Election

Benning schools gets new board members

Fort Benning Schools

School board officials were elected Tuesday at Fort Benning.

Elected for one-year terms were: President, Col. Joseph Trez; Chaplain Representative, Chaplain (Maj.) Richard Garrison; and Wilson School Representative, Marvalene King.

Elected for two-year terms were: Faith School Representative, Kathleen Meade; Dexter School Representative, Terry Maschek; Loyd School Representative, Capt. Barry Washington; and White School Representative, Diane Boucher.

Representatives having one more year remaining in their two-year terms of office are: Patch School Representative, Usa Iverson; and McBride School Representative, Sgt. Richard Hott. Due to a recent resignation, the Wilbur School Representative will be filled by appointment by the School Board to fill an unexpired term for this coming school year.

The Fort Benning School Board is a 10-member board elected by parents of children attending the schools; it meets monthly to set school district policy and provide general direction to the system.

School board members are elected for two-year terms, with each of the eight schools having a representative on the board. In addition to the eight representatives, the board includes an elected president and chaplain. Members' terms are staggered so that the board will include experienced board members each year.

Students support saving energy

Fort Benning Schools

The post's Spring Energy Awareness Campaign gained support from students in Fort Benning schools.

"Conservation. . .The Totally Awesome Alternative" was the theme and students participated in poster and essay contests sponsored by the Directorate of Engineering and Housing.

As in years past, these contests have encouraged Fort Benning youth to consider the importance of energy resources and ways in which those resources affect their lives.

The Energy Awareness Campaign ended in a ceremony at Don C. Faith Middle School May 17 in which winners of the essay and poster contests were presented awards by Col. John D. Fuller, post chief of staff, and Col. Patrick Kenny, director of Engineering and Housing.

Kindergarten through third grade students were eligible to participate in the poster contest. Fourth through eighth grade students were eligible to participate in the essay contest. First-place winners in each grade level, kindergarten through eighth grade, received a bicycle. Runners-up from each grade level received a telephone or a radio/cassette player. Winners and runners-up also received a certificate of achievement signed by Maj. Gen. Carmen J. Cavezza, post commander.

All students who participated in the energy contests will receive sunglasses, lollipops, pencils, or bookmarks.

In addition to the contests, the Energy Branch provided a variety of videotapes for use with classes. Field trips were also available.

The yearly contests and activities sponsored by the Energy Section help Fort Benning educators to make the important energy issues involved more relevant to students' everyday lives.

Children Exercising Simultaneously promotes students' physical fitness

Fort Benning Schools

Students in three of Fort Benning's elementary schools joined students across the country and in several other countries in participating in American Children Exercising Simultaneously program May 8.

The program is a nationwide endeavor promoting children's physical fitness which has the support of the President's Council on Physical Fitness and Sports.

Last year more than 2 million students in 5,600 schools from all 50 states and from several other countries participated. This year it is estimated that more than 5 million children will have participated in the 15 minutes of physical activities from 10 to 10:15 a.m. The physical activities to be done during the time period were chosen by individual schools and classrooms who participated.

Using a buddy student approach, William H. Wilbur School paired younger students with older students, and the entire student body went for a 15-minute walk together around the Wilbur School campus.

Edward A. White School took their entire student body for a walk around a nearby track, and students and teachers at Herbert J. Dexter school participated in a variety of aerobic activities.

Reunion packet eases soldier homecomings

Army News Service

WASHINGTON — After a warm hug and a period of relaxation and fun, returning DESERT STORMers may find that an Army Community Services reunion packet is a welcome addition to their homecoming.

According to Lt. Col. Linda K. Jellen, chief, Army Community Service, the packet, entitled "A Guide to Developing and Conducting Reunion Programs," is a joint project among ACS, Army chaplains and medical social-workers, and is designed to assist professionals in helping soldiers transition to family life.

"In Saudi Arabia, the chaplains have been given the lead to provide reunion briefings to soldiers prior to or during their return," Jellen said. "ACS will coordinate the reunion briefings at the stateside family support group meetings to prepare the family members for the soldier's homecoming."

In addition to active duty installations, the briefing information is available to the Reserve Component, Red Cross, United Service Organization, Armed Services YMCA, and local mental health associations.

The reunion program consists of a series of information briefings and group discussions led by subject matter experts on such topics as expectations and realities of family homecoming reunions, returning to children, additional topics for single parents, new parents, single soldiers, and other important issues in the re-integration process.

The packet contains lesson plans, handouts, and directions for facilitating group discussions. Jellen said that while it will be specifically used for DESERT STORM soldiers' needs, the packet can and should be used anytime service members are separated from their families. This includes temporary duty assignments, unaccompanied permanent changes of station, and attendance at military schools.

"We expect the packet to be issued as a Department of the Army Pamphlet by October," said Jellen. "Studies have demonstrated that it takes from two weeks to two months for a family to get back to normal. The briefings won't fix long-term problems for couples, but they will help deal with the natural changes that have taken place during the separation.

"Our goal is to facilitate healthy family reunions and do all we can to help soldiers and loved ones make the necessary adjustments," said Jellen.

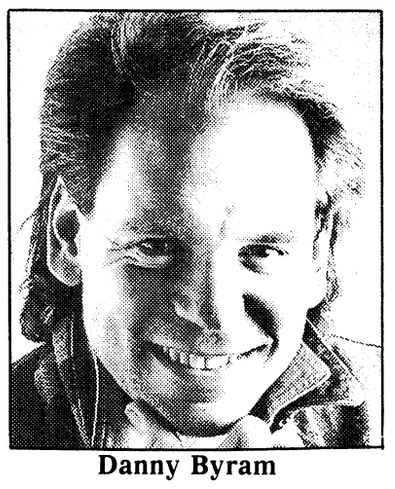
Songwriter to perform at Fort Benning

By Gabriele Sonnenberg
USAIC Chaplains' Office

Singer and songwriter Danny Byram will perform six concerts June 9 to 11. The concerts will be throughout the post, at worship services and in unit areas.

Byram is a singer and songwriter. He has written and recorded two albums with his third to be released later this year. His itinerate concert ministry takes him all over the United States and Europe performing his music for thousands at universities, churches, youth conventions and military installations.



As a songwriter, Byram composes songs with spiritual messages.

"People comment all the time about the content of my songs," said Byram. "I want to write songs that cut through the gloss of what may or may not be acceptable in a contemporary gospel song and speak right to the heart of the listener. If it doesn't speak to me first, then I don't use it."

According to Byram, he sees his ministry as two-fold — to the non-believer an evangelist; to the believer, an exhorter. He travels under the auspices of Danny Byram Ministries Inc., a non-profit corporation founded to "house" his ministry and to "effectively communicate the gospel of Jesus Christ through musical presentation."

The schedule of the concerts will be announced today.

For more information, call 545-5378 or 545-3715.

Human love without nurturing can wither, die

By Chaplain Daniel McEver
U.S. Army Infantry Training Center

One of the hardest things to experience is the slow but steady disintegration of a marriage. It may have started with a specific event or accusation, even an innuendo. One may not detect a concrete starting point. . .but it started.

Things get worse with time, until finally, the "D" word is mentioned. The heartache of divorce is immeasurable but real, and it has deeply affected our culture.

A "broken home" is not an exception anymore. It is common, and that is frightening.

The word communication is an often used buzzword to describe what breaks down in a marriage. "They just couldn't communicate." There is also the well-known line, "What we have here is a failure to communicate."

However, communication is not always the problem. Many couples communicate very well with each other, but they still have problems. They communicate exactly what they want the other to hear, and it isn't always flattering. The problem is not that they cannot communicate; the problem is that they do not like what they hear.

If they communicated so well, what went wrong? During the course of their marriage, sharing turned into accusation, and conversation into competition. In other words, the marriage turned into a battlefield. What happened? Did they "fall out of love?"

It's more likely that in all their effective communications, there was only one thing they failed to communicate — their love for each other. It is easy to take one's love for another for granted. "She knows I love her." That may be true, but for a healthy marriage, that is just not good enough. We need to hear it, and receive it. Love must be expressed, in word and in deed.

It is said indeed when people spend twice the effort at pleasing the boss than at pleasing or loving the spouse. Just where are the priorities? To love, honor and cherish does not apply to the employer, but to the most important person in one's life.

Many couples are starving for affection, and are in effect starving each other. The love is there, but there is no expression of it.

Though God's love is eternal, human love is frail — it needs to be watered and nurtured like a plant. Keep it from water and sunlight, and it will wither and die.

When love is never expressed in marriage, it also withers, and sometimes even dies. The blame begins, and communications of the unhealthy kind take over, until eventually, they "do not like what they hear." So the divorce decree states "incompatibility" as the reason for the divorce.

It is true that people are sometimes incompatible. But often, couples truly love each other without expressing it. There is no good reason for taking the most important person in the world for granted.

Expressing love to one's spouse feeds the marriage like nothing else. Finding creative ways to share one's love for another will cause that love to grow.

Leisure:

A way of putting balance back in your life naturally

By Ann P. Amoroso
Martin Army Community Hospital

Today the world is filled with advice on how to achieve a healthier life style: eat the right foods, exercise the right way, lose weight, stop smoking, reduce your stress.

There are articles on how to do more with less, how to save time and energy, how to be more efficient at work. . .and what about your free time? There are commercials advertising just how to spend your free time: enjoy a cruise, take a trip, spend money, go to the movies, watch TV.

Hold it! Do you find yourself constantly busy, busy, busy, trying to achieve the perfect life, rushing to do this or that? Are you enjoying what you are doing — honestly, enjoying your life?

Some of us are work oriented. Others are leisure oriented. Some find work to be stressful and boring. Others find the same to be true for leisure. No matter what type of person you are, you need to find a good balance between work, leisure and all the other involvements in your life. You need to actively seek and experience that balance yourself.

With the help of C. Forrest McDowell, PhD, (excerpts from "Leisure Wellness: an introduction, 1983) let us explore how understanding more about your leisure can help to provide a sense of satisfaction and well being.

First and foremost, explore within yourself what leisure can do for you. Leisure is a uniquely personal concept that others can not prescribe for you. In fact your leisure is constantly evolving as you age. Your preferences, skills, attitudes and experiences all change and this helps you to experience an enjoyable, satisfying balance in life. That is, of course, if you recognize what you consider leisure activities and if you allow yourself time to experience them.

What do you know about your leisure lifestyle? McDowell has listed some issues for consideration.

●How well do you know your spouse's or closest friends' interests? Do you communicate these to each other? It is important to share common interests with those closest to you.

●Do you make an effort to get involved regularly in activities with your spouse as well as with friends?

●Do you make time and space to be alone each day? Do others respect this need and do you respect theirs?

●How do you handle your time and energies? Are you a compulsive busyholic, running yourself ragged, using time as an excuse for not doing what you really want to do? If so: stop and ask yourself "why?"

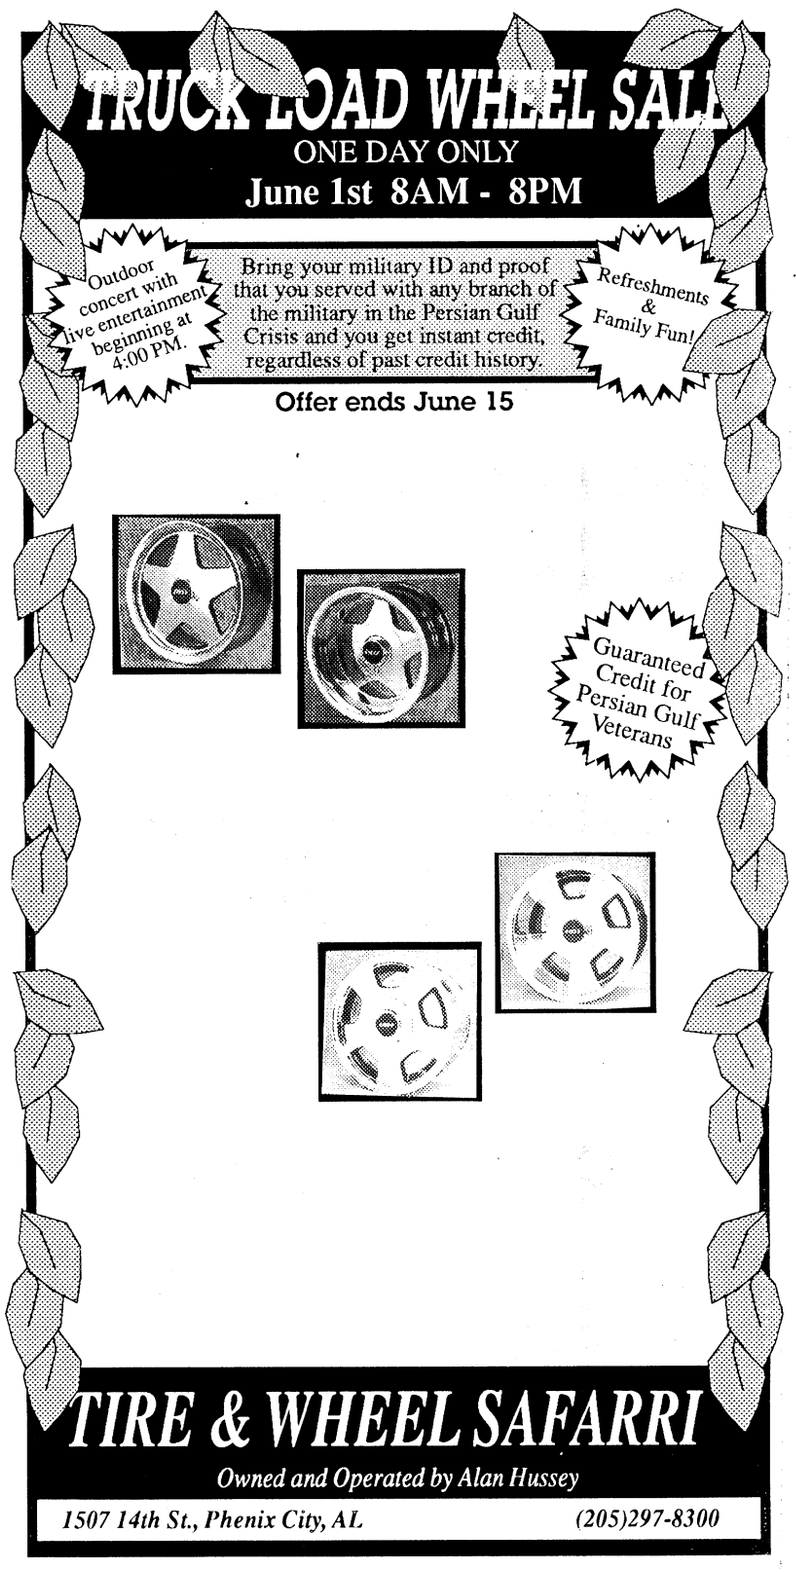
●Are you letting your work schedule overrule your need to be fit or to enjoy your leisure time? Could it be that your work is not at fault, but your lack of discipline and assertion to be active?

●Are you open to new leisure experiences, or are you basically doing what you did several years ago? Keep in touch with community happenings, places to go, things to do. Many may even be free.

●Do you round out your leisure with involvement in the arts, crafts, sports, exercise, and activities which stimulate your mind?

●When enthusiastically involved in an activity, do you feel mentally relaxed and at ease or do you feel strained? Recognize the mental stress you allow yourself to carry and how it can negatively effect your leisure experience.

●Reflect on how you set aside time and energies toward experiencing leisure. Consider for a moment that you have certain rights that can aid in experiencing a guilt — free leisure style.



●You have the "Right to do Nothing" — to take a pause in your busy schedule.

●You have the "Right to be Uncertain" — to not know exactly what you are going to do next.

●You have the "Right to be Alone" — to have a little time and space each day to yourself.

●You have the "Right to be Playful" — to act spontaneously, to "goof off," and have fun.

With all the types of possible activities and experiences available, "Leisure can potentially give you a tremendous amount of sense of completion, satisfaction, and balance in your life."

Arbor Day Foundation offers free book

Arbor Day Foundation

How a tree is pruned in its first few years of life will affect its shape, strength and even its life span.

An illustrated, easy-to-follow guide called "How to Prune Young Shade Trees" has been prepared for homeowners. It can be obtained free of charge by writing The National Arbor Day Foundation.

The How To Prune guide includes step-by-step illustrations showing how proper pruning in the early years of a tree's life can save money in the long run and result in safer, more beautiful, healthy, easy-to-maintain trees.

This booklet is filled with illustrations showing how to make a pruning cut; how to prune for desired form; how to strengthen a tree by removing certain branches; how to maintain the tree's health by removing trouble spots; and when to leave temporary lower branches, and when to cut them.

The booklet even shows how to hold a pair of pruning shears and how to make pruning cuts at the proper angle.

The tree pruning pamphlet shows how to shape and guide a shade tree when it's young so that it's tall, straight, strong, and healthy when it's old.

The design of the booklet makes it easy to browse through to pick up tips. It also covers why tree paint isn't necessary, even on large cuts; how to select and care for pruning tools; how to prune according to the tree's function.

To obtain a free copy of this booklet, send name and address to: How to Prune, National Arbor Day Foundation, Nebraska City, Neb. 68410.

Individuals can shake the salt habit with help

Reading labels, choosing right foods lowers sodium intake

By Brenda J. Forman
Nutrition Care Division

"Pass the salt please."

How many times have you made this request in the past week? On an average, adults eat two-three teaspoons of table salt daily. If you couple this with the fact that sodium occurs naturally in most foods and beverages and is added to commercially processes and prepared foods, you can see why most of us consume two or three times as much sodium as we should.

Why is there so much concern about "sodium" in the diet? The latest reports issued by the National Academy of Sciences indicate that sodium is associated with the development of high blood pressure in susceptible individuals. Sodium may also aggravate existing high blood pressure.

So you ask yourself, how can I decrease sodium in my diet without eating food that is tasteless? First of all shake the salt habit by reading food labels. Look at the ingredient listing. Ingredients are listed in decreasing order by weight. For foods containing 10 or more ingredients, the first five are the most predominant. Avoid foods where salt or sodium appears as one of the first five ingredients. Keep in mind that a food may contain no salt, but may have sodium from other sources.

Secondly, look at the nutrition information panel for the amount of sodium per serving. As a rule of thumb, food items containing more than 150 mg of sodium per serving should be used cautiously. So now you ask, what if the product is labeled "Low Sodium" or "Unsalted?" What does this team? The Food and Drug Administration has defined what these terms mean:

Sodium free. . .Less than 5mg sodium per serving

Very low sodium. . .35 mg or less per serving

Reducted sodium. . .Reduced in sodium by at least 75 percent per serving compared with the food it replaces.

Unsalted. . .No salt added during processing

You can also decrease sodium in your diet by following these tips:

●Limit the use of added salt both during preparation and at the table. It is not necessary to add salt to water for boiling even if the recipe calls for it.

●Substitute spices and herbs for table salt to flavor foods. Remember that some spices such as garlic salt, onion salt, sea salt, and MSG (monosodium glutamate) are high in sodium and are not good table salt substitutes.

●Rely less on prepared condiments (such as ketchup, mustard, and relish), dressings, and sauces that are high in sodium.

With the following foods, try substituting these spices and herbs for table salt when you cook:

Egg Substitutes — basic, dillweed, garlic, parsley

Fish — basil, bay leaf, tarragon, lemon, lime, thyme, parsley, fennel, sage, savory

Poultry — marjoram, sage

Salads — basil, bay leaf, marjoram, oregano, parsley, celery leaves, cloves

Vegetables — basil, parsley, savory

Italian Blend — basil, marjoram, oregano, rosemary, sage, savory, thyme

Barbecue Blend — cumin, garlic, hot pepper, oregano

197th Inf. Bde. to be redesignated

By Brian C. Sutton
Bayonet staff writer

After fighting and serving in the Middle East during the Persian Gulf crisis, the 197th Infantry Brigade will soon become the 3rd Brigade, 24th Infantry Division (Mechanized).

The ceremony will be June 14 at 8:30 a.m. on York Field.

The brigade, which participated in Operation Desert Storm as part of the Fort Stewart-based division, will remain at Fort Benning.

"There is no real need for us to move," said Capt. Tom Wilkinson, public affairs officer for the 197th. "As far as we're concerned, it was never discussed that we would move."

Wilkinson stated the 197th's mission to support the 11th Infantry Regiment is still active.

Not only is the mission to the 11th Infantry Regiment active, but the brigade will also see a heightened state of readiness, according to Wilkinson.

During the Persian Gulf War, the brigade was attached to the 24th Infantry Division, but not as a rapid deployment force. With the changes, the 197th would then be rapidly deployable, similar to the 82nd Airborne Division and the 101st Airborne Division.

With the redesignation ceremony, the brigade becomes permanently aligned with the 24th. The action is the result of a Department of the Army policy that calls for all XVIII Airborne Corps divisions, of which the 24th is a part, to be comprised solely of active component units ready to deploy anywhere in the world on a moment's notice.

Although none of the brigade's major units will be affected by this action, there will be some impact on some of the unit's support elements.

"The redesignation will have very little impact on Fort Benning," said Wilkinson.

Approximately 550 soldiers will have the option of moving to Fort Stewart to join units, or they can remain at Fort Benning and move to another unit to function in their own military occupational specialties.

"Most of the soldiers that will have the option of staying are cavalry soldiers," said Wilkinson.

In all, about 520 soldiers will be lost as a result of the redesignation, officials said.

11th Regt. to get new commander

USAIC Public Affairs Office

The 11th Infantry Regiment will get a new boss Thursday during a 9 a.m. change of command ceremony on York Field.

Col. Lawrence K. White Jr., currently director of the Infantry School's Directorate of Combined Arms and Tactics at Fort Benning, will take command of the regiment from Col. James M. Jones Jr.

Jones' new assignment takes him to Washington, D.C., as director of Family Support, U.S. Army. He commanded the 11th Infantry Regiment, formerly The School Brigade, since June 1989.

White was commissioned an infantry officer on graduation from the U.S. Military Academy in 1970. He's served in command and staff assignments both overseas and stateside, including Vietnam.

Besides his degree from the Military Academy, White also has a master's degree in business from Purdue University. His other military schooling includes the Command and General Staff College, the Defense Strategy Course and the Army War College.

Among his awards are the Legion of Merit, Bronze Star and the Meritorious Service Medal.

He is married to the former Signe Pabst. They have four children.

Interchange dedicated

By Marilyn Balzarini
U.S. Army Infantry Training Center

The Eisenhower Interchange on Custer Road was dedicated during a ribbon-cutting ceremony May 31.

Rep. Richard Ray was the guest speaker. Ray said that Gen. Edwin Burba, now the commander of U.S. Army Forces Command, and Lt. Gen. Michael Spigelmire, commander of Army Special Operations Command, Fort Bragg, N.C. and former Benning commander, deserve credit for getting the interchange project completed. He said they continued to make the interchange a major priority until it became a reality.

Maj. Gen. Carmen J. Cavezza, post commanding general, introduced Ray. Cavezza stated that the new interchange will benefit the Columbus and Fort Benning area tremendously.

Columbus Mayor Frank Martin attended the ceremony along with other state, local government and Fort Benning officials.

According to Capt. Mike Rabenstein, an operations officer for the Directorate of Engineering and Housing, fire and medical emergency vehicles now have a direct route between Sand Hill and Main Post.

The interchange can also accommodate the latest vehicles in the Army's inventory. Rabenstein said that traffic flow has been greatly eased since the interchange has been open.

The interchange was first proposed in 1983, and it was completed in April 1990.

Defense Dept. changes personnel ceilings

Forces readjust FY '91 end strengths

By Linda Lee
American Forces Information Service

An adjusted personnel plan permits more than 16,000 service members to remain on active duty through the end of fiscal 1991 than were originally authorized under the Department of Defense's drawdown plans.

Donald Atwood, deputy secretary of defense, advised the military services in an April 8 memorandum to waive the personnel end strengths set in the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1991.

Congress recently authorized the waivers in the Persian Gulf Supplemental Authorization and Personnel Benefits Act of 1991.

The Persian Gulf conflict played a major role in the department's decision to raise the ceiling, said Christopher Jehn, assistant secretary of defense for force management and personnel.

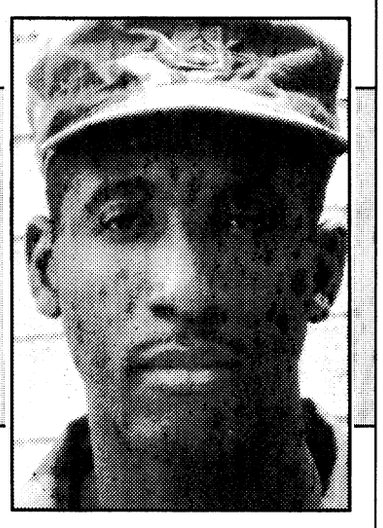
"The services adjusted their personnel plans significantly to accommodate Operation Desert Storm," said Jehn. "For the active force, this included extensive stop loss actions, accelerated accession and retiree recalls. With the initiation of the redeployment, the services have readjusted plans to allow them to end fiscal 1991 as close to their previously budgeted end strengths as possible."

For example, the Army decided not to involuntarily separate members while stop loss was in effect. According to Jehn, this affected about 4,000 officers and 3,000 enlisted soldiers who would otherwise have been separated in fiscal 1991.

Jehn said only a relatively small number of personnel subject to stop loss may be kept involuntarily on active duty after July 31.

Most will be given a chance to get out before then. He said all services will allow stop loss members to request up to a 90-day active duty extension to help ease the transition back to civilian life.

All services will meet the fiscal 1992 end strengths required by law, Jehn noted.

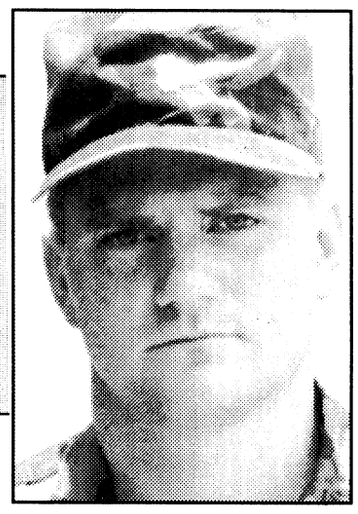


Personnel Ceilings

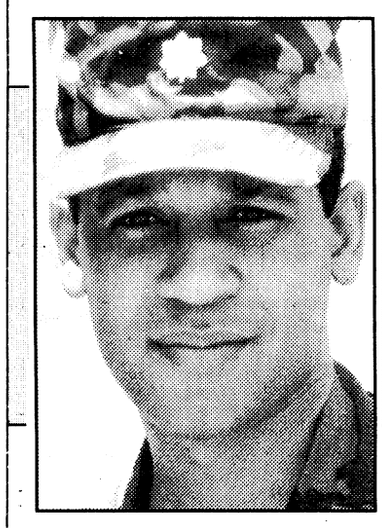
With the waivers authorized by Congress and DoD, this is what the services' personnel strengths will look like at the end of fiscal 1991:

	Army	Navy	Marines	Air Force
March 1991	745,000	579,000	200,358	529,287
Required FY 91 End Strength Before Waiver	702,170	570,500	193,735	510,000
After Waiver	710,000	573,086	195,672	514,000
Impact	+7,830	+2,586	+1,937	+4,000

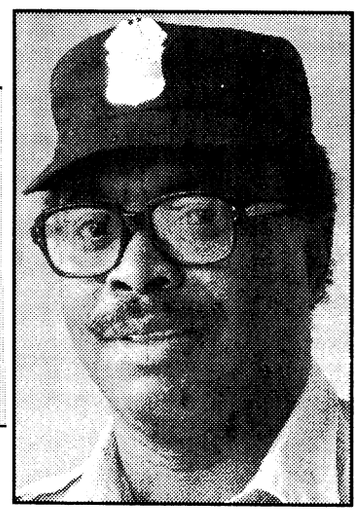
VARIOUS VOICES:



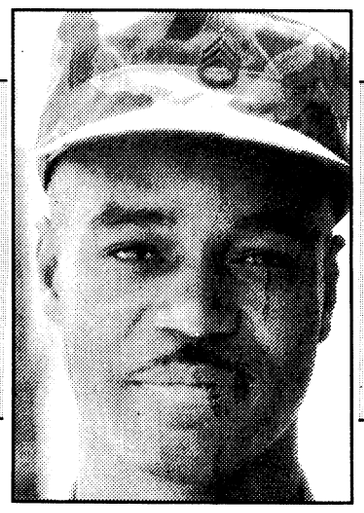
What differences do you see between today's entry-level enlisted soldiers and entry-level enlisted soldiers of the past?



Staff Sgt. Jeffery Curry, Branch Instructor Company, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment — "Today's privates are more educated. The average E-1 coming in today will have at least one year of college. A lot of soldiers come in the Army for college money."



Staff Sgt. Bennie Hogan, Branch Instructor Company, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment — "Today's junior enlisted soldier is less disciplined and more laid back than I was when I was a private. Without a doubt, today's private is more intelligent."



1st Lt. Blake Austensen, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor Regiment — "The enlisted soldiers are more educated today, as well as more education-conscious. Those that are looking toward an Army career realized that the criteria for promotion is harder than before."

Maj. Harold Hardrick, Company B, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment — "The younger soldiers today are more intelligent and better prepared for the Army. Today, the Army is getting a better quality recruit. Of course, they aren't as motivated as the older soldiers, but they are better quality."

Retired 1st Sgt. Nokomis Croney Jr., Range Security, Department of Defense Police Force — "Young soldiers don't have respect for noncommissioned officers anymore. They are more educated, but they don't have the home training of the older soldiers."

Staff Sgt. Paul McNeil, Headquarters and Headquarters Detachment, Non-Commissioned Officers Academy — "Today's young privates have a higher education level and a lower motivation level. They have less respect for their supervisors and senior noncommissioned officers.

COMMENTARY

There's a sucker born every minute

By Clyde Snively
Bayonet columnist

Allie, an ace reporter with the Fort Benning Bayonet, discovered you have to be more than an ace reporter to get a deal on a used car.

Car salesmen don't differentiate between an ace reporter and your everyday, wash and wear battle dress uniform-clad soldier.

Allie learned this shortly after buying a 1980 clunker on Used Car Drive. No sooner than she got it home, the dashboard lights started winking at her. At first, she thought the car was just being fresh, but she soon learned each of those lights meant something.

There was the "I'm thirsty, I need oil," light; the "I'm thirsty II, I need coolant," light; and the "I'm out of juice, get a new battery," light.

Or, as they call all these lights, "idiot lights." And it's not the lights who are the idiots, as our ace reporter was quickly learning.

The car is absorbing so much of her paycheck, she's thinking of listing it as a dependent on next year's income tax.

She's already been to the bank to see if she can get an allotment made out to the car. "It's eating me out of house and home," she sobbed. "I had driven very few miles before my nice, shiny, black tires fell apart, and I had to get four new ones."

Nor was it long before she was buying another set of tires. Seems the front axle is bent because of an accident she wasn't told about.

Next it was the battery. "A month after I had the car, it refused to start. All I got was a clicking noise. Someone told me to get a new battery. I did.

"The car ran OK for awhile," she said, "But, it wasn't long before I got in one morning and there was the clicking noise again. A friend jump-started it for me. I took the car where I got the battery, which was still under warranty, you know, or so I thought. The salesman told me because I didn't have an electrical inspection, the battery warranty wasn't valid. That's when the guy told me I needed a new alternator."

"Did that help?" I asked warily.

"Well the car starts OK, but now the windshield wipers come on when I turn on the radio." At this point I could see our ace reporter was losing her cool. I backed away. But she kept on going.

"Next thing I knew I heard what sounded like metal on metal each time I touched the brakes. I took it to the garage. I needed new brakes — shoes and all. "I was now paying more on my charge card for parts and repairs than I was for the car itself."

"Sounds like you didn't have the car checked out before you bought it," I said.

"I didn't think I needed to," she said. "The dealer showed me a check list of his inspection. Everything checked out. In fact, he said I could buy an extended warranty to go with the 30-day warranty. I wish I had."

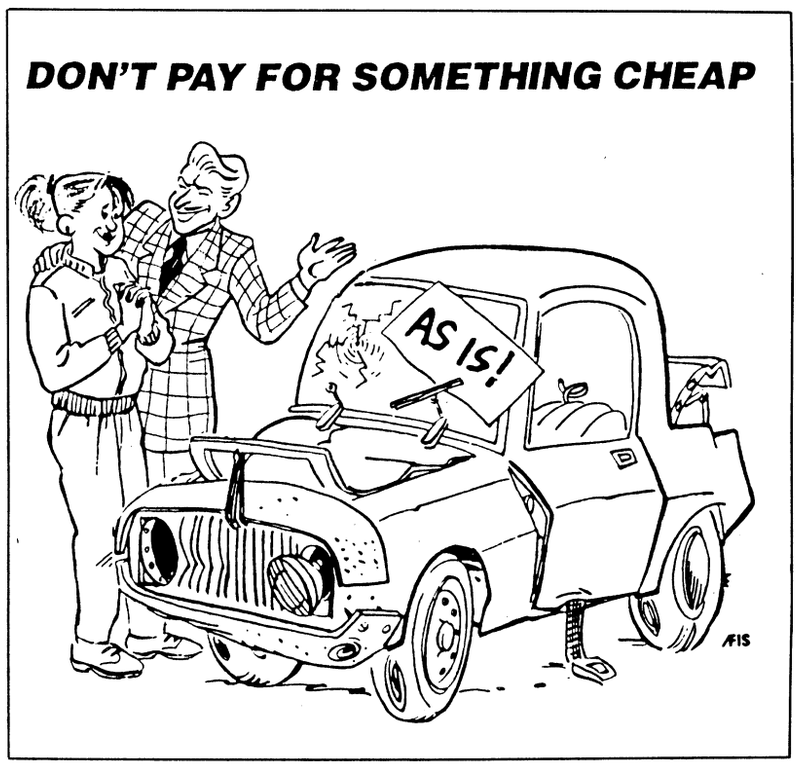
"Here's a hot news flash, Allie," I said. "About all a dealer inspection does is fool the person buying a car into thinking the thing will run. And for you to collect on those 30-day warranties, you'd probably need the engine to drop out as you drove off the lot to even have a chance. Plus, about all extended warranties do is increase the amount of your monthly payments," I quoted her from the "Click and Clack Car Column."

"Well, I didn't and now I guess I'm stuck," she moaned. "I even tried to sell the car back to the car lot guy. He wasn't interested. Next, I tried to give it to him. He wouldn't take it. I thought about leaving it there, but a friend told me my credit record would be ruined for life. Then, I wouldn't even be able to qualify for a Sears card."

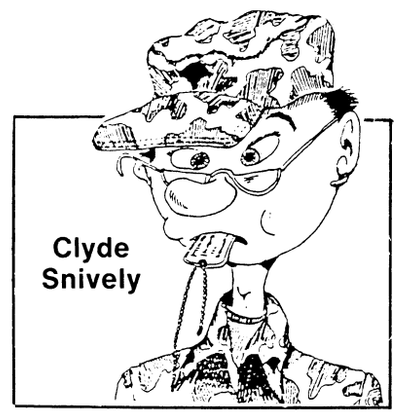
"You could always put it on the Lemon Lot," I suggested. There might be some sucker out there who would take over payments. I'd make sure he was a certified mechanic though before I signed the car over to him."

"I might try that," she said.

"Just one thing," I said.



"What's that," she asked.



"He might do what you should have done. Pay someone a few dollars to check it out first."

"I guess I'm stuck," she started crying again. "It's so bad now, I'm afraid to drive the car. I think it's trying to kill me."

"I'm really sorry," I said and meant it. "Why don't you see if some mechanic needs a training aid."

"Oh, one last thing," I said. "Don't go doing what some people do, like taking it out and burning it and reporting it stolen. If you think you've got problems now ..."

Curve creates problems

The recent lowering of on-post speed limits has not resolved a long-existing problem on a portion of 1st Division Road that bisects part of the golf course between Baltzell Avenue and Dixie Road.

The problem is caused by the fact that one may pass on curves, specifically the one closest to the "pedestrian crossing" between holes 10 and 11 (old holes 1 and 2), Pineside.

This has happened to me on several occasions. While I know of no collisions between cars and golf carts, there is always a first.

It may well be that double yellow stripes should be painted on this stretch of road from Baltzell to Dixie.

Could someone please take a look?

Reader thanks soldiers for parade participation

To all soldiers who took part in the Operation Welcome Home Parade: It may have seemed all in the day's work for you, but for the citizens of our tri-community of Columbus-Phenix City-Fort Benning, it was a great day.

We are proud of our "hometown" troops.

The Gulf War was very much a part of our lives as we followed you into Desert Shield/Desert Storm.

However, the media is no substitute for the real thing.

It was great to see you — looking good! It was great to cheer you, to tell you in our own way how proud we are of all of you, to thank you, and to welcome you home.

DEH to curtail air conditioning usage

Hot days ahead

By Jon R. Anderson
Bayonet staff writer

If, on the hottest, most blistering of the upcoming summer days, your air conditioner happens to go off, chances are a call of complaint is going to do little to improve your situation. According to Fort Benning officials, this is all part of the plan.

The plan, says Directorate of Engineering and Housing section chief, Mark Fincher, is to dramatically cut electricity use during peak consumption periods.

By simply turning off air conditioners during the hottest days of the summer, he says, Georgia Power grants substantially reduced rates.

"It's not an energy-saving issue," says Fincher. "It's a dollar-saving issue."

By taking part in the curtailment program, he explains, Fort Benning is expected to save almost $1 million in electricity costs.

This will amount to what Fincher said will be approximately seven days of air conditioning loss.

He points out, however, these will not be entire days of air conditioning disruption, but, cool air loss only through the hottest periods of the day.

Last summer, which was unusually warm, even for Georgia, Fort Benning curtailed usage on 11 different days for a total of 38 hours.

Latrella Conwell, who works in Soldiers' Plaza, remembers working through those steamy days and recommends people prepare for it this summer by having plenty of fans on hand.

> "It's not an energy-saving issue; it's a dollar-saving issue."
> — Mark Fincher
> Engineering and Housing

"All you can really do," she says, " is open up all the windows and make sure there are paper weights on your desk so the fans don't blow your papers all around."

Fincher knows the inconvenience the curtailments tend to cause, but he says he does his best to cut air conditioners that affect fewer number of people.

"The last to be cut off," he says, "is the family housing areas and barracks because, obviously, this is where people live. We try not to touch those areas if we can help it."

The first to be cut off, says Fincher, are the administrative buildings, followed by public buildings such as the bowling alleys and the arts and crafts centers.

"The people who are hardest hit are those working in the old World War II-era buildings with poor insulation," he says "Those people get really hot."

Fincher says that when temperatures start getting up over 96 degrees, on a regional level, a curtailment is probably on it's way.

With temperatures already climbing to the 94-degree mark, Fort Benning's "hottest days" may soon be approaching.

Benning teen club continues renovations on new building

By James C. Rupp
Bayonet staff writer

Renovations are still continuing on Building 1796, the soon-to-be home of the Fort Benning Teen Club.

According to Billie C. Smith, Youth Activities director, the old Total Quality Management facility located on Ingersoll Road has come a long way since work began two weeks ago. And, it still has quite a distance to go.

Smith said some of the problems are: weak spots in the proposed pool room floor; cracked, dirty paint over windows; no windows at all in the dance hall area; inadequately marked exit and fire signs; and chipped and peeling paint in just about every corner of the building.

She said, however, her outlook is still bright and she expects the teens themselves to be getting involved in the near future.

James Rogers puts together a remote target system drive motor.

Civilians receive excellence awards

By Brian C. Sutton
Bayonet staff writer

Excellence sometimes comes from experience.

Army Ideas for Excellence awards were given to three Fort Benning civilian employees May 21.

Post Chief of Staff Col. John D. Fuller presented the awards to James F. Rogers, Doyle R. Bias and Clifford Feltner for their outstanding contributions to Army savings. Their combined annual savings to the Army will exceed $14,000.

Rogers was commended for a suggestion proposing that the drive motor for the remote target system mechanism be repaired at installation level. In the past, the entire motor was replaced.

"I couldn't see the point in replacing the entire thing," said Rogers. All it took was a little thought, and I repaired the damaged wires. When I was done, it was better than new."

Rogers said each motor costs the government nearly $400 to replace. It costs nearly nothing to repair.

"When it comes to us from the manufacturer, they wrap the wires in plastic, which burns away," said Rogers. "Silicone is more of a water-based substance. The silicone won't burn away and cause the wires to fuse together."

Bias and Feltner were given awards for proposing that the lock ring breech handle on the lock ring assembly on the 90mm recoiless rifle be welded when it breaks off.

As with the remote target system drive motor, the entire lock ring breech assembly was replaced until recently when the men's idea was accepted.

"When I see something that's not right, I try to find a way to fix it," said Feltner.

Feltner, who has 14 suggestions pending approval with Bias and others, said at times it is frustrating when bureaucracy holds up an idea.

"It's frustrating and depressing at times when you know you have something good that will work, but someone up the approving line says no," said Feltner.

Bias agreed that it is frustrating.

"It does seem to take nearly forever," said Bias. "We were glad we finally were able to get this one through."

Bias said it saves the Army both time and money to repair the piece here on post.

"Instead of trashing a piece and reordering a new one," said Bias, "we take 15 to 30 minutes to repair it, and put it back on the weapon."

With this much experience and knowledge, one can be sure that more suggestions will be coming through in the future.

Infantry magazine features article about Army's future

Infantry Magazine

The May-June 1991 issue of Infantry Magazine includes an article about Army Chief of Staff Gen. Carl E. Vuono discussing the Army of the 1990s in terms of the challenges facing it.

The article, "The Army of the 1990s: Challenges of Change and Continuity," was adapted from a speech Vuono gave at Fort Benning during the Infantry Conference in April.

Another general officer, Maj. Gen. Bernard Loeffke, in "One Place, Three Wars: Part 1," offers practical lessons he learned during three tours in Vietnam.

In Part 2 of this article, which will appear in Infantry's July-August 1991 issue, he will show how these lessons can be applied to other "small wars," such as "wars of subversion, the war on drugs, and the war on information."

Loeffke is chairman of the Inter-American Defense Board in Washington, D.C.

That issue also features two articles that share lessons learned from recent conflicts: "Just Cause: MOUT (military operations on urban terrain) Lessons Learned," by Maj. Robert G. Boyko, and "Facing a Chemical Threat," by Capt. James E. Smith.

Boyko discusses the lessons his battalion of the 7th Infantry Division learned about military operations on urban terrain during Operation Just Cause in Panama in late 1989.

Smith, chemical officer of the 197th Infantry Brigade when it deployed to Southwest Asia, details the lessons learned about dealing with a chemical threat during the brigade's predeployment and deployment, its initial operations, and the sustainment period that followed.

The other feature article in the issue is "81mm Mortars: The Forgotten Platoon," by Capt. Christopher A. Collins, who was a mortar observer/controller at the Joint Readiness Training Center when he wrote the article. Collins discusses the mistakes units most often make in regard to using their mortars during training at the center.

Information about Infantry Magazine, including subscription rates and writers' guidelines, is available from the editor at P.O. Box 2005, Fort Benning, Ga. 31905-0605. The telephone number is DSN 835-2350 or commercial (404) 545-2350.

The editorial and subscription offices are in building 1827 at the corner of Marchant and Ingersoll streets.

FOR THE RECORD

In an article that ran in the May 31 issue of the Bayonet, the names of two medicines were misspelled.

The proper name of the medication to prevent malaria is chloronique, and the proper name for the germ-warfare protection medicine is ciprofloxicin.

We regret the error.

Camp Rudder wives walk through swamp

Annual event focuses on ranger training

33rd Tactical Fighter Wing

Imagine trying to cross a swamp by means of a rope bridge, or trudging through the muddy swamps of northwest Florida.

Now try to image 38 U.S. Army ranger wives doing all this and more, and you'll have a good idea of what the recent Camp Rudder Wives Swamp Walk was all about.

"We've been doing this since about 1979 for all the wives of rangers here at Camp Rudder, and we also invite the wives of rangers from as far away as Fort Benning, Ga., and Fort Bragg, N.C.," said Sgt. 1st Class Bruce A. Ruffin, operations non-commissioned officer at Camp Rudder.

According to Sgt. 1st Class Ruffin, the annual event was started by U.S. Army Maj. Gavin Storter as a way to familiarize both wives and the local military community with how the rangers train the students.

The students who complete the course are awarded the ranger tab.

A warm welcome was extended to all attendees by Capt. Randy Jackson, Company A commander. Jackson stressed the importance of safety in all the maneuvers the wives were about to participate in. Additionally, he explained the importance of the ranger mission, which is to train infantry men as small unit leaders for combat situations.

After the welcome, a 12-hour day full of adventure was about to begin. The first activity planned for the day was the rappelling demonstration, given by Sgt. 1st Class Ron Gigler, a senior instructor at the camp.

Those who were daring enough, volunteered to slide down from the top of the 60-foot high rappelling tower.

For those who finished rappelling and others who were a bit leery of heights, a demonstration in weapons was given by Staff Sgt. Gregory Banton. Several types of weapons were available for the wives to see and handle including the M-14, M-16, AK-47 and an M-60, which the wives were able to fire.

If that didn't get their blood pumping, maybe a class on reptiles complete with six types of poisonous snakes known to North America did it. The reptile class was originally started as a safety class for the students, but it has now grown into a production to include shows for boy scouts, girl scouts and community events.

According to Staff Sgt. William A. Wilkinson, a reptile handler, snake handling is a voluntary duty at the camp. In addition to snakes, the camp is also the home of Big John, a 50-year-old, 14-foot alligator caught sometimes in the early 1960s on the reservation.

The rangers also have their very own Marine, Staff Sgt. Michael W. Gallagher, who gave a class on small boat operations and stream crossings. Each portion of the Zodiac boat was described in detail, along with the manning positions, uniform, launching and land operations.

After a lunch of hot dogs and hamburgers, the wives began a trek through the wilderness.

A short briefing on the actual swamp walk itself was after lunch. Maps were handed out, and directions were given to the wives. Everything was in place and ready for the walk.

The wives walked to the trucks that were to take them to the rope crossing portion of the walk. All of the wives made it successfully across the rope bridge.

Next, the wives set out on their walk through the swamps to find their boats. They broke down into groups of about six, put on their life jackets and began their boating expedition.

After paddling down the Yellow River, they boarded trucks that took them to the start of the walk.

At about 5 p.m., the wives arrived back at the camp, ready for their evening meal. A place to change into dry clothes and hot showers were also provided. They finished their evening meal and headed over to Gator Lounge for presentation of honorary ranger pins and certificates.

All in all, it was a memorial event for the wives. It was a chance for them to see what the rangers do and to actually be a part of it — if only for a day.

Army opens diver jobs to women

Move creates 153 positions in MOS 00B for female soldiers

Army News Service

WASHINGTON - Women soldiers can add Army diver to the list of soldiering careers available to them.

In a recent message to the Army worldwide, the Office of the Deputy Chief of Staff for Personnel announced the opening of military occupational specialty 00B, Army diver, to women.

The move opens an additional 153 positions in the active Army, Army Reserve and Army National Guard to women.

Army personnel officials said in the message that women would be allowed to enter the diver military occupational specialty because Army diving teams are all echelon-above-corps units.

"The combat risk probability does not warrant continued closure," the message said.

With the addition, 286 of the Army's 331 enlisted military occupational specialties are open to women. Army personnel officials say that, although 90 percent of enlisted, warrant officer and officer career management fields are open to women, only a little more than 50 percent of all the Army's positions can be filled by women.

A large percentage of the Army's positions are in units with direct combat missions.

Students give 197th soldiers rousing welcome

By Tom Wilkinson
197th Infantry Brigade

Two bus loads of 197th Infantry Brigade soldiers stormed the halls of the Rigdon Road Elementary School in Columbus May 30.

An exercise in terrorist deterrence? Well, not exactly. Soldiers from each of the battalions and separate companies within the brigade were invited to participate in a "Salute to Our Armed Forces."

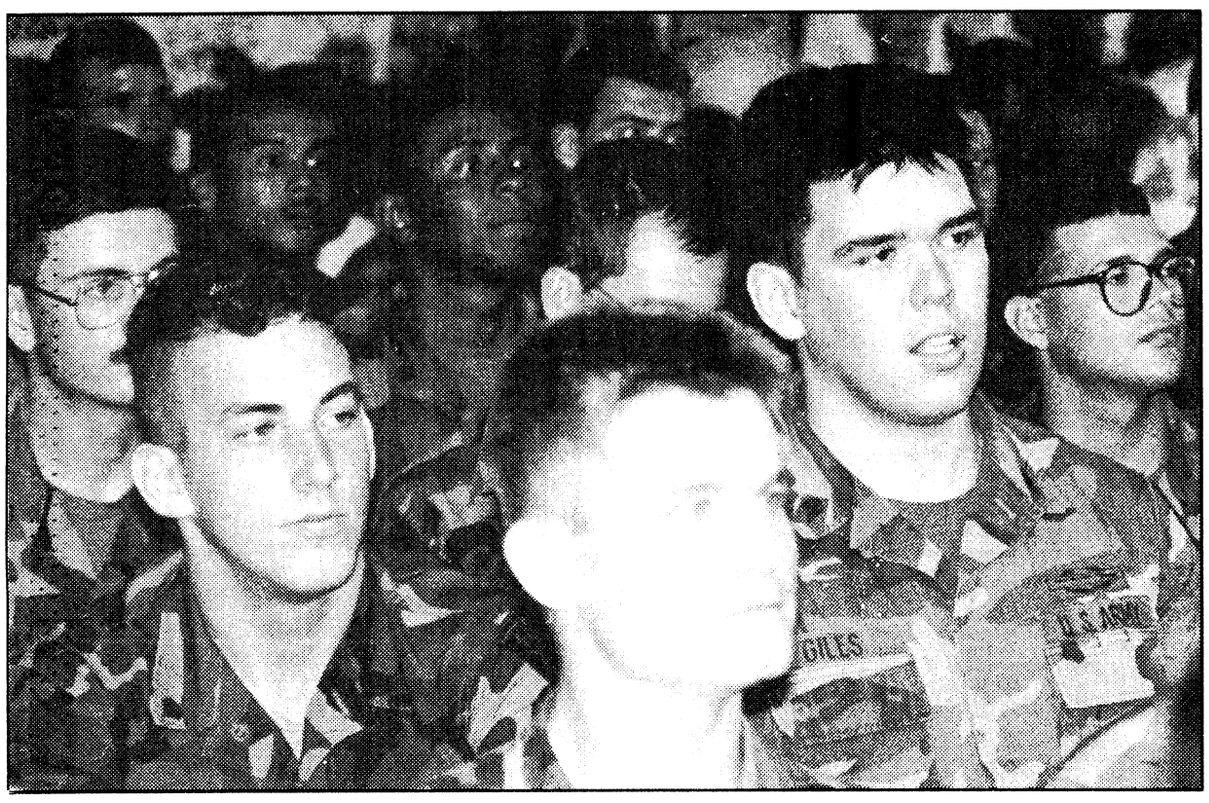
The program was put together by the school staff, and the second and fourth-grade classes, said Carol Moore, a kindergarten teacher and program organizer.

"The staff, headed by Beatrice Allen and Charlyne Meriweather, put it all together," said Moore. "They spent almost a month practicing for this, every day."

The salute provided music, song and dance in honor of all the soldiers who braved Operation Desert Storm.

"You are the perfect role models for our students — real heroes," said Sam Gregg, principal, as he addressed the soldiers.

Col. John D. Fuller, post chief of staff, rendered the welcoming remarks to the audience. He applauded the role of the soldiers in Operation Desert Storm and echoed Gregg's comment about role models. He also explained to the children why soldiers had to deploy and fight.



"It's because these fine soldiers were taught about right and wrong in schools just like this one," he said. "They went and did the job in the hopes that you would not have to do the same someday."

The soldiers watched intently, as the children, clad in stars and stripes, conducted renditions of patriotic songs such as "Yankee Doodle Dandy," "America, the Beautiful," and "The Star-Spangled Banner." The children also recited poetry, danced minuets, waltzes; and, they even square-danced.

"It was really good," said Pvt. 2 James Deas, a 72nd Engineer Company soldier, referring to the children's performance. "I'm really surprised what kids can do at that age."

"I really liked it," said Spc. Robert Stepherson, a wheel mechanic in Company C, 197th Support Battalion. "You know, I got letter, upon letter from kids like those all during our deployment. It was great!"

As the soldiers boarded the buses to head back to Kelley Hill, children at the school were waving American flags — a real hero's welcome.

2nd Bn., 69th Armor's honorary colonel pays visit

Retired major general spends time with tankers

By Karl Schelly
197th Infantry Brigade

The week of May 20 to 24 was "Regimental History Week," of sorts, for the Panthers of 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor.

The occasion was the visit of retired Maj. Gen. Ronald J. Fairfield Jr., honorary colonel of the 69th Armor Regiment.

Fairfield spent the week hearing the Kelley Hill tankers' personal recollections about Operation Desert Storm and passing on the history of the regiment to them.

"I was most impressed by their accomplishments," said Fairfield, who also maintains close ties with the 69th's 3rd Battalion, stationed at Fort Stewart, Ga., and 1st and 4th battalions, in Kitzingen, Germany. "It was like nothing we had done before, but the regiment has done a lot. It's a history that the 69th can be proud of."

As its honorary colonel, Fairfield said his duties revolve around holding the fabric of the regiment together.

"Every soldier should have a military home, a heritage, a unit whose past triumphs instill pride," he said. "It is my goal to lend class and distinction to what otherwise may be a brawl."

The system Fairfield alluded to is the U.S. Army Regimental System, as described in Army Regulation 600-82. Appointed by the secretary of the Army, the honorary colonel is a distinguished, retired commissioned officer in the rank of colonel or above who served within the regiment.

During the Korean War, Fairfield served as a tank company commander and later operations officer of the 89th Tank Battalion, a former 25th Infantry Division element that was the predecessor of the 69th Armor Regiment. In 1964, Fairfield commanded the 1st Battalion, 69th Armor, the first of its kind in Vietnam.

During his visit with the soldiers of the 2nd Battalion, the regiment's color-bearing battalion, Fairfield received first-hand accounts of the Panthers' operations in Saudi Arabia and Iraq with their new M-1A1 tanks and informed them of the regiment's previous accomplishments.

"I enjoyed hearing about what the battalion did, but they still need to know about past victories and losses in order to learn from those mistakes," he said. "I want to see all the soldiers in the battalion affiliated with their prospective regiments — they need to know that they can have a military home."

In addition to his responsibilities as regimental historian, the honorary colonel also serves as counselor for all the soldiers in the regiment. Although he lives in Tucson, Ariz., Fairfield said he wouldn't mind living closer to the men of 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor.

"I would probably be breathing down the commanders' necks all day long," he said. "But, you don't want to interfere — just make yourself available."

"As you spend more time with the regiment, you become part of its history — you're proud of it, and you pass it along," said Fairfield, who said the Army uses soldiers' regimental affiliation as a primary means of determining their duty stations.

"Regimental affiliation can provide soldiers with a home base," he said "We can keep these outstanding soldiers within the regiment.

Soldiers interested in becoming affiliated with a regiment should contact their personnel actions supervisor for more information.

Military personnel's Desert Storm savings program ends

Army News Service

HEIDELBERG, Germany — The redeployment of military personnel from Operation Desert Storm has ended the Soldiers Savings Deposit Program.

According to the U.S. Army Europe finance officials, soldiers who elected to make deposits through the allotment program should quickly terminate those allotments.

Deposits made after soldiers return from Southwest Asia do not earn interest.

Deposits made while soldiers were deployed will earn interest for up to two months after the month their imminent danger pay stops.

For example, a soldier who redeployed in May receives imminent danger pay for the entire month of May; the soldier's deposits into the savings program earn interest through the end of July.

Finance officials say returning soldiers must submit a written request to their finance office to withdraw funds from the program.

The request must contain the soldiers' name, Social Security number, branch of service, amount requested, date of desired payment, how final payment should be made and reason for withdrawal (close out the account because the soldier is no longer deployed or close out because 90-day period is over).

If the payment is to be placed in the soldier's checking or savings account, the appropriate account number and routing transaction number must be included.

According to officials from the Defense Finance and Accounting System's Indianapolis center, slow mail from Southwest Asia has delayed the processing of some cash collection vouchers used by soldiers to make cash contributions into the program.

More installations to be closed or realigned

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Base Closure and Realignment Commission has added 36 military installations to the Pentagon's list of 43 potential bases to close or scale back, according to a list obtained by The Associated Press.

Among the major installations on the list are the five planned home ports in New York, Mississippi, Alabama, Washington and Texas — facilities nearing completion but called into question by the Pentagon's plan for a reduced 477-ship Navy by the end of fiscal 1992.

The inclusion of the home ports is certain to cause consternation in Congress and the Navy, which has defended the Pentagon list of naval facilities for possible closure by arguing that the home ports would remain.

The list released by the commission is an addition to the 43 bases that Defense Secretary Dick Cheney recommended in April be closed or scaled back. The commission's recommendations are to be submitted to President Bush by July 1.

The president and Congress must accept or reject the commission's list in its entirety.

The list also includes the Army's cold weather training facilities in Fort Richardson, Alaska, and Fort Drum, N.Y. The bases have been geared to preparing troops for winter battles against the Soviet Union — a concept in doubt since the collapse of the Warsaw Pact.

Commission chairman Jim Courter, in an accompanying statement, said the panel's recommendations are not a closure or realignment list but rather "a wide array of options."

"Many of the bases are being studied as alternatives to those already cited in the Pentagon's report," Courter said. "To make informed and independent judgments, we need to compare bases that are slated for closure or realignment with facilities that are not on the Pentagon's list."

In addition to the installations, the list includes the Army Corps of Engineers for possible shutdown or scaling back.

The Pentagon announced on May 24 that Cheney had sent Congress a proposal to consolidate the Army Corps of Engineers as part of the overall plan for shrinking the U.S. military.

Cheney had planned to include the plan as part of his overall base closure proposal, but the Corps streamlining plan was delayed.

The plan realigns the boundaries for the Corps' regional offices, cuts the number of Corps divisions from 10 to six and cuts the number of districts from 35 to 22. No offices would be closed, but about 2,600 jobs — mostly civilian — would be cut.

The commission, appointed by the president with congressional approval, has the authority to accept or amend the Pentagon's list.

"I have said all along that we won't rubber-stamp the defense secretary's proposals," Courter said. "And I have cautioned everyone not to assume that their installation is safe just because it is not included in the Pentagon's report."

Among the Army facilities on the commission's list for realignment or closure are Fort Hamilton and Fort Totten in New York.

Major training areas the commission is reviewing for either closure or transfer to the Army's reserve component are Fort McCoy in Wisconsin, Camp Pickett and Fort A.P. Hill in Virginia, Fort Indiantown Gap in Pennsylvania and Fort Buchanan in Puerto Rico.

The San Diego Marine Recruit Training Depot in California is a potential base for realignment, the commission said.

The list of naval installations for realignment are: U.S. Marine Corps Barstow in California, the Naval Electronics Systems Engineering Center San Diego, Naval Depot Jacksonville in Florida, U.S. Marine Corps Depot in Albany, Ga., Naval Depot Norfolk in Virginia, Navy Pensacola in Florida and the Naval Electronics Systems Engineering Center in Portsmouth, Va.

The Air Force bases on the list for possible closure are: Goodfellow Air Force Base in Texas, Plattsburgh Air Force Base in New York, Homestead and MacDill Air Force bases in Florida and Mountain Home Air Force Base in Idaho.

The commission will examine Griffiss Air Force Base in New York for realignment or closure.

Courter said that at least one member of the seven-member, independent commission will visit any installation that becomes a closure candidate.

Residents of the communities near the installations will have a chance to testify at those hearings, Courter said.

The big top is a familiar circus scene.

CIRCUS LIFE

Jeff Plunkett, who says he considers himself from "the old school," applies clown makeup.

Performers traveling under big top are a dying breed in a declining industry

Despite a dim view, one family of performers keep a positive outlook.

With a heave, the canvas rises up the poles. Ropes and wires are tied off and flags unfurl. Bystanders watch curiously as animals and equipment unload and performers rehearse. With the trumpet of an elephant, there is little doubt in anyone's mind, the circus is in town.

Since the later days of the previous century, the circus has become as much a part of American heritage as baseball and apple pie.

During Memorial Day weekend, a slice of that heritage appeared at Fort Benning in the form of an old-fashioned, one ring, big top circus.

Children of all ages turned out, despite sometimes foul weather, for the daily shows of Rimwood's Circus.

The scene is a familiar one.

Open-mouthed youngsters stare wide-eyed as the juggling lady twirls flaming batons through the air and laugh as an acrobatic clown bounces precariously on the trampoline.

Trained elephants perform a variety of tricks; and, as everyone holds his breath to the roll of a drum, a tight rope walker executes a forward somersault.

Of course, no circus would be complete without the call of the concessionaire: "Hey, get your cotton candy here, hot dogs and cotton candy."

Despite its relative popularity, many involved in the circus say the industry is perhaps reaching its final days.

"It's a dying part of American heritage," says Corky Plunkett, who has spent 62 years in the industry. Corky remembers the circus heydays when literally hundreds of rail cars would move the massive big top shows from town to town.

"Things are different these days," says Corky reflectively, rubbing his hand along the rough flank of the elephant he trains. The old circus man lists problems with sky-rocketing insurance, equipment costs and worst of all, he says, lack of interest on the part of the public.

"People just don't seem to want to do family-oriented things much anymore," he says.

Corky's son, James, has grown up in the business and now continues with his brother and family.

"If something doesn't happen, the circus will be gone in 30 years," says James, who performs in the trampoline act and is the tightrope walker. However, he is still optimistic.

"It's not over until the fat lady sings," he says with a smile. "We're going to hang in there until she does."

Despite hard times, the entire Plunkett family enjoys the lifestyle. "It's still a good business; and, most importantly, you've got a free life," says Corky.

Free is the word James uses to describe his life as well. "You can work any place in the world," he says. "It's a business with wheels on it, so to speak."

Perhaps surprisingly, the Plunketts all agree that the circus is a great place to raise children as well.

Jeff Plunkett, who does the clown act, is raising two children the same way he and his brother James were raised — on the road.

School is done through correspondence, and the kids are automatically incorporated into the family business.

Mother and grandmother to the clan, June Plunkett explains what her children may have missed in formal education they have made up for in travel and being exposed to such a wide variety of life.

"We've been able to do things as a family that we probably wouldn't have been able to do if we were leading a normal life," she explains, citing show tours in Europe, the Orient and throughout the United States.

Husband Corky agrees. "Family is all there is in this world," he says. "If you haven't got a good, close family, then you don't have anything. Because this is family entertainment, it's a family-oriented business."

Jeff's son, Josh, who is 5 years old, says he wants to follow in his father's footsteps and become a clown. His father says jokingly he's already a clown. But, in actuality, Jeff takes his funny man business very seriously.

Jeff explains there's really only a few truly professional clowns left; the kind he says that have heart and do whatever it takes to pull off a successful circus.

"Most of the clowns out there these days won't even help put up the big top," he says, again alluding to changing times.

Both Jeff and James have mixed feelings about their children carrying on the family tradition that now spans five generations. Although they speak highly of what they do, they know its hardships all too well.

They both agree that ultimately the decision will rest with the children. As James says, "I want them to know there are other things out there — easier ways to make a living."

" But, if they're anything like me," he adds, "it will be in their blood."

All in all, it is evident that these people, whose own personnel heritage is part of the legend that built America and carried it through some of its hardest times, are a proud, very closely knit family.

America will not be the same without them.

Post employee swims for spot on top swim team

Jon R. Anderson

By Jon R. Anderson
Bayonet staff writer

To be selected to the Masters All American Swim Team, you have to be one of the best — not only in the country, but in the world.

Recently, Chuck Gantner of Fort Benning earned the right to call himself one of the best, for the third time.

Selection to the team is based on sanctioned meets at regional levels across the country and is assessed at different age levels.

When Gantner swam the 50-meter backstroke in 30.07 seconds at a masters meet at Atlanta last year, he wasn't quite sure if it would be fast enough for selection.

It was. In fact, it was also the world record speed for his age bracket, 44 to 49, during that year. Based on that record score, Gantner was selected for the All American Team.

Gantner is no stranger to record scores, however. In May, 1986, he seized the world record in the 100-meter backstroke at the Tokyo World Masters Championship — a record he still holds to this day.

In 1984, at a Toronto masters meet, he took three gold medals and a silver, and broke another world record. Not bad for someone who says he doesn't take competing very seriously.

The word seriously may be a matter of perspective, though.

Gantner, who is a senior education specialist for the U.S. Army Infantry School, swims one to two and a half miles, five days a week. That's almost 100 laps on his hard days.

Gantner looks forward to this year's meet in Atlanta where he thinks he may have a shot at taking another all-time record in the backstroke.

"I've beat the current best time in practice," he says. "I've just got to put all the pieces together at the meet."

In July at Emory University, he'll find out if he can.

To the military community, Gantner highly recommends swiming as a form of physical training, explaining that it provides one of the most thorough workouts available and is much easier on the body than running.

"But not just as form of PT," he says. "It's also incredibly relaxing — it's great for stess relief."

He also recommends swimming as a form of training, explaining that thoughout history, a relatively large number of soliers have lost their lives, not to the rifle fire of the enemy, but to drowning.

To begin any type of swimming regime, Gantner suggests starting out slowly and working into a more rigorous workout, adding laps and varying strokes for variety.

Fort Benning Community Recreation Division provides a "Swim For Your Life" program for those people intersted in getting serious about swimming. For more information, call 545-5709.

Cleveland Indians hold two-day tryout

Area scout for the Cleveland Indians will be holding tryouts at Golden Park on June 17 and 18. Youths aged 16 to 21 are welcome to participate.

The purpose of the tryout is not necessarily to sign players on the spot, but to identify prospects we may want to follow in the future, according to Bill Lawlor, Cleveland's area scout. Sign-ups will be each morning at 9 a.m.

Those participating in the tryouts are responsible to bring their gloves, shoes and other personal equipment. A letter of permission or a release form from their coach is also required if the youth is presently playing in an organized league or on an organized team. Players interested in trying out should contact John Dittrich at 571-8866.

Free fishing at state's public fishing areas

Georgians may fish without a fishing license and with no required fees at the state's public fishing areas on Saturday and Sunday, Department of Natural Resources Commissioner, Joe Tanner, announced.

In recognition of National Fishing Week, Monday through Saturday, public fishing areas statewide will open their lakes and ponds to all Georgians for two days of free fishing. No fishing license, trout stamp, or Wildlife Management Area stamp will be required for these days.

The Department of Natural Resources invites all residents to come out and experience two days of fishing at some of the state's ponds and streams. The free fishing days will offer Georgia families a perfect opportunity to take advantage of a wonderful weekend outing.

Soldier show 'celebrates' at Benning

USAIC Public Affairs Office

The eighth annual United States Army Soldier Show presents "Celebration '91," a musical extravaganza performed "For the Soldier, By the Soldier," will come to Fort Benning during its worldwide tour.

Talented soldier performers have gathered from the four corners of the Army, from Europe to Korea, from Alaska to Panama and throughout the country. By military occupational speciality, they are cooks, truck drivers, parachute riggers and mechanics.

But those soldiers aren't visiting Fort Benning for just another training exercise.

Instead, they have been selected from applicants worldwide, to be part of an elite soldier entertainment troupe. For the next eight months they'll represent the total Army as cast and crew members of the eighth annual Army Soldier Show.

Months of planning and preparation went in to producing the action-packed, 80-minute traveling showcase of Army talent. Working intense hours during March and April, the entire production was arranged around the talents and personalities of the soldier entertainers in only six short weeks.

Benning dentist selected as 'rising star' for 1991

Dental Activity

Maj. Gregory Smith is the executive officer of the Fort Benning Dental Activity. He has been selected by the Human Resource Executive Magazine as a "Rising Star" in human resource management for 1991. Smith will also be the Keynote speaker at the 16th annual Fort Benning Federal Employees Week luncheon at the NCO Club Monday. The theme of this year's program is "Professional Development; A Golden Opportunity for Excellence."

His selection as "Rising Star" was made based on his contributions to the human resource field. The magazine was particularly interested in his contributions to Total Quality Management and dental support provided during Operation Desert Storm. He was one of 10 people chosen from the United States for this honor. Human Resource Executive is a civilian journal that caters to human resource and training personnel. He was the only military person selected. He will be featured in the June issue.

During his career, Smith has served on high-level projects to include medical project officer for the Yorktown Bicentennial where he coordinated medical support for President Ronald Reagan, French President Francois Mitterand, and the secretary of the Army. He has recently completed the initiation of Total Quality Management within the DENTAC reaping excellent results.

He is in demand as a public speaker and he is a prolific writer. He has completed the fourth chapter on a book he is writing on personal motivation and success. He believes "people, not programs are the key to success." He routinely leads motivational and business seminars and has lectured to thousands of people across the United States and Puerto Rico. He has written and published several articles on leadership, motivation, and productivity improvement. One article, "Total Quality Management; Help or Hindrance?" has just been accepted for publication. His last paper titled, "A Storm On the Horizon: Time to Improve White-Collar Productivity" was submitted to the 1991 Nick Hoge Award for Professional Development.

He graduated from North Georgia College and has a masters degree in personnel management from Troy State University where he won a scholarship. He attended the Total Quality Management College by Phillip Crosby and Associates.

He serves as a member of numerous professional, church and civic organizations. He is a member of the National Association of Eagle Scouts, Toastmasters International, The Professional Business Communicators and is listed in the "Who's Who of Business Communicators of Columbus, Georgia. He enjoys making people laugh by telling humorous stories and woodworking is his hobby. He is actively involved as an actor in community theater and has won many leadership and public speaking awards. His highest military award is the Meritorious Service Medal awarded three times. He said the greatest award he received was the Eagle Scout Badge. He is the father of three children, Heather, Hannah and Garry. His wife, Cathy, is a professional homemaker and caterer. She is originally from Lawrenceville, Ga.

In July, they move to San Antonio, Texas. He will work in the Office of Strategic Planning and Innovation at Health Services Command.

Local radio DJ reads to Benning students

Fort Benning Schools

He may say he is "Sunny" but April 26 a "rainy-day reader" is what Dan Brennan, a radio announcer from a local station, was as one of six guest readers at read-a-thon in Virginia Wilson's fourth grade class at Wilcox School.

As the rain beat steadily on the windows, students curled up with a good book and a fluffy pillow for the read-a-thon.

The entire day was devoted to reading. The children made themselves comfortable and read for 20-minute time periods.

At the end of each silent reading time, students took a break while guest readers read aloud.

Six guest readers visited the students during the read-a-thon. They read stories they were their personal favorites.

When all was said and done and the last book has been closed, the students left with comments such as, "This day went by too fast!" and "This was fun, we should do it again sometime."

Dan Brennan, radio announcer from local radio station WGSY "Sunny 100", reads a story to read-a-thon participant Christine Achivida as Viginia Wilcox looks on.

Fort Benning Schools

Chaplain Roland Clemente of the 2nd Battalion, 18th Infantry Regiment recently visited a McBride School first-grade classroom to talk with the students and to express the appreciation of the battalion to the students for their support, as well as to bring them a gift from the unit. McBride School had adopted the 2nd Bn., 18th Inf. Regt. when it was deployed to Saudi Arabia.

"This year has been an eventful one in Benning classrooms," said Dr. Dell Karr, assistant superintendent for curriculum. "The 3,600 students in the Fort Benning Schools adopted the Fort Benning units that were in Saudi Arabia. As the year progressed, the students sent letters, holiday ornaments, valentines, and audio tapes to let the troops know that the students were thinking of them," said Karr.

"The adoption of units was one way in which our Fort Benning students joined the rest of the community in supporting our troops,"

Post students take honors in state competition

Fort Benning Schools

Faith Middle School's Odyssey of the Mind team placed third overall in the Odyssey of the Mind World Finals competition in Knoxville, Tennessee, May 23 to 25.

The team competed in the performance problem, "Pompeii," which required them to create and present original scene that took place before or during the devastation of Mt. Vesuvius in 79 A.D.

Faith's team captured first place in solving the long-term problem. "To have solved the long-term problem better than thousands of teams is quite an accomplishment for these students," said coach Libbie Kurinec.

Team members are Greg Maschek, Elisabeth Moore, Rachael Novier, Rae-Leigh Dame, Paige Novier, Arvis Layton and Brooke Newey.

The team is also coached by Cindy Givens, media specialist at Faith.

This is the fifth year that Faith School has participated in the world finals of Odyssey of the Mind.

SOA soldier wins AUSA queen contest

by Keith F. Johnson
U.S. Army School of the Americas

"I told myself I was going to win, I knew I would win," explained Sgt. Latawnya Rennick about the confidence she had while competing in the Association of the U.S. Army queen contest.

Her confidence paid off May 18 during the Armed Forces Day picnic when she was crowned AUSA queen.

AUSA is a private, non-profit organization that builds support for the decisive role the Army plays in the security of the nation. AUSA works to preserve and expand the rights, privileges and benefits of soldiers, retirees, Army civilian employees and their families.

The AUSA queen contest is designed to generate funds and provide an opportunity for the winner to represent their post's chapter at the AUSA national meeting in Washington, D.C. and at local events during the year.

For Rennick, who describes herself as a people person, the opportunity to travel to Washington, D.C. and meet new people was the only incentive she needed to work toward winning the contest.

"It gives me the opportunity to meet other people I normally wouldn't meet," Rennick said. "Already a couple of people have seen me and asked 'Aren't you the AUSA queen."

The contest began March 1 and ended May 15. Rennick, who was the U.S. Army School of the Americas' sub-chapter queen in 1990, wasted no time defending her crown beginning her fund-raising activities March 2. Rennick said a combination of bake sales, car washes, drawings and corporate sponsors helped her exceed her dollar goal.

According to Rennick, the winner of the contest is based on who meets their assigned dollar goal relative to the size of the unit and the greatest percentage of sales exceeding the assigned goal.

Rennick will receive her tiara and sash, a $100 savings bond, an AUSA warmup jacket, an Army dress-blue uniform, AUSA plaque and certificate and an evening gown to wear at the national meeting during her expense-paid trip to Washington D.C.

Rennick, who has a bachelor of arts degree in Spanish from Ohio State University, joined the Army for the opportunity to travel and meet people. She says her assignment at SOA has been very rewarding because of the Spanish environment and gives her good experience for reaching her goal of becoming an interpreter. She has also been working toward her master's degree at Troy State University studying international relations and ultimately wants to work for the United Nations.

Rennick said winning the contest has given her confidence that she will someday realize her goals.

"Knowing when you set your mind to do something it can be done gives me a great deal of confidence to accomplish whatever I set out to do," Rennick said.

Words of wisdom and experience for next year's AUSA Queen contestants.

SOA commandant looks to future

by Keith F. Johnson
U.S. Army School of the Americas

"My vision is that by the year two thousand the U.S. Army School of the Americas will be capable of satisfying all Latin American military training requirements," said Col. Jose R. Feliciano, SOA commandant.

After one month as SOA commandant, Feliciano has a clear idea of what his goals are for the future of SOA and how he plans to accomplish those goals.

"I have made an in-depth study of all the tasks I feel the School must accomplish and I have singled-out five tasks as the major areas of concentration where I can have the most influence," Feliciano explained.

He cited those five areas as: training to standard, personnel readiness, effective management, quality of life for SOA personnel and students and to promote democracy and human rights.

"This is a continuation of many systems and programs already in effect in the School," Feliciano said.

"I will focus on a few areas to make us more efficient, such as what we do with resource management, to maximize our goals while working with a shrinking budget the School will have as we build down our Army."

"I have to find a way to integrate systems to allow us to accomplish as much of the training missions as possible, Feliciano said."

Feliciano mentioned that not only will the School focus on resource management internally but will also be adding resource management to its training vectors.

The other training vectors of the School are joint and combined operations; special operations/low intensity conflict and noncommissioned officer professional development.

According to Feliciano, the training vectors are created to meet the needs of the Latin American militaries.

Feliciano said the military activities of many Latin American countries are subject to decreased funding which has created a need for better resource management.

"Many of the countries in Latin America face an economic problem, a problem of debt," Feliciano said.

"As the militaries look to support their nations they are having to redefine their roles. The militaries are responsible for protecting the sovereignty of their countries, but they also must find ways to contribute to the economies. Proper resource management and the restructuring of units to participate in nation assistance programs are ways the militaries can make a difference."

Feliciano noted SOA is an important institution of the U.S. Army that has a history of making an influence on the militaries of Latin America.

"Over the years SOA has taught hundreds of thousands of students who have graduated from this institution and has been able to maintain contact with many of its graduates, many of whom have returned for other courses," Feliciano said.

"Working through these individuals and preparing these individuals to assume greater responsibilities and roles in their countries is a way the School can make a positive impact on the role of the military in society."

Feliciano added that not only can SOA have an impact on the societies of Latin America but also has an impact on the security of the United States.

"The School of the Americas is a cost-effective means for our military to continue its primary mission of defending our nation and allowing for the sovereignty of the United States and protecting our way of life," Feliciano explained.

"It's cost effective because while we train international military students, we better prepare them for their roles in protecting their countries, supporting their governments, maintaining stability and eliminating conflict."

"The more we interact with our Latin American friends in the democratic process, the more secure our country becomes."

SOA adds helicopter training to curriculum

by Keith F. Johnson
U.S. Army School of the Americas

A memorandum of agreement that lays the groundwork for the activation of the U.S. Army School of the Americas Helicopter School Battalion Oct. 1 was signed by the SOA commandant and the commanding general of the U.S. Army Aviation Center May 28 at Fort Rucker, Ala.

"By combining the strong capabilities of SOA's language skills and the strong capabilities of the aviation department at Fort Rucker in its equipment availability and pilots, we hope to produce an outstanding program to meet the growing need that exists in Latin America for training helicopter pilots," said Col. Jose R. Feliciano, SOA commandant.

Feliciano, Maj. Gen. Rudolph Ostovich III, Fort Rucker commanding general, and Gen. John W. Foss, U.S. Army Training and Doctrine Command commanding general, signed the agreement outlining each units' responsibilities.

The mission of the battalion will be to train Latin American aviation personnel in Spanish to meet requirements in all helicopter and related occupational specialities; provide assistance, evaluation and standardization; provide tactics and techniques for aviation employment and assist in developing doctrine, concepts, training and material requirements for Latin American countries.

According to Capt. Pedro L. Valle, assistant operations officer for SOA's Department of Training and Doctrine, helicopter flight training of Spanish-speaking soldiers at the Aviation Center began in January 1984 with the formation of the United States Southern Command Flight Training Detachment.

The detachment was formed at the request of the U.S. Department of State to provide flight training assistance to El Salvador. The detachment was initially created to develop and run a one-time UH-1 copilot qualification course for 20 students, but the success of the course led the Salvadorean Air Force to request a second iteration to train 20 more pilots.

By December 1987 Echo Company, 1st Battalion, 223d Aviation Regiment, of the Aviation Training Brigade was formed to provide initial and advanced helicopter flight instruction, in Spanish, to Latin American aviators. Countries such as Colombia, Peru, Honduras and Bolivia joined El Salvador as the need for helicopter pilots in the Latin American armed forces grew.

Col. Jose R. Feliciano (left), John W. Foss (center) and Maj. Gen. Rudolph Ostovich III prepare to sign the memorandum of agreement that lays the groundwork for the activation Oct. 1 of the SOA Helicopter School Battalion.

As courses were expanded and the number of students grew, a need for more bilingual qualified instructors became apparent so the Department of the Army approved the hiring of civilian instructor pilots.

The concept for a SOA Helicopter School Battalion was first discussed in November 1989 at the Aviation Center and has continued to be developed since.

"The creation of the SOA Helicopter School Battalion will help standardize the aviation terminology because of SOA's translation capabilities which will mean an improvement on the existing courses and the expansion of available training to include helicopter maintenance," said Valle.

Valle explained that there are currently 28 personnel assigned to Echo Company but that number will increase to 80 within the first year of operations. He added that over 200 students are projected to attend some of the eight courses available during each of the next four years.

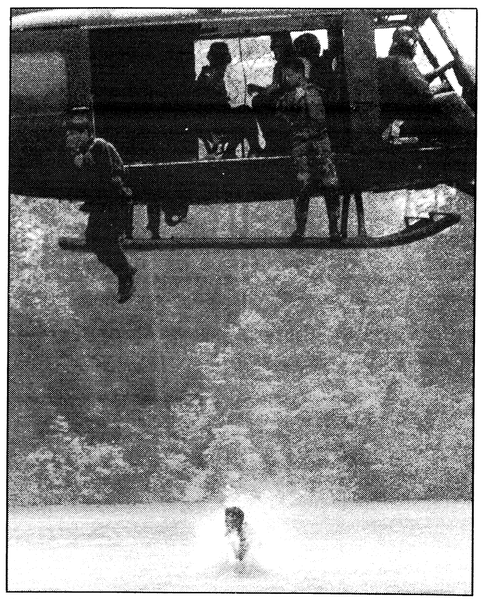
'Operators' learn to fight narcotraffickers

Story and Photos by Dan R. Wilson

Students from eight Latin American countries will graduate from the U.S. Army School of the Americas' Counternarcotics Operations course July 23 and become "operators" for their countries against the spread of drugs.



The 40 students are referred to as "operators" because of the specialized nature of the training, according to Capt. Ramon Valle, a coordinator for the course. The "operators" are either company grade officers or senior noncommissioned officers who serve in a mission specific unit or are members of their country's police force.

"The Counternarcotics Operations course produces operators who can combat narcotraffickers," said Col. Jose R. Feliciano, SOA Commandant. "The students will be in outstanding physical condition and technically and tactically proficient to carry on operations against narcotraffickers. We are also keen on intelligence training to prepare these individuals to accomplish their mission."

The operators receive individual skills training in close quarters battle, surveillance, riverine operations, development of intelligence networks and preparation of the battlefield, combatives, explosive entry techniques, staff organization and planning and special infiltration and exfiltration techniques.

This is the second year SOA has offered the course to the Latin American militaries. Last year 46 students graduated from the course while over 90 are expected to complete the course this year.

The course was developed by the School's Special Operations/Low-intensity Conflict Department with assistance from the Drug Enforcement Administration and U.S. Army Southern Command in Panama.

Post offers riding as enjoyable pastime

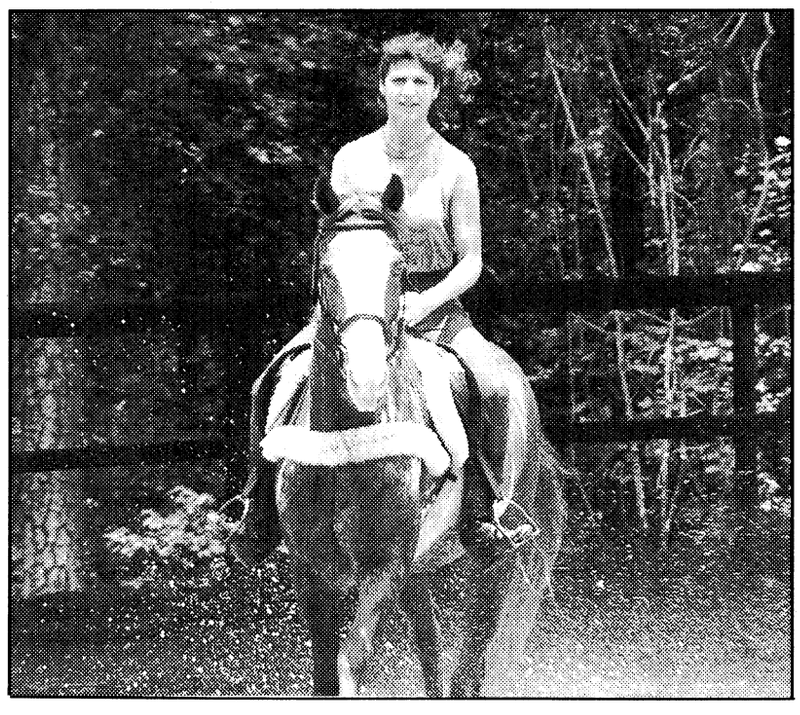
Benning's Hunt Club is fun - on four legs

By Jon R. Anderson
Bayonet staff writer

Perhaps some people at Fort Benning remember when horses were still employed by the post as regular members of the U.S. Army. Today, horses are available to serve soldiers in a different capacity.

With more than 20 miles of winding, wooded trails, the Fort Benning Hunt Club offers rental horses to ride and enjoy.

Interested riders can either pay an $8 per hour rental fee or pay the monthly $10 dues for membership to the club and pay half price for rental. The club also offer English riding instruction is also to members and non-members, with members receiving reduced rates.



According to Debra Rogers, a Hunt Club member and former riding instructor in Colorado, the horses at Fort Benning are some of the best she has ever seen, that are regularly available for rent.

Typically, she says, rental horses are mistreated by their owners and are not of the highest quality.

Diane Page, stable manager, explains that Hunt Club horses are different because "their treated like they are supposed to be, with tender loving care."

For horse owners, stable facilities are available at approximately $100 per month.

The Hunt Club is open from 9:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. daily, except Wednesdays. For more information, call 689-3945.

ASK THE JUDGE

By Jane M. Winand
Staff Judge Advocate's Office

Q. My ex-wife and I both signed for a personal loan to cover some debts two years ago. We started having marital problems and got a divorce last summer. The divorce decree requires that my ex-wife make the payments until the loan is paid off in 1992. She made the first three payments and then stopped. The loan company has been sending me nasty letters that I've been ignoring because the divorce decree says my ex-wife is responsible, not I. How do I get the loan company off my back?

A. Unfortunately, it isn't quite so simple. At the time you obtained the loan, both you and your ex-wife signed the promissory note promising to pay the loan back. The loan company has the right, under the provisions of the contract, to attempt to collect from you or your ex-wife.

The provision in the divorce decree requires your ex-wife to pay the loan payments does not apply to the loan company. The original contract, in which the two of you promised to pay, is still enforceable.

Consequently, you are liable for the loan. If you fail to make the payments, the loan company may sue you and may provide adverse information to the credit reporting system, which could keep you from getting credit in the future. If you do make the payments, you are preserving your credit rating.

You also can take your ex-wife back to court for violating the divorce decree. The court can order your ex-wife to reimburse you for any payments you made for which she was responsible and take further action to ensure she pays in the future.

Your current situation may continue to cause you problems because, if your ex-wife fails to make a payment in the future, you may have to take her back to court. This means you will be paying more attorney's fees and other costs.

A permanent solution is to have your ex-wife refinance the loan in her name alone. Then the original loan will be paid off and you have no further liability. If your ex-wife is unwilling to to this voluntarily, you may consider having your attorney bring the matter before the court.

If you have more specific questions, make an appointment to speak with a Legal Assistance attorney. The phone number is 545-3281 or 545-3282.

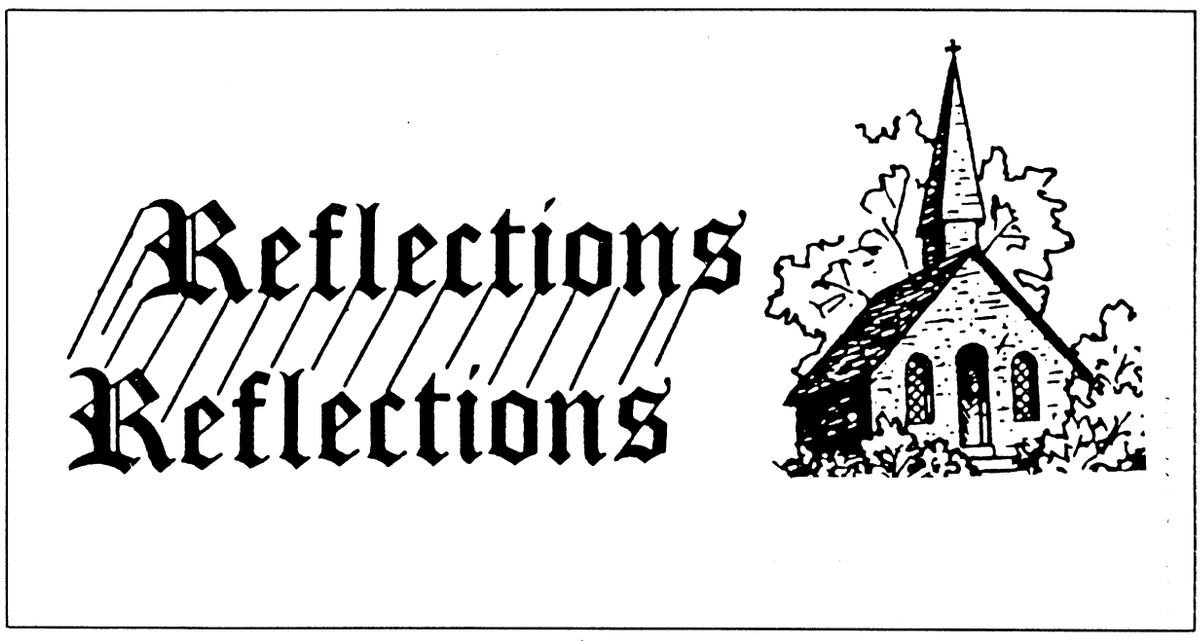
SPIRITUAL

Disappointments in life require a strong faith in God

By Chaplain Richard B. Garrison
197th Inf. Bde. Chaplain

What are we to think about a God who doesn't always do what we want him to do? When things happen that shake the foundation of our faith, questions flood our minds as doubts flood our hearts.

Some time ago, a book with an intriguing title caught my eye. The irreverent title, "Disappointment With God," and its equally-captivating subtitle, "Three Questions No One Asks Aloud," leaped out at me — so much so that I bought the book.



Sure enough, the three questions had surfaced in my own mind at critical times. "Is God listening to me? Can he be trusted? Does he even exist?"

Whew, I wasn't the only one who asked. Of course, there was Jesus' own disciple, Thomas, who expressed nagging questions in a critical time and is often remembered as "Doubting Thomas."

I'm in good company — that always helps. But what about doubt? Is it an indicator of weak faith — or worse, unbelief? I don't think so. If we learn anything from a passage from the book of John, chapter 20, it is that Thomas actually came to know greater faith through his doubt. These two, faith and doubt, are not mutually exclusive.

From the seeds of doubt, God is able to nurture some pretty strong roots of faith. It has been said that he who never doubts never really believes. I don't doubt that. Theologian Henry Drummond clarifies the difference when he says, "Christ never failed to distinguish between doubt and unbelief. Doubt is can't believe. Unbelief is won't believe. Doubt is honest. Unbelief is obstinacy. Doubt is looking for light. Unbelief is content with darkness."

A reporter once asked Mrs. Einstein if she understood the theory of relativity. She replied, "No, but I know Albert and he can be trusted." Christians don't know the answers to all of life's difficult questions, especially in critical times, but they know Christ, and he can be trusted.

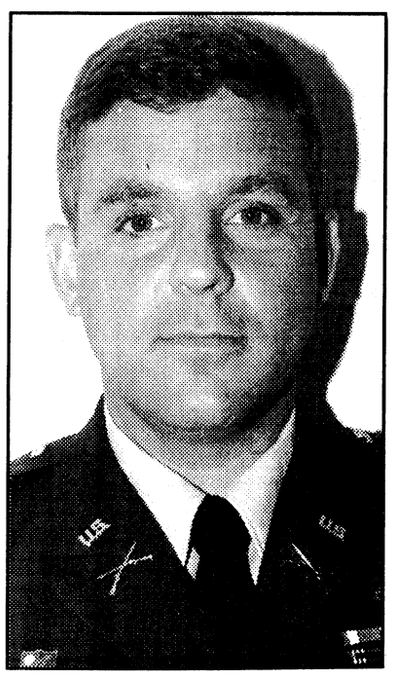
Benning officer selected as one of Army's best

Ramos wins award for leadership

By Alyanna B. Clay-Heard
Bayonet staff writer

A Fort Benning officer has been awarded the General Douglas MacArthur Award for 1991.



Capt. Loren Ramos, former executive officer with the 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment, now a student with the Infantry Officers Advanced Course, received the award at a recent ceremony at the Pentagon. Ramos was selected from more than 100 nominees for the prestigious award.

During his tour with the battalion, Ramos deployed to Panama where his courageous actions during Operation Just Cause earned him the Bronze Star with "V" device and the respect of his peers, superiors and subordinates.

But, a black beret is not the only hat Ramos wears, and being a soldier is not the only field in which he excels. Ramos said he is happily married and is the father of four children.

"I enjoy performing every duty to the best of my ability, but being the best husband and father that I can be — that's the hardest and most rewarding job I could ever have," said Ramos.

Along with dedication to his home, Ramos said he is also dedicated to the youngsters of the Fort Benning community. He led a Boy Scout troop and coached a youth soccer team. He is also extremely involved in his church activities.

Capt. Loren Ramos

"I think that it's great the battalion wanted to recognize my work," he said. "But, for me, it all comes down to one thing — lose yourself through service to others. That's my personal motto. If you perform with the needs of others in mind, you will always bring great satisfaction to yourself," said Ramos, "

Through service to his country in times of conflicts and through service to his community in times of peace, Ramos lost himself and his personal glory to the service and needs of others.

Army plans force of the future

Proposal calls for reduction to 4 corps, 20 divisions

Army News Service

WASHINGTON — Explaining how the Army will shrink over the coming years is easier than explaining why.

Pentagon planners are touting their vision of a four-corps, 20-division Army as the answer to questions about what kind of army the nation needs to counter future threats to U.S. interests at home and abroad. The Army for the 1990s and beyond, they say, is being shaped both by changing security requirements and by the shrinking defense budget.

"The chicken-and-egg analogy works to illustrate the point," said Lt. Col. Charles Persyn of the Office of the Deputy Chief of Staff for Operations and Plans' War Plans Division. "Is the shape of the force being driven by the perceived threat to national security? Or, is it simply resource driven?

"The answer is that we are building the force based on the threat, and the force is affordable. We must be able to implement the national military strategy. We also have to be able to support national political and economic policies."

Persyn's point is that both military requirements and the military budget are changing and both have impact on the force structure. The recent collapse of the Warsaw Pact changed the face of U.S. defense policy; it also brought a national legislature clamoring for a "peace dividend." And, while the Defense Department contended that the world was still a dangerous place, Saddam Hussein obliged them with proof.

So, the challenge to define the Army's role in President George Bush's "new world order" is formidable. The world, say Pentagon planners, is now:

- Less likely to see a major war in Europe between the Soviet Union and Western nations.
- Worried about the military might the Soviet Union still possesses and the reliability of Mikhail Gorbachev's government.
- More likely to see regional conflicts like the Persian Gulf war as tensions relax between the superpowers.
- Seeing growth in the size and sophistication of armies in developing nations.

Army's focus to become less Eurocentric

The result, Persyn says, is that the Army's focus must become less Eurocentric and more global as a new national military strategy evolves. That focus, he believes, forms the basis for change in Army force structure.

The latest proposal for reducing the Army would shrink the force from its current five-corps, 28-division strength to four corps and 20 divisions — 12

Post soldiers still returning from Mideast

43rd soldiers come in, 608th was scheduled to arrive

By Brian C. Sutton
Bayonet staff writer

Fort Benning soldiers are still returning from the Middle East.

Members of the 43rd Engineer Battalion arrived June 8 after serving several months in Saudi Arabia.

The 608th Ordnance Company was scheduled to arrive Thursday at Lawson Army Airfield.

J.R. Eddington, chief of Plans and Operations, Directorate of Logistics, said the 608th and other units are still deployed overseas or are just now returning because each unit has a specific mission to carry out and soldiers cannot leave until that mission is complete.

"The 608th is late because it has to take care of other units," said Eddington. "The 608th is the only unit deployed from Benning that deals with ammunition."

Eddington explained that the mission of the 608th is to issue and recover ammunition. Once recovered, the ammunition is returned to the federal government for storage.

Eddington said things are looking good for the soldiers of the 608th.

"They've completed their mission and they are coming home," said Eddington.

"The unit was the first Fort Benning unit to be sent overseas in support of Operation Desert Shield and Operation Desert Storm," said Eddington. "It just happened to work out that they are one of the last to come home."

Eddington further explained that other Fort Benning units may be there a while longer.

Major units on Fort Benning who still have soldiers deployed include the 34th Medical Battalion, which has a small number of soldiers overseas, and the 36th Engineer Group, which has approximately 350 soldiers still serving in the Middle East.

The 43rd Engineer Battalion still has approximately 15 to 20 soldiers waiting for their departure home.

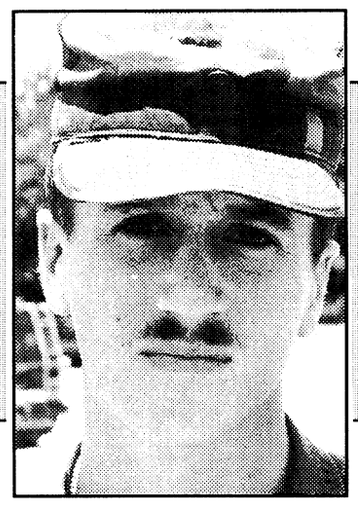
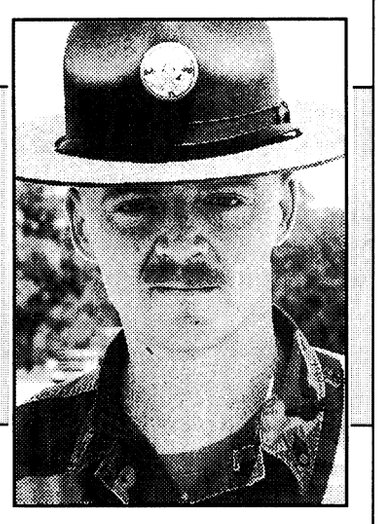
VARIOUS VOICES:

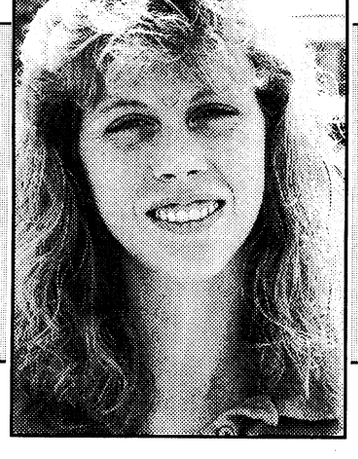


What do you believe stands behind today's use of the Confederate flag?

Curt Martin, civilian employee — 'It's to the point of being a white, redneck type of thing. That's not good, but that is what it has become."



Sgt. Samuel Stallings, 715th Maintenance Company, Alabama National Guard — "It's an individual belief. On one hand, it's a patriotic rebel symbol; and, on the other, it's a symbol of racism. Personally, I find it offensive to be on the state flag of Alabama."



Spc. Walter Atwood, Battery A, 4th Battalion, 41st Field Artillery — "Because people from the South fly it, some people think it's a racist thing."

2nd Lt. Marie Dominguez, U.S. Army Medical Department Activity — "I think it is a white supremacist type of statement."

Staff Sgt. Donald Peters, Company A, 2nd Battalion, 50th Infantry — "I would say that the people who fly it still hang onto the old traditions and the old southern way of life."

Bethany Walker, family member — "I believe it's some people's way of saying they believe they have already won the war of the races."

Army celebrates 216th birthday

Today we join together to celebrate the 216th birthday of the nation's oldest and most venerable military service — the U.S. Army.

Born amid the gathering storm clouds of the American Revolution, the Army has grown from a small band of minutemen on Lexington Green to the finest fighting force in the world today.

Perhaps at no time in recent memory has the Army demonstrated its power and reach more persuasively and clearly than in Operation Desert Storm — an event of profound importance in the human experience and a victory that will define the new world order for decades to come.

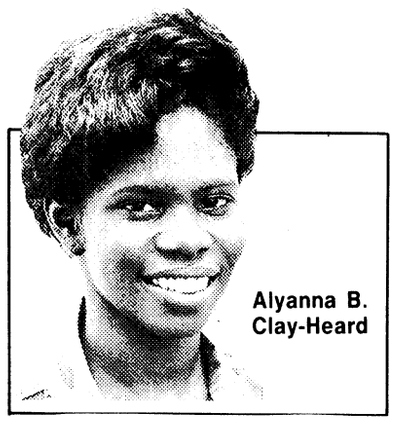
Throughout the Middle East and around the world, American soldiers embody our nation's commitment to the principles of freedom and democracy.

And our soldiers reflect the strengths of the American people — courageous in war, compassionate in peace, and committed to the defense of the nation.

For we are, first and always, an Army of the people, with a broad foundation on national support symbolized by the endless rows of yellow ribbons and American flags that bedeck our country from coast to coast.

Today, as we complete the redevelopment of our forces from the Middle East; and, as we look ahead to the promise of the future, we continue our efforts to shape the Army for the challenges of tomorrow.

Even as we undergo changes in strategy and in structure, we will maintain the continuity of capabilities and commitment that have made the Army what it is today — trained and ready to fulfill its strategic obligations anytime, anywhere.



We have a proud heritage of sacrifice and of selfless service. And we look to the future with a confidence born of victory in battle and the certain knowledge that the Army remains as it has always been — the final bastion of defense for the American people and our way of life.

To all the soldiers, civilians, and families of America's Army, happy birthday.

Respect — privates want 'just a little bit'

By Alyanna B. Clay-Heard
Bayonet staff writer

Alyanna B. Clay-Heard

COMMENTARY

I recently interviewed a captain. In describing a certain high-powered committee that consisted of the post's powers that be, he said (rather snootily, I thought) " Well, let's just say, it's a high-speed deal — No offense, but it's definitely not for privates."

That little episode got me to thinking about all the other little episodes that left a similar flat taste in my mouth — a feeling that no matter what I have done in my premilitary life; no matter what I have accomplished; no matter where I came from; who I'd been; or, what my age, race, creed, religion or sexual preference, I was still a private.

A private.

Why is this negative stigma attached to the rank of private one, private two and private first class? I scoured the post for someone who might be able to shed some light on the subject.

An old master sergeant told me, "Now look here private, the reasons privates are treated like privates is because they are privates, private. Now get the heck out of my face, private!"

Next, I spoke with someone who still remembered his experience. My handsome young specialist friend looked bewildered, scratched his head, and stared into space. When he finally came to, he looked at me solemnly and rendered the best advice he could.

"Well, for the moment, do the best you can to get promoted," he said. "Then dish out the dirt on privates under you. If that still doesn't make you happy, bide your time; and, at the first available moment, or on your ETS (expiration term of service) date, whichever comes first, take the college money and run."

This attitude is not exclusive to military personnel. Some civilian employees and even family members of military personnel feel they can dump on poor privates.

For instance, a former associate who is the wife of a newly-promoted sergeant told me she was cutting her ties with the wives of all junior enlisted soldiers.

"After all, my husband is an NCO now," she said. "Why should I bother to associate with the wives of privates?"

Why are the words "dumb" and "stupid" associated with a private? Why has this negative and untrue stigma been fostered for so many years in an organization that prides itself on modern technology and progressive attitudes?

The private of today's Army is no longer a young, bumbling idiot as portrayed by Pvt. 1 Beetle Bailey in the "Beetle Bailey" comic strip.

Today's private is a high-school graduate. Almost two-thirds of recruits entering into the military have had at least one year of college. Twenty percent hold degrees.

Today's privates are not looking at the military as a life-long career choice. With the ever-rising cost of higher education, the military is viewed more and more as a way to make the money necessary to finance a college education.

Privates are raising families, paying bills, making adult decisions on a daily basis. Can you imagine the frustration of trying to head a household, raise kids and make the car note, while eight or more hours a day you're being treated like a child, being humiliated, or made to feel like you have no real function?

Privates may be low in terms of their rank, but they are still human beings and deserve respect for the jobs they do — no matter how trivial, mundane, or menial.

If privates were not around, who would do all the tasks many workers feel are beneath them — taking out the garbage, cleaning the coffee pot, sending millions of messages all across post, answering the telephones?

Because a private does not know a lot about the ins and outs of the Army does not mean he doesn't know a lot about life.

When the extent of a private's usefulness is to drive others around, deliver messages or just wait for the next order, leaders rob themselves of a potential source of real help and the soldier is robbed of the chance to learn something besides custodial work.

When a private is loaded with more tasks than humanly possible to manage, leaders are not building character — just anger, as well as lowering the morale and self-confidence of a young troop.

When some supervisors' idea of counseling include name-calling, screaming, degradation of the private's character and total humiliation, the private does not learn where he made the mistake so he can correct it and grow in his profession, the soldier merely builds resentment toward all superiors and is disillusioned with the entire Army system.

Privates have feelings and intelligence and are more than capable of handling real responsibility — many privates, like myself, are heading households and are solely responsible for the well-being of ourselves and our families on and off duty. Privates are fellow soldiers, for military personnel regardless of rank, or fellow employees for civilian personnel and deserve to be treated with the same respect you would show any other human being.

Hodgepodge, lessons learned, other trivial matters

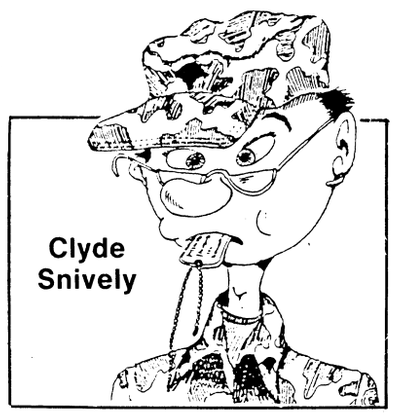
COMMENTARY

One should be very careful when using live training aids to get lessons across, I've learned. Maybe that's why Aesop used foxes and hares and other animals. He knew they couldn't do him any damage.

My lesson came to me indirectly after I mentioned the woes experienced by ace reporter Allie after she bought a car. My intentions were honorable — to demonstrate to the reading public that no matter how sincere and honest a car salesman (or any salesman for that matter) may appear to be, to protect yourself, get the opinion of an independent expert before buying.

Seems the Desert Storm-hero boyfriend of ace reporter Allie took umbrage at this piece and doesn't think his girl's troubles should be made public to the entire post, so now he's looking for me.

Well, I got news for him. Until my bodyguard, Ranger Doug, gets back from Primary Leadership Development Course, I'm hiding out where he'll never find me — the library.



The only drawback is the advanced course officers who tend to get carried away when preparing for tactics tests.

But, back to live training aids Despite what I said about the risk of using them, I have to tell you about our office non-commissioned officer in charge.

She's a Yankee, see. Down from Minnesota where water is blue and snow is white. No problem with that. I just use it as a preface for what I'm about to say.

Two things. Driving habits and service.

Seems she expected people to drive like they do up North. You know, use turn signals to let folks know when you're planning to change direction.

I know, I know, every time I mention this, someone says I'm exaggerating, that turn signals are used by most folks. Take it from me, turn signals are not commonly used; and NO ONE remembers that before electronic turn signals, there used to be hand turn signals.

Also, she has the nerve to expect fast food drive-ins to be fast. Doesn't she know that's the time to read "War and Peace," do your nails, or just chin with your buddies?

How impertinent can this newcomer be? And you know what she did after waiting 20 minutes at the drive-thru window? She went inside. It took another 10 minutes to get her baked potato.

So now she's really steaming. She went and got one of those suggestion cards to mail to higher headquarters.

People at higher headquarters don't really read those? They just put them there so if you do have a problem, instead of yelling at the help, you say to yourself, "I'll fix them. I'll fill out this card and say nasty things and management will come down on them big time."

So you write down all your nasty comments, mail it in and immediately feel better. And management's done its job. So why read them?

Oops. Gotta go. I think Allie's "hero" is staring at me from behind the stacks.

Soldier show to stop over at Benning

2 performances set at Sand Hill

USAIC Public Affairs Office

The cast of the eighth annual U.S. Army Soldier Show will sing and dance across the stage at 8 p.m. June 21 and 22 at Sand Hill Theater.

The 80-minute musical, performed "For the Soldier, By the Soldier," began its worldwide tour May 2.

Talented soldiers have gathered from the four corners of the Army, from Europe to Korea, from Alaska to Panama and throughout the country.

By military occupational specialty, they are cooks, truck drivers, parachute riggers and mechanics.

But those soldiers aren't visiting Fort Benning for just another training exercise.

Instead, they have been selected from applicants worldwide to be part of a soldier entertainment troupe. For the next eight months, they'll represent the total Army as cast and crew members of the eighth annual Army Soldier Show.

Months of planning and preparation went in to producing this traveling showcase of Army talent, officials said.

Working intense hours during March and April, the entire production was arranged around the talents and personalities of the soldier entertainers in only six weeks.

"Celebration '91" features country, rock and roll, patriotic or rap music.

Continuing the tradition of entertainment started by Irving Berlin in World War I, the soldier entertainers will travel more than 15,000 miles and visit over 40 Army installations across the United States and Panama.

The Army Soldier Show is one of the nation's last true repertory companies and all cast members double as stagehands.

At each stop, they'll unload and set-up about 38,000 pounds of equipment to put together the stage, lighting and sound systems. After performing, they break it all down, load it back on the truck and hit the road for their next destination.

This year, The Army Soldier Show extends its normal tour length to express appreciation to Army reserve and National Guard units who serve proudly as part of the total Army family.

The performances, hosted by the Directorate of Community Activities' Community Recreation Division, are free.

However, seating is limited and will be on a first-come, first-serve basis.

"The show is fantastic," said Ed Hensley, administrative officer for Community Recreation. "It's really an enjoyable experience."

Father speaks at son's OSUT graduation

By Marilyn Balzarini
U.S. Army Infantry Training Center

Parents who come to an Infantry One Station Unit Training graduations are beaming with pride. It usually shows when they spot their soldier as he marches by during "pass in review."

Not many have the chance to send a special message of pride and gratitude, not only to their son, but to all the graduating soldiers.

Brig. Gen. Paul Blackwell, commanding general of the 2nd Armored Division (Forward), and commander of Bremerhaven Military Community, had that chance recently. He was the guest speaker at the graduation ceremony June 7.

His son, Paul Jr., was a member of one of the graduating companies, Company E, 3rd Battalion, 32nd Infantry. Soldiers of Company A, 1st Battalion, 50th Infantry also graduated.

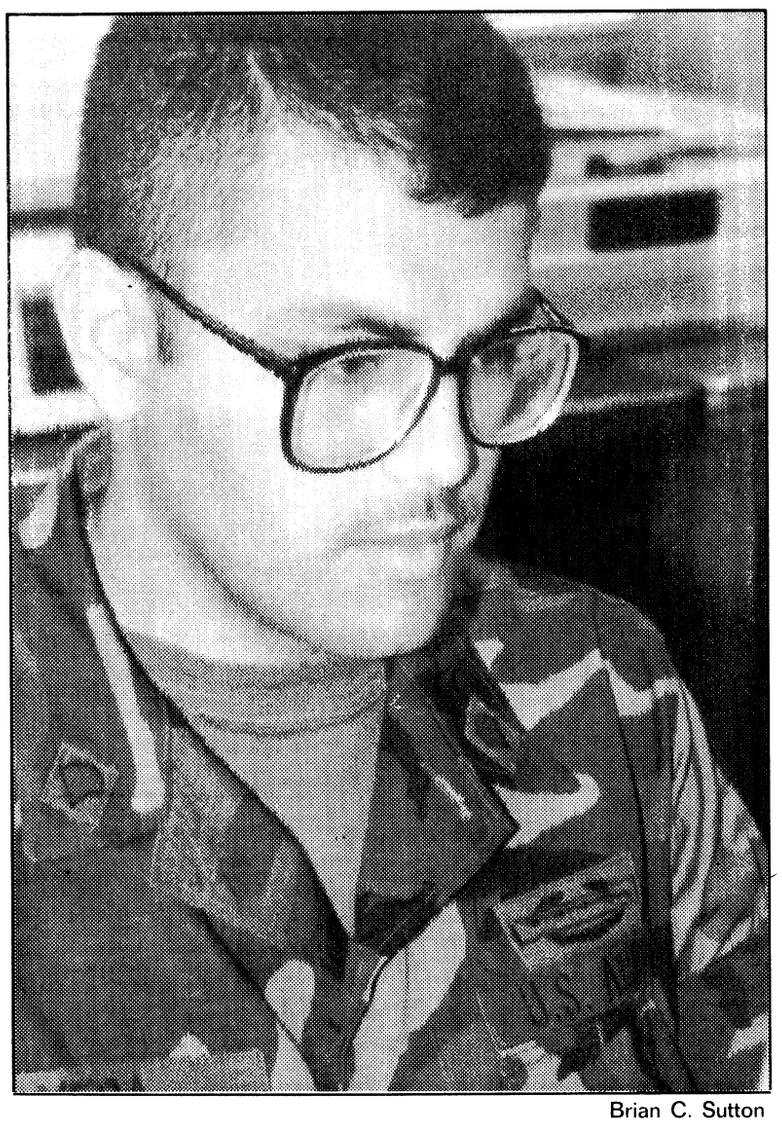
Blackwell, who returned from Iraq just three weeks ago, said that speaking to the graduating infantrymen held a special meaning. Not only because his son was graduating, but also because of his recent experiences in the Persian Gulf War.

During his speech, Blackwell said that service to our nation is again the most revered and noble of callings.

"You young men on this field today are a very special group; you made a decision to volunteer to serve your nation in a time of uncertainty," Blackwell said. "You demonstrated courage, patriotism, willing commitment and devotion when war clouds loomed dark."

Paul Jr., along with most of his fellow graduating soldiers, enlisted in the infantry the beginning of February just weeks before ground combat operations began on Feb. 23.

Blackwell's words of wisdom to the new infantrymen were to be patient, to learn, and to become part of the team when they join their new units. He also challenged them to strive for excellence, never accept mediocrity, train hard and stay physically fit.



Blackwell said he was in Iraq when his wife called to tell him that their son had decided to join the Army.

"As a parent, I had mixed emotions about Paul's decision to enlist considering we were on the verge of a potentially devastating war," Blackwell said. "I was touched, however, by his decision to join the infantry and go airborne as I did."

Paul Jr. said he decided to enlist in the Army because he didn't want to stay in college and joining the Army seemed like the natural thing to do instead. He said he plans to attend night school while he is on active duty and eventually apply for Officer Candidate School.

"Desert Storm didn't really play all that big a part in my decision to join the Army," he said. "I was thinking about enlisting anyway."

He will be assigned to the 82nd Airborne Corps after completing airborne school.

Soldier earns 2 years of college in 1 month

Specialist's goal is to become an officer

By Brian C. Sutton
Bayonet staff writer

Not all soldiers on leave after returning from the Middle East are relaxing by the pool.

One soldier from Company C, 2nd Battalion, 18th Infantry Regiment, 3rd Brigade, 24th Infantry Division, has spent his time recuperating in a different way.

Spc. Jose L. Vera has spent his leave earning college credit — so much credit that he has completed somewhere between 1 1/2 to two years of college in one month.

Vera earned 60 semester hours of credit by testing out of his classes through the post Army Learning Center and education center.

Attending Officer Candidate School is the goal of Vera, who, at 28, is getting very close to the age limit for the school.

"All I'm asking for is a shot," said Vera. Vera is doing his best to get that shot by studying and testing more than 12 hours a day.

"All it takes is a little hard work and determination," said Sonny Nolin, learning center coordinator.

Vera became interested in Officer Candidate School while in Saudi Arabia on a patrol.

Research into the possibility of attending OCS brought him to the conclusion that time was running short.

When he returned home, he immediately set to work at the learning center and the education center to begin work on his program, and ultimately, his college degree in the electronic field.

Vera said there two problems for him: finding a college that will accept the credit and award a degree and making the selection for OCS.

Vera is attempting to acquire recommendation letters or interviews from authority figures, such as commanding generals, his past company commanders, etc. — a task that is proving more difficult than originally expected.

Flag Day

Time to celebrate freedom's symbol

By F. Peter Wigginton
American Forces Information Service

Today is Flag Day, a time to celebrate the birthday of the stars and stripes: June 14, 1777. On that day, Congress adopted the first official flag to symbolize the United States of America.

The flag we honor and under which we serve, said President Woodrow Wilson in a 1917 Flag Day address, "is the emblem of our unity, our power, our thought and purpose as a nation. It speaks to us of the past, of the men and women who went before us and of the records they wrote upon it."

Because of the sacrifice of Americans — some of whom lie buried in its folds — the U.S. flag has come to symbolize freedom and the continued struggle for the cause of liberty, wherever that quest may lead.

As an example of its continuity, the flag that flew over the U.S. Capitol on Dec. 7, 1941, when Pearl Harbor was attacked, was the same flag raised on Dec. 8 when war was declared on Japan. Three days later, it flew again when the United States declared war against Germany and Italy. President Franklin Roosevelt called it the "flag of liberation," and he carried it to the Casablanca Conference — where he met British Prime Minister Winston Churchill to decide where next to attack after the fall of North Africa — and on other historic occasions.

The same flag was later raised above the United Nations Charter meeting at San Francisco in June 1945, and hoisted in July and August 1945 over the Big Three Conference at Potsdam, Germany. President Harry Truman had it flown over the White House on Aug. 14, 1945, when the Japanese accepted the U.S. terms of surrender, and from the mast of the USS Missouri during the formal Japanese surrender in Tokyo on Sept. 2, 1945.

The moving flag-raising scene atop Mount Suribachi during the battle for Iwo Jima in 1945 reminds even the most cynical to what length Americans will go in the struggle for freedom. Unfortunately, the famous photograph of that episode became a controversy when it was claimed the incident had been posed. But historian Robert Goralski explained what occurred.

Goralski wrote that Marine combat photographer Louis R. Lowrey photographed the actual first flag raising at about 10:15 on the morning of Feb. 23, 1945. The flag was attached to an iron pipe and jammed into the ground. Lowery then returned to the beach-head to be treated for wounds received from a Japanese grenade thrown shortly after the picture was taken. There, Lowrey ran into Associated Press photographer Roe Rosenthal. Lowrey suggested Rosenthal should get up to the top because there were "some great shots of the whole island from up there."

Taking the trip, Rosenthal climbed to the summit and arrived there just as a larger flag was being raised. Goralski wrote, "First Lieutenant Harold G. Schrier, who had been responsible for the initial flag raising, decided to replace the smaller flag with the larger one. Rosenthal was 35 feet away from the flag when he took his famous photograph, one of 18 he took at the summit."

The American flag has been carried to the far ends of the Earth. For instance, on April, 6, 1909, the world read Cmdr. Robert E. Peary's dispatch: "Stars and Strips nailed to the North Pole." Historians Boleslaw and Marie-Louise Mastai record that the flag was raised on an ice lance, not a wooden pole.

The Mastais explained that Peary carried the silken, gold-fringed ensign around his body for several years, planting fragments as markers in five successive locations to mark his farthest progress north. He reserved the largest piece — a band cut across diagonally to include both stars and stripes — to serve as a permanent record at the top of the globe. That flag was replaced in 1960 with the first 50-star flag by a crew member of the atomic submarine Sea Dragon.

Less than a decade later, on Sunday, July 20, 1969, two Apollo 11 astronauts, Neil Armstrong and Edwin Aldrin Jr., planted a wire-framed stars and stripes on the surface of the moon.

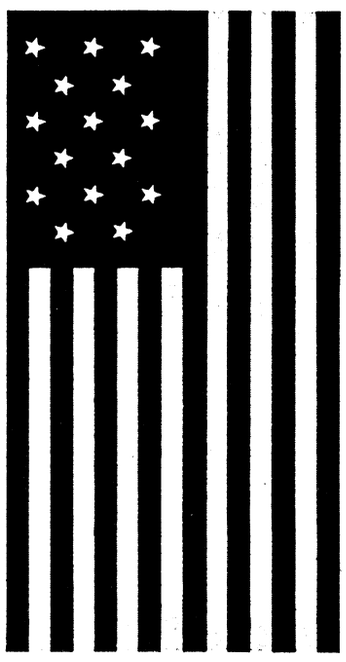
The Stars and Stripes first flew in a Flag Day celebration in Hartford, Conn., in 1861, the first summer of the Civil War. However, it wasn't until 1949 that Congress made the day a permanent observance.

Through not a federal holiday, public officials, schools, various organizations and individuals generally recognize the day as a time to give thanks and to honor the history and heritage of the country that this flag represents.

What do the colors on the U.S. flag symbolize?

Historians have long argued about whether the colors of the U.S. flag convey specific meanings.

Charles Thomson, secretary of the Continental Congress, believed so. One story has it that while Thomson addressed Congress about the seal of the United States, he stated that white signifies purity and innocence; red, hardiness and valor; and blue, vigilance, perseverance and justice.



The Star-Spangled Banner

O say can you see by the dawn's early light
What so proudly we hail'd at the twilight's last gleaming,
Whose broad stripes & bright stars, through the perilous fight
O'er the ramparts we watch'd, were so gallantly streaming?
And the rocket's red glare, the bomb bursting in air,
Gave proof through the night that our flag was still there,
O say does that star-spangled banner yet wave
O'er the land of the free & the home of the brave?

On the shore dimly seen through the mists of the deep,
Where the foe's haughty host in dread silence reposes,
What is that which the breeze, o'er the towering steep,
As it fitfully blows, half conceals, half-discloses?
Now it catches the gleam of the morning's first beam
In full glory reflected now shines in the stream
'Tis the star-spangled banner — O long may it wave
O'er the land of the free & the home of the brave!

And where is that band who so vauntingly swore,
That the havoc of war & the battle's confusion
A home & a Country should leave us no more?
Their blood has wash'd out their foul footstep's pollution.
No refuge could save the hireling & slave
From the terror of flight or the gloom of the grave,
And the star-spangled banner in triumph doth wave
O'er the land of the free & the home of the brave.

O thus be it ever when freemen shall stand
Between their lov'd home & the war's desolation!
Blest with vict'ry & peace may the heav'n rescued land
Praise the power that hath made & preserv'd us a nation!
Then conquer we must, when our cause it is just,
And this be our motto — "In God is our trust,"
And the star-spangled banner in triumph shall wave
O'er the land of the free & the home of the brave.

American Forces Information Service

"The Star-Spangled Banner" was written by a lawyer, Francis Scott Key, on Sept. 14, 1814. The United States was at war with Great Britain. The British had attacked and burned Washington, D.C., and took Dr. William Beanes as a prisoner when they sailed for Baltimore.

Friends of Beanes asked Key to negotiate his release. Though he accomplished this, Key and Beanes were required to remain aboard because they had heard British plans to attack Fort McHenry, at the mouth of Baltimore Harbor.

Key watched the bombardment through the night and was so moved the next morning to see the flag still flying, he immediately drafted a poem on an envelope. Published originally as "The Defense of Fort McHenry," his work was renamed shortly thereafter. "The Star-Spangled Banner" was a traditional, unofficial national anthem long before Congress formally adopted it March 3, 1931.

Ironically, the flag Key saw was an anomaly — it had 15 stripes and 15 stars. The Smithsonian Institution has custody of it today.

498th provides round-the-clock air medical evacuation

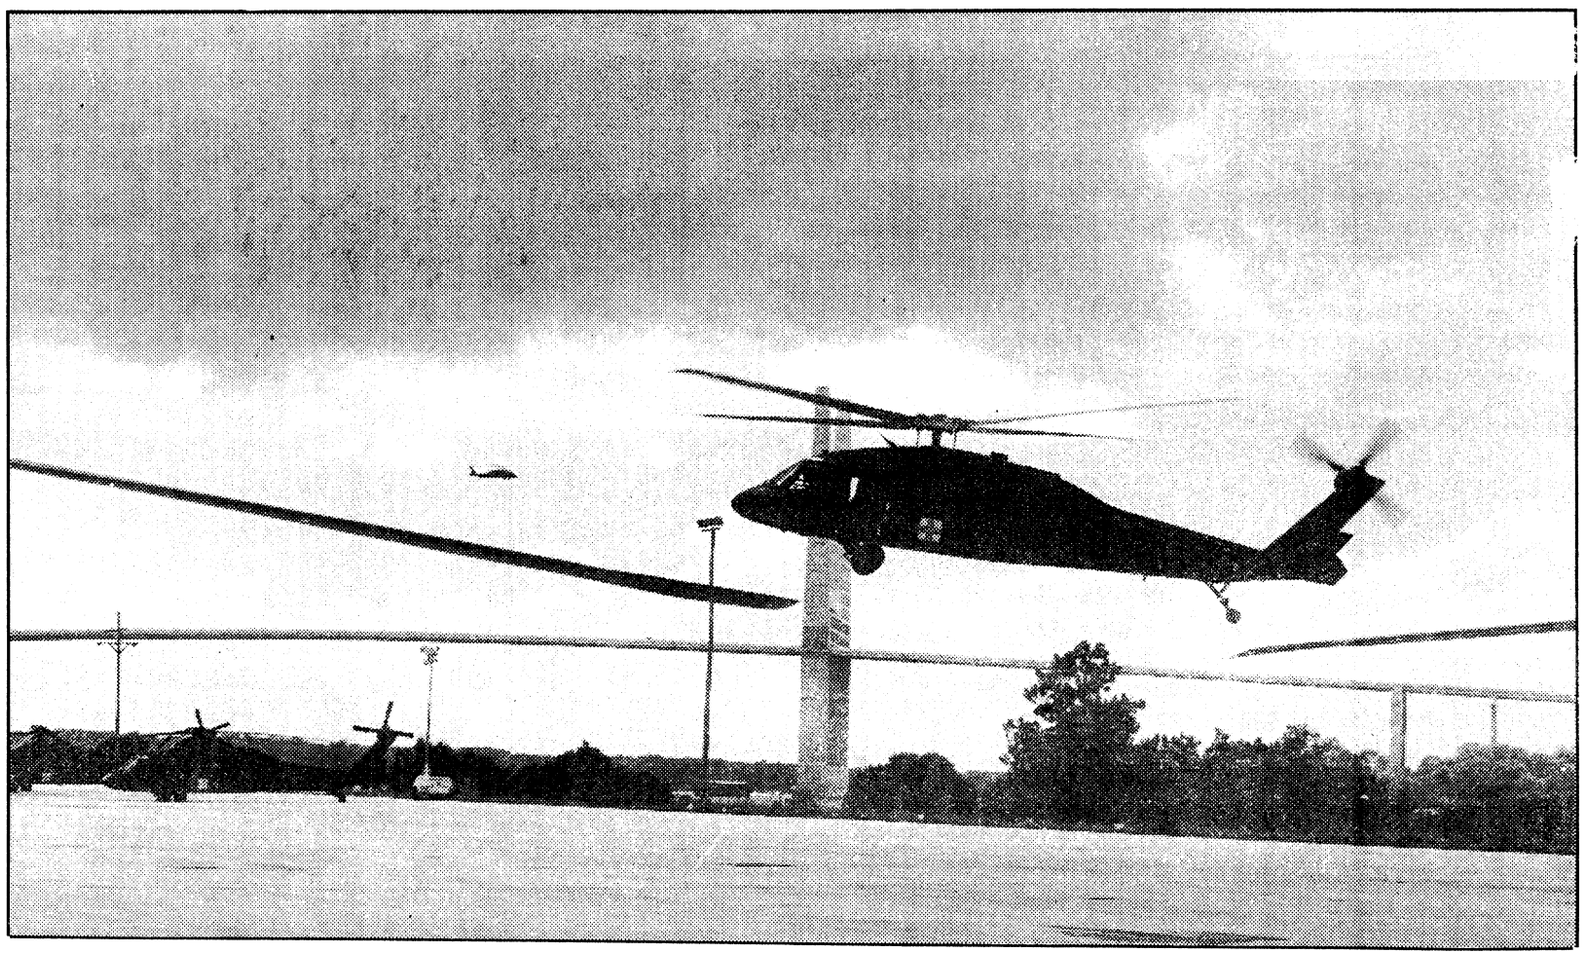
By Randall G. Anderson
498th Medical Company

Under the heat of the Florida sun, aircraft maintenance crews worked long hours to ready the 498th Medical Company's 13 UH-60 Blackhawk helicopters for the trip back to Fort Benning.

Jacksonville, Fla.,was the port of entry for the unit's aircraft and thorough inspections and maintenance checks were performed prior to releasing the aircraft to leave port. On May 28, the majority of the unit's fleet made the two-hour flight back to Lawson Army Airfield at Fort Benning. The remaining two helicopters arrived at Fort Benning on May 30.

The 498th Medical Company (Air Ambulance), 34th Medical Battalion, provides 24-hour, seven-day-a-week aeromedical evacuation support to the Fort Benning post and surrounding communities.

With 13 air-ambulance helicopters, the unit plays a significant role in support of the variety of activities in the Columbus area.



Through the Military Assistance to Safety and Traffic program, medical evacuation and patient transfers are provided to the civilian community.

"The post and the Columbus community did an excellent job in supporting our unit and families during Operations Desert Shield and Desert Storm," said Maj. Randall P. Mascheck, the 498th commander. "We are excited to return this support with the best evacuation service possible."

The 498th Medical Company deployed to Saudi Arabia on Oct. 16, and provided aeromedical evacuation support throughout Saudi Arabia and Iraq during the war.

According to Capt. Joseph Ponce, the 498th Maintenance Officer, flying in the harsh desert environment took its toll on the aircraft. "With dedication maintenance and hard work, the helicopters should be in full operation within a month," he said.

The 145th Medical Company, a reserve unit from Dobbins AFB in Marietta, Ga., has provided the medical evacuation support to Fort Benning in the absence of the 498th Medical Company. Since its activation last fall, the 145th Medical Company has provided uninterrupted service to the post and surrounding area.

Command sergeant major selected for U.S. Army's over-30 retention program

Bowles 1 of 4 selectees

By Willie Hay
197th Infantry Brigade

A 3rd Brigade, 24th Infantry Division soldier has been selected to remain on active duty beyond 30 years.

Command Sgt. Maj. Jimmie G. Bowles, command sergeant major of the 3rd Brigade, 24th Infantry Division, has been selected to remain on active duty beyond 30 years.

Department of the Army announced Bowles' selection for the over-30 retention program May 29 in a message to the field. He was one of only four senior non-commissioned officers in the Army so honored.

"I love my profession," he said. "I still have plenty of energy and expertise to influence not only the enlisted soldiers but the entire NCO corps of the brigade."

Bowles entered the Army in October 1961 at Fort Chaffee, Ark. His career has included tours in Germany, Korea, Vietnam and, most recently, Southwest Asia, during Operation Desert Storm.

He has been awarded the Combat Infantryman's Badge, the Meritorious Service Medal with the fifth oak leaf cluster, and the Bronze Star Medal.

Prior to becoming the "Sledgehammer Brigade" command sergeant major on June 29, 1989, he served as command sergeant major of 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment.

Bowles, his wife, Jo Ann, and daughter, Denise, live on Fort Benning.

VA Q&A

Department of Veterans Affairs

Q. I have a health insurance policy, and I receive care from my local Veterans Affairs medical center. I understand that VA is now required by law to bill health insurers for medical care given to certain veterans. If VA bills my insurance company for medical care, do I have to pay my insurance policy deductible?

A. No. VA absorbs this deductible. This may even satisfy your policy deductible if you later seek private medical care.

Q. I am receiving widow's pension from the Department of Veterans Affairs but am thinking about remarriage. If my new marriage does not work out, will I be able to re-establish my widow's pension?

A. No. The Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1990 eliminated re-establishment of benefit eligibility for surviving spouses if remarriage is terminated by death or divorce.

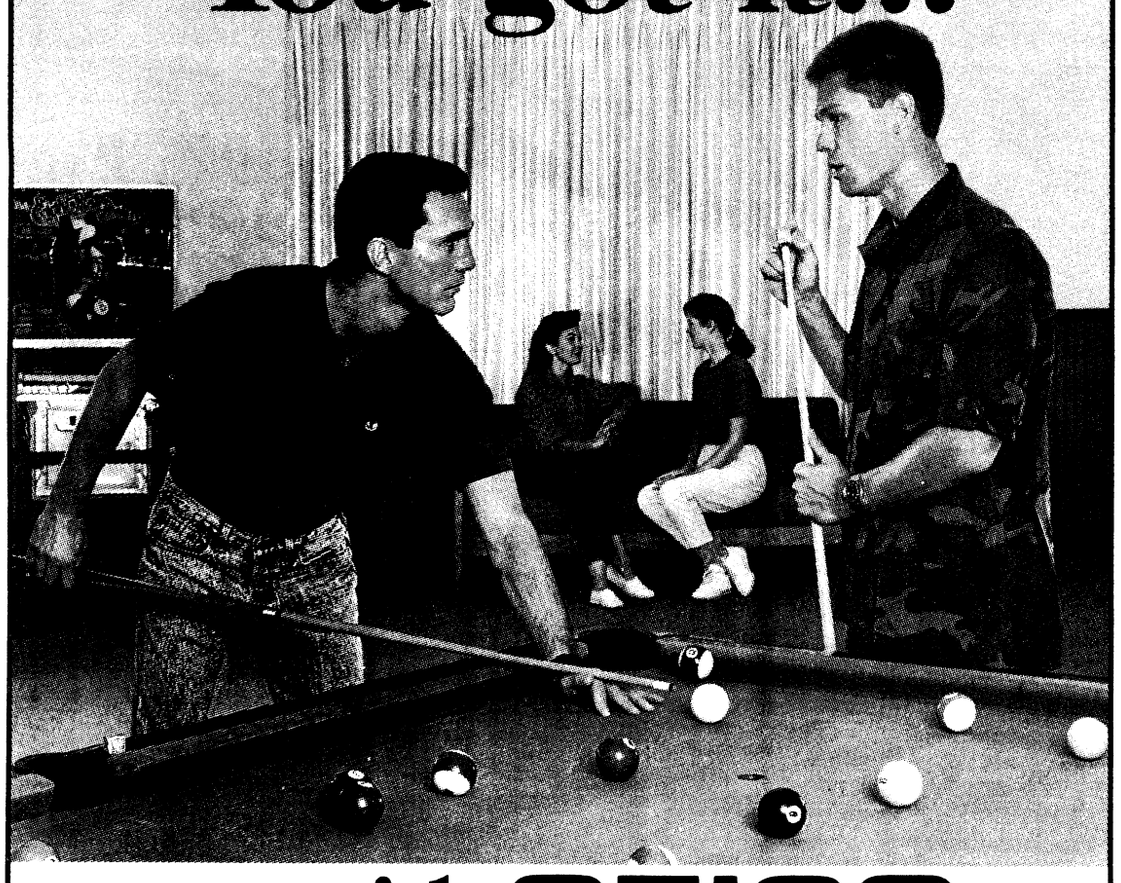
Q. Five years ago I renounced my Department of Veterans Affairs disability compensation, and it was terminated. Can I now make a new application for this same disability?

A. Yes. A renouncement does not preclude you from filing a new application. No payment may be made, however, for any period prior to the date the new application is received by VA.

Q. A friend told me that a new law says that all veterans who receive Department of Veterans Affairs benefits will have their benefits terminated if their estates exceed $25,000. Is this true?

A. The new law applies only to those veterans in receipt of compensation benefits who are rated incompetent by VA, have no dependents, and have estates exceeding $25,000, excluding the value of the veteran's home. The law affects compensation benefits received beginning November 1990.

Q. How long does a power of attorney designating a service organization to represent me in VA claims matters last?



A. A power of attorney does not expire. It must be revoked or canceled. The Department of Veterans Affairs treats designation of a new power of attorney as an automatic cancellation of an earlier one. You may cancel a power of attorney at any time by notifying VA.

Q. I just got married. Does my wife automatically become the beneficiary of my VA insurance policy?

A. No. You must notify the VA that you wish to make a change and provide complete identification of the new beneficiary.

"All I'm asking for is car insurance I can afford."

You got it...

Businesses give millions to USO education fund

By Rudi Williams
American Forces Information Service

The USO Desert Storm Education Fund will pay college or vocational school expenses of spouses and children of service members who died while participating in Operations Desert Shield and Desert Storm.

USO President Chapman Cox said the offer has no strings attached except that potential recipients must be enrolled in a college, junior college or accredited vocational school.

The fund will cover tuition, books, fees, room and board and other expenses regardless of an applicant's family income, financial status or academic achievement.

The Anheuser-Busch Companies Inc. started the August A. Busch Jr. Desert Storm Scholarship Fund in March with $1.2 million donation to USO. As word of the Busch program spread, other companies donated money to the USO, which created another trust fund. The overall scholarship fund comprises the two trusts, and the principal may exceed $3 million, Cox said. All money will be administered under the same guidelines.

The amount of each scholarship — at least several thousand dollars — depends on the number of eligible recipients, believed to be abut 300 spouses and children, Cox said.

As of mid-May, 377 service members had died in the Persian Gulf area during Desert Shield and Desert Storm or after the cease-fire.

Some surviving children may be less than a year old, but that's no problem. Cox said money will be in the fund — even 18 years from now — so those children can draw on it when they get to college.

Cox said people who think they're eligible for a scholarship are invited to contact USO for consideration by writing to:

USO Desert Storm Scholarship Fund
USO World Headquarters
601 Indiana Ave., N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20004

The USO telephone number is (202) 783-8121.

Defense department rebuffs energy-waste charge

By F. Peter Wigginton
American Forces Information Service

A recent report declaring the U.S. government — and the Department of Defense by extension — the nation's biggest energy waster is misleading, said the Defense Department energy official.

Milliard E. Carr equated the report title, "Energy Use in Federal Facilities: Squandering Taxpayer Dollars and Needlessly Polluting the Environment," with an attention-grabbing supermarket tabloid headline.

The report was published by the Alliance to Save Energy, a research and advocacy group based in Washington, D.C.

"I think they used it just to 'sell,' that is, get attention, for the report," said Carr, an engineer and assistant for energy policy in DoD's Energy Programs Office. He agrees with the report's basic recommendations — that the federal government should emphasize energy conservation more and spend more to improve energy efficiency — but he objects to the way the group arrived at its conclusions.

According to the report, federal agencies between 1975 and 1985 responded to oil price shocks and presidential directives by cutting energy use by nearly 17 percent. DoD, which accounts for 81 percent of federal energy use, cut its energy spending by more than $2 billion.

> We think it's unfair to saddle installations with distribution and generation losses that are inherent in electricity production.
> — Milliard E. Carr
> DoD Energy Programs

Since then, however, the study said, efforts to reduce federal energy consumption have "virtually collapsed," and funding for energy improvements declined from $252.2 million in 1985 to $44.8 million in 1989.

The report also claimed agencies are unlikely to meet a 10 percent reduction goal for 1995, which Congress set in 1985 — that as of 1989, energy use in buildings had risen by 1.1 percent.

Total energy use rose because electricity use grew 8.6 percent since 1985, the report said. Electricity accounts for 71 percent of the government's energy bill, and the increase was caused by the use of more computers, air conditioning and other appliances, said the study. It's at this point the report is also wrong, said Carr.

He explained that source and site conversion are two ways to calculate energy use.

Source conversion considers everything needed to generate, transmit and distribute energy from its source to use within a building.

Site conversion considers only the amount actually used at a facility.

"Electricity is a very inefficient energy source. We think it's unfair to saddle installations with distribution and generation losses that are inherent in electricity production," Carr said.

Report data was based on a source conversion factor of 11,600 Btu per kilowatt hour — the amount of energy spent generating and distributing a kilowatt-hour — the amount of energy spent generating and distributing a kilowatt-hour of electricity at the customer's meter. A British thermal unit is the amount of heart needed to raise the temperature of one pound of water one degree Fahrenheit.

"We don't do that with oil, natural gas or any other energy source. When you report a gallon of heating oil used at your installation, for instance, you don't have to include the energy needed to convert crude oil into that product," he explained. "There are all sorts of losses involved in producing a gallon of No. 2 heating oil. And the losses are significant when you talk about converting natural gas into propane, for example.

"DoD and the Department of Energy use the site conversion factor of 3,413 Btu per kilowatt-hour. That's the Btu content of the kilowatt-hour at the meter. We say people should be responsible for conserving from that point on," Carr said.

"If you use the figure 3,413, you see DoD's actually had a reduction of about 5.4 percent since 1985. This indicates the services, in fact, have a fairly effective energy program." But, of course, had the advocacy group used the lower number, it would've had no story, he noted.

FORCE: Defense department officials say plans for future include a smaller U.S. Army that will be mostly CONUS based, more globally focused active divisions, six reserve component divisions and two partially manned "cadre" divisions.

Its size is based on the concept of being able to fight in one major regional conflict, such as the gulf war, while preparing to respond to another and maintaining the capability to reinforce deployed units or fight in a major war.

CONUS-based force

That smaller Army would be mostly based in the continental United States, Persyn said, and would depend heavily on its ability to rapidly move forces overseas.

For example, only two divisions and one corps headquarters would serve as the Army's combat forces in Europe, illustrating the shift from the long standing U.S. policy of forward deployment to what Army officials are calling "forward presence."

"Europe is less volatile," Persyn said. "The longer warning time (before a potential conflict) gives us more time to generate the required forces, start up the (defense) industrial base, and project forces from continental United States." Stocks of prepositioned equipment would also be in place for units arriving for war in Europe.

He added the United States would likely pursue innovative defense agreements with its North Atlantic Treaty Organization partners, possibly extending to formations composed of forces from many nations.

The 2nd Infantry Division would remain in South Korea under the plan.

Under the plan, the three remaining corps would be based in the United States, rapidly deployable forces of up to five divisions.

The relatively small number of troops already in place overseas would require an even faster response from quick reaction forces and continued reliance on the reserve components for initial combat support, combat service support and follow on combat requirements.

"That's why the Army emphasizes the need for improvements in 'strategic mobility' systems, Persyn said.

He cited the C-17 heavy cargo aircraft under development and additional fast sea-lift ships as transportation priorities the Army supports.

Each division to have three active duty brigades

In addition, the divisions of the rapid deployment forces would each have three active duty brigades. In previous years, reserve component "round out" brigades were part of the 24th Mechanized Infantry and 1st Cavalry divisions.

The concept received much attention when the 24th deployed to the Middle East for Desert Storm without the 40th Infantry Brigade, the National Guard unit that rounds out the division. Instead, the 24th took an active duty separate brigade.

Under the plan, the reserve round out brigades would become "fourth" brigades for those same divisions. During wartime, they would serve as follow on reinforcements after the completion of their training.

Plans also call for the establishment of two "cadre" divisions, which would be manned in peacetime by about 20 percent of their assigned strength mostly leaders, officials say. The cadre divisions would also have 100 percent of their assigned equipment, leaving only the bulk of the troops. The units are designed to rapidly expand to full strength during a mobilization.

Smaller force involves risk

The prospect of a much smaller Army based in the continental United States is not without risk, Persyn said.

"There's what you can afford," he said. "What you can't afford has to be identified as risk. You have to decide what risk you can accept.

"We can't afford to have forces everywhere in the world. We believe the risk of a smaller Army is an acceptable risk."

One of the keys to reducing that risk is the technological advantage U.S. forces demonstrated in the war with Iraq. Army planners use the term "lethality" to refer to a unit's ability to engage and destroy enemy forces, and say that maintaining the "bang per unit" edge the Army currently enjoys over its potential adversaries requires continuing research and development of new weapons. A smaller Army, they say,must be a more lethal Army.

"The key to all this is modernization," Persyn said. "In addition to the quality of our soldiers and leaders, a key edge the U.S. military has is its technology. It's very important that we continue that.

"We have to maintain an Army that, as it gets smaller, has the capability to deploy, fight and win."

Drop your spinnerbaits for more bass

By Earl Bentz and Steve Price
1988 Outboard Marine Corporation

The next time someone suggests dropping a spinnerbait, don't cut the lure off your line and throw it away.

The term "dropping a spinnerbait" refers to a highly-productive fishing technique that can be used in shallow or deep water when bass are not active. It's easy to learn, and it can be used with many of the different spinnerbait models now on the market.

"It's my favorite method of fishing a spinnerbait," explained Evinrude Outboards angler Burma Thomas. "Unless bass are extremely active and hit a spinnerbait on a fast retrieve, I always start dropping it."

Basically, said Thomas, all you do to drop a spinnerbait is stop reeling so the lure sinks. The key is making the lure sink in the right spot, which is always around the cover.

"I like to drop a spinnerbait along the edge of a grassbed where the water becomes slightly deeper," she explained. "Just cast over the grass, retrieve the lure fast through the vegetation, and then stop reeling when the spinnerbaits gets to the edge.

"It will fall straight down with the blades still spinning, and this is when most strikes will occur. You're catching bass that are holding on that outside edge."

You can also drop a spinnerbait beside brush piles and stumps, even along riprap, with stunning results.

"If you touch the cover with the spinnerbait as you let it drop, you seem to increase your chances for a strike," adds the Evinrude pro. "Just reel the lure up to the cover like you're going to come through it, but then stop reeling. The spinnerbait will fall right into it."

Around riprap, Thomas prefers to use a series of drops in that she casts shallow, reels the lure out several feet and lets it drop to the bottom. Then, without bringing the spinnerbait back to the surface, she starts reeling again, then stops and lets it fall once more.

"I believe a retrieve like this gets the attention of the bass," said Thomas, who was won 14 national women's titles. "The fish aren't active so they won't go to the surface to hit the lure, but when it falls right in front of them they can't resist it."

Most anglers prefer heavier three-fourth and one-ounce spinnerbaits with larger blades when they use this technique. Thomas uses tandem willow leaf blades because off the added vibration and flash they provide.

"You can drop any spinnerbait to any depth," she said, "but the deeper you fish, the heavier the lure should be so it falls vertically and the blades keep turning."

Love – is it the greatest virtue of them all?

Settling for less than the best in ourselves, others

By Chaplain Jan. W. Koczera
3rd Brigade, 24th Infantry Division

A few years ago, I was asked to answer a survey that asked, "What is the greatest virtue or quality that a person could strive for."

The choices were fidelity, purpose, competence, care, wisdom, love, will, or hope.

The most chosen answer was fidelity; trustworthiness or dependability. Strangely enough, if the same question had been asked of one of the great Christians of old, he probably would have said "love."

Do you see how attitudes have changed? From love, which desires the greatest happiness and well-being for another, we have stepped over to faithfulness and dependability, which, while certainly important, implies only that one "be there" and live in a predictable way. Have we lowered our sights too much? Are we too easily pleased? If you truly love someone, you'll risk much and give more for them. But if you're merely dependable, they just know you'll be home for dinner tonight.

Perhaps I'm "straining at gnats to swallow camels," but I think the greatest problem I see in relationships today is that we settle for so little when we could have so much. I think Paul meant something like this when he said, "I keep striving to win the prize for which Christ Jesus has already won me. . ." (Philippians 3:12). He wouldn't be pleased with anything less than the best that God had set aside for him.

Maybe God has set aside something so good, so wonderful for you that you've never even dreamt of the possibility. Maybe you've been pleased with the crumbs under the table when above your head a banquet has been spread. It is something to think about.

Trends changing for fathers in the 90s

By Gabrielle Sonnenberg
USAIC Chaplain's Office

Father's Day

It is Father's Day once again. Ever since Father's Day was originated in 1910 by Mrs. John Bruce Dodd, it is celebrated every third Sunday of June.

The trends in fathering for the 1990s are raising expectations according to the National Center for Fathering. Napier said in 1991, "It is no longer acceptable, as a father, to merely be a good financial provider or disciplinarian. Bringing home the paycheck will not be sufficient fulfillment of the fathering role," he added, "Dads will be expected to be more involved and nurturant."

The National Center for Fathering continues to explain a great deal of this pressure will come from wives, particularly working women and those women who grew up without a father in their homes.

Some helpful guidelines on how to enhance quality time with the family are explained by Dick Thompson, Marriage and Family Life officer. Consider time for a family meeting, and start sharing meals together. Family meetings are for more serious things like looking at family goals, problems and dreams, he added. The family meeting is an excellent way of communicating and solving problems. Another important activity is mealtime. Mealtime should be more than just eating together. We have to work at making it an enjoyable and pleasant experience and one in which the whole family participates, Thompson explained.

Furthermore, the Bible teaches a father in Proverbs to instruct his children (Prov. 1:8), to support the teaching of his wife (Prov. 1:8,9), to warn his children of evil (Prov. 1:10), to teach them to trust God (Prov. 3:5), and to urge them to be compassionate (3:27,28).

Since the trends of fathering are rapidly changing, various educational programs such as Active Parenting, STEP and Sensitive Parenting are available to improve parenting skills at the Chaplain's Family Life Center. For more information, call the Family Life Center at 545-1760 or 5301.

Chaplains graduate from pastoral program

By Gabriele Sonnenberg
USAIC Chaplain's Office

Each year, five active-duty Army chaplains, mid-point in their careers, are selected to enter a Clinical Pastoral Education Program.

This program is considered one of the best methods for enhancing the pastoral aspects of ministry. The CPE Center, at Custer Terrace Chapel, is the only community program of its type in the Army.

Fort Benning Post Chaplain (Col.) George W. Gudz complimented the students and explained the necessity of spiritual growth. Spiritual growth is an internal transformation, growing closer to "Almighty God," not merely a "book-knowledge" which is useless without having a close relationship with God.

Four of the five students were deployed to Desert Shield/Storm and have returned safely.

The students had the opportunity to experience several ministries, such as confinement center, hospital, family life center and parish. Enhancing their spiritual growth and ability to emphasize with people in various life situations.

Chill out at Malone's

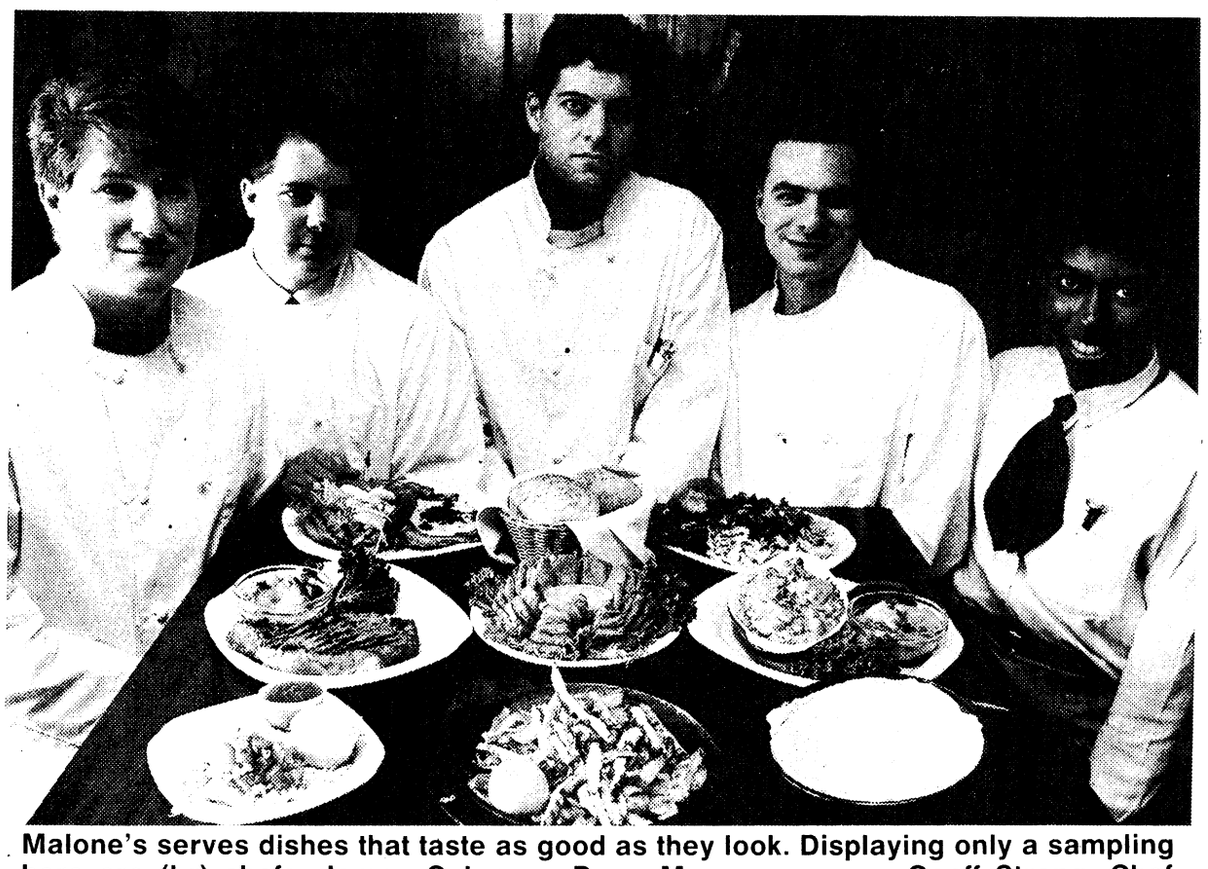
One of the first restaurants that a Columbus newcomer or visitor hears about is Malone's Bar & Grill, and it's no wonder.

Malone's, which primarily serves American dishes, has become a classy social landmark in the area because of its casual, friendly atmosphere, unique decor and quality cuisine.

Malone's is designed much like an English pub with its wooden paneling, Tiffany lamps and accents of brass and greenery.

"We're a very busy restaurant and appeal to all age and income groups," said manager Geoff Strong. "We set both standards and trends in the local market." The restaurant is owned by Eric Gonglach.

Malone's has a complete bar and a large menu, which includes steaks, fajitas, assorted salads and other delectable choices moderately priced from about $6 to $12. Early Bird dinner specials are served nightly.



One of the newest and hottest additions to the menu is the Onion Bloom — a fresh, bloom-sculptured onion deep fried in a special, delicious batter and usually served as an appetizer. You've got to taste it for yourself!

The goal at Malone's is to make sure customers are satisfied. Strong says the ideas for several future changes at Malone's were taken directly from customer comment cards. For example, the non-smoking section, enlarged patio and the addition of green vegetables, fresh grouper, baked chicken and fried shrimp to the menu will be implemented in response to requests.

Malone's, which is located at 2955 Warm Springs Road near Peachtree Mall, accepts reservations at 324-3731 and has facilities for banquets, meetings and parties. Carry-out service and a children's menu are available. Payment can be made with cash, MasterCard, Visa and American Express.

The restaurant is open Monday through Thursday and Sunday from 11:00 a.m. to midnight and from 11:00 a.m. to 2 a.m. on Friday and Saturday.

Tired of the same humdrum dining experience? Check out Malone's Bar & Grill for a refreshing change.

ASK THE JUDGE

By Michael H. Lane
Staff Judge Advocate's Office

Q. My husband is a sergeant in the 197th Infantry Brigade who deployed to Operation Desert Shield on Aug. 3, and returned from Operation Desert Storm on March 25. We have not yet had time to file our taxes for 1990. Neither one of us has ever been so late filing taxes before, and I don't want any trouble with the IRS. My husband says not to worry about it, because a guy in his unit said that soldiers who served in Desert Storm don't have to pay any taxes at all. This sounds too good to be true. Can you advise?

A. The short answer to your question is this: Your tax return for 1990 is due on or about Feb. 1 . This is a time calculation based upon extra time granted to all Desert Storm soldiers to file their returns.

Unfortunately, you will eventually need to file a tax return for 1990, because the tax provision providing for the exclusion of pay earned in a combat zone from taxable income did not take effect until Jan. 17, 1991.

This question deserves more discussion because there are several special provisions of law which apply to Desert Storm soldiers and their families you need to know about.

Also, there are special requirements for filing your return, and special help available for you when you decide to file your return.

First, there is the tax filing extension, which is referred to by the IRS as the Suspension of Time Provision. This is Section 7508 of the Internal Revenue Code, which postpones the time for filing returns, paying taxes, claiming refunds, or taking any other action required or permitted under the tax laws.

It does this by disregarding the period of time that a soldier serves in a combat zone, plus all or part of a period hospitalized as a result of serving in the zone, and the next 180 days thereafter.

Let's take two examples which illustrate the extension: Sgt. John Jones, who also went with your husband's unit to Saudi, has figured his taxes and discovered that he will owe $500 this year because there was no tax withholding on his wife's job.

Using the extension, the Joneses can save to pay the amount due over the next nine months. Because of the time suspension provision, there will be no interest due during the period they are saving money, either.

In our second example, Spc. Joe Smith is owed a refund. He also has nine months to file, but he may file earlier if he desires. However, he may want to wait. The IRS will pay interest to all Desert Storm soldiers due a refund, from April 15, the original due date, to the date the soldier files his return. At present the rates is 9 percent. This attractive interest rate may prompt some to defer filing for the refund.

Once you have all the information needed to assemble your 1990 return, there is still more to know before filing. First of all, you must be sure to put "DESERT STORM" on the top of the tax return, and on the outside of the mailing envelope. Secondly, you can get fast handling for your tax return by using a special Desert Storm address for your area. For Georgia, South Carolina, and Florida returns, you can expect a refund in about two weeks, according to IRS, if you send your return to the following address: Internal Revenue Service, P.O. Box 620145, Doraville, Georgia 30362-0145. For Alabama, Mississippi, and Louisiana, the address is: IRS: P.O. Box 309000 AMF, Memphis, Tenn. 38130-9000.

Tax help is also available at Fort Benning. Each Desert Storm Unit has a Unit Tax Advisor (UTA) to help you with basic tax preparation, and to make sure your questions are answered. Legal Assistance Division is planning a "3rd Brigade Tax Day" in late June or July at Kelley Hill and on Main Post, based upon the needs of the units.

There is a tax booklet you can read for help as well. IRS Publication 945, "Tax Information for Those Affected by Operation Desert Storm," contains numerous examples to make this more understandable.

To seek further information about this or any other legal problem, contact the Legal Assistance Office in Building 5 for an appointment. The telephone number is 545-3281.

Hints, tips to make barbecues fun, safe

Safety Office

Summer is usually the time families come together for reunions, weddings, graduations and other family gatherings.

Often, families don't need such celebrations to get outdoors, and fire up the grill for backyard barbecues and picnics at the park. The following are a few safety tips to help you enjoy these cookouts:

- Line the bottom of the clean grill with an inch of ash, gravel or commercial charcoal base to absorb dripping grease and reduce flare-ups.
- Set the grill on a level surface away from low branches, dry brush or other combustibles, including the house or garage.
- To start a charcoal fire safely, use wood shavings or charcoal lighter fluid. Follow package directions when using charcoal lighter fluid. Never substitute gasoline or other combustible liquids. Never add charcoal lighter fluid after the charcoal begins to burn.
- Never use the grill indoors. Burning charcoal produces carbon monoxide (an odorless, tasteless, lethal gas.)
- Keep pets and children away from charcoal grills to eliminate the danger of their touching the grill or accidently pushing it over on someone.
- Keep sharp instruments out of reach of small children. When passing knives and forks to other persons, keep the point turned away from them.
- Use proper equipment to prevent burns: a pair of heavy-type potholders, a long handled spatula or fork, and a pair of long tongs.
- Wear safe clothing. Avoid dangling ties and shirttails that could easily brush against the fire. Keep other combustibles away from the grill.
- Keep garden hose ready for use in case of fires outside the grill. After cookouts, drench fire with water and promptly dispose of soaked ashes in a metal trash container.

Backyard barbecues and picnics can be part of outdoor fun and can stay fun for family and friends with the safe use of charcoal grills.

3rd Brigade, 24th Infantry Division

Units in the Army come and go. The 197th Infantry Brigade (Mechanized) (Separate) will take its place in history now.

The brigade conducted a June 14 flagging ceremony, which redesignated the unit as the 3rd Brigade, 24th Infantry Division (Mechanized).

This action has been in the works prior to the Desert Shield deployment, according to officials. During the Persian Gulf War, the brigade fought alongside the division, attached as the 3rd Brigade.

The new brigade, which will keep its nickname as the "Sledgehammer Brigade," will remain at Fort Benning.

The ceremony on York Field was a solemn and joyful event as Maj. Gen. Barry R. McCaffrey, the division commander, and Col. Ted Reid, the brigade commander, made their remarks to soldiers and their guests.

"What a memorable day," said Reid. "Today we formalize the relationship that has been 10 months in the making. We are pleased to join the 'Victory Division' and look forward to continued success such as we jointly enjoyed during our recent deployment and the many challenges that lie ahead."

"It's a great day for the Victory Division," said McCaffrey. "This may be the formal transition to wearing the patch of the 24th ID. But, I'll tell you directly, in our hearts, we think you've been part of us since your magnificent performance during the 100 hours of combat operations in Iraq — absolutely an incredible performance by the soldiers of this brigade."

It is said the old makes way for the new. However, the 3rd Brigade is not exactly new. It now finally rejoins the division after 21 years of deactivation.

The brigade was formed on June 24, 1921, when Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 190th Infantry Brigade, an organic element of the 95th Infantry Division, was constituted in Oklahoma City, Okla.

On Jan. 30, 1942, HHC was converted and redesignated as 3rd Platoon, 95th Reconnaissance Troop, 95th Infantry Division.

The troop was ordered to service during World War II, participating in several campaigns in Europe, including Northern France, Rhineland, Ardennes-Alsace and Central Europe.

On Jan. 21, 1963, the unit was reorganized in Munich, Germany, as the 3rd Brigade, 24th Infantry Division.

During its existence, the brigade was part of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization's defense team in Western Europe.

In 1967, the division was directed to move to Fort Riley, Kan., while the 3rd Brigade remained in Germany.

The brigade remained in Munich until April 15, 1970, when it was officially inactivated.

The 197th "Sledgehammers" lived up to their nickname during Operation Desert Storm.

The 380-kilometer march into the Euphrates River Valley, in 51 short hours, destroyed Republican Guard forces.

"You were absolutely superb," said McCaffrey. "I've never served with better men and women than these who served under the flag of the 197th with the 24th ID in the Saudi/Iraq campaign.

"I will tell you that the spirit of the 197th will live on in the 3rd Brigade," he said.

608th comes home

Ordnance soldiers greeted by cheering crowd

By Brian C. Sutton
Bayonet staff writer

It was a homecoming long overdue for one Fort Benning unit.

Members of the 608th Ordnance Company, a section of the 36th Engineer Group, were greeted June 13 by a crowd waving and cheering to the tunes of the 283rd Army Band.

Maj. Gen. Carmen J. Cavezza, post commander, was present to welcome home the soldiers and give a short speech prior to the release of the soldiers to their families.

The 608th was the first company-size unit from Fort Benning to be deployed to the Middle East in support of Operations Desert Shield and Desert Storm and one of the last to come home.

1st Lt. Javier Lopez, executive officer for the 608th, said the unit worked extremely hard during its stay in the Middle East.

"Our people kept going for 24 hours a day, non-stop since the day we deployed," said Lopez.

Post officials explained why the unit was gone so long.

"The 608th was there so long because it was the only unit in the area dealing with ammunition disposal and reissue," said J.R. Addington, chief of Plans and Operations, Directorate of Logistics.

"We were in charge of all the ammunition to come into the country," Lopez said. "We set up a theater storage area so we could process all of the ammunition that was needed. We received the very first round to the last."

Lopez said that virtually everything that came into the country, the 608th processed, including the first Patriot missiles to be fired in defense of Saudi Arabia and Kuwait.

"We are very proud of the job we did over there," said Lopez.

The mission of the 608th is to retrieve retrograde ammunition and unspent ammunition and dispose of it or turn it back in to the government to replenish the supply.

This mission proved to take longer than the war itself, but now the 608th's work is done and the unit's soldiers have come home.

AER campaign short of goal

Donations 27 percent short

By James C. Rupp
Bayonet staff writer

The Army Emergency Reserve campaign is drawing to a close, and it is still far short of its goal.

The campaign kicked off April 1 in its annual effort to shore up financial reserves.

According to Master Sgt. John S. Phelps, this year's campaign was especially important to the AER fund because a large amount of money was given to families at the beginning of Operation Desert Shield.

Usually, Phelps said money given to families in financial need can be paid back over a period of time; and, in special circumstances, the loan can be turned into a grant.

Now, however, the AER financial reserves are low, said Phelps. For some reason, people are not donating as much money as they have in the past, and that causes an increased strain on the fund, he said.

> "The campaign is picking up steam. But, it won't be enough by the 30th, unless things change...and soon."
> — Master Sgt. John S. Phelps

Many people may not be donating the money due to absences of leave that many Desert Storm returnees have taken since their return, he said.

During the recent weeks, Phelps said there has been a noticeable increase in AER donations. He said that while it is great that people are finally getting around to making the donations, it may be too little too late.

Currently, the campaign has raised $149,289 or 73 percent of its goal. It has $55,711 — or 27 percent — to go with 10 days to go.

"The campaign is picking up steam," Phelps said. "But, it won't be enough by the 30th, unless things change...and soon."

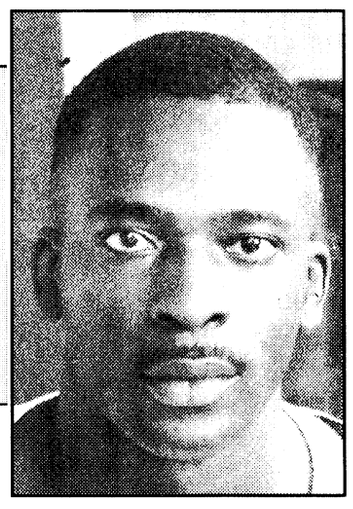
VARIOUS VOICES:

How does the Army Emergency Relief fund help soldiers?

Spc. Daniel C. Burk, Company C, 43rd Engineer Battalion — "AER loaned money to a friend of mine who needed to go to California to be with his family when his grandfather died. He couldn't afford to go, so AER loaned him the money to get there and brought the family together when they needed to be."



Sgt. Jose Muniz, Company C, 43rd Engineer Battalion — "We had a sergeant whose phone lines had been disconnected. He couldn't afford to pay them at the time, and he went to AER for the money."

Carrie Williams, family member — "From experience, they've helped us with funeral expenses, auto repair and utility bills. They've always been there in case of an emergency."

Spc. Eliza Rodriguez-Peoples, U.S. Army Medical Department Activity — "They helped me this fall when my grandfather passed away in Puerto Rico. AER helped me to get there."

Staff Sgt. Vincent Holley, 10th Military Police Detachment — "I can speak from experience. While I was in Korea, my wife had some serious trouble with the car. The AER contacted me, and the problem was fixed. They took care of my household while I was away, and you can't ask for more than that."

Victory Day 'mother of all parties'

By Clyde Snively
Bayonet columnist

The "Various Voices" editor asked us last week for some input for questions for the "Various Voices" column. "We want the questions to be controversial and thought-provoking," she said.

My proposed question was turned down immediately because it sounded too "sissified," to quote Brian, the Bayonet's chess master.

My suggestion might not have had the panache as some other suggestions, but I figured it would be thought-provoking and lead to intelligent discussion. But I was outvoted.

Since I'd expended the energy to think up the question, I didn't want to let it all go for naught, so I went out and surveyed people on my own. Here's the question, "who on Fort Benning does more for the soldier than any other person?"

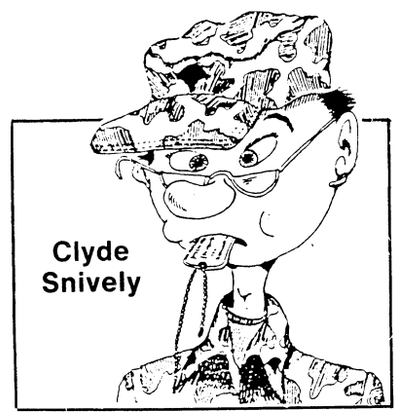
As you can imagine, many respondents said "the CG." Others mentioned various members of their chain of command. One guy even claimed it was his drill sergeant.

COMMENTARY

All good answers.

Much better than some others such as "Santa Claus" or "my dog."

But the winner (drum roll please) is a guy whose name I'd wager not one soldier under the rank of sergeant would recognize.



This person is fairly non-descript. He's a little shorter than normal, with a solid build, who wears glasses.

He may not be Superman in disguise, but his energy level is nearly on par with that of the caped crusader.

This person is Larry Bentley. Larry who? See, I told you, you wouldn't know.

Bentley just happens to be the commissary officer. Bentley passes out thousand-dollar checks for soldier programs like they were play money.

He's been doing good for so long that he's often taken for granted. During Desert Shield and Desert Storm, he was the driving force for keeping food in Army Community Service's food locker, and he joined forces with the Directorate of Community Activities' Family Support Division to ensure family members were properly cared for.

As much as he's done for soldiers in the past, the "coup de grace" comes June 29 when soldiers and families are invited to the "Victory Day Superfest."

Once again, Bentley's joined forces with the people in the Directorate of Community Activities. This time, he's joined Brian Smith, another bundle of energy, to put on, as Smith would say, "the mother of all parties."

Ten thousand tickets are being printed for soldiers. A ticket gets a soldier and his family into Gowdy Field. Once there, he and his family are fed and entertained free of charge.

Also, the stub of that ticket could win him any number of prizes such as a 1991 Chevy S-10 truck, boat, microwaves, blenders, refrigerators.

Take that ticket to Golden Park later in the evening and that same ticket will get the soldier in to see the Indians. Family members will have to pay for admission at the Indians game. Additionally, there will be another drawing. This time for a Ford car.

The post CG establishes the climate on post for Fort Benning soldiers to work and play. Soldier chains of command counsel and advise and care for their soldiers. Santa Claus might leaves presents for those who have been nice, and the family dog is a true and loyal friend.

But, Larry Bentley puts the icing on the cake. And he's certainly done it this time. I know where I'll be after 11:30 a.m. June 29 — Gowdy Field, free hamburger in one hand, free soda in the other, kicked back, listening to a freebie band.

Hope to see you there.

But, only if you get your ticket from your first sergeant.

Gang participation against Army policies

With the recent upsurge in gang-related activities both on and off post, soldiers and family members should be aware of preventative and disciplinary measures available to the installation commander in order to prevent such conduct on Fort Benning.

One of the responsibilities of military services is to uphold the constitution and respect the rights of others.

Groups or gangs that advocate the use of force or violence, or engage in efforts to deprive individuals of their civil rights, are incompatible with that responsibility.

Fort Benning policy is to closely monitor gang activities and, where appropriate, take administrative and disciplinary action.

Soldiers should understand that engaging in group activities that are inconsistent with Army goals and values may hinder their professional development and advancement and subject them to disciplinary action.

Likewise, actions by family members result in the denial of certain privileges, including loss in government housing.

Civilian offenders may also be barred from the military reservation and face prosecution in either the U.S. magistrate or district court.

The object of such measures is to protect law-abiding citizens and ensure the safety and security of the post. Soldiers and family members who participate in the gang activities should terminate their association with such groups immediately.

Fort Benning enjoys a reputation for safety that is the envy of most communities. Residents can feel confident that the command will ensure this post remains a safe and enjoyable place to live and work and that their lives will not become a haven for gang activities.

Voting assistance program wants slogans for contest

The Federal Voting Assistance Program is conducting a voter slogan contest to increase voter awareness and participation by U.S. Armed Forces military members, Department of Defense civilian employees, and their family members.

The winning slogan will be an integral part of the 1992 media campaign to increase voter awareness among U.S. citizens.

The slogan will appear on posters, voter manuals, publications, and other media materials. The winning slogan will be selected by a panel of judges based on originality and motivational value.

The originator of the winning slogan will receive a certificate of recognition from the Secretary of Defense.

The second-place winner and honorable mentions will receive special recognition. The service with the highest percentage of individual participation will also receive special recognition.

The winning and second place slogans will be submitted as entries in a national competition against winning slogans from each state.

There is no limit on the number of slogans a person may submit on a page.

Slogans should be submitted on letter-size paper, and each page must include your full name, service (if military), mailing address, and daytime telephone number.

Mail your slogans to the Federal Voting Assistance Program, Room 18457, The Pentagon, Washington, D.C. 20301-1155. All slogans must be received by July 31.

I encourage everyone to participate in this voting slogan contest.

Voter awareness and participation are essential in determining the future leaders of our country.

Benning gets Army physical fitness school

USAIC Public Affairs Office

The U.S. Army Training and Doctrine Command is moving the Army's Physical Fitness School to Fort Benning, from Fort Benjamin Harrison, Ind.

The new organization will be located with the Army's Infantry Center and School.

The Master Fitness Trainer Course is to be discontinued after October.

The school will continue to serve as a proponent for fitness doctrine and standards across the Army.

Previously, completion of the Master Fitness Trainer course qualified senior noncommissioned officers and officers as training managers who were assigned to battalion commanders to serve as advisors on their unit physical fitness programs.

Under the new concept, the Training and Doctrine Command's professional development courses from the Platoon Leader Development Course through the Advanced Non-commissioned Officers Course and the Officer Basic and Advanced Course will integrate a program of instruction on fitness designed to develop the Army's NCO and officer leadership as fitness planners and trainers in their units.

Amid budget reductions, recent speculation arose that the Army would close the Physical Fitness School.

This drew concern that physical fitness, which has been a high priority for the past decade, would lose emphasis across the Army.

The decision to change the focus of the program of instruction to unit-level emphasis and discontinue the Master Fitness Trainer Course allows the Training and Doctrine Command to fund the program with the existing resources and continue to maintain a strong emphasis on physical fitness.

The moving date is still under study but initial evolution of the school to its new program will begin this fall.

Currently, the school has 39 employees.

Field manuals and training circulars as well as fitness training assistance to active and reserve component units will be offered.

The 11th Infantry Regiment acquired a new commander June 13.

Col. Lawrence K. White Jr. took command of the regiment at a change of command ceremony on York Field in front of Infantry Hall.

The ceremony was highlighted by the award of a meritorious service medal to Col. James M. Jones, the outgoing commander.

The Silver Wings, the post's parachute exhibition team, made a jump onto York Field and presented flowers to the spouses of the outgoing and incoming commanders.

White's incoming speech was brief and to the point. He touched lightly on what he will strive to do as regimental commander.

"All policies will remain in effect for the regiment," he said.

White, commissioned an infantry officer in 1970, has been serving since July 1990 as the director of Combined Arms and Tactics at the U.S. Army Infantry School.

White brings with him to his command a bachelor's degree and a master of science degree. He has attended Brown University, Purdue University and the U.S. Military Academy at West Point. Also, he is a graduate of the infantry and military intelligence basic courses, the Special Forces Qualification Course, the Infantry Officer Advanced Course, the Command and General Staff College, the Defense Strategy Course and the Army War College.

The outgoing commander said he wishes the best for White.

"I know Colonel White will do a good job with the regiment," said Jones. "I have no problem in leaving the command to him."

Jones served for two years as the commander of the 11th. His next position will be in Washington D.C.

Jones reflects on tenure as commander of 11th

By Brian C. Sutton
Bayonet staff writer

The 11th Infantry Regiment received a new commander June 13 during a change of command ceremony on York Field.

Col. James M. Jones passed the regimental colors to Col. Lawrence K. White Jr., the new regimental commander.

In an interview prior to his departure, Jones shared his feelings on the Army of the future and the quality of today's soldier.

Q:What do you feel you have accomplished during your command at the 11th Infantry Regiment?

A:The biggest challenge you have with a command this size is communication and understanding what each unit does. At the 11th, I feel we enhanced the communication. Not only the communication within, but also the communication from without, meaning the battalion- or brigade-level commands.

Another accomplishment is we realized fully we are working for the soldier. Sure, you can all work, but if you're not working for the soldier, it's pointless. We cannot forget that everything we do, we do it for the benefit of the soldier.

Q:What will it be like to move on, relinquishing command of the 11th Infantry Regiment?

A:Anytime you leave a command, it's a downer. But, I'm going back to an area where I will be with family. It's like going home. Leaving the 11th Infantry Regiment is just something that is hard to do. Col. White is a super leader and a super troop, and I won't ever have to worry when I look back at the regiment.

Q:With the recent talk of base closures and scaling down of troops, how do you feel the American soldier needs to perform?

A:Soldiers need to be top-notch. They can't be dragging their feet now. I'm more concerned with the soldiers already in. They have to set the standards. They are the ones that have to do the right thing.

Young soldiers that come into the Army knowing the standards are low, will perform according to those low standards. But, if they come into the Army when the existing soldiers have set high standards, they will have to perform to those standards as well.

Q:Do you see a drastic change in the soldiers of yesteryear with the soldiers of today?

A:I think basically soldiers are the same. They want to be treated fairly. They want to have the same opportunities as all other soldiers, and they want decent living conditions. That won't change. People don't change in that respect.

I think what is different is the amount of talent and the quality of soldiers today. Those who are not as talented as others will simply have to find other jobs.

Q:Is there any message you would like to leave to your troops?

A:Continue to give Colonel White the same loyal, dedicated service they gave me. That's all I ask. That's the bottom line. It's been a great two years. I haven't had a bad day yet.

Soldier show to stop at Benning

2 performances set at Sand Hill

USAIC Public Affairs Office

The cast of the eighth annual U.S. Army Soldier Show will sing and dance across the stage at 8 p.m. today and Saturday at Sand Hill Theater.

The 80-minute musical, performed "For the Soldier, By the Soldier," began its worldwide tour May 2.

Months of planning and preparation went into producing this traveling showcase of Army talent, officials said.

"Celebration '91" features country, rock 'n' roll, patriotic or rap music.

This year, the Army Soldier Show extends its normal tour length to express appreciation to Army reserve and National Guard units who serve proudly as part of the total Army family.

The performances, hosted by the Directorate of Community Activities' Community Recreation Division, are free.

However, seating is limited and will be on a first-come, first-serve basis.

"The show is fantastic," said Ed Hensley, administrative officer for Community Recreation. "It's really an enjoyable experience."

The Army Soldier Show is one of the nation's last true repertory companies and all cast members double as stagehands.

IRS mails wrong form

The Internal Revenue Service has discovered that they recently mailed the IRS Form 1040-ES to many of the soldiers and family members that wrote the words "Desert Shield" or "Desert Storm" on their 1990 federal tax forms, according to officials from the Office of the Staff Judge Advocate.

The Form 1040-ES is used to pay estimated tax payments to the IRS, in advance, throughout the tax year. Such payments may be necessary if sufficient amounts of tax are not being withheld from your pay

The IRS has indicated the mass mailing was a mistake and that many of the individuals receiving the form are not obligated to pay estimated tax payments, officials said.

Persons receiving the form who have questions regarding their liability to make estimated tax payments may contact the Legal Assistance Office at 545-3281 or 545-3282.

North Georgia mountains offer quick getaway

'Ghost town' now alive as Alpine village

By Mary T. Schmich
Chicago Tribune

HELEN, Ga. — Back in the 1960s Ray Sims used to stand outside his Gulf filling station hosing down the pavement next to the two-lane road that ran through town. He would watch four or five cars pass by in the morning. He would watch the same cars zoom back by in the afternoon. Helen, he noticed, was not on the highway to the future.

Worried that Helen would soon be a ghost town, Sims and other concerned citizens began to ponder how they could induce the passing cars to stop. They considered the town's liabilities, notably the half-dozen squat cement buildings that called themselves a downtown.

They surveyed the town's assets, notably the wooded blue mountains that rolled toward the Appalachians, and the Chattahoochee River, which coursed through the heart of Helen.

An outlandish idea sprang to life: Why not turn this North Georgia hamlet, pop. 197, into an Alpine village?

Twenty years later, without any billboards to announce it, Helen appears suddenly and freakishly along a mountain road, smack dab in the middle of a serene Southern landscape of fields, forests, white wooden churches, small cinderblock houses and boiled-peanut stands.

There on the horizon, at the far end of a traffic jam, looms a bustling Bavarian town. There are chalet-style roofs, turrets, gingerbread shutters, flower boxes, dormers, balconies and cobblestone alleys. There are motels called the Alpenhof and the Helendorf, along with stores called the Yogurt Haus, the Tobak Haus, the Strudel Haus and Das Ist Leather.

Wilkommen, y'all.

"No one, no one would have predicted this," says Ray Sims, who at the age of 59 finds himself at the head of an unlikely Alpine construction dynasty. "We didn't know what we were doing back then. We was just having fun."

The "miracle of Helen," as the tourist brochures call it, is particularly astonishing this time of year, when 300,000 tourists visit for Oktoberfest. The visitors come by the busload, to drink beer and eat strudel, to shop for beer steins and cuckoo clocks, to dance the polka down in the Fest Halle.

"Go abroad this year," urge the brochures. "Discover Alpine Helen."

Though the town's population remains less than 300, Helen now has 160 businesses, all done in Alpine motif. In the last six months, the Days Inn and Comfort Inn have opened the town's first chain hotels, both in chalet style.

Helen's transformation is particularly remarkable because it was the work not of a corporation but of local people using their own money. An artist named John Kollock did the first watercolor sketches based on memories of his World War II service in Bavaria. Jim Wilkins, an entrepreneur who would become a multimillionaire, provided financing. Sims headed up the construction.

Becky Turk and 'Merlin' enjoy ice cream cone in Helen.

In 1969, Sims built an Alpine facade on the Orbit ladies' sportswear factory, then did the same to the Mountaineer dress outlet, the sock shop and the drugstore. The Dairy Queen metamorphosed into the Wurst Haus.

Passers-by stopped to ask what was going on. One of them was Bernd Nagy, an Austrian.

"It was unbelievable," says Nagy, recalling that day in 1969. "Here we were going through northeast Georgia and there's this little town that reminds me of my hometown in Austria."

Nagy was so smitten that he stayed and opened Helen's first souvenir shop, the House of Tyrol, which has expanded into a hugely profitable mail-order company. In 1971, he organized the city's first Oktoberfest. It consisted of a couple of kegs of beer, a polka band on the sidewalk and 25 people dancing in the street.

The Alpine village grew so fast that by the mid-1970s Helen was in desperate need of an amenity that arrived late to many rural Southern towns — a sewage system. In 1975, to celebrate its first sewage tank, the people of Alpine Helen burned a wooden outhouse in the middle of Main Street.

Helen continues to grow, but even its oldest boosters hint that some of the fun and charm is gone. Too many of the "Bavarian" souvenirs are now from Taiwan by way of Wal-Mart.

Even Ray Sims worries sometimes.

"I miss the peace and quiet," he says. "Used to be you knew every person you saw. Now I can't identify 10 people in this town."

But before his philosophizing veers too far toward gloom, he stops himself.

"Do I wish it would go back to the way it was before? No. This is Helen's toehold to the future."

You can fish, hike, swim or just look

From staff reports

Itching for a quick vacation in the mountains? If the emphasis is on "quick" — as in "I don't want to drive all the way to the Smoky Mountains" — how about North Georgia?

If you want to take a hike, the Appalachian Trail begins in North-central Georgia. There are opportunities for other mountain activities — camping, fishing, rafting, canoeing, shopping and some gorgeous mountain scenery. From the 4,784-foot summit of Brasstown Bald to the 2,000-foot depths of Tallulah Gorge, you are likely to encounter a variety of vacation adventures.

Here are 12 places you might want to see in North Georgia. All are within about a 200-mile drive from Columbus and Phenix City.

1. COHUTTA WILDERNESS AREA: This 34,102-acre wilderness area in northwest Georgia and southwest Tennessee is part of the Blue Ridge mountain chain. Elevations range from 950 to 4,200 feet. The Jacks and Conasauga rivers run through the area, offering trout fishing and the spectacular Jacks River Falls. The falls can be reached only by foot (3 1/2 miles). The area is ideal for backpacking and primitive camping during the summer months. Take Interstate 75 north from Atlanta and Highway 411 north to Chatsworth.

2. UNICOI STATE PARK: Features a lodge, conference center, cottages, tent and trailer sites. There's a beach on Unicoi Lake. Variety of recreation opportunities available including camping, hiking, trout fishing, canoeing and rafting.

How to get there: From Helen go north on Georgia 75 to Georgia 356. Distance: 3 miles from Helen.

3. ANNA RUBY FALLS: Scenic twin waterfalls that drop from Tray Mountain to form Smiths Creek near Unicoi State Park. There's a 1/2-mile trail from visitor's center to falls and a 4.8 mile Smith Creek trail for the more serious hiker. Admission is $2 per car parking fee.

How to get there: About 2 miles from Unicoi State Park off Georgia 356.

4. OLD SAUTEE STORE: This century old country store/museum is a combination of memorabilia, postures and antiques along with Scandinavian gift shop. The memorabilia and antiques are not for sale. The Scandinavian gifts are for sale, including hundreds of hand-painted storybook "trolls." The store's on the National Register of Historic Places. Admission is free unless you buy from gift shop.

How to get there: From Helen go south about two miles on Georgia 75, turn left onto Georgia 17. Travel about two miles to the store at the intersection of U.S. 255.

5. RICHARD B. RUSSELL SCENIC HIGHWAY: This 14-mile stretch of Georgia 348 north of Helen is one of the popular scenic drives in North Georgia. You can see Chattahoochee Forest mountain vistas at elevations up to 3,644 feet. Several trails along the road will lead you to scenic natural beauty. You might try the one-mile trail to Duke Falls.

How to get there: From Helen go north on Georgia 75 about two miles to Georgia 75A. Take a left and go about two miles and turn right on Georgia 348, the Russell Scenic Highway.

6. BRASSTOWN BALD: Georgia's highest mountain at 4,784 feet. You can walk or bus to the summit. The 1/2-mile walk from the parking lot to the summit is steep. At the top there's an observation tower and visitors center. Admission is free.

How to get there: From Helen go north on Georgia 75 to Georgia 80. Turn left and follow the road. Brasstown is about 18 miles from Helen.

7. CLARKSVILLE: In a 1987 survey by Rand McNally. Clarksville was named the second best retirement place in the United States. The area contains numerous fine hotels and restaurants, including the 100-year-old Glen-Ella Springs Inn that was restored and reopened in 1987. Clarksville is located on Highway 441, about half an hour's drive south of Tallulah Gorge.

8. AMICALOLA FALLS STATE PARK: Georgia's highest waterfalls drops 729 feet. This 500-acre park has cottages and camping areas.

How to get there: From Dahlonega, go west on Georgia 52 about 20 miles to the park.

9. DILLARD: This town on U.S. 441 near the Georgia-North Carolina border is home of one of the most popular restaurants in North Georgia — The Dillard House. Family-style, all-you-can-eat meals have been served to more than a million travelers since 1915. You will also see a lot of the home folks at the table. Cobbler pie, fried chicken and home grown veggies are among the specialties.

Located nearby is Black Rock Mountain State Park, Sky Valley Ski Resort and the famed Chatooga River.

How to get there: It's on U.S. 441 just south of the Georgia-North Carolina border in the northeast corner of the state.

10. TALLULAH GORGE: Tallulah Gallery and Tallulah Point is the best place to view the gorge, which is 1,200 feet to the bottom. The famous Wallenda made his next-to-last highwire walk here in 1970. The spectacular view can be seen from the car. The gorge is located south of Clayton on Highway 441.

11. APPALACHIAN TRAIL: It's the longest continuous trail in the eastern U.S. and begins in North Georgia about 28 miles northwest of Dahlonega. An eight-mile approach trail can be entered from Amicalola Falls State Park. The trail goes from Georgia into the Smokies and continues through 14 states, ending in Maine. Total distance: 2,100 miles.

Blood Mountain offers one of the best views from the trail in Georgia and is probably the most popular area for day-hikers. There's a rock shelter on top if you should need to get in out of the weather. On a clear day, you can see the observation tower of Brasstown Bald from the top. It's a four-mile round-trip from Neel Gap, where the trail crosses Highway 129 just south of Vogel.

How to get there: You can get on the trail at Amicalola Falls State Park. Also the trail crosses Highway 60, 129, 348, 75, 76.

12. MOCASSIN CREEK STATE PARK: One of the best trout fishing streams in North Georgia, Mocassin Creek's cool waters feed into Lake Burton. Mocassin Creek State Park, located on the west side of the lake, has a small but scenic campground and a trout hatchery. The creek, which winds through rugged wilderness, is a favorite for fly fishermen. The park is located about an hour's drive from Helen.

MOUNTAINSONG

When the shape-note choir sings out in the crystal night of the North Georgia Mountains, a kind of magic happens. It's the magic of "The Reach of Song," the epic of the mountains and the mountainfolk, performed each Tuesday through Saturday, June 11 through Aug. 3. Give yourself and your family this extraordinary journey back through these mountains and their fire-and-brimstone preachers, their dances and above all their song. Let "The Reach of Song" enfold you this summer at the Georgia Mountain Fairground at Lake Chatuge in Hiawassee. Mountain crafts sale everyday.

Officers, civilians receive awards

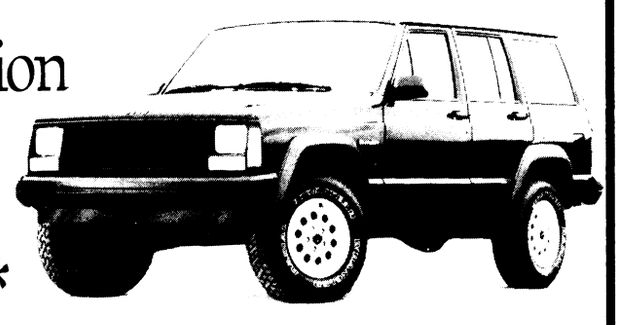
By James C. Rupp
Bayonet staff writer

Some international military officers and some civilian ambassadors were honored June 13 at the Fort Benning Officers' Club Supper Club.

The international military officers were members of Class 2-91 of the Infantry Officer Advanced Course. Each member of the class received a Doughboy "Queen of Battle" certificate.

The certificate verifies that the student has been instructed in various aspects of infantry tactics and proclaims the bearer an honorary Doughboy.

The second occasion of the night was to honor "civilian ambassadors" with a token of appreciation.



Maj. Gen. Carmen J. Cavezza, post commanding general, presented 18 lapel pins to the ambassadors as thanks for the hospitality they showed the 21 foreign officers who were members of the graduating class.

The officers represented 14 countries including Egypt, Saudi Arabia and Jamaica.

Members of the 283rd Army Band provided entertainment for the formal celebration.

'Mother of all parties'

Victory Day Superfest is a welcome home celebration

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Fort Benning's welcome home party of the year is being planned for June 29.

The Victory Day Superfest, which will take place at Gowdy Field, is being dubbed, "the mother of all parties."

The activities on post begin at 11:30 a.m. and will continue until 5 p.m. Then, at 7 p.m., the festivities continue at a Columbus Indians game at Golden Park in Columbus.

According to Brian Smith of the Directorate of Community Activities, this is the post's biggest event of the year.

Smith and commissary personnel have been working long hours on the event. He and Larry Bentley, the commissary officer, have coordinated to bring together a wide array of support from corporate sponsors and commissary vendors in providing everything from food to entertainment to door prizes.

"The quantity and quality of solicited corporate sponsor support and gifts and donations from commissary vendors has been overwhelming," Smith said.

Because of such an outpouring of support from the corporate community and commissary vendors, soldiers and family members will be able to enjoy this event free of charge, he said.

"Everything is free," he said. "The food and refreshments are free; first class musical entertainment will be provided; and there will be door prizes.

"A wide variety of food will be available including barbecue, hot dogs, fried fish, smoked sausage, chips, apple pies, colas, yogurt cones and more," he said. "The best part is everything is free."

The door prizes, donated by commissary vendors, include a 1991 Chevy S-10 truck donated by Lever Brothers, and 1991 Ford Festiva donated by Keebler and much more.

A cash prize of $500 will be given away by General Motors, a corporate sponsor.

"General Motors and Dixie Distributing/Miller Beer are sponsors of the event," Smith said. "Additional financial support and giveaways were made available by commissary vendors and include food and refreshments, washers, dryers, a Coleman pond boat and more."

Ticket holders must be present to win all door prizes, said Smith.

The freebies don't end there. Larry Pearson, a driver for the National Association for Stock Car Auto Racing, will be on hand with a NASCAR auto thanks to Kellogg's. Pearson will autograph and give away 500 hats and posters.

"The musical entertainment will be live," Smith said, "and include the following artists: Keisha Jackson, a recording artist (daughter of Millie Jackson) and Mystique, an all female band.

"Also, the post sergeant major has selected three deserving soldiers who were involved in Desert Storm and have not seen their parents since returning," he said. Airline travel, hotel accommodations and rental cars will be provided for the soldiers' parents for the weekend of the Superfest.

This event is open to all active duty military and their family members. One ticket will admit one soldier or one soldier and his family.

Soldiers should see their unit first sergeant for tickets. The tickets are in three parts and will contain two stubs — one for the door prize registration at Gowdy Field and the other for admission to the Columbus Indians baseball game and the automobile giveaway there.

The day's events will continue at 7 p.m. at Golden Park for a game between the Columbus Indians and the Macon Braves.

Active duty soldiers will be admitted to the game free, but family members will have to pay for admission, Smith said. Also, food and refreshments at the game must be purchased.

The prize giveaways will continue at the game. A 1991 Ford Festiva, donated by Keebler Brothers, a commissary vendor, will be given away to a ticket holder present at the Columbus Indians game.

"Plus, the festivities don't end there," Smith said. "The Victory Week Clubfest will be July 3 at the Officers' Club, the NCO Club on Main Post and the Hidden Door Club.

Free food and special live musical entertainment will be provided. The club festivities are free to all eligible patrons."

Post celebrates Army birthday

By Brian C. Sutton
Bayonet staff writer

Most things don't last 216 years.

The U.S. Army, however, celebrated its 216th birthday June 14.

Fort Benning celebrated the occasion with a birthday ball, sponsored by the NCO Academy, to commemorate the 216th year of the Army's existence.

Festivities included dinner, the cutting of the cake by Maj. Gen. Carmen J. Cavezza, post commander, and Command Sgt. Maj. Edward Garrett, post command sergeant major, and dancing to music provided by the 283rd Army Band.

Cavezza spoke to the attendees briefly about Army history and the recent Gulf War.

"1991 marks another memorable Army birthday. Desert Storm presented our Army at its best — mobile, lethal, proud and professional," said Cavezza.

Cavezza praised the Fort Benning units for their participation in the Gulf war.

"It was a team effort for Fort Benning and for the Army, because all these maneuvers were the culmination of months of effort by an eclectic mix of combat support and combat service support units," said Cavezza.

Cavezza made a comparison of the Army of the 1980s to the Army of today.

"The Army we celebrate today serves as an accolade for the tireless dedication of its soldiers and civilians of all ranks during the 1980s," said Cavezza. "Their efforts have come to fruition."

OPM sets up leave bank for civilians

Army News Service

WASHINGTON — Civilian employees who were part of the reserve component call up for Operation Desert Storm, may be eligible for a little extra leave time.

A Reservist Leave Bank Program has been established by the Office of Personnel Management to accept leave donations for Army civilians who 'endured many hardships as a result of the rapid manner in which they departed their jobs and families,' according to civilian pay officials at Fort Benjamin Harrison, Ind.

They said the bank differs from the current leave sharing program in that donations are made directly to the OPM bank, rather than to specific individuals.

"Once all donations are received, OPM will distribute it among the eligible reservists," according to a June 4 announcement from the Defense Finance and Accounting Service.

Army civilians mobilized for Desert Storm-related duty in the reserves or National Guard, regardless of the branch of service, are potential recipients of the leave donations.

OPM will collect leave donations through July 13. Donations can be made by contacting local civilian personnel offices and following their established procedures.

CRIME STOPPERS

The Columbus Police Department and Crime Stoppers are looking for a black male involved in the robbery of an individual in South Columbus.

He is described as being 20 to 21 years old, 5 feet 11 inches tall, weights 150 to 165 pounds, no facial hair, light complexion, last seen wearing a light tan T-shirt, beige or brown pants, and a brown looking cap.

On Dec. 16, at approximately 3:20 p.m., the victim, a white male, and employee of the Piggly Wiggly at the Traffic Circle Shopping Center, was attempting to make a deposit into the night drop at a local bank.

The suspect then approached the victim and demanded the money bag from the victim while he was seated in his vehicle.

The suspect then left the scene, at which time the victim followed the suspect across Victory Drive and lost him behind a business on Victory Drive.

The bank deposit totaled over $8,500 in cash, food stamps and checks.

If you have any information concerning this incident, call Crime Stoppers at 571-5858. If your information leads to an arrest and indictment, you could receive up to $1,000 in reward.

Spc. Jeremy Miller shows the two faces of an Army band member.

Although talented music makers, band members are still soldiers

By Jon R. Anderson
Bayonet staff writer

Imagine going to an Army recruiter with an interest, let's say, in being an infantryman.

"Great!" says the recruiter from behind his desk, "But first we're going to have to send you to Fort Benning to try out for the position."

"Try out?" you reply, puzzled.

"We just want to make sure you've got the basic skills down before we let you in," he explains, "You know, the fundamentals — marksmanship, patrolling, recon techniques, how to react under direct fire — the basics."

Well, of course this would never happen. What makes the military such a good deal for so many is that it takes people with no experience and teaches them what they need to know.

For almost all military jobs, that is, except one.

For one military specialty, you must actually audition to determine whether or not you are good enough to make the team — the team of the Army Band.

Fifteen years ago, when Ramon Yepez walked into the San Francisco Army Recruiting Station, he had just finished cutting an album with Freddy Fender.

He had grown up in the explosive musical scene of California during the '60s and '70s. He had played with Santana and most of the local greats. Since he had played guitar since he was 5, he was considered a prodigy.

Despite relative success, however, work was sporadic and hard to count on.

"I was looking for some stability and a way to provide for a family while still doing what I loved," he said. Yepez had been engaged for five years but didn't want to take the final plunge until he was sure of himself economically. He realized the military provided both things he most desired — the ability to continue playing with enough financial stability to raise a family.

Today, Yepez a staff sergeant and member of the 283rd Army Band, is married, has two children, and is still doing what he loves.

After successfully auditioning for a position, potential band members continue with the regular induction procedures including, of course, basic training.

With their basic soldiering skills honed, they go on to the six-months-long School of Music to have their instrumentalist abilities refined.

It is here where the soldier-minstrel receives training in harmony, ear training, theory of music and individual instruction on his or her instrument — all of which amounts to almost one year's worth of college-level credit hours in music.

Spc. Christine Brashear, one of the newest members of the 283rd, says she got to the School of Music thinking she was fairly well prepared, having played extensively with her high school band and a college band before joining the Army.

"You go there thinking that you're pretty good." she said "But, when get there you realize you don't know anything — they really demand a lot.".

Maj. Thomas Davis, School of Music commandant agrees the demand is high, explaining that at times the attrition rate at the school has been as high as 25 percent.

"It's not intended to be an easy course because the bands they go to are not easy assignments," Davis said.

After graduation from Advanced Individual Training, band members are open to assignment to an Army band anywhere in the world. With additional auditioning, they can seek assignment to one of the premier bands such as Pershing's Own in Washington, D.C. or the West Point Army Band.

The 283rd Army Band is the sole military band for Fort Benning. Its history dates back to July 15, 1916, when it was first organized in El Paso, Texas, as the official band of the 34th Infantry, with which it saw action in Lorraine, France, during World War I.

Through the years, it has performed for Presidents Lyndon Johnson, Richard Nixon and Gerald Ford, General of the Army Omar Bradley, Prince Charles of England, governors, senators and congressmen of Georgia and Alabama and has even performed before Johnny Carson.

During his recent change of command ceremony, Col. James M. Jones described the 283rd Army Band as "the hardest working unit in the Army," alluding to the large number of commitments the band has been responsible for playing during the Persian Gulf crisis.

Chief Warrant Officer Larry Hyatt, 283rd bandmaster said, "In addition to playing the 800 to 1,000 commitments that we have normally during any given year, we've also had every single troop departure ceremony during Desert Shield and every single arrival ceremony, as troops return from Desert Storm. It's been pretty hectic."

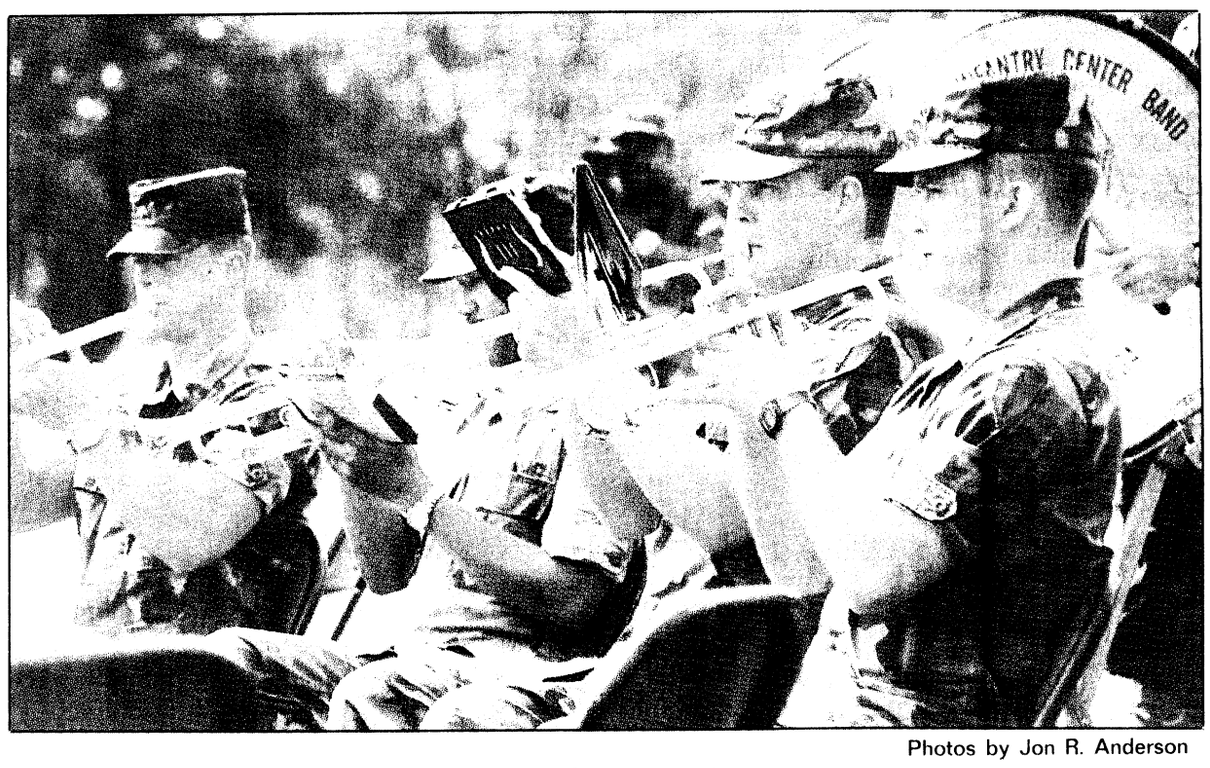
Staff Sgt. Edward Schezick, who plays trombone for the band, says the troop arrival ceremonies have been the most emotional he's ever had to play for during his entire career in the band.

He describes how the band usually will run to the banister overlooking the aircraft hangar after playing their repertoire of welcome home songs and quietly watch the soldier-family reunions.

"You watch a soldier hold his newborn baby for the first time and I'll tell you, it pulls on your heart strings in a city second, said Schezick, who played for the Detroit Symphony Orchestra before joining the Army. "You don't ever forget something like that.".

Although band members provide Fort Benning and the surrounding communities with high-caliber musical talent, they must maintain their soldiering skills as well.

According to Hyatt, throughout history, the military musician has had to lay down his instrument and pick up a rifle in times of war.



Although these times have been few and far between, he said, it still requires the military band member to keep up with all the normal things associated with soldiering, such as daily physical training, common skills training, and regular marksmanship testing.

While the 283rd is first and foremost a military marching band, its range and ability far exceeds this. With subgroups drawn from the total band, they can fill just about any form of musical requirement, said Hyatt.

Whether that be performing classic and top 40 rock 'n' roll at one of the local clubs, playing as a Dixieland combo for a street fair in Columbus or even as a concert band for some local event, the band offers a diverse amount of talent from its 41 members.

One band member summarized it by saying, "We've got the best job in the military; and, at the same time, the worst job. But, it can be very rewarding."

"It's rewarding," agrees Yepez, "because we provide a heartbeat for the soldiers. If we're weak, we're going to bring the soldiers down. But if we're strong, the soldiers are going to feel pumped up. That's what the Army Band is all about."

Post soldiers visit Pres. Bush

Vanguards accept Bush's horseshoe challenge

By Willie Hay
3rd Brigade Public Affairs

The "Vanguards" never turn down a challenge.

When President George Bush presented a set of horseshoes to his Thanksgiving Day hosts, Lt. Col. Rick Olson and the men of 2nd Battalion, 18th Infantry in Saudi Arabia last year, "Vanguard" horseshoe pitching champs Spc. Scott Decker and Spc. Billy Goolsby were "shoe-ins" to take the president's challenge to join him for a game at the White House.

The pair got their chance during the nation's recent Victory Parade weekend celebration, but found the shoe was on the other foot when Bush and his son, Marvin, outpitched both Army and Marine opponents on his home turf.

"The Bushes just couldn't lose that day," said Decker, who with his partner lost 12-21 and 19-21 to the presidential duo. "The president is pretty good, but his son is a real pro. The president said they like to play a tournament a month and usually make it into the finals."

According to Goolsby, the Vanguard team gave the Bushes a run for their money.

"Scott threw two 1-point shoes to put us ahead 19-18 in the second game," Goolsby said. "We could have won and had a third game, but Marvin Bush hit with a ringer for 3 points to end the match."

Decker and Goolsby, who have held the battalion championship for two years — including three tournament wins in Saudi Arabia, claimed the president held the home court advantage in the match.

"He plays on a synthetic clay pit, which stops the shoe where it lands," said Decker. "We're used to the shoes sliding into the post after they hit the dirt."

"Synthetic clay sticks to the shoes like bubble gum when it gets hot," Goolsby observed. "Somebody on the White House staff applied dry ice to harden the clay before our match, but the White House gardener had to throw ice water on the pit to cool the clay before the end of the two-hour matches."

Despite their loss in the White House match, Goolsby and Decker refuse to get discouraged.

"We'd like to write to the president and request a rematch," Goolsby said. "But before we do, we want to build our own pit, using mud to simulate the synthetic clay in the president's, and practice pitching shoes at an angle like we had to at the White House, rather than standing with our toes against the other post like we're used to playing."

The Vanguards would relish the challenge, but only time will tell.

War hero honored by OSUT soldiers' visit

By Margaret L. Kambitz
30th AG Reception Bn.

To instill a sense of pride and promote a better understanding and awareness of what being a soldier really means, retired Maj. William C. Thomas Jr., chief, Clothing Initial Issue Point, 30th Adjutant General (Reception), arranged for a number of soldiers from the battalion to visit the grave of one of its own at the post cemetery.

Special tribute was paid at the grave of Spc, Donald R. Johnston, Company D, 1st Battalion, 8th Cavalry, 1st Cavalry Division, who was killed in Vietnam March 21, 1969. Johnston Hall, home of the 30th Adjutant General Battalion, was named in honor of Johnston, a medal of honor recipient.

Johnston distinguished himself while serving as a mortarman with a fire-support base in Tay Ninh Province. Johnson's company was in defensive positions when it came under rocket and mortar attack.

Enemy soldiers broke through the defensive perimeter and began throwing explosive charges into the main defensive bunkers. Three explosive charges were hurled by one of the enemy into their position.

Sensing the danger to his comrades, Johnston, with complete disregard for his safety, threw himself on the explosive charges, smothering the detonations with his body. His action saved the lives of six of his comrades.

It is due to the efforts of Thomas that Johnston Hall is named after Johnston. When the building was constructed in 1983 and a names was needed, Thomas proposed the Johnston's name to the post chief of staff, who sent it to the memorialization board, where Johnston's name and deed was reviewed along with several others.

Thomas said that since Fort Benning was named after one illustrious son of Columbus, the reception station should be named after another who lay buried in Benning's own cemetery. The building was officially dedicated on July 6, 1983, in honor of Johnston.

Johnston is at present the sole Medal of Honor recipient buried in the post cemetery.

Pvt. 2 Anthony McCree of Company B, 30th Adjutant General, who was one of the participants in the ceremony, said he felt it was an honor and privilege to participate. Even though he never knew Johnston, McCree said that hearing about his deeds from Thomas stirred a myriad of feelings, among which was a feeling of compassion for Johnston and his family and a sense of pride to be a soldier.

McCree said he considered it a privilege to participate and place the flowers at the grave of Johnston.

"He was a brave soldier and knowing about his gallantry makes me proud to be a soldier," McCree said.

Post students take top spot in contest

Fort Benning Schools

Faith Middle School won first place in the Junior Group Media Division at the 16th annual National History Day June 9 through 13, at the University of Maryland at College Park. More than 1,800 students competeded in the national competition.

Students addressed the theme "Rights in History," which commemorated the 200th anniversary of the Bill of Rights. The Commission of the Bicentennial of the U.S. Constitution co-sponsored this year's program.

"The theme represents a challenge for students to investigate the ideas expressed in the U.S. Constitution and its legacies in our own history and in the worlds," said Dr. Lois Scharf, executive director of National History Day. "The opportunity to examine the historical significance of these rights coincides with a major thrust in today's society: globalism."

National History Day is an educational program involving nearly 500,000 people in the United States. Addressing a new theme annually, activities include student competitions and teacher workshops.

Two teams represented Faith School at the national competition. Faith School's first place win was with a media presentation, a videotape researched and produced by Genedine Gallo, Robbie Pearce, David Denny, David Scheid, eight graders, and Cesareo Morales, a seventh grader. These students focused on Primus King, the Columbus man who obtained the right to vote for all Georgia blacks in the all-white Georgia Democratic Primary in 1945. As part of the research for this project, team members interviewed local associates of Primus King as well as Genie King, Primus King's widow.

A visual project, which received a superior rating at the national competition, is entitled "Georgia Women: You've Come a Long Way, Babies." It was researched and constructed by Hollen Hayden and Julanne Franklin, both eighth graders. They focused on Helen Augusta Howard who began the Georgia Woman's Suffrage Association in the late 1800's and on Rebecca Latimer Felton, the first woman to sit in the U.S. Congress. Felton was also from Georgia.

"We're very proud of our winning media team and of our visuals team which rated a superior on their project. Their long hours after school were certainly reflected in the quality of both projects," said Mary Barnette. Barnette and David Bunt, teachers at Faith School, are the sponsors of the two teams.

Procrastination – a problem of too many burdens in life

Reflections
Reflections

USAIC Chaplains Office

Do you ever put off doing something because: There is just too much to do it; you're too tired or not feeling well; you resent having to do this thing because it takes time away from other important activities; your family is keeping you occupied; or you're just not sure how to go about it, so you keep stalling? If you ever use one or more of the above excuses for not getting the assignment done, then you are a procrastinator. I should know — I have honed my skills of procrastination to an art.

But what does procrastination really say about you? It implies that you are not trusting God. What? How can I say that you don't trust God?

Well, doesn't it imply that if you procrastinate you feel the work is all on your shoulders — that you bear the burden alone? And as soon as you can possibly find time in your busy schedule you will try to squeeze it in. You are basically leaving God out of the picture. Do you ever really bear a burden alone? God is never at work, bringing about orderly and timely results. He is always present to supply the energy, the thoughts, the time that we need to complete any project. And aren't the results a whole lot more satisfying when God does the work, and we simply act as a transparency for His activity through us? The result will probably be more of a blessing to us and those around us if we listen for God's guidance — and then follow the best we can.

We can say, as Jesus did, "I can of mine own self do nothing" (John 5:30), recognizing that our ability to do anything comes from God in the first place. We can also remember the words of Paul when he said, "I can do all things through Christ who strengthens me." (Philippians 4:13) So we can do all of the activities we are tasked to do through our Father who supplies everything we need, and through His Son, Christ, who inspires us and keeps us strong in our faith. And we can complete all of these activities on time.

Singer brings message in music to Benning

By Gabriele Sonnenberg
USAIC Chaplains Office

Danny Byram, singer and songwriter, performed six contemporary Christian music concerts throughout Fort Benning. He performed both at indoor and outdoor locations, worship services, at a mess hall, at Pedan Field and in the auditorium of the 30th AG Reception Battalion.

His songs attempt to focus on the reliance upon God's love (Romans 8), the assurance of God's forgiveness (Psalm 103:12) and strength that comes from trusting the Lord (Phil 4:13). Through such songs of encouragement, Byram offered a powerful testimony to the audience to trust in the Lord in all areas of life.

Hand clapping, singing, foot-stomping and even a standing ovation were the response of the audience. One soldier in basic training said he was inspired by the concert and others praised Danny's ability to sing, play the guitar and the piano. Hearts seemed to be touched as a reaction to the dynamic performances and messages.

Gabrielle Sonnenberg

Danny's wife, Angela, and his son accompany him on all his concert trips. The next trip abroad is planned for November in Germany.

Chaplain (Capt.) Gary Sexton was responsible for all the details of preparing for and setting up the concerts. Many chaplains and chaplain's assistants helped to enhance the six concerts.

Reservist, guard volunteers wanted for Gulf duty

Army News Service

WASHINGTON — About 6,000 reserve volunteers are being sought to relieve support personnel completing the drawdown of soldiers and equipment from Saudi Arabia.

Additionally, about 3,000 active component soldiers will replace active force elements in the Persian Gulf, either as units or as individual replacements.

Soldiers in specialties such as transportation, maintenance, supply, medical and military police, will arrive between June and October for up to one year of duty. They will enable an orderly return home of soldiers already in Southwest Asia, according to Col. John Cartland, deputy director of manpower for the Army.

"As a general rule of thumb the replacements will relieve reserve soldiers with nine months in the theater and active force soldiers with 12 months," Cartland said.

"National Guard volunteers will replace National Guard members, U.S. Army Reserve soldiers will fill in for fellow reservists, and active soldiers will replace regular Army soldiers in active units. Designated units already in Southwest Asia will remain the same, but the personnel in them will change. Any shortfall in meeting the volunteer requirements will be made up with active duty soldiers. In any case, volunteers must have no more than 16 years of creditable active federal service." Cartland said.

Cartland said the replacements are needed because while redeployment missions continue, time-in-country limitations do not.

"In the meantime, however, some units' missions are not going away fast enough. Thus, their tour is over, and they must be replaced. We don't expect their replacements to remain beyond the March-to-June 1992 timeframe, except for a very small residual force," he added.

"It took us six months to get all the equipment over there," he continued. "And it hasn't even been six months since we've begun returning it all. Our first priority has been getting the troops out. When we moved materiel there, it was on an absolutely rush basis at premium prices. We are taking it a bit slower moving things back because we are no longer facing a war emergency and we want to avoid paying rush premium prices," said Cartland.

Col. Larry Kelly, chief, Force Integration Division, Deputy Chief of Staff for Personnel, said the sustaining units are predominantly logistical and service support.

"Volunteers will be sent to Fort Dix, N.J., for five days of processing," Cartland said. "They will be given inoculations, physicals and have their records and pay squared away. They are to arrive with their basic clothing issue bag, but should leave their class A and B uniforms home. In Saudi Arabia, they will be issued desert battle dress uniforms, protective masks, weapons and their TA-50 gear," Kelly said. Two sets of civilian clothing are also authorized, he added.

Cartland said active component soldiers will be given formal permanent change-of-station orders and follow-on assignments for when their mission is done.

"We are shooting for 30 days notice for active duty soldiers," he said. "This will allow the soldier's family members to remain where they are, move to a designated location or resettle at the follow-on assignment."

Kelly said volunteers are being taken on a first-come, first-served basis, based on their rank and MOS. Both enlisted soldiers and officers are being accepted.

Cartland stressed, however, that volunteers are signing up for at least six months of duty. The assignment is extendable for another six months.

"No soldier should volunteer if he or she needs to attend a military school," Cartland said. "It is not our intention to put anyone at a disadvantage, but since the mission is of such a short nature, we can't send a soldier there, bring him or her back to attend school and then return the soldier to the theater."

"However, soldiers can apply for military schools that commence sometime after their return," said Cartland.

Volunteers should not expect to use leave in the theater.

"While emergency leave is always an available option, I don't envision units being in the position to grant much (ordinary) leave," said Cartland.

Army Reserve Personnel Center officials in St. Louis, Mo., said volunteers can obtain more information by calling their unit.

NCO magazine needs support for 'Leadership,' issue in fall

Army News Service

WASHINGTON - The NCO Journal, a quarterly magazine for Army noncommissioned officers, is seeking photographs and articles supporting the theme of 'Leadership' for its October issue. Deadline for submissions is Aug. 2.

"Our most critical need is good color photography to support our leadership theme, plus action photos of NCOs going about the business of training, leading and mentoring their soldiers," said the journal's editor- in-chief, Master Sgt. Gil High.

Vertical color shots will be candidates for future covers of the journal. Writers are encouraged to talk to a journal staff member before sending their articles. This will help staff members plan the content and begin looking for photographic or artistic support for stories, High said.

High also encouraged writers and photographers to support future journal themes, which include 'The NCO in Combat' and 'Professional Development.'

Submissions can be mailed to: The NCO Journal, the United States Army Sergeants Major Academy, Fort Bliss, Texas 79918-1270.

SPECIAL MILITARY PROGRAM

With Grateful Appreciation General Motors Salutes The Men And Women Of Our Armed Forces, And Offers Them Something Special:

An Easier Way To Buy A New Car Or Truck.

Your Chevrolet, Pontiac, Oldsmobile, Buick, Cadillac and GMC Truck dealers have incentive plans already in place that make it easy to buy a new car or light truck.

But now through the end of the year, the divisions of GM are offering a Special Military Program to all active U.S. military personnel and reservists called to active duty during the Persian Gulf War or their spouses.

Here's how it works. You get three hundred dollars in down payment assistance, plus any additional down payment you make is matched up to five hundred dollars when you buy a new GM car or light truck and finance it through GMAC. That can mean as much as eight hundred dollars toward your purchase. Add that to existing incentives, and you can save even more. The Special Military Program is not available with the college graduate program, first-time buyer program or overseas vehicle purchase program. See your participating GM dealer for qualification details.

It's a small gesture on our part in partial exchange for the tremendous gesture each of you has made. And our way of expressing thanks for a job well done.

FYI

ASK THE JUDGE

By Steven Weir
Staff Judge Advocate's Office

Q.: I was watching television during one of the thunderstorms last week when my power went out. It came back on a couple of minutes late, but my TV would not work any more. Can I file a claim to have my TV repaired since I live in government quarters?

A. Claims that electrical or electronic devices were damaged by a power outage are not payable. A power outage unaccompanied by a power surge will not damage a properly designed device.

Claims can be paid when electrical devices are damaged by a power surge, if lightning has actually struck the quarters or objects outside the quarters, or if the power company records show that a particular residence or group of residences were subjected to a power surge of unusual intensity.

If your quarters have been hit by lightning, you should contact the Directorate of Engineering and Housing so that they can inspect the quarters and make a record of the incident.

Because the Fort Benning area is subjected to frequent thunderstorms, a claim cannot be paid unless the electrical equipment was protected by a surge protector and the lightning strike or power surge damaged the property despite the protector.

Make sure you do not use a surge protector on a refrigerator or freezer because the power will not come back on in appliances until the surge protector is reset, and your food might spoil.

Q. Last week a tree branch fell on my car causing some damage. Can I file a claim so I can get my care repaired?

A. Before any claim can be paid for damage to a vehicle on Fort Benning, the vehicle must be properly registered and insured. In addition, payment of a claim depends on the size of the tree branch that caused the damage.

Falling tree branches are a common occurrence during a storm, but it is not normal for the entire tree or a significant portion of the tree to fall. If a tree limb has fallen on your car you need to save the limb in order for your claim to be promptly and properly paid.

You should contact the trees around your quarters for branches and limbs which appear likely to fall during a storm and submit a work order to have them removed.

Teach children now to conserve energy

By Jennie McRae
Energy Branch

Habits and beliefs developed in a child's formative years produce attitudes that last for a lifetime. It is very important that our young people learn the facts about energy production and use, and that they understand the impact of energy conservation.

So, talk to the children, according to National Energy Office publication. Help them to understand that our energy comes from different sources: oil, natural gas, nuclear fission, coal, rushing water, wind and even from the sun. Energy sources such as solar (energy from the sun), hydropower (energy from rushing water) and wind do not run out, no matter how much is used. These sources of energy are called "renewable."

Most of the energy we use, however, comes from "fossil fuels" — oil, natural gas and coal. One theory holds that in prehistoric times, dinosaurs and plants died, fell to the ground and became buried in the earth. Over millions of years, heat and pressure changed this animal matter into pockets of oil and natural gas. The plant matter turned into coal. Because it took so long for the earth to form these fossil fuels they are considered "nonrenewable." We don't have millions of years to renew our fossil fuel supply; the amount we have now is all we're going to have.

There is a need to be careful about how much use these nonrenewable fuels — if we use all our nonrenewable fuel now, there won't be any to fuel our cars or factories years from now. The way we make our fuel supply last for the future is by conserving today.

We need to conserve these nonrenewable forms of energy because most of the world's oil is located outside of the United States. Because we have to by so much of our fuels from foreign countries, it can be very expensive.

Simple ways to save energy are turning off lights that aren't being used, turning off the TV, computer, and any other equipment when they have finished using it, keeping windows and doors closed when the heater or air conditioner is on.

Our commitment to energy conservation needs to be passed on to our children. It is important for us now and the generations to come. Tell the kids about it. Then, show them the way.

'Mother of all parties'

Victory Day Superfest is a welcome home celebration

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Fort Benning's welcome home party of the year is being planned for Saturday.

The Victory Day Superfest, which will take place at Gowdy Field, is being dubbed, "the mother of all parties."

The activities on post begin at 11:30 a.m. and will continue until 5 p.m. Then, at 7 p.m., the festivities continue at a Columbus Indians game at Golden Park in Columbus.

According to Brian Smith of the Directorate of Community Activities, this is the post's biggest event of the year.

Smith and commissary personnel have been working long hours on the event. He and Larry Bentley, the commissary officer, have coordinated to bring together a wide array of support from corporate sponsors and commissary vendors in providing everything from food to entertainment to door prizes.

"The quantity and quality of solicited corporate sponsor support and gifts and donations from commissary vendors has been overwhelming," Smith said.

Because of such an outpouring of support from the corporate community and commissary vendors, soldiers and family members will be able to enjoy this event free of charge, he said.

"Everything is free," he said. "The food and refreshments are free; first class musical entertainment will be provided; and there will be door prizes.

"A wide variety of food will be available including barbecue, hot dogs, fried fish, smoked sausage, chips, apple pies, colas, yogurt cones and more," he said. "The best part is everything is free."

The door prizes, donated by commissary vendors, include a 1991 Chevy S-10 truck donated by Lever Brothers, and 1991 Ford Festiva donated by Keebler and much more.

A cash prize of $500 will be given away by General Motors, a corporate sponsor.

"General Motors and Dixie Distributing/Miller Beer are sponsors of the event," Smith said. "Additional financial support and giveaways were made available by commissary vendors and include food and refreshments, washers, dryers, a Coleman pond boat and more."

Ticket holders must be present to win all door prizes, said Smith.

The freebies don't end there. Larry Pearson, a driver for the National Association for Stock Car Auto Racing, will be on hand with a NASCAR auto thanks to Kellogg's. Pearson will autograph and give away 500 hats and posters.

DUI laws to become stricter

By Jon R. Anderson
Bayonet staff writer

The legal blood alcohol level for conviction of drunken driving has been lowered from .10 to .08, says a recent revision of the Georgia Criminal and Traffic Code.

The revision of the law comes after the Georgia State legislature passed the bill in April, which puts the lowered requirement for driving under the influence into effect on July 1.

The bill also created a new class of DUI for minors, who will be considered legally intoxicated with a BAC of .06.

Current penalties will remain the same with first time offenders recieving a one years suspension of their drivers license and up to $1,000 in fines.

Military Police officals at Fort Benning noted that post driving priviliges are automatically suspended after conviction of DUI, with soldiers recieving a general letter of reprimand, as well.

Staff Sgt. Anthony Greer of the trafffic section of the Military Police said although post MPs will be observing the new Georgia law, there will be no stepped up activity to search out DUIs.

"We are always constantly on the look out for DUIs," said Greer, explaining, however, that on holidays such as the fourth of July, "we increase our efforts because more people are out there drinking."

The new Georgia state law also stipulates that all convicted DUIs will have their pictures published in the local newspaper. Military Police officals said there are no current plans for this to be done on post, "unless we are directed by the provost marshall or the commanding general to do so.

Department of Defense policeman Lt. Edward Bulat said of the new DUI limits that "people need to understand, where they may have been borderline before, they'll be legally intoxicated now and it's our obligation to enforce that law."

Bulat added a warning note to those soldiers returning from the Gulf War, explaining, because of the complete abstinence from alcohol required while stationed in Saudi Arabia, tolerence levels are probably "much lower."

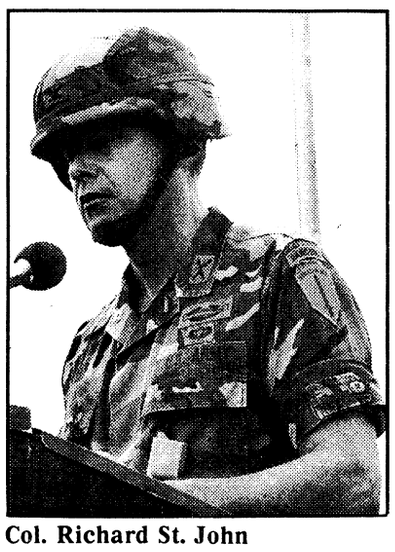
29th Inf. changes command

By Brian C. Sutton
Bayonet staff writer

"As good commanders go out, other good commanders come in," said Maj. Gen. Carmen Cavezza, post commander.



Cavezza spoke of the outgoing and incoming commanders of the 29th Infantry Regiment at that unit's change of command ceremony Tuesday.

Col. Richard L. St. John, outgoing commander for the 29th, broke tradition during the ceremony and literally applauded the troops of the 29th.

"Victories are won because of the efforts of many, not a few," said St. John. "The soldiers of the 29th played an important role in Desert Storm."

St. John, who relinquished command to Col. Gregory C. Camp, explained that the 29th had a varied role, doing everything from training infantrymen to training soldiers on the Bradley Fighting Vehicle to maintaining vehicles for the infantry center schools.

"I am certainly proud of them for the job they have done," said St. John.

Col. Richard St. John

St. John was commissioned an infantry officer in 1966 from the U.S. Military Academy. He was initially assigned to the 2nd Batallion, 506th Infantry (Airborne), 101st Airborne Division at Fort Campbell, Ky.

After deploying to Vietnam with the 101st, St. John attained many prestigious positions, such as chief of staff, 1st Infantry Division (Forward), U.S. Army Europe, that set the stage for his return to Fort Benning in September 1988 as the director of intelligence and security here until he assumed command of the 29th in May 1989.

St. John summed up his departure matter-of-factly.

"My chapter in the 29th is now over," said St. John. But I'll keep the memories."

Camp is also a graduate of the U.S. Military Academy, finishing in 1968 and commissioned an infantry officer.

He was assigned shortly after his commission as a mechanized infantry platoon leader with the 24th Infantry Division. He then served as a rifle platoon leader, reconaissance platoon leader and company commander with the 1st Cavalry Division in Vietnam.

Camp, too, has held important positions, such as the senior trainer for the mechanized infantry, brigade staff, and live fire training teams at the National Training Center and as a mathematics teacher at West Point.

"I'm running on emotion right now," said St. John as he prepares for his next assignment as chief, Initiative Group, U.S. Army Pacific.

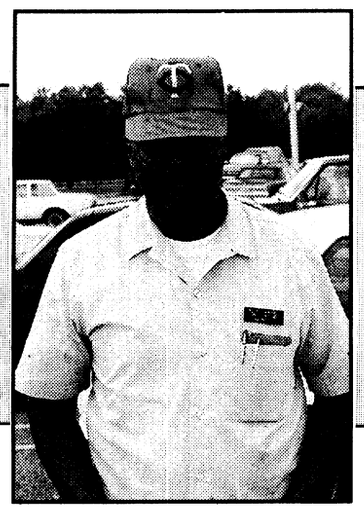
VARIOUS VOICES:

How do you avoid drinking and driving?

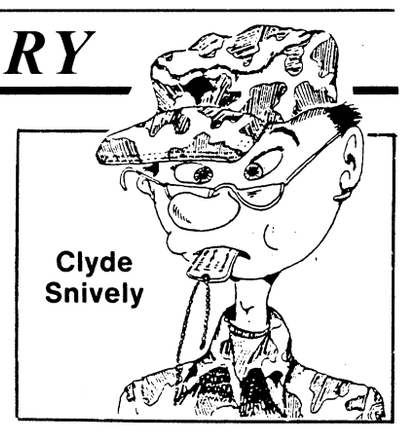


Sgt. Tony Lemont Wilson, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 3rd Brigade, 24th Infantry Division — "I would find a friend, or get a number of someone that I can call. If those two options don't work out, then I will get a designated driver."

Pfc. Charles P. Ayers, Company B, 1st Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment — "Usually before we go anywhere, we pick up someone who won't be drinking. Around the barracks. there are a lot of guys who won't be drinking anyway, so its usually not much of a problem."

Kim McNeily, family member — "I would have a designated driver or just call a taxi."

Willie J. Chappel, civilian employee — "Most of the time when I've had too much to drink, I just stay with the friend who I've been drinking with."



Tracy Bukszpan, family member — "I would just have someone else drive me home."

Snively: Don't abuse AER rights

By Clyde Snively
Bayonet columnist

COMMENTARY

This may seem unbelievable, but Army Emergency Relief, soldiers, college athletes and financial aid forms have something in common.

The one word answer is..."abuse."

College administrators, too set on landing a top athlete to help the college basketball or football team, are known to "rig" financial aid forms so an athlete can get more financial assistance for enrolling at Brand X College.

Soldiers, a bit down on their luck, have been known to hoodwink trusting first sergeants and company commanders, into signing a statement attesting to the soldier's need for a loan or grant from AER.

True, the soldier might need the loan to pay for his car repair bill in order to get to work, but what the soldier isn't telling his company commander is where all his income is going.

As my source, Vern told me the other day, "I knew a specialist who bought an $8,000 car, new furniture for his home, and then enrolled in college. About the time his payments came due, his framis broke and the mechanic quoted him $3,000 to get it fixed.

"So what'd he do. He went to his commander, said he couldn't get to work 'cuz his car was broke and he needed an AER loan for three big ones. Commander okayed the loan."

"Wow, really," I said.

"Yep," Vern said. "Know what I'da done?" he asked.

"What?" I asked.

"First I'da told him to get a job for his wife. Then I'd make him take all that fancy furniture back...why does a specialist need a mahogany dinning room table and shrunk...that'd help him to get his car fixed."

"Well if he can't get to work because his car won't run, how's his wife gonna do it?" I wanted to know.

"She can take the bus or call a cab," he said.

"If she can take the bus or call a cab, why can't the soldier. Or why can't his buddies give him a ride? That'd solve the problem too," I said.

"You're right, as I was saying, the guy didn't need the loan," Vern concluded, "but he got it anyway," he mumbled.

Admittedly, these situations are more rare than the college scams, at least we don't hear as much about them.

In fact, AER is pretty careful about who it doles the money out to, but everyone can be fooled once in a while. However, unless people on post kick in some more bucks, there may not be any money to borrow.

Soldiers needing money to feed their families when they have more month than dollars, will be out of luck, as will those needing funds to get home to visit a sick parent.

Last year, Fort Benning soldiers borrowed, or got grants worth about half a million dollars.

Yet Fort Benning's contribution to AER was less than $200,000.

This year, we're trying to raise $205,000 but we're nearly $50,000 short with just days to go.

Those of you who've yet to donate should do so immediately. And for my buddies who now realize that $1 is not pulling your fair share, you can up the ante. Just see your AER rep, or call Master Sgt. John S. Phelps at 545-2536.

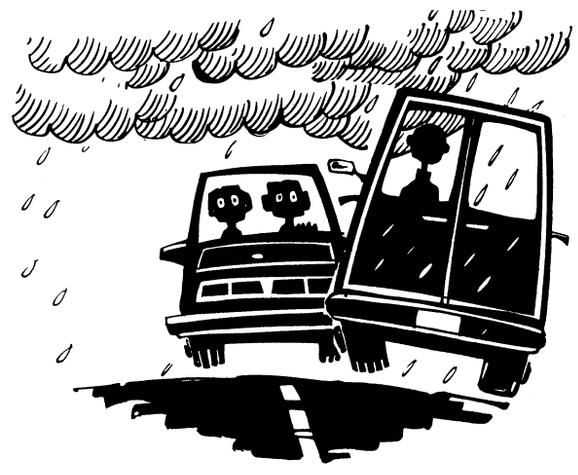
Take precautions, enjoy safe holiday



The Desert Storm victory makes this holiday even more special. However, returning soldiers are faced with another enemy. At least eight soldiers at other installations have been killed in traffic accidents since returning home.

This year Independence Day falls on a Thursday,followed by a training holiday. Many families will plan extended weekends ans travel great distances to be with relatives in a traditional renewal of family ties. Others may prefer to spend the holiday fishing,boating,swimming or enjoying other outdoor activities,suchas those planned here at Fort Benning.

We must all be alert to the fact that there are many hazards associated with our summertime holiday activities. The hazards which cause the most deaths during this period are traffic accidents and drowning. Ignoring good safety practice costs lives. Fasten seat belts when you are in a vehicle,take frequent rest breaks and always drive sober. Swim only in areas with lifeguards on duty; and , for boaters,wear personal flotation devices while in a boat.

have fun and enjoy a safe holiday.

Maj. Gen. Carmen J. Cavezza
Fort Benning commander

Safety seats save children's lives

Safety Office

Every year children die because of injuries received in motor-vehicle crashes. Many of these accidents could be avoided or be less severe if adults transporting youngsters would take the time to secure them in a child safety seat that is properly anchored to the vehicle.

Parents are required by state law to make their children safe from dreaded childhood diseases through immunization. They are also required by law to immunize them against a leading killer and crippler — the motor-vehicle crash. Immunization against the motor vehicle crash is in the form of a government-approved child safety seat which are often less costly than just a few tanks of gasoline. Children depend on adults to make them safe while riding in motor vehicles.

Children without the protection of a child safety seat become "flying missiles" during a crash. Even an adult's arms cannot hold back a child in a collision, and the weight of an adult can crush a youngster as they both are thrown against the interior of the vehicle. The very best protection for children, each and every time they ride in a vehicle, is a correctly used, approved child safety seat.

New projects boost morale in family housing

By Barbara J. Ray and James C. Rupp
Public Affairs NCOIC and Bayonet staff writer

Two projects now under construction at Fort Benning promise to improve family leisure opportunities on the post.

The projects are a recreation complex at Uchee Creek and a Youth Activities Outreach program/ Community Life center in the Davis Hill/ Bouton Heights area, according to Al Stewart, director of Community Activities. Both are Morale, Welfare and Recreation Fund projects.

"The Uchee Creek project includes building 60 campsites and 15 cabins," Stewart said. "In addition to the sites, he said a softball diamond and picnic pavilions are being built."

Actual construction at Uchee Creek began three to four weeks ago, but the the plans have been in the works for quite some time, according to Stewart.

"The actual concept started in 1987," Stewart said. "It took that long to get it designed, approved through the Congress, the money put together and all that; and, we're self-funding that out of Fort Benning dollars."

Stewart said he expects the Uchee Creek renovations to be completed by January.

Ground has also been broken for the building that will house a Youth Activities Outreach program/ Community Life center in the Davis Hill/Bouton Heights area and is expected to be completed by November.

Additional projects in the planning stages include a new junior enlisted club to replace the Hidden Door Club and a new 60-room guest house to be located near main post Youth Activities and the Infantry Museum, Stewart said. Construction on both projects is scheduled to begin by next summmer.

The funding for these projects comes from non-appropriated funds which are funds that have been earned by the post through such activities as the clubs and recreational areas.

The fund is run by a board of directors and chaired by Maj. Gen. Carmen J. Cavezza, post commanding general, Stewart said, which decides what renovations or new constructions are necessary around Fort Benning.

The board decides what the construction program will be.

AAFES projects also in works

By James C. Rupp
Bayonet staff writer

The Army-Air Force Exchange Service is also working on some renovations, according to Gene Wheeler, general manager for post exchange services.

Wheeler said that renovations will soon be completed on the main post shopette, which has been having work done for approximately a year. In this time the shoppette services have been at a temporary location on Ingersoll Street and will be moving back to its original location around August 15, Wheeler said.

Wheeler said that there is also a whole new building about to be constructed which will house both a shopette and a Class Six store on main post.

Water aerobics beat heat

By Brian C. Sutton
Bayonet staff writer

Some Fort Benning swimmers got a good workout Monday and Tuesday.

Dr. Jane Katz, author and instructor of swimming and physical fitness, visited Fort Benning to share her knowledge with soldiers and family members.

Maj. Gen. Carmen Cavezza, post commander, invited Katz to Fort Benning to continue the work that John O. Marsh, former secretary of the Army, began to integrate swimming into the Army way of life.

"General Cavezza wanted me to show different types of swimming training" to the post community, said Katz.

Katz explained that she does not feel out her element at a military installation.

"The discipline here is something I truly appreciate," said Katz. "It's something I try to have in my life."

Katz gave classes and practical exercise instruction to many members of the military and civilian community during her two-day stint.

"I feel everyone has been very receptive to my classes,"said Katz.

Katz explained that swimming is a good healing activity. Rather than have people at home in bed recovering from shin splints and stress fractures, get them into a pool for their exercise.

"People need to realize that swimming has very little impact, if any, on the body (little shock effect) and that it is great for a cardiovacular workout," said Katz

Helping swimmers realize their own difficlulties and learn to overcome them, in an easy self-paced way is the goal of Katz's latest book "Swim 30 Laps in 30 Days," published by Perigree/Putnam Publishing of New York.

Katz claimed that there is nothing holding anyone back from swimming, except fear and excuses. Katz has a saying for those would-be-a-swimmer-if-I-wasn't-scared swimmers:

"Swimming is for everyone. Water is very democratic. It's treats you fairly. All you have to do is overcome your fear and you will overcome your obstacles."

Soldier Show entertains Sand Hill basic trainees

By James C. Rupp
Bayonet staff writer

Basic trainees in the Sand Hill area got a change of pace from their usual routines June 21 and Saturday when the U.S. Army Soldier Show came to the Sand Hill Theatre.

The musical was making a stop at Fort Benning on its return trip from Panama and, most recently, Six Flags over Georgia.

The Soldier Show, a musical and dancing review, is a show that is manned almost entirely by soldiers from various posts. The show consists of 33 soldiers -- 15 are performers, nine are musicians and the final nine work as the technical crew.

The performers sang a variety of songs, ranging from the hip-hop dance beat of C & C Music Factory's "Gonna Make You Sweat" to the Blues Brother's "Soul Man." They even had a good old-fashioned country hoedown for country music fans.

The event which drew the biggest response from the already attentive crowd was the laser light show. The lights, reminiscent of the great light demonstration of Pink Floyd, pulsed and danced across the ceiling of the theatre to the beat of Poison's "Ride the Wind".

The finale of the evening was the striking rendition of "Voices That Care" which brought the crowd to its feet.

Ending the evening was Col. John J. Maher III, Ranger Training Brigade commander, with his greetings and thanks to the soldiers and performers for coming to Fort Benning.

"The musical entertainment will be live," Smith said, "and include the following artists: Keisha Jackson, a recording artist (daughter of Millie Jackson) and Mystique, an all female band.

"Also, the post sergeant major has selected three deserving soldiers who were involved in Desert Storm and have not seen their parents since returning," he said. Airline travel, hotel accommodations and rental cars will be provided for the soldiers' parents for the weekend of the Superfest.

This event is open to all active duty military and their family members. One ticket will admit one soldier or one soldier and his family.

Soldiers should see their unit first sergeant for tickets. The tickets are in three parts and will contain two stubs — one for the door prize registration at Gowdy Field and the other for admission to the Columbus Indians baseball game and the automobile giveaway there.

The day's events will continue at 7 p.m. at Golden Park for a game between the Columbus Indians and the Macon Braves. Tom's, Oscar Mayer and American Airlines are sponsoring the event at Golden Park.

Active duty soldiers will be admitted to the game free, but family members will have to pay for admission, Smith said. Also, food and refreshments at the game must be purchased.

The prize giveaways will continue at the game. A 1991 Ford Festiva, donated by Keebler Brothers, a commissary vendor, will be given away to a ticket holder present at the Columbus Indians game.

"Plus, the festivities don't end there," Smith said. "The Victory Week Clubfest will be July 3 at the Officers' Club, the NCO Club on Main Post and the Hidden Door Club.

Free food and special live musical entertainment will be provided. The club festivities are free to all eligible patrons."

Post club events

Directorate of Community Activities

The club system of Fort Benning will begin a weekend of celebration with a fantastic festival on Wednesday.

A dance party with a disc jockey playing the latest in dance music will start at 7 p.m. in the ballroom.

Magic 98 and WCGQ radio stations will rotate between clubs while doing a live broadcast from each facility. They will be giving away plenty of prizes to participants.

Rape crisis team offers post victims hope

By Jon R. Anderson
Bayonet staff writer

It is, perhaps, every woman's worst nightmare.

To be brutalized sexually; to be humiliated and forced to have intercourse with a man who uses sex as a weapon. To be raped.

Volunteers from the Fort Benning Rape Crisis Team know this firsthand and according to Cynthia Tuggle, team coordinator, are there to help with the immediate coping process in any way they can.

"The rape crisis team is one of the ways we're trying to humanize the system of caring," said Lt. Col. Timothy Davis.

"Because of the bureaucracy inherent to our system we have the potential for revictimizing the victim," continued Davis, explaining that post rape medical treatment can be as traumatic, at times, as the rape itself.

Usually, explained Tuggle, the volunteer will be notified as soon as the rape is reported and typically will meet the victim at the hospital to provide comfort, care, and assistance.

"The volunteer tries to explain what ever emotions the victim is feeling are normal and helps guide the victim through the medical and legal procedures," said Tuggle.

Summer Harms, one of the five active volunteers, simplifies her job this say: "What it all amounts to is being a warm fuzzy for the victim to hold onto being there for her and her alone."

The volunteers also provide an intermediate step and direction to professional counseling that is geared to helping the victim readjust to life and living.

The important thing, says Tuggle, is that the victim not feel in any way responsible for the rape.

"Nothing that a woman does," she explains, "is worthy of rape. A woman could walk down Victory Drive completely naked, and still nobody has a right to touch her."

To help prevent rape, the crisis team suggests the following:

Don't look vulnerable. Look confident even if you're not.

At night, try to travel with others.

Enroll in a self defense course.

Be assertive and react with anger instead of fear when being confronted.

Always be aware of your surroundings.

Anyone interested in joining the rape crisis volunteer team should be aware of the commitment involved, said Tuggle, explaining that 10 hours of training is required just to qualify.

For more information, contact Tuggle at Community Health Services, 545-1661 or 545-3212.

75th Ranger Regt. activities mark change of command

75th Ranger Regiment

More than 1,800 Rangers will participate in the 75th Ranger Regiment's change of command and Exercise Celebrity Strike, Sunday through Tuesday.

Exercise Celebrity Strike starts with a mass tactical parachute jump Sunday on Fort Benning's Fryar Field with 1,400 rangers jumping from 11 C-141 Starlifters and 7 C-130 Hercules at 800 feet.

The exercise will begin with the high-altitude, low-opening parachute insertion of the Ranger Reconnaissance Detachment at 5:15 p.m. Sunday. These soldiers will control the U.S. Air Force A-10 Warthogs providing air cover securing the drop zone.

The mass drop follows the simulated suppressive-fire support mission by the Air Force when aircraft carrying the 1st Battalion's Rangers from Hunter Army Airfield near Savannah, the 2nd Battalion's from Fort Lewis, Wash., and the 3rd Battalion and Regimental Headquarters from Fort Benning, rendezvous over the drop zone.

Following the simulated suppressive fire support mission at 5:40 p.m., the parachute assault will start at 6 p.m.

SJA's claims division changes office hours

Office of the Staff Judge Advocate

The Claims Division, Office of the Staff Judge Advocate, located in Building 5, will be open Monday, Tuesday, Thursday and Friday to process claims from 8 a.m. until 4:30 p.m.

Walk in claims will be received between 8 and 11 a.m. Appointments are needed between 12:30 and 1:15 p.m.

Department of Defense Form 1840 or 1840R may still be submitted on Wednesdays.

For more information, call Steve Weir at 545-2285.

IRS mails wrong form

The Internal Revenue Service has discovered that they recently mailed the IRS Form 1040-ES to many of the soldiers and family members that wrote the words "Desert Shield" or "Desert Storm" on their 1990 federal tax forms, according to officials from the Office of the Staff Judge Advocate.

The Form 1040-ES is used to pay estimated tax payments to the IRS, in advance, throughout the tax year. Such payments may be necessary if sufficient amounts of tax are not being withheld from your pay or your income-generating investments.

The IRS has indicated the mass mailing was a mistake and that many of the individuals receiving the form are not obligated to pay estimated tax payments, officials said.

Persons receiving the form who have questions regarding their liability to make estimated tax payments may contact the Legal Assistance Office at 545-3281 or 545-3282.

Crime prevention topic of briefings

The Provost Marshal's Crime Prevention Section will conduct "one on one" crime prevention briefings for major commands crime prevention officers and non-commissioned officers (i.e., 36th Engineer Group, 34th Medical Battalion, etc.) and directorates through July 19, 1991.

The briefings will provide insight into crime problems of respective command, and discussions will center around things that can be done to reduce crime.

To schedule an appointment, contact the Crime Prevention Office at 545-1146 ir 545-7154.

Civilian Personnel offers retirement counseling

The Fort Benning retirement counselor is available to brief small groups of employees upon request from directors or supervisors. Normally, the sessions will last from 30 minutes to one hour.

Topics include: types of retirement — civil service retirement system or federal employees retirement system, eligibility for retirement, lump sum distribution, processing time.

Activities interested in having these sessions should contact Bettie Mabry of the Management-Employee Relations Division of the Directorate of Civilian Personnel. The telephone number is 545-7320.

Rifle team win regional match, prepare for summer victory

By Charlene L. LaDay-Hill
U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit

From Texas to Tennessee, the Army Service Rifle Team collected numerous victories this spring. The team's final spring match was the Smokey Mountain Regionals held May 4 and 5 in Oakridge, Tenn.

Nineteen U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit personnel were present for the competition. In addition, 50 civilians and the Marine Corps Service Rifle Team also participated.

"This event gave us a chance to check out our summer competition," said Sgt. 1st Class Richard Wyckstandt, coach. "We'll be competing against the Marines in interservice at Quantico, Va., and in the nationals at Camp Perry, Ohio."

The overall winner of the individual competition is Spc. Lance Hopper with an aggregate of 793 - 24X.

Winning the 200-yard slow fire was Pfc. Christopher Hatcher shooting a 198 - 5X.

Maj. Thomas Baker won the 600-yard slow fire with a 200 - 11X.

In the 1,000-yard any rifle was won by Sgt. 1st Class John Chubb with 197 - 6X.

The USAMU team also won the four-man team event with an aggregate of 1,961 - 71X. The team members were Hopper, Pfc. Grant L. Singley, Sgt. Vincent Greiner, Pvt. 1 Christopher Irish, and team coach Wyckstandt.

"Overall this has been a terrific season for us. We're definitely going to be ready for interservice and the nationals," said Wyckstandt.

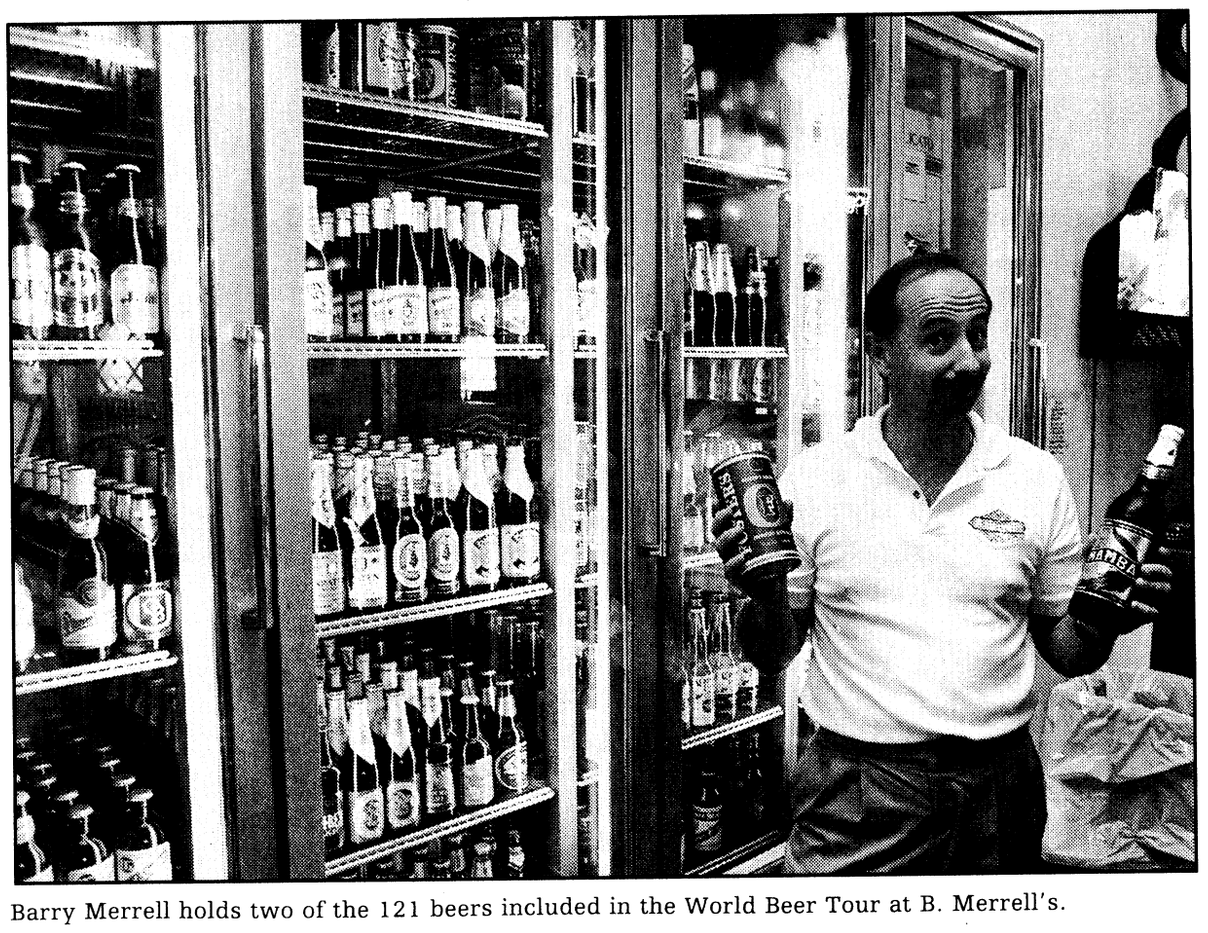
You'll love B. Merrell's!

Take off that apron, put on your most comfortable clothes, pack the kids in the car (if you have kids) and go eat at one of the hottest new places in town — Eat, Drink and B. Merrell's on Manchester Expressway.

Located in what used to be Po' Folks, B. Merrell's is just not "a restaurant." It's a lively, high-energy restaurant with delicious food, good music and conversation, free balloons for the kids, televisions galore and fun servers hired because of their personalities. It's like... a party!

Owner Barry Merrell believes a restaurant should have personality. "A restaurant should be entertaining — not just a place to get food and drink," he said.

B. Merrell's is for everybody — the bank president, the truck driver, senior citizens, singles and families...anybody who wants to eat well and have a good time.



B. Merrell's is known for its chicken wings (platters of these can be ordered for your own parties) and rotisserie chicken, which roasts in a glass case right at the front door. The menu includes all sorts of appetizers, sandwiches, burgers, soups, salads and other tasty dishes, and the prices are unbelievably low. You'll definitely get more for you dollar here.

For those who enjoy cold beer, B. Merrell's is the place to go. There are a whoppin' 121 different brews from all over the world. Join the World Beer Tour, and see how many of the 121 you can try. If you make it to 25, 50, 75 or all 121 (not at one time, of course), there are prizes in store for you. The names of the tour finishers will enter the "Hall of Foam," and their names will be on a plaque at B. Merrell's. Each will also receive an exclusive B. Merrell's polo shirt.

Customers who have their pictures taken in B. Merrell's T-shirts and caps while on vacation will have the pictures hung on the wall.

The restaurant is open from 11 a.m. to 12 a.m. Sunday through Thursday and from 11 a.m. to 2 a.m. Friday and Saturday. Master Card, Visa, American Express and, of course, cash are accepted.

Eating out can sometimes be a boring routine, but you can change all that at B. Merrell's, where your pleasure and entertainment counts. ■

Barry Merrell holds two of the 121 beers included in the World Beer Tour at B. Merrell's.

Army says: 'Shape up or ship out'

Army News Service

The message coming from the Army now is simple: If you're substandard, you're gone.

The Army announced this month that several personnel policies will be tightened up and that substandard soldiers will find it more difficult to remain in the service. Along with the policy changes, the Army is also making it easier for commanders to separate substandard soldiers earlier.

For example, previously commanders had the option of separating soldiers who repeatedly failed the Army Physical Fitness Test and who "displayed no significant or continuing progress toward meeting standards." APFTs will be processed for separation or barred from re-enlisting. Period.

Personnel officials said the policy changes "are necessary to... maintain a quality force as we build down the Army." By 1995, the Army will shrink from its current level of about 744,000 soldiers to 535,000 soldiers.

About 12,500 soldiers have their records flagged each year for being overweight, according to officials from the Office of the Deputy Chief of Staff for Personnel. Another 9,600 are flagged for failing the annual APFT.

"As we begin focusing on reshaping the Army, it is essential that we protect our quality soldiers by distinguishing them from those who do not meet established standards," said Lt. Gen. William Reno in a May 28 message to field commanders. He said a separate message would be released soon "to address some modifications to the re-enlistment program... retention control and selective early retirement boards."

Reno said effective dates for the changes are dependant on how quickly Army regulations can be updated and sent to the field. He said all of the policies will be in effect by September.

The following policy changes were announced this month.

●LOCAL BAR TO RE-ENLISTMENT:

--Old policy: Commanders are required to review a bar at least every six months. Commanders will initiate separation proceedings after the the second six-month review, unless the bar is recommended for removal.

–New policy: Commanders are required to review a bar every three months. Initiation of separation proceedings is required if the bar is still in place after the second three-month review.

OVERWEIGHT:

--Old policy: When no medical reason exists, soldiers who do not make satisfactory progress in the weight control program after six months will be considered for separation.

-- New policy: When no medical reason exists, mandatory bar to re-enlistment or initiation of separation proceedings is required for soldiers who do not make satisfactory progress in the weight control program after six months.

JROTC challenges tomorrow's leaders

By Jon R. Anderson
Bayonet staff writer

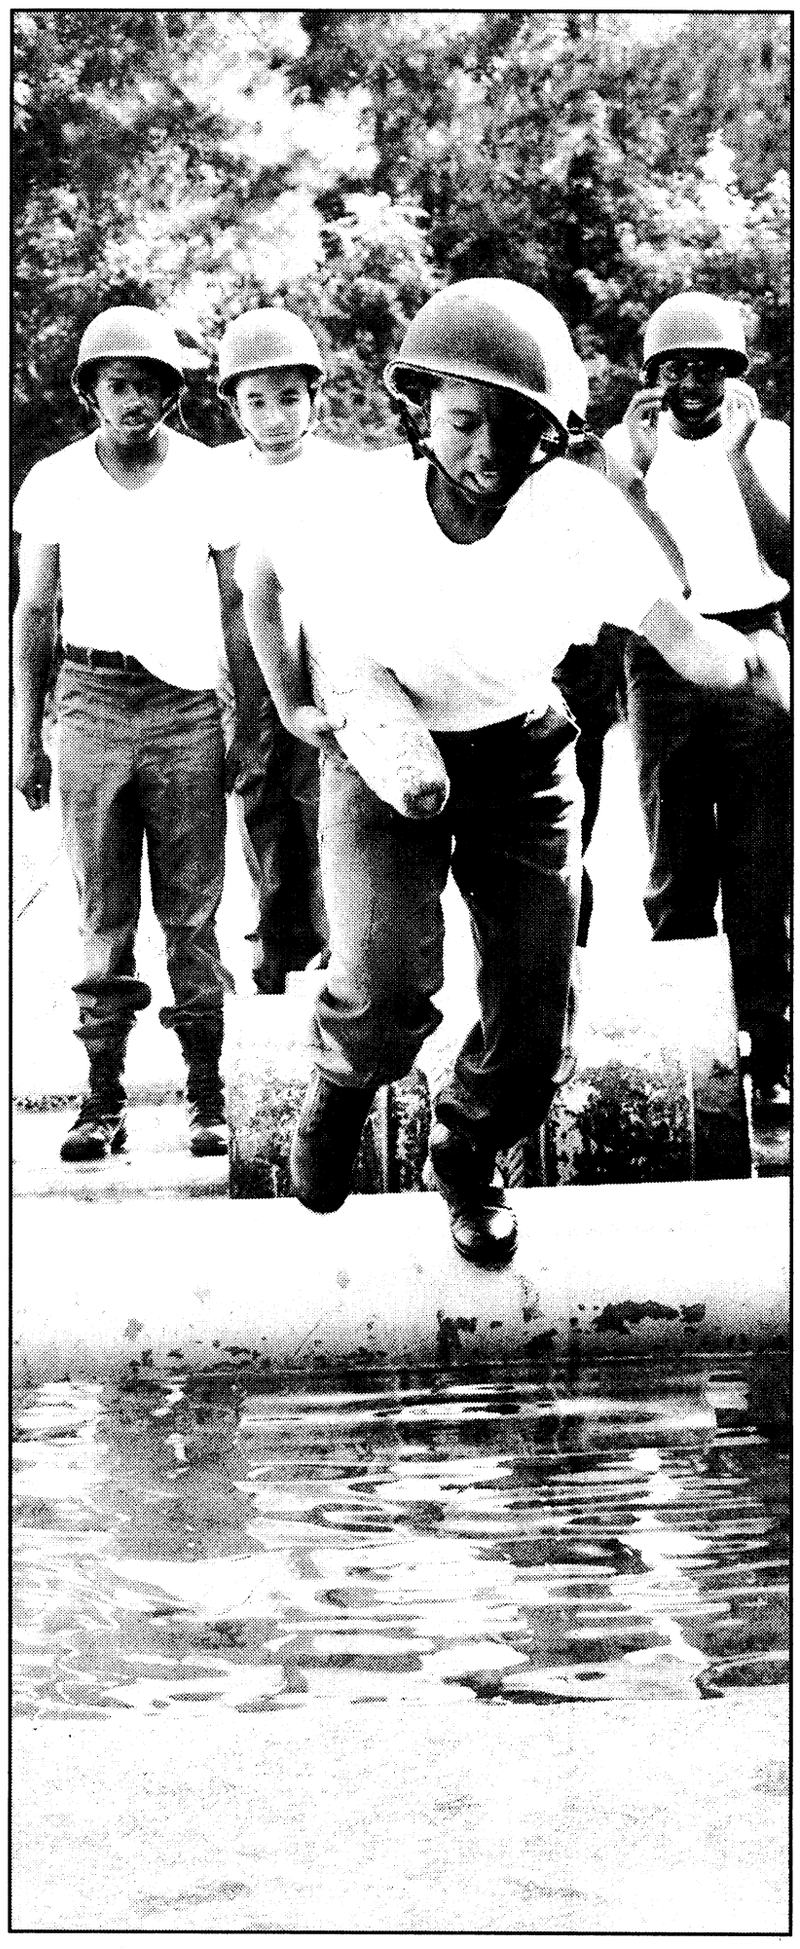
Junior Reserve Officers Training Corps cadets from Georgia, Alabama, and Florida attended a one-week summer leadership training camp at Fort Benning recently.

The camp, hosted by the Atlanta Public School System, was designed to "challenge the kids to challenge themselves," said JROTC instructor Capt. Robert Akers.

This was accomplished, explained Akers, by putting the 189 cadets in a structured environment and pushing them mentally and physically to accomplish a variety of tasks.

These tasks included daily inspections of their barracks in the Harmony Church area, competing at a confidence course and at the Leadership Reaction Course, learning land navigation and basic marksmanship techniques with the M-16/A2 rifle.

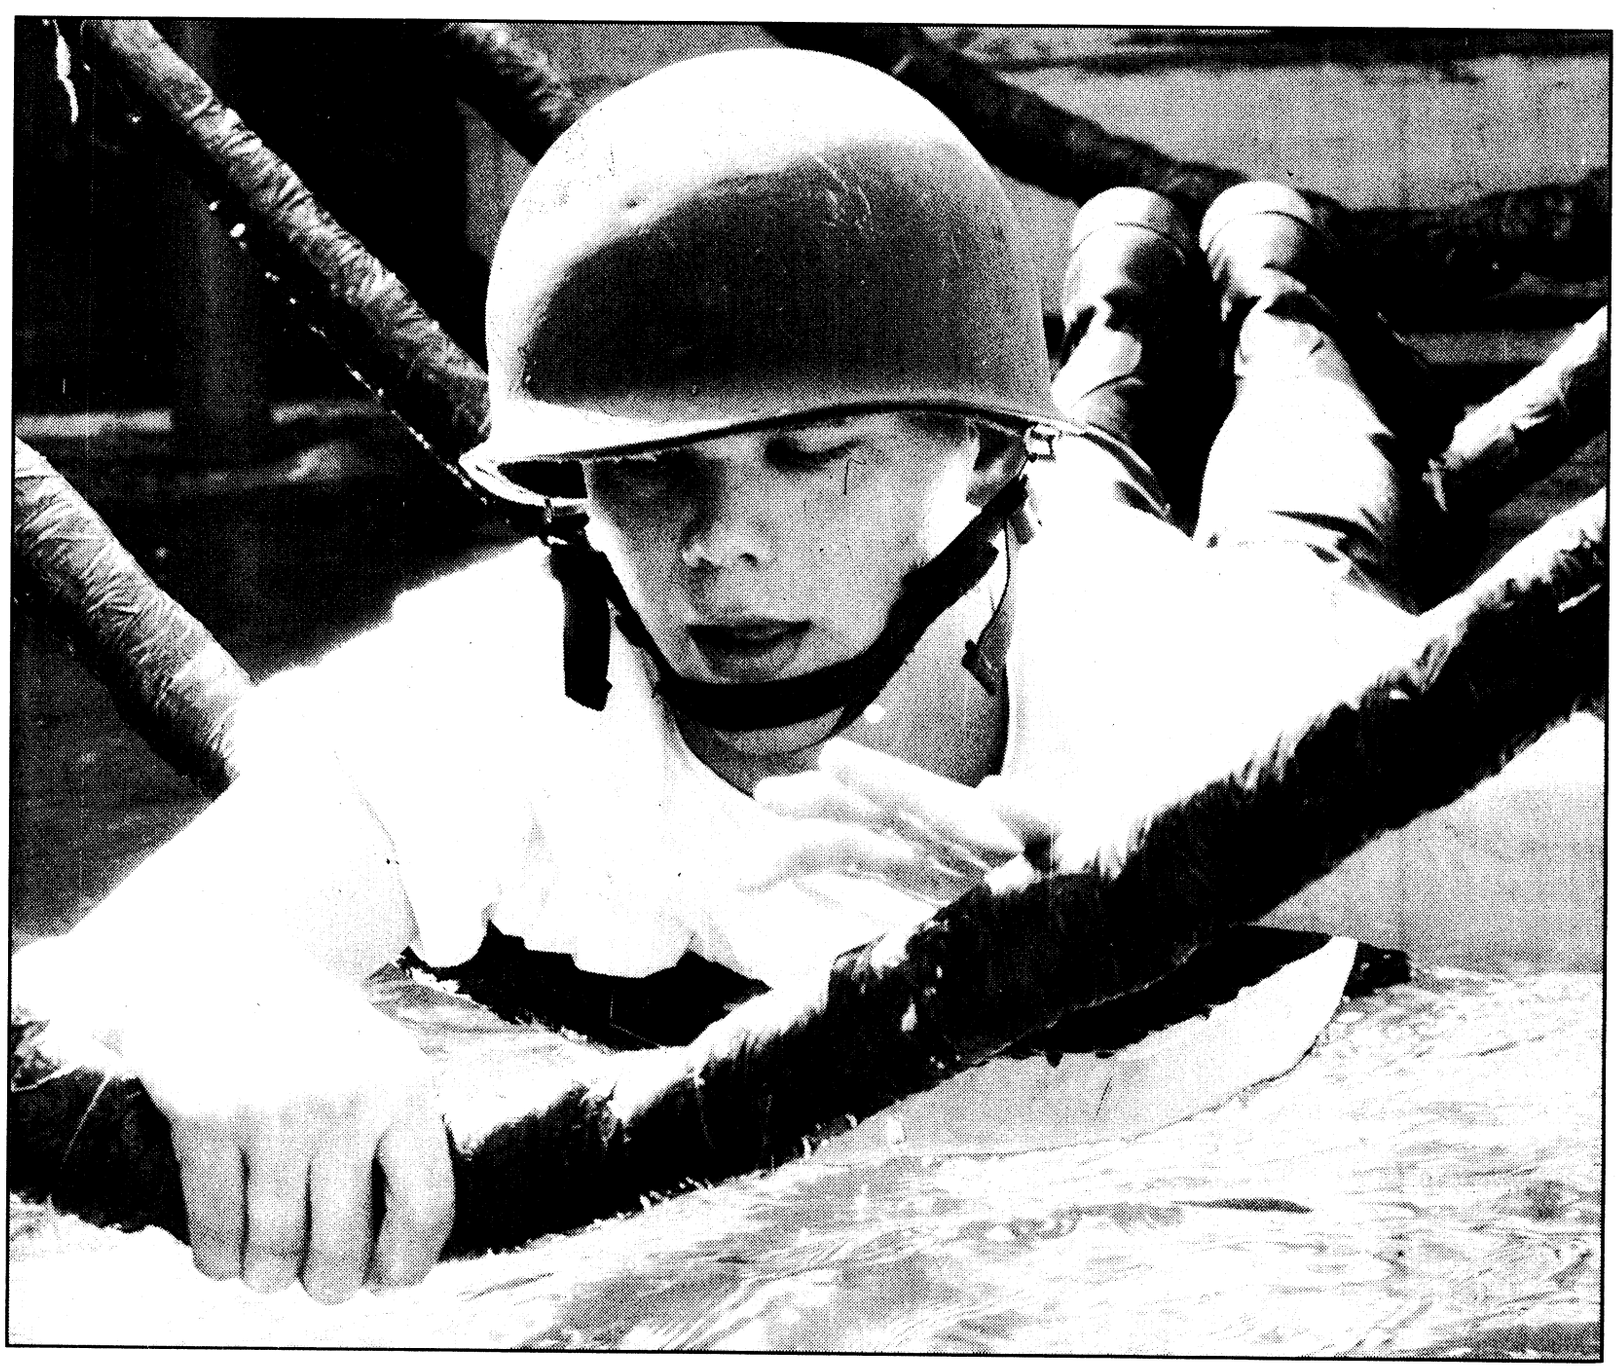
The cadets also had an opportunity to watch various demonstrations such as Airborne in Action and Rangers in Action, as well as visit the National Infantry museum.



Although camp officals admit as much as 25 percent of those actively involved in JROTC go on to actual military service, the progam is not intended to be a recruitment service for the military.

"JROTC's motto is to help young people become better Americans," said Akers, explaining how the major thrust of the progam tries to teach the value of teamwork and enhance their competitive spirit."

One cadet attending the camp said this was the first time she had ever been away from home and she was learning a lot about "how to deal with people and work together as a team."



Curry Kenya, from Prichard, Ala., said having to do things like the Leadership Reaction Course "really makes you think as a team," adding with a smile that the confidence course made everybody sore as a team.

According to Akers, the JROTC program is unique in high school cirriculum in its ability to teach leadership through the use of a military stucture of dicipline and emphasis on the American history and value system.

There's no stopping 5-year-old David McFarland Jr. when he's on the track.

Little champ tears up roads, wins trophies

By Jon R. Anderson
Bayonet staff writer

At 5 years old, David McFarland is like most kids his age. He is inquistive, playful, likes bugging his younger sister, loves tacos, and really gets into riding his motorcycle.

Well, he's like kids his age in most respects anyway.

Already, David is a riding veteran of 1½ years, having started on his dad's four wheeler by helping him drive.

At 4 years old, explains his father, David had his own 50cc motorcycle and was doing laps around the flattrack.

"My brother, Jim, was the one really responsible for getting him on a bike by himself," says David's dad, David Sr., a staff sergeant and drill instructor at Sand Hill.

From there, describes the elder David, there was no stopping his son when it came to riding.

"When he first started I was scared to death," says David Jr.'s mom, Linda. "I don't worry that much anymore, though, because I know that he knows what he's doing."

And that he must, especially after seeing David's award trophies.

Recently, David has been riding the local motocross circuit and has 23 trophies to attest to his ability. That is 23 top placings out of 26 competitions.

A proud father, David Sr., describes his son's races as rough at times, especially considering the average age in his class is about 7 or 8.

"Starting at such a young age, I can see David eventually going on to a national title," says McFarland, who says David will be allowed to ride for as long as he wants to keep up with it.

"When he says he wants to stop, he'll stop – I'm not going to force him to do anything," McFarland explains.

Speaking of a wide and growing interest in motocross riding, McFarland hopes to see Fort Benning open a track on post.

Currently no facilities are available on Fort Benning for off-track motorcyle riders.

Post aviation units celebrate safety in skies

Aviation Division, DPTM

The skies over Fort Benning were quiet May 23 as the aviation community observed Safety Awareness Day. Participating in the activities were Aviation Division, Directorate of Personnel, Training and Mobilization, 145th Medical Detachment (Helicopter Ambulance), 498th Medical Company (Air Ambulance), and Aviation Support Facility 17, 6th Battalion, 159th Aviation Battalion, and Shop 4, Directorate of Logistics.

Fort Benning's aviation units have attained impressive safety statistics: Aviation Division, DPTM has flown more than 20 years and 92,000 hours without a major mishap; Shop 4, DOL has not had a major mishap in over 11 years; the 145th Medical Detachment (HA) has never had a major mishap in its 21-year history; the 498th Medical Company (AA) flew 1,163 hours in Southwest Asia; 673 were combat hours without an aviation or ground mishap.

During his opening remarks, Lt. Col. Will Etzler, Fort Benning Aviation Officer, stated that the aviation community has long held an annual safety awareness day to focus in on safety and the integral part it plays in everything we do.

In recent years, however, the senior Army leadership recognized what a good thing the aviation branch started, and began mandating a safety awareness day throughout the Army.

The day included safety-award presentations by Maj. Gen. Carmen J. Cavezza, and training in safety-related topics. Special guests were Patrolman Lori L. Zieverink from the Columbus Police Department Driving Under the Influence Task Force and Maj. Thomas L. Hinkle from the U.S. Army Safety Center.

Zieverink spoke about the task force's efforts to get drunk drivers off the road and what a person stopped for DUI can expect to happen. Chief Warrant Officer Ted Larsn from Aviation Division, DPTM served as a "suspect" during the demonstrations.

Hinkle gave a briefing concerning the accidents which occurred in Southwest Asia during Operations Desert Shield and Desert Storm. He emphasized throughout his briefing that command involvement is the key to accident prevention. The afternoon session included training in cardiopulmonary resuscitation, fire-fighting techniques, aviation life-support equipment, and hazardous-material handling.

Twelve aviators received awards from Cavezza for accident-free flying hours and Detachment 10, 5th Weather Squadron, received the Military Airlift Command Ground Safety Achievement Award for fiscal 1990. Only 10 awards are presented annually throughout the Military Airlift Command.

Picnics: may have more trouble than ants

By Rudi Williams
American Forces Information Service

Summer is picnic time, backyard cookout time, camping-out time and just plain brown-bagging-in-the-park time. It's also food poisoning time if food isn't handled properly.

More than 2 million Americans reportedly suffer from food poisoning every year, mostly between May and October, according to researchers at the Centers for Disease Control in Atlanta. The number of unreported cases can only be guessed. Food-borne diseases are most threatening to the young, the old and people with other illnesses.

For years, mayonnaise has been called a food-poisoning villain, but it's a bad rap, said Dr. (Lt. Col.) Gerie Elias, a preventive medicine officer with the Air Force Surgeon General's Office in Washington, D.C.

"Commercial mayonnaise you buy in the store or commissary is normally safe because it has vinegar in it," Elias explained. "That acid content slows bacterial growth. But be careful with homemade mayonnaise if it's made without lemon juice or vinegar. Generally what happens, say with a potato salad, is the cook's hands are infected with bacteria from handling raw meat or poultry, and the germs are transmitted while cutting vegetables for the salad. If the potato salad sits at room temperature awhile, you run into a problem."

"The Centers for Disease Control are also concerned about the quality of eggs, that some are contaminated with salmonella," said Elias' co-worker, Dr. (Lt. Col.) Jim Wright. "We don't recommend people making homemade mayonnaise until the egg problem is solved.

"If you're taking hard-boiled eggs or deviled eggs on a picnic, make sure they're cooked well," Wright continued. "At breakfast, stay away from sunny-side up. If an egg is cooked until the yoke is starting to thicken, it'll be all right. Ninety percent of the time you're safe, but it's that 10 percent that's the problem."

"A lot of people get sick and stay home, then go back to work when they feel better. That's one reason food poisoning is underreported," said Elias. "There's a host of food-borne illnesses you can get — staph, botulism, salmonella, clostridium, campylobacter — depending on what you eat and how the food was handled. Normally the problem is the cooks contaminate the food. If they keep food refrigerated, even if it's contaminated, there may not be a problem. Refrigeration keeps illness-causing organism from growing."

Wright said food handlers can prevent food poisoning by not exposing cooked and uncooked foods to juices from raw meats and poultry, by practicing good personal hygiene and by ensuring that foods such as chicken, turkey, Cornish hens, shellfish and fish are completely cooked before serving.

Picknickers should keep foods like potato and macaroni salad, coleslaw, all cooked and uncooked meats, chicken, deviled eggs and custard and cream pies in a well-insulated, ice-packed cooler, he added.

"Keep cold foods cold and hot foods hot. To prevent bacteria from growing, don't leave any food sitting in the sun or at room temperature too long," Elias warned.

Hints to keep barbecues safe, fun

By Rudi Williams
American Forces Information Service

"What's this I hear about grilled and flame-boiled foods causing cancer? Is anything safe to eat any more?" a caller asked home economists at the Department of Agriculture's Meat and Poultry Hot Line in Washington, D.C.

Answer: "It does seem we're being cautioned about a lot of foods these days. Usually, though, 'moderation' is the watchword. That's the case with grilled foods."

Bessie Berry, a hot line supervisor, said substances in the fat of meat may cause cancer if eaten in large quantities — but most people don't generally eat large amounts of fatty meat.

Preliminary studies by American, European and Japanese scientists indicate possible increased cancer risks from smoke caused by fat dripping on hot coals during barbecuing and the charring that occurs from flame or gas grilling. A National Cancer Institute study, for instance, showed any cooking method can create complex hydrocarbon compounds in or on meat that are not present naturally, and that may increase cancer risk.

Scientists also discovered another class of possible cancer-causing chemicals, called heterocyclic aromatic amines, are created within muscle meats during most types of high-temperature cooking — frying, broiling and barbecuing. Only negligible amounts are produced during microwaving, stewing, boiling and poaching.

Partially cooking meats in a microwave before completing the cooking by other methods also reduces the level of potentially harmful chemicals. Levels are even lower if juices are poured off before further cooking. Foods cooked a long time by any method — well-done instead of medium — will also form slightly more of the chemicals, according to the report.

Berry said concerned persons can reduce their exposure to suspected carcinogens by:

- Varying cooking methods;
- Eating beef cooked medium instead of well-done;
- Refraining from making gravy from meat drippings;
- Trimming fat from meat before barbecuing;
- Ringing hot coals under the grill and centering meat atop the grill to reduce direct cooking heat and smoke from dripping fat;
- Reducing grilling time by parboiling, microwaving or partially baking meats (but immediately barbecuing the meat to reduce food-borne germs, refrigerating what cannot be eaten immediately and later gently reheating on the grill);
- Avoiding heavily charcoaled foods or removing charred portions;
- Raising the grill to reduce cooking heat; and
- Cleaning the grill after every use.

CHAPLAIN'S NOTES

Our neighbor's blessings — our downfall?

By Chaplain Gary K. Sexton
USAIC Chaplains Office

Gray scars of dead trees stand out against the otherwise gorgeous Bavarian landscape. These hideous spots bear witness to the corrosive effects of acid rain upon the creation. It will take years for these blemishes to be erased with stately new growth. But we must wait many years for complete healing. Perhaps another generation will enjoy the scenery without the interruption of death and decay.

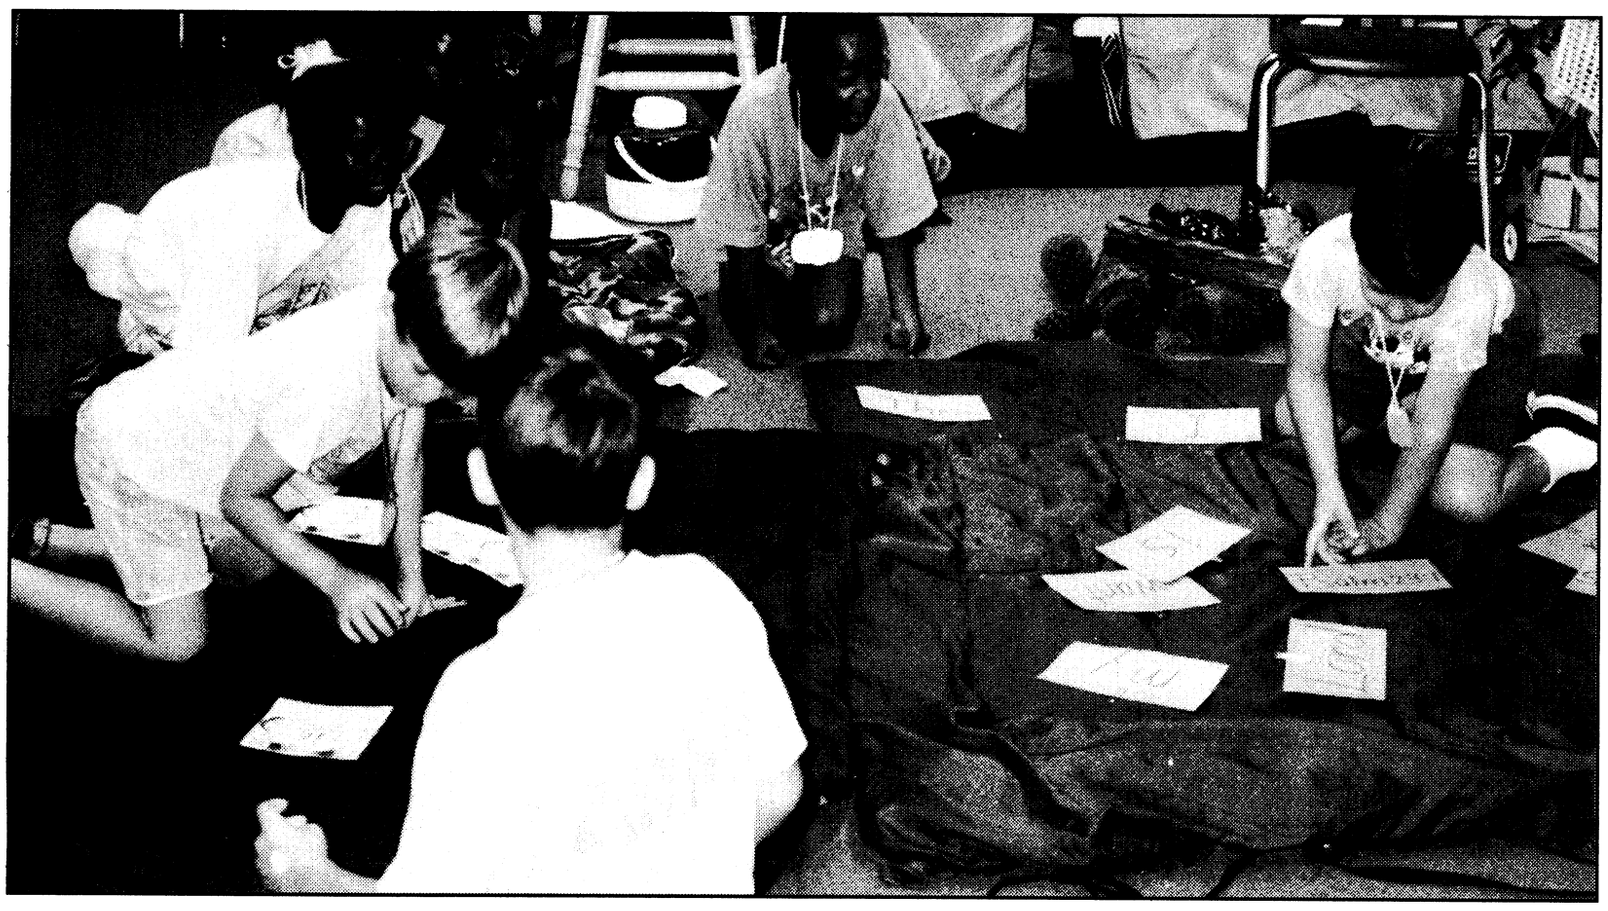
There is a far more serious erosion which takes place in the human spirit through coveting our neighbors' blessings. Like acid a discontented spirit eats away at the joy of our lives. No one is exempt from the seeping influence of envying our neighbor.

Don't we find ourselves miserable with cravings for things which are simply out of our reach? As humans we stake our happiness and fulfillment on those things which can not truly fill the God-shaped vacuum in our lives.

It is ironic that as citizens of a materially-blessed nation, we are also the most experienced at the art of practical atheism. It is not so much that we deny God with our mouths but that we live our daily existence seeking our ultimate happiness in anything but his grace and mercy.

Our consumerism is both our blessing and our curse. Why is it that with the material advantages we enjoy precious little true peace of mind in our marriages, careers, and family life?

Our lives take on a sulkiness and resentful flavor when we see our friends and colleagues prosper where we have not. We live with our eyes in their wallets, or garages, or staring at their right uniform sleeve or over their left pocket. We mutter behind polite smiles things like, "If only I have one of those . . ."



It is reasonable to expect these kinds of feelings and rivalries to intensify in an increasingly competitive and shrinking Army.

Selfless service may fall victim to selfish ambition if we do not identify an eternal basis for significance in our lives. Only God can be personally for us a source of security and significance.

We short-circuit jealously and bitterness when we see that God never gives us what we truly deserve. His Son is a gift to an ungrateful race. It is through the indwelling presence of God's Holy Spirit by faith that we able regard our neighbor in sincere love and celebrate God's blessing in his life.

When his soul revealing word searches our hearts we are able to let him transform our begrudging thoughts and actions into the means to rejoice with our neighbor's gain. Then we will know what Paul meant when he said: "I have learned in whatever state I am, to be content." (Philippians 4:11)

Post Bible school teaches children to do all things

Gabriele Sonnenberg

Vacation Bible School students take part in a "shepard scramble."

By Gabriele Sonnenberg
USAIC Chaplains Office

Vacation Bible School opened its doors at Faith Middle School to 523 attendees June 17.

The children learned about Jesus — and seemed to have had a good time doing it. The theme of the Bible study was Phillipians 4:13 "I can do all things through Christ, who strengthens me."

The program would not have been such a success without the efforts of many volunteers — mothers, fathers, teachers, chaplains, chaplains assistance, students and many others.

Kathy Henderson, co-director, explained, "The preparation for the VBS started in March."

Henderson is a first-time co-director, but she enjoys being at the school.

"The teachers and volunteers were recruited through the chaplains and the Protestant Women of the Chapel," Henderson continued.

"Many of my neighbors, mostly teen-agers, are volunteering," she said.

The volunteers gave so much of themselves, but were also rewarded by the smiling faces of the children.

For setting up each class, extensive preparations had to be done, according to a volunteer. The volunteers decorated the rooms; some classrooms had tents, some a campfire and others sleeping bags.

On the second day of VBS, the children discussed Psalm 23:1, "The Lord is My Shepherd; I shall not want." The children of one class were dressed as sheep and the teacher was dressed as a shepherd. Others played the "shepherd scramble," trying to fit the pieces of Psalm 23:1 together.

The children had the opportunity to explore possibilities, enjoy new friends, fun songs, great crafts, and a lot more.

ASK THE JUDGE

By Rick Parker
Staff Judge Advocate's Office

At the Legal Assistance Office, one of the more important things we do is practice preventive law; that is, we try to give you advice and information which will stop legal problems from occurring in the first place.

With summer having arrived, the Fourth of July on its way, and most of our troops back from the Middle East, it seems appropriate to write on a subject of great importance rather than taking a question. The subject is driving under the influence.

Everyone should know by now that driving a motor vehicle while under the influence of alcohol or drugs is against the law, and, that these days, it is considered to be a very serious offense. This is not surprising considering the number of injuries and deaths each year from automobile accidents where at least one driver had been drinking.

Over the past few years, the DUI laws in all states have been getting harsher. Georgia is no exception, and it is Georgia law which is enforced on this installation as well as in Columbus.

As it stands right now, you are DUI in this state when either your blood alcohol level is .12; you are under the influence of alcohol to the extent that you are a less safe driver; you are under the influence of any drug to a degree that you are incapable of driving safely; or you are under the combined influence of alcohol and any drug to a degree that you are incapable of driving safely.

When a motorist is stopped by the police because officials suspect DUI, the police will usually ask the motorist to complete certain field sobriety tests, followed by a request that the motorist submit to a chemical test to determine blood alcohol content.

The field sobriety tests are tests of a driver's coordination and judgment, and can show that the driver is "less safe." The chemical test can be either a test of the blood (usually drawn at the hospital), breath or urine, and the choice of test is up to the police officer.

If you comply with the officer's request, you then have the right to an independent test of your own choosing. If you do not comply with the request, your refusal to take the officer's test can be used in evidence against you, and you no longer have the right to the independent test.

If the chemical test shows a .12 or above, there is no doubt that you will be charged with DUI. Under the state law, this is what we call a per se violation; that is, regardless of whether you feel drunk or impaired, or not, if you have a .12 BAC, you have violated the law.

Under the state law, at .10 or above, it is presumed that you are a less safe driver. For .09 and below, under present state law, you can still be charged with DUI if the officer feels that you are a less safe driver, but the evidence is not quite as strong. All of these figures on BAC given will change Tuesday.

Beginning Tuesday, a new, tougher DUI law goes into effect in Georgia. On and after that date, a BAC of .10 is an automatic DUI. Again, this s regardless of whether you feel drunk or not. You could be stone cold sober and have perfect coordination, but if you have a .10 BAC, you are still DUI.

A second change is that you will be presumed to be DUI with a BAC of .08. The practice effect of these changes is that you don't have to drink as much as you used to if you want to get into trouble.

If you are under the age of 18, a .06 BAC gets you an automatic DUI. On and after Tuesday, third-time offenders get to have their names, addresses and photographs published.

You may have seen that catchy television advertisement that the city of Columbus runs on DUI. The ad talks about the nice little visit you get to the police station, the mug shots, the fingerprinting, the bond, the fines, the attorney's fees, the increased insurance premiums, and the like. The ad is quite accurate: by the time you add up the bond, fine, fees, and insurance premiums, you are into well over a thousand dollars in additional expenses, and this is for a first-time offense.

You should also consider the possible effect a DUI may have on your driver's license. Each state has its own laws on this subject, and these laws are also getting tougher. There are quite a number of states that have provision for a mandatory suspension of your license even for the first offense.

Military personnel are subject to a number of additional adverse consequences. Just being charged with DUI will result in a General Letter of Reprimand, suspension of driving privileges on the installation, and referral to the Alcohol and Drug Abuse Prevention and Control Program.

Conviction of DUI can have an adverse effect on chances for promotion, security clearances and career advancement. It could result in separation from the service.

The DUI laws are getting tougher and tougher as time goes on. The cost is higher and the prosecution of the offense has been made easier.

If you are arrested and charged with DUI, you should seek legal counsel well in advance of the day of court. At the Legal Assistance Office, we can give advice on this subject, but we cannot and will not represent you in court — you will have to hire a private attorney. Of course, the best advice we can give you now is that you don't drive after you have been drinking.

If you have a question about this, or any other legal problem, call the Legal Assistance Office at 545-3281/3282 for an appointment.

Tips for safe summer eating

By American Forces Information Service

In the kitchen

- Cleanliness is essential
- Wash hands, the work area and all utensils before preparing food.
- Marinate foods in the refrigerator, not on the counter.
- Thaw frozen goods in the refrigerator, a microwave or oven, but not at room temperature on a counter.

Menu planning

- Plan to take only the amount of food you'll use.
- With the proper cooler and ice, most foods are safe for short periods.
- Salads with store-bought mayonnaise are safe if kept cold.
- Avoid creamy or custardy foods.
- If a cooker is not used, take fruits, vegetables, hard cheese, canned or dried meats or fish, dry cereal, bread, peanut butter, crackers.

Packing it up

- Start with cold food — pack right from the refrigerator.
- Always use an insulated cooler.
- Include a cold source in the cooler — ice, ice packs, frozen ades, or juices, frozen foods such as hamburgers and ribs or cold fruit.
- Take along disposable washcloths.
- Plan to keep hot foods hot with a thermos or insulated container.

On the road

- Don't put the cooler in the trunk.
- Keep the cooler in the shade at the picnic.
- Keep the cooler lid on, avoid repeated openings
- Replenish the ice as needed.

Heat and eat

- Keep food cold until ready to cook on the grill.
- Cook food completely at the picnic site, no partial or precooking.
- Cook thoroughly — meat and poultry should not be pink, juices should run clear, and fish should flake with a fork.
- Use a fresh plate for serving cooked food.
- Be careful that raw meat juices don't touch other food.

Come and get it

- In hot weather, food should never sit out more than an hour.
- Serve smaller portions so unneeded food stays in the cooler as long as possible.
- Keep the cooler closed; remove and replace food quickly.

Repacking

- Leftovers? If there is still ice in the cooler when you get home and the food didn't sit out at the picnic, the food is OK to serve.
- When in doubt, throw it out.

Other questions on summer food safety: Call the Agriculture Department's Meat and Poultry Hot Line at (800) 535-4555, Monday through Friday, 10 a.m. to 4 p.m.

Post celebrates party of year

Victory Day Superfest draws several thousand people

By James C. Rupp
Bayonet staff writer

The Victory Day Superfest at Gowdy Field and Golden Park Saturday drew several thousand soldiers and their family members.

According to Mike Waksmonski, deputy commissary officer, approximately 18,000 people attended.

The free "mother of all parties" began at 11:30 a.m. and ended at 5 p.m. at Gowdy Field, only to begin again at 7 p.m. at the home of the Columbus Indians in downtown Columbus.

Brian Smith, of the Directorate of Community Activities' Marketing Office, said the event was to honor soldiers who participated in Operation Desert Storm.

"The event was a celebration of our victory in Southwest Asia and the corresponding token of appreciation from the community and national corporations for soldiers and family members," Smith said.

"The event was absolutely free," he said. "This was due to upport from national sponsors such as General Motors and Miller Beer and the tremendous outpouring of support facilitated by the Fort Benning Commissary from commissary vendors."

Smith and Larry Bentley of the Fort Benning Commissary coordinated with commercial sponsors to provide just about everything for the event, including food, entertainment and door prizes.

The highlight of the day was the awarding of the door prizes. Staff Sgt. Larry Beverly, Troop D, 4th Cavalry, 3rd Brigade, 24th Infantry Division, won a 1991 Chevrolet S-10 pickup truck donated by Lever Brothers. Staff Sgt. Santos Martinez, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, School of the Americas, won a 1991 Ford Festiva donated by Keebler Company.

Other door prizes donated by commissary vendors included washers, dryers, a dishwasher, a food processor and a Coleman pond boat.

Entertainment included Keisha Jackson (daughter of Millie Jackson) and an all-female band called Mystique.

When the festivities ended at Gowdy Field, people traveled to Golden Park where everyone was treated to a baseball game between Columbus' own Indians and the Macon Braves.

The party continued Wednesday during the Victory Week Clubfest at the post Officers' Club, NCO Club and the Hidden Door Club.

Recruiters shoot advertising photos at Fort Benning

Ads will feature soldiers training

USAIC Public Affairs Office

The U.S. Army Recruiting Command shot a pictorial project at Fort Benning June 24 to 28 with a Madison Avenue advertising agency.

Photographers from Young & Rubicam took close-ups of four or five candidate models of soldiers performing various jobs wearing the proper uniform and equipment for the activity in which they were engaged.

The Recruiting Command will produce six different recruiting booklets with the photographs. One cover (front and back) will be a panoramic shot of soldiers rappelling at Camp Merrill at Dahlonega.

Other photos were taken at the Infantry Training Center, 4th Ranger Training Battalion, the Commissary, Custer Terrace pool, Infantry Hall gym and Fryar Drop Zone.

Sullivan succeeds Vuono

Army welcomes new chief of staff

By Veda J. Lamar-Garth
Military District of Washington

WASHINGTON — Hundreds of soldiers and civilians gathered outside the Pentagon July 25 to welcome Gen. Gordon R. Sullivan as the 32nd Army chief of staff.

"The next four years will be a period characterized by change, both at home and abroad," said Sullivan. "The environment in which the Army operates is undergoing fundamental transformation (and) as a result, the Army, too, must change.

"Over the next several years our challenge is to accommodate change while preserving the essence of the great Army we have today."

Army Secretary Michael P.W. Stone, who hosted the welcoming ceremony, said accommodating that change effectively will be a major challenge for Sullivan. Stone called today's Army a "well-oiled machine," but one that is in need of more than routine maintenance.

"We are still coming together as a cohesive unit," he said. "We need a skilled caretaker. General Sullivan has the personal and professional credentials to meet the challenges of the Army."

Sullivan, who most recently served as the Army vice chief of staff, succeeds Gen. Carl E. Vuono. Vuono retired June 21.

A Boston native, Sullivan is a graduate of Norwich University and holds a master's in political science.

He is a graduate of the U.S. Army Armor School, the Command and General Staff College and the Army War College.

His awards include the Distinguished Service Medal, the Defense Superior Service Medal, the Legion of Merit, the Purple Heart and the Combat Infantryman Badge.

During his welcoming ceremony, Sullivan called today's Army "the product of years of dedication, thought, planning and just plain hard work."

"We are built on a solid foundation, we have a history of which we can all be proud," he said. "Our responsibility now is to maintain the momentum that has brought us to this point."

Photo of soldier, baby inspires AAFES women's history poster

By Tom Wilkinson
34rd Brigade, 24th Infantry Division

A picture is worth a thousand words.

That's what AAFES officials believe about their poster for Women's History Month.

The poster depicts Spc. Hollie Vallance, a medic in Company B, 324th Support Battalion (formerly 197th Support Battalion), saying goodbye to her 7-week-old daughter as she deployed to Southwest Asia.

The photo of Vallance kissing her daughter goodbye was published in newspapers and magazines worldwide.

Allen Horne

An artist's black and white drawing of this photo appears on AAFES' Women's History Month poster.

This photograph perfectly fit the Department of Defense theme for Women's History Month held in March. The theme was "Nurturing Tradition, Fostering Change," said AAFES officials.

"The poster was distributed and displayed at AAFES locations worldwide during March 1991," said Wheeler.

"I think it's great," said Vallance. "It's great that people think I'm an example for women in the military; I think it says a lot. Women should be able to do what I've done — to go and defend our country. That's my job!"

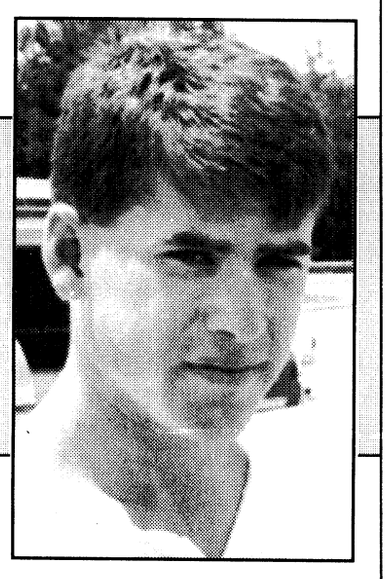
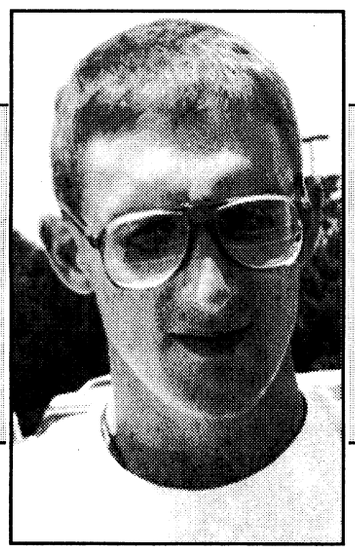
VARIOUS VOICES:

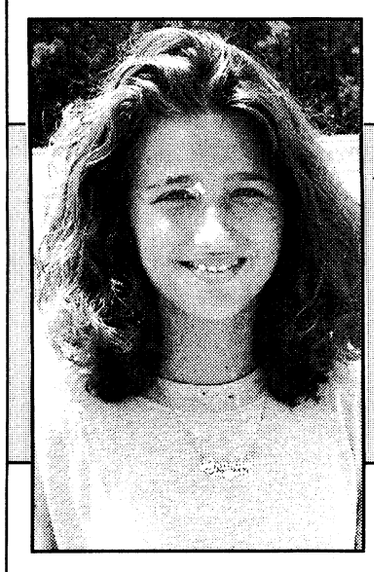


What's the last good movie you saw and why would you recommend it to others?



Sabrina Posey, family member — "'Robin Hood.' It had lot of excitement and adventure. It was just an all-around good movie."

Sgt. 1st Class Rolando Phillips, School of the Americas — "I liked the 'Five Heartbeats.' There was no killing and no violence. It was a film you could take anybody to see. You could take your kids to see it and not have to worry."



Spc. Markle Janner, Company D, 1st Battalion, 18th Infantry Regiment — "'Robin Hood.' It was a really good movie. The Robin Hood that I grew up with and the one shown in the film were pretty close."

Pfc. Curtis Walker, Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment — "I don't go to movies much, but I did enjoy 'Misery.' It had a lot of suspense and some good surprises."

Capt. Richard Druckman, U.S. Army Dental Activity — "I liked 'The Little Mermaid.' It was wholesome entertainment for the whole family."

Brandy Edwards, family member — "The last good movie I saw was 'Sleeping with the Enemy.' It was nice to see her escape from the situation she was in."

Spouses battle in housing areas

By Clyde Snively
Bayonet columnist

Gangs in neighborhoods are getting a lot of play in the media.

And well they should. Having a neighborhood gang is like having gangrene in the big toe. If not treated, it spreads, infecting the leg, then the rest of the body until the person dies.

But gangs aren't the only thing that can poison a neighborhood.

In one community I visited the other day, the old Hatfield-McCoy feud seems to have been reborn.

Two neighbor ladies are nearly at knife point. They've made it their business to run the other one off Fort Benning.

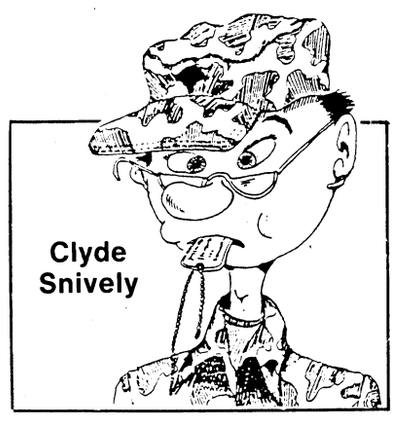
Their husbands could probably spend weeks together sharing a foxhole, but these two gals think living within 200 feet of one another is too close, even though walls separate them.

Clara is known in the neighborhood as the fastest dial on the block. She doesn't need to ask anyone the number for 911. She walks toward the phone and the instrument immediately dials the Military Police.

Why? Well, probably because Petunia's son, little Johnnie broke one of her pansies. Yeah, those same flowers you get for free from the self-help folks.

Charlie, whom I was visiting, and who lives between the two women, says the feud goes on "24, seven."

"They never let up," she said. "It's day and night, seven days a week. They're always at one another's throat."



The hatred the women have for one another spreads to the children. The other day Petunia's two children got involved in a shoving contest with Clara's kid.

And while witnesses say Clara's kid started it, all three got dragged down to police headquarters and "processed." One of the boys was "sentenced" to 20 hours of community service while the alleged instigator was let off.

"So, while Clara's calling the MPs with every other breath she draws, what's Petunia doing?" I asked.

"Well besides plotting how to do her neighbor in, she's gathering statements to prove that she's not the one causing all the trouble, that it's really Clara. Because of those two women, the entire community is in an uproar."

"I thought that's why you had these community NCOs and mayors and stuff to handle these problems," I said.

"Too far out of hand now," she said.

"So what's going to happen? Are they going to grab their six-shooters and have a shootout at high noon?" I asked.

"It might come to that, although Petunia's husband's chain of command is getting involved now. I heard his commander said one more incident and they're outta there."

"Wow," I said. "You mean even though it's apparent the other woman's at fault."

"Looks that way," she said. "He doesn't want his career messed up just because his wife and another wife can't stay away from one another."

"That's too bad," I said. Hard to believe our soldiers can go to Saudi, spend seven to eight months, eating sand, kicking the tar out Iraq, then have to come back to spouses who are conducting their own little war."

"And that's what it is exactly. That one woman, Clara, thinks she owns the place. And she'll fight anyone who comes near HER yard, HER sidewalk, HER house."

"You don't have to yell," I said, "I'm not hard of hearing." And I'm not blind either. I could see it was time to go. Who knows, I mighta parked too close to Clara's curb and she might at this very instant be calling the cops to haul my car into jail.

And I knew the car wasn't going to pull no community service.

President Bush sends holiday greetings

As we celebrate the 215th anniversary of our nation's independence, we recall the courage and resolve of those patriots who first pledged their lives to its defense — from the statesmen in Philadelphia who boldly declared that "all men are created equal" to the patriots and soldiers who braved the heat of battle from Lexington and Concord to Yorktown.

Each of you serves in the noble tradition that was begun by these heroes.

As we recall the resounding victory that you and our coalition partners achieved in the Persian Gulf earlier this year, our hearts are filled with solemn pride and with heartfelt appreciation.

Your enthusiasm, your dedication and your skill are unequalled in the world.

Today, as you stand duty here at home and around the globe, all Americans gratefully acknowledge the sacrifices that you have made and continue to make for the sake of our country. As your commander in chief, I salute you and wish you and your families a safe and joyous holiday.

George Bush
president

Cheney thanks nation's soldiers

Two hundred and fifteen years ago, America declared its independence, then had to back up that declaration with courage, strength and sacrifice.

Today, you who serve this country in uniform preserve the precious legacy of freedom our forefathers fought to secure.

A few months ago, our resolve as a nation was tested during Operation Desert Storm.

The victory we achieved reflected your readiness, your determination and your professionalism. The prestige of the American military has never been higher, thanks to the discipline and courage you demonstrated.

As we celebrate the day on which our nation was born, I want to thank each of you for maintaining and protecting our republic.

Your devotion to duty and your commitment to the cause of freedom have set a standard of excellence to which all Americans can aspire.

I wish each of you and your families a safe and happy Independence Day.

MPs ask for assistance with Kelley Hill thefts

By James C. Rupp
Bayonet staff writer

Due to the rash of thefts from personally-owned vehicles on post, Military Police Investigations is asking people on post to help them deal with the problem.

By helping out the Military Police, everybody can help out themselves, said officials from the Military Police Activity.

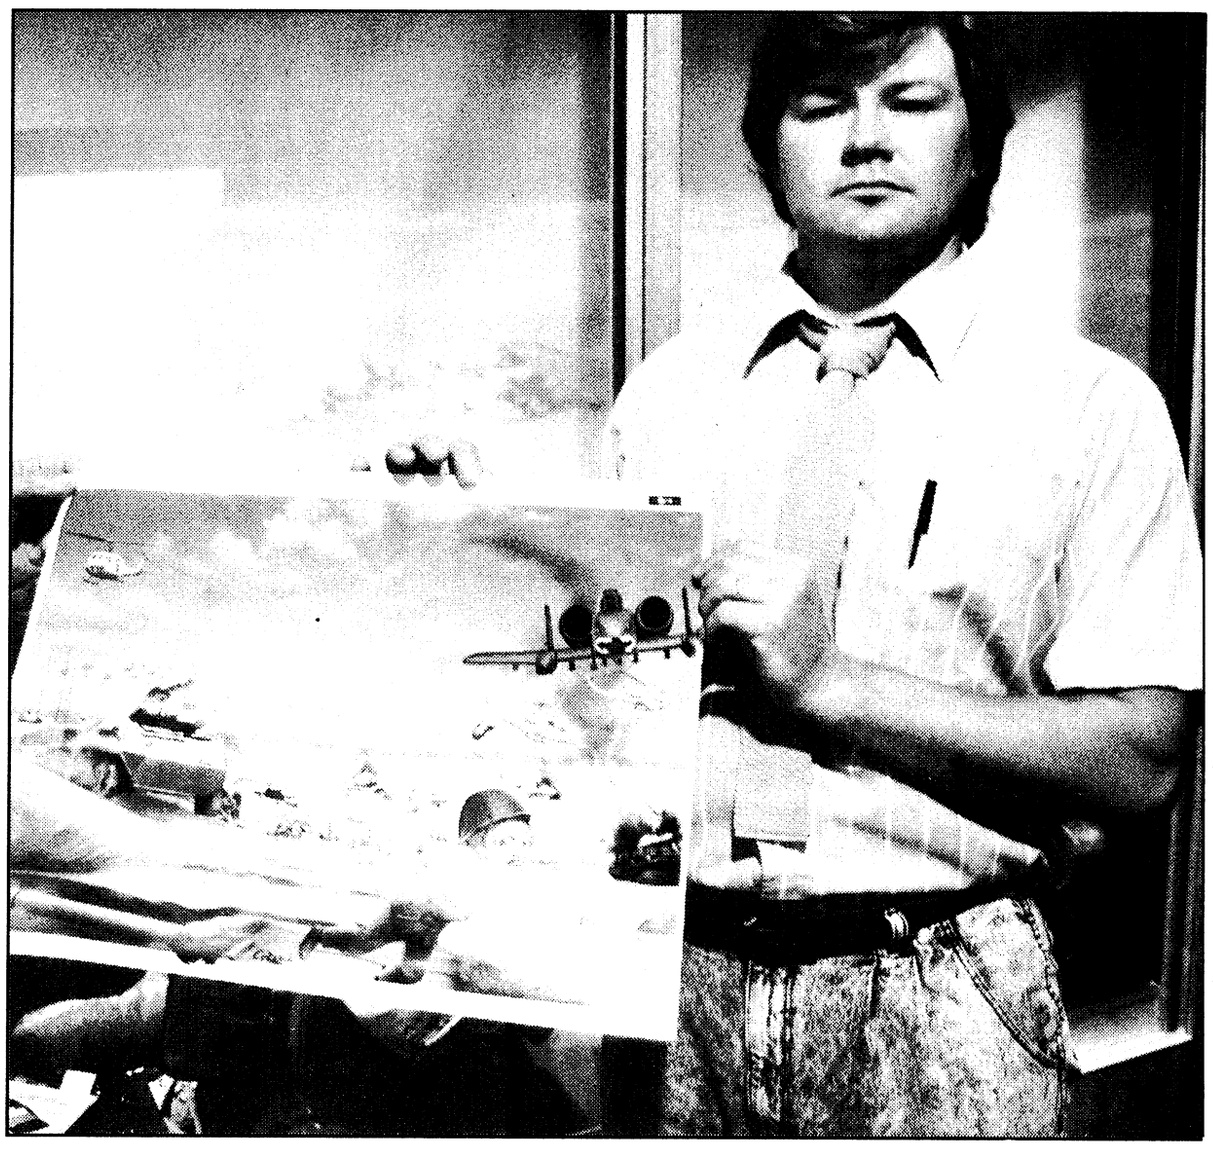
According to investigators Tony Taylor and Melvin Vernon, vehicles all over post, and particularly in the Kelley Hill barracks parking lots and housing areas, have been broken into and robbed.

Ordinarily, they said, the perpetrators steal stereo equipment from the cars, including receivers, equalizers and speakers.

Also, glove boxes are rifled through and trunk locks punched out in what the investigators said they imagined to be attempts to find weapons or other valuable items.

On the average, 30 cars a week are burglarized, they said. Vernon said that figure is a "conservative estimate."

The biggest problem for the MPs right now is their lack of manpower to patrol all of the trouble spots.



"We need help from the unit commanders," Taylor said. "We cannot cover all the territory we need to effectively. Hopefully some of the company commanders will set up guard shifts or some other form of control to keep the problem in hand."

The investigators mentioned some things that people on post can do to protect themselves.

- Do not advertise valuables in vehicle (i.e., stickers pronouncing brand of stereo)
- Do not leave high value items in car.
- Park in well-lit areas.
- When being away from car for extended period, have neighbor or friend keep an eye on your personally-owned vehicle.
- Keep track of serial numbers; this aids in tracing items should they ever be stolen.
- Most importantly, keep an eye out for those around you. Watch your buddy and have him watch you.

"Kelley Hill is a big area; there are people walking around at all hours of the day and night," Taylor said. "Somebody has seen these perpetrators. They might not know them, but I'm sure they've seen them in a formation or mess hall."

"All we need is an anonymous phone call. We'll ask for the name, but we don't need it. What we really need is the information, and we could stop all of this."

Local computer program helps, benefits post community members

By Alyanna B. Clay-Heard
Bayonet staff writer

A program that may prove beneficial to Fort Benning soldiers and their family members was recently expanded at a ribbon-cutting ceremony at the Columbus Chamber of Commerce.

The Total Systems Quick Start Training for Computer Programmers was expanded to be included in the Columbus College curriculum. The program could prove invaluable to military family members seeking employment, as well as soldiers preparing to leave the military and enter the civilian work force, said Pat Sneed, former Army Community Service Family Members Employment Assistance Program manager, now a transition services specialist in the Army Career and Alumni Program.

"In the past, Quick Start has only be used to train workers in blue-collar businesses, but now the program is expanding to include white-collar professions as well," said Sneed.

Quick Start is also incorporating with Columbus College to provide computer training for its students, and the Quick Start class is worth 40 credit hours, said Sneed.

The Columbus Chamber of Commerce and Fort Benning's ACS FMEAP got together to develop a training plan and recruit students. Total Systems and the Chamber of Commerce wanted to utilize the untapped resource of military family members as students and see if the program was ready for train students for possible careers in computer programming, said Sneed.

More than 1,200 people were tested for the program by Total Systems. Of that number, 396 were interviewed and showed they had the ability to work well with computers, said Sneed.

Artist donates posters to NIM

By Brian C. Sutton
Bayonet staff writer

"I wanted to do something patriotic," said Walt Curlee, and artist and, formerly, an active-duty Marine.

Something patriotic is exactly what he did.

Curlee is the artist of several posters, picturing scenes from Operation Desert Shield and Operation Desert Storm, donated to Fort Benning's National Infantry Museum.

The posters, including one original piece and several limited edition selections, will be displayed as part of the Operation Desert Storm display at the museum.

Curlee explained what inspired him was the hard work and dedication the allied forces showed during the war.

Curlee said he not only drew these pieces for the civilian audience, he drew them for the individual soldier as well.

"I wanted these to be something the troops would appreciate — something to remember," said Curlee. "I very much would like these to be something the troops will hang on their wall and display proudly."

Some soldiers, and civilians alike, have already purchased these posters near other installations in the U.S. enough have been purchased on the market to raise $400 for Fort Benning; and, in Arizona, $800 have been raised thus far for the Arizona National Guard.

All profits raised for these installations have been given to help families of Desert Storm troops.

Rules for post yard sales

Community Life Office

It is the time of year when many soldiers at Fort Benning wish to dispose of personal property they no longer need or use.

Those soldiers, like their civilian counterparts, would like to make a little money in the process.

A yard sale is a good way to accomplish that.

Occupants of government quarters at Fort Benning are authorized to take advantage of the same opportunity; however, there are certain conditions that must be satisfied.

The first condition to be satisfied is to obtain a permit. Yard sale permits may be obtained by visiting the Community Life Office, Room 206, Building 241 (Miller Hall) on Baltzell Avenue near the National Infantry Museum.

Yard sales may then be conducted under the following rules:

- Such sales will not be used as a business venture; only to dispose of unwanted or excess personal property.
- Sales will not interfere with the normal flow of traffic so as to cause a safety hazard.
- Sales may take place only on Saturdays, Sundays and federal holidays.
- Sales will not begin prior to 8 a.m. and will end no later than 6 p.m.
- Displays of property for sale must not appear unsightly. Any debris from sales must be cleaned up and properly disposed of immediately upon conclusion of the sale.
- Signs advertising sales may not be put in place prior to the day of the sale and must be removed on the same day.
- Home-made signs that are neat in appearance are authorized. Signs may not be posed on telephone or utility poles, trees, street signs, traffic control devices, fences or buildings.

Soldiers and their family members should be aware that yard sales are monitored for compliance with the rules listed above.

Teen club HQ soon to open

By James C. Rupp
Bayonet staff writer

After months of anticipation, deliberation, renovation and perspiration, the headquarters for the Fort Benning Teen Club is soon ready to open its doors, said Billie C. Smith, Youth Services director.

The club has been renovated to make the environment safe for the purposes it is going to be used for.

Weak floors have been reinforced, broken windows have been replaced and peeling paint has been stripped away and new coats applied. Furniture and pool tables have also been installed.

Smith said the facility should be open for use by the end of July. With the opening so close at hand, Smith also said parents of interested youth are encouraged to register their children for a Youth Center card Monday at the Youth Services, building 1056, between 8 a.m. and 4:30 p.m.

Without parental permission, a child will not be able to become a member of the teen club and need the card to attend any club functions.

Veterinary Services advises residents to avoid wild animals

29th soldiers find baby deer on range

By Nina Hinegar
Bayonet community writer

The finding of a week-and-a-half-old fawn on a range May 30 by several soldiers has prompted Veterinary Services officials to issue an advisement to residents about wild animals.

According to Capt. Roy Carroll the Animal Disease Prevention and Control, the baby deer was apparently abandoned by its mother, so soldiers from the 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, called the animal control office.

The deer, which was penned "Ranger Jordan," was at the veterinary clinic for a week, then he was transported to a game reserve in Birmingham, Ala. said Carroll.

Carroll pointed out that although the veterinary clinic has a license to take care of wild animals , they strongly recommend that people leave these animals alone.

"We don't want wild animals domesticated because they can 't go back to their natural habitat," Carrol said. He also advises against picking up wild animals unless injured.

"If these animals are touched by humans hands, the adult will not have anything to do with their young," he said. "Once human scent comes in contact with the animal, the doe will not have anything to do with its young. A lot of times the parent will be hiding in the grass until the person leaves and then come back to nurse its young."

When people pick these animals up and bring them out of their natural environment, the animal become domesticated and can't go back to their natural habitat, Carroll said.

Guidance given for flag display

By Alyanna B. Clay-Heard
Bayonet staff writer

Flags are displayed in an array of places on post — at Infantry Hall, on individual houses, flying from any number of flag poles.

Displaying the flag in this manner is a show of patriotism, citizenship, and pride in one's country.

Yet some people, in their zeal to display this pride, often display the colors in an unacceptable manner.

To help individuals wishing to display the flag properly, here are a few rules for guidance in displaying the colors:

It is the universal custom to display the flag only from sunrise to sunset on buildings and stationery flagstaffs in the open.

However, when a patriotic effect is desired, the flag may be displayed 24 hours a day if properly illuminated.

The flag should not be displayed on days of inclement weather, except when an all-weather flag is displayed.

The flag should be displayed on all holidays, especially New Year's Day, Jan. 1; Washington's Birthday, the third Monday in January; Memorial Day, the last Monday in June; Independence Day, July 4; Columbus Day, the second Monday in October; Veterans Day, Nov. 11; Thanksgiving Day, the fourth Thursday in November; and Christmas Day, Dec. 25.

The flag should never touch anything beneath it, such as the ground, the floor, water, or merchandise.

The flag should never be carried flat or horizontally, but always aloft and free.

The flag should never be used as wearing apparel, bedding or drapery.

The flag should never be used for advertising purposes in any manner whatsoever.

The flag, when it is such a condition that it is no longer a fitting emblem for display, should be destroyed in a dignified way, preferably burning.

The ways to render respect to the colors are as follows:

During the ceremony of hoisting or lowering the flag or when the flag is passing in a parade or in review, all persons present except those in uniform should face the flag and stand at attention with their hands over their heart. All present in uniform should come to attention and render the military salute.

This procedure remains the same during the playing of the national anthem, whether the flag is displayed or not.

The only exception is during the Pledge of Allegiance, when military personnel would simply come to the position of attention and remain silent during the pledge.

Swedes train infantrymen on latest anti-tank weaponry

AB Bofors, McDonnell Douglas compete for Army selection

By Jon R. Anderson
Bayonet staff writer

A team of three trainers from a Swedish arms corporation called AB Bofors have been on Fort Benning since May 29, teaching a group of recent infantry basic training graduates how to use their medium anti-tank weapon.

A group of new soldiers finished qualifying with the weapon June 14 and are now part of a side-by-side testing of the weapon along with McDonnell Douglas Corporation's Dragon Generation II.

The testing, conducted by the Test and Experimental Command, will determine which system is most qualified to become the intermittent medium anti-tank weapon of the Army, while it awaits procurement of a more advanced system scheduled to be ready in 1997, said Odes G. Herring, testing supervisor.

The Swedish system, called BILL (Bofors, Infantry, Light and Lethal), incorporates a special canted warhead that is shot down into the top, less armored area of the target as the missile flies directly over it, said head trainer Bjorn Kall.

Because of a total of four computers working both on board the projectile and in the sighting system, said Kall, it provides a 100 percent probability of hit.

Sgt. 1st Class Cedric Dixon, who is the subject matter expert assigned from 29th Infantry Regiment to work with and be trained by the Swedes on the system, attests to the weapons accuracy.

"The major problem, however," said Dixon, "is its weight."

The Dragon Generation II anti-tank weapon system, as well as the Dragon currently employed by U.S. forces, weighs a total of 102 pounds, requiring two men to transport it in a tactical situation.

The BILL weighs a total of 153 pounds and requires three men to transport it in the field.

"If a soldier had to carry this system with a sustainment load," said Dixon, "I'm not sure if he could make it."

Other critics of the BILL system cite problems of having to completely reorganize the infantry platoon to allow for the additional man needed to carry the weapon.

Critics also raise the question of whether or not it would be logical to retrain the entire force on the BILL, a system which will be used for only a relatively short period of time.

Supporters of the Swedish weapon say that the superior accuracy and sophisticated warhead more than make up for its deficiencies.

Congressionally-directed testing between the Dragon Generation II and the BILL began June 24 and will continue unitl September.

Pvt. 2 Brandon Davis works on an M-16A2 rifle.

By Marilyn Balzarini
Bayonet staff writer

For someone who has always been interested in guns and gun collecting, the military is a good place to be. That's what Pvt. 2 Brandon Davis thought when he decided to join the Army.

Since coming on active duty last fall, Davis has already had the opportunity to compete in a shooting match.

Davis finished third in the 400-yard, slow-fire novice class. The class was part of the U.S. Army Small Arms Championships that were at Fort Benning in May.

The competition was Davis' first, but he says he plans to enter as many matches as he can. He is getting ready for the U.S. Army Infantry Center Rifle and Pistol Championships in November.

Davis said his goal is to receive the gold Distinguished Marksmanship Badge. If he is successful, he will be one of fewer than 3,000 soldiers to receive the badge, for rifle competition, in the 100-year history of the award.

Along with the opportunity to compete in marksmanship contests, the Army has given Davis a job working with weapons. He is the armorer for Company E, 2nd Battalion, 58th Infantry.

As unit armorer, Davis is responsible for all of the unit's small arms.

"My interest in weapons started when I was in high school," he said. "When I joined the Army, I asked the recruiter for a job working with weapons in some capacity."

Davis said he originally joined the reserves to help out with the cost of college and to satisfy his interest in the military.

He was assigned to the 12th Special Forces Group located at Hamilton Army Air Field in Novato, Calif. While he was in that unit, Davis worked as a team armorer and a spotter for the sniper team.

After about a year, Davis said he found he was enjoying the military more and more.

"My conversations with my friends were becoming more and more Army-oriented," he said. "I found I was enjoying it more than anything else I was doing at the time."

Davis signed on for a six-month tour with his reserve unit and then joined the regular Army in November.

"My goal is to be a Special Forces medic," Davis said. "I feel it is the hardest job in Special Forces — that's why I want to do it."

Davis has many talents. He recently entered a drawing in an art contest at the Kelley Hill Recreation Center that received a first-place award. The drawing was a pencil sketch of an MP-5 sub-machine gun.

Davis is also interested in film making and writing. He studied both at Marine Catholic High School in Kentfield, Calif., where he graduated in 1989.

"My ultimate career goal is to be a screen writer and film producer," he said. "Right now I'm writing about my experiences in the Army."

7th RTB moving to Fort Bliss

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Ranger students will begin conducting their desert training at Fort Bliss, Texas, when the 7th Ranger Training Battalion completes its move from Dugway Proving Ground, Utah.

The 7th Ranger Training Battalion is one of four training battalions of the Ranger Training Brigade. The move is scheduled to be completed in October.

The first ranger class to be cycled through the new Fort Bliss Phase is scheduled for September.

Officials said reasons for the move are to decrease operating costs, the availability of support facilities, improved quality of life for the ranger cadre and their families and more favorable conditions for conducting desert training, particularly during the winter months.

Among the decreased costs will be the transportation of ranger students since Fort Bliss is closer to Fort Benning. The availability of aircraft for parachute operations will be greater and less expensive at Fort Bliss, officials said. Also, the transportation of broken and damaged equipment to maintenance facilities on Fort Bliss will be less costly.

The move to Fort Bliss, a Training and Doctrine installation similar to Fort Benning, will also provide soldiers and their families easier access to previously unavailable facilities such as medical care, post exchange, commissary and recreational opportunities.

Also, professional development schools needed by the cadre will be more readily available at Fort Bliss.

According to officials, training will be greatly enhanced at Fort Bliss for several reasons. The winters at Fort Bliss are suitable for long-term dismounted desert operations and will allow students to operate and learn more effectively during the Desert Phase of Ranger School.

Also, Fort Bliss has all the needed maintenance, medical and command and control facilities needed to support the 7th Ranger Training Battalion.

The move will affect about 170 service members and their families. The families are being moved during June, July and August.

MARKSMANSHIP

instructors pass along classroom skills to soldiers from 10th Mountain Division

By Charlene L. LaDay-Hill
U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit

Shaping young soldiers to become better leaders is a huge responsibility. This task is not unusual for the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit's Instructor Group.

Recently, the instructor group traveled to West Point, N.Y., to train soldiers from 1st Battalion, 22nd Infantry, 10th Mountain Division, from Fort Drum, N.Y., on classroom techniques.

The 10th Mountain Division's mission was to train the junior and senior cadets on all phases of marksmanship.

"We're basically here to ensure that the soldiers are sticking to the doctrine," said Sgt. 1st Class Rojelio Arredondo, instructor group non-commissioned officer in charge. "The main thing is that they know how to give out the information correctly. For marksmanship, their information comes from FM 23-9."

For some of the non-commissioned officers of the 10th Mountain Division, the augmentation was a refresher course.

"Most of the topics USAMU went over were refreshers for me," said Sgt. Charles P. Rivers of Company B. "However, there was a lot of information that was new to me.

"Overall the training was beneficial and is important to the mission of producing quality leaders in the Army today."

Even former drill sergeants, like Staff Sgt. L.W. Robinson of Company B appreciated the instructor group's assistance.

"Although I've had my fair share of classroom instruction when I was a drill sergeant, this training was still essential," said Robinson. "There's a big difference between presenting a formal class to cadets and teaching basic trainees. The classes I'm giving to the junior and senior cadets is like a refresher for them, because they've read about most of this. Where as with basic trainees, a large majority of the class are new to the military."

The training that 10th Mountain Division soldiers gave to the junior and senior cadets will be passed down to their underclassmen.

> "We're basically here to ensure the soldiers are sticking to the doctrine."
> — Sgt. 1st Class Rojelio Arrendondo
> Instructor Group NCO

"Most of the instruction was very helpful," said Cadet Sgt. James C. Durant, West Point Academy. "We're brushing up on our techniques so we can teach it to the younger cadets. Thanks to this training we're able to make sure that we're giving out the correct information."

"The USAMU NCOs were very helpful, they took the time to work me on my teaching techniques," said Spc. Stacy R. Rusk of Company B. "Thanks to them I was prepared to give my class on the effects of gravity and wind."

For the lower enlisted, giving a class to cadets was a new experience for them.

As for the instructor group, many said the augmentation didn't have any problem. The 10th Mountain Division soldiers trained future officers to become leaders.

"The soldiers of the 10th Mountain Division were very receptive to the instruction we gave them," said Sgt. Marvin D. Long, instructor group. "They have done a tremendous job preparing themselves for this summer augmentation. I feel that they did an excellent job of training the cadets."

The summer augmentation provided an opportunity for marksmanship knowledge to be passed down from one group of leaders to the next, thereby allowing the Army to get leaders who lead, not follow.

TACTICAL EXERCISE

1,400 rangers participate in Exercise Celebrity Strike

By James C. Rupp
Bayonet staff writer

The C-141 Starlifter moved through the air, its engines buzzing dully 7,000 feet above the ground. The plane slowed in mid-air and disgorged its cargo: a high-altitude, low-opening ranger reconnaissance team.

After a period of two to three minutes, the team struck ground and went to work quickly. They pulled and packed their chutes, reached their assembly areas and set up a 360-degree security perimeter.

They didn't speak, only worked, their hands and minds too intent on their jobs. Minutes later, they were gone, stalking through the high grass quickly and quietly.

Only the trampled ground was an indication they had ever been there.

Then, like a fast paced summer storm, the jets came. A-10 Thunderbolts, moving like lightning across the treetops. The throb from their engines shaking leaves and deafening the ears.

Six of the ground support aircraft streaked at breakneck speed across the sky above the open field where the HALO team had just vacated.

Then, as quickly as they had come, they were gone.

A short time later, a sound so strong and solid that it threatened to crack the marbled gray sky wide open, began to possess the air; and, over the tree line hurtled a trio of C-130s, so massive they seemed not so much to fly through the air as they seemed to plod through it.

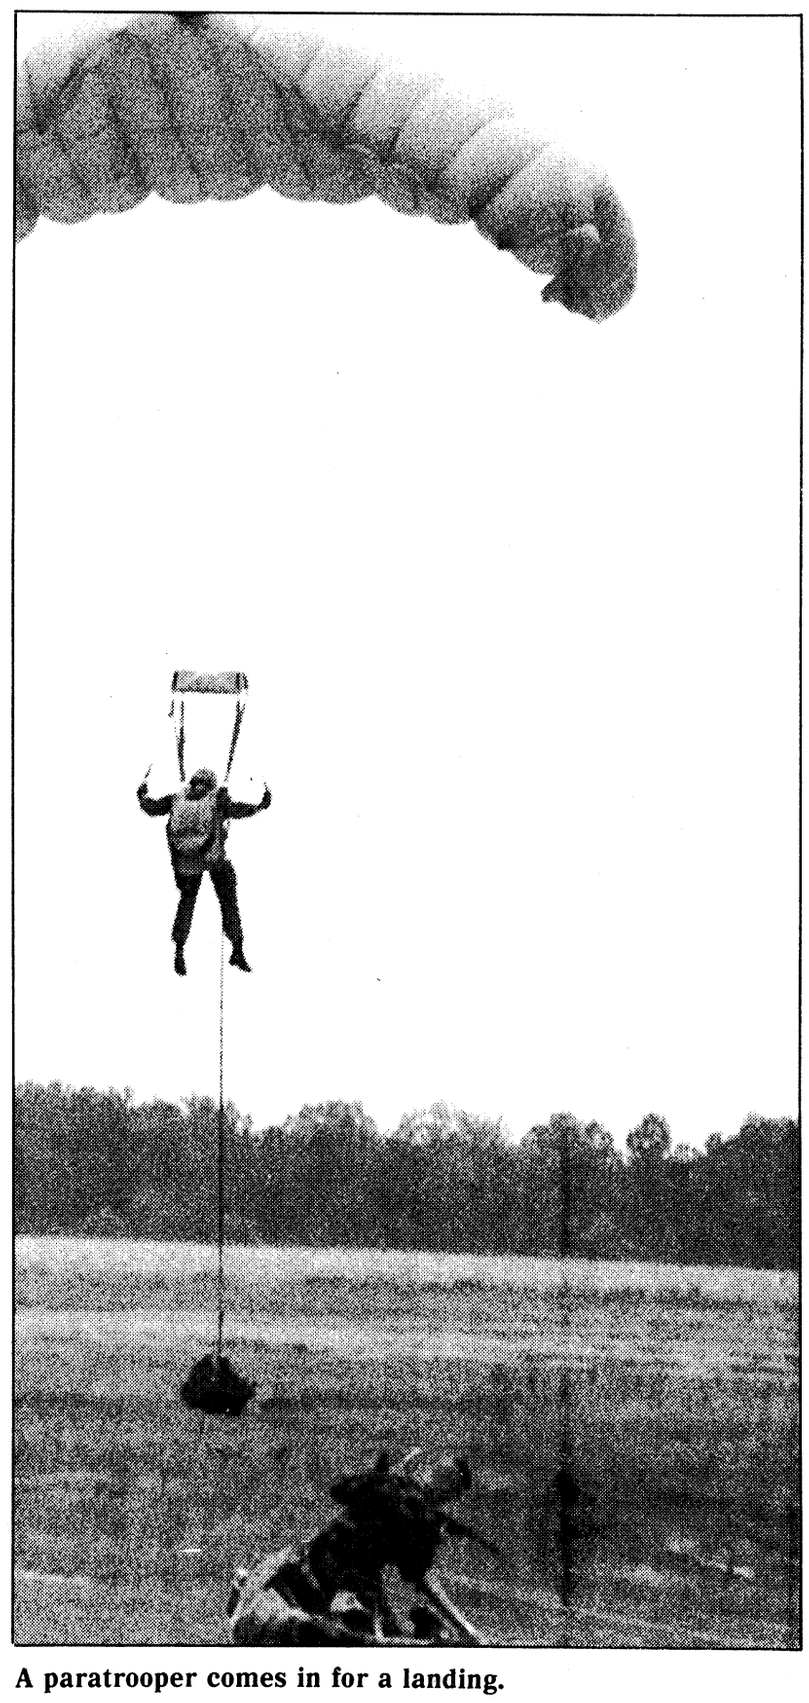
As each one reached the center of the field, something happened. Like the Starlifter that had passed through earlier, the C-130s began to release their cargo.

Paratroopers. 75th Ranger Regiment paratroopers to be exact.

In moments, the air was filled with billowing olive drab canopies, and it seemed that the sky, despite all its vastness, could not hold another.

That's when the second group of planes breached the horizon.

By the end of the operation, the planes had made eight passes, depositing approximately 1,400 men onto the quiet grassy field.



This was an invasion...of sorts. It was the day the 75th Ranger Regiment invaded Fort Benning.

As part of a training exercise for the 75th Regiment, all three battalions were present here from Fort Stewart, Ga., and Fort Lewis, Wash. Also the exercise coincided with the change of command ceremony Tuesday for the 3rd Battalion.

"The difference between this and what we normally do is that this was a lot more relaxed," said Sgt. Douglas Maddi, Company A, 2nd Battalion. "We made a lot more passes because we had a lot more people. It was a nice soft drop zone, and I believe things went really smooth."

"Although I believe things went smoothly, there was an increased danger factor from the sheer number of personnel on the drop zone," said Sgt. Kenneth Brock, 1st Battalion.

In true ranger tradition, he added, "It was some great training."

75th Regt. does PT — ranger style

By James C. Rupp

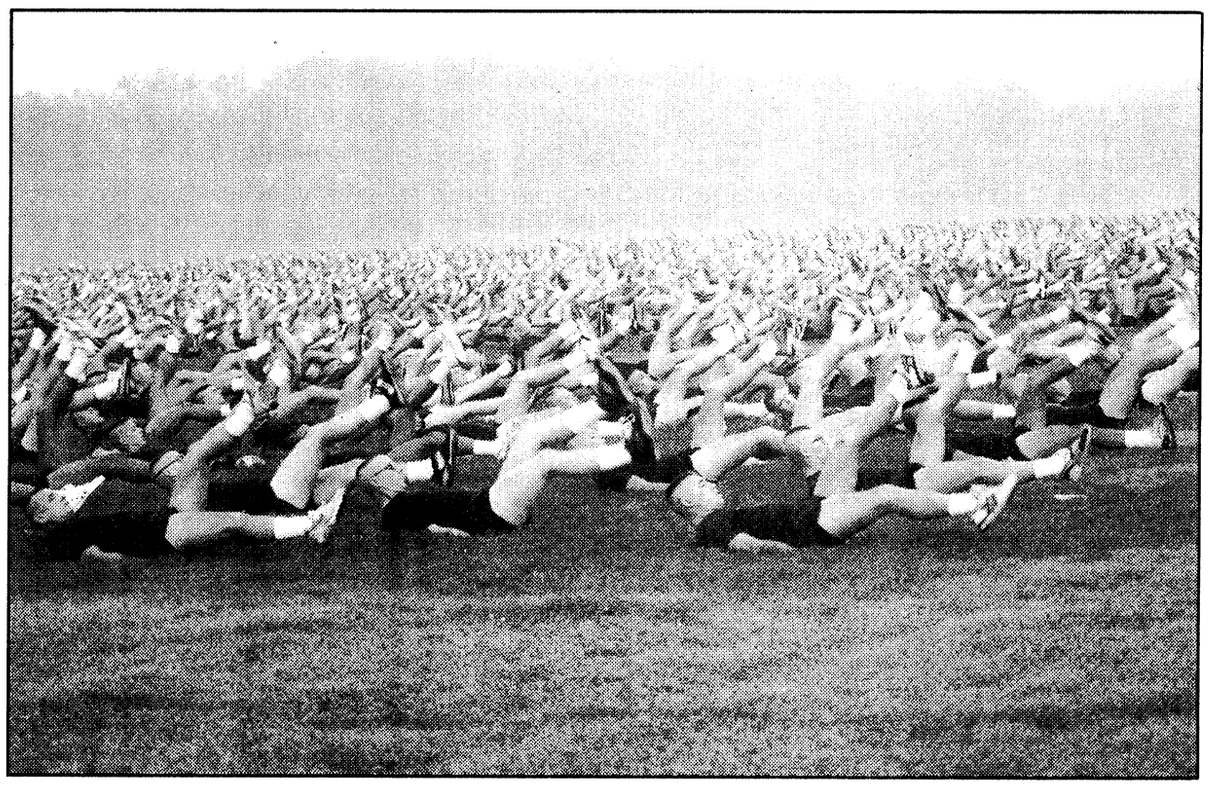
Task: Complete one morning physical training session, to end with one four mile run

Conditions: Given three battalions of highly motivated professional soldiers — the entire 75th Ranger Regiment.

Standards: Just do it.

And they did.



At the track on Stewart Watson Field, approximately 1,800 Rangers gathered together for the 75th Ranger Regiment's first ever regimental physical training session.

Across Stewart-Watson Field stood the regiment, a sea of black PT uniforms and high and tight haircuts, massed at Fort Benning for the change of command ceremony Tuesday where Col. William F. Kernan handed over the reins of the 75th which he had held since June 30, 1989, to Col. David L. Grange.

The Rangers were as driven and enthusiastic as their reputation as they were led through flutter kicks, push-ups, high jumpers and various other exercises before they began the run.

The heat and humidity of the morning did not seem to wither their zeal for the course as they belted out their cadences at the last leg of the run with the same volume that they began with.

All of the revelry was staunched a bit at the end of the run, however when Kernan called the entire regiment before him on Ranger Field to say goodbye to the troops he had served with for so long.

Family member strives for weightlifting honors

By Brian C. Sutton
Bayonet staff writer

Hard work and determination is on the mind of powerlifter Anthony "Tony" Jenkins as he steps to the squat rack to begin his workout; a workout that will last nearly two hours.

Jenkins grits his teeth and grasps the bar. This 17-year-old military family member, in his junior year at Russell County High School, agonizes over the thought of not performing to his potential.

He takes a final check over his left shoulder, then his right, to make sure his coach and spotter, Dean Rose, is standing behind him to ensure Jenkins' safety.

He lifts the weight off the rack with relative ease. Lifting 250 to 300 pounds for the beginning of a workout isn't a bad starting weight for a man of 200 pounds.

Jenkins, however, only weighs 130 pounds."A steroid user?" one might ask.

Hardly.

Jenkins is competing this weekend in a drug-free competition. Steroids are not allowed.

"To beat a steroid user is just about impossible," said Buck Jenkins, father of the younger Jenkins. Instead of using steroids, Jenkins spends countless hours in the gym lifting, and at home trying to maintain a healthy diet, something that is sometimes difficult for a teen-ager.

"He lifts 15 to 20 hours per week to get ready for his competitions," said Jenkins' father.

Fifteen to 20 hours a week for 2 1/2 months is what it took to get Jenkins to where he is right now. Currently he is lifting at a maximum of nearly 400 pounds on squats, mid-200s for bench-press and mid-400 pounds for his deadlift.

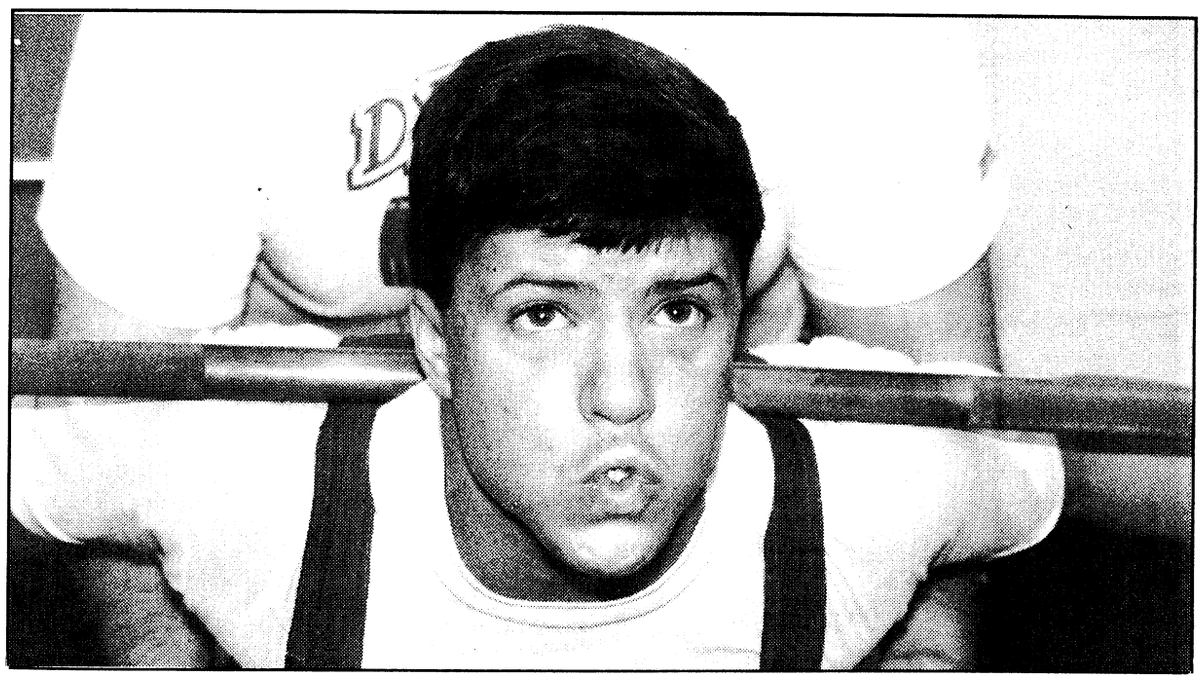
Jenkins' maximum lifting weight has come a long way from his beginning, in the fall of 1990. When he began lifting seriously for competition, he could only lift about half to 3/4 of what he lifts now and he only weighed 115 pounds.

Now, he weighs 132 pounds with no increase in body fat.

"I started lifting just to get a little stronger for football," said Jenkins. "Then I started going to competitions to see what I could do and now, here I am, still competing."

This native of Tennessee has a lot more going for him than just pure power.

There is also another side to Jenkins. A side that is compassionate and caring, but yet very focused on his goals and willing to sacrifice simple human pleasures to succeed.



"I sacrifice a lot of spare time with my friends," said Jenkins, who also holds a full-time job with a Phenix City retail store. "It's kind of tough sometimes because I miss out on what they do."

On the other hand, said Jenkins, he also wants to win. One day he hopes to obtain a scholarship for powerlifting. However, with straight A's in school, an academic scholarship would suit him just as well.

Jenkin's first real test will be this weekend in Evansville, Ind. where the American Drug Free Powerlifting Association Teenage Nationals will take place.

Will Jenkins win?

"He'll finish in the top three unless someone brings in a ringer," said Buck Jenkins.

Brian C. Sutton

Anthony Jenkins gives it his all during an early-morning workout.

That "ringer" could be out there somewhere, quite possibly at the competition in Evansville, giving the holder of four Georgia state records an run for his money.

"All the known teen-agers from the states will be there," said Jenkins. "It is going to be very rough."

"Right now it's all in his mind," said Rose, a champion powerlifter himself. "Tony has got this championship nearly won. He just needs to keep his head in the game."

For a man of only 17, Jenkins is setting the standards for the teen-age and adult powerlifters alike.

High marks in fishing, gulf war

By Brian C. Sutton
Bayonet staff writer

Winning in the Persian Gulf isn't the only thing the former commander of the 36th Engineer Group knows how to do.

Catching prize-winning fish is also on Col. Henry "Hank" Miller's long list of accomplishments past.

Miller participated in the Ken Stabler Fishing Classic on Smith Lake, Ala. Saturday. The fishing classic is a charity benefit for the scholarship foundation at Wallace State College, in which well-known celebrities fished for the day to catch the biggest prize they coould get.

A modest Miller said,"I just happended to be they guy on the other end of the line with the biggest fish."

And a sizeable catch it was.

Miller pulled in a 20-pound striper, outdoing his competitors by several pounds.

"This tournament was set up for celebrities to participate," said Miller. "I don't consider myself a celebrity by any means."

Miller explained that Stabler wanted someone who could be a representative of the Desert Storm troops.

"I was so happy to represent all the soldiers who deployed," said Miller.

Miller said he was treated like a special celebrity.

"Those people at the tournament were great to me and my wife," said Miller. "I was treated so nicely. I really did feel like a celebrity for the day."

Winning certainly isn't everything to Miller, as is evident from his demeanor, but he claimed he certainly "got a kick out of catching that fish."

Strikers hold open golf tournament

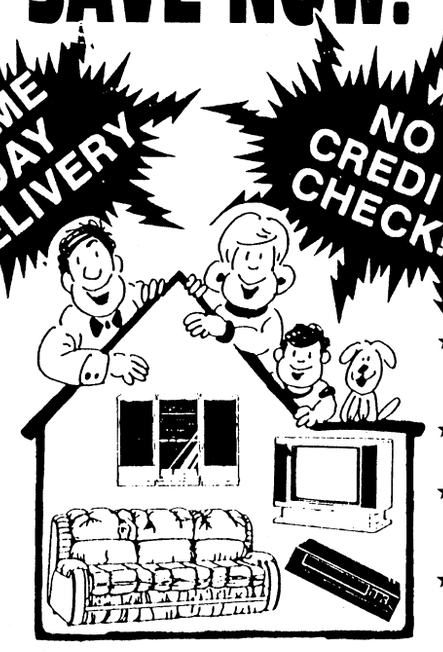
By Aurelio Feliberty
3rd Brigade Public Affairs

From the largest sand trap of Saudi Arabia to the Fort Benning greens, 1st Battalion, 18th Infantry Regiment, 3rd Brigade, 24th Infantry Division (Mech) held their annual Striker Open Golf tournament recently.

"We had 23 four-man teams participate out of 27 possible teams," said Jeff Jennings, a company executive officer.

"The tournament is always open to anyone on Kelley Hill. We've even had civilians play in the past.

"You don't even have to be a pro, because the teams were divided into two flights from best to worst to make it fair," Jennings added.



Team members were scrambling around the course enjoying themselves on a day off. An occasional thunk on a tree from a stray golf ball could be heard.

"This is great stuff! It beats working," said Bill Chamberlain, Striker battalion commander.

By the end of the round team members slowly started making their way back to the clubhouse to turn in their scores.

Bill Engel, Brian Lamar, Ronald Rice and Sean Edwards won the tournament with an 11 under par 61.

"Prizes ranged from trophies and club bags for first place to golf balls for last. These were donated by several stores and pro shops, which was arranged by Bill Cartron, the battalion signal officer," said Jennings.

Use caution when driving wet roads

Infantry Center Safety Office

Motorist driving on U.S. Highway 27 are requested to use caution and be aware that hydroplaning may occur during heavy rains. Hydroplaning is suspected to be a contributing factor in an accident that claimed two lives this spring.

Hydroplaning is defined as the loss of tire-ground contact caused by hydronamic lift developed under the tire. In plain English if there is enough water and are no longer touching the road and the driver is no longer in control. It does not take much water, 1/10 of an inch, or speed, as low as 35 mph, for hydroplaning to occur.

There are two hazards associated with tire hydroplaning, loss of braking traction and loss of directional stability. Hydroplaning eliminates traction between the tire and road surface because the tire is riding on a thin layer of water. Brake application will have no effect on the tires, except to stop the tire from spinning. Tires will not touch the roadway until the vehicle slows to below hydroplaning speed. The stopping distance for automobiles has been shown to double for flooded verses dry pavements. Steering control depends upon the ability of the tire to maintain contact with the roadway. When tires hydroplane and lift off the pavement surface, the ability to steer is lost.

There are several factors which will determine if hydroplaning will occur; amount of water on the road surface and the pavement surface. Road surfaces that have pavement grooves and good drainage decrease the chances of hydroplaning, I-185 is a good example of a grooved roadway. Highway 27 has a smooth roadway and some low spots where water will settle. Tires that are worn smooth offer less resistance than new ties, but even new tires will also hydroplane.

When driving in rain slow down and turn your lights on. Slowing down will reduce your chances of hydroplaning.

ALL THE WAY!

Boy scout flies on eagle wings

By Nina Hinegar
Bayonet community writer

A Fort Benning Boy Scout received the Eagle Scout award in a ceremony June 21 at 8 p.m. at the Infantry Center Chapel on Main Post.

Aaron Bruno Roggia, son of Chaplain (Maj.) and Mrs. Richard Roggia, received the award for putting in over 200 hours of work, earning 21 merit badges and designing a project that would benefit the community.

Aaron, who is a scout with Troop 27, developed a historic trail for Fort Benning. The project consisted of five parts.

To complete the trail, Aaron completed five objectives. The first objective was to research historical information about sites on Main Post that could be developed into a historic trail. His second objective was to produce a pamphlet. The pamphlet contained a map of one, five and 13-mile trails and a driving trail. The map also included historic landmarks, places, plaques and monuments to be seen on the trail.

Next, Aaron gained approval from post authorities for the trail to be made. Then, he designed the signs that will be placed at each site on the trail.

His fourth objective was to design and produce a patch for the walkers of the ytrail. Finally, he applied to the National Organization of Historic Trails for recognition of the trail as a national historic trail.

The projected benefited the Public Affairs Office by having information about Fort Benning historical sites in one neat, readable pamphlet, said Aaron. It also provides the post welcome center and the National Infantry Museum with information to answer questions about the trail and directions, he added.

Aaron Roggia

Aaron said he got the idea from a similar trail in Fort Riley, Kan.

Singer brings musical ministry

By Gabriele Sonnenberg
USAIC Chaplains Office

Darlene Van Dyke will perform free concerts from July 14 to 16 at Fort Benning. The concerts will be held at worship services and in unit areas.

Van Dyke is no stranger to the U.S. Army Chaplaincy. Since 1981, she has made appearances at several military installations including Fort Knox, Ky.; Fort Bragg, N.C.; and Fort Sill, Okla. Those in attendance have ranged from new recruits to the post commander. She has received standing ovations for her songs: "The Statue of Liberty," and "Soldier of the Light."

Furthermore, Van Dyke has sung to thousands of soldiers in many situations: during chapel services, in motorpools, in mess halls, in fields, from the back of a truck, and even in the stockade. It is her desire not only to present high-energy tunes, but to show our military personnel that they can individually share in the liberties of spiritual freedom provided by God through His Son Jesus Christ.

This young lady is a student of the faith she expresses in her music. Powerful lyrics and artfully-arranged background combine to create uncompromising music with a message. "The message is that we cannot dismiss God from our lives, but indeed, need his love and power to penetrate all aspects of our thinking, heart, spirit; thus actions," states Van-Dyke. "And further," she continues, "whether the medium of music be dance/pop, rock, ballard, or traditional, the message is positive and uplifting. Different styles appear to different age groups and we can reach any of them because my music is versatile."

The schedule of the concerts will be forthcoming.

Classes set for effective parenting

By Gabriele Sonnenberg
USAIC Chaplain's Office

Many parents are sincere in trying to raise children in the "right way." But it is difficult to succeed since many are unsure and have not received a nurturing, uplifting and self-esteem building education.

A driver's license is required to drive a car. Many years of education is necessary to acquire a profession. However, neither a license nor special schooling is required to raise children.

Parenting equals many worries and problems, which are not easy to overcome. Many spouses and parents in the military face raising children alone without the help of grandparents or family.

But there are agencies available to lend a helping hand. Parenting classes are offered at the Chaplains Family Life Center. Improving relationship between parents and children will be the focus of a workshop that began June 23. The workshop will be based on Systematic Training for Effective Parenting (S.T.E.P.). The workshop will be presented every Tuesday from noon until 1:30 p.m. for seven weeks.

Some of the topics covered are:

Understanding Behavior and Misbehavior

Understanding your child & yourself

ASK THE JUDGE

By Jane Winand
Staff Judge Advocate's Office

Q. After months of searching, my wife and I found the "perfect" house. We signed the sales contract two weeks ago and applied for a mortgage immediately. Now that we have had an opportunity to think about the house, we really don't think that we want it. I also got a call from the mortgage company. They seemed concerned that my wife's job had just been terminated and were vague about whether or not we could get a mortgage. Can we just get out of the contract and look for another house?

A. The answer to your question depends a lot on the sales contract that you signed. The average contract is conditioned upon the purchaser's ability to obtain a loan for a specific amount with specific terms. If the purchaser is unable to obtain a loan from a lender using the standard industry underwriting criteria (which means that either because of a lack of sufficient income or a great deal of current debt no lender is willing to give you a mortgage), a condition to the contract has not be satisfied and the contract is null and void. Therefore, you are off the hook. If you really don't want the house, that could be the best solution.

However, if you can obtain financing, but you decide not to buy the house, you could be stuck paying some money. The real estate broker is entitled to be paid when he or she produces a ready, willing and able buyer to the seller. That means that the broker has done the job when he gets the seller and purchaser to sign a sales contract.

If the sale does not go through, no matter the reason, the broker is still entitled to his commission. The sales contract will be very specific as to who pays the broker. Ordinarily, the party that refuses to go through with the sale, in this case you, will be responsible for paying the commission. We could be talking about a hefty amount of money — usually 6 or 7 percent of the sales price. A 7 percent commission on a $70,000.00 house is $4,900.00. That's a pile of change to pay without anything to show for it.

As if that isn't bad enough, there could be additional charges. You could be responsible for any monetary damages suffered by the seller as a result of your breach of the contract.

For instance, the seller may have signed a sales contract for another house when you agreed to buy his old house. However, he cannot afford two houses and, when you breached your contract, he had to breach his contract with his seller. Therefore, your seller may owe his broker a commission for the new house that he had signed a contract to buy. He could demand that you also pay for his other commission.

This is just general information. You should make an appointment to speak with a Legal Assistance Attorney and have your sales contract reviewed. The phone number is 545-3281/3282.

Housing practices clarified

By Jon R. Anderson
Bayonet staff writer

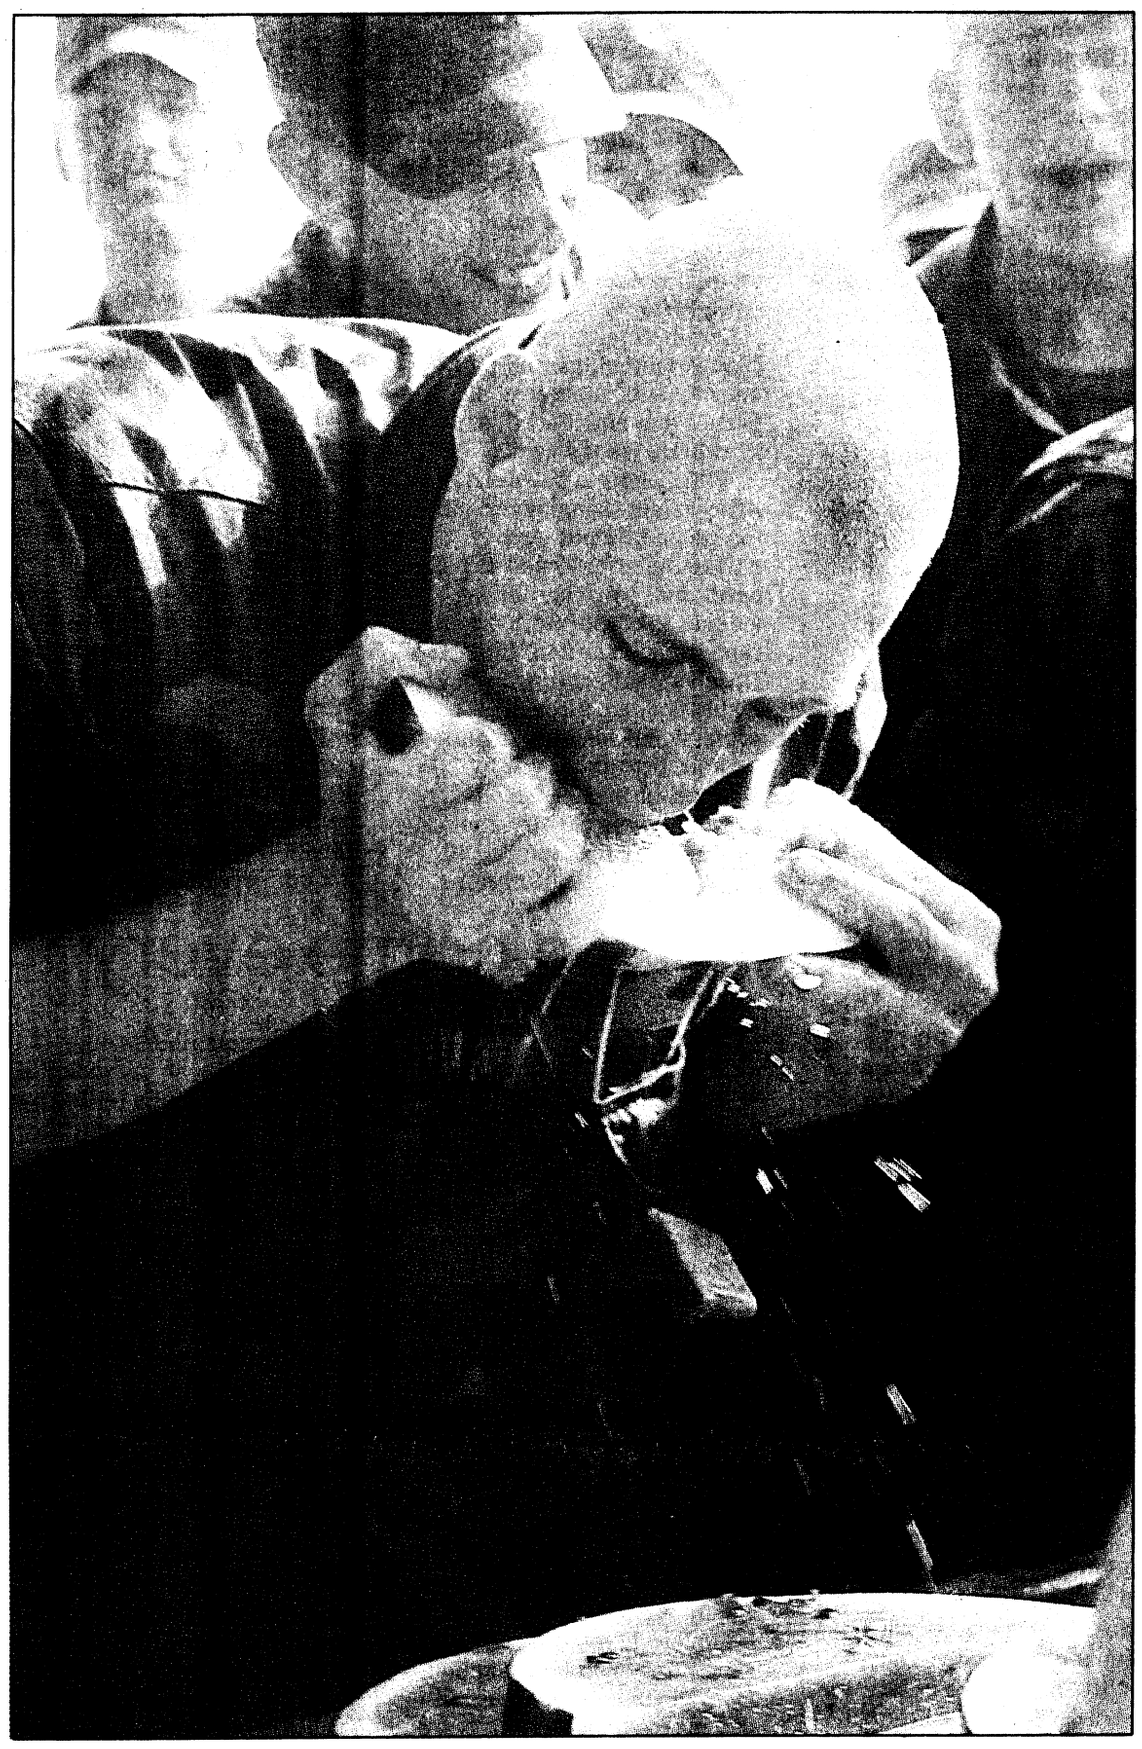
Amid recent claims that Family Housing at Fort Benning was "playing favorites" in its distribution of available homes on post, housing officials stated recently no intentionally unfair or discriminatory practices are going on that they are aware of.

Describing the system of regulations governing on post housing as "very complicated," housing director, Ken Hankins, said although sometimes mistakes are made, he could "categorically" say they "do not knowingly give preferential treatment" unless they have an exception to policy.

Exceptions to policy, explained Hankins, are probably the source of the problem.

By getting an exception to policy, usually only given for dire medical reasons, said Hankins, a soldier can move from the bottom of the waiting list to the top.

This, he said, could upset those who notice this jump and don't understand the reasons behind it.



"If you can give me a name of someone you believe has received preferential treatment, not an exception to policy, I'd like to know about it," said Hankins. "And, if you don't trust us, you can take it to criminal investigation or the inspector general directly."

Too many times, explained Hankins, people have come to his office with a complaint based on a rumor, not specific facts and names.

Hankins also asks the help of the Fort Benning community in watching out for housing violations, explaining that it is next to impossible to keep tabs on each one of the 4,082 housing units on post.

Hankins described the major violations occurring on Fort Benning as follows:

- Abandoned quarters.
- Soldier is living in quarters without family members.
- Soldier has moved back to barracks with dependents still residing in quarters.

Separation pay

Enlisted soldiers who face RIFs are now eligible

Army News Service

WASHINGTON — Enlisted soldiers forced out of the military by reductions in forces worldwide are now eligible to receive separation pay.

"As we turn our attention from Operation Desert Storm to the reality of shrinking defense budgets, the Defense Department must reluctantly release many fine military and civilian personnel," Defense Secretary Dick Cheney said in the announcement.

The total benefits package includes separation pay, extension of some privileges normally reserved for active duty soldiers and additional educational opportunities.

Separation pay, equal to 10 percent of a soldiers's base pay at the time of separation multiplied by the number of years the soldier served on active duty, will be paid to eligible enlisted personnel and officers who are being involuntarily separated after at least six years' service.

For example, a staff sergeant forced out of the Army after 10 years would receive about $18,000 in separation pay; a major after 12 years would receive about $46,000.

The DoD announcement said that separation pay is intended to be a cushion for soldiers with more than six years of service who are forced out before they become eligible for retirement at 20 years of service.

Soldiers on their first enlistment or first period of obligated service are not eligible for separation pay.

In addition to separation pay, service members forced out of the military are entitled to:

- Extended health care for themselves and their dependents (60 days for those with fewer than six years of service, 120 days for those with six or more years).
- A two-year extension of commissary and exchange privileges.
- Use of military housing for up to 180 days after the separation. However, they must pay what installation commanders determine is a "reasonable rental rate."
- A one-time employment preference for non-appropriated funds jobs.
- Up to 30 days of excess leave or 10 days of permissive temporary duty while still on active duty for job hunting, house hunting or other relocation activities.
- Priority in affiliating with National Guard or Reserve units for up to a year after the separation.
- Travel and transportation allowances.
- A last chance to enroll in the Montgomery GI Bill before separation, or the opportunity to convert Vietnam Education Assistance Program benefits to the Montgomery GI Bill.

Bldg. 6 to open in Sept.

By James C. Rupp
Bayonet staff writer

A new general administration building will be in operation by the latter part of September, according to Kenneth Holloway, Directorate of Engineering's master planner.

The building, designated Building 6 and located adjacent to the west parking lot of Building 4, entered the contracting stage of development in July 1989, Holloway said.

The need for the construction of the building became apparent when the School of the Americas' headquarters was placed in Building 35, which was also the location for the Directorate of Logistics, Directorate of Civilian Personnel and DEH, he said.

Personnel from these offices will occupy the 107,000 square-foot structure.

Soviet equipment, weapons arrive at Fort Benning

Museum to display equipment

By Brian C. Sutton
Bayonet staff writer

The National Infantry Museum recently acquired several pieces of Iraqi equipment that were seized by the 3rd Brigade, 24th Infantry Division, and other 24th ID units.

"We've got everything from Republican Guard uniforms to a T-72 main battle tank," said Frank Hanner, museum curator.

Hanner explained that a lot of the equipment acquired is not available for display because it has not been cleaned, inspected and mounted for display. Items such as rifles dating back to the World War I period and a motorcycle that was taken from the Republican Guard are items that so far have had to be kept behind the scenes.

Hanner said he expects these pieces to be ready for display soon.

Tuesday the Infantry Museum unveiled a number of larger pieces of equipment.

In a ceremony at the museum, a T-72M1 main battle tank, a BMP-1 infantry combat vehicle and a BTR-40 scout car were officially inducted into the museum's list of vehicles.

Hanner explained the majority of the smaller equipment was donated by individual soldiers, and the larger equipment was donated on behalf of the larger commands.

According to Hanner, after the equipment was inspected by the 89th Ordnance Detachment here for nuclear, biological or chemical warfare booby traps and were altered slightly to make them inoperable, the hatches on the vehicles were sealed shut to prevent injuries if children should happen to climb on them.

Soviet weapons have arrived at Fort Benning.

The weaponry — including T-72M1 main battle tanks, BMP-1 armored personnel carriers, artillery pieces and small arms — recently went on display at Ivy Road near Kelley Hill's Artillery Fields.

"For the soldiers of 3rd Brigade, 24th Infantry Division, the Ivy Road display will serve as a permanent reminder of what they faced during the Persian Gulf War," said Sgt. 1st Class Brenda Bloomer, non-commissioned officer in charge of the brigade S-2 operations section. "It's something that will remind them of the proud history of the Sledgehammer Brigade."

According to Bloomer, all of the equipment displayed was captured by soldiers of the 24th Infantry Division and its attached units Feb. 26 to 28 near Al Basra, Iraq. Sledgehammer Brigade soldiers captured the enemy small arms while securing Iraqi fortified positions and clearing bunker complexes along Highway 8, south of Tallil Airfield.

Col. Ted Reid, 3rd Brigade commander, presented the equipment to Brig. Gen. Carl F. Ernst, post deputy commander and assistant commandant of the Infantry School, at 10 a.m. Tuesday at the museum.

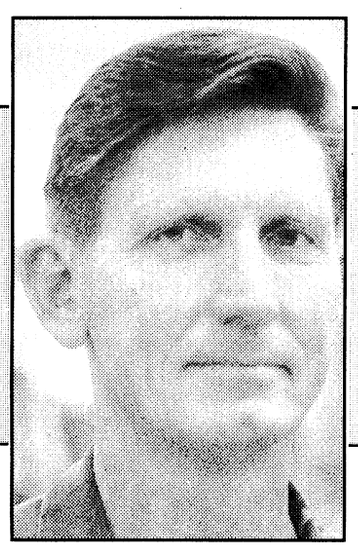
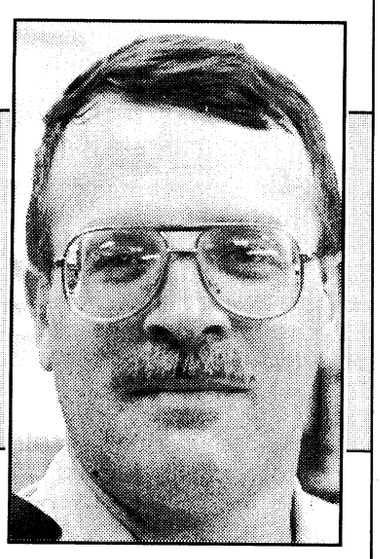
Which military benefit is most important to you and why?



Capt. Scott Grigsby, 145th Medical Detachment — "I'm a reservist, so for me its the benefit of having a second career. It is an opportunity to learn a unique skill. It's a lot different from a civilian job."



Ivette Payne, family member — "The GI bill is the best of the benefits. A lot of kids come to the Army because they cannot afford college funding. The bill gives them an opportuniy to put some money away for school."

Staff Sgt. Wayne Starnes, Company B, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment — "The educational benefits are important. They give soldiers an opportunity for a good education at a reasonable price."

1st Sgt. William C. Hines, 2nd Army, Non-Commissioned Officers Academy — "From the reserve side, there are a lot of benefits. There is the life insurance, medical and educcational benefits — even the commissary and post exchange."

Lt. Col. Andrew Dow, U.S. Army Medical Department Activity — "There are a lot of them so it is hard to say. There are a lot of good people working hard in the field of Army medicine with a very limited amount of supplies. I think people need to know how much they owe to us doing the job."

Commercial sponsors provide many activities on Fort Benning

COMMENTARY

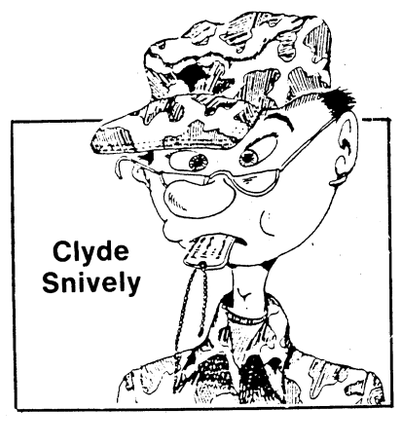
Any early arrivals at post headquarters on July 5 who thought they'd made the wrong turn on the interstate and landed in Kuwait can be excused for this momentary lapse.

Spread across York Field, patrolling the parking lots, was at least a battalion of soldiers, white trash bags in hand, policing the battle area.

Every visible trash can boiled over, piles of paper plates, cups and uneaten food lying on the ground, mute testimony to the pandemonium of the previous day.

Inside the post headquarters sat the duty officer — shell-shocked. His runner, still not sure the war was over, huddled in a darkened corner by the elevators.

"We were literally under siege," the duty officer said. There were kids everywhere, wanting to go everywhere as they came in to use the toilets or just escape the heat."



By 8 a.m., the efficient soldiers, who had to lift bleachers to get at the trash, had the situation under control and those arriving for work had little idea what the place had looked like earlier in the morning.

One of the main draws for the picnic was the heralded fireworks that promised to be, and were, twice as flamboyant than past years. One reason was AT&T sponsorship.

Have you noticed how commercial sponsors are seemingly everywhere you go nowadays?

Commercial sponsors bring us college football games, golf tournaments, mother of all parties and now Fourth of July fireworks. What's next?

With Congress down-sizing the Army (right-sizing never got off the ground despite Army marketing efforts) and closing bases, maybe we'll soon be looking to corporate sponsors to support us: "The 24th Infantry Division, that exciting, highly-trained, force of professional soldiers, saviors of Kuwait, brought to you by Kemper Insurance." Instead of showing horse cavalry charging across the plains, they could show a formation of Abrams tanks and Bradley fighting vehicles dashing across an open field and pulling a pivot steer at high speed in front of the camera.

Or, how about, "Fort Benning, Home of the Infantry, sponsored by Keebler Foods." Maybe we could get the elves to do police call in the morning.

A tactical fighter wing of A-10 Thunderbolts, also known as Warthogs, could be sponsored by Smuckers. "With a name like Warthogs, you gotta be good."

The Marines, never short on ego would certainly go after Hallmark cards to sponsor them, "When you want to send the best, send the Marines."

Commercial sponsorship, of course is not without its pitfalls. Can you imagine the Navy getting tied in with the life support system, "I've sunken and I can't get up," and "I'm having trouble breathing." "Don't worry Seawolf skipper, help is on the way."

And wouldn't commercial sponsors love to jump in and sponsor a war. I can just see Pepsi pulling off one of its "younger generation" spots in a war like the one in Southwest Asia. They'd have American troops drinking Pepsi while they sped about the battlefield, taking prisoners of lethargic Iraqis who come out of their bunkers to surrender, hands held high, one hand with an AK-47, the other hand holding a coke.

Far fetched?

Maybe. But it's a fact of life on many military installations right now. Here at Fort Benning, many of the activities that take place on a regular basis (not just Superfest parties) have some form of commercial sponsorship.

Next time you go to an event at one of the clubs or play in a golf tournament on post, check it out. See if there aren't at least a few commercial sponsors helping pick up the tab.

Shoplifting: It's a crime everyone pays for

EDITORIAL

Shoplifting on Fort Benning is getting tougher every day. Due to improved and increasing surveillance activities of Army and Air Force Exchange Service detectives, it's harder to "get away" with shoplifting.

There has been a total of 225 shoplifting cases have so far this year on Fort Benning.

The percentage of personnel apprehended has steadily increased over the past few months and judicial/disciplinary action is being taken against those apprehended.

To many, shoplifting doesn't seem like anything to get excited about.

Most people who shoplift don't do it out of necessity. They shoplift for kicks — to beat the system or to impress friends.

Some people try to rationalize their shoplifting thinking it doesn't hurt anyone. The shoplifter feels that the store's loss of merchandise hurts no one, and that the offense is so minor that, if caught, little if anything will be done.

Regardless of how one attempts to rationalize it, shoplifting is a crime. It's "stealing," and it can have an effect on your future. As a military member, you can be tried by court-martial.

If found guilty, you can receive a bad conduct discharge, forfeiture of all pay and allowances and up to six months confinement at hard labor.

If you are retired military or a family member, you, too, have a lot to lose if you are convicted of shoplifting. You face ejection from the installation, suspension of your exchange privileges, and a civil court trial. If convicted in civil court you may be fined up to $1,000 and receive a one-year confinement or both.

Family members under 17 years of age who are guilty of shoplifting could be turned over to local civilian juvenile authorities for prosecution.

The long term consequences of a shoplifting conviction may include inability to keep or obtain certain jobs requiring trust or security clearances, inability to obtain loans and general personal embarrassment.

In addition to the price paid by the shoplifter, this crime hurts the rest of us in the form of higher prices.

Stores must cover their losses by installing additional security devices or by hiring more security personnel. Profits from the Army and Air Force Exchange Service are used to improve the quality of life for military personnel and their families by providing facilities such as swimming pools, bowling lanes, libraries and craft shops.

Now the most important question about shoplifting is, "How can I help."

Easy, if you see someone shoplifting, report it. If your children bring home something new and you suspect they may have stolen it, question them about it. Set the example by being honest yourself.

"Take a bite out of crime" — report shoplifters. You'll feel the benefits in your pocketbook.

Commanding general urges prevention in heat injuries

Each summer Fort Benning is plagued by head injuries despite repeated efforts to educate personnel about this injury's causes and prevention.

Heat injuries are critical for they present a high risk of a fatality if the body temperature soars out of control.

During fiscal year 1990, 26 soldiers received recordable heat injuries with an injury cost estimated at $193,551.

Once a soldier suffers a heat injury, he or she is more susceptible to additional heat injuries.

All leaders must be actively involved in the prevention of heat injuries.

Total prevention of heat injuries is difficult because the heat tolerance of individuals varies considerably, and one's tolerance changes from day to day.

Leaders must stay alert to ensure soldiers are not tasked beyond their limits.

Each soldier must be taught to recognize heat injury symptoms in themselves and their buddies.

Combat effectiveness will be greatly enhanced when soldiers watch out for each other.

Now is the time to educate leaders in the prevention, recognition and treatment of heat injuries.

Pocket cards (Fort Benning Form 7, Heat Injury Prevention) providing guidance for the prevention and treatment of heat injuries are available from Post Publications, building 2409.

These cards used in the wet globe temperature index, which can be obtained by measurements taken by the unit or by dialing 545-5281, give definitive instructions on conducting safe operations and training. U.S. Army Infantry Center Regulation 40-14 provides detailed guidance.

Aggressive heat injury prevention will increase unit readiness and reduce the risk of a fatal injury.

Needless losses can and must be prevented.

Maj. Gen. Carmen J. Cavezza
Fort Benning commander

Steps to prevent heat injuries

- Drink plenty of water and eat regular well-balanced meals.
- Wear light, loose-fitting clothing.
- Reduce activity according to the wet bulb globe temperature index.
- Take lots of short rest breaks.

Star-Spangled Investment

For 50 years U.S. Savings Bonds have been a star-spangled investment, as traditional as the Fourth of July, and a sure way to build for financial independence. The Series EE U.S. Savings Bond now pays market-based interest rates and is guaranteed by the U.S. Government against loss, theft, and destruction. Bond interest earnings are exempt from state and local income taxes, and the federal income tax liability on earnings can be deferred. Since January 1990 Bonds purchased and redeemed to pay education expenses can be totally tax-exempt (income limitations and certain registration requirements apply to the Education Bond Program).

Army career program helps outgoing soldiers

By Alyanna B. Clay-Heard
Bayonet Staff Writer

A new program to help soldiers have a smoother transition from a military to a civilian lifestyle will be available soon for the Fort Benning community.

The Army Career and Alumni Program, slated to be fully operational on Fort Benning by early September, is a program designed by the Army to help soldiers, their family members and Department of the Army civilian employees easily relocate and find employment in a civilian setting.

"ACAP is was created to provide a more organized, disciplined and caring transition to civilian life for soldiers and civilian employees," said Bill Starke, manager of the fledgling program. "The program was also designed to help the Army to retain quality personnel by proving that the Army takes care of its own," said Starke.

The program is mandatory for soldiers up to six months prior to their expiration term of service date, retirement or medical discharge.

ACAP is starting very slowly now, said Starke. With a staff that consists of manager Starke, five counselors, Pat Sneed, Brenda Mollett, Barbara Youngs, Rochelle Bautista-Niggemann and Thaddieus Wilson Sr. and a clerk, Doris M. Tibbs, the program attempts to provide quality individualized to all personnel.

"ACAP is working with various agencies on post, such as Army Community Services, Army Continuing Education Program, Civilian Personnel Office, Family Member Employment Assistance Program, Military Personnel Office and the Veterans Administration among others, as well as the Chamber of Commerce and other state, city and private agencies to make the program as succesful as possible," said Youngs. "It's a tremendous effort on everyone's part," she added.

"We'll try to work with as many community support agencies as possible...we'll outreach and network as much as is necessary in hopes of benefitting the Fort Benning community," said Starke.

According to Starke and Youngs, the program consists of two major parts, the Transistion Assistance Office and the Job Assistance Center. Transition Assistance Office personnel will provide individual counseling to assess the client's needs and develop an individualized transistion plan.

The Job Assistance Center, the second phase of the ACAP plan, will provide ongoing standardized job search skills training, individual assistance and counseling, workshops and one-stop job-hunting activities.

While ACAP is not a job placement program, referrals to national employers will be one of its services.

"We will help personnel develop job-hunting skills — polishing up their resume, proper dress and etiquette for a civilian lifestyle, teaching them effective interviewing techniques and several other helpful hints for obtaining a civilian job," said Starke.

"The Army has needed a program like this for a long time," said Sgt. 1st Class Anthony Chancey, Headquarters and Service Company, Infantry Training Center, a soldier preparing for his upcoming retirement. "ACAP is putting out information that personnel leaving the military really need to be told. I'm just really happy for the opportunity to be a part of this."

Dual careers

Here's one couple that's making jobs, home, school work

By Janice Mann
Bayonet community writer

Many couples have dual careers. Some couples are part-time students. But few couples are able to manage the busy lifestyle of full-time employment, part-time college and raising children as well as Sgt. 1st Class Agustin and Cindy Sepulveda.

He has been at Fort Benning four years and currently is the non-commissioned officer in charge of Troop Medical Clinic Services at Martin Army Community Hospital.

With five more years until retirement, he is planning for his future by pursuing a degree in Resources Management. He would eventually like to work in an education-related field.

She also works at the hospital as a civilian employee in the Patient Affairs Office. She recently graduated from Troy State University with a bachelor of science degree in Resource Management.

Last year, she received a full scholarship from the Fort Benning Management Association and plans to apply for another as she continues her educational pursuit of a master's degree in management.

Their children, Andy, 5, and Benjamin, 18 months, entertained themselves quietly as Cindy talked about being very pleased with the Child Development Services home-care provider on post they take the children to.

She also mentioned that by finishing her schooling now, she will be more available for the children when they are old enough for extra-curricular activities.

This is a typical day in the Sepulveda household:

Agustin gets at 4:45 a.m. and starts getting himself and the children ready. At the same time, Cindy is up and ready and taken over when Agustin leaves at 5:45. By 6:45, she is on the way to their home-care provider. She squeezes in study time before work.

At 3 p.m., Agustin picks up the children and heads home to start dinner. At 5, Cindy arrives home and by 6 one of them is on the way to school where a "school day" might end at 10 p.m.

In all but one instance, they have been able to schedule their classes so that only one of them is at school on any given evening allowing the other to spend time with the children.

It is evident that cooperation and mutual respect are essential in making their situation work. Cindy was quick to praise her husband for his help and support at home while she in turn does the typing for the both of them. Because they are in the same degree program they have the opportunity to help each other in their classes.

What is the hardest part of their lifestyle? Agustin was quick to respond, "Not enough time in the day." They both agreed that Saturday was their day to recuperate, but even then, some time had to be devoted to schoolwork.

"We both have things we want to accomplish," said Cindy. "The sacrifices will be worth it in the long run."

For now, by setting and reaching goals, they said they are setting an example to their children that education is important.

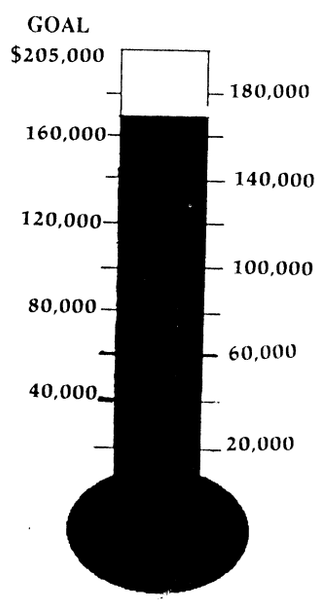
Army Emergency Relief

Fort Benning extends campaign

By James C. Rupp
Bayonet staff writer

The 1991 Army Emergency Relief campaign on post has been extended to July 31.



According to Master Sgt. John Phelps, AER campaign officer, the campaign is designed to replenish AER's reserves.

Phelps said the campaign was extended because donations were slow and the post was still had some distance to go to reach its goal of $205,000.

To date, contributers have only given $170,761 — just 83 percent of the goal. Phelps said the extension will enable the campaign to reach its goal. He said, at this point in time, many people are on leave, having just returned from Desert Storm or are too busy with their own affairs at home to think about the campaign.

The AER fund provides funds for soldiers in times of emergency and when they do not have enough cash of their own in troubled times.

The AER supplies funds for emergency trips home in the event of a family death, emergency car repair and needed home repairs.

AUSA elects new officers

By Brian C. Sutton
Bayonet staff writer

The Association of the U.S. Army's Fort Benning-Chattahoochee Valley chapter elected new officers at a general membership meeting at the Fort Benning Officers' Club July 2 .

Retired Col. Robert S. Poydasheff was given the AUSA presidential pin, thus replacing the outgoing chapter president, Ben Williams.

Kernan relinquishes command; Grange takes over

By James C. Rupp
Bayonet staff writer

A new commander took hold of the reins of the 75th Ranger Regiment July 2 in a ceremony at York Field.

Col. William P. Kernan, commander of the regiment since 1989, handed over the command of the soldiers he personally led into Panama during Operation Just Cause in December 1989 to Col. David L. Grange. Grange is coming from the position of deputy commander at Fort Bragg.

Kernan was commissioned in 1968 from Officer Candidate School here at Fort Benning. His first assignment was with the 1st Brigade of the 82nd Airborne Division. He spent time in Vietnam with the 101st Airborne division as a rifle platoon leader, battalion reconnaisance platoon leader and assistant operations officer before going to Fort Bragg with the 2nd Battalion, 325th Infantry Division as a company commander.

In 1982, Kernan was selected as the U.S. exchange officer to represent the 82nd Airborne Division in the British Parachute Regiment. In 1987, he graduated from the Army War College and then was placed in command of the 1st Battalion of the 75th Regiment.

It was in 1988 that Kernan first was set in a regimental command position as deputy commander of the 75th.

Kernan assumed command of the unit June 30, 1989, and led the rangers into Panama.

Kernan was also selected for promotion to brigadier general in October 1990.

The incoming commander of the 75th also has a history of "high speed" credentials.

After being commissioned from North Georgia College in 1969, his first assignment was as a reconnaissance platoon leader for the 82nd.

In 1970, Grange saw duty in Vietnam as a rifle platoon leader for the 101st Airborne, then as a long range reconnaisance patrol platoon leader for Company L, 75th Ranger Regiment.

In addition to having attended the high altitude; low opening and scuba schools, the U.S. Marine Corps Command and General Staff College and the National War College, Grange has had several assignments in the special operations division.

Grange brings with him to the post his wife, Holly, and their have two sons, David and Matthew.

Former infantryman, now a physician, compares Mideast, Vietnam experiences

Says coming home receptions differ

By Jon R. Anderson
Bayonet staff writer

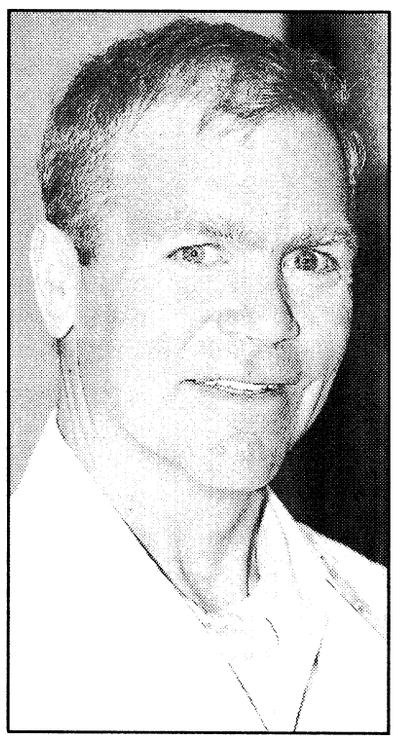
The Tet offensive was raging when Lt. Reginald Moore, with loaded weapon and packed rucksack, climbed aboard a plane at the infamous green ramp to deploy to the faraway country of Vietnam.

Responsible for four squads of 82nd Airborne Division infantrymen, Moore went to the war concerned primarily with survival — survival of his troops and survival for himself.

Just over 20 years later, Col. Reginald Moore, standing on the same green ramp at Fort Bragg, N.C., was mentally preparing himself to go to war once again.

This time, however, his fears weren't as much centered around his own survival or those under his command. His primary concern this time was in being prepared enough to provide for the thousands of potential casualties that the impending Gulf War would produce.

This time, Moore went not as an infantry warrior, but as a medical healer; not as a tactician, but as a doctor.



"I really didn't think I would have to go," said Moore describing his surprise in learning of his assignment to the Desert Shield operation shortly after its conception in August.

But assigned he was; and, by the first week of September, he was standing in Saudi sand.

Within weeks, under the command of the XXVII Airborne Corps, Moore had five evacuation hospitals up, running and ready.

"Ready to support a very big war," he said, describing the 2,000 beds he had awaiting wounded.

With a solemn tone of thankfulness, Moore explained how the actual war ended up producing less allied casualties than the buildup did during Desert Shield.

Col. Reginald Moore

That is not to say his hospitals were without a heavy work load.

"As the actual conflict started," described Moore, "we were flooded with enemy prisoners of war. Some had been wounded in their trenches for weeks without any attention."

"Most of the EPWs were very appreciative, though very guarded because of fear of the secret police," explained Moore describing how Iraqi families could suffer dire consequences if their soldiers were found being friendly toward the enemy Americans.

As the ground war began, Moore said he found a part of himself longing to once again be an infantry commander.

"I had to ask myself, 'what is my purpose in this war,'" Moore said. "My purpose, my job in Vietnam was to go forward and search out the enemy. My purpose in Saudi Arabia was to provide care for the people who were going forward this time."

Despite concerns of the ever-possible chemical threat, Moore said "our biggest fear was in being around an area the Iraqis were aiming a SCUD missile at. "If you weren't sitting right on top of the actual target, there was a chance you might actually get hit," he said.

After supervising the redeployment of his five evacuation hospitals, Moore returned back to the United States in May.

A tear comes to his eye as he describes the stark contrast between the return from Vietnam to coming home from the Persian Gulf. Perhaps, like so many other veterans of both wars, the wounds of the prior war healing a little from the recognition of a now-thankful country.

"When I got back from Vietnam, I got a plane ticket home," he said. "That was about it. Coming home from Saudi, the reception was incredible — it's something I'll never forget," he said decribing the appreciation and fanfare, shown both in New York where his plane first touched down for a layover and at his destination at Lawson Army Airfield.

Now, said Moore, he has some catching up to do. He shows with pride a picture of the family, pointing out the newest addition to his family. His wife was six months pregnant when Moore left for the desert.

"There is definitely some readjustment," he explained, describing how he has had to rediscover his place, in what he calls, a stronger family.

"The real heros of this war are the families that dealt with their loved ones being away for so long," said Moore.

Judging from the smile on his face, however, he seems to be enjoying the rediscovery and readjustment process as he makes up for lost time with his own heros.

Infantry Ball, Doughboy Award set

Former FORSCOM commander to receive this year's award

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Gen. Richard E. Cavazos, who was the commanding general of Forces Command when he retired in 1984, is this year's recipient of the Infantry's Doughboy Award.

Cavazos will be formerly recognized at the Infantry Ball, July 26 at the Fort Benning Officers' Club.

The Doughboy Award is the highest honor the infantry bestows, and goes to individuals who have made substantial contributions to the infantry.

Cavazos, who's remembered as an officer who "always put his soldiers first," was born in Kingsville, Texas, where he grew up on the famed King Ranch.

His father, Lauro Fred Cavazos, known locally as Don Lauro, was a foreman in the Santa Gertrudis cattle division of King Ranch for 43 yeas.

A hard-driving ranch hand, he took part in the last major gunfight against Mexican bandits in Texas and exerted a profound influence on his five children. The most lasting being his common exhortation to "get and education, get an education."

His oldest brother, Lauro Fred Cavazos Jr., served as president of Texas Tech University before becoming the Secretary of Education, a post he held until he resigned earlier this year.

Robert Cavazos was an all-American running back for Texas Tech and is now a ranch owner in Corpus Christi.

Another brother, Joe Cavazos, became a manager of a Sears Store in Bossier City, Louisiana. His only sister, Sarita Cavazos Ochoa, is a school teacher in Laredo, Texas.

WHAT: Infantry Ball, Doughboy Award

WHEN: July 26

WHERE: Fort Benning Officers' Club

PURPOSE: Doughboy award honors individual who has made significant contributions to the infantry

Cavazos began his military career after he graduated from Texas Tech's Reserve Officers Training Corps program with a bachelor of Science Degree in Petroleum Geology.

He was a distinguished military graduate.

He subsequently saw service in the Korean War as a rifle platoon leader and rifle company commander.

In Vietnam, he commanded an infantry battalion of the 1st Infantry Division.

He was also a brigade commander in the 1st Infantry Division, at Fort Riley, Kansas and he commanded the 9th Infantry Division at Fort Lewis, Washington, and III Corp at Fort Hood, Texas.

He was twice awarded the Distinguished Service Cross, the nation's second highest decoration for valor.

Additionally he earned two silver stars, the Defense Superior Service Medal, two Legions of Merit, Distinguished Flying Cross; five Bronze Stars with V Device and the Purple Heart.

He is Airborne and Ranger qualified and wears the Combat Infantry Badge with star for service in two wars.

He was the first Hispanic four-star general in American history and remains one of the nation's foremost experts in military affairs, working as a management and military consultant.

He recently served on President Reagan's Chemical Warfare Review Commission.

Cavazos currently resides in Leander, Texas.

Award honors significant contributions to infantry

USAIC Public Affairs Office

The Doughboy award, which is being presented to General Richard E. Cavazos July 26, is a chrome-plated doughboy helmet worn by soldiers in the American Expeditionary Force during World War I and in the early days of World War II.

It is presented annually to a person who's made a significant contribution to the Infantry force, and is presented on behalf of infantrymen, past, present and future.

The original award can be seen in the foyer of Infantry Hall at Fort Benning.

Past recipients of the award include Bob Hope, H. Ross Perot, Bill Mauldin, John O. Marsh, Jr., Senators John G. Tower and Robert J. Dole, and Generals Frederick Kroesen, Aubrey Newman, Matthew B. Ridgway, and William E. DePuy.

The term "doughboy" was used for raw American recruits rushed to Europe in World War I. It came from Texas, where soldiers trained along the Rio Grande and became covered in white dust of the adobe soil.

Mounted troops called them "adobes." This degenerated to "dobies," which became "doughboys."

'Dependables' change commanders

By Tom Wilkinson
3rd Brigade, 24th Infantry Division

In the stifling Georgia heat, the soldiers of the 197th Support Battalion "Dependables" stood tall one last time.

The battalion conducted two events July 1 on Kelley Hill. the battalion's colors were first carried for the last time as the unit conducted a redesignation ceremony, changing to the 324th Forward Support Battalion, 24th Infantry Division (Mechanized).

Second, the Dependables said farewell to Lt. Col. Jefferson D. Huffam in a change of command ceremony and welcomed Lt. Col. Robert T. Dail.

The unit, which was reorganized from a combat service support unit in March 1973, has had a distinguished history. Providing supply, transportation, maintenance, medical, personnel, administrative services and miscellaneous field services, the unit has served the brigade in an outstanding manner.

"You delivered the goods," said Maj. Gen. Barry R. McCaffrey, the division commander, as he applauded the unit's efforts during Operation Desert Storm.

As the soldiers and guests looked on, the old colors were furled, making way for the new colors and the challenges that lie ahead.

Huffam dipped the old colors as Command Sgt. Maj. John L. Wright Jr. carefully furled and cased them, ending a long and distinguished history. Col. James C. King, commander of the 24th Division Support Command, held the new color of the 324th as his command sergeant major cased and furled them, beginning a new and challenging history for the battalion.

"It's a great day to be a Victory Division soldier," said King. "You've accomplished two missions here today — first, a battalion redesignation and second, a change of command. You may have changed the name and the colors, but you're still the 'Dependables.' You still support one of the finest brigades, and you are victory soldiers in the best division in the world."

Huffam echoed those sentiments as he talked to the soldiers for the last time.

"A change of command is a time to reflect on past accomplishments," he said. "The battalion's trademark is to provide support anywhere in the world." The battalion did just that, in one of the most harsh environments imaginable, in Saudi Arabia and Iraq.

"The most rewarding accomplishment anyone can have is leading great soldiers such as you," Huffam concluded.

Dail, who is no stranger to the division, was enthusiastic in his remarks.

"It is a special day to return here to be a Victory Division soldier," he said. "I look forward to leading you as we accept the challenges that lie ahead."

Huffam leaves the brigade with his wife, Sarah, and two daughters to go to Washington, D.C., for an assignment in the Office of the Department of Defense Inspector General.

Dail, his wife, Anne, and their three daughters come to the battalion from Fort Stewart and the 24th Infantry Division, where he served as executive officer, 724th Support Battalion and as the operations officer for the division support command.

36th Eng. Grp. changes command

By Brian C. Sutton
Bayonet staff writer

"I hate leaving here," said Col. Henry "Hank" Miller, former commander of the 36th Engineer Group here.

Miller spent his two years in command of the 36th, an organization that has had its fair share of hard times — hard times in the desert, that is.

The majority of the 36th deployed to Southwest Asia in support of Operation Desert Shield and Desert Storm. A portion of the 36th, the 598th Maintenance Company, remains in Southwest Asia.

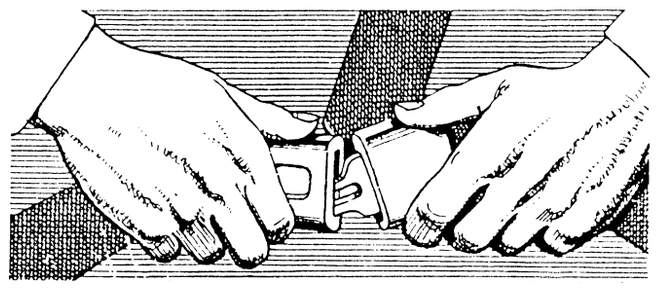
"The group is a very diverse organization," said Maj. Gen. Carmen Cavezza, post commander. Cavezza spoke at Miller's change of command ceremony July 3 at French Field here.

The engineer group is made up of not only engineers, but also finance, ordnance, transportation and maintenance units.

"I am honored to have served with these soldiers during Desert Storm," said Miller.

Miller, whose next assignment will be at Fort Leonard Wood, Mo., said, "There are some real superstars here that make things happen on a day-to-day basis."

Miller claimed that working as commander of the 36th put him in touch with a lot of those superstars — superstars that made things happen for the group at home, but more importantly, while deployed to the Middle East.



The incoming commander, Col. Phillip R. Anderson, a California native, is a graduate of the Virginia Military Institute in Lexington, Ky.. He graduated with a commission in the Corps of Engineers in 1970 through Virginia Military Institute's Reserve Officers' Training Corps program.

Anderson, in the tradition of the incoming commander, spoke only briefly and praised modestly the troops who had gathered in the stands and the detachments on the field.

"You look great, you are great. I am proud to be your new commander," said Anderson.

Ranger Training Brigade to dedicate graduation field

Ceremony to honor Malvesti

Ranger Training Brigade

The Ranger Training Brigade will dedicate its physical training and graduation field east of the ranger compound in Harmony Church in memory of Col. Richard J. Malvesti Tuesday at 11 a.m.

Malvesti entered active duty in 1967 after being commissioned as a second lieutenant from Alfred University's Reserve Officers' Training Corps.

He graduated as a distinguished military graduate and received a regular Army commission.

Malvesti served as an assistant and senior district advisor in Vietnam. After this combat tour, he spent nearly three years as instructor of the U.S. Army's Ranger Department, assigned to Eglin Air Force Base.

In 1974, Malvesti volunteered for and was assigned to the newly-formed 2nd Ranger Battalion at Fort Lewis, Wash.

He was later assigned as training officer of the 9th Infantry Brigade, and later returned to the Ranger Battalion as the operations officer. Malvesti went to Fort Bragg in 1980 where he served for one year as the operations officer for the 82nd Division Support Command.

Since then, Malvesti served in several command and staff assignments.

Malvesti's awards include the Defense Superior Service Maedal, the Legion of Merit, the Bronze Star Medal, two awards; one with valor device, the Defense Meritorious Service, the Meritorious Service Medal, two awards, the Army Commendation Medal, two awards and the Army Achievement Medal.

Malvesti died July 26, 1990, in a parachuting accident at Holland Drop Zone, Fort Bragg, N.C.

"I think it is very appropriate that all future rangers will execute physical training and graduate on field dedicated to Colonel Malvesti," said Col. John J. Maher, Ranger Training Brigade commander. "Dick was the hardest, and mentally the toughest soldier I have ever known. He set the standard for the rest of us to follow."

Planning makes trips better

U.S. Army Safety Center

"We're going on a trip; we're going on a trip," the kids cry gleefully. You worked late today to tie up loose ends before departing. Bags are hastily jammed full of clothes and essentials. The faithful car leaves at dawn.

You're pretty sure the registration and insurance card is in the glove compartment. Your friend borrowed the map, but you practically know the way by heart, anyway. And the family sedan's never let you down on a trip.

Everything's ship shape, and you don't have a care in the world. Well, good luck. You're going to need it.

If you've ever seen National Lampoon's Vacation or European Vacation, you know that when it comes to trips anything that can go wrong will. Planning not only keeps intentions from going awry, it can also prevent injuries.

Approximately 1.7 million Americans are disabled in vehicle accidents every year. Nearly 50,000 drivers and passengers are killed annually on the road. Trip planning can reduce these tragic figures.

Initially, you need to check the faithful family set of wheels. Despite the years of trouble-free service it's provided, you need to check its condition.

Mechanical malfunction inevitably rears its ugly head on long trips. Glitches in essential items such as steering and braking can be dangerous. Inspect belts, hoses, battery, and lights while you're at it.

Prepare for road contingencies as well. Be sure your spare is inflated and in place. Pack extra belts, hoses, fuses, spark plugs, windshield wiper blades, and oil. Bring some basic tools and a fire extinguisher, too.

Don't forget the things you can get arrested for not having. Bring your driver's license, insurance, and vehicle registration. An extra set of keys in your spouse's care isn't a bad idea, either.

Plan your route carefully. Consult current maps. Consider the weather, the types of roads, and construction. Don't drive when tired or under the influence of alcohol or drugs.

Taste Germany at Ilona's

Willkommen zu (welcome to) Ilona's Fine Food & Spirits, where you get a taste of Germany right here in Columbus.

Open since April and located at 1024 Broadway Ave. in Rankin Square (where Pigeon's once was), Ilona's serves savory German and American dishes for lunch and dinner in a warm and hearty German atmosphere.

"Our food is authentic," says owner/manager Ilona McManus, a native of Germany. Some of Ilona's staff are also German, but all of the servers are specially trained to answer questions. Ilona is always on hand for recommendations.

"I enjoy this restaurant because I love people," says Ilona. "I am a people person." And she shows this in the way she works alongside her servers, greeting customers and making them comfortable.

These extraordinary qualities — combined with an airy, patio-style interior full of windows, German pictures, flags and music — enhance the total dining experience at Ilona's. Guests can also opt to eat on the outdoor patio which, Ilona says, will eventually be a beer garden. Ilona is also planning a fall Oktoberfest.

Among the many dishes on the menu are Ilona's specialties — wiener schnitzel (a center cut of veal breaded with an original German recipe); rouladen (tender top round beef, sliced thin, rolled around special spices and served with a rich German gravy); and sauerbraten (beef marinated with vinegar, spices and seasonings for two days, then browned and served with gravy, potato dumplings and red cabbage).

Ilona's lunch menu is rounded out nicely with several American salad and sandwich favorites.

The reasonably priced lunch and dinner menus vary slightly. All dinners are accompanied by soup, a unique salad, a choice of vegetable and a basket of German bread, sour dough rolls and butter. Daily specials are available.

Ilona's serves wine and German-imported beer, and Happy Hours at the Boarhead Bar are from 5-7 p.m. Wednesday through Friday.

Ilona's is open for lunch from 11 a.m. to 2:30 p.m. weekdays and for dinner from 5-10 p.m. Wednesday through Saturday. Reservations are accepted.

For a change of pace and a new experience, try Ilona's. One taste of this fine food and you'll tip your hat to Christine — the restaurant's head chef. ■

Benning celebrates Fourth of July with food, folks and fireworks

By Jon R. Anderson
Bayonet staff writer

President Bush called for a Fourth of July celebration like no other. Had America's commander in chief been present at Fort Benning, he probably would have been satisfied.

Despite 92-degree heat and a 50 percent chance of rain, record crowds showed up by the thousands to celebrate the nation's 215th birthday and regale once more in the Persian Gulf victory.

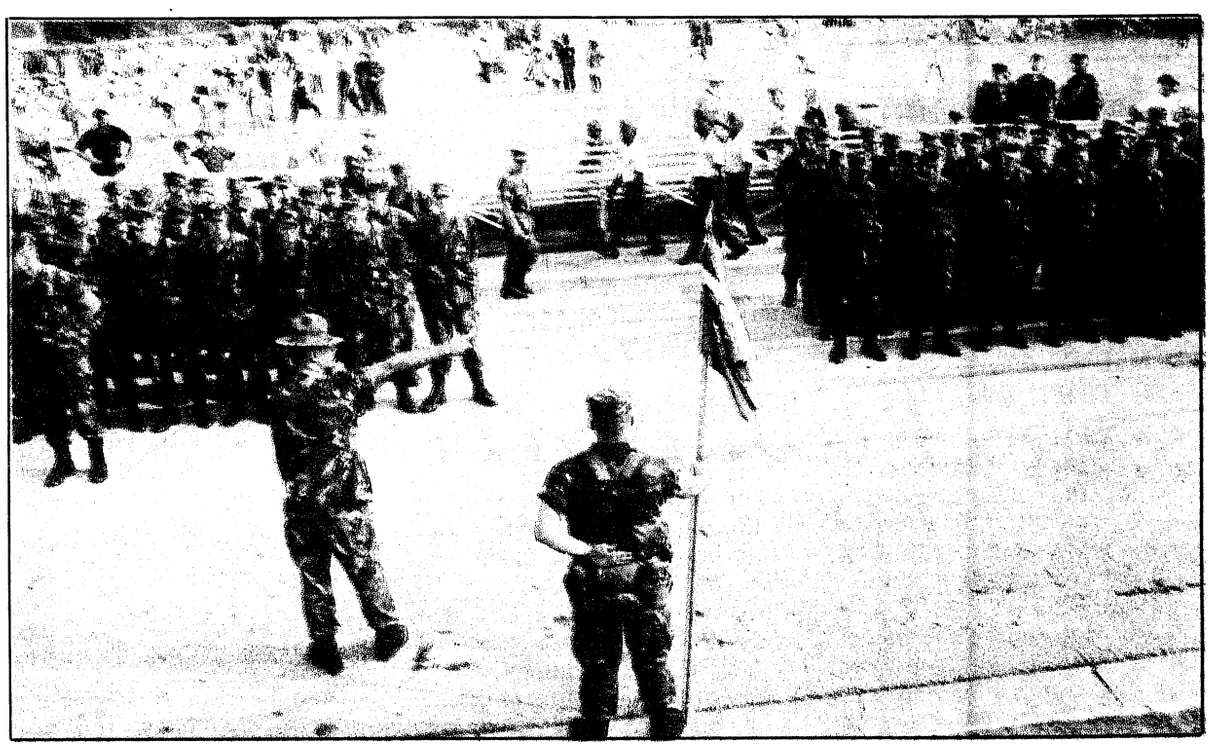
The local chapter of the Association of the U.S. Army coordinated a wide range of entertainment and games throughout the day and saw to it that plenty of food and drink was available to those in attendance.

The Silver Wings made two parachute demonstration jumps and the Ranger Training Brigade showed just a little of what rangers could do with helicopters.

The Georgia Watermelon Association donated more than 20,000 pounds of sliced sweetness, said Fort Benning officials; and, the 1991 Watermelon Queen, Melissa Griffin, was on hand to make sure everyone got their fair share.

By dusk, an estimated 20,000 revelers had settled down on blankets, lawn chairs and even a few car hoods to watch the show.

With nine people loading, launching and spotting, the pyrotechnics team began just as stars began to twinkle through the clearing clouds.

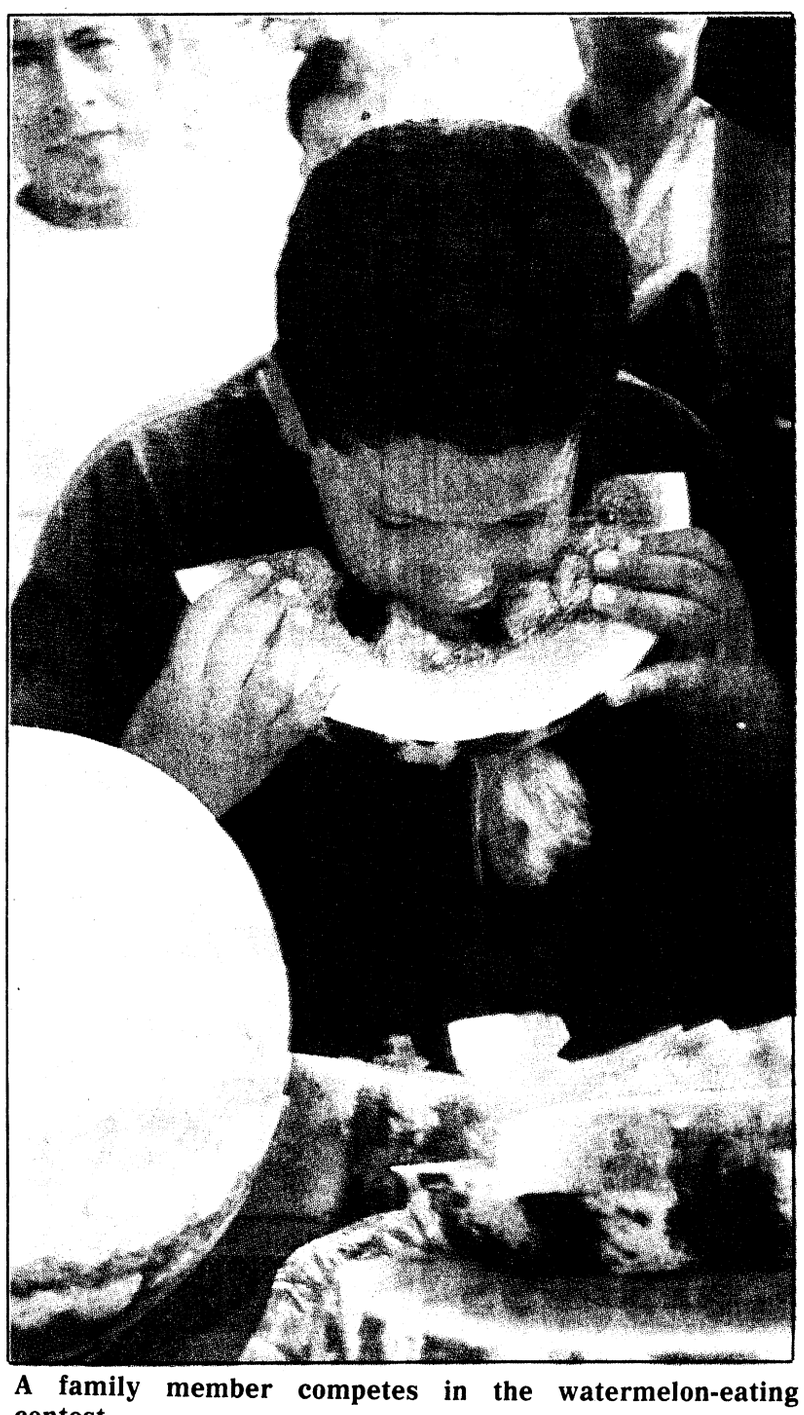


A total of 800 individual shells lit the sky, said Mike Miller, fireworks coordinator, who, for two months, prepared the Fort Benning show.

According to post officials, the exhibition, sponsored in part by AT&T, amounted to "just over $15,000 worth of fireworks" — almost twice as much as last year's show.

"This is a celebration of being free for over two hundred year," said one person in attendance.

"I'm not sure if everyone's been free that long," said another explaining that only with the relatively recent civil rights movement have all begun to enjoy real freedom.



"But I'm glad I live in a country where that kind of change can and has taken place," he added.

Staff Sgt. Joseph Bulick , a drill sergeant at Company E, 2nd Battalion, 54th Infantry, Infantry Training Center, releases his company of basic trainees.

Lane Smith prepares for the day's grand finale.

Racquetball players compete for Fort Benning championship

By Brian C. Sutton
Bayonet staff writer

The 1991 U.S. Army Infantry Center Racquetball Championships took place June 21 through 23 at the racquetball center on Main Post.

Men and women, of various levels of ability competed in singles and doubles plays for the championship trophy and the title of the 1991 racquetball champion.

Competitors faced a single elimination tournament. Winning two out of three games were required to claim the match.

The winner of the men's singles masters was David Matthews of Headquarters and Headquarters Detachment, Non-Commissioned Officers Academy, over Terry Bell of Headquarters, 43rd Engineer Battalion, by a score of 15-6, 15-6.

Seniors division play was nearly identical to the first with Andre Beauchamp, Company C, 24th Infantry Division defeating Henry McEachern of Company D, 1st Battalion, 507th Parachute Infantry Regiment 15-7, 15-10.

Jody Dieker, 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment, was edged out of the novice championship by Steven Brothers, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 36th Engineer Group, 15-8, 9-15, and in an 11-point tie-breaking game Dieker lost 11-7.

Brothers couldn't seem to match up to the skills of Eduardo Salehroa of D Troop, 4th Armored Cavalry squadron, 3rd Brigade, 24th Infantry Division as Salehroa quelled Brothers 14-15, 15-5 and 11-7 during B level play.

Ricardo Sanchez, 3rd Brigade, 24th Infantry Division, faired well against Bruce Grant of Headquarters Company, 75th Ranger Regiment in the open division. Sanchez took the match 15-10, 9-15 and 11-10.

Women's play provided a bit more competitiveness than did the men's.

Winning the championship for the novice division was Georgette Bennett, Detachment A, Continental United States Replacement Center over Annegret Narcisse, Physical Activities Branch, Briant Wells Field House, 15-3, 15-6.

One of two military family members to claim a championship was Taua Soli who barely overtook Delores Castillo in open play 15-12, 14-15, 11-5.

However, Castillo, a family member as well, stabbed at Avis Matthews, family member, and claimed her victory in B level play 12-15, 15-5, 11-1.

Fans vs. Players

Lately, we have had a series of nasty incidents of direct physical confrontations between fans and players. Over and over again, players have gotten into shouting matches with fans who were heckling them. A few have thrown baseballs into the stands, usually hitting an innocent spectator, and others have actually left the field and climbed into the seats to confront fans.

In my opinion, this is wrong. Fans are too important to baseball to be treated this way. Without them, the players, owners and everyone else involved with the game would be out of jobs.

It is unusual in one sense that this problem has become so bad now. The new ballparks place the fans much farther away from the players. In the old parks, like the Dodgers' Ebbets Field in Brooklyn, fans were right on top of us. It was the same in the old park in St. Louis.

The fans in Philadelphia and New York are tough, but they are educated fans. They really know their baseball in those cities. I guess the fans who were toughest on me were the "bleacher bums" in Chicago. But again, they are very knowledgeable, very smart fans. They know baseball, and when you loaf, they know it. When they see a million-dollar player doing something he shouldn't, they let him have it. And there's nothing wrong with that.

That's where the line should be drawn. I don't think fans should get so abusive as to talk about a player's family or turn the situation into a personal vendetta. Those fans don't need to be in the ballpark. But if they want to yell, "You bum, you struck out!" that doesn't bother me.

As for the players, I believe that if they were more involved in their own game rather than in what fans were yelling, then no amount of heckling would bother them. No player has ever taken the abuse Jackie Robinson took when he broke into the major leagues. But he could really take it because he was concentrating on his job, which was playing good baseball.

When I was chasing Babe Ruth's record, there were some ballparks at which I was really taunted. But for the life of me, I can't imagine what the fan in the 15th row could say that would upset me enough to throw a baseball into the stands. That makes no sense to me.

Hank Aaron is the top home-run hitter of all time with 755 homers. A member of baseball's Hall of Fame, Hank is senior vice president of the Atlanta Braves.

Cleveland Indians hold two-day tryout

Area scout for the Cleveland Indians will be holding tryouts at Golden Park on Monday and Tuesday. Youths aged 16 to 21 are welcome to participate.

Those participating in the tryouts are responsible to bring their gloves, shoes and other personal equipment. A letter of permission or a release form from their coach is also required if the youth is presently playing in an organized league or on an organized team. Players interested in trying out should contact John Dittrich at 571-8866.

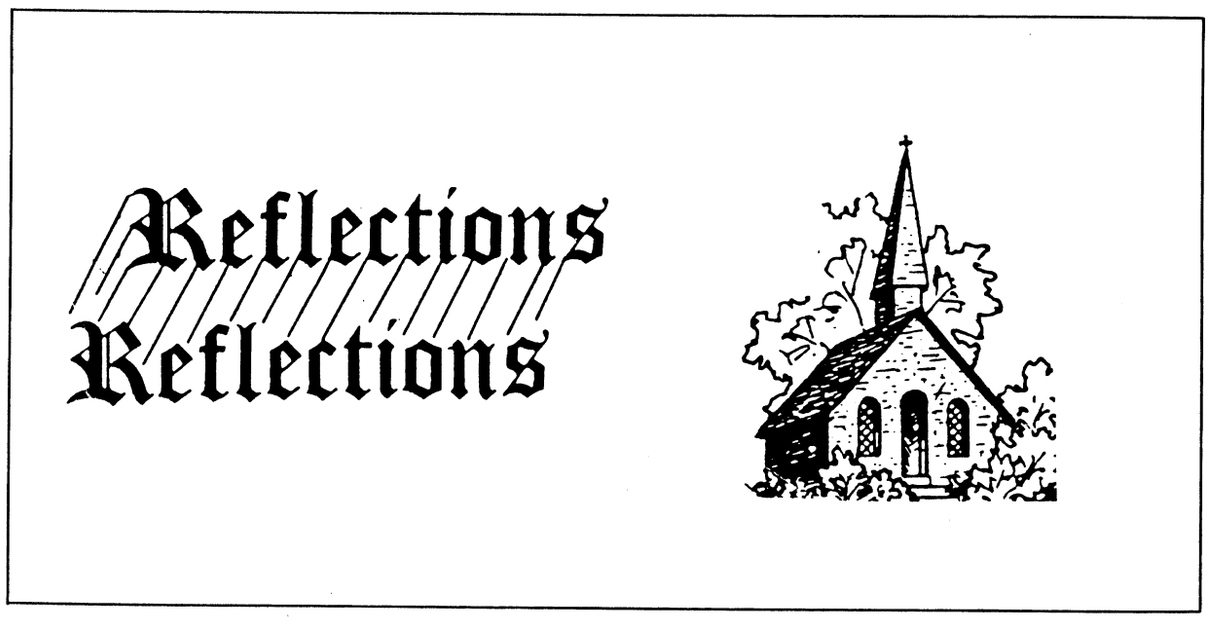
We can do all things with God's help

By Chaplain Richard L. Pace
11th Infantry Regiment

CHAPLAIN'S NOTES

One day a small boy was trying to move a stone, but he couldn't budge it. His father, passing by, stopped to watch his efforts. Finally he said to his son, "Are you using all your strength?" "Yes I am!" the boy cried, exasperated. "No," his father said calmly, "You're not. You haven't asked me to help you."



How often do we give up when the obstacle in our way seems too big for us to move. Though we strain with all the strength we have, though we try every idea we can think of, the problem we are facing just will not move.

Yet, we cannot estimate our ability properly unless we include the immeasurable resources at our disposal through the help of our father who is in heaven. We may be limited in what we can make happen, but, with God, all things are possible.

We should never give up. When attempting a task, big or small, we would do well to stop for a moment and pray, in all humility, for God's help. God wants to help us with those small things that frustrate us as well as those giant things that overwhelm us.

The apostle Paul learned that God the Father is both reliable and resourceful when it comes to helping his children. Through experience, Paul learned that God was faithful to help him regardless of what faced him. It was Paul's confidence in God enabling him to proclaim, "I can do all things through Christ who strengthens me." (Phil. 3:14)

If you are trying to move a boulder in your life, let me encourage you to look to God as a source of strength to help you. You may not be able to handle everything yourself. But with God on your side you can do anything.

Chaplains' assistants share a proud history in chaplaincy

By Gregory B. Clancy
USAIC Chaplains Office

Throughout the war of independence, chaplains appear to have functioned without enlisted aid in the form of assistants. Chaplain David Avery of the Patterson's Massachusetts Regiment first mention having the service of an enlisted man.

Once the chaplain was assigned to a unit and set up his various programs, he learned that he needed an assistant. The commanders would usually appoint an enlisted man to help the chaplain.

However, in late 1909, the chief of staff of the Army ordered the authorization of an assistant for each chaplain. One enlisted man would be onspecial duty to assist the chaplain in performing his official duties.

It wasn't until World War II, chaplains assistant were authorized by regulation. The assistant was classified as a clerk-typist. His duties were to drive, to type, play the organ and lead a choir, carry a weapon to protect himself and the chaplain, set up the altar for Catholic, Protestant and Jewish services, maintain record and prepare reports. The nature of the work required assistants who were intelligent, efficient, and of unquestioned moral stature.

In 1949 the chief of chaplains recommended that assistant be assigned after completing a special course at the Army Chaplain School, on the job training, or civilian training in religion or music. However, it was not until the early 1960s, that a distinct military occupational specialty was granted to chaplains' assistants. As a consequence, on Sept. 11, 1967, a more complete and detailed course of instruction was re-opened at the Chaplain School and graduates were awarded a special MOS.

Presently, the Army Chaplain School is located at Fort Monmouth, N.J.

Until this day, the various duties of a chaplain assistant remain versatile and challenging. However, the duty of leading a choir and playing a piano is not mandatory and done on a volunteering basis.

Singer brings musical ministry to Fort Benning community

By Gabrielle Sonnenberg
USAIC Chaplains Office

A contemporary Christian music singer will perform free concerts Sunday through Tuesday in Fort Benning.

Darlene Van Dyke who has been sharing the gospel through music for more than half of her life and still continues with numerous concerts each year, will perform in eight concerts at various worship services and in unit areas on post.

At 10 years old, Van Dyke traveled with her father, mother, brother and sister in their family group, "The Van Dyke Family Singers." Fred and Becky, her siblings, went off to Bible school, narrowing the family group to "The Van Dyke Trio." Shortly thereafter, Van Dyke sung most of the solos. Recognizing her talent, her father arranged the opportunity for recording her first album. At age 12, Bill Gaither's recording studio, Pinebrook, Alexandria, In, received a new artist. Van Dyke has recorded four albums at Pinebrook, all of which were produced by John Innes, organist for The Billy Graham Crusades. Recently, she has recorded her fifth project at Big Mama's Music Group in Knoxville, Tenn.

The past 10 years have been filled with appearances at churches, banquets, television, radio, school assemblies, conferences, campgrounds, youth retreats, military installations and amphitheaters.

"Her collection of songs tell of her love, faith, devotion and joy of living to honor Jesus Christ," said Chaplain (Maj.) Allen Bloomstrom, Chief of Chaplain Reserve Management. "The power of the Holy Spirit is evident in her life and ministry. Darlene really appeals to soldiers and communicates a powerful message."

Van Dyke's concert schedule is as follows:

- Sunday, 8:30 a.m. — Soldier's Chapel
  9:45 a.m. — Regimental Chapel
  11 a.m.-2 p.m. — Kelley Hill Chapel
  7 p.m. — 4-30 BN Classroom
- Monday, 11:30 a.m.-1 p.m. — 11th Regt. Messhall
  7 p.m. — 30th AG BN.
- Tuesday, 10 a.m. — 4th RTB Classroom

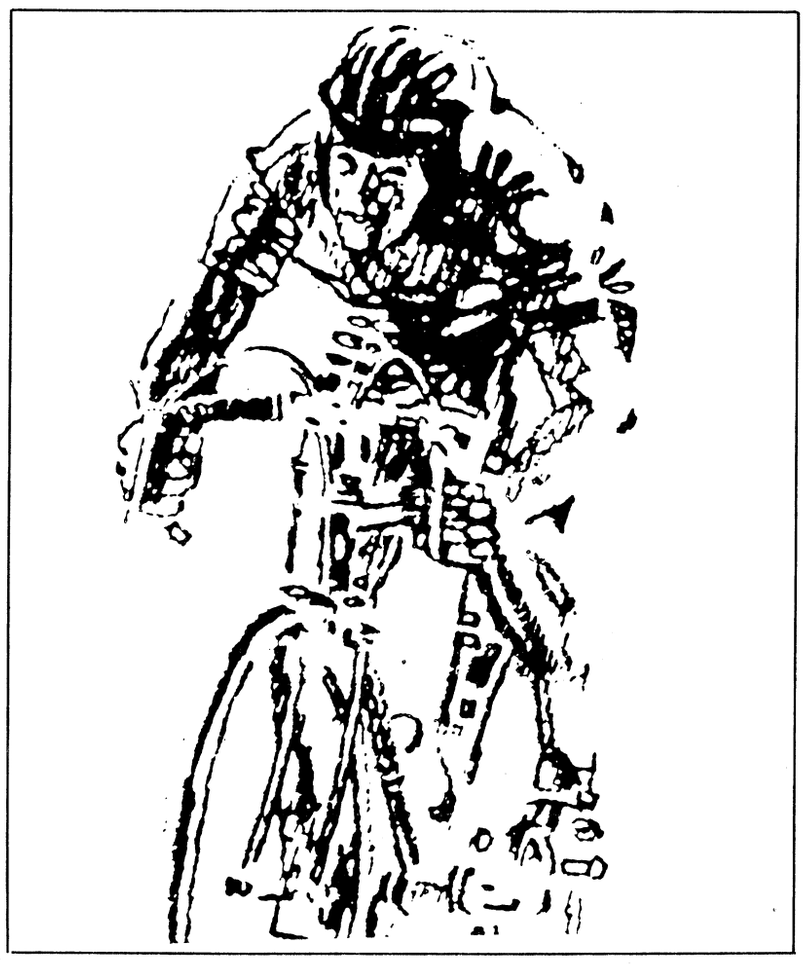
More than 750 cycling enthusiasts of all abilities will be pedaling 150 miles conquer multiple sclerosis on Sept. 21 and 22.

Corporations and Georgians across the state will be teaming up against multiple sclerosis, the most common central nervous system disease among young adults in the U.S., in the 1991 Mutiple Sclerosis 150 Bike Tour.

Georgia's sixth annual MS 150 Bike Tour is a two-day, fully-catered tour with overnight camping and cabin accommodations at Rock Eagle, a state park and camp ground. Mechanical support, sag vehicles, medical assistance and a communications team will also be available.



The carefully marked route begins in Atlanta and has rests-tops every 10 miles with snacks, fresh fruit, water and other refreshments. It is a weekend filled with food and fun.

Multiple sclerosis is a chronic disease of the central nervous system in which the simplest everyday tasks can no longer be taken for granted.

Its symptoms run the gamut from slight blurring of vision to complete paralysis. There is no known cause or cure.

The 1991 MS 150 Bike Tour will provide important research, education and support services for the 3,000 Georgians who have multiple sclerosis.

To register for the bike tour or to volunteer, please call Randy Pandis at 322-6106.

ENERGY WATCH

By Jennie McRae
Energy Branch

According to officials at the Energy Branch, Directorate of Engineering and Housing, if you keep your filters in good shape this summer, you'll stand a better chance of staying cool.

DEH policy requires that Family Housing members be responsible for keeping their air conditioning filters changed and that the filters be changed once a month.

It is a quick and simple task, and requires so little effort for so much benefit.

New filters are issued at the Unit Housing and Support Branch, Building 385, on Vibbert Avenue. Just find the size and let them know, or take in the old filter, and the Self-Help staff will issue a new one.

The Unit and Housing Support Branch Chief says troop unit personnel responsible for changing filters in their units must submit a Department of Army Form 4283 to the Work Order Section, Building 262, Edwards Street, to obtain new filters. This should be done ahead of time (approximately 30 days) since certain sizes of filters have to be ordered through supply channels.

When air filters become filled with dust and dirt, air conditioner coils become clogged. The unit has to work harder to cool the house, reducing its efficiency or stopping it altogether.

Cleaning and repair are costly in man-hours and tax dollars spent.

Neglected air conditioners can take up to four man-hours or longer to repair and may require replacement of the condenser unit.

The cost of the compressor alone may be $400 or more, and responsible occupants can be charged for the full cost of the repair, including all parts and labor.

In addition to the possibility of damage to the air conditioner, the quality of the air circulated through the house is reduced. Dirt and dust are blown through the system and into the air instead of staying trapped in the filter.

Dirty filters also cause energy waste. Because the air flow is obstructed, an air conditioner must work harder and longer to force air through the filter. The unit will always work most efficiently with a clean filter.

Energy Branch officials advise post residents to be sharp — don't let your filter get out of kilter — change it every 30 days.

If you have any questions, call the Energy Office at 545-SWAT (Save Watts and Therms).

ASK THE JUDGE

By Michael H. Lane
Staff Judge Advocate's Office

Q. My husband, who retired after 30 years in the Army, recently passed away. I went to a civilian attorney for some help with his estate. I thought that I wouldn't have any problems because my husband had a will that left everything to me.

However, the attorney I spoke with was very concerned that my husband's will was signed in January 1970 and didn't have a self-proving clause with it. What is the big deal about a self-proving clause? Is the will any good?

A. The first thing you should be aware of is that as a family member of a retired soldier, you may be entitled to legal assistance at the Judge Advocate General Office to probate the will.

This could save you money because the JAG attorneys do not charge for their services.

I advise you to check with the Legal Assistance Office to determine your eligibility for assistance.

The civilian attorney you spoke with was justified in mentioning the lack of a self-proving clause because its absence could make the probate of your husband's estate much more time consuming than it need be.

In the early 1980s, most state legislatures enacted provisions sanctioning the use of self-proving clauses.

Thus, when an individual makes a new will, another page is attached to the back of the will that attests that the testator signed the will and that the witnesses watched him sign it. This additional document is then signed and sealed by a notary public.

The significance of this document is that it is no longer necessary to locate the witnesses to have them testify they watched the testator sign the will.

In the absence of a self-proving clause, the probate judge ordinarily must have an affidavit from at least one of the witnesses that covers the important aspects of how the will was signed.

For those soldiers who had wills signed years ago at old duty stations using witnesses who happened to be present in the legal office at the time, big problems may arise when, years later, it is necessary to locate those witnesses.

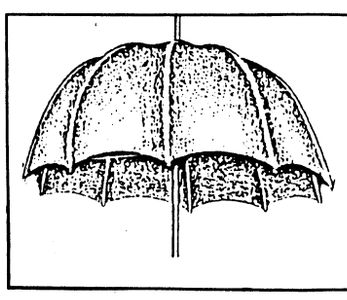
Imagine someone trying to locate a witness 15 years from now at the apartment that they rented while attending Infantry Officers Advanced Course at Fort Benning.

Fortunately, Georgia law provides that Georgia residents' wills may still be probated even if the original witnesses cannot be located and no self-proving clause was used.

Although there is this alternative, the process is more involved and requires that two witnesses, who are familiar with the testator's signature, take their own time to come to the court to testify about the testator's signature. It is better to present the self-proving clause with the will and complete the probate proceeding quickly.

Moreover, the law of states other than Georgia may not provide for an alternative method to probate wills if the original witnesses cannot be located.

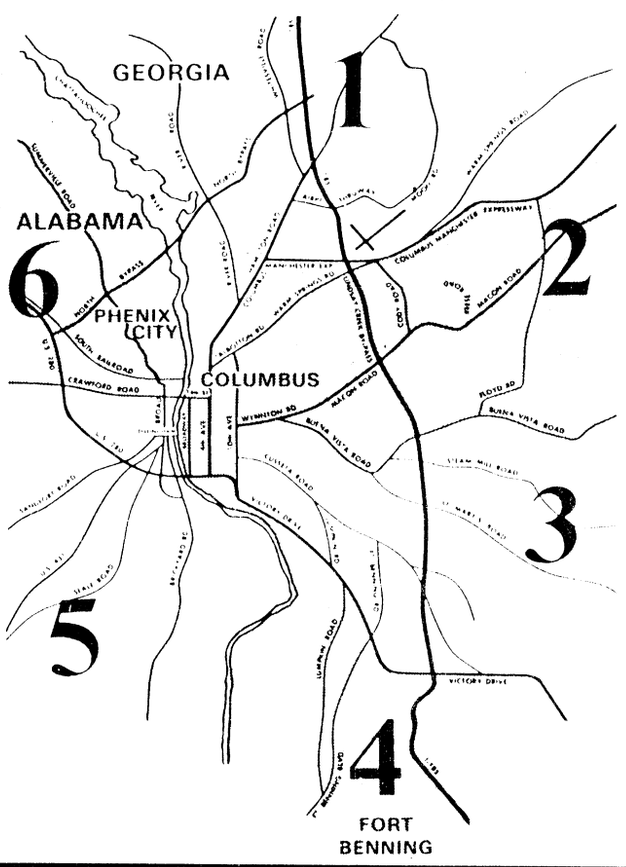
To be safe, it's best to review your will at least every four to five years to ensure your estate will benefit not only from the specific distribution plans that you have made, but also the latest changes in the law, such as self-proving clauses.



You may also want to discuss with the attorney the need for a living will and a Georgia Durable Power of Attorney, two documents that weren't available at the time that your husband had his will drafted in 1970.

A Georgia durable power of attorney can be used by you, as a Georgia resident, to name individuals as agents to make decisions regarding your medical care when you are no longer capable of doing so.

Married couples with real estate may consider deeding the property to themselves jointly with right of survivorship to avoid the need for a probate if one spouse dies.



Call the Legal Assistance Office at 545-3281 or 545-3282 to make an appointment to have your old will reviewed and, if necessary, a new will drafted.

Discuss with the attorney the need for a living will, durable power of attorney, and survivorship deed.

Rangers dedicate field to honor fallen comrade

By James C. Rupp
Bayonet staff writer

The Ranger Training Brigade dedicated its physical training and graduation field east of the ranger compound in Harmony Church in memory of Col. Richard J. Malvesti Wednesday.

Maj. Gen. Wayne A. Downing, commander of Joint Special Operations Command, Fort Bragg, N.C., and former commander of both 1st and 2nd ranger battalions, was the guest speaker for the ceremony.

During his speech before the crowd, Downing shared some of his personal experiences with Malvesti.

Col. John J. Maher III, Ranger Training Brigade commander, was present at the dedication as well as Malvesti's family.

Malvesti was commissioned into the Army in 1967 out of Alfred University where he graduated as a distinguished military graduate. In Vietnam, he served as an assistant and senior district adviser.

Afterwards, he spent approximately three years as an instructor at the Ranger Department, stationed at Eglin Air Force Base.

Malvesti then volunteered and was assigned to the 2nd Ranger Battalion in 1974.

After that assignment, Malvesti did various tours as a training officer for the 9th Infantry Brigade, served as operations officer for the 82nd Division Support Command and various command and staff positions.

Malvesti died in Fort Bragg July 26 in a parachuting accident.

"Dick was the hardest and mentally toughest soldier I have ever known," said Maher.

Malvesti was also the recipient of several awards including the Defense Superior Service Medal, the Legion of Merit, the Bronze Star with two awards including one with valor device, the Defense Meritorious Service, Army Commendation Medal and the Army Achievement Medal.

WHEN: July 26, reception and cocktails begin at 6:30 p.m.

WHERE: Fort Benning Officers' Club

TICKETS: By invitation only

SEQUENCE OF EVENTS: After dinner, the winner of this year's Doughboy Award, retired Gen. Richard E. Cavazos, will receive the award and make remarks.

The Infantry Ball and the awarding of this year's Doughboy Award will be July 26 at the Fort Benning Officers' Club.

The award is the highest honor the infantry bestows and goes to individuals who have made substantial contributions to the infantry.

Cavazos

Gen. Richard E. Cavazos, who was the commanding general of Forces Command when he retired in 1984, is this year's recipient of the infantry's Doughboy Award.

Cavazos will be formally recognized at the ball.

Cavazos, who is remembered as an officer who "always put his soldiers first," was born in Kingsville, Texas, where he grew up on the famed King Ranch.

Cavazos began his military career after he graduated from Texas Tech's Reserve Officers' Training Corps program with a bachelor of science degree in petroleum geology.

He was a distinguished military graduate.

He subsequently saw service in the Korean War; and, in Vietnam, he commanded an infantry battalion of the 1st Infantry Division.

He was also a brigade commander in the 1st Infantry Division, at Fort Riley, Kan., and he commanded the 9th Infantry Division at Fort Lewis, Wash., III Corps at Fort Hood, Texas.

He was twice awarded the Distinguished Service Cross, the nation's second highest decoration for valor.

Additionally he earned two silver stars, the Defense Superior Service Medal, two Legions of Merit, Distinguished Flying Cross; five Bronze Stars with valor device and the Purple Heart.

He is airborne and ranger qualified and wears the Combat Infantryman Badge with star for service in two wars.

He was the first Hispanic four-star general in American history and remains one of the nation's foremost experts in military affairs, working as a management and military consultant.

He recently served on former President Ronald Reagan's Chemical Warfare Review Commission.

Cavazos currently resides in Leander, Texas.

Fort Benning to get new units

Post will receive 1,028 additional soldiers

USAIC Public Affairs Office

The Army recently announced that it will relocate several units from Europe.

Fort Benning will receive the 317th Engineer Battalion (Mechanized) with more than 800 assigned personnel during fiscal 1992.

This organization will provide engineer support to the 3rd Brigade, 24th Infantry Division (Mechanized) and is projected to be located with the brigade in the Kelley Hill area.

Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 13th Supply and Services Battalion with 58 personnel will also arrive during fiscal 1992 and be attached to the 36th Engineer Group.

In fiscal 1993, a medium transportation company consisting of approximately 170 personnel will be deployed from Europe to Fort Benning.

As a result of the reorganization of the 197th Infantry Brigade to the 3rd Brigade, 24th Infantry Division (Mechanized), there will be very little impact on housing these units.

Adequate facilities and training resources exist to accommodate the units projected for redeployment to Fort Benning.

The Army's proposed stationing for the units is based first upon the mission of the unit with respect to the contingency force, and then the capability of the installation to accept the unit or units immediately.

Shopping at the commissary can be a tremendous challenge

By Clyde Snively

COMMENTARY

As high as the divorce rate is among civilians, it's even higher among members in the military.

Pressures of the job, long and frequent separations are a couple of reasons for this.

For instance, many soldiers returning from the Gulf War get a brass band reception and once the music stops some lawyer walks up and serves them with a divorce notice.

I have a theory about divorces. I think problems arise in the home because the spouses don't respect one another, or at least one of the spouses doesn't respect the other.

I have a solution.

If you're the macho (or machoess?) bread winner of the house and think your stay-at-home spouse doesn't face any challenges beyond caring for your kids and keeping the hard-to-reach, under-the-lip part of the toilet bowl clean, I've got a challenge for you.

It's sure to instill in you a new respect and admiration for your spouse.

It's called, "Tuesday shopping at the commissary after a long weekend."

If this is your first trip, you might get out your kid's skate-boarding pads and helmet. You could need them. Shin guards, placed over the Achilles tendons are also a good idea.

I'm not saying there's danger, but if you get frustrated because drivers don't signal their intention to change direction, wait until you're in a commissary aisle with a crowd of people.

No one seems to know which way he or she wants to go. Then add a parent who's decided to let 7-year-old Johnny who's been watching car chases on Saturday morning cartoon shows drive and you have accidents waiting to happen. I take that back, you have accidents happening.

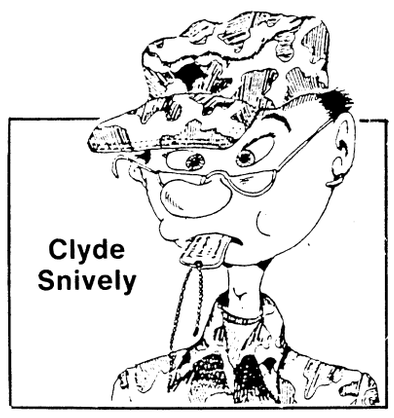
But you expect that from kids. The Tuesday I went, an "adult" was yelling "ram speed," as he raced up and down the aisles bowling people over with his cart. Meanwhile, you've got other adults, driving against the traffic flow.

Why do these people think the commissary paints arrows in the aisles, just to use up paint?

It's easy to see why shopping carts come with baby seats.

Then there are others who meet friends and where do they stop? At the end of aisles to effectively block traffic trying to make the turn.

I think the commissary should take some of the baggers and make traffic cops out of them. They could enforce the direction of travel in the aisles, pass out traffic tickets, run them before the commissary traffic judge and fine them and take away their cart driving licenses.



These cops would also eliminate the social calls at choke points and slow down the speeders coming up the aisles before they crash into those driving the outer loop.

I do like the system they use for getting to a checkout counter.

First, I like it because I'm the kind of guy who always ends up in a line that moves slower than all the other lines. I hate to see people who got into a longer line, 20 minutes after me, beat me out the door. I really hate that.

Also, standing in the Disneyland-like line (they should put up signs to let you know how much longer you have to wait for a register at different points) you get to meet more people and also hear what they have to say.

When I went, not many of them had many nice things to say about the line system. One person said, "If the post commander shopped on a day like this, he'd make them adjust their hours."

That had to be the most uninformed statement I heard all day. First, it seems that no matter when you want to buy groceries, the commissary's open unless it's a Monday. Ever try going on a Sunday morning? The place is practically deserted. Sure, the pickings may be a little thin; but, what the heck, it sure cuts down on the bill. You just have to know how to pick the right time. But, when you can't, just accept your lot and enjoy the company of your fellow shoppers or take along a book to read.

Another solution is team shopping. Get in line while you send the kids or spouse foraging for your items like ice cream. When I shopped, the line was back to the meat counter.

Speaking of ice cream, even if you wait until your line reaches that section, you still end up with milk. My advice, jump the rope and grab your ice cream as you make the final turn down the back stretch. That way you won't end up like me and take rocky road chocolate milk home.

Folks, if you don't like the way the commissary is doing business, fill out a suggestion card. If that doesn't work, you can always shop elsewhere.

But, like I said in the beginning, no matter what you think of the system, if you haven't done it before, you have to come out for the experience of it. I guarantee, you'll return home with a lot more respect for the spouse who puts up with shopping on a regular basis.

Commanding general proclaims Thursday Army Community Service Recognition Day

The Fort Benning community joins together to celebrate Army Community Service's 26th anniversary and recognize its total commitment to community and family support.

From the Revolutionary War to the volunteer Army of the 1980s, the concept of humanitarian concern for the welfare of others existed as a foundation of the Army way of life.

The challenge to meet the needs of the modern day Army, its soldiers and family members, increases with each passing day. With its history very much alive, Army Community Service undertakes the challenges.

To acknowledge Army Community Service's contribution to soldier and family member support and to this community, I hereby proclaim Thursday as Army Community Service Recognition Day.

Maj. Gen. Carmen J. Cavezza
Fort Benning commander

LETTER

Reader complains about commissary checkouts

This letter is about the way the registers work at the commissary.

At 10 o'clock, they will open one express register and one of the other registers.

No other register is open until 10:30 or 10:40 a.m. — no matter how many baskets are backed up.

Two weeks ago, I saw at least 75 to 100 people waiting and only one express register open and one other register open.

I stood in line for about 35 minutes. Several people parked full baskets and walked out.

Also, the shelves are not restocked until they are almost empty.

Then shoppers have to get by boxes as well as people in the aisles.

Could someone do a survey so others may air their views?

CHAMPUS increases deductible

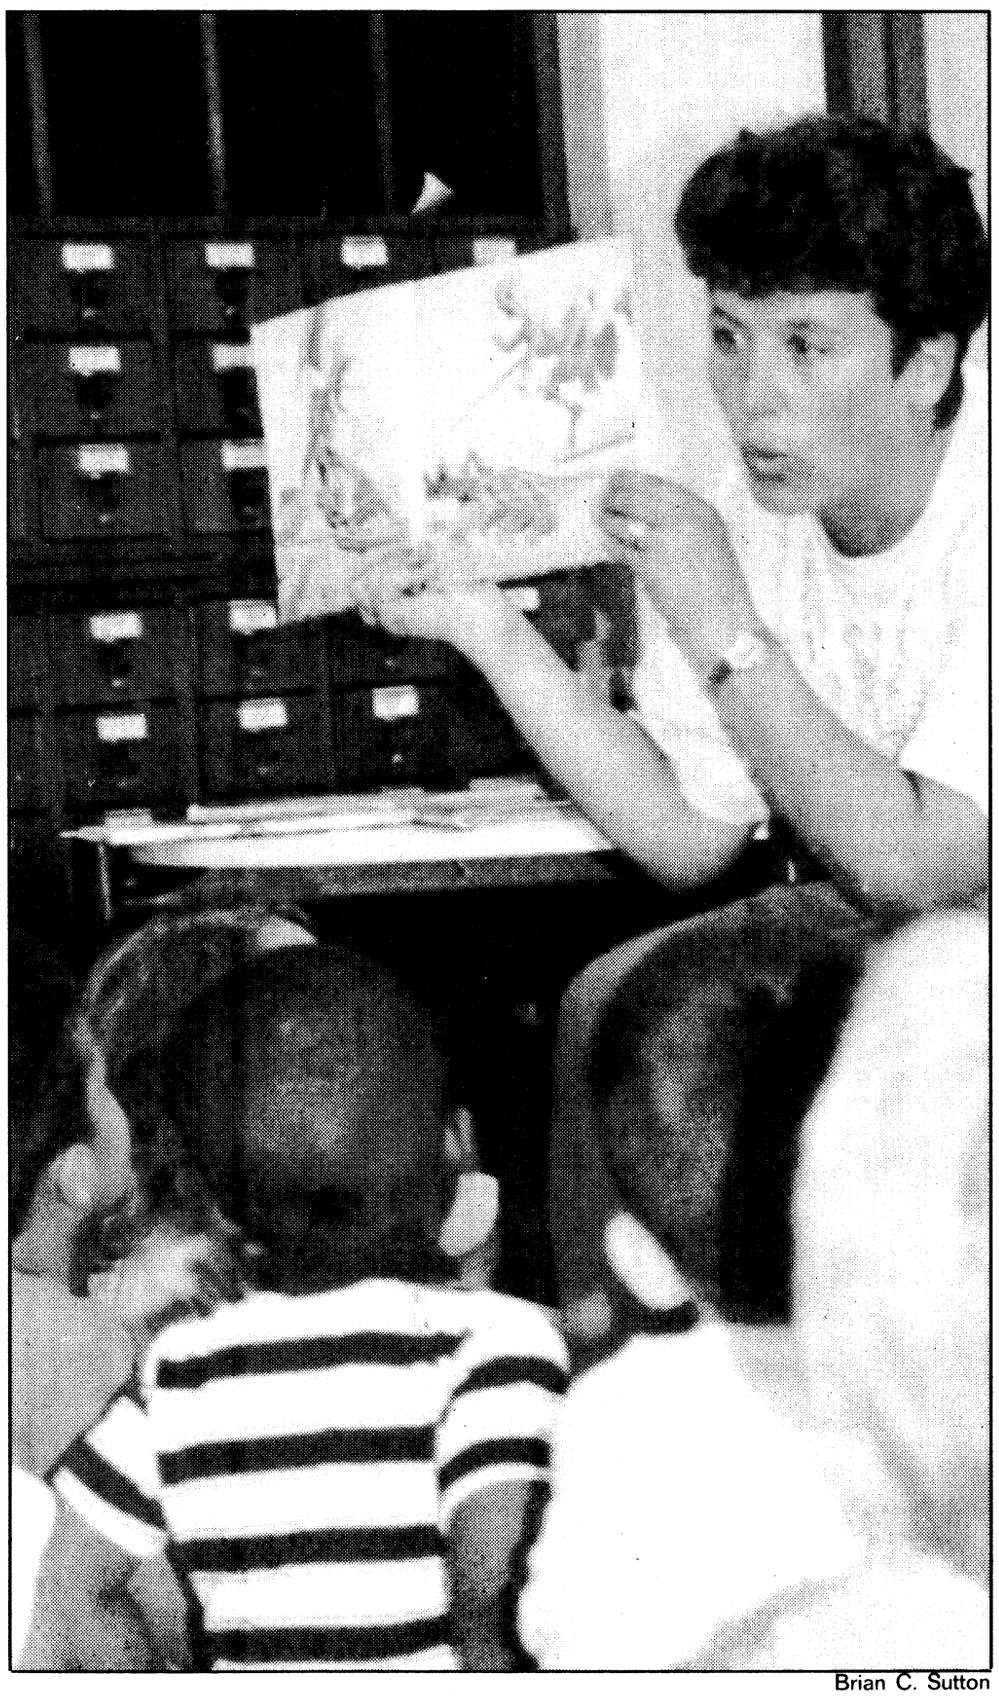
Martin Army Community Hospital

The annual deductible for outpatient care under the Civilian Health and Medical Program of the Uniformed Services has increased for many eligible families, effective April 1.

The outpatient deductible for each fiscal year increased to $150 for an individual, and a total of $300 for the entire family. The previous amounts were $50 and $100, respectively. The original law that increased the annual deductibles provided that the amounts for the family members of active-duty E-4s and below would not increase, but would remain at $50 and $100.

Recent congressional action directed that the deductible increase be delayed until Oct. 1 for family members of active-duty sponsors who served in the Persian Gulf war. Therefore, the lower deductible rates will continue to apply to care received by these beneficiaries through Sept. 30. Implementing this change, which could take several weeks, will require identifying dependents of active-duty members who served or are serving in the Persian Gulf.

If claims processors should happen to apply the new deductible ($150 and $300) incorrectly to claims for beneficiaries who qualify for a delay in the increase until Oct. 1, a copy of the explanation of benefits should be marked "Desert Storm" and returned with a copy of the sponsor's leave and earnings statement showing "Danger," "Imminent Danger," or "Hostile Fire" pay, or with evidence that the military sponsor is entitled to a combat zone tax exclusion, to the claims processor.



If a copy of the leave and earnings statement is not available, the beneficiary or sponsor should contact the sponsor's military pay office for a copy.

After Sept. 30, only care for families of active-duty members in grades E-4 and below will be exempt from the higher deductible regardless of service in the Persian Gulf.

The increase in the deductible for care received on or after April 1, will apply to all persons who are eligible for benefits except the family members of E-4s and below or family members of those who served in the Persian Gulf.

Here's how the increased deductible will be applied:

Since the federal government's fiscal year begins anew each Oct. 1, all eligible persons have had to meet the old deductible amounts ($50 or $100) for outpatient care received between Oct. 1 and March 31. Once a patient has met the required deductible, CHAMPUS begins normal cost-sharing of outpatient care for the rest of the fiscal year.

Enlisted Wives Club award scholarships

10 students receive $7,500 for college

By James E. Baker
Contributing writer

Ten students were awarded $7,500 in college scholarships from the Enlisted Wives Club at the club's July 10 ceremony in the Blue Room of the Main NCO Club.

The recipients include: Karen Jones (Virginia State University); Sarah Huffam (Appalachian State University); Kimberly Goodman (Florida A&M University); Anthony Smith (Columbus College); Jennifer Lewis (Columbus Technical Institute); Kathy Reeves (Columbus College); Linda Childress (Troy State University); and Shirley Wells (Troy State University).

Graduating high school seniors and current college students, who are dependents of either Enlisted Wives or Officers Wives Club members, as well as club members who are completing their education are eligible for the annual scholarships.

Jennifer Lewis, the daughter of Charles and Deborah Lewis, seemed to express the prevailing gratitude of the students. "It's really great that our community supports us in our educational endeavors," she said.

The application process consisted of turning in a completed application form to the Enlisted Wives Club. Upon review of each form by the club scholarship council with the assistance of an outside Fort Benning representative, the scholarship recipients are determined.

Annual available scholarship funds are determined by the general membership guidelines established by the club. Then fund-raising activities to provide for scholarships are held throughout the year.

"These scholarships are a good community service that help fill a need for the students and their families," said Sandra Sykes, scholarship chairwoman of the Enlisted Wives Club.

Family Practice residents graduate at MACH

By Jeanne Dickerson
Martin Army Community Hospital

Martin Army Community Hospital's 18th graduation ceremony for the Family Practice residents was June 20 in the Main Post Chapel. The ceremony was followed by a reception in the Baugh Conference Room at the hospital.

The Family Practice Residency, established in 1972, is known as the oldest and the best such program in the military.

Graduating the three-year residency were: Capt. Lisa Keep, who will be going to Camp Casey, Korea; Capt. Kathleen Uhl Leo, who will stay at Fort Benning and work in the 3rd Brigade, 24th Infantry Division Family Practice Clinic; Capt. Richard Morman, who will practice at Fort Belvoir, Va.; Maj. Barrington Nash, who is also going to Korea to the 543rd Medical General Dispensary; and Capt. Brian Unwin, who will be assigned to the Aviation Medical Clinic here at Fort Benning.

Morman and Unwin received the Chief Resident Awards, the Resident Teacher Award went to Unwin, and the Outstanding Resident Award was presented to Morman.

In addition to the graduating residents, 10 interns were awarded diplomas for completing their internship.

They were: Capt. Scott Carlton, Capt. Kirk Eggleston, Capt. Kenneth Harper, Capt. David Koon, Capt. Robert Mee, Capt. Richard Miller, Capt. Ronald Pendleton, Capt. Andrew Risner, Capt. Nancy Sanderson, and Capt. Thomas Wentland.

The graduation address was given by Lt. Col. John Fogarty, professor and chairman of the Department of Family Practice, Edward Hebert School of Medicine, Uniformed Services University of Health Sciences.

Fogarty, a former chief of the Department of Family Practice at Martin Army, was here to welcome the graduating residents as they began their three-year program.

He congratulated the residents, the interns and the Department for success in completing the program in spite of Operations Desert Storm and Desert Shield.

The director of the Residency Program, Maj. Ted Epperly, and the chief of the Department of Family Practice, Col. Reginald Moore, were deployed during the program. Also, 30 doctors and 40 nurses left for Saudi Arabia. Moore expressed his thanks to the remaining staff and to the reservists who came in.

The graduating residents took their examinations in November, during the air war and scored in the 90 percentile, in spite of the turmoil at the hospital of adding beds in preparation for war casualties.

DENTAC changes command

By James C. Rupp
Bayonet staff writer

The U.S. Army Dental Activity received a new commander July 10 at Artillery Field when Col. Robert S. Boren handed over the command to Col. Gene Withrow.

Boren is a New Jersey native and attended college at Farleigh Dickinson in the same state. It was there that he earned his bachelor of science degree in 1962.

From there, Boren went on to the Georgetown University School of Dentistry and graduated in 1966. Upon graduation, he entered the Army and was assigned to the 655th Dental Detachment in South Korea.

Other assignments of Boren's career included Fort Monmouth, N.J., and Dugway Proving Ground, Utah. In Dugway, he became chief of Dental Services for the Army hospital there.

Before coming to Fort Benning, Boren served at various dental units, including a stay as prosthodontist at the Pentagon Dental Clinic.

Withrow comes to Fort Benning from the 122nd Medical Detachment (Dental Services) in Frankfurt, Germany, where he was deputy commander.

Col. Robert S. Boren

Col. Gene Withrow

Originally from Cleveland, Tenn., Withrow graduated from the University of Tennessee in 1964 with a bachelor of science degree and a master's degree in 1967. In 1974, he graduated from the Alabama School of Dentistry and was commissioned from Reserve Officers' Training Course in 1968.

Withrow served his first assignment as a dental intern at Fort Bragg, N.C. From there, he went to Kleber Dental Clinic with the 464th Medical Detachment in Germany as chief clinician.

He returned to the states to another clinic assignment at Fort McClellan, Ala.

In 1979, Withrow began his own practice in Gunthersville, Ala. Around that time, he served with the 20th Special Forces Group out of Birmingham, Ala., before returning to active duty in 1981 as an instructor at Fort Sam Houston, Texas.

MPA gets a new commander

By Brian C. Sutton
Bayonet staff writer

"Now we have a new sherriff," said Maj. Gen. Carmen J. Cavezza, post commander.

Cavezza made these remarks during the Military Police Activity's change of command ceremony at the Field of Four Chaplains.

Col. Fred W. Liebe passed the colors to Col. James Crockert.

Liebe completed his tour as commander of the MP's with a speech that embodied the spirit of the military police, based on a theme, "Be a Man." He also recited a poem.

Liebe said the military policeman functions in a way that produces no fame and very little recognition, but that soldier needs to function to the best of his ability anyway.

"There's no doubt in my mind these soldiers do this everyday," said Liebe.

Liebe's highest awards include the Bronze Star Medal, Meritorious Service Medal with four oak leaf clusters, Army Commendation Medal with one oak leaf cluster, Good Conduct Medal, Vietnamese Service Medal, and others.

Crockert, a Teaneck, N.J., native, comes to the command with 25 years of service under his belt.

"Today begins a new challenge," said Crockert.

Crockert said part of the challenge will be to conduct business to a higher level of performance that was set by Liebe and his predecessors.

Crockert holds a bachelor of science degree in criminology from the University of Tampa. His education also includes the Officer Candidate School, Special Forces Officers Course, Infantry Officers Advanced Course, Army Command and General Staff College and the Armed Forces Staff College.

Crockert's decorations include the Bronze Star Medal, Purple Heart, Meritorious Service Medal with four oak leaf clusters and Vietnam Service Medal.

How to prevent heat injuries

Heat injuries are preventable with a liberal policy of treatment at the first symptoms.

The best way to train for combat in hot climates is to teach soldiers how to protect themselves from heat injuries and how to treat heat injuries.

Whether a soldier is a combat casualty or a heat injury casualty, our combat force is reduced.

The following actions are recommended:

- Allow one to two weeks acclimatization of recently arrived soldiers in training.
- Identify soldiers with previous heat injury. A special marking on helmet or hat may be helpful to leaders.
- Ensure wet bulb globe temperature is monitored at training sites and that training is modified as the mission allows. Call 545-5281 for current reading.
- Monitor soldiers closely. The buddy system should also be used. Fort Benning Card 126 is a pocket guide for prevention and treatment.
- Advise soldiers to eat normal meals lightly salted. Forced drinking at water breaks may be necessary.

Add 10 degrees to wet bulb globe temperature and increase rest break length and frequently.

Soldiers receive teaching credit for previous military experience

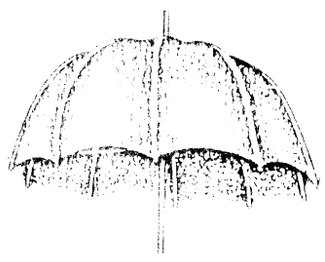
Educational program offered in 30 states

Forscom News Service

FORT MCPHERSON, Ga. — Since the Army is reducing its force, many soldiers will be looking for jobs in the private sector. A new Army program can help soldiers use their Army teaching experiences in the public schools.

Under the Alternative Certification for Teachers program, "New Careers in Education" is offered in 30 states and encourages soldiers to apply for certification.

Information packets on the different programs are available by calling toll-free (800) 227-LEAD. Free placement services are also available.



"These programs are designed to train the applicant in an intern-type environment," explained John Roddy, senior policy analyst with the Education Department. "Each participant is supervised by a certified teacher. Once the one-to-two-year training period is over, they'll be competitive for any opening.

"By opening up the teaching profession to former Army personnel, we hope to increase that competitiveness and, thereby, improve the quality of teachers," he said.

"The programs vary from state to state," Roddy continued. "However, the applicants, generally, must have either a bachelor of arts or a bachelor of science degree in the subject they wish to teach. Some states even require a minimum grade point average."

According to Roddy, the idea began in New Jersey four to five years ago. He noted that the military is a natural source of good instructors from which the states can draw.

"Soldiers have been trained to be teachers," he said. "Is it any surprise that the states would wish to call upon this pool of knowledge and experience?"

Soldier excels in education

By James C. Rupp
Bayonet staff writer

2nd Lt. Keith DuPont

"A mind that is stretched by a new experience can never go back to its old dimensions," said Oliver Wendell Holmes, and for 2nd Lt. Keith DuPont, that is true.

DuPont recently graduated from Officer Candidate School June 21 and is ready to leave Fort Benning for Europe with his wife, Alfreda, after a two-year tour here.

DuPont, a member of the Army since 1983, said he had considered attending OCS in the past few years, but it was here in Fort Benning that he had his first opportunity to get enough college credits to get his college degree.

Although he now holds a degree from Troy State University, DuPont says he is only 20 hours away from his bachelor's degree in criminal law.

DuPont said he believes that his experience as a non-commissioned officer before donning his gold bar will help him to be a better leader as an officer.

"I have seen everything that a soldier is forced to deal with, and I hope to use that knowledge to improve the training I conduct," he said. "I hope I can give my soldiers a challenge that will take them somewhere."

Just coming from the ranks of the enlisted soldier, DuPont has nothing but praise for the NCO. "Without the quality we have in the NCOs we have, I believe the Army would grind to a standstill."

As for DuPont's future away from Fort Benning, he said he has a few goals that stay firmly in his mind. "I would like to be the best platoon leader I can be. I'd like to set a good example for the NCOs who I serve with. And someday, I want to be a brigade commander.

"I'd like to make my unit a mission-ready force that can accomplish their mission with minimal casualties. I'm going to be training them to be the best."

DuPont said he enjoys the Army for just that reason. "It lets people be their best," he said. "I know it is said a lot, but the Army is really a place where you can be all you can be. But you have to want it, and remember that no goal is beyond your grasp."

Port support activity to close

By Brian C. Sutton
Bayonet staff writer

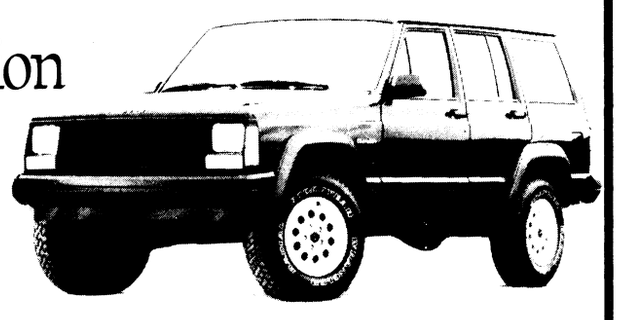
"We're shutting it down and moving it out," said Jerry Newman, chief of the Port Support Activity in Jacksonville, Fla.

A small detachment, consisting mainly of Fort Benning employees, were deployed Aug. 12 in support of Operations Desert Shield and Desert Storm.

Newman, a Department of the Army civilian who was deployed with the detachment in early August to head the activity, said the PSA handled many pieces of equipment.

PSA's mission is to transport equipment overseas in support of the mission in the Middle East. During Operation Desert Shield and Operation Desert Storm, the activity shipped more than 27,000 pieces of equipment overseas in more than 58 ships. A feat, according to Newman, that was not easy to accomplish.

"We had the port running 24 hours a day," said Newman. "We hired local people down here to help load and unload the ships."



Newman said at the peak of shipment capacity, the PSA had more than 400 people working to ship the equipment overseas.

Now, according to Newman, the PSA is closing and coming back to Fort Benning.

"The government has decided to use only the port in Charleston to bring the rest of the equipment back to Fort Benning." he said.

All-Army wrestling team goes for gold

Shon Lewis and Rodney Smith practice their techniques

Brian C. Sutton

By Brian C. Sutton
Bayonet staff writer

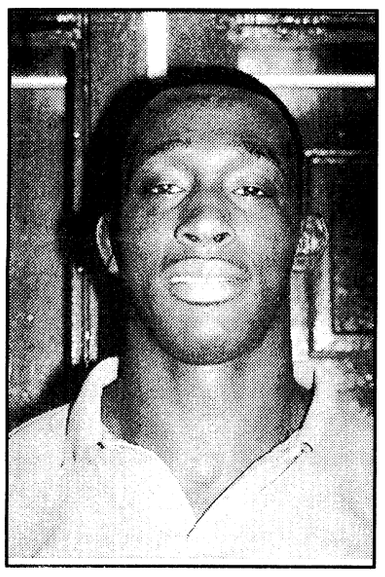
"If anybody here doesn't want to go to the Olympics," said Tony Demos, a wrestler with the All-Army Wrestling Team, "they have no business being here at all."

Demos and other members of the wrestling team here are preparing for one of their biggest challenges yet: The 1992 Olympics in Barcelona, Spain.

One of the biggest hurdles for these olympic hopefuls is to train for and compete in the World Military Championships. The championships will be Aug. 18 through 31 in Istanbul, Turkey.

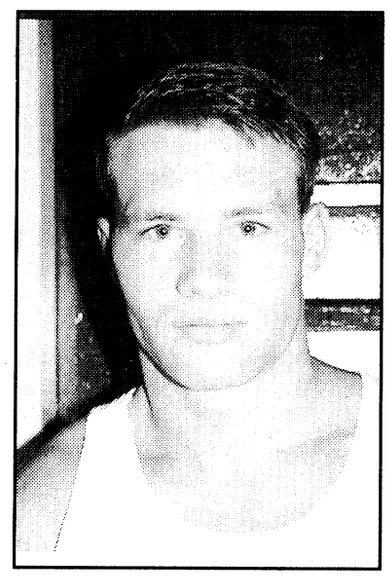
"We want to give our guys some international experience," said Tony Thomas, wrestling team coach.

"In the past, the U.S. has dominated the world military championships," said Thomas. "Last year, however, the Eastern Bloc countries really took control."



Thomas explained that Turkey gave the team the most trouble last year. Last year was the first time the Turkish team was invited to the matches, showing that they needed no time getting experience against the Americans.

"Losing the championship was a big letdown for me," said Derrick Waldroup, 198-pounder who will be one of eight American wrestlers competing in Turkey. "The problem is that the Eastern Bloc countries are about the best in the world."



Waldroup said, however, that the American team this year has what it takes to take out the Turks.

"We know we can beat them," said Waldroup. "We've got some good wrestlers."

Patience important when chasing bass

By Earl Bentz and Steve Price
1988 Outboard Marine Corporation

It may come as a surprise, but the main ingredient in establishing a big bass pattern doesn't include rods, reels, or lures.

Instead, the most important ingredient is patience.

That's the opinion of well-known tournament pro Cliff Craft, a former Lake Lanier fishing guide who has caught dozens of trophy-sized bass.

"I believe patience is the most important aspect of trophy bass fishing because you often go hours without a strike," explained the Evinrude Outboards Pro Staff angler. "You start wondering if you're doing the right thing, but you don't know because you haven't caught anything.

"You just have to trust your instincts and keep doing it."

As far as actual fishing techniques are concerned, Craft offers several suggestions: use big lures, work very slowly, and fish the thickest cover available.

"There is a lot of truth in the saying, 'Big bass like big lures,' so I change to spinnerbaits with larger blades, jigs with longer trailers, or larger plastic worms and lizards," Craft explained.

"These lures are simply too big for small bass to hit, which is why you can go hours without a single strike. When something does finally hit, it's a bass that is large enough to swallow the offering," he said.

Fishing these lures slowly and in extremely thick cover will put them — and keep them — in front of big bass.

"Large bass are not overly aggressive," noted the Evinrude pro, "and they usually stay in very heavy cover where they can ambush their prey more easily," Craft said.

"You have to look for these areas, and when you find them, fish much more slowly than usual. I don't believe big bass spend that much time actually studying lures. They're just not as active and you may have to tempt them repeatedly before they finally hit," he added.

In addition to thick cover, says Craft, big bass are often found very close to deep water dropoffs, such as around ditches, creek channels, and steep points.

"Bass everywhere like a shallow water/deep water combination," Craft explained, "but larger bass seem to be particularly attracted to sch places. I believe big bass probably spend more of their time in deeper water than smaller bass do."

Renovations made at Uchee Creek camp

Directorate of Community Activities

The Uchee Creek campgrounds and marina is available to active duty and retired military personnel as well as Department of the Army and Non-Appropriated Fund civilians. Uchee Creek has something for everyone.

Extensive renovations have been completed and more are underway.

A marina has been constructed on the premises. You can rent a boat slip or just fill your tanks with gas. A 28-foot pontoon boat with stereo, ice chest, grill, sink, and a portable toile is available for rent.

This boat can accommodate from seven to 12 people. Two 24-foot pontoon boats that have all of the above, except a grill, can also be rented. These boats can be rented by the hour or by the day.

Fishing boats with motors, canoes, and bass boats are easy to rent because the equipment check-out center is located at Uchee Creek.

Self-contained campers, pop-up campers, portable generators and other items are also located on premises for your convenience.

You can even rent a log cabin for the weekend. These cabins have electricity, water, air conditioning, refrigerators and the larger cabins have kitchen and shower facilities.

There are more than 30 camp pads with more being constructed. These camp pads have electricity, water and trash service, and a centralized dump site. A comfort station, equipped with washers and dryers, latrines, showers with handicap facilities are available. More recreational courts and facilities are planned in the very near future.

If you are planning a party or a family reunion, then the newly renovated lodge is the place for you. The lodge can seat up to 150 persons and is available year-round.

It has air conditioning, a fireplace, cooking facilities, ice maker, and buffet tables. Picnic tables and grills are available at no charge. The lodge can be rented on a daily basis. If you run short of food and supplies, the Country Store has food, beverages, camping, fishing, and hunting supplies and live bait.

By using the following procedure, soldiers on the Family Housing Waiting List can use this chart to estimate when they can expect quarters:

- Locate your category of housing.
- Note eligibility date located on the same line as your category.
- Calculate the time difference between the eligibility date listed and your eligibility date.

The difference is the approximate time you still have to wait for housing.

If you do not know your eligibility date, contact the Family Housing Office at building 399, 545-3107.

Trust in God relieves burden of worry

By Chaplain Ivery L. De La Cruz
USAIC Chaplains Office

David, the greatest king of Israel, had periods of depression. Many times he felt like he was in a pit of clay.

Everyone has troubles, trials and testing, but those who seek God's help need not sink into the pit of clay.

Discouragement and worry are two of the greatest hindrances to the Christian life. Too often we dwell on the dark and dreary rather than the bright and sunny side of life.

The first ingredient in the cure for worrying is: Stop looking downward and start looking upward. The psalmist wrote: "Why art thou cast down O, my soul? Hope thou in God; for I shall yet praise him." In other words, pray about it.

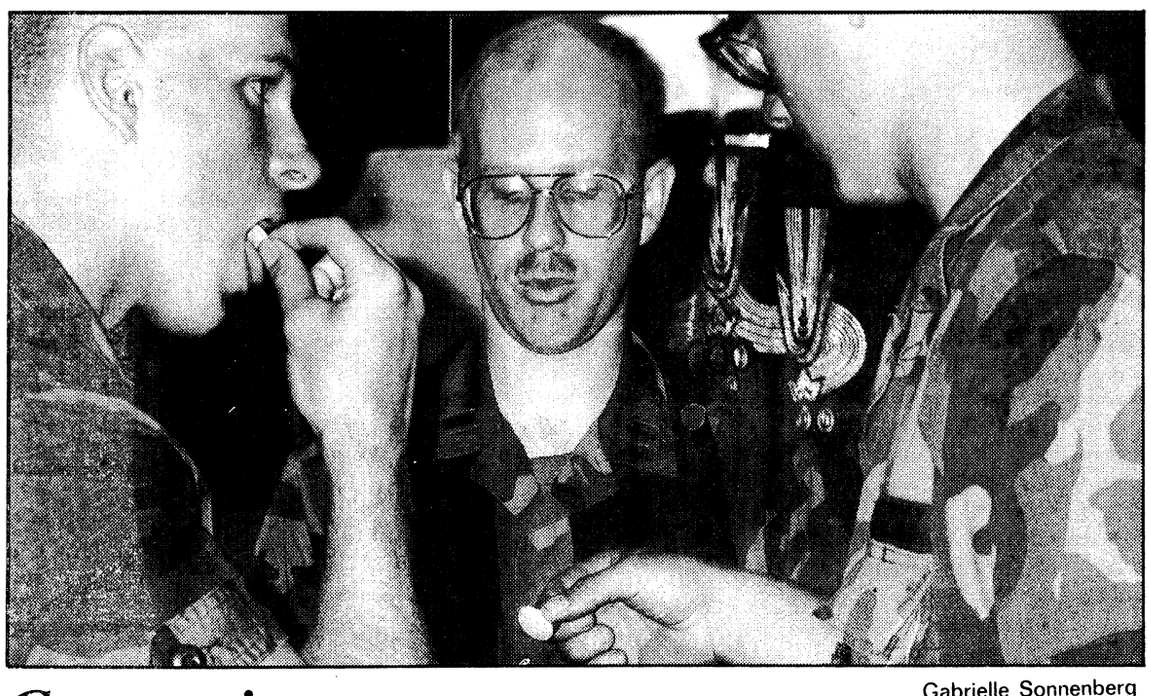
A man paralyzed by many anxieties and unable to sleep at night was so tired in mind and body that he was ready to try anything. When he was at his last grasp, he would find some relief.

That night he prayed for the first time in years. He told God everything about himself. And while he was praying he fell asleep. When he woke up hours later he knew he had found a cure.

He told his doctor, "I told Jesus all about my worries. I turned them all over to him."

The doctor replied, "If all my nerve patients did that, I would be a poor man." Prayer is the first step in curing our anxiety.

The second ingredient is to trust Christ with your worries. Hannah Whithall Smith, a Christian missionary, tells about a man sliding down a rope into a well.



He thought it was long enough, but to his dismay he reached the end of the rope without touching the bottom of the well with his feet. He tried to climb up the rope, and dared not let go for fear of being dashed to pieces.

He held on as long as he could, and when utterly exhausted, he let the rope slip from his grasp. He fell — just three inches. Trust Christ with your worries.

Little children are light-hearted and carefree. They trust their parents implicitly for their needs. Our heavenly Father wants his children to live with simple, trusting faith. Our cure for worry and anxiety is simple — pray and trust.

Chaplaincy celebrates anniversary

By Gabriele Sonnenberg
USAIC Chaplains Office

The Chaplains' Corps marks its 216th anniversary July 29. A picnic to celebrate the unit ministry team anniversary will be held on July 26.

Anniversaries are believed by some to be a time of remembering beginnings, reaffirming purpose and celebrating common history.

Chaplains and chaplain assistants serve to provide for the spiritual needs of soldiers and their families. They are on the battlefields, in motor pools, in classrooms, by hospital beds, in chapels, beside prison cells and in administrative offices.

According to Chaplain (Brig. Gen.) Donald W. Shea, deputy chief of chaplains, the number of chaplains sent to Southwest Asia reached 566, and the chaplain assistants numbered 540. More unit ministry team members were deployed to Operations Desert Shield and Desert Storm than were deployed to Vietnam during the height of that conflict, added Shea.

"I must highlight that while we had unit ministry team members deployed, other unit ministry team members deployed, other unit ministry team members were providing ministry to family members anxiously awaiting their return of their loved ones," explained Shea.

The Army chaplain and the chaplain assistant form the unit ministry team and are responsible for providing a comprehensive religious support program. The chaplain is the religious leader of the team. The assistant is specially trained to assist the chaplain in the religious support mission.

The unit ministry team adheres to the following motto: "Pro Deo et Patria" (For God and Country). This motto is emblazoned on the U.S. Army Chaplains official seal. Framed in gold, the sky-blue, round seal has a white dove of peace hovering in radiance over an open book on which are presented a Christian cross and two tablets of the Commandments with the Star of David. Just above the dove is the year 1775 and below the book, the motto.

Take precaution with pesticides

U.S. Army Safety Center

Garden sprays are pesticides and herbicides. They can be beneficial tools. They help control nuisances, such as weeds and insects. Used properly, they help maintain beautiful yards. For gardeners, they allow high-quality food crops. Like any other chemical, though, using them involves some degree of risk. They can be hazardous if not used safely.

Most garden spray accidents happen because of carelessness. The time spent learning how to use them safely is an investment in health and safety.

In 1986, 20,000 people in the United Sates were poisoned by pesticides. Know the hazards. Every garden spray container's label is required reading. It's a legal document, the result of years of research.

The signal words "Danger X Poison," "Warning" and "Caution" on garden spray labels indicate how hazardous/toxic the substance is. "Danger X Poison" — extremely hazardous; "Warning" — moderately hazardous; "Caution" — slightly hazardous.

Product labels carrying the words "Danger" or "Danger Poison" imply highly toxic products, which require very specific protective measures.

Garden spray can enter the body by the mouth, skin absorption, or inhalation. You can avoid ingestion of poison through your mouth by washing your hands and face after application.

Your skin will absorb poison if you wear contaminated clothing or apply spray in windy conditions. Fumes are inhaled after application or when applying without protective equipment.

Look under the heading "Hazardous To Humans" on garden spray labels. The information in this section indicates what to protect from exposure — "Fatal if swallowed or absorbed through the skin, do not get on skin," for example.

Garden spray absorption through the skin is the most common cause of garden poisoning, so wear protective clothing, especially unlined, chemical resistant (rubber) gloves.

Always wear eye protection when mixing liquid chemicals that have "Warning" or "Danger" signal words on the label. Eyes are very sensitive to most garden-spray materials.

Follow label directions when mixing chemicals. Use a funnel to fill spray containers to avoid spillage. Don't hold the container higher than chest level when pouring. Divert your head from the container opening.

Don't work in a spray draft or on windy days. Don't leave any chemicals in equipment at the end of the work day.

Plenty of water is just about the best safety tool when working with garden sprays. Keep it handy for handwashing or in case of a spill. Always wash your hands and face with soap and water before eating, drinking, or smoking.

Store garden sprays in dry, secure places out of reach of children and pets. Always store them in their original containers with the label clearly visible. Never store them in soft drink bottles or food containers.

Garden spray labels carry first aid information. They also describe overexposure symptoms. If those symptoms occur, don't delay. Consult a physician immediately. Take the label to the physician.

Use common sense and follow the provided procedures when applying garden spray. Cut risks by reducing exposure through personal hygiene, protective equipment, and safe work practices. Your health rests in your hands.

1991 American Flag Run set

Phenix City-Russell County Chamber of Commerce

The 1991 American Flag Run is an event to enhance patriotism, to promote pride in the American Flag, and to honor America's veteran, both past and present.

The run will begin Oct. 27 from the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier at Arlington National Cemetery. The run will conclude on Nov. 11 after passing through Fort Mitchell National Cemetery, then on to Phenix City, Ala. and end with a ceremony at the Columbus Iron Works Convention and Trade Center in Columbus.

The format for the American Flag Run will be the same as the 1990 Run. In each of the five participating states, Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia and Alabama, there will be a Run Director.

The state director will recruit volunteer runners to carry the flag through their state and pass it on to the runners in the adjourning state. The American Flag Run will cover 1,000 miles, as the runners will run 65 miles each day.

The American Flag Run will arrive at Fort Mitchell National Cemetery at 11 a.m. for the Veteran's Day Services and proceed after the ceremony through Fort Benning, Phenix City and on to Columbus, for the welcome home ceremony at 3 p.m. at the Columbus Iron Works Convention and Trade Center. The flag flown over the Nation's Capitol on Columbus Day, Oct. 12, will be carried on the run and will be presented to the National Guard 900th Maintenance Group of Phenix City, which was called up for Operations Desert Shield and Desert Storm.

For more information, contact Vivian Serbedzija at (404) 628-5915 or the Phenix City-Russell County Chamber of Commerce at (205) 298-3639.

Fun tips for safe swims

Infantry Center Safety Office

In July at Fort Benning, the temperature is 100 degrees and the humidity is 95 percent. The children are whining and even the dog doesn't look too happy. What better way is there to cool off and lift the family's spirits than to take a dip in the pool?

With the price of some above-ground swimming pools at less than $200, many Fort Benning soldiers have chosen to purchase their own pool rather than use those provided by the installation.

Swimming is a very healthy recreational activity for persons of all ages. The swimming pool, however, can be a source of severe hardship for the person who fails to adequately safeguard the pool area.

The Infantry Center Safety Office recommends the following safety measures to reduce the pool owner's liability.

The pool must be surrounded by a fence. Quarters occupants should contact Housing Division, DEH (545-3107), to obtain a permit for construction and information concerning fence types authorized under Army Community of Excellence standards.

The pool must also be covered, when not in use, to prevent contamination of the water by objects thereby creating a health hazard.

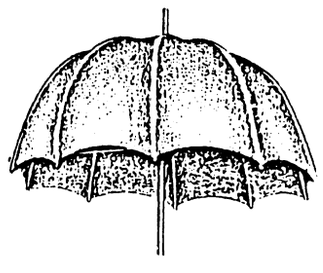
ENERGY WATCH

By Jennie McCrae
Energy Branch

The Energy Branch of the Directorate of Engineering and Housing suggests that you use this approach when following good sense rules concerning air conditioning equipment.

DO'S

- After a power outage, electrical equipment such as air conditioners requires time for re-setting. The hot compressor needs cooling time before automatically resetting. Wait 7 to 15 minutes for the equipment to reset.
- If your air conditioner doesn't seem to be cooling sufficiently, check the filter before calling in a service order.
- Check to be sure equipment is plugged in before calling in service order.
- Replace air conditioner filters once a month.
- Raise windows when running the attic fan. Otherwise a vacuum is created which blows out water heater pilots.
- Regularly clean any washable type air conditioner filter.
- Check your thermostat to be sure it is in the proper cooling setting before calling in a service order.



DON'TS

- Run attic fan while air conditioner is running.
- Chain or tie dogs to the air conditioning lines in the yard.
- Open doors or windows when air conditioning is on.
- Plant flowers or a garden next to the air conditioner condensing unit.
- Let children play around the air conditioner condensing unit.

Franks to succeed Foss

TRADOC News Service

FORT MONROE, Va. — Lt. Gen. Frederick M. Franks Jr., currently the commander of VII Corps, U.S. Army Europe and Seventh Army in Germany, has been nominated by the President George Bush to become commander of the Training and Doctrine Command.

A change of command ceremony has been scheduled Aug. 23 at Continental Park in Fort Monroe, Va.

Franks, a 1959 West Point graduate, succeeds Gen. John W. Foss, who will retire from the Army Sept. 1 after more than 35 years of service.

Franks served two previous assignments in the Training and Doctrine Command, first as executive officer to the commanding general from May 1981 to January 1982 and as deputy commandant of the Command and General Staff College, Fort Leavenworth, Kan., June 1985 to February 1987.

Prior to assuming his current position, Franks was commanding general of the 1st Armored Division, U.S. Army Europe from July 1988 to August 1989.

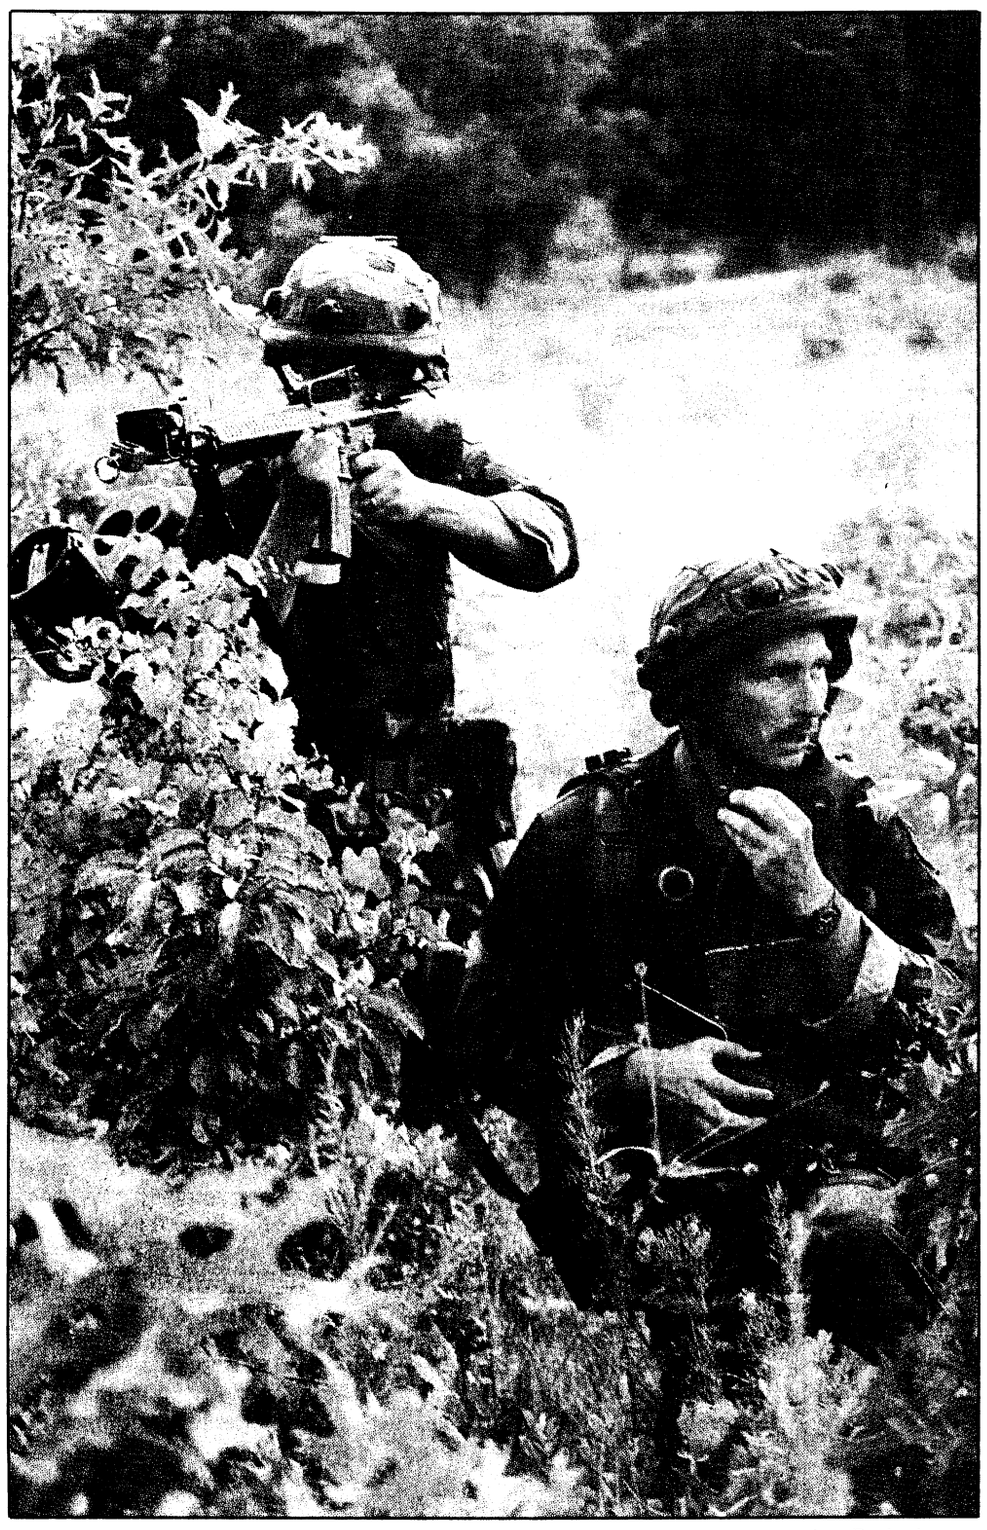
Franks attended the Armor Officer Basic Course, the Infantry Officer Advanced Course, the Armed Forces Staff College in Norfolk, Va., and the National War College in Washington, D.C.

He holds master of arts degrees in English and philosophy from Columbia University.

Franks's military decorations include the Defense Distinguished Service Medal, the Silver Star, the Legion of Merit (two awards), the Distinguished Flying Cross, the Bronze Star with valor device and the Purple Heart (two awards).

Also, he has earned the Parachutist Badge and the Ranger Tab.

Saudis graduate Bradley course



By James C. Rupp

Nine officers from the Royal Saudi Army graduated from the Bradley Master Gunner Course at the Collins Training Center in Harmony Church Wednesday.

The Saudi officers, who range in rank from first lieutenant to major, have been training with the 29th Infantry Regiment.

The training for the officers was varied slightly from the standard Bradley course to suit the unique needs of the Royal Saudi Army, which put in a request to purchase 400 Bradley Fighting Vehicle, officials said.

The officers will be returning to their native soil accompanied by a training team from the 29th Infantry Regiment to assist the officers in the implementation of their own Bradley Fighting Vehicle training program.

Post crimes increase

Number of incidents up for Main Post, Kelley Hill, Custer Terrace areas

By James C. Rupp
Bayonet staff writer

Incidents of crime have risen on Fort Benning since the last annual quarter, according to officials in the Military Police Activity's Crime Prevention Office.

According to Janie Harris and Staff Sgt. Adriane Williams of the Crime Prevention Office, in the past few months, crime reports have risen drastically, especially on Main Post, in the Kelley Hill area and in the Custer Terrace housing area, all of which account for 47 percent of the crime rate.

The most dramatic increases in crime incidents are: crimes against property are up 20 percent; crimes against persons are up 34 percent; domestic disturbances are up 59 percent and driving under the influence of alcohol occurences are up 38 percent.

Harris cited that the high crime rate in the Custer Terrace area may be due to the close proximity of that area to the civilian population.

She also noted that the rise in the crimes against property could be attributed to the return of deployed soldiers.

That is, they are not responsible for the damages, but crimes against them were not reported until they returned.

Williams said that people can protect themselves from crime by denying offenders the opportunity.

People on post would be smart to keep their doors locked, their valuables secured and the serial numbers from high-dollar value items recorded, she said.

Camp Merrill slated to receive funds for family housing units

By James C. Rupp
Bayonet staff writer

Camp Frank D. Merrill in Dahlonega, Ga. is slated to receive funding for the construction of new family housing units, according to a release from the office of Senator Wyche Fowler Jr.

Camp Merrill is the home of the 5th Ranger Training Battalion, which is part of the Ranger Training Brigade at Fort Benning. The mountain phase of ranger training takes place at the camp.

Kenneth Holloway, Directorate of Engineering and Housing's master planner, said the location of the construction is still being decided.

According to the release, Fowler requested $4.5 million for the construction of 36 family housing quarters and one officers quarters because of the absence of facilities to house the families of personnel stationed there.

"Many families are compelled to locate a great distance from the facility and soldiers must commute considerable distances over treacherous mountain roads," Fowler said in the release.

Also, the costs of renting or purchasing in that area have risen in recent years, according to the release.

Fowler is a member of the Senate Appropriations Subcommittee on Military Construction.

This committee oversees the allocation of federal funds for military construction spending.

Infantry Ball, Doughboy award tonight

Former FORSCOM commander will receive award

USAIC Public Affairs Office

The Infantry Ball and the awarding of this year's Doughboy Award will be tonight at the Fort Benning Officers' Club.

Reception and cocktails begin at 6:30 p.m.

The award is the highest honor the infantry bestows and goes to individuals who have made substantial contributions to the infantry.

Gen. Richard E. Cavazos, who was the commanding general of Forces Command when he retired in 1984, is this year's recipient of the infantry's Doughboy Award.

Cavazos will be formally recognized at the ball.

Cavazos, who is remembered as an officer who "always put his soldiers first," was born in Kingsville, Texas, where he grew up on the famed King Ranch.

His father, Lauro Fred Cavazos, known locally as Don Lauro, was a foreman in the Santa Gertrudis cattle division of King Ranch for 43 years.

A hard-driving ranch hand, he took part in the last major gunfight against Mexican bandits in Texas and exerted a profound influence on his five children.

Gen. Richard E. Cavazos

The most lasting being his common exhortation to "get and education, get an education."

Cavazos began his military career after he graduated from Texas Tech's Reserve Officers' Training Corps program with a bachelor of science degree in petroleum geology.

He was a distinguished military graduate.

He subsequently saw service in the Korean War; and, in Vietnam, he commanded an infantry battalion of the 1st Infantry Division.

He was also a brigade commander in the 1st Infantry Division, at Fort Riley, Kan., and he commanded the 9th Infantry Division at Fort Lewis, Wash., III Corps at Fort Hood, Texas.

He was twice awarded the Distinguished Service Cross, the nation's second highest decoration for valor.

Additionally he earned two Silver Stars, the Defense Superior Service Medal, two Legions of Merit, Distinguished Flying Cross; five Bronze Stars with valor device and the Purple Heart.

He is airborne and ranger qualified and wears the Combat Infantryman Badge with star for service in two wars.

He was the first Hispanic four-star general in American history and remains one of the nation's foremost experts in military affairs, working as a management and military consultant.

He recently served on former President Ronald Reagan's Chemical Warfare Review Commission.

Cavazos resides in Leander, Texas.

WHAT: Infantry Ball, Doughboy Award

WHEN: 6:30 p.m. reception and cocktails begin

WHERE: Fort Benning Officers' Club

TICKETS: By invitation only

SEQUENCE OF EVENTS: After dinner, the winner of this year's Doughboy Award, retired Gen. Richard E. Cavazos, will receive the award and make remarks.

Award honors significant contributions to infantry

USAIC Public Affairs Office

The Doughboy award, which is being presented to Gen. Richard E. Cavazos tonight, is a chrome-plated doughboy helmet worn by soldiers in the American Expeditionary Force during World War I and in the early days of World War II.

It is presented annually to a person who has made a significant contribution to the infantry force, and is presented on behalf of infantrymen, past, present and future.

The original award can be seen in the foyer of Infantry Hall at Fort Benning.

Past recipients of the award include Bob Hope, H. Ross Perot, Bill Mauldin, John O. Marsh Jr., Sens. John G. Tower and Robert J. Dole, and Gens. Frederick Kroesen, Aubrey Newman, Matthew B. Ridgway, and William E. DePuy.

The term "doughboy" was used for raw American recruits rushed to Europe in World War I. It came from Texas, where soldiers trained along the Rio Grande and became covered in white dust of the adobe soil.

Mounted troops called them "adobes." This degenerated to "dobies," which became "doughboys."

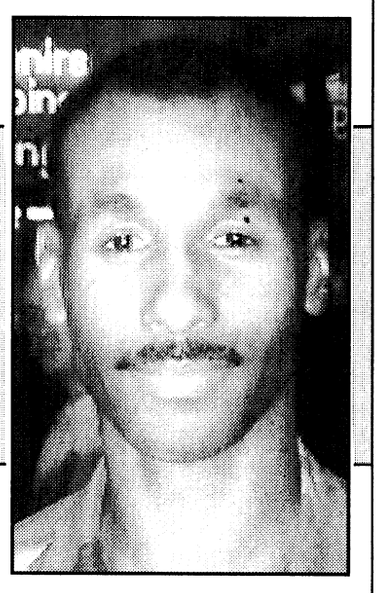
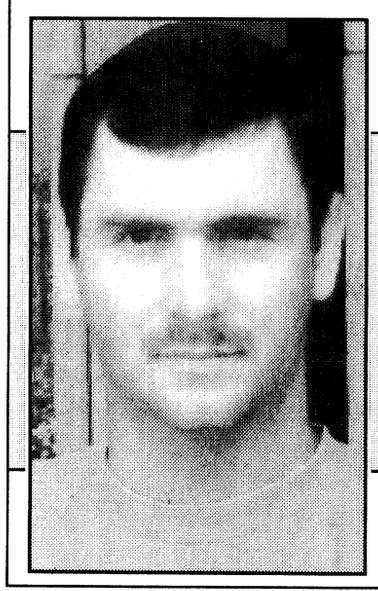
VARIOUS VOICES:



What is the best way to prevent crime on post?

Ria Pfeiffer, retired — "I would say to just be careful. Watch what is going on around you and stay alert."

Sgt. Anthony Medina, Company D, 1st Battalion, 18th Infantry Regiment — "If people see crime, they should report it; they shouldn't be afraid. I think that's one of the reasons crime is so high. Everyone must help each other if the problem is going to be stopped."



Staff Sgt. Maurice McIntyre, Service Battery, 4th Battalion, 41st Field Artillery — "The housing areas should have a neighborhood watch system, and the Military Police could randomize their patrols. As far as individual soldiers go, they shouldn't carry excess money, and they should stay in groups."

Spec. Bryan Marsh, Ranger Indoctrination Program, Headquarters Company, 75th Ranger Regiment — "The only thing you can do is do your best to deny the criminals the opportunity to steal from you. Keep your stuff secure, look out for your buddy and stay alert."

Staff Sgt. Pamela Graham, 215th Finance Support Unit — "I personally would avoid trouble spots, stick with friends and not flash my cash around."

Sgt. Kevin Tyler, 2nd Mobile Army Surgical Hospital — "The best way to protect yourself is to sport a car alarm and keep your valuables registered. In our company, the MPs keep the area patrolled, but they can't do it on their own."

'Womyn' in combat? Why not

By Clyde Snively
Bayonet columnist

COMMENTARY

Infantry dudes, would you want to share a foxhole with a womyn soldier in combat?

Womyn soldiers, would you want to share a fighting position with a smelly grunt?

I've been reading all these arguemynts about womyn in combat. There's a lot of loud, noisy womyn out there who think womyn should be allowed to fight.

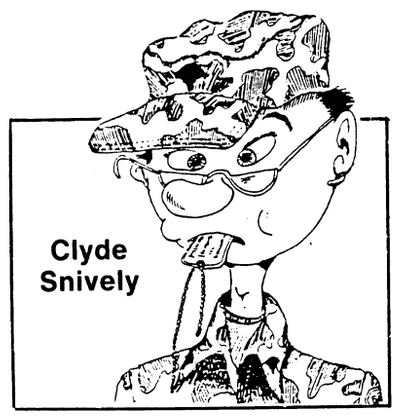
Curiously, the ones making all the noise ain't in the Army. Army womyn are too smart for that. Instead, the push comes from the feminist lobby — the same feminists who are usually anti-war, anti-weapons, and anti-Pentagon spending.

They just want their sisters to go to combat to deny the American people the right to make any allowances for differences between the sexes.

When a womyn soldier goes hand to hand with a male adversary in combat, chances are she'll give her life for her country. What do you tell the grieving family members, "sorry about that, but as you know, the Army's an equal opportunity employer and we wanted to make sure she had every advantage to make it to the top."

But the arguemynt persists — womyn won't have the same opportunity to become chief of staff of the Army if they aren't allowed into combat.

If that's the case, why do so myny men opt to go into such traditional non-combat branches as quartermaster, transportation and ordnance? Is it because they look ahead and decide that one of those branches offers the best opportunity for employmynt after they get out?



Is it because that's what they like to do and are good at? Or is it because they think that by doing a good job in that branch, they stand just as much chance of reaching the top as they do in a combat arms branch?

And that's the crux of the whole problem. There's a misinterpretation between fighting in combat and being in a combat arms branch.

There's no law that prohibits Army womyn from serving in combat. There are laws for Navy and Air Force womyn that prevent them from serving on ships and aircraft in combat — which I think are dumb — but the Army isn't included in the laws because it was too difficult to define "combat."

So the Army just put infantry, armor and field artillery off limits to the womyn. Then came Just Cause.

After Just Cause there was a big cry about womyn not getting combat infantryman badges. That, they said, would stop them from getting to the top.

Ha. Did Chief of Staff of the Army Gen. Carl Vuono have a CIB? How about the late Gen. Max Thurman who was the chief in Panama during Just Cause. No to both.

So really, what are the people who are too old, too senile, or too anti-military establishmynt to serve, asking for? Are they asking for their daughters to be allowed into combat arms branches to give them a better chance to get killed on a persynal basis?

Thirteen dead U.S. military womyn in Desert Storm will tell you the gals were no strangers to combat. This, without benefit of belonging to the all-male clubs of infantry, armor, field artillery.

Is fighting on the front lines and exposure to bullets a requiremynt for making rank?

If it were, soldiers in the 4th Infantry Division, 10th Mountain Division, and 25th Infantry Division, to name a few, would be writing their Congress persons complaining of discrimination because they weren't called up during the past two live-fire exercises and given a chance to get shot at.

Therefore, those soldiers don't stand the same chance to make Army sergeant major or chief of staff as do their contemporaries who did go to war.

What about the future? Fewer and fewer American soldiers will be seen wearing combat patches, so it doesn't really matter if a person's in combat arms or not. No war, no chance for combat.

What it all boils down to is the same thing it boils down to in the civilian world — do the best job you can, get an occasional lucky break along the way and your chance for rising to the top is as good as the next persyn's.

By the way, I've got no hankering to go to combat. But if I do, I'd be proud to fight alongside any womyn — as long as she wasn't holding a teddy bear or wearing a button on her helmet with a picture of her baby on it.

I don't think either would be good for light and noise discipline. Besides, one or the other might get tangled up in my security blanket.

Excellence: That's Fort Benning's goal

Fort Benning has a long tradition of excellence. We enjoy an enviable reputation worldwide for producing the finest infantrymen in the world.

We continue to accomplish more with less. Operation Desert Storm is only the latest example of this. We have one of the finest work forces — military and civilian — I ever served with. I am proud to be Fort Benning's commander.

However, we can make Fort Benning better. We can make this the finest installation in the Army.

Community of excellence

The primary goal of the Fort Benning Community of Excellence Program is to create a total community that exudes pride, satisfaction, and a sense of accomplishment and purpose. This will not be easy. It won't happen overnight. Concepts and ideas must be put on paper. Specific plans must be developed and aggressively executed.

Managers and supervisors must intensively manage critical functions and tasks while implementing and sustaining the tenets of Total Quality Management.

Our first step is to determine what we want Fort Benning to be like. I envision an installation where people — military and civilian — enjoy working and living; a place that attracts and retains the best people, with an environment that is appealing to the eye, comfortable and pleasant to work in and where services to the soldier, family members, and the work force are second to none; an installation where people are treated with dignity and respect, where they feel they are important to the mission of the post and the Army.

To create such a community, we need to install in our leadership and work force the attitude that we are the best at what we do — that excellence is our way of life.

There are several concrete actions we need to begin working on immediately. I want to show real progress in these areas within a year and establish definite plans for the next several years.

Actions

Identify services that are important to the customer. Develop standards concerning the quality and time lines of those services.

Establish measurement systems to see how well we are doing and where we need to improve.

Measurement against these standards tells us exactly where we need to improve. Other standards for service might be more applicable in your area.

Increase our efforts to improve facilities — especially on Main Post.

Improve the environment on the installation. This includes the protection and management of wildlife, forestry, and soil erosion, as well as the disposal and recycling of waste products and the removal of harmful pollutants and contaminants.

Training and development

Offer members of our civilian work force increased opportunities for training and development to allow them to enhance their abilities to perform in their current positions and to advance to more responsible positions.

Recent events such as reductions in force, early retirements and hire freezes make it more urgent than ever that our employees be given opportunities for further development so they can assume more and more responsibility.

Optimize the support provided by non-appropriated fund activities. These are critical to an excellent community. We must plan our construction, facility improvements and services with a view to providing the best services possible to our soldiers.

Proactive management

We must be proactive rather than reactive. Managers should continuously plan and implement actions that improve the environment in their own organizations.

This applies not only to the improvement of facilities, but to work processes and anything else that impacts on working conditions and services provided customers. Employees should be involved in this effort.

This is an excellent area to apply the principles of Total Quality Management and the use of Corrective Action Teams.

We won't achieve community excellence by a once-a-year effort or by developing plans we hope to implement "someday." We will achieve it only when there is continuing effort at all levels of management to make it happen.

Attitude

Excellence comes from an attitude supported by action.

If we can create in our people an attitude that they can help us make Fort Benning the best, that we all benefit from an improved community, that excellence depends on them, and then provide the leadership and support they need, we will achieve our goals.

I ask your support in helping making Fort Benning the finest military installation in the Army.

Maj. Gen. Carmen J. Cavezza
Fort Benning commander

Army Community Service celebrates 26th year

EDITORIAL

For years, Army spouses have operated lending closets, assisted in emergencies, taught and trained the inexperienced, assisted new-comers, the ill and the bereaved, and through a grass roots understanding of the Army community, contributed significantly to its development and stability.

However, once the Army spouse relocated with her family or left the service, the program usually dissolved. Army Community Service, therefore, was designed to eliminate this adversity and provide a flexible framework for the operation of a family social service program.

As ACS begins its third decade of support, Army families are well aware of its growth in responsibility and effectiveness. Several Army-directed actions have introduced new avenues of accomplishment by offering such programs as budget counseling and check book management, family advocacy with emphasis on suicide and family abuse prevention, assistance for special needs' family members, employment, emergency financial needs, relocation, and an off-post outreach service.

The challenge to meet the needs of the modern day Army, its soldiers, and family members increases with each passing day.

With its history very much alive, ACS must undertake to enhance services for our present day family.

Couple this with a bright future, and Army Community Service will continue its standard of excellence in community and family support well into the 21st century.

The ACS staff is in Building 2640 and can be reached at 545-7517 or 545-5516.

Ranger battalion's CSM to retire

6th Ranger Training Battalion

The command sergeant major of the Ranger Training Brigade's 6th Battalion is retiring Wednesday after 30 years of Army service.

Command Sgt. Maj. Thomas M. Cruise will retire during a 4 p.m. ceremony at Camp Rudder, the Florida Ranger Camp, located near Eglin Air Force Base.

Cruise enlisted in the Army in 1961, and attended basic and advanced individual training, and Airborne School at Fort Benning.

In 1965, he volunteered for Ranger School and afterward was assigned to the 101st Airborne Division. Since then he served with various stateside and overseas units, including two tours in Vietnam.

Cruise served in the Ranger Training Brigade three times — twice as an instructor, the last as command sergeant major of the 6th Battalion.

In addition to ranger and airborne schools, he's qualified for jumpmaster, pathfinder, has attended Vietnam language courses, advanced non-commissioned officer, and the Sergeants Major Academy.

He earned an associate's degree from Columbia College in Columbia, Mo.

Cruise's awards include two Bronze Stars, Purple Heart, three Meritorious Service Medals, two Army Commendation Medals, the Combat Infantryman Badge, and the Expert Infantryman Badge.

He and his family plan to reside at Fort Walton Beach, Fla.

Hospital not a good place for well children

Martin Army Community Hospital

Martin Army Community Hospital has a policy that children being seen by medical personnel are the only children permitted in clinics.

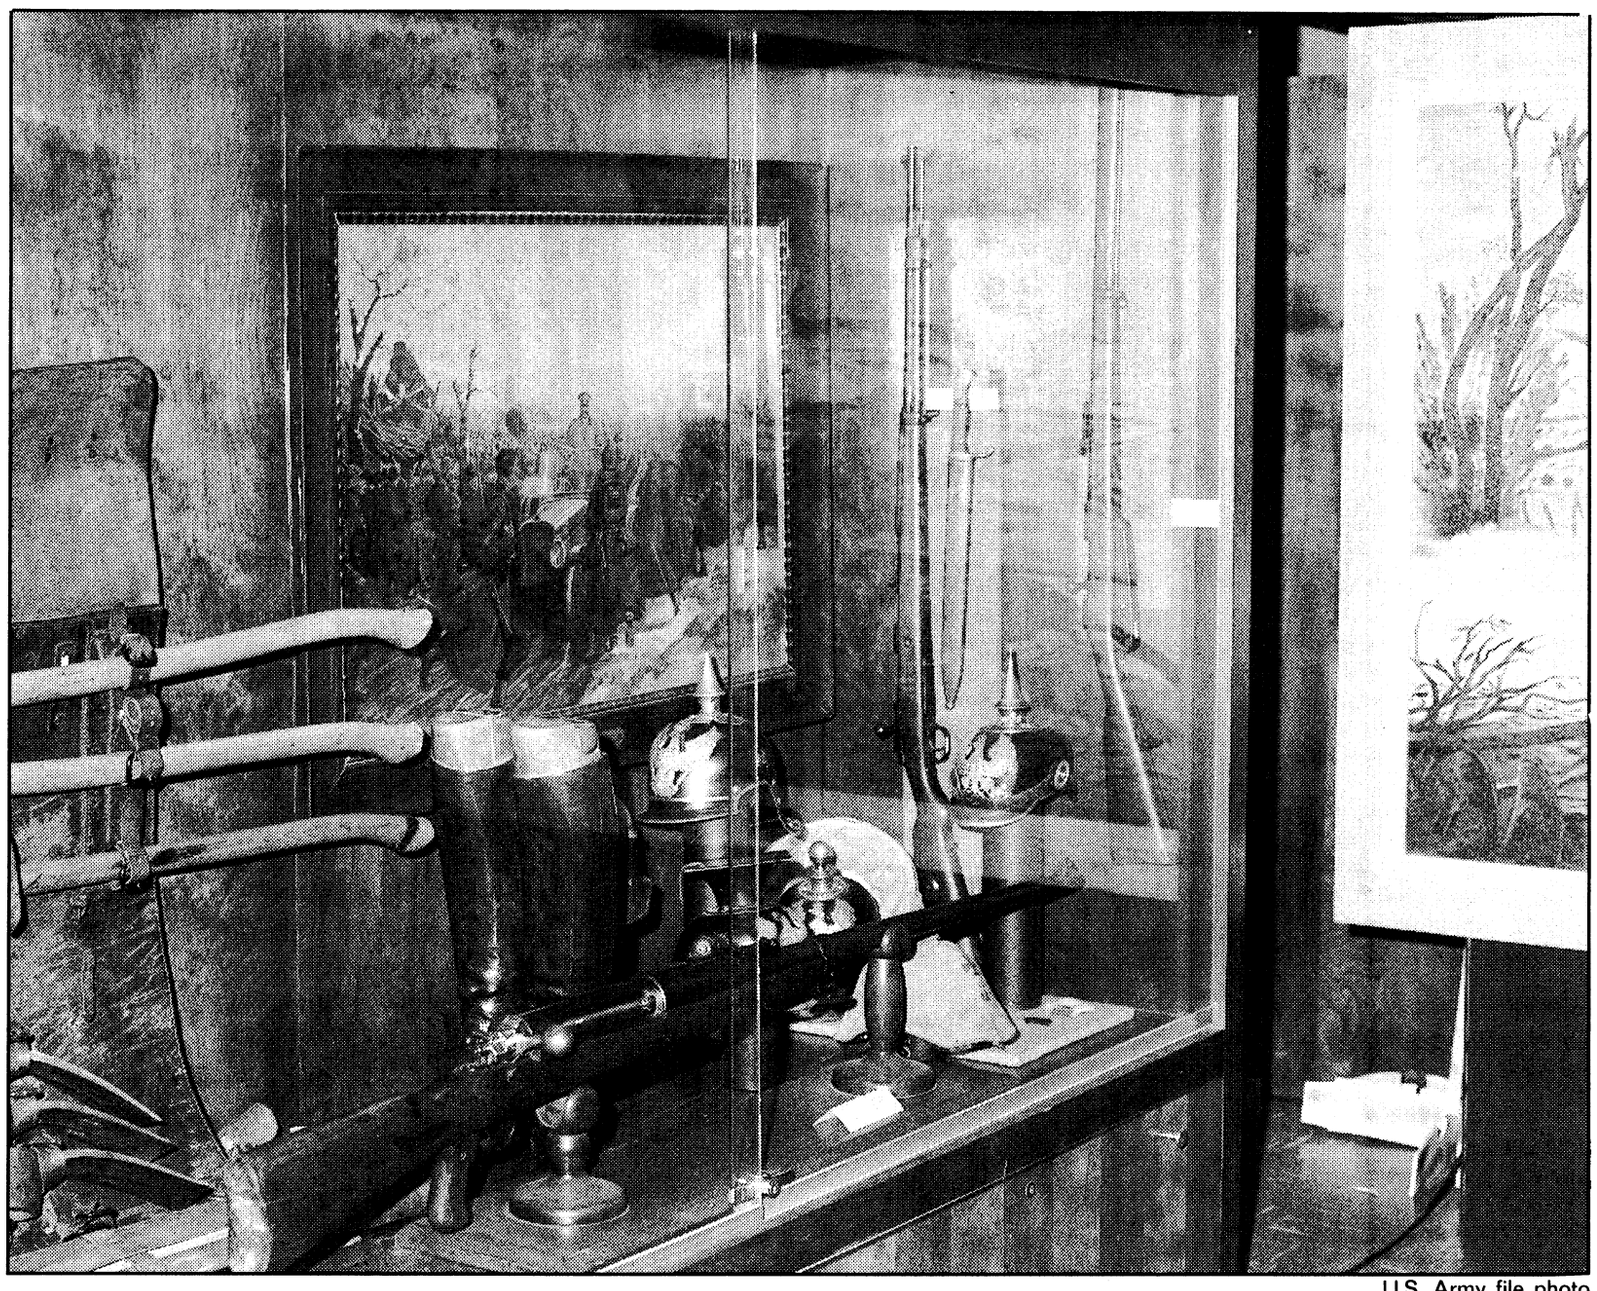
Personnel that work in the Pediatric Clinic have been reluctant to enforce this policy because they realize that babysitting service is sometimes hard to find.

Several weeks ago, two small children injured themselves while the parent was busy with the physician who was seeing a brother or sister.

One child picked up a sliver of glass and put it in his mouth, causing cuts. Another stuck her hand in a container of used needles and got several small puncture wounds.

Even the most attentive parent is not able to hold a conversation with a physician and control one or more other children at the same time.

Well children are exposed to sick children while in clinic waiting areas. Until a doctor sees the child who is playing in the waiting room, that child's parent may not realize that the child has a contagious disease.



The Pediatric Clinic will allow in the clinic only children coming for medical care. Only emergencies are exceptions. Parents are requested to make arrangements for the care of other children prior to coming to the clinic.

Appointments may be rescheduled when children who do not require medical care are brought to the clinic, depending on the situation.

International Wives Club meets first Tuesday of each month

Interior of the National Infantry Museum contains numerous displays.

Infantry enthusiasts will discover plenty at National Infantry Museum

By Brian C. Sutton
Bayonet staff writer

Many soldiers and family members pass by a well-known historical point every day without a second glance. This is quite possibly because they don't know at what they are looking.

A second look at the three-story stone structure, with its white face and a green skirt of grass before it, would show the passerby that there is more to this seemingly common building that makes it tremendously uncommon.

When approaching the building, one might observe an array of cannons, trains, and tanks. Some of these items date back to the early 1900s, some as recent as the war in the Middle East.

A stroll toward the largest tank on display will reveal a Soviet-made T-72 main battle tank, used by the Iraqi Army against the allied forces during Operation Desert Storm. This tank, along with many other items captured or donated by the 3rd Brigade, 24th Infantry Division (mechanized) after Operation Desert Storm, can be found here.

From the most recent conflict, to times when people didn't know how to construct and fight with sophisticated weapons, the National Infantry Museum, shows what being an infantryman was like.

Up the impressive steps outside the building and just above the front door, is the emblem of the true infantryman, the Combat Infantryman Badge, which signifies that a soldier has participated in combat. This symbol is the gateway into a museum that was noted by Georgia Gov. Zell Miller with the Governor's Award in the Humanities in February.

Inside, a visitor is immediately encompassed by semidarkness and greeted by museum staff. That darkness, however, adds to the dramatization the pieces of history portray during the visit.

Through the center of the museum, a winding staircase gives the visitor a view that is ever-changing, with a gigantic American flag as part of that view.

Among the massive amounts of displays for the Civil War, both world wars, Korea, and Vietnam, lies, in a little room near the airborne display, the Congressional Medal of Honor winners.

This discreet display, that one must stumble upon to find, may very well be the most impressive part of the museum. The modest description of each winner, accompanied by a picture, represents these men and their accomplishments during a conflict, with complete willingness to sacrifice themselves to save their comrades and complete the mission tasked to them.

For the infantry enthusiast, the National Infantry Museum here is a must to see.

3rd Bde, 24th ID gains lieutenants with Bradley experience

By Aurelio Feliberty
3rd Brigade, 24th Infantry Division

With the 3rd Brigade, 24th Infantry Division scheduled to transition to the Bradley fighting vehicle early in 1992, the arrival of nine lieutenants with Bradley experience from 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment serves as an asset to the brigade.

"It is with great pride that 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry gives up its young," said Lt. Col. Robert Leon, commander of 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment. We have no doubt they will cover themselves, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry and the 3rd Brigade, 24th Infantry Division with glory, he said. "We wish them God speed," he said.

"We are very happy to receive this fine group of lieutenants," said Lt. Col. Rick Olson, commander of the 2nd Battalion, 18th Infantry, speaking for the Sledgehammer Brigade. "I can think of no better way to get a group of lieutenants into a battalion than have them come through 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment."

"It's a battalion dedicated to training and the professional development not only of its officers but of all its personnel," he continued. "I know both your most previous and your current battalion commanders share that commitment to professional development and expect excellent training. That's what your company commanders have dedicated themselves to, and we're just very happy that you're becoming part of the Sledgehammer Brigade."

The lieutenants and their assignments are as follows: 2nd Lts. Steven T. Brown, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, 18th Infantry; John I. Hetherington, Company D, 1st Battalion, 18th Infantry; Stephen F. Maxner, Company E, 1st Battalion, 18th Infantry; Richard E. Mudd, Company A, 2nd Battalion, 18th Infantry; Dennis C. Rasdall, Company C, 2nd Battalion, 18th Infantry; George W. Thompson III, Company D, 2nd Battalion, 18th Infantry; Marc D. Thoreson, Company E, 2nd Battalion, 18th Infantry; and 1st Lt. David S. Elliott, Company A, 1st Battalion, 18th Infantry.

"This is the most lieutenants that I have received at a given time," said Lt. Col. Bill Chamberlain, commander of 1st Battalion, 18th Infantry. "It'll be a little hard to fill up the holes with them, but that's all right — we're absolutely glad to have them."

"The priority is to get each of these lieutenants into a rifle platoon today, and that's happening," he continued.

"I'm looking forward to putting on the 24th taro leaf," said Hetherington. "But, what is really important for all of us is the troop time for our professional development.

"It'll be a good experience, being assigned to the 1st Battalion, 18th Infantry — the best battalion in the brigade," said Elliott.

Rangers begin move from Dugway

By Shawn Lunsfordhodson
Dugway Public Affairs Office

DUGWAY PROVING GROUND, Utah — Since its arrival here in 1984, the 7th Ranger Training Battalion has trained more than 11,000 ranger students as the desert phase of ranger training. That's changing as the battalion says goodbye to the tortured west desert and moves to Fort Bliss, Texas, in an attempt to save money and expedite training.

"We'll save quite a bit," said Capt. Jeffrey E. Thompson, 7th Ranger Training Battalion adjutant. "We'll save money on air fares and the cost to obtain aircraft for parachute jumps, and we'll save on the cost of shipping broken equipment to Fort Carson, as it can be repaired at Bliss."

Another factor affecting the move is the weather here. Whereas Fort Bliss has steady temperatures throughout the year, Thompson said the three winter months at Dugway could qualify as "arctic training" for the students.

The goals of the 136-man battalion is to set up training sites at Bliss, train two or more ranger classes and clear Dugway Proving Ground before October. All this will be done with the group split in half.

Fifty percent of the soldiers left June 10, and the advance party of 20 members arrived at Bliss at the end of April. They set up raid sites and established the new 7th RTB foothold there.

While they prepare for the first class of students, who are scheduled at Bliss Aug. 16, the other half of the battalion will complete the training of the last two Dugway Proving Ground classes.

Moving a battalion and clearing an installation are no easy tasks, especially at half strength.

Command Sgt. Major Francisco Magana, battalion sergeant major, has tasked his soldiers and family members to make this move with the greatest challenge of their careers.

With a 90-day exception-to-policy for family members to remain after their sponsors leave, Magana told family members they should not be intimidated by the horror stories of clearing housing, just make the places shine.

The command sergeant major later added that his challenge yielded two zero-defect, first-time inspection ratings for two of his soldiers already departed from Dugway.

Feeling the wake of the turbulent move, director of community affairs, Stuart Soffer, forecasts a rough ride after the battalion leaves.

"We're losing a lot of good employees, he said. "The ranger wives have had a tremendous impact on our community and will be missed. We'll also experience a loss in revenues at the facilities of Dugway, in particular the Child Development Center. One hundred children are needed there daily for the facility just to break even. About 30 of the children who use the facility are rangers' children.

"We'll feel the loss," Soffer said.

Another area caught in the wake is Dugway's exchange. Teresa McClure, post exchange manager, said if usage of the store decreases but sales remain high, the community won't see a change. But, if sales drop, the store will have to make changes to shorten operating hours. Dave Stangler, commissary officer, on the other hand, foresees no changes in commissary operations.

Infantry magazine article calls for creation of master rifleman program

Infantry magazine

In the July-August 1991 issue of Infantry magazine, Lt. Col. Karl W. Eikenberry proposes that the Infantry School develop a "master rifleman" program of instruction.

In "Improving Marksmanship," he says we recognize the need for master fitness trainers and master gunners in some units and that marksmanship should receive equal consideration.

He also offers a sample small arms range program for an infantry battalion. Eikenberry commands the 2nd Battalion, 87th Infantry, 10th Mountain Division.

Also featured in that issue is "Security Force Operations in a Mechanized Infantry Task Force," by Capt. Edward G. Gibbons Jr., who is assigned to the Infantry School's Directorate of Combined Arms and Tactics.

He discusses the importance of tailoring a security force task organization and offers specific steps a task force can take will help security operations succeed.

Maj. Gen. Bernard Loeffke, in "One Place, Three Wars: Part 2," continues his discussion of the lessons he learned in Vietnam and how those lessons can be applied to other "small wars," such as "wars of subversion, the war on drugs, and the war on information." He is chairman of the Inter-American Defense Board in Washington, D.C.

Other articles in this latest issue of Infantry include "The Battalion Chaplain," by Lt. Col. Cole C. Kingseed, who previously commanded the 4th Battalion, 87th Infantry; "Brigade S-1's PSS Matrix," by Maj. Walter A. Schrepel, who was S-1 of the 1st Brigade, 10th Mountain Division, when he wrote the article; "Infantry Mortar Hipshoot," by Lt. Sean M. O'Brien, a mortar platoon leader in the 2d Battalion, 27th Infantry, 7th Infantry Division, when he wrote the article; and "Platoon EXEVALS in a Light Infantry Battalion," by Maj. Eugene J. Palka, who is assigned to the 6th Infantry Division.

Information about Infantry magazine, including subscription rates and writers guidelines, is available from Editor, P.O. Box 2005, Fort Benning, Ga. 31905-0605; DSN 835-2350 or commercial (404) 545-2350.

The editorial and subscription offices are in Building 1827 at the corner of Marchant and Ingersoll streets.

Medal of Honor celebrates anniversary

USAIC Public Affairs Office

July 12 marked an anniversary of which few Americans, save a small band of soldiers, of the Army Medal of Honor.

While the Navy's medal was established in 1861, it was this day of 1862 when President Lincoln approved a congressional resolution to provide for a medal honoring men who "shall most distinguish themselves by their gallantry in action, and other soldier-like qualities." As other medals for valor began building a "Pyramid of Honor" in the early 1900s, the standards for receiving the Medal of Honor became more rigid. Today, it is awarded "for conspicuous gallantry and intrepidity at the risk (or cost) of (a soldier's) life above and beyond the call of duty." In all, 3,411 men and one woman, a surgeon during the Civil War, have received it.

Many who have earned the medal receive it posthumously because most, even those who survive, are grievously wounded.

Army Sgt. James W. Robinson, for whom Fairfax County's Robinson High is named, is one of many who died. After braving a "withering hail of fire" to save several comrades in a pitched battle with the Viet Cong on April 11, 1966, his citation reads, he was wounded.

After he patched his wounds, he spotted an enemy machine-gun emplacement. "His rifle ammunition expended, he seized two grenades and, in an act of unsurpassed heroism, charged toward the entrenched enemy weapon.

Hit again in the leg. . .(he) staggered indomitably through the enemy fire, now concentrated solely on him. Sustaining two additional chest wounds, he marshaled his fleeting strength and hurled the two grenades, thus destroying the enemy machine gun position, as he fell dead upon the battlefield."

Others, like Pvt. Robert Simanek of the U.S. Marine Corps during the Korean War, survive what are usually fatal wounds. Pvt. Simanek dove on a grenade but is still attending the Medal of Honor festivities at the presidential inaugural every four years.

America's Medal of Honor recipients are an elite corps. They are famous and not-so-famous, rich and poor.

Audie Murphy became a movie star (his own story was made into the film "To Hell and Back"), while Adm. John Bulkeley, who spirited Gen. Douglas MacArthur (himself a recipient) off Corregidor in the dead of night on a patrol torpedo boat, was portrayed by Robert Montgomery in the World War II John Wayne classic, "They Were Expendable."

Take precautions to avoid getting hit by lightning

Infantry Branch Safety Office

Lightning causes approximately 100 deaths and 250 injuries each year.

At any given moment, about 1,800 thunderstorms are in progress over the earth's surface and lightning strikes the earth 100 times each second.

Thunderstorms occur on an average of 58 days each year at Fort Benning. However, it should be remembered that thunderstorms can occur at any hour of any day of the year.

Although most thunderstorms can occur at any hour on any day of the year, most thunderstorms occur during March, April and May from midafternoon to early evening and from a few hours before sunrise to a few hours after sunrise.

Despite the frequency of exposure to lightning and the serious consequences of being struck by a 1 million-volt bolt of lightning, most people don't view it as a real hazard.

This perception of invincibility frequently results in failure to take simple safeguards such as those described below and in U.S. Army Infantry Center Regulation 385-2.

If you are inside a building when a thunderstorm approaches — stay in the building and observe the following precautions:

- Do not use the telephone or two-way radios. Lightning may strike lines and antennae outside and follow the lines inside.
- Stay away from open doors and windows, fireplaces, radiators, metal pipes, sinks, showers and bathtubs.
- Don't use plug-in electrical equipment or appliances. Current can travel through power lines into your home or office.

If you are outside when a thunderstorm approaches, seek shelter inside a building as soon as possible.

If you are caught outside with no time to seek shelter, follow these rules:

- Avoid projecting above the surrounding landscape, as you would do if you were standing on a hilltop, in an open field, on the beach or in a small boat.
- Don't seek shelter under the highest object in the area.
- Stay off bleachers.
- Don't carry or wear metal objects such as golf clubs, golf shores with metal spikes, weapons, or steel helmets.
- If you are in a group, don't huddle together; scatter out to reduce the number of injuries should lightning strike.
- Get out of the water and off small boats.
- Stay in your automobile if traveling (hard tops only).
- Avoid wire fences.
- Do not use telephone, field phones or two-way radios.
- Avoid large metal vehicles such as construction equipment, tanks or armored personnel carriers.
- Don't handle flammable materials in open containers.
- If no shelter is available, crouch down on your knees (do not lie flat).

If you feel your skin tingle or your hair stand on end, drop into a crouch immediately.

Everyone must do his part to ensure that Fort Benning does not experience any further lightning injuries.

Parents should make sure their children know lightning safety rules and the entire family should adhere to them.

Commanders and supervisors must ensure that all personnel are aware of necessary precautions in the various work and training locations.

Activity storm plans must address safety procedures for lightning in office, on ranges, during field training, in motor pools, construction sites, etc. and emphasis should be placed on taking precautions before a storm arrives.

W.D. Crowley's updating menu

When it comes to finding an excellent dining spot in the Columbus area, set your eyes on W.D. Crowley's inside Peachtree Mall.

In August, W.D. Crowley's will unveil new menus for both lunch and dinner, said Robert Willingham, manager of the cozy, pub-style restaurant.

Among other tantalizing dishes, the new dinner menu will feature fresh-cut, certified angus ribeyes, New York strip steaks, fresh red snapper, Norwegian salmon, amberjack and orange roughy.

A whole new line of affordable, seafood items have been added to the already well-rounded lunch menu.

Lunches at W.D. Crowley's generally are priced between $4.95 and $5.95. Dinner prices beat those of several comparable restaurants at $9.95 and less.

"When you consider the service and the quantity and quality of your meal, you're definitely getting your money's worth at W.D. Crowley's," Willingham said.

W.D. Crowley's caters to all segments of the public. Business people, small or large groups, families, couples and singles will all feel comfortable and welcome in the relaxed atmosphere.

The full-service restaurant, designed with dark wood and early to middle 20th century artifacts, offers meeting and banquet facilities and a private family room for larger gatherings.

Sunday brunch, special children's menus and carry-out service are available.

W.D. Crowley's is open Monday through Thursday from 11:30 a.m. to 10 p.m.; Friday and Saturday from 11:30 a.m. to 11 p.m.; and Sunday from noon to 9:30 p.m. Although they aren't required, reservations are accepted. You can use cash, MasterCard, Visa, American Express, Diner's or Discover.

Continental. International. Fresh seafood and steaks. Let Willingham and his friendly staff serve you that "just right" meal at W.D. Crowley's. ■

U.S. forces continue peacekeeper role

By Linda Lee
American Forces Information Service

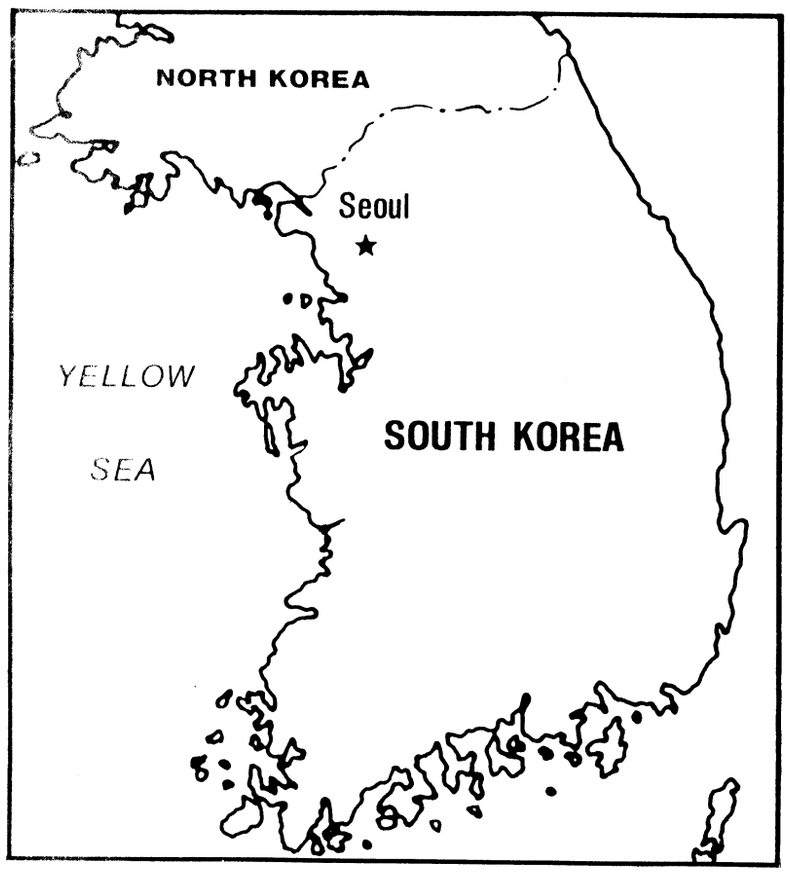
Thirty-eight years after the Korean War armistice, U.S. troops still provide security as part of the U.N. peacekeeping force on the peninsula.

Army Gen. Robert W. RisCassi said U.S. troops continue to help the South Koreans defend their freedom against the threat of aggression from the totalitarian government of the north.

Korea has been divided since Japan left the peninsula at the end of World War II. North Korea invaded the south in mid-50, encountered a U.N. coalition led by the United States and signed an armistice in July 1953. A demilitarized zone 151 miles long and 4,000 meters wide has separated the two Koreas at the 38th Parallel ever since.

In June 1990, RisCassi assumed responsibility for all U.S. and U.N. forces in the Republic of Korea. The 32-year Army veteran commands the U.N. Command; the Combined Forces Command, an integrated headquarters responsible for planning the defense of the south and directing combat forces, if required; U.S. Forces Korea, a joint headquarters for the U.S. Army, Air Force and Navy in the country; and Eighth U.S. Army.

U.S& forces in Korea number almost 42,000 and represent all four military branches. South Korean forces total more than 600,000.



"Even in the midst of the changes occuring all over the world and the growing disenchantment with the inability of communist systems to provide for the welfare and prosperity of their citizens, there has been remarkably little change in North Korea," RisCassi said. "The north refuses to recognize the legitimacy of the south and adheres to a policy of unification on its own terms, by force if necessary."

RisCassi said that in the last 10 years, North Korea modernized and restructured its armed forces extensively. With more than 1 million members under arms, those forces present a considerably threat to the south.

"They have moved over 60 percent of their forces to within 100 kilometers of the demilitarized zone, and mechanization has made their infantry more mobile," the general said. He added that the North Koreans have increased their weapons inventory with an additional 1,000 tanks and 6,000 artillery tubes and rocket launchers.

"The theater is unique in that the threat is so close and evident. There is a common understanding that there will be no time to prepare," RisCassi said. The come-as-you-are warning available produces a command philosophy that makes readiness a non-negotiable standard, he noted.

RisCassi said it is important to remember that U.S. forces don't perform their mission in isolation, but are a part of a coalition. Deterrence of North Korean aggression or defeating an attack relies on both U.S. and South Korean forces, he said. U.S. forces include those in the republic and those tagged as reinforcements.

"All U.S. forces face challenges maintaining readiness and executing meaningful and effective training," he said. "In some respects, we have a special advantage. Soldiers, sailors, airmen and Marines here share an appreciation of the immediacy of their missions. If we are effective, the better we perform our missions in peace, the lower the likelihood aggression will occur."

Modernization of U.S. Forces Korea units is another important aspect in the defense of the south. RisCassi explained that air and ground units have all the advanced capabilities proved effective during Operations Desert Shield and Desert Storm. In addition, the 2nd Infantry Division and Air Force tactical modernization programs are on schedule and nearing completion.

Lessons learned in the Persian Gulf war will help the allied deterrent in Korea, RisCassi proposed. The overwhelming success of U.S. technology and doctrine "cannot have been lost on the leadership of North Korea," he said. Too, the rapid formation of a coalition by countries that had no previous formal defense ties with one another may also be applied to the situation in Korea.

"Here, coalition frameworks already exist. There is now greater confidence that these frameworks will be fleshed out rapidly into one effective combined headquarters, capable of defeating aggression," said RisCassi. "The U.N. Command, which remains in the Republic of Korea, is the recipient of enhanced viability and prestige. Should the north consider an invasion, it would have to consider the prospect of a rapid and collective response of the global community."

RisCassi said the command does face some unique problems that must be taken into account constantly to make the U.S.-South Korea coalition work.

Infantry training on the move

By Brian C. Sutton
Bayonet staff writer

A clear blue sky, with the sun shining so brightly it could cut through the skin like a knife, played an integral role in the platoon leader's thoughts and strategy.

Confused. Yes, the lieutenant was more than a little confused. He needed time to think. Some shade under a nearby tree would be perfect. He needed to cool down and think for a minute. This was his first attempt at a direct move to contact the enemy and he wasn't quite sure of himself.

The operations order was clear: Move to contact the ememy and secure the hill that the enemy now possesses.

The enemy had set up a well-defended position. M-1 Abrams tanks were hidden behind a wall of earth and were sitting below ground level. It had taken most of the afternoon for the crews of these tanks to get the position built and dig a hole big enough to hide these tanks.

After a drink of water, water that was barely palatable due to the heat of the day burning into the canteen, the lieutenant gave the command to move out. The men boarded an armored personnel carrier and moved forward. M-1 Abrams tanks provided support for the lieutenant and his men as they moved to reach their objective.

The platoon came upon an unexpected obstacle. Trees, large branches, pieces of metal and other wooden boards topped off with wire were lying in the road, their jagged edges warding off the platoon.

"Why don't we just run the tanks over it," someone said.

"You can't," said Staff Sgt. Richard Wehling, 2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, Infantry Officer Basic Course, "The tanks will get that wire all wrapped up in their tracks. It will stop them for sure."

Wehling was a member of IOBC's cadre for Company B's Mechanized Infantry Week, a field phase of IOBC where the lieutenants get "hands-on" experience in mechanized infantry training.

The lieutenant and his team did, in fact, send a forward team to eliminate the obstacle and did succeed in their mission.

"This operation is the grandaddy where they put it all together and make it happen," said 1st Sgt. James D. Lyons, Co. B, 2nd Bn., 11th Inf. Regt.

The students trained for 14 weeks prior to this operation in order to successfully complete the 16-week course.

That wasn't necessarily the hard part.

"We have no organic elements here," said Wehling. "We have to borrow other unit's equipment and their men."

"It's definitely hard to plan something like this," said Lyons.

Lyons said that it takes five weeks or so to plan something of this size.

"We're in contact with units all over post to try to get the equipment that we need," said Lyons.

Those units which frequently support the IOBC mechanized training include 2nd Bn., 69th Armor, 1st Bn., 18th Inf. and 1st Bn., 29th Inf.

ASK THE JUDGE

By Michael H. Lane
Staff Judge Advocate's Office

Q. My wife and I have been married for 22 years, and are in the process of divorce. Our children are grown, and we are in the process of negotiating a property settlement.

We have reached agreement on most issues, but are confused about some of the problems associated with her rights after the divorce. She says she is entitled to one-half of my retirement pay in the divorce, and her lawyer wants to put a clause in the settlement to that effect.

I want to be fair, but I have worked hard for my retirement and have serious medical problems that will limit my ability to be employed after I retire. Is she entitled to do this?

A. The Uniformed Services Former Spouses' Protection Act of 1982, as amended, is a legislative response to court cases that prevented state courts from dividing military pay between husband and wife as part of a divorce settlement.

Since courts could divide the pension rights of civilian couples in a divorce, the exclusion of military pensions from court control was seen as unfair to the military spouse.

The key portion of the Act provides that ". . .a court may treat disposable retired or retainer pay payable to a member. . .after June 25, 1981, either as property solely of the member or as property of the member and his spouse in accordance with the law of the jurisdiction of such court. . ."

Therefore, Congress has authorized retired pay to be divided or not according to state law where the divorce takes place. Georgia law subjects retired pay to such division.

This does not mean that your spouse is automatically going to receive half of your retirement pay. The issue is quite complex, and the formula adopted by a particular court is limited by federal definitions as well as state law.

It is clear a state court may only divide what is called "disposable retired income," not total retired income.

Disposable retired pay is defined in the Act as gross non-disability retired pay minus certain deductions, which need not be included for purposes of this discussion.

Your situation is particularly clouded because we do not know now whether you will be awarded a military disability percentage at retirement, nor do we know what percentage disability will be awarded.

It can safely be said, however, that the amount of your retired pay, which is disability pay, whether Army or VA disability, is not a part of the divisible portion under present law.

You may secure further information on this or other legal problems by calling the Legal Assistance Office for an appointment at (404) 545-3282. The office is on Main Post in building 5, at the intersection of Vibbert and Sigerfoos streets.

'Jaws', carelessness can ruin a good swim

U.S. Army Safety Center

I can still remember the scene vividly. I was perched on the edge of my seat, mouth agape, eyes locked open in terror, popcorn forgotten. Two locals had skewered a roast onto a hook that was attached to a rope. They secured the rope to the dock they were standing on. Then they slung the beef into the ocean to catch Jaws.

Jaws took the bait, ran out the rope, and jerked the dock, with one of the fisherman, into the surf. He was now frantically swimming for shore, his friend hollering, "Swim! Swim! Don't Look Back! Swim!" (Or something like that.) Jaws was hot in pursuit.

Granted, a shark attack is not a common swimming hazard. Swimming can be dangerous, though. In fact, 5,600 Americans drowned in 1986. These deaths can be prevented by following sensible safety precautions.

One basic precaution is to realize your limitations as a swimmer and not to exceed them. Develop your swimming skills, but don't try to progress from the wading pool to crossing the English Channel in a week.

Don't handicap yourself, either. Your body needs the chance to devote its energies to digesting a recent meal. So don't overload your body by swimming shortly after eating.

As far as swimming is concerned, alcohol and water don't mix. Alcohol can impair your balance, judgment, and reflexes. Don't stack the deck against yourself by drinking and swimming.

You also need to know the characteristics of your swimming area. Never dive into unfamiliar waters. Be prepared for currents, tides, deep holes, stumps, and rocks. Beach, lake, and swimming pool regulations are established for your safety. Abide by them.

Swim with a buddy. Companionship is a basic safe swimming practice. Even the most experienced swimmer can be struck by a muscle cramp and need assistance. If you're set on swimming across a lake and can't get someone to swim with you, have a boater follow you.

Panic will kill a swimmer as sure as Jaws will. No matter how desperate the situation seems, never panic or lose control. If you encounter a dangerous situation, such as a severe cramp or irresistible current, stay calm.

You should have a buddy or a lifeguard nearby to help or advise you. Otherwise, depend on previous training. If that's not applicable, use common sense to arrive at a solution.

But always stay calm. Realize that it takes very little effort to float. And as long as you stay afloat, you won't drown. That will give you a chance to massage a cramp or calmly decide on a course of action.

No, Jaws is not a significant swimming threat. Swimming has a few hazards, though, so know your limitations, know your swimming hole, and swim with a buddy. If trouble arises, depend on common sense, and your abilities. And remember, whatever you do. . .don't look back.

Swimming safety precautions

- Wait after eating before swimming. Your body needs to devote its energy to digest recent meals. Don't overtax your body with too many demands at the same time.
- Improve your swimming abilities, but not too quickly. Know your limitations and don't overextend them.
- Always swim with a friend.
- Obey waterfront rules and beach regulations.
- Never dive into unknown water.
- Never take a dare to do something risky.
- Never swim underwater for more than a few seconds.
- Never swim long distances in open water unless accompanied by someone in a boat.
- Don't stay long in uncomfortably cold water.

Although the number of swimmers increases every year, the number of water-related fatalities has remained fairly constant — about 7,000 annually.This can only mean that people are better prepared now than they were in the past. Training is part of the reason.

The rescue skills of a few, although extremely important, are still inadequate for the needs of the many. Everyone should learn to swim safely.

Preparation key to fun, survival

U.S. Army Safety Center

Roughing it — the essence of the spirit that built this great country. Conquerors of the unknown, adventurers of history, explorers of the great outdoors; they all camped out. People like Daniel Boone, Jeremiah Johnson and Lewis and Clark.

To co-exist peacefully or to scrap against the elements and terrain. All these features inspire the camper. People camp to escape to peaceful seclusion or to challenge themselves. Often, camping coincides with other activities, such as hiking, fishing, and hunting.

Of all the reasons and rewards associated with camping, one ingredient is essential for enjoyment or even survival — preparation. Preparation depends on common sense, experience, and foresight.

The basics of camping are shelter, food, and safe water. Shelter will protect you from the elements, whether it's heat, cold, wind, precipitation, vegetation, or insects. Shelter ranges from sunscreen, bug spray, or rain gear to a cave, tent, or Winnebago.

Food is another basic consideration. If you plan to hunt or fish for food, don't depend on your skill or luck to sustain you. Bring food with you in case the fish aren't biting or the game is scarce. Prepare for cooking needs, as well.

The ability to build a fire is important for warmth and cooking. Be responsible about your fire, though. Never build a fire larger than necessary. Don't leave it unattended. Keep all fires and glowing coals in a clearing.

Build your fire downwind from your camp area. When leaving, thoroughly extinguish it and wait until the ashes are cold.

The easiest way to ensure safe water supply is to bring your own. You can contract an intestinal disorder by drinking untreated water. If you have to drink untreated water, boil it thoroughly.

Boiling destroys the organisms that cause waterborne disease. Chemical disinfectants such as iodine or chlorine tablets are not considered as reliable as heat in killing giardia, although those products work well against most other waterborne bacteria that cause disease.

Check the weather before camping. If the weather is less than ideal, consider delaying your trip. Otherwise, prepare for the forecasted weather conditions. Regardless of forecasts, always prepare for unexpected weather changes. Bring a change of clothes, rain gear, garments for unseasonably cold weather, and matches.

Navigation is also important when camping. Getting lost is a terrifying experience. Don't stray from familiar territory, and don't exceed your navigational capabilities. A wise precaution is informing someone as to where you will be, how long you will be there, and the route you'll take.

Always bring a survival kit camping. It should include a pocketknife, matches in a waterproof case, water, a "space" blanket, and compass. Pack first aid items, also. Bring snake-bite treatment, bandages and aspirin.

Brave the elements and challenge the outdoors. But never underestimate nature, and don't be caught unprepared.

Olympic Festival shooting events wrap-up

U.S. Olympic Shooting Center

Shooting competition at U.S. Olympic Festival '91 marked several Festival firsts, including three double gold medalists, a national record on the skeet range, and two matches that were decided on the final shot.

Bill Roy, an Air Force Academy instructor from Colorado Springs, Colo., fired a perfect 200 in the men's skeet match to set a national record en route to the gold medal. Festival silver medalist Mike Schmidt of Eagan, Minn., held the previous record of 199 points. "I've been working on my mental approach and have more faith in myself now," said Roy, a member of the 1991 Pan Am Team. "I think that's made the difference."

In the trap event, junior world-record holder Josh Lakatos of Pasadena, Calif., defended national champion Bret Erickson of Bennington, Neb., on the final target of the match. Meanwhile, Debra Sinclair of Tigard, Ore., survived a sudden-death shoot-off to win the air rifle event over national champion Ann-Marie Pfiffner of Dubuque, Iowa.

In other competition, Jerry Wilder of Remington, Ind., won gold in the air and free pistol events, while double national champion Connie Petracek of Nashville, Tenn., confirmed her top ranking by sweeping the women's pistol events. Petracek is the first woman in Festival history to win the air and sport pistol matches in the same year. Both Foth, a 1988 Olympian from Colorado Springs, won the air rifle and three-position events.

Troy Lawton of Fort Worth, Texas, handed triple national champion David Edmondson of Colorado Springs an 11-point defeat in the running target event. Jon Frazer of Wheelersburg, Ohio, finished three points ahead of 1988 Olympian Ed Suarez of San Jose, Calif., to win gold in the rapid-fire pistol event. "This match seems to have more importance than others because it's such a big amateur athletic event," said Frazer. "I didn't really experience the pressure, though. It was more like a level of excitement."

Columbus hosts Junior Baseball Super Series

Columbus Indians

The fifth annual Junior Olympic Baseball Super Series will be played in Columbus Aug. 16 through 22, according to a Columbus Indians and United States Baseball Federation announcement.

The Junior Olympic Super Series is the ultimate national championship from the USBF's 15- and 16-year-old sanctioned leagues (Pony Baseball, Police Athletic League, National Amateur Baseball Federation, Dixie Baseball, and American Amateur Baseball Congress).

Each league will send its respective national champion to Columbus. The five championship teams from all over the nation will join a host team from the Columbus-Phenix City-Fort Benning area in a round robin tournament with playoffs for Gold, Silver and Bronze medals. The host team will be coached by Columbus College Head Baseball Coach Chip Reese.

The Super Series will bring national attention to the Columbus area, adding to the city's respected reputation as a strong youth baseball town, according to officials.

Dick Case, executive director and chief executive officer of the USBF said his organization will watch this year's Super Series with an eye toward future dealings with Columbus.

Sites of tournaments sending teams to Jr. Olympic Super Series

American Amateur Baseball Congress
Mickey Mantle Division — Aug. 7 to 11 — Waterbury, Ct.

Dixie Baseball
Pre-Majors — Aug. 3 to 8 — Montgomery, Ala.

National Amateur Baseball Federation
Junior Division — Aug. 1 to 4 — Northville, Mich.

National Police Athletic League
National Championship — Aug. 4 to 10 — Osceola, Fla.

Pony Baseball
Colt Division — Aug. 6 to 13 — LaFayette, In.

"Depending on the strong outcome of this event, in terms of support and attendance, negotiations will continue in regard to the Columbus Indians hosting the Super Series annually as well as pre-Olympic and International events in conjunction with the USBF.

"International events would include national teams from other countries joining the U.S. Pan Am and Olympic teams in pre-Olympic contests or 'Friendship Games.' If the Super Series goes well, Columbus will certainly be given top consideration for hosting these types of events in 1992-1996."

This year's Super Series will feature players from across the U.S. who have realistic opportunities to play on Team USA in the 1996 Olympics in Atlanta.

The Columbus Indians will serve as the host organization for the event. For more information, contact Indians General Manager John Dittrich or David Wilson at 571-8866.

Tasks change for chapel staff

Chaplain (Capt.) Jonathan Smith sets up a field altar display in Infantry Hall.

By Gregory B. Clancy
USAIC Chaplains' Office

Since a distinct military occupational specialty was granted to chaplains' assistants in the early 1960s, the duties and responsibility of a chaplains' assistant have changed.

Some of the tasks assistants used to do, they still do, but in a different way. For instance, on the garrison side of the house, the assistant used to be responsible for directing the choir and playing the piano. However, these responsibilities are not mandatory and are done on a volunteer-basis.

Presently, members of the chapel congregation volunteer to assist in picking up supplies, cleaning the chapel, and maintaining the chapel grounds.

At some chapels cleaning is done by a cleaning crew, and at others cleaning is done by the unit it covers.

The duties of typing purchase orders, bulletins, and other reports are still performed by the assistant.

The assistant is responsible for going to the commissary to pick up food supplies for the chapel, the nursery, fellowship time, and chapel potlucks.

Furthermore, the assistant helps in preparing for a chapel outing, such as, a retreat, a chapel trip, or a picnic.

On the field side of the house the duties of an assistant have changed a great deal. The primary function is to escort the chaplain to and from a site to visit and conduct worship services safely.

Usually, the chaplain carries the chaplain kit which holds most of the items needed for the service. The assistant carries the other equipment, such as the field chest hymnal, containing hymn books, Bibles, wine and wafers.

All religious services, such as Catholic Mass, Protestant services, Jewish services and Orthodox services, are able to be held in the field. The setting up of the chaplain kit for the field service is the assistant's responsibility.

In the combat environment, the chaplain drives and the assistant carries the weapon and provides protection for the chaplain while he conducts the service.

Handmade rosaries in high demand

By Gabriele Sonnenberg
USAIC Chaplains' Office

Young men with shaven heads fill the pews of the Regimental Chapel at Sand Hill. Their bodies are draped in deep green and brown shades of camouflage. They watch the priest bless the hundreds of handmade rosaries next to the altar.

After the mass the rosaries are waiting for the soldiers in the lobby of the chapel. The demand of rosaries is never-ending, a chaplain official said.

"The Military Council of Catholic Women are meeting weekly to make rosaries for the soldiers. But the demand for rosaries can not be fullfilled by these women," Berta Oliver, Catholic chapel publicist, explained. "Two groups of rosary makers, one from Our Lady of Lourdes Church and the other from the Holy Family Church in Columbus are helping to meet the demand," Oliver added.

Several rosary makers sat in the pews during Mass. A rosary maker explained it takes 20 minutes to prepare a rosary.

"I enjoy making rosaries during summer break," Ted Moore, 13, said. "I have been doing it for two weeks."

The soldiers are happy to get the rosaries, especially while in basic training, a chaplain's office official said.

216th Anniversary

The Chaplains' Corp marks its 216th anniversary Monday. The unit ministry adheres to the motto "Pro Deo et Patria", which means for God and country. This motto is emblazoned on the U.S. Army Chaplains' official seal. Framed in gold, the sky-blue, round seal has a white dove of peace hovering in radiance over an open book on which are presented a Christian cross and two tablets of the Ten Commandments with the Star of David.

Wake up and smell the coffee, it's time for Rip Van Winkle! SOA CSM reminisces about Vietnam

by Dan R. Wilson
U.S. Army School of the Americas

A casual encounter with Command Sgt. Maj. Legoas' combat buddies at the Main Post NCO Club brought to mind his most vivid memories 22 years ago from C Company, 75th Infantry, Airborne-Rangers in Vietnam. As part of the 173rd reunion that took place in June at Fort Benning, members of the elite Rangers during the Vietnam era gathered at the Fort Benning NCO Club and other places on post to commemorate and get to see other combat soldiers that they had not seen since the war.

A social event took place at Legoas' residence. The participation to this event brought almost 20 veterans together and some of their wives. According to Legoas, they enjoyed a great evening recalling experiences and bringing old memories back to life.

Among the participants were John L. Rotundo and Don Erickson, authors of the book "Charlie Rangers." Also there was John Leppelman, author of the book "Blood on the Risers: An Airborne Soldier's Thirty-five Months in Vietnam." Other active duty veterans included Command Sgt. Maj. O. R. Hoggard and Command Sgt. Maj. Cravis Tybron Jr., both assigned with the 82nd Airborne Division, Fort Bragg, North Carolina.

Not present for this social event was Dave "Mad Dog" Dolby, Congressional Medal of Honor Recipient, who was being entertained by Command Sgt. Maj. Gary Cupit of the 29th Infantry Regiment. Dolby spent an aggregate of six years in Vietnam.

Legoas said the characterization of this brave bunch of veterans is best described in the opening statement of Leppelman's book.

"All at once the whole world blew up in my face. I fell face down in the dirt as mortar rounds fell among our positions like raindrops. The ground shook, and I glanced up to see men silhouetted in the light of explosions occurring less than twenty-five feet from my position. Trees fell down, and dirt and rocks pelted us as the bombardment continued. I was scared as I never have been scared before. There was no place to run or hide, and all we could do was lie still and hope that a round would not land on top of us. But the explosions continued, and the noise was deafening. Between explosions men behind me were yelling for a medic or calling, 'I am hit.' It lasted for five minutes but seemed like an eternity. As quickly as the attack had started, it stopped."

According to Legoas, the evening went by quick and the personalities had not changed much.

"The one thing that sticks in my mind is how lucky and privileged I was in having the opportunity to entertain these great Americans, once called 'The Professionals'."

Twenty-two years later, this dream was a sudden one and it went away as fast as it came.

Karate teaches kids

by Keith F. Johnson
U.S. Army School of the Americas

Are you the parent of a child who lacks confidence, or discipline, or maybe has a lack of coordination? Have you ever wondered maybe there is something else your child could do that would help his or her development toward being a responsible young adult? Every parent at one time or another wonders if they are doing everything they can to help prepare their children for life in today's society. The Fort Benning Youth Activities Center has a program that can help.

Every Monday and Wednesday at 6:30 p.m. approximately 70 kids ages five to 16 gather to learn karate.

"Karate is not just physical," Staff Sgt. David Bauzo said. "There is a lot of concentration involved in learning karate techniques which enhances the kids concentration and focus in accomplishing a certain task. This helps the kids in their schoolwork, they learn to persevere until they've reached their goal."

Bauzo said the mental aspect is only part of the benefits of the class. He said many of his students began taking karate lessons because they have asthma or a lack of coordination. The class helps these kids because of the breathing exercises and other exercises they do using their hands and feet.

Bauzo began taking karate lessons at the age of nine because of an asthma problem. Three years later he was a black belt. His success and ability to communicate and relate with the kids lead to his becoming an instructor.

"I saw there was a need to improve not only the quality of life but also to teach kids discipline at an early age," Bauzo said. "I thought I could make a change. There are a lot of children out there that need help, children with only a father or mother or no parents at all. I saw that karate made a difference. Children who were shy or timid became outgoing and bright."

Bauzo said he hopes there are other people in the Fort Benning community who could teach karate to the kids because he will soon be leaving for Germany. For more information call 545-3070.

Sgt. Jorge Frias advances the ball downfield while his teammates look for him to pass the ball during the Fort Benning Soccer League Championship game at Doughboy Stadium.

SOA soccer team wins championship

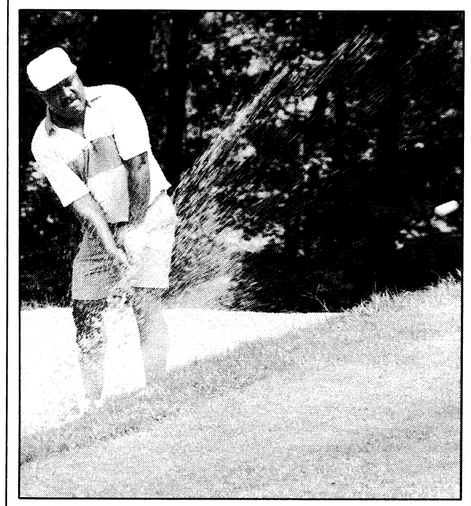
by Keith F. Johnson
U.S. Army School of the Americas

The U.S. Army School of the Americas' soccer team won the Fort Benning Soccer League Championship June 14 by beating the 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, 1-0.

SOA won the championship for the fifth time in seven years after finishing second the last two years.

"It was a relief," said Rafael Garcia. "We came so close the last two years but we didn't quite get it, this year we brought the championship trophy back to SOA."

Garcia, a co-coach of the team, has played the last four years on the team and was one of only four people who were permanent members of the team. Pedro Rodriguez, a licensed referee with the U.S. Soccer Federation, was the sideline coach while Jorge Frias and Carmen Castillo were the coaches on the field. Other members of the team would consist of students assigned to SOA on a temporary basis.



Frias scored the winning goal near the end of the first half as he and his teammates drove the ball down the right side of the field before Frias tried to center the ball in front of the goal, but a handball was called giving the SOA team a penalty kick.

Frias said he wasn't sure who was going to take the penalty kick because a lot of responsibility fell on the person to make the goal, but when his teammates chose him it gave him some confidence to make the shot.

"I was nervous thinking that I didn't want to miss the shot because we may not get another chance to score," Frias said.

The SOA team was able to control the ball the rest of the game, something Rodriguez attributed to the Latin American style of play.

"We were able to maintain control because we played the Latin American style of soccer which emphasizes more technique rather than the rougher European or North American style."

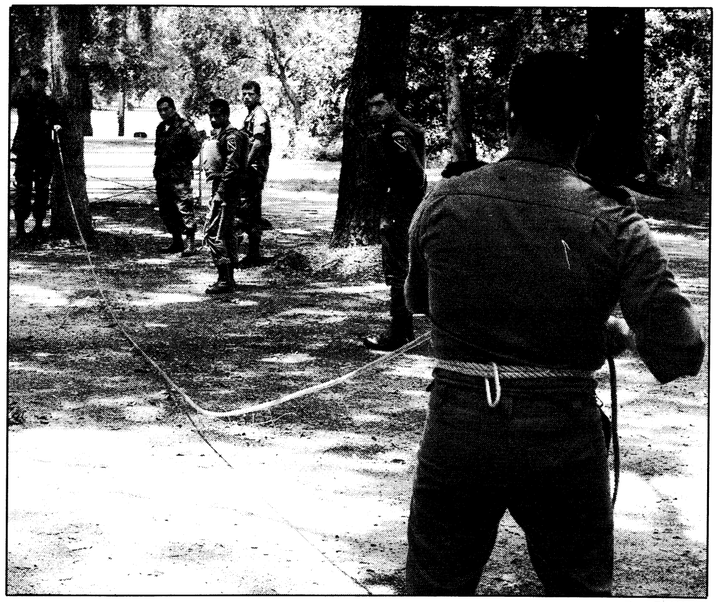
Students combine engineer and infantry skills to become 'Sappers'

by Dan R. Wilson
U.S. Army School of the Americas

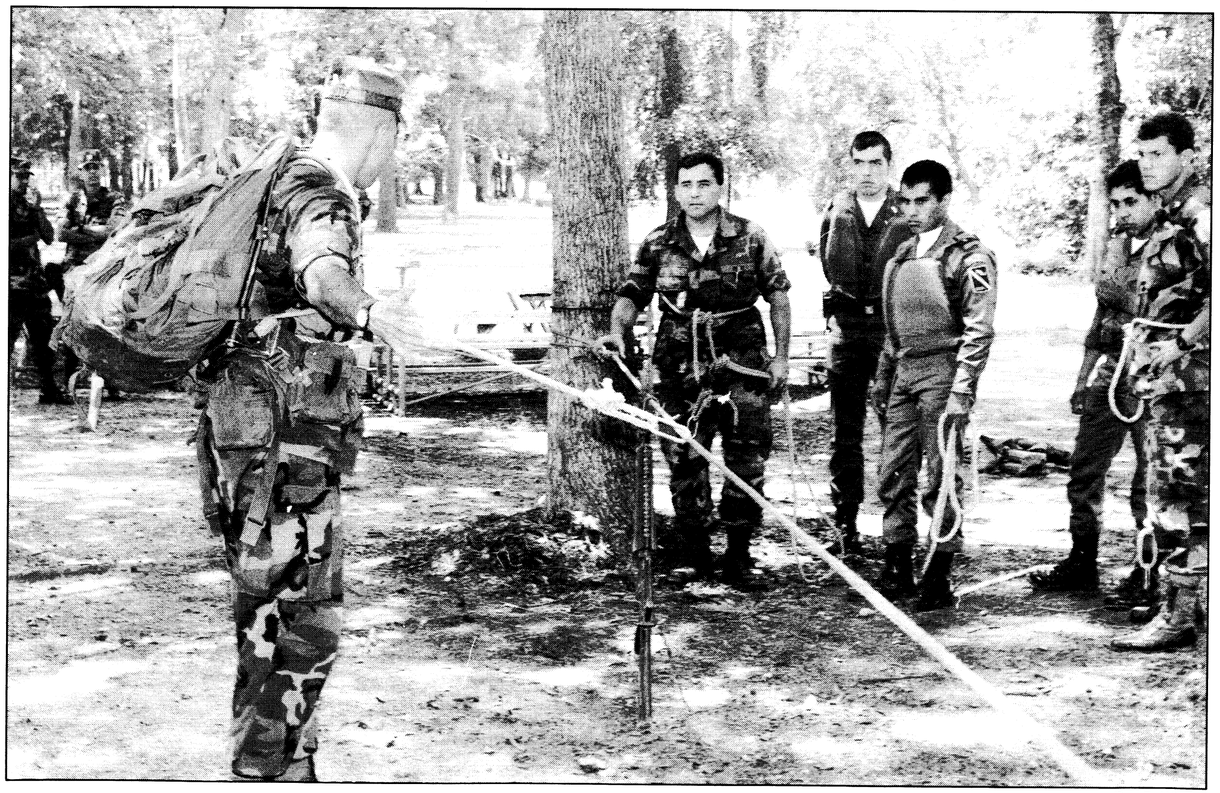
Students from three Latin American countries will graduate from the U.S. Army School of the Americas' Sapper course August 9 and become "Sappers" for their countries against the rising threat of drugs and terrorism.



"By training Sappers we are trying to integrate the engineer force with the infantry force so they can be up front and support any kind of infantry operation in a low-intensity type conflict," said Capt. Jose M. Pizarro, course director. "Emphasis is on explosives and mine warfare as well as obstacle breaching capabilities. We train the soldiers in conventional and improvised demolitions in support of mobility and counter-mobility, and assault."

Pizarro said the training is based on the same course taught at Fort Leonard Wood, Mo. but is tailored to meet the needs of Latin America. The students are taught how to operate in a low-intensity conflict type environment in both the jungle and the city.

The five students are referred to as Sappers because of the specialized nature of their jobs, according to Pizarro. The sappers are either company grade officers or noncommissioned officers who must be an engineer or in combat arms. All students should have experience with demolitions and considerable field experience.



This is the second year SOA has taught the course which produces Sappers who can combat terrorism and narco-traffickers, according to Pizarro. The students will be in good physical condition and technically and tactically proficient as engineers.

The Sappers receive individual skills training in land navigation, communication, combat lifesaver measures, detect and neutralize minefields and booby traps, demolitions in support of narcotics interdiction operations, obstacle construction and breaching, military operations, in jungle and urban terrain, and booby trap detection and destruction.

Infantry presents Doughboy Award

Retired general receives honor

USAIC Public Affairs Office

The U.S. Army Infantry gave its highest honor to the man credited by many combat leaders of Operation Desert Storm with teaching them the most vital tools of their wartime success.

Cavazos

Retired Gen. Richard E. Cavazos became the 11th recipient of the Doughboy Award during a formal ceremony at the Fort Benning Officers' Club July 26. The award was presented by Maj. Gen. Carmen J. Cavezza, post commander.

Cavezza pointed out Cavazos' background of command and combat leadership, saying, "He is a great soldier, a great leader and most deserving of the Doughboy Award."

Cavezza noted that in a recent survey, a consensus of battalion commanders in the Army's VII Corps said Cavazos' mentoring and teaching of them through the Army's Battle Command Training Program were the most important reasons for their combat success.

The VII Corps conducted the decisive flanking maneuver against Iraqi forces in Operation Desert Storm.

The BCTP, according to information from its Fort Leavenworth, Kan., office, provides a framework that exercises divisions and corps in large-unit operations in command-and-control and decision-making processes.

These exercises are designed to approximate the stress and pace of combat in a free-play scenario involving a doctrinally-correct opponent.

The program also emphasizes performance assessments and feedback, and it provides senior observers, such as Cavazos, as mentors.

In accepting the award, Cavazos extolled his lifelong admiration of the infantryman and his appreciation for the branches of the Army and armed forces that support infantry operations. Cavazos expressed pride in being among "we few, we happy few, in the most exclusive fraternity in the world" — the infantry.

Cavazos contrasted the fruits of a free society with the hard sacrifices, and often suffering of those, especially the infantryman, who serve that society.

"You may never be praised," he said, "but you will serve and preserve the nation. The monkey will never be off your back."

He noted, "The hurt and sacrifice paid by those who served and fought, by those who loved and supported those brave, skilled soldiers," underpinned society's inclination to "live for the good times, with the hope of a good life, happiness, peace and well-being."

In tributes read at the presentation ceremony, Cavazos was praised by Gen. Carl Stiner, commander in chief, U.S. Special Operations Command, for "... practicing the values and principles that cause soldiers to believe in themselves."

Former Secretary of the Army John O. Marsh, a former Doughboy Award winner, commended Cavazos for his "... dedicated service to American fighting men" and for providing the Army "commanders imbued with fighting spirit."

Cavazos, while on active duty and since his retirement, has been considered one of the country's foremost tactical experts. Cavazos retired from active duty in 1984 after commanding Forces Command, which controlled all general purpose

Benning may lose 340 civilian jobs

USAIC Public Affairs Office

The Department of the Army approved plans Wednesday that could eliminate nearly 340 permanent civilian positions at Fort Benning as a result of federal budget reductions.

"We're going to try to minimize the loss to Fort Benning," said Maj. Gen. Carmen Cavezza, post commander.

Currently, plans are to abolish about 200 positions now filled.

Because of a hiring freeze over the past two years, many of those positions are now vacant, meaning that fewer employees may actually be separated.

Retirements and transfers could reduce this number even further.

Theresa Gunter, director of civilian personnel, said more than one-third of the positions eliminated will not affect individual employees because those positions are now vacant.

"We're doing everything in our power to lessen the impact on Fort Benning," said Gunter.

This downsizing reflects the Secretary of Defense's mandate to realign the Army under Defense Management Review decisions.

Currently the Training and Doctrine Command on Fort Benning employs more than 3,100 Army civilians.

This action is expected to save the U.S. Army Infantry Center and Fort Benning, an estimated $6.2 million.

The command is continuing to study ways to lessen the impact of this action on the civilian work force, while still ensuring it accomplishes its mission of training soldiers; therefore, individual jobs have not been identified for elimination at this time.

Once affected civilians have been notified, the employees will be assured they will be afforded their individual rights under reduction in force procedures, according to civilian personnel officials. Individual notices are expected to go out around the first of September, officials said.

Communities of excellence team to visit Fort Benning next week

By Brian C. Sutton
Bayonet staff writer

The Training and Doctrine Command Communities of Excellence evaluation team will visit Fort Benning next week.

The team, consisting of seven members, will be here Monday through Thursday to make selections for the winners of TRADOC awards for staff offices and installations.

The team will be evaluating different offices on post for facilities maintenance and customer service. The facilities maintenance evaluation will consider the overall appearance of the office, according Latrella Conwell, management analyst with the Directorate of Resource Management.

"The team is looking for things like whether or not employees have tried to keep the office clean or how they've attempted to decorate," said Conwell.

Second, the team will evaluate service to customers.

According to Conwell, the team will be observing how employees, both civilian and military, interact with customers needing assistance.

"The idea is to improve facilities and services to soldiers," said Conwell.

Conwell urged individual offices to do their part to clean their workplace in order to be competitive for an award, both at the staff office level and the installation level.

TRADOC awards for this official Army competition include a plaque and a recommendation for the Department of the Army level competition.

Fort Benning has won many TRADOC level awards but has not won at the DA level for best overall installation in the program's three-year existence.

This year, the evaluations for the DA level competition begin in mid-January. At the DA level, awards include $1.5 million to be given to the winning installation for use in various programs in accordance with congressional guidelines, according to Lt. Col. Bruce Greenfield, an Army Community of Excellence staff officer.

Conwell said the evaluation team will not provide feedback to the post or any other office.

"They are only here to celebrate excellence," said Conwell.

Self-development tests due next fiscal year

USAIC Public Affairs Office

As the Army reduces its forces, the Self-Development Test, or SDT, will replace the Skill Qualifications Test, or SQT.

The SDT will be fielded for active duty soldiers in fiscal 1992 and for reservists and guardsmen in fiscal 1993.

What are the differences in the two tests?

The following information is from a Public Affairs Proponent Activity release, Fort Benjamin Harrison (autovon 699-4004).

● While the SQT tested only military occupational specialty competency, the SDT will measure a non-commissioned officer's leadership and training competence as well.

● An SDT will be developed for sergeants, staff sergeants and sergeants first class. The SDT will allow NCOs to measure and guide their professional development. Skill Level 1 soldiers will not take an SDT.

● The SDT will be one of the key factors in determining non-commissioned officer promotions, assignments, school selection and retention. Training for the SDT is an individual responsibility.

● Each SDT has three sections: leadership, training and military occupational specialty knowledge. Each SDT will have about 100 questions: 20 leadership, 20 training, and about 60 MOS questions and cannot last but two hours.

Spc. Michael Meade, Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment — "Besides making the transition smoother, the program has helped us realize what benefits we have, helped us look at what we can do with the college money we've earned and provided information about entering the reserves."

Some merchants see soldiers as $$$

By Clyde Snively

COMMENTARY

Ever come back to the post after a hard night on the town feeling like the townies spell your first name $oldier?

It's happened to me.

For example, I'll meet someone and I can hear cash registers going off in the guy's head. Or try and walk past a used car lot and it's "psssst, $oldier, have I got a deal for you on this beauty."

I know haircuts give us away, but it's like they can smell money right through the mud and sweat and DEET.

And why shouldn't they. Let's face it, our middle name is "$pend," not "Save."

If you want proof, let me introduce you to Axtion Jaxson.

He's what I consider a pretty typical bachelor $oldier. His bumper sticker reads, "The guy who dies with the most toys, wins."

Axtion, as we call him for short, bought a new pickup truck, outfitted it with every truck part known to man, then worked on outfitting his "pad" in the cuartels, to include a cellular phone.

Is it any wonder merchants salivate when a $oldier approaches?

Now I'm not saying every merchant in Columbus acts that way. In fact those who do are in a minority. But that minority seems to have gotten more visible since the Persian Gulf War, which leads me to think that given the state of the economy and the absence of all those troops for more than seven months, merchants became more appreciative of $oldier buying power than they were in the past.

But we're certainly more than that.

It's true we keep the cash registers jingling (some of us unwillingly as we manage to do stupid things like speeding, running stop lights, driving while intoxicated, fights in bars), but I've also seen more of the other side.

For every volunteer little league coach, referee, scout leader, Sunday school teacher on post, there are the same for off post activities.

What really brought this to mind was an off-post accident on I-185 at o'dark thirty.

By the time I got to the scene, the place was crawling with gray PT uniforms and BDUs. Seems every soldier who drives the by-pass stopped to see what he or she could do.

And that's typical of our soldiers. Golfers may complain when soldiers drive by yelling and screaming and honking horns as they, the golfers, try to drop a put or hit a drive; people sitting outdoors enjoying sweating and being eaten by mosquitoes on a hot summer night might pitch a fit as a soldier with his traveling stereo-zonic show drives by, causing windows to buckle; and bar patrons may shudder when fun-loving troops come in and loudly comment about the "babes."

All this is rude and crude. But, it's a minority of soldiers who do this, just as it's a minority of our civilian brothers and sisters who act that way.

But next time you travel the by-pass and you see a disabled vehicle — check and see who's there rendering assistance.

Chances are it'll be a guy or gal in an Army uniform — because the majority of our soldiers are humanitarians and want to help anyway they can. Just ask the people of Kuwait and Iraq. They'll tell you too.

Commissary employee responds to reader's questions, comments

This is in response to the reader who wrote and complained about the check-outs at the Commissary in the July 19 issue of The Bayonet.

As an employee at the Fort Benning Commissary, I would like to say that I am proud to be serving the most deserving.

I am sorry that Commissary customers as well as employees are so affected by the cutbacks handed down by congress.

There are a limited number of cashiers employed at the Commissary with the part-timers out numbering the full-timers.

Part-time employees can only work 24 hours per week, no more.

As much as the management would like to give the part-timers some extra hours, it just cannot be done.

This is a rule sent down by the U.S. government and really puts management in a bind.

The reason there are only two or three cash registers opened early in the morning is the front end needs the cashiers to be opened during the peak hours of 11 a.m. to 7 p.m.

The Commissary is opened 63 hours per week, and the cashiers are spread a little thin to accommodate the busy hours.

All I can recommend to our patrons is to write your congressman. They have all the answers. Please don't let this situation discourage you from shopping at "your" Commissary.

Even though I am an employee, I am also a Commissary shopper. I understand the customer's viewpoint.

We are working as hard as we can to serve you the best way possible.

One more note, as a part-time employee, I would like nothing better than to get a few extra hours per week.

A Commissary employee who cares

Soldier reflects on retirement

It will happen to us all one day — retirement. It's a time for reflections, a time to add up the score, a time to expire energies in directions other than those necessary requirements needed to enhance a military man's career and a time to prepare oneself to maneuver the long and winding road toward the direction of new worlds to conquer.

For some, it is frightening. For a few, the challenge is welcomed. For many the way will be rough and perhaps those emotional insecurities may play havoc on those lives that have always experienced stability, purpose and pride for so many years.

After all, we have, and will always be members of an elite group of individuals who have been the mainstay of freedom and democracy not only in this country, but in the entire world.

Those of us who have had the privilege to soldier for our country over the past few decades have realized more victories than defeats.

We have been a part of much history that will occupy the pages of the world's history books for ages to come. Our names are written on those pages — in blood, in spirit and in pride.

As we are placed upon the shelf next to those other volumes of history books, we can take heart in the fact that even though our physical usefulness has waned, we are proud to be among their company.

As mankind ventures out of the boundaries of our own fragile planet and pioneers the way to others, it is inevitable that the military will accompany, assist, and play its role of peacekeeper.

Farewell, fellow soldiers and Fort Benning.

Sgt. 1st Class Tom C. Hockaday

Clarification

USAIC Public Affairs Office

The following is a clarification of last week's article entitled, "Post Crimes Increase."

Fort Benning crime increased slightly in May 1991.

According to the Provost Marshall Office, the figures quoted were a comparison between the second and third quarters of 1991.

A 24-percent overall rise in crime was reported for the third quarter of 1991.

The most significant increases were in the areas of crimes against property and crimes against persons.

Crimes against property were up 20 percent. This can be attributed to redeployed soldiers discovering larcenies that had occurred against them while they were deployed.

Crimes against persons were up 34 percent, which primarily resulted from an increase in domestic disturbances.

Overall, June showed a 9-percent decrease in crimes when compared to May, and indications for July show an even further decrease.

The statistics vary based on post population and are not meant to alarm soldiers or family members. The intent is to alert our community to a possible problem and encourage everyone's support in reducing crime, officials said.

Center for teens officially opens

By James C. Rupp
Bayonet staff writer

After months of preparation, the Fort Benning Teen Center for 15 to 19 years old officially opened Monday with a ribbon cutting ceremony at Building 1796.

In attendance at the ceremony were the post commanding general, Maj. Gen. Carmen J. Cavezza, and the post chief of staff, Col. John D. Fuller.

The club will no provide a place for the youth of Fort Benning a place to go instead of the streets and give them the opportunity for wholesome entertainment, Cavezza said.

According to Billie C. Smith, Youth Services director, who has been with the project since the beginning, the building has undergone a total renovation.

Floors were replaced, windows fixed and new lighting was installed. In addition, new safety precautions, including emergency lighting, exit lights and fire alarms were put in to make the building more safe for the members, she said.

"A lot of the kids who go there are doing it to show other teens that they really do have something to do," said Shawn Porter, 19-year-old vice president of the Teen Council.

"They don't have to sit around in the streets with a gang doing drugs," he said. "They have something better to do."

The center will be open Tuesday through Saturday from 1 p.m. to 9 p.m. and is available to all military teen-agers. Parents must register their children with Youth Services in Building 1056 for the child to receive a membership.

215th FSU changes command

By Ron Small
215th Finance Support Unit

The 215th Finance Support Unit changed commanders July 9 on Stewart Field.

Col. Phillip R. Anderson, commander of the 36th Engineer Group, passed the colors from Lt. Col. Morgan F. Denny to Lt. Col. George O. Smith.

Denny was commissioned in 1970 after completion of the Reserve Officers' Training Program.

He has a bachelor's degree in economics and business, and a master of science degree in public administration.

His military education includes Finance Officer Basic and Advance Courses, and the Command and General Staff College at Fort Leavenworth, Kan.

Denny's next assignment will be to attend the Army War College at Carlisle Barracks, Pa.

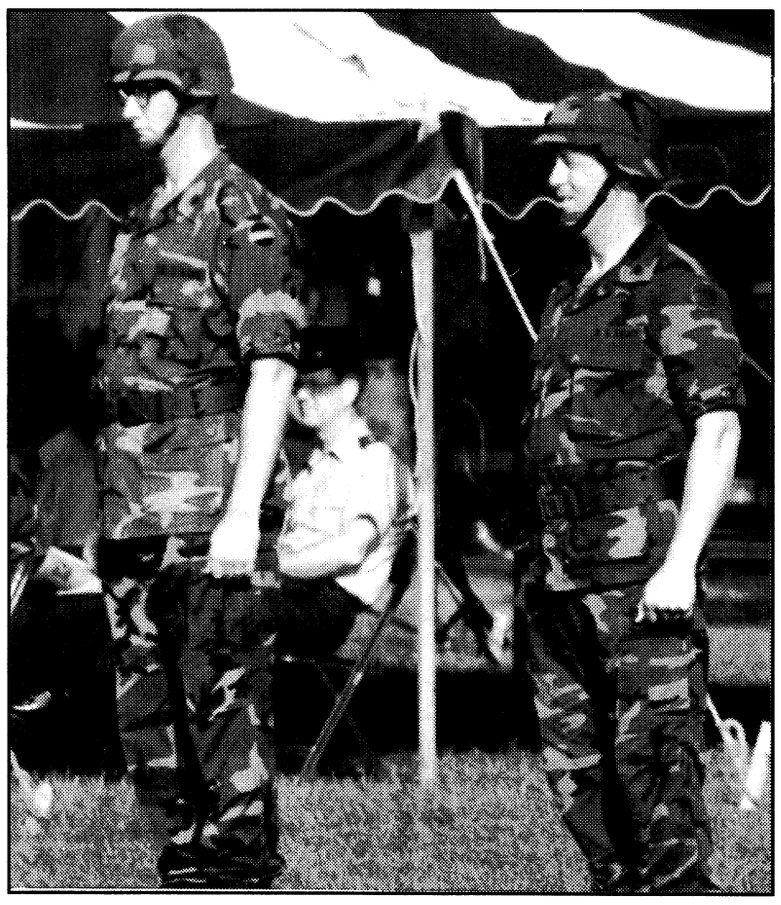
Smith was drafted into the Army during the Vietnam conflict in 1971 after completing an undergraduate degree in business management.

He was commissioned in 1972 through the Officer Candidate School at Fort Benning.

His military education includes the Finance Officer Basic and Advance Courses, planning, programming and budgeting courses, the Army comptrollership master's of business administration program at Syracuse University, and the Command and General Staff College at Fort Leavenworth, Kan.

The 215th was activated as the 15th Finance Section in 1942. Throughout history, it has proved itself time and time again.

Its campaign credits for World War II include Normandy, Northern France, Rhineland, Ardennes-Alsace and Central Europe.



On Sept. 10, the 215th was attached to the 18th Corps Finance Group (Airborne), and deployed to Saudi Arabia in support of Operations Desert Shield and Desert Storm.

In doing so, the unit became the first finance unit in history under the FSU organization to fully deploy with all equipment and personnel.

In addition to supporting the Riyadh area, Headquarters U.S. Central Command and Army Forces Central Command, the 215th supported many other echelons above corps units, the 24th Infantry Division, King Kalid Military City and various convoy support centers.

The unit had over 197,000 transactions totaling more than $183 million and processed another 25,000 pay inquiries.

The 215th paid more than 1,700 contracts worth $97 million that provided the transportation, food, supplies and services that were essential for the successful prosecution of the war.

Range guards a thing of past

By Alyanna B. Clay-Heard
Bayonet staff writer

All range and live-fire exercises that previously required road guards will now use gate closures, according to John T. Burke, chief of the Range Division of the Directorate of Plans, Training and Mobilization.

A July 27 memorandum from Col. Ted C. Chilcote, DPTM director, outlined the changes, pending a revision of U.S. Army Infantry Center Regulation 210-4.

The changes, in addition to gate closures, include signs on the gates and roads leading to the range and flashing warning lights at night to alert drivers that firing is in progress, said Burke.

Range officers will ensure roads are cleared, gates locked and signs in place while exercises are held on the range, said Burke.

Specific notice of range closures will be disseminated through the Benning Bulletin, computer messages, range and terrain schedule and weekly coordination and training notes.

For more information, contact Burke at 545-4619.

75th rangers conduct 'intel' competition

Soldier's job proficiency, physical endurance tested

By Robert Hardy
75th Ranger Regiment

The officers and senior NCOs of the Regimental Intelligence Section of the 75th Ranger Regiment conducted an individual Best "Intel" Ranger Competition July 12.

This competition evaluated each ranger's job proficiency as well as his physical endurance.

Eleven rangers from the Intelligence Section ranking staff sergeant and below participated in the competition, which included three intelligence military occupational specialty, 96B intelligence analyst, 97B counterintelligence analyst and 96D imagery interpreter.

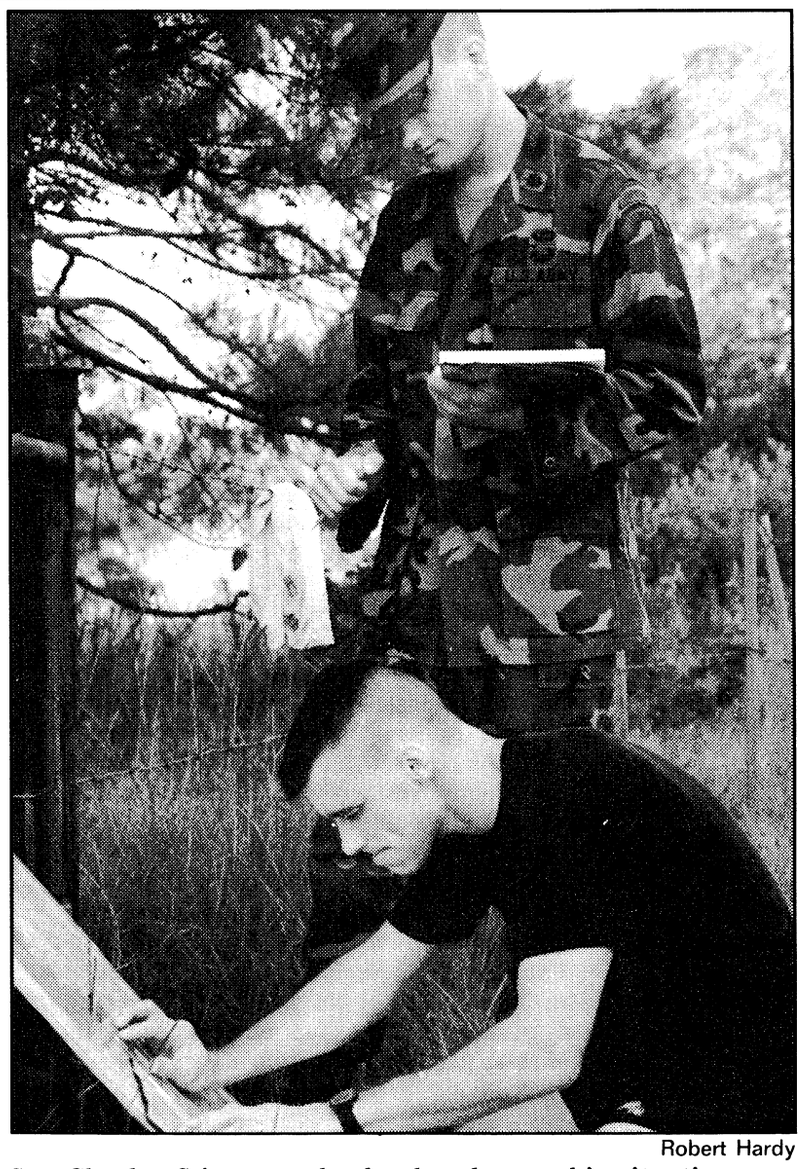
Seven stations were set up that consisted of a variety of tasks including computing combat power of threat forces on a given avenue of approach, identifying vehicles and aircraft to determine whether they are friendly or foe, determining the correct classification and downgrading markings for documents and materials, preparing and maintaining the situation map and associated overlays, using marginal information of a map to assist in the performance of other map reading tasks and maintaining the intelligence journal and the journal file.

The course covered an eight-mile area with the individual stations scattered throughout the course.

Each competitor had to complete the eight-mile course within two hours.

To determine the best ranger, the results were evaluated to identify the individual with the most number of "go's" within the shortest amount of time on the course.

Out of 11 rangers, Sgt. Bruce Peters won the competition having only one no go and running the course in one hour and 37 minutes.



Peters received a certificate from the regimental commander, a plaque, a T-shirt and a three-day pass.

The Regimental Intelligence Section will continue to conduct the competition each quarter.

During the next competition, the rangers in the intelligence sections from 1st, 2nd and 3rd ranger battalions will also be invited to compete.

According to Lt. Col. Richard Inokuchi, the motto of the Regimental Intelligence staff, like that of the Military Intelligence Corps, is "always out front."

To that end, the intelligence analysts within the 75th Ranger Regiment prepare and train to ... lead the way, he said.

Sgt. Charles Stivers rechecks the plots on his situation map as Capt. Jon Mowers prepares to give him a critique.

70th Div. visits, conducts training at Fort Benning

By James C. Rupp
Bayonet staff writer

Sixty-five soldiers from the 4th Brigade, 70th Division (Training), an Army Reserve unit headquartered in Indiana, recently completed their annual training by training initial entry soldiers.

According to Maj. Charles Shaver, brigade commander, the mission of the 70th, a unit based in Indiana and Michigan and headquartered in Camp Atterbury in Edinburgh, Ind., is to conduct one station unit training during wartime.

Shaver said, the 65 soldiers from his brigade completed their annual training with the 2nd Battalion, 54th Infantry Regiment.

Shaver, whose civilian occupation in Indianapolis is an insurance agent, said the four brigades that compose the 70th conduct one station unit training on a two-week rotational basis.

Each brigade takes turns training initial entry soldiers for two weeks. Then another brigade takes over.

Shaver's unit is conducting the last two weeks of the infantry training before the trainees go on to Advanced Individual Training.

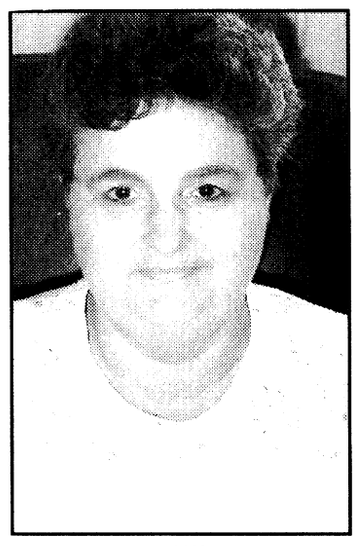
Since their arrival two weeks ago, the 70th's drill sergeants have conducted bayonet training, the obstacle course, a physical training diagnostic test and land navigation courses.

Along with the reserve drill sergeants, Shaver said active duty drill sergeants stay with the trainee platoons to provide continuity and pass pertinent information about trainess, such as disciplinary problems and the adjustment of individual trainees from one group to another.

At the end of each day, Shaver said his drills go through an "after action review" with the regular drill sergeants to improve performance.

Shaver said the relocation of his unit went smoothly and his unit had no trouble overcoming the inherent problems that customarily face a transitory unit.

He added the adjustment of the trainees to a new set of drill sergeants every two weeks was something that Shaver said went "much better" than he anticipated.



"You get used to one set of drills," said Pvt. 1 Torrance Barandt, a soldier being trained by the 70th's drills. "Just when we start to get a feel for one set of trainers, another group comes in and it's rough. The new set comes in, and they're trying to prove themselves, and we feel we have got to prove ourselves all over again."

Sgt. Joey Rivera said he adjusted real well. "The first couple days are rough, trying to get a feel for each other," he said, "but they (soldiers) get exposed to different views from different people."

Cpl. John M. Mottola, Company B, 2nd Battalion, 54th Infantry, one of the "constants" who stay with the trainees for the full eight weeks, said, "It makes it hard to start from day one every two weeks. People are always different, and it takes some time to get used to a new set of expectations."

Employees net $2,475 each for idea

Betty Williams

Martha Wynn

The transportation of ammunition is an expensive task, according to Betty Williams and Martha Wynn of the Transportation Division, Directorate of Logistics here. Williams and Wynn developed a way to eliminate much of the cost of shipping through the Army Ideas For Excellence Program.

The women devised a way to eliminate the need for an outside contracting agency, which, until recently transported all ammunition in support of training exercises conducted by the U.S. Army Infantry School.

"We were looking at cost factors," said Williams. "We brainstormed to find a way that would save money."

Williams and Wynn found their solution: The Transportation Division will assume total responsibility for transporting ammunition. This adopted idea will save Fort Benning $357,039 annually.

"We were very surprised to see the savings to Fort Benning," said Wynn. "When we started we had no idea that the savings would be that big."

Wynn and Williams received an award of $2,475 each for their efforts. Wynn claimed that developing the idea was not too uncommon.

"We thought we were just doing our jobs," said Wynn.

Wynn and Williams agreed that without the support of the chain of command, getting the ideas through would be nearly impossible.

"It definitely takes encouragement from your supervisor to help get suggestions approved," said Wynn.

Williams claimed that with Total Quality Management many more ideas may be around the corner.

Forces Command names new chief of staff

Forces Command News Service

FORT McPHERSON, Ga. — Maj. Gen. Caryl G. Marsh has been named deputy commander in chief/chief of staff of Forces Command. He assumed his new duties July 15.

FORSCOM, located at Fort McPherson, Ga., is a specified command within the Department of Defense, as well as a major subordinate command of the U.S. Army, and the Army component of U.S. Atlantic Command.

FORSCOM provides the Department of Defense with a general reserve of combat-ready ground forces capable of responding rapidly to support national security worldwide.

Marsh comes to FORSCOM from the Republic of South Korea where he has been assigned as commanding general, 2nd Infantry Division, since November 1989.

He replaces Maj. Gen. Horace G. Taylor in the FORSCOM position. Taylor has been promoted to the rank of lieutenant general and assigned as commanding general, III Corps and Fort Hood, Texas.

Marsh was born in Brooksville, Ky., on Oct. 12, 1939. He graduated from the University of Kentucky with a bachelor of science degree in agriculture and has also earned a master's in public administration from Auburn University.

He has held a number of command and staff positions within the Army, including overseas tours in Vietnam, Korea, and Germany. Prior to commanding the 2nd Infantry Division, Marsh served as commanding general of the Army's Berlin Brigade.

Marsh and his wife, Claire, have three children: Jeffrey, Regina and John.

CAVAZOS:

General receives Doughboy Award

Army forces in the continental United States.

That command culminated a 33-year career including combat commands in the Korean and Vietnam Wars (a company in Korea and the 1st Battalion, 18th Infantry, 1st Infantry Division, in Vietnam).

Among Cavazos' decorations from those wars are two Distinguished Service Crosses, two Silver Stars, Distinguished Flying Cross, Bronze Star with V Device and four oak leaf clusters, Air Medal with V Device, and Purple Heart. Cavazos also holds the Combat Infantryman Badge with second award.

He later commanded the 2nd Brigade, 1st Inf. Div. (Fort Riley, Kan.), the 9th Infantry Division (Fort Lewis, Wash.), and III Corps (Fort Hood, Texas). As commander of the 9th Inf. Div., one of Cavazos' brigade commanders was then Col. (now Gen.) H. Norman Schwarzkopf.

As the 11th winner of the Doughboy Award, Cavazos succeeds a sterling list of previous recipients including Bob Hope, H. Ross Perot, Sen. Bob Dole, the late former Sen. John Tower, retired Gens. Frederick J. Kroesen and William Depuy, the late Gen. Matthew B. Ridgway, retired Maj. Gen. Aubrey Newman, and cartoonist Bill Mauldin.

The Doughboy Award is a chrome-plated replica of the helmet worn by soldiers of the American Expeditionary Force, nicknamed "doughboys," in World War I and early World War II.

The award's official criteria states it is "presented annually to a distinguished soldier or civilian who has made significant contributions to the infantry and is presented on behalf of infantrymen past, present and future."

In his closing remarks, Cavazos again lauded the part infantrymen played in the "impact of the U.S. Army in winning the peace through over 40 years of service and sacrifice in accomplishing the military strategy of the U.S." He said, "I see my infantrymen" in travels to many installations, "and I love 'em."

Cavazos implored infantrymen everywhere to, "Do the best you can; we need you."

Benning students start school Aug. 27

Fort Benning Schools

Fort Benning Schools will begin the 1991-92 school year Aug. 27. It's time for all students — kindergarten through eighth grade — to register.

This year, registration will be conducted during two weeks in August in all eight post schools. Rather than have parents come on one or two specific days, parents are asked to choose the date and time that best fits their needs.

Past practice indicates that there are large crowds on the first couple of days of the registration process. Parents who wish to avoid a long wait should consider this when choosing a registration time.

Parents should bring certain items to the school when they register. The items are determined by the students' age, grade and whether the child has previously attended a Fort Benning School.

● Parents of students who attended Fort Benning Schools in May of 1991 should complete and sign registration forms — nothing needs to be brought to the school.

● Parents of students who are new to the Fort Benning school system should bring last year's report card or grade placement record and an immunization certificate.

● Parents of all kindergarten students and first grade students who are new to the Fort Benning School System should also bring a birth certificate and proof of a physical examination.

● A student must be 5 years old on or before Sept. 1 to enter kindergarten in the Fort Benning Schools.

School assignments are subject to change by school board action if increased enrollments in certain schools or grade levels make these changes necessary.

Sixth, seventh, and eighth grade students from all housing areas should report to Faith Middle School for registration.

High school students (grades 9 through 12) who did not attend a public school in Muscogee County last year and who have not already pre-registered for the 1991-92 school year, should report immediately to the Columbus Roberts Center at 539 Brown Avenue in Columbus to preregister and receive a school assignment.

For further information regarding registration in the Fort Benning Schools, call 545-2500.

Them bones, them bones...

Margaret Koger shows a student something about bone structure. Science instruction in Benning classrooms promote active student involvement in scientific investigation. The new science curriculum, supported by new materials and technology, is designed to make this an exciting year.

Educators plan programs for students to succeed

New school year will include changes in science, remedial programs and math

Fort Benning Schools

The 1991-92 school year, which begins for students Aug. 27, will feature new programs in science for all students, an expanded program for pre-school handicapped children, new remedial programs in grades two through five, and a continuing emphasis on student writing and math problem solving at all grade levels. According to Fort Benning's School Superintendent, Dr. Rolla Baumgartner, several of the new programs are related to the national goals set by the president and governors in their historic meeting in Virginia more than a year ago.

Science program

One of the national goals was to have American students first in the world in terms of science and math achievement by the year 2000. A committee made up of teachers from the Fort Benning Schools has developed a new science curriculum which was approved by the school board and will be implemented this school year.

The new program focuses on basic knowledge in science while providing children with an environmental emphasis which was not present in previous programs. The program calls for children to be actively involved with science, to be conducting experiments in class as opposed to merely reading about and discussing principles of science. The new programs will make use of the latest technological aides to include laser discs, CD Rom, and computers. School officials believe the new science programs will be popular with students.

In the area of mathematics, there will be a continued emphasis on problem solving. Teachers point out that too frequently children do not understand which process is needed to solve a problem, therefore, the emphasis will be on "how to solve the problem" as opposed to calculating an answer.

Parents should expect that on some occasions, children will not even be asked to get an answer, but merely to outline the steps required to find it. Children may be urged in some situations to use hand calculators to do computation so as to use their time to concentrate on the problem solving process.

Throughout this past year, Fort Benning children were given opportunities to practice writing skills on a regular basis. That emphasis will continue and, in many cases, increase with children being given daily opportunities to write. Research clearly shows that writing is a skill which is improved through practice.

At the higher grade levels, children will have the opportunity to use computers when they write, thus making revision much easier. "We recognize that young people do develop proficiency in language use with continuous, systematic practice, systematic skilled guidance, and unqualified support," said Dr. Judy Archer, Fort Benning Schools' curriculum coordinator for language arts and social studies.

Handicapped Preschoolers

Another of the national goals for education was to have every child ready for school when entering kindergarten. Two programs are under way in support of the goal. For handicapped children, federal legislation provides for the funding of educational programs for pre-school children and the Fort Benning Schools will have a program for handicapped children beginning at age three. The schools will provide services designed to help the handicapped youngsters be ready for school when they reach kindergarten age.

Some of the services will be provided in the schools while others will take place at post pre-schools with instruction provided by staff members from the Fort Benning Schools. Parents with pre-school children, age three or above, who they believe to be handicapped should call the Fort Benning Schools at 545-5520 after Aug. 19.

To help non-handicapped children be ready for school when they reach kindergarten age, the school system is sponsoring a series of activities for parents which will help them to prepare heir children for school.

Over the course of the year, five meetings will be held in the evening for parents of preschoolers, each featuring an expert in child development. The first such evening session will be Sept. 26 at 7 p.m. at the Faith School and will feature Dr. Barbara Howard, a pediatrician from Duke University. Howard's presentation will be on the emotional development of pre-school aged children. All presentations will be publicized throughout the post.

> "Our system is blessed with outstanding teachers, supportive parents, and a command structure that is most responsive. . .
> — Rolla Baumgartner

Another of the national goals for education speaks to reducing the nation's school drop-outs and the Fort Benning Schools have beefed up their remedial programs to address that goal. The local school leaders believe that most school drop outs leave school because they are not experiencing success in school. By providing innovative and successful remedial programs, the schools are targeting those youngsters who are most at risk to drop out of school before graduation.

The remedial program begins in the first grade with the Reading Recovery program which is designed to bring first graders who are experiencing reading problems up to a first grade level. This is the second year for the program in the Fort Benning Schools with the first year having been most successful. The local system is the first system in Georgia to implement this nationally recognized program.

For students in grades two through five, each of the elementary schools has designed a remedial program to meet the needs of its children. Most of these programs involve some after school study by children who are having difficulty during the school day. Educators believe that children who are struggling in reading or math need additional time after school for special instruction, thus providing the child with two periods of instruction, one with classmates during the day and a second period after school.

The after-school program will include activities designed to increase the child's confidence and thus help the child to succeed during the regular school day. According to officials, the after school program was very successful this past year at Faith Middle School and will be continued at Faith this year. Participation in the programs at both the middle school and elementary level is limited to those children identified as meeting program criteria and who have the permission of their parents to participate.

Once selected for the program, children who normally ride the bus to and from school are provided with transportation home after the remedial session.

Superintendent Baumgartner noted that "Our system is blessed with outstanding teachers, supportive parents, and a command structure that is most responsive to our needs. With parents and school working together, we can meet the national goals which our leaders have set." Baumgartner invited parents interested in learning more about the national goals for education to call him at 545-3500.

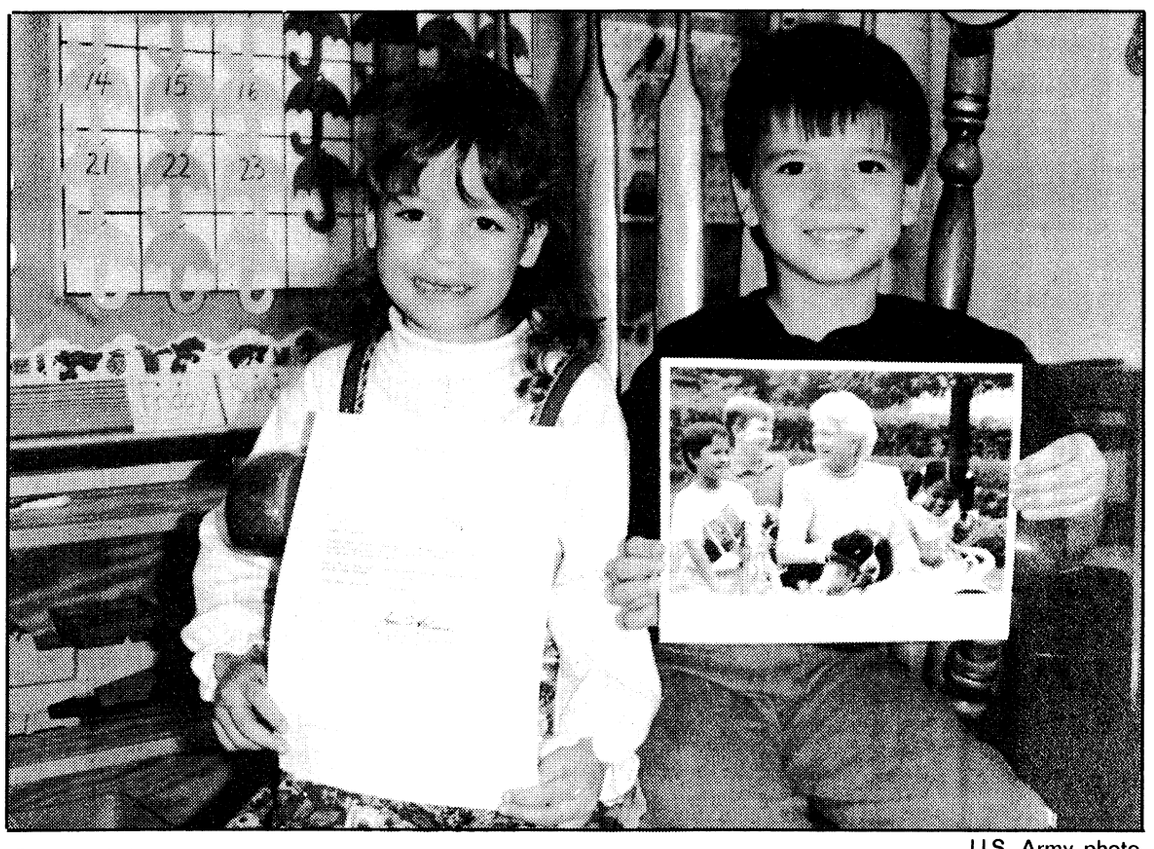
Requirements must be met to attend schools on post

Fort Benning Schools

To be eligible to attend on-post schools, children must reside on-post or fit one of two exceptions to the residency requirement.

As an exception, children living off post may attend post schools if the sponsor has a written notice from Family Housing indicating that post quarters will be available for the family within 90 school days.

The second exception allows a child to continue to attend post schools for the remainder of the year if when the family moves off post due to the sponsor's retirement or permanent change of station move.



Periodically, families move from post housing into the local community and ask to leave their children in the Fort Benning Schools. If the move is not connected with the retirement of the sponsor or PCS move, the children must be withdrawn from school by no later than the end of the grading period during which the sponsor no longer lives in post quarters.

Eligibility for attending Fort Benning Schools is governed by federal law and in the Department of Defense directive.

Parents with questions regarding eligibility for school attendance are urged to call the school office at 545-2500.

Fort Benning teachers participate in learning enrichment courses

Fort Benning Schools

Computers, science skills, literature, and a host of effective teaching practices have been the focus of training for Fort Benning's educators this summer.

While school was out for the summer, 112 members of Fort Benning's teaching staff participated in a variety of courses designed to enrich learning experiences for Fort Benning's students.

Fort Benning Schools have an ongoing staff development program that creates and runs courses designed to meet the specific needs of Fort Benning personnel. Courses are taught after school hours or on weekends during the school year; they are taught during the day throughout the summer vacation.

In 1991-92, Fort Benning schools will be using new science textbooks and materials in all classes. The summer began as many teachers participated in a course to familiarize themselves with the new materials and to learn new and different strategies for making science instruction more exciting and meaningful to students.

Twenty teachers participated in a mathematics problem solving course. This course focused on specific strategies that teachers can utilize at each grade level to strengthen their students' problem solving skills. This is the second year that Fort Benning teachers have participated in the course.

Many of the middle school teachers spent a week in a class designed to provide new strategies for developing teaching units in which math, science, social studies, and language arts all work together.

Elementary teachers participated in a class that focused on student literature.

There was a course on learning to use the MacIntosh computer as an instructional tool. There was also a course for the more advanced technology users which provided strategies for teaching students to use a variety of types of technology to create reports and presentations.

Five Benning teachers participated in a course on regional history taught by the staff at the Columbus Museum, and a Benning art teacher took a course in collage there.

Phyllis Parker, principal at Wilson School, spent 10 days at Harvard University participating in courses designed specifically for school principals.

"The strong participation of Fort Benning educators in course work this summer reflects their serious commitment to quality instruction for our students," said Dr. Beth Middlemiss, director of staff development. "This summer has been a very productive one. I am sure that students will benefit from ideas generated in these courses throughout the coming year and for a long time to come."

Benning provides school buses

Elementary students may be transported

Fort Benning Schools

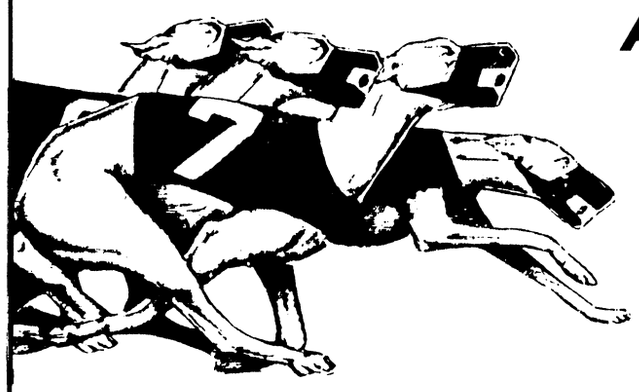
The Fort Benning School System provides transportation for elementary school students who live one mile or more, by the nearest traveled route, from the school they will attend and for middle school students who live more than a 1 1/2 mile radius from Faith Middle School.

The school system is required to contract for transportation services each year. The contractor for the 1991-92 school year will again be J.R.W. Enterprises of Portsmouth, Va.

Under terms of the contract, buses are used for normal daily operations as well as numerous school-related field trips. These buses are inspected annually by the Georgia Highway Patrol to ensure that they meet all Georgia requirements.

If parents have questions or concerns regarding school bus transportation, they may contact Alice Skinner in the superintendent's office at 545-2500.

Due to the yearly differences in grades and locations of the students transported, there are always changes made in bus routes during the first few weeks of school. Parents are asked to bear with the school system and the contractor as they attempt to implement the necessary changes as quickly as possible.



The school system also requests the assistance of parents in implementing the Bus Safety Program.

Parents will receive a brief list of bus rules at registration, which, if followed, will help to provide a safe and pleasant atmosphere on the bus.

Parents are asked to review these rules with their children so that children will know that their parents support and will help to enforce these regulations.

The school system appreciates parental support and asks that they contact their child's principal or Skinner should they observe unsafe practices on a school bus. The safety of the children is the number one concern.

Community supports post school system

Fort Benning Schools

The agencies and individuals who make up the Fort Benning community care about Fort Benning Schools and Fort Benning children.

This care is shown through the various safety precautions taken as children make their way to and from school and other programs directed at keeping Fort Benning children safe and happy.

Early each year, professionals from the provost marshal's office coordinate with the schools to provide instructions and materials to remind students of the need for safe practices when walking or riding their bicycles to school.

Throughout the school year, these dedicated individuals make themselves available to visit the schools and to provide programs on crime prevention, substance abuse and safety practices.

In addition to the military police, several other post agencies reach out to the schools.

During October, the firemen help the children "learn not to burn" bringing puppet shows and fire fighting equipment — the big trucks — to the school sites to emphasize their message.

In October, the Fort Benning energy office provides materials for teachers and incentives for students to become involved in the worldwide effort for energy conservation.

Before the break for winter holidays, the 82nd Ordnance Detachment helps teachers instruct the students on safety procedures with ammunition and duds that might accidentally be found by a child at play during the holiday season.

Soon after the new year begins, teams from the Dental Activity set up fairs at the schools that show children how to care for their teeth and provide on-the-spot, dental health screening for each child.

Later in the spring, Benning residents observe the Month of the Military Child, and children and families are drawn together in a variety of activities to celebrate the uniqueness of the experience of having or being a military child.

The Staff Judge Advocate's office provides a host of speakers and learning opportunities for students in the springtime, which leads up to an exciting Law Day observance in each of the schools in May.

Throughout the year, regardless of the need, the Fort Benning community is responsive to the Fort Benning Schools and the children.

From Martin Army Community Hospital to the Youth Activities Center, to the host of volunteers that give so freely of their time to the schools, the people of the community show they care and demonstrate that caring through action and involvement.

Fort Benning Schools are unique because they serve and are served by very special and unique agencies and individuals within the Fort Benning community.

Schools screen preschoolers

Fort Benning Schools

With the passage of Public Law 99-457, Georgia school systems will provide preschool services by the 91-92 school year for handicapped children ages 3 to 6. In August, Fort Benning Schools will begin their third year of preschool services for children with disabilities.

In an effort to locate all 3 to 5 year old children who reside on post and are in need of special services, the Fort Benning Schools will sponsor a preschool screening in September at Loyd School. Vision, hearing, speech, and educational screenings will be available. Children may be referred for additional psychological assessment, occupational and physical therapy evaluations to identify specific educational needs. Fort Benning Schools will offer special programs that involve children and parents in school-based programs, home-based programs and community day care and preschool centers. Watch for additional information regarding the September preschool screening.

If you have a preschool child with a disability who is at least 3 years old and who live on the military reservation, you may contact the Fort Benning School's Special Education Department at 545-5520 after Aug. 20.

Fort Benning's VIP line keeps parents informed

Fort Benning Schools

When children return to classes in the Fort Benning Schools this summer, their parents will have one more channel of communication with the schools.

The Very Informed Parent Line has been instituted at each of Benning's schools.

This informational telephone recording can be dialed from 5 p.m. to 7 a.m. daily.

Now in its third year, the weekly service has provided information on current events in the particular school being telephoned.

It provides the school principal with another way of updating parents on events, important dates, and special programs which are occurring in the school.

The home-school partnership is considered to be critical to a successful education experience. Involvement of parents is a strong factor in the development of positive feelings in the child toward school. Good communication with the school is central to that process.

The VIP Line is the latest effort on part of the Fort Benning Schools to reach out to the community.

In addition, the schools communicate to parents with monthly newsletters from each school principal as well as updates sent home from the classroom teacher.

Fort Benning Schools accredited since 1963

A comprehensive set of standards covers all areas of schools' organization

Fort Benning Schools

Fort Benning Schools have been accredited since 1963. The organization for accreditation, the Southern Association for Colleges and Schools, first proposed standards for the accreditation of elementary schools at that time. Fort Benning Schools were among the first in this region to be accredited.

What is accreditation and why is it desirable? The Southern Association has developed a comprehensive set of standards covering all facets of the organization and functioning of schools. Demonstrating that a school or school system meets these standards qualifies it for accreditation and ensures a quality program is in place.

Parents entering their children in a school for the first time may be assured the school is operating within stringent guidelines for excellence when they see the certificate of accreditation posted in the office.

Fort Benning Schools have been accredited continuously for more than 28 years. Accreditation is maintained by the schools through filing annual reports with SACS and through involvement in in-depth, on-site inspections by a team of trained educators every five years. The last on-site visit occurred in the fall of 1988, and the team recommended continuing accreditation in all eight schools at that time.

Each SACS accreditation team visit brings not only commendations for things well done but recommendations for continued growth and improvement.

Fort Benning Schools are heeding many of those recommendations and looking forward to continued excellence as they remain accredited by SACS.

Post's eight schools serve students in grades K-8

Fort Benning Schools

Herbert J. Dexter Elementary School

Herbert J. Dexter Elementary School is located on Yeager Avenue and serves children in grades kindergarten through five who live on south Main Post. The facility is Fort Benning's newest elementary school, having been built in 1969. Additions were constructed in 1989-90.

The school serves 375 students to include students from throughout the post who are enrolled in programs for the gifted. In addition to the standard elementary program offered, special instruction is available in art, music and physical education as well as programs in special education and counseling.

Dexter's new principal is Vicki Rogers. Though Rogers is a new principal, hers is a familiar face to Benning's teachers and students since she has served as Language Arts/Social Studies Coordinator in the Benning system for the last three years. Rogers came to Fort Benning with a wealth of experience as an educator. She previously taught in the elementary grades for 12 years and then served as a teacher assessment specialist for the state of Georgia for seven years.

Rogers came to Fort Benning with a wealth of experience as an educator. She previously taught in the elementary grades for 12 years and then served as a teacher assessment specialist for the State of Georgia for seven years.

Rogers holds a bachelor's and a master's degree in elementary education from Georgia Southwestern College. She recently completed her specialist's degree in educational administration at the University of Georgia.

"I believe that parent involvement is a key factor in the success of a school — that parents and school should work collaboratively to build a positive, caring learning environment — one that believes in children. I welcome continued involvement of parents in a partnership that will prepare today's children for tomorrow's future," said Rogers.

Don C. Faith Middle School

Don C. Faith Middle School is Fort Benning's newest facility, having been completed in the spring of 1987. The building houses about 925 children from throughout the post in grades six through eight and is one of the area's only true middle schools.

The school was constructed in wings with each grade level having essentially a self-containing wing. Special area subjects such as music, art, physical education, industrial arts, home economics, Spanish and computers are available to all students in a central area.

The school has a large multipurpose room used as both an auditorium and a gymnasium and contains a separate cafeteria that doubles as a large group meeting room.

The media center is at the center of the facility and is one of the most active parts of the school.

As a true middle school, Faith features teams in which groups of students are together with the same teachers for English, literature, math, social studies and science each day with the focus being on providing a child-centered program that helps the student make the transition from elementary school to the highly structured secondary school.

Olin Harp has been the principal of Faith Middle School for the past 13 years, having served prior to that as assistant principal and teacher at Faith. Harp, a Cusseta native, holds a bachelor's degree from LaGrange College and a master's degree from the University of Georgia.

Harp will be assisted by David Murray and Melanie Bast.

Murray has been an assistant principal at Faith for the last five years. Prior to that, he was a classroom teacher and served as an elementary school principal in Missouri.

Bast, who began last year as assistant principal at Faith moved to that position after having served for seven years as band director there. Prior to her arrival at Benning, Bast had taught English and was also assistant band director for three years in Fitzgerald, Ga.

Though Bast moved from her music position at Faith, she still uses her musical skills on a regular basis. She is a sergeant with the Alabama National Guard and plays flute in the 151st Army Band. Bast served for three weeks with the band during Operation Desert Storm to honor soldiers as they returned from their duty in Saudi Arabia.

Frank R. Loyd Elementary School

Frank R. Loyd Elementary School is located on Santa Fe Road adjacent to Spencer High School. Children in grades kindergarten through five who reside in north Bouton Heights, Upatoi, Terrace and the Davis Hill communities attend the school.

The school opened in September of 1959 and currently serves about 425 children, providing a standard program for elementary students to include special instruction in music, art and physical education, a library media program, and programs in special education as well as the services of a counselor and a nurse.

Additionally, Loyd School serves all mentally handicapped children of elementary school age at Fort Benning and provides special programs for the physically handicapped. A preschool program at Loyd provides services for mentally handicapped as well as speech and/or language impaired 3 and 4-year-old pre-school students. The building, while an older building, is a light, spacious facility that is carpeted throughout and centrally air conditioned.

Dr. Judy Gilliam is Loyd School's new principal. She brings to this new assignment 19 years of experience in education — both as an elementary classroom teacher and a teacher of teachers at the college level.

At Auburn University, LaGrange College and in her most recent assignment as consultant with the State of Georgia, she has taught graduate courses in elementary education and in instructional methods for the teaching of reading.

Dr. Gilliam holds a bachelor's degree, a master's degree, and a doctoral degree in education from Auburn University.

"We are looking forward to another fine year at Loyd," said Gilliam. "We plan to continue fostering strong communication between parents and faculty. One successful program that does this is our 'Lunch and Learn' program that was scheduled periodically last year to provide parent-child information."

Morris R. McBride School

Morris R. McBride School, located on Cusseta Road, was built in 1965 and serves 525 children in grades kindergarten through three living in the McGraw Manor community.

The McBride School offers a standard program for elementary students to include special instruction in music, art and physical education, a library media program, counselor, nurse, and program in special education. The building is centrally air conditioned and carpeted throughout.

Del Hicks is beginning his fourth year as principal of McBride School.

A native of Illinois, Hicks was a superintendent, principal and classroom teacher in Illinois before coming to Fort Benning seven years ago. Here, he served as principal of Dexter and Wilbur schools at Fort Benning.

Hicks holds a bachelor's and master's degree in education from Northern Illinois University.

Ann Justice will serve as assistant principal at McBride School and Wilbur School this year.

"At McBride School, the staff believes all children can learn," said Del Hicks, principal. "We welcome and encourage parent involvement inour efforts to provide strong programs for our children."

Alexander M. Patch Elementary School

Alexander M. Patch Elementary School, located at the corner of Lumpkin Road and Baltzell Avenue, is Fort Benning's oldest school, having been built in 1931.

For several years following its construction, it was the only Fort Benning school. Currently Patch School serves those students in kindergarten and first grade who live in sections of Main Post and Davis Hill.

Patch is a small school, enrolling about 150 students, and the Fort Benning Schools share the building with the Early Childhoods Development Center, which operates a program for 3 and 4 year-olds.

The Patch building has many of the advantages of an older school to include lots of space and a charm not found in newer schools. Classrooms are carpeted, and the building is air conditioned.

Ken Stettes is the principal at Patch School. He also serves as a coordinator for special projects with the school system.

Stettes has served as a principal at Wilbur School and Patch School and as a physical education teacher in the Fort Benning system. He taught in the Harris County Schools prior to coming to Fort Benning.

A native of Missouri, Stettes holds a bachelor's degree from Missouri Southern State College and an Education Specialist's degree from Georgia State University.

Edward A. White School

Edward A. White School serves approximately 400 children in grades two through five. The White School student body is made up of all second through fifth graders who reside in the north center main post areas and the south portion of Bouton Heights as well as students in grades four and five who live in McGraw Manor.

The school was built in 1962 and consists of four classrooms pods and a main building containing the office, media center, multi-purpose room and two classrooms. Each pod contains several classrooms and restrooms and is essentially a self-contained unit.

The school is carpeted throughout and is air conditioned. White School offers a standard elementary school program to include opportunities for students needing special education, a school counselor, a school nurse, and specialists in art, music and physical education.

White School is adjacent to the Youth Activities facility and uses the YA gymnasium for physical education classes.

Janet Wynn is the principal at White School. Wynn holds a bachelor's degree and a master's degree Florida State.

She has taught second grade in Colorado Springs, first grade and kindergarten at Wilbur School, and served as assistant principal at McBride and Wilbur for the last one and one-half years.

"We have an excellent student and parent population at White," said Wynn. "All our parents are automatically members of our PTO (Parent-Teacher Organization) and are encouraged to become involved in the classroom and at school events. There are numerous ways to get involved. Don't miss the opportunity."

William H. Wilbur School

William H. Wilbur School is located on Custer Road and serves children in grades kindergarten through five who live in Custer Terrace, Battle Park and Old Officer Capehart.

The building was constructed in 1950 and underwent extensive remodeling recently. The facility is carpeted throughout and has air conditioning in all classrooms.

Wilbur School provides a standard educational program to about 450 children in grades kindergarten through five to include special programs in music, art, physical education, counseling and special education services.

Gail Wilson returns as principal of Wilbur School this year. She has previously served as principal of Patch School, as assistant principal at Faith School, and as a special education teacher in the Fort Benning system. Wilson holds a master's degree in education from Columbus College and an education specialist's degree from West Georgia College.

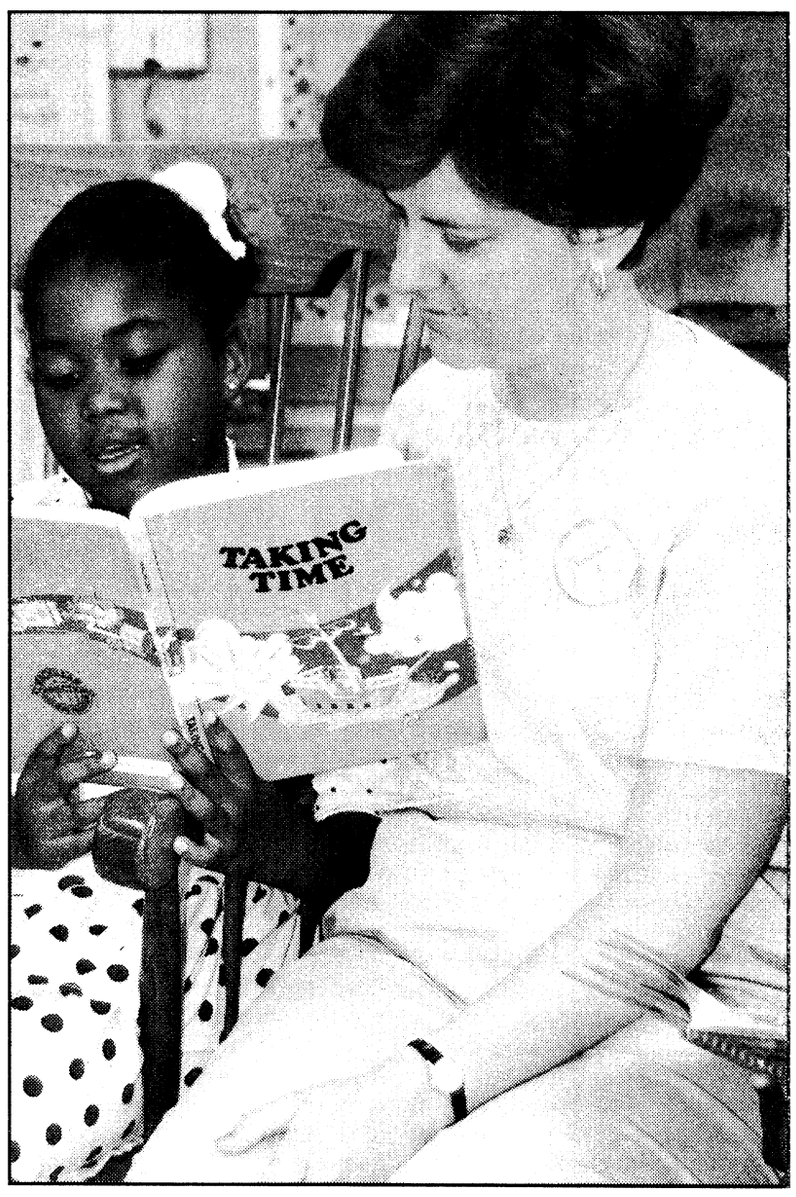
Ann Justice, the assistant principal at Wilbur, came to Wilbur last year after 16 years of teaching at Dexter School. During 14 of those years, Justice taught first grade. Prior to coming to Benning, Justice taught sixth, seventh and eighth grades for 10 years in Fayetteville, N.C.

Justice holds a bachelor's degree in elementary education, a master's degree in middle grades and early childhood education, and an education specialist's degree in early childhood education. In addition to serving as Wilbur's assistant principal, Justice will also serve as assistant principal at McBride School.

Richard G. Wilson Elementary School

The Richard G. Wilson Elementary School, located on Lavoie Avenue, serves children in the Lavoie Manor community in grades Kindergarten through five. The building was constructed in 1965, with an addition being completed two years ago.

The school enrolls about 380 children and includes facilities for instruction in art and music, a computer lab, a library media center, special education facilities and a multi-purpose room serving as auditorium, gymnasium and lunchroom.



The school is carpeted throughout and air conditioned. Children experience a standard elementary school program with additional opportunities to work with computers, a counseling program, physical education, music and art.

For students with special needs, a special education teacher and speech language teacher are assigned to the school. A counselor and school nurse also serve Wilson School.

Phyllis Parker begins her second year as principal at Wilson School. She brings a wealth of classroom experience to this assignment having taught 12 years in various elementary grades in Georgia public schools and three years as a sixth grade teacher at Faith. She served for two years as an assistant principal at Faith School before becoming Wilson School's principal.

Parker holds a bachelor's degree in elementary education, master's degree in elementary education, and an educational specialist's degree in elementary education and educational administration.

"Community involvement is one of the goals I will continue to work toward," said Parker. "I invite members of the community to come out and be a part of the Wilson School family."

Listening to a student read is just one of the many ways in which parents participate in school programs.

Volunteers play important roles

Fort Benning Schools

School volunteers play active and important roles in each of the eight Fort Benning Schools.

They assist teachers and students with activities during the school day, working on special school projects, serving as officers and committee members of parent-teacher organizations and serving as resource speakers.

The Fort Benning Schools invite community members to share their time and talents as school volunteers.

Information about volunteering in the schools is available through the school principal in each Fort Benning school.

Students learn computers

Fort Benning Schools

The mystique is gone, the novelty has worn off, the truth can now be told — computers have a place in today's schools.

In the Fort Benning Schools, that place is in the hands of learners: students learning new ideas and means of expression and teachers learning new methods and exploring possibilities never before available within the confines of the classroom.

Over the past eight years the Fort Benning Schools' computer education program has evolved from an initial awareness level to its present focus on utilization of the computer as a teaching and learning tool. Rather than teaching and learning about computers, users will be better served by teaching and learning with computers.

Toward this end, access to computer equipment includes early learning experiences with computer-assisted instruction for kindergarten students and carries through with problem solving and "real world" word processing for upper elementary and middle school students.

Several of our schools feature computer labs staffed by teacher aides who assist classroom teachers with software preparation and student monitoring. The lab provides the opportunity for whole class or large group instruction when needed.

Other schools utilize computers as learning aids in the classroom. This is generally accomplished through the use of a computer as a learning center in which children work individually, in pairs or in small groups.

In either setting, one effect of computer assisted instruction obvious to even the most casual observer is that of children learning from each other. This "peer tutoring" usually involves guiding a classmate through the operation of a particular program, but also extends to discussion of the possible outcomes of a shared decision.

Whether in a lab or the regular classroom, every child in the Fort Benning Schools will have access to these powerful learning tools and software appropriate to their needs.

Putting computers in the hands of active learners — in the Fort Benning Schools are empowering students to be their best.

Tuesday is shorter for Benning students

Fort Benning Schools

Why is Tuesday a shorter day for Fort Benning Schools?

The weekly required hours of attendance for Fort Benning School children meet state standards for school attendance in Georgia, but the schedule has been arranged to add 15 minutes to every day to permit students to be dismissed an hour early on Tuesday.

Teachers, however, are on duty until 4 p.m. on Tuesday giving them a two-hour block of time on that day for parent conferences, staff meetings or in-service training.

This time on Tuesday afternoons is a positive and unique feature of the school system that permits on-going development of professional knowledge and skills.

New programs, new materials, new teaching techniques, and updates on current techniques and requirements are all covered during sessions that take place Tuesday afternoons.

It is a time in which teachers can work together in their individual school or can work with teachers from throughout the school system.

Tuesday afternoons also promote better communication between school and home and school and community.

Additional time is provided then for parent conferences and for coordination of teaching activities with agencies on post who contribute their time and talents to providing learning experiences for students.

Fort Benning Schools' staff is always searching for ways to grow and improve.

Tuesday afternoons provide increased opportunities for that growth and improvement.

Schools offer students variety

Fort Benning Schools

Students who attend Fort Benning Schools have a variety of activities and programs available.

Learning Center

"I get to go to the LRC." "I found it in the LRC." "I learned about that in the LRC." What is the LRC, and why it is a special part of your child's school life?

The letters LRC represent the concept of a Learning Resource Center, that area at school once was known as the library. But in this information age, the function of the library has moved far beyond the housing of books.

In the Fort Benning Schools, the Learning Resource Centers have individual learning centers where children go for practice and reinforcement of basic skills.

In the Learning Resource Centers, filmstrips are shown, the computer may be used, tutorial devices such as the robot, Charlie, or the Combo-8 film stick machine, provide drill and practice on math and reading skills and board games that teach are employed to make learning fun.

The Learning Resource Center functions as the hub of the school. It is a busy, bustling place where students come and go as their needs dictate, sometimes under teacher supervision and sometimes independently, working with the learning center staff to find appropriate materials or to engage in appropriate activities.

The old horse-drawn library is a thing of the past; enter the space-age technology of the Learning Resource Center.

School Field Trips

Callaway Gardens, Westville, Sunshine Bakery and the Infantry Museum are just a few of the exciting places Fort Benning Schools' children visit on field trips during the school year.

The Fort Benning Schools' philosophy is "We believe real situations should be used in providing learning experiences, whenever feasible." Teachers do that throughout the year as they plan field trips to correlate with their various units of study.

Children at all grade levels and at every school may be involved in field trips. Parents are often invited to share the experience and to assist by being chaperons.

School Lunch Program

The Fort Benning Schools participate in the National School Lunch Program as governed by the U.S. Department of Agriculture through the Georgia State Food Service Program.

In addition to regular-priced meals, free or reduced meals are available for children of families whose income falls below certain levels established by the U.S. Department of Agriculture.

All Fort Benning Schools offer a hot lunch program each day. Three schools, McBride, Wilbur and Wilson also offer a breakfast program. Information regarding the free and reduced meal program will be available in each school during registration, and applications may be completed at that time.

Second Language Program

The English as a Second Language programs, at White School for second through fifth grades and at Faith Middle School for sixth, seventh and eighth, assist those students whose native language is not English.

Students who speak no English receive support from a specialized teacher to make their school experience a profitable one. The classes are taught in English with the ESL teacher acting as a consultant to the classroom teacher. Students in kindergarten and first grade are served within their home school.

Because of the many countries represented by Fort Benning Schools' students, the ESL program is a vital component in the educational process for children from all over the world.

Guidance and Counseling

The guidance and counseling curriculum's primary goal is to help develop happy well-adjusted individuals who can function in our ever-changing society.

The program provides information on self-understanding, interpersonal relations, expressing ideas, gathering and processing information, rights and responsibilities, decision making,

Schools host open house

Fort Benning Schools

Fort Benning Schools will be welcoming parents back to school in September too. Each school will hold its own open house — a time for group conferences when parents meet teachers and principals and see the classrooms.

Parent group conferences also provide an opportunity to briefly review curriculum and classroom guidelines.

Before the end of the first grading period, an individual conference will be scheduled to allow the teachers and parents to talk together regarding each child's achievement and progress. At this conference, the first report card will be given and the grading system explained.

Fort Benning educators look forward to seeing all parents at both the group conferences and the individual conferences. Working together, school staff and parents can provide success and a rewarding school experience for all involved.

Faith houses 6th-8th grade

Fort Benning Schools

Faith Middle School, built in 1986-87, is the only school at Fort Benning that houses the sixth, seventh and eighth grades.

Faith Middle School was named after Lt. Col. Don Carlos Faith Jr., who was awarded the Medal of Honor for bravery and service in Korea in 1950.

Located on Ingersoll Street, Faith is located near the old Don C. Faith Middle School building that had served students since 1952.

Instruction at Faith is accomplished through the use of teaming.

A team is a group of teachers who, although they teach different subjects, are assigned and teach the same group of students.

The teachers plan together and coordinate their teaching plans to provide activities that complement the material being taught in other classrooms.

This approach helps students understand how all the subject areas fit together and how they might relate to real life situations.

The staff at Faith School believes that the school exists and functions primarily for the children and that a program of quality education should be provided for every student.

They further believe that this quality education must be designed to meet each pupil's needs in the following areas of growth: aesthetic, emotional, intellectual, physical and social.

It is the responsibility of a middle school to meet the educational needs of the general population of its students and at the same time to provide for the needs of special students.

For that reason, Faith Middle School's curriculum includes a common core of academic subjects as well as exploratory courses.

Exploratory courses include: art, home living, industrial arts, computers, choral and instrumental music and Spanish.

Sixth-grade students go through a full rotation of these seven exploratory elective courses. Seventh-grade students may choose to take band and chorus for a full year or four of the exploratory courses for nine week sessions. Eighth-graders have the option to choose band, chorus or Spanish for the full year or two of the exploratory courses for eighteen week sessions.

Faith School began making the transition to the "Middle School Concept" about 10 years ago. Since that time there has been an increasing emphasis on the special needs of individual students.

Primary to the concern for individual needs is the necessity for an effective guidance and counseling service in the school. Faith school has such a program. Counselors use the developmental, preventive guidance model. Counseling is offered to students on an individual basis as well as on a group basis.

Meeting student needs on an individual basis is at the heart of what the middle school is all about.

Throughout the years, Faith has served as an example and has often been used as a model for those seeking to provide quality middle school programs throughout Georgia and the nation.

School Board

Fort Benning Schools

The Fort Benning Schools operate under the direction of a school board which is elected by parents of children attending the schools.

Board members are elected on the second Tuesday each May to two year terms, with terms being staggered to provide continuity. One half of the 10 member board comes up for election each year.

The 10 member board includes a president, a chaplain, and one representative from each of the eight schools. The president and chaplain are elected by parents of all eight schools while the individual school representatives are elected by the parents of the individual school which they represent.

The school board is a policy making group and has ultimate responsibility for the operation of the schools. The board also approves the school budget, selects the school superintendent, and approves educational programs and materials. The board functions very much like school boards do in local communities. Board members are open to the public and are held in the school administration building on NCO Drive.

Persons interested in attending meetings may call 545-2500 or 545-3500.

DARE: Say no

Fort Benning Schools

School year 1991-92 will see all students in the Fort Benning Schools actively participating in Project DARE as the program begins its fourth year in the Fort Benning Schools.

DARE — Drug Abuse Resistance Education — is a substance use prevention education program designed to equip students with skills for resisting peer pressure to experiment with tobacco, drugs and alcohol.

In its eighth-year history, it has grown to the point where more than 300 agencies in 30 states, DoDDs overseas, and schools in New Zealand have been certified to deliver the DARE program. DARE has received congressional recognition for its effectiveness, and the Fort Benning school system is among the first to provide this service in Georgia.

The most striking difference between this drug education program and others is that DARE lessons are taught by active duty, uniformed police officers.

At Fort Benning, Lt. Walter Jackson, a Department of Defense policeman, serves as DARE coordinator and primary instructor.

Jackson will teach 17, one-hour lessons dealing with decision-making skills and techniques for resisting peer pressure in a variety of situations not strictly related to substance abuse to sixth grade students at Faith School. In each of the elementary schools, Jackson teaches four and five-week DARE units to students in kindergarten through fourth grade.

As preparation for his assignment, Jackson attended a two-week Project DARE training institute conducted by the Lexington Fayette County Police Department in Lexington, Ky. His training focused on teach techniques and included a great deal of role playing to give him a feel for the real world of teaching. As this school year begins, Jackson now has two years of experience behind him.

The DARE program uses a positive approach to substance abuse education and focuses attention in four major areas:

- Accurate information about tobacco, alcohol and drugs
- Teaching students decision-making skills.
- Showing students how to resist peer pressure.
- Giving students ideas for alternatives to drug use.

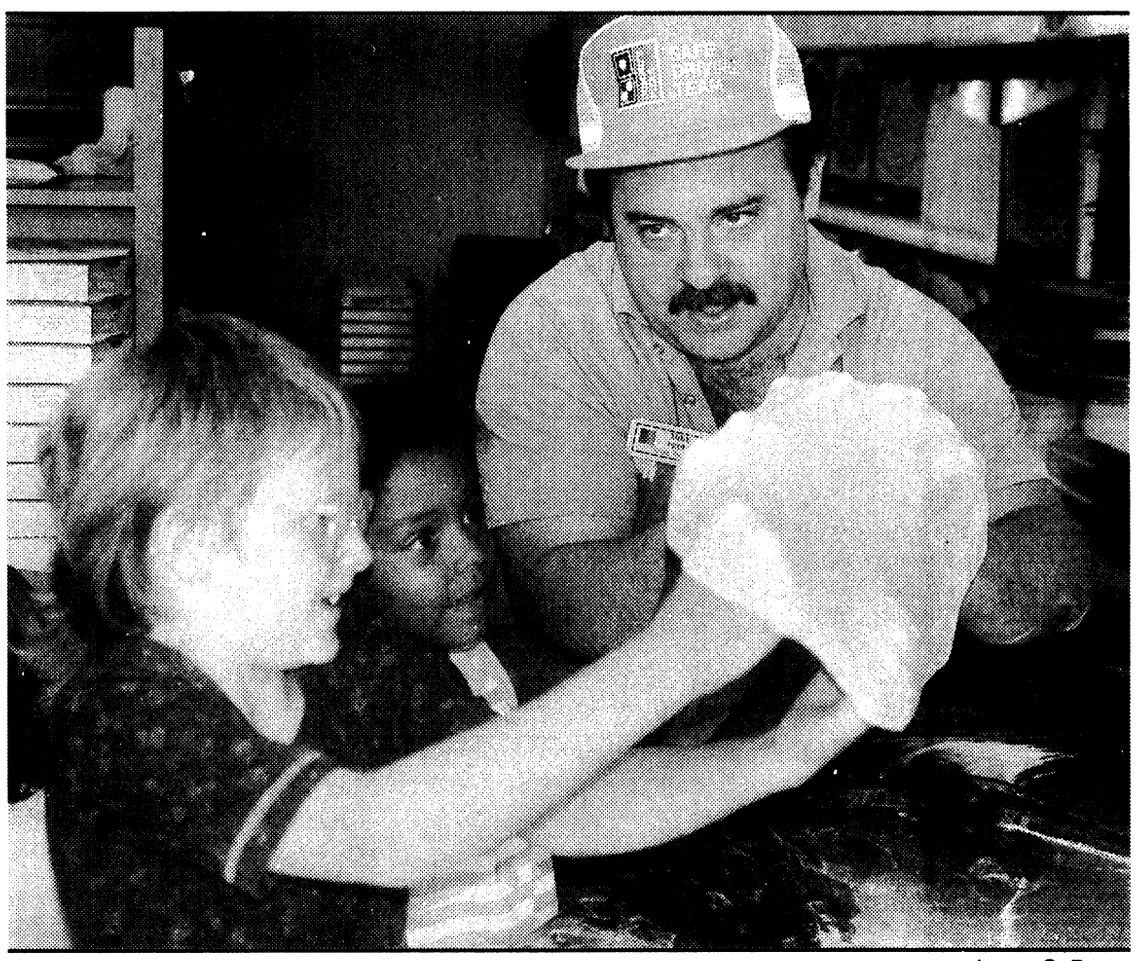
Fort Benning soldier's wife dies in accident

By Alyanna B. Clay-Heard
Bayonet staff writer

The wife of a Fort Benning soldier died as a result of injuries she received when the car in which she was riding and a dump truck collided at the intersection of the 8th and 1st Division Roads,Aug. 5 at 2:30 p.m.

The victim's husband, who was driving and their 3-year-old son were listed in critical condition at the Medical Center of Columbus as of 4 p.m. Aug. 8.



Military police reported the victim's vehicle failed to yield to oncoming traffic at a stop sign on 8th Division Road. Staff Sgt. Anthony W. Greer, non-commissioned officer in charge of the traffic investigations division of the Military Police Activity here said the soldier will be cited for negligent homicide, failure to yield at an intersection and failure to use seat belts. Safety records indicate this accident may have been less costly had the occupants of the car been using seat belts and the child restraint device.

The soldier was identified as Spc. Walter C. Hill, Company C, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment. His wife was Doris C. Hill of Columbus. The child's name is Kristian.

This was the second fatal accident involving Fort Benning soldiers this week.

Spc. Bradford Jones III, Co. A, 1st Bn., 29th Inf. Regt. was killed in Chicago when he lost control of his motorcycle and hit a guard rail. Jones was not wearing a helmet as required by Department of the Army Regulation 385-55.

According to police records, compliance with this regulation might have saved his life.

Post officials explain RIF

By Brian C. Sutton
Bayonet staff writer

About 200 Fort Benning civilian employees may lose their jobs as a result of a Reduction in Force plan in October or November, according to post officials. All affected employees should receive notices later this month.

The abolishment of positions, which will save Fort Benning about $6.2 million annually, is part of an overall plan to reduce the number of civilian employees and military members within the Department of Defense.

Positions to be abolished are currently being identified. Strict guidelines for the abolishments have been written by DoD.

What these guidelines mean to Fort Benning is simple; the abolishment of 340 Training and Doctrine Command and Information System Command positions, according to Gary Burkhalter, acting chief of Recruitment and Placement. Not all of the positions affected are now filled.

"It's too early to tell who exactly will be affected," said Burkhalter.

"The main thing that we are attempting to do is protect the rights of the employees affected," said Mildred Watts, a senior civilian personnel specialist.

According to Watts, affected civilians have specific rights to protect them and certain services that the Directorate of Civilian Personnel is obligated to provide under RIF guidelines.

"We will try to assist the employees any way we can," said Watts.

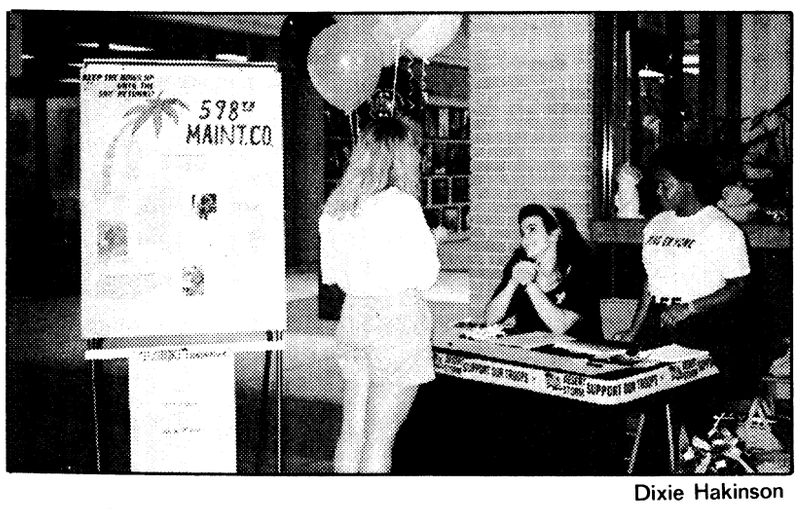
Assistance that DCP will provide comes only after the employees, now filling the targeted positions, are notified officially by letter. After notification, employees have 60-days before the effective date. This allows DCP to counsel each affected employee individually, to begin searching for other job opportunities with DoD or other government agencies, and also to refer them to other non-civil service jobs, according to Burkhalter. Some employees are eligible to be registered in the DoD Priority Placement Program, which may allow a transfer if a position is available.

In a press conference at Lawson Army Airfield Aug. 1, Maj. Gen. Carmen Cavezza, post commander, announced the Training and Doctrine Command has passed down, from the secretary of defense, guidelines for the abolishment of nearly 340 positions within the Fort Benning community. This number varies from the number of people actually affected because of retirements, transfers, resignations and the hiring freeze implemented two years ago by the Department of Defense, officials said.

598th to return from Saudi

By Alyanna B. Clay-Heard
Bayonet staff writer

The initial excitement that literally swept through Fort Benning, Columbus, Phenix City, and the entire country during Operation Desert Shield and Desert Storm has died down. News programs that once dedicated virtually all their time to news of the war are now giving only occasional updates. Most tri-city residents are putting events and news of the war behind them and going on with their lives. After all, haven't all the units that deployed from Fort Benning returned?



No they haven't.

The 598th Maintenance Company, 36th Engineer Group which deployed to Saudi Arabia Oct. 14, is scheduled to return to Fort Benning in September, according to a rear detachment official.

And while the post has been in a frenzy of welcome home celebrations such as the Victory Day Superfest, the Fourth of July commemoration, and the victory parade, about 200 members of the 598th continue to accomplish their mission in Saudi Arabia. It is the largest Fort Benning unit still in Southwest Asia.

During a teleconference interview, Capt. Charles Hawkinson, the unit's company commander in Saudi Arabia, told how the mission of the 598th had changed since the end of the war and the subsequent redeployments of other U.S. troops.

"We are the only maintenance company functioning in the theater now. Our unit provides maintenance and repair parts to the entire theater," said Hawkinson. "I requested an aircraft to transport the unit home for Sept. 6, and whenever it arrives, we will be on the way home," said Hawkinson.

Dixie Hakinson

During this deployment, family members formed a support group that is still going strong after 10 months. The officer in charge of the family support group, Chief Warrant Officer Thomas Pintar, along with Sgt. Robert Britt, Spc. Rodney Fryman and Pfc. Daniel Schmit, help spouses with everything from dealing with finances to dealing with loneliness.

"We are trying to keep everyone aware of the fact that not all Fort Benning units have returned from that theater," said Pintar. "A lot of the support from the Fort Benning, Columbus, and Phenix City community has died down. We want to bring that support back, so our soldiers don't miss out on the appreciation they deserve," he added.

Dixie Hawkinson, 598th's commander's wife and leader of the unit's "chain of concern" is also worried about the dying interest in units still serving in the Persian Gulf, and is campaigning to "raise the consciousness" of the community.

"The unit's family support group is holding fund-raisers and attempting to solicit the support of local merchants and businesses for the biggest welcome home celebration yet," said the commander's wife.

The group is selling T-shirts and bumper stickers. The family members are also helping members of the rear detachment renovate and decorate the unit's barracks area for the single soldiers who live there.

"We want every soldier of the 598th to feel truly welcomed and loved when they return," said Mrs. Hawkinson, "because they are."

The 519th Maintenance Company, part of the 67th Maintenance Battalion, once stationed at Fort Benning now at Fort Ord, Calif., will be replacing the 598th in Saudi Arabia, said Pintar. The 519th's advance party will depart Sunday, and the unit's main body will follow Aug. 26. The 519th is expected to be fully functional and ready to replace the 598th by Sept. 6. If it is needed, there will be a two-week orientation period.

Five soldiers — a flight medic, an ortheopedic specialist, a cook, a lab technician, and a carpentry/masonry specialist. Some are young, some not so young. Some married, others single. Three are parents. Four are Desert Storm veterans. One is a woman.

Five very different people, with two things in common. They are all soldiers preparing to leave the military, and they are all enrolled in the Army Career and Alumni Program here.

ACAP is a program that is designed to help outgoing military and Department of the Army civilian employees make a smoother transition from the military to a civilian lifestyle, according to Pat Sneed, an ACAP counselor. Through classes and seminars that center around subjects from the benefits of the Veteran's Administration to etiquette in the civilian workplace, military and DA civilian employees are able to ease themselves back into civilian society at a more comfortable pace, said Sneed.

"This program helps soldiers learn so much — it's like the best things the Army never taught you," said Spc. Eugene Baker, a flight medic with the 498th Medical Company (Air Ambulance).

"ACAP is helping me prepare for what was once an uncertain future," said Spc. Billy Hallmark, an ortheopedic specialist with the 2nd Mobile Army Surgical Hospital. "What's really good is the classes are helping me make plans that are good not just for now, but forever," said Hallmark.

ACAP is broken down into two parts: the Transition Assistance Office and the Job Assistance Center, said Sneed. The sections come together to help in the transistion by first, helping the soldier in preparing to go through all the necessary channels involved in separating from the military.

The Job Assistance Center then takes over, preparing the soldier to find employment in the civilian sector through resume evaluation, development of social skills and giving the soldier several classes and seminars on current trends in today's civilian job market.

"It's hard trying to adjust from military life back to being a civilian," said Spc. Edward DeYoung, a cook with Service Battery, 4th Battalion, 41st Field Artillery, 3rd Brigade, 24th Infantry Division. DeYoung had other feelings about his impending separation from the Army.

"Don't get me wrong, I liked the time I spent in the military. It's helped me a lot. But now, I feel the need to be my own person — to work toward my own goals. I still want to be part of the military as a reservist; I don't want to do it 24 hours a day. I want to have time for just being me. While I'm on active duty, I just don't have time because I have to put the needs of the Army before my own (needs)," DeYoung added.

"I'm leaving the Army under a medical discharge," said Spc. Brenda Alltop, a lab technician with Company B, 324th Forward Support Battalion, 3rd Bde., 24th Inf. Div. "I was really worried about that. I mean, would I ever get another job as a 'disabled veteran'? How would I support my kids?," she said.

"But the Veterans Administration representative showed me ways to collect benefits that I am entitled to, benefits I would have known nothing about without ACAP," said Alltop.

Sgt. Michael Ferreira, a carpentry/masonry specialist with Company C, 43rd Engineer Battalion, 36th Engineer Group, is glad a program like this came along, "in the nick of time."

"This program is a soldier's first step in the right direction toward a secure future 'on the outside'," said Ferreira, "The Army has needed a program like this for a long time. Soldiers give so much of themselves to the military — sometimes even their lives. This is something that the Army is giving back to us," he added.

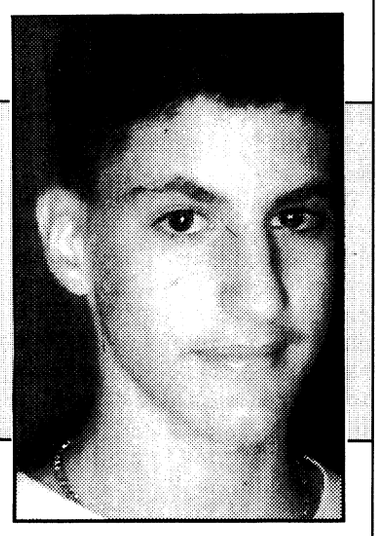
VARIOUS VOICES:

What sort of impact do you think music videos have made on our society?

Marie Weston, customer service representative for Alert Cable Television — "I think they make a great impact because they have helped along self-expression. I just don't think that 4-year-olds need to be watching that sort of thing."

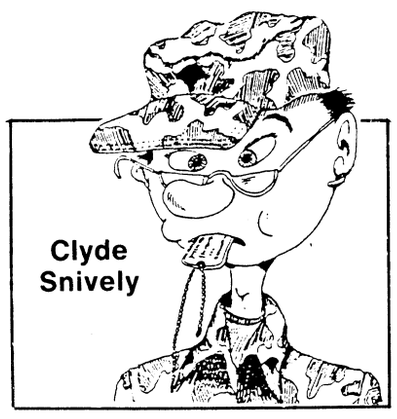
Quintella Thorn, recreational specialist — "I believe that it keeps the young people glued to the television a little longer than they should spend there. They shouldn't limit themselves to one thing, they should go out and do things instead of just spending hours in front of that video."



Pfc. Scott Happ, U. S. Army Infantry Center Military Police Company — "I believe that videos have a big influence on today's values. Things just seem to be a lot 'looser'. When people see things on television, they seem to think that, no matter what it is, it's okay to do it."

Spc. Stuart Kaplan, Company D, 2nd Battalion, 18th Infantry Regiment, 3rd Brigade, 24th Infantry Division — "With all of the sexual connotations in music videos today, a lot of kids seem to be growing faster. It's not that it's maturity, they are just growing up faster."

Capt. Barry S. Washington, Company A, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment — "I think that the impact that music videos have made has been adverse, and helped to degrade the minds of America's young people. The videos have helped them renounce any form of morality."



Lester Martinez, student — "I think that they have made a good impact on society because people are opening up more, listening to different types of music, and maybe understanding each other a little better."

Post airs complaints on 'cry-line'

By Clyde Snively
Bayonet columnist

COMMENTARY

The office genius, Axtion Jaxion, got into the swing of the Community of Excellence program last week...or so everyone thought.

He was cranking out COE posters right and left, hanging them in work areas, really going to town when the deputy happened to read one: "How's my attitude, call 1-800-CRY-BABY."

I mention this because this week's column is the "Cry-line." I'm not sure if it's the heat or what, but a lot of people have been calling, or coming up to me to cry.

First, the golf course.

Things are definitely heating up among the polyester-sans-belt crowd. The first caller complained about lack of water coolers on the golf course. "It's the middle of summer and they pull out a permanent water cooler without putting in a water jug. I mean the jugs are so few and far between as it is, it's a wonder they haven't had any heat strokes out there.

"They must think we all drive carts and can carry our own igloos, but that ain't the case. Some of us still like to walk and a two-quart canteen strapped to your waist cuts down on the back swing.

"Further, when there is water, there'll be times when there're no papercups or the cups 'll be soggy from the latest downpour. Maybe it's their way of drumming up business for the mobile snack bar," he finally concluded.

I then made the mistake of mentioning how permanent latrines with all the amenities of home were being built on the course. That was a mistake because it set him off on another diatribe.

"Yeah, they're building latrines, but did you see where? Right next to the club house. They need to build them out on the back forty."

I mumbled that I thought that was the plan and quickly hung up.

Another caller demanded action on the way tee times are reserved, like I really have the power or inclination to take action.

But this caller was persistent. Seems there's a system to allow active-duty military to make weekend tee-times on Monday, with which the caller had no problem, but apparently others, such as retirees, can make them on Tuesday but Department of the Army civilians can't. The caller, apparently a Department of the Army civilian had a problem with that.

I was sympathetic, but had to apologize to the caller for being ignorant on the subject and once again quickly relied on that great Graham Bell invention, the hangup button.

I was on a roll. But then I got a visit from an NCO from the Ranger Training Brigade.

I knew I was in trouble now. How do you hang up on a 6-foot 4-inch, 240 pound, muscle bound Ranger?

The way his brow furrowed under his Bert and Ernie haircut, told me I should pay close attention to what he had to say.

What he wanted to know, he growled, letting me know he spoke for ALL the NCOs, was why I always ragged on NCOs and not officers.

I wasn't aware this was the situation, but you have to admit, it's difficult to rag on officers. Just ask any advanced course captain. He'll tell you he and his cohorts could have done just as well as General Schwarzkopf when it came to planning and executing the Desert Storm battle plan.

He admitted he could see my logic there, and left with a gentle reminder that he'd be keeping an eye on future columns.

Next was a lady who came slamming into the office. She flung a copy of a letter on my desk and demanded, "read it, sucker."

She was upset because she got a nasty letter from Publishers' Clearing House.

Seems she always mailed in her packet to win the bucks but never subscribed to any magazines. After a few years of this the computer wrote back and said, "Dear Ms. Momanam, you keep entering our contest, but you've never subscribed to any magazines. This is a waste of our time and money. Please don't send in any more entries.

"No computer's going to tell me what to do," she said, "I'm going to keep entering. I dare them to do anything."

I'm sure she will.

After she left I vowed to spend less time in the office. If they can't find you, they can't complain.

NCOs could set the example, help stamp out smoking in the military

By Maj. Gale S. Pollock
Army News Service

If you've been around the Army since mid-1980, you've surely noticed at least one substantial change: the dwindling number of places a smoker can light up on Army property. The days of the "smoke 'em if you got 'em" Army are over. Why?

In 1986, the Department of Defense, recognizing that smoking affects military readiness, required all the military services to issue their own regulations to control smoking. First to comply, the Army issued a smoking policy in July 1986, which was later formalized as part of Army Regulation 600-63, Army Health Promotion, issued in November 1987.

"Smoking tobacco," the regulation says, "harms readiness by impairing physical fitness and by increasing illness, absenteeism, premature death and health care costs. Readiness will be enhanced by establishing the standard of a smoke-free environment that supports abstinence from and discourages use of tobacco."

The regulation is a major departure from past Army practices. For the first time, the health and comfort of non-smokers in every Army workplace were given clear priority over the privilege of smokers to indulge in their habit. By bringing workers relief from environmental tobacco smoke, or ETS, AR 600-63 has increased comfort, safety and health for all.

ETS is significant because of its effects on non-smokers. Its sidestream aspect, which goes directly into the air from the burning cigarette, contains twice the tar and nicotine, five times the carbon monoxide, 73 times the ammonia and three times the benzopyrene as mainstream smoke that is inhaled. Nicotine narrows blood vessels and speeds up the heart; carbon monoxide robs the blood of oxygen; tar coats the lungs and causes cancer; and benzopyrene may cause cancer as well. Unlike smokers, who consciously light up despite awareness of the dangers to themselves, non-smokers are unconsenting and often unknowledgable about the danger sidestream smoke causes to their health.

The Army's regulation of tobacco usage is one way of protecting the health of all personnel associated with the Army. Non-commissioned officers can play a large supporting role since junior enlisted look to them first as a role model.

In the past, young soldiers were influenced to smoke at basic training, following the example of their smoking NCO leaders. Now NCOs can be a more positive influence by preventing them from starting. After all, soldiers are willing to imitate soldiers whom they see as successful in the Army. Because NCOs are a key factor in the social environment, their influence is crucial.

Letting smokers fend for themselves is not an adequate response for an Army leadership serious about helping victims of tobacco addiction. Moral support and encouragement are important. NCOs can even make duty time available to attend a smoking cessation clinic.

NCOs have another role as well — the environmental watchdog. Soldiers and civilians look to NCOs to safeguard their comfort, health and safety. One doesn't allow a soldier downrange if the range isn't clear. Same logic here — don't allow subordinates to be exposed to tobacco smoke. While AR 600-63 may set the policy, from time to time, NCOs must enforce it.

As NCOs enforce the policy, they may be in for a pleasant surprise. According to the Smoking Policy Institute, it is common for smokers to welcome restrictions as an incentive to quit smoking. Most Americans don't smoke (70 percent of total adult population; 58 percent of soldiers) and 90 percent of smokers would like to quit the habit. So when NCOs enforce no-smoking rules, they are helping non-smokers and smokers alike.

What is the payoff for the NCO? He or she can take great pride in leading the total Army community into a healthier future. As Desert Storm demonstrated, a healthier force has a greater chance to take the battle to the enemy instead of letting an enemy (tobacco use) take the battle to them.

Pollock, a certified registered nurse anesthetist, is chief of the Personnel Readiness Division at the Office of the Deputy Chief of Staff for Personnel. This article is adapted from NCO Call.

Need for a ready Army has not diminished

Association of the United States Army

Our soldiers are coming home to joyous receptions which properly recognize their outstanding accomplishments over the past nine months.

In the Gulf War, the United States armed forces demonstrated clearly that the investments of the last decade produced much more than the aberrant $200 hammer. By their superb performance, they made it very clear that we had accomplished what we set out to do; that is, to build a modern, trained Army founded on the principles of excellence.

It is equally clear that the decisions to invest in the Army were wise ones. While our major concerns had long been directed toward the Soviet Union and the Warsaw Pact, those responsible for national security planning made it known that there were other potential challenges waiting. They were proved correct when Iraq invaded Kuwait.

Now that the war is over, Congress is considering a defense budget that calls for a rapid dismantlement of the military force that took a decade to build. The problems lie not only with the overall reductions, but also with the speed with which they are to be executed.

For the Army, these too-rapid reductions mean that officers and sergeants — who have clearly demonstrated performance that meets this Army's exacting standards — are going to be forced to find careers elsewhere. That will be done by raising retention standards or by the more direct solution of elimination boards.

Because our world is hardly a model of peace and stability, the need for a robust and ready Army has not diminished. Even as we pare back our forces, we need to have due regard for the concerns of our splendid soldiers and their families. And as we shape a smaller force we need to preserve the capabilities of our Army to adequately protect our national interests. Failure on either count means that our soldiers and their families will be the first to be hurt, and the attraction to an Army career will be greatly diminished — a result the nation can ill afford.

Fort Benning's Crime Prevention Quality Improvement Team is sponsoring a crime prevention slogan contest. The contest began July 26.

The Military Police Activity is collecting the slogans, and the Sergeants Major Association is providing a $100 cash prize for the winning slogan.

According to Capt. Richard Gregory, chief of the Military Police Law Enforcement Division, people all over post are encouraged to create a slogan, theme or phrase that will make people more aware of what they can do to help prevent crime on post.

The winner of the contest will receive $100, compliments of the Sergeants Major Association.

"This is a way to get the community involved with what is going on across the post," Gregory said. "This is their community, and the best way to protect it is to get their help."

Participants may send entries to the Crime Prevention Section of the Military Police Activity.

Maj. shares education with other countries

By Brian C. Sutton
Bayonet staff writer

Children and worried parents can breathe a little easier these days in the U.S. and Latin America because of educational programs developed by an American soldier.

Maj. Fred Rodriguez, deputy chief of staff of operations at the Directorate of Reserve Components in Harmony Church here, has developed programs that will help physically handicapped children improve their motor skills and help learning deficient students understand reading material better.

Rodriguez, who holds a doctorate in physical education for the handicapped, has spent nearly nine years doing research work on his programs, and teaching other educators how to use them, both in the United States and overseas.

The programs, which consist of a series of tests, are designed to show educators which children are difficient in particular motor skills in order to choose a program that caters to the child. With the individualized program, the child can meet or excel the national averages.

"The intent of the research was to develop individualized programs for the teachers to use with the children," said Rodriguez.

Part or all of Rodriguez's research and programs have been used in the U.S., Mexico, El Salvador, Venezeula, Ecuador, and Panama. Panama has had more than 400 of its teachers use his programs.

Physical education is the main focus of the tests, but reveals strengths and shortcomings of learning skills, as well.

"Teachers were calling me to find out how to teach handicapped kids who were required to be mainstreamed," said Rodriguez.

"My idea was to extend my programs in the area of academics," said Rodriguez.

The answer Rodriguez gave them was to use the same physical tests to check motor skills, thereby revealing the possible learning difficulty.

If a child is having difficulty crossing the center point of his body when moving marbles from one pile to another, that child may have difficulty reading left to right, according to Rodriguez.

Also, students who have trouble copying geometric shapes, may have trouble with reading comprehension.

The cost to the countries was minimal, because Rodriguez donated most of the program materials to the Latin American countries.

"The poorer countries simply can't afford what I was charging for the programs in the U.S.," said Rodriguez.

Hospital holds AIDS seminar

James C. Rupp
Bayonet staff writer

A seminar on Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome and the contraction of the HIV virus was held at Martin Army Community Hospital for teenagers Tuesday. The seminar was hosted by the American Red Cross and featured guest speakers from the Columbus-based "Star Team" an organization that encourages youths to stay clean and off drugs.

The group told those attending how to protect themselves from infection, discussed facts about the disease and how to identify symptoms.

The most secure and safe way to protect against the disease is to abstain from sex and intravenous needle sharing.

The "Star Team" informed the teens that a lot of the ways that people believe they can contract the HIV-virus are misconceptions. Ways that do not spread the disease are: shaking hands, hugging, sharing utensils while eating, casual contact with an infected person or being served food by an infected person.

Some ways that do spread the disease include sexual contact with an infected person, sharing an infected hypodermic needle, contaminated blood or infected pregnant women passing the disease to their unborn children before, during or after birth.

Research librarian retires

James C. Rupp
Bayonet staff writer

"There comes a time when you have to make some changes," said Betty Collins Van Sickle, Building 4's research librarian, "and this is one of them."

After 27 years of book keeping at Fort Benning, and a lifetime of library experience, Van Sickle has decided to retire and "take it easy for a little while."

Before coming to Fort Benning in April of 1964, Van Sickle worked as a librarian at the Non-commissioned Officer's Club Library at Fort Rucker, Ala. Prior to that, she spent her high school days as a public librarian, where a fellow librarian encouraged her to enter the military library system.

She first worked at the main post library, which she says is not far removed from an ordinary public library due to the diversity of topics it posesses. The Building 4 library, where she has been since December of 1965, is primarily a research library, specializing in infantry information.

After all the time spent in the library it would seem that she would know the library like the back of her hand, however, she said "Not a day goes by in here when I don't pick up something that I didn't know was here."

With her time off, she plans to relax and enjoy her hobbies, gardening, cross-stitching and working in her yard before she returns to her first love- research.

Van Sickle said that she plans to continue research, but this time as a paid researcher. Research, she said, is a marketable skill and is a challenge that she enjoys. During her time here, she said not a day would go by without a question about something in her library.

For now, however, Van Sickle said that a brief respite will be welcome and after so many hours in the sprawling Building 4 library, she would like to get some reading done.

24th Infantry Regiment Retiree's Club bids Fort Benning farewell

USAIC Public Affairs Office

The 24th Infantry Regiment, an all-black unit, saw its first action against the Comanche Indians 11 years after the 24th was formed by an act of Congress in 1869.

They earned distinction in the Battle of San Juan Hill during the Spanish-American War, and again saw action during the Philippine insurrection from 1899-1902 and in Mexico in 1916. During World War I the regiment served as a replacement pool to the all-black 92nd and 93rd Divisions.

Fort Benning was home to the 24th from 1922 to 1942 where they served as garrison troops. World War II took the 24th primarily to the Pacific. They received the surrender of the Japanese garrison on Aka-Shima in 1945 and later served in the occupation of Japan.

President Harry Truman ordered the armed forces to desegregate in 1948. The order was vague and slow in being implemented. The 24th had yet to be integrated when it arrived in Korea on July 12, 1950, one of the first units arriving in Korea coming directly from Japan. The 24th was inactivated on Oct. 1, 1951, in Korea, and was the last black regiment to serve on active duty before integration.

Many members of the 24th retired in the Columbus, area. These members were invited to Fort Benning by Maj. Gen. Willard Latham in July 1975 to hear a speech by President Gerald Ford on York Field. Latham asked the 24th to make Fort Benning the official home of the 24th Infantry Regiment Retiree's Club.

The club has met once a month for the past 16 years in the Fort Benning recreation centers, mainly at Kelley Hill. On July 13, the club held its final meeting. The membership had become very small over the past few years due to deaths, illness and old age. The last nine members left with sadness and expressed to the recreation center staff their love and appreciation of Fort Benning and the many years that they have been a part of Fort Benning's history.

Retiree adds a new dimension to picture taking

James C. Rupp
Bayonet staff writer

A lot of people take photographs. They take them on vacations, family get togethers, sporting events and holidays. In an effort to capture one moment in time, they freeze their loved ones on silver coated paper in a two dimensional image that they can keep forever. The image loses something, however, and instead of seeing the actual moment they had hoped to capture, they are left with a bland, flat, shallow copy of the moment that they wanted to hold on to forever.

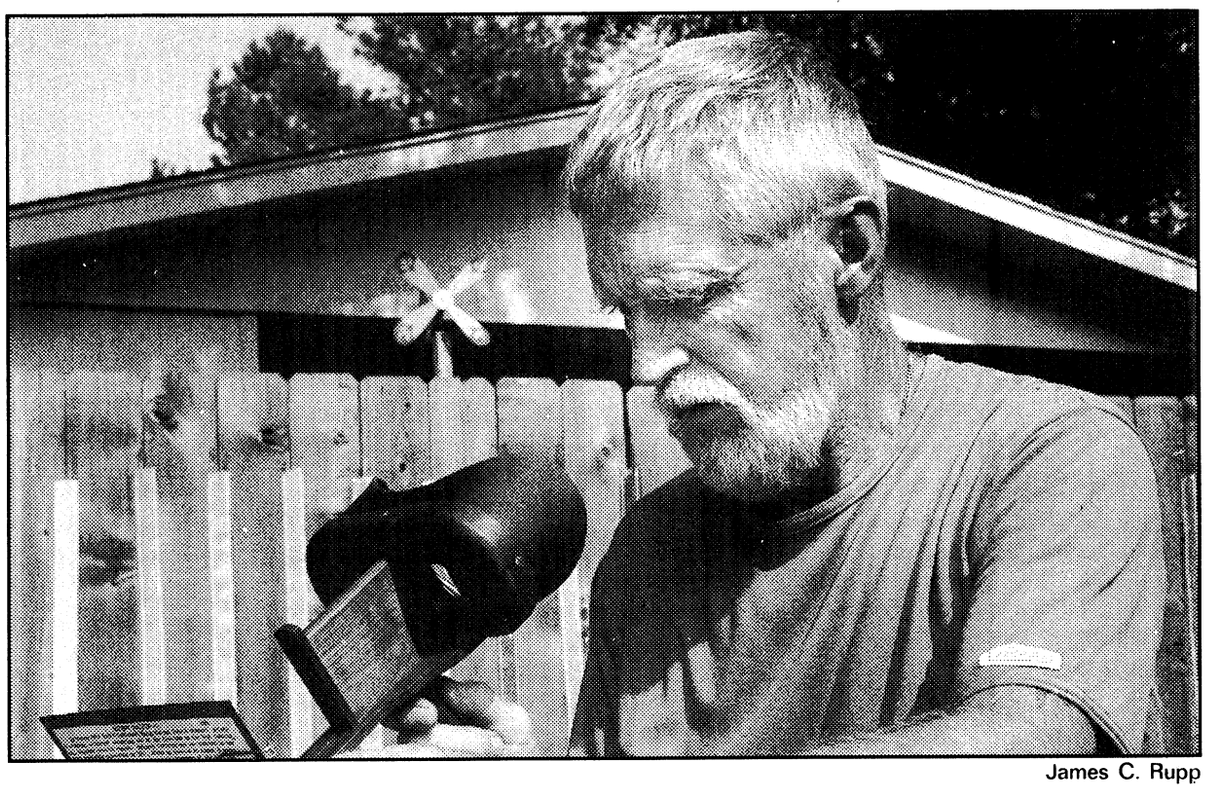
Bill Walton of Columbus, a retired 30-year Army veteran, has a better way to remember such moments, he says.

With the help of a special camera and viewer, Walton can save his special moments to look back on and feel just like he's standing there.

Walton takes three dimensional photographs, also called stereographs. He says his interest in 3-D started when he was a young boy sitting in the library looking through the steroscopes while they were still enjoying some level of popularity. "You could go around the world just sitting in one place," he says, explaining his initial fascination with the sterographs.

It was during his second tour in Vietnam that his interest in the stereographs was rekindled. Walton, then a helicopter pilot, says that he and a friend used to peruse 3-D pictures to take their minds off of the choppers during the night.

But it wasn't until 1976 that he began collecting stereographs in earnest. The delay, he explains, was trying to collect the equipment to start photographing objects in 3-D.



The equipment, Walton says, is hard to come by these days due to the stereograph's limited popularity. To take the pictures, an up and coming sterographer needs a stereoscopic camera. The camera takes pictures with normal film, but shoots the image through two lenses instead of just one. The result is much the same as we get when using our eyes; there is a left image and a right image.

When both images are reproduced, mounted side by side and viewed through a stereoscope, the eye sees depth in the combination of the two flat images. Hands reach out through the paper towards the onlooker, tanks cross behind ridges and planes seem to truly hang in mid-air.

Since he began collecting photos 15 years ago, Walton has joined both the National Steroscopic Association and the Steroscopic Society of America. The first, he explains, is composed of mostly collecters and the second is mainly people who go out and photograph things for themselves.

Each 'stereoscoper' has his own trademark, or type of photos they like to take. Walton tells of an architect who photographs exclusively bridges, a housewife who takes photos of her children and ("the weirdest") a scientist who uses an electon microscope to enlarge the images of insects to thousands of times their ordinary dimensions and photographs them. For himself, Walton says that he photographs what he knows best- Fort Benning.

He possesses hundreds of pictures of subjectsaround the post- including basic trainees, Bradley Fighting Vehicles, Ranger candidates and Airborne students. Each photo betrays breathtaking reality. Barbed wire is suspended in wiry coils right before the eyes, bayonets thrust towards the viewer and feet threaten to smash into onlookers' noses.

James C. Rupp

Bill Walton samples a small part of his stereograph collection, viewing them through a stereoscopic viewer in the backyard of his house.

Some of his photos received two first places, a President's Choice Award and a second place at the last stereographers' convention he attended in San Antonio.

Walton says that he understands that his hobby is not as popular as he would like it to be, but regardless, he's enjoying himself in his different dimension. He spends his spare time golfing, swimming, hiking as a member of the Pine Mountain Trail Society and attending different conventions for sterographers across the nation with his wife, Krystyna. When not doing that, you can see him around Fort Benning taking pictures of all types of happenings- some to go in his 3-D book called "Back to Basics", which he pians to market commercially.

Worth Repeating

"Peace is best secured by those who use their strength justly and who show they have no intention of submitting to injustice."

Cpl. Terry Palmer, 3rd Brigade NCO of the Quarter, draws blood for an HIV test from Sgt. Steven Setzer.

NCO looks for chance to excel

3rd Brigade's NCO of the Quarter hones his medical, paratroop skills

By Willie Hay
3rd Brigade, 24th Infantry Division

Paratroopers aren't the only soldiers who like to jump out of planes.

"When my recruiter couldn't get me into the 75th Rangers during the Iran-hostage crisis, I told him I'd be happy as long as I could jump out of an airplane," said Cpl. Terry R. Palmer, a medic with Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, 18th Infantry, the 3rd Brigade's NCO of the Quarter.

Palmer joined the Army in 1979 after graduation from high school because "what they were doing to the American hostages in our embassy in Iran struck a chord with me." He began his military career as a TOW gunner and earned his jump wings before serving his first enlistment in the 82nd Airborne Division.

After a four-year break in service, Palmer became disenchanted with "seasonal" construction work with his brother in Oklahoma and decided to set his sights on jumping out of planes as a paramedic.

"I re-enlisted for 12 weeks of medical training and am working toward national certification as a paramedic," he said. "Although paramedics don't have medical degrees, they are qualified to assist with surgery and are usually the first ones on the scene of an accident, performing life-saving steps until the victim reaches the hospital."

> "He's one of the most highly motivated NCOs I've seen and his infantry experience makes him both tactically and technically proficient.
> — Sgt. Steven Setzer

"I guess I want to become a paramedic because I've always been interested in practicing medicine and helping people at the same time," he added.

According to Palmer, Operation Desert Shield/Storm was an ideal opportunity for him to pursue his goal.

"Once we got to Saudi Arabia, we had medical classes every day until the start of the war," he said. "After we moved into Iraq, we treated some 200 enemy prisoners of war, mostly for shrapnel wounds."

Palmer earned the Combat Medical Badge, and his documented clinical and ambulance experience should give him the edge toward paramedic certification, he says.

"I'm hoping to take the Emergency Medical Technician Course later this year with the Ranger battalion here at Fort Benning in order to become eligible for the final step, the national certification test for paramedics," he said.

Meanwhile, Palmer is wasting no time in pursuing his goal by serving as his battalion's medical resupply NCO.

"He's responsible for maintaining all of the battalion's medical equipment and supplies, as well as accounting for and issuing it to our combat life-savers during field training," said Sgt. Steven Setzer, Palmer's supervisor.

"He's one of the most highly motivated NCOs I've seen, Setzer continued, "and his infantry experience makes him both tactically and technically proficient."

Palmer tries to pass on his tactical proficiency to the other soldiers in the battalion during common task and combat life-saver training.

"I always start classes by telling them that buddy aid could save their lives, just as it did for two of our NCOs when they were wounded by enemy machine gun fire during the Gulf War in Iraq," he said. "Medical resupply is critical, too, because all the medical knowledge in the world won't save you if your buddy can't get the supplies he needs to perform life-saving first aid."

MPs identify flooding roads

James C. Rupp
Bayonet staff writer

With the recent amount of rainfall in and around Fort Benning, many roads have been flooded.

The Traffic Section of the Military Police Activity has identified the roads on Main Post that are most likely to flood during the downpours.

Wold Avenue, Anderson Avenue, Vibbert Avenue, Ingersoll Street and Highway 27 have a history of heavy flooding during the rainy season, according to Staff Sgt. Anthony Greer of MPA Traffic Section.

The Traffic Section will do its best to block these streets during flooding, he said, but in the event a street has been flooded and has not been blocked, drivers must do their best to avoid the areas and use another route.

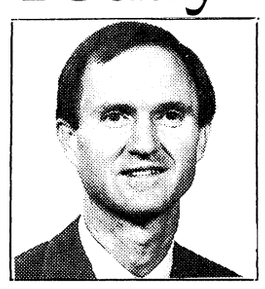
SDT won't affect NCO personnel files yet

Army News Service

Results from the Noncommissioned officer Self Development Test, which the Army will administer starting in fiscal 1992, will not be posted in soldier's personnel files until 1994.

Army training officials at the Pentagon said the two-year phase will allow them to make sure soldiers are familiar with the new test and that the test will be fine-tuned before its results are used to judge soldiers for promotion, retention or training opportunities.



The SDT comprises about 60 questions on the soldier's military occupational specialty and another 40 split between military leadership and training management. Using MOS soldier's manuals and a series of field manuals, soldiers will prepare for the test on their own time.

Homes need protection during vacation time

By Adraine Williams
Military Police Activity

The vacation season is still here, and thieves are still around. When leaving your home for an extended period of time, don't forget to ensure the following things have been accomplished.

Never leave your home without ensuring that all doors and windows are locked.

Give a trusted friend or neighbor a key to your home in case of an emergency. Ask that he or she collect your mail and newspapers. A thief always looks for a pile of mail and newspapers.

Request a quarters check from the military police. To accomplish this, the requestor must come to the MP station and notify the desk sergeant, who will ensure that the necessary paperwork is filled out.

After the paperwork has been filled out, the Military Police will handle the rest. After you have departed the area, the Military Police will check your home twice daily.

The Military Police are not allowed to check the inside of your home unless it appears to have been burglarized. A check of your home will be done until you return from vacation. It is essential that you notify the MP desk in person upon your return. This will prevent the Military Police from conducting quarters checks and mistaking your family for criminals.

Tips to help protect your home:

- Leave some lights on and the radio playing.
- Keep your garage door closed and locked.
- Use timing devices to turn inside lights, radios and televisions on and off at different times.
- Remember there is no guaranteed way to protect your home from being burglarized. However, taking proper crime prevention measures and utilizing the Military Police services, will help deter the thief.

3rd Bde. soldier makes excellence a goal

By Willie Hay
3rd Brigade, 24th Infantry Division

Getting out of the Army was a mistake he is unlikely to make again.

"I missed the esprit de corps, camaraderie and teamwork — things you don't often find in the civilian work force," said Spc. George R. Leard Jr., the 3rd Brigade's Soldier of the Quarter, who left the Army at the end of his first enlistment to attend college.

"I felt alienated from other people when I gout out of the Army after serving four years as a tanker with 3rd Battalion, 69th Armor, at Fort Stewart, so I joined the reserves for training as a medical specialist," said Leard, 25, who received six months of training at Fort Sam Houston, Texas, and a year of training as a licensed practical nurse at Fort Gordon, Ga., before discovering that NBC School at Fort McClellan, Ala., was his ticket back to active duty.

"I've got the abilities here to excel," said Leard, who found his niche in the Sledgehammer Brigade's 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor.

"My first-line supervisor and everyone in my chain of command supports me 100 percent," he said. "When I was out of the Army, I went to my supervisor with a personal problem and was told, 'That's not up to me. You need to take care of your own problems."

"Here, everyone in my chain of command makes it his business to help you with any problems you might have."

Although Leard regrets he missed out on the chance to serve in Operation Desert Storm, he received six months of chemical training and earned his jump wings before settling into the "Panther" Battalion as the assistant NBC non-commissioned officer and successfully representing the battalion at the brigade's soldier of the quarter board.

According to his supervisor, Sgt. David Gosha, Leard wasted no time getting Headquarters and Headquarters Company's NBC room ready for inspection and training the unit's soldiers in chemical warfare skills.

"Our BCI (Brigade Commander's Inspection) is still six months away, but he's already checked out all the masks for serviceability and proper storage, and he takes every opportunity to pass on his knowledge to the other soldiers," Gosha said.

"I'm trying to teach all the platoon sergeants to employ chemical survey equipment and how to organize decontamination teams with their soldiers," Leard said. "I want them to be able to function in a chemical environment without having to rely on the NBC room for guidance."

In addition to the sense of esprit de corps, Leard has found he can achieve educational and career goals in the Army.

"You never know what you can achieve until you stretch yourself to your maximum potential," he said. "I've earned four MOS's in six years and am just 20 credits short of an associate's degree from Troy State University."

So far, Leard's military career has brought him full circle — from 3rd Bn., 69th Armor, at Fort Stewart, to 2nd Bn., 69th Armor, at Fort Benning.

Leard says his future career goals include possibly applying for Officer Candidate School.

"It's a decision I've got to make soon," he said, "because I would have to attend OCS before I've completed 10 years of active duty."

ENERGY WATCH

By Jenny McRae
Energy Branch

Energy usage surveys in this country indicate that over 90 percent of the materials and goods produced in the United States result from the use of non-human energy. During the 19th and 20th centuries, energy demand soared. For most of that time, energy has been abundant, inexpensive and available in varied forms.

With seemingly limitless supplies of energy, Americans gave little thought to conserving resources. Even when demands for energy exceeded domestic supplies of oil and the United States began to import oil, most Americans assumed that the supply was inexhaustible. In 1973, however, the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries stunned the world when its members not only shut off their pipelines to industrialized nations but also more than doubled the price of crude oil. Suddenly Americans began to speak of an "energy crisis." With public attention focused on energy issues, many people began to understand that the fossil fuels on which we depend are finite resources and cannot be relied upon to provide our energy. Both alternative sources of energy and a conservation ethic must be developed.

Conserving energy does not mean depriving yourself of comforts and conveniences. The days of inexpensive energy may be gone, but the enjoyment and opportunities derived from using energy are not. Conservation simply means guarding against waste, being aware of the inefficient ways energy can be used, and doing something about it. Some conservation measures can involve expenditures (e.g., for special materials or equipment), but there are many ways to conserve energy without spending money.

Can Americans cut back their energy use without cutting back on the comforts and conveniences of modern living? Yes. In fact, we already have. The 10 percent reduction in our total energy use since 1979 is a good start. We still have inefficiency in many energy-consuming systems, but we now know how to design more efficient vehicles, buildings and machines so that they require less energy. We can operate the existing systems in a more efficient manner. These efforts to conserve existing resources increase our supplies as if we had created a new kind of fuel.

For most of us, the changes in our use of energy will not be fundamental ones. We will be slightly cooler in winter and warmer in summer. We will make our purchases with a view to efficiency and recyclibility, and rely less on throwaway packaging. We will drive smaller cars at slower speeds, make greater use of public transportation, and walk more. We will turn off lights we are not using. In short, Americans will learn to think of energy as money. We will not need to return to the energy use pattern of the past, but we might well return to the spirit of the slogan that was so popular during World War II: "Use it up, wear it out, make it do, or do without."

VA reports few cases of post-war trauma in DS troops

Veterans Administration

The Department of Veterans Affairs has issued a report on the effects of the Persian Gulf War on the psychological well-being and social adjustment of returning veterans who have been seen at VA facilities, and VA's capability to provide treatment.

The study is the first to include empirical data on the psychological status of these veterans and suggests that the Persian Gulf War appears to have been less traumatic than World War II, or the Korean and Vietnam Conflicts. Of the 2,800 deactivated Persian Gulf War veterans seen at VA facilities, 240 have been treated for psychiatric problems. Of 328 Persian Gulf returnees seen at VA's vet centers, 10 had post-traumatic stress disorder. Most of these 10 were Vietnam veterans who were retraumatized by their service in the Gulf.

The report, which was required by Public Law 102-25, directed VA to assess its capability to provide PTSD treatment for Operation Desert Storm participants.

In providing this preliminary report to Congress, Secretary of Veterans Affairs Edward J. Derwinski said, "We have seen few cases of PTSD to date in our health-care facilities. I am pleased that VA has a wide array of programs already in place to treat the psychological problems of these veterans. Although it is too early to predict the long-term effects of this war, we have begun special efforts to conduct additional outreach to this new segment of the veteran population who may need our help in the future. We will continue to assess their needs and provide whatever treatment and support they need."

The study, entitled "War Zone Stress Among Returning Persian Gulf Troops: A Preliminary Report," was prepared by a joint panel of VA and Defense Department mental health professionals — experts in PTSD.

The data in the report was derived from VA's experiences with Vietnam Era veterans; surveys of returning Persian Gulf War troops; VA counseling sessions with survivors of a SCUD missile attack; and discussions with VA benefits counselors, vet center counselors and mental health professionals. In addition, many other PTSD experts both in the United States and overseas, were consulted.

Based on the small number of Persian Gulf War veterans seen by VA to date, the report offers these limited conclusions:

● VA medical centers have seen some 2,800 deactivated Persian Gulf War veterans and provided support to more than 4,700 family members. A total of 240 Persian Gulf returnees have been seen for outpatient or inpatient psychiatric problems.

● Of the first 328 Persian Gulf veterans seen by VA's Readjustment Counseling Service, which operates a nationwide system of outreach and counseling centers (vet centers), 55 had war-related acute stress reaction, 10 had PTSD and 16 had other psychological problems. Cases of PTSD to date appear to be primarily among Vietnam veterans who were retraumatized by the Gulf War service.

● The Persian Gulf force was unique in that it included large numbers of troops from subgroups that scientific studies suggest may be at greater than average risk of PTSD, including ethnocultural minorities, female troops, National Guard and Reserve troops called to active duty with little advance warning, and parents of small children.

● Stress issues related to deployment and homecoming appear to be as frequent as those related to war zone service.

VA currently maintains a large national network of programs offering PTSD treatment for all eligible Persian Gulf War veterans through its medical centers, outpatient clinics and vet centers. In addition, VA has initiated special efforts nationwide to provide outreach and other clinical services to Persian Gulf veterans, particularly to National Guard and Reserve units. Additional funds have been provided to expand these services. Further collaboration also is planned between VA and military mental health professionals.

Tips, hints to make summer recreational boating safe

Safety Office

The sun shines gently from above, the swell of waves soothingly rocks the boat, the offshore breeze flows through hair, a fine mist moistens and cools skin — all aboard, it's time to launch.

Seventeen million recreational boats take to waters in America. From these boats, people attempt to absorb the overwhelming expanse of sky and water. All too often, though, boaters are absorbed overboard.

In fact, 1,066 people permanently checked in to "Davey Jones' Locker" in 1986. That's more deaths than from airline, commercial shipping, and rail accidents combined.

A general pattern emerges from most of those recreational boating deaths. Boating accidents usually occur in small boats on smaller, inland waters. The "skipper" of the craft (very few of whom had any boating training) was usually at fault.

Considering the amount of time spent working to pay for these vessels, boaters should invest a little time learning safe operating practices. The Boating Education Hotline, 800-336-BOAT, informs callers of where to obtain boating education (most courses are free).

While on the subject of boating-related training, boaters should be sure they know how to swim. The ability to swim just might come in handy to a water-sport enthusiast. As a matter of fact, drowning was the cause of death in 90 percent of boating fatalities. Knowing how to swim could have saved many.

Recreational boaters spend a lot of time preparing for their days on the water. They load up munchies, beverages, cameras, suntan lotion, sunglasses, towels, radios, water skis, fishing equipment, and a heap of other essentials.

While they're at it, they may want to check the "seaworthiness" of the craft, to include posted load limit, adequate fuel, charged batteries, and inserted drain plugs. Checking a weather report might not be a bad idea, either.

Boaters should make a little room for personal flotation devices (or life jackets). Actually, 82.5 percent of those killed in boating accidents weren't wearing life jackets. Wearing life jackets instead of suntan lotion will not only block sunrays, but may also prevent drowning.

Yo, Ho, Ho, and a bottle of rum. Too many mateys end up in the drink as a result of drink. Booze doesn't help a boater hang on to the gunwales.

● Tips for safe recreational boating

Recreational boating as a family sport grows more popular every year. America had six million recreational boats in 1961. That number's grown to nearly 17 million.

● Float plan. By telling someone where you are going and when you will be back, what your boat looks like and other identifying information you will make finding your boat much easier, should the need arise.

● Weather. The weather and water conditions should always be checked before leaving shore. Take a radio with you and listen to updated weather reports.

● Life jackets. Make sure you have one on board for each individual in the boat. Make sure they are accessible. Encourage everyone to wear a lifejacket. Set an example by wearing yours.

● Fuel. Check to make sure you have enough gas. Use the "One-third rule" in fuel management. Use one-third of the fuel to go, one-third to get back and one-third in reserve.

● Alcohol. Boating and booze don't mix. More than half of boating deaths arealcohol-related. Operating a boat while intoxicated is illegal and subject to a $1,000 fine with increased penalties for causing injury or death.

Guests have much to choose from as they prepare their plates at The Atrium's lovely lunch buffet table.

The Atrium's better than ever

The Atrium, inside the Sheraton-Airport Hotel, has made some tantalizing menu and aesthetical changes. Now, the restaurant is more exciting than ever!

The efforts of the new general manager, Robert Schenck, the new catering sales coordinator, Donna Haines, and the corporate food and beverage staff of Ocean Properties, Steve Updike and Scott Luper, have come together to create a fresher look and more pleasing dining experience at The Atrium.

"We are refocusing to quality, presentation and service here at The Atrium Restaurant, and our new menu has something to offer everyone," said general manager Schenck, who has some 17 years experience in the hospitality industry. "The management and members of our staff were ecstatic as they tasted our new dishes for the first time."

From 11:30 a.m. to 2 p.m. at The Atrium, you can satisfy your taste buds with a delicious hot lunch buffet, complete with salad bar. Italian dishes have been added as well as low-calorie salad items. Because the restaurant is conveniently located just off of Airport Thruway, the buffet is usually buzzing with a jovial, hungry lunchtime crowd.

From 5:30 p.m. to 10:30 p.m., there is also a completely new dinner menu that is sure to please everyone.

The atmosphere at The Atrium is one of sophistication, yet there's a comfortable, pleasing, relaxing feeling there as you hear the water cascading down the restaurant's water fountain. The staff is accommodating, the decor is lovely and even the skirted buffet table is adorned with live and silk greenery, flowers and fruit.

Prices range from moderate ($6-$12) to upscale (more than $12), and children can enjoy the same items on the regular menu for half price.

For a positive dining experience, treat yourself to The Atrium at the beautiful Sheraton Hotel. ■

Camp keeps learning fun

Exceptional family members enjoy summer

By Brian C. Sutton
Bayonet staff writer

It's certainly no fun being made to do something you don't want to do, like sitting in a classroom all day hearing lectures, according to Lydia Brunk, instructor at the post's exceptional family member camp here. Brunk said that it is important to keep learning active and fun.

The camp, with each session lasting two weeks, is already full for the duration of this year's program.

Brunk said that part of the reason that the camp is full for this year is that it is a wonderful learning experience for the children and it provides a break for the parents from the day to day care required for these children.

"Sometimes it's really hard to take care of these children 24 hours a day," said Brunk. "We provide the parents an opportunity to take a rest, and it allows us to teach the children, as well."

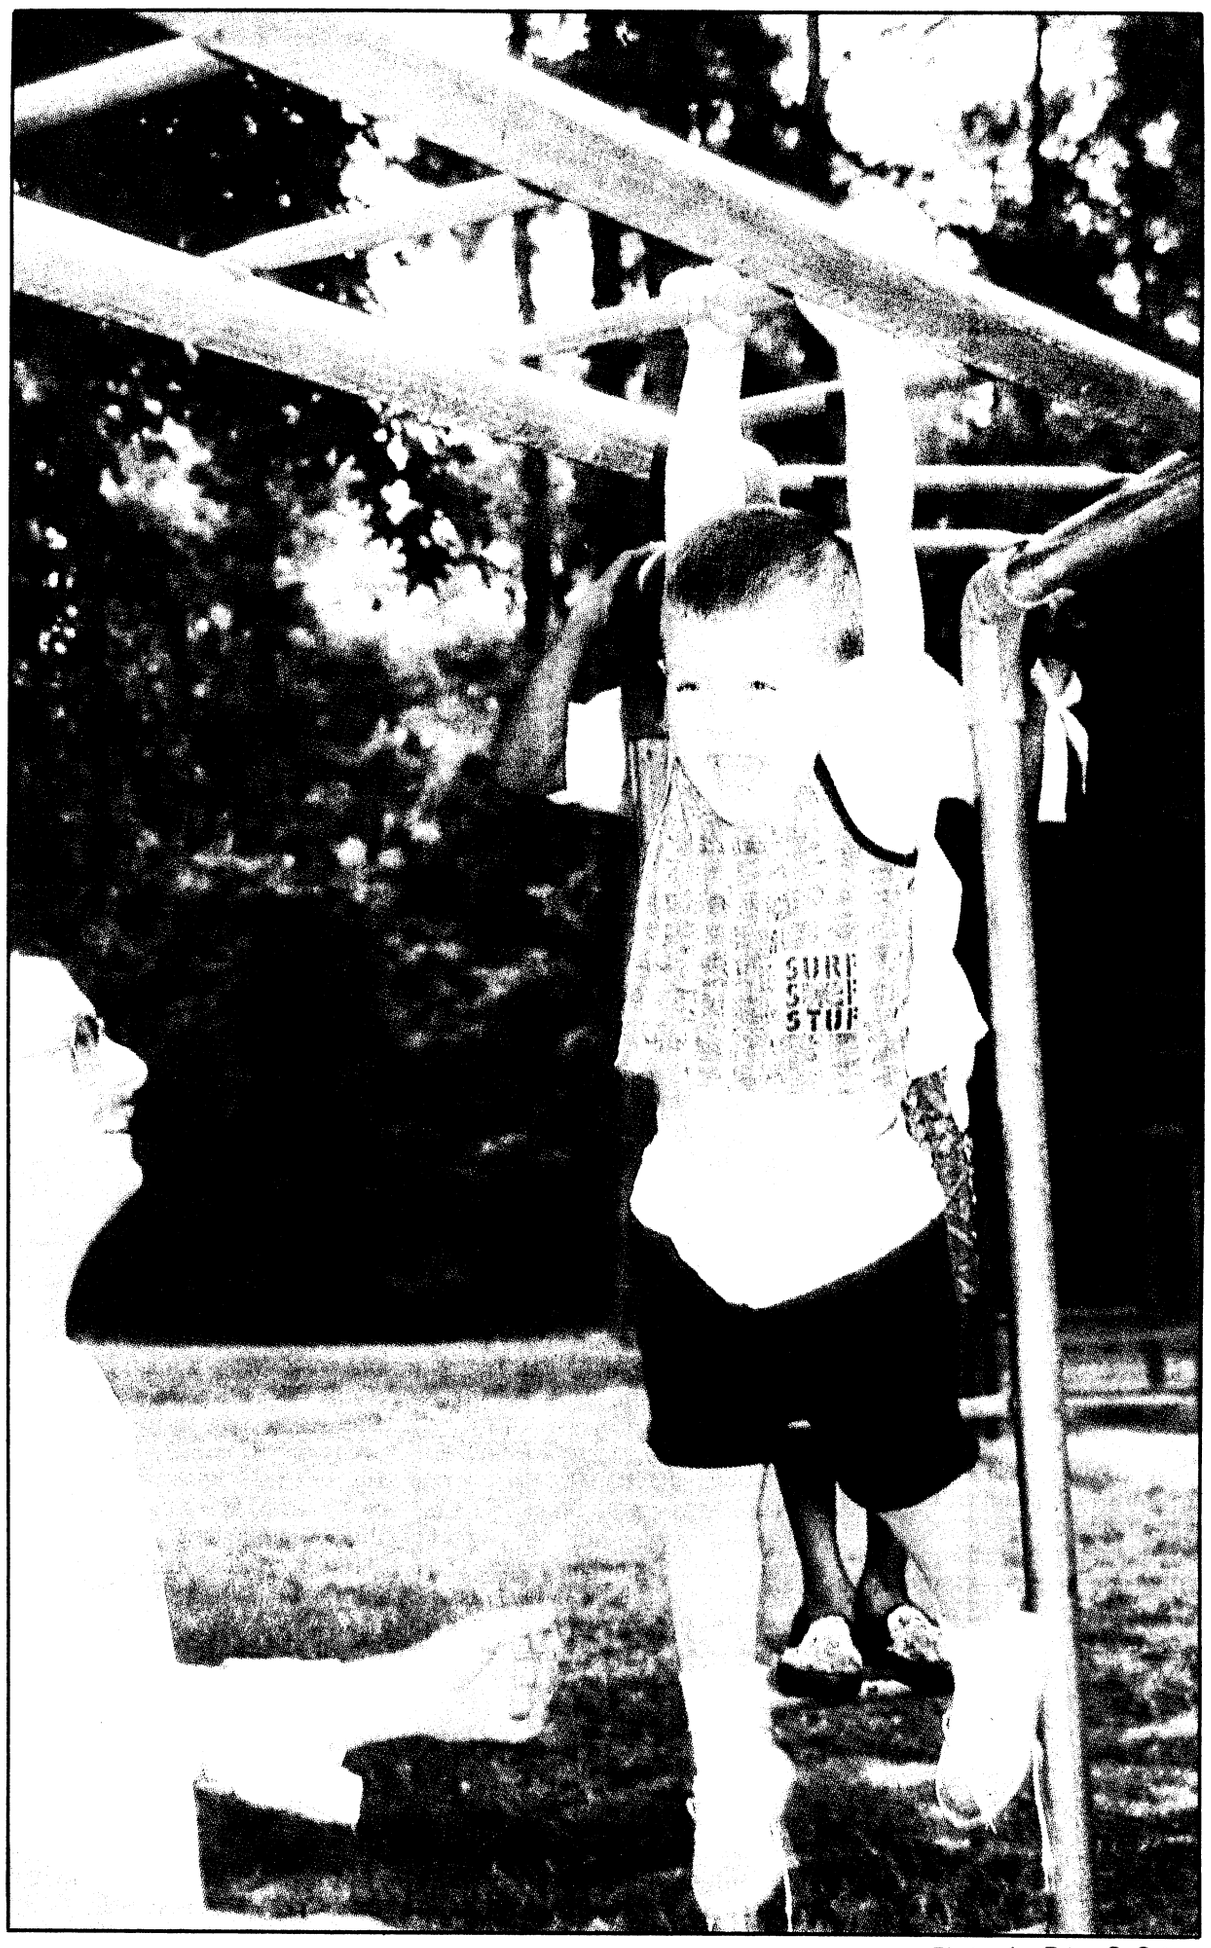
Teaching the children is exactly what they do.

"We try to teach the children to take their turn," said Brunk.

Swimming, games and sports are a part of the daily teaching process to allow the children, who mainly suffer from learning disabilities and medical impairments, to learn in a fun environment, with little pressure from outside influences.

For $40 for the two-week session and $20 registration fee, the 25 children in the current session were exposed to the normal curriculum. Then, July 21, they were treated to a Middle Ages day where all the children were active participants in several events.

The Society for Creative Anachronisms, a non-profit educational organization made up entirely of volunteers, helped by teaching the children about the Middle Ages period.



"We try to keep the ways and attitudes of the period," said Cathy Joines, minister of arts and science for SCA.

Keeping the ways of the period is exactly what they do. After spending part of the week instructing the children how to behave as if they lived in the Middle Ages and how to construct defenses against the enemy, the children were exposed to proper speaking, fighting and dress of the period by the SCA."It's a lot of fun teaching, especially to children like we have today," said Joines.

A good majority of the day was spent face painting, singing, doing traditional dances, and of course dueling.

The children entered a ring, made by tying ropes around trees to make a makeshift arena, with sock-swords in one hand and cardboard shields in the other, to duel it out in the traditional and, of course, the courteous way.

According to Brunk, this event brought joy to the parents who participated, the volunteers, and, most importantly, the children.

Stars sparkle and shine at first home game

Columbus Stars

The Columbus Stars played their first home game July 27 against the 17th placed team of the National Minor League Alliance, the Decatur Colts of Decatur, Ga.

The action started off at 7:30 p.m. with the Army Band playing a medley of patrotic songs, followed by the Silver Wings Parachute Team exciting a crowd of about 1,800 people.

The DeKalb Colts were basically unable to move the ball in the first half. The Columbus Stars quarterback, Tyrone Walker, hit Cris Carter for a 60-yard-touchdown. This was a perfect play with two defenders, Walker threaded the needle, and Carter made an outstanding catch and was off to the races for a touchdown.

In the third quarter, Columbus gave the DeKalb Colts 14 points. One of the touchdowns was the result of a sacked quarterback, Walker, and the ball bouncing loose and right into the defender's hands and a very short run for a touchdown. Then later in the third quarter, quarterback Walker was shaken up on a tackle and had to be replaced by nnumber one Eddie Mitchell who had been playing the whole game as a defensive corner and was a defensive leader in tackles with five tackles and four assists. On Mitchell's second play from scrimmage, he threw a pass that was intercepted by a defensive linebacker which set up a short distance for a touchdown for the Colts.

The Columbus defense held the Colts offense in check most of the night. But with the interception and fumble both resulting in touchdowns in the third quarter, the Colts led the Stars 14-7.

Thefourth quarter belonged to Columbus Star offense with Carter catching another pass setting up the touchdown for Walker on a quarterback sneak. Unfortunately, the extra point try was a busted play and the Stars were unable to convert on it.

Columbus is fortunate to have Fort Benning close by because 10 of the Stars players are stationed there. They are: quarterback Tyrone Walker, tailback Cecil Fudge, defensive back, Peter Batiste, fullback Andrew Bennett, fullback Henry M. Wilson Jr., tailback Gerrad Thompson, offensive guard John H. Harris Jr., center David Meeks, defensive guard Elvin Hurt and defensive tackle Andre Avent.

Redlegs hold tournament

By Anthony Bennett
4th Battalion, 41st Field Artillery

A 1991 Fort Escort sat patiently, awaiting someone to claim it as grand prize.

The 4th Battalion, 41st Field Artillery "Redlegs" hosted the 6th Annual Redleg Open golf tournament July 19 at the Follow Me Golf Course. Among other prizes, 132 eager golfers played their rounds diligently, vying to win the elusive grand prize.

The tourney was a four-man best ball scramble with two flights.

The winning team in the first flight was that of Joe Kambitz, Tal Glover, D.C. Morgan and Slats Henderson, who fired a 57, 15 under par.

Leon Bellamy, Doug Dolenc, Mickey Sanzotta and Mark White took first place in the second flight with a sub-par round of 67.

Trophies were awarded to the first and second place teams in each flight. Prizes included dinners, hats, T-shirts and gift certificates. Willie Thames, Helen Harper, Henderson and Morgan each won an autographed Southern Open flag in the closest-to-the-hole competition. R. Locket received the trophy for longest drive of the day.

"I'm extremely pleased with the outcome of the event," said Lt. Col. Donald C. Bell, tournament host and commander of the Redlegs. "We could not have put on the quality tournament that we did without the help of a lot of good people in the Columbus and Fort Benning area."

According to Bell, many local businesses donated prizes, beverages and trophies for the tournament, exemplifying the community support the Fort Benning soldiers receive. Proceeds from the event will be used toward a Christmas party for the Redlegs' family members.

What about the grand prize?

Unfortunately, it had to return to its place in the lot of a local car dealer. It seems nobody could get the little white ball to go in the hole on the 16th, 185-yard par-3 "hole-in-one" prize hole.

34th Med. Bn. officers visit historic POW site

By Randall G. Anderson
498th Medical Company

History is used to study the lessons learned so that the mistakes are not made again. Although the Civil War ended more than 200 years ago, the lessons available from this conflict are beneficial to the military planners of today. The study of these lessons is an important element of the Officer Professional Development Program.

Recently officers from the 34th Medical Battalion conducted an OPD class at the Andersonville Prison. The prison, located in Andersonville, Ga., is a fearful reminder of the harsh living conditions endured by the captured soldiers of the Civil War. As with most visitors to the park, the group was amazed at the site that once held 32,000 soldiers.

The 34th Medical Battalion is comprised of the 498th Medical Company (Air Ambulance), 2nd Mobile Army Surgical Hospital, 690th Medical Company (Ambulance), 261st Medical Detachment (Maintenance), 926th Medicine Detachment and the Headquarters and Headquarters Detachment. Although the units are all medical in nature, the tour highlighted the theme of the Prisoner of War.

After the battalion officers completed viewing the Andersonville Visitor Center/Museum, a park ranger conducted a tour around the prison site. The prison was originally constructed in early 1864 to encompass 16 acres but was expanded to 26 acres in June 1864. A 15-foot-high wall made from pine logs contained the prisoners. A section of this wall is recreated today along with a variety of the types of shelters built by POWs.

Life in the stockade was virtually unbearable during the war — evident by the large death rate at Andersonville. Almost 13,000 Union soldiers died from disease, poor sanitation, malnutrition, and exposure to the elements during the 14 months that the prison was in operation. During this time period, a total of 45,000 prisoners were held within the walls originally designed to hold 10,000.

The final stop on the Andersonville tour was a visit to the Prisoner of War Museum located adjacent to the stockade walls. Prior to the museum visit, the park ranger provided discussion on the aspects of POWs throughout the history of American conflicts. The museum exhibit contains POW memorabilia and artifacts from the Civil War through the Vietnam War.

Andersonville National Historic Site was established by Congress to provide an understanding of the overall prisoner of war story of the Civil War, to interpret the roll of prisoner of war camps in history, to commemorate the sacrifice of Americans who lost their lives in such camps and to preserve the monuments located within the site.

Andersonville National Historic Site is located 10 miles northeast of Americus on GA 49. Admittance to the park is free and in addition to the two museums and prison camp is the Andersonville National Cemetery.

Chaplains courageous during difficult times

By Gabriele Sonnenberg
USAIC Chaplains' Office

"War is dangerous. Pray that God will make me adequate." Those words were written by Clark Poling to his father during World War II.

Poling and his three colleagues soon proved themselves to be more than "adequate" Feb. 3, 1943. They became known as "The Four Chaplains" who heroically gave their lives that others aboard the SS Dorchester might live.

These four chaplains represented the Protestant, Catholic and Jewish faiths. They were among the 904 persons aboard the troop transport, the SS Dorchester, when it was hit by a Nazi torpedo and sank within 20 minutes in the icy waters off the coast of Greenland.

It was reported that they "gave their own lifebelts to enlisted men, and while praying together went down with the ship." One of the 226 survivors said: "The chaplains stood hand in hand, praying to the God they served for the safety of those men who were leaving the stricken ship on all sides of them. This is the picture engraved in our minds and hearts as the SS Dorchester disappeared beneath the waves."

Another survivor told how one of the chaplains gave him his own gloves. After spending eight hours in a crowded lifeboat he was rescued. "Without the chaplain's gloves," he said, "my fingers would have frozen stiff. I would never have made it. As it was, only two of us survived of the 40 who were on the boat. I owe my life to the chaplain who gave me those gloves."

Those four chaplains were from diverse backgrounds. George L. Fox was a Protestant country boy from Vermont. Alexander D. Goode was a Jewish city boy from Washington, D.C. Johnny P. Washington was a Catholic kid from a poor immigrant family in Newark, N.J., and Clark V. Poling was a Protestant minister's son from New York City.

The Fort Benning community has the Field of Four Chaplains which honors those men. There is also a chapel in Philadelphia, Pa., which is known as "A Sanctuary of Brotherhood." This chapel is devoted to "the spirit of sacrificial unselfishness with a vital faith and commitment to God and man as exemplified by the Four Chaplains."

Foundation in Christ can be personal show and tell

By Chaplain James Leston
USAIC Chaplains Office

Five-year-old Jack was disturbed on Tuesday when he discovered his "show and tell" assignment was due in kindergarten class the following day. His grandmother and grandfather had been visiting and he had completely forgotten to find something of interest.

As the visitors planned their return trip on Wednesday morning, a happy thought struck young Jack. He asked his grandpa and grandma if they would stop at school on the way to the airport and say goodbye. They complied.

But when they entered the classroom, to their astonishment and the teacher's amusement, Jack turned to the class and said, "I have the best show and tell of all. Here are my grandparents, visiting all the way from Florida.

What do you have to show for your life? People are busy obtaining "things" in order to show how they have arrived in society. Our self worth is much deeper than what kind of car we drive, rank or tabs one wears, and even if one went to Saudi Arabia or not.

God is concerned with who we are on the inside and what we are doing with the gifts he has given us to use while on earth.

What type of gifts has he given us? You may be a spouse or parent. Loving and raising your family in the sight of God will touch your families' life much more than how many "things" you can buy for them.

Your spiritual relationship with God, for the gift of salvation is free, but you are ultimately responsible for your life before Him.

Build your life on a firm foundation of spiritual, moral, and ethical principles. Show those around you that you are more than what you possess; that you are the most valuable person on the inside — A child of God.
