Latino Couples - The Fort Benning Family Life Center is offering classes to help Latin families understand how life in the U.S. affects their cultural and spiritual values. The goal is to help the family sort through the old and new values that challenge its integrity. The classes will meet Thursday, Aug. 22 and 29 from noon to 1 p.m.

For those couples who want to develop coping strategies, a retreat will be on Sept. 7 from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m. at the Blessed Trinity Retreat Center. The retreat is free to all participants. Lunch and mid-morning snack will be provided to all participants.

To register for classes and the retreat, call 545-1760. The classes will meet at building 2606. Babysitting is not available.

Growth Group — A pastoral support group meets each Wednesday from noon to 1 p.m. at the Custer Terrace Chapel. Soldiers and spouses are invited to bring their lunch and share various personal and professional concerns. The agenda is generated by members of the group in an atmosphere of care and mutual support.

The group is not action-oriented, but provides emotional support, spiritual nurturing and personal guidance. It provides an opportunity to take a moment out of a busy life to reflect upon the relationship with God, others and self.

For more information, call Custer Terrace Chapel at 544-3179 or 544-2213.

Involuntary separation — Is your spouse leaving for training or overseas? The Family Life Center is forming a support group for how to handle these separations. The group focuses on how to prepare for it; how to deal with anger, loneliness and depression; and how to keep the marriage or relationship alive during separation.

The group will meet each Wednesday from noon to 1:30 p.m.

For more information and registration, call the Family Life Center at 545-1760 or 545-1760 or 545-5301.

Navigators — The contact person for the Navigators is Eric Kennedy. Anyone interested in this program should contact Kelley Hill Chapel, 544-3070 or 322-7161.

PROTESTANT

The Protestant Women of the Chapel will feature a video series during August. The series is titled "Inside Out," by Dr. Larry Crabb.

● Thursday — "I don't want to admit it, but I know something is wrong," deals with being thirsty people and what Christ can do about that thirst.

● Aug. 22 — "Even when I get what I want, it's not what I want," addresses what happens when people take matters into their own hands to gain the satisfaction only God can provide.

● Aug. 29 — "How can I make it if I face all that is going on inside?" explores what it really means to change from the inside out.

The group meets each Thursday at the Religious Education Center at 9:30 a.m., with the program lasting until 11:45 a.m. Baby-sitting is available at no charge. For more information, contact Ruth Bloomstrom at 689-4533 or Vicki Phelps at 687-7583. If transportation is needed, call Jeanne Bastone at 682-3358.

FYI

ASK THE JUDGE

By Rick Parker
Staff Judge Advocate's Office

Q. I have been recently stationed at Fort Benning, and will be bringing my family here in a few weeks. I've been informed that we won't be able to get on-post housing immediately, so I'm going to start looking for a place to rent. Is there anything I need to be on the look-out for in renting an apartment or house? In particular, I'm concerned about what happens when my name finally comes up for on-post housing.

A. Your question is timely and relevant. We see numerous landlord-tenant problems in the Legal Assistance Office that could have been avoided by a careful reading and understanding of the lease prior to signing it. Your primary concerns have to do with your ability to terminate, or get out of the lease, once you are able to get quarters on-post.

Your right to get out of a lease depends on the type of lease you enter into and whether or not the lease contains any provisions about termination. These are two basic kinds of leases: month-to-month and closed-end.

A month-to-month lease will have a specific date on which it begins (the date on which you can move in), but it has no specified ending date. In these leases, unless the lease has other, specific provisions written in, you may terminate by giving the landlord 30 days notice that you want to get out. The landlord can terminate the lease by giving you 60 days notice.

A closed-end lease will have a specified date on which it begins and specified date on which it will end. Unless the lease has specific provisions about terminating before the specified ending date, you have no right to terminate before the ending date.

However, both types of leases are subject to a state law which gives you the right to terminate early if you have received permanent change of station orders. If you have received orders transferring you from Fort Benning to another installation, you may terminate a lease by giving the landlord 30 days notice.

Most leases in the Columbus area do contain provisions about early termination. Most of these require a 30 day written notice to be given on the first day of the month prior to the month in which you want to move out. For instance, if you wanted to move on September 15, you would have to notify the landlord on or before August 1.

Notice should always be given in writing, should be dated and should contain the date you want to move, and should be delivered to the landlord either personally or by certified mail, return receipt requested. If you deliver personally, make sure you get a written receipt from the landlord acknowledging its delivery. Always keep a copy of the notice.

Before you sign a lease, make sure you understand what your rights are concerning early termination. Make sure you understand whether or not there are any penalties for early termination — some leases in this area contain a provision that requires you to pay an additional month's rent to terminate early.

If you have a situation where you feel that it may be necessary to move early (such as getting on-post housing), talk to the landlord about it before you sign the lease. It is possible to negotiate with a landlord for a special provision about termination, and if you reach such an agreement, make sure that it is written into the lease.

Don't rely on an oral agreement — if the landlord is unwilling to commit your agreement to writing, don't sign the lease.

Attorneys at the Legal Assistance Office are available to advise you about leases and problems associated with them. However, it is in your best interests to make sure that a problem does not arise by making sure that you understand your obligations in a lease before you sign it. If you have questions about this subject, contact the Legal Assistance Office at 545-3281 or 545-3282.

4th Bn., 36th Inf. becomes inactive

By Marilyn Balzarini
Infantry Training Center

Soldiers of the 4th Battalion, 36th Infantry, assembled for the last time during a retreat ceremony Aug. 8. The battalion inactivated the next morning right after its last two One Station Unit Training companies graduated.

During the retreat ceremony the unit's commander, Lt. Col. Mark Gerner, stated that the unit was not dying — only going to sleep until it is called to serve again.

The 4th Battalion, 36th Infantry, became one of the eight infantry battalions of the Infantry Training Center in August 1987. In four years, the unit produced over 12,000 qualified infantry soldiers.

Before 1987, the unit had been dormant for 30 years. It inactivated in 1957 after serving as part of the 3rd Armored Division.

The cadre of the 4th Battalion, 36th Infantry, will continue to work together, however. They will be a part of the 1st Battalion, 38th Infantry.

Gerner took command of the 1st Battalion, 38th Infantry, after the 4th Battalion's colors were furled and cased for the last time.

The 1st Battalion, 38th Infantry, has also been a part of the Infantry Training Center since August 1987. Soldiers of the 1st Battalion, 38th Infantry, prior to Aug. 9 will take other jobs. Many will remain at the Infantry Training Center. Others will join new units at Fort Benning or will move to other installations.

The commander of the 1st Battalion, 38th Infantry, prior to Gerner was Lt. Col. Thomas Miller. Miller's next assignment is deputy commander of the 3rd Brigade, 24th Infantry Division.

Excellence team visits Benning

By Brian C. Sutton
Bayonet staff writer

The Training and Doctrine Command Communities of Excellence team visited Fort Benning Aug. 5 through 9 to evaluate the post for TRADOC awards.

The seven-member team traveled throughout the post to evaluate the many services Fort Benning provides for its soldiers and civilians and to check the appearance of office areas, landscaping and facilities in general, according to Kay O'Brien, chief, Productivity Branch, Management Analysis Division.

The team began its four-day evaluation with a "sensing session," which involved a study of different target groups, including military members divided by ranks, family members, retirees, and civilians. The groups were asked questions regarding the quality of services the post provides.

After information was gathered by the team, the evaluators set out to do some information gathering of their own.

Escorts were provided for each evaluator to introduce them to Fort Benning and to act as a liaison between the evaluators and office members. Team members traveled separately to different points on post to interview workers and evaluate office conditions.

"A lot of work goes into the post to get it ready for the team," said O'Brien. "We appreciate all the efforts that went into making this visit one of the most successful ever."

Results of the evaluation will not be known for months. The team is still evaluating other installations.

O'Brien remained optimistic about the post's efforts.

"I think it went very well," she said. "The team seemed favorably impressed with the way Fort Benning operates, and we should be very competitive for a TRADOC award."

Benning's top leaders discuss TQM strategies

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Aiming to establish Fort Benning as the best U.S. Army installation, the post's command group, major unit commanders and staff directors met from Aug. 6 to 8 to discuss strategy and learn methodology to reach that goal. This "Total Quality Management Conference" was assisted by Philip Crosby Associates Inc. of Winter Park, Fla.

According to Jan Chervenak, post TQM coordinator, it was time to hold a quality conference to assess our progress and to recommit ourselves. "The objectives of the conference were simple: provide a TQM introduction for new commanders and staff, assess progress and level of determination and recommit ourselves to implementing a continuous quality improvement process," Chervenak said.

M. Leigh Whitney, a senior vice president of Philip Crosby Associates, explained to the conference attendees that TQM evolved from recurring U.S. industry and government concerns over poor performance of products or people and the costs associated with those problems.

676th goes to Saudi

By Alyanna B. Clay-Heard
Bayonet staff writer

It was a sight that had been all but forgotten here in the face of so many troops returning home from duty in the Persian Gulf — a unit clad in desert battle dress uniforms, standing in formation, preparing to deploy to Saudi Arabia.

Yet, that is exactly what happened Tuesday for a nine-member medical detachment.

The 676th Medical Detachment, a part of the 34th Medical Battalion, left for Saudi Arabia at 5 p.m. Wednesday. A farewell ceremony for the unit was Tuesday at 8:15 a.m. at the 34th Medical Battalion headquarters.

The unit is going to relieve their sister unit, the 675th Medical Detachment, also from Fort Benning, currently stationed in Southwest Asia.

"Our unit's mission will be to provide support to medical personnel currently in theater," said Staff Sgt. Kevin Miller, non-commissioned officer in charge of the detachment. "We will provide routine medical services such as sick call and dispensaries, and we will be treating personnel who are preparing equipment to be shipped back home," said Miller.

The detachment normally has a doctor that rounds out the 10-member detachment but no doctor will accompany the unit on this deployment. That is because the doctor is already stationed in Saudi Arabia, said Miller.

"I really don't mind going," said Sgt. Johnny Bennett, the unit's assistant NCOIC. "The unit was alerted a year ago, and we've been prepared to go since then. I know the unit will do fine." Bennett will be leaving behind a wife, Regina, and a son, John Jr., who is 2 years old.

Spc. Pamela Dixon, one of the two females in the unit, said she is definitely ready and viewed the deployment as a positive move.

"It will give me an opportunity to save money, although I'll miss my son Tony, who is 5 years old," said Dixon.

Although the length of the tour is as of yet undetermined, the unit's personnel hopes people won't forget them, even though the war is over.

"We were there for the units that left during the war," said Miller. "Although the fighting is over, we hope the Fort Benning community will be there for us in terms of support."

Post to celebrate women's equality

By Alyanna B. Clay-Heard
Bayonet staff writer

Women's Equality Day, the anniversary of the ratification of the 19th Amendment of the U.S. Constitution, will be celebrated at Fort Benning Thursday through Aug. 26.

The 19th Amendment granted women the right to vote and was passed Aug. 26, 1920.

Women's Equality Day 1991 will be celebrated with an array of seminars, displays and other activities geared toward increasing the awareness of the Fort Benning community to the history of the women's right to vote in this country and will include a look at roles women have played in our country's history.

A Women's Equality Day symposium will be Thursday from noon until 1 p.m. at the Sayers Memorial Library on Main Post. The forum will include as panelists Edna Kendrick, former Columbus councilwoman; Doris Halouska president of the League of Women's Voters; and Lt. Col. Cheryl Kifian-Hoffer of Martin Army Community Hospital. For information about the panel discussion, contact Ann Pierce at 545-7141.

A women's suffrage movement display will also be showcased until Aug. 26 at Sayers Memorial Library.

A voter information booth will be set up from Aug. 24 through the 26 at the Post Exchange at the mall. The booth will feature free pamphlets and information about eligibility to register to vote in Muscogee, Chattahoochee and Russell counties.

For information about the Women's Equality Day activities, call Winnie Torain in the Equal Employment Opportunity office at 545-1872.

Two post teens drown in river

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Two Fort Benning youths drowned after falling into a river behind the Indianhead housing area Tuesday evening. Searchers recovered the bodies in the Chattahoochee River Thursday afternoon.

Dead are Russell S. Cornwell, 14, son of Staff Sgt. James R. Ferguson of Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 3rd Brigade, 24th Infantry Division, and his wife, Kathy, and Stefan Burton, 16, son of Staff Sgt. Kathy L. Caldwell of Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 36th Engineer Group, and Craig L. Harrison.

Fort Benning Military Police authorities initiated the search and were joined by the Fort Benning Fire Department, medical evacuation helicopters, Columbus Emergency Medical Squad (including divers), volunteers with the Georgia K-9 Rescue Association and the Russell County Emergency Squad.

Accidents are just waiting to happen

By Clyde Snively
Bayonet columnist

COMMENTARY

Looking at accident statistics over the past week, one might be tempted to say we've had a run of bad luck.

But luck has nothing to do with it. We've had a run of stupidity, carelessness, recklessness, but not bad luck.

There's two conflicting laws. One states: "accidents happen." The other, "accidents can be avoided."

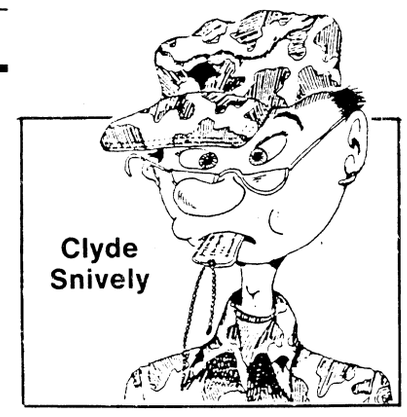
Both are right, but both are also wrong; and, we, as thinking human beings, can play a role in both cases.

If you believe accidents happen and they are inevitable, you should be a strong advocate of protecting yourself.

Believing that one day I could be involved in a car accident, I always wear a safety belt and make sure my passengers do, too.

If I'm out tooling about town on a motorcycle, my passenger and I will be wearing our helmets, fluorescent vests, sturdy shoes or boots, gloves and long-sleeved, long-legged clothes.

None of that shorts and shower shoe stuff for me. Also, my headlight will be on.



Further, those who believe accidents will happen will wear the proper protective gear — goggles, ear muffs, gloves, work boots, etc. when working with equipment that could jump up and bite you unexpectedly.

Those who believe accidents can be prevented know that usually behind every accident, there's a cause.

These people examine their work area to make sure their equipment is safe and used in the proper manner. For instance, they make sure the ladder they climb will support their weight and is placed on an even, no-skid surface.

They make sure the surface they walk and work on is free of wet spots or any hidden hazard that might cause them to trip when they're carrying an item and can't see their feet.

If they're out recreating, they make sure there are no hidden obstacles, and the water is deep enough before diving into the local water hole. They ensure their boating gear is sink-proof yet still has the proper safety equipment.

All this is what most thinking, safety-conscious people do. However, there's nothing to force us to click on our "think safety brain waves" when we get up in the morning.

And if you're a troop who thinks it's not necessary because your leader will take care of you, think again.

The other day, there was an entire formation of troops running in the dark on 1st Division Road. Not one of them had on a fluorescent vest. Not one of them had a light wand.

Who was in charge of that formation? I think if I were a troop, I'd voice an opinion before I was led off to slaughter.

Does the leader of that formation think early morning drivers are especially alert? Did he think the sun would automatically rise up above the trees as soon as he hit the road?

I'm not sure who the leader was, but he or she must be of the same mindset as those individual runners I see on Dixie Road running without the benefit of fluorescent vests or tape.

Yeah, they might see an oncoming car, but just how fast do they think they can dodge? Let's see, a car traveling at 45 miles per hour is headed toward a runner traveling at 8 miles per hour (these guys run twice as fast as me). How fast will they close a gap of 50 feet at those speeds?

In layman's terms — pretty darn fast (Axtion Jaxtion says 1.55555 seconds). Whatever the answer, let's say the car was aimed at the runner.

How long would it take for him to realize that and once he realized he was about to be hit, how long to react and leap (or try to leap) out of the way?

Those runners have about as much sense as the ones I see loping along the bypass, or out along Milgen Road in the daylight. They've all got a death wish if you ask me.

Life's not worth living if we're afraid of life, but we won't live long if we don't take a few basic precautions in whatever we do.

Standards: DA tightening the squeeze

By Larry Whittaker
Office of the Deputy Chief of Staff of Personnel

The message coming out of Department of the Army is simple: If you're substandard, you're gone.

The Army announced in June that several personnel policies have been tightened to enhance force quality. The Army is making it easier for commanders to separate substandard soldiers earlier.

The policy changes are designed to maintain a quality force while meeting mandates to reduce the number of personnel serving on active duty.

"As we begin focusing on reshaping the Army, it is essential that we protect our quality soldiers by distinguishing them from those who do not meet established standards," said Lt. Gen. William Reno in a May 28 message to the field.

The policy changes address local bars to re-enlistment, overweight, physical fitness, drug abuse and rehabilitation and elimination from the Non-Commissioned Officer Education System courses.

The policy changes are designed to maintain a quality force while meeting mandates to reduce the number of personnel serving on active duty.

One example of how soldiers are affected: Previously commanders had the option of separating soldiers who "repeatedly failed" the Army Physical Fitness Test and who "displayed no significant or continuing progress toward meeting standards."

Under the new policy, if soldiers fail two consecutive APFTs when no medical reason exists, they face a mandatory bar to re-enlistment or will be separated from the Army.

Under the new policy, commanders will be required to review a bar every three months, with separation required if the bar is still in place after the second three-month review.

Mandatory bars to re-enlistment or separation face soldiers who fail to make satisfactory progress in the weight control program after six months, if no medical reason exists.

Soldiers face the same consequences if they fail to maintain body fat standards within a year after removal from the weight control program.

Soldiers who report to professional military schools (temporary duty or permanent change of station) not meeting body fat standards will be denied enrollment.

Also, a memorandum will be forwarded to the first general officer in the losing or sending chain of command.

The memorandum will address the individual's failure to maintain standards and the possible failure of the unit commander to identify and enroll that individual in the weight control program.

Under the old drug abuse policy, sergeants and above identified as illegal drug abusers were processed for separation.

All others twice-identified as illegal drug abusers also faced separation.

Policy regarding officers, NCOs and twice-identified drug abusers remains unchanged.

Corporals and below identified as illegal drug abusers and having three or more years of service will be processed for separation.

Soldiers designated as rehabilitative failures — alcohol or drugs — will be processed for separation.

If you are eliminated for cause from NCOES courses, you will face a mandatory bar to re-enlistment or separation proceedings.

Soldier in Saudi asks not to be forgotten

I'm currently stationed in Saudi Arabia for Operation Desert Storm/Farewell. My home station is Fort Benning.

What I would like to know is how I can get the Fort Benning Bayonet sent to me over here.

I will be here until December. Hopefully, I will be home in time for Christmas.

I haven't read The Bayonet in 1 1/2 months. Please remind your readers there are still a few of us Fort Benning soldiers over here.

Don't forget about us, even if we aren't part of the 197th Infantry Brigade (now the 3rd Brigade, 24th Infantry Division). I'm the only one from my company at Fort Benning still here in Saudi Arabia.

Thank you for your time.

OWC plans social event

By Margie Adams
Officers' Wives Club

The Fort Benning Officers' Wives Club has something sweet in store for its membership this month.

The "Super Sundae Sign-up," set for Aug. 28 at the Officers' Club, combines the club's annual membership drive with a "Make-Your-Own-Sundae" night.

In addition, members will get the chance to sign up for classes in arts, crafts, music and dance as well as volunteer positions in post activities and services.

The club's theme for 1991-92 is "Georgia On My Mind" and will offer a look at its "adopted" state as well as the neighboring city of Columbus during the monthly luncheons. The board also is planning an art auction, a tour of homes and an arts and crafts bazaar.

Membership dues are $12 for the year.

Craft classes that will be offered at the event are papier-mache pumpkins, papier-mache Santa faces, calligraphy, Scherensnitte (paper cutting), stained glass, cookie jar painting and cornice-making.

For some real fun, instructors will offer classes in "Flash from Trash" (machine applique), paper earrings, Trellis skirt (strip quilting), T-shirt dress, "Something from Almost Nothing," napkin folding and food garnishing, buying and caring for antiques and genealogy.

Instructors will announce class times and meeting places at the event. Fees vary according to subject and payment is due the night of the social.

For an entertaining element, there will be demonstrations by participants in the OWC School of Music and School of Dance. There also will be opportunity to register for those classes. They include gymnastics, ballet, tap and jazz, Jazzercise, piano, guitar and martial arts.

Representatives from various post and Columbus community agencies and post sports leagues will have tables with information on services and volunteer opportunities. Also, the OWC Ways and Means committee will be holding a "fire sale" on some gift items.

For reservations, call Dixie Hawkinson at 687-2031 or Netta Selego at 689-4077. Make-your-own-sundae is $1.50. Tot Town will be open for child care.

Social hour begins at 7 p.m. in the Regimental Room and activities registration is set for 8 p.m. in the Supper Club.

Fall sports on tap at Youth Services

By James C. Rupp
Bayonet staff writer

The Youth Services Recreation division is currently registering post youth for its fall sports program.

According to Linda Lane, Youth Services' sports director, children can register for soccer, football and cheerleading until Sept. 6. Football and cheerleading are open for children 6 to 15 and soccer is open to children 4 to 15, she said.

Lane said that the 6 and 7-year-olds will play flag football and the other divisions will participate in tackle football.

Football games will be Saturdays at 10 a.m. at Blue Field, Lane said.

Coaches for soccer and cheerleading are currently needed, Lane said. Girls 17 years and older will be accepted for cheerleading. Persons interested in applying for coaching jobs should go to Youth Services, building 1056.

To register children for sporting events, apply at Youth Services with a birth certificate, identification card, medical card or some other proof of age.

ACS sponsors seminar on financial planning

Army Community Service

A training session for financial counselors was sponsored by the Fort Benning Consumer Affairs and Financial Assistance Program of Army Community Service Aug. 5 through 9 at the Columbus Iron Works Trade and Convention Center.

Attendees at the conference came from as far away as Sicily, Panama, Japan, the United Kingdom and Turkey, as well as all over the United States. There were counselors from the Department of Army and other branches of the armed services, Consumer Credit Counseling Service and other agencies that provide financial counseling and consumer education.

Isaac Templeton, Consumer Affairs and Financial Assistance Program manager at the Community and Family Support Center, Headquarters, Department of the Army, provided an update of what is in store for the Army's counselors.

Fort Benning has four financial counselors. They see some people who are having trouble with their finances, and they see others who just want their money to do more for them.

The counselors at ACS take information from their clients and use it to help them reach their goals.

During the training, counselors learned new concepts of working with people, establishing budgets, consumer protection and some of the special problems that may be faced by different groups within the population. The other sponsors of the seminar were the Consumer Credit Counseling Service of the Family Counseling Center and the Cooperative Extension Service, both of Columbus.

Child dies, soldier transferred to Walter Reed after accident

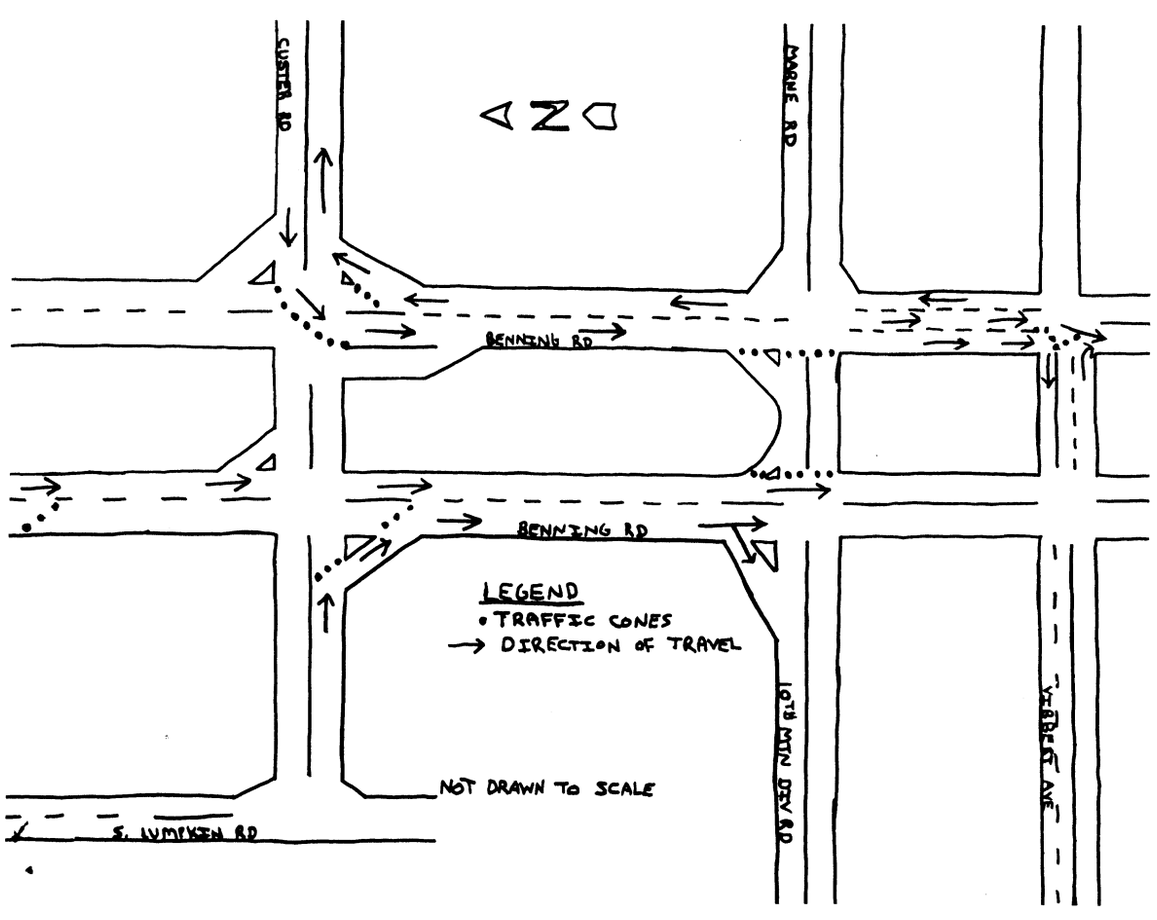
Soldier to be charged with negligent homicide

By Alyanna B. Clay-Heard
Bayonet staff writer

A Fort Benning soldier recovering from injuries received when his vehicle collided with a dump truck Aug. 5 has been transferred to Walter Reed Army Medical Center in Washington, D.C., according to Jean Dickerson, Martin Army Community Hospital spokeswoman.

The soldier, identified as Spc. Walter C. Hill, of Company C, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, was in satisfactory condition and had stabilized enough to make medical transport possible, said Dickerson.

He was transferred to Walter Reed Army Medical Center for more specialized care for the head injuries sustained in the collision, said Dickerson.



Kristian Velez of 1110 Farr Road, a 3-year-old passenger in the vehicle during the accident, died Aug. 8 from injuries sustained from the accident. Hill's wife, Donna, of the same address, died a few hours after the accident at St. Francis Hospital.

Upon release from the hospital, Hill will be charged with negligent homicide, failing to yield at an intersection, and failure to use seat belts, according to Staff Sgt. Anthony W. Greer of the Traffic Section of the Military Police Activity.

Fort Benning morning traffic flow

Starting Aug. 26, the morning traffic flow on Benning Road will be changed to allow three lanes of incoming traffic to Main Post. The map below details the traffic flow.

According to Staff Sgt. Anthony W. Greer of the Military Police Activity Traffic Section, this will be the normal traffic flow for many long time residents of Fort Benning. For more information, call Greer at 545-7241.

Summer training not so hot when you know the rules

We're getting better at protecting our soldiers in the heat. While 121 soldiers suffered heat injuries in fiscal 1990, that's down from 135 in fiscal 1989 and 144 in fiscal 1988. And, there hasn't been a heat-related fatality since fiscal 1988.

While the numbers are coming down, the causes are staying the same. Heat injuries occur most often during physical training and road marches and while training in mission-oriented protective posture gear.

In one incident, a soldier drank only a small glass of water just before taking part in the unit's morning run. He completed the run, but collapsed at the aid station. He was rushed to the hospital where he was admitted with a temperature of 107.2 degrees Fahrenheit.

In another incident, the heat index was at least 105 degrees during the first six days the soldier had been in the field. He was emplacing mortar tubes when overexertion and insufficient consumption of fluids resulted in a heat injury. The soldier was hospitalized for three days.

Another soldier had been in MOPP-2 when his unit was hit by a simulated nuclear, biological and chemical attack. He went to MOPP-4, then was directed to take chemical samples.

He ran for about 150 meters before being overcome by the heat. He was hospitalized with a temperature of more than 105 degrees.

All of these heat injuries demanded a high price, first in terms of human suffering, and then in terms of mission loss. The loss of these soldiers to their unit was all the greater because their injuries were preventable. Hard-bought experience shows that leader awareness of heat injury symptoms and supervision can help prevent heat injuries by:

- Acclimatizing soldiers who are unaccustomed to the heat.
- Carefully selecting and conditioning soldiers for physical work in the heat.
- Identifying high-risk personnel (overweight, previous heat injury, new to the unit).
- Enforcing water consumption.
- Instructing soldiers on precautions to be taken in MOPP configuration during nuclear, biological and chemical training.
- Using of wet bulb globe temperature at all training sites. There can be a big difference in WBGT index at one site and another only a short distance away.
- Training soldiers on prevention measures, causes, symptoms and first aid treatment for heat injuries.

Activity	Typical Duties	Quarts per person per day for drinking WBGT* less than 80°/more than 80°
Light	Desk work, guard work, radio operating	6	9
Moderate	Route march on level ground, tank operations	9	12
Heavy	Forced march, route march heavy load/MOPP, digging-in	12	15

Cool, clear water

In extreme heat, a soldier may lose more than one quart of water per hour as his body cools itself through sweating. Water must be replaced or soldiers will suffer dehydration or heat injury.

Intake should be in small amounts. Water should be sipped, not gulped, and it should be cool, whenever possible.

Soldiers must drink even when they are not thirsty. Thirst is not an adequate indicator of dehydration. Commanders and other leaders should set hydration (water consumption) standards and ensure they are enforced.

Alcohol and soft drinks are not substitutes for water. Alcohol increases the likelihood of dehydration; soft drinks are not absorbed as rapidly as water into body tissue. In fact, soft drinks that contain salts, such as bottled or powdered sports drinks, may increase an individual's water requirements.

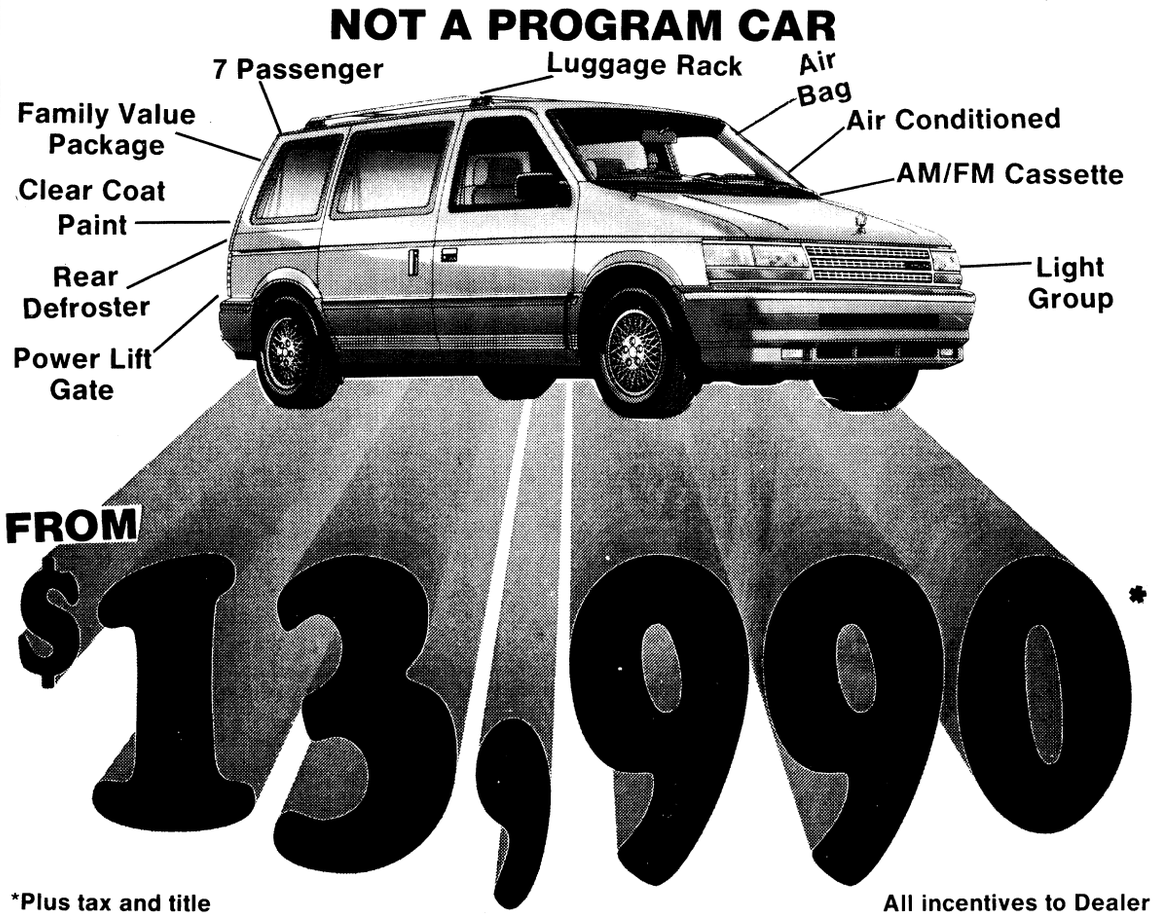
Submit a slogan, you may win $100

By James C. Rupp
Bayonet staff writer

A crime prevention slogan contest is being sponsored by Fort Benning's Crime Prevention Quality Improvement Team. The contest began July 26.

The Military Police Activity is collecting the slogans, and the Sergeants Major Association is providing a $100 cash prize for the winning slogan.



According to Capt. Richard Gregory, chief of the Military Police Law Enforcement Division, people all over post are encouraged to create a slogan, theme or phrase that will make people more aware of what they can do to help prevent crime on post.

The winner of the contest will receive $100, compliments of the Sergeants Major Association.

"This is a way to get the community involved with what is going on across the post," Gregory said. "This is their community, and the best way to protect it is to get their help."

Participants may send entries to the Crime Prevention Section at the Military Police Activity.

Using portable computer workstations, our field appraisers have direct access to claims information from anywhere in the U.S.. So, they're able to provide members with accurate damage assessment and repair cost appraisals within minutes of seeing your car. As a result, repairs start sooner, saving you time and money. What's more, in most cases, they can issue a check right on the spot. That's how fast and simple we make it. But, that's exactly what our members have come to expect. So whatever your needs—insurance, investments, banking or merchandise—you can count on USAA to provide the very best. Because at USAA, service is our first order of business.

MPs on lookout for motorcycle, moped violators

Military Police Activity

Motorcycle and moped operators had better adhere to the letter of the law, effective immediately.

According to Staff Sgt. Anthony Greer of the Military Police Activity's Traffic Section, the Military Police will begin to fully enforce Army Regulation 385-55 in regards to motorcycle operations on Fort Benning, effective immediately.

Greer said to operate a motorcycle or a moped on post, an individual will have to complete an Army approved motorcycle safety course, receive a motorcycle defensive driving card and wear an approved Department of Transportation helmet, proper eye protection, full-fingered gloves, long trousers, long-sleeved shirt or jacket, high visibility garments (bright color for day and retroreflective for night) and leather boots or over the ankle shoes.

Proper eye protection includes clear goggles or a face shield attached to the helmet. A motorcycle or moped windshield is not considered proper eye protection, Greer said.

All motorcycles or mopeds operated on the installation must also be equipped with two rear-view mirrors (one on each side).

Greer said personnel found to be not in compliance will be cited, and the citation will be forwarded to the individual's commander for appropriate action.

Defense Dept. OKs leave accrual

By Brian C. Sutton
Bayonet staff writer

A special leave accrual program has been approved for military members whose duty in support of Operations Desert Shield and Desert Storm prevented them from taking leave.

Secretary of Defense Dick Cheney approved the special leave accrual for military members, both deployed and non-deployed, whose duties in support of Operation Desert Shield and Desert Storm prevented them from reducing their leave balance and who lost leave at the end of fiscal year 1990, according to a recent message from Fort Benning's Adjutant General's office.

Due to continuing operations in Southwest Asia, special leave accrual may be appropriate for certain soldiers at the end of this fiscal year.

Federal law permits special leave accrual under two narrowly defined conditions. These conditions are that the accrual is for soldiers who are entitled to special pay for duty subject to hostile fire for at least 120 consecutive days and for soldiers who are deployed for contingency reasons that preclude their taking leave. Both conditions apply to operations in Southwest Asia.

Public Law and Department of Defense directive provide relief to soldiers who meet all of the following conditions:

- Deployed for a lengthy period away from home station
- Deployed to meet contingency operations of the United States.
- Deployed to enforce national policy of an international agreement based on a national emergency or in the need to defend the national security.
- Deployed status precluded the soldier from taking leave through the end of the fiscal year.

Each provision must be met before leave accrual may be approved. All provisions may not apply to those who have redeployed to their home station and have sufficient time remaining in this fiscal year to use accrued leave.

Soldiers who remain in Southwest Asia during most of the fourth quarter of this fiscal year would meet all of the requirements to be granted leave accrual.

Soldiers authorized special leave accrual may accumulate, by law, up to 90 days leave, which includes the normal 60 days allowed for leave, and an additional 30 days leave under the accrual plan.

According to officials at the AG office, commanders are encouraged to grant soldiers who have redeployed as much leave as possible to prevent them from losing leave at the end of the fiscal year.

Roads to close

The following roads will be closed daily between 8 a.m. and 4 p.m. Saturday and Sunday, Aug. 30 and 31 and Sept. 7 to permit live firing of weapons:

- Buena Vista Road between Hourglass and Box Springs Road
- Ressca Road between Underwood Road and Buena Vista Road
- Box Springs Road north of Buena Vista Road to the intersection of Cactus Road.

The divisions of General Motors are proud of America's Armed Forces.

That's why from now until the end of the year, your Chevrolet, Pontiac, Oldsmobile, Buick, Cadillac and GMC Truck dealers are offering a Special Military Program to all active U.S. Military personnel and reservists called to active duty during the Persian Gulf War or their spouses.

Under the program, you get three hundred dollars in down-payment assistance, plus any additional down payment you make is matched up to five hundred dollars when you buy a new GM car or light truck and finance it through GMAC. That can mean as much as eight hundred dollars toward your purchase. Add that to existing GM incentives, and you can save even more. The Special Military Program is not available with the college graduate, first-time buyer or overseas vehicle purchase programs. See your participating GM dealer for qualification details.

Many of your comrades in arms have already taken advantage of the GM Special Military Program. So visit your GM dealer today, and see how much we appreciate your efforts.

Rangers hold open house

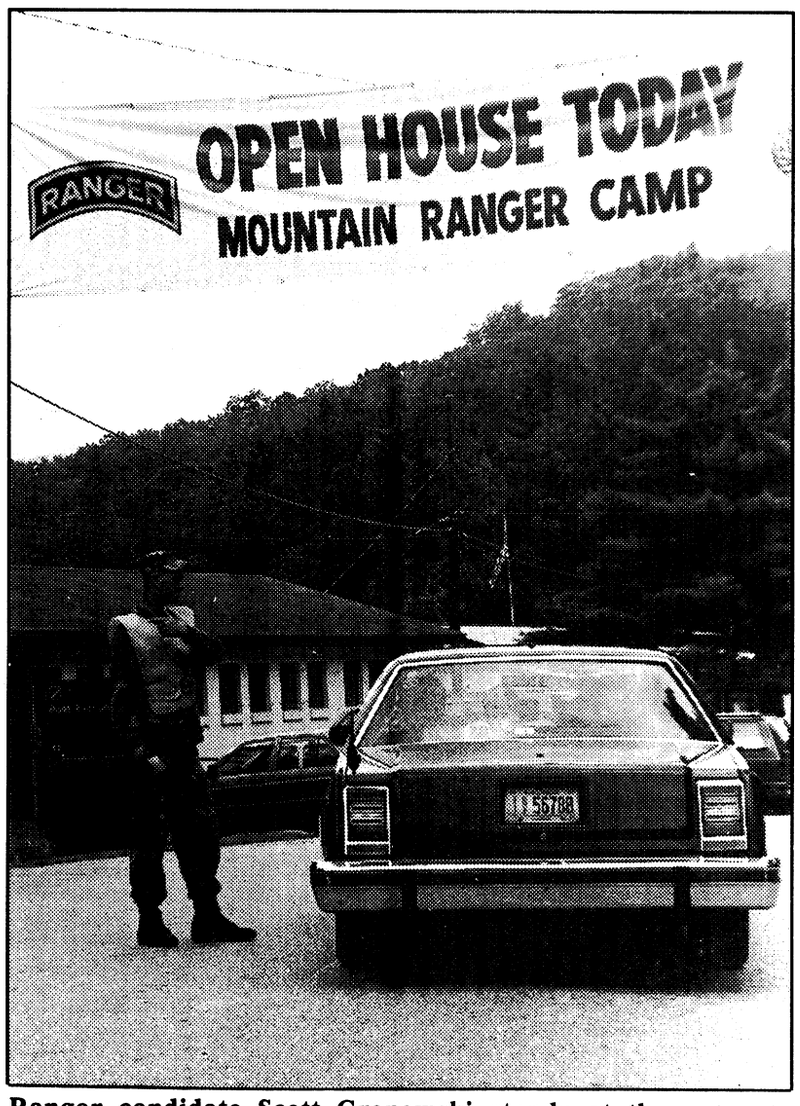
By James C. Rupp
Bayonet staff writer

The 5th Ranger Training Battalion's open house was Saturday at Camp Frank D. Merrill in Dahlonega, Ga.

The event, held to familiarize the public with the battalion and some of its operations, was an all-day project with stands, a few games and demonstrations.

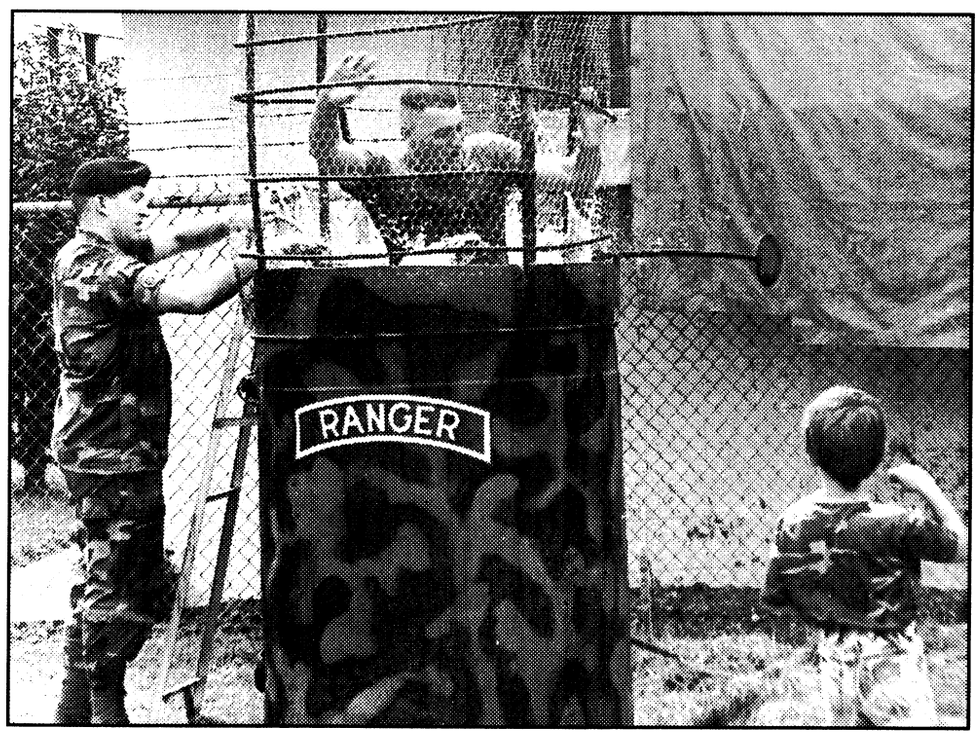
Members of the training cadre participated in a dunk tank where soldiers and civilians spent $1 for three softballs in an attempt to plunge the target into a tub of cold water.

The rangers also set up displays on high-altitude, low opening, scuba and first-aid, field medicine, and they had a "slide-for-life" scaled down for children.



Hamburgers, hot dogs, lemonade and sodas were available from the Dahlonega Jaycees Association. The rangers also set up mountaineering exhibitions, ranger field tactics demonstrations, and the Silver Wings were flown up from Fort Benning for a jump demonstration.

A UH-60 Blackhawk helicopter used by the Silver Wings jump team was also used for a helicopter insertion demonstration by members of the battalion.



After dropping off the rangers in front of the crowd on the landing strip, the pilots of the blackhawk, Chief Warrant Officer Michael C. Bozich and Warrant Officer John A. Brotzman wowed the audience with several high-speed, low-altitude treetop fly-bys, bringing cheers and applause from the onlookers.

Columbus Stars keep on shining

Team trounces Cowboys 31-0

Columbus Stars

The Stars were shining in Columbus Saturday night even though most of the area experienced strong thunderstorms.

Columbus Memorial Stadium was the site of the contest between the Columbus Stars vs. the Chattanooga Cowboys — the Stars' won 31-0.

The bright and shining Stars included 12 soldiers and two military family members. The team is Columbus's new entry in the Minor League Professional Football League of the Southern Football League.

The scoring started early for the Stars with just under 10 minutes left in the first quarter. Gerard Thompson, Stars' tailback, made a sweep to his left and broke free for a 46-yard touchdown run.

In the second quarter, the Stars' fullback, Robert Mitchell, found a hole and scored the second touchdown. Mitchell was playing his last game with the Stars, he will soon be reporting to Fort Valley Junior College on a football scholarship.

Later in the second quarter, Andrico Carter, the Stars' wide receiver, returned a 55-yard punt for a touchdown. Carter's run was nullified by a clipping penalty against the Stars.

The Stars new field goal kicker, Vernon Loree Jr, was given his first chance to score and a kick from the 28-yard line put the Stars on top at halftime 17-0. Loree is the son of Staff Sgt. Vernon Loree and will be reporting to Georgia Southern's football team in September.

The second half started off with Tyrone Walker, the Stars' quarterback, working the ball down the field and throwing a pass to Andrico Carter for a 34-yard touchdown. The final score came in the last part of the fourth quarter, when Stars' fullback, Henry Wilson, broke through the line for the fourth touchdown which resulted in the 31-0 victory against the Cowboys.

The Stars' kicker, Vernon Loree, was perfect for the night converting on all four extra points. The defense held the Cowboys to 17 yards rushing. Leading in tackles for the Stars were Willie Hill and David Lilly.

The Stars will be saying goodbye to another player, Leroy Mahaffey, whose wife is in the Army and has been re-assigned to Germany.

The Stars play again Saturday against the North Clayton Eagles at 8 p.m. in Columbus' Memorial Stadium on Victory Drive. This night is being sponsored by Foxie 105 Radio and they will be conducting a football passing contest at half time with prizes.

On Aug. 24, the Stars will be playing in Phenix City's Garrett Stadium (just off the North Bypass) against one of Georgia's all-time powerhouse teams, the Gwinnet County Cougars. Game time is 8 p.m.

Tickets may be purchased by military members and their family at the gate (must show I.D. card) for $1 off the regular ticket price. For more information on group rates call Jim Anthony at 322-0601.

Money: Good or bad?

By Robert D. Hester Jr.
4th Battery, 41st Field Artillery Chaplain

Reflections
Reflections

Money!

How many times have you said to yourself, "If I only had a few more bucks!" Most of us have uttered those words at one time or another. Money is the driving force behind our economy. It influences our plans and dreams for the future. And yet, I sometimes feel like we put too much emphasis on the role that money plays in our lives.

Now don't get me wrong, I am not against having nice things or being smart with the money that God has given us. But, a materialistic society breeds materialistic priorities that are often in conflict with the priorities of God's Word.

I was reminded of this conflict recently as I watched a new 4x4 roar down Victory Drive. On the back of this vehicle was a bumper sticker that read "He Who Has The Most Toys Wins!" Was I supposed to feel like a "loser" as I puttered along in my '81 Plymouth Reliant station wagon?

Fortunately, the beacon of God's Word knifes through the fog of misplaced priorities and with penetrating clarity puts life, money and the use of wealth in proper perspective. In speaking with his disciples, Jesus challenged their thinking about money when he said, "Does a person gain anything if he gains everything the world has to offer but loses his own soul? Of course not!" (Mark 8:36)

As Christians who reside in an affluent society, it is very easy to become more concerned about what we have rather than what we are. In earlier, simpler times, we would love people and use things. Now, sadly, as money grips our priorities and bends our thinking, we sometimes love things and use people.

Perhaps we should break out of the mold of materialism and be content with what we have, whether it be much or little. Remember, God's way and his perspective is always different from the world's. The world system says "Buy, sell, get, gain, and acquire," but God said "He who is generous will be blessed, for he gives some of his food to the poor." (Prov. 22:9)

If you are a Christian caught on the treadmill of chasing after more, pray about your attitude toward possessions. Be honest with God and yourself. Ask Him to change your perspective and priorities. Pray for a generous spirit that is willing to help others who are suffering lack and hardship. Ask God what you can do to help.

And by the way, you can laugh all you want at my '81 Plymouth Reliant station wagon as I putter down Victory Drive, but I don't have car payments, do you?

Group addresses family separation

By Gabriele Sonnenberg
USAIC Chaplains' Office

The Family Life Center is offering a support group for individuals who are involuntarily separated.

The group addresses issues those who are separated face such as coping with anger, loneliness and depression. The group discusses how to keep the relationship alive, how to cope as a single parent and how to listen and love over a distance.

Presently, the group is small, but the members agree that there is a demand for such a group and are hoping that it will grow. According to the participants of the last session, the time was spent well. They expressed the desire to "get the word out" to attract more people.

A booklet, published by the American Family Society, is given to each participant. The booklet provides several principles on how to help military families deal with duty separations and reunions. It contains a calendar, which can be used as a "short-timer" calendar, to count the remaining days of the separation, Chaplain (Maj.) Rick Roggia said.

Loneliness, if dealt with properly, can help by spurring us on to take a fresh look at ourselves and to grow, the group facilitator said, adding that it is not easy to cope with various anxieties, but after realizing it is temporary and normal to feel hurt the healing process can begin.

The group facilitators realize that the best time to intercept loneliness is at its beginning.

"If you are a married woman with young children and a busy husband who is your only adult source of emotional fulfillment and attachment," said Dr. Letitia Anne Peplau, social psychologist, "chances are you are lonely because you need more than a love relationship — you also need friends to sustain you." Dr. Peplau added, "It's very important, not to neglect your friends and to replace friends you lose."

The group accepts new members at any time. There is no cost and baby-sitting is not available. It meets each Wednesday from noon until 1:30 p.m. at the Family Life Center, building 2606, Soldiers' Plaza. For more information, call 545-1760 or 545-5301.

'Navigators' fish for souls

USAIC Chaplains' Office

When you hear the word "navigator," one vision that may come to mind is that of ex-crewmen who flew bombing missions during World War II.

Actually, the Navigators is an international, non-denominational, evangelical ministry committed to bringing people together and closer to God. "They strip away the thin veneer of religious talk and plant roots deep in the Christian walk," says Charles Swindoll, author and speaker on the "Insight for Living" radio broadcast..

The Navigators began in southern California in 1933, when founder Dawson Trotman taught sailors how to grow in their Christian faith.

During World War II, Navigator Bible study groups spread to other ships and military bases. In 1949, the first missionary was sent to China. Now, more than 40 years later, there are hundreds of short-term and career missionaries aboard.

In 1951, the Navigator outreach was extended to college campuses; and in 1971, the Navigators extended their ministry to the community.

Today, in almost 70 countries, Navigator staff minister through local churches, on military bases and college campuses, and in homes and work places.

Navigators teach on a one-on-one basis and in small groups. They reach people through spiritual multiplication: "What you have heard from me. . .entrust to faithful men who will be able to teach others also." (II Timothy 2:2) This specialized training seems to produce a special kind of Christian — a laborer who has learned to study the Bible, have a daily devotional time, develop a deepening prayer life, articulate one's faith to family and friends, and invest his life in discipling another, according to members.

Navigator staff members on hundreds of U.S. college campuses spend time with students, helping them to get closer to God before they launch their careers.

Military services seem to surface a person's spiritual needs. Young adults are away from home for the first time; families are strained by extended separations caused by duty assignments; combat soldiers face danger and terrorism — even death.

The Navigators support base chaplains at various locations in America, Europe and the Far East.

Anyone interested in the Navigator program should contact the Kelley Hill Chapel, 544-3070.

Soldiers bring laughs to post

Kelly Hill Recreation Center hosts first Comedy Cow Amateur Show

By Alyanna B. Clay-Heard
Bayonet staff writer

What do car keys, cowbells, big laughs and loud moos have in common?

The Comedy Cow Amateur Show!

The first Comedy Cow Amateur Hour was Saturday from 7 to 9 p.m. at the Kelley Hill Recreation Center.

Three original Fort Benning acts braved the "big stage" to entertain the community.

Papa Doc, the original "brother man from the motherland," was on hand to provide first-line laughs and MC the occasion.

The rap group "Total Impact," made up of the soldiers from Kelley Hill, performed a song called "Doggie Style" that left nothing to the imagination.

Spc. Kevin Majors with the 2nd Mobile Army Surgical Hospital treated the crowd to his brand of comical stylings. Majors has performed at several other Fort Benning functions.

Making his stand-up comedy debut, Pvt. 2 Kevin King of 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor Regiment, made a good attempt to humor a testy audience.

The event will be held again Sept. 7 at 7p.m. at the Kelley Hill Recreation Center, said Jackie Clark, coordinator of the event.

> "If we can draw soldiers here, it mightentice them away from unpleasant situations that could occur off post
> — Jackie Clark

"We just wanted to have an event here to encourage soldiers to use the facility," said Clark. "We want soldiers and family members to feel comfortable and enjoy themselves here. Also, if we can draw soldiers here, it might entice them away from unpleasant situations that could occur off post," said Clark.

"I just wanted to give it a shot," said King. "I was really nervous, but I figured,'Why not?'," King added.

For more information on upcoming Comedy Cow Amateur Shows or other recreational activities, contact Clark at 544-2770 any Wednesday through Friday after noon.

Civic group needs tutors

Communities of Southeast Columbus

The Combined Communities of Southeast Columbus is an organizaticn designed to enhance the promotional growth of its residents through education, politics and civic functions throughout the entire city.

The organization was founded by Lonnie Jackson, a retired Army sergeant, in December of 1982. In June 1983, the organization established its first Annual Summer Tutorial Program.

The program operates on an all-volunteer platform of local administrators, teachers, individuals, sororities, fraternities, and college and high school students. Many volunteers represent the adjacent counties and the Fort Benning school system.

The tutorial program was originally set up to meet the basic needs of students in grades second through eighth in reading and math. Since its inception, the program has served more than 3,000 students.

More than 350 qualified teachers and 1,000 aides have made the program possible, according to Jackson.

CCSC is asking for volunteers from all segments of the community for its year-round program.

CCSC Volunteer School Year Tutorial Program will start Sept. 7 at Eastway School on Buena Vista Road across from Wal-Mart. Each instructor will be asked to tutor for one, two, three or four weeks on Saturdays from 10 a.m. to noon. Instruction will be core-type education, second through eighth grade. An aide is defined as a high school graduate, seniors, juniors and college students. Teachers are needed in reading, math, science and other fields.

For further information, contact Jackson at 687-5357 or Daisy Honor at 687-8808.

F.Y.I.

ASK THE JUDGE

By Capt. Evelyn Britt
Staff Judge Advocate's Office

Q. Last week, as I was walking to my front door, I was approached by a man dressed in an oversized raincoat and hat. In a low voice he said, "psst, hey lady, wanna buy some magazines?" Immediately, he flashed me dozens of beautiful glossy magazines hidden underneath his raincoat. Well, I'm a fool for magazines, so I immediately invited him in. He told me that he represented a magazine publisher, and overcome by his suave sales pitch, I soon signed a contract for thousands of dollars worth of magazines. The very next day, when I came to my senses, I realized I didn't want or need the magazines. Do you think I can plead insanity? My neighbor told me that I could have canceled the contract within three days and would owe nothing. Is that true?

A. First, the Judge must note that inviting this raincoated gentleman into your home was unwise, at best. And although insanity is a defense that would void the contract, I don't think your love of glossies qualifies. But your neighbor is correct. When you buy something at a store and later change your mind, you may not be able to return the merchandise. But the Federal Trade Commission's Cooling-Off Rule gives you three days to cancel purchases of $25 or more if you buy an item in your home or at a location that is not the seller's regular place of business.

Much like the FTC's Cooling-Off Rule, the Georgia Home Sales Act provides that a consumer may cancel a contract by midnight of the third business day following a sale, if the seller was away from his home or principal place of business at the time of sale.

Under the Cooling-Off Rule and the Georgia Home Sales Act, the salesperson must inform you of your cancellation rights at the time of the sale. The salesperson also must give you two copies of a cancellation form (one to keep and one to send) and a copy of your contract or receipt. The contract or receipt should be dated, show the name and address of the seller, and explain your right to cancel. You can cancel the sale within these three days for any reason, even if it is just because you changed your mind.

Because the sale took place in your home, the Georgia Home Sales Act applies. To cancel the sale, sign and date one copy of the cancellation form. Then mail it to the address given on the form before midnight of the third business day. Business days are considered to be Monday through Friday. So if the sale took place on Friday, you would have until midnight, and not the date of receipt, applies.

I would suggest that you send the cancellation notice certified mail, and keep a copy of the notice and the certification. The seller must then cancel and return any papers you signed within 10 days, refund your money, and tell you whether the magazines left with you will be picked up.

While it may already be too late to cancel your magazine contract, if you were not given the forms to cancel, you should contact the FTC. As a final word of advice, always be sure to read your contract carefully before signing anything.

If you have any questions, contact the legal assistance division at the Office of the Staff Judge Advocate, located in building 5 on Vibbert Street, for an appointment. The phone number is 545-3282 or 545-3281.

Motorcycle riders must be physically fit

Infantry Branch Safety Office

Some people would say the best motorcycle safety tip is not to get on one of the mechanical beasts in the first place. "Buy your kid a motorcycle for his last birthday," sums up that attitude.

But the sense of freedom of riding in the open, feeling every bump and turn in the road, attracts more people every year to the joy and challenge of motorcycle riding. A lot of these people are in the military. Unfortunately, each year, many of them lose their lives in motorcycle accidents.

During this fiscal year, two Fort Benning soldiers have been killed and five injured in motorcycle accidents. The direct cost of the government was $338,749. Although the accidents occurred to personnel from several units, the circumstances were basically the same — loss of control of the motorcycle.

"A motorcyclist has to be more skilled, more physically fit, more coordinated, and more alert to ride safely than does an automobile driver," said Biff Morris of the Motorcycle Safety Foundation.

Sixty percent of all motorcycle accidents involve riders with less than a year's experience. The way to get that experience more safely and quickly is by attending a motorcycle Defensive Driving Course.

Prior to registering a two-wheeled vehicle on Fort Benning, motorcycle owners must complete this course. It is offered one Saturday a month, on a walk-in basis. For additional information, call the Infantry Branch Safety Office, 545-3267.

Riding motorcycles can be a lot of fun — but it can also end in tragedy. Whenever an accident involves a motorcycle and another vehicle, the motorcyclist is usually injured more severely than the vehicle occupants. It is important for motorcyclists to develop safe motorcycle operating habits and to follow established safety procedures. It is a matter of life or death.

Riding Tips

- Check your tires, brakes, and lights every day.
- Always hear a helmet. Make sure it fits properly and is in good condition.
- Wear protective gear: gloves, boots, long sleeves, helmet with eye protection, and a reflective vest.
- Keep your lights on day and night; it helps other drivers see you.
- Be especially alert during the first half hour of riding — this is when 90 percent of all motorcycle accidents happen.
- Never weave in traffic or pass between two cars.
- Stay our of the blind spots of other vehicles.
- Use your turn signals. Let others know what you plan to do.

our HERITAGE

Mint Condition

Americans are fascinated with coins — the jingle of change in their pockets, the sound of coins dropping in their piggy banks or the coppery glow of a jar full of saved pennies. But the U.S. coins we know today have experienced many "changes" throughout history.

When Congress passed the Mint Act in 1792, it changed the United States' monetary system from colonial-day bartering into a sophisticated operation monitored by the federal government.

The site of the original U.S. Mint was an old, abandoned, wood-framed whiskey distillery in Philadelphia. Initially, the mint was placed under the control of the State Department, headed by Thomas Jefferson. However, in 1799, Congress made the mint an independent agency.

In 1873, Congress changed the name of the mint from "Ye Olde Mint" to the Bureau of the Mint, which remained its name for more than 100 years. And just recently, in 1984, Congress again changed the name to what we know it as today — the U.S. Mint.

The primary mission of the mint is to produce the United States' circulating coins. The production of early coins was divided into three groups of precious metals: gold, silver and copper. Just as everything else evolves in a society, so did certain denominations of coins. The gold quarter eagle, the silver half-dime and the copper half-cent are no longer circulated in American currency. Paper currency has replaced the $10 and $5 equivalent of the gold coin. However, the silver coins in circulation that carried values of 25 cents and 10 cents remain in the monetary system today.

When Congress specified the denominations of coins for circulation, it also specified that "an impression emblematic of liberty and the word 'liberty'" must appear on the coins. Thus, early coins depicted a figure of liberty as a symbol of American independence.

President Theodore Roosevelt decided to redesign American coins, and in 1906, he commissioned the famous sculptor Augustus St. Gaudens to do so. St. Gaudens' designs displayed Roman numerals for dates and the American eagle in flight over the sun.

In 1909, the mint broke with George Washington's tradition of not having famous leaders appear on coinage. The profiles of famous historical figures emerged on the faces of the coins, and the reverse sides displayed illustrations reminiscent of scenes from the Greek or Roman empires. Such coins include the Lincoln penny, instituted in 1909; the Washington quarter, 1932; the Jefferson nickel, 1938; and the Roosevelt dime, 1946.

1964 marked the mint's production of a special-collection coin with the John F. Kennedy half-dollar, and the Susan B. Anthony dollar was distributed in 1979. In addition, the mint has produced coins commemorating the 200th celebration of Congress and other special events of significance.

Today, Philadelphia, Pa.; Denver, Colo.; San Francisco, Calif.; Fort Knox, Ky.; and West Point, N.Y., are locations of U.S. mint operations, with the agency headquarters stationed in Washington, D.C. Each year, several billion shiny, new coins roll off the coin-stamping machines at these operations and into the pockets of millions of Americans across the nation.

ENERGY WATCH

By Jenny L. McRae
Energy Branch

Georgia Power Company gives us examples of ways to practice good habits and save energy. The best ways to really conserve energy actually cost very little, according to the officials.

The kitchen and laundry room are places for conservation. Run the dishwasher less often.

Wait for a full load before turning it on and then let the dishes dry without heat.

Wait until early morning or evening to bake, bathe, run your dishwasher or operate other appliances which add heat and humidity to the house.

Try a warm water wash and cold water rinse in the laundry, or use one of the new all-temperature detergents that allow use with cold water on both cycles. Also, one load of laundry uses less energy than two smaller loads.

Use cold water when operating your waste disposal.

Keep all windows and doors leading to the outside, as well as closet doors, closed when the cooling or heating system is running.

Use low-watt light bulbs in areas where bright lighting is not required.

Use shades, drapes or blinds to reduce sunlight and keep home cooler in the summer. They also help hold heat inside in the winter.

Energy conservation translates into money saved and the best way to save energy dollars is to conserve energy.

Conserving energy doesn't have to mean doing with less comfort. Conserving energy is making better use of the energy paid for by our tax dollars.

Save energy — it's the smart thing to do.

Meloy Hall set to open in Jan.

Building will house administrative offices

By James E. Baker
Contributing writer

Building 6, currently under construction adjacent to Infantry Hall, building 4 on Main Post, has been officially named Meloy Hall in honor of Gen. Guy Stanley Meloy Jr., a Distinguished Service Cross recipient.

Tentatively scheduled for completion on Jan. 1, the four-story building will provide space for administrative offices, according to Kenneth Holloway, chief of the Master Planning Branch.

He added that a formal ceremony dedicating the administrative facility will be held before occupancy in mid-January.

"The directorates of Civilian Personnel, Contracting, Supply and Services Division of the Directorate of Logistics and Engineering and Housing will occupy the building, " said Holloway Meloy has ties to Fort Benning.

Commissioned in the Infantry branch in 1927, he was the assistant commandant of the U.S. Army Infantry Center in 1951 to 1953 and the commandant of the U.S. Army Infantry School in 1953 to 1954. Earlier stints on post included administration in 1935 to 1938 and staff and faculty in 1939 to 1941.

Construction to block parking lot

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Construction of a new parking lot for Meloy Hall, building 6, will block and remove some spaces in Infantry Hall's west parking lot beginning Monday.

According to Jack Cook, chief of the Office of Engineering, Corps of Engineers, the west parking lot for Building 4 will be partially blocked from the Riordon Street entrance.

"We will tear out some curbs and gutters, and one whole lane of spaces will be removed," said Cook.

Cook said signs will be posted to remind motorists, and construction should last approximately six weeks.

Lessons learned

Special Forces recruiters are coming to Fort Benning Tuesday

Fort Bragg Public Affairs Office

FORT BRAGG, N.C. — If you have ever considered joining the Green Berets, but didn't know what the procedures were, what the prerequisites were and what options were open, then the Special Forces recruiters coming to Fort Benning would like to talk to you.

Special Forces recruiters will meet with potential volunteers every Tuesday at 10 a.m. and 1 p.m., in Building 2624, Soldiers' Plaza.

Applications are being accepted in four areas: weapons sergeant, 18B; engineer sergeant, 18C; medical sergeant, 18D; and communications sergeant, 18E.

Qualified soldiers who volunteer could fill training slots still open in January.

Enlisted soldiers, sergeant to sergeant first class may apply for any of the four skill areas regardless of their current military occupational speciality.

Specialists may apply for medical sergeant with no medical experience or for communications sergeant with no signal experience.

The U.S. Army John F. Kennedy Special Warfare Center and School at Fort Bragg will send soldiers who have not attended airborne school or the Primary Leadership Development Course to those schools upon selection.

WHO: Special Forces recruiters

WHAT: Coming to Fort Benning

WHEN: Tuesday, 10 a.m. and 1 p.m.

WHERE: Soldiers' Plaza, building 2624

INFORMATION: (404) 685-0977.

Soldiers who would like to expedite their processing time may take the Special Forces physical at their troop medical clinic and bring the results to the briefing, along with DA Forms 2-1 and 2A.

The swim test is administered every Thursday.

For more information about the Special Forces career field, male soldiers should contact the Special Forces recruiting team at Fort Benning at (404) 685-0977.

Post to participate in Operation Clean Shore

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Fort Benning will participate in Operation Clean Shore Sept. 9 to 11.

This a joint "police call" between Georgia, Alabama and the post involving volunteers.

The purpose is to clean up the Chattahoochee River shore line from Lake Eufaula up to Lake Oliver.

Fort Benning will police from Uchee Creek up to Upatoi Creek, on the Georgia side of the river.

Fort Benning was unable to participate in this project last year because of Operations Desert Shield and Desert Storm.

According to Fort Benning officials, it is important we do our best to attain solid participation this year and show we are good neighbors committed to help ensure a clean environment.

Individuals or groups wishing to volunteer for one or more days should contact Capt. Pernell Staudt in the Public Affairs Office at 545-2238.

Army to field new Common Task Test

By Elroy Garcia
Army News Service

Army sergeants will have to prove they know more than just the basics when the new Common Task Test is fielded Oct. 1.

"Progressive and sequential" is how officials describe the revised test, which will evaluate sergeants, staff sergeants and sergeants first class on leadership skills and other tasks consistent with their skill levels. The current CTT consists solely of skill level 1 tasks.

"As it is now, there are no common leader tasks tested in the CTT, so you have a sergeant first class taking the same test as a private," said James Tripp, deputy director of the Individual Training Evaluation Directorate, U.S. Army Training Support Center at Fort Eustis, Va.

The change is part of an non-commissioned officer leader Development Action Plan approved by the Army chief of staff in October 1989.

The plan includes 18 recommendations — 10 of which have already been implemented — to "ensure the continued professional growth of the NCO Corps," according to Sgt. Maj. Ruby Withers of the Leader Development Office at Fort Leavenworth, Kan.

Sergeants first class and below have been taking the annual Common Task Test since 1984.

Beginning in fiscal 1992, non-commissioned officers will be tested on the same 12 skill level one tasks as junior enlisted soldiers, plus two additional tasks for each level of responsibility.

Trainers from the major Army commands and the National Training Center at Fort Irwin, Calif., select the CTT tasks based on skills that they deem most critical to their particular mission and to battlefield survival, and on weaknesses demonstrated during annual rotations through the NTC, said Tripp.

Their selections are then compiled and released by the Training and Doctrine Command.

As in the past, administration and evaluation of the CTT will be conducted either during collective training or at stations set up specifically for CTT testing. Whenever possible, leaders should incorporate CTT evaluations into field exercises, and for maximum effectiveness leader tasks also should be evaluated in a field training environment, Tripp said.

Officials say while there is no direct link between CTT and promotion or retention, commanders often consider a soldier's performance on the CTT test when preparing NCO Evaluation Reports.

Foss receives 'Chief of Infantry Chair'

USAIC Public Affairs Office

The commander of the Training and Doctrine Command, Gen. John W. Foss, received the "Chief of Infantry Chair" Aug. 15. Maj. Gen. Carmen J. Cavezza, Fort Benning commander, presented the award.

Foss was Fort Benning commander and chief of infantry from March 29, 1984 to Jan. 7, 1986.

Foss, who is retiring at the end of the month, is relinquishing his command today.

He will be succeeded as TRADOC commander by Gen. Frederick M. Franks Jr., former VII Corps commander in Europe.

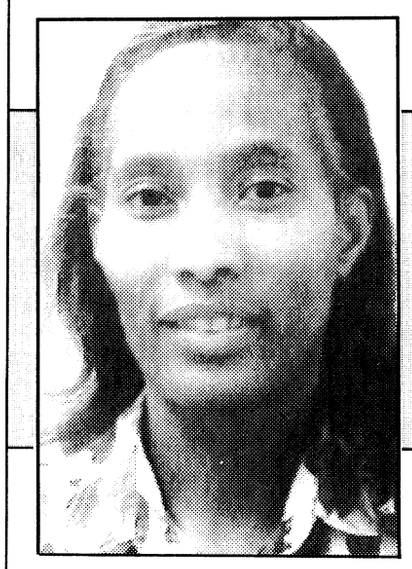
VARIOUS VOICES:

Do you believe that all-male or all-female organizations hinder equality between the sexes?

Sgt. Julio Maisonet, Company D, 1st Battalion 18th Infantry Regiment — "The paperwork says so. I believe we are a male-dominated society where men have more rights, and the women are forced to obey and cannot become equal. I think women should be able to excel if they have the training and knowledge."



Marcie Busdiecker, family member — "No. Just because they are different sexes, I don't believe that one ever hinders the other one."

Spc. Richard C. O'Neil, Company E, 2nd Battalion, 18th Infantry Regiment — "On certain occasions, it could hinder women. But I can't see a woman playing on an all-male baseball team. Females have certain jobs they (can) do better than men, and men have different jobs (they can do."

Jane Tieken, family member — "I don't think it hinders one sex or the other. You need to separate the sexes on (certain) occasions. As far as girls in the Boy Scouts, I don't go for that. Perhaps I'm old-fashioned."

Melissa Wilson, civilian employee — "No, I don't believe that one-gender groups hinder equality. There are some things that men are more capable of doing than women."

Axtion Jaxtion cruisin' down the road

By Clyde Snively
Bayonet columnist

COMMENTARY

It's no secret, Axtion Jaxtion is my hero.

And why shouldn't he be. He's a senior sergeant (he's getting his cherry Enlisted Evaluation Report this week), he "smoked" his first private for a uniform violation, he's made five jumps out of perfectly good airplanes and he takes physical training with airborne classes because, he says, the public affairs office weenies don't give him a good workout (Ranger Doug says it's because he wants to run at a slow pace).

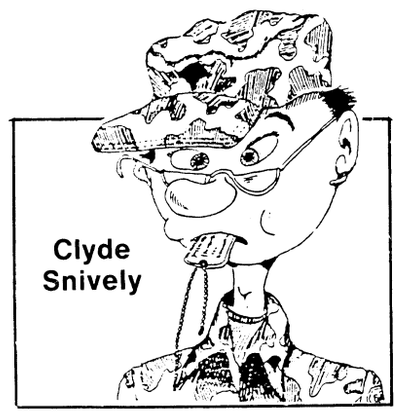
He's also my hero because he has more toys than any other soldier I know.

I think he gets copies of every "sell it to the military sucker" catalog printed. While he hasn't bought any of the posters yet, he does own nearly everything else you find in their pages.

But now that his barracks room is stacked to the ceiling with the latest in stereo equipment, computers, cellular telephones, etc., he's turned to stocking his Ranger pickup truck (Ranger Doug says the pickup is the closest he'll ever get to being in the rangers).

First, Axtion was content with "enhancing" the appearance of the vehicle. He installed a plastic flap on the hood to deflect bugs(?), got a tonneau to cover the bed, tinted the windows and hooked up an assortment of strange antennas, to mention just the ones I can remember.

From there he went to the interior with tuck and roll upholstery, leather covering of the steering wheel and airborne booties to hang from the mirror.



Next came the toys — car telephone, citizens band radio, global positioning system, fax machine, wet bar and, of course, extra sturdy suspension and spare battery to support all this gear. Oh, I nearly forgot the airborne teddy bear he takes with him as his passenger.

Yet, he was still not through. He wanted more. So one day I went with him to the Post Exchange automotive store. He wanted to see if they had anything he didn't already have.

He almost left empty-handed. But then he got to the checkout counter and his eyes lit up. Radar detectors!

"Why didn't I think of this before?" he asked.

"Radar detectors are for criminals," I said. "You don't need one."

"Wrong-O, ink breath," he said. "Radar detectors are for people who want to make sure cops don't try to falsely nab them for speeding."

"Give me a break," I said. "They're for people who speed and want to get away with it."

"No way four-eyes. Radar detectors make safe drivers better drivers. They keep drivers alert to their surroundings. Radar detectors ensure drivers stay within the posted speed limits. Besides, if they're so immoral, why does the PX sell them?" he asked.

"The PX sells cigarettes, booze, condoms, girlie magazines and gambling devices. They're not out to legislate morals, just to make a buck," I said. "But you wanting to buy a radar detector tells me just one thing. You plan to speed, and you plan to make a habit of it."

"Well, what if I do," he said. "Everyone does."

"Not everyone, not Griff and Brad..."

"That's their problem. So what if I want to speed a little. I don't want to get caught."

"Ha!" I jumped in. "Radar detectors don't keep you from getting caught. All they do is tell some cop, 'Hey, this guy doing 75 has got a radar detector.' By the time your radar picks up the cop radar, you're done for. Besides, if they really want to nail you, most cops keep their guns turned off until they spot you speeding by all the other traffic. Then they turn their radar on and 'zap,' you're had."

I then reminded him laser guns are starting to enter the police forces in some communities and his radar detector won't help him then.

But Axtion was not to be daunted. It was a toy he didn't have, so he bought one.

So look out for a red, Ranger pickup truck. It'll be so overloaded with doodads that it'll probably be holding up traffic as it waddles down the by-pass, creating a traffic hazard.

Self-development test: Burden of study on you

By Joseph E. Whittenberger
U.S. Army Sergeants Major Academy

The Self-Development Test affects you and your continued success in the Army if you are a sergeant, staff sergeant or sergeant first class.

The SDT is a two-hour, multiple-choice test for soldiers of both active and reserve Army components.

DA will begin testing active Army non-commissioned officers in October. Testing for the reserve components will begin in October 1992.

By military occupational specialty, each sergeant, staff sergeant and sergeant first class will take the Self-Development Test to measure his or her abilities to know, comprehend and apply leadership and battle-focused doctrine.

The test will also measure non-commissioned officers ability to know, comprehend and apply published technical and tactical techniques and procedures to scenario-driven, multiple-choice questions.

The test stresses the "know yourself and seek self-improvement" principle of leadership. It is your responsibility to train yourself in the 500-plus pages of field manuals pertaining to leadership and training doctrine.

There will be no duty time or classes devoted to preparing for the test. Nor will Non-Commissioned Officer Education System and non-commissioned officer functional courses teach the Self-Development Test.

Senior non-commissioned officers cannot study for you or take duty time to train you for the test, but they can create and control the duty environment.

The Department of Army directs all non-commissioned officers to train in the military occupational specialties, the basic skills and the attributes of a soldier. These are the same things that the Self-Development Test examines.

The test reinforces the need for non-commissioned officers to apply Army doctrine to "real world" situations. As a non-commissioned officer, you must know doctrine if you are to transmit knowledge to those you lead.

Self-Development Test results for the active component will be provided to each non-commissioned officer beginning in fiscal 1992. However, the Department of Army plans will not link the results to the Enlisted Personnel Management System until fiscal 1994.

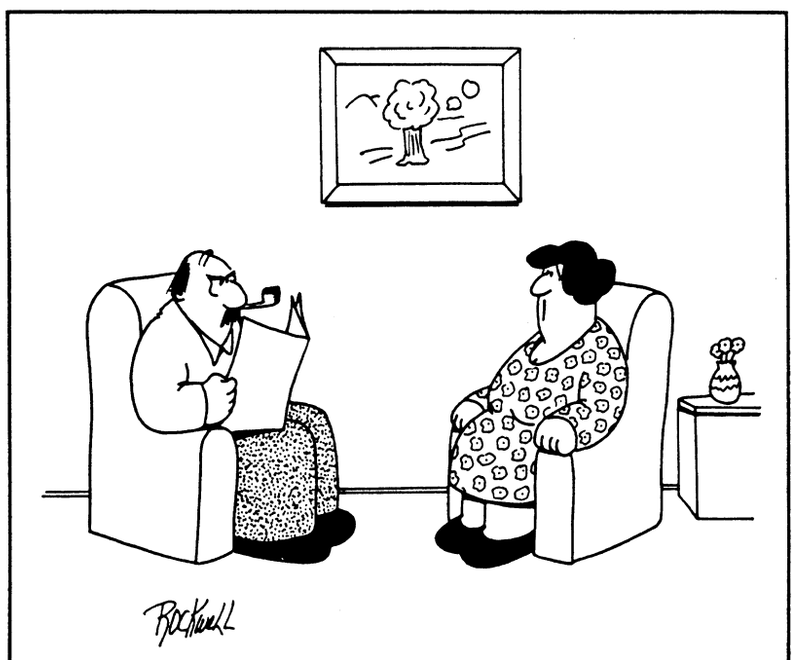
To be successful on the Self-Development Test, soldiers must read, know and apply leadership and battle-focused doctrine every day.

To prepare for testing, you must commit personal time to study.

Commanders will request, receive and distribute Field Manuals 22-100/101/102 and 25-101 within their units in time for you to study them.

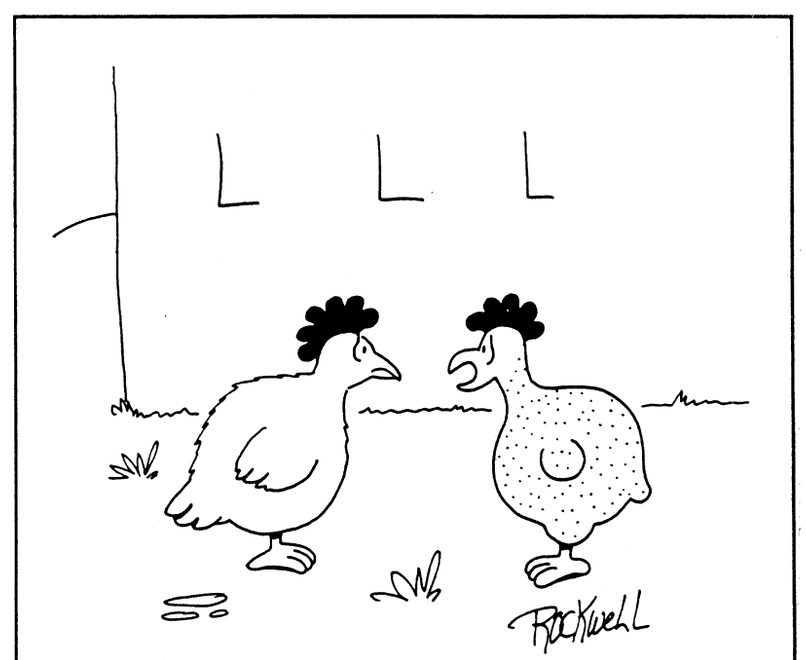
They will also schedule test dates within the Training and Doctrine Command windows based on competing unit priorities.

After the initial issue of Self-Development Test publications, each Primary Leadership Development Course graduate will be issued copies.



To ensure that testing is fair, Self-Development Test proponents are soliciting help from the field. If you feel test questions miss the mark, submit concerns through your chain of command.

Concerns on the technical and tactical portion will be forwarded to the proponent for that particular military occupational specialty.



Concerns on the leadership portion will go to the Center for Army Leadership.

Questions on battle-focused training will go to the Combined Arms Command.

Safety belts: It's the law

Infantry Branch Safety Office

Would you allow your child to play in the traffic? Is your child riding without a safety seat?. . .if so, you are.

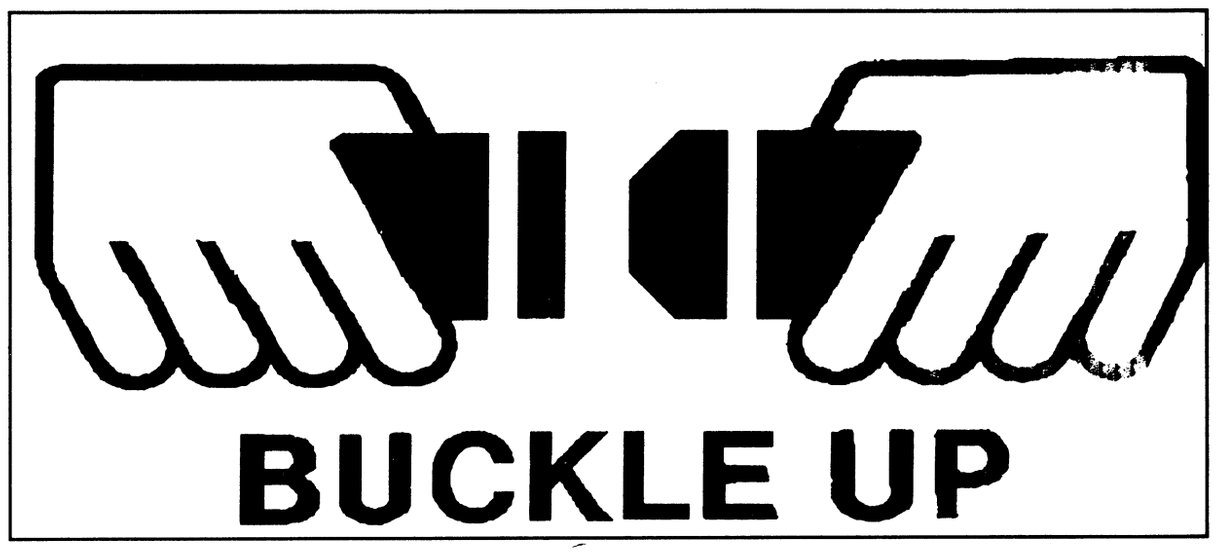
Vehicle accidents are still the number one killer of children under age 5. Every year, more than 600 children under the age of 5 die as vehicle passengers. Recently, one Fort Benning child was killed in a car accident on post.

The American Academy of Pediatricians states that the trauma suffered by children, involved in accidents, without restraint is the major cause of epilepsy and paraplegia in children.

During a sudden stop, swerve, or crash, all occupants of a motor vehicle need protection from impact with the car's interior. Restraints prevent ejection from the vehicle.

Unrestrained, infants and children are thrown around the vehicle like flying missiles. Events happen so fast. Even at low speed, quick stops, without restraint, result in violent impact against unyielding surfaces.

In a 30 mile per hour crash, a child thrown forward has a force equal to 30 times his or her own weight. That is like falling from a three-story building.



These deaths and injuries are happening even though every state requires that infants and children ride in safety seats. Used properly, safety seats keep children from hitting hard surfaces and other people. Georgia law requires children under 4 years old to be in a child restraint device.

Child restraint seats are designed to spread the force of stopping over the child's strongest body areas. Spreading this force is very important for children under 4 as they are top heavy and have softer bones.

Certified child safety seats have a label showing they meet federal safety standards. Seats differ with the age and size of the child.

Infant safety seats are used from birth to about 9 to 12 months or a weight of 20 pounds. Children face backward in infant seats. A harness built into the carrier holds the child. The carrier is fastened by the car's safety belts.

Use convertible safety seats from birth to 4 years, or a weight of 40 pounds. While infants ride backward, toddlers may be converted to forward-facing seats that they can use until they are 40 pounds, around age 4.

Toddler seats are for children who can sit up without support (20 to 43 pounds). Toddlers face forward in these seats. Approved seats of this type have a five-point harness. Some may have an adjustable shield as well.

Booster seats face forward and are used by children weighing 30-60 pounds. These seats have no back and have at least a partial shield. They elevate children so that the cars' lap belts fit across their hips and pelvic bones. Children under 55 inches tall should not wear shoulder belts.

Although child restraints can be fairly expensive, you can buy a restraint that meets federal specifications for about the price of two tanks of gas — a small price to pay for what could save your child's life.

Veterinary Services opens animal adoption facility

Post firefighters recognized for 'heroic' rescue

By Alyanna B. Clay-Heard
Bayonet staff writer

From rescuing kittens from trees to developing new facilities for post pets, Fort Benning is taking care of its furry "residents."

A new addition to Fort Benning's Veterinary Services' animal adoption facility was dedicated in a ceremony and a crew of post firefighters were also rewarded for their "heroic" rescue of the Cavezza cat, Rusty, recently.

Fort Benning Commander Maj. Gen. Carmen J. Cavezza, his wife, Joyce, and Veterinary Services Commander Col. Rick Sommers were on hand to make remarks at the ceremony.

Sommers commented on the need for proper animal control on post in his remarks, and cited many of the dangers associated with stray animals.

"We must take every precaution and every measure necessary to ensure the safety of the animals and the community as a whole," said Sommers.

Mrs. Cavezza, whose interest in the well-being of post animals led to the new of the adoption facility, gave an emotional and humorous account of how her cat was rescued by post firefighters, and how "her heart went out to stray animals, because of the conditions the animals endured between the time they arrived at the animal adoption facility and the time the animals found loving homes."

Cavezza echoed his wife's sentiments, adding that the addition to the facility was much needed.

Three members of the post's firefighting crew here were recognized by the Cavezzas for the rescue of their cat, Rusty.

Crew members Capt. Sidney J. Martin, Lt. James E. Sams, Firefighter Steve A. Tovey and Firefighter Wendell C. Price were commended for their heroic actions in saving the Cavezzas' cat, Rusty, from a tree.

"The Fort Benning firemen are the unsung heroes of our community," Mrs. Cavezza said, in reference to the rescue of her cat.

"It is also important to recognize our firemen because of the dangerous job they do," she said.

Mrs. Cavezza baked cakes for the firefighters to show her appreciation, and Cavezza awarded the firefighters with infantry coins.

Rusty, on the other hand, paced in his carrier, as if looking for another opportunity to give the firefighters a run for their money.

Vets caution some animals are carriers of disease

By James C. Rupp
Bayonet staff writer

Veterinary Services has announced that animal "mascots" brought back to the U.S. by units returning from Southwest Asia may be potential carriers of a serious disease.

According to Capt. Roy Carroll of Vet Services, animals brought along with returning units from the Saudi Arabian campaign may be the carriers of a disease known as Leishmanasis, a protozoan sickness native to tropical, subtropical and middle eastern countries, Carroll said.

The disease is carried by infected biting flies and is transferred through a bite to another host. Carroll said that the disease occurs naturally in cats, dogs, humans and other animals.

The disease has an incubation period of three to seven months once a host has been infected and is first manifested with skin problems such as hair loss, reddening of skin, scaling of the skin and ulcerations of the ears and lips, Carroll said.

Carroll said it is extremely important that all personnel who returned from the Middle East with an animal should bring the animal to Veterinary Services for examination and testing. While the disease is potentially dangerous, Carroll said it is also easily discovered through a blood test.

Deer season nears; motorists cautioned

By James E. Baker
Contributing writer

With hunting season approaching, Fort Benning's increased deer population in the hilly and wooded areas near main post poses a potential traffic hazard to motorists.

he Military Police Activity registers a monthly average of seven reported vehicle to deer accidents, according to Staff Sgt. Anthony W. Greer of the traffic accident investigation section.

He further added that the deer enter the roadway with little or no time for the driver to react.

"These deer are prone to cross roads early in the morning, which makes them susceptible to being hit by an automobile," he said. "Primary areas for accidents include 10th Mountain Division Road, Dixie Road and 1st Division Road."

A recent accident on 10th Mountain Division Road occurred when a deer entered the roadway, charged at a vehicle and caused damage to the vehicle as its antlers entered the radiator.

Greer advised that if involved in an accident with a deer, a motorist should not attempt to either catch or treat it. Instead, a call should be placed to the Military Police Station where the accident can be reported to the desk sergeant.

The Military Police Activity asks that operators of motor vehicles on post be aware of deer and drive defensively.

"When a deer is spotted on the roadside, be aware," Greer said. "Should it enter your path, watch your speed and don't veer off the road."

The deer hunting season with archery is Sept. 21 to Oct. 25 and firearms is Oct. 20 to Jan. 12, which will heighten the need for caution.

"Deer will be constantly on the move as they run from one habitat to the next during deer season," said Wayne E. Eicher, a Department of Defense police officer.

Fort Benning Girl Scout Association

A back-to-school fashion show provided the Fort Benning Girls Scouts a way to celebrate Concharty Council's theme for the upcoming year, "Splash the World with Colors."

Also celebrating the 80th anniversary of Girl Scouting, Fort Benning Girl Scouts had an opportunity to splash colors and strut their stuff during the Army and Air Force Exchange Service Fall Back to School Fashion show 2 p.m. Saturday at the main Post Exchange.

The fashion show, an annual fall event at the PX, was coordinated by Katy Linder, the women's department manager. She was assisted by Donna Dlubac.

The Girl Scouts had 24 models, ranging in ages from 3 years of age to 13 years of age, show off two outfits each.

Linder said she was very pleased with the results of the fashion show, adding that the girls performed well as models given the short amount of time they had to prepare.

"We have some 'models' in the making," Dlubec said about the Girl Scouts who previewed the school styles for Fort Benning shoppers giving them a chance to see what's hot for the upcoming school year in fashion for their daughters.

The girls, between giggles and tears, were collectively excited, scared and having fun, especially when some of the older girls had the chance to get a "makeover" at the Revlon Department of the PX.

The moms of the scouts were astonished and pleased to see their daughters who start out as shrinking violets when modeling their first outfit, blossom into roses when they skipped, danced and even sang when they hit center stage modeling their second outfit.

The Fall Back to School Fashion Show sponsored by AAFES has kicked off the Fort Benning Girl Scout year.

If you are interested in being a part of the Fort Benning Girl Scout program, come to a school registration night on Sept. 5 at Faith Middle School across from the temporary mini mall and enroll in what has already started off to be an exciting year for Girl Scouts on Fort Benning.

West Point cadets learn leader skills

By Marilyn Balzarini
U.S. Army Infantry Training Center

The Drill Cadet Leader Training Program came to a close this summer at the Infantry Training Center.

The program, which is part of cadet advanced training, teaches leadership skills to West Point Cadets.

It also exposes them to either the basic training or the One Station Unit Training environment.

This year 96 West Point juniors assisted drill sergeants in six Infantry Training Center battalions.

Two five-week sessions were held. The first one began June 3 and ended July 5. The second session started July 10 and ended Aug. 13.

The cadets' job was to assist the drill sergeants.

One of the areas in which the cadets proved to be valuable assets was in re-enforcement training.

"Because we have had a lot of infantry training during the first two years at West Point, we can help by conducting additional training for the soldiers," Cadet Michael Gallagher said.

Gallagher was one of the students participating in the program. Assigned to Company E, 4th Battalion, 36th Infantry (now Company E, 1st Battalion, 38th Infantry), Gallagher was sponsored by Drill Sergeant Elijah Spruill.

Gallagher said he learned what it takes to turn civilians into soldiers during his stay at the Infantry Training Center.

He said he also learned a lot from the non-commissioned officers.

"I feel that anything I can learn from NCOs will be a real asset to me when I become an officer," Gallagher said.

Gallagher said that what impressed him most was the soldiers.

"The new soldiers in infantry training are really sharp," Gallagher said.

"Some of them have college degrees, and I'm sure the majority of them will be real assets to the infantry."

Gallagher entered West Point after graduating from Pioneer High School in Ann Arbor, Mich.

His father is Maj. Barry Gallagher, strength management officer for the 86th Army Reserve Command in Forest Park, Ill.

Gallagher said he applied for West Point because he felt he would receive the best available military training there.

"The selection process (for West Point) is really rigorous," Gallagher said.

"You have to pass a physical exam and a type of physical training test. You also have to be nominated by a congressman in addition to supplying information about your grade point average and extra curricular activities."

Even though West Point is tough, Gallagher said he has never thought about quitting.

His major is mechanical engineering.

"Six cadets have been assigned to our unit this summer," said 1st Sgt. Dayton Martin of Company E.

"They have been a big help to us in the areas of PT (physical training), STT (squad tactical training), and during our FTX (field training exercise)."

Martin said he felt that the cadets had gained additional leadership skills and experience working with soldiers during their stay at the unit.

The cadets were graded by unit cadre at the end of their training.

The evaluation counts for 15 percent of their military grade for the year.

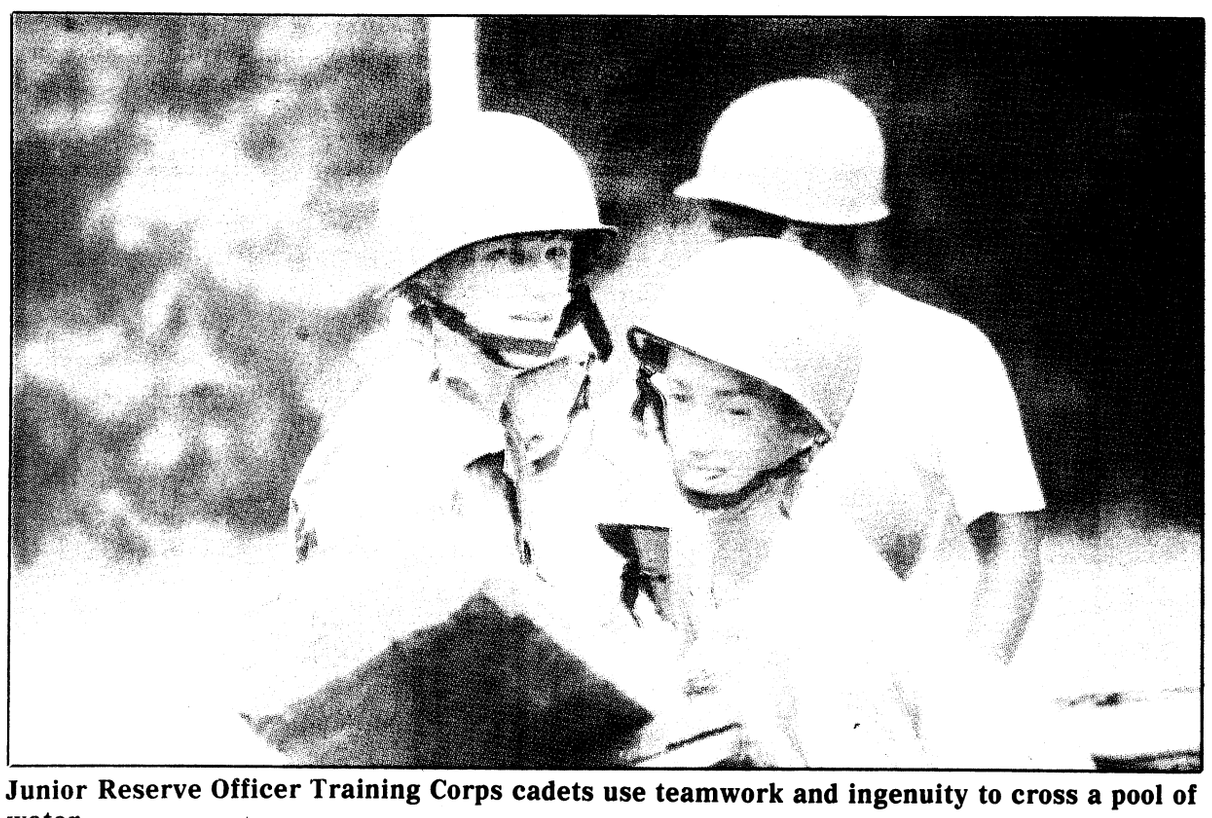
Young leaders study teamwork

By James C. Rupp
Bayonet staff writer

Eighty students from the Muscogee county school district came to Fort Benning to participate in the annual Junior Reserve Officers' Training Corps cadet leaders course, a part of which was held at Columbus College.

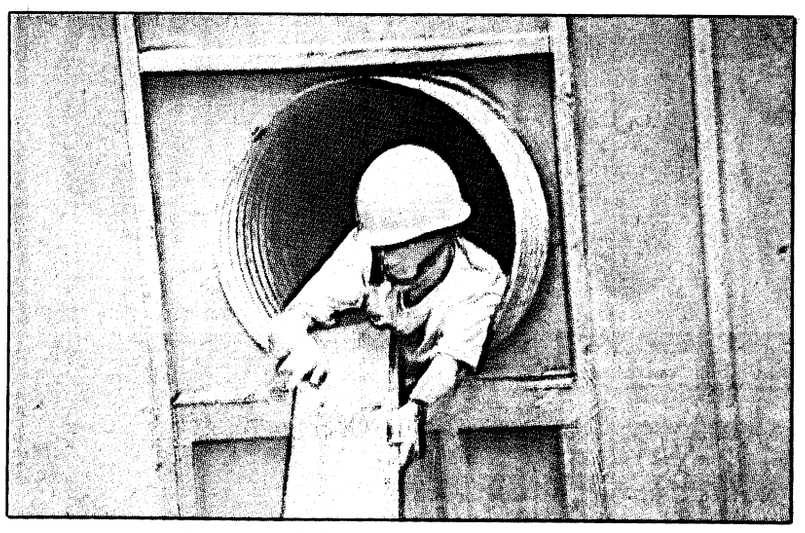
During their time here, the cadets rode in the buddy seat rides, jumped out of the 34-foot airborne tower, went rappeling and negotiated obstacles at the Ranger Training Brigade.

The students participated in various exercises designed to stress teamwork and leadership qualities. Throughout the week, they attended classes on decision making, study techniques, military technology and interpersonal communications. The cadets also experienced staples of military life, including eating a Mermite meal with the leadership division of the Leadership Reaction Course.

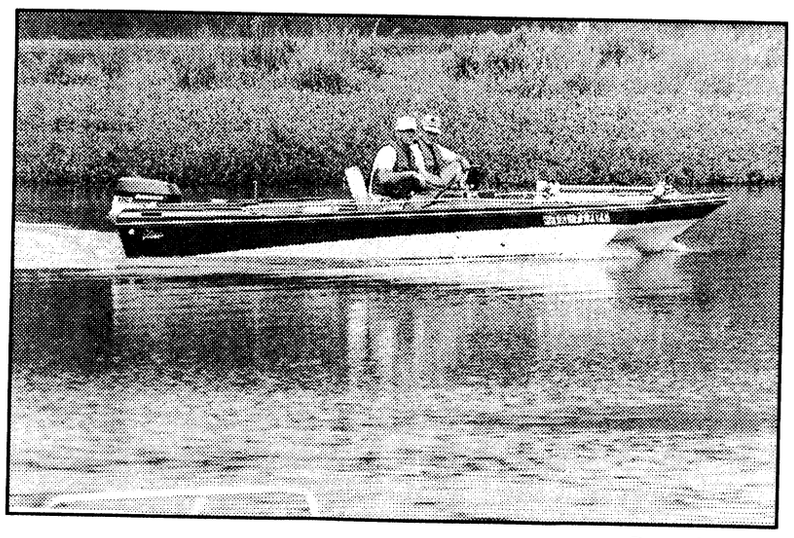


Christine Guzman, a Spencer High School student, said "... in the classes we learned the principles of working as a team, and on the Leadership Reaction Course, we learned how to apply them."

Another Spencer High attendee, Scott Ericson, said that not only was the LRC physically demanding, but "it took a lot of mental strength. We all learned how to work as a team today, and the course brought out a lot of leadership qualities from all of us.



"Today was also the most fun," he added.



Anthony Nelson, Christine Guzman and Scott Ericson of Spencer High attempt to get the best of an obstacle.

29th corrals fish at all-day rodeo

By Brian C. Sutton
Bayonet staff writer

Saturday was a day for intense heat and some good fishing at Uchee Creek.

The 29th Infantry Regiment sponsored an all-day event called a "fishing rodeo," tha tests fishing teams ability to catch as many fish as possible and to catch the winning fish, which is the largest bass caught for the day by any one team.

Eighteen teams participated in this event, which began at 6:30 a.m. and ran through 4 p.m.

The winning team consisted of two soldiers from Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 29th Infantry Regiment, Curt Weaver and Thomas Tippett. The largest bass for the day was three pounds, 10 ounces and was caught by the winning team.

The tournament was open to all members of the 29th and any cardholding-member of the Association of the United States Army.

In all, more than 250 people participated in the rodeo.

Soldier sets his sights on Olympics

By Brian C. Sutton
Bayonet staff writer

Preparing for the Olympic trials is not exclusive to the All-Army wrestling team here. Other athletes are preparing on their own.

Carlito Vasquez, a 27-year-old boxer assigned to 3rd Brigade, 24th Infantry Division (Mechanized), is training for competition that may eventually lead to the Olympic trials.

Vasquez, however, has other goals as well.

"I want to keep the kids off the streets," said Vasquez.

How does Vasquez do that?

"I try to train them to box," said Vasquez.

Vasquez trains at a small gym in Columbus where he can work closely with the kids, teaching them that it is better to control your anger and only fight in a boxing ring.

One of the ways Vasquez keeps them from fighting in the streets is by registering the hands of everyone he teaches as weapons.

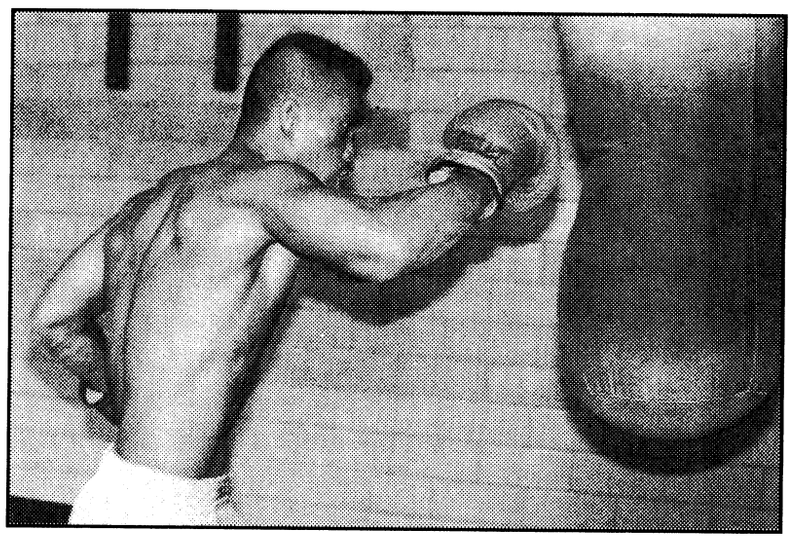
"I register their hands so they know if they get caught fighting, they will be in a lot of trouble with the police," said Vasquez.

"We stress that the training is not to beat up your enemy on the outside," said Vasquez

This light heavyweight winner of the Georgia State Games at Georgia Technical University this year and a finalist in the Golden Gloves competition last year remains optimistic about the children.

"So far, so good," said Vasquez.

There was a time, however, when Vasquez couldn't train with the children.



Vasquez was deployed with elements of the then 197th Infantry Brigade to the Middle East to participate in Operations Desert Shield and Desert Storm.

Training, he said, was difficult, but he managed.

"I filled a sandbag and put it on the turret of one of the tanks," said Vasquez. "It worked pretty well."

It worked well enough for him to come back from the Middle East and win at the Georgia State Games.

He is now preparing for an invitational in Atlanta next month and then several other military matches may lead him to the All-Army Boxing Team and hopefully the Olympic trials.

Post crowns softball champs

USAIC Public Affairs Office

The men and women's softball champions were crowned this week.

The engineers made it a clean sweep over all infantry competition as Company A, 43rd Engineer Battalion, beat out Co. B, 43rd Engr. Bn., 3-1.

The victory, in the double elimination tournament, was the 15th in a row against no defeats for the Eddie Johnson-coached team.

Eighty men's teams entered the post softball competition, with 20 making it to the tournament where the engineers prevailed.

On the women's side of the house, the Dream Team, coached by Fredde Allen and Georgetta Bennett, won the title for the third year in a row.

But it nearly didn't happen.

To win, the Dream Team had to beat out the regular season champs, the Lady Tigers, two games in a row after being beaten by the Lady Tigers earlier in the playoffs 7-4.

But the Dream Team came out hitting hard and defeated the Lady Tigers 18-0 and 11-1, behind the pitching of Allen.

Bennett attributed the turn around to tips, former teammate Sandy Moore gave them about hitting and lineup changes.

Columbus Stars capture season's second win

Columbus Stars

The Stars of Columbus snatched their second win of the season with a score of 32-20 against the North Clayton Eagles.

The night belonged to the Stars when quarter back Tyrone Walker (Company C, 2nd Battalion, 18th Infantry) threw four touchdown passes and rushed for 33 yards in three plays.

Walker's favorite target, tailback Cecil Fudge (Co. A, 2nd Bn., 18th Inf.), had more than 100 yards for the night including two touchdown passes and averaging 12 yards per carry.

The Stars started out with an all-out aerial attack and kept their ground forces in check. Walker threw 19 times with eight completions.

Wide receiver, Enrico (Chris) Carter, started the scoring off by catching a six-yard pass early in the first quarter. Besides the other two touchdown passes to Fudge, tightend Tyrone Ivory, caught a 15-yard pass for the final score of the first half.

During the fourth quarter the ground forces were called out and fullback Henry Wilson Jr. (533rd Transportation Co.), who plunged through the defensive line for the Stars' final touchdown of the game.

The Stars' defensive line held the Clayton County Eagles in check most of the night with the Eagles only going to the pin five times and three of which were caught in the Stars secondary and all resulting in touchdowns for 72, 62, and 69 yards.

The Stars defensive line was led by defensive tackle Willie (Bull) Hill of Phenix City, and the linebacker core Abe Long and David Lilly of Opelika, Ala.

The hard hitting of the Stars' defensive team and the alertness of the Stars' secondary team resulted in five turnovers for the Eagles, with the Stars only giving up two to the Eagles defense.

The Stars' offensive tackle Michael Hemmingway of Columbus, is an offensive lineman's dream, being very alert and picking up a loose ball behind the line, he scrambled for 12 yards before being stopped by the Eagles defense.

The Stars' second straight victory brings them to two wins and three losses. Saturday, the Stars will face an all-time Georgia power house team, the Gwinnett County Cougars. Starting with this game against the Cougars, all remaining home games will be played at Garrett Stadium in Phenix City (just off the north bypass on Stadium Drive), gates open at 7 p.m. with game time at 8 p.m.

The game Saturday will be played in corporation with the Teen Challenge program. Tickets may be purchased at the gate.

Future home games:

Sept. 14, Chattahoochee Cowboys — Garrett Stadium

Sept. 21, Alabama Raiders — Garrett Stadium

Oct. 12, Georgia Thrashers — Garrett Stadium

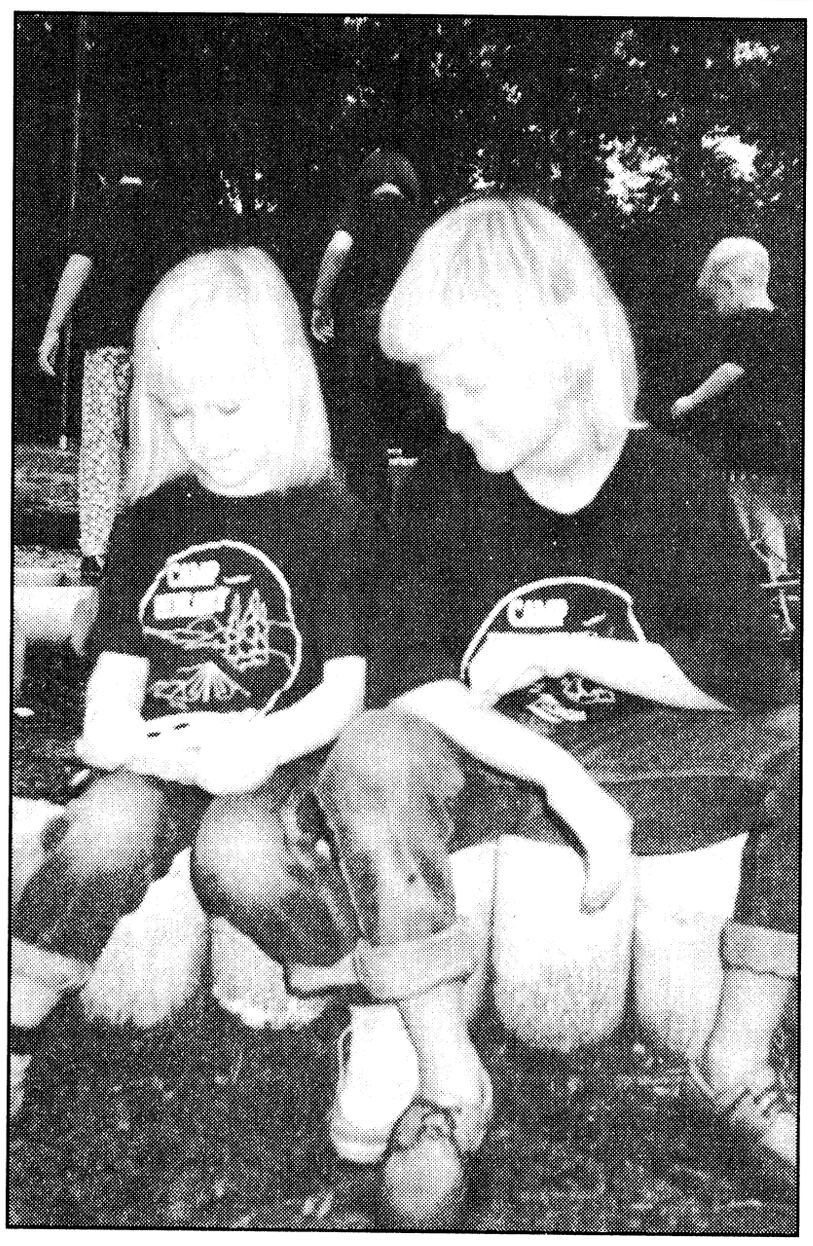
Join foundation, receive free trees

Arbor Day Foundation



Ten free white flowering dogwood trees will be given to each person who joins The National Arbor Day Foundation during August.

The free trees are part of the non-profit foundation's trees for American campaign.

"The white flowering dogwoods will add year-round beauty to your home and neighborhood," John Rosenow, the foundation's executive director, said. "Dogwoods have showy spring flowers, scarlet autumn foliage, and red berries which attract songbirds all winter."

The trees will be shipped postpaid at the right time for planting between March 1 and May 31 with enclosed planting instructions. The six to 12-inch trees are guaranteed to grow or they will be replaced free of charge.

To become a member and to receive the free trees, send a $10 membership contribution to Ten Dogwoods, National Arbor Day Foundation, 100 Arbor Avenue, Nebraska City, Neb. 63410, by Aug. 31, 1991

Girl Scouts enjoy annual summer camp

By Janice Mann
Bayonet community writer

A total of 76 girls ages 5 through 12 participated in three camp sessions; a day, evening, and overnight camp.

Jeanette Stone and Zeddra Driver were co-directors of the camps and 26 volunteers were available to assist as the girls rotated between activities.

Some of the skills taught were leaf identification, knot tying, first aid, folk dancing, basket weaving, and how to use a compass. Demonstrations included face painting and balloon sculptures, given by professional clowns, and water testing given by representatives of the post water treatment facility.

The girls were timed on an obstacle course, a scavenger hunt and a bedroll game with awards going to the winners. Each day the girls made crafts that they were able to take home.

According to the Fort Benning Girl Scout Association service unit director Pat Corning, Girl Scouting "opens doors into a world where everyone is appreciated for her or his contribution."

Summer camp is a time to expose girls to a wide variety of interests and to bring girls together from different backgrounds, religions, economic statuses, and ages to teach them to work together," she added.

Fall registration for Girl Scouts will begin in September. Notices will be sent home through the schools.

Children gather to watch videos, make crafts and enjoy fellowship

By Gabriele Sonnenberg
USAIC Chaplains' Office

A summer mini-fun camp for children ages 5 to 12 years was Aug. 14 and Wednesday at the TIC Chapel annex. On two consecutive Wednesdays the children met to fellowship. The activities consisted of films, crafts, Bible stories and refreshments.

The registration for the event was accomplished weeks prior to the event. The registration added to 70 children.

The mini-fun camp was organized by Mary Wilburn, a volunteer, and many volunteers were available to lend a helping hand.

One-half hour before the event started, people were busy organizing and preparing for the children to arrive. Some of the helpers filled popcorn bags, which were to be eaten during the film. Others arranged chairs and tables and set up the craft materials.

The turn-out at the camp was a success, according to participants.

Auschwitz survivor to speak at Benning

By Gabriele Sonnenberg
USAIC Chaplains' Office

A German concentration camp survivor will speak at several functions from Sept. 7 until Sept. 11 at Fort Benning.

Dr. Edith Eva Eger, a clinical psychologist and logo therapist presently working as executive director of the El Paso Center for Marital and Family Therapy, is an international consultant on human behavior and is a clinical assistant professor for the Department of Psychiatry, Texas Tech Medical School.

The "Dr." before her name speaks of credentials she has acquired through the academic world. But according to Eger, her education started on a cattle car on its way to Auschwitz in the late 1943.

Fifteen months later, a soldier was sifting through bodies in a mass grave and saw a hand move.

"In 1945, on May 5, I was among the dead," said Eger. "I would not be here if a G.I. did not listen to his conscience and look over the pile. I am very grateful because today I have three children and four grandchildren."

Eger at that moment "graduated from Auschwitz." She had started as a victim and came out a survivor.

"But I kept my secret for close to 25 years," said Eger. "I did not want people to feel sorry for me."

"Today I know that God works in mysterious ways," Eger said. "It is a miracle that I am here. I found spirituality at Auschwitz," she continued. "I learned to love unconditionally, and I learned to change hatred into pity. The guards were more imprisoned than I was," she added.

She encourages people to recognize that the biggest concentration camp is in their minds. There are victims and survivors, she explained, victims are rigid and blame others. Survivors are flexible. They are capable of sizing up a situation and realizing that there is no perfect world.

Eger, who is known as the "doctor's doctor" and the "therapist's therapist" has been working with military psychiatrists, psychologists and drug and alcohol counselors for the past 15 years.

"I do seminars on who takes care of the caretakers. I meet with the commander to talk about what we can do about alienation and separation," said Eger.

She also works on how the military family can survive when the Army comes first and the family second.

"The Army may have to recognize that the wife looks at the Army as a jealous lover," said Eger. "The wives have on-the-job training. They have to provide a haven so that the man can go and be in the Army."

Eger will be the guest speaker at the following functions:

Sept. 8, 11 a.m. — Kelley Hill Chapel worship service

Sept. 9, 11 a.m. to 3 p.m. — Family Life Center luncheon and workshop, "Victim or Survivor: Personal Choice"

ASK THE JUDGE

By Michael H. Lane
Staff Judge Advocate's Office

Q. I took out a Veterans Administration loan when I bought a house while stationed at Fort Bragg 10 years ago. We sold the house in 1985 when I was assigned to Europe.

We are now assigned to Fort Benning, and are looking to buy another home. However, we have just been notified that the people who bought our house in North Carolina had the house foreclosed in 1989, and that we owe the VA $10,000 as a result of the foreclosure.

They are demanding we pay the money. They also say we aren't eligible for a new VA loan until the other one is paid. I don't see why they don't collect from the guy who bought it from me. Is there anything you can do to help?

A. The VA guarantees loans to eligible veterans under federal law, to make these loans attractive to financial institutions.

The program is popular because the loans typically require no money down at the time of purchase, and because the loans are "assumable"; that is, the buyer can take over the old VA loan without getting a new loan.

Conventional or FHA loans typically are not assumable, and require substantial down payments. However, the VA loan can have disadvantages, too, as you now know.

As a general proposition, you remain liable on a VA loan until the VA releases you, or the loan is paid. Further, you cannot secure a new VA loan until the old loan is satisfied.

You may of course sue the buyer to enforce payment, but this option is often impractical because the buyer is insolvent or cannot be located. The VA does not have to try to find the buyer before trying to get the money from you.

Section 1813 of Title 38, U.S. Code provides a procedure which may help you to avoid the harsh consequences of the buyer's default. This law essentially states that a veteran may be released from liability if it is determined after investigation that the VA would have granted a release if the veteran had applied for one.

This law is interpreted in regulations issued by the VA, but in general these conditions must be met: the loan must have been current at the time of sale, the buyer must have assumed the obligations of the veteran to repay the loan, and the buyer must have been able to qualify for the loan.

These requirements are further interpreted in VA regulations, so it is necessary to contact the VA and request any needed forms and information.

Your next step is to write back to the VA and request information on Section 1813 relief. They will advise you about the information they need.

It is important to maintain contact with the VA and not ignore the problem in hopes it will go away.

If you have further questions about this or any other legal problem, contact the Legal Assistance Office in building 5. The telephone number is 545-3281.

ENERGY WATCH

By Jennie L. McRae
Energy Branch

According to "The Energy Report," published by Pasha Publications, the "good old days" are now with regard to gasoline prices, one energy expert says.

Daniel Yergin, President of Cambridge Energy Research Associates, said if it were not for recent increases in state and federal taxes, gasoline would be at its lowest level since World War II. Yergin, who examined average gas prices for every year from 1947 through the present, said gasoline prices have not risen the way Americans generally believe they have.

He said gasoline was never as cheap as people recall it being in the "good old days." In fact, Yergin found that the cheapest prices for gasoline were from 1988 through mid-1990. ". . .until Saddam Hussein broke the spell by invading Kuwait and making his bid to dominate world oil prices."

In 1947, gasoline averaged 23 cents a gallon. Yergin said that price is equivalent to $1.49 a gallon in 1991 dollars. Gasoline prices, put into 1991 dollars, averaged $1.06 a gallon in 1988 and $1.07 in the first seven months of 1990.

After the invasion of Kuwait, prices jumped to $1.40 a gallon, but fell to about $1.15 a gallon in the first five months of 1991. Yergin noted that price included a 5-cent increase in federal tax and another 5-cent increase, on average, in state taxes. Taxes generally compose about 30 percent of the total gasoline price.

Yergin said the highest gasoline taxes — about 48 cents per gallon in 1991 currency — occurred in the early 1960s. The lowest — about 18 cents per gallon — occurred in 1981. He noted this amount is about 15 percent of the average gasoline tax for European countries.

Yergin said the highest prices over the 4 1/2 decade period, low taxes notwithstanding, were in 1980 and 1981, after the fall of the Shah of Iran, when prices rose to more than $2 a gallon in 1991 dollars.

With regard to the Gulf crisis, Yergin commented the price increases that resulted from Saddam Hussein's invasion of Kuwait were more transitory than similar price hikes in the 1970s. He said the public perceived the price jump as worse than it really was.

"The Gulf crisis disruption in supplies, combined with panic psychology, drove up crude prices," Yergin said. "Motorists were infuriated and politicians expressed great anger. There is a clear need to step back and get the gasoline prices into context."

In his study, Yergin said, gasoline accounted for 2.6 percent of the average household's expenses last year, compared to 4.8 percent in 1980 and 1981. The difference, he said, can be attributed to more fuel-efficient cars.

In 1973, for instance, the average car used 771 gallons per year of gasoline, while in 1990, that amount dropped to 486 gallons per year. In addition, the cost of gasoline per mile driven fell from 13.2 cents, adjusted for inflation, in 1980 to 5.4 cents in the first half of 1991.

Yergin also commented that Americans pay much less than Europeans for their gasoline. He called U.S. gasoline "one of the great bargains of the Western World" compared to other nations.

For instance, while U.S. drivers paid $1.10 a gallon in April, the Germans paid $2.60 a gallon, the British paid $2.98 a gallon, the French paid $3.27 a gallon and the Italians paid $4.35 a gallon.

ALL THE WAY!

The following "Pioneer" soldiers were recognized July 28 for their exceptional duty performance and received commendations as follows: Army Commendation Medal, Sgt. Ronald J. Skidds and Spc. Banjong Bush; Army Achievement Medal, Staff Sgt. Terrence McRae, Spc. Robert Aron, Spc. Charles E. Young,

CARDS OF THANKS 004

WE WOULD LIKE to express our deepest and most sincere Thanks to the Ft. Benning Military Police, Ft. Benning, Columbus, & Russell County E.M.S., the Georgia K-9 Rescue Association, Army Medevac Helicopters, all the Divers, both Military and Civilian, and all the volunteers, both Military and Civilian who participated in the search for our son.
We would also like to thank our friends, neighbors, and all the concerned people who through gifts, cards, visits, calls and prayers helped us through this very difficult time.
A special thanks to McMullen Mortuary for their kindness and understanding in our time of sorrow. If their is anyone we missed, please accept our apologies for the oversight. The Lord Bless you and keep you; The Lord make his face shine upon you and be gracious to you; The Lord turn his face toward you and give you peace.
God Bless You All.

Educators gather, discuss strategy

Woods brings message about 'America 2000'

Fort Benning Schools

Fort Benning educators gathered Aug. 19 at McBride School for their first session of the 1991-92 school year.

Millicent Woods, deputy assistant secretary of defense, addressed the teachers on their first day back for the new school year.

Millicent Woods

Woods brought a message of Pentagon support to Benning educators as she spoke of the Fort Benning Schools as one of the "President's own" school system.

Woods discussed "America 2000," President Bush's education strategy, and the national education goals encompassed in that strategy. Those goals are:

- Creating better and more accountable schools for today's students.
- Creating a new generation of American schools for tomorrow's students.
- Transforming America into a nation of students.
- Making our communities places where learning will happen.

Following her speech, Woods spoke with many Benning educators, with school board members and with members of the community.

Woods also toured Faith Middle School and spoke with administrators and many of the teachers there. Woods discussed the after-school program at Faith School with school personnel and noted that other systems learn from it.

When asked about her visit to Fort Benning and to the Fort Benning school system, Woods stated that she had talked with various groups and individuals within the Fort Benning community and that her discussions had revealed a strong working relationship between the military leadership, school leadership, and parents toward a common focus of achieving the national educational goals.

Woods also stated that she found the Fort Benning Schools to be an energized and creative system.

"I was pleased to see the emphasis on the critical learning and thinking skills and the way that those skills are integrated throughout the curriculum," she said.

"Technology and use of computers are also well integrated," she added.

"This trip gave me one-on-one exposure to teachers and administrators," she said.

"I was impressed by the enthusiasm and the initiative they take," she said. "I look forward to other visits and to a time (to visit) with parents."

675th returns from Mideast

Soldiers spent 8 months in Saudi Arabia

By James C. Rupp
Bayonet staff writer

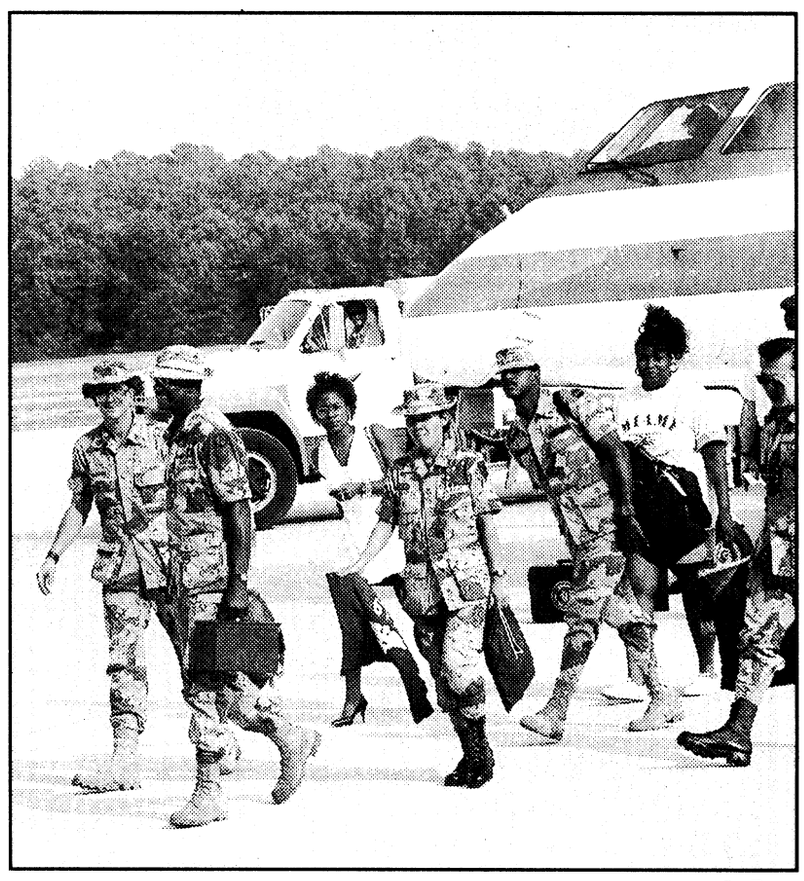
The 675th Medical Detachment returned to Fort Benning Aug. 22 after spending eight months in Saudi Arabia.

Family, friends and supporters gathered at the Columbus Metropolitan Airport with waving flags and colorful signs to welcome the soldiers home.

The 10-person team left in November, said 1st Sgt. William A. Brooks Jr. of the 2nd Mobile Army Surgical Hospital.

The 675th is a dispensary unit attached to the 2nd MASH.

According to Brooks, the unit was serving as a reactionary dispensary in Saudi Arabia.



During their stay, they treated approximately 15,000 soldiers on a sick-call basis, Brooks said.

Brooks also said soldiers in the unit have been in the Saudi Arabian theater longer than anyone else in the battalion.

"They are extremely happy to be home," Brooks said. "They weren't the first to leave, but they were the last ones to come back.

"I believe that working together so close for so long has been great for their teamwork and camaraderie," he added.

The other medical detachment in the 2nd MASH, the 676th, recently departed to take the place of the returnees and will probably be there for the next six months, Brooks said.

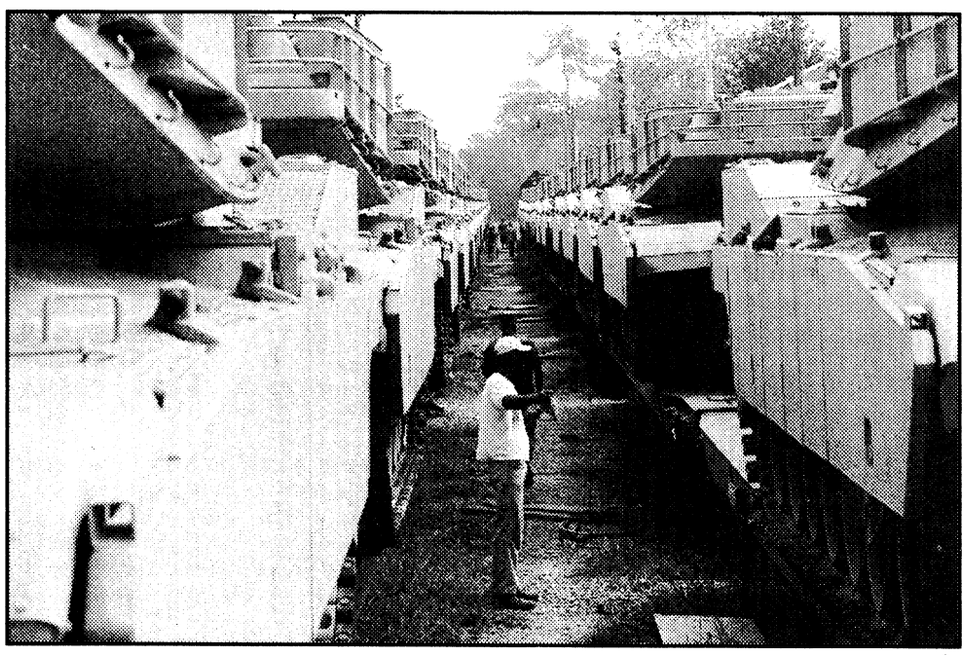
32 new battle tanks roll onto Fort Benning

By James C. Rupp
Bayonet staff writer

Fort Benning received a shipment of M-1A1 Abrams main battle tanks Aug 23, and the 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor Regiment of the 3rd Brigade, 24th Infantry Division, will receive them Sept. 20.

The 32 tanks arrived at the Sand Hill railroad marshaling area off of Old Cusseta Road from Lima, Ohio as replacements for the fighting vehicles currently being used by the battalion.



According to Capt. Tom Wilkinson, 3rd Brigade, 24th Infantry Division, public affairs officer, the shipment was part of an upgrade of new tanks to keep the brigade aligned with the division. Wilkinson said the total number of tanks will ultimately come to 52.

Wilkinson also said that the tanks are the same design configuration as the type currently being used, but the tanks possess heavier armor and boast a greater fuel efficiency package.

The newer model tanks are manufactured by General Dynamics Corporation and are used by both U.S. Army and U.S. Marine Corps armor units. They have additional armor plating, a digital electronic fuel sensor that economizes fuel consumption and a "limp device" that allows a tank to "limp" off the battlefield if it becomes disabled.

The tanks also have a crew cooling system that cycles a coolant through the crew members vest, an overpressure system that prevents nuclear, biological, chemical contamination of the vehicle, and a 120mm cannon system that replaces the earlier 105mm cannon.

Currently the tanks are at a deprocessing station awaiting movement to the 2nd Bn., 69th Armor Regiment Sept. 20.

Civilian learns lesson in writing NCOER

By Clyde Snively
Bayonet columnist

COMMENTARY

The Non-Commissioned Officer Evaluation Report was mentioned in passing last week.

Not being an NCO, I didn't realize what an emotional topic it could be, but not for the reasons one might expect.

Granted, an NCO is going to want to get top marks. Failure to do so can end any hopes of a career in the Army.

But that's not the issue. The issue apparently is with who does the evaluations and with complying with the regulations that govern NCOERs.

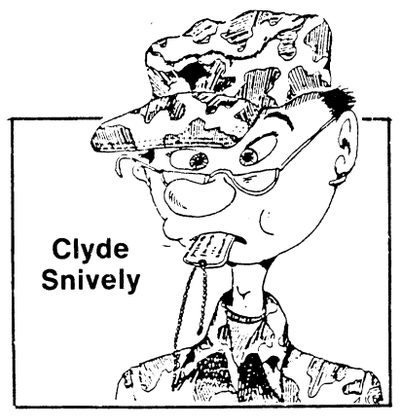
I discovered that as I listened to our office non-commissioned officer in charge counsel one of our civilians about the way he'd written an NCOER. He sat there slack-jawed as she pointed out his errors.

First, she attacked his "literary masterpiece," by pointing out that when writing the narrative, you don't write sentences; you write a series of phrases, starting with action words and separated by semicolons.

"What!" he, the office's great wordsmith exploded. "What do you mean I can't write complete sentences?"

"That's the way the reg's written, sir," she explained, calmly.

"It sounds like this reg was written by the same person who wrote the correspondence reg — designed to be as complicated and non-sensical as possible, like indent four spaces instead of five, write out all abbreviations in addresses..."



"Sir, we're talking about NCOERs, not correspondence regs. Could we please stick to the subject," she said, cutting him off in mid-sentence.

But he was still determined to attack the reg and not correct his errors. "Whoever wrote this reg must have a low opinion of NCOs," he said. "What they're telling me is they don't have any faith in an NCO's ability to write."

"You're right, sir. Now, let's talk about values and NCO responsibilities. You didn't write any down."

"Well, I checked 'yes' in each box. I figured the printed description was pretty complete."

"But, if you think the NCO is worth anything, you have to point out his strong points if he's going to be competitive with his fellow NCOs."

"All right," he said. "I'll dream up something."

"No sir," she said, her patience beginning to wear. "You don't 'dream up something.' You make bullet comments on his strong points — attributes you personally observed."

"Gotcha," he said.

"Now let's go over the specific attributes," she said, moaning inwardly.

I could tell something good was coming, so I leaned in their direction.

"First, the comments have to be short and should start with action words. They also have to be specific. Saying, 'his judgment is exceptional' won't make it. You have to explain why.

"And look at this rating for physical fitness. Just because he eats a nutritious meal doesn't mean he's physically fit. What did he score on his PT (physical training) test?" she asked wearily.

"Well, he told me he ran 10 miles once," the civilian said lamely.

"Yeah, but what was his time?" she asked.

He didn't know. So she moved on to the leadership section.

"The fact he's applied for Ranger School and Air Assault School and the Special Forces Assessment Selection Course doesn't make him a leader," she said, shaking her head in disbelief. "All that tells anyone is he likes to do paperwork."

Before sarge could go any further in her critique, the civilian snatched up the NCOER and said, "OK, OK, I got the picture. Short bullets. Start with action verbs, be specific. Is that all sergeant?"

"That'll do for now," she said. "But there is one last point. Remember, there is a deadline for all this."

"Yeah right. They make a puzzle out of filling these things out, then they want them in on time, too," he said as he went stomping off.

One thing I know. Sarge will make sure the NCOER is done correctly and is in on time. It's nice having NCOs looking out for the welfare of others.

Let's not forget service members still in Gulf

Association of the U.S. Army

Now that the people of the nation's capital and those of its largest cities have held parades to salute the great American service men and women who made the Desert Storm victory possible, let's not forget that there are still many troops who remain in the gulf region to help restore some semblance of civility to the lives of the victims of Saddam's aggression.

We need to make sure that every last returning veteran of the Gulf War is greeted with the same exuberance and warmness as was the first.

Never mind that there are some critics who conclude that the parades around the nation for our military forces were a hollow mockery.

First, these "experts" opposed the conflict on the grounds that American soldiers were not competent and would experience enormous casualties.

> "We need to make sure that every last returning veteran of the Gulf War is greeted with the same exuberance and warmness as was the first.

Then they berated the final phases to the ground war as "inhumane."

Finally they criticize the conduct of the war on the grounds that we didn't destroy all the Republican Guards, didn't topple Saddam Hussein and didn't solve the Kurdish problem either.

Now the issue is "the parade." Whether in New York or Washington or anywhere in America, they now question the legitimacy of the celebration.

Instead of listening to them, we should be proud of the things our soldiers have done and are doing.

For certain they conducted the war properly and ended it with compassion.

Nor should we let the critics ignore the profound events of the last 10 months — the process of going to war — the call-up of the Reserves and National Guard, the Congressional debates, the public involvement.

So "the parade" was a momentary recognition of a group of Americans who sacrifice much.

They have manned the outposts of freedom in Europe for nearly 17,000 days and nights, and guard the demilitarized zone in Korea and operate ships and aircraft around the globe.

And, when called, they go to war.

After "the parade" was over, they went back to duty — to do it all again if needed.

Commanding general: Enjoy a safe Labor Day

Every Labor Day weekend the highways are crowded with people enjoying the last summer holiday of the year.

Unfortunately, traffic accidents reach their peak during this holiday.

I want to thank you for your hard work in reducing privately owned vehicle fatalities.

During fiscal 1990, only two Fort Benning soldiers were killed in traffic accidents.

Since last October, only one of our soldiers has been killed in a privately owned vehicle accident.

I am also asking you to continue your emphasis by inspecting vehicles prior to the holiday and briefing soldiers about water and driving safety.

These positive actions should be stressed in your briefings:

- Sober swimming in authorized/supervised areas.
- Arranging schedules for alert and sober driving.
- Following all traffic laws, especially the speed limits.
- Encouraging the use of seat belts.
- Testing the conditions of vehicles, e.g., brakes, lights.
- Yielding to the less capable driver.

My desire is a safe and enjoyable holiday for every member of the Fort Benning community.

I urge you to give your best effort in support of this goal.

Maj. Gen. Carmen J. Cavezza
Fort Benning commander

Back to school means school bus safety time

By Harley Chase
Infantry Branch Safety Office

School days, school days, good old golden rule days. Do you remember the old rhyme?

Just about the time school started, you began to hum it and at the same time got excited about school starting. Do you remember that first day of school? Do you remember how you ran out the door of your house and made a beeline for school?

For some, a lot of time has passed; and for others, not so much time. But, no matter how much time has passed, drivers and children need safety reminders.

Drivers must reduce speed in school zones and at school crossings, obey all school crossing guards and stop for school buses when they are loading and unloading. Watch for children running in front or back of school buses when the buses are stopped.

There will be many bicycle riders heading for school. It is better to yield, if need be, than to be sorry. Watch for children running across the street.

Parents must inform children to cross streets at crosswalks only, to look in both directions before crossing, to obey school crossing guards. When getting on and off school buses, children shouldn't run in front or back of the buses.

When riding bicycles, children must obey all traffic rules and walk their bicycles across the street.

School has started, so driver and parents, let's make every school day a safe and happy one.

Bus safety tips for drivers, parents

By Gloria Jones
Muscogee Council of Parents Teachers Association

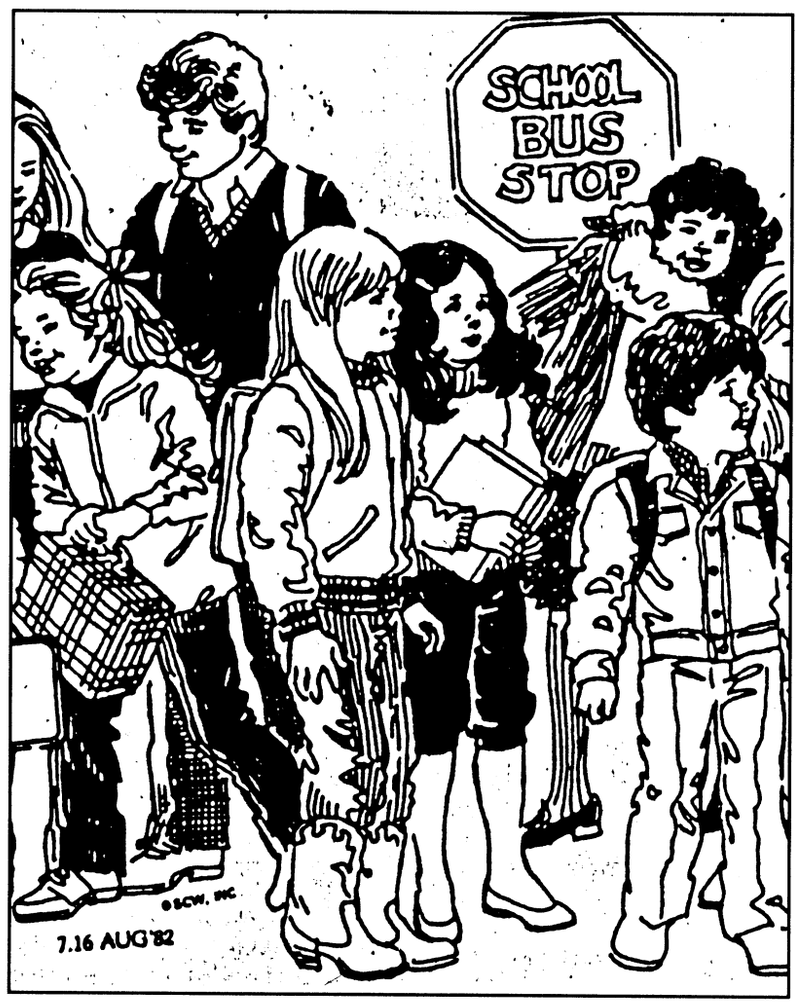
For Motorists



- Watch out for children as they get on and off the bus.
- Use special caution during school hours.
- Obey school bus stop arms.
- Be aware that loading and unloading is the most dangerous time for student passengers.

For Parents

- Be sure that your children are on time with about five minutes to spare.
- Be sure your kids are properly dressed for the weather conditions.
- Remind students to walk on the road shoulder and not on the traveled portion of the road when possible.
- Instruct students to wait in a safe place and don't approach the bus until it stops completely.
- Periodically remind children of the importance of mannerly and orderly behavior at the bus stop and on the bus.
- At various times, check on your child at the stop.
- When possible, accompany the very young to their stop and meet them on their return.
- Emphasize for children to STOP and LOOK before crossing a road to the bus. Constantly emphasize LOOKING.

For student passengers

- Be on time at your stop and wait in an orderly manner.
- Always STOP and LOOK carefully before approaching the bus.
- Be courteous and obedient to your bus driver.
- Never walk along the side or behind the bus
- Use hand rail when loading and leaving the bus.
- Remain seated in your assigned seat.

Benning celebrates women's equality

By Richard G. Brill
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Women's equality was discussed, displayed, and examined through various activities on post beginning Aug. 22. The Fort Benning Federal Women's Program Committee sponsored a symposium, a library display, and a voter's registration booth for local counties to commemorate Women's Equality Day.

A Women's Equality Day symposium was Aug. 22 at Sayers Library. Speaking to a small, but receptive audience were panelists Edna Kendrick, a former Columbus city council woman, Doris Halouska, vice president of the Columbus chapter of the League of Women's Voters, and Capt. Suzanne West of Martin Army Community Hospital.

The library also featured a visual display highlighting the women's suffrage movement with pictures of Susan B. Anthony and other famous women leaders.

The main exchange mall was the site for a voter's information booth. Mall shoppers received free pamphlets and information on registering to vote in Muscogee, Chattahoochee, and Stewart counties.

Winnie Torain, the post Federal Women's Program manager, said she's very pleased with the results of the symposium and is planning a luncheon as part of next year's activities.

She emphasized the importance of the anniversary, saying, "it should be celebrated and commemorated because ... we want to ensure that all women register to vote; we want to make sure our concerns are aired from a woman's point of view."

Torain added that the anniversary was important not just to women but to everyone because it "reminds all of us of our obligation to ensure that every individual has the opportunity to participate in the political, social, and economic life of our country."

Aug. 26 was the 21st anniversary of the ratification of the Nineteenth Amendment to the Constitution, giving women the right to vote. In 1974 President Jimmy Carter signed a public law declaring the anniversary as Womens' Equality Day.

Students visit local radio station

By Richard G. Brill
USAIC Public Affairs Office

It's a question every grade schoolchild will probably hear on the first day of school: "What did you do this summer?"

For post children who took advantage of what Youth Services had to offer, the question will be an easy one to answer.

Indianhead Youth Center, part of Youth Services, worked hard to make summer more exciting for post children with field trips to many of the area's attractions and businesses, including the Columbus Museum, Springer Opera House, Callaway Gardens, Kinnett Dairies and the television studio of WRBL. Their latest adventure was a visit to the local radio stations WFXE, 105 FM, and WOKS, 1340 AM.

From the main office to the production room, the children got an inside look at what goes on in the world of radio. News Director DeLoris Washington led the small group through the various rooms of the station, explaining what is done in each.

The tour wasn't just visual. At times they got to actively participate.

In the production room, each child got to sing a song and have it recorded on tape.

Radio personality Terri Thomas announced their visit during a station break and let the children say hello to Columbus over the air.

As a gift for coming to the station, each visitor received a bumper sticker and a videocassette featuring popular music videos.

Ginny Hector, facilities manager of the Indianhead gym and organizer of the field trips said the visit to WFXE and WOKS is the last one for the summer, but she's thinking of organizing a trip to the wildlife park at Pine Mountain for pre-teens (ages 6 through 12) later on in the year.

Response to the trips has been very positive, according to Hector. Many of the children have been on most or all of the trips and of course each had his or her personal favorite, she said.

Hector said the turnout has been very good.

"We've had groups as large as 30," she added.

When these children return to school and are asked the inevitable question, "What did you do this summer," no doubt they'll be able to tell about the trips they took because of Youth Services' commitment to post family members.

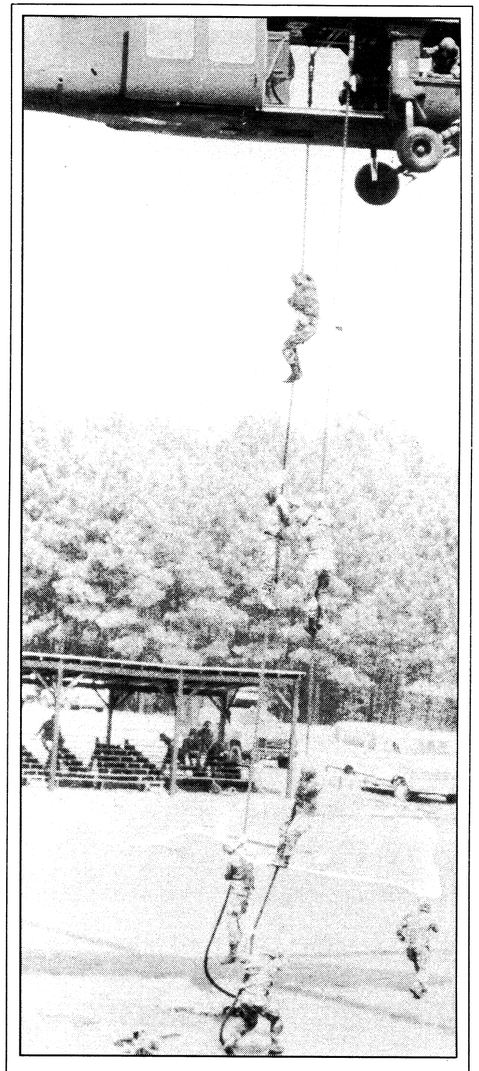
Speaking circles teach new languages

by Dan R. Wilson
U.S. Army School of the Americas

"The concept behind 'Speaking Partners of the Americas' is to promote a better understanding among people of different cultures; I think communication is the key to that," said Carol Feliciano, wife of Col. Jose Feliciano, commandant of the U.S. Army School of the Americas.

The School of the Americas has Latin American guest instructors, who serve two-year tours accompanied by their families. The official language of SOA is Spanish. This proposes a special need for language training, both in English and Spanish. For this reason Mrs. Feliciano and other concerned citizens organized what is known as "Speaking Partners of the Americas."

"Speaking Partners of the Americas" was developed by Howard and Gloria Potts, who are teachers in the Columbus community. The method of speaking circles is used to practice both the English and Spanish languages. A speaking circle consists of about six members and a coordinator. The coordinator is the person who promotes the conversation activities within the circle.

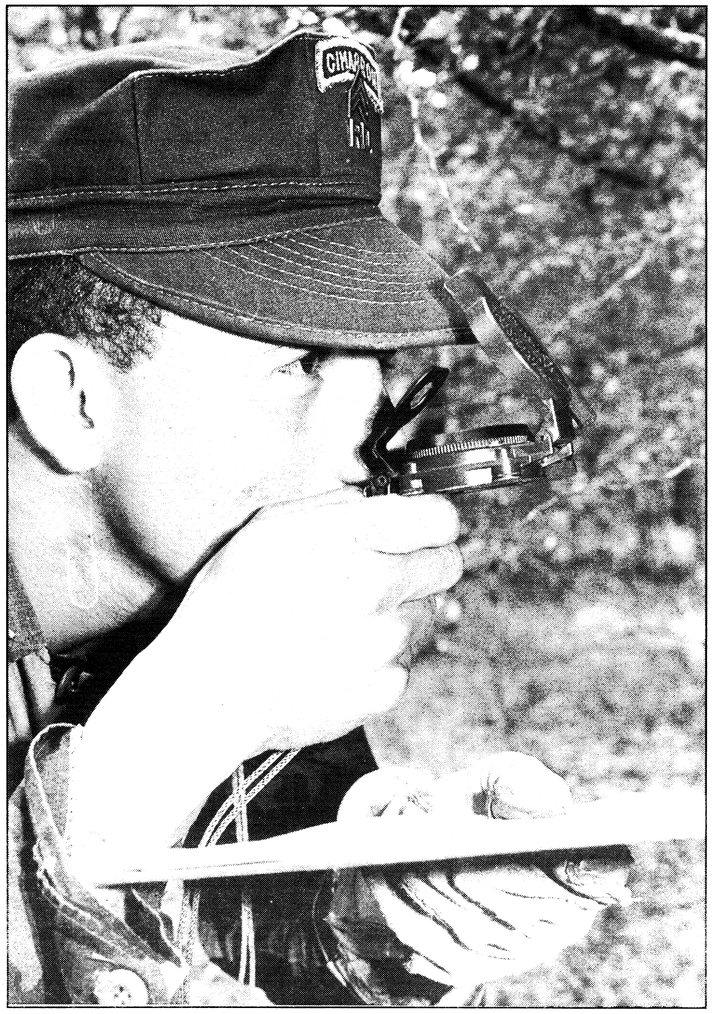


The coordinators are volunteers who don't have to be teachers. They should be fluent in English or Spanish and have a basic understanding of the second language. The Potts will have a workshop to teach the coordinators how to lead their groups.

According to Mrs. Feliciano, members will learn to use their new language for practical purposes. For example they will have discussions about ordering food, asking for service and paying at a restarant. After the group feels confident of their skills they will go out to dine at a restaurant to reinforce what they have learned. Some other topics covered are reserving airline tickets and making doctors appointments.

Some other methods of teaching are role playing, sharing, keeping a daily journal and brainstorming," said Mrs. Potts. Role play is a language strategy which circles around a specific topic where each person acts out a part. Role play reduces anxiety and allows people to pretend to be what they want to be. The method of sharing is when artiicles from newspapers, magazines, or any other type of material of interest are read and disscusedby group members. Journals are private and are used to help the members to improve their written expression. Brainstorming sessions are used to help find solutions to given situations that presents practical problems.

Potts explained the speaking circle is not a grammar class therefore, the goal is to become fluent speakers. We need to have in mind that perfection is accomplished through trial and error. Speaking errors are discussed during special sessions, members are not corrected while they are practicing the language.



According to Feliciano the biggest concern with the project is the need for coordinators. Anyone with an interest in becoming a coordinator or a group member is welcome to call Carol Feliciano at 682-7821.

SOA teaches NCO professionalism

by Dan R. Wilson
U.S. Army School of the Americas

Non-commissioned officers from three Latin American countries will graduate from the U.S. Army School of the Americas Primary Leadership Development/Advanced Non-Commissioned Officer course September 26 and become some of the best trained leaders in the Latin American NCO corps.

The eight students will receive hands on field oriented training with which they will better their technical and tactical skills as NCOs and as junior leaders within their armies, explained Joe Leuer Training Support Specialist for SOA. Hopefully this will have an impact on the Latin American NCO corps.

The students will receive individual skills training in weapons, leadership, training management, supply and maintenance, infantry squad tactics, psychological operations, combat life saver, map reading, day/night land navigation, and communications.

"Training NCOs is a difficult task because most of the Latin American countries don't have a formal NCO education system as we know in the U.S. Army," said Col. Jose Feliciano Commandant U.S. Army School of the Americas.

This year SOA started a pilot program. We are training the E-1 course, which is primarily PLDC, and the E-4 course which is ANCOC. The student input was relatively low so we combined the two courses and integrated the instruction as well, explained Feliciano.

"Our intent is after this year to go out to the Latin American countries and structure an NCO course that will run about eight to ten weeks in duration, and prepare the NCOs at the BNCOC (Basic Non-Commissioned Officer Course) level," said Feliciano. "We are confident that the comprehensive course will satisfy the need in the Americas for quality NCOs."

According to Feliciano the NCOs will return to their countries capable of running the day to day operations of the Latin American Armies in similar fashion as its done in our force. Where the officers are normally responsible for leadership, discipline, organization and management functions and the NCOs are truly the individuals that carry on the day-to-day operations of a unit.

Post prepares for 598th's return

By Alyanna B. Summers
Bayonet staff writer

Get out the welcome home banners and unfurl those flags one more time — in terms of welcoming a Fort Benning unit home from Operation Desert Storm.

The 598th will soon be on the way back to Fort Benning.

The 598th Maintenance Company, a part of the 36th Engineer Group, is the last Fort Benning unit left in Saudi Arabia; however, smaller detachments and some individuals from Fort Benning still remain in Saudi Arabia, according to statistics from Adjutant General Personnel Automation Branch.

Preparations are being made in anticipation of the unit's return, said Chief Warrant Officer Thomas Pintar, who is in charge of the 598th's family support group. Renovations are being made in the barracks, to include painting, repair and replacing of old or broken furniture, and the entire building is getting a good scrubbing from floor to rafters.

The spouses of the 598th are also in high gear and are in the midst a flurry of high-speed activities to welcome their loved ones home.

Fund-raising efforts continue within the support group. T-shirts, bumper stickers and pins are being sold to raise funds for decorations and refreshments for a real homecoming celebration for 598th troops.

"We want every soldier to feel loved upon his return," said Dixie Hawkinson, wife of 598th commander and leader of the unit's chain of concern.

The unit is tentatively scheduled to arrive at Fort Benning Sept. 6.

Fishing style is a personal choice

By Earl Bentz and Steve Price
1988 Outboard Marine Corporation

Bass anglers are fond of the saying, "Let the bass tell you how to fish," which generally dictates not only lure choice but also how to retrieve that lure.

Basically, a fisherman tries a lot of different lures and retrieves until he catches his first bass, then he stays with that combination in hopes of catching more fish.

"It's great when the angler likes that particular lure and retrieve, but agony when he doesn't," notes Evinrude Pro Staff angler and former world champion Larry Nixon, "so I don't think this is a rule bass fishermen should always follow.

"Sometimes it's actually better for an angler to fish the way he wants to fish because he feels more confident."

For example, continues Nixon, some anglers prefer to use fast-moving lures like spinnerbaits and crankbaits rather than slow-moving lures like worms or jigs, so they keep looking for bass that will hit their faster lures.

"The problem with fishing like this," he said, "is that you may have to spend a lot more time looking for those kinds of bass. Of course, once you do find them, you may easily catch a lot more of them, too."

A number of tournament anglers do fish this way, adds the Evinrude pro, and some of them have done extremely well. What often happens, he notes, is that these anglers often catch a lot of fish, or no fish. They lack consistency from tournament to tournament.

"I believe everyone agrees that a big lake several totally different bass-catching patterns will probably exist, including the use of both slow and fast-moving lures. If bass are biting slow-moving lures like plastic worms, it may be extremely difficult to find bass that will hit crankbaits.

"When we're all out there catching bass by finesse-fishing techniques, the 'power fishermen' with crankbaits are still looking for their bass. Sometimes they find them, but sometimes the tournament ends before they do."

Still, says Nixon, until an angler truly gains confidence in all of his lures and in the various techniques of using them, staying with a favorite fishing technique is not all bad.

"You need to have confidence in the way you're fishing," he explained. "That is the bottom line to tournament success, but the more you can broaden your confidence base through the use of other lures, the more consistent and successful you'll usually be."

Army 10-miler coming up soon

By Brian C. Sutton
Bayonet staff writer

The Physical Activities Branch is planning to send two teams, one male, one female, to the Army 10-Miler Oct. 13 in Washington, D.C. to represent Fort Benning.

Each team will consist of five members, who will be selected during a qualification period. One alternate will be selected for each team in case of emergency dropouts.

According to PAB officials, qualifications are scheduled for Sept. 14, 7 a.m. at Santiago Fitness Center, Building 3350 on Sand Hill.

Qualifications are done very simply for this race, according to Don Plotner, sports specialist at PAB. A qualifying 10-miler will be ran by all applicants. Each runner is not competing against a clock, rather, the runners are dueling it out with one another to beat the other to the finish line, according to Plotner. The first five males and the first five females to finish the 10-mile road race will be selected for the team, and the sixth person to finish, for both genders, will be selected as the alternates.

"The runners had better come prepared," said Plotner, because there is only one shot at making the team this year.

Active Duty soldiers assigned or attached to Fort Benning may apply to PAB, Building 394, Doughboy Stadium, Door 8. Applicants must have written permission from his or her immediate commander to participate.

Indians pull out all stops for division title

Columbus Indians

Going into a doubleheader Monday night against the Macon Braves, the Columbus Indians found themselves very much in the thick of things in the South Atlantic League southern division race.

Prior to Monday's action, the Indians were tied for third place with the Columbia Mets, three games behind Macon and Savannah who were tied for the top spot in the division. The Indians have 12 games left, eight with Macon.

If the Tribe can make a late charge and win the division, they would earn the right to play Columbia — the first-half division winner — in the playoffs. The division playoff is a best of three series. The division champ then would play the Northern Division winner in a best-of-five championship series.

The Indians pulled to within one-and-a-half games of first place with an 11-10, extra-inning victory at home over Savannah. But the team went on to lose five of it's next six games to fall four-and-a-half games out. They rebounded last week with victories over Augusta by scores of 9-0 and 9-5.

Two Indians are swinging hot bats. Shortstop Jason Hardtke carried a 17 game hitting streak into Monday's doubleheader. During the streak, Hardtke is hitting well over .400. It's the longest batting streak of the year for the Indians. His performance netted South Atlantic League "Batter of the Week" honors for the week of Aug. 18-24. During that week, Hardtke hammered out 13 hits, including one home run, and 13 RBIs. Hardtke had raised his season batting average to .287.

After wrapping up the series with Macon, the Indians travel to Charleston, S.C., to play the Rainbows in four games. The Tribe then returns to Historic Golden Park on Labor Day, Monday, to open what looks to be a pivotal four game series with arch-rival open what looks to be a pivotal four game series with arch-rival Macon to finish out the 1991 regular season.

Many activities are planned for the Labor Day game, including a picnic before the game. Call the Indians for more information at 571-8866. Thursday is Fan Appreciation Day.

Water park welcomes 100,000th

Jekyll Island

Jekyll Island, Ga. — Summer Waves water park welcomed some distinguished visitors through the gates recently — the Simpson family. Not the Simpsons of television cartoon fame, but a Jacksonville, Fla., family who were the lucky 100,000th guests to the park this year.

Summer Waves treated Richard and Glenda Simpson and their children Joshua and Tricia to 1992 season passes to the park. In addition, the Simpsons received a gift pack of Summer Waves merchandise including T-shirts, a beach towel, tote bag, visors, mug and suntan lotion.

"This is our second consecutive year over the 100,000 visitor mark," said Tom Manning, Summer Waves general manager. "We are very pleased with that number considering it has been such a rainy summer."

Manning added that the park will wrap up the summer with a radio remote broadcasts by WMOG FM, Brunswick, Island 93 Saturday.

"A disc jockey, the 'Nate 38 Dance Party,' will also spin discs at the park on Labor Day, Monday. So we encourage everyone to come out and have some 'splashtacular' fun at Summer Waves before our season ends after Labor Day," Manning said.

Summer Waves is open Sunday through Thursday from 10 a.m. to 6 p.m.; Friday and Saturday from 10 a.m. to 8 p.m. All-day admission is $9.95 adult, $7.50 ages 4 to 8, and free for children 3 and under. Senior Splash (60 and over) and Night Splash (Sunday through Thursday after 4 p.m.; Friday and Saturday after 5 p.m.) admissions are $5 each.

For more information, call Summer Waves water park at (912) 635-2074.

PWOC begins new season

By Gabriele Sonnenberg
USAIC Chaplains' Office

The Protestant Women of the Chapel is an organization which extends to all women a invitation to find fellowship, opportunities for service, and personal spiritual growth.

PWOC is a large, active, and effective organiztion at Fort Benning that provides not only personal spiritual growth to its members, but also gives much of its time and heart to the community, according to members of the group.

The women met for a potluck and a workshop Aug. 16 at the Religious Education Center.

During the workshop busy hands prepared nametags and material for a quilt. The quilt will be composed by each member of the PWOC to reflect that everybody's contribution is necessary to make the quilt.

The theme of the new year, which starts Thursday, will be "He is Lord of all."

During the first meeting, the history of quilts will be discussed and Chaplain (Maj.) Rick Garrison will be the guest-speaker.

The Fall Bible studies will begin Sept. 12 and include the following subjects:

● Sept. 19 — "II Peter" — Robin Kennedy will lead this in-depth, inductive study through Kay Arthur's ministry.

● Sept. 26 — "Growing strong in God's family" — It is a Navigator's discipleship study directed by Melody Knight.

● Oct. 3 — "Deuteronomy" — Dawn Stevens will conduct the life change series.

● Oct. 10 — "Becoming a woman of excellence" by Cynthia Heald — It will be led by Lilliet Garrison.

PWOC meets each Thursday at the Religious Education Center, Intersection of Ingersoll and Dixie Road. Fellowship begins at 9:30 with the program lasting until 11:45. Baby-sitting is available at no charge.

For more information, contact Ruth Bloomstrom at 689-4553 or Vickie Phelps at 687-7583. If transportation is needed, call Jeanne Bastone at 682-3358.

Contact touches callers' lives

By Gabriele Sonnenberg
USAIC Chaplains' Office

It was 2 a.m. when the phone rang. A weary voice said, "I have to talk to somebody. I can't sleep. My life is so empty. I don't know if I can face another day.

At 7 a.m. an anxious voice whispered, "My husband and I had a terrible fight last night. He left, and I don't think he is coming back. I don't know what to do."

At 11 a.m. a young caller explained "I am new here and already I can tell I'll never fit in. All the kids at school have their own friends. It seems like no one notices me or cares about me at all."

These are the types of calls Contact has answered 24 hours-a-day for the past 12 years.

Volunteers have responded to many thousands of people who have called the help line to talk about their loneliness, fears, depression, confusion, or sorrows. Callers are from Fort Benning, Columbus, Phenix City and even some from further away.

Callers are assured of confidentiality and encouraged to discuss personal problems.

After situations are sorted through, volunteers help callers discover alternatives based on individual strengths and goals. Should a caller need further information or referral, Contact keeps an active file on other helpful resources in the area.

Contact offers the community a life line and symbol of hope, an expression of love and concern and an affirmation of the worth of every person.

"We welcome people who are interested in becoming volunteers. We are not just a suicide hotline, but we are available to listen to any problem," said Susan Stanton, executive director.

Contact makes it clear that they do not give advice, they do not diagnose, and they do not solve problems. Its purpose is to help the caller focus on his or her feelings and help him or her get a clearer awareness of the nature of the problem.

Contact offers a 50-hour college level program on active listening and effective crisis intervention skills, which can also be used in daily living.

"The Contact volunteers are a close family promoting a healthy atmosphere in which to grow,"one of the volunteers explained. "It is amazing how inadequately we listen, and even worse, how we always want to 'rescue' others.

"Furthermore, as a volunteer in Contact, we are a part of a challenging and rewarding service. We give a lot, and receive much in return," the volunteer added.

To volunteers, Contact offers a chance to meet new friends, to strengthen one's faith, to learn and grow and help others.

A new training program will start Sept. 19. The class will meet once weekly until completion of the 50-hour program in January. The students are observed and evaluated during the training.

Because of the extensive training, volunteers are required to work eight hours a month for one year. Additionally, to keep the skills current, a continuing education program is offered.

Once a year the Fort Benning chaplains designate one Sunday as "Contact Sunday," and all of the offerings received are donated to Contact. The next Contact Sunday will be Sept. 8.

"We appreciate the support of the military personnel, it has helped a lot to keep Contact operational," Susan Stanton explained.

"As a Family Life Center chaplain dealing with families all the time, I appreciate that Contact is available 24 hours-a-day, 7 days-a-week," said Chaplain (Maj.) Rick Roggia. "It is also good to know that when people call Contact, there is a trained listener ready to respond to their needs."

For more information on the training or for help, call Contact at 327-3999.

Civic group seeks tutors

Communities of Southeast Columbus

The Combined Communities of Southeast Columbus is an organization designed to enhance the promotional growth of its residents through education, politics and civic functions throughout the entire city.

The organization was founded by Lonnie Jackson, a retired Army sergeant, in December of 1982. In June 1983, the organization established its first Annual Summer Tutorial Program.

The program operates on an all-volunteer platform of local administrators, teachers, individuals, sororities, fraternities, and college and high school students. Many volunteers represent the adjacent counties and the Fort Benning Schools.

The tutorial program was originally set up to meet the basic needs of students in grades second through eighth in reading and math. Since its inception, the program has served more than 3,000 students.

More than 350 qualified teachers and 1,000 aides have made the program possible, according to Jackson.

CCSC is asking for volunteers from all segments of the community for its year-round program.

CCSC Volunteer School Year Tutorial Program will start Sept. 7 at Eastway School on Buena Vista Road across from Wal-Mart. Each instructor will be asked to tutor for one, two, three or four weeks on Saturdays from 10 a.m. to noon. Instruction will be core-type education, second through eighth grade. An aide is defined as a high school graduate, seniors, juniors and college students. Teachers are needed in reading, math, science and other fields.

For further information, contact Jackson at 687-5357 or Daisy Honor at 687-8808.

Employees receive suggestion awards

By Brian C. Sutton
Bayonet staff writer

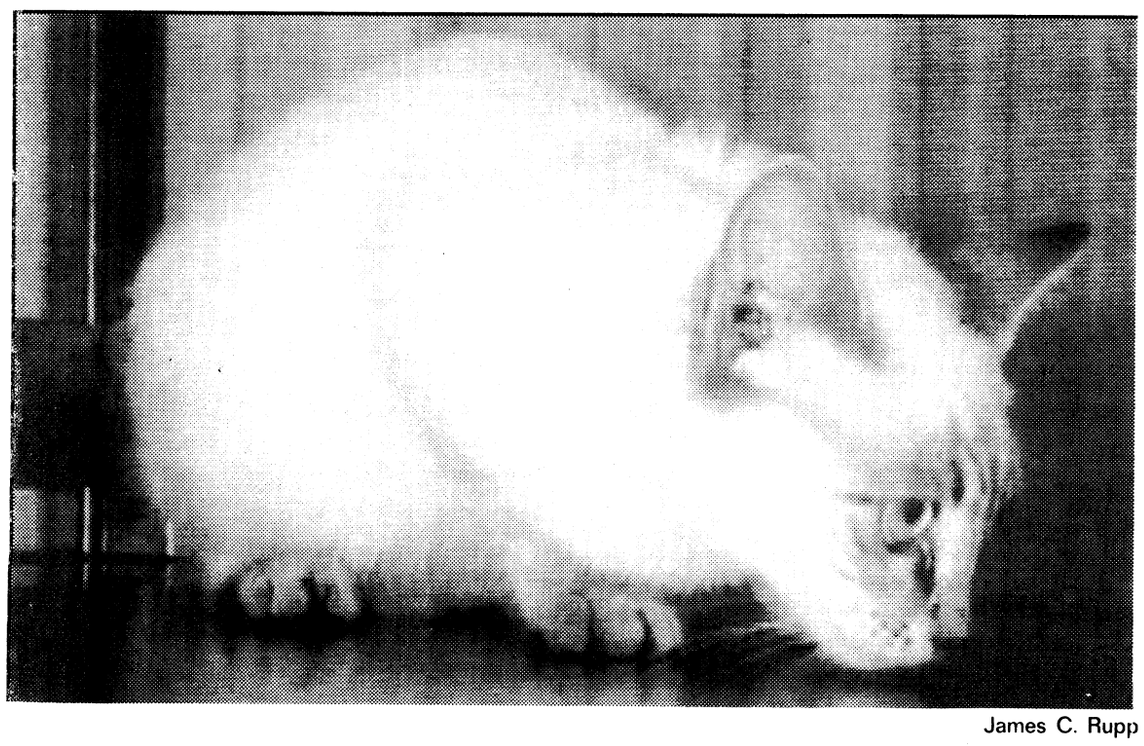
Several Fort Benning civilian employees received monetary awards Monday at the Adjutant General's offices and the Maintenance Division, Directorate of Logistics, for suggestions to help improve the post's efficiency and productivity.

Nine individuals were given awards by the post Chief of Staff, Col. John D. Fuller, to total $4,725.72.

Master Sgt. Thomas Carter, AG, received $1,500 for a suggestion proposing that the mass casualty support system, a compiled software application, be adopted for use by Fort Benning. This system uses standard installation/division personnel system data that ensures accuracy of basic information, provides summary and case reports and does not require the purchase of additional software to run. This program will replace the manual system that had no feature to ensure accuracy of data input. His accepted idea will save Fort Benning an annual $28,860.

Maj. Phillip Drumheiser, AG, received $100 for an idea proposing that a procedure be established to advertise availability of turned-in computer hardware installation-wide. Adoption of this idea will result in a more equitable distribution of excess computer equipment.

David Orr and Murl Harmon of DOL received $1,129.16 each for two suggestions they, as a team, had approved for implementation. One award was for a suggestion proposing that battery chargers be fabricated from excess electronic parts and installed in the computerized rowing machines in the post gymnasiums. The battery chargers can be mounted on a printed circuit board compatible with the rower's circuitry. Adoption of this idea will eliminate the time spent by maintenance personnel removing the batteries and returning them to the shop for recharging.



Orr and Harmon's second award was for proposing that the zero-pressure, lever-operated, integrated chip dual-in-line sockets used in target mechanisms on Buckner range be replaced with standard integrated chip dual-in-line sockets to alleviate constant reseating of sockets.

Homer Wade, DOL, received $250 for his idea proposing that the retaining tabs for the hand guards on the receiver of the M-249 squad automatic weapon be fabricated and welded to the weapons. Adoption of this idea will alleviate a severe shortage of the SAW.

Donald Lindsey, DOL, received $150 for a suggestion proposing the fabrication of a tool to hold down the cover assembly of the M-60 machine gun during repair. Adoption of this idea will make the repair procedure for the cover assembly less difficult.

Doyle Bias and Clifford Feltner, DOL, were awarded $202.19 for proposing that the rear bracket mounting assembly guide supporting the firing cable on a M-67, 90mm recoilless rifle be prefabricated and installed in lieu of procuring and installing a new bracket. This idea will bring $4,043.80 in annual savings.

Egon Taylor, DOL, was awarded $265.21 for his suggestion proposing that the rear door to Room W-77, West Wing, Building 4, be permanently closed, and a smaller door be installed in the existing door. This will create $1,652 in annual savings.

379 affected by cuts

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Post employees affected by the Army's plan to downsize the civilian work force were handed letters last week informing them of changes to their job status.

Changes ranged from being moved to other positions on post to being released from employment with the federal government.

Post officials determined that it was necessary to conduct a reduction in the civilian work force after a thorough review of fiscal year 1992 budget and manpower guidance received from higher headquarters.

A total of 379 employees are affected by the downsizing of the Army at Fort Benning. Of that, 129 are presently scheduled for separation (although that figure may be reduced), 131 will be reassigned to a lower pay grade, and 119 others will be reassigned in their present grade.

How many affected?

129 — to be separated
131 — reassigned to lower grade
119 — reassigned in present grade

The Directorate of Civilian Personnel used reduction-in-force procedures to determine which employees were affected in the resultant work force turbulence.

Those employees received specific notice on Aug. 30. Employees being separated will work through Nov. 9 and employees being reassigned or changed to a lower grade will be affected on Nov. 10.

All employees involved in this action will be individually counseled regarding their employment status, entitlement to other jobs, pay retention or adjustment, placement assistance at other federal agencies and private industry and retirement eligibility.

A RIF Information Center is available to employees who have been counseled about their options. It is located in the DCP, Building 2522.

Fort Benning officials noted the post is dedicated to protecting the job rights of individuals and is striving to minimize the impact of this reduction in the work force. They said all employees involved in this action should be aware that specific job offers or notices of separation identified in their letters, received Aug. 30, are subject to change.

Budget cuts prompt personnel cuts; plans help reduce impact on force

TRADOC News Service

FORT MONROE, Va. — Training and Doctrine Command's methods for decreasing the size of the command's civilian work force have been touted by Army officials as the model approach for other major commands to follow.

TRADOC officials over the past four years have been able to accomplish the downsizing without creating turmoil among its civilian employees. However, a drastically smaller budget has forced the command to begin separating people as well as eliminating jobs.

In fact, more than 1,000 people at 17 TRADOC installations and activities recently received notifications of separation under reduction in force actions.

"In fiscal year 1987, TRADOC employed 40,000 people," said Dick Dixon, chief of staffing and classification for TRADOC's civilian personnel directorate. "Currently, there are 33,600 people, but by FY 93 that number will be down to 29,000. It may go even lower."

Larry Stallings, deputy budget chief in TRADOC's deputy chief of staff for resource management organization, agrees that it may go lower. "With the budget forecast, we can't afford to pay all 29,000 people in '93," he said. "TRADOC will lose 26 percent of its purchasing power from fiscal year 1991 to '93. Civilian pay is 44 percent of our budget."

Overall the Army is slated to reduce its civilian workforce 25 percent by FY 94. TRADOC's outs from FY87 to 93 will amount to 30 percent.

Dixon said that Raymond Sumser, director of the Army civilian personnel office, has requested a copy of TRADOC's reduction plan.

Planning has been the key element of TRADOC's efforts, according to Dixon. Plus, CPD maintains close coordination with resource management. "We could see where the resource lines — the budget — in TRADOC were going and that RIFs would be required. We hoped the RIFs would be small, but they started out as fairly large ones," he said.

"We tried to anticipate events, and ensured that all players at the headquarters and the installations were made part of the actions."

One of the things TRADOC installations did institute a hiring freeze in FY90 that was even r restrictive than the Department of Defense freeze. T

598th completes Gulf tour

By James C. Rupp
Bayonet staff writer

Fort Benning can finally prepare to strip down the yellow ribbons that have been hung around the post for over a year.

The 598th Maintenance Company has returned.

After spending nearly 13 months in Saudi Arabia, the men and women of the 598th returned Wednesday, landing at Lawson Army Airfield in the early evening.

The unit returned to the sound of the 283rd Army Band and the greetings of family members and post officials.

According to Command Sgt. Maj. James Buie, of the 36th Engineer Group, the unit spent the majority of its time in the area of Dharan, Saudi Arabia.

The unit left Fort Benning with approximately 190 men and women and numbered up to 250 personnel while in the Saudi Arabian peninsula, Buie said.

Buie also added that the 598th Maintenance Co. is composed of an estimated 16 different military occupational specialties.

Maj. Gen. Carmen J. Cavezza, post commanding general, welcomed the troops home with the presentation of a large yellow ribbon which was cut to symbolize the arrival of the last Fort Benning unit.

Cavezza also presented the 598th's 1st Sgt. Louis McNeill with a wreath that Cavezza said he had vowed to keep upon the door to his office until "the last Fort Benning unit came home."

"I'm thankful that we're back," McNeill said. "I thank God we have returned with everyone we left with."

While the 598th is the last Fort Benning unit to return, smaller detachments and individuals from this post still remain in Saudi Arabia, according to statistics from the Adjutant General Personnel Automation Branch.

Bayonet gets new printer

More sections, color photos and a weekly TV schedule

By Agatha Hudson James
Bayonet editor

This issue of the Bayonet may look a little different. That's because we have a new printer and have made some changes to the paper. New teaser boxes in our flag and new section logos are just some of the more obvious changes.

Beginning with this issue, the post newspaper that serves the Fort Benning community has a new printer. After being printed by the Columbus Ledger-Enquirer for 49 years, the Bayonet will now be printed by the Advertiser Company, publishers of the Montgomery Advertiser and Alabama Journal.

The Bayonet continues to be Fort Benning's "authorized" command information newspaper. We have additional staff and are planning complete community, sports and training sections. Along with more color photography, the paper will also have a complete eight-page TV section.

Technological improvements for the Bayonet include a switch to desktop publishing.

The newspaper will continue to be published every Friday with distribution postwide. Any organization needing a Bayonet newspaper rack or more copies of the Bayonet can call the Public Affairs Office at 545-2201.

Story ideas, comments or suggestions about the editorial portion of the paper should also be addressed to the Public Affairs Office.

Advertising

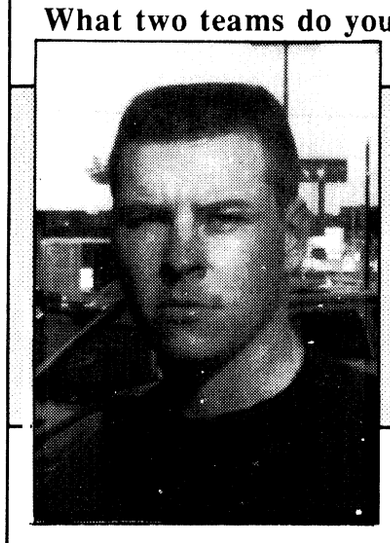
Classified or commercial advertising requests are being handled by The Advertiser Company. They are located at 1819 South Lumpkin Road and are ready to handle both display and classified advertisements and subscriptions. Call 682-3346 for more information.

The new contract allows soldiers, Department of Army civilians and family members to take out free classified ads. Individuals interested in placing a free classified ad should stop by the Bayonet office in Building 4, Room 601 and fill out the classified advertising form. Proper military or civilian identification will be required.

Desert Storm section coming

By Alyanna B. Summers
Bayonet staff writer

With the return Wednesday of the 598th Maintenance Company, the last unit that served in Operations Desert Shield and Desert Storm, a chapter in Fort Benning history and the history of the U.S. Armed Forces as a whole, has drawn to a close. A special section dedicated to the Army's success in Operations Desert Shield and Desert Storm will be featured in the Sept. 13 edition of the Fort Benning Bayonet.



The special pullout section, terntatively titled, "Desert Storm : A Look Back, " will highlight the involvement and accomplisnments of Fort Benning troops that have served or are still serving in Saudi Arabia.

Stories, personal accounts and photographs will be included to tell the story of the Gulf War from a Fort Benning point of view.

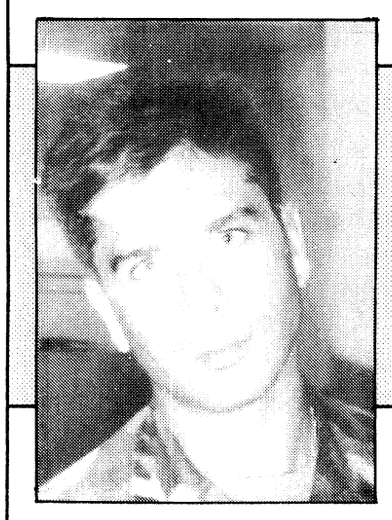
What two teams do you believe will appear in this season's Super Bowl?



Spc. Thomas Merryman, Company D, 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor Regiment — "I believe that it will be the Redskins and the Bears. I believe the 'Skins will win it, because if I didn't, my dad would be angry."

2nd Lt. Brian Robertson, 507th Parachute Infantry Regiment — "I think it will end up with the Redskins vs. the Buffalo Bills. I think it will be them because Randall Cunningham of the Philadelphia Eagles is out, and Joe Montana won't be around for the 49ers."

Spc. Timothy Seward, Company B, 2nd Battalion, 18th Infantry Regt. — "I think it will be the Bills and the Giants. They're both looking sharp. The Bills have been blowing everyone away and the Giants have a real tough defense."

Spc. Robert A. Smithline, Headquarters, Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, 11th Inf. Regt. — "I think the Giants and the 49ers will be in the Super Bowl. Both teams are tough and seem to be on their feet both defensively and offensively."

Veronica Alexander, family member — "I believe it will be Miami and Denver. Both of the teams' quarterbacks are good and looking sharp this season."

Michelle Saunders, family member — "I think it will be the Bears due to their tough defense and the 49ers because of their good offense."

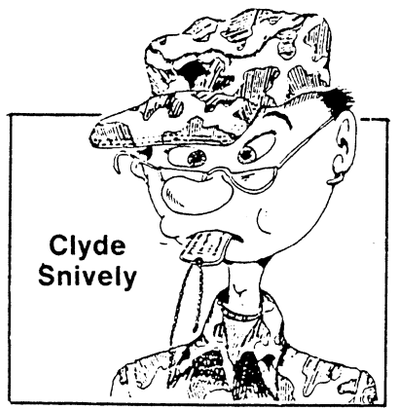
Growing often can be a pain

COMMENTARY

You military people who move frequently can appreciate what we've been going through this past week as we moved to our "new home." In this case our new home is a new printer. The printer, who won the contract to print The Bayonet is from Montgomery.

Based on his proposals, we expect to bring a bigger and better paper to you, our readers.

Our office is the same place with crummy carpets and no windows, but the way we do business and our equipment has all changed.



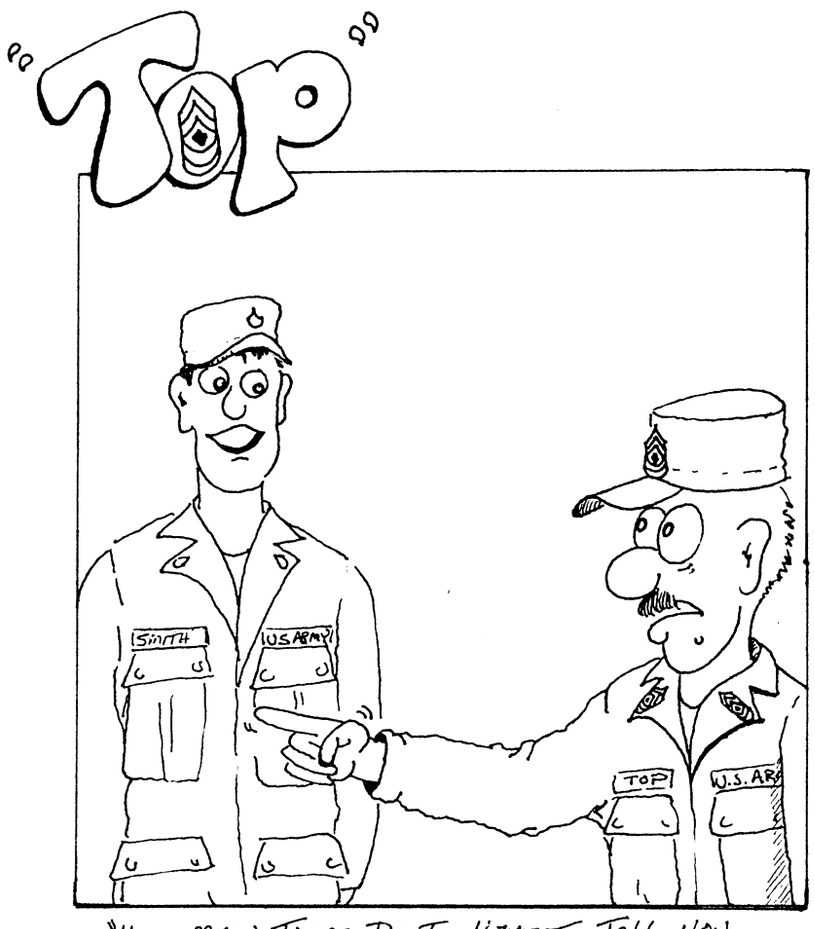
So where a housewife may forget where the pots and pans are, a minor inconvenience, we might forget how to log on to the new printer via our computers, a serious error in judgment.

But once we get the bugs worked out, look out!

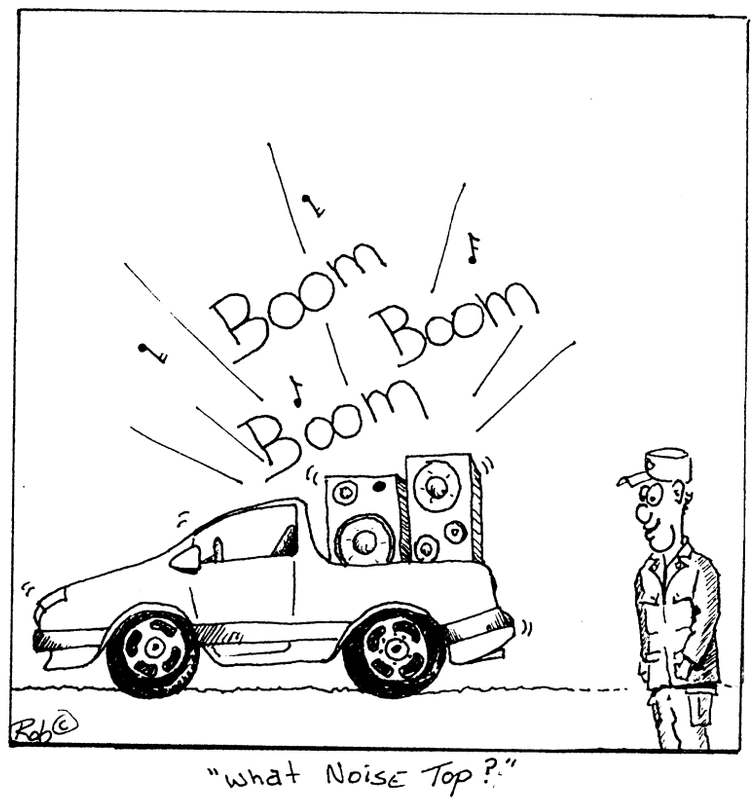
First, our printer is hiring three reporters. Those reporters will be available to cover events on and off post that we think our readers will be interested in. So those of you who've been waiting about "no sports," or "no community news," you'll soon get your fill.

But bear with us as we get used to our new equipment. Right now we're all trying to learn how to work the new computer programs, which really seem to be easier than the old ones.

And while I've never complained about holidays before, this particular one didn't come at the best of times, cutting a day out of our work schedule.



This printer is also providing us all the film we can use and has a contract with a local firm to process the film. This will help us get more pictures into the paper and in less time. So look for more pictorial coverage of your activities too.



We, the members of The Bayonet staff are looking forward to working with the new printer because we think we can provide you a better product.

Because we think the paper will be larger, that means we also need help from you in letting us know what's going on. You can send in your stories, or call us at The Bayonet office at 545-2201, if you've got something going on that you think others need to know about.

But, in the meantime, hang in there as we go through some growing pains on our way to getting bigger and better.

Commanding general urges soldiers to be safe on cycles

The safety of our military and civilian personnel and their family members is paramount at all times. Two of our traffic fatalities this year were from motorcycle accidents. One soldier failed the motorcycle safety course, and the other did not attend.

The soldier who failed the motorcycle safety course was not wearing a helmet and died of head injuries.

Army Regulation 385-55, Prevention of Motor Vehicle Accidents, requires that every soldier and civilian authorized to operate a motorcycle on an Army installation is required to complete an Army-approved motorcycle safety course.

Soldiers must wear the following safety equipment wherever and whenever (on or off post) they operate or ride a motorcycle:

- An approved helmet
- Proper eye protection
- Full-fingered gloves
- Long trousers
- Long-sleeved shirt or jacket
- High visibility garments (bright color for day and reflective for night)
- Leather boots or over-the-ankle shoes.

Civilians must comply with these requirements while on post and while on government business, on or off the installation.

As we instill safety in our training and operations, we must also instill safety in off-duty activities. These losses must stop.

Leaders must make every effort to ensure that our personnel are trained and equipped with the proper safety equipment.

Maj. Gen. Carmen J. Cavezza
Fort Benning commander

Family seminar set for Sept. 11

Fort Benning will conduct its annual Army Family Seminar Sept. 11 at the Fort Benning Officer's Club.

Karen Crowley, coordinator of this year's seminar, said the purpose is to discover areas that need improvement.

"This is the beginning for individuals to raise issues about the quality of their lives and make suggestions on how it can be solved," said Crowley. "Some of the issues raised can be solved locally, and others have to be referred to Training and Doctrine Command and the Department of the Army."

The goal of the Army Family Program is to improve the quality of life for soldiers and their families, as well as other members of the Army "family," such as reservists, retirees, and civilian employees.

While each unit on post has been tasked to send representatives to the seminar, Crowley stressed the seminar is open to anyone.

"We want to hear from anyone who has suggestions to improve the quality of life at Fort Benning," she said.

The seminar begins at 9 a.m., includes a free lunch for participants, and concludes at 2:30 p.m.

Reservations must be made by close of business Sept. 6. For more information contact Karen Crowley at 545-5516.

Management group meets Sept. 19

The guest speaker is Andrew D. Lester, Ph.D, professor of Pastoral Care and Counseling at the Brite Divinity School of Texas Christian University, Fort Worth, Texas.

Lester's presentation is "Are you wishing your life away?" He will speak on the significance of hope and hopelessness and the difference between hoping and wishing.

Additional business will be election of officers and recognition of scholarship recipients. Tickets can be purchased for $5 (includes lunch) prior to the meeting no later than Sept. 13 from Wynona Johnson, Room 454, Building 4 (545-4214) or Myrtle Chalkley, Room 452, Building 4 (545-4426).

Engineers brighten child development center in big way

By James E. Baker
Contributing writer

Completing a unique project and providing assistance to the post, the 43rd Engineer Combat Battalion (Heavy) recently took on its first mission upon return from the Persian Gulf — repainting classrooms.

With the battalion's equipment slow in returning, the soldiers have had a challenge in obtaining missions that are appropriate for an engineer unit, according to 2nd Lt. Pablo Ruiz of Company A.

Company A repainted 6,000 square feet of wall space in four classrooms at the Patch Early Child Development Center, building 7, near Lumpkin and Baltzell Roads. A request was made by Kathy Crawford, school principal, to the battalion and a construction directive was issued through battalion channels to Company A. The school provided the supplies.

"This 10-day mission was a good switch because normally the battalion doesn't get work on post; it's usually either Directorate of Engineering and Housing operations or civilian contracting firms that get this type of work," said Ruiz.

In July the battalion vehicles started trickling in with the majority of equipment arriving in early August, according to Ruiz.

"In addition to giving the unit a chance to work in a field that is seldom practiced, the assignment kept the unit busy until their equipment arrived," according to Staff Sgt. Richard Stewart.

Tooth loss dangers loom for many adults

By DENTAC

According to statistics, three out of four people over age 35 have some form of periodontal disease — the leading cause of adult tooth loss.

If these statistics seem high, that's because they are. And because this is Adult Dental Awareness Week, the Fort Benning DENTAC is hoping to better educate adults about one of America's more prevalent diseases.

According to Dr. John Bryson, Preventive Dentistry Officer, most cases of periodontal disease can be prevented. "The most important thing people can do at home is to get into the habit of brushing and flossing every day. Simple as it seems, these steps help to combat the cause of periodontal infection, which is plaque," said Dr. Bryson.

In addition to good dental habits at home, Dr. Bryson also encourages adults to recognize the warning signs of gum disease. They include gums that bleed easily; red, tender or swollen gums; gums that have pulled away from the teeth; pus between the teeth and gums; persistent bad breath; permanent teeth that are loose or separating; a change in the way teeth fit together; or a change in the fit of partial dentures.

Periodontal diseases are caused by types of bacteria in plaque, the sticky, colorless film of bacteria that constantly forms on the teeth. These bacteria create toxins (poisons) which irritate the gums and break down the attachment of gum tissues to the teeth.

Over a period of time, these toxins can destroy gum tissues, allowing the infection to progress to the underlying bone. Eventually, when left untreated, the gums, bone and ligaments that support the teeth become damaged. Teeth can become loose and fall out — or may have to be removed.

Submit 'THE' slogan, winner collects $100

By James C. Rupp
Bayonet Staff Writer

A crime prevention slogan contest is being sponsored by Fort Benning's Crime Prevention Quality Improvement Team. The contest began July 26.

The Military Police Activity is collecting the slogans, and the Sergeants Major Association is providing a $100 cash prize for the winning slogan.

According to Capt. Richard Gregory, chief of the Military Police Law Enforcement Division, people all over post are encouraged to create a slogan, theme or phrase that will make people more aware of what they can do to help prevent crime on post.

The winner of the contest will receive $100, compliments of the Sergeants Major Association.

"This is a way to get the community involved with what is going on across the post," Gregory said. "This is their community, and the best way to protect it is to get their help."

Participants may send entries to the Crime Prevention Section at the Military Police Activity.

Laundry payroll plan to be changed on Sept. 30

By James E. Baker
Contributing writer

The 30-year old Laundry Payroll Deduction program is being terminated on Sept. 30.

Citing increased operating costs incurred by the LPRD, the Headquarters of the Department of the Army has determined that it can no longer afford the program, according to Linda Lawrence of Commercial Services Surveillance Assistance.

Lawrence added that more than 2,000 permanent party personnel, not including trainees, are affected on post. However, the laundry patrons are not required to take any action involving the termination of their LPRD, the Defense Finance and Accounting Office will stop the deduction.

Presently, $12 per month is deducted from each program participant's pay check.

For this amount, according to Army Regulation 210-130, patrons are able to submit two bundles with up to 26 pieces of laundry including a laundry bag. Additional bundles are processed on the cash basis of an individual piece rate. The price for one battle dress uniform set is $2 for one-day service and $1.80 for three-day service.

"Since no laundry contract has been awarded for the next fiscal year, the new laundry prices haven't been determined. Additional information will be provided on the cost for LPRD and the individual piece rate as it becomes available," said Lawrence. "I believe the prices will be competitive with civilian laundry services."

Lawrence indicated that trainees will continue to have a one-time payroll deduction, which could be more expensive for soldiers because operation costs must be recouped on LPRD at each Army installation.

Currently, HDQA subsidizes the laundry service 52 cents per piece of clothing.

Lawrence provided an example of a typical week where there is a monetary shortfall.

On 8,653 laundry pieces that were turned in by 1,249 soldiers who used the laundry service, $4,499.56 was subsidized with appropriated funds. The soldiers' $3 per week LPRD contribution totalled $3,747, which resulted in a loss of $752.56.

"It is clear that the government has subsidized a program that has not paid for itself and has outlived its usefulness, " said Lawrence.

Soldiers must have the full physical training uniform ensemble by April 1 instead of October 1. The change in dates was contained in a recent message from the Department of the Army.

Army Safety Center plans cycle training

The Army Safety Center will conduct motorcycle instructor training in November.

Potential instructors must:

- Possess a valid motorcycle operators license or endorsement.
- Not have had a serious moving traffic violation (driving under the influence, reckless driving) within the previous three years.
- Be an experienced rider (two or more years or 15,000 miles).
- Currently own and operate a motorcycle.

Units will be responsible for travel and temporary duty cost.

Applications are available at the Infantry Branch Safety Office and must be returned no later than close of business Monday.

Number established for overseas calls

The U.S. Army Information Systems Command at Fort Benning has established a telephone number for booking overseas calls. The number is 545-1961.

This number will be manned from 7:30 a.m. until 4:30 p.m., Monday through Friday, and should be called instead of "O". Overseas calls will not be booked other than these hours except through the staff duty officer, and the staff duty officer must certify that it is an emergency.

Also, callers are reminded that toll tickets are only valid for 40 hours after booking.

Telephone users must dial calls direct

All local WATS (Wide Area Telephone Service) and DSN (Defense Switched Network) or AUTOVON (Automatic Voice Network) must be dialed directly. Requests for such calls to be placed by the Fort Benning operator from a telephone that has the proper capability to dial such calls direct will not be processed by the operator.

This does not affect requests for overseas DSN calls to be placed through the Fort Benning operator.

The program will focus on activities available to residents on and off post, with speakers from the Civil Air Patrol and the Fort Benning Volunteer Agency, through the Directorate of Community Activities.

Soldiers to complete run today

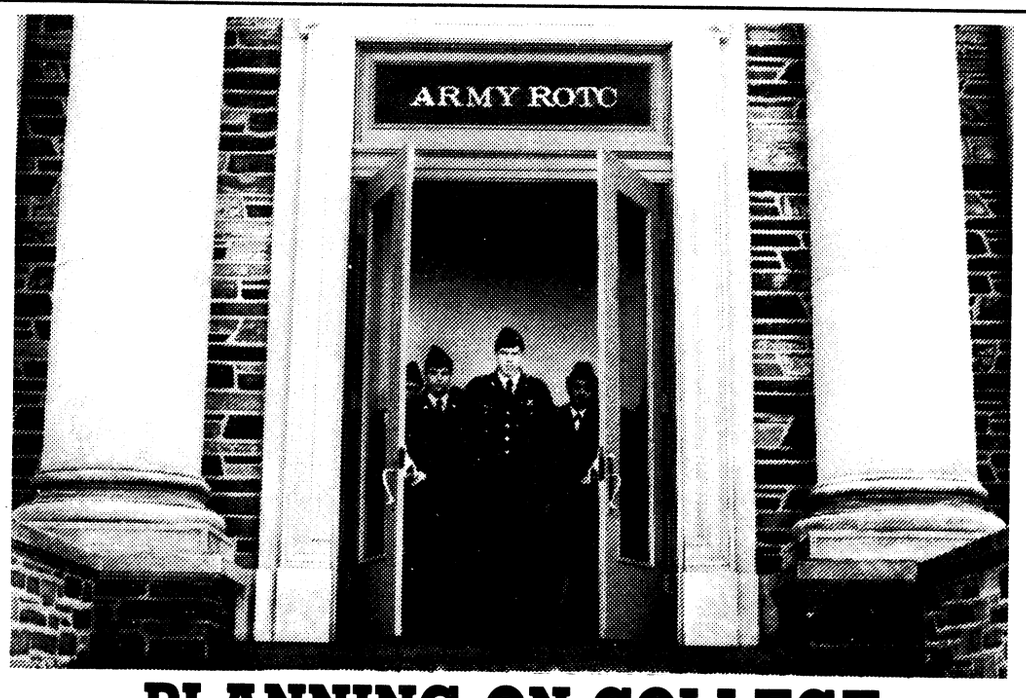
USAIC Public Affairs office

Fort Rucker soldiers will finish their third annual Fort Benning Run at 8 a.m. today, at the Follow Me statue in front of Infantry Hall.

A platoon-sized group of approximately 30 soldiers will conduct a relay run over the 100-mile distance between Fort Rucker and Fort Benning.

Runners must have a two mile run time of 15 minutes or less. Last year's time for the run was 11 hours and 47 minutes. The runners will leave the Aviation Center at 4:30 p.m. Sept. 5.

The run is conducted much like a walk-a-thon with runners signing up sponsors who will pay charitable organizations a certain amount for each mile the runner or the unit runs. The Fort Rucker runners raised $1,200 for Army Emergency Relief during last year's run.



Participating in this year's run will be the Commanding General of the Aviation Center, Maj. Gen. Dave Robinson. The runners will be greeted during a ceremony at Infantry Hall by Maj. Gen. Carmen J. Cavezza, Fort Benning's commanding general, at 8 a.m.

The Advertiser Co.
Exclusive Printers Of THE BAYONET
Fort Benning's Only Authorized Newspaper
1817 So. Lumpkin Road • Columbus, Ga. 31903 • (404) 682-3346 • Fax (404) 682-3268

Dear Bayonet Advertiser,

We are delighted to be the new printers of The Bayonet, the authorized newspaper at Fort Benning and thus the only newspaper permitted by law to be distributed free throughout the installation and to all Fort Benning on-post personnel. You have undoubtedly heard the claim of a newly started newspaper that it will be distributed freely on the post; this is patently false, as you will immediately see.

We were invited by the Army to bid for the right to print The Bayonet and did so because our experience as the publishers of the Maxwell-Gunter AFB Dispatch in Montgomery convinced us that we could do a great job.

We won the contract in sealed bids against competitors because we are providing a far better newspaper than has existed before. You will see a larger newspaper; one printed on heavier, brighter and far superior paper; one of higher technical quality, containing more color photographs and graphics; one with more reader interest than ever and with an expanded civilian staff; in sum, a paper much more appealing to readers and advertisers alike.

The Advertiser Company has been in business 162 years and has a great reputation for quality and service, both of which you will find flawless. We have established our permanent office outside the main gate at 1817 So. Lumpkin Road. We have already hired more than a half-dozen Columbus employees, have installed tens of thousands of dollars of new computer equipment purchased from Columbus dealers to assist with your ads, and are committed to providing you with a far better advertising vehicle than you have had before. We have expanded the employment and sales of Columbus, and will be active in the community, including as members of the Chamber of Commerce.

You may have seen a front-page story in the Columbus paper and a letter to advertisers from that paper which denigrate The Bayonet, the very paper that the Columbus paper printed for years. We regret this negative tactic. You might ask yourself: Why is the Columbus paper denying the validity of the paper they encouraged you to buy for years? It is the same now, only better. If the Columbus paper has such a bright idea starting its own "military" newspaper, why didn't it do it earlier? Why has it cheated you out of this great idea for so long and, instead, has persuaded you to advertise in such a bad idea? Their pique at losing the contract through inferior efforts is unbecoming.

You need to know that The Bayonet is and will remain the only general distribution free newspaper allowed into Fort Benning. That means only The Bayonet will reach the audience you have been reaching and want to continue to reach. Only The Bayonet will contain the military news of the Army that has been of interest to your customers for years. Alternative publications have been attempted elsewhere across the country, but never have been successful for advertisers or readers. We're the Real Thing.

Our sales staff — all experienced Columbus sales people — will be in touch shortly if they have not already visited. We want to continue the relationship which has served you so well in the past, and promise you we will provide the best sales and service at The Bayonet that you have ever experienced.

Most important, we want to hear your suggestions on how we can serve you better.

Thank you,

RIF: Well-studied cuts reduce troubles for all installations could not hire for most jobs, and they lost workers through normal attrition. That created vacancies.

When jobs were cut, either the vacant positions were eliminated, or people who lost jobs were moved into them.

Previously, personnel specialists could rely on attrition to account for some reductions. TRADOC's annual attrition rate was 7 percent, but it has dropped to 4 percent. In addition to employee retirements, other workers took jobs with other DOD and federal agencies and in the private sector. Hiring freezes throughout the government and the condition of the national economy have caused most of the movement to cease.

After it became apparent that deeper budget cuts would force RIFs, TRADOC instituted a one-week training program for its installations' CPO staffs. The last significant RIFs in the Army occurred in the 1960s, Dixon said. Consequently, CPO specialists had little or no experience in the process.

Personnel specialists from other Army major commands also attended the workshops.

When an installation commander realizes that a RIF of at least 50 people is necessary, approval must be obtained from DA. After a detailed package is submitted to an approved by TRADOC CPO, approval from DA takes 45 to 60 days.

"If a RIF involves less that 50 people, only DA notification is required," Dixon said. "Even so, the planning and execution of either action must start early to ensure fair treatment is provided to employees, and to ensure the reduction can be accomplished within the fiscal year."

When a RIF for an installation is approved, many factors determine who will be retained, downgraded or separated. Some of these are length of service, performance ratings and veterans' preference.

The CPO staff at Fort Knox, Ky., developed an automated system to assist in conducting RIFs. Called "RIF Runner," it has been adopted by DA for use throughout the Army. RIF Runner considerably reduces the time required to conduct a RIF, according to Dixon.

"The automated system is a much more efficient way of conducting RIFs. Still, planning and early approval of RIF actions are important," he said. "Employees' status can change drastically over an extended period requiring reworking of the RIF process.

"The operating CPOs in the field put in long and hard hours to make sure it (RIF) is done properly."

An employee who will be separated or downgraded must be notified 60 days before the action is effective. He or she will be counseled about employees' rights. All employees have the right to see the "RIF register," which explains how each is ranked.

An employee can elect to enter the DOD priority placement program. He or she then becomes eligible for DOD jobs in the employee's chosen are of the country. Workers on priority placement lists must be hired before other applicants.

Job-finding assistance is given to separated employees through the Army Career Alumni Program. This assistance includes help with preparing resumes and counseling on job search and interviewing techniques.

"A RIF is not a pleasant thing for us; we don't enjoy doing it," Dixon said. "It's difficult from the standpoint of actually planning for it and conducting it. Then there are the people — you're actually affecting peoples' lives, their livelihoods.

"We take a RIF quite seriously and want to make sure it's run fairly and consistently, and that everybody's treated in accordance with their rights," he said.

Columbus man speaks at graduation

The Ranger Training Battalion held a ranger class graduation Sept. 3 at 11a.m. on Malvesti Field. The guest speaker was retired Col. Ralph Puckett Jr., who currently resides in Columbus.

Puckett graduated from the United States Military Academy, West Point, N.Y., in 1949.

As a young lieutenant, he formed and commanded the 8th Army Ranger Company, attached to the 25th infantry Division.

In 1950, he deployed them into combat, where he was wounded-in-action.

Puckett was awarded the Distinguished Service Cross and three Purple Hearts for his actions.

Among numerous awards for valor and meritorious achievement, Puckett received a second Distinguished Service Cross during the Vietnam' war.

Puckett is married to the former Jean Martin of Columbus, Ga. They have a son, Tom, and two daughters, Jean and Martha.

Schools join in DARE ringing

In commemoration of DARE day Sept. 12, schools and churches across the country have agreed to participate in a "Bell Ringing for DARE." Bells will be rung at the same time, 10 a.m. PDT and 1 p.m. EDT across the country. In conjunction with National DARE Day, Fort Benning participation will include the ringing of chapel bells at the above stated times and the commemoration of the DARE Day in all Fort Benning Schools.

Students from Faith, Wilson, Dexter, Loyd, McBride, Wilbur, White and Patch schools will be joining 20 million students across the country to celebrate DARE.

DARE's aim is to educate and motivate young people about the ills of drug use; therefore, significantly reducing the demand for drugs — legal (alcohol and tobacco) and illegal.

AAFES workers lauded by post

Some Army and Air Force Exchange Service workers were given a commendation by Col. John D. Fuller, post chief of staff for their continuing hard work in a makeshift facility while a new store was under construction.

Reward offered

A reward of $750 is being offered for the apprehension and conviction of the person responsible for the attempted murder of a soldier on Fort Benning. The incident occurred at approximately 2:30 a.m. on Aug. 11 in the parking lot of the Hidden Door Club, when an unidentified black male shot the soldier in the abdomen with a small caliber pistol. The assailant then fled the area.

Anyone with information concerning this offense should contact the Fort Benning Criminal Investigation Division at 545-7052.

Skeet, trap teams make mark

By Charlene L. LaDay-Hill
U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit

Members of the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit's Skeet and Trap teams have made their mark in the shooting world recently. So far this summer, the shooters have competed in U.S. International Shooting Championships, Pan Am, and Interservice matches.

Spc. James T. Graves became the third person in shooting history to make the U.S. Shooting Team for both trap and skeet in the same year.

History was made during the U.S. International Trap and Skeet Championships held in Prado, Calif., June 18 to 22 and June 25 to 28. Graves shot a 386 out of 400 for second place in trap and third in skeet.

The international event had approximately 108 competitors in skeet and 112 in trap.

Graves also did well in the Interservice Trap and Skeet Championships held here Aug. 2 to 4 and Aug. 16 to 18 at Hook Range, he placed second with a 293 after a sudden-death shoot-off in the skeet championships.

Also during interservice, he shot on both skeet and trap three-man teams.

In skeet, Graves' team set a new national record with a 442 out of 450. His trap team also won interservice with a 418. The interservice event had 52 shoots compete in trap; 32 in skeet.

"I feel great," said Graves, who has only been shooting skeet for two years. "To be able to qualify for both skeet and trap U.S. teams was one of my major goals."

"I've been shooting trap since 1984, so I'm pretty experienced in that area," he added. "My coach (Burl Branham, Army trap and skeet coach) got me into shooting skeet. I use to fool around and shoot skeet during lunch with coach. I was already on the Army Trap Team, but he felt that I had potential to be on the Army Skeet Team too. So I gave it a try and have been competing on both teams ever since."

Spc. Shawn C. Dulohery won the Interservice Skeet Championships with a 293. He tangled with Graves in a 25-target shoot-off match, which further advanced into a 59-target sudden-death match. Dulohery nipped his fellow teammate 59 to 58. During the U.S. Nationals he placed seventh with a 382. Dulohery also competed with Graves in a three-man skeet team event.

Spc. Daro Handy won the Interservice Trap Championships with a score of 288.

The U.S. International Trap Champion Title was earned by Staff Sgt. Bret Erickson with a 391. This event was the first selection match for the 1992 Olympic Games, and the final team selection match for the 1992 Olympic Games, and the final team selection match for the Pan Am Games (Havana, Cuba) and the World Moving Target Championships (Perth, Australia).

Erickson was one of two USAMU trap shooters to compete in the Pan Am Games, where he placed fifth with a 180. He was also a member of the USA Three-man team which took a silver medal with a 415 out of 450.

"Everything just came together at the right time for me," said Erickson. "I'm happy to have a head start on some of my competitors as far as the 1992 Olympics are concerned.

"... as good as some of these guys are shooting this year I need as much of a head start as I can get."

According to Erickson, the U.S. dominated all shooting events overall. "We really didn't have problems with the Cuban crowd like most of the athletes did for other sports. I think they realized that when it comes to marksmanship, the Americans had the advantage."

Taking the gold medal in Pan Am Games for Trap was Spc. Jay Waldron with a 188. He also placed sixth in the USISC with a 385.

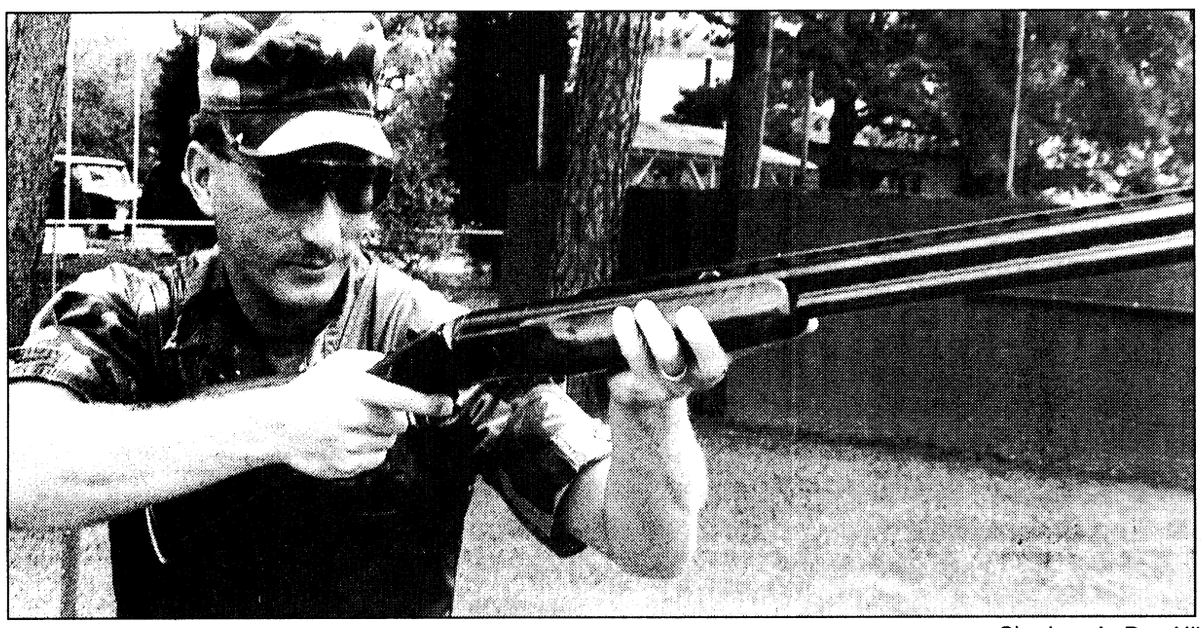
"This is the biggest victory of my career," said Waldron. "All I had been getting were second and thirds in major events, like nationals and world cup. I was always so close, but yet so far away from the big one. It feels so good to finally get it. It's what I've been training hard for."

Waldron's wife, Sharee, who's currently on the U.S. Women's Trap Shooting Team, recently won the Ladies National Trap Championships.

"I'm proud of my wife. We've been competing together for about four years now," said Waldron. "I always wish her lots of luck when she competes and she does the same for me."

"I'm glad that my husband supports what I do. I work hard to make him proud of me," said Sharee. "I just hope that we both continue to shoot well. It would be great if we could be the first married couple to compete in an Olympic event together."

For the female competitors Spc. Cindy Raahauge-Shenberger placed third in the women's international skeet competition with a 279 out of 300.



Spc. Shane Schwickerath took second place in the junior's international matches with a 284 out of 300. He was also a member of the three-man skeet team champions with Graves and Dulohery.

Other USAMU shooters taking spots in the USISC were Pfc. Billy Thompson place third with a 384; and Spc. William J. Roberts with a 385 finished fifth after shoot-off.

Marksmanship unit leads rifle, pistol school

By Charlene L. LaDay-Hill
U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit

In addition to competing in the 1991 National Matches at Camp Perry, Ohio, the U.S. Marksmanship Unit also organized and conducted the Small Arms Firing Schools for rifle and pistol.

The school provides classes not only for the competitors entered in the matches but for a large number of civilians interested in learning how to shoot. The classes are given by members of the U.S. Army Service pistol and rifle teams.

Since 1920, the school has been teaching shooters at Camp Perry the fundamentals of marksmanship and the importance of range safety.

The processing of the students is handled by members from the USAMU operations branch.

"Several days before the school we prepare student packets and make sure their entry is in order so that they can attend the school," said Sgt. 1st Class Vincent Yuille, assistant operations sergeant.

"Student attendance was higher than last year," said Laurence K. Moseley, SAFS operations officer. "This year 685 pistol and 1,308 rifle students attended for a record total of 1,993 students."

Because rifle has the largest number of students, their classes are held outdoors. Rifle students receive some entertainment before their classes. Instructors from the USAMU Rifle team put on a comical but informative skit for the students.

"Our guys put on this humorous demonstration for a good reason. It makes it easier for the student to relate to the key points in the blocks of instruction that follow," said Sgt. 1st Class Richard Wyckstandt, USAMU service rifle team coach. "This year's school was a total success."

For the novice student, we got a chance to introduce basic marksmanship concepts and for the advanced student, we were able to help them improve their marksmanship skills," remarked Mosely.

The SAFS played a major role in the functioning of the National Matches.

Marksmanship unit season closes out

By Charlene L. LaDay-Hill
U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit

Ending their summer season with a bang, the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit competed in the 1991 National Matches held from July 6 to Aug. 17 at Camp Perry, Ohio. The unit not only supported the nationals competitively but also provided marksmanship instruction.

The annual event consisted of three major matches — pistol, smallbore rifle, and highpower rifle. Three out of the seven U.S. Army Shooting Teams participated in this event -- service pistol, service rifle, and international rifle.

In addition the USAMU organized and conducted the Small Arms Firing School.

More than 5,000 competitors came from all over the country to participate in the nationals. For most of the shooters it was a chance to see some old familiar faces, while for others it was an opportunity to make marksmanship history.

Although the nationals is a predominantly civilian competition, that didn't phase the Army rifle shooters.

On the international side of the house, Sgt. Brad Carnes and 2nd Lt. Matthew Suggs finished second and third, respectively in the three-position championships with grand aggregates of 2,256 - 64X and 2,254 - 82X. Carnes also became the high service champion.

High woman champion honors went to 2nd Lt. Kristin Peterson with an aggregate of 2,230 - 78X for eight place in the three-position championships. She also earned the Elenor Dunn Trophy for firing a high score during the international postal team matches.

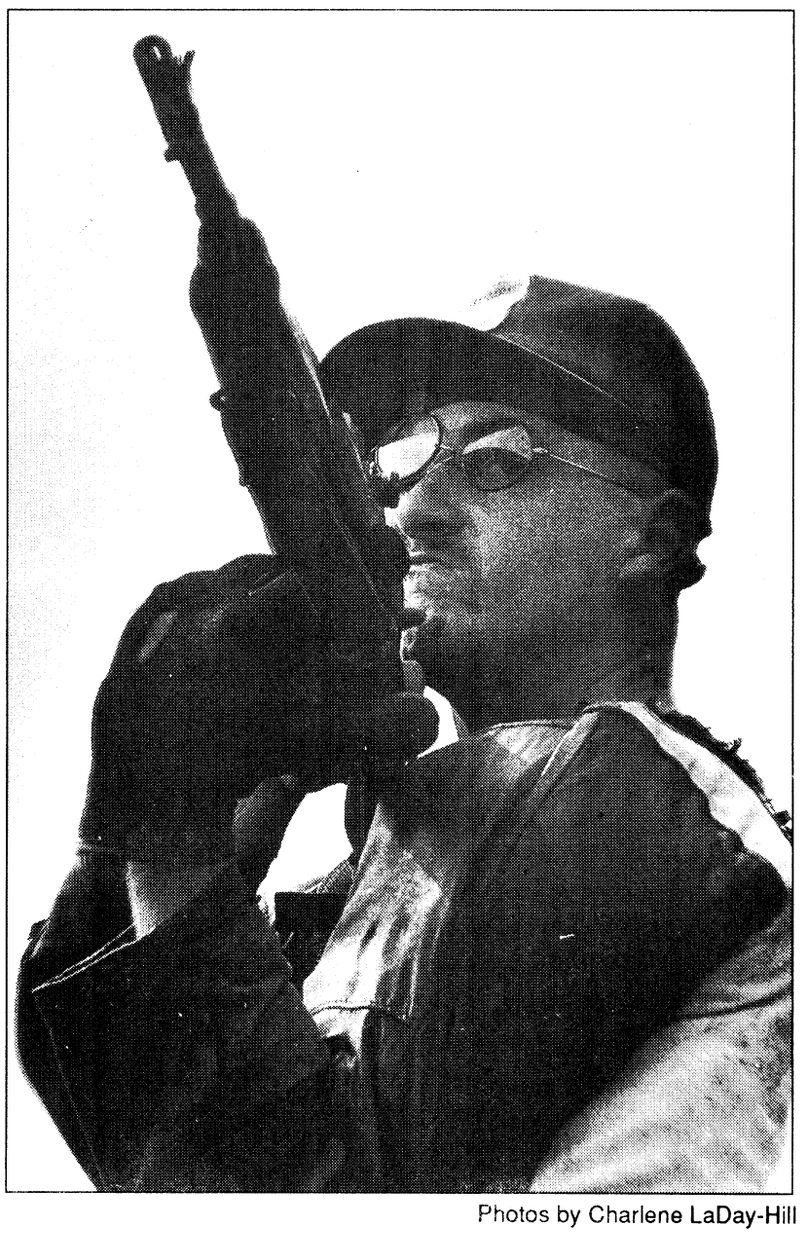
Overall the Army dominated the three-position championships with seven of the top 10 shooters being from USAMU. In the team matches, the Army had three of its teams participate, blue, gold, and red. The Army International Rifle Teams finished first, second, and fourth in the metallic sight team match. They also took second, third, and fifth in the any sight event.

In the Smallbore Prone Championships, Capt. David Chesser was one point from third place and winning the high service award with a 6,380 - 491X aggregate. However, he did earn the high Army shooter award.

In the team matches, the Army teams finished second, sixth, and 10th in metallic sights; and second, sixth, and 12th in the any sight event.

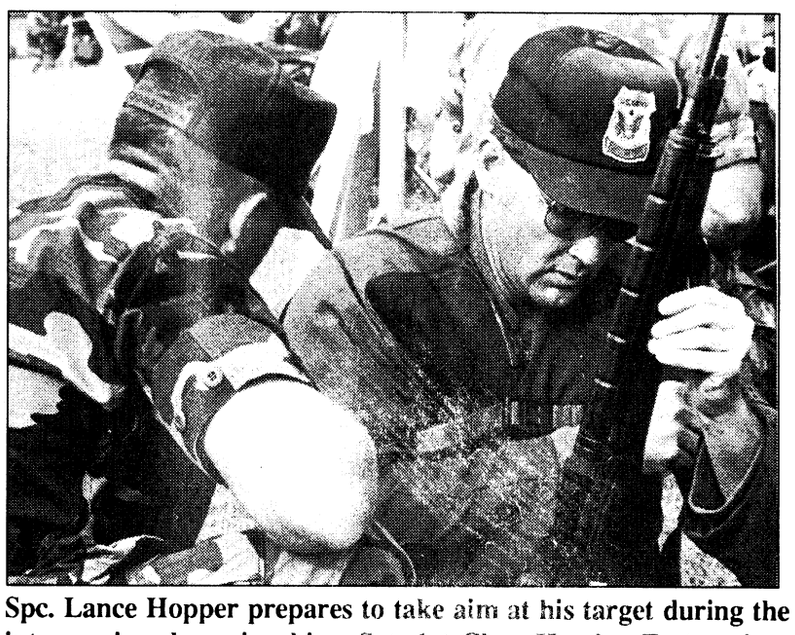
On the service rifle side, the Army team won the National Team trophy with a score of 1,274. Prior to that they won the Interservice Infantry Trophy Team Match Aug. 23 at Quantico, VA.

"This has been a great season for us as a team," said Sgt. 1st Class Richard Wyckstandt, service rifle team coach. "It's not too often that a team wins the Infantry trophy at interservice and the National Trophy in the same year."



Also during the 13th Annual Rifle Championship, the team won eight out of 12 individual matches.

Spc. Lance Hopper won the Interservice Championship with an aggregate of 989 - 38X. He also won the Interservice Air Force Match and the Long Range Championship Match (Division A) with a 200 - 11X and 394 - 17X, respectively.



Sgt. Eric Uptagrafft won the Interservice Coast Guard Match with a 200 - 13X

Sgt. 1st Class John Chubb won the Interservice Army Match with a 200 - 12X, and the Interservice 600 Yard Match Division B with a 200 - 13X.

Flag football season under way

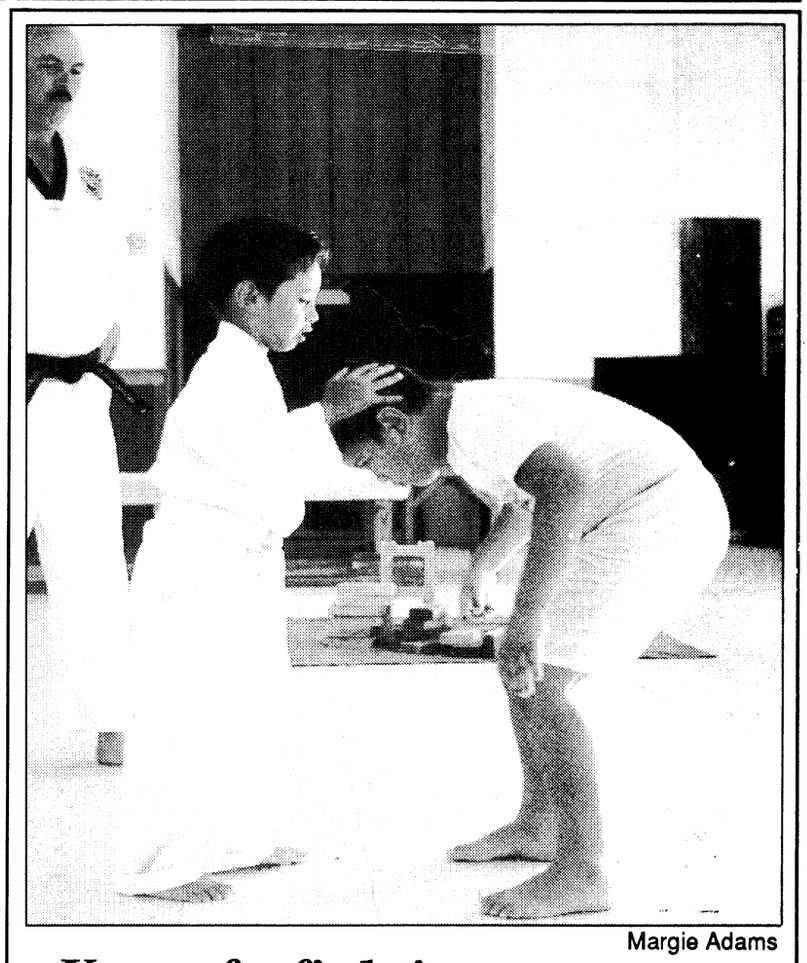
Nine-man flag football kicked off here tuesday evening with Company A 1st. Battalion, 18th Infantry, 3rd Brigade, 24th Infantry Division "Gators," defeating Headquarters, Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion 18th Infantry, 3rd Brigade, 24th Infantry Division "Bulldogs"14-8. at Doughboy Field.

Quarterback Anthony Gibbs got the Bulldogs off to a fast start on the fourth play of the game with a sweep around the right side. Gibbs ran past the stretched out defense into the end zone for the games first score. The extra point pass attempt failed and the bulldogs led 6-0.



The Bulldog and Gator defenses held tough through the next few series of downs on the Bulldogs third series from scrimmage. Gibbs was dropped in the end zone by defensive tackle Pat Patton for a safety. As the half expired the Gators were on the board, the score was now 6-2.

The second half seemed to spell disaster for the Gators of Co. A. On the second play of the half quarterback Major Green pitched to tailback Troy Quinn who missed the pitch for a fumble in the end zone and the Bulldogs got the safety. The Bulldogs now led 8-2.

As the clock ticked down defense and penalties kept the game in the middle of the field. On the Gators last possession in regulation time quarterback Green dropped back to pass and found wide receiver Raymond Guillen open down the right sideline. Guillen broke back across the field into the end zone for an apparent touchdown, but the referee dropped a flag on the play , wiping out the tying score. On the very next play the Bulldog defense drew a roughing the passer penalty, giving the Gator offense new life. Three plays later Green hit tailback Quinn over the middle, who then broke two tackles on his way to the end zone. Green's extra point attempt misfired and the Gators came from behind to tie the score. Regulation time ended with the score tied 8-8.

In overtime the Gators won the toss and went on offense. Three plays and one penalty later, Green hit wide receiver John Myrum for the go ahead touchdown. The pass for extra point missed and the Gators had the lead for the first time in the game 14-8. The Gator defense closed the book on the Bulldogs two plays later when cornerback David Baker intercepted Gibb's pass in the end zone.

After the game Gators coach John Johnson said, "It was good to get our first win under our belt. We have some more tricks up our sleeve for later games."

Jewish High Holy Day period to begin

The Jewish High Holy Day period will commence sundown, Sunday, and will extend through Oct. 1.

Various days within this period are times of religious obligation for Jewish personnel and the religious worship services at Fort Benning will be at the Regimental Chapel, building 3220, in Sand Hill.

Rosh Hashanah marks the start of the Jewish new year. This is a beginning of a 10-day period of reflection on the past year. The days are devoted to prayer and thanksgiving.

During the religious services the shofar, or ram's horn, is blown to symbolize God's call to the people to repentance.

Yom Kippur, known in ancient times as "The Great Day," concludes a 10-day period of penitence. It is also called the Day of Atonement and the most solemn day of the Jewish year. The day is spent in prayer and fasting, ending with promises to God for good work in the year ahead and for reconciliation with others.

Sukkot or the Festival of Booths s an autumn harvest festival. On the final day, the last chapters of the Torah are read and the first book is begun again, affirming the constant renewal of Jewish life and history.

The Torah is a holy book that is the basis of all Jewish learning and culture. It begins with the account of God's creation of the world and ends with the death of Moses.

Judaism dates back about 4,000 years to Abraham. Abraham's belief in one God, and the covenant established between Abraham and God, became the foundation of Judaism. The Jewish religious worship services at Fort Benning are:

Sunday, 8 p.m. — Rosh Hashanah Eve

Monday, 10 a.m. — Rosh Hashanah

Tuesday, 10 a.m. — Rosh Hashanah

Sept. 17, 7 p.m. — Yom Kippur-Kol Nidre

Sept. 18, 10 a.m. — Yom Kippur

1 p.m. — Memorial Service

6 p.m. — Afternoon Service

8 p.m. — Break the Fast

Sept. 22, 7:30 p.m. — Sukkot

Sept 30, 7:30 p.m. — Simhat Torah

'Mark and Brian' begin TV series

Mark and Brian try transition from radio to television

Radio personalities haven't had much luck in TV lately, but a Los Angeles team is out to break that jinx ... if they can survive their exploits.

Rick ("Into the Night") Dees, Jonathon ("Johnny B ... on the Loose") Brandmeier and advice-giver Barbara DeAngelis recently encountered problems in trying to expand to a national base on the home screen, but that fact isn't stopping Mark Thompson and Brian Phelps. The top-rated duo in morning FM radio in Southern California, they were named 1990's Rock Air Personalities of the Year by Billboard Magazine, and they're now bringing their humor to a new series that Thompson terms a "docu-comedy." Getting preview airings Monday and Thursday before settling into its regular time slot next Sunday, NBC's "The Adventures of Mark and Brian" follows their exploits as they tackle a variety of real-life challenges as complete amateurs. Some of their efforts are relatively safe cases of wish-fulfillment, as with their intention in the pilot episode to perform in concert with The Temptations; however, other aims literally are life-risking, such as their swim in open waters with sharks and their stint as firemen fighting an actual blaze. Other scheduled missions in the show, being produced and directed by Emmy-winning variety-show veteran Don Mischer, include the duo's NASA astronaut-training session and their attempt to perform successfully as trapeze artists in a circus.

"It's actually the end result that we're more concerned with," says the blond-haired Phelps in reflecting on the processes by which he and Thompson learn whatever they intend to do at the end of each half-hour. "We may fail or we may succeed. There are going to be stunts where we're not going to be able to do it, but it's the fun we have getting to that result that's hopefully the meat of the (show's) entertainment." Thompson adds, "It's also the fact that we're not trying to be professionals. We're just a couple of average, everyday guys, hopefully representing the people who would watch this show and (demonstrating) that this is what you might deal with if you were to try this also. In each of the shows so far, we have taken great care in (stressing) the safety that we have to go through. Of course, the most dangerous thing we did was dance with The Temptations."

On a more serious note, the pair admit that arguably their riskiest venture yet has been their up-close-and-personal meeting with those potentially lethal sharks. Though Thompson reports that "safety divers were in the water at all times" with them, Phelps explains, "We were in a (shark) cage for the first part of the filming, then our guide said, 'OK, you can get out. The sharks seem calm enough now.' They're really like dogs. They're very shy until they're comfortable with you." Still, Thompson says that he and Phelps previously had spent "several weekends learning to dive, and learning the different kinds of gear that we used for the show."

A viewer might well wonder why two people would put themselves in continual jeopardy of varying degrees, even if it might end up making them television stars. "We are doing these adventures for, No. 1, the fun of them," Thompson explains. "There was one show that NBC suggested that we turned down, not because of the physical risk but because of our beliefs, and that was a rodeo show. They wanted us to go wrestle cattle, and we're very active in animal-rights (campaigns)." Phelps emphasizes, "We're not saying that rodeos are bad or wrong. It's just that this program (takes) a very honest approach, and we couldn't honestly stand before a camera and say, 'Hey, isn't this great?' "

Runners complete 100-mile journey

Platoon-sized group conducts relay from Rucker to Benning

By Brian C. Sutton
Bayonet staff writer

Soldiers from Fort Rucker, Ala., finished their third annual Fort Benning Run at 7:40 a.m. Sept. 6 in front of the "Follow Me" statue in front of Infantry Hall.

A platoon-sized group of more than 30 soldiers conducted a relay run over the 100-mile distance between Fort Rucker and Fort Benning. Runners were required to maintain a two-mile pace of less than 15 minutes. Last year's time was 11 hours and 47 minutes. This year's time was 10 hours and 50 minutes.

The run was conducted much like a walk-a-thon with runners signing up sponsors who will pay charitable organizations a certain amount for each mile the runner or the unit runs. The Fort Rucker runners raised $1,200 for Army Emergency Relief last year. Figures for this year's run are not yet available.

The 283rd Army Band and the Silver Wings provided entertainment for the ceremony which immediately followed the run, during which Maj. Gen. Carmen J. Cavezza, post commander, received the baton passed to each runner during the run.

Fort Rucker's Commander Maj. Gen. Dave Robinson presented the baton to Cavezza.

Soldiers of 29th return from Storm

By Brian C. Sutton
Bayonet staff writer

Seven soldiers from Headquarter and Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment had a warm welcome home Wednesday morning after 10 months in the sands of Southwest Asia.

The soldiers, all attached to the 365th Transportation Company, were deployed in support of Operation Desert Shield and Desert Storm in December. Their mission was to support active duty, National Guard and Reserve units, by providing truck transportation needs in Saudi Arabia.

These soldiers are the last of 36 troops from the unit sent to Saudi Arabia.

Due to a schedule change, the soldiers flew from Philadelphia to Birmingham, Ala., with an Alabama unit. From there they traveled to Fort McClellan, Ala., and loaded on a bus for Fort Benning. At nearly 1 a.m. , the soldiers arrived at their final destination: home.

A brief ceremony took place in which Col. Gregory C. Camp, 29th Infantry Regiment commander, expressed his gratitude for the soldiers that were deployed in support of this mission.

145th heads home

By Brian C. Sutton
Bayonet staff writer

The 145th Medical Detachment departed Fort Benning Sept. 6 from Lawson Army Airfield. The detachment was the last reserve unit serving in support of Operation Desert Shield at Fort Benning.

The 145th, from Marietta, Ga., came to Fort Benning Sept. 23, 1990, as a replacement unit for the 498th Medical Company, an active duty unit permanently assigned to Fort Benning that was deployed to Southwest Asia late last year.

"In the time we were here," said 1st Lt. Mark York, a member of the 145th, "we flew more than 200 missions."

The mission of the 145th had three parts:

The detachment provided medical evacuation for on-post casualties, to include basic training, airborne, and Ranger School students, and anywhere else needed.

The unit also provided support to the outlying camps of Fort Benning.

The detachment also provided neo-natal care, transporting premature babies to area hospitals in the immediate seven-county area. More than 90 premature babies were transported by the detachment to local hospitals.

The detachment performed their Desert Storm role without the need for awards or overblown publicity, according to York.

"We love our mission," said York. "There's something about a Reserve unit: We aren't out for the glory. We just do our mission and leave."

Pay system quicker, easier, official predicts

By Richard Brill
Special to The Bayonet

Quicker, easier and more efficient are just three of the ways that Master Sgt. William Jackson, non-commissioned officer in charge of Pay and Examinations, 215th Finance Unit, described the new Army pay system that will soon be implemented at Fort Benning.

The new system, known as Joint System Software, will eventually replace Joint Uniform Military Pay System, which is currently in use.

According to Jackson, Fort Benning will begin using the system in March or April and the system should be fully operational by August.

While new to the Army, JSS has actually been used by the Air Force for several years.

"The Army has adopted the software from the Air Force system," Jackson explained.

He said the most noticeable difference between the old and new systems will be the Leave and Earnings Statement.

"The LES will completely change," he said. "There will be more data."

The new LES will also feature a mid-month Net Pay Advice Statement that will accurately report the soldier's mid-month pay.

With the current LES, a soldier can never be sure that the amount stated is the actual amount that will be received because a pay change might affect the amount.

With the new system, however, every time there is a pay change a soldier's pay will reflect the change almost immediately.

Jackson said this is because the entire system will be computer based. Information stored on floppy disks by individual finance units can be transferred through a computer network to the Defense Finance and Accounting Service in Indianapolis.

With the JUMPS system now in use, changes in a soldier's pay must be reported to the finance office by the 10th of each month in order for the change to be guaranteed in the end of month pay, Jackson said.

The individual soldier is not the only one who will benefit by the new system. Unit commanders are going to benefit as Cavezza has served as Fort Benning's commander since June 1990.

The Army announced the new Fort Benning commander will be Maj. Gen. Jerry A. White, currently Commanding General, 7th Infantry Division (Light) and Fort Ord, Fort Ord, Calif.

The change of command ceremony has been scheduled for Oct. 4.

Hispanics widely represented here; month's events highlight culture

By Richard Brill
Special to The Bayonet

Fort Benning will celebrate Hispanic Heritage Month, Sept. 15 through Oct. 15, with both postwide and unit observances.

Several units will host luncheons in their dining facilities, complete with authentic Hispanic food, music, and displays, including the 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment on Monday and Tuesday, the 34th Medical Battalion on Sept. 20, and Martin Army Community Hospital on Oct. 1. The luncheons are from 11:30 a.m. to 1 p.m., with the exception of the MACH luncheon, which will begin at 11am.

Displays of Hispanic artifacts, clothing, and other items will also mark the celebration of Hispanic Heritage Month. The 988th Military Police Company will feature a display at Building 17 from Sept. 23 to Oct. 16.

The School of the Americas, where thousands of Latin American soldiers train yearly, will host some events of its own.

On Saturday, the school will participate in the Columbus Hispanic Association's "Fiesta in Columbus" at the government center from 11 a.m. to 4 p.m. The fiesta will feature a flag display, a fashion show with authentic Hispanic clothing and guest speaker Col. Jose Feliciano, the commandant of the School of the Americas.

The Follow Me Golf Course will be the scene for a golf tournament in honor of Hispanic heritage on Wednesday at 9 am.

On Sept. 28 the school will host its annual "Cena Tipica," or international cuisine, featuring arts and crafts and samples of Hispanic cooking.

Feliciano will be the guest speaker once again at a luncheon at the Supper Club on Oct. 8, from 11:30 a.m. to 1 p.m., for Hispanic representatives of the post Equal Opportunity Office.

Master Sgt. Daniel Renoif, chief of the post Equal Opportunity Office, said celebrating Hispanic heritage is important because there are a large number of Hispanics in the Army.

"It's important that we recognize all ethnic groups," he said. "But with respect to Hispanic heritage, it's important because we have a large Hispanic population in the Army and at Fort Benning with the School of the Americas."

Renoif emphasized the importance of celebrating the achievements of all minorities.

"It gives us a chance to share in the cultural experience. It's a learning experience."

Capt. Kenneth Sierra of the public affairs office at the School of the Americas said celebrating Hispanic heritage shows that we appreciate their culture.

"Part of the school's mission is to show our Latin American friends the diversity of our own culture and the acceptance of theirs," he added.

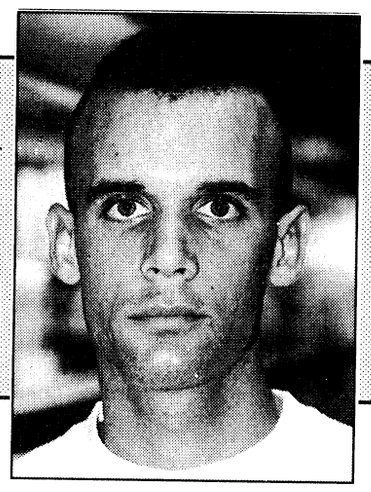
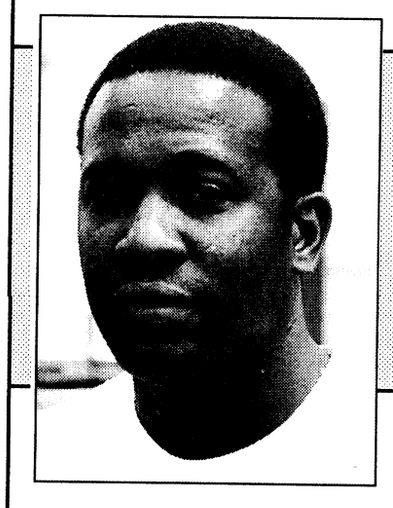
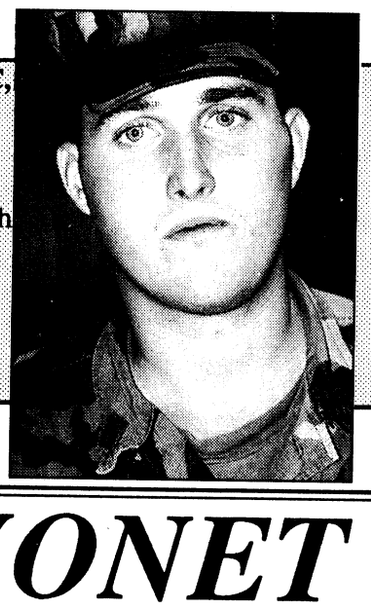
What events around Fort Benning do you believe should receive better coverage in The Bayonet?



Daisy Figueroa, family member — " The Bayonet should have more personal profiles on soldiers."



Julie Winter, family member — "There should be more local interest topics, such as day trips and places to go for family outings and that sort of thing."



Staff Sgt. Frank Vital, Company A, 1st Battalion, 38th Infantry Regiment — "The Bayonet should give more coverage to the events and personnel out at the Infantry Training Center."

Sgt. Steven Duffy, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment — "The individual sports events that Fort Benning soldiers participate in should receive more exposure. Those events do get some coverage, but not as much as I think they should."

Sgt. 1st Class Bertram Greenidge, Company D, 2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment — "The events that wives support do not get enough exposure. The wives of soldiers do a lot and support a lot of projects and do not get the recognition that they deserve."

Soldiers know about soldiers

By Clyde Snively
Bayonet columnist

COMMENTARY

Those of you with mothers know they never stop giving advice.

If they know you're going on a field problem they'll remind you to take overshoes and clean socks.

Going to war, they'll tell you to "be careful."

When I'd want to go up against city hall because of a parking ticket I didn't deserve, my mother would tell me, "Don't spit into the wind." And when I thought I was being treated unfairly at school, she'd say, "Don't cross swords with masked men who wear capes."

Since I've been in the Army, I've picked up a few of my own from what's known as the school of hard knocks. Some of them are: "Don't do physical training with ranger hardbodies," "Don't try to out shuffle a black hat," and "don't drive a Russian tank down range of a Bradley Fighting Vehicle."

Another axiom advises against getting into a war of words with the guy who buys his ink by the barrel.

Well, today, I'm going to disregard that advice. First, because I'm fighting mad, and second, I have a guy on my side who also buys his ink by the barrel.

Why would Clyde Snively, the guy who has everything— semiair-conditioned, windowless work place and an unlimited supply of printer ribbons — be upset?

It's because my fellow Bayonet reporters and I feel we were libeled and held up to public ridicule.

All us guys...and gal — The Tattoo Man, The Bake, Auto Man, and The Wrap — feel we were publicly insulted by the people who used to print The Bayonet.

It started when they didn't get the contract to continue printing The Bayonet. But they lost it fair and square. So now they are printing another paper. That's fine by us. But in bragging about what a great paper it's supposed to be, they note that they have professional civilian journalists and will present an unbiased point of view.

First, we five military-type journalists went through a very tough selection process — no brag, just fact — to get into the Defense Information School. For 10 weeks, instructors hammered into us the tenets of journalism. They made us write until our fingertips went numb. Then they'd totally rip our stories and make us go back and do them again. At the end of the course, those who completed it, were considered to be fairly presentable journalists — and not just by the Armed Forces.

The curriculum at DINFOS is recognized by the major journalism schools in this country. So, to imply that we are not professional journalists makes me mad.

Just like most civilian newspapers, some of our reporters have several years of experience and others are newbie writers. So when it comes to covering the Army, who do you want writing the articles — green suiters who've sweated and grunted through ranges, bivouacs, obstacle and land navigation courses — guys and gals who know what it's like to be a soldier, or a civilian writer in polyester pants who can't find his way to a mess hall without a guide?

That's where credibility comes in. Plus, they want you to believe they're going to cover Fort Benning like an early-morning fog. Who do you think they have to go to? Our public information folks, that's who.

The PI folks are spending more of their days trying to make appointments for these professional writers so they can do their stories.

So while they're having their fancy-dancy press conferences bragging about how great they are, the military journalists are down in the trenches turning out the articles about you and your families.

And now that we're working with people who are to go the extra mile for us, we'll have a lot more space for those articles. Therefore, if you want to know what's going on at Fort Benning and in the Army, then this is the paper to read.

Vigilance by all keeps cyclists safe

Safety Office

Motorcyclists are more numerous on the nation's streets and highways with each passing year. With them comes an added responsbility on the part of the automobile motorist. You have to be observant and remember that motorcyclists have the same rights on the road as you do. Here are some tips to remember regarding motorcyclists.

• Share the road. Many motorists think motorcycles require less space on the road than other vehicles, just because the cycle is smaller.

This is not true. Cyclists are entitled to a full lane, just as a four-wheeled vehicle is. Do not try to crowd them in any way, or try to force them to the edge of the road. Respect them as fellow drivers.

• Retrain your eyes. Most cycle -auto accidents occur because the motorist simply doesn't see the cyclist. Often a cycle is hidden in the car's blind spot. Outside rearview mirrors are not enough to rely on; when changing lanes, it is a good policy to take a quick glance over your shoulder. Be alert for the presence of a cyclist on the outer edge of your traffic lane, especially on turns. A cycle often is screened by another car. Be aware of their low visibily.

The safety conscious cyclist should keep their headlight on, to warn of their presence. Army personnel who ride motorcycles must also wear a reflective vest. Realize the cyclist is less protected than you are, and watch his driving. They must contend with more hazards than an automobile driver.

• Be especially cautious when passing cyclists. The buffeting created by your wind stream may cause them to wobble and lose control.

An inexperienced cyclist should be given a wide berth. Signs of inexperience are the cycle jerking when making gear changes or if the rider is hesitant in making decisions in traffic. Always give them plenty of room and be prepared to stop if something goes wrong.

• Be careful judging distance. Because a cyle is smaller, it may seem to be moving slower. Always allow yourself more following distance than you usually do when overtaking one. To judge your following distance, it is a good idea to add an extra second to the two-second rule of defensive driving: Count "one thousand one, one thousand two, one thousand and three." But this three-second interval is only for ideal conditions. Add to it for adverse conditions.

• Watch for cycle hazards. A hazard for the cyclist can entrap the auto driver, too.

A cyclist ahead can lose control of his machine when sand, gravel, wet leaves, or water are on the pavement. Always be aware of conditions that may cause them to spill. Give them plenty of room, and slow down.

Unwelcome visitors disregard restrictions, cut into training time

By Richard Brill
Special to The Bayonet

Certain areas of Fort Benning will be restricted to both military and civilian personnel, according to a recent memorandum from Post Commander Maj. Gen. Carmen Cavezza.,

Restricted areas cited in the memorandum are those "subject to special restrictions or control for security reasons or safeguarding of property or material."

The eight areas that are affected as of Sept. 1 are the Malone Ranges, Lee Field, the Sand Hill Military Operations in Urban Terrain Site, the Ammunition Supply Point, the Alpha and Kilo area ranges, Camp Darby and the McKenna MOUT Site.

According to David Moore, a post physical securities specialist, thefts and vandalism are two of the reasons these areas are restricted.

"Thefts are occurring on ranges, which shut the ranges down," he said.

When these crimes occur both the post as a whole and the individual soldier are at a loss.

"It's not the amount of property that's been stolen, it's the lost training time to the soldiers," Moore added.

The restricted areas are not difficult to identify. Each restricted area is marked with a white sign containing red and black lettering and many are fenced in and have gates blocking the entrances.

Would be trespassers beware — the penalty is a stiff one.

Unauthorized entry by military personnel is a violation of the Uniformed Code Of Military Justice and the offender is subject to a trial by court-martial. Maximum penalty includes a dishonorable discharge, two years confinement at hard labor, reduction to the lowest enlisted grade, and total forfeiture of all pay and allowances.

Civilian offenders are subject to prosecution in a federal court with a maximum penalty of one-year imprisonment or a $5,000 fine, or both.

According to Moore, Range Security personnel and the military police regularly patrol these areas. Violators will be apprehended and detained until processed and released to the appropriate authorities.

Hunters, fishers, and members of the Boy and Girl Scouts need not worry about not being able to conduct their activities because of the restrictions.

"This in no way will prevent people from conducting these activities in these areas if they meet the requirements, unless the area is closed for training," Moore said.

However, Moore explained that people who conduct these activities need to understand what the regulations require for them to use these areas.

Military and civilian personnel who use roads that go through or near restricted areas don't have to worry either.

"As long as you're on the road you're fine; if you go off in the woods you're not," he said.

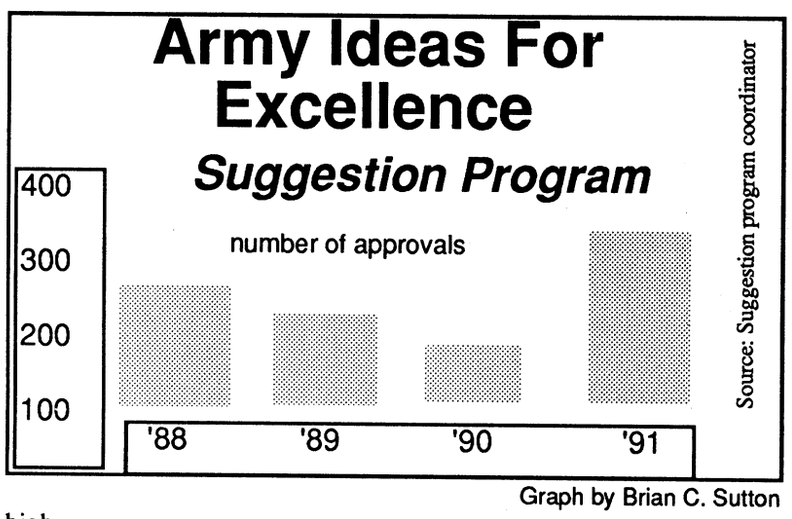
Ideas are booming business



By Brian C. Sutton
Bayonet staff writer

For those soldiers and Department of the Army civilians who think the Army Idea for Excellence Program doesn't work, or is a waste of time, they've got another think coming, claimed Beverly Howell, Suggestion Program coordinator.

Not only does the program work, said Howell, but the program works in favor of the person submitting the idea.

"If the idea is put into use," said Howell, "they get a percentage of the savings Fort Benning accumulates off of the idea."

Sometimes, according to Howell, the stakes can be pretty high.

Graph by Brian C. Sutton

"We give a lot of awards totaling more than $1,500," said Howell. "One idea that maybe took a couple hours of research can get you a lot of money."

A lot of money is right.

So far this year, the program has awarded more than $35,000 in cash to both soldiers and civilians who have given ideas to Fort Benning that have yielded a total savings of $726,475.

"My goal is to reach $1.2 million in savings for this year," said Howell.

So far this year there have been more approvals at Fort Benning than in the previous three years.

This, according to Howell, may very well lead to reaching this year's goal.

Anyone interested in submitting an idea that may help Fort Benning may submit a Department of the Army Form 1045 to Howell in Building

Official says; Army's job still readiness in spite of force, budget reductions

By Richard Brill
Special to The Bayonet

In the face of force and budget reductions, the Army will have to make the most of what it has, was the advice of Maj. Gen. Henry Hagwood, Deputy Chief of Staff for Resource Management, United States Army Training and Doctrine Command.

Hagwood was the guest speaker at the monthly meeting of the Association of Military Comptrollers Tuesday at the Main NCO Club.

In his presentation, which was directed toward those who are responsible for managing the Army's money and manpower, Hagwood addressed current budgetary trends and what needs to be done to deal with dwindling resources.

Hagwood cited a number of factors that are impacting TRADOC's resources, including the Federal deficit reduction, the cost of Operation Desert Storm, military strength reductions, the pending closure of many of the Army's bases, and the civilian reduction in force, or RIF. He also explained that TRADOC's resource reductions are accelerating faster than workload reductions which means the Army must accomplish the same mission with less resources.

Hagwood said that Fort Benning doesn't need to worry, adding, "I promise that you (Fort Benning) are going to get your share of the rsources."

The General said that carelessness was one of the reasons that the Army faces budgetary woes. "We have just spent money like water the last few years, and now its time to pay the bill," he remarked.

The solution: effectively budgeting the Army's costs will help fight the problem, Hagwood said. Conserving precious resources and reducing costs should be the focus of those in management positions. "We're going to have to learn all the things we can to reduce the costs of what we have to do."

Maintaining readiness despite cuts was another concern of Hagwood.

"We've got to make sure they (the Army) are ready to fight. They're our kids. If they're going to go do that for us, we've got to make sure to protect them and make sure they are ready."

Hagwood added that efforts to reduce costs must begin immediately. "The longer we delay, the worse it's going to get."

He was, however, optimistic.

"We're going to continue to have a great Army, we've just got to figure out how to pay less for it."

To ensure that awards and nominations are received by the suspense date, it is requested that they be handcarried to Wing in Building 2518. If nominations for awards are not received by the suspense date, they will be held for the following month's ceremony.

VA Q&A

Q — I was called to active duty during the Persian Gulf War. Can I get my old job back?

A — Federal law requires your reinstatement along with seniority and pay rate, plus increases that may have been granted in your absence. You must apply for reemployment within 90 days of separation. The law is administered by the U.S. Department of Labor.

Q — What is the current automobile allowance payable by the VA?

A — VA will make a one-time payment of up to $5,500 toward the purchase of an automobile or other conveyance for certain severely disabled veterans. VA will pay for adaptive equipment, its repair, replacement or reinstallation on a vehicle purchased with VA assistance or for a previously or subsequently acquired vehicle. Disabilities entitling a veteran to the allowance include loss of one or both feet or hands, loss of their use, or blindness.

well because every month they will receive a Unit Commander Finance Report that will show the financial status of each soldier in the unit.

According to Jackson, it will take some time to train the post's finance personnel to use JSS.

"Until the new system is learned we will have to use a dual system — the old system and the new," he said.

Once the new system is in place, however, it should make the process of getting paid easier.

"This system basically will be faster," he commented.

Family doesn't take much for granted anymore

On return from Saudi, specialist finds life's 'little things' mean lots

By Connie Bridges
Special to The Bayonet

"I have a respect for simple things that I took for granted before. It's been eight months since I've seen rain."

Spc. Kevin Patterson of the 598th Maintenance Company believes his almost 11 months in Saudi Arabia have given him an appreciation of the ordinary things in life — spending time with his family cooking out or hiking in the mountains.

His wife Lisa nodded in agreement. "Life was sort of put on hold while Kevin was gone. Every place I went reminded me of him, but you do what you have to do to get through the days trying to make it to the next letter or phone call."

The 598th was the last major unit from Fort Benning to return from Saudi. However, if anyone thought this would make their homecoming less festive or the reunions less joyous, they were wrong.

On Sept. 4, the Pattersons saw each other in the crowd during the speeches at Lawson Airfield, but even though they made a beeline when the yellow ribbon went down, they kept missing contact.

Finally, he found her, and after lots of hugs and kisses with their daughters, Alisha, 9, and Jamie, 6, they had their first meal together — Kevin's choice, a Pizza Hut meatlover's pizza.

The four-day leave was spent at home on post because the kids are in school, but Christmas will be in Michigan.

Kevin has been in the Army for only two years, and except for basic training and advanced infantry training this was the longest time that they've ever spent apart. The couple has been married 11 years.

Connie Bridges, Special to The Bayonet

Spc. Kevin Patterson gets a kiss from wife, Lisa, after landing at Lawson Air Field.

"After this, his going to the field will be no problem," Lisa said.

On the homefront, the major lifestyle change has been her job. She went to work as a teacher's aide at Wilbur School two months after Kevin left. She said it helped her keep her mind off things.

"The girls also helped me a lot. Whenever I had a bad day, my oldest would give me a pat and say everything was going to be okay."

According to Dixie Hawkinson, wife of the 598th's commander, Lisa was active in the wives' group tying bows and decorating road signs. Lisa said sharing information with other wives on the phone was another way everyone coped.

There were always lot of rumors floating around as to when the company would be home, but Lisa waited for Hawkinson to confirm before getting her hopes up.

She found out for sure only a week before the company arrival when they knew the replacement unit was the 519th from Fort Ord, Calif.

As to why the 598th was kept overseas for so long? There was work to be done. The unit was still recovering vehicles up until they day they left, and Kevin drives an eight-wheel, 10-ton wrecker used to recover heavy military vehicles.

Upon arriving in country Oct. 15, he spent most of his time in Dharhan, except for a three-month stint in the desert from January to April when he was attached to the 80th Ordnance helping at the Convoy Support Center.

The 598th was the first maintenance company to be fully operational in theater, and proud of it.

On the job, Kevin said he learned to become an aggressive driver. "The Saudis are aggressive, and you learn to be the same."

One weekend in June, Kevin was sent to Doha, Kuwait, to do wrecker assistance for an armor unit there. Doha, known as the "Valley of Death," where the Iraqis attempted to flee the country at the end of the war, was still strewn with live ordnance. Kevin added that the burning oil wells still were blocking off the skies as well, poignant reminders that everything is not all back to normal there.

To keep his mind on an even keel after others started going home and they did not, he ran to work off stress, read the Bible and wrote to Lisa everyday.

Kevin also wrote to many strangers from Michigan who sent letters to him after his mother in Adrian and his aunt in Lansing put his name in the newspapers. They were all so supportive, he tried to answer them all.

Four days on the Cunard Princess cruise ship docked at Bahrain and a stay at the Bahrain resort Al Banner helped to give him a breather from the work area during those long 11 months.

The relative shortness of the war made Lisa leery that something else might happen before Kevin made it home.

She said she felt better when the 197th Infantry Brigade (now the 3rd Brigade, 24th Infantry Division) returned.

"However, I was not totally relieved until I saw him get off the plane and stand in that hangar last Wednesday night."

What is different now that he's home?

"We've always been close," Lisa said. "Now we're closer — and stronger."

Fort Benning schools begin lecture series

Discipline.

The stages that young children go through.

Preparing young children for the time that they will enter school.

These topics and more will be the focus of a series of talks sponsored by the Fort Benning Schools for Fort Benning parents, caregivers, and educators.

"Talks About Young Children (Ages 0-5)" will bring recognized experts in the field of early childhood to Fort Benning on five different evenings.

The lecture series will be free to all Fort Benning parents, care givers, and educators. Participants can choose to attend any or all of the lectures, however, a phone reservation for each session will be required since space in each session will be limited.

The first session of the series will be held on Sept. 26, at Dexter School from 7-8:30 p.m.

"Emotional Development of Young Children and Discipline for Them" will be the subject of the session. Dr. Barbara Howard will speak to Fort Benning parents and educators about the emotional stages that children go through as they get older. She also will provide practical advice for parents on discipline for young children. This advice will include:

• Ways to talk to and to listen to young children

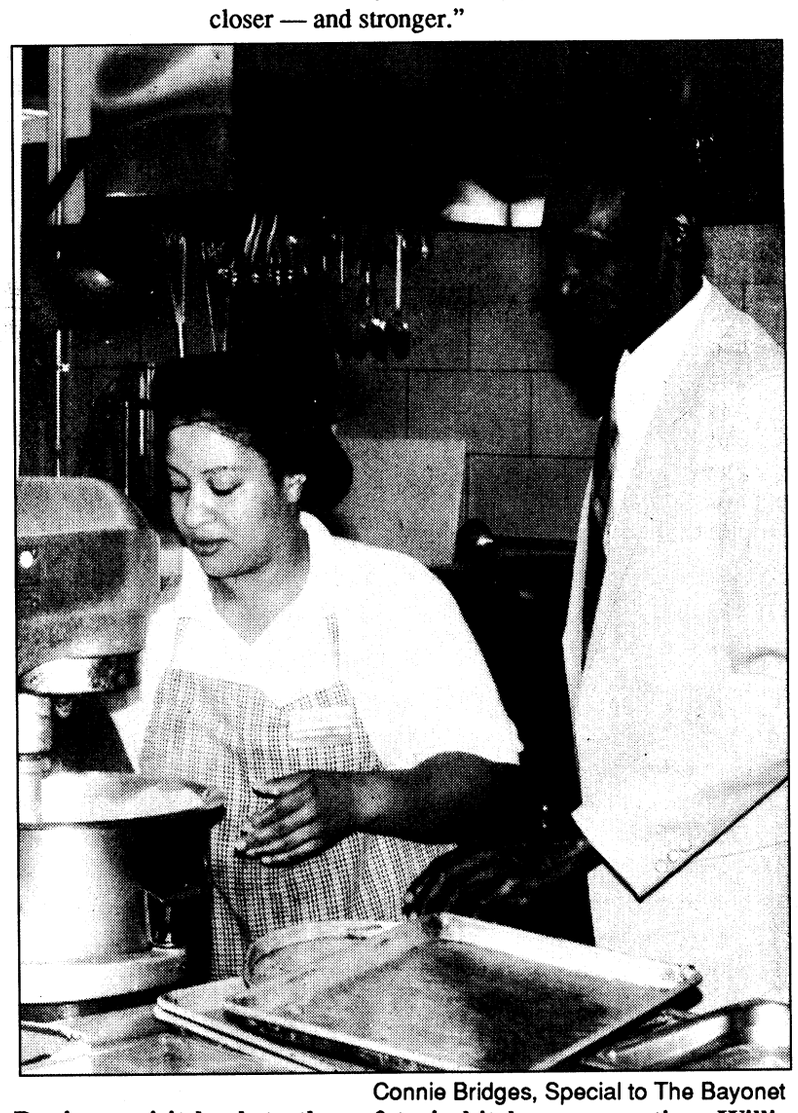
• Ways to promote the child's understanding that he/she is lovable and capable

Dr. Barbara Howard is a pediatrician and is an assistant professor of pediatrics in the child development unit of the department of pediatrics at Duke University Medical Center in Durham, N.C. She is a nationally known speaker and author of numerous articles on how children develop.

To register for the session phone 545-2500 between the hours of 8 a.m. and 4 p.m. Reservations will be taken until close of business on Sept. 20 or until the session is full.

Children will not be permitted to attend the sessions. Tot Town will be open from 6:15 until 9:15 on the evenings that the series is conducted. Registration with Tot Town as well as payment of the fee at Tot Town will be the responsibility of the parent.

Upcoming sessions will cover other issues directly related to the needs of young children and the adults who care for them.



Topics, presenters and dates for these sessions are:

Nov. 20 — "All The World's A Stage: The Stages that Young Children Pass Through and What to Expect." Rosalie Streett, director, Friends of the Family Baltimore.

Jan. 14 — "Preparing Your Child For Kindergarten." Dr. Dell Karr, assistant superintendent for instruction; and Barbara Hutchins, Peggy Gindville, Gwen Grubb, Carolyn Phillips, and Marianne Smith, kindergarten teachers, Fort Benning Schools.

Cook lays down ladle after 36 years on job

By Connie Bridges
Special to The Bayonet

His family enjoys his barbecue dinners, and after 36 years of working in food preparation positions on Fort Benning, that's about as heavy duty as Willie Horace's cooking is going to get these days.

Horace retired Aug. 30 as the 7 a.m.-3 p.m. cook at the Branch 20-13 Infantry Hall Cafeteria in Building 4.

"Now I'm ready to rest up some," he said.

Fishing and tinkering on cars are on his planning list as he contemplates the future.

Roberta Wilson, manager of the Infantry Hall Cafeteria, said the staff will miss Horace.

"His hard work and special efforts have been beneficial to Branch 20-13. One could always depend on Willie Horace to promote customer satisfaction."

These criteria were noted in the excellence award he received upon his retirement.

Horace added he will miss the friends he made on the job, one of whom started work with him but still has about seven years to retirement. However, he knows he can always come visit.

Now his focus is on home — just off Highway 165 in Fort Mitchell.

He and his wife, Katie, have been married 23 years and have five children: Johnny of Atlanta; and Cindy, Shannon and Gregory, all of Columbus. Denise, 17, still lives with her parents.

It was a Fort Benning food distributor, Ernest Williams, who originally put in a good word for Horace in 1955 when he was hired at the Main Post Snack Bar.

During his 36 years, he served as a utility man, porter, bus boy, snack bar attendant, food service worker and short-order cook. His last position involved the heavy dinner cooking.

"Willie Horace was loyal and dedicated and performed his job without assistance," Wilson said. "We wish him good luck."

26 Girl Scout volunteers honored at appreciation luncheon

By Connie Bridges
Special to The Bayonet

The 26 volunteer staffers who put on three Girl Scout summer camps in August at Camp Hideaway were honored Sept. 8 with an appreciation lunch at the Youth Activities Building.

Co-directors Jeanette Stone and Zeddra Driver thanked their staff who ran day camp, twilight camp and overnight camp for 76 girls Aug. 5 to 10.

Camp activities included clowning, water testing, a compass course, knots, tree leaf identification; crafts such as basket-weaving, bean bag birds and wooden jewelry; walking sticks, sit-upons, first aid and folk dancing.

Stone said that offering this camp in addition to district camps allows on-post Girl Scouts the opportunity to participate in camp activities without having to go too far from home, especially for those on their first time out.

PYOC plan active fall after summer of fun

By Gabrielle Sonnenberg
USAIC Chaplain's Office

The Protestant Youth of the Chapel had a back-to-school celebration with pizza, and a magician named "Mr. Bud" Aug. 26.

The Youth Group was founded in March and has been growing since. Presently, 28 teen-agers meet every Monday from 7 to 8 p.m. for fellowship, singing and numerous activities.

Besides Monday nights, the PYOC takes various trips.

Summer began with a trip to Liberty Bell pool for a city-wide youth rally, a School Exodus cook-out, and a trip to the backwaters of Alabama for a mini-retreat. Towards the close of summer the youth took a two-day trip to Fort Rucker, Ala., for a youth rally and a youth leadership training seminar.

The celebration kicked off the new school year and will be followed by a trip to the roller-skating rink Sept. 23.

"It's an inspiration and something to look forward to all week," said Jennifer Gittings, a youth group member. It is such fun to come to these meetings, Jennifer and her sister Christina Gittings explained.

Every ministry should have a logo, so the youth decided by casting their votes.

The result was the acronym FOOT, which stands for Fellowship Of Outrageous Teens.

The inspiration for this name originated from Isaiah 52:7. After voting on a logo, T-shirts with the logo were ordered and each member received one.

FORT BENNING YOUTH MINISTRY

The PYOC consists of teen-agers in grades 6 through 12. However, within the larger group there is a junior and senior high ministry. Adequate adult supervision is provided by six adult Youth Ministry Team members and a youth director.

Since the space at the chapel annex is not adequate anymore, the group will move to the Religious Education Center, building 229, on Monday.

For more information contact Chaplain (Lt. Col.) Robert McCrory at the Infantry Center Chapel, 545-2050.

Cisco holds off Bad Boys

By Terry K. Ray
Special to The Bayonet

When Headquarters Support Company, "Bad Boy's," and Company A "Cisco," of the 36th Engineer Group clashed Thursday evening at Robert's Field #1, no one thought it would be a flag football defensive struggle. But that's exactly what it turned out to be. Company A, "Cisco," got the game's only touchdown of the evening defeating the HSC, "Bad Boys," 6-0.

The Bad Boys started the game off trying to establish the run. Quarterback Tommy Johnson, and running back Sheldon Leggett, each took turns trying to run the ball, without results. The Cisco defense held the Bad Boys short of the first down marker on four plays and took possession of the ball.

The Cisco offense tried their hand at running the ball with more success. On their first play quarterback Eddie Johnson handed off to tailback Anthony Neal who broke around the right side for an apparent first down, but the side judge penalized Neal for guarding his flag.

The next three plays netted little, but on third down running back Patrick Watson took the hand-off from Johnson and swept around the left corner breaking tackles on his way to the end zone.

Cisco had the only score they would need to win the game. The extra point attempt failed and Cisco led 6-0.

The Bad Boys next possession was cut short when Johnson's long pass down the middle was picked off by Cisco cornerback Ivory Melton and that effectively shut down the Bad Boys for the rest of the half.

Cisco's next possession ended in some controversy, on fourth down and goal. Johnson rolled out of the pocket and hit Neal in the back of the end zone for a touchdown but the field judge ruled that Neal was out of bounds when he caught the ball.

The Bad Boys took over on downs, but the half ended before they could run a play.

The second half showcased defense from both teams.

The Bad Boys defense came through to shut down Cisco's running game. Coach Marcus Clay alternated Johnson and Melton at quarterback but neither could get the offense moving.

Four plays later the Bad Boys took over on downs and had their own share of problems. After three ineffective plays Johnson hit wide receiver Darren Dillard for a first down. Three plays later Johnson, came through again, with a long pass to Leggett, to keep the drive alive.

The Bad Boys had the end zone in sight when the Cisco's defense made a stand. After a penalty on the defense Bad Boys' quarterback Johnson pitched to Leggett for no gain then Johnson was stopped by cornerback Melton on a sweep to the left.

On fourth down and goal Johnson rolled left, hit wide receiver Dave Marble at the goal line, and he jumped into the end zone for a touchdown. However, the referee ruled that the defense had pulled his flag off before he crossed the goal line.

The Cisco offense took over at the goal line and tried to run out the clock, but four plays later the Bad Boys were lining up for the protected kick from the Cisco offense.

The kick was fielded by receiver John Cowens and returned to midfield, where the Bad Boys' offense would take their last shot to score. Johnson, was able to get off one pass downfield, but overshot his receiver.

"What we portrayed on offense and defense, we executed that very well," according to Cisco coach Clay. "We feel very comfortable with the plays on offense that we worked on in practice. What we're not happy with are the penalties."

Stars fall to Forrest Park Vikings 25-11

Columbus Stars

The Columbus Stars lost Saturday to the Forrest Park Vikings, 25-11.

The Vikings won the toss and elected to receive. After the kick they ground out yardage for the first six minutes in the first quarter before scoring, but were unable to convert the extra point.

After receiving the ball, the Stars were only able to move it for a couple of downs before an interception. The ball was tipped by the Stars wide receiver, Andrico Carter, and landed in the hands of a Viking defender on the 34-yard line. He returned it to the 15-yard line and it only took the Vikings a couple of downs to put another six points on the scoreboard. Again they were unable to convert on the extra point.

After the kick, the Stars were held for three downs and punted to the Vikings who passed for their third touchdown and the extra point was good. Once again Forrest Park kicked and the Stars offense sputtered, fumbling on the Vikings 5-yard line. The Vikings were unable to move the ball and elected to punt on the 4th down. A high snap went out over the goal line and gave the Stars their first 2 points on the safety.

The Stars were again held and had to punt. Kicker Vernon Lorren made an excellent punt and the Stars specialty team stopped the Vikings on the 5-yard line. A holding penalty against the Stars nullified this punt and the Vikings chose to take the penalty and replay the down.

On the replay, the Stars kicker, Vernon Lorren, read the defense and passed to wide receiver Toby Daniels, who set up the ball on the 20-yard line with only 3 seconds left in the first half. Lorren was able to put 3 points on the scoreboard for the Stars with a 36-yard field goal, making the score 19-5 Vikings.

The second half belonged to the Stars defense. The Stars offense received the ball and worked it all the way down to the 3-yard line before fumbling to the Vikings.

On the second drive Stars quarterback Tyrone Walker drove the ball down the field and was able to score from the 2-yard line on a quarterback sneak. The extra point was blocked.

The Vikings added one more score by a long pass from their quarterback to the wide receiver, making the final score 25-11, Vikings.

The Stars will be in town this week, playing the Chattanooga Cowboys at Garrett Stadium in Phenix City Saturday with a pregame youth football jamboree at 6 p.m.

The following week, on Sept. 21, the Stars will battle the Alabama Raiders at Garrett Stadium. The Phenix City Boys Club will have opening day for their youth football program 9 am. to 7 p.m.

The Fort Benning Silver Wings Jump Team will perform before the game.

For more information about the Stars and their schedule call the general manager, Jim Anthony, at 322-0601.

Sayers outlines his choice for super team

Gale Sayers ON FOOTBALL

COMMENTARY

Make your list now and file it away for the end of the season. How many coaches and general managers are starting off the new NFL season by announcing that they don't expect much from their teams, that it's a rebuilding year? "Rebuilding" has become one of the most common cliches in a sport renowned for cliches.

Frankly, I get tired of hearing the rebuilding excuse. I like teams that play every game of every season as if it's the Super Bowl. Of course if I had the chance to build the perfect team every year might end with a Super Bowl victory. Sure it's a dream, but here is what I would do.

My quarterback would be Dan Marino of the Miami Dolphins. Marino is not a scrambler, but a classic drop-back passer, and with the kind of offense I would build, I wouldn't want a scrambler. My line would give him all the time and protection he needed to throw strikes.

Marino would have a couple of superb targets in wide receivers—Jerry Rice of the San Francisco 49ers and Willie Gault of the Los Angeles Raiders. Jerry Rice is simply the best in the game, the kind of receiver who makes both the spectacular and meat-and-potatoes plays in every game. Gault doesn't get the playing time and recognition he deserves now, but with his blinding speed, he would be an important part of my offense. He would not only pose a deep threat, but would attract defenders away from Rice.

With the best passing attack in the game would come the best ground game. In a departure from the usual halfback/fullback backfield, I would have two halfbacks, Eric Dickerson of the Indianapolis Colts and Barry Sanders of the Detroit Lions. With their quickness, I wouldn't need a power back.

I would put men like the Cincinnati Bengals' Anthony Munoz on the line. The 6-foot-6-inch, 284-pound Munoz is the kind of giant I want protecting my quarterback and opening holes for my fleet backs.

On the other side of the ball, the defense would be anchored by linebacker Lawrence Taylor of the New York Giants. It's no secret that Taylor is the best, able to control the pulse of a game. Chicago Bear Mike Singletary would be the perfect linebacking complement to Taylor.

Defensive end Bruce Smith of the Buffalo Bills is perhaps the best defensive lineman in the game, and I can only imagine the havoc he would cause for my opponents when playing with Taylor and Singletary. If an offense were able to get down field, I'd have Ronnie Lott of the Los Angeles Raiders there to welcome them. Lott is one of the great hitters of all time.

I'll let you choose any kicker you want for my dream team, because with this combination, I'm not going to be worrying about field goals. There it is. I'll see you at the Super Bowl. Please don't wake me until we've won.

Gale Sayers is a former Bear and is in the NFL's Hall of Fame.

COMMENTARY

Through the years, no old baseball saying has proven to be more true than "records are made to be broken." Even so, there are always sportswriters pointing to some achievement on the field as being "unapproachable."

They said that about Ty Cobb's stolen-base records until Lou Brock broke them. And it was Cobb's record for most base hits that absolutely never would be equaled. Pete Rose proved that to be untrue. And there was Babe Ruth's all-time home-run record that was broken in 1974. 1 forget the guy who broke that one, but I think he wore number 44 for the Atlanta Braves.

There are still a few baseball records that have managed to withstand the challenges of modern players. Joe DiMaggio's 56-game hitting streak is now 50 years old. But that doesn't mean someone won't come along and set a new mark. Pete Rose gave it a pretty good run a few years ago before his streak ended in Atlanta.

If there is a single record that almost everyone still considers "one for the ages," it is Lou Gehrig's longest-consecutive-game streak. For 2,130 games, every time the New York Yankees took the field, Gehrig was in the lineup. The record began in 1925 and lasted all the way until illness forced his retirement in 1939. To get some idea of this achievement, you must realize that only six men in the history of baseball have ever played in 1,000 consecutive games —half of Gehrig's record.

Some fans may say this is a freakish record. All it means, they would say, is that a player managed to go for years without injury. There is no question that a player must be fortunate when it comes to injuries.

But luck plays just a part in the process. Players who keep themselves in good shape are less likely to be injured. Another factor at work is toughness. Unlike a lot of modern players who bench themselves after every little nick and bruise, there are certain "iron men" who ignore the aches and pains and continue to play. The other absolute essential for a long playing streak is that a player has to be more than simply good. He has to be the backbone of a team, a player so steady that he never falls into a prolonged hitting or fielding slump that guarantees a trip to the bench while the manager tries out a rookie just up from the minors.

So will the Gehrig streak ever be equaled? There is a player right now who may be in the process of doing just that. Cal Ripken Jr. of the Baltimore Orioles this season reached the 1,500-game mark in a streak that goes all the way back to May 1982.

Yes, Cal may be on his way to breaking Gehrig's record. All he needs to do is make it to the middle of 1995 without missing a game. That's all. Just another four years.

Hank Aaron is the top home-run hitter of all time.

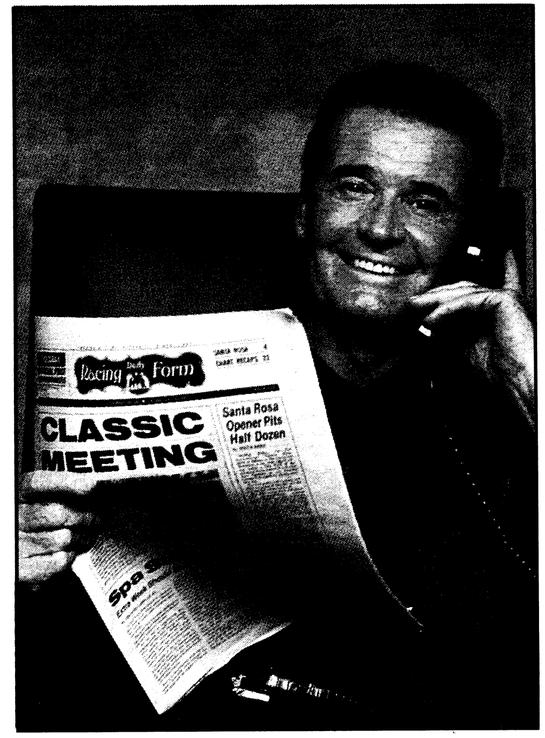
Garner now 'Man of People'

By JAY BOBBIN
Tribune Media Services

He's a literal "Man of the People" in his return to weekly TV, but to the general public, James Garner has been that a lot longer.



Four previous series — including the classics "Maverick" and "The Rockford Files" — and numerous movies such as "The Great Escape," "Victor/Victoria" and "Murphy's Romance" have made the two-time Emmy-winner's easygoing persona a virtual legend of show business. He gets to exercise many of his familiar traits again in his latest role, as Sunday's premiere of his new NBC comedy matches him to the character of Jim Doyle, a horse-betting con man who gets an unexpected change of occupation ... becoming a city councilman, upon being appointed to fill the vacancy left by his deceased ex-wife. He then uses his common sense to match wits, "Mr. Smith Goes to Washington"-style, with veteran politicians who think their patented type of schmoozing and maneuvering will sway him to their side. As the sophisticated mayor (played by Kate Mulgrew, formerly of "HeartBeat" and daytime's "Ryan's Hope") and her aides quickly learn, though, that could be the hardest proposition they'll ever have to face. Other cast regulars include Corinne ("E/R") Bohrer, George ("Matt Houston," "Hill Street Blues") Wyner and Romy Walthall.

Garner had maintained in recent years that he wasn't interested in doing series work again, concentrating instead on TV-movies such as last season's "Decoration Day" (for which he was an Emmy nominee once more) as well as the much-honored "Promise" and "My Name Is Bill W." He was co-producer of both.

He says changed his mind because he likes the character, the script, his situation and the half-hour format.

MPs celebrate 50 years

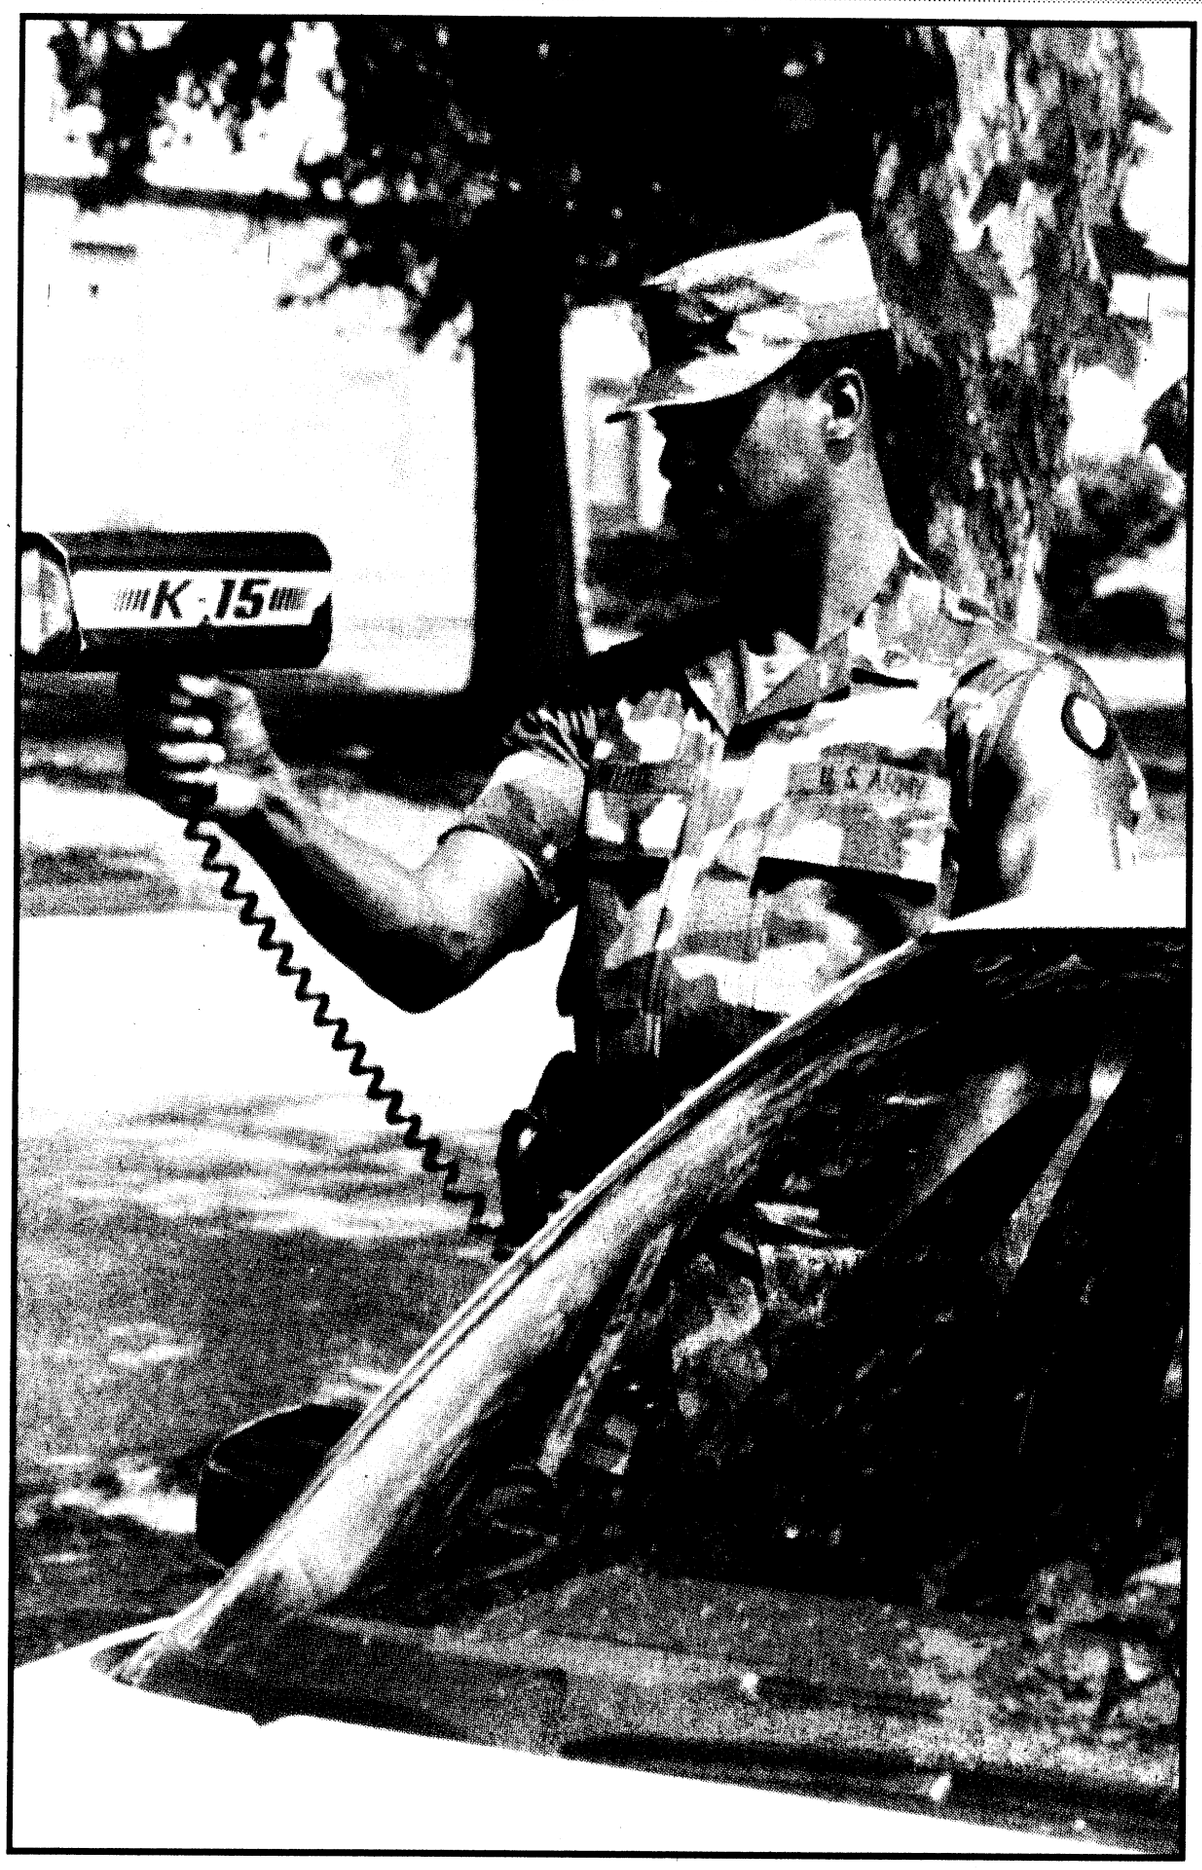
Ball, other activities highlight event

by Brian C. Sutton
Bayonet staff writer

The Military Police Corps celebrated its 50th anniversary Sept. 9 to 14 with a variety of events that concluded with a Military Police Activity Anniversary Ball Saturday.

Besides the ball, the MPs participated in an organization day, a picnic, pistol competition, a warrior competition similar to an iron man competition and something else that was more than a challenge for a few MPs.

Many members of the post's MPA took part in "Centurion Day," a day designed to give the lower enlisted soldiers the power of authority that senior enlisted and officers usually have.



"Basically this is just like the old practice of workers and supervisors switching jobs," said Sgt. Maj. Arthur Wilcox, MPA sergeant major.

"We are literally switching jobs," said Pfc. Michael Hyrmer. "It may seem like it's no big deal, But it's not as easy as it looks."

Hyrmer was the acting first sergeant and found that there was a lot more to being the chief NCO for a company than giving orders.

"I found out really quick that there is a lot more administrative work than you might think," said Hyrmer. " It's kind of tough to keep up with it all.

"In all," said Wilcox," I think everyone responded well to the role-switching. The privates get the experience they need to become leaders on a regular basis, and the NCOs and officers are reminded of what it's like to take orders."

Residents urged to conserve water

By Barbara Ray
USAIC Public Affairs Office

The temporary water conservation program put into place last Friday by the Directorate of Engineering and Housing was a success, according to Col. Patrick D. J. Kenny, director of DEH. The Fort Benning community reacted extremely well to the request for water conservation for which the DEH is very appreciative, he said.

Daily water consumption was reduced from 8 million gallons per day to 6 million gallons per day.

The necessity for conserving water has not passed. The program is expected to remain in effect until at least Wednesday, when the first pump being repaired is scheduled to be placed back into operation.

At that time a decision will be made to either lift or continue with the curtailment based on the repaired pump's performance.

In the meantime, residents here are asked to continue to refrain from watering lawns and washing cars. The car washes on post are also closed according to John L. Baggett, deputy director of DEH.

The precautionary measures will lower the quantity of water pumped and reduce wear and tear on the pumps while repairs are made. Baggett said the leaks in the seals are part of the electric motor cooling system only, so there is no effect on the quality of the water Fort Benning residents are receiving.

He also noted that water used to maintain the Follow Me Golf Course isn't taken from the domestic water provided by the pumps under repair, but rather comes from the lake at the golf course.

Residents will be notified through the post cable channel when repairs are completed.

CFC begins Oct. 1

Directorate of Community Activities

The new Combined Federal Campaign is set to kick off another year.

In past years, Fort Benning has listed separate codes for all of the various activities on post. This year everything has been consolidated under one central organization. The newly formed Fort Benning Soldier and Family Support Association administers to the following activities on post:

- Youth Program
- Handicap Program
- Chaplain's Enlisted Outreach
- ACS Lending Closet
- ACS Food Locker
- Dental Health
- Post Community Improvement
- Volunteer Services Child Care Provider Certification
- Fort Benning Red Cross

The Fort Benning Soldier and Family Support Association is the only CFC organization devoted entirely to the Fort Benning community.

If you want your CFC contributions to remain on Fort Benning, check local Code 5001 on your CFC contribution form, officials said.

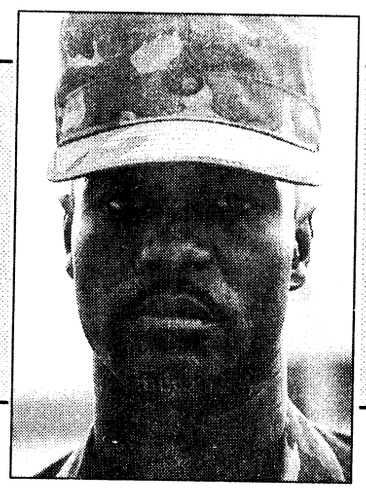
VARIOUS VOICES

What do you think is the biggest problem facing the United States today?



Spc. David Beane, 598th Maintenance Company — "I think it's crime and drugs. They are sort of a vicious circle together. People steal to get drug money and I think that is just tearing us down."

Spc. Richard Wray, 533rd Transportation Co.— "I believe that there is too much prejudice in our country. All that junk keeps us from coming together as a country and being as strong as we should."

Eileen Brady, family member — "I think the biggest problem is war. Every year something else happens, and it just makes us look terrible."

Staff Sgt. Paul McNeil, Non-Commisioned Officer's Academy — "We have gotten away from taking care of our own people. We try too hard to look good in the eyes of others, while our own people are homeless and need help."

Suzanne Newey, family member, substitute teacher — "I think the breakdown of the family is the biggest problem we face. Paarents are spending less time with their kids, and the childrens' problems are shuffled off to the schools to deal with. I believe that if parents spent more time with their children, a lot of the problems we have ... would be settled."

Shirley Brock, civilian employee — "I believe that drugs are the biggest problem in the U.S. today. It is a big concern of everyone, but seems to be nothing done about it."

Hearing 'voices' challenging

by Clyde Snively
Bayonet staff writer

COMMENTARY

Jimbo's the guy who does the Various Voices column.

I tried that for a few weeks and went brain dead. Anyone who thinks it's easy to come up with questions that will evoke answers people are interested in reading, have another thought coming.

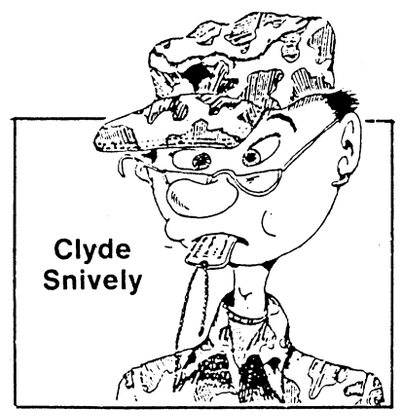
Equally as tough is going up to strangers and, without scaring them off, telling them who you are and what you want: "Hi, I'm Clyde Snively, intrepid Bayonet man-on-the-street, roving reporter and I'd like to ask you and your opinion on what we can do to save the red-cockaded woodpecker."

"Really. I mean like really. You really want my opinion on something. You're kidding, of course."

"No. I really, really want your opinion. It's important to me. It's important to our readers. So what do you think?"

"About what?"

"About saving the red-cockaded woodpecker."



"What's that?"

It's a woodpecker that wears a hat like Robin Hood, you know a feather sticking out of the side. It can only live in living pine trees with heart disease and its numbers are shrinking rapidly."

"Oh I see. Maybe we need to inject more pine trees with heart worms to give them a place to live. Failing that, put them up in some condo with a waterfall and lots of bachelor and bachelorette woodpeckers so they can party, mate and expand their colony. Name the place "Peckerwood," advertise the colony with billboards, you know the whole nine yards."

"Thank-you. Now if you'll just back up so I can take your picture."

"My picture! You want my picture! That wasn't part of the deal! I didn't trim my nasal hairs this morning. My uniform's still wearing ketchup from breakfast this morning. I didn't wash my hair last night. I forgot to floss this morning. You can't take my picture."

So anyway, that's the way it goes. Doing Various Voices is a thankless job, so I felt a little guilty yesterday when I asked Jimbo what this week's question was.

"What are the major social concerns facing the world today," he said.

"Migosh," I said. "You're going to ask a heavy question like that of the same people who told you they expected the Forty-niners and Bears; the Dolphins and Broncos to be playing each other in the Superbowl!"

"We did get some rather provocative answers," he said.

"Sure," I said. "Like, 'why don't people use their directional signals when making turns,' or 'why do people insist on slowing to 5 mph on the interstate to stare at accidents,'" I said with mirth.

"No Clyde, the Fort Benning public is a little more astute than you. They were concerned with the destruction of the rain forests, the current downturn in the economy and drugs permeating our society."

"Gosh," I said, shrewdly.

"By the way, do they know the Combined Federal Campaign probably supports some foundation that is working these problems?" I asked.

"Yeah smarty, and there's also a box people can mark to keep the money on post to support post projects designed to take care of soldiers and their families," he retorted.

I was whipped. Jimbo's been doing Various Voices too long. He's got an answer for everything. I wonder how he'd do on Jeopardy. Maybe he could donate his winnings to CFC.

Here's why we fly the POW flag

By Patrick Swan
ARNEWS staff writer

Today, the National League of Families Prisoner of War/ Missing in Action flag will fly to recognize our missing Americans from Vietnam, Korea and World War II.

However, it won't fly for the soldiers who didn't come home from the Persian Gulf War. The reason is simple: there are none.

In the Kuwait Theater of Operations, a total of 49 U.S. servicemembers were listed as missing or "Duty Status--whereabouts unknown."

Seven of these soldiers, five of whom were captured and released, and two of whom were detained and released. No U.S.soldiers killed in action were held by the Iraqis.

Many factors contributed to these unprecedented results. Desert terrain and improvements in communication permitted timely location and identification of downed flight crews, crash sites and remains.

The lightning-fast nature of the offensive also gave the Iraqis scant chance of capturing more of our soldiers. Possibly the most the most important reason, however, is that the Army committed itself to the rapid return of soldiers separated behind enemy lines. It was soon top-priority when CENTCOM commander, Gen. H. Norman Schwarzkopf Jr., met with his Iraqi counterparts to accept their surrender.

Just as the Army acted quickly in Desert Storm, it has also acted tenaciouslyon behalf of those 2,273 still listed as unaccounted for from Southeast Asia; the 8,177 missing from the Korean Peninsula and the 78,750 stilll missing from World War II.

For example, from January 1973 onward, Vietnam has released 591 POWs and 400 sets of remains, 310 subsequently identified as Americans. In recent years, retired Gen. John Vessey, presidential envoy to Hanoi for POW/ MIA affairs, has led the search for remaining Americans in meetings with Vietnamese officials. Since 1987 alone, Vietnam has turned over 288 remains, of which 122 were identified as Americans.

Cambodia has also cooperated. In August of this year and Julyof 1990, the Phnom Penh government turned over the remains of possible Americans missing in Cambodia. In Laos, joint excavations have resulted in the identification and accounting of 19 missing Americans.

The accounting from the Korean War has been less successful for the more than 6,000 Americans north of the 38th Parallel. Since 1954, North Korea has turned over only 16 sets of remains to the U.S. government. Those remains arrived in the past two years are still undergoing analysis at the U.S. Army Central Identification Laboratory in Hawaii. The government, through the United Nations Command/ Military Armistice Commission, continues to press North Korea to honor its obligations regarding POWs and MIAs.

The decisive victory in World War II allowed U.S. officials extensive battlefield access to search for missing Americans. Unfortunately, some were lost in remote jungle locations. Since 1979, though, more than 110 World War II remains have been recovered from the Pacific area and returned to Hawaii for identification. Excavations continue in Guam, Okinawa, the Solomon Islands, New Guinea and Wake Island, and at other locations.

For these lost servicemembers, the POW/MIA flag is flown. It is a show of faith that we haven't forgotten their contributions to our freedom. With continued dedication, someday we may never need to fly the flag or set aside a day to remember our missing comrades. Bringing all of our missing troops home from Desert Storm is certainly a promising first step toward that goal. Meanwhile, we continue honoring our commitment to obtaining the fullest possible accounting for those American's still missing and unaccounted from our wars. It's the least we can do.

(Editor's note: Fort Benning's POW/MIA Day ceremony will feature the "Cooler King," retired Col. Jerry Sage. The ceremony is scheduled for 2:30 p.m. today in Marshall Auditorium, Infantry Hall.

Sage was in Gen. William "Wild Bill" Donovan's office of Strategic Services during World War II, working behind enemy lines as a guerrilla leader and saboteur. He spent two years a sprisoner of war after being wounded and captured.)

Mandatory HIV test is no witch hunt

By Patrick Swan
ARNEWS staff writer

Is the military's AIDS testing policy a thinly veiled attempt to expose homosexual and drug-abusing soldiers?

An Air Force major apparently believes so. He faces a court martial for refusing an order to take the HIV test, claiming the test violates his civil liberties and is part of "AIDS hysteria" within the military.

Army policy is that HIV tests are conducted biennially to ensure the continued readiness and deployability of the force. Healthy soldiers are the most important component of a healthy Army, and HIV testing, combined with physical fitness and weight control standards, is one way of ensuring healthy soldiers.

Identifying homosexual soldiers or those who abuse intravenous drugs may be one inadvertent consequence.

While medical statistics show that HIV infection is highest among these groups, the Army acknowledges that soldiers can acquire the HIV virus from a number of means.

Therefore, it makes no negative judgment regarding this during counseling sessions with HIV-positive soldiers.

To the contrary, according to Maj. David G. Peterson, an Army HIV policy staff officer, the information obtained during a patient assessment is protected by law and may not be used against the soldier in any adverse administrative or disciplinary proceeding.

Rather, he said the patient assessment is used to determine how the virus is being transmitted, what rlsk factors may have played a part in the soldier's infection, and identify others who may be at risk of infection.

As for whether the frequency of HIV testing is part of "AIDS hysteria," an information paper prepared by the Office of the Deputy Chief of Staff for Personnel offers a more benign explanation: that such testing is based on the number of new HIV infections expected annually and the costs associated with HIV testing.

Besides the standard biennial testing, additional testing requirements are generated by pregnancy; referral to a clinic for sexually transmitted diseases or a drug rehabilitation program; as part of periodic physicals; or before making a permanent change of station to an overseas location.

The DCSPER information paper, which supports Army Regulation 600-110, also states that HIV testing 18 conducted to interrupt the chain of transmission, thus preserving the health of soldiers and their families. In addition, it is used to determine fitness for military duty and to avoid potential complications from immunizations.

The post-World War II Army has been deployed all over the world. Army officials have a legitimate interest in ensuring that its soldiers sent to serve in those foreign locations, at the invitation of the host government, do not spread the HIV virus, knowingly or not. In the event soldiers are deployed from those overseas posts to defend U.S interests, the Army must be confident that the blood supply for its soldiers is uncontaminated.

Biennial AIDS testing is a step toward guaranteeing this.

Nevertheless, as mentioned earlier, because of individual concerns, the Army takes a variety of steps to protect confidentiality and provide counseling and treatment to HIV infected soldiers. AR 600-110 says many persons infected with HIV don't appear to be sick and that the majority of them may be unaware they are infected.

Instead of asking why the Army tests its soldiers for HIV, a more important question is whether the Army can allow the potential health problems to go unaddressed or undetected.

50 join in effort to clean up river coast

By James C. Rupp
Bayonet staff writer

Approximately 50 soldiers from the 36th Engineer Group and the 1st Battalion, 507th Parachute Infantry Regiment participated in the Georgia-Alabama project to clean the coast of the Chattahoochee River shoreline, Sept. 9 through Saturday.

The project, deemed Operation Clean Shore, supervised by the Bi-City Clean Lake Association is in its third year of its efforts to take away the trash and garbage from the areas of Lake Walter F. George and Lake Eufala.

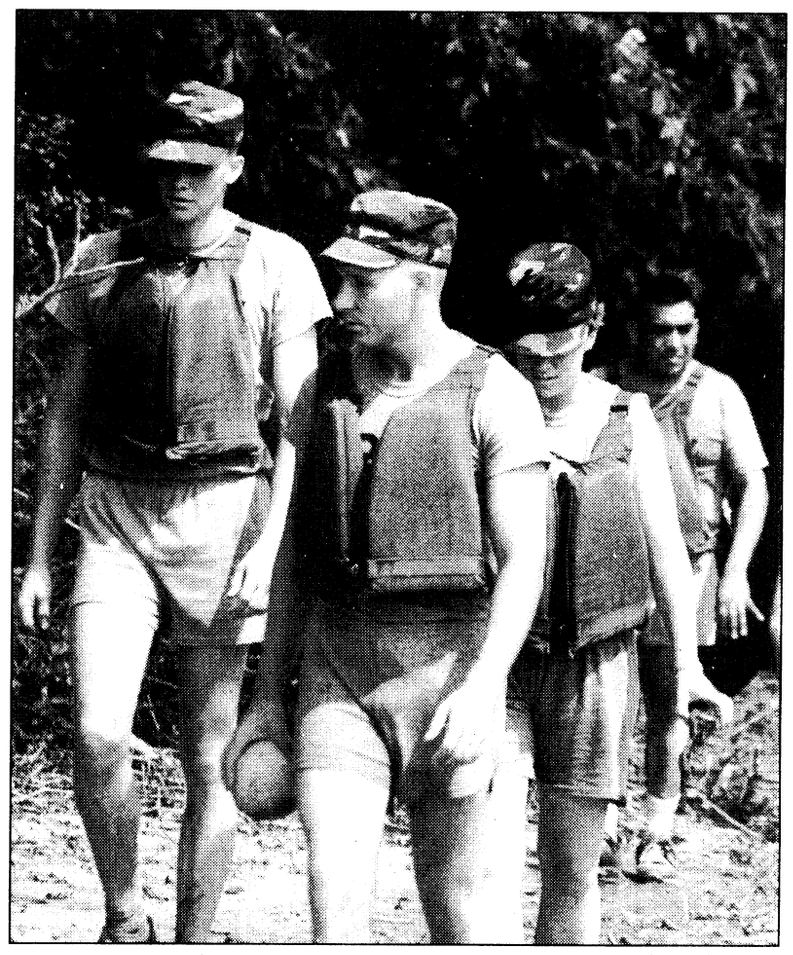
A boat operated by the 36th Engineer Group prepares to disgorge its passengers on the shoreline to collect trash on the Chattahoochee River.



The projects goal was to enlist 1,000 volunteers to collect 2,000 bags of trash from the shores.

The Fort Benning volunteers were responsible for the area between the Upatoi and Uchee Creeks. The details from the 507th who were enlisted in the fight against pollutuion were ferried from island to island by soldiers from the 36th Engineer Group by boat.

The soldiers spent the entire day of the 13th travelling from island to island collecting trash in 95 degree heat with their meals provided by the Association for the United States Army.

Don Sonnen, president of the Bi-State Clean Lake Association, said volunteers numbered approximately 800; combined for an estimated 1,400 bags of trash. Sonnen said the seemingly disapponting figures ar the result of past successes.

"It seems like a disappointment, but there just was't much trash out there. I would imagine that the last couple of times went so well, it didn't take as much to do a good job this year."

Members of the 361st Infantry Regiment Unveil a monument .

361st reunion is one to remember

By Brian C. Sutton
Bayonet staff writer

It was a reunion to be remembered Friday at the National Infantry Museum here according to members of the 361st Infantry Regiment.

This WWII infantry regiment was initially committed to combat in Anzio, Italy. "Its men walked further than any other regiment and fought over the roughest terrain than any regiment in the history of the Army," according to Alvin Bedgood, of the 361st Infantry Association.

Post Chief of Staff Col. John D. Fuller was onhand to accept two donations from the 361st. A monument dedicated to honor the 361st which fought during both world wars.

"Today is a special day in the history of our regiment," said Bedgood in a speech to a crowd of nearly 500, "for it marks the realization of a dream which began almost 20 years ago, when the idea to establish a permanent memorial to the 361st was first brought forward."

Bedgood spoke of the association's tireless effort's to establish the monument, it's difficulties and it's ultimate triumph.

For members of the 361st, this monument, and the stained glass window that accompanied it, mark the end of a lot of hard work and frustration, according to Bedgood, and marks the beginning of a period of remembrance.

Grange in as interim mayor, plans projects

By Connie Bridges
Special to The Bayonet

Holly Grange has volunteered to serve as the new interim mayor for the East Main Post community until elections in April, according to Darlene M. Perry, community life coordinator.

"We are happy to have such an enthusiastic mayor as Holly Grange with her knowledge and expertise in community programs," Perry said. "I am sure that with her help we will be able to implement more programs and expand existing ones, such as the recycling one at Fort Benning."

The East Main Post community, sponsored by the 29th Infantry Regiment, is a newly-formed community presently operating out of the West Main Post office.

Since the regulations just went into effect forming the new community, there are no maps showing East Main Post.

However, the rule of thumb is that if you live in officer housing on Main Post, you are in Grange's district.

Grange said she will represent the community on all post councils and encourages East Main Post residents with any concerns to contact her at 545-5147.

The monthly meeting at the Community Life Center in Soldiers' Plaza is every third Tuesday so any problems would best be reported to her prior to this.

She has a number of goals for her eight months of service.

An environmental engineer by trade, Grange is concerned with recycling in the family housing areas, not just for the post units.

She plans to attend post Recycling Committee meetings, as well as Columbus Recycling Committee meetings, so that a system with storage space and voluntary transportation of recyclables can be set up. The community would then benefit monetarily with a portion of the funds coming back to East Main Post.

Grange

Grange also is working with the provost marshall regarding vehicles speeding through the community. She said, "Extra radar equipment is on order to help discourage people from speeding through our residential areas with many small children. We also want to begin a neighborhood watch program to help with this."

Smaller projects include working for one section in the area that has no air conditioning due to funding problems and playgrounds that need to be policed and repaired.

Also, next month, all of the communities will be involved in starting "Project Welcome," a new undertaking in which all newcomers will receive a welcome packet with post information and freebees in it.

"There are 647 sets of quarters in my district," she said, "and it is very hard to get through to everyone in that size of a community."

To assist with this, Grange is looking for a volunteer community staff to help get things going. She especially needs a vice mayor. Interested persons should contact either her, or Perry at 545-2910.

Artist shares knowledge of music, other cultures

Fort Benning Schools

Dexter School welcomes artist-in-education, Sean Driscoll, a professional musician from Savannah, Ga. Using the guitar, banjo, lute and drums, Driscoll is working directly with students on a variety of musical subjects which support the school's motto of "Together Toward Tomorrow."

Driscoll's residency at Dexter School is designed to integrate music, art, creative movement, and an understanding of other cultures through a series of projects geared to specific grade levels. Kindergarten children are participating in what Driscoll calls an African carnival of animals. The children are making masks and learning creative dances while studying African music and learning about the African ashika drum. First-graders are making their own tin can drums and learning to play some basic rhythmic patterns while learning African songs.

The banjo, the Spanish guitar, and African drums are being used in lessons with second-graders. Students will visualize sound pictures and will draw pictures related to musical works from various cultures.

Third-graders are learning to make their own mouth bows and will learn to play simple songs, and fourth graders are working with Driscoll on composing a story related to the music that he brings to them.

Dexter fifth-graders are spending time with Driscoll learning about American folk music. They will have their own jug band complete with washtub bass and jugs.

"I feel very lucky to be at Dexter School," said Driscoll. "The school has a diverse student body that has traveled throughout the world, and Dexter has best the staff and facilities that I've ever encountered. With this combination, it's proving to be an exciting school residency for me."

"It's an exciting residency for us, as well," said Vicki Rogers, principal. "Mr. Driscoll is working with our art teacher, our music teacher, our physical education teacher and our entire faculty to incorporate his knowledge of music from various cultures into our existing curriculum."

CHAMPUS rules change

Martin Army Community Hospital

Beginning Oct. 1, some CHAMPUS-eligible persons will need "non-availability statements" from nearby military medical facilities before CHAMPUS will share the cost of certain kinds of outpatient treatment that they receive from civilian health care providers.

In the past, non-availability statements were needed only for non-emergency inpatient care from civilian sources for people who lived within the Zip Code service area of the nearest military hospital.

The NASs are certifications from uniformed services hospitals that they can't provide a particular type of care. Beginning Oct. 1, the NAS must be entered electronically in the Defense Department's Defense Eligibility and Enrollment Reporting System computer data files by the service hospital or the CHAMPUS claim will be denied. Beneficiaries will no longer be required to attach a copy of the NAS to the claim form.

There are 14 outpatient procedures for which NASs will be required, beginning Oct. 1. They include:

• Certain hernia repairs;

• Breast mass or tumor removal;

• Nose repair (rhinoplasty--changing the shape of the nose);

• Removal of tonsils or adenoids;

• Cataract removal;

• Strabismus repair (surgery to lengthen or shorten muscles that help the eyes function together);

• Dilation and curettage (widening of the cervical canal and scraping of the uterine cavity);

• Upper GI endoscopy (visual examination of the interior of the upper gastrointestinal tract);

• Myringotomy or tympanostomy (incision of the tympanic membrane in the ear to relieve pressure and drain the middle ear. Includes placement of tubes in the ear to aid drainage);

• Ligation or transection of the fallopian tubes (cutting the fallopian tubes to prevent fertilization);

• Arthroscopy (use of an instrument to visually examine the interior of a joint);

• Gynecological laparoscopy (use of an instrument called a laparoscope to examine female reproductive organs in the abdomen);

• Cystoscopy (use of an instrument to examine the interior of the bladder);

• Neuroplasty (decompression or freeing of nerves from scar tissue).

Even in the case of the outpatient procedures listed above, a patient doesn't need a NAS to visit a physician to have the need for such a procedure diagnosed--the NAS is only needed when the procedure is actually performed.

People whose home address ZIP Code falls outside the local military hospital's service area don't need NASs before they seek civilian health care under CHAMPUS. An NAS is not required for people who live within a service hospital's ZIP Code service area, but who require emergency care (that meets CHAMPUS guidelines as an emergency) from a civilian hospital, or who have primary health insurance or a program that provides covereage for the needed treatment and that pays before CHAMPUS.

A NAS is not required for care at student infirmaries, residential treatment centers, skilled nursing facilities, specialized treatment facilities (such as alcohol rehabilitation facilities); or under CHAMPUS' Program for the Handicapped, or under the Military-Civilian Health Services Partnership Program.

NASs for both inpatient and outpatient care are valid only for hospital admissions or selected outpatient procedures within 30 days of issuance of the NAS--and, they're good only for the type of treatment for which they're issued. For inpatient care, NASs remain valid from the date of admission to the hospital until 15 days after discharge (with some exceptions) for any other required treatment that's directly related to the original admission.

In addition to military hospitals, several former Public Health Service hospitals--now designated as "Uniformed Services Treatment Facilities" --that have been issuing NASs for inpatient care will also issue NASs for the selected outpatient procedures described above.

For more information about NASs, including how to get one and how to appeal the denial of one, contact the health benefits advisor.

The Health Benefits Advisors at Martin Army Community Hospital can be reached at 544-3461, Monday through Friday, from 8 a.m. until 4:30 p.m.

Year's worth of missiles helps unit 'TOW' the line

By Tom Wilkinson
3rd Brigade, 24th Infantry Division Public Affairs

"Gunner, missile, tank, 12 o'clock, 2,500 meters, at your command, fire."

"Fire!" echoes from the radio — Bang! Whoosh! A tube-launched, optically tracked, wire-guided missile screams downrange, impacting on its target.

The soldiers of Company E, 1st Battalion, 18th Infantry spent Aug. 7, firing TOW missiles on the Hartell Observation Post.

"We've got a whole year's worth of TOWs to fire," said Capt. Richard Prout, the company commander. "Between Echo Company and the battalion's Scout Platoon, that's a total of 24 missiles."

"The concept is that two guns will come on the firing line at a time," explained 2nd Lt. Eric Martin, the platoon leader of 1st Platoon. "The tracks will use the cover and concealment of the woodline as they move into position."

As the first vehicles moved into position, the tactical maneuver was perfect.

"They're psyched and ready to go," said Prout. "This is our first live-fire since coming home from Southwest Asia, and with all the training we've been doing, the gunners have probably been tracking targets in their sleep."

All the training in the desert really paid off, too, as evidenced by one platoon — 1st Platoon — firing six missiles in combat at Tallil Airfield, all direct hits.

"Just before we left Tallil we were overwatching for our task force, Task Force 2-69, when a Jeep pulled up to within about 1,000 meters of our position," said Cpl. Matthew Luchko, one of the platoon's squad leaders, who can also double as gunners.

"Four Iraqi soldiers dismounted and opened fire with their AK47s," he continued. "When we returned small arms fire, two of the Iraqis surrendered, but the other two kept firing on us from defensive positions.

"My platoon sergeant ordered me to fire the TOW, and I hit the jeep with the first round," said Luchko, who received an Army Commendation Medal with "V" Device for his actions. "The Iraqi soldiers kept shooting after I destroyed their Jeep until some of our guys drove up in an armored personnel carrier and killed them."

Luchko and his fellow gunners agreed that there's not much difference between firing the TOW in training and firing in combat.

"Except, of course, for the possible missing the enemy when he's got the capability of taking out your track," said Cpl. Gregory Horton.

According to Spc. Leif Lange, gunners experience "pure anticipation and an adrenaline rush" whenever — and wherever — they get the opportunity to fire the TOW.

"Firing a missile downrange is the toughest test a gunner ever has unless he gets to fire in combat," said Lange, adding that he has trained on four different TOW simulators.

"The hardest thing is controlling your breathing because when the round ignites, the backblast is intense and it jars you," he continued. "You've got to control the movement of the missile with the hand controls before it impacts downrange, and if you lose your concentration you will miss the target."

"Each missile costs thousands of dollars, so whenever I get to live-fire I always make believe I've got an enemy target because I don't ever want to miss," said Spc. Kevin Sanders.

"The training builds teamwork among the four members of the crew — the track commander, driver, loader and gunner," Horton said. "Whenever you receive a fire mission, everyone has to do his job to ensure the success of the mission."

Small investment pays off

Immunization Week time to heed needs; 30 to 40 percent of young unprotected

By Robert Knight
Pediatric Clinic

Immunization week, Sunday through Sept. 28, is observed to increase parents' awareness of the need to give children an early start to a healthy life. The easiest and most effective way to prevent diphtheria, tetanus, pertussis (whooping cough), mumps, measles, rubella, and haemophilus influenza is early immunization.

Dr. Antonia C. Novelle, the surgeon general, reported recently: "Among children ages 1 to 4, 30 percent to 40 percent have not been immunized." Novelle also pointed out that, in 1989, measles accounted for 41 deaths of children in the United States, the highest number reported in two decades. By 1990, the number of deaths increased to 89. There were 18,000 cases of measles reported in 1989 and 27,000 in 1990.

Children from 2 months to 2 years normally get their immunizations during well baby appointments. After that, statistics show that parents depend on the school system to remind them when required immunizations are due.

The small investment in time that a parent makes to provide their children with the protection of immunizations can pay large dividends. Immunizations safeguard your child from the complications of preventable diseases such as deafness, blindness, brain damage from extremely high temperatures, and even death.

Martin Army Community Hospital offers all required immunizations for your child. For children from 2 months through 2 years of age, immunization appointments are made in the Pediatric Clinic by calling 544-1086/87/88.

For families not enrolled in family practice, children 2 years of age and older, receive immunizations in the Immunization Clinic. Hours are Monday through Friday from 7:30 to 11:30 a.m. and Monday, Tuesday, Thursday and Friday from 1 to 3:30 p.m. on a walk in basis. Parents should bring their child's medical records to the clinic on the ninth floor, MACH.

Family Practice members should receive immunizations through their assigned clinics.

Give your child a lifetime of protection from childhood illnesses and avoid the complications that can lead to tragedy.

Some may be eligible for payments for damage to mailed baggage

By Richard Brill
Specil to The Bayonet

If you recently came to Fort Benning from Europe and were directed to ship your unaccompanied baggage through the regular postal service at government expense, you are eligible to receive compensation for damage to or loss of your property during shipment.

According to Capt. Ron Weaver of Claims Division, Office of the Staff Judge Advocate, a shortage of carriers in Europe to pack soldiers' household goods forced many of them to ship items through the regular postal service.

"When household goods are shipped from Europe back to the United States, the government normally has a contract carrier to ship the goods. In some instances there were shortages, so soldiers were directed to ship the goods they absolutely needed themselves," Weaver explained.

Weaver said that if your goods were damaged, you must report it within seventy days to the Claims Division, Ofice of the Staff Judge Advocate, which is building 5 on Fort Benning.

Once you file the initial report, you have two years two file a claim.

However, Weaver said that the faster you file a claim, the better your chance of being reimbursed for the damages.

Weaver also warned any would-be cheats who might want to claim something was lost that they never really had shipped in the first place.

"Soldiers must be able to substantiate their loss, either with pictures, purchase receipts, a signed statement, or some way that proves the item was really lost," Weaver said.

Soldiers who shipped property at personal expense, without benefit of instruction from their post's transportation office, can also be reimbursed.

In order to file a claim, Weaver said, they have a receipt for postage and a statement of non-availability from the transportation office.

Questions concerning the policies for unaccompanied baggage can be answered by calling Claims Division, Office of the Staff Judge Advocate at 545-2285, or 545-2286.

'Striker Stakes' tests squads

By Tom Wilkinson
3rd Brigade, 24th Infantry Division

Shoot, move and communicate!

One year after the invasion of Kuwait, Desert Storm veterans of the 1st Battalion (Mechanized), 18th Infantry "Striker," faced the challenge again -- only this time, it was just training.

The battalion held "Striker Stakes," a squad competition aimed at challenging squad leaders by creating innovative and stressful training, by focusing on individual and collective skills.

The event stressed the squads in many areas of expertise to determine which squad was the best.

"We developed the competition as a living document, that we can either expand or subtract events," said Maj. George Piccirilli, the battalion operations officer. "It starts off with the Army Physical Fitness Test, a preventive maintenance checks and services on equipment, a tactical mounted road march and occupation of an assembly area; then it splits off into two phases: Land navigation with a four mile forced march, and a squad live-fire exercise."

The 2nd Squad, 1st Platoon, Company C won the event, outscoring all 35 other squads.

"We knew we were capable of winning, but we went with the intention of just doing our best," said Staff Sgt. Elroy P. Souvenir, the squad leader. "The four mile forced march was our best event. We really worked as a squad."

Don Barlow

Pfc. Scott Spooner, 3rd Squad, 2nd Platoon, Company 1, speaks with Sgt. Duane Walker during live fire.

"The competition tells you where you stand," said Spc. Richard G. Carrion, a squad member. "There are moments when you think you're not going to make it, so you really depend on your squad members."

For the winners, being together and working as a squad throughout Desert Shield and Storm had its advantages.

"I think it coincides greatly that we were a team in the desert," said PFC Steven S. Lower, a squad member. "It was easier in the desert though, with the wide open spaces. Here, there are many more obstacles to slow you down and disrupt command and control."

Winning the coveted first place did not come without rewards.

Each of the members of the squad received an Army Achievement Medal, a framed picture of the squad and the "Striker Stakes 91" trophy.

"It took every one of you to win this competition," said Lt. Col. E. W. Chamberlain III, the battalion commander, as he congratulated the squad.

"This was a big challenge, it was not an easy event," Chamberlain told the entire battalion. "Everybody learned something, and you kept your head in the game, resulting in no injuries."

The competition will continue to challenge the battalion's squads on a semiannual basis, enhancing the squads' ability to shoot, move and communicate.

"This was not our first competition, and it won't be our last," said Souvenir. "When it comes to performance, my squad really comes through as a team!"

USMA Cadet's summer is no vacation

By Edward Cenawayl
586th Engineer Company

Summer vacation for cadets at the U.S. Military Academy is not like summer vacation at other colleges across the country.

Instead of going to a part-time summer job or taking classes, the cadets about the different jobs the Army has to offer.

The Army brings together service men and women from various units to teach these different jobs.

This year, a detail from the second platoon of the 586th Engineer Company was given the job of teaching the cadets about the four-float assault raft.

Headed by 1st Lt. Gino Carr and Sgt. 1st Class Clyde Cuttino, the detail set up a series of classroom and practical exercise training stations.

These stations teach the cadets how to emplace the bridge raft and proper use of the component parts.

While on the 586th's training site the cadets go through three stations to learn the component parts of the bridge.

The first station introduces the cadets to the tools used in constructing a four-float assualt raft.

The second station familiarizes cadets with the component parts of the bridge erection boat.

The third station domonstrates how bridge pieces are prepared to be launched in the water. After the cadets have gone through all three stations, they are taken out on the water for their practical exercise.

This exercise gives the cadets an opportunity to assemble the raft. The cadet squad leader assumes the position of raft commander and must assemble the raft in under 20 minutes. There is a competition between squads to assemble the raft in the fastest possible time.

The cadets learn valuable lessons in leadership and teamwork. Assuming the role of raft commander, the squad leader must assess the situation and give commands in order to make on the spot corrections.

Benning visit is highlight of 10th Armored annual reunion

Group visits today's warriors, recalls its battle at Bastogne

By Marilyn Bazarini
U.S. Army Infantry Training Center

For the past 40 years members of the 10th Armored Division Veterans Association have held their annual gathering to share wartime experiences and to see old friends.

This year's reunion was held in Birmingham, Ala., during the Labor Day weekend. More than 650 members attended.

One of the featured events was a visit to Fort Benning and the 2nd Battalion, 54th Infantry, an element of the 10th Armored Division during World War II. More than 230 association members made the trip to see the Infantry Museum and the 2-54 in action. The tour included Company E, graduation, a look at some One Station Unit Training and lunch with OSUT soldiers in the dining facility.

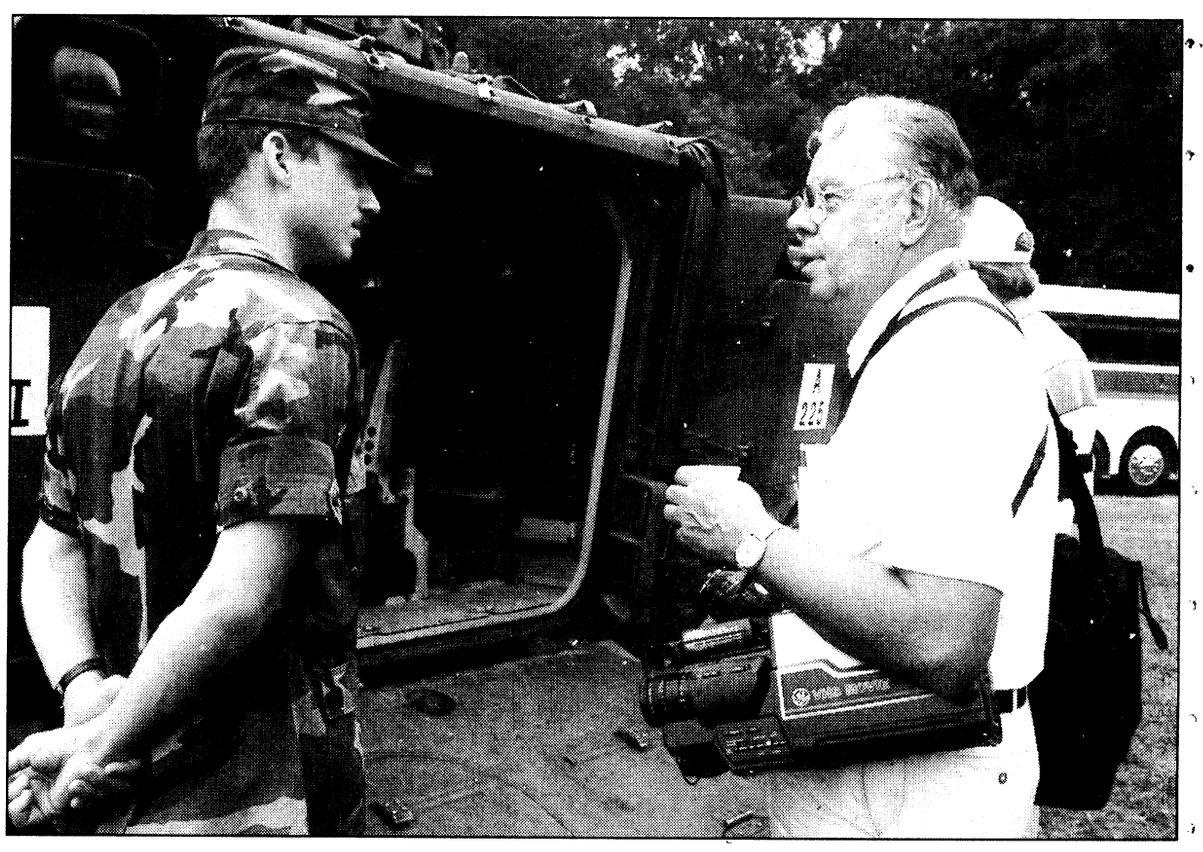
Both the 10th Division and the 2nd Battalion, 54th Infantry, then called Company B, 54th Infantry, were activated at Fort Benning at the beginning of World War II. The 2nd Battalion is the only former 10th Armored Division unit that is still active.

The 10th Armored Division is best known for holding Bastogne against a much larger German force during the battle of the Bulge in December 1944. The 54th successfully defended Marvie, a village outside Bastogne, against three separate German Armored Divisions. The 10th Armored Division was inactivated in August 1945.

The Veterans Association was organized about 1950 by former 10th Division soldiers.

Besides its annual reunions, the association awards a $500 Savings Bond each year to Fort Gordon's soldier of the year. It is also helping to fund a monument to armored unit soldiers that will be erected on the Avenue of Heroes in Washington D.C.

Tom Bubin, a longtime association member, said: "Things have really changed a lot! We were stationed right here at Sand Hill while the division was being organized and equipped."



Bubin believes that today's soldiers are more motivated then when he was in uniform.

"The soldiers I talked to in the dining facility really want to be here," Bubin said. "The kids are very enthusiastic — that showed during the graduation ceremony."

The reunion ended with a banquet where the 54th Infantry was recognized for 75 years of service.

The color guard was courtesy of the 2-54.

Lt. Col. Patrick Casey, commander of the 2nd Battalion, 54th Infantry, was a guest speaker.

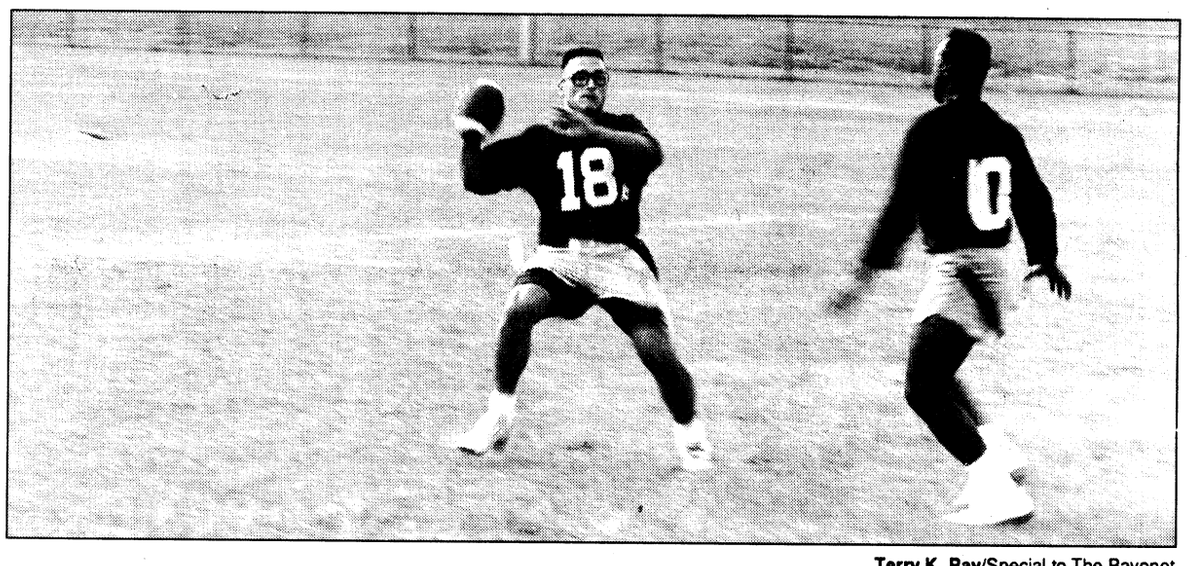
Little Rock beats 'The Rock'

By Terry K. Ray
Special to The Bayonet

The 1st Battalion, 38th Infantry Regiment,"Little Rock" shut out the 1st Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment, "The Rock," 6-0 Friday at Roberts Field.



Defense was the name of the game when Little Rock came head to head with The Rock.

Little Rock's first set of downs came up empty when quarterback John Spisso was intercepted deep down field by The Rock defense.

The Rock offense fared no better on their initial possession having to punt after one 1st down. Little Rock quarterback Spisso and running back Conrad King couldn't make anything happen on their second possession and had to punt away on fourth down.

Things got interesting on The Rock's next possession. Quarterback Donte Bolten took the snap, dropped back to pass and was chased out of the pocket. He then threw over the middle and the pass was picked off by defensive back Michael Fretwell, who was stopped short of the goal line.

On first down and goal, Spisso handed off to King for no gain. A quarterback sneak by Spisso on second down and goal, put Little Rock ahead to stay 6-0. The extra point attempt failed, but Little Rock would need no more. The first half ended when The Rock running back, Daniel McGee ran a trap play and was tackled for no gain.

On The Rock's second play of the half Bolten was intercepted deep down field by the Little Rock secondary. On Little Rock's first play Spisso hit wide receiver Michael Coleman, who tossed to running back King who cut across an open field for a first down.

Two plays later Spisso hit tight end Fretwell who galloped for the end zone, but cornerback Blaine Reeves forced him out of bounds at the goal line The Rock defense stiffened and kept Spisso and company out of the end zone on four downs.

The Rock offense tried to move the ball by passing, but on third down Bolten was picked off by defensive back Fretwell for his second interception of the game. The very next play Spisso was intercepted by safety Maurice new giving The Rock new life. New quarterback Daniel McGee could not come through for The Rock. On third down and long McGee was intercepted by defensive back Augustine Dashiell. Little Rock quarterback Spisso, knowing time was running out tried, to play keep away, but to no avail. Two runs by King and a sack by linebacker Richard Webb would give the ball back to The Rock with little time left.

On first down McGee ran a quarterback sneak for a first down. An illegal use of the hands penalty on the next play moved McGee and company back 10 yards. Defensive lineman Fredrick Thomas took over on the next two plays, batting down a pass and stopping running back Webb at the line of scrimmage.

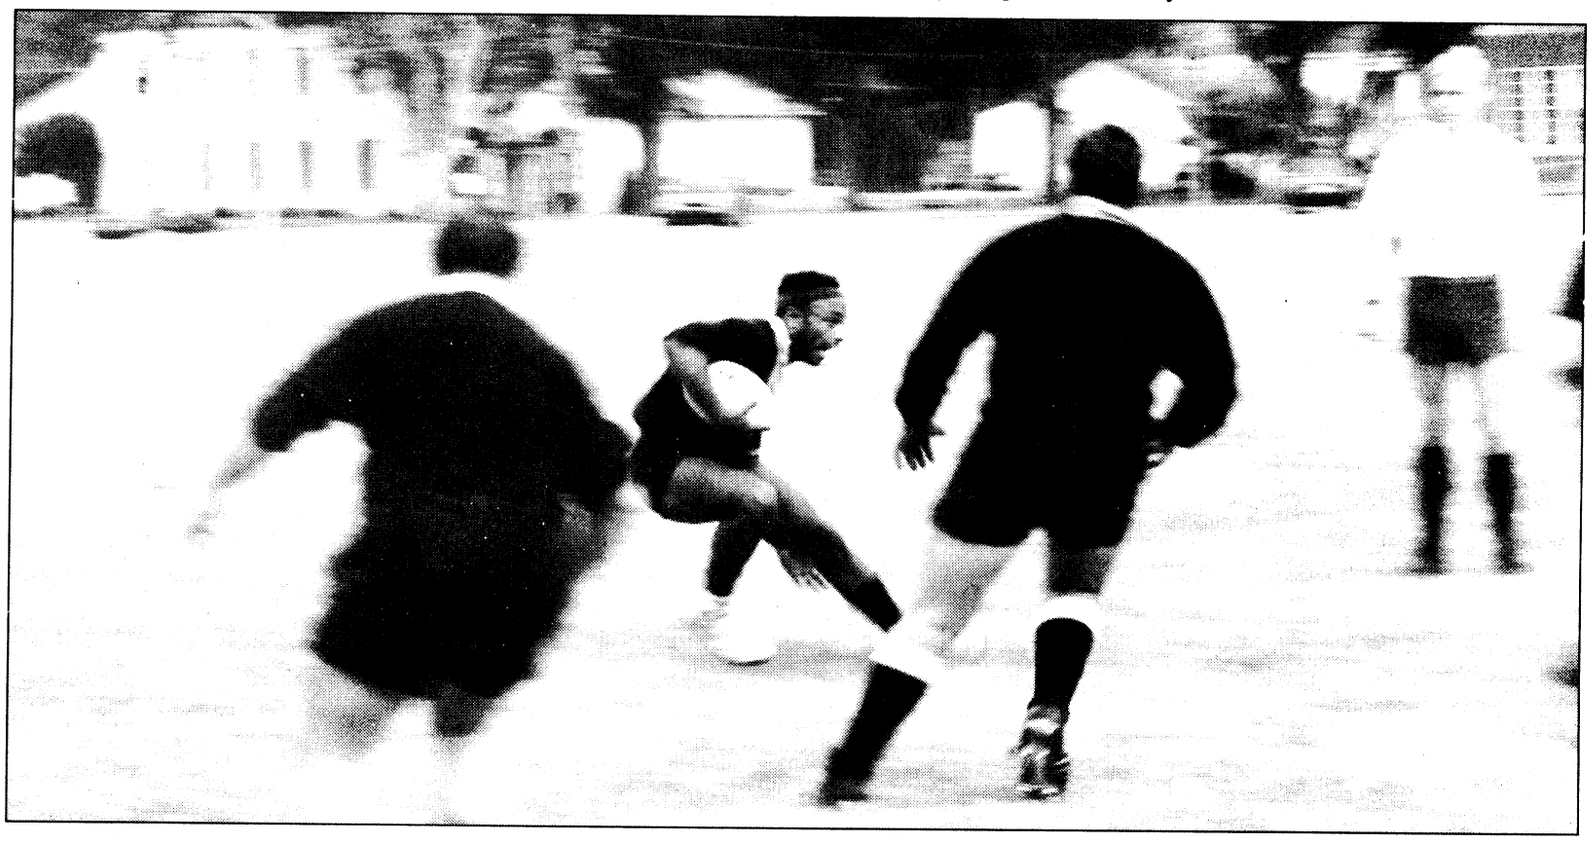
The game ended two plays later, on a McGee pass down the right side that was stopped well short of the goal line. Final score was Little Rock 6, The Rock 0.

Cruise-a-matics lose second straight match

By Terry K Ray
Special to The Bayonet

The Columbus Ft. Benning Rugby Football Club "Cruise-a-matics, lost their second game of the new season, with a 24-6 loss to High Country of Atlanta, Saturday at Stillwell Field.

The Cruise-a-matics and High Country took to the defense in the first half of their match, hitting hard, often and sometimes late. The only scoring to come out of the half, was two penalty kicks by each team.



The low score at the half proved that defense was the name of the game.

In the second half High Country came out smoking, on a line out by the Cruise-a-matics, High Country stole the ball and with some crisp passing and running High Country got the ball to inside center Doug Stoltz who put the ball in the end zone for a try, the two point kick was good and High Country had the lead for good 12-6.

On a scrum formation initiated by the Cruise-a-matics, High Country won the scrum and took off down field. The last man to have possession of the ball was first forward Paul Bagby who touched the ball down for High Country's second try of the half. The extra point kick was good and High Country's lead was now 18-6.

The Cruise-a-matics had two excellent chances to score in the half but couldn't get the ball in the end zone under control.

Late in the half High Country got their final score of the day, when Stoltz with nice passing from his team mates crossed the goal line for his second try of the game.

Terry K. Ray/Special to The Bayonet

Ray Bentley of the Cruise-a-matics moves the ball down the field.

With the two point kick High Country boosted their lead to 24-6.

The Cruise-a-matics added a Mark Davidson penalty kick late in the match, and time ran out with the score High Country 24, Cruise-a-matics 9.

The Cruise-a-matics next home game will be Oct. 5, at 2 p.m. at Stillwell Field. (Note: All home games will be at Stillwell Field not Blue Field.)

Fishermen wonder when best to move

Special to The Bayonet

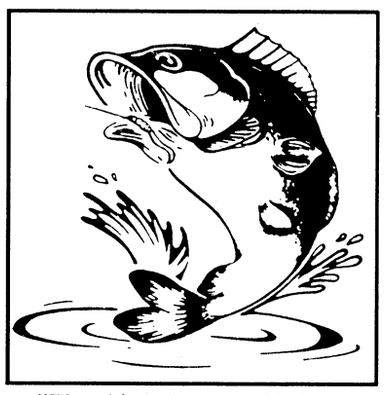
What's the most difficult aspect of professional tournament bass fishing?

It's not really the problem of locating bass, nor is it catching the fish once they are located.

Instead, it's making certain decisions on where or how to fish, particularly after bass are located.

That's the opinion of two former world champions, Charlie Reed and Guido Hibdon, both members of the Johnson Outboards Pro Staff and fulltime professional tournament pros.

"You definitely live or die by the decisions you make on the water," says Reed, who won the Bass Masters Classic championship in 1986. "The hardest decision is always the question of moving to another location in hopes of catching larger fish. It's especially hard if you're catching fish where you are.



Hibdon agrees. "After you've been fishing for several years, you usually develop a type of instinct that tells you where fish might be. Sometimes this instinct is right, and sometimes it's wrong, so you're always wondering if you should follow your instincts to try a new place, or stay where you are.

"It's tough."

Reed remembers a tournament where just such a decision cost him a probable victory. He'd located smaller "limit" bass that most tournament pros try to catch first, but he'd also located a school of larger bass, as well.

"My plan was to catch a limit of the smaller bass first," remembers the Johnson pro, "then go to the larger fish and try to add to my stringer weight. The first day, the plan worked, so the decision I made was the right one.

"The second day I tried the same thing, but couldn't catch the smaller limit bass. I kept thinking I should move to the larger bass, but I didn't, and I hardly brought anything to the scales that second day. I made the wrong decision.

"The third day I decided to go straight to the larger bass, which I did, and I caught a 25-pound stringer. My bad decision to stay with the uncooperative smaller fish the second day kept me from winning that tournament."

"Time is the great equalizer in tournament fishing," says Hibdon, "which is what makes such decisions so difficult. Often, to move from one spot to another takes away a lot of fishing time, so you're really gambling if you do move.

"Those fish might not be biting either."

"There is no easy answer," says Reed. "Tournament fishermen have to make decisions like this practically every hour. You just have to look at all the conditions and decide, realizing you're going to win some and lose some."

Religious Education month observed here

Gabrielle Sonnneberg

By Bill Putman
USAIC Chaplain's Office

At Fort Benning, September is declared Religious Education month. During this month, Protestant Sunday schools, and the Catholic Confraternity of Christian Doctrine mark the beginning of a new school and a new curriculum year. Children begin classes in age groups to which they have recently been promoted.

Although there are new and varying facets of it, religious education itself is not new. There are accounts in the Bible of Jewish adults and children going to the Synagogue to receive religious and secular training.

The modern day Protestant and Catholic religious education originated in Europe. Catholics began religious education in France in the 16th century. The pope officially sanctioned it in 1905. Protestants in England established Sunday schools in the 18th century to serve the dual purpose of affording religious and secular education to children, who worked six days a week in factories.

During the first years of Fort Benning's existence, then Camp Benning, chaplains taught Bible studies to the troops. Eventually, the first Sunday school was established in the early 1920s.

Religious education is often thought of as only CCD and Sunday School. However, religious education presents a much broader field. For instance, the programs include the Women of the Chapel, Youth of the Chapel, prayer breakfasts, Bible studies, vacation Bible schools, confirmation and pre-marriage as well as pre-baptism classes.

All Fort Benning personnel, including military, family members, civilians and retirees are invited and encouraged to participate in all religious education programs. Schedules of religious education opportunities are published frequently in the Bayonet, and are available in chapels. Additional information pertaining to specific programs can be obtained by calling the Religious Education Center, Catholic at 545-2771 or Protestant at 545-2366.

MCCW holds first meeting

Plans outlined for coming year

By Gabrielle Sonnenberg
USAIC Chaplain's Office

The Fort Benning chapter of the Military Council of Catholic Women had their first meeting of the year on Sept. 6.

The attendance of 20 ladies was very favorable, according to Joni Scott, president of MCCW.

"I am very excited about the new year and I was extremely nervous about the first meeting, but because of prayers, I found peace," Joni Scott said. "The many prayers for this meeting were answered. Ladies, your heart has been touched and that is why you are present. I urge you to share the journey, which is this year's theme."

Upon welcoming the ladies, Scott introduced Chaplain (Col.) George Gudz, post chaplain, as the guest speaker.

Gudz explained that there will be a quality increase to the MCCW, since the president has been to the National Conference of the MCCW in El Paso, Texas, this past spring.

Gudz is certain that every lady will learn at least something.

"The church needs to revert to the spirit of Jesus, to get to know his compassionate personality and to be molded as people just like him," Gudz stressed.

Gudz was not overly concerned about membership growth. He explained that during a reunification at an airport, the first thing people do is to embrace. After embracing the words follow, which reflects the importance of warmth and compassion.

Therefore, he then urged the ladies to be warm and compassionate, and new members will return, because they feel understood and loved.

Gudz predicted a meaningful and significant year for the MCCW.

A short break followed Gudz's speech and a special Mass was conducted by Father Joe Piskura, Main Post Catholic Church.

The following board members will be officially installed on Sunday: Mildred Lopez, vice president, and Faithe Sharkey, secretary.

Special to The Bayonet

Those coming to dine at the Mandarin House, 2461 Airport Thruway, immediately are met with a relaxed Oriental atmosphere that makes anyone comfortable.

The Wang family, who own and manage Mandarin House, began operation in 1984.

Since their opening, they have been voted by A Taste of Columbus to be the Best Overall Restauarant for Service in 1987, and in 1988 and 89 they received the highest in food sales award.

Then in 1987 and 88, Columbus College Marketing and Research Students cited the restaurant as the "City's Best in Oriental Dining."

All of this is high praise for a business that is only one of a number of Cinese easteries in the city.

At the beginning of the year, remodeling gave Mandarin House a new look -- more space to provide for smoking and non-smoking sections in the diningroom.

A native of Mainland, China, chef Shou Li Wang ran a similiar establishment in Korea for 24 years before coming to this country in 1981. His wife, Kai, handles the dining room with the help of their "adopted" son, manager Larry Lin. Son Wha Ming assists his father in the kitchen and hopes to take over the business one day.

The couple's other two children are college students. Son Wha Ping is a student at Emory University in Atlanta, and daughter Chin Ling attends Notre Dame. Shou Li and Kai have been married 32 years and spend from 7:30 a.m. to 11 p.m. every day together at the restaurant seven days a week.

Favorite dishes of their customers include Mongolian beef, sesame chicken, fresh homemade noodles and real crab meat. Meals include hot tea, a fortune cookie and a specialty of the house called a "candied banana."

Sunday buffets are usually crowded with a menu that includes vegetables, two soups, six dishes with either chicken, pork or seafood, fried wanton, noodles and egg rolls.

Take-out service is also available seven days a week with about 10-15 minutes required before pick-up.

In addition, there is a banquet room available for parties of 9-100 for such events as hail/farewells.

Mandarin House has an eager staff ready to please and prepare about any combination just the way you like it.

Owners of the Mandarin House are chef Shou Li Wang, seated, and wife Kai. Standing is diningroom manager, Larry Lin.

Private firm quick fix not always best solution for debt

By Jane M. Winand
Staff Judge Advocate Office

Q: I can't believe that I've allowed myself to get so far behind in the payment of my monthly bills. There isn't enough money to go around anymore. I read a magazine ad about a company that can reduce my total monthly expenses, pay my bills and charge only a small fee. Hooray! Am I home free?

A: Hold on! Not so fast — Many "credit help" companies exist in the Alabama and Georgia area which perform this type of service. The company contacts each creditor and offers to make a new payment schedule with them. The creditors then receive a smaller monthly sum over a longer period of time until the full amount of the debt is paid.

The companies have no authority to force creditors to accept this plan. However, many creditors will accept the plan in hopes of receiving full payment on the debt. The servicing company will then advise you of the new amount of your monthly bills and their fee for servicing these accounts and request that you send this total amount to them every month until all of your debts are paid. The company then sends the individual payments to the creditors.

Many people feel that these companies perform a valuable service. For some, monthly payments that do not vary ensure a more accurate monthly budget. However, these companies do not operate for free. The fees they charge may be quite steep.

Often, the fee is a percentage of the money that you owe. When you take into consideration the monthly servicing fee and its effect on your already overtaxed income, servicing companies may not be such a good deal. In addition, many companies have formidable termination fees. They often will require that the company continue to service your account for one full month after the company has received your termination notice. This means that they will receive that month's servicing fee as well as the termination fee. Another problem can arise if the company fails to pay your bills in a timely fashion. You will probably not learn that payments have not been made to the account until the creditor contacts you to threaten legal action.

Before you consider signing a contract with one of these companies, you should check with the budget counselors at Army Community Services. Their phone numbers are 545-5516 or 545-6969.

The ACS counselors can arrange the same sort of payment schedule as these companies without charging any fee. The budget counseling services are available for active duty soldiers, dependents, family members, and Department of Defense civilian employees assigned to Fort Benning.

If you have additional questions about signing a contract with such a company, you may call for an appointment to speak with a legal assistance attorney. The phone number is 545-3281 or 545-3282.

ENERGY WATCH

By Jennie L. McRae
Energy Branch

You would be surprised at the large results of some small ifs.

• If every dishwasher user in the country cut out just one load a week, we would save almost 15 million kilowatt-hours of electricity every day or the equivalent of about 9,000 barrels of oil a day.

• If every gas-heated home were properly caulked and weather-stripped, we would save enough natural gas each year to heat about 4 million homes.

• If every household in the United States lowered its average heating temperature six degrees during a 24-hour period, we would save more than 570,000 barrels of oil per day.

• If every homeowner raised air-conditioning temperatures six degrees we would save the equivalent of 36 billion kilowatt-hours of electricity used in the nation in one year — enough air conditioning for 3 million homes for a year.

• If just one gallon of gasoline were saved each week for every automobile in the country, we would save about 5.6 billion gallons of gasoline in a year or about 8 percent of the demand created by all our passenger cars.

The entire Fort Benning community should honor the Army's commitment to the more wise use of energy resources.

If every individual living and working on Fort Benning were to try any of the above mentioned "if's," just thlnk how superb an achievement that would be. Fort Benning serves 110,000 people daily.

That's a lot of people with a lot of power to make a difference. Do your part — ask friends, neighbors, or co-workers to do theirs. We might just wind up setting an outstanding example for Army posts nationwide or for the nation itself.

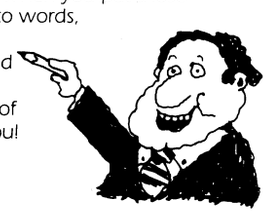
How to make money in three easy steps.

Step 1.

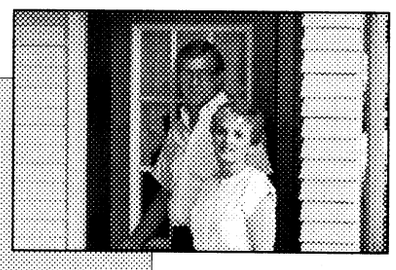


Sell a solution! Your old rattle trap is a teen's dream machine. That old set of golf clubs is sure to be a big hit with a beginner. Here's the point: Your former treasure can bring another pleasure. And if you've got a skill to market or service you'd like to provide—there's someone looking for you in classified.

Step 2.

Aim for an audience. After you've selected a solution for another to seize, bring that person to life. Think about your product or service and its original value to you, then detail its features and benefits to another individual. When you put those benefits into words, others like you will find value too. And that's of value to you!

Step 3.



Contact classified. Give us a call. You'll cash in on the speed and effectiveness of the dynamic classified marketplace. Each day, highly motivated readers are seeking services and solutions for a variety of needs. Turn to the classified pages, and you'll turn your item to be sold into money! It's as easy as 1-2-3!

Team effort of heroes

COMMENTARY

The closest I got to the "big sandbox" was my TV.

That was close enough.

I mean, like during the buildup , it was hot. They drink all that water. You had to stand in lines for showers, for mail, for food, for telephones, even for the latrine.

There were 3,000 flies for every man, woman and child and it took more than a "pffft" out of the side of your mouth or a desultory wave of the hand to shoo them away.

They climbed in your eyes, your ears and up your nose and were the first to hit the food — they even liked Meals Rejected by Everyone, so I'm told.

Then there were the scorpions and snakes. Flies might have been pests, but these guys could put you in a world of hurt.

I'm sure you Rambos were probably catching and eating them and enjoying every morsel. But that's not my idea of a gourmet meal. Me and my stomach, we got an agreement. I don't put anything unsavory in it and it doesn't stamp a "reject" notice on it and send it back up the pipeline.

My idea of a place to go to prepare for combat, if you have to have your sand, is Huntington Beach, Calif.

The worse you' ll get there are a few sand fleas that can be washed off in the surf. Of course you might step on some tar from an oil spill or get stung by a jelly fish, or hit in the head by a surfboard, but this is much more civilized than being camped out in the Saudi desert.

But the worse part of all — besides not knowing how long you'd be there (should I make this month's car payment or not?) —was the fact you were there to prepare for combat.

And combat happened.

Some of you spent this phase supplying ammo to the troops, others, insuring equipment was working, or mending broken body parts, all the while keeping an eye out for any stray SCUDS.

Others of you became zombies as you went days without sleep to make an all-time end run in rain, fog and smoke around the Iraqis to score a major touchdown in the Euphrates River Valley.

Your skills as grunts, tankers, redlegs, engineers and truckers were severely tested. But the Iraqis were no match for you; your weapons, your equipment, your skills.

Finally, y'all came home again. Those who came early enough got the mother of all parades and the mother of all parties.

Others, like the soldiers of the 598th, got an airfield welcome and grateful hugs of loved ones.

Y'all are heroes in my eyes.

But not the only heroes. We had people back here working around the clock to see that you got what you needed.

Their living conditions were better, they weren't being bombed or shot at, but they kept driving on, knowing that what they did here, could very well mean the difference between life and death for you over there.

They too are heroes, and I hope y'all can use this special edition of The Bayonet to pat yourselves on the back.

Benning people: Be proud of role

As the last of our troops return from Southwest Asia, we can look back with pride on their accomplishments.

Not only did our warriors serve with distinction as they resoundingly defeated the world's fourth largest Army, but our soldiers and civilians here at Fort Benning can be proud of their vital support in the war effort.

That support consisted of keeping the supply lines open, operating both aerial and marine ports of embarkation, and processing and training soldiers.

People — soldiers and civilians — working as a team, are who made Desert Storm the success it was.

People, from the supply clerk at the clothing issue point, the dentist at the overseas processing point, the Bradley gunner and NBC instructors out on the ranges, the trombone player in the band at hundreds of departure and arrival ceremonies, the food service worker passing out a welcome cup of hot cider on cold winter days at Lawson Army Airfield, the finance and travel clerks cutting checks and travel orders, spouses helping spouses, the family support counselor ... so many members of a great team, putting it all together.

That's why this special edition of The Bayonet is dedicated to each of you — members of the Fort Benning family — the thousands of soldiers and civilians who served during this time.

Again, I congratulate you for a job well-done and thank you for your professionalism and dedication. I hope you enjoy reading about yourselves and your co-workers in this special edition.

Power, fury of a Desert Storm

This time last year, several Fort Benning units were called up and deployed to Southwest Asia in support of a country no bigger than the state of New Jersey. It began with the 608th Ordnance Company, an element of the 36th Engineer Group, receiving the alert. They were followed closely by the 197th Infantry Brigade, then more elements of the 36th Engineer Group and then the 34th Medical Battalion.

Our routines began to change , as well as our perspective.

Nights were spent scanning the television for word of our beloved soldiers. Cable News Ntework became the most popular show of the season.

From CNN, we learned a new way of speaking, a different language. Suddenly , our daily conersation was filled with words like "Saudi Arabia," "Kuwait," "Scuds," "call-up," and "deployment".

Sadly, we embraced our loved ones, our husbands and wives, sweethearts, parents, siblings and children and watched them depart to a country half a world away, not sure if we would ever see them again.

Little did we realize that our troops were leaving, not only to liberate Kuwait, but to make history.

Our men and women of Desert Storm fought bravely and performed their duties to the best of ther abilites.

Eevery military occupational specialty the Army had to offer was there, working side by side for the cause of freedom.

There were the many controversies brought about by the war. The question of women in combat was once again re-evaluated. The problem of single parents and dual-military families was also questioned.

The thing that no one questioned was the ability of the coalition forces to win the war.

And win they did.

In a mere 100 hunderd hours of ground war action, Iraq surrendered and Kuwait was once again free.

IWhile most of our troops were in the heat of battle, those of us in the military who were not deployed quietly stayed behind to continue the mission of traing soldiers and keeping the post running smoothly.

Department of the Army civilian employees worked side by side with their military counterparts , working long hours without complaint.

family members supported each other through sorrow, times of pain as well as joy.

The Fort Benning community, like so many military communities around the world, was working as a unit .

This special section is to salute every one of us - the Desert Storm veteran, the soldier who stayed in the rear, the family suppor: group volunteer, the DA civilian worker, and the family members who made the enitre operation a success.

It is impossible mention everyone who contributed to the success of Operations Desert Shield and Desert Storm

This supplement is a tribute to all who served, and is intended as a keepsake to hallmark Fort Benning's involvement in Operations Desert Shield and Desert Storm. Any omissions were not intentional.

3rd Brigade: Forever forward into history

By Alyanna B. Summers
Desert Storm section editor

The 197th Infantry Brigade, now 3rd Brigade, 24th Infantry Division, was deployed to participate in Operation Desert Storm in August 1990 and returned to Fort Benning in March and April.

Brigade Commander Col. Ted Reid reflects on the mission and performance of his troops :

Q: What was the unit's mission in Operation Desert Storm?

A:Our mission was to attack the Iraqi forces at the Euphrates and cut off any possible escape routes. We were attached to the 24th Infantry Division as a third brigade, working in conjunction with the division's other two brigades.

Q:Was there any problem in working with the 24th ID in this way?

A: No, there was no problem working with 24th at all. We have often trained with the division during certain excersises as well as training as a separate brigade.

Q: Did this make the unit's redesignation as the 3rd Brigade of the 24th I.D easier?

A: Yes, it certainly did. We had already established a working relationship during training exercises and of course, through Desert Storm.

Q: What was the experience of the the now-famous attack on the Republican Guard?

A: We were originally scheduled to attack Feb. 25 at 6 a.m. On Feb. 24, we were ordered at 10 a.m. to attack that same day at 2 p.m. The push up of the scheduling was due to the success of other attacking units.

Q: Were there any problems experienced during Desert Storm?

A: We went into an immature logistical community, but we managed to overcome the obstacle. There were several lessons learned, though I hate to use that term. The lessons learned came in Army field feeding procedures and logistics again, especially in getting repair parts.

Q: What do you think about your soldiers' performance during the operations?

A: Outstanding. The soldiers of the 197th made me so proud. When you put a soldier in a harsh environment for eight months, without benefit of fast food, alcohol, or companionship, it makes it real tough on the soldier. But we experienced no major discipline problems. They were really great.

Ronnie J. Allen

Members of the 197th Infantry Brigade conduct a training exercise in early January.

Q:What were your personal feelings about the operation?

A: This was the best team-building exercise I've ever experienced in my military career. For months, the unit received some of the best training ever. I felt part of a well-trained team.

Q: What's in store for the 3rd Brigade after Desert Storm?

A:It's back to training -- business as usual. It's no time to rest on your laurels. Yes, we excelled in Desert Storm, but to maintain that high state of readiness, you must continually train, train, train. That's what it's all about.

Q: What are some memorable moments for you during Desert Storm?

A: Hot Christmas meals, Thanksgiving with President Bush and coming home.

3rd Brigade, 24th ID PAO

Lt. Col. Ricardo Sanchez, commander of the 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor Regiment reviews his unit's part in Operations Desert Shield and Desert Storm.

Q: What was your unit mission during Operations Desert Shield and Desert Storm?

A: The plans that had been laid out for the brigade called for our unit to primarily be the reserve and counterattack force throughout the movement of the brigade into the Euphrates River Valley, and then on into any further operations to the east toward Basrah.

Q: How did your unit complete its mission?

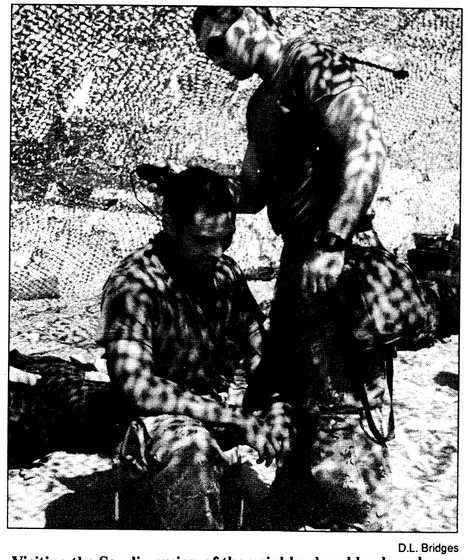
A: We moved initially as the reserve force for the brigade. Upon entering the Euphrates River Valley, the battalion was ordered to pass through TF 1-18 and assume their mission; move into the river valley, cut off Highway 8 and set up defensive positions between An Nasariya and Basrah.

Q: If you could redo anything, how would you do it differently?

A: As far as combat operations went, everything went according to plan. I think the changes would be in logistical resupply support that occurred prior to our combat operations. Hopefully, to support the troops in all categories of logistics a little bit better.

Q: What were your units lessons learned?

A: We had lessons learned in all of the battlefield operating systems, and even stretching from deployment through combat operations. The most significant — the need to operate and train as a combined arms team. Combined arms battalions are something the Army should consider. The lessons learned during Desert Shield to task organize as a balanced task force were invaluable to us.



Q: What were you observations about your soldiers' teamwork and camaraderie?

A: The Desert Shield period really allowed the soldiers to know each other, to learn the strengths and weaknesses of all their leadership, of all individual soldiers and allowed me to understand my subordinate leaders and really my fellow battalion commanders. That was a tremendous benefit: you knew how to compensate, you knew how people would react. The espirit, universally across the board skyrocketed during combat, they knew what was required of them and they knew they were on their way home.

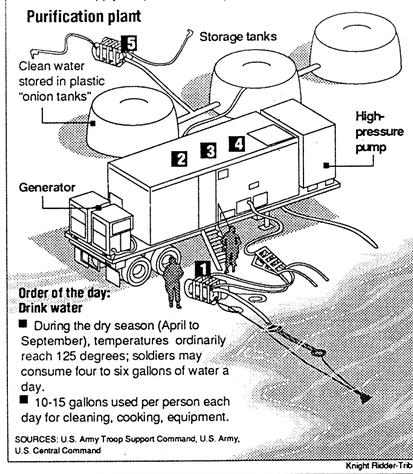
Training never stops

Members of the Bradley NETT — new equipment training team — from the 29th Infantry Regiment review a training manual before giving a class to combat soldiers in Saudi Arabia.

How Troops Get Water In The Desert

Most water is being supplied by the Saudi government, but as a backup, U.S. military has purification plants working along the Persian Gulf coast. How water is purified, how much is consumed:



1. Pump draws sea water
2. Mud, other substances filtered out; water pumped into purifying unit
3. Purifying system takes out salt, other minerals, removes nuclear, biological, chemical contaminants, if needed
4. Chlorine, other chemicals added so water is safe to drink
5. Water pumped to hoses or storage tanks; hoses can extend 10 miles to supply soldiers; water tanks on trailer trucks can supply troops further away

One unit's output

- Purifies 40,000 gallons a day
- Supplies water for drinking, cooking, cleaning for 2,000 people
- System has been used by U.S. military for about 10 years; can be used on ships, on land

Purification plant

Order of the day: Drink water

- During the dry season (April to September), temperatures ordinarily reach 125 degrees; soldiers may consume four to six gallons of water a day.
- 10-15 gallons used per person each day for cleaning, cooking, equipment.

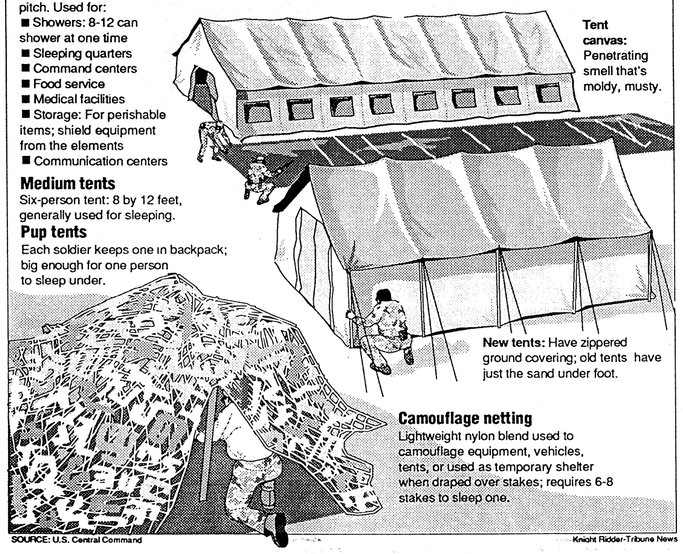
Desert Shelter: Tents And Camouflage Netting



Shelter for U.S. troops in Saudi Arabia is under a variety of tents — some for just one person and others big enough to accommodate 500 hospital beds. Air-conditioning is a rare commodity, as is ground covering.

Large tents

General- purpose tent is 15 by 30 feet; takes 6-8 people about 15 minutes to pitch. Used for:

- Showers: 8-12 can shower at one time
- Sleeping quarters
- Command centers
- Food service
- Medical facilities
- Storage: For perishable items; shield equipment from the elements
- Communication centers

Medical facilities: 24-acre, 500-bed hospital housed under a series of specially constructed tents; each tent 20 by 100 feet, air-conditioned; number of beds equals that of a U.S. metropolitan area hospital.

Tent canvas: Penetrating smell that's moldy, musty.

Medium tents

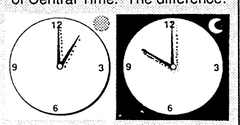
Six-person tent: 8 by 12 feet, generally used for sleeping.

Pup tents

Each soldier keeps one in backpack; big enough for one person to sleep under.

New tents: Have zippered ground covering; old tents have just the sand under foot.

Camouflage netting



Lightweight nylon blend used to camouflage equipment, vehicles, tents, or used as temporary shelter when draped over stakes; requires 6-8 stakes to sleep one.

Commander recalls challenges, successes

By Tom Wilkinson
3rd Brigade, 24th ID PAO

Lt. Col. E.W. Chamberlain, commander of First Battalion, 18th Infantry Regiment reviews his unit's role in Operations Desert Shield and Desert Storm.

Q: What was your unit mission during Operations Desert Shield and Desert Storm?

A: To lead the brigade on the left flank of the division into the Euphrates River Valley, cut the main east and west highways and cut the Republican Guard forces off from being able to withdraw out of Kuwait, so that we could destroy them.

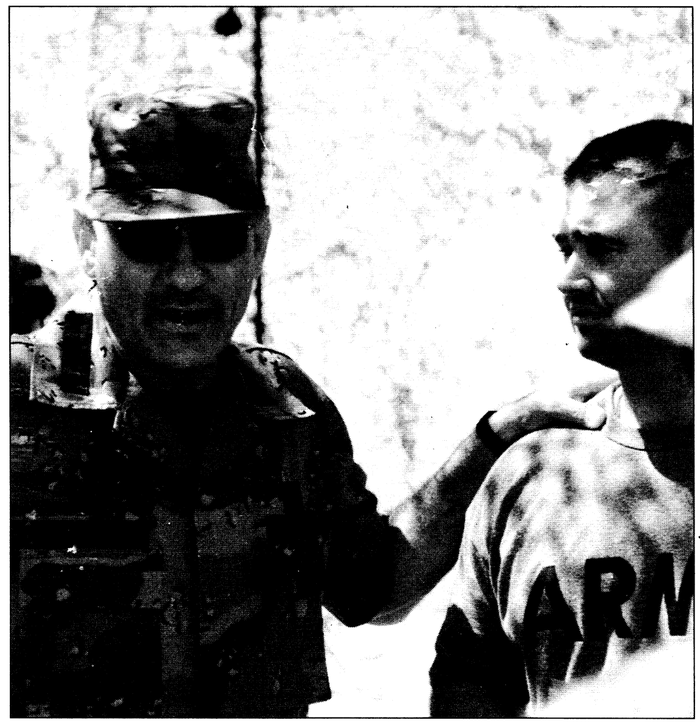
Q: How did your unit complete its mission?

A: Very well. We absolutely accomplished it.

Q: If you could redo anything, how would you do it differently?

A: It really went off like it was planned. However, I wish I could have anticipated running out of fuel, so we could have educated the units behind us. We had to stop the attack; we lost momentum, but it all worked out in the end.

Q: What were your units lessons learned?



A: The MK-19 grenade launcher is a really awesome weapon. It has a tremendous amount of killing and wounding power. We treated over 400 Iraqi wounded of which 350 were MK-19 fragmentation wounds. Our command and control was very good. We did exactly the right things and never had an incident or episode of fratricide. The discipline, training and mental attitude is the key. The real big lesson learned is that fratricide is something we really need to key on and capitalize on in conducting training.

Q: What were you observations about your soldiers' teamwork and camaraderie?

A: These kids were absolutely magnificent.

Q: Do you have any special anecdotes or recollections about the war?

A: I'm just real proud of the soldiers; they showed a tremendous amount of courage. They cleared hundreds of bunkers, trenches and running into the 3rd Commando Regiment of the RGFC was something that will be remember for a long time. Oh, and capturing their general was fun too.

D.L. Bridges

Gen. Carl E. Vuono, then Army chief of staff, briefs soldiers of the 1st and 2nd Battalion, 18th Infantry Regiment, during a rest period between training exercises in the desert. They later would play a key role in the attack on the Republican Guard in the Euphrates Valley.

324th provides 'dependable' support to troops

By Tom Wilkinson
3rd Brigade, 24th ID PAO

Maj. Paul C. Diamonti, executive officer of the 324th orward Support Battalion comments on his unit's mission in Operations Desert Shield and Desert Storm.

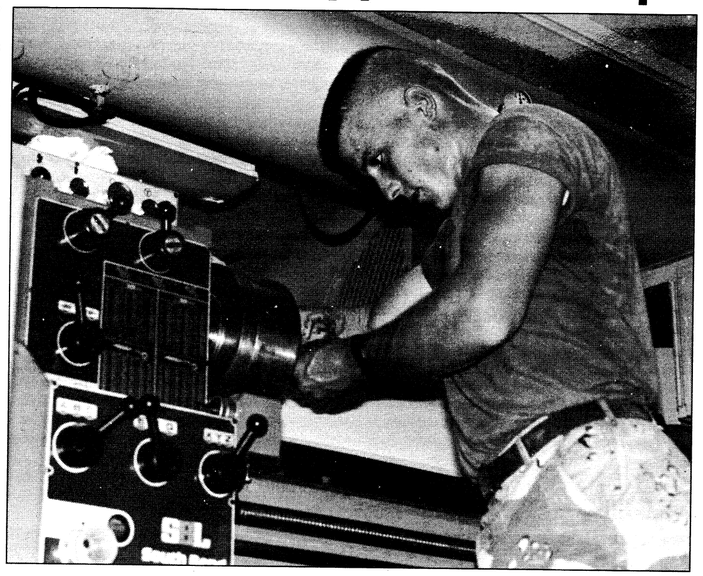
Q: What was your unit mission during Operations Desert Shield and Desert Storm?

A: The mission of the 324th Forward Support Battalion was to provide combat service support to the 3rd Brigade, 24th Infantry Division combat team.

Q: How did your unit complete its mission?

A: The battalion performed its mission exceptionally well. Because of the harsh environment which the unit had to operate in, it was difficult to provide combat support to the brigade. Great distances had to be traveled to receive supplies and maintenance efforts were made a priority to insure that transportation assets were available when needed. Overall, all missions were completed and no unit went without food, fuel, ammunition, medical supplies, repair parts, or any other needed items.

Q: If you could redo anything, how would you do it differently?



A: Nothing comes to mind that could have been done better. All soldiers performed their jobs to standard. Equipment functioned well and performed to standard. If a unit has good soldiers and good equipment it can get any job done.

Q: What were your unit's lessons learned?

A: The battalion learned many lessons that will prove invaluable in future deployments. Individual soldier training in the areas of land navigation, weapons qualification, and driver's training is a must. Maintenance must be stressed at all times by the chain of command and scheduled services must be conducted even in a field environment. Preparations for overseas reassignments must be constantly updated to insure soldiers are ready to deploy when needed and dependent care plans must be stressed and inspected for validity.

Q: What were your observations about your soldiers' teamwork and camaraderie?

A: All soldiers pulled together to accomplish difficult missions in one of the most difficult environments that man and machine can operate in. From day one of the deployment the soldiers' focus and concentration on the tasks at hand improved 100 percent. Their level of determination and "don't quit" attitude were key in the difficult missions the battalion was asked to perform. Leaders at all levels, especially the noncommissioned officers corps, stepped forward to insure their soldiers were adequately trained and ready for any scenario that might arise.

Aurelio Feliberty

Sgt. Brian Anderson of Company C, 324th Forward Support Battalion makes emergency repairs in a mobile repair truck.

Q: Do you have any special anecdotes or recollections about the war?

A: One incident comes to mind that shows the spirit and motivation of the support soldiers in the battalion. When the brigade was moving into Iraq much quicker than anyone predicted, there came a point where fuel became critical to the maneuver units so that they could continue the attack. The battalion put together a mission to send fuel tankers forward into the battle area to deliver fuel to combat units. A lot of the terrain to be crossed by the tankers was still unsecure or recently taken and the mission was a dangerous endeavor. Every soldier in the petroleum platoon of Company A volunteered to go on the mission, and the disappointment on the faces of the soldiers not selected to go made all who witnessed the event proud to be part of the unit. The mission was launched and turned out to be a complete success.

Redlegs: giving new meaning to fire support

By Alyanna B. Summers
Desert Storm section editor

Shoot, move and communicate — words the artilleryman lives by.

Words that were also imperative to the success of the 4th Battalion, 41st Field Artillery in Operations Desert Shield and Desert Storm.

The battalion, an element of the 3rd Brigade, 24th Infantry Division, played an integral part in the attack on Iraq , said Maj. Dewayne P. Hall, battalion executive officer.

"Our mission in Operation Desert Storm was to provide direct supporting artillery fire to the 197th Infantry Brigade, which was, at that time, attached to the 24th Infantry Division," said Hall. The 197th has since been redesignated as the 3rd Brigade of the 24th Infantry Division.

"Our mission was very successful," said Hall.

Some special achievements the battalion experienced were : providing a task force howizter battery (Battery A) to the raid on Tallil Air Base, the provision of Copperhead fire, special type of artillery ammuntion, prior to the attack on the Republican Guard , as well as attacking guard posts and providing support in other facets of the operation, said Hall.

The major challenge during Operation Desert Shield was to ensure that the artillerymen were kept mentally, physically and tactically prepared for the job that lay ahead. To achieve this, the battalion implemented "programs for success," said Hall.

"The most important thing, in terms of keeping the soldiers in a stable frame of mind, was the excellence of the family support systems among the batteries within the battalion," said Hall. "When the soldiers were assured that their families and loved ones were being provided for back in the rear, that was one less worry on their minds. That left their minds free to concentrate on the additional training that they were receiving," said Hall.

A battalion newsletter was also created as an additional means of communication between soldiers and their families. "It was also an additional means of support for everyone involved," said Hall

Physical fitness was also stressed during Desert Shield. The unit had physical fitness tests and runs, as well as team sports, such as interbattalion flag football.

"You'd be surprised at how ingenious soldiers can be. Some created 'weights' using camouflage net poles and sand-filled water bottles. They took their physical fitness very serious," said Hall.

The battalion also took time out for recreation. To help soldiers relax and eliminate stress, stand-down areas were constructed. There, soldiers could play cards, watch videotapes from home and purchase PX items, said Hall.

Tactical training took on more meaning, with an aggressive training schedule that was executed at a rigorous pace, said Hall.

"Combat operations training was conducted on a daily basis, with exercises such as Army Mission Training Plan, Mission Essential Tasks, Reconnaissance, Selection and Occupation of Position being stressed. Along with the more specialized training, refresher training in soldier skills like weapons qualification and Common Tasks Tests were also emphasized, said Hall.

"Exercises such as RSOP are designed to improve an artillery unit's performance. RSOP improves the howitzer sections' and platoons' abilities to select and occupy fire positions, resulting in timely and accurate artillery fire, said Hall.

After the battalion's success in Operation Desert Storm, what's next for the "Redlegs" of 3rd Brigade?

"Right now, our unit is performing its mission bettter than it ever has. We must continue to train so that proficiency, that training edge, is maintained," said Hall.

To ensure that edge is not lost, the unit is currently in the middle of a "very aggressive " training schedule, said Hall to include a 23 to 28-day rotation at the National Training Center at Fort Irwin, Calif., starting in late November,

Family support must be ongoing process

By Alyanna B. Summers

Eileen Reid, wife of 3rd Brigade, 24th Infantry Division commander Col. Ted Reid, learned a lot when her husband, along with the unit he commands, deployed to participate in Operation Desert Storm on Aug. 22, 1990.

Reid discovered that the family support system, when implemented properly, can and does work during times of crisis.

"My role was not a 'hands-on' role during the deployment, but more of a liasion between the spouses and the agencies on post. I found out what it was that families needed most and went to the different agencies and tried to make it happen. I guess you would have called me a conduit of information as it were," said Reid.

The need for providing correct family information to unit leaders was made evident, said Reid.

"People now understand why rosters are needed at the company and platoon levels and why that roster must be kept current," said Reid. "When you have two hundred men in a unit, there is no time to go hunting for correct addresses and phone numbers. At that level, much more interaction with families is taking place than at my level, and incorrect information can make it difficult," she added.

Reid complimented Joanne Bowles, wife of the brigade's command sergeant major, as being instrumental in helping with the support process. "She was really committed and quite tremendous in providing a helping hand at the right times -- which was all the time," said Reid.

Maj. Chuck Walls, rear-detachment commander of the unit, was also lauded by Reid as being "just fantastic with keeping the entire situation organized and under control" during the crisis.

"I feel that the family support group was absolutely instrumental in keeping the families informed during times of crisis. But these systems have to be in place long before the crisis occurs. Support has to be ongoing to be functional during times like Operation Desert Storm," said Reid.

During the Vietnam conflict, Reid said that she was "totally alone" while her husband was fighting in that war, but that the support given during Desert Storm was a complete turnaround.

"During Vietnam, you had no support, she said. "It was a very lonely time for spouses of soldiers. Now, the support was there -- you heard it, you felt it, you were experiencing it. I am definitely 100 percent for family support groups," said Reid.

One point Reid made was that in the family support group, leaders paced themselves with the amount of support they were willing to give.

"We had no idea how long this situation was going to last," she said. "It would have been no good to burn yourself out giving, giving,giving in the beginning and then burning yourself out towards the end. The helping has to be done on an even level if it is to be done right," said Reid. Another important point Reid stressed was that the expectations of the spouses were not always in sync with the support group concept.

"One thing that has to be made clear to the spouses is that this is not a hand-holding thing," she said. "It's not fair to feel that you can drop all your problems into the lap of someone else, just because she's the commander's wife. Support group leaders are volunteers, and most of us were going through the same things other spouses went through, perhaps worse, because we had so many people looking to us for things," said Reid.

"It's every spouses responsibility to contact post agencies to find out what help is available," she continued. "We can put out the information necessary, and we can tell you where to get help, but we can't do it all. Independence is a must," said Reid.

ACS is the heart of family support effort

By Alyanna B. Summers

Family support must be an on-going process, from the moment a soldier is received in a unit or is newly married. The family support concept cannot be put in effect only in times of crisis.

These were only a few of the observations made by the members of Fort Benning's Army Community Services during Operations Desert Shield and Desert Storm.

"We were Fort Benning's main family support center," said Sam Duggins, director of ACS. "Everyone with a problem was referred to us. We took calls from across the country concerning Desert Storm-related problems. It was hectic, to put it mildly," said Duggins.

The biggest problem observed by the ACS staff were the financial difficulties experienced by spouses, said Ann Pratcher, director of Consumer Affairs and Financial Assistance Program.

"These scenarios illustrate the types of problems that ACS encountered during Desert Storm," she said. "If Fort Benning military families took the time to get acquainted with the different post agencies and resources available to them before the soldier deployed instead of waiting until their problem is at an almost impossible point, things could be worked out more effecently," said Pratcher.

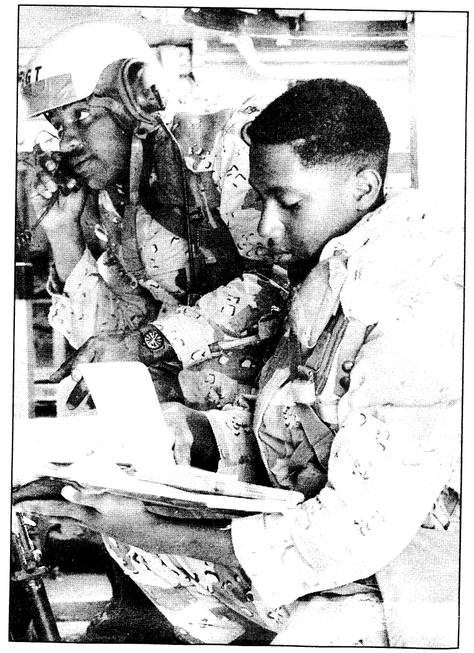
A positive result of the crisis was that many familiy members found employment through the Family Member Employment Assistance Program at ACS. The number of program applicants skyrocketed during Desert Storm, said Shirley Jarrett, FMEAP social service representative.

"Most of the applicants I interviewed during Desert Storm were spouses between the ages of 18 and 22," she said. "They ranged in ability from low-skilled to no marketable skills. Usually, we work with the applicant, providing them with as much assistance as necessary," said Jarrett.

Although several applicants were able to find employment, applicant rejection was due largely in part to lack of skills, said Jarrett.

"Child-care, housekeeping, cashier and receptionist positions were the most easily filled," said Jarrett.

One factor that worked against the program is the poor economy and sluggish job market in Columbus at this time, said Jarrett.



Although ACS staff members served in several different capacities, they often found themselves in the position of counselor, sounding board and friend.

ACS also provided Army Emergency Relief funds to spouses to help with financial problems and ran a food locker to help families.

"We extended the hours of the operation and basically remained available to the families to help in any capacity that we could," said Duggins.

More than 75 percent of the patients evacuated by the unit were Iraqi enemy prisoners of war, and the unit spent 2,500 hours in the air during Desert Storm.

Pfc. Archie D. Kennedy, ambulance driver for 690th, said he learned a lot about his unit and his fellow soldiers during " his war."

"There was so much concern shown for us during Desert Storm. The unit just had to come together, we became like family.

"It's a shame that it took a war for us to really become close and come together as a unit. We received great training and we're a better unit now that all is said and done," said Spc. Dwight Evans, also of the 690th.

Chemical Warfare

Military units now are routinely equipped with protective clothing and other equipment. In some countries, such as Israel, civilians are trained how to care for themselves and their families. Iraq is known to have stockpiled at least two chemical weapons.

Mustard gas:

Can cause blindness by scalding the surface of the eye, tends to be lethal only when inhaled.

Iraq stockpiles:	At least 1,400 tons
Biochemical reaction:	The blistering agent can quickly penetrate bare skin and be absorbed by the underlying tissue.
Physical impact:	Inhaled mustard gas can blister the lungs. Breathing becomes very painful, tissue lining in the lung dies, patients cough blood and pneumonia becomes a threat.

Nerve gas:

A drop of it absorbed by the skin can be fatal within 10 minutes.

Iraq stockpiles:	At least 200 pounds
Biochemical reaction:	Can kill in minutes by disrupting basic nerve transmission and other functions of the body.
Physical impact:	Spasms, convulsions, depressed breathing and finally suffocation.
Counter-measures:	U.S. troops in Saudi Arabia take pyridostigmine tablets three times a day to give the body some defense and are also issued two antidotes in spring-loaded syringes.

Soldiers well-equipped

By JAMES CARROLL
Charlotte Observer

WASHINGTON — The American soldier is the best-equipped warrior in the history of human conflict, the Pentagon says.

"We have put a lot of research and investment into it," said Army Maj. Peter Keating, a Pentagon spokesman.

From night-vision goggles to chemical-warfare suits, the American GI's seem ready for anything.

Most carry an M16A2, a semi-automatic rifle that fires 30 rounds from a clip at a range of up to a third of a mile. A rifleman usually carries at least 120 rounds.

Soldiers also carry pistols, either .45s or 9mms, for close-in fighting, and a couple of grenades, more if they are assaulting a bunker or similar defensive position.

In a 10-person airborne squad or a nine-person infantry squad, two soldiers usually carry Squad Automatic Weapons, a very accurate machine gun that is more powerful than the M16A2. They have a range of more than a half-mile and can fire 750 rounds a minute.

Two squad members also carry grenade launchers that fit on an M16A2.

If a squad includes a mortar, one soldier carries the weapon, while his buddies each carry one one round.

Iraq's troops were equipped with a variety of rifles, most of them some version of the Soviet Union's AK47.

Although the Iraqi incursions into Saudi Arabia in late January indicated that Iraq had some night-vision and infrared equipment, U.S. officials continue to believe U.S. forces have an advantage in night fighting.

The night-vision goggles, weighing no more than a cassette tape, turn darkness into day. The rifles and machine guns also are fitted with night-vision sights.

Another major difference between the U.S. and Iraqi soldier: personal protection against bullets and stray fragments.

U.S. troops wear flak jackets, similar to those used by some police officers, to protect their upper bodies. They also wear a lightweight helmet made of high-impact Kevlar plastic that can stop a round from an assault rifle.

The U.S. troops were also ready for the chemical weapons Iraq might lob their way.

Keating said a soldier must carry enough water, rations and ammunition to last 24 hours _ just in case it takes that long to be picked up.

Engineers build road home through Iraq

36th Engineers experience success in Saudi

By Alyanna B. Summers

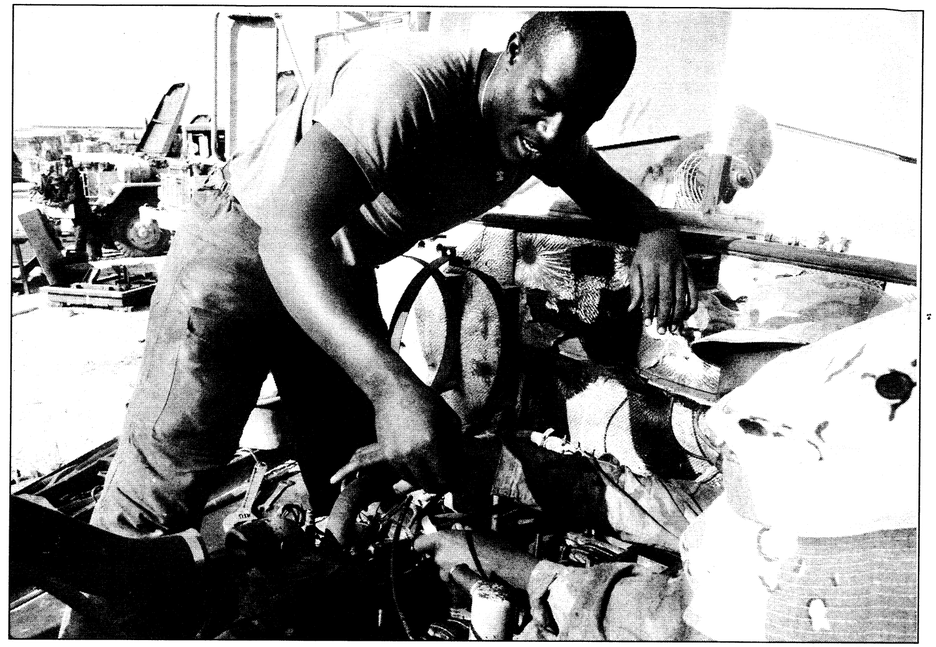
Combine 71 military occupational specialties, 16 career management fields, 8 subunits and organize them in to one of the most diverse units in the Army, and what do you get?

Fort Benning's 36th Engineer Group.

This unit, along with several other units here, played an integral part in the Army's success in Operations Desert Shield and Desert Storm, said Command Sgt. Maj. James E. Buie, command sergeant major of the 36th Engineer Group.

"The basic mission of the 36th was, upon arrival, to provide command and control over three combat heavy engineer battalions and two combat battalions for the offensive operation," said Buie.



Within 60 days, the mission changed from offensive to defensive. At that point, the group dropped two of the combat engineer battalions and picked up the 5th Combat Engineer Bn., the 299th Combat Engineer Bn., and the 3rd Engineer Bn., in addtion to one combat heavy engineer battalion that was assigned at all times, said Buie.

"The 36th was attached to the 24th Infantry Division for the offensive operation, the exoneration of Kuwait," said Buie. "The 24th led the cutting edge of the battle and the route was constructed by the 36th," Buie added.

The key to the unit's success in the operation was the issuing of new equipment and the ability to rehearse their role in the defensive operation repeatedly, said Buie.

The bulk of the units deployed for Saudi Arabia Sept. 13 and 14, 1990. Upon their arrival in country, the 36th went into Tiger Beach to wait for their equipment to arrive. Three weeks later, the 36th moved to the 24th Infantry Division's rear area.

The unit was at that time 270 miles southeast of Iraq, where they stayed for 60 days. In December, the unit moved forward to within seven miles of Iraq, 14 miles south of Rahfa. It was here that the unit went through their final rehearsals in preparation of Operation Desert Storm, said Buie.

"The combat battalions performed great. The soldiers practiced, practiced and then practiced some more," said Buie.

The 608th Ordnance Company, the first Fort Benning unit to deploy, established an ammunition storage area for the XVIII Airborne Corps, as well as creating a ammunition storage area for the theatre.

The 215th Area Finance Support Unit provided all financial transactions in the XVIII Airborne Corps, said Buie. The unit ran the main finance center in Riyahd and closed out all commercial accounts in Saudi Arabia. "If I had all the dollars that the 215th moved in Saudi Arabia, I wouldn't work anymore ," said Buie.

The 533rd Transportation Company, along with the 361st Trailer-Transfer Detachment, provided long-haul transportation capabilities to the XVIII Airborne Corps.

"The unit transported everything from water, ammunition, you name it. These units moved forward into Iraq and helped transport back out again," said Buie.

The 43rd Engineer Battalion provided general construction ability in King Khalid's Military City.

Companies of the 43rd were sent forward to construct base camps.

The 586th Engineer Company (Assault Float Bridge) deployed 40 soldiers to assist in port operations in Jacksonville, Fla.,

The 89th Explosive Ordnance Detachemnt did not deploy as a unit, but soldiers were deployed individually to augment other EOD units, said Buie.

"The soldiers of the 36th Engineer Group as a whole performed well under the pressure of combat," said Buie. "The soldiers got the training that allowed them to be such a success in the war. I am proud of each and every one of the soldiers," said Buie.

34th: Caring for the troops

By Alyanna B. Summers
Desert Storm section editor

From providing first-line sick call care to soldiers to medically evacuating casualties from the front-line action to field hospitals, the 34th Medical Battalion accomplished important missions during their stint in Saudi Arabia as a part of Operations Desert Shield and Desert Storm.

The 34th Medical Battalion, commanded by Lt. Col. Frank H. Novier, deployed from Fort Benning to Saudi Arabia Oct. 13 through 17 to support Operations Desert Shield and Desert Storm. The 34th is a medical combat support unit comprised of 12 subunits. Each of these subunits, while unique in its mission, come together to provide combat troops with quality medical care while in a combat situation.

Combat stress psychologists, neurosurgeons, preventative medicine specialists, and even a one-man optical-fabrication unit and several other medical specialty-units all combined to take care of the physical well-being of Desert Storm troops.

"All units did very well while in theater," said Novier. "We (the United States) did not have a lot of casualties, so our units' capabilities were not tested to their limits," he added.

The units' greatest success was their perserverance through truly austere conditions, said Novier. The unit also overcame many obstacles, the greatest of which was keeping up with the ever-growing demand for supplies and keeping communication lines open between the parent unit and the soldiers.

The 34th was separated and its detachments were used to augment and support elements of the XVIII Airborne Corps operations, said Novier. In several units, soldiers were scattered across the desert in remote areas, and keeping up with the whereabouts and well-being of his soldiers was no easy feat for Novier.

"I am so impressed with the bravery and professionalism of the medical soldiers in the 34th," said Novier. "Their bravery and willingness to work with each other and with the leaders appointed over them is what made our mission such a success.

Command Sgt. Maj. Willie J. Womack, the 34th Battalion's command sergeant major, echoes Novier's sentiments.

"In Desert Storm, our unit's primary mission was to provide battlefield evacuations. This was a big challenge because no one had really had desert environment experience. The battalion commander's experience in that area made things much easier for the unit as a whole," said Womack.

One of the biggest problems experienced by the unit was logistical support, according to Sgt. 1st Class Delton Day, non-commissioned officer in charge of logistics for the battalion.

"My soldiers and I had the enormous task of providing logistical support-- everything from beans to bullets-- for the 34th. This task was made 10 times harder than normal because we were not provided with a direct line of logistical support from our higher headquarters," said Day. "We literally had to beg, borrow and almost you-know-what to get the supplies that the troops needed.

Soldiers drove hundreds of miles to go to other units and request materials that were critical to the mission. No matter what, the mission always comes first," said Day.

Things as critical as water, ammunition, food, vehicles, clothes and materiel were only a few items in Day's area of responsibility. If even one soldier was without a basic-issue item, Day saw to it that he or she wasn't without it for long.

"It would have been helpful if the unit would have had a direct contact to go to for supplies," said Day, "but that was just another Desert Storm lesson learned."

Staff Sgt. Elsie Leslie, NCOIC of medical supply for the 2nd Mobile Army Surgical Hospital had a much easier time, in terms of procuring her supplies.

"We knew exactly who to go to -- 32nd Medical, Supply, Optical and Maintenance Brigade. I had no problems identifying our support," said Leslie.

By stocking up on medical items through Martin Army Community Hospital prior to deployment, 2nd MASH was prepared for the large amount of requests from the unit's different sections, said Leslie.

As prepared as they were, the unit never actually got to set up a hospital.

"Coalition forces never sustained the types of injuries anticipated that we would have been called on to treat," said Leslie.

In terms of soldiers, Sgt. 1st Class Arleen Butler, first sergeant of Headquarters and Headquarters Detachment, feels that her soldiers performed well under rugged conditions.

"The soldiers really rose to the occasion. I made myself available to the soldiers, when they wanted talk -- I was almost like a mother to the younger troops," said Butler. One factor that really affected the morale of troops in Desert Storm was mail, said Butler.

"You could see it in a soldier's entire attitude. When there was a letter from home, the glow lasted the whole day. A box of goodies was even better. No mail for a while -- morale went way down," said Butler.

To also help soldiers' morale, Butler arranged for a small exchange store to be constructed so that little toiletry items could be made available to members of the unit who didn't have access to any other facilities.

"That small PX made the soldiers feel good. Those small items, such as toothpaste and soap, were like little slices of home," said Butler.

The 498th Medical Company (Air Ambulance) and 690th Medical Company (Ground Ambulance) had the missions of evacuating patients from forward patient holding areas to corps-level hospitals to receive definitive care. Soldiers in these units also provided enroute treatment for patients, according to 690th Medical Co. Commander, Capt. Raymond A. Nagel.

"It was the first time many of the soldiers have treated real patients," said Nagel.

The ground ambulance unit evacuated 3,400 patients during Operation Desert Storm.

"The unit really came together when push came to shove, and got down to business. Soldiers really took the initiative," said Nagel.

The 498th experienced unique difficulties during the operation, said 1st Lt. Steven Millward, assistant operations officer for the unit.

"Flying in the desert was very dangerous. There were only five crewmembers in the unit that were night-vision goggle trained. Even the very experienced pilots were having trouble attempting to fly during sandstorms and fog," said Millward.

ITC trains future soldiers for possible desert duty

By Marilyn Balzarini
U.S. Army Infantry Training Center

Aside from serving in combat, one of the most important wartime contributions an organization can make is preparing soldiers for combat. While this has always been one of the Infantry Training Center's missions, Desert Storm added new challenges to the task.

On Jan. 9, the first of more than 500 Individual Ready Reserve soldiers began arriving at the 30th Adjutant General Battalion (Reception).

Their Military Occupational Specialty was 88M, vehicle operator. All of the soldiers were volunteers. They were between 18 and 55 years old. Most of them had been out of the Army for a long time, some since the Korean War.

These soldiers were assigned to the 1st Battalion, 50th Infantry, for nine days of "refresher" training. "We had a week to put together a training program," said Sgt. 1st Class Kevin Collins, non-commissioned officer in charge of the battalion's Training Management Activity.

"The challenge was teaching them all the skills they would need in such a short time."

> "The Infantry Training Center's contributions during Desert Storm shows that the total Army concept does work."
> Maj. Larry McMillan
> Infantry Training Center Adjutant.

Administrative issues that would affect the new organization were handled by training center soldiers and civilian employees in the personnel section. Status-reporting procedures, pay and mail were just a few of the important issues that needed immediate attention.

Battalion cadre prepared for the large number of IRR soldiers who would soon arrive for training.

The Infantry Training Center's peacetime mission, besides training infantry soldiers, is to train reserve units earmarked to replace regular Army training centers. The Desert Storm partial mobilization proved that the training center has done its job well.

More than 3,200 IRR soldiers were successfully trained and sent to combat units that supported Operation Desert Storm during the partial mobilization. Hundreds more One Station Unit Training soldiers already scheduled for training became qualified infantrymen during the partial mobilization. Many of them joined units in the Middle East as well.

"The Infantry Training Center's contributions during Desert Storm shows that the total Army concept does work," said Maj. Larry McMillan, Infantry Training Center Adjutant. "The reserve component soldiers who were a part of the expanded training base were competent professionals who got the job done."

On Jan. 25, the Infantry Training Center assumed a partial mobilization posture. The new unit structure included elements of the 70th Infantry Division (Training). The 70th is a Reserve unit from Michigan.

The Infantry Training Center expansion was necessary to accomplish its new mission — train thousands of IRR soldiers with infantry MOSs for combat in Southwest Asia.

The center now had 12 infantry battalions instead of eight. It had two reception battalions instead of one, and two brigade headquarters were added.

Personnel from the center staff sections worked around the clock to put the new organization into operation. With only a few days notice, arrangements for housing, feeding, medical care and administrative support for the 1, 500 70th Division soldiers were made.

The 70th Division was located at Kelley Hill. Training center logistics personnel handled inventory, storage, and issue operations.

Training and operations staff members created a comprehensive refresher training program for infantry soldiers. Scheduling transportation and training areas for the IRR soldiers was done by dedicated ed personnel, both military and civilian, in record time, said McMillan.

29th: Training takes priority

By Alyanna B. Summers
Desert Storm section editor

The 29th Infantry Regiment managed to experience both sides of Operation Desert Storm by deploying more than 200 members of their ranks in support of the operation, while at the same time maintaining their mission of training at Fort Benning.

The mission of the 29th is to train soldiers in all facets of military occupational skills in the 11 series (infantry), said Command Sgt, Maj. Gary Lee Cupit, the unit's regimental command sergeant major.

"We train all soldiers in One-Station Unit Training, Basic Rifle Marksmanship, and in specialties under the infantry series, such as the Bradley Fighting Vehicle and the mortar. The soldiers are fine-tuned at the 29th," said Cupit.

The unit also supports the installation's mission of training young officers in the Infantry Officer Basic and Advanced Courses and the Officer Candidate School, said Cupit.

The unit's mission increased in the number of days and hours as well as the number of tasks, going from a five-day, eight-hour work schedule to a six-day, 10 to 12-hour schedule.

"We generated mission training teams to go to Saudi Arabia and train soldiers over there," said Cupit.

The 29th also trained Individual Ready Reserve troops who were mobilized to support the operation, as well as reserve components, such as the 48th Infantry Division," said Cupit.

Even though the unit had such a vital and enormous mission, the 29th also had time to show support for their fellow soldiers in Saudi Arabia.

The 1st Battalion, 29th infantry Regiment held an open house at the Kelley Hill Recreation Center for families of the 197th Infantry Brigade (now the 3rd Brigade, 24th Infantry Division).

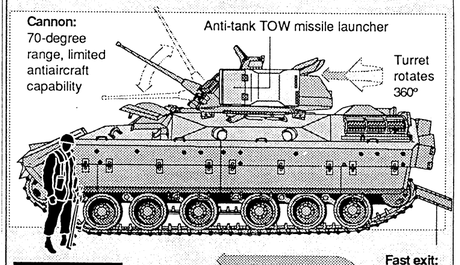
"Just because the soldiers are gone, does not mean that you can forget about the families left behind," said Cupit. The unit provided entertainment from local radio stations WCGQ and WFXE. Many sponsor, including Curtis Mathes, AARCO's, Ranger Joe's and the Association of the U.S. Army supported the effort. The open house provided families with a videotaping facility, to make tapes to mail to their soldiers in Saudi Arabia, said Sgt. 1st Class Anthony Rouser, platoon sergeant with Headquarters and Headquarters Company of the battalion.

Support was provided for spouses of deployed soldiers in the 29th. A support group was formed, headed by Cupit's wife, Melinda. Many agencies on post were called in to assist the unit in providing for the family members. Budget counselors, chaplains and other key experts in dealing with military separations were called upon to lend support and guidance to families during the deployment, said Cupit.

Some of the training teams rotated in and out of the theater, while other members of the regiment were attached to other units, said Cupit.

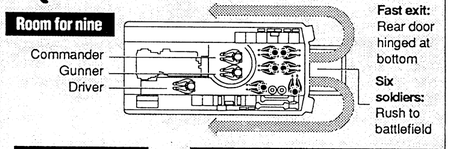
During the course of the war, 95 percent of the regiment wanted to be deployed to participate in Desert Storm, but the unit's mission is too vital to the readiness of the Army to be deployed, said Cupit.

Training IRR soldiers in a vehicle driver refresher course is no easy feat, said Sgt. 1st Class Larry Cooley of Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 29th Infantry Regiment.



"The soldiers had not been in active service for several years. They had not lost their sense of basic military procedure, but their knowledge of their military occupation had to be reassessed," said Cooley.

The soldiers were very willing to learn and trained hard, armed with the knowledge that the next time they would perform their mission, it would be for real, said Cooley.



"There were no bad attitudes involved. The IRR soldiers said, 'I have to learn this perfectly... what I do wrong today may cost me or my buddies in a real combat situation.' The fact that they were to deploy made the training more real for them," said Cooley.

283rd Band moves troops through music

By Alyanna B. Summers

There is one group that was probably more anxious to see the return of the 598th Maintenance Company Sept. 4 than 598th family members, the 283rd Army Band.

The 283rd Army Band, commanded by Chief Warrant Officer Larry Hyatt, practically made a new home at Lawson Army Airfield during the deployments of troops to Saudi Arabia and subsequent redeployments of troops from Southwest Asia to Fort Benning.

"Our basic mission is to play at ceremonies and in parades to increase the morale and esprit of the troops," said Hyatt.

During the many deployments and redeployments, the band was always there, providing their special brand of support during those sad moments of separation and joyous returns, no matter what the hour.

"It did seem like another layer of resposibilty for us," said Hyatt, " but I have to say the soldiers took a really great attitude during the entire event. They knew the importance of this particular mission, and I have to say they performed to the same great standards time after time," he added.

Along with the deployment and redeployment ceremonies, the band continued to perform at the normal ones: retirements, changes of command, and even continue to make special appearances at off-post functions.

"We are soldiers before we are musicians, it just happens that our mission involves a musical instrument, not a weapon," said 1st Sgt. Fred Campbell, 283rd Army Band first sergeant. "Although we train and are qualified in all necessary soldier skills, we take our mission as morale boosters very seriously," said Campbell.

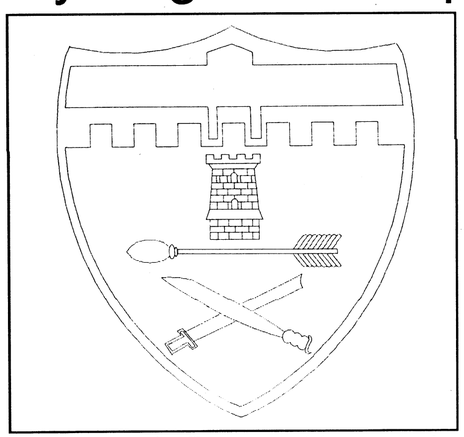
11th Infantry Regiment keeps post running

By Alyanna B. Summers
Desert Storm section editor



Operations Desert Shield and Desert Storm were a call to glory for many servicemembers at Fort Benning. Leaving their families and friends behind, soldiers from a majority of Benning units picked up their weapons and without a backward glance marched off to Southwest Asia.

But while troops from such now-famous units as the 36th Engineer Group, the 34th Medical Battalion, and the ever-popular 3rd Brigade, 24th Infantry Division (formerly the 197th Infantry Brigade), were "sweating it out in Saudi," the post went about its business of training soldiers. At the same time, missions on post normally handled by deployed units suddenly had no one to carry them out.

Who are the people that keep Fort Benning running at top speed during the crisis?

While several units came together to take up the slack, members of the 11th Infantry Regiment were instrumental in support to the post at a critical time.

The mission of the 11th Infantry Regiment is to provide command, control, administrative and logistical support to the 3,500 permanent party personnel assigned to the U.S. Army Infantry Center and U.S. Army Infantry School, said Maj. Michael W. Metcalf, the unit's regimental executive officer. In addition, the unit also is responsible for the training of officer candidates, student officer and student noncommissioned officers. In recent years, this mission has entailed the support of 10 separate courses of instruction for a student load of up to 30,000 per year.

The 11th Infantry Regiment has four battalions. The 1st Battalion, the largest battalion on Fort Benning, provides training and personnel management through the battalion's Headquarters Company Company A and Company B for the 1,300 permanent party personnel that are assigned as special and directorate staff for the Infantry School and Center. 1st Battalion's Company C provides training for future company commanders in the Infantry Officer Advanced Course.

The regiment's 2nd Battalion trains future combat infantry platoon leaders in the Infantry Officer Basic Course.

The 1st Battalion, 507th Parachute Infantry Regiment provides the Army with qualified paratroopers through Basic Airborne, Pathfinder, and Jumpmaster courses. The unit also provides the Command Parachute Exhibition team, the Silver Wings.

The regiment's 3rd Battalion trains soldiers and prepares them for commissioning through the Branch Immaterial Officer Candidate School.

"All training continued, in spite of the crisis," said Command Sgt. Maj. Eddie L. Roberts, regimental command sergeant major.

Because of the monumental responsibilities of the regiment, the unit is classified as non-deployable, according to Metcalf and Roberts.

"Although the unit is a non-deployable unit, it dos not mean that we were not stressed out during the Operation Desert Storm," said Metcalf. "The soldiers of the 11th Infantry Regiment had an increased mission, and that pressure was felt."

The training took an even more serious turn, because the soldiers that were training would have to perform the duties in a real combat mission and that fact also was stressful, said Roberts.

"Because of the mission this unit has, we are naturally a very diverse unit," said Roberts. "The 3rd Brigade, 24th Infantry Division has a mission that's strictly a combat mission. Everything revolves around that central theme: combat. However, the 11th Infantry Regiment is different. We are responsible for the Judge Advocate General, the chaplains section, the Public Affairs Office, the Adjutant General and so many sections that play an important part in a major deployment. On the school side, the training in IOBC, IOAC, and our other courses was accelerated and taken more seriously. Soldiers realized good training of future platoon leaders and company commanders could be the difference between victory and defeat," said Roberts.

Christmas leaves were cancelled as the training increased, said Metcalf.

The pace tripled for soldiers "in the rear," said Roberts.

"There was much pressure and frustration from soldiers who wanted to be a part of the war, but were unable to deploy," said Metcalf.

"Operation Desert Storm gave birth to a new type of soldier, soldiers who are more patriotic and has a greater sense of duty. Today's soldiers realize their duty and they do it with no hesitation," said Roberts.

Although they are a unit of "unsung" heroes, the job of the soldiers of the 11th was vital and they performed well, said Roberts.

And as for the future of the soldiers of the 11th ?

"Our time will come -- there just may come a time that our unit will be called on to go to war and perform our duties in a combat environment. When it does, I have no doubt that our soldiers will be ready," said Metcalf.

'Princesses' share penthouse

By JAY BOBBIN
Tribune Media Services

Being a lovely lady, and living in a luxury apartment totally rent-free, seems like a situation fit for a queen.

Actually, it pertains quite literally in one case — and figuratively in two others — to the ladies in "Princesses," a new comedy series from "Newhart" and "Coach" creator-producer Barry Kemp that premieres next Friday on CBS. A posh New York City penthouse becomes the link for three women of very different backgrounds: Tracy Dillon (Julie Hagerty, alias wide-eyed stewardess Elaine in the "Airplane!" movies) is the fiancee of the man who "gave" her the dwelling, which he had been loaned, but their engagement falls apart at the altar when she learns of his less-than-sparkling past. Her friend Melissa Kirshner (nasal-voiced Fran Drescher) urges her to keep the place anyway, not anticipating the arrival of the newly widowed real-life princess Georgina de la Rue (1960s fashion icon Twiggy, now using her married surname Lawson), who also has been granted rights to the apartment by its owner. After a squabble over who actually will end up as the occupant, the women decide to share it, allowing them to revel in the delights of no-cost living for a year ... and maybe even longer, depending on the show's ratings.

Kemp says the concept for "Princesses" was something he had been "kicking around for a couple of years, and really sort of waited until the pieces came together. I had met with Julie about a year-and-a-half ago, and we decided we'd like to work together. That's where we began to formulate this particular idea more concretely, then we got to meet Fran and Twiggy, and we all decided to do this project."

The specifics of the characters then went through considerable development, since Kemp reflects that they "started off (as) three women in New York, and we weren't really sure who they were. At one point, we thought one of them was divorced, and at another, we thought maybe two of them were related. As it began to unfold and (supervising producer) Mark (Ganzel) came up with the title 'Princesses,' that's when that character suddenly became more concrete, and we thought it might be fun to have an actual princess. We're in business with three very strong actresses, with specific points of view, and I think that's what makes exciting shows."

Stating that she's "used to either doing theater or film," Hagerty deems her first venture into series TV "an odd mix of the two. You have a live audience, but you also have this wall of cameras, and they move with you just like dancers." Her new part as Tracy fits the rather innocent and naive persona that Hagerty also has conveyed in such movies as Woody Allen's "A Midsummer Night's Sex Comedy" and Albert Brooks' "Lost in America," and she says, "That's one of the cool things about television, but also one of the hard things. You'll hopefully be playing a character for many years, and by working with the writers, you can also go places that you've never really gone. That can let you do things you haven't done yet, which I think is kind of exciting and fun. It's the idea of picking out what you do very well, then stretching it." Hagerty cites such a stretch as being "a rather large explosion" of anger that Tracy displays in an upcoming episode, "and I've never really done that before."

2/69th Armor gets new tanks

By Tom Wilkinson
3rd Brigade, 24th Infantry Division

The soldiers of Company C, 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor, traded in their old M-lA1 tanks for the keys to their new M-1Al heavy tank on Sept. 20.

"I guess it's like getting a new car," said Sgt. 1st Class Grady Perdue, the platoon sergeant of 1st Platoon. "They only have between 75 and 100 kilometers on them."

The tanks, which boast about two more tons of armor protection than the M-1A1, arrived last month and have been waiting for their new owners.

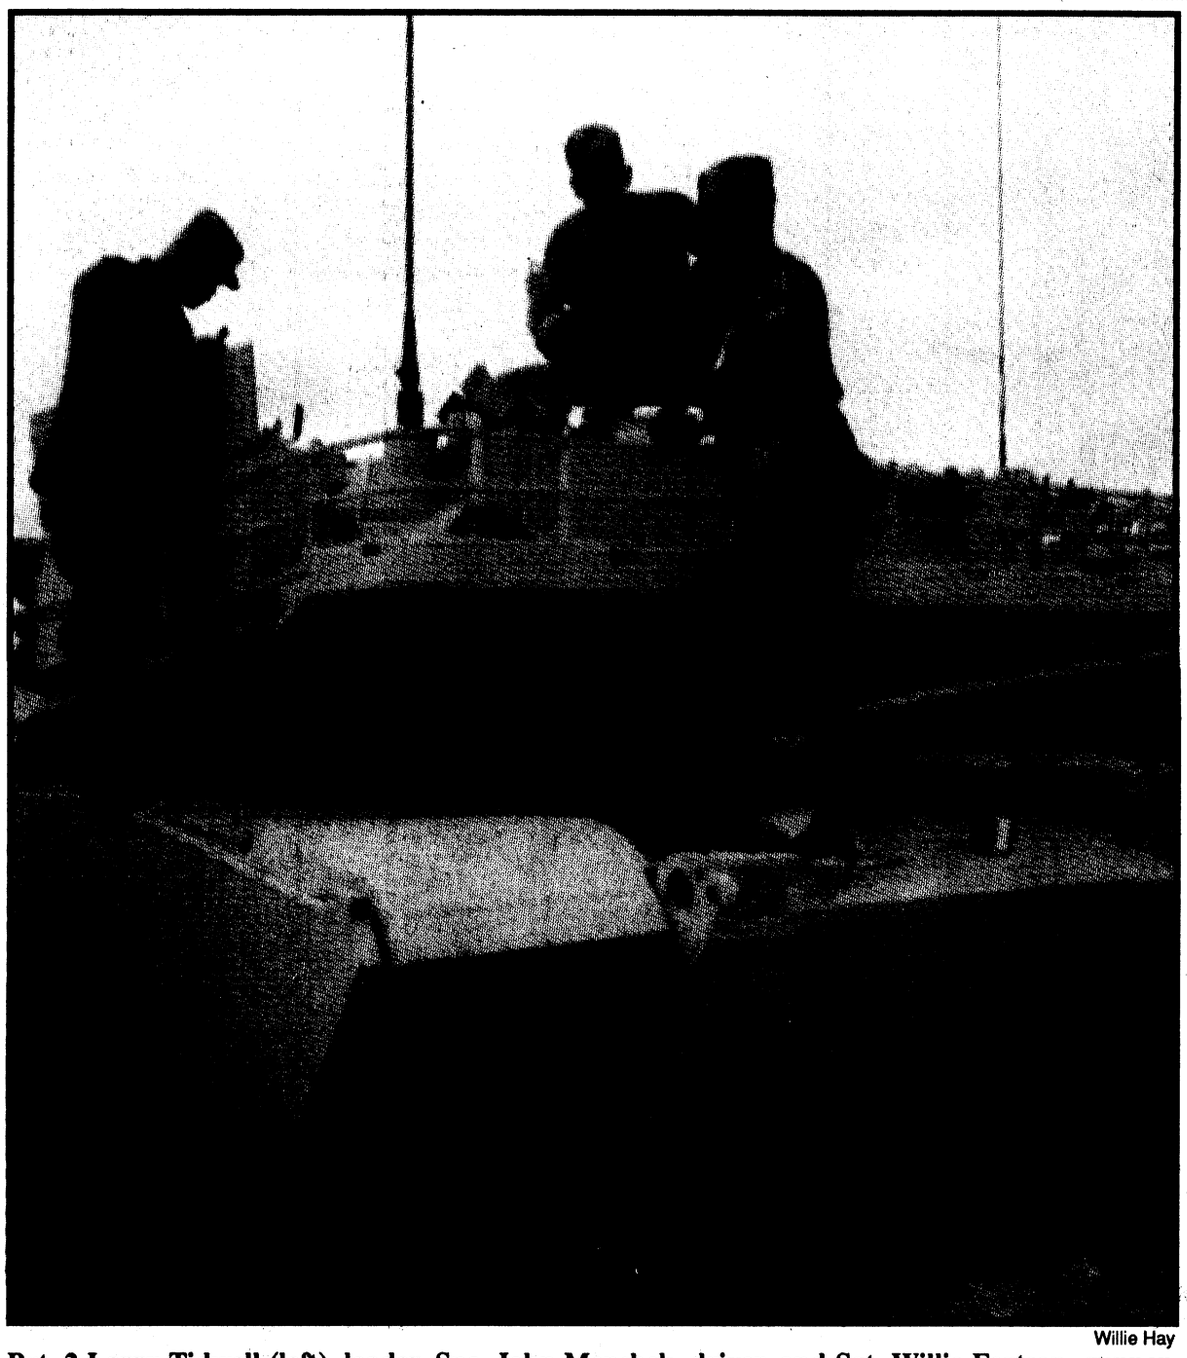
The upgrade in equipment comes with the brigade's realignment with the rest of the Fort Stewart's 24th Infantry Division, which already has its new tanks.

"Getting new equipment is always exciting," said Capt. Joseph O'Donnell, the company commander. "The soldiers are really happy to know that they've got the newest, best tank that the Army has right now."

Like children opening presents on Christmas, the soldiers set to the task of getting everything in order. They have a lot to do, because in two days they will be in the field for 10 days of gunnery and training.

"We go to the field on Sunday," said O'Donnell. "We've got to complete our preventive maintenance checks and services, continue cleaning the equipment and do our preparation to fire checks to make sure everything is operational."

"We're going to shoot Tank Tables VI, VII, and VIII," said Sgt. Nathan Savage, the gunner for C-13 tank. "The maximum score we can get is 1,000 points, and we'll get it -- no problem with this tank."



This is the first gunnery for the soldiers since returning from Southwest Asia.

"I think the company will do very well," said O'Donnell.

"They're motivated and I think these tanks will shoot extremely well. We ran the Unit Conduct of Fire Trainer for five straight days, 24 hours a day."

"We trained on the UCOF two to four hours a day," said Staff Sgt. Irving Shillingford, the tank commander for C-22.

"It's a little harder than actually firing the tank."

Willie Hay

Pvt. 2 Larry Tidwell (left), loader, Spc. John Menshek, driver, and Sgt. Willie Fortson, gunner, members of Co. C, 2nd Bn., 69th Armor, check out their new M-1A1 heavy tank, "C-32."

"When I fired in the UCOF, it was really simple to pick up," said Spc. Adam Smith, tne gunner for C-22. "We'll shoot the high score for our company — I know it."

"There's a lot of excitement about going to gunnery," said O'Donnell. "Everybody wants to do well and every gunner wants to be the top gun, best tank. Of course they can' t be because I'm going to win that!"

With the feeling of walking off a new car lot, the soldiers of Company C are taking their new tanks out for the ultimate road test.

Soldiers told to be wary of gangs

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Recent investigations by military police and civilian law enforcement agencies indicate Fort Benning soldiers may be engaging in criminal misconduct as a direct result of association with motorcycle gangs.

As these crimes are investigated officials want to remind soldiers of the Army policy on gang activities, and participation in these activities. Army Regulation 600-20, Army Command Policy, prohibits active participation by soldiers in gangs or groups that advocate the use of force or violence or otherwise engage in efforts to deprive individuals of their civil rights.

According to the regulation, this includes participating in any group activity that is in violation of regulations, constitutes a breach of law and order, or is likely to result in violence.

Likewise, joining a group that requires commission of a criminal offense as a condition of membership or encouraging other soldiers to join such a group, is prohibited. While passive activities in support of such groups are not prohibited, these are strongly discouraged as incompatible with military service.

According to the regulation such groups are incompatible with military service and soldiers and family members participation may result in the following types of actions:

•Appropriate remarks on evaluation reports when evaluating overall performance.

•Non-selections for positions of leadership and responsibility.

•Removal of security clearances.

•Bar to re-enlistment, or reclassification actions.

•Involuntary separation for unsatisfactory performance or misconduct, or for conduct deemed prejudicial to good order, discipline and morale.

•Orders not to participate in specific events when there is a reasonable likelihood of such participation.

•Punishment under the Uniform Code of Military Justice for criminal offenses.

•Denial of privileges, particularly on-post housing (may result from the participation of soldiers or their family members in such activities).

•Permanent exclusion of family members from Fort Benning.

The regulation also covers the Army's policy of fair and equitable treatment for all. The regulation says soldiers who participate in extremist organizations that support supremacist causes or engage in illegal discrimination are not in harmony with Army goals and values and should terminate any association they may have with such a group.

SOA trains Chilean cadets

By Dan Wilson
School of the Americas

"On the horizon we are seeing a new era in our relations with Chile," said Col. Jose Feliciano, commandant of the School of the Americas. "The cadet orientation course will give us the opportunity to show the Chilean military the type of training we conduct at the School of the Americas."

Feliciano was speaking to 132 cadets and 10 tactical officers from Chile who arrived at Lawson Army Airfield Sunday to process in and prepare for their one week Combined Arms Orientation course.

"We will show the cadets the very best in our training by demonstrating our capability and our interest in developing a strong alliance with that country ," he said.

SOA's Department of Tactics and Combined Arms will conduct the training, which consists of airborne, ranger, hand grenades, mortar and sniper demonstrations.

Also included are organization and missions of field artillery, special forces, light infantry, airborne and a round robin weapons familiarization.

The Cadet Combined Arms Orientation Course, which ran Monday through today, is probably one of the most important courses we will run this year, explained Feliciano. Chilean officials will use this course to evaluate the training offered by SOA and decide how many students they will send in the future.

This is the first official military training between the countries of Chile and the United States since 1975. Due to recent change in the Chilean government, the country's status under the Kennedy Amendment also changed.

"Chile is now firmly on the path to democracy," said Feliciano. "A civilian president is now in charge."

RTB hosts conference

USAIC Public Affairs Office

The Long Range Surveillance Conference is scheduled to end today. This is the second time for the LRSC here, the first one being in 1989.

Hosted by the Ranger Training Brigade, the conference provides a forum for members of the worldwide LRS community to discuss and develop positions on various aspects of LRS, such as training, doctrine, combat developments and organization.

"This year's LRS conference is especially important because it provides an opportunity for the Armed Forces LRS, reconnaissance and Special Operations Force communities to share lessons learned from Desert Storm," said Col. John J. Maher III, commander of the Ranger Training Brigade.

Maher also said that the conference was important to review the doctrine, weapons, and other equipment available for LRS soldiers and to provide a forum to receive information to consider as the Infantry School completes the first rewrite of Field Manual 7-93.

Some 100 attendees, ranking from staff sergeant to colonel, are expected to have attended the conference, along with civilians representing both the military and contractors. Attendees are from more than 40 units and agencies.

Fort Benning's RTB teaches the five-week Long Range Surveillance Leader Course. It prepares students for reconnaissance and surveillance missions.

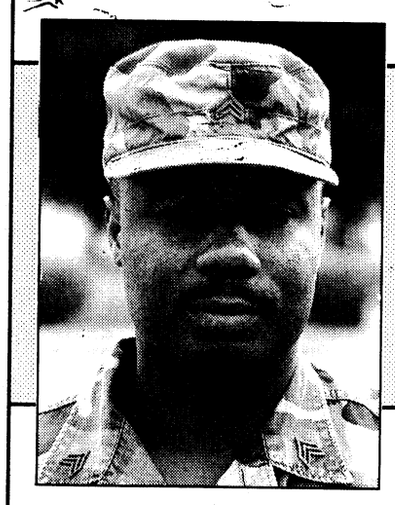
Wednesday set as Safety Awareness Day

By Richard Brill
Special to The Bayonet

To help fulfill the goal of making Fort Benning a safe and healthful place to work and live, Post Commander Maj. Gen. Carmen Cavezza has designated Wednesday as Safety Awareness Day.

Keynote speaker Brig. Gen. Clyde Hennies, commander of the U.S. Army Safety Center, will conduct a presentation in Building 4's Marshall Auditorium at 10 a.m.

Cavezza has urged unit commanders and directors to use the day as an opportunity to focus on safety oriented activities, including safety inspections of equipment and workplace, fire drills and discussions on injury prevention, water safety, sports safety and accident prevention.



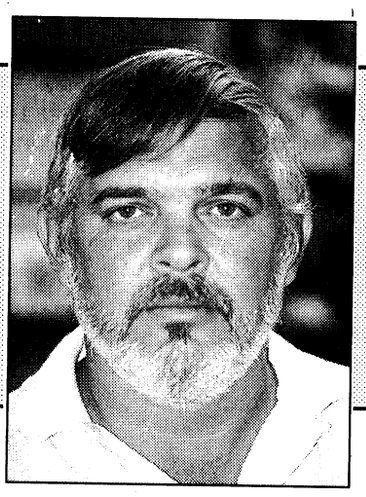
Bank branch robbed

USAIC Public Affairs Office

The Fort Benning branch of CB&T Bank was robbed at approximately 4 p.m. Monday by an unidentified black male. Police are searching for the suspect who got away with an undisclosed amount of money. The robbery is under investigation by the U.S. Army Criminal Investigation Division and the FBI.

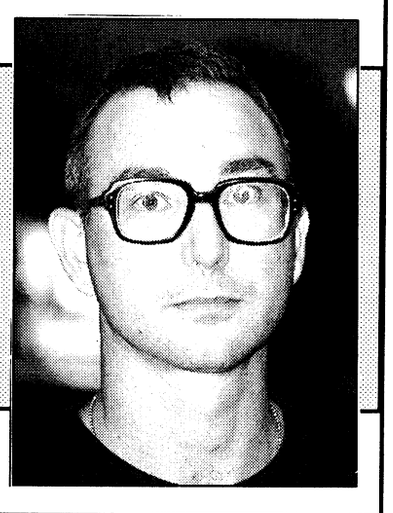
VARIOUS VOICES

In light of recent water conservation efforts, what do you do to conserve water?



Sgt. Cleveland Steward, Battery C, 4th Battalion, 41st Field Artillery – "One thing that I do is try not to wash my car as much as I used to."

1st Lt. Thomas Quinn, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 3d Brigade, 24th Infantry Division – "I don't try real hard to conserve water, but I seldom wash my car or water my lawn."



Kathy D'Elosum, family member — "We basically conserve our water and electricity as if we were living off post. We act as if we are the ones paying the bills."

Retired Sgt. 1st Class Will Hardy – "It's best to just cut down on watering lawns and washing vehicles. One thing that could be done is to set up a filter system when vehicles are washed after they come out of the field. If the water is recycled, it could save a lot of water that gets wasted."

Denetrice Slater, family member — "I just don't run much water. I don't leave water running or wash my car that often anymore."

Sgt. 1st Class Sidney Goins, Non-Commissioned Officer Academy — "I always make sure my faucets are turned off, and I try not to waste water needlessly."

Bayonet wants your comments

By Clyde Snively
Bayonet columnist

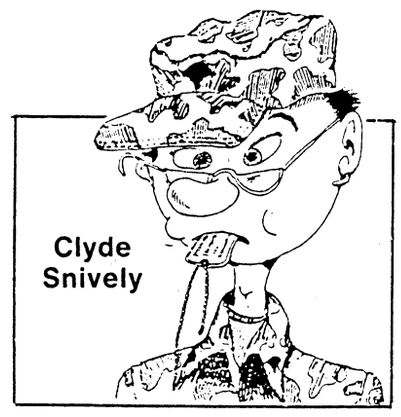
COMMENTARY

Coming to you soon, will be the Bayonet's bi-annual (or is it semi-annual?) readership survey.

(Editor's note: Once again Clyde strikes out into the unchartered waters of the Engligh language—the word he's looking for is biennial since biannual (the correct spelling) and semiannual (the correct spelling) are synonymous and mean twice a year.)

Here's a chance for you, the reader, to let us know what you think about the job we're doing and to tell us how we can do it better.

Because our new printer is currently giving us three sections and is working on getting us a fourth, we should be able to provide you pretty much what you want.



Our plans are to give you more sports, unit and community news. But, since we're your newspaper, we want to give you what you want, and we'll only know what you want if you tell us.

After doing our last survey two years ago, we restructured our entire newspaper; and, I don't know if it was coincidental or what, but the Bayonet ended up being rated the third best paper in the Army.

Naturally we'd like to be rated the best, but our main goal is to serve you.

Answering the survey and returning it to us is the way to do that. And, while the multiple choice answers will help, we also look forward to reading the comments you provide at the end of the survey.

In fact, some of them are so good we'll often share them with our readers, so here's a good way to make comments while remaining anonymous.

The editor at the time of the last survey took special, sadistic delight in waving under my nose such comments as: "Dump the Clyde," and "I read Snively, but I do it to determine how incompetent of a soldier he really is. His articles are inaccurate in facts, and he's biased. His column is a waste of valuable space. If I were the senior rater for his editor, I would give her a bottom block for using no common sense in keeping that piece of trash in The Bayonet."

I told the editor I'd give that officer a bottom block in English and quickly found a comment from another person who wrote in, "fire the editor."

Levity and name calling aside, I can tell you that all comments were taken very seriously by the entire staff, and many of the ideas regarding coverage were adopted.

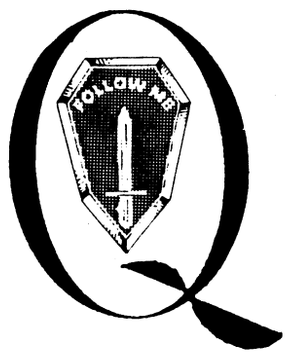
So if you have an idea, write it down in the comment section. But even if you don't, if you get one of the surveys, please fill it out and get it back to us.

By the way, the Army no longer provides return mail postage, so you'll need to stick it in distribution, addressed to The Bayonet, or drop it by the office in Building 4, Room 601.

Thanks in advance for your support.

Suggestions are backbone of TQM

By Kay O'Brien
Directorate of Resource Management



EDITORIAL

"A man's reach should exceed his grasp, or what's a heaven for?"
–Robert Browning.

This quotation by Browning captures the spirit of Total Quality Management. Like Browning, TQM says we, as an organization, must strive for continuous improvement and not be satisfied until the day we achieve "zero defects" or, as some prefer to call it, error-free performance.

Not everyone thinks we can ever achieve error-free performance. The skeptic would say that we cannot. To him, the attempt to do so is like chasing rainbows or tilting at windmills. He would say that even if our current resource picture was not so grim, we could not achieve error-free performance because we are "only human," and human beings are fallible.

To reinforce his point, he might say "to err is human ..." This cliche lends credence to the skeptic's diagnosis. Believing that it is "only human" to make errors gives us the license to make errors.

Indeed, making errors becomes almost an imperative if we are to convince people that we are human.

Everyone expects us to, sooner or later. It is in the natural order of things. The skeptic is convinced and tries to convince us that we can never achieve error-free performance, and our attempts to do so under TQM are doomed to failure. TQM is a foolish exercise in futility, the skeptic would say.

The realist, on the other hand, is more optimistic than the skeptic. He believes that error-free performance is attainable once certain conditions are met – requirements must be defined; work processes must be refined to meet those requirement; the work force must be trained, resourced, and motivated.

But while the realist believes that error-free performance is attainable and must be our ultimate destination, he knows that it is the journey itself, that continuous movement toward error-free performance, that creates quality in an organization. Each improvement paves the way toward that final destination – error-free performance.

TQM focuses on that journey of continuous improvement. This is the essence of Total Quality Management.

How does the Army's Ideas for Excellence Program fit into TQM--or does it? The answer is a resounding "yes."

AIEP fits into TQM like Cinderella's little foot into the dainty glass slipper offered to her by Prince Charming. AIEP and TQM were made for each other.

AIEP provides an ideal vehicle for either an individual or a group of individuals to input ideas for improvements into the system. Almost any idea to improve the way we do our work is eligible for submission under the AIEP. If the idea improves morale, streamlines or modifies present policy or practices, improves equipment or tools, work methods or procedures, it would probably qualify under the Army Ideas for Excellence Program. In short, if the idea improves the way we do business, AIEP.

Many of these ideas would be eligible for payment of a cash award. If you have an idea to improve things, call 545-IDEA, or come by building 2604 and talk to Beverly Howell, the AIEP coordinator. She will be happy to assist you with putting your good idea on paper and make your contribution toward that never-ending journey of continuous improvement.

In summary, let the skeptic have his say. As for us, we agree with Robert Browning. We will continue to strive for error-free performance; and, if our reach exceeds our grasp, we will take comfort in the realization that we have expended all our best efforts toward that destination. Keep those ideas coming!

CFC eyes $600,000 goal during six-week drive

By Connie Bridges
Special to The Bayonet

The annual Combined Federal Campaign kicks off Tuesday at 4 p.m. at the Follow Me Golf Course Clubhouse, according to Brig. Gen. Carl Ernst, post deputy commanding general.

This year's goal will be $600,000 for the six-week drive that is expected to wind up Nov. 12. All commanders, directors, their sergeant majors and project officers will be attending the kickoff.

In the past, Fort Benning has had numerous organizations to choose from when filling out their CFC forms and designating who will benefit by their donations.

Brian Smith, marketing director for the Directorate of Community Activities, noted that this year for the first time all Fort Benning agencies have been consolidated under one umbrella.

The Soldier and Family Support Association now serves as the parent organization for all these agencies on post.

This newly-formed association is governed by an independent board to provide support equitably to such causes as the Post Red Cross, the Lending Closet, the Supplemental Food Locker, Volunteer Services, Youth and Handicapped Programs, Chaplains Enlisted Outreach, Post Community Improvement, Child Care Provider Certification, Family Support Groups and Dental Health.

With a new code of "5001" on the donor designation form, the Fort Benning Soldier and Family Support Association is the only CFC choice which is solely devoted to the Fort Benning community.

It is possible to give to more than one agency on the form if the donor has more than one special cause.

Smith said if the donor does not select a target for the gift it will be divided accordingly: local United Way, 82 percent; national voluntary health agencies, seven percent; international service agencies, seven percent; and local and federal coordinating committee, four percent.

"This is a once a year appeal to the soldiers and civilians," Smith said. "Regardless of their choice, we encourage them to give generously to the 1991 CFC Campaign."

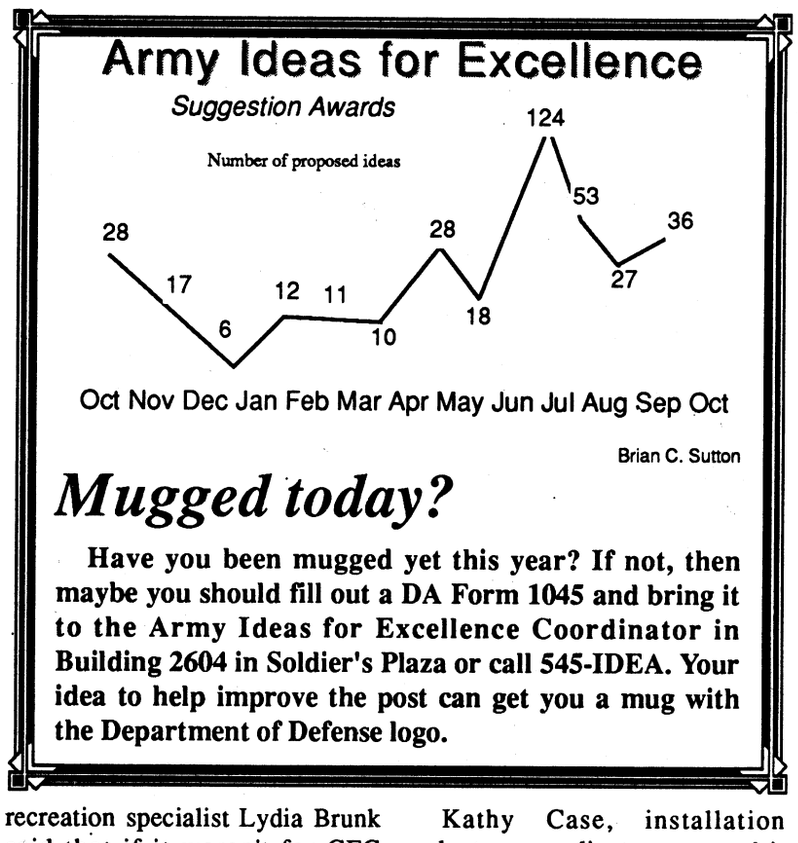
Two of the agencies who benefit from CFC funds on post are Army Community Services and the Child Development Services Special Needs Program.

Sgt. Lisa Booker, ACS non-commissioned officer in charge, said that after Desert Storm made more people aware of the Supplemental Food Locker, they experienced an increase to 15 food baskets a week going out to needy families as opposed to 25 per month before. The Supplemental Food Locker continues to provide a valuable service to soldiers and their family members who may be in financial difficulty, Booker said.

Also, the Lending Closet, a service for newly-arrived families awaiting their household goods, is currently empty because all of its supplies are lent out. Yet the post is expecting about 300 new families on Fort Benning in the near future due to the downsizing of the posts in Germany -- a big concern.

As for the Child Development Services Special Needs Program, recreation specialist Lydia Brunk said that if it weren't for CFC funds, there would be no way for them to have summer camp, field trips or parent training classes for those military people in the Exceptional Family Member Program.

Kathy Case, installation volunteer coordinator, summed it up, "Fort Benning is our hometown.



"We work and play here. Volunteer services like those we enjoy are here only because of funding to "5001."

Checking '5001' ensures donations stay at 'home'

The Fort Benning Soldier and Family Support Association is the only CFC organization devoted to the Benning community if the donor so designates on the form.

For contributions to remain on post for the betterment of "Hometown Fort Benning," a person should donate to the Fort Benning Soldier and Family Support Association by filling in the numbers "5001" on the donor gift form.

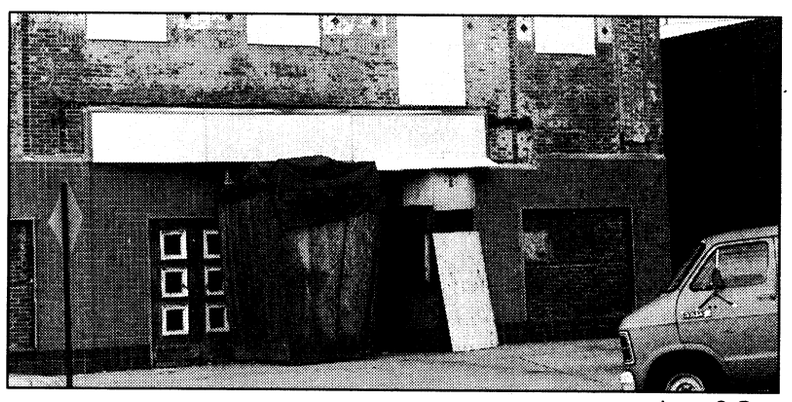
The form, with its allotment arrangements or a one-time gift, should then be turned in to a unit project officer.

Mugged today?

Have you been mugged yet this year? If not, then maybe you should fill out a DA Form 1045 and bring it to the Army Ideas for Excellence Coordinator in Building 2604 in Soldier's Plaza or call 545-IDEA. Your idea to help improve the post can get you a mug with the Department of Defense logo.

'Save the Liberty' gives theater second chance

By James C. Rupp
Bayonet Staff Writer



The Liberty Theater on Eighth Avenue of downtown Columbus is receiving a new lease on life through the efforts of the 'Save the Liberty' foundation.

The Liberty was, according to Charlotte Frazier, founder of the organization, a hub of African-American performing arts during the years after its construction in 1924. Frazier said that greats such as Lena Horne, Duke Ellington and Cab Calloway were among the many who entertained there in the theater's heyday.

It was in the 1960's, Frazier said, the Liberty began to fall into decline with the appearance of movie theaters and the decreasing popularity of live road shows. By 1974 the theater was closed.

In October 1985, the deterioration of the abandoned theater was worsened by a windstorm which collapsed the roof of the building.

"We are trying to save an important piece of heritage," Frazier said. "I believe that if we get the theater running again, people will start to come back."

Frazier said that what is really required to get the theater on its feet is community support. Something she says the theater is indeed getting.

According to Frazier, several area organizations have pledged their support, including Fort Benning which will assist in making the military community aware of the project.

Other organizations, such as the Georgia state government, the National Endowment for the Arts and Tuskegee University have all pledged financial support.

"Now, all we need is to finish rebuilding the theater," Frazier said, "and once that's done, I'm sure the people will come back. I really believe this is something worth saving, and it seems that others do, too."

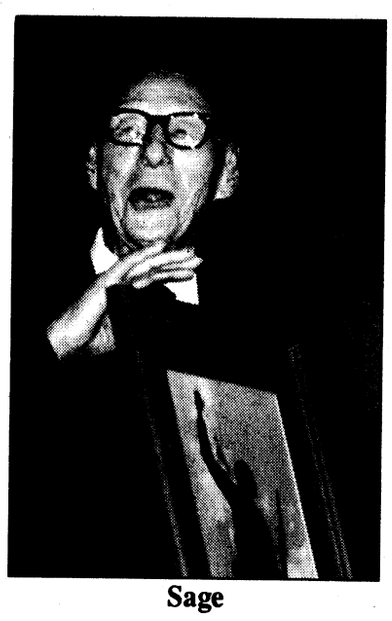
Fort Benning remembers POWs, MIAs

'Cooler King' recalls days as POW in WWII

by James C. Rupp
Bayonet staff writer

Fort Benning remembered prisoners of war and those missing in action during the post POW/MIA Recognition Day Sept. 20, by welcoming one of the most celebrated POWs in American history.

Retired Col. Jerry Sage spoke to an audience of Fort Benning personnel at Marshall auditorium, relating some of the tales of his incarceration at German hands during World War II. Sage is better known as the "Cooler King" to movie audiences, who saw his exploits acted out by award-winning actor, the late Steve McQueen in the film "The Great Escape."



"In my mind," Sage says of his two-year period of capture by the Nazis, during which he attempted escape eight times and succeeded on the ninth, "I was never a prisoner."

"People would walk up to me and ask 'Sage, are you sure you're still alive?'

"And my only answer could be- 'I'm still fighting.'

"The entire time that I was their prisoner, I was still at war with them," Sage said.

Sage was captured by the Germans while serving in North Africa with the Office of Strategic Services (the forerunner of the Central Intelligence Agency). Sage's assignment in those days was to hinder the operations of German commander Erwin (the Desert Fox) Rommel through guerrilla attacks and sabotage.

Sage

Sage used many methods in his attempts to escape, including the assistance of one of his fellow prisoners to break his ribs so that he could try to escape from the ambulance as they took him for medical attention.

Sage's greatest drive in his escapes he said was, and is, his strong faith in God.

"I think I have said the phrase 'thank you God' more than any other words in my entire life."

Sage cited some beliefs to be held by today's prisoners of war.

"First thing, most importantly, develop a close relationship with God. Pray often and pray hard. That's what I did, and I guess he got used to the sound of my voice, because I usually got what I needed when I really needed it.

"Second thing, never give up. I tried eight times and was caught. I tried the ninth time, and I made it. I guess that sort of tells you something, doesn't it?

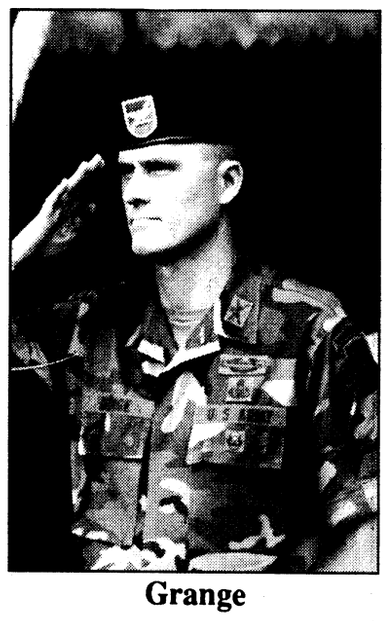
"The last thing is to keep a sense of humor. I would find humor in anything during my stays in the 'cooler' (solitary confinement)."

Sage's experiences are detailed in the film "The Great Escape" and a book written by him titled "Sage," which he autographed for buyers after his speech at Marshall Auditorium.

Rangers recall those who made sacrifice

By Brian C. Sutton
Bayonet staff writer

On a moderately cold day in the month of September a company of soldiers stand by as their commander spoke softly. It was an unusually cool day, since the weather at Fort Benning is usually hot, in these the final dog-days of summer.



Nevertheless, these rangers, representing the 75th Ranger Regiment, stood with stone-cold, unemotional faces as the words of their commander, Col. David Grange, delivered a message about the American prisoners of war and soldiers missing in action during the 75th's POW/MIA Day ceremonies.

Grange stood at his podium in front of the ranks of his rangers telling the story of two rangers during the Vietnam War.

Grange's voice seemed to be a bit shaken as the story progressed, but he stood strong in front of the 75th Ranger Regiment Headquarters.

One of the soldiers Grange spoke of was Spc. 4 James A. Champion, listed Missing in Action on April 24, 1971 after an intense firefight with the North Vietnamese Army. Champion, a highly respected member of Company L of the 75th, was on a radio relay mission for patrols so far out they could not maintain radio contact with higher headquarters and other patrols. Sometimes these simple relay missions proved deadly, as did Champion's.

A large portion of Champion's team was wiped out, and possibly him in the process, according to Grange. Champion was last cited alone minutes before an intense 10 to 15 minute battle which pitted him against the NVA. As far as anyone remaining in his team can tell, Champion lost that battle and was either captured or killed.

Grange

There was a touch of irony in Grange's voice as he spoke the final words about the only ranger unaccounted for during the war.

"I never had a chance to meet this ranger," said Grange, "but I was Ranger Champion's platoon leader."

Grange then turned the ceremonies over for roll call.

"Specialist Champion."

Silence.

"Specialist Champion."

Still more silence.

"Specialist Fourth Class Champion."

Still no answer, signifying the vacancy in the ranks left for Champion. This cool September day ceremony ended fittingly, with a lone ranger playing taps on the bugle.

Post EEO office best in command

By Brian C. Sutton
Bayonet staff writer

The post Equal Opportunity Office recently won two Training and Doctrine Command awards.

TRADOC announced Sept. 12 that the EEO here had been honored with the designation of the best EEO in TRADOC.

A panel created by TRADOC EEO judged the 18 TRADOC posts' equal opportunity offices on "overall operations of an EEO," according to Ellis Dandy of Fort Benning's office.

Dandy explained that the panel looked at a variety of subjects within the EEO program, including affirmative action initiatives, complaints management, staff relationships, community involvement and command inspections.

Dandy said it's impossible to prepare for this competition, which takes place every other year.

"There was nothing to do except our daily taskings," said Dandy.

The office was awarded a plaque in honor of its designation that it will keep until the next competition in 1993.

The office also was named the Best EEO Complaints Management Office. This was the first year the award was given out.

The office won the award for its consistent high resolution rate for EEO complaints.

"We've been running in the mid- to high 90s for percentage of complaints resolved," said Dandy.

Dandy said the office will continue to operate as efficiently as possible.

Seventh assignment to Benning brings challenge to SOA commander

By Richard Brill
Special to The Bayonet

In the 28 years of his military career, he's been assigned to Fort Benning seven times, but Col. Jose Feliciano doesn't seem to mind. He's enjoying his latest assignment as commander of the School of the Americas.

"This is a pretty exciting job," he remarked. "I didn't truly realize the magnitude of what the school does, and more importantly, the potential the school has to make a difference in the Americas."

Feliciano emphasized the importance of the school as a medium for cultural exchange between the U.S. and Latin America.

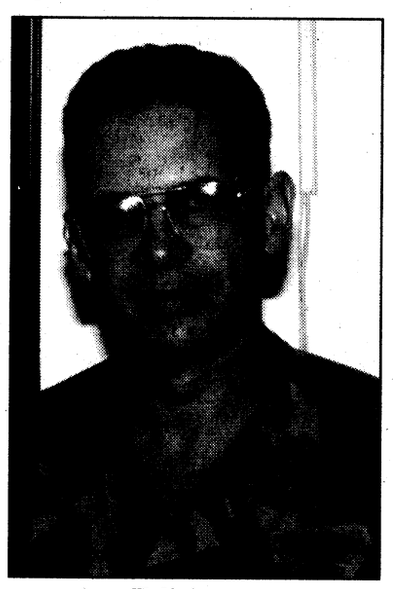
"I think that this is a great opportunity for the School of the Americas, through education, to develop programs that can benefit...their transition to a democratic society," he added.

With the area's largest Hispanic population, the School of the Americas is the logical place to look for festivities that commemorate Hispanic Heritage Month, celebrated Sept. 15 through Oct. 15.

Himself Puerto Rican, Feliciano is proud of his heritage, but he doesn't want to be singled out just because of his ethnic background.

He is, however, quick to point out the many contributions that Hispanics have made.

"As we celebrate the 500th anniversary of the arrival of Columbus in this hemisphere, it's just a good opportunity for us to look at history and the role of Hispanics in the development of this nation as well as the development Central and South America," he explained.



Hispanics have always played a part in the development of the U.S. military as well, Feliciano said. "In fact 37 of them have won the Congressional Medal of Honor. Hispanics have served in all of our wars."

Feliciano's own military career began in 1963, when he was commissioned as a second lieutenant in the Infantry.

"I was going to come in for just a two-year assignment when I graduated from the University of Puerto Rico in 1963," Feliciano explained. Because he liked the discipline and the structure of the Army, as well as being an infantry officer, Feliciano decided to turn two years into a career.

His many assignments include two tours in Vietnam, where he was awarded the Combat Infantryman's Badge.

Feliciano has found time for a family as well. His son Marc is a recent graduate of the University of North Carolina, while his daughter, Marisa, is an optometry student at the University of Houston.

Feliciano

Just in case you're wondering, while Feliciano does, in fact, bear the same name as a famous Latin American entertainer, the two are not related.

"I think it's great," the colonel joked. "It makes it easy to get hotel reservations."

Satisfaction is job well done for Nilsa I. Summey

By Connie Bridges
Special to The Bayonet

A native of San Juan, Puerto Rico and born to an Army soldier, Nilsa I. Summey went to first grade speaking German in school, Spanish at home, and English nowhere.

At the time, her father was serving one of two tours in Germany, where they lived on the economy and her parents chose not to teach their children to speak English at home.

It was their belief that Americans who spoke English with an accent were considered at a lower intellectual level, so Summey learned English later in American schools.

When she was 11, her father retired from the military, and they settled in Oklahoma, where her parents encouraged her to hang onto their hispanic culture while learning to live in an English-speaking one.

She said that and the military moving have given her an adaptability that allows her to cope with just about anything.

Currently, she is the chief of Support Division and serves as a supervisory analyst responsible to the Directorate of Contracting on Fort Benning, which issues solicitations and lets contracts.

Summey

Her civil service career began 17 years ago at Fort Sill, Okla., where she took a pay cut to get into the contracting field. She then began a two-year internship program after which the government would send her where they needed her.

Fort Benning was that destination.

In October, 1979, Summey began as a contract specialist, a position she held for six years.

Then a new branch of the directorate was formed, and she became a contract specialist under complex service. Here she was involved with the multi-million-dollar projects for two years.

Finally, she took her present job five years ago, and took responsibility for personnel, equipment and maintenance of the directorate, providing support for three divisions: purchasing under $25,000, contracting over $25,000 and contract administration which administers the over $25,000 programs.

"This is home for me," she said. She has a staff of 15 people now and believes she is effective here because she came up in the system and knows her staff's jobs.

Summey notes her parents were heartbroken when she moved away from Oklahoma and took their only grandson. Not only that, they expected her to fail.

"But Hispanic families have an unconditional acceptance and love that follows you no matter what and gives you self-confidence."

It worked for Summey.

She was not only promoted within her chosen field but has developed into an advocate for the DOC noting that it is not just another "paper-pushing stumbling block" for all the offices on post.

Her husband, Ed, is retired military and an industrial arts teacher at Eddy Middle School. He also teaches Command and General Staff at the Reserve Center on Macon Road.

Her son, Brett, is a student at the University of Georgia and loves the closeness that is part of being in an hispanic family.

Summey still speaks Spanish with her mother who lives in Oklahoma. Her father died a few years ago.

She is on the Executive Board of the Fort Benning Management Association and a member of the Hispanic Employment Program Committee.

Summey said she believes that most of the barriers to employment for hispanics are in people's minds.

"They need perseverance," she said. "I was willing to do an assignment without questions or complaints to give the government the greatest value for the money. It worked for me."

Marines jump for joy at graduation

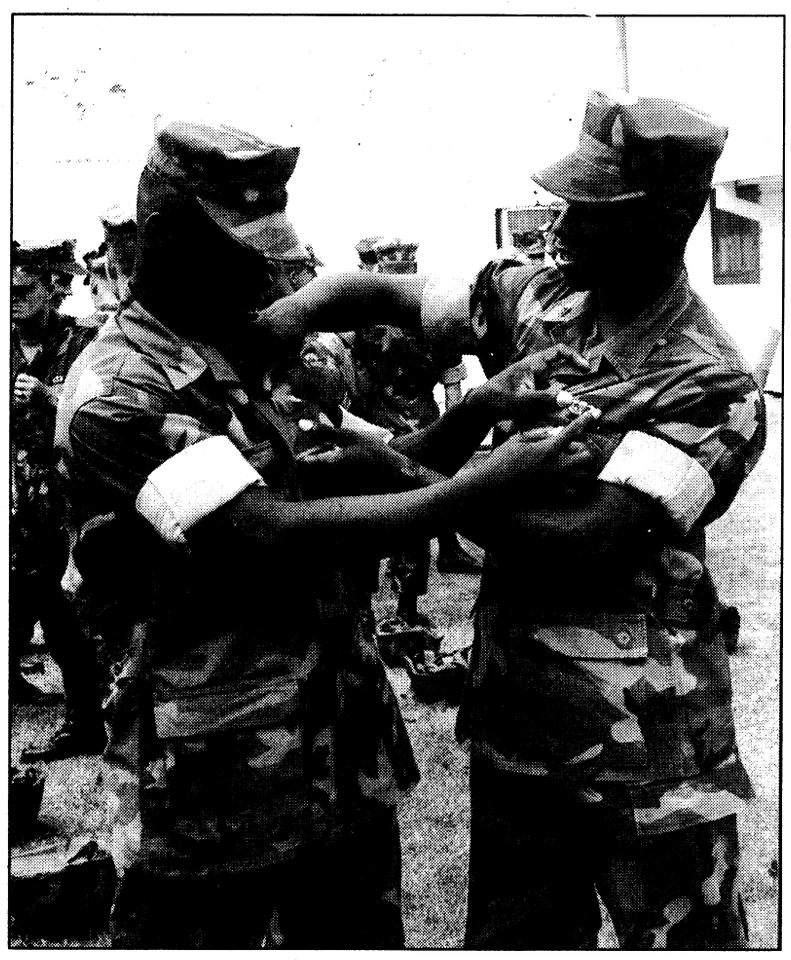
Alyanna B. Summers
Bayonet Staff Writer

A group of Marines recently completed the the Basic Airborne course and have only one comment about their experience — Hooah!

Eighty-one Marines of the 2nd Reconnaissance Battalion, 2nd Marine Division from Camp LeJeune, N.C., graduated from the course Sept. 20 and found the course to be "a good experience."

"The professionalism of the Airborne instructors and the way the soldiers and staff of the school treated us was excellent," said Marine Corps Maj. Don L. Cook, who went through the course.

Lt. Col. John Kiser and Sgt. Maj. Paul N. Husenita, battalion commander and battalion command sergeant major respectively, came down to see "their Marines graduate and to tour the post," said Cook.



"We were given a tour of the post and of different schools here -- the Pathfinder School, the Ranger School and the School of the Americas," said Kiser. "I was especially impressed with the School of the Americas. It's a move in the right direction," said Kiser.

Lance Cpl. Sterling Caston, another new "airborne Marine," felt the classes were "professional."

"The training we received was very vigorous and motivational. The course changed my opinion of the Army," said Caston.

The 1st Battalion, 507th Parachute Infantry Regt. issued 91 parachutes to the Marine to be used for a special "jump-in" ceremony, signifying their return to Camp LeJeune. The jump, however was subsequently cancelled because of unavailability of aircraft.

"Fort Benning, it's a great Army command," Kiser.

EIB test taxes a soldier's skills

By Brian C. Sutton
Bayonet staff writer

One might think the Expert Infantryman Badge is easy to acquire, according to Capt. Mark Vaughn, Tactical Leadership Branch. But, Vaughn said the badge is everything but easy to get.

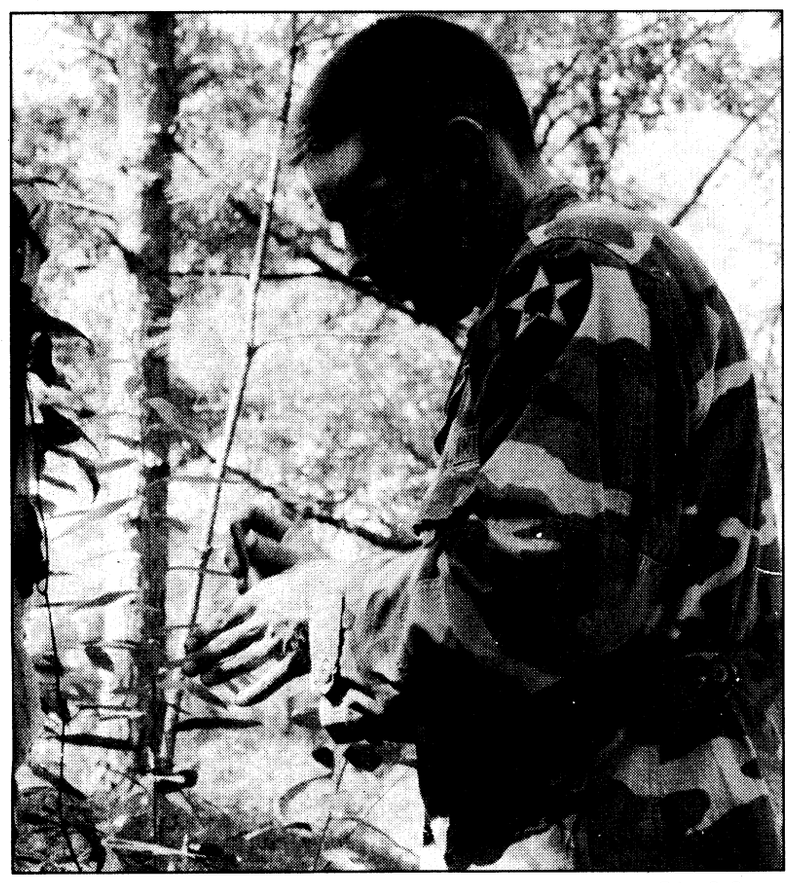
"Only about eight percent pass on the first try," said Vaughn. "We have people who have gone through this as many as eight times."

The field exercise that leads to the awarding of the EIB is a five-day event, consisting of two days of training, two days of pretest and one day of testing in a variety of tasks.

Soldiers taking the tests are required to be in an 11 series military occupational specialty.

Testing begins with the Army Physical Fitness Test, a test in which the soldier must score a total of 210 points, with a minimum of 70 points in each event.

Then soldiers move on to the practical testing phase, where their minds, as well as their bodies are challenged.



"Most people who come here for testing are pretty physically fit," said Vaughn. "It's when they get to the common tasks that they have problems."

Vaughn said that the non-commissioned officers who test the award candidates are the toughest part of the test. Trying to get past the stringent standards of the Army guidelines that are heavily enforced by the testers is what makes earning the award so difficult.

The common task parts of the testing phase include day and night land navigation, nuclear, biological and chemical warfare, moving under direct fire, weapons, and first aid.

A majority of the people tested are recently commissioned infantry lieutenants in the Infantry Officer Basic Course here.

"One of the main reasons we test for Expert Infantryman Badges in IOBC is so that the lieutenant knows he has mastered the tasks," said Vaughn. "That way, when he goes to his first duty station, his soldiers will know that he has mastered what they should know."

The Fort Benning Management Association demonstrated its continuing commitment to education Sept. 19 with the awarding of seven scholarships for the 1991-92 year.

According to scholarship committee chairperson Patty Pfeiffer, the $11,000 in scholarships were awarded in conjunction with Troy State University, which contributed about $6,800 dollars to this year's fund. The remainder came from FBMA fund raisers.

This year's scholarships were presented by Homer Wright, professor of history at Troy State University.

"Those receive scholarships are top quality students," Wright said. "We will continue to serve Fort Bennng as we have in the past."

More than $31,000 has been given to the FBMA scholarship fund by the university over the past six years, said Pfeiffer.

The scholarships are awarded to candidates interested in the field of management or business, said Pfeiffer.

This year's winners were Shirley Jarrett and Cynthia Sepulveda, with one-year graduate scholarships for Troy State. Sgt. 1st Class James Howse and Olga Espana received one-year undergraduate scholarships to Troy State and Sheryl Porter received a $1,500 undergraduate scholarship also to Troy State. 'Alpha Players' pull out overtime victory

By Terry K. Ray
Special to The Bayonet

Company A, 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment's "Alpha Players" pulled one out in overtime to defeat Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment's "Bandits" 13-6 at Gowdy Field Monday night.

The Bandits' offense did not take long to get themselves on the board. After giving the ball up on four downs, the Bandits' defense held the Alpha Players to four downs, and took over on a protected kick.

On the first play of their second possession quarterback Charles Potter rolled right and hit wide receiver Darryl Harris down the right sideline, Harris scampered past safety Everett Evans for six. The extra point try failed but the Bandits led 6-0.

The Alpha Players started just outside the 20-yard line, and on first down, quarterback Andrew Bennett pitched to Evans for a first down. Two plays later Bennett tried to hit split end Otis Webster for a first down, but safety James Webb stepped up and picked off the pass for the Bandits' defense, and returned it to inside the 20-yard line for a Bandit first and goal.

Terry K. Ray Special to The Bayonet

Alpha Players quarterback Andrew Bennett falls back with runningback Everett Evans and Lorenzo Hayward in an attempt to put more points on the scoreboard.

The Bandits' offense tried for the quick score with Potter going up top to Harris on first and goal but defensive back Otis Webster intercepted the pass in the end zone to kill the Bandits' offense at the goal line.

Alpha Players' offense couldn't move the ball on three plays and had to punt the ball away. The Bandits couldn't do any better, after three plays the first half expired with the Bandits ahead 6-0.

Defense by both teams rose to the forefront in the second half. On Alpha Players' third play of the half, Bennett pitched to Evans who bobbled the ball. Bandits' linebacker Kenneth Trotter picked it clean in mid-air for Alpha Players second turnover of the game.

The Alpha Players' defense held and the Bandits gave the ball up on downs.

Alpha Players' next possession didn't last long. On their second play, Bennett rolled right and tried to hit split end James White down the right side, but safety Webb was there again for his second interception of the evening.

Bandit quarterback Potter was replaced by Webb but was unable to get anything going for the Bandit offense.

On his second snap from scrimmage Webb was picked off in the left flat by defensive back Webster who broke down the sideline untouched for Alpha Players first score of the game. The extra point attempt failed and Alpha Players had tied the game 6 - 6.

Defense held for the rest of the game and time ran out with the score tied.

In overtime Alpha Players won the toss and started from the 10- yard line with four plays to either score or move the ball as close to the goal line as possible.

On the third play in overtime Bennett pitched to Evans on the right side who broke two tackles on his way to the end zone. On the extra point attempt a Bandit penalty put the ball inside the 3-yard line and Bennett snuck in for the point after. Alpha Players had come from behind to take the lead 13-6.

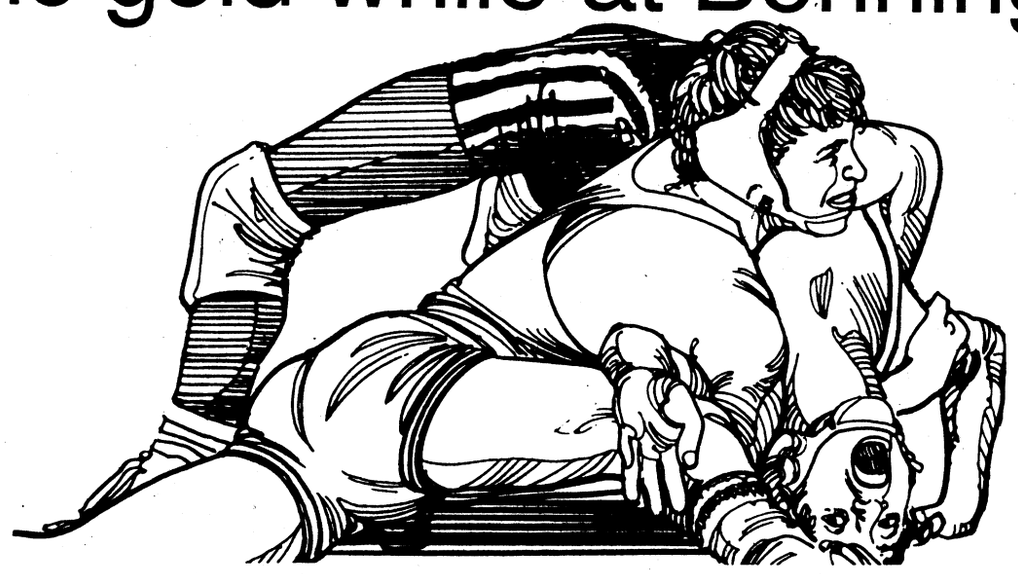
The Bandit offense tried to get the ball in the end zone, on their second play in the final period Webb rolled out to his left and took off down the sideline and into the end zone for a touchdown, but the referee's flag nullified the score and moved the Bandits further back.

On their final play of the game Webb tried to hit his receiver in the end zone but Webster pulled in his second interception of the game and pushed Alpha Players record to 2-0 with a 13-6 win over the Bandits.

Wrestler stumbled onto opportunity for Olympic gold while at Benning

By Ray Johnson
United States Forces Korea

SEOUL, Korea — Army Spc. Ryan Jippen's start in international wrestling is like a Hollywood script where an unknown comes out of the shadows to beat an established champ. He recently earned an invitation to the U.S. Olympic Trials.



Following Army basic training at Fort Benning in 1990, the Brookings, S.D., native was waiting for assignment orders and was detailed to clean up the All-Army wrestling team practice gym.

After watching for a few days, Jippen was confident he could beat the wrestler in his weight category. The quiet, soft spoken then-private got up the nerve to ask the coach if he could challenge the champion. The coach was a little amused,but honored the request.

Jippen handily beat the incumbent 12-2. That was the start of a two-year wrestling odyssey.

This July, he pinned down two bronze medals at the Council of International Military Sports wrestling championships in Istanbul, Turkey. That showing, plus his overall record for the past two years earned the Olympic invite. The trials will be held next May.

If he makes America's team, next comes the 1992 Summer Olympics in Barcelona, Spain. When it comes to his chances of making the Olympic team, Jippen is blunt.

"My chances are 50-50; a lot of it depends on whether Derrick Waldroup wrestles in the same weight category."

Waldroup is several-time national champ who usually wrestles in the 190-pound class. At this year's national meet, Waldroup moved down to Jippen's 180.5-pound class. The result was a disappointing fifth-place finish after meeting Waldroup in an early round. It was his lowest finish of the year.

"I hope he moves up weight," Jippen said. As for the other competitors at 180.5 pounds, "I've met and beat them all. Derrick is what stands in my way of making the team."

Even if Jippen doesn't make the Olympic team, he has years of competition ahead of him. Just two years out of high school in Brookings, he has less than four years of wrestling experience. A dare by friends at school to drop basketball and take up wrestling put him on this road to competing around the world.

That dare, he said, led to a 56-1 high school record, and a 1989 state championship in the 160-pound class.

Being a top Army athlete doesn't stop Jippen from pulling his military duties. He's a team leader on a Bradley fighting vehicle with the 2nd Infantry Division. He spends most of his working time near Korea's demilitarized zone, within sight of communist North Korea.

He describes being able to wrestle for the Army an honor and being able to serve on the DMZ a privilege, despite the austere conditions not far removed from the 1950's war.

"My Korean tour has given me a better insight on how other people have to live. I've learned that while not everything is perfect back home, it sure beats the North Korean system."

Even though Jippen would have eventually discovered the Army wrestling program, he says luck, along with skill put him on a fast track.

"If I wasn't on that detail, I would have had to make it the hard way. That means winning at post level, then my major command and finally the Army finals. One little injury could have ended it. It was skill that got me on the team, and it was luck that allowed me to show it," he said.

'Greenery' shouldn't deter bass fishermen

Special to The Bayonet

Don't despair if a thick mat of hydrilla now covers your favorite fishing lake. You can still catch bass out of the greenery, even though it probably looks solid enough to walk on.

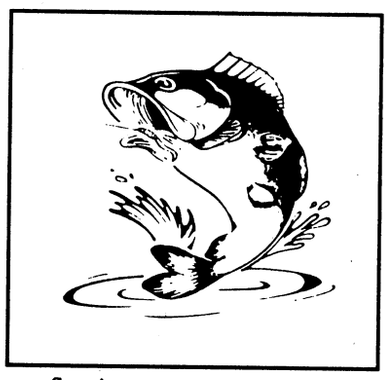
The secret, explains professional angler David Wharton, is to fish under it, not over it, through it, or around it.

"One of the common misconceptions about hydrilla is that it is as thick down on the bottom as it is on the surface," says the Johnson Outboards Pro Staff member, "but in truth, there is actually open water under the hydrilla, and that's where the bass are."

The reasons bass gather under the vegetation, says Wharton, are because the vegetation provides cover, cooler temperatures, and food.

"Earlier in the year when the hydrilla is only two or three feet above the bottom, bass roam over the top of it," says Wharton, "and we catch a lot of fish by slow-rolling a spinnerbait right over the vegetation.

"Now, with the bass back up and underneath the thicker hydrilla, you have to change techniques completely. The best lure is a large plastic worm with perhaps a 3/4 or 5/8-ounce slip sinker. The heavy sinker is needed to penetrate through the matting on top; a lighter sinker will get stopped and never reach the bottom."



Once the lure breaks through the matting, explains the Johnson pro, it can be jigged vertically, or allowed to fall completely to the bottom and then hopped.

"The way we fish this thick hydrilla is by moving right along the edge of it and pitch-casting our lures a short distance into it. We' re not really fishing vertically right under the boat, but we' re close.

"We jig the worm a few times and if we don' t get a strike, we reel in for another cast. My experience has been that fish in hydrilla will hit quickly or not at all."

Another characteristic of bass in this thick vegetation is that they will often gather in small schools. Thus, when one fish is hooked, several more may be caught on successive casts. "Frequently — these are quality bass, too," adds Wharton. "It isn't uncommon to catch several bass in the three to five-pound class on successive casts."

Once you catch a fish, slow down and work the immediate area thoroughly.

Service experts recommend a frequent check of the gearcase lubricant of your outboard motor. If any water has worked its way into the gearcase, it could lead to major problems in the winter months if it freezes and cracks the case. when you drain the fluid, check for water, metal filings or a burned odor. Any of these could signal trouble and you should have your motor checked by a qualified technician as soon as possible.

Wise appliance use helps conserve

By Jennie L. McRae
Energy Branch

ENERGY WATCH

The high productivity of the American food industry depends on large quantities of energy to produce, process, transport, store and prepare a large variety of foods. As a result, advanced agricultural systems are running up an energy deficit. As the geographic distance from producer to consumer lengthens, the degree of processing increases and energy is substituted for labor and natural soil fertility, the energy deficit increases.

In 1910, the energy content of food produced in the United States was slightly greater than the energy used to grow, process and transport the food. In 1970, however, nine times as much energy was consumed by the food system as was contained in the food produced. In other words, by the time the food reaches the consumer's plate, the total energy expended is many times that contained in the food being eaten. It is the processing, transportation and distribution of the food that absorbs most of the energy. Therefore, it is wise to select food items carefully, as well as to store and prepare for them efficiently.

The home preparation of food accounts for almost 4 percent of the total U.S. energy consumption. The major in-home energy consumption for food occurs in storage (refrigeration and freezing) and preparation (ranges, ovens and small appliances).

The storage and preparation of food includes energy use by appliances both directly and indirectly. There is a direct use of energy for refrigeration, cooking and dishwashing. The indirect uses of energy are for hot water, to maintain a comfortable room temperature where applicances are operating and for manufacturing the appliances.

Appliances and equipment account for 33 percent of the energy consumed in the home.

The refrigerator and range are the top energy users.

Some tips to save energy in the kitchen:

• If you have a gas stove, make sure the pilot light is burning efficiently — with a blue flame.

• Never boil water in an open pan — use a lid.

• Keep range-top burners and reflectors clean.

• Match the size of the pan to the heating element.

• If you cook with electricity, get in the habit of turning off the burners several minutes before the alloted cooking time is over.

• When using the oven, make the most of the heat from that single source.

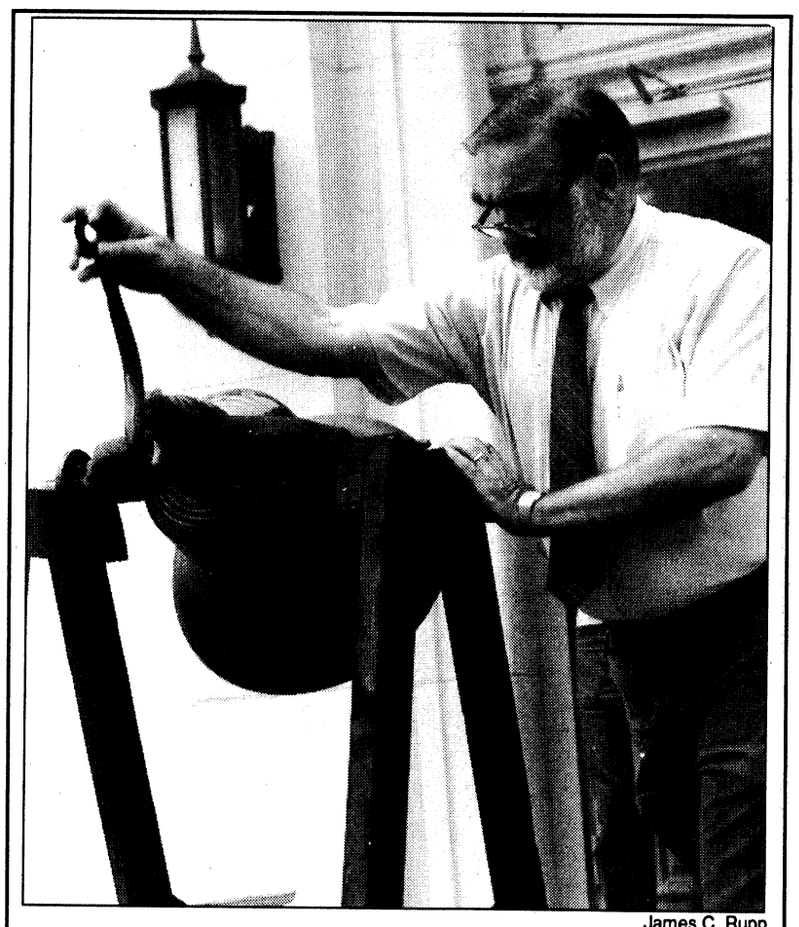
• In the summer, use the range exhaust vent to remove cooking heat and humidity.

Thaw frozen foods prior to cooking. Put in the refrigerator one day before using.

• Use small electric pans or ovens for small meals.

• Use pressure cookers and microwaves if you have them.

• When cooking with a gas range-top burner, use moderate flame settings to conserve gas.



• When you have a choice, use the range-top rather than the oven.

• Don't preheat your oven.

• When uslng the oven, turn it off several mlnutes before the cooking time is over.

• Regularly defrost manual-defrost refrigerators and freezers. Frost buildup increases the amount of energy needed to maintain the temperature. Never allow frost to build up more than one-quarter of an inch.

• Make sure your refrigerator seals are airtight. Test them by closlng the door over a plece of paper or a dollar bill half in and half out of the refrlgerator. If you can pull the paper or bill out easily, the latch may need adjustment or the seal may need replacing.

SPIRITUAL

Auschiwtz survivor speaks on Benning

By Richard Garrison
USAIC Chaplain's Office

Edith Eger received her doctorate from Saybrook Institute in San Francisco, but her real life education took place at Auschwitz, Germany, 33 years earlier. Pulled from a mass grave by an American soldier in May 1945, she resolved to live life as a survivor, not a victim. She had already refined the technique of survival in her desperate circumstances inside concentration camps, including the one at Auschwitz.

Afraid to tell her story of horror for nearly four decades, she eventually returned to Germany; and, in her own words, ~made peace with my past." But during those decades she was neither silent nor idle. She pursued psychological studies, achieving not only a Ph.d, but credentials in several prestigious psychological associations. More important to her, and to those with whom she works, she developed her personal philosophy of surviving. Drawing from her Auschwitz experiences, academic studies and personal faith in God, she has woven together a personal philosophy of survival that she now shares worldwide with any who would like to be "overcomers."

For more than a decade and a half she has worked closely with Army Chaplains, recognizing the need for a healing ministry, which draws from a person's physical, psychological, and spiritual resources. At the core of her "survival" philosophy lies the conviction that an individual always has choices — no matter the degree of imprisonment. A person is free to choose, and how he or she chooses determines whether that person remains a victim, or emerges a survivor.

Recalling a day in the concentration camp, while near death from starvation, Eger realized that even then, there were choices.

Studying different blades of grass, she knew she was free to choose certain ones to eat and certain ones to leave.

Another great survivor, and mentor to Eger, was Dr. Victor Franklin who endured years of indignity and humiliation at the hands of the Nazis. He learned the same profound lessons of choice.

His captors had taken away his home, possessions, family, freedom and even his watch and wedding ring. When it seemed he had nothing, he suddenly realized there was one thing no one could ever take from him. He realized he still had the power to choose his own attitude, to give up or to go on, to wallow in self-pity, or to forgive his captors, to choose bitterness or to choose happiness.

To be a survivor or a victim is a choice we each have.

Eger, in four days at Fort Benning, reminded us all— Chaplains, soldiers, wives, and leaders — of our choices.

It is a message of hope that she shared with a variety of audiences, from chapel congregations to battalion leaders, social workers to health care professionals, Chaplains to Army wives.

The response was always the same—"When is she coming back?"

Soon, we hope.

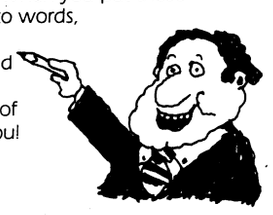
How to make money in three easy steps.



Step 1.
Sell a solution! Your old rattle trap is a teen's dream machine. That old set of golf clubs is sure to be a big hit with a beginner. Here's the point: Your former treasure can bring another pleasure. And if you've got a skill to market or service you'd like to provide—there's someone looking for you in classified.

Step 2.
Aim for an audience. After you've selected a solution for another to seize, bring that person to life. Think about your product or service and its original value to you, then detail its features and benefits to another individual. When you put those benefits into words, others like you will find value too. And that's of value to you!

Step 3.
Contact classified. Give us a call. You'll cash in on the speed and effectiveness of the dynamic classified marketplace. Each day, highly motivated readers are seeking services and solutions for a variety of needs. Turn to the classified pages, and you'll turn your item to be sold into money! It's as easy as 1-2-3!

Somers reveals 'Secrets'

By JAY BOBBIN
Tribune Media Services

While making millions laugh by playing Chrissy on "Three's Company," Suzanne Somers was struggling to cope with deep-rooted pain.

Her initial triumphs as a television actress and a nightclub performer largely cloaked her dysfunctional family background, into which she eventually delved — with the permission of her immediate relatives — in her 1988 autobiography "Keeping Secrets." That book becomes a new ABC TV-movie Sunday, with Somers (who also stars in the same network's new comedy series "Step by Step") serving as co-executive producer and portraying herself in her adult years, and Holly Fields cast as the younger Suzanne. Former "Dallas" regular Ken Kercheval plays her alcoholic father, whose alleged abuse is said to have taken a major toll on her own sense of personhood, with Michael ("The Waltons") Learned appearing as her mother and John Scott Clough as her first husband. Directed by John ("The Autobiography of Miss Jane Pittman," "Baby Girl Scott") Korty, the drama also features David Birney as Somers' present husband Alan Hamel and Kim ("Guiding Light") Zimmer as her sister Maureen.

"I've done so much work to become the person I am today," Somers says, "who is a person I feel good about, that it was very difficult to crawl back into my old skin. At first, I started to take it home with me at night, then I realized I couldn't do that. That was me then, and it has nothing to do with who I am today, so I could walk off the set and let it go."

Suzanne Somers with cast of 'Step By Step'

Fort Benning will get a new commanding general today during a change of command ceremony at 10 a.m. on York Field in front of Infantry Hall, building 4.

Maj. Gen. Carmen J. Cavezza will relinquish command to Maj. Gen. Jerry A. White.

Gen. Frederick M. Franks Jr., commander of the Training and Doctrine Command, will be the presiding officer for the change of command.

Cavezza is leaving Fort Benning for Fort Lewis, Wash., where he'll assume command of that installation and I Corps, a lieutenant general's billet, pending Senate confirmation.

White comes to Fort Benning from Fort Ord, Calif., where he was commander of Fort Ord and the 7th Infantry Division (Light) .

Also attending the ceremony will be Gen. Edwin H. Burba Jr., commander of U.S. Army Forces Command and a former CG of Fort Benning; John W. Shannon, undersecretary of the Army; Rep. Richard Ray; Brig. Gen. James Pocock, commander of the 70th Division (Training); Brig. Gen. Henry Kievenaar, assistant division commander, 24th Infantry Division (Mechanized); and Brig. Gen. Charles Baumann, chief of staff, XVIII Airborne Corps.

What: Fort Benning change of command
When: Today at 10 a.m.
Where: York Field in front of Infantry Hall, building 4

Managers and supervisors are encouraged to allow civilian employees to attend the change of command ceremony.

Employees should be excused in time to allow arrival and seating at least 15 minutes prior to the beginning of the ceremony, according to Fort Benning's Directorate of Civilian Personnel.

The public is invited to attend. Parking will be available in Infantry Hall's east parking lot.

Royal visit

King Mswati III from the Kingdom of Swaziland receives an honorary airborne beret from Lt. Col. Marcel Lettre, commander of the 1st Battalion, 507th Parachute Infantry Regiment. The king visited Fort Benning Tuesday and received a shooting vest, saw a Silver Wings demonstration on Glenn Field, fired various weapons on Hook Range, saw a combined arms live-fire exercise on Cactus Observation Post and fired a Bradley Fighting Vehicle and an M-1A1 Abrams tank.

Cavezza reflects on tour

USAIC Public Affairs Office

When Maj. Gen. Carmen Cavezza assumed command of Fort Benning 15 months ago, he noted, "There's a sign at the gate that says, 'Excellence starts here.' I submit that Fort Benning and excellence are synonymous."

Reminded of that quote as he sat his spacious office, the walls w bare of the memorabilia that t of past assignments, Cavezza ıled and said, "The real proof is product we turned out – the ınfantry soldier.

"And the ultimate test was in Desert Storm, and every Infantryman who fought there was trained in some capacity at Fort Benning.

"So I think we attained excellence in our leadership programs.

"I think the other thing is that in these times of cutbacks, in these difficult times, we've gone to great pains to minimize that and treat everyone with dignity, and I think that's part of excellence. You take care of your people, not only while they work for you; but, if anything happens and you have to replace them, you continue to take care of them and assist them in that transitory process."

Cavezza

Asked about the travel demands placed on him, Cavezza said, "Being chief of Infantry, it's necessary because it's an investment in the future. For instance, I spent a lot of time at (Fort) Leavenworth in developing AirLand Battle Future, now known as AirLand Operations, getting the Infantry School input into that. "I was the guy carrying the mail for all these guys at the school who did all the work.

"It had an important impact and will benefit the Infantry and the Army in the future.

"All my trips up to Washington and various other places was to ensure we can get things like the 'Javelin' and 'Non-Line of Sight' (anti-tank) systems. And they're critical, so I think it's just part of the job as chief of Infantry that your scope is much more than just Fort Benning.

Cavezza described a triad of Infantry matters as comprising that scope: "It's the Infantry force at large, it's Infantry equipment, it's doctrine."

Asked what he'd say to a young soldier or officer who was thinking of making the Army a career, given the proposed force reductions, Cavezza said, "If he's thinking of making it a career, wants to make it a career, he ought to make it a career."

He noted the competition is a lot stiffer and there may come a time when that soldier "stubs his toe."

"At that time, he needs to consider what his options are and if he thinks he stands a chance of overcoming that obstacle, then he should go for it.

"He shouldn't be frightened off by talk of reductions. I don't care what field you're talking about, be it military, industry, education,

Fire prevention week begins Mon.

By Richard Brill
Special to The Bayonet

"Fire won't wait ... Plan your escape," is the theme for this year's Fire Prevention Week Monday through Oct. 11. The Fort Benning Fire Prevention Office is planning a number of events to demonstrate the importance of fire prevention.

According to Fire Inspector Billy Poteet, displays will be set up in Building 4, main Post Exchange, and Sayer's Memorial Library.

Also, each post fire station will have an open house throughout the week. Anyone can come to the fire stations and take a tour, said Poteet.

The main activities will be at post schools, where firefighters will perform demonstrations that are both educational and entertaining.

Children in kindergarten through third grade will be treated to a puppet show that will teach them how to react to fire emergencies. Fire trucks will be on hand for the children to see, and each child will receive a red plastic firefighter's hat, Poteet said.

Fire prevention talks and demonstrations on exiting a burning building using a mock door and window will give older children, and fourth through eight-graders, some "hands-on" training.

317th Engineers to come to Fort Benning

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Advance parties from the 317th Engineer Battalion and the Headquarters and Headquarters Detachment of the 13th Supply and Services Battalion are scheduled to arrive at Fort Benning from Europe Tuesday.

Forty-eight soldiers of the engineer battalion are expected in on Tuesday while about 16 soldiers, 12 with families, of the detachment are due to arrive Friday.

The main body of the engineers will begin arriving the week of Oct. 29, with a plancload carrying about 100 soldiers and 107 family members.

The commercial aircraft bearing the troops will be followed by Air Force aircraft carrying hold baggage and pets. This schedule is expected to be followed with three additional flights of approximately 100 soldiers and family members through Dec. 17 until all 425 soldiers and family members are here.

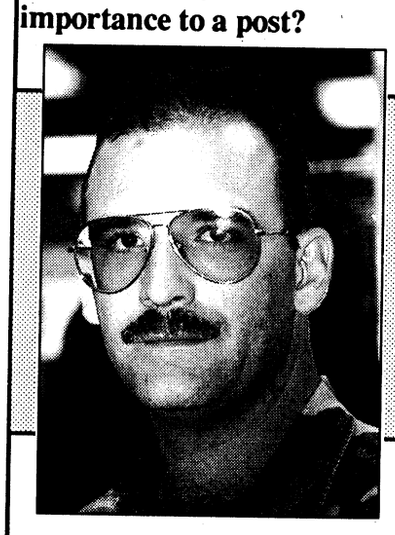
The battalion will be assigned to the 3rd Brigade, 24th Infantry Division (Mechanized). It will replace the 72nd Engineer Company under a force restructuring plan that provides more engineer assets to infantry divisions.

The remainder of the 65-member detachment, which is being assigned to the 36th Engineer Group, is expected on post the week of Nov. 4 to 8.

Because of the large number of families, 210 with the engineer battalion and 60 with the detachment, post officials are hustling to find off post housing.

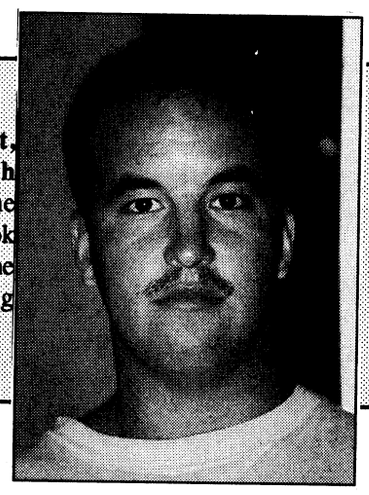
Staff members in the post's Housing Referral Office are seeking single family dwellings, apartments and mobile homes which the new arrivals can rent.

Anyone with rental property is asked to call the Housing Referral Office at 545-6610. Rhonda Marsh, of the HRO, said dwellings will be expected to meet certain adequacy standards.



Because soldiers and families will be arriving at least 45 days ahead of their cars and household goods, Army Community Service is seeking donations to purchase items for their lending closet.

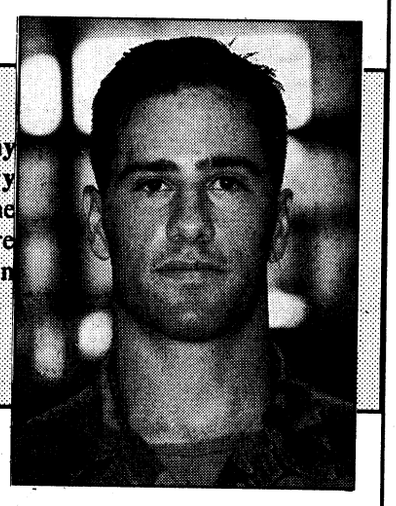
The lending closet was pretty much wiped out supporting family members during Desert Shield and Desert Storm, officials said.



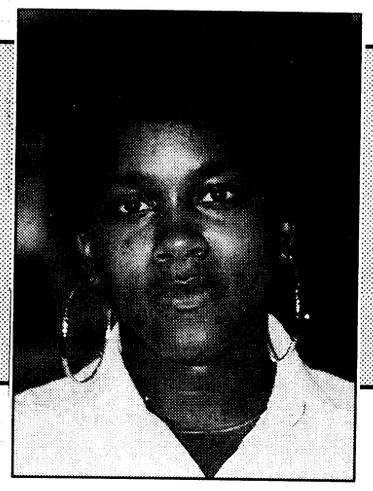
Checks can be made out to the ACS Volunteer Support Fund and dropped off at Building 2642.

VARIOUS VOICES

What do you think is a commanding general's importance to a post?



1st Lt. Landon Wade Dilday, 39th National Guard (Arkansas) – "A commanding general has to make decisions about things that the regimental commanders and those commanders under him have to implement and see through."



Sgt. Darrin Battencourt, Company E, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment –"One of the most important things he has to look out for is the living conditions of the soldiers on post, such as the billeting and the mess hall standards."

Sgt. Rita Owens, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 29th Infantry Regiment – "I believe that he should always look out for Inspector General complaints, and always be aware of anything that affects the command of his post."

Spc. Granger Prunier, Company C, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment – "He should set all the policies of the post and make sure they are used and things run smoothly.."

Valerie Smith, family member – "He should be concerned about the way people feel on post and the way they view the happenings on post."

Fiorella Cardzenia, School of the Americas –"He should look after the communities on post and make sure everything is going well. He must also look out for the appearance of the post and keep things presentable."

Golf pros can't cut it here

By Clyde Snively
Bayonet columnist

COMMENTARY

When the deputy public affairs officer started sniveling about not having enough volunteers for what he called "the Fort Benning hole" of the Southern Open, I quickly volunteered.

I was to work the landing area, which, for you airborne guys or chopper pilots, is where the ball is EXPECTED to land, and the green another day. Greens, too, are places balls are EXPECTED to land.

Two days of duty and I've come to the following conclusions:

1. The pros would never make it at Fort Benning.

Sure, most of these guys are good enough to make a living at playing golf. But considering the conditions they play under, I wonder if some of the polyester heroes at Fort Benning couldn't make the tour, too.

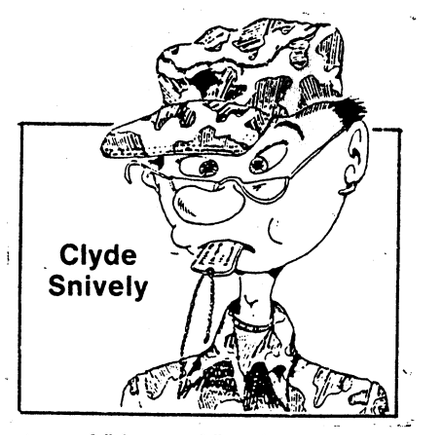
One whiner asked for relief when his ball landed on a patch of dead grass on the fairway. At Fort Benning, a golfer might ask for relief if he landed on grass. At Fort Benning, we ask for relief when the ball goes down a manhole or is adopted by a snake.

On PGA tours, they have people who do nothing but hunt for lost balls or tell the gallery to "hush."

At Fort Benning, the other members of your group, who also have no idea where your ball went, might help you look for 30 seconds.

At Fort Benning, you put up with weapons firing, yahoos in pickups yelling at you as you try to tee the ball up or putt.

And at Fort Benning, there's a thing akin to the Chinese water torture. It's some freak driving around post selling ice cream bars to kids while playing "Turkey in the Straw."



Don't we have a post noise ordinance? Isn't it a violation of the ordinance to bother people more than 10 feet away?

At least specialist boom box will soon be gone. This jerk spends his summers in the neighborhood, causing adults to wish for someone to scrape their nails on a chalkboard or step on a Siamese cat's tail, anything to get relief from Johnny one tune.

At least he should change his tune daily.

OK, so nothing the Eagles or Alabama does will make it on his music box, then maybe something from the classics, like Chopin's "Polonaise," or Bach's Brandenburg Concerto No. 3...OK, "Chopsticks."

Back to the Pros. They'd never make it out of our rough. They barely made it out of what they termed "the rough" at Callaway Gardens.

I laugh at that. It ain't rough if you can still see the ball. Fort Benning has rough. Callaway Gardens has "gentle." Yet the pros couldn't handle it.

Further, they couldn't putt the greens. I heard a guy once say he'd rather get a divorce than three-putt a green. I got news for you; there would have been a lot of divorces after that tournament.

2. The best show in town was the supporting case – spectators and volunteers.

One guy at the marshal's trailer noted they needed military men (or women) in charge because "all the civilians want to do is hook a radio on their belts and ride around in a golf cart looking important. On the other hand, those military guys know how to organize." (By the way, most traffic on the radios dealt with "protein alert," code for "look at that babe.")

The adage about "give a person a little power and he'll try to run the world," was just as true there as anywhere else.

It was particularly noteworthy as the "leader marshals" swept onto the turf of the hole marshals and immediately thought they were assuming command.

It was like a division commander and his staff coming into a battalion, not liking what they see, and taking over. Did you ever wonder why so many people seemed to walk with stiff legs at the end of the day. It was because they were sneaking out with "Hush y'all" signs in their pant legs.

And finally, what would a story about this year's Southern Open be without a mention of "Sparky."

"Sparky" is the name bequeathed one of Fort Benning's ladies. She earned it in the line of duty. Seems she was driving a pro around in a golf cart Monday when the golf cart got a flat (I didn't know they did either).

Anyway, the pro spotted another cart sitting idly by and suggested the Fort Benning lady requisition it. Not wanting to have to carry the pro's rather large golf bag, she agreed to the idea, driving over to the other "unused" cart.

Transferring the bag, she hopped in and drove off.

Unfortunately, the cart was being used. It was being used to supply power to a scoreboard. Now you know the rest of the story.

Know what to do before fire strikes home

What would you do in case a fire suddenly erupted in your home? The one thing you should never do is panic. Your best chance is to smother it while it's still small.

Fires can break out in any part of your home. Take the kitchen, for example. If a fire should erupt in a pan on the top of the stove, immediately turn off the heat. Try to smother the flames with a lid that completely covers the pan. Never pour water on a grease fire. This will splatter and spread the flames. If this should fail, use a fire extinguisher (dry chemical or carbon dioxide type). Even if you think the fire is out, call the fire department and let them make sure.

If a fire breaks out in the oven, turn off the heat. Try to smother the fire by keeping the oven door closed for a few moments. If this doesn't work, open the oven door just far enough to use your fire extinguisher.

Remember if your clothing should catch fire, never run or remain standing. You must stop, drop to the floor and roll. Cover your eyes and do not stop rolling until the flames are out. Once the flames are out, take off the smoldering clothing.

In case of an electrical fire, unplug the appliance or turn off the electricity. Never pour water on a connected appliance. You may get electrocuted.

In the event of a trash fire, water is the best means of smothering the flames. Make sure you soak the fire thoroughly.

Sometimes, no matter how careful you are, someone does get burned. When this happens, plunge the burned skin into ice water and keep it there until the pain stops. Also, you can apply towels that have been soaked in ice water. Never apply greasy ointments to burns.

Regardless of how minor you think the burn is, it is always best to visit your doctor to get the determination of the seriousness of the burn.

Additional information can be received by contacting the Fire Prevention Office at 545-1967, 545-2883, 544-1220 or 544-3964.

Commanding general proclaims fire prevention week

Sunday through Oct. 12 marks Fire Prevention Week. Fire Prevention Week was first proclaimed by President Warren G. Harding in 1922 to commemorate the Great Chicago Fire of 1871, which killed 250 people, left 100,000 homeless and destroyed more than 17,400 buildings.

While fire prevention is of paramount importance, it is just as vital to know how to escape safely if fire strikes. A clear escape plan can mean the difference between life or death. I urge all military and civilian personnel to follow this year's theme "Fire won't wait ... Plan your escape."

What can you do to protect yourself and your family in case fire strikes? Plan a family walk-through of your home, making sure everyone knows what to do in case of fire and what kind of dangers to look for. You can take positive action to protect your family by locating fire hazards, eliminating the hazards, and being prepared in case of fire.

The Fort Benning Fire Department has scheduled several events during this week to emphasize the importance of fire prevention to include displays at the Fort Benning Post Exchange and Building 4, puppet shows at all post schools and open houses at all post fire stations. I urge your participation.

For complete home fire safety information, call the post Fire Department at 545-2883, 545-1967, 544-1220 or 544-3964.

Here is the meaning of the word 'Hispanic'

By Rudi Williams
American Forces Information Service

They were called all kinds of irritating names: Spanish-origin, Spanish-speaking, Spanish-Americans, Latinos/Latin, LatinAmericans, Indo-Hispanic, Hispanic-American, Afro-Hispanic, Iberian and others.

Symbolism and semantics often stood in the way of working on important issues because there was no neutral, all-encompassing term that connoted some of the culture and heritage of each subgroup of Americans of Spanish ancestry.

"Not having a name acceptable to every group created dissension, lack of harmony conflict of interest, and it contributed more to identifying what's separate instead of what's united," said Manuel Oli,verez, manager of the Department of Defense Hispanic Employment Program at the Pentagon.

Oliverez said the government realized in 1969 that a new way had to be found to identify Hispanics. A White House committee of which Oliverez was a member, was formed to find a generic term with universal application for Americans of Spanish ancestry.

"All the terms in vogue at that time— Chicano, Spanish-speaking, Hispanic-American—were ranked, discussed and looked at from different angles," said Oliverez. "We finally settled on the word 'Hispanic.'

"Having accepted the term doesn't mean that every Cuban, Mexican, Puerto Rican or other subgroup bought off on it, Oliverez said. But they understood that Hispanic was the best alternative available.

"Hispanic was adopted because it has a basis in the word'Hispaniola' (the Caribbean island shared by Haiti and the Dominican Republic) and because it allows each subgroup to retain its identity—Cubans are Cubans Puerto Ricans are Puerto Ricans, and Mexicans are Mexicans," Oliverez said. "The word has no negative or positive history and, therefore, no cause for any subgroup to be offended by it." In short, Hispanics are citizens of the United States who trace their ancestry to Latin America and Spain. "Although we can't claim the word is a 100 percent solution, it allows the Hispanic community to focus on things other than semantics," he said. The dilemma was that "we're a varied people – from very white and blond to black and in-between," said Oliverez. "There are African, Italian and Oriental Hispanics; to be Hispanic, you don't have to be a mixture of populations indigenous to the southern United States, Central and South America or Spain. It's a combination that has culture and language — that is, born and raised and acculturated in the Western Hemisphere or the southern part of the Western Hemisphere." Oliverez said for the process of programs for jobs and political, social and economic issues in the United States, Hispanic serves as a word that in one concept depicts all of the various subgroups into one Hispanic family. "A Hispanic-American like myself, for instance, sees himself as Mexican under the Hispanic umbrella. But the way I perceive myself isn't necessarily the way a Chilean, a Paraguayan or an Argentinean perceives me. He probably perceives me as an American, although I look very much like him and speak Spanish .

REFLECTIONS: Cavezza recalls tour here

whatever, the good people will be successful and if a person is good and wants to succeed, that person will do that.

"A person needs to be realistic and optimistic about it."

Asked to peer into the future and comment on "Infantry 2000," he said he sees a smaller force, yet the most lethal force ever fielded.

It will also be, he said, "The most deployable force and the most flexible force, and the Infantry soldier will be the centerpiece for all that.

"He'll be equipped with protective systems that will protect him from the hazards of the battlefield ranging from chemical weapons to lasers, to hopefully bullets, and he will have the technology immediately available to him so that he can maneuver around the battlefield quickly and effectively and bring in lethal fires accurately.

In a projection welcome to any soldier, Cavezza said, "I don't see him (the soldier) being burdened down by big loads as he is now. I see him having confidence in logistics systems so he can fight light and feel confident he will be resupplied, where and when it's needed.

For Cavezza, who bade farewell to thousands of Fort Benning troops deploying to Operation Desert Storm – and then welcomed them home – the real lesson learned from the Gulf War was, "To quote General (Edwin H.) Burba (Commander-in-Chief of Forces Command), I think the most significant lesson learned is that it happened and the fact that nobody ever thought it would happen . That should make us all aware of the future of such contingencies; never get complacent."

For Cavezza, his toughest decision as commander of Fort Benning was the Reduction in Force for the civilian work force.

His voice cracking with emotion, he said, "The civilians on our work force deserve a lot of credit. I worry about them. I don't have a lot of control over those I can keep. I'm driven by a budget that tells me I have to get rid of some. We have some great people here. I hate to lose any of them."

As excited as Cavezza is about going to I corps. – to implement AirLand Operations, work with the weapons systems, tactics and doctrine developed at Fort Benning – he said he'd certainly miss the people of the tri-community.

"The thing about the people downtown is they are not artificial. They are genuine.

"It wasn't the easiest of times – the past 15 months. During Desert Storm, they mobilized behind us. They never turned their backs on us."

His message to the people in the community was that of thanks for "hanging in there."

He especially noted the Rotary Club. "It's a tremendous organization, and it bothers me that I couldn't support it as much as I wish I could. I appreciate their understanding."

Editor's note: Today's change of command concludes Cavezza's third significant assignment here. He also commanded the 197th Infantry Brigade for three years and spent a year as chief of staff. Cavezza and his wife, Joyce, will be missed by the community..

Cavezza welcomes back a member of the 598th Maint. Co. from Saudi Arabia.

36th Engineers take to the field for combined training

By Lawrence Damore
36th Engineer Group

Elements of the 36th Engineer Group deployed to various field sites on Fort Benning recently in what the unit's operations officer, Maj. Robert Johnson, described as a "back to basics field training exercise."

The Headquarters and Headquarters Company of the 36th along with the 586th Engineer Company, and the entire 43rd Engineer Battalion moved out of their garrison facilities Sept. 23 in their first combined exercise since returning from Southwest Asia last spring.

After the units set up their Tactical Operations Centers at their sites, soldiers worked on putting together their sleeping tents. Of the six companies that deployed, two of them, the HHC, 36th, and Company A, 43rd Eng. Bn., chose to have their soldiers sleep in their "pup" tents, the small shelters that all personnel are issued through the Central Issue Facility.

But many of the soldiers found little time for sleep during the exercise.

Missions for the units were tasked from the 36th TOC at various points throughout the exercise. Missions ranged from constructing helicopter pads, anti-tank ditches, and "C-Huts" to conducting route and bridge reconnaissances.

"Our goal was to keep the units busy the minute from they hit the ground," said the group assistant operation officer, Capt. Alvin Lee. "Although we were issuing the fragmentary orders to the units, they were the ones who told us what they wanted to do during the planning phase for this operation. I think the training experience has turned out real well."

The culminating mission occurred the morning of Sept. 27 when the 586th constructed a float bridge across the Chattahoochee River. Once the bridge was in place, Companies C and Bof the 43rd Eng. Bn. conducted a tactical crossing of the river.

"This is a good experience for us," said 586th Engineer Company Commander, Capt. Jeff Williamson. "Moving these vehicles across a river under blackout conditions is a great opportunity for our soldiers to excel."

In addition to the various missions normally associated with an exercise of this nature, the 36th received three general officers in the field and escorted them to many of the work sites. Maj. Gen. John F. Sobke, commander of the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, South Atlantic Division; Brig. Gen. Daniel W. Christman, commander, U.S. Army Engineer School and Fort Leonard Wood, Mo.; and Brig. Gen. Crisologo Rojas-Zapata, Chief of Engineers of the Bolivian Army, all took time out of their schedules to see Army engineers in action.

With the exeception of a three-hour period of rain Sept. 24 and a two-hour morning shower Sept. 25, weather throughout the exercise remained good. "Temperatures dipped into the low 50s on our last two nights, which is a bit unseasonable for this time of year," said 1st Lt. Adrienne Ruggles, intelligence officer of the 43rd Eng. Bn. "But the majority of our soldiers were ready."

"We want to try to put one of these together once a quarter," said Group Executive Officer Maj. Dwight Durham.

Female medics help soldiers

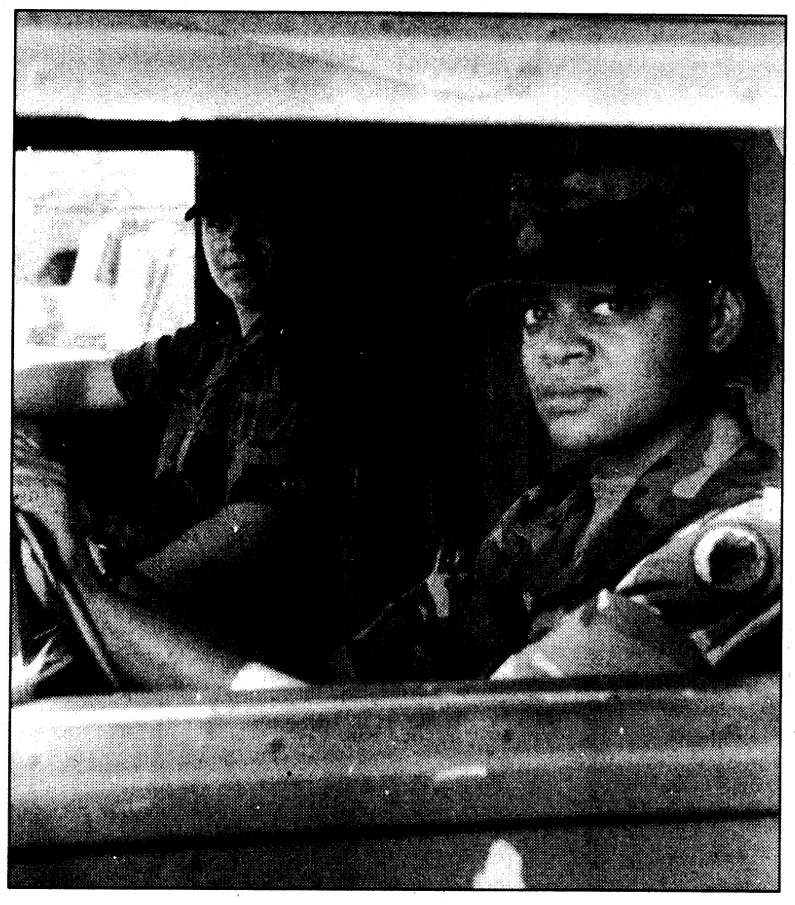
By Willie Hay
3rd Brigade, 24th Infantry Division

Although women are ineligible for Ranger training, female medics have found their niche in the high mobility, multipurpose, wheeled vehicle ambulances that accompany ranger candidates throughout the eight weeks of Ranger school.

Spc. Renita Price and Pfc. Kimberly Grimes, who double as medical specialists and ambulance drivers with Company B, 324th Forward Support Battalion, recently provided medical support as members of a nine-person team of medics from the unit that accompanied a ranger class from their start at Fort Benning to training sites at Dahlonega, GA; Eglin Air Force Base, Fla.; and Dugway Proving Ground, Utah.

"We held sick call every morning in the field just like here on Kelley Hill, except that it was in a HMMWV ambulance instead of a stationary medical facility, "Grimes said. "Most of the soldiers we treated were suffering from dehydration, rashes, heat injuries, and infections."

"Some of the ranger candidates initially had problems going to a female medic for treatment," Price said, "but we found that if they were sick enough to seek treatment they really didn't care if a woman treated them."



Not everyone the medics saw during the camp came to them on sick call, according to Grimes. "During water crossing training in Florida, we had to rescue a soldier with a muscle spasm in his back while he was in the water and call for a medevac helicopter to take him to the hospital at Eglin," she said.

"I had to strap him onto the litter and try to calm him down while we rushed him to the chopper," she added. "I also stayed with him during the flight to the hospital."

Both Grimes and Price said their desire to learn emergency medical procedures was what motivated them to join the Army.

"When my mother had a heart attack about six years ago, I was the only other person at home," recalled Grimes, 20, from Memphis, Tenn. "I immediately dialed 911, and the dispatcher reassured me and kept telling me what to do for my mother until the paramedics arrived."

"Helping my mother survive her heart attack made me feel proud of myself and convinced me to choose a career in medicine," she added. "After that experience, I decided to pursue a career as a registered nurse, and I'm planning to apply for 91 Charlie school to train as a licensed practical nurse while I'm in the Army."

Mac McInnis

Spc. Renita Price, right and Pfc. Kimberly Grimes, both of Company B, 324th Forward Support Battalion, prepare to roll out on another medical mission.

Price, 22, from Riviera, Fla., also plans to become a registered nurse and traces her interest in medicine to an experience she shared with her sister, a policewoman.

"I happened to be in the squad car one night when my sister responded to a call to a home where a woman and her child had been beaten up during a burglary," Price said. "We arrived at the house only a few minutes before the medics, but I tried to help the injured child until the ambulance came."

"My military training has helped me know what to do in medical emergencies and keep my head when the patient needs help the most," she added.

"In the field, you really learn to think on your feet when an emergency arises," agreed Grimes, who earned the Combat Medic Badge for her service while attached to the 2nd Battaion, 18th Infantry, during Operation Desert Storm. "Sometimes you're the only medic on the scene, so the patient's life is literally in your hands."

According to Price and Grimes, some 20 female medics are assigned to Co. B, with duty either at the Brigade Clearing Station or on one of the brigade's HMMWV ambulances or tracked vehicles.

"If you're not assigned to the clearing station, you're likely to spend about a week in the field every month," Grimes said. "You don't always have all the equipment you do in the clinic, but you learn to treat the patient with whatever items you can find in the field."

But the M-997 HMMWV ambulances the medics have taken to the field with them for the last few years are equipped with litters for up to four patients, according to Price.

"Normally, there are two medics on each crew," she said. "One drives the ambulance, while the other treats the patient. Each HMMWV has an air conditioner, a heater, and an NBC unit that allows you to perform in a chemical environment, as well as high intensity surgical lights that enable you to perform minor surgery on the litter patients."

"When we're in the field during a training exercise or on a mission like Ranger Camp, we basically go wherever the soldiers go," Grimes added. "At ranger camp, our patients ranged in rank from private to captain, but for us they were just people who needed medical treatment," said Grimes.

498th teaches local Boy Scouts first aid

By Randall G. Anderson
498th Medical Company

When you come across a person that is injured and requires medical attention, knowing what to do quickly can save a person's life. That is exactly what a group of Boy Scouts learned to do this past week under the supervision of some flight medics from Fort Benning.

The training was part of the First Aid and Safety theme for the month. Boy Scouts from the Fort Benning-Main Post Troop 27 conducted medical and evacuation training after receiving a briefing on helicopter operations and aeromedical equipment from soldiers of the 498th Medical Company (Air Ambulance). Sgt. James Hernandez, the primary instructor and a flight medic that deployed to Southwest Asia with the 498th Medical Company, provided instruction on the wide variety of equipment used to treat injured patients in flight. Upon the completion of the briefing, the scouts were able to examine the UH-60 Blackhawk helicopters and learn the flight controls in the cockpit. The final phase of the training was comprised of locating, treating and evacuating simulated patients as the scouts worked in small groups. This was the final testing phase of the first aid procedures learned by the scouts throughout the month.

Scout leader Chuck Andre commented that this instruction was the third of four blocks of training that the boys would complete as part of the First Aid and Safety Month. Other instruction has included; basic first aid, a compressed course on Cardiopulmonary Rescucitation and safety in the home and community. Information learned from the different classes would be applied to the scouts earning their Safety and First Aid merit badges.

For many of the boys, this was the first time that they had been around a helicopter.

Graham Moore had never been in a helicopter before, although he knew quite a bit about medical terms and procedure since his father works at Martin Army Hospital here. Another scout, 11-year-old Aaron Iturralde, has an uncle that is a helicopter mechanic and would like to be a pilot himself one day. He was especially interested in the aircraft and added, "With the medical training we learned here, I think that I could really help someone that was hurt."

An important part of the troop is Chaly Andre, the senior patrol leader. He has been involved in the scouting program for eight years, to include his time as a Cub Scout. As the senior scout, it is his responsibility to use his four patrol leaders to maintain orderliness and train the younger scouts. "By the end of the month, I feel that most of scouts will have a better idea what to do if they came across someone hurt and will know what to do to treat them," said Andre with pride.

Troop 27 has about 34 scouts, most ranging from 11 to 16 years old. In addition to the weekly events, such as this visit to the 498th Medical Company, the group tries to plan one major outing each month. This month the troop will be touring the USS Alabama, a naval ship ported in Mobile, Ala. Each summer the troop goes to Camp Calloway for a week-long scout camp and participates in numerous hikes and outdoor events.

Anyone interested in joining or working with the scouting program can contact Lt. Col. Charles Andre at 545-2571.

Panthers experience lessons of Civil War

By Blake Austensen
2nd Bn., 69th Armor Regt.

Bang! "Tear cartridge... load cartridge... ready... aim... fire!" BANG!

As the shots rang out, the Confederate soldier gazed wearily across the valley of green searching for any specks of blue still moving. It was still early in the morning, but he could already feel the sweat buillding up under his heavy gray uniform on this hot and humid day in Georgia..

No, this scene did not occur in August of 1864, but August of 1991. The soldier was not really a Confederate soldier, but Dennis Kelly, the park historian at the Kennesaw Mountain National Battlefield Park. Live fire demonstrations and tours of the battlefields is an everyday routine for him.

The officers of 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor "Panthers" on Kelley Hill recently conducted Officer Leadership Training while visiting the park and the Atlanta Cyclorama. This type of event is a time honored tradition known as a "Staff Ride." The purpose being to learn valuable lessons from previous battles and by applying current battlefield operating system principles to the battle, determine the effects and result.

The "Panther" battalion started the day with a museum visit, film and an introductory discussion on a soldier's lifestyle during the Civil War era.

"Most officers were elected by their men," said Kelly, a policy which surprised many of the group. Realism was added to the scene as Kelly, dressed in an authentic Confederate uniform discussed camp life, how armies were formed, and weapons systems and other related topics.

As the group moved on to the actual battlefield, the scene was quickly analyzed by the recent veterans of Desert Storm.

"Hey look, these look like the positions we dug in the sand in Iraq a few months ago," said 1st Lt. Scott Suhr, Company A, 2/69 Armor, commenting on the Confederate trench system atop Cheatam Hill.

The group played out the scenario of the battle and then considered how todays army would have fought the battle. Kelly added comments of how the actual battle transpired.

"The battle at Kennesaw Mountain was the only occasion in the war when Gen. Sherman admitted that he had made a mistake. He had made a serious error in attacking," said Kelly. "He had attempted to throw his Union forces head on into a stronlgy fortified defensive position. After suffering heavy losses, he quickly concluded that his best strategy would be to engage in a campaign of flanking maneuvers. This became known as the Atlanta Campaign in which Sherman's strategy culminated in the fall of Atlanta.

"Despite obvious historical differences between the Army of today and that of the Civil War era, there will always be certian factors that will determine a battle's outcome," said Maj. Nate Pulliam, the battaion operations officer. "These factors include leadership, command and control, morale, terrain and weather, and communications."

After their terrain walk, the soldiers proceeded to the Atlanta Cyclorama gaining an insight into the battle of Atlanta.

The Cyclorama really allows you to see the sights and hear the sounds of the battlefield just as the soldiers did back then," said 2nd Lt. Andrew Hague, Company A, 2nd Bn., 69th Armor Regt..

These two sites are just a few of the many battles and skirmishes that were fought during the Atlanta campaign. Many other sites are available to conduct "Staff Rides."

Units interested in conducting their own "Staff Rides" in Georgia, should contact Georgia Department of Parks and Recreation.

Air Force weather det. helps desert operations

By Richard Brill
Special to The Bayonet

Saddam Hussein may have watched CNN to get his daily news during Operation Desert Storm, but the Army, on the other hand, had to do more than tune in to the Weather Channel to get daily weather reports that were vital to the planning of the war.

Since the Army has no weather personnel of its own, it relies on the Air Force to fulfill this mission, and during Operations Desert Shield, Desert Storm and Provide Comfort, members of Fort Benning's 10th Weather Detachment got to put their meteorological skills to the test in the Middle East.

A total of six members of the detachment deployed but they split up to provide support to different units, explained Staff Sgt. John McClellan. McClellan accompanied the 197th Infantry Brigade when it deployed in August. After four months he was transferred to the 24th Infantry Division.

"With the 197th we provided accurate weather observations 24 hours a day in support of the ground force," explained McClellan. "With the 24th we continued to provide weather forecasting and observations for the remainder of Desert Storm."

McClellan found that the rigors of desert warfare were a big change from his duties back here on Fort Benning.

"We were scared for the first couple of months. You heard stories about the enemy having chemicals and bombs that could wipe out huge areas. You didn't know what to expect. It took about three months to get psychologically developed," he said.

As a weatherman, McClellan remembers some of the unusual weather conditions he experienced while deployed, such as huge sandstorms that lasted all day, with winds up to 70 knots.

Richard Brill

Airman 1st Class William Rigsbee uses a tactical meteorlogical observation set.

"The sandstorms probably saved a lot of lives because the Iraqis couldn't use their chemicals," McClellan said, giving a good example of how battlefield weather conditions have a direct influence on tactics.

McClellan also recalled the grisly scenes of destruction he witnessed after the ground war started and the 197th pushed all the way to the Euphrates River.

"We saw burning vehicles and tanks...bodies and pieces of bodies...it was tough but I'm proud of our government. They did it right."

Airmen like McClellan, who were with the units in the field, used a variety of tactical equipment to monitor conditions. According to 1st Lt. Michael Dennis, one of three from the detachment who deployed to Turkey in support of Operation Provide Comfort, these included such devices as the Goldwing radio, which allowed weather units to communicate over distances up to 1,500 miles, the German made WRASSE, which utilizes a 3 1/2 foot satellite dish to receive satellite data, and the weatherfax, which allows the user to receive weather charts over high frequency radio broadcasts.

"While I was in Turkey, the weather charts came out of Moscow. Everybody got a big kick out of the fact that we were using Russian weather charts," Dennis humorously recalled.

In Yuksekova, Turkey, Dennis stayed in a Turkish mountain commando camp to provide support to the 2nd Battalion, 70th Special Forces while they conducted helicopter operations.

"The weather was pretty weird. We were there in the mountains getting freezing temperatures, whereas in the refugee camps, temperatures were over 90 degrees fahrenheit," Dennis explained.

His most memorable experience?

During a particularly nasty storm, the weathermen's tent was the first to blow down. During the mad scramble to replace the fallen shelter, some Green Berets with a portable video camera decided to capture the moment on film for the benefit of posterity.

CCSC needs volunteers for tutoring

By Connie Bridges
Special to The Bayonet

Tutors are especially needed now in reading, math and science at the Combined Communities of Southeast Columbus Volunteer Tutorial Program, one with a historical connection to Fort Benning.

According to Lonnie Jackson, program coordinator, a number of his students and tutors have come from post.

In fact, the Outstanding Summer School Student this year was Christopher Roberson, son of Donald Ramey, D Company, 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment.

As a reward for his efforts, Roberson was treated to a limousine ride to school his first day this fall courtesy of CCSC and VIP Limo Service.

Currently seeking a military unit sponsor, CCSC classes are held during the school year on Saturdays from 10 a.m. to noon at Eastway School, 4601 Buena Vista Road in Columbus, across from Wal-Mart.

The program was started in 1983 by Jackson as a summer school program only. It was later extended to run throughout the school year as well..

To date, about 3,000 students in grades two through eight have been served by CCSC.

Tutors include certified teachers as well as teacher aides, who range from parents to high school and college students.

Jackson said that the tutorial program was designed to give additional help outside the classroom to students requiring reinforcement in reading and math.

He said he founded CCSC because of a fervent interest in serving the community with an organization to enhance the growth of its residents through encouraging education, political action and civic responsibilities.

Jackson is presently involved also in an anti-litter and beautification project.

A military retiree, he has received numerous awards for his work with CCSC including an Association of the U.S. Army appreciation award for patriotic civilian service, the first Muscogee County School Board Golden Apple Award for outstanding service to education and an "Unsung American" from the series done on ABC-TV.

Town meeting yields need for volunteers

By Connie Bridges
Special to The Bayonet

Volunteering, a community Halloween haunted house, new health care concerns, reopening the gas station and traffic flow problems were subjects covered at the quarterly town meeting at the Custer Terrace Community Life Center

Janet Bamford, mayor for the Custer Terrace, Upatoi Terrace and Battle Park areas, introduced the guest speakers on volunteering.

Kathy Case of the Volunteer Resource Center, Mary Allen of the Army Community Services Outreach and Col. Emerson Addington of the Civil Air Patrol offered options for donating time on post.

The community will be sponsoring a Halloween haunted house at the Custer Terrace Community Life Center, Building 10-800 Oct. 26, beginning at 1 p.m. for children up to 12 years of age. Anyone interested in helping should call 687-5414.

New health care concerns voiced by Bamford included being aware of the changes in CHAMPUS and remembering to obtain a statement of non-availability at Martin Army Community Hospital before receiving non-emergency medical services.

The issue of whether to reopen the community shoppette gas station will be determined based on the results of a survey, Bamford said.

Community residents are asked to sign the survey indicating their interest and estimating how many gallons per week they would buy if the station were reopened.

Finally, the traffic flow problems in the Upatoi Terrace area will be looked into by the Community Life office and the Military Police to make sure that the institution of one-way streets is working effectively.

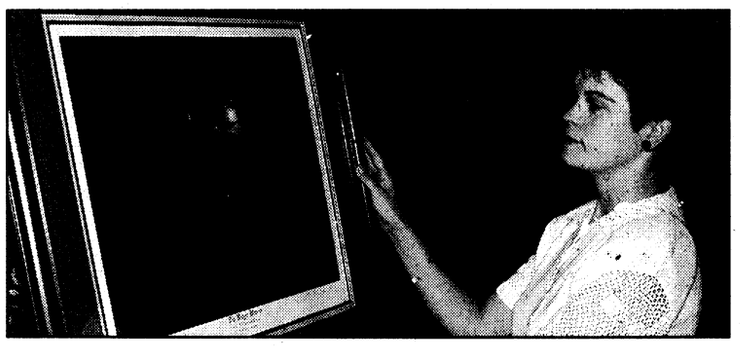
Bamford said the results of their findings will be brought forth at the December quarterly meeting.

OWC plans auction this week

By Connie Bridges
Special to The Bayonet

A mixture of military and general subjects will be featured in the lithos and prints to be auctioned off at the Officers Wives Club Art Auction and Sale Oct. 4 and 5 at the Fort Benning Officers Club.

According to Pam Bertha, coordinator for the fundraiser, Lew Iwlew of Vladimir Arts USA Inc. will auction off about 100 pieces with an additional 200 to be on display and for sale.



Kathy Henderson, OWC president, noted that nothing will be sold above the fair market price.

The pieces will include collected works by such artists as Bev Doolittle, Dale Gallon, Pat Buckley Moss, Norman Rockwell, Paco Moreno Ortega, Ben Maile, Anita Stanton, Charles Wysocki, Sanson Pollen and Jane Wooster Scott.

A print entitled "The Prayer Warrior" by William L. Maughan of Gen. T.J. "Stonewall" Jackson, has been donated to OWC for use as a door prize. At $1 each, the tickets may be purchased in advance at the OWC office or at the door of the auction and sale. The print is valued at $285.

Henderson said the art sale and exhibition will be held today from 5 to 9 p.m. in the Benning and Corrigidor Rooms.

The auction preview with wine and cheese will be from 7 to 8 p.m. Saturday in the Regimental Room with the auction to follow.

Hispanic sets life's goals

By Connie Bridges
Special to The Bayonet

Hispanic roots run deep for Spc. Daniel Gomez, whose distant uncle on his mother's side, Juan Seguin, was the mayor of San Antonio, Texas, during the Battle of the Alamo.

Gomez

Gomez has similar steadfast goals for himself. "My heritage makes me want to work harder to get my rank to prove to other hispanics that you can make it if you don't give up. Go above the standards, and don't be ashamed of who you are."

The youngest of five children, Gomez is with Company D, 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, teaching new recruits squad tactical training.

His parents still live in San Antonio and have been married 48 years. He sees them whenever he gets a chance.

That hasn't been often since he went active duty for the Army in 1989. Gomez's first two-year assignment was with the 56th Command in Neu Uhm, Germany.

He had a "break" from December, 1990, to April, 1991, when he was deployed to Saudi Arabia to serve in Operations Desert Shield and Desert Storm.

Then it was back to Germany until July when he did take some leave back home. In August he reported to Fort Benning.

Gomez has 18 months left until his Expiration of Term of Service (ETS), and then he will have to make a decision about re-enlisting.

In the meantime, October will find him beginning classes at Troy State working on an associate degree in criminal justice -- another goal.

Although single, Gomez said his future plans include keeping the Spanish language and hispanic customs alive in his household.

As a child, he spoke only Spanish, even at school, until he was in the third grade.

Then and now, in the summers he visits the Gomez family members in Mexico and learns about where his dad was born and raised.

Kelley Hill hosts Comedy Cow

By Tom Wilkinson
3rd Brigade, 24th Infantry Public Affairs

There's something funny going on at the Kelley Hill Recreation Center. Illegal gambling? No, it's called the Comedy Cow, an amateur comedian night held recently

The next Comedy Cow will be at the center Saturday.

"It's an absurd name," said 1st Lt. Nabile Hage, of Company C, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, originator of the event. "It makes it sound like something really silly is going on — and besides, I think cows are funny."

Hage, who is the master of ceremonies, started out doing amateur comedy shows in Atlanta and said that soldiers need entertainment like this.

With performers like the Jester, the Mole, Grampa Jones and Back Allie, it's got to be funny, right?

"You, the audience, make the show," said Hage. "If you like the act, clap. If you don't, give them at least two minutes, then take out your car keys, jingle them and say 'Moo!'"

Some of the five contestants got "mooed" off the stage, while others received howls of laughter.

"This program is great," said Pfc. Alyanna Summers, alias Back Allie, from the Fort Benning Public Affairs Office. "Soldiers need to take advantage of this. It doesn't hurt to get a 'moo.'"

"I'm good at aggravating people," said Spc. Mikel Herzog, alias the Mole, with Co. B, 2nd Bn., 18th Inf.. "People are always telling me I should be a comedian. I love this kind of thing, and I wish they did it more often. The recreation center has a lot to offer — soldiers should come and check it out."

USAIC Chaplain's Office

Many parents are sincere in trying to raise children in the "right way."

But it is difficult since many are unsure and have not received a nurturing, uplifting and self-esteem-building education.

A driver's license is required to drive a car. Many years of education is neccessary to acquire a profession. However, neither a license nor special schooling is required to raise children.

Parenting equals many worries and problems, which are not easy to overcome.

Many spouses and parents in the military face raising children alone without the help of grandparents

But there are agencies available to lend a helping hand.

Parenting classes are offered at the Chaplain's Family Life Center.

Chaplain (Maj.) Richard Roggia, chief, Chaplain's Family Life Center, recognizes the need for parenting classes, especially in the transient, stessful military communities.

Improving relationship between parents and children will be the focus of a workshop running Oct. 22 through Dec. 3.

The workshop will be based on "The Art of Sensitive Parenting."

The discussion group will provide an opportunity to share experiences, meet new people, and have an enjoyable time.

Church members assemble as one for World Communion Sunday

By G.K. Sexton

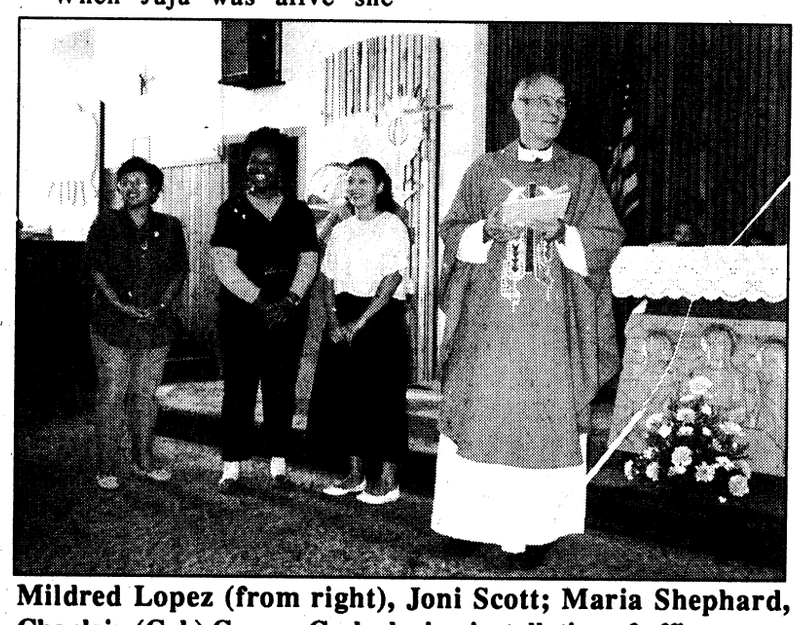
Booby-trapped biscuits lay amongst the pork chops, okra, squash, and butterbeans. It was my Grandmother Juju's favorite practical joke. Unsuspecting chow hounds would take their prebuttered biscults and chomp down only to discover that they needed the jaws of a James Bond villain to get any bread to chew. Juju had hand-formed the dough and laced the biscuits with thin strips of rag. This gag fest provided all the fun and joy of a summer-camp short-sheeting. It became our Aprii Fool's Day family tradition at supper time.

When Juju was alive she presided over our meals as the matriarch of the family. Jerry Clower's Southern-style suppers had nothing on ours when it came to a deep sense of fun and fellowship. At supper we tended to let our guards down and laugh and tell the current events of our busy day at work, school, and home. It was the best time of the day to feel like a family. That's not to say that we didn't have difficult times. But those aren't the things remembered by my brothers and mom.



Some of the best meals included a Depression Days story from Dad or Mom. It was our way of being plugged into the family legends and heritage. It seems that Dad's trek through the snow to school got a little longer with each telling. We listened as Juju would tell of our grandfather, Daddy Jap, whom we never knew. But it seemed as if he was right there at the meal as he lived on in the hearts of my mother and grandmother.

Reflections Reflections

Those meals were also times of healing differences of opinion about everything from hippy haircuts to the Vietnam War. Most of the time everyone had his say. In the adolescent phase of our family we discovered that the distractions of the teen-ager's world impoverished our meal times. Now it falls to our family to make the most of our suppers together knowing that one day each of our four children will take away the memories of our family at its best or worst.

As Christ's body, the Church assembles this Sunday on World Communion Sunday it will gather as one family under his grace. We will pull up to the family table in celebration of the meal which he gave to the Church. We, as Christians will have differing opinions about what it means. But one thing will be true, the spirit of Christ will preside over the meal and invite us to come to enjoy the rich heritage and family name which he has given us in our salvation.

Those who are absent will be sorely missed. We will remember the saints who have gone in death to be part of that "great cloud of witnesses". We will hear again the always fresh Good News of a Savior who trekked the way of the Cross to give eternal life to his own. We will draw strength and encouragement from our fellowship with Jesus and one another for the challenges and trials of our spiritual pilgrimages. We will experience a part of our greater family until our final family reunion and meal at the marriage supper of the lamb. We will have answered, albeit imperfectly, Jesus' prayer: "Father, may they be brought to complete unity to let the world know that you sent me and have loved them even as you have loved me."

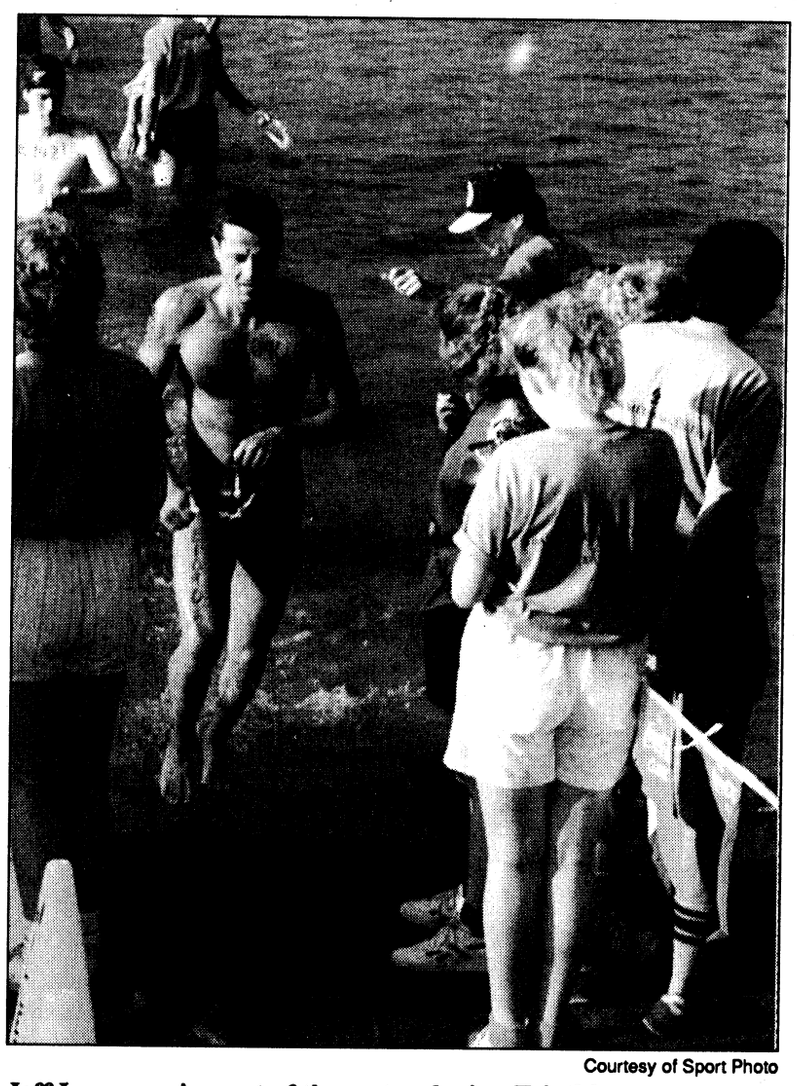
Lang to compete in Ironman Triathlon

By Terry K. Ray
Special to The Bayonet

When Jeff Lang was 12 years old and in the Boy Scouts, he would run to get in shape for the long marches to campouts and hikes. Now he has earned a spot on the Army team that will participate in the Gatorade Ironman Triathlon World Championship Oct. 19, on the Big Island of Hawaii.

The Gatorade Ironman Triathlon, possibly the toughest triathlon in the world consist of three phases, a 2.4 mile ocean swim, a 112-mile bike race,and a 26.2 mile run, all of this having to be completed within 17 hours. More than 1,300 triathletes are expected to compete in this year's race.



Jeff Lang, now a captain and instructor at the United States Army Infantry School, started training for triathlons in 1987, when he was stationed at Fort Sam Houston, in San Antonio, Texas.

"I started running mainly short courses and qualified in my first year to go to the National Championship Short Course at Hilton Head, S.C. and things just progressed from there," Lang said. It not only progressed, Lang got better qualifying for the National Championships twice and placing first in the Fort Leavenworth, Kansas Triathlon in 1988.

In 1989 Lang qualified for the Army team, but as he said,"I also got orders for Panama so that shot that and sort of ended my career." He was in Panama for 15 months, and when Lang returned to the states, last July, he started training and competing all over again. This spring he has been traveling to Illinois, Texas, and the Florida coast to try to qualify. "When the lady called and informed me that I had made the Army team, I was overwhelmed everyone on the floor where I work heard me and knew I had made the team." said Lang. "After four years of sacrifice and hard work working towards this goal had finally paid off."

Langs' six-day-a-week training regimen is probably the reason why he has come this far. At 5 a.m. he lifts weights three times a week, swims on an average of 8 to 12 miles, bikes between 300 and 350 miles and runs 40 to 50 miles in those six days. Lang says,"I would probably run more for an ordinary triathlon, but running is what I do best and I don't want to injure myself so I've cut down."

During all this intense training Langs' diet has gone haywire he says," I eat constantly fruits, bagels, power bars anything that's supposed to be good for me I eat. My co-workers have given me a nickname of "Captain Munch" because of all the food I consume at work."

Lang's training here in Columbus and Fort Benning should help him when he reaches Hawaii, because of the heat and humidity here it ranks right up there with the bike and running course on the Big Island. The lava beds and black sand absorb the heat and drain the energy out of a runner.

Lang thinks that with being able to get fluids into his system every four or five miles he will be able to maintain an even keel and make a good show of himself.

Lang would like to thank his chain of command for the support they have given him during his training, along with Capt. Doug Berling, his running partner, and Mike for helping with the maintenance on his bike.

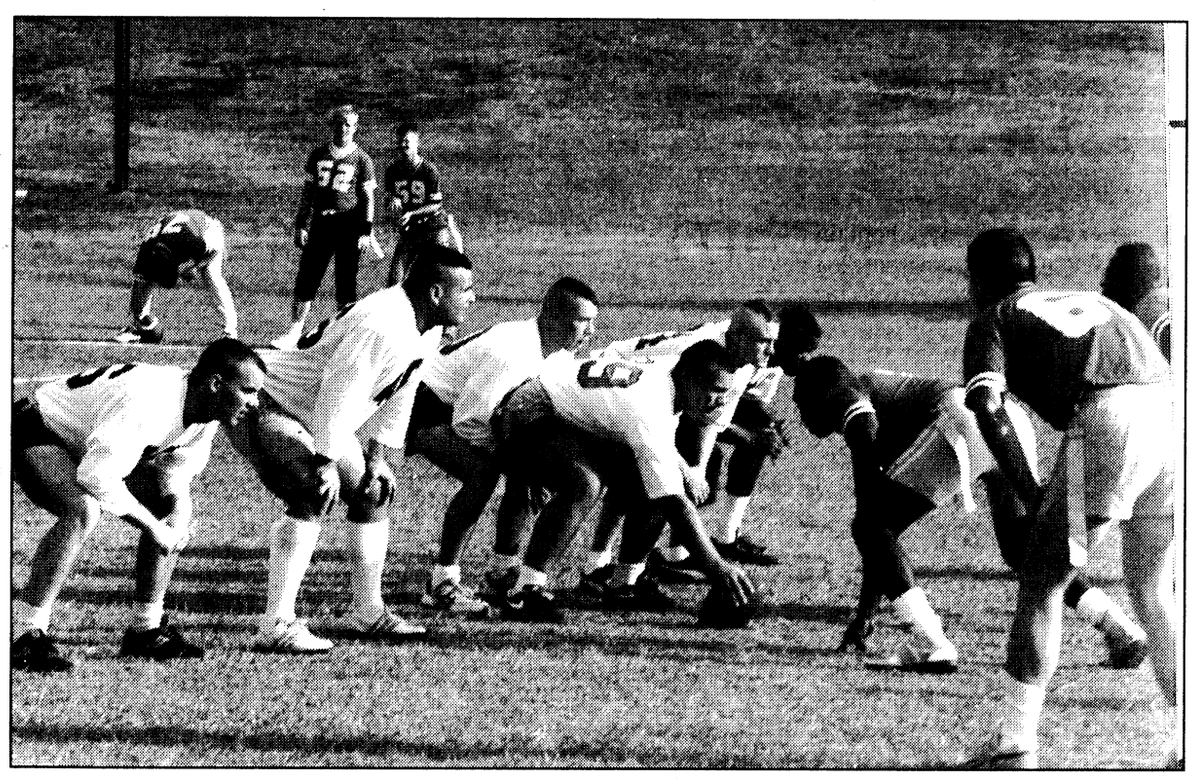
Tribe squeaks by Legion of Doom

By Terry K. Ray
Special to The Bayonet

The 4th Ranger Training Brigade "The Tribe" took On The 75th Ranger Regiment "Legion of Doom" Monday evening at Roberts Field and won a nail biter 7 to 6.

It looked as if Legion of Doom was going to roll on The Tribe from the first set of downs. On Legion of Doom's fourth play of the game quarterback Mario Contreras hit wide receiver Richard Phillips streaking down the sideline for the first score of the game. Legion of Doom missed on the extra point try on a run up the middle by running back DeMarco Wharton. Legion of Doom 6, The Tribe 0.

The Tribe on their first possession could not move the ball on Legion of Doom's defense and gave the ball up after four downs. Legion of Doom tried for the quick strike again but pressure up the middle caused Contreras to hurry his pass down the right sideline, and it was picked off by linebacker Chad Boekner.



On their second possession of the half The Tribe offense moved the ball down to the goal line. Two pass plays from quarterback Tyroan Bresett put The Tribe in scoring position, but on a fourth down keeper Bresett was stuffed at the goal line by the Doom defense, and the ball changed hands on downs.

The Doom offense was able to the ball out of the shadow of their end zone but that was all. A sack on the quarterback Contreras and a third down loss of yardage by running back Mark Renniger caused the Legion of Doom to punt the ball away on fourth down.

The Tribe got the ball back but couldn't get a play off before time ran out in the first half with Legion of Doom ahead 6-0.

The Tribe received the ball to star the second half, but after three plays had to punt from deep in their own territory.

On the Legion of Doom's first possession of the half they couldn't decide which direction to go first.

Terry K. Ray Special to the Bayonet

75th Ranger offense prepares for snap.

The Tribe defense helped with two offside penalties, then two penalties on the offense moved the Legion of Doom back to where they started the half. The Doom offense Converted a third down run by Contreras into a first down with a penalty on the defense helping out.

Two runs for no gain and two offensive penalties moved the Doom offense further from the goal line and on fourth down a pass from Contreras sailed out of the end zone and The Tribe took over on downs.

The Tribe offense pulled themselves together on their last possession of the game. New quarterback Elvis Frink on first down pitched to running back Michael Frey off the left side for a Tribe first down. Two plays later Frink drilled wide receiver Eddie Huey for another first down.

Frink started a sweep to the left cut inside and gained enough ground for The Tribes third first down on this drive. On a second down pass play Frink was flushed from the pocket, moved to his right and found running back Jerry Meharg in the corner of the end zone for a touchdown. With time slipping away The Tribe had tied the game 6 to 6.

Needing the extra point to take the lead The Tribe hurt themselves with two consecutive illegal motion penalties, nullifying an extra point score. The Legion of Doom gave the ground right back with a defensive holding penalty.

On The tribes next try for the extra point, Frink rolled right and slipped into the end zone and The Tribe had the lead for good 7 to 6.

The Legion of Doom offense had one last shot to win the game, but on fourth down and long the pass over the middle from Contreras fell at the feet of tight end Terek Ali for the final play of the game. The Tribe had held on for a 7 to 6 win.

"Serving Those Who Serve"

ASK THE JUDGE

By Rick Parker
Legal Assistance Division

Q: I am in the process of renting an apartment. The landlord told me that he wants a security deposit. He tells me that I will get the deposit back when I move out. What is a security deposit and how does it work?

A: We get many questions in the Legal Assistance Division about security deposits, particularly from people who have moved out of the apartment or house they had rented and who have had a portion or all of the deposit withheld. Most of these problems could be avoided by an understanding of how the security deposit is supposed to be used.

A security deposit is a sum of money that you give a landlord at the beginning of a lease to ensure that you comply with the lease terms and to cover damages which may occur to the apartment. It is not an advance payment of rental, nor is it a sum of money paid to the landlord to hold the apartment open for you.

First, you must understand your obligation to protect the apartment or house from damage. When you rent a residence, you are promising the landlord that you will use it for residential purposes, and that you will take reasonable care in using the property. Most leases contain provisions which state that you agree to return the house or apartment to the landlord in the same condition you found it when you rented it, except for normal wear and tear.

No one expects a tenant to use a residence for an extended period of time without some wear to the carpet, paint and the like. However, while it would be normal, for example, to find worn areas in the carpet, the landlord does not expect to find holes or stains in the carpet. It is the possibility of excess damage which leads landlords to require a security deposit.

Ordinarily, if after you move out there are excess damages, the landlord will deduct the expense of repairs from the deposit and refund the remaining portion of the deposit to you. If there are no excess damages, the landlord should return the entire deposit.

The problem most often seen is a dispute concerning the damages. More often than not, these disputes will not occur if you, the tenant, take the time at the beginning of the lease to inspect the apartment or house carefully, and make full note of its condition. Georgia law sets out a procedure which every tenant ought to take advantage. The procedure is as follows:

• At the beginning of the lease, you and the landlord conduct an inspection of the apartment, during which you make note of any damages or deficiencies in the premises.

More often than not, the landlord simply hands you an inspection sheet, lets you go through the apartment, and you return the sheet to him with remarks about its condition. No security deposit should be given to the landlord until this inspection is completed.

• At the end of the lease, within three days after you vacate, the landlord is supposed to inspect the premises for damages, and then, give you an opportunity to inspect within five days after you vacate so that you can ascertain the accuracy of his final inspection.

• Within one month after you vacate, the landlord is to refund the security deposit, less any charges for damages. If there are such charges, the landlord must provide you with a written statement listing the specific damages for which he is making a charge.

Of course, the point behind having an inspection at the beginning and at the end of the lease is so that there is a means of comparing the condition of the premises and thus, ascertaining the damages.

The first inspection should be done before you give the landlord a security deposit, and if possible, before you actually sign the lease. You should make note of each and every item of existing damage in the apartment, down to the location of individual carpet stains and nail holes in the walls.

You should take the time to go through the apartment carefully. This is to protect you from being charged for damages which might have existed before you rented the apartment.

You should keep a copy of the initial inspection sheet. You should insist on the final inspection as soon as possible after you vacate, and if possible, try to arrange to conduct a joint final inspection with the landlord, as you may be able to negotiate possible areas of dispute on the spot.

The Legal Assistance Division is available to assist with problems in this area. For an appointment to see an attorney, call 545-3281.

ENERGY WATCH

By Jennie L. McRae
Energy Branch

According to "The Energy Report," published by Pasha Publications Inc., national energy legislation gets off the ground as the House energy and power subcommittee adopts efficiency provisions covering appliances, least-cost planning for utilities, incentives for renewables and buildings — federal and commercial — among other issues.

The Subcommittee Chairman, Rep. Phil Sharp, a democrat from Indiana, said they tried to overcome the major criticism of Senate and administration energy policy bills last week by unanimously backing tougher efficiency and conservation measures.

The National Energy Strategy unveiled in February would reduce energy demand by 7.5 quadrillion BTU's in the year 2010, according to James Watkins, energy secretary.

The provisions adopted by the subcommittee recently directed states to update energy business codes within four years and directs the Department of Energy to set up a uniform, voluntary home energy rating system.

Similarly, the federal government would be required to improve its own energy efficiency. All federal agencies, under the proposal, would have to implement efficiency improvements that would pay for themselves in energy savings within 10 years. As an incentive for cutting back on energy consumption, agencies could keep some of the savings and apply those to inter-agency projects such as child care or recreational facilities.

Next, the energy subcommittee wants to require all state public utility commissions to use least-cost planning and demand-side management for utility rate making. Many states already are doing this but they want to get the others up to speed.

Some of the largest energy savings would come from the equipment efficiency standards portion of the legislation.

It sets minimum standards for electric motors, light bulbs, showerheads and air conditioners. Rep. Ed Markey, a democrat from Massachusetts, who pushed for these provisions, said they'll save a half million barrels a day of oil or the output of 35 of the nation's largest power plants.

The legislation is projected to save consumers and the economy $50 billion in energy costs over 20 years.

'Fly'

'Miami Vice,' and it isn't MTV. If there is no longer an audience for that kind of television show, or any kind of movie or book or play, that's unfortunate. It's really distressing, the assumption that an audience cannot respond to a show that doesn't have either a laugh a minute or a killing a minute." Brand's partner Falsey adds, "Our feeling is that it's a very thoughtful and reflective piece, and NBC is aware of that. It's a quiet show, but with very, very strong drama to it ... small like an atom, but very powerful."

Given their work on CBS' often-whimsical "Northern Exposure," as well as on the Emmy-winning "A Year in the Life" and "St. Elsewhere," "I'll Fly Away" marks a stylistic departure for Brand and Falsey. "We both grew up in the '50s and '60s," Brand explains, "but very early on, we decided that we weren't going to try to create a period piece. We weren't interested in re-creating the history of the civil-rights movement."

New NBC series set to 'Fly'

By JAY BOBBIN
Tribune Media Services

After this week, there should be little doubt of what NBC considers its "prestige" project of the new season.

If anything looks like that network's sure-fire bid for Emmy Awards next year, the gentle, "To Kill a Mockingbird"-like drama series "I'll Fly Away" is it. From "Northern Exposure" producers John Falsey and Joshua Brand, the program begins with a two-hour premiere Monday, then settles into its regular hourlong time slot Tuesday. Sam ("The Killing Fields") Waterston stars as a late-1950s Southern lawyer trying to raise his children (played by John Aaron Bennett, Ashlee Levitch and Jeremy London) with the help of the family's black housekeeper (Regina Taylor), while both adults become embroiled in the civil-rights matters of the era. Being filmed on location in Atlanta, the program also features Kathryn ("The Bronx Zoo") Harrold as a defense attorney with a definite attraction to Waterston's character, though his wife is hospitalized for a nervous breakdown. Still, more focus is placed on the Waterston and Taylor characters, and the different stances from which they view the issues that affected the racial climate of America.

Its pace may strike many people as being much slower than that of most other TV shows, but "I'll Fly Away" was designed that way deliberately. "We felt that the kind of piece it was dictated the pace," co-producer Brand reasons, "and that it would have been arbitrary and wrong to try to create a pace that wasn't consistent with what the show is about. We're very happy with it. It isn't

Benning gets new commanding general

White takes reins of post; Cavezza reflects on tenure as chief of infantry

By Alyanna B. Summers
Bayonet staff writer

A new chief of infantry is at Fort Benning's helm.

Maj. Gen. Jerry A. White assumed command of the post in a change of command ceremony on York Field Oct. 4. White replaces Maj. Gen. Carmen J. Cavezza, who will take command of I Corps and Fort Lewis, Wash., pending Senate confirmation.

Gen. Frederick M. Franks Jr., commander of the Training and Doctrine Command, was the presiding officer.

In his remarks, Franks praised Cavezza on a job well done as chief of infantry.

"You've had a challenging tenure as commanding general of our Army's Infantry Center here at Fort Benning," Franks said. "You've provided the vision, the leadership and the plain hard work that was urgently needed to support our operational units and to keep our Army moving forward into the future...Operation Desert Storm showed the world what an Army with quality soldiers and leaders, one that is trained and ready can accomplish.

"Certainly, you and your entire team of officers, non-commissioned officers, soldiers and civilians should feel proud of your role in that victory."

He also had encouraging words for White and his wife, Linda.

"Jerry and Linda, you are not strangers to the home of the infantry," Franks said. "You bring a wealth of recent operational experience as division commander to this important job and to the infantry. You have my complete trust and confidence and support."

Cavezza reflected on his time as commander here and thanked several members of the Fort Benning community for their support .

"I'd like to thank you for making Fort Benning the great place that it is, not only for the living environment, but for your part in training the world's best infantrymen," he said.

Cavezza also jokingly issued a warning to the residents of Fort Lewis. "Tie up your dogs and keep your kids out of range of the golf course. God and the U.S. Senate willing, the Cavezzas are on the way!"

White complimented Cavezza on his leadership during his tenure at Benning and expressed delight at being once again at the home of the infantry.

"In the heart of each and every infantryman is the secret desire to come back to beautiful Fort Benning and to serve with the finest soldiers in the Army," said White.

He pledged to continue to mold the infantry of the future and that soldiers and their families will continue to be top priority.

"Fort Benning exists for one purpose, and one purpose only – to serve soldiers. They truly are the bedrock of freedom and are entitiled to special love and special care," said White.

Joyce Cavezza received a bouquet of appreciation as Linda White received a bouquet of welcome.

As Cavezza prepares for his new duties as I Corps commander, he also awaits Senate confirmation of his nomination for promotion to lieutenant general.

Cavezza received the Distinguished Service Medal for outstanding achievement as post commander.

Companies from around the world will display the latest in military technology. The local delegation will receive a hands-on look at 21st century hardware. A special exhibit of captured Iraqi weaponry will also be featured.

The local delegation will include the new Post Commander Maj. Gen. Jerry A. White, Chapter President Bob Poydasheff, other chapter officers, and soldiers representing all the major subordinate commands from post.

The soldiers attending from Fort Benning were selected to be representatives by their commanders for being most supportive of the local chapter and Fort Benning. Fort Benning's representatives will include the Soldier of the Year Spc. George Leard, Drill Sergeant of the Year Staff Sgt. Thomas Vajentic and Non-Commissioned Officer of the Year Cpl. This year's theme for the annual meeting, "Total Army, Total Victory" focuses on the spirit of celebration sweeping the nation after our victory in Southwest Asia and especially on the role of the Total Army. There will be two presentations on Desert Shield and Desert Storm. Forces Command will give a presentation that encompasses mobilization to warfighting. And Army Material Command will give a presentation on the logistical efforts that made victory possible.

317th advance party arrives

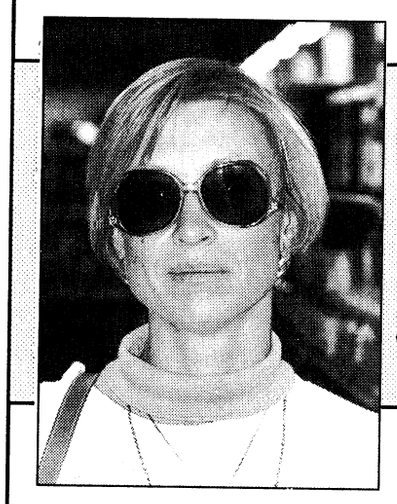
By Tom Wilkinson
3rd Brigade, 24th Infantry Division

An advance party of 47 soldiers from the 317th Engineer Battalion arrived late Tuesday to the 3rd Brigade, 24th Infantry Division on Kelley Hill.

The unit attended a welcome ceremony at Soldiers' Plaza Wednesday at 8:30 a.m. Col. John D. Fuller, post chief of staff, officially welcomed the soldiers to Fort Benning.

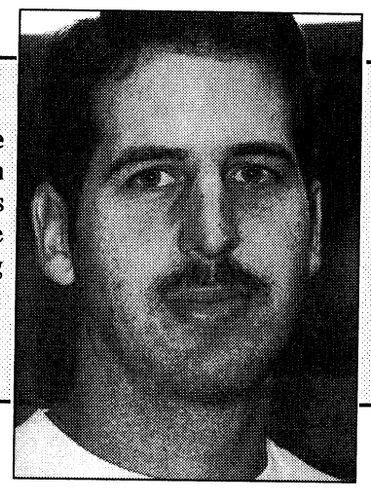
The unit, which is currently in Eschborn, Germany, near Frankfurt, is being realigned to Fort Benning under the scheduled drawdown as part of the U.S. Army Europe force reductions.

Under this plan, 57 units are being transferred to installations in the United States to enhance continental United States base contingency capabilities, according to a news release from Forces Command.



The advance party of the battalion will begin establishing its areas in preparation for the main body, which will begin arriving on Oct. 29 and will continue through November and December.

The battalion will consist of a Headquarters and Headquarters Company, Company A and Company B. Companies C and D will be assigned to Fort Stewart's 24th Infantry Division.



The battalion will be assigned to the brigade and will consist of approximately 450 soldiers and their families.

COMMENTARY

The word was on the street.

The president was P.O.'ed at Saddam. He'd ordered (according to press reports) fighter aircraft to Saudi Arabia to protect helicopters ferrying U.N. observers about the countryside. These observers were looking for violations of U.N. accords forbidding Iraq to build weapons of mass destruction — nukes.

Here in the Public Affairs Office, calls flooded in. First, the media called, asking if our soldiers were on alert.

The guys and gals in the back shop told the media members that we didn't comment about stuff like that. Why give your secrets away — even if you don't have any?

While they were busy doing that, I got a call from a wife or mother. She wanted to know if her soldier was on alert.

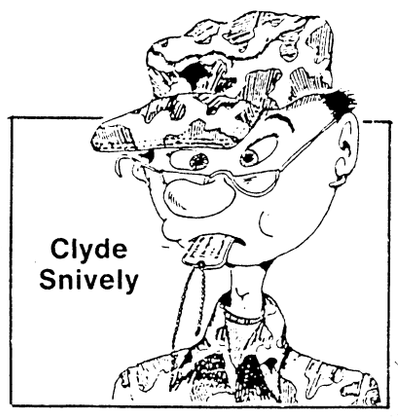
Having listened intently as the public information pros went about their business answering questions, I figured I'd try my hand at it.

"Can't discuss stuff like that. Someone might be listening in," I said with as much pomp as I could muster.

"Well, is there a chance that they could get called up, say in the next 18 months?"

"Ma'am, 18 months is past my ETS (expiration term of service) date. A lot could happen in 18 months. We could be involved in three wars or none in that time. Heck, the world could come to an end."

"Well, what about the next six months?" she persisted.



"Same answer, ma'am. Six months is an eternity to someone with not enough time to lace his boots all the way to the top."

"So you think we might be called up then?"

"I think you're missing a couple of points here," I said. "First, I ain't tellin' ya one way or the other if your guys and gals are on alert. Second, when your man joined up, was he thinking, 'Hey, I need a job. The Army looks like a good place to start,' and let it go at that?

"What do you think he thought the words in the enlistment oath, 'defend and protect,' meant? What do you think they mean?

"No one likes to go to war, but that's what we all signed up to do, should negotations fail. Even four-eyed, pencil-pushing geeks like me can get sent somewhere that's got bullets flying through the air.

"I ain't crazy about the idea of having my tail shot at, but the reality is, college money aside, learning a trade notwithstanding, we all got one basic reason for being here — defend and protect the good ol' U.S. of A."

"Yeah, but my man's already been to Southwest Asia," she said.

You're right. I forgot. Our enlistment contracts guarantee us just one tour in a hot spot. We learned our lesson.

No more three years of combat like in World War II, or two years like in Korea or multiple one-year tours like in Vietnam. This is a civilized Army. Get called up once, and you're through for the duration, is what I wanted to say.

I know of veterans from Grenada, Just Cause and Desert Storm would be glad to hear that.

Instead, I just said, "I'm sorry, ma' am, but I just can't comment on anything involving troop movements."

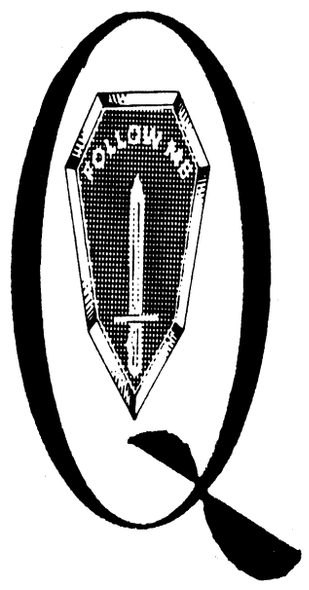
All that took place several weeks ago, but I thought about it again as I watched the television movie, "Heroes of Desert Storm."

I thought of it as I saw families being split as the soldier spouse went off to do his or her duty. I thought of it as I saw the woman reservist tell her fiance and parents that she didn't want to go, that she only thought of the reserves as a good part-time job and a way to meet interesting people.

But now that she was being called up, just months away from her ETS date, she knew her duty and she was going to do it.

Unfortunately, there was no happy ending to her story, just as there wasn't to a couple hundred others.

But all of us wearing the Army green or the blue of the Marines, Air Force, Navy and Coast Guard know we're here for one reason — to defend — and if defending means going to combat, then that's where we go.



CG gives his game plan for post's future

Saturday was a great day! It was my first full day as commander of Fort Benning, home of the Infantry, and one of our Army's greatest installations.

I accept this command fully aware of Fort Benning's glorious past and traditions, unique responsibilities, dedicated civilian work force, and unparalleled good community relations with its tri-city partners, Columbus and Phenix City. I pledge to continue our good work. My objective here is to focus on our future together, especially our challenges and opportunities.

We are all generally aware of Fort Bennning's missions. Changing command doesn't change those things, and we will continue to do them and improve them. The uppermost question is probably, "How will we proceed?" As I told my subordinate commanders Friday afternoon, my priorities for proceeding are soldiers, quality, and discipline.

Soldiers are the heart of the Army. Soldiers are the reason for Fort Benning. When we are taking care of soldiers, we are taking care of business – period. This will be our general measure of success.

Quality is the nature of our work if we are taking care of soldiers. Quality is a moving target. Achieving a standard and continually improving on it is what I call success. This is taking care of soldiers.

Discipline is the glue that binds soldiers and quality. Discipline is knowing the right thing to do and doing it — the first time, on time, every time. Discipline is an attitude expressed in behavior that is self-motivated. True discipline is not parcelled out for eight hours, or duty hours, it is a way of life that characterizes the warrior and the patriot. Building discipline is taking care of soldiers.

Now about challenges and opportunities. There is a lot of justified anxiety about the Army's build-down, changing missions, reorganizations, and the pace of change in general. My view is that in a period of transition there are great opportunities. If things have to change, let's work together to make them change for the better. The way things have always been, is not necessarily the way they should be. It's just that we have gotten used to the old ways. If we are bold, we can seize this opportunity to make things better.

My feelings on the last point are so strong, that on Monday, my first duty day, I reviewed and approved the continuance of the standing Fort Benning Quality Policy. Focusing on quality improvement is how we will take care of soldiers and make things better, even as we face unprecedented change. Beyond that, my faith and trust in the future of an improved Fort Benning lies with the soldiers and civilians who train and work here. Because of this faith and trust, I have published a Quality Bill of Rights empowering the Infantry Center team to "get on" with the quality improvement process.

I want my vision, goal and objective for Fort Benning to be clear and up front so we can work together to achieve success.

Vision
First in training.
First in readiness.
First in quality of life.

Goal
To be acknowledged as the best Army installation.

Objective
To win the President's Quality Award by 1995.

Our priorities are soldiers, quality, discipline. Follow Me!

CG urges use of safety, caution for post residents over weekend

Columbus Day, Monday, will provide a three-day weekend. This signals a special need to alert all personnel to the ever-present, real threat of traffic accidents.

Our most effective weapon against traffic accidents is our continual concern for the safety of all Fort Benning personnel. Pre-holiday orientations by leaders on personnel safety should stress these positive actions: viewing vehicle operation as a hazardous activity, insisting that all occupants wear seat belts, concentrating on alert and sober driving, traveling slower when weather impairs driving, observing all traffic laws, including the posted speed limit, reviewing travel itinerary to avoid driver fatigue, yielding to the less proficient driver.

Have an enjoyable, relaxing holiday and a safe return.

Maj. Gen. Jerry A. White
Fort Benning commander

LETTER

Driver asks for courtesy from others

This really isn't a gripe letter, even though it may sound like one.

But, you know the ole saying, "I'm proud to be an American," the American way, American this, American that ... etc. Well, why don't those proud Americans show a little courtesy when driving here on Fort Benning?

Every single work day I get a bigger taste of ignorance. I work in Soldiers' Plaza and happen to be one of those people who need to go left onto Dixie Road toward Lumpkin Road and not right toward the Bypass like almost everyone else who works on Fort Benning.

How long would it take for someone to slow up a little bit, blink their lights, wave, or just yell and let me into the center lane so I can merge into the traffic and be on my way home?

I really don't feel like this is a big request. I mean, all you people out there, put yourselves in my shoes. Wouldn't you want someone to show courtesy and let you out? I think so!!

Now, don't get me wrong. I do manage to get home every day. I get home because somewhere between 20 and 30 cars later, I start getting this pitiful, desperate look on my face (after having already thrown up my hands in disbelief a hundred times over) and someone out there will—guess what—let me out! Hooray!

Anyway, my message to you is, be nice and think about letting that someone out!

British visit Benning

By Richard Brill
Special to The Bayonet

Nineteen members of the United Kingdom's military, including three British general officers, arrived on Fort Benning Sunday for the United Kingdom/U.S. Army Staff and Training Talks, held this week in Infantry Hall, building 4.

According to Capt. Duncan Lang, United Kingdom program manager, the yearly conference gives Britain and the United States the opportunity to work closely together to improve the coalition capabilities of both armies.

Duncan cited the recent Persian Gulf War as an example of how the staff talks, which have been held since 1978, have been successful.

"Desert Storm is a good example of why the talks are important. The 1st United Kingdom Armored Division was part of the U.S. Army's VII Corps during the operation. The staff talks made that possible because they identified areas where the two armies could become interoperable," explained Lang.

This year's talks included a variety of briefings by both U.S. and U.K. personnel, including discussions of topics related to tactics, training and organization.

The delegates also got to see demonstrations by Fort Benning soldiers, such as the "I Am the Infantry" presentation, the "Rangers In Action" demonstration, and a capabilities excercise of various weapons systems by the 29th Infantry Regiment.

The staff and training talks conclude today with visits by the delegation to post training facilities, including the Officer Candidate School, the Advanced Non-Commissioned Officer Course, Collins Training Center, and the basic training facilities on Sand Hill.

Employees get awards

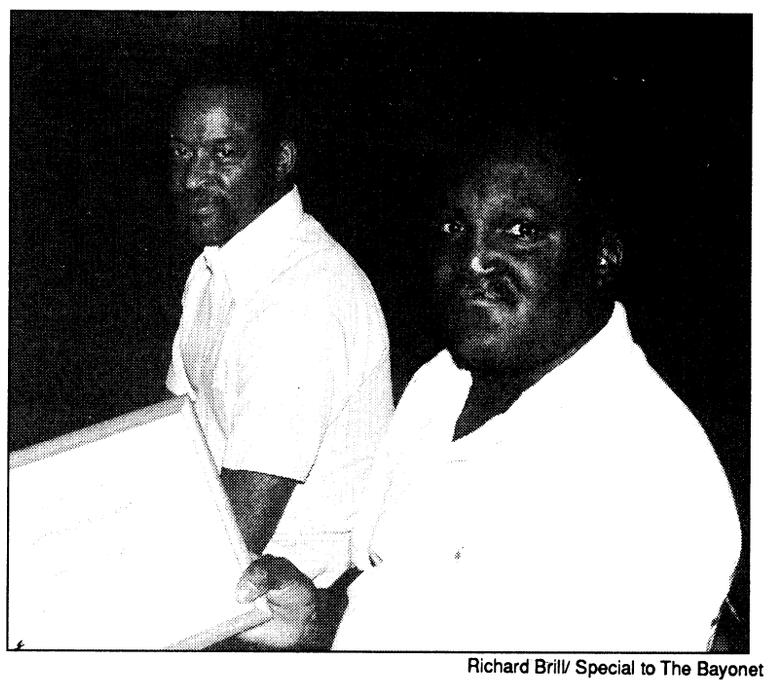
Fort Benning employees were among those awarded at the Columbus Mayor's Awards Banquet for Persons with Disabilities Oct. 4 at the Columbus Iron Works Trade and Convention Center.

Tyrone Hardy, a file clerk for the Military Pay Branch Control Section, was chosen as Disabled Employee of the Year by the Mayor's Committee for Persons with Disabilities. Hardy was previously the Fort Benning Handicapped Employee of the Year for 1981.

Runners up Terri Bass and Isaiah Allen, post employees with the Directorate of Logistics, received certificates of achievement.

An award of special appreciation naming Fort Benning as the area's largest employer of disabled persons was accepted by Peggy Hawkins, chief of Recruitment and Placement Division. According to Mildred Watts, post handicapped program manager, some 370 disabled persons are employed on post.

Keynote speaker Maj. Mike Russell praised persons with disabilities for the progress he says they have made in the workplace.



"Many employers have found that they have workers of high caliber when they hire disabled workers. The nation can ill afford to neglect such a vast resource pool as the disabled," he said.

"On a daily basis they face obstacles that others would dread and view as insurmountable, yet they look on such problems as challenges," added Russell.

Post gets fitness school

USAIC Public Affairs Office

The U.S. Army Training and Doctrine Command is moving the Army's Physical Fitness School to Fort Benning, from Fort Benjamin Harrison, Ind. The new organization will be co-located with the Army's Infantry Center and School and its premier leadership schools, Ranger and Airborne.

The resident Master Fitness Trainer Course will be discontinued after this month; however, the course and training assistance to the Army continues to be offered on a mobile training basis, and will be funded by the requesting unit. The school will continue to serve as proponent for fitness doctrine and standards across the Army.

Previously, completion of the MFT course qualified senior non-commissioned officers and officers as training managers who were assigned to battalion commanders to serve as advisors on their unit fitness programs.

Under the new concept, TRADOC's professional development courses from the Platoon Leader Development Course through the Advanced Non-commissioned Officer Course and the Officer Basic and Advanced Courses will integrate a program of instruction on fitness designed to develop the Army's NCO and officer leadership as fitness planners and trainers in their units.

The decision to change the focus of the program of instruction to unit level emphasis, and discontinue the resident MFT Course, allows TRADOC to fund the program with existing resources and continue to maintain a strong emphasis on physical fitness.

The school is scheduled to move to Fort Benning between May 1 and June 30. Its new program of instruction and staffing of 15 officers and NCOs should be fully operational July 1.

Newly-renovated shoppette opens Oct. 25

By James C. Rupp
Bayonet staff writer

The opening of the renovated Main Post shoppette across the street from Burger King is slated for Oct. 25, according to Army and Air Force Exchange Service officials here.

"We have prepard a top-rate facility," Wheeler said. "The store is bigger in size, there is more merchandise available and I think the overall quality of our service has improved."

Wheeler cited a few examples of the "top-rate" improvements. Sporting goods and video rentals are available in the store, as well as a snack bar and an automotive center have been added to the shoppette, Wheeler said.

In addition to these changes, the shoppette will be trying something new— being open 24 hours.

"The shoppette will initially run 24 hours a day, seven days a week," Wheeler. explained. "We have had a lot of requests for this and we're going to give it a shot."

The shoppette will open with a degree of hoopla, Wheeler said. To clebrate the opening, AAFES will be sponsoring a tent sale and car show for the weekend in the parking lot at the Main Post theater parking lot, adjacent to Burger King.

Control board helps soldiers

By Brian C. Sutton
Bayonet staff writer

The Armed Forces Disciplinary Control Board is a good way to file grievances against businesses that treat soldiers unfairly, according to an AFDCB official.

An example of the type of problem the board would handle is if a soldier has a problem with a car and takes it to a dealer or repair shop and is charged an unreasonable rate or the car still doesn't work. If the soldier has tried in good faith to personally settle the dispute, the soldier has a valid reason to file a grievance with the AFDCB

To file a grievance, write a letter to the board explaining the circumstances surrounding your situation and the actions that have already been taken to settle. Also, write a letter of complaint to the Better Business Bureau explaining the situation to them.

The board's primary legal function is to decide whether or not service members should be prohibited from doing business at these establishments. A list is published by the board periodically showing the businesses that are off-limits, according to officials.

Commissary comes under new control

By Connie Bridges
Special to The Bayonet

Cutting the ribbon Oct. 1 to mark the celebration of the new controlling agency for the Fort Benning Commissary was Col. Gary A. Jones, director of military personnel on post.

Fort Benning's Commissary, along with more than 400 others, came under a new controlling agency called the Defense Commissary Agency according to Larry J. Bentley, local commissary officer.

Why the change in operations?

The Department of Defense is streamlining to increase efficiency after a 1989 Congressional study recommended the consolidation of all branches of the military's commissary systems.

This monumental task of merging automated systems, establishing ordering procedures and reorganizing to operate headquarters, regions and districts represents an opportunity, Bentley said.

"Improving the system through stocking a wider variety of brand-name products, adjusted hours to meet shopper demographics and better in-stock rates will be to everyone's benefit."

Bentley noted this commissary is the fifth largest in the Army and the 17th largest in the total systems of 411. Every month this store averages $4 million in sales.

Giving the invocation at the ribbon-cutting was Chaplain (Capt.) Robert D. Hester with the national anthem being played by the Kendrick High Marching Cherokees.

To kick off the Inaugural Sale, the Commissary has planned a "grandfather of all sales" for the month of October.

Bentley said "Cents-off bargains will be available for every type of shopper. There'll be savings for those who are single, unaccompanied, on a special diet, or want to purchase the family-size serving."

Shoppers can also find 30 to 60 percent savings on brand-name products. Planned are demos, giveaways, shopping sprees and door prizes.

Santa's Castle prepares for 1991 season

By Connie Bridges
Special to The Bayonet

It's only October, but volunteers at Santa's Castle have been busy preparing for Christmas 1991 for some time.

Commanders and their first sergeants were briefed at an open house on the procedure for referring needy soldiers' families to Santa's Castle for help with Christmas.

In addition to toy refurbishing, the staff also buys some new items to give away based on the amount of extra funds that are donated.

Recently the 43rd Engineer Battalion sponsored a car wash and bake sale for them, and more than $700 was raised.

Also, the Columbus Coca Cola Bottling Co. sponsored a promotion at the Commissary in which 25 cents from each case sold went to Santa's Castle. A total of $2,327.75 was raised here.

However, help is still needed. Santa's Castle is only about halfway to meeting its expected needs for 6,000 items for this holiday season. Referred families will be shopping here Dec. 2 to 15.

Located in Soldier's Plaza, the organization has grown from half of a floor in 1986 to a two-story facility today.

Founder Karen Chinen was impressed during a recent visit at the growth Santa's Castle has experienced.

Last year about 5,000 items were given out to 697 eligible needy military children.

With a new battalion arriving at Fort Benning soon, and families still recovering from Operations Desert Shield and Desert Storm, an even greater need is expected this year, according to Sharon Patton, 1991 chairwoman.

Post observes victims of violence seminars

By Connie Bridges
Special to The Bayonet

"Coping Skills for Victims of Violence" is a seminar to be hosted Wednesday and Oct. 23, 30 and Nov. 6 by the Army Family Advocacy Program and the Chaplain Family Life Center.

It will be from noon to 1:30 p.m. at the Family Life Center in Soldier's Plaza, building 2606.

Becky Welch of the Army Family Advocacy Program said that the classes are free, books will be provided, and topics will include evaluating your personal relationships, getting your partner to a counselor and principles for talking with your children.

The program is being offered in observance of October as Spouse Abuse Prevention Month.

Welch said every year more than 1 million women seek medical assistance for injuries caused by battering. Domestic violence occurs among all races and socioeconomic groups, and at least once in two-third of all marriages.

Fort Benning is not immune. She said last year a total of 554 cases of child/spouse abuse were reported on post.

"The Family Advocacy Program is a specialized program," Welch said, "designed to promote family wellness by providing prevention and educational training programs on child and spouse abuse to Army families in order for them to maintain a sound quality of life."

The mission is to educate the military community on the stresses that may lead to family dysfunction and to provide families with the skills to address these issues.

Welch added that when abusers blame their victims for provoking violence, only the violent party is responsible for abuse. How a person deals with anger is a choice. Some men wrongly choose violence.

She believes women stay in bad relationships when there's nowhere else to go, to keep the family together, financial dependency, fear for her family's safety and religious beliefs.

Welch said research indicates that an estimated 3.3 million children witness domestic violence. Regardless of whether children are physically abused, the emotional effects of witnessing domestic violence are very similar to the psychological trauma associated with being a victim of child abuse.

Shelters offer women refuge and support services.

Anyone in a situation where there is family discord should call Becky Welch at the Family Advocacy Program at 545-5516, building 2640, Soldier's Plaza, for assistance.

Red Ribbon Campaign kicks off

By Connie Bridges
Special to The Bayonet

With the theme "Neighbors Drug Free and Proud," the fourth annual Red Ribbon Campaign will be celebrated on post Oct. 19 to 27 as Boy Scouts canvas Fort Benning neighborhoods getting pledges to live drug-free lives.

According to Al Curry, education coordinator for the Alcohol and Drug Prevention and Control Program, the objective of this week is a grass roots effort to present a unified and visible commitment toward the creation of a drug-free America.

This campaign is a joint effort of ADAPCP and the National Federation of Parents for Drug Free Youth, nc.

The time line for the campaign includes the ollowing activities:

Oct. 19, 20 - Red Ribbon Religious Weekend
Oct. 21 - Red Ribbon Decoration Day
Oct. 22 - Reach Out Day
Oct. 23 - Wear Red Day/ Rally Day
Oct. 24 - Pledge Day
Oct. 25 - Red Ribbon Recognition Day
Oct. 26, 27 - Red Ribbon Sports Weekend.

Those interested in participating with red ribbons or any of the events should contact Curry at 545-4993.

Originating in 1985, the Red Ribbon Campaign began when federal agent Enrique Camarena was murdered by drug traffickers.

The red ribbon became the symbol to eliminate the demand for drugs, just as the yellow ribbon symbolized the hostages in Iran, and the green ribbon symbolized the murdered children in Atlanta.

Curry said that President and Mrs. George Bush are the honorary chairmen for the National Red Ribbon Campaign. The campaign is also endorsed by the Governor's Commission on Drug Awareness and Prevention.

No retirement plans after 55 years of government service

By Connie Bridges
Special to the Bayonet

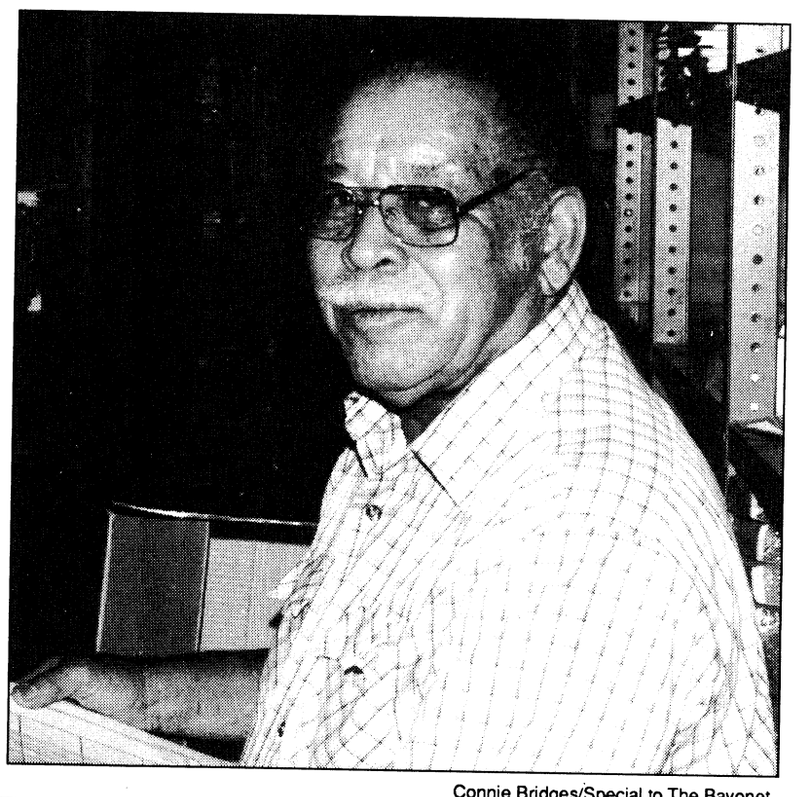
At the age of 73, many people are retired, taking trips, or sleeping late. Many things can change drastically from their early adult life.

Theodore Martin, however, still gets up at 5 a.m. every morning, and Monday through Friday works an eight-hour day job as a supply clerk at the Post Publications Office near Lawson Army Airfield.

His supervisor, Lee Lucas, said that Martin is an outstanding employee whose positive attitude causes the others to work harder.

After 20 years in the Post Publications Office, "he has a wide knowledge of the use of forms so he knows how many each unit should get, and then the office doesn't run out of stock too fast," Lucas added.

Martin assists customers at the front desk four hours per day, and spends the rest of his work time restocking shelves and ordering Training and Doctrine Command, Forces Command, and U.S. Army Infantry Center publications.



He first became an employee of the U.S. government in 1936 when he enlisted as an infantry soldier. During World War II, he was in England, France and Belgium, and later served during the Korean conflict.

In February 1941, he married Willie, his wife of 44 years. She died in January of 1985. They had no children.

When he returned to Fort Benning after World War II, Martin said the post had changed so much that he could get lost on it.

Years ago, Fort Benning was home to about 6,000 troops with more officers than enlisted because of the Infantry School. Now the number has grown substantially.

"Harmony Church used to be a 3-C (Civilian Conservation Corps) Camp, but when I came back it was barracks full of soldiers," Martin said. "And Sand Hill had been just a bunch of pine trees. It also had become barracks."

Connie Bridges/Special to The Bayonet
Theodore Martin, a 55-year government employee, is still hard at work on Fort Benning at age 73.

The area where the Post Publications Office is now used to be a large garden, and the produce went to the mess halls on post. There was a sawmill near where the jump towers are, and the lumber from it went for residential housing, a portion of the post that is now about 80 percent larger than when he first came here.

In 1958, Martin retired from the Army and began his civil service career at Fort Benning. For two years, he was part of the reserve component issuing clothing and equipment to soldiers.

Issuing ammunition became his job in 1961 when he went to work at the Ammunition Dump until they no longer had civilian employees there.

In 1965, Martin took a position at the Commissary Warehouse receiving and shipping food until the grade structure changed, and a grade six could no longer work there.

It was in 1971 that he came to the Post Publications Office, and he is not even thinking about retiring yet. Lucas said he is glad.

Martin points out, "I'm a widower, and I'm in good health. I like to work and don't care to be idle for too long. Also, I've always looked upon government service as something so favorable."

He said he stayed working at the publications office because it was educational. "I learned a lot about the publications here, and besides the people were friendly."

Martin likes to cook. He did a good deal of it when his wife would have problems with her diabetes.

Lucas said many times they have come to work to find homemade biscuits and ham waiting for them.

Martin's other hobbies include gardening and fishing, and he's active in his church, Bethel AME Church in Phenix City, where he is a steward and teaches Sunday School.

Class talks energy

Fort Benning Schools

"Choices for Children" is the focus for Energy Week, Oct. 21 to 25.

The Energy Office, with the support of the Fort Benning Schools, begins this Fall Energy Awareness campaign by going directly to the children.

Each year during Energy Week the Energy Office provides activities, materials, and speakers to students in each of the Benning schools. These materials and activities are designed to promote student awareness of the present and future decisions that they can make regarding use of energy.

Energy Week serves to highlight the need for energy awareness in the entire population, but for students it presents increased opportunities for discussion and increased knowledge in an area that directly affects their lives on a daily basis.

The fact that energy usage is an issue for Benning students is evidenced by the comments of several Faith School eighth graders who considered some energy related questions during a recent science class.

Here are a few of their responses:

Do you ever think about the planet that we live on and whether we should try to take care of it?

Jennifer Morrison—Yes, I often think about the planet earth, the ozone layer and pollution. I do think people should take care of the earth. I just wish all people did take care of it.

Thomas Sikes—Yes, I sometimes wonder what the world will be like in 20 years. I believe that if we don't take care of the planet we live on, it will be a sad place to live.

Do you practice energy conservation in any way?

Michelle Collazo—Well yes, when I'm doing my homework. I do it in the dining rooom. We have this big window and I put up the window shades, and instead of using the lights, I use sunlight. When we go out I turn all the lights. When I finish watching TV, I turn it off.

Donna Bretado—My parents always tell me to turn off the water or the lights. My family recycles. We hardly buy things that can't be recycled.

Leah Harrington—Yes, my mom makes my sister, my brother, and me turn out the lights when we leave a room, and not to leave the water running. She does this because she wants to take a part in helping the earth , too.

Cadets attend camp

Civil Air Patrol

Four cadets from the Fort Benning/Columbus Civil Air Patrol Squadron discovered what aerospace education was all about Sept. 27 to 29.

Cadet Terrie Matheny, daughter of Master Sgt. Gerald Matheny; Cadet Airmen Korey and Nicholas Kelly, sons of Capt. Bichard Kelly; and Cadet Airman Corey Reier, son of 1st Sgt. Corey Reier participated in the CAP program Aviation Challenge at the U.S. Space and Rocket Center at Huntsville, Ala.

Aviation Challenge involved an intensive curriculum in aeronautical sciences, water and land survival, aerospace physiology, naviation and flight simulation.

The cadets lived in a space camp habit in a model ground space station with 20 other cadets and 18 CAP seniors. While at space camp, the cadets participated in a simulated space shuttle mission in a shuttle simulator, made a simulated gravity-free space walk and discovered what aerospace physiology, the effects of flight on the human body, is all about. This included loading, spacial disorientation, high altitude oxygen deficiency in the body, hypoxia, and rapid acceleration introduced by a centrifuge simulator.

During the space shuttle simulator exercise, the cadets held crew positions of pilot, mission specialist, payload officer and flight director. In addition to the shuttle simulator, the cadets got a chance to fly an F-15 fighter simulator during aircraft carrier operations.

Water survival training provided insight into aircraft emergency ejection and crashing into a water environment. Cadets had an opportunity to make a parachute water entry, a helicopter crash exit from a helicopter compartment under water and the standard jet fighter cockpit entry and tipover escape underwater.

Pickup and rescue included pickup by helicopter using forest penetrator or horse collar.

Cadet Airman Nicholas Kelly won the "Right Stuff Award" as the most outstanding overall individual performance during Aviation Challenge in aeronautical sciences as well as water and land survival.

This award included a $600 scholarship for attendance to the next phase, one week at space camp next summer.

The Civil Air Patrol Cadet program is open to all youth, ages 13 through 18, or who have completed the sixth grade. The cadets meet each Thursday at 7 p.m. at Detachment 1, 317th Tactical Airlift Wing, U.S Air Force, in building 2403, Lawson Army Airfield.

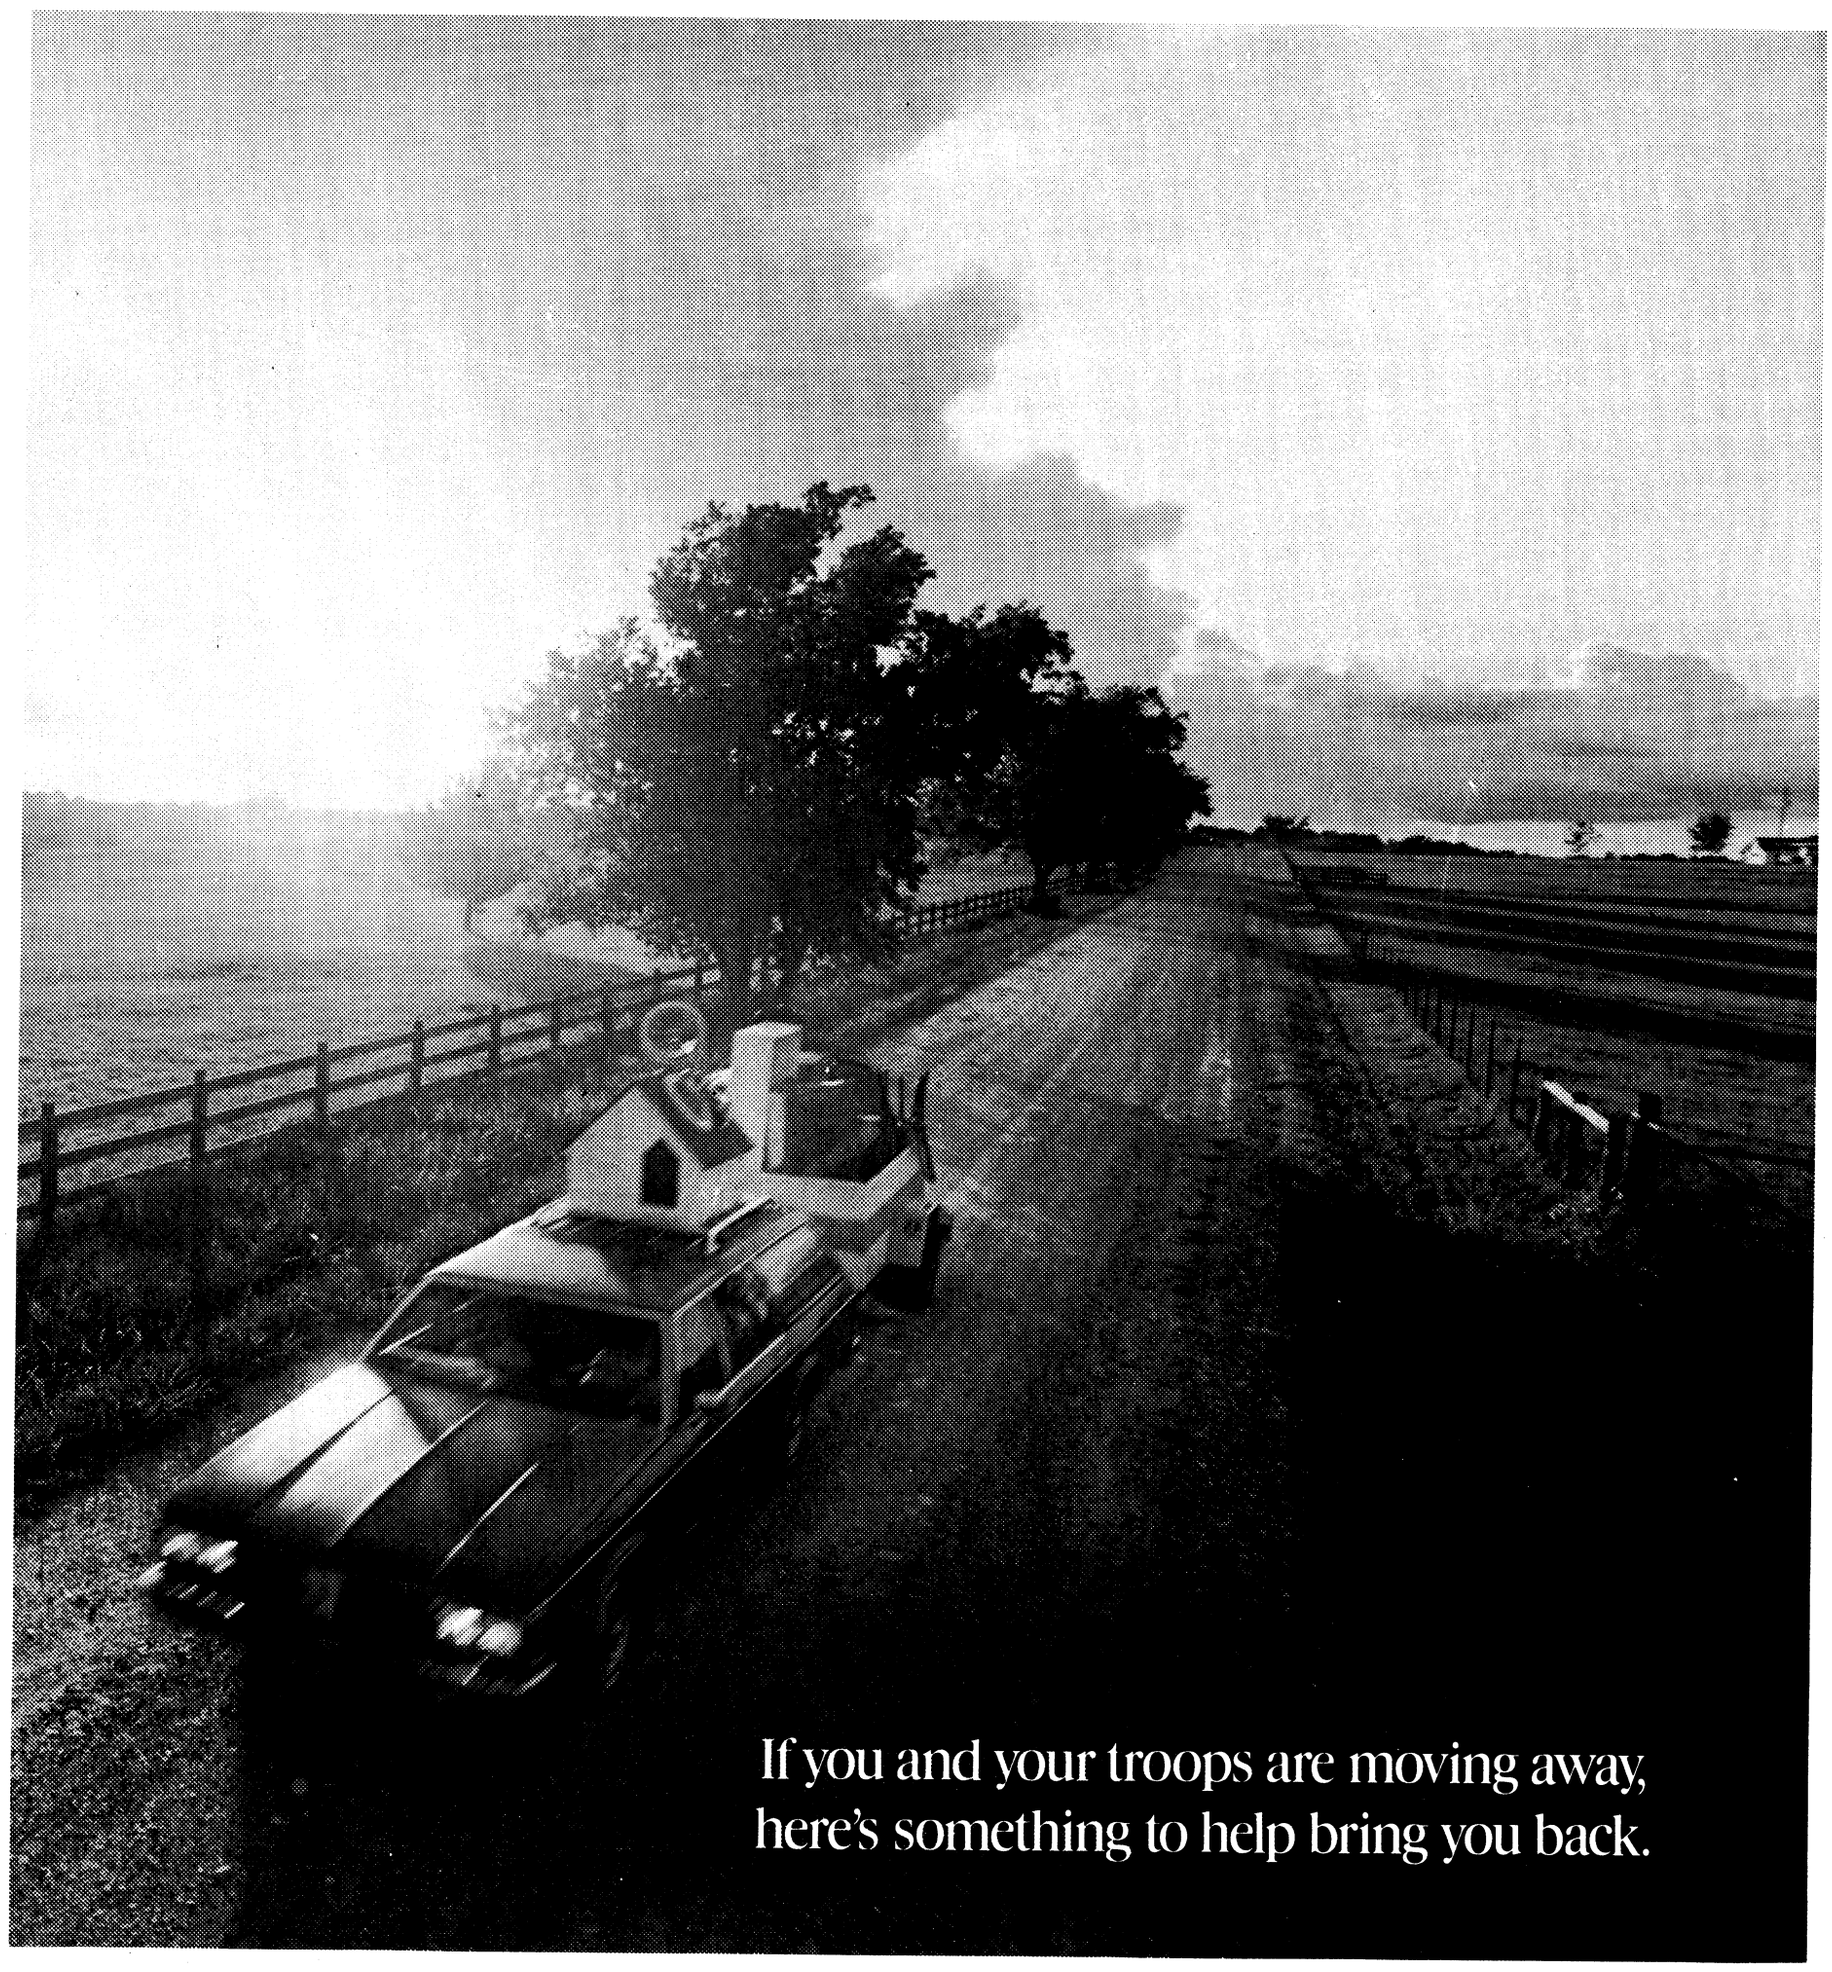
Firemen visit post schools



Fort Benning Schools

The Fort Benning Fire Department, in cooperation with the Fort Benning School System, presented programs in each of the eight Benning schools during Fire Prevention Week, which was this week.

These presentations were designed to prepare students to take appropriate action should a fire occur. The theme for this year's fire safety program was "Fire Won't Wait; Plan Your Escape."

Fire prevention personnel presented a puppet show for students in kindergarten through third grade to instruct children about first-aid for minor burns, knowing where fire exits are located, and how to stop, drop, and roll in case their clothing catches on fire.

For the fourth through eighth grade students, the fire safety instructors presented three scenes depicting common occurrences in a home fire situation. Fire Safety Inspector Bill Poteet stated that it is very important for families to plan their escape routes. These plans should include a designated meeting place. " Many firefighters lose their lives because they go back into a house fire to rescue a family member who has already evacuated the building," said Poteet.

Soldiers get first taste of military life in

One Station Unit Training

Pvt. 2 Raymond Buddey, Company A, 2nd Battalion, 58th Infantry Regiment, aims an M-60 machine gun.

By Marilyn Balzarini
U.S. Army Infantry Training Center

"My childhood ambition was to be in the Army," said Pfc. Anthony Connolly. "That's why I enlisted for the infantry."

Connolly graduated from infantry One Station Unit Training Sept. 13.

When he arrived at Fort Benning in June, he reported to the 30th Adjutant General Battalion (Reception). Like all OSUT soldiers, he spent about three days there doing all of his initial processing into the Army. He got his first military haircut, immunizations, uniforms and his personnel and pay records started.

He also got his first taste of military life. He ate in the dining facility for the first time and slept in the barracks. The drill sergeants introduced him to military customs and courtesy, drill and ceremonies, and some of the other basics.

From the Reception Battalion, Connolly was assigned to Company C, 4th Battalion, 30th Infantry for infantry training. At Company C, Connolly began 13 weeks of infantry OSUT training. The program of instruction combines basic training and infantry advanced individual training.

According to Sgt. 1st Class William Bates, quality control inspector for the Infantry Training Center, training is split into five phases. The first two weeks are called Phase One. During this initial phase, the soldiers are taught drill and ceremonies and physical fitness. They are introduced to military inspections, and they are organized into "buddy" teams.

Phase Two consists of individual soldier skills. Map reading, infantry rifle marksmanship, first aid, and nuclear, biological and chemical warfare training are a few of the skills taught in weeks three through five.

Weeks six, seven and eight are known as Phase Three. This part of training focuses on weapons training and teaching soldiers to apply their individual soldier skills to squad level maneuvers.

Infantry AIT begins in Phase Four. This phase is three weeks long and includes weeks nine through 11. OSUT soldiers begin their military occupational specialty in one of five different infantry specialties during this phase. The specialties are: infantry (MOS 11B), dragon gunner (MOS 11BC2), mortarman (MOS 11C), tube-launched, optically-tracked, wire-guided missile gunner (MOS 11H) and Bradley Fighting Vehicle crewman (MOS 11M).

Phase Five is the last two weeks of training. Weeks 12 and 13 consists of the field training exercise and graduation. The FTX gives the soldiers the opportunity to put all of the skills they have learned to work in a mock combat situation.

Just before graduation, Connolly and two of his fellow soldiers, Pvt. 2 James Strickland and Pvt. 1 John Barfield, talked about their experiences in OSUT and their impressions of the Army.

All three soldiers said that OSUT was not what they expected. They agreed that the drill sergeants were more caring than they thought they would be.

"The drill sergeants really care about the soldiers," Connolly said. " They really want you to graduate and they spend extra time helping you if you need it."

Soldiers of Company A, 2nd Battalion, 58th Infantry Regiment, fire M-60 machine guns during weapons training.

Strickland said he didn't expect the barracks and dining facility to be so new.

"I thought I'd be living in some little World War II wooden barracks," he said.

The three soldiers also agreed that the teamwork they learned in OSUT was different from anything they had experienced in the past.

"In high school sports where you work as a team, everybody goes home at the end of the game," said Strickland. "Here, we live and work together, and our lives depend on teamwork."

Thirteen weeks away from family and friends was about the hardest part for me," Barfield said. Strickland agreed.

Connolly is from Clarksville, Md. He will be assigned to the 82nd Airborne Division at Fort Bragg, N.C.

Strickland is from Tupelo, Miss. He will join the Old Guard at Fort Myer, Va.

Barfield is a National Guard soldier assigned to Company C, 3rd Battalion, 124th Infantry Regiment, in Blountstown, Fla.

Pvt. 1 Brian Dougall pitches his shelter half at Company B, 1st Battalion, 19th Infantry, bivouac site.

Pfc. Dewan Richardson (standing in window) encourages a "buddy" who is scaling a wall during military operations in urban terrain training with Company E, 3rd Battalion, 32nd Infantry Regiment.

Engineers train on bulldozer of the future

3rd Brigade , 24th Infantry Division

So you say a bulldozer won't swim? Well, if you're picturing the bulldozer with the giant blade on front and the tracks that will crush anything, you're right. However, things are changing in the engineer units of today's Army.

The 72nd Engineer Company (Combat) of the 3rd Brigade, 24th Infantry Division (Mechanized) recently received two weeks of intensive armored combat earthmover operator training. A team headed by Warren Austin of Tank and Automotive Command and Sgt. Robert Williams of the engineer center at Fort Leonard Wood, Mo., conducted the training for engineers from Sept. 9 to 20.

"The armored combat earthmover is one of those innovations designed to project engineer combat multipliers forward with today's fast moving mechanized maneuver forces," said Capt. Mike Iverson, company commander. "It's the bulldozer of the future."

According to Iverson, the traditional bulldozer travels at a maximum speed of 7 mph, while the ACE can sustain speeds of up to 30 mph on hard surfaces and closer to 15 mph over terrain such as the deserts of Saudi Arabia and Iraq.

The ACE offers more protection than the dozer, comes with radio equipment, has a bowl for carrying dirt from one place to another, and can swim.

The 72nd and other engineers of the 24th actually received the ACEs in the whirlwind of events of February, as they prepared to attack into Iraq.

"In the rush to get mobility assets such as the ACE to the forward deployed units, there was only time for Army fielding teams to give the 'short course' of construction," said Iverson. "This initial training was enough to train operators in breaching berms and tank ditches during the attack and then dig in the task force so they could better survive possible artillery, air, or ground attacks."

"The ACE was indispensable to the whole operation," said Iverson. "There were concerns that the ACE couldn't stay abreast of the brigade's personnel carriers. They stayed with their attacking task forces and proved their worth. They conducted a wide variety of missions including recovery of vehicles bogged down in Iraq.

"I was constantly being called forward," said Spc. Sammie R. Speckman, an ACE operator attached to Taskforce 1-18. "I cut my time to breach berms in half after only two missions, and that's great considering my only other experience on the ACE was during advanced individual training."

Sgt. Robert G. Stroud crosses Victory Pond in a Armored Combat Earthmover after members of the 72nd Engineer Company (Combat) completed a 'train the trainer' course.

Mike Iverson

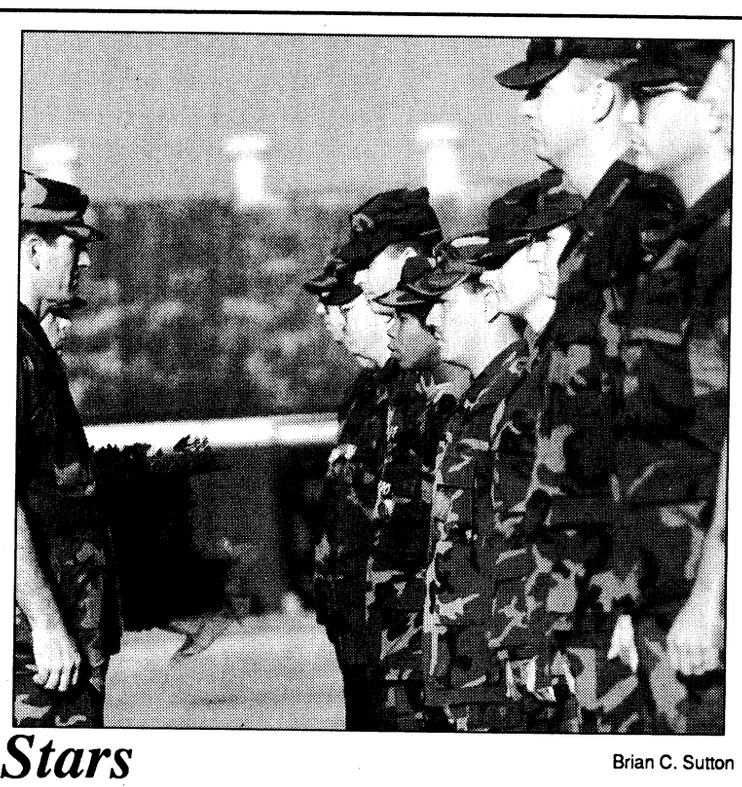
As the team arrived here to conduct the training, Austin, who was a trainer in Saudi Arabia, was excited to see some of the same operators he trained earlier.

"The engineers of the 72nd are unequivocally the most highly motivated I've ever trained," said Austin.

Even though these operators had performed in combat, the team still started with the basics; they trained the operators on preventative maintenance checks and services, dozing and hauling, emergency procedures, and self-recovery. The training ended with swimming the ACE across Victory Pond.

"This two-week 'train the trainer' course was extremely valuable," said Sgt. Robert G. Stroud, the senior ACE operator in the company. "This training will set the stage for training within the company. We had 12 operators and two mechanics go through the course."

43rd finishes field training



By James C. Rupp
Bayonet staff writer

Members of Company B, 43rd Engineer Combat Battalion went on their first field exercise since returning from their stay in Southwest Asia from Sept. 23 to 27, according to 2nd Lt. John Gelman, one of Co. B's platoon leaders.

Gelman said that the exercise emphasized the fact that the men of the 43rd Engineers had to be two soldiers in one – an engineer and an infantry man.

The soldiers split into groups to achieve thier objective — to construct and erect a combat-ready shelter capable of housing up to 20 soldiers during a deployment, Gelman said.

During the exercise, the soldiers also practiced infantry tactics such as company defense perimeters, squad on squad tactics and operations in an urban environment.

Soldiers learn from past

By Tom Wilkinson
3rd Brigade, 24th Infantry Division

In the blistering heat of Georgia in September, 15 soldiers mounted an assault on Kennesaw Mountain National Battlefield, in an attempt to learn from the past.

The soldiers, all part of the intelligence section of the 3rd Brigade, 24th Infantry Division (Mechanized), conducted a staff ride to the park to enhance their professional development.

"The Army started these staff rides here about five or six years ago," said Dennis Kelly, a park historian at Kennesaw. "A lot of people thought, 'What's this got to do with today's modern Army?' Well, the more things change, the more they remain the same.

"In all armies, past and present, supply lines have to be protected," said 1st Lt. Thomas Quinn, a tactical intelligence officer. "You can defeat any army by cutting supply lines — you don't necessarily have to fight. Like in Iraq, we hit them in the middle while we feinted to one side. We flanked them and cut off their supply lines — that's maneuver warfare."

As the group was escorted around the battlefield, many correlations were made between warfare of yesterday and today.

"We've got to know where the attack is coming from," said Maj. Ron Broadstreet, the brigade intelligence officer. "One way to do this is through the counter re-reconnaissance battle. When Maj. Gen. (William T.) Sherman feigned his attack, the Confederates reacted to his move — a costly mistake because they didn't have good intelligence."

"You can see what those commanders decisions were, based on the terrain," said Sgt. Carl M. Spivey, an intelligence analyst. "You can see how intelligence planning is really important."

There were many lessons learned by the group, and Quinn elaborated on a few.

"Lieutenant General (Ulysses S.) Grant's strategy was to keep the Confederate Armies divided -- there's a direct correlation here to the AirLand Battle-- use everything you have to overwhelm the enemy," he said.

"Terrain and weather is another lesson," he continued. "Think about observation, cover and concealment, obstacles, key terrain and avenues of approach and how it relates. Sometimes we get so tied to a map, we don't look at the actual terrain and end up making it harder than it really is."

"They made the basic Common Tasks Test mistakes -- not using the military crest of a hill, improper employment of artillery. It still boils down to paying attention to detail," he concluded.

"It was very interesting," said Pfc. William T. Black, an intelligence analyst. "You can look back at their time and see how it relates to modern warfare."

"We learned quite a bit of historical data that we probably never thought about," said Sgt. 1st Class Eddie Smith, an intelligence sergeant. "We could then relate it to our most recent events in Saudi Arabia and Iraq. It let us see how some of the intelligence processes we use today were used by our ancestors."

So whether you're a young soldier or an old soldier, a staff ride offers an intellectual exercise in analyzing complicated military events. The weapons and tactics may change, but soldiers and the decisions they make remain fairly constant.

"I think there's a small philosophical point here," said Kelly. "Protecting our nation started way back in 1775 and everybody has their turn. You see what people have done in previous generations -- and Lord knows what can happen in the future."

Desert Storm vet named honor grad

By Aurelio Feliberty
3rd Brigade, 24th Infantry Divislon

Meeting the rigorous demands and passing the test of Ranger School as honor graduate, Spc. Andrew Walker of Headquarters and Headquarters Company 1st Battalion, 18th Infantry from 3rd Brigade, 24th Infantry Division, made his dream come true.

"It had always been my dream before entering the Army to make it through Ranger School, and when I got the chance to go I took it," said Walker.

"I originally went to Ranger School back in July of 1990. But with the brigade's alert for deployment to Saudi Arabia, I was sent back to my unit before completion of the school."

"Upon my arrival from Saudi Arabia, I received a memorandum stating that all prior students who didn't complete the course because of deployment to Saudi, could return to the school. So I put my paperwork through again and started the phase I left off with on July 1," added Walker.

Ranger School is no easy ride, as Walker explains.

"With little or no sleep for days and little food, you're expected to push yourself on throughout the missions.

"Ranger School is a leadership course, where you learn about yourself and how much you can take. Here, you are not only graded by the ranger instructors, but by your peers as well. To receive a "no-go" could mean being recycled or barred from the course."

"My advice to any soldier wanting to go to Ranger School is to study his Common Tasks Training manual.

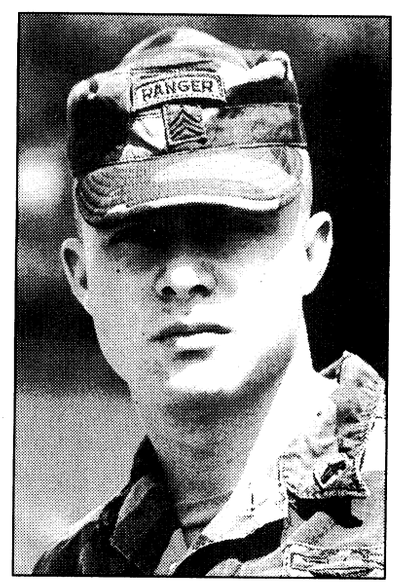
They need to know their basic soldier skills if they expect to have a good chance at making it through the course. The ranger instructors assume that you already have a grasp on what they are putting out," Walker said.

75th Ranger NCO 'leads the way'

By James C. Rupp
Bayonet staff writer

Sgt. Michael E. Nesbitt, Company A, 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment, wanted to show that "the Rangers really lead the way" at the U.S. Army Special Operations Command Non-Commissioned Officer of the Year competition.

And that is precisely what he believes he did.



The competition, held at Fort Bragg, N.C., tested soldiers on physical fitness, an oral interview conducted by a board of senior enlisted NCOs, mastery of day and night land navigation, and both written and physical soldiering skills. The competion was attended by a representative from each of USASOCs components- the Rangers, Special Forces, psycological operations unit, the civil affairs unit and the special operations aviation unit.

Nesbitt said that he felt confident about his ability to do well in the competition- after all, he started off as NCO of the Month, NCO of the Quarter for the 3rd Battalion, in addition to being the 75th Regt.'s NCO of the Year.

"From the start," Nesbitt, who works as the Nuclear, Biological and Chemical NCO for Co. A, said, "I just wanted the competion to realize that Rangers lead the way."

Nesbitt, who has been through a number of schools, including Sniper, Jumpmaster and the Special Forces Selection Course, will be departing the 75th for another USASOC element- the Special Forces, where he will be training to be a medic. "It's always been my dream to be in a Special Forces unit," Nesbitt said.

Nesbitt also said that part of "leading the way" is to set the example for up and coming soldiers. "I hoped I showed the younger soldiers what can be accomplished once you decide you want something," he said. "I started out just like them. I kept my nose clean, kept the mission in mind, and so can they."

Post soldier of the year has open mind

By Willie Hay
3rd Brigade, 24th Infantry Division

Fort Benning's soldier of the year says he's always looking to try something new.

"I'm open to anything and everything," said Spc. George R. Leard Jr., 25, who has earned four military occupational specialties in six years and would like to attend Officer Candidate School and receive a commission in the infantry in the next two years.

"In the Army, you've got to keep an open mind and remain flexible," said Leard, a nuclear, biological and chemical specialist for Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor, where he was first battalion soldier of the quarter and then soldier of the quarter for the 3rd Brigade, 24th Infantry Division (Mechanized).

Leard's openness to change has stood him in good stead in the last 2 1/2 months. In August, he completed the Primary Leadership Development Course while his wife, Vickie, was entering her ninth month of pregnancy with the couple's second child.

"The day before I graduated from PLDC, my first sergeant and first-line supervisor told me I had two days to get ready for the post soldier of the quarter board, Aug. 30, " Leard said. "I had been hoping to relax for a few days at home."

Leard recalled feeling the tension mount the following morning as he waited while six other candidates took their turns before the board.

"I thought it was OK to be in front of the board for 15 minutes, but something had to be wrong if you took 20 minutes, like each of them did" he said. "When my turn came, it seemed like the time was cut in half, but Command Sergeant Major (Dwight) Hood (of 1st Battalion, 18th Infantry), the president of the board told Sergeant (David) Gosha I had really 'smoked' them because I appeared very confident once I sat down to answer their questions."

After the last candidate's interview, Hood called them all back, announced that Leard had won soldier of the fourth quarter, and dropped his bombshell.

"He told me I'd better go take a break because they were going to have the soldier of the year board next," Leard said. "My jaw dropped to the floor because I thought one board was all I could take in a single day."

However, the Sledgehammer Brigade soldier once again overcame his initial nervousness to win the competition.

"I was really sweating it out while each of the other three quarterly winners took 20-30 minutes to finish, but I calmed down as soon as I sat down for my interview."

Leard attributes his success to the support he's received from his first sergeant, 1st Sgt. Kenneth Graham, his supervisor, Gosha, and wife, Vickie.

1/11th gets new commander

By James C. Rupp
Bayonet staff writer

The command of the 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment passed from Lt. Col. John W. King to Lt. Col. Timothy G. Bosse in front of an assembly in Marshall Auditorium Sept. 25.

Bosse, formerly served with deputy chief of staff of operations, Current Operations Southwest Asia in the Pentagon. The Baltimore, native is a graduate of the Virginia Military Institute, Lexington, and has a master's degree in history from the University of Virginia, Charlottesville. Subsequently, he spent 1983 to 1986 as an assistant professor of history at the U.S. Military Academy, West Point, N.Y.

In 1987, he went to Fort Richardson, Alaska, with the 6th Infantry Division (Light) as a brigade personnel and training officer as well as a division training officer.

He has graduated from both the Infantry Officer Basic and Advanced courses, the Command and General Staff College, and the Air Command and Staff College.

Bosse's awards include the Meritorious Service Medal, Army Commendation Medal, Army Achievement Medal, National Defense Service Medal and the Expert Infantryman Badge.

Bosse and his wife, Pat, have two children; Carrie, 14, and Brian, 9.

Bradleys, like these M-2A2s from the 29th Infantry Regiment, are coming to the 3rd Brigade.

3rd Brigade to get Bradleys

By Richard Brill
Special to The Bayonet

Four million, seven-hundred fifty-two thousand pounds of steel and aluminum are coming to Fort Benning. That's the combined weight of the 108 Bradley Fighting Vehicles the 3rd Brigade, 24th Infantry Division will begin fielding in January.

"It's a continuation of the Army's force modernization process. It's an extension of what happened to the 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor Regiment when they recently received the newest version of the Abrams tank," said Maj. Peter N. Helmer, assistant Training and Doctrine Command Systems Manager of Fighting Vehicle Systems, explaining the reason for the upcoming arrival of the Bradleys.

Unlike the 2nd Bn., 69th Armor, however, that used the Abrams before, the Bradley Fighting Vehicle will be completely new to most 3rd Brigade, 24th ID personnel, who currently use the M-113 armored personnel carrier.

"There's no question that the Bradley is better," Helmer said. "It provides better protection and higher lethality, survivability, deployability, and sustainability than the M-113," explained Helmer. "Desert Storm has battle tested the Bradley and proven its efficiency in combat."

According to Helmer, the vehicles will be brand new M-2A2 Bradleys, the latest model, right off the FMC Corporation's production line in San Jose, Calif. Each Bradley costs about $1.2 million, Helmer said.

The M-2A2 sports a 25mm automatic cannon, a 7.62mm machine gun, and a tube-launched, optically-tracked, wire-guided missile launcher. Additionally, it's equipped with improved armor and can travel up to 61 kilometers per hour.

The 1st and 2nd Battalions, 18th Infantry Regiment will each receive 54 Bradleys. Actual delivery of the vehicles to the brigade will be in January for the 2nd Battalion and in February for the 1st Battalion, Helmer said, although it is uncertain when the vehicles will actually arrive on Fort Benning.

According to Skip Cauldwell, a force modernization analyst for the Directorate of Plans, Training and Mobilization, delivery was supposed to begin this month but will probably be delayed.

When the vehicles arrive, they will be inspected by a material fielding team to ensure they are in top operating shape, Cauldwell said.

In the meantime, according to Helmer, the units will prepare to turn in their old personnel carriers, except for those that will be kept for scouting and command purposes, and conduct preporatory training beginning this month.

Soldier restores World War II vehicle

By Richard Brill
Special to The Bayonet

When Capt. William A. Winget found the rusting old car two years ago on a Kansas farm it looked like it was ready for the junkyard. Now, after painstaking restoration, the 1942 Dodge 3/4-ton command car looks just like it did nearly half a century ago.

Winget, former commander of Company A, First Battalion 29th Infantry Regiment, is a collector of militaria who has a passion for aquiring and restoring antiquated vehicles and equipment.

His collection includes two German World War II half-tracks, five artillery pieces, and one other Dodge command car like the one he just restored.

According to Winget, the car has had a colorful history.

"After World War II, it was sold as surplus to the Ford Motor Company and used as wrecker truck," he explained.

After being won in a card game by a grain elevator operator who used it to push boxcars around, it was bought by a farmer in the 1960s who sold it to Winget in 1989 for $2,000. Its value today after restoration is around $12,000, said Winget.

Richard Brill/Special to The Bayonet

Capt. William A. Winget stands beside the 3/4 ton command car he restored.

Winget has taken a number of distinguished guests for a ride in his vehicle, including four generals and the king of Swaziland.

"The more generals who ride in it the higher in value it gets," joked Winget, whose latest passenger of note was the new post commander, Maj. Gen. Jerry A. White.

Winget said that by restoring old military equipment like the Dodge command car, he's not only preserving history, but demonstrating how military technology has evolved over the years.

Although Winget said this particular type of vehicle is the one he wanted most for his collection (he searched eight years for one) he still has his eyes on other things.

"A Bradley Fighting Vehicle would be nice," he said.

71st Inf. Div. returns to Benning

By James C. Rupp
Bayonet staff writer

The 71st Infantry Division returned home to Fort Benning recently.

The 71st was stationed here before its departure to the European front during World War II.

During their tour of the post, the soldiers who are heralded as the unit that plunged the farthest east during the WWII campaign and fought through 800 miles in just 59 days, visited the National Infantry Museum, the Officers' Club and their old haunt, Sand Hill, which is where their barracks stood nearly 50 years ago.

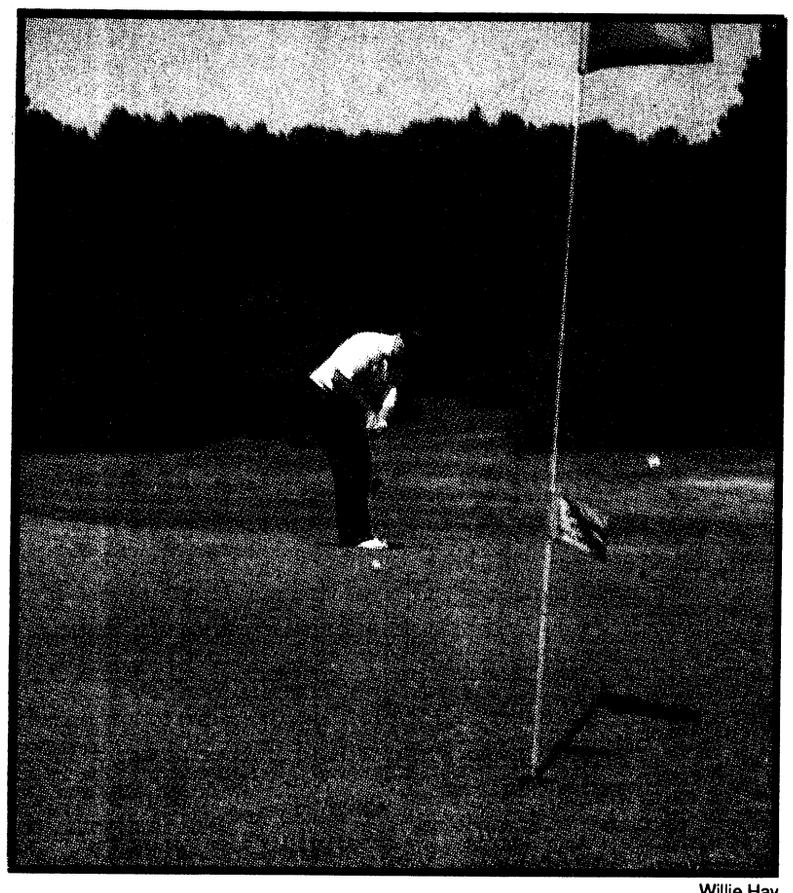
Junior rifle team seeks members



By Rhonda Barush
U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit

The Fort Benning Junior Rifle Team is looking for new members. The team is open to anyone 13 to 19 years old who is seriously interested in competitive rifle shooting. 3rd Brigade holds golf tournament

By Willie Hay
3rd Brigade, 24th Infantry Division

No one shot a hole in one for a new car, but even first-time duffers left the Follow Me Golf Course Sept. 27 with a prize in the 324th Forward Support Battalion's annual Dependable Open golf tournament.

"We awarded more than $1,500 in trophies, prizes and gifts donated by numerous local organizations, and every player went home today with something — whether or not they shot a good game," said tournament organizer Russell Johnson.

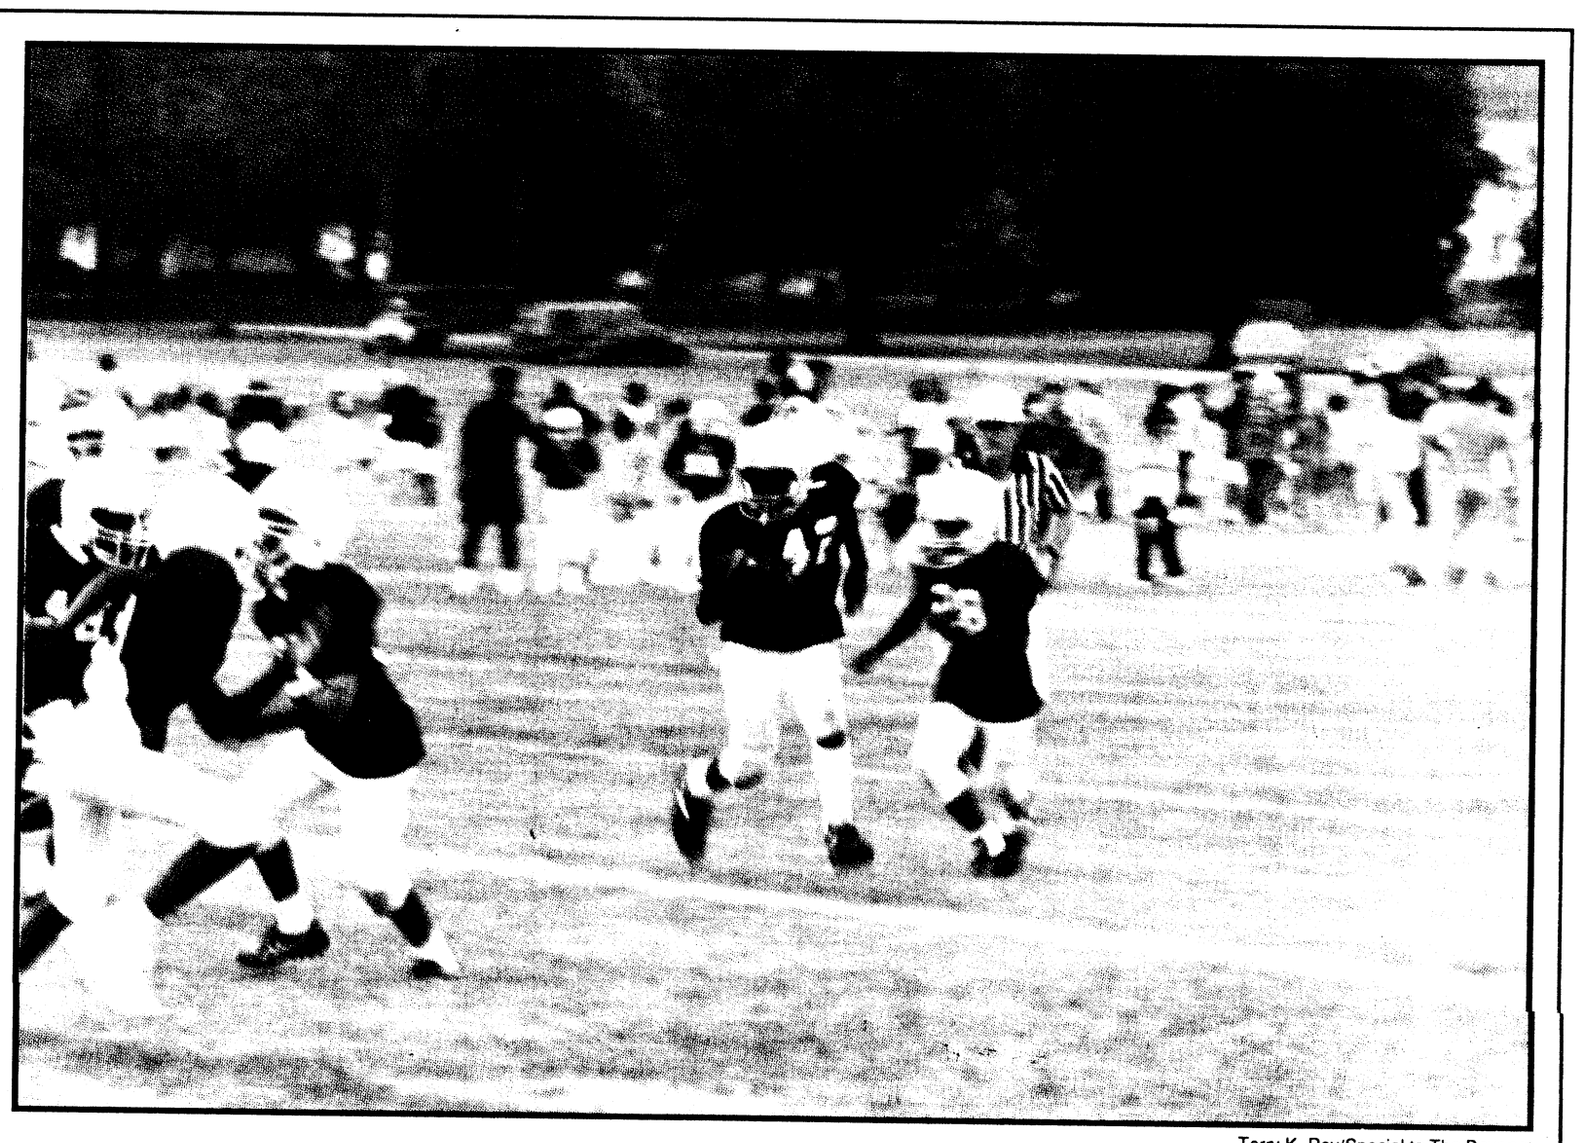
Twenty teams composed of golfers from throughout the 3rd Brigade, 24th Infantry Division and the Columbus community competed in the four-member, best ball scramble. "All four members dropped their balls and shot from where the best ball landed," Johnson explained.

"Then we took the best ball after the second shot, and everybody shot from that location. That way each player had an equal chance to contribute too the team score, and it made the game fairer for beginning players," he added.

Ron Price, Brian Lamar, Chris Hahn and Bob Androski shot a total score of 56 to win the top team trophy in the first flight, for more experienced players. Runner-up honors went to Mike Garrett, David Hayes, Slats Anderson and Hank Rempell with 58, while John McEachern Sr., John McEachern Jr., Gilman Hachel and Robert Yarbrough finished in third place with 59.

Lt. Col. Bob Dail, commander of the 324th and host of the tournament, shared the top trophy with teammates Dick Dickerson, Bob Lomax and George Chinea. The team posted a final score of 62 in the second flight, which is for less experienced players.

Ed Horton, Ed Demattis, Al Adair and Shad Adair shot a 64 to finish in second place in the second flight, while Barrie Town, Dave Betsell, Rick Vitullo and Rodney Williams came in third with 68.



In individual competition, Shad Adair picked up the trophy for shooting closest to the hole on hole six. Paul Wright registered the longest drive on hole 11, while Jody Reese hit the longest drive on hole 18.

Booby prizes went to Bob Beron and his teammates for racking up the highest score (70) in the first flight, while Melvin Blackwell and his teammates finished in last place with an 86 in the second flight.

In a post-tournament putt-off, Dickerson shot closest to the hole with 68 to win a $200 discount on a Carribean cruise from the post's Scheduled Airline Ticket Office.According to Dail's wife, Ann, the Dependable Open was a morale booster for the entire battalion. "Some of our lady-volunteers came out early to help ensure that everyone was registered for prizes," she said. "They also drove around the course throughout the day to make sure beverages were available."

According to Dail, proceeds for the tournament will be used for a Christmas party for family members in the battalion this December at the Kelley Hill Recreation Center.

"We also plan to purchase Christmas lights and decorate a Christmas tree in the battalion area for everyone to enjoy," he added. "The remainder of the proceeds will go toward purchasing Christmas gifts for our single soldiers."

Benning soldiers receive 'field training'

By Brian C. Sutton
Bayonet Staff writer

On a hot Thursday night, sometime near 10 p.m., quarterback Tyrone Walker of the Columbus Stars moves in behind Ray Burnham for the snap of the football. He calls out the commands, looks side to side down his offensive line. Then , the snap. Walker moves back quickly , as if to pass. But Andrew Bennett, fullback, comes in to run. He takes the ball and crashes through the defensive line and runs the last few yards for a first down.

Those hot Thursday nights are not swept in front of a screaming crowd. Instead, this team is secluded to a small baseball field off of the Beallwood Connector, sharing it with softball teams, and anyone else who happens to show up to play.

But this team is not a high school team, and they're not a college team. They are a group of football-loving people playing in a semi-professional league, who are dedicated to giving Columbus a football team, and to having great time doing it, according Tom Staton, Stars' offensive coordinator.

"Our players don't get paid anything because a lot of them play for fun," said Staton.

Staton further explained that paying these players would ruin their chances for scholarships,if that is their ultimate goal.

The Stars' lineup is made up of many Fort Benning soldiers. Nearly the entire starting offensive line are military members.

"Our soldiers that ply for us are highly dedicated, in great shape and are well-disciplined," said Staton. "I never have a problem with any of them."

"For our first year, we've got a real good team, sid Staton. "We've got some real talent playing for us."

Henry Wilson, a staff sergeant in the 36th Engineer Group, said the team is very good and he looks forward to finishing this season with a strong record. Wilson said that this year will probably be his last, but a lot of his efforts have been for good causes.

"Its not for the money at my age," said the 14-year Army veteran. "I'm not looking for a scholarship. It's just something I do for myself."

The last game of the season will be played Saturday at home against the Georgia Thrashers. That night will be dedicated to youth football players of the tri-city area.

'A Team' wins

By Terry K. Ray
Special to The Bayonet

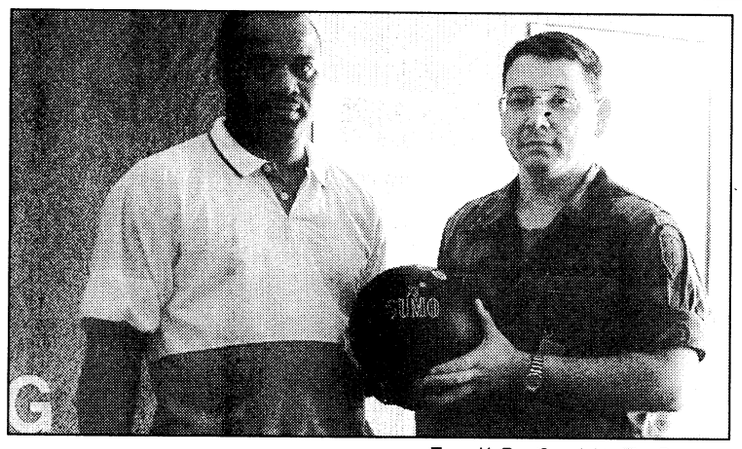
The "A Team" from Company A, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment got their measure of revenge when they defeated the "Task Force" from Headquarters Company, 1st Bn, 11th Inf. Regt., 12-0, Tuesday evening at Glenn Field.

The first half was a game for the defenses and the referees, both teams couldn't move the ball down the field without a penalty flag stopping the drive. Task Force had the ball on three separate possessions but the A Team defense stopped them. A Team fared no better on their first two possessions of the half, penalties and defense would allow them to go no farther than midfield. The first half came to an end scoreless.

The A Team started the second half with a new quarterback at the helm. Berry Washington moved the A Team for two first downs on their first possession of the half, a pitch to running back Leroy Bates who swept around the left side got the first one. Then Washington hit tight end Herbert Smith for their second one. On the very next play Washington's pass out into the flat was picked off by cornerback Dwayne Patton ending A Team's chance to get on the board.

Task Force started their first possession deep in their own territory. On their first three plays quarterback Dortae Graham couldn't move the ball running or passing and gave the ball up on a protected kick.

On A Team's next series, Washington ran left on first down for no gain. On second down Washington hit running back Dexter Alexander over the middle for a short gain, Alexander broke a tackle and outran the secondary to the end zone. The extra point try failed, and the A Team had tahe lead 6-0, and never looked back.



The Task Force offense looked flat on their next set of downs. A motion penalty on first down, then a dropped snap by Graham put Task Force in a hole. A third down sack by linebacker Eros Delzerin caused the Task Force to punt.

A Team pulled out the old trick bag on their next series and if the plays had worked they would have put another score on the board. On third down Washington took the snap rolled right, pitched to running back Bates who stopped and fired the ball down the right sideline but the pass was knocked away by cornerback Patton. An incomplete pass on fourth down gave the ball back to the Task Force with two minutes left in the game.

Task Force had to try to score quickly and on their second play from scrimmage Graham tried to go deep down the middle but cornerback Dexter Alexander picked off the pass and returned upfield. A penalty on the defense during the return moved the ball deep into Task Force territory.

Washington scrambled for good yardage on a first down busted play. On the next play Shawn Lewis took the hand off up the middle broke past the line and into the end zone for the A Team's second touchdown of the game. The extra point was no good taking the score to A Team 12, and Task Force 0.

A Team coach James Norton stated, "Task Force is the only team to beat us, so revenge is ever so sweet. We are now 6-1, and we will not be denied."

R & B concert here Oct. 19

By Connie Bridges
Special to The Bayonet

Rhythm and blues performers Levert, B-Angie-B, Damien Dame, the Rude Boys and Keisha Jackson, will be in concert at Doughboy Stadium Oct. 19 from 1 to 6:30 p.m., with the gates opening at noon.

According to Brian Smith, marketing director for the Directorate of Community Activities, this concert is the first of its kind on Fort Benning.

"During Desert Storm, Lee Greenwood came, and several years ago, there was Lou Rawls. But this one features three of the Top Ten Singles artists as listed in the most recent issue of Jet magazine."

Smith said tickets will be priced about 40 to 50 percent below those outside the installation. Tickets for military members and their family members with identification will be $10 in advance and $12 at the door. Tickets for civilians will be $14 in advance and $16 at the door.

The idea for hosting such an event came about when Marketing surveyed people on post asking them what they most wanted to see in the area of recreational/leisure activities, Smith said.

Smith noted that if this one is successful, others may follow.

"Special care has been taken," he said, "in the selection of clean, wholesome entertainment that is appropriate for singles and families."

A private investor is helping with the funding; and, because Fort Benning has facilities for this in place, there is less overhead so the savings can be passed on to those buying tickets.

The Information, Tickets and Registration office began selling tickets Monday at Building 247. Department of the Army civilians may purchase tickets there, too. There will also be various off-post outlets. Further ticket information may be obtained by calling 545-7535.

Levert

Current hits by those to appear in concert include: Levert - the album "Rope a Dope Style" and the single "Baby I'm Ready"; B-Angie-B - the album "B-Angie-B" and the single "So Much Love"; Damien Dame - the single "Exclusivity"; and The Rude Boys - the album "Are You Lonely for Me?" and the singles "Heaven" and "Written All Over Your Face."

Smith noted the concert is early the same day as the Tuskegee/Morehouse football game at Columbus Memorial Stadium, and some people might find it to be a filled-day of entertainment in Columbus.

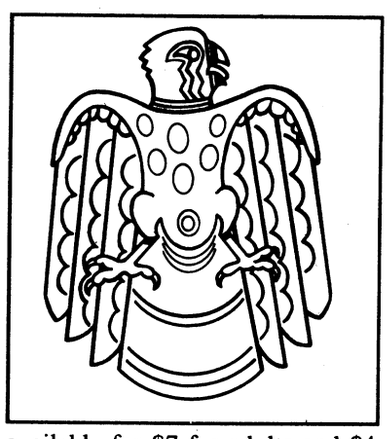
Celebrate Columbus!

Indian Cultural Festival this weekend

A lone male voice echoes through the trees as the Indian dancers, with shell rattles shaking, enter the sacred dance ground. The years erode away to a time when the Yuchi tribes were hunting, fishing and living in the Columbus area. Today, Saturday, and Sunday marks their return to their native land.



This and much more can be experienced during the Celebrate Columbus! second annual Indian Cultural Festival the second weekend of October at Columbus College. More than 10,000 people are expected to attend the festival. They will experience first hand the Southeastern Indian cultures of the Cherokee, Choctaw, Seminole, Saponi, Lakota, Catawba, Creek and Yuchi tribes.

Arts, crafts and technology of the individual tribes will be demonstrated including Cherokee blowgun and dart making, Yuchi beadwork and finger weaving, Creek stomp dancing, Catawba pottery, Lakota storytelling and Seminole patchwork.

Flute music concerts will be performed, as well as, contemporary American Indian dance and Cherokee and Haliwa-Saponi hoop dancing. Each tribe's history, philosophies and dance origins will be discussed during their performance.

One of the highlights of the festival will be a stickball game between the Cherokee and Choctaw tribes Saturday and Sunday. Similar to lacrosse, the game was used in ancient times to settle disputes between tribes, as well as a sports activity within the tribes.

Admission is $4 for adults, $2 for children and free for children under 5. Three-day passes are available for $7 for adults and $4 for children. Festival hours are from 6 p.m. to 10 p.m. today; 10 a.m. to 10 p.m. Saturday; and 11 a.m. to 6 p.m. Sunday. Parking will be available on the Columbus College campus. Shuttle buses will transport spectators from the parking areas to the Indian festival site.

For additional information, contact the Chamber of Commerce at 327-1566 or the Columbus College Relations Office at 568-2030.

Local choirs make joyful noise

By Gabriele Sonnenberg
USAIC Chaplains' Office

The Sightseeing Road Chapel was the site of a special old fashioned gospel singing event Sept. 29.

The event started with a devotional service and the Sightseeing Road gospel choir followed with selective songs.

The master of the ceremony and special guest, the Rev. Markus Hammond, WEAM 1580 AM Radio Station, was introduced by Chaplain (Maj.) Robert Cox.

Cox encouraged everybody to participate rather than just spectate before he introduced the groups to perform.

The following singing groups were present:
Heavenly Jewels of Columbus
Gospel Sensations of Columbus
Stars of Faith of Lumpkin

Hammond's wife, Elaine, sang and gave her testimony.

Hand clapping, singing and praising were the response of the audience. Hearts seemed to be touched by the performances and messages.

The presentation of certification and the closing remarks by Cox, finalized the event.

After the event, the crowd gathered at the fellowship hall to enjoy food and drinks.

Group offers understanding

By Gabriele Sonnenberg
USAIC Chaplains' Office

A young German woman tries to capture the dreams and hopes promised to be found in the country of "great opportunities."

What has happened? Why does the reality seem to shatter the dreams she had?

Many foreign-born wives of soldiers enter the United States with unrealistic expectations. They have been painted a picture in pink. The grass seems always greener on the other side of the fence.

After awakening, she may find herself without the familiar surroundings, customs and most devastatingly without family and friends.

She may ask herself, why did my husband seem to change his behavior as soon as we reached our state-side destination?

Chaplain (Maj.) Richard Roggia, Family Life Center Chaplain, realizes, that German women are from a unique culture.

"Most of these women are hard-working housewives, loving mothers and are diligently working or seeking employment outside the home," Roggia said.

"These are wonderful traits", however, they can place a great deal of stress on the individual, when she feels that she does not measure up to her expectations. The stress can effect the relationship.

The purpose of this discussion group is to help couples adjust to the transition from one culture to another," Roggia added.

The Chaplain Family Life Center offers a group for women who seek understanding that develops through feminine, native friendship.

The facilitator of the group is a German native married to an American soldier, and has experienced the difficulties created by a cultural transition.

She is a trained listener and is able to emphasize with the women who are lacking the support and understanding of someone "who has been there."

Since it is a custom in Germany to share coffee and cake, the members of the group will meet for a "Kaffeeklatsch" to discuss and share their thoughts and feelings, and to reminisce.

The "Kaffeeklatsch" will be at the Chaplain Family Life Center once a week from noon until 1:30 p.m. and it is free of charge.

For registration call the Chaplains Family Life Center at 545-1760. Baby-sitting is not available.

Discovery is still important

David Reese
Airborne School Chaplain

It's quite possible that the earth is flat. Indeed, how do we know Columbus didn't start off with 12 ships and nine of them fell off the edge?

Discovery. That's what Columbus Day really boils down to, isn't it? Humans are driven by the possibility of discovering something new or different or weird. They have a deep faith that out there - somewhere - there's a new world to be found, a different way of living, or a weird fact that could win the final round of Jeopardy.

Why else would we buy the National Inquirer? Because inquiring minds really do want to know! We want to know if Elvis really is alive and living in Boise. We want to discover something!

Why else would old Chris Columbus risk everything to go sailing across the ocean blue? Discovery. Life is basically pretty lifeless if we're not discovering something.

We look for stuff. Kids explore. Toddlers try out their legs. Teen-agers experiment. We discover we have a knack for something. At the beginning of each day we set sail into an ocean of unknowns in the hopes of discovering a new world. We may not always consider it discovering, but that's exactly what it is; we are sifting through life discovering what has been covered - mainly, life itself.

However, I'll spare you the long discourse about how we should try to learn something new each day or how we need to get in touch with our inward child, no song and dance about embracing today as a new vista of opportunity for discovery. That's boring and you've heard it all before.

I offer three quick suggestions to ensure you've got enough adventure in you to continue to be a discoverer.

— If you laughed at the first paragraph about Columbus, congratulate yourself; maintaining your sense of perspective is crucial to discovering life (translated: don't forget to laugh a little).

— Put the paper down and go outside. Look up at the clouds. Make sure you can find the doggy, the piggy and the fluffy white elephant gobbling up the peanuts clouds. They are there; as long as you can see them, you're still a discoverer.

— Seek ye first the Kingdom of God, and all these things will be added unto you. Discover God's grace in your life that lets you explore, find, try out, and discover life.

By the way - I've discovered the earth really is round; now I'm working on finding Elvis.

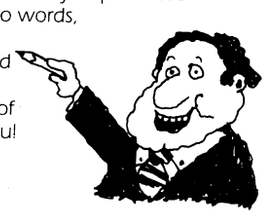
How to make money in three easy steps.

Step 1.



Sell a solution! Your old rattle trap is a teen's dream machine. That old set of golf clubs is sure to be a big hit with a beginner. Here's the point: Your former treasure can bring another pleasure. And if you've got a skill to market or service you'd like to provide—there's someone looking for you in classified.

Step 2.

Aim for an audience. After you've selected a solution for another to seize, bring that person to life. Think about your product or service and its original value to you, then detail its features and benefits to another individual. When you put those benefits into words, others like you will find value too. And that's of value to you!

Step 3.

instinct about something? I've had this one forever, since I was a young boy." Winkler acknowledges Steven Spielberg's work as writer and director of the related 1977 movie hit "Close Encounters of the Third Kind," speculating that the film-maker "knows stuff that most of us don't. At the end of 'Close Encounters,' the little beings supposedly were only the work force, and the mastermind was something like a praying mantis that gives and takes all of its information through telepathy."

To learn just how viable the "Sightings" concept might be, Winkler presented the program to a person he deems "my litmus test ... my 20-year-old son. He's a junior in college and was very cool about it, taking the tape and saying, 'Yeah, I'll take à look at it, thanks very much.' When he came out of his room and handed it back to me, all the wiseguy in him was gone."

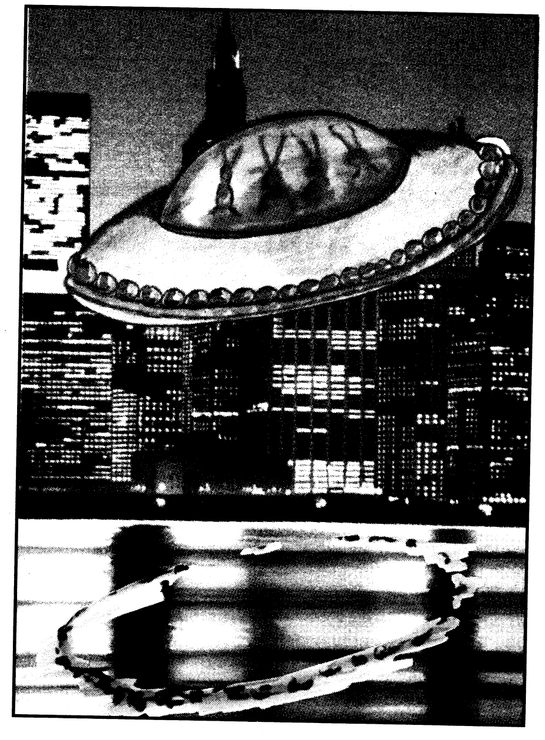
'Fonzie' produces UFO show

By JAY BOBBIN
Tribune Media Services

For "Happy Days" fans who thought they knew everything about the show, here's a bulletin: Fonzie believes in UFOs.



At the very least, his real-life alter ego seems to, since Henry Winkler is examining the phenomenon as executive producer of a new special. Airing next Friday on Fox Broadcasting stations, "The UFO Report: Sightings" spends an hour on various aspects of a topic that Winkler feels isn't being snickered at quite as much these days. With Tim White as host, the show includes first-person testimony by people who claim they were abducted by aliens, as well as the crash of an apparent flying saucer in New Mexico and animal mutilations thought to have been caused by other-worldly forces. For Winkler, who also remains an executive producer of ABC's long-running adventure series "MacGyver," the "Sightings" effort — which he mounted in association with former ABC executive Ann Daniel — marks a new career aspect, since this is the first time he has developed a documentary from scratch, though he did narrate the award-winning 1977 film "Who Are the DeBolts? (And Where Did They Get 19 Kids?)".

"I have always been fascinated by the idea that we cannot be the only walking, talking beings in this gigantic universe," the sincere, genial Winkler explains. "In fact, maybe this is only one universe, and there are many others all stacked on top of each other. Who knows? Also, I've often thought that some kind of spacecraft was going to land in my vicinity somewhere, and that (the occupants) would be incredibly friendly. Why I feel this, I don't know, and it hasn't happened as far as I know ... but you know how you just have an

Center provides job assistance

By Alyanna B. Summers
Bayonet staff writer

A mobile Job Assistance Center van will visit Fort Benning from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. today at Soldiers' Plaza in the parking lot next to Dixie Road in front of Buildings 2601 and 2602, according to Army Career and Alumni Program officials.

"The mobile JAC is fully equipped with staff and computers," said Barbara Youngs, an ACAP transition services specialist.

"The mobile JAC will travel to remote sites to assist soldiers who are unable to travel to an installation prior to transition into the civilian work force," said Youngs. The mobile JAC's database contains information on approximately 2,600 employers, said Youngs.

The Army plans to provide each ACAP regional office with a mobile JAC, said Youngs.

The Army Career and Alumni Program is scheduled to open a Job Assistance Center on Fort Benning Nov. 12, according to officials.

The purpose of the JAC is to provide information and assistance concerning the civilian job market to soldiers, their family members and Department of the Army civilian employees leaving federal service, said Youngs.

"The staff will assist personnel by providing them with the tools they need for a successful job search," said Youngs.

"In addition to workshops on resumes, cover letter writing and interviewing techniques, JAC counselors will have access to a nationwide computer network, which provides information on jobs available throughout the country, average salaries and other information," said Youngs.

Although JAC will not provide a job placement service, counselors help determine the needs of the clients and schedule them for training, said Youngs.

"We encourage all commanders and sergeants major to inspect the mobile JAC and allow their soldiers to come and see the services that are available," said Youngs. "We also encourage any soldiers, family members or DA civilians anticipating a transition to the civilian sector in the next 12 months to visit our facilities."

For further information on the mobile JAC or any other ACAP services, call 545-4892 or 545-4902.

Under the wire

A soldier in One Station Unit Training, conducted by the Infantry Training Center at Sand Hill, crawls under the wire avoiding the sharp barbs. Negotiating the wire obstacle on the conditioning obstacle course requires skill and practice that all OSUT soldiers must master. All infantry soldiers receive this type of training.

Post to get new school

To be located in Bouton Heights housing area

Fort Benning Schools

There is going to be a new school at Fort Benning, according to plans announced Oct. 10 by Sen. Wyche Fowler.

Fowler came to Fort Benning's William H. Wilbur School to meet with Post Commander Maj. Gen. Jerry A. White; Dr. Rolla Baumgartner, Fort Benning's superintendent of schools; and other school officials.

At the meeting, Fowler announced that funding for the new school, as well as funding for a construction project at Edward A. White School, has been approved.

During the visit to Wilbur School, Fowler, White, Baumgartner, Richard Skinner, assistant superintendent for logistics, and Gail Wilson, Wilbur School's principal, toured the Wilbur School building and visited several classrooms to talk with students and teachers.

The new school, the Bouton Heights School, is now scheduled to open at the beginning of the 1993-94 school year. It will be built to house 620 elementary school students.

The 6,200 square-foot building will contain 36 classrooms, a media center, an office complex, a cafeteria and a kitchen. Conner Brothers of Auburn, Ala., was awarded the contract for construction of the building.

Elementary school students who reside in Bouton Heights and Davis Hill will attend the newest Fort Benning school.

The new school will permit the closing of the overcrowded and outdated Wilbur School facility. Wilbur School now serves 530 students in a school built to house 360 students. Eight trailers are currently in use at Wilbur School to provide the necessary classrooms.

"At Wilbur School, we have a student body that works hard and well, strong and exciting programs for those students, and excellent parental support," said Wilson. "What we need is a school building that allows us to better meet the needs of the children that we serve."

In addition to authorizing the new Bouton Heights building, the Congress has also authorized funding for a building project at White School that will provide a new wing to house four additional classrooms, a new media center and additional rest rooms. Wright Construction Company of Columbus was awarded the contract for the White School building project.

"We are most grateful to Senator Fowler and to Congressman Richard Ray, both of whom were instrumental in securing funding for these badly needed facilities," said Baumgartner.

FAO prepares for new pay system

By Richard Brill
Special to The Bayonet

Fort Benning soldiers will see a new Leave and Earnings Statement in April when the post switches to the new Army pay system known as Joint System Software, said Capt. Barbara Gregory, JSS project officer with the Finance and Accounting Office.

Some post soldiers, however, are already on the new pay system, Gregory said.

"About 115 personnel are already on the new system," she explained. "If they came from a post that's already using JSS, then they stay on it when they come here, even though the post as a whole is not on the new system."

In this way, Gregory said, the new system will be phased in gradually worldwide, rather than be implemented with a "flick of the switch."

Gregory added, however, that maintaining a dual system is causing some problems.

Ideally, incoming soldiers arriving from stations already on the new system should inform their Personnel Administration Centers so that pay-related documentation can be earmarked for special handling within the finance office, she said.

"When such documents are not identified, it slows up the processing and ultimately causes the pay change input to be late," Gregory said.

"When we see this condition exists in a particular PAC, we immediately send a pay team out to the PAC to explain what must be done," she said.

In March, the last month the current Joint Uniform Military Pay System will be used at Fort Benning, a training team from the Defense, Finance and Accounting Service in Indianapolis will train finance personnel and brief unit PACs on how the new system works.

Also with the last JUMPS LES, every soldier will receive a pamphlet that will explain the new system and how to read the new LES and Net Pay Advice Statement. .

Gregory said that the biggest change will be in the finance office and unit PACs. To most soldiers, the only noticeable difference will be the new LES and the Net Pay Advice Statement at mid-month.

"The system we have now is antiquated. It's been under the 'band-aid' syndrome for years," she said.

COMMENTARY

Soldierhood ain't always all that it's cracked up to be.

I know, I can hear it now, "Wow, dude, major discovery," or "Most excellent observation, man. From which planet did you just arrive?"

But really, let's be serious. The Army takes pretty good care of you and your family.

Rarely is there a question as to what you're supposed to be doing at any given moment during the duty day, which can circle the clock.

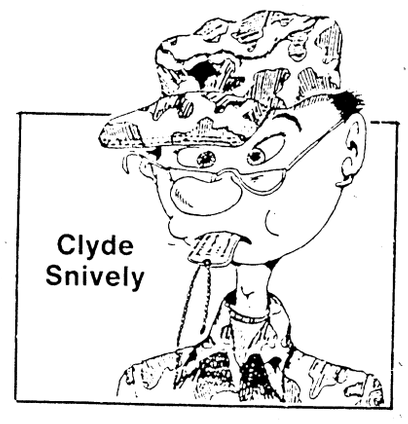
As for your off-duty time, as long as you remain on post, you're pretty well insulated from most of the maladies that face our civilian neighbors.

Of course, if you remain on post, you'll also miss out on quite a few happenings and events as well as meeting some interesting people in the community.

Guess what soldiers and senior citizens seem to have in common? They are more gullible than most.

How many times do you read or hear about senior citizens who just paid out their life savings to have their roof replaced, driveway re-paved, house sided by a salesman who just happened to be in the area, just happened to have enough roofing, tar, aluminum siding left over to do one more house?

Well the senior citizen bites, and the guy reels him or her in, one more sucker as he slaps on a few shingles, siding or light coat of oil and takes off.



Soldiers are like that. How can we be anything else? Aren't our "father figures," the sergeants and officers always saying, "trust me." So we run into an authority figure, and we trust him. We have another trait. It's called the "gotta have" trait.

We always seem to "gotta have," something.

Thus we plunk down $120 for a new pair of athletic shoes when our wall closet is filled to over flowing with shoes that still have plenty of tread left on them.

Or we're in a store and a C.B. just jumps off the shelf because it's marked down $10 and we "always wanted one of those;" although, after we get it installed, we find we don't use it because it interferes with our listening to heavy metal music as we cruise the malls.

Compounding the problem is our belief we are the sharpest

(albeit most gullible) barterers in the Western Hemisphere.

So if we see a "deal," then our "gotta have it," genes kick in and, before we know it, we're trading for a super deal on something we don't need and will probably break down the first time we use it.

If you stay on post and shop at the post exchange, you miss out on that fun because the PX doesn't make outlandish offers. Also it has a most generous return policy.

But when you're dealing on a street corner or even going to what appears a reputable place of business, there's a chance you might be playing sucker and playing into someone's hands.

So what happens when the deal turns sour?

Several recourses.

There's the Better Business Bureau, which will try to solve your problem by negotiating with the business. Another alternative is to talk to the Staff Judge Advocate claims people.

If your claim is legitimate but the SJA can't make any headway, the next step is the Armed Forces Disciplinary Control Board, which, once it gets enough complaints about unresolved disputes, can place a business off limits and while it may not save you, it will save your fellow soldier some grief.

So, you think you've been swindled? Report it. Tell the BBB or the SJA. Let them go to bat for you.

I must say, the majority of the businesses in Phenix City and Columbus are legitimate businesses with upstanding business practices.

If you see chamber of commerce of BBB signs or maybe Non-Commissioned Officer Association or Association of the U. S. Army logos, then chances are the owner is civic-minded and is going to maintain upstanding business practices.

The biggest tip off though—and you've heard this before (could it be true?)—"if it seems too good to be true, then it probably is."

Hispanic foods an intricate mix of cultures

By Rudi Williams
American Forces Information Service

Hispanic cuisine, like American-style cooking, has been influenced by immigrants from Africa. Europe, Asia and Hispanic countries. There are as many styles of cooking as there are Spanish-speaking countries.

"We need to educate people about the differences in Hispanic foods. The food is basically the same, but prepared differently in each country," said Marine Corps Sgt. Maj. Rafael A. Candelario of the 3rd Fleet Service Support Group in Okinawa, Japan.

"What's cooked in the Caribbean islands, for example, is basically the same food as on the west side of South America," said Candelario, a native of Puerto Rico who came to America at the age of 6. "But it tastes different because of the mixture of ingredients used by the native culture and the immigrants. That's one thing people, including some Hispanics, need to understand."

When military dining facilities and clubs have special ethnic food nights, Brig. Gen. Josue Robles Jr. would like to see a larger variety of Hispanic foods.

"Everybody seems to associate Hispanic foods with tacos, burritos, chili, tortillas and refried beans—that's Mexican food," said Robles, director of the Army budget..

"That type of food is Mexican-American tourist food," added Manuel Oliverez, a DoD manager who also owns a Mexican-American restaurant in Herndon, Va.

"Real Mexican cuisine," said Pete Montesinos, owner of Enriqueta's Restaurant, which specializes in authentic Mexican food, "is the second most popular in the world, second only to Chinese cuisine. It consists mostly of poultry, a large selection of seafood, vegetables, grains and a lot of fresh fruits."

"Real Mexican food is not hot," Montesinos said. "That's the stereotype, the chili powder story," Montesinos said. "We use more than 200 varieties of dried peppers for flavor. Some are hot, some mild, some sweet."

"When the Spaniards came, they enriched Mexican cuisine, but didn't change it," Montesinos explained. "Their style of cooking was absorbed into the Mexican cuisine. Before the Spaniards, everything was boiled, baked, steamed or grilled—nothing was fried. The use of pork did not exist, except for pit-roasted wild boar. The Spaniards brought rice to Mexico; beans are a Mexican food."

Montesinos divides Mexican cooking into three types. Gourmet cuisine uses ingredients from all over the world and is typified by such dishes as en Chiles en nog ada—stuffed peppers with walnut sauce. Regional cooking, the "original Mexican food," includes roast venison with pumpkin seed sauce, pheasant and red snapper with fancy sauces. "We use the spices indigenous to the different states of Mexico," he added. Typical cooking uses a lot of corn and flour dishes—tacos, burritos, tortillas. It's equivalent to American-style fast food.

"Puerto Rico has its own totally different set of foods," said Robles. "Some Mexican food is too spicy for a lot of Puerto Ricans. There are some things I like from my heritage that my mother made when I was a young kid—arroz con pollo (chicken and rice), bacalao (a dish made from dried, salted cod fish), lechon asado (roast pork)."

Rice and beans are staples of the average Puerto Rican. There are several dishes made with the indigenous vegetables. "You can say the same thing for the folks from Central and South America; our foods are prepared differently," Robles emphasized.

Making conscious decisions with energy

By Jennie L. McRae
Energy Branch

Army Energy Awareness Week for the Fort Benning community is Monday through Oct. 28. The theme of this fall campaign is "Choice for the Children." The commanding general will announce his community complete support of our energy conservation commitment. There will be an essay and poster contest for the Fort Benning school children with an awards ceremony for the winners. Displays will be placed in the Building 4 lobby, Martin Army Community Hospital and the Main Post Exchange Mall.

These and other promotional efforts will be made to remind us that the energy saving choices we make today and those we teach our children will go a long way toward conserving resources, not only for ourselves, but for future generations.

We appeal to the adults on behalf of the children and to the children on behalf of their future

There are demands placed upon us to resolve natural and human resources issues and problems. We need to help prepare our children to investigate and make wise decisions about research and development efforts for alternative and renewable energy resources, better energy consumption habits and a personal commitment to efficient energy use. These challenges encompass all facets of living and present us with the opportunity to participate in personal and social decisions. Energy, after all, is what makes all things go.

Energy education can resolve the conflict between our present lifestyle and the energy costs in both dollars and resources to produce and maintain a good life-style. The future that all of us must be willing to live in and accept is the one that we are creating right now by our daily decisions.

An energy conservation ethic applied on a day-to-day basis in our everyday life can induce cost-saving responses and productively change the American way of living.

By conserving energy in our homes and our workplace, we have the opportunity to make clear to the children that such an ethic is based on a realistic comprehension that so many of the raw materials on which current living standards rely will not be available much longer. The responsibility is ours—today's adults and today's children

It comes down to wise choice or wasted resources, which will you choose?

Sponsorship Recognition Day

The School of Americas celebrated its Commander's Sponsorship Recognition Day Oct. 5 on Olive and Stewart-Watson Fields. The day's activities included inter-departmental athletic events, children's games and a picnic. Children learn about energy awareness

Fort Benning Schools

"Choices for Children" is the focus for Energy Week, Monday through Friday.

The week is sponsored by the Energy Branch of Fort Benning's Directorate of Engineering and Housing. Each year the Energy Branch provides activities, materials, and speakers to students in each of the Benning schools.

These materials and activities are designed to promote student awareness of the present and future decisions that they can make regarding use of energy.

Making choices regarding energy usage is emphasized during that week, but those choices are discussed in classrooms throughout the Fort Benning schools throughout the school year.

Here three Fort Benning educators share their views on energy usage and on ways that they see the subject being treated in Benning classrooms.

Kris Clemons teaches third grade at Wilbur School. Dennis Gnas teaches eighth grade science at Faith School. Debra Mabry is assistant principal at Dexter School and also teaches reading half-time at Wilson School.

How do you feel about educating children about energy awareness and conservation?

Clemons — "I feel that it is crucial that my students recognize the importance of conservation of energy due to the critical nature of the problem to our planet."

Gnas — "I feel good about educating children about energy awareness and conservation. They need to know that energy supplies are limited and require costly technology to produce."

Mabry — "I think about the future, how the world is going to be tomorrow. My mind focuses on the well being of our world for our children as adults. Children need to be taught at school and at home about the importance of energy and ways to conserve it."

Are examples set in the classroom each day for enenergy conservation?

Clemons — "Yes, we stress the importance of turning off lights in empty rooms, turning off water faucets, and keeping the room temperature at an energy efficient level."

Gnas —"In the classroom, I believe that we're fairly conservative in our use of energy. I've not seen, for example, lights and equipment left on when a teacher's room is unoccupied; and often, at lunch time, the kids volunteer to flip the lights off. So they, too, are setting examples in the classroom."

Mabry —"We are growing more and more conscious of energy usage. Teachers throughout our school system do units on energy conservation. There is an array of activities that go on during the school day that are related to energy conservation."

Do you have some ideas for inspiring the children to make the right choices now and for their future?

Clemons — "I think that if we make the children more aware of the critical nature of the problem and present some alternatives to them, they will begin to make better choices for the future."

Gnas — "Education is the key. The children that I have come in contact with seem concerned about the earth and what is happening to it. One spin-off of this concern seems to be their growing awareness that energy needs to be conserved along with the earth. For inspiration, children need to know that their future may depend upon the availability of energy."

Mabry — "As educators, we are giving a lot of thought to ways to inspire our students to make the right choices regarding energy conservation. We have programs such as those conducted during Energy Week where community resources are used, as well as lessons based on energy conservation themes that occur throughout our school year. Both types of lessons serve as the foundation for inspiring our children to make the right choices."

As Fort Benning children learn about energy issues and ways to conserve energy, many of them are looking toward the future. When fourth-graders at Wilbur school considered energy usage, they came up with some suggestions for each other and for the adults in the community.

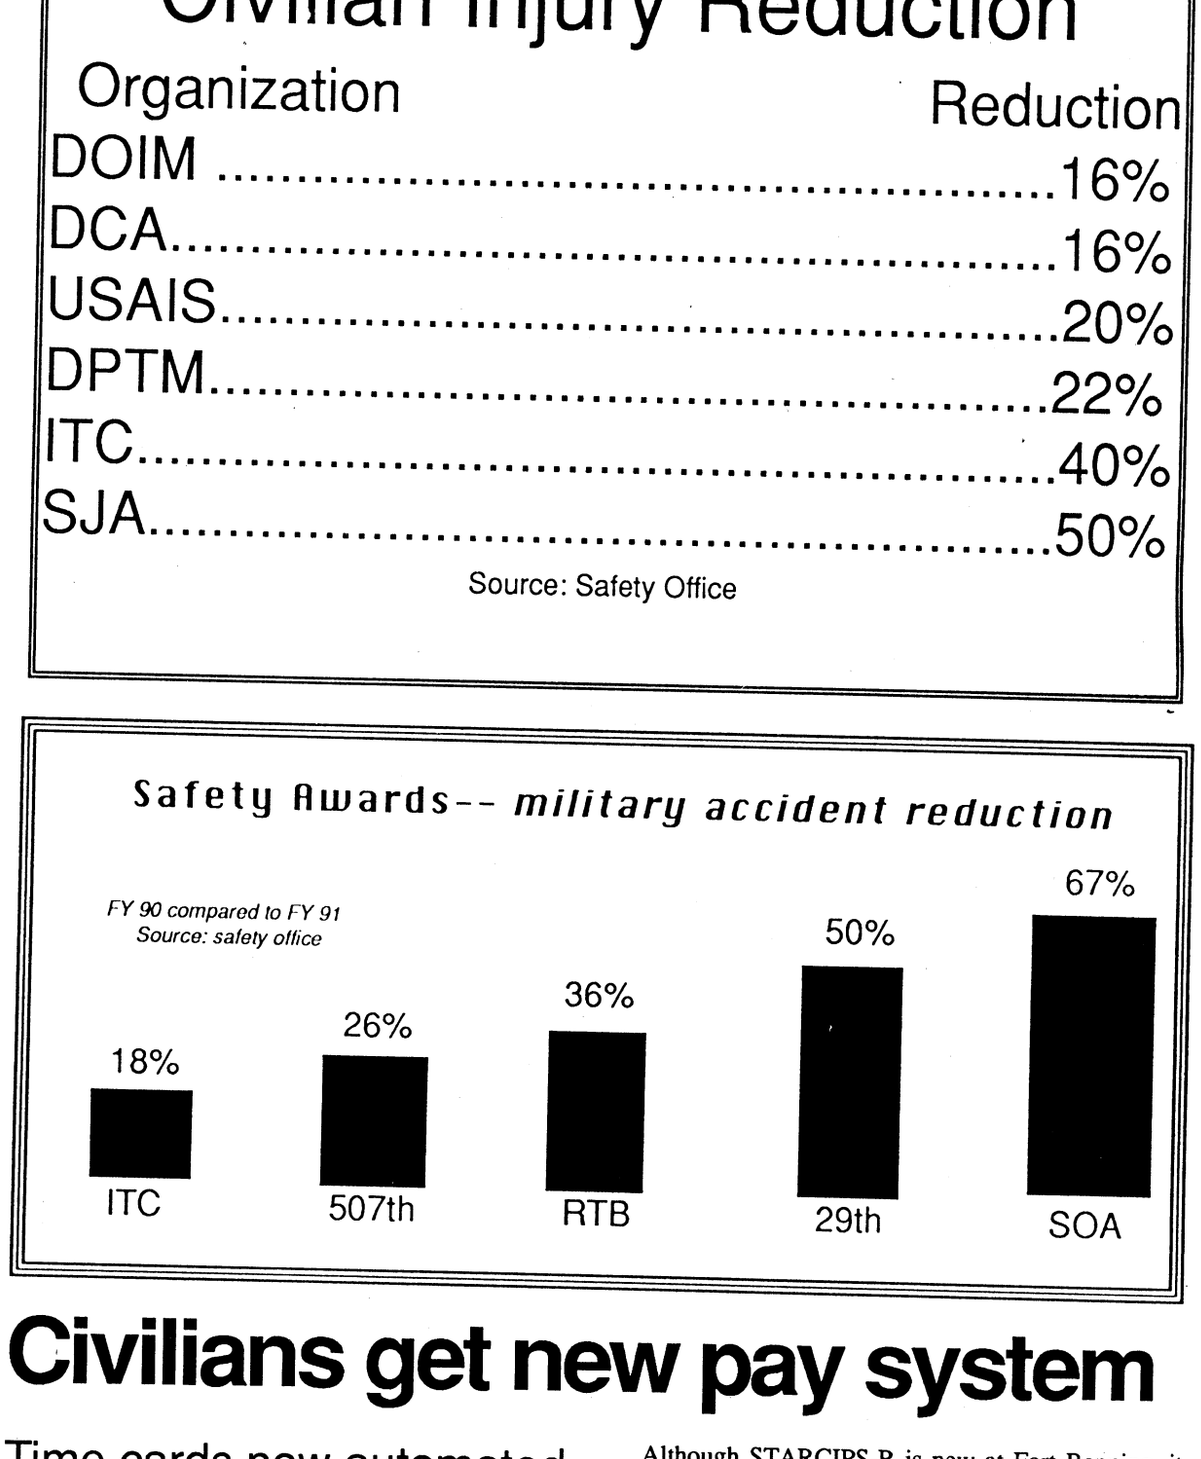
Here are just a few of the suggestions that the fourth-graders had for adults who want to improve the ways that energy is used now and in the future:

John Markum —"If you need light, open the curtains. If you draw on paper on one side, draw on the other side, too. Recycle lots of trash."

Stephanie Masters — "I would only turn on the light when I want to see. Turn the television on when you need to listen to very important news."

April Joy Gonzalez — "How I would improve how adults handle energy is that I would have a rule that you only use energy when you need to."

Energy Week— a time for all of us to think about energy usage and ways that individuals, younger and older can work to conserve the energy that is so important to our lives now and in the future.



Fort Benning students and teachers, with the support of Fort Benning's Energy Office, will make good use of the week.

Civilians get new pay system

Time cards now automated

By J. Jan Hoffman
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Fort Benning civilians are working under a new pay system that started Oct. 6.

The old system, the Standard Army Civilian Pay System has been renamed the Standard Army Civilian Pay System - Redesigned, called STARCIPS-R.

According to Deputy Finance and Accounting Officer Bobby King, the first checks to come out under the new system will be Oct. 31.

The biggest change is that instead of the timekeepers manually filling out time cards, time will be entered on a time sheet and given to the timekeeper in each section or directorate who will input the information into the computer to produce an automated time card.

This automated time card is then sent to the Directorate of Information Management, which then forwards it to a data base in Huntsville, Ala.

From Huntsville, the information is returned to the FAO at Fort Benning where a check is issued or the money is sent via electronic funds transfer to the employee's banking institution.

"The change should prove beneficial to the civilian employees and the FAO at Fort Benning," said King.

Although STARCIPS-R is new at Fort Benning, it has been in operation at Fort Sam Houston, Texas, for two years.

Since the system is new here, civilian personnel should allow 90 days to become well-trained with the system input, according to Terry Todd, chief, systems office.

Ouida Green, chief, civilian payroll, said that managers should appreciate the new system because many reports that came out every quarter may now be obtained on an as-required basis.

"Civilians will also notice a difference in their Earnings and Leave Statements," said Green. "The statements will show more information than before to include more types of leave categories not currently shown and more taxable wage information."

Todd said the change in the pay system will allow the civilian pay personnel more time for auditing instead of doing time card input.

She added that the 1,300 people who have been designated as timekeepers and certifiers have received between four and eight hours of training. Timekeepers and certifiers should be aware that if they have any questions or problems with their duties, there is a STARCIPS-R assistance center in building 1792 that will be open from 8 to 11:30 a.m. and from 1 to 4 p.m. until Thursday .

TRADOC gets new chief of staff

TRADOC News Services

FORT MONROE, Va — Maj. Gen. Donald M. Lionetti has been named the new Training and Doctrine Command deputy commanding general and chief of staff.

Lionetti, currently the commander of Fort Bliss, Texas, succeeds Maj. Gen. James W. van Loben Sels, who retired last month. Although no official date has been set for Lionetti to assume his new post, it should be in early November.

At Fort Bliss, Lionetti also commanded the U.S. Army Air Defense Artillery Center and was commandant of the Air Defense Artillery School.

The missile crews that performed so spectacularly during Operation Desert Storm were trained at the school.

Born in Jersey City, N.J., he was commissioned an artillery officer after graduation from the U.S. Military Academy in 1961. Then he followed a series of artillery assignments throughout the United States and Germany.

He served a combat tour in Vietnam from 1967 to 1968. From 1971 to 1974 he was an instructor and assistant professor at West Point.

Before taking command at Fort Bliss, he was director of plans for the U.S. Space Command, Peterson AFB, Colo.

Lionetti's decorations include the Defense Superior Service Medal, Legion of Merit, Bronze Star Medal, two Meritorious Service Medals and two Army Commendation Medals.

DEH lifts post's water conservation program

USAIC Public Affairs Office

The temporary water conservation program that had been in place since Sept. 13 was lifted by the Directorate of Engineering and Housing Oct. 11.

According to Col. Patrick D. J. Kenny, DEH director, one pump has been repaired and is back in operation.

The pump can supply the Fort Benning community with the normal supply of domestic water while the other pumps are repaired.

"The wholehearted cooperation of the Fort Benning community was greatly appreciated," said Kenny. "Thanks for your patience and cooperation.

Sudden Infant Death strikes with no warning

By Connie Bridges
Special to The Bayonet

Spc. James and Cindy Dell are the parents of a near miss baby, James Anthony Jr., with Sudden Infant Death Syndrome.

The Dells' son was born in Lich-Giessen, Germany, in a civilian hospital the day that Desert Storm began.

In his first 4 1/2 months of life, baby James was at home with his family only eleven days. The rest of the time he was in the hospital with concurrent pneumonia.

Since arriving in the states in June when his father was given a compassionate reassignment, he has spent time at Martin Army Community Hospital and at the SIDS Institute in Atlanta. He is finally at home with his family though still on a monitor when he sleeps to check if his breathing stops or his heart rate drops below a specified level.

The entire experience, however, has made his mother an advocate of becoming involved in October as SIDS Awareness Month.

According to the SIDS Institute in Atlanta, a total of more than 7,000 babies die from this cause in the United States each year.

The risk of SIDS increases if an infant weighs less than 3 1/2 pounds at birth, if there is a sibling who died of SIDS, if an infant was exposed to cocaine, heroin or methadone during pregnancy, and if the baby is the second or succeeding infant born to a teen-age mother.

For the Dells, James Jr. was their fifth child. There were no preceding problems with SIDS with their other children. However, he was a twin who weighed a little over five pounds, and the other twin was stillborn.

Symptoms for increased risk of SIDS include having a "not-breathing" episode, or apnea, lasting longer than 15 seconds, having a sudden episode of breathing difficulty, blueness or paleness associated with a "not-breathing" episode or difficulty in breathing, and excessive gagging or choking during feeding.

Baby James had apnea episodes from the beginning, and his parents were taught cardiopulmonary resuscitation so they would know what to do if the monitor indicated trouble at home.

Cindy said a baby looking healthy is deceptive because they have not been able to pinpoint the cause. Ninety percent of the deaths occur before 6 months of age, and 99 percent before the first birthday.

Connie Bridges/Special to The Bayonet

Cindy Dell and baby, James Jr.

When a child does stop breathing, sometimes he or she can be revived by the monitor alarm alone or by gentle shaking. CPR is not always needed.

Cindy noted there is lot of guilt associated with having a child with SIDS. "It also makes others afraid and uncomfortable about handling your baby."

Having a child with SIDS is a financial hardship for the family too because care at the SIDS Institute in Atlanta is only covered by CHAMPUS at 80 percent. Therefore, parents are responsible for a deductible and the remaining 20 percent.

Cindy is looking into starting a support group for parents of children with SIDS on post.

However, anyone who even suspects that their child has a problem in this area should take him to the doctor on post for immediate care.

A referral for the high technology testing done at the Atlanta institute can come later.

Desert Storm hero to receive Silver Star

By Connie Bridges
Special to The Bayonet

"He exposed himself to enemy fire in order to redirect the fire away from his platoon sections. He assisted the maneuver of the task force by pinpointing and maintaining contact with enemy forces until they were destroyed."

These were the reasons cited that Capt. Richard G. Hobson will be receiving a Silver Star from Deputy Post Commander Brig. Gen. Carl Ernst for his actions during Desert Storm.

Hobson was to have received the Silver Star from Vice President Dan Quayle before he left his unit, 7th Battalion, 6th Infantry, 3rd Brigade, 1st Armored Division, Bamberg, Germany. However, he left the country a few days prior to the vice president's arrival.

Currently, Hobson is in the Infantry Officer Advanced Course at Fort Benning.

During Desert Storm, he served as the scout platoon leader for his battalion from Germany.

He said their mission during the 100-hour war was to engage the Iraqi Republican Guard Force, and they met one unit after another from the time they crossed the berm until the time of the ceasefire.

Their staging area in Saudi Arabia was near King Khalid Military City. From there they went to an assembly area about 30 kilometers south of the Wadi al Batin.

When the ground war began, his unit initially met with the 26th Iraqi Division, a unit that served as a border guard. Hobson called them "an early warning device" for the Iraqi Army.

They met with minimum resistance here because Hobson's unit surprised them.

His brigade linked back up with the 1st Armored Division until a U.S. A-10 Thunderbolt plane discovered Republican Guard troops in a blocking position up ahead.

Then his brigade split off again, and his scout platoon screened the brigade front.

It was Hobson's job to make a positive identification of the enemy within about 500 meters so that fratricide among friendly forces would be less likely, point out any possible drop the enemy might have on his wingmen, and then take out the "enemy's eyes"- their scouts.

By the time the ceasefire was declared, Hobson had engaged three separate Republican Guard units, whose main deficiency seemed to be their "scrambled, chaotic communications."

By the end of the war, the U.S. 7th Battalion/3rd Brigade had moved to the northern Kuwaiti border.

Hobson believes he did not lose any soldiers through all of this because the brigade commander, the battalion commander and the operations officer made "good calls."

"The success of the mission should be attributed to the whole scout platoon, not just to me," he said.

Though he called in the artillery and air support and kept his eyes on the objective and confirming the enemy, it was teamwork that made everything come together at the right time.

Capt. Richard G. Hobson

Hobson initially joined the military by serving in the Marine Corps from 1978 to 1982. After his tour, he earned a bachelor's degree in biology from North Georgia College in Dahlonega.

He then went to Officer Candidate School and was commissioned a reserve officer in 1987.

In Germany he served as a mechanized platoon leader and a scout platoon leader with the 7th Battalion, 6th Infantry.

After the Advanced Course, he has follow-on orders for the 5th Battalion, Ranger Training Brigade.

Hobson's awards include the Bronze Star, Meritorous Service Medal, Army Achievement Medal, Marine and Army Good Conduct Medals, National Defense Service Medal, Southwest Asia Campaign Medal with two bronze stars, Overseas Service Ribbon with numeral two, Army Parachutist Badge, a Ranger Tab and the Combat Infantryman Badge.

He is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Bernard Clouatre of Clarksville, Ga.

Hobson and his wife, Loretta, are the parents of two children, Amanda, 4, and Andrew, 1.

Handicapped employee scores with TRADOC award

By Connie Bridges
Special to The Bayonet

"Her physical condition has never been a deterrent to her abilities. Her outstanding achievements reflect great credit upon her, the 30th Adjutant General Battalion and the United States Army."

Such read the citation Oct. 11 as Margaret Kambitz, clerk-typist for the Operations Office, 30th Adjutant General Battalion (Reception), received the 1991 Outstanding Army Employee with a Disability Award.

She will serve as the nominee for both Fort Benning and TRADOC to the Department of the Army, according to Maxine Wing of the Civilian Personnel Office Awards Section.

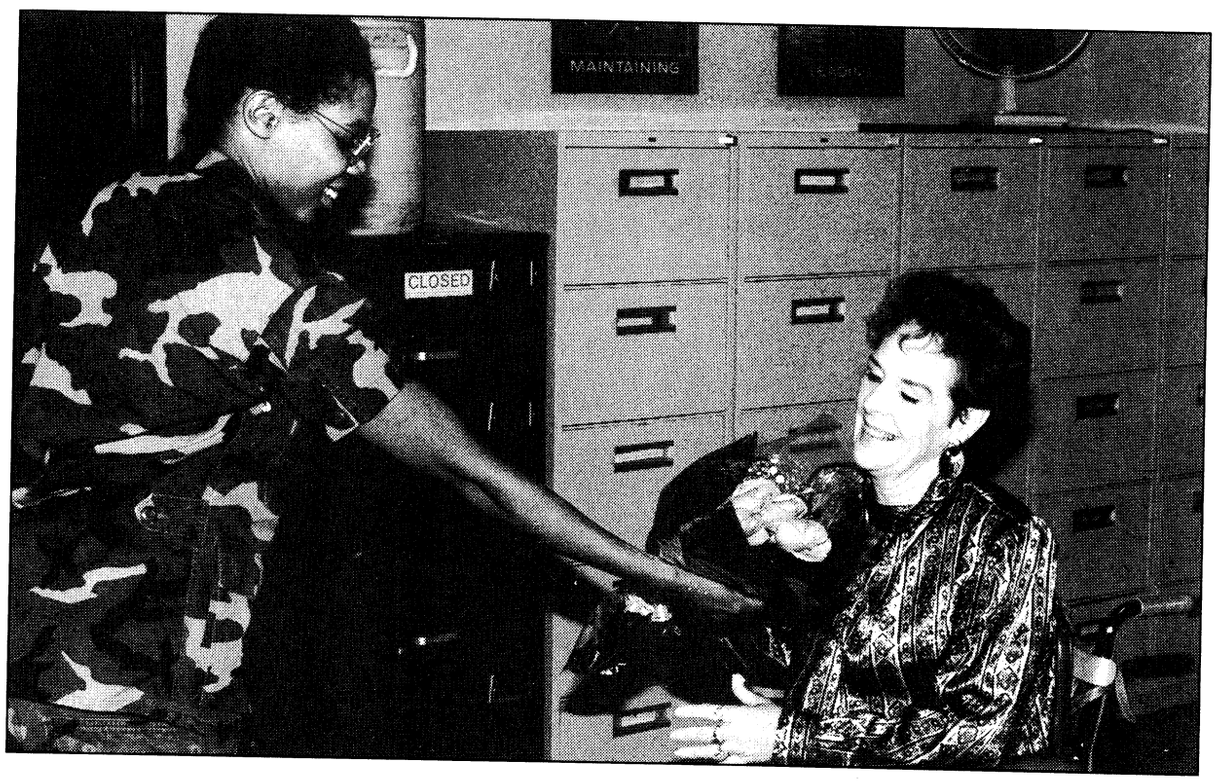
Wing noted that the criteria for selection included initiative, inspiration, involvement, degree of handicap, agency and other recognition and the performance of duties.

Kambitz has been a civil service employee for six years. In her job at Fort Benning she has distinguished herself in outstanding administrative support to her battalion during the recent call-up of 4,000 individual ready reserves.

In addition, she pioneered a standard operating procedure manual for drill sergeants and has developed an extensive civilian personnel newsletter.

Among Kambitz's previous awards are the Columbus 1989 Mayor's Committee Handicapped Employee of the Year, Exceptional Performance Certificates for 1986, 1988 and 1989, Employee of the Month for February, 1986, January, 1987 and February, 1990, and On-the-Spot Awards for February, 1987 and October, 1990.

She is currently chairwoman of the Mayor's Committee for the Handicapped as appointed by Mayor Frank Martin, chairwoman of the Nominating Committee of the local ACCESS organization and a member of the Executive Committee of Freedom for Handicaps.



Kambitz was also instrumental in the installation of ramps and automatic doors for the handicapped around Columbus.

A paraplegic as the result of a fall in a high school gymnasium, she has been completely paralyzed since she was a young adult.

When her first marriage ended in divorce, Kambitz began to pursue her education. She earned a bachelor's degree in psychology at Columbus College and a master's degree in education from Georgia State University.

Unable to find employment in her field of interest, she applied for a position at Fort Benning.

Kambitz has raised a son, Michael, now 23, learning that there was always a way to accomplish a goal if the will was there.

Post observes national Fire Prevention Week

By Richard Brill
Special to The Bayonet

"We have a mission to accomplish," said post fire inspector Billy Poteet.

"Nine out 10 fire deaths occur before the firemen get there. Through fire prevention and education we have a shot at saving them."

To accomplish that mission, post firefighting personnel conducted several activities that emphasized the theme, "Fire won't wait...plan your escape," as part of national Fire Prevention Week, Oct. 6 to 12.

Visual displays and pamphlets containing fire prevention tips were featured in building four and the main mall.

Post fire stations could be visited throughout the week by anyone wishing to take a tour.

The main activities, however, were at post schools, where students were treated to a puppet show and fire prevention talks, and got to see a firetruck close up.

The puppet show allowed firefighters to get their message across in a way that was both entertaining and educational, featuring puppets Fireman Bob, Elvis the Hound Dog, and others in skits that taught children how to react to different emergencies.

Poteet said that educating children is the best approch.

"The children can take what they learn back home with them and tell their parents to have fire drills, a plan for escape, and a designated place to meet," said Poteet.

Mayors' Association receives donation

By Janice Mann
Bayonet community writer

The Fort Benning Community Life Mayors' Association was awarded a $250 "Community Improvement Youth Grant" from Metropolitan Life recently.

President of the Community Life Mayors' Council Sally Dover accepted the check from Mara Malins, the local Metropolitan Life representative.

Darlene Perry, installation Community Life officer, said that last year Metropolitan Life sent letters to local organizations announcin the grant that would be awarded to projects where young people would be directly involved in the work to be done.

After considering several items needing attention on post, the council voted on a plan in which Fort Benning Boy Scouts and Girl Scouts would plant earth-holding plants along the paved bus stops on Custer Road to reduce soil erosion in those areas and submitted the plan to the grant committee.

According to the grant request, the money will be used to help those participating "earn merit badges, give youth a sense of pride in their community and at the same time beautify the area."

Concert Saturday

By Connie Bridges
Special to The Bayonet

Rhythm and blues performers Levert, B Angie B, Damien Dame, the Rude Boys and Keisha Jackson, will be in concert at Doughboy Stadium Saturday from 1 p,m, ending by 6 p.m., with the gates opening at noon.

According to Brian Smith, Marketing director for the Directorate of Community Activities, this concert is the first of its kind on Fort Benning.

"During Desert Storm, Lee Greenwood came, and several years ago, there was Lou Rawls. But this one features three of the Top 10 Singles artists as listed in the most recent issue of Jet magazine."

Smith said tickets are priced about 40 to 50 percent below those outside the installation. Tickets for military members and their family members with identification will be $10 in advance and $12 at the door. Tickets for civilians will be $14 in advance and $16 at the door.

"Special care has been taken," he said, "in the selection of clean, wholesome entertainment that is appropriate for singles and families."

Military police are making plans to screen those attending the concert in an effort to keep contraband from entering the stadium. Also, coolers, picnic boxes, bottles and cans will not be permitted in the stadium. Post officials say they want the concert to be as safe and enjoyable as possible.

Main gate traffic patterns on Benning Boulevard will change to three lanes for incoming vehicles to Fort Benning at 11:30 a.m. Saturday. At 5:30 p.m., it will change to three lanes outgoing from post.

Also, Military Police will operate a lost and found desk in the Infantry Center Chapel activities building across from the stadium.

The Information, Tickets and Registration office, building 247, has tickets. Department of the Army civilians may purchase tickets there, too. There are various off-post outlets. Further ticket information may be obtained by calling 545-7535.

Current hits include: Levert - the album "Rope a Dope Style" and the single "Baby I'm Ready"; B Angie B - the album "B Angie B" and the single "So Much Love"; Damien Dame - the single "Exclusivity"; and The Rude Boys - the album "Are You Lonely for Me?" and the singles "Heaven" and "Written All Over Your Face."

Smith noted the concert is early the same day as the Tuskegee/Morehouse football game at Columbus Memorial Stadium, and some people might find it to be a day filled with entertainment in Columbus.

World War II documentaries showing at Infantry Museum

By Richard Brill
Special to The Bayonet

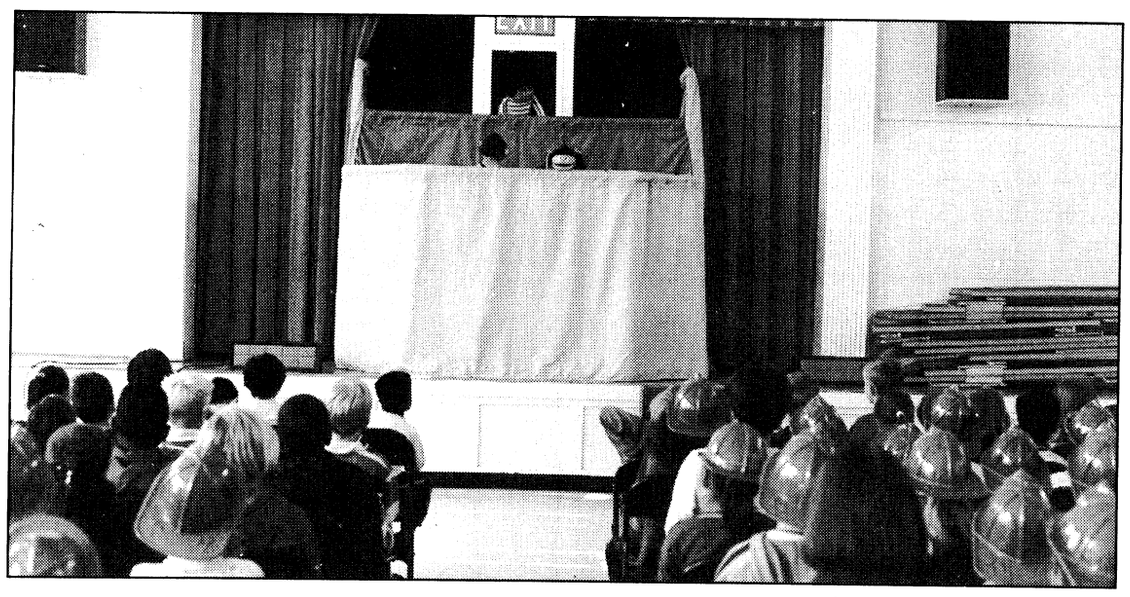
The famed film series, "Why We Fight," directed by the late Frank Capra, is being shown at the National Infantry Museum.

The documentary series was created at the request of Army Chief of Staff George C. Marshall, who wanted something that could be shown to new Army recruits to explain why they were were being sent to fight in World War II.

Museum Director Dick Grube explained that the films are being shown both as a tribute to Capra, who died recently, and to commemorate the 50th anniversary of the war.

Grube said that showing the films, "reminds us of the fact that he (Capra) contributed to World War II in a significant way, not as a soldier in the front lines, but as a soldier producing films."

According to Grube, Capra' s films were so well received that they were shown in civilian theatres as well and received the New York Film Critics Award in 1944 as the best documentary series.



"In fact, Winston Churchill and Joseph Stalin even requested copies," Grube remarked.

A total of seven films were produced from 1942 to 1945. Five are being shown at the museum, one each week, said Grube.

Two films, "The Nazis Strike" and "Divide and Conquer," have already been shown. The remaining three, "The Battle of Britain," "The Battle of China" and "War Comes To America," can be seen at the museum's Rockerfeller Auditorium during museum hours.

Museum curator Frank Hanner, emphasized the historical importance of the films.

"These films helped mold the American spirit for World War II and helped unify the nation for war," he said·

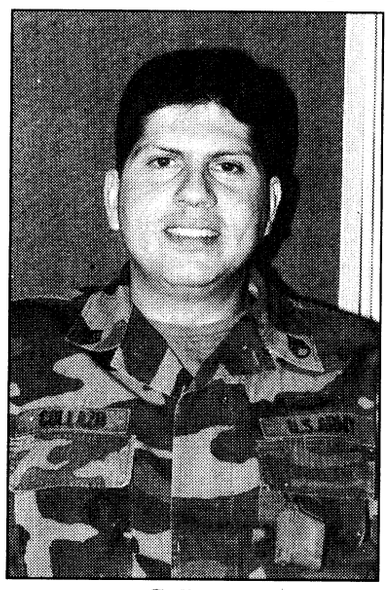
Soldier talks about Hispanic heritage

By Richard Brill
Special to The Bayonet



When Edwin Collazo Jiminez came to the United States from Puerto Rico in 1986, he could barely speak English.

Now, besides speaking the language fluently, he's a staff sergeant in the U.S. Army and stationed here at Fort Benning.

Like members of many minorities, Collazo saw the Army as a way to better himself.

"I joined the Army because of my financial situation and also because I was looking for progress, for a better understanding of the United States, and I was seeking self-improvement," he said, explaining his motivations for enlisting.

Collazo, who is assigned to Headquarters, 2nd Battalion, 54th Infantry on Sand Hill, plans to make the Army a career. Currently he works in personnel actions and will soon be the battalion equal opportunity representative.

Collazo

Even though he plans to make the United States his home, Collazo is still proud of his Hispanic heritage and visits Puerto Rico whenever he can.

"We have a very culturally oriented family, and here in the U.S. we have holidays we celebrate independently, like Three Kings Day, a Puerto Rican version of Santa Claus," he said.

Collazo said that when he first came to America, it took a while to get used to the cultural differences.

"Our cultures are completely different. I came from a place where we have more control over our dependents. I see that with America, as soon as you turn 18 you're out the door. That's a big difference."

While he feels that celebrating cultural heritage is important, Collazo beleives that the reason the military is a good place for minorities is because it's run on the merit system.

"In the Army, you're not seen as a minority. If you can perform and you're an excellent soldier, then progress is in your hands. You're the only person who can stop yourself," said Collazo.

Check dental facts

U.S. Army Dental Activity

Test your dental knowledge by answering the following questions.

Then check your answers and the explanations below.

Questions:

1. At what age should a child first see a dentist? A— age 1, B— age 10, C— age 5 or D— when a dental problem occurs

2. Every child gets cavities. A— true or B— false

3. It is normal for your gums to bleed a little when you brush you teeth. A— true or B— false

4. What is the upper age limit for having teeth straightened with braces. A— about 35, B— age 50, C— no limit or D— age 21

5. What is the major cause of tooth loss in adults? A— gum disease, B— tooth decay, C— accidents or D— age

Answers:

1. A— Fort Benning pediatric dentists recommend bringing a child in for the first dental visit at 1 year of age. This gives the child a chance to get familiar with the environment, gives the parents a chance to learn proper dental hygiene and allows the dentist to detect any early problems with gums or teeth. If you are on the Dependent Dental Plan and are going to see a dentist in town, notify them that you are on the plan and that your child is at least 1 year old.

2. False. With fluoridation treatments and fluoridated water, cavities are 60 percent less common in children today than in 1970.

3. False. It is not normal for your gums to bleed when brushing your teeth. This is a symptom of gingivitis (inflammation of the gums) which is the first sign of gum disease. Bleeding could also be a warning sign that your brushing and flossing techniques need review. The best step at this stage is to have a professional cleaning.

4. C— Normally the age for getting braces is 12 to 14. This is when all the permanent teeth have come in and orthodontic measures can take advantage of the growth spurt children undergo just prior to puberty. Adult orthodontic treatments, which have become more popular, take longer but the patients are more motivated.

5. A— Periodontal (gum) disease is the major cause of tooth loss in adults. Even people with no cavities often have gum disease. Since there is no pain associated with gum disease, years can pass with no sign of the trouble except loosening of the teeth and bad breath. If you keep your teeth free of plaque, you can avoid gingivitis the forerunner of periodontal disease. If you avoid gingivitis and periodontal disease, you can avoid tooth loss.

ASK THE JUDGE

By Jane M. Winand
Staff Judge Advocate's Office

Q: I got a will when I was stationed in Germany last year. I just arrived at Fort Benning and I plan to retire here in Georgia. I overheard a guy in the motorpool talking about a living will, is it the same thing as a will?

A: A Last Will and Testament is different from a living will. Recent advances in medical technology have provided us with better health and longer lives. However, these advances have also created what the United States Supreme Court described as the "twilight zone of suspended animation where death commences while life, in some form, continues."

Thus, those patients desiring the opportunity to have nature take its course and die with dignity must make it clear, preferably in writing, that they do not want to be hooked up to life-sustaining equipment.

You already have a Last Will and Testament that provides for the payment of debts, the appointment of an executor (administrator) and a guardian for your children, and the distribution of assets upon your death. However, additional documents, such as a living will and a durable power of attorney, may be necessary to adequately protect your loved ones.

A living will is a document, signed while you have the necessary mental capacity, which states that you are not to be put on life-sustaining equipment and that the natural process of dying is to be uninterrupted. Most states require that a doctor or doctors certify that the patient is brain dead before the living will will have any force and effect.

Some state legislatures have drafted living wills for use by that state's residents. Other states have not yet enacted living will provisions. For those states that have not yet provided for a living will, there is a general living will format. If you have a living will, your loved ones will not be faced with the difficult decision of whether or not to put you on life-sustaining equipment or, if you are already being sustained by such apparatus, whether or not to remove you. Each state's living will is a little different from the living wills of other states. It is best to obtain a living will for the state of your permanent residence. You should also consider having a living will for the state in which you and your spouse are currently stationed, if the assignment will be fairly lengthy.

Georgia now has what is termed a durable power of attorney, which is used for medical care. The durable power of attorney differs from the living will in that it can be used for a longer period of time - possibly for years while the original drafter is unable to make medical decisions. The living will takes the end of the individual's life when the doctor has determined that the patient is brain dead, and merely serves as written direction regarding the use of life-sustaining equipment. The Georgia durable power of attorney also contains provisions similar to the living will addressing the use of life-sustaining equipment.

If you wish to discuss the necessity for these documents with a Legal Assistance Attorney, call the office at 545-3281/3282 and request an appointment. The Fort Benning SJA Office is located at Building 5 at the corner of Vibbert and Sigerfoos Streets.

Tips for monitoring home expenses

By Joe Zorc
PM Editorial Services

Expenses vary from household to household. Your family's food costs, for example, are probably not the same as those of your neighbors. In the same vein, your family's water bill more than likely differs from your neighbors' bills.

Since the majority of homes are individually metered, you can monitor your family's water use. Sixty gallons of water per day per person is normal while 100 gallons is very heavy and wasteful. Take time out to look at your family's level of conservation and consider the following ways to keep your water bills at a minimum.

• Check all faucets from the attic to the cellar, and replace worn washers and defective fixtures. A small drip can mean hundreds of gallons of water wasted a day.

• Toilets consume about 45 percent of the water used in the household. Conventional toilets use five to seven gallons per flush. The new water-saving flush toilets use less than 3.5 gallons. Check your toilet for leaks by placing food coloring in the tank and watching the bowl to see if it leaks through without flushing. If color comes through, the toilet needs adjustment, repair or replacement.

• Bathing, especially showers, accounts for 35 percent of household water use. A 10-minute shower, for instance, uses approximately 50 gallons, while a tub bath uses around 25 gallons. Water flow through the shower head may range from five to 15 gallons per minute. By installing a flow-control head this can be brought down to three gallons per minute without affecting the aesthetic "feel." Therefore, a large amount of water can be saved by either using a flow-control shower head or by simply taking shorter showers.

• Automatic dishwashers and clothes washers use varying amounts of water. A dishwasher, for example, uses an average of 25 gallons a cycle, and clothes washers use 42 gallons a cycle. The best way to save water when using these machines is to make sure that—whether it's dishes or clothes—you always wash a full load. And, when the time comes to replace either your dishwasher or clothes washer, buy a machine with a water conservation design.

Outside the house, one activity that uses a large amount of water is car washing. Using a bucket and/or handcontrolled hose nozzle for car washing conserves more water than an open, running hose.

Lawn and garden care also require a large amount of water. Watering to keep the lawn green throughout the summer can be expensive and wasteful during a time when water is needed for other more essential consumer needs. In many areas, lawns go dormant in summer periods and come back when the season changes. But if you do water your lawn, make sure to do it in the early morning or evening to prevent loss through evaporation.

Raccoons present rabies risk in area

Veterinary Services

Recently, a raccoon found on Kelley Hill tested positive for rabies. However, there were no known human exposures.

Rabies, a very serious viral neurological disease, is still a potential hazard in our modern society. Most people feel the disease is all but eradicated because they seldom hear of cases of rabies and because of vaccination programs for domestic pets. But this deadly disease does indeed still exist, predominately in wild populations of animals.

Rabies is a preventable disease. However, once clinical signs appear, it is generally considered fatal.

Last year, Georgia reported 202 cases of rabies, 143 of which were raccoon rabies. In this region raccoons almost always represent the biggest risk for rabies, followed by skunks, foxes and bats.

Some of the more common signs exhibited by rabid wild animals are unusual, aggressive behavior and biting and frothing at the mouth (heavy salivation). Another abnormal sign exhibited by a wild animal might be a raccoon or skunk being out in the middle of the day and showing little or no fear of people. Some animals with this disease may be bewildered or aware of their environment, and may actually approach people.

Anyone who sees an animal, whether wild or domesticated, behaving in such a manner, should not approach it, but call the Military Police at once. Anyone bitten or scratched, should go to the hospital for treatment and report the incident. A good rule of thumb is: do not handle any wild animal and notify the Military Police, who will transport the animal to Veterinary Services.

Remember to vaccinate your dog or cat for rabies, beginning at 3 months of age and then yearly or triennially.

If you have any questions about rabies or vaccinations, call the Veterinary Treatment Facility at 545-1127 between the hours of 8 a.m and noon and 3 to 4 p.m. for more information.

Examine for dental dangers

U.S.Army Dental Activity

Self examination has been very successful in diagnosing breast cancer. The same idea can be used for early detection of oral cancer.

Dentists are trained to perform thorough examinations of the mouth to find soft-tissue pathologic changes as well as dental abnormalities.

Patients can learn to carry out many elements of such examinations of the mucous membranes themselves. Careful attention is particularly important for older patients with histories of alcohol or tobacco abuse.

Symptoms that demand immediate attention include leukoplakia (white, thickened patches that cannot be rubbed off and may show cracks), reddening, or fungus-like growths, especially on tongue, floor of the mouth or cheek. Look for color changes (red, white or blue), swelling, ulcers and bumps. Feel for roughness, swelling, numbness, thickening, hardness, loose teeth or painful area.

Examine your mouth once a month and alert your dentist or physician to any changes in the mouth that remain for more than two weeks. Ask your dentist to explain what he is looking for the next time he examines your mouth. Ask him to teach you self examination.

Cap set on high medical bills

Martin Army Community Hospital

The limit, or "cap," on how much service families will have to pay for CHAMPUS-covered medical bills in a fiscal year began Oct. 1.

The cap is $1,000 for active duty families, and $10,000 for all other CHAMPUS and CHAMPVA eligible families.

The cap helps protect families from catastrophically-high medical expenses. It applies to the amount of money needed to meet the family's annual deductibles for outpatient care, and cost shares for both inpatient and outpatient care, based on CHAMPUS allowable charges for covered care received in any one fiscal year.

Bills for care not covered by CHAMPUS, or charges beyond those CHAMPUS determines to be reasonable, or "allowable," are not capped; they must be paid in full by family members or their sponsors. Likewise, costs paid by families under CHAMPUS' Program for the Handicapped are not counted toward the cap.

FOIA shouldn't interfere with mail

Staff Judge Advocate

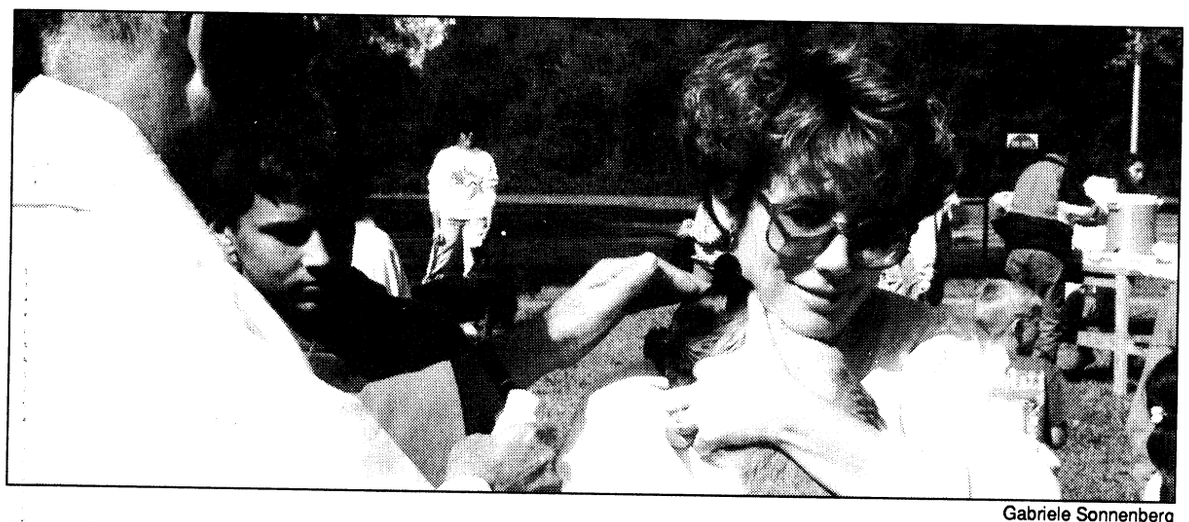
Recently, civilian employees received several pieces of what most would characterize as "junk mail" at their workplaces. Because they had not given out their addresses nor requested that this mail be sent to them, many employees expressed concern over the fact that businesses were able to obtain their work addresses.

Rumors abounded that the Directorate of Civilian Personnel, Public Affairs Office, or other organization had sold lists of civilian employees to these businesses. In fact, the information was provided pursuant to the Freedom of Information Act.

The FOIA is a federal statute, enacted in 1966, which provides for the release of information from government records to requesters. The theory of the FOIA, which is implemented by Army Regulation 25-55, is that the public has a right to information concerning the activities of its government.

Department of Defense policy is to conduct its activities in an open manner and provide the public with the maximum amount of accurate and timely information concerning its activities, consistent with the legitimate public and private interests of the American people.

Another statute, the Privacy Act, protects certain personal information, such as home addresses of military and civilian personnel, from being released to requesters. Courts have ruled, however, that rosters of employees which indicate their work addresses are normally releasable.



As a public employee, you are subject to greater scrutiny than you might be if you worked for a private enterprise.

The post agency that handles requests for information under the provisions of the FOIA is the FOIA Office, located in the U.S. Army Information Systems Command. A request for records must be in writing and must specifically state that it is made pursuant to the FOIA. Although records are not for sale, requests must state a willingness to pay fees incurred for copying, searching and computer costs.

Given the volume of mail that passes through the center, however, and the existence of exceptions to the rule, it is impossible to stop every piece of unofficial mail.

For more information on the FOIA, contact Marion Hammons at the installation FOIA Office (545-5356), or the Administrative and Civil Law Division of the Office of the Staff Judge Advocate (545-3285).

Caring a universal language

USAIC Chaplins Office

A friendly smile, a caring glance, a moment of patience these are the most important prerequisites for volunteer English teachers at the Religious Education Center.

This year marks the 21st year of the class designed for those for whom English is a second language.

The class is a rich blend of culture, customs and language, yet students are bonded by circumstance and a desire to learn.

This helps them to make the most of their stay in the United States - whether it's for a few months or for a lifetime.

They come from Central and South America, Puerto Rico, Spain, Italy and hosts of other nations. They explore English and the American way of life, from traditions and history to everyday colloquialisms.

"We not only teach English, but we discuss, for instance, how to place catalog orders by phone," said Betty Smalser, a volunteer originally from California.

The weekly class seems to enhance the lives of the students. It helps to accept the surroundings better and develop not only a book knowledge, but the required practice as well, a student explained.

With contagious enthusiasm, the students and teachers alike continue to meet and learn together.

More than two decades of special interest in those for whom English is a second language has blended cultures and communicated the international language of caring.

Episcopals share their faith

USAIC Chaplins Office

The Episcopal congregation meets Sundays at 11 a.m. for Holy Eucharist at the Regimental Chapel, Sand Hill. Chaplain (Capt.) George Holston provides pastoral care for Episcopalians at Fort Benning.

The Episcopalians have the same general beliefs as members of the Church of England. They stress the authority of the Bible, accept the Apostles and Nicene creeds, and observe the sacraments of baptism and Holy Communion.

The Bible, being the principal written source of religious information for all ages is complemented by the "Book of Common Prayer" and the "Hymnal."

"The Book of Common Prayer" is a manual for worship, and, as such, is both the statement of what the Episcopalian believe and their call to minister. It presents a flexible format for present-day worshipping communities to express their faith, yet links the Episcopalian securely to their history and tradition.

Approximately 95 percent of the "Book of Common Prayer" is taken from God's word.

"The Episcopal congregation at Fort Benning welcomes people of all ages to come and be part of this rich worship experience," Holston said.

PWOC holds mini-retreat, luncheon

USAIC Chaplins Office

On Oct. 3, the Protestant Women of the Chapel held a mini-retreat with a potluck luncheon at the Religious Education Center.

A special guest speaker, Barbara Willey, described as "The Army's answer to Erma Bombeck," shared her entertaining and inspirational testimony of the lifesty'e of a military wife.

W lley s explanations on how to conquer the every day struggles of the Army life, seemed to "hit home," since the audience consisted of military wives.

"Every time we move from base to base we not only leave memories but we gain memories, as well," explains Willey. Everyone of her guidelines are based on biblical principals. For instance, in Philippians 4 :11-12, we are called to be content in all circumstance.

Her compassion triggered tears and laughter, hearts seemed to be touched by her inspirational testimony.

The location of the event was tastefully decorated.

The PWOC women arranged several tables with numerous, traditional crafts, pictures and antiques of various countries.

Also, the decoration for the lunch buffet was specially styled for this event.

Eighty-eight women participated and based on the response, the mini-retreat was truly a success.

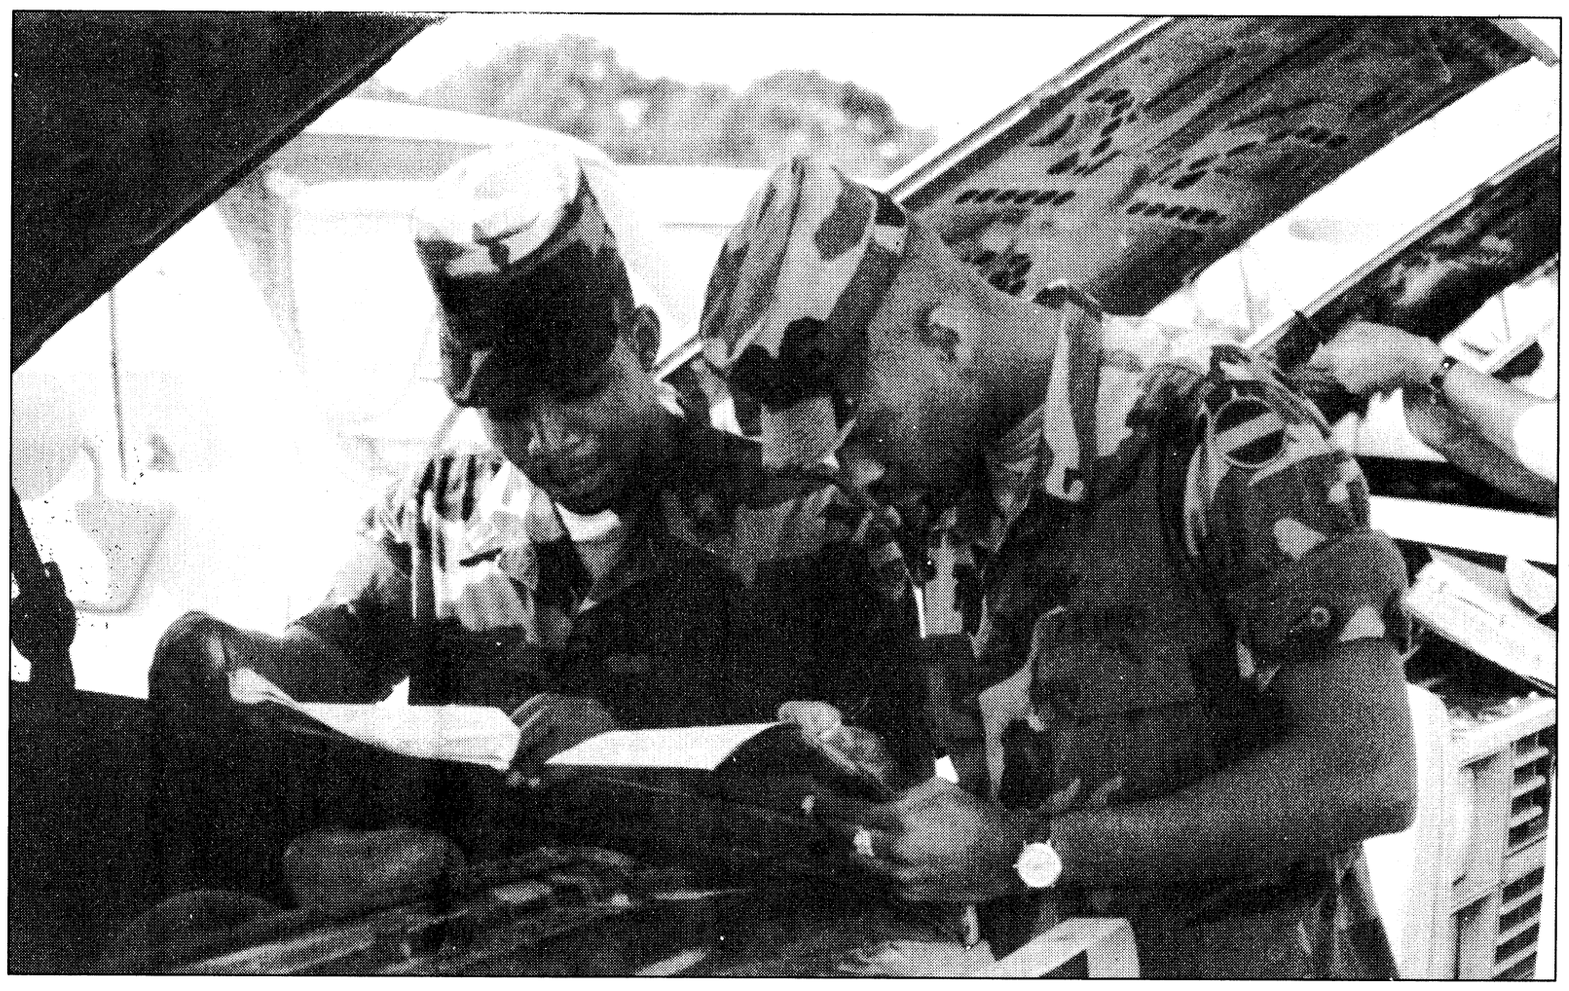
Maintenance is priority for 43rd

By Larry Mayfield
43rd Engineer Combat Battalion (Heavy)

In an effort to remedy maintenance problems resulting from difficulties in redeploying equipment from Southwest Asia after Operation Desert Storm, the soldiers, staff and command of the 43rd Engineer Combat Battalion (Heavy) have begun to focus efforts on what is being called the "Pinpoint Maintenance Plan."

This plan requires a return to basics on all levels, with Command Maintenance Day being a weekly highlight.

Lt. Col. Phillip M. Jones, battalion commander, stresses the importance of each soldier's role in ensuring the overall readiness level of the the unit.



"There are no heroes in this unit," said Jones. "Our success is based on the concept of teamwork. It requires all soldiers to work toward a common goal."

"The goal of the Pinpoint Maintenance Plan is to rapidly upgrade maintenance posture of the battalion while continuing with extensive plans for future construction projects," said Maj. Richard Nazario, battalion executive officer.

"This plan requires that leaders at all levels zoom in on such critical areas as overdue scheduled services, identification and reduction of excess repair parts, improper dispatch procedures and the overall quality of routine maintenance operations. The plan is in its infant stage, yet early signs seem to reflect that it will be highly effective," said Nazario.

Although additional emphasis has been placed on maintenance, the unit's primary mission still remains priority. With a large number of troop construction projects already underway, carpenters, electricians, plumbers and other soldiers will be conducting projects in support of Fort Benning and several other locations throughout the United States.

"No one can be exactly sure of what the future has in store," said Chief Warrant Officer Ed Filkins, battalion maintenance technician, "but the steps taken by this unit will definitely ensure a high state of operational readiness and guarantee the success of the 43rd Engineer Combat Battalion during the next crisis."

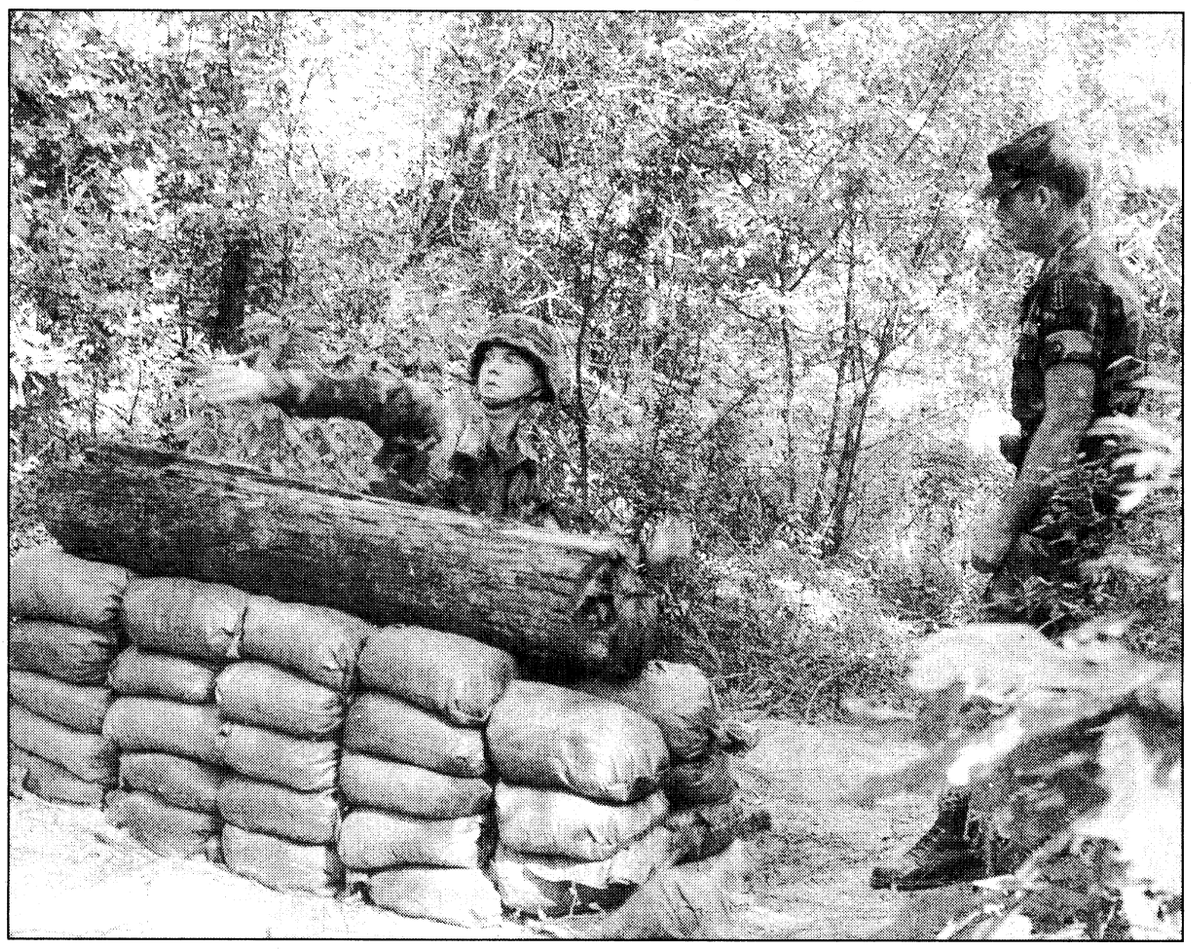
Infantrymen show skills, expertise, earn EIBs

By Mac McInnis
3rd Brigade, 24th Infantry Division



In the wake of Desert Storm, more than 300 combat-hardened infantrymen of the 3rd Brigade, 24th Infantry Division set out to earn the Expert Infantryman Badge.

"If you're an infantryman, the EIB is a must. It shows expertise and skill in the field," said 2nd Lt. Bill Gibson, of Company B, 2nd Battalion, 18th Infantry.

Testing board officials said that to earn the badge soldiers have to meet the highest standards. EIB candidates must be members of the active Army, in the 11- or 18-series military occupational specialty, infantry or Special Forces, volunteer for the testing, be recommended by the battalion commander and qualify expert with their assigned M-16 rifle.

During testing, the soldier must excel at a myriad of events. First, he must score 70 percent or better in each event on the Army Physical Fitness Test. Then, it's on to the day and night land navigation course. Additionally, the soldier must receive a "GO" at all 14 stations, consisting of 38 infantry-related tasks, such as call for indirect fire, security and intelligence, assembly and disassembly of various weapons, nuclear, biological and chemical warfare and movement under diect fire.

Among the controversy of the EIB is its relation to the Combat Infantryman Badge.

Mac McInnis
Spc. Garrett Gadd, Company B, 1st Battalion, 18th Infantry executes his final grenade throw as Staff Sgt. Dennis Criner of Company A looks on.

"The EIB is an award separate and apart from the CIB," said Lt. Col. Eric Olson, commander of the 2nd Battalion, 18th Infantry. "The CIB indicates that an infantryman has performed tasks particular to the infantry operations under conditions of combat."

"The EIB shows that a soldier has performed a series of tasks to very high standards and has mastered a wide range of infantry tasks," he said.

"I think there is a lot that a holder of the CIB can get from earning the EIB," Olson added.

The training was conducted Sept. 3 to 21. Testing was administered Sept. 16 to 27, in accordance with U.S. Army Infantry Center Pamphlet 350-6. All units were invited to attend and participate.

Among participants were soldiers from 6th Ranger Training Battalion, Infantry Training Center, 29th Infantry and 11th Infantry Regiments.

Fifty-nine soldiers successfully completed the testing and are expected to be awarded their EIBs at a ceremony scheduled for Oct. 25 at 4 p.m. on Kelley Hill.

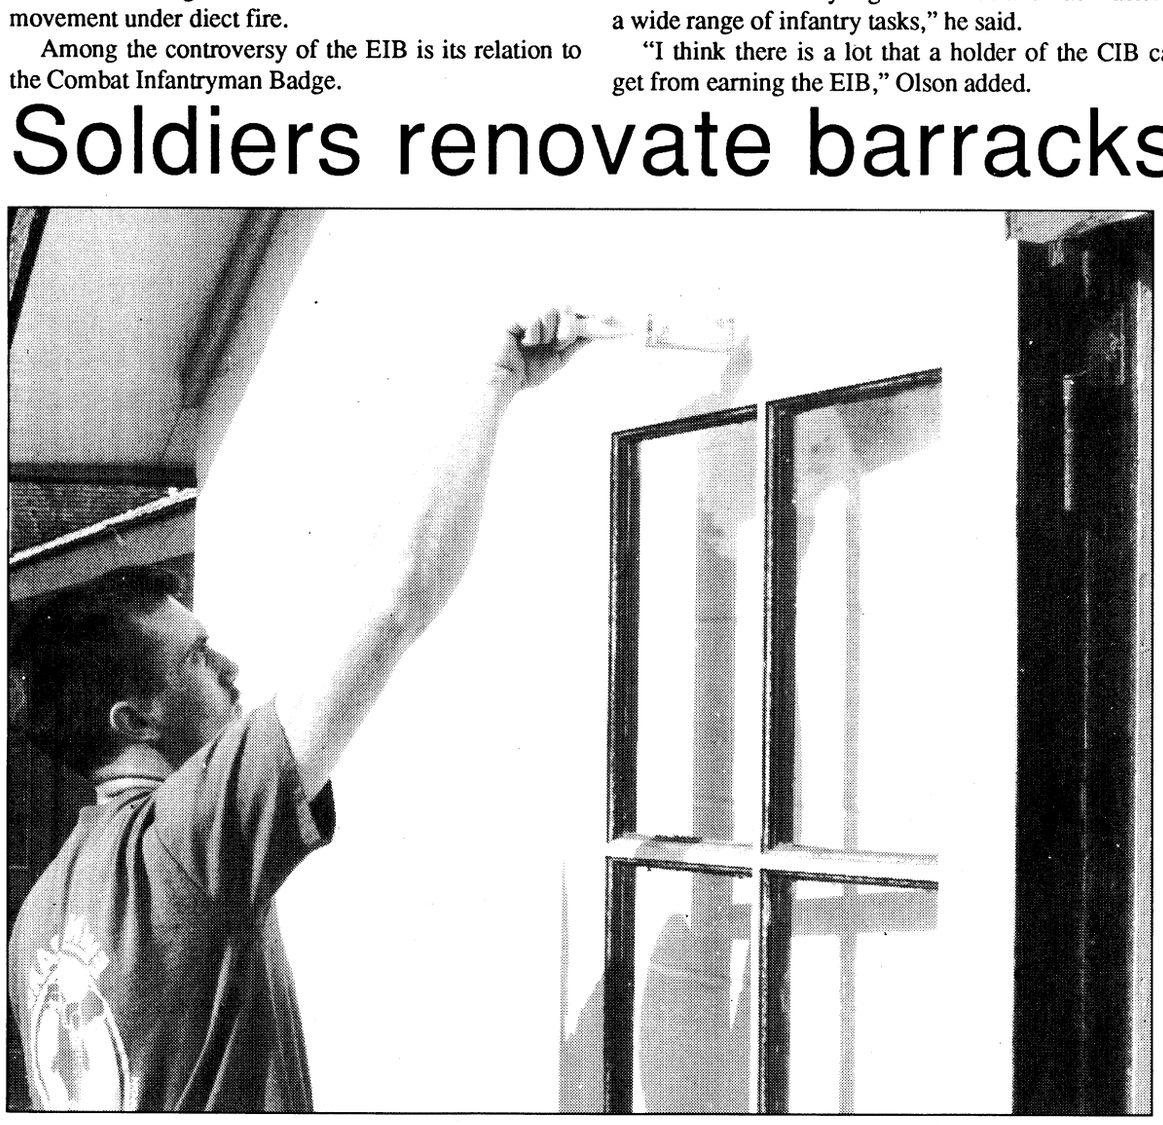
Training overview in 'Infantry'

Infantry magazine

In the September-October issue of Infantry magazine, James R. Locher III, assistant secretary of the Army for special operations and low-intensity conflict, discusses low-intensity conflict and the changing nature of warfare. He says that "a reduced Soviet threat does not necessarily mean that fewer conflicts will affect U.S. interests." He quotes President George Bush in saying the enemy is now "unstable and uncertain" and explains that this is what low intensity conflict is all about.

Also in that issue, Capt. Paul M. Vanderburgh, a physical fitness instructor at the U.S. Military Academy, offers a test that will help leaders and commanders evaluate their own knowledge of physical fitness and then discusses the correct answers in detail. He says that commanders who rely too heavily on their master fitness trainers are not taking it upon themselves to become technically proficient in the concepts of physical training."

Another feature article, Combat in Arctic Regions, by Lt. Col. Robert L. Maginnis, contains lessons learned about arctic combat during several interservice exercises in Alaska. These exercises tested tactics, equipment, and interservice operations in an environment where the arctic winter itself was "a dangerous and unpredictable adversary. Maginnis recently completed an assignment with the 6th Infantry Division and is now assigned to the Office of the Inspector General in Washington.



Infantry continues its series on ranger training that began in the July-August issue. Maj. Gen. Carmen J. Cavezza discusses the challenges of ranger training and the adjustments to be made in the course during the coming fiscal year. These adjustments are designed to modernize the program of instruction and improve the students' opportunity to complete the course successfully.

Another article prepared by members of the Ranger Training Brigade discusses the importance of pre-ranger training and offers some recommendations to help units focus their pre-ranger programs.

Other articles in this latest issue of Infantry include "Stopping Friendly Fire" by Capt. Robert A. Albino, who recently completed the Infantry Officer Advanced Course; "Desert Navigation Devices, by Capt. Thomas E. Beron, Commander of Company E, 2nd Battalion, 18th Infantry; "Reconnaissance in the Desert," by Lt. Robert Friedenberg, a scout platoon leader in the 82d Airborne Division during Operations Desert Shield and Desert Storm; and Tactical Night Climb, by Lt. Col. William M. Menning and Lt. Col. Stephen R. Sands, of the Vermont Army National Guard.

Soldiers renovate barracks at 29th Inf.

By Richard Brill

Soldiers of the 29th Infantry Regiment are working to improve living conditions for those who reside in the Harmony Church barracks.

The soldiers are completely rennovating eight of the buildings used to house on-post personnel, said Staff Sgt. Arthur Snyder, non-commissioned officer in charge of the project.

The interior of each building is being completely rebuilt, Snyder said.

Each building takes about four to six weeks to complete.

First the walls are knocked down and new ones erected. New baseboards, molding, plumbing and light fixtures, and alarm detectors are also installed as well as other improvements, Snyder explained.

After each building is finished, it is inspected by post housing personnel to ensure it meets certain safety standards.

Some of the soldiers working on the barracks have had prior experience in construction, said Snyder. Others, like Spc. Robin Bagley, are learning new skills.

"I didn't know anything when I started," said Bagley. "Now I feel like I could build my own house."

Snyder said the decision to use soldiers to do the work rather than civilian contractors came about when former Regimental Comander Col. Richard St. John and Command Sgt. Maj. Gary Cupit decided it would be less expensive to let the troops do it.

"It's good for the soldiers," Snyder remarked. "They can feel like the barracks is really home because they're the ones who are doing the work."

Silver Wings: Not all fun

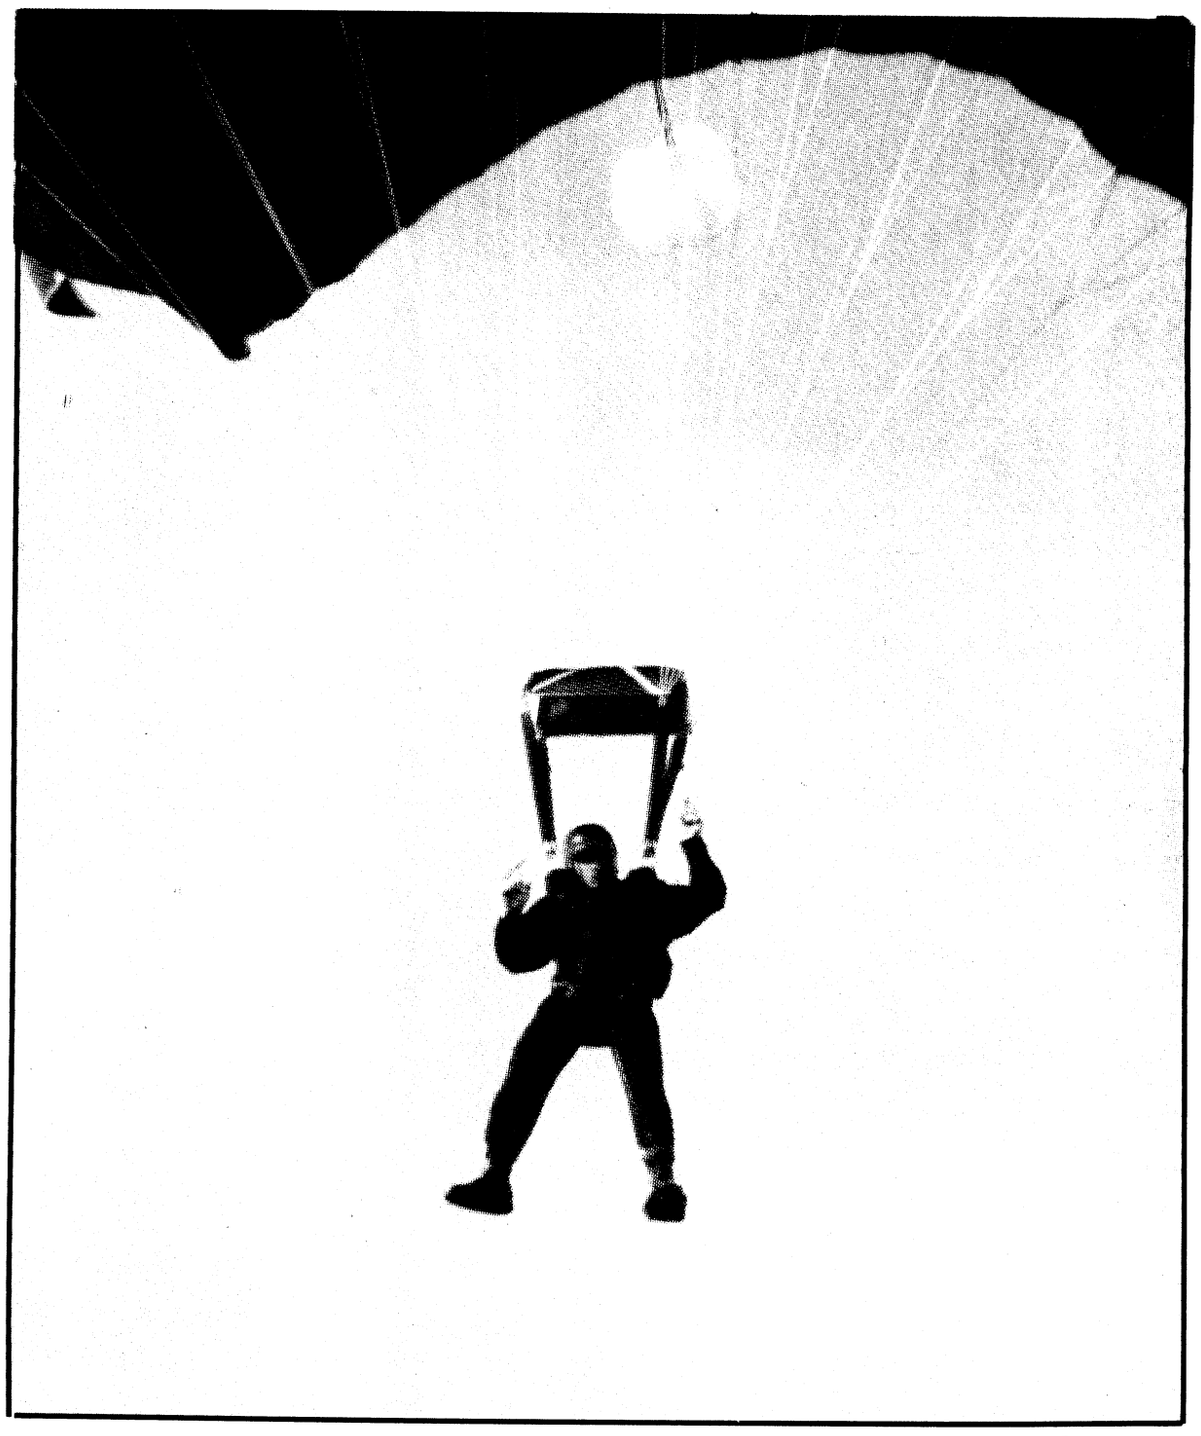
Ten thousand feet above Main Post, they jump from a Blackhawk into the icy nothingness of a cold Fort Benning morning.

For the Silver Wings Exhibition Parachute Team, who make such jumps regualrly, practice makes perfect.



"Each member must make six to 10 jumps per week to stay proficient," said Lt. Col. Marcel Lettre, commander of the 1st Battalion, 507th Parachute Infantry Regiment.

While such practice jumps may seem routine, Lettre said, there is no such thing as a routine jump.

"You have to be prepared for anything. When you're moving between 120 and 180 mph, there's no room for a mistake."

The Silver Wings do about 15 demonstrations each month for events ranging from change of command ceremonies to football games, said Lettre.

"It's not just show stuff," said Lettre.

Soldier turns emotions into songs

By Alyanna B. Summers
Bayonet staff writer

"For 15 years I had songs inside of me just waiting to be heard. Now is the time. Now, these songs will be heard."

For Sgt. 1st Class Mallory Sump, now is the time for his song to be heard.

Sump, an airborne ranger and hand-to-hand combat instructor and assigned to Company B, 4th Ranger Training Batttalion, is currently producing two of 15 years worth of original songs.

The first single from Sump is titled, "Virginia's Lost Her Mind," and is a country-western flavored ballad about a woman with Alzheimer's Disease. The song is based on a true account of Sump's own experience with a victim of that diesease.

"I saw a woman who was standing on a corner of my house, obviously lost," said Sump. "She was old, about 80 years old. Yet when I came to her to help her her, she told me that her mother and father were looking for her. She seemed to think that she was still 18," said Sump, describing not only the symptoms of Alzheimer's disease, but the circumstances surrounding the song.

Alyanna B. Summers

Sgt. 1st Class Mallory Sump sings a tune for his wife, Chris, also a sergeant first class, and daughters, Tina and Danielle.

"I love older people. They are a resource of knowledge and wisdom, and we can learn so much from them," said Sump.

Sump said that he wrote the song about that lost woman named Virginia and for everyone who has ever been touched by Alzheimer's disease.

The second release from Sump's collection is called "Time On Hold," another country ballad that tells the story of an older couple reminiscing on happy times from their past.

Sump said that he wrote that song for his wife and their future together.

Sump's wife, Chris, is also a sergeant first class with 16 years "and some change" in the Army. She is assigned to Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 2nd Battallion, 11th Infantry Regiment and works as the re-enlistment non–commissioned officer for the Infantry Officer Basic Course.

Chris is very supportive of what Sump refers to as his "secondary occupation" as a singer and songwriter. "I'm happy with the way his careeer is going now," said Chris. "It's great for him to be doing something that means so much to him, something that is really meaningful to him."

She remembered the first song her ever wrote for her while they were dating – a song titled, "My Vase."

"In the song, he mentioned several different flowers – violets, carntions and roses, to name a few," said Chris. "When we were married, I made sure to have all the same flowers mentioned in the song in my wedding bouquet. I kept running around the church saying, 'Where's my vase? Where's my vase?' instead of calling it a bouquet.

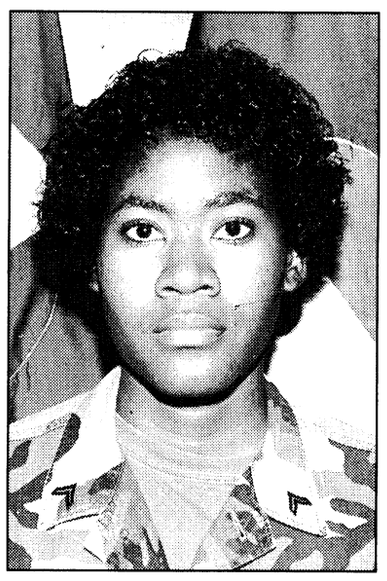
The Sumps make no bones about how they feel about the Army, having made the service a lifelong career.

"You can do great things in the Army, no doubt about it," said Sump. "I have been around the world – to places like Africa, Europe, Central America, Canada, the Phillipines and Alaska. I've learned a lot in the military."

The Sumps also own a small corporation, Military Custom Services and have recently opened a subsidiary to that corporation called Hooah Gear, which sells specialty items for soldiers. Sump has also invented the SUMP protractor, an instrument that is imperative in land navigation.

"What can I say? I'm an idea man," said Sump.

The couple have two children, Tina, 9, and Danielle, 7. The Benning Hills School third and second graders are Sump's biggest fans, said Chris.



Sump hopes that his music will make an impact. "If I haven't made you visualize the words, if I haven't made you feel the emotions I'm trying to convey, then I haven't sung my song," said Sump.

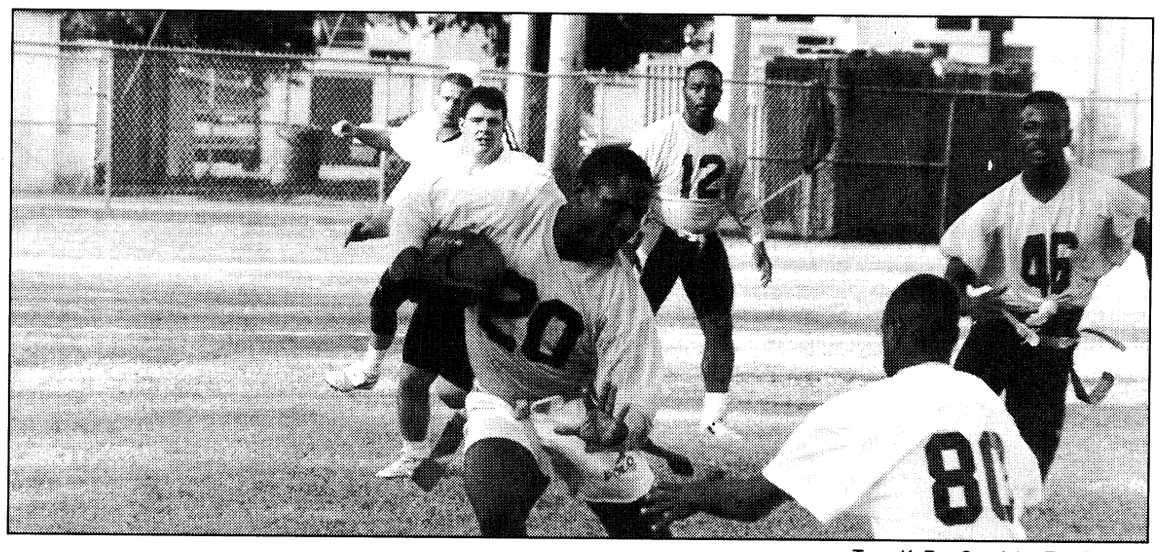
'No Pay Due' cashes in on the 29th's Cougars

By Terry K. Ray
Special to The Bayonet

When Company B, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, "No Pay Due", stepped on to Gowdy Field Thursday evening to take on Co. C, 1st Bn., 29th Inf. Regt., "Cougars", a shutout was the last thing on their minds. That's what they got with a 14-0 surprising of the Cougars.



The Cougars got the ball first but after one first down, quarterback Walker Ray tried to pass downfield, but linebacker Joseph Turner picked off the pass and No Pay Due had the ball for the first time.

No Pay Due quarterback Richie Blum hit wide receiver James Williams on two slant passes, then a sweep to the right by running back Michael McCulloch brought up fourth and short. Blum took the ball and made the first down with room to spare. The very next play Blum rolled right and at the last instant pitched to Williams on an option play and Williams streaked down the sideline into the end zone for the touchdown. The extra point try was no good. No Pay Due had the lead 6-0.

The Cougars had the ball twice and No Pay Due once before the half ended but neither was able to move the ball and the half ended with No Pay Due ahead 6-0.

No Pay Due started the second half the same as the first. A penalty on the first play of the half moved the offense back. On the next play, Blum was chased from the pocket and forced to throw an incomplete pass. On second down and long Blum dropped back, found Williams racing down field on a post pattern and, with Williams in double coverage, hit him right in the hands and Williams did the rest, beating the coverage to the end zone for his second touchdown of the game. A missed extra point attempt later, No Pay Due had all the points they would need for this game. No Pay Due 12, Cougars 0.

The Cougar offense finally got their act together on what would be their final drive of the evening. Cougar quarterback Walker Ray tried an option play to the right for no gain, then a second down pass play for a first down was called back on a holding penalty. A second down hand off to running back Willie Grider was stuffed for no gain. On third down Ray dropped back to pass, hit wide receiver Willie Smith for a short gain and with a defensive penalty on the play the Cougar offense had a first down.

Terry K. Ray/Special to The Bayonet

Safety James Williams prepares to stop Harry Allen after a short gain.

A defensive penalty before the snap moved the Cougar offense closer to the end zone without running a play. On the next play Ray found running back Harry Allen for another Cougar first down. Tightend James Echols caught Ray's next pass after he had to scramble from the pocket. With help from a defensive penalty, the Cougar offense had another first down.

On second down and goal, Ray rolled right but was dropped for a loss by the safety, Williams. On third down, Ray dropped back to pass, was flushed from the pocket and, while on the move, found Allen in the corner of the end zone for the touchdown. The Cougars had cut the lead in half and trailed No Pay Due by only six. 12-6.

The No Pay Due offense held on to the ball for the final minutes of the game, and came away with their first win of the season.

Coach Robert Herring said, after the game, "If we can put points on the board I feel we can make the playoffs, the Cougars are the best team in the league. To beat them, makes me feel good. "

Vulcans 'cruise' to win

By Terry K. Ray
Special to The Bayonet

The Fort Benning, Columbus Rugby Football Club Cruisematics may think they should have stayed home Saturday afternoon, instead of playing against the Birmingham Vulcans at Stillwell Field. Birmingham rolled up the score on the Cruisematics to the tune of 48 to 6.

The Vulcans shared the wealth with seven players reaching the end zone. Kenny "Kemo" Baker, Skippy Dickerson and Tom Fitzgerald each had two tries a piece with Mike Young, Paul Fratus, Glenn Nahikian, and player Coach Patrick Park ringing up one each.

The lone score for the Cruisematics came when Ray Bentley was able to scramble into the end zone on a flip from the outside center.

The team the Cruisematics fielded for this match albeit had not practiced together all that much and the rest of the team is still in England, but it was the Vulcans offense that was in tune and ready to play when the whistle blew.

Strikers sponsor first tourney

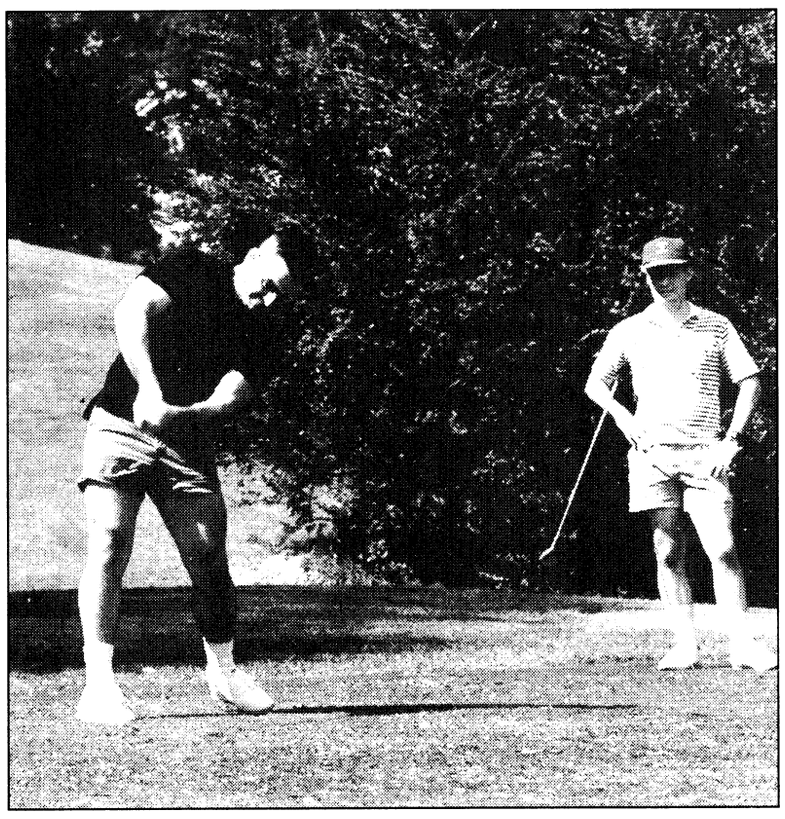
"Hey, where do you rent the golf balls?"

The 1st Battalion, 18th Infantry "Strikers" held the first annual Striker Memorial Open Oct. 4 at the Follow Me Golf Course.



The event, which fielded 20 four-man teams, was conducted to raise money for the educational fund for the children of two Striker soldiers who lost their lives in the Persian Gulf.

Staff Sgt. Raymond Hatcher and Cpl. Kevin Wright both died in a tragic explosion in Iraq.

"Col, Wright never even got the chance to see his child,"said Lt. Col. E. W. Chamberlain III, the battalion commander. "Our goal is to get $5,000 per child, then put it into a trust fund for their education."

The tournament format was a four-man, best ball scramble, featuring trophies for the first and second place teams in two separate flights, prizes for the longest drives, longest putts, closest to the hole shots, and worst team.

In the first flight, four teams shot a 63, which forced a scorecard playoff. The team of Russell Johnson, Mike Garrett, Floyd Knowles and Rick Vituilo came away with the coveted first place trophies. Second place went to Bobby Rayborn, Larry Durham, Rembert Edwards and Willie B. Thames.

Dan Vanucci follows through on a tee shot as Doc Dambrowski looks on.

The second flight winning team was Bob Hookeness, Jim Reid, Terry Cook and John O'Brien with a score of 70. Mike Szabo, Walt Schneider, David Magee and Dana Hess took second with a 71.

After all the trophies were awarded, a raffle was held in which soldiers won many prizes donated by local merchants.

"This event was a huge success," said Chamberlain. "We exceeded $550 and, with what we collected before, we're over $1,000."

"The important thing is that we have not forgotten these families."

Soldier wrestles his way to gold

Pfc. Brandon Dennington puts camouflage on Pvt. 1 Ellis Bates.

"Competing in the Olympics has been my dream since I was 10 years old," Pfc. Brandon Dennington said.

As a member of the All-Army Wrestling Team, Dennington has a shot at making his dream a reality.

Dennington is currently attending Infantry One Station Unit Training (OSUT). He is a member of Company B, 1st Battalion, 38th Infantry Regiment. When he graduates in November, he will be assigned to Fort Benning and begin wrestling with the All-Army Wrestling Team.

Dennington started wrestling when he was six years old. His role model was his older cousin, Barry Boils, who was a successful wrestler at Oregon State University.

Dennington joined the Free-Style Wrestling Club in his hometown - Tracy, California. By the time he started high school he had five state championships, four national titles and five zone national titles under his belt.

As a member of the Tracy High School Wrestling Team, he captured numerous state and national wrestling titles in both Free-Style and Greco-Roman wrestling styles. He was a member of the McDonald's Dream Team. He was the California State Champion in the 154 pounds weight class in both his junior and senior years of high school. By 1986 he had won more matches than anyone else in California history - 172 wins and only 9 loses.

In 1987 Dennington received a wrestling scholarship to Oklahoma University. In college he continued to excel. He beat NCAA champion Dan St. John in 1989 and two-time NCAA champion Pat Smith twice in 1990.

Last May Dennington met Sgt First Class Tony Thomas, Coach of the All Army Wrestling Team, at a tournament in Concord, California. Thomas and Dennington's friend, Spc. Martin Strmiska, convinced him to join the Army.

Dennington feels as a soldier he will be able to focus completely on his wrestling. "In civilian life I had to worry about studying, holding down a job and Paying bills Dennington said. "In the Army, I can spend the majority of my time practicing and competing during the wrestling season and fulfill my Army obligations during the rest of the year."

Dennington is also looking forward to wrestling with Strmiska, his friend since first grade. "Martin (Strmiska) and I have been wrestling together since we were six years old," Dennington said. "He coaches me better than anyone else - we help each other."

Strmiska has been on the Army Team for three years. He is just two points away from making the Olympic Team.

Joining the Army also means realizing another dream. "I always wanted to go through Infantry training," Dennington said. He enlisted for two years and selected Military Occupational Specialty 11M, Bradley Fighting Vehicle Crewman. "I'm really looking forward to the Bradley training," Dennington said.

Dennington, who had never fired a weapon before, earned an expert badge for M16A2 rifle marksmanship. He also qualified expert with hand grenades. He has been a squad leader and says he likes Infantry training. "So far I'm doing good and having fun," Dennington said.
