have several offices at USARSA and will be moved to the new facility so the school can have the entire building.

During the construction of the new building, USARSA is also scheduled for a face-lift.

Scruggs said that offices are being prepared in the 2500 area to house some of the directorates in the interim.

LAUNDRY SERVICE

Benning soldiers to pay more

USAIC Public Affairs Office

The cost of laundry service will increase Oct. 1 for Fort Benning soldiers.

The laundry fee, which is payroll deducted, will increase from $8 to $12.

Soldiers who complete a Laundry Payroll Deduction/Discontinuance Authorization form (DA Form 3799) to begin the service on or after Oct. 1 will have a $12 deduction reflected on their leave and earnings statement.

For patrons currently enrolled in the program, the Finance and Accounting Office will implement the increase.

Soldiers attending school or taking training will have a one-time deduction of $3 per week for laundry service when the length of the school or training does not exceed 12 weeks.

New patrons or those wishing to cancel are required to submit a DA Form 3799 through their supply section to the post laundry. To ensure records and rosters are maintained and reconciled monthly, all requests to stop or start will be processed by the laundry facility and reported to FAO daily.

FAO will not accept or process DA Forms 3799 to start or stop laundry service submitted directly by individuals or supply representatives.

Laundry patrons and supply representatives should check with the post laundry facility to ensure they have a current DA Form 3799 on file.

For more information, contact Mary Herring or Linda Lawrence at the Laundry Branch, building 2500, at 545-3119 or 545-1431.

OPINION

VARIOUS VOICES: What more can the United States do to resolve the Southeast Asia POW-MIA situation?

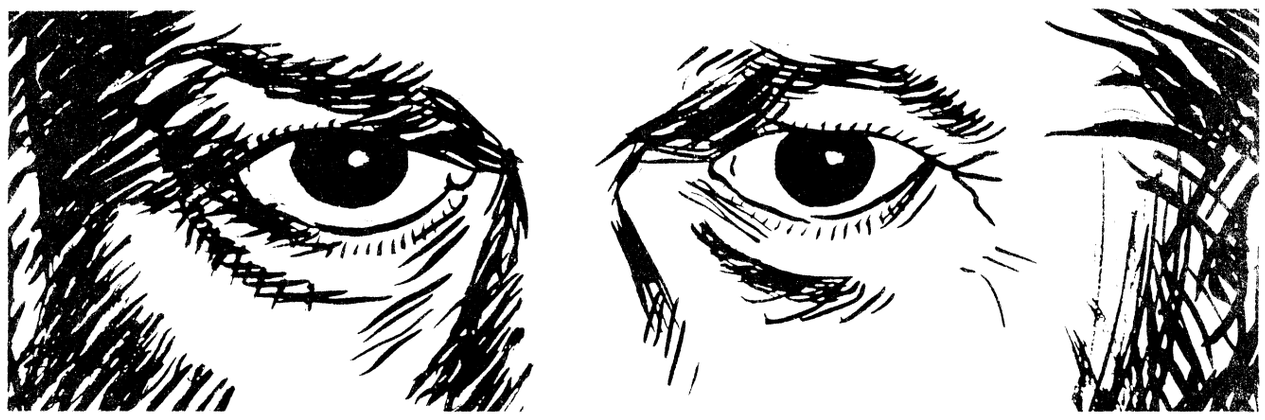
Sgt. Howard Collins, Co. C, 1st Bn., 507th PIR — "I think the government should appoint an official task force to find out what is going on over there once and for all."

SFC Gerald Franklin, HHC 36th Eng. Grp. — "I think our country needs to get on better terms with Southeast Asian countries so their government officials will allow members of the United States to conduct a thorough search."

Spec. Al Ramirez, 33rd, 87th Reservist School — "When our government gets information on the whereabouts of some of these soldiers, I don't think they should wait; they should just go and get them and forget the red tape."



2nd Lt. James Kipper, Co. D, 2nd Bn., 11th Inf. — "I think more funding is needed, and more lobbying needs to be done through congress. I think we should do whatever it takes to find out the truth."

Pvt. Steven Williams, Co. A, 1st Bn., 507th PIR — "First of all, I really do believe there are still some soldiers over there, so we should send some troops over and get them."

Spec. Paul Cook, HHC, 1st Bn., 507th PIR — "I think some sort of group should be sent over there. I don't think they even need to be military-related; they just need to know what they are looking for."

POW/MIA RECOGNITION

For 8,000 American POWs/MIAs, the war is not over yet

By Clyde Snively
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Bumper stickers can carry the most poignant thoughts at times.

I remember one not too long ago that said, "POWs never have a nice day."

I'd certainly add MIAs and family members to that. I just can't picture family members of soldiers who are missing in action, or even still a hostage or prisoner, having very many nice days when the uncertainty of the fate of a loved one constantly gnaws at their insides.

Soldiers, sailors, airmen and marines go to war because that's what they signed on to do. They face the horrors of combat. Some come back as cripples; some come back in body bags. Some never recover from the mental anguish of what they witnessed in the heat of battle.

Family members send their spouses off to war because they have no choice in the matter. Family members stay at home, watch the war unfold on the nightly news, see bodies of American service members lying dead on a remote battlefield and wonder if one of those bodies could be a husband, father, son, daughter, wife or mother.

Then a letter arrives and they breathe a temporary sigh of relief knowing that person was alive at least a week or so ago.

But don't send them a Western Union, and don't have an officer in class As walk up to the door and ring the bell unless you're delivering THE MESSAGE. Because if you do, you'll probably have to calm down or revive a very hysterical family member.

Today is National POW/MIA Recognition Day. It's a time to honor our returned prisoners of war and to rekindle a resolve to account for American service members still missing.

This week, three more bodies were flown to Hawaii with the hope they would be identified and three more names could be stricken off the long list of MIAs — a list that numbers in excess of 2,300 from Vietnam, and, are you ready for this, 6,000 from Korea, to include 389 who are still listed as prisoners.

That equates to many family members out there worrying and wondering what became of these service members.

I'm sure that each time a live sighting of a service member in Southeast Asia is reported, all family members everywhere must hope, wish, wonder if it's one of theirs.

The National League of Families of Prisoners of War and Missing in Action vows not to let the American public forget the plight of these men and women.

We should join with them. Remind our governmental leaders that for those 8,000 Americans the war is not yet over. Remind our leaders that while we're willing to fight for the freedoms of this country, we expect something in return — we expect not to be forgotten.

We expect not to be abandoned on some remote battlefield or left to rot in some dank prisoner of war camp. We expect that as long as there are those missing, as long as there is a chance of American POWs somewhere, our government will continue to work to get them home and will not rest until every last one is accounted for.

Today is National POW/MIA Day

The President has signed into law a congressional joint resolution designating a day in September to honor returned American prisoners of war, those missing in action and their families. National POW/MIA Recognition Day is Sept. 15.

American POWs have waged their personal and often solitary struggle for survival against our nation's enemies in every way since the American Revolution.

Through their indomitable spirit and patriotism, they have provided generations of U.S. fighting men with examples of courage, honor and unselfish devotion to duty.

In the same manner, the families of POWs and MIAs have courageously faced uncertainty with a solemn determination to resolve the fate of their loved ones.

Today, 16 years after the end of U.S. involvement in Indochina, there are still 2,338 Americans not accounted for or missing.

They are not forgotten.

President Bush stated that the resolution of the POW/MIA issue remains at the highest national priority.

We in the Armed Forces can contribute directly to that goal through our continued, unified support and through service awareness efforts.

This day of national recognition is a special time for those of us in uniform to honor all former prisoners of war and those still missing in action for their contributions to the freedoms we enjoy today.

It is an opportunity to recognize the sacrifices of their families and to offer them our continued support.

And, it is a fitting occasion for us to demonstrate to the world that we will not relent in our efforts to account for our missing comrades in arms.

I encourage each commander to seek every opportunity to organize appropriate events in honor of our POWs, MIAs and their families Sept. 15.

CG proclaims Hispanic Heritage Month

In recognition of Hispanic Americans and our nation's ethnic and national diversity, the month of Sept. 15 to Oct. 15, 1989, is proclaimed "Hispanic Heritage Month" at Fort Benning.

This year's theme is "500 Years of Hispanic Heritage. . .The Continuing Adventure."

Hispanic Americans have contributed to a wealth of accomplishments in all facets of American life.

There are many Hispanic Americans who received the Congressional Medal of Honor for conspicuous gallantry and heroism in combat.

There are also many Hispanic Americans who have made many great sacrifices for the development of the American way of life.

There is a long and distinguished line of Hispanic American soldiers and civilians who are committed to the values that make this nation strong.

The various Hispanic cultures continue to enrich our American society.

I encourage all personnel on Fort Benning and in surrounding communities to participate in the observance through the planned activities by units, staff and other agencies.

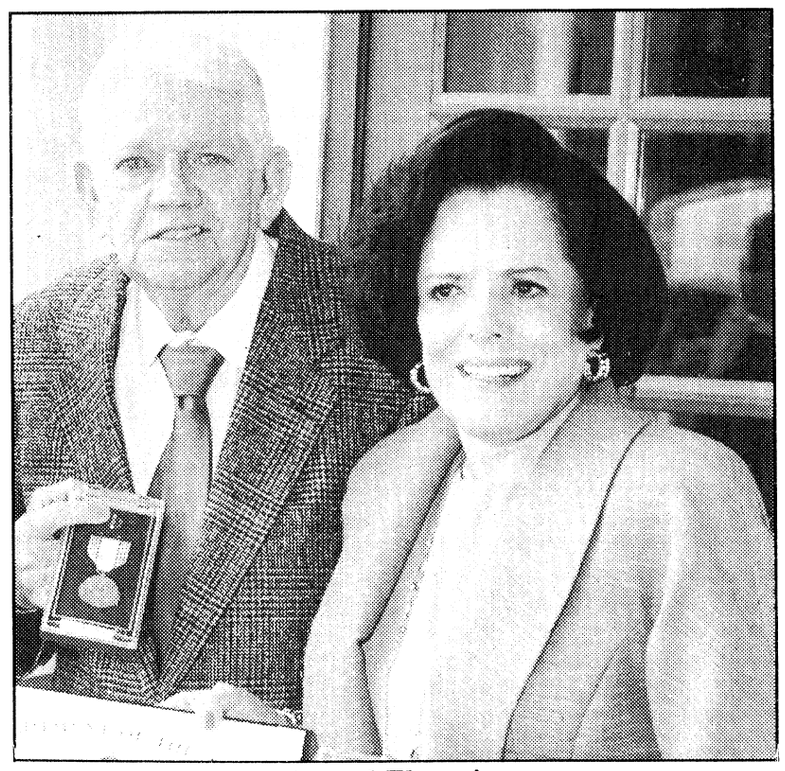
Columbus couple receives distinguished service award

USAIC Public Affairs Office

A prominent Columbus couple received the Department of the Army Decoration for Distinguished Civilian Service recently for their support of the U.S. Army School of the Americas.

John B. and Elena D. Amos received the award from USARSA Commander Col. William A. DePalo Jr. during a recent dinner at Fort Benning honoring the Ecuadorian Minister of Defense who was at the post for induction into the School's Hall of Fame.

The Amos' were singled out for the award, signed by then Secretary of the Army John O. Marsh Jr., for significant contributions to USARSA through its Columbus Support Group.



The citation reads: "Mr. and Mrs. John B. Amos are recognized for their outstanding community service rendered to the United States Army School of the Americas.

"The Amos' selfless and dedicated efforts in establishing the United States Army School of the Americas Columbus Support Group have tremendously enhanced the quality of life of the Latin American students, faculty members, their families and the people of Columbus and surrounding communities.

"The Amos' personal support in hosting official functions for distinguished graduates of the School has aided the establishment of outstanding bonds of friendship with our Latin American allies. Such contributions are in keeping with the highest standards and traditions of our society and reflect great credit upon themselves, the Columbus-Phenix City community and the Department of the Army."

The Columbus Support Group finds sponsors for Latin American students soldiers and guest instructors. Besides social functions, it sets up visits to facilities in the surrounding area.

The group this year has hosted English language classes for 33 children of Latin American officers attending the Command General Staff Course at USARSA, provided 85 tickets to the Southern Open Golf tournament, 250 tickets to Callaway Gardens, 60 tickets to the Springer Opera House, and for the past four years, sponsored a program of Christmas gifts for Latin American children.

Defense Dept. issues new TDY travel policy

By Tom Joyce
American Forces Information Service

Individuals who have not traveled on temporary duty recently should be aware of a new policy concerning travel advances when using the Diners Club government travel card.

Under new rules already in force throughout the military services and the Department of Defense, travel advances with that card are limited to the estimated out-of-pocket expenses travelers expect to incur other than hotel, motel or rental car costs.

Army Col. Richard W. Lind, staff director of DoD's Per Diem Travel and Transportation Allowance Committee, said the current policy is a result of an effort by the Office of Management and Budget to get federal agencies to better account for their travel dollars.

"OMB found that many government travelers were not filling out travel vouchers expeditiously," said Lind.

"That represented a big liability for the government."

For example, if a traveler draws a $400 travel advance and total official expenses amount to only $300, the traveler is, in effect, getting an interest-free government loan of $100 until the voucher is submitted.

With the new policy, travelers will not receive advance money for any expense that they can charge to the Diners Club travel card, Lind said.

Travelers will not receive advance money for any expense they can charge to the Diners' Club travel card.

"Advances will be restricted to the meal and individual expense portion of the per diem rate for the area the traveler is going," he said.

"Out-of-pocket expenses such as meals, tolls, parking, taxis and such will continue to be advanced."

One complaint about the new policy is that the Diners Club travel card is not as readily accepted as Visa, American Express or Master Card.

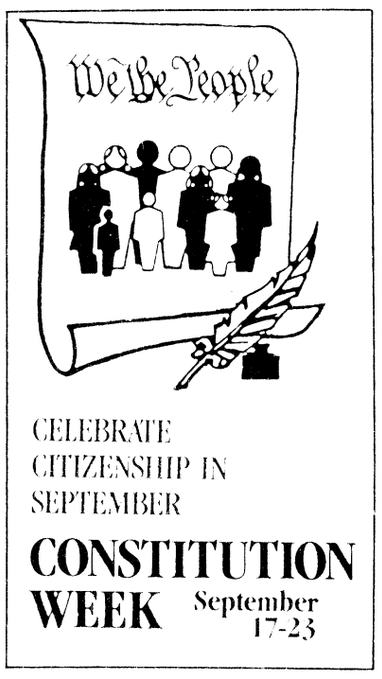
"But remember," cautioned Lind, "the Diners Club card is not a charge card. It is an employee travel card to be used only for travel expenses. It is not to be used to buy gifts. Diners Club promotes their card as an executive travel card, not a charge card."

However, Lind said using the card has several advantages. Chief among them is the ability to make large purchases immediately.

"For instance, if someone is TDY and loses their airline ticket, they can purchase a new one on the spot. They don't have to come up with their own money.

"In addition, we have found that the Diners Club card is readily accepted in hotels and motels for meals and lodging throughout the United States."

There are some problems with using the card overseas. For example, some military transient quarters do not accept the Diners Club travel card for lodging.



"It is incumbent on the traveler to tell their finance office when they are traveling to a site where the Diners Club travel card will not be accepted for lodging," said Lind.

Lind said the Diners Club travel card program is very attractive for federal travelers for these reasons:

- There is no interest charge or late payment penalties.

"However," said Lind, "Charges are due 30 days from the billing date in full."

- If a member loses a card, neither the government nor the individual is liable for any illegal charges. Other cards carry a liability of about $50.
- No credit check is performed on individuals who apply for the card. "That also means Diners Club will not provide a credit history to any agency requesting it," said Lind.

Constitution Week begins Sunday

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Sunday begins Constitution Week. To commemorate the bicentennial of our constitution, the U.S Army Infantry Center has planned several activities.

Monday at 4 p.m. the National Infantry Museum will participate in "Bells Across America," a national campaign commemorating the signing of the constitution.

The Staff Judge Advocate Office will have a display in Building 4 Sept. 22 through 29.

The Bicentennial of the Constitution Flag will be flown in front of Infantry Hall.

The Chaplain's Office will observe "Religious Freedom Day" Monday in post chapels.

The Infantry Band will play at Peachtree Mall Sept. 22 from 1 to 2 p.m.

Many libraries will have displays and information on the Constitution.

To get a copy of the constitution, send your name and address to: Bicentennial Commission, 808 17th Street, N.W., Washington, D.C. 20006-3999.

Commissary privilege extended for reservists, guardsmen

By Tom Joyce
American Forces Information Service

The Department of Defense has extended the National Guard and Reserve interim commissary privilege to Dec. 31, 1989.

Air Force Lt. Col. Jungus Jordan, DoD's assistant director of personnel administration and services, said the new Armed Forces Commissary Privilege Card is not yet available, requiring the extension from Jan. 1, 1989.

Jordan said that until the cards reach Guard and Reserve administrative offices, the rules in place will apply to determine eligibility for commissary privileges.

"Guard and Reserve people using the commissary need only to present a copy of their orders showing that they performed active duty in 1988 or 1989 and a military identification card," said Jordan.

"Family members must show proof and a photo identification."

The commissary privilege for National Guard and Reserve personnel was established in the 1986 Defense Authorization Act, which allowed members to bank up to 14 days of commissary privileges.

"DoD decided to authorize 12 visits per year, in addition to unlimited visits while the member is on active duty.

"Initially, we tried to use the leave and earnings statement to keep track of commissary visits," said Jordan.

"The procedure resulted in a very heavy workload on the unit and was difficult for members and commissary identification checkers to use," said Jordan.

"So we created a new form, which will work much like the ration cards overseas."

The new privilege card will be available to all members of Selected Reserve who have performed training as required by law.

Jordan said the card will have 12 spaces, with room for a date stamp on the back. When members use the commissary while not on active duty, they

Commissary promotions bring in bucks for MWR

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

Money that soldiers spend on certain products in the commissary is going right back into their pockets.

Sounds too good to be true, but it happens all the time through sales promotions done at the store.

This is how it works according to Commissary Officer John W. Lennett. A time frame is designated, and during that time, a certain percentage of each product sold will go into a predesignated fund according to Lennett.

"These promotions can be done at headquarters level or local level," he said. "Out the three most recent promotions, two came from DA and the other one was local."

Lennett explained the difference between headquarters and local is that the company approaches the Troop Support Agency with the items they'd like to feature in all the commissaries whereas local vendors will approach facilities individually.

The most recent promotions resulted in more than $3,600 going back to the soldiers through Morale Welfare and Support Activities.

Three Activities that fall under the MWR umbrella will directly benefit.

Youth athletics will benefit from a $1,535.35 check, which resulted from a TSA-level promotion of Proctor and Gamble products.

Youth Activities representative, Billie C. Smith accepted the check and indicated that the money would go for the karate team and the cheerleaders.

Volunteer Services was given a check for $386.25. That money was the result of another TSA-level promotion of products from Overseas Service Corporation. Karen Crowley, head of Volunteers Services, said the money will go toward child care for women volunteering in activities which don't provide child care services.

The last promotion — a local one done through Durkee French Foods — resulted in a check for $1,800 to Community Activities. Becky Carroll, Chief, Child Development Services accepted the check and noted that the money would go toward educating child care providers.

LIGHT INFANTRY TRAINING

IOBC students execute attacks, reconnaissance

By Peter Lucht
Co. C, 2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry

Deliberate attacks and reconnaissance were two basic infantry missions executed and evaluated last week by the Company C, 2nd Battalion, Infantry Officers Basic Course students.

Generally regarded by basic course lieutenants as a milestone on the road to graduation, the light infantry field training exercise, commonly known as "Light Week," is a challenging five-day field training exercise undertaken by IOBC students in the 11th week of their 16-week course.

Each day consisted of several missions planned and conducted by members of Company C.

Training was at platoon level, with members rotating through leadership positions such as platoon leader, platoon sergeant and squad leader.

ach leader was evaluated on mission performance under the watchful eyes of Charlie Company cadre.

Students said Light Week gave them a chance to put to work a lot of the concepts they had been taught previously in IOBC.

"We get a lot of tactics instruction, but it has much more impact when you do it in the field and see it work or not work," said 2nd Lt. Robert Magnuson.

Other light infantry skill training centered on military operations in urban terrain at the McKenna MOUT (military operation on urban terrain) site, and a live-fire platoon attack on the last day.

"The MOUT training was my favorite part of the week. I never encountered it before, and it was pretty intense," said 2nd Lt. John Leasure, a Charlie Company student.

A 20-kilometer rucksack march preceded the platoon live fire.

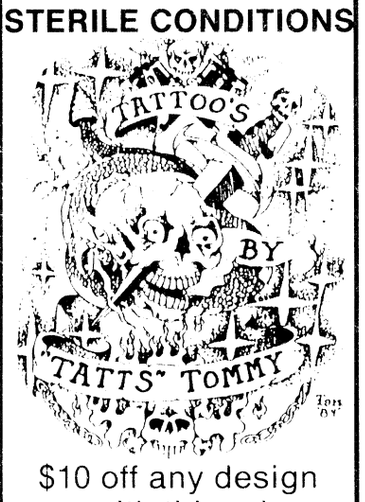
Competition among the platoons to achieve the fastest time was keen. The winner was the company's third platoon with a time of four hours and eight minutes.

After the march, the platoons moved into hasty positions and grabbed a few hours sleep before moving onto the live-fire range.

Cadre members walked their respective platoons through the site first thing in the morning, discussing techniques and safety.

"It was tough, especially after the road march, but it was good training. Shooting live ammunition makes you think more about what you are doing," said 1st Lt. David Hodo, an IOBC student.

With Light Week over, the student officers of C Company have three more weeks of classroom training and a full week of mechanized infantry tactics in the field to look forward to before graduation on Sept. 29.



"We'll stay high speed all the way," said 2nd Lt. Anthony Martinez.

USMA
ASSOCIATE PROFESSOR SOUGHT

The Superintendent of the United States Military Academy has appointed committees to recommend active duty officers with approximately 15 years of service for permanent assignment to West Point as associate professors in the Department of Systems Engineering and in the Department of English. The individuals selected will be responsible for teaching, planning and directing undergraduate core and elective courses, coordinating in an extensive program of extracurricular academic activities, and enhancing scholarship at the Military Academy.

DEPARTMENT OF SYSTEMS ENGINEERING:

Background in any of the following areas is highly desirable: modeling, computer model development, software design, artificial intelligence, expert systems, and decision support systems. Experience in applying the principles of modeling to Army-related issues such as the efficient utilization of resources and the enhancement of decision making is particularly relevant. Applicants lacking a Ph.D. should have a master's degree in one of the following disciplines: operations research, systems engineering, industrial engineering, applied mathematics, computer science, management decision science, or another related field, and be qualified and willing to complete a Ph.D. in an appropriate discipline within three years.

DEPARTMENT OF ENGLISH:

In addition to teaching undergraduate courses, the officer will plan and direct a graduate level course. Applicants must have previous college teaching experience and a Ph.D. in either English or philosophy. Candidates lacking a Ph.D. should have an MA degree in English or philosophy and be capable of and willing to obtain a Ph.D. within two or three years, as well as have a high capacity for further academic achievement.

The committees will evaluate breadth of military experience, depth achieved in military specialties, and evidence of leadership. Female and minority officers are encouraged to apply. USMA is an equal opportunity employer.

Officers interested in applying for this position may obtain more information by contacting CPT Jim Perry, Selection Committees Secretary, or LTC John Robertson, Office of the Dean, United States Military Academy, West Point, 10996-5000 by 01 October 1989.

72nd engineers tackle common task test

By Joseph G. Fridley
72nd Engineer Company (Combat)

An entire year of training paid off Sept. 6 through 8 for the soldiers of the 72nd Engineer Company (Combat) when they had the chance to demonstrate their skills in the unit's annual common task test.

"We've been training for CTT both in the field and in garrison," said Staff Sgt. Raymond Weis, unit training noncommissioned officer, who also served as site order NCO for the testing, held at the Wallace Training Area on Kelley Hill. "The company commander designated tasks from the fiscal '89 task list to be trained each week, and this 'building block' program kept the soldiers' knowledge of basic soldiering at a high level of readiness."

According to Weis, the company's goal was to get an accurate rating of each soldier's performance on each of the 18 tasks tested. To ensure correct and consistent test procedures, Sgt. Maj. Michale Bowden, the 72nd's recently promoted first sergeant, evaluated each of the testers before they opened their stations to the soldiers.

"This was one of the most professionally run CTT sites I've evaluated," said Sgt. 1st Class Larry Myers, an evaluator from the training evaluation center in Brown Hall on main post.

"The site was well organized, and the testers knew what they were doing," agreed 197th Infantry Brigade Command Sgt. Maj. Jimmie Bowles, who also visited the training area during the first day of testing. "The soldiers were well motivated and knew the standard for each station."

During the Army's Year of the NCO, the soldiers' performance on CTT is a good testimony to the success of their NCOs as trainers. "If you continuously reinforce common skills, CTT is just a measure of how well your soldiers know their job," said Sgt. Jeffery Boren, of the 3rd Platoon.

"To help them prepare for this test, I tested them several times throughout the year and set goals that are above the expected standards," Boren added. "I always strive to set a positive example of professional leadership and professional soldier values."

> "If you continuously reinforce common skills, CTT is just a measure of how well your soldiers know their job."
> — Sgt. Jeffery Boren

"If you train your soldiers properly, they can handle any task they are given," Sgt. Chester Graham, also of 3rd Platoon, pointed out.

The soldiers rated the stations of camouflage, putting on their NBC gear, and identification of friendly and threat aircraft and vehicles as their least favorite tasks. "Because of the large number of vehicles and aircraft, you really have to know them to get a GO," said Spec. Jon Nagy, of the Supply Section.

How did the soldiers get ready to pass their CTT? "Train, train, train," said Cpl. Kevin Williams, also of the Supply Section. "I studied on my own, and I got lots of hands-on testing," said Spec. James Conaway, of the Assault and Barrier Platoon.

But those soldiers who didn't max their CTT should not consider themselves failures, according to Weis. "Finding out where weaknesses are in our training program is what the test is all about," he said. "That way you can schedule meaningful training that will enable soldiers to master the basic skills needed to survive on the battlefield."

DESERT VANGUARD

197th infantrymen maneuver in the desert

By D. L. Bridges
197th Infantry Brigade

Exercise Desert Vanguard, which ran Aug. 21 through Sept. 3, climaxed with a three-day task force operation as the 2nd Battalion, 18th Infantry, with attachments from 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor; 4th Battalion, 41st Field Artillery; 72nd Engineer Company; and the 197th Support Battalion maneuvered over a 50- by 20-kilometer training area at Fort Bliss, Texas.

Desert Vanguard provided the task force its first opportunity since March to practice task force level U.S. Army doctrine. A sequential training plan starting with officer professional development classes was executed. Lt. Col. Richard Stouder, 2nd Bn., 18th Inf., commander, and his staff covered air-land battle doctrine, delay, hasty and deliberate defense and movement-to-contact prior to units moving to the field.

The desert at Fort Bliss is unique because it consists of an endless number of small sand dunes covered by thick thorn bushes with no direct route through the obstacles. The terrain became a maze when maneuvering cross country. Additionally, the summer heat, spiders, lizards, rattlesnakes and aggressive ants provided the Desert Vanguard task force a formidable challenge.

The task force was extremely proud of its safety record at Fort Bliss. "The training went well, and we didn't have any heat casualties," said Chief Warrant Officer Russell High, the battalion's physician assistant. "Our combat lifesavers got a real workout on the ranges, but they only had to treat some minor training injuries."

Many soldiers remarked about the harsh Fort Bliss terrain. "The terrain here is a lot rougher than that at the National Training Center because of all the sand dunes. I would have liked to have trained on desert survival techinques," said Pvt. 1 William Menzies, of 72nd Engr. Co.

"You never knew where you were because it all looked the same, and it would really be easy to get lost if you were separated from your unit," said Pfc. David Stephan. "It would have been nice to have additional time to train on desert land navigation here."

Soldiers from Headquarters and Headquarters Battery, 4th Bn., 41st Fld. Arty., took advantage of the deployment to train on a new piece of equipment they had received only three days prior to rail-load operations. The new equipment was a fire support team vehicle with an M113A3 track especially outfitted with a tube-launched, optically tracked, wire guided, antitank missile turret and laser designator that computes direction, distance and verticle angle of a target.

The FIST-V is able to place laser-guidable munitions on a target or pinpoint a unit's location by computer. It also has a night sight for easier computations during low visibility.

"Our basic purpose was to work with the new FIST-V because we've never had one before and this was a great opppurtunity to employ it and see how it operated," said 2nd Lt. Reggie McDonald, HHB, FIST leader. "Until now we had to dimount our laser equipment in order to use it, but this will make our contribution to the combined arms force much more effective."

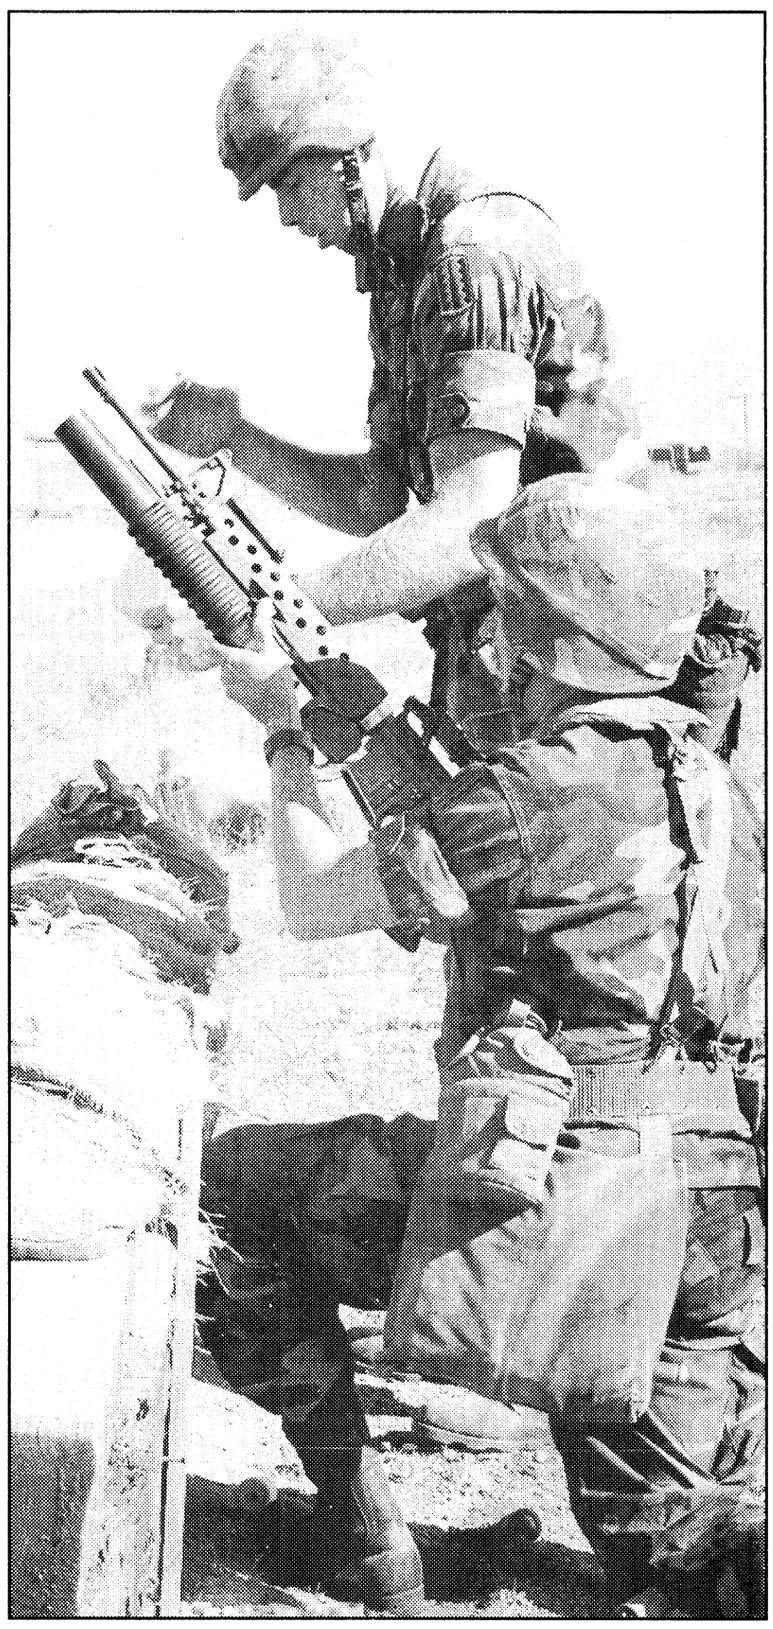
The task force also had the opportunity to improve its communications abilities during the operation.

Preceding the task force operation was a combined arms live-fire exercise that brought together infantry, armor and artillery elements in a company movement-to-contact scenario culminating in a massing of firepower on vehicle and personnel targets. Company commanders received an excellent opportunity to practice a company movement-to-contact incorporating stringent control measures, navigation, complex communications, fire-support coordination and casualty evacuation procedures.

Soldiers also spent time on Fort Bliss qualification ranges honing their skills with the M16A1 rifle; M203 40mm grenade launcher; 9mm pistol; M60 and M2 .50 caliber machine guns; and M249 squad automatic weapons.



Desert Vanguard marked the beginning of an intense training preparation for a National Training Center exercise scheduled for February 1990. "Desert Vanguard was an unqualified success due to the planning, hard work and cooperation of a number of personnel," Stouder said.

The soldiers of 2nd Bn., 18th Inf., celebrated their successful deployment with a picnic and sports competition Sept. 8 at Artillery Field on Kelley Hill.

Drop

Data kept by the unit shows that it took 6,600 equipment hours and 8,200 man hours were utilized to complete the mission.

The average number of bull dozers at work, at any one time was 10.

In addition to attempting to burn unsalvageable timber, the constructing unit developed a plan which integrated tank ditch obstacle training into the construction.

Deep tank ditches were constructed at intervals and the waste was buried and then back filled.

Unit officials said that the training helped ready the unit for the mission they have at the National Training Center at Fort Irwin, Calif. later this year.

Fort Benning Commander Maj. Gen. Michael F. Spigelmire was the first to try out the new drop zone during the opening ceremony.

He said the Engineers should be proud of the great job they did and take pride in the contribution they made to enhance the training of post soldiers who will use the area to ready themselves for combat.

will need only to show the card and military identification card.

Family members will need to show the privilege card and a family member National Guard or Reserve identification.

Jordan said that unit commanders play key roles in determining eligibility for the privilege cards.

"They have to verify the name on the card itself," he said.

"Also, if the member does not perform the required duty, the commander will not issue the card."

The privilege cards are not available to members of the Individual Ready Reserve — the so-called inactive reserve.

However, those individuals can use the commissary if they are called to active duty.

"The Congress authorized this privilege to Guard and Reserve members as an incentive," said Jordan.

"And we think the Armed Forces Commissary Privilege Card will make using that benefit as easy as possible for unit commanders, the commissaries and the members of the Guard and Reserve."

POW/MIA families say help out, get involved

Army News Service

"You can help" in the effort to discover what happened to more than 2,300 Americans still missing after the Vietnam War, says the National League of Families of American Prisoners and Missing in Southeast Asia.

The League of Families is a private organization comprised solely of POW/MIA families.

However, it also maintains a quasi-official status through its membership in the U.S. government's POW/MIA Interagency Working Group and its participation in policy-level negotiations on the issue.

According to League of Families literature, Americans can assist government and League efforts by:

- Writing letters to members of Congress, urging bipartisan support for a continued high priority on accounting for missing Americans.
- Writing to editors of local papers. The League says this can "draw responsible public attention to the missing men and counter misinformation with facts."
- Writing to the Vietnamese and the Lao governments, urging fulfillment of their commitments to cooperate fully with the United States in resolving the POW/MIA issue. The League provides the following addresses:

SRV Mission to the UN, LPDR Mission to the UN, 20 Waterside Plaza, J35 820 2nd Avenue, Suite 400, New York, N.Y. 10010

- Distributing facts as they become available on the POW/MIA issue.

The League operates a 24-hour-a-day update line for current information; the number is (202) 659-0133.

- Holding appropriate ceremonies on Veteran's Day, Memorial Day, Christmas and National POW/MIA Recognition Day.

U.S. 'feasting' on recent POW/MIA successes

Army News Service

The 26-year effort to resolve the fate of Americans missing after the Vietnam War has been a labor of feast and famine.

Contingent on the withdrawal of U.S. and allied forces in Vietnam, North Vietnam agreed in 1973's Paris peace accords to repatriate American POWs and the remains of any war dead it held, and to exchange with the United States information about some 2,500 unaccounted-for personnel.

The process was moving, albeit slowly.

Then, in 1978, famine struck.

The breakdown of normalization talks between the United States and the Socialist Republic of Vietnam allowed virtually no progress to be made through 1981.

With Ronald Reagan's ascent to the White House in 1981, the issue became "one of highest national priority," and policy-level negotiations with Hanoi resumed.

During its first five years, the Reagan administration enjoyed limited success in separating the humanitarian POW/MIA issue from political negotiations with the North Vietnamese.

But, with the 1987 appointment of retired Army general John Vessey as a special emissary on the issue and his subsequent mission to Hanoi, the pace of cooperation quickened.

Now, as the Bush administration passes its first half-year mark, the feast is apparently on.

Just during the past half-year U.S. and North Vietnamese officials met in Hanoi to discuss POW/MIA technical issues on March 22.

Three teams of U.S experts arrived April 12 in Hanoi to investigate incidents involving missing Americans.

On April 27, Hanoi repatriated to the United States 21 remains that may be those of Americans.

During May, technical talks were held in Hanoi, and a joint recovery operation in North Vietnam examined an Army helicopter crash site.

Meanwhile, U.S. and Vietnamese officials met to discuss U.S. humanitarian aid to North Vietnam.

On June 21, 28 more remains passed into U.S. hands.

Two teams of U.S. experts arrived in Hanoi July 31 for POW/MIA investigations.

That same day, Hanoi repatriated 15 more remains.

A U.S. delegation began a survey of aircraft crash sites in Laos Aug. 28.

Meanwhile, U.S. and Vietnamese officials kicked off a new round of discussions in Hanoi.

And, on Sept. 15, the nation will observe National POW/MIA Recognition Day.

Officials in and outside the U.S. government are calling the pace of progress "unprecedented."

In a July 28 address to the National League of Families of American Prisoners and Missing in Southeast Asia, Defense Secretary Dick Cheney said the growing cooperation between the United States and the Indochinese governments has prompted a welcome increase in DoD resources devoted to the issue.

The League's position is that "progress will increase during the Bush administration."

President George Bush put the POW/MIA issue in the spotlight during his inaugural address, and later told a gathering of League of Families members, "Understand this — I do not counsel a timid patience; I counsel a bold persistence."

Even the Soviet Union may help. Bush told the League of Families that Soviet General Secretary Mikhail Gorbachev asked for U.S. assistance in accounting for Soviet citizens missing in Afghanistan.

"Let me answer him today," Bush said. "We will do everything we can. And in return, we confidently expect the Soviets will do all they can to encourage more cooperation from their allies in Indochina.

The list of missing and unaccounted-for Americans is still 2,338 names long. But, when the Defense Department published last year's annual report on the POW/MIA issue, the list contained 2,398 names.

Still unresolved is the mystery of "live-sighting" reports from Indochina. More than 1,200 accounts of live Americans held captive or living in the Vietnam region have been pored over by defense intelligence officials; they say all but about 100 have been resolved.

The "live-sighting" issue regained the public eye earlier this year when Ganshin Yoshida, an elderly Japanese monk returned from Vietnam, was reported to have information about live Americans in Indochina.

However, Yoshida's depleted physical and mental condition have hampered U.S. efforts to glean usable information from his accounts.

"I share your disappointment that thus far this source has not proven as useful as we had hoped,"

Cheney told League of Families members. "We will continue to pursue this case and the information attributed to the monk by his daughter. Moreover, it is incumbent on the Vietnamese to give us details of Yoshida's captivity."

The League's official position on the possibility of live American prisoners in Indochina is that "Americans are still held based on the history of the issue, known discrepancy cases and the weight of intelligence information which supports our view."

The official U.S. position is more conservative, but not necessarily in conflict with the League's:

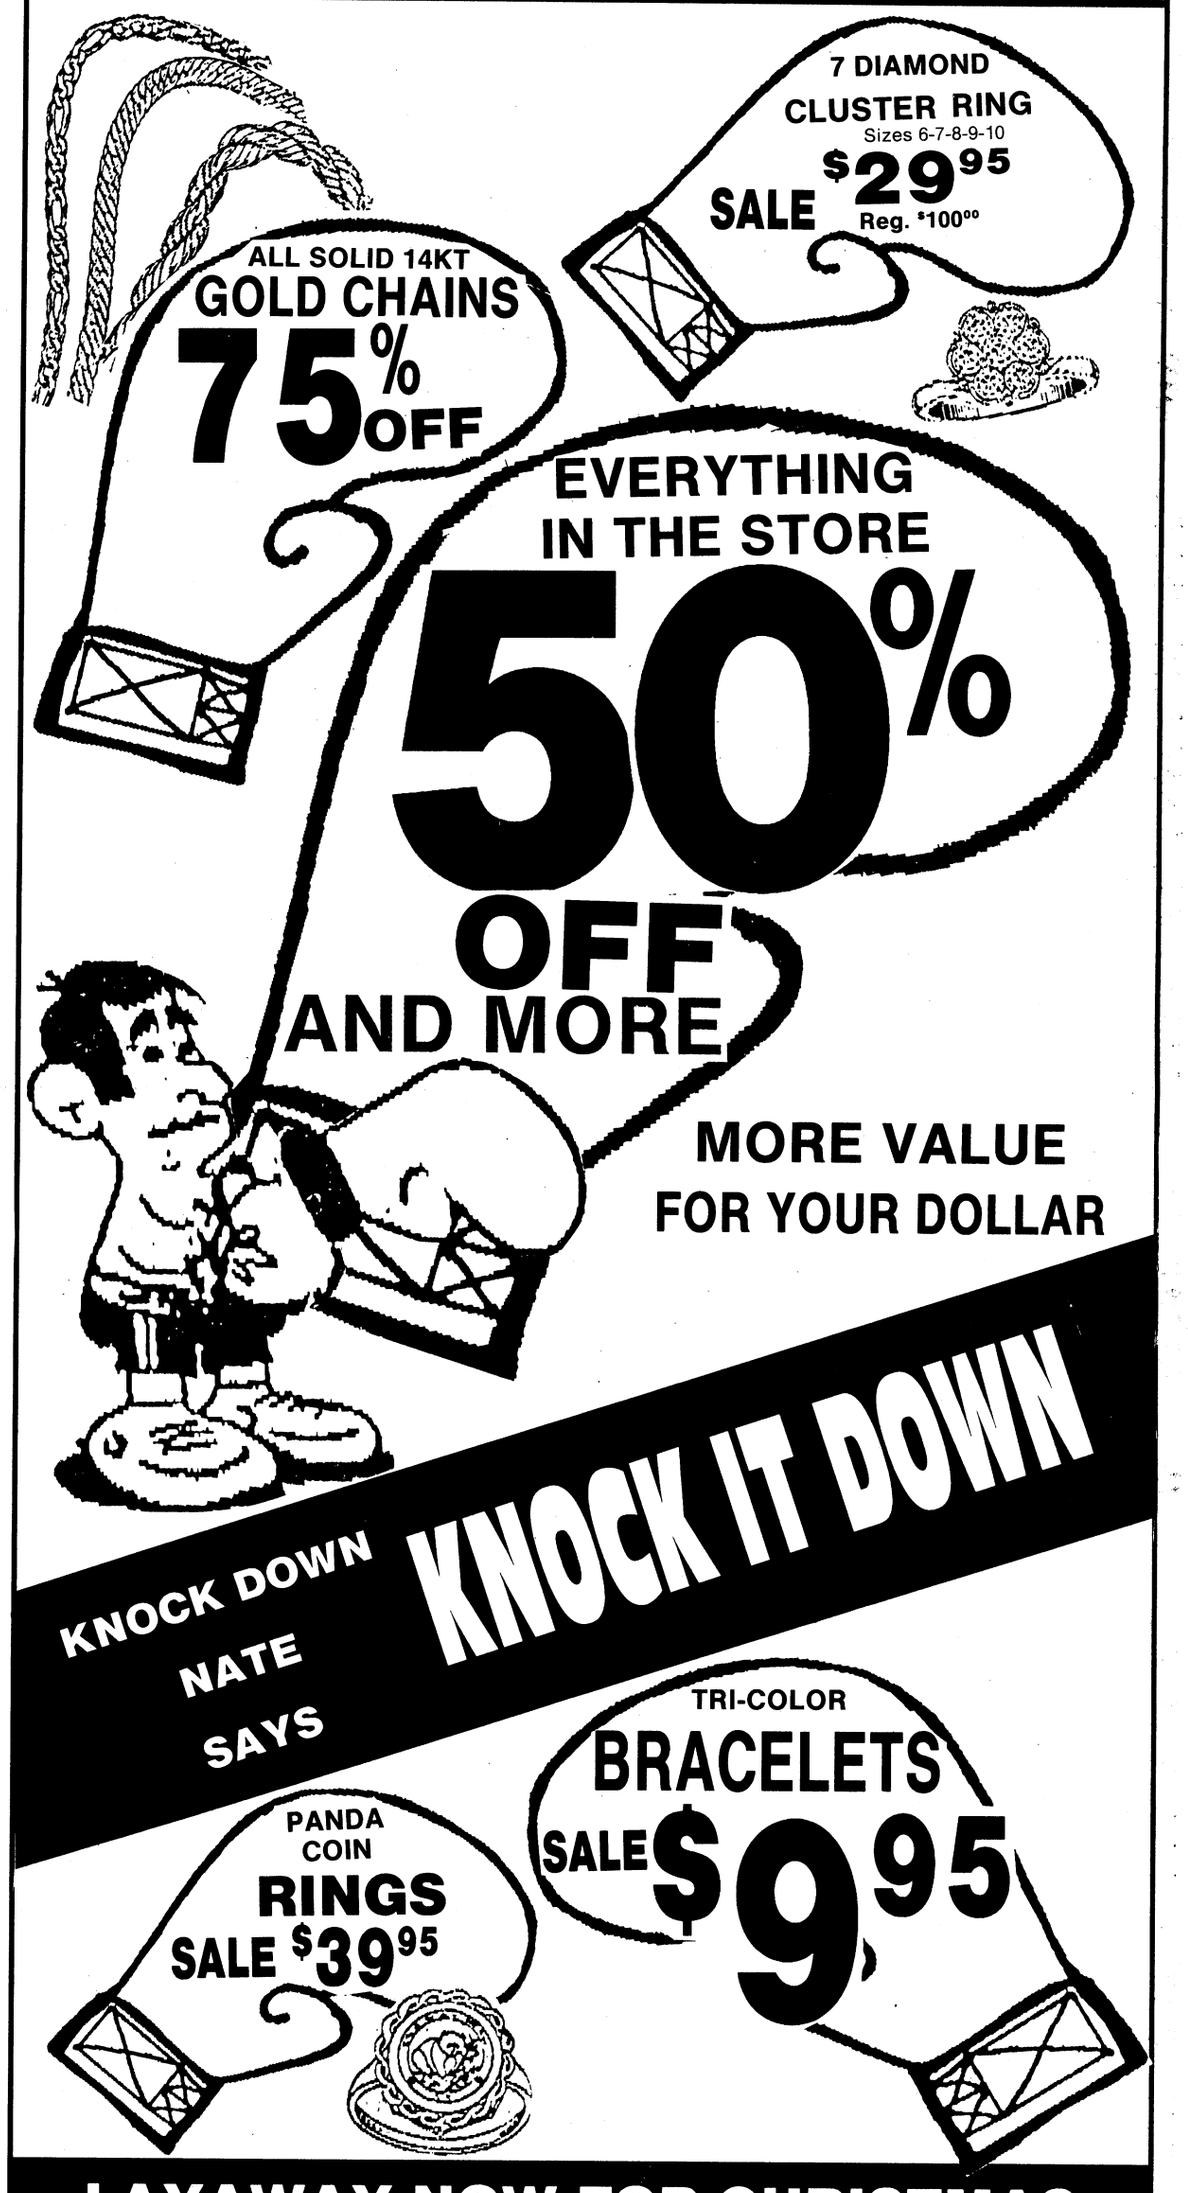
"Although we have thus far been unable to prove that Americans are still detained against their will, the information available to us precludes ruling out that possibility."

The demands of analyzing that information has increased the size of the Defense Intelligence Agency's POW/MIA work force from 12 personnel in 1981 to its present 38.

Also pursuing leads on missing Americans are members of the defense attache system, the Joint Casualty Resolution Center's Bangkok liaison office, and the State Department through its embassies.

The resources are in place. All the right U.S. officials have voiced their commitment.

The League of Families, whose interest in the issue is far more than objective, endorses current efforts.



And, though the food is slower to the table than the diners would like, the feast is on.

Former POWs entitled to special VA benefits

Department of Veterans Affairs

Former American POWs are eligible for special veterans benefits, including hospital medical care, priority outpatient treatment and disability compensation for injuries and disease presumed to be caused by internment. These benefits are in addition to regular benefits and services to which they, as veterans, also are entitled.

Congress in the Veterans' Benefits and Services Act of 1988 improved dental benefits for former POWs, reducing the number of days of internment required for comprehensive dental treatment from 180 to 90 days. Legislation also increased the number of diseases presumed the result of internment.

More than half of the Americans held prisoner in the last four wars are now living. Some 142,227 Americans, including 81 women serving in the Philippines and on Guam during World War II, were interned.

Of that total, an estimated 75,812 were living Jan. 1, 1989, according to Charles A. Stenger of the American Ex-Prisoners of War Association. This includes 188 from World War I, 71,670 from World War II, 3,394 from the Korean Conflict and 610 from Vietnam.

Congress defines a former prisoner of war as a person who, while serving in active military, naval or air service, was forcibly detained or interned in line of duty by an enemy government or a hostile force, during a period of war or in situations comparable to war.

Compensation

Studies have shown that the physical deprivation and psychological stress endured as a captive have life-long effects on subsequent health, social and vocational adjustment. These studies also indicate vulnerability to psychological stress.

A former prisoner of war may be eligible for disability compensation if there are symptoms of any of the following disabilities: avitaminosis, beriberi, chronic dysentery, helminthiasis, malnutrition, miscellaneous nutritional deficiencies, residuals of frostbite, post-traumatic osteoarthritis, psychosis, any of the anxiety states, a depressive neurosis, peripheral neuropathy, irritable bowel syndrome or ulcer.

For POWs detained or interned for 30 days or more, it will be presumed that the disability was incurred in or aggravated during military service, unless there is evidence of some other cause. To be eligible for service-connected disability compensation, the time period after military separation within which these disorders must become evident has been eliminated.

The laws on former POW benefits recognize that military medical records do not cover periods of incarceration, but do require adequate medical reasons for relating any current condition to military service or POW status.

Compensation is paid based on the degree of disability. Veterans rated 30 percent or more disabled qualify for dependency allowance. Dependents of those rated 100 percent disabled may qualify for educational assistance. Widows of veterans rated 100 percent disabled for 10 years prior to death or veterans who died as the result of service-connected disabilities are eligible for dependency and indemnity compensation based on the veteran's military pay grade.

Current monthly compensation according to degree of disability:

10 percent	$73
20 percent	$138
30 percent	$210
40 percent	$300
50 percent	$426
60 percent	$537
70 percent	$678
80 percent	$784
90 percent	$883
100 percent	$1,468

Medical Care

These special health-care provisions are provided regardless of length of captivity:

- Special POW examinations.
- Inpatient treatment for both service-connected and nonservice-connected conditions.
- Outpatient care.

In addition, former POWs are eligible for dental care for any condition if internment was for 90 days or more. Dental care is available only for service-connected conditions for POWs interned less than 90 days.

For further information, contact any VA office or call the VA toll-free POW hot line, 1-800-821-8139.

ASK THE JUDGE

By Michael H. Lane
Staff Judge Advocate's Office

Q. My husband recently passed away after a brief illness. He made a will leaving everything to me, and I am also the executrix of the will.

We had no debts, and the only property which we owned is a house, a number of bank accounts and life insurance. The bank accounts and the house are in both our names.

Our family lawyer has told me that it will be necessary for me to go to the Probate Court, because the house and bank accounts did not automatically pass to me on my husband's death. Is this right?

A. Most persons associated with the military for any period of time know that it is wise to have a will, since a person dying without a will leaves the distribution of his or her property to the state to determine, and the general state statutes do not always fit the needs of the testator.

Once a will is made, however, many people give little thought to arranging their affairs so that the surviving spouse will be able to get on with life after the loved one's departure.

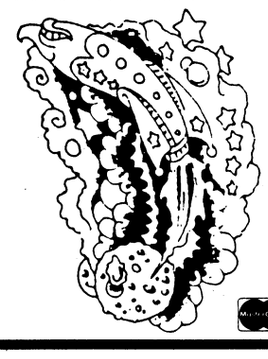
During our married lives, most couples have bank accounts and purchase a home and all the personal property which goes along with it.

Often, the couple will keep the accounts and the home in both their names because of the convenience, and because they think that the property will automatically pass into their spouse's name if something should happen to them. Publicity about the costs and inconvenience of probate proceedings has also influenced this trend.

Placing property in the names of both husband and wife is not enough in the case of real property or where there are substantial funds involved in bank accounts. The law requires that the parties in ownership hold the property jointly with the right of survivorship.

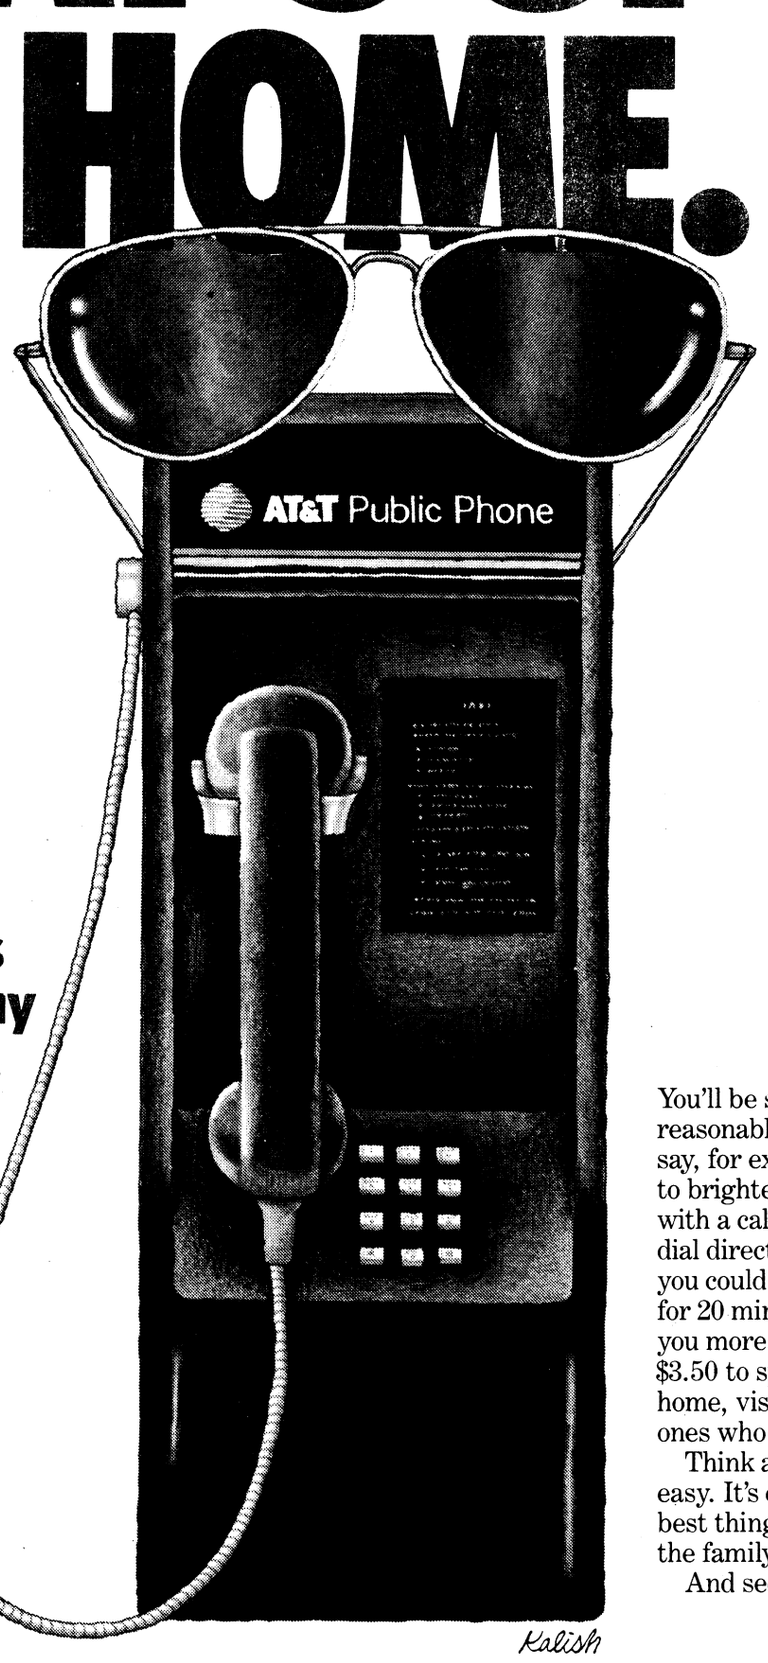
The result is that a probate procedure may be necessary so that the surviving spouse may become the sole owner and acquire legal possession of the property and bank accounts.

The problem is common enough that most states have simplified procedures for some small bank accounts. However, for larger estates and estates with real property, the probate process usually is required if the property is not held jointly with the right of survivorship.



The process of placing real estate or bank accounts in joint ownership with the right of survivorship is fairly simple. Banks and financial institutions are familiar with the procedure and will make the proper entries upon request.

The Legal Assistance Office can prepare deed documents in the proper form. When this is done, the real property and bank accounts will not be subject to probate, and it may be possible to dispense with administration.



The grieving spouse will not then be faced with carrying out legal requirements at a time when he or she is ill equipped emotionally to take care of these matters. Take time to check your wills, deeds and bank accounts. If you have any questions, call the Legal Assistance Office at 545-3282.

AT&T Public Phones make it easy to stay close. Being on base may put you far away from home, but take comfort. With the AT&T Public Phones here on base, staying in touch is easy... just dial "0" plus the area code and phone number, wait for the tone and
- if using your AT&T Card—enter your AT&T Card number;
- if calling collect or third party—an AT&T Operator will come on line to help you;

...and in moments, you'll be connected to the voices you're longing to hear. And you'll sound as close as you feel.

You'll be surprised, too, at how reasonable the pricing is. Let's say, for example, that you want to brighten a Saturday afternoon with a call to the family. If you dial direct using your AT&T Card you could call coast to coast, talk for 20 minutes, and it won't cost you more than $3.50. That's only $3.50 to spend 20 minutes back home, visiting the special someones who mean so much to you.

Think about it. It's quick and easy. It's economical. It's the next best thing to being there. So call the family and your old pals.

ASTD Officer retires after 15 caring years

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

Every soldier has experienced going somewhere for the first time. But, imagine being a soldier from a foreign country to attend an American military school, he is not only experiencing a new place but a new culture as well.

For the past 15 years there has been a special person at the Allied Student Training Division to help the soldier's transition a little easier.

Charlotte Osterburg the program officer for ASTD is that person. She's now retiring from that position and taking a well deserved break.

Why is it well deserved?

Well the start of Osterburg's life in the U.S. is much the same as the allies she took care of for so many years.

In 1957, Osterburg, recently widowed, and her two children, came from Cella, West Germany to America for the first time.

She settled in Florida but came to Columbus to visit a friend.

"I also came to Georgia for another reason," she confided, "I read 'Gone with the Wind' and after that I had always wanted to see Georgia for myself."

Osterburg said she had planned to stay in Florida but when she came to Columbus she never left."

"I found the people here were so friendly and I started going to a business college, so I stayed," she said.

Her association with Fort Benning began in 1966 but the real story began in 1974.

"The position I am retiring became available at that time," she said, "and, myself and 78 other people applied for the job and I got it."

Osterburg believes one of the reasons why she was hired is because she is bilingual. She speaks French, German, some Spanish and of course English. Since she's been on the job she's learned to at least say "Good Morning," in several different languages.

"I've discovered that the soldier's are very flattered when you try to speak their language," she said, "My favorite, is the way the Japanese say good morning which is ohio."

Charlotte Osterburg

Students not only come here from Japan but from 109 other countries. Osterburg estimates that she has dealt with more than 8,000.

They come from such places as Turkey, Africa, Saudia Arabia — essentially anywhere in the free world. Sometimes they are even royalty.

"I never thought I would ever meet royalty," she said, "But, I've met a couple of princes since I started."

She quickly added that although they are royalty, she treats them the same as the rest of the students.

She said she treats them all as if they were her own children.

"She calls them her babies," said Lenora Smith, a prominent citizen from Phenix City, Ala., who has been involved with the sponsorship program which is a part of Osterburg's job.

Smith said Osterburg really takes care of the soldiers.

"I think it's because she understands them and their background," she said, "which I think is important because what Charlotte is doing is foreign policy at a grass roots level."

Foreign policy or not, she does her best to make sure they feel at home here.

Part of her job is to take her students on tours to Washington D.C., Orlando, Fla., Atlanta and the Kennedy Space Center. She also arranges parties so the allies can meet local citizens. That is how Smith got involved in the program.

"Charlotte made me aware of how important it is to have good relations with these students," Smith said, "I don't know how she does it, but she's great at it."

Smith stated that each of those students are the same to Osterburg and no one is more special than another.

"She is very even handed," she said, "She is concerned about each and every one of them."

Osterburg said she can't afford to treat any of the student's differently.

"They are all in the same situation," she said, "so it wouldn't be fair."

However, she does fondly recall one thing that has happened to her during her tenure at ASTD.

"A student that was here taking a short course went home and had a daughter not to long after he left here," she said, "He's now back at the Infantry Officer's Advanced Course and he told me about his daughter. He named her Charlotte."

"I think thats the ultimate compliment," she said.

Osterburg was recently commended by the Columbus Chamber of Commerce which she thinks is also a big compliment.

She said she's going to miss all that, but realizes people have to go on.

"There are a lot of things that I've said I've wanted to do, and now I'm going to do them," she said, "I'm enrolling in classes at Columbus College and I'm learning to speak Arabic."

With all those activities she still plans to stay active with ASTD.

"I'm going to remain a sponsor," she said, "I don't think this will hit me until the next advanced course comes in. It's like Christmas during that time. Each of the new students is like a package to be opened and find out what they are all about."

Dedicated woman named Volunteer of the Quarter

By Shawn Bryson
Bayonet staff writer

Most people would agree that anyone who volunteers their time to a worthwhile cause should be commended.

In fact, that's why volunteers are recognized annually at Fort Benning's volunteer awards ceremony.

But the post takes its appreciation one step further for volunteers like Dixie Hawkinson.

Hawkinson was recently nominated and chosen to be the Fort Benning "Volunteer of the Quarter" for her efforts during the second quarter of fiscal year 1989.

Although Hawkinson can be found working on several volunteer projects around post, she was singled out as the recipient for the award primarily because of the time she spent ensuring the success of Benning's 1989 Army Family Action Plan Symposium, which occured in May.

The symposium, which involved 100 delegates, was a two-day session allowing each of the delegates to voice their suggestions and concerns about life at Fort Benning. The delegates included enlisted and commissioned soldiers, single and married soldiers, family members, retirees, Department of the Army civilian employees and Benning youths.

Hawkinson admitted that she did put alot of time into the project, 325 hours to be exact. But, she said the contributions of the other volunteers involved were also very significant.

HISPANIC HERITAGE month to commence Saturday

By Louis J. Powell
Equal Opportunity Office

Editor's note: For information about local activities during Hispanic Heritage Month, see the calendar on page B-6.

This year's National Hispanic Heritage Month will include numerous activities in and around the Fort Benning and Columbus communities.

This year's theme "500 Years of Hispanic Heritage. . .The Continuing Adventure", focuses on significant contributions Hispanic Americans have made to U.S. history.

Today, Hispanic Americans make up 4 percent of the active duty armed services. In 1986, Hispanics constituted 6.4 percent of the total U.S. population and, in 1987, that total had grown to 7.9 percent or 18,750,000 Hispanic Americans.

Thirty-seven Hispanic Americans received the Medal of Honor — American's highest military decoration for valor.

Spanish settlers assisted colonists against the British during the American Revolution. Bernardo de Galvez, governor of Louisiana, with consent of the Spanish court, sent soldiers to fight alongside Americans at Yorktown.

HHC, 29th Inf. takes another golf title

Shawn Bryson

Ron Greene lines up a putt.

By Shawn Bryson
Bayonet staff writer

The golfers from Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 29th Infantry Regiment walked away with their second championship trophy of the year after winning first place in the Third Season Battalion Level Golf Championship, Sept. 6 through 8 at the Follow Me Golf Course.

Ben Davis, Jack Eley, Warren Frier, Ron Greene, James Merriken and Frank Steele, shot a two-day combined total of 645, breezing by the golfers from 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, with a second place total of 657.

The team had already won the second season championship ealier in the summer.

HHC's Ron Greene went on to win the individual competition in the championship flight after a sudden death playoff on hole #10 against Michael Hale, 1st Battalion, 29th Inf. Regt. Both were tied at 150 for the two days until the playoff.

The 29th's Jack Eley took first place in the first flight with a two-day score of 169, just edging Troy Dickerson with 170.

The second flight went to David Bernier who finished with 181, barely ahead of Derrick Bradley's second place score of 182.

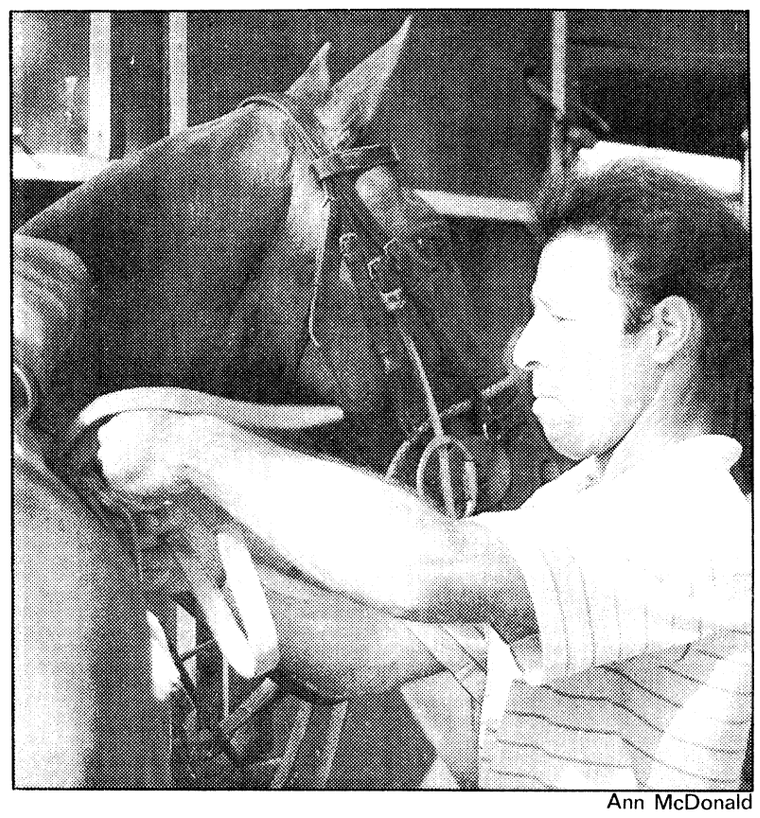
B. Nixon took the third flight with 193 over Warren Fountain's 199.

Florida polo club gallops past Columbus here, 5-3

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

The Ponta Vedre, Fla. Polo Club edged out the Columbus Polo Club, 5-3, in Sunday's Polo match on Fort Benning's French Field.

More than one hundred spectators were on hand to watch the men and their steeds battle it out in the hot afternoon sun.



Vedre's Gene Fortugno scored all five points for his team while Columbus's goals were divided up between Pipo Panelo, with two points and Mason Lampton, one.

It's been a number of years since Polo has been alive on Fort Benning and the Columbus Club expressed an interest in keeping the matches on post.

Historical data shows that Polo has been played in the military since the early 1880's.

Gen. George S. Patton once said, "There are constant and real physical hazards in polo and, talk as we will of the necessity for cool judgment in combat, it is not the less a fact that no man can stay cool in battle unless he is habituated to the exhilarating sense of physical peril. No sport, save possibly steeplechasing and football, is so good a school in the respect as polo."

Data also shows that Fort Benning played "Infantry Polo" and the U.S. Army played regular matches against the British Army.

Ann McDonald

Lara Santos saddles up a mount during Sunday's Polo match.

Polo is played on horseback and considered a premiere spectator sport. The players on thoroughbred horses bump and jostle each other as they race at top speed down the field, striking a small ball with the side of a mallet head.

The game is played on a 10-acre grass field, 300 yards by 160 yards. Goal posts are set eight yards apart and the goal of the game is to move the ball down-field and through the goal for a score.

Runners selected for Army 10-miler

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

The Fort Benning male and female teams for the Army 10-miler have been decided, and they look good according to a team spokesman.

Staff Sgt. Lloyd McDonald, spokesman and male team captain, said the second run-offs, which were conducted Saturday, really filled in the gaps for both teams.

"The females gained a real strong runner in Molly Sinclair, and the men gained a lot of depth with the addition of Gregory Kammerer," he said.

McDonald believes that both teams have a chance at bringing home a trophy. With a month until race time, both teams have time to train and get stronger.

More than 3,000 runners from all over the Army participated in last year's race, which winds around some of the historic sites in the nation's capital.

Fort Benning teams for the Army 10-miler are:

Male — Lloyd McDonald, Jr., Gregory L. Kammerer, Mark Bermin, Jeffrey Huff, Douglas L. Davis and alternate Edwin G. Pryor.

Female — Molly Sinclair, Lise A. Cote, Ann M. McDonald, Kathy R. Wass, Susan E. Davis and alternate Beryl E. Robertson.

SPIRITUAL

Family Life Center provides support

By Debra Galle
USAIC Chaplain's Office

As Joey plays with the toy truck in a quiet corner of the room, he is unaware of all but the shiny wheels and bright orange cab.

The things that are important to him are taken care of as far as he is concerned.

He has his favorite cereal for breakfast and was wearing his cuddliest socks.

Now, while his mom and dad are visiting with a soldier named "Chaplain", he can easily lose himself in his own little world.

There are a lot of things little Joey doesn't understand. He sometimes wonders why mommy and daddy don't talk to each other much any more, but he figures they are just busy. He may never know why there isn't much food in the house or why the mailbox is full of credit bills and the checkbook is empty. His parents have many worries and problems that they do their best to hide from their 5 year-old-son.

Lots of people want to help Joey's parents. Army Community Service is there to provide financial counseling and emergency funds. His dad's unit helps when it can to provide guidance and counseling. Social Work Service is another option of referral.

Today, at the Family Life Center, his parents are seeking more than behavioral/psychological counseling or money advice.

His parents are at the FLC, a part of the Chaplains' section. Chaplain (Maj.) Rick Roggia is the new chief of the center.

When Joey's parent's talk to Chaplain Roggia, they are given more than cut and dry textbook application to solving today's problems. Although Family Life chaplains are trained extensively in behavioral and psychological fields, their objective is to treat the family as a whole entity, and provide a spiritual dimension to the counseling process.

"Basically, I believe in people's ability to change and improve their own situations," says Chaplain Roggia. "I am willing to work with them as much as they are willing to work on their problems."

Joey's parents are suffering from anxiety over many aspects of their life. This is a time for crisis intervention and ongoing counseling.

When things get better for Joey's family, there are enrichment and educational opportunities which are solidly based on theological foundations. Many people request religiously oriented counseling approaches; the FLC provides that assurance.

Workshops on stress management, effective parenting, communication skills, and marriage enrichment are available.

The FLC coordinates its efforts with other helping agencies on post, and meets regularly with the Social Work Services, ACS, the Army Community Health Nurse, and the Chief of Psychiatry.

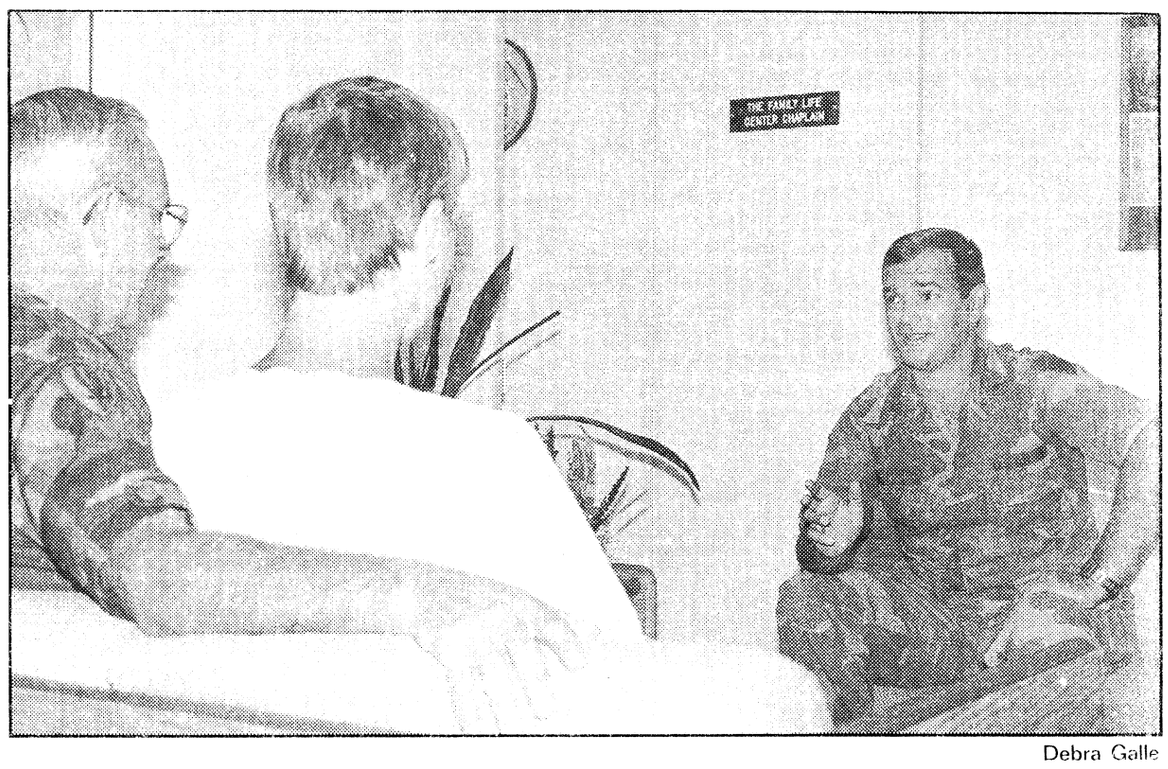
Counseling at the FLC stresses the need to build self-esteem within the home. Chaplain Roggia says, "How we talk to one another, how we support one another and how we build one another within the intimacy of the family is very important."

"Basically, I want people to realize that we are sensitive to the needs of the entire family and we believe in going at a pace the family can handle. If a family is willing to work on their problems and their future, we are willing to give them the time they need," Roggia said.

"Many people think their problems are too complex and involved to solve, but with effective professional counseling, often the problems can be resolved in relatively few sessions."

Things are going to work out for Joey because his parent's care enough to take steps to make their family's future brighter. Chaplain Roggia is there to offer his caring expertise to help ensure that Joey doesn't have to wonder why mommy and daddy aren't talking anymore.

"It is the time we take with one another that makes our lives worthwhile," according to a recent client who wished not to be named. "I've learned how important it is to communicate to my family, and the aspect of faith and hope has helped me learn to try and never give up."



Joey put the truck away and crawled on his mother's lap and watched the Chaplain as he talked with his parents. Joey was proud to show off his favorite socks and happy when his mom said he could have a little treat from the candy jar.

He turned to his mommy, a bit anxious now to go back to his own room and play with his own toys.

"Mommy," he tugs at her arm with familiar child-like impatience, "let's go home!"

His mother smiles and nods; his father passes a glance at the two of them and realizes how smart little Joey is to know how important 'home' really is.

Where is God?

He is alive with us in all of life's journeys

By Chap. James E. Rayburn
Martin Army Community Hospital

Psalm 42:3: My tears have been my food day and night, While they say to me, all day long, "Where is your God?"

After getting dressed one morning recently, I knelt beside my bed to ask the Lord's help through the day. However, as I prayed, it seemed as though my prayers were not being heard. It was as though I was just reciting another prayer.

I turned around, sat on the floor and reached over to a little box with scripture verses to pull out a special promise for the day. I was determined to take the scripture verse and claim this promise as I went about my daily activities. You can imagine my surprise when the verse said, "My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me."

I'm sure each of us have experienced times in our lives when we have felt alone, even though God was with us. At times these feelings can overwhelm us and we identify with the Psalmist as words from within ask, "Where is God?"

I first felt the impact of the question during my first rotation at the National Training Center. We had just completed our training and were in the process of loading our equipment for the journey home. Other units were arriving to begin a major exercise which would be kicked off by a parachute jump from units of the 82nd Airborne Divison. As a result of the jump, several soldiers were injured and three were fatalities.

Those of us not around the drop zone were dependent upon local news reports and information received from other soldiers. The news received was that the deaths numbered over one hundred and the number injured was over two hundred. The majority of the chaplains in our brigade left to assist in ministry at the hospital but I chose to stay back in case some of our soldiers needed ministry.

Perhaps because of the reported extent of the injuries and fatalities, there was a tremendous sense of grief, despair, and bewilderment throughout our whole area. As I was talking with a group of our soldiers one of them put his feelings into words as he pointed up and asked, "Chaplain, where was "He" (God) this morning?"

As we face such traumatic times, questions cannot help but surface. How can God allow this to happen to me? Where was God?

The principal theme of scripture is that God is with us. In the Garden of Eden, God was there. With Abraham, Moses, Joshua, and throughout the Old Testament God's promise was "I will be with you." Christ is called Emmanuel, which means God is with us. At the conclusion of Christ's earthly ministry, He promised the disciples: "I will be with you even until the end of the world." (Matthew 28:20)

God is the unseen peace spoken in the midst of the storm. God is the unseen hand providing us the very basics of life. God is the unseen mourner and comforter at every funeral. God is our hope for tomorrow and our strength for today. Where is God? God is with us, alive in us through the Holy Spirit, and moving with us through all of life's journey.

Symphony to benefit from TV-9's 'Sale of the Season'

Columbus Symphony Women's Association

Sunday, WTVM-TV, Channel 9, will present the second annual "Sale of the Season" TV auction broadcast live from 1 p.m.-6 p.m.

The successful 1988 Auction provided over $43,000 for the Columbus Symphony, with over 80,000 phone calls received as area viewers called into WTVM studios to place their bids.

Sponsored by the Columbus Symphony Women's Association and WTVM-TV to benefit the Columbus Symphony Orchestra, hundreds of items will be auctioned on live TV. Viewers can call in to bid on each item as they are displayed; the auction excitement will be part of the fun as callers bid on items with a value from $25 to thousands of dollars!

"Sale of the Season" emcees will be local radio personalities such as Allan Dupriest (WVRK-FM), Al Haines (WCGQ-FM), Jim Devitt (WSTH-FM), Marquette McRae (WGSY-FM), and television personalities Chuck Leonard and Nancy Brown of WTVM-TV.

All items available for bid have been donated by local companies and businesses and will be shown on the air, both on display in the studio or on video tape. Each item will be on display for several minutes, thus giving interested viewers time to call in to place their bid on the items of their choice, with the highest bid within the allotted time buys the item!

Viewers may bid by phone or in person at the live remote location at Ben Thomas Acura, 829 Fourth Ave., where many items for auction will be on display for public viewing.

It takes over $400,000 each year to maintain our active Symphony; less than 25 percent of this comes from concert ticket sales. A successful "Sale of the Season" will provide the funds needed to insure the Symphony another year of superior performances for people of all ages.

Hispanic

At the battle of the Alamo in 1836, approximately 182 Texans, including six Mexicans, died fighting for Texas independence.

The 1860 census reflected 27,466 Hispanic Americans living in the U.S. When the War Between the States began in 1861. This community — like families all over the country — found itself divided. Some 2,550 Hispanic Americans joined Confederate units; another 1,000 joined the Union forces. In all, more than 9,000 Hispanic Americans fought during this year.

Hispanic Americans also rode with Theodore Roosevelt's "Rough Riders" in the Spanish-American War. They were Pvt. John B. Alamia, Sgt. George W. Armijo, Pvt. Abel Duran and Cpt. Maximiliano Luna.

Hispanic Americans also served in the American Exepeditionary Force in World War I. Exact numbers aren't known, but many were decorated for their distinguished service.

Estimates for WWII indicate that anywhere from 250,000 to 500,000 Hispanic Americans served in the armed forces — from 2.5 to 5 percent of all persons who served.

The first Hispanic American Medal of Honor recipient of WWII was Pvt. Jose P. Martinez, honored for his role in the 1943 American invasion of the Aleutian Islands.

Nine Hispanic Americans received Congressional Medals of Honor for heroism during the Korean Conflict.

The Puerto Rican 65th Infantry Regiment was the only all-Hispanic division to serve during the Korean Conflict. Individual members of the unit received four Distinguished Service Crosses and 124 Silver Stars. The unit was credited with capturing 2,086 enemy soldiers and killing 5,905.

Col. Manuel J. Fernandez, an Air Force fighter pilot, ended the war with 14.5 confirmed "kills" of enemy planes in Korea.

Retired MSGT Roy Benavidez, who was one of several Vietnam era Medal of Honor recipients, hails from Texas. Benavidez' bravery, while in live-fire combat against the Viet Cong with special forces unit, spoke for itself.

Activities scheduled for Hispanic Month

USAIC Public Affairs Office

In recognition of the contributions made by Hispanic Americans, National Hispanic Heritage Month will be celebrated today through Oct. 15.

During the month, civilian and military members in the community will have the opportunity to gain a full awareness of the Hispanic culture through the foods of various Latin countries and Hispanic music.

The celebration gets under way Saturday with a "Fiesta" in the Promenade area near the Columbus Iron Works on Front Avenue.

Other tributes on post include Hispanic displays in Infantry Hall and Donovan Library. The National Infantry Museum will feature ethnic winners of the Medal of Honor, and Hispanic meals will be served in all post dining facilities throughout the month.

The following is a schedule of the Saturday's events plus other activities during the month at Fort Benning.

Promenade, Columbus Iron Works Saturday

- 8 to 10 a.m. — 1st Annual Run of the Americas sponsored by the Latin American Student Association
- 10 to 11 a.m. — Proclamation - Honorable James E. Jernigan, Columbus mayor
- 11 a.m. — Awards presentation for runners and Domino Tournament (sign up required)
- Noon to 12:45 p.m. — Folkloric dancers from Mexico, Colombia and Puerto Rico
- 12:45 to 1:15 p.m. — Ballet by Columbus School of Dance
- 1:15 to 2 p.m. — Tipical dancers from Puerto Rico, Mexico and Panama
- 2 to 3 p.m. — Paso Fino Horse Show
- 3 to 4 p.m. — Panamanian dancing group from Atlanta
- 4 to 7 p.m. Dancers to the music of a Latin ochestra

Volunteer

pre-seminar orientation. She created the forms used at the seminar, contacted commanders to get help in finding delegates and selected the Officers' Club as the site for the symposium.

When the symposium was over, Hawkinson computerized all of the information submitted by the delegates. She is also a member of the steering committee and is already developing a manual for next year's symposium.

Hawkinson also chose to represent Fort Benning in the Training and Doctrine Command's family action symposium, which occured later in May.

People at Fort Benning are touched in other ways by Hawkinson's volunteer spirit, too. She is currently a facilitator-in-training at post leadership seminars, the mayor of Bouton Heights/Davis Hill housing communities and the chairwoman of the mayor's council here.

According to Karen Crowley, installation volunteer coordinator, Hawkinson is "committed to doing what she believes in and actively seeks responsibilities to make Fort Benning a better place in which to live and work."

Even though the recent award has proved Hawkinson's worth as an outstanding voulunteer, she admitted that it is not always that glamorous. "The rewards of volunteering are sometimes just personal satisfaction," she said.

"Volunteering gives me a chance to make a difference," Hawkinson said. "I like helping to make life better here and putting something back into the community."

POST BRIEFS

LRS conference begins Tuesday

A Long Range Surveillance Conference, hosted by the Ranger Training Brigade, begins Tuesday and continues through Sept. 28.

The purpose of the LRS conference is to provide a forum in which members of the worldwide LRS community can discuss and develop positions on a wide range of issues in the areas of training, doctrine and combat development.

Surplus property to be auctioned

The Fort Benning Defense Reutilization and Marketing Office will conduct an auction Thursday, 9 a.m., in building 315 on 10th Mountain Division Road.

A three-day inspection period will begin Monday. Hours of viewing are 8 a.m. to 3 p.m. daily until 9 a.m. the day of the sale.

For more information, call 545-7214/3497.

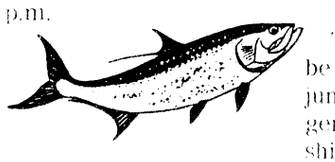
Native American Week

In recognition of Native Americans and their many contributions to our country, today through Sept. 28 is declared "Native American Week" at Fort Benning by the Commanding General Maj. Gen Michael F. Spigelmire.

This year's theme is "Native Americans — A Proud Heritage."

Spigelmire writes in his proclamation, "Native Americans possess a rich culture. Their experiences and accomplishments are deeply rooted in our American heritage. Their excellence in the arts, business, law, medicine and the Armed Forces has been instrumental in this country's development."

The post commander invites each individual at Fort Benning to learn something about Native Americans during this year's observance.



C&GSC enrollment continues

The 3294th USARF School has a few remaining openings for students to enroll in the Command and General Staff College officer's course. Final enrollment is expected to be completed Sunday between 10 a.m. and 3 p.m. at the U.S. Army Reserve Center, 3001 Macon Road, Columbus.

For more information, call Lt. Col. Lewis at 687-1140 or Lt. Col. McCanham at 324-2926.

AUSA Fish Fry Tuesday

The Association of the U.S. Army is gearing up for a Fish Fry at Bovinty Pavillion, Chattahoochee Valley Fairgrounds Tuesday at 6 p.m.

The Fish Fry will be conducted in conjunction with the general membership meeting.

The Fish Fry is catered by Pritchett's.

All tickets for the event are $8 and are available through unit AUSA representatives or at the AUSA Office at the 1st Union Bank, Main Post.

Native dances highlight celebration

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Young women prance around the stage to the rhythm of tambourines and castanets.

Their red, flowing skirts twirl around their legs, exposing tan, bare feet.

Dark complexions and black hair contrast with brightly-painted red lips as the dancers smile and flirt with male dance partners.

Each dance tells a story, and the stories combine to tell of the dancers' Colombian heritage.

Colombians were not the only people gathered at the Columbus Promenade and Amphitheater Saturday. A great variety of Hispanic people with ancestral roots in Puerto Rico, Mexico, Panama and other Hispanic countries attended Columbus' third annual "Hispanic Fiesta."

The fiesta was the kickoff to 1989's National Hispanic Heritage Month, which began Sept. 15.

More than 5,000 Hispanic Americans and local and Fort Benning residents turned out to enjoy the day-long list of activities.

The fiesta was sponsored by the Columbus Hispanic Association and featured Hispanic cultural dance performances, music, foods and fashion shows.

The food included everything from cheese nachos to burritos to pina coladas, each with a different twist, depending on the country from which the recipe originated.

The day started with the inaugural Run of the Americas, sponsored by the Latin American Student Association.

The awards presentation for the runners came after the proclamation by James E. Jernigan, mayor of Columbus.

Next was a domino tournament, followed by folkloric dancers from Mexico, Columbia and Puerto Rico.

Dancing continued throughout the rest of the fiesta and included a ballet by the Columbus School of Dance and a group of Panamanian dancers from Atlanta.

Welcome Center keys presented to Chattahoochee Valley veterans

By Shawn Bryson
Bayonet staff writer

The keys to what used to be the Columbus Welcome Center on Victory Drive were recently turned over to Chattahoochee Valley veterans who will use the long-vacant building as a service center.

The veterans received the keys Sept. 5 during a ceremony in front of the building.

According to Joe C. Smith, president of the Chattahoochee Valley Veteran's Council, Nov. 11 is the target date for the dedication of the building, which had been vacant since July of last year.

Smith said the council wanted the building primarily because of its location on what he called "Veteran's Drive."

"The American Legion, Disabled American Veterans and Veterans of Foreign Wars are all located near the building," Smith said, "and the majority of the veterans of Columbus live on the southside, which makes the site ideal."

Smith said the new center will not only serve as a meeting place for veterans, but also an information center.

"We think we can be of great service to Fort Benning," Smith said. "A lot of people come here from all over to attend graduations on post," he said. "We plan to put a big sign in front of the building because we want to let visitors know where they can come for information about Fort Benning and Columbus."

Smith said he's working with Dick Grube, director of the National Infantry Museum at Benning, to spruce the center up with veteran-related artifacts.

About $12,000 will be needed annually to pay the center's bills, according to Smith. He said several fund raisers are being planned to help finance the project.

Rangers train new breed of drug fighters

By Ann M. McDonald
Bayonet staff writer

A new breed of Drug Enforcement Agency agents have graduated from a special Fort Benning-based course designed to help them fight the war on drugs.

Agents are being trained by ranger instructors in an eight-week basic course designed for the DEA by the Ranger Training Brigade.

The basic course is one of three that will be conducted here annually.

A six-week leadership course and a one-week selection course round out the training.

Additionally, DEA agents who don't speak Spanish will be attending the Defense Language Institute in Monterey, Calif.

Volunteer agents from all over the country are undergoing this training in preparation for Operation Snocap, according to staff coordinator for the operation, Steve Casteel.

Casteel explained that Operation Snocap is a special operation to combat cocaine in source countries in Latin America. The other part of the mission will be to train policeman in those countries the skills they learned from the rangers.

"We selected the rangers to train our agents because we have a moral obligation to give our agents the best possible training and equipment," he said. "Once they get down there, they are virtually on their own."

The 870 skills they've learned from the rangers coupled with their sophisticated weaponry will help them survive the Latin American jungles.

Early end-of-month payday set for September

Army News Service

The end-of-month payday for September is going to come a few days early this year.

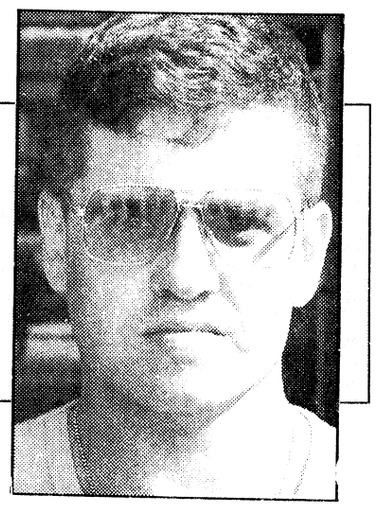
Secretary of Defense Dick Cheney has directed the service secretaries to move the Oct. 1 payday up to Sept. 29 "to avoid financial hardship for our soldiers, sailors and airmen."

In his memorandum to the service secretaries, Cheney said last year the payday was not advanced when the Oct. 1 payday fell on a Saturday.

"Even that small delay in payment was an inconvenience to many servicemembers and for some, a financial hardship," Cheney said.

"This year, the Oct. 1 payday will fall on Sunday. Unless the payday is advanced, many of your personnel will not receive their pay until Monday, Oct. 2."

The secretary of defense has the authority, as allowed by Title 37 of the U.S. Code, to modify military pay schedules.



(From an Air Force News Service story)

OPINION

VARIOUS VOICES: If you could add or subtract something from the Constitution, what would it be?

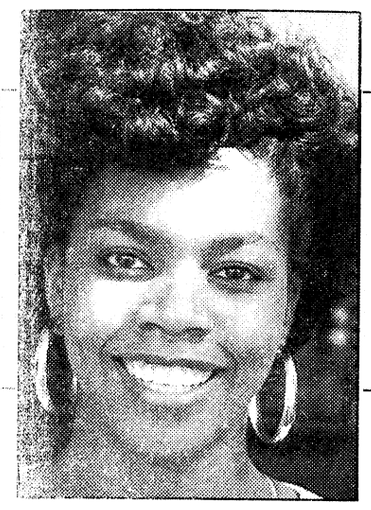
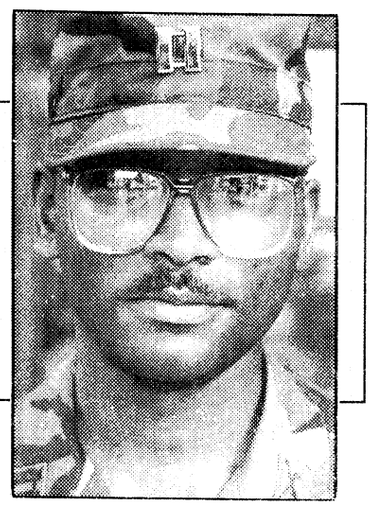
1st Lt. Douglas Lombardi, 75th Rgr. Regt. — "I'd add an amendment about defacing the flag and other national monuments."



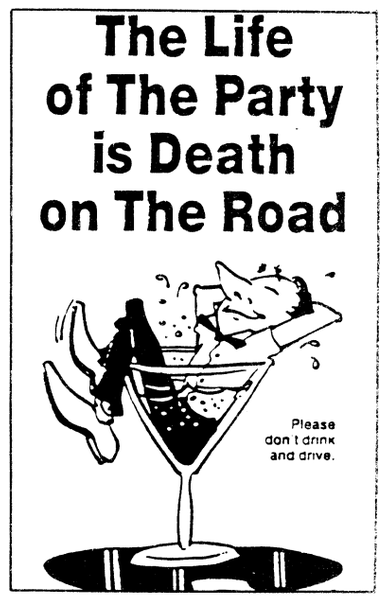
Sgt. Edward Virgin, 72 Eng. Co., 197th Inf. Bde. — "I wouldn't change anything. I think it's fine just the way it is."



Retired J.C. "Airborne" Herron — "I would add an amendment saying it's unconstitutional to burn the flag. I gave blood for the stars and stripes twice."

Maj. Chuck Walls, Co. B, 1st Bn., 11th Inf. Regt. — "I wouldn't change anything. It's perfect just as it is. It's a good strong document that has served us for 200 years. We can make adjustments, but it's good and strong."

Spec. Valerie Smith, DENTAC — "I think they should take away some of the freedom of religion. I'm not being an atheist but some of the things being practiced now are really wrong."



Capt. Lucien Richardson, 387th USAR School, Coral Gables, Fla. — "I'd add an amendment making flag burning unconstitutional."

Not drinking, not driving but thinking about life

You go to a party and have a good time you drink a little beer and maybe some wine
You go back for more 'cause you don't know when to say no to a couple belts of gin
You ask for more hits, but someone says "no" they could have said "yes" and just let you go
What happens next is up to you you are the one who decides what to do
With your vision impaired and feeling at ease
you float to your car and search for your keys
You crank up the engine but don't realize
if you drink and drive it's a DUI
Never to mention the chances you take when you drive anyway in your half drunken state
What do you care that you're ticking away
a bomb with a purpose of killing a stray
Those innocent people by chance they were there you swerve in their lane, they'll die, don't you care
Sorrow, remorse just part of the cost they'll never replace a loved one lost
The memories, they haunt you, year after year
You know you're the reason someone's not here
If you drink, don't drive, do what's right let someone drive you or just spend the night

Collegiate football season
Haphazard small talk can set sparks flying

By Clyde Snively
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Rumor has it that football season's started.

Last year was my first exposure to SEC football. I learned very quickly that:

● One does not belittle SEC football.

Comments like, "Of course the top teams have good records year in and year out, they fatten up on the weak sisters in the conference and avoid playing the other contenders," or, "yep, got the best team money can buy," go over like lead balloons and can land an outsider in deep kimchee.

● One must be very careful about what he says regarding the Dawgs, War Eagles and Crimson Tide. If you aren't sure of a person's allegiance, everyone in this neck of the woods either attended one of those three schools or have kin folk who did, then keep your mouth shut.

I innocently repeated an Auburn joke I'd heard on radio. Well Vern, who drives the local Auburn game bus (friends call it a bawdy house on wheels), just about came unglued and wanted to know what I was doing in the south, if not subverting it.

So I reworded the joke, substituting Georgia for Auburn. That made Vern happy, but, unfortunately, Sandy overheard it and now refuses to talk to me.

Then there's the Roll Tide folks. There's absolutely nothing you can say to appease them. Say something nice about their coach, and they go ape. Say something derogatory about him, and they smack you. There's just no telling.

I didn't mention Georgia Tech because I read somewhere, in an Atlanta paper I think, that they don't have a football team anymore. According to the paper some Tech alumnus was having a reunion after 20 years, and thought it would be nice to take the family to a game.

Realizing he was calling late, the game was the next day, he didn't hold out much hope of getting any tickets, let alone 20, but he called anyway.

"Why sure," he was told. "We'll get you 20 seats on the 50-yard line."

The alum was astounded by his good luck. Thanking the man, he then asked what time the game started. "What time can you be there," was the answer.

So that's what I learned my first year here.

This year I was thinking about trying to get interested in SEC football. So I looked up the schedule to see who Auburn was playing the first game.

It was Pacific. Now I come from the West Coast, and I know about Pacific. A good high school team could probably beat Pacific. Pacific won two games last year. Lost nine. They have no business leaving Stockton, let alone crossing the Rockies. Sure, back in the 50s they beat UCLA once, but that was two name changes ago and a lot of water's passed under their surf boards since then. Now all they beat are teams from other surfing schools like Long Beach State.

Okay, then what about Georgia's first opponent. Baylor. Now there's a school with a semi-respectable record of 6-5, respectable that is until you note those wins came against teams like Kansas and Rice. Dog meat right?

Apparently the new coach of the Dawgs doesn't think so since he's closed practice — doesn't want to distract his beef.

As you know by now, his fears were unfounded. Baylor dutifully rolled over and played dead. But the question remains, is there an offense up there in Athens?

Speaking of fears, what about the Crimson Tide. They took on Memphis State, another 6-5 team from last season with wins over other teams with "state" in the name — Arkansas State and Mississippi State (whenever a team is called state, bet against it) and good old cannon fodder Vanderbilt.

So what did the pink pachyderms do? They won quite handily. Is Bill Curry's job safe? Well at least until tomorrow when the boys from Tuscaloosa take on Kentucky.
