Desert FTXs prepare soldiers for real thing

By Dan Hays
Army Central Public Affairs Office

SAUDI ARABIA — "Our main job in defense is to move to an overwatch position and support the task force," said Capt. Anthony Berron, commander of Company E, 2nd Battalion, 18th Infantry, 197th Infantry Brigade.

Co. E is armed with tube launched, optically guided weapons, or TOWs.

"My job is to make sure my guys can move to a position quickly and set up the TOW guns," said Berron.

Recently, Berron led his "Echo Cobras" from their base camp into the desert on an exercise to practice movement and occupation of overwatch positions.

After moving from their company area, the unit traveled about 10 miles across the desert, and set up in a large circle covering several square miles, with the commander's track in the center.

Within a few minutes, Berron as issued a fragment order to of the exercise going. He sent wo or three tracks to several possible battlefield positions.

One group was led by Staff Sgt. Walter Star, a section leader in the 1st Platoon. Star took the two Improved TOW Vehicles from his section and one from another section to a possible battlefield site several miles from the company's position.

Star and the two other track commanders, Sgt. James Wenk and Cpl. Mario Gabriel, gathered to decide how they would deploy the task force's assets.

The discussion lasted several minutes. Finally, Star took out his notebook and drew a sketch of the area, to show where he would suggest the assets be employed.

Soon, Star's platoon leader came up in his track. Star gave him the sketch of his plan and answered any questions.

The platoon leader left to tell the company commander the plan for the defense of the battlefield.

When Berron got the information from his platoon leaders, they gathered at the commanding officer's track to decide which sites were the easiest to defend, how far the fields of fire were and which were good positions.

While Star and his section had been scouting one battlefield position, two other areas had been reconnoitered by other sections. Berron gave a movement order and two platoons went off to defend one of the areas while the other two platoons raced to defend the other position.

The last part of the exercise was a medical evacuation.

Spec. William Lane had been "injured" during the defense of one of the areas. The medics were notified.

Lane's "injury" turned out to be a minor shoulder problem. Sgt. Andre Green put a sling on his right arm. Lane was allowed to stay.

The desert has been a huge change from the forests of Fort Benning. It has caused changes in the battalion living conditions and training. "This is so radically different than anything we do. We've really had to overcome and adapt to this environment," Berron said.

"I've made it my mission since this thing started to prepare my guys mentally and technically for anything that's going to happen. I want as few surprises as possible."

Soldiers warned about insurance

Benning officials are warning soldiers about a "battle death clause" or "war clause" in life insurance policies for active duty and reserve soldiers.

Presently, Department of Defense directives allow companies to solicit on military installations with this clause in their policies if allowed by state law.

Officials said soldiers should read their life insurance policies before they sign them to ensure the battle death or war clause is not included in the policy. Soldiers who already have policies should review them.

Policies with a war clause could cause financial burden on the beneficiary, officials said.

Congress OKs severance pay for enlisted service members

By Linda Lee
American Forces Information Service

Severance pay for involuntarily separated enlisted members became reality recently when Congress approved it as part of the fiscal 1991 Defense Authorization Act.

Until now, only involuntarily separated active duty officers and Reserve members were eligible for severance pay.

Now, enlisted soldiers with at least six but less than 20 years' service may receive 10 percent of their base pay multiplied by the number of years served at the time of their separation.

To be eligible, a soldier must be involuntarily discharged or denied re-enlistment.

Depending on the circumstances of the soldier's separation, service secretaries may determine some categories of discharges or conditions that don't warrant severance pay, according to Lisa Davis. She's the director of transition and support services in the Office of the Assistant Secretary of Defense for Force Management and Personnel.

The package also lifted the $30,000 cap on severance pay for officers; removed the three-year ready reserve obligation, and grandfathered officers who had five years of service on Nov. 5.

Separation pay is just one part of the transition package. Others include extended medical coverage and the authority to start several pilot job placement programs.

The Civilian Health and Medical Program of the Uniformed Service, or CHAMPUS, and in-house care will be available for up to 120 days after discharge for soldiers with more than six years of service, and 60 days for soldiers with less than six years. This coverage includes family members, Davis said.

Under the Act, the Department of Defense will also:

- Certify or verify job skills and experience acquired on active duty
- Establish permanent employment assistance centers
- Provide computerized assistance in locating civilian employment and training opportunities
- Permit commissary and exchange use for two years after discharge
- Provide on-post housing, if available, for up to 180 days at a "reasonable rental rate"
- Allow 30 days excess leave or 10 days permissive temporary duty, or TDY
- Provide priority placement in the National Guard or in selective Reserve units
- Permit household goods storage for up to a year
- Allow family members who have completed their junior year of high school to spend their senior year in a DoD high school

The one benefit DoD wanted in the package but didn't get is expanded unemployment compensation. DoD wanted the benefit expanded to 26 weeks for those involuntarily separated.

COMMENTARY

Super Bowl, NCAA, other football notes

By Clyde Snively
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Just when spouses think it's safe to go back into the television room after 45 hours of non-stop college bowl games, the Boring Bowl, er, Super Bowl hype builds to a crescendo.

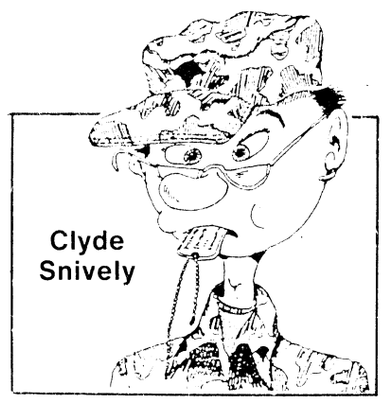
Since the game itself is still two weeks out, let me share a few points I've learned about spouses and football. This information comes from scientific research of being married to someone who has managed to remain totally oblivious to the sport and all its trappings.

One assumption I'd made after several years of marriage was that Emma had finally figured out the difference between college and pro games. But I was mistaken. What she'd figured out was the colleges play on Saturdays and the pros on Sundays.

Unfortunately, no one told her that once the college season ends, the pros also play on Saturdays. So she's back to asking, "Is this college or pro?"

A couple of weeks ago I was getting ready to go watch the Rams play the Falcons. Emma's question was, "Is that fair?" As it turned out, it was most fair for the Falcons, but her point was, how come big cities and little cities are in the same league.

I guess she assimilated the fact that colleges had different divisions based on the size of the school, so heck, why shouldn't the pros.



Patiently, I explained it wasn't necessary because the pros had a draft which supposedly helped the teams maintain parity — although I had to admit it hadn't helped the Falcons much.

Naturally her next questions concerned the draft. She couldn't believe a player actually had to play for a team or not play at all. "That means a team would only have to pay the guy $20 a year!" she exclaimed.

"Doesn't work that way. The player's agent negotiates with the team. I mean the team's not going to draft the guy unless they want him, so of course they'll pay him a decent wage," trying to explain "supply and demand" economics to her was like explaining the differences in incidental and flagrant penalties after a ball player gets his head torn off and the referee calls five yards one time and 15 another time.

What did get her off the "poor player" topic was the figure of $600,000 as an average annual income for National Football League linemen.

That's when she decided that

we needed to put Bubba on a weight program, move to a place that had a good high school team and make sure the boy attended one of the college football mills. At least we're off to a good start by naming him "Bubba."

So the point I'm making is, just because your wife can say "instant replay," doesn't mean she knows a hill of beans about the game you're watching.

By the way, the learning experience hasn't been a one-way street.

First, if you want to be sure you have beer on hand for the big game, buy it yourself. And if you live off post, remember, Sunday is not a day to go to your local grocery store for a six-pack.

Second, if you want the wife to bring your food, ask for it just before half-time. Wives usually enjoy watching bands and half-time shows — but will leave as soon as the three clowns in the booth begin analyzing why Joe Montana is the best quarterback to set foot on a football field and the difference between natural turf and carpet — one needs to be watered.

Now for some predictions.

After the first score, one of the announcers will tell the world that in 80 percent of the Super Bowls, the team to score first, goes on to win.

The first quarter will last 45 minutes, mainly because of the number of calls being reviewed. It's not bad enough we sit through 45 seconds of inaction for 5 seconds of action. Now we have to watch people standing around while a jerk with a TV decides if the refs on the field made a good or bad call. No wonder soccer is gaining in popularity.

The game itself won't be as nearly as exciting as the pregame show.

Two of the monkeys in the booth will announce "This is a crucial play" or "This could be THE turning point," at least six times, two coming as early as the second quarter.

And finally, my prediction: the team with the most points at the end of the game will win.

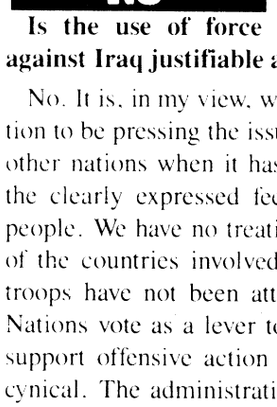
AT ISSUE

Use of Force in the Persian Gulf?

YES

Richard N. Perle served as U.S. assistant secretary of defense for international security policy from 1981 to 1987. Currently, he is a resident fellow of the American Enterprise Institute.



Is the use of force by the United States against Iraq justifiable and/or inevitable?

Saddam Hussein has now launched his second war of aggression in less than a decade, a war that has included pillaging, murder and hostage-taking on an unprecedented scale. He has built and threatened to use weapons of mass destruction, including an arsenal of biological and chemical weapons, some of which he has used on his own population. He is racing to acquire nuclear weapons. There is no doubt that he intends to dominate the Persian Gulf by force and intimidation, to use control over oil as a political weapon, and to lead the Arab masses in an anti-Western holy war. He must be stopped, and the use of force to stop him is fully justified.

What other alternatives exist to resolve this crisis?

Naturally, it would be better to resolve this crisis through continuing application of sanctions, especially the embargo, now in effect. But the sanctions are unlikely to work — and they certainly will not work quickly.

The weakness of the sanctions is that they aim too low — only at Iraq's withdrawal from Kuwait. But that is not enough. It is also necessary to dismantle or destroy Iraq's instruments of aggression, including Saddam Hussein's capacity to build and use weapons of mass destruction. How could we hope to deal with Saddam Hussein once he has nuclear weapons? How could the weak states of the Persian Gulf hope to protect themselves against further invasions by his million-man army? How can there be any lasting peace while this war machine casts its shadow over the region and the world?

NO

James H. Webb Jr. is a former U.S. secretary of the navy and assistant secretary of defense. He is the author of five books, four of them novels.

Is the use of force by the United States against Iraq justifiable and/or inevitable?

No. It is, in my view, wrong for the administration to be pressing the issue of using force among other nations when it has no mandate regarding the clearly expressed feelings of the American people. We have no treaties in this region. None of the countries involved are democracies. Our troops have not been attacked. Using a United Nations vote as a lever to force the Congress to support offensive action is perplexing and even cynical. The administration needs to clarify our national goals in the event force is to be used.

Recent history indicates that, had the president dispatched a modestly structured air-ground presence to Saudi Arabia and then begun negotiating a mutual withdrawal of American and Iraqi forces from their respective positions, the crisis may have been over by now.

What other alternatives exist to resolve this crisis?

In my view, the proper course of action for our country would be to immediately and dramatically reduce the number of troops committed to the region and consolidate them into a defensive posture. The president should use his well-known connections around the world in order to persuade other affected countries that they should commit soldiers toward the goal of containing and eventually reversing Iraqi aggression.

In sum, initiating a violent clash because another nation has not agreed to the president's timetable for unconditional surrender is not the appropriate approach at this time toward achieving peace.

VA clarifies tax liability issues for certain vets

Department of Veterans Affairs

The Department of Veterans Affairs has announced a clarification of two issues concerning tax liability for veterans who are entitled to VA disability compensation and also eligible for either retirement pay or disability severance pay from the military.

Normally, military retirement pay based on age or length of military service is taxable income and reported to the Internal Revenue Service.

However, if all or a portion of the veteran's retirement pay is waived due to receipt of VA disability compensation, the veteran's taxable income is reduced by an amount equal to VA compensation.

This means the veteran would normally pay less taxes based on a reduced gross taxable income.

However, VA officials have been informed that IRS was unable to credit some veterans who had waived their retired pay for VA compensation because the award letters provided by VA did not provide sufficient information for IRS purposes.

Affected veterans should refile for the exclusion by submitting a completed VA Form 20-8993 or an official VA letter granting retroactive benefits that clearly states "in lieu of VA Form 20-8993" with their annual Federal tax forms.

The second tax liability issue concerns cases where veterans have paid taxes on the total amount of disability severance pay awarded to them by the military and are subsequently awarded VA disability compensation.

In these cases, VA is required to recoup the entire lump sum paid by the military, including the amount paid for taxes.

This is generally accomplished by reducing monthly compensation payments by a set amount until the lump-sum military payment is reached.

Some veterans erroneously believe they are due a tax refund on that portion of the recoupment paid for taxes. IRS has determined, however, that disability severance pay is taxable income because it is received as a lump-sum payment rather than a monthly disability benefit.

IRS has also concluded that no reduction in tax liability would occur if the veteran were subsequently entitled to VA disability benefits for the same disability.

Veterans with questions concerning either of these tax issues should contact the Veterans Administration Regional Office at (404) 324-6646 for clarification and guidance.

Radio personality delivers greetings to Saudi soldiers

WCGQ Radio

A Columbus radio station has "borrowed" a phrase often used by the U.S. Army and dubbed its efforts to bring troops and families closer together for the holidays — by voice — "Operation Special Delivery."

Since December 10, WCGQ Radio (107-Q) has been recording messages from family members and special friends of Fort Benning soldiers taking part in Operation Desert Shield.

The messages are being delivered in person by air personality Shelby Guest, who through special arrangements by the U.S. Army, left Dec. 28 en route to Saudi Arabia to hand them out.

Shelby said, "This is more important than anything else at this point, and it's the least we can do for our men and women in uniform who are serving our country."

"Similar sentiments were expressed by Chuck McClure who owns WCGQ-FM and sister station WRCG-AM.

McClure has long been involved in supporting the U.S. Army through his involvement in the Association of the United States Army.

He is serving his second term as President of the Chattahoochee Valley/Fort Benning Chapter of AUSA, which sponsors, among other things, "Operation Holiday" for soldiers.

McClure says this year's Operation Holiday was expanded to include families of soldiers serving in Operation Desert Shield.

> "It's the least we can do for our men and women in uniform who are serving our country."
> — Shelby Guest

He said he viewed Shelby's trip as part of the holiday arrangements to make the season a little brighter for soldiers.

Shelby says she looks at her trip as an honor since she is the one chosen by the station to go.

"She's taking the best wishes of everyone here with her," says Program Director Chuck Harris.

Shelby's mission doesn't end with delivering the messages from home.

She will talk with Fort Benning soldiers in the Saudi Desert and give them a chance to record a special message to their loved ones at home.

Shelby will then bring those messages back to Columbus for broadcast on WCGQ-FM (107-Q) and WRCG-AM.

ASK THE JUDGE

By Howard O. McGillin Jr.
Staff Judge Advocate's Office

Q. My spouse recently deployed to Saudi Arabia. I have never done the taxes before, and wonder where I can get help. I saw an ad for a tax return service in the newspaper. Should I use this service? Who can help me?

A. A lot of family members are asking this very same question. A number of places will soon be operating on post and off post to assist you in preparing your tax return.

The primary difference is that all of the facilities on post will assist you for free. The off-post facilities may charge you for their service.

The Internal Revenue Service is in the process of mailing out tax forms right now. They will send the same type of form you used last year, to the same address you lived at when you filed.

Ordinarily you will only need the forms they send you. However, if you have added or eliminated tax deductions, you may need different forms.

The Legal Assistance Division, Office of the Staff Judge Advocate, will set up the installation tax office the first full week in February. It will be in Building 5 at the corner of Vibbert and Sigerfoos streets. There will be special signs showing the entrance to the tax office. You will be able to get copies of most of the federal forms, and many of the state forms you will need to file your taxes.

Having the right forms is only half of the chore. You may also need help in filling them out. There are several sources for this assistance.

Each company-sized unit must appoint a unit tax adviser to assist soldiers and family members in preparing taxes. This adviser will attend a five day Volunteer Income Tax Assistance course given by the IRS at Fort Benning. At the completion of the course, they will be qualified to assist most soldiers and family members with their personal income tax preparation.

The VITA also presents a wonderful opportunity for family members. This year we are soliciting family members to volunteer to assist both soldiers and family members in tax preparation, and in manning the Installation Tax Office at Building 5.

We plan to invite as many tax volunteers as possible to attend the VITA class with the unit tax advisers. If you are interested in gaining a skill, and in helping others complete their taxes, please contact either the Installation Volunteer Coordinator at 545-5602, or Jane Winand at the Legal Assistance Office at 545-3281.

The Legal Assistance Division will also sponsor tax preparation at the PX Mall on several weekends during February, March and April. Watch the Bayonet, the Benning Bulletin and the post entrance marquees for additional time and date information.

If you have any tax questions that cannot be answered by either a unit tax adviser, or a VITA volunteer, Call the Legal Assistance Division for an appointment. Our phone number is 545-3281. We are open from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. Monday through Friday.

SAUDI ARABIA — An M-113 Armored Personnel Carrier sits at the southern end of the camp as Company D, 2nd Battalion, 18th Infantry, 197th Infantry Brigade wakes up. An antenna protrudes from the roof, with a pirate flag flying at its apex.

It's vehicle D-12, the mechanized home for 2nd Squad of the "Delta Dawg's" 1st Platoon.

The squad leader, Sgt. Mark Channer, goes around the group's area kicking the ends of the cots as he wakes up Spec. David Castro, Spec. Eric Singleton, Spec. Jim Hargues and the rest. Second squad goes to Physical Training.

The squad falls in on their platoon sergeant, Sgt. 1st Class Anthony Johnson, along with first and third squads. After stretching for a minute, Johnson says, "Let's play ball." The platoon sprints for their softball field.

The softball field is a clear area of sand. It also doubles as a football field and any kind of gathering area the platoon needs.

The first squad plays the third squad with second split among the two. The game is very spirited with both teams complaining about the umpiring. Johnson's calls aren't always agreed upon by the players. At the end, the team made of the second and third squads comes out on top, 15-10.

The squads then adjourn to their areas.

As Channer leads his men into their "home," the soldiers get ready for breakfast.

Sgt. Jon Morris, the assistant squad leader, breaks open a box of Meals, Ready to Eat. He's been with the team so long that he knows what most everyone in the squad likes from the menu of the "dehydrated diner."

"Tuna and noodles," says Morris, "Singleton eats that. What about the spaghetti, who eats that?"

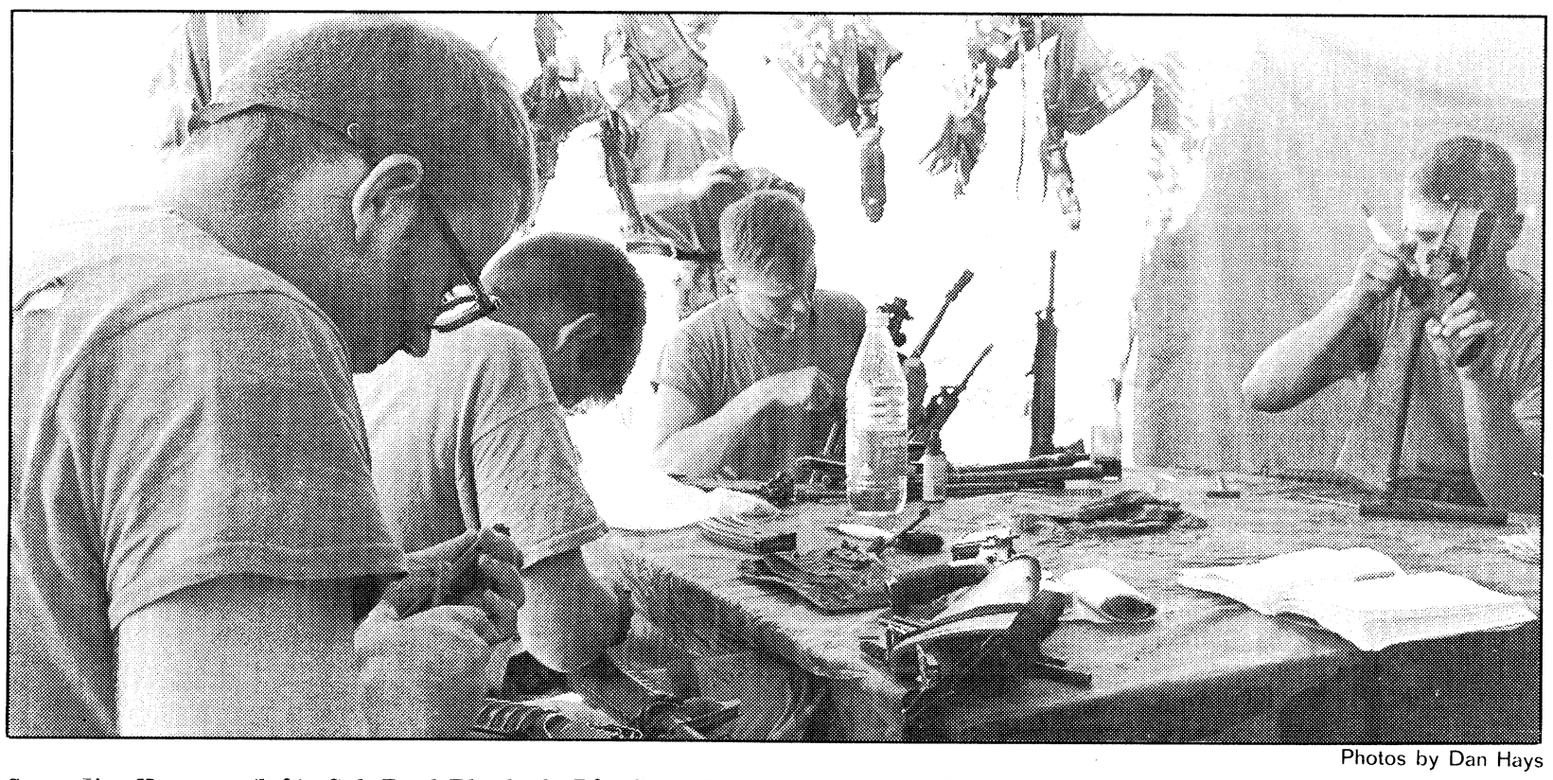
"Give it to (Pfc. Scott) Decker," says Cpl. Paul Blaylock, the squad's track commander. "He'll eat it."

The men dig into their breakfast, and in comes the enemy — flies.

By now, the squad seems used to the winged menaces. They start swatting the flies as soon as they land on the makeshift table in the middle of the group's area.

Hargues puts the flies in two categories. "The slow, fat ones are C-130s and the small, fast ones are F-16s."

All flies killed are put in the "Maker's" box. "Maker" is a four-inch black scorpion that Spec. Michael Troxell found and kept. He came up with the name. "Everything thrown into the box meets it's maker."



At 8:30 a.m., Channer comes back from a squad leader meeting. The company will conduct a Mock Hasty Decontamination Exercise at 1300. Channer wants to make sure they know what they are going to be doing, so he plans a class on Hasty Decon for 0930 hours.

The members of the squad take their weapons from their homemade rifle rack — parachute cord tied between two camouflage net poles, with little loops tied to it to hold the weapons up — and begin cleaning them.

Once their M-16s, M-203 Grenade Launchers and M-249 Squad Automatic Weapons are free of the ever-present sand and dirt, the squad starts cleaning up their "home."

Home is a camouflage net, that covers about 20 square yards. Several poncho liners or shelter halves hang from the "camo" to protect the cots and personal gear from the sun. In the middle, a piece of plywood sits on top of several sandbags. It acts as a dinner table, a card table or just a gathering place. Arranged in a half-circle around the table are the soldier's cots. The other half of the squad's area is open and holds a stack of boxes filled with water bottles and MREs. The M-113 is backed up to the opening of the net, with its rear door down.

At 9:30 a.m., Channer sits the squad down around their table. Channer reads from his Common Task Manual and asks the squad questions on everything from how to "button up" an M-113, or drive with all the vehicle's hatches sealed, to how to go through a Mission Oriented Protective Posture suit exchange.

Spec. Jim Hargues (left), Cpl. Paul Blaylock, Pfc. Scott Decker and Spec. Michael Troxell, all from Co. D, 2nd Bn., 18th Inf., clean their weapons during some free time.

At 10 a.m., the squad moves to the middle of the compound, where the rest of the company is already formed. The company's NBC NCO explains how the exercise will be run and gives a class on the MOPP suit exchange. The class breaks up at noon, and the soldiers are told to be ready to roll at 1300.

The uniform for the exercise is the Desert Night Camouflage uniform. The troops are supposed to be in MOPP suits, but they don't want to waste the chemical suits, so they simulate it with the green and black night uniforms.

The company moves out just after 1 p.m.. Hargues drives the M-113, with Blaylock in the Track Commander hatch. The troop hatch is opened, with Channer, Singleton, Decker, and Spec. Michael Troxell standing up through it. Castro sits at the front of the troop area, while Morris sits against the closed rear door. All of them have their mouths covered with scarves and goggles covering their eyes. The Kevlar helmets are topped by NBC covers that look like shower caps.

After about 30 minutes on the road, the radio call comes. They are under an artillery and NBC attack.

Immediately, Hargues brings the APC to a screeching halt. Within moments, the squad has their protective masks on and sealed. Hargues slams the driver's hatch down at the same time as Blaylock brings the TC's hatch crashing down.

Decker jumps up on the top of the carrier and prepares the troop hatch to be closed. He jumps back in, brining the hatch down after him.

As the troops get settled in the now much more crowded inside of the carrier, Blaylock tells Hargues to move out. The APC bounces across the desert.

The troops move on to the sand to the front of the carrier. The company's tracks are deployed in a large defensive circle. 2nd Squad's troops face outward from the middle of the circle.

The company waits as the hasty decontamination site is being set up. The soldiers quickly simulate decontaminating their hands and faces.

While waiting to move to the site, Channer moves from soldier to soldier making sure they know how to drink water in MOPP4 and answering any questions.

Moments later, the squad climbs back into their track and heads down the road to the Hasty Decon site.

The squad dismounts at the site. Hargues and Blaylock stay with the vehicle, where they use the M-13 decontamination apparatus and the M-17 lightweight decontamination apparatus to make sure the "Garbage Pail Kid's" track is safe.

The squad moves off to their MOPP suit exchange area.

Breaking into groups of two, one troop helps the other one out of his protective gear. First, the mask's hood is rolled up to the top of the head by the other soldier. After unbuttoning and zipping the front of the jacket, it is pulled off over the arms and hands. It's then thrown on the ground and the soldier taking his MOPP suit off stands on it.

The pants are taken off in much the same way. The soldier then is supposed to get a new MOPP suit. In this exercise, the Delta Dawgs just put their Night Camouflage Uniforms back on.

Four and a half hours after leaving their base camp, the Delta Dawgs load into their APCs and move back to their desert home.

The rear door for track D-12 drops to the ground and the squad unloads. They get out of their night camouflage and give their weapons a quick cleaning.

Then they relax and start getting ready for the evening meal.

As the sun sets and the 2nd Squad begins to hit the sack, their APC waits — pirate flag still flying. Tomorrow they'll be ready for the next mission.

DoD supports King program

By Rudi Williams
American Forces Information Service

Again this year, the Department of Defense is orchestrating the annual Martin Luther King Jr. holiday parade in Atlanta.

The Navy is in charge of this year's event on Jan. 21. The Army and Air Force handled past events. Other DoD parade support includes the Navy Steel Band from New Orleans; various Army, Air Force and Marine Corps bands and color guards; ROTC, National Guard and Reserve units; and recruiters.

The King federal holiday is the third Monday of January each year. It's also a state holiday except in Arizona, Montana and New Hampshire. King's actual birthday is Jan. 15.

Charles Sadler, a senior staff adviser for the King Federal Holiday Commission in Washington, D.C., praised DoD for its variety of King observances. He noted the department's special Martin Luther King Jr. posters for worldwide distribution, including U.S. territories — Guam, Puerto Rico, Virgin Islands, American Samoa — and DoD dependents schools overseas.

DoD is printing several thousand "Learn-A-Bration" booklets for use in schools nationwide and Department of Defense dependents schools overseas and stateside. The booklet is a teacher's guide based on King's life and contains information about his teachings and works, the 1963 march on Washington, his historic "I Have a Dream Speech," a bibliography, instructional guides, plays and crossword puzzles. The material can be used by any age group, from kindergarten to university level.

"I don't know how we could have made it without DoD's effective support," said Sadler. "DoD has been actively involved since the first holiday celebration."

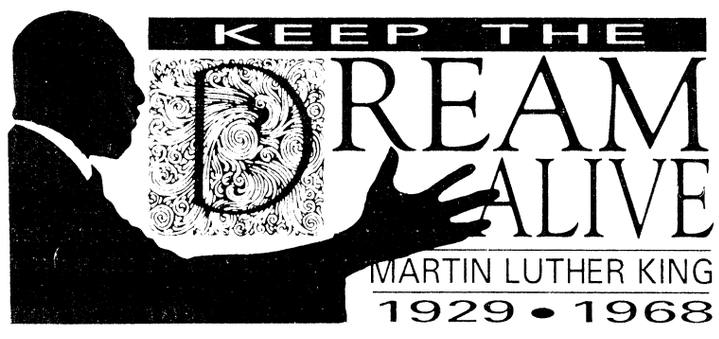
"The military services have always been sensitive to the holiday observance and have appreciated the challenge and opportunities it affords for reaffirming faith in the basic ideals of freedom, justice and opportunity," said Lloyd Davis, the commission's executive director. "The secretary of defense has been very supportive and has established the Military Involvement Committee to assist us. Representatives from military services, including the Coast Guard, serve on the committee. We asked DoD to use the annual theme to motivate, inspire and educate its people.

"The holiday belongs to everybody," Davis continued. "It's not only an American celebration, but an international one as well." Scheduled to mark King's birthday between Jan. 14 and 21 this year are more than 130 nations, including 44 in Africa, 24 in Europe, 27 in the Western Hemisphere and 34 in the Middle East and Asia.

The commission's theme is "Living the Dream: Let Freedom Ring! (for peace and non-violence)." To mark the holiday, the U.S. Liberty Bell will be symbolically tapped in Philadelphia Jan. 21 at 12:30 p.m. eastern standard time, coupled with simultaneous tappings of 50 replica bells nationwide and the U.S. territories.

"In his short life, Dr. King changed the world. . .Now, around the world, we see changes that are making Dr. King's words of 'justice and righteousness' come true. They were more than a dream. They were a vision of the future," President George Bush wrote in a Jan. 15, 1990, article in the Washington Times newspaper. "We still have much work to do and far to go. We will continue the fight in the memory of Martin Luther King Jr."

Powell praises King as 'man of great courage'



By Rudi Williams
American Forces Information Service

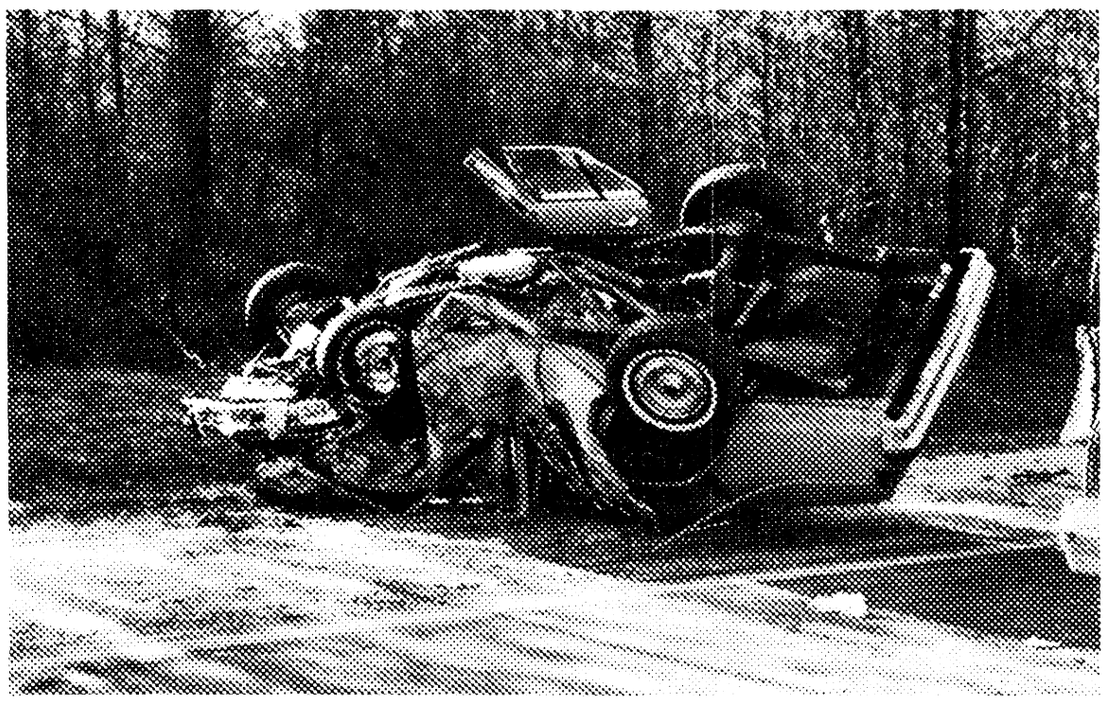
An outspoken admirer and student of Martin Luther King Jr's. teachings, Army Gen. Colin Powell, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, said King's work played a vital role in his becoming America's top general.

"It's always hard to describe the impact Dr. King had on this nation, as well as on my life," said Powell. "He was a man of great courage, willing to go to the very end, put everything on the line, for what he believed in. That's what impressed me the most, and the fact that his contributions were not just for African Americans, but for all Americans.

"Dr. King fought the second Civil War. The first Civil War was fought 100 years earlier, but he led all Americans in the second Civil War, which freed America from the chains of oppression that still existed in this country through the 1960s."

Lauding King's contributions to the nation, Powell said the civil rights leader was "instrumental in breaking down barriers to opportunities to such an extent that I've been able to get to where I am." The general cited King's example of moral courage, fighting for what you believe in, not being distracted from what you think is right and doing right. "That influences me and shapes the way I look at my life and my responsibilities as chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff," he said.

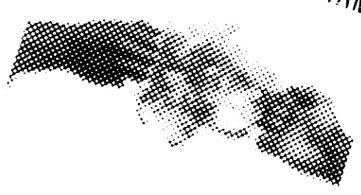
"I always think of Dr. King in tandem with the words of our Declaration of Independence: 'And for the support of this Declaration, with a firm reliance on the protection of Divine Providence, we mutually pledge to each other our Lives, our Fortunes and our sacred Honor,'" Powell said.



"In other words, he was prepared to put everything on the line for things that were dear to him and meant something to him — what he believe in. I don't know if anybody can make a better statement than that," said Powell.

"He was such a great spokesman, and his sermons, speeches and teachings are significant and are going into the pantheon of great American literature.

"We use his words wherever possible to communicate to our young people the meaning of his life," Powell continued. "And not just black history things. What he did for the whites of America is as great as what he did for blacks. That's why it's so correct for this to be a national holiday and why all Americans should study what he did."



Powell never met Martin Luther King Jr., but one of his most treasured possessions is a large portrait of the civil rights leader that was given to him when he was commander in chief of Forces Command in 1989.

"It's a portrait given to me by Mrs. King when I visited the Martin Luther King Jr. Center for Creative Non-Violence in Atlanta shortly after I arrived at Forces Command," said Powell. "It's a beautiful portrait of our leader with an expression beneath the painting that says, 'Freedom is an expensive thing.' It's in my personal study at home. I see it every morning and continue to be moved by Dr. King and the contributions he made to this nation."

Pros use noise as bait

By Earl Bentz and Steve Price
Outboard Marine Corporation

For years bass fishermen have been told noise frightens fish, but now many of the nation's tournament pros are deliberately adding noise to their lures.

Of course, rattles have been put into fast-moving crankbaits for years, but no one has ever decided just how important this added sound is, especially when compared to the vibrations such lures produce.

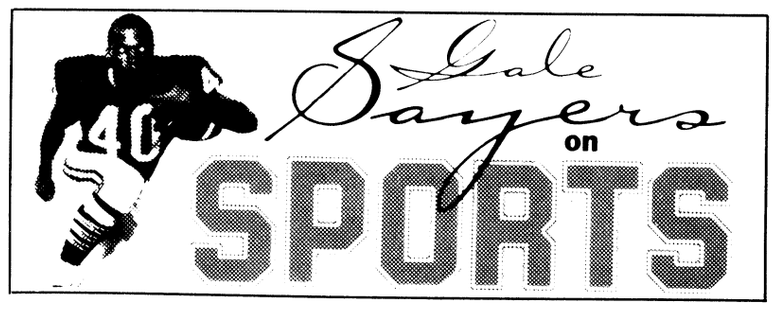
Today, however, rattles are being added to jigs and plastic worms, two lures traditionally fished slowly and methodically along the bottom without much vibration.

"We have learned bass use their hearing system a great deal when feeding," explained angler Ken Cook. "I've noticed when I go scuba diving that I can often attract bass close to me by making a light clicking noise, like tapping two rocks together."

Several firms are now marketing lure rattles — tiny steel pellets encased in glass or plastic sheaths — that can easily be pushed into a worm. These same rattles can also be glued to jigs, usually just below the head where they are hidden by the skirt.

A number of jibs are also being sold today with the rattles already in place, and the number of manufacturers doing this is expected to increase.

"In recent years," Cook explained, "bass fishermen, especially the tournament anglers, have been studying the different sense of bass more than ever before. We're looking for ways to make our lures more appealing.



"The most obvious of these has been sight appeal. Manufacturers paint their lures so realistically now it's almost hard to tell them from the real thing. We also add solutions to make the lures smell like baitfish or crayfish, and now we're adding rattles to make them sound more natural."

One of the Evinrude pro's favorite noise making techniques with plastic worms is to thread a small glass bead between the slip sinker and hook. Each time Cook shakes the worm, the sinker taps the bead and produces an audible click. He uses brass slip sinkers instead of the more common lead sinkers because they produce a louder sound.

"I believe adding noise like this helps primarily under two conditions," he said, "which are when I'm fishing very deep water and when I'm working extremely heavy cover. Both of these are when visibility is limited and bass would tend to rely more on their sense of hearing."

When fishing a plastic worm in deep water, Cook does a lot of rod shaking rather than steady reeling. This causes the lure to dance and jump — and make noise — in the same spot. Instead of having to search for bass with this lure, Cook uses noise to make bass do the searching.

"I also believe noise can be important when flipping worms into thick cover," Cook said. "When I do this, I tie a small piece of rubber band around my fishing line about a quarter-inch above the slip sinker. This has the same effect as pegging the slip sinker in place, but allows just enough movement for the sinker to click against the bead."

The Importance of Conferences

The buzzword in college football this year is 'conference'. Every week, it seems, there was an announcement that an independent school was joining a conference, or a school already affiliated with one conference was jumping to another.

It's a trend I think we'll see continue for the next several years. When it's all over, Notre Dame may be the nation's only major football independent.

Already this year it has been announced that Penn State will be joining the Big 10, Arkansas will make the move from the Southwest Conference to the Southeast Conference, Florida State will join the Atlantic Coast Conference and the University of Miami, will move to the Big East.

What's the reasoning behind the rush of conference activity? Really, the whole thing boils down to money. It's as simple as that. Conferences split money earned by their schools for bowl game appearances evenly among member schools. With individual teams earning up to $2 million for bowl appearances, conference money goes a long way toward supporting the costs of running collegiate athletic programs.

The NCAA requires that schools have teams actively competing in 14 different sports to earn a Division One status. Football should be a school's real money-maker. Sports like swimming and field hockey cost colleges a lot of money.

I was athletic director at Southern Illinois University and can attest to the huge financial burden of intercollegiate sports. That's why it's so important for independents to join a conference. By joining the Big East, Miami is looking years down the road to when its football fortunes may not be as great as they have been lately. What would happen if they couldn't win any games? No bowl bids, no television interest, no money for the school and its athletic program. Penn State is doing the same thing. They have seen schools like Kansas State in the Big Eight and Northwestern in the Big 10, which haven't been to bowls in many years but have survived on conference money.

As for Arkansas, which is switching conferences, I believe they are making a wise choice. Arkansas has been accused of 'deserting' the SWC for the SEC, but I believe that the SEC is the premier conference in college football. Arkansas is assuring the success of its program by associating with it. In any year, a good number of the SEC's teams are likely to get bowl invitations. A share in the SEC's conference money means millions of dollars for Arkansas.

Notre Dame is a different story altogether. With a rich and successfull football heritage that allows them to select, not recruit, players and work out their own television deals, their status as an independent seems safe. I'm sure that five years from now, when every other major independent has joined a conference this will only add to the Notre Dame mystique.

Thrift Plan open season ends Jan. 31

By Evelyn D. Harris
American Forces Information Service

The current open season for the Thrift Savings Plan, which started Nov. 15, and ends Jan. 31, 1991, has major changes that Congress made earlier this year.

Now, federal employees covered by the Civil Service Retirement System can invest any portion of their account and future contributions in the Thrift Savings Plan's common stock index and bond index ("C") or fixed income investment ("F") funds.

Previously, they could invest only in the "G" fund, made up of special short-term U.S. Treasury securities.

Employees covered by the Federal Employees Retirement System are now free to place all of their savings — including those contributed by the government — in any one fund or any mix of the three funds.

By contrast during 1990, all government contributions and at least 40 percent of FERS employees' contributions had to be invested in the government fund.

Prior-year investments were subject to even less employee choice.

To enroll or to change the mix of future contributions, participants must complete the election form (TSP-1) dated September 1990.

FERS employees who wish to continue investing in the stock or bond fund have to submit new form TSP-1 so their agencies will accept it during the open season.

To ensure the earliest action, the Federal Retirement Thrift Investment Board recommends that employees submit TSP-1s before the first full pay period in January 1991.

If they do not submit a new TSP-1, future contributions will be invested in the G fund.

CSRS employees who wish all or part of their future contributions to go to the stock and/or bond funds must also complete a new TSP-1.

However, any participants who simply want to change the investment mix of funds already in their account can do so up to four times in any calendar year, in any month they choose, whether or not it is open season.

To change the mix of a current account balance, investors must fill out Form TSP-30, "Interfund Transfer Request." Programs participants will receive the form with their November 1990 statements.

The forms will also be available at agency benefit offices or by calling the Thrift Savings Plan inquiry line, open 24 hours every day, at 1-504-255-8777.

Tom Trabucco, spokesman for the Federal Retirement Thrift Investment Board, said that participants who simply reallocate their past investments miss out on the advantages of dollar cost averaging.

Dollar Cost Averaging

"Dollar cost averaging" is the term financial professionals use for investing the same amount of money in the same investment vehicle at regular intervals.

When the market is high, the same money buys fewer shares; when the market is low, the money buys more shares.

Lipper Analytical Services, a financial analysis firm, recently did a study that shows the advantages of this strategy.

Lipper calculated the value of investing $1,000 per quarter in an average mutual fund over 20 years (dollar cost averaging) vs. investing $4,000 at each year's market high and $4,000 at each year's market low. The dollar-averaged account yielded an annual return of 12.5 percent vs. an 11.5 percent return for the low market investor and a 10.3 percent return for the market high investor.

Said Trabucco, "Investing in a payroll savings vehicle such as the Thrift Savings Plan yields the advantages of dollar averaging.

"Dollar cost averaging is recognized by financial experts as an excellent way to spread your risk."

Choosing the mix of investments is a decision for each individual investor, and Trabucco said it would be inappropriate for board officials to give employees advice on the subject beyond the simple tried-and-true advice to diversify, or, as he put it, "Don't put all your eggs in one basket." He also advised taking a long-term view of investments.

The Thrift Board does emphasize the concept of risk — that is, the chance that an investor could actually lose money.

Trabucco said investors have to sign a release stating they are aware of the risk before they invest in the C or F fund.

Risky funds tend to be more volatile; they fluctuate more and go to greater extremes — both higher and lower.

For example, during 1989, the C fund gained 31.03 percent, while the conservative G fund gained only 8.81 percent.

But for the period October 1989 through September 1990, the C fund lost money — it was down by 9.13 percent.

For the same period, the G fund chugged along with an 8.74 percent gain.

The medium-risk F fund gained 13.89 percent in 1989 and gained 6.45 percent in the 12 months ending in September 1990.

FERS employees get gift from Uncle Sam

American Forces Information Service

Persons in the Federal Employees Retirement System get a good deal when they invest in the federal government's Thrift Savings Plan, said plan spokesman Tom Trabucco.

That's because the government matches dollar for dollar the first 3 percent pf basic income a FERS employee invests.

For the next 2 percent, the government gives 50 cents for each employee dollar.

"Thus, FERS employees who put in the full 10 percent of income they're permitted to contribute every year actually save an amount equal to 15 percent of their income — and that's before any earnings are considered," said Trabucco.

Open season for the Thrift Savings Plan started Nov. 15 and ends Jan. 31.

About one-fourth of government employees in the Civil Service Retirement System contribute to the plan.

The plan acts as supplemental retirement savings for these employees, while it is designed to be an integral part of FERS retirement income.

As of October 1990, 56.4 percent of FERS employees contributed to the plan.

CHAMPUS NEWS

Martin Army Community Hospital

The latest call-up of reservists and National Guard members means that more active-duty service members' families are eligible for benefits under the Civilian Health and Medical Program of the Uniformed Services.

If the activated military sponsor is ordered to duty for ore than 30 consecutive days, his or her family members may get civilian health care under CHAMPUS, beginning with the first day of the active-duty period. In order to receive CHAMPUS-covered health care benefits, the family members must present one of the following to whoever verifies CHAMPUS eligibility at a health care provider's office:

- A red Department of Defense Guard and Reserve Family Member Identification Card (DD Form 1173-1), along with a copy of the sponsor's active-duty orders; or
- A red Guard/Reserve Dependent ID Card from one of the services (it's an acceptable substitute for the DD Form 1173-1), with a copy of the sponsor's active-duty orders; or
- A tan Uniformed Services Identification and Privilege Card (DD Form 1173); or
- A completed and approved Application for Uniformed Services Identification Card — DEERS Enrollment (DD Form 1172), with a copy of the sponsor's active-duty orders.

Reserve and National Guard family members are enrolled in the Defense Enrollment Eligibility Reporting System when sponsors are activated by the services, and when a family member's individual entitlement is validated — either by normal DEERS enrollment procedures, or from information previously collected from the activated sponsors.

If you're a member of an activated reservists's family, and are filing a CHAMPUS claim, you can help prevent delays in processing by including a copy of any of the red ID cards or a copy of the ID card application, and a copy of the tan ID and privilege card.

If you've had a CHAMPUS claim denied because of alleged non-enrollment in DEERS, or if you have questions concerning DEERS enrollment, call the DEERS Beneficiary Telephone Center for assistance.

The center can be reached between 6 a.m. and 3:30 p.m. Pacific Time, Monday through Friday, at 1-800-538-9552.

Children at the Infantry Center Chapel perform a special holiday program.

Christmas season ends Sunday

By Debra Galle
USAIC Chaplain's Office

As dry and yellowed Christmas trees are thrown carelessly next to trash bags on the sidewalks, we accept, although with some misgivings, that Christmas is over.

Displaying a reluctance to say farewell to the holiday season and an anxiety for next year's to arrive, a recent advertisement warned, "There are only 364 days until Christmas."

In the true religious sense, however, Christmas actually has a cycle that is not completed until the Epiphany.

The feast of the Epiphany will be celebrated at Catholic masses Sunday.

Children returning to Catholic religious classes that day will hear about the importance of this feast, according to Phil Reilly, Director of Religious Education.

In a recent article by the Rev. Ronald Modras in the "Religion Teachers Journal", "the Epiphany is one of the oldest and most important feasts of the liturgical year, in some places both a holy day and a national holiday." In the United States, it is hardly recognized as more than a church feast.

The word epiphany, sometimes theophany, signifies a manifestation of divinity and sometimes also applies to events of great significance in the lives of royalty.

The Christmas cycle begins with the first Sunday of Advent and continues through the Advent season to the feast of the Epiphany. In the United States, that feast is always the Sunday between Jan. 2 and 8.

As the East adopted the Christmas celebration, its Epiphany feast became a solemn commemoration of Christ's baptism in the Jordan and was emphasized as a baptismal feast.

In the West, the emphasis was the medieval feast of the three kings, the Magi.

In the Middle Ages it was customary to bless homes with newly blessed water and with incense. The names of the Magi (Gaspar, Melchior, and Balthasar) were written with blessed chalk on or above the doors.

Among the many traditions and meanings associated with Jan. 6, are what the Roman Pontifical lists as the consecration of virgins.

Because the three vows of religion are often compared to the gifts of the Magi, members of some religious orders renew their vows on that day.

As the last memories of Christmas are stored carefully away in boxes and trees are discarded, the last thoughts could be of the story of the Magi, which, according to Modras, "is an expression of faith in God's self-revelation to the world."

Hope begins new year

Reflections

We live in a "day after Christmas" world.

Most of us realize sub-consciously that as children, we used to wish that Christmas was extended to the rest of the year. But the truth is that this is a "day after Christmas" world.

We barely begin to recover from the holidays when we realize that we have to go back to work. Maybe we face the same old grind, or the same old boss. The spirit of giving and charity we celebrated for a month prior to the holidays has passed. It has been replaced by other, more practical issues — bills, taking down the decorations, writing more letters to deployed family members.

These things compose our "life in the fast lane," while we wait and pray for the peace of Christmas to extend beyond the fifteenth of January because we live in a "day after Christmas world."

Joseph and Mary, along with their newborn baby boy, also had a day after Christmas. In fact, their world didn't have any idea that Christmas had occurred. Their world continued to progress without knowing of the historical event that split time in half.

The shepherds returned to tending their flock with their bosses not being particularly happy with the fact that they had left the sheep in the field to go visit a new baby.

The wise men returned to a "day after Christmas world" when they went back to Persia. No one there had ever heard of God in the form of a human being. The thought of a living God, rather than a god of stone, absolutely amazed the people.

Mary and Joseph were refugees, the shepherds probably got a counseling statement, and the wise men were looked at like they were crazy. Isn't it great to be in such good company in this world on the day after Christmas?

Like all of these ancient companions, we have made the trip to Bethlehem and can now carry the story back to our world. Whether we have celebrated Christmas or Chanukah, whether we went to church or stayed at home, the spirit of the holidays has shone a light on our existence.

We begin a new year with hopes that the light will continue, and that we will become the light in our corner of this world. We carry a light into this dark, "day after Christmas" world, reminding it of the message of our faith — a message of hope for peace, strength for the routine, and comfort for all.

Couple feeds soldiers

James C. Rupp
Bayonet staff writer

Some soldiers from 4th Battalion, 41st Field Artillery, 197th Infantry Brigade got to spend Christmas at home this year.

Even if it wasn't their own.

Dr. Andy Misoulia and his wife Carney of Lumpkin, Ga., took in five soldiers and their families of the deployed 41st who had either not been deployed or had returned from Saudi Arabia.

1st Lt. Chad Darby, 2nd Lt. Ronald Oswalt and his wife, Tina, and their son Ronnie; Spec. Allen Bierri, Spec. Albert Walls and his child and Spec. Torrest Rice were the soldiers in attendance at the Misoulias' household on Christmas day.

According to Oswalt, the Misoulias had wanted to do something in the Christmas spirit for the soldiers of Operation Desert Shield, but it was easiest to support the soldiers who were still stateside after their units had been deployed.

Local businesses of the Lumpkin area donated merchandise which was put into care packages for the soldiers.

"They tried really hard to make us feel part of the family," said Oswalt of the evening, "We all really had a ball."

Holiday greetings

This Christmas card was drawn by Pfc. Christopher Pearce, Company A, 1st Battalion, 18th Infantry Regiment, 197th Infantry Brigade who is stationed in Saudi Arabia as part of Operation Desert Shield. The inside of the card reads "I would like to wish every soldier and thier families a merry Christmas and a happy New Year. Though this holiday season will not be the same for myself and the many other infantrymen in Saudi Arabia, we long to be with loved ones and pray for a quick solution."

CSO presents second concert

Columbus Symphony Orchestra

The Columbus Symphony Chamber Orchestra will present its second concert of the season at 8 p.m. at the Springer Opera House on Tuesday, with violinist Stephanie Chase as guest violinist. The concert is sponsored by the David Rothchild Company and will be conducted by the CSO music director, George Del Gobbo.

The concert is a part of the Festival of American Arts which is a series of January and February events by the Columbus Symphony, Columbus Museum, Springer Theatre Company and the Columbus College Schwob School of Music celebrating the rich diversity that America artists in music, drama and the graphic arts have brought to our cultural life.

Del Gobbo's preconcert lecture will be given in the Springer auditorium from 7 to 7:30 prior to the concert and is free to all ticket-holders.

This is Stephanie Chase's second guest appearance with the Columbus Symphony. A bronze medalist and the top American prize winner in the 1982 Tchaikovsky Competition in Moscow, the violinist has recently scored triumphs with such diverse groups as the San Francisco Symphony, the Mexico City Philharmonic, the New York Philharmonic, and West Germany's Augsburg Symphony Orchestra.

Born in Illinois to parents who are both musicians, Chase first appeared with the Chicago Symphony at age nine. She gave her first Carnegie Hall performance in 1976 and her New York recital debut at Alice Tully Hall in 1978. Since then she has been in demand as a recitalist, chamber musician and in solo appearances throughout most of the world.

She performs on the classical violin as well as her Venetian 1742 Petrus Guarnerius violin. She is currently a member of the Boston Chamber Music Society and resides in New York.

The all-American program will consist of the Samuel Barber Concerto, Transcendental Variations by George Rochberg, and Three Visions of Merlin by Dan Welcher.

Tickets are $15 for adults and $5 for students and are available at the symphony office at 1445 2nd Avenue or by calling 323-5059 or at the Springer from 6 p.m. prior to the concert.

The type of box-board that's used for detergent and cereal boxes is often made from recycled newspapers. It's just one of the many products that was created out of the 5 million tons of U.S. newsprint that was recycled last year. More than a third of all newsprint was collected and turned into useful products again.

So do your part. After you read this ad, recycle this newspaper. Who knows? It might come back to you in its next life.

Fort Benning troops deployed to Saudi Arabia to serve in Operation Desert Shield are holding up well, according to officials from the 197th Infantry Brigade, the 36th Engineer Group, the 34th Medical Battalion and the 598th Maintenance Company.

Col. Dan Gritton, executive officer for the 197th Inf. Bde. now stationed in Saudi Arabia, maintains that the morale of the unit is "still OK" in spite of the uncertainty of the current situation.

"Morale did slack off minimally during the holiday season, but that is to be expected," continued Gritton. "Being away from loved ones during the holidays is a definite downer, but morale is as high as can be expected in this situation."

Conditions for units has also improved greatly over the four-month stint in the desert, said Gritton.

Areas in the desert that were once completely bare now hum with activity, and roads have been cut through the sand allowing supplies to move more easily to units in more remote areas of the desert, he said.

Units have tents with heaters as protection against the harsh desert winter, and hot showers are also readily available, he continued.

The soldiers of the 197th have Meals, Ready To Eat as their morning and noon meals, and they have a hot meal for dinner, he said.

Although many units have recreational facilities, Gritton said the soldiers' greatest enemy at this time is boredom.

"We are training hard at the present time, seven days a week, anywhere from eight to 12 hours a day. But, when the day is over, there's not a whole lot to occupy the soldiers' time," said Gritton.

Soldiers now have the use of a telephone center set up in the 197th area by AT&T, making it more convenient to talk with loved ones back home.

The center is equipped with 120 telephone units, and two maintenance personnel on location available 24 hours a day to alleviate any mechanical problems.

Soldiers sign up to use the facility and wait their turn in a recreation area. The average waiting time is anywhere from five to 15 minutes, said Gritton.

"This facility has really boosted the morale of the troops over here, said Sgt. 1st Class James Nathan, phone center non-commissioned officer in charge.

"It's great that soldiers have a way to get in immediate contact with the folks back home, especially since mail takes so long to arrive. This is really super," he added.

As for the rumor that the 197th will not be returning to Kelley Hill but moving to Fort Stewart to become part of the 24th Infantry Division, Gritton stresses that it is just that — a rumor.

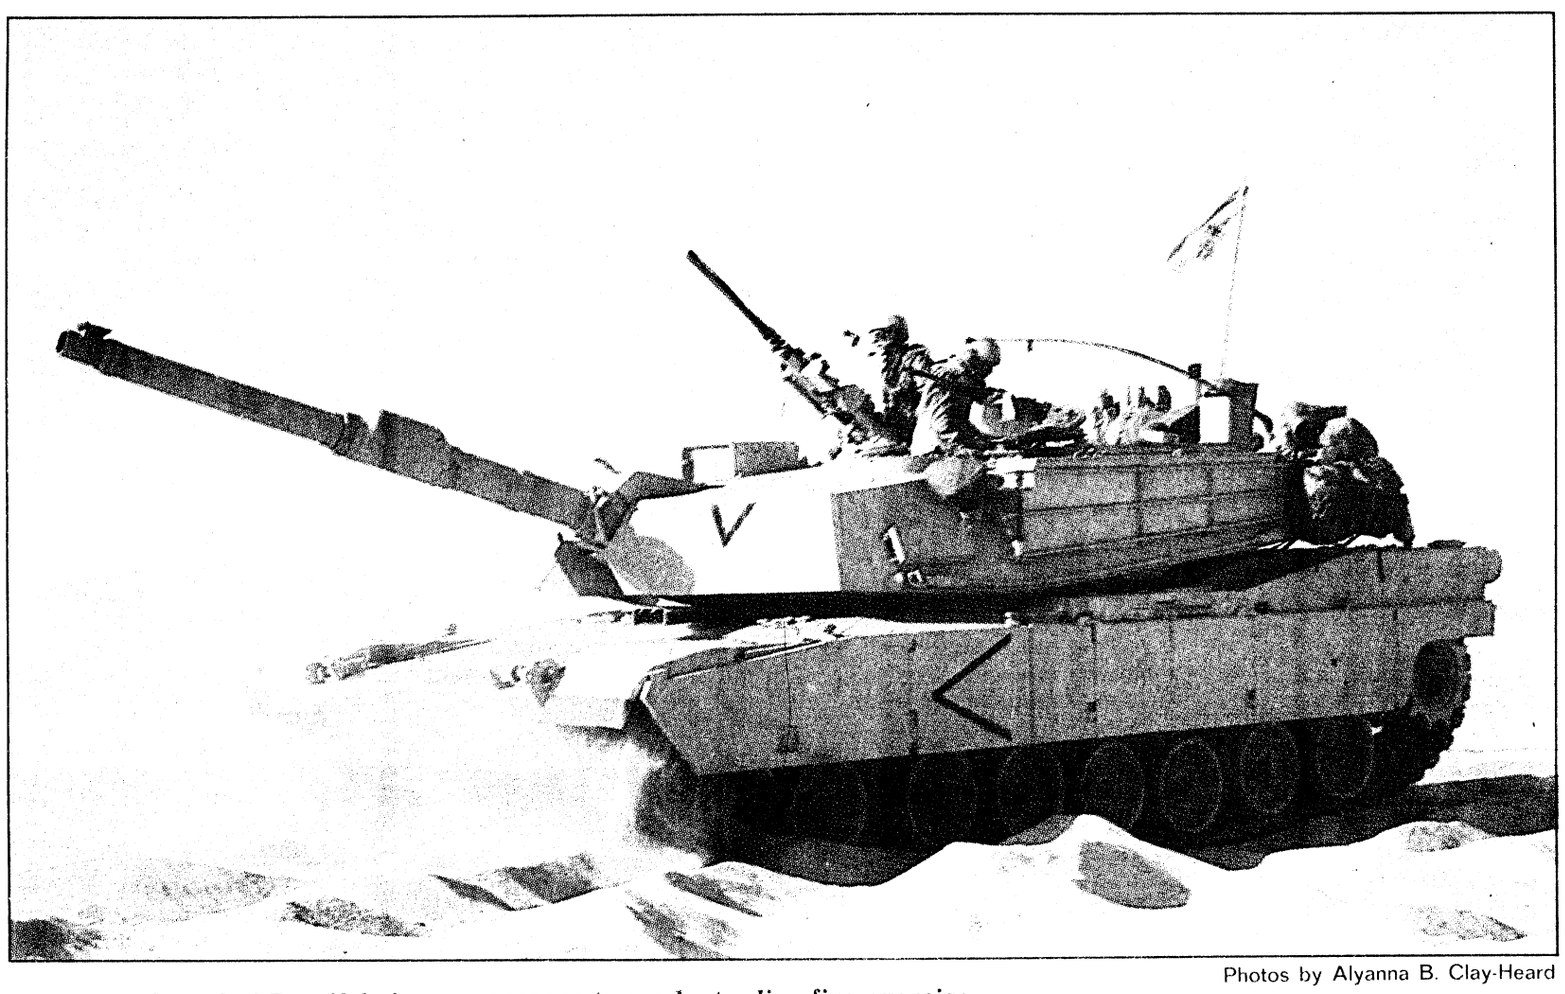
"There is no truth to that statement at all," he said. "Kelley Hill is home for the Sledgehammer Brigade, and when we have completed our Desert Shield mission, that is where we will return.

"We are attached to the 24th Infantry Division during this mission but only while we are in theater," he added.

Members of the 34th Med. Bn. are also holding up well, said Maj. Randy Maschek, commander of the 498th (Air Ambulance) Medical Company.

The unit's mission is to go to the front lines and retrieve wounded individuals from danger zones and transport them to an area where their medical condition can be further stabilized, he said.

"We are doing fine," said Maschek. "We are training hard on a daily basis, and I have every confidence in this unit to perform its mission should a critical situation arise," he added.



Lt. Col. Scott Peppler, executive officer of the 36th Eng. Grp., is "confident" of his unit's ability to perform their mission.

"Our main priorities have always been and will continue to be mobility, counter mobility, survivability and general engineering.

"This includes the creation of roads and helicopter pads for different units, creating barriers against the enemy, advising the commander of the engineer effort in a possible war scenario and building bridges," he said.

"We have performed several training exercises with the 24th Infantry Division on defensive and offensive operations," he added.

Peppler added that the unit would be moving side by side with the infantry units.

ITC soldiers offered free long distance calls

Infantry Training Center soldiers and their family members will be provided free three-minute, long distance phone calls to anywhere in the world at the Sand Hill Post Exchange today and Saturday from 6 to 10 p.m.

Officials said AT&T is providing the free calls because "Operation Exodus," a holiday leave program was canceled this year.

According to 1st Lt. Rick Anderson of ITC, the service began Wednesday and will continue today and Saturday. ITC personnel, including cadre and trainees, with a valid military identification card will be permitted a three-minute call to anywhere in the world, he said.

The calls must be made from three special telephones set up at the Sand Hill Post Exchange.

Civilians to receive RIF notices

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Civilian employees whose jobs are affected because of the move of the Infantry Test Board to Fort Hood, Texas, are being notified by letter today.

Supervisors are delivering 83 letters to their people, telling them of the changes in their work status.

For some, it will mean a change of jobs, but not in rating.

Others will be offered positions on post but at a lower rating, while others will find themselves with no available slots at Fort Benning after March 23.

While the move of the Infantry Board from Fort Benning means the abolition of 70 occupied positions, that many civilians won't actually find themselves out of work. Many of the employees will be absorbed into the current work force, and more could find positions on post prior to the March 23 date.

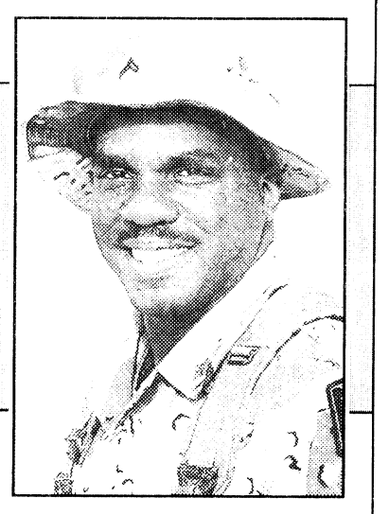
Right now, 18 full-time, permanent civilians and 12 intermittent civilians could be without jobs on that date.

The Reduction In Force comes as no surprise. Infantry Board people were told to expect the RIF during a meeting last year when officials announced that all the Army's test boards would be consolidated and moved to Fort Hood.

The Infantry Board has been at Fort Benning since December 1919. During those 71 years, the board was concerned with everything the infantry soldier shoots, carries, wears, rides in, eats, or otherwise used.

It was the board's mission to assist in making the infantry soldier a more effective and efficient "fighting machine."

All employees affected by the RIF, be it a change in job to a separation, will have counseling available to them.

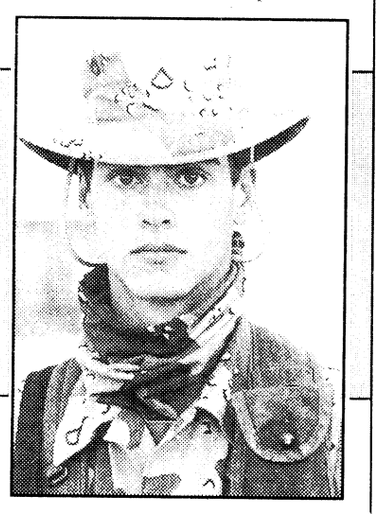


Those being separated will be helped in their job search and will be placed in a priority placement program.

Those going to jobs of lower rank will continue to receive their current salary rate for two years.

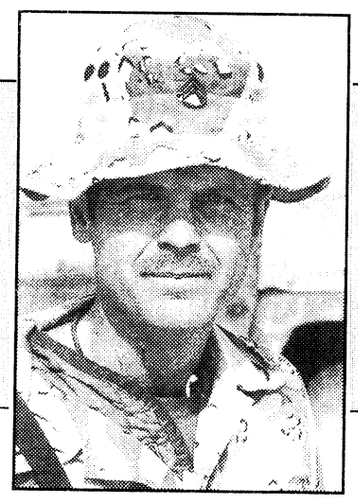
OPINION

VARIOUS VOICES:

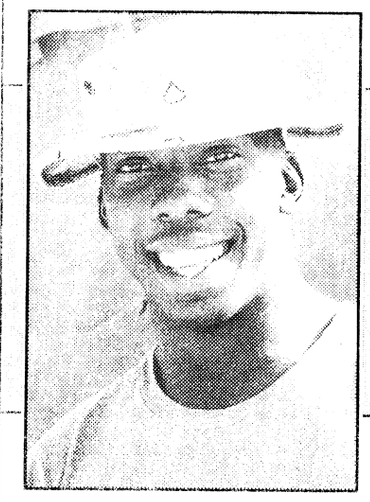


What effect has the Jan. 15 deadline had on you and your unit?

Cpl. Barron P. Scott, HHC, 1st Bn., 18th Inf. — "Having a deadline actually made morale in my unit go up. Waiting is the hardest part. Training has taken on a renewed urgency. Everyone wants to be sharp so we'll all come home safely. We're ready, but we've been ready; the deadline didn't change that any."



Spec. Jason P. Maser, HHC 1st Bn., 18th Inf. — "We've been training all along. We were hoping we would be leaving here without a fight, but we're ready to roll if it comes. We've been to all the ranges, all the equipment is up and our night vision goggles are working fine. We feel it's all down hill from here."



Pfc. Michael L. Clarke, 72nd Eng. — "The deadline hasn't had that much effect on my squad. Training is up some, but Jan. 15 is just another day to us. I feel it's pretty much just a political move. I don't think anything will happen, but if it does we're ready."

Sgt. 1st Class Paul G. Glasscock, Btry. A, 1st Bn., 41st FA — "The morale in my unit continues to be high. Everybody is to the point where it's 'Let's do it. If not, let's get peace talks under way where we can get back home.' Being away from our loved ones is the hardest part of all this."

Staff Sgt. John M. Wallace, Btry. A, 4th Bn., 41st FA — "Training has taken on a more serious tone. Morale has been higher, but it is still holding up. We've been here for four months and this date seems to carry more weight than any other. Everyone is a little apprehensive, but we're prepared."

Pfc. James A. Martin, 598th Maint. Co. — "It has made me see the light at the end of the tunnel. If we do take some action against Iraq and defeat them, we can all go home."

COMMENTARY

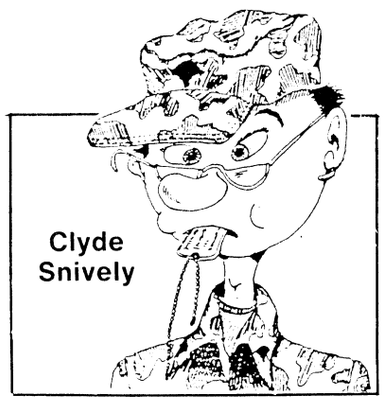
Dark glasses, desert BDUs, other fashion news

By Clyde Snively
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Warning. All ye entering the sixth floor of Building 4 — put on your dark glasses before getting off the elevator.

The once dark, dreary halls, were transformed into bright shining hallways.

New, brighter overhead lights were installed, the old, yellow, crumbling ceiling tile replaced, and the walls repainted a bright white from top to bottom.



As one person noted after the long elevator ride to the top, "I thought I'd died and gone to heaven. I half expected to see a host of angels coming out of the doors down the hall."

Others referred to the place as "Martin Army Community Hospital West." One wag said they should issue white coats to all the sixth floor denizens.

Speaking of clothes, I noticed the local newspaper was losing its fashion editor. He wants to go into public relations. Maybe he could enlist into the Army and come help us on the Bayonet, and I could get out and do a fashion column.

Here's what I know about fashion:

- Real soldiers wear battle dress uniforms to work. If they're stationed anywhere but the desert, the BDUs are green with black and brown splotches. If they go to the desert, they dress like chocolate chip cookies.
- Real soldiers don't have their BDUs starched. In fact no soldiers are supposed to have the BDUs starched. I do know that about the time the uniforms get soft and comfortable, they've also turned white and it's time to replace them.
- It's also a fact of life that you always need to replace a uniform item at the clothing sales store the day after a new price increase goes into effect.
- Real soldiers do wear civilian clothes off duty (you can still recognize them by their haircuts).
- My experience in this area is that about the time my civilian clothes are feeling truly broken in, where the fabric doesn't irritate my skin, Emma will turn them into rags.

For instance, the other day I went out to change the oil in my truck and discovered the rag I had in my hand was my favorite dress shirt.

"The collar's frayed, the cuffs are frayed, the elbows are almost gone, you can't wear it in public," she told me when I confronted her with what used to be my favorite, light blue, oxford dress shirt but was now just a limp pile of cloth in my hands.

There are a few things I haven't figured out about this clothes business.

Go out to field with real soldiers in the winter and how do they keep themselves warm. They wear down vests from L.L. Bean, British Commando sweaters from Royal Quartermaster Sales, insulated underwear from Sears, cold weather boots from Timberland and Gortex ski gloves by Grandoe.

"The only way to keep warm," they'll tell you. "The Army's stuff is no good," they'll say.

Go hunting or fishing with civilians in the winter and what are they wearing? Army fatigues, over Army-issued long johns, all under Army field jackets while the hands are protected by Army wool inserts inside their black leather shells. "The Army really knows how to make clothes to keep you warm," they'll tell you.

I guess it's all a case of whatever the other guy's got, has got to be better than what you got. There's probably a moral in here somewhere.

Soldiering is risky business; safety is an attitude

By Barry Williams

I like to say that I've been "born again" to safety. That's not meant in a blasphemous way. It's just that I don't know a better way to express how my attitude toward safety has changed since I started working at the Safety Center.

After being here almost a year, I've had enough time to get used to the questions about the patch above my right pocket and then the almost inevitable, "Safety Center? What's that?"

To tell the truth, when I got the phone call to come here I had the same reaction: "The Army Safety Center? What in the world is that?"

Of course, I knew all about safety. After all, I'd heard about it my whole career. Units had safety officers and NCOs who went to battalion meetings and put up posters on the bulletin boards. They checked the fire extinguishers to make sure they were up to date.

Safety people were harmless enough, really. But that post safety officer — his mission seemed to be to make my life as miserable as possible. If he wasn't coming around doing a safety inspection, he was telling me why I couldn't get a mission done the way I wanted to because it wouldn't be safe.

> "There is nothing glamorous or macho or professional about being hurt or killed in an accident."
> — Barry Williams

What was his problem, anyway? The Army is a risky business. If we weren't willing to accept a little risk, what were we doing in the Army? Sure, now and then someone was going to get hurt; but wasn't that the cost of doing business?

My feelings have done a complete turnaround since I got here.

We have a good system for processing and computerizing accidents. The Army is very thorough. All the cold, official language of accident reports eventually ends up stored for easy access in an efficient computer data base.

At first, this all looked to me like one more bureaucratic waste of money.

But then I had to retrieve data on cold-weather-related accidents and injuries for a series of articles for Countermeasure.

Laboriously, I sifted through the reports, and I began to understand several things.

First, the cost of these accidents was greater than I had ever imagined, whether measured in purely economic terms or in human costs.

Second, almost all the accidents could have been prevented if someone had followed proper procedures, used a little common sense, or taken a little more care. More often than not, there was an NCO or officer who could have acted to prevent the accident.

Third, there were patterns. After a while I could read a few lines of a report and almost predict the outcome.

I had done many of the same things they had. The difference was that I was lucky and got away with it. Obviously I had not recognized the odds against me when I trusted the welfare of myself and my soldiers to blind luck.

It wasn't long before I noticed the same sorts of patterns in other kinds of accidents. Being a soldier is riskier than being a civilian. But there is nothing glamorous or macho or professional about being hurt or killed in an accident, on or off duty.

I have pledged that I will never again accept risk blindly. From now on I want to know ahead of time what the risks of an operation are — whether conducting a water crossing or mowing grass at home.

When I can eliminate a hazard and still get the mission accomplished, I will. I will try to minimize risks I can't eliminate, and I will do my best to see that those around me do the same.

"A Poem for Freedom"

By Sarah R. Huffam

If a war does occur, won't that be a shame,
then all the presidents will be the blame.

There are lots of men and women gone to this foreign land, to fight in a battle they don't even understand.

I am speaking for all of the family members who are sad as can be, because their loved ones have not been set free.

I hope and pray the hostages will be coming home where they belong, to their families who love them and help them be strong.

God wants us to care for others,
and always love your sisters and brothers.

My God is in charge can't you see,
he is there to protect you and me.

My God has got the power, yes he does,
and he is looking down on us from above.

Editor's note: Huffam's husband, Lt. Col. Jefferson D. Huffam, is the commander of the 197th Support Battalion stationed in Saudi Arabia.

MPs: Pets becoming a problem on post

Military Police Activity

The control of pets is again becoming an increasing problem at Fort Benning. In accordance with USAIC Regulation 40-905, Pet and Animal Disease Control, owners of animals on post are responsible for preventing their animals from becoming a public nuisance.

Uncontrolled pets, unduly noisy animals and other similar problems are considered a nuisance and a detriment to public safety.

Pet owners should be considerate of their neighbors and especially cognizant of the health, safety and control responsibilities inherent in pet ownership.

On the other hand, others should respect the rights of pet owners and animals. Animals that are being properly cared for and controlled should not be provoked or unnecessarily harmed in any way.

Pet owners should take notice. Current policy allows the removal of a pet from the installation when:

- It has been impounded for running astray twice or been declared a nuisance three times.
- It has been involved in an unprovoked biting or scratching incident.

A dog or cat on Fort Benning must either be kept indoors or secured outdoors on the owner's premises, e.g. fenced, caged or tethered. Otherwise, the animal must be on a leash or under voice control.

Voice control means that the animal responds immediately to a voice command the first time the command is issued.

If this is not the case, then the animal is not considered under control.

Another problem with animals is nuisance complaints, such as dogs continually barking.

If a post resident owns an animal that has three nuisance complaints registered against it, the owner loses his/her privileges to keep the animal on the reservation.

If a post resident has been instructed to remove a pet from the installation but fails to do so, then the resident is subject to being evicted from post housing.

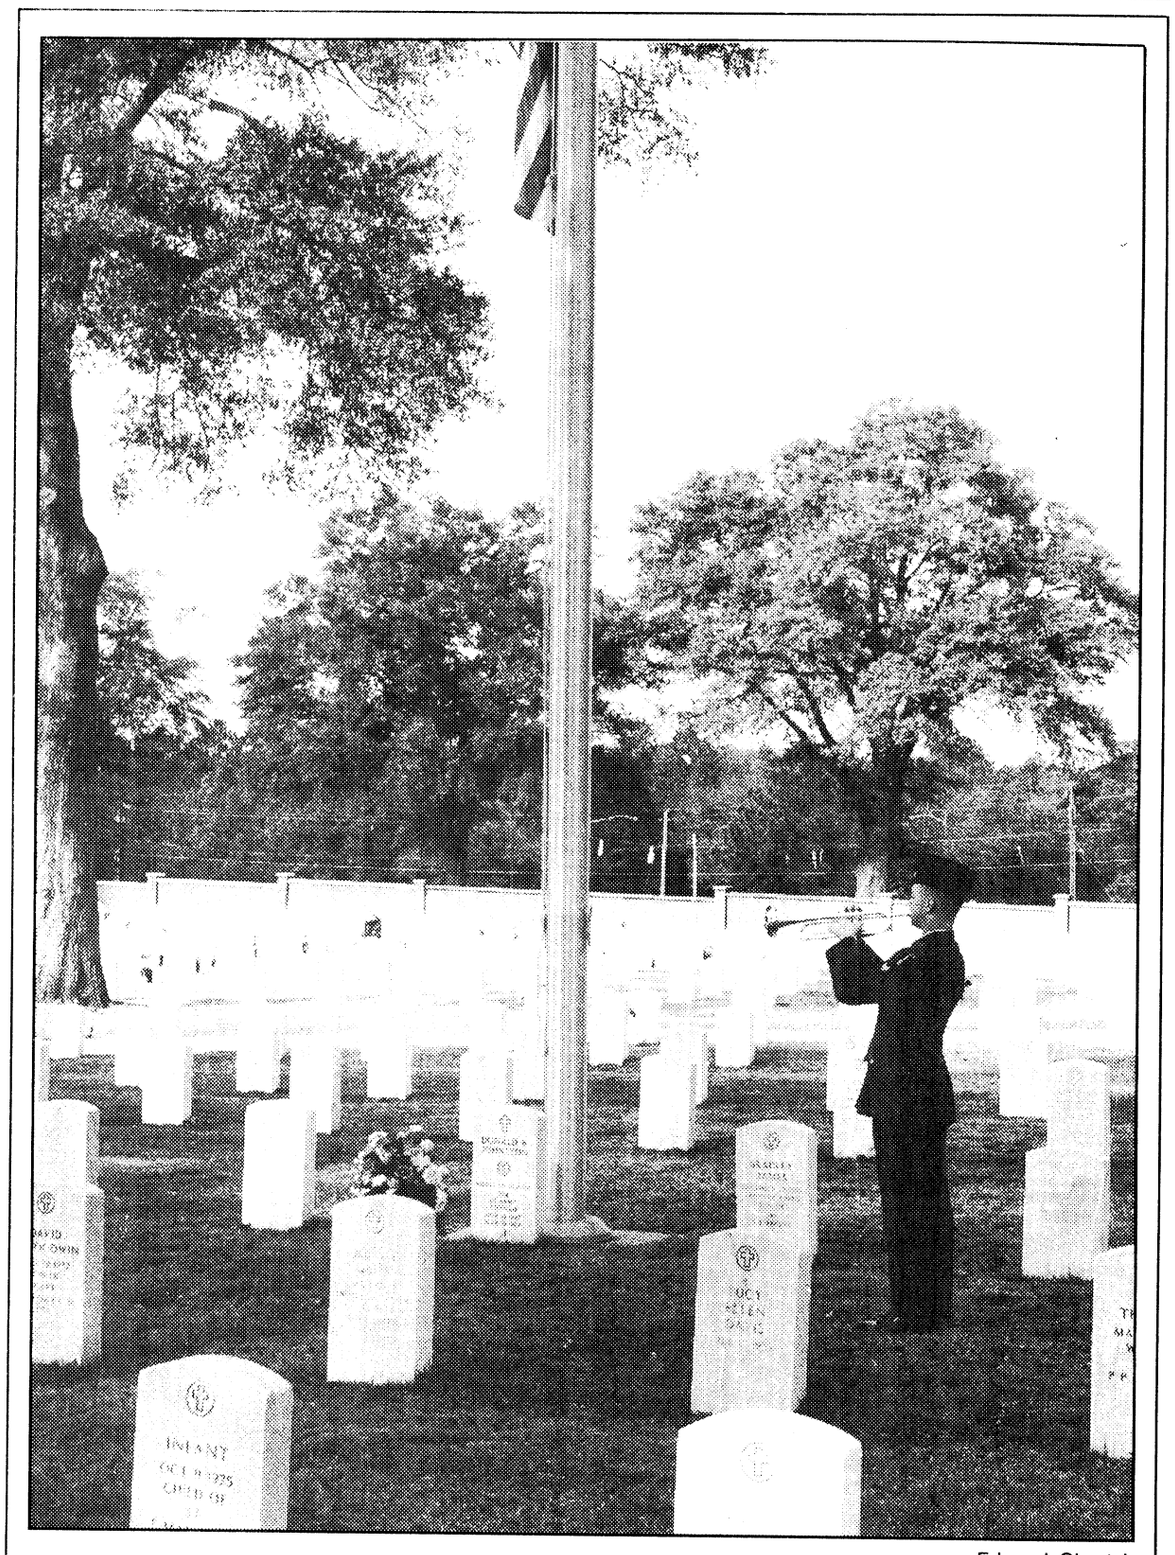
The Military Police enforce the provisions of the animal control regulation.

Only in cases when residents are in imminent danger from an animal should they attempt to capture, restrain, incapacitate or disable the animal.

Discharging of weapons at animals in the housing areas is not authorized, except in cases of self-defense.

The Military Police are equipped to enforce animal control safely and humanely. The MPs can be contacted regarding an animal related incident/complaint at 545-5222 or 545-5223.

To avoid confusion and ill will, the MPs do not normally capture animals observed in the housing areas without first receiving a report of an incident or complaint.



Upon capture by the MPs, the animal is taken to the Veterinary Activity, building 265, telephone number 545-1127.

The owner is contacted to reclaim the animal and is charged a fee for each day the animal is kept in confinement.

Although the Military Police enforce animal control laws on post, everyone must abide by them.

Pet owners must properly care for their pets and other residents must allow pet owners the opportunity to conform to the law.

Ultimately, the responsibility of controlling pets at Fort Benning is shared by all for the safety of all.

Govt. halts adoption payments

By Steve Jackson and Alyanna B. Clay-Heard
Bayonet staff writers

Adoptions expenses will no longer be reimbursed by the federal government, according to Finance and Accounting officials.

"Adoptions initiated prior to and finalized by Sept. 30, 1990, are reimbursable," said 1st Lt. Robert H. Sweigart, chief of the Pay and Examination Division.

"However, claims for adoptions started after the cutoff date will be returned to the applicant," he added.

"Initiated means the date of the initial home study report or placement of the child in the soldier's home for the purpose of adoption — whichever occurred later. No payment will be made after Sept. 30, 1991," he said.

"Claims that are returned should be retained in case the program starts up again," Sweigart added.

For more information, call Sweigart at 545-5819.

Legal assistance has tax exemption forms

Staff Judge Advocate's Office

1991 Alabama and Georgia Ad Valorem tax exemption forms are now available at the Legal Assistance Division, Office of the Staff Judge Advocate.

Units may pick up bulk quantities of the forms at the Legal Assistance Office in Building 5 at the intersection of Vibbert and Sigerfoos.

These forms must be signed by the soldier, and certified by either the unit commander or an officer of the Judge Advocate Generals' Corps.

First sergeants, adjutants, platoon leaders, or other unit personnel are not authorized to sign the form. If the form is improperly prepared, the tax office will reject it.

Before signing the form, the commander of judge advocate must see proof of the soldier's state of residency.

Usually a recent leave and earnings statement will be sufficient.

If soldiers bring the form to Legal Assistance for a signature, they must bring a recent LES and their identification card.

Family members may only claim the exemption with the form if they have a valid power of attorney executed by the soldier.

Legal Assistance recommends soldiers have their commander sign the forms.

There may be a considerable delay in obtaining the signature of a judge advocate at the Legal Assistance Office due to regularly scheduled client appointments.

For more information, call Legal Assistance at 545-3281.

Women speak out about desert life

By Alyanna B. Clay-Heard
Bayonet staff writer

It is often said that behind every great man, there is a great woman.

But, in Saudi Arabia, female soldiers serving in Operation Desert Shield say they are quite able to hold their own.

Contrary to rumors that female service members are finding it hard to adapt to the rigors of desert field life, many women feel they have adjusted well in spite of the circumstances.

Lt. Marie Pomilla, personnel officer and acting public affairs officer for the 36th Engineer Group now stationed in Saudi Arabia, said she feels that the female soldiers in the unit are more than qualified and able to work side-by-side with their male counterparts.

"I am having no problems with the current situation. This is my job — whether I'm in the desert, on a field training exercise, or back at home base. All I can do is the best job that I can do, and my being a female has nothing to do the manner in which I perform my duties here," said Pomilla.

Other women in the unit are quick to agree with Pomilla.

Spec. Evelyn Evans, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 36th Engineer Group, is very positive about the female's role in Operation Desert Shield.

"I think it's important for women to be here as well as men," she said. "We're all soldiers and have a job to do.

"Actually, I don't see what's so incredible or hard to believe about it," she continued. "Back at Fort Benning, we went about performing these same duties on a daily basis and no one blinked an eye. Now we do these same things in Saudi Arabia and we're heroes. It's beyond me."

Pfc. Lenita Smith, also of HHC, 36th Engineer Group, feels that conquering the desert is all a state of mind.

"As with many things in life, this is only as hard as you make it," she said.

"We are also giving the women of Saudi Arabia something to think about concerning the role women can play in society," said Sgt. Laura Bidlack, HHC, 36th Engineer Group.

Engineers build roads in desert

By Marie E. Pomilla
36th Engineer Group

SAUDI ARABIA — Saudi desert terrain often makes pushing supplies to forward units difficult. Alleviating the problem is the responsibility of battalions of the 36th Engineer Group.

"After all, mobility is one of the four main missions of the engineers," said 1st Lt. Stan Hall, 36th Engineer Group, responsible for road building.

However complicated the construction of Mobile Supply Routes may seem, according to Spec. Clay A. Fisher, "It's a fairly simple process. A grader, with a large blade, begins by stripping off the overburden, covering an area about one lane's width."

"Next," Fisher explained, "loose sandy spots remaining on the road are removed by a small emplacement excavator."

Then, marl is spread on the road.

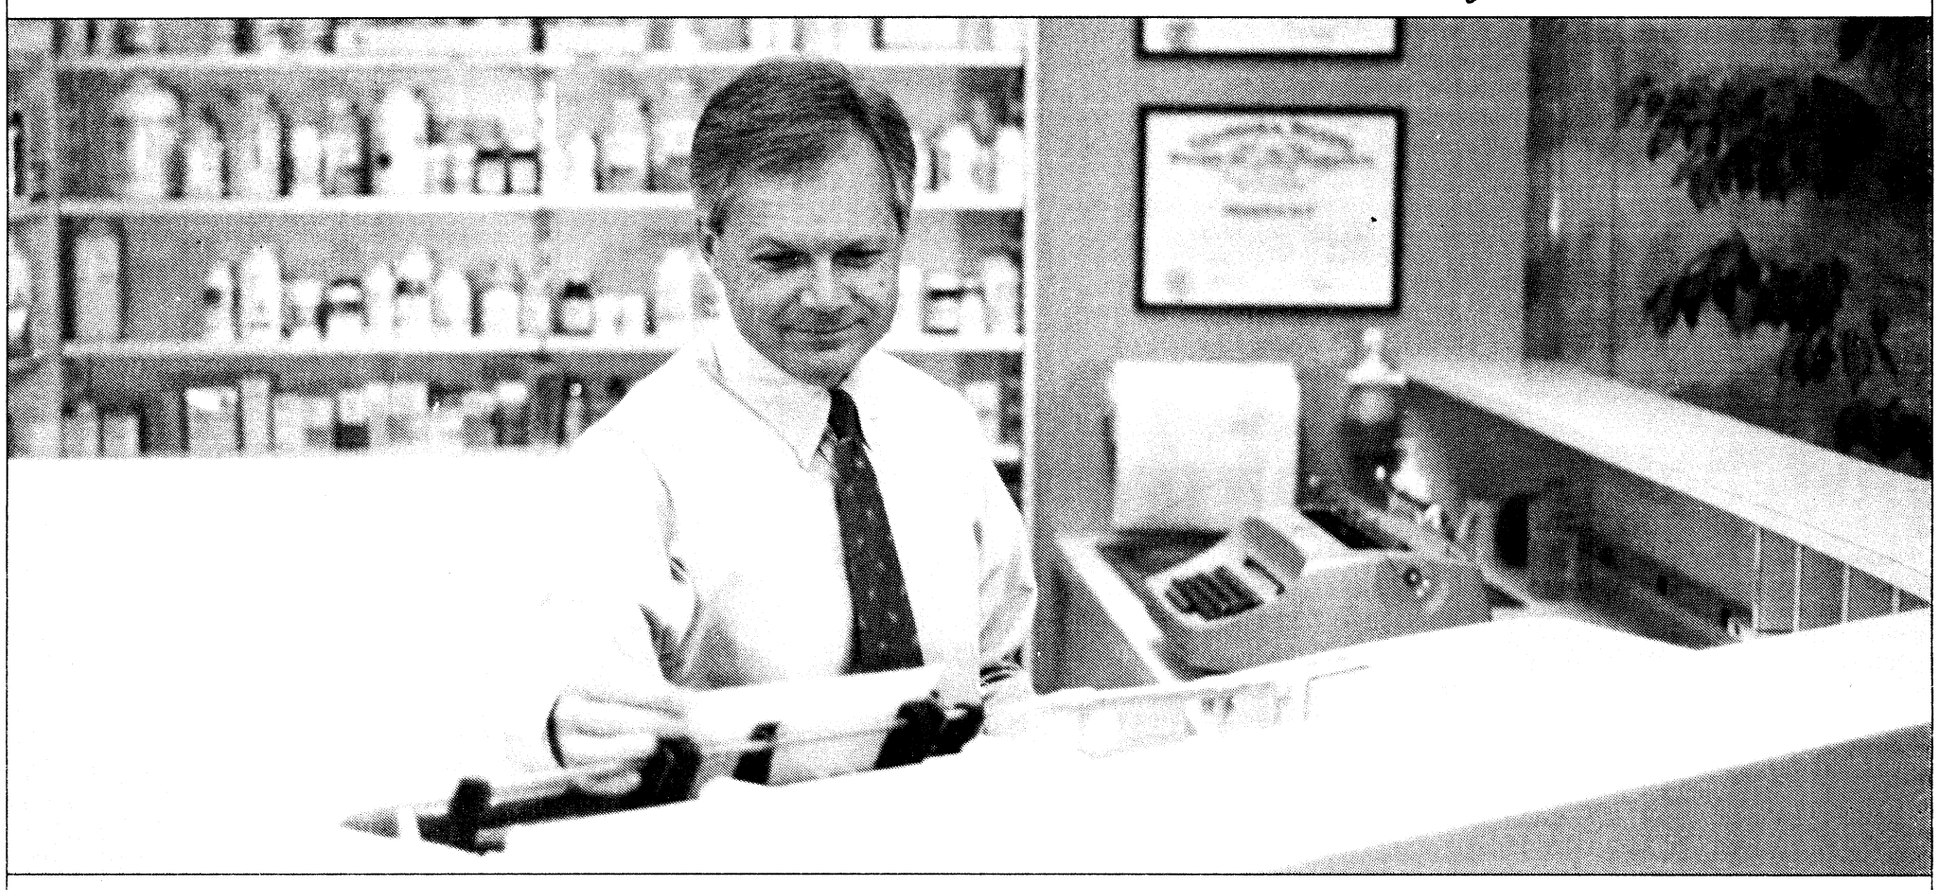
"Marl is a limestone or clay material with a high moisture content," said Sgt. John E. Dunaway, heavy equipment operator, non-commissioned officer in charge of the marl pit for the 5th Engineer Battalion (Combat). "We find the best marl in low lying areas and extract it with a SEE."

"A dump truck or scraper drops 8-12 inches of marl on the road," Fisher continued explaining. "A bomag, (high speed compactor) follows the dump truck driving over the marl, crushing the large pieces."

"Water is then sprinkled over the marl with a distributor for further compaction," said Spec. Jeffrey A. Drotos, 92nd Engineer Battalion, water distributor operator. "Graders go over the road to level out the surface and provide an even lift."

Spec. James G. Watterson, 5th Engineer Battalion said, "As a combat engineer unit, we don't typically work on road projects. But this road, Faysal Range Road, is important. It will allow carriers to transport track vehicles to the range without adding unnecessary wear and tear to their tracks."

Certain areas, depending on their usage require more than a "combat trail" and must be coated with asphalt. "This treatment," Hall said, "will greatly improve the life expectancy and trafficability of the road. Also, it will cut down on the amount of dust."



"First we lay the primer coat called medium cure, MCI. This binds the soil together forming the base." Hall continued, "After allowing the MCI to cure 24 to 48 hours, the rapid cure 2 (RC2) is immediately applied with rock gravel."

Pvt. Gary Lindsay, an asphalt distributor, said "The RC2 is a tack coat and bonds the rock to the base. A steel wheel roller follows the gravel, compacting and further bonding it all together."

Elements of each battalion of the 36th Engineer Group (Combat) are constructing roads. The 92nd Engineer Battalion (Combat) (Heavy) are working on MSR Cadillac. While 299th Engineer Battalion (Combat), from Fort Sill, Okla., and 362nd Combat Support Engineers are building MSR Volo. Faysal range road is the 5th Engineer Battalion's responsibility.

All the units are working hard and feel their mission is important. "This is the best and shortest route to get supplies up north to the combat elements," said Pfc. Ronald E. Ferguson, 92nd Engr Bn. "That's what it is all about."

FORSCOM News Service

More zip codes have been established for Operation Desert Shield.

Officials said the numbers should be used as the New York APO number for mail being sent to soldiers stationed in Saudi Arabia.

Using these numbers helps deliver personal mail faster, and the list doesn't represent all units deployed, officials said.

The U.S. Postal Service will grant more APOs down to brigade level, and mail should be addressed to the unit in which the soldier is attached or assigned.

Mail for a specific soldier should be addressed as follows:

'Vanguard' soldiers re-enlist in Saudi desert

By D.L. Bridges
197th Infantry Brigade

SAUDI ARABIA — A special day dawned recently for a pair of "Vanguard" soldiers of Company C, 2nd Battalion, 18th Infantry. The two, Staff Sgt. Robert Foreman and Cpl. Isaac Fripp, repeated the oath of enlistment during a ceremony at the sun-soaked Co. C assembly area.

Foreman and Fripp share the honor of being the first Vanguards to re-enlist since the battalion deployed on Operation Desert Shield. Fripp has the added distinction of being the first initial term soldier to re-enlist in the 197th Infantry Brigade during the deployment.

Foreman is Fripp's squad leader, and both consider themselves career soldiers. Fripp has several family members who have served in the Army, including a brother currently stationed in Panama. He made his decision to re-enlist a family affair, with his wife, Dalphine, and oldest daughter sharing in the decision.

"It wasn't easy, and I thought about it long and hard before deciding this was where I really wanted to be," Fripp said.

It was Foreman's fourth enlistment in 13 years, and he also involved his wife, Ute, in the decision. Foreman said he had received job offers, but decided that family benefits for the military outweigh those in the civilian sector.

Foreman's re-enlistment came on the heels of his deployment to Saudi Arabia after serving a year in Korea. "Three days after I arrived at Benning I was on my way to Saudi Arabia," he said.

533rd Trans. services desert units

By Marie E. Pomilla
36th Engineer Group

SAUDI ARABIA — Servicing all Army non-divisional units in the theater, the 533rd Transportation Company, 530th Service and Support Battalion, 1st Corps Support Command, resupplies the "beans and bullets" on a daily basis according to 1st Sgt. Bobbie J. Hollis.

The 533rd, a medium truck company, utilizes military trailers and tractors to deliver their goods to a trailer transfer point. "At this time," explains Company Commander Capt. Daniel K. Street, "the receiving units pick up their supplies.

"We have driven 288,767 accident free miles as of Dec. 4," said Sgt. 1st Class Lawrence Young, company truck master.

Over those "accident free" miles, Young's trucks have delivered several tons of ammunition and about four million gallons of water.

"We have gotten to the point where we have begun to catch up on hauling ammo," explained Staff Sgt. Lonnie McCain. "For the first two and a half months we didn't slow down."

Although ammo delivery has slowed some, water delivery is a continuous mission.

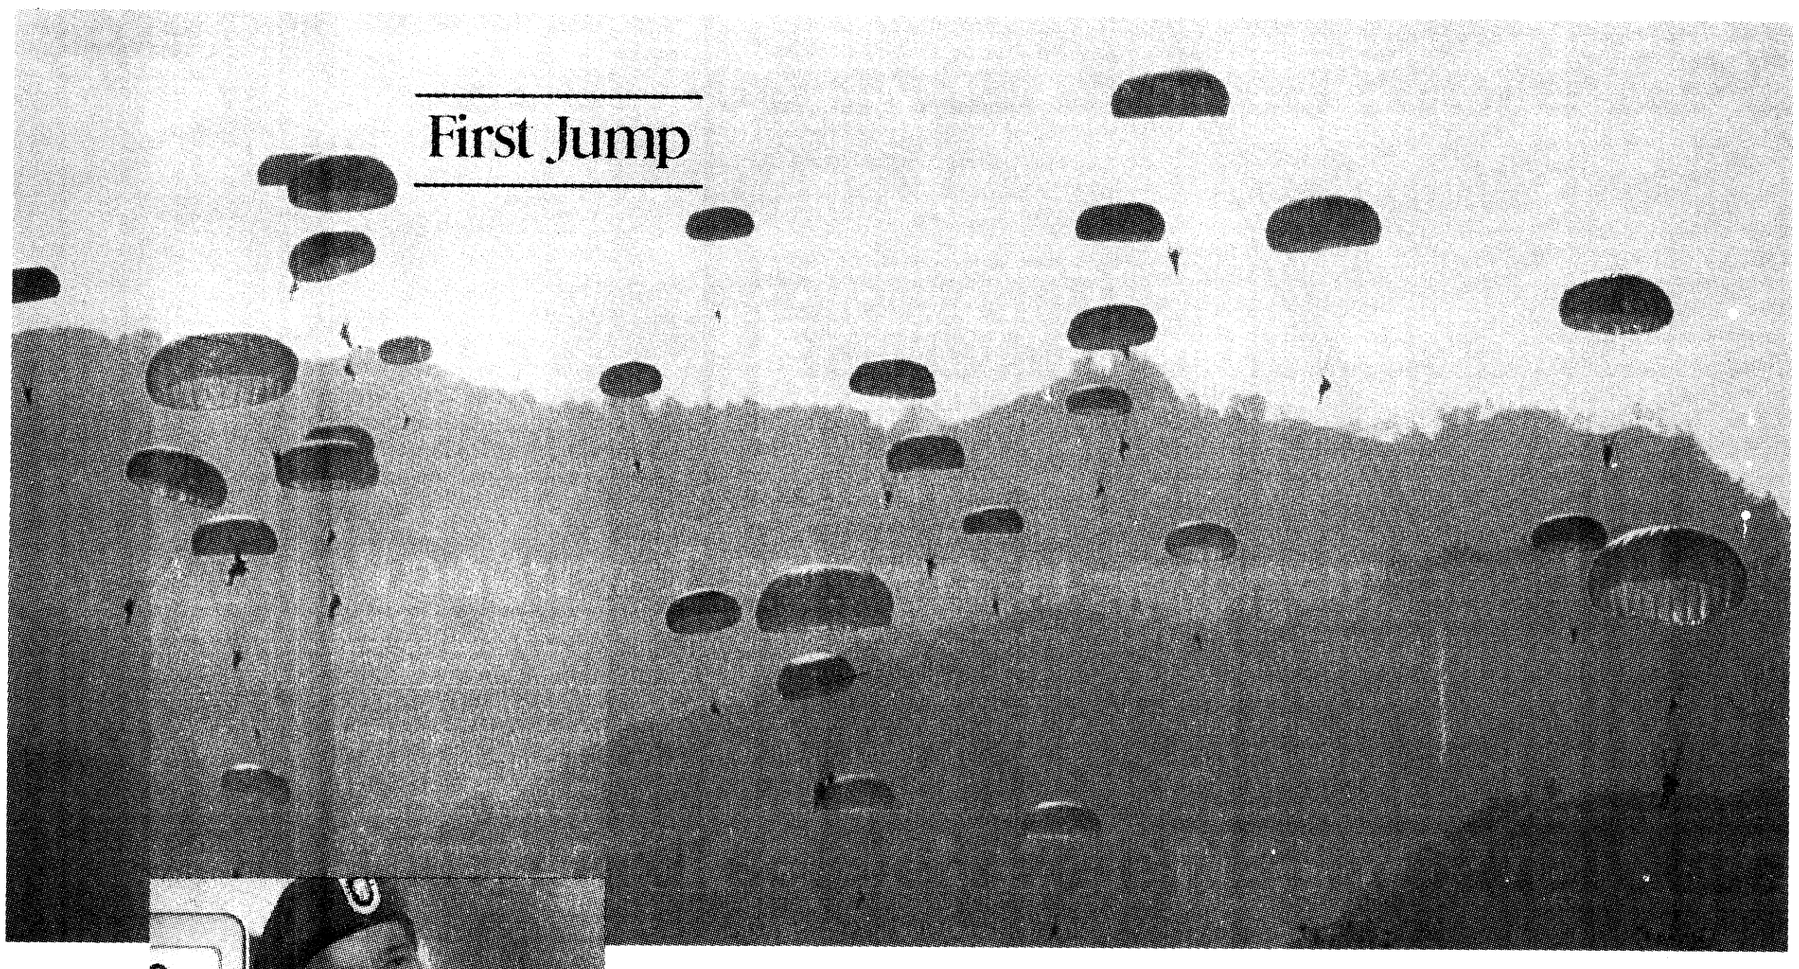
"Water is transported in semi-mounted fabricated tanks," said Staff Sgt. Robert C. Williams, "before they leave the site, all blivets of water are inventoried and checked for serviceability."

Approximately 75 percent of the haul missions are routine, Street said.

This allows time for testing and licensing.

"New drivers are trained on the basics of driving, especially safety, then issued a training license," Young said. "They are required to drive 400 shotgun hours and 600 actual driving hours." Upon completion of driving hours the driver's are tested to insure they are ready for the road.

With the influx of new drivers and a set routine, soldiers are let with time on their hands. "To give the troops something to do in their spare time, the soldiers created a dayroom," McCain said.



"Staff Sgt. Cornelious Cane was the architect and designer. But we all pitched in."

The newly finished dayroom is complete with air conditioning, television, and a VCR.

Many soldiers relax there at night both the 533d and other units around the base camp.

Serving all the Army's non-divisional units is a big responsibility, but one that Street is sure his company can handle.

"The best soldiers in the Army are right here," Street said. "They won't let me down."

Your rights as a taxpayer

American Forces Information Service

The Taxpayer Bill of Rights, signed into law as part of the Technical and Miscellaneous Revenue Act on Nov. 10, 1988, clarifies and extends the rights of taxpayers.

Internal Revenue Service officials say highlights of the Bill of Rights section include:

- Personal and financial information will be kept confidential;
- Interest will be paid on delayed refunds;
- Right to appeal examiner's audit findings; and
- Free assistance in preparing returns by providing publications, and walk-in service.

Under the act, a taxpayer can request that penalties be dropped if the advice given by IRS employees is erroneous. However, the interest due will not be canceled.

According to the IRS, a person has a show that reliance on the advice was reasonable and that the tax return was filed after receiving the information from the IRS.

To determine if there is reasonable cause, the IRS needs the date and time of the call; name of the IRS employee; the question asked and the specific facts given to the employee; the answer given by the IRS; and if the taxpayer tried to find the answer in any IRS publication.

A taxpayer is liable for the least amount of tax due under the law. If the tax return is questioned, the IRS must send a letter requesting more information or explaining why a change needs to be made to the return.

If additional taxes are owed, the IRS will send a bill describing the tax and how much is owed. If the taxpayer is unable to pay the bill, the IRS may agree to payment by installments.

Either before or at an interview, the IRS must explain the audit system and how it works.

The taxpayer has the right to ask that the time and place for the audit be convenient. The taxpayer also has the right to have an attorney, certified public accountant or other authorized individual accompany or represent him at the audit.

If a taxpayer is successful in a court action against the IRS, the court may decide that the government will pay reasonable litigation and administrative costs.

A taxpayer may bring court action against the federal government to recover the lesser of actual damages up to $100,000 or actual economic damages plus costs of the court action if an IRS employee recklessly or intentionally violates the Internal Revenue Code of regulations.

The IRS must wait 30 days before seizing property after notifying the taxpayer of the seizure action. Also, after a bank levy is served, there is a 21-day hold period before the funds will be sent to the IRS. The levy takes effect on the day the bank receives it.

A complete summary of a taxpayer's rights is in IRS Publication 1, Your Rights as a Taxpayer. Copies are available by calling 1-800-829-3676.

Tax help available

By Agatha Hudson James
Bayonet editor

Federal and state tax assistance will be available at Fort Benning for soldiers and family members beginning in February.

- The post's Tax Office opens Feb. 4 and will be stocked with federal tax forms and some state tax forms. Operating hours will be from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. Monday through Friday, and the office is located in Building 5 at the corner of Vibbert and Sigerfoos.
- Tax volunteers will have tables set up at the Post Exchange at the mall Feb. 9, March 2 and April 6 from 9:30 a.m. to 1 p.m. to provide assistance.

Jane Winand, a civilian attorney with the Office of the Staff Judge Advocate, said individuals are encouraged to bring their federal and state tax forms and booklets with them.

Also, individuals seeking assistance should bring all their paperwork, including W-2 forms and interest statements, Winand said .

- For soldiers on post needing assistance, each unit has a tax adviser, Winand said. "One soldier from each company is tasked to provide tax assistance," she said. "If a soldier needs to know who his unit tax adviser is, he should contact his first sergeant or unit commander."
- For Desert Shield family members, tax assistance will be available through the unit chain of concern.
- Also, representatives from the Social Security Administration will be at the Main Post Chapel Annex Feb. 7 from 10 a.m. until 2:30 p.m. to take applications for Social Security numbers.

Winand said changes in tax laws now require Social Security numbers for anyone 2 years old or older.

A certified copy of the birth certificate and some other identifying record such as school or shot records are needed at the time of application, she said.

- Also, the last day of filing — April 15 — tax helpers will be at the post office on main post from 6 p.m. to midnight.

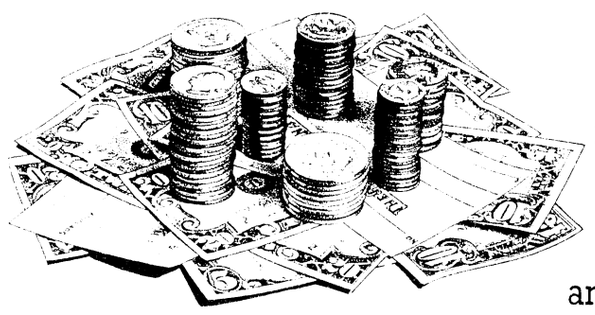
Basic quarters allowance? Overseas moving costs? Hazardous duty pay? Deductible or not deductible?

For the 3 million members of the U.S. armed forces, figuring out federal income taxes can be confusing. The Internal Revenue Service has a step-by-step brochure to make it easier.

IRS Publication 3, Tax Information for Military Personnel, discusses major issues such as what pays should be included in gross income; these include basic pay and re-enlistment bonuses.



Dependency exemptions, home sale rules and itemized deductions are included.

Exercise helps 197th sharpen medical skills

By Willie Hay
197th Infantry Brigade

SAUDI ARABIA — Military medicine, like other combat skills, requires practice, as doctors and medical specialists of the 197th Infantry Brigade learned recently during their first joint service mass casualty exercise in Saudi Arabia.

"One of our physician's assistants, Chief Warrant Officer Steven Heckel of the 197th Support Battalion, suggested we coordinate with the Air Force for a C-130 to carry the mass casualty exercise through to its completion," said Maj. Donn Richards, brigade surgeon.

"What made this exercise different was the cooperation from everyone involved, not only within the brigade but also between the different services," he continued.

"The scenario called for 50 victims of an artillery attack to overwhelm the 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor Battalion aid station, which reacted by sending out an advanced trauma life support team consisting of a doctor, a physician assistant and six medics to conduct initial screening and transport patients to the war.

According to Dr. (Maj.) Clark Cobb, a physician with the 2nd Bn., 69th aid station, each patient carried a field medical card with a description of his injuries.

"When the patients arrived at the aid station, the platoon sergeant, who is the senior medic, and I triaged, or sorted, them according to their injuries," Cobb said.

"We categorized them as immediate — those needing treatment right away to save their lives; delayed — those whose injuries were less severe; expectant — those not likely to survive; and minimal — those with minor injuries who could be returned to duty."

The triaged patients were quickly litter-carried to medical teams headed by a doctor or physician's assistant for treatment, which included either a simulation annotated on their medical card or actual administration of oxygen, bandages and splints.

"By actually treating the patients with these expendable supplies, the medics were able to practice medicine without exhausting all the resources of the aid station," Cobb said.

"This is the first time we've had a real world mass casualty exercise, and it's as close as we can get to combat medical experience without actually treating combat casualties," Heckel agreed.

After treatment at the aid station, the patients were taken by ambulance to the Brigade Clearing Station operated by Company B, 197th Support Battalion. From there, they were further transported to an airfield, loaded aboard a C-130 and flown to the 5th Fleet Naval Hospital. Those patients determined to need further treatment were flown by helicopter to hospital ships in the Persian Gulf.

"For this exercise, we decided to send all the patients through the system to test the medical assets we have at the battalion, as well as selected groups of medical personnel at brigade and those available through the other military services," Cobb said.

All of the Sledgehammer Brigade medical personnel said they benefited from their participation in the exercise.

"It's fine to have a mass casualty plan on paper; but, until you actually exercise it, you can't iron out the discrepancies on such things as who triages or who runs out to meet the vehicles arriving with wounded soldiers," said Dr. (Capt.) Nadja West, a physician attached to Co. B, 197th Spt. Bn.

"Carrying the field medical cards throughout the process also allows us to see what treatment patients have already received and which additional measures are needed before we send them to the hospital," she continued.

For the medics, the exercise was an opportunity to sharpen their medical skills and gain experience in a combat scenario.

"We're all cross-trained to perform each other's jobs in the event one of us were to become a casualty," said Spec. Kim Stewart, a medic with Co. B, 197th Spt. Bn. "The doctor in charge of the team designates which functions each medic will perform, but everyone is ready to step in if necessary."

Civilians in Saudi Arabia motivate soldiers with goodies

By Joseph G. Fridley
197th Infantry Brigade

SAUDI ARABIA — "Here comes the motivators" is the cry throughout the 72nd Engineer Company's camp. Everyone checks his watch. It's 11 a.m. "They're on time again."

Every Friday for the last seven weeks, employees of Stone and Webster International Corp. and the Arabian Consulting Engineering Centre have visited the soldiers of the 197th Infantry Brigade. Employees bring cold sodas, fruit, candy, and, perhaps most importantly, news from home and a different face to talk to.

"I enjoy doing this," said Sneed T. Adams Jr., vice president of Stone and Webster. "I want to show the soldiers that they are very much appreciated here, and that we support them 100 percent."

Prior to the American deployment, the Westerners here were very frightened in the early days of the Middle East crisis; many sent their families back to the States.

"I enjoy the conversation with the soldiers, and we plan on visiting them as long as they're here in Saudi Arabia," said David L. Briner, computer graphic supervisor for the Arabian Consulting Engineering Centre.

Stone and Webster started a program whereby the soldiers can send a "Desert Fax" back to the United States. Faxes take two to three days to reach the recipients, while regular mail takes at least a week.

"I really enjoy sending a Desert Fax because I can get a message back home fast," said Sgt. Courtney Atchison, a squad leader in the 1st Platoon. "I trust and fully appreciate the services that these guys are doing for us, and everyone in my squad looks forward to their visits."

Spec. Paul Izrel, from 2nd Platoon, added, "I really appreciate all they're doing for us. They even went so far as developing photographs for me free."

Recently, a video camera was brought out and personal greetings were filmed to be sent back to the states. According to Adams, NBC News in New York agreed to break the film clips down and send them to stations close to the soldiers' hometowns for broadcast during the holiday season.

"They are as committed to this as we are to our mission," said Capt. Mike Iverson, company commander. "Their impact on morale has been just incredible."

Recently, the employees of Stone and Webster sponsored a cookout for the 72nd and the 197th Military Police Platoon.

"I felt that the guys were really showing support for us," said Spec. John Mozurkewich, of the 72nd. "I had a great time and I really enjoy them coming out."

"With Thanksgiving the day before and with the cookout, it was two days well deserved for the men of the 72nd," Iverson said.

Soldiers from Co. A, 197th Spt. Bn., eat hot meals contributed by Saudi Arabian Zahre Masri.

By Todd Tolson
197th Infantry Brigade

SAUDI ARABIA — Fried chicken in the middle of the Saudi Arabian desert? Now that's something you don't expect everyday.

But, through the efforts of one man, hot meals are available for soldiers.

Zahre Masri, affectionately known as "Z-Man," was recently honored by Maj. Gen. Barry R. McCaffrey, 24th Infantry Division commander, at the 197th Support Battalion dining facility.

Masri has been designated by the king of Saudi Arabia to be the sole individual to provide rations support, fresh meats, milk and supplements to all American soldiers in theater at no cost, said Chief Warrant Officer W. Joe Lewinski, XVIII Airborne Corps food adviser.

"He supports more than 194,000 Army troops in more than 73 locations daily with fresh supplements, breakfast and dinner meals. Additionally, he provides food for 33,000 Marines, and 15,000 British and French troops, along with the Arab forces in country."

"Since the day we got here, the Saudi government has provided our water, food, transportation and shelter," McCaffrey said. "His corporation has provided food to our division, brigades, and companies."

There is a big difference in the A-ration meal and the T-rations soldiers are normally served for dinner.

"A-ration meals are perishable because all the meats, vegetables, and fruits are fresh. It's difficult to serve these meals in the desert because of the water and refrigeration required," said Sgt. 1st Class Theotis Herron, the 197th Infantry food advisory noncommissioned officer in charge.

Preparing fresh food in the desert is no easy task. "The menu for the dinner meal was chicken, steamed rice, gravy, peas, salad, pastries, milk, sodas, and juice," said Sgt. 1st Class Jerome LaBran, the Support Battalion dining facility manager.

"Chicken makes me miss home more," said Pvt. 1st Class Matthew Freeman of Company A, 197th Spt. Bn. "It's just like my mom makes."

"The food's great," said Spec. Todd Dunlap of Co. A, 197th Spt. Bn., commenting on the hot meal served that evening. "It's a good thing to do for the troops. What really made me happy is when we got butter."

The 197th Infantry Brigade is currently serving hot meals once every four days."

"My dream is to get you two A-ration meals a day, and I promise you I'll do it," said Masri after receiving an engraved 24th Inf. Div. plaque. "I appreciate what you guys are doing and we'll try to make it much nicer for you here."

Post ranger measures up well against life's odds

By James C. Rupp
Bayonet staff writer

Martin Luther King Jr. once said "The measure of a man is not where he stands in moments of comfort and convenience, but where he stands in times of challenge . . ."

Staff Sgt. Vada King

If this is true, then Staff Sgt. Vada King, Company B, 1st Battalion, 507th Parachute Infantry Regiment, measures up well against the odds of life.

In August,1988, while King was assigned to 1st Bn., 6th Inf. Division, stationed in Illeshien, Germany, he was in the field participating in a training exercise when a rigged explosive detonated in front of him, covering his face with blood and burns.

Three days later, he arrived at Bethesda Naval Hospital for treatment.

In most cases such an injury would result in a medical discharge or a voluntary seperation. In King's case however, he remained in the service of his country.

By Sept. 2, he was back in Germany, ready for duty.

King, however, was not declared active duty until Feb. 22, 1989. He accredits this to the support he received from his superiors in their written efforts for his cause.

King appears a rigid, intense individual, with the soft-spoken demeanor of an accomplished man. This is offset and emphasized by the plain black patch he wears over his left eye, giving his features an additional hardness. Not someone you'd like to irritate in a back alley, but certainly someone you'd like to have watching your back in one.

"There's no handicap," King said, confidently, his head resting nonchalantly upon his hand, "There's no difference. The only true handicap is in the mind."

There is no doubt, no pause for thought in between words, the syllables ringing solidly from a heartfelt truth.

King is an airborne instructor with the 507th, fresh from his most recent assignment — Ranger School — believed by some to be the most grueling school in the military.

In addition to being a ranger, King is a qualified jumpmaster and has graduated from Pathfinder School as well.

"I hate people telling me that I can't do something," King said. "They say, 'You know . . .you lost your eye; you can't do this.' But, I don't believe anybody but myself," he said in a strong, quiet voice, but without bitterness.

The only time there is bitterness is when King speaks about how his injury could have been prevented. Simple government-issued safety goggles could have stopped the injury, he said, and could have protected him from the blast of the booby trap.

According to King, most soldiers in combat military occupational specialties are issued the goggles but do not wear them; or worse, the soldiers do not even receive them because of their "faddish" appearance.

These days, King spends his time as "Sgt. Airborne" at the 507th PIR and tends to his 3-year-old daughter, Kawannis, now that his wife, Staff Sgt. Mary King, has been deployed with the 498th Medical Company.

"I guess I had something to prove,"he said, leaning back in his chair. " You can do anything you want to do. As long as your mind wants it, your body will follow."

The chiseled face finally cracks in the impression of a smile. "I think I proved my point."

Students compete nationally in Junior Olympics track meet

Fort Benning Schools

Students in the Fort Benning Schools are competing in track and field on the national level. Four students from Loyd School and one student from Faith competed in the National Junior Olympics for cross country held recently in Omaha, Neb.

Michelle June, John Cox, Howard Escobar and Lester June of Loyd and Crystal Johnson of Faith are members of the local Blazers Athletic Club. The youth program serves children who are 8 to 14 years old.

Junior Olympics trials will be held in March for summer track and field events. Qualifying athletes will then receive additional training in other events such as the hurdles, long jump, shot put, and high jump. They are also eligible to compete in the Hershey Nationals in May.

"Children at Loyd have heard about their schoolmates' achievements and travels through this program, and have been motivated to improve their physical skills, in hopes of joining the group in the future. Positive motivation such as the Junior Olympics, reinforces what we try to teach the children about the importance of accepting the responsibility themselves for the proper growth, development and care of their own bodies. They also learn that they must work hard in order to be successful in physical activities. Through this hard work and dedication they are discovering that dreams can come true," said Loyd principal Dr. Judy Gilliam.

Cypress Gardens features new show

Cypress Gardens

CYPRESS GARDENS, Fla. — A new aerial thrill show, "Capt. Robin's Flying Circus," will be featured during 1991 at Cypress Gardens in Winter Haven, Fla. beginning Feb. 14.

With an old-fashioned circus theme, Capt. Robin's showcases professional acrobatics, gymnastics, high wire, trampoline, spinning ladders and trapeze performances. Fast-paced and graceful, these daredevil acts are complemented by elaborate multi-layered costumes and scenery as well as an original music score to add the color and comedy of the circus.

"The 'vintage' feel of the show fits with the park's 55th anniversary celebration and its long-standing tradition of fine family entertainment," said Stephen DeWoody, Cypress Gardens entertainment director and co-producer of "Capt. Robin's."

DeWoody and co-producer Tom Edelston were also responsible for coordinating the "Air Dancin'" show which was popular at Cypress Gardens during the last three years. "Some of our most talented Air Dancin' performers have been cast in Capt. Robin's," said Edelston.

Included in the regular park admission price, daily performances of Capt. Robin's Flying Circus will take place in the Cypress Gardens Crossroads Arena.

Cypress Gardens, one of the Busch Entertainment parks, is open daily 9 a.m. to 6 p.m. The park is located midway between Tampa and Orlando, 40 minutes southwest of Sea World, off U.S. 27 near Winter Haven.

Adult admission is $18.95 plus tax; children 3 to 9 $12.95 plus tax; under three, admitted free.

'Clay Man' returns to Patch to share art with students

Fort Benning Schools

The "Clay Man" is returning to Patch School.

No, this is not the title of a current best seller. It is the second run of a very successful artist-in-residence program at Alexander M. Patch School on post.

R. Gregor Turk, better known to his kindergarten students as the Clay Man, has returned to Patch for a 13-day engagement from Jan. 2 through 18.

A visual artist who works primarily in clay, Turk first came to Patch last year.

Turk has exhibited his work throughout the Eastern United States and has completed a number of works throughout the South. He received his Bachelor of Arts degree from Rhodes College in Memphis, Tenn., and his Master of Fine Arts from Boston University. He also served as a Peace Corps volunteer for two years in Liberia, West Africa.

In working with younger students, his emphasis is on self-expression rather than predetermined expectations.

In addition to classroom rather than predetermined expectations. In addition to classroom instruction, Turk enjoys sharing his experiences around the world and in his hometown, Homer, Ga. with parents and community members.

"Kindergartners and first graders are an exciting group to work with," Turk said. "They are prone to do more on their own and are less concerned with what others in the group are doing. This results in remarkably diverse and creative work," he said.

Aside from the benefits of exposure to a creative art process, there are other advantages of the visiting artist program.

"Interaction with an artist who is able to communicate and develop such good rapport with our kindergarten and first grade students is a definite plus of Gregor's residency," said Patch School principal Ken Stettes. "His ability to get to know his students quickly and identify individual strengths and abilities is quite remarkable. We feel very fortunate to have the "Clay Man" back at Patch School this year."

SPIRITUAL

Sensitive parenting class offers positive approach

By Debra Galle
USAIC Chaplain's Office

A cartoonist portrayed a small child asking her mother how much schooling she had to become a parent.

"None," the mother replied.

"Well," said the little girl, "do you have a license or any other kind of permit to raise children?"

"No, honey, I don't have any of that."

The little girl walked away confused and muttered under her breath, "that's really frightening."

The role of parent can never be totally described and the right and wrong way to approach parenting is often unclear. Sometimes parents look to others for help with raising their children the "right" way, however elusive that may be.

No one person has the correct answer, not friends, grandparents, or even counselors or clergy. The most effective way to improve parenting skills is to continually seek different points of view and apply those which help your own unique situation.

Chaplain (Maj.) Richard Roggia, chief Chaplains' Family Life Center, recognizes the need for parenting classes such as this, especially in the transient, stressful military communities.

"Too often, grown children experience the loss of their parents and are told that the parent loved them so much and was very proud of them all their lives. Yet, the child never heard that from the parents own mouths, so in effect, they learn more about the parent through death than when they were alive," said Roggia.

The time to learn about how to care for your children is now, not only when problems arise, he added.

Many classes, books and stories are written for parents, designed to teach them skills that benefit both parent and child. Several such classes have been offered through the Chaplains' Family Life Center including Active Parenting and Systematic Training for Effective Parenting.

Another positive approach to parent education is called The Art of Sensitive Parenting.

The goal of all sensitive parents: children who can stand on their own two feet and relate to others in a healthful, mature and caring way, is one of the things taught in this approach.

Comprised of 10 master keys to raising confident, competent, and responsible children, the Art of Sensitive Parenting course is based on teachings of Katharine C. Kersey, Ed.D.

Martin Luther King's dream lives on

By Herbert Marbury
Custer Terrace Chaplain

Reflections

The Rev. Martin Luther King Jr. was born Jan. 15, 1929, in Atlanta, Ga. He entered Morehouse College at age 15 and graduated at 19. He completed his Ph.D in Systematic Theology at Boston University and was the youngest person ever to receive the Nobel Peace Prize.

King rose to national prominence in 1956, while serving as clergyman in Montgomery, Ala. He led a non-violent economic protest against segregation.

He was a Baptist preacher who integrated the Christian gospel and non-violent principles of Gandhi to lead this nation's civil rights movement. He encouraged people to use non-violence rather than violence to secure their civil rights.

King was an average man called by a god in whom he had an unwavering faith to perform extraordinary deeds. He worked for individual and group rights in our society and said, "Injustice anywhere is a threat to justice everywhere." He used non-violent protest to fight the philosophy of segregation, ideology, philosophy and social system that treated blacks less than human.

To change the system which practiced and allowed dehumanization, he said we must follow God's proclamation "to love your enemies, do good to those who hate you, bless those who abuse you."

King put his dreams into actions. He used protests, boycotts, marches and demonstrations as a peaceful means to achieve equality and justice for the underprivileged. He met with kings and presidents, but marched with common and uneducated people. His identity was with the unsophisticated and downtrodden folks in our society.

For 10 years, King led black Americans in an accelerated struggle against prejudice and racial discrimination in spite of threats against himself and his family. He continued to urge his followers to use non-violent methods in their quest for equality. Being arrested several times did not discourage him in his campaign, nor change his pacifist beliefs.

The son of a Baptist minister, in 1963 he led some 250,000 people of all backgrounds in what became known as the March on Washington. There he delivered his noted speech entitled, "I have a dream."

On April 4, 1968, in Memphis, Tenn., the 39-year-old preacher of non-violence was assassinated. An escaped convict, James Earl Ray was convicted of the crime.

King is dead, but his dream is alive and we are alive. We have a responsibility to be committed to fight injustice, racial prejudice and poverty. When we assist others in obtaining freedom, justice and equality, we keep his dream alive. When we assist the poor, needy and down trodden, we put his dream into action. When we practice brotherhood across racial lines, we continue an expression of his love.

ENERGY WATCH

By Tina Cook
Energy Branch

According to an article in a December 1990 Energy Report, Americans enjoy the lowest energy prices in the world. Maintaining that status is the principal objective of the National Energy Strategy.

Vito Stagliano, associate deputy undersecretary for policy analysis at the Department of Energy, said the strategy will not try to artificially raise the price of energy.

Stagliano feels that the American economy runs on reasonably priced energy and has done so for the last 40 years. Any shock to that cost has serious, immediate and large consequences to the economy.

He further explained that the plan will be designed to make the price consumers pay for energy even lower than it is today.

It has been said that unnecessary regulations, particularly in the electric utility sector, cost a great deal of money and increase the price of energy.

If you remove the regulatory barriers affecting hydroelectric power and competition in production and transmission, you can reduce energy costs even further.

Eighteen months ago, President Bush directed the Department of Energy to develop the National Energy Strategy.

The plan was presented to him in December in the form of a "decision memo."

United States liberals seem to believe that increasing the price of energy will result in a reduction in consumption. Stagliano disagrees with that philosophy completely. He also stressed that energy independence will not be either a reasonable or an achievable objective of the National Energy Strategy. Oil in the United States and the rest of the world will continue to be a critical energy source and there are no easy or economic ways of displacing the product.

The National Energy Strategy, however, will not penalize the American economy in order to achieve oil independence.

Stagliano said that assessing excess oil production capacity outside the Persian Gulf in such areas as Venezuela, Mexico and the Soviet Union, and setting up joint ventures to tap those resources, is critical to energy security.

These are the key components that need to be addressed by an "intelligent" National Energy Strategy.

If you have any questions about this or any energy-related subject, contact the Energy office at 545-SWAT (Save Watts and Therms).

Caution can prevent hypothermia, death

Infantry Branch Safety Office

Hypothermia is caused by prolonged cold exposure and body-heat loss.

This may occur at temperatures well above freezing, especially when a person is immersed in water. As the body temperature drops below the normal 98.6 degrees, shivering starts.

Gradually, as the temperature decreases further, shivering stops. The victim becomes drowsy, mentally slow, and uncoordinated. Beyond this stage, symptoms progress into unconsciousness, irregular heartbeat, and death.

Hypothermia is a life-theatening condition that calls for immediate action to rewarm the body evenly and without delay.

First aid for hypothermia

Bring the victim into a warm place. If that's impossible, shelter from any wind, rain, or snow and keep the head covered. Remove the all wet clothing and bundle with dry blankets or dress in dry clothing. Do not rub or massage the victim or place in hot water. Give warm beverage (but no alcohol or caffeine) if the person is conscious. If the person is unconscious, use artificial respiration or CPR if you are trained in this life-saving technique.

Protecting against hypothermia

Dress in layers. Layering allows you to adjust what you're wearing to suit the temperature conditions. In cold weather, wear cotton, polypropylene, or lightweight wool next to the skin, and wool layers over your undergarments. For outdoor activities, choose outergarments made of waterproof, wind resistant fabrics such as nylon. Since a great deal of body heat is lost through the head, always wear a hat for added protection.

Keep dry. Always take along a dry set of clothing whenever you are outdoors. Wear waterproof boots in damp or snowy weather, and always pack raingear (even if the forecast calls for sunny skies.)

Take a companion. If you know you'll be outdoors for an extended period of time, take along a companion. (At the very least, let someone know where you'll be and what time you expect to return.) Ask your companion to check you frequently for overexposure to the cold and do the same for your companion. Check for shivering, slurred speech, mental confusion, drowsiness, and weakness. If either of you shows any signs, get indoors as soon as possible and warm up.

The key ingredients to preventing loss of body heat are staying warm, and understanding what you can do to protect against conditions that can cause hypothermia. Hypothermia can be fatal, but it can also be prevented.

HONEST. MORE FOLKS FEEL THAT NEWSPAPER IS THE MOST BELIEVABLE MEDIUM.

We can't lie.
A recent study showed that more people feel newspaper is the most believable medium.
Not television.
Not radio.
Not magazines.

But why?

It's probably because we show that a newspaper lays it all out in black & white.
Right in front of you.
The places, the people and the prices.
The offers, the promises and the claims.
It's all there to read, think about and keep. And that goes for the advertisements, too.

When people have to clear Columbus Ledger-Enquirer they have more with interest. Which means this is where your advertising message needs to be.
With all the choices available, it's difficult deciding how best to advertise your business.
But everything becomes a little simpler when you remember one rule.

YOU GOTTA BE IN THE PAPER.

By Agatha H. James and Alyanna B. Clay-Heard
Bayonet staff

U.N. forces launched an air attack against Iraq late Wednesday to liberate Kuwait.

President George Bush, in a televised speech, said he ordered U.S. troops to make the attack, which occurred at 7 p.m. Eastern Standard Time, less than 24 hours after the expiration of the U.N. deadline for Iraq to pull out of Kuwait.

U.S. forces were joined in the attack, which has been dubbed, "Operation Desert Storm" by allied forces from three countries — England, Saudi Arabia and Kuwait. The president said the focus of the attack was on Iraq's defensive areas.

Bush told the American people, "We will drive Saddam out of Kuwait; we will not fail."

The president said he "was determined to knock out Saddam's nuclear bomb potential and destroy his chemical weapons facilities."

"The United States, along with United Nations exhausted every means ... to bring this crisis to a peaceful end," said Bush. "While the world prayed for peace, Saddam prepared for war."

Defense Secretary Dick Cheney, in a briefing with members of the press following Bush's statement, said he would not speculate or comment about possible U.S. casualties.

Benning beefs up security measures

By Alyanna B. Clay-Heard
Bayonet staff writer

Fort Benning is beefing up security as tensions in the Middle East mount.

Post Commander Maj. Gen. Carmen J. Cavezza has directed that the Fort Benning Terrorist Threat Condition be elevated to a higher level, according to Col. Ted Chilcote, chief of the Directorate of Plans, Training, and Mobilization.

In a message distributed to officials postwide, Chilcote outlines measures that will be implemented immediately.

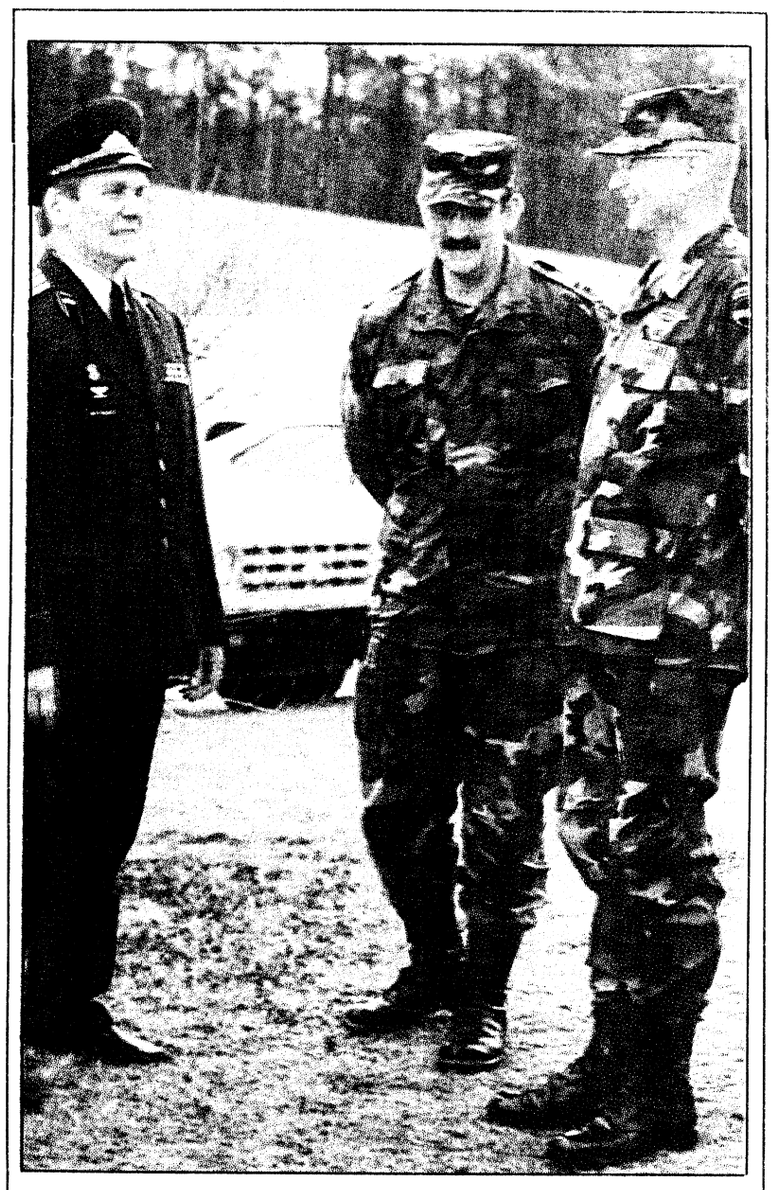
The measures call for officials to:

- Remind personnel periodically to be conscious of suspicious persons and activities
- Have informed key personnel available on call to assist in evacuation of work areas/ implementation of security plans
- Secure facilities not in use
- Increase spot checks in areas of responsibility
- Limit access points to areas of responsibility, if and as appropriate
- Increase deterrent effect of actions by random use of THREATCON measures

Although the current crisis in the Persian Gulf draws attention to the events unfolding there, it is important to maintain vigilance at home, said Mark Smith, chief of Security, Directorate of Intelligence and Security.

The Army's program, Subversion and Espionage Directed Against the U.S. Army, is designed to identify activities of apprehending unauthorized information, photographs or documents about U.S. Army facilities, activities and/or causing injury to vital interests of the U.S. interests.

According to Smith, these can range from something as innocent as taking photographs to acts of terrorism.



"In principle, the SAEDA program is a lot like crime prevention," said Smith. "To avoid becoming victims of a crime and to deter criminals," he added, "we avoid people, places and situations that place us in jeopardy. If we go about our daily business with a heightened awareness of the people we interact with and the seemingly ordinary things we observe, we can greatly reduce the opportunities for people to do harm to ourselves and the things we value," he added.

Bush's letter to Saddam Hussein

Army News Service

WASHINGTON — Following is the text of the letter from President George Bush to Iraqi leader Saddam Hussein.

The letter was delivered by Secretary of State James Baker to Iraq's Foreign Minister Tariq Aziz at Geneva Jan. 9.

Aziz declined to accept the letter for Hussein.

"Mr. President: We stand today at the brink of war between Iraq and the world. This is a war that began with your invasion of Kuwait; this is a war that can only be ended by Iraq's full and unconditional compliance with U.N. Security Council Resolution 678.

"I am writing you now, directly, because what is at stake demands that no opportunity be lost to avoid what would be a certain calamity for the people of Iraq.

"I am writing, as well, because it is said by some that you do not understand just how isolated Iraq is and what Iraq faces as a result.

"I am not in a position to judge whether this impression is correct; what I can do, though, is try in this letter to reinforce what Secretary of State Baker told your foreign minister and eliminate any uncertainty or ambiguity that might exist in your mind about where we stand and what we are prepared to do.

"The international community is united in its call for Iraq to leave Kuwait without condition and without further delay.

"This is not simply the policy of the United States; it is the position of the world community as expressed in no less than 12 Security Council resolutions.

> "I write this letter not to threaten, but to inform."
> — George Bush

"We prefer a peaceful outcome. However, anything less than full compliance with U.N. Security Council Resolution 678 and its predecessors is unacceptable.

"There can be no reward for aggression. Nor will there be any negotiation. Principle cannot be compromised. However, by its full compliance, Iraq will gain the opportunity to rejoin the international community. More immediately, the Iraqi military establishment will escape destruction.

"But unless you withdraw from Kuwait completely and without condition, you will lose more than Kuwait.

"What is at issue here is not the future of Kuwait — it will be free, its government will be restored, but rather the future of Iraq. This choice is yours to make.

"The United States will not be separated from its coalition partners. Twelve Security Council resolutions, 28 countries providing military units to enforce them, more than 100 governments complying with sanctions — all highlight the fact that it is not Iraq against the United States, but Iraq against the world.

"That most Arab and Muslim countries are arrayed against you as well, should reinforce what I am saying. Iraq cannot and will not be able to hold on to Kuwait or exact a price for leaving.

"You may be tempted to find solace in the diversity of opinion that is American democracy. You should resist any such temptation. Diversity ought not to be confused with division. Nor should you underestimate, as others have before you, America's will.

"Iraq is already feeling the effects of the sanctions mandated by the United Nations. Should war come, it will be a far greater tragedy for you and your country.

"Let me state, too, that the United States will not tolerate the use of chemical or biological weapons or the destruction of Kuwait's oil fields and installations. Further, you will be held directly responsible for terrorist actions against any member of the coalition.

"The American people would demand the strongest possible response. You and your country will pay a terrible price if you order unconscionable acts of this sort.

"I write this letter not to threaten, but to inform. I do so with no sense of satisfaction for the people of the United States have no quarrel with the people of Iraq.

"Mr. President, U.N. Security Council Resolution 678 establishes the period before Jan. 15 of this year as a 'pause of goodwill' so that this crisis may end without further violence. Whether this pause is used as intended, or merely becomes a prelude to further violence, is in your hands, and yours alone.

"I hope you weigh your choice carefully and choose wisely, for much will depend on it."

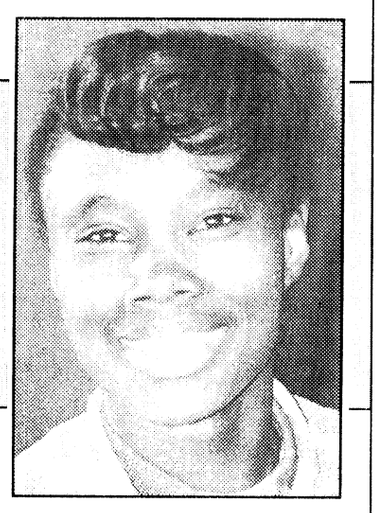
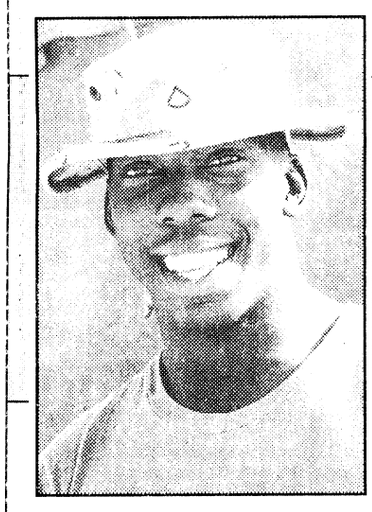
OPINION

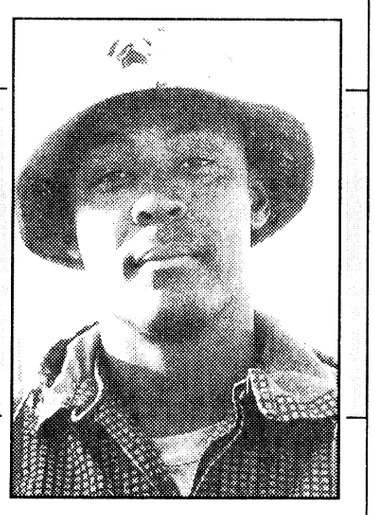
VARIOUS VOICES:



Having been in Saudi Arabia for several months now, how have conditions for you and your unit improved since you arrived?



1st Lt. Eric Woods, 2nd Bn., 18th Inf. Regt. — "Though conditions here have improved, I never really considered them bad. We have recreation for the soldiers throughout the brigade. Our battalion had a 10-kilometer run, a volleyball tournament and other events. I think we're doing well."



Staff Sgt. Jerry Knight, Co. C, 1st Bn., 18th Inf. Regt. — "We have hot showers now as well as tents, hot meals, a phone center and heaters in the tent."

Sgt. Susan Tillman, HHD, 34th Medical Bn. — "We've come closer together as a unit, which has definitely improved the situation. We have hot showers, hot meals, heaters in tents and more recreational facilities for the soldiers."

Pfc. James A. Martin, 598th Maint. Co. — "The conditions here have improved 100 percent. We have greater access to junk food, personal items and different types of food. Our quarters are also much better."

Sgt. Dwight Atcherson, Co. C, 1st Bn., 18th Inf. Regt. — "We have tents now, a phone center closer to our unit, better meals, and more information gets out to the troops."

Capt. Mike Stevens, HHC, 2nd Bn., 18th Inf. Regt. — "The phone center and recreation equipment have been the best improvements so far. These things have increased the morale of the troops tremendously."

Parenting in the '90s is no easy feat

By Clyde Snively
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Several HEAT rounds were lobbed my way after I indelicately hinted that scouts could find their way in the dark and parents should accept the responsibility of caring for their children instead of expecting society (Fort Benning in this case) to do it for them.

One caller told me that if I knew so much, why didn't I write one of those advise columns on raising kids.

I thought about that for two nanoseconds. First, as my two kids will not hesitate to point out, I'm an abject failure as a parent. I don't let them do what other kids get to do. I can't communicate with them. And they know I hate them.

As one of the older and wiser people in the office summed it up, "the way to handle kids is to abort them at conception."

I think he was joking. But maybe not as he went down a litany of things his teenagers do that would make any jury acquit him of homicide.

For instance, he told me about his son, who, after changing the oil in his car, then carried the old oil in a drip pan through the house, leaving a trail on the carpet. That was only weeks after, having decided his car wasn't good enough for his current 'dish,' he decided to borrow dad's car while dad and mom were out. Unfortunately, the son discovered steel street signs are sturdier than Honda side panels.

Nor are sons the only culprit in his household. His daughter's had a few fender benders too. His auto insurance bill is about equal to the national debt. But that's not all. He's got other problems dealing with his teens:

"My teenagers tell me I don't communicate with them. So I make it a point to try. Like when I get home from work, I'll go into my daughter's room, sit on the bed and ask how her day went."

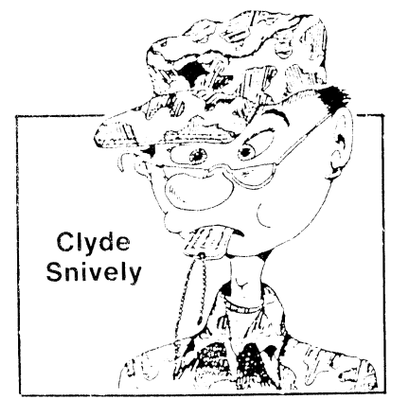
"Fine."

"Do anything special?"

"No."

"Kill anyone?"

"Daaaaad."



"Just trying to get a response," I say to her rolled up eye balls.

"Fine. Can you leave now."

"Her mother gets the same response," he continued. "'What is this, the third degree,'" being a standard answer, he said.

"Yet these are the teens who say parents don't communicate with them.

"These are also the teens who want independence and be allowed to make their own decisions, so when you suggest they might want to study for a test the next day or start working on a term paper due in a day, they go into their stubborn — 'I would have started if you hadn't told me to,' their great powers of logic being completely uncomprehensible."

As I listened I pictured myself in his place in a few short years. I had always assumed that once Bubba got a little older he'd mellow out and get over his urge to kill Clydette, or once Clydette reached the age of reason, she'd stop breaking all her brother's toys, practically daring him to pound her to within an inch of her life.

Thinking about all this, I was reminded of what Lillian Carter once said, "Sometimes when I look at my children I say to myself, 'Lillian, you should have stayed a virgin.'"

I guess even having kids who grow up to be President doesn't make it any easier.

So I'll pass on writing an advice column on kid raising. I do, however, take full responsibility for what my kids do or fail to do, realizing that they won't always do the right thing, that there will be times they get into trouble.

But they're my kids and if I'm worried about them falling into the creek behind the house, I tell them to stay away from it, I don't tell the city or the Army to build a fence.

Then if I catch them where they aren't supposed to be, doing what I told them not to do, I deal with it. I don't call the cops or MPs to deal with it.

So far this approach to raising them's worked fairly well. At least I haven't had the cops or MPs call me down to the station because my kids were caught running in packs, keying and spray-painting cars, breaking into homes or businesses and stealing bikes off people's front porches.

I consider myself lucky. I hope my luck holds out.

LETTER

Reader wants Fort Benning to establish power-lifting team

I would like to know how to get official certification for a Fort Benning power-lifting team.

For some years now, Capt. Roach of the 29th Infantry has organized and maintained a power-lifting team on Fort Benning.

This team is known in power-lifting circles throughout the south. It has won numerous championships, and most importantly, it has represented Fort Benning and the Army in an exemplary manner. Team members have done this and met expenses out of their own pockets.

I would like to suggest that the team members formally become the Fort Benning team. I feel the team's demonstrated performance has earned this and that Fort Benning and the Army would benefit form such a move.

Sponsorship from the private sector could then be solicited in order to help defray team expenses. Potential for such sponsorship exists as demonstrated by the sponsorship obtained for the last post power-lifting meet.

Basically, I would suggest that the soldiers involved remain with their units, train with their units, work with their units, be on unit duty rosters, etc., except for physical training.

On selected mornings the team members would report for weight training instead of unit PT. The members would also be excused from duty rosters just prior to a meet and be allowed to travel to and from a meet.

To ensure the soldiers are meeting Army fitness standards, the team members would have to maintain a fairly high PT score to remain on the team.

With this post infrastructure in place, there would be no reason that Fort Benning could not host the Army power-lifting team and all-Army meets much like Fort Benning is now hosting the Army wrestling team.

My question is to whom should this proposal go?

Big Brothers/Big Sisters thank Fort Benning for its support

Thank you and the Bayonet for your continuous mention of Big Brothers/Big Sisters of Columbus.

Something very interesting happened recently. Two gentlemen who appeared to be military personnel came into our office and presented an envelope to our receptionist.

The outer envelope was to: Big Brothers/Big Sisters of Columbus. The inner envelope said: Enclosed $200 anonymous donation.

Inside the envelope was ten, $20 bills — a $200 cash contribution!

To the individual or individuals who are responsible for this, we would like to say 'thank you' for this most generous gift.

We at Big Brothers/Big Sisters of Columbus have always appreciated the input from the Fort Benning community, and this deed just adds to our strong belief in the good, quality people at Fort Benning.

We will see that the money donated will go to much good in helping some less fortunate children from single parent families in our community.

Troop strength increases

Army News Service

WASHINGTON — There are more than 325,000 American troops in theater participating in Operation Desert Storm, according to the latest military strength reports released at a U.S. Central Command news conference in Saudi Arabia.

About 195,000 soldiers have been deployed to the theater, along with 55,000 Marines, 40,000 airmen and 35,000 sailors, according to Central Command spokesman Lt. Col. Greg Pepin.

Armed forces from 17 countries are participating in Operation Desert Storm. In addition to ground troops, 15 countries have committed naval forces to assist with naval interceptions. Almost 50 U.S. Navy ships and more than 50 ships from other countries are participating.

American Air Force involvement in Operation Desert Storm includes the deployment of more than 1,300 aircraft.

Since the arrival in Saudi Arabia of U.S. forces in early August in response to Iraq's attack on neighboring Kuwait, extensive training has been ongoing.

Marines have conducted constant infantry, mechanized and artillery operations, as well as live firing of their weapons and obstacle breaching. Air Force units have concentrated on combined live air fires, joint air operations and close air support training.

The U.S. Navy, which has aircraft carriers, battleships, destroyers, cruisers, frigates, auxiliary ships and hospital ships afloat, has conducted operations in the Persian Gulf, Arabian Sea and Red Sea.

Experts expect terrorist attacks

Army News Service

WASHINGTON — Anti-terrorism experts here expect the worst in the war with Saddam Hussein.

The "worst" includes attempted terrorist attacks on American soil. And while the potential for attacks in the United States would be at an all-time high, terrorist activities against American service members and facilities in the Mideast and Europe would be almost certain, according to Lt. Col. Richard Priem.

He added that terrorist activity could begin "very soon after the commencement of any hostilities" between the United Nations coalition in Saudi Arabia and Iraq's million-man army."

Surveillance of suspected terrorist groups, along with FBI reports and recent statements made by government officials in Baghdad, leads military leaders at the Pentagon to believe terrorist attempts are imminent.

"We've worked very closely with the FBI to monitor the threat to Army activities and personnel in the continental United States," said Priem.

He added that while the potential for terrorism may not be as great in the Continental United States as it could become in other areas of the world, "certainly the potential is there," and that "anyone who assumes there is no terrorist threat here is making an unreasonable assessment.

"A number of individuals in the Iraqi government have made public statements to the effect that terrorism is one of the weapons they will use in the event of attack. I don't think there's any question that, between the public statements from Iraq and the information that we've developed worldwide, that they will use terrorism in one form or another in support of their objectives."

According to Priem, those objectives include attempts to embarrass the Army and the American government, and to sway public opinion away from United Nations efforts in the Middle East.

Army security worldwide has been increased because of the potential threat and soldiers, family members and civilian employees are being asked to be on the lookout for suspicious activities.

"There's no question that we're better prepared to handle the threat than the military was a number of years ago," said Priem. "We've evolved a fairly effective system for increasing the security posture of our facilities and have worked extremely hard at improving our intelligence collection.

"I guess the bottom line is that we need every single member of the Army community to make their individual contributions if we're to be entirely successful in combatting terrorism."

How to guard against terrorism

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Soldiers and their families can significantly improve their chances of not becoming victims of terrorism by adopting the following anti-terrorist measures.

Tips for the family at home

● Restrict the possession of house keys. Change locks if keys are lost or stolen and when moving into a previously occupied residence.

● Lock all entrances at night, including the garage. Keep the house locked, even if you are at home.

● Personally destroy all envelopes or other items that reflect your name and rank.

● Develop friendly relationships with your neighbors.

● Do not draw attention to yourself by noisy parties or playing loud music; be considerate of neighbors.

● Be alert to public utility crews and other people requesting access to residence; check their identities through peep-hole before allowing entry.

● Be alert to peddlers and strangers.

● Write down license numbers of suspicious vehicles; note descriptions of occupants.

● Refuse unordered packages.

● Treat with suspicion any inquiries about the whereabouts or activities of other family members.

● Report all suspicious activity to military or civil police.

Telephone security

●Post emergency numbers on the telephone:

● Military Police:

● Local Police:

● Fire Department

● Hospital:

Precautions for Children

●Never leave young children alone or unattended. Be certain when they are left, they are in the care of a trustworthy person.

● Instruct children to keep doors and windows locked, and never to admit strangers.

● Teach children how to contact police or a neighbor in an emergency.

● If it is necessary to leave children at home, keep the house well lighted and notify the neighbors.

● Know where your children are all the time.

● Advise your children to:

— Never leave home without advising parents where they will be and who will accompany them.

— Travel in pairs or groups.

— Walk along busy streets and avoid isolated areas.

— Use locally approved play areas where recreational activities are supervised by responsible adults and where police protection is readily available.

— Refuse automobile rides from strangers and refuse to accompany strangers anywhere on foot. . .even if the strangers say mom or dad sent them or said it was okay.

Receipt of packages or mail

●Suspicious characteristics to look for include:

● An unusual or unknown place of origin.

● No return address.

● An excessive amount of postage.

● Abnormal or unusual size.

● Oily stains on the package.

● Wires or strings protruding from or attached to an item.

● Incorrect spelling on a package label.

● Different return address and postmark.

● Appearance of foreign style handwriting.

● Peculiar odor (many explosives used by terrorists smell like shoe polish or almonds).

● Unusual heaviness or lightness.

● Uneven balance or shape.

● Springiness in the top, bottom, or sides.

● Never cut tapes, strings, or other wrapping on a suspected package. Never immerse a suspected letter or package in water. Either of these actions could cause an explosive device to detonate.

● Never touch or move a suspicious package or letter.

● Report any suspicious packages or mail to security officials immediately.

Security precautions when you're away

● Leave house with lived-in look.

● Stop deliveries or direct to a neighbor's home.

● Don't leave notes on doors.

● Don't hide keys outside house.

● Use a timer to turn lights on and off at varying times and locations.

● Leave radio on (best with a timer).

● Hide valuable.

● Notify the police or a trusted neighbor of your absence.

Residential security

Exterior grounds:

● Do not put your name on the outside of your residence or mailbox.

● Have good lighting.

● Control vegetation to eliminate hiding place.

Entrances and exits should have:

● Solid doors with deadbolt locks.

● One-way peep-holes in doors.

Ground transportation safety

Vehicles:

● Safeguard keys.

● Keep vehicle in good repair. You don't want it to fail when you need it most.

● Keep gas tank at least one-half full at all times.

● Ensure tires have sufficient tread.

Parking

● Park in well lighted areas.

● Always lock your car.

● Don't leave it on the street overnight, if possible.

● Never get out without checking for suspicious persons. If in doubt, drive away.

● Don't allow entry to the trunk unless you're there to watch.

● Never leave garage doors open or unlocked.

Again, remember these three rules for combating terrorism:

● Keep a low profile.

● Be unpredictable.

● Remain vigilant.

Blood donors needed for Desert Storm

By Evelyn D. Harris
American Forces Information Service

Should it be needed in Operation Desert Storm, the Armed Services Blood Program is ready.

Within days of the deployment of U.S. forces to the Persian Gulf, the Army, Navy and Air Force set up a joint blood program office in the theater.

Frozen blood is in place on the hospital ships Mercy and Comfort in the Persian Gulf, and large quantities of fresh blood are being sent into Saudi Arabia.

If necessary, blood can be air-dropped to field units and ships at sea.

Officials think the program's in good shape at the moment, but they hope DoD people will help keep up supplies by responding generously when their military blood activity asks for donations.

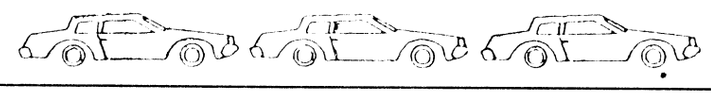
"Because of new technology, no donated blood goes to waste any more," said Army Col. Anthony J. Polk, director of the Armed Services Blood Program Office.

"Blood is perishable, and unfortunately, in Vietnam, we had to throw away thousands of units of blood because they expired. Now, we can freeze blood to extend its life. We can even rejuvenate fresh blood before it expires."

Even expired blood has uses in blood-substitute research, he added.

Fresh blood is good for 35 days and frozen blood for more than 21 years.

Although no blood had been pre-positioned in the Middle East, planners were able to put a system into place quickly because the military since last year has been stockpiling frozen universal-donor Type 0 blood in strategic places.



Also, blood program officials had recent practice providing large amounts of blood during Operation Just Cause in Panama and giving humanitarian aid to earthquake victims in the Philippines, according to Polk.

Still, setting up the system so blood gets where it's needed when it's needed is no easy feat. Navy Cmdr. David Reichman, Desert Shield blood program coordinator, described the supply process:

- From donor centers on military installations, blood is sent to the tri-service-staffed Armed Services Whole Blood Processing Laboratory at McGuire Air Force Base, N.J., or its standby at Lackland Air Force Base, Texas.
- Processed blood is then shipped to centers in theater where it is re-iced and sent to units that supply medical treatment elements.
- Blood destined for Desert Shield travels more than 8,000 miles from a typical donor center to a treatment center in Saudi Arabia.

DoD civilians, service members and family members who want to support the Desert Shield blood program should contact their local military medical treatment center for more information or call the Armed Services Blood Program Office at 289-8011 (autovon) or 1-703-756-8011 (commercial).

Sledgehammer soldiers host track tournament

Event brings break in training, plus provides competition

By Tom Wilkinson
197th Infantry Brigade

SAUDI ARABIA — "Get ready, get set, ...GO!"

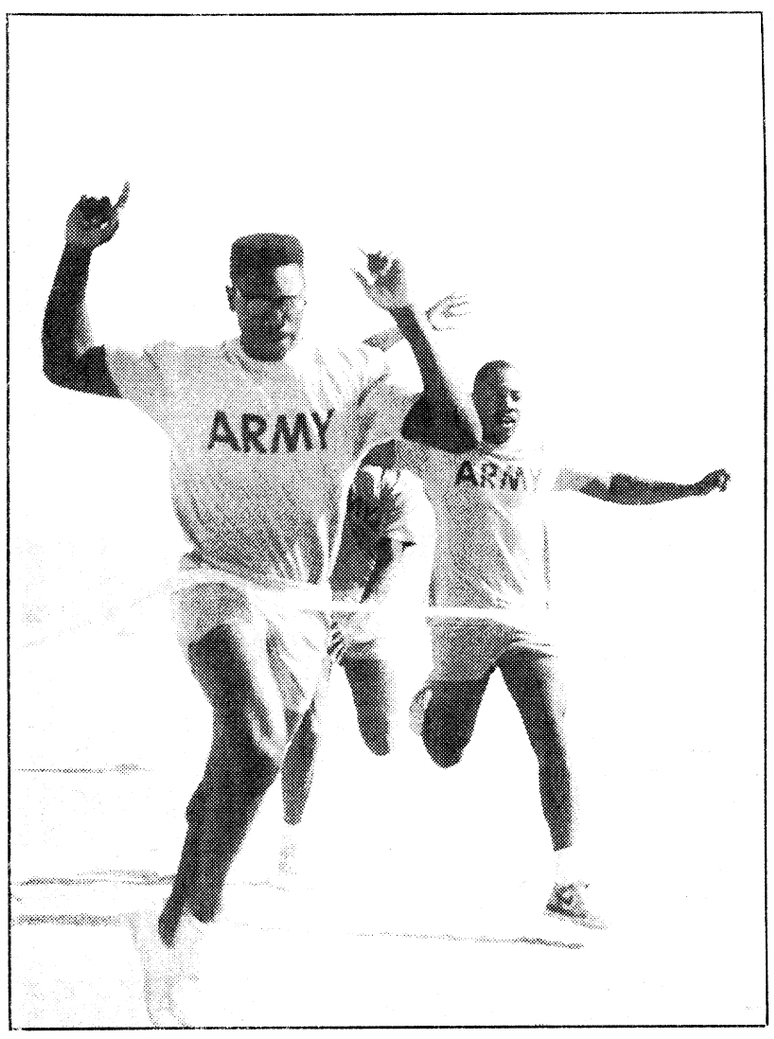
The 1st Battalion, 18th Infantry recently hosted the first 'Sledgehammer Track and Field Tournament.'

Track and field? In the desert? Believe it or not, amid a swirling sandblasting, soldiers from 1st Bn., 18th Inf., 2nd Bn., 18th Inf., 4th Bn., 41st Field Artillery, and the 197th Support Battalion competed against man, woman and nature for the coveted bragging rights of first place.

"The soldiers really like doing this kind of thing," said 1st Lt. Darnell Shaw, the liaison officer for 1st Bn., 18th Inf., and sports coordinator for the tournament.

"It gives them a chance to play and participate — a break from training, not to mention the bragging rights to the winners."

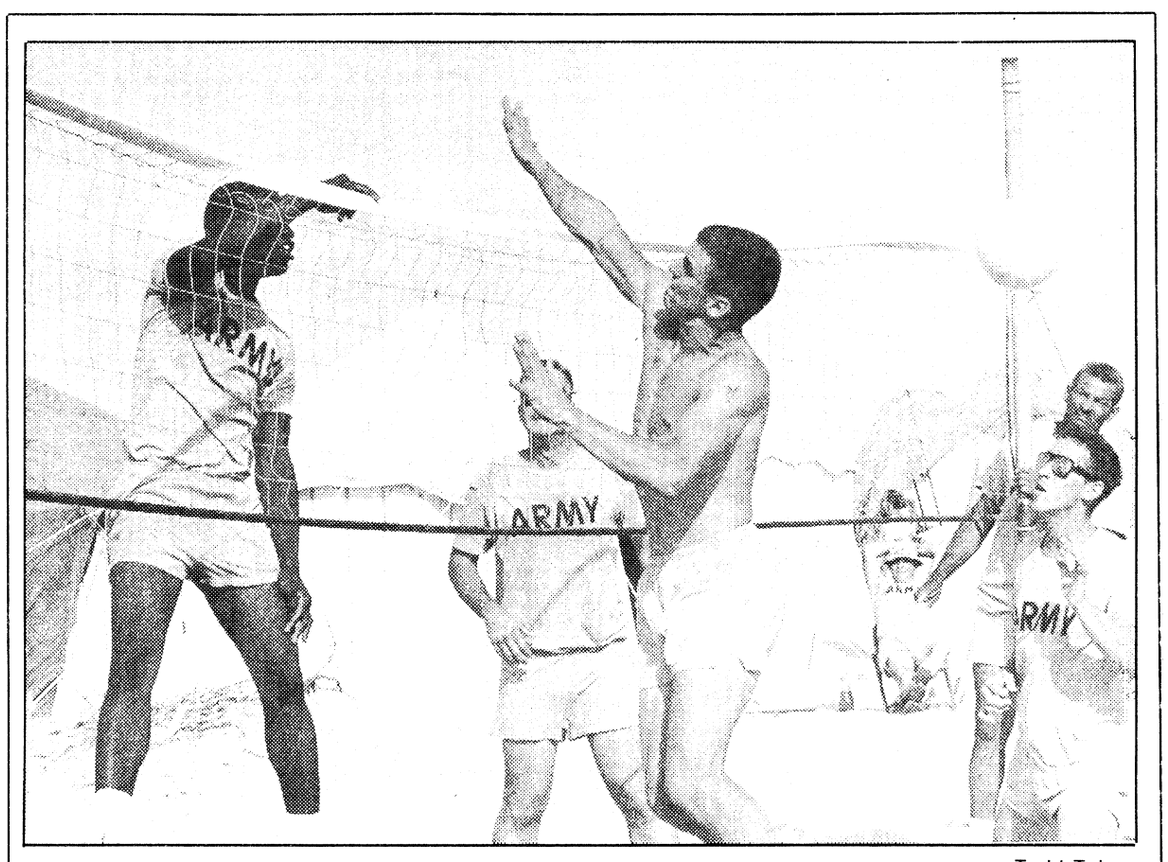
The tournament consisted of the normal running events, but entered some extra substitutions, such as push-ups, sit-ups, softball throw, football throw and the standing broad jump.



The running events consisted of a 100-, 200-, and 400-meter dash, and a four-man, one-mile relay.

As the soldiers competed, points were awarded in each event: five points for first place, three points for second, and one point for third.

Due to rugged field conditions, times were not recorded.



As each battalion continued to do battle on the playing field, the final result was 2nd Bn., 18th Inf., leading the way, taking first place in five events.

The Redlegs of 4th Bn., 41st FA came in second place, winning two events and the 197th Spt Bn. took third place winning one event.

Faith School holds DARE graduation

Fort Benning Schools

More than 1,000 students who attend or have attended Faith School are now graduates of one of the most relevant and comprehensive anti-drug programs being used in America's schools today.

DARE, or Drug Abuse Resistance Education, is in its third year at Faith. It is a substance use prevention education program designed to equip students with skills for resisting peer pressure to experiment with tobacco, drugs and alcohol.

During a DARE graduation ceremony January 11, 197 Faith School sixth-graders graduated from the program in front of patents and friends.

These DARE graduates received a certificate of completion from School Board President Col. Joseph Trez and Faith Principal Olin Harp. They also received a DARE bumper sticker and a DARE pin.

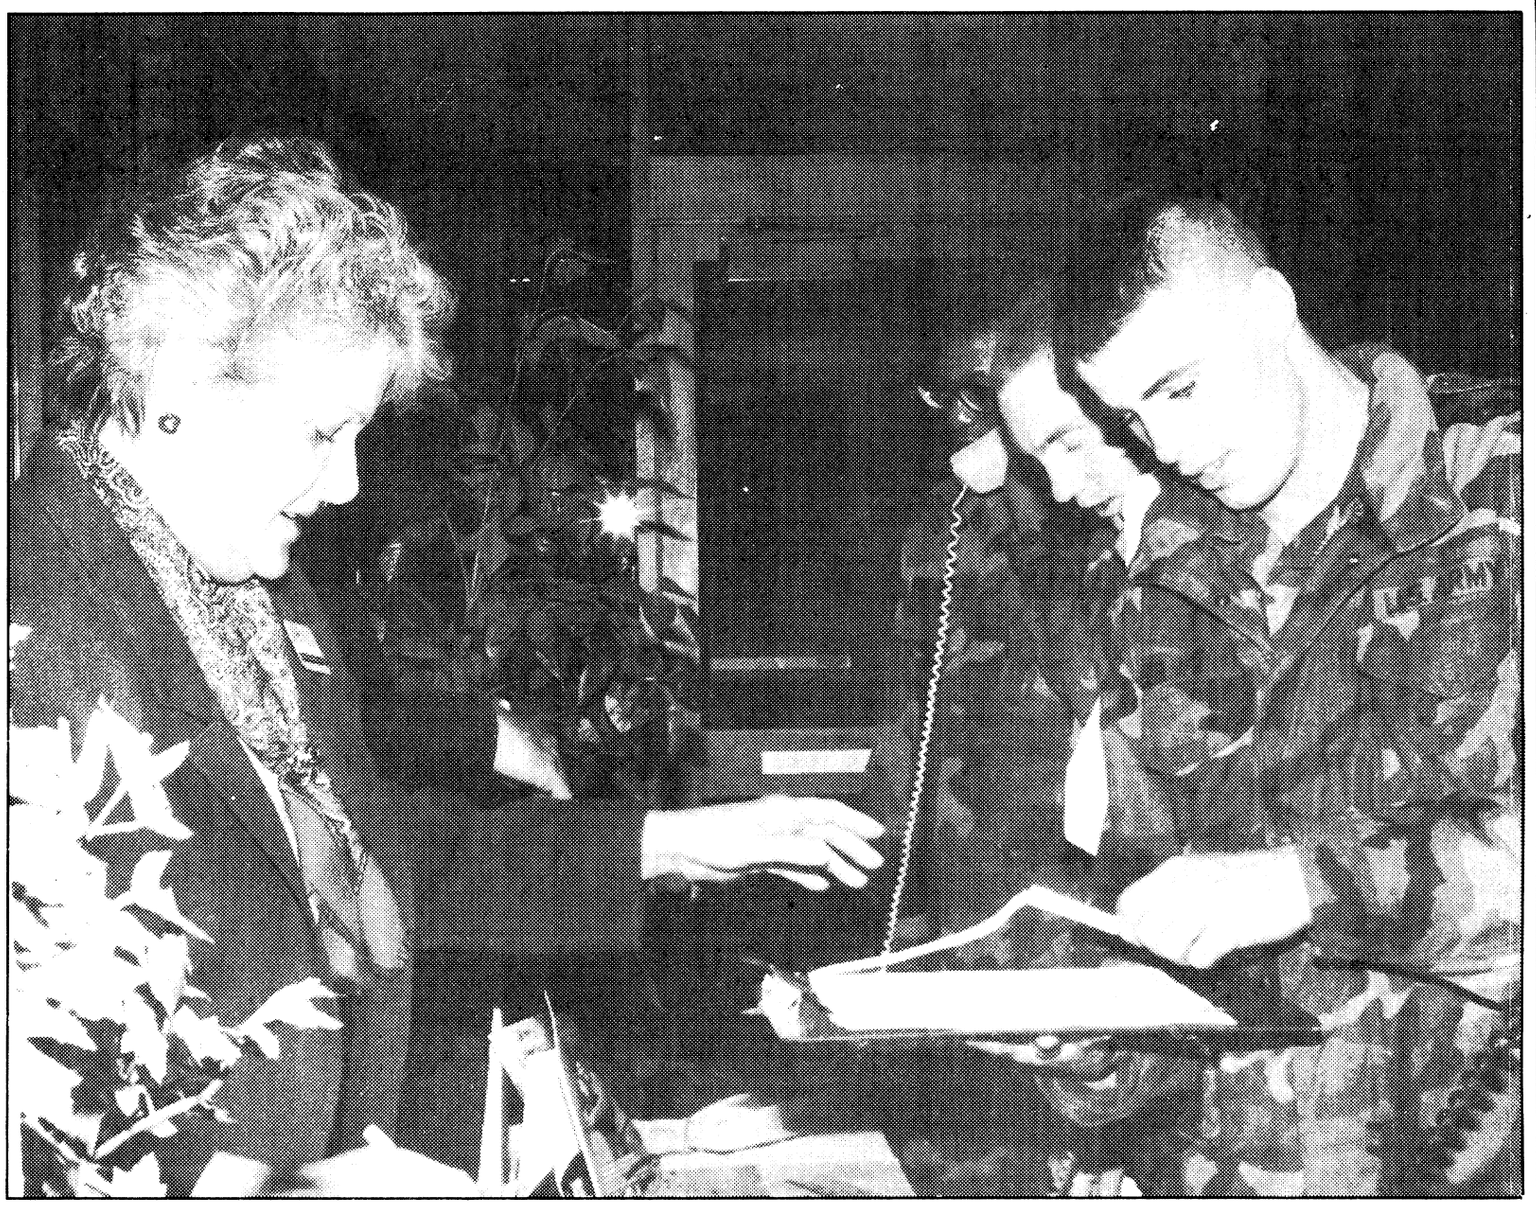
Featured graduation speaker was Trez. He charged the Faith School sixth-graders to live with the ideals they had discussed in their DARE sessions.

Using an example which was meaningful to the students, he stressed the importance of living a drug-free life.

The DARE project was developed through the combined efforts of the Los Angeles Police Department and that city's Unified School District in 1983. In its six-year history, the impact of the program has spread rapidly. More than 200 agencies in 30 states, Department of Defense Dependent Schools overseas and schools in New Zealand have been certified to deliver the DARE program.

The most striking difference in the program is that DARE lessons are taught by active duty, uniformed police officers.

At Fort Benning, Lt. Walter Jackson, a Department of Defense police officer, serves as DARE coordinator and primary instructor. Jackson teaches 17 one-hour lessons dealing with decision-making skills and techniques for resisting peer pressure in situations not strictly related to substance abuse.



The DARE program uses a positive approach to substance abuse use education and focuses attention in four major areas.

- Accurate information about tobacco, alcohol and drugs.
- Teaching students decision-making skills.
- Showing students how to resist peer pressure.
- Giving students ideas for alternatives to drug use.

Though sixth grade students at Faith Middle School are the primary audience, the program contains special lessons for students in kindergarten through fourth grade.

Jackson teaches these classes at all Benning elementary schools at some time during the school year.

This graduation date marks the end of the course for half of Faith School's sixth-graders. Jackson will now begin the DARE program with the other half of the school's sixth-graders.

SPIRITUAL

Women groups unite in faith

By Debbie Galle
USAIC Chaplain's Office

They prayed together and ate together. What mattered was just that they were together.

Invitations were not given according to rank of the husbands, unit, or group the women happened to be affiliated with. They were not sent out to women, according to age or interest group.

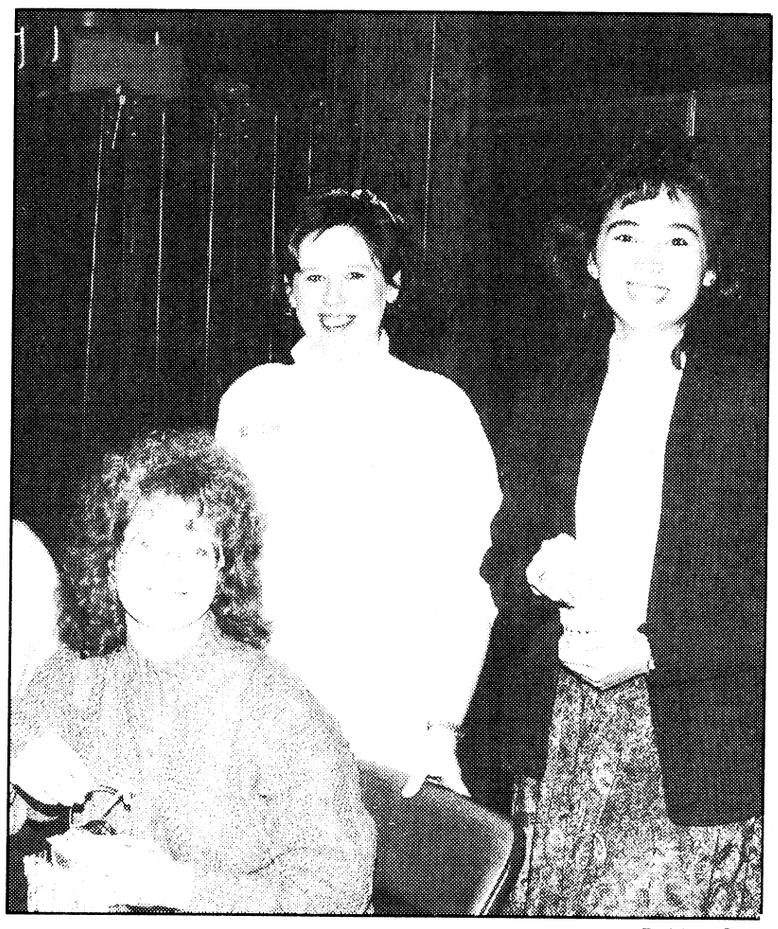
Invitations were given merely in the spirit of fellowship.

Women from all chapel groups on Fort Benning were invited to share the first Friday of January together at the Religious Education Center.

Sponsored by the Military Council of Catholic women, the meeting was based on the concept of unity in faith.

Diane Boucher, president of the Protestant Women of the Chapel, provided a devotional centered around New Year's resolutions.

"Dear Heavenly Father," the devotional included, ". . .help us to see the similarities in our fellow man rather than the differences. . ."



These words set the mood of the get-together, which included women of various faiths.

Cathy Roggia, president of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints Women's Relief Society, said she enjoyed the meeting very much. The LDS ladies have weekly meetings.

Monica James, president of the Military Council of Catholic Women, said that more gatherings are planned in the future.

"Ladies from several groups are planning a spaghetti supper especially for Desert Shield families," Jones said.

"We should encourage meeting such at this," added Diane Boucher. "Support should not have limits as to faith or background."

Christ requires unity among believers

By James E. Rayburn
Martin Army Community Hosp. chaplain

Reflections Reflections

It was a big white wood framed structure sitting across the street from our little house. It was a building erected by members of our community as a central place of worship and named the Community Church.

In the beginning there was not a delegated pastor, nor was it affiliated with any particular denomination.

Members of the community shared in leading the worship services unless a traveling preacher was available.

A few years later a man whom I can only remember as Brother John came to our community.

He was a man full of love for the Lord and really cared about people.

Brother John conducted a two week meeting at our small church and was then asked to remain as our community pastor.

He consented and the atmosphere of our little community was charged with the excitement of now having a full time pastor.

Our little church began to grow and people from outside of the community started worshiping with us.

Brother John was so excited about the progress of our little church that he invited a denominational representative to come and see what God was doing in our little community.

I can still remember the representative. He seemed like a spiritual enough man, one who seemed to be dedicated to the Lord.

However, there was a certain something about him which made me uncomfortable.

The next Sunday Brother John shared with us some of the advice he received from the representative.

There were some people showing too much emotion in their worship. We should approach our communion service a little differently.

We definitely had to establish a doctrinal statement and a church constitution.

I remember listening to some of the adults talking about all these things, but I wasn't sure they knew much about a doctrinal statement nor formal church government.

Well, needless to say, there were soon two churches within our community and then a third.

Shortly, there were seven churches, each holding a different views of doctrine.

However, on a dark Friday morning the last of March, a tornado came through our little community.

There were vacant lots where houses, barns, stores and even part of our school had once stood.

Six of the seven church buildings were gone, only the little Community Church structure remained.

The following Sunday, all the congregation once again gathered back in this one little building for worship.

The crisis of the tornado and its aftermath brought back for at least a moment the unity experienced in previous years.

I have often reflected about this time and about the words prayed by our Lord in John 17.

It seems there was a deep desire within our Lord for unity among the believers.

In the history of the church, representatives have came and accentuated differences. It has taken a crisis to accentuate the principles of unity.

In today's troubled times, let us celebrate our unity of faith.

For it is through this unity with our Lord and with each other, we find strength.

In unity let us pray for one another, love one another, share one another's burdens, and serve one another as vessels of God's Holy Spirit.

ASK THE JUDGE

By Jane M. Winand
Staff Judge Advocate's Office

Q. I really love my 1990 Camaro but I don't seem to have enough money left after my other monthly expenses to pay the full monthly payment.

The loan company was understanding the first two months when I could only make partial payments but now they are threatening me. They said that they will come to repossess the car if I don't pay all the back payments.

They also said that the repossession will mess up my credit rating. I can't afford the car any longer.

Would it be better for me to voluntarily turn the car in to avoid the consequences of a repossession?

A. Practically speaking, there is little difference between voluntarily turning your car in and having it involuntarily repossessed.

Unless you have an agreement with the loan company or dealer stating that the voluntary turn-in will not result in the same consequences of a repossession, the automobile can be sold and the sale price will be deducted from what you still owe on the original contract.

If the dealer or lender does not get enough money from the sale to cover the entire amount that you owe under the contract, you will still be responsible to pay the balance.

The dealer or lender is not in the business of reselling your repossessed car to get the highest price for it.

They want to get rid of the vehicle as soon as possible to get as much money owed to them as quickly as possible. These vehicles are usually sold at automobile auctions in an "as is" condition so the buyer pays only a fraction of the vehicle's real value.

Buyers do not pay full value for a vehicle when they do not know how the previous owner treated the car or what mechanical condition it is in.

Consequently, it is almost a sure bet that your car will be auctioned off for less than the amount of money that you owe and you will have to pay a deficiency judgment. In addition to the contract balance, you will also have to pay the expenses which the lienholder incurred preparing the automobile for re-sale, including pick-up, cleaning, delivery, commissions, etc.

The real clincher is that the entire amount is usually due in a lump sum, rather than in payments.

For a period up to seven years, your credit record will also reflect that there has been a repossession, which means you will have a hard time obtaining credit in the future.

Repossession is rarely the answer. Better alternatives to consider when you find yourself financially strapped are to either refinance to get lower monthly payments or to sell the automobile to someone and pay off the loan with the sale proceeds.

ENERGY WATCH

By Tina Cook
Energy Branch

Because electricity is used so extensively in our homes and work places, we often take it for granted, forgetting the dangers of working with it carelessly.

Electricity, when used improperly or when safety precautions aren't taken, can cause damage to the body ranging from burns to respiratory arrest, nerve damage, cardiac arrest and death.

A shock of only five milliamperes can be felt but is usually not painful. At six to thirty milliamperes, the body experiences a painful shock, and loses control of muscles, although muscle contractions may cause the person to be thrown from the current.

At a level of current higher than thirty milliamperes, the victim can't let go of the live wire. A shock of one or more amperes can cause cardiac arrest, nerve damage and death.

Even small household appliances can deliver shocks much more intense than this. For example, hair dryers commonly use about five amperes, which means they can deliver a shock five times greater than one which can kill.

Electrical current passing through internal tissue and bone cause the most serious type of burn. Involuntary muscle reactions can result in collisions or falls which may lead to bone fractures, bruises, cuts and even death.

Shock isn't the only hazard of electricity. Damaged or incorrect wiring can cause arcing, resulting in fires or explosions.

High voltage arcs can cause even relatively heavy pieces of equipment to explode, throwing shards of metal in all directions.

The best protection we have against an electrical accident is the use of safety precautions and good work practices.

- Make a habit of checking the equipment and tool wiring insulation, especially on flexible cords.
- Be certain all electrical equipment is in good working order, and practice good judgment in working with it. When making repairs to equipment, make sure the equipment is de-energized.
- Never alter or try to intentionally bypass circuit breakers and fuses. They are used to monitor the amount of electricity flowing through a circuit. If too much current passes through the circuit breaker, it will trip, stopping the current. In the same way, fuses will melt through, interrupting the flow of electricity.
- Grounding of equipment can substantially reduce the danger of electrical shock. A service or system ground (with which the system is protected at the service entrance) protects equipment, but the equipment ground (with which the individual piece of equipment is grounded) protects the person using he equipment.
- Generally, grounded conductors are insulated in white or gray. Never disconnect green ground wires or break ground prongs off plugs.
- Stay away from fallen power lines. Report them immediately to the DEH Work Order Section, 545-2135 (if on Fort Benning).
- When operating ladders or cranes, keep clear of power lines. Unless you are qualified, keep a distance of at least 10 feet from overhead electrical lines.
- Kites should be flown as far away from power lines as possible, and never on rainy days (a wet kite string is an excellent conductor). If the kite string becomes entangled in a power line, leave it there, and report it to DEH.
- Keep small children away from electrical outlets and appliances and use outlet protectors in exposed outlets.
- Keep pets away from electrical cords — puppies and kittens can chew through wire insulation.
- Never use electrical appliances in or near water unless the appliance was designed specifically for use in water.

If you have any questions, contact the Energy office at 545-SWAT (Save Watts and Therms).

Radical Readers stay after school

Fort Benning Schools

Dexter School fifth graders are staying after school on a regular basis — not because they have to, but because they want to. There is a club. It is a club with a secret password and a secret handshake.

This group of fifth graders call themselves the Radical Readers, and what they're doing every Thursday afternoon is engaging in one of their favorite pastimes — Reading. The club, the creation of the teacher/sponsors Margaret Koger and Kathryn Van Horn, is designed to promote pleasure reading among the students.

A special highlight of each meeting includes the participation of a "Guest Reader," usually a faculty member, a parent, or other adult in the community. The philosophy behind this is to provide students with good role models of adults reading and enjoying it. School Board President Col. Joseph Trez, and Fort Benning Schools Superintendent Dr. Rolla Baumgartner are just two of the adults who have brought a favorite book to read and to share with the students.

There is always a short business meeting with officers, Tony Rivas, Phillip Brown, Haelan Mercado and Latorya Fowler presiding. One of the main orders of business is to discuss who will be invited as "Guest Reader" on the following week.

Following the business meeting, club members bring out a favorite book and begin to read. Later there is time to discuss what they have been reading with the other club members.

The club also has taken a trip to Pine and Oak Manor Nursing Home. There they spent time reading some of their favorite stories and poems to residents.

"I'm thrilled to see the students so excited about reading," said teacher, Margaret Koger. "The thing that is so exciting about the Radical Readers club to me is the way that it is growing. Each week the group gets larger. Almost 30 students are participating now."

The fifth graders are enthusiastic about the club and very proud of what they are accomplishing. "Sometimes when you read a book," said fifth grader, Phillip Brown, "it just isn't as good till you've had someone to share it with. That's what the Radical Readers Club is for."

IF ALL OUR READERS RAN TO THE BATHROOM RIGHT NOW, THEY STILL WOULDN'T MISS A SINGLE AD.

TV reps love to tell you who's watching what show when. Their stacks of little tiny numbers guarantee you what age, what sex, what income level is watching any given show.

But they can't tell you diddly about who's watching your commercial. Often your spots end up playing to an empty room. Recent studies bear it out. At the first sign of a commercial break, 50% of viewers either head for the bathroom or the kitchen, or just turn off the sound. Others flip to another station.

That's something people don't do with a newspaper ad. According to the 1986/87 Scarborough Report, they don't want to. Consumers rate newspapers as the most helpful, believable source of advertising information.

Deciding how to best advertise your business is a critical decision. But everything becomes a little simpler when you remember one simple rule.

YOU GOTTA BE IN THE PAPER.

MPs tighten post security

By Alyanna B. Clay-Heard
Bayonet staff writer

The Military Police is tightening security on post due to possible terrorist activities.

In a press conference Friday, Col. Fred W. Liebe, post Provost Marshal and commander of the Military Police Activity, stressed the fact that security will be upheld to its strictest level yet on post.

"We are in a second level of security, and actions will be taken to reflect this," Liebe said. "Military police personnel will be stopping vehicles at different checkpoints on post, and the driver will be asked to show identification and to state the nature of his business on post." he added.

While there has been no indication of a specific threat, vehicles will be spot-checked on a 24-hour basis, seven days a week, he said.

"There will be more military police inspecting housing areas and areas where there are a large number of people at any given time, such as post headquarters in Building 4," said Liebe.

Liebe added that he was not sure "how long this state of security will last, but it is a directive from higher headquarters, and it will remain in effect until that directive is lifted."

Liebe said more military police personnel will be hired.

"We need to make sure that every person on post has a reason to be here," he said.

In reference to the post curfew, there have been no changes in spite of tightened security measures, said Liebe. The curfew will continue to be 10 p.m. for all persons under 18 years of age.

Hospital prepares for potential casualties

Some services face possible curtailment

By Alyanna B. Clay-Heard
Bayonet staff writer

Martin Army Community Hospital is gearing up for potential casualties as a result of Operation Desert Storm.

In a press conference Tuesday, Col. H. Dale Brown, the hospital's deputy commander for administration, said the hospital received orders Jan. 18 to add 400 beds in anticipation of receiving potential casualties from the conflict in the Gulf.

Brown said the hospital would be expanded from the current 178 beds to 578 beds to support casualties.

"Although facilities and equipment are largely available to support the expansion, we are currently staffed to operate only 178 beds," said Brown.

"We have provided additional requirements to our higher headquarters, U.S. Army Health Services Command at Fort Sam Houston, Texas," he added.

If patients from Southwest Asia do arrive in sufficient numbers to force the hospital to curtail services, beneficiaries will be informed as quickly as possible, Brown said.

Medical officials in the Columbus and Phenix City area were notified Jan. 18 of the possibility that the hospital may have to reduce or limit services for military family members and retirees, and MACH has solicited their help, Brown said.

"In summary, it is still business as usual," he said.

"Except for orthopedics and acute, long-term care, we will continue to care for all classes of beneficiaries for as long as we can, given the constraints imposed by Operation Desert Storm," he said.

Army has complex transport system for wounded soldiers

By Alyanna B. Clay-Heard
Bayonet staff writer

A sophisticated and complex transport system is in place to handle casualties of Operation Desert Storm.

If casualties need to be transferred from the combat zone to Martin Army Community Hospital, they will be transported in the most expedient manner possible, according to Col. H. Dale Brown, the hospital's deputy commander for Administration.

Brown gave a step-by-step overview of the system used to evacuate casualties.

A front-line casualty's first line of medical care is the combat medic, he said. The medic's mission is to stabilize the patient and prepare him for transport to an aid station behind the lines. At the aid station, the patient's wounds are further assessed.

If the patient's injuries are found not to be serious, the patient is treated and sent to a clearing station. From there, the patient will be sent back to duty.

If the patient's injuries are extensive enough to require surgery, that's when he will be transferred to a Mobile Army Surgical Hospital or combat support hospital for treatment.

If the patient needs to be removed from the theater for treatment, he will be transported by air ambulance to a medical facility in Europe.

From there, the soldier will be transferred back to the states, if the nature of his injuries warrants it. If not, the soldier will be transported back to duty.

If the soldier is transported to the states, he or she will go to a larger facility, such as Walter Reed Army Medical Center, before finally being transported to a facility closer to home.

"This is a very competent system," said Brown. "Field hospitals today have the most technologically advanced equipment to date, and the chances of saving the lives of casualties are greatly improved," he added

Members of the 1137th Transportation Company, Alabama National Guard, are ready for action at a recent deployment ceremony as they prepare to depart for the Middle East in support of Operation Desert Storm. The unit will provide transportation support to combat troops already in Saudi Arabia.

Family members seek answers at meeting

By Wanda Campbell
Bayonet community writer

Questions about what happens now that war is a reality prompted nearly 700 family members to attend a support group briefing in Marshall Auditorium Jan. 17.

Family members of soldiers from the 36th Engineer Group, 34th Medical Group, 215th Finance, and other units deployed to Saudi Arabia in Operation Desert Storm attended the meeting.

The most often asked questions centered on how the family members would be notified if their husbands were injured or killed. Col. John D. Fuller, Chief of Staff, explained that if a soldier was killed, his next of kin would be contacted in person.

When a soldier is injured, "the spouse or next of kin would receive a phone call," he said.

Family members would be told if the injuries were serious or not, he said. And, when the injury is serious, "we would fly you to be with your spouse," Fuller said.

"In my opinion, health services should have doctors call families to personally tell them the information about injuries," Fuller said.

As cheers went up from all over the room, a doctor's wife shouted, "Would you want that doctor to take time out to call you while another soldier could by dying?"

Several wives yelled "yes" and one said, "I want to know how my husband is getting treated."

The Chief of Staff then told the crowd they had to settle down or risk concluding the meeting early.

When asked if soldiers were getting vaccinations for diseases expected in chemical warfare, Fuller said, "I expect front-line troops to already have the first shots." There are two boosters needed for complete protection, Fuller explained.

For questions about why some soldiers had been sending personal items home, Fuller explained that the reason is two fold.

First, there were too many goodies mailed to service members during the holidays. Second, there is too much personal gear to be responsible for during the moves necessary for combat. Fuller emphasized the importance of sending letters to boost morale.

There were also several questions about mail delivery and packages that are mailed to service members.

Fuller explained that some units had new APOs to allow mail to be bundled into pallets that could be shipped directly.

He also said that there was a random selection of packages that were being X-rayed.

Other concerns centered on the rules for staying in quarters after 180 days of deployment. Fuller said families are allowed to stay in quarters because this is a deployment, not a temporary duty assignment.

One question about why one family with no children had quarters with four bedrooms and another family with one child had quarters with two bedrooms brought the only laugh for the evening.

Families respond to war news

By Wanda Campbell
Bayonet community writer

Where were you when the war started? Like the assassination of President Kennedy and the bombing of Pearl Harbor, the day the U.N. forces invaded Iraq will be a day that many will not forget.

For most, the first reaction was to cry. The tears did not last long, for most only a few minutes. And, no one could say they were tears of sadness.

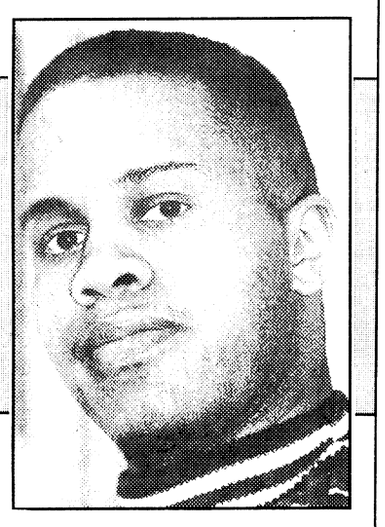
Dixie Hawkinson, whose husband, Capt. Charles Hawkinson is commander of 598th Maintenance Company, said she believed the tears were tears of release. "We have had so many months of anticipation and the announcement was just a release," she said. "Now is not the time to break down, though. We have to be strong for what is going to come next."

Perhaps the most positive outlook was from Judy Purkett, whose husband, Jim, is supposed to be safe in Israel. She said she could not sit and wait for him without a sense of humor.

"As an Army wife, I have learned to accept the separations, and I understand the risk," she said. "There is some relief that the war is finally started. Now they can go in and kick over Saddam's toys and we can bring those boys in from the sandbox."

For most family members, the news was not expected. "I was not expecting it to come so quickly after the deadline, but I was not surprised," said Johanna Denny, wife of 1st Sgt. David Denny of Headquarters, 1st Battalion, 18th Infantry.

For a few families, the shock was more than they had imagined. "I was baby-sitting for a friend who had gone to the briefing for the 197th when she called me jabbering on the phone," said one wife from the 43rd Engineers who asked not to be identified. "When I heard the news, I could not even make it to the bathroom to throw up."



While some mothers were very proud of their child's choice to be part of the military services, they had not anticipated the emotions they would feel when

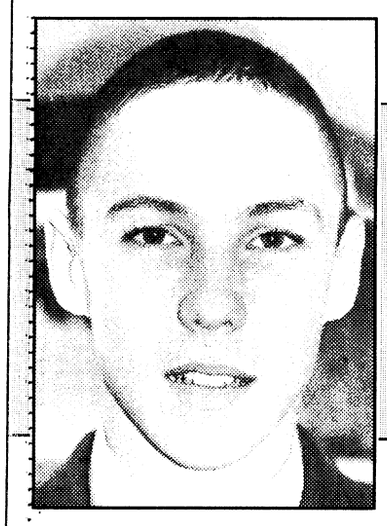
OPINION

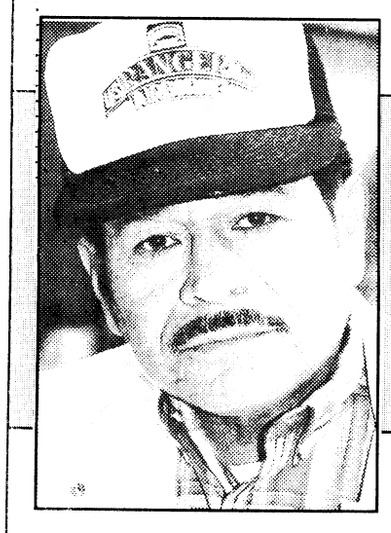
VARIOUS VOICES:

What was your initial feeling when you heard U.N. forces had invaded Iraq?



Pvt. 2 Larry B. Heard, 630th MP Co., Bamberg, Germany — "I felt excited to hear the news at first, then I felt a little disappointed because every company in my battalion is deployed except mine. I really want to be over there."

Sgt. Dennis Maury, 7th Group, 1058th Trans. Co. — "Outstanding. I can't wait to get over there. It's about time we went in there and did what we were trained to do. We're definitely going to lower his morale. Let's get it done and come home."



2nd Lt. Al Abramson, 2nd ID, 1st Bn., 506th Inf., Korea. — "I wish I was there so I could finally put to use the extensive specialized training I've received at the Infantry Officer Basic Course."

Pvt. 1 Rafael Manzanares, E Co., 2nd Bn., 54th Inf. — "When I found out, I was graduating from AIT. It was kind of scary."

Anna Sanders, family member — "I was nervous actually seeing it on paper. To think that this is happening in my lifetime is unbelievable."

B.M. Romo, retired 1st Sgt., 1st Ranger Battalion. — "I was really sad. But, I expected it. I've been in a war, and I know what it's about. I don't want pain and suffering, but I'm all behind President Bush. It's a bad thing, but it had to happen."

COMMENTARY

Husbands need support groups, too

By Clyde Snively
USAIC Public Affairs Office

He wasn't hard to pick out. In an auditorium full of people, he sat apart.

Later, in the lobby, he stood, separate, watching the human traffic ebb and flow, a bemused look on his face.

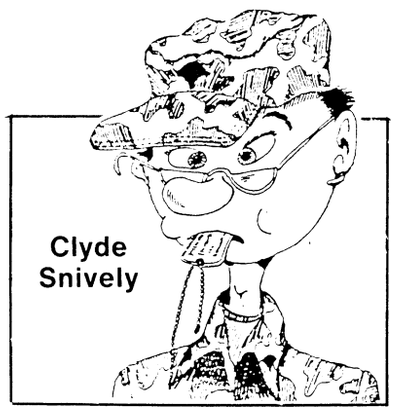
He's a spouse of a soldier in Saudi Arabia. Like hundreds of other spouses, he'd come to Marshall Auditorium to get the latest update on the situation in the Persian Gulf, to find out about support for spouses.

Unlike nearly all other spouses, he's a he, not a she. If ever there was a minority group, he's in one.

He was talking about what it's like being a man in a woman's world — about the isolation he felt, about what he considered the lack of concern for men in his position. He was just getting warmed up when a TV crew moved in and he moved out.

Since that time, I made it a point to hunt down other men in his situation. There are several who are also soldiers, but not that many who are pure civilians — and even fewer who could be classified as house husbands.

Despite these differences, most agreed they felt alienated from the wives.



"I don't know if they feel threatened, or think we wouldn't be interested, but we never get invited to any of their neighborhood coffees and only rarely do they call us to family support group meetings." said one.

I asked him if he'd attend if invited. "I'll try anything once," he said.

Another said he doubted if he had much in common with the wives. "I can't see myself sitting around talking about kids. But if they want to talk about common problems we face with our spouses gone, like balancing check books, getting transportation to the commissary, trips downtown or even out of town, then count me in."

"Could you see yourself sitting around talking combat, now that war's broken out?" I asked.

"I've got the same concerns they do. I want to know where my wife is, what she's doing, if she's safe, if her commander knows what he's doing.

"Above all, I miss sharing information. You know, comparing phone calls, letters. It really helps to get more than one perspective."

"Yeah, we've got the same concerns the wives do," another said. "Before the shooting started it was bad, but bearable. Now we look for someone we can turn to who's experiencing the same worries and under the same stress of not knowing from minute to minute if he or she is safe.

"I find you don't get a lot of understanding from those who aren't in our situation. You might get sympathy but not empathy, and that's if you're lucky. Many people turn their backs on you. Don't want to hear it. Call us complainers and whiners."

"Yeah," one of the other husbands said, "you make one comment that's not what's known as the 'party line,' and you hear things like, 'he knew what he was getting into when he signed up,' or 'whadja expect when your husband joined, life on easy street?' Of course in our case it's not husband, but wife?"

"Yeah, and if you're a husband you also get one of those, 'why aren't you in the Army, buster,' looks at the same time?"

I suggested they, the husbands, might want to form their own support group. That's when I got the strange look.

"Hey man. Our wives aren't in the same unit. We've got 2nd MASH, 43rd Engineers, 197th all represented. We want to be with our own kind," he said.

To survive any war, military families need faith, hope, truthfulness, prayer

By Debra Galle

It's going to be OK.

In a war-torn world, fear and expectations of "the worst" abound.

Especially for children — whether or not someone they know or love is in the desert.

They get all the bad news they could possibly need. They see it on television; they hear it on the radio. Their little ears perk up when adults discuss world affairs.

Parents think children are busy in their "own little world." They think children don't pay attention to doomsday coffee-break conversations.

Grown-ups, wake up and smell the peanut butter and jelly sandwiches.

Much has been written about how to talk to children about the war. The bottom line is to be honest in as much information as children need, but so many parents tend to give the worst case scenario — "just in case."

Whatever happened to hope?

My husband, Mark, has had Saudi sand in his boots since August 21.

His career has oddly followed in his retired master sergeant father's footsteps. First to Aberdeen, Md., then to Kitzingen, Germany, now to Fort Benning.

After his father, Lou, was stationed at what was then Camp Benning, he was sent to serve in the Korean War for two years.

Now his son is also in a war.

Mark's mother, Liselotte, waited like I do now for her husband to come home. She prayed every day and lit votive candles in a little church in Park River, N.D.

The priest got to know her, and even though he insisted on calling her "Elizabeth," they soon became friends. She continued to correct her name, but he kept a sense of humor to quell her pain. "You just look like an Elizabeth to me," he would say with a gentle smile.

> "Prayers do work. Tiny miracles happen every single day. People just need to notice and accept them as just that."
> — Debra Galle

Lou's division became surrounded and she did not hear from him for six weeks.

Father O'Meara stopped Lisa one morning, sensing her concern. He celebrated a special Mass just for her and Lou — alone in the tiny chapel on the hillside.

Two weeks later, the 2nd Division broke through. Father O'Meara greeted Lisa on her morning pilgrimage when the news came out. He waited with a familiar ear-to-ear grin, "See Elizabeth, prayers do work!"

Prayers do work! Tiny miracles happen every single day. People just need to notice and accept them as just that.

This is what I tell my children.

Lisa and Lou call me nearly every day from Colorado to offer hope, support, and a gentle sense of humor.

I have a funny feeling somewhere inside of me. It's not in my brain — that's too busy listening to news and sorting out daily activities. The feeling is in my heart — no, it's somehow deeper than that.

Prayer helps me. Our 10th wedding anniversary was Dec. 27. I thought I'd recognize that day by attending noon Mass. However, something unusual happened. No one else showed up for Mass so the lights were dimmed and the chapel was quiet.

To my surprise, Father Joe Piskura lit the candles and celebrated Mass with special intentions for Mark and I. I carried away with me that day an unexplainable feeling of peace that rests somewhere between my heart and my soul.

That's what I tell my children.

Despite the barrage of bad news, worst case scenarios and journalistic drama that so irritates the fibers of my press pass, I share the same feelings of that war wife a generation ago.

Lisa felt Lou would be home safe. She held her 8-year-old son and 13-year-old daughter close to her and told them the truth.

She told them their dad was fighting in a war, and it was very sad and dangerous. No one knew just when he would be home.

But, the most important thing she told them was not carried on the 10 o'clock news or in the headlines of the day. It was news in her heart, and she held it in a tiny gap of air between her folded hands.

Their daddy was being carried by their Lord Jesus, and he would return safe to them soon.

Through two long wars on front-duty, Lou did indeed survive. On this past New Year's day, he celebrated his 73rd birthday.

His happiest pastime is skiing for free on the peaceful sides of the rugged Rocky Mountains. He calls me sometimes just to tell me how beautiful the fresh powder was that day. He makes me smile.

Lisa's hands are still folded in daily prayer, this time, the rosary is said for her son in Saudi Arabia.

He, too, is being carried in the Lord's tender arms and will be home again soon to ours.

LETTER

Reader praises post drivers

I am a recently called reservist from California and have been transporting myself on a bicycle.

As an emergency room physician, I have seen the mayhem of auto vs. bicycle accidents, so I bought the bike with some hesitation.

However, in all my years of riding, I have never seen such consistent courtesy and consideration for bicyclists as here at Fort Benning.

Please accept my thanks.

MPs conducting spot checks

By Alyanna B. Clay-Heard
Bayonet staff writer

The Military Police are conducting spot checks and taking other measures to tighten security on post.

According to Maj. David Buzzell, deputy commander and operations officer of the Military Police Activity, certain actions are being taken to ensure that proper personnel are coming onto the installation.

Persons making their way on or off post may be subject to:

- Being stopped at random.
- Being asked to show positive identification (military and civilian personnel).
- Having their vehicle checked for proper state and post registration.
- Having their vehicle searched.

If any of the necessary criteria is not met, the individual will be asked to leave Fort Benning, said Buzzell.

In terms of personal safety, Buzzell stressed the importance of being aare of strange persons or items and the added importance of reporting suspicious activity to the Military Police Activity desk sergeant at 545-5222 for further investigation.

"The bottom line is to practice a personal check for yourself and your belongings to prevent any criminal activity against them," said Buzzell. "

"Securing your vehicle, quarters and valuables is a good way to ensure against criminal activity," he added.

How to register your vehicle

Personnel residing on or employed at Fort Benning must have their vehicles registered with the post Vehicle Registration office.

To register your car, take the following to the Vehicle Registration office:

- A current tag receipt
- Proof of current insurance
- A valid state driver's license
- Military or civilian identification

The Vehicle Registration office is in Soldiers' Plaza, building 2621. Office hours are 8 a.m. to 4:30 p.m.

According to officials, only Department of Defense decals are valid on Fort Benning.

Civilians need proper ID cards

Civilian Personnel Office

All civilian employees — including appropriated fund, non-appropriated fund and contract personnel — at Fort Benning must have civilian identification cards.

The Technical Services Division of the Directorate of Civilian Personnel is the action office for the issuance of ID cards.

Each directorate or major activity should designate a point of contact for the processing and issuance of ID cards.

Supervisors should ensure their employees have identification cards.

For more information, call Julie Hartmann at 545-4246 or 545-4584.

POST BRIEFS

- Martin Army Community Hospital will conduct a blood drive Wednesday, also.

Supervisors are reminded that donors may be excused up to a maximum of four hours following blood donation, for health reasons, on the day of donation.

For more information, call the laboratory at MACH at 544-4565.

Family members should update emergency data

Desert Storm family members should ensure their emergency data cards are up to date. Family members should also ensure their rear-detachment commanders have their current address and telephone numbers.

Speed limits to change

Starting Feb. 1, the speed limit on many streets on Main Post will be changed.

Post officials said the change is to improve safety, provide uniform speed limits and increase fuel economy.

Some outlying roads such as Custer, 10th Mountain Division and Lumpkin will be reduced to 35 miles per hour, while Santa Fe and Davis Hill will be posted at 25 miles per hour.

A list of speed limit changes will be published in the Bayonet and the Benning Bulletin.

Property auction set

The Defense Reutilization and Marketing Office will auction government surplus property at 9 a.m. Thursday in Building 470 on 10th Mountain Division Road.

The auction is open to the public and will include clothing, household furniture, office machines, office furniture, vehicular parts and industrial items.

A three-day inspection begins Monday, and property may be viewed daily from 8 a.m. to 3 p.m. and until 9 a.m. the day of the sale.

Civilian Personnel Office accepting applications

The Civilian Personnel Office is accepting applications until Feb. 1 for summer employment .

They are also accepting applications leading to immediate employment for various positions.

For more information, call the One-Stop Employment Information Office at 545-3374. Hours of operation are 8 a.m. to 4:45 p.m.

Soldiers Radio, TV taking song dedications

Family members can dedicate a song to soldiers deployed in Operation Desert Storm.

Soldiers Radio and Television is operating a radio dedication service, which will allow family members to call and leave a dedication on a telephone recording machine.

The dedication and song will be included in a special radio program produced by SRTV.

Callers need to provide the name of soldier, organization or home station, title of the song and name of person making the dedication.

The dedication should not exceed 60 seconds. Dedications can be made by calling autovon 288-6286, commercial (202) 433-6286, 24 hours a day.

Guard, reserve families may attend briefings

Family members of U.S. Army Reserve, National Guard and active duty soldiers assigned to any unit in Saudi Arabia who either want to participate in Fort Benning Operation Desert Storm information briefings or require information should call the Family Assistance Center at 545-5516, 545-7517, or 545-6959.

Smoking policy clarified for commissary, PX

Smoking is prohibited in the Commissary and the Post Exchange, according to officials. Smoking is permitted in the outer mall where ashtrays are provided.

MPs urge drivers to use different morning routes

By Brian C. Sutton
Bayonet staff writer

Drivers using South Lumpkin Road and incoming Benning Road may need to use alternate morning routes, according to post Provost Marshal, Col. Fred W. Liebe.

Currently, a test is under way to determine if changes put into effect Dec. 26 will work effectively.

The changes made are designed to reduce the number of military police needed to direct traffic, not to inconvenience drivers or create safety hazards, said Liebe.

Drivers should be aware that the average wait before entering the intersections of both South Lumpkin and Benning Road is five to six minutes. Liebe said that drivers may want to leave for work earlier than normal or take an alternate route in order to avoid the rush that occurs between 7:45 and 8 a.m.

In addition, inclement weather may cause added delays during all hours of the day, so extra time should be allotted for those mornings when conditions are not favorable for travel.

The Office of the Provost Marshal asks for motorists' complete cooperation to make this program work, he said.

Army gives guidelines on dealing with media

By Ronald H. Kuhne
Public Affairs Proponent Activity

Editor's note: Operations Urgent Fury, Just Cause and Desert Storm have reminded us how important it is for all members of service families to have some public affairs "savvy."

Family members really need that savvy when they're under pressure from reporters firing questions at them during and after a contingency operation.

Consider the following scenario:

It's zero-dark-thirty when the phone awakens Myrtle Mace and husband, Sgt. Timmy Mace (it could just as easily be Timmy Mace and his wife, Sgt. Myrtle Mace). Timmy's outfit has been alerted for deployment. Timmy reports to his unit on the double.

At daybreak, Myrtle and her two children eat breakfast without Timmy. They learn from television news that several U.S. military units, Timmy's included, are on their way to one of the world's hot spots. They don't know when he'll return.

By the time a Pentagon news briefing cuts into mid-morning talk shows with sketchy details about the deployment, Myrtle Mace has placed or answered a dozen calls to and from other spouses in her husband's unit.

Rumors are ripe, but no one has clear answers to all the obvious questions.

The next telephone call catches Myrtle off balance. It's from a reporter at station WBOK, the all-news radio station in the state capital.

Has she heard from her husband? Is it true that four soldiers were killed by snipers as they arrived at the foreign civilian airport? What's her personal opinion of the political turmoil in the host nation?

Is she worried about her husband's safety? Had she been contacted by officers from his unit's rear contingent?

Myrtle wonders how to answer all these questions. In fact, she wonders if she should try to answer them at all. Here's some guidance for her:

● Does she have a right to talk with the news media about military matters? Yes, she does. But before talking to a reporter, she should carefully consider whether the things she says could harm her husband or his unit and the mission.

● Does she have an obligation to talk to the media? No, she does not. She may answer all, some, or none of the questions they ask her, and she can end an interview at any time.

Before she talks to a reporter she should write down the reporter's name, telephone number, and organization.

She'd be smart to do this even if she'll decline comment: The reporters may restrain their persistence if they know she knows who they are.

● Is she required to inform her husband's unit about any media inquiry? No, she is not. But she may want to contact the public affairs office closest in the chain of command. Then staffers there can watch for articles and broadcast material to include in their after-action report and historical file.

● Is she free to discuss political issues? Yes, she is. Her husband's role in the military does not deprive her of that constitutional right. But she should make it clear, if she does speak her mind, that she speaks for herself only and not for her husband or his command.

● Should she discuss rumors or volunteer them? No, she should not! Rumors mislead, disappoint and hurt. She should avoid repeating them as much as she avoids starting them.

● May she criticize official actions? yes, she has the right to criticize. She also has the right to praise, and the military naturally prefers praise to criticism. Praise shows support. It builds the morale and esprit de corps of our soldiers. It shows the opposing force that American resolve is strong.

The First Amendment is alive and well for Myrtle and the rest of Timmy Mace's family, but rights carry obligations.

When it comes to answering questions from news media, these obligations boil down to a simple principle: Think twice before speaking once.

Tips on surviving news media inquiries

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Family members of deployed service members may find themselves approached by local or national news medial representatives for interview.

Here are some tips about surviving:

● Know your rights. It's your choice whether to speak to reporters.

If you do choose to speak, remember it is your right to stop at any time.

Know the role and purpose of the American press. They are doing a job vital to democracy. Understand that it is not harassment when they call you at home or stop you at the supermarket asking for an interview.

Only when they persist after having been told "no" does it become harassment.

● Know with whom you are talking. Before answering questions, write down the reporter's name, telephone number and the name of his news organization.

Do this even if you're going to decline comment; it'll discourage him from persisting after you say no.

● Know who will hear you. Even family members might have information useful to opposing forces.

Thanks to technology, the enemy can have access to what you say the moment you say it.

On the other hand, when you are enthusiastic about your spouse's mission, your response can build morale and show American resolve.

● Know your limits. It's best not to talk about anything of which you do not have first-hand knowledge.

There is nothing wrong with saying "I don't know" in response to questions to which you have no answer. Don't speculate.

Finally, if your spouse calls home with information about his unit's return, with news about casualties or how the mission is going, remember to take what he says with a grain of salt and keep it to yourself.

Combat spawns rumors, and some of what he tells you could be sensitive, wrong or subject to change.

Families

that child was heading for a war zone.

"As a military wife, I can accept the possibility that some day my husband could be sent to war," said Linda Collins whose son Pvt. 2 Robert Sentz is assigned to Company D, 15th Engineers.

"When I think about my son going to war, it is very different. I can't help thinking he is not old enough to be in this situation. I guess, as a mother, it's hard to see them as anything but children."

Now that the war is a reality, most families are turning to the news and each other for comfort.

Susan Oshiro, whose husband Sgt. 1st Class David Oshiro is with 2nd Battalion, 18th Infantry said, "I watch the news all day, and when I go to bed I listen to the radio."

As the war continues, support groups are providing strength for many families.

"We have a good support group in place in the company and battalion. I have my own little support group in my neighborhood. The fear is still there, but there is a kind of calm now," said Denny.

Magazine articles focus on Iraq's infantry

Infantry Magazine

The January-February issue of Infantry Magazine contains two articles of particular interest at this time.

In "Iraq's Mailed Fist," Maj. John F. Antal, who has served in a variety of positions in tank units, describes the armor organizations, equipment, and doctrine that Iraq used in its war against Iran and includes some lessons that can be learned from the war.

In "Iraqi Infantry," Michael R. Jacobson describes the infantry organizations, weapons, and defensive positions the Iraqis can be expected to use and offers some combat tips to help soldiers survive in battle.

Jacobson is assigned to the Infantry Center's Directorate of Intelligence and Security.

In addition, "The Desert: It's Different," by S.L.A. Marshall (reprinted from a 1970 issue) offers some thoughts on operating in the desert.

Other feature articles in that issue are "The Bradley Challenge," by Lt. Harry C. Andress, and "Thoughts on Medium or Motorized Forces," by Lt. Col. Thomas R. Rozman.

Andress, who served as a Bradley platoon leader in the 3rd Battalion, 15th Infantry, discusses the dual nature of a Bradley squad and the challenges of training both the mounted and the dismounted elements.

Rozman offers his thoughts on the array of forces the Army may face in the future and advocates the creation of more specialized maneuver units permanently organized to operate between the extremes of high and low intensity conflict.

He is assigned to the Office of the Deputy Chief of Staff for Training at the Training and Doctrine Command.

Other articles in the issue include "Effective Company Defense: A Matter of Time and Task Management," by Capt. John F. Agoglia, an Infantry School instructor, and Maj. John D. Johnson, assigned to the School of Advanced Military Studies at Fort Leavenworth; "Working the Point," by Staff Sgt. Gerald J. Vlastos a drill sergeant at Fort Jackson; and "System Safety," by Precy D. Aguas, the Infantry School's System Safety Engineer.

Information about Infantry magazine, including subscription rates and writers guidelines, is available from Editor, P.O. Box 2005, Fort Benning, Ga. 31905-0605; autovon 835-2350 or commercial (404) 545-2350.

The editorial and subscription offices are in building 1827 at the corner of Marchant and Ingersol streets.

VA Q&A

Department of Veterans Affairs

Q. How long does a power of attorney designating a service organization to represent me in VA claims matters last?

A. A power of attorney does not expire. It must be revoked or canceled. The Department of Veterans Affairs treats designation of a new power of attorney as an automatic cancellation of an earlier one. You may cancel a power of attorney at any time by notifying VA.

Q. I just got married. Does my wife automatically become the beneficiary of my VA insurance policy?

A. No. You must notify the VA that you wish to make a change and provide complete identification of the new beneficiary.

Q. Can the interest reate on a VA home loan be changed?

A. The prevailing interest rate at the time the loan is made, established by the Government and set forth in the mortgage note, is a fixed, non-adjustable rate mortgage which remains the same for the life of the loan. However, to take advantage of a lower interest rate, refinancing of an existing loan could be an option.

Q. With national cemetery offices closed on weekends, how can I schedule a burial for the following week?

A. To accommodate families when deaths occur late in the week or on weekends and holidays, interment services for the next week may be scheduled through a telephone referral service. Anyone calling a local national cemetery will be referred by answering machine to one of three large cemeteries that are staffed over the weekend: Calverton, N.Y.; Jefferson Barracks, St. Louis, Mo.; or Riverside, Calif. A cemetery representative on duty will verify eligibility, then schedule burial at the local cemetery.

Q. My wife is buried in a national cemetery that is now closed. We always planned to be buried together. What can I do?

A. Even a "closed" national cemetery will be able to accommodate the burial of the spouse of someone already buried in the cemetery. "Closed" means lack of space prevents the cemetery from accepting full casketed burials of those without a spouse already buried in the cemetery. Most "closed" national cemeteries can also accommodate burial or interment of cremated remains otherwise entitled.

Q. I have a health insurance policy, and I receive care from my local VA medical center. I understand that VA is now required by law to bill health insurers for medical care given to certain veterans. If VA bills my insurance company for medical care, do I have to pay my insurance policy deductible?

A. No. VA absorbs this deductible. This may even satisfy your policy deductible if you later seek private medical care.

Q. Has the Department of Veterans Affairs expanded its education benefits program?

A. Since Oct. 1, 1990, VA education assistance has been expanded to include vocational, technical, correspondence and apprenticeship training for reservists and national guardsmen. Limited flight training is also available for members of the reserve forces and veterans with Montgomery GI Bill eligibility. To receive flight training benefits, students must hold FAA unlimited private pilot certificates.

Q. What will happen if an insurance company does not reimburse the government for the full VA claims? Will I have to pay the difference to VA?

A. No. VA will not seek recovery of any uncollected funds from the patient. This should not be confused, however, with bills VA may send to veterans in a certain income category (Category C) who have agreed to make a co-payment to VA for their medical care.

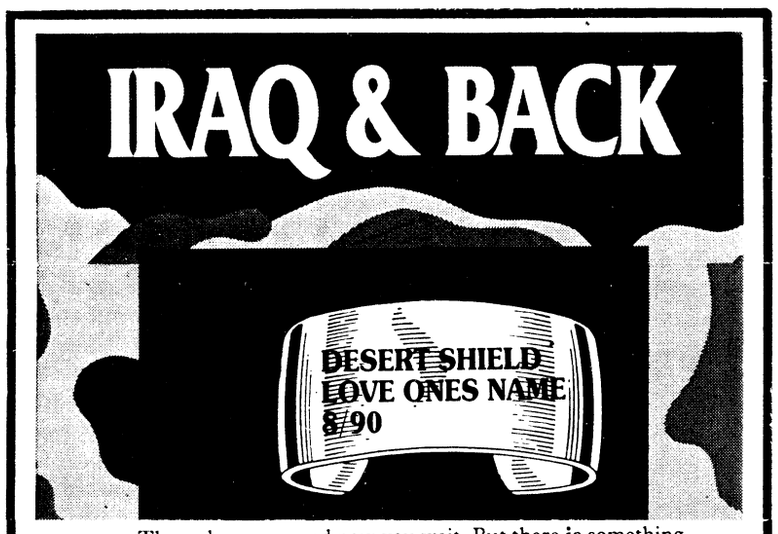
Q. What entitles a veteran to a clothing allowance and how much is provided?

A. An annual clothing allowance is payable to veterans who receive compensation for (1) a service-connected disability requiring use of a prosthetic or orthopedic appliance that tears or wears out clothing; or (2) a service-connected skin condition requiring use of medication prescribed by a doctor which causes irreparable damage to the veteran's outer garments. The current amount of this allowance is $414.

Q. My father, a World War II veteran, was recently buried in a national cemetery. As the next of kin, I would like to receive the "Presidential Memorial Certificate" for his service to his country. Where can I apply for the certificate?

A. Notice of a veteran's death is normally received in one of Veteran's Affairs regional offices and that facility identifies the next of kin (widow, widower, oldest child, parent, or oldest sibling) from the veteran's records and requests the certificates from Washington, D.C. Next of kin need not apply. Others should apply to a VA regional office.

Q. Is it true that husbands of female veterans are eligible for the same Department of Veterans Affairs benefits as wives and widows of male veterans?



A. Yes. A husband or widower has the same status as a wife or widow of a male veteran and is eligible to receive the same benefits if otherwise entitled.

YOUR INCOME TAX GUIDE

IRS publications make tax filing simple, easier

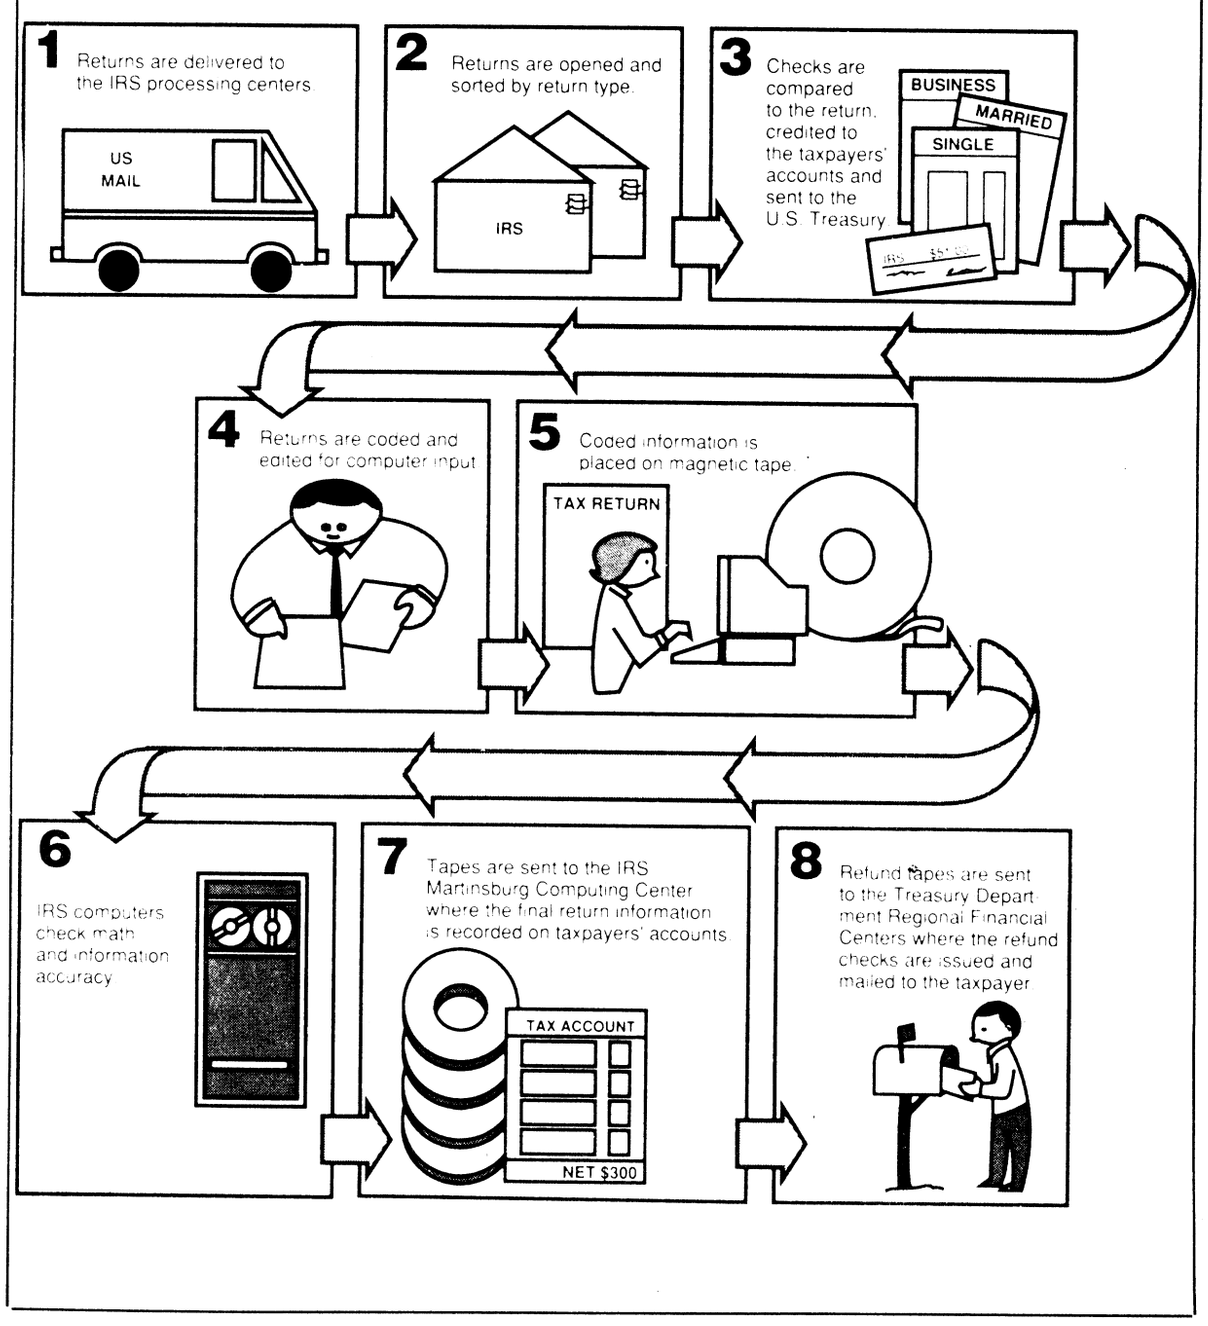
American Forces Information Service

The Internal Revenue Service wants to make it easier to file 1990 income taxes. As part of this effort, the IRS constantly updates information in its free publications.

Providing step-by-step instructions and answering commonly asked questions on specific topics, the brochures and forms are available by contacting the IRS.

IRS officials said an individual may need answers or more information not available in the standard 1040 packets. Ranging from owning a farm or business to child care and moving, each publication discusses a specific tax aspect in depth.

Some frequently requested publications are:



- Publication 1, Your Rights as a Taxpayer
- Publication 3, Tax Information for Military Personnel
- Publication 17, Your Federal Income Tax
- Publication 503, Child and Dependent Care Expenses
- Publication 504, Tax Information for Divorced or Separated Individuals
- Publication 521, Moving Expenses
- Publication 523, Tax Information on Selling Your Home
- Publication 525, Taxable and Nontaxable Income
- Publication 530, Tax Information for Homeowners
- Publication 596, Earned Income Credit
- Publication 910, Guide to Free Tax Services

Other forms needed to complete income tax returns may include:

- Form 1040X, "Amended U.S. Individual Income Tax Return"
- Form 2119, "Sale of Your Home"
- Form 2848, "Power of Attorney and Declaration of Representative"
- Form 4868, "Application for Automatic Extension of Time to File U.S. Individual Income Tax Return"

From Mail Box to Refund Check

The full cycle of processing federal tax returns.

File now for extension

American Forces Information Service

Taxpayers who are out of the country at tax time may qualify for a four-month extension to file, but any federal taxes owed still have to be paid by April 15.

Interest and possible penalties will be added to any taxes not paid in full.

To request an extension, use Internal Revenue Service Form 4868, "Application for Automatic Extension of Time to File U.S. Individual Income Tax Return."

When the form is completed, file it with any taxes owed by April 15.

With the four-month extension, tax returns must be filed by Aug. 15.

If filing Form 1040, list any payment made on line 58. Using Form 1040A, write "Form 4868" and any payment made on Line 28d.

U.S. service members, citizens and resident aliens living outside the United States or Puerto Rico can qualify for an automatic two-month extension.

A statement explaining how the taxpayer qualifies for the extension must be attached to the tax return.

Interest must be paid on any tax owed from the tax due date until the tax is paid.

To receive copies of the publication and Form 4868, call 1 (800) 829-3676.

IRS tips to easier tax filing

American Forces Information Service

Service members who made a permanent change of station in 1990 might be eligible for some itemized deductions if they had expenses Uncle Sam didn't cover.

Things to look at include shipping the family pet and additional insurance coverage on household goods en route. Internal Revenue Service Publication 521, Moving Expenses, explains what expenses can be deducted from a move. Call 1 (800) 829-3676 for a free copy.

The Internal Revenue Service recommends keeping tax returns and supporting documents for about three years.

If a person has misplaced a copy of the filed federal tax return, the IRS has made it easy to get a replacement copy. Call 1 (800) 829-3676 and request a copy of IRS Form 4506, "Request for Copy of Tax Form." Send the completed form with a check for $4.25 to the IRS center where the form was originally filed.

Allow at least six weeks after the return has been filed to request a copy, IRS officials said.

Internal Revenue Service explains which 1040 to use

American Forces Information Service

Sometimes the hardest part in filling out federal income taxes is deciding which Form 1040 to use. Internal Revenue Service officials say there are guidelines that a person can use in deciding which is the best form for filing taxes.

Use Form 1040EZ if:

- Filing status is single (under 65 and not blind);
- Claiming only one exemption (self); and
- Taxable income is less than $50,000 — all of which came from wages, salaries, tips, taxable scholarships and fellowships — and does not include more than $400 in interest earnings.

Use Form 1040A if:

- Any filing status;
- Claiming one or more exemptions;
- Claiming blind or over age 64 exemption;
- Taxable income is less than $50,000 — may consist of wages, salaries, tips, taxable scholarships and fellowships, dividends, unemployment compensation or more than $400 in interest;
- Claiming contributions (other than "roll-overs") to an IRA;
- Claiming advanced earned income credit payments; and
- Claiming child and dependent care and earned income credits.

Form 1040 should be used for tax filing for any situation not covered by Form 1040EZ or 1040A.

IRS officials said to use the form that allows the reporting of all income or tax payments and provides as many tax benefits as possible. It should speed up any refund, they added.

Child care can cut taxes

American Forces Information Service

Child or dependent care expenses may qualify as a credit on federal tax returns.

Based on the taxpayer's adjusted gross income, the credit could be as much as $720 for one qualifying person or $1,440 for two or more.

The qualifying dependent must be the taxpayer's child, disabled dependent or disabled spouse.

The tax return must be filed using Form 1040 or 1040A.

The taxpayer — and spouse, if married — must work or be looking for work.

Married couples must file a joint return.

Social Security numbers are required on the tax return for dependents aged 2 and older.

If the number has been requested but not received by the time the return is filed, write "Applied for" in the space provided for that dependent's number.

The name, address and Social Security number for the dependent care provider must also be listed on the tax return.

If some information is unavailable, the taxpayer must be able to show that an effort was made to get it.

Calculation of the care credit, requirements and limits are explained in the Internal Revenue Service Publication 503, Child and Dependent Care Expense.

Call 1 (800) 829-3676 for a copy of the publication.

Know your rights as a taxpayer

American Forces Information Service

The Taxpayer Bill of Rights, signed into law as part of the Technical and Miscellaneous Revenue Act on Nov. 10, 1988, clarifies and extends the rights of taxpayers.

Internal Revenue Service officials say highlights of the Bill of Rights section include:

- Personal and financial information will be kept confidential;
- Interest will be paid on delayed refunds;
- Right to appeal examiner's audit findings; and
- Free assistance in preparing returns by providing publications, and walk-in service.

Under the act, a taxpayer can request that penalties be dropped if the advice given by IRS employees is erroneous. However, the interest due will not be canceled.

According to the IRS, a person has a show that reliance on the advice was reasonable and that the tax return was filed after receiving the information from the IRS.

To determine if there is reasonable cause, the IRS needs the date and time of the call; name of the IRS employee; the question asked and the specific facts given to the employee; the answer given by the IRS; and if the taxpayer tried to find the answer in any IRS publication.

A taxpayer is liable for the least amount of tax due under the law. If the tax return is questioned, the IRS must send a letter requesting more information or explaining why a change needs to be made to the return.

If additional taxes are owed, the IRS will send a bill describing the tax and how much is owed. If the taxpayer is unable to pay the bill, the IRS may agree to payment by installments.

Either before or at an interview, the IRS must explain the audit system and how it works.

The taxpayer has the right to ask that the time and place for the audit be convenient. The taxpayer also has the right to have an attorney, certified public accountant or other authorized individual accompany or represent him at the audit.

If a taxpayer is successful in a court action against the IRS, the court may decide that the government will pay reasonable litigation and administrative costs.

A taxpayer may bring court action against the federal government to recover the lesser of actual damages up to $100,000 or actual economic damages plus costs of the court action if an IRS employee recklessly or intentionally violates the Internal Revenue Code of regulations.

The IRS must wait 30 days before seizing property after notifying the taxpayer of the seizure action. Also, after a bank levy is served, there is a 21-day hold period before the funds will be sent to the IRS.

A complete summary of a taxpayer's rights is in IRS Publication 1, Your Rights as a Taxpayer. Copies are available by calling 1 (800) 829-3676.

Tax help available

By Agatha Hudson James
Bayonet editor

Federal and state tax assistance will be available at Fort Benning for soldiers and family members beginning in February.

- The post's Tax Office opens Feb. 4 and will be stocked with federal tax forms and some state tax forms. Operating hours will be from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. Monday through Friday, and the office is located in Building 5 at the corner of Vibbert and Sigerfoos.
- Tax volunteers will have tables set up at the Post Exchange at the mall Feb. 9, March 2 and April 6 from 9:30 a.m. to 1 p.m. to provide assistance.

Jane Winand, a civilian attorney with the Office of the Staff Judge Advocate, said individuals are encouraged to bring their federal and state tax forms and booklets with them.

Also, individuals seeking assistance should bring all their paperwork, including W-2 forms and interest statements, Winand said .

- For soldiers on post needing assistance, each unit has a tax adviser, Winand said. "One soldier from each company is tasked to provide tax assistance," she said. "If a soldier needs to know who his unit tax adviser is, he should contact his first sergeant or unit commander."
- For Desert Shield family members, tax assistance will be available through the unit chain of concern.
- Also, representatives from the Social Security Administration will be at the Main Post Chapel Annex Feb. 7 from 10 a.m. until 2:30 p.m. to take applications for Social Security numbers.

Winand said changes in tax laws now require Social Security numbers for anyone 2 years old or older who will be claimed as a dependent.

A certified copy of the birth certificate and some other identifying record such as school or shot records are needed at the time of application, she said.

- Also, the last day of filing — April 15 — tax helpers will be at the post office on main post from 6 p.m. to midnight.

For information, call 545-3281.

USAIS selects top instructors

By Douglas O. Bruk
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Instructors of the year for the U.S. Army Infantry School were selected in an awards ceremony Jan. 8 in Building 4.

The award brings recognition to those soldiers who show creativity and initiative to edge out their peers.

Each year, one soldier from three different classes — officer, senior non-commissioned officer, and junior non-commissioned officer — is chosen as an instructor of the year.

The three winning instructors for the year of 1990 are Capt. Robert F. J. Pidgeon of Company B, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, Sgt. Maj. Stephen C. Ward of the Combined Arms and Tactics Division and Staff Sgt. Richard F. Miller of Co. B, 1st Bn., 11th Inf. Regt.

Pidgeon teaches tactics at the Infantry Officers Advanced Course and is a small group instructor in CATD.

Ward, the winner of the senior enlisted category, is assigned to CATD and teaches tactics for the Officer Candidate School, Infantry Officers Basic Course, and the Non-Commissioned Officer Course. Ward is in the Australian army and is spending two years at Ft. Benning.

Miller, the junior enlisted winner, is assigned to the engineer branch of CATD and teaches engineering subjects for various courses. He teaches subjects in the area of mobility and countermobility.

The competition has been annual since its beginning in 1981. Each instructor has to take several steps in order to reach the final selection for the instructor of the year. The instructors compete monthly and quarterly.

Individual instructors are graded on their presentation on a block of instruction and by boards.

The instructor prepares a class and is evaluated by personnel from the Staff and Faculty Development Division, which is responsible for training instructors and oversees the Ranger Department, 1st and 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, the School Brigade, the NCO Academy, and Combined Arms and Tactics. The instructor is additionally required to attend an Insrtuctor of the Quarter/Year Board.

"In both cases, the instructors are evaluated on their instructural techniques, personal appearance, communication skills, and knowledge of instruction," said Bobby C. Pounds of the Staff and Faculty Development Division.

"The competition recognizes those instructing personnel who clearly exceeded the requirements of their positions through dedicated effort and who contribute significantly to the accomplishments of the Infantry School's training mission," added Pounds.

In pitting the instructors against each other in competion, they become more motivated to perform, show more initiative, and more than likely, learn a few more things about their jobs, which is not only good for them, but good for their students as well, Pounds said. "This improves immensely the caliber of instruction," he added.

Winning the competition goes in the instructor's record. Also, the three instructors receive Army commendation medals, a plaque from the post commanding general, a plaque and a jacket from the Non-Commissioned Officers Academy and the Association of the U.S. Army. Also, each winner receives a $100 savings bond compliments of AUSA.

NERVES AND HEADACHES
By Dr. R. Boutwell

Chiropractic research indicates that the most recurrent type headaches are related to abnormal positioning of vertebrae in the upper neck. A vertebrae at the base of the skull may be forced into an abnormal position beyond its normal range of motion by fall, accident, postural defect or an incorrect sleeping position. Muscle spasms along the back of the neck and nausea sometimes leads to an incorrect diagnosis of tension headaches or migraine. Experience has shown that headaches which are caused by abnormal alignment respond very readily to the special care that chiropractors offer.

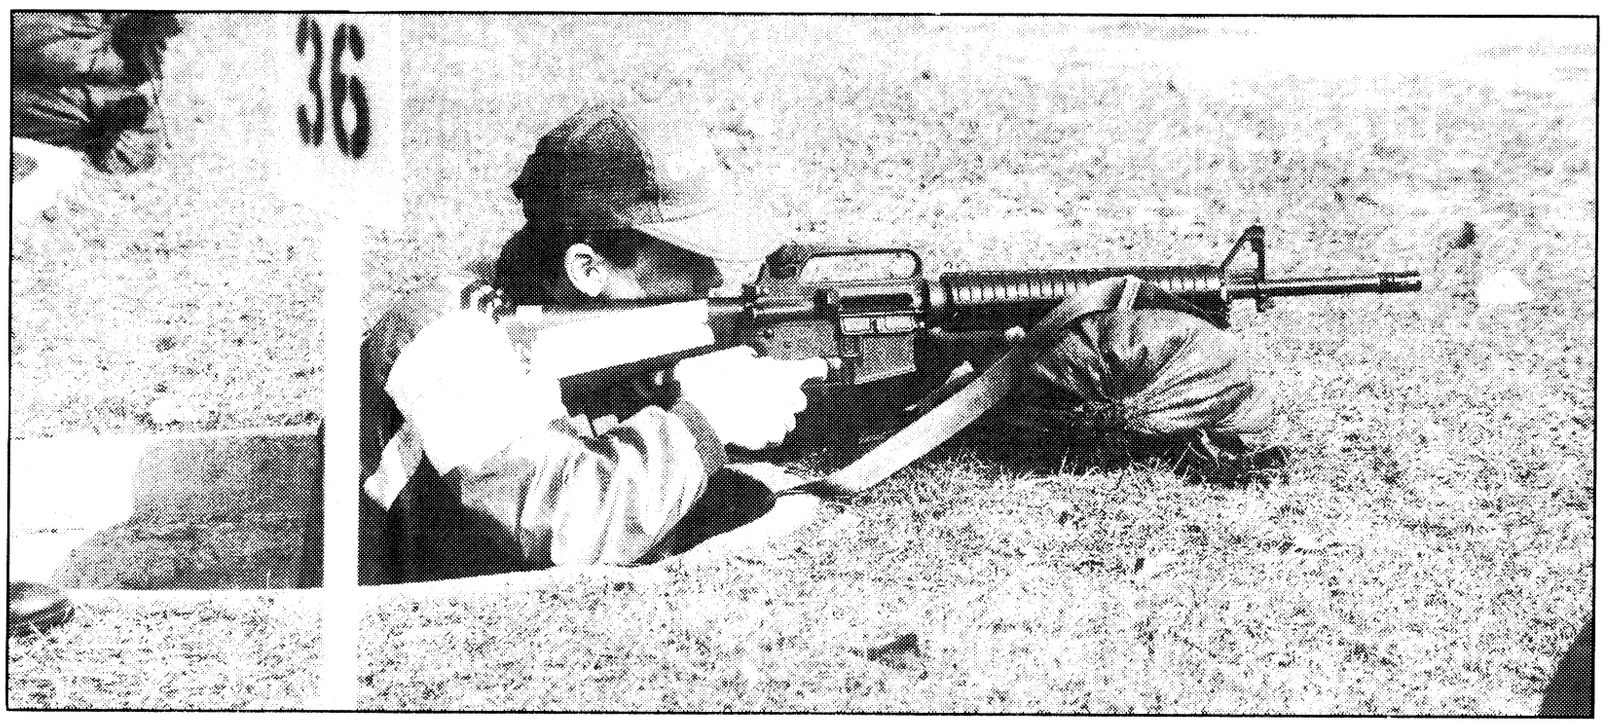
Soviet shooters visit, compete at Benning

By James C. Rupp
Bayonet staff writer

The Russians came to town Jan. 10.



As part of a joint U.S.-Soviet military exchange, the Soviet national shooting team arrived at Fort Benning to compete in a series of shooting matches with the United States Army Marksmanship Unit. The program is not limited to the Army, however, the unit was chosen to host the shooting portion of the program, according to Lt. Col. Thomas H. Whitley, executive officer of the USAMU.

The Soviet team consisted of twelve shooters, six for the rifle events and six for the pistol events, and another seven who were coaches, armorers and administrative personnel. They were commanded by Col. Aleksander Parfyanovich.

On Saturday, the first day of matches, the English matches were held at Hook Range, in addition to the rapid fire pistol matches at Phillips Range.

The next day, the 3x40 and air pistol matches were held at Hook Range and Building 2601, respectively.

That night the Soviet team was treated to dinner with several American families.

James C. Rupp

Cadet Sergei Martynov, a member of the visiting Soviet team, tests his skill with an M-16A2 rifle at Simpson Range.

On Jan. 14, the Soviet team was able to see a demonstration from some of the post's rangers. Afterward, they were given a tour of the post.

The following day was the final day of the shooting events with the pistol matches winding up at Building 2601 and the air rifle matches at Hook Range.

On Wednesday, the Soviets were able to test their skill with the combat weapons of their hosts, the M-9 pistol and the M-16A2 rifle.

The Soviets were treated the following day to a tour of Callaway Gardens and the Little White House in Warm Springs, Ga., and began their return trip to the Soviet Union on the morning of the 18th.

"I think it went very well," Whitley said of the Soviets' visit. "I think that they were sort of surprised by us at all levels. Not only by the competitors, but by the friendliness of the troops they encountered in the mess hall and other areas.

"The Soviet team was of a caliber that could just not be matched."

Whitley also added ,"At first, they were a litle apprehensive, but as they saw our outgoingness and friendliness, they began to warm up to us." Whitley also commented that the visitors truly enjoyed themselves doing such things as shopping at the Peachtree Mall.

Capt. John McNally said "We had never gotten a chance to know them. We had only met them in 'high-speed' competion before, so it was good to see that they're not supermen."

1st Lt. Michael Anti, a member of the USAMU smallbore team, mirrored this feeling by saying "It was good to have a chance to see them on a personal level as well as a professional one. We got to know them very well in a short amount of time.

"I look forward to seeing them again, it will almost be like a reunion of old friends . . . but they'll still be my competition."

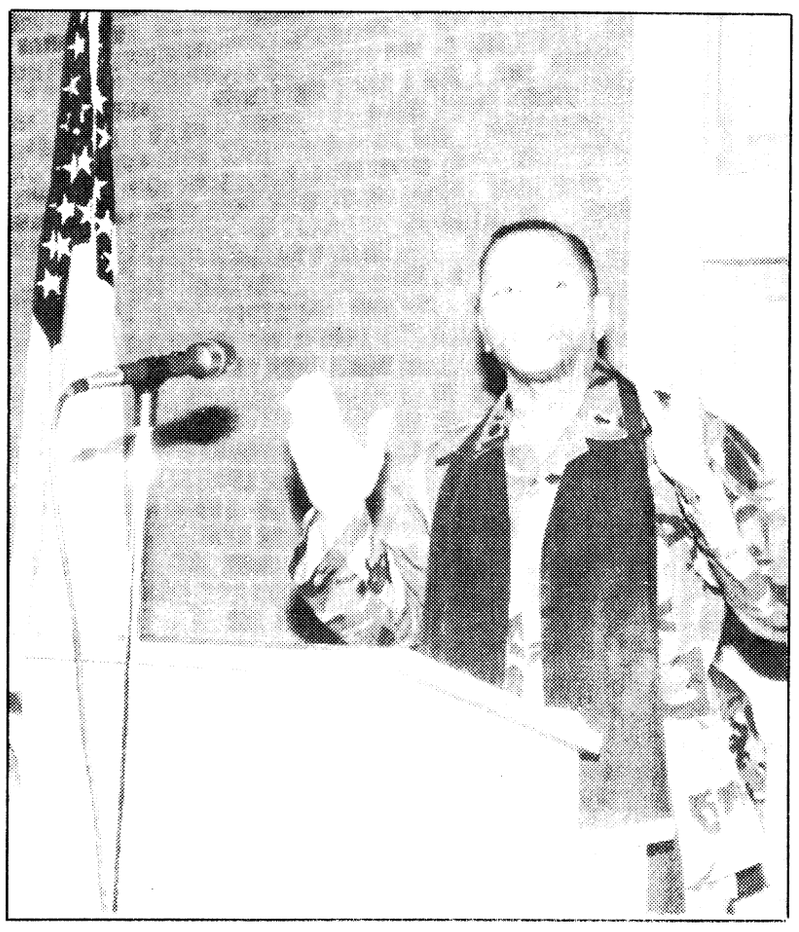
Post service honors Martin Luther King Jr

By Debra Gaile
USAIC Chaplain's Office

Inspirational fervor combined with mellow, moving words in speech and song marked this years Litany of Commemoration of the Reverend Martin Luther King Jr. Monday at the Regimental Chapel on Sand Hill.

The command-sponsored service presented more than 300 soldiers and family members with an assortment of history, prayers, song and gospel-style, attention-grabbing words of hope by Chaplain (Lt. Col.) Benjamin Morrow, Infantry Training Center chaplain.

"Dr. King believed more in us than we do in ourselves," said Chaplain Morrow. He spoke of the need we all share for proper values and self respect.



"You don't need to walk in someone else's shoes, stand in your own shoes and your own place, and be the best kind of person you can be," said Morrow emphasizing the importance of our duty to ourselves to be the very best of what we are.

Music filled the chapel from many voices. The 283rd Army Band performed several times; Command Sgt. Maj. Sidney Raspberry, 2nd Battallion, 54th Inf. Regt. sang a acappela rendition of the song, "Abraham, Martin and John;" and members of the Sightseeing Road Gospel Choir sang.

Col. Joseph W. Trez, commander, USAITC, said Dr. King dedicated his life to the cause of justice.

"Many of you here were not born when Dr. King worked for peace and equality. Services are given so that each generation may be kept aware of his accomplishments and his dreams."

In a solo by Eva Morrow, the words of her song seemed to sum up the spirit of the day and of the observance, "If I can spread loves message, my living should not be in vain."

BB guns dangerous; post usage restricted

By Brian C. Sutton
Bayonet staff writer

The two boys set out for an enjoyable day of firing their BB guns at tin cans in the back yard.

Both of them had received the BB guns as a Christmas present and the recent break in the weather gave them perfect conditions for firing.

They lined the empty cans in a row after dragging them out of the room where they had been saving them for almost an entire month.

The boys knew that they weren't supposed to fire the gun until their parents got home, but the excitement was too much for an eight-year-old and a six-year-old to handle.

The two laughed and giggled as each one fired. A young neighbor girl wandered out into her back yard, which was adjacent to the two boys' yard. The boys, not paying attention, continued to fire. One BB went astray and hit the girl. Luckily, she was wearing glasses and the BB was not traveling fast enough to pierce the glass.

Incidents like the one above are not as uncommon as one might believe. In the last few months, three incidents involving the unlawful or careless discharge of weapons has resulted in bodily injuries to people and pets that required some type of surgical procedure. Several other incidents involving the discharge of these weapons have occurred on Fort Benning.

"There have been a few incidents in the housing area," said Darlene Perry, post Community Life officer. "A lot of people were pretty upset about it."

Perry, in conjunction with the military police, have set out to educate the Fort Benning community about recognizing what is considered a weapon and how to better handle firing them."Not enough people know about BB guns and air rifles. They are considered weapons and they are dangerous," said Perry.

BB guns and air rifles are considered weapons by U.S. Army Infantry Center Regulation 210-5, Garrison Regulation, Paragraph 36, which states not only that no weapon will be used within the garrison area, but also that children will not use or carry weapons unless accompanied by an adult who will be responsible for safety precautions.

BB guns and air rifles fire .177 and .22 caliber projectiles at speeds approaching 1,000 feet per second. The .45 caliber service weapon fires projectiles at approximately 900 feet per second.

> "Not enough people know about BB guns. They are considered weapons.
> — Darlene Perry

"We are revising the garrison regulations to further explain what is considered a weapon," Perry said. "Where a weapon can and cannot be used will also be explained a little more clearly."

Not only should one be careful of how a weapon is fired, but also one should be aware of how a weapon is properly stored, according to Perry.

"Parents need to store any kind of weapon in a locked, childproof container," Perry said.

Storing weapons in this manner prevents children from being tempted in their parents' absence of taking the weapons and firing on their own.

Instructional classes in weaponry safety are available at the beginning of each hunting season at the post Rifle and Pistol Club. The Military Police can further assist potential firers in proper safety precautions and can outline where safe firing may occur.

As always, safety is one of the many keys to success. Proper safety precautions may yield many years of enjoyable firing.

Locker-Room Interviews?

New Jersey state Sen. John F. Russo has proposed legislation to require a 30-minute grace period before post-game locker-room interviews.

YES

Should post-game interviews with athletes be held in the locker rooms?

Yes. My legislation in New Jersey provides that post-game interviews may be held in locker rooms after 30 minutes elapse from the conclusion of the athletic contest. It is in no way intended to impede access to athletes by the media. There is nothing sacrosanct in my mind about 30 minutes. It could be whatever is deemed a reasonable amount of time for members of a team to change, shower and get dressed.

What has been the impact of recent locker-room incidents?

The impact has been a heightened awareness and sensitivity to the responsibilities of athletes and members of the media to each other. The public interest in following sports and the reactions of athletes to winning and losing is an integral part of the American scene. I believe both the media and a majority of athletes have learned a lot about their relationships with each other. The issue is more one of taking steps to provide an atmosphere of decorum, while maintaining the needed access to players by the media.

What are alternatives to locker-room interviews?

The most talked-about alternative has been the so-called "interview" room. I personally oppose that idea because it creates an atmosphere where it would be all too easy for players to avoid the media. I also do not believe it would be practical for members of the media who are faced with deadlines. My legislation is, in itself, an alternative to the current practice of immediate post-game interviews. My intent was to generate a public discussion of the issue resulting in an improved atmosphere for communicating between members of the media and athletes.

Dick Tomey is the head coach of the University of Arizona football team, the Wildcats. Previously, he coached at the University of Hawaii and UCLA.

NO

Should post-game interviews with athletes be held in the locker rooms?

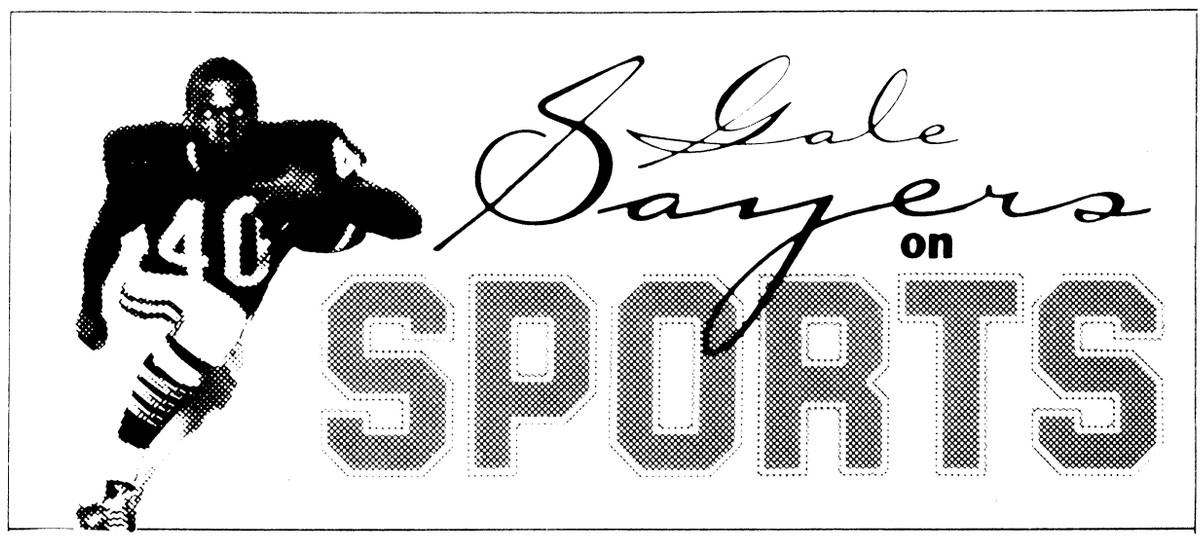
No. The locker room should be as sacred to the athlete as the pressroom is to the reporter.

Perhaps the most significant question involving college athletes and interviews is whether male reporters should be allowed in the locker rooms of female athletes.

I suggest that such a situation is as inappropriate as female reporters in men's locker rooms. Sound moral judgment should take precedence over deadlines.

What has been the impact of recent locker-room incidents?

The impact of recent incidents involving female reporters is justification for a system which prohibits reporters, male or female, from conducting interviews in locker rooms.



Times have changed, as has the role of women reporters. We should be praising women reporters for their accomplishments, not admonishing them for their gender.

What are alternatives to locker-room interviews?

We are a prudent society. A situation such as finding alternatives to locker-room interviews should be an easy task.

Designated times and locations for interviews seem like amicable solutions to the problem. Again, we should be cheering the progress women have made and not debating limiting that progress.

Calling the guys who call the game

Professional football on television is a funny business.

Watch any National Football League game on television these days and you're likely to hear more attempts at comedy than you would on a rerun of "Cheers." Somewhere along the way, much of the serious art of calling a football game has been lost.

I make no secret of the fact that I'm of the old school when it comes to football, and that includes sportscasters. My all-time favorite was Ray Scott, who used to announce Green Bay Packers' games. Ray had an intimate knowledge of the game and a straight-ahead delivery that left little room for one-liners. After listening to him call a game, you came away with a little more knowledge about football.

Of course, Pat Summerall and John Madden, the most famous sportscasting team today, both have great minds for football, too. Madden will make some great observations on things that have little to do with what's going on down on the field.

Don't get me wrong. I think Madden and Summerall, who have now been together on CBS for 10 years, do a heck of a job. It's just that Madden's lighter side seems to have inspired every other color man to become a regular stand-up comic.

Dan Dierdorf, the color man for ABC's "Monday Night Football," sometimes goes in the opposite direction. Dierdorf is too prone to praising players' efforts for being "incredible," "unbelievable" and "the best," when their feats are often just the result of poor play by the opposition. Many times, what Dierdorf means to be great insights are not grounded in good football.

Believe it or not, I miss Howard Cosell on Monday nights. Sure he used too many big words, but he really knew a lot about football. Sometimes I'll turn off the sound on television and listen to the radio broadcast of "Monday Night Football" with Jack Buck and Hank Stram. Those guys are about as old school as you are likely to find in this day and age.

I really think that the best football commentary on television is on cable's ESPN. Chris Berman is in a league by himself. Unlike CBS' Terry Bradshaw, who is all style and no substance, Berman has hit the right mix of humor and serious football insight. His mind and mouth move quickly and, as opposed to many sportscasters, are connected. If Berman wanted to be a telecast color man, I believe he'd be even better than John Madden. I try to catch him every time he's on.

If there were more Chris Bermans out there, TV's new school of football broadcasters would be better off. We could laugh and learn.

Gale Sayers is a former Chicago Bear and a member of the National Football League's Hall of Fame.

Fort Benning Management Association

One of the objectives of the Fort Benning Management Association is to promote training and development opportunities to raise the level of professionalism and expertise of the workforce.

During monthly lunch time meetings, noted speakers present training programs on some aspect of management. The association hosts a luncheon meeting the third Thursday of each month at 11:30 a.m. at the Officer's Club.

For additional information concerning training credit, call Patty Pfeiffer at 545-5580.

The FBMA also provides a forum for the exchange of ideas and information among colleagues from all directorates on the installation.

Martin Luther King

Alfredo Lopez (left), Phyllis Parker, Wilson School principal, and Tiffany Moore discuss a bulletin board featuring information related to Martin Luther King Jr. The theme of this year's celebration of King's birthday was "Keeping Freedom Free."

A variety of projects were undertaken and completed by Benning students to celebrate the day. Students wrote stories, poems, rap songs, and essays related to King and the theme throughout the school system. Songs were sung as students participated in assembly programs. Benning teachers created a special program for the celebration using advanced computer technology. This program is being shown to students in all Benning schools.

Senior officer and enlisted wives from 34th Medical Battalion, 36th Engineers Group, and 197th Infantry Brigade attended a workshop on coping skills recently.

Mary Allen, from the Outreach Program at Army Community Service, and Yvonne Linsenbigler, a certified reality therapist from the Alcohol and Drug Abuse Prevention and Control Program, presented the program.

The workshop was at the Officers' Club Jan. 17, the morning after the United Nations coalition invaded Iraq. Linsenbigler said, "This is the very time we need a workshop on coping skills with everything so unsettled. We have been trained to go on."

Chaplains offer prayer opportunities

By Debra Galle
USAIC Chaplain's Office

When asked how they are coping with the stress Operation Desert Storm has created, most family members will answer, "All we can do is pray."

Chaplains continue to offer what comfort, strength and inspiration they can to those who seek it. Besides the regular worship services, Bible studies and support groups offered at Fort Benning, more opportunities have become available to the faithful.

The Infantry Center Chapel has a prayer service each weekday from noon to 1 p.m.

"We recognize the need of the community to direct their energy to prayer," says Chaplain (Maj.) James Phelps, chief, Infantry Center Chapel. A chaplain will begin and end each prayer service. The chapel is accessable daily by contacting the administrative office in the annex or by calling 545-2050.

In addition, TIC offers prayer services each Sunday at 6 p.m. Baby-sitting is available in the chapel annex.

The School Brigade Chapel, located behind TSB headquarters, has a prayer service from 11:30 a.m. to 1 p.m. For more information about The School Brigade, a chaplain may be reached at 545-3715.

A special opportunity for prayer was offered on Jan. 15, the deadline for Iraqi forces to leave Kuwait, at the Religious Education Center from noon to 2 p.m. Many found time to spend together, even if for only a few minutes. At times, more than 50 people sat together in silent prayer for one common goal.

Rosaries are said each Tuesday and Saturday at 6 p.m. at the Main Post Catholic Chapel. Daily noon Mass continues to be celebrated, and an additional prayer service and Rosary is each Sunday from 3 to 5 p.m. The chapel is open daily during working hours.

"Our role as chaplains," said Chaplain (Col.) George W. Gudz, post chaplain, "is to be a source of hope and inspiration. We are there to help the strong become stronger so that they too may help one another. The church is people, and the more they gather together in prayer and fellowship, the more strength they find."

History continually proves that during times of stress and difficulty, the majority of people turn to their faith for strength. Chaplains continually work to provide opportunities for people to express their desires for inner strength, comfort, and the peace they need to find first - the one inside of themselves.

Prayer breakfast planned

By Debra Galle
USAIC Chaplain's Office

The Fort Benning Annual National Prayer Breakfast will be at the Main NCO Club Feb. 5 at 6:30 a.m.

The guest speaker will be Chaplain (Brig. Gen.) Donald W. Shea, deputy chief of chaplains.

As a senior parachutist awarded with a special forces tab, Shea has served with many airborne and special forces units. His assignments have taken him to Vietnam, Korea, Panama, Germany as well as several stateside locations.

Shea was ordained a Roman Catholic priest in 1962 for the Dioces of Helena, Mont. He was commissioned as a U.S. Army chaplain in 1966.

The Fort Benning Annual National Prayer Breakfast is held in conjunction with the yearly National Prayer Breakfast in Washington, D.C.

It is designed as a time of spiritual reflection for post leadership and is a reminder of our country's roots.

The National Prayer Breakfast, established by President Dwight D. Eisenhower in 1953, is sponsored by the U.S. Senate and House prayer groups.

The first presidential prayer breakfast was meant to formally seek divine guidance for the national leadership and to proclaim their dependence on God and faith in Him.

Every year since then, the prayer breakfast has drawn together the president, members of the House and Senate, members of the cabinet, the Supreme Court and the military leadership of the armed forces.

In addition, hundreds of similar events are conducted throughout federal and state governments, as well as military installations throughout the world.

The program is designed for post leaders (officers, non-commissioned officers and civilians). However, everyone is welcome as long as tickets are available. Seating is limited to 500.

Tickets for the breakfast must be purchased in advance and cost $3.

For more information or tickets, contact your unit chaplain or call Chaplain (Maj.) Glenn Bloomstrom, post project officer, at 545-2288 or 545-2608.

Benning schools get 'high grade'

Fort Benning Schools

The Fort Benning Schools have once again been "Accredited With Quality" by the Georgia Accrediting Commission. This is the highest status granted by the commission.

This commission sets standards for schools that relate to the learning environment, to the effectiveness of the teaching and learning taking place, to what innovations are being used by the school system and how they are being used, to how well the educational staff relates to students and to each other, and to the school buildings and facilities.

Edward Green, a representative of the Georgia Accrediting Commission, spent four days, Jan. 7 through Jan. 10, visiting and assessing each of the eight Fort Benning schools. Green has served as a consultant for both the Georgia Accrediting Commission and the Southern Association of Colleges and Schools for the last 14 years.

He brings to these assignments four decades of experience in education having served as a teacher and principal, and having retired from New York State after having served as a school superintendent there for 23 years.

"What I saw in the Fort Benning Schools was that the children were receiving a good, sound education based on effective teaching practices," said Green. "I found that the Fort Benning Schools' personnel are caring people who want to get the most that they can for the students that they serve."

Green stated that he found a strong willingness on the part of parents and educators to work together to provide quality programs for students. He also found the schools to be well equipped.

Beth Middlemiss

Vicki Rogers, Dexter School principal, and Dr. Edward Green examine a book written by Dexter fifth graders as he assesses educational programs at the school.

"The schools have the means available to them to provide excellent educational opportunities for young people," he said.

Green commended the schools for the work being done to promote strong student self concepts, for the Reading Recovery program which works to meet the needs of first grade students who are in need of additional support in learning to read, and for Faith Middle School's after school remedial program which has already shown many successes in its first year of operation.

He recommended that the schools continue to build upon these programs.

The Fort Benning Schools are accredited by two commissions, the Georgia Accrediting Commission and the Southern Association of Colleges and Schools.

The Georgia Accrediting Commission accredits schools in Georgia.

The Southern Association of Colleges and Schools accredits schools in 11 states: Alabama, Florida, Georgia, Kentucky, Louisiana, Mississippi, North Carolina, South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas and Virginia. It also accredits school in Latin America.

Fort Benning Schools have been accredited by both commissions since the 1963-64 school year.

"We are extremely pleased with Dr. Green's assessment of our schools and with our continued "Accreditation With Quality" status," said Dr. Dell Karr, assistant superintendent for instruction. "The Georgia Accrediting Commission is highly regarded throughout the state, and we are delighted to be associated with the prestigious organization."

Workshop addresses stress disorder

By Wanda Campbell
Bayonet community writer

Post Traumatic Stress Disorder affects thousands of people who have survived traumas, according to members of the Bradley Trauma and Crisis Response Team. The team presented a workshop, about symptoms and recovery from PTSD Jan. 4th at the Youth Activities Center.

Nearly 100 representatives from Army Community Services, Child Development Services, Community Life Office, Volunteer Resource Center, Drug and Alcohol, Social Work Services, Community Health Nurse, Youth Activities, Fort Benning Schools, Family Support Division, and rear detachment commands attended the workshop.

The training was sponsored by the Fort Benning Family Support Division, the Bradley Center Trauma and Crisis Response Team, and the Bradley Center Department of Education.

Joel O. Brende, coordinator of the event, gave the opening remarks. "The hope for the outcome of this workshop is that those who could possibly suffer will get help now and delay serious symptoms later," he said.

Brende is staff psychiatrist and director of outpatient services for the Bradley Center. He has spent the past 10 years working with Vietnam veterans who suffer from the disorder.

There were several speakers at the workshop. Each speaker specialized in a specific type of counseling needed for the symptoms and treatment of PTSD.

Scott Jones, a psychologist specializing in family, adolescent, and child therapy at the Bradley Center, spoke about the traumatized family. "Stress and trauma has already occurred for people deployed. Whenever there is a major change in family, it causes stress."

Gloria Armstrong, a pastoral counselor who has strong interest in working with victims of child abuse as well as other types of trauma, led the discussion about outpatient psychotherapy group for victims of traumas.

Edwin Chase, a pastoral counselor with the Pastoral Institute, spoke about the emotional side of PTSD. "Depression is not a feeling, it is what you do to feelings," he said. "When a person can get in touch with his feelings, they can break the depression."

Richard Goldsmith, retired Army chaplain who is currently the staff chaplain for the Bradley Center and director of clinical pastoral education, said "a person is best able to cope when they are able to share feelings with one significant other . . . when they can understand the impact their life has in the order of things . . . and when they have a sense of understanding of what is going on."

ASK THE JUDGE

By Capt. Howard O. McGillin Jr.
Staff Judge Advocate's Office

Q. My spouse is deployed to the Middle East. I have never filed the taxes before. When do I have to file by?

What paperwork do I need to file for my spouse? Is there any special exemption for deployed soldiers? Can the Judge Advocate General office help me do my taxes?

A. Filing Deadline

The ordinary filing deadline for taxes is April 15. This deadline is automatically extended to June 15 for any soldier stationed outside the Continental United States on April 15.

Under current law, however, anyone owing taxes must pay the amount they owe by April 15.

Legislative initiatives before Congress may change these dates. Watch for articles in the Bayonet or the Desert Storm family newsletter for information on changes.

Power of Attorney

The Internal Revenue Service has agreed to accept tax returns that are signed by an agent — that is a person with power of attorney for another person.

The power of attorney must state that the agent has the authority to file, prepare and execute the tax return for the grantor of the power.

The general power of attorney in use at Fort Benning grants the agent the authority to prepare and file returns. This power of attorney should be sufficient to file the return.

Family members of deployed soldiers that have a current general power of attorney can, therefore, file the return for the deployed soldier.

Many married soldiers appoint their spouse as their agent. Since married couples commonly file a joint tax return, the spouse will sign the return twice, once in a personal capacity as a taxpayer, and once as agent for the deployed soldier.

Any agent preparing a return for a deployed soldier must send a photocopy of the power of attorney to the IRS with the completed return.

Tax Assistance

The first source for tax advice for both soldiers and family members is your unit tax adviser or UTA. Each company-sized unit on post has appointed a UTa.

These UTAs have all attended an IRS tax school at Fort Benning.

The Legal Assistance Division, Office of the Staff Judge Advocate, will open the Installation Tax Office Feb. 4, in building 5, at the intersection of Vibbert and Sigerfoos streets on Main Post.

This office will stock many state and federal tax forms. Persons with tax questions that are not answered by a UTA or by a state or federal pamphlet may request an appointment to see an attorney in the Legal Assistance Division.

In addition, the Legal Assistance Division will prepare taxes at the Main PX Mall on several Saturdays during February, March and April, and will conduct a last minute tax session at the Fort Benning Post Office on the night of April 15. We will place notices on these services in the Bayonet, the Benning Bulletin and on PROFS.

Combat Pay Exclusion

Section 112 of the Internal Revenue Code exempts all income of an enlisted soldier or warrant officer, and the first $500 for a commissioned officer, earned during any month the soldier or officer is serving in a combat zone.

The President must declare that a certain area constitutes a combat zone. As of this writing, it is unclear whether the President has signed the necessary executive order designating southwest Asia as a combat zone.

As soon as we receive notice of this status, we will publish the information. Pay earned during 1990 will continue to be taxed as regular income.

Legislative initiatives before Congress may change the law in this area.

Legal Assistance will announce any changes in the Benning Bulletin, the Bayonet and on PROFS.

If you have questions about your taxes, contact your UTA first. If you are unsure of who your UTA is, ask your commander or rear detachment commander. If your UTA is unable to answer your question, contact Legal Assistance at 545-3281.

HONEST. MORE FOLKS FEEL THAT NEWSPAPER IS THE MOST BELIEVABLE MEDIUM.

We can't lie.

A recent study showed that more people feel newspaper is the most believable medium.

Not television.
Not radio.
Not magazines.

But why?

It's probably because we know that a newspaper lays it all out in black & white.

Right in front of you.
The places, the people, and the prices.
The offers, the promises and the claims.
It's all there to read, think about, and keep. And that goes for the advertisements, too.

When people turn to their Columbus Ledger-Enquirer they turn here with interest. Which means this is where your advertising message needs to be.

With all the choices available, it's difficult deciding how best to advertise your business.

But everything becomes a little simpler when you remember one rule.

YOU GOTTA BE IN THE PAPER.

1st Bn., 29th Inf. wins maintenance award

By Brian C. Sutton
Bayonet staff writer

Hard work and dedication doesn't always pay off, but for the 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, it did.

The battalion has been selected to receive the Department of the Army Maintenance Award, which recognizes excellence in the maintenance field.

Not only was the battalion selected to receive the award this year, but it was selected the past two years as well.

"No other battalion has accomplished what we have," said Sgt. 1st Class Willie Simeon, battalion motor sergeant.

The battalion's mission is to supply all installation schools with vehicles and to keep them operating efficiently.

"We were happy to receive the award, especially since we don't have a mission directly with Desert Storm," said Simeon.

Not only was it a surprise that they were recognized for excellence despite the massive attention directed to the Middle East, but the battalion won the award operating with only 74 percent of its authorized staff.

"Sometimes it calls for long hours with such a short staff, but our people have a hard-working, gung-ho attitude and are willing to get the job done, said Simeon.

The battalion will be formally presented the award Monday at 10 a.m. in Building 9111, Kelley Hill.

Military Police increase vehicle inspections

POVs must display proper registration

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Military Police at Fort Benning are stepping up the number of vehicle inspections as one of the post's security measures.

Those who work at Fort Benning or regularly conduct business on the post are encouraged to get their vehicles registered at the Vehicle Registration Office, building 2621, in Soldiers' Plaza.

An identification card, vehicle registration (current tag receipt), valid state operator's permit, and proof of insurance are needed to register vehicles.

Registered vehicles will decrease the number of delays and time spent at vehicle inspection stations.

Bus accident kills soldier

USAIC Public Affairs Office

One soldier was killed and three seriously injured in a two-bus accident Monday night on Dixie Road near Soldiers' Plaza.

Dead is Pfc. Toby J.K.P. Young, 19, of the 75th Ranger Regiment, officials said. Young was from Hawaii.

The three seriously injured soldiers were taken to the Medical Center, while nine soldiers were admitted to Martin Army Community Hospital, according to officials.

Their conditions were described as "stable."

Seven soldiers were treated for minor injuries and released and 22 others were not injured.

According to officials, the soldiers, all from 75th Ranger Regiment, were being taken to a training area in the northeast section of post at the time of the accident.

Cause of the accident is still under investigation.

POST BRIEFS

Information available for family members

Desert Storm family support group information is available for family members of deployed U.S. Army Reserve, National Guard, and active duty soldiers, as well as for those family members of soldiers deployed to Saudi Arabia from Europe.

To participate in Fort Benning Operation Desert Storm information briefings, family members should call the Family Assistance Center at 545-5516, 545-7517, or 545-6969.

Families requested to limit packages to Saudi

The commander-in-chief of the U.S. Central Command has requested that families and friends of Desert Storm deployed soldiers voluntarily limit personal mail to first class letter mail and audio cassettes.

This action is being taken to minimize the difficulty for troops on the move to secure and transport personal articles and to reduce the possibility of items being lost, damaged or delayed.

This voluntary mail restriction is necessary for the next two to three weeks.

Effective immediately, the U.S. Postal Service announced that Express Military Mail Service is suspended for APO 09616 (Dhahran) and 09038 (Riyadh) until further notice.

Speed limits to change

The speed limit on many streets on main post will change effective today.

Post officials said the change is to improve safety, provide uniform speed limits and increase fuel economy.

Some outlying roads such as Custer, 10th Mountain Division and Lumpkin will be reduced to 35 miles per hour, while Santa Fe and Davis Hill will be posted at 25 miles per hour.

A complete list of speed limit changes is on page A-5.

Register vehicles at Post Exchange Feb. 9

A temporary vehicle registration site will be operated at the main Post Exchange Feb. 9.

The purpose of the operation is to provide easy registration for privately owned vehicles for personnel unable to register during normal Monday through Friday business hours.

Documentation required includes valid state driver's license, proof of ownership, current state registration (tag receipt), proof of current insurance and an identification card.

Registration service is offered daily from 8 a.m. until 4:30 p.m. at Building 2621 in Soldiers' Plaza.

For more information, contact the Vehicle Registration Office at 545-1195 or 545-3646.

Hospital records moved

To reduce long waiting lines at the Outpatient Records Room, Family Practice members' records have been moved.

The move will benefit patients who use the Outpatient Records Room by reducing the number of records kept there.

Patients who are members of Family Practice may now go to the clinic without stopping at Outpatient Records. Their records will be kept on file in the Family Practice Clinic area.

For more information, call 544-1810.

Post tax office opens

The Fort Benning Tax Office opens Monday. The office is located in building 5 (Office of the Staff Judge Advocate) and will be open from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m., Monday through Friday.

Applicants must bring a certified copy of the person's birth certificate and some other type of identification such as school records or shot records.

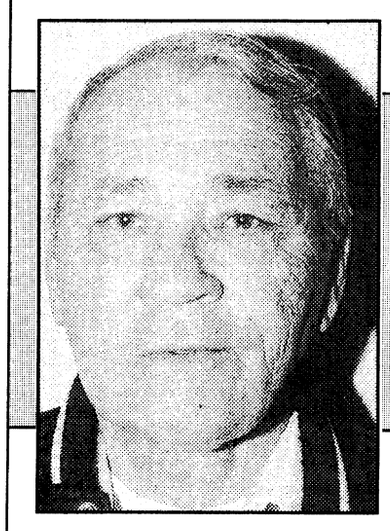
OPINION

VARIOUS VOICES:

How do you feel about the Commissary's "queuing" system?

Wanda Graham, family member — "At first it was a hassle, but then it (the time standing in line) got shorter, and now I don't have to look for the shortest line."

Stephanie Frantz, family member — "It's more organized."



Elouise Prophet, family member — "It's much faster than before. The one thing I don't like is the way they keep changing items around on the shelves."

Diane Kinkofer, family member — "It's a great idea, and it's more organized. You're in and out a lot faster than before. I'm spending less time in line than ever before."

Pat Pearson, family member — "It's working out to everyone's advantage."

Archie Patterson, retired Sgt. 1st Class — "I like it much better than I did before."

COMMENTARY

Military owes the media nothing

By Clyde Snively
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Nobody asked me, but I gotta tell ya, our Secretary of Defense pulled a boner.

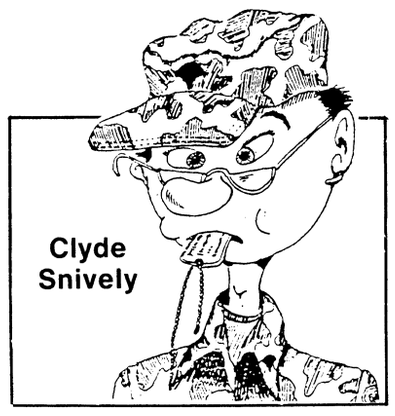
"Who're you, specialist, to question the Secretary of Defense?" you want to know.

But the fact is, the man blew it. It came during a press conference last week, and I'm a witness. I saw and heard him apologize to the media. To make things worse, he told the assembled journalists that he "owed them" answers.

We don't owe the media nuthin. We owe the American public answers, and the media just happens to be a conduit we use to get the information to Mr. and Mrs. America.

But that's all they are, a conduit. And the sooner the media figures that out, the better off we'll all be.

Now I got mixed feelings about all this, since I'm told I are a media, too. But at least I don't spend my time trying to catch the Pentagon in contradictions or trying to get stories where there aren't any.



It's like they enjoy being able to point their fingers at the media briefers and saying, "Aha, gotcha."

For instance, the SCUDs. The media made a big deal out of the declining number of SCUD attacks. The news hounds reported on how the number was decreasing and how that meant the aerial bombardments must be effective.

Then when the number suddenly went up and their predictions on the end of the SCUDS proved premature, they reported on how the bombing was ineffective and how the Iraqis were so clever and were using decoys and everything else to foil us, preventing us from knocking them out, and how the military mislead the journalists into thinking we'd soon do away with the SCUD threat.

Another example of their foolishness was how they began demanding examples of bombing photos which showed bombs missing their targets. I still haven't figured out what they're asking for.

Then the media got wrapped around the axle over the term, "80 percent effective," in describing our bombing missions. They couldn't let go of the fact we were claiming 80 percent effective, but not releasing bomb damage assessments.

It took a three-star, Air Force general 20 minutes to explain that, and I still think the media doesn't want to understand what he told them.

What really rankles me is there are 700 journalists over there — nearly as many journalists as there are soldiers in an infantry battalion. And they're telling the military they want to be left alone, to use their own initiative and get stories on their own.

I think we should let them, and then, when their guys get lost, as happened to three television newsmen, ignore their pleas for help in finding them, protecting them, moving them and feeding them.

The latest "looking for a story where there isn't one," was a story about Blacks in the Army.

Here was an example of a reporter sniffing around (he gleefully mentioned at the tale end of his piece that he did this on his own, free of military censors) trying to get Black soldiers to say things like, "yeah man, there are too many blacks in the military. We're going to take a disproportionate number of casualties."

When he couldn't get any to say things like that, he said it for them. I guess he and his editors consider that objective reporting.

Naturally I hope this thing will be resolved before we have to go in with the grunts.

But once we do go in, I don't know what will be worse, enemy bullets, or stray shots being fired by journalists trying to scoop one another.

43rd Engineers send greetings from desert

The 43rd Engineer Combat Battalion is doing great things as a part of Operation Desert Storm.

Everyone arrived safely with our main body landing in Saudi Arabia on New Year's Eve. We celebrated the New Year with a countdown to midnight as we were standing on a cold tarmac at the airport.

After about two weeks of loading our equipment at the port, the battalion moved to its area of operation and set about building in support of Desert Storm.

The battalion is now a task force, having assumed command of two additional companies — one from the Massachusetts National Guard and one from the Tennessee National Guard.

We are staying very busy with road construction, construction of protective berms, an airfield expansion and several other high priority missions that are critical to the success of the allied effort here.

We have been really very comfortable to date, living in tents with (almost) all of the comforts of home.

Morale went up when we opened our own mess hall. The mess team is doing its usual superb job. Someone said you could close your eyes and imagine you were back in the 43rd mess hall at Fort Benning. They have done amazing things with T-Rations and B-Rations.

We have a bulk laundry available and get our own "stuff" back most of the time.

The soldiers of the 43rd are proud to be serving our country and to be part of such an historic event. Everyone has reacted calmly and professionally to the air war (particularly the threat of SCUD attacks).

We are diligently preparing for the ground war that may lie ahead. The 43rd will be a vital part of the combat support effort. It has been great to see the diverse elements of our unit jell into a cohesive team, working toward a common goal under different conditions.

On behalf of our soldiers, I would like to thank the Fort Benning and Columbus communities for the magnificent support we have received throughout this deployment.

We are deeply thankful for the outpouring of love and affection directed toward the soldiers of the "Power For Service" Battalion.

We are depending on your continued help. Your thoughts and prayers are definitely felt here in Saudi Arabia.

Knowing you love us and are thinking about us is the greatest single factor in sustaining our morale.

To our families, we know your job of waiting is truly a tough one. You are champions and great Americans and we will not forget your sacrifices. We are making every effort to keep your soldiers safe.

Have faith that God's plan is working, and keep that 43rd pride, poise and teamwork going.

God bless you.

Reader: Snively puts his 'feet' in his mouth again

In response to Clyde Snively's article in the Jan. 18 Bayonet, entitled "Parenting in the '90s is no easy feat," he put his "feet" in his mouth again.

I can only hope that he sticks to his decision not to write an advice column on parenting.

However, there is still hope for him because Fort Benning offers classes on just that subject.

He should consider taking a few. After all, it's never too late to learn effective parenting techniques.

The long range ramifications would be that Snively's children will be better parents from example and Snively would be a wiser grandparent.

Don't get me wrong, I do not proclaim to be the ultimate parent. I've taken similar classes and continue to search for parenting tidbits to help me be a more effective parent.

However, I'm sure he's heard the saying, "kids will be kids."

As a parent, no matter how much we stress to our children our expectations of their behavior, the information seems to somehow get lost and we hear the proverbial, "I forgot."

So when parent s tell their child, "Little Johnny, stay away from the big ravine in our backyard because you'll get hurt." Little Johnny replies, "OK Dad," and goes out to play with his buddies.

Little Johnny's buddies decide they want to play war and the ravine is the ideal place to play the game.

Now Dad has laid down the law and settles in to watch the ball game on TV. At commercial break, Dad pops his head out the door only to see a crowd standing on the edge of the ravine. He runs out to see what the attraction is only to see a neighbor lifting a child out.

Little Johnny.

Don't worry, in my story, Little Johnny has a broken arm. Oh, did I mention, Little Johnny's father didn't see any need to bother the city or the Army to build a fence, he had it all under control.

Let's not kid ourselves. Control or not, a dangerous situation should not be taken lightly and neither should the safety of our children.

Johnny is basically a good kid and will probably grow up to be a lawyer, but as a child he tended to "forget" or was it peer pressure?

How to detect letter bombs

Military Police Activity

No one is immune to the threat of a terrorist attack.

Terrorists may select offices, manufacturing plants, or other installation assets as targets for bombings, sabotage, or assaults.

People occupying these buildings become terrorist targets, not because of who they are, but because of where they happen to be.

Good preventive measures can decrease the threat of these attacks.

More terrorist attacks on Department of Defense targets involve bombings than any other single tactic.

To counter this threat, everyone must know the signs of a potential bomb and the procedures to be followed if they receive a suspect letter or package.

Look for the following indicators:

- Protruding wires, string, or foil
- Oily stains on wrapping or envelope
- No return address
- Strange or peculiar odor
- Wrong title with name
- Lopsided, or weight unevenly distributed
- Heavier than usual for its size or class
- Restrictive markings (personal for, private, eyes only, etc.
- Mailed from foreign country or postmarked from an unusual city or town
- Excessive postage
- Badly typed or written
- Rigid or bulky
- Misspelled words or unusual writing style
- Addressed to title only

To reduce the vulnerability of becoming a victim, individuals can take certain precautions.

Among these are to make sure family members and clerical staff know to refuse unexpected mail at home or at the office.

Also, if you think it may be a bomb, treat it as suspect, leave it alone — DO NOT TOUCH IT — and call the police.

Your chances of becoming the object of a terrorist attack are slim; however, should it happen, the consequences could be devastating.

The best defense is to be prepared and to know what to do when the time comes.

Civilian attorneys provide free legal services

By James C. Rupp
Bayonet staff writer

The Georgia State Bar Association, in cooperation with the Legal Assistance Program of the Office of the Judge Advocate General, has begun a new program to help out families affected by Operation Desert Storm.

Capt. Howard McGillin, chief of the Legal Assistance Division, said that due to the increase of the work load for the JAG staff since the beginning of the deployment of troops to Saudi Arabia, military personnel and families are being referred to civilian attorneys who handle cases normally dealt with free of charge by the attorneys at the JAG office.

These cases are free of charge and were initiated by a State Bar policy entitled 'Pro Bono", derived from the Latin phrase "Pro Bono Publico", or "For the good of the public."

The program is for E-5 and below personnel or E-6 and above who prove to be in a condition of financial hardship.

Since the program began, about about 30 cases, mostly step-parent adoptions, probate of will actions, and the installation of guardianships, have been referred.

Nurses celebrate corps' anniversary

By Esther L. Wright
Martin Army Community Hospital

The Army Nurse Corps officers of Fort Benning will recognize the 90th anniversary of the creation of the corps today at 2 p.m. in a cake-cutting ceremony at Martin Army Community Hospital.

The hospital's Department of Nursing will celebrate the occasion in the Nutrition Care Division.

The traditional honors will be performed by the senior Army nurse, Col. Kenneth A. Gordon, chief, Department of Nursing, and the most junior Army nurse corps officer in the department, 2nd Lt. Nancy O. Bergeson.

Nurses have served in a voluntary capacity beside our fighting soldiers since 1775.

The Army Nurse Corps was officially established as one of the six Army Medical Department Corps on Feb. 2, 1901.

Army nurses have responded to the medical needs of our active duty and retired soldiers and their families in peacetime and during conflict.

Today, nearly 60 percent of the nurse corps are "citizen soldiers," National Guard and Reserve officers, many of whom have been called to active duty in support of Desert Storm.

The celebration this year will recognize with pride the Army Nurse Corps' 90 years of dedicated service to the United States of America.

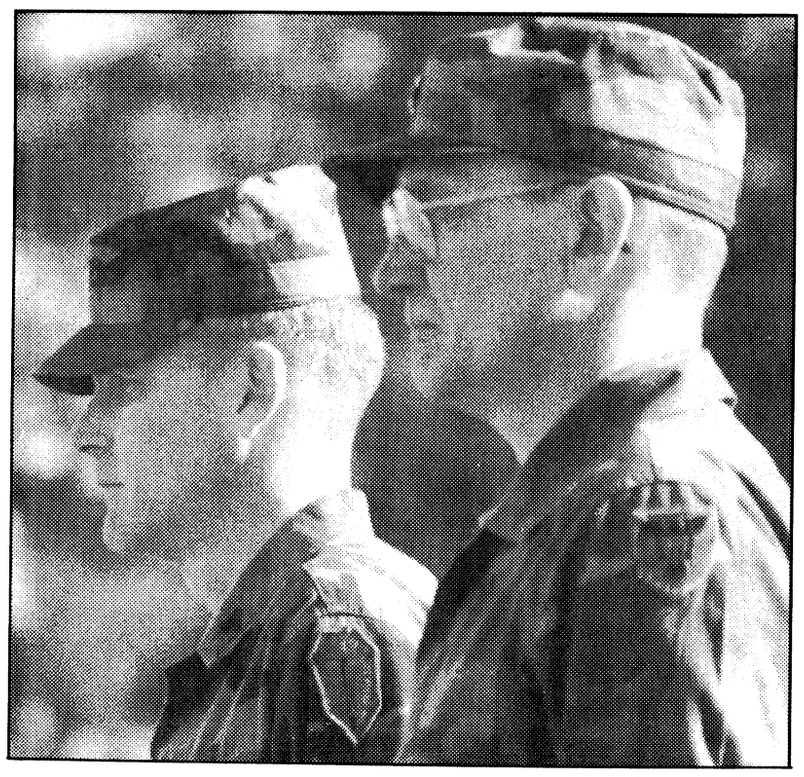
CRC gets new commander

347th Repl. Battalion takes over facility

By James C. Rupp
Bayonet staff writer



The Conus Replacement Center got a new commander Jan. 15. In fact, it got a whole new command battalion.

During a ceremony conducted at the CRC, the provisional battalion, which had been manning the CRC since its activation on Oct. 15 under the command of Lt. Col. Tom Brady, relinquished command to the 347th Replacement Battalion under the command of Lt. Col. John Cleary.

The 347th Replacement was activated Dec. 27 from reserve status in Marion, Ill.

In addition to the 347th, the CRC will also be operated by the 235th Replacement Company from Redmond, Wash.; 412th Replacement Company from Pascagoula, Miss.; 415th Replacement Company from Long Beach, Cal.; 403rd Replacement Detachment from Punsutawney, Pa., and the 813th Replacement Detachment from Gordo, Ala.

"At this point," said Cleary of the job ahead of him, "we're going to take an opportunity to make a systems assessment and make any necessary changes that will benefit the soldier and aid in carrying out the mission."

Retired officers offer scholarship

Retired Officers Association

The Retired Officers Association scholarship loan program provides $1,500 annual, no-interest loans to unmarried undergraduate students, under the age of 24, who are dependent children of active, reserve, and retired service personnel. The loans are awarded for up to five years of undergraduate study.

This current school year, 680 students were awarded loans, totaling over one million dollars. From this group, based upon their academic records, participation in extracurricular and community activities, 106 students received special $500 grants in addition to the loans. All those who apply for the loans are automatically considered for the grants.

The TROA Scholarship Program was established in 1948 for the sons and daughters of retired officers and their widows. It has expanded to include the children of active duty, reserve and retired officers, warrant officers and non-commissioned officers of the Army, Navy, Air Force, Marine Crops, Coast Guard, U.S. Public Health Service and National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration.

Scholarship applications for the 1991-92 school year will be available after Jan. 1. For more information, write to TROA Scholarship Loan Committee, 201 N. Washington St., Alexandria, Va. 22314-2529.

Which CHAMPUS supplement insurance policy should you buy? It's your decision

Do you need a health insurance policy to supplement your CHAMPUS benefits?

That's a good question. One that only you can answer.

CHAMPUS covers a lot — but it isn't free. After receiving health care from a civilian source and having CHAMPUS pay its share of your medical bills, the costs that are left will be your responsibility.

You have a choice. You can pay those costs out of your pocket, or you can buy an insurance policy that will pick up most or all of the remaining expense.

Policies that are specifically designed to pay after CHAMPUS has paid the government's share of your civilian health care costs are called CHAMPUS supplemental policies. They're offered by military associations and private firms, and have no connection to CHAMPUS, to the Defense Department, or to any other agency of the federal government.

Each CHAMPUS supplemental policy has its own rate structure and rules about eligibility, level of benefit coverage, deductibles, coverage of long-term illness, etc. It'll be up to you to decide which plan — if any — is best suited to your needs.

Here are some questions you should ask when shopping for CHAMPUS supplemental policies:

- Is there a deductible you must meet before the supplement will begin paying?
- Is there a maximum limit on benefits (lifetime, annual, type of care)?
- Is there a limit on the number of days of inpatient care the plan will cover (lifetime, annual, consecutive, etc.)?
- Is there a pre-existing condition clause?
- Is there a waiting period that must elapse before the policy will pay for pre-existing conditions?
- Are there any requirements for certain kinds of care to be pre-certified or approved before receiving the care (such as for inpatient care, mental health care, etc.)?
- Will the plan cover amounts beyond what CHAMPUS allows?
- Does the plan cover inpatient care? Outpatient care? Long-term care?
- Does the plan pay for services that aren't covered by CHAMPUS (such as cosmetic surgery)?
- Does the plan specifically not cover other conditions (mental health, obstetrics, gynecology, cancer)?
- Do you have other primary health insurance — and if you do, will it, together with CHAMPUS, pay all of your medical bills?
- Will the supplemental plan cover you overseas? If you are overseas, you may not incur any disallowed charges, because CHAMPUS pays billed charges overseas.
- Do you have a family history of disabling illnesses?
- Do you have easy access to military medical care if your immediate vicinity?
- What type of military medical care is available nearby (emergency, inpatient, outpatient only, etc.)?
- Does the nearest military medical facility treat family members (some treat only active-duty service members)?
- Does the military medical facility in your area have a health care finder/participating provider program?
- Does the nearest military medical facility have Partnership providers (civilian providers of care who work in the military hospital and charge less than the CHAMPUS allowable charge for their services; the patient pays no cost-share for their care)?
- Is there a PRIMUS clinic in your area?
- Does the plan convert to a Medicare supplement?
- If the plan converts to Medicare, must it be in force as a CHAMPUS supplement for any specified length of time before conversion?
- Will the plan pay the CHAMPUS deductible — even at the new, increased 1991 levels of $150 for an individual and $300 for the whole family?
- Will the plan pay the patient's cost-share under the CHAMPUS diagnosis-related group payment system?
- What are the membership fees when you join the organization that sponsors the plan?
- What are the supplemental policy's premium payment options (monthly, semi-annual, quarterly, annual)? Can you use a credit care to charge the premiums?
- Can your premium payments be increased? If so, under what conditions?
- Does the plan offer rates based on military status (active duty or retired), or based on an age scale? If determined by age, what is the scale?
- Are you a smoker? Does the plan you're considering have higher rates for smokers?
- If you're a member of an active-duty family, will the supplemental plan also supplement the types of services available under CHAMPUS' Program for the Handicapped?
- If you're a member of an active-duty family, do you need a CHAMPUS supplement for inpatient care (considering that all you pay the hospital is a small, flat daily rate — currently $8.55 — plus the cost for non-covered services.
- Do civilian providers of care in your area generally participate in CHAMPUS (that is, do they accept the CHAMPUS allowable charge as the full fee, or do they charge more than the CHAMPUS allowable)?
- Does the supplemental plan automatically cover the service member when he or she retires?
- What are the time limitations, if any, for claim filing?

Remember: Whether or not to buy a CHAMPUS supplemental insurance policy — and which one to buy — are decisions only you can make. Get as many facts as possible before choosing.

Cols. Exchange Club sponsors luncheon

By Douglas O. Bruk
USAIC Public Affairs Office

The Exchange Club of Columbus, one of the local chapters of the National Exchange Club, is sponsoring a luncheon for Fort Benning residents and civilian personnel interested in forming a Fort Benning Exchange Club.

The luncheon is Tuesday at 11:30 a.m. in the Corrigador Room of the Main Post Officers' Club. Lunch will be free for the first 35 people who arrive.

When formed, the Fort Benning club will be the first exchange club on a military installation, according to Cory Loomis, chairman of the New Club Building Committee for the Columbus Exchange Club.

Since the establishment of the first club in 1911, Exchange Club members have been working nationwide to improve their communities.

The National Exchange Club offers a number of programs emphasizing patriotism, community services and youth projects.

The activities of each local chapter depend on community needs, Loomis said.

The more established a club, the more programs it can offer because it has larger resources, he added.

OPERATION DESERT STORM

Cheney, Powell update America on war's progress

Army News Service

WASHINGTON — Gen. Colin Powell, chairman of the Joint Chiefs, painted a vivid picture recently of what allied forces will do to the Iraqi army in the coming days and weeks of Operation Desert Storm.

"Our strategy to go after their army is very, very simple," he said. "First, we're going to cut it off, and then we're going to kill it."

In the most detailed account of the Persian Gulf war to date, Powell and Secretary of Defense Dick Cheney praised U.S. service members for their accomplishments thus far, but urged reporters not to claim victory too soon.

"Saddam Hussein has a very large military force . . . certainly one of the largest in the world," said Cheney during the Jan. 23 Pentagon news briefing. "In Kuwait and southern Iraq there are over 120 brigades — some 30-plus divisions dug in. I don't think anyone here expected that we would get rid of all that capability within the first week of the operation. There may well be surprises ahead for us."

Persistent air attacks against the Iraqi army, particularly the Republican Guard — Iraq's primary offensive weapon in its eight-year war with Iran, and the unit that spearheaded the invasion of Kuwait in August — have been launched throughout the campaign.

Powell said that a precise assessment of the damage done by the air raids is not available, partly due to heavy cloud cover over southern Iraq, but also because the Iraqi army has yet to stray from its fortified defensive positions.

"You really don't know how you're doing against an army until that army tries to perform its function," said Powell. "If it's just sitting there taking the punishment, we know we're hurting it, but we really don't know how badly we're hurting it."

Powell said he may not know the extent of damage inflicted on the Iraqi army until allied forces "go in and fight it."

A campaign is under way now, according to Powell, to cut off the 150,000-man Republican Guard from command and control to the north, and disrupt the supply and communication lines that support "somewhere in the neighborhood of a half million men" in Iraq and Kuwait.

During the 2 p.m. briefing, Powell claimed allied air superiority over Kuwait and Iraq, saying that Iraqi air-to-air interception thus far "'has been for the most part totally ineffective," and that coalition planes have not been seriously affected by Iraq's "extremely large, sophisticated air defense system."

The U.S. has lost 10 airplanes in the campaign, all, with the possible exception of one, to fire from the ground.

In air-to-air combat, the allies have shot down 19 Iraqi planes; unconfirmed reports claim that the U.S. has lost one. Despite the air successes, Powell reiterated the U.S. position that the gulf war is "not just an air campaign."

"We have a tool box that's full of lots of tools . . . General Schwarzkopf has them all at the party," he said, referring to Gen. H. Norman Schwarzkopf, commander of U.S. forces in the region.

"You can by no means count (Hussein) out yet, given the size force he has," said Cheney. "We are steadily and progressively destroying his unconventional warfare capability, finding and destroying his Scuds, taking out his air force piece by piece, and now, aggressively working over his ground forces in Kuwait.

"Each day and each week that goes by, he gets weaker and we get stronger."

Geneva Convention guarantees POW rights

Army News Service

WASHINGTON — "I protest this treatment on the grounds that it violates the Geneva Conventions."

It is a line often spoken in cinematic accounts of the Korean and Vietnam wars. It is also a line every soldier, sailor, airman, Marine and Coast Guardsman must be prepared to speak on behalf of himself and his comrades, should he become a prisoner of war.

The Geneva Conventions are widely known about, but the specifics are largely unknown. Except for those military personnel and diplomats who are specifically trained to deal with POW issues, few understand what the articles of the Geneva Conventions really say. And, with the apparent taking of the first American POWs in the Persian Gulf war, Army officials say that's a vacuum of information that needs filling.

Both the United States and Iraq are signatories to "The Geneva Convention Relative to the Treatment of Prisoners of War, Aug. 12, 1949," which is one of four agreements among nations signed after World War II.

The convention pertaining to prisoners of war, known in military literature as the GPW, contains 143 articles detailing the rights of POWs and the obligations of their captors. Generally, the GPW says that POWs are protected persons, entitled to basic necessities and rights under international law.

- Articles 1 through 11 are general in nature. Article 4 establishes the categories of persons entitled to GPW protections.
- Article 7 says that POWs may not renounce their rights under the GPW.
- Articles 12 through 16 are also general, saying, in effect, that POWs must be humanely treated.
- Article 13, in particular, prohibits captors from unlawfully causing death or endangering the health of POWs. Captors are prohibited from physically mutilating POWs, and from using them in medical or scientific experiments.

The GPW says that POWs must be protected from violence or intimidation and against insults and public curiosity.

The requirement for POWs to give name, rank, serial number and date of birth is found in the GPW's Article 17.

This helps captors provide the International Commission of the Red Cross with information about POWs, which may then be passed on to their native country.

- Article 17, generally about interrogation, says physical and mental torture or other forms of coercion may not be used to get information from a POW.

POWs who refuse to answer questions may not be "threatened, insulted or exposed to unpleasant or disadvantageous treatment of any kind."

Other important provisions of the GPW include —

- Article 25 says POWs must be given adequate shelter. In fact, it says POWS "shall be quartered under conditions as favorable as those for the forces of the Detaining Power who are billeted in the same area."
- Articles 25 and 26 say POWs must be given adequate food and clothing.
- Articles 30, 31 and 33 entitle POWs to adequate medical care — by someone from their own country, if possible. They also establish POWs with medical skills as "retained persons." (Army medical personnel with Geneva Conventions Identity Cards are entitled to this status, allowing them to continue providing medical care after they are captured.
- Article 34 says POWs may continue to observe the religion of their choice and should be provided with adequate facilities for worship services.
- Article 38 says captors "shall encourage the practice of intellectual, educational, and recreational pursuits, sports and games among prisoners.

Cruel and unusual punishment, torture, collective punishment and unfair punishment by a biased court are prohibited.

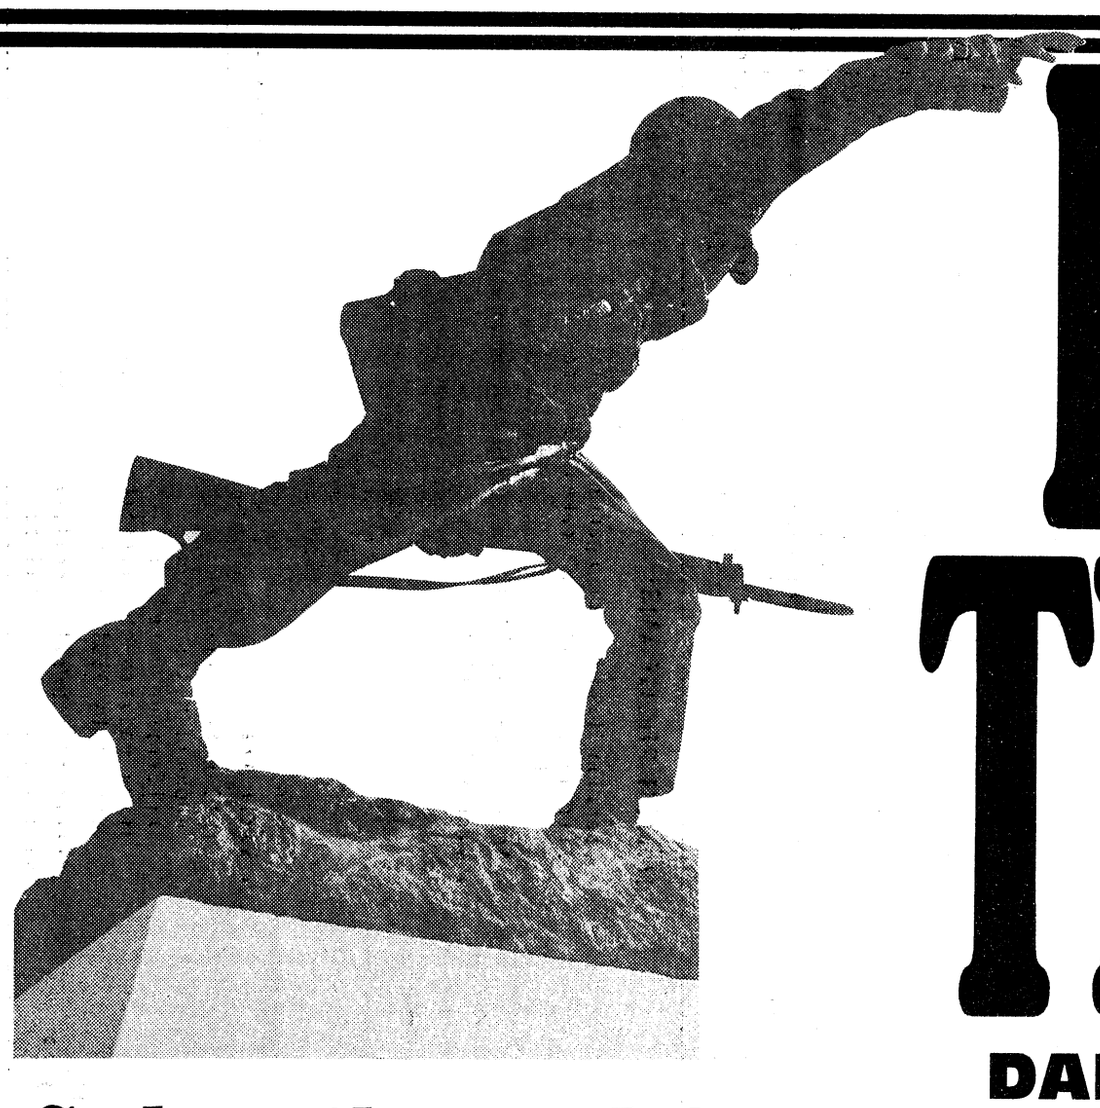
DoD calls gulf oil spill 'environmental war'

Army News Service

WASHINGTON — Iraq is "conducting an indiscriminate environmental war against its neighbors," a Defense Department spokesman said as millions of barrels of oil continued to pump into the Persian Gulf.

DoD spokesman Pete Williams told reporters at the regular Jan. 26 Pentagon press briefing that coalition officials are unsure how much oil is flowing into the gulf waters, but did say some of it comes from five tankers off the shores of Kuwait.



"Those tankers had a capacity to hold a total of three million barrels of oil, or about 120 million gallons — that's just part of what has been dumped into the waters of the Persian Gulf," Williams said. "There's no way to be certain about how much is being pumped from the storage tanks on shore."

A team of U.S. oil pollution experts was on the way to the gulf, Williams said. The team was to be headed by the Coast Guard and was to include members of the Environmental Protection Agency and the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration.

Although few details were available on the scope of the spill, U.S. media pool footage broadcast on American television showed oil-thickened waters lapping onto Saudi beaches near Kuwait. Also shown were dead and dying local waterfowl, all of them covered in oil.

"Iraq is intentionally creating the worse environmental disaster in the history of the Persian Gulf," Williams said. "It's conducting an indiscriminate environmental war on its neighbors, as well as on the plant and animal life in the region."

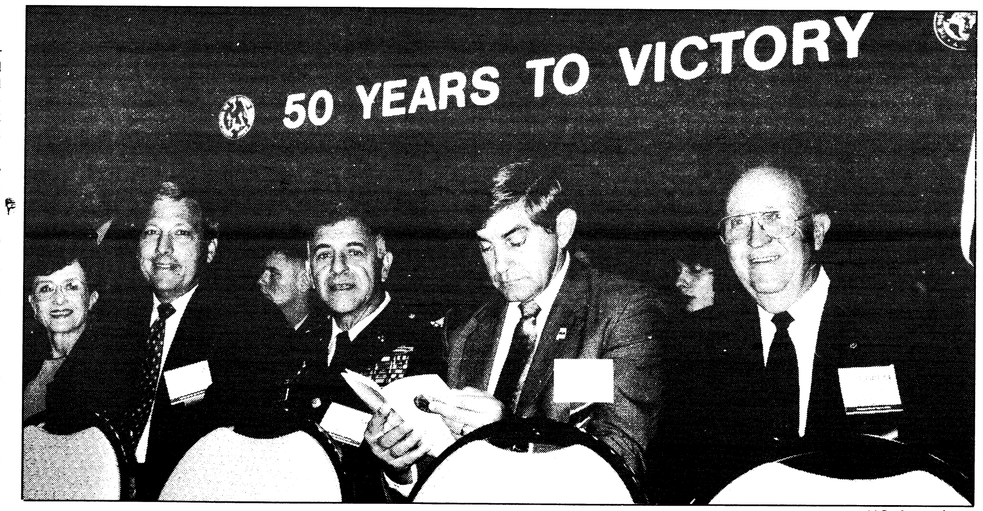
Annual meeting teaches about Army



Wade Shell
AUSA Administrator

The Association of the United States Army held its annual meeting in Washington, D.C. during October. The chapter sent another successful delegation this year.

About forty soldiers were able to attend. Maj. Gen. Carmen Cavezza lead the delegation with Chapter President Ben Williams.

The meeting, held Oct. 15 through 17 featured the theme "Preparing for a New Century." Tribute was paid to Operation Just Cause with a special display.

The chapter hosted a hospitality suite. Over 2,000 guests were given a Southern style reception. But, the meeting was not just a social event. Soldiers were afforded the opportunity to hear Army leaders speak and to give thier views. Some of the guest speakers included the Honorable Michael P.W. Stone, Secretary of the Army, Gen. Carl E. Vuono, Army Chief of Staff and Sgt. Maj. of the Army J.W. Gates. The association recognized the Honorable John O. Marsh, Jr. Marsh was awarded the Marshall Medal for his contributions to the Army.

Fort Benning Chapter representatives begin the annual meeting at the opening ceremony.

Companies from around the world displayed the latest in military technology. This gave attendees a close look at the newest hardware. Soldiers were given the chance to express their views about the needs of the Army.

For many soldiers this was their first trip to the Nations capitol. Tours allowed attendees to see Arlington National Cemetary and other sights around Washington. It was an experience our soldiers brought back with them and one they will not soon forget.

Operation Holiday changes to meet challenges

Wade Shell
AUSA Administrator

From the early stages the committee formed to bring "Operation Holiday" to life realized the orignal scope would need to be changed. With more Fort Benning soldiers being deployed to Saudi Arabia, the chapter began looking for ways to support them. The Board of Directors had already created the "Desert Shield Committee." Chapter President Ben Williams quickly recognized that the two efforts would work well together and combined both committees.

In years past Fort Benning severly cut back daily operations to afford soldiers a Christmas and New Years vacation. But, with Desert Shield progressing, post soldiers were required to continue working through the holiday season. Aside from the unusual activity, deploying soldiers left hundreds of dependants behind to spend the holidays alone. For many it was their first Christmas apart.

The newly combined committee headed by retired Maj. Gen. Kenneth Leuer put retired Col. Jack Harron to work raising the estimated $18,000 that would be needed to support the planned activities and events. Prinicipal sponsoring was by Columbus Bank & Trust, B & B Beverages and 133 other contributors. Although most funding came from larger corporations many local individuals contributed significantly to the overall total. Additionally, many donations of a different type such as the 2,000 Georgia Tech football tickets were received.

First on the agenda, 6,000 Watch Band Calendars were sent to Saudi Arabia to be distributed to our soldiers. Then began nine Christmas parties coordinated by the chapter and the Directorate of Community Activites of the Infantry Center.

The parties, held at the Main Post Bowling Center, featured dependants from each of the departed battalions. Starting on Dec. 1 parties continued through Dec. 16. Success could be measured in the words of thanks from those who attended. Each party had free bowling, refreshments, a visit from Santa and other activities for everyone.

Events were also planned for permanent party soldiers still at Fort Benning. Hundreds were taken to see Atlanta Falcons and Atlanta Hawks games. Also, soldiers were given the opportunity to attend this year's Peach Bowl, the Blue-Gray Game and other athletic events. The Atlanta USO provided an overwhelming number of tickets to both college and professional sporting events.

The Springer Opera House and the Columbus Symphony also provided tickets for their unique shows.

There were thousands of trainees still on post because of the cancelled "Exodus." The DCA office provided a huge Christmas day spectacular. The chapter provided its own version on New Years Day with local bands and celebraties. Some 1,800 soldiers were able to spend a little time off on both holidays.

A highly successful program and schedule, "Operation Holiday/Desert Shield" gave thousands of soldiers, dependants and civilians an opportunity to find out what AUSA is really all about. This event gave the entire community a chance to come together through the chapter to support the soldier.

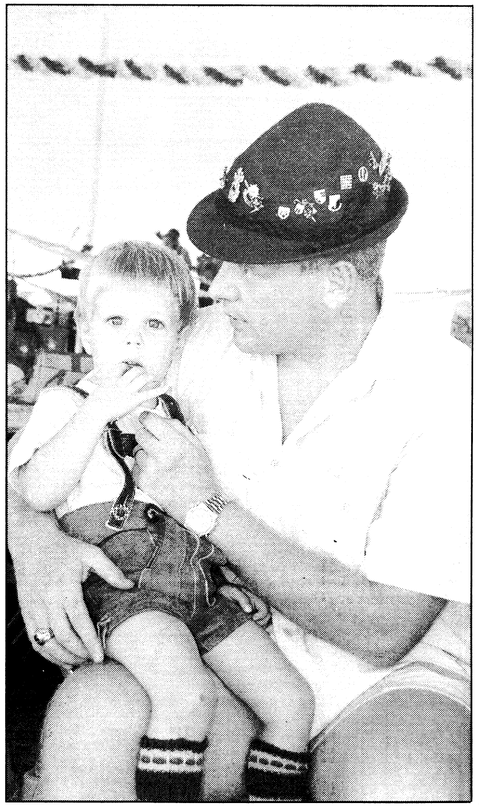
8,000 soldiers, civilians attend annual Oktoberfest

Wade Shell
AUSA Administrator

Letters and announcements went out in ealry August. Bands, entertainment, tents, food and drink were contracted as early as January. Meetings of key leaders had been held since February. After several anxiety attacks and not a few antacid pills the Community Oktoberfest got underway Friday evening Oct. 5.



All the planning and efforts of the chapter staff and several volunteers culminated in this Oktoberfest being one of the most successful events sponsored by the chapter this year. As he has done for many years retired Command Sgt. Maj. James Gallagher headed the effort and was instrumental in the overall success.

This year the chapter broke with tradition and moved from the downtown location to Fort Benning. This gave residents of Fort Benning and soldiers stationed here easier access. Transportation from main post was provided to many who would otherwise not have been able to attend. Admission prices were lowered and the open field gave a better feeling of atmosphere.

With Oompah bands, an enormous tent and, of course, German beer Friday night was relegated to the true Oktoberfest enthusiast. A small crowd of Germans and Bavarian lovers gathered to dance, drink and socialize.

Saturday began early with a chapter sponsored 10k run and was accompanied by a one mile fun run. Participants received awards in numerous categories and all runners were given an official Oktoberfest T-Shirt. Additionally, a 12k volksmarch through the Sand Hill area was also held with participants receiving a T-Shirt.

The Community Oktoberfest took on a new flare Saturday afternoon as Misty Harbor cranked up Southern Rock music and an entire row of craft stands opened for business. Guests were treated to local dance groups and celebraty appearances. Games were provided for the younger crowd and there was plenty of food and drink for all. German music was provided by Big John and the Atlanta Polka Band and Die Mitternaechters. Continuing throughout the day and into the late night hours the celebration finally ended as the last dancers slowed to a stop. As the music faded over 8,000 people had been in attendance.

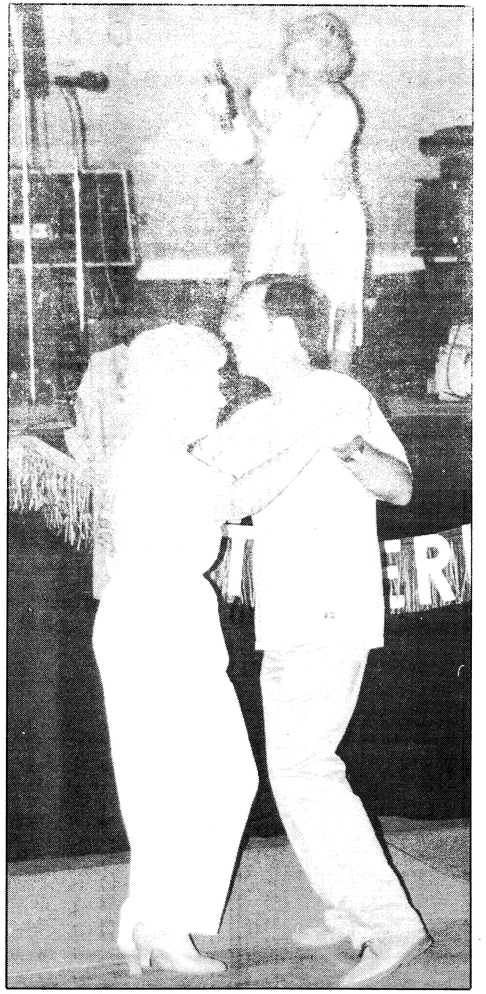
'Fishy meeting during the fall

Wade Shell
AUSA Administrator

The chapter held its fall general membership meeting in September. As it has been for many years, the Chattahoochee Valley Fairgrounds under the Bovinity Pavillion was the site for this regularly scheduled event.



The meeting began with Pritchett's catering the all-you-can-eat affair with catfish, red snapper, hushpuppies, frenchfries,grits and coleslaw. The chapter provided RC Cola and cold Budweiser beer.

Chaplain (Col.) George Gudz from Fort Benning gave the invocation to get the business meeting underway. Third Region President retired Col. Hal Van Meter was on hand to lead the Pledge of Allegiance. Chapter President Ben Williams thanked the membership for the fine support over the past months during his period of leadership.

Williams then turned the meeting over to Brig. Gen. William Steele, the Assistant Commandant from Fort Benning. Steele welcomed the opportunity to address the chapter membership prior to his scheduled departure from Fort Benning.

Together Williams and Steele took time to recognize and award a large number of soldiers representing many units from Fort Benning for their acheivements. Special recognition was given to the wives of soldiers sent to Saudi Arabia in support of Operation Desert Shield.

Williams closed the meeting by thanking members for attending and asked that they spread the message that AUSA supports the soldier.

Dancers polka away the evening to the sounds of traditional Bavarian music.

Local businesses support AUSA

Wade Shell
AUSA Administrator

As 1990 Operation Holiday/Desert Shield began to wind down in early January, donations continued to flow in. The tri-community area really banded together to support Fort Benning and the Chattahoochee Valley-Fort Benning Chapter.

The fund-raising effort began in November with letters, visits and phone calls from a specially selected committee. The task was enormous, with the chapter goal this year more than doubling the needs from previous efforts. By the time the fund raisers had finished, and the dust settled, almost $17,000 had been raised.

Some of this years major contributors include Columbus Bank & Trust, B & B Beverages, AFLAC, W.C. Bradley Company, The Carpet Mill Store, MUTEC, Columbus Ledger-Enquirer, Trust Company Bank, ARRCO Military Supply, Westvaco, Spector's Cleaners, TIC Federal Credit Union and more than 125 other businesses and individuals.

The community really came forth with outstanding support monetarily. But, many contributions this year were just a little different. The Springer Opera House and the Columbus Symphony Orchestra donated tickets. Also, the Atlanta USO office donated hundreds of Falcons tickets and tickets to the Peach Bowl. Additionally, AFLAC donated popcorn and poppers to the deployed soldiers from Fort Benning. Several hotels including La Quinta Motor Inn and both Holiday Inns offered some free rooms on Christmas Eve to soldiers. Again this year the Air Force Command and Staff College donated tickets to the Blue-Gray Game in Mongomery.

Without all the support offered from the surrounding communities, Operation Holiday/Desert Shield could not have been successful. A grateful Fort Benning salutes the businesses and individuals who stepped forward to help.

Vets to dedicate monument honoring 1st Infantry Div.

By Alyanna B. Clay-Heard
Bayonet staff writer

The grounds of the National Infantry Museum is the site for a new monument erected in memory of the the 1st Infantry Division, and the soldiers of the "Big Red One" involved in World War I and II and the Vietnam Conflict.

Retired Maj. Gen. Albert H. Smith Jr., project fund-raiser, and retired Col. Edward W. MacGregor, were at Fort Benning Jan. 25 to inspect the construction and to put the finishing touches on plans for the dedication of the monument, set to take place March 15.

"We found the monument three-quarters complete, and coming along quite nicely," said Smith. "This memorial is a tribute to the men of the 1st Infantry Division for their contribution to this country.

"The memorial is especially appropriate now that the division is deployed to Saudi Arabia to participate in Operation Desert Storm," he added.

MacGregor, as well as working on the memorial project, is also honorary regimental colonel of the 18th Infantry Regiment. When not in planning meetings, MacGregor took the time to call the wives of deployed Fort Benning soldiers in the 1st and 2nd battalions of the 18th Infantry Regiment.

"As an honorary colonel, you have to help continue the high esprit of the unit," said MacGregor. "I hope that my small contribution was inspiring to the spouses of the great soldiers defending our country in this time of conflict," he added.

Smith also said he hopes the monument will help to boost the moral and esprit de corps of all Fort Benning soldiers.

"This a part of the history of a great unit," he said. "Seeing this will hopefully inspire soldiers, past, present and future to newer and greater heights for tomorrow's Army."

Get facts before having tattoo done

By Stanley B. Kahane
Preventive Medicine

If you think tattooing or getting your ears pierced is "cool," you'd better think again.

Almost every tattooed person regrets having submitted themselves to becoming a walking work of "art."

You owe it to yourself to get the best information available before deciding to get tattooed or have your ears pierced.

These are almost irrevocable changes you will carry around with you for the rest of your life (often in full view of the world around you).

Peer pressure is a powerful force, often for good, sometimes for actions that are questionable, and sometimes for evil.

Drug and alcohol abuse head that list. We understand the words "high risk" and know that exposing ourselves to high risk activities is foolish.

Do you realize that subjecting yourself to tattooing or having your ears pierced places you at risk?

Both are capable of spreading diseases that are carried in blood. Two examples of these diseases are AIDS and hepatitis.

Do not allow yourself to be pressured into submitting to potentially dangerous procedures to humor or impress your peers.

Be a leader, not a follower. Think of the risk involved, get the fact, and then make your choice.

For more information regarding risks involved in tattoos or piercing your ears, contact Preventive Medicine Service at 545-1144 or 545-3518.

Kahane is chief of Preventive Medicine.

Desert Storm troops have tax extension

Army News Service

WASHINGTON — Military personnel assigned to Operation Desert Shield in the Mideast will have at least until June 15 to file and pay any balance of tax shown on their 1990 tax returns.

The June 15 extension applies to regular military personnel and reservists who are stationed overseas on the normal April 15 tax filing deadline.

However, like most taxpayers, these military personnel will probably be due tax refunds and will want to get their refunds as soon as possible.

Last year 70 percent of the 113 million individual tax returns resulted in refunds.

The Internal Revenue Service said it is working closely with the Department of Defense to expand assistance for military personnel so that returns can be processed and refunds issued as quickly as possible.

Taxpayers overseas are usually required to file a form to request additional time to file beyond the June 15 extended filing date.

If conditions warrant, the IRS commissioner will exercise his authority to automatically extend the filing and payment periods beyond June 15.

While payment of any tax due may be extended, interest will apply on tax not paid by the normal April 15 deadline.

Current law does not permit the IRS to waive this requirement.

VA Q&A

Department of Veterans Affairs

Q. Can I use my VA-guaranteed home loan to buy land I plan to build a house on in the future?

A. A VA-guaranteed loan cannot be used to buy undeveloped land unless it is part of a package that includes the building of your home.

Q. Can I get a release of liability from the VA if a non-veteran assumes my VA-guaranteed home loan?

A. If the buyer meets with Department of Veterans Affairs approval, you may be released from liability.

Q. I recently heard that the VA home loan guarantee fee increased. What are the new amounts?

A. The Budget Reconciliation Act of 1990 increased loan funding fees for veterans making no down payment from 1.25 percent to 1.865 percent of the loan amount. For those veterans making a down payment of 5 percent, but less than 10 percent, the loan funding fee went from .75 percent to 1.375 percent of the loan amount. Veterans making a down payment of 10 percent or more saw the loan funding fee go from .5 percent to 1.125 percent of the loan amount. These increases are effective for loans closed between Nov. 1, 1990, and Sept. 30, 1991.

Q. My mother receives a VA widow's pension and has recently lost her sight. Can the VA offer her any additional assistance?

A. Widows who qualify for death pension may receive increased benefits if they are blind, in a nursing home, or helpless or so nearly helpless as to require the regular aid and attendance of another person.

Support can be fun!

Members of unit's family member group provide time out, activities for children

Timothy Burns, 12, plays in a helicopter.

By Alyanna B. Clay-Heard
Bayonet staff writer

In these times of world conflict and emotional turmoil, support groups have been like solid foundations of comfort in the midst of Desert Storm.

Spouses, fiancees, girlfriends, boyfriends, parents and concerned individuals from all walks of life have come together under the common bond of having a loved one serving in the Middle East.

In all the rush to meetings, support rallies, and other support group-related functions, some of the most innocent victims of the war are lost in the shuffle.

The children.

While many experts have discussed the possible emotional toll this situation has taken on children who have parents or other relatives involved in Desert Storm, there have really been no formal support groups formed for children to possibly find support from their peers.

The members of the C Battery, 4th Battalion, 41st Field Artillery support group have decided to change that by creating a support group just for the kids.

Valleeria Bennett, group member and leader of the children's support group is enthusiastic about the project.

"The kids will meet twice a month, just to talk and meet others in their situation," said Bennett. "One monthly meeting will be a pizza party at Chuck E. Cheese, where the kids can let themselves go, run around, play games and have a good time. The restaurant manager, Robert Keys, really liked the idea and gives the group discount rates on the pizza and sodas. This will continue for the duration of Desert Storm."she added.

The other meeting will consist of letter-writing and easy crafts the children can make, and anything else the children would enjoy, said Bennett.

"This is really great for the parents as well as the children," said Barbara Burns, group member. "We get a chance to relax and talk and our kids can let out their emotions in a positive fashion. Plus, kids love to play and meet other kids."

Tressea Kallman, wife of the battery commander, said she came up with the idea because the children need support as well as the wives. "Valleeria volunteered to oversee this project," she said, "and it has come together beautifully. I really hope this can lead to other things the children can become involved in because it really helps."

By Brian C. Sutton
Bayonet staff writer

The awards presentation for Soldier of the quarter, Non-commissioned Officer of the Quarter and Drill Sergeant of the Quarter took place recently at Infantry Hall.

Spec. Mark Halliday, of the 75th Ranger Regiment received the honors as Soldier of the Quarter much to his surprise.

"I was definitely surprised. I hadn't planned on winning it,"he said.

NCO of the Quarter was awarded to Sgt. Anthony Holloway of Co. A, 4th Bn., 36th Infantry, a seven-year veteran.

"I was excited and surprised. My chain of command and my wife were a big help in getting this award. They gave me the support I needed."

Staff Sgt. Israr Choudhri recieved the Drill Sergeant of the Quarter award. Choudhri, a drill sergeant with Co. B, 4th Bn., 30th Infantry, has another goal in his immediate future.

"I would gladly trade this award and everything else I've received just to have the chance to go over and help out in the Middle East. I would really like to be there."

Prayer provides strength

By Debra Galle
USAIC Chaplain's Office

Prayers.

Headlines promote and report them as people become more aware that praying is a powerful thing they can do in these stress-saturated days of war.

Family members of the soldiers in Desert Storm say they feel the need to get together and pray for their soldiers, families and friends.

Today is a special day for prayer at both Main Post Catholic Chapel and The Infantry Center Chapel's noon services.

There are many support groups offered for families of Desert Storm. Custer Terrace Chapel has a group which meets every Wednesday at noon. Spouses may bring their lunch and take time to share experiences and make new friends, most notably the chaplains who facilitate the group.

Other support channels are available for spouses. This hour of prayer is a special way for families to share the burden of war. The hour is not spent in gathering information, but in prayer and supportive fellowship.

For more information on support groups, counseling services, or parenting classes, call 545-5301 or 545-2288.

Post chapels offer comfort

By Jim Phelps
Infantry Center Chapel Chaplain

Reflections Reflections

Men and women have always found that prayer is what we turn to in times of crisis and overwhelming responsibility. The hope and inspiration that is found in prayer brings comfort and courage into our lives.

As the rear detachment chaplain for the 197th and the pastor of the Infantry Center Chapel, I want to encourage you to seek God's help through prayer. Besides the regular worship services, more opportunities for prayer are being offered at Fort Benning through Bible study groups and support groups.

The Infantry Center Chapel,located in building 101, Sigerfoos Road, has a prayer time each weekday from noon until 1 p.m. I will begin and end each hour. The Infantry Center Chapel also has begun a prayer and song service each Sunday at 6 p.m. There is a strong focus in our prayers for our soldiers and families who are a part of Desert Storm. This is an informal service and folks are encouraged to come in informal clothing, such as sweaters and jeans or slacks. Baby-sitting is provided in the chapel annex next door.

We gather in prayer to grow stronger in our faith and help one another. Our staff chaplain, Chaplain (Col.) George Gudz, said it all in these words, "The church is people, and the more we gather together in prayer and fellowship, the more strength we will find."

My prayer is that you will find God's strength in our prayers as I encourage you again to gather in your place of worship during the week for prayer and attend services of worship on the weekends.

Mike Haskey

Springer 'drives' home a winner

USAIC Public Affairs Office

The Springer's Mainstage season shifted into overdrive when Driving Miss Daisy opened Jan. 24 with two Columbus stage veterans and a seasoned professional guest artist at the wheel. Alfred Uhry's Pulitzer Prize-winning play is the third show in the State Theatre of Georgia's schedule and opened to a sell-out crowd.

The story is about the unlikely relationship between an aging, wealthy, Jewish widow and the proud, black man who is her chauffeur. The play spans a 25-year period between 1948-73, the most turbulent years in the South's struggle to desegregate its racist and classist institutions.

Ellen Conger plays the feisty, hard-headed Daisy Werthan who tries in vain to preserve her independence by resisting her son's attempts to take her car away and force her to take a chauffeur. Mark Grant portrays Daisy's son, Boolie, an ambitious businessman who is terrified for his mother's safety after she demolishes a neighbor's two-car garage with her new Packard.

Lesley James Roberts is the Springer's guest artist playing Hoke, Daisy's chauffeur, who gradually becomes her friend and confidante throughout their winter years.

Driving Miss Daisy runs at the Springer Opera House tonight and Saturday, with holdover shows Tuesday and Wednesday due to sell out performances tonight and Saturday. All shows begin at 8 p.m. For more information regarding performance times and tickets, call the Springer box office at 327-3688.

ENERGY WATCH

By Tina Cook
Energy Branch

As petroleum continues to be in the spotlight, here are some facts that you might find interesting.

According to the Energy Information Administration, approximately 3,000 products that people regularly use are made from the oily substance known as petroleum — such products as ink, crayons, bubble gum, dishwashing liquids, deodorant, eyeglasses, records, tires, ammonia, heart valves, and other items vital to our well-being.

When crude oil was first discovered in the United States, it was taken from natural pools on the earth's surface and was used mainly for medicinal purposes. These natural pools supplied about 3 gallons of oil a day (per pool). As the population expanded and the need for oil grew, and as whale oil, an alternative to crude oil, became scarce as a source for lighting, Americans began to realize the need to produce more crude oil to meet growing energy demands.

In Titusville, Pa., producers excavated the first successful oil well in 1895 using the same technology as they used to drill for water. As crude oil became petroleum products, the main product was kerosene, which began replacing whale oil as the prime source of illumination. Other petroleum products refined out of a typical 42-gallon barrel (industry standard) were greases and lubricants.

Today, there are many refined products, the major ones being motor gasoline, distillate fuel oil, and residual fuel oil.

In 1989, total United States demand for petroleum products averaged 17.3 million barrels per day. In 1978, the year of peak demand, the average demand was 18.8 million barrels per day.

Motor gasoline is the petroleum industry's principal refined product. In the peak year, 1978, the average daily consumption was 7.4 million barrels. In 1989, the average daily consumption was 7.3 million barrels per day, a 1 percent decrease from the 1978 high.

Distillate fuel oil consists of diesel fuels and fuel oils. Distillate fuel oil consumption for 1989 was 3.2 million barrels per day, a 6 percent decrease from the 1978 high of 3.4 million barrels per day.

Residual fuel oil is heavier than distillate fuel oil; it has a higher density, viscosity,and boiling point. Residual fuel use has declined since 1977, reaching a consumption level in 1989 of 1.4 million barrels per day, a 55 percent decrease from the 1977 high of 3.1 million barrels per day. Conservation efforts and fuel-switching are the two main reasons cited for the drop in consumption.

Since 1973, the year of the oil embargo, the three Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development countries that have consistently consumed the most petroleum products are the United States, Japan and West Germany. During 1989, for example, the United States consumed 17.3 million barrels per day; Japan consumed 5.0 million barrels per day, and West Germany consumed 2.3 million barrels per day.

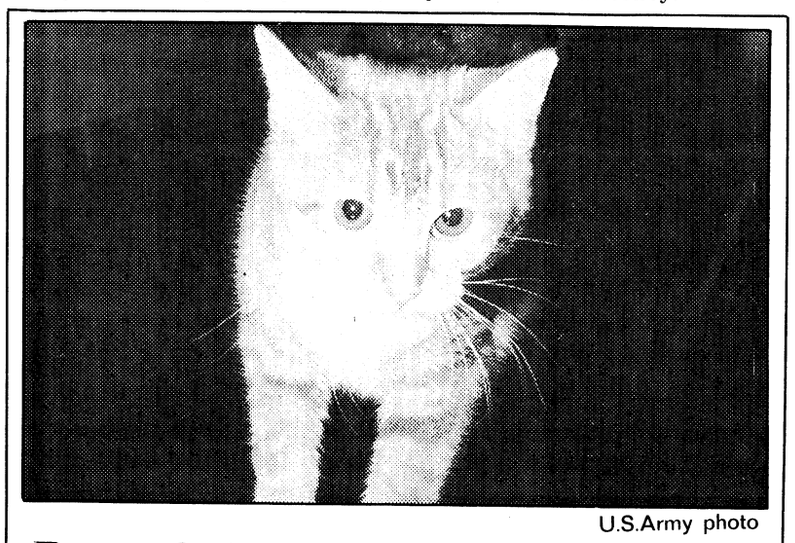
If you have any questions on this or any energy-related subject, contact the Energy Office at 545-4652 or 545-7928.

ASK THE JUDGE

By Virginia L. Carlton
Staff Judge Advocate's Office

Q. My husband has deployed to the Persian Gulf in Operation Desert Storm, and I heard on television that all of his income is exempt from taxes. We normally file a joint tax return. Do we even have to file a tax return this year?

A. Yes, you must still file a tax return for 1990. The President's action, however, allows you to delay filing the return for a considerable time. President Bush designated the Persian Gulf a combat zone. As a result, soldiers deployed there receive certain tax benefits.



Soldiers deployed to the Persian Gulf and their spouses do not have to file their 1990 federal income tax returns until 180 days after the soldier departs from the combat zone. The Internal Revenue Service may not charge any penalty or interest during this period. In addition, taxpayers do not have to file an estimated return or pay an estimated tax as they would for a normal tax extension.

Military pay received by enlisted personnel and warrant officers while serving in the combat zone is exempt from income tax For commissioned officers, up to $500 a month can be excluded from income. The exclusion also extends to periods of hospitalization resulting from injury or sickness suffered while serving in the combat zone. Take note, the income tax exemption for income earned in the combat zone only applies to income earned in 1991. The combat zone tax exemption benefit really won't be felt until next year, when you file your taxes for income earned during 1991.

The state tax effect is not as clear. Georgia grants the soldier the same 180 day grace period after the soldiers returns from the combat zone. Georgia, however, does not exclude pay earned in a combat zone from state taxation. Furthermore, Georgia does not automatically extend a civilian spouse's filing deadline. Legal Assistance is working with state tax authorities to have this issue clarified.

Alabama does grant a combat pay exclusion for all ranks from state taxation. The state however, does not grant an automatic filing extension. In Alabama, a soldier and spouse must request the extension on a state form. The state tax officials are studying this requirement and will advise Legal Assistance of any changes.

If you have any tax questions, you should first contact your unit or rear detachment tax advisor. If he or she is unable to answer your questions, you should contact the Legal Assistance Office at (404) 545-3281 and ask to speak with an attorney.

Army announces proposed budget

Highlights include reductions in force, 4.2 percent pay raise

Army News Service

The Department of the Army has announced details of its biennial budget.

At a media briefing Feb. 2 in the Pentagon, Maj. Gen. Merle Freitag, director of Army budget, explained details of the proposed budget.

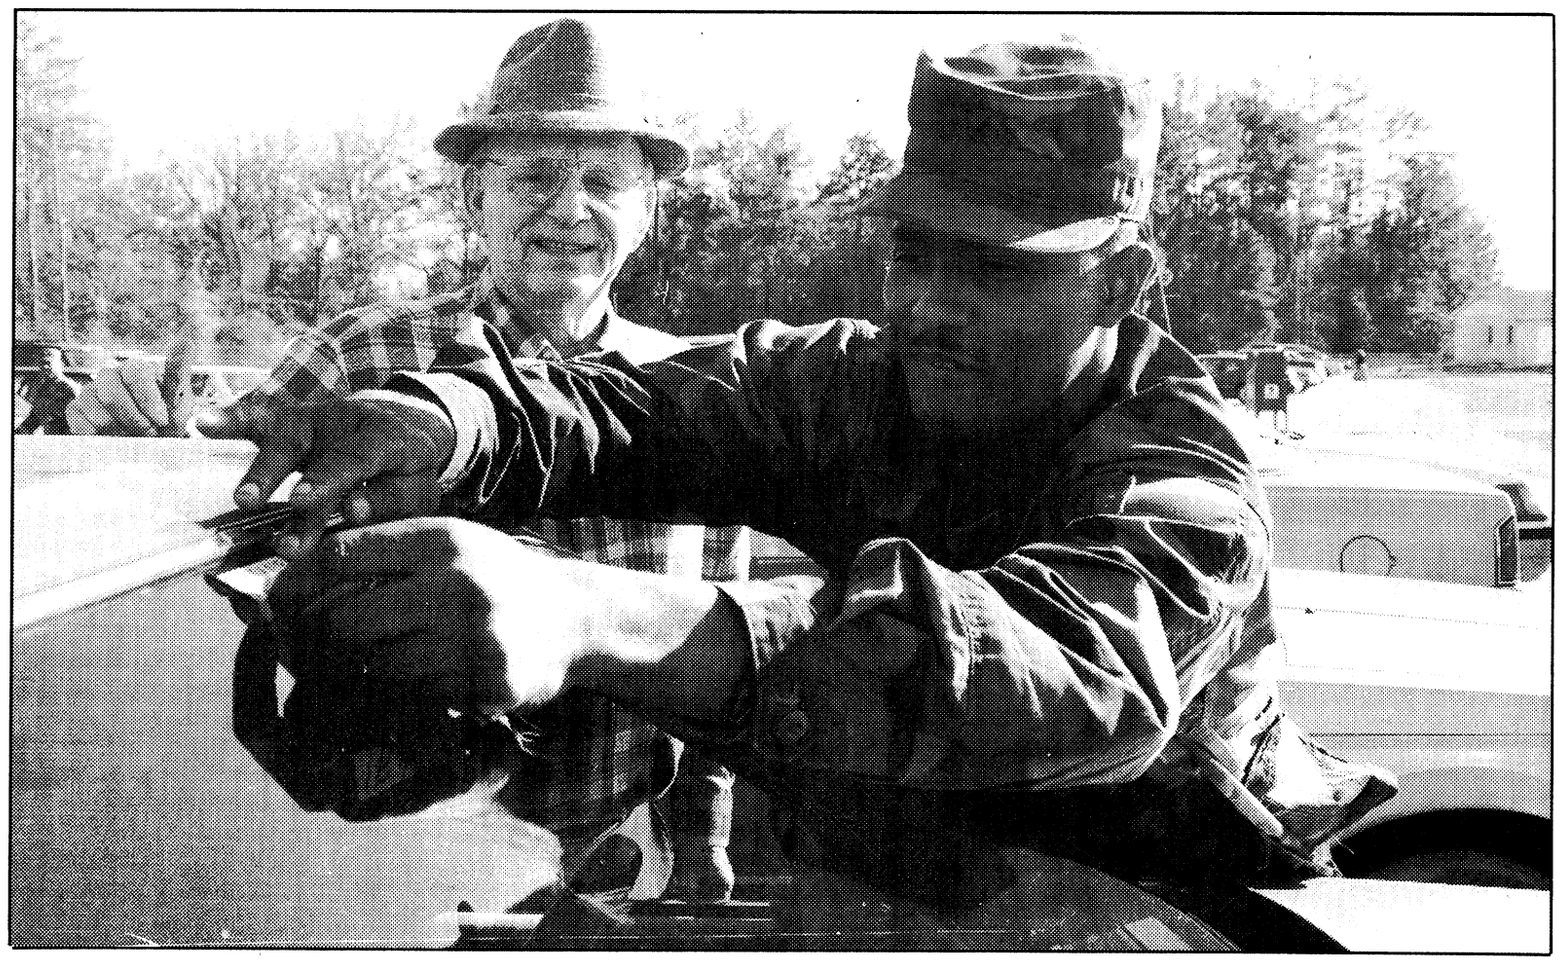
The Army is submitting a reduced budget for fiscal year 1992/93. The Army requests $71.3 billion in total obligation authority for FY 92 and $67.9 billion for FY 93.

The president's budget submission does not include the incremental costs of Operation Desert Storm and continues the declining budget trend that started in 1986.

The Army's buying power for FY 92 is 16 percent and FY 93's level is 23.1 percent lower than the buying power in FY 90.

The Army budget process was guided by six imperatives vital for the Army of the future. The Army will:

- Recruit and retain quality soldiers
- Provide tough, realistic training
- Provide competent, confident leaders
- Balance the proper mix of forces
- Provide for the continuous modernization of the force
- Be guided by the appropriate war-fighting doctrine.



The Army budget does not reflect the impact of Operation Desert Storm.

It does, however, reflect Army resource management decisions that are focused on capabilities for global readiness, shaping a smaller Army for the 1990s and beyond and supporting the Persian Gulf crisis.

The budget includes military and civilian pay raises of 4.2 percent in FY 92 and 4.7 percent in FY 93.

A reduction in force is forthcoming. A total of 90,400 less soldiers will be in the active Army by the end of FY 92.

A reduction in civilian personnel is also on the way with a reduction, by the end of FY 92, of 33,782.

Sticking to the rules

Sgt. Jerome Wilks of the Vehicle Registration Office places a Department of Defense decal on the car of retired Command Sgt. Maj. R. W. Ivey Sr. Vehicle registration is required at Fort Benning to maintain post driving privileges. Strict enforcement of registration is ongoing due to events in the Middle East and the terrorist threat created by Operation Desert Storm. A temporary registration site will be set up at the main Post Exchange Saturday.

Prayer breakfast focuses on peace

By Debra Galle
USAIC Chaplain's Office

"Eternal God, our Father. We, your children, seek your face. We ask you to bend down to hear us.

"We have words we need to speak in your ear. You must listen to your people praying."

Chaplain (Col.) Herman Keizer Jr., deputy director, Army Chaplaincy Services Support Agency, began a moving prayer for the more than 500 people who attended the Fort Benning Annual National Prayer Breakfast Tuesday at 6 a.m. at the NCO Club.

Maj. Gen. Carmen J. Cavezza, post commander, welcomed those who took time out of their early morning to gather as a community — bonded by a common faith.

"We have come to pray," said Keizer. "Prayer has become such a routine for us that we fail to see how audacious an enterprise prayer really is — how daring, rash and insolent. Yet prayer is at the invitation of God. We come with invited temerity."

Keizer reminded the audience that "God has given us a tutor — a drill sergeant to equip us for prayer." The mentor is the book of Psalms, he said.

In his prayer, Keizer focused on frustrations many share because of Operation Desert Storm. "O God, we are disappointed and disillusioned because we have lost the possibility for peace and have been brought once again to war," he said.

"Once again, you reminded us of the fragility of peace among nation states. Once again personal ambition was confused with national self-interest, and tyranny again occupied history's center stage. We know that our accusation of you is also a confession of a deep sorrow over our human condition. We continue to be humiliated by the power humans have to wreak havoc on one another and our world...

"We pray also for our enemies. We pray for President Saddam Hussein. We are not all of one mind about what we want you to do to him. Some of us want him dead; some want him disgraced. You have the power to touch his heart. We pray that you will haunt him with the spirit and power of those he claims as his heros. Make the sanity of the once crazed Nebuchadnezzar...reduce Saddam Hussein to repentance and shame. O God, with you his conversion is possible."

Music also filled the morning, including Lee Greenwood's "God Bless the USA," sung by soloist Cheryl Anderson.

Chaplain (Lt. Col.) Donald Taylor said he thought the prayers by Chaplain (Col.) George Gudz, post chaplain, and Sgt. 1st Class Walter Holloway were uplifting and focused upon guiding our leaders, protecting our soldiers, and caring for family members.

"It made me feel good to see that so many field grade officers took time out to attend a prayer breakfast," said Specialist Elizabeth Long, 70th Training Division chaplain's assistant. "This was the first time I had been to a prayer breakfast, and I felt inspired when I left."

A final prayer was given by Keizer before everyone returned to their regular duties:

"Father, we dare to pray for peace.

O God of love, O king of peace,
Make wars throughout the world to cease.
The wrath of sinful men restrain,
Give peace, O God; give peace again.

Deployments affect post's crime rate

By James C. Rupp
Bayonet staff writer

Despite the deployment of so many soldiers from Fort Benning, post officials said crime rates are no higher than can be expected in these circumstances.

Maj. David Buzzell, operations officer for the post Military Police, said although there has been a rise in property loss on the post, such an increase is to be expected when there are so many people coming and going.

As deployment for Desert Storm brings reservists and national guardsmen and deployed active Army components, personal property is often lost track of and items become "targets of opportunity".

According to Buzzell, there has been an increase in "crimes against property," or property damaged during the course of a theft or other activity, over the past six months. However, that is not to be confused with vandalism, Buzzell said, which he defined as "the wanton destruction of property for no apparent reason."

Buzzell gave these tips on how individuals can prevent becoming victim to these crimes:

- Do not leave personal vehicles unattended in dark, solitary places; but rather leave them in well lit parking areas with other cars and where plenty of passers-by can see them.
- Make sure living quarters are secured at all times
- If living quarters need to be left for extended periods of time, leave lights on both inside and outside, giving the appearance of occupation
- When leaving quarters, notify the MPs so they can provide courtesy quarter checks and security
- Engrave high value items with identification numbers. Engravers can often be checked out from company orderly rooms
- Make an inventory of high-value items; this aids in recovery should an item be stolen
- Register bicycles with the MP bicycle registration program.

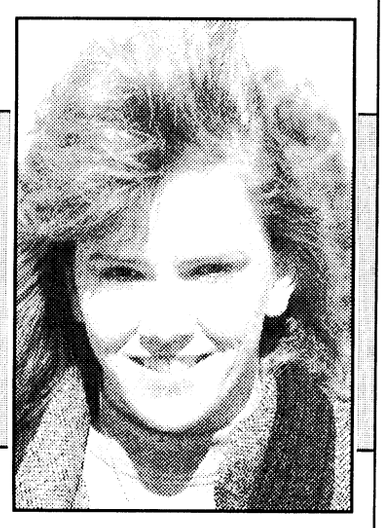
Benning CID recovers more stolen property

By Brian C. Sutton
Bayonet staff writer

The post Criminal Investigation Division recovered more stolen property recently that was linked to a spree of juvenile thefts in November.

According to officials, seven youths from the McGraw Manor housing area were apprehended in the case.

Property recovered in the last few months includes electronic equipment, car stereos, video cassette recorders, and televisions. Other property, such as jewelry and bedding, were also recovered.



CID officials say there was a total of 19 victims in the alleged "crime ring" that was stopped November 6 and 7.

Some recovered property is still waiting to be identified and claimed by its lawful owners.

COMMENTARY

Military analysts lack credibility

By Clyde Snively
USAIC Public Affairs Office

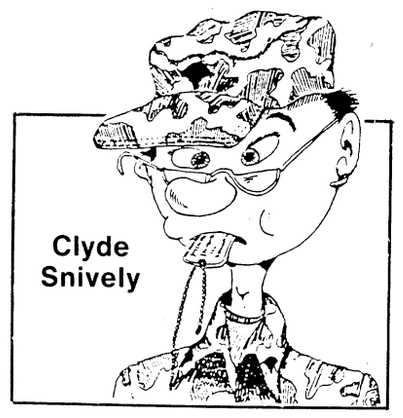
Has anyone sat still long enough to listen to the military analysts? These so-called experts have about as much credibility as a fortune teller. They make the Jeanne Dixons of the world look good.

Doesn't seem to be any prerequisites for the job, although having been a colonel or general seems to lend credibility if not ability.

I'm thinking I could become an analyst. Change my name to Col. Beauregarde Snively, and hire out my brain. Be a good way to pick up some loose pocket change. Maybe I could get on CBS.

"Tell me, Colonel Beauregarde Snively, this activity on the part of the Iraqis near the border. What do you think it means?"

"Well, Dan, it could mean several things. It could mean the Iraqis are getting ready to launch a major attack against our troops. But then again, it might mean he'll set up a diversion and attack elsewhere or nowhere. It could also mean it's time to change sheets in the underground bunkers in an attempt to get rid of the lice."



"What's your best estimate on the reason for the aircraft being flown to Iran?"

"Well, Dan, it could mean several things. It could mean the Iraqis are tired of having their aircraft smashed to smithereens so they're seeking haven in Iran, figuring once the war is over, they'll still be around for another war against someone else at a later day. Or, it might mean the pilots don't want to be in Iraq any longer and this is the fastest route out of Dodge. Or, it could mean Iraq reached a deal with Iran. Iraq provides the aircraft to Iran and Iran then uses the planes to bomb Qatar fishing boats."

"How much longer do you think this air war will last before we finally launch a ground attack?"

"Well, Dan, I think we'll launch a ground attack on February 12 when we have a new moon and the tides are high. But then again, Saddam might be thinking the same thing and try to preempt us. Or, we might be thinking that Saddam is thinking that and decide to preempt his preemption. But I can tell you that we'll launch the ground attack as soon as our troops cross the line in the sand."

"Do you think the Iraqis will use chemical weapons?"

"Well, Dan, I think they could. But they might not. It really depends on several factors, the big IF being weather — you know, weather or not they have the capability."

"Based on your long years in the military and familiarity with the American fighting soldier, what do you think his biggest obstacle will be in waging war?"

"Well, Dan, no obstacle is too great for our guys. I can tell you this though, those guys aren't going to like it when the war is over and the sergeants line them up for police call."

"Looking to the future, do you see any major adjustments for the soldiers when they return home?"

"Well, wrenching the check book or car away from the stay-behind spouse might be difficult, but the big thing they'll need to be most careful about is, after seven or eight months of drying out, their bodies' tolerance to alcohol will be at an all time low, so that one beer might really knock them on their butts."

"Thank you for your insightful answers Mr. Snively. I'm sure they'll prove most helpful to our people trying to understand what the military briefers are telling us. I do have one last question. What is your opinion of other analysts?"

"Well, Dan, we all put on our pants one leg at a time. We just need to watch so we don't get wrapped around the axle as we try and penetrate the whole ball of wax. You see if you get down in the weeds too far with your permutations and commutations, the people will never understand you. I, of course would never do that.

"But I can tell you this, if I ever meet the analyst who sits smugly in his living room chair after a fierce battle and says, 'those boys died needlessly, they didn't need to go in there and take that town,' I'll personally choke him to death if the parents of the dead soldiers don't get to him first."

Help prevent the killing of unwanted pets

By Christina Beck

Every year thousands of unwanted dogs and cats are put to sleep in animal shelters after remaining unclaimed by new owners.

Many are pets left behind when people decided to move on or are the result of unwanted litters of kittens and dogs.

This needless killing could be prevented if pet owners would educate themselves better about caring for their animals. Many people simply do not know there is a simple way of preventing pet pregnancies.

Spaying a female dog or cat is considered one of the most reliable procedures in preventing pet overpopulation. If a pet has reached the age of six to nine months, if is old enough and physically developed enough to be spayed.

Aside from eliminating the problem of unwanted litters, spaying a pet also prevents the messy heat cycle and attraction of male dogs or cats.

Neutering the male dog or cat is a relatively simple and quick procedure. Besides preventing reproduction, this helps prevent urine spraying by male cats.

If you decide to let your pet have one litter, make sure good homes will be available before they are born.

Many stray dogs and cats are loose on the streets because their owners could not afford to pay for the pet's food or simply decided caring for the pet was too much trouble.

Most animal shelters make a point of impressing upon a pet owners the responsibility of caring for a pet. Despite that, thousands of unwanted, neglected and abused animals end up in shelters after being left behind or abandoned by former owners.

Help prevent that from happening by being a responsible and caring friend to your pet.

Editor's note: Beck volunteers for an Army veterinary clinic.

LETTER

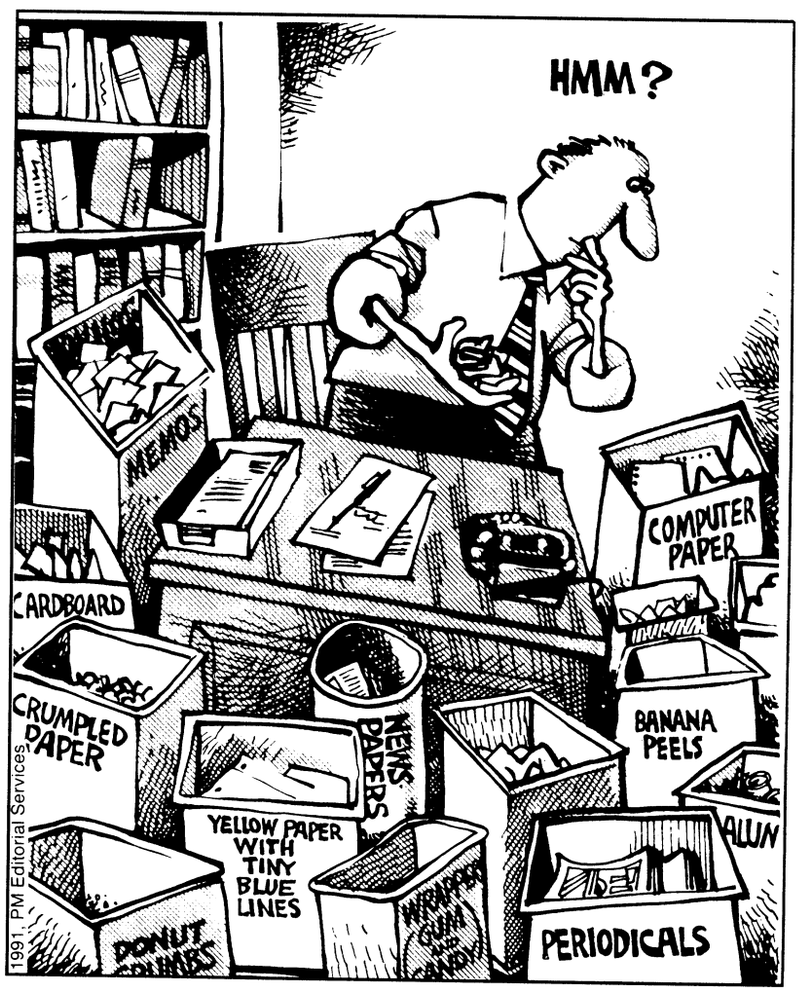
533rd, 361st doing OK

The soldiers of the 533rd and 361st would like to wish everyone back at Fort Benning and their family members a "Happy New Year." We know this is the year we are going to return to our loved ones.

We celebrated the incoming new year with party horns and rattles. It was a dry celebration, but our spirits were high.

We are still working hard. We have delivered six million gallons of water and more than 40 million pounds of cargo, and we have driven more than 500,000 miles in accomplishing these tasks, with minimal problems.

The weather seems to be unpredictable lately. It's rather chilly in the mornings and by the middle of the afternoon, it'll be raining followed by sunshine in the evenings. Fortunately so far, we haven't had a hard rain, just sprinkles along with some gusty winds.



All of the soldiers are doing fine. A few of them have come down with colds due to the change in weather, but other than, all is well.

We have videotaped scenes of our work place and daily events and some soldiers being promoted. We mailed this out this morning, and all spouses are encouraged to make arrangements to view it.

All the soldiers are scattered across Saudi Arabia, supporting units as far apart as 750 miles. Platoon sergeants are doing exceptional accounting for soldiers and ensuring they are "well taken care of."

As always, you are in our hearts and minds, and we look forward to our trip home. Until then, we are and will remain, "Lost in Saudi," lost without our families whom we miss a great deal.

When Europeans arrived in what is now Paraguay in the early 16th century, they encountered various groups of semisedentary and nonsedentary indigenous peoples. As was always the case, the Spanish found it easier to establish relations with agriculturally based Indians. They therefore entered into alliances with the Tupian semisedentary Guarani against the nomadic Guaycuru Indians in the west of the region. Asuncion, founded in 1537, soon became little more than a Spanish defense outpost against the Portuguese and a trading stopover between the silver mines of Potosi and Buenos Aires.

The political elite of Asuncion deposed Spanish authority in 1811, and Paraguayan independence was declared in 1813.

In the late 1860s, landlocked Paraguay warred against Argentina, Brazil, and Uruguay and lost almost half of its male population. Exhausting effects of the fighting, dependence on subsistence farming, remoteness from external markets, and political instability slowed economic development for generations.

In the past 20 years the nation has invested in basic modernization and begun to exploit its enormous hydroelectric potential on the Parana River, in cooperation with Brazil and Argentina.

In 1989 Gen. Andres Rodriguez overthrew Gen. Alfredo Stroessner who had held power since 1954.

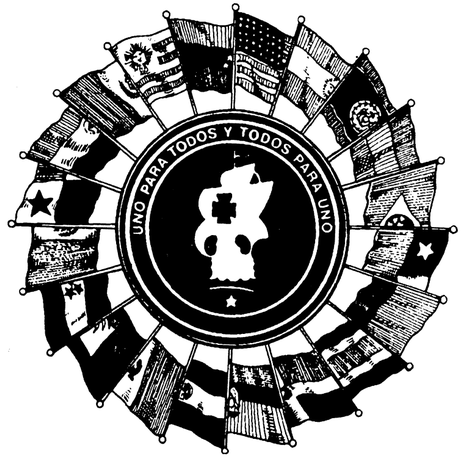
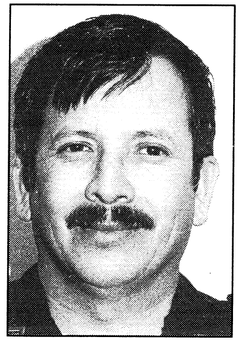
Heir to the far-flung civilizations of the Olmecs, Maya, and Aztecs, the nation still looms large in hemispheric affairs. Newfound oil in an energy-conscious time lends even greater influence to this largest Spanish-speaking country in the world.

Next-door neighbor to the United States, Mexico strives to follow an independent course. Yet the destinies of the two nations remain tied by virtue of geography, economics, and Mexico's explosive population growth, which finds a safety valve in emigration, both legal and illegal, to the north. An estimated million Mexicans enter the U.S. each year, behind them are millions more. An annual growth rate only recently fallen below 3 percent will see some 100 million Mexicans by the year 2000.

Agrarian reform, earlier in this century, eliminated the large haciendas and distributed land to individuals and rural communities, providing a model for all Latin America. During the 1950s Mexico pioneered the green revolution, and the nation was self-sufficient in wheat and corn until recently. Today the countryside spills the unemployed into overcrowded cities, epitomized by Mexico City, whose population has almost doubled in ten years.

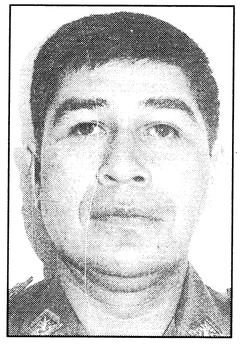


Projected population for Mexico City in the year 2000 is 25.82 million which would make it the largest city in the world.



Despite overcrowding, Mexico's economy has achieced considerable modernization. In Veracruz and Tabasco states, enormous government-owned petrochemical complexes draw on proven oil and natural-gas reserves of 60 billion barrels, a resource Mexico estimates may reach 250 billion barrels. The oil boom has triggered nationwide construction of improved roads and rail, pipe, and power lines.

The nation leads the world in production of silver, flourite, and strontium, and mines half of the 48 major nonmetallic minerals. Exports consist primarily of raw materials to the United States, and imports are finished products and food, primarily from the United States. Tourism helps ease the drain on foreign reserves.



The Mexican Revolution-started in 1910 to correct inequities, principally of landownership-has today become institutionalized in what amounts to one-party government.

Lt. Gen. Leonard P. Wishart speaks to students at the School of the Americas' Command and General Staff College course.

Speakers satisfy 'thirst for knowledge'

by Keith F. Johnson
U.S. Army School of the Americas

The U.S. Army School of the Americas' Command and General Staff College course began with a visit from Lt. Gen. Leonard P. Wishart III Jan. 24 in building 359 at Fort Benning.

Wishart, commanding general at the U.S. Army Combined Arms Center and commandant of the U.S. Army Command and General Staff College at Fort Leavenworth, was the first of 15 to 20 guest speakers tentatively planned for the course this year.

Previous guest speakers have included Gen. Maxwell R. Thurman, while serving as commanding general of the U.S. Army Training and Doctrine Command; Maj. Gen. Bernard Loeffke, commanding general of U.S. Army South, as well as many U.S. ambassadors to Latin American countries including 13 last year.

Wishart was chosen to speak first because the SOA CGSC course is patterned after the course of the same name at Fort Leavenworth.

"He came to lay the groundwork for the course," said Maj. William E. Acker, CGSC course director.

Wishart implored the students to obtain a "thirst for knowledge" to learn everything they can while in the course. He stressed the importance of using the instructors as "sounding boards" and for the students to "debate, challenge and learn."

According to Acker, the guest speaker program is important to the students because it allows them to hear from people who are considered experts in their field and speak to the students about a subject that coincides with what is currently being taught in the classroom.

"The guest speaker will give a lecture that conveys information and hopefully raises questions in the students minds and then a question/answer period occurs between the students and the speaker," Acker explained.

The CGSC course prepares officers of all services for duty as field grade commanders and as principal staff officers at brigade and division level in their armed forces. The course awards Military Education Level 4 to U.S. Armed Forces officer graduates.

"We try to model what we have here to what they have at Fort Leavenworth," Acker said.

"In some areas we provide more information because we fit the needs of not only the U.S. but also the Latin American students in the course."

School to host free press forum

by Keith F. Johnson
U.S. Army School of the Americas

The U.S. Army School of the Americas' Command and General Staff College course will be hosting its fourth "Media Roundtable" Feb. 14 in building 359 at Fort Benning.

The Media Roundtable consists of at least four media representatives who individually present their views on a certain subject and then discuss the subject and answer questions from the students in the class. The 39 students in the class are officers of all services from 16 Latin American countries and the United States.

The media representatives currently scheduled to participate are Paul Timm of the Columbus Ledger-Enquirer and Clara E. Germani of the Christian Science Monitor.

Previous media representatives have included Elliot Minor of the Associated Press, Gary Abramson of the Atlanta Journal-Constitution, and Don Podesta of the Washington Post.

This year's subject is "Freedom of the Press in a democratic society," according to Maj. Orlando L. Rivera, chief of the School's Department of Joint and Combined Operations Leadership Division.

"We want to expose the students to our system of free press, not from a military perspective but from a civilian perspective," Rivera said. "That adds credibility to our system."

"It shows that in a democratic society we allow the press to write what they want to write, when they want to write it."

Rivera explained there are some countries in Central and South America that are currently experiencing democratization and for the first time are building a system of free press.

"The Media Roundtable gives students a chance to listen to media representatives explain their ideas about free press and then ask questions," Rivera said.

In addition to the Media Roundtable, the CGSC students will receive a media relations course Feb. 12-13. The course teaches the students how the military relates to the media and will be taught by Capt. Rick Spearman and Daniel J. Snyder of Defense Information Services at Fort Benjamin Harrison, Ind.

SOA names Instructors of Year

by Keith F. Johnson
U.S. Army School of the Americas

The U.S. Army School of the Americas' Instructors of the Year are Capt. Humberto Oviedo and Sgt. 1st Class Ubiel A. Valencia.

Oviedo, a guest instructor from Chile with the School's Department of Special Operations/Low-intensity Conflict Special Operations Division, began his military career in a military school at the age of 15. He received his commission eight years later and has served in the service of his country for 13 years, the last two at SOA.

Oviedo has completed the Airborne course at Fort Benning as well as commando and scuba diver courses and has instructed at the Military Academy and Infantry School in Chile.

At SOA, he teaches patrolling and riverine operations, taking part in every aquatic instruction. He has been a course director of both the School's Commando course and Counter-narcotics course.

Oviedo cited several reasons why he feels he won the Instructor of the Year award.

"It's not only one thing," Oviedo said, "to win I had to do well in several areas such as properly organizing a lesson plan, teaching and communicating with the students and participating in field exercises."

Oviedo, who will return to Chile the end of February, said he was fortunate to have the opportunity to be a guest instructor at SOA.

"I have improved as a teacher while here," Oviedo said. "The School is a great opportunity for people from the United States and Latin America to see different methodologies and doctrine from many countries."

"It has also been a good opportunity to observe how other people teach and improve my teaching style from that."

Oviedo said his next goal is to attend his country's War College, which lasts three years with instruction in all military history, world geography of all countries, intelligence operations and logistics. After completion of the course, he will be able to fill field-grade staff positions.

Both Oviedo and Valencia won Instructor of the Quarter for the third quarter 1990 and were then named Instructors of the Year during the fourth quarter 1990.

The award program is part of the School's Instructor Recognition Program. The program acknowledges the exemplary performance of instructors and is officially sanctioned by the U.S. Army Training and Doctrine Command.

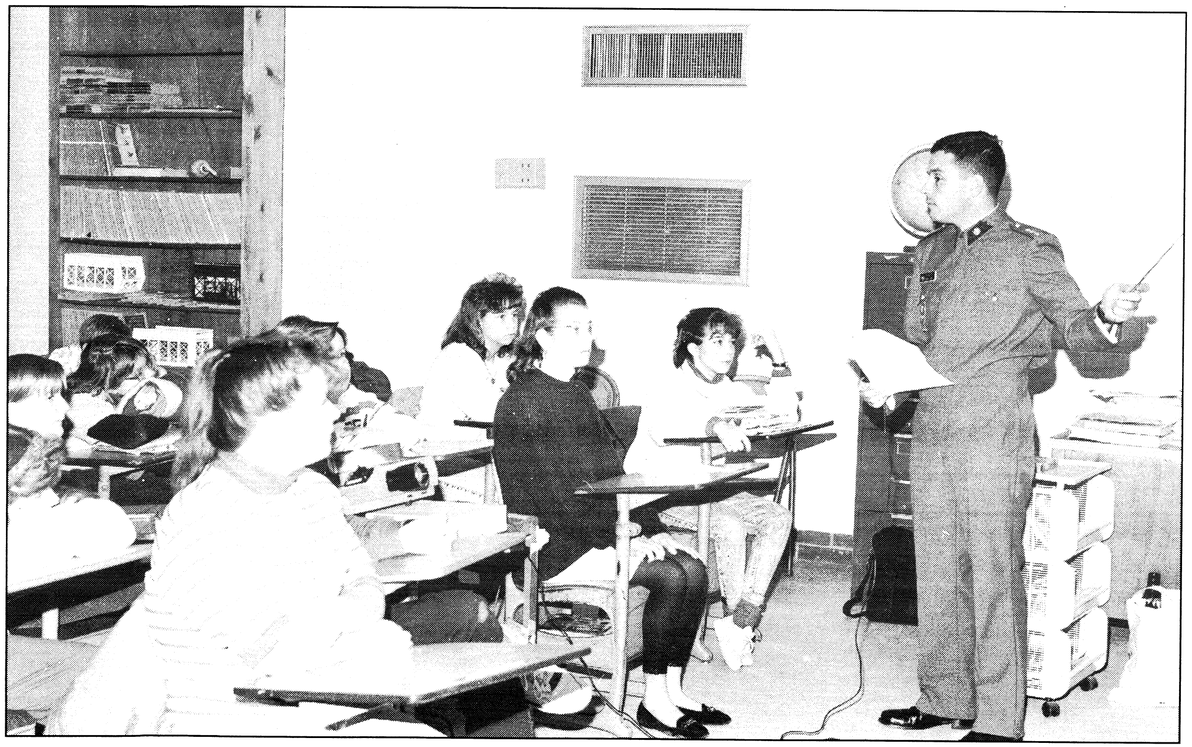
Each quarter one officer and one non-commissioned officer are chosen as Instructors of the Quarter. The three training departments in the School submit nominations to the School's Staff and Faculty Development Division (SFDD). SFDD personnel then evaluate each candidate on the basis of their skills as an instructor which include proper use of training aids, communication skills, organization of lesson plans as well as military bearing and oral delivery.

After the evaluations are complete, the instructor who received the most points on his evaluation is selected as the winner. Winners of the first three quarters then compete for Instructor of the Year.

The program began in 1987 under the direction of Cheryl Watters, SFDD director.

"It seemed like we were focusing too much on the negative," Watters said. "I felt like we needed a more positive focus, pat the people on the back when they do a good job and motivate them."

Valencia said the program has motivated him to improve as an instructor.



"The program is necessary," Valencia said. "It is a morale booster, people enjoy being challenged. It makes the instructor continually look for ways to improve because he knows the next guy is trying to do better."

Valencia, a combat engineer, has served in the U.S. Army for over 18 years.

"There are many things we learn while serving in the army," Valencia said. "Some things you can't learn in books. Now, I enjoy sharing that knowledge and experience and I believe in what I teach."

Valencia noted it is very important for the instructor to be knowledgeable about the subject matter he teaches because at the School students can see the same instructor for as much as 20 hours of class, which makes it more of a challenge to maintain students interest and attention levels high.

"The best way to improve is to listen to the students," Valencia said. "They are honest with their comments and I tell them I don't have the market on ideas so let me know how I can improve and make my class more interesting."

Course teaches teachers

by Keith F. Johnson
U.S. Army School of the Americas

Among the 26 courses offered by the U.S. Army School of the Americas, such as the Psychological Operations course, Sniper course and Battle Staff Operations course, is one that does not deal with military knowledge but is essential to the success of every course in the School.

Each new military instructor assigned to the School, whether U.S. or Latin American, officer or non-commissioned officer, must complete this course before he is allowed to teach a block of instruction.

The course is the School's Instructor Training Course. It is designed to train students in the theory and practice of the concepts, methods, techniques and technology of performance-oriented teaching. The course consists of two weeks of programmed, performance-oriented instruction on how to develop, prepare, present and evaluate training in a service school.

"A person can be an expert in his field but may not have good communication techniques," said Cheryl Watters, director of the School's Staff and Faculty Development Division. "Being a subject-matter expert is only part of the battle. Aside from knowing your subject you must be able to communicate your ideas effectively."

Watters added that the course has been so effective that it now includes students who are not instructors in the School but will return to their countries to teach what they learned while here.

She explained that El Salvador now has a policy of letting the top three students of a course remain at the School an additional two weeks so they can complete the Instructor Training Course and return home better prepared to share what they have learned with others.

The number of students in the course jumped from 67 in 1987 to 275 in 1988 with roughly the same projected for this year.

Watters said the course has helped to standardize the curriculum taught at the School. With instructors coming from 17 different countries for a period of about two years, uniformity is needed in the creations of blocks of instruction. A new instructor, having completed the Instructor Training Course, understands how lesson plans were created and can use materials previously prepared and continue to adapt the instruction to meet the needs of the students.

70th Div. Reservists serving tour at Benning

By Bruce A. Dobbs
70th Division Public Affairs Office

In support of Operation Desert Storm, 1,423 members of the 70th Div. (Tng) have been mobilized for up to one year.

The call for a tour of duty at Fort Benning was sent out Jan. 22 to the 3rd Brigade, with units located in Muncie, Ind., Fort Wayne, Ind., and Grissom Air Force Base, Ind., the 5089th Reception Battalion, Saginaw, Mich., and the Training Group located in Fraser, Mich., and Richmond, Ind.

In addition, the headquarters of 1st Brigade, Inkster, Mich., was activated Jan. 25. Obviously, the Reservists' lives in these units have changed dramatically.

Sacrifices have been made by these men and women: many had to leave children and spouses behind. Also, college and civilian careers may have been affected.

Master Sgt. Robert Morrison, 3rd Bde., recently retired from the Fort Wayne Police Department. He was ready to relax and enjoy retirement from his full-time civilian job when he was suddenly called for active duty.

"It was quite a shock to me and my wife," Morrison said. "However, I strongly believe in what we're doing. Our services are needed and we have a mission that needs to be performed."

"Everything came together as good as can be expected," Morrison said. "Nobody has balked or complained. The leadership and military bearing of our people came out immediately. Things have gone extremely smooth, considering the circumstances.

"My main concern is that my family is taken care of. The 70th made family support a priority, so family members of 70th Div. Reservists, with the help of the unit, are getting together and helping each other out.

"If I'm here a year, I'm here a year. We're going to do what we've been trained to do. Taking that first step of moving down here is the hardest; everything after that is easy. Once we're settled in, we'll accomplish the mission we were sent here for."

"It's pretty hectic right now," Sgt. Ricky Joyce, 3rd Bde., said. "I knew mobilization was coming. I'd been keeping up with events in the Gulf so I expected it. Once the Iraqis had dug in, I knew they wouldn't leave Kuwait. I knew war was coming.

"We're going to be training IRR soldiers, possibly for combat duty in Saudi Arabia.

"That's one thing about the service; you have to be flexible. So, in the mean time, I'm just doing what I'm told and trying to keep my head up. As long as I can keep in touch with my family, it's not so bad."

"It feels great to be on active duty," Spec. Paul Donald, 5089th Reception Battalion said. "I was at home when I first found out about being mobilized. I was kind of expecting it, but it still hasn't fully sunk in.

"My family didn't take it too well at first. However, I've been in the military for 12 years, so they were aware of the possibility that I may someday be mobilized.

Although it was hectic for some of the 70th Div. troops while they were settling in at Fort Benning, most seemed anxious to get to work and complete the missions they'd been assigned in support of Operation Desert Storm.

Unit to conduct refresher training for IRR soldiers

By Rene A. Blatte and Bruce A. Dobbs
70th Division Public Affairs Office

The first four days for members of the activated 70th were, in short, hectic.

Receiving the notice to report for active duty, dealing with the in-processing and the long journey to Fort Benning and finally finding a home, was just a prelude to what was the most important element of their call to war.

Speaking to a standing-room-only crowd inside the theater near Kelley Hill, Col. Joseph W. Trez, Infantry Training Center commander, briefed the 70th's 3rd Brigade on what their mission would be.

"After Congress gave authorization for a partial mobilization of Reserve units, we determined the number of RT-12 (Refresher training for IRR students that have been away from active duty for 12-months or less) and other IRR soldiers that would be coming to Fort Benning for training," Trez said. "Based on the number of these additional soldiers coming to Fort Benning, we decided that we needed the 70th's help.

"We determined that we needed capacity for 20 additional companies which equates to four of the 70th's battalions and one of its brigade headquarters. We also realized we needed to take over Kelley Hill in order to handle this mission.

"In addition to that, I needed another brigade headquarters to take over the other six active component battalions that existed prior to this activation."

Trez added that 1st Bde. Headquarters of the 70th Division will fulfill this need.

"It's important to understand what we've been doing here at ITC during the month of January. The Department of the Army had brought us IRR soldiers of all MOSs. Individuals of all ranks, some of which haven't put on uniforms since the Korean War, came rolling into Fort Benning the second week of January.

"These soldiers were trained in combat survival skills and weapons qualification," he continued. "There was especially a need for truck drivers in Saudi Arabia. Most of them have shipped out already to the Middle East.

Trez emphasized that the mission of the 70th at Fort Benning will be intense and very important. "The kind of training the RT-12 soldiers will receive during the 16-day training period will involve nuclear, biological and chemical training, infantry tactical training, map reading and other MOS refresher training.

"After they've completed this training, these soldiers will be shipped out to posts around the United States and overseas to replace troops who will go to Saudi Arabia for the ground war," he said.

"The troops we've trained will then receive additional training at their new posts; if necessary they will then ship out to Saudi Arabia for combat."

Trez went on to say that once the RT-12 training is completed, additional IRR soldiers who have been out of the Army longer than a year, will begin a reclassification process.

"The individuals we receive for training are former infantry soldiers of all ranks and skill levels. Some will have been out of uniform for a long time. The amount of time they have before going into combat depends on when ground combat begins and the length and intensity of it.

"So what each and everyone of us has to understand is that we are training infantrymen who will probably in a very short-time be engaged in combat. This training is a very serious task that we all have."

As IRR soldiers arrive at Fort Benning for refresher training, the first military personnel they greet could be members of the 70th Division's 5089th Reception Battalion.

"Our job is to receive into the Army IRR soldiers that have been mobilized," Lt. Col. David Herring, 5089th Reception Battalion commander said. "So as such, we are the first military personnel that they see when they get off the bus and report to Fort Benning. So, the image that we present and the way we treat them can really set the stage for what happens to them for the rest of their time at Fort Benning and beyond that.

"It's very important that we present a professional appearance and atmosphere, and also one that is efficient yet compassionate. We have to keep in mind what their going through mentally, which is similar to what we went through, only perhaps it's worse for them because they do know where their ultimately going. So, the way we treat them is very important."

Once the soldier has completed in-processing at the reception battalion, his next step is to begin training for possible combat in Operation Desert Storm. Men and women of the 70th's recently mobilized Training Support Group will help conduct this training.

"Our main mission is to conduct the 13-week initial entry One Station Unit Training in the '11' series of MOS fields," Master Sgt. David McCright, Training Support Bde's. operations NCO said. "We will also be supporting the training of IRR soldiers in the RT-12 program.

"Starting out, we'll be introducing troops in subjects like first aid, NBC, tactical communications and land navigation, etc.

"Next, we'll begin teaching BRM, individual and squad tactics and what we call special weapons."

5th Rgr. Tng. Battalion opens new commissary

The 5th Ranger Training Battalion opened its improved commissary Jan. 22 with a ribbon-cutting ceremony at Camp Frank D. Merrill at Dahlonega, Ga.

Originally, the building that now contains the commissary had housed both the camp's post exchange as well as the commissary.

The PX was moved to another section of the camp while the commissary, which had been closed for about three weeks, had been doubled in size to accommodate the growing needs of the post, according to Lt. Col. Jack Donovan, commander of the 5th Rgr.Tng. Bn.

Federal, state tax help available

By Agatha Hudson James
Bayonet editor

Federal and state tax assistance is available at Fort Benning for soldiers and family members.

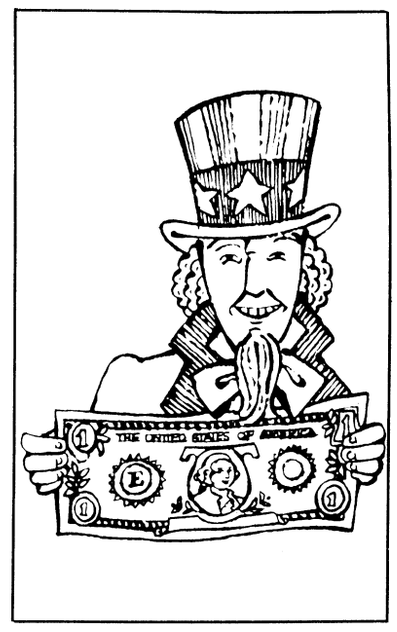
● The post's Tax Office opened Feb. 4 and is stocked with federal tax forms and some state tax forms. Operating hours will be from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. Monday through Friday, and the office is located in Building 5 (Office of the Staff Judge Advocate).

● Free assistance with tax form preparation by Legal Assistance Office personnel will be available at the Post Exchange at the mall Saturday from 9:30 a.m. to 1 p.m.

Jane Winand, a civilian attorney with the Office of the Staff Judge Advocate, said individuals are encouraged to bring their federal and state tax forms and booklets with them.

Also, individuals seeking assistance should bring all their paperwork, including W-2 forms and interest statements, Winand said .

● For soldiers on post needing assistance, each unit has a tax adviser, Winand said. "One soldier from each company is tasked to provide tax assistance," she said. "If a soldier needs to know who his unit tax adviser is, he should contact his first sergeant or unit commander."



● For Desert Shield family members, tax assistance will be available through the unit chain of concern.

Winand said changes in tax laws now require Social Security numbers for anyone 2 years old or older.

A certified copy of the birth certificate and some other identifying record such as school or shot records are needed at the time of application, she said.

● Also, the last day of filing — April 15 — tax helpers will be at the post office on main post from 6 p.m. to midnight.

For information, call 545-3281.

Your errors can delay tax refunds

American Forces Information Service

Taxpayer errors on income tax returns can add two or more weeks to the normal eight-week processing time, slowing down refund checks, say Internal Revenue Service officials.

More than 11 million 1989 federal income returns had taxpayer errors. Taxpayers should double check their returns and look for these common mistakes:

● Missing or incorrect Social Security number;

● Name incorrectly entered;

● Math error in computing taxes;

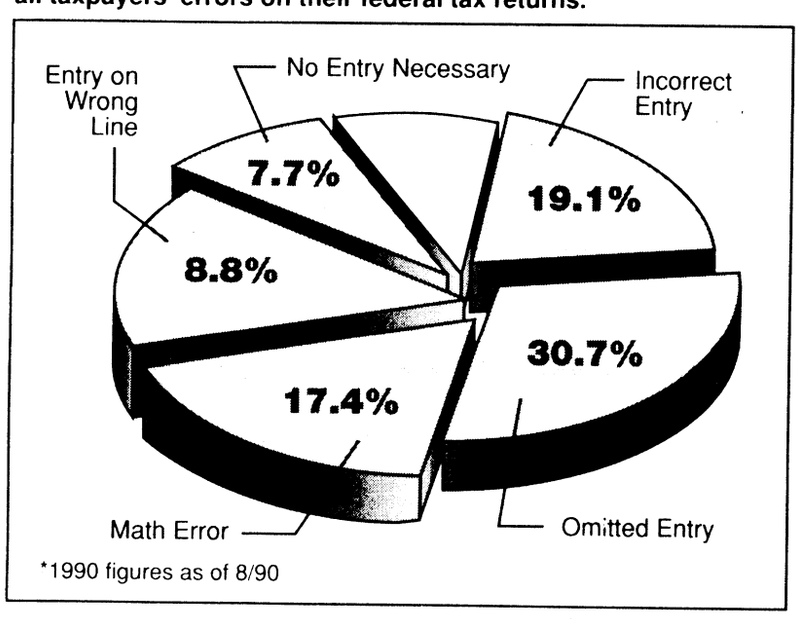
● Wrong tax form used;

● Missing Form W-2 or other supporting documents;

● Total tax not entered;

● Standard deduction not claimed;

● Earned income credit not claimed when entitled;



● Status boxes not checked;

● Tax form not signed;

● Wrong entry for estimated payments; and

● Duplicate return filed.

Five Most Common Taxpayer Errors
These five most common errors make up more than half of all taxpayers' errors on their federal tax returns.

House expenses can reduce taxes

American Forces Information Service

The expenses that go along with owning or selling a home can help cut income taxes. Deductions for some home improvement and repair bills, closing costs and mortgage insurance are just a few ways.

Internal Revenue Service officials stress taxpayers should be extremely careful when determining what they can and can't use as expenses.

For example, ordinary repairs and upkeep are not deductible, but work that is part of a remodeling project can be added to the owner's basis in the home. The basis is the owner's actual investment for tax purposes, officials explained.

Make sure that all requirements and restrictions are met for each deduction before taking it, officials said.

Some deductible homeowner expenses are:

● Closing costs — property taxes paid at settlement;

● Points — qualifying points if the loan is used to buy or improve the residence;

● Mortgage interest — qualifying mortgage interest as an itemized deduction on Schedule A; and

● Casualty and theft — some limited losses.

Most deductible expenses associated with selling a home are figured in with the tax on the gain from the sale.

These include advertising costs, loan charges and legal fees.

Paying tax on the gain from the house sale may be postponed if another house is bought within two years before or after the sale and the purchase price is at least as much as the adjusted sales price of the one sold.

Decorating and repairs done to sell the house cannot be deducted from the profit, but they may affect the amount of gain on which the tax is postponed.

Many IRS publications deal with owning a home and taxes. Some of these are:

IRS advises taxpayers not to lose refund

American Forces Information Service

Thousands of taxpayers filed their 1989 federal income tax returns and expected refunds totaling more than $40 million — but never received them.

The Postal Service returned most of these checks marked undeliverable to the Internal Revenue Service.

According to IRS officials, typical reasons for the return of checks included no forwarding address or an incorrect address on the income tax form.

Taxpayers who didn't receive refund checks last year but were expecting them have several options, said IRS officials.

These include filing IRS Form 3911, "Taxpayer Statement Regarding Refund," and writing the IRS service center where they filed them.

If an individual opts to write a letter to the IRS, he needs to include full name, Social Security number, tax year, old and new addresses, amount of expected refund and signature. If it was a joint return, the spouse's name, Social Security number and signature must also be included.

Keeping the IRS up to date with the correct mailing address is important, say officials, and not only to receive that refund check.

Bills or notices of tax deficiencies sent to a taxpayer's last known address are legally sufficient, whether actually received or not.

If the address on the preprinted mailing label on the 1990 tax return is wrong, correct the address on the label and attach it to the return. The IRS will make the necessary address changes when it receives the return.

Another way for a taxpayer to change the mailing address is to write to the IRS center where the last return was filed.

Information required by the IRS to make the change includes full name, signature, old and new addresses and Social Security number.

Filers of joint returns should provide the information for both spouses.

IRS Form 8822, "Change of Address," will provide the agency with the correct mailing address.

For copies of forms and other IRS publications, call (800) 829-3676.

Desert Storm tax questions

Army News Service

The signing of an Executive Order by President Bush on Jan. 21 changes the federal income taxes and filing dates for service members taking part in Operation Desert Storm.

Specific questions and answers concerning federal taxes and the designation of a combat zone include:

Q. What area is designated as the Operation Desert Storm combat zone?

A. White House officials said the following locations, including the airspace above: Persian Gulf, Red Sea, Gulf of Oman, Gulf of Aden, the portion of the Arabian Sea above 10 degrees north latitude and west of 68 degrees east longitude, and the total land areas of Iraq, Kuwait, Saudi Arabia, Oman, Bahrain, Qatar and the United Arab emirates.

Only individuals who are physically located in the combat zone are entitled to the federal tax filing extension and exemptions.

Q. What military pay is exempt?

A. For federal tax purposes, all military pay received by enlisted personnel after Jan. 17, 1991, while serving in the combat zone is exempt from income tax. For commissioned officers serving in the combat zone, the exclusion is limited to $500 a month.

The area was designated a "combat zone" effective Jan. 17.

Q. I've been in what's now the "combat zone" since August. Is my pay tax-free for all of that time? I'm an enlisted service member.

A. No. Only the portion earned after Jan. 17, 1991.

Q. What is the automatic extension period granted for filing federal income tax?

A. A service member has at least 180 days after leaving the Persian Gulf to file Federal Income tax returns for 1990, said Internal Revenue Service officials.

No forms need to be filed by the service member or family member to receive the filing extension granted under the Executive Order signed by the president on Jan. 21.

Q. If family members have questions concerning Operation Desert Storm and federal income taxes, who should they contact?

A. IRS officials said information is available by calling the IRS, toll free, (800)829-1040, or through local installation tax officers. Individuals located overseas can check with the local embassy or consulate, installation tax officer or the IRS International Tax Assistance Office at (202) 287-4301.

Q. What about state taxes?
A. It depends on the state.

Accident victims remain in hospital

By James C. Rupp
Bayonet staff writer

Several soldiers remain hospitalized following the Jan. 28 bus wreck on post that claimed the life of Pfc. Toby J.K.P Young, 19, of the 75th Ranger Regiment.

According to Jeanne Dickerson, patient affairs liaison for Martin Army Community Hospital, one soldier has been sent to Fort Gordon, another is still being treated for head injuries at the Medical Center in Columbus, and a third is being cared for at MACH.

Also, two other soldiers are under the care of MACH, one with a broken left arm and suffering from multiple lacerations and the other with a fractured right arm.

Initially, nine soldiers injured in the wreck were admitted to the hospital, but seven of those were treated for minor injuries and released, and one was placed on convalescent leave, Dickerson said.

At the time of the accident, the soldiers were being taken to a training site in the northeast section of the post.

The cause of the accident is still under investigation.

Security restrictions limit mail bound for Mideast

Army News Service

WASHINGTON — Although new security restrictions have been placed on mail from the Persian Gulf area to the United States, U.S. military postal officials say this should eventually speed the flow of mail rather than delay it.

Mail from soldiers in southwest Asia is now limited to letter mail of 11 ounces or less that can pass through mail machines. Officials from the Military Postal Service Agency say this restriction should move mail through security checks more quickly.

Outgoing package mail from the Persian Gulf, now prohibited for military personnel, is subject to customs and Federal Aviation Administration-mandated searches for contraband.

This, say military postal officials, slowed the flow of all mail from the area to addresses in the United States.

Other recent mail announcements include:

- Outgoing mail from service members in the Persian Gulf is not subject to censorship. Officials say current law protects the privacy of mail once it enters the postal system.
- Mail addressed to service members who become casualties is neither returned nor forwarded until the service members' next of kin are notified. Once notification has been confirmed, the mail will be forwarded or returned.
- Central Command officials are still asking that mail for service members in the Persian Gulf be limited to first-class letter mail and audio cassettes only.

The voluntary restriction will allow CENTCOM to avoid clogging its transportation systems with mail awaiting delivery.

Postal officials say mail for Desert Storm participants is averaging 325,000 pounds daily.

Desert Storm soldiers to get interest on military pay

Army News Service

WASHINGTON — The Department of Defense has announced the implementation of a new savings program that will earn Desert Storm members 10 percent interest on all or part of their unallotted monthly pay and allowances back to Jan. 1.

The program allows recipients of imminent danger pay to earn quarterly compounded interest on unallotted pay and allowances up to $10,000. Any amount greater than $10,000 earns no interest.

January's unallotted pay and allowances may be deposited in February along with unallotted pay and allowances for February.

However, if authorized members make their savings deposits after Feb. 10, interest is earned from the first of the following month, instead of from Feb. 1.

Eligible members may open an account by making a cash or check deposit, or by establishing an allotment to the savings deposit program with their respective service disbursing/finance officer.

Hospital nurses celebrate corps' birthday

By James C. Rupp
Bayonet staff writer

Nurses at Martin Army Community Hospital celebrated the Army Nurse Corps' birthday Friday.

The ceremony marked the corps' 90th year and was dedicated to all nurses, past and present, and particularly to those serving in Operation Desert Storm, according to Lt. Col. Magnolia Perry.

The celebration began with an invocation by Maj. James Rayburn, which was followed by the Prayer of an Army Nurse, read by 1st Lt. Maurenne Griese. 1st Lt. Ruby Savoy then led the group in a round of the Army Nurse Corps Song.

Capping off the birthday festivities was a cake cutting by the senior and junior nurses.

Red Cross provides significant services

By Alyanna B. Clay-Heard
Bayonet staff writer

Emergency communications. Disaster assistance. Blood donations. Financial assistance.

These are only a few of the significant services performed by the American Red Cross.

While the more than 250 million paid and volunteer staff members provide relief and assistance worldwide, the bond between the Red Cross and the military has always been a special and necessary one.

The mission of the Red Cross with regard to military personnel and their recognized dependents is to support and supplement those activities of the military that affect the health, welfare and morale of service members and their families.

This mission is furthermore fully authorized by Congress by Public Law 131, 83rd Congress, the Department of Defense through DoD directive 1330.5, and by various branches of the military through Army Regulation 930-5, Air Force Regulation 211-11, and SECNAV Instruction 5760.1C.

The services of the Red Cross are necessary at all times, but during times of crisis and war, the need for the Red Cross'provisions are critical to service members and their families alike.

Often, the Red Cross' emergency communications system are the sole link between a service member serving in combat and their family in emergency situations.

With the onset of Operation Desert Storm, the role of the Red Cross has taken on even more importance — especially on Fort Benning, where 6,000 troops have been deployed in support of Operation Desert Storm.

According to Sandy Chambers, interim station manager of the American Red Cross, Fort Benning branch, the role of the Red Cross has not changed — just intensified.

"We've been providing our usual services, such as consultation and guidance, information and referral, reporting emergencies, assistance with communications, emergency financial assistance, and blood drives," said Chambers.

As well as keeping things together on the home front, members of the Fort Benning Red Cross station have also gone to Saudi Arabia to provide assistance to troops participating in Operation Desert Storm, said Chambers.

"Linda Scorgie, our station manager, and Dave Deleon, assistant station manager, have deployed to Saudi Arabia where their mission will be to provide emergency communications for soldiers to family members in a crisis situation," said Chambers. "As soon as we are able to find a person to manage the station, I will be leaving for Saudi also."

The Red Cross has many other services available for military personnel and their families. For more information, contact the Fort Benning Red Cross station at 545-5149.

Army issues update on mail for Persian Gulf area

Army News Service

Many family members have expressed concerns from soldiers and their families about the efficiency and timeliness of postal operations in support of Operation Desert Storm.

The following information is from Headquarters Army Central and military postal authorities in the United States:

Military postal units in Southwest Asia work seven days per week, 24 hours per day.

This "round the clock" operation moves more than 300 tons of mail per day.

There is no dedicated transportation for mail movement. Vehicles are drawn from theater assets or from the receiving units where possible.

Transportation priorities are currently focused on the forward movement soldiers, their equipment and ammunition.

The theaters request for a voluntary embargo on parcel post has not slowed the volume of packages. This fact alone places a severe demand on man power and transportation assets.

A change of location does not necessarily mean that a unit's alignment (brigade level or higher) changes. Support units are the most likely to experience changes in alignment.

Perceptions that mail is stacked up on the tarmac and not being worked are inaccurate. Theater advises that the main air mail terminal and its general support units have not had unworked backlogs for several weeks. Stacks of mail seen at the AMT may well have been waiting for onward transportation. There are cases of units having to turn back or delay mail deliveries until their movement forward is completed.

At this stage of Operation Desert Storm, erratic mail movement is inevitable. As units move forward they must focus their transportation assets on the personnel, equipment and ammunition critical to future operations. Everyone understand the importance of soldier mail. However, arming, feeding and clothing the forge must be the highest priorities in preparing for any impending combat.

Reader asks about hardship tours

The Bayonet has been asked if the Army will send soldiers on hardship tours like Korea after they return from participating in Operation Desert Storm.

According to John Rickey, Public Affairs action officer at the U.S. Army Forces Command, that issue is being addressed by the Department of Defense and Department of Army.

No patents allowed

By Rudi Williams
American Forces Information Service

African-American slaves produced many inventions and innovations, but it was against the law for them to patent them. All evidence of their creations was erased, except for the slave owners who applied for patents, some in their own names, according to a Smithsonian Institution researcher.

"We traced three important slave inventions," said Portia P. James of the Smithsonian's Anacostia Museum in Washington, D.C. James curated an exhibit and authored a book, both entitled The Real McCoy: African American Inventionand Innovation, 1619-1930. "The invention of a cotton harvester by a slave named Ned led to the decision by the U.S. attorney general to prohibit inventions from being patented by slaves or the slave owners," she said.

"In a series of letters on file in the U.S. Patent Office, the slave owner goes into this long intellectual argument about slavery and what slavery means," said James. "He said, 'Slavery means that if my slave invents something, because I own him, I own his physical labor and also his mind. Therefore, I have the right to patent his invention.' But the Attorney general disagreed, saying no slave owner can patent an invention of a slave, nor is the slave allowed to patent it."

Ned was a slave mechanic in Pike County, Miss., on a plantation owned by Oscar J.E. Stuart, who wrote his first letter to Secretary of the Interior Jacob Thompson on Aug. 25, 1857. Ned had constructed a new and innovative cotton scraper that local planters heralded as "a great labor-saving machine." With the assistance of one man and two horses it could, Stuart asserted, do the work of four men, four horses, two single scrapers and two ploughs, James wrote in her book.

"The epilogue to this is that Stuart and his family became very wealthy from manufacturing and marketing Ned's Double Cotton Scraper," said James. Their advertising broadside included the enthusiastic testimony: "I am glad to know that your implement is the invention of a Negro slave — thus giving the lie to the abolition cry that slavery dwarfs the mind of the Negro. When did a free Negro ever invent anything?"

"The Stuarts became wealthy and Ned disappeared from history. We don't even know what his last name was, if he had one," said James.

"Another slave who was very important is Benjamin Montgomery, who was the slave of Joseph Davis, the brother of Jefferson Davis, who later became president of the Confederacy. Born in Loudoun County, Va., Montgomery was sold to Davis and became general manager and mechanic of Davis' Hurricane Plantation in Mississippi. In 1850, he invented a propeller for a river steamboat.

Historic inventions

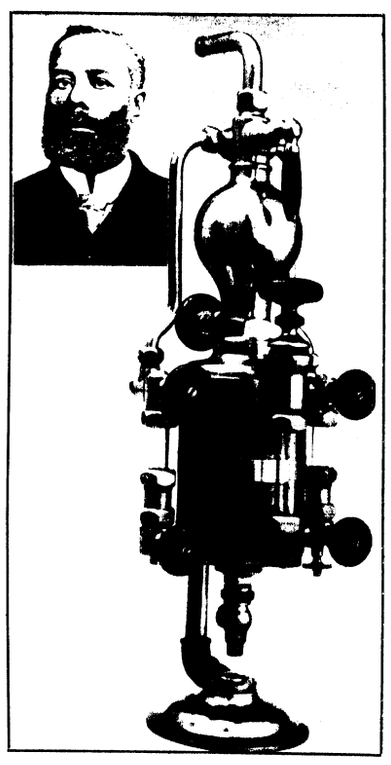
Machinery to produce or improve the breads, margarine, rice and peanut products you eat, the cotton clothes and the shoes you wear, the steam heat that warms buildings, the signal lights that regulate traffic, the trains and subways you ride on, and hundreds of other products and systems evolved from the minds of African Americans — slaves and freedmen.

But until recently, most scientific contributions of black men and women were locked in the dungeons of history. Slaves were not allowed to patent their inventions.

The Smithsonian Institution, colleges and universities, and other organizations have begun to uncover and highlight African Americans' inventions and innovations that have enhanced the living standards of all Americans.

In 1988, the Smithsonian's Anacostia Museum in Washington, D.C. displayed what, according to Portia P. James, turned out to be the most popular exhibit in its history — The Real McCoy: African American Invention and Innovation, 1619-1930. It is now a traveling exhibit. James, the exhibit's curator, has published a book of the same title.



Elijah McCoy invented the hydrostatic lubricator that was used primarily to lubricate locomotive engines," said James. "When inspectors inspected engine lubrication, they would ask the engineer, 'Is this the real McCoy?' His lubricator was the standard for excellence."

Born in a community of escaped slaves in Colchester, Ont., Canada, McCoy studied mechanical engineering in Edinburgh, Scotland. But when he returned to the United States, the only job he could get was a locomotive fireman. Blacks were not allowed to be engineers. "But that proved beneficial to him since the job exposed him to the problems of lubrication and overheating," said James. "He patented his first automatic lubrication device in 1872 and continued to improve it until it became the best available — 'the Real McCoy.'"

In 1923, Garrett Morgan patented an automatic traffic signal that was widely used until the advent of electric traffic lights, in which part of his invention was used. Before Morgan's invention, traffic signals had only two positions: red for stop and green for go. He added the yellow caution light.

"Morgan's story has a dramatic twist," said James. "He invented an early form of the gas mask he called a 'safety hood' and tried to sell it to the Army during World War I, but they wouldn't buy it because it wasn't suited for the battlefield. In the middle of the night on July 25, 1916, a huge underground explosion erupted in a tunnel workers were building under Lake Erie near Cleveland, Ohio. Police and fire department teams went in to rescue the men, but neither team came back.

"Someone said they had heard of this black guy who had a safety hood that allowed people to survive in places filled with poisonous fumes," said James. "They got Morgan out of bed, and he and his brother brought the survivors and bodies out. Many fire departments around the country were using his invention. But after they saw the picture of this black man wearing a strange contraption on his head rescuing the white men, they all canceled their orders. They didn't know the inventor was black.

ENERGY WATCH

By Tina Cook
Energy Branch

Freezing winter weather or a long, sweltering summer — either one can increase your utility bills. If you live on post, it can also affect your energy use.

But how much of the rise in the cost is a result of the weather, and how does it affect you as a Fort Benning resident? You can find out by using a unit of measure called the "degree day."

The degree day theory is used as a formula, based on a 30-year average for temperatures, that is used by Training and Doctrine Command to impose our energy goals.

A "degree day" compares the outdoor temperature to a standard of 65 degrees Fahrenheit: the more extreme the temperature, the higher the number of degree days.

Thus, degree day measurements can be used to describe the effect of outdoor temperature on the amount of energy needed for space heating or cooling.

Technically, a degree day is a one-degree Fahrenheit difference between 65 degrees F and the mean outdoor air temperature on a given day.

Hot days, which may require the use of energy for cooling, are measured in cooling degree days. On a day with a mean temperature of 80 degrees F, for example, 15 cooling degree days would be recorded. Cold days are measured in heating degree days.

For a day with a mean temperature of 40 degrees F, 25 heating degree days would be recorded. Two such days would result in a total of 50 heating degree days for the 2-day period.

By studying degree day patterns in your area, you can evaluate the increases or decreases in your heating or air-conditioning bills from year to year.

By studying degree day patterns for the United States, you can better understand changes in energy consumption. Degree day data for regions or country as a whole usually are population-weighted, since hot or cold weather in a densely populated area affects energy use more than the same weather in a sparsely populated area.

Living in Georgia makes the challenge of reducing energy consumption even tougher by delivering mild temperatures in the winter months, and above average temperatures during heating season.

When this happens, TRADOC removes part of the energy allocation for the Post. This makes prudent use of all energy, especially that used in heating, extremely critical.

Because meeting the goals set by TRADOC has such great and far-reaching implications for the entire Fort Benning community, it is imperative that everyone make every effort to reduce consumption as much as possible.

Common-sense measures such as turning off heating units when weather is warmer is critical. Heating units are major consumers of electricity, natural gas, and oil, and are a major factor in energy waste and abuse.

Heated building space temperatures should be no higher than 65 degrees Fahrenheit, except in special cases where exceptions to policy have been granted.

Energy monitors are urged to carefully maintain the temperatures in their buildings so as not to exceed this limit. Every degree above 65 degrees requires an additional 2 percent energy use.

Although TRADOC goals are tough, they are attainable. However, they cannot be met without the concerted efforts of all Fort Benning occupants.

If you have any questions on this or any energy-related subject, please contact the Energy office at 545-4652 or 545-7928.

Hospital sponsors Explorers

Martin Army Community Hospital

Are you between 14 and 20 years old and interested in learning about careers in medicine?

Do you get a feeling of fulfillment from helping others become healthy? Do you enjoy social activities with other young adults? Have you thought about a career as a nurse, physician, lab technician, emergency medic, hospital chaplain or medical researcher? Are you interested in how a major hospital functions and how a medical clinic is operated?

If you answered yes to any or all of these questions, Medical Exploring has something to offer you.

Explorers, the branch of Boy Scouting for persons 14 to 20 years old, is organized by areas of interest. Martin Army Community Hospital will be sponsoring a Medical Explorers Post.

A council is being formed, an adviser has been found, and activities are being tentatively planned.

As mentioned above, Explorers are for young men and women from age 14 to 20. But, there is something for those over 21. At least one adviser is needed, but as many as three can be used. Being a medical professional is not necessary; all that is needed is a concern for helping young people grow.

For information on becoming an Explorer or adviser, contact Chaplain Clyde Davis, Martin Army Community Hospital, at 544-2511 or 544-1382.

Cols. Exchange Club sponsors luncheon

By Douglas O. Bruk
USAIC Public Affairs Office

The Exchange Club of Columbus, one of the local chapters of the National Exchange Club, is sponsoring weekly luncheons for Fort Benning residents and civilian personnel interested in forming a Fort Benning Exchange Club.

The luncheons are each Tuesday at 11:30 a.m. in the Corrigador Room of the Main Post Officers' Club. Lunch will be free for everyone attending for the first time.

According to Cory Loomis, chairman of the New Club Building Committee for the Columbus Exchange Club, there will be a charter meeting in April. When formed, the Fort Benning club will be the first exchange club on a military installation.

Since the establishment of the first club in 1911, Exchange Club members have been working nationwide to improve their communities.

The National Exchange Club offers a number of programs emphasizing patriotism, community services and youth projects.

The activities of each local chapter depend on community needs, Loomis said.

The more established a club, the more programs it can offer because it has larger resources, he added.

First dental visit lasts

Dental Activity

A child's first visit to the dentist will make a life-long impression.

"How a child accepts the idea of dental care depends on the parents," says Andrew Chandler, D.D.S., a pediatric dentist at Fort Benning's Dental Activity.

"If parents are apprehensive, the child will pick up on that attitude and will react the same way, even if parents don't say anything negative about going to the dentist."

Parents can help their children feel good about going to the dentist by scheduling their child's first visit at an early age, around 12 months of age. Parents should talk about the visit in a positive, matter-of-fact way as with any important new experience.

"We want to teach children that the dentist and dental staff are helpers — people who can help them have a healthy smile for their whole life," says Dr. Chandler.

Children today are less likely to need fillings and other restorative dental work, Dr. Chandler points out. Because of the increasing use of fluoride in public drinking water and toothpastes, the rate of dental decay in children under the age of 16 has dropped 30 percent in the past 20 years, according to the American Dental Association.

Also, children who drink fluoridated water from birth have 65 percent fewer cavities and may will remain cavity free through their teens.

February: Children's Dental Health Month

USAIC Public Affairs Office

February is National Children's Dental Health Month, and the Fort Benning Dental Activity has planned a number of educational activities for children.

● Personnel from Preventive Dentistry will visit post schools and show a video on oral hygiene and conduct dental screenings for students.

● Feb. 16 — a health fair will be at Peachtree Mall and dental hygienists will provide screenings, answer questions and conduct puppet shows.

● DENTAC personnel will also provide dental screenings and conduct puppet shows for 3 and 4-year-olds at pre-schools on post.

'Miss Daisy' held over

By Ann McDonald

COMMENTARY

The Springer Mainstage Production of "Driving Miss Daisy" has been held over for additional performances Saturday and Sunday.

If you take advantage of the extension, you're in for a real treat.

Paul Pierce, director of the production, can chalk up another one in his success column with this gem.

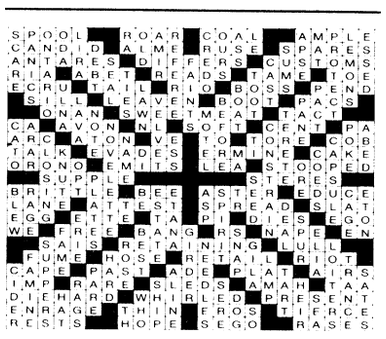
Set in Atlanta in the late forties and spanning into the seventies the one act, three person play draws the viewer in immediately. It's the tale of a widowed jewish woman (Miss Daisy), her son (Boolie) and (Hoke) a middle aged black man hired to chauffeur Miss Daisy once her son discovers she is no longer capable of driving herself.

Miss Daisy — a fiercely independent retired school teacher has a difficult time accepting this stranger into her life.

As time passes, Hoke's matter-of-fact ways combined with his loyalty wear on Miss Daisy's defenses and a friendship develops.

Miss Daisy teaches the illiterate Hoke how to read and write, and he bails her out in the middle of an ice storm.

Together they morn the death of Miss Daisy's maid and Hoke makes his first trip out of Georgia with Miss Daisy.



All this takes place on a very simple set. The automobile they spend so much time in consists of four chairs set together on one corner of the stage.

Boolie's office is on the other corner of the stage and a settee grouping serves as Miss Daisy's home.

The simple stage is all that is needed. The stage presence of Ellen Conger (Miss Daisy) and Lesley James Roberts (Hoke) lends credibility to the play. The relationship that develops between the two is very believable.

It's worth the ten-dollar admission charge to get a glimpse of Southern days gone by.

SPIRITUAL

Post gets 'new' chaplains

By Debra Galle
USAIC Chaplain's Office

Familiar faces in local church pulpits across America give congregations the spiritual leadership many say they desire and need.

Clergymen from Indiana and Michigan delivered sermons to family and friends as recently as two weeks ago.

Now they are at Fort Benning in uniform — holding identification cards as active military.

The same story belongs to thousands of people across America with the call up of reserves. Many times before they have a chance to adjust to the situation, they find themselves in a briefing with a new staff, job, and boss, or standing in line waiting to be inprocessed.

The 70th Training Division, which is historically a training influence at Fort Benning, now provides ministry throughout the Infantry Training Center. These chaplains provide ministry to the entire Fort Benning military community.

They provide much needed relief to the post's Unit Ministry Team, bringing chaplains and chaplain assistants with a variety of distinctive faith backgrounds. They provide rear area coverage and additional ministry for family members.

These UMT members are integrated into the total force, adjusting the focus of their ministry to the needs of all soldiers and family members.

These chaplains and assistants do not simply replace those deployed to Saudi Arabia; they provide ministry to the expanded mission of the ITC. Their responsibility is to minister to their unit's mission and to provide family denominational and area coverage.

Chaplain (COL) George W. Gudz, post chaplain, said the additional chaplains aid in implementing the commanding general's Command Master Religious Program.

"The rich experiences in the ministry and pastorate that each of these chaplains bring with them from civilian parishes and congregations adds dimension to the Fort Benning religious life," Chaplain Gudz explained.

"Without these chaplains and assistants, the immense ministerial workload would be yet more taxed for those in rear detachment and post asset assignments," according to Chaplain (Lt. Col.) Donald Taylor, chief of administrative operations.

Taylor said, the chaplains and chaplain assistants add an important dimension to Fort Benning's spiritual life. They provide pastoral care and counseling, as well as additional worship opportunities for those who seek the solace and intersession of a chaplain.

These chaplains are professionals who are validly ordained clergymen and graduates of the United States Army Chaplain's School at Fort Monmouth, N.J.

Army chief of staff visits Fort Benning

By Robert A. Mogor
70th Division (Trng.) Public Affairs Office

Army Chief of Staff Gen. Carl E. Vuono made a short, unannounced visit to Fort Benning Feb. 7.

During his visit, no press interviews were granted, but he made a quick stop to view training being conducted by members of Company C, 3rd Battalion, 423rd Infantry, 3rd Brigade, 70th Division (Training) of the Individual Ready Reservists called back to active duty.

Vuono observed refresher training in the areas of nuclear, biological and chemical along with anti-tank weaponry.

While observing the training, Vuono told the Reservists they were called to duty because they were needed. "We called the IRR because we know all of you have been out of the Army within a year or less," he said. "Skills have been ingrained in you and with short refresher training, you could be put into crews, squads, sections and platoons and move out to units that are preparing to deploy as crews to Saudi Arabia, should they be needed.

"What we're trying to do," he continued, "is to make sure that if we have to send additional crews, squads and sections over there, every soldier will be trained and ready."

Vuono told the soldiers he realized their lives had been disrupted by the call-up. "All of you are soldiers," he said. "All of you understand that when the country needs you, you have to answer the call. With refresher training, you can be put into squads and sent out to units.

> "None of us can predict how long the fight over there will last. But, what I can predict is that we will not send anyone over there who is not trained or ready.
> — Gen. Carl E. Vuono

"None of us can predict what will happen; none of us can predict how long the fight over there will last," he said. "But, what I can predict is that we will not send anyone over there who is not trained or ready and that we will be successful in our operation because of people like you."

Vuono charged the soldiers to learn as much as they can. "Learn all you can while you're here at Benning," he said, "and when we send you out to your units, continue to train and learn. Should we have to deploy you, you'll be ready for any operation or eventuality."

Vuono further advised those soldiers who are interested in staying on active duty to see visit their enlistment office.

Combat vet receives Patterson Award

By Brian C. Sutton
Bayonet staff writer

The most outstanding infantry officer candidate graduate of 1990 was named Tuesday at Wigle Hall.

Darren L. McMahon

The Robert P. Patterson award was presented to 2nd Lt. Darren L. McMahon for his outstanding academic, motivational and leadership skills during Officer Candidate School.

McMahon, a combat veteran of Operation Urgent Fury in Grenada as an enlisted man with the 1st Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment, was commissioned an infantry officer upon completion of Officer Candidate School June 1, 1990, where he was chosen as the Distinguished Leadership Graduate of his class.

In addition, McMahon was chosen the Distinguished Leadership Honor Graduate of his Officer Basic Course class. McMahon is currently a Bradley Fighting Vehicle Commander Course student and will report to Vilseck, Germany, as an infantry rifle platoon leader.

The award was presented on the 100th birthday of Judge Robert P. Patterson, a hero of World War I who was later named secretary of war.

Patterson was an enlisted man himself at the start of his career and later was trained at Officers' Training Camp, Plattsburg, Barracks, N.Y. While serving in France, he was awarded both the Silver Star and the Distinguished Service Cross for gallantry in action.

McMahon tried to be the best he could be and to live up to the reputation of previous Patterson Award winners and of Patterson himself.

"Nothing can prepare you for the real challenge of Officer Candidate School," McMahon said. "It takes a lot of hard work and determination."

McMahon said it was tough to make it without motivation.

"My wife helped me a lot with support during the long hours of separation from them during school. Also, the cohesiveness between classmates is unimaginable to anyone who has not gone through OCS," said McMahon.

Post Chief of Staff Lt. Col. John D. Fuller presented the award to McMahon.

"Out of the three ways that we obtain officers — Reserve Officers' Training Corps, Officer Candidate School and West Point — OCS continually provides the best officers and the best leaders for the Army," Fuller said. "Certainly Lieutenant McMahon is an officer who I would be proud to serve with in combat."

MACH to open retiree clinic

By Alyanna B. Clay-Heard
Bayonet staff writer

A retiree clinic will open on post around Feb. 25, according to Martin Army Community Hospital officials .

Col. H. Dale Brown, deputy commander for Hospital Administration, said the new clinic will be located in Building 392 across from the National Infantry Museum.

"This will be a long-awaited access for our retiree population," said Brown.

The clinic is open to all retirees and their family members eligible under the Civilian Health and Medical Program of the Uniformed Services, or CHAMPUS.

Because the clinic will be operated by CHAMPUS partner providers, the patients will not be required to pay the CHAMPUS deductible or co-payment.

Treatment will also be available at the clinic for retirees and their family members over 65 years of age who are eligible for coverage under Medicare with the stipulation that the patient must assume responsibility for the Medicare deductible and cost share.

Specific information on clinic operations and a specific opening date will be released later, Brown said.

Brown also gave an update on the status of current staffing and bedding conditions at the hospital.

"Currently, we are expanding to the required 578 beds on schedule, and we have been receiving positive responses to our requests for additional staff," said Brown.

"All and all, the services at Martin Army are continuing as normal. We feel the opening of the retiree clinic later this month will further improve access to care for our retired beneficiaries."

MPs to check vehicles

USAIC Public Affairs Office

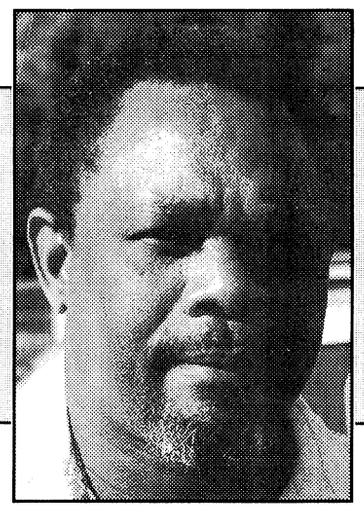
Motorists traveling on post today should be prepared as the Military Police conduct a post closure exercise.

The exercise, which will last several hours, includes road blocks and vehicle spot checks at various locations around the installation.

In order to maximize the training, the exact locations and time of the exercise is not being preannounced.

While such exercises could be somewhat disruptive, they are necessary to ensure readiness.

To minimize any inconvenience, the exercise will not be conducted during rush hours. Those with appointments, however, are encouraged to allow for extra travel time.



People with legitimate business on post will not be turned away, even if they don't have a current Fort Benning registration sticker, as long as their vehicle registration and drivers' licenses are current and they have the proper no-fault insurance.

COMMENTARY

Forget war, Saddam Hussein, what about the 29-cent stamp?

By Clyde Snively
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Let's put the war and Saddam Hussein aside for a week and get mad about more mundane events.

For instance I'm mad at a quasi-federal organization that will remain nameless, but which I can tell you, sells stamps.

On the surface, this large monopoly's refusal to raise the cost of stamps to 30 cents, holding the line at 29 cents, would seem commendable. But, have you tried to buy a 29-cent stamp?

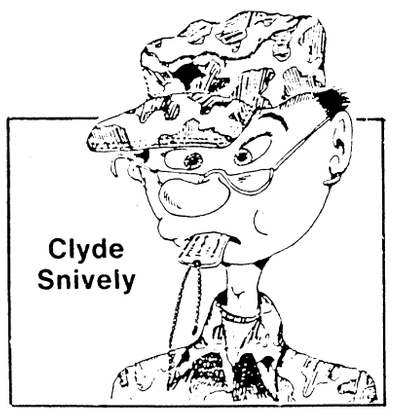
If you want to get one at the main stamp-dispensing office on post, bring lunch. Dinner too. Bring your swim trunks and you can swim laps at the Briant Wells pool while waiting to get through the line.

So try a different tact. Try the machines. Sorry. Why do you think the lines are so long, dummy. The machines are out of order — this more than a week after the change went into effect.

Like they didn't know this was going to happen?

OK, go elsewhere to buy your 29-cent stamp. Well, if you go to a stamp vending machine, which is set up as part of a business, the rip-off is beyond belief. Not even credit card companies charge that much interest.

Back to an authorized outlet and you'll find there are no 29-cent stamps. Be happy to get two 15-cent stamps. Right. This quasi-federal agency, which held its rates to 29 cents, is getting 30 cents to deliver your letter anyway.



Want to get mad at someone else? Try a large law-enacting body in a major democratic country.

This body of law makers voted themselves a huge pay increase. This was part of the Ethics Reform Act, which meant no more humongous writing and speaking fees for them.

The lawmakers said if they had to give up $50,000 guest speaking appearances, they could never survive on their paltry salaries, so they voted themselves a pay raise.

Guess what, if you're an employee of this large democratic country's government, uniformed or not, you fall under this act too, just as though you were one of those law makers. (Hey, you folks got 4.2 percent pay raises, where's the beef?)

What this act means to federal employees of this country is they can't go out and speak or write during their free time. As an example, let's say a person on his country' payroll has a job repairing computers.

And let's say, as a hobby, he used to write fishing articles for the local newspaper and got paid $25 an article.

Or, maybe our employee is an infantry soldier who likes to go on the speaking circuit and talk about model trains and the grateful train enthusiasts paid him $50 for his speeches.

Guess what. No more. These loyal employees can no longer accept writing and speaking fees. I'm not making this up.

There are exceptions, of course. The act doesn't cover fiction or poetry. Further, these employees of that benevolent country can still write books.

I wonder if this act covers people who type reports for other federal employees, such as specialists who type for Infantry Officer Advanced Course students.

This wouldn't be an attempt to stifle free speech would it? Or maybe these clever lawmakers made the law so ludicrous everyone would rise up against it and have it overthrown.

Then those folks would not only have their hefty pay raise, but could go back to racking up the speaking bucks too.

I'm also mad at one of the LOCAL television stations. I emphasize LOCAL because that's definitely what this station is. It proved that Sunday when it canceled a basketball game between the No. 1 and No. 2 college basketball teams.

I read about it beforehand in the paper, but didn't believe it. So I tuned in anyway. Sure enough, instead of the PREMIER basketball game of the regular season, they had some frizzy-haired guy in a tank top sitting crossed-legged, looking not unlike a leprechaun, speaking to a couple of women who appeared to be on the verge of crying.

I did cry and turned the set off. At least it was a nice day outdoors.

'Any Soldier' becomes 'Our Soldier'

By William Lockwood

Spec. Joseph Connolly, a combat medic in Saudi Arabia, picked a letter out of the "Any Soldier" carton on the mail room floor in November. It was from a second-grade girl from a small Minnesota town.

He answered it.

Just before Christmas he got another letter from her and a papier-mache angel she had made. She sent it for his Christmas tree in Saudi Arabia.

He told his wife, "It was the best Christmas present I ever got."

Joe's presents and cards from his wife, family and friends were delayed in the mail rush, and that was the only present he got before Christmas.

He wrote back to the little girl.

Just before January, he got a whole raft of letters from her class of 15 students. The teacher sent a letter, too.

It read: "The students have written a lot of letters to 'Any Soldier' and didn't get any answers. They were so excited when we read your letter to the class. Because you answered her twice, our class has adopted you."

The teacher said they didn't expect Joe to answer every letter, but to write to her or the little girl who started the correspondence. She would read his answers in class, and that would be enough. They would be waiting for his letters like prizes.

So now Joe Connolly — "Any Soldier" — from Wolfboro, N. H., is "Our Soldier" to children in the second grade in a small Minnesota town.

Because of the feelings this war generates in America, he is a real person and honored way out there in Minnesota.

The war is no longer abstract to them.

Connolly is their connection to a large, news-filled adventure one-third of the way around the planet.

Would it be premature to call Joseph Connolly a celebrity?

To a few Minnesotans, perhaps he is.

It is nice to think that every soldier, sailor, Marine, airman and Coast Guardsman in the Persian Gulf theater is a celebrity.

CG urges holiday safety

The federal holiday for Presidents' Day will be celebrated Monday. This will be a three-day weekend.

If you will be traveling during this time, expect highways to be crowded, as they usually are during a three-day weekend. The likelihood of accidents increases in relation to the number of vehicles on the road.

Trips should be planned so that all travel begins and is completed during daylight. Exercise particular caution when road conditions are poor. Poor road conditions or night driving can equal disaster.

Defensive driving becomes more important than ever over a three-day holiday period. The safest way to cope with the increased traffic is to increase your awareness of road conditions and the other vehicles on the road. This will help you to avoid situations that may produce accidents.

Have an enjoyable holiday, but a safe one as well.

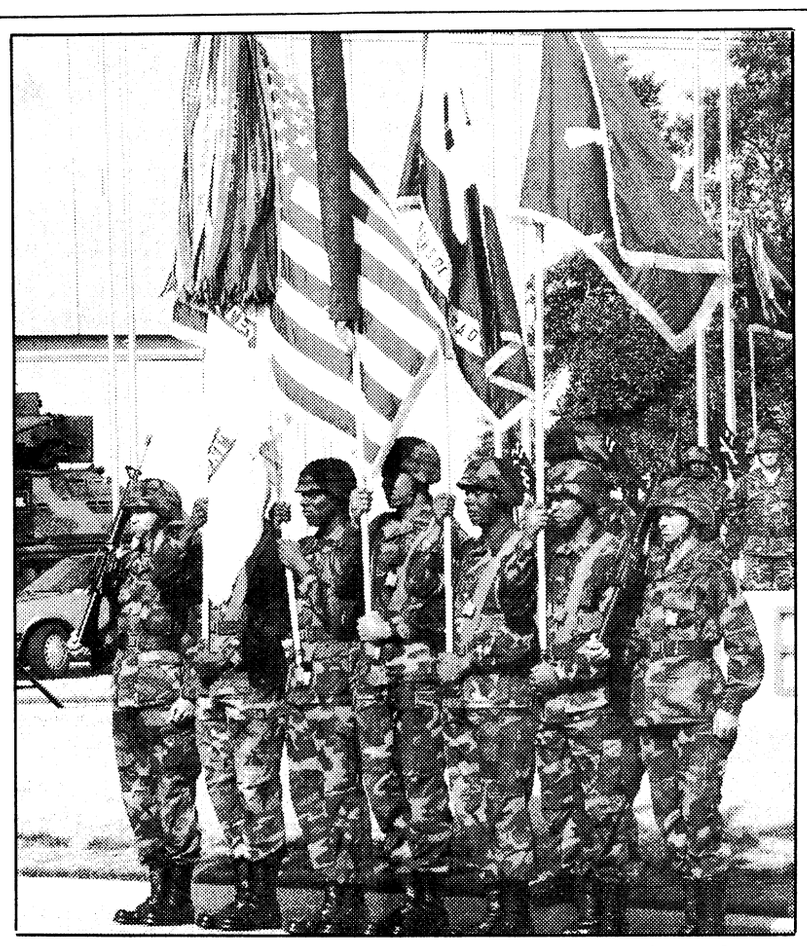
School Brigade changes to 11th Inf. Regt.

By James C. Rupp
Bayonet staff writer

The School Brigade changed forever on Feb. 8.



In the shadow of the "Follow Me" monument in front of Infantry Hall and amid the ringing fanfare and flapping guidons, the School Brigade ceased to exist.

In its place stood the 11th Infantry Regiment.

Col. James M. Jones Jr., regimental commander for the 11th, addressed the audience, which included Maj. Gen. Carmen J. Cavezza, post commanding general, and Brig Gen. Walter Bickston, honorary regimental commander.

"I know there is no regiment in this Army that has a richer history than the 11th," Jones said.

"I also know it is not the number, the motto, or the slogan that make the regiment, but the people — the officers, the noncommissioned officers, the enlisted soldiers and their families," Jones said. "And just let me tell you, there aren't any soldiers anywhere better than you, the soldiers of the 11th Regiment."

Suggestion program turns ideas into dollars

By Alyanna B. Clay-Heard
Bayonet staff writer

Have you ever had an idea to improve your work place or improve safety on post, but you didn't know who to present the idea to?

Where do you take those brilliant inspirations to get your dreams turned into reality?

The Army Ideas for Excellence program is just the place to turn those dreams into reality or even cold, hard cash.

Beverly Howell, program coordinator, is enthusiastic about the program.

"It's a great program and very simple to become involved in. Anyone — civilian or military — who has an idea, may submit a Department of the Army 1045 to our office, and we will submit it to be tested for validity," said Howell.

The idea must involve a way to improve conditions in the work place, improve the effeciency of the work being done, or improve safety measures in the work place or anywhere on post, said Howell.

"If the idea provides the Army with tangible savings, you may receive a cash award. Even if there is no tangible savings, you can still receive a certificate in recognition of your idea," said Howell.

For fiscal 1990, 209 ideas were submitted, 51 of those ideas were approved. Through these ideas, the Army realized a savings of $1,229,076, and gave out $27,000 in cash awards.

"This is really a good program," Howell said. "In these times of budget constraints, everyone should take a moment to look at the job they do and think of better, more efficient and safer ways to do it," said Howell.

For more information on the Army Ideas for Excellence Program, visit the program office in Building 2604 in Soldiers' Plaza or call Howell at 545-IDEA.

Call-up brings thousands of Reservists to Benning

By Rene Blatte
70th Division Public Affairs Office

Luggage covers the gymnasium floor. Wondering faces fill the bleachers. The voices of drill sergeants echo across the cavernous room welcoming soldiers back into the regular Army.

Fort Benning's Kelley Hill buzzes with buses, taxi cabs and cars with out-of-state plates.

Training troops brought in from the Individual Ready Reserves, who have been out of the Army for less than a year, won't be easy. It's a job the 70th Division must accomplish in support of Operation Desert Storm.

The Army calls it RT-12 training, and it gives the Trailblazers just 15 days to sharpen rusty skills and shape up softened bodies.

The first wave of IRR troops to arrive at Benning stream in from all over the United States. The first three days of the massive recall brings in nearly 2,000 men.

Lt. Col. David Herring, commander, 5089th Reception Battalion of the 70th Division is the first to officially greet the new arrivals. "You're not draftees, you're not recruits, you're soldiers and you're going to be treated like that while you're here. Yes, there are drill sergeants. You're going to be trained by the same people who run 'Basic' but, they understand you're not recruits."

Herring's words of assurance and trust seem to drift aimlessly upon them. They look numb, not sure of what happened to them, not clear on what they'll be doing. Yet, each and everyone of them expresses a submissive resolve that they'll do the job that needs to be done.

Spc. Chuck Petkus says he was just getting the hang of installing carpet when he got the call. He figured it would only be a matter of time once the war started. "I knew it was coming, I was just waiting for it. My family didn't like it, but they knew I had to go back in."

Spc. Vincent Barraclough of Brooklyn, N.Y., was a laundry supervisor. He admits he wasn't expecting the call. "It scared me, my knees buckled. I didn't know what to do at first. It sure was a nice birthday present."

In-processing runs like a well-oiled machine. Quietly and methodically the soldiers move from one station to the next. It was only days ago that many of these young soldiers saw the war in the Persian Gulf as being a million miles away. Now, some believe that it looms just over the horizon for them. "If I have to go, I'll go," says Randy Mynatt of Tennessee.

Mynatt served only 2-1/2 months on active duty before entering the reserves and the IRR. He says it was tough leaving his family behind. "They needed reassurance. They wanted to know where I was going. I told them I'd let them know when I could."

Robert Harmon, 49, was called up. He's a truck driver. The Army says the need for truck drivers is critical. Nonetheless, Harmon was "shocked" when he got the word to report for duty.

Army officials say wherever they go will depend on their military occupational specialty. "That's their biggest question, 'Where am I going?'", says Herring. "And we know for the biggest part, they're going to units in either the continental United States, Germany or even Hawaii. You can really see the relief on their faces.'

But, as more luggage appears on the gymnasium floor, one has to believe that for some of these men a desert landscape awaits. The call to war, inevitably, will take them there.

6th Bn., 159th Avn. Regt. activates for Desert Storm

121st Army Reserve Command

The 6th Battalion, 159th Aviation Regiment, has been called up for active duty in support of Operation Desert Storm. The battalion is based at Fort Benning with subordinate units located at Fort Rucker, Ala.

The scope of the operation, both in terms of the number of personnel being deployed and the distance involved, requires the use of U.S. Army Reserve units such as the 6th of the 159th to provide essential support.

Reservists will provide this support by joining active duty units deployed in and around the Arabian Peninsula or by filling critical military support vacancies in the United States or wherever needed.

The mission of the 6th of the 159th is to provide tactical mobility of troops, supplies, and equipment within the combat zone.

The commander is Lt. Col. Joseph S. Bowen.

Once the commander receives the execute order, or the call to active duty, he calls the unit members and they must report to the Army Reserve Center where the unit musters.

Once the unit has completed initial processing at home station, it then moves to its designated mobilization station, which can be located at any U.S. military installation.

Once mobilization processing is completed the unit moves to its duty station. This duty station may be in the United States or overseas.

The 6th Battalion, 159th Aviation Regiment, is a subordinate unit of the 121st. U.S. Army Reserve Command, which is based in Birmingham, Ala.

The 121st ARCOM is the command and control headquarters for 124 troop program units consisting of approximately 10,800 soldiers located in Alabama, Mississippi, Tennessee, Kentucky and Georgia.

The mission of the 121st ARCOM is to command and train Army Reservists, to oversee and evaluate training of its units, and assist in the mobilization of units and soldiers.

Reserve units train year-round for the time when they might be called to active duty.

They practice mobilization on a regular basis.

The call-up procedures of the Reserve Component are managed over an extended period of time and is based on the needs of the active components.

Guards demonstrate readiness

By Tim Downey
American Forces Information Service

Army and Air National Guardsmen serving during the Persian Gulf crisis are proving the military's long-standing Total Force Policy works, the chief of the National Guard Bureau claims.

"This is the fifth involuntary call-up of the National Guard in a federalized status in the last 50 years; only World War II and the Korean conflict call-ups were larger. It's fast approaching the second largest ever," Air Force Lt. Gen. John Conaway said in a recent interview. "The Army and Air National Guard are in the best shape they've ever been. The attitude and morale are fantastic, and they're training hard."

He said participation by the 450,000-strong Army National Guard and the 117,000-member Air Guard is growing daily. He said 301 Army Guard units, involving more than 50,000 personnel, have been called to active duty since the first call-up in August. The smaller Air Guard has seen about 60 units called, requiring over 4,100 guardsmen to report to duty. More than 2,000 other Air Guard members have also volunteered.

Army National Guard companies in greatest demand include those specializing in transportation, maintenance, quartermaster, ordnance, engineering, military police, water purification and medical services, he said.

The bulk of the Air Guard units activated or on alert have civil engineering, aerial port, security police, combat communications, tactical and strategic airlift, air refueling and tactical fighter missions.

Conaway scoffed at the notion that without such training the Army Guard combat units could not perform well. "If we didn't have the time to train, they would have been adequate to go," he said.

Gen. Colin Powell

Chairman of Joint Chiefs leads America's fighting force

By Brian C. Sutton
Bayonet staff writer

With a gentle smile and a cool demeanor, Gen. Colin Powell, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, leads the way of the American fighting force. Never before has a black man from the South Bronx, the son of Jamaican immigrants, held such a powerful job.

His career began at City College in New York where Powell had his first taste of military life as a Reserve Officers' Training Corps cadet, which, according to the October 8, 1990, issue of Insight on the News, he joined because he "liked the uniform."

Powell excelled as a cadet, rising to the rank of cadet colonel, the highest rank bestowed a cadet, and achieving straight A's. In 1958, after completing 3-1/2 years of college, he was commissioned a second lieutenant in the Army.

After marrying Alma Vivian Johnson, whom he met on a blind date in 1960, he went on to Vietnam twice where he was injured near the border of Laos and received the Purple Heart during his first tour.

During his second tour in 1968, Powell was hailed a hero for bravery. He received the Bronze Star and a Soldier's Medal for pulling to safety the pilots and passengers of the helicopter in which he was traveling after it crashed during landing.

Powell accepted many positions after returning to the United States including the White House, Pentagon, and various other assignments.

However, it is quite possible that no other position he has held is as important as his current one. Never before in his career has his advice played so closely into the lives, and possibly the deaths, of so many service members.

Since Powell was appointed to the position in 1989, he has had to deal with Operation Just Cause, the largely U.S. Army effort to oust Panamanian dictator Manuel Antonio Noriega and install the legitimate government of Panama.

It was also around the time that the United States was involved in Panama that Powell first came face to face with Saddam Hussein. During the Iran-Iraq war, the United States was favoring Saddam in order to quell Ayatollah Khomeini and his people's religious fanaticism.

It was a big fear of the United States that Iran would win the war. The neutrality of the United States possibly played an important role in bringing about the cease fire.

But then came his biggest challenge to date as chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff. Aug. 2, 1990, Saddam's powerful military force took Kuwait. The United States was faced with whether or not to send the American military. That decision was made and U.S. forces were deployed almost immediately.

After U.N. resolutions failed to remove Iraq's Army from Kuwait, the United States asked permission to use military force if necessary to drive Iraq out. The United Nations authorized the use of force after the Jan. 15 deadline. Powell was a key adviser to President George Bush and helped formulate the decision to use the authorized force Jan. 16.

Powell has proved that a black man who struggled through undergraduate school can go on to be one of the most powerful and inspirational leaders of today.

CRIME

1st quarter statistics in

By Alyanna B. Clay-Heard
Bayonet staff writer

There's a crime committed every 2-1/2 hours on Fort Benning.

At least, that's what statistics compiled by the Military Police's Crime Prevention section show.

According to the study, which was prepared for the post Crime Prevention Council, one violent crime is committed almost every two days and one property crime every four hours.

The study shows that although crime is down for the first quarter of fiscal 1991 as compared to the same quarter last year, Fort Benning still has a job to do in the way of crime prevention.

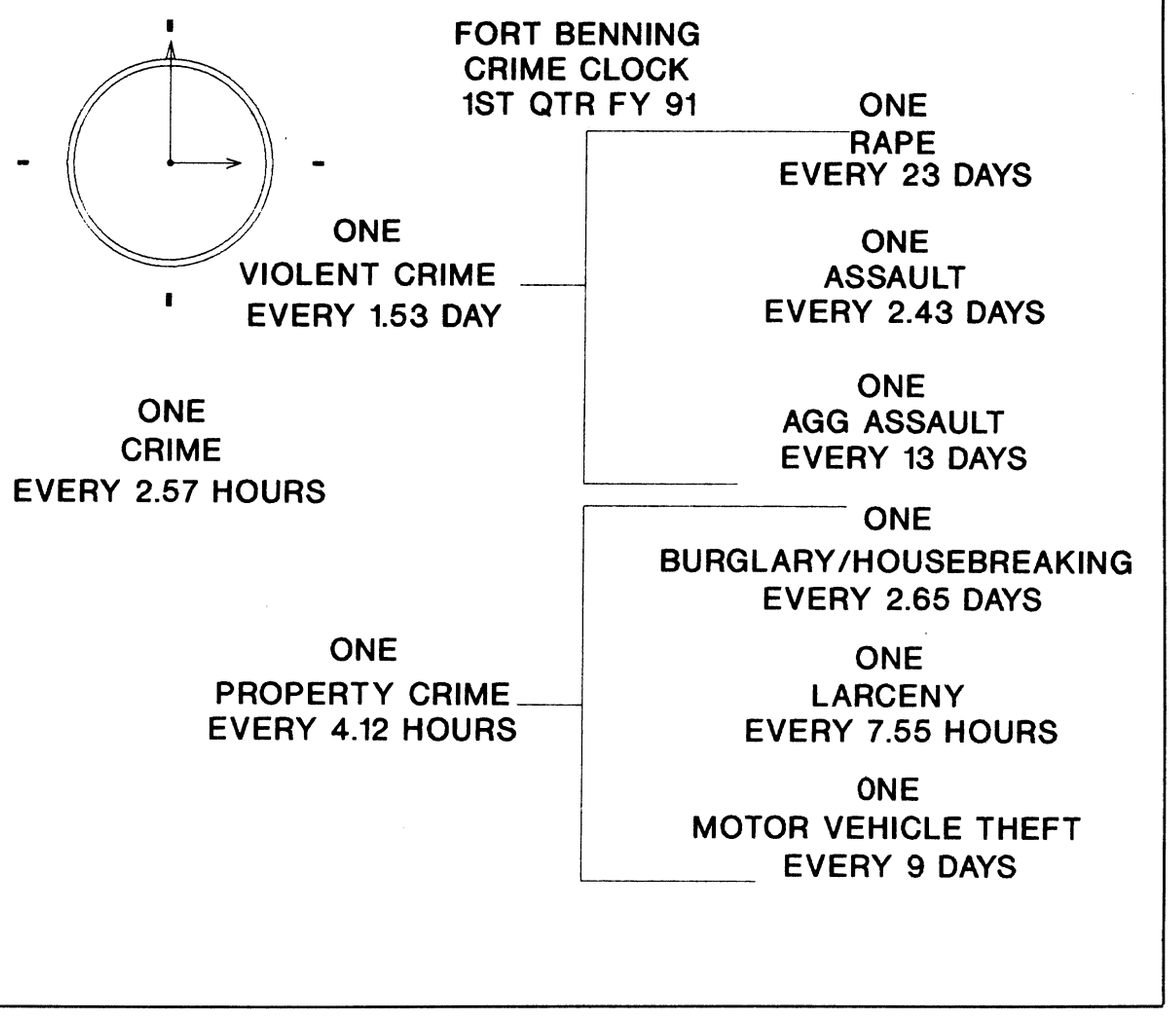
Violent crimes, including rape, assault and aggravated assault (physical violence intended to cause harm with a weapon) also occur on Fort Benning, the study shows. Rapes occur every 23 days, assaults every two days and aggravated assaults every 13 days on post.

Property crimes — burglary, larceny and motor vehicle theft — are also quite evident. Burglary occurs almost every three days, a larceny happens almost every eight hours and a motor vehicle theft occurs every nine days.

Murder, another form of violence, is up 18 percent from fiscal 1990. That's a 17 percent increase on post.

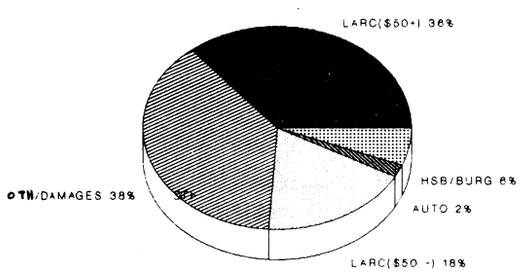
Family violence, including child and spouse abuse, was the primary focus of the Crime Prevention Section this quarter, according to Staff Sgt. Ernest Williams, non-commissioned officer in charge.

McGraw Manor leads the pack in family violence, followed by Indianhead Terrace, Custer Terrace, Davis Hill and Battle Park. Bouton Heights, Upatoi Terrace, and Main Post had no occurrences of family violence reported this quarter.



Driving under the influence, another problem on post according to Williams, is also down from last year.

Drug crimes also are down from last year, with narcotics use making up 79 percent and marijuana use as 21 percent of all drug crimes committed on post.



Traffic accidents are down, and The School Brigade, now the 11th Infantry Regiment, has the highest number of offenses, 22. The 29th Infantry Regiment was second with 17 offenses. The Infantry Training Center and the 36th Engineer Group each had seven offenses, making them third in the number of offenses.

Other units had relatively few offenses — the Military Police Activity had five, 75th Ranger Regiment had four, 197th Infantry Brigade had three, Medical Department Activity had two and Dental Activity, School of Americas and the 34th Medical Battalion each had one offense. The Ranger Training Brigade had no reported traffic accidents this quarter.

"Crime prevention is working," said Williams, who has just taken over as head of the section. "The fact that many crimes are down shows that Fort Benning is really working to become a crime-free post."

IRS extends filing deadline for Desert Storm soldiers

By Nancy Haynie-Mooney
FORSCOM News Service

Military personnel and others in the Operation Desert Storm combat zone have an automatic extension of six months to file tax returns.

For those who'd rather file early to get a tax refund, the Internal Revenue Service has special guidance.

Write two words — DESERT STORM — at the top of 1990 federal income tax returns and on the envelopes if you:

● receive a notice issued by IRS on tax collections or examinations. These require no action except writing Desert Storm on the notice and returning it to the IRS.

● represent taxpayers serving in the combat zone and file tax returns for them. Mark Desert Storm on those returns and any IRS correspondence sent to taxpayers in the combat zone.

● served in Operation Desert Shield before the Jan. 17 combat zone designation.

Legislation has extended tax relief to these taxpayers back to Aug. 2, 1990.

Writing Desert Storm on tax returns, correspondence and envelopes alerts IRS to taxpayers entitled to tax relief, including: extension of time to file; suspension of all collection and examination actions, and; suspension of interest charges on back taxes.

To ease tax filing, the IRS is streamlining authorization requirements for people who represent taxpayers serving in Operation Desert Storm.

Normally, IRS requires a power of attorney form signed by the taxpayer specifying that federal tax matters can be handled by the person on the form.

Now, IRS will accept a general power of attorney or a statement signed by the taxpayer that authorizes another person to act on his behalf, even though federal tax matters are not specified. Attach a copy to the tax return.

If it isn't possible for the spouse of a taxpayer serving in Operation Desert Storm to get a signed authorization, IRS will accept a written statement explaining that the husband or wife is serving in the combat zone. This must be attached to the tax return.

Military legal assistance offices will help those who need a power of attorney or substitute authorization signed by military personnel.

Local IRS offices will help spouses and other people representing taxpayers serving in Operation Desert Storm to file tax returns (including free electronic filing when possible).

IRS will also provide speakers to groups of taxpayers, including support groups made up of family members of taxpayers overseas in Operation Desert Storm.

IRS encourages taxpayers to call IRS, toll-free, at (800) TAX-1040 or visit their nearest IRS office for help on any federal tax matter.

Editor's note: Information is from the southeastern regional IRS public affairs office. If you have questions, call the 800 phone number or your local IRS office.

Desert Storm soldiers get tax exemption

Finance and Accounting Office

The President, by executive order on Jan. 21, declared the Persian Gulf a combat zone for purposes of excluding some or all military income from federal tax withholding.

Also, all soldiers have up to 180 days upon returning from Southwest Asia to file their 1990 income tax return with no penalty or interest.

The exemption applies to all regular and reserve component soldiers who spend any portion of any month in the Persian Gulf.

The entire month is covered by the exemption; the month is not prorated.

The exemption is different for enlisted soldiers and warrant officers than for commissioned officers.

Enlisted soldiers and warrant officers have all military income for the month excluded; commissioned officers have only the first $500 excluded.

The exclusion also applies for any month in which the soldier is hospitalized as a result of wounds, disease, or injury suffered while serving in the Gulf.

There is no action required by the soldier to stop withholding of federal tax.

The exclusion will be applied based on the existing authorization for Imminent Danger Pay. Tax withholding will be started and stopped using the same criteria already used for Imminent Danger Pay.

All states are anticipated to exempt from state tax any income exempted from Federal tax.

Regardless of the position taken by individual states, the Army will discontinue withholding state tax. Social Security will still be withheld.

Current plans include a "pay back" for enlisted and warrant officers for tax withheld during January, 1991. Since officers are limited to $500 combat pay exclusion, they will be reimbursed the lesser amount of $100 or the actual amount of federal tax withheld.

Congress approves military savings program

Finance and Accounting Office

Congress has authorized implementation of a savings deposit program for service members stationed in the Persian Gulf who are receiving Imminent Danger Pay.

The program became effective Jan. 1. The maximum amount that a soldier may have in the savings program is limited to $10,000.

Savings will earn 10 percent interest, compounded quarterly.

The amount of money that may be deposited each month is limited to that month's unalloted pay and allowances.

Deposits may only be accepted from the soldier by an Army Finance Office in the Persian Gulf.

Soldiers will need to make deposits by cash or check for January and February, but it is recommended that deposits for March and later be made by using a special financial allotment established just for this program.

Allotment requests can be submitted only by the soldier in the Gulf; nothing can be done stateside by a soldier or family member.

After the money has been deposited in the savings program, it cannot be withdrawn until the soldier returns from the Persian Gulf.

Exceptions are made only for bona fide emergencies where the health or welfare of the soldier or the soldier's family members is in jeopardy.

Emergency withdrawals must be approved by the soldier's commanding officer. Interest may not be withdrawn at this time.

Final settlements of the savings account will be handled by the Defense Finance and Accounting Service, Indianapolis Center (formerly the U.S. Army Finance and Accounting Center).

Final settlement cannot take place until the soldier leaves the Persian Gulf.

Retirees dedicate lives to U.S. Army marksmanship

By Charlene L. LaDay-Hill
U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit

Dedication to duty — that phrase best describes the civilian employees of the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit's Custom Gun Shop.

Two of the shop's senior craftsmen are former Army shooters who retired from the service as gunsmiths. But retirement from the profession they love didn't last long. They came back to USAMU as civilians to work as gunsmiths.

"I shot for the Fifth Army Shooting Team (Fort Riley, Kan.) in 1961 and 1962," said Shelva R. Smith, service rifle supervisor. "From 1962 to 1966 I shot for the marksmanship unit in Germany. It wasn't until 1964 that I became a gunsmith.

Smith is a 62-year-old, Corydon, Ind. native, who retired in February 1975 after 23 years of service. He shot with the All-Army Rifle Team from 1961-1965 as a pick shooter (the best shooters on the Army area teams). He was assigned to USAMU from 1966-1974.

"I retired as a gunsmith from USAMU and came right back to do the same job," said Smith who has been working for USAMU as a civilian for 15 years.

Another civilian who followed up his profession from the military is Clyde Malphus Jr., international gunsmith supervisor.

Malphus is a 61-year-old, Douglas, Ga. native, who retired in February 1972. From 1955-1960, he shot for the Third Army Shooting Team (Fort Benning). Before arriving to the marksmanship unit, he shot for the All Army Shooting Team off and on from 1960-1972.

"I've been working for the unit as a civilian since 1980," said Malphus. "In 1956 I attended the Armor School to become a gunsmith. During that time it was an Army policy that you had to be a distinguished shooter before you could become a gunsmith."

Even though the former soldiers/shooters now punch a time clock, their dedication to the job is timeless.

Before a gunsmith's skilled hands can create a weapon, he must have the tools necessary to do it. The shop's parts room provides the craftsmen with what they need to get their job done.

"This section plays a vital role in the shop's mission," said Sgt. Patrick T. Newman, shop supply sergeant. "We have approximately $1.5 million worth of equipment here for the gunsmith's use."

The parts room keeps an abundance of repair parts and tools in stock so that the shop can continue to build competition grade rifle and pistols.

"We don't just supply the gunsmiths with parts to build weapons from scratch, we also provide them with equipment to repair weapons too," said Sgt. Michael T. Blantz, shop supply sergeant.

The shop has two rifle sections — service and international — that build rifles and shotguns.

"My job is to ensure that the service rifle team have the best weapons available for their competition," said Shelva R. Smith, service rifle supervisor.

Also keeping a team's weapons in top notch condition is the international rifle section.

"I make weapons for the international rifle, shotgun and running target teams," said Clyde Malphus Jr., international rifle supervisor.

The rifle section's civilian supervisors also train soldiers of the shop.

"I've learned a lot during my two and a half years working here. So far I've made rifles for the international rifle team, repaired air rifles, shotguns, and rifles," said Staff Sgt. John A. Younger, gunsmith. Like most of the soldiers who work in the shop, Younger acquired his gunsmith knowledge through a trade school before joining the Army. "I went to the Colorado School of Trades in Denver to become a gunsmith. I joined the Army so I can have the chance to work here and excel in my profession. This shop is a great place to start because you're already at the top level by making weapons for some of the best shooters in the world."

The barrels for the rifles are made in the machine workshop which is run by one civilian and a soldier.

"It takes four and a half hours to make just one barrel," said Marvin O. Aldrich, workshop supervisor. "I also make certain tools that the sections need to assemble the rifles."

Aldrich's craftsmanship doesn't just stop at barrels and tools, he also makes gun parts such as triggers, housings and firing pins.

"A lot of times I get rush orders in for barrels, which means that all other stuff is put on hold until that job is complete," said Aldrich.

Despite the hectic schedules and occasional heavy workload, no section in the Custom Firearm Shop is more important than another.

"Everything we do here is a teamwork effort," said William O. Harden, chief of the Custom Firearm Shop. "There is no other organization in the Army today that has the skills and facilities to do what we do. The shooting team's success record is a direct reflection on how well we do our job here."

In any event, the shop and its staff help keep the Army's top shooters right on target.

Post builds new indoor range complex

By Charlene L. LaDay-Hill
U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit

The shooters of the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit are getting fired up for the 1992 Olympics in a big way. A new Multipurpose Indoor Range Complex is being built on Hooks International Range for the teams.

"This project has been in the works since 1982," said Capt. Barry S. Washington, unit project officer. "The range was scheduled to be put into the 1992 budget, but we've just recently received approval for it to be part of the 1991 budget."

The completion of the new $2.93 million range is scheduled for April 1992.

"The purpose of this project is to prepare our shooters for the Counseil International du Sport Militaire matches starting here in October 1992," said Washington.

> "The purpose of the range is to prepare our shooters for the CISM matches."
> — Barry Washington

The new range will consist of two individual ranges that operate separately under its own power source. This enables shooters to fire up to four separate international pistol and smallbore rifle disciplines at one time.

In addition to being able to operate multiple disciplines, the range will have a total of 94 lanes — 20 for smallbore rifle and pistol events; 70 for air rifle and pistol; and four for running target air rifle.

Although the entire unit will benefit from this project, the shooters of the international rifle and pistol teams will get the most out of it.

"I'm very excited about the new range project. I feel that its long overdue," said Staff Sgt. S. Fatu, NCOIC for the U.S. Army International Rifle team. "Once this top quality facility is complete we can start training everyone on our team for the Olympics, Pan Am Games, and World Cup competitions. The new range is suppose to be built similar to the Olympic Training Center, which is great because it gives our young shooters an idea of what to expect when they advance to such levels of competition. All and all everyone on the team is looking forward to the new indoor range."

Quarterbacks can make the difference

If there was ever any question as to how important a really good quarterback is to a team, we got our answer in 1990. The key to success for almost every one of the NFL's top teams this past year was great play by the quarterbacks.

The proof was in injuries. Teams that looked invincible with their starting quarterbacks in place fell apart when injuries forced back-ups to lead the team.

Just look at the Houston Oilers. Warren Moon had an outstanding year. First-year coach Jack Pardee's run-and-shoot offense was built around Moon, and he responded by racking up incredible yardage totals. But when Moon went down, the team could do nothing.

The Buffalo Bills lost a step when their starter, Jim Kelly, went down with a knee injury. Back-up Frank Reich didn't look bad, but the Bills limped into the playoffs after losing their last two games.

Then look at the New York Giants. With Phil Simms starting, they were one of the two best teams in the NFL. Second-stringer Jeff Hostetler proved a worthy backup for Simms, but the Giants closed out the regular season by losing two straight games and barely beating the hapless New England Patriots.

Even the Chicago Bears seemed to lose their head of steam when their less-than-spectacular starting quarterback, Jim Harbaugh, was injured.

Given the importance of the quarterback, it was no surprise that the San Francisco 49ers had another great year. Joe Montana stayed healthy most of the season and led his team to the best record in the NFL.

Of course, there were also real disappointments in the position this year. Jeff George, for whom the Indianapolis Colts traded a first-round draft pick and who is paid $1 million a year, looked only average in his debut season. Injury-plagued Bernie Kosar had an awful season with the Cleveland Browns, and "Magic" Don Majkowski showed up just long enough to get hurt.

With all the injuries to quarterbacks and their obvious importance to franchises, is the league doing enough to protect them? In my opinion, the NFL is doing more than enough with the "in the grasp" rule. I don't like the rule, and I'd like to see it modified to account for the talents of a running quarterback like the Philadelphia Eagles' Randall Cunningham.

To me, the injuries are a result of the evolution of defensive play and the advent of linebacker/defensive ends like the Giants' Lawrence Taylor and the Bills' Bruce Smith. These guys are big and fast, and they often hurt quarterbacks who are trapped in the pocket and are smaller than the defenders. I think we'll continue to see that kind of contact made as more and more teams make the move to that kind of defensive strategy. But that is all part of the game. When you put on a football jersey, you should be prepared to take the shots that come with it.

Columbus' Little League expands

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Columbus District Eight Little League Baseball is pleased to announce a new extension of little league baseball, the Challenger program. Special needs' children can now enjoy all the benefits little league baseball has offered since 1939.

The Challenger program provides children who have physical, mental or learning disabilities the opportunity to play baseball and is available to children in the tri-city areas of Fort Benning, Columbus and Phenix City.

Although the rules for the Challenger program differ significantly from those of the conventional little league, the fundamental philosophy and goals for both programs are identical. Each league will have an opportunity to offer a structured athletic activity for each child and to develop teamwork, citizenship and fair play that are the hallmarks of little league baseball. In addition, the Challenger program will offer special children mainstreaming with non-disabled children, self confidence and esteem, enhance gross motor skills and a "buddy system" which provides disabled children assistance both at bat and in the field.

In 1990, five Challenger teams with a total of 60 players, completed 38 games. Of the 60 players, 10 were family members of both active duty and retired military personnel.

Registration for this season will be Saturday, 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. and Sunday, 1 p.m. to 4 p.m, near the information booth at Peachtree Mall. For all those registering, you are requested to provide a raised-seal copy of the child's birth certificate for review. Army Community Services requires that the active duty sponsor be enrolled in the Exceptional Family Member Program. The spring season will begin April 3. Team placement trials will be March 9.

Lydia Brunk, recreation specialist, will manage the Fort Benning team. Volunteers, however, are needed to fill the following positions: coach, team moms, and buddies.

For more information, call 545-7510 or 545-4043.

Students have 'Day in Court'

Fort Benning Schools

Several Dexter School fifth graders recently had their "Day in Court" when Gold E. Locks went on trial. The trial was part of a special program that was brought to the students by the Exchange Club of Columbus. Maj. Billie Jeter and Maj. Willie Dozier, both of the Columbus Police Department, represented the Exchange Club as program presenters.

The program consisted of a videotape showing a court room in which Gold E. Locks was on trial for breaking into the Bears' home. Following the videotape, Jeter and Dozier talked with the fifth graders about what they had seen. A lively discussion took place in which students and the Exchange Club members considered the legal issues involved in Lock's case.

The Dexter fifth graders each received law-related educational materials from the Exchange Club members as well as a certificate which verified that they had had their day in court. A copy of the videotape of Lock's trial was presented to Vicki Rogers, Dexter School's principal, so that other Dexter students will have the opportunity to see and discuss it.

The "Day in Court" program is just one of several projects sponsored throughout the community by the Exchange Club of Columbus.

A near-capacity crowd filled the ballroom of the Main NCO Club Saturday to watch a fashion show featuring wives and children of Fort Benning soldiers involved in Desert Storm.

The show was organized by Joann Bowles and Angel Mitchell, wives from the 197th Infantry Brigade, to provide a break for family members from the tension and worry about soldiers who are deployed to Saudi.

Clothes worn by the models were from J.C. Penney, T.J. Maxx and the Post Exchange. Sharnette Huffam, a senior at Spencer High School, said "we were able to pick out our own clothes. Everyone was comfortable in their clothes because it was their own style."

To encourage a good time for models and guests, master of ceremonies, Command Sgt. Maj. Edward "Fast Eddie" Roberts teased and encouraged models to strut their stuff.

Mickey Sanchez, 5th grade son of Command Sgt. Maj. Manuel R. Sanchez of 2nd Battalion, 18th Infantry, was first to take up the challenge to dance.

"I wanted to do this to sponsor my dad," said Sanchez. "I had a good time and want to dance some more." He was dressed in a neon shirt and "too cool shades" from T.J. Maxx.

Several wives also took up the challenge. "I hope my husband doesn't want to divorce me for dancing like a wild woman," said Deliris "Dee" Rivera, who explained that one of the wives was making a video tape of the program to send the husbands.

For many models, it was a family affair. One set of models featured four generations of the family of Pfc. Theodore List. Modeling were daughters Amber Dawn, Desiree and Camelita, List's wife, Dawn, mother-in-law, Willie Canfield, and grandmother, Anne Cockrum.

"We never expected to sell 469 tickets," said Bowles, "we were only hoping to break even on the food. We gave back $400 in cash to those who attended and I think everyone enjoyed themselves. After the bill from the club is paid, any remaining profits will go to the various units support groups."

According to Bowles, members of 11th Infantry Regiment sold the most tickets, 307, followed by the wives from the deployed units on post. The effort was also supported by the Enlisted Wives Club with a donation of $100.

Faith School sponsors DARE Parent Night

Fort Benning Schools

Faith Middle School is sponsoring its second Drug Abuse Resistance Education Parent Night Thursday.

This special DARE meeting, which will be a 7 p.m. in the school cafeteria, is set up to give the parent of the students currently enrolled in Project DARE an opportunity to meet the instructor, Lt. W.L. Jackson. Parents will also have a chance to hear some of the students talks about what they have learned in their classes.

This program is sponsored by the Military Police Activity and Fort Benning Schools. It has been used in the elementary schools and at the middle school for the past three years. DARE emphasizes having the students develop skills to recognize and resist the social pressures to experiment with alcohol, tobacco, and drugs.

These classes include lectures, videos and role-playing. Students enjoy the opportunity to express their views on peer pressure and substance use. They are able to help each other and support each other with the difficult decisions that they face everyday.

DARE Parents Night is an important part of the DARE program. Students learn that they can depend on the "triangle-of-care" which is School-Police-Parents. Parental support can make all the difference in helping students to resist experimenting with substance that can harm them, and the DARE Parent Night is a chance to get involved in your child's education.

Cols. Exchange Club sponsors luncheon

By Douglas O. Bruk
USAIC Public Affairs Office

The Exchange Club of Columbus, one of the local chapters of the National Exchange Club, is sponsoring weekly luncheons for Fort Benning residents and civilian personnel interested in forming a Fort Benning Exchange Club.

The luncheons are each Tuesday at 11:30 a.m. at the Main Post Officers' Club. Lunch will be free for everyone attending for the first time.

According to Cory Loomis, chairman of the New Club Building Committee for the Columbus Exchange Club, there will be a charter meeting in April. When formed, the Fort Benning club will be the first exchange club on a military installation.

Since the establishment of the first club in 1911, Exchange Club members have been working nationwide to improve their communities.

The National Exchange Club offers a number of programs emphasizing patriotism, community services and youth projects.

The activities of each local chapter depend on community needs, Loomis said.

The more established a club, the more programs it can offer because it has larger resources, he added.

SPIRITUAL

Ash Wednesday brings penance

By Debra Galle
USAIC Chaplain's Office

Ashes placed on the foreheads on Ash Wednesday are an annual reminder of the passage of time and the constant need for repentance.

The ashes are made from the palms, which were blessed on the previous year's Palm Sunday. Centuries ago is was the custom at the beginning of Lent to sprinkle ashes on public sinners as they came to Church in repentance. Ashes on believer's foreheads indicate the willingness to do penance for sins.

The traditional words used as the ashes are placed provide a timely reflection, 'remember man, that you are dust and to dust you will return.'

The alternative verse used in many churches focuses our attention on the deep meaning of the Lenten observance: 'turn away from sin and be faithful to the Gospel.'

Post PTO holds potluck

Fort Benning Schools

Volunteers are an important part of any organization, but would you ever volunteer to cook spaghetti for 400 guests? That's what parents of the White School Parent Teacher Organization did at their recent Spirit Supper. The PTO sponsored the Spirit Supper for the families of White School. More than 400 people turned out for the event and enjoyed a meal of spaghetti and covered dishes.

PTO president, Cristina Pulignani, commented on the success of the event. "I was overwhelmed by the success of the supper and that there were so many parents out there who care. I could see that the children were so proud to have their parents at the school,"she said. "Participation is a key in the child's academic success and welfare."

Pulignani indicated that parents have been very successful in their efforts this year and noted such events as this spirit supper and a recent holiday shopping trip. She attributed that success partly to the increased number of parents willing to volunteer when asked. "We had parents decorating, cooking, serving and cleaning. We even have a volunteer to coordinate all of our volunteers," she said.

This is the second event held at White to celebrate the family unit. Earlier this year a breakfast was sponsored by the school. Janet Wynn, principal of White, commented that it is a goal of the school to unite the family community and the school as one unit.

"This event is one of the ways in which White School is attempting to do its part to support our families during Desert Storm. It's a way of getting together to enjoy friends, our children, and our school,"said Wynn. She also stated that she was delighted by the large turn out. "Our parents get involved," she said. Their participation makes a difference in our school."

Students were also very excited about the supper. They showed parents their classroom work which had been displayed for the occasion or portions of the video which had been created for the school's adopted unit in Saudi Arabia. The theme of the supper was school spirit and children came dawned in their lion T-shirts and wearing the school colors. T-shirts and cups embossed with the school mascot were given away as door prizes. The PTO announced plans to host a picnic for families in the spring.

Parents gain from First Steps

By Wanda Campbell
Bayonet community writer

Newborn babies don't come with instructions. As many bewildered new parents know, there is a need for information and help when you are inexperienced about babies. According to the Georgia Council on Child Abuse Inc., that inexperience can lead to increased risk for child abuse and neglect.

According to Carole Orkin, director of the First Steps program at state headquarters in Atlanta, the program is designed to provide a volunteer who can give the parents the emotional support and parenting education they need to start off on the right foot with their new babies.

Corinne McQueen, local director for the program, explained that trained volunteers visit new parents in the hospital setting to establish contact and provide emotional support and information. To ensure parents receive continued support after leaving the hospital, the volunteers follow up with phone calls to discuss any questions the parents may have. This contact is continued for at least three months.

"New parents have a lot of questions," McQueen said, "about baby care, things as basic as how to feed and diaper a child, and about the mother's health and other concerns. That's where First Steps helps."

At Fort Benning, Summer Harms is responsible for recruiting volunteers and making sure they receive 12 hours of training before they begin work.

Anyone interested in volunteering for the Columbus or Fort Benning area may contact McQueen at 323-8384 or Harms at 689-3155. A training class for new volunteers will be given at The Medical Center Saturday from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m.

First Steps is considered a primary child abuse prevention program, however, McQueen emphasizes that it is a supportive system that is available to any person in need.

Locally, the First Steps program operated at The Medical Center and Martin Army Community Hospital is under the direction of Columbus Regional Chartered Council on Child Abuse Inc. There are 25 volunteers in the Columbus area who work in the First Steps program.

"We are pleased to have caring, empathetic, and loving people in our community who are willing to give of their time and energy to make First Steps a reality," said McQueen.

Energy Branch

Natural gas is best known as the fuel that produces the blue flame that heats and cooks our food, heats our water, and heats and cools our homes. It also performs numerous tasks in the commercial and industrial sectors of the country.

For centuries, natural gas has been used in various parts of the world. The Chinese, 2,000 years ago, piped natural gas through bamboo poles from shallow wells. They then burned the gas to heat large pans to evaporate sea water from salt. It is believed that the first commercial use of natural gas in the western world was for street lighting in Genoa, Italy, in 1802.

Natural gas is transported from the processing plant to the consumer through a system of welded steel pipelines. As of 1988, the United States had 1,167,800 miles of natural gas pipeline — nearly five times the number of miles between the earth and moon. Compression stations, located at intervals along the pipeline system, help local distribution companies dispense natural gas to the consumer.

According to the energy Information Administration, the total United States natural gas consumption in 1989 was 18.8 trillion cubic feet, 4.2 percent above that in 1988. In 1989, natural gas deliveries to residential and commercial uses accounted for approximately 25.4 and 14.5 percent of consumption, respectively; deliveries to industrial consumers amounted to approximately 36.3 percent; deliveries to electric utilities accounted for 14.7 percent; while 9.1 percent of consumption was used in processing and transporting natural gas.

World consumption of dry natural gas (liquids and nonhydrocarbons removed), in 1988 (the year for which the latest data is available), was estimated as being more than 68 trillion cubic feet. The Soviet Union led in consumption, followed by the United States. Combined, these two countries accounted for 60 percent of dry natural gas consumption. The next largest consumers, in descending order, were Canada, West Germany, the United Kingdom and Japan.

If you have any questions about this or any energy-related subject, contact the Energy office at 545-4652 or 545-7928 (Save Watts and Therms)!

ASK THE JUDGE

By Jane M. Winand
Staff Judge Advocate's Office

Q. I am a reservist from New Mexico that was called to active duty. I'll be spending a year here at Fort Benning. This is my first experience being part of a military community and I don't know much about the JAG Office. What services do you provide?

A. The Fort Benning Office of the Staff Judge Advocate (OSJA) is located at Building 5 on the corner of Vibber and Sigerfoos on main post. The OSJA is staffed by military and civilian attorneys and legal specialists. There are four divisions in the OSJA that perform different functions. They are the Claims Division, the Legal Assistance Division, the Administrative and Civil Law Division, and the Criminal Law Division.

The Claims Division adjudicates the property loss claims submitted by soldiers and family members. This is the office that you would go to if your household goods were damaged or lost in transit. The Claims Division also handles claims of property loss or damage caused by the wrongful or negligent acts of other soldiers or Army agents. You may obtain help from this division on a walk-in basis from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. Monday through Friday.

The Legal Assistance Division counsels soldiers and family members on many matters such as divorce, leases, debts, wills, powers of attorney, taxation, reports of survey, and family support. The Legal Assistance Division attorneys at Fort Benning have represented soldiers in adoption, guardianship, and probate proceedings and some small claims actions under the Expanded Legal Assistance Program (ELAP). However, the ELAP has been temporarily suspended because of Operation Desert Storm. Powers of attorney and notarizations are available on a walk-in basis from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. Monday through Friday. Most other legal matters require an appointment which you may obtain by calling 545-3281 or 545-3282.

The Administrative and Civil Law Division advises the command in such areas as contract law, personnel law, 15-6 investigations, line of duty investigations, and environmental law. Many of the actions taken by a commander, such as the elimination of a soldier from the Army, are taken only after this division has advised the commander regarding the regulatory requirements.

The Criminal Law Division advises the command on criminal matters. The attorneys in this division prosecute cases at courts-martial and present the Army's case at elimination boards. They are also involved on the government's side in the Article 15 process.

The Trial Defense Service Office at Building 65 on the corner of Wold Avenue and Edwards Street is also staffed with attorneys, although it is a separate organization from the OSJA. TDS provides counsel to soldiers that are facing court-martial, an elimination proceeding or Article 15 punishment, or are a suspect in a criminal investigation. The TDS Office number is 545-2175 or 545-2176.

Columbus area car buyers discover "The Difference"

Location on Hamilton Road A Success

Budget Car Sales had a successful 1990 despite a soft market and slow new car sales.

"We are pleased with consumers' response to our concept of "The New Car Alternative," said General Manager Craig Kane.

Kane has been busy adding sales staff to accommodate the public attraction to the Budget cars.

"With new car prices these days, it's awfully attractive to know you can drive off the lot in a shiny 1990 or 1991 car for thousands of dollars less than you'd pay new," says Kane.

Budget draws its inventory from an almost infinite selection of current model fleet and special purchase vehicles.

"We have the freedom to stock exactly what the people in the valley want," said Kane. "We're like a self-contained auto mall with Fords, Chevrolets, Toyotas, Chryslers, Hondas all standing side by side. It's the perfect way to shop because you'll know you've got what you really wanted."

Before you even consider buying a new car please read what's being written:

"Used rental cars are new enough that they're still covered by warranties, and they're cheap because the automakers give fleet buyers huge discounts."

USA Today

"... the used rental won't even be that old. In some cases, it may even be the current model year and it will seldom be older than one and a half years. So, the neighbors will think it's a new car... yet somebody else has already eaten the worst of depreciation."

Motor Trend

"Rental companies don't mark up prices as much as do used car dealers. Rental car companies charge from $400 to $1,500 less than what you'd pay for the same automobiles on a dealer lot; savings can amount to up to 20 percent."

Closure exercise tests readiness, brings slight delay for motorists

By Brian C. Sutton
Bayonet staff writer

Some headaches and minor inconveniences were experienced Feb. 15 as the Military Police conducted a post closure exercise.

The exercise, which lasted several hours, included road blocks and vehicle spot checks at various locations around the installation.

To maximize the training, the exact locations and time of the exercise were not pre-announced.

While such exercises could be somewhat disruptive, they are necessary to ensure readiness, Military Police officials said.

To minimize any inconvenience, the exercise was not conducted during rush hours.

Since Operation Desert Storm began, there has been strict enforcement of the vehicle registration stickers that are placed on vehicles.

All vehicles are required to have these stickers in place or be subject to a fine. However, this exercise allowed the MPs to stop vehicles without proper registration and question the occupants' nature of business.

With a current driver's license and proper no-fault insurance and as long as legitimate business was being conducted, individuals were allowed to pass and were given a visitor's sign to place in their vehicle.

"Most of the people have been very cooperative," said Sgt. Vanessa Mayes of the Military Police Activity. "We've had a few people who are mad about the inconvenience, but generally, everyone has been great."

Mayes said the operation worked effectively and efficiently, delaying motorist usually not more than a minute or two, some not at all.

Currently, there are no announced plans of another closure exercise in the immediate future.

Barracks thief gets 15 years

By James C. Rupp
Bayonet staff writer

They say crime never pays.

Just ask Pvt. Gerald D. Bridges, who will be spending the next 15 years at the U. S. Disciplinary Barracks at Fort Leavenworth, Kan., without pay and without his rank.

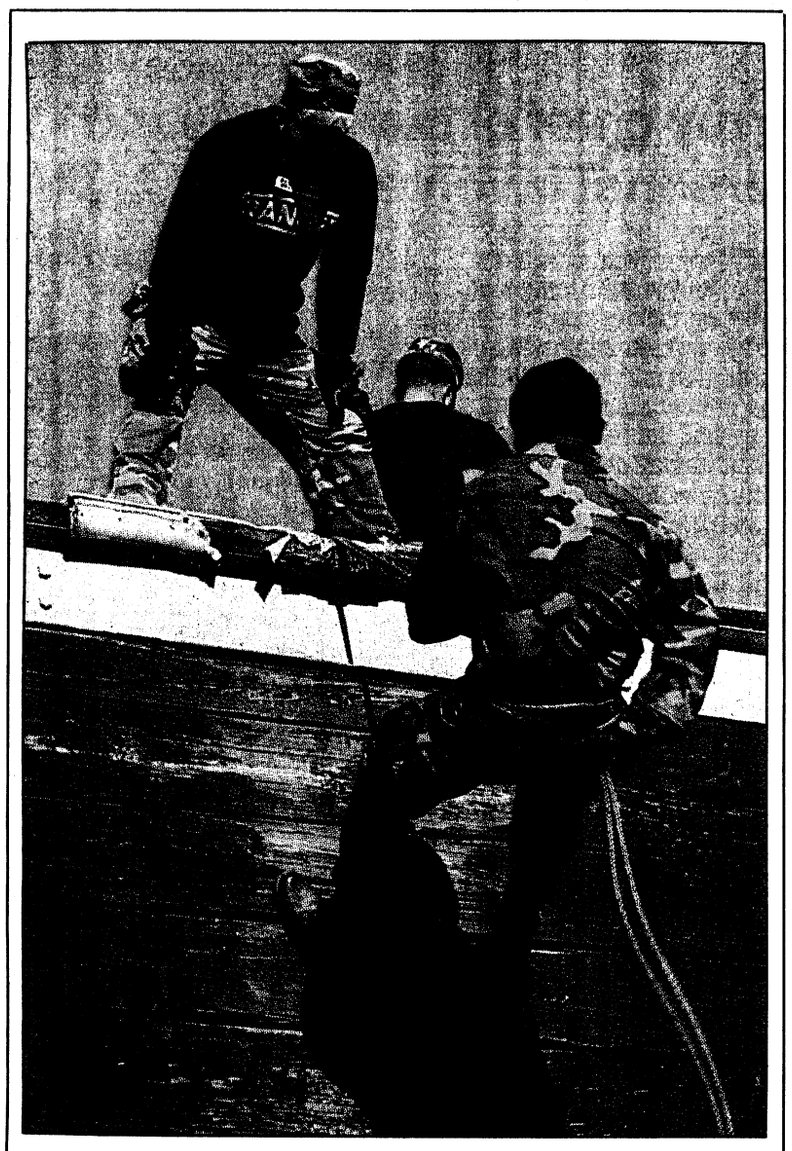
Bridges pleaded and was found guilty before a judge and the laws of the Unified Code of Military Justice of, among other charges, larceny and the willful destruction of government property.

According to Military Police reports, Bridges forcibly entered Building 9015 at Kelley Hill numerous times from Sept. 13 through 17 intent on raiding the personal property of deployed soldiers from the 197th Infantry Brigade, who had stored their belongings inside wall lockers for safekeeping pending their return to Fort Benning.

Bridges entered the third floor where the belongings were stored and commenced to force his way into a total of six rooms, then broke open both the steel wire banding and the locks used to secure the valuables, officials said.

Over the five-day period, Bridges made off with approximately $3,250 worth of various electronics and stereo components, which he then pawned to local pawn shops for about $370, according to reports.

After being questioned by Criminal Investigation Division officials Sept. 21, Bridges signed a statement stating he had not been the individual who had broken into the barracks. On Sept. 28, he retracted that statement and admitted to the crimes during a later CID interview.



> "This was one of the most despicable crimes in the military."
> — Maj. Donald G. Curry

Maj. Donald G. Curry, chief of the Criminal Law Division of the Office of the Staff Judge Advocate, said, "This was one of the most despicable crimes in the military. Here he was, sleeping in his own bed, watching television, seeing his wife, while his unit was over in Saudi Arabia. Factor in all of this and you can see why this was charged so seriously."

Curry also said, "If you're a soldier, think twice about stealing from another soldier. Once we find you, we will do everything in our power to put you with Pvt. Bridges."

Bridges was also charged with housebreaking, the consumption of an illegal substance (cocaine), and failure to appear at his place of duty without authorization.

As of Feb. 13, he was awaiting extradition to Fort Leavenworth.

COMMENTARY

Protesters can't have cake and eat it, too

By Clyde Snively
USAIC Public Affairs Office

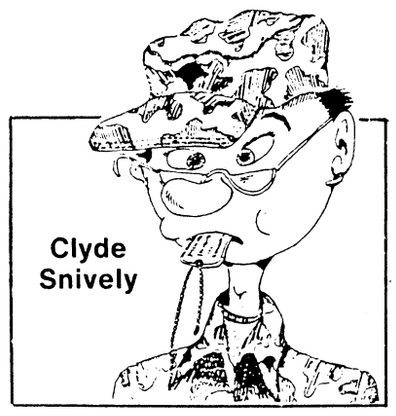
The war must be going well for Saddam Hussein.

It's going well enough for him to make demands on us — "Yankee devils, American swine, pull out of Saudi Arabia, take your puppet Israel with you and expect no bucks from me to compensate Kuwait, and I'll think about pulling out of Kuwait."

Ya gotta admit, the guy's got chutzpah.

That's not all he's got. He's got a hell of a propaganda machine. We kill civilians hanging around military targets, and the entire world jumps on our case.

Saddam's goons waltz through Kuwait, literally raping, pillaging and plundering and who do you hear from? No one. Or he lobs area missiles at cities, and nary a voice is heard.



But hey, we've got something Saddam doesn't have — homegrown war protesters. The war protesters who really get my goat aren't the idiots marching in the streets shouting "No war, give peace a chance." And it's not even so much the "peace-lovers" who turn over cop cars and beat people up.

Nope, the ones who rankle my flesh are the ones who say, "We don't support the war, but we support our soldiers."

How in the heck can you do that? Here you are, sending a message that tells our soldiers, "Get your rear ends out of Saudi Arabia, because we Americans don't think you should be there. But, hey, we support you." So what if they give Saddam more cause to stand firm, hoping the "peaceniks" will triumph. Hey, at least they support our soldiers. Bull.

Sorry folks, you can't have it both ways. Either you support the United States' and most of the rest of the world's position that Saddam is a jerk and needs to be kicked in the rear end, or you don't. And if you don't, you don't support our soldiers.

You may love our soldiers. In fact, some of those soldiers may be near and dear relatives. But, you don't support them. Because support means backing them — morally as well as physically.

Have you seen the latest proposal by people who have more power than they have brains? Now there's a move to exempt mothers from going to combat.

That's got to be discrimination in the grossest sense. If you're a single parent, or one of both parents who are in the military, but a guy, why shouldn't you be exempted? Why just the mother, assuming you're going to exempt anyone?

Besides the fact both parents VOLUNTEERED to serve, how can you single one out over the other. Are the complaints from Panama already forgotten. You know the ones — "women didn't get Combat Infantryman Badges," "women need to be in combat units to get promoted."

This is another case of not being able to have your cake and eat it too.

Speaking of cake, I hope most people have stopped shipping anything but personal letters and tapes to our troops for the time being.

The mail situation is suffering. I read about one soldier who wasn't getting any mail from home, so in desperation he took a letter addressed to "Any Soldier" out of the grab bag. Turned out, it was from his daughter.

I think it's great so many people are writing to "Any Soldier." But it's unfortunate that mail to individuals is getting delayed in the shuffle.

LETTERS

Snively should get his facts, grammar correct

It is often difficult to know exactly what Clyde Snively is: a journalist, a military man, or a military journalist.

Some of his columns are extremely subjective, so I then assume he's writing as a military man with some ax to grind; some are fairly objective, indicating he's then a journalist reporting the facts of the story.

I believe that as a member of the Bayonet staff he should always be writing objectively, as a journalist. But, in any case, he should always be grammatically and factually correct if he wants to retain (or create) credibility.

In his latest effort, in the Feb. 1 edition, he sounds wildly anti-journalist in his defense of the military and raking the media over the coals. While I agree with some of his basic ideas, he got completely carried away with rhetoric and cuteness, besides making two grammatical and one factual error.

In the second column, third full paragraph he said, ". . .the military mislead the journalists. . ." when he should have used "misled," since the paragraph is all in past tense.

In the last column, third full paragraph, he used the term "tale end" when it should have been "tail end." A tale is a story, and you wouldn't say "the story end of his piece," would you? (Maybe Snively would.)

And in the first full paragraph of the last column, he mentioned three television newsmen getting lost, when in fact it was four: the reporter, sound man, cameraman and producer. Even one wrong fact in a story leads the reader to think of the writer as incompetent, lazy, or full of "bovine scatology."

Grammatical errors lead the reader to apply the first two terms to the writer and/or editor.

As to the gist of the article, I sometimes think there are too many journalists there, but when you compare 700 journalists to approximately 500,000 troops it isn't that bad; it's just that they are concentrated and might soon be reduced to reporting on one another rather than the war.

Yes, they do sometimes get carried away with their own importance, but so do some military people and military journalists.

No, the military does not owe the media anything as individuals, but they do owe them answers as representatives of the public. Which would you rather have over there Clyde, 700 reporters or 250 million citizens?

Yes, there often is too much speculation, too much rumor, too much uninformed opinion and non-expert expertise, but that is preferable over no information at all. The viewer/reader should eventually be able to sort the chaff from the wheat — with or without Clyde's help.

And to let you a little bit about me, I'm a retired Marine Corps master sergeant with over 30 years service between 1953 and 1983. The military is responsible and accountable to the people.

While reporters often ask incredibly stupid questions, they are the people's agents for information and should be accommodated as much as possible, within the bounds of military security.

Thoughts on separation

The war has begun. It's on the news 24 hours a day and in my heart every minute.

Friends call and we compare news, ideas, hopes and prayers. Our emotions run wild, from relief that the waiting has stopped to terror of what may lie ahead.

Just the other day, I got packages from the desert — personal items to make moving about easier and uncluttered. What a way to put the war in perspective. It might have made my husband's load lighter, but my heart felt 10 times heavier.

I'm a seasoned Army wife and feel I can handle yet another separation and all that it entails, but the worse part is the not knowing — the uncertainty and the infinity of war.

No one has that magic wand to make this all go away or kids behave or the bills get paid.

So it's our turn to sit and wait and hope that the next knock on the door won't bring our whole world crashing down around us.

Another day passes and with some relief I know I got through it all right. As I turn the lights off, I pray with all my heart that knock never comes.

Army chief of staff urges our personal involvement in AER

Today, with more than one-quarter million of our soldiers on the Arabian Peninsula and thousands of others around the world protecting our national interests, an increasing number of families may develop financial emergencies for which they will turn to Army Emergency Relief.

The deployment of our soldiers to Saudi Arabia and the mobilization of our Reserve forces substantially increased the demand for AER assistance over the last five months of 1990.

This resulted in over 70,000 soldiers and their families being helped by AER with a record $31,600,000 in assistance — the largest amount in AER's history.

We can expect this to increase in 1991.

Our annual fund campaign for AER starts March 1. This year, you should focus on two issues:

- First, ensure that every soldier and family member knows how to get help quickly from AER when needed.
- Second, make sure that every soldier, active and retired, is given the opportunity to make a voluntary contribution to AER.

AER is our organization, and I solicit your personal involvement in making this year's campaign a success.

Army Chief of Staff

Fond farewell

Spec. Chris McIntosh spent some time with his wife, Vanessa, and their two sons, Justin (left) and Ryan before his unit's departure from Fort Benning Feb. 15. The unit was activated with orders to deploy to Saudi Arabia, and its soldiers left Fort Benning Feb. 15 headed to Fort Rucker, Ala., to link up with subordinate units. AER provides assistance for soldiers, their families

By Brian C. Sutton
Bayonet staff writer

Operation Desert Storm has affected not only the mental aspect of Army families, but it has affected the family pocketbook as well.

Since the outbreak of Desert Storm, and earlier Operation Desert Shield, the Army Emergency Relief fund has been depleting at a rapid rate.

In the last five months, for example, AER has assisted more than 71,000 soldiers and their families and have loaned more than $31 million Armywide.

This has resulted in a record low amount of money left in the reserve funds.

Sadly enough, many families may not be able to receive assistance because even more families are expected to need help during 1991.

Here are some questions commonly asked about AER:

Q: What is Army Emergency Relief?

A: AER is a private, non-profit organization incorporated in 1942 by the secretary of war and the Army chief of staff with the mission to provide emergency financial assistance to soldiers, active and retired, and their family members.

Q: Who does AER help?

A: Active duty soldiers, retirees, family members of active and retired soldiers, widows(ers) and orphans of deceased soldiers.

Q: What can AER do?

A: ● Help with emergency financial needs.

● Provide interest-free loans, grants or a combination loan/grant for:

Food, rent or utilities; emergency transportation; essential vehicle repairs; funeral expenses; medical/dental expenses; personal needs when pay is delayed/stolen.

Q: What can't AER do?

A: ● Help pay for non-essentials

● Finance ordinary leave or vacation

● Pay fines or legal expenses

● Help with debt liquidation or consolidation

● Assist with house purchase or with home improvements

● Help purchase, rent or lease a vehicle

● Cover bad checks or pay credit card bills

Q: Do I have to contribute to AER to get help?

A: No. If you are eligible for AER assistance and have a valid emergency need, AER will help you.

Q: How do I get help from AER?

A: ● See your unit commander, then go to your AER section. If no AER section is available in your area go to:

● Nearest Red Cross Chapter

● Air Force Aid Society Section

● Navy Relief Society Auxiliary

● Coast Guard Mutual Assistance Office.

● Ask one of these offices to then refer your emergency to AER.

Q: Does AER receive money from the government?

A: No. AER does not receive any government money.

Q: From where does AER get its funds?

A: ● Voluntary contributions from active and retired soldiers

● Repayment of AER interest-free loans

● Income from investments

Donations are sorely needed due to the impact from Operation Desert Storm.

Fort Benning's office is in Building 2642 on Main Post. Call 545-2536 during normal business hours to receive more information, or stop in to help the relief fund continue to provide soldiers' families with the means necessary to support themselves in times of crisis.

Family members play major role in security

Directorate of Intelligence and Security

Family members can play a major role in preserving the security of allied forces supporting Operation Desert Storm, according to post security officials.

In "innocent" conversation with loved ones stationed in the Gulf, it can be easy to volunteer or receive information that could be sensitive without realizing it.

Information of this sort, whether classified or unclassified, could hurt the security of operations of Desert Storm.

Operations Security, or OPSEC, is a term that defines the process of protecting information (both classified and unclassified) about U.S. military intentions, capabilities and combat operations.

The purpose of OPSEC is to deny adversaries the opportunity to get any information that may give them any advantage, however slight.

Soldiers deployed to the Middle East in Support of Operation Desert Storm are regularly instructed that information, such as unit locations, size strength, organization, plans, equipment status, etc. is sensitive and must not be communicated to anyone outside their unit.

Family members of deployed soldiers can help in the OPSEC effort by refraining from asking soldiers about their location, how long they will be in one area, where they will be going next, the conditions of the unit, the amount of supplies, etc.

If a soldier volunteers such sensitive information, family members should should not discuss it or repeat it to anyone, to include other family members.

The desire to know such information is a natural tendency. While it may serve to ease anxieties here at home, ultimately protecting the troops and their mission must be first and foremost in everyone's minds.

In World War II, the phrase "loose lips sink ships" delivered the OPSEC message well. The message still has merit today.

Rangers train special agents

By James C. Rupp
Bayonet staff writer

Some "new recruits" are being trained by ranger instructors at the Ranger Training Brigade.

These "new recruits" are learning some of the disciplines of ranger training. However, they will not pin the coveted Ranger Tab on their shoulders once their course has ended.

Under the watchful eye of personnel from 4th Ranger Training Battalion, 53 agents from the Department of the Interior's various sub-agencies are training with RTB.

The training began Feb. 10 and will continue through the end of the month.

According to Capt. Thomas L. Maier, commanding officer for Company E, 4th Ranger Training Battalion, the agents are from across the United States and range in ages from 22 to 52.

The agents are from several sub-agencies of the department, including the Bureau of Indian Affairs and the Bureau of Land Management. Park police and park rangers are also being trained.

The agents have undergone water training at Victory Pond, helicopter extraction procedures, and other training.

Maier says that the exercises are building confidence and teamwork between the agents and that the individuals seem to be enjoying and learning from the training.

MARTIN CARE

Clinic for retirees set to open Tuesday

By Jeanne Dickerson
Martin Army Community Hospital

Martin Army Community Hospital announces the opening of the Retiree Clinic, available to all Civilian Health and Medical Program of the Uniformed Services, or CHAMPUS, beneficiaries.

The clinic, which opens Tuesday, will be located in building 392, behind the Infantry Museum on Main Post. Hours of operation will be from 8 a.m. to 4:30 p.m., Monday through Friday.

This clinic is designed to provide primary medical care to retirees and their eligible family members. Initially, care will be provided by two CHAMPUS partners — civilian physicians who agree to accept what CHAMPUS pays for the care provided.

Patients who are eligible for CHAMPUS will receive care at no cost. More physicians may be added if the workload shows a need for increased staff.

Patients who are covered by Medicare, Part B, may receive care in this clinic but will be billed for their deductible and cost share.

Retirees and their families who are currently members of Family Practice at MACH are encouraged to continue to use that clinic.

Patients who prefer to be treated in the MACH Outpatient Clinic may continue to do so.

Patients will be seen by appointment in order to reduce waiting time in the clinic. Patients do not have to be enrolled in this clinic; they may call for appointments. Initially, appointments can be scheduled up to two weeks in advance.

Telephone numbers to make appointments are 545-1161, 545-3835, 545-5564 or 689-0184. For other information, call the Patient Affairs Liaison Office at 544-2278 or 545-4140.

Stop Loss affects selected Reserves

Army News Service

WASHINGTON — The Army's Stop Loss program now applies to everyone in uniform except Individual Ready Reserve soldiers in non-medical specialties who are not now on active duty.

Officials in the Army Office of the Deputy Chief of Staff for Personnel said the most recent Stop Loss expansion added Selected Reserve soldiers to the list of soldiers who may no longer voluntarily separate or retire from the Army.

The Stop Loss now affects:

- All regular active-duty soldiers.
- All Army National Guard and Army Reserve soldiers now on active duty other than for annual training.
- All Individual Mobilization Augmentees and Individual Ready Reserve soldiers (including those on temporary tours of active duty) who are on active duty for any reason other than annual training.
- All members of the Selected Reserve, whether now on active duty or not.
- Members of the Individual Ready Reserve in medical specialties (AOC 60 through 68 for officers; military occupational specialties 600A, 640A and 670A for warrant officers; and any enlisted 91 series MOS.)

Under the Stop Loss, Reserve Component soldiers on active duty are prevented from separating or retiring for a period not to exceed 12 cumulative months from the time they were activated.

The only authorized exceptions to the Stop Loss are:

- Soldiers eligible for mandatory retirement or removal.
- Soldiers eligible for disability retirement.
- Soldiers who are released or discharged in accordance with current regulations for reasons of dependency, hardship, pregnancy, misconduct, unsatisfactory performance and homosexuality, or other punitive separations.

Soldiers can request an exception to the Stop Loss program for compassionate reasons not covered above; these requests must be submitted to the commander of the Total Army Personnel Command in Alexandria, Va.

New food item gives Desert Storm soldiers 'MORE'

By Brian C. Sutton
Bayonet staff writer

Army field menus may be heading in a different direction since commercial food items were added to Operation Desert Storm's food supply.

The U.S. Army Natick Research, Development and Engineering Center in Natick, Mass. has developed a meal more desireable to the deployed troops.

The Meal, Ordered, Ready-To-Eat is a supplemental meal designed as a result of a provisional request to minimize potential shortfalls in the current operational ration stock in support of Operation Desert Storm.

In addition, the MORE will provide additional variety of commercially packaged foods to enhance morale, according to the office of the Army's Food Engineering Directorate.

The MORE is composed of commercial, off-the-shelf, brand-name, individual serving, shelf stable components that are tailored for a ready-to-eat meal.

The MORE is nutritionally adequate (with supplementation in some cases to include bread, fresh fruits and drink items), and requires little to no preparation in the field.

While not as stable as operational rations, the MORE will be capable of withstanding the high heat environment experienced in the Middle East for 30 days at 100 degrees Fahrenheit sustained.

MORE's contents include canned fruits and puddings, candy and beverage items. In all, the Natick laboratory has developed 14 menus for the field environment.

"I think that the MORE was a good change of pace from the Meal, Ready-to Eat," said Pfc. Alyanna B. Clay-Heard, a staff writer for The Bayonet, who returned in January from a special assignment in Saudi Arabia. "I like the additional supplements that are included in it."

Natick continues to research and develop ideas for future menus.

Army offers travel only to families of seriously wounded

Army News Service

WASHINGTON — Families of only the most seriously wounded soldiers arriving in Germany from Operation Desert Storm will be offered invitation travel orders to join them.

"The medical facilities in Germany will be mainly a short-term holding area for most of the troops before transport for further treatment in the United States," said F. R. Lange, deputy chief, Casualty Operations Center, U.S. Total Army Personnel Command.

"Unless the soldiers must remain for a sustained period of time, there is no point in a concerned family member boarding the earliest plane to Germany. The soldier may already be flying back to the United States."

According to Lange, there are other reasons for the limitations on invitational travel orders — the possibility of terrorist threats is one. Another is that since many soldiers serving in Operation Desert Storm are Germany-based, their family members may already be in the theater and therefore ineligible.

Finally, Lange said that the military facilities in Germany simply do not have room to accommodate an influx of family members.

"In some cases, the family members may not speak the language or have the finances to sustain them," Lange said.

"The travel orders cover only transportation costs, not the food or lodging expenses of the travelers."

Lange said family members continue to be eligible for stateside invitational travel orders once requirements are met.

"This means that the family members may be able to fly from their homes to a stateside military base hospital while the service member is recovering," he said.

"Our goal is to move the soldier back to his home base as quickly as possible."

For family members of the most critically wounded soldiers, the Casualty Operations Center can waive passport requirements, approve the travel orders and pay for the transportation costs from their home of record to Frankfurt, Germany.

A critically wounded soldier will be identified by the attending physician, Lange said, who will recommend that the hospital commander request invitational travel orders for the immediate next of kin and one other family member.

Lange stressed, however, that family members should wait for the Casualty Operations Center to call before making any plans, even if the soldier has called to tell them where he is.

Lange said Casualty Operations Center officials will brief family members on everything they will need to know and do before travel.

Desert Storm ID cards available to Reserve, Guard family members

Directorate of Community Activities

Desert Storm identification cards are available to Reserve and National Guard family members.

To get a card, National Guard and Reserve family members are invited to join the Desert Storm Family Association if their spouses are deployed.

The association provides a framework for communicating the needs of families and programs that are available to meet those needs. The association also publicizes and promotes the use of Army facilities and programs that have been established to benefit all families.

Identification cards are also provided for family members who are eligible for free or discounted special events, activities and commercial sponsorship that may assist in meeting the emotional and material needs of family members during deployment.

To get an application for a Desert Storm ID card, contact the Family Assistance Center, Building 2640, in Soldiers' Plaza or call 545-5516 or 545-7517.

1st black shooter turns tides in marksmanship

By Charlene L. LaDay-Hill
U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit

Through the years, blacks have made their mark in sports — marksmanship is no exception.

Robert L. Jones, a retired soldier and former shooter, was the first black shooter assigned to the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit. He was also the first black to become a member of the All-Army Shooting Team.

This 63-year-old Petersburg, Va., native advanced from post-level pistol matches all the way to being selected for the All-Army Shooting Team.

"I started shooting at local pistol matches at Fort Knox, Ky., in 1956," he said. "After winning the post pistol championships that year, I advanced to compete in the 2nd Army matches at Fort Meade, Md. There I was selected to represent the 2nd Army in All-Army team matches at Fort Benning."

The next year, Jones was selected to go with the All-Army team to the national matches at Camp Perry, Ohio. Although the team didn't win that year, Jones shot well enough to become a member of the USAMU.

Through the years, Jones kept shooting his way to the top, both as a team member and an individual. In 1960, he set a national record in the warm-up matches. He was also a member of the National Matches Gold Cup Team, which won the championship in 1961.

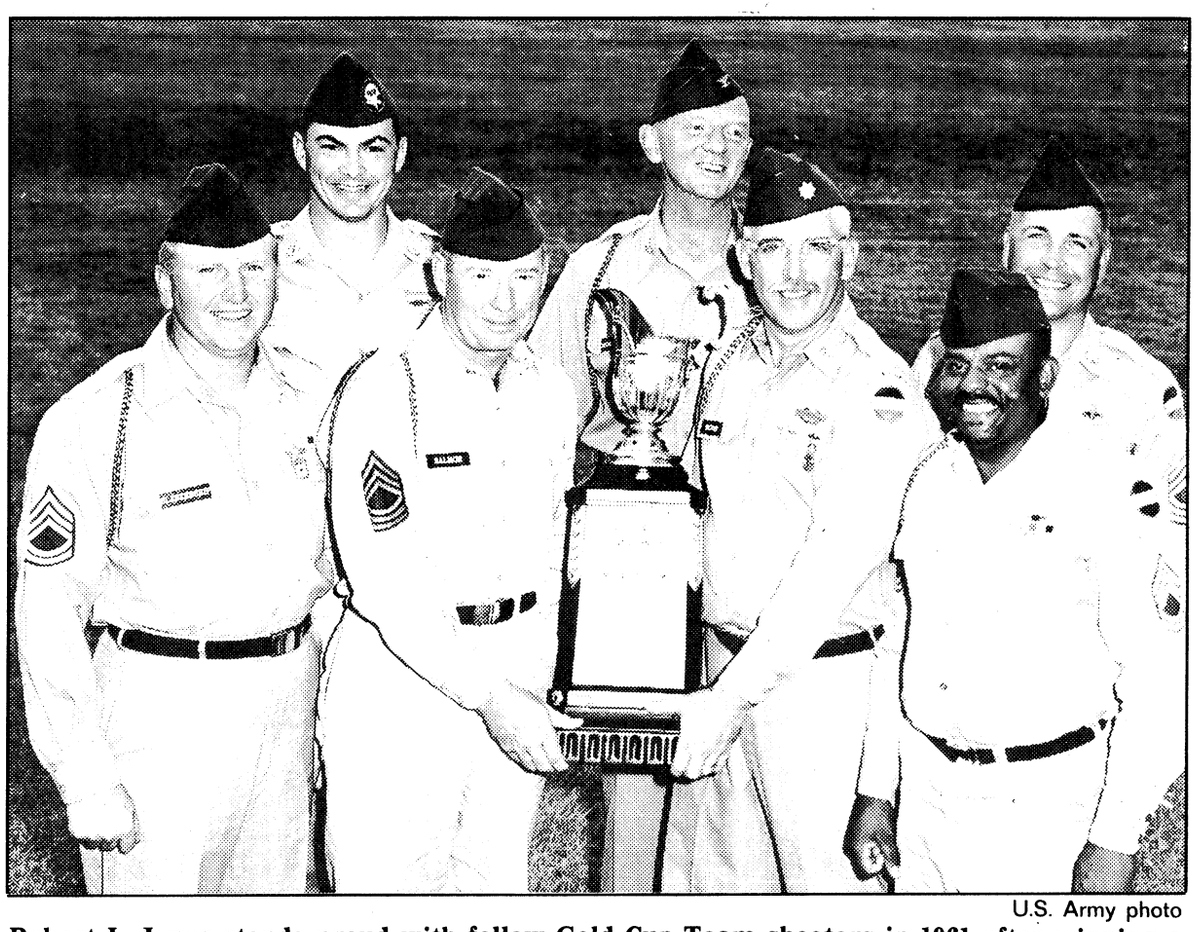
During the time Jones was a shooter, blacks were experiencing many forms of racial prejudice; for him it wasn't as bad as most people would imagine.

"I didn't face any prejudice from the team at all," said Jones, "but the public was a different story. Some people had problems adjusting to a black shooter being a member of an Army team in the beginning. In some areas, it got to the point where our team wouldn't shoot if they couldn't accept me."

Travel was also difficult for the team, Jones added. "Because we were an integrated team, a lot of places wouldn't give us gas or allow us to spend nights in their motel rooms."

By 1962, the All-Army team had four black shooters (one coach, three shooters), but the increase in black shooters didn't decrease the racial prejudice as quickly.

"I remember one incident where this host club held a banquet for the shooters after the matches. They gave us black shooters $20 and told us to go and eat somewhere downtown. After that, the USAMU commander back then made it clear that the Army team would not participate in any match if all shooters could not receive equal treatment," he noted.



Through the years, Jones has seen a lot of changes in marksmanship, which he says has been for the better.

"The change that has occurred with blacks in marksmanship and the military is tremendous," he said. "A lot of racial barriers have been broken. There was a time when blacks weren't allowed to be part of gun clubs; now they're given the same rights and privileges as white shooters," said Jones who retired in December 1969, after 24 years of service.

Jones now works as a bus driver at the transportation motor pool. Even now, he still keeps in touch with old friends and new ones from USAMU.

"I'm proud to say that USAMU has always had outstanding officers and NCOs (non-commissioned officers). I've met a lot of great people there and made some good friends," he said.

The contributions made to sports by people like Jones help bring Martin Luther King Jr.'s dream closer to becoming a reality.

Benning's 215th Finance provides support in Saudi

By Pat Johnson
Armed Forces Radio and Television Service

"All the soldiers of the 215th Finance Unit are doing a superb job of providing support to the soldiers in Saudi Arabia," said Col. Barry Baer, commander, 18th Corps Finance Group (Airborne).

The 215th Finance Support Unit from Fort Benning has been providing finance support in Saudi Arabia since the middle of September. The unit was the first finance support unit to fully deploy. The commander, Lt. Col. Morgan "Mo" Denny said, "We came ready to perform our mission under any conditions. We had the right equipment, the proper training, and the right people to do the job."

Just as any unit deployed in support of Operation Desert Storm, the 215th Finance has been faced with many challenges. Mission support has taken the 215th soldiers all over Saudi Arabia and to several other countries.

Pay support is provided to all of the major commands. "We have been asked to do much more than required doctrinally," said Denny. "For example," Denny continued, "we are paying contracts for all services and providing the Air Force, Navy and Army the necessary Saudi riyals, dollars and coins."

Through the first week of February, the 215th has handled more than 87,000 transactions totaling more than $77 million.

The volume of transactions has been very high. Through the first week of February, the 215th has handled over 87,000 transactions totaling more than $77 million. This includes cashing 43,000 personal checks, almost 10,000 casual pays, 645 contracts worth over $45 million, almost 800 travel payments, and over 28,000 conversions from dollars to Saudi riyals.

All pay changes are routed back Fort Benning for input to the soldiers pay record by electronic mail with the hard copy document express mailed.

Denny expressed great pride when talking about the operation back at Fort Benning: "Without a doubt, the employees within the Fort Benning Finance and Accounting Office have provided superb support for this operation.

"Not only are they accomplishing the increased mission at Fort Benning, they are getting all of our input in expeditiously," Denny continued. "The other finance units in Saudi are envious of the great job of timely, accurate pay input we are getting from the Fort Benning Finance and Accounting Office."

Baer also lauded the efforts of the finance support that the 215th is getting from Fort Benning. "They (the 215th) are pleased with the support of the soldiers and civilians at Fort Benning, particularly the Finance and Accounting Office because without their support they could not do the job they are doing here in Saudi Arabia."

The soldiers of the 215th are performing their mission well, but certainly look forward to returning to their loved ones and again serving the soldiers at Fort Benning.

43rd Engineers construct roads, facilities in desert

By S. A. Young
43rd Engineer Battalion

SAUDI ARABIA — The location is new, but the faces are familiar.

Fort Benning's own 43rd Engineer Combat Battalion (Heavy), now Task Force 43 with the addition of three National Guard units and an active duty platoon, is presently in direct support of Operation Desert Storm.

Task Force 43 provides mobility, survivability, and general engineering support to forward elements of the multinational force.

"Knowing that what I'm doing helps my country win the war is a great feeling," says Spc. Dirk Zaiser, a draftsman in the Task Force 43 construction shop.

The Task Force is a self-sufficient organization despite its remote location. Working side by side with carpenters and heavy equipment operators are the unit mechanics, logisticians, food service personnel, medics, asphalt and rock crushing experts, and personnel service specialists.

Task Force 43 is commanded by Lt. Col. Philip M. Jones Jr., who said he is confident in the ability of his soldiers to complete challenging missions. "The soldiers of the Task Force have formed a great team with the tremendous capability to accomplish any task," he said

"They know their jobs and are performing magnificently under difficult conditions," he added.

The troops of Task Force 43 are living in a consolidated base camp, however mission requirements often dictate that a company deploy to a remote location.

One such mission site, a large enemy prisoner of war camp, is being constructed by Charlie Company. The project non-commissioned officer in charge said, "Missions like this let each soldier see his contribution to the cause." At certain times the task force had soldiers spread out over 300 miles.

Lately, the Saudi soil has been Saudi mud. Over three inches of rain in January has surprised many soldiers who expected a hot, dry desert climate.

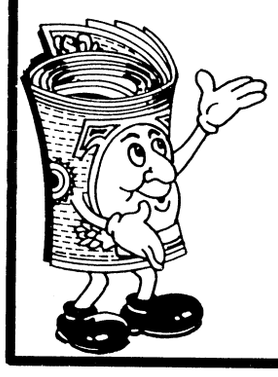
"I sure didn't expect to see frost on vehicle windshields one day and sandstorms the next day," said Spc. Darren Dillard, a supply specialist.

Cold weather and rain have had little effect on the amount and quality of combat support provided by Task Force 43.

The attachment of three National Guard companies both increased and augmented the battalion's capabilities.

Two construction support engineer companies brought with them the capability to run asphalt plants, pavers and rock crushers.

"This beats the heck out of paving parking lots at Fort Pickett," said Spc. Barry Seals as he put the finishing touches on a parking apron.



A combat support equipment company nearly doubled the unit's earth-moving capability.

Commanded by Capt. Thomas Pozerski, the company has been given the mission of constructing a new road, which will be used to carry supplies to units.

An asphalt platoon arrived approximately two weeks before the battalion. "That platoon completed the first mission for the task force," added Command Sgt. Maj. Lawrence C. Maxwell.

Georgia Reservists take to the skies

By Alyanna B. Clay-Heard
Bayonet staff writer

Everyone is aware of the many Army Reserve and National Guard units that have been activated in the massive call-up directed by President Bush in support of Operation Desert Storm.

The very word "call-up" brings to mind images of troops in desert camouflage uniforms boarding a plane, embarking for God-knows-where in the Middle East.

For several units, this might very well be the case, but one medical Army Reserve unit from Georgia has been called to accomplish a critical mission closer to home.

The 145th Medical Detachment from Marietta, Ga., a suburb of Atlanta, has stepped in to answer the call to duty at Fort Benning.

The 61-man detachment is an air ambulance unit and is temporarily replacing the 498th Medical Detachment, now serving in Operation Desert Storm. Of the 19 officers and 42 enlisted personnel, only 10 are actual medics.

> "Everyone was ready to go. When we arrived at Fort Benning, you might say that we hit the ground running."
> — Maj. Frances M. Tolle

The rest are aviation and aviation-related supply personnel, along with one administration clerk and two mechanics.

Their mission is to provide ambulatory rescue of injured from the site of the accident to a medical facility, and provide first-line stabilizing care to the patient en route to the facility.

The unit supports all the training units on Fort Benning, as well as any other units that might call on them in a time of emergency.

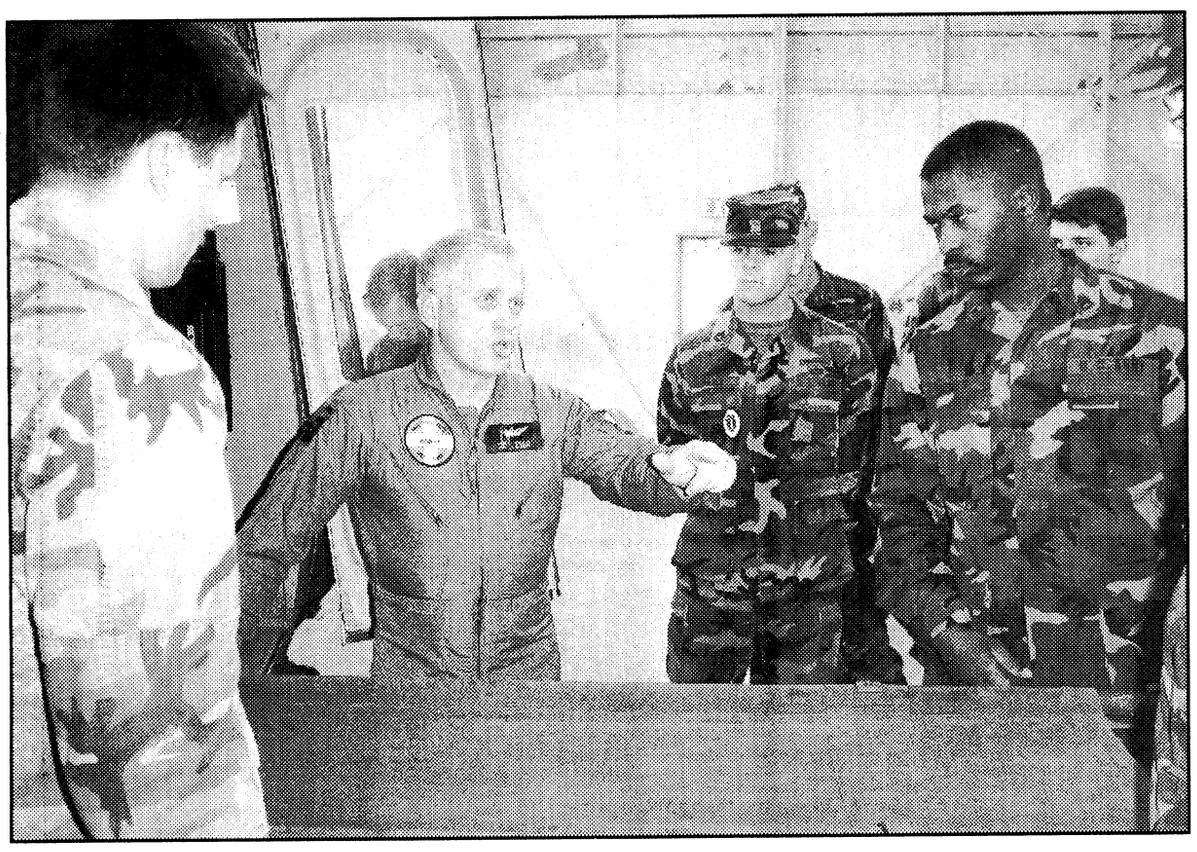
The unit also provides first aid training to range control and instructor personnel, and they also have a contract with Columbus to provide emergency transportation to accident victims and newborn babies.

In addition to their other duties, the 145th has also trained another Army Reserve unit that has come to Fort Benning in air ambulance rescue procedures.

Members of the 70th Training Division received training from the medical unit and were impressed with the professionalism of the lessons and the soldiers that taught them.

"The blocks of instruction were very informative ," said Cpl. Gerald Jenkins, member of the 70th, now working as range control personnel. "It's important for soldiers to be trained in these types of procedures. The 145th really is informed, they really know their stuff. It's as though they did this type of training every day. I was impressed."

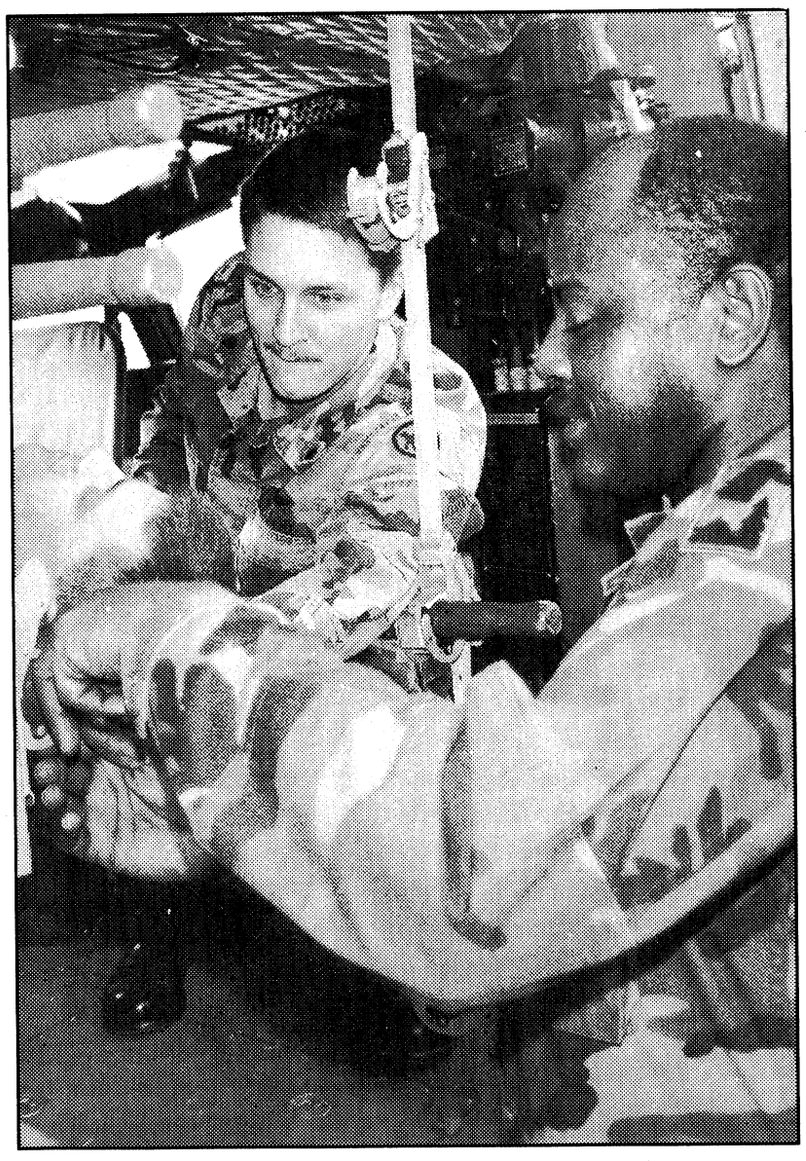
Maj. Francis M. Tolle, commander of the unit, is pleased with the treatment the unit has received from Fort Benning and with the way the members of the unit themselves have reacted to playing a role in the crisis.



"Everyone was ready to go. We have a really good working relationship within the unit, we've been together for years, and when we arrived at Fort Benning, you might say that we hit the ground running," said Tolle.

"Within hours, we were in-processed, billeted and ready for action," he added.

Fort Benning has been most receptive to the members of the unit, said Chief Warrant Officer Clay Holloway, public affairs officer of the 145th.



"We have not felt any animosity from the community of Fort Benning, and no one has showed that 'oh, they're just reservists' attitude toward us," said Holloway.

"Everyone has been most courteous in helping us with everything from directions to getting our finances straight. Fort Benning is an exceptional post with exceptional people," he added.

Co. A, 1/29th nabs hoop crown

By Brian C. Sutton
Bayonet staff writer

It was a close one Feb. 15 as Company A, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry beat the 988th Military Police Company 53-47 for the United States Army Infantry Center basketball championship at Briant Wells Field House.

Co. A, 1st Bn., 29th Inf. overwhelmed the 988th MP Co. with quick action play that hurled Co. A to their victory and a post championship.

Co. A, coached by Carl Battle, took off early in the game with Corey Cathy scoring eight of the first half's 27 points and Terence Sampson taking seven.

The MPs weren't dead during the first half, however. Quick hustle and determination allowed Jerry Payne to score eight points of his own, which was the MPs first half highest scorer, but it was not enough to make the scores even. The first half ended 27-20 with Co. A in the lead.

Second half action proved to be a little better for the 988th. The floor was dominated by Samuel Rogers who scored 13 points, including one three-point shot.

Payne once again had a good showing for the half with another six points added to his record which gave him an ending total of 14 points.

The only three-point scorer for Co. A was Sampson who churned out four three-pointers, three of them in the second half which accounted for one-third of the team's second half 26 points.

Although the 988th scored more times and outmaneuvered Co. A a few more times in the second half, it wasn't enough to capture the victory for themselves.

The game's highest scorers were, for Co. A, Rogers who blasted the MPs with 18 points and, for the 988th, Sampson who crammed in 16 points for a good showing.

"I feel we were not really in the game. Our big scorer wasn't in the game because of an injury. I think we would have come out a winner if he was in there," said Jerome "Silks" Wilks, a member of the 988th's team.

However, the 988th will have to wait until next season to, once again, try for a championship.

From race car to passenger car

Everybody knows that the race cars I drive are state-of-the-art. What a lot of people don't realize is that they double as laboratories for the development of technology for passenger cars.

In the old days, it was easier to see the developmental side of racing. Items such as rear-view mirrors, tubeless tires, electronic ignitions, electronic fuel injection, superchargers and turbochargers all were used in racing before they became part of the family car.

A current project in racing that eventually will be used extensively in passenger cars is the electronic engine-maintenance system. These systems monitor and control virtually every other system in the race car through the use of sensors and chips. Racing is developing a number of other new technologies and materials that make the sport safer for the participants and also will be a big part of the future of the car business.

Lightweight, space-age materials such as Kevlar and carbon fibers take tremendous heat and stress. Eventually, they will help make passenger cars more fuel-efficient — because they will be lighter overall — and safer — because they will absorb impact better.

Computers already have become an important part of the operating systems in the family car, but the future of electronics is limitless. Right now our Marlboro Penske racing team, through on-board telemetry, can get readouts of virtually everything the car — and the driver — is doing while it is happening. Beyond that, computers also are taking the design and aerodynamics of passenger cars to new levels. And, as the information we get becomes more sophisticated, the translation to passenger cars helps bring a higher level of performance and safety.

The day will come when the technology in your family car will allow you to read the inflation of each tire at any given moment, to map a route to your destination on a dashboard screen and to perform other cutting-edge functions that people used to believe only happened in space shuttles or in science fiction.

The connection between race cars and passenger cars overlaps somewhat. The basic ideas can come from the car companies or the race teams. Once a race team gets its hands on new technology, it begins to test and develop it as quickly and efficiently as possible. But race teams have limited resources.

Once the technology gets to a certain point, it's often a case of the big car companies taking over the research and development. They have the people and dollars to build on concepts that originated on the racetrack.

Racing is a key to the development of passenger-car technology, and it's definitely a big part of the move to the future.

Emerson Fittipaldi, former two-time Formula One World Champion, is the 1989 PPG Indy Car World Series Champion and 1989 Indianapolis 500 winner. He drives for Marlboro Racing Team Penske.

Pros make a 'point' about finding fish

By Earl Bentz and Steve Price
Outboard Marine Corporation

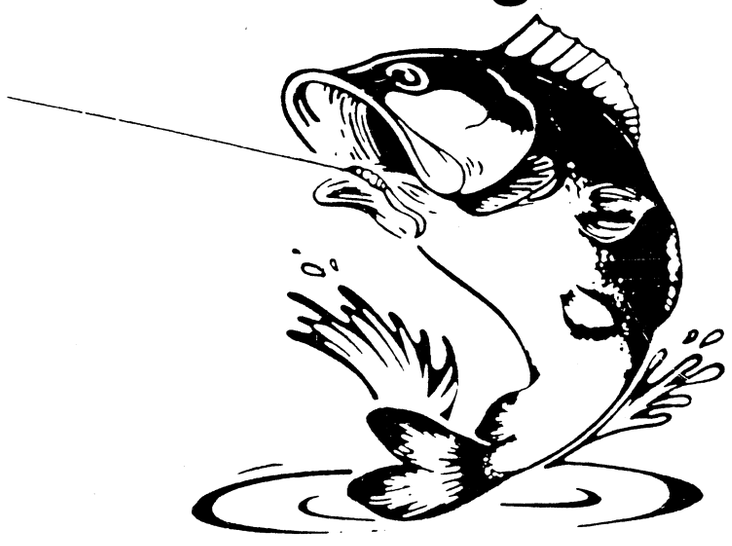
Bass — and bass fishermen — are attracted to lake and river points like bees to honey.

The only problem for bass fishermen is catching those bass.

"I think there are two secrets to fishing points," says popular Evinrude Outboards Pro Staff member Guy Eaker of Cherryville, N.C. "The first is covering the point thoroughly with proper casting, and the second is making sure those casts are moving the same direction as the current."

Eaker prefers a technique known as fan-casting, in which he sends each cast out at a slightly different angle so he systematically covers a fan-shaped section of water in front of him.

"I always get on the side of the point, not on top of it," he emphasizes. "I begin fishing the shallow end of the point nearest the shore first, covering water from five to about eight feet. Then I move down the side of the point into slightly deeper water and fan-cast the 10 to 15 foot depth range.



"You never get on the point itself for fear of spooking any bass that might be there on top."

The second important part of the Evinrude pro's technique involves the direction of his casts. He always fishes so his retrieves bring the lure back in the same direction water is moving.

"Always get on the downstream side," Eaker emphasizes, "because bass will be facing into the current to watch for baitfish or other food being washed toward them.

"Even the wind can cause current," he adds, "and position fish differently than you might otherwise expect."

The currents created by water drawn through power dams will have a definite positioning effect on bass, says the well-known pro, and can cause fish to move within minutes after the current begins. On his depthfinder, Eaker has watched bass relocate from deep channels to the sides of points in mid-afternoon when water started being pulled through a dam.

"I once fished a brushy, stumpy shoreline with a spinnerdait and never had a strike," Eaker remembers. "Then on one cast, I noticed the lure was being washed to one side by current from a dam. I turned around and fished that same bank the opposite direction and caught 18 pounds of bass.

"On my first pass down the bank, I had been fishing behind the bass and they never turned around to get the lure."

When he's fishing points, Eaker often chooses a crankbait and changes models as he works from shallow water into deeper. Once he locates bass, he may switch to a jig or plastic worm if he thinks it will be more productive.

"Crankbaits are among the best "fish-finding" lures you can use," he says, "because you can cover a lot of water very quickly with them. Bass like them, too, and if there are fish around, you can usually tempt at least one with a crankbait."

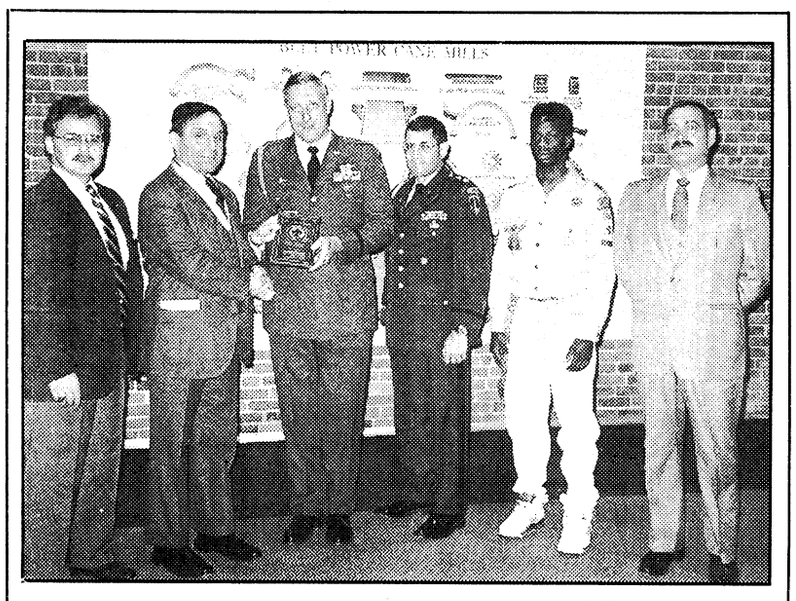
Trainer/Maintainers

Thirteen soldiers, one from each unit on post, will be honored Monday as Fort Benning's "Trainer/Maintainer of the Month" for February.



This program, implemented by post commander Maj. Gen. Carmen J. Cols. Exchange Club sponsors luncheon

By Douglas O. Bruk
USAIC Public Affairs Office

The Exchange Club of Columbus, one of the local chapters of the National Exchange Club, is sponsoring weekly luncheons for Fort Benning residents and civilian personnel interested in forming a Fort Benning Exchange Club.

The luncheons are each Tuesday at 11:30 a.m. at the Main Post Officers' Club. Lunch will be free for everyone attending for the first time.

According to Cory Loomis, chairman of the New Club Building Committee for the Columbus Exchange Club, there will be a charter meeting in April. When formed, the Fort Benning club will be the first exchange club on a military installation.

Since the establishment of the first club in 1911, Exchange Club members have been working nationwide to improve their communities.

The National Exchange Club offers a number of programs emphasizing patriotism, community services and youth projects.

The activities of each local chapter depend on community needs, Loomis said.

The more established a club, the more programs it can offer because it has larger resources, he added.

Handmade rosaries bring joy to Benning soldiers

By Debra Galle
USAIC Chaplain's Office

Soldiers reach out as the Catholic chaplain carries the handmade rosaries down the isle of the church, each one grasping a strand of the olive drab-colored beads linked with the black plastic cross.The rosaries were made one by one, bead by bead. As each was fashioned, the crafter knew a young soldier would soon reach out for it.

Now with the shadow of Desert Storm over each soldier's head, the need for inner peace and solace seems greater than ever. Religious materials are welcomed.

A small group of women from Fort Benning have made more than 5,500 rosaries for the trainees. Monica James began the group, sponsored by the Fort Benning Chapter of the Military Council of Catholic Women, in 1989.

James said she was inspired by volunteers from Holy Family Catholic Church in Columbus and Saint Patrick's Catholic Church in Phenix City who have made thousands of rosaries for Fort Benning soldiers as well as missions world-wide.

Twenty women from Fort Benning, St. Anne's Church, Holy Family, Our Lady of Lourdes and St. Patricks of Phenix City were honored recently for their efforts in supplying our troops with rosaries.

More than 30,000 trainees pass through Fort Benning each year. Nearly one-third of those troops are Catholic. Distributing handmade rosaries to these trainees is a form of 'reach out ministry.'

One Fort Benning chaplain, Don Taylor, says he has seen priests distribute the rosaries. "I've seen trainees walk with rosaries, they take them very seriously. When things are tense, I've seen Protestant and Catholic kids with any combination of New Testaments and rosaries. This is a time when they reach out in their faith."

A private from Company B, 1st Platoon, handwrote a note to the lady who made his rosary. "I want to thank you for sharing your love of the Lord with me by making a rosary for me. I have always known that a person who shares their heart with other people will always have a place in the house of the Lord." Another troop wrote, "..I don't even know you, yet I have a very deep respect for you. I know it takes a lot of effort and time to make all those rosaries. You have helped me get closer to the Lord."

Whatever the response from those who receive the rosaries, the therapy the crafters enjoy is worthwhile.

"I feel like this is something I can do to show them I care," says Pat Barnard, of Holy Family Catholic Church. "I don't personally have anyone in the Gulf, but these soldiers belong to everyone."

A rosary-making workshop, sponsored by the Fort Benning Chapter of the Military Council of Catholic Women, is held each Wednesday at the Religious Education Center. All material and baby-sitting is provided. Call 682-8713 for more information.

Catholics observe Lent with special activities, programs

By Debra Galle
USAIC Chaplain's Office

Deep purple cloths cover the familiar life-size crucifix behind the alter. The joyous blends of harmony proclaiming "Hallelujah" will be silent for the next 40 days. A time of introspection has begun.

Lent is noted as a special season of grace, emphasizing the importance of prayer, penance, and charitable works.

Ash Wednesday and Good Friday are the most important penitential days of the liturgical year. They are days of both fast and abstinence.

The Fort Benning Catholic community announced several special programs, observances and activities for the season of Lent and Holy Week.

A traditional observance during Lent is the Stations of the Cross, offered Fridays at 7 p.m., in the Main Post Catholic Chapel.

For more information on Lenten observances and services, call Main Post Catholic Chapel, 545-1452.

Denture wearers often complain of losing grip

By David R. Lewis
U.S. Army Dental Activity

A common complaint of denture wearers is that their dentures gradually become less stable and efficient when chewing or speaking. This leads to sore spots on tissue supporting the dentures, as well as to embarrassment and loss of confidence in social situations.

The ridges of gum tissue remaining after loss of the natural teeth are underlined by the bone which originally provided their support. After tooth loss, these ridges often shrink. The rate and amount of this remodeling process varies from person to person, but is most rapid in the first year following tooth extraction.

Dentures are made from hard plastic resin, and do not change their shape. As changes in the mouth occur, the dentures become loose.

The upper, or maxillary denture, rests on the gum ridge but also against the roof of the mouth. This provides good support as well as longer lasting stability.

By contrast, the lower denture is supported by only the thin 'U-shaped" gum ridge, and is usually less stable. It is held in place through the coordinated effort of the tongue, lips and cheeks. Over time, the bone beneath the lower gum ridge shrinks four times faster than that under the upper gum-ridge.

There are several ways to help maintain the comfort and fit of dentures. The best advice is to leave them out of the mouth while sleeping or at least 6 hours per day. This allows the supporting gum tissues to rest and to benefit from the natural cleansing action of the tongue. When dentures are cleaned the gum-ridges and the roof of the mouth should be massaged with a soft brush.

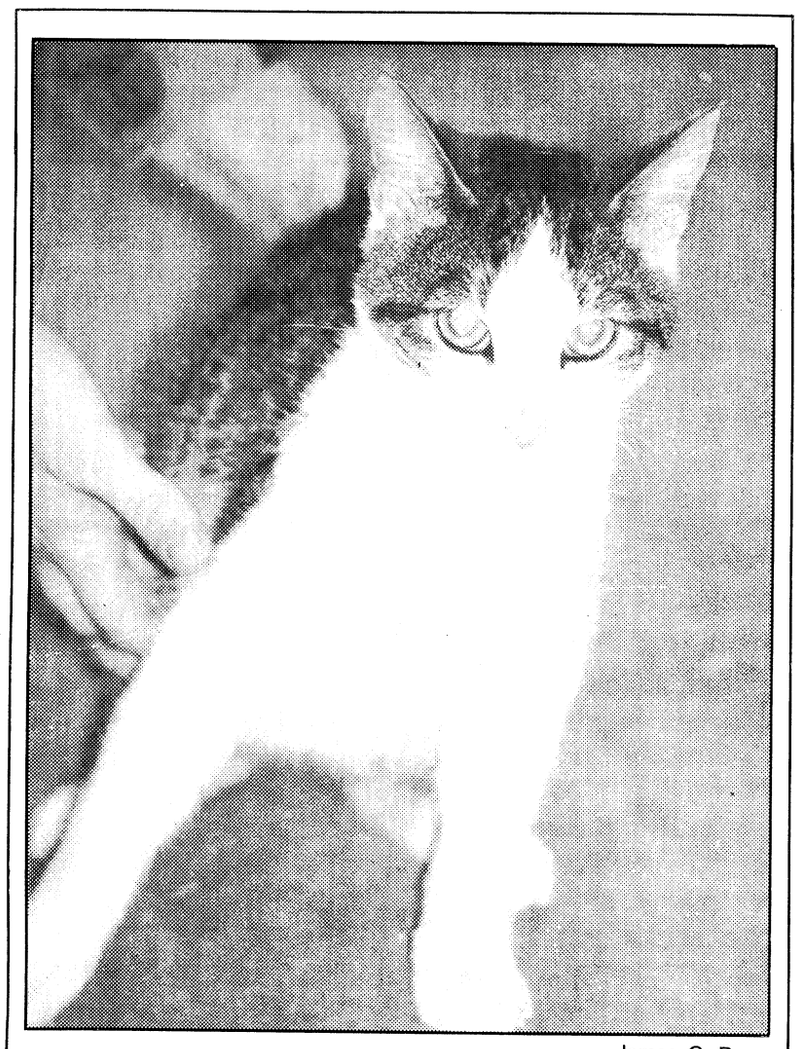
As dentures become loose, the proper treatment, is to remake or reline the inside portion of the denture. If the teeth or outer surfaces are deteriorating, a new denture must often be constructed. The dentist will ensure that the tissues of the mouth are healthy before making a new denture or relining one. Some patients rely on powders, adhesives, or creams to keep dentures in place. These products may only mask a deterioration of the gum-ridge and can perpetuate an unhealthy condition of the tissues.

If you have problems with your dentures, or questions about your dental health, don't rely on home remedies; consult your dentist.

ASK THE JUDGE

By Michael H. Lane
Staff Judge Advocate's Office

Q. I am retired from the Army and am drawing military retired pay. I am expecting to retire from my second job next month when I reach age 65, and draw Social Security. My wife is age 63, and already receives Social Security. We file federal and Georgia income tax returns, and want to cut down on our taxes. Do you know anything about a Georgia law that says retirement pay is exempt from Georgia tax?



A. Effective Jan. 1, taxpayers over 62 years of age are allowed to exclude up to $10,000 of retirement income in computing their Georgia taxes. The exclusion applies to each taxpayer individually. The exclusion is explained in the Georgia income tax booklet on page 2 and page 4. To summarize the rules:

- The taxpayer must be age 62 or older, or totally disabled.
- The exclusion is a $10,000 maximum for each taxpayer, or up to $20,000 on a joint return if each qualifies.
- A taxpayer may use up to $4,000 of his earned income (from W-2) to reach the $10,000 figure. All unearned income (interest, dividends, and the like) may be considered to reach the $10,000 limit.
- For jointly held unearned income, each spouse may only use one-half of the income in computing his or her separate $10,000 maximum amount.

The State already excludes Social Security payments from tax, and that exclusion continues in effect in addition to the new rules. The following examples will illustrate:

- Taxpayer over 62 has W-2 earnings of $12,500, savings account interest of $500, and pension income of $5,500. He will report total taxable income of $9,000. All pension income is excluded ($5,500), earned income of $4,000 is excluded, and unearned income of $500 is excluded, totaling a maximum of $10,000.
- Taxpayer and Spouse are over 62. He receives $10,500 in pension income, and she receives $5,000 from Social Security, and $500 from a CD in her name only. They have $2,000 in interest in a joint bank account as well. They file a joint return, and he excludes $10,000 (the pension) on the back of the form 500. She excludes $6,500 ($500 from her CS, $5,000 from Social Security, and $1,000 from the joint account).

If you have questions about taxes, call your unit tax officer or the Tax Office located in building 5 at 545-7026. The Georgia Revenue Department in Columbus has an agent on duty to answer tax questions as well, at 649-7451.

Fall injures 2

By James C. Rupp
Bayonet staff writer

Two were injured at the mall on Fort Benning when a construction worker fell through a skylight Feb. 19 and struck a passer-by.

Post authorities say that Clinton E. Whatley, 18, of Columbus was working on the roof at the mall when he stumbled on a ledge, crashed through a skylight and plummeted to the floor below, hitting Paula L. Lewis, 51, of Cusseta.

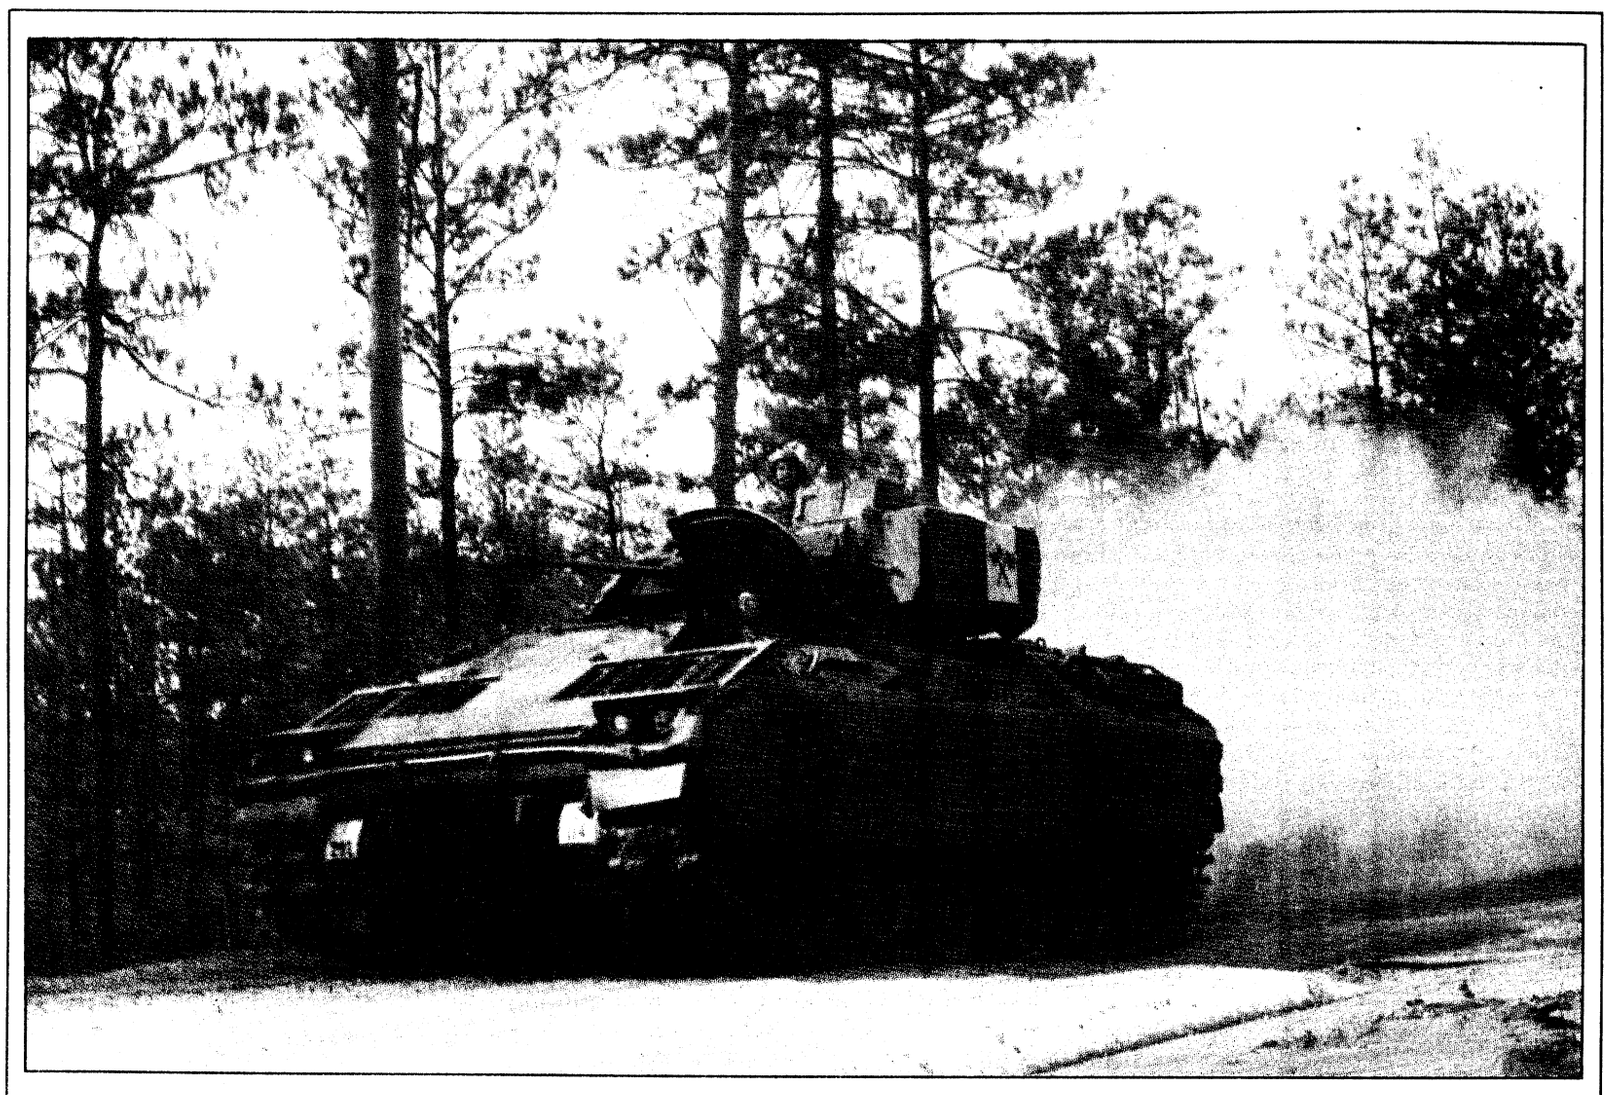
The two were taken to Martin Army Community Hospital, where Whatley was treated for head and neck injuries, before being transferred to The Medical Center in Columbus around 11:50 p.m. He was released from treatment there on Feb. 24.

Officials say Whatley was working for Dennis Owens Dry Walls, a sub-contractor to Posey Construction Company of Columbus.

Lewis was treated for a fractured left leg and released Feb. 22.

5 get SPIRIT awards

By Alyanna B. Clay-Heard
Bayonet staff writer



Three directorates and five individuals received the Systematic Productivity Improvement Review In TRADOC award for the first quarter of fiscal 1991 in a ceremony Feb. 22.

The U.S. Army Information Systems Command/Directorate of Information Management received the command/major unit award, the Directorate of Engineering and Housing received the directorate staff award and the Adjutant General won the personal and special staff award.

The 21 actions submitted by these sections resulted in the Army realizing a $2.2 million savings thus far in fiscal 1991.

"Through more efficient use of our resoures, the Army will become a greater defense asset," said Fort Benning Chief of Staff Col. John D. Fuller, who was on hand to present the awards. "I know you will continue to meet the challenge in the future as well as you have in the past. You are the people who make it happen," he said.

Individuals winners were: Mark J. Fincher, Raymond J. Xuereb, Steve Pryor, James A. Dunn and Folke Ahlquist. All were from the Directorate of Engineering and Housing.

'Bradley Rollover'

Desert Storm Hot Line 545-4663 (HOME)

Rear detachment commanders: Soldiers' morale remains high

By Alyanna B. Clay-Heard
Bayonet staff writer

Rear detachment commanders of the 197th Infantry Brigade, 34th Medical Battalion, and the 36th Engineer Group say the morale of soldiers in the Persian Gulf continues to be high.

That's what members of the media were told in a Feb. 22 briefing in the Public Affairs Office media center, Classroom 24 at Building 4.

1st Lt. Laurie Slade, rear detachment commander of the 34th Med. Bn., said she had received information over the telephone from the unit. The 34th has several units supporting Operation Desert Storm, including the 498th Medical Company (air ambulance), the 690th Medical Company (ground ambulance), the 5th Medical Detachment, an optical-fabrication unit, the 2nd Mobile Army Surgical Hospital, and several others units.

Slade described the assessment of troop morale as "high" and said that 2nd MASH had not seen many patients.

"Besides the 2nd MASH, other units of the battalion have been working hard," she said. "Reports of troop morale are encouraging. They have showers, the occasional hot meal and are doing fine," she said.

An update on the activities of the 197th Inf. Bde. were provided by Capt. Michael Clemmons, rear detachment brigade executive officer.

"I have been lucky enough at times to speak with Colonel Ted Reid, brigade commander," Clemmons said. "He says morale is high among the soldiers, and in spite of the move northward, things are still pretty much together."

Clemmons also told of the soldiers being allowed to make telephone calls back home twice this month.

"Soldiers were allowed to call home February 15th, and the 19th served as a make-up day for all those who weren't able to call on the 15th," said Clemmons.

Capt. Alvin Lee, rear detachment executive officer for the 36th Engineer Group, also told of the high morale of soldiers in that unit.

From his contact with Col. Hank Miller, commander of the 36th, Lee said that the soldiers are working very hard, especially members of the 43rd Engineer Battalion, who are handling several construction-related missions.

"While things have slowed down a bit for the 598th Maintenance Company, things will probably be picking up again soon, and it will be business as usual," said Lee.

The 43rd, along with HHC, 36th Engineer Group, the 533rd Transportation Co., the 361st Trailer-Transfer Detachment, the 608th Ordnance Co., 215th Finance Co. make up the other units in the group.

197th rear detachment relocates

The 197th Infantry Brigade rear detachment offices have moved to a new location on Kelley Hill. The changes are as follows:

197th Brigade Headquarters	Building 9050, 544-4111
1st Battalion, 18th Infantry Regiment	Building 9074, 544-2557
2nd Battalion, 18th Infantry Regiment	Building 9075, 544-3808
197th Support Battalion	Building 9100, 544-1420
2nd Battalion, 69th Armor Regiment	Building 9046, 544-3313
4th Battalion, 41st Field Artillery	Building 9044, 544-1235
HHC, 197th Infantry Brigade	Building 9012, 544-2231
72nd Engineer Company	Building 9012, 544-2231
Troop D, 4th Cavalry	Building 9012, 544-2231

Other major units

Rear detachment offices for others major units deployed from Fort Benning are still in the same locations. The locations and telephone numbers for those units are:

34th Medical Battalion	Building 2830, 545-3710
36th Engineer Group	Building 2827, 545-5511

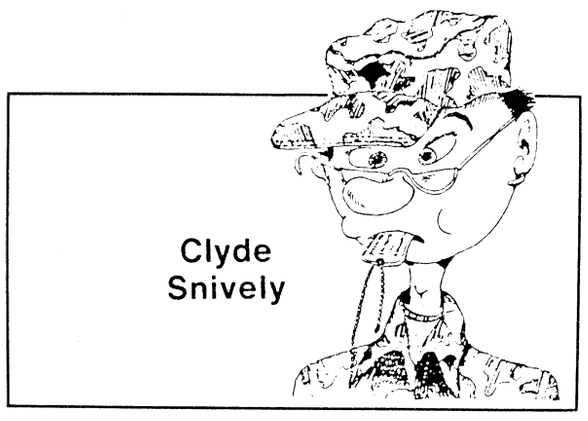
Prediction misses by a day

By Clyde Snively
USAIC Public Affairs Office

It's tough being a weekly journalist, especially when your deadline is a week before the publication date.

Here we got a war going on, and I'm supposed to write about it. But, the way things are going, the war will be over by the time this paper comes out.



I tried to suggest to madam editor that she extend my deadline a couple of days, and I thought I'd stumbled into the war zone. As we reporters like to say around the newsroom, "What do you call two editors entering the Bayonet office at the same time?" "A SCUD attack."

Many folks are amazed at how easily our military is rolling into Kuwait and Iraq. The first reaction was, "These are front line troops, and they're the lowest of the low, the most incapable. Just wait until they run into the elite Republican Guard forces."

The strategy seems to be to slow the coalition advance by clogging the system with enemy prisoners of war. I'm going to step out on the limb and make some predictions.

First, did you ever notice how the word "elite," is used as though it's part of the name of the Republican Guard? Have you ever heard someone say, "the Republican Guard forces?" No, it's always the elite Republican Guard forces, or "the battle-hardened Republican Guard forces."

My question is, if these are elite forces, in relation to whom or what are they elite? In relation to the rest of the Iraqi Army? Then yes, probably they are elite. In relation to the Iranian Army? Then yes again.

Somehow we Americans are always painting our enemy or potential enemies as being 10 feet tall.

Look at the Soviet Union. Ask any soldier who served in Germany, and he'll tell you that Soviet soldiers were practically painted as supermen with super equipment.

Yet, this is the same Soviet Army that couldn't handle Afghanistan.

During World War II, our guys were told about the superhuman German forces. They were world conquerors as long as they were up against weak, non-belligerent or ill-prepared Armies. But, once a force of skillfully led, trained and equipped soldiers met them, the Germans proved they, too, were human.

So, when it comes to the Republican Guard forces, I predict they might fire a couple of rounds at our soldiers and marines, then either turn tail and head north as fast as they can, or they'll surrender, en masse, just like the rest of their bedraggled Army's been doing.

I realize we should remain pessimistic — that we should be cautious as we talk about an end to the ground war. But, after watching the early returns on this "Mother of all Wars," it's hard to remain somber-faced and pessimistic.

In fact, I heard that after the success of our first assault into Kuwait, Saddam Hussein put in a hurried call to the football coach at Cal State Fullerton. He wanted to know what the coach told his players before they played Auburn. Apparently he wanted some words of inspiration for his guys.

That's why there was some confusion on early radio intercepts when translators were trying to find words for phrases like, "They put their pants on just like the rest of us, one leg at a time."

I have to say, when you put tinhorned dictators over an Army, it's really difficult to get too concerned about the outcome of any war against a professional army.

Somehow, I think this "Mother of all Wars" will be over by the time this newspaper hits the streets.

But that leaves the big question of what to do with Saddam Hussein. Maybe the Iraqis will figure something out.

ACOE stresses importance of good service

By Latrella Conwell
Directorate of Resource Management

What is good service? There are as many definitions as there are services.

You readily recognize good service when you receive it. But what is it?

Good service is defined by the expectations of the recipient of the service.

Services offer assistance first in the "help me" sense:

- Help me with my pay problems.
- Help me get from Point A to Point B.
- Help me get my vehicle registered.

The second dimension is service in the "fix it" sense:

- The copier is not working.
- The phone is out of order.
- The piece of equipment we need for training is broken.

Here at Fort Benning, for the most part, we don't have to be concerned about gaining and retaining the patronage of customers. Our customers are a captive audience.

But, they are customers who deserve the best we can give them. They earn it every day. They are our soldiers, their families, retirees, and the civilians who must use the services we provide. They deserve good service, and we want to give it to them.

Customer service is the "wrapping" you put around your product or core service. This involves the people in contact with customers and your policies, practices and procedures.

This involves accessibility — when your customers want access and in what way do they want access.

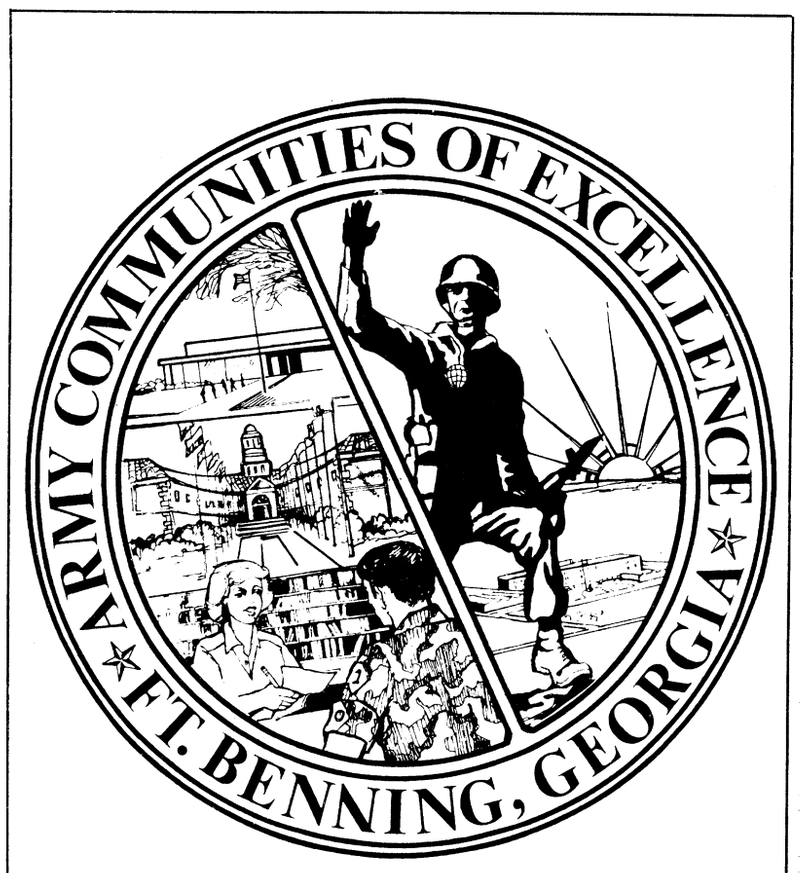
The quality of core service is the single most important thing customers want.

Ask your front-line employees to tell you what customers are telling them about dissatisfiers, then go fix them.

Examples of dissatisfiers are:

- Customers have to wait so long for service.
- Customers have no confidence in the knowledge of the front-line people.
- Workers in the organization have to do things over several times before they get it right.
- You are always out of the products your customers want.
- Your facility is not as clean as it could be (trash on the floor, wastebaskets overflowing, etc.)
- Visible safety hazards.

Satisfiers include:



- Enthusiastic front-line people, eager to help
- Knowledgeable front-line people
- Pleasant, attractive waiting areas
- Well-stocked shelves
- Service or product delivered when promised, obtained hassle free or right the first time
- Courteous telephone responses
- Recoverability (when mistakes are made, corrective action is taken quickly and courteously)
- Operating hours are set based on customer needs

Army communities are in the business of helping people. When all the members of the community get involved, morale goes up, readiness improves, and retention rates go up.

A soldier secure in the knowledge that his family is being taken care of and that his personal needs are important to someone else is a happier soldier. He can then get on with his mission.

That is what the Army Communities of Excellence Program is all about.

It can only succeed if everyone is committed to excellence — in both the facilities they inhabit and the services they provide.

Editor's note: Various Voices will return next week.

Secretary responds to Abrams, Apache critics

Association of the U.S. Army

One of the fastest growing cottage industries in Washington is that of taking pot shots at some of the Army's latest weapons and equipment.

That is especially true of the M-1 Abrams tank and the Apache attack helicopter.

In the case of the tank, the two most often repeated criticisms center on high fuel consumption and an imagined inability of soldier mechanics to keep it operating in the harsh environment of the Arabian Desert.

Army leaders readily admit that the M-1's 1500-horsepower turbine engine makes it comparatively fuel hungry, but that same engine gives the M-1 its great speed and remarkable agility even in the roughest terrain.

> "Maybe they ought to...talk to the troops who fly, fight and maintain these systems before they shoot them down.
> — Association of the U.S. Army

Those factors, along with its fuel and special armor, compartmented ammunition storage and automatic fire suppression systems provide Abrams crews with the greatest levels of protection of any tank in the world.

Army Secretary Michael P.W. Stone responds to the maintainability of the M-1 by citing one Army report of an operational trial of the M-1 in a desert environment.

It reads: "The Abrams traveled 392 kilometers as part of the long distance run. All the driving was at high speeds over extremely difficult terrain. High temperature was 112 degrees; low 79 degrees. The vehicle performed superbly in extremely difficult terrain. All systems operated satisfactorily."

Much of the carping about the Apache helicopter is based on a September 1990 General Accounting Office report, which used old data obtained shortly after severe freak windstorms in Texas (May, 1989) and South Carolina (June, 1989) had damaged a large number of Apaches.

Naturally, the readiness rate for this fleet was down, but repair to the damaged aircraft and replenishment of the spare parts pool have since added to a steadily increasing readiness rate.

Again Stone helped spike the criticism when he reported the Apache readiness rate to be "within one percent of 85 percent," a rate that "consistently exceeded" Army expectations.

His information was not based on some stacked-deck reports of a few Monday morning experts who can't seem to see beyond the Washington beltway.

Maybe they ought to be required to talk to the troops who fly, fight and maintain these systems before they try to shoot them down.

Recruits receive promotion for referring friends to Army

By Brian C. Sutton
Bayonet staff writer

Some new recruits, including 14 Columbus residents, had an exciting day February 20.

All were promoted one rank for referring a friend to the Army.

The Delayed Entry Program, which allows a new soldier to take up to one year to report for active duty, provides for the promotion of soldiers whose friends enlist in the Army.

The ceremony took place at the Airport Sheraton Hotel in Columbus.

Each person was personally promoted by Maj. Gen. Jack Wheeler, commander of the U.S. Army Recruiting Command at Fort Sheridan, Ill., as parents and friends looked on.

Wheeler, a Canton native, expressed great thanks to his fellow Georgians for enlisting at a time so critical to the strength of the armed forces.

"Without good people like these, the Army would lose strength."

Soldiers to receive medal

By Brian C. Sutton
Bayonet staff writer

The National Defense Service Medal was recently approved for award to U.S. armed forces members who have served on active duty since the Iraqi invasion of Kuwait Aug. 2.

Secretary of Defense Dick Cheney authorized the award to recognize "the outstanding performance of our armed forces during Operation Desert Shield/Desert Storm," according to a Feb. 21 announcement.

According to an Army News Service release, the Total Army Personnel Command in Alexandria, Va., will be sending guidelines for the award in a message to the field.

The NDS was awarded twice previously, for the Korean and Vietnam wars. It was awarded for honorable active service for any period between June 27, 1950, and July 27 1954, both dates inclusive, or between Jan. 1, 1961 and Aug. 14, 1974, both dates inclusive.

Certain restrictions apply for receiving the award. As of Feb. 21, the following military members will not be considered as performing active service:

- Guard and Reserve forces members on short tours of duty to fulfill training obligations under an inactive duty training program;
- Any person on temporary active duty to serve on boards, courts, commissions and like organizations;
- Any person on active duty for the sole purpose of undergoing a physical examination; or
- Any person on active duty for purposes other than for extended active duty.

To signify a second award of the NDS, a service star will be worn on the service ribbon.

The NDS can also be awarded posthumously.

Museum receives governor's award

By James C. Rupp
Bayonet staff writer

Fort Benning's National Infantry Museum received the Governor's Award for Humanities in a ceremony in Atlanta Feb. 21.

The museum earned the award for its part in telling the story of the U.S. Army infantryman.

The award, sponsored by the Georgia Humanities Council, is presented annually to individuals or institutions who have made significant contributions in the field of humanities.

In the 20-year history of the Council, the Infantry Museum is only the 11th institution to receive the award.

This year, in addition to the museum, six individuals also received the award, which was presented by Zell Miller, the governor of Georgia.

Military can deduct moving expenses

American Forces Information Service

Some costs associated with a permanent-change-of-station move in 1990 may be deductible when filing a federal tax return.

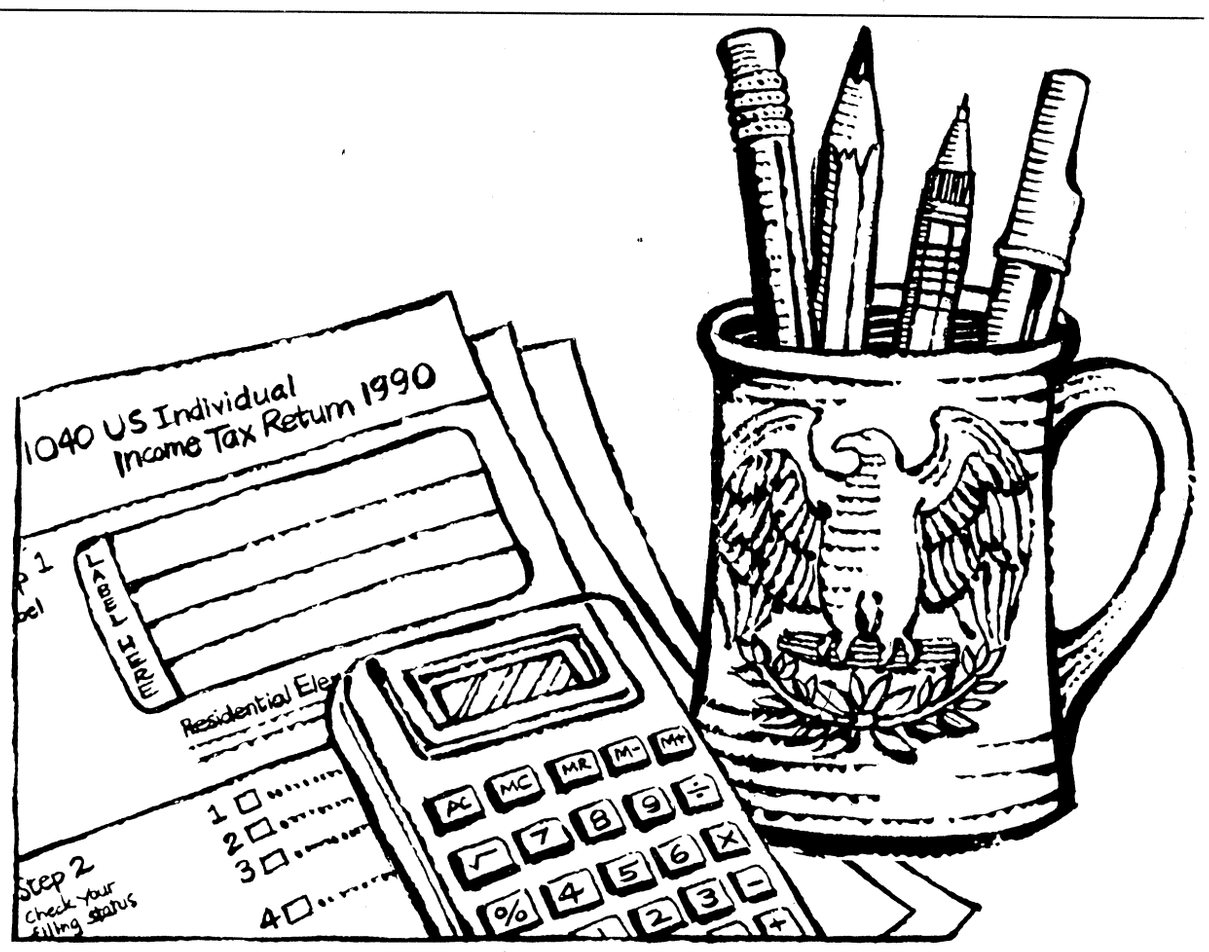
Moving expenses, a miscellaneous itemized deduction, are not subject to the 2 percent of adjusted gross income limit.

File claims on Internal Revenue Service Form 3903, "Moving Expenses," Form 1040 and Schedule A.

Service members' moving expenses may include reasonable expenses for:

- Excess weight;
- Shipping a vehicle overseas;
- Shipping the family pet;
- Insuring household goods en route; and
- Renting trailers, roof racks and other moving items.

Internal Revenue Service officials said a service member may generally deduct the unreimbursed cost of moving personal effects and household goods to the new installation, as well as travel and lodging.



Also, 80 percent of the unreimbursed cost of meals bought en route, living in temporary quarters and house hunting is generally deductible.

The unreimbursed costs for pre-move, house-hunting trips and living in temporary quarters for up to 30 consecutive days following receipt of permanent-change-of-station orders generally can be deducted, said officials. However, claims generally may not exceed $1,500.

Costs for settling an unexpired lease, acquiring a new lease, selling a house and buying a new home may also be deducted. Officials said these costs, plus the trip and quarters claim, may not exceed a total of $3,000.

Any reimbursements the government paid for the move must be subtracted, said officials.

To order a free copy of Internal Revenue Service Publication 521, "Moving Expenses," call toll free (800) 829-3676 or write: Internal Revenue Service, Forms Distribution Center, P. O. Box 25866, Richmond, Va. 23289.

Don't forget to file state taxes

American Forces Information Service

Federal income taxes aren't the only returns that have deadlines. State and local income taxes are also due in many jurisdictions. Filing deadlines vary.

Filing requirements for service members also vary from state to state, say Internal Revenue Service officials.

For example, some states, such as Illinois, require the service member to file but exempt military pay. Others tax part or all of the military salary. And some states don't tax any income.

Tax officials also point out that a service member who moonlights or whose spouse works or who receives other non-military income may have to file a return in one or more states in addition to the home-of-record state.

Installation tax officers can answer some questions concerning state taxes, says Internal Revenue Service officials.

"If a soldier needs to know who his unit tax adviser is, he should contact his first sergeant or unit commander," Winand said.

- Also, the last day of filing — April 15 — tax helpers will be at the post office on Main Post from 6 p.m. to midnight.

IT PAYS TO FILE NOW.

Peru is the third largest country in South America, almost twice the size of Texas. Peru is divided into three distinct geographical regions: the Coastal desert on the west side of Peru; the Montana or eastern lowlands, consisting of vast hills, forests, and tropical jungles; and the Sierra, or Andes highlands, which run the full length of central Peru. Peru shares with Bolivia the famous Lake Titicaca, the world's highest navigable body of water. There is almost no rainfall along the populated coast, although the winter weather is foggy, humid, and chilly. Because Peru is below the equator, the seasons are opposite to those of the United States.

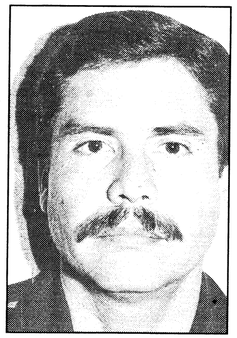
Several of South America's most advanced cultures lived in pre-Columbian Peru. The Incas, who were unsurpassed in the art of stonecutting and also achieved a high degree of economic and political development, were the last such group. Incan and earlier Chimu ruins, notably at Cuzco, Chan Chan, and Machu Picchu, make Peru a mecca for archaeologists.

In 1532, the Spanish invaded Peru under the leadership of Francisco Pizarro. They conquered the country a year later. The area soon became the richest and most powerful Spanish colony in South America. Peru declared its independence from Spain on July 28, 1821, led by General Antonio Jose de San Martin. Venezuela's liberator Simon Bolivar led Peru's armies to victory in 1826.

The constitution of 1933 provided Peru with a president and legislature, all elected for six-year terms. Although military leaders and dictators dominated Peru's history from that time, a free multi-party election was held in 1963 and Fernando Belaunde Terry was elected president.

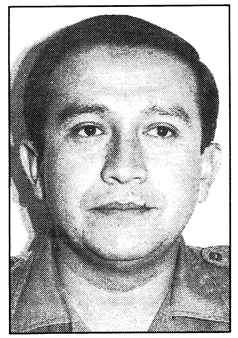
The Peruvian military, led by Gen. Juan Velasco Alvarado, seized power in 1968 from Belaunde and proceeded to embark upon a nationalist course of reform that included the nationalization of Standard Oil's International Petroleum Company holdings. The Peruvian military took steps to restructure economic and political power in the country by joining the Andean Pact and undermining the power of the traditional agricultural elite in the country. This last initiative led to a permanent shift in power relations among Peru's contending social groups.

By the late 1970's, however, the military government began to move toward the right, but only after it had successfully sponsored an agrarian reform that mobilized peasant sectors of the population and changed the relations between landlord and peasant in Peru.



A new constitution took effect in 1980 and the presidency of Peru returned to civilian leadership under the administration of re-elected President Fernando Belaunde Terry (1980-1985). In 1985, for the first time since the founding of the American Popular Revolutionary Alliance, the APRA presidential candidate, Alan Garcia Perez, was allowed by the military to take office.

The new president was enormously popular during his first years in office, but the nagging problems plaguing the country soon undermined his public support. These problems included a growing insurgency sponsored by the Sendero Luminoso ("Shining Path") Maoist guerrillas and runaway inflation that has yet to be brought under control.



The current president of Peru is Alberto Kenyo Fujimori who began his term July 10, 1990.

Columbus community offers its support

by Ivis N. Rodriguez and Keith F. Johnson
U.S. Army School of the Americas

At a time when there is so much unrest in the world, the citizens of Columbus have come forth once again to show concern for others by sponsoring Latin American students, guest instructors and their families assigned to the U. S. Army School of the Americas.

For five years, since SOA first came to Fort Benning, the Columbus community has continued to open their homes to these Latin American families and share not only their way of life, but indirectly have taught them about American culture, customs and traditions.

In their native lands our Latin American guests are government leaders, educators, lawyers, and soldiers — people from all walks of life.

SOA's International Military Student Informational Program Office helps bring people from Columbus and Latin Americans at SOA together. The primary mission of IMSIPO fulfills one part of the overall mission of SOA, which is "to give the students an opportunity to become better acquainted with U.S. customs and traditions." This is accomplished through tours, sporting events, social activities, and the Sponsorship Program.

For example, the Honorable Frank Martin, Mayor of Columbus, was gracious enough to receive the Command and General Staff College course students in his chambers Feb.7 and, to everyone's surprise, welcomed and addressed the students in fluent spanish. He also presented each student with a certificate making them honorary citizens of Columbus. This was the first stop on a tour of Columbus where the students experienced U.S. government, industry (Lumus Industry), history (Heritage Corner), and the excellent southern cuisine of the Columbus Hilton.

Another way students learn more about our culture is through their "sponsors." Sponsors are people from the Columbus community who help the Latin Americans at SOA have a pleasant and rewarding time while assigned to the School.

A part of the Sponsorship Program is the Columbus Support Group (CSG). John Amos founded the group to show the support Columbus could offer SOA at Fort Benning. His wife, Elena, continues to be a key sponsor and a cornerstone of the CSG who, along with Nina Garcia, CSG director, hosted a Valentine's Day luncheon to recruit corporate sponsors.

Previous contributions from corporate sponsors have given the Latin Americans at SOA the opportunity to participate in English as a Second Language classes at Columbus College, Boy/Girl Scout Summer Camp, Halloween and Christmas parties, concerts, a picnic at the American Family Life Assurance Corporation farm, and other events. Without this type of support, the success of the program would not be possible.

For more information about how to become a sponsor, please call Ivis N. Rodriguez at 545-3498.

New School of the Americas Chapel begins services

by Keith F. Johnson
U.S. Army School of the Americas

The new School of the Americas Chapel opened Sunday with a Hispanic Catholic Mass. The service was given by SOA Chaplain (Capt.) Michael J. Travaglione.

The SOA Chapel is the old Lavoie Manor Chapel and is located across the street from Indianhead Terrace housing area.

According to Travaglione, the building is the first place the SOA congregation can call its own since SOA came to Fort Benning in 1985. Previously, the hispanic services were held in Sightseeing Chapel or Main Post Catholic Chapel.

Travaglione said services used to be held at 12:30 p.m., which was a late time for a service, and usually the service had to be finished by a certain time.

In addition to the new chapel SOA will also use building 2150, located across the street from the new chapel, which will become what Travaglione called the SOA Religious Social Multifunctional Facility. The building will be used for Bible study groups, social activities, and other functions.

Hispanic Catholic services will be at 10 a.m. each Sunday with Bible study groups following the service. The following services are also offered: a rosary for peace in the Mideast and Benediction of the Most Holy Sacrament Mondays at 7 p.m., Bible study on Tuesdays at 7 p.m., and Lenten Devotion on Thursdays at 7 p.m.

For more information contact Chaplain (Capt.) Michael J. Travaglione at 544-5742.

1st Lt. Natalie Ortiz aims her weapon during training in the SOA Sniper Course.

Female soldier fires first

Bolivian is first female to attend U.S. sniper course

by Keith F. Johnson and Brett E. Morris
U.S. Army School of the Americas

"Men like Viktor Medvedev and Anatoli Chekhov made the Germans afraid to lift their heads during daylight hours. And sharpshooter Tania Chernova now fired a rifle with unerring accuracy. Almost forty Germans had died in her sights, victims she continued to refer to as 'sticks.' But Tania still had much to learn.

In the top story of a building, she settled down behind piles of bricks to monitor enemy traffic. Several other student snipers joined her as she waited for hours, tracking Germans who scurried back and forth between trenches. Tania and her squad followed each one with scopes zeroed in on heads and hearts. But no one fired, because Vassili Zaitsev had told them to wait for his approval before revealing their position.

Tania seethed at the order. Filled with disgust at having lost so many 'sticks,' she fidgeted at the window and cursed the delay. when a column of German infantrymen suddenly burst into the open, she screamed: "Shoot!" and the room blazed with gunfire. Tania pumped shot after shot into the gray green uniforms and counted 17 dead men sprawled on the pavement..."

The preceeding passage was taken from the book Enemy at the Gates, which is about the Battle of Stalingrad during World War II. Tania Chernova, who was referred to as the 'blond sniper,' was a Russian sniper whose success and the success of other snipers played a key role in the outcome of the battle. The fact that she was a woman made no difference, she was first and foremost, a soldier.

"Tania relished her new life," the book continued. "She had become a professional soldier, living in foxholes, drinking vodka, eating with a spoon she kept in her boot. She slept curled up beside strangers; she bathed in pails of water. She also learned how to take cover in the front lines, how to track the enemy through the telescopic sight and, most importantly, how to wait for hours before firing a single shot that killed."

The same things Tania experienced and learned as a sniper are taught at the U.S. Army School of the Americas' Sniper course and, for the first time in a U.S. Army accredited sniper course, to a female soldier.

1st Lt. Natalie Ortiz, a cavalry officer in the Bolivian Army for the past six years, is learning how to be a sniper. Not unlike Tania, Ortiz is a professional soldier, she volunteered to take the course. She had no idea she was the first female to take a sniper course. it didn't matter to her. She is focused on completion of the course. To her, it is another career-enhancing course that shehas vowed to complete. Other courses she has attended include her country's basic cavalry and airborne courses.

> "She is not being treated any different than the rest of the guys. She is like any other soldier."
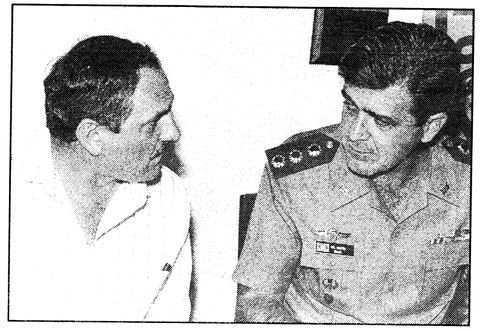
> — Juan V. Diaz

"Of everything I have done in the service, I am most proud of completing every course that I have begun," Ortiz said.

Ortiz said the hardest part of the SOA Sniper course has been the physical requirements, a natural statement since she weighs less than 100 lbs. and is required to carry a 50-lb. rucksack on road marches of four to seven miles. To motivate herself, she wakes up every morning and tells herself, "I will complete this course."

According to Sgt. 1st Class Juan V. Diaz, a sniper instructor, it is that type of attitude that will help Ortiz finish the course which began Jan. 11.



"She is not being treated any different than the rest of the guys," Diaz said. "She is like any other soldier."

Ortiz said she plans to remain a soldier. When asked what her plans were for the future, she simply stated she wanted to serve her country until she retires. Her country does not have sniper training so she hopes to return and help develop a sniper course.

The U.S. Army began reestablishing sniper training in 1987 having recognized the tactical value of sniper teams. Fort Benning began teaching sniper employment in officer courses and incorporated sniper teams into tactical units' organization. SOA Commandant Col. William A. DePalo recognized a similar need for Latin American armed forces and directed the establishment of an equivalent sniper course to be taught in Spanish at SOA.

The seven-week course is both physically and mentally demanding. Training begins with a review of basic skills to include map reading, day and night land navigation, tactical radio communications, indirect fire employment, combat lifesaving measures, and daily physical fitness training. Subsequently, students gain advanced marksmanship skills; study ballistics, wind and weather compensation, night vision devices, and instinctive firing with the 9mm pistol. Once the prospective snipers sufficiently hone their basic skills, they make personal sniper uniform "ghillies," are taught advance concealed movement techniques, selection and occupation of a position and team tactical employment. In order to graduate from the course, sniper teams are required to hit a target between 500 and 800 meters and demonstrate mastery to move and hide in a tactical environment without being detected.

As a child growing up in Russia, Tania dreamed of being a ballerina. But she was forced into combat and learned to be a sniper. Tania's drive and determination helped her become one of Rùssia's top snipers. 1st Lt. Natalie Ortiz chose to be a soldier and then chose to be a sniper. Natalie's drive and determination helped her become the first female soldier to attend a U.S. Army accredited sniper course. If Ortiz's success continues, she will graduate Mar. 11 at the Fort Benning National Infantry Museum at 11 a.m., a sniper.

SOA adds new courses

by Jose R. Recio and Keith F. Johnson
U.S. Army School of the Americas

The U.S. Army School of the Americas has added five new courses to its training schedule for the school year 1991. The new courses keep SOA current with the type of training needed by the Latin American countries who send their soldiers to the School.

The new courses continue as trend at SOA bringing the number of courses added over the last two years to 10.

During the school year 1990 SOA conducted the following new courses:

1. Strategic Intelligence course (O-9)–15 students from four countries graduated from the O-9 course.

2. Counternarcotics Operations course (OE-5)–two iterations of the OE-5 course were conducted with 46 students from nine countries graduating.

3. Sniper course (OE-10)–two iterations of the OE-10 course were conducted with 10 students from two countries graduating.

4. Sapper course (OE-12)–21 students from six countries graduated from the OE-12 course.

5. Cadet Branch Qualification course (C-23)–62 students from two countries graduated from the C-23 course.

Also during 1990 SOA conducted its first airborne operations as part of the School's Commando course on Oct. 13, 1990. Fifteen SOA instructors and 64 students from four countries participated in the airborne operation at Fryar drop zone in Fort Benning.

The new courses added for 1991 and their scheduled dates of operation are the following:

1. Primary Leadership Development course (E-1), June 26-Aug. 15

2. Basic Non-commissioned Officer course (E-3), Mar. 20-May 24

3. Advanced Non-commissioned Officer course (E-4), July 3-Sept. 26

4. Combat Medic course (E-5), Nov. 4-Dec. 11

5. Battle Staff Operations course (O-15), Oct. 23-Dec. 6

SOA is a stand-alone U.S. Army Training and Doctrine Command service school which presents all its instruction in Spanish. SOA has a staff and faculty of 328 military and civilian personnel, 41 of whom are Latin American guest instructors representing 16 countries and serving two-year assignments.

The mission of SOA is to develop and conduct resident training for Latin American armed forces personnel, encourage multinational military relationships and enhance knowledge of U.S. customs and traditions.

Funded by Security Assistance monies, principally under the International Military Education and Training and International Narcotics Matters programs, the School offers 26 different training programs ranging from a 47-week Military Education Level 4-awarding Command and General Staff course to a two-week Instructor Training Course. Course composition is generally multinational, but some programs of instruction are purposefully country-specific. The inherent flexibility to develop courses in response to the needs of each country is one of the School's singular capabilities.

Through constant interface with other TRADOC schools, SOA maintains doctrinal currency and executes its educational missions in conformance with the standards established by the TRADOC Commander. By drawing upon the extensive resources at Fort Benning and the academic and military experience of a superbly qualified multi-service staff and faculty, SOA offers the most professional and relevant training programs possible.

SOA professor wins Civilian Instructor of Year award

by Keith F. Johnson
U.S. Army School of the Americas

The U.S. Army School of the Americas' 1990 Civilian Instructor of the Year is Dr. Jose Z. Garcia.

Garcia, a professor of Latin American studies at New Mexico State University, also represented SOA in the U.S. Army Training and Doctrine Command's competition, which acknowledges the exemplary performance of instructors.

Garcia is an expert in the field of comparative politics specializing on the armed forces of Latin America. His knowledge and experience made him a valuable member of SOA's instructor staff. A majority of his class time was spent with the School's Command and General Staff College course.

An important aspect of Garcia's role at SOA is the influence he has on encouraging students to consider their views on a variety of subjects, including a subject SOA considers very important, human rights.

"The School of the Americas systematically advocates human rights and strives to graduate students whose respect for such freedoms is both enlightened and solidified," said SOA Commandant Col. William A. DePalo Jr. "The School remains resolute and forthright in its advocacy of democratic ideals, principles and institutions. The most sincere, conscientious, and proficient instructional effort would be deficient if SOA lost sight of its implied mission to engender among students absolute respect for liberty."

According to Garcia, our actions and interactions as members of the human race put a political "spin" on our lives. He challenges students to think carefully about how and why we do things and to judge human action "in accordance with high ethical and moral values".

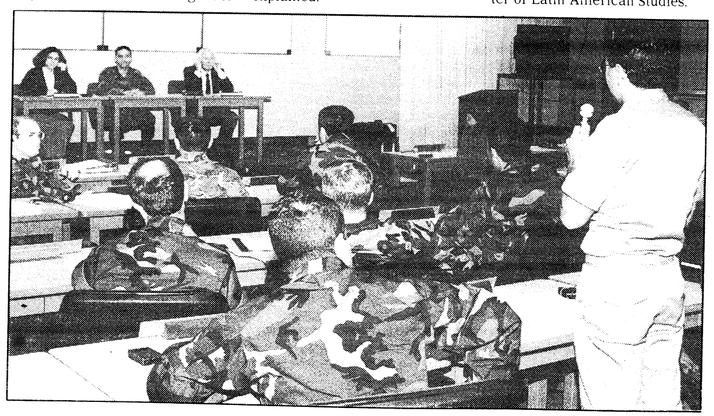
"My greatest contribution has been to give my students a broader perspective on their military roles," Garcia said. "I explained to them in my International Relations course some of the changing complexities of the world, for example, what the apparent end of bipolarity means, why regional disputes are hotter now than before, or how nuclear weapons have changed superpower behavior."

"I wanted them to understand better where they fit into the global scheme of things, so that should they have to risk their lives, they would have a better understanding of why they had to do so. Moreover, I believe it is important that they have a complete understanding of the need for and limitations of military might."

Garcia said mastery of the subject matter is essential to his success as an instructor and, therefore, he spends many hours preparing for his classes.

"I try to be interesting and enthusiastic, even if this means some things I do or say will be controversial, something that comes with the territory since I teach political science," Garcia explained.

"A lot of preparation time is devoted to finding ways to make points in as dramatic, which is to say memorable, a way as possible."



While serving as visiting professor at SOA, Garcia lived on post with his family which allowed him to spend "many pleasurable hours of instructional discussion" with the Fort Benning community. Garcia also learned more about army life by taking up the sport of running.

"Running is an activity I found rewarding," Garcia remarked, "and at Fort Benning just the normal thing to do at six-thirty in the morning."

Garcia went one step further and attended the Basic Airborne course on post. Although he enjoyed the experience, his first jump ended with a broken ankle. He vowed to complete his final jumps as soon as possible.

In addition to his extra-curricular activities, Garcia was well published while at the School. Articles authored by Garcia appeared in magazines such as Current History; Military Review; American Political Science Review; and Adelante, SOA's professional journal. His articles also appeared in newspapers such as the Columbus Ledger-Enquirer and Las Cruces Sun News.

Garcia's two-year term as SOA's visiting professor ended with the 1990 school year. Garcia has returned to New Mexico State University and is now the university's Director for the Center of Latin American Studies.

Pistol section does bang-up job

By Charlene L. LaDay-Hill
U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit

Every successful shooter holds a secret to his success. For the U.S. Army Pistol Teams, it's the pistol section of the Custom Firearm Shop.

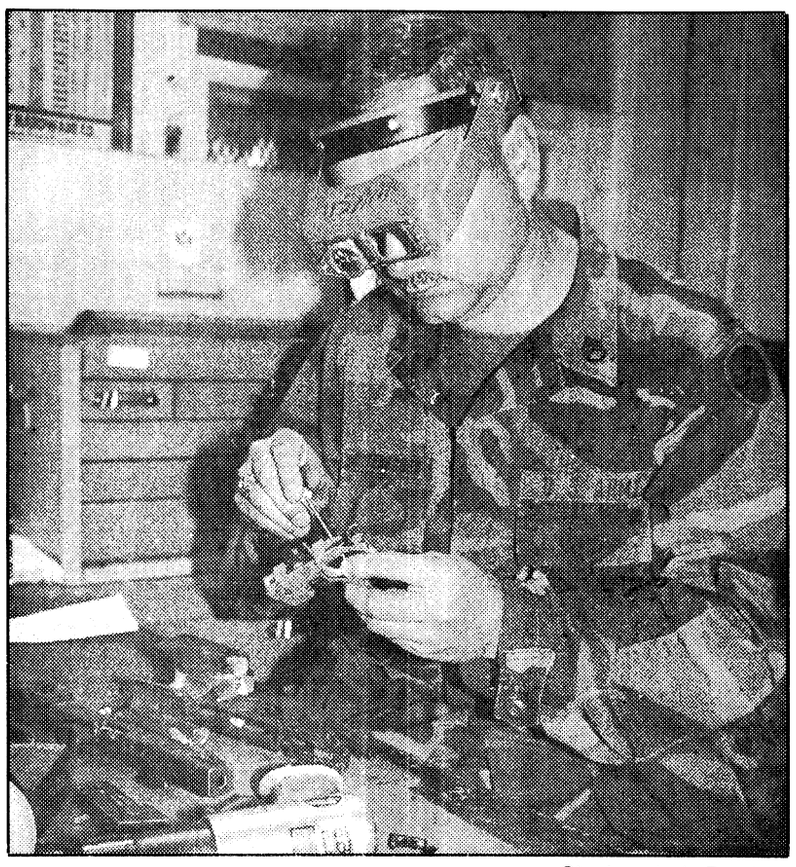
"The pistol section is the self-supporting section of the shop," said Staff Sgt. Larry A. Leutenegger, non-commissioned officer in charge of the pistol section.

"We do all our own machine work so that the U.S. Army Pistol Teams can have the best weapons for competitions," he said.

In addition to building competition-grade handguns for the Army pistol teams, they also build pistols for all Army Reserve teams.

The section works on 40 different types of pistols.

They also conduct research and development to improve the quality of competition handguns.



"What we do here is not an easy job. You must have a well-rounded knowledge of pistols in order to do what we do," said Leutenegger.

"It takes anywhere from 15 to 18 hours to build a top quality pistol; that's without complications."

After workers in the section complete a certain number of pistols, they test fire them at the ranges.

"Our responsibility in this job is more than just the building of the weapon. We also have to ensure that it's safe to use," he noted.

All in all, the personnel in the USAMU Custom Firearm Shop's Pistol Section continue to do a bang-up job for the Army's top pistol shooters.

70th assumes command

By Ronald C. Pickard and Charles A. Virant
70th Division Public Affairs Office

1st Brigade, Headquarters and Headquarters Detachment, 70th Division (Training), a Reserve unit from Inkster, Mich., assumed command and control of six active component battalions Feb. 14.

Located within the Infantry Training Center, the unit's personnel's mission is to furnish the Army the best trained soldiers they possibly can knowing the soldiers may soon enter combat.

The brigade reports to the Infantry Training Center.

The six units the 1st Brigade now exercises command over are 1st Battalion, 50th Infantry; 1st Battalion, 19th Infantry; 3rd Battalion, 32nd Infantry; 4th Battalion, 36th Infantry; 2nd Battalion, 54th Infantry and the 1st Battalion, 38th Infantry.

Each training battalion conducts One Station Unit Training and is responsible for entry level basic training through advance individual training. The total training cycle is 13 weeks.

Lt. Col. Nicholas Straffon, commander, said training is tough, but blazer sharp.

"The soldiers of the 1st Brigade are professionals; they know their job and what has to be done," Straffon said. "They are confident, and I have confidence in them to carry out any assignment or mission," he said.

Although there are myriad responsibilities and duties, the Brigade Headquarters is also responsible for enforcing the training guidelines established by the Infantry Training Center.

Straffon said he expects a smooth transition of command emphasizing his desire to train the battalion commanders so they can continue to perform their training mission.

The 1st Brigade reported to Fort Benning Jan. 28.

Operation Pen-Pal sends support to Mideast

Shoppers write postcards to troops

By Alyanna B. Clay-Heard

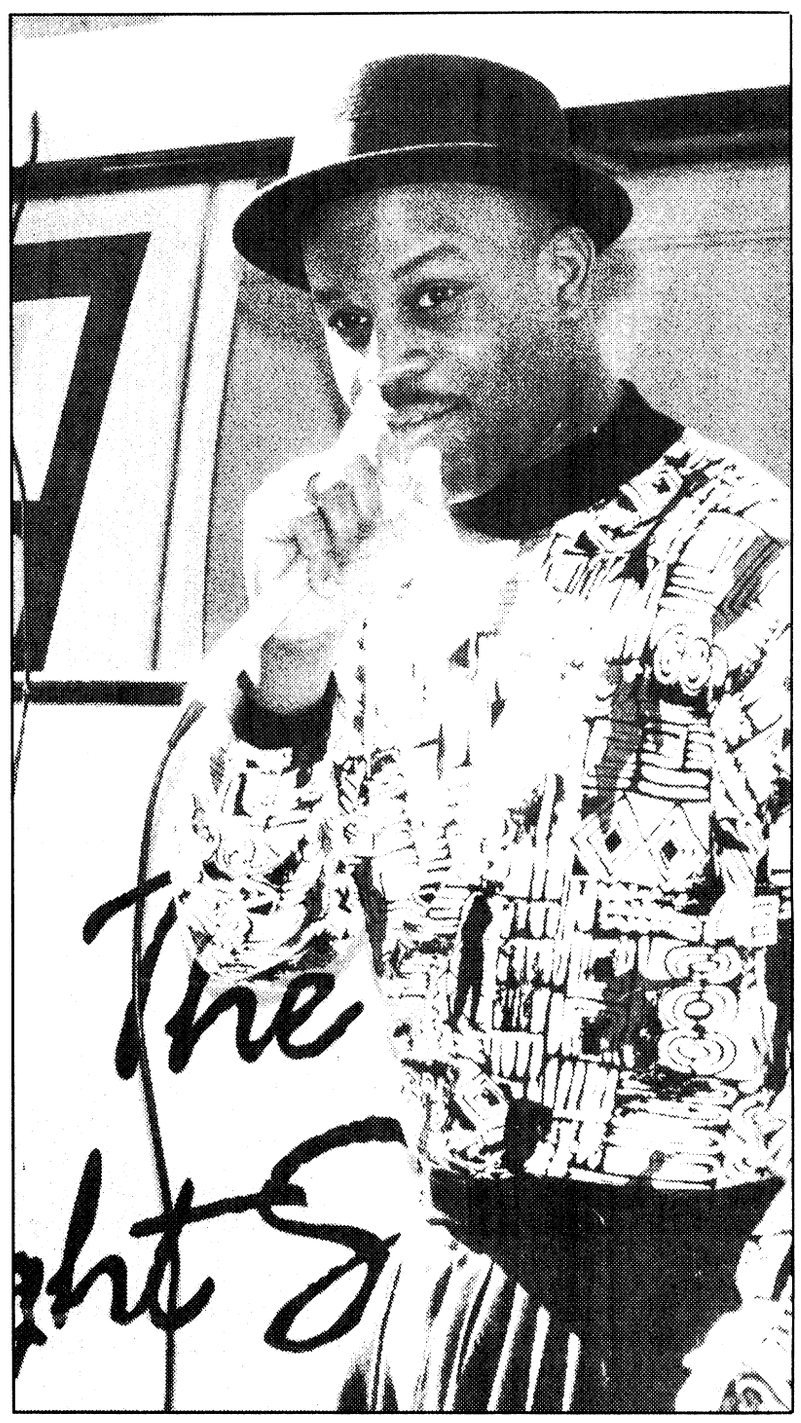
Employees of Oscar Mayer Food Corporation and WAGH 98.3 FM came together to promote a program geared toward supporting troops stationed in the Middle East participating in Operation Desert Storm.

Operation Pen-Pal kicked off Feb. 26 at the Fort Benning Commissary at 10 a.m. The program is set up so that people can show their support and appreciation for the troops in the Middle East by sending a postcard to a service member involved in Operation Desert Storm. There was an opportunity to send cards to specific loved ones or to "any service member."

The 23-foot "Wienermobile" and the brightly-colored "Magic 98" van drew the attention of many. "Hotdoggers" (Wienermobile drivers) Michael Stanek and Joe Marx were "pleased with the reaction of the crowd" to their display and to the program.

"We want to show our support for all the brave young men and women in the Middle East fighting for their country and for freedom," said Stanek. "It really feels good to know that I can do my part," he added.

The Magic 98 crew echoed those sentiments.



"We really feel great in our support of our friends and relatives now serving in Operation Desert Storm," said Darrell Jay, station program director. "I hope that all of our young men and women have a safe and speedy return home," he added.

"This is important work that we are doing today," said Larry Love, radio personality and remote engineer. "We have to help in the upkeep of the morale of our troops over there. No matter where you stand on the issue of the war, you have to support those brave enough to accept their call to duty. We have to let them know that their country stands behind them—that they are not fighting in vain," said Love.

Cash McCall, another radio personality said, "This program is a great way to stand behind the troops in the Middle East. Being a graduate of the Georgia Military College with the 111th Cadet Battalion, I have a great interest in the military. I really believe this shows support for our troops, family members, everyone who is touched by the war."

Tracy Graziosi, whose fiance is a communications specialist with Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 2nd Bn., 18th Infantry Regiment from Fort Benning, was happy about the turnout and the support.

"Operation Pen-Pal is a unique program," said Graziosi. "It's phenomenal how the nation united in times of conflict and that, with a simple postcard, we become even more involved." Graziosi also said that she hoped that the national pride and unity felt during this time of war can be carried over in the quiet of the storm.

WAGH 98.3 FM radio personality Darrell Jay takes time out to get in on the fun of Operation Pen-Pal.

Anglers fish right over bass

By Earl Bentz and Steve Price
Outboard Marine Corporation

A day on the water without catching a bass does not necessarily mean you were in the wrong spot.

The chances are, you fished right through bass, quite possibly a school of them.

That's the opinion of tournament pro Ken Cook, a member of the Evinrude Outboards pro staff and a former fisheries biologist for Oklahoma. He bases his beliefs on years of electro-fishing studies of bass in large reservoirs.

Electro-fishing, also know as "shocking," is a standard technique used by scientists to collect shallow water fish. Electric current sent into the water temporarily stuns fish so they float to the surface where they can be counted or collected. Because largemouth bass are basically shallow water residents, they are especially susceptible to the procedure.

"Electro-fishing taught me two primary things about bass," said Cook, who has since become one of the top money winners in tournament fishing. "The first is that there are nearly always some bass in shallow water, and the second is that anglers are particularly inefficient at catching them.

"Quite a number of times we followed a bass angler down a shoreline with our electro-fishing boat," the Evinrude pro continued, "and it always amazed me at how many fish the angler did not catch.

"We'd be right behind him and shock up bass that had to have seen his lure. Frequently, we would bring up a dozen or more bass from a spot he had just fished."

Results like this changed Cook's own approach to bass fishing.

"The electro-fishing actually gave me a tremendous amount of confident in realizing that if I found a good piece of cover, such as a long, fallen tree in the water, there would be one or more bass there.

"I didn't have to wonder about it. I simply knew fish were there."

That, in turn, noted Cook, made him slow his fishing. He began to take more time working each piece of structure and cover, giving the bass more opportunities to bite. His catch rate improved, as did his standings in the tournaments.

"The question of whether an angler is fishing too fast is something each fisherman has to answer for himself everyday," explained Cook. "Do you fish faster so you can present your lure to more bass and theoretically catch the aggressive ones?

"Or do you slow down and work each individual piece of cover more thoroughly? Not as many bass may see your lure, but those that do will see it more often.

"I believe the answer is really a combination," concludes the Evinrude angler. "First, realize bass are present, and then make each cast as efficient and effective as possible in covering that structure."

SPIRITUAL

Chapel's Desert Storm support group comforts spouses

By Debra Galle
USAIC Chaplain's Office

"I got five letters from my husband yesterday!" exclaims one young woman joyfully.

The woman next to her seems to utter a complaint under her breath that sounds like "I'm glad somebody gets letters."

Witnessing the conversation is a concerned and attentive chaplain. He listens carefully to what the members of the group say they feel and experience. He sincerely wants to help them. . .they are wives of men at war.

Chaplain (Maj.) Herbert Marbury, director of the Clinical Pastoral Education Program, directed the group's attention to celebrate the joy of the woman with news from her husband. He said that this is an emotion to be experienced and acknowledged.

At the same time he included the feelings of the wife who had received no word at all from her husband in weeks. He assured her that her feelings are important and appropriate. Other members of the small group showed her support and empathy, as they all share the same kinds of emotional ups and downs.

They care.

"These soldiers in Saudi Arabia are suffering hardship, but what many of them forget is that the spouses on the home front face hardship as well." Marbury explained.

"I invite them to talk about their own concerns, hopes and fears. They set the agenda and I facilitate the discussion when I feel it is helpful.

"The group is open-ended, meaning people may attend each week or simply come when they feel a need or have the time. There is no formal commitment to remain in the group. I hope that if we can meet a need for an individual that they will continue to take the opportunity.

"Sometimes I begin the group with a question like, 'What is it you miss the most about your husband,' or 'what has been the most difficult obstacle you had to overcome this week?'

"In this way, the women can explore their own problems and hopefully find new and better ways to deal with the many stresses Desert Storm has put upon them."

The group meets at Custer Terrace Chapel each Wednesday from noon to 1 p.m. Those who wish, may bring their lunch to the casual discussion group.

When the soldiers return, new topics will be on the minds of these survivors of Desert Storm. Readjustment difficulties will be a reality because both husband and wife grow during the many months of deployment. Expectations and re-examination of the relationship may change.

Because of this, Marbury plans to continue to make the group sessions available to couples who feel it would be beneficial to work out their problems in this type of forum.

There are many positive things that can come from separation if the couple is willing to work out their problems, Marbury explained.

A little more than an hour a week can help couples cope with these major events, which is the hope of those involved with the Custer Terrace Support Group.

To become part of this group, said Marbury, all that interested people need to do is show up on Wednesday.

He said the guarantee is that they will be welcomed and supported.

COMMUNITY

Benning's Youth Center spotlights area teen talent

By Wanda Campbell
Bayonet community writer

It was standing room only Saturday night when local teens competed for prizes in the Star Search '91 Teen Talent Show at the Youth Activities Center.

Eighteen teens competed in the talent show, which was sponsored by the Youth Activities Center. Trophies were awarded for dance, spokesmodel, dramatic interpretation, vocal and rap.

Wearing baggy overalls and moving in step with each other, the hit of the evening was a dance performance by the group Nytro. Members of the group included Kenyon Lucas, Anthony Martin, Darrell Lee, and Andre Johnson, all seniors from Baker High School.

Nytro was awarded the grand prize which included a trophy for each, $100 savings bond, sterling silver necklace, a video tape of their performance for their portfolio, and a contract from Foxie 105 that allows Nytro to compete in the Foxie talent show later this year.

"We were shocked," said Martin."We tried for the Magic 98 Talent Show, but we didn't win that one."

"We came out here to do our best," said Johnson.

Lee said, "We have been dancing together for two years and we have known each other since first grade."

The first runner-up was Marvin Johnson, who also won the best vocal trophy. His prizes included a $75 savings bond, camera, a video tape of his performance and tickets for Skateland.

Joanne Jordan, from Smiths Station, won second place runner-up for her jazz dance interpretation. She received a $50 savings bond, a 35mm camera, a video tape of her performance for her portfolio, and tickets for Skateland.

Third place runner-up went to Warren "Buff" Phillips, from Spencer High School, who won a $50 savings bond, a walkman, a T-shirt, and tickets for Skateland. He also received the trophy for best rapper.

Honorable Mention went to Tanya Gonzalez, who also won the best spokesmodel trophy. Her prizes included a $25 savings bond, a T-shirt, cup and tickets for Skateland.

Jocelyn McCants won a trophy for her dramatic interpretation called "My name is Cocaine."

"Prizes were donated," said Rhonda Tillery, coordinator for the program, "by the Columbus Ledger-Enquirer, Skateland, the Youth Activities Center, the Officers' and Enlisted Wives clubs, and Foxie 105.

Judges for the evening were Phillip David March, program director for Foxie 105, Sandra Okamoto, a columnist for the Ledger-Enquirer, Col. Marcel Lettre, commander of the 1st Battalion, 507th Parachute Infantry Regiment, Tammy Moore, dance instructor for the youth center, and Robert Edmonds, radio personality for Foxie 105.

The master and mistress of ceremonies for the evening were Billy Dee, a disc jockey from Foxie 105, and Joyce Brown, from the credit department of the Ledger-Enquirer.

Capt. Darryl Jarmon, from Company E, 2nd Bn., 54th Inf., and 11-year-old April McCants, were the technicians for the evening. Jarmon is a member of the adult advisory council for the youth center.

Scouts sample other countries

By Wanda Campbell
Bayonet community writer

"It's a small world after all," sang members of Girl Scout Brownie Troop 12 and Junior Troop 65 as they kicked off the Thinking Day program at Wilbur School Saturday.

Thinking Day, traditionally Feb. 22, is the day set aside to recognize the World Association of Girl Guides and Girl Scouts and the part that Girl Scouts in the United States contribute to the organization.

Nineteen troops participated in the program by selecting a country from the World Association of Girl Scout Guides and Girl Scout members and developing a show to introduce their country to the audience.

More than 300 people crowded the cafeteria at Wilbur School to see skits and displays, and to sample foods made by the troops to acknowledge the member countries they had chosen to represent.

The highlight of the day was the food displays that allowed attendees a chance to sample cuisine from 19 countries. Samples were sold for 20 cents each and more than $500 was collected from the activities for the day.

Food choices included quiche from France, pizza from Italy, shamrock cookies from Ireland, and pina colada from Puerto Rico, just to name a few. The most popular booth was the Gummi Bears from Germany which earned a total of $61.20 for their part in the program.

All money collected from the program went to the Juliet Low World Friendship Fund which was set up to foster international educational opportunities for girls and adults, and to establish Girl Scout programs in other countries.

Loomis said he hopes to interest the post's population in something he believes is a worthwhile cause. He said the club, to be successful, needs the support of the Benning community, and through various functions, he hopes to inspire the people of this post to make it a better place to live.

Christopher Columbus' ship, the Nina

Museum 'sails' Nina

Science and Technology Museum of Atlanta

ATLANTA — SciTrek, the Science and Technology Museum of Atlanta, will house the Nina, a Spanish caravel, which was owned by Juan Nino and captained by Vincente Yanez Pinzon on the epic voyage of 1492.

The Nina, one of the three ships that helped discover the Americas, has been accurately reconstructed to two-thirds its original size. The original ship measured about 67 feet long, with a beam of 21 feet and a draft just under seven feet. Visitors can walk on a "dock" alongside the Nina and measure their height against a statue of Christopher Columbus. Details on the new members that sailed, the cargo that carried aboard, their primitive nautical equipment, and other fascinating details surrounding the Nina's historical voyage are displayed.

SciTrek is an interactive science museum which houses more than 100 hands-on exhibits in five main halls including the Hall of Light and Perception, Hall of Electricity and Magnetism, Hall of Simple Machines, Kidspace and Mathematica.

Dexter student top speller

Fort Benning Schools

James Hale

James Hale, a Dexter School fifth-grader, is Fort Benning Schools' 1991 Spelling Bee winner.

Hale, the son of Master Sgt. and Mrs. Ronald D. Hale, won the competition when he correctly spelled two words — endurance and flourish. Josh Slater, fifth-grader from Wilson School, was the runner up.

The 1991 edition of the Fort Benning Schools Spelling Bee was held recently at the Richard Wilson School. The spelling competition, sponsored by the Benning Education Association, is an annual event.

This year's participants, their teachers and school were:

James Hale — Carroll Thebaud — Dexter

Josh Butler — Kim Cunningham — Faith

James Crowley — Mitzi Crow — Lloyd

Yasmeen Sands — Dorothy Hyder, Kris Keske — White

Josie Meisener — Patricia Peppler — Wilson

Joshua Slater — Pat Hurst — Wilson

Students devote many hours of practice to prepare for this competition. The process helps students to develop the ability to spell accurately, and gives them an early introduction to academic competition.

NCOA holds lunch

By Brian C. Sutton
Bayonet staff writer

The Non-commissioned Officers Association held a luncheon Feb. 21 at the Main NCO Club.

Guest speaker for the luncheon was Maj. Gen. Carmen J. Cavezza, post commander, who touched base with NCOs about the war in the Middle East.

Cavezza expressed concerns about the possibility, and later reality, of a land battle and the effect it will have on the Fort Benning community.

"All of us here want to be over there, but we cannot. We must keep in mind that the Army we have today is one of the best armies there has ever been," said Cavezza.

The commander also stated that the Army that is fighting in the Middle East and also guarding the homefront was built primarily by the NCO. The current U.S. Army is now being used as a model for other nations who, until recently, did not have an NCO program.

Cavezza stressed the need for the Army of the future to maintain the same high standards it holds today in training its troops, especially since the Army will be scaling down to a smaller force in the coming years.

Ferrets playful, dangerous

Veterinary Services

With some people, ferrets have become popular as pets. They are playful, relatively inexpensive and easily cared for, but the advantages stop there, according to post veterinary officials.

In addition to the many bites to adults, there exist numerous cases of infants and young children being attacked by "pet" ferrets. They seem to have a strong attraction to infants, perhaps due to scents resembling those of their natural prey, suckling rabbits. These attacks generally occur while adults are absent or asleep. The ferret escapes from its cage and climbs into the baby's crib and viciously attacks the infant.

Ferrets seem to have a predilection for the face and head of their victims. At least two infants have died, while others have had parts of their face actually chewed off, along with hundreds of bites to the face.

Ferrets are also susceptible to rabies. There have been at least seven known cases of rabies in pet ferrets in the United States. They often escape and are difficult to catch, providing opportunity for exposure to rabies-infected wildlife.

There are currently restrictions on their sale and ownership in many states. The State of Georgia requires a permit for keeping a ferret and is not currently issuing any for private individuals to keep ferrets as pets. In addition to state regulations, it is against Army regulations to keep a ferret on Fort Benning without the written consent of the installation commander.

The public health threat of ferrets far outweighs the advantages, according to post veterinary officials. They encourage prospective pet owners to adopt a dog or cat from their stray facility or to buy a hamster, rabbit, guinea pig or even a white rat. The Fort Benning Veterinary Clinic doesn't offer any of its services for ferrets.

197th advance party returns tonight

167 Fort Benning soldiers come home to prepare for rest

By Alyanna B. Clay-Heard
Bayonet staff writer

An advance party from the 197th Infantry Brigade will return to Fort Benning tonight.

According to Fort Benning Public Affairs officials, 167 members of the "Sledgehammer" brigade will arrive at 9 p.m. at Lawson Army Airfield.

The group that will be arriving are logistics specialists who will prepare for the return of the rest of the unit's 4,000 members, said Capt. Mike Clemmons, executive officer of the 197th's rear detachment.

Along with the 197th advance party, some other soldiers will be on the flight en route to other military installations, said Clemmons.

Col. Ted Reid, brigade commander, is "anxious to speed up the homecoming process," said Clemmons. The unit is involved in several operations, including recovery, maintenance of vehicles, and preparing to move, Clemmons said.

"The morale of the troops is very high right now," he said. "They know they did an excellent job, and they are ready to come home.".

Clemmons said spouses will be notified by telephone if their soldiers are in the advance party.

"If spouses are not contacted, it should be assumed that their soldiers are not with the advance party," said Clemmons.

Clemmons warned spouses not to go to the airfield if they do not get a call, "just to see if their spouses are in the advance party."

Clemmons also said the the troops will not return to Fort Benning via Fort Stewart near Savannah, Ga. The brigade is now expected to come directly to Fort Benning, he said.

Benning site of TV commercial

Ad features airborne training

By Brian C. Sutton
Bayonet staff writer

Film crews were everywhere at Fryar Drop Zone Feb. 27.

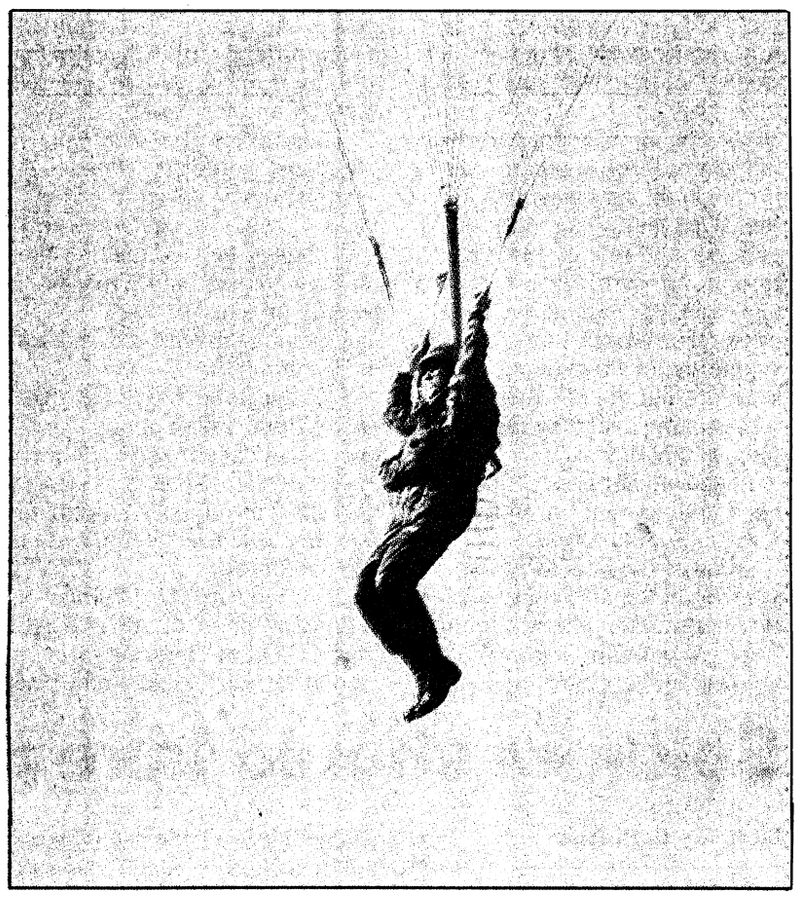
The Reserve Components of the Army and Ross Roy Advertising set out to produce a commercial that helps let employers understand how important the Reserve system is and how equally important it is to allow employees the time to train properly, according to Bruce Miller, senior vice president and management supervisor, Ross Roy Advertising.

"We donate all of our time in support of the council and are proud to do it," Miller said. "It's a very worthy campaign."

"The public needs to be aware that the Reserve Components represent 44 percent of the total fighting force. If you took those soldiers out, you'd have a pretty big hole," said Maj. Pat Schuback, National Committee for Employer Support of the Guard and Reserve.

The commercial, authorized by the assistant secretary of Defense for Reserve Affairs, is the third commercial in the past year.

One of the major parts of this commercial is airborne training. Originally, members of the 82nd Airborne Division were scheduled to participate, but they were quickly called for duty in the Middle East in support Operation Desert Shield and recently Desert Storm.



This stalled production, which was originally expected to take just three to four months. But cadre from the Airborne School and other airborne-qualified soldiers from Fort Benning participated wholeheartedly.

Parachute landing falls were simulated by the use of cranes that raised and lowered soldiers to allow the film crew to get close-up shots of airborne soldiers landing.

To further the effect of the shot, other soldiers were jumping out of planes in the background.

The final phases of the commercial shoot included a member of the film crew, with a camera mounted on his helmet, doing a free fall backward out of a plane with soldiers following to give the viewer a sense of what it must be like to be an airborne soldier.

Television viewers can expect to see this public service commercial within the next few months.

197th welcome set at Kelley Hill

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Families and friends of returning 197th soldiers are encouraged to meet the troops at the Kelley Hill Recreation Center instead of Lawson Army Airfield.

Members of the advance party are scheduled to arrive tonight at 9 o'clock.

Post officials and the 283rd Army Band will be on hand to meet the returning soldiers, but others are asked to wait at the recreation center since the soldiers will need to clear customs and Department of Agriculture inspections before they can join their loved ones.

Having family members wait on Kelley Hill will help speed the process.

Post officials are also concerned about safety for visitors since there will be a lot of heavy equipment being moved about the area.

2 soldiers die in trash fire in Iraq

By Alyanna B. Clay-Heard
Bayonet staff writer

Two 197th Infantry Brigade soldiers were killed and four slightly injured in Iraq March 2 when a trash fire accidently spread, igniting nearby ammunition.

The soldiers killed in the fire were Staff Sgt. Raymond E. Hatcher, 32, and Cpl. Kevin E. Wright, 22, both of Company D, 1st Battalion, 18th Infantry Regiment.

The injured were identified as:

- Maj. Daniel J. Bourgoine, 36, 197th Inf. Bde. executive officer,
- Spc. Joseph H. Cameron, 20, Headquarters and Headquarters Co., 1st Bn., 18th Inf. Regt.,
- Spc. Michael L. Brooks, 72nd Engineer Co., and
- Pfc. Robert L. Coniglio, 23, of Co. D, 1st Bn., 18th Inf. Regt.

The injured soldiers are being treated at the 93rd Evacuation Hospital in Saudi Arabia and are listed in stable condition, according to officials.

The accident is under investigation.

In a separate incident, two other 197th soldiers were injured last week in Iraq when they came under enemy fire.

The two are identified as Staff Sgt. Joseph Baker and Spc. Roy M. Dooley, both of Headquarters and Headquarters Co., 1st Bn., 18th Inf. Regt.

The soldiers were wounded while out on a scouting mission. Baker is listed in stable condition at a military hospital in Landstuhl, Germany, with a gunshot wound to the left hand.

Dooley was shot in the right thigh and is listed in stable condition at the 15th Medical Evacuation Hospital in Saudi Arabia.

Snively's 'military analysis' of war in gulf

By Clyde Snively

This is Clyde Snively, "military analyst" for The Bayonet, with an update on the war in the Persian Gulf.

My assessment: Thank God it's over.

Now for some thoughts.

First, did you notice our great American soldiers tending to the needs of Iraqi prisoners? They gave them food and medical aid.

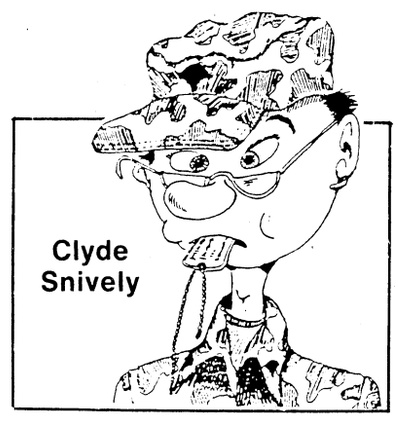
How do you suppose Americans would have been treated had the war gone the other way?

We saw pilots being paraded in front of television cameras for propaganda purposes. The four television journalists taken prisoner and released talked of torture. I'm sorry they were captured. I'm more sorry they were tortured, but I have no sympathy for them being "most scared when the coalition air forces came over Baghdad on their bombing runs."

I hope we get all our POWs back and account for all those missing in action.

Did you know those people who predicted dire consequences for coalition forces are coming back out of their "peacenik" bunkers and are now saying the war wasn't a real test of American might?

We only just finished turning the fourth largest Army in the world into rabble and these guys are calling us bullies. Maybe we shouldn't have such professional leaders and soldiers. Maybe we should have spotted them a few points.



The 197th led the way for the 24th Infantry Division in a move to the jumping off point on January 22. Then when the war broke out, they were given the eastern flank on the drive to cut off any Iraqis hoping to flee and fight(?) another day.

With all this high-tech weaponry going on, I wonder if any M-16s were fired in anger.

No specific words on the rest of our guys, beyond the fact the 43rd Engineers built a massive enemy prisoner of war compound. I'm sure it didn't take long to fill it.

I was sorry to see us blowing up all those Soviet tanks, personnel carriers and artillery pieces. We could have helped pay the war bill by selling them to other potential enemies of the United States.

Also, I'm sure the National Training Center could have used them for their opposing forces, and at the very least, Red Cloud, Ferguson, Galloway, Coolidge, Booker, Duke and Cactus/Whitson Ranges could use some new targets.

You heard about the 60 days of supplies the coalition forces had stockpiled. I saw a partial list. One of the items was 12 million bars of heat-resistant chocolate. The Iraqis could have used them to line their bunkers.

Other items were 7.6 million cases of Meals, Ready-To-Eat; I'm sure the troops aren't sorry they never had to spend 60 days eating them; 2.4 million sticks of lip balm, 731,165 cans of foot powder, 184,000 suspenders and 51 million packets of non-dairy creamer.

My contribution to the war effort (beyond staying out of it) was devising a word game. It's called, "Mother of. . ." It can be played at parties. The first person starts by saying, something like, "Iraq is the mother of all junk yards." Then the next person has to come up with his mother of all sayings. Failure to do so means paying a "penalty," like taking a drink. Bet it would go over big once the beer-free soldiers get home.

By the way, for me, the "mother of all media wimps" is Charles Jaco of CNN. It wasn't enough that he hid under a desk during the first Scud attack on Saudi Arabia, but did you see him in front of the U.S. Embassy?

Just as he was about to start his report, the Marines fired a breaching charge. Jaco let out a blood-curdling "EEEAAAYYYAAA," as he hit the deck. Realizing he hadn't been hit, he stood up with a "Jesus Christ," then went into his report.

Now, if we can just get our troops back soon. I can tell you Columbus and Phenix City are planning the biggest welcome home parade since World War II.

Start saving your red, white and blue ribbons and U.S. flags.

Soldiers should take pride in their uniforms

By Brian C. Sutton

Has anyone noticed lately that there has been a great decline in uniform standards.

I once had a sergeant major who I palled around with at a previous duty station who often explained to me that in the "old days" one of the major functions of a non-commissioned officer was to inspect and correct the lower enlisted troops for deficiencies in appearance.

He further said that he was irritated by the fact that most NCOs don't do that anymore, and it made him wonder exactly what some NCOs do.

Although I wasn't around in the "old days," I do know a problem when I see one. The uniforms I see around this post are not immaculate by any means.

It's a sad day when a private has to tell a field grade officer that he has a jungle boot on his left foot and a jump boot on his right (don't laugh, it happened). Imagine the loss of respect that officer experienced. People under his command were embarrassed.

Some people might say, "Well, it's just a uniform." The simple fact is that a uniform can tell a lot about a person, such as attitude, ability to handle responsibility and other leadership qualities.

A soldier should take pride in his uniform. Here are some things to consider:

- Headgear — wear it with the back portion parallel to the ground, no "ranger rolls."
- Battle dress uniform coat and trousers — in a garrison environment, it is best, but not required, to press the uniform. When in the field, however, wear your BDUs in the proper manner, pressed or unpressed. All pockets should be secured and all hanging strings should be cut.
- Boots — boots should be highly shined, however a spit shine is not required. They should be laced to the top (no zippers), and laces should be tucked in the boot. Trouser legs should either be tucked in the boot or bloused in the appropriate manner.

Let's not forget some of the cool sunglasses I've seen around here. Green neon sunglasses with wing-like attachments are not authorized.

These are just suggestions. I'm certainly no expert on Army Regulation 670-1, which gives guidelines for proper wear of the uniform, nor do I claim to be.

However, I do know that to achieve your career goals, a little discipline in appearance is essential. That discipline will carry over in everything you do in life.

Call-up is one of life's little transitions

By John M. Gorman

Last December 18, I was a civilian, completely comfortable with my life as the executive director of the Arkansas Association of the Chiefs of Police. On this particular day, my assistant and I were attending a luncheon for executives in law enforcement. The conversation at my table turned to the crisis in the Persian Gulf.

"You think you might be called up?," asked Frank Neely, the chief of police of Jacksonville, Ark.

"No, I'm in the paper army, the IRR (Individual Ready Reserves)," I responded. "I don't even think they know I'm alive."

However, the conversation did get me thinking about the possibility of being called back on active duty. As a reserve infantry officer and a Vietnam veteran, I had more than a passing interest in the continuing mobilization of reserve units in support of Operation Desert Shield.

Upon returning to my office, Cindy, my secretary informed me that I had a telephone call from a Maj. Lithrow. I thought she was referring to a state trooper. (I'm also the executive director of the Arkansas Police Olympics, and I assumed that's what he was calling for.)

When I looked at her note, I was surprised to see that the telephone number had a strange area code. I asked her to place the call for me and mentioned to my assistant that, "If that's a St. Louis number, I've been activated." (I was just kidding.)

A few moments later Cindy stuck her head in my office to say that it was indeed St. Louis.

To say I was surprised is an understatement. I was shocked. In retrospect, I probably should have expected it. I hadn't heard from the army since I had left active duty in 1984 — not any written communication at all. (Apparently, a paper foul-up had them sending all correspondence to someone else in Virginia.) I had been trying to communicate with them to get released from the IRR to an active reserve unit for over a year and a half. Apparently, someone in the IRR noticed my correct address.

When I got the major on the telephone, he said that he had called to offer me an active duty assignment with a mechanized infantry unit training at Fort Hood, Texas, but that when he hadn't made verbal contact with me, he had gone on to the next person on his list and had activated him.

I was flabbergasted. While I did want to be a part of this mobilization and any pending action resulting from it, I really didn't think there was any possibility of that happening. Now all of a sudden it was a distinct possibility.

He informed me that I should consider myself on alert. I told him that I would need at least a 14-day notice. He said he understood and that I could count on it.

During the next week, I started getting my affairs arranged in case the famous balloon went up. I waited and waited. I didn't hear another thing for more than 30 days. I finally decided that I wasn't going to be called and began scheduling events for the next few months.

I had been lulled into a false sense of security.

On February 4, while attending an international conference on police olympics in Park City, Utah, I received a call from my office in Little Rock, Ark.

"Hi Boss, you got a telegram!"

"Who from?" I asked.

"The president," he responded.

"What does Richard want?" I queried thinking that he was referring to the president of the association I worked for.

"No, the president of the United States," he said.

I had four days to report to Fort Benning, Ga.

Gorman is a first lieutenant in the Individual Ready Reserves and was called up Feb. 8. Since arriving at Fort Benning, he has been attached to the Public Affairs Office.

Activation affects relationship among family members

By Stanley B. Kahane

Going home on pass may not always be the wonderful reunion time that was anticipated. While one can say that some relationships normally can be counted upon to sour, one must recognize that activation is a special and stressful time requiring much of both soldier and family.

Activated reserve solders occasionally complain that a weekend visit home may start out great, but then deteriorates for what appears to be insignificant provocation.

The average reservist is young, married, and has not had a national mandate remove him or her from home, family and work responsibilities. The removal is looked upon differently depending on which column of the separation ledger you may find yourself. The activated soldier often has important, intense feelings about what and why this is happening to him or her.

Feelings of intense nationalism, patriotism and heroism get all mixed in with the fear of separation from family, financial impact, and threats to educational or job pursuits.

The "left behind" spouse and other family members are in a like manner bombarded by many new stressors — pride of participation, feelings of self-sacrifice, tempered with fear of separation, desertion, and resentment.

The activated soldier returns home and the pass weekend appears to be starting out just fine, but in a very short time the soldier and spouse begin to see the veneer wear thin and bickering begins.

The most probable reason is that no sooner has the soldier returned home than thoughts turn to separation again. Too, each has developed a certain independence due to living apart and with all the re-adaptation of family life, there has to be some chafing.

The soldier expected to be greeted as the hero/heroine he or she envisions themselves to be. The homebound spouse probably feels that he or she has sacrificed without reward. The scenario is ripe for irritation and often leads to bickering.

As time wears on, the soldier normally develops new and deep relationships with potentially great feeling and responsibility — often to the exclusion of spouse who then, quite normally, resents being left out, not able to participate in storytelling, barracks anecdotes and references made to people they do not know.

There is no one or simple solution to this problem. Back to basics must, however, be part of any mature attempt at stress reduction.

The "soldier spouse" will normally seek approval, encouragement, and recognition of sacrifice from "civilian spouse," family and community. The civilian spouse waits patiently for soldier spouse to recognize his or her own brand of sacrifice and stress that accompanies it.

It would be wise for the soldier on weekend pass to avoid creating or adding to an atmosphere of exclusivity. Avoid the "you can't imagine what it's like" kind of statements and other similar comments that, regardless how they are meant, can only tell the listener that they are not now a part of your life.

Rather use the time wisely — review past pleasures, memories, and future, currently "on hold," plans. Be up front in communicating your own goals and include your spouse in them.

Communicate all fears, doubts, and concerns, but don't indicate that they are, in any way, dividing you. And, listen — listen to all the things that have happened without you around. Listen to the pressures to reshape, change and grow.

Two-way communication is the most important way to offset separation. Write and call often.

In short, there is no easy answer, but the amount of energy pumped into supporting the relationship will be proportionate to the end result.

Kahane is deputy commander for Reserve Affairs at Martin Army Community Hospital.

OPERATION DESERT STORM

President Bush addresses Allied troops

Army News Service

WASHINGTON — Following is the text of a message of thanks broadcast by President George Bush to the service members of Operation Desert Storm March 2:

"Never have I been more proud of our troops, or more proud to be your commander in chief; for today, amid prayers of thanks and hope, the Kuwaiti flag once again flies high above Kuwait City.

And it's there because you and your coalition allies put it there. Kuwait is liberated, and soon hometowns across America will be welcoming back home the finest combat force ever assembled — Army, Navy, Coast Guard, Marines, Air Force — the brave men and women of the United States of America.

Saddam Hussein's dreams of dominating the Middle East by the terror of a nuclear arsenal and an army of a million men, threatened the future of our children and the entire world, and the world was faced with the simple choice —— if international law and sanctions could not remove Saddam Hussein from Kuwait, then we had to free Kuwait from Saddam Hussein. And that's exactly what you did.

Throughout seven long and arduous months, the troops of 28 nations stood with you, shoulder to shoulder, in an unprecedented partnership for peace. Today, we thank you, for the victory in Kuwait was born in your courage and resolve.

The stunning success of our troops was a result of superb training, superb planning, superb execution and incredible acts of bravery. The Iraqi Army was defeated. Forty—two divisions were put out of action. They lost 3,000 tanks —— almost 2,000 armored vehicles —— more than 2,000 artillery pieces, and over half a million Iraqi soldiers were captured, defeated or disarmed.

You were as good as advertised. You were indeed, 'good to go.' This is a war we did not seek and did not want. But Saddam Hussein turned a deaf ear to the voices of peace and reason, and when he began burning Kuwait to the ground and intensifying the murder of its people, the coalition faced a moral imperative to put a stop to the atrocities in Kuwait once and for all.

Boldly, bravely, you did just that, and when the rubber met the road, you did it in just six weeks, and 100 decisive hours.

The evil Saddam has done can never be forgotten. But his power to attack his neighbors and threaten the peace of the region is today grievously reduced. He has been stripped of his capacity to project offensive military power.

His regime is totally discredited, and as a threat to peace, the day of this dictator is over. And the bottom line is this: Kuwait's night of terror has ended.

Thomas Jefferson said that the price of freedom is eternal vigilance. We must remain vigilant to make absolutely sure that the Iraqi dictator is never, ever, allowed to stoke the ashes of defeat into the burning embers of aggression.

The sacrifice you've already made demands nothing less. The sacrifice of those who gave their lives will never be forgotten.

Saddam made many mistakes. But one of the biggest was to underestimate the determination of the American people and the daring of our troops.

We saw in the desert what Americans have learned through 215 years of history about the difference between democracy and dictatorship.

Soldiers who fight for freedom are more committed than soldiers who fight because they are enslaved.

Americans today are confident of our country, confident of our future, and most of all, confident about you.

We promised you'd be given the means to fight. We promised not to look over your shoulder. We promised this would not be another Vietnam, and we kept that promise.

The specter of Vietnam has been buried forever in the desert sands of the Arabian peninsula.

Today, the promise of spring is almost upon us, the promise of regrowth and renewal. Renewed life in Kuwait. Renewed prospects for real peace throughout the Middle East, and a renewed sense of pride and confidence here at home.

We're committed to seeing every American soldier and every allied POW home soon, home to the thanks and the respect and the love of a grateful nation, and a very grateful president.

Yes, there remain vital and difficult tests ahead, both here and abroad, but nothing the American people can't handle.

America has always accepted the challenge, paid the price, and passed the test.

On this day, our spirits are as high as our flag, and our future, as bright as Liberty's torch.

Tomorrow, we dedicate ourselves anew, as Americans always have, and as Americans always will.

The first test of the new world order has been passed. The hard work of freedom awaits.

Thank you, congratulations and God bless the United States of America."

Schwarzkopf dictates conditions for truce

Army News Service

WASHINGTON — Despite an agreement between coalition and Iraqi military officials March 3, allied forces will continue to occupy Iraqi territory until a permanent cease fire is signed, according to the commander of Desert Storm forces, Gen. H. Norman Schwarzkopf.

The discussions in Iraq between Schwarzkopf; the allied Arab commander, Lt. Gen. Khalid bin Sultan of Saudi Arabia; and Iraqi military officers were described by Schwarzkopf as "very frank, very candid and very constructive."

Before the talks, however, the general left no doubt as to who had won. "I'm not here to give them anything. I'm here to tell them exactly what they have to do," he said.

"I am happy to tell you that we agreed on all matters," Schwarzkopf said. "Some of the subjects that were discussed were control measures to ensure that units — armed units of the coalition — do not come in contact with armed units of the Iraqi military that result in any more deaths."

Schwarzkopf said the most important point discussed was the immediate release of all prisoners of war.

"We have agreed that this release should be immediate," he said.

In addition to agreeing that details would be worked out by the International Red Cross, Schwarzkopf explained that the allies had asked, 'as a token of good faith on both sides, that we have a symbolic release immediately.'

Within 24 hours, Iraq subsequently released 10 allied prisoners, including six American service personnel.

The allies also received information on the location of mine fields in Kuwait and in international waters.

Additionally, the allies provided the Iraqis with the names of all service members listed as missing in action and asked for the names of anyone who may have died while in Iraqi custody.

Schwarzkopf requested the return of remains as well.

"We have made a major step forward in the cause of peace," Schwarzkopf concluded, "and I have every expectation that if we continue the open and frank and cooperative dialogue that we had today. . .that we are well on our way to a lasting peace."

Together.

Army makes plans for soldiers' homecoming

Army News Service

WASHINGTON — The Army is making plans to welcome home all those deployed from Operation Desert Storm.

Organizers from the "Army Reunion and Homecoming Program" know the reception that a soldier receives from the family, the community, the employer and the nation is of paramount importance.

"This is the first time something like this has been developed," said Sandy Nation of the Army Community and Family Support Center. "We have looked at the family issues and also included lessons learned from prior military conflicts — Vietnam through Panama — the main lesson is that the processing of returning soldiers needs to be sincere, humanistic, and not just fast processing of social security numbers and paperwork."

The reunion and homecoming program has three primary goals:

- Provide an atmosphere of a sincere welcome home from the nation;
- Aid reentry into the civilian work force or the peacetime military, and
- Support smooth reentry to the family.

Plans to reach these goals include parades, picnics, family and soldier reunion briefings, and on-going family support programs.

Nation said the program has received overwhelming support at both the Department of the Army and installation level.

Local communities are creating welcoming "task forces" including veterans, military families and members of the Chamber of Commerce and Red Cross and many other agencies and organizations.

Communities can help in a variety of ways said Nation.

"Yesterday a man called from Ohio and his group wanted to support the troops," he said. "It turns out he works for the Internal Revenue Service. . .his group will not only be supporting local ceremonies, they've also offered to help soldiers with Desert Storm tax return assistance, free of charge."

Nation says there is enough work for everyone and that, "this is not a one time thing — we want to be sure we welcome all returnees from the first to the last."

This may take several months and long-range plans are under way. "Everybody, military or civilian, individual or large corporation, can have an important part to play," said Nation.

For more information on homecoming and reunion plans, contact your family support group.

Former battlefield remains dangerous for American soldiers in Middle East

Army News Service

WASHINGTON — Iraqi territory captured by coalition forces in last week's ground campaign remains a powder keg despite the suspension of offensive operations and the apparent success of the March 3 talks between coalition and Iraqi generals.

Four American servicemen died and four were wounded in three incidents involving land mines and unexploded ordnance, March 1, two days after President Bush announced a conditional end to allied offensive operations.

"The battlefield. . .remains a very dangerous, dangerous place," said Central Command spokesman, Marine Brig. Gen. Richard Neal during a March 3 news briefing from Riyadh, Saudi Arabia.

He said the talks earlier in the day between coalition leaders and an Iraqi military delegation in allied-occupied territory in southern Iraq would help lessen the dangers to American service members in the area.

Neal said "control measures" were set up during the talks to ensure that coalition forces do not come in contact with armed Iraqi forces.

The Iraqi delegation, which included the armed forces chief of staff and a corps commander, also told coalition forces the location of sea and land mine fields.

Neal described the talks as a "preliminary step toward the negotiations for peace and a cease-fire."

Commander of the U.S. Army Central Command, Gen. H. Norman Schwarzkopf, and Saudi commander Lt. Gen. Khalid bin Sultan headed the coalition delegation.

"We're very hopeful that by virtue of the military-to-military discussions this afternoon that there's unlikely to be any more big fights. . .we shouldn't experience any more real significant problems," said Neal.

Isolated incidents between American forces and Iraqi soldiers who apparently hadn't been told of the suspension of hostilities were common in the weekend following the president's announcement.

Soldiers from the 24th Infantry Division were fired on by Iraqis at a highway checkpoint March 1.

Neal said the soldiers were manning the checkpoint when two Iraqi buses and a truck pulled up "and then all of a sudden, while the questioning process was going on (the Iraqis) opened fire from the second bus," said Neal.

U.S. soldiers returned fire, destroying one of the buses and capturing nine enemy prisoners of war. There were no American casualties.

Elements of the 24th Infantry Division came under fire again the following day from Iraqi tanks and soldiers armed with rocket propelled grenades.

The American soldiers destroyed "several tanks and several (armored vehicles)" in the attack and captured a "substantial" number of EPWs.

There were no reports of American casualties in the fight.

At Talil air base, described by Neal as a "major operating base" for the Iraqi air force, soldiers from the 82nd Airborne Division captured more than 1,000 enemy prisoners of war, 12 fixed wing aircraft and eight helicopters.

Neal said coalition forces captured at least 50,000 EPWs, and destroyed close to 3,300 enemy tanks, 2,100 armored vehicles and 2,200 artillery pieces in its 41-day war with Iraq.

He said enemy casualties could "turn out to be enormous."

Consumers: beware of telephone 'phonies'

Army News Service

WASHINGTON — Do you remember the stories about someone who bought the Brooklyn Bridge or a great piece of water-front property in South Dakota from a 'salesman'?

Today, those fast-talking salesmen are using the telephone to market their 'great deals.'

Telemarketing is a low-cost way to sell products and services. But benefit for the seller does not always mean benefit for the consumer.

We should all be alert not to become a victim of some unscrupulous operator.

Nothing obligates you to talk to anyone telephoning you. You can terminate or continue the conversation at "your" convenience.

If you are contacted by a telemarketing firm, beware of these obvious signs that the caller may be "taking you for a ride."

- "Free" gifts that require you to pay shipping and handling charges, redemption fees, or a "gift tax" before delivery.
- "High-profit, no risk" investments. No high profit financial venture is risk free.
- A request for your credit card number for identification purposes to "verify" that you have won a prize.
- Refusal to provide in writing information about the organization, such as the location of its corporate headquarters and the names of its officers.
- Organizations that have only a post office box for an address. Some organizations use this ploy to conceal their exact location.

Dual compensation rules affect military, civilians

Army News Service

WASHINGTON — New dual compensation rules allow some retired military and civilian federal personnel to receive their full retirement pay while employed by the federal government.

Previously, if a retired soldier or civilian was hired by the federal government as a civilian he could retain only a part of his/her retirement pay annually.

As a result, organizations such as service schools, find it difficult to recruit former military as civilian faculty.

According to the Office of the Deputy Chief of Staff for Personnel, the new pay reform law will allow the Director of the Office of Personnel Management to waive the reduction on a case-by-case basis.

OPM will consider agency requests on military or civilian retirees who are currently employed by the federal government during the 180-day period following the policy implementation date.

Requests from agencies will be considered only if it's necessary to retain an individual whose services are needed to complete a critical or emergency project, or whose loss would create unusually severe recruitment difficulties.

Clinic

clinics for urology, psychiatry, social work and internal medicine.

- Due to the apparent end of Operation Desert Storm, 85 civilian personnel hired in support of the war will be terminated because funding will end March 15, Brown said.

"We regret this action, but it appears these positions will not be needed to support Operation Desert Storm," Brown said. "Appropriate notification will be made through the Fort Benning Directorate of Civilian Personnel."

- A new 14-bed psychiatric ward opened Friday, and non-availability statements will no longer be routinely issued for inpatient care under the Civilian Health and Medical Program of the Uniformed Services, or CHAMPUS. Patients must be screened by a provider prior to the issuance of a non-availability statement. This is a major policy change intended to lower costs, said Brown.
- The first three rows in the hospital parking lot are reserved for patients only, and this new policy will be strictly enforced, said Brown. Additional parking for patients and staff will be provided near the automatic teller machine in the Post Exchange parking lot at the mall. A shuttle bus service to and from the hospital will also be provided, said Brown.

If patients have problems getting appointments, they should call 544-2788 or 544-4140 for assistance, Brown said.

Ammo important part of custom arms shop

By Charlene L. LaDay-Hill
U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit

Shooters of the U.S. Army shooting teams owe a great deal to the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit's Custom Firearm Shop.

Without the shop, they wouldn't have the weapons they need to compete. Another luxury the shop offers shooters is ammunition.

The Loading Room at the shop is where ammunition is made for the unit's rifle teams. It's the only section in the army that builds custom ammunition.

"We load specialty ammunition that can't be bought," said Sgt. Jerald Bauduin, non-commissioned officer in charge. "The bullets we make for the U.S. Army service and international rifle teams are more precise than those made by a factory. On the average, we load about 3,000 bullets a day. A big factory loads about 50,000 bullets a day with their machinery. However, the quality isn't that good because of the fluctuation in the amount of powder placed inside each bullet."

By making the ammunition themselves, Loading Room soldiers are saving the unit millions of dollars.

"To have a factory load the rounds, it would cost the unit $350 for 500 rounds," said Bauduin. "We can buy the components needed and make them ourselves for a whole lot less. Also, since we're military, the unit doesn't have to pay an hourly rate."

In any event, the Loading Room of the Custom Firearm Shop is one of many reasons why the shooters of the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit are the best in the Army.

AER churns out loans, grants for Desert Storm

Army News Service

WASHINGTON — Family members in need of financial assistance have turned to Army Emergency Relief in record numbers since the first American soldiers deployed to the Middle East in August 1990.

AER officials Armywide have responded by churning out loans and grants at a pace unmatched in the nearly 50-year history of the organization.

AER provides emergency financial assistance through interest-free loans and grants to Regular Army, Reserve Component and retired soldiers, and their family members.

The funds can be used to help pay for:

- Food, rent or utilities
- Essential vehicle repairs
- Funeral expenses
- Medical/dental expenses
- Personal needs when pay is delayed/stolen

In 1990, AER provided an all-time high $31.6 million in loans and grants to about 72,000 Army families, according to Leonard Harmon, AER's deputy director.

Harmon said most of the assistance was provided in the last five months of the year during the mass deployments of soldiers to Saudi Arabia.

Many of the soldiers deployed were the mechanics and money managers of the family, Harmon said. With them gone, many families have run into unexpected financial problems.

"If there is a financial emergency, we're going to take care of it," said Harmon. "There will be no bureaucratic holdups."

Harmon said AER will cut corners to help family members due to circumstances in the Middle East.

While under normal conditions, AER assistance must be approved by the soldier, Harmon said that requirement has been waived to help ensure family members receive the money they need, when they need it.

"If the spouse has no power of attorney, we're not going to try to contact the service member in the Middle East," said Harmon. "We just assume the approval is there — we know that the soldier would want us to do that."

There are limits, though, to the organization's relief efforts. For example, AER cannot:

- Help pay for non-essentials
- Finance ordinary leave or vacation
- Pay fines or legal expenses
- Help with debt liquidation or consolidation
- Cover bad checks or pay credit card bills

With so many single-parent soldiers and two-soldier marriages affected by Operation Desert Storm, AER has also been providing child care assistance.

"AER has helped with the costs of getting the child to the temporary guardian designated in the soldier's child care plan," said Harmon. "Also, if the spouse has to leave work to stay home with the children or get another job, AER has assisted with essential baby-sitting costs."

Families of Regular Army soldiers, as well as those of retirees and mobilized Reserve Component soldiers, can obtain AER assistance from Army installation AER sections, local American Red Cross chapters, Air Force Aid Society sections and Navy and Marine Corps Relief Society Auxiliaries.

Harmon said that a misunderstanding of AER and individual pride has been a problem. "Many people think AER is only for the junior soldier — that just isn't so. Families are going to try to work out their financial problems for as long as they can," Harmon said.

"Although we can usually react in hours, don't wait until the last second to call."

For more information, contact your local AER office, the Red Cross, or the national headquarters in Alexandria, Va., at (703) 960-3982.

VA Q&A

Department of Veterans Affairs

Q. I am a divorced veteran. Can my ex-wife force me to maintain her as my beneficiary on my VA life insurance policy?

A. Under your Government Life Insurance contract, you have the right to designate or change a beneficiary at any time. You can do this without the knowledge or consent of your designated beneficiary or beneficiaries. The United States Supreme Court has ruled that state courts cannot restrict your right to make changes to your beneficiary designation. Any changes must be made by submitting your written designation to the Department of Veterans Affairs.

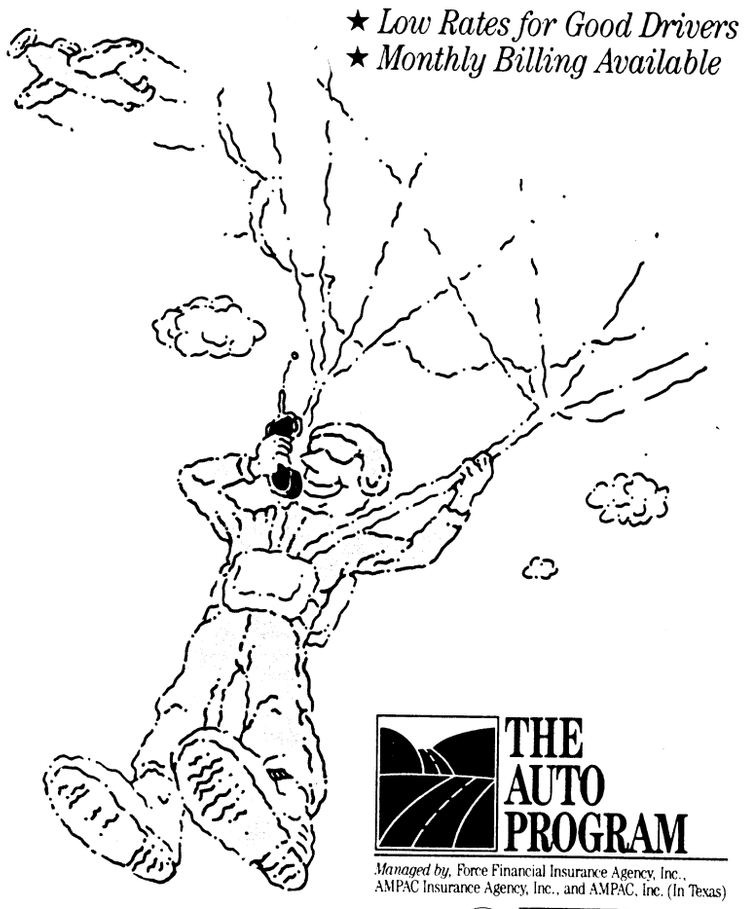
Q. I retired from the Army in March 1988 after 20 years of service. I was told that I am not eligible for GI Bill education benefits because I retired before July 1, 1988. Is this true?

A. A recent decision by the Department of Defense allows those who were involuntarily retired between Jan. 1, 1988, and June 30, 1988, to qualify for GI Bill education benefits assuming they meet all other eligibility requirements. For more information, call the Department of Veterans Affairs Regional Office in your state. The toll-free number is listed in your telephone directory.

Q. Is there a time limit for applying for service-connected disability compensation from the Department of Veterans Affairs?

A. There is no time limit; however, the date of application is a factor in establishing the effective date of payment. Claims approved within one year of separation are retroactive to the date of separation. Thereafter, the effective date is the date the claim is filed.

Q. What happens if I fail to make the payments on my home loan guaranteed by the Department of Veterans Affairs?



A. Failure to make payments on the loan may lead to foreclosure and the loss of your home. If the government is required to pay a claim as the result of failure to repay the loan, you may become indebted to the government for the amount of any such claim. If you find yourself in financial difficulty, please contact your loan holder to discuss the problem and make arrangements to bring your loan current. If additional assistance or advice is required, you should contact the VA.

CHAMPUS NEWS

Activated reserve, guard members should remember points about CHAMPUS

Martin Army Community Hospital

Many questions have arisen about the use of the Civilian Health and Medical Program of the Uniformed Services, or CHAMPUS.

Families of activated reservists and national guard members — and by other CHAMPUS-eligible persons should be informed about benefits.

CHAMPUS is a Defense Department program. It shares the cost of covered civilian health care for the families of active-duty and retired military members.

Here's a roundup of important points about benefits and how to use the program:

● In some metropolitan areas (such as Washington, D.C., or San Antonio, Texas), there may be more than one uniformed services medical facility that offers care to local service families.

If you live in such an area and can't get the care you need from one such hospital, try another.

If you live in a ZIP code zone that's served by more than one military hospital, ask the first hospital you try to check with the others before you seek non-emergency inpatient care from a civilian hospital. If none of the service facilities can provide the care you need, ask the first hospital for a "non-availability statement," which must be sent in along with your claim. Otherwise, CHAMPUS may not process your claim for civilian inpatient care.

● Spouses and eligible children of reservists and guard members ordered to active duty for more than 30 consecutive days may use CHAMPUS beginning with the first day of the active-duty period.

Family members must be listed in the Defense Enrollment Eligibility Reporting System, or DEERS, computer files as being eligible before CHAMPUS can cost-share their civilian medical care.

For activated reservists and guard members, this enrollment should have been accomplished by the parent command.

If your name doesn't show up in the DEERS listings yet, you may also get the contractor for your area to process your claim by sending in with the claim a copy of your sponsor's active-duty orders and a photocopy of your identification card showing entitlement to benefits during the period of your treatment.

● To get more information about DEERS, or to check on your enrollment status, call the DEERS Beneficiary Telephone Center Monday through Friday, between 6 a.m. and 3:30 p.m. Pacific Time, toll free at (800) 538-9552 (all states except Alaska, Hawaii and California).

● Activated reservists/guard members themselves are not eligible for CHAMPUS. Their health care needs are taken care of by their service branch.

● In order to get care at service hospitals or under CHAMPUS most quickly and easily, make sure you have copies of your military sponsor's active-duty orders, and the appropriate identification card issued by the local reserve center or military base's personnel office.

● Families who have private health insurance in addition to eligibility must submit claims for civilian health care to their other health insurance before filing.

When the other health insurance policy has paid everything it's going to pay, a claim may be filed for cost-sharing of the remaining allowable charges for covered care.

Caution: Families who have a health maintenance organization as their other health insurance can't jump between the HMO and CHAMPUS.

All covered health care services must be obtained from the HMO. CHAMPUS-eligible persons who also have medical coverage through an HMO may be able to have CHAMPUS cost-share some expenses under limited circumstances.

The services must be medically necessary and must be covered by CHAMPUS. They must either not be covered by the HMO, or they may be covered but subject to limits on how much the HMO will pay for the services HMO user's fees won't be covered by CHAMPUS; this fee includes the amounts that HMO members are expected to pay for prescriptions.

There are other rules and limitations; check with your nearest health benefits adviser for more details.

● The Internal Revenue Service has ruled that civilian employers can't stop health care coverage for families of activated reservists/guard members without the member's consent.

They must keep the insurance in force if the activated members wish, and are willing to pay the full premium for the coverage. The ruling is explained in Internal Revenue Bulletin 1990-40.

● Families of activated reservists/guard members can't use the Defense Department's Active Duty Dependents Dental Plan, unless the sponsor is ordered to active duty for more than two years.

● Before you try to get health care under CHAMPUS, contact the health benefits adviser at Martin Army Community Hospital at 544-3461.

The adviser can provide information about using CHAMPUS and about care that's available at the hospital.

Together.

Parking lot changes should bring relief for drivers at hospital

By Carolyn E. Bradley
Martin Army Community Hospital

Some parking lot changes at Martin Army Community Hospital should bring relief for patients, visitors and staff.

Hospital officials decided two weeks ago that the first three center rows of the parking lot will be reserved for patients and visitors.

This area is reserved from 6 a.m. until 2 p.m.

Guards will be posted at the entrance to each row to ensure that vehicles being parked in these areas are occupied by patients or visitors.

An overflow parking area has been designated in the vicinity of the CB&T outdoor banking facility at the Post Exchange at the mall.

When all available parking spaces at the hospital have been filled, patients, visitors, and staff are encouraged to use a shuttle bus, which will make continuous round trips from the CB&T outdoor banking facility to the hospital's main entrance.

The shuttle bus will operate from 7 a.m. until 6:30 p.m., Monday through Friday. A one-way trip takes approximately 12 minutes.

Lt. Col. John McNair, chief of Plans, Training, Mobilization, and Security, has coordinated with the Military Police for to keep citations at a minimum.

However, after a short familiarization period, staff, patients or visitors who are in violation of parking regulations, i.e., parking on the grass or along curbs with yellow markings, will be given parking citations.

While it is recognized that this policy may inconvenience some individuals, McNair said most people have been very supportive of efforts made to provide accessible parking arrangements.

Officials said the added traffic is a result of the additional staff that has been assigned to the hospital in support of Operation Storm.

SAFETY ALERT

Infantry Branch Safety Office

There have been two accidents recently involving the inadvertent firing of live M-136, AT-4s that injured 21 soldiers.

During the investigation, several issues surfaced that impact on the safe use of the weapon. The U.S. Army Safety Center is working with U.S. Army Material Command to get a safety-of-use message published, addressing these issues.

In the interim, all users should be made aware of the following:

● The instructional stickers located just forward of the forward safety, on top of the launcher, states, "4 safety push and hold." Although the number 4 is meant to correspond with step 4 of the firing instructions sticker, it could confuse the soldiers.

The soldier unfamiliar with the weapon could construe this to mean depressing and holding the forward safety releases the safety, allowing the weapon to fire when the trigger button is pressed.

● The transport safety pin is attached to the weapon by an elastic cord. Merely inserting the safety pin from right to left leaves the pin free to fall out of the weapon during handling.

The elastic band should be wrapped clockwise, proceeding under the weapon (right to left). Bring the safety pin up and over the firing mechanism housing, and insert it from right to left.

In this position, the elastic band will then provide a measure of tension that will hold the safety pin in place until deliberately removed.

● The correct procedures to prepare the weapon for firing, misfire procedures, and restoring it to the carrying configuration are found in FM 23-25 (Launcher and Cartridge 84-MM, M136 (AT-4), heat); STP 21-1-SMCT (Soldier's Manual of Common Tasks, Skill Level 1, dated Oct. 1990); and TM 9-131 5886-12 (Technical Manual Operator's and Unit Maintenance Manual, Launcher and Cartridge, 84 Millimeter: M-136 (AT-4).

FOR THE MILITARY AND THEIR FAMILIES

To help you keep in touch.

As part of a military family, you're undoubtedly making more long distance calls these days. Calls to get information. Calls to make plans.
At AT&T, we've introduced a number of special services, described below, which we hope will offer some additional help as our troops come home.

1 You can still send messages to loved ones in the Gulf for free.

Free of charge, you can have personal messages—in your own handwriting, if you want—transmitted to military personnel in the Gulf region. This is a public service of AT&T called Desert Fax, and official forms are available at AT&T Phone Centers and a number of military bases. Your message can be sent from any Phone Center, and will be received, sealed and delivered in the Gulf region by the U.S. military.*

For the location of the AT&T Phone Center nearest you, consult your white pages. Or call 1 800 555-8111, Ext. 36, Mon-Fri 8am-6pm EST, Sat 8am-4pm EST.

2 You can get your own calling card faster.

The AT&T Military Calling Card makes it easier for you to call the U.S. from over 125 different countries, including Saudi Arabia. And call from the U.S. to most locations in the world.

Getting the Calling Card requires no fee. And you don't need a credit card or personal phone in order to qualify.

AT&T has simplified the application process for members of the military, so that you can receive your card faster. Also, we're taking applications by phone, if that's helpful to you.

To apply for the AT&T Military Calling Card, call toll-free 1 800 525-7955, Ext. 355 from within the U.S.; from other countries, please call us collect 816 654-6004.

3 You can get through quickly when calling the States from overseas.

One of the easiest ways of calling home from overseas is AT&T USADirect® Service. It immediately connects you with an AT&T Operator in the States, who will help put your call through. To use it from Saudi, for instance, you just dial 1 800 100.

USADirect® tries to keep your costs low too. Now only $1.15 a minute from Saudi Arabia.*

* In certain circumstances, it may not be possible for the military to deliver messages.
 Prices in effect 2-22-91. Changing of military circumstances may affect duration. Price reduction does not include calls to Puerto Rico or U.S. Virgin Islands.

All-Army wrestling team awaits challenge

The All-Army wrestling team is ready for its test.

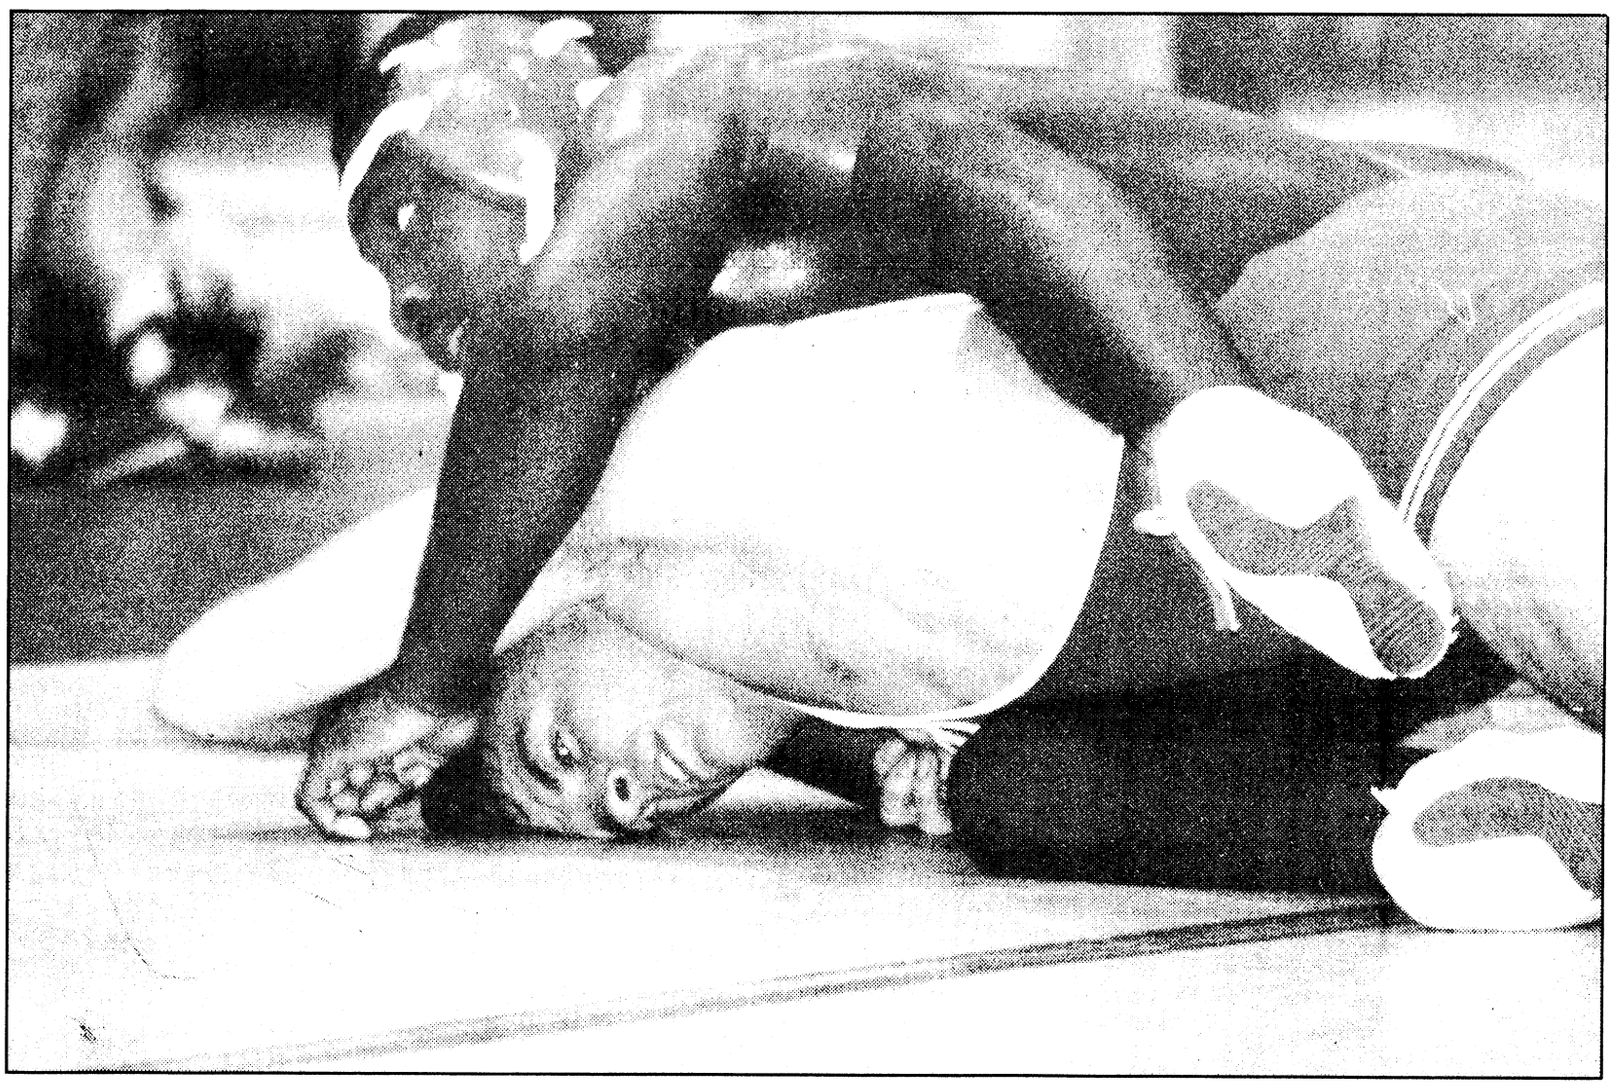
That test will be given to them by the U. S. Marines and the U. S. Navy at the Armed Forces wrestling championships to be conducted March 21 in the Briant Wells Field House at 9 a. m.

Head coach Sgt. 1st Class Anthony Thomas said he felt confident that his wrestlers will be prepared to overcome the challenge presented to them by their opponents, in spite of the fact that the team has lost 12 starters from his lineup due to Operation Desert Storm.

In an exhibition match against the Navy, the team won 36 out of 48 matches, whereas they won 54 of 58 against the Navy grapplers the previous year. Thomas said that the team has learned from any mistakes that were made.

During the competion, the wrestlers will wrestle in two different styles, freestyle and Greco-Roman.

On March 1 and 2, the 38 wrestlers who have attended the camp since Jan. 13 were whittled down to the 20 who will represent the Army at the championships. In a series of trial bouts within each wrestler's respective weight class, every wrestler had to defeat each of his competitors in the best out of three matches. The top two in each category advance to the championships.



The top wrestlers and their respective classes are:

Freestyle

105.5 — Bart Mease
114.5 — Douglas Greenlee
125.5 — Shawn Lewis
136.5 — Fred Canon
149.5 — Rodney Smith
163.5 — Kieth Sieracki
180.5 — Michael Palmer
198 — Derrick Waldroup
220 — Jerry Jackson
Heavyweight — James Demos

Greco-Roman

105.5 — Mease
125.5 — Lewis
136.5 — Cannon
163.5 — Carl Fields
180.5 — Palmer
198 — Waldroup

Heavyweight — Demos

Poison prevention events scheduled

By 2nd Lt. Christine Beatty
Martin Army Community Hospital

National Poison Prevention Week will be March 17 through 24.

During the upcoming weeks, the pharmacy staff at Martin Army Community Hospital, along with the Boy Scouts of Troop 27, will be offering specific events to increase our community's awareness of accidental poisonings.

The Fort Benning U.S Army Medical Activity will sponsor a health fair at the Main Post Exchange Mall Saturday from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m. Pharmacy personnel and representatives of Troop 27 will have a booth set up at the fair offering handouts on a variety of subjects related to poison prevention.

There will also be an organized campaign to dispose of outdated medications. This campaign will start at the health fair and continue throughout Poison Prevention Week. Flyers with specific details are being distributed throughout the housing areas by the Boy Scouts.

Families living outside of Fort Benning may participate by bagging their own medications and dropping them at the pharmacy booth at the health fair. The Outpatient Pharmacy in MACH or the refill pharmacy in the Main Exchange Mall will also be collection points.

National Poison Prevention Week was established more than a quarter of a century ago as a means for professionals and laymen alike to concentrate on reducing accidental poisonings.

Poison prevention awareness needs to be high on every family's list for safety training. Just as important as teaching a child how to safely cross the street or what to do in case of fire, poison prevention training can have a positive impact on family safety.

Since 1961, when Congress passed a law authorizing the annual proclamation of Poison Prevention, the death toll due to accidental poisonings, of children under five, has dropped 88 percent. While other factors have contributed to this reduction, the increased public awareness of the need to keep medications and household chemicals out of reach of children has been a primary factor.

Poison prevention centers nationwide receive an average of two phone calls an hour on accidental poisonings and the peak times for accidental poisoning are from 5 to 9 p.m. More children ingest poisons in the homes of their grandparents than in their own homes.

Awareness of the most frequent causes of poisonings and how they can be prevented will go a long way toward keeping these statistics down.
Increased awareness means a decrease in poisonings; the facts prove it.

Pioneers sponsor Orientation Day

By Beau Springer
1st Bn., 29th Inf. Regt.

The 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry "Pioneers" held its quarterly Spouse Orientation Day recently.

The Spouse Orientation program is a day-long event which provides Pioneer spouses with an opportunity to familiarize themselves with the work environment, equipment capabilities, chain of command, and other spouses of 1st Bn., 29th Inf.

The orientation began at 9 a.m. with a briefing by Lt. Col John A. Spears, commander of 1st Bn. Spears discussed the role of the soldiers, Non-commissioned officers and officers of the Pioneer battalion, as well as the scope and magnitude of its mission.

The battalion has 1,300 permanent party personnel servicing more than 100 wheeled vehicles, 120 M-113s, and 165 Bradley Fighting Vehicles which support nearly all courses of the Infantry School.

The battalion is directly responsible for all 11M and 11C one station unit training, the Infantry Officers Pre-command Course, the Infantry Mortar Platoon Course, the Bradley Master Gunners Course, and the Bradley Commanders Course. The battalion is also the Infantry School's proponent for the Bradley Fighting Vehicle and all mortar systems.

Spears concluded his briefing with a question and answer forum, which addressed the battalion's role in Operation Desert Storm, the deployment of individual soldiers from the battalion, and the support networks available to spouses in the battalion, should their spouse be sent to Saudi Arabia.

After Spears' briefing, the spouses separated into their respective companies to further acquaint themselves with other spouses, discuss the facilities available on Fort Benning, the recent social events of the Pioneer spouses (including bake sales, battalion picnics, the battalion Christmas party, the Pioneer Ball, and the upcoming battalion Organization Day), and the family support networks of the battalion.

The spouses then had lunch at the 1st Bn., 29th Inf. dining facility.

Spouse Orientation Day ended with a bus tour of Fort Benning, which covered the installation's major facilities and answered basic questions about operating times, accessibility and functionality.

Hotel offers free holidays for Desert Storm soldiers

M. Silver Associates Inc.

One of the Caribbean's largest resort hotel companies announced recently that it will give away more than $1-million in free, all-inclusive vacations to U.S. fighting forces that are, or will be on active duty in the Persian Gulf theater of operations.

The offer by Gordon "Butch" Stewart, chairman of Sandals Resorts, operator of five couples-only vacation properties in Jamaica, will give 500 U.S. servicemen and women and those they've left behind, an opportunity to enjoy an expense-free week-long stay at one of the resorts.

Names will be selected in a random drawing by representatives of the armed services in the near future.

The Sandals Resorts in Jamaica include Sandals Ocho Rios, Sandals Negril, Sandals Montego Bay, Sandals Royal Caribbean and its new Sandals Dunn's River. Under its all-inclusive vacation concept, accommodations, meals, entertainment, a wide range of recreational activities, airport transfers (air transportation is not included), baggage handling, and tips are all covered in a Sandals holiday.

"We want to give some tangible evidence of our admiration and support to these fighting forces far from home and loved ones," said Stewart. "We look forward to the time when they can . . . enjoy our tranquil beaches in Jamaica. Many of those participating in this conflict have already been guests of ours," Stewart added. "We'd be honored to have them back."

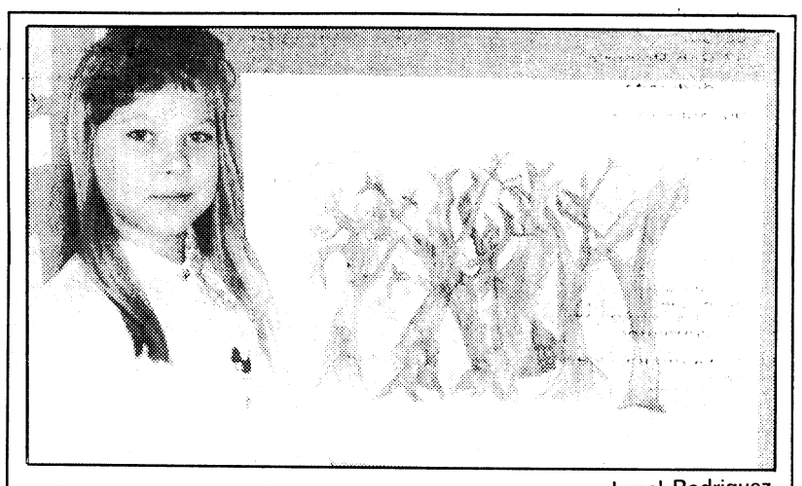
To enter the drawing, the name, address and telephone number of a friend or relative of U.S. military personnel on active duty in the Persian Gulf theater of operations should be submitted on a postcard along with the name, rank, branch of service, and unit of the servicemen or women (one military person per card), and mailed to "Operation Sandals," 7610 S.W. 61 Avenue, Miami, Fla. 33143.

Cols. Exchange Club sponsors luncheon

By Douglas O. Bruk
USAIC Public Affairs Office

The Exchange Club of Columbus, one of the local chapters of the National Exchange Club, is sponsoring weekly luncheons for Fort Benning residents and civilian personnel interested in forming a Fort Benning Exchange Club.

The luncheons are each Tuesday at 11:30 a.m. at the Main Post Officers' Club. Lunch will be free for everyone attending for the first time.



According to Cory Loomis, chairman of the New Club Building Committee for the Columbus Exchange Club, there will be a charter meeting in April. When formed, the Fort Benning club will be the first exchange club on a military installation.

Since the establishment of the first club in 1911, Exchange Club members have been working nationwide to improve their communities.

The National Exchange Club offers a number of programs emphasizing patriotism, community services and youth projects.

The activities of each local chapter depend on community needs, Loomis said.

The more established a club, the more programs it can offer because it has larger resources, he added.

SPIRITUAL

Moms, dads learn sensitivity

By Debra Galle
USAIC Chaplain's Office

Tiny eyes are filled with pain. They seem to long for the simple things in life that most people take for granted: love, caring, food, shelter, and intimacy with another human being.

These are the eyes of children.

The first time anyone ever formally questioned the mistreatment of a child was in 1817. There was no agency to handle the complaint, so the Humane Society dealt with the situation of abuse and neglect of a little child.

Nearly one hundred years later, tiny eyes were filled with suffering resignation to long hard hours of factory work. These children were finally saved by a child labor law in 1939.

Healing is an uncompleted process. These children are now the social-security-aged people of today. They are the parents of the baby-boom generation. They are the grandparents of today's children.

It wasn't until 1964 that a law was passed to protect children from abuse. In those days, being seen and not heard was the primary order.

Parents now are the first generation of adults who even toy with the idea that children are more than personal possessions. Professionals teach that children are people too; they are individuals who must be allowed to express their own feelings.

The first lessons we have in parenting are given to us by our own parents.

When we feel that these lessons are not enough, or perhaps more hurtful than helpful, it is time to take a few more pointers.

Special classes for parenting are offered all year through the Chaplain's Family Life Center. Recently, a class called Sensitive Parenting finished its nine-week session. Students were enthusiastic enough about the progress they had made during the discussion group, they were eager to sign up for the next class.

Sensitive Parenting, with an emphasis on teen-agers, will begin March 20 and continue through May 8. It will be at the Chaplain's Family Life Center, building 2606, Soldier's Plaza. For registration, call 545-5301 or 545-2017.

Mothers, fathers, soldiers, civilians, enlisted, officers, and professionals in the child care fields attend these courses.

"A cartoon that always come to mind when I teach a class like this," said Chaplain (Maj.) Richard Roggia, Chief, Chaplain's Family Life Center, "is the one with a mother and tiny daughter. The little girl asks her mom if she has a license or diploma to become a parent. When the answer is 'no,' the little girl goes on to ask if she has taken any classes or earned any certificates in parenting.

"The mother again answers, 'no,' to which the child walks away deep in thought.

"That's frightening," said the little girl.

All students who complete parenting classes at the Chaplain's Family Life Center, along with a certificate, they receive professional instruction, reading material, fellowship, and the opportunity for informative discussion.

ASK THE JUDGE

By Virginia L. Carlton
Staff Judge Advocate's Office

Q. I entered into a contract in 1989 with Traditional Industries for the purchase of photography equipment and services on credit at 18 percent interest for $1,000. However, I am not happy with the equipment or the services. Can I get out of my contract with Traditional Industries?

A. In an order entered in the U.S. District Court in Seattle, Washington Jan. 4, the court held that all photo contracts between Traditional and its customers, which were entered into during the period Aug. 16, 1989 to Oct. 18, 1990, were voidable. The court order means that the customers may choose to get out of the contracts if they want to do so. However, in order to get out of the contracts, customers must first notify Traditional Industries. The court also ordered Traditional to resolve all complaints from these customers or cancel the amounts still owing on their contracts.

Traditional Industries also operates under the names of American Industries, Associated Photographic Services, Family Camera Club, Family Record Plan, PhotoMagic, Photo USA, Precious Images, TRICAN, Tristar, Video Keepsakes, and World Wide Distributors. If you entered into a contract with Traditional Industries or any of its subsidiary companies named above during Aug. 16, 1989, to Oct. 18, 1990, you should make an appointment with the Legal Assistance Office to have your contract reviewed.

The Legal Assistance Office staff suggests that you have them review any contract you don't fully understand, before you enter into them. If someone tries to pressure you into signing a contract before you are ready, don't sign.

When you buy something at a store and later change your mind, you probably will not be able to return the merchandise. However, if you buy an item in your home or at a location that is not the seller's regular place of business, the Door to Door Sales Rule gives you three days to cancel purchases of $25 or more.

Under the Door to Door Sales Rule, your opportunity to cancel for a full refund extends until midnight of the third business day following the sale. Certain purchases are excluded from the Door to Door Sales Rule, like automobile tent sales and sales by phone.

Also under the Door to Door Sales Rule, the salesperson must inform you of your cancellation rights at the time of the sale. The salesperson also must give you two copies of a cancellation form (one to keep and one to send) and a copy of your contract or a receipt. The contract or receipt should be dated, show the name and address of the seller, and explain your right to cancel. The contract or receipt must be in the same language as that used in the sales presentation.

To cancel a sale, sign and date one copy of the cancellation form. Then mail it to the address given for cancellation by certified mail so that the envelope is post-marked before midnight of the third business day after the contract date.

If you have any questions concerning a contract that you have entered into, contact the Legal Assistance Office at 545-3281.

ENERGY WATCH

By Tina Cook
Energy Branch

Coal is a fossil fuel, as are petroleum and natural gas. Coal is a sedimentary organic rock that contains more than 50 percent carbonaceous material by weight. It is composed of carbon, hydrogen, oxygen, nitrogen, and sulfur, with smaller amounts of other materials ranging from aluminum to zirconium.

Coal had its beginning as ancient plants that grew in swamps millions of years ago. Geological processes working over vast spans of time compressed and altered plant remains, increasing the percentage of carbon present, thereby producing the different ranks of coal: lignite, subbituminous, bituminous, and anthracite.

According to the Energy Information Administration, the United States contains vast deposits of coal — more extensive than those of natural gas and petroleum. If total estimated recoverable energy reserves of the major fossil fuels are compared on the basis of heat content, about 3 percent of reserves are crude oil, about 4 percent are natural gas, and more than 90 percent are coal.

Total United States coal resources in the ground are estimated to be 4 trillion tons, of which 1.7 trillion tons are identified resources. identified resources include the demonstrated reserve base, which comprises coal resources that have been mapped within specified levels of reliability and accuracy and are considered to be technically and economically minable.

Only coalbeds of greater than a certain minimum thickness and less than a specified maximum depth from the surface are included in the demonstrated reserve base. The United States demonstrated reserve base totals 476 billion short tons.

There are four ranks of coal recognized in the United States: anthracite, bituminous coal, subbituminous coal, and lignite. In the United States, coal is ranked, or classified, according to its heating value and amount of fixed carbon and volatile matter it contains. Of the four ranks, bituminous coal accounts for more than half (51 percent) of the demonstrated reserve base. Bituminoius coal is concentrated primarily east of the Mississippi River, with the greatest amounts in Illinois, Kentucky, and West Virginia. All subbituminous coal (38 percent of the demonstrated reserve base) is west of the Mississippi, with most of it in Montana and Wyoming. Lignite, the lowest rank coal, accounts for about 10 percent of the demonstrated reserve base and is found mostly in Montana, Texas, and North Dakota.

Anthracite, the highest ranked coal, makes up less than 2 percent of the demonstrated reserve base and is concentrated almost entirely in northeastern Pennsylvania.

Current world recoverable reserves are estimated to be 1.1 trillion short tons. It is estimated that the United States possesses nearly one-fourth of the world's recoverable coal reserves, about the same as the U.S.S.R. Combined, the two countries contain almost half of the world's estimated recoverable coal. China (17 percent), Australia (7 percent), West Germany (6 percent), South Africa (6 percent), and Poland (4 percent) also have significant amounts of recoverable coal reserves.

If you have any questions on this or any energy-related subject, contact the Energy Office at 545-4652 or 545-SWAT (Save Watts and Therms)!

THE BAYONET

Home of the Infantry

Post welcomes returning soldiers

Desert Storm 'heroes' come home

By Jon R. Anderson
Bayonet staff writer

"I'm home!" was Pamela Green's triumphant shout as she disembarked from the Delta L10-11, once again on American soil.

According to Bob Hyme of the Emergency Operation Center, Green and 255 other soldiers were the first to arrive at Fort Benning's Lawson Army Airfield from Saudi Arabia March 8 as part of the scheduled redeployment back to the United States.

Elements from the 197th Infantry Brigade, 24th Mechanized Infantry Division and the 82nd Airborne comprised the first of many more flights to come, said Hyme, adding, however, that no set schedule has yet been established.

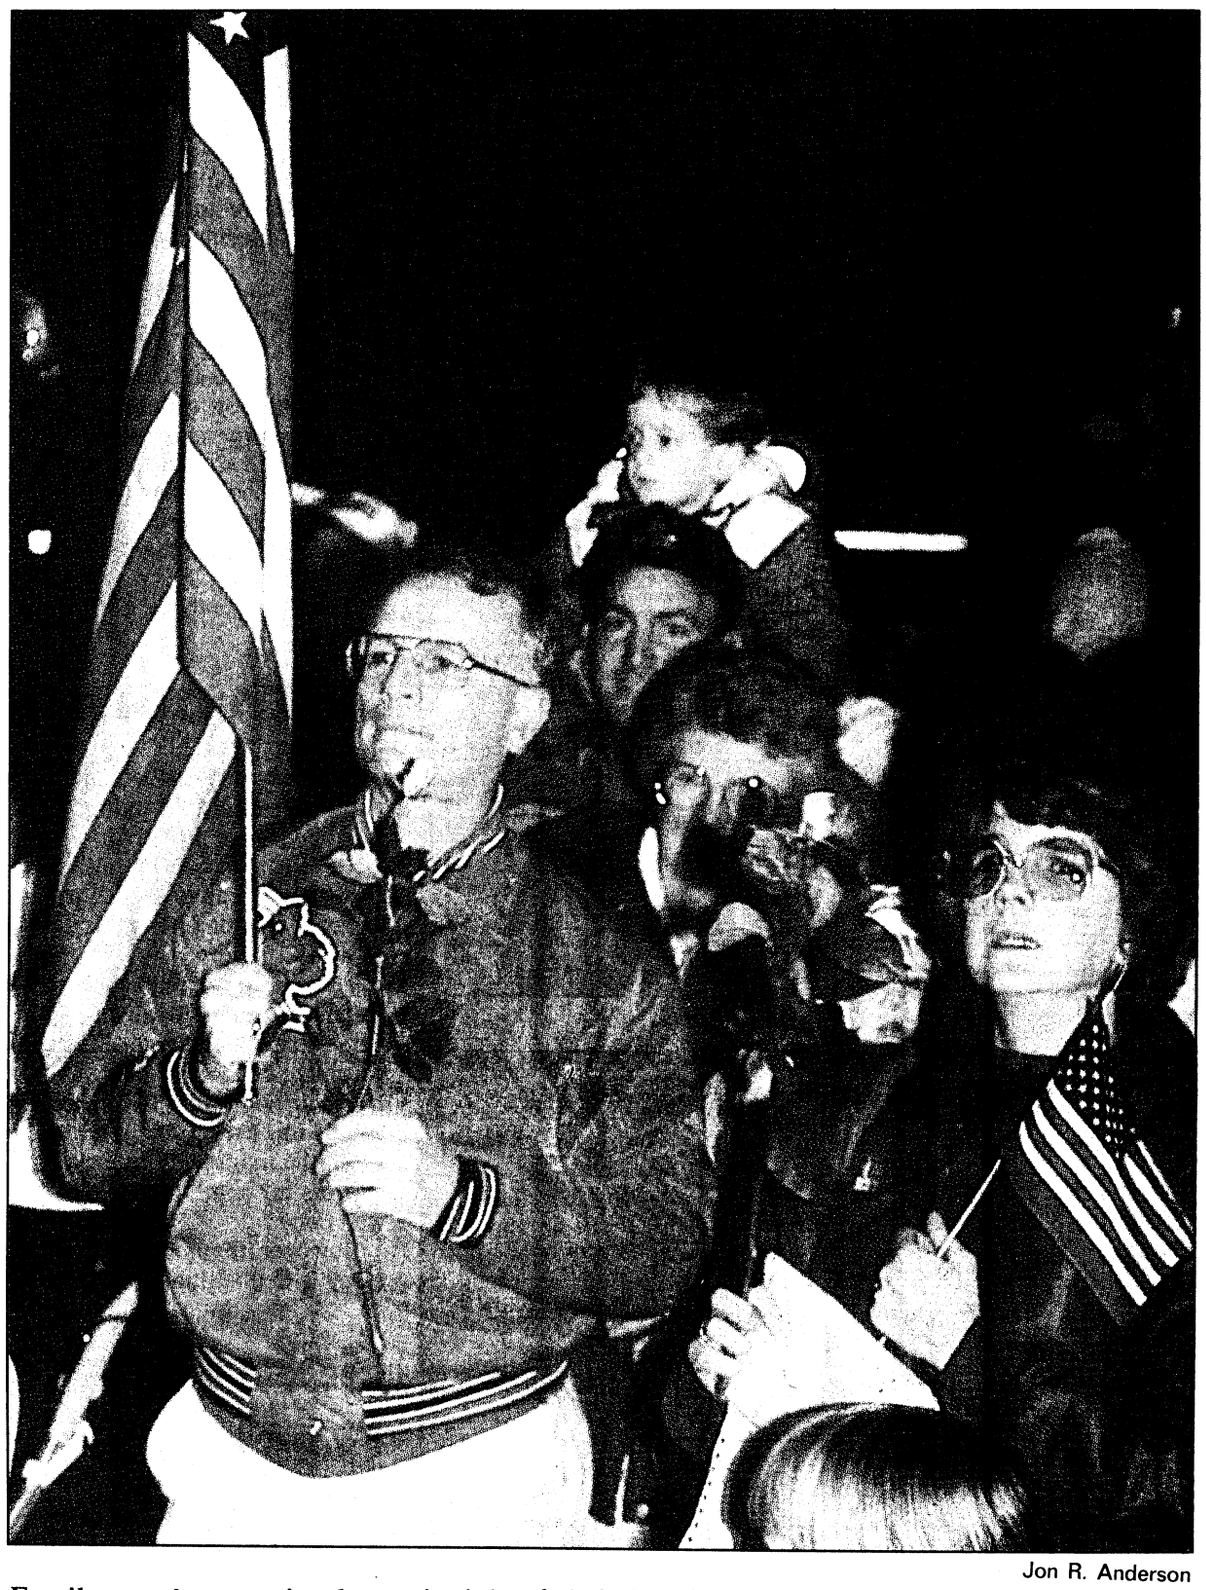
Maj. Gen. Carmen J. Cavezza, Fort Benning commanding general, was on hand to address the troops, as well as Gen. Edwin H. Burba Jr., U.S. Army Forces Command commander. Burba praised the returning soldiers saying, "their professionalism, their courage and their commitment paid off. It was a magnificent victory for our nation and the entire free world."

Returning soldiers, however, were less concerned about victory celebrations than they were some of the simpler things in life.

"The first thing I'm going to do is take a bath, get clean and relax," said Roger Joyce of the 197th.

One soldier, also from the 197th, seemed to capture the consensus of many by saying, "I'm going take a hot shower, drink a cold beer, then go to bed. . .the rest is private, between me and my wife."

An additional 165 soldiers returned Sunday to continue to other posts by bus.



Although most from this contingent had families anxiously awaiting their return at their final destinations, crowds of people from the Columbus and Fort Benning communities cheered the arriving soldiers to, as one Columbus resident put it, "show our love and support."

Soldiers free to separate

Army halts Stop Loss

USAIC Public Affairs Office

The Department of Army terminated Stop Loss directives March 9 and authorized the release of soldiers from active duty.

This includes all categories of soldiers — regular army, Individual Ready Reserves, Reserve, and retirees.

Adjutant General officials say all Fort Benning individual augmentations for Desert Storm are currently being processed for immediate return to home station or release from active duty.

National Guard or Reserve soldiers in mobilized units will be released when their unit is demobilized and returned to home station, officials said.

Active duty soldiers who are at or past expiration of term of service and soldiers with approved retirements whose original release date has passed are to be released from active duty as expeditiously as possible.

Normal separation procedures will be utilized with a few local exceptions. Soldiers will still have to go through normal clearance procedures — tap briefings, medical screenings, unit clearance, etc., officials said.

Also, soldiers must have a Department of Army Form 4187 forwarded through the colonel-level commander requesting release from active duty with the requested date of release and the amount of transition leave the soldier wishes to take.

Soldiers will be authorized transition leave. Those who are currently past their expiration term of service dates will have their release dates adjusted to allow transition leave to be used.

Soldiers with an approved retirement date established prior to Oct. 1 will be contacted by the retirement services office to establish a new retirement date.

Soldiers will be authorized an extension past Oct. 1 to ensure they are authorized enough time to use transition leave.

An exception to standard discharge policy is that soldiers are not authorized to apply for early separation to further education.

The needs of soldiers and units will be met as much as possible, officials said.

For more information, call Brenda Mollett at 545-1324.

Army releases Reservists

Army News Service

WASHINGTON — Approximately 21,000 Individual Ready Reserve soldiers called up since January to support Operation Desert Storm are being released from active duty by the Department of the Army.

According to Lt. Col. Alan Sepe, Office of the Chief, Army Reserve, the IRR soldiers will be released as quickly as possible. He said the early end to offensive operations in the Persian Gulf made the release possible.

He added, however, that IRR soldiers who wish to stay on active duty can make that request through their commanders. Some IRR soldiers will be involuntarily kept on active duty if their commanders identify them as mission essential.

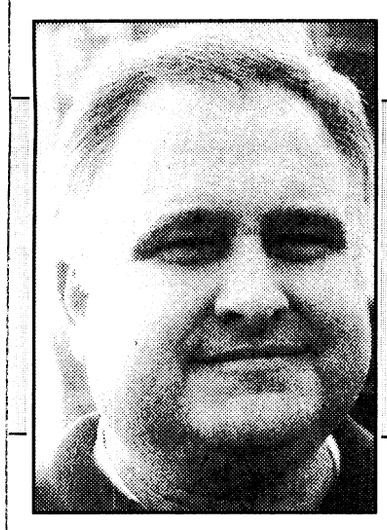
Those IRR soldiers who have deployed overseas will redeploy to designated transition points in the United States where they will be released from active duty as soon as possible.

IRR soldiers serving in the United States will be released from their currently assigned posts.

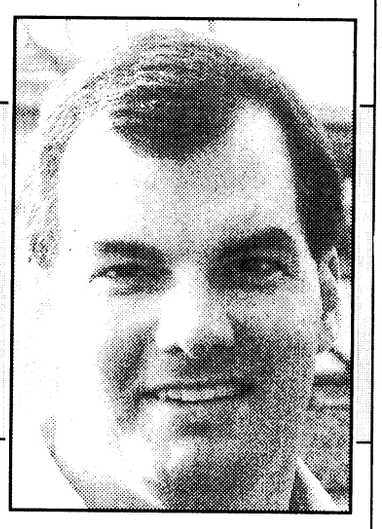
OPINION

VARIOUS VOICES:

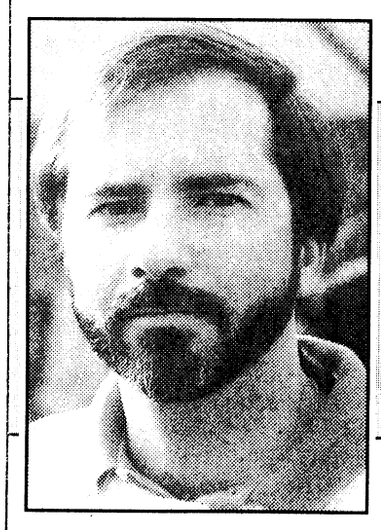
As a Leadership Georgia representative, what did you learn from your visit to Fort Benning that you will be able to communicate to others?



Keith Caudel, bank president, Monroe — "I think that the biggest thing that any leader needs is confidence to make decisions. Certainly, going through something like Ranger School is a very unique confidence builder. That confidence to make the decision is half the game."



Tina Robinson, administrative assistant, Atlanta — "I've gotten a greater respect for (members of) the military as far as what they have to go through. I had no idea what you had to go through as a soldier and that in in itself builds leadership."



Sandra Jackson, ticket agent, Atlanta — "I had no idea that we had this much modern technology. I was always confident that we had the best available, but I had no concept that we trained our soldiers like this."

Wayne Escoe, state parks administrator, Atlanta — "The whole thing about the military is effective leadership. I think we're looking at two things. First, how the military is effective with leadership and also Georgia's role in national defense."

Warren Ragsdale, public affairs director, Marietta — "I've learned a lot about the leadership principles that Fort Benning instills in its own and in the folks they train to lead our armed forces. I've also been impressed with how important the military community is to the State of Georgia."

Tim Chason, chamber of commerce president, Cartersville — "I've gotten a better understanding of what (members of) the armed forces do for our country and how they are trained. These men and women protect our country, and they're the one our tax dollars fund."

COMMENTARY

People want to know when soldiers returning

By Clyde Snively

Now that Desert Storm is over, will we call the redeployment phase "Desert Calm"?

If it is renamed that, the people doing the renaming don't know the havoc being wreaked at the home stations of deployed troops.

Try telling wives, husbands, girlfriends, boyfriends, mothers and fathers you don't have any idea when the soldiers are coming home. Your conversation will go like this if the caller is reasonable:

"Do you have a list of the soldiers coming back?"

"Ma'am we don't even have aircraft scheduled to come back."

"Well, when will you have a schedule?"

"I don't know."

"When will you know?"

"I don't know that either."

"When they schedule the aircraft, will you know then?"

"We'll know as soon as the aircraft is scheduled."

"And when will that be?"

"I don't know."

"How far in advance will you know when they are scheduled?"

"As soon as they schedule the aircraft, we'll know. That could be two days in advance or two months in advance. Once the aircraft is scheduled we'll know."

"But you don't know if any planes are scheduled right now."

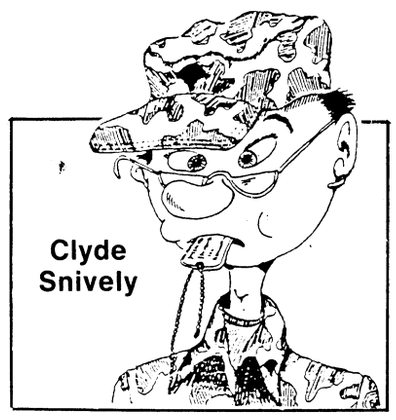
"I know none are scheduled at this time."

"For how long?"

"Period. No aircraft is scheduled. When planes are scheduled, we'll know."

"Okay, well thanks for the information. I just needed to get a feel for what was going on."

We go through this drill every day many times a day. We maintain our composure because we know the family members are anxious and want to know something, anything. We also put up with calls like this:



"When is the next planeload of troops coming in?"

"Don't know, don't have any scheduled at this time."

"When do you think the soldiers will come home?"

"I wish I knew. But we don't have any information at this time?"

"Yes you do. I know you do.

You public affairs people. You're so high and mighty with your information. You just won't tell anyone."

"But..." click. End of conversation.

It's times like these when you yearn for the old phone system. You remember the old phone system, the one where people couldn't get through. What a godsend that would be now.

The first few days the phones never stopped ringing. But recently, they at least stop so you can make a call out. One reason is the Family Assistance Center is now answering calls. The phone number there is 545-5516 or 545-7517.

Every night when I go home I thank God for the Family Assistance Center and those brave people manning the phones. Did I tell you the numbers there are 545-5516 or 545-7517? Well, if I didn't the numbers are 545-5516 or 545-7517.

About the time all this calms down, we'll get heavily involved in the Mother of all Welcome Home parties.

The way I understand it, the cities and chambers of Phenix City and Columbus are working with the Civilian Military Council to come up with some extravaganza around the Fourth of July.

Early word out is that we'll have a mother of all parades, with a mother of all celebrations and the mother of all fireworks displays.

I have to think the committee working on this has to be, what else, the mother of all organizing committees.

All this boggles the mind of this mother of all columnists.

Spc. Clyde Snively is a Bayonet columnist.

29th company commander commends soldiers

The men and women from Fort Benning that served directly in support of Operation Desert Storm have earned a warm reception upon their return.

They deserve credit for their collective professionalism, perseverance and valor in the complete coalition victory over Iraq's armed forces. I, for one, will be at Lawson Army Airfield when the main body returns to express my gratitude for a "job well done."

However, the intent of this essay is to illuminate the superb performance of a selected group of special men and women who indirectly supported Operation Desert Storm.

The officers, non-commissioned officers and soldiers of the 29th Infantry Regiment have selflessly immersed themselves in contributing to the war effort.

They assumed the difficult task of pre-deployment preparation for numerous combat units while simultaneously preforming their traditional missions. Additionally, they assumed many non-traditional support missions for the installation throughout the past seven months.

The 29th Regiment's most significant contribution has been the outstanding technical training of all infantry weapon systems, land navigations and selected combat critical skills required of our infantry force.

When called upon to train the Individual Ready Reserves, test emerging technology or deploy personnel and equipment to Southwest Asia, the regiment did so in the finest tradition of the infantry service.

I want to express my special thanks to the NCOs and soldiers of Company B, 2nd Battalion "Tank Killers." Their sense of urgency and unequalled passion in churning out highly trained anti-armor specialists deserves recognition.

In my 10 years of organized athletics and eight years of infantry service, I have never witnessed a team effort of such proportion.

Your dedication, positive attitude and genuine concern for "the grunts over there" could not make a commander more proud.

Capt. Darryl W. Daugherty Commander
Co. B, 2nd Bn., 29th Inf.

Schwarzkopf proud of Desert Storm troops

SAUDI ARABIA — The following message was sent from Gen. Norman Schwarzkopf to all Desert Storm forces March 6.

"Since the beginning of Desert Shield last August, you have traveled over great distances, through miles of desert, to places we never knew existed, with names we can't even pronounce.

Tomorrow some of you will begin the most important trip of all; you'll be going home. The rest of you will soon follow.

"I did not want a single one of you to leave before I had the opportunity to tell you how immensely proud I am of each and every soldier, sailor, airman, Marine, Coast Guardsman and civilian in this command.

"I asked you to be the thunder and lightning of Desert Storm. You were all that and more.

Through your courageous acts, your dedicated service, your determination and love of country, you have written history in the desert sands that can never be blown away by the winds of time.

You take back with you to the United States not only the respect of your countrymen, but the respect of millions of citizens of the Middle East.

You have demonstrated the best qualities of Americans through your respect for other religions, other cultures, other race and other nationalities.

"While you served here, you learned rather than criticize, and by learning you'll take back to your homes knowledge little known about cultures that are thousands of years old.

More importantly, you have left among those thousand-year-old cultures knowledge of what it means to deal with Americans.

Your country is proud of you, the world is proud of you and I am proud of you.

God bless you and God speed on your return to your homes and families. Thank you for the great honor and privilege you have given me by accepting me as your commander in chief of Operations Desert Shield and Desert Storm.

Soldiers get big welcome

Hugs, kisses, pats on back greet 'heroes'

By Alyanna B. Clay-Heard
Bayonet staff writer

Kelley Hill pulsed with excitement. With tension. With the love and pride of a grateful nation. With the relief and emotion of waiting loved ones.

That's the best way to describe the scene Friday night at the Kelley Hill Recreation Center, where the homecoming ceremony for the first 197th troops returning from Operation Desert Storm was being held.

The large crowd of family members waited for more than an hour in the nippy evening air outside the recreation center, some carrying posters and banners, some waving miniature flags, all anticipating the moment they could catch a glimpse of their "desert heroes."

As they ate piping hot pizza and drank cold sodas inside the center,tension mounted. Many watched the arrival of the troops at Lawson Army Airfield on television.

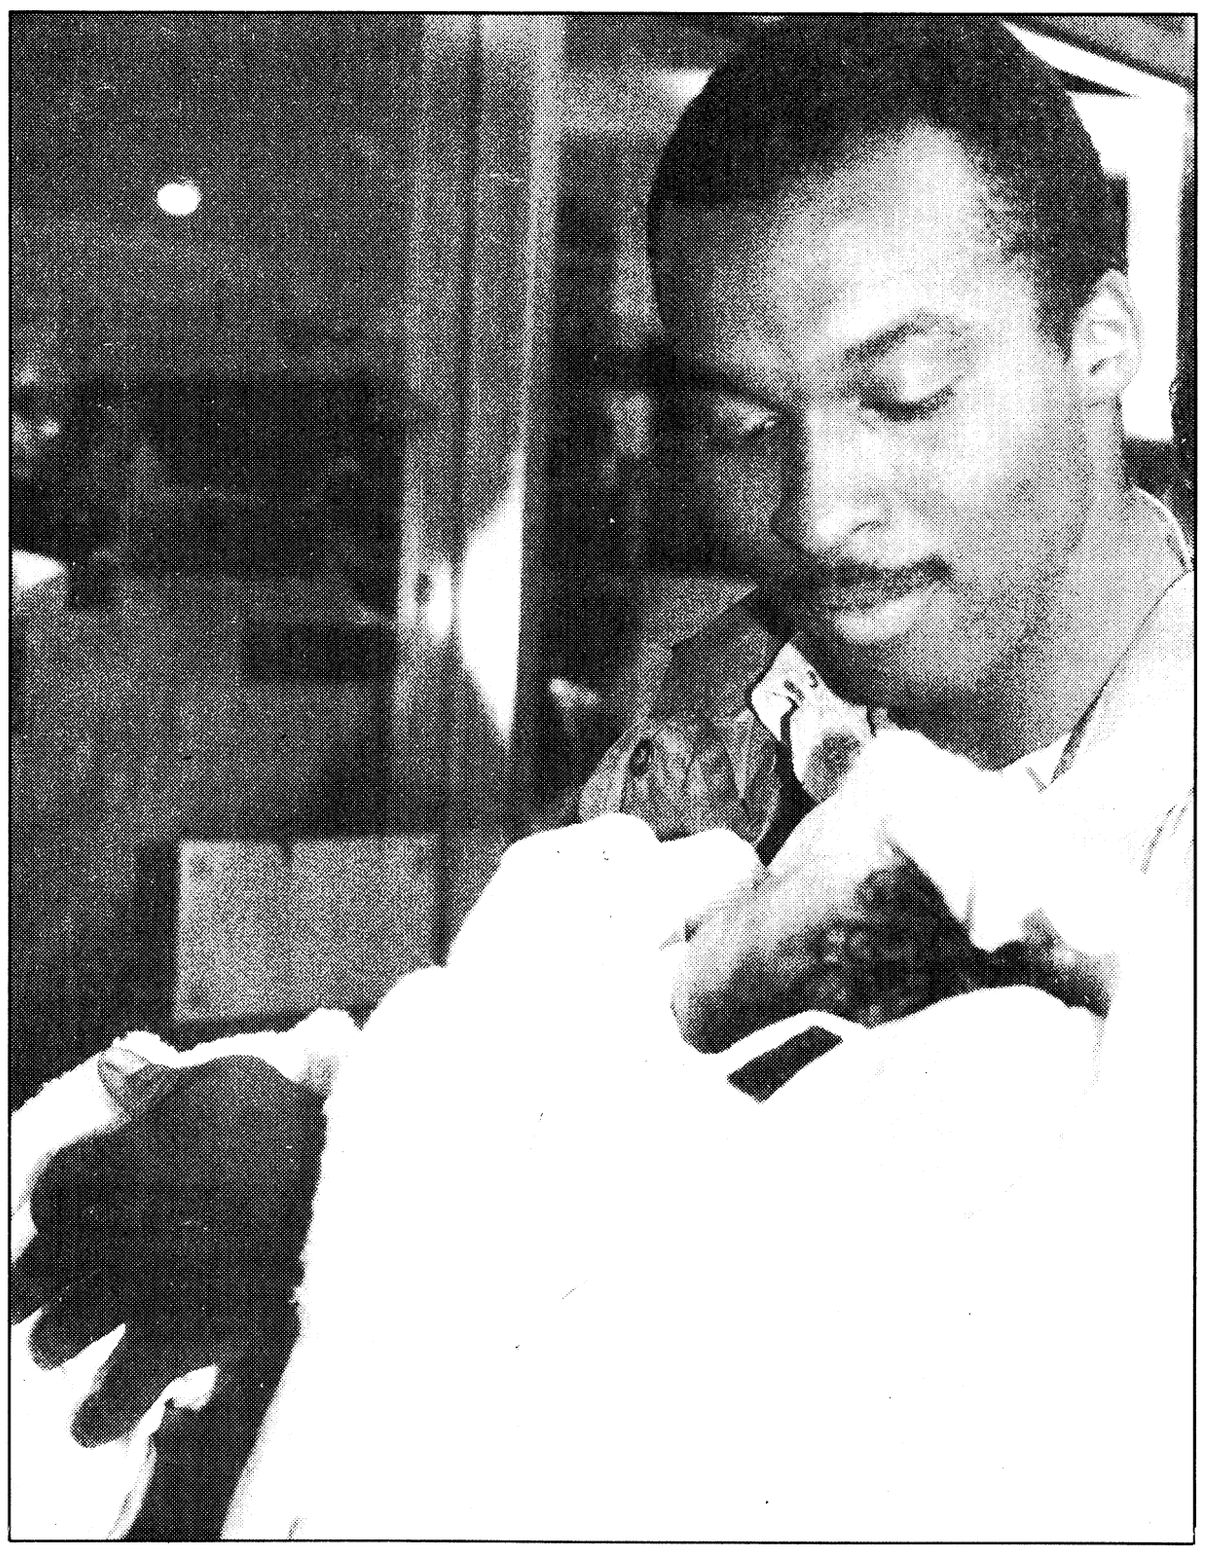
Then, without warning, a few soldiers in desert camouflage uniform were spotted walking toward the center.

Whatever restraint the crowd felt up to this time was dissipated. In a moment, family members were off and running — all over Kelley Hill.

The calm crowd suddenly turned into a screaming, chanting, crying, hugging frenzy of emotion.

Soldiers were hugged, slapped on the back, kissed on their faces and lips, and greeted with handshakes.

Tears were shed, congratulations given and declarations of undying love offered. Soldiers were, in every sense of the word, welcomed.



Capt. Mike Clemmons, rear detachment executive officer of the 197th, was on hand to welcome the troops back as well.

"I feel so good at the return of the troops, I want to break down and hug them myself," said Clemmons.

Clemmons wasn't the only one. Family members, deprived of physical contact with their loved one for seven months, were ecstatic at the chance to touch their soldiers.

"I don't know what I'll want to do first, hug him, kiss him or tackle him," said LaVern Page, whose husband is with the 197th Support Battalion.

"I don't have any soldier coming back from the desert," said one supporter. "I just want to touch one, even the sleeve of the uniform. That will make it more real that this ordeal is over," she said.

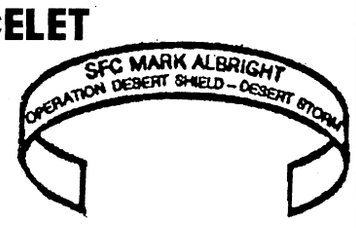
Defense medal OK to wear

By Brian C. Sutton
Bayonet staff writer

The National Defense Service Medal (with ribbon) is authorized for immediate wear, according to officials in Washington, D.C.

The medal, which was recently approved for award to U.S. armed forces members who have served on active duty since the Iraqi invasion of Kuwait Aug. 2, is available for personal purchase until such a time that individual units receive supplies.



Secretary of Defense Dick Cheney authorized the award to recognize "the outstanding performance of our armed forces during Operation Desert Shield/Desert Storm," a recent announcement said.

All members of the active duty armed forces of the United States and activated Reserve Component soldiers are authorized to wear the ribbon with other personal awards and decorations.

Georgia's leaders get a glimpse of soldiering

By Jon R. Anderson
Bayonet staff writer

This year's class of Leadership Georgia toured Fort Benning March 8 to observe, first hand, various facilities around post.

According to Keith Caudel, the president of a bank in Monroe and a member of the class, the purpose of Leadership Georgia is to "get a common understanding of the issues facing Georgia and what the state has to offer."

Participants in Leadership Georgia are community leaders, ages 25 to 45, from all facets of the business, industrial and professional arenas, as well as from occupations in religion, education, social services and government.

By participating in interactive tours and discussions with outstanding authorities, members are exposed to a wide variety of issues, problems and opportunities facing Georgia, said class president Jim Buntin.

The tour of Fort Benning began with lunch at the 2nd Battalion, 58th Infantry Dining Facility where members ate and conversed with basic trainees. After the meal Maj. Gen. Carmen J. Cavezza and U.S. Rep. Richard Ray addressed the group.

Ray, who is a member of House Armed Services Committee, discussed defense issues and praised Fort Benning's role as "a major player in the Mideast war."

The group then proceeded to the 30th Adjutant General Reception Station where they were briefed by Col. Joseph W. Trez, Infantry Training Center commander, on "the intricate process of making civilians into soldiers."

The group then continued to Harmony Church where they saw a Rangers in Action demonstration at Victory Pond. For many, this was the highlight of the trip with one member saying she "never realized how in-depth and involved the training could be."

The tour concluded on Main Post, where members were given the opportunity to feel what Beverly Tyler, a marketing director in Atlanta, described as "your stomach jumping up, out of your mouth," explaining the sensation of the free fall on the Buddy Seat Controlled Decent Tower.

Ray: Military's success due to people, training

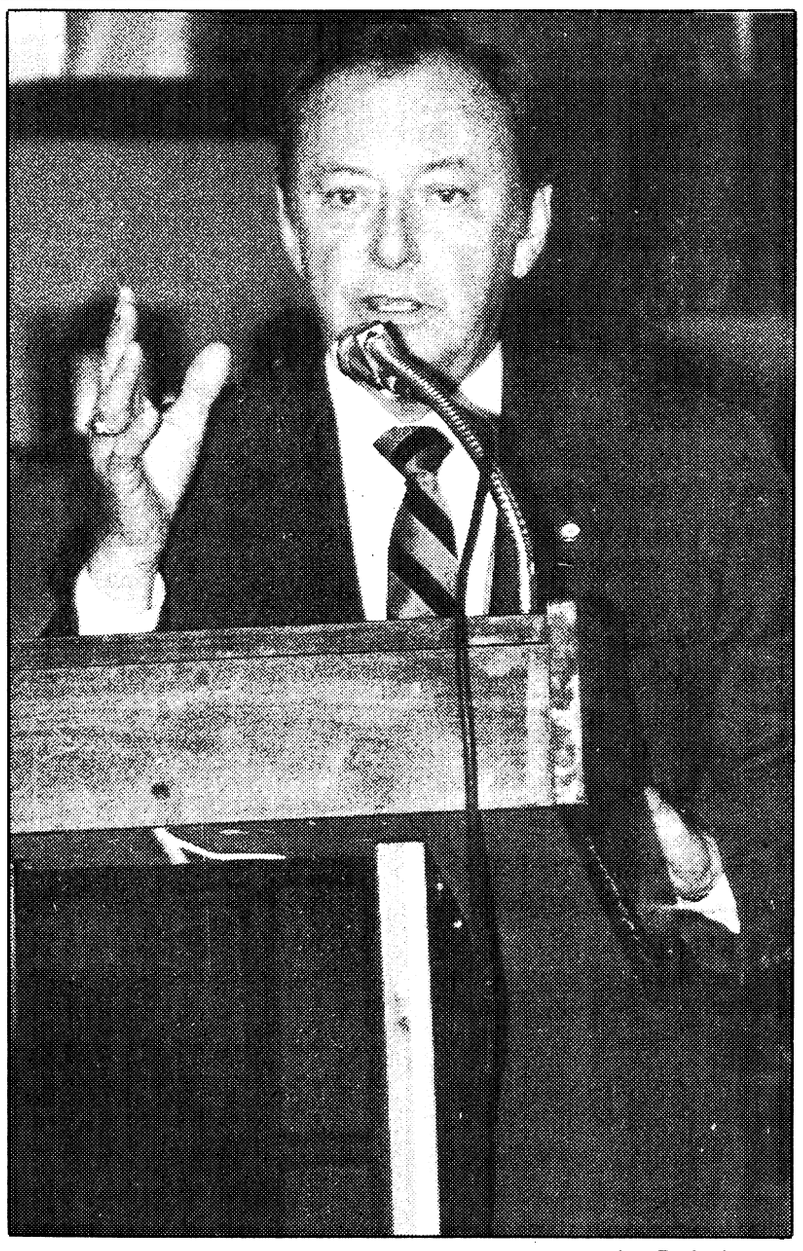
By John M. Gorman
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Quality people, training and equipment is what U.S. Rep. Richard Ray attributed to the success of American forces in the war in the Persian Gulf.

Ray, who represents Georgia's 3rd Congressional District, which covers both Columbus and Fort Benning, was at Fort Benning March 8 to address Leadership Georgia, a group of the state's leaders in economics, education and government who were touring the post.

Addressing the recent hostilities in the Persian Gulf, the congressman offered his insights as a member of the House Armed Services Committee.

He said there were three major factors contributing to such an overwhelming success by the U.S. military.



"First, today's volunteer army consists of a high caliber individual who is well trained and has the best equipment and technology at his disposal," he said.

"Second, we've put a heavy investment into high-tech type equipment. Over the years, many of us were criticized for supporting the Bradley Fighting Vehicle, the M-1 tank and certain other high-tech weapons. But, in retrospect, our judgment has been redeemed in the Middle East."

Ray said the quality of training our soldiers receive is the third factor. "That's where Fort Benning comes in," he said. "It is this training, much of it provided right here, that enables our soldiers to utilize the modern equipment effectively and apply the tactics taught here to achieve victory on the battlefield.

"The good training that our soldiers receive here has contributed enormously to their morale and peace of mind," he said.

Ray also ascribed success during the war to allowing the military the ability to control its own operations. "We didn't try to micro-manage. The military ran it and ran it well," he said.

Airborne test platoon fades into history

By Paul W. Lavendar
TEXCOM Infantry Board

Airborne units in the U.S. Army were born at the Infantry Board at Fort Benning. The Airborne concept developed during the 1930s from the efforts of a few individuals who envisioned the unlimited possibilities of using air transportation to project into combat an offensive striking force which might will determine the outcome of battles.

On June 25, 1940, the War Department directed organization of a parachute test platoon to be used to investigate the feasibility of "air infantry." The Parachute Test Platoon was formed as a composite unit of specially selected men from the 29th Infantry at Fort Benning.

The Parachute Test Platoon was assigned to the Test Section of the Infantry Board for the necessary training and testing of proposed airborne concepts.

The Test Section of the Infantry Board prepared an eight-week training schedule which incorporated all phases of parachute training, from the first orientation flight and packing of parachutes to jumping from airplanes in flight.

The first parachute jumps from airplanes in flight were made by men of the Parachute Test Platoon on Aug. 16, 1940.

Each parachutist wore the standard Air Corps T-3, free-type, human escape parachute and, in addition, a test type emergency parachute. This event was the birth of Airborne operations in the U.S. Army.

Throughout the years since 1940, the Infantry Board has maintained an Airborne Test Platoon to accomplish testing of airborne equipment. This equipment consists of the weapons, clothing, rations, and other items which are worn or carried by individual parachutists while jumping from aircraft and then carried by the individual after clearing the Drop Zone.

During 1965-66, Gen. (then Capt.) Colin L. Powell served as a member of the Airborne Test Platoon at the Infantry Board.

The Infantry Board was established at Fort Benning on Dec. 15, 1919. It has remained at Fort Benning throughout the years as a development and testing laboratory for the improvement of the Infantry.

In compliance with resource reductions mandated by the Department of Defense, the Infantry Board will be discontinued effective March 23. At that time, along with the rest of the Infantry Board, the Airborne Test Platoon and its illustrious record of Airborne testing will fade into history.

Housing

Policy change to shorten waiting time

Directorate of Engineering and Housing

Shorter waiting times and increased occupancy for housing will be the result of a post housing policy change, effective March 5.

Maj. Gen. Carmen J. Cavezza, Fort Benning commander, gave approval to discontinue a policy that allows for 150 housing units to be set aside for Infantry Officers Advanced Course* students.

The change will become effective with IOAC Class 3-91 which began Thursday.

The discontinuance of the dedicated housing policy is expected to boost housing occupancy rates for permanent party officers on family housing lists and shorten the time they have to wait.

Fort Benning initiated the dedicated IOAC housing policy several years ago when IOAC students routinely had difficulty finding adequate rental housing for their relatively short stays of six months in the Fort Benning area. Most apartment managers at that time offered leases for a minimum of 12 months. To assist the students, Fort Benning dedicated 120 three-bedroom units, or white elephants, as they are called, and 30 four-bedroom units in Perkins Place for the exclusive use of the students.

The rental housing market off post has changed dramatically in recent years. Property managers have become more responsive to the needs of the military community, offering shorter leases and a greater percentage of furnished apartments. As a result, students rarely encounter problems in finding suitable rental housing with short-term leases.

Approval has been granted to reallocate the housing as follows:

- 56 three-bedroom units to field grade officers.
- 64 three-bedroom units to company grade officers.
- 30 four-bedroom units (white elephants) to company grade officers.

Currently, company grade officers permanently assigned to Fort Benning must wait up to nine months for quarters to become available. Field grade officers wait from eight to 14 months for three- and four-bedroom quarters.

There are about 120 families on the company grade lists and about 67 on the field grade lists.

The reallocation is expected to decrease waiting time for field grade officers on the three-bedroom list to two months and waiting time for company grade officers on the three and four bedroom lists to two weeks.

Students who have unusual circumstances or special housing needs should contact the Housing Referral Office for assistance.

If household goods cannot be delivered prior to the beginning of the class, students may borrow household goods from the Furnishings Management Branch, Directorate of Engineering and Housing.

535th engineers keep low profile, get job done

Detachment is virtually unknown to rest of post

By Alyanna B. Clay-Heard
Bayonet staff writer

One unit, headquartered in New Jersey, has managed to arrive at Fort Benning, set up shop, get deployed to support Operation Desert Storm, initiate support groups and continue on with their daily mission virtually unknown to the rest of the post.

The 535th Engineer Detachment, assigned to and headquartered from Fort Monmouth, N.J., arrived at Fort Benning for permanent duty in August.

The unit, nestled inconspicuously in the Harmony Church area, consists of 16 personnel, one engineer administrator and 15 prime power production specialists.

The 535th's mission consists of providing prime electrical power to large areas of construction, such as rows of newly constructed buildings.

Just as the unit arrived on Fort Benning, 15 of the 16 members of the 535th received orders to go to Saudi Arabia to support Operation Desert Storm, leaving one soldier, Staff Sgt. Alan Stewart, to support daily unit rear detachment operations.

"The unit is currently based in Riyadh, Saudi Arabia, and its mission for the moment is to supply prime electrical power to field hospitals, base camps and other large capacity areas," said Stewart.

"Soldiers in the unit also power the Patriot missile sites, so each site can save its energy for actual attacks," he said.

The unit's one female soldier, Staff Sgt. Phyllis Stange, is also deployed to the Middle East. Her work involves supplying prime electrical power to a prisoner of war camp in Saudi Arabia, said Stewart.

While his fellow soldiers are running electricity throughout the desert, Stewart is kept busy running the unit and the support group, which consists of nine wives, he said.

"Basically, it's just a one-man operation," said Stewart. "For now anyway," he said.

USAIC Public Affairs Office

For anyone who has ever dreamed of attending the U.S. Military Academy at West Point but thought that dream was unattainable, the U.S. Military Academy Preparatory School just might be for you.

The school prepares and trains active and Reserve soldiers to qualify for admission to the military academy and provides training that will assist them after they arrive at West Point. Approximately 95 percent of the graduates receive appointments to the military academy.

The prep school is open to enlisted soldiers who are in the regular Army, Reserves or National Guard, and to civilians who are authorized by the Department of the Army to enlist in the Army Reserve specifically for the purpose of attending USMAPS.

Active duty and Reserve soldiers interested in applying to USMAPS should go through their commanders and submit an application in accordance with Army Regulation 351-12. Applications must be submitted no later than April 15 of the year applicants wish to attend USMAPS.

To be eligible for consideration, applicants must be:

● U.S. citizens or be able to become U.S. citizens before July 1 of the year they are to graduate.

● Of high moral character and never have been convicted by a civil court or by court-martial.

● At least 17 but not 21 years old before July 1 of the year in which attendance at USMAPS is desired.

● Unmarried with no legal obligation to support dependents.

● A high school graduate or GED equivalent.

● Medically qualified for admission to USMA; pregrancy will result in a medical disqualification.

Applicants must also possess leadership potential and be highly motivated toward a military career.

USMAPS officials have asked commanders to encourage their best qualified soldiers who are interested in a career as a commissioned officer to consider applying for admission to USMAPS. Information about application procedures can be found in Army Regulation 351-12, Nomination to USMA, Enlisted Categories — Army.

29th Inf. soldiers defend MOUT town

By Brian C. Sutton
Bayonet staff writer

An eerie quietness set on the town as the defending soldiers waited for the enemy attack that was sure to happen.

The quietness was broken only by an occasional soldier hurrying to finish camouflaging his position. The lines in the stone faces of those soldiers were emphasized by the midday sun, which made the sweat running down their cheeks, glisten like the runoff from a piece of ice.

Not only were these soldiers tired and hungry from their long day of preparation, but they also knew that their enemy was a force that could pound them into the ground.

So they waited, and the enemy came.

Suddenly, the thunder of discharging weapons could be heard. Opposing soldiers came out of the treeline firing their weapons into the buildings where the defensive positions had been constructed.

A man went down, then another, and then another. The town was being overrun. Squad leaders were screaming at troops. Other soldiers were firing as quickly as they could, hitting anything that moved.

Military Operations in Urban Terrain — that's the name of the game. But, being proficient in this game could mean life or death in a real combat situation.

Company E, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment participated in a MOUT training exercise March 6 at McKenna MOUT training area.

Although the 29th is a Training and Doctrine Command regiment, it is important to maintain infantry skills.

"Our secondary mission is to train all assigned soldiers in basic infantry tactics. That's what we're doing with this training," said Company E's first sergeant, 1st Sgt. Gary Cosper.

The training spanned 72 continuous hours, beginning with a road march to McKenna from the Kelley Hill area. Once arriving at the bivouac site, refresher basic infantry classes began.

The finale was several assaults on a small German town, both day and night, with Multiple Integrated Laser Engagement System equipment (radio devices that are mounted on the weapons, and sensors that are placed on a soldier to detect a "kill").

"The soldiers had a few minor mistakes in the beginning," said Cosper. "I think now they are understanding tactics a little better."

The most expensive kind of combat, in terms of soldiers being "killed" is MOUT, according to Cosper. It's a chance for them to experiment and learn from their mistakes instead of making the mistake and dying in real combat.

Benning champs to defend 1991 wrestling title

By Rodney Smith
HHC, 29th Infantry Regiment

No matter how you slice it, the Armed Forces Wrestling Championships at Fort Benning will definitely be a war for bragging rights.

Fort Benning's All-Army wrestlers held the deeds to those rights in 1990, but as defending champions, they will have their hands full in 1991.

Boasting a string of 13 armed forces championships before losing last year, the Marines are hungry to get the title back. A championship has eluded both the Navy and Air Force teams. The Marine Corps has dominated this tournament for more than a decade. The Air Force is not entering a team this year, but the Navy has a strong and impressive young team.

Preparation for a tournament of this magnitude is no easy task. "It's a war out there," says Coach Tony Thomas of Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 29th Infantry Regiment.

As the Army's most renowned athlete, Derrick Waldroup has done it all in the sport of wrestling. By his peers, he is considered a general on the mat. "I've always been a positive person," he said. "Being positive and having confidence in myself has also helped me in other aspects of life. Wrestling is not an easy sport. You have to be physically and mentally tough."

What does it take to prepare for this level of competition? "You have to be focused," says Tony Demos, HHC, 29th Inf. Regt. "I've wrestled in this tournament three times. Each time I have walked away empty handed." It seems that Demos has found his focal points on the mat. Currently ranked second in the nation, Demos feels that his recent success is due to his wife, Coach Thomas and" the General" Derrick Waldroup. "I've also found a new confidence in myself. This year will be different. This year will be gold for me and my team mates."

Dedicated is an understatement when you mention the name John Shely of Fort Polk. A master of dieting properly, Shely contends that beating the scales during weigh-ins is half the battle. "My goal is to perform to the best of my ability. To do that, I must maintain a proper diet. Mistakes are a key factor in winning and losing. If I make a mistake due to my negligence in preparation for a match, and consequently lose that match, then I'm not doing my job during practice hours. This is a great tournament. It presents an opportunity for soldier athletes like myself to show our units that we are accomplishing a mission here."

The Armed Forces Championships is a tournament with a long history and the wrestlers participating have worked hard to be a part of it.

Coach, team 'wrestle' to the top

By James C. Rupp
Bayonet staff writer

The All-Army Wrestling team is only a few days away from the challenge they accepted when they first came to Fort Benning in January. And their coach believes they are capable of meeting that obstacle head on.

Sgt. 1st Class Anthony Thomas, is a man who is well-acquainted with wrestling. An accomplished member of the Army team himself from 1982 until 1988, Thomas took the title of "Coach" in 1989 at the urging of Col. John D. Fuller, post chief of staff, and has never regretted that decision.

"It was the best decision I ever made," said Thomas. "I really enjoy helping to make fellow soldier/athletes great, to realize their potential."

Thomas' wrestling career sports some impressive credentials. In 1984, Thomas was the Amatuer Athletic Union's National Sombo (a combination of judo and wrestling) champions well as an alternate on that year's Olympic Wrestling team. In 1985 he was the Armed Forces Champion at the 149-lbs. weight class and a silver medalist at the Olympic Festival in that same year. In 1988, Thomas was the top seed at the Olympic wrestling trials and was named National Greco -Roman champion.

Thomas cites one thing he hopes to bring to the wrestlers which train under his watchful eye. "Believe in yourself. Don't ever quit on yourself, because you are the only one who knows just how far you can go," he said.

As far as this year's Armed Forces Championship and the Army team's prospects, Thomas' outlook seems to be bright.

"This is a young team, they're just as good as last year's, but they're not as seasoned... but that desire is still there," said Thomas.

"If everyone comes through, despite the competition, we have an outstanding shot at winning that championship for the second time in a row,"he added.

The Armed Forces Wrestling Championship will be 9 a.m., March 21 and 23 at Briant Wells Field House on Main Post.

Workshop deals with stress

By James C. Rupp
Bayonet staff writer

A workshop on coping with stress was held at Sayers Library March 7.

The workshop, which was hosted by Capt. Sophia Dziegielewski and attended by approximately 40 people, explained different types of stress and suggested means of which to deal with stressful situations.

According to Dziegielewski, there are two different types of stress, physiological and psychological.

Physiological stress has to do with the physical aspect of a person's well-being. Injuries are an example of physiological stress.

Psychological stress represents itself through the mental aspects of a personality, such as the death of a family member or relocation to a new city.

Some ways suggested by the program to relieve stress were:

- Take regular vacations to "recharge your batteries". These breaks should be away from stressful situations.
- Regular exercise will prepare mind and body in dealing with stress.
- Stress can be reduced by learning to use stress reduction techniques such as muscle relaxation, deep breathing and imagery relaxation.
- Get involved in entertainment activities outside of your job.
- Develop trusting and mutually caring relationships at work which will create a "life-line" support system.
- Attempt to structure your job time so that you have a variety of tasks to complete in a day. Doing the same thing, such as paperwork, for long periods of time becomes exhausting and mundane.
- Learn to identify, handle and change unwanted emotions (such as frustration and boredom).
- Identify what you find exhausting and frustrating at work and problem solve different ways of handling them.
- Learn to see and use humor in your work.

These tips can help to relax you and make things at your living and workplaces less stressful and improve the quality of your work.

"A Tree Is"

By Tara Jiles

A tree's leaves swing in the breeze.
And through the night in a flight of caution, you hear commotion
The breeze is easy to hear,
but no fear shall come upon you.
A tree is helpful, but not mournful.
Of life shall trees be a witness,
like an old lumberjack.
Yes, it shall be for the other trees that have fallen.

Tara Jiles is an 8-year-old student at White School . This poem was the third grade winner for the school's Arbor Day poetry contest.

SPIRITUAL

Chaplain discusses morality of war

By George W. Gudz
USAIC Chaplain

The morality of the Persian Gulf War received more attention than in any other U.S war.

Both sides — those opposed to the war and those justifying it — invoked the so-called "just war theory," which began with the theologian Augustine and was later refined by Thomas Aquinas.

This tradition provides a basic framework for making responsible judgments related to the morality of waging war. War must be fought for a "just cause." War must be authorized by a "competent authority" and conducted with "right intention." A "just" war must be a "last resort" that has the "probability of success."

The congressional debates prior to the war, both in the House and the Senate, reflected how difficult it can be to make responsible judgments when the stakes are so high and include the loss of human lives.

War is ugly!

Because the war with Iraq was the first full-scale technological war in history, there is a danger of becoming desensitized. Television made it a "prime-time" war, at times difficult to distinguish from a mini-series.

We all long for peace. Unfortunately, peace is too often understood, in negative terms, as the absence of war. We need to remind ourselves that it is possible to win the war and still not have gained peace. Peacemaking is not an optional commitment. We are called to be peacemakers, not by some movement of the moment, but by our faith.

It takes courage to be committed to and work for peace. Peace begins within the individual human person. It is a reality that is based on a respect for the transcendence of God and the unique dignity of each person. One could say that the very purpose of life is to be at peace — with God, with one another, with ourselves.

Reconciliation is the theological buzzword which best describes this reality.

Now, more than ever, let the prayer of Francis of Assisi, the saint of peace, be in our hearts:

Lord, make me an instrument of your peace;

Where there is hatred, let me sow love;

Where there is injury, pardon;

Where there is doubt, faith;

Where there is despair, hope;

Where there is darkness, light;

Where there is sadness, joy;

O Master, grant that I may not so much seek to be consoled as to console,

to be understood as to understand,

to be loved as to love.

For it is in giving that we receive,

and pardoning that we are pardoned.

Informed shoppers can make efficient choices

By Karen Schultz
Nutrition Care Division

"Low Fat," "Low Sodium," "Cholesterol Free," "Lite," "Reduced Calories" — today's health-conscious consumer is bombarded with nutrition information on more than 25,000 food items in the supermarket.

It can be confusing trying to decide which products to buy while trying to get the most for the food dollar. One must be able to interpret nutrition labels to choose foods that are nutritious, appealing and economical.

To help alleviate some of the confusion, the following terms have been defined for you by the Food and Drug Administration.

"Low Calorie" — product contains no more than 40 calories per serving and 0.4 calories per gram.

"Low Sodium" — product contains 140 milligrams or less of sodium per serving.

"Cholesterol Free" — product contains less than 2 milligrams cholesterol per serving. The product may be high in fat which can contribute to the body's production of cholesterol.

"Reduced Calorie" — food must be at least one-third lower in calorie content than the food to which it is compared.

"Diet/Dietetic" — must meet requirements for reduced calorie foods or must be described as being useful for a special dietary purpose other than for maintaining weight.

To be a smart shopper it is important to read and understand food labels. A nutrition treasure hunt with a registered dietitian will take place at the commissary Wednesday at 9:30 a.m., where anyone who is interested can find out how to decipher food labels while choosing cost efficient, appealing and nutritious foods.

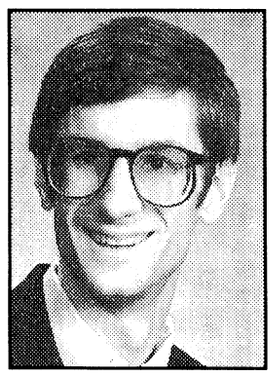
ASK THE JUDGE

By Rick Parker
Staff Judge Advocate's Office

Q. I tried to make an appointment with legal assistance to get an adoption done, but was told that your office is not doing them. I have a friend who got an adoption done through your office sometime last year. Can you tell me whether or not you are doing them?

A. As you may know, the Legal Assistance Office was not able to maintain its normal schedule when the crisis in the Middle East broke out. Until recently, our attorneys and staff members were called upon to assist with preparing active duty personnel and Reservists for deployment to the Gulf. As a result, we had to stop doing some of our work (such as adoptions, probates and the like), and we had to curtail scheduling other appointments altogether.

The good news is that the war is over, and Legal Assistance has begun returning to some degree of normal operations. By April 1, we should be back to competely normal operations, which will include all of the services we have provided in the past. This includes adoptions under the Army's Expanded Legal Assistance Program. As before, we will perform step-parent adoptions for ranks E-4 and below. Ranks above E-4 will be considered on a case-by-case basis, but only upon a showing of extreme financial need. We will only be doing step-parent adoptions.



In other areas, we have already resumed assisting with probates and associated actions, name-change petitions, temporary guardianships for minors, and legitimations. We continue to draft separation agreements in domestic relations cases where both spouses have reached agreement on property, debt, support and custody matters.

In spite of the difficulties posed by Operation Desert Storm, our annual tax assistance program is operating normally. Our tax assistance office is open Monday through Friday, from 8 a.m. to 4 p.m. Additionally, legal assistance personnel will be available at the Main Mall from 9:30 a.m. to 1 p.m. April 2, and at the Post Office on Main Post April 15, from 6 p.m. to midnight.

As always, should you need legal assistance, contact the Legal Assistance Office for an appointment at 545-3281.

OBITUARY

Dr. Mark Connelly, a former staff member at Martin Army Community Hospital, was killed in action March 1. Connelly was a Reservist who had been called to duty when needed for Operation Desert Storm.

Mark A. Connelly

He is remembered well at MACH by both patients and staff as a gentle, caring man.

Born Sept. 13, 1956, in Syracuse, N.Y., Dr. Connelly graduated from Notre Dame University in 1978, and from Georgetown School of Medicine in 1982.

Connelly came to MACH as an intern in 1982 and completed his Family Practice residency in 1985. While in his residency, he was elected one of two chief residents. He was also elected outstanding resident by his peers. As part of his training, Connelly went to Africa where he studied Tropical/Third World/Missionary Medicine. He also received the Resident Teacher Award.

After graduating from his residency in 1985, Connelly joined the teaching staff at MACH where he helped to train new Family Practice residents. He did this so well that he was honored as Family Practice faculty "Teacher of the Year" in 1987, 1988 and 1989.

After seven years at MACH, Connelly left the Army to move to Lancaster, Pa., where he taught Family Practice and Obstetrics at Lancaster General Hospital and had a small practice.

He also joined the U.S. Army Reserves and was officially assigned to the 99th Combat Support Hospital unit in Lancaster. He was called to serve in Operation Desert Storm and left Lancaster Dec. 12.

He went to Saudi Arabia in January, where he was attached to the 142nd Medical Company, Connecticut National Guard. Connelly was serving in a battalion aid station directly behind the front lines of the ground war. He was a triage officer, providing preliminary care to wounded soldiers, both allied and Iraqi, before they were moved to hospitals.

Connelly's friend and associate, Dr. Roger Kimber, was quoted in the "Intelligencer Journal", Lancaster, Pa., as saying: "We all thought of Mark when we heard of the incident, because we knew he was in that area. Everybody's been saying that was just like him to try to help."

The incident to which Dr. Kimber referred was the death of an American doctor who, with two others, had driven out into the desert to help injured Iraqi soldiers who were surrendering to allied forces. Their vehicle hit a land mine, killing both Connelly and Spc. Cindy M. Beaudoin, 19, of Plainfield, Conn.

Helping was a way of life for Connelly, who was a coach for his daughter's softball team, a Sunday School teacher, and the leader of a prayer group for the resident physicians at Lancaster General Hospital.

Connelly is survived by his wife, Patricia Jean, and two children, Meggan, 9 and Peter, 7; his mother, Shirley Connelly of Pittsburgh, Pa., his maternal grandmother, Mildred Smith, Pittsburgh and three brothers, Jack, David and Peter Connelly, all of Chicago, Ill.

In lieu of flowers, donations may be sent to: The Connelly Family Scholarship Fund, c/o Fulton Bank, P.O. Box 304, Lititz, Pa. 17543.

Home of the Infantry

29th's Bradley crew returns to Benning

By Jon R. Anderson
Bayonet staff writer

Seven Bradley crew members of 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment returned home to Fort Benning March 15.

The soldiers were part of a classified infantry fighting vehicle project, which has been in development for more than 2 1/2 years, said Capt. Timothy Stone, a 29th Infantry company commander.

Although Capt. Robert Murray, project officer of the returning contingent, could not be specific, he did say the classified project had "proved itself in the theater of operations."

Sgt. Brian Gaines, also of the returning contingent, said the first thing he had wanted to do when he got off the plane was kiss the ground. "But, I still had so much sand in my mouth I just couldn't do it," he said.

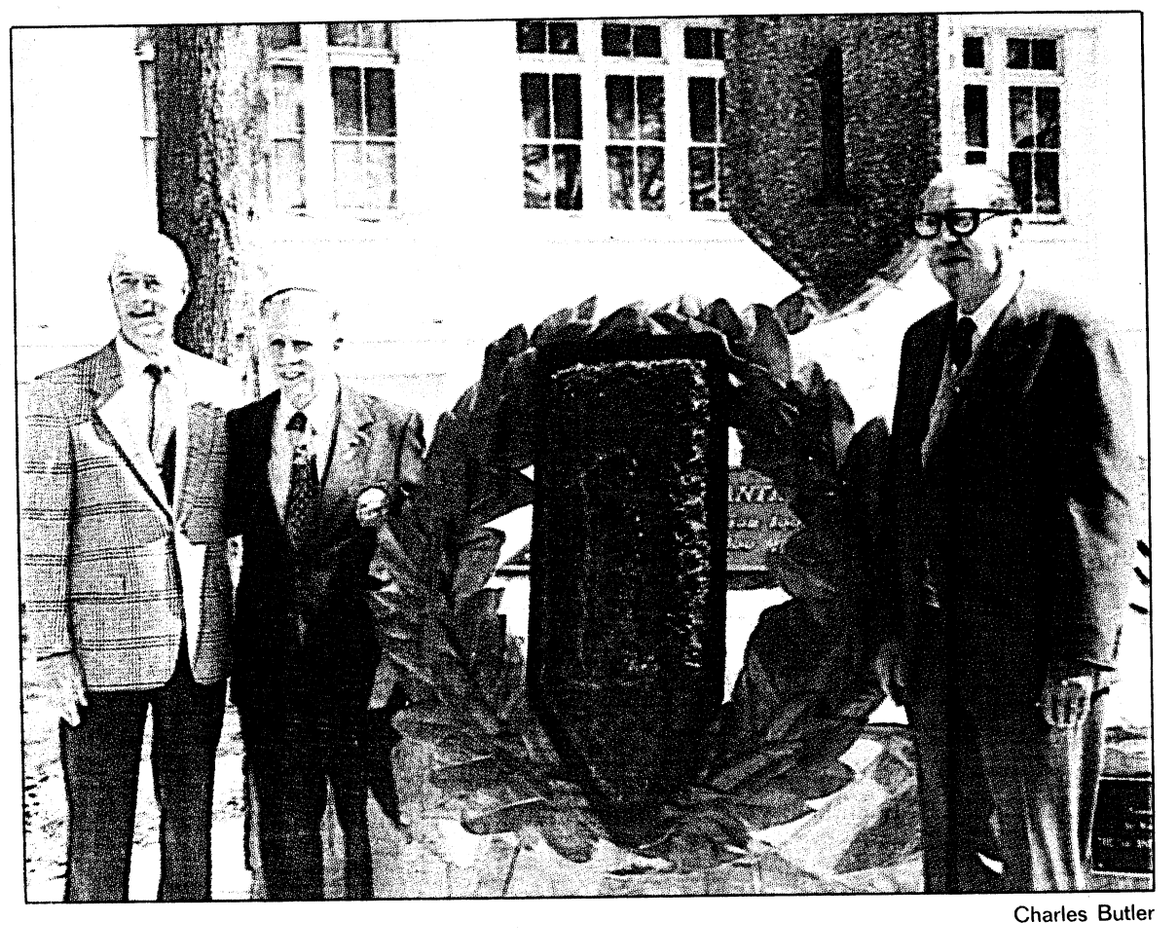
Gaines continued by saying now all he wanted to do was "drink a beer. . . and eat all the pork products" he could get his hands on, explaining that both were banned by the Saudi government.

Sgt. Larry Garrett, who was a gunner for the Bradley teams, said although the Air Force deserved a lot of credit for their performance, "the infantry was the real mainstay of the war."

Despite the fact the soldiers had only been deployed for a little more than a month, one family member complained that it really had been a much longer period of separation, because of the soldiers' close involvement with the Bradley project.

Murray said he was just glad to be home. "I never expected it to go this fast," he said. "But, I'm glad it did."

Everyone seemed to agree.



197th headed home

USAIC Public Affairs Office

The 197th Infantry Brigade, currently in the Middle East, will be deploying back to Fort Benning between Tuesday and March 31, according to Capt. Tom Wilkinson, public affairs officer for the 197th.

Wilkinson said the Tuesday through March 31 redeployment dates are target dates, and it could be earlier or later due to unforeseen circumstances.

No information has been received about other Benning units, officials said.

1st ID dedicates monument

By Alyanna B. Clay-Heard
Bayonet staff writer

The 1st Infantry Division dedicated a monument March 15 in front of the National Infantry Museum.

Nicknamed the "Big Red One," the 1st ID was involved in World Wars I and II and the war in Vietnam. Officials said the monument, a stone structure with a red one carved at the top, is a gift from the 1st ID's war veterans to today's infantry soldiers.

Lt. Gen. Leonard P. Wishart was the guest speaker. "Through World War I, World War II, Vietnam, and more recently in Southwest Asia, the 1st Infantry Division always puts duty first," he said.

The climax of the ceremony was the unveiling of the monument and the laying of a wreath.

Retired Maj. Gen. Albert H. Smith Jr. and retired Col. Edward W. McGregor, project coordinators, said they were ecstatic at the realization of their "dream."

"The monument is a gift," said Smith. "It is designed to inspire to all soldiers, noncommissioned officers and officers that come to the 'Home of the Infantry.'"

"Our goal," said McGregor, "is that young people will be interested enough to visit the National Infantry Museum and learn more about the Big Red One's involvement in World Wars I and II and Vietnam."

Fort Benning Commander Maj. Gen. Carmen J. Cavezza and Vice Chief of Staff of the Army Lt. Gen. Gordon Sullivan were among the military dignitaries present.

1,500 Benning soldiers affected

War's over, so is Stop Loss

By Brian C. Sutton
Bayonet staff writer

The war is over and so is the Army's Stop Loss program.

Secretary of the Army Michael P.W. Stone ended the policy March 9.

Sgt. Maj. Burkhard Berger, Fort Benning's chief of Enlistment Management at the Adjutant General's office, explained how soldiers who are scheduled for a permanent change of station or an expiration of term of service may be will be affected.

"All previous assignments have been deleted from the record," he said. "New assignments will be given as soon as they become available."

According to Berger, some soldiers' overseas assignments may be changed.

"If you were supposed to go to Korea, for instance, you may end up going to Panama or Germany," he said.

Soldiers who were scheduled to terminate service may be able to get out soon, Berger said. "Those who are supposed to get out may do so as soon as Fort Benning can process them out," he said. "However, we are certainly not going to force them out right away.".

This opens many options for soldiers who were affected by Stop Loss, Berger said.

"Some soldiers may want to stay in the Army for a little longer for various reasons," he said. "We are allowing soldiers to take up to 120 days to either re-enlist or terminate service. We expect 20 percent to re-enlist."

Soldiers can also use this time to take care of any personal business prior to going back home, he said.

Soldiers will have somewhat of a voice in when they leave, Berger said.

"We're allowing them to pick the day, as much as possible, when they want to leave," he said.

It is too early to tell if soldiers deployed for Operation Desert Storm will be given credit for a hardship tour, but things are looking that way, Berger said.

"Right now, it looks like soldiers will receive credit for a hardship tour, but we do not know for sure yet," he said.

Unfortunately for some soldiers, another overseas assignment is inevitable, he said. "Somebody's going to have some hurt feelings, but there's really nothing we can do about it," Berger said.

Stop Loss is not uncommon during wartime. During World War II, soldiers were kept in the Army until six months after hostilities ceased. This time, however, soldiers will be let out earlier than that.

An estimated 1,500 Fort Benning soldiers, almost all of which are enlisted, have been affected by Stop Loss, according to figures from the AG.

Editor's note: The Bayonet will publish updates about Stop Loss as we receive them.

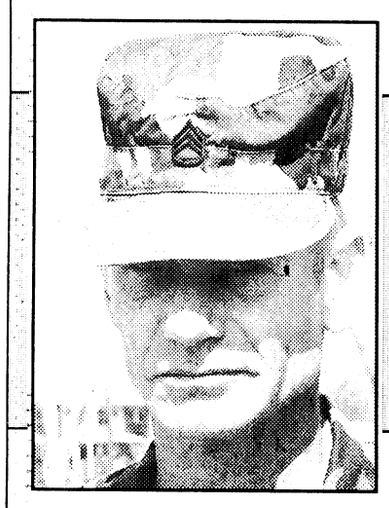
OPINION

VARIOUS VOICES:

What are your feelings about women participating in a combat situation?



Capt. Craig Bollenberg, Company B, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment — "I think women have an important role in combat support. But, I don't think they should be in direct combat because that would have an adverse effect on general combat operations."

Sgt. 1st Class Hayward McBride, 4th Battalion, 36th Infantry — "Some women have proved they can perform as well as men, but they haven't been permitted to operate in those situations."

Jacquelyn Jones, civilian employee, Dental Clinic 2 — "I think women can operate in combat. After all, they take an oath knowing that combat could become a reality."

Staff Sgt. Timothy Thayer, Company B, 1st Battalion, 46th Infantry (Fort Knox) — "Personally, I wouldn't have a problem with it. After all, they're professional, and men should remember they're soldiers and treat them as soldiers."

Barbara Scott, family member — "I don't think women should be there. Some of them are more sensitive to high pressure situations and may not be able to cope with it."

COMMENTARY

Infantry Test Board bids farewell

By Clyde Snively

The Infantry Test Board is moving all its gear, down to room dividers to Fort Hood, Texas.

The test board's been at Fort Benning since Dec. 15, 1919, so I guess they'll have a lot to move.

Since being here, the board's personnel have been involved in some pretty "heavy" stuff for soldiers — especially infantry soldiers.

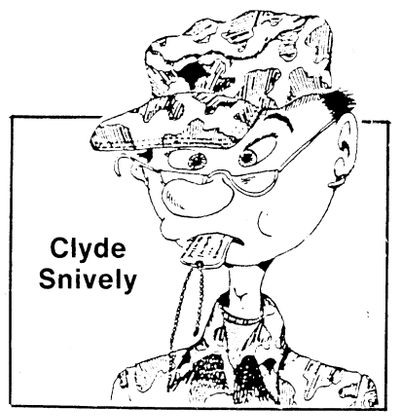
One thing I noticed is the board's been trying to lighten the combat load of the grunt since the 1920s. I can't say there was much success in that area. Did you get a look at the backpacks the 101st troopers were lugging in the desert?

Or have you ever seen one of our rangers out cruising in the woods with his rucksack stacked high with "necessary" equipment. Personally, I think 125 pounds is a bit much to ask a soldier to carry into combat.

Actually I think anything beyond 12 pounds is too much. But then, I'm not a ranger or even a light infantryman (thank goodness for small favors).

So, while lightening the load can't be deemed as one of their success stories, there are plenty of other ones that more than offset the load issue.

All one needs do is take a peek at all that gear we had in Desert Storm. New mortars, squad automatic rifles, night vision goggles, fancy radio rigs. Guess who helped develop it? Guess who tested it?



It was the guys and gals at the Infantry Test Board. Well, actually, the testers were guys and gals like you and me. The test board people devised the tests, monitored the tests and tabulated the results.

If the equipment didn't pass muster, it was back to the drawing board for the developers.

I knew a guy who tested jungle boots in Panama. He was a grunt. He said he never walked so much in all his other infantry days combined as he did for that test.

They had him walking up hills and down hills and on flat ground. He walked over gravel, sand, through swamps, through jungles, everything any self-respecting grunt would want to walk through, over and in.

They checked his feet for blisters, ingrown toe nails, callouses, red marks, everything, before finally certifying a particular make and model of boot.

I might not hump the boonies like an infantryman, but I can tell you, my dogs appreciate comfort, support and durability.

And I guess that was the aim of those guys on the test board.

The advanced combat rifle is another example of their painstaking research into providing the best, most efficient and easy-to-use personal weapon.

They've got men and women soldiers and airmen out firing these different rifles at targets that not only tell where a round hits, but how close the shot comes (and I thought close only counted in horseshoes).

Like I say, the Infantry Board is looking out for soldiers. I don't know if I personally ever met one of those people, but if they can keep my feet from hurting on road marches and help me shoot straight, they get my vote.

Of course that's not all there is to being a soldier. There's also the question of eating. I wonder what test board allowed ham and eggs in C-rations to pass. I wonder what test board let any of the Long Range Reconnaissance Patrol rations get by and which test board turned blind eyes and stunted taste buds on the beef slices in barbecue sauce in the Meals, Ready to Eat.

I know two things. It couldn't have been the Infantry Test Board. And I certainly wouldn't have wanted to be one of the testers. Maybe they used animals: "Hey, the dog's eating the beef slices." "Great, certify it. Let's get on to another meal. See if the dog'll eat the pork patties."

Bon voyage, test board. Some how I think you'll be back.

Does America need real heroes?

By Gary Sheftick

Heroes were once easy to name.

Twenty years ago, if you asked a young boy about his heroes, he might have listed John Wayne, Neil Armstrong or Johnnie Bench.

Double or triple the years and you may have heard about Audie Murphy, Alvin York, Eddie Rickenbacker, Pappy Boyington, Douglas MacArthur or Jimmy Doolittle.

Ask a lad the same question today, and you probably will hear about the Teenage Mutant Ninja Turtles.

Not many American heroes these days seem to be real people. For the past couple decades, we have been content to idolize the traits of fantasy figures such as Luke Skywalker, Rocky Balboa and Capt. James T. Kirk.

Psychologists may argue whether Americans today really need to elevate mere mortals to the status of national heroes. I think we do.

In fact, we may be way overdue. Heroes are the fabric of our national pride. They bond us together. They make domestic problems seem trivial. They lift the spirit of the nation.

During World War II, news of heroics on the front boosted the morale of the country. The public cheered when they learned of Jimmy Doolittle's daring raid on Tokyo. They proudly retold the stories of soldiers like Audie Murphy. This failed to happen in Korea and Vietnam.

Sure, Korea and Vietnam had their share of unsung heroes responsible for countless brave deeds. But how many can you name?

Do you remember Master Sgt. Webster Anderson, Maj. Pat Brady or Lance Corporal Roy M. Wheat?

Wheat threw himself on a grenade to save his buddies. Brady repeatedly flew behind enemy lines in zero visibility and risked lethal fire to rescue the wounded.

Anderson was the only chief of a firing battery to earn a Medal of Honor in Vietnam. In the process he lost both legs and an arm.

Despite their valor, most Vietnam veterans returned home to less than a hero's welcome.

This time it's different. Today we anxiously await the return of our war heroes with outstretched arms. We are planning ticker-tape parades and support rallies. And rightfully so.

The returning troops deserve our recognition. They have endured much. Even those not directly on the front lines endured months of scorching heat, desert sandstorms, Scud attacks, sparse comforts and separation from their families. And then there were many who sacrificed much more.

One of those is Pfc. Frank Bradish of the 3rd Armored Division. Bradish saved the lives of three buddies when his Bradley fighting vehicle was hit by a T-72 tank round.

Bradish was severely injured when the shell from the Republican Guard tank ripped through his Bradley, wounding him in the groin. Although three of his fingers were blown off by the explosion, he emerged from the smoking Bradley carrying another wounded soldier. He returned to the Bradley again and again and hauled his buddies to safety.

When other members of his battalion arrived at the scene, they found Bradish inside the Bradley trying to drag out heavy belts of automatic ammo. They had to pull Bradish away from the Bradley. Only then did Bradish look down and notice that he was covered with blood.

There are no doubt many other accounts of bravery to recount from the Gulf. Whether any will be etched into history books remains to be seen.

Some may well be remembered as heroes. Others will be known but to God.

CG urges soldiers to support Army Emergency Relief fund

Since 1942, Army Emergency Relief has been a source of support for soldiers and their families at Fort Benning.

The AER assisted 1,883 Fort Benning active duty and retired military families last year with grants and loans totaling $794,537.

The AER was a major factor in providing necessary monetary relief to families of soldiers deployed on Operations Desert Shield and Desert Storm.

Fort Benning will conduct its AER campaign from April 1 to June 30.

It has two main purposes:

- To replenish the fund for grants, scholarships and unpaid loans for 1991 and
- To increase awareness of this immediate source of financial support.

Last year, we contributed $202,539. We need to do as well or better for our soldiers and their families this year.

I fully support the AER mission and echo General Vuono's statement, "AER is ours — yours and mine — and it embodies our long-held tradition of taking care of our own. I urge your generous, voluntary support of this vital organization."

AUSA meets

By Brian C. Sutton
Bayonet staff writer

The Chattahoochee Valley Fort Benning Chapter of the Association of the U.S. Army's general membership meeting was March 12 at the Officers' Club.

Gen. Edwin H. Burba Jr., commander of Forces Command, spoke to the association's members and guests about a variety of topics. All, however, were directly tied to the conflict in the Persian Gulf.

The former Fort Benning commander, with humor entwined with serious discussion, praised the accomplishments of Operations Desert Shield and Desert Storm and, in particular, the soldiers, sailors, airmen, Marines and Coast Guardsmen that participated in the conflict.

"The real heroes are coming back here quickly," said Burba when his comments turned toward the arrival of troops back to the United States.

Burba spoke of many national heroes in his hour-long speech and noted the difference in public attitude between this war and the war in Vietnam.

"The American armed forces can be thankful that the American public was behind them every step of the way," he said. "Thank goodness for the American people."

Gen. Edwin H. Burba Jr.

Burba further praised the American troops.

"Thank goodness, also, for our troops in Iraq and the freedom they have brought to that part of the world — indeed the entire free world."

AER helps soldiers

Post campaign begins April 1

By Brian C. Sutton
Bayonet staff writer

Army Emergency Relief. A way for soldiers to help soldiers.

Sure, most soldiers have heard that saying, but what does it really mean?

It means that soldiers in 1990 donated $202,539 for the Fort Benning campaign. That money came from the pockets of privates to the commanding general.

The 1991 campaign will kick off April 1 and will run through June 30. AER needs soldiers' help more than ever now, according to AER officials.

Although AER raised more that $200,000, with the effects of Operations Desert Shield and Desert Storm, the funds have been nearly depleted.

In 1990 alone, AER gave out a total of $794,536. The August through December figures are broken down in the chart below:

For more information, call the AER office at 545-5516.

Spring cleanup begins March 29

By Brian C. Sutton
Bayonet staff writer

Spring has arrived and that means the post's Spring Cleanup Campaign is just around the corner.

March 29 through April 5 has been designated as the time frame for the post spring cleaning.

The purpose of the cleanup is to improve the appearance of the post's cantonment and family housing areas.

Three regulations — U.S. Army Infantry Center Regulation 210-1, Fort Benning Community Life Program; USAIC Regulation 210-5, Installation Garrison Regulations; and USAIC Regulation 210-12, Area Coordinator Duties and Responsibilities — outline basic requirements for the cleanup.

Commanders of soldiers who live in on-post housing areas are requested to release soldiers for one-half of a duty day during the cleanup period to report to their quarters and participate in the cleanup, according to a Feb. 12 memorandum released by Col. Ted Chilcote, Director of Plans, Training and Mobilization, in conjunction with the Community Life Office.

"We're asking that commanders release them for at least half a day," said Darlene Perry, Community Life officer.

Civilian employees are not excluded from plans for cleanup.

We're also asking that civilian employees clean and beautify the offices in which they work," said Perry.

Some soldiers and civilian employees may think the program is a waste of time, but, according to Perry, there are good reasons for the cleanup.

"First of all, it's a Fort Benning tradition that occurs twice a year," said Perry. "Also, the cleanup occurs shortly before the Infantry Conference.

Perry said Fort Benning officials simply want the post to look its best.

SAFETY ALERT

Infantry Branch Safety Office

A soldier died and another was injured due to collapsed bunkers. Both were members of units participating in the war in the Persian Gulf.

The fatality resulted when a constructed bunker collapsed under the increased weight of wet sand.

The injury occurred during the construction of a two-story bunker using improper materials and unsafe construction practices.

These accidents indicated that standards for bunker construction were either unknown or not enforced.

These standards are found in FM 5-103 (Survivability). Chapters 3 and 4, and App B, address methods for construction and design of bunkers.

Units should provide this information to junior leaders.

Leaders at all levels should ensure that the standards are known and enforced.

It is imperative that units and unit leaders be alerted to the dangers of improper construction materials or practices.

Omni offers special

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Atlanta's Omni Hotel is offering a special package for soldiers and Department of Defense civilians who supported Desert Shield and Desert Storm.

The hotel is providing its deluxe accommodations, a bottle of champagne and a continental breakfast for $79 per room, to anyone who played a role in Southwest Asia.

Rick Smith, senior guest services manager, said he thought of the offer after being called up for active duty.

"I realized the turmoil people were being put through and wanted to do something to help out and show our appreciation, so I came up with this idea," he said.

He said if large groups come to the hotel at the same time, the hotel will put together a "spur-of-the-moment" party for them. "We'll have other little extras available, too," he said.

Smith said the hotel is also offering discount coupons for nearby Underground Atlanta and the CNN tour — the hotel is a tenant of the CNN Center.

Those interested in staying at the hotel should call (404) 659-0000 or toll free (800)-THE OMNI, and tell the person answering they want the "Desert Storm package."

Military and civilians will be asked to show their identification cards when they check in (the Fort Benning civilian ID card will suffice for post civilian workers).

Flyers explaining the program are being distributed by the Family Assistance Center. The flyers say the package is good through March 31. Brenda Norman, business travel sales manager said that should be ignored. "We'll probably offer this package through the summer," she said.

OPERATION PROUD RETURN

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Infantry Center's TV station finds home

Jon R. Anderson

Spc. Richard Brill is filmed on the set by audio/video production specialist Donald Carden during a production session of The Benning Report.

By Jon R. Anderson
Bayonet staff writer

After several jumps around the cable dial, Fort Benning's USAIC-TV has found a permanent home on channel 32, says Paula J. Randall, station manager.

Randall, who is the Command Information officer for Public Affairs, and oversees production for The Bayonet as well, says she hopes to see more community involvement with the station in the future.

The Benning Report, which is one of USAIC-TV's major productions, not only provides the command a means by which to disseminate information but allows for the post community to promote events as well, said Randall.

Individuals or units interested in contributing material can contact Randall at the Public Affairs Office at 545-2201. "Obviously we can't use home movies," said Randall. "But, if you want to go film something like the Girl Scouts selling cookies, the post soccer team playing or some kind of unit training, that's definitely something we want to look at."

Randall also asked for feedback, both positive and negative, from individuals around the community to aid in better programming. "It's a community channel," she said. "We want to put things on the air that is of benefit and of interest to the viewer."

Currently, The Benning Report is anchored by a volunteer, Spc. Richard Brill, who is a member of Company E, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry.

Army's vice chief of staff speaks to capacity crowd

By James C. Rupp
Bayonet staff writer

The Army's vice chief of staff spoke to a capacity crowd at Marshall Auditorium in Building 4 March 15.

Gen. Gordon Sullivan appeared before the audience with a primary topic of "Hope is not a method, neither is nostalgia." Sullivan related his feelings on Operations Desert Shield and Desert Storm and commended the families of soldiers who served in the Persian Gulf.

"The real unsung heroes are the spouses who stayed behind," Sullivan said. "They deserve a round of applause from this entire nation."

During the lecture, Sullivan also gave a short synopsis about the Army and its function around the world and the role it will play in the future.

Sullivan ended his lecture with an anecdote about a letter exchanged between Ulysses Grant and William Sherman. The story relates how Grant wrote to Sherman saying that he knew that should he ever be in trouble, Grant could always depend on Sherman for his aid.

Sullivan said he believed this story could be used as a parallel to today's Army, its willingness and readiness to aid those in trouble across the globe.

Army releases Reservists

USAIC Public Affairs Office

The Department of the Army has begun releasing from active duty members of the Individual Ready Reserve as part of the release of Ready Reserve units and personnel from active duty authorized by Defense Secretary Dick Cheney.

All IRR soldiers will be released as expeditiously as possible with the exception of those individuals who have been identified by commanders as being mission essential. Release from active duty entails out-processing from the active component and returning to a Reserve component status.

Those IRR soldiers who have deployed overseas will redeploy to designated transition points in the United States where they will be released from active duty based on operational readiness. The IRR soldiers will deploy in accordance with an established movement plan.

The Department of Army called IRR members to active duty to augment its capability in units deployed in Operation Desert Storm and to duties anywhere else where their skills were required to maintain readiness.

The IRR consists of those Reservists who are not members of the Selected Reserve.

The Selected Reserve consists of Army Reserve and Army National Guard soldiers assigned t troop units, the Individual Mobilization Augmentation program, or the Active Guard Reserve program.

Here are some questions and answers:

Q. How will Individual Ready Reservists be released from active duty?

A. In some cases, IRR soldiers deployed to U.S. Army Europe and southwest Asia will return either with their assigned unit to a demobilization station (RC units), or to the home installation (AC units).

Operational requirements may cause some IRR soldiers to be released as individuals through Fort Dix, Fort Jackson or Presidio of San Francisco. IRR soldiers serving in the United States will be released from their currently assigned installations.

Q. What does out-processing consist of?

A. Out-processing is the correction and adjustment of all records prior to release from active service. Out-processing includes such activities as return of government equipment, paying the soldier, updating the soldier's personnel, medical, dental and all other records. It also includes arranging transportation home as well as other administrative requirements.

70th Training Div. bids post farewell

By Tom Hockaday
USAIC Public Affairs Office

"We have made history as the first Army Reserve training division to mobilize to Fort Benning. You have trained hard and been blazer sharp."

These were some of the comments made by Maj. Gen. James Mukoyama Jr., commander, 70th Training Division, during a departure ceremony March 13 in front of Infantry Hall, as he thanked his soldiers for a job well done.

In January, members of the 70th Division arrived at Fort Benning for active duty. Armed with cadre, drill sergeants, instructors, and support personnel, they were immediately integrated into the command and control of the Infantry Training Center, along with the 29th Infantry Regiment, to help train soldiers.

During his comments while addressing the division, post commander, Maj. Gen. Carmen J. Cavezza said, "You had 72 hours to get here and you hit the ground running. You did exactly what you were supposed to do, and you did it in a great manner. We consider you as a member of the Fort Benning team. You have proved that the total Army works."

> "We are no longer first among equals; rather we're the Trailblazers, now without peer."
> — James Mukoyama Jr.

As was the case with many of the other reserve units that were activated, the 70th's stay was cut short due to the decisive resolve by the coalition forces in Kuwait and Iraq. However, the impact they had on the training while in residence on Fort Benning displayed the professional readiness they possessed to perform effectively any task assigned to them.

"This was a clear indication of the confidence that Fort Benning and the Army leadership had in the 70th." said Mukoyama. "It is you who have demonstrated the mobilization readiness of the reserve components, which was so crucial to the success of our armed forces in Operation Desert Storm."

One of the first Reserve training divisions to be mobilized and activated, the 70th has more than 1,500 soldiers. The Headquarters and Headquarters Detachment was recognized as the first reserve component headquarters to command and control six active duty training battalions in support of Operation Desert Storm, while supporting and augmenting the Infantry Training Center.

When the 70th departs Fort Benning, they take with them the National Defense Ribbon and many memories of their stay.

Their commander summed it all up when he said, "We are no longer first among equals; rather we're the Trailblazers, now without peer."

Skeet shooters watch the 'birdie'

By Charlene L. LaDay-Hill
U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit

Despite the cold and occasional drizzle on the weekend of March 8 through 10, five members of the U.S. Army Skeet Team managed to stay on top of the Zone 3 Skeet Competition held at Hook Range.

The skeet shooters got to fire at 200 clay targets, flying at a speed of more than 50 mph. These targets are worth one point each. At the end of that match, the top six shooters get to compete in an open match, commonly referred to as a "shoot-off."

For this event, the shooters get an additional 25 targets; whoever hits the most wins. The hits are added to their previous score from Zone 3; but, those last 25 birds are the deciding factor in who wins the shoot-off. If there's a tie during the shoot-off then the combined score decides the winner.

The shooters of the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit did well throughout the competition. Five of the top six shooters in the shoot-off were Army personnel.

The overall winner of Zone 3 and the shoot-off was Spc. Shawn Dulohery with a 193 and a 24 for a combined score of 217. Prior to that event, Dulohery also won the Southeastern Regionals in Gainesville, Fla.

"This was a tough competition. Each of the services were represented. There was also a big civilian turnout," said Dulohery, whose been with the team for two years.

Also keeping consistent with both events was Pfc. Shane Schwickerath who placed second with a 190 and a 24.

Spc. Cindy Paahauge placed third in Zone 3 and fifth in the shoot-off with a 188 and a 23.

Placing third in the shoot-off was Spc. James Graves with a 187 and 24. Graves and Staff Sgt. Joe Dickson went into a "sudden death" match to break the tie for third. The shooters must keep shooting birds until someone misses. Graves beat Dickson 6 to 4.

"This was an excellent match," said Paahauge. "It will help us prepare for the start of the Olympic tryouts in September."

Dulohery also has the Olympics on his mind. "My ultimate goal is to win an olympic gold medal for the U.S.," he said. "I'm just taking it one match at a time."

Dulohery is a member of the U.S. National Skeet Team, he will be traveling with the team in April to Seoul, Korea, to compete in the World Cup matches.

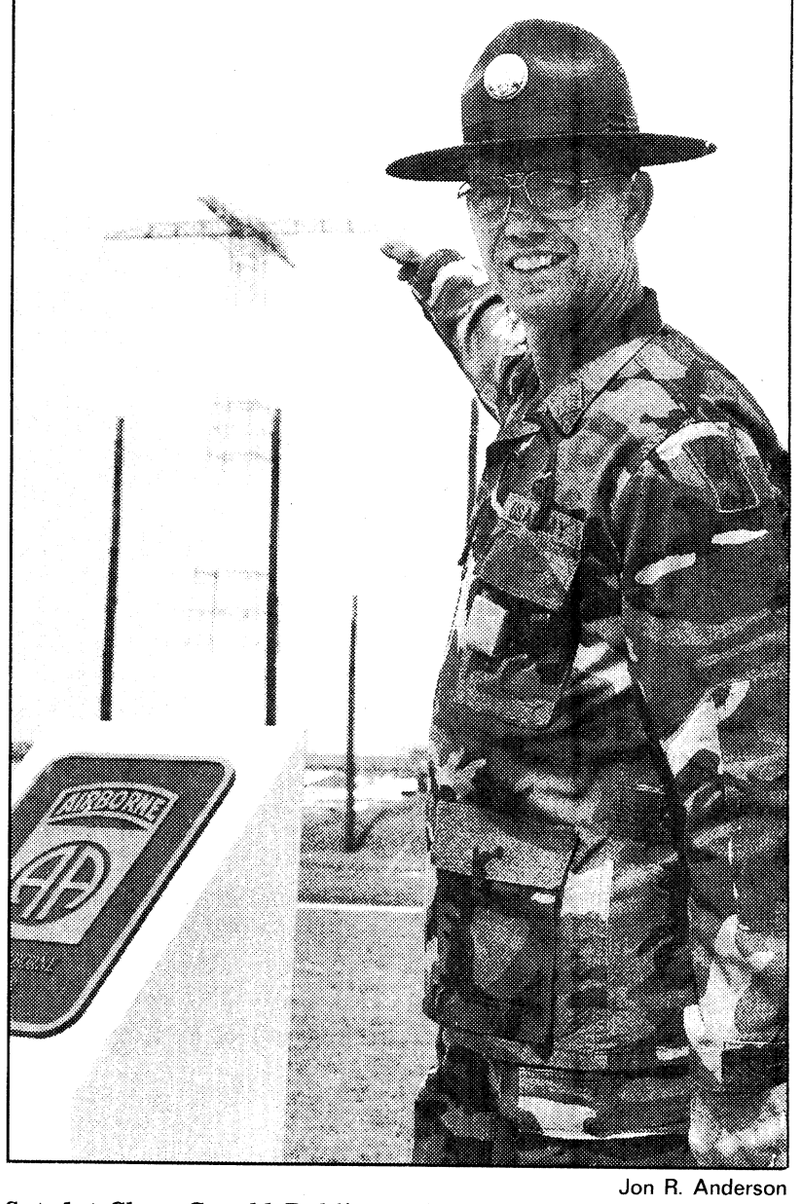
Paahauge and Schwickerath will be competing in Italy's World Cup matches in April as well.

54-year-old wears wings

By Jon R. Anderson
Bayonet staff writer

When Sgt. 1st Class Gerald Robling was 4 years old, Fort Benning's newly formed Airborne School was graduating its first class of jump qualified students. Now, he is among the ranks of those who wear the silver wings.

According to Airborne School officials, Drill Sergeant Robling, now 54, qualified as being the oldest graduate of the school when his wings were pinned on March 8, after successfully completing his fifth jump from a C-141.



"It was rough," said Robling, "real rough," describing the intense three weeks of airborne training.

Robling, a member of the 70th Infantry Training Division, was a pipe fitter in Muncie, Ind. before his unit was activated to assist in Desert Storm operations at Fort Benning.

"This is like the accomplishment of a life-long dream for me," said Robling, explaining that he has wanted to go to Airborne School since his original induction into the Army in 1960.

Robling attributes his good health, and ability to pass the prerequisite airborne physical at his age, to never having been a drinker or a smoker. He added that he was excluded from none of the physical training or running while in school, but did do a "a little extra praying on the side."

"I was scared on the first jump; they say there's something wrong if you're not," said Robling, "but it's something I'll never forget — something I can tell my kids about."

Women's volleyball season under way

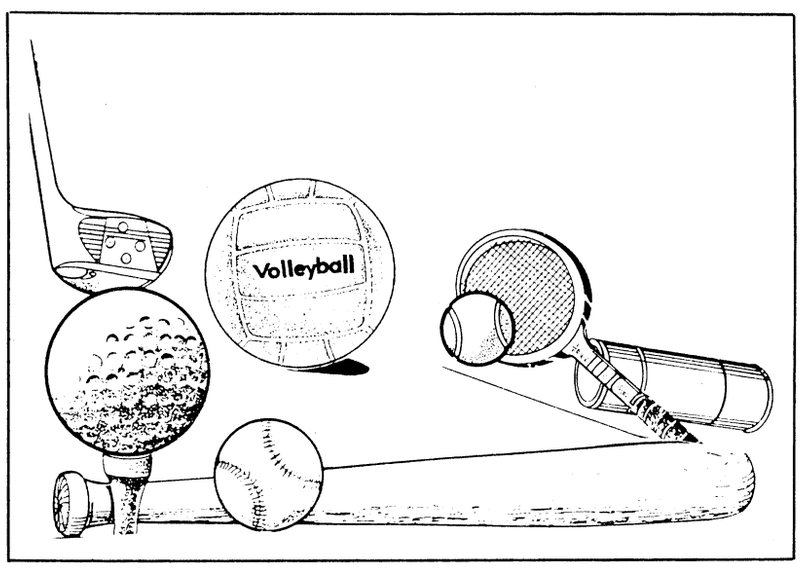
By Avis Matthews
Bayonet sports writer

The 1991 Fort Benning Women's Volleyball League will prove to be more challenging than last season because of more team entries. Six teams comprise the league this season, compared to three teams last season.

As the games got under way Feb. 13 at the Briant Wells Field House, the fans cheering brought the first two teams up for action. The challenge began with the 6 p.m. game between the Saudis and the Patriots.

In a series of games, the best two of three matches, the Patriots clenched their first victory, led by Cynthia Fleming's serving, and Goldie Robinson's various sets and spikes.

The Saudis drew problems early in both matches, trying to return smashing serves from the Patriots, thus falling to an 15-1 loss in the first match and a 15-4 loss in the second.



The 6:45 p.m. game matched the six-year consecutive winning team, Spike Force, against the Islanders. Spike Force, once again playing up to their name, landing several spikes against their opponent.

Renee Nixon and Toni Jones from the Islanders had a few spikes up their sleeves, bringing the Islanders back from a 6 point deficit to tie the match at 8. But key serving from Spike Force's Faye Niuamoa aced the first match to a 15-10 victory.

In the second match of the series, the Islanders were again led by Nixon and Jones to an early lead, but it was snapped by both offensive and defensive plays from Spike Force to give them another victory of 15-11 and taking the series.

The final game at 7:30 p.m. matched Six-Pack and IOBC. IOBC rallied back from a seven-point deficit and downed Six-Pack in a 15-13 victory led by the serving from Charlotte Fowler and key plays from Judy Whyte.

Maria Alexander from Six-Pack kept them in the games with her serving to give her squad a victory of 15-4, which tied the series and forced a third game. Six-Pack gave an all out effort in the final game but was defeated 15-13 by a determined IOBC team in the final minutes of the game.

All-Army wrestlers be all they can be

By Rodney Smith
29th Infantry Regiment

The All-Army Wrestling Team is a unique fraternity of athletes. Not only do they wrestle, but they are also soldiers.

The attributes of the soldier are essential qualities that make a great wrestler, according to this year's head coach, Tony Thomas, who instills this quality in all his wrestlers.

Information on how to apply can be attained through the post sports office. Department of the Army Sports will review all packets. Coaches have no influence on selections made. Athletes will be selected based on military standing and prior wrestling experience.

If selected, you will join 40 to 50 other hopeful wrestlers at trial camp. The trial camp lasts approximately eight weeks. During this time, all wrestlers are required to perform regular military duties. Barracks maintenance, dress greens inspections, and promotion of team spirit are at the top of the list of duties required.

Wrestlers will be exposed to a world-class level of training skills. These skills will be tested throughout the duration of trial camp. Wrestle-offs will determine the make up of the team. Styles of competition are Greco Roman and Freestyle.

Two wrestlers in each weight class will make the team. In all, 20 men will be named All-Army Wrestlers.

Making it into this fraternity is a hard-earned privilege and those who have succeeded are becoming all that they can be.

'Tom Turkey' touches hearts of Americans, fills their gun sights

By William O. Vowell
U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit

COMMENTARY

Nothing is so American, not even the bald eagle, as the wild turkey.

There is something about "Ole Tom" that touches the heart of all who love nature. When his raucous gobble takes the leaves off the trees at daylight in the early spring, one almost hears the Star Spangled Banner.

During spring mating season, Ole Tom is most easily distinguished from the significantly smaller hens and lanky, almost beardless Jakes. The top of his head is chalky, opaque white, the wattles on his neck are the most scarlet red imagineable. He has the awesome habit of waltzing around, fluffed out, all dressed in burnished honey gold, precisely like the Thanksgiving cutouts we all see in November.

Nothing in the world compares with the one-on-one challenge of attempting to call in and bag a boss gobbler such as Ole Tom. Benning is blessed with many like him. Within regulatory guidelines, harvesting gobblers from Benning's abundant flocks will not have negative effects on the turkey population.

If you have the poor judgment to take up turkey hunting, get to know a veteran turkey hunter. They are easy to recognize; they wear old ragged camo clothes from the Crimean War, have a far away glaze in both eyes and their speech is generally slurred from lack of sleep.

Just follow the baloney wrappers and Vienna cans. At the end of the trail, you will find the noblest knight of all — a genuine wild turkey hunter.

Go to Outdoor Recreation at Uchee Creek to get the appropriate licenses and permits. Be sure to read U.S. Army Infantry Center Regulation 210-2 and 210-4. Make sure you understand and adhere to the appropriate post rules and regs, otherwise, your turkey hunting career will be very short.

The State of Georgia and Fort Benning take turkey hunting rules and regulations very seriously. Make sure you do also, or you will experience a close encounter of the worst kind with local wardens. Do it right — then have a knowledgeable person check your paperwork. Find someone with common sense, who can read and write — not another turkey hunter.

Turkey hunting is a noble, purist sport. Use courtesy. If you see someone else's vehicle in an area, go elsewhere. Don't crowd other hunters.

Hunt in open woods — not thickets. Be totally aware of your surroundings.

Don't stalk the hen turkey's yelp. First, hens are not legal game and second, you may be stalking another hunter.

Clearly identify your target. Do not shoot at a gobbler more than 40 yards away.

You have your turkey — now what? Do not move the bird one inch until you have filled out your turkey kill card right there — in ink. Then get ready to borrow your kid's plastic swimming pool, because you are going to be plucking feathers.

The plastic pool trick works. Just sit down in it and start plucking. Do this plucking bit out in the carport, garage or barn — not in the yard where a sudden gust of wind will cause the area to look like the aftermath of a brigade level pillow fight.

COMMUNITY

Benning presents family award

By Wanda Campbell
Bayonet community writer

The winner of the Fort Benning's Great American Family Award was recognized during a March 14 ceremony in Infantry Hall.

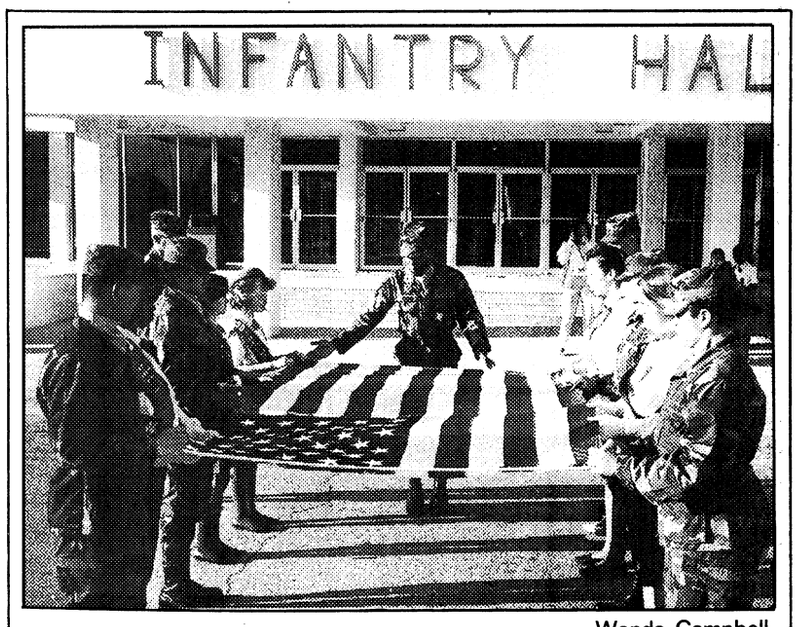
The Masons — Jim, Inge, and daughter, Stephanie — received the award for their volunteer activities at Fort Benning for 15 years.

"We were really surprised to be selected," said Jim, "because there are so many families who do so much more than we do."

"It is families helping families, especially during the recent crisis of Desert Shield and Storm, that make our community strong," said Maj. Gen. Carmen Cavezza.

Kathy Case, installation volunteer coordinator, presented the family with a "great American family tree" as a symbol of their award.

According to the nomination statement, the Mason family have more than 11 years of involvement in scouting programs. Jim is often to be found at the Uchee Creek Boy Scout camp doing maintenance on the site and equipment. He ensures that boats, life preservers, and other equipment are kept ready for camporees and other functions. He is also involved with Troop 135 at the Arrowhead Boy Scout Hut as their troop treasurer.



Inge has been program director for the Cub Scout Day Camp program for 11 years and has worked with the Girl Scout Day Camp for two years. She is also the coordinator of the blood team affiliated with her church.

Stephanie, an eighth-grader at Faith Middle School, is a volunteer with Cub Scout and Girl Scout Day Camps and with the Special Olympics program. She has earned the Silver Award, the second highest award in Girl Scouting, and the God and Country award from her church.

"I like to work with kids," said Stephanie. "I don't volunteer because my parents do; I do it because I want to."

"Watching children grow into maturity, developing self-assurance and realization of their abilities is what makes the scouting programs interesting," said Inge.

"Children today are more aware than we were," said Jim, "they are the reason I quit smoking. I was smoking two or three packs a day, but the boys were always telling me I should quit, so I did."

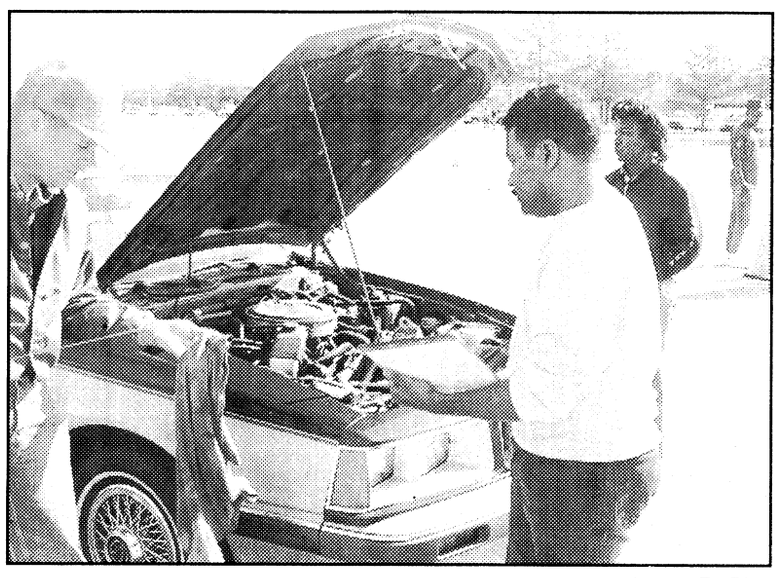
Volunteers give auto inspections

By Nicole Cochrum
Contributing writer



Are you a Desert Storm wife? Then chances are high your car's hood has not been lifted in a long time.

Fort Benning's Directorate of Combat Developments of the Infantry School researched the problems wives were having with car maintenance and provided immediate help.

Volunteers from the DCD and the 197th Infantry Brigade offered free vehicle inspections March 9 at the PX parking lot.

The bonus for those wives who had their cars inspected was a 15 percent discount on labor at the AAFES service station.

Numerous cars showed up for the inspection, and more than 70 percent had deficiencies; ranging from bad tires, cooling system leaks to inoperative lights. Many wives were delighted at the opportunity for a free car inspection.

James E. Olson

Capt. Jerry Powell and Sgt. 1st Class Charles Nesbitt inspect Cynthia Johnson's vehicle.

"My husband has been gone for months, and this is the first time I'm having my car checked. I didn't know where to take it before. This is a great help," said Gloria Diggins, a Desert Storm wife.

The inspecting soldiers and civilians felt good about their volunteer work.

"This gives us non-deployed soldiers a chance to directly help Desert Storm families and support our fellow soldiers," said Sgt. 1st Class Bobby Nobles, a DCD volunteer.

According to Lt. Col. Thomas Funk, DCD, the following items should be inspected to ensure a safe vehicle:

- tires
- all lights
- radiator
- brakes
- batteries
- fluid levels
- shocks
- fan belts
- exhaust systems

Desert Storm spouses who missed the inspection can still get the 15 percent discount on labor at the AAFES service station. They can pick up an inspection form at the Army Community Services Relocation Office, Soldiers Plaza, and bring it to the AAFES station.

Local Girl Scouts celebrate birthday

By Wanda Campbell
Bayonet community writer

To celebrate the 79th birthday of Girl Scouts, Fort Benning Girl Scouts held three events during the week of March 11 through 15, an ice cream social, a formal flag retreat, and a marshmallow roast.

The ice cream social was held March 12 at the Main Post Girl Scout Hut. More than 150 girls, representing Daisy, Brownie, Junior, Cadette, and Senior Girl Scouts, gathered to play games and made their own special ice cream sundaes.

Denise Mercado, secretary for Fort Benning Girl Scouts, said, "I think everyone had a good time. We had the Daisy and Brownies come first, and, then, the Junior and Cadette girls, so that the building would not be so crowded."

On March 13th, Junior and Cadette girls participated with students from Headquarters, 1st Battalion, 507th Parachute Infantry Regiment in the flag retreat ceremony in front of Infantry Hall. Stephanie Mason, Sue Daniels, Tashima Wilson, Sabrina Gouty, Dagny White, and Melissa Junod were dressed in full uniform for this formal ceremony.

Debbie Beane and Vickie Dickerson, organizers for this event, said, "We could not have done this without the help of Staff Sgt. Martin Czapla, from Infantry Hall, and Inge Mason, co-leader for the cadette troop."

The marshmallow roast held March 15th at Camp Hideaway gave girls an opportunity to experience Smores, a confection made up of Hershey's chocolate, roasted marshmallows, and graham crackers. The event was attended by more than 100 girls, friends and family members.

The highlight of this event was the retirement of old flags in a special ceremony that told attendees the symbols that the flag represents and showed the proper way to dispose of worn flags.

Community 'races' to speedway

By Tom C. Hockaday
Bayonet staff writer

The smell of exhaust fumes, the roar of powerful engines along with the roar of the crowd set the stage at the Alabama Motor Speedway Saturday night during "Operation Family Shield Support Night."

Families and soldiers from the Fort Benning community were treated to a night of racing excitement courtesy of the speedway management. Family members who possessed a "family shield indentification card", were admitted free. All members of the armed forces with valid ID cards were admitted for half price.

"We just wanted to do something to show our appreciation to the soldiers and their families for the sacrifice they were willing to make during operation Desert Shield and Desert Storm", said David Roberts, racing manager of the track.

Many families of the Fort Benning community took advantage of the offer. Sgt. 1st Class James Green of the 72nd Engineer Company, 197th Infantry Brigade and his wife, Franziska, were on hand to enjoy the racing.

"I returned last week with the advance party," said Green "I just want to say that the support shown by most Americans, like the people here at the racetrack, boosted morale among the troops and was instrumental in helping to maintain a positive attitude for accomplishing the mission."

Karen Goff and Gaby Harms from Fort Benning were also there with their families. Both women's husbands are still somewhere in Saudi Arabia. They are stationed with the 34th Medical Battalion, 2nd Mobile Army Surgical Hospital.

Tom C. Hockaday

Tammy Thomas holds the money collected by drivers for Fort Benning's food locker.

"The children miss their dad and all the wonderful activities they did together as a family before he left", said Goff. "Sometimes its hard for the little ones to understand why their dad isn't here. He used to come to the races with them, and we thought that this promotion would be a perfect opportunity to carry on the tradition."

"We at least know that our husbands will be coming home. We just don't know when," said Harms, "We're getting a little anxious now because we at least know they will be returning soon."

During intermission, donations for the Fort Benning food locker were collected by all of the drivers. "We thought this might be a good opportunity to do something for the families left behind", said Roberts, "It's our way of saying thank you to all of the members of the military in the surrounding communities."

Scout ticket seller wins plaque, prizes

By Wanda Campbell
Bayonet community writer

Fort Benning's top Scout-A-Rama ticket seller was recognized in a ceremony Saturday at the McGraw Boy Scout Hut by Dean Sims, the District Scout Executive.

Jeremy Liehr, 12, received a plaque for selling 700 tickets to the Scout-A-Rama show that was held in Columbus' Municipal Auditorium March 9. This was the second time Liehr has sold more than 500 tickets.

Jeremy Liehr

In addition to the plaque, Liehr earned a Nintendo Entertainment System, a sports light, an organizer back pack, and a two-man tent.

According to Sims, Liehr was the second highest ticket seller in the council, and his troop, 227, was the highest selling troop in the council.

The Scout-A-Rama show gives Boy Scouts an opportunity to show what they have learned during the past year. The funds raised from the show provide the troops and the council with money for programs such as camping events.

Ricky Montcalm, and Scott Ledbetter, sixth graders, also were recognized for selling 500 tickets to the Scout-A-Rama. Their prize was a Nintendo Entertainment System.

Ken Stettes

Carolyn McCollum, preschool teacher, and Ebonee Jones sing a song about the bus that brings the children to school.

Benning schools look for children

Fort Benning Schools

The Fort Benning Schools are looking for children.

In fact, there is a "child find" program to help find preschool children who are now 3 or 4 years old who live on post and who need special education services.

These special education services are designed for handicapped preschoolers, who are experiencing difficulties in speech, in learning and in physical development.

The Preschool Handicapped Program is now in its second year of operation in the Fort Benning Schools. The program, which was designed and implemented by the Benning schools, came about in response to a need in the community as well as to Public Law 99-457, which outlines educational services for preschool children who are handicapped.

Once a child has met eligibility requirements for the preschool handicapped program, an educational plan is developed for the child based on the child's specific needs. The parents and the school work together to write and implement this plan.

"We are extremely pleased with the positive impact of this program," said Tommye Wentland, Fort Benning Schools' director of Special Education, "and we look forward to bringing more children into the program."

Parents who would like to refer a child or who have questions about the Preschool Handicapped Program, should contact Fort Benning Schools' Special Education Department at 545-5520.

Class helps teens, parents

By Debra Galle
USAIC Chaplain's Office

A door slams with the fury of a Georgia windstorm. A woman sits at her kitchen table, recognizing the arrival of her teen-ager who is now home from school. Familiar turbulence begins.

The child, she once felt a longing and tender love for, has somehow transformed into a stranger whom she not only dislikes, but oftens frightens her.

Many families have teen-agers, but few know how to effectively and lovingly deal with the new adults in their lives.

Eighty-six cases of adolescent misdemeanors were reported in the last six weeks, according to Darlene Perry, director of the Adolescent Advisory Council.

Problems with teens are not limited to minor disorder. Incidents of severe property damage and criminal tendencies are on the rise.

There is something parents can do to help themselves and their teens through this sometimes debilitating time.

A special class is offered by the Chaplains' Family Life Center on Wednesday, from noon to 1:30 p.m., building 2606, Soldiers' Plaza.

The class will focus on ways parents can face their teens and deal with problems — not just hope they go away. Some questions parents and teens face daily are these:

- How do teens (parents) think?
- Is any of this normal?
- When is it not just a teen-age problem?
- How can I survive this stage?
- What more do they want? I've done everything for them, and it is still not enough.

Prevention is such a better solution than seeing your child behind the bars of a prison. Parents are urged to look into this class as a means of facing their lives and bringing the love and happiness back into their home.

Some coping strategies for teens (or anyone else) under stress are:

- Communicate with friends and family members. Try to be open with your feelings.
- Seek professional help if you feel overwhelmed or in trouble.
- Discover and practice constructive activities that allow you to relieve energy and frustration.
- Be involved in activities that you enjoy.
- Keep reminding yourself that problems are temporary.
- Don't use drugs or alcohol and don't smoke.
- Don't put up with any form of abuse from anyone. Get help immediately.
- Don't withdraw. Spend time with your friends.

For more information on this class as well as family counseling, contact the Chaplains' Family Life Center at 545-5301 or 545-1760.

ASK THE JUDGE

By Jane M. Winand
Staff Judge Advocate's Office

Q. I purchased a Volvo in 1978 when I was stationed at Fort Ord, Calif. The certificate of title was held by the loan company that gave me the funds to purchase the car. I paid the car off in 1981 while still in California and the loan company sent the certificate of title to me. Unfortunately, I never told the loan company that I had moved to another apartment and I never received the title.

I PCSed to Korea, then Kentucky and now I am here at Fort Benning. I want to trade the Volvo in but looked through all of my papers and can't find the title. I contacted the loan company and found out that they had sent the title to my old address and the title was never sent back.

I wrote to the California Department of Motor Vehicles and was told that they do not keep title records for more than four years. They have no record of my vehicle. How can I sell my car?

A. The certificate of title to a motor vehicle is almost as important as the keys that allow you to start the vehicle. Without the title, you will have a hard time proving that you are the legal owner of the car. A title is required to initially register a car in Georgia. It is doubtful that anyone will purchase your car without a title, because they will not be able to register and drive it here.

Whenever you purchase a vehicle, you must make sure that you get the certificate of title either at the time of sale, if you are paying cash, or at the time that you pay off the car loan, if the title was given to the loan company to hold.

In your particular situation, the State of Georgia will not issue you a new certificate of title because they have no record of your car. California was the only state that had any title information on your car. However, you can get a title from Georgia through a bonding process. Insurance companies throughout the state will assist you in getting a bonded title from the Georgia Motor Vehicles Division. The insurance company will charge you a percentage of the book value of the vehicle, usually 1 to 8 percent, for the bond. The purpose of the bond is protect the true owner of the vehicle should it be determined later than you never had a legal claim of ownership to the vehicle.

Call the Legal Assistance Office at 545-3281 or 545-3282 for more information.

ENERGY WATCH

By Tina Cook
Energy Branch

All energy sources are either renewable or non-renewable. Renewable sources — such as solar, wind, ocean, biomass, wood, waste, and geothermal energy — and practically inexhaustible or can be regenerated or recycled.

In 1989, electric utilities in the United States used solar, wind, waste, and geothermal energy to generate 11,309 gigawatthours of electricity. (A watthour is a unit of electrical energy equal to one watt or power steadily supplied to or taken from an electric circuit for one hour. A gigawatthour equals a billion watthours.)

This amount is 5.6 percent less electricity than was generated in 1988 from these same renewable energy sources.

However, it represents less than one-half percent of all the electricity produced by utilities, although another renewable energy source (hydroelectric) accounted for 9.5 percent.

The sun is expected to radiate energy at a fairly constant rate for a few billion years. The electromagnetic waves from the sun can be converted to other forms of energy, such as heat and electricity, which can be utilized by people. The major economic applications of solar energy at present are for heating residences and other buildings. Solar energy can also be converted into usable electricity either by means of a photovoltaic cell (based on the element silicon) or by using solar radiation to heat a fluid which, in turn, drives a turbine connected to a conventional electric generator.

In 1989, two utilities in California used solar energy to produce a total of three gigawatthours of electricity.

The wind has been used as a source of energy for centuries. From 1880 to 1930, over six million windmills generated electric power in the western United States.

The rising cost of fossil fuels, coupled with technological advances in windmill design, has made wind an attractive alternative energy source in the last decade.

Wood and waste used by electric utilities for producing electricity include wood chips, sawdust, garbage, chemically inert gas, bagasse (plant refuse), and sewerage plant gas.

Wood once supplied up to 90 percent of the energy needs of our country. In recent times, as the price of fossil fuel energy rose, so did the demand for wood.

In 1989, electric utilities used wood and waste to generate 376 gigawatthours, most of which were used in the state of Washington.

Geothermal energy is heat generated by natural processes beneath the earth's surface. It is recovered as steam and hot water. The steam is harnessed to run generators.

Most of the potential for using geothermal energy in the United States is in California, other far western States, and the Gulf Coast States.

In 1989, six geothermal plants produced 9,342 gigawatthours of electricity. The amount represented 83 percent of the United States electricity generated form renewable sources.

California produced most of the geothermally generated electricity (9,154 gigawatthours), followed by Utah and Hawaii.

The use of renewable energy sources in the United States is not expected to approach that of the major energy sources in the near future.

However, under appropriate conditions and for special purposes, renewable energy sources are proving to be of great value.

If you have any questions on this or any energy-related subject, contact the Energy office at 545-4652 or 545-7928 (Save Watts and Therms).

Infantry Magazine features training, marksmanship

Infantry Magazine

In the March-April issue of Infantry, Col. John D. Fuller, chief of staff of the U.S. Army Infantry Center, discusses the importance of producing soldiers who are not only competent leaders but also competent trainers.

In an article titled "Training the Trainer," Fuller says the Army must first develop trainer tasks, conditions, and standards and then train its trainers to those standards.

He also offers some examples of trainer tasks, conditions, and standards.

Other feature articles include "Tactical Unit Rehearsals," by Capt. James L. Boling, and "Light Infantry in Stay-Behind Operations," by Lt. Col. Michael A. Thompson.

Boling, assigned to the Combat Maneuver Training Center in Germany, describes the classifications of rehearsals used and the level of participation in each.

Thompson, who commands the 4th Battalion, 27th Infantry, describes the planning, preparation, and execution of a stay-behind operation conducted as part of Exercise Team Spirit '90 in Korea and offers some lessons learned from that experience.

Other articles in the issue include: "U-COFT Effectiveness," by Walter G. Butler, who is assigned to the Unit Training Effectiveness Analysis Directorate at the Training and Doctrine Command Analysis Command's White Sands Missile Range Field Office; "Battalion Signal Officer," by Capt. Thomas J. Martin, assigned to the Southern European Task Force; "Rifle Marksmanship Lessons," by Capt. Philip K. Abbott, who commanded a company in the 25th Infantry Division when he wrote the article; and "Marksmanship and the 'New Focus'," by Capt. J. Mark Chenoweth, assistant professor of Military Science at Norwich University.

Information about Infantry Magazine, including subscription rates and writers' guidelines, is available from Editor, P.O. Box 2005, Fort Benning, Ga. 31905-0605; AUTOVON 835-2350 or commercial (404) 545-2350.

SPRING TRAINING

Boys of summer lure tourists to Florida

By Michael Iachetta
New York Daily News

When the New York Yankees opened their spring training season recently against the Montreal Expos in Fort Lauderdale, the game was a big winner for a lot of people, no matter which team scored more runs.

For the Grapefruit League has become a major tourist attraction, worth more than $300 million in revenues to Florida (where 18 major-league baseball teams train) and about $145 million for Arizona, spring training site for eight other clubs.

Interest in spring training is rising faster than a pop fly. The reason? Simple: Fans of all ages enjoy watching the boys of summer work out the kinks in the spring. The players are relaxed. The early-morning training sessions are free.

Players are accessible for autographs during training sessions and frequently stay at hotels and resorts near the ballparks — the Yankees at the Palm-Aire Spa Resort in Pompano Beach and the Mets at the Radisson in Port St. Lucie, not far from the family-oriented Club Med Sandpiper. The resort areas in themselves are interesting.

Then there are the other, timeless reasons for spring training's growing popularity: peanuts, popcorn, hot dogs and Cracker Jack. The crack of wood against cowhide as training gets underway.

The lure has been the same since 1888, when a young catcher named Connie Mack of the Washington Statesmen (later to become the Washington Senators and, still later, the Minnesota Twins) threw out two New York (now San Francisco) Giant baserunners in the first spring training game ever, played in Jacksonville, Fla.

In those days, players got $1 a day for three meals and a bed — usually in an undesirable part of a Southern city. Indeed, the 15 players on the Statesmen had trouble finding a hotel until a Jacksonville hostelry agreed to take them for $3 apiece a week under the proviso that the players would neither mingle with guests nor eat in the dining room.

Then one A.M. Gillam of a newspaper called the Philadelphia Record offered $3 a day for reports on training camp activities. The players started to get "ink" and the idea spread to other papers, so the story goes. Thus the idea of spring training caught on as something people would be watch.

Today, spring training sites offer bargains to lure families. Many hotels make it as easy as hitting a hanging curve.

Here's a list of where the boys of summer are playing and staying in Florida.

■ The New York Yankees' home stadium is Fort Lauderdale Stadium. The team hotel is the Palm-Aire Spa Resort, Pompano Beach.

■ The New York Mets play at the St. Lucie County Sports Complex, Port St. Lucie, Fla. The team hotel is the Radisson.

■ The Atlanta Braves and Montreal Expos both train in West Palm Beach and play at Municipal Stadium. The Braves stay at the Palm Beach Garden Marriott, the Expos at the Royce Hotel.

■ The Baltimore Orioles and Chicago White Sox train in Sarasota and play at Ed Smith Stadium. The Orioles stay at the Holiday Inn, Osprey, while the White Sox stay at the Sarasota Days Inn.

■ The Boston Red Sox play at Chain O'Lakes Park in Winter Haven and stay at Holiday Inn.

—The Detroit Tigers' home base is Lakeland, hotel is the Ramada Inn and home stadium is Joker Marchant Stadium.

—The Houston Astros work out in Kissimee, stay at Fortune Place and play at Osceola County Stadium.

■ The Kansas City Royals' home stadium is Baseball City Stadium in Haines City, and their hotel is the Sonesta Villa Resort in Orlando.

■ The Los Angeles Dodgers home base is Vero Beach, hotel is Dodgertown and home stadium is Holman.

And so it goes, with the Minnesota Twins in Fort Myers (hotel: Courtyard Marriott); Philadelphia Phillies in Clearwater and the Pittsburgh Pirates in Bradenton (neither has a designated team hotel) to the St. Louis Cardinals in St. Petersburg (no team hotel); Texas Rangers in Port Charlotte (they stay at the Palm Island Resort in Cape Haze, Fla.) and the Toronto Blues Jays in Dunedin (staying at the Ramada Inn Countryside).

Take a break in Panama City, in the sand and the sand traps

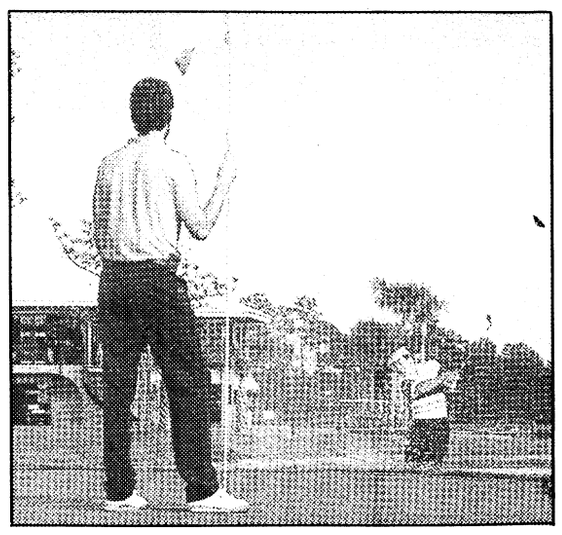
$100,000 PGA event planned this week

From Staff Reports

Panama City, Fla., may be best known as a spring break mecca for thousands of "breakers" from all over the southeast, but PC is also becoming known as the South's new golfers paradise.

Located on the Gulf of Mexico in Northwest Florida, Panama City Beach has joined the ranks of the world's greatest seaside golf communities with 11 top-ranked golf courses.

The area is rapidly becoming known for its sand on the beaches and its sand on the golf courses.



And for the second consecutive year, in conjunction with the PGA Tour, the Ben Hogan Co. and the Dixie Section of the PGA of America, the Hombre Golf Club will serve as host of a 1991 Ben Hogan Tour event.

The Ben Hogan Tour is a $3 million, 30-event series of $100,000 tournaments designed to provide professional golfers with additional playing opportunities, as well as bring professional golf to new markets.

Starting Monday and continuing through next Sunday, the Ben Hogan Tour will attract some of the best golfers in the country.

The charities selected to benefit from this year's tournament are the Anchorage Children's Home, the Children's Home Society, and the Shaddai Temple Transportation Fund. In addition, the Panama City Beach Golf Classic awards two scholarships to deserving students from Bay County each year.

Many sports and entertainment celebrities will be participating in the event. Football coach Pat Dye, Heisman Trophy winner Pat Sullivan, and All-American pass receiver Terry Beasley, all from Auburn University, will be joining the Pro-Am Field.

The Panama City Beach area has 11 courses where golfers can tee it up.

Dave Thomas, founder and owner of Wendy's Restaurants International, will also be on hand as the national spokesperson of the Children's Home Society.

Spanky McFarland of the "Little Rascals/Our Gang" series will be assisting with the Junior Golf Clinic and playing in the Pro-Am on Thursday.

Bill Espy, who portrays "Mitch Blake" on the soap opera "Another World" will also be on hand for personal interviews, autographs, and to compete in the Pro-Am.

Artist completes school residence

Fort Benning Schools

Blues guitarist, Scott Ainslie, has now completed his nine-week tour of duty as Wilbur School's Artist-in-Residence.

During the residency, which was sponsored by the Georgia Council for the Arts, Fort Benning Schools, and the Wilbur School PTA, students were led through the rich history of African-American music from South Africa's Ladysmith Black Mambazo to the Mississippi Delta's Muddy Waters and B.B. King.

At various times, Ainslie worked with all of the students at Wilbur. At other times, special groups of third, fourth, and fifth-graders were selected to participate with him in more advanced musical work. Sixty-eight students learned to play the guitar.

Ainslie's visit to Wilbur ended with a program in which many of the Wilbur students demonstrated exactly what they had been learning in their time with him. The students performed in groups of 17 on Ainslie's final night, marching onto the stage to perform for an audience made up of more than 225 of their parents and teachers.

The students played songs they had learned during their time with Ainslie. Many songs were drawn from the spiritual tradition including "I'll Be Rested When the Roll is Called Up Yonder," and "This Train Is Bound For Glory."

One song, "This Land Is Your Land," was by balladeer, Woody Guthrie. Students also performed songs that they had written about their own experiences.

Ainslie's residency at Wilbur School has ended, but the impact of his visit will be with the students and staff members of Wilbur School as well as with members of the Fort Benning and Columbus communities for a long time to come.

One first-grade class said it best in a song they wrote for him on his last day — "He made a NOTEable change in our love of music."

Sealant protects teeth from unwanted cavities

Fort Benning Dental Activity

While children today have the benefits of fluoridated water, fluoride treatments at the dentist's office and fluoride toothpastes, they are still getting cavities. The Journal of the American Dental Association reports that "by age 16, American children have an average of nearly 10 decayed, extracted, or filled tooth surfaces."

Dental sealants have been developed to cover the pits and grooves where food and bacteria get trapped.

These sealants are made of a plastic resin material and are painted onto the chewing surfaces of the back teeth.

To be most effective, this painless procedure should be done when the permanent molars erupt at about age 6. No anesthetic is required and the procedure is covered 100 percent by the Delta Dental Plan.

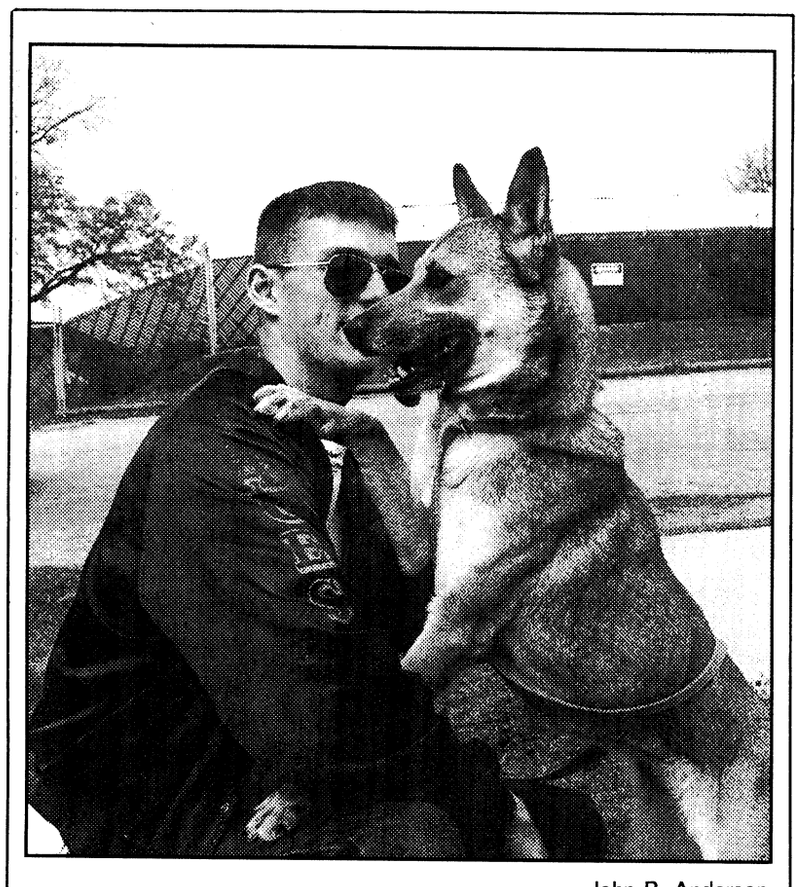
Because the sealants are not applied between the teeth, flossing and brushing are still necessary to help a child acquire a positive approach to good oral care.

Eating out can be nutritious

By Karen Schultz and Elizabeth Charles
Martin Army Community Hospital

The average American eats three or more meals at restaurants during the week.

Whether it's done for convenience, necessity or "a night out," dining out is a major part of our lives.



Restaurants are responding to the growing demands of the health-conscious diner with many low-fat, low-calorie, appetizing foods. Yet, sometimes it is still hard to know exactly what to choose when dining out.

For those occasions, remember the following tips.

- Choose broiled, baked, steamed or poached meats and vegetables.
- Request margarine rather than butter (to reduce cholesterol) be served.
- Avoid all-you-can-eat buffets if you are weak-willed and choose a la carte (individual servings) instead.
- Request that butter, gravy, cheese sauces and cream sauces be omitted from your meal.
- Request small portions be served — limit meat to three to four ounces.
- Choose a seat far away from the serving line or buffet area to avoid the temptation of going back for seconds.
- Avoid fried appetizers — choose a salad instead.
- If you choose a high-calorie, high-fat food, split it with someone.
- Order dessert only after eating your meal. Try fruit with whipped topping or low-fat frozen yogurt if available.

Most restaurants are very willing to honor your request.

Make intelligent choices while watching your calories and fat intake and still enjoy eating out.
