Penland Overlook

to open at Columbus Museum Sunday

The Columbus Museum

Featuring works by 45 artists and craftspeople from the Penland School in North Carolina, Penland Overlook will open at the Columbus Museum Sunday.

The exhibit focuses on works by students in the residency program at Penland, who shared a common experience during the time they worked and studied together.

The display provides an overview of how this shared experience created a similar aesthetic approach to the formation of objects both functional and decorative in a range of materials including wood, paper, metal, glass, clay and photography.

Visitors to the exhibition will find such everyday objects as chairs, rugs, candlesticks, bowls, mirrors and even a dartboard on view, but these works are anything but ordinary.

Artists Cary and Mark Jordan, whose work appears in Penland Overlook, will demonstrate their crafts on the opening weekend of the exhibition. Both artists were artists in residence at the Penland School in the 1970s.

This exhibition was organized by the Asheville Art Museum. ## Some property still unrecovered

Computers, printers, night vision goggles and other evidence continue to pile up in a room at the post's Criminal Investigation Division.

The equipment has been recovered and cataloged as a result of arrests that are expected to "clear" several cases of theft on post and in Columbus.

According to Special Agent in Charge Randy F. Upton, head of Fort Benning's CID, arrests were made Oct. 24 in connection with several thefts on post and in Columbus.

> "People need to make sure their valuables are secure, whether at home or at work."
> — Randy F. Upton
> Criminal Investigation Division

The maximum penalty for larceny of military property valued at more than $100 is five years' imprisonment on each count and forfeiture of all pay and allowances.

The on-post thefts, which spanned a period of more than two years, ranged from vending machine break-ins to the theft of high-tech military equipment.

"We're asking people to help us get all the property back," Upton said. "If you've bought a computer, printer, or high-tech equipment for an 'unreal' price, chances are it may be stolen."

Anyone who may have purchased stolen property, Upton said, should call CID at 545-2414.

Upton said, "We hope this alerts people to look out for deals that are too good to be true. Just because it's an Army buddy offering you the deal, that doesn't necessarily mean you can trust him."

Upton said the burglaries also point up the importance of security. The items stolen came from all over the reservation, he said, mostly from isolated areas, but several of the thefts occurred on Main Post.

"People need to make sure their valuables are secure, whether at home or at work," he said. "And units should have lists of high-dollar value items, with serial numbers. Stolen property is a lot easier to identify, and to return to its rightful owner, if you have a record of the serial number."

Further details of the theft cases are being withheld pending command action.

'Good, old-fashioned' methods can tell 'whodunit'

By Karen S. Morarie
Bayonet staff writer

"You know my methods, Watson — apply them."

Detective methods were as successful in breaking a recent string of thefts on Fort Benning as they were for a certain fictional Baker Street detective.

According to Randy F. Upton, Fort Benning Criminal Investigation Division's special agent in charge, the recent arrests prove even when criminals are equipped with high-tech equipment, there's no substitute for "good, old-fashioned police work."

Upton, whose office walls are decorated with a signed photograph of FBI legend Elliot Ness, a framed magnifying glass and a deerstalker cap like that worn by Sherlock Holmes, said most cases are solved by classic methods of detection.

Upton worked at the CID laboratory in Atlanta for five years, he said, and firmly believes in the importance of evidence.

"Crime scene preservation is all-important," he said. "I stress that to our investigators all the time. These arrests (in the theft cases) depended on fingerprints and tire impressions found at one of the crime scenes."

The initial break in the case, he said, came when Pfc. Gary Rector, a clerk at CID, turned in a tip based on a vehicles' tires.

According to CID Investigator James D. Grassley, casts of tire tracks are relatively simple to make.

"You find a good impression and set a frame around it," he said. "Then mix the plaster — it's like dental plaster — to a pancake-batter consistency. Spray the dirt with lacquer so it won't crumble, pour the plaster, and in a few minutes you have a cast."

Special Agent Dan Woolbert said dusting for fingerprints is also fairly straightforward, although there are advanced techniques for "lifting" latent prints.

In most situations, Woolbert said, surfaces likely to show fingerprints are brushed with a layer of loose powder, the color and consistency of which depends on the color and texture of the surface being dusted. If prints appear, they are covered with a piece of clear, sticky plastic film, which is lifted, covered and sent to a lab for photography and analysis.

Fingerprints found at crime scenes are kept for comparison with those of possible suspects, Woolbert said, and can be instrumental in getting a conviction.

While it may be true for criminals, it's not necessarily true for everyone that crime doesn't pay — Rector may stand to receive up to a $6,000 reward for his role in the arrest.

1 dead, 4 injured in traffic accident in Southwest Asia

USAIC Public Affairs Office

A commercial van carrying 10 Fort Benning soldiers was involved in a traffic accident in Saudi Arabia at about 8:30 a.m. Tuesday.

The accident, which left one soldiers dead and six injured, occurred when a car traveling in the left lane cut in front of the van, striking the van's left front corner.

The collision caused the van to roll and spin forward. The van was then struck in the rear by another car.

The soldiers involved are members of the 324th Forward Support Battalion, 3rd Brigade, 24th Infantry Division.

The soldier killed in the accident is Staff Sgt. Johnson Kelly, 40, of Tuscaloosa, Ala.

The soldiers injured are Staff Sgt. Christopher Rabb, Sgt. Angela Booth, Spc. James Brown, Spc. Brian Eldridge, Staff Sgt. Vicki Williams and Pvt. Christopher Deason.

No information is available on the status of others involved in the accident.

The accident remains under investigation.

Improvements planned for post's E911 system

By Marc G. Turchin
Bayonet staff writer

It's early morning and you're asleep in your bedroom. Suddenly your eyes open — you have been awakened by the shrill sound of your fire alarm.

You dash through the bedroom door to get to the telephone, trying not to inhale the smoke. You dial "911" and the dispatcher answers, "This is 911 emergency, Mrs. Smith, what is your emergency?"

To your amazement, the dispatcher already knows your name and address. You tell the dispatcher your emergency, and the officer dispatches the Fire Department, Military Police and Emergency Medical Services.

Automatic number and location identification and one-call emergency service are benefits of Fort Benning's enhanced 911 system.

This technology is what Fort Benning is going toward with its E911 system, said Bessie B. Tucker, E911 systems administrator.

Tucker said the system that is on-line now is only the beginning of what is to come from the E911 system.

"It is designed eventually to dispatch for all emergency incidents on the post — fire, EMS as well as police," she said.

Right now, she said, only pay telephones, housing areas and barracks residents with Southern Bell telephones are able to dial 911 and get a dispatcher.

Fort Benning is the only Department of Defense installation with this type of system, Tucker said.

The E911 system is directly tied to the new Directorate of Public Safety. It is one of the foundations

'Military enhanced' writer confesses

By Amanda Halford
The Fort Lee Traveller

commentary

A while ago, I read the most hilarious book. It was called, of all things, "Politically Correct Bedtime Stories."

In this book, the Red Riding Hood's wolf wasn't killed by a wood-chopper person or log-fuel technician (as he preferred).

Instead, when little Red Riding Hood screamed and the log-fuel technician came running in with his ax, Red Riding Hood told him he was "sexist" and a "speciest" for thinking a woman and a wolf couldn't work out their differences between the two of them instead of a big, strong man running in with an ax to solve all their problems.

At which point in the story, Grandma jumps out of the wolf's mouth and cuts off the woodchopper's head. Then the three (Red Riding Hood, Grandma and the wolf) set up an alternative home where they lived in peace, happily ever after.

In this book, people are vertically or horizontally challenged, optically challenged, financially-challenged and animals are not animals but are nonhuman. It's very funny.

It made me think about the concept of political correctness. And the very notion of political correctness sometimes makes me laugh.

When I was very young, which wasn't all that long ago, it was OK to call someone handicapped. It wasn't an insult; it was a term describing his or her condition.

I grew up as an "Indian." It was perfectly all right to call me that. To me it wasn't an insult; it was the truth. Now I find out that I am actually a Native American.

I must admit, my logic is a usually a little off, but I personally think a native American is anyone who was born in America. Therefore, we're all native Americans.

Some of the new politically correct terms, in my opinion mind you, are downright silly. Can you honestly say "personhole cover" instead of manhole cover with a straight face? Can you look your children in the face and tell them to go build a snowperson?

Is there a real reason that I have to call a garbage man a sanitation engineer? Isn't it the same thing?

I know the reason why the titles were changed, but I still say, does it make a difference?

I remember reading Shakespeare when I was in high school. In the play "Romeo and Juliet," there was a line that said, "A rose by another name would smell as sweet."

This line was explained to me as meaning if you call a rose a boot, for instance, it's still going to look like a rose, smell like a rose, feel like a rose and do the same job as a rose. So why not just call it a rose.

I know there are some very valid reasons for politically correcting some titles but there are also some that, to me, don't make sense.

All people want to be thought of as equal to everyone else, but isn't there a better way to do that than give themselves a new name? After all, actions speak louder than words.

Instead of people sitting around coming up with politically correct names, titles and phrases, couldn't they better use their time coming up with a solution for the economic mess the United States is in? Or deciding on a health care plan? Or figuring out how to get people off the streets and into a home? Or why your neighbor's child is always black and blue? Or ... the list goes on and on.

When I grew up, I was poor — not economically challenged. But instead of worrying what people called me and my family, we figured out a way to improve our financial status.

People care more about what people think of them than they do about what's happening in the world. There are eagle eyes who pounce on every little joke, every little familiar saying. I am afraid to say anything anymore for fear it will offend someone.

I know I have offended someone with what I've just written. I know it as surely as I am sitting here typing this. I know the minute someone reads this he or she is not going to be able to stand idly by while I still write in ignorance.

And to tell the truth, I would like someone to explain political correctness to me, why we have it, who thought it up and when it became wrong to say the un-political correct term. And could someone tell me what the opposite of politically correct is? Is it un-politically correct?

But lest someone become enraged for the wrong reason, when I say I think some new, politically correct terms are silly I don't mean the ones that are racist, biased or sexist. Terms like "chick, doll and fox," used to describe women (to use as an example) are still inappropriate. I also believe all people, sexes, races and nationalities are equal and should be treated the same. No one is better or worse than anyone else.

But I still say, words don't make a difference in the way people think — people do.

I live in fear of the day I become not a soldier, but "militarily enhanced."

Let's patronize, keep the Main NCO Club

When my family and I were recently assigned to Fort Benning, I was expecting to see the best of everything the Army has to offer. It is the most visible post in all the Army.

The post population, itself, warrants the need for many activities. Plus, the awarding of the Army Community of Excellence to Fort Benning led me to believe there's no better post or activities available anywhere.

Coming from a close-knit military community at my last assignment, I expected to see no less than the best among Fort Benning's noncommissioned officers and soldiers.

During my inprocessing, I did what I believe is part of being among the ranks of the NCO (with 16 years of service). I signed up for the NCO Club.

However, when my family and I stopped by for a relaxing dinner at the NCO Club, we were informed it no longer serves dinner because of lack of participation. We asked if there was anywhere on post we could go for dinner other than Burger King. We were told there was not.

Sure, there are plenty of civilian restaurants out in town, but the NCO Club has always offered an atmosphere where soldiers a nd families could relax among other NCO families. The Main Club at Fort Benning is attractive and has great potential.

The military club system is one of the very few privileges left to us. As we know and have seen too much of it already, if a privilege is abused or not used, it will be taken away, especially in light of all the budget cuts and base closures.

There is a solution for keeping the NCO Club and it is quite simple. It will take the cooperation of the club system and the post's senior enlisted officials to get it off the ground and return the club to a money-making system.

The club's role would be to promote more activities for soldiers and family members:

1. Hold membership night: If you have soldiers paying for membership, why should non-members have access — where's the incentive to join? (Where are our dues going to presently?)

2. Bingo nights

3. Children's night - clowns, prizes and food geared to children.

4. Theme nights for music to fit everyone's preference.

The senior enlisted officials' role should be to ensure their NCOs, from sergeant to sergeant major, and including themselves, are given every opportunity to join and participate.

Have membership drives; applications can be available at newcomers orientations.

Upon becoming an NCO, one of our responsibilities is to support activities that promote the NCO esprit de corps.

If something is not done soon, the NCO club system at Fort Benning will disappear, along with so many other privileges we take for granted.

DCA response:

The Fort Benning NCO Club completely renovated the club kitchen and dining room and provided breakfast, lunch and dinner service in November 1992. This service was added based on a desire by the NCO Club Council to provide a quality dining operation for members.

The service was provided at a loss for over a year with a variety of promotional efforts, such as family nights, to develop business. The club never developed sufficient customer demand for breakfast or full-time dinner service.

However, the NCO Club continues to provide buffet and a la carte dinner service Tuesdays and Thursdays and a catfish buffet Fridays, all from 6 to 10 p.m. Dinner service is primarily used by bingo patrons and Advance Noncommissioned Officer Course students.

Chief of staff: Bicyclists have rules of the road

Bicyclists have rules of the road to follow, just like motorists. These rules include keeping to the right of the road, riding with traffic and riding single file. All traffic signals, signs and devices must be obeyed. Bicycles should not be ridden in areas usually reserved for pedestrians such as running tracks.

Georgia State law requires:

- Children under the age of 16 wear helmets when riding bicycles.
- Children between the ages of 1 and 4 be in a passenger seat for bike rides and infants under the age of 1 year are prohibited from riding on a bicycle.
- A passenger seat for everyone riding on a bicycle; riding on the handlebars is strictly prohibited.

The following is recommended and required for all cyclists on Fort Benning roads with a speed limit of 35 mph or greater:

- Cyclists must wear highly visible, reflective vests and protective helmets approved by either the Snell Memorial Foundation or the American National Standard Institute.
- Riders should ensure that their bicycles have good reflectors, front and rear. In addition, bicycles ridden at night will be equipped with headlights and tail lights visible from a distance of 300 feet.

Middle school

Students prepare for challenges of high school, life

Editor's note: This is the first of a series on middle school.

By Jerrie Macintire
Special to The Bayonet©

SERIES: Middle School part I: The Concept

When Shakespeare penned the immortal lines, "All the world's a stage," and discussed the seven ages of man, he may have left one out.

Somewhere between the whining school boy with satchel in hand and the love-struck sweetheart sighing like a furnace, 20th century educators might be tempted to add, "and then there are middle schoolers."

Of course, in Shakespeare's day there weren't middle schools, but current research indicates this age group has separate needs from elementary-age students and high-schoolers.

Faith Middle School employs a philosophy of education geared to helping these students age 10 to 14 make a smooth transition through adolescence and prepare for high school, according to Principal Dr. Beth Middlemiss.

The task of preparing students for high school is challenging as students undergo a range of physical, emotional and social changes, teachers say.

The middle-school child is so different from students of other ages that teachers have a special name for the time between childhood and adolescence: transescence.

"A child changes more at this time in his life than at any other time except birth to 2 years old," said Anne Trawick, a language arts teacher who also teaches courses on middle school education at Columbus College.

The middle-school concept evolved because students age 10 to 14 are so different from other children, Trawick said. The middle-school model, through team teaching, allows the focus throughout the day to be on the academic as well as the social and emotional needs of students.

Some ways Faith School educators put the middle-school philosophy into practice include using a teaching team approach, instructing through interdisciplinary units, maintaining a caring attitude and good communications with students, employing hands-on activities to sustain interest and enhancing interpersonal skills through cooperative group projects.

Teaching teams

From the layout of the school to the teaching philosophy, Faith "is a school within a school," said Middlemiss, noting that the sixth-, seventh- and eighth-grade students are separated in different wings of the building. Separate locations allow for the formation of teaching teams, which is considered a keystone of effective education in the middle grades.

Each member of the team instructs a different subject but shares the same students, said Becky Willoughby, language arts teacher. Traditional junior highs are separated by disciplines; for example, all the language arts teachers are located on the same wing.

Grouping by teaching teams instead of disciplines enables educators to plan lessons together and teach cross-curricular activities centered on a unit theme, she said.

"Our rooms are close together. There is good communication (among) us. We eat lunch together, plan together and work on strategies," Willoughby said.

An added benefit is students believe it is a more personal atmosphere, "almost a home situation, because students know their teachers care about them and work together to provide for their academic and emotional needs," said Joyce Windham, language arts teacher. "We become a family," she added.

Teaching teams at Faith usually consist of five teachers: two language arts teachers, since Faith employs a language-based curriculum, a science teacher, social studies teacher and a math teacher.

The students change classes as a group, and rotate through each subject daily. This is a marked contrast to junior high schools, where students are randomly assigned teachers who do not coordinate cross-curricular studies and who usually have no communication with one another about students or lesson plans.

The team-teaching approach allows educators planning time together as a group while students attend elective classes and physical education, Middlemiss said.

Hands on

Since middle-school students are motivated to learn through activities that help them visualize, analyze and become actively involved, Faith School uses hands-on activities as one teaching strategy, said Windham.

"We do a lot of hands-on activities," she said, noting that the students can more easily focus and remain interested in hands-on activities as opposed to the academic lecture environment of junior high school.

"Hands-on activities reinforce the senses of touch, vision and hearing. Studies show all of us at different age levels learn better by hands on activities," said Middlemiss.

Because fast physical growth and fatigue appear to affect attention span, hands-on activities help keep students interest, while providing opportunities for doing instead of just sitting.

"We try to have three different activities in one lesson since these children do get bored easily," said Trawick. Another benefit of these kinds of activities is that children who are interested don't become discipline problems, she added.

Interdisciplinary units

During common planning time, members of a team plan interrelated activities to show the connection between ideas in different subjects, another hallmark of the middle school philosophy.

For example, a recent science unit highlighting the relationship between parasites and hosts was carried over into the language arts unit on independent and subordinate clauses, where Trawick told students, "A dependent clause is like a parasite; it cannot exist without its host."

Teaching in units also enables military children who join the school later in the year to catch up to peers. "When they come in later in the year, we have something we can put in their hands right away to help them catch up," said Trawick.

Caring attitude

Although the academic program at Faith is "extremely strong" and features many special electives generated by the Faith faculty, a caring attitude by educators is of foremost importance, said Middlemiss.

"I put caring for the children at the top of my list. If you don't love them, you don't need to be here," Windham said.

Faith educators agree that caring is not optional; it's mandated, as they help students transition between elementary school and high school by playing the roles of teacher, counselor and friend. When a student needs a little more time and support to deal with physical, emotional, intellectual and social changes, the team leader can then approach one of the two school counselors to arrange meetings for the student, Middlemiss said.

Whenever htere is a need, the team also works as a whole during parent conferences, bringing the parent into the team as a member while discussing the varied needs of the individual students, she said.

Team building skills

Working cooperatively in groups helps students sharpen social skills and boost self-esteem at a time when they seem to need it most, educators say. Enhanced interpersonal skills also helps prepare students for high school and the adult world beyond.

"We use a lot of cooperative learning. It is more cooperative than competitive, although we use competition too," Willoughby said. For example, the Pride Program encourages students to keep their hallways and classrooms clean. Students cooperate as a group while competing with other teams to earn points for the neatest rooms, Windham said, noting that incentives like this remain a valuable teaching aid in middle school.

Through individual as well as group work, spanning activities from puppet shows to book reports, teachers use competition as a motivator but focus more on cooperation as they teach life skills that will be required for the work force of the 21st century, educators say.

Social development

As students move through the middle-school grades, the importance of friends becomes paramount. Group membership becomes a strong social need as peer pressure increases and presents challenges to students and educators alike.

The effects of peer pressure are evident at Faith School, where the students move from a point in sixth grade where they don't care too much what anyone else thinks to the other end of the spectrum in eighth grade where they care tremendously, Willoughby said.

Promoting a better self-image is one way teachers help students deal with peer pressure, some of which is caused by lagging physical development in some students.

"We work on individual self-esteem so students feel good about themselves. Whatever we can do to promote a better self-image, we do," Windham said. 'We still display their work on the wall, give thumbs up and pats on the back. We let them know if they look good that day."

By providing adolescents with this kind of social and emotional support while teaching academics in an interesting way tailored to the needs of middle-schoolers, teachers can create the proper climate for academic success, Middlemiss said.

E911: System to expand

for forming the directorate, said Col. Ronnie D. Alton, director of DPS and provost marshal.

At the heart of the E911 system is a computer that assists the dispatcher by listing information that is important to emergency calls.

This system is able to record incident history, track police units with the use of radio communication between dispatcher and individual unit and provide traffic pattern information. Traffic pattern information updates the dispatcher of road closings or road work being done, allowing responding units to avoid traffic problems, she said.

The dispatcher station has two 27-inch monitors, one displaying a diagram of Fort Benning showing streets and buildings. The other is filled with information such as the name of the person making the call, the location of the caller and the cross streets of that location.

"This system will increase the safety of emergency response personnel, as well as the post," Tucker said.

Along with enabling post residents to call just one number, the computer assisted dispatcher system allows the police units to check in with the dispatch officer without using the radio, she said.

Marc G. Turchin

Plans include installation of mobile data terminals and automated vehicle locators in all Military Police vehicles. MDTs, small computer terminals in the vehicles, will allow immediate relay of information and more secure communication.

The AVL capability will provide the dispatcher with each unit's location at all times.

With this system, Tucker said police units will be able to log-on to the CAD by using the MDT in the vehicle. The AVL will pick up the signal from the vehicle and record it on the screen at the MP station.

The MDT and AVL is equipped with an alarm system. This system allows different time periods for officers to respond to the call and log back on with the computer. If the officer doesn't log back on by a certain time, an alarm goes off at the CAD station back at the MP station.

Some examples of time periods are 15 minutes for a break, 30 minutes for a traffic accident and 15 minutes for a traffic stop, Tucker said.

No completion date has yet been given for the system to be fully operational.

Military highlights contributions of Native Americans in uniform

American Forces Information Service

November is Native American Heritage Month. From the French and Indian War of 1763 to Operation Desert Storm, Native Americans have found just cause to battle for their beliefs, customs and life styles.

They guided settlers over the Appalachian Mountains and fought for their homelands as American soldiers opened the West. Navajo Indians used their language as a code during World War II — a code the Japanese never deciphered.

According to 1990 census figures, there are nearly 2 million Native Americans in the United States today. They represent 307 tribes, from Maine's Passamaquoddy nation to the Apache tribe of the American Southwest.

Although comprising less than 1 percent of America's military, they provide cultural diversity not found in any other American culture. Their tribal traditions often remain a vital part of their lives, and they carry those traditions wherever they serve.

During this annual observance, installation commanders offer special programs, exhibits and other activities. These events teach basics in Native American culture and tradition to Department of Defense members. Meanwhile, Native Americans reflect on the hardships and accomplishments of their ancestors. Many continue to honor their tribal traditions — passing those customs to future generations.

Nearly 10,000 Native Americans wear this nation's military uniforms. Another 8,000 civilians with Native American ties serve the Department of Defense worldwide.

Health benefits open season begins Nov. 14

By Evelyn D. Harris
American Forces Information Service

During the 1995 open season, Nov. 14 through Dec. 12, federal employees will be able to choose from more than 350 health plans.

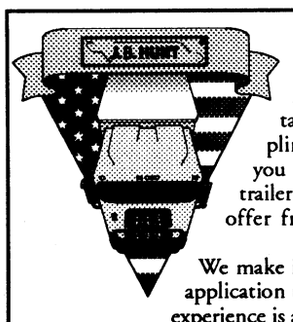
The 1995 open season for the Federal Employees Health Benefits Plan is Nov. 14 through Dec. 12.

Employees should find lower premiums and benefit brochures easier to use in comparing plans, said Office of Personnel Management officials.

Employees will be able to choose from more than 350 health plans. Premiums will go down or remain stable for 58 percent of nonpostal employees; 27 percent of employees will see modest premium increases of less than 5 percent. Less than 15 percent will see increases of 5 percent or more.

Improved benefits include complete coverage of childhood immunizations, not subject to deductibles or co-payments. Associated office visits may be subject to cost-sharing.

All plans, both prepaid and fee-for-service, will cover high-dose chemotherapy with autologous bone-marrow transplants for cancer treatment. This is in addition to other conditions for which each plan currently provides coverage.



Employees will have 45 new prepaid plans to choose from — more than twice the number of health maintenance organizations that entered the program in 1994.

Several prepaid plans will offer "opt-out" benefits. Employees may obtain treatment outside of the plan's network and still receive reimbursement for a percentage of the cost.

OPM officials said these benefits will remain stable through 1996. They also said plan brochures are now more user-friendly. Simpler terms are used where possible, benefits are grouped for easier reference and tables of contents are more comprehensive to improve readability.

For information or registration forms for the Federal Employees Health Benefits Plan, see your unit or activity administrative personnel or call the Directorate of Civilian Personnel's Personnel Service Center at 545-3374.

SELF-HELP PROJECT

Indianhead residents renovating youth center, gym

By Richard Brill
Special to The Bayonet©

Soldiers and family members of the Indianhead Terrace housing area are getting a newly renovated youth center and gym by doing the work themselves.

Led by Sgt. Dale Handley, Indianhead community life noncommissioned officer, area residents are working together to improve the quality of life of their children by using the self-help concept to repair the facility.

"About four weeks ago I came over to the gym to take a look, and I couldn't believe what I saw," Handley said. "The place looked terrible — windows were broken, the roof leaked, the rooms were filled with junk, the walls were covered with graffiti, the plumbing and heating systems didn't work. The place looked more like a gang hangout than a youth center."

Handley went door to door to the Indianhead community's 458 sets of quarters and conducted a survey to find out if residents would be willing to volunteer to help with the renovation. So far he has around 25 volunteers who plan to meet Saturday and Nov. 12 at 9 a.m.

"I would like this to be a real community effort, something that will bring us closer together," he said. "We are trying to organize supervised activities for children across the street during the renovation so that parents and teenagers can be free to help with the renovation."

Most of the work will involve repainting the entire facility, Handley said, as well as repairing and rebuilding some of the walls and converting the old shower room into an equipment issue room. An organizational room for community groups like the Boy and Girl Scouts is also being created.

Handley and soldiers from the 36th Engineer Group Repair and Utility Shop have already begun tearing down old walls, hauling out junk and repairing the plumbing.

"This is a long time overdue," said Sgt. Daniel Riera of the 36th Engineer Group. "We are glad to be a part of the project."

Riera is joined by Staff Sgt. Douglas Garden, Sgt. Alvin Hubbard, Sgt. Anthony Barnes and Sgt. Stephen Carr.

Handley said the biggest challenge has been coordinating the effort and getting people and organizations to help. Youth Services, the Directorate of Public Works, the 36th Engineer Support Group and the Indianhead Community have all been very helpful, he said.

"This is a great chance for members of the community to show they support the youth," he said. "By doing the work ourselves we not only save money, but we can create a sense of community pride that will enhance the quality of life.

SGM emphasizes respect, quality services at AG

By Richard Brill
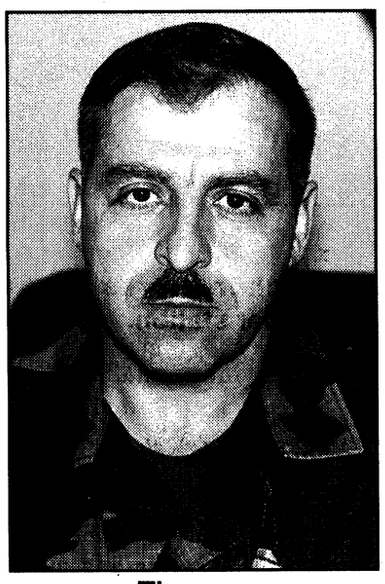
Special to The Bayonet©

Sgt. Maj. Allen Thrower, the new Adjutant General sergeant major, said every soldier, regardless of rank, deserves respect and the highest quality services.



Thrower took over in August from Sgt. Maj. Berkhardt Berger.

"Our AG directorate is the best in the Army because we care about people," Thrower said. "As long as I am here I will make sure that every soldier is treated as a person and as a valuable customer. The customer may not always be right, but the customer is always the customer and deserves to be treated with respect and sensitivity."

Thrower, who has served in the Army for more than 22 years, said his philosophy has not always been practiced.

"I remember when I first came in I was not always treated very well by my superiors," he said. "If soldiers are taken care of, they will have higher morale and the Army will be stronger."

Thrower's most recent position was sergeant major of the Directorate of Community Activities. Although he is glad to be back with AG, Thrower said his service with DCA was valuable.

Thrower

Thrower said one of his biggest concerns is making sure soldiers work in jobs that are related to their military occupational specialties.

"With the downsizing of the Army and the intense competition for promotions, it is really important that soldiers do not work outside of their MOS because they no longer remain competitive when they do," Thrower said. "There are a lot of extra positions on post that we need soldiers to fill, but we limit the amount of time soldiers remain in these positions so they don't fall behind their peers."

Keeping up with the latest advances in automation is another important concern, he added.

"More and more tasks are being computerized; and, as a result, we are able to do things with greater efficiency than ever before," he said. "It is very important that we stay on top of the latest technologies or we won't be able to accomplish our tasks as effectively with our reduced resources."

The in and outprocessing procedure is an excellent example, Thrower said.

"Because of automation, soldiers who are processing are doing it in less time than ever before and without any of the meaningless tasks they had to do before," he said. "Why clear a bank if you never had an account there?"

Thrower said Fort Benning's AG is a great example of Army teamwork and Total Quality Management principles in action.

"The soldiers and civilians who work at AG really work together as a close team," he said. "All levels are involved in the problem-solving process."

But his biggest concern, Thrower said, is continuing AG's tradition of the highest quality customer service.

"I really believe in taking care of people. Everyone's situation is unique and we must show concern and sensitivity to each soldier's individual problems. We owe this kind of service to the soldier because it is the soldier who keeps America free."

Soldiers to get extra pay for duty in Haiti

By Stephen Barrett
American Forces Information Service

Service members will receive additional pay while in Haiti supporting Operation Uphold Democracy. These allowances include imminent danger pay and a family separation allowance.

Carl Witschonke, Department of Defense's deputy director for compensation, said service members tabbed for Haitian duty after Sept. 16 will receive imminent danger pay, currently $150 per month. "It's to provide additional payment to personnel subject to hostile fire or the threat of physical harm," he said.

The family separation allowance, $75 a month, is paid to troops with family members, provided the separation is more than 30 days.

Although the Department of Defense has set no tour length for Haiti, tours are limited to six months, according to Tom Smoot, also with DoD compensation. However, services can extend members for bona fide reasons.

"If the situation in Haiti becomes drawn out, commanders and services could request members be assigned to Haiti on permanent duty status, said Smoot. "The request would ask DoD to approve a 12-month, unaccompanied tour." Witschonke added DoD does not contemplate this happening.

Besides imminent danger and family separation pay, enlisted members also receive a "certain places pay," ranging from $8 to $22.50 per month. This allowance is based on pay grade. Enlisted troops specialist and above and warrant officers also receive sea duty pay. Commissioned officers must have three years aboard ship to receive sea pay.

Witschonke said because members are placed on "field duty," upon deployment, troops temporarily lost their basic allowance for subsistence. However, he said, the situation in Haiti is stable enough that the task force commander can place members on "regular TDY," with subsistence payments resuming effective Sept. 23.

During Desert Storm, most service members received tax exemptions on their income while fighting in Southwest Asia. However, this is not true in Haiti. "A combat zone designation has not and is not being considered for this operation," said Witschonke, meaning no tax exemption.

What's in a name?

Operation goals, objectives helps commanders determine military name

American Forces Information Service

Uphold Democracy in Haiti is only one of 18 ongoing military operations involving U.S. service members around the world.

Regional commanders in chief generally name the operations and choose terms that mirror what the operation is about, Joint Staff officials said.

For example, when Iraq invaded Kuwait and it looked as if Saddam Hussein was threatening Saudi Arabia, the United States launched Operation Desert Shield. But U.S. Central Command used Operation Desert Storm for the attack to take back Kuwait.

U.S. Atlantic Command named the effort in Haiti Uphold Democracy, again mirroring the mission of the troops.

Here is a list of current military operations and their objectives:

Able Manner — U.S. Coast Guard Haitian migrant interdiction operations with U.S. Navy assistance;

Cruisers hammer Vulcans

By Terry K. Ray
Special to The Bayonet©

The Columbus Fort Benning Rugby Football Club Cruise-matics improved to 6-2 on the season with a 21-13 win over the Vulcans of Birmingham, Ala., Saturday at Stilwell Field.

"This was a whale of a match," head coach Jim Muldoon said. "They pulled out every trick in the book to try and win this one, but our boys played hard for the whole match and came up winners."

The Vulcans put up the first points of the match on a penalty kick by Jay Evans for an early 3-0 lead. Vulcan eight man James Smith increased the lead to 10-0 with the first try of the day midway through the first half. Evans added the conversion.

The Cruise-matics trimmed the lead to 10-5 on a try by outside center Joe Trawinski, then fly half Tim Butterfield cut the deficit to 10-8 on a penalty kick late in the half.

Evans boosted the lead for the Vulcans back up to five at 13-8 with his second penalty kick of the match with only seconds left in the half.

The Cruise-matics tied the match at 13-13 early in the second half when eight man Kevin Hyneman took the ball into the Vulcan try zone on a pushover from the Vulcan three-meter line.

Butterfield shut the door on the Vulcans with his second penalty kick of the afternoon boosting the Cruiser lead to 21-13 with less than 10 minutes to play in the match.

The Cruise-matic defense did the rest, denying the Vulcans two scoring opportunities inside the Cruise-matic three-meter line. On both occasions, Butterfield was able to kick the ball away from the Cruise-matic try zone effectively ending the scoring threats by the Vulcans.

CISM gold medalist takes aim at Olympics

By Marlene Tikal
U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit

Peering through the sights of her rifle toward a target 50 meters down range, 1st Lt. Kristin Frazer, a member of the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit's Women's International Rifle Team, faced one of few moments in her career when she believed she was on the verge of losing control.

High winds had blown Frazer's last shot farther from striking its objective — a bull's eye the size of an aspirin tablet — while cloudy skies and a vision-obscuring drizzle continued to threaten her performance at the annual Conseil International Du Sport Militaire Championship conducted recently in Lausanne, Switzerland.

"It was extremely frustrating," Frazer said. Frustrating, but not entirely overwhelming. Despite Mother Nature's unruliness, Frazer triumphed over the dozens of competitors who traveled from 14 different countries to participate in the women's 50-meter rifle prone match.

Her score of 590 out of 600 points gave Frazer a narrow lead over tied competitors from Greece, Poland and Russia — who all followed with scores of 588 of 600 points.

Frazer

The narrow-margin win is enough to bring Frazer one step closer to her ultimate goal — to compete in the 1996 Olympic Games in Atlanta.

Frazer is not the only one who sees her competing in the Olympics as a realistic goal.

"If anyone can do an excellent job of representing USAMU in Atlanta, it's Frazer," William Krilling, Frazer's coach of three years, said. "She's a winner — one of the best women shooters in the U.S."

This reputation is not one Frazer came by easily. Years of dedication to the sport of shooting have brought her to this high point in her career.

Frazer's interest in shooting was first sparked while she was growing up in Minneapolis, Minn. Her father liked to hunt, and often Frazer found herself stalking through the woods by his side in search of wild game.

"My father taught me how to shoot," she said. "I guess I was lucky because I discovered I had a talent for the sport at a young age."

It wasn't long before Frazer set aside her hunting rifle in favor of the .22-caliber rifle and .177 air rifle used in women's shooting competitions to join a junior-rifle Olympic program.

Later, her "childhood hobby" enabled her to enter the University of South Florida on a rifle and ROTC scholarship. While in college, she earned the opportunity to compete in the 1988 Olympic Games as well as several collegiate-level shooting events. Frazer also participated in the 1992 Olympics as an alternate for the USAMU Women's International Rifle Team shortly after she was commissioned into the Army.

"I've been doing this for a long time now," she said. So long, in fact, there are times Frazer has to drive herself to maintain a competitive edge. While not competing, Frazer spends five days a week on the range practicing firing techniques.

"Sometimes it's grueling," she said. "However, I like to win, and that's what keeps me going."

It was Frazer's competitive spirit, Krilling said he believes, that steeled her for the CISM competition and pulled her through to take the Gold Medal.

"Since I've been her coach, I've seen her grow from being a decent shooter to an even better shooter," he said.

Perhaps that growth is because Frazer realizes that losing control, if even for a moment, can be disastrous.

"It was close in Lausanne," she said, "But, it was that moment I needed to remain very much in control — to trust in myself enough to know that I could pull it off."

International association works for peace through sport

By Marlene Tikal
U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit

"Sport means peace. Sport is the opposite of war. Sport is a cure for war. Sport is international. Sport brings nations closer."

These words, written by Jean Giraudox, a famous French writer, have been adopted by the Conseil International Du Sport Militaire as its official motto.

Since 1948, the Conseil International Du Sport Militaire has been bringing the militaries of the world together — not in bloody clashes on the battle field, but in friendly competition on the playing fields of sport and game.

Formed by the French armed forces, CISM is a military sports association that has grown to a membership of 108 nations.

The aim of CISM is the encouragement of military sports, and development of good relations among the armed forces of membership nations.

Matches for 22 sports — including fencing, shooting, parachuting, basketball, boxing and wrestling — are scheduled annually during the CISM championship.

"The championship is basically like the Olympics — it holds that much importance to the competitors," said Jim Brown, Fort Benning sports director. "The main difference (is) that all competitors are military."

However, CISM is not strictly competition-oriented. The organization also supports research of training methods, sports science and medicine, as well as ways to improve military physical training, through the CISM Academy.

crime watch

Military Police Activity

This week's hot topic: The holiday season is supposed to be a time of good cheer and a spirit of good will. Unfortunately, many people take advantage of the "good will" of others by soliciting money from unsuspecting individuals.

Normally these incidents occur in or around shopping areas but may occur in other places. In most cases the individual is approached by someone claiming to be a fellow soldier or the family member of a soldier in dire need of financial assistance. They usually claim to have either lost or misplaced their identification card and ask you to cash a check or loan them money.

Very few of these stories are legitimate and in most cases the check you cashed will bounce. These people are scam artists who prey on unsuspecting people who believe their stories of despair.

The following entries were taken from the Fort Benning Military Police blotters from Oct. 19 to 25. Such entries may be incomplete and do not determine the guilt or innocence of any person.

• A specialist was charged with assault and communicating a threat against his wife. He and his wife were involved in a verbal argument that escalated when he struck her several times with his fist, causing her right eye and lower lip to swell. He also kicked, choked and threatened to kill her during the argument. The subject fled the scene before the Military Police arrived. The soldier was apprehended later, processed and released to his unit.

• A private was charged with shoplifting at the Main Post Exchange when he was observed removing one package of batteries from the display shelf. He removed one battery from the package and placed it in his beeper. The soldier then placed his old battery in the package and exited the store without rendering payment. He was detained and transported to the Military Police station where he was processed, cited for the offense, issued identification card confiscation orders, suspension of Post Exchange privileges and released to his unit.

• A sergeant was charged with failure to yield at an intersection and driving under the influence of alcohol. The sergeant failed to yield at the intersection of Cusseta and 8th Division Road, striking a Military Police vehicle. The sergeant had a strong odor of an unknown alcoholic beverage on his breath and was given a field sobriety test that he failed. He was transported to the Military Police station where he was given a breathalyzer test with a result of .15. He was cited for the offenses, processed and released to his unit.

• A private was charged by the Columbus Police Department for loitering and prowling. He was seen coming out of the woods adjacent to an apartment complex at 1:45 a.m. carrying a black bag. He drove off in his car, at which time he was detained for investigation. The soldier refused to identify himself and attempted to walk away from the police officers. He was apprehended and transported to the Muscogee County jail pending Recorder's Court.

Other activities include six cases of driving under the influence of alcohol, 27 traffic accidents, 37 cases of larcenies, and two cases of shoplifting reported at the Post Exchange facilities.

• Remember to help "Make Our Post the Best — Give Crime Arrest."

Report any activity that seems wrong or out of place to the Military Police at 545-5223 or 545-5224 or the "Crime In Progress" line at 545-5222.

ask the judge

Staff Judge Advocate's Office

Policy changes made concurrent with fiscal 1994 Department of Defense Authorization Act have extended Department of Defense dependency determinations to include dependent wards of active duty members or authorized retired members.

As a result, military treatment facility benefits have been extended to eligible dependent wards.

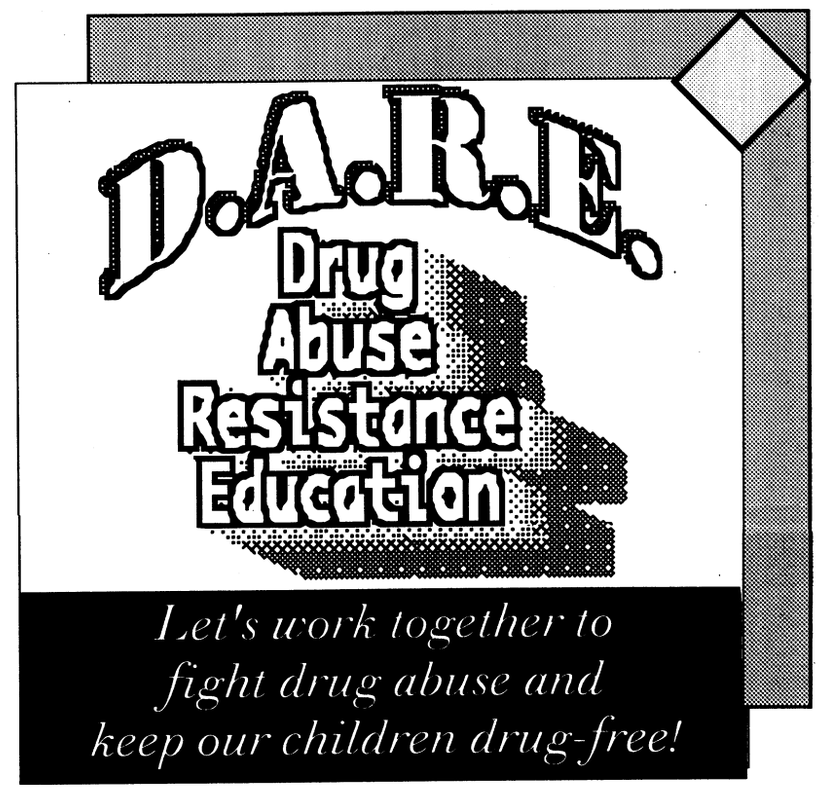
A dependent ward for the purposes of military treatment facility benefits (and in certain cases, limited Civilian Health and Medical Program for Uniformed Services eligibility) is defined as an unmarried person, placed in the legal custody of an active duty member or authorized retired member (hereinafter "member") as a result of a court order.

Additionally, the legal custody must be for a period of at least 12 months, the dependent either must not have attained the age of 21, not attained the age of 23 if enrolled in a full-time course of study at an institution of higher learning, or must be incapable of self-support because of mental or physical incapacity that occurred while the person was considered a dependent of the member.

Finally, to qualify as a dependent ward, an individual must be dependent on the member for more than one-half of the person's support, must reside with the member (with limited exceptions), and must not be a dependent of a member or former member under any other category.

One form of legal custody resulting from a court order in the state of Georgia is temporary guardianship.

The Legal Assistance Office is available for assisting individuals in applying for temporary guardianship in the Probate Courts of either Muscogee or Chattahoochee County.



The Probate Court Judge will determine whether it is appropriate to appoint the individual in question as guardian of the dependent.

Temporary guardianship in the state of Georgia is granted for an indefinite period of time.

Therefore, to qualify for dependency status under the new policy directive, the appointed guardian or guardians must complete an affidavit attesting to the fact that the individual has either already been in their care for a period of at least 12 months, or attesting to the fact that the dependent will be in their legal custody for a period of at least 12 months.

After the Probate Court Judge has appointed an individual as guardian, the Legal Assistance Office can assist in preparing an affidavit acknowledging how long the ward has been or will be in their custody.

To make an appointment with a Legal Assistance attorney, call 545-3281 or 545-3282.

DRMO auctions surplus property

By Jennifer Chapman
Special to The Bayonet©

Some of the best bargains in the area may be found at Fort Benning's Defense Reutilization and Marketing Office, Building 326.

Stacked three deep in a cavernous warehouse on the edge of Main Post are computers, huge boxes of uniforms, ammo cans and household items including refrigerators, stoves and furniture.

Also found are office furnishings including desks, file cabinets, calculators, bookshelves and typewriters.

The items are all surplus or unserviceable, according to Otis Denham, property disposal officer.

"We have some good property that goes through here at good prices," Denham said.

DRMO is a self-supporting office, Denham said, costing the U.S. government and taxpayers nothing.

All proceeds from the auctions are turned over to the U.S. Treasury to be appropriately redistributed, he said.

A trained and certified auctioneer conducts an auction every 30 days said Denham. The next DRMO auction is scheduled for Nov. 17.

People interested in looking over the items the DRMO is offering are welcome to stop by the DRMO up to three days before the sale, according to Patsy Cline, administration officer.

The DRMO maintains a catalog mailing list for prospective buyers who want a preview of items being offered in upcoming auctions. People on the mailing list who fail to attend two consecutive auctions will be dropped from the list.

To be placed on this mailing list, call 545-1205 or 545-1206.

Call 800-GOVT BUY for surplus property sales

By Carol J. Simpson
Defense Reutilization and Marketing Service

BATTLE CREEK, Mich. — Interested in buying Department of Defense surplus property but haven't been able to find out how without paying for the information? Now it's easy.

Simply call (800) GOVT BUY or (800) 468-8289.

The DoD Surplus Property Sales Program is managed by the Defense Reutilization and Marketing Service , a field activity of the Defense Logistics Agency, and is authorized to sell DoD government surplus property.

You might think of DoD surplus property as ships and tanks, but there's much more. In fact, surplus property includes just about everything you can think of...office equipment, like files and calculators; sporting equipment, such as golf clubs and baseballs; furniture, everything to furnish your home; tools, many kinds of power and hand tools; hardware, lots of nuts, bolts and screws; clothing, like boots, coats and jackets; and much, much more. That's the kind of surplus we're talking about.

When the military services no longer need an item it is turned over to a Defense Reutilization and Marketing Office. DRMS has nearly 200 DRMOs located on or near military installations around the world.

When property is received at the DRMO, it is first looked at for reutilization or reuse within DoD or the federal government. If the property cannot be reused, it becomes surplus to the needs of the government and may be donated to state and local agencies before sale to the public.

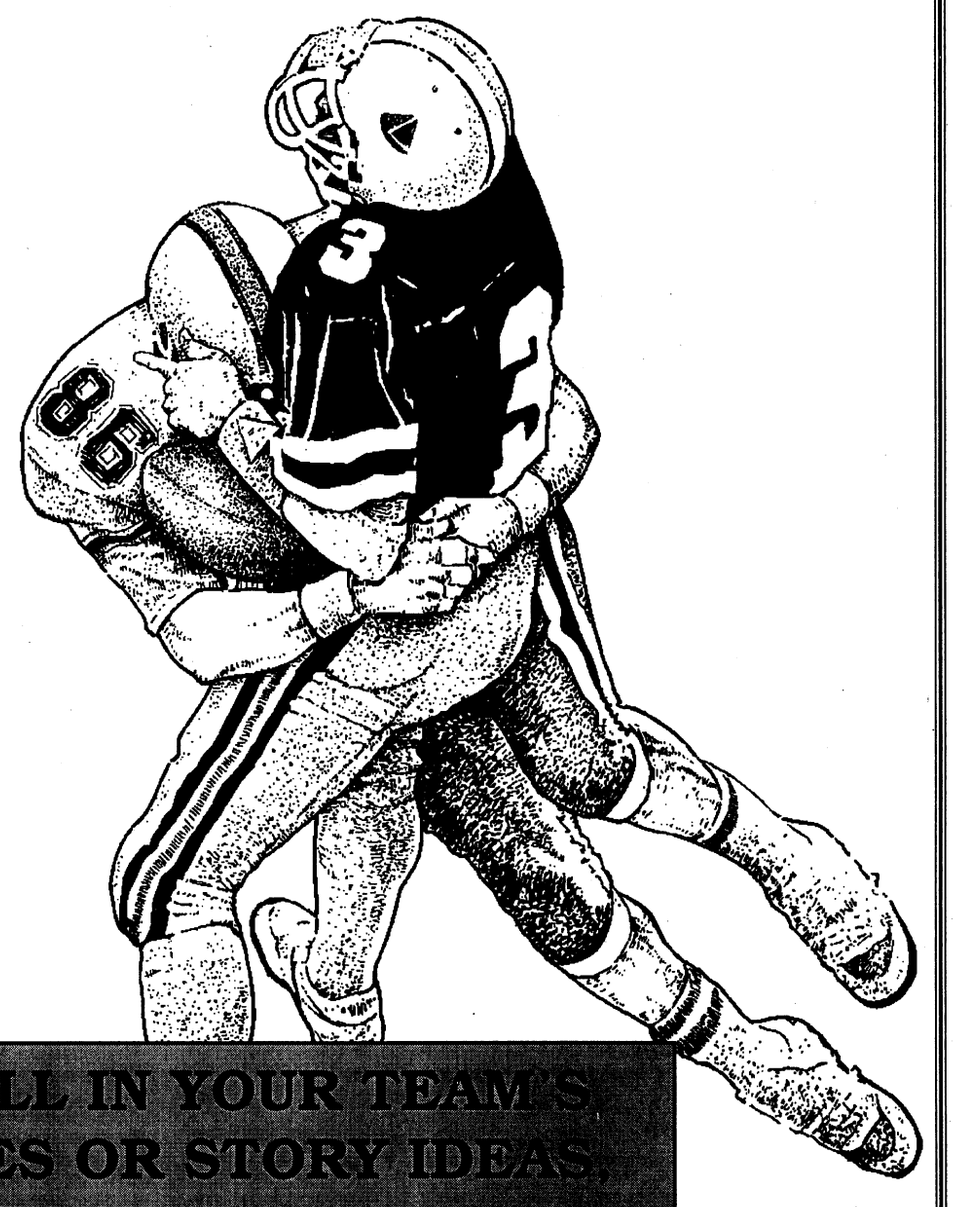
Today with the DoD drawdowns, inventory reductions and base closures, DRMS is receiving more property than ever before. Some of the property has never been used and a lot of that property is being offered for sale as surplus.

Surplus property is sold locally and nationally in several ways. At the local level, DRMOs hold auctions, spot bid and cash and carry sales.

National sales are conducted by the DRMS National Sales Office located in Memphis, Tenn., and include national auctions, sealed bids and in certain circumstances negotiated sales. National sales include such items as aircraft, ships, industrial plant equipment, hazardous property, and property having wide commercial value.

If you are interested in National Sales, call (800) 222-DRMS or (800) 222-3767 to get a copy of the "How to Buy" pamphlet and to be placed on the bidders list.

If you are interested in local sales but don't know where your local DRMO is, you can call (800) GOVT BUY or (800) 468-8289). You can get an overview of the DRMS mission and get the number of the DRMO nearest you.



You will need to give the area code of the location you are interested in.

Property is sold as is, so the careful buyer takes advantage of the preinspection period. These are usually 2 to 3 days before the auction or spot bid.

You must be 18 years of age to be a buyer and cannot be an employee of DRMS or an immediate member of the household of DRMS employee.

The local DRMO can provide you with additional information on surplus property sales such as dates, times and method of payment.

TRAINING AND DOCTRINE COMMAND

Retiring commander: Tough choices ahead

Training and Doctrine Command

FORT MONROE, Va. — "You live your life in one, two and three-year increments at different places, so there's no sense of being in one place for 30 to 35 years, so you say, 'Where has all the time gone,' " said Gen. Frederick M. Franks Jr., commander of Training and Doctrine Command, who retires in November with more than 35 years of Army service.

"It has not been an easy life, but it's been the cause we've been privileged to serve, and especially the great people we've been privileged to serve with," he said.

Gen. William W. Hartzog assumed command of TRADOC recently in ceremonies at Fort Monroe. He was the deputy commander in chief and chief of staff of the U.S. Atlantic Command, Norfolk, Va.

Franks took command of TRADOC in August 1991 after leading a corps of U.S. and British forces in Operation Desert Storm, the last large conflict involving American forces. Since then, he has been key to setting the Army on a course to adapt to a post-Cold War world.

"I think maybe we ought to stop using the term (post-Cold War)," he said. "We've seen enough in the five years since the end of the Cold War to recognize certain patterns.

"Here in TRADOC we've helped form the ideas through doctrine, created an experimental basis for requirements."

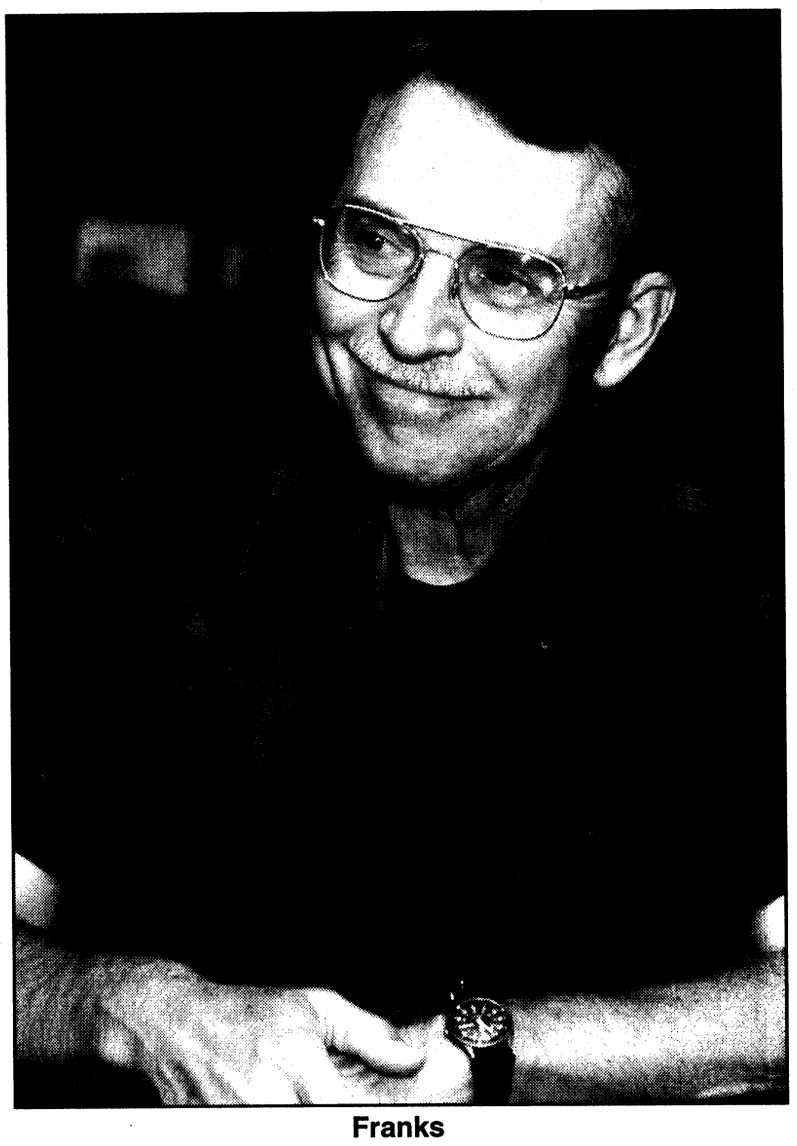
Franks leaves at a time when the Army is growing smaller and budgets continue to be reduced. When he took command of TRADOC in August 1991, TRADOC's fiscal 91 budget was $2.75 billion. The FY 95 budget is $2.33 billion, a 15 percent drop.

"There are tough choices to make," Franks said. "There's tension between training and readiness, between what we call quality of life for our soldiers, civilians and family members.

"There are reasons for reductions. If you don t need real estate or real property and you can sustain the standards of excellence, then you ought to do it. When we cut for the sake of cutting and it gets into readiness, then that bothers me."

The general has directed that a Zero Base Study be conducted to identify functions at TRADOC installations that can be eliminated so the command can continue to perform core missions. It will prevent cutting for the sake of cutting.

What will be protected after the Zero Base Study are training and leader development missions and the battlefield laboratory program.



"Training and leader development in our schools and combat training centers are a vital part of the readiness equation. They are just as important as operational tempo, steaming hours or flying hours," he said.

Battle labs develop and experiment with equipment, organizations and tactics for command and control, infantry, armor, depth and simultaneous attack and survivability and lethality of early entry forces of a force-projection Army.

Franks directed re-engineering of TRADOC to make it more responsive to the needs of the Army. Trainers and combat and equipment developers are better able to coordinate across the domains of training, doctrine, leader development, organizational design and materiel requirements, all with an emphasis on soldiers.

Defining the Cold War as an engagement, Franks says that today's Army is in better shape five years later than at comparable times following past conflicts.

"If you take a look at where the Army's been four or five years after the end of other conflicts, you'd be very proud of what the Army's doing today, our versatility, the standard of excellence of our ability to execute operations, our experimenting with future growth. That's unlike the five-year periods after World War I, World War II, Korea and Vietnam," he said.

Franks

When Franks entered the Army, he had no lofty goals of some day becoming such a key figure in the Army's development.

"I just felt I wanted to serve our nation in the Army, go to West Point and then see how it would unfold," he said. "The more I saw of it, the more I saw of the great people ... the more I liked it."

Frank's career very nearly ended May 5, 1970, near Snoul, Cambodia. The 11th Armored Cavalry Regiment was clearing a North Vietnamese base camp when he was wounded in the legs by shrapnel from an enemy grenade. He may have been killed if the regiment's commander, Col. Donn Starry, had not knocked him away from the full blast of the grenade.

Starry rose in rank to command TRADOC from July 1977 to July 1981, and Franks served as his executive officer.

Franks has a copy of a photograph taken by a news photographer of him being carried from the field, surrounded by cavalry soldiers. He also keeps a small, green, tattered memo book in his office. He was carrying it the day he was wounded. "It probably absorbed some shrapnel," he said.

His left leg had to be amputated below the knee after the wound became infected. He didn't want the operation because he feared that he wouldn't be able to stay on active duty as an amputee, but was told, "You sure can't stay on active duty with the condition your leg's in now."

Franks began a period of rehabilitation, and gained considerable dexterity with the prosthesis. Starry and other officers supported his request to remain in the Army.

He said learning to adjust without his leg "was probably the toughest period for me personally and for our family."

After his request was approved, he served a short stint as a staff officer at Department of the Army. Then he was given command of a squadron in the 3rd Armored Cavalry Regiment at Fort Bliss, Texas. He was concerned about how field officers and soldiers would regard a commander who was an amputee.

"The soldiers, the noncommissioned officers accepted me as I was, who I was and what I could do. They made me feel whole again as a soldier," Franks said.

Franks went on to command his Vietnam unit, the 11th Armored Cavalry Regiment, from 1982-84 after it had moved to Germany.

To Franks, his career has been made worthwhile by people.

"The people stand out, the great men and women in the Army, soldiers of courage I've seen in two wars and in peacetime and training," he said.

"I was in a great outfit in Vietnam. They were selfless, brave soldiers with a great sense of family and teamwork, as armored cavalry units tend to be.

"American soldiers there did what their country asked them to do. The big difference between Vietnam and Desert Storm came when the soldiers came home. For some reason or other, we couldn't separate the war from the warriors then."

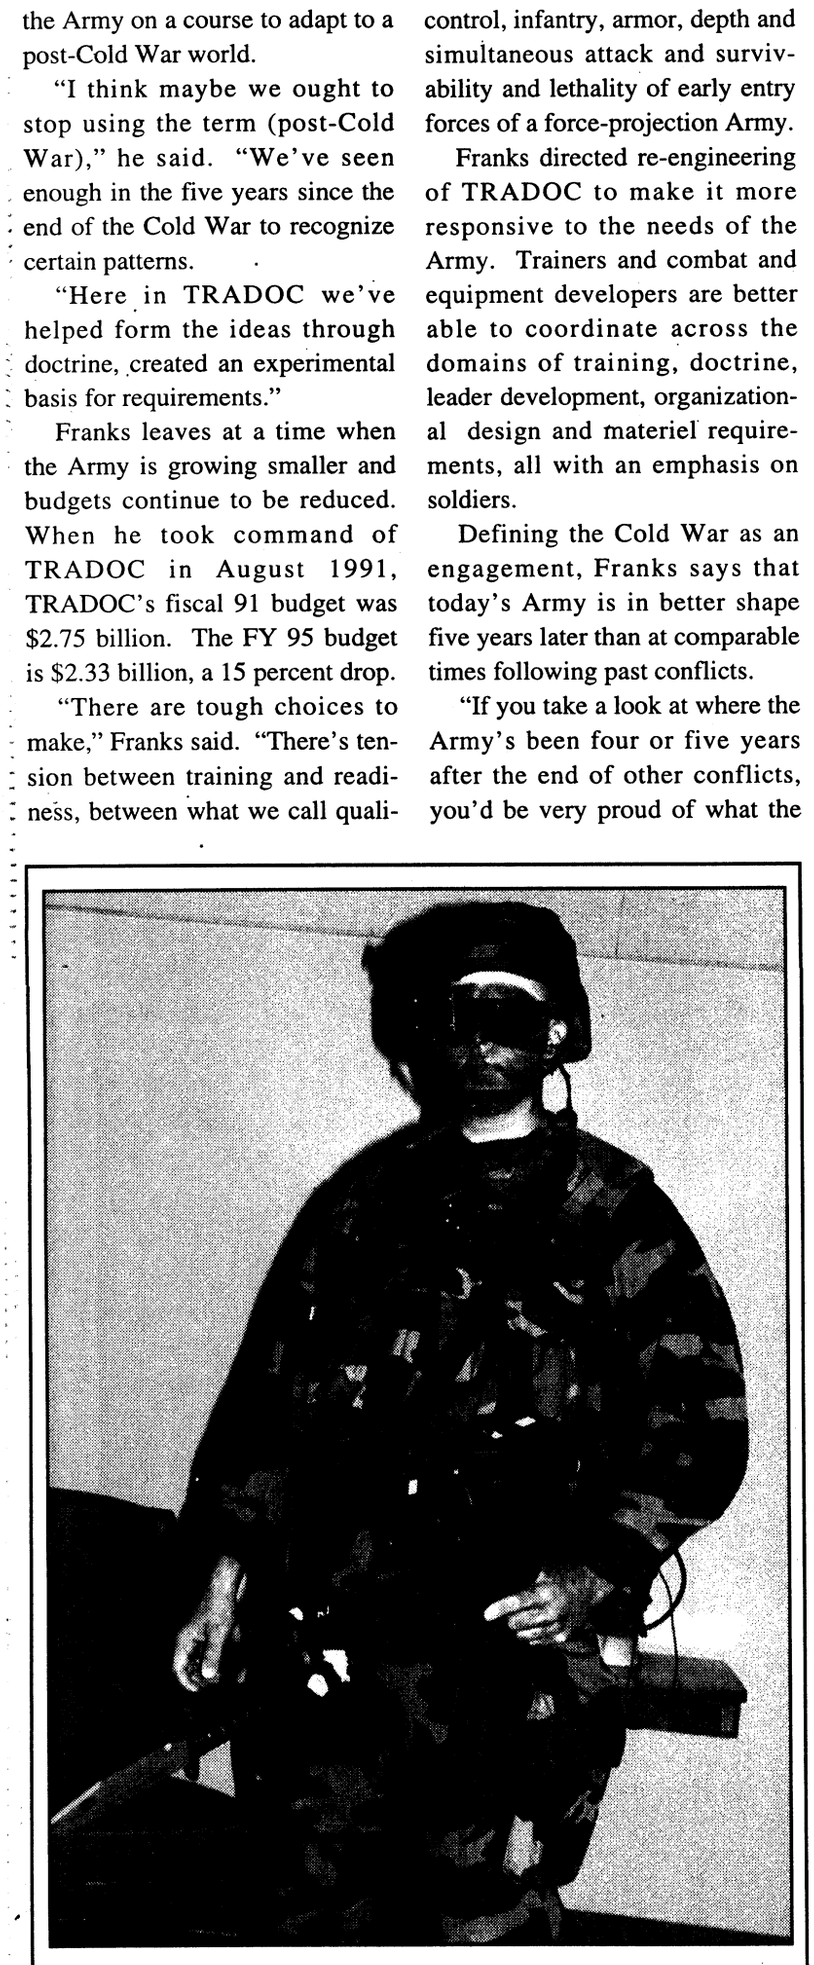
When the general is asked about the hard times for him, his voice chokes when he says it was when soldiers under his command were killed.

"I guess the toughest times were being confronted with the loss of soldiers. On the battlefield, the emptiness, the finality of it all.

"Land warfare is tough, it's hard, it s uncompromising and it's final. That's why we prepare a whole lifetime to get ready for it and insist on training so hard to such high standards in peacetime," Franks said.

As Franks ends his career, he is struck by the irony that TRADOC, preparing the Army for the 21st century, is headquartered on a post founded in the early 1800s as "Fortress Monroe."

To connect the past and future, he dedicated the TRADOC headquarters building in memory of Gen. William E. DePuy, founder of TRADOC. A distinguished visitors quarters was named in honor of Pfc. Ardon B. Cooper, killed in Iraq while shielding a wounded soldier with his body.



The sign at Fort Monroe's main gate now announces that the post is home of TRADOC. Exhibits in the Casemate Museum depict DePuy's accomplishments and work done by today's TRADOC.

"TRADOC is an exciting place," Franks said. "A lot of ideas. A lot of great talented people.

"It has been a privilege to serve with people, from drill sergeants to civilian members of our work force, who have done innovative and creative work under great stress, challenges and few resources."

Franks has no firm plans after retiring except perhaps to write and speak about his experiences.

"You can take the soldier out of the uniform, but I'll always be a soldier at heart," he said.

Soldier shot in Panama receives Purple Heart

By Judith Ginder
School of the Americas

A noncommissioned officer at the School of the Americas was honored in a recent ceremony there.

Staff Sgt. David Mercado, ammunition NCO, received a Purple Heart from Brig. Gen. John J. Maher, Fort Benning's deputy commanding general.

"This is a special award," Maher said. "It isn't something many people would want to volunteer for, either."

Mercado was wounded while serving in Operation Just Cause in Panama.

In the early morning hours of Dec. 20, 1989, Mercado was in the lead vehicle of a convoy passing Albrook Air Force Base when elements of the Panamanian Defense Force opened fire.

According to Mercado, a fight ensued, with enemy troops firing from a nearby bus and from a hillside to the right of the convoy and from the ground in front of them.

The confrontation left several enemy soldiers dead. Three members of Mercado's platoon, including himself, were wounded.

Despite his injury, Mercado continued with the convoy when it moved through the ambush and on to its objective.

He was wounded in the neck by a bullet that first traveled through the stock of his weapon.

Mercado had his rifle in firing position when the bullet passed through the lower receiver and hit his neck. Mercado still has the stock of that weapon, he said.

Mercado said soldiers should always prepare for the worst, and for the unexpected.

Good marksmanship training, he said, plays a more important role in most combat situations than most people realize.

"Squad leaders should place special emphasis on marksmanship, since they are going to have to rely on each other for success and survival in the modern battlefield," he said.

Mercado said, "Urban fighting and low-intensity conflict fighting is going to be our future."

SOA soldiers earn German gold

By Judith Ginder
School of the Americas

Have you ever participated in a 30-kilometer road march with a 35-pound rucksack, completed a 200-meter swimming event, done various track and field events including a 5k run and gone to a firing range —all in three days' time?

You have if you've competed for the German Armed Forces Efficiency Badge.

Staff Sgt. Angel Rivera, School of the Americas' battalion training noncommissioned officer, and Spc. Wayman Ansley, protocol administrative specialist, represented SOA in the competition.

Rivera and Ansley prepared for the competition for several months. Both said they concentrated most on the swimming event and the road march.

Rivera said his training consisted of walking 12 to 14 miles every Tuesday and Thursday and swimming every Monday, Wednesday and Friday, in addition to his normal physical training workouts during the week.

Ansley also trained by doing a lot of swimming and by walking 15 miles at a time with a 35-pound rucksack, he said.

Ansley said he decided to compete for the experience. He said although he doesn't think of himself as a strong swimmer, that would be an obstacle for him to overcome in achieving his goal of earning the badge.

During the first day of competition, the two SOA representatives completed the 200-meter swimming event.

Both then shot five out of five on the 9mm firing range, putting them in reach of the highest award of the badge, the gold.

Day two included the track and field events: 100-meter run, high jump, shot put and 5k run.

Heading into the 30-kilometer road march on day three, Rivera and Ansley were still in the running to take the gold award.

Five hours later, the march and the competition were both over.

Ansley said the road march was "definitely a killer" and probably the biggest challenge of the competition.

Rivera said he would recommend an event of this type to anyone because it feels good to work toward a goal and accomplish it.

Both Rivera and Ansley emerged from the competition with the gold award.

GOLDEN STALLION ORGANIZATION

Stowers inducts students for citizenship

A group of Stowers School students were inducted into the Golden Stallion Organization to reward citizenship in a ceremony Oct. 26 featuring school officials as well as four live horses representing the school's mascot, the Stowers Stallions.

Students nominated for the Golden Stallion Organization have demonstrated the characteristics of good citizens, said Glenn Hughes, principal.

Under sunny skies on a 60-degree morning, children craned their necks for a better view of the visiting horses from the Fort Benning Hunt Club before the ceremony, which featured talks by school officials as well as awards presentations and refreshments.

Superintendent of Schools Dell Karr told the 36 students inducted, "You have heart," as parents hovered in the background with cameras, recording the event.

Citizenship was the topic of guest speaker, Col. Gregory Camp, School Board president and Fort Benning chief of staff.

"Good citizenship is an important freedom guaranteed and protected by our government," Camp said.

Good citizens are "givers," not "takers," he said. "We know you are the best of givers."

Soldiers are givers as well because they are good citizens in the business of protecting freedom, Camp told the newly inducted Golden Stallions.

"Anyone in the school can nominate anyone else to be a Golden Stallion," Hughes said, noting that at least one teacher and one student from every classroom were nominated.

Myrna Viteri, on hand to videotape her daughter Yackeline receiving the four-inch round golden button and certificate of citizenship, said she was proud of her child as the girl stood in the winners' circle with the school's adopted Golden Stallion from the Hunt Club.

"We were both excited about the ceremony. She has a lot of school spirit anyway," said Viteri.

Fifth-grader Falguni Vyas said she was also enthusiastic about becoming a Golden Stallion.

"I was very excited and happy. I told my parents, and they said they were happy for me," she said.

Third-grader Chris Cagle said he learned he'd been nominated for the organization during morning announcements over the loudspeaker. He said he thought a teacher nominated him "because I am nice to people and I help people. I am a good citizen."

The organization, under the direction of guidance counselor Steve Pate, recognizes students who demonstrate citizenship by acting as role models for others, maintaining good peer relations and making good grades.

Members of the Golden Stallion Organization will be selected to serve as dignitaries for various school functions and hosts for school social events, Hughes said.

"Our goal is that all 600 students in our school will be Golden Stallions," Hughes said, noting that the first group of inductees would serve as motivators for future nominees.

McGraw child center hosts day for parents

McGraw Child Development Center

McGraw Child Development Center recently conducted Parent Field Day.

The event, which was for children, parents and staff members, featured games and activities, including the astro jump, races, painting, cooking, refreshments and Rainbow the Clown.

"Parent involvement is very important at child development centers at Fort Benning," said Betty Harris, education and program specialist for Child Development Services.

Parent involvement includes activities designed to enhance the center experience for program assistants, staff, parents and children, Harris said.

Participation involves parents and staff from the part-day preschool, the pretoddlers, toddlers, full-day preschool and school-age children.

Center staff members share information with parents about current activities and future plans, Harris said. "This reinforces the partnership between the staff and parents," she said.

Harris said the centers help the parents feel more involved in the programs and provide ways for parents to be involved in sharing information, and they suggest ways to extend learning at home.

"When good relationships among parents, program assistants and staff exist, fear and anxiety that children experience when they leave home is diminished," she said.

Other upcoming parent involvement activities will consist of a Thanksgiving luncheon Nov. 18 and a parent education workshop in January about learning through play, she said.

Bald eagle comes home to nest

By Ruth J. Spaller
Bayonet staff writer

A bald eagle gingerly stretched its wings Saturday, soaring out over the fall foliage of Fort Benning's backwoods after a five-week rehabilitation at Auburn University.

The eagle was released on the bank of the Chattahoochee River near Kunzig Range, close to where it was found Sept. 23 with a six-inch sliver of wood through its wing.

"Aspen," the 12-year-old bald eagle, was discovered on Sunshine Road by hunters Rick Hanson and Tommy Garnett, both Department of the Army civilians, who were scouting the area for a good hunting spot.

"We noticed it couldn't fly and knew we had to find something to pick it up with," said Hanson, who came out again Saturday to see the bird returned to the wild.

With the help of a raincoat and a sheet, the hunters managed to capture the injured eagle and bring it to the Military Police Activity, Hanson said.

The MPs then coordinated with the Natural Resources Management Branch of the Directorate of Public Works and Fort Benning's Veterinary Services to transport the eagle to the Southeastern Raptor Rehabilitation Center, located on the campus of Auburn University's College of Veterinary Medicine.

Lethargic and emaciated when it arrived at the center, the eagle was nursed back to health by Lauri Munoz and Jennifer Strelkauskas, the medical directors of the Raptor Rehabilitation Center.

It was important to help the eagle regain its stamina and get its muscles back into shape, said Joe Shelnutt, the center's rehabilitation director. "These birds need to be in athletic condition because that's the way they catch their prey," he said.

Shelnutt, working with wildlife biologists Peter Swiderek and Robert King at Fort Benning, chose the release site because it was close to where the eagle was found, King said.

Both said the area makes a perfect eagle habitat because it is a large, undisturbed wooded area adjacent to a body of water with good access to fish, a staple of the eagles' diet.

The site is also located within two to three miles of a known eagle's nest — one of only 24 successful nests in Georgia, King said.

Fort Benning has five resident eagles — two adults, one subadult and two young fledglings, and Aspen is believed to be one of the two adults nesting here, King said.

In 1981, no eagles' nests could be found in this state. Eagles, once threatened by the unregulated use of pesticides such as DDT, habitat loss and illegal shooting, are still on the endangered species list, King said.

Tot Town celebrates its 37th

Jennifer Chapman
Special to The Bayonet©

The muted background noise of busy children is broken by the echoing hiss of helium as the woman fills and knots another bright balloon. Sitting in another room is a huge white birthday cake festooned with pink roses.

It is Tot Town's birthday, and the cake and balloons are for the children and parents of Tot Town. Thirty-seven years ago, Oct. 28, 1957, Tot Town was established by the Daughters of the United States Army, becoming the first on-post hourly child care development center.

As she knotted another balloon, Lani Longarzo, chairwoman for DUSA, said, "We do this to provide a break for parents who need some time to get away, or go to school, or a doctor's appointment, or whatever." Leda Brown, coordinator and educational supervisor, said, "Hourly care here is very inexpensive. You can't get the kind of care we provide here at a better rate."

Longarzo said Tot Town promotes the belief that the future of any society is connected to the welfare of the children.

The facility is divided into different rooms to accommodate varying age and developmental levels. The halls are decorated with colorful, childish artwork created by the children who come here to spend some time. As she glanced around with a smile, Brown said, "The accessibility of Tot Town is amazing." For most occasions, drop-ins are welcome, although Brown said parents should make reservations up to two weeks in advance, to ensure their child has a slot.

In the preschool hourly care room, children bounce around with seemingly endless energy as providers watch over them. Some of the children are circling the cake, eyeballing the icing roses as they wait for their slices. There are children choosing partners for a three-legged sack race, and children sitting quietly in corners building block towers and houses. Cian Baker, a 5-year-old occasional visitor to hourly care, sums up what Tot Town means to him. "They have good toys here."

Fish fry

AUSA dinner full of information, food

By Marc G. Turchin
Bayonet staff writer

The Association of the United States Army conducted its annual fish fry Oct. 27 at the Uptown Columbus Building.

This event, which was sponsored by Bill Heard Chevrolet, helps bring the tri-community together, said Staff Sgt. Israel Nunez, administrator for AUSA.

Nearly 300 people attended the event, including Brig. Gen. John J. Maher III, deputy commanding general, Col. Gregory C. Camp, chief of staff, and Andrea C. Krahn, Miss Georgia 1994, who was third runner-up in the Miss America pageant. Krahn sang four songs while at the fish fry.

The main topic of the evening was the recent national AUSA convention. Delegates from the local chapter spoke to the crowd about the Oct. 17 to 19 gathering in Washington, D.C.

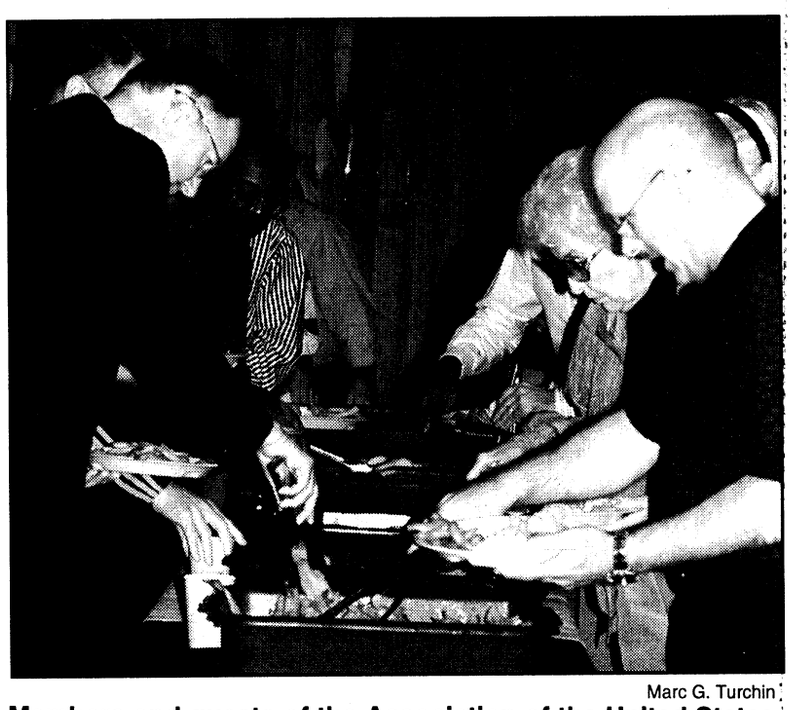
Sgt. 1st Class Alfredo Lezcano, a drill sergeant for 2nd Battalion, 58th Infantry Regiment, and Staff Sgt. Duane Marine, 104th Transportation Company, both delegates to the convention, told the AUSA members how good it was to see small and large businesses and retired soldiers caring so much about today's soldiers.

"It's unbelievable. They (the businesses) all came together as a team to make the United States Army the best in the world. Even through we are smaller, our technology is beyond expectation," Lezcano said.

Lezcano refused to use the microphone available. He said he was used to yelling at large crowds.

Maher and Frank Brown, president of the local AUSA chapter and Columbus College, gave out awards and coins for outstanding achievement to representatives of major units on post.

Members served themselves from the variety of food, which included snapper, catfish, hush puppies and catfish nuggets, while a 1972 video describing Ranger School played on televisions placed throughout the hall.



After members finished their meals, Maher talked about his experiences at the convention.

"I attended my first national convention. It was really an amazing process. When we kicked it off, we showed a film, a fairly long film, but we didn't want to show all of that tonight. By the way it wasn't the 1972 version of Ranger School that ... was shown while you were eating," Maher said.

A six-minute segment of the convention video was shown and applause followed the video.

Maher also spoke of the 38 deployments from Fort Benning since January 1992.

"The Army has not been out of work since the Cold War ended," he said.

Spencer protecting students

Spencer High School

Spencer High has used its proceeds from the Georgia Lottery to safeguard its students.

The school recently purchased surveillance cameras and metal detectors to ensure the students are in a safe environment.

According to school administrators, a glance at a monitor will allow them to check any activity in front of the school, the hallways, as well as the parking lots for suspicious behavior.

Meanwhile, the metal detectors alert the administration to anyone carrying foreign objects not permitted in school.

The cameras and metal detectors have proved to be successful in stopping students from leaving the campus without permission, said Kimberly Boynton, a school instructor.

She added it keeps students from carrying items that may prohibit a safe school environment, therefore enhancing the learning atmosphere at Spencer High School.

Hispanic Heritage Month

Several Hispanic students from Spencer High School shared their culture at the school during Hispanic Heritage Month by performing dances from Puerto Rico, Mexico, Brazil, Panama, Honduras and the Dominican Republic.

"I like to dance and perform in front of an audience just to show off my Hispanic culture," said Sylvia Barriga, "and I think it's great that Hispanics get at least one month to remember where they are from and the rich culture that they have because I know I learned a lot from this experience."

Yaritza Justo, a dancer of the famous lambada, said she had fun dancing and hoped the student body enjoyed it, too.

The other students in the Hispanic Heritage celebration spent several weeks after school preparing for this event. The students who participated said they already look forward to next year's performance being even better.

Fitness center opens doors to all

Morale, Welfare & Recreation

The Fort Benning Officers' Club Fitness Center is now open to all Fort Benning soldiers, family members, Department of the Army civilians, retirees and Reservists.

Membership is $12 a month or $120 a year; each additional family member is $5 a month.

"The Family Fitness Center is designed and operated as a modern, well-equipped civilian health club — not a gym — offering Nautilus, free weights, saunas, spas, Stairmasters, treadmills, stationary bikes and a health-food bar," said John Bush, chief, Community Operations Division. "All the equipment is modern and in excellent condition. One of the main features of the club is low-cost specialized classes taught by the top instructors in the area."

Specialized classes include step aerobics, aerobics, martial arts, children's tumbling and country line dancing. Personal trainers are also available for an additional fee. Class sizes are limited and they are offered to members on a priority basis with a discount.

"The center is ideal for members of the civilian work force who are participating in the Follow Me to Fitness program," Bush said. "The center is located at the club on Main Post so members can easily set up an after-work or lunch fitness program with co-workers. Fitness groups like the Fort Benning Civilian Training Program group may, for the first time, use the fitness center regardless of rank or grade."

Members may schedule their workouts before working hours, during lunch or after work.

ITB hosts Halloween party

By Shelby Carr
Infantry Training Brigade

A white-faced vampire dripping "blood" threw open the doors to his coffin, laughing hideously and trying to grab children as they ran by.

Soldiers of Headquarters and Service Company, Infantry Training Brigade, organized a haunted house and Halloween party for their children and spouses under the direction of Capt. Greta Garrett, commander of the company.

Everyone who wanted to get to the party had to first go through the haunted house.

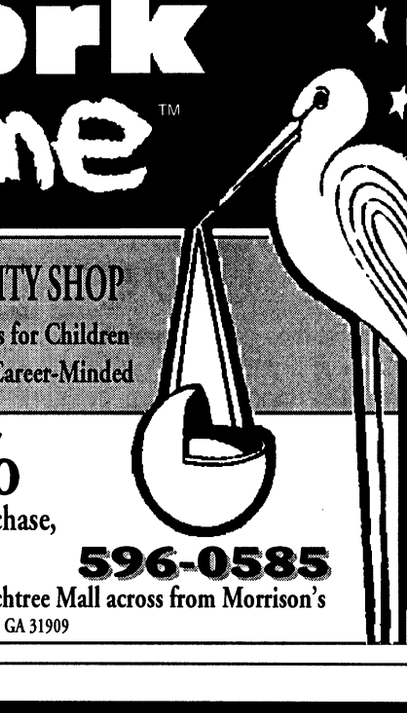
A dark room divided into corridors was filled with "smoke" from dry ice and was lighted only by a strobe light. This is where the vampire greeted all who entered the haunted house — and left many guests screaming.

As visitors felt their way along the corridor, they were charged from behind by a ghost who chased everyone to the next hazard — a witch with green skin and black tangled hair. She beckoned to the young children to join her for some witches' brew. Accompanying the brew was a tray which she uncovered to reveal a ghoulish treat — a screaming head.

The path through the haunted house twisted and turned through cobwebs and bats' nests until, at the end, a mummy chased everyone back into the waiting arms of a snakeman, armed with a knife dripping "blood," who roared and chased the children out of the haunted house.

"We had the kids screaming in fright," said Pvt. 2 Danielle Six, who played the witch.

The haunted house was designed by Sgt. Debri Johnson. The props and costumes were made by the soldiers of HSC with the money raised in a bake sale during Sept.



"(My son) didn't even make it through the haunted house, but he really enjoyed the Halloween party," said Sheila Brooks, the company clerk. "They did an excellent job on the haunted house."

The Halloween party entertainment included pinatas, biting apples hanging from strings and musical chairs. The adults' game of musical chairs became very competitive, with some of the contestants shoved several feet during the rush for a chair.

The bake sale, haunted house and Halloween party were organized by Garrett to allow the soldiers of HSC to get together outside of work, create esprit de corps and involve the families of the soldiers in HSC, said 1st. Sgt. Wilson Hunt, the company first sergeant.

"The Ronald McDonald House represents both the worst and the best time in my life."

Willie and D'Borra of Ft. Benning were expecting twins in the Fall of 1993 when an echo cardiogram performed at The Medical Center detected a heart problem in one of the babies. The Perry's were referred to Atlanta. On October 1, 1993, the twins were born prematurely. The twin daughter, missing a heart chamber, didn't survive. Their son, Willie L. Perry, remained in the hospital for an additional 2 months and 9 days.

Families facing extended medical treatment would normally have to rent a hotel or sleep in the hospital waiting room. However, during Willie's treatment, the Perry's were able to stay at the Ronald McDonald House near Egleston Children's Hospital. The Ronald McDonald House provides families with lodging, food and support for a small fee or free if they cannot afford it. Besides providing room and board, the Ronald House volunteer network helped give the Perry's the emotional support they needed at a time of great need. The Perry's have said that the Ronald McDonald House helped to ease both the financial and the emotional burden that goes along with catastrophic illness.

The local Ronald McDonald House, located at 1953 Hamilton Road, is scheduled to open in early December. You can help families seeking medical care in Columbus, the way the Perry's were helped in Atlanta, select 5004 on your Combined Federal Campaign donor card.

Community Day celebrates fellowship

By Timothy S. Mallard
USAIC Chaplains' Office

reflections

I suppose being a Baptist does not qualify me as an expert on the issue of the community of people within the world. After all, we Baptists uphold the ideal that each church is an autonomous, free-standing institution that can make its own decisions regarding its life. So how could I know anything about relating to others when I come from an almost separatist faith tradition?

I will offer two sets of stories I think reflect on the idea of a world community. First, from my experience as an Army child and then chaplain, I will offer you some of my memories of numerous moves.

I remember standing in line to travel "Space A" to Panama and hoping we would all make it onto the next flight, and my gratitude at having a willing military police officer help me carry our bags across the tarmac to the plane.

I remember a difficult trip across country when my baby sister was sick, and an old man in a retirement community allowing us to park our trailer on his lot for a night's rest.

I remember driving into Indiana and gazing in wonder at the rows of sweet corn that seemed to touch the bottoms of the clouds.

I remember pulling into New York City and thinking that there was so much concrete, glass and steel that I might not see a tree until we moved again.

I remember the frustrations and joys that came during three months of living with my family in a trailer until we could get housing on post.

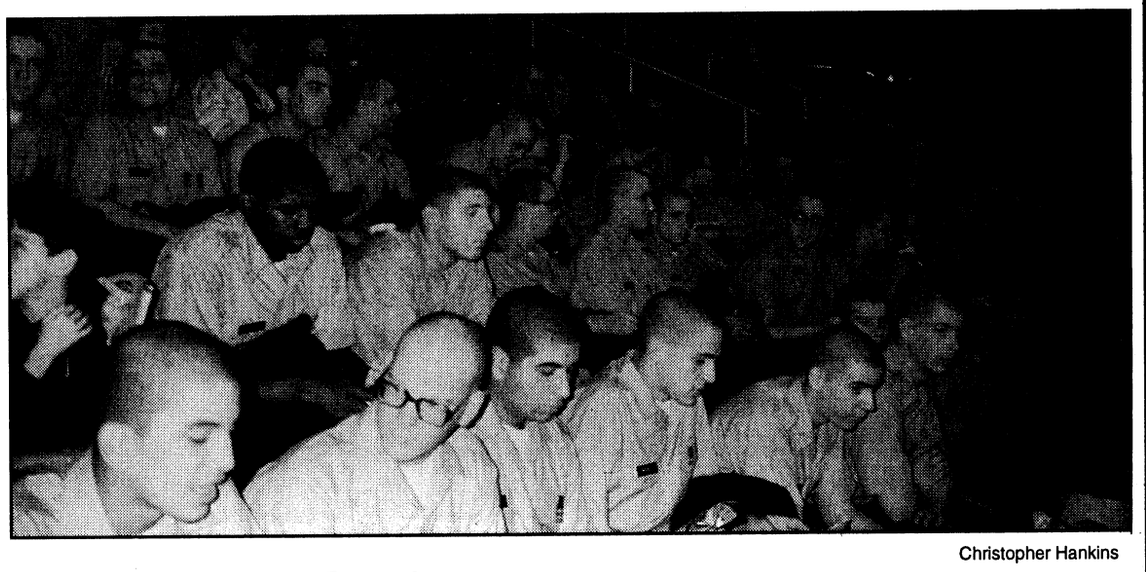
Finally, I remember during days of war and uncertainty kissing my wife in an airport terminal and boarding a plane for a desert place I'd never dreamed I'd go. That is a part of my story. Do you recognize any similar events in your military life? If you do, then maybe you and I have touched on community.

The second set of stories I offer comes from my military background, but goes farther than just stories of travel. For my family and I are not only members of the Army, but also Christians trying to serve God in a unique community.

I remember the joy of sharing a home-cooked meal and prayer with our sponsor's family after making that difficult flight down to Panama.

I remember the pain my family experienced as a result of that cross-country journey, but I also remember the Christian friends we made at that distant place who still write my parents.

I remember not just the verdant growth of that Indiana cornfield but also the living, growing group of Christians with whom we worshiped and served in the chapel on post.



I remember not just the seeming lifelessness of New York City but also the friendship and support we children gave each other as we discovered our own faiths in the chapel youth group.

I remember not just the inconvenience of campground life but also the closeness in God that my family developed as we lived in that cramped trailer.

Lastly, I remember that my own deployment was painful, but that my wife and I felt assured that this was God's will, and that he blessed us with tasks to perform for his kingdom that perhaps we could have never achieved had I remained in America.

Herein lies, I believe, the power of community; not just that we share similar experiences, but that we also share similar growth, for God is always at work through our life experiences to shape and mold us. Our understanding of how God is shaping our lives then becomes our testimonies, and these are the vessels through which the word goes forth to change the world.

There is a power in the shared experience that makes the faith journey a unique experience in and of itself, and when we hear those testimonies of God's power in other's lives, we bond with them not as strangers with dissimilar experiences, but as believers who know each other in God. Then we truly have community.

SPECIAL GIFTS

All have talents, responsibilities

By Wilbert C. Harrison
USAIC Chaplains' Office

reflections

The other day I was tasked to do a drawing. Needless to say it was disastrous.

There are some people who are good at using their hands to perform certain skills. The way I see it everybody has something good to offer each other.

You see God created each of us in his own unique way. We have all been given special talents and gifts to be used for the glory of God. None of us are here to just enjoy life; we are here to help with the suffering of mankind.

We are our brothers' keeper and it does matter what we do with the gifts God has blessed us with. Like I said before, I'm not good at drawing. But this does not excuse me from doing my best with what I have.

Do you recall the story in Luke's gospel, the 19th chapter verses 11 to 26? In this parable Jesus points out the importance of each person to be responsible for the talents and gifts he or she had received.

The king who had been called to a far country decided to call 10 of his servants and entrust them with his wealth. Each of these servants were to invest the king's wealth; when he returned from his journey they were to give account of their investment. However, when he returned he discovered some of servants were wise in that they had gained more from their investment while the other servants had not done so. As a result of their poor stewardship, they received harsh judgment.

While it is not God's desire to judge any of us for anything we do, most judgement comes from ourselves. Just as we are responsible for the gifts and talents we are blessed with, we are in most cases responsible for the judgment we inflict upon ourselves. When we fail to do what we know is right there is always a tendency to judge ourselves more harshly than God.

It amazes me to know how much responsibility God has entrusted each of us with. What the story showed is we have been given excellent resources to build and expand God's kingdom. Jesus expects us to use these talents so that they multiply and the kingdom grows. He asks each of us to account for what we do with his gifts; while awaiting the coming of the kingdom of God in glory, we must do Christ's work.

The way I see it, we are all special because we have been blessed with gifts and talents from God. Use what you have and God will bless you with more.

I may not be able to paint or draw, but I can do other things that are useful for the kingdom of God.

There is a recent saying I have heard on television and it goes like this, "A mind is a terrible thing to waste." I'd like to go a little further by saying, "Gifts and talents from God are terrible things to waste." Use them before you lose them.

'Cagney & Lacey' together again on CBS

By Jay Bobbin
Tribune Media Services

At a time when it was rare for a strong female character to be the focus of a series, one program had two of them.

Sharon Gless and Tyne Daly were both multiple-Emmy-winners for their performances as New York City police-detective partners, and they reprise those roles in Sunday's new CBS drama "Cagney & Lacey: The Return," the first of two TV-movie sequels to the popular and critically acclaimed 1982-88 show. (Filmed at the same time, the second tale has no firm air date yet, but it is expected to be shown later this season.)

As it has in real life, a six-year period has passed since the title characters last were seen working together, and they've gone through respective changes: Chris Cagney (Gless) is now married to a business executive (James Naughton) and working for the district attorney's office, while Mary Beth Lacey (Daly) has retired from the police force to be a full-time wife and mother. However, when the latter woman's husband, Harvey (fellow returnee and Emmy recipient John Karlen), suffers a heart attack, financial straits force her to go to work again ... just as Cagney needs help in probing a weapons robbery that resulted in a policeman's murder. So it is that Cagney and Lacey join forces again, though their reunion initially is fraught with tension and a great deal of readjustment. Carl Lumbly (who now stars in the Fox series "M.A.N.T.I.S."), Martin Kove and Al Waxman also essay their original parts again. Behind the scenes, executive producer Barney Rosenzweig and writer-producers Terry Louise Fisher ("L.A. Law") and Steve Brown also are back.

What: "Cagney and Lacey"
When: Sunday on CBS

"There was a time when I thought I'd never do it again," said Daly — who now co-stars in CBS' Rosenzweig-produced "Christy," which will return with a Thanksgiving-night special — of playing Lacey again, "then there was a time when there was a consideration about doing it. I thought, 'No, I've been there, done that,' but it felt good to read that first script. Although I had a lot of battles to fight about it, basically I was delighted to check in with the 'broad' (Lacey) again. I have always liked her, and I like her still; I like the other broad, too. These still remain the two best parts for women that are around, so it was fun, but it was also difficult in ways I didn't anticipate. I think there was an assumption that we would just fall back into the rhythm. We started off shooting scenes that were kind of easy productionwise, with only the two girls in the car talking to each other, but they happened to be very difficult scenes in terms of their emotional content. I had some times with Sharon, though, where I felt we were cooking and bouncing and doing it again. Those were really delightful."

Experience 1850s life at Westville

Westville Historic Handicrafts Inc.

For those who wish to experience life as it was in the fall of 1850, Westville offers the "Fair of 1850."

Through Nov. 13, there will be special demonstrations and events planned to show life as it was 144 years ago.

Demonstrations of broom- and soap-making will take place at various time and sugar cane will be ground for juice to make into syrup. Westville's mule-powered cotton gin — one of the few animal-powered gins in existence — will be in operation.

Music groups will perform each Saturday, and area children will be in the academy some weekdays to portray education of the period.

In addition to special activities, there will be demonstrations of regular activities that take place throughout the year.

These include blacksmithing, potterymaking, candledipping, spinning, woodworking and weaving. Gingerbread cooked on a wood stove and sausage biscuits cooked over an open fire at the farmhouse will be available.

Westville is located one-half mile from the town square in Lumpkin, Ga.

Special events hours are 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Monday through Saturday and 1 to 5 p.m. Sundays.

For more information write: Westville, P.O. Box 1850, Lumpkin, Ga. 31815; or call (912) 838-6310.

Columbus Museum to feature

'Beauty in Beast'

The Columbus Museum

The Columbus Museum has an original exhibition, titled "The Beauty in the Beast: American Artists Observe the Horse," which will coincide with the 10th running of the Steeplechase at Callaway Gardens and will be on view through Jan. 8.

Comprised of paintings, sculptures, drawings and photographs borrowed from a variety of institutions across the nation, the exhibition includes such artists as Thomas Hart Benton, Theodore Robinson, Albert Bierstadt, George Catlin, John Singer Sargent, Reginald Marsh, Walter Anderson, Herbert Hasletine and Deborah Butterfield.

"This exhibition brings a tremendous selection of artworks lent by renowned institutions to this community just as the anticipation for the Steeplechase builds," said Tom Butler, museum director. "I think everyone, especially horse enthusiasts, will find "The Beauty in the Beast" to be a visual treat."

Educational programs featured in conjunction with the exhibition and made possible by the exhibition sponsors include a series of lectures by Eleanor Jones Harvey, associate curator of American art at the Dallas Museum of Art and noted art historian. Harvey will introduce the exhibition with a lecture at the Members' Preview Reception Saturday and will give a public gallery talk Sunday.

There will also be special docent-led tours for school groups and individuals as well as fall museum classes.

Other events planned for this exhibition include:

Film Presentation: "The Black Stallion" Monday, 2:30 p.m. at the museum's Patrick Theatre. Admission is free but call the museum to make reservations.

Video Presentations: Two documentary films will be shown continuously in the museum's Turner Galleria on weekends throughout the month.

"Edward Muybridge: Motion Studies" profiles the 19th-century British photographer famous for his stop-action photographs of animal locomotion.

"The Iron Horse," produced by William VanDerKloot — creator of the museum's popular Chattahoochee Legacy film — documents the fate of a public sculpture of a horse that caused a riot at the University of Georgia in 1954.

The Columbus Museum, located at 1251 Wynnton Road and is open from 10 a.m. until 5 p.m., Tuesday through Saturday and on Sundays from 1 to 5 p.m.

For more information, call the museum at 649-0713.

TRAFFIC ACCIDENT IN SOUTHWEST ASIA

Injured soldiers return home

Soldiers' van rolled after being struck

By Marc G. Turchin
Bayonet staff writer

Seven soldiers who were injured in a traffic accident in Saudi Arabia Nov. 1 came home Tuesday when their airplane arrived at Lawson Army Airfield.

Ten soldiers from the 324th Forward Support Battalion, 3rd Brigade, 24th Infantry Division (Mechanized), were involved in the accident, in which one soldier was killed, one suffered a serious lung injury and one sustained a serious neck injury.

Staff Sgt. Johnson Kelly was killed in the accident. He was transported to Birmingham, Ala., Monday en route to Tuscaloosa, Ala., for burial.

Staff Sgt. Christopher Rabb, who sustained a lung injury, remained at 2nd General Hospital, Landstuhl, Germany. He left Germany Wednesday and was scheduled to return to Fort Benning Thursday.

The soldiers who returned Tuesday are Sgt. Angela Booth, Spc. James Brown, Spc. Brian Eldridge, Staff Sgt. Vickie Williams, Pfc. Christopher Deason, Staff Sgt. Guy Brooks and Pfc. Ryan Even.

The returning soldiers landed at Lawson Army Airfield and were transported to Martin Army Community Hospital by ambulance and military van.

The majority of the injuries suffered were minor, according to Maj. Lewis Germann, acting commander of the 324th Forward Support Bn.

"Three soldiers were lucky enough to sustain no severe injuries whatsoever and were able to walk away from the accident," he said.

However, Rabb's injury was serious enough to require immediate attention and Booth suffered a neck injury.

The returning soldiers were released from MACH later the same day and are on convalescent leave.

The accident occurred at 8:30 a.m. EDT when a car traveling in the left lane cut in front of the van, striking the van's left corner.

The collision caused the van to roll and spin forward. The van was then struck in the rear by another car.

The accident remains under investigation.

More than 1,500 soldiers from the 3rd Brigade, 24th Infantry Division (Mechanized) are deployed to Southwest Asia in support of Operation Vigilant Warrior.

The rest of the soldiers in the brigade are expected to return before Christmas, but a date has not been set.

DCA voted 'best' in US Army

By Jerrie Macintire
Special to The Bayonet©

Fort Benning's Directorate of Community Activities was recognized as the best in the Army at an Army Community of Excellence award ceremony Nov. 1.

Guest speaker Brig. Gen. John Meyer, commander of the Army Community and Family Support Center in Washington, D.C., presented the 1994 Assistant Chief of Staff for Installation Award to DCA Director Al Stewart and said, "Fort Benning has come close the last couple of years, but Fort Benning pulled it over the hump last year and did it."

For the past three years, Fort Benning's Morale, Welfare and Recreation and family support programs of the DCA were recognized as the best in Training and Doctrine Command; in 1994 the honor went one step further when Fort Benning captured the top Armywide award as well as the TRADOC award.

Although news of the ACOE award was released several months ago, Meyer said he wanted to deliver the honor in person and arrived Nov. 1 for the ceremony and award luncheon. Meyer was accompanied by Kathy Reho, the MWR ACOE Team Evaluator from the April visit, who is a program analyst with the Directorate of Plans and Policy at the Community and Family Support Center in Washington, D.C.

Stewart accepted the 1994 top Army award in front of an audience of military and civilian workers, many associated with the DCA's mission of enhancing quality of life for soldiers and families.

Citing areas of exceptional quality, Meyer said the success of the Fort Benning program was due to sound financial management, quality customer service based on market-driven surveys, innovative programs with vision toward the future and sound leadership.

"If you stop and think about the numbers, they are truly amazing," said Fort Benning Commanding General Maj. Gen. John Hendrix, noting that there are more than 70 MWR programs in place at Fort Benning, from services such as child care to support programs like Family Member Employment Assistance.

"Your track record is outstanding," Hendrix told the audience.

Despite dwindling funds, during 1994 the MWR office completed a new 60-unit guest house, two new community life centers, a new SatoTravel office, a set of baseball batting cages and a new recreation center on Sand Hill.

During the past decade, the DCA has reinvested more than $50 million of MWR funds into Fort Benning to finance construction and renovation, and to purchase MWR equipment, according to Stewart.

Soldiers, family members and other authorized customers generate the MWR funds through support of various programs and activities.

Take five to answer medical survey

By Evelyn D. Harris
American Forces Information Services

If you are one of 390,000 people who received the third National Medical Care Survey, military health officials ask that you respond quickly.

To encourage response, the Department of Defense will take answers over a toll-free phone line or on paper, said Navy Commander Tom Ebert of DoD health affairs.

"The survey takes from three to five minutes to complete," Ebert said.

The Defense Health Study Center in Monterey, Calif., began mailing surveys to family members of active duty personnel, retirees and family members of retirees Oct. 3. The deadline for return is Wednesday.

A significant number of beneficiaries eligible for military care either don't use it or rarely use it.

The surveys will help to obtain a realistic idea of how many nonactive duty beneficiaries actually use the military medical system, officials said.

The survey is important because military treatment facility commanders receive a fixed amount per beneficiary to provide care, said Ebert.

The surveys will help to obtain a realistic idea of how many non-active duty beneficiaries actually use the military medical system.

— Defense Health Study Center officials

The survey will help DoD do a better job of allocating medical resources.

Ebert suggests that beneficiaries also use the survey to correct any inaccuracies on their addresses or family size.

This will ensure they get important mailings from DoD and prevent them from getting unfortunate mail such as mail addressed to a deceased person.

to receive 'thanks' for flood help

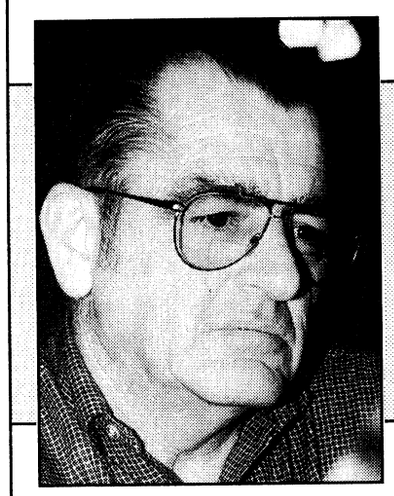
USAIC Public Affairs Office

A Military Assistance to Safety and Transportation appreciation luncheon is scheduled for noon Nov. 18. at the 498th Medical Company (Air Ambulance) hangar at Lawson Army Airfield, behind Building 2489.

The luncheon is in honor of the 498th Medical Company for its assistance during the flooding in Georgia earlier this year, in which it flew support missions out of Macon and Albany, Ga.



The luncheon is sponsored by the Flint River Community Hospital in Montezuma, Ga.; The Ogelthorpe Family Practice, P.C., the Region VII Emergency Service of Eastern, Ala.; and Region VIII Emergency Medical Service of Western Ga.

After the appreciation luncheon, the 498th Medical Company will demonstrate a Blackhawk helicopter 'hoist' mission by using a Stokes Litter to lift a mannequin aboard the aircraft.

Hot refueling, the refueling of a helicopter while it continues to run, will also be demonstrated.

VARIOUS VOICES

The Bayonet asked smokers: Do you think the Great American Smokeout is effective?

Odes C. Herring, Directorate of Operations and Training — "No, because people are going to do what they want to do."

Donna Marie Joyner, Postal Service employee — "For the majority (of smokers), no, because it's a habit, a bad one, that's hard to break."

Staff Sgt. Charles Wilkinson, Company A, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment — "No, because if a smoker enjoys smoking, he or she is going to smoke, regardless."

Jeanne Scully, Secretary General Staff— "Yes, because for that one day, people honestly try not to smoke, and when they find out they can (go without smoking), it's a great incentive."

Staff Sgt. William Smith, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st Bn., 11th Inf. Regt. — "I'm sick of nonsmokers talking about smokers and running us outside. If they don't want to breathe my smoke, they should just hold their breath."

GREAT AMERICAN SMOKEOUT

Thursday is quitting time!

By Frank Newton
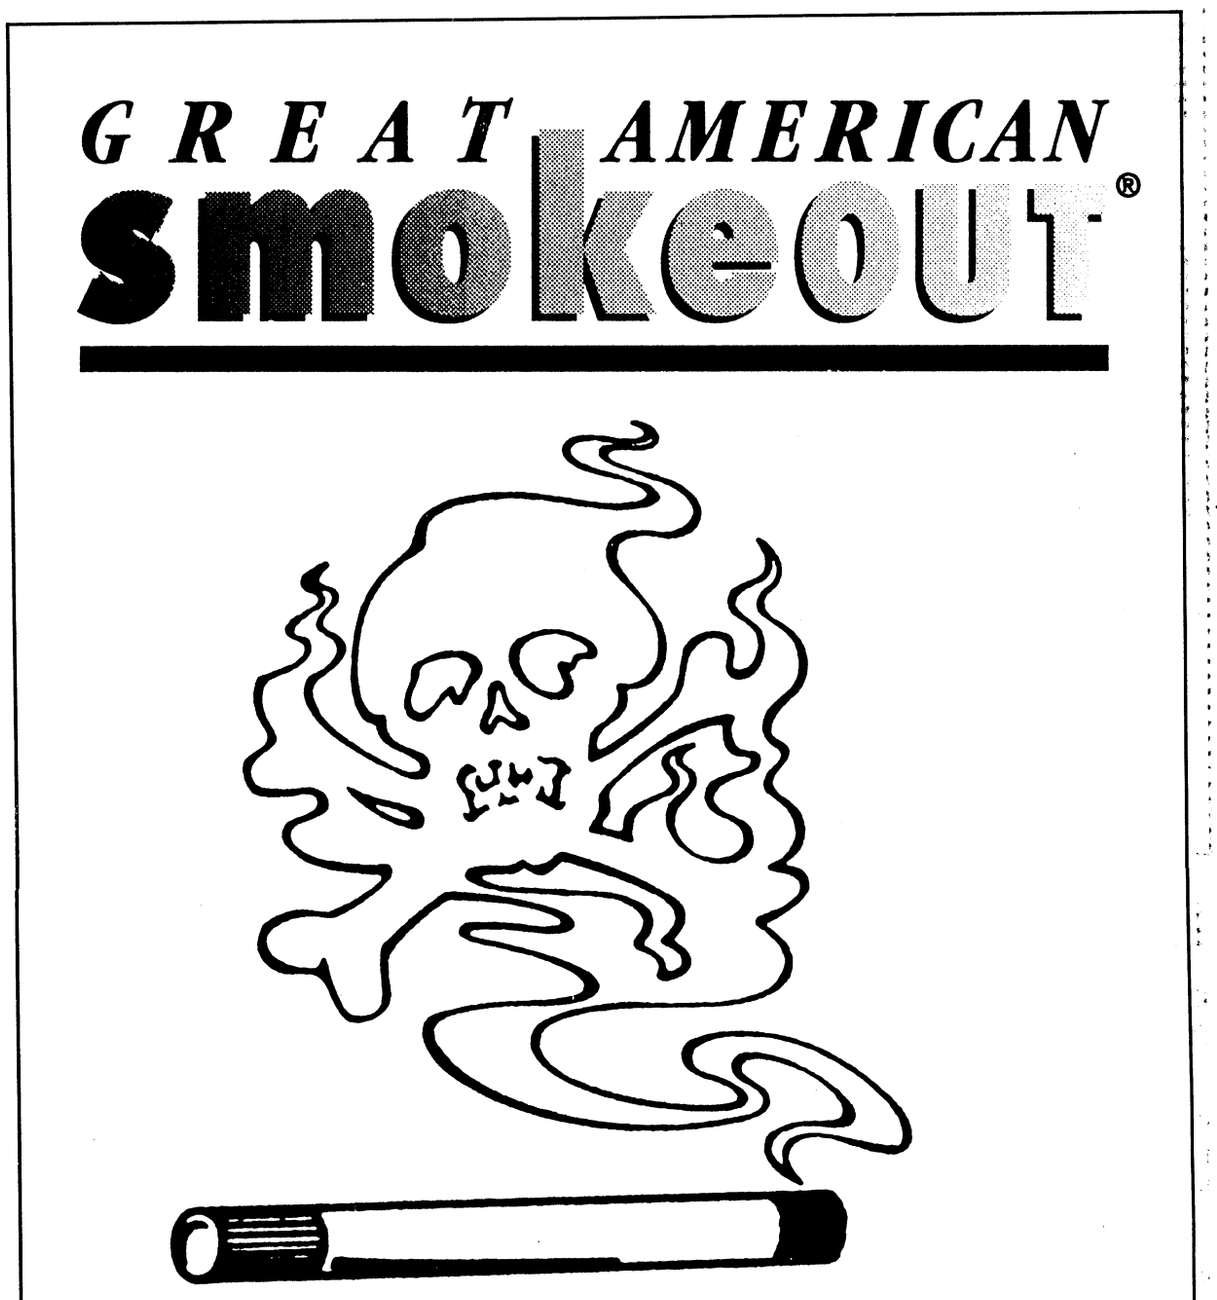
Department of Family Practice

As yet another Great American Smokeout approaches, 50 million Americans continue to smoke. It's estimated that 70 percent of smokers want to quit, but sadly, less than 8 percent will be successful this year.

Doctors at Martin Army Community Hospital are concerned about those who continue to smoke.

Smokers are much more likely to die prematurely than nonsmokers. Lung cancer, emphysema, chronic bronchitis, heart attacks and strokes are all more prevalent among smokers. But your risks decline considerably as soon as you quit.



The high risk of developing coronary heart disease is cut in half only one year after you quit. Within 10 years, your risk of lung cancer is about 50 percent less than that for smokers. No matter how long you've been smoking, the benefits of quitting are overwhelming.

Your quitting day may be the most important day of your life. On this day, you can literally begin to add years to your life. Becoming a nonsmoker depends a lot on your attitude.

Think positively! Instead of saying, "I want to quit smoking," state more affirmatively, "I choose not to smoke!" Start by listing all the reasons you want to quit. Consider placing your list of reasons in a prominent place, such as in your bathroom, near the telephone, and on your desk at work.

Have realistic expectations — stopping isn't easy — but it isn't impossible either. Withdrawal symptoms are temporary, and are signals that the body is repairing itself. These symptoms are strongest in the first week or two while your body is still dependent on nicotine. When the urge for cigarettes seems overwhelming, remember, cravings will occur less often and will become easier to handle with each passing day.

Most ex-smokers have gone "cold turkey." Quickly getting the nicotine out of their system helps with the physical symptoms of withdrawal.

commentary

There remains a significant psychological behavioral component to smoking. That cigarette has been your best friend. It has been with you through some of life's most important moments, but it has been betraying you. It is robbing you a thousand different ways.

Anticipate triggers

Anticipate triggers and prepare to avoid them:

- Keep your hands busy
- Put something other than a cigarette in your mouth
- Eat your lunch in a different location
- Don't focus on past attempts that were unsuccessful. The key thing to remember about past attempts to quit is what did or didn't work for you.

If you have a relapse:

- Stop smoking immediately
- Review why you have decided to choose not to smoke
- Recognize that you've had a small setback — don't be too hard on yourself
- Identify the trigger — decide now how you will cope with it when it comes up again
- Sign a contract with yourself to remain a nonsmoker.

At Martin Army Community Hospital, health professionals are committed to helping you become successful in your efforts to stop smoking. If you would be interested in attending a smoking cessation program, day and evening programs are available. Programs are at noon each month in the Department of Internal Medicine; call 544-1255 to register.

The next program will be Tuesday and Thursday. For programs that meet at 7 p.m., contact the Department of Family Practice (preregistration message line at 544-3173).

The next evening program will be in Family Practice Monday to Nov. 18. Information sheets are available in the Family Practice and Internal Medicine Clinics.

'I can't stop fighting, even for a minute'

By Caejar Cox
USAIC Public Affairs Office

"I've seen the needle and the damage done." — Neil Young

I wake up and my head is pounding. My eyes feel puffy and swollen like fat ripe grapes, ripe for the pickin'. Even before I'm fully awake I know what it is. That's how it's been since I was 16 years old.

That same feeling returns every day, trying to disguise itself as natural, but in reality it's like having hounds on my trail. Those feelings once controlled me like a puppet on a string; so much so, I made excuses, pretending I enjoyed it.

God, that feeling! Not necessarily a want — you feel like it's a need.

Starting slowly at first, just a hint. But if you try to ignore it, it'll return stronger, like someone trying to pull your guts out with salad spoons. I sometimes felt like I would do anything to make those feelings go away. But "it" ... I knew. It was the only way.

commentary

What's really scary to me is that it's the very thing that killed my grandfather. I actually saw him in the grips of it, but I never remember his fighting it. He fought the Germans in World War II and landed on the beaches during D-day. It was there, too, with him every step of the way all across Europe. And those feelings that were with him there, were with him to the end.

To me, it must be like heroin, in that it steals from you, even though you give to it freely. Sometimes you don't even realize you're doing it — like it's second nature. But it won't stop taking until it takes it all, even your last breath.

Trust me, I've been there ... I've seen it. I fight it every day — every waking minute.

As I write these lines, I feel it in the room with me ... lying dormant until it needs me — or should I say wants me.

So I go on writing, pretending it doesn't bother me as I munch on a cashew trying to ignore it.

Then the curtain is ripped away and I see its face haunting me.

I can't scream, retreat or even face it head on.

I take its hand.

I just go with it. I may even take friends who have the same feelings, although they don't know it, or do they?

These are the feelings I've encountered every day since I tried to quit smoking for about the third time in my life.

The first time, I quit for about three months, only to be suckered back into its clutches. The second time I went for nearly six months. I don't even know why I picked up a cigarette again.

This time? I can't say it's forever. I think I'll want a cigarette for the rest of my life. I'm trying to watch for it this time though. I realize I let my guard down the last two times.

Far be it from me to tell anyone what to do, but if you're going to pick up an addiction, let it be breaking your arm, or leg or something. Trust me, it'll hurt less in the long run.

My grandfather? He died of emphysema four years ago.

I miss him.

Direct postal service now available to Haiti

By Stephen Barrett
American Forces Information Service

Service members in Haiti are now receiving mail directly from their family and friends, with routine postal services available to all joint task force members.

Addresses should be in the following format:

Service member's rank and name, name of unit, unit identification number, APO AE 09383.

Unit identification numbers for deployed units are available through installation post offices and unit mail rooms.

Each unit now has a deployment postal address and ZIP code, depending on what part of the world it deploys to, said Capt. Michael Copenhover, commander of the Army's 129th's Postal Detachment from Fort Bragg, N.C. "This system speeds up postal delivery, so there is no reason a person has to send mail through their unit mail room in the rear. By using the proper address, mail will get here much faster than through the units."

Established in a warehouse next to the Port-au-Prince airport flight line, the 129th receives mail daily through the Air Force's 609th Air Postal Flight. The 129th sorts mail bundles, once received, into unit bags and unit postal clerks pick up daily deliveries.

With four planned Army postal centers, Copenhover hopes to provide all joint task force troops with standard postal services. They include certified and registered mail, stamp sales and postal money orders. "We'll run finance services daily from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. to help customers with their needs," he said.

Because of their deployment to an imminent danger area, troops assigned in Haiti do not need postage stamps for first class mail service. Free mail service has been in effect since the deployment began.

"All they need to do is write their letters and drop them with their unit postal clerk or local U.S. forces mail box," said Copenhover.

However, he said, members needing other services must pay normal postal fees. In addition, families sending mail to troops in Haiti are not eligible for free mail services.

Initially, service members could receive only first class mail weighing 12 ounces or less —regular letters and standard audio tapes. However, Copenhover said, now service members can receive packages from family and friends.

Still, he cautioned patrons that there are limits. Families sending mail to Haiti must use proper U.S. Customs forms when mailing packages and must limit package size, determined by its weight, shipping priority and linear size. Service members shipping gifts home from Haiti must also meet these postal requirements and must pay for these services.

Gulf War Syndrome

Defense Department responds to veterans who need medical care

By Evelyn D. Harris
American Forces Information Service

Since a special hot line for Persian Gulf veterans opened June 23, about 100 veterans a day have been calling, said Dr. Sue Bailey, deputy assistant secretary of Defense for clinical services.

During a Sept. 29 hearing before a Senate Armed Services subcommittee, Bailey said most Persian Gulf veterans who have sought medical care from DoD and the Department of Veterans Affairs have been treated for diagnosable illnesses expected in such a large population of adults.

"However," Bailey added, "some service members have reported diverse symptoms which do not readily fit into a common, recognizable diagnosis. The most frequently reported unexplained symptoms include fatigue, skin rash, muscle and joint pain, headache, neuropsychological complaints, gastrointestinal difficulties and respiratory problems.

"Additionally, some veterans have reported illnesses in their spouses and in children conceived after the conflict, symptoms which they feel may be related to their Persian Gulf service."

Bailey said DoD is committed to finding an answer to these unexplained illnesses. Among DoD's assessment efforts on the illnesses was the Defense Science Board Task Force on Persian Gulf War Health Effects. The task force, headed by Nobel laureate Dr. Joshua Lederberg, found no scientific or medical evidence that Iraq launched either chemical or biological attacks against U.S. and allied troops, said Bailey. In addition, the task force said there is no evidence there were any exposures of U.S. service members to chemical or biological agents in Kuwait or Saudi Arabia.

On May 11, Dr. Stephen C. Joseph, assistant secretary of defense for health affairs, announced a three-point plan to address gulf illnesses. The plan included:

- A comprehensive clinical diagnostic examination for gulf veterans;
- A review of DoD research and clinical efforts by an independent expert; and
- Creation of a forum of medical and public health experts to review and consult on the issue.

DoD initiated the Comprehensive Clinical Evaluation Program June 7. DoD officials urged sick gulf veterans to come forward. To quell fears of possible career reprisals, they put a hold on involuntary separations of anyone who feels he or she has a gulf-related illness that has no known diagnosis. To provide easy access DoD set up a hot line (800-796-9699) for veterans to call to register in the evaluation program or get more information about it.

Bailey said individuals registering with the hot line are contacted within about two weeks of their call by the closest military medical treatment facility to schedule an appointment to begin the screening process. As of Sept. 29, Bailey said, more than 6,000 veterans had enrolled in the program.

"To date fewer than 10 percent of those who contacted the evaluation program have been diagnosed and treated," said Bailey. "But the number is growing, and treatment is improving as military doctors learn more about the illnesses."

Bailey said more than 30 research projects, clinical evaluations and assessment programs are either planned or under way. Studies include personal interviews and physiologic testing of 2,250 gulf veteran Seabees, analysis of 1.2 million service members' hospitalization records and reviews of pregnancy outcomes of gulf veterans and their spouses.

Other studies will compare the health of Persian Gulf veterans with service members and former service members who served during the same time but did not deploy to the Persian Gulf.

"The department is firmly committed to providing the best care possible for its beneficiaries and to finding an answer to this problem," Bailey said. "We must plan for the future. Every man and woman who serves their country is entitled to access the very finest health care we can offer."

Soldiers to get tax exemption for Kuwait duty

By Stephen Barrett
American Forces Information Service

Troops assigned in Kuwait, Iraq, Saudi Arabia, Oman, Bahrain, Qatar and the United Arab Emirates are eligible for tax exemptions. Service members aboard vessels in the Persian Gulf, Red Sea, Gulf of Aden, Gulf of Oman and portions of the Arabian Sea also qualify

Gulf war income tax exemptions on basic pay remain in effect for service members recently deployed to Southwest Asia, according to the Department of Defense's office of compensation.

Troops assigned in Kuwait, Iraq, Saudi Arabia, Oman, Bahrain, Qatar and the United Arab Emirates are eligible for tax exemptions.

Service members aboard vessels in the Persian Gulf, Red Sea, Gulf of Aden, Gulf of Oman and portions of the Arabian Sea also qualify.

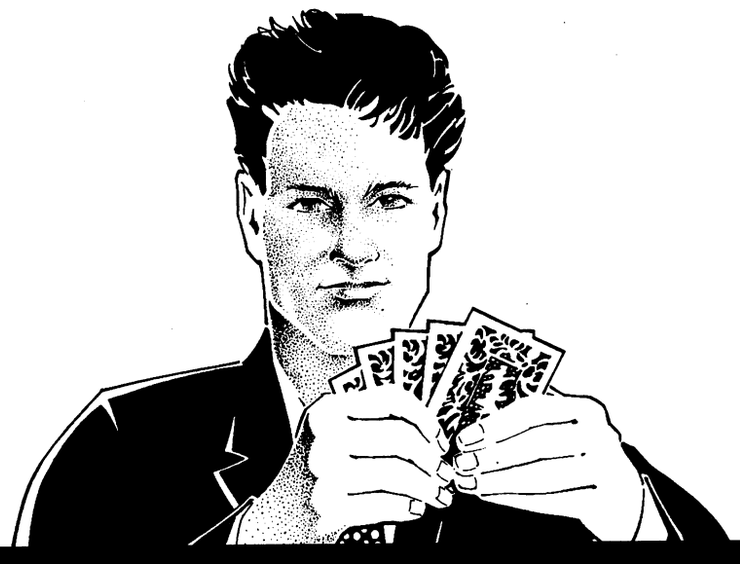
These locations are within the combat zone declared by then-President George Bush in 1991.

In early October, U.S. forces joined other U.N. coalition troops in returning to the region, in response to movement of Iraqi troops toward the Iraq/Kuwait border.

Enlisted basic pay is tax free; $500 per month of officers' pay is tax exempt.

Forces assigned to specific Southwest Asia areas receive imminent danger pay — currently $150 per month.

Those areas include Kuwait, Iraq, Saudi Arabia, Yemen, Turkey and the Persian Gulf. Service members with families receive a monthly $75 family separation allowance, provided the separation is more than 30 days.



Enlisted personnel also receive "certain places pay," which ranges from $8 to $22.50 per month, based on pay grade.

Unlike troops supporting Operation Uphold Democracy in Haiti, service members in Kuwait are considered on a "field duty" status.

Because of this, members temporarily lose their basic allowance for subsistence (separate rations).

DPW deputy wins Executive of Year award — again

Jerrie Macintire/Special to The Bayonet

John Baggett (left) inspects the structural integrity of the World War II sleeping quarters of Gen. George Patton while Richard Chancey, chief of construction inspection, looks on. The building was recently moved from Harmony Church to an area behind the Infantry Museum where it will be part of an authentic WWII street planned as a living history display.

Gribble Award recognizes 'excellence in management'

By Jerrie Macintire
Special to The Bayonet©

Fort Benning's John Baggett, deputy director of public works, will be among the cheering fans at Georgia Tech's Saturday homecoming game.

Whether he's cheering at a favorite sporting event, working on his coin collection, reading an interesting book or relishing the thought of another upcoming trip, Baggett brings energy and drive to his hobbies, which are as varied as his job.

He brings the same focus and dedication to his position with the Directorate of Public Works, colleagues say, and an average day might include an on-site inspection of new construction, answering phone calls from customers, planning building renovations, tracing the problems behind a faulty electrical outlet and budgeting for future allocation of funds.

For his excellence in managing engineering and housing matters on post while directing eight divisions, Baggett has been named the DPW Executive of the Year and will receive the William C. Gribble Award in Alexandria, Va., Dec. 6.

Lt. Gen. Art Williams, chief of engineers, will present the Armywide award honoring excellence in management during the Worldwide Directorate of Engineering and Housing Training Conference.

This marks the second time the 29-year employee of Fort Benning has been named recipient of the Gribble Award, the top DPW honor recognizing management professionals throughout the Army including civilians and military engineers.

Baggett is an innovator, a motivator and an inspirational leader, according to Col. Dave Brown, director of Public Works.

"He is the most loyal, dedicated and competent employee that I have had the privilege of working with in my 24 years of military service," Brown said.

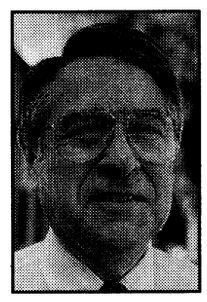
Baggett was instrumental in Fort Benning's success in recent Army Community of Excellence competitions, and is known for his commitment to quality customer relations and satisfaction, Brown said.

Baggett is a gifted manager who continuously demonstrates superb leadership and rare technical competence in improving the living and working conditions of those individuals at Fort Benning, Brown said.

In addition to demonstrating exceptional management abilities, Baggett has shown a commitment to protecting the environment by establishing environmental training awareness programs, an endangered species management plan, soil erosion control plans and state-of-the-art recycling programs, Brown said.

Baggett said "teamwork and highly competent personnel getting the job done" contribute to the success of the DPW.

"This is a high personal honor, but it's also a recognition of the accomplishments of the DPW support staff and what they have done to take care of soldiers and families," Baggett said.



Baggett was reared in Columbus, where he attended Jordan Vocational High School. He earned a degree in mechanical engineering from the Georgia Institute of Technology and served two years in the Army before joining the Fort Benning staff in 1965.

Baggett is a registered professional engineer in Georgia, an honor graduate of the Army Management Staff College and is active in several professional organizations including the Society of American Military Engineers, both the National and Georgia Societies of Professional Engineers, the Association of the United States Army, The American Society of Military Comptrollers and the Fort Benning Management Association.

He also serves on the Engineering Advisory Committee at Columbus College.

Among his honors are the Engineer of the Year by the GSPE, Training and Doctrine Command Engineer of the Year, NSPE Federal Engineer of the Year, Army Civilian Achievement Award, Commander's Award for Civilian Service, Superior Civilian Service Award and the Bronze Order of the deFleury Medal.

Job search training available

Job Assistance Center

Job search training is essential in preparing soldiers for transition from the military into civilian life, according to Harold Ericksen, Job Assistance Center manager.

In most instances, soldiers have never searched for employment, having come into the military directly out of high school or college, he said.

"The job market today is extremely competitive and success depends on having a comprehensive understanding of the job search process and executing the process with great confidence and enthusiasm," Ericksen said.

This free training is provided by the Job Assistance Center. Each of the six counselors in the JAC have master's degrees in human resource related areas.

Training begins with an eight-hour workshop conducted each Wednesday in Classroom 30, Infantry Hall, from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m., and is available for transitioning soldiers, spouses and Department of the Army civilians.

Reinforcement training is conducted through individual counseling in the Job Assistance Center using a variety of video, computer and library materials.

The training includes:

Personal assessment

• Identifying stress and using it to your advantage.

• Maximizing use of available time and money.

• Identifying transferrable skills.

Establishing job search objectives

Expanding opportunities

Networking

For more information or to sign up for this training, call the Job Assistance Center at 545-2308 or 545-2309.

Getting mail may ease pain during deployment

Fort Stewart Postal Service

When families and friends are forced to face the stress of soldiers deploying, often one of the only things that can ease that pain is writing letters and sending packages.

There are a few things to remember when you are planning to send mail to loved ones overseas.

• Prepare the address for a deployed soldier as follows:

Rank and name (Social Security number is preferred but not required);

Name of unit;

Unit # XXXX (same as the last four digits of the APO);

APO AE 09384-XXXX.

• The name of the unit used in the address should be the unit to which the soldier is assigned. If, however, the soldier is attached to another unit, use the address for the unit to which the soldier is attached.

• The APO numbers for deployed units no longer represents the location to which the division is deployed. Rather, the APO represents the division and will remain the same no matter where the division is deployed.

The first five digits of the APO, 09384, represents the 24th Inf. Div. (Mech). The four-digit add-on indicates a specific unit within the division.

Clinton visits 24th Inf Div soldiers in Kuwait

By Rick Brewer and Marcia Hart-Branch

Fort Stewart Patriot

CAMP DOHA, Kuwait — President Bill Clinton visited with 24th Inf. Div. soldiers Oct. 28, including approximately 1,571 soldiers from the 3rd Brigade, which has headquarters at Fort Benning.

The president received a briefing from Army leaders here; then he addressed the soldiers while standing between two M-1 Abrams main battle tanks.

The president's visit came on the heels of a number of visits to 24th Inf. Div. soldiers involved in Operation Vigilant Warrior, the combined effort to deter aggression from Iraq and defend the sovereignty of Kuwait.

Secretary of State Warren Christopher and U.S. Secretary of Defense William Perry visited the area to reiterate the United States' commitment to the defense of Kuwait, and tell the soldiers it was not words but what Christopher said "the capacity of the military presence" that forced Iraq to back down. "I hope the crisis is receding. But if not it is you we are counting on."

At Doha, Perry replayed the theme to them, adding that "with luck, you'll all be home soon."

The soldiers welcomed the words of praise and encouragement, but most recognized the fact that 'soon' is an ambiguous word — especially when it's used in any conversation about possible dates for their return home from foreign soil.

Although Saddam Hussein has reversed the recent buildup of Iraq's best troops on the Kuwaiti border — more than it had when it invaded that country four years ago — a threat remains. No one is willing to risk finding out the hard way, as was the case in 1990, whether Hussein would make good on his threats and push his way into Kuwait.

Of that opinion is Spc. John Schultz Jr., a radio and telephone operator in Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st Brigade.

It took less than 36 hours for Schultz to deploy to Kuwait. One moment Schultz was catching glimpses of news reports of the Iraqi military buildup on his home television set, the next he was setting foot in Kuwait as the first 24th Inf. Div. junior enlisted soldier to land in that country as part of the leading edge of U.S. response to the buildup.

By week's end, however, Schultz's unit patch and deployment story were just one of many seen and heard here as the trickle of 24th Inf. Div. soldiers shuttling across the Atlantic Ocean and Mediterranean Sea became a steady stream.

Improving the 24th Inf. Div.'s capability to rapidly deploy are the thousands of pieces of equipment prepositioned here. Soldiers deployed here 'fall in' on the "prepo" equipment and "draw" or ready their vehicles in a fenced stockyard where rows of Bradley Fighting Vehicles are inspected, prepped and "fired up." M-1A1 Abrams tanks are primed, and hundreds of other tracked and wheeled transports are lined up for movement to a marshaling area on the south side of the camp.

Boredom is a universal experience for soldiers and other service members, but it can disappear suddenly when the call to move comes down the wire.

"In the rear there's not a lot to do," said Spc. Sean Holcomb, a radio repair specialist assigned to HHC, 1st Brigade. "But when we go to the field or deploy it's a great deal of work."

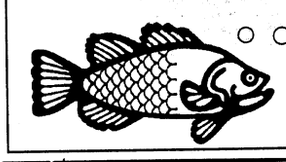
The hustle and bustle is the same in the middle of another nearly-identical vehicle-holding area, where some soldiers of the 24th Support Battalion are down on all fours, piecing together camouflage nets, while others are grabbing them by the armful, lifting them, and placing them on vehicles.

"When we prepare for the field we put together camouflage nets that are used to conceal our location," said Pfc. Jerome Ranjitsingh, a medic in the 24th Support Bn.

"We also put together chests with medical supplies that will be needed, like sunscreen, foot powder and insect repellent; (we) just make sure we have everything to complete our mission," he added.

The troops' movement is constant: it looks like worker bees in a hive. But, the occasional joking and "ribbing" volleyed between the soldiers lighten the atmosphere and offer the soldiers some mental relief from toiling in the hot Kuwaiti sun, which can be dangerous if not taken seriously.

But the battalion is prepared to receive and treat heat casualties if necessary. "We receive people from the front line and bring them to Company C for further evaluation. If it's very serious, we transport them back to the rear," said Cpl. Steven Wheeler, another 24th Spt. Bn. medic.



Meanwhile, on Kuwait's Udairi Range, a vast area of nearly-barren and sparsely-populated desert, a number of heavy- and light-armored vehicles are practicing their battle drills.

Road Dogs, Cougars survive semifinal matchup

By Terry K. Ray
Special to The Bayonet©

The U.S. Army Infantry Center football tournament is heading for the finish. With quarterfinal games Nov. 3 at Gowdy Field and Doughboy Stadium and semifinal matchups Monday evening at Doughboy Stadium, two teams were left standing for Wednesday afternoon's clash for the championship at Doughboy Stadium.

Here's what happened Nov. 3 and Monday at Gowdy Field and Doughboy Stadium.

Nov. 3 at Gowdy Field
Red Dawgs nip Delta Dogs

Red Dawg quarterback Marvin McPhatter scored on a quarterback sneak and running back Kevin Sidbury tacked on a two-point conversion to give the Red Dawgs of Service Battery, 4th Battalion, 41st Field Artillery Regiment, 3rd Brigade, 24th Infantry Division, an 8-6 victory over the Delta dogs of Company D, 1st Bn., 29th Inf. Regt., to move the Red Dawgs into the semfinals.

The Dogs scored their only touchdown on a 65-yard bomb from quarterback Marvin Watson to wide out Ruby West.

Cougars rip River Rats

Cougar quarterback Timothy Sloan threw touchdown strikes of 40 and 65-yards to receivers George Boyd and James Davis and Isaiah Freemen added a conversion for a 13-0 ripping of the River Rats for a slot in the semifinals.

Doughboy Stadium
Road Dogs rumble past Headhunters

Road Dog quarterback Jacob Knight threw one touchdown pass to wide out Jeremiah White from nine yards out and scored on a three-yard run to power the Road Dogs of the 104th Transportation Company, past the Headhunters of Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, 12-0 for the third spot in the semifinals.

Medics bandage Brawlers

Quarterback Ray Miller hit wide receiver Sidney Crawford with a 50-yard strike with 45 seconds left in the game to lift the Medics of the U.S. Army Medical Department Activity into final slot in the semifinals with a 15-13 win over the Brawlers of Co. B, 2nd Bn., 29th Inf. Regt.

Miller also had a 40-yard touchdown to his other wide out Allen Proven. A two-point conversion by Charles Mallard and a conversion by Proven spelled the demise of the Brawlers.

Brawler quarterback Robert Frieberg threw a 20-yard pass to Edward Elliott for a touchdown and conversion and running back Kevin Sanders scored from 5-yards out to lead the Brawlers.

Monday night at Doughboy Stadium
Cougars muzzle Red Dawgs

The Cougars of Co. C, 1st Bn., 29th Inf. Regt., are headed to the championship. Quarterback Tim Sloan threw four touchdown passes to four different receivers while the Cougar defense held the Red Dawgs of Sv. Bty., 4th Bn., 41st FA Regt., 3rd Bde., 24th Inf, Div., to only one score in the first half on their way to a 28-6 win.

Sloan opened the scoring barrage with a 30-yard strike to wide out Isaiah Freeman early in the first half. Sloan hit James Davis for the conversion and a 7-0 lead.

The Red Dawgs bared their teeth and came right back to to trim the lead to 7-6 on a 19-yard touchdown from quarterback Marvin McPhatter to Brian Poole.

Minutes later Sloan connected with receiver George Boyd on a 50-yard bomb over the Red Dawg defense. Sloan hit Steve Shawver with a two-point conversion lifting the Cougars to a 15-6 lead they would never relinquish.

Sloan put up touchdown passes of 3 and 5-yards in the second half to put the game away. Sloan found Davis for the 3-yard strike, then converted the extra point try on a quarterback scramble, pushing the score to 22-6.

The final cinch in the muzzle came on a 5-yard pass from Sloan to tight end Robert Pettit over the middle with no time left in the game, sending the Cougars to the championship bracket on Wednesday afternoon.

Road Dogs unravel Medics

The Road Dogs of the 104th Trans. Co., unraveled the Medics of the U.S. Army Medical Department Activity 18-6, on three touchdown runs by tailback Stephen Bush, propelling the Road Dogs into the championship Wednesday afternoon against the Cougars.

The Medics got on the scoreboard first with a 19-yard touchdown pass from quarterback Ray Miller to wide receiver Allen Proven for their first and last lead of the night at 6-0.

Bush tied the game at 6-6 with less than two minutes to play in the first half on a 45-yard scramble to the end zone through the Medic defense.

In the second half, Bush took a hand off from quarterback Jacob Knight on a reverse and kicked it into overdrive down the left sideline for 40-yards and his second touchdown of the game.

Bush added his third touchdown of the night with less than a minute to play on an 18-yard run around the left side sending the Medics home licking their wounds and moving the Road Dogs on to the championship round with an 18-6 victory.

Cruise-matics

win Division II championship

The Columbus Fort Benning Rugby Football Club Cruise-matics are champions.

The club hosted the Georgia Rugby Union collegiate and Division II tournament Saturday and Sunday at Stilwell Field and brought home the Division II title for the first time in almost ten years with a 27-17 win over the Shamrocks of Savannah, Ga.

Eight teams converged on Stilwell Field Saturday for four matches that would determine who would play for the right to be called champion on Sunday.

The Cruise-matics defeated the University of Georgia Bulldogs, who were defending champions in Division II play, 15-10, sending the Cruisers into the championship round against the Shamrocks, who had defeated Fort Rucker, Ala., 36-15.

In collegiate play, the Yellow Jackets of Georgia Tech downed the Eagles of Georgia Southern 27-11 to take on the Tide from the University Of Alabama, who washed out the Tigers of Clemson University 30-23.

In Sunday's action, the Tide, led by center Mitch Robinson and fullback Cameron Griffith, rolled over the Yellow Jackets 32-22 for their third straight union title.

The match up of the day went to the Cruise-matics and the Shamrocks in the final match of the afternoon.

The Cruisers sped out to an early 10-0 advantage on a penalty kick and conversion by Tim Butterfield and a 40-meter run to the try zone by winger Paul Oakes.

The Shamrocks cut the lead to 10-7 just before the half when winger Brian Mallory threaded his way through the Cruise-matic defense for the try. Mike Myers added the conversion .

The start of the second half did not bode well for the home team as winger Ron Eppard took the kickoff and sprinted past the defense for a 60-meter run and a try, putting the Cruise-matics down, 14-10, for the first time in the match.

Down they would not stay. Veteran scrum half Dave Fry scored from inside the Shamrock 22-meter line off a Shamrock kick that came down right in front of him. Butterfield converted the kick to give the advantage back to the Cruise-matics at 17-14 — a lead they would not relinquish.

The Cruise-matics added another try when wing forward Darren Monaco blocked a kick at the Shamrock goal and Butterfield covered the ball in the zone for the try and a 22-14 bulge.

A penalty kick by Myers trimmed the Cruise-matic lead to 22-17 with 10 minutes left in the match.

The Shamrocks put the Cruise-matic defense to the test for the final 10 minutes, keeping the ball inside the Cruise-matic 22-meter line until the Cruise-matic defense stuffed a Shamrock attack at midfield and spun the ball to Oakes for his second breakaway try, boosting the lead to 27-17 at the whistle.

"When they kept coming at us from inside our 22, I kept thinking let's win the scrum and get the ball out of here," Butterfield said. "After I started the attack from midfield, I couldn't run any more. I was never more happy in my rugby life when Oakes crossed the goal for the final try. This has got to be one of the finest days of my life."

Army names top two athletes of the year

Fort Benning female riflists nominated

Army News Services

Spc. Benjamin McDowell, an artillery soldier from Fort Bragg, N.C., and Sgt. Carolyn Ford, an avionics specialist at Fort Campbell, Ky., have been selected as the 1994 Army Male and Female Athletes of the Year.

McDowell, the 1994 Goodwill Games and U.S. Championships gold medalist in boxing, as well as the Armed Forces light heavyweight champion, was also named U.S. Amateur Boxing's Boxer of the Year. Being named boxer of the year qualifies McDowell for the nomination of the U.S. Olympic Committee's Athlete of the Year. McDowell won the only gold medal for the United States in boxing at the 1994 Goodwill Games. He is currently ranked number one in the nation.

McDowell went the entire year undefeated. He won the U.S. National Championships, the armed forces and All-Army levels. He is assigned to the Army's World Class Athlete Program.

Ford, who was recently assigned from Fort Shafter, Hawaii, to Fort Campbell, was selected by USA Amateur Softball Association officials as a first-team All-American. The catcher led the Armed forces to a best-ever second place finish at the U.S. National Major Championship.

At the Armed Forces championship, won by the Army, Ford led all hitters, batting .650 with four homers. The Beaver Dam, Va., native has played on five consecutive Army teams winning armed forces titles beginning in 1990.

Other soldiers nominated were Capt. Glenn Dubis of Fort Benning, world record breaker in the 300 meter rifle; Spc. Dionicio Napier, Bamberg, Germany, the 200 meter bronze medalist at the U.S. National Track Championship and the U.S. Olympic Festival; and Capt. Sean Drake, the first Army finisher at the U.S. Military Sports Association Triathlon Championship.

The only other female nominee was 1st Lt. Kristin Frazer, Fort Benning, winner of the silver medal in team air rifle at the World Cup conducted in Havana, Cuba, and a gold medalist in prone rifle at the U.S. National Matches, Camp Perry, Ohio. She placed third in the U.S. Nationals.

1/29 hosts fishing tourney on Chattahoochee

Special to The Bayonet©

With daylight barely breaking the treeline Saturday morning on the Chattahoochee River, anglers in 49 boats set out for a day of tournament fishing.

The 29th Infantry Regiment association hosted the one-day tourney from the Uchee Creek Campground and Marina.

All boats were in the marina by the cutoff time of 4 p.m. and the weigh-in got under way.

Don Stephens and Greg King combined together to pull in a five-fish catch totaling 17 pounds and 28 ounces to claim the $490 top prize.

"We started out fishing up near the Riverwalk using lizards in shallow water," Stephens said. "I caught two hefty fish from there early; then we moved down river flipping a pig-and-jig down into the treetops along the bank. We caught plenty of fish, just not the right size."

Second place went to Jay Dee Mercer and Randy Sheffield with a total weight of 15.70 pounds and a winning prize of $294.

Blaine Souerwine and Joe Wikoff took home $190 for third place with a total of 9.32 pounds. Souerwine also had the big fish of the day, a lunker weighing in at 6.98 pounds capturing $460 in prize money.

A total of 33 fish were caught; all were released alive.

Dental products can help your oral hygiene

By Thomas D. Richardson
U.S. Army Dental Activity

The very first thing you should know about mouthwashes and rinses available without a prescription is none can substitute for the daily removal of dental plaque with a brush and floss

Have you noticed that the oral hygiene section of the Post Exchange just seems to get bigger and bigger? Actually, I suppose that's fairly understandable, given that dental decay and periodontal disease (gum disease) remain two of the most common, yet preventable, diseases in the world.

What can be very confusing, however, is just which of the various toothbrushes, toothpastes, varieties of floss, mouthwashes, rinses and gargles and other oral hygiene items offered are truly worth your time and your money.

The very first thing you should know about mouthwashes and rinses available without a prescription is none can substitute for the daily removal of dental plaque with brush and floss. The rinses should all be considered as supplemental oral hygiene measures, and not as substitutes for brushing and flossing.

• Several products are mild fluoride rinses, which are designed specifically to prevent dental decay.

The active ingredient is sodium fluoride, usually in a concentration of .05 percent, with additives to improve flavor and appearance.

This rinse is very effective if used along with the standard brushing and flossing regimen, and is a proven decay fighter.

This product is recommended as an addition to conscientious brushing and flossing, especially for those who are particularly prone to dental decay.

The taste is not bad, especially when compared to the "industrial strength" fluoride rinse served at the dentist's office.

Fluoride rinse is not to be swallowed. Young children should not have access to the rinse unless they can use the product as the label directs.

• The PX stocks several products that claim to loosen or remove dental plaque. These products contain sodium borate that probably does, to some extent, aid in removing plaque.

Be sure to note that these rinses are intended as prebrushing rinses, and are almost worthless without following up with brushing and flossing.

Several studies conclude rinsing with these products, followed by brushing, removes more plaque than brushing alone, although at least one study found that rinsing with water before brushing was just as effective.

Another product contains the herbal extract called sanguinaria. It is also not effective if used alone, but it can assist plaque removal accomplished mechanically with brush and floss. This rinse is most effective if used along with the toothpaste of the same name.

• Two products I noticed contain essential oils such as thymol and menthol.

Advertised to "kill germs that cause plaque, gingivitis ( early gum disease characterized by red, swollen gingiva) and bad breath," these products are effective.

They contain a significant amount (27 percent) of alcohol, however, and some reports have suggested an increased risk for oral cancer in patients who use high-alcohol-content mouthwashes, are smokers, and who drink alcoholic beverages frequently.

The validity of this correlation is unsettled, but I think you should pick an alternative rinse if you are in this category.

Don't forget that many rinses contain alcohol, and it doesn't take much to poison a small child. Recently, the Council on Dental Therapeutics voted to require mouthrinses containing more than 5 percent alcohol to be packaged with child-resistant caps. Be sure to keep rinses out of your child's reach.

• Another product on the shelf contains .02 percent sodium fluoride and zinc chloride, an astringent that can neutralize some of the intraoral chemical compounds that cause bad breath.

• Several products are offered only to "kill germs that cause bad breath." The main ingredient is cetylpyridnium chloride, which is lethal to bacteria but has only a short-term effect.

These products can control bad breath on a temporary basis but should not be considered effective as antiplaque or antigingivitis agents.

Remember that brushing with a fluoride toothpaste and using dental floss remain the primary and most important means of preventing dental diseases.

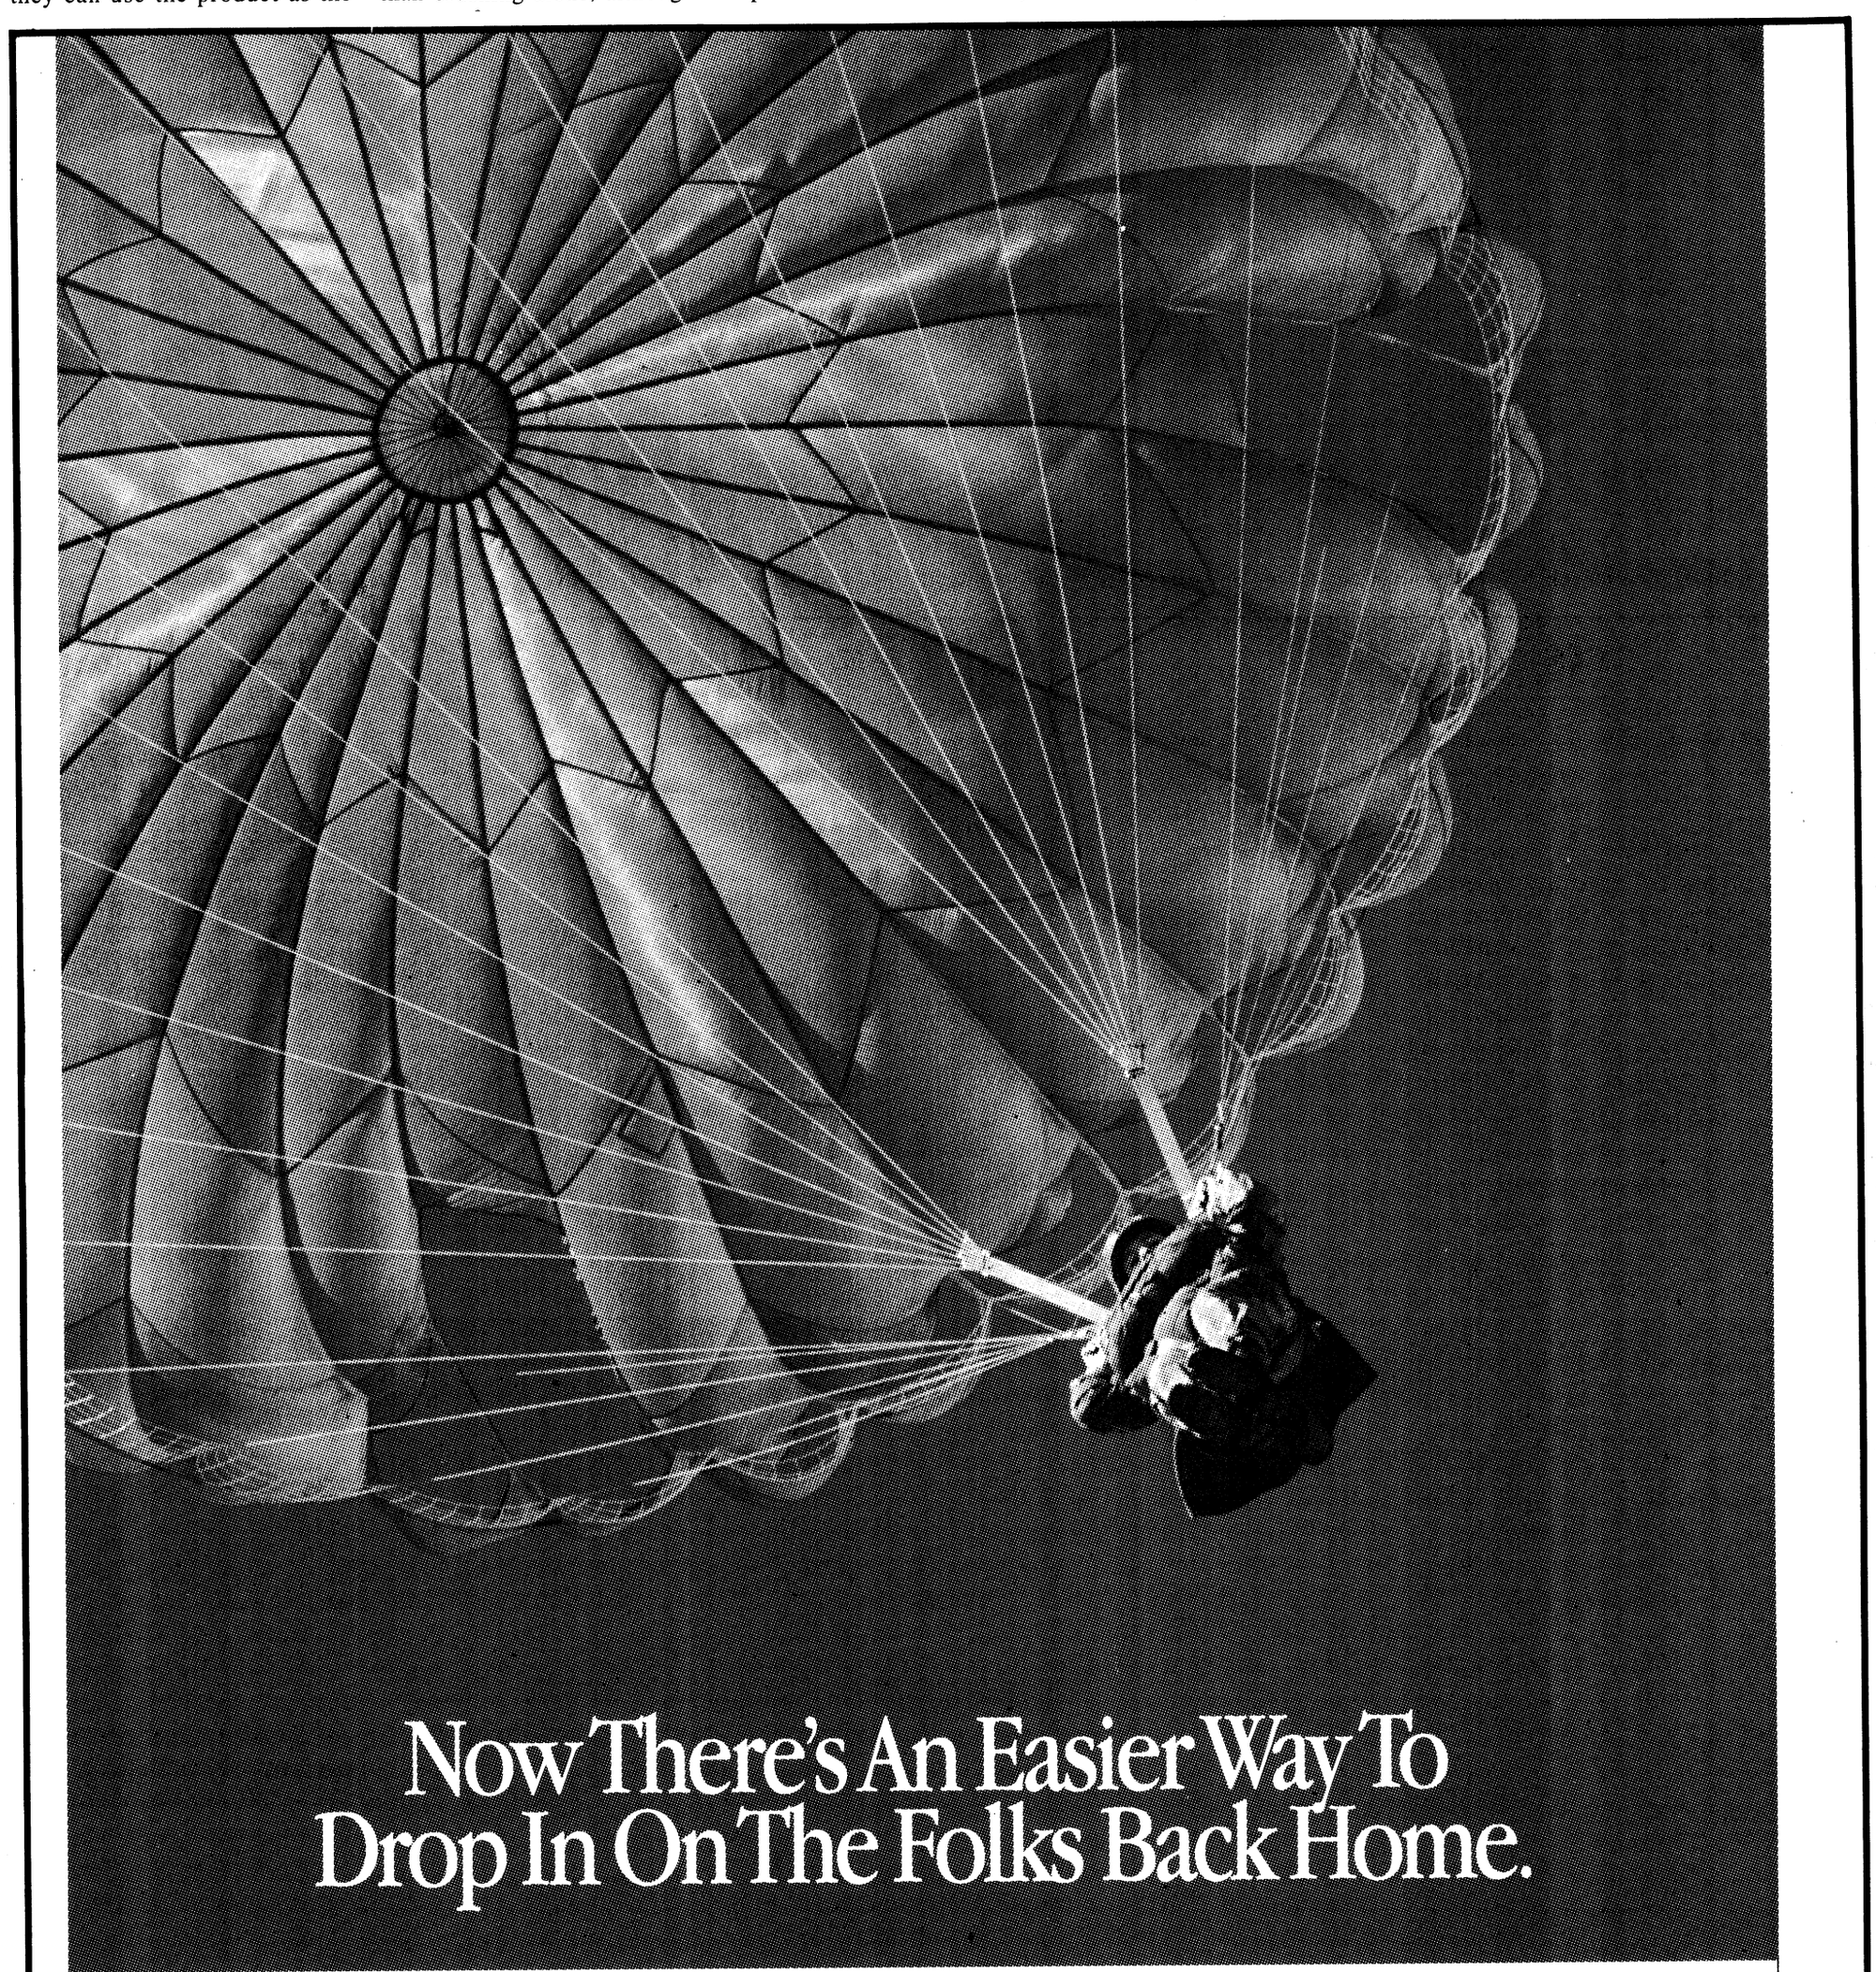
Military Police Activity

This week's hot topic concerns the U.S. Army Infantry Center Regulation about motor vehicles. All vehicles that are owned or operated by a person who resides, performs duty, is employed on or frequently uses the facilities of Fort Benning will be registered within 10 days after introducing the vehicle onto Fort Benning.

If circumstances preclude immediate registration, a temporary registration will be issued. Violators will be subject to disciplinary action under Article 92, Uniformed Code of Military Justice. Violators who are not subject to the UCMJ may have their post driving privileges revoked.

If you have any questions, contact the Post Vehicle Registration Office at 545-3223.

The following entries were taken from the Fort Benning Military Police blotter from Oct. 26 to 31. Such entries may be incomplete and do not determine the guilt or innocence of any person.



• A staff sergeant ended his tour of duty as a recruiter, but he continued to receive the extra pay of $275 per month. The staff sergeant was told to have the extra entitlement stopped; however, he continued to receive the payments for six months, totaling $1,925 in unauthorized entitlements. The staff sergeant was charged with fraud and larceny of government property.

• A private purchased 10 one-gram bags of marijuana from an unknown civilian for $100. Investigation revealed that the private smoked one bag; then he hid the other nine bags in the woodline on Fort Benning. Later, the private retrieved his nine bags and hid them in a friend's vehicle. The private was apprehended and charged with wrongful possession of marijuana and the wrongful use of a controlled substance.

Other activities include three cases of driving under the influence of alcohol, 18 traffic accidents, 22 cases of larceny, and one case of shoplifting reported at the exchange facilities.

Active duty, Nat'l Guard soldiers share mission

4/505th task force prepares for Sinai rotation with Infantry Leader's Course at Fort Benning

Photos by Ruth J. Spaller

Sgt. Christopher Ducheneaux of the 4th Bn., 505th Parachute Inf. Regt., "camos up" before a mission during the final stages of the Infantry Leader's Course.

By Ruth J. Spaller
Bayonet staff writer

Up until now, the idea of a unit composed of active duty, National Guard and Reserve soldiers performing a real-world mission together in peacetime was just that — an idea.

But the "Desert Panthers" of the 4th Battalion, 505th Parachute Infantry Regiment, based at Fort Bragg, N.C., are fast making that idea a reality as they prepare to deploy as part of the multinational force and observers in the Sinai Peninsula, Egypt.

The mission of the MFO is to observe and report activities on the border between Egypt and Israel.

Active duty units have been deploying there routinely for six-month rotations since an agreement was established in 1981, giving soldiers from the United States and 11 other countries the border patrol mission.

The Desert Panthers, made up of 72 percent National Guard (all volunteers), 8 percent Reserve (all volunteers) and 20 percent active duty soldiers, will deploy to the Sinai to perform the border patrol mission in January, said Lt. Col. James M. Morris IV, task force commander.

The unit was activated in March, and as part of their training and preparation for the deployment, the officers and noncommissioned officers of the task force came to Fort Benning for the Infantry Leader's Course, taught by the 4th Ranger Training Battalion.

> "Active duty people do this every day ... and the National Guard soldiers bring different skills, so it's a good opportunity for them to learn from each other."
> — 1st Sgt. Harold Redding
> 4th Bn, 505th Parachute Inf. Regt.

Much of the course was "just a refresher," covering patrolling methods, reconnaissance and troop leading procedures, said Sgt. Scott Grant, one of the task force's National Guard members.

The course was specifically tailored to the MFO mission for the Desert Panthers, concentrating more heavily than usual on things like surveillance, observing and reporting, and running all exercises according to the rules of engagement that will govern the troops while in Egypt, said Capt. Lee A. Fretwell, active duty commander of Company B.

But the main purpose of the group attending the course was "to bring everybody up on an even keel as far as training," said 1st Sgt. Harold Redding, a National Guardsman.

"It's brought everyone together and been really strong, because your active duty people do this every day ... and the National Guard soldiers bring different skills, so it's a good opportunity for them to learn from each other," Redding said.

"We have NCOs who are lawyers, stockbrokers, contractors, school teachers, carpenters ... they bring a tremendous amount of experience to the unit," Morris said

With the mixture of soldiers from different units and backgrounds, Fretwell said, the task force came together with no common denominators and no standard operating procedures in place.

"After a month down here (at Fort Benning), one of the biggest benefits is that we're a much tighter, cohesive unit now," Fretwell said. "We understand what the next guy's thinking, and we can react accordingly."

Although the group has been working together well, the team has not been problem-free.

"There is some animosity," said Sgt. Craig Eaton, an active duty member of the task force, who said he thought some of the Guardsmen were "not tactically proficient."

"I have found the (training level of the) National Guard NCOs to be well below the active duty," Fretwell said.

"That is not the case with every single NCO — some are very, very competent," he said.

"Because they only do it one weekend a month, (and) two weeks a year, their training level is not as high," Fretwell said. "But they are very attentive and have been soaking everything in."

"The big picture," he said, is that with the National Guard participating in this mission, an active duty battalion that would usually spend a year and a half training, deploying and recovering from the MFO mission is freed up to do something else.

"With a shrinking Army, reduced resources and more operations other than war type of missions, it's obvious that we're going to have to find new and innovative ways to use all the resources we've got, and that includes the Guard and Reserve," Morris said.

Act removes roadblock for retirees

Repeal expands career options for retired officers

Army News Service

The Acquisition Streamlining Act suspends, until Dec. 21, 1996, a statute that prohibited retired officers, during their first two years of retirement, from selling anything to the service from which they retired

Civilian career options for military officers who recently retired — or will soon retire — will get a boost with the passage of the Acquisition Streamlining Act.

So said Al Novotne, an attorney with the Office of the Judge Advocate General at the Pentagon.

Signed by President Bill Clinton on Oct. 13, the act suspends one statute and repeals another that previously put a damper on the employment marketability of military retirees, Novotne said.

The act suspends, until Dec. 21, 1996, a statute that prohibited retired officers, during their first two years of retirement, from selling anything to the service from which they retired.

"Selling includes representing a company to promote the sale of its services or products," Novotne said.

It also prohibited them from assisting the filing of claims against their service during that period.

Now, any officer who has retired within the last two years, or will retire during 1994, will be exempt from the provisions.

Officers who retire during 1995 could be subject to them if Congress ultimately fails to repeal the law. The plan is to repeal the law after studying its impact, Novotne said.

The act repeals the Harbord Amendment, which prohibited retired officers from selling tangible goods to the Defense Department and the uniformed services.

The absence of these two statutes should ease transition to civilian life, Novotne said.

"Recent and prospective military retirees are now free to use all of their military experience in pursuit of civilian employment."

However, he cautioned, prospective retirees should be aware of other restrictions on employment.

"For example, whether your service for the Defense Department was military or civilian, you may never 'switch sides,' representing a company to the government on matters you regulated as a federal official," he said.

"In addition, anyone involved in contract administration, procurement or acquisition could be subject to other restrictions on post-government employment."

Novotne advises persons who have questions about restrictions on employment after military service, especially those who work in contracting or procurement, to contact the ethics counselor or staff judge advocate assigned to the organization from which they will retire.

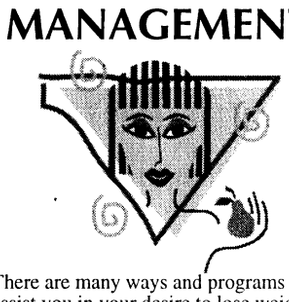
29th Infantry Regiment

Lt. Col. Michael A. Phillips succeeded Lt. Col. Michael A. Bingham as commander of the 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, Nov. 1 during a 10 a.m. change of command ceremony on Dickman Field.

Phillips, 38, a native of Louisville, Ky., was commissioned in infantry on graduation from the U.S. Military Academy in 1978. Phillips came to Fort Benning after serving in Europe as secretary of the general staff, 1st Armored Division. He and his wife, Claudia, have one son.

Bingham's new assignment will be as Fort Benning's assistant chief of staff. He had commanded the 2nd Battalion since Oct. 30, 1992.



Bingham, 46, is from Greenville, S.C., and is a distinguished military graduate of the ROTC at Lander College in Greenwood, S.C. He was commissioned in the infantry on graduation in 1974. Bingham also has a master's degree from the University of South Carolina at Columbia. He and his wife, Ann, have three children.

After passing the battalion's colors to the incoming commander, Col. Robert L. Jordan Jr., 29th Inf. Regt. commander, lauded Bingham as "a consummate trainer" who enjoyed a "reputation without flaw." Jordan went on to praise the efforts of the outgoing commander, whose troops trained more than 29,000 basic infantry soldiers to standard during his tenure. Jordan's charge to Phillips was to continue the training of "the world's finest infantrymen."

'Basic' buddies to retire together as CSMs

Soldiers bring different styles to similarly successful careers

By Jerrie Macintire
Special to The Bayonet©

South Carolina's noonday sun beat down upon Robert McCoy as he milled with other fresh Army recruits at Fort Jackson preparing for Vietnam duty in February 1965.

Away from home for the first time, McCoy said he was homesick, tired and worried about the future when he glanced over the shaven heads of his peers and spotted another new recruit across the courtyard "who was doing a lot of talking."

This meeting set the stage for an enduring 30-year friendship between the two men: the talker, Eddie Roberts, a self-described social individual who enjoys the high-profile aspects of Army life; and the low-key organizer, McCoy, whom colleagues say is an efficient manager who knows exactly how to make things happen that must happen for mission success.

The men, who scrubbed floors together in basic training, crawled through the rice paddies and jungles of Vietnam at the same time, jogged together innumerable miles on many Army posts, and trained airborne troops together at Fort Benning will soon retire together, both with the rank of command sergeant major in the 11th Infantry Regiment.

Roberts, command sergeant major of the 11th Infantry Regiment, will be honored with a retirement ceremony Nov. 22 at 9 a.m. on York Field. McCoy will serve as Robert's commander of troops for the ceremony.

McCoy, command sergeant major of the 1st Battalion (Airborne), 507th Infantry, 11th Infantry Regiment, will be honored with a retirement ceremony Nov. 21 at the Airborne Walk near the jump towers at 3 p.m.

Earlier that day, the two master parachutists will board an airplane for the windy, winding ride to the drop zone on Fryar Field for their last military jump together.

When discussing this last jump in an interview near the Airborne Walk, Roberts cleared his throat and rocked on his heels while McCoy stared into the distance toward the 250-foot jump towers, a place of special significance for the soldiers who served together training airborne troops.

"He was on tower and I was on ground," Roberts recalled.

The men said they both enjoyed their assignments at Fort Benning, where they transformed "legs," or nonairborne-qualified soldiers, into troops authorized to wear the distinctive parachute with wings badge.

McCoy trained some of the first women to go through airborne school, and also trained the first three female "blackhats," or airborne instructors.

"The Army is a model for equal opportunity for the civilian sector," Roberts said.

The soldiers, who are both black, recalled their days of basic training when the nation outside the Army was still segregated. Though the Army had officially desegregated under President Harry Truman during the Korean conflict, parts of the nation still had separate areas designated for each race.

While traveling by bus to basic training from Fort Jackson in 1965, McCoy and Roberts recalled they stopped for the night with other troops at a local motel; the enlistees entered either the front door marked "white," or the side door marked "colored," depending upon their race. Water fountains and restrooms were likewise designated.

These types of incidents drew both men to the open-door concept of the Army, and they said they saw a vast advantage to remaining in the military despite several intimidating experiences in boot camp.

McCoy and Roberts said seasoned soldiers planned a skit to frighten new enlistees during their first night in the barracks. One soldier refused to get up when the bugle sounded in the dark hours of the early morning. A contingent of soldiers rushed into the barracks, picked up the bed of the sleeping man, and tilted it out the barracks window while the soldier "slept on," oblivious to what was happening.

McCoy and Roberts said they headed for the nearest phone booth to call for help, but were intercepted by a sergeant who detailed them to kitchen patrol duty.

KP was just one of many details the recruits performed while cementing their new friendship. They were both assigned to police call, or clean-up duty, which included picking up cigarette butts littering the ground. Roberts complained to the sergeant because "neither of us smoked. It didn't seem fair." The sergeant agreed it wasn't fair since they didn't smoke and reassigned them both — to latrine duty.

"His talking got us in a lot of trouble," McCoy said with a smile, "but we have always backed one another." Though boot camp was tough, they both decided to make the military a career.

So determined were they to remain part of the Army that they both went AWOL, Absent Without Official Leave, to keep from receiving medical discharges. While assigned to different units in Vietnam, both were shot in their left sides in battles during 1968; Roberts in the arm and McCoy in the shoulder and clavicle area.

They crossed paths in the Vietnam hospital as doctors prepared medical discharge papers and orders to Walter Reed Medical Center in Washington, D.C. The men boarded an aircraft bound for the medical center, but when it arrived they were not aboard; they had taken another flight during a stopover and arrived at Fort Bragg, asking for assignments as platoon sergeants.

"We didn't accept that we were disabled," said McCoy, who along with Roberts continues to get the maximum points on regular PT tests. "We do max the tests, but we pay a price (from stiffness and soreness)" said Roberts, who carries an eight-inch jagged scar on his left forearm which he said he uses as a "measuring stick" for other challenges he has faced in life.

Throughout boot camp, duty in Vietnam, and several assignments at the same Army posts, the "airborne buddies" developed a friendship as close as brothers, but rooted in competition, they said. "He's always been there for me; he's my unsung hero," said Roberts; but that admiration didn't prevent arguments and fierce competition, he added.

Though they share identical military concepts rooted in mutual respect, they often argued minor points to the irritation of their superiors, they said. "One brigade sergeant major was tired of our arguing. He wanted us to settle it once and for all," said Roberts.

The burly soldier ordered the men to go behind a building and fight it out, said Roberts.

"Do you think we can take him?" McCoy whispered. Roberts eyed the 6'4" sergeant and replied, "I don't think so." The men went behind the building, but couldn't fight since their arguing had always been verbal, never physical. After that, they said they were careful not to argue around the brigade sergeant major, although their competitiveness was as keen as ever.

"We were always competing, and we both went to just about every Army school there is," Roberts recalled. "If one of us did better than the other, we'd rub it in," he said, even to the point of sequence numbers when they were both promoted to E6.

Though promoted at the same time, McCoy's sequence number was slightly lower "so he won that one," said Roberts.

They competed fiercely through every special school they attended together except Ranger School, which McCoy never completed. "He could have smoked Ranger School, except for the swimming," said Roberts. When ranger instructors fished McCoy out of a Florida swamp, they presented him with discharge papers and a yellow rubber duck.

McCoy, who loves challenges, the harder the better, was determined to try again, said Roberts. After returning to Fort Benning, McCoy arrived fully garbed in combat gear at the Briant Wells pool for swimming practice. Roberts was among the group of soldiers gathered around the deep end of the pool when McCoy jumped in.

Hundreds of bubbles rose to the surface then slowly began diminishing as the men placed bets on how long it would take McCoy to surface. When the bubbles stopped and the rubber rifle floated to the top of the pool, soldiers once again fished McCoy out of the water.

Though only one made it through Ranger School, McCoy and Roberts have both completed numerous military schools and earned a variety of distinctive awards while observing the changes in the Army during their 30 year careers. Throughout the decades, the soldiers said they have seen many changes in the Army including an emphasis on state-of-the-art technology and the emerging roles of females in the service.

McCoy said new equipment and training benefit troops and that "training and technology save soldiers' lives." Even in the civilian world, "Army training is a plus," said Roberts. As their military days draw to a close, the soldiers are looking at their options in the civilian world.

McCoy plans to open a business in Columbus while Roberts is still weighing choices in the Fort Benning area. "I may go to work for him," Roberts joked.

Regardless of what comes next, both men say they have fond memories of their military careers as they expressed the same sentiment, "We never got rich, but we learned to live well."

Explorer demonstrates survival techniques

Teachers, students learn from Arctic team expert

By Jennifer Chapman
Special to The Bayonet

Frozen winds whipping across seemingly endless plains of razor-sharp ice, northern lights arcing across the sky, the baying song of sled dogs — these things and more are in store for the six members of an international team of explorers attempting the first single-season dogsled crossing of the Arctic Ocean.

The six-member team of scientists and explorers, who will begin their four-month adventure Feb. 28, are part of an effort to broaden the minds of children around the world. Via telecommunications, selected students will be watching segments of the Arctic Ocean crossing.

The students will also be seeing examples of human impact on the environment of the Arctic Circle. According to one expedition member, the state of the Arctic Circle has a direct impact on the rest of the world, since air currents eventually cross into that icy region.

Julie Hanson, one of two female members of the international team, visited the Fort Benning area recently.

Hanson, a former biology teacher, originally hails from Minnesota. She has been a member of other cold-weather expeditions, including one to Chukotka in Northeast Siberia.

Hanson began her visit to the area Saturday. In a remote clearing in the Franklin D. Roosevelt State Park, Hanson met with a few Fort Benning school teachers and administrators to demonstrate survival techniques related to the ones she will be employing on her northern trek.

As part of an exercise in teamwork and cooperation, Hanson had the group gather together in a small ring and grasp the hands of their neighbors. Hanson then asked the group to form a large open circle while everyone was still holding hands. The trick was, no one was allowed to let go of the hands they held. What followed looked like a child's game combining elements of "Ring Around the Rosy," and "London Bridge is Falling Down."

Laughter broke the deep silence of the campsite as several members of Fort Benning Schools tried to get themselves out of the tangle they were in.

After they had learned to cooperate, the group split into two sub-groups and learned to navigate through the forest — the object being to find the other group.

Monday, Hanson visited a few Fort Benning schools and met the children in an informal question-and-answer session.

Dressed casually in a blue shirt, jeans and tennis-shoe-style hiking boots, Hanson appeared to be enjoying the Dexter school students' questions.

Sitting in a loosely-structured cluster on the dark blue carpet, the first-graders could hardly seem to take their eyes from Hanson as she explained that a polar bear probably wouldn't be able to sneak up on the members of the party while they were sleeping. One first-grader, his eyes troubled, waved his hand in the air and asked, "Why not?" Hanson explained that the dogs would alert the explorers if anything got too close to the camp. "But what if the dogs are sleeping?" asked one little girl.

The third-grade class, seated in a semi-circle of chairs on the edge of the carpet, seemed to be more interested in the gun Hanson said the explorers would be using to defend themselves against the polar bears. The gun, Hanson said, "is loaded with eight bullets. The first two are flares, the second two are plastic, and won't kill the bear, just hurt him a little ... then there are four real bullets." The message was explicit. The explorers would shoot and kill the bears only if necessary.

The biggest dangers, according to Hanson, are polar bears, deep cracks in the ice and the severe cold.

"If you know what you're doing, you'll be OK," she said.

Julie Hanson, one of six people planning to mount an expedition across the Arctic Ocean by dogsled, explains Arctic survival techniques.

Students all over the world will be watching the team at various points of the journey. With Hanson, will be one other American adventurer, Will Steiger; member of the Arctic and Antarctic Research Institute, Victor Boyarski; experienced polar traveler, Martin Hignell, from Great Britain; Takano Takako, a Japanese journalist; and Ulrik Vedel, a survival specialist and paramedic officer with the Danish military.

The team will be restocked periodically by supply planes, and some of the expedition will be accomplished by canoe since certain areas of the Arctic Ocean won't be frozen.

Hanson said she came to Fort Benning to speak to schoolchildren "to be connected" with them.

"It's really energizing to meet the kids and see how excited they are about it," she said.

Hanson hopes to link the children worldwide so they can communicate with one another through the explorers' team. Hanson also said this program should make the students more environmentally aware, so they can better understand the effect humans have on the world.

Contract management seminars available

National Contract Management Association

A series of seminars will be presented every Thursday through May 25 (excluding holidays) from 5 to 10 p.m. for those preparing to take the National Contract Management Association certified associate contract managers exam.

The seminars are being offered by the 'Follow Me' Chapter of NCMA Building 6, Meloy Hall, Room 218.

The purpose of the certification program is to certify the professional growth and accomplishments in the contract management profession, according to John Machovec, Fort Benning's director of Contracting.

Acquisition personnel who hold a certificate achieve greater respect and recognition by professionals in government and industry, and they have greater opportunity for upward mobility and are better equipped for the competitive market, he said.

The purpose of the program is to certify the mastery of the fundamentals of the government contracting profession through a combination of formal education, acquisition education and training, contracting experience and examination, he said.

The sessions can be considered as professional development and participants can get credit in their official personnel folder.

In order to get credit, participants must complete a Department of Defense Form 1556.

There is no cost associated with these seminars. Anyone interested in contract management can attend.

For more information, call Machovec at 545-5173 or Lucius Thomas at 545-2945.

Thief!

Would you steal from God?

By Clarke L. McGriff
USAIC Chaplains' Office

reflections

Would you rob God? That would be classed as the greatest heist of all time. Bigger than Tiffanys', bigger than the Great Train Robbery, bigger than the Savings and Loan scandal. What's worse, it happens all the time. Stop thief!

There is a peculiar dialogue occurring in the prophetic Old Testament book of Malachi. Actually, it is a monologue. Like a skilled prosecuting attorney, Malachi presents evidence in this brief book against those who claim to be God's people.

He uses a convincing style as he poses questions to the people. He knows full well what the answers are, but he proceeds to answer the incriminating questions with dramatic flair. The people of Malachi's day became complacent in their faith walk with God. In short, their talk was greatly out of line with their walk. Such a disparity caused the people to lose touch with God, a dangerous position.

The Book of Malachi reminds us of the "games believers play." It calls us to reexamine our own relationship with God. No halfhearted commitment will do, for truly the Lord is a "great King" (Malachi 1:14). One particular question Malachi poses in the book's third chapter really describes the condition of the people' hearts and attitudes during that day and is true today.

Verse 8 of chapter 3 asks, "Will a man rob God?" At first, such a question seems absurd. Who would dare to steal from God? On the surface, the response is, "No one in his or her right mind!" But we must remember that at the very base of our relationship with God is the matter of stewardship. God is the giver and we are recipients. Never has so much been given to so many who in return give so little.

Stewardship is a compound word in the Greek (oikonomia) which means "the management of a household." The person who administers the household is called a steward. A biblical example of this would be Joseph, who was the steward of Potiphar's house (Genesis 39:4-6). Stewardship is rooted in the creation account (Genesis 1:28-29) where God gave to man's charge the responsibility to manage the earth. Ownership in this matter is clearly defined, however. God declares that the earth and all upon it belong to him (Psalm 24:1).

Stewardship stands with other great profound and comprehensive words in the Christian vocabulary, such as faith, salvation and justification. It is comprehensive because it encompasses the whole of life. All that we are and experience is a gracious gift from God. Stewardship involves four major elements: master, servant, estate and accountability. God as master is owner of the vast estate of life. He has chosen me as servant and has entrusted me to manage certain aspects of this vast estate and expects accountability on my part. The critical issue to understand is that the servant has no ownership, but only responsibility to manage the master's estate. Failure to acknowledge this fact will keep an individual or a people fully out of step with reality. Men and women are stewards of God in their relationship to the world and in their relationships to God.

Often stewardship is identified only with the giving of money by way of offering or tithes at church. When you remember that stewardship involves all of a person's experience: health, food, clothing, spouse, children, friends, finances, talents — then everything is from God. We must manage everything as God decides. We are his stewards.

When we behave as if the blessings that surround us are actually our possessions, when we believe we can do as we choose, when we forget that there is a master and owner of all we see — the only appropriate declaration must be — Stop thief!

Veterans Day

There are still heroes to honor

By Kwon Pyo
USAIC Chaplains' Office

reflections

Today is Veterans Day. On this special day, we salute and thank all veterans who serve and have served in the armed forces of our country in peace and war. We thank them for their patriotism and sacrifice for our country.

Veterans — you are heroes and heroines. You have demonstrated that there is in life something worth living and dying for. You overcame self-interest and small-mindedness to lay down your very lives for the worthy cause of freedom, liberty and justice for all.

Today, many act like the sole purpose of life is seeking self-gratifying pleasures and self-interest. Yet people are getting weary of too much individualism and selfishness in our society. It is refreshing to our weary souls to know that we still have heroes and heroines to look up to. Veterans — we salute you again, our heroes and heroines. You have taught us that there is something worth living and dying for.

We also salute veterans of God's army. Spiritual war veterans have fought gallantly for their faith. Many have suffered death, torture, hunger, beating, confiscation of property and loss of job. Others suffer humiliation, mockery and exclusion. Yet they have stood firm in their faith in Jesus Christ. Their loyalty and devotion to their Lord enabled them to win spiritual battles. Veterans, you are our heroes and heroines. God bless you for setting godly examples.

Many of us are still fighting our own fierce spiritual battle for faith. To live a holy, righteous and godly life in this corrupt world, spiritual warriors have to resist and fight temptations and endure hardship.

Spiritual warriors — are you weary and tired in your struggle for your faith? Remember veterans who fought to keep their faith until death. Your fight for your faith will not be in vain. God will richly reward you. Hear the words of a veteran, the Apostle Paul, and be encouraged.

"I have fought the good fight, I have finished the race, I have kept the faith. Finally there is laid for me the crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous judge, will give to me on that day and not only to me, but also to all who have loved his appearing." (II Timothy 4:7-8)

God bless all our veterans and their families!

'Gone with the Wind' continues in 'Scarlett'

By Jay Bobbin
Tribune Media Services

According to one of the most famous heroines in fiction, "Tomorrow is another day."

SPOTLIGHT

For those who have been anticipating a certain miniseries for quite some time, "tomorrow" finally arrives this week.

Based on novelist Alexandra Ripley's best-selling sequel to Margaret Mitchell's Civil War-era classic "Gone with the Wind," the new CBS drama "Scarlett" airs in two-hour segments on Sunday, Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday.

Joanne Whalley-Kilmer ("Willow," "Trial by Jury") assumes the role that earned Vivien Leigh a 1939 Oscar as Scarlett O'Hara, the willful Southerner who's determined to win back the love of the dashing Rhett Butler (played by Timothy Dalton, star of the past two James Bond movies), her estranged husband who left her in the famous conclusion of the original story.

Though they reunite briefly in the opening portion of the follow-up, Rhett divorces her after meeting another woman (Annabeth Gish) whom he marries ... while Scarlett, with whom he had a daughter who later died, is pregnant by him again.

She vows never to tell him about their second child and leaves Atlanta for Ireland, where she seeks out her family roots. There, she becomes involved with the personable but sinister Lord Fenton (Sean Bean), who draws her into a situation that ultimately leaves her standing trial for murder — and that only Rhett can save her from — in the saga's final installment.

What: "Scarlet"
When: This week on CBS

Executive-produced by Robert Halmi Sr. ("Lonesome Dove"), directed by John Erman ("An Early Frost") and adapted for television by William Hanley ("Something About Amelia"), the epic tale features a predictably large supporting cast.

Among the other notable actors are: Ann-Margret, Barbara Barrie, Brian Bedford, Stephen Collins (as Ashley Wilkes), Sir John Gielgud, George Grizzard, Julie Harris, Tina Kellegher, Melissa Leo ("Homicide: Life on the Street"), Colm Meaney ("Star Trek: Deep Space Nine"), Esther Rolle (as Mammy), Jean Smart and Paul Winfield.

"It definitely is daunting," Whalley-Kilmer (the wife of "Top Gun" and "Tombstone" actor Val Kilmer) admits of taking on a role already defined so effectively not only in literature, but also on film.

"We had a lot of baggage that came with this one, and some big shoes to fill, as it were," Whalley-Kilmer said. "I think we all reached the same conclusion — that at a certain point, you just have to leap in and do it; otherwise, you'd never leave your house, you'd never go to work. You just have to forget that (background) and do what you're there to do."

Post gears up for 'loaded 45'

Saturday begins 45-day period of highest risk for accidents

By Ruth J. Spaller
Bayonet staff writer

Fort Benning is gearing up for the "loaded 45," the 45 highest-risk days for accidents and seasonal hazards, which begins Saturday and continues through Jan. 2.

"Arrive alive in '95" is the Training and Doctrine Command catch phrase for safety this holiday season, and post and community officials will be focusing their attention on safety in order to combat the risks soldiers, civilian employees and family members may face during this period.

With a holiday safety program zeroing in on this time of year — when people are traveling long distances to visit family and friends, weather conditions are often hazardous, daylight hours are shorter, hunting season is in full swing and people are gathering for parties and social events — accidents can be reduced dramatically, said Regis. P. Beighley, post safety officer.

Driving under the influence of alcohol, excessive speed, fatigue and lack of seat-belt use continue to account for the majority of fatal accidents, according to TRADOC officials.

By stressing the importance of driving and weapons safety during the next 45 days, the Infantry Branch Safety Office is hoping to help prevent those kinds of accidents, Beighley said.

The Military Police will also be stressing safety throughout the holiday season, said Staff Sgt. Joseph M. LaBranche, chief of the Traffic Section.

"We'll be doing DUI and safety checks at unspecified locations (on post) — and there won't be a set pattern," LaBranche said.

The MPs will be checking for adherence to weapons safety regulations and seat-belt use and will be on the lookout for drunk drivers, he said.

Safety Cab, a program providing free rides with no questions asked to anyone in the tri-community area who has had too much to drink, plays a definite part in making the holidays safer, Beighley said.

The program, sponsored by local businesses, will begin Dec. 16 and continue through Jan. 1. Rides will be offered from 7 p.m. to 3 a.m.

The phone number to call for a ride will be 323-0110. This number will be distributed through the club systems, food services and post units, Beighley said.

But, he stressed, the program only works if people use it.

"We really push the designated driver program, too," he said. "If you go to a party with a group, you should have one person who is the designated driver who only drinks nonalcoholic drinks."

Columbus recognizes Fort Benning, employees

By Jerrie Macintire
Special to The Bayonet ©

Fort Benning and one of its employees received top honors at the Mayor's Awards Luncheon honoring persons with disabilities Nov. 10 at the Holiday Inn in Columbus on Manchester Expressway.

Columbus Mayor Frank Martin recognized Fort Benning as the winner of the Large Employer of the Year Award as he presented the plaque to Theresa Gunter, director of Civilian Personnel, and said the post, "continues to hire those with disabilities despite downsizing."

Martin also recognized Larry Foxworth of the Directorate of Public Works, who shared the honor of Disabled Employee of the Year with Curtis Lacey of Burger King in Columbus.

Other Fort Benning employees who were nominated for the award and recognized with Certificates of Appreciation were Bobby White, Russell Scott, Michael Chapman and Terri Bass, who is a former winner of the Employee of the Year.

Hosting the awards luncheon is one way Martin and the Mayor's Committee for Persons with Disabilities have striven to raise awareness toward those with disabilities and recognize their contributions to society, said Mildred Watts, manager for the Individuals with Disabilities Program of the Directorate of Civilian Personnel.

Keynote speaker Wendy Petzold, Ms. Wheelchair America 1994, said "Being in a wheelchair is not disabling. A disability is a euphemism for a challenge."

The annual Mayor's Awards Luncheon is conducted in conjunction with National Disability Awareness month, which this year spanned part of October

VA insurance hoax resurfaces

Dividends are paid annually to current policyholders

Department of Veterans Affairs

An insurance hoax that first appeared more than 40 years ago continues to plague the Department of Veterans Affairs, this time with a new target — active duty military personnel.

VA's Regional Office and Insurance Center in Philadelphia reports that requests from military personnel for a nonexistent insurance dividend have increased since the Persian Gulf War.

For many years, the principal victims of the rumor were World War II and Korean Conflict veterans who were told the VA was sending a check for hundreds of dollars — a so-called insurance dividend — to any veteran who requested it.

In more recent years, however, bogus brochures have been targeting veterans of the Vietnam Era. The current hoax focuses on holders of Servicemen's Group Life Insurance.

The phony applications claim dividends or refunds have been recently authorized by Congress. In fact, there is no such dividend for veterans who do not keep their insurance in force, nor a rebate for active duty military personnel.

No legislation has been proposed in Congress.

The hoax causes thousands of veterans, active duty military personnel and dependents wasted effort, and it generates needless labor and mailing expense at the VA's 58 regional offices across the country.

The hoax applications usually are unwittingly printed in magazines, newspapers and newsletters, or distributed in handbills.

Recently, hoax mail has been printed on military unit or company letterhead. Attempts to trace the origin of the hoax have been unsuccessful, but it is believed that its life has been perpetuated by the innocent duplication of bogus information.

VA's legitimate insurance dividends are paid annually to current policyholders, usually on the anniversary date of the policy.

Some 3.5 million veterans share in an annual dividend distribution.

Payments are automatic to those who continue to pay premiums, and no application is needed.

Customer service is post's watchword

By Clyde Snively
Bayonet columnist

Working at the world's greatest Army post where customer service is hammered into our brains every waking moment can have its disadvantages.

When I go about post, I know I'll get service above and beyond the call of duty.

Just the other day as I was driving to the Army and Air Force Exchange Service garage on Main Post to get my week's supply of rubber bands, baling wire and bondo, I passed a guy who was jacking up his car with what appeared to be one of those commercial car jacks.

Entering the service department I was greeted by a friendly smile and cheery "good morning."

I wondered how anyone could be cheerful at that time of the morning, especially since it appeared she still had a wet head of hair.

During the conversation I discovered that she too had passed the same car, only when she passed it, he didn't have any jack at all. So she went to the garage and brought back one of their industrial strength devices. I noticed a Military Police officer was also out there helping.

So that started my morning off on a cheery note, despite my $59 bill for parts to keep Fritz running for a few more months.

I was sharing my thoughts on "what a great place Fort Benning was to live and work," when one of the civilians remarked that she wished some of the agencies servicing Fort Benning had the same standards.

"Whaddya mean?" I asked, perplexed.

"Oh, they've got a new civilian pay system coming on board that sounds like it'll be downright customer unfriendly.

"For instance, if you have your check mailed to your home and it gets lost, misplaced or delayed three times, and you report it to them three times, there ain't no fourth time. They stop mailing your check."

"Gosh, then what?" I asked.

"I think they make you open an account with a bank and have it mailed there, which is probably their intent all along," she said.

"Speaking of mail and checks," another civilian spoke up, "I had the laugh of my life the other day when I read how all local mail would be delivered within 24 hours and all first class mail within three days anywhere in the United States.

"I know I'll never see that day.

"Not only can't the post office get mail delivered, but when they mess up, you can't hold them responsible.

"For instance," ... he was on a roll now ... "the other day, after eight years of delivering my check to the bank once a month, they all of the sudden couldn't find CB&T on post.

"Fortunately it got into the Fort Benning mail system and some specialist managed to figure out where I worked and got it delivered ... 17 days late.

"In the meantime, since I hadn't checked to see if the check was in the bank — heck, it'd always been there before — checks came bouncing back faster than a rubber ball on a racquetball court.

"I had to take out a loan to cover them. And just to process the loan cost $75. Of course the Teflon post office isn't going to be held responsible for ineptness of its employees."

"Yeah," another civilian piped up, "'postal service' is an oxymoron. I've gotten to know my neighbors quite well thanks to misplaced mail. The other day, I got my neighbors' passports."

"Hey, how about this," Marm chimed in, "if I'm not home, the post office leaves a note I have a package. But instead of taking the package to the post office nearest my apartment complex, which, by the way, is open on Saturdays, they take it to one farther away, which isn't open on Saturdays. And of course it closes at five. People who live close to that post office, incidentally, get to go to the one I wish I could go to for their packages. Go figure."

I sympathized with all of them, but smugly thanked the Army for my electronically activated check to bank and thanked the Army for assigning me to Fort Benning, where people are customer-oriented and held responsible for their actions and inactions.

But beware, the rest of the world ain't like Fort Benning, so be careful out there.

dial 545-boss

Dial 545-BOSS is the commander's action line for soldiers, family members and civilians to call when they have problems or complaints that can't be resolved elsewhere.

While it is not a substitute for the chain of command or for agencies established to provide assistance, the line offers another means of communication between Fort Benning's community and commanders.

The Bayonet features some of the calls that may benefit other members of the Fort Benning community.

☎ Caller: I want to commend Dr. (Capt.) Paul A. Lester, of Martin Army Community Hospital Internal Medicine, and Dr. Autumn Levy, of MACH's Outpatient Pharmacy, for going above and beyond the call of duty.

They alleviated some fears that I had concerning the dangerous side effects I could experience from taking my prescribed medication.

I am very happy about the service I received from Martin Army Hospital.

(The following is an excerpt from a letter from the commanding general to Drs. Lester and Levy.)

It is a pleasure to commend you on your professionalism and consideration providing medical advice to our soldiers and their families. You take the extra time to explain all the side effects of prescribed medications, greatly alleviating concerns and fears.

Your actions demonstrate the caliber of soldiers and civilians that have made Fort Benning such a great place to live and work. I appreciate your hard work and am glad you are a part of our Fort Benning team!

☎ Caller: I will be clearing quarters next month. I want to know why the Housing Office has stopped doing preinspections.

I don't want the inspectors to tell me at my final inspection that I need to fix something.

Directorate of Public Works response:

Fort Benning no longer has sufficient personnel to conduct pretermination inspections.

All personnel who are moving out of post housing receive a package explaining the requirements for clearing and providing suggestions for a successful final inspection.

☎ Caller: I would like to know which clock is being used to determine when it is 6 a.m. Also, there are soldiers running physical training on roads that are off limits to runners.

Military Police Activity response:

The caller was advised that the time to initiate operation slow down is passed to the patrols by the desk sergeant.

The caller had been stopped for speeding at 5:55 a.m. When this was pointed out to the Military Police, the caller was not ticketed and MPA officials apologized for any inconvenience it may have caused him.

The caller was also concerned about runners on unauthorized roads (Sunshine and Sightseeing). He did not have a unit designation, therefore, contact could not be made.

However, to ensure personnel are aware of the safety hazards and regulation guidance, an article will be prepared for The Bayonet and Benning Bulletin.

Proclamation

Nov. 1 to 30 is proclaimed Native American Heritage Month at Fort Benning to recognize the contributions of Native Americans. This year's theme is "The First Americans — Proud and Strong."

The military and civilian contributions of Native Americans reflect a deep commitment to the principles of freedom and democracy, which are the strengths of the United States.

The Native American community has given us artists, sculptors, musicians, authors, poets, artisans, scientists and scholars, and they have made important contributions in many fields including agriculture, medicine, music, language and art.

The various Native American cultures continue to contribute significantly to our American society.

I encourage all personnel on Fort Benning and in surrounding communities to participate in this observance through the planned activities by units, staff and other agencies.

Boom!

Duds may be deadly if handled

By Marc G. Turchin
Bayonet staff writer

"Don't even touch it." That is the advice from representatives of the 89th Explosive Ordnance Disposal Detachment to people who find duds on or off post.

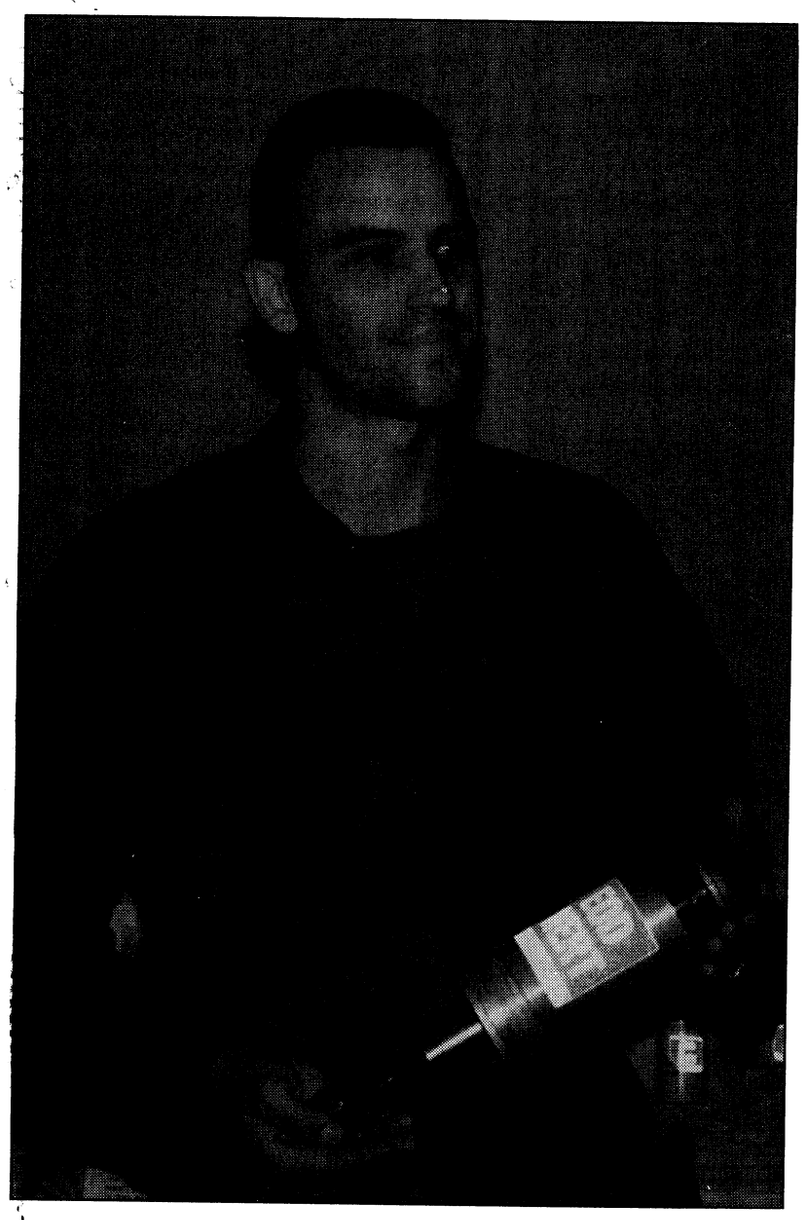
The detachment conducted a safety briefing Nov. 10 in Infantry Hall, Classroom 5.

Staff Sgt. Troy G. Pfertsh, EOD team leader with the 89th EOD Detachment, spoke in front of a display of explosives ranging from hand grenades to a World War II bazooka shell.

"We urge you, if you see any of this (pointing to the display) — do not pick it up or take it home," Pfertsh said.

The class was designed to make the public, both civilian and military, aware of the types of explosives and what to do if one or more is found, said Capt. Bill McDonough, commander of the 89th EOD Detachment.

"If you do anything other than find it (the explosive), if you put your hands on it, you're liable to get hurt," McDonough said.



The class covered a full range of explosives, including:

- Projectiles — mainly used with artillery or mortars
- Rockets
- Guided missiles
- Grenades — both hand and rifle.

McDonough said in the last fiscal year, the 89th EOD Detachment responded to 225 calls in which something, ranging from scrap metal to a full explosive, was found.

Back in 1992, Pfertsh helped carry a civilian who was killed on Hartell Observation Point after he apparently came in contact with a dud while searching a known "dud" area for souvenirs, Pfertsh said. He added it was not known how the dud exploded. He and his team did not arrive until hours after the accident.

The detachment covers 55 counties in Georgia, Florida and Alabama.

Marc G. Turchin

> "If you do anything other than find it, if you put your hands on it, you're liable to get hurt."
> — Capt. Bill McDonough
> Commander, 89th EODD

When a call comes in to the detachment, either from a law enforcement department or an individual, a response team is sent to the location, McDonough said.

After linking with the caller, the team will evaluate whether or not the find is a hazard. If it is a hazard, he said, the team will take the appropriate steps. If it's not a hazard, they will still dispose of the find.

The best thing people can do if they find an explosive or something they think may be harmful is not to touch it, McDonough said.

"Call us, that is the only safe thing they can do," he said.

If a potentially hazardous object is found on post, call the Military Police. If it is found off post, call the local police department. The authorities will contact the 89th EOD Detachment.

Conference focuses on gang violence

By Stephen Barrett
American Forces Information Service

Gang violence, youth employment and teen activities highlighted discussions at the Department of Defense Youth Action Conference recently in Tampa, Fla.

Hosted jointly by DoD and the Training and Doctrine Command, conference participants identified approaches that may help youngsters resist joining gangs, resist engaging in violence and avoid using drugs.

"This is really the first time we've zeroed in on adolescent issues," said Gail McGinn, DoD's family policy support and services director. She reviewed DoD policies during the conference, focusing on programs that will help teens become more active in communities.

McGinn said commanders are concerned about gang activity and gang violence. According to Col. Richard A. Pomager Jr., law enforcement and security director for the Training and Doctrine Command, the problem of youth violence goes deeper than a social or an installation issue for the military. "It is a readiness issue," he said.

Pomager said military parents distracted by family problems are less likely to be able to effectively perform their duties. "The perception that gangs are infiltrating installations is reinforced by the fact that there has been an increase in violence and crime among young family members," said Pomager.

Part of the problem is that "gang life" is intruding more on the military community. "In some areas, gangs are using our installations as neutral turf," Pomager said, "and sometimes their presence can lead to problems."

He explained one case involving a military youth who invited local kids to a party at his on-post home. Unknowingly, some children he asked belonged to two rival gangs. When the two gangs met, a fight occurred, prompting military police assistance.

The traditional military approach to dealing with "problem kids" on installations is to remove families from post housing

The traditional military approach to dealing with "problem kids" on installations is to remove families from post housing. "That only relocates the problem, it does not solve it," Pomager said. "We have to help youths, parents and commanders to head off such crises."

Pomager said military children face the same pressures as all youngsters, but frequent relocations may add to the problem of socialization and adjustment. "Kids who move frequently with their parents are probably more vulnerable to negative influences," he said.

To help combat the problem, McGinn plans to suggest commanders design more comprehensive youth programs for their installations. "Programs should involve a variety of installation programs and resources," she said.

"The transition program should include informing kids on services and agencies available to them during their stay. Family member employment programs should provide job information for those wanting to work after school."

Commanders should design programs where community leaders, health officials, military police and family service centers listen to teen concerns. "We've spent a lot our time and efforts with child development and family advocacy programs and haven't really focused on teen issues," McGinn said.

Listening to youngsters has been the keystone of an Army program in existence since 1991. Teen Discovery is an annual gathering of youngsters from Army installations who offer advice about intervention methods.

"We get realistic advice," said Lee Morrison, head of the TRADOC's youth services and Teen Discovery manager. "Some of the kids who attend the conferences 'have been there.' They've been into scrapes on Army posts and are trying to help keep other kids from repeating their experiences."

Civilian communities and military installations have programs in existence that were examples during the conference. One highlighted program was "Wings of Eagles" at Fort Sill, Okla.

"We target sixth-graders who are about to move into junior high school," said Maj. Randy Garibay, who runs the Fort Sill program. "We want to instill in them the confidence and independence to resist gang involvement, and to show them the benefits of getting a good education."

Pomager said each service has programs to help youth to develop their potential, self-esteem, independence and values. The conference will highlight these programs.

"We want to identify possible solutions that commanders can use to immunize military kids against imitating the gang culture," he said.

LUNCHEON:

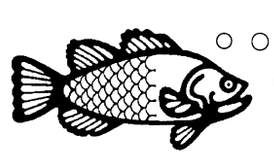
and November. The banquet was one event in a slate of activities that heightened awareness toward those who achieve independent lifestyles despite disabilities, Watts said.

Although many disabled individuals succeed in the work force, census bureau figures estimate there are 49 million disabled persons in America unable to find employment.

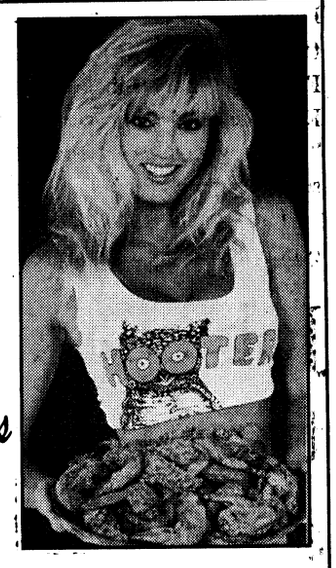


Fort Benning has won this award several times since 1979 for its aggressive hiring practices for disabled individuals.

Fort Benning employs more than 300 employees with varying disabilities from mild to severe, Watts said.

"Downsizing has affected our work force, but we continue to be involved in advocating for persons with disabilities," said Watts.

"The program has continued success because of support from command groups, managers and supervisors," she added.



Since 1945, the United States has recognized National Disabilities Awareness Month.

2/29th's dining facility cooks up troop support, keeps earning awards

By Brett Chamberlain
29th Infantry Regiment

"Providing the best possible food service support to the troops."

According to Robert M. Trombley, dining facility manager for 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, that's the most important role he and his staff can fill.

If earning postwide recognition is an indicator, then he and his people are definitely doing their jobs.

In a ceremony Nov. 9, the dining facility was presented with the Best Full Service Dining Facility Award for fourth quarter, fiscal 1994, by Col. Richard L. Rutledge, garrison commander. Rutledge labeled the staff as being "an integral part of the heart of service support."

The award, the second of its type earned by the facility this fiscal year, marked the fourth time the staff had been recognized during the past 12 months. In addition to this award, they had received the same honor for first quarter, a Fit for Life award and the Best Decorated Mess Award for Thanksgiving 1993.

"You have to take care of the soldiers," Trombley, a retired sergeant first class, said. "I learned that nearly 30 years ago from my first mess sergeant and it still is true today. They deserve nothing but the best."

And the best is what they have received. Sgt. 1st Class Johnny Webster, Co. D, 2nd Bn., 29th Inf. Regt., named the facility "the best mess hall I've eaten at in my 15 years of service. The food is good and the staff is always friendly and courteous."

"It's easy to be nice to the soldiers," Sarah Hambrick, dining facility data entry clerk, said. "They make us smile, they make us enjoy our jobs. They really make our day." She paused for a moment, then added, "I wouldn't trade this job for anything. These soldiers have almost become like family to me and serving them is my privilege."

Job search training available

Job Assistance Center

Job search training is essential in preparing soldiers for transition from the military into civilian life, according to Harold Ericksen, Job Assistance Center manager.

In most instances, soldiers have never searched for employment, having come into the military directly out of high school or college, he said.

"The job market today is extremely competitive and success depends on having a comprehensive understanding of the job search process and executing the process with great confidence and enthusiasm," Ericksen said.

Free job search training is provided by the Job Assistance Center.

Each of the six counselors in the JAC have master's degrees in human resource related areas.

Also, they are certified counselors with human resource experience in both the public and private sectors.

Training begins with an eight-hour workshop conducted each Wednesday in Classroom 30, Infantry Hall, from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m., and is available for transitioning soldiers, spouses and Department of the Army civilians.

Reinforcement training is conducted through individual counseling in the Job Assistance Center using a variety of video, computer and library materials.

Ted Craig, Army Career and Alumni Transition Services manager, said he encourages all qualified individuals to participate in the JAC Job Search Training Program.

The training includes:

Personal assessment

- Identifying stress and using it to your advantage.
- Maximizing use of available time and money.
- Identifying transferrable skills.

Establishing job search objectives

Expanding opportunities

Networking

USO announces scholarships for some military family members

United Service Organizations Inc.

ATLANTA — Family members of active-duty military personnel who have graduated from high school within the last four years are eligible to apply for the Budweiser/USO Scholarship Program sponsored by USO and Anheuser-Busch Companies Inc.

"With the deployment of troops to Haiti and the resurgence of tensions around Kuwait, we are reminded again of the special hardships military families must face," said Chapman Cox, world USO president. "These scholarships recognize the extra efforts made by these students."

Fifteen $1,000 scholarships are awarded to college-bound students on the basis of scholastic records, test scores and extracurricular activities.

Applicants must also submit a narrative describing how living in a military environment has contributed to their personal development.

The scholarship program is made possible through an endowment to USO by Anheuser-Busch Companies according to Mary Lou Austin, president of USO of Georgia Inc.

"The scholarship program is a great example of the many programs the USO offers military personnel and their families, and given the number of military personnel and families in Georgia, there is much interest in this program," Austin said.

Applications are available through USO and must be completed and returned to USO World Headquarters by the first of March. Spouses are encouraged to apply.

Scholarships are awarded by members of the Budweiser/USO Scholarship Selection Committee. Recipients will be announced in May. For an application and details about the Budweiser/USO Scholarship Program, contact USO of Georgia Inc., Budweiser/USO Scholarship Program, P.O. Box 20963, Atlanta, Ga. 30320.

The United Service Organizations Inc. is supported by individual and corporate donations, United Way and Combined Federal Campaigns. Today's USO provides services for American soldiers and their families at 160 locations worldwide.

Cougars slash Road Dogs 12-7 for post title

Terry K. Ray/Special to The Bayonet

Defense plays 'one of best games of season'

By Terry K. Ray
Special to The Bayonet©

In a game that had the potential to be a barn burner, the Cougars of Company C, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, used defense to become post champions Nov. 8 at Doughboy Stadium with a hard-fought 12-7 victory against the Road Dogs of the 104th Transportation Company, 36th Engineer Group.

"Our defense played one of the best games of the season," said Cougar quarterback Tim Sloan. "On their only score of the game, our guys just missed the flag. We had a good game plan going in; on that play we just missed the flag."

The Road Dogs jumped out to the early advantage on their second play of the game on a 60-yard run by tailback Stephen Bush, who threaded his way through the Cougar defense for the score. The extra-point conversion was good on a pass from quarterback Jacob Knight to receiver Gerald Austin for a 7-0 lead early in the first half.

The Cougar offense, not wanting to be outdone, started its second possession of the half from its own 30-yard line. On first down, Sloan hit wide out George Boyd with a pass over the middle. Boyd turned upfield and sprinted to the end zone for a 50-yard catch-and-run touchdown. The extra-point try was missed, leaving the Cougars trailing 7-6 with 10 minutes left in the half.

The Road Dogs failed to move the ball on their next possession and punted to the Cougars, who set up shop at their own 17. The Cougars moved the ball out of the shadow of their goal post on two plays for a first down at the 23.

The next play, Sloan looked to hit receiver James Davis on a crossing pattern. Cornerback Andre Grace stepped in front for the interception, killing the Cougar drive at the 38.

With less than two minutes left in the half and the ball on the Road Dog 38-yard line, the Road Dogs tried a trick play. A lateral from Knight to wide out Everett Smallwood and then a forward pass from Smallwood to receiver Gary Scott was picked off by Davis playing safety on defense in the Cougar end zone, ending the Road Dog threat.

With time running out in the half, the Cougars mounted what would turn out to be the winning drive.

Starting at their own 20, the Cougars moved the ball out to their own 39 on three plays. On fourth down, Sloan was able to draw the defense offsides with a hard snap count and move the ball for a first down at the Road Dog 36. A 15-yard unsportsmanlike-conduct call against the Road Dogs moved the ball down to the 21-yard line. One play later, Sloan found Davis streaking down the left sideline and dropped a perfect pass into Davis' hands for the go-ahead score. The conversion failed, leaving the Cougars up by the scant margin of 12-7 at the break.

The defenses would leave their mark on the game in the second half of play.

The Road Dogs opened the second half with a drive that started from their own 22. Four plays and a first down later with the ball on the Cougar 30-yard line, the Road Dog offense looked on the verge of taking the lead, but an errant pass by Knight was picked off at the Cougar 17 by Levin Handy and returned to the 25, stopping the drive.

The Road Dog defense stiffened and on three plays shut the Cougars down, forcing a punt by kicker Steve Shawver.

The Road Dogs took over at their own 23-yard line and took the next five minutes to drive the ball downfield to the Cougar 18, setting up first-and-goal for the Road Dogs. A procedure call on the offense moved the ball outside the 20-yard line for the Road Dogs.

On first down, Knight scrambled for 10 yards. A swing pass to Bush out of the backfield moved the ball down to the 1. Knight was stopped for no gain on third down, setting up a fourth-and-goal from the 1. Knight tried to hit Grace in the end zone, but Davis picked the ball off for his second interception of the game, stopping another scoring threat.

The Cougars were able to move the ball down to the Road Dog 23, taking precious ticks off the game clock, before the drive stalled, giving the Road Dogs one final shot at winning the game.

Two offensive penalties moved the Road Dogs back to their 15 and on second down Bush was stopped for no gain. On third down, Knight was sacked by Boyd at the 5, setting up a fourth-down-and-long situation. Knight's pass to Bush fell short, giving the ball over to the Cougars with less than a minute to play.

Sloan ran out the clock, giving the Cougars the win and the title.

"We knew we could go deep on them by setting their corners up with short passes," Sloan said. "Once they came up on the short pass, Davis and Boyd went deep. I've played for post championships while in Germany but never won. This feels great. We came together as a team at the right time and look what happened."

Vikings slip by Jaguars in rain-soaked game

By John W. Peeler
1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment

The Vikings and Jaguars met recently on Blue Field with both teams trying to improve on their records, but the Vikings came away from the rain-soaked struggle with a 12-0 victory.

The Jaguars received the opening kickoff, were unable to move the ball on three downs and were forced to punt.

The Viking defense tightened up and forced a 14-yard loss on the punt attempt and took over the ball on the Jaguar 11-yard line.

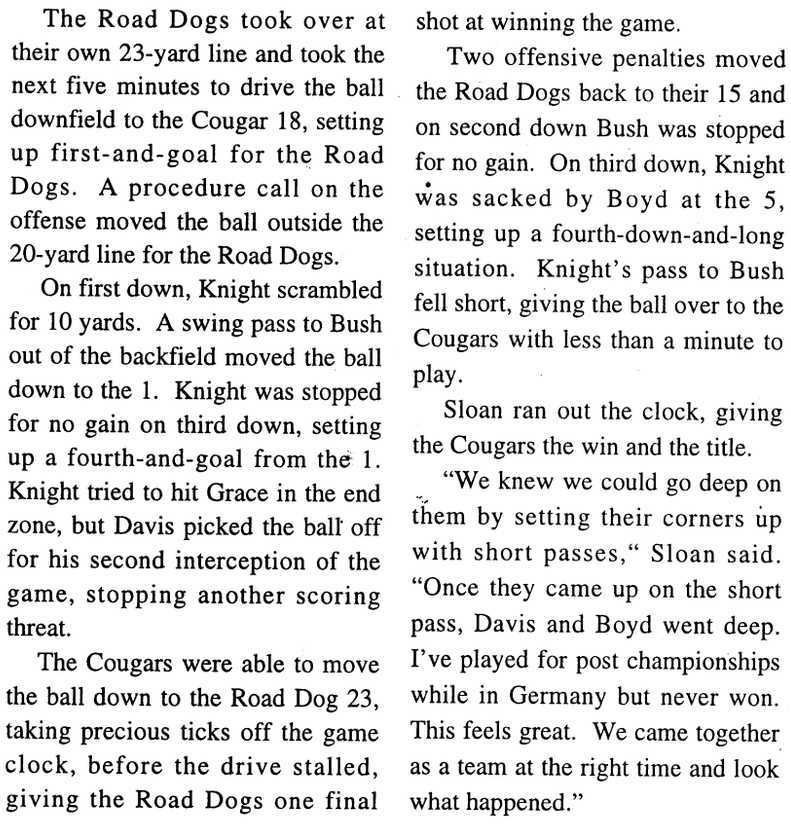
Two plays later, Viking wide receiver Jamaal Ruffin scored on a 9-yard run giving the Vikings an early 6-0 lead.

The Jaguar defense stuffed the 2-point conversion and the Vikings led 6-0.

The Jaguars' next possession led to a 20-yard punt and the Vikings took over on their own 35-yard line.

The Vikings put together a 13-play drive, eating up the rest of the first quarter and most of the second quarter.

The drive culminated in a 10-yard touchdown pass from Viking quarterback Michael Peeler to Ruffin.



Crucial runs of 27 yards by Peeler, 16 yards by running back Tavaras Scoggins and 13 yards by running back Edwin Jackson set up the score.

The Vikings were unable to convert the extra point and led 12-0.

The Jaguars had one more chance at the ball and were driving as the half ended.

As the second half opened, the rain began to fall, seriously hampering both teams' offense.

Neither team's offense was able to put together a scoring drive, and with both teams' defense tightening up, the game ended with the Viking victory.

CISM

U.S. soccer team falls to Canada in championships

By Stephen Barrett
American Forces Information Service

Canada's Lt. Phil Johnston used his head to eliminate the United States from next year's world military soccer championship recently.

Johnston's header in the first half's 22nd minute became the game-winning goal, giving Canada a 2-1 victory over the American armed forces team.

The win, combined with an earlier 2-1 victory, gave Canada a two-game sweep of the Americas' Cup soccer tournament in Victoria, British Columbia, Sept. 11 to 12. It also gave the Canadians the Western Hemisphere's berth at the 1995 Conseil Internationale du Sport Militaire, better known as CISM, soccer championships next September in Rome.

With the game tied 1-1, Canadian striker Lt. Mark Lewis drilled a shot toward American goalkeeper Jason Hart, a Marine Corps sergeant from Camp Pendleton, Calif. The shot hit the crossbar and bounced back into play.

Johnston, charging the net on the Lewis shot, beat Hart to the rebound, heading the ball past Hart for the winning goal.

Trailing by one game and defending their 1992 title, the Americans needed a win in game two to force a third contest. The first step toward tying the series came when a shot by Glenn Melia beat Canadian goalie Cpl. Ken Roy, giving the U.S. team a 1-0 first-half lead.

The tally came at the eight-minute mark and was Melia's second tournament goal. Melia is an Air Force captain assigned to Vance Air Force Base, Calif.

Canada recovered two minutes later, using a free kick by Capt. Mark Brady to tie the contest at the 10-minute mark. It stayed that way until Johnston's game winner 12 minutes later.

It was the second time the Americans wasted a Melia goal in the two-day tournament. Melia's goal in the 13th minute of game one gave the U.S. team a 1-0 lead that held until the final minutes.

With 90 seconds remaining, Canada's Sgt. Dave Ruthermund spoiled Hart's shutout and U.S. victory hopes. In beating Hart, Ruthermund's goal evened the game at 1-1 and forced overtime.

Two minutes into the extra period, Canada's Lt. Eric Paquette scored the game-winner, giving the Canadians a 2-1 victory and the series lead.

Canada, the United States and Suriname normally compete every two years for the Americas' Cup and a single berth into the CISM tournament. Suriname, in South America, did not compete this year.

GUN SAFETY

AMU soldiers share knowledge

Marc G. Turchin

By Marc G. Turchin
Bayonet staff writer

Soldiers from the U.S. Army Markmanship Unit conducted a briefing about gun safety Nov. 7 at Tommy G. Pool International Shooting Complex.

Four members of the unit, all specializing in different types of guns, talked about the dos and don'ts of gun safety.

"If we can do anything to prevent one person from having one gun accident, we've done our job," said Col. Mac Johnson, AMU commander.

A rifle, different shotguns and several handguns were displayed while AMU members discussed how to be safe with each kind of gun.

Three fundamental rules were stressed at the briefing;

- Always keep the gun pointed in a safe direction
- Always keep fingers off the trigger until ready to shoot
- Always keep the gun unloaded until ready to use.

Other guidelines for safe usage of a gun are:

- Be sure the gun is safe to operate
- Know how to use the gun safely
- Use only the correct ammunition for the gun
- Know the target and what is beyond
- Wear eye and ear protection as appropriate

Three fundamental rules were stressed at the briefing;
• Always keep the gun pointed in a safe direction
• Always keep your finger off the trigger until ready to shoot
• Always keep the gun unloaded until ready to use

- Never use alcohol or drugs before or while shooting
- Store guns so they are not accessible to unauthorized persons
- Be aware that certain types of guns and many shooting activities require additional safety precautions.

Sgt. 1st Class David E. Sams, a gunsmith with AMU, acted as host of the briefing. Sams asked the soldiers questions about certain weapons and the soldiers explained proper loading, firing and unloading of the guns.

"If you are (going to) be a gun owner, it's incumbent upon the owner, as Sergeant Sams said, to make him or herself familiar with the safety features of the weapon and with safe gun-handling procedures," Johnson said.

Army to inactivate 18 ROTC units

Army News Service

WASHINGTON — The Army has recently announced that 18 Army Reserve Officers' Training Corps units throughout the country will be inactivated following the 1994-95 school year.

The closings are based on projections of a smaller Army and a shrinking national defense budget, officials said.

Army ROTC is still represented by 316 units in all 50 states, Guam and Puerto Rico.

Students who wish to enroll in ROTC, and cadets enrolled in units slated for closure will, when possible, have a chance to "cross enroll" in a ROTC program at a nearby campus with a cadet battalion.

The closing units are:

- San Jose State University, San Jose, Calif.
- California State University at Long Beach, Long Beach, Calif.
- University of Bridgeport, Bridgeport, Conn.
- University of North Florida, Jacksonville, Fla.
- Dillard University, New Orleans, La.;
- Louisiana State University in Shreveport, Shreveport, La.
- Delta State University, Cleveland, Miss.
- Northwest Missouri State University, Kirksville, Mo.
- Washington University, St. Louis, Mo.
- University of Nebraska at Kearney, Kearney, Neb.
- Elon College, Elon College, N.C.
- University of Tulsa, Tulsa, Okla.
- Pennsylvania State University at Altoona and Schuylkill, Pa.
- University of Puerto Rico Humacao College, Humacao, Puerto Rico
- Benedict College, Columbia, S.C.
- University of Tennessee at Chattanooga, Chattanooga, Tenn.
- University of Wisconsin-Whitewater, Whitewater, Wis.

SOA instructors chosen for TRADOC competition

By Judith Grinder
School of the Americas

The School of the Americas will be sending two candidates to the 1994 TRADOC Instructor of the Year competition.

Capt. Andres F. Aguirre, SOA guest instructor from Mexico, and Sgt. 1st Class Pedro L. Guerad, SOA senior medic instructor, were both named SOA Instructor of the Year by the Staff and Faculty Development Division at SOA.

The division chooses one officer and one noncommissioned officer every quarter as Instructors of the Quarter. Of those people, two are selected to represent the school at the Instructor of the Year competition.

To compete at TRADOC level, Aguirre and Guerad must each submit a packet, including a biography and a videotape of a class they have taught. Also, each man's supervisor must send a letter of recommendation and a list of their respective achievements while at the School of the Americas.

Aguirre sent in his videotape of a class taught in psychological operations, civil military operations and human rights. Guerad's videotape is of a class on evacuation under direct fire.

Aguirre said that because of SOA's high past participation in this TRADOC competition, he has a strong desire to do well in the competition, which will be decided in January.

Soldiers of future to have best technology has to offer

"By developing the most modern and effective equipment, we expect at least a four-fold increase in the soldiers' performance on the battlefield."

— Col. Robert M. Tesdahl
Chief, TSM — Soldier Systems

From the boots on their feet to the rations they eat, soldiers of the future will be ready for battle with the best technology has to offer; and, Fort Benning is playing a vital role in the modernization effort.

Oct. 13, some of the Army's top developers, including the then commander of the Training and Doctrine Command, Gen. Frederick M. Franks Jr., and Army Materiel Commander Gen. Leon E. Salomon, visited Fort Benning to participate in the Soldier System Program Review, an annual meeting designed to check the progress of the development of the soldier of the future.

Col. Robert M. Tesdahl, the chief of the TRADOC System Manager — Soldier Systems, said the review was basically about getting "more bang for our buck."

"The purpose of the review was to give Army leaders an overview of how the modernization process works, insight into current developments and ways the system can be streamlined to promote efficiency," he said.

For the first time in history, he said, the Army is looking at the individual soldier as a system to be developed and modernized in the same fashion as a weapons system. Fort Benning's TSM-Soldier Systems is one of the focal points for a complex network of numerous Army agencies that are working together to modernize the equipment and capabilities of all soldiers, not just soldiers in combat-related positions.

Ideas for new developments come from all over, Tesdahl said, from combat development and research agencies, from feedback from soldiers in the field and from Fort Benning's Dismounted Battlespace Battle Lab.

The basic strategy, he said, is to make soldiers of the future more lethal, survivable and comfortable by improving their uniforms and equipment.

"We are looking at creating a fundamentally different but exponentially better soldier," Tesdahl said. "We are closely examining everything the soldier wears, carries and consumes in a tactical environment from protective clothing to communications equipment to individual weapons. By developing the most modern and effective equipment, we expect at least a four-fold increase in the soldier's performance on the battlefield."

Many of the current improvements are modular, he said. That is, smaller items are being improved individually that will collectively increase the effectiveness of the soldier, from lightening the Kevlar helmet without compromising its ballistic protection capabilities, to designing new load-bearing equipment that is lighter, more comfortable and distributes the weight more evenly than the current model does.

"These modular improvements are the little items, from rain gear to sleeping bags, that affect all soldiers everywhere, every day," he said. "Some of these items may seem small, or even trivial, yet they are all vitally important to the comfort and effectiveness of the soldier. It takes a lot of gear for soldiers in the field, and the better it works, the more effective our force will be."

In fact, improved rain gear and sleeping bags are two items soldiers will be using fairly soon, he said. The new rain gear, which will replace the current wet weather parka and pants, will be made of a material that is breathable, thus providing increased comfort and protection against wet weather.

"Soldiers in the field have complained that the current rain gear is hot and often doesn't provide effective protection," he said. "The new rain gear is very similar to a commercial product many soldiers have been buying on their own for many years."

The Army currently uses three different sleeping bags for different climactic conditions. The new sleeping bag will replace all existing bags and will include multiple bags that can be combined to adapt the bag to any climate.

Work on integrated soldier systems, in addition to the modular improvements, continues to be vitally important, Tesdahl said.

"Land Warrior" is the term coined for a developing system that will integrate, miniaturize and digitize much of the equipment and capabilities of the dismounted infantry soldier to increase his fighting ability.

The future possessions and abilities of the land warrior will include:

- A modular weapons system, based on the M-16, that can be transformed into a grenade launcher or shotgun and that will include a thermal weapon sight, infrared aiming light and full compatibility with existing night vision equipment
- An advanced combat uniform that will include increased ballistic protection and advanced load carrying capability
- A helmet that includes a heads-up display linked to an individual soldier computer that can provide laser range finding, combat identification, image intensification, maps with global positioning and the ability to take video photographs.

This year, two new integrated systems have been added to the Land Warrior. The Air Warrior and Mounted Warrior systems will provide similar capabilities to helicopter and tracked vehicle personnel.

Such developments are not merely theoretical, Tesdahl emphasized; they are well on their way toward full development and in many instances have already been approved for mass production and fielding.

"Land Warrior is a reality and has already been tested by individual soldiers in tactical environments," he said. "Next year we will equip entire Land Warrior platoons for testing at the Joint Readiness Training Center."

In fact, Tesdahl said, field testing, is one of TSM-Soldier Systems strengths. Systems are being fielded to the soldiers as they are developed in order to get immediate soldier feedback, rather than waiting for the entire system to completely mature before finding out what soldiers think of new items.

Tesdahl said the review was an excellent opportunity for Army leaders to witness the developmental process.

"The review gave us an excellent chance to ensure that the Army leadership is speaking with one voice and moving in one direction," he said. "Our efforts have gained tremendous momentum, and we are truly greatly enhancing and will continue to enhance the future fighting force."

world war II

50 years ago this week ...

- There were Allied advances all along the Western Front. British and American troops captured Geilenkirchen, the northern pivot point of the German line across the Cologne plain. The British XII and VII Corps made ground near Venlo while to the south the U.S. Third Army completed the capture of Metz. Elsewhere on the Western Front, the Allied troops continued to push the German 15th Army back deeper into Holland.
- In the Pacific, U.S. troops enveloped the Japanese at the western part of Leyte Island. Despite several attempts by the Japanese to break through the U.S. roadblock south of Limon the U.S. troops repulsed them and then smashed through the city, practically destroying the Japanese 1st Division. Meanwhile, U.S. Navy planes destroyed or damaged four troop-laden Japanese ships attempting to reinforce the besieged Japanese garrison on Leyte Island.
- On the homefront, 50 Negro seamen were sentenced to 8 to 15 years in prison at hard labor and given dishonorable discharges for mutiny when they refused to load ammunition in San Francisco. The men, some of whom had advanced technical training, claimed that the conditions were unsafe following an explosion July 17. Thurgood Marshall appealed the case and won an acquittal in January 1946.
- At Fort Benning, the mascot of the 2nd Academy Company, 2nd Parachute Regiment, a German police dog named Mike, made his second jump. The dog was found in Alabama half starved and friendless and adopted by the cadremen of "F" stage.

DNA testing means 'no more unknown soldiers'

By Evelyn D. Harris
American Forces Information Service

"No more unknown soldiers (sailors, airmen or Marines)" is a goal the Department of Defense set for itself a long time ago. In the Persian Gulf war, the department finally met that goal.

New facilities for the Armed Forces DNA Identification Laboratory dedicated June 21 in Rockville, Md., should make the identification process faster, according to Army Dr. (Lt. Col.) Victor Weedn, who heads the lab.

"Families, service members and society have an expectation that we will identify those who have made the ultimate sacrifice as quickly as possible," said Weedn, "and we owe it to them to try to meet that expectation."

Identification is important to bring closure to families, said Weedn, but it's also important to individual service members.

"In the Civil War, many soldiers spent their own money to engrave their names on metal tags so their bodies could be identified if they fell on the field of battle," said Weedn, a forensic pathologist.

"In 1906, the War Department began issuing metal dog tags to military members. Still, until Operation Desert Storm, we have had to bury someone from every major war in the Tomb of the Unknowns. Thanks to DNA technology, we hope never to bury another soldier in an 'unknown' grave."

The military still uses fingerprints and dental records as the primary means of positive identification. But the lethality of today's battlefield and other factors make it important to have DNA identification capabilities as well, said Weedn.

"Fluoride in the water means fewer people need dental restorations, which are the basis for most dental identifications in mass disaster situations. Only 70 percent of military personnel have usable fingerprints on file," said Weedn. "Furthermore, DNA records are easier to automate than dental records. Moreover, DNA testing is rapidly becoming the new standard of identification to which the military will be held," Weedn added.

Weedn's lab is part of the Office of the Armed Forces Medical Examiner at the Armed Forces Institute of Pathology. Staffed by personnel from all services, it gets its funding through DoD's medical budget, administered by the assistant secretary of Defense for health affairs. Weedn left an academic career and joined the Army in 1988 to set up the military's DNA program.

Weedn worked alone until the Iraqis invaded Kuwait in August 1990. Military officials stepped up funding for the program during Desert Shield and Desert Storm. By the end of the war, Weedn had a deputy, former Vietnam War medical evacuation pilot James Canik, and one DNA analyst, Deborah Fisher, to help him.

The plan was to collect DNA 'dog tags' — blood and oral swab samples — from every deployed service member. This did not turn out to be feasible in the short run, but lab experts were still able to identify multiple remains sent to them. In most cases, they used DNA simply to reassociate body parts. However, in a few cases they used it for identification.

Without a DNA sample taken during the person's lifetime, forensic pathologists have to do some detective work. They can do a "reverse paternity" test if the deceased's parents are still alive. They may also use blood or oral swab samples from the deceased's children. These methods require having to ask grieving relatives for samples and are more time consuming than comparing the remains against a DNA dog tag.

These problems led then-Deputy Secretary of Defense Donald Atwood to authorize a DNA repository for all service members.

After the war, Weedn and his staff further improved their identification techniques. They practiced by analyzing Civil War remains. In December 1991, the Army's Central Identification Laboratory in Hawaii asked Weedn's lab to help in identifying Vietnam War remains.

"The lab in Hawaii can identify most remains the traditional way — from dental records or anthropological methods," said Weedn. "But for many remains, DNA analysis is invaluable."

At the time Weedn and his staff were working in four tiny rooms at the Armed Forces Institute of Pathology at Walter Reed Army Medical Center in Washington. Because of to space limitations, they could assist the Hawaii center with only one skeletal remains identification a month, so the Army funded renovation of a facility. Weedn's new lab has more than 9,000 square feet of laboratory space and boasts state-of-the-art equipment. With more space the lab has been able to hire 23 new people.

James Wold, deputy assistant secretary of Defense for prisoner of war and missing in action affairs, spoke at the facility dedication. Wold said he learned to appreciate the value of DNA in his days as a "country lawyer."

"This facility will mean DoD can go from identifying 10 remains a year to 100 a year," said Wold. "Families will be the big beneficiaries of this technology," he added.

Some 2,200 service members from the Vietnam era remain unaccounted for. Army Mortuary Affairs estimates the new facility can help with about 300 to 500 of those. But if negotiations with North Korea work out, an estimated 8,100 remains from that conflict will be returned.

"Most of the Korean remains will require DNA testing, because we don't have good dental and other records from that period," said Weedn. "This is a daunting task for Korean War identification. The Defense Science Board is examining the issue."

But for identifying remains from future battles, the laboratory will get an assist from the DNA Repository located down the road from it. Beginning in 1992, the services started collecting blood and oral swab samples from new recruits and have since started collecting from the rest of the force.

By the end of the century, officials hope to have every service member on the register. They'll make two cards for each service member. The service member will carry the primary DNA dog tag card, which contains a bloodstain, fingerprint and bar code.

The other card will be stored along with an oral swab at the DNA Repository. There, individual cards will be stored in vacuum-sealed packages and frozen to preserve them. By 1998 the repository will replace the service's duplicate pantograph (dental X-ray) program.

The science board will set up an independent panel of outside DNA experts to review the accuracy of the Armed Forces DNA Identification Laboratory's work, Weedn said "Family members today can and do go out to private DNA labs to review our work," Weedn said.. "I have confidence that we're doing a good job, but a review panel will help ensure our quality stays high."

Canik, Weedn's deputy, said he knows having a DNA program will raise the specter of "Big Brother" in the minds of some. But he wants to assure service members that the lab staff places a high priority on privacy and will adhere strictly to the Privacy Act.

"The specimens will be maintained in a physically secure fashion. Multiple levels of electronic security have been built into the computer file system. Access to the specimens will be controlled and limited. Our DNA typing results are 'noninformative' and are simply used to confirm individual identity."

Military Police Activity

TAKE A BITE OUT OF CRIME

This week's hot topic deals with larceny of private property. Reports of theft involving vehicle stereo equipment have fluctuated throughout the year.

With the holiday season approaching, criminals undoubtedly will be on the prowl for some unsuspecting victim's cassette deck and perhaps even the speakers, too.

As the owner of this equipment, you want to make it as difficult as possible for would-be thieves by securing your vehicle every time you are away from it.

Remember, it only takes a thief a few seconds to steal what you've worked so hard to get. Keep security in mind everywhere you go. If at all possible, attempt to park in well-lighted areas and keep valuables out of sight.

In most cases, thieves "case" the vehicle to determine if there is anything of value to steal, and if so how much risk is involved. In several recent vehicle break-ins, people living in the vicinity of the crime reported hearing unusual noises but didn't feel it was necessary to notify the Military Police.

Military Police officers respond to many calls in which criminal activity hasn't actually occurred, but it's far better to call and have the MPs find nothing amiss than to not call and find that someone has been victimized.

If you hear or see any activity that appears to be out of the ordinary, please call the military police at once.

The following entries were taken from the Fort Benning Military Police blotter. They may be incomplete and do not determine the guilt or innocence of any person.

• A private first class was charged with drunk and disorderly conduct, carrying a concealed weapon, unlawful discharge of a firearm and damage to government property.

The soldier was drinking with some friends in a housing area when he pulled out a 9mm pistol and accidentally fired the weapon. The round went through the closet door and landed inside the furnace room.

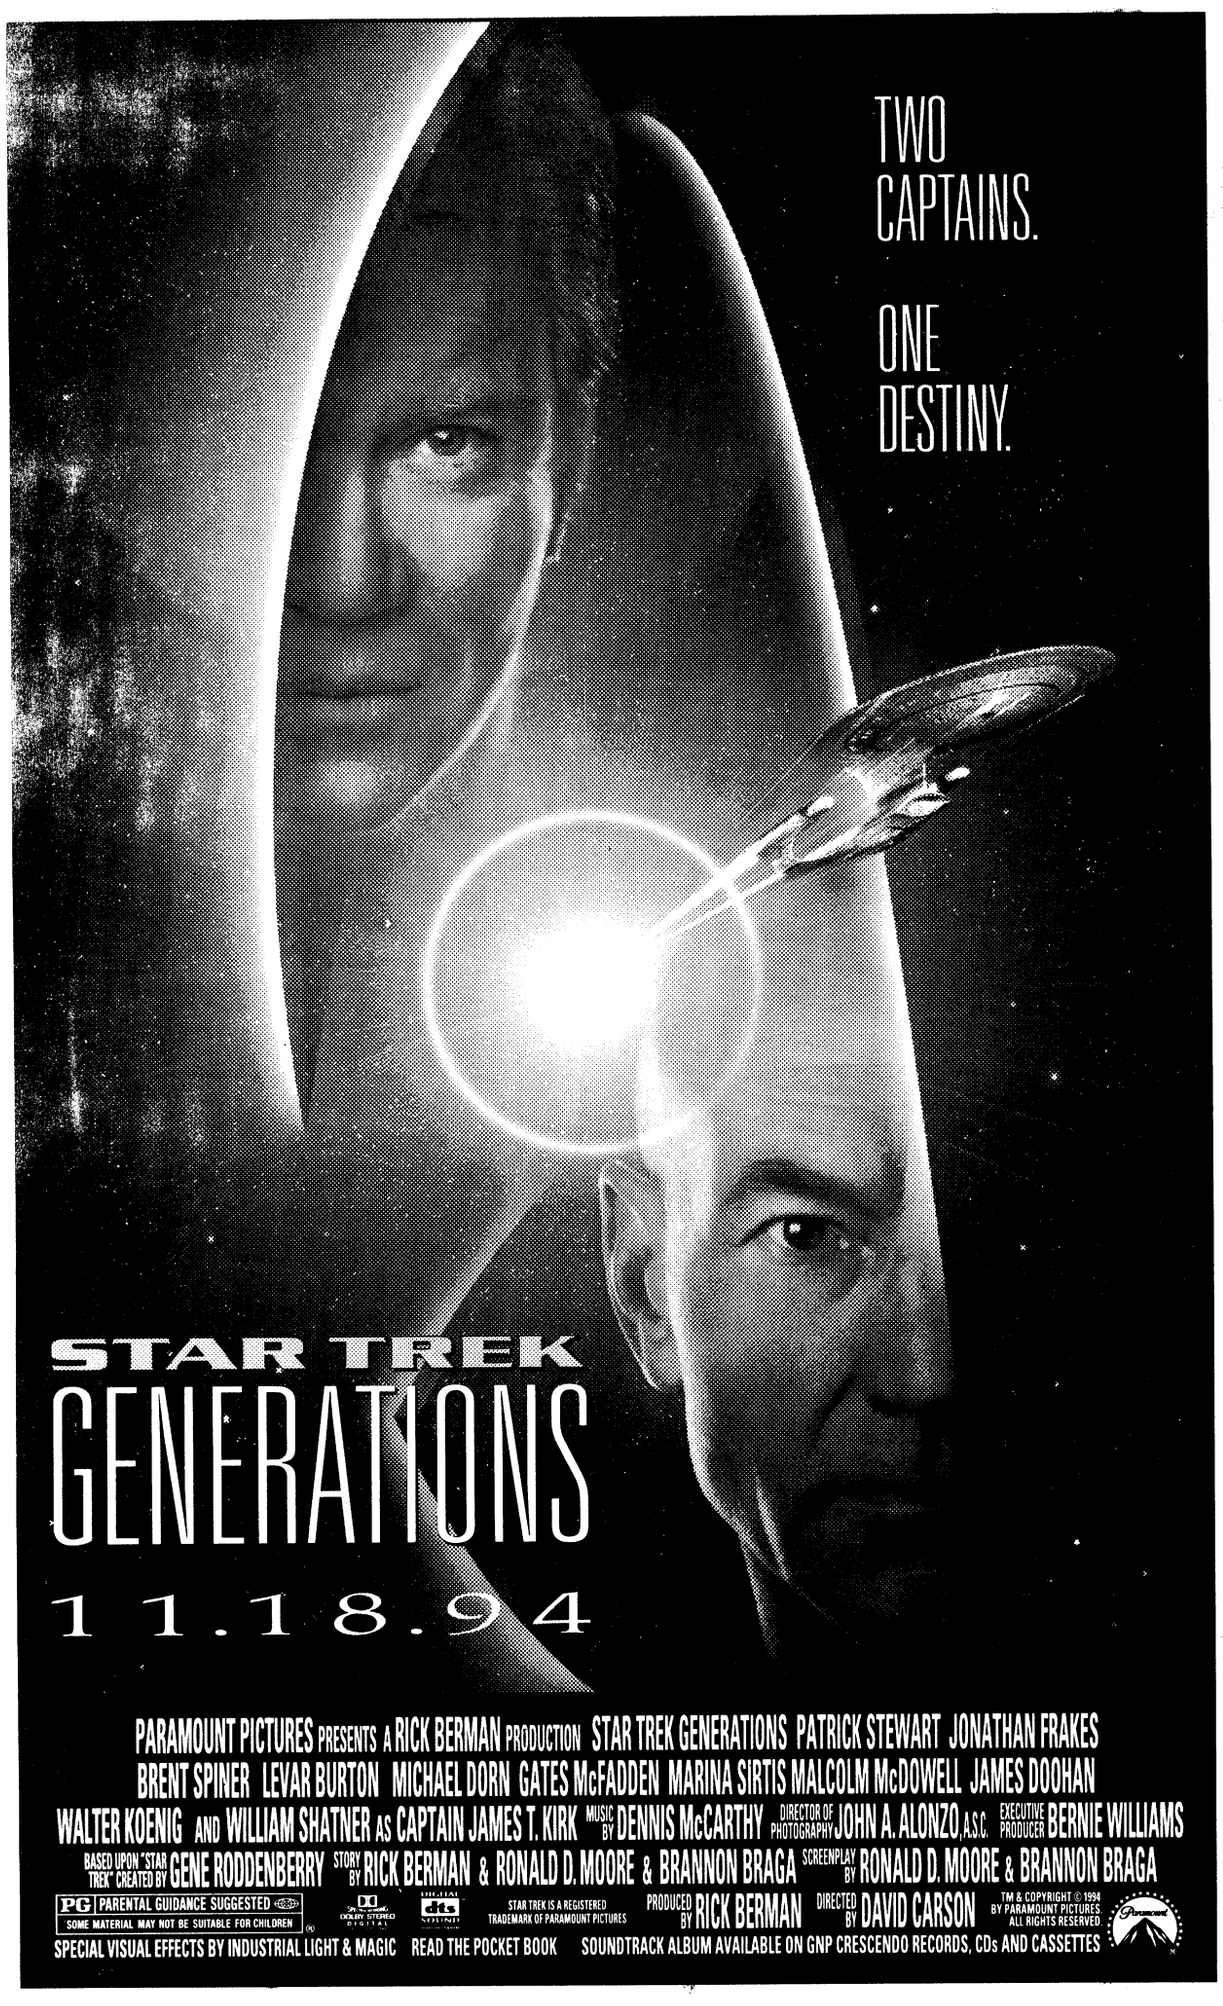
When the occupant asked the private to leave, he became very argumentative and refused. Upon arrival of the Military Police, he was apprehended, processed, cited and released to his unit.

• A retired sergeant first class was charged with shoplifting at the Main Exchange. He was seen concealing video tapes on his person and then leaving the store without rendering payment.

He was stopped and detained. Once the Military Police arrived, he was apprehended and taken to the station where he was processed, issued identification card confiscation orders and his post exchange privileges were suspended.

• A sergeant was charged with larceny of government funds. The soldier was residing in government quarters and continued to draw basic allowance for quarters for more than a year.

During this time, the soldier received approximately $3,764 in allowances the soldier was not entitled to.



• A specialist was charged with assault against his wife. He and his wife were involved in a verbal argument that escalated when he struck her in the face several times with his fist, threw her down to the floor and kicked her in the side of the head.

The soldier was apprehended and transported to the station. His wife was taken by ambulance to the post hospital and treated for her injuries.

Other activities include eight cases of driving under the influence of alcohol, 12 traffic accidents, 18 cases of larceny and five cases of shoplifting reported at the exchange facilities.

Remember to help "Make Our Post the Best — Give Crime Arrest."

Report any activity that seems wrong or out of place to the Military Police at 545-5223 or 545-5224 or the "Crime in Progress" line at 545-5222.

Faith's sports program has something for all

Editor's note: This is the second of a series on the middle school.

By Jerrie Macintire

SERIES: Middle School part II: Physical Education

On most days, the gymnasium at Faith Middle School resembles a beehive with students constantly in motion whether the day features badminton, basketball or boccie.

As the youths swarm with activity under the direction of five physical education instructors, one thing is obvious — every student is a "worker bee" in this community of middle schoolers.

Inclusion

This philosophy of inclusion of all and exclusion of none is an important component in the concept of sports in the middle schools, according to Beth Middlemiss, Faith School principal.

By providing a variety of sports and encouraging universal participation, teachers at Faith are helping students develop social skills, bolstering self-esteem, and instilling a sense of belonging to the school community, Middlemiss said.

"In the three years we have them, we try to introduce all our students to as many activities as we can," said Scott Denney, PE teacher.

Research shows students who are active during the day as sports participants rather than observers tend to learn constructive social skills and relate to fellow students more positively, according to the Phi Delta Kappan education magazine.

Stress reduction

A universal sports program has the additional benefit of serving as a physical kind of therapy, relieving stress middle schoolers may feel in other areas of their lives as they go through various physical, social and emotional changes related to adolescence, educators say.

"They do need this activity as an outlet," said Susan Emerson, Faith PE teacher.

Since the implementation of a middle school philosophy in the Fort Benning School system, "our participation has increased each year."

"We have about 99 percent participation in the sports programs here," said Emerson, who, along with the other four PE teachers, has presented seminars on the model program at Faith School during national conferences.

Universal participation encourages good sportsmanship as students learn to work as a group toward a common goal, said Amy Dixon, PE teacher at Faith.

Variety

"In general, PE teaches social skills, and our short units also help with self-esteem," she said.

PE units at Faith Middle School are usually two weeks in length, just enough time for an introduction and a foundation for participation later in life, she said. Because of the short instructional units, PE teachers at Faith are able to offer more than 100 different classes per year for the three grade levels combined, teachers estimated.

By encouraging students to be participants instead of bystanders, the program at Faith "lays the foundation for lifelong skills and helps students become successful in sports beyond middle school," said PE teacher Katie Patenaude.

Individual focus

"We are geared toward the individual student," said Jim Cochran, another PE teacher who cited "peer teaching" as one successful technique in helping students.

Through peer teaching, Cochran said educators match individual students in mutually beneficial groups for certain sports activities; superior athletes gain a sense of well-being by helping less gifted players, who in turn develop better skills and a sense of self-worth through participation and the encouragement of others.

By showing support and occasionally bending the rules to favor the less-gifted athletes, students gain a sense of heightened sensitivity to others, Patenaude said.

This type of positive behavior is less likely to occur in a competitive sports arena where ability and the chance to win outweighs the humanitarian aspects of sports, educators say.

Multiple skills

Enhancing social and emotional development, or affective skills, is just one goal of the program at Faith, Cochran said; in addition to affective development, the PE program also helps with problem solving, or cognitive development, and psychomotor skills or physical competence.

The program at Faith depends upon progressive blocks of instruction to teach these skills, Denney said.

"The program at Faith is a developmental process, which establishes building blocks of skills. The progression is simple to more complex," he said.

Progressive teaching

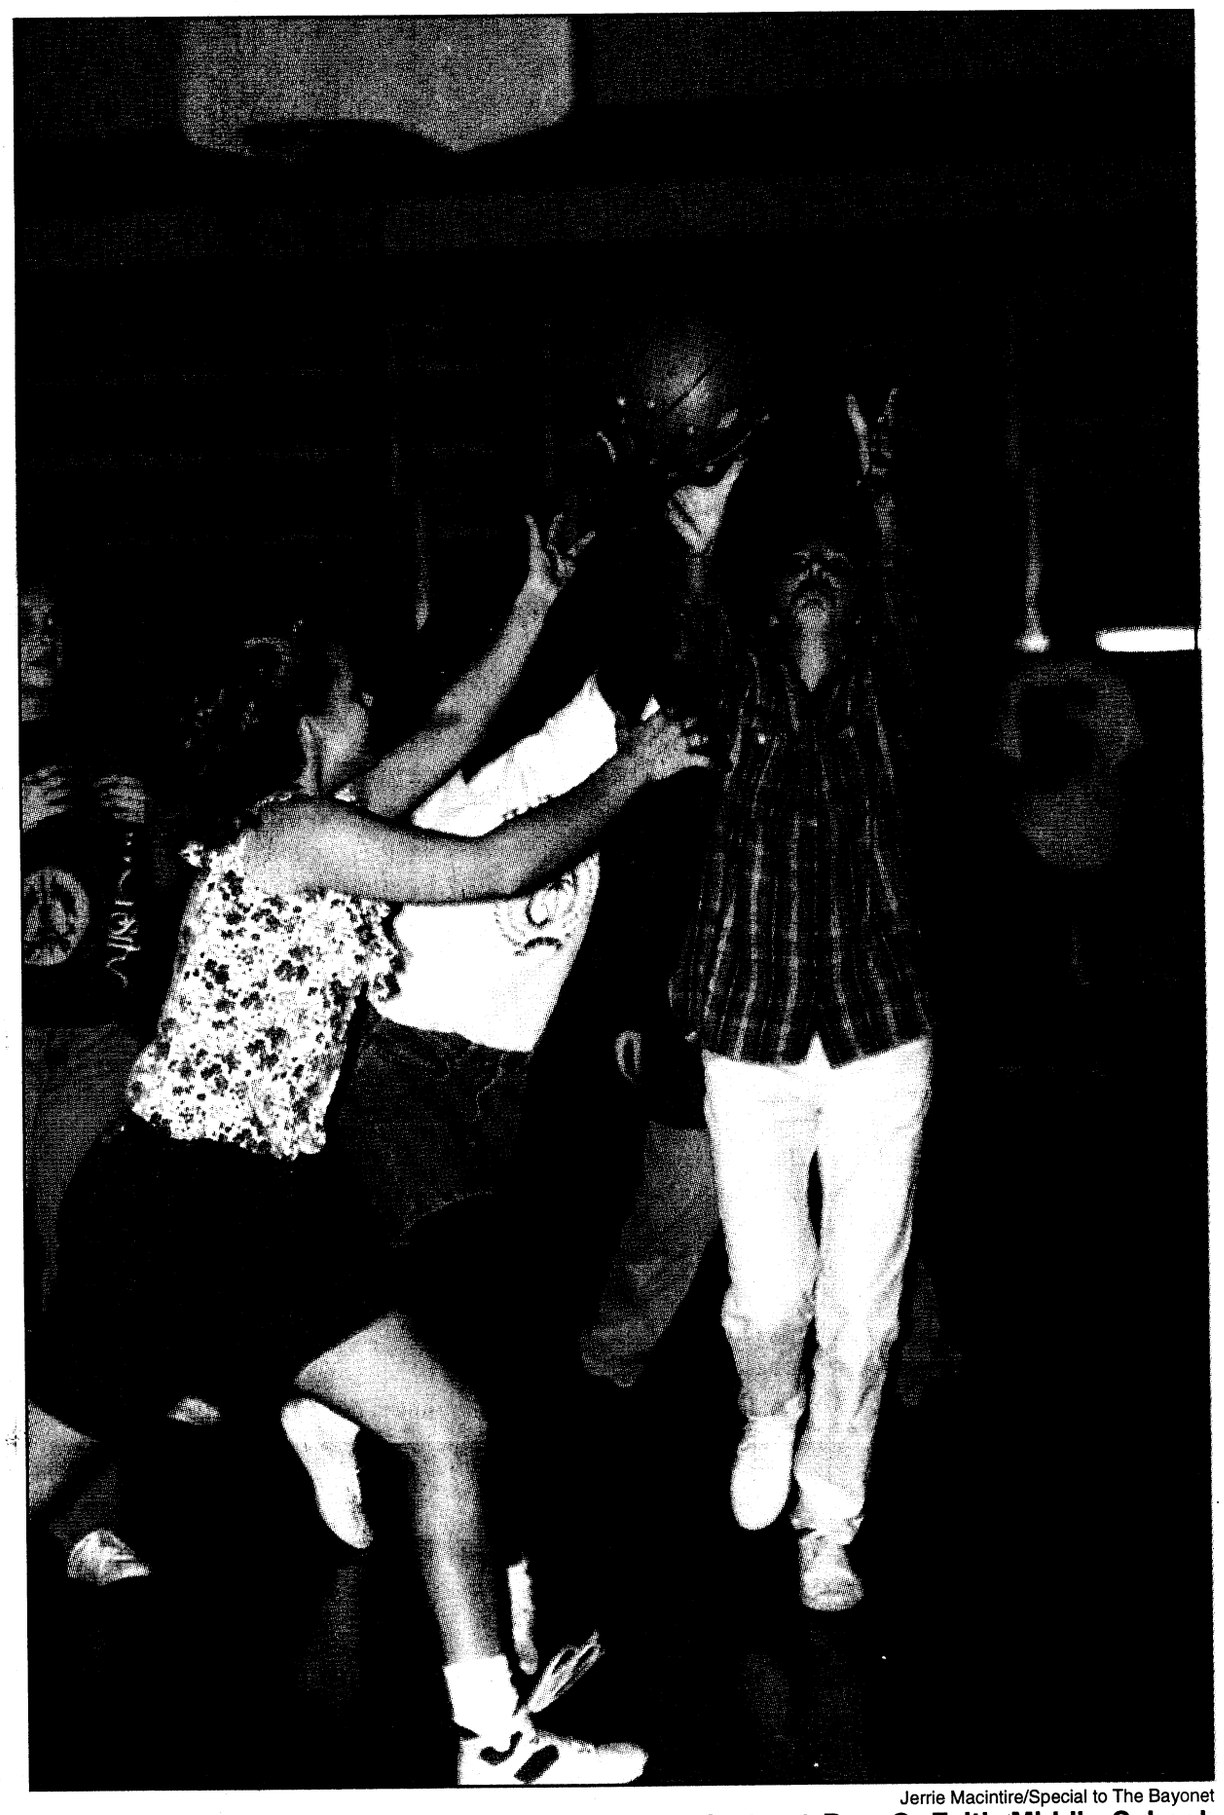
For example, when teaching the game of volleyball to sixth-graders, the PE staff teaches "newcomb," a modified game allowing participants to catch the ball before returning it over the net.



Seventh-graders learn "volley newcomb," a hybrid game, and eighth-graders learn the traditional game of volleyball.

By showing sensitivity to the varying skill levels and teaching skills in a progressive manner, teachers say they hope to bolster self-esteem and lay the foundation for physical skills in preparation for high school.

"Middle school is an age where kids are looking for their niche," Cochran said. "The program is set up to help them explore these opportunities."

If a student finds a niche in the sports arena, Faith offers a variety of intramural activities after school including jogging, basketball, badminton, weight training and volleyball. Special events like the Faith Holiday Race, scheduled for Dec. 3, offer additional chances for participation .

Whatever sports arena students find they like, the Faith staff hopes the strong PE program will give all participants the feeling of being on a winning team, Middlemiss said.

Beneficiaries eligible for mail-order medications

Martin Army Community Hospital

Beneficiaries of the Civilian Health and Medical Program for the Uniformed Services can now order up to a 60-day supply of maintenance medications through a new mail-order pharmacy program.

Congress directed the Department of Defense to test the program for a two-year period. DoD selected the following states as test sites: New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Delaware, South Carolina, Georgia and Florida.

The new program, according to Col. Errol L. Moran, chief of the hospital's Pharmacy Service, is designed to make it easier to get prescribed medications.

"For people who rely on maintenance medications to help them control conditions such as high blood pressure, diabetes or asthma," Moran said, "mail-order pharmacy is much more convenient because it allows them to get a two-month supply of the medication at one time."

Birth control medications, insulin, insulin syringes and blood and urine glucose test strips are also covered.

Prescriptions for non-narcotic medications will be accepted when written by civilian or military authorized prescribers; however, prescriptions for narcotic medication are limited to authorized civilian providers.

Moran said the prescriptions are delivered free of charge.

> — Col. Errol L. Moran
> Chief, Pharmacy Service

The cost of mail-order prescriptions covered under the program will be $4 for active duty family members and $8 for retirees and their family members for up to a 60-day supply.

In addition to CHAMPUS-eligible participants, the program is available to DoD beneficiaries 65 or older who are eligible for Medicare and who live within the catchment areas of the former Homestead Air Force Base in Florida and Myrtle Beach Air Force Base in South Carolina.

Other areas will be added in these six states as bases close as a result of official base closure actions. The co-payment for Medicare eligible beneficiaries is $8 per prescription for up to a 60-day supply.

Typically, prescriptions will be filled within 48 hours of receipt. People who work at registered pharmacies personally inspect all prescription orders before they are boxed and delivered, free of charge, by the U.S. Postal Service or other registered carriers.

The mail-order pharmacy, contractor providing the benefit is Health Care Services Inc., an Albuquerque, N.M.-based company that manages prescription drug benefits for corporations, health-care groups, organizations and insurance companies nationwide.

For more information, contact the health benefits adviser at 544-3461.

Fourth-graders at White Elementary learn by growing beans

Jennifer Chapman
Special to the Bayonet

Fourth-graders at Edward A. White Elementary school are learning to put their educations to practical use — by growing beans.

The "laboratory" where the students conduct their science experiments is a room filled with scaled-down equipment and filtered sunlight, with leaves of vines twisting their way up the windows.

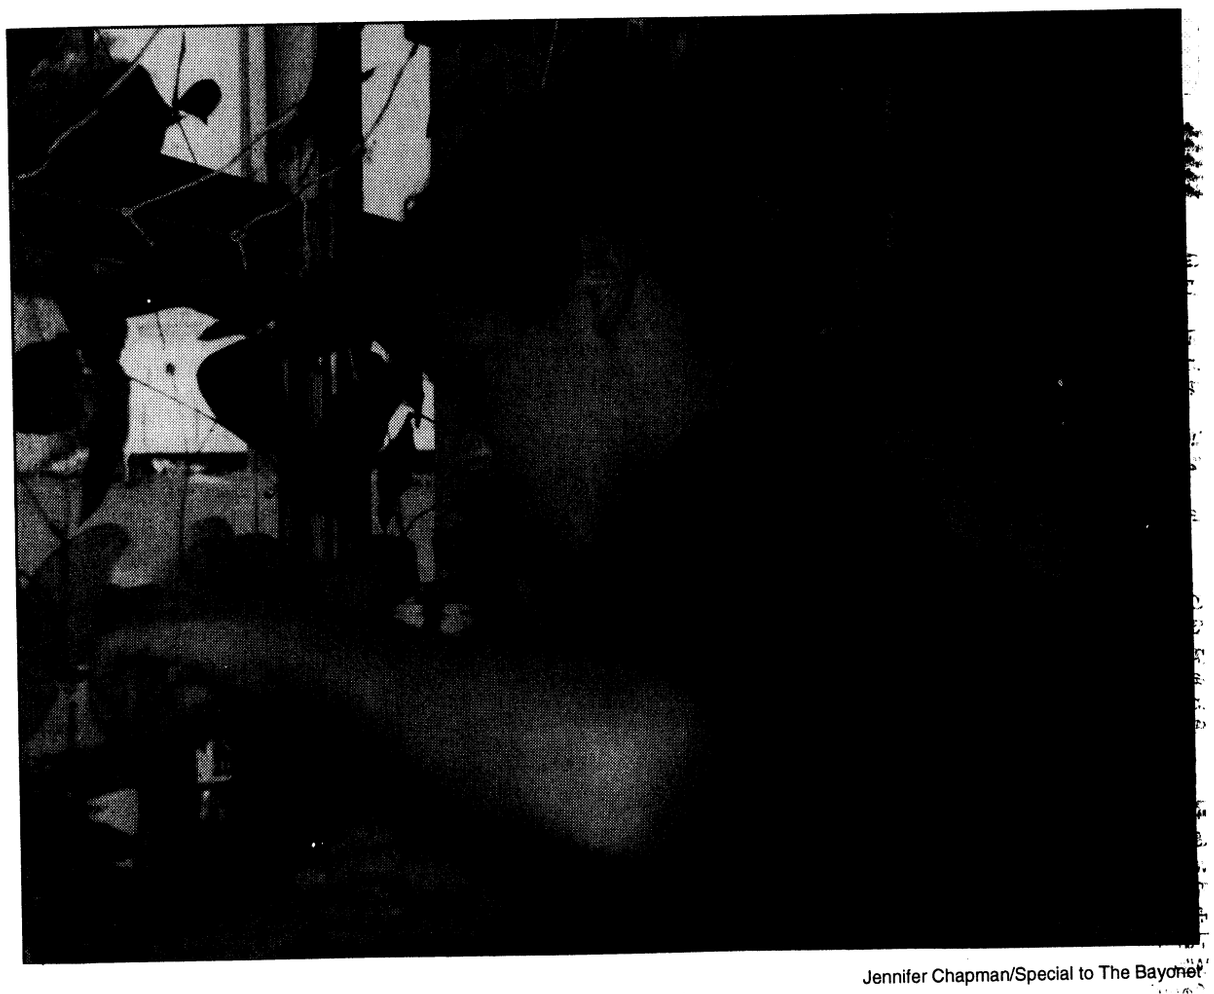
Graphs charting the plants' progress dot the walls along with illustrations of past experiments and materials for future learning opportunities.

Into the room troops a small group of students. They chatter among themselves as they make their way to the table in the center of the room where graphs, charts and graduated cylinders wait. The children sit in their chairs and turn their attention to one of the parent volunteers who help teachers with science experiments.

Teachers and parent volunteers say the experiment allows the children to practice all the skills they've learned — reading, math, science, graphing and the metric system.

The children water the plants in precise amounts, then measure their growth. By varying the amount of water each group of plants get, students can see the effects of water deprivation firsthand.

The plants' growth is calculated, charted and compared to plants in other controlled groups.



Kara Roth and Sue Rutledge are two parent volunteers for the science projects conducted at White Elementary. Roth and Rutledge work with small groups of children as they perform their experiments.

According to Kris Keske, a fourth-grade teacher at White, the program would not be possible without Roth and Rutledge.

"Parent volunteers expand learning opportunities so much," Keske said. With the help of parents, teachers are able to design more elaborate experiments because the classes can be broken down into smaller groups, Keske said.

"You have the parents in here, and the kids can see that school is not just teachers," said Melanie Keating, assistant principal.

Keating said this type of activity shows the children that they can learn from a variety of people whether they are teachers or not.

Native Americans fought bravely in 2 world wars

By Evelyn D. Harris
American Forces Information Service

Many Indians who fought did not even have U.S. citizenship, although individuals were awarded citizenship for their valor in battle

American Indians have fought bravely for our nation from its very beginnings.

On March 13, 1778, George Washington wrote from Valley Forge to the commissioners of Indian Affairs asking for 400 Indians. Wrote Washington, "I think they may be made of excellent use, as scouts and light troops mixed with our own parties."

One surgeon at Valley Forge, a Dr. Waldo, wrote, "I was called to relieve a soldier thought to be dying. He expired before I reached the hut. He was an Indian, an excellent soldier, and has fought for the very people who disinherited his forefathers."

American Indians fought on both sides in the Civil War, and the U.S. Indian Scouts helped open the West by protecting railroad workers and settlers.

During World War I, the first major American involvement in a foreign war, some 25,000 Indians fought for their country. Of these, 17,313 registered for the war, 6,509 were drafted, 331 died, 262 were wounded, 64 were commissioned officers, 14 women were nurses and one man was a surgeon.

Many Indians who fought did not even have U.S. citizenship, although individuals were awarded citizenship for their valor in battle.

On World War I battlefields men fought from trenches with shell fire screaming overhead. Going "over the top" meant leaving the protection of the trench to go forward into enemy territory.

Philip Jim, an Indian from Greenville, Calif., went "over the top" more than 30 times, according to his commander. Upon his discharge and return to the states, the first thing Jim did was buy a $100 Liberty Bond.

Otis W. Leader, a Choctaw, was working as a foreman on an Oklahoma cattle ranch when the U.S. entered the war. Rumored to be a German spy, Leader enlisted in the Army as proof of his loyalty and rose to the rank of sergeant. He was a member of the 1st Division, the first U.S. division to see action, which helped the Allies win the Battle of Cantigny on May 28, 1918.

The battle proved an important psychological victory, because it showed the Germans, French and British the Americans were skilled fighters.

Leader went on to earn Purple Hearts and other medals for valor in battles at Soissons, Chateau-Thierry, St. Mihiel and the Argonne Forest. The French government selected him as a model American soldier and hung a painting of him in a French federal building.

On the homefront, many tribes showed loyalty and bravery. On Jan. 29, 1918, the Pittsburgh Sun carried a story about six Yakima Indians who were "doing their bit for the war effort on behalf of the tribe." Snowbound in Pittsburgh for several hours, they told a reporter loyalty to Uncle Sam had prompted them to make the 6,000-mile round trip from the far Northwest to the nation's capital. In Washington, they planned to see President Woodrow Wilson "for the purpose of inducing him to use for war purposes one-half of the $15 million the government holds in trust for the Indians of the Yakima Reservation."

The Indians advised reporters that a bill to use a portion of Yakima money had been introduced in Congress. In addition, tribal members were investing in Liberty Bonds and Thrift Stamps.

Whirlwind Soldier and Red Owl, both Sioux from South Dakota; Lone Wolf, a Kiowa from Oklahoma; and Plenty Coups, a Crow from Montana, assisted in the ceremonies when the Unknown Soldier of World War I was buried. In addition, Thomas D. Saunders, a Cheyenne from Oklahoma, served as a pall bearer.

The French government awarded Saunders a Croix de Guerre for his bravery in battles at St. Mihiel and Mont Blanc.

As a result of the deep patriotism Indians throughout America displayed in the war, Congress passed a law in 1924 extending citizenship to all Indians born or living on U.S. soil.

Many Indians fought bravely in World War II. One of the better known is Army 1st Lt. Jack C. Montgomery, a Cherokee who now lives in Muskogee, Okla. Montgomery was awarded the Medal of Honor for his actions as commander of a rifle platoon near Padiglione, Italy.

Early on the morning of Feb. 22, 1944, a strong enemy force had entrenched in front of his men in three echelons at distances of 50, 100 and 300 yards away. The closest position consisted of four machine guns and a mortar. Montgomery attacked it single-handedly with a rifle and several hand grenades. Climbing boldly onto a mound within easy range of the enemy, he killed eight enemy soldiers and captured the other four.

Montgomery then proceeded against the second position and again attacked with such fury that seven of the enemy surrendered after he had killed three. In daylight, he crossed an open area to the final position, a strongly defended house. When enemy soldiers began surrendering, Montgomery exposed himself to snipers so he could assemble them and send them to the rear. That night, Montgomery was seriously wounded by mortar fragments while helping an adjacent unit.

Born in Broken Arrow, Okla., Army 1st Lt. Ernest Childers, a Creek, also received the Medal of Honor. On Sept. 22, 1943, though suffering with a broken foot, Childers led eight enlisted men up a hill toward enemy gun nests.

Ordering covering fire, Childers advanced alone, silencing two snipers and one machine gun nest. He attacked a second machine gun nest first with rocks and then killed one machine gunner with his rifle. One of his men killed the other machine gunner, after which Childers continued up the hill alone and captured an enemy mortar observer. Childers later retired from the Army as a colonel.

Stories of Indians whose bravery went unsung are numerous. Bataan Death March survivor Clarence Rogers of Cherokee, N.C., got credit from fellow prisoners for saving their lives because he selflessly shared his food and had words of encouragement for them. Sgt. David Colombe, a Sioux, earned a Distinguished Service Cross in November 1944 for working his way behind enemy lines and killing seven Germans and wounding many more. Colombe's actions led to the collapse of a German defensive position, and he accomplished all this armed only with a knife!

One of war correspondent Ernie Pyle's last stories was about Indians with the 1st Marine Division on Okinawa. Before landing on Okinawa, Marines from the Navajo, Sioux, Comanche, Apache, Pima, Kiowa, Pueblo and Crow tribes did a ceremonial dance for a successful landing.

Pyle wrote that the Indians made their ceremonial costumes from chicken feathers, sea shells, coconuts, empty ration cans and rifle cartridges. Their war paint was supplied by the Red Cross. They ended the ceremony by singing the Marine Corps Hymn in Navaho. The non-Indian Marines watched the ceremony with grave respect, wrote Pyle.

After the landing was successful, Pyle asked Navajo Pfc. Joe Gatewood if he felt the ceremony played a role. Gatewood replied that he thought it had, and added, "I knew nothing was going to happen to us, for on the way up here there was a rainbow over the convoy and I knew everything would be all right."

Navy grad goes Army in IOBC

By Brian T. Beckno
2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment

Why would a Naval Academy graduate attend the Infantry Officer Basic Course?

Nov. 1, 2nd Lt. Richard M. Wrona Jr., of Company B, 2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, continuing a proud tradition as a third-generation Army officer, graduated with his fellow "Bushmaster" lieutenants.

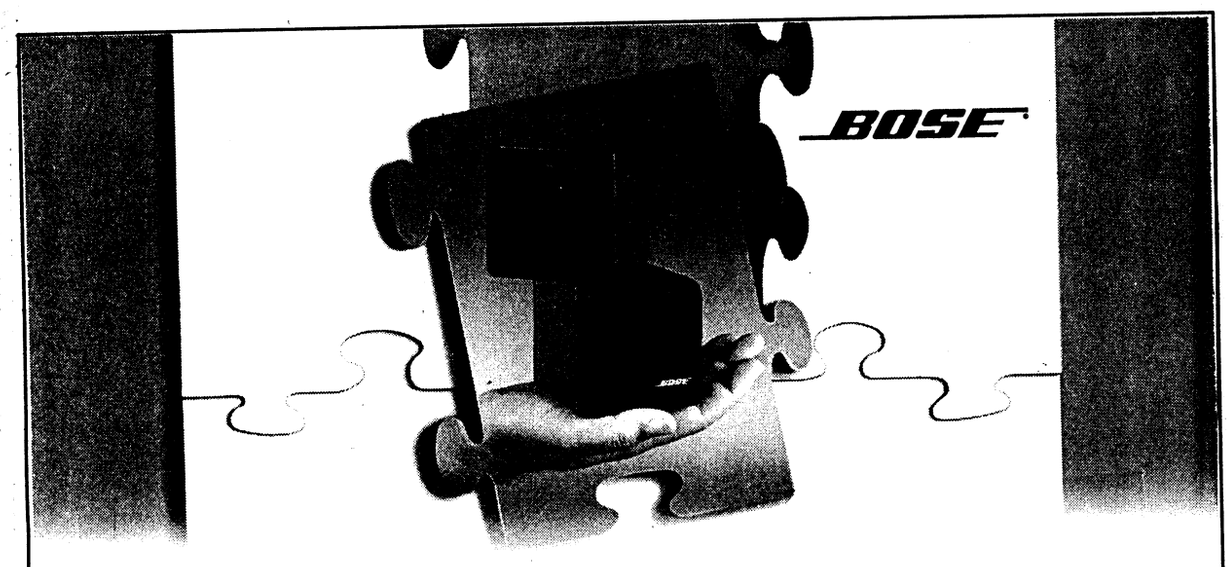
"I wanted to follow in the footsteps of both my father and grandfather — to include being a paratrooper," says Wrona. He will be reporting to the 82nd Airborne Division upon completion of his schooling here at Fort Benning.

"I also didn't like the idea of going to sea!" Wrona said.

For Wrona and his 130 classmates, IOBC was both a transition and an introduction not only into the infantry, but also into the Army.

The 16-week course is designed to familiarize new infantry lieutenants with those tasks necessary to lead an infantry platoon. These tasks included preparing operations orders, conducting both offensive and defensive platoon operations, and learning unit maintenance.

During their training, the "Bushmasters" also accomplished some notable achievements. Among them was an average Army Physical Fitness Test score of 280 and 100 percent completion of their company's 12-mile road march within three hours.



Community service was also an integral part of their training. As many as 50 lieutenants tutored students enrolled in the Lonnie Jackson Reading Program at Eastway Elementary School. The "Bushmasters" also presented both toys and food to Santa's Castle.

Wrona will proceed to Ranger School along with many of his peers.

Thanksgiving

recalls Pilgrims' struggles

By M. Peterson
USAIC Chaplains' Office

A look back at the people and events before the first Thanksgiving helps us appreciate the character of our Pilgrim forefathers and the providence of God.

July 22, 1620, 102 Pilgrims boarded the Mayflower. They spent 62 days in semi-darkness with foul air, in a "...rolling, pitching, stinking inferno." They were religious refugees who worshiped simply and "... spoke enthusiastically of ... a personal encounter with Christ .... They were persecuted, imprisoned, and driven underground."

They settled for a time in Holland, but life was hard. In spite of Indian savagery and the Virginia colony's death toll (more than 80 percent), they decided they would go to the New World.

Before leaving Holland, they devoted a day to fasting and prayer for the difficult journey ahead. They knelt on the Delftshaven dock to ask God's blessing.

The greatest trials were yet to come. Halfway across the sea the huge ship's cross beam cracked and sagged dangerously. Pilgrims prayed, "Yet Lord, thou canst save!" Then William Brewster remembered his great iron printing press screw. With "... hideous creaking and groaning of wood," the cross beam was raised to its original position. Hardened sailors joined the Pilgrims in praises to God.

Nov. 11, the Mayflower dropped anchor at Provincetown. Their voyage was "... undertaken, for the glory of God and advancement of the Christian faith .... (and) ... they fell upon their knees and blessed the God of heaven, who had brought them over the vast and furious ocean, and delivered them from all the perils and miseries thereof ..." But now it was winter. How could they survive?

The testing of their faith increased. The deadly winter killed 47, including 13 of 18 wives. Jan. 14 their shelterhouse roof burned and with it much precious clothing. By April the the worst was over.

In mid-May a stranger arrived. He was Samoset, chief of the Algonquin Indians. His story caused great thanksgiving. He told them this land belonged to a large hostile tribe (the Pautuxets). Four years earlier, a plague destroyed the tribe. The Pilgrims had landed in the only safe region on the northeastern coast.

A few days later Samoset returned with Squanto, the sole Pautuxet survivor who would become "... a special instrument sent of God ..." Squanto showed his new found friends how to survive: to catch eel and cod, to plant corn and pumpkin, find berries and herbs and to trap beaver pelts.

reflections

In the summer of 1621, Governor Bradford declared a public day of thanksgiving. William Brewster prayed, thanking God for meeting all their needs, for their new found Indian friends, and for his providential care. That providence was truly remarkable compared to the Jamestown settlement.

This Thanksgiving we should thank God for our Pilgrim forefather's faith and courage and for his providence, which so marked our nation's founding.

The Bible — scientifically correct?

By Richard King
USAIC Chaplains' Office

"Through faith we understand that the worlds were framed by the word of God..." (Hebrews 11:3). By faith we believe that God inspired the writing of the Holy Bible. Yet as mankind moves into the 21st century, floods of new evidence are surfacing that point clearly to the fact that when the Bible speaks, it is true and accurate. The Bible was not written to teach men science, but the Bible is scientifically correct.

In the discipline of astronomy, Scripture states in Jeremiah 33:22, "... the hosts of the heaven cannot be numbered ..." Today astronomers believe that our galaxy, the Milky Way, has in excess of 100 billion stars, and the Andromeda Galaxy has more than 400 billion stars. The book of Job, states how high the stars are in the heavens. Today we realize that the closest star, Alpha Centauri, is four light years away.

In chapter 26:7, Job also spoke through divine inspiration of God and stated that God "hangeth the Earth on nothing," signifying the force of gravity throughout our planet. In Isaiah 40:22, 2,200 years before Columbus discovered America, God had already stated that the Earth was round and not flat, as thought by some scientists and sailors. "It is he who sitteth upon the circle of the Earth."

In the field of archaeology, further evidence arises to prove the accuracy of the Scriptures. John Garstang, director of the British School of Archaeology in Jerusalem, has recently found the fallen walls of the city of Jericho. They were approximately 15 feet high and 10 feet wide. Many of the riches of Solomon have also been recently uncovered, to include the city of Megiddo, Solomon's stables, seaports and copper refineries.

Long before man could ever explain the meteorological activity of evaporation, God clearly recorded in Ecclesiastes 1:6-7 that there is a water cycle of rain falling to the Earth and rising to the clouds.

In the area of ichthyology (the branch of zoology dealing with fish), many critics have said that the story of Jonah being swallowed by a whale was impossible. Now we know today that there are several fish large enough to swallow a man — the sperm whale, the white shark or the rhinodon shark. Several authenticated cases tell of survivors in such situations. In one such case, for example, James Bartley was a seaman on the whaler "Star of the East" in the late 1890s. He was swallowed by a whale while harpooning; one day later the whale's stomach was cut open, and Bartley was alive. He had a full recovery in the London Hospital, with his skin permanently tanned by the whale's gastric juices.

Concerning mathematics and prophecy, Professor Peter Stoner calculated the total probability that Jesus Christ, "just by chance," happened to fulfill 48 Old Testament prophecies simultaneously. Stoner's calculations substantiated that this simultaneous fulfillment of prophecies could have happened only one chance out of 10 to the 180th power (10 followed by 180 zeros).

Many scientists now believe that the best explanation for the Grand Canyon and the sudden extinction of dinosaurs is to be found in the universal flood recorded in the book of Genesis. Now, more than ever, because of recent scientific discoveries, we can believe with total confidence what God says in John 10:35: "The scripture cannot be broken."

Miniseries tells story of Dionne quintuplets

By Jay Bobbin
Tribune Media Services

They became five of the world's most celebrated children, but at a very high price they never consented to pay.

The 1934 birth of the Dionne quintuplets to an Ontario, Canada, couple became a matter of international interest; but, virtually from that moment, the young ladies were made literal prisoners of their fame.

SPOTLIGHT

Their story is recounted in "Million Dollar Babies" Sunday and Tuesday's new CBS miniseries that casts Beau Bridges as Allan Roy Dafoe, the doctor who helped to deliver the girls ... and then was made their government-appointed guardian, over the strenuous objections of their parents (Roy Dupuis, Celine Bonnier), who waged continual legal battles to regain custody of them.

However, the then-impoverished province's lawmakers saw in them the makings of a badly needed financial windfall; under Dafoe's direct supervision, the youngsters unwittingly became very public figures through exhibitions and commercial endorsements.

Kate Nelligan ("The Prince of Tides," "Wolf") also stars as a composite character, a broadcaster who initially uses the quints' saga as a meal ticket of her own by relaying their tale to the masses, though she ultimately proves pivotal in reuniting the entire Dionne family. Rather appropriately, the drama is a Canadian-American co-production, and it will be telecast on the other country's CBC Network on the same days.

Beau Bridges and the five young "quintuplets"

What: "Million Dollar Babies"
When: Sunday and Tuesday on CBS

Two of the Dionne quintuplets have passed away (Emilie in 1954, and Marie in 1970), and surviving sisters Cecile, Annette and Yvonne mostly have kept themselves out of the public eye for many years.

"They've led a fairly tragic life," said "Million Dollar Babies" producer Bernard Zukerman, who has overseen other CBC ventures that have crossed the border to U.S. television (such as "Conspiracy of Silence" and "Love and Hate: A Marriage Made in Hell"). "They were a $500 million-a-year industry to the Ontario government during the course of the Depression.

"They got virtually none of that money and, in fact, have lived in relative poverty for most of their lives," he continued. "They are totally estranged from their other brothers and sisters. (The Dionne parents already had five children when the 'quints' were born.)

"They were taken away while only a few months old and did not bond with the family at all; then were given back to their parents at the age of nine. Suddenly, they had chores, and they felt totally uncomfortable living with their real family again."

Zoo Atlanta

Want to make a winter night a little wilder? Spend the night at Zoo Atlanta and experience the sounds and sights of the Ford African Rain Forest up close Saturday and Sunday from 7:30 p.m. to 11 a.m.

Christmas coming to Stone Mountain

Stone Mountain Park

Decorations, seasonal sounds, and, of course, the "jolly old elf" himself highlight "The Holiday Celebration" at Georgia's Stone Mountain Park beginning Nov. 25.

The Holiday Celebration begins as massed community choirs gather on Memorial Lawn for holiday sing-a-long and lighting of the park.

Visitors will be given holiday candles in holders that glow in red and green illumination and the crowd can join the choirs in ushering in the holidays and welcoming Santa to the park.

An array of activities is planned for the holiday season.

Memorial Depot is 1994 Holiday Headquarters. Here, "Santa" and his elves meet children of all ages. Park staff will be available to take pictures of children seated upon Santa's lap, or guests can bring their own cameras to capture the moment.

Santa and his elves appear weekends Nov. 25 through Dec. 11 and nightly Dec. 16 through 23 from 6 to 9 p.m.

While at the depot, journey to the North Pole on Stone Mountain Scenic Railroad. A ride on the sing-a-long train costs $3 for adults, $2 for children 11 and under. Holiday shopping is available at the Depot Gift Shoppe, and the Depot Fried Chicken Restaurant will be open for a holiday feast.

The park mascot, Buford the Bear, will appear in the special holiday laser show along with holiday characters and images dancing across the north face of the mountain near the depot.

"Christmas in Dixie" and other seasonal favorites will create a memorable holiday experience. The show will run at 6:05, 7:05 and 8:05 p.m. each Friday through Sunday through Dec. 11 and nightly Dec. 16 through 23.

In addition to the holiday lasershow and visits with Santa, holiday tours of the Antebellum Plantation are available.

Next to the plantation entrance, the Clayton House Gift Shop and special shopping areas offer gifts for everyone. One of the South's largest tree of lights crowns the parkwide festivities.

More than 1 million twinkling lights decorate areas throughout the park, creating a light show which can be enjoyed as a holiday driving tour. See carousels, stagecoaches, trains and dinosaurs crafted out of sparkling lights. Giant greeting cards created by area schools are a special highlight.

Millions of lights switched on each evening from Nov. 25 through New Year's Eve at dusk will create a show for guests each time they visit.

Decorations are visible nightly through Dec. 31. Special activities are scheduled each weekend (Friday through Sunday) through Dec. 11 and nightly Dec. 16 through 23.

Park entry requires a valid 1994 parking permit that can be purchased daily for $5 or yearly for $20. For more information, call (404) 498-5702.

THE NEXT TIME YOU DRIVE TO ATLANTA TO CATCH A FLIGHT. . . ATTACH THIS TO YOUR WINDOW!

Some folks think that to get the cheapest airfare or the best airline connection, it's necessary to drive to Atlanta. Leaving Columbus two hours early to make the 100 mile drive, parking their car in a suburb of Harris County, fighting the crowds, catching a train and finding any one of hundreds of departure gates, and then being faced with the same grim process on their return, doesn't seem to deter the cost-conscious traveller in his quest to find the absolute lowest fare.

Columbus Now Has "THE HOMEFIELD ADVANTAGE"

There are now five air carriers serving Columbus, providing a total of 40 arrivals and departures daily, with more flights expected to be added as the traffic increases. More carriers and more flights also mean more destinations, improved service and more competitive fares.

CG to honor outstanding individuals

USAIC Public Affairs Office

The Infantry Center's first Command Retreat Ceremony will be Dec. 1 at 4 p.m. on York Field.

Maj. Gen. John W. Hendrix, Fort Benning's commanding general, is implementing the new program to recognize outstanding soldiers and civilians.

The ceremony begins a regular activity on the post to be conducted prior to soldiers' payday.

At each ceremony, Hendrix will recognize and honor soldiers, citizens from the local communities, on-post agencies of excellence, post volunteers and post civilian employee award winners.

498th gets recognition

USAIC Public Affairs Office

A Military Assistance to Safety and Transportation appreciation luncheon was Nov. 18 at noon at the 498th Medical Company (Air Ambulance) hangar at Lawson Army Airfield, behind Building 2489.

The luncheon was in honor of the 498th Medical Company for its assistance during the flooding in Georgia earlier this year in which soldiers of the 498th flew support missions out of Macon and Albany, Ga.

The luncheon was sponsored by the Flint River Community Hospital in Montezuma, Ga.; The Oglethorpe Family Practice, P.C., in Oglethorpe, Ga.; the Mid-Georgia Ambulance Service in Macon; the Regional VII Emergency Service of Eastern Ala.; and Region VIII Emergency Medical Service of Western Georgia.

After the luncheon, the 498th Medical Company demonstrated a Blackhawk helicopter hoist mission by using a Stokes litter to lift a mannequin aboard the aircraft. Hot refueling, the refueling of a helicopter while it continues to run, was also demonstrated.

HOME FOR THE HOLIDAYS

Soldiers return from SW Asia

Marc G. Turchin

Sgt. 1st Class Mark A. Braatz, 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor Regiment, is greeted at the airfield by his wife, Brenda.

Elements from 3rd Brigade come home to big welcome

By Marc G. Turchin
Bayonet staff writer

A buzz was in the air. Eyes scoured the airfield awaiting the arrival of a special plane carrying homeward-bound soldiers, but nothing had landed yet.

Families and friends sat in the bleachers, teeth clenched and hands held together. Children jumped up and down tugging on their parents' arms, repeating the same question, "When are they gonna get here?"

At 5 p.m., that question was answered when a 747 landed and taxied up to the hangar at Lawson Army Airfield with more than 300 soldiers from 3rd Brigade, 24th Infantry Division (Mechanized), from Fort Benning, Fort Stewart, Ga. and Fort Hood, Texas.

Members of the 2nd Battalion, 18th Infantry Regiment; 317th Engineer Battalion; 4th Battalion, 41st Field Artillery Regiment; 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor Regiment; and 324th Forward Support Battalion marched into the airfield hangar to the screams and chants of their families and friends.

Elements of the brigade deployed at several instances over the past six weeks and were involved in Operation Vigilant Warrior, displaying U.S. resolve and detering Iraqi aggression in the region, according to Col. Michael Deegan, brigade commander.

On hand for the return were Maj. Gen. John W. Hendrix, Fort Benning's commanding general, and Brig. Gen. Julian B. Burns, assistant division commander for 3rd Bde., 24th ID. Hendrix and Burns shook soldiers' hands as they reached the tarmac; then they went into the hangar for the official ceremony.

"We all recognize today that we left in a time of peace ... when we left here, we thought we were going to war," Burns said.

With the chance of war looming, and having been deployed for 35 to 40 days, Sgt. 1st Class Mark A. Braatz, 2nd Bn., 69th Armor, was glad to be home.

"Being without my family makes the days go by real slow," said Braatz, whose job in Southwest Asia was to help download equipment off ships, put the equipment into task force organization and load it back onto the ships.

> "We are very glad to have you back here in time for Thanksgiving."
> — Maj. Gen. John W. Hendrix
> Commanding general

As the formation stood ready to be dismissed, Hendrix did a "non-military maneuver" by letting the families rush the formation without the officer in charge releasing them. When he said, "Go," a wave of family and friends merged with the soldiers. The soldiers didn't seem to mind.

Braatz was almost tackled by his family. He stood in the same spot for more than 15 minutes getting hug after hug and kiss after kiss from his wife, Brenda, and his three children, Jessica, 11, Mathew, 9, and Ashley, 7.

While deployed, the soldiers were cared for in all aspects of living.

Second Lt. Henry P. Ellison, a fire support officer with 4th Bn, 41st FA, said he lived indoors with air conditioning.

"That's important out in the desert, " Ellison said.

Physical training, swimming and volleyball were just some of activities available to make time pass faster, Ellison said.

"Basically the morale was pretty good," he said. "There was lots of food and water. I didn't have one meal, ready-to-eat while I was there," he said.

As the troops stood at parade rest, listening to Hendrix speak, the high morale of the crowd was reflected on their faces.

"You have demonstrated, once again, your professionalism to the world," Hendrix said.

"We thank you for your efforts, we thank you for your sacrifice, we thank you for your professionalism. We are very glad to have you back here in time for Thanksgiving," he said.

COPS to patrol communities

By Jennifer Chapman
Special to The Bayonet©

In order to get more involved with the community, the Military Police Activity has started the Community Oriented Police Squad.

The COPS program is aimed specifically at bettering Army family communities on Fort Benning, according to Sgt. 1st Class Frederick Robinson, the COPS supervisor. In warm weather, the extra MPs patrol their areas on bicycles, and now that cooler temperatures are prevailing, they'll make their rounds in patrol cars.

"We didn't put them (the extra MPs) out there because of a higher crime rate or anything like that," Robinson said. "This move was not driven by stats."

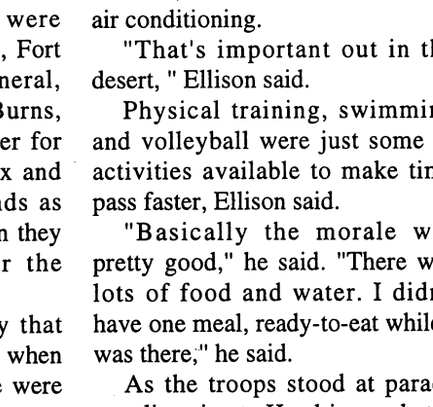
In putting police officers on the beat, Fort Benning is trying to re-create the "neighborhood policeman" of time gone by, he said.

"We hope everybody will know that, 'Hey, these are my MPs and they're here for me,' " Robinson said.

The officers patrol five areas of Fort Benning, and specific MPs are assigned to specific areas. Robinson said the people in the communities can get to know "their" MPs on a more personal basis.

"If people know they can trust and believe in the MPs, it's going to make our job easier and the community better because the people will know they can come to us," Robinson said.

Sgt. Robert Hoague, one of the members of COPS, seems to enjoy his beat.



"The kids seem to adjust to us first, and they tell us about things we don't normally see," Hoague said. Hoague added that the children in the community often act as emissaries for their parents.

Since the COPS program uses additional Military Police officers, response time to calls will not be affected in the summer months when bicycles will be used to patrol family housing areas and response time may be faster, according to Robinson.

Robinson said he has been very pleased with results so far.

"To me, it's been pretty effective," he said. "We have the MPs out there all the time, and they take care of whatever comes up."

It's a good time to count your blessings

By Agatha Hudson Debrow
Bayonet editor

commentary

Agatha Hudson Debrow is surviving raising two teen-agers.

Whatever happened to gratitude, sincere appreciation, thankfulness, counting your blessings?

I took my 18-year-old daughter shopping in Atlanta on Veterans Day for her birthday and bought her more than $500 worth of clothes. I bought her a suit consisting of a jacket and a skirt; a two-piece black and gold dress; two silk tops, one rust, one champagne; three sweaters; a skirt; and more.

While we were there, she was cranky, unenthusiastic and acted as if she could not care less if she got anything.

I offered to buy more — a pair of shoes, a purse, jeans— but, she was tired and hungry and ready to go.

I don't know about you, but when someone is offering to buy me something, I usually accept (depending on who's making the offer and depending on what it is).

As I tried to analyze her attitude, I thought about my own childhood. Even though both my parents worked — my father drove a bus and my mother worked at a laundry — we were, by today's standards, considered poor.

My three brothers and I had plenty to eat, we lived in a decent house and wore clean clothes (although sometimes they were other people's hand-me-downs). When my parents would take us shopping for clothes in the fall before school began and at Christmas — each one of us would usually get two outfits and a pair of shoes. My parents never spent $500 at any one time on all of us — combined.

I didn't get to choose everything I wanted — let alone a certain brand or color. I was happy to get something, period.

Today, we dole out dollars on our children like money grows on trees. I don't mind spending money on my children; I just want them to realize they're blessed, and I want them to be thankful for what they have.

Despite my children's attitude, I'm thankful for things I have, things I don't have and things I'm going to get:

• I'm thankful for life — God didn't have to allow me to live, but he did and I appreciate that and try to live each day to the fullest and to his glory.

• I'm thankful for my health and strength and peace of mind. There are a lot of people who long for good health, and many who live on an emotional roller coaster — they're up, they're down, one day they're happy, the next they're sad.

• I'm thankful for having the basic necessities of life — food, clothing, shelter, transportation, a job and more.

• I'm thankful for having loving parents who are in good health and who remain an important part of my life.

• I'm thankful for other members of my family — such as Aunt Mamie and Aunt Lena — with whom I'm very close. My Aunt Lena is the grandmother I never had, and my Aunt Mamie is like a second mother.

• I'm thankful for my son and my daughter. Even though sometimes I think they're a couple of ingrates, I still thank God for them because parenting teaches you a lot about life.

• I'm thankful for my oldest brother Lawrence who, no matter how I mess up, still loves me regardless. I'm also thankful for my baby brother Lamar who offers me the challenge of loving him in spite of everything.

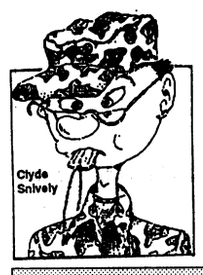
• I'm thankful for great co-workers — Sgt. Ruth Spaller, Spc. Karen Morarie, Pfc. Marc Turchin and Paula Randall. We work well together as a team to get the job done. As Mary Lou Retton, the first American gymnast to win an individual medal in Olympic competition and winner of a gold medal in the 1984 Summer Olympics, put it at a recent seminar I attended, T-E-A-M stands for Together Everyone Achieves More. We have that attitude at The Bayonet, and I'm happy to be a part of it.

• I'm thankful for having friends who care about me. Many people just need and want someone to talk to. I'm thankful to have several people I can call and talk to whenever I have the need.

• I'm thankful to be living in the land of the free. Thank God I don't live in Bosnia-Herzegovina, Haiti, Somalia or some other place filled with economic or political strife.

• Finally, I'm most thankful for my personal relationship with Jesus Christ as my lord and savior. Because of this relationship, I can enjoy many of life's joys, and I can face adversity with a strength I never knew I had.

This Thanksgiving, count your blessings and focus on what you have instead of what you don't have; and, when someone does something nice for you, let him or her know you appreciate it.



As for my daughter, she eventually expressed her gratitude.

Three days after our shopping trip when she was heading out the door to her college class, she left me a note on the kitchen counter saying, "Thanks for everything."

I'm sure she was talking about the clothes.

Thanksgiving is not a day of thanks for turkeys

By Clyde Snively
Bayonet columnist

Clyde Snively, Bayonet columnist, is thankful he's not a turkey.

commentary

About the only ethnic group not giving thanks tomorrow is turkeys.

They, of course, have been culturally deprived of their lives in order for the rest of us to stuff ourselves to the gills.

Most of us look on turkeys as being fated for the oven, noting that any bird so dumb it can die of fright from the shadow of a passing aircraft, forfeits all right to life.

The bird's defenders will quickly point out that wild turkeys are most canny and it's the domestication process that ruined them and deprived them of their civil rights.

Turkey defenders also quickly point out that the slang pejorative for people, "turkey" is the result of a mistake on the part of humans, not a reflection of turkeys at all.

"To call undesirable, inept people turkeys is a mistake. The bird that is dumb, undesirable and klutzy is the guinea fowl from Turkey, but somewhere this got lost in the translation and the term `turkey,' stuck," Professor Moriarity explained to me with patience and great dignity.

"Well, knowing all that sure makes me thankful," I told her.

Of course as Thanksgiving approaches I still reserve the right to be thankful I'm not a turkey (or a guinea fowl from Turkey).

I'm also thankful for a passel of other reasons.

I'm thankful to the Columbus police officer who, apparently overcome by the Thanksgiving holiday, let me off the hook and didn't give me a ticket for running the red light on my way to physical training the other morning. Of course I was still late, but I'm thankful to Sgt. 1st Class Barb Strack for only making me run two extra miles instead of five.

I'm thankful for the no-pets-in-barracks room policy. Thanks to that policy, I'm now the proud owner of Leonard, a red-tailed boa constrictor that Sgt. Course Cox had to get rid of.

Let me tell you, this is a great watch snake. Answer the door with the snake draped around your shoulders and not too many door-to-door salespeople ask to come inside.

I'm waiting for some burglar to show and come across Leonard slithering across the floor. That should be an interesting encounter.

I'm thankful I haven't had the occasion to go shopping at the "new and improved mall."

I hear it's a rat race there. In fact, now that Christmas decorations and Christmas music seem to be in full flush everywhere, about the only thing I'm going shopping for are spare parts for the car and basic food items for subsistence — Dec. 24 still being the day I reserve for Christmas shopping.

I'm also thankful for the presence of Pfc. Winston Turchill.

He reflects much of the grief aimed at me by the female troika. See, I've learned to keep my mouth shut, but he still thinks it's possible to win verbal battles with these women who outnumber and outrank him.

I guess that's why he's still a private first class and I'm a specialist.

And finally, I'm thankful for the Clyde Snively Fan Club. Betty, please don't move away.

President salutes men, women in uniform

It is our great fortune to live in a country full of promise and prosperity — a country that guarantees freedom for all of its people.

Throughout our history, we have set aside a day to celebrate the many blessings we enjoy as individuals and as citizens of the United States. I am honored on this Thanksgiving Day to salute the many women and men in uniform whose honorable service to our country enables us to protect these precious liberties.

The unique relationship between our service men and women and the civilian leadership of our nation has produced a highly professional force that is capable of meeting the needs of our citizens. It is this tradition of excellence that has enabled Americans to enjoy 218 years of freedom and security.

You are the great defenders of America, and your daily efforts help to promote the peace and stability that allow freedom to flourish.

On this Thanksgiving holiday, Hillary and I join all Americans in giving thanks for our many blessings. We extend our deepest gratitude to the men and women of the U.S. armed forces who make the freedoms of our nation possible.

Best wishes for a wonderful Thanksgiving.

President Bill Clinton

CG sends holiday wishes

Today we celebrate an honored American tradition that began 372 years ago in Plymouth, Mass., when Gov. William Bradford proclaimed a day of public thanksgiving for the year's blessings.

Traditionally, historically and eventually, by presidential decree, Americans continued to set aside a special day to thank God for the abundance of his blessings. Therefore, on this fourth Thursday of November, we again acknowledge with gratitude that the Lord has looked with favor upon our people and our land.

As we observe Thanksgiving Day, we give special thanks for another year of abundance of blessings and prosperity.

We enjoy greater freedoms, enhanced well-being and more opportunities than any people in history — we celebrate the freedom to worship, speak and choose our direction in life.

Those freedoms and opportunities were achieved through rigorous training, attention to the mission, dedication to high and noble ideals and the personal sacrifices of our generation and generations of Americans before us.

This year especially, let us, the inheritors of these abundant blessings, take time to realize how fortunate we are to be free.

My prayer for you and your loved ones is for a safe, happy and blessed Thanksgiving.

DPW laborer receives award

By Jerrie Macintire
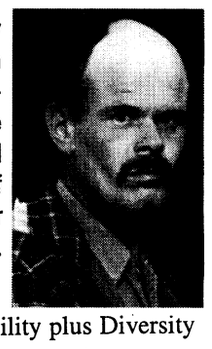
Special to The Bayonet ©

A Fort Benning employee was recognized Nov. 10 as co-recipient of the Disabled Employee of the Year Award presented annually by the Columbus Mayor's Committee on Persons with Disabilities.



Larry Foxworth, a laborer with the Range, Roads and Grounds branch of the Directorate of Public Works, shared the award with Curtis Lacey of Burger King in Columbus.

Foxworth, who is mentally challenged, accepted the award for excellence in the work force from Columbus Mayor Frank Martin at the Mayor's Awards Luncheon at the Holiday Inn.

Foxworth is "a very conscientious employee," said Bill Bunt, chief of Range, Roads and Grounds.

"He's been with us eight years in one capacity or another, and has always done a good job. He's a dedicated, hard worker," Bunt added.

The annual Mayor's Awards Luncheon, in conjunction with Individuals with Disabilities Month, is designed to highlight contributions disabled persons make to the work force. The theme this year was Ability plus Diversity equals Economic Strength.

Larry Foxworth is a co-recipient of the Disabled Employee of the Year Award.

While recognizing disabled individuals as well as employers from the local community, Martin said one of the most enjoyable aspects of serving as mayor was "helping promote and raise awareness of people with disabilities."

Through the Mayor's, Governor's and the President's Committees on Persons with Disabilities, "We recognize the ability of the individuals to contribute to the work force and society," Martin said.

Part of this recognition includes breaking down physical, environmental and attitudinal barriers, he added.

Keynote speaker Wendy Petzold, Ms. Wheelchair America 1994, addressed the audience along with Terri Hasty, Ms. Wheelchair Georgia 1994, and Leslie Taylor, Junior Miss Wheelchair 1994.

ACAP links soldiers, environmental grants

By Elsie Jackson
Army Career and Alumni Program

If you are close to your expiration term of service and are interested in pursuing a career in environmental restoration and hazardous waste management, you may want to contact the Fort Benning Army Career and Alumni Program office.

Thanks to a $1.3 million Department of Defense grant, Jacksonville State University in Alabama is actively seeking scholarship applicants interested in degrees in environmental education. Degree options available include:

• Bachelor of science degree with a major in chemistry and a minor in environmental management

• Bachelor of science degree with a major in environmental biology and a minor in cultural and natural resource management

• Master of public administration with a concentration in environmental science management.

There is also a one-year nondegree program in Hazardous Materials Technology Certificate program available.

These programs are being administered through Jacksonville State by the Southern Environmental Education Partnership, a consortium that was established to provide environmental education through a nontraditional work-based program that does not sacrifice traditional studies.

Both the certificate and degree programs include classroom, laboratory work and field experience in work-based courses. Students gain experience in cleanup, compliance and pollution prevention at actual Department of Defense installations and private industry facilities. The program is slated to begin in January 1995.

The available grants will cover tuition, up to $300 per semester in textbooks and fees, room and board (dormitory room and meal ticket), and up to $162 per year in insurance for the first year of the program. If the Department of Defense grant is renewed, funding to the student may be extended to three years.

Persons in the following groups will be given preference:

• Between the ages of 16 and 24 who have not attended and are unlikely to attend an institution of higher education

• Between the ages of 16 and 24 who have a total family income that does not exceed the higher of the official poverty line or 70 percent of the lower living standard income

• Individuals who have been terminated or laid off from employment (or have received notice of termination or layoff)

• employment (or have received notice of termination or layoff) because of Department of Defense reductions.

Grant applications are not limited to these individuals. Students without academic deficiencies will be able to complete the undergraduate programs in three years (including summers).

If you are interested in applying for one of these grants, contact Elsie Jackson at the Fort Benning ACAP office at 545-4913 or 545-7009.

Army Career and Alumni Program

Here are some of the most frequently asked questions about the Army Career and Alumni Program. The answers to these questions reflect the most current policies and positions.

For additional information or clarification about ACAP — call 545-4892 or 545-4913 or stop by Building 2617.

What is ACAP?

The Army Career and Alumni Program is designed to provide services and counseling to assure soldiers, Department of Army civilians and family members quality transition from military life to civilian life.

Why does the Army and the nation need ACAP?

ACAP provides transition service to departing personnel. It creates a recruiting multiplier. It establishes strong partnerships with the private sector.

ACAP allows career soldiers to concentrate on the Army mission because they know that when they need services, they will be available.

It reduces unemployment and other associated costs.

What benefits do members of the Army family, employers, and the nation at large derive from ACAP?

In addition to those above, the Army family leaves better prepared to make the transition into the civilian sector; employers receive a better trained and motivated employee with skills and abilities not generally available in the civilian sector; the nation receives individuals who will serve as role models and who are willing and able to contribute to the community at large.

If ACAP did not exist, what could fill the void?

There are many private sector companies who can supply these services, but they'll cost the individual between $1,000 and $10,000.

There are also many government agencies that supply some of the services (such as Army Community Services and the Department of Labor). ACAP ensures that these services are coordinated and directed towards those who need them.

There seems to be a large number of government agencies performing the same mission. What makes ACAP unique?

ACAP is designed specifically for members of the Department of Army; it's easily accessible; and it's an integral part of the Army's personnel system. These allow ACAP to give individualized and complete service to its clients.

The downsizing is projected to end in fiscal 1995. What are the plans for ACAP after it completes that mission?

ACAP is an enduring program; it has an important mission that will survive after the downsizing is completed. It adds an important dimension to an individual's productivity life cycle — to the Army, future employers and the nation.

What services are provided?

Every individual who visits ACAP first receives a needs assessment and an individual transition plan.

Based on this appraisal, clients are then sent to the appropriate service providers who will assist them in their transition.

If they need job assistance, they will be sent to the Job Assistance Center where they will receive job search workshops and seminars, individual assistance and counseling, assistance with writing resumes and cover letters, and access to various job data base — including the Army Employer and Alumni Network.

You can use it from any phone, it gets you home in seconds, and best of all, it weighs almost nothing.

If there's one calling card that can keep up with the pace of Army life, it's the AT&T Card. It works almost anywhere there's a phone. On or off base, in the States or abroad. It's cheaper than calling collect. And you don't even need phone service in your name to sign up for one. Making long distance calls easy is just the beginning. ## Boy Scouts selling trees for Christmas at Main Mall

By Jennifer Chapman
Special to The Bayonet©

Christmas trees will be up for grabs beginning Monday in the lot in front of the Shoppette/Class VI store at the Main Mall.

By buying a Christmas tree from the local Boy Scouts, people will be helping to recharter every Boy Scouts troop in the Columbus area, according to Staff Sgt. William Viruet, Fort Benning's Scouting coordinator.

The Boy Scouts will be selling the trees from Nov. 28 to Dec. 28 from 9 a.m. to 9 p.m.

The types of trees for sale will include balsam fir, Colorado blue spruce, fraser fir, spruce Scotch pine and white pine.

The sizes will be as varied as the types of trees, beginning at two feet tall and going up from there.

Viruet said although Fort Benning soldiers and their families might be able to buy trees off post at better rates, they will be of lower quality.

The shining tree in the living room window is often the focal point of the traditional family Christmas, he said, and the rates on post for a high-quality tree will be very, very competitive.

"Over the past few years, the military community has benefitted tremendously from the lower prices," Viruet said.

DEER

harvest and habitat affect hunting

Natural Resources Management Branch

Successful deer management is dependent on properly modifying two variables — harvest and habitat.

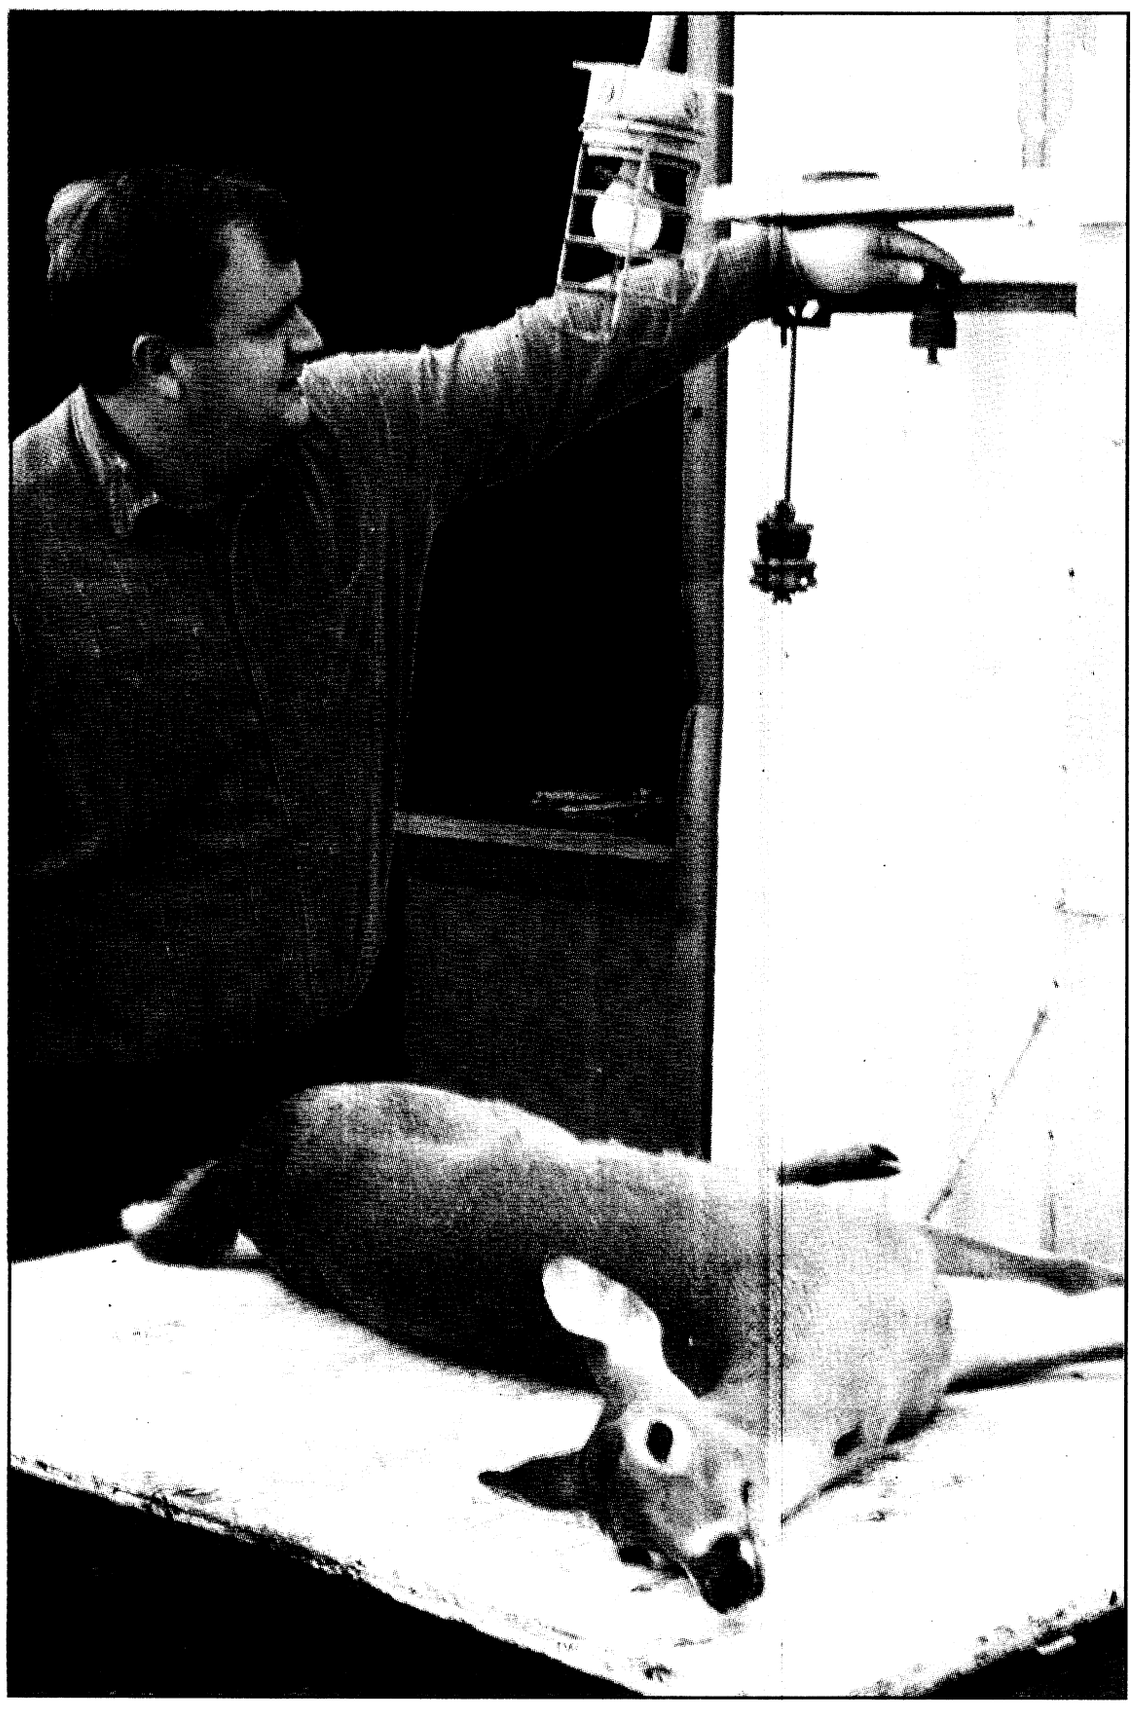
Favorable deer habitat is created through thinning and prescribed burning in pine stands, maintaining hardwoods and planting openings in wheat, clover and other supplemental foods.

Deer harvest is necessary to maintain populations within the carrying capacity of the habitat.

Based on check station data and a herd health check (evaluation of deer body fat, parasites and disease) conducted in August 1993, Fort Benning's deer herd is in good condition.

Consequently, either-sex days have been reduced in Georgia from all season to the state season of 44 days (Oct. 29 to Nov. 27 and Dec. 26 to Jan. 8).

The Alabama either-sex season remains unchanged from previous years (Dec. 26 to Jan. 14).



The harvest limit remains unchanged from previous years. No more than five deer may be harvested on the Fort Benning reservation (Georgia and Alabama) of which three must be does.

No more than two bucks (including button bucks) may be taken during the entire season.

Hunters are encouraged to bring all deer harvested to the check station, Building 5883, Harmony Church.

For additional information, refer to USAIC Reg 210-2, Installation Hunting and Fishing Regulation, dated March 28, 1994, USAIC Cir 210-4, Hunting Seasons and Bag Limits, dated July 31, 1994.

For information, call Jeff Brooks, Natural Resources Management Branch, at 544-6206.

Weighing in

Gary Hollon, a biological technician, weighs in a deer at the deer check and weigh station. The station, located in Building 5883 in Harmony Church, is open for deer season. Hours are Monday through Friday, 7:15 a.m. to 4:15 p.m., and weekends, 9 a.m. to 7 p.m. Information from harvested deer is used to evaluate deer herd conditions and to set the season and bag limits.

AMU soldier makes history

By Marlene Tikal
U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit

For Sgt. 1st Class Kenneth V. Gill of the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit, it wasn't enough to win the National Service Rifle Championship recently at Camp Perry, Ohio; he had to be the first in the competition's 91-year history to win while firing an M-16A2.

Gill's total of 2,356 of 2,400 led him to triumph over 877 competitors, both civilian and military, who ventured from locations nationwide to compete n what is considered by marksmen to be the ultimate level of shooting competition in America.

"To say I'm happy with my performance would be an understatement," said Gill, who has participated in the event twice before.

"This is the first time I've fired an M-16 during competition," he said. "I wasn't expecting to do as well as I did."

That's because the weapon of choice for participants in the service rifle competition — despite the fact that it went out of service during the Vietnam War — is the more accurate M-14, said Master Sgt. Warren E. Wiley, noncommissioned officer in charge of the USAMU custom gun shop.

Recent modifications made to the M-16A2 by USAMU gunsmiths have transformed the reliable combat weapon into a quality match rifle, Wiley said.

Until these modifications were made, from a marksman's point of view, problems with the M-16A2 were numerous.

During competition, the barrel of the M-16A2 warped slightly as a result of heat generated by repeated firing and sling tension.

The warped barrel, along with the large aperture on the rear sight, hindered shooters' performances.

"Modifications were made to the M-16 to negate these problems," Wiley said.

A reduction of the rear-sight aperture and the introduction of a heavier barrel that withstands warping has improved the performance of USAMU service rifle marksmen.

> "Gill has set a precedent by winning with the modified M-16."
> — David Boyd
> USAMU chief of competition

Now that Gill has become the first in history to win the national service rifle competition while firing the modified M-16A2, David Boyd, USAMU chief of competition, predicts the M14 will go the way of the Springfield, the M1 and other competition service rifles of the past.

"Gill has set a precedent by winning with the modified M-16," Boyd said. Gill's win will open the floodgates to all marksmen wanting to test the modified M-16A2's accuracy.

Weapon accuracy aside, winning the National Service Rifle Championship boils down to one thing — the skill of the marksman.

And that, said Gill, is where he had fellow competitors beat.

"I train so frequently, five days a week, that going out there and doing the best I can becomes second nature," Gill said.

Gill's frequent training, combined with the fact he enjoys hunting as a hobby, have made him the quality marksman he is today.

That's not to say he isn't thrilled by his recent performance.

As Gill said, no matter how tough the training becomes, he never tires of winning.

Boxing champ to lend ring strategies to athletes

Directorate of Community Activities

Legendary world heavyweight boxing champion Floyd Patterson will show Fort Benning athletes how to pack a more powerful punch Dec. 6 at Kelley Hill Fitness Center.

Patterson's visit, arranged courtesy of Imported Canadian Mist whisky, comes on the eve of the 1995 Army Boxing Training Camp in Fort Huachuca where soldier-athletes from Fort Benning will join top Army boxers from around the world in the hopes of making the Army Boxing Team.

Joining forces with the Army for the fourth consecutive year, Canadian Mist's sponsorship of the training camp funds travel, equipment and other training expenses.

At a glance

Who: Floyd Patterson, World Heavyweight boxing champion

What: Inspiration and motivational tools to help Army athletes realize their goals

When: Dec. 6, 1 to 2:30 p.m.

Where: Kelley Hill Fitness Center

Additionally, it will be conducting a panorama of special events on 10 major U.S. bases.

During his visit, Patterson will offer valuable inspiration and motivational tools to help Army athletes realize their goals.

"It's a thrill for me to spend time with these young soldiers," said Patterson, who at 21 became the youngest heavyweight champ in the history of boxing.

"I'm very grateful to the Canadian Mist people for sponsoring this program and making a world of difference for these athletes," he said.

Patterson is perhaps best known for being the first man to regain the world's heavyweight boxing championship.

This accomplishment is shared only by Muhammad Ali, Evander Holyfield and most recently by George Foreman.

He made history on the evening of June 20, 1960, in New York City when he reclaimed his title by knocking out Ingemar Johansson in five rounds.

Patterson described his comeback against "the Swede," who knocked him down seven times the previous year, as "easily the most gratifying moment of my life."

Patterson will visit with athletes here, as well as at Fort Campbell, Ky., Fort Gordon, Ga., and Fort Bliss, Texas.

The boxers participating in the training camp represent the Army boxing elite, hailing from installations worldwide.

The 12 boxers selected to the 1995 Army Boxing Team will go on to compete at the Armed Forces Boxing Championship.

Knowing lake history can help catch more bass

By Earl Bentz and Steve Price
Outboard Marine Corporation

Before he ever goes fishing on a new lake, bass tournament champion Larry Nixon has a history lesson.

What he studies is the history of the lake he's preparing to fish. It gives him an idea of what to expect so he can plan his fishing accordingly.

"I have a fairly standard list of questions I try to get answered," said the Evinrude Outboards Pro Staff angler. "Basically, I want to get an overview of the lake's fishery so I know how to fish and what I can expect to catch.

"It saves a lot of trial and error once I'm on the water. I started doing this about 1980 because I didn't have time to visit the tournament lakes beforehand, and now it's become a habit for any new lake I fish."

The technique works for the Arkansas pro. Earlier this year he fished a tournament on the Santee-Cooper Lakes of South Carolina, two large impoundments he'd never seen. After his pre-tournament history lesson, Nixon finished fourth in the event, catching 15 bass weighing more than 63 pounds.

"Essentially, I want to know what I should expect to catch," said Nixon. "I want to know if the bass group in large schools, the primary cover available, the normal lake water color and clarity and the average lake depth.

"I also want to know about other bass tournaments on the lake. What is the average winning weight in a local tournament? What size bass does the lake have? Will a fisherman catch a lot of fish throughout a day, or is the fishing difficult?"

One of the most important questions, Nixon emphasizes, is the average water clarity because this determines the depth of the bass. That, in turn, dictates lure choice and fishing.

"Very muddy water will normally move bass shallow, but if the lake is deep, deep water bass will stay on deep structure," said the Evinrude pro. "Dingy water only moves bass shallow for feeding.

"An angler needs to know and understand these factors on the lake he's fishing because they tell him whether to use jigs, spinnerbaits, or crankbaits."

The best place to learn the answers to such questions is by talking to a local tackle shop owner, boat dealer, or another angler, said Nixon.

"In virtually every place I've visited, the local fishermen are more than willing to share their knowledge," he said, "because they understand these are the same questions they need answered when they visit a new lake."

Once he has the answers and knows the history of a lake, Nixon files it away for future reference, not only for use on that particular body of water but for similar lakes, as well.

Digitized soldier of future may hit field by year 2000

By Judith Ginder
School of the Americas

Commanders of more than 25 Latin American countries attending the Training and Military Education Conference were treated to a demonstration of "the 21st Century land warrior" Nov. 15 at the School of the Americas.

Col. Arnold Canada, director of the Dismounted Battlespace Battle Lab, presented the seminar. The battle lab at Fort Benning is one of five Training and Doctrine Command battle lab sites.

The philosophy behind the dismounted soldier is to respond to the needs of tomorrow's Army, Canada said.

Because the Army of the future will be smaller, new technology is being found to make soldiers more lethal in a global environment, he said.

The digitized soldier of the future will be equipped with a system that includes an 8-millimeter video camera, an antenna attached to the soldier's Kevlar, a computer kept inside the soldier's ruck that can transmit messages and video pictures, and a camera attached to the soldier's interchangeable weapon.

The computer inside of the ruck sack weighs approximately eight pounds and also has a quick reference guide that gives instruction on topics such as buddy aid or applying a tourniquet.

Canada said the system is being made simple enough that everyone can learn to use it in several hours.

"Can the soldier carry it, fight with it and use it everywhere in the world?" Yes, Canada said. The dismounted soldier has already been tested in a desert environment and will be tested in a cold, snowy environment as well as a wet and rainy environment during the upcoming year.

According to Canada, soldiers will be able to fight and communicate with both troops and vehicles on the ground and in the air.

"We hope to put this type of soldier in the field by the turn of the century," Canada said.

Also in the works for the future is a micro-climatic heating and cooling system for the soldier's uniform.

This system would work like a heating and air-conditioning system, so soldiers can acclimate themselves to all environments.

After the seminar concluded, members of the Training and Military Education Conference asked questions and were able to get a better look at the equipment that Spc. Chad Wahinekapu, digitized soldier, was carrying with him.

The fifth biennial Training and Military Education Conference concluded Nov. 17 with the signing of an agreement regarding the agenda for the sixth Training and Military Education Conference set for the fall of 1996 at the School of the Americas.

world war II

50 years ago this week ...

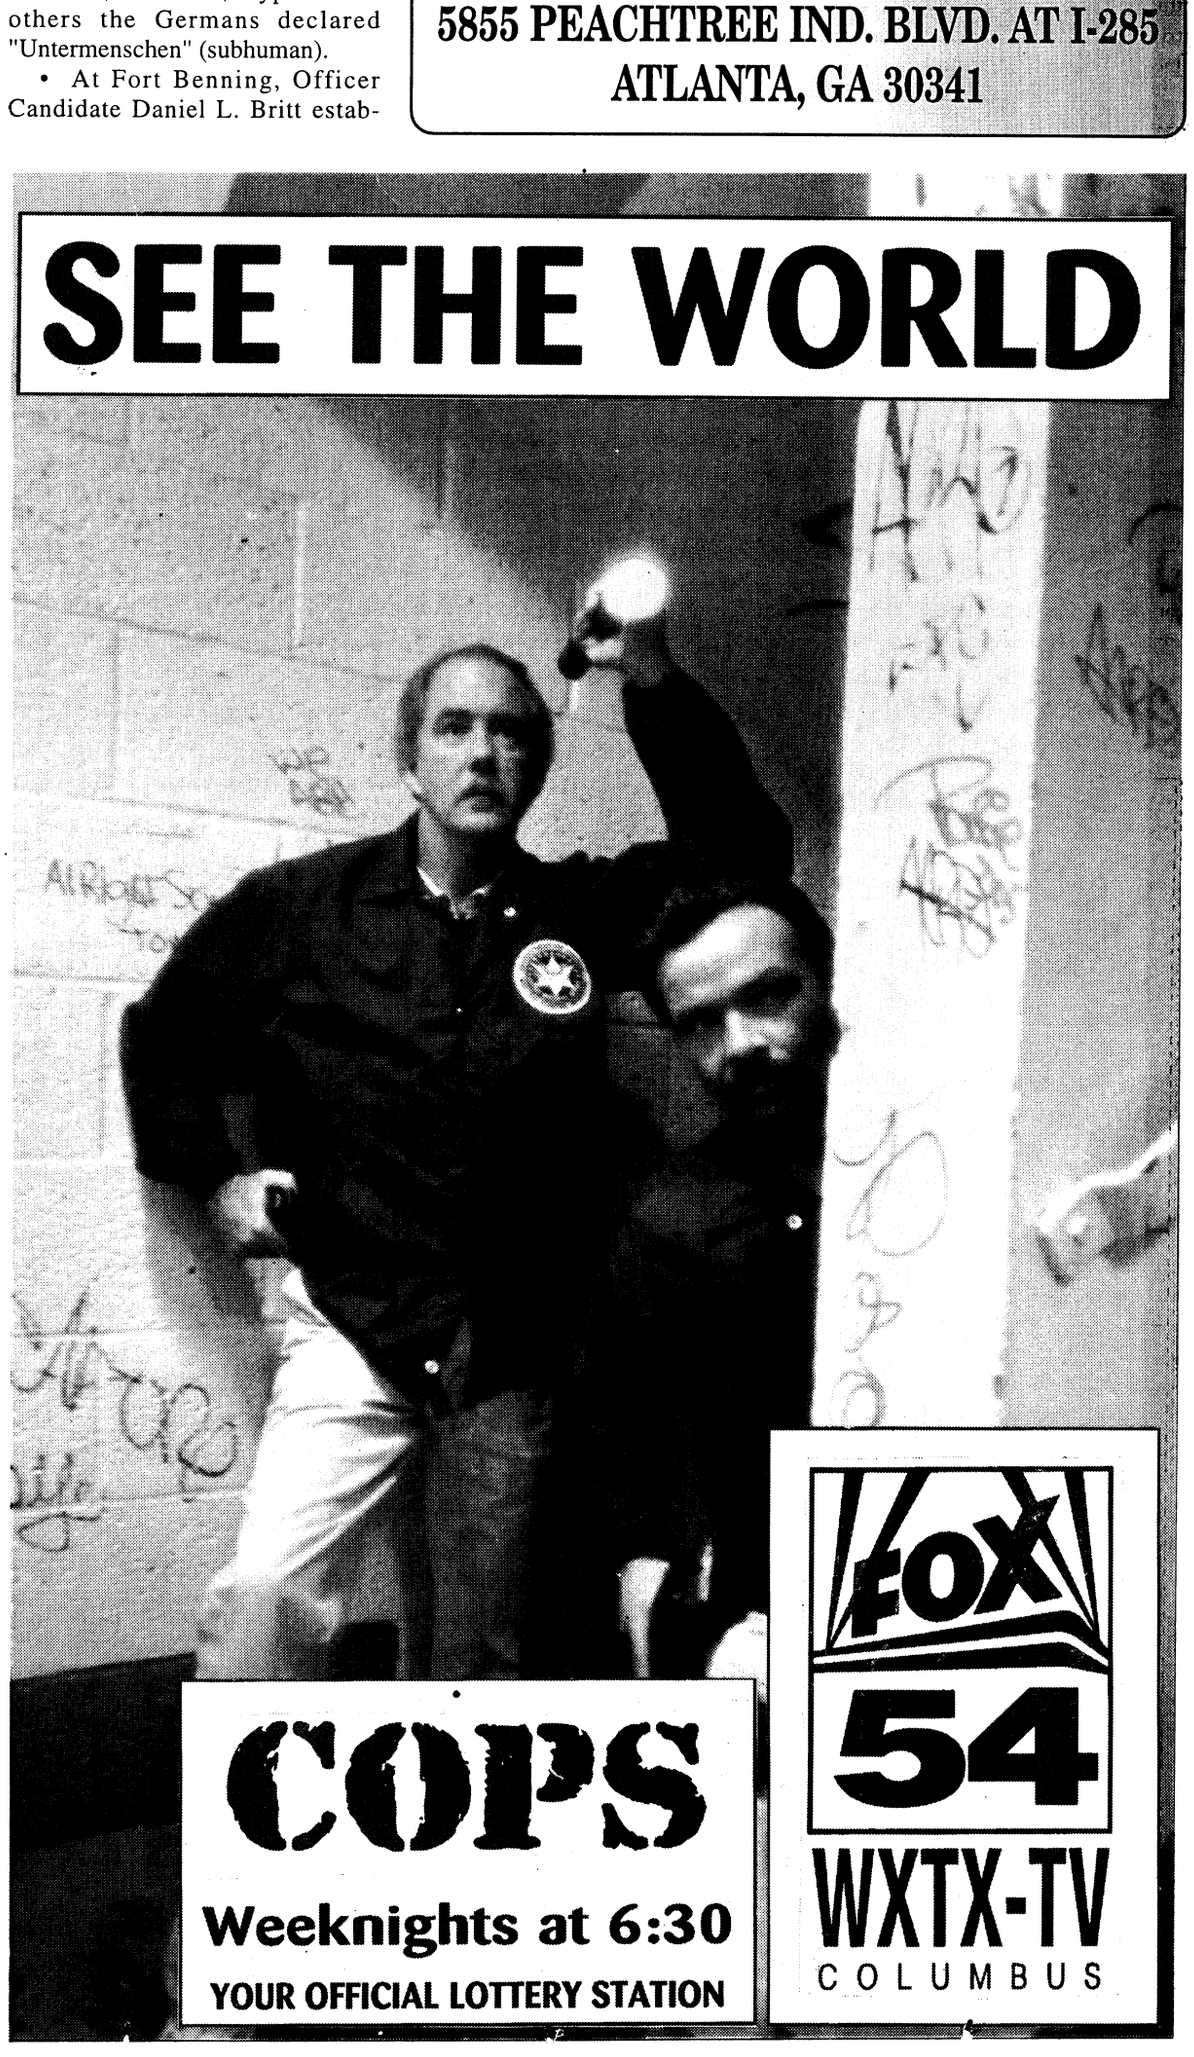
• The War Refugee Board revealed to the public the first details of Nazi atrocities at Birkenau and Auschwitz in Poland, stating that nearly 1.7 million Jews were murdered at those locations.

• The largest proportion of the 11 million people murdered by the Nazis in their biological cleansing program were approximately 6 million Jews, but the mass extermination program also claimed the lives of Poles, Russians, Gypsies and others the Germans declared "Untermenschen" (subhuman).



• At Fort Benning, Officer Candidate Daniel L. Britt established a new Fort Benning rifle marksmanship record for the M-1 rifle. He shot 208 out of a possible 210 breaking the previous record of 205 set in 1943.

ask dr. fit

U.S. Army Physical Fitness School

I have had many problems with my back over the past few years. Is there any hope for relief from back problems?

Yes, there is hope. In most patients, specific injuries to the low back are difficult to find.

Initially, you must learn the cause of the pain. Some pain responds well to Williams' flexibility exercises. These exercises involve flexing of the spine — assuming the fetal position or the position you take when splashing someone with the "cannonball" drive.

The exercises involve flexing one knee to the chest, then the other knee to the chest, then both knees to the chest.

Another set of back exercises are called the McKenzie Exercises. These six positions are:

- Lying face down with arms at your side
- Lying face down with elbows under the shoulders and raising on the forearms
- Lying face down with hands under the shoulders and extending the arms so the elbows are straight
- Extension in standing with a back bend
- Lying on the back, assume the knees to chest position
- While sitting, bend forward and place the hands on the floor and reach back between the legs.

As with most exercises, use common sense and do not exercise or aggravate the injury.

What is the gylcemic index?

The gylcemic index measures the rise in blood glucose levels. It occurs after eating a standard amount of carbohydrate food stuffs.

"Carbos" that enter the blood rapidly after ingestion are classified as having a high gylcemic index, while those with a low gylcemic index enter the blood slowly.

Items with a high gylcemic index (released quickly) are: bananas, corn, rice, potatoes, honey raisins, and some port drinks.

Some medium gylcemic index foods are: grapes, oatmeal, oranges, and pasta. Apples, beans, lentils, peaches, and yogurt are good examples of foods that slowly release their energy.

ask the judge

Staff Judge Advocate's Office

Q: I recently purchased a used automobile at a dealership in Columbus.

Since I purchased it, it has been running like someone smashed a cinderblock over the top of the motor. I've already spent $600 on repairs and I think the car is a lemon. Can I force the dealer to take the car back?

A: There are no "lemon law" rights for used cars unless the car was a new car repurchased because it was a lemon. Unless there is a warranty of some sort on the vehicle, the purchase is "as is." If you purchase a vehicle "as is" and a problem later surfaces, you have very little protection.

The only true protection is through a warranty. Such warranties can be written or oral; but, with major purchases such as a vehicle, you should only rely on a written warranty.

Warranties can vary from dealership to dealership, so it is important to find out the following:

- What repairs are covered and not covered by the warranty
- How long the warranty will be in effect
- What the seller promises to do if the product does not work properly
- What your duties as a buyer are
- What restrictions exist on the warranty coverage.

If a dealer offers an oral warranty, ask for it in writing to protect yourself.

Individuals often ask if they can just take the car back to the dealer, leave it, and stop making payments on the vehicle. If you do this, you have offered the car for voluntary repossession.

The dealer may then sell the car for a reasonable price, which may be far less than what you paid, and then you are responsible for any deficiency in that price and the amount you owe on the car.

Additionally, the repossession will be reported on your credit history.

If your vehicle fails, read your written warranty and determine your rights.

If you are entitled to repair or replacement, contact the dealership. If not, you can still consider discussing the matter with the seller of the vehicle, the manufacturer or the Better Business Bureau.

If you get no satisfaction and believe you have a legitimate claim against the dealer, contact the Legal Assistance Division at the Office of the Staff Judge Advocate to discuss the matter with an attorney. The telephone number is 545-3281.

Simple steps to prevent credit card fraud, abuse

Better Business Bureau

Last year, credit card companies topped the Council of Better Business Bureaus' list of most-asked-about businesses.

While consumers are deciding which card offers the best interest rate and the most attractive incentives, businesses must cope with a major problem related to increased credit card use — credit card fraud.

Fraudulent credit cards are obtained in several ways. Some cards are stolen, while other cards are altered to appear legitimate.

One of the most significant advancements in the past few years to combatting altered or counterfeit cards was the introduction of credit cards with holograms. Counterfeiters have found this feature difficult to duplicate; and, as a result, the number of illegally reproduced cards has declined.

However, new forms of counterfeiting continue to trouble the credit card industry. These include magnetic strip counterfeiting, altered signature panels and re-embossed account numbers.

Businesses can train employees to take the following measures to help prevent credit card fraud:

- Watch for altered, expired or not-yet valid cards
- Ask to see photo identification if you suspect the card may be stolen or the individual is making large or unusual purchases. Verify that the individual's name on the credit card matches the name on the identification card
- Compare the signature on the back of the credit card to the person's identification card and to the sales slip
- Use electronic authorization terminals, call credit card issuers for authorization on all card purchases, or conduct random authorization checks on small purchases
- Destroy all documents that contain your customers' credit card numbers before throwing them away.

While some of these measures might seem time-consuming, the extra efforts have proven effective deterrents to credit card crime.

When swindlers see that such precautions are being taken to clear their credit purchases, they often choose to pay cash or cancel the transaction altogether. A business can build a strong reputation for being difficult, if not impossible, to swindle.

Name: Virginia Wright

Award or recognition: Employee of the Quarter, fourth quarter
Unit or activity: Directorate of Contracting, Purchasing Division
Job title: Purchasing agent
Years on the job: Seven

What were your reasons for joining civil service?
My ambition has always been to work at a job that would utilize many of my talents. Job satisfaction and efficiency are two of my main goals. Working for the federal government gives me many challenges and opportunities to excel and to serve my country.

Define your work ethic.
To continue to be proficient, complete, efficient, timely and most of all effective, with the highest quality.

What person has most influenced your career?
It would be hard to narrow it down to one person because there have been so many who have influenced my career through the years, such as Roy Legget, Nilsa Summey, Vera Cooper and John Machovec, just to name a few. They have continually encouraged me to strive toward career advancement, integrity, quality performance and acceptance of challenges with a "can-do" attitude.

If you were your supervisor for a day, what improvements would you make?
There is not a lot you can do in one day; however, I would observe, inquire, ask for suggestions and annotate findings in all areas of the Purchasing Division in order to increase our division proficiency should I get the opportunity to perform in the job permanently.

Describe a memorable moment in your career.
Early in my purchasing career, I received a request to refurbish "Iron Mike." Little did I know at that time how important this project was. However, using my ability to deal effectively with people, this project was accomplished incomparably.

What are your future career plans?
To become a higher level purchasing agent or contracting officer in Purchasing Division or a contract specialist in Contracting Division, Directorate of Contracting.

What others have to say : "Virginia takes pride in her work and is willing to assist others. Her support and personal assistance help meet the needs of the soldiers and family members of this installation."

— Vera Cooper

Post offers traditional dinner for holiday

Choice of turkey or ham will highlight menu for post dining

By Jerrie Macintire
Special to The Bayonet ©

Imagine feasting on a traditional Thanksgiving meal of roast turkey with all the trimmings and a choice of five kinds of dessert, all without lifting a finger in preparation.

Imagine Thanksgiving without greasy baking pans, without excess rolls multiplying in the breadbox, without leftover cranberry sauce transforming to crimson ooze inside your refrigerator.

Family member Kim Wade imagined it, and she's planning to have Thanksgiving at one of the dining facilities on post with her husband, Officer Candidate Chris Wade, and their two young children.

"We just had our second child less than two weeks ago," said Wade, who also has a toddler at home.

"By having our meal at the dining hall, we can spend quality time together as a family. That's what Thanksgiving is all about," she said.

The Wades will be joining about 17,000 other individuals who are planning to attend one of the post dining facilities, said Ed Hilton, chief of Food Services.

"We serve a family holiday meal on an Army scale," said Hilton, who has been busy for days coordinating this meal, the largest of the year at post dining facilities.

The menu will include roast turkey, baked ham or steamship round of beef as well as a variety of trimmings including oyster dressing, cranberry sauce, mashed and candied sweet potatoes, vegetables, salads, rolls, pumpkin and pecan pies, fruit cakes, candy and assorted fresh fruit, Hilton said.

Thanksgiving is the busiest day of the year for Food Services; chefs work around the clock to prepare the traditional meal, which features portions about 25 percent larger than usual, Hilton said.

Although no turkey is precooked ahead of time, chefs are busy with other dishes as well as decorating the dining facilities with linens, paper mache favors, colorful streamers, edible but decorative desserts and ice sculptures crafted by Food Service workers, he said.

Military families, retired individuals and their guest can enjoy a feast at one of the 15 open dining facilities on post, according to Hilton. Most facilities will be open 11:30 a.m. until 2:30 p.m.

Retired individuals may make reservations at the Follow Me Dining Facility or may eat at any open facility, Hilton said.

Family members of deployed soldiers are welcome to eat Thanksgiving dinner on post; for information on the appropriate facility or for reservations, call Hilton at 545-2625.

Active duty soldiers and their family members will pay $3.10; children under the age of 12 will pay $1.55.

Nonactive duty adults guests will pay an additional surcharge required by Army regulations of $8.70 for a total of $11.80; minors will pay an additional surcharge of $4.35 for a total of $5.90, he said.

Dining facilities are:

'Chilled' carvings add beauty to special meal

Ice displays to grace tables at dining facilities

By Jerrie Macintire
Special to The Bayonet ©

The annual Thanksgiving feast should be beautiful as well as tasty, says a group of Food Service soldiers and civilians who participated in an ice-carving class earlier this week.

The class, a regular part of the Thanksgiving preparations at Fort Benning, is one way food service workers acquire new skills in order to present meals more attractively, said Ed Hilton, chief of Food Services.

Approximately 45 interested individuals gathered this week to learn the process of transforming 300-pound blocks of ice into images of graceful swans, elegant baskets, strutting turkeys and other traditional holiday themes. The sculptors begin with solid blocks of ice approximately four feet high, three feet wide and 18 inches deep, said Earl Marchbanks, manager of the Follow Me Dining Facility who helps instruct the class each year.

The finished products will be on display in most dining facilities around post on Thanksgiving Day, he said.

Patrons of the Fort Benning dining facilities have been able to view the efforts of ice sculptors since 1972, when Hilton introduced the art of ice carving after completing a class at Fort Lee, Va.

Using tools such as chain saws, cross cut saws, chisels, shavers and ice carvers, the artists created images from their 300-pound blocks of ice after carefully planning the steps before picking up the first sharp tool. In addition, the carvers had to take into account the contours and individual characteristics of the ice blocks.

In order to temper the ice and decrease the likelihood of breakage, the blocks were allowed to stand at room temperature for about an hour before carving.

The ice sculptures "look elegant, and add to the decor for the festive theme of Thanksgiving," Hilton said.

Though their creations, which were hours in the making, will disappear into large pools of water by tomorrow evening, the ice carvers said they thought the effort was worthwhile.

Advent: Jesus Christ is coming again

By Carl Young
USAIC Chaplains Office

reflections

What is Advent?

I remember serving as pastor of my first congregation in the Army and the members of the parish council were discussing the plans for Advent. Someone turned to me and said, "Chaplain, what are we going to do for Advent?" I didn't know what to say; I was lost.

Coming from a Pentecostal background, we did not celebrate Advent, at least not in the manner done in chapel services.

I knew if I was going to serve the needs of my congregation, I must learn about this time of year.

Advent is the time Christians set aside to prepare for the coming of Christ. The season begins on the fourth Sunday before Christmas and ends on Christmas Eve.

During this period, we confess, proclaim and manifest that "the Word was made flesh, and dwelt among us" (John 1:14 KJV).

It is a spiritual time, an event in which we both celebrate the birth of Jesus Christ and at the same time, we look forward to his second coming.

This celebration is to change our emphasis from an outward search for possessions. Instead, we turn inward to search our soul, seeking to grow closer to God. The message and hymns center around the thoughts of love, joy, peace and hope.

One of the most popular customs of this season is the placing of Advent wreaths in homes and churches. The Advent wreath illustrates the truth of the eternal nature of God. There are four candles on it, three are purple and one is rose. We light a candle and sing the hymn, "O Come, O Come Emmanuel," on the first Sunday of advent.

The hymn calls the congregation to anticipate the coming of Christ. The second candle is lighted on the second Sunday as we proclaim the word of God, and his message of salvation. It delivers to us peace, the peace that can only come from Jesus Christ.

We light the rose candle on the third Sunday as a symbol of joy. We rejoice knowing God's promise is found in Scripture, "If you obey my commands, you will remain in my love, just as I have obeyed my Father's commands and remain in his love. I have told you this so that my joy may be in you and that your joy may be complete (John 15:10-11 NIV). We have joy in the hope of salvation.

The fourth candle is a symbol of God's love. God loved us enough to send his son that we might be saved. In the midst of all our darkness, God's love brings light into our lives.

After learning the meaning of Advent, my concerns are not on materialistic views of Christmas; instead, I prepare for the coming of my savior. Yes, Christmas is coming; Christ is coming again.

Israel's freedom is derived from Hanukkah

By Robert W. Thompson

reflections

It's the stuff that movies are made of, and this story would make a great movie. The opening scene: a shot of a huge stone building, about the size of a football field, on a December day centuries ago in the Middle East.

The next scene puts us inside the building, where we see hundreds of standing persons who face several robed men up front. Through the growing darkness, we hear voices chanting ancient music.

Then, from out of nowhere (or so it seems) we see the small glow of a candle. Another glow appears, and then another, until we count eight of them burning on a candlestand.

We see the light of the candles reflected on the faces of dozens of people in the assembly while the singing voices slowly fade.

The next scene begins with these words on the screen, "Three and a half years earlier." We see soldiers training.

The leaders, a family of brothers, discuss strategy and tactics. For the next two hours or so, we watch the drama of political and religious liberation unfold, as the brothers lead their people.

A neighboring ruler threatens to crush life as they live it. In American terms, he forbids the use of the English language, bans television, movies — and major league sports, and turns the White House into a den of ill repute. Life as they know it is gone. Darkness reigns.

We watch them pay a terrible price for restoring freedom. The bloodshed and violence matches the worst we can imagine. Suspense, fear, anger and sadness swirl within us.

The movie ends where it began, with the festival of lights, a celebration of cleansing and restoration. We have seen the whole story. All but one brother is dead, along with hundreds of others. But the people's language and land belong to them again. Their White House is once again a house of prayer. For now, the light of peace reigns among the people.

The true story of the Maccabbean struggle for Israel's freedom 2,000 years ago might never be made into a movie, although it deserves to be made. It recounts as much courage and will as any movie and it shows us the origin of the holiday called Hanukkah.

The story has not been made into a movie, but it looks very familiar. We haven't seen it at a theater or through our videocassette recorders; we see it on the news. If this news version were a movie, we would call it something like, "Thousands of Soldiers and Civilians Killed in Wars in Somalia, Haiti, Sarajevo, and Other Countries."

It's the same shadowy scene, merely a different locale. Darkness always falls when the powerful intrude upon the weak. The smoke battle burns the eyes and blinds the vision of aggressor and defender alike. Every generation on every continent since time began has witnessed such madness. It saps like from families, neighborhoods and nations. It is evil.

One fact states at us clearly — everyone loses. There is no festival of lights to commemorate restoration in these stories. Violence, starvation and darkness reigns.

Some look upon this chronic destruction and drown in despair. How can we stop it? They wonder. Others look upon it and strive to survive, to endure and help make a better day.

Hanukkah, the Festival of Lights, honors this realistic optimism. When we give in to darkness, we help to sustain it. Hanukkah reminds us it is better to light a candle than to curse the darkness.

Garner reopens 'The Rockford Files'

By Jay Bobbin
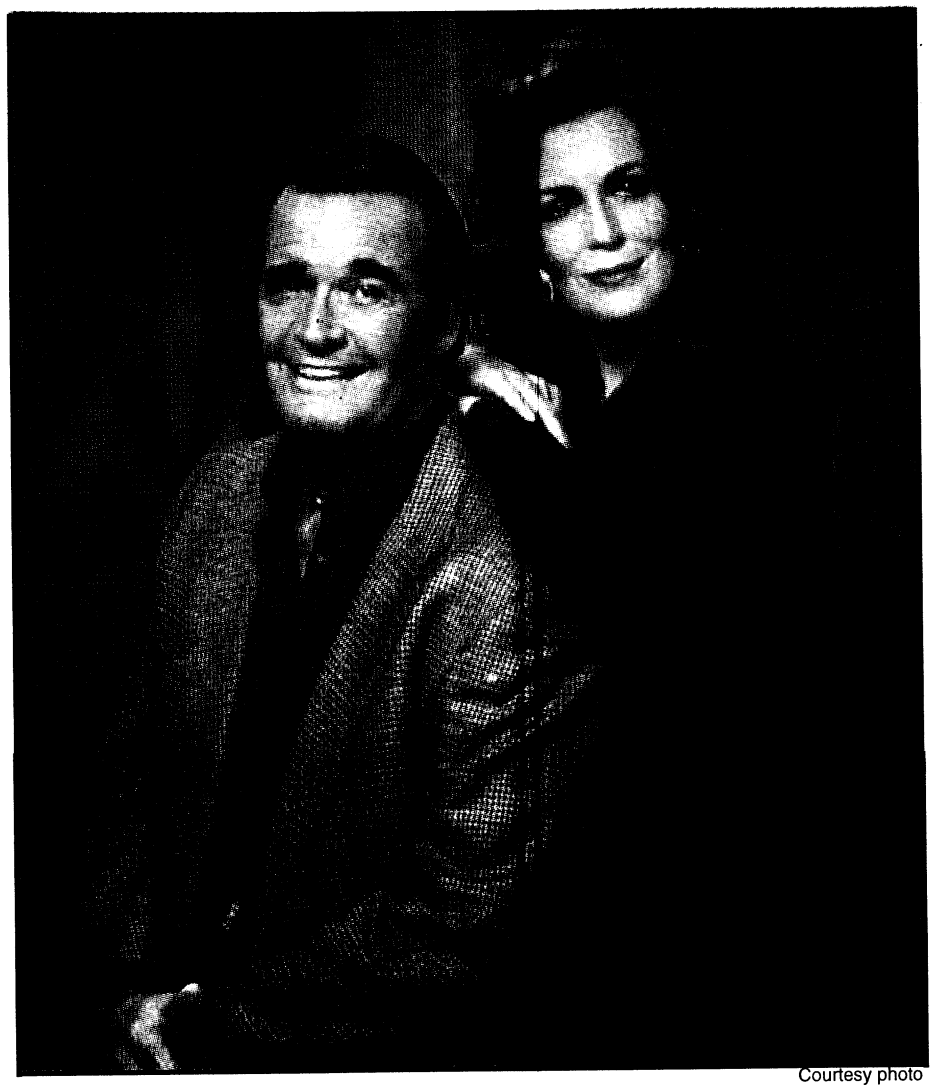
Tribune Media Services

After helping to revive "Maverick" earlier this year, James Garner is giving renewed life to another of his classic series.



SPOTLIGHT

The veteran actor earned an Emmy Award in the course of his 1970s portrayal of Jim Rockford, the none-too-slick but still-effective private eye ... and Sunday on CBS, he brings the character back in the first of several planned "Rockford Files" TV-movies.

Subtitled "I Love L.A.", the new caper finds the detective still residing in a Malibu, Calif., trailer, and now divorced from a well-known attorney (played by Joanna Cassidy, who also appeared opposite Garner in HBO's "Barbarians at the Gate"). She recruits him to help probe a longtime film star's murder, resulting in a case that ends up being much more complicated than it initially seemed.

In other words, it's a standard-issue Rockford mission, and it brings him back into contact with his ex-con pal Angel (Stuart Margolin) and policeman Dannis Becker (fellow returnee Joe Santos).

Though actor Noah Beery Jr. — who played Garner's father — died several weeks ago, he's remembered visually in the story; many of the principal behind-the-scenes talents also revisit "Rockford" territory with the tale, including co-executive producers Juanita Bartlett (who wrote the script) and Chas. Floyd Johnson, and supervising producers Stephen J. Cannell (the series' creator) and David Chase.

James Garner and Joanna Cassidy

Asked why he's stepping back into Rockford's shoes at this point, the ever-candid Garner responds loudly and with a broad smile, "Money! No, you want to know the real truth? I'm of an age that I don't know if I could do this three or four years down the line, and I want to do it. If I'm going to do it, I should do it now.

"It's a wonderful character, it's been very successful in my life, and I'd like to give it one more shot," he continued. "This is a good format to do it in, with six two-hour movies."

The other five are expected to play out over the rest of this television season and the next one, but Garner reports that CBS "actually wanted 18. He said, 'We'll try six, then we'll talk.' "

If there was a complaint Garner had about doing "The Rockford Files," it was the sheer physical demand it placed on him, since he was in virtually every scene of every episode ... with a good number of those sequences involving rough-and-tumble action.

"We're not going to have quite so much of that," he said with obvious relief of the TV-movie follow-ups. "If you do 10 pages of dialogue and action every day for six years, you're going to put yourself in the hospital. If you look back at all the (series actors who played) private detectives who went through this, none of them have any knees left. "

Fendall Hall in Eufaula to host 'Nights before Christmas' in Dec

Eufaula-Barbour County Tourism Council

The third annual "Nights before Christmas at Fendall Hall" in Eufaula, Ala., will be Dec. 12 and 13.

The mansion, located at 917 W. Barbour St., will be decorated for the season with old-fashioned trees, cones and Christmas arrangements by local garden clubs. There will be entertainment from 5 to 7 p.m. both nights. Donations will be $3 a night per person, children under 12 free when accompanied by a paying adult.

In the late 1850s, New Yorker Edward Brown Young and his family began collecting wood from their timberland to build what we know today as Fendall Hall.

Sawmills nearby rough-cut the wood into lumber so it could be stacked and dried. Using only the best, mill machinery on the site brought it to its final dimensions and created frames and mouldings for the doors and windows.

The house was finished with calcimine paint inside and out. The so-called "buttermilk white-wash" was made of slaked lime, water and buttermilk. The interior wall paint was pigmented with natural dyes and stains, creating earth tones.

The Youngs lived in the house until his death in 1879. The house and property were then purchased by one of the daughters, Anna Beall Young and her husband, Capt. Hubert Dent, a Confederate soldier, who was wounded at Shiloh, Atlanta and Nashville.

According to family tradition, the Dents intended to introduce their eldest daughter to society in grand style. As part of this plan, they remodeled the house. They made at least one trip to New York City to select the latest in furniture, carpets and drapes. It was Katherine Louise Dent who married George W. Hunt of Georgia and eventually inherited the house.

Naming the old family home was done by Louise Dent, who may have chosen the name Fendall Hall in honor of her grandmother, Anna Fendall Beall Young. At the death of Louise Hurt, the house passed to her daughter Mary Maude Hurt.

The property was bought by the Eufaula Heritage Association in 1972. It was then sold to the Alabama Historical Commission in 1973, which maintains it under a master restoration plan.

For scheduled open hours of Fendall Hall, call the Eufaula-Barbour County Tourism Council at (800) 524-7529.

CELEBRATING THANKSGIVING

Army secretary visits post

Brings video greetings from 3rd Bde soldiers

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Secretary of the Army Togo D. West Jr. brought greetings from 3rd Brigade, 24th Infantry Division, soldiers in Saudi Arabia and Kuwait to families and friends at Fort Benning during a Thanksgiving Day stop.

West, traveling with his wife, Gail, and Mike Walker, assistant secretary of the Army for Installations, Logistics and Environment, visited with nearly 200 soldiers and family members at the Kelley Hill Recreation Center.

Shaking hands and patting soldiers on the back, he thanked them for their dedication and professionalism.

West also showed two video tapes, one with holiday greetings from soldiers still in Southwest Asia, and another dedicated to family members for their support of their soldiers.

During his remarks, West praised the 3rd Brigade soldiers, noting how rapidly they deployed and the key role they played in getting Iraqi President Saddam Hussein to back off from his threat to invade Kuwait.

AUSA to help soldiers celebrate the holidays

By Richard Brill
Special to The Bayonet©

Each year, Operation Holiday comes to the rescue of soldiers who have to spend the Christmas season alone on post.

Since 1980, Operation Holiday has offered soldiers a variety of free activities, including musical entertainment, tours of local attractions and tickets to college and professional sporting events.

Jim Gallagher, executive vice president, Association of the United States Army, Chattahoochee Valley-Fort Benning Chapter, said this year is no exception.

"Operation Holiday continues to promote meaningful activities for soldiers who can't be with their families during the holiday season," he said.

This year's events include a number of college and professional basketball and football games and an appearance by Miss Georgia, Andrea Krahn, and the Miss Georgia Superstars at the Kelley Hill Recreation Center.

"The Miss Georgia Show is one of the highlights of Operation Holiday," Gallagher said. "She and the Miss Georgia Superstars are great entertainers and they love to perform for soldiers."

Gallagher said that tickets may also be available to a Christmas Eve Atlanta Falcons game.

According to Gallagher, transportation to and from various events will be provided as well as the cost of admission. However, any additional items, such as refreshments at sporting events, must be paid for by the soldier, he said.

The list of on-post events has not been finalized. Unit representatives will be given the final schedule when it is finished and soldiers will be able to register through their units at that time. Space for many events is limited, so soldiers should sign up early, Gallagher said.

Gallagher also reminded soldiers that Operation Holiday is intended primarily for those who cannot go home for the holidays, who are separated from their families or who have no transportation.

"There have been some misconceptions in the past," he said. "We just don't have unlimited tickets to pass out. Quotas are set for each unit on post."

Operation Holiday will kick off Dec. 16 with a ceremony at the Government Center in Columbus at 8:30 a.m. Fort Benning commanders, including Commanding General Maj. Gen. John W. Hendrix and Columbus and Phenix City officials including Columbus Mayor-Elect Bobby Peters will be present.

Operation Holiday is sponsored by AUSA and donations are made by individuals and organizations.

"Operation Holiday is not supported out of AUSA's general budget," Gallagher said. "It is supported entirely from donations by local businesses and individuals. The Columbus and Phenix City communities have continued to provide outstanding support. We are also grateful for the help of the Directorate of Community Activities for its help in scheduling on-post events and to the Better Opportunities for Single Soldiers for its help in coordinating activities and getting the word out."

Family sick leave

President signs bill allowing employees time off for sick family members

American Forces Information Service

President Bill Clinton has signed legislation allowing government employees to use sick leave to care for ill family members.

The Federal Employees Family Friendly Leave Act goes into effect Dec. 22. Until then current rules apply — employees can use sick leave only for their own illness.

The measure contains a broad definition of "family." Employees will be able to use sick leave to care for a spouse, parents, spouse's parents, children (including adopted children) and their spouses, brothers and sisters and their spouses or any individual related by blood or affinity whose close association with the employee is equivalent to a family relationship.

All employees will be able to use at least five of their 13 sick days per year for family care. They will be allowed to use an additional eight days, provided they retain at least 80 hours in their account.

Office of Personnel Management officials are working on the regulations, so details are not in place. They said they will evaluate the policy during a three-year pilot run and report to Congress.

FAMILY SICK LEAVE

New policy will allow government employees to take sick leave to care for:

- A spouse
- Parents
- Spouse's parents
- Children (including adopted children) and their spouses
- Brothers and sisters and their spouses
- Any individual related by blood or affinity whose close association with the employee is equivalent to a family relationship

VARIOUS VOICES

Do you think we still need the Courtesy Patrol?

Deborah Harris, family member — "Yes, because people have really gotten out of line with what they're wearing and it's disrespectful to a lot of people. It's a military installation — people need to dress accordingly."

Staff Sgt. Kurt J. Denmon, 4th Ranger Training Battalion — "No. I think we should put out a letter to the battalion commanders putting the civilians (who monitor the entrances to the Post Exchange and Commissary) in charge. If they see a discrepancy, they should have the authority to take care of it."

1st Lt. Chad A. Calvaresi, Mortar Leaders Course, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment — "I think it's a good idea. It prevents uniform violators."

Sgt. Sam E. Helfferich, Company D, 2nd Battalion, 18th Infantry Regiment — "Yes, because soldiers are sometimes slack — it (the Courtesy Patrol) keeps them on their toes, keeps a professional appearance."

Gwen A. Ponder, family member — "No. Noncommissioned officers should be checking their personnel — and if everybody did their job off duty as well as on duty there would be no need for courtesy patrols."

Pvt. 1 Dennis W. Perkins, Ranger Indoctrination Program — "I don't think so — I think you should be able to wear what you want."

Courtesy Patrol

Duty not needed if people dressed, behaved properly in public

By Clyde Snively
Bayonet columnist

commentary

Contrary to what the title, "Courtesy Patrol," might indicate, people who perform those duties do not prowl around looking for acts of courtesy.

Nope, their job is to remind boys and girls when they've been "naughty," not nice.

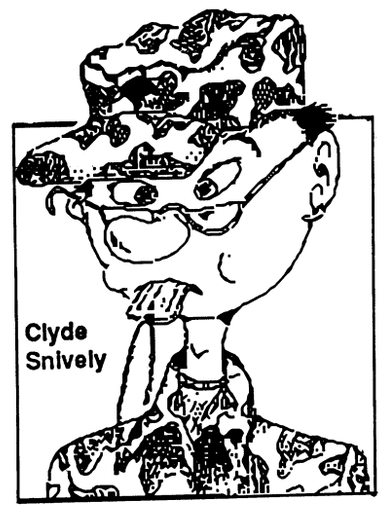
I read stories about people suing because they spill coffee on themselves, can't fit into ordinary-sized airline or theater seats or fall off a barstool during a post rugby bash.

And these turkeys (guinea fowls), because of a convoluted court system, often win.

"Why can't people take responsibility for their own actions?" I yell to the skies. But the skies don't answer me.

Now I'm asking why we, as soldiers and soldier family members, can't take responsibility for ourselves and our families. Why do noncommissioned officers have to put on "CP" brassards and patrol Fort Benning in pursuit of people who don't know how to dress and behave in public?

What a waste of manpower.



Hey, I'm a specialist and know enough not to wear underwear as an outer garment. Nor do I try to slip into the Post Exchange with a tank top and shower shoes.

But there are those who outrank me who haven't figured this out yet.

Because we have a few non compos mentis wandering about post in curlers, shower caps or running shorts, we have CPs whose job is to "Tsk, tsk, you're in violation of civilian clothing standards; you can't shop in the Commissary today."

Naturally, they get a lot of grief from these trend setters. And sometimes the trend setters just might be right. For instance, a CP might not recognize the difference between a 98-cent pair of shower shoes and a $98 pair of Birkenstocks. So this makes their job even more thankless.

The sad part about this entire situation is, if the chain of command did it's job — if NCOs and officers cared enough to want the best for their people, their post and their Army — they'd make on-the spot corrections and we could save a lot of manpower by doing away with CPs.

A CP I talked to said he hated his tour as a CP.

"Every time you get ready to make a correction, you have to brace yourself for a confrontation," he said. "And some people get downright nasty.

"They can't believe they shouldn't be allowed into someplace like the bowling center with various parts of their anatomy sticking out of places they shouldn't be sticking out of.

"I've had women screaming in my face right there in public that I'm a male swine when I've tried to discreetly point out why they cannot enter a public gathering place."

Another CP said he got a lot of grief from officers who couldn't believe the cute little rucksacks they used at college to carry books around in aren't appropriate to carry books to classes when they're in uniform.

He wondered out loud what happened to the briefcases advanced course students used to have or the aviator bags that replaced them.

"I think when these students report in, they need a briefing telling them what is and is not appropriate. I mean doesn't anyone know you just don't mix military and civilian clothing or accessories? I've had that drummed into me ever since basic."

Seems to me there are people out there who need a healthy injection of pride — pride in self, pride in uniform, pride in our Army.

Perhaps then we could do away with CPs, or let them patrol for courtesy and pass out those "attaboy coins" for overt acts of courtesy.

dial 545-boss

Dial 545-BOSS is the commander's action line for soldiers, family members and civilians to call when they have problems or complaints that can't be resolved elsewhere. While it is not a substitute for the chain of command or for agencies established to provide assistance, the line offers another means of communication between Fort Benning's community and commanders.

The Bayonet features some of the calls that may benefit other members of the Fort Benning community.

☎ Call: There are three street lights in a row out on my street and I would like to know why they haven't been fixed.

Directorate of Public Works, Utilities Branch response:

There were actually four street lights out on Kawamura Street and all have been repaired. Two of the street lights out were short-circuited by a metal fence post that was driven through an underground wire. The other two street lights were out due to faulty electronic photo cells.

☎ Call: I have been going to Briant Wells indoor pool for water aerobics for three weeks at no charge. Now all of a sudden the gym has started charging for aerobics and I would like to know why.

I heard that the money was going to the Officers' Wives' Club. If this is true, I believe this is unfair, considering my husband is a private first class.

Directorate of Community Activities response:

Free water aerobic classes are available at Briant Wells indoor pool Monday, Wednesday and Friday, 6 to 7 p.m., depending on the availability of the volunteer instructor. If you are interested in classes, contact Billy Clarke, at 545-5709 and he will be able to provide you with a weekly schedule of when the volunteer instructor will be available to teach free classes.

In reference to the paid classes, the Officers' Club does conduct a winter water aerobic class at Briant Wells indoor pool and charges a fee; however, the instructor for this class is under a nonappropriated fund contract and is paid from collected fees. Swimming classes are at the Officers' Club pool.

☎ Call: I was stopped by the Military Police on Eames Avenue. The MP stated the residents did not want anyone driving in front of their homes.

I would like to know what regulation gives the residents the authority to misappropriate an MP to stop people from driving down a public main street.

Military Police Activity response:

MPs were placed on Kries Street to enforce posted traffic signs. The traffic signs that were posted stated "No through traffic."

The signs were placed in accordance with U.S. Army Infantry Center Regulation 190-5, the Georgia Traffic Code and the Uniform Vehicle Code. These regulations allow local agencies to post traffic control signs limiting access in designated areas.

The signs were placed to limit traffic around Quarters 1 and Quarters 2, which are publicly restricted access areas. This area is restricted to provide greater security to the commanding general and the deputy commanding general.

DCA thanks sponsors

On behalf of the Directorate of Community Activities, we would like to express our gratitude to those individuals and organizations who made the 13th annual National Infantry Museum Road Race and Duathlon a huge success.

The 13th Annual Infantry Museum Road Race and Duathlon could not have been possible without thee support of several corporate sponsors.

The DCA would like to thank AT&T, First Union National Bank of Georgia, Tom's Foods Incorporated and Bill Heard Chevrolet who provided the funds necessary for the event, as well as Nike, Gatorade, Buffalo Rock Pepsi, Valley Fruit and Produce, and SatoTravel, which provided products and giveaways for the event.

A special thanks to South 106 for its help in promoting the race and announcing the winners.

We would also like to thank the Commissary and Post Exchange for their continued support.

Events such as these and their demonstrated support from corporate sponsors and the community are an essential part of the reason Fort Benning is a community of excellence.

Director of Community Activities

Speeding is a problem

I am very concerned with the problem of speeding in the housing areas. This is a constant problem that needs to be fixed.

I see people speeding by my quarters every day — some doing 10 to 20 mph over the posted speed limit.

I think the Military Police are doing an excellent job, but they just can't be everywhere at once.

I think that speed bumps should be installed at least on the side streets at every entrance and every so often after that.

I know the response I'll probably get — budget cuts, not enough money and so on. But I believe this could possibly save a child's life one day.

I have also noticed all of the recent paving of roads on Main Post. Why not divert the pavement to the housing areas for speed bumps? It sure would make life easier for the residents and the MPs.

Spc. Michael Fox
Fort Benning

Military Police response:

The answer is not one of economics. Speed bumps may appear to be a logical, low-cost way to end vehicle speeding; however, engineering studies have shown that they do not always work. Often, in fact, the bump is less noticeable as speed increases.

Furthermore, speed bumps present a definite and immediate hazard to some vehicles such as bicycles, motorcycles and fire trucks. Also, the potential hazard is not limited to vehicles; if the driver loses control, personal injury and tort liability is possible.

Hazard to the unwary, challenge to the daredevil and disruption to the movement of both emergency and service vehicles have caused speed bumps to be officially condemned by traffic engineers and safety experts as a standard traffic-control device.

Based on this analysis, speed bumps will not be used anywhere on Fort Benning; however, we will continue to emphasize the use of radar and strict law enforcement.

School Board discusses lunch program, Spencer High partnership

By Jerrie Macintire
Special to The Bayonet ©

Members of the Fort Benning School Board discussed the school lunch program, an innovative partnership between Faith Middle School and Spencer High School in Columbus, and educational programs in place at Wilson School during the regular monthly board meeting Monday.

In the superintendent's report to the board, Dell Karr reported the initial meeting between representatives of Spencer High School and Faith Middle School "was positive." The goal of the partnership is to help prepare middle schoolers for high school; Fort Benning teen-agers are slated to attend Spencer High School off post.

Karr also expressed appreciation for donations from the Officers' Wives' Club and Enlisted Wives' Club, which totaled $3,800. The OWC and EWC will help fund the Faith Road Race Saturday as well as a series of Fine Arts Concerts in the schools throughout the year. Part of the OWC donation will also fund a Special Olympics competition and the Parent Academy, a weekend seminar focusing on educational and parenting issues slated for February.

The school lunch program budget was also a topic of discussion; fewer students are purchasing school lunches while labor expenses have driven up the cost of serving meals, reported Alice Skinner, director of logistics for the Fort Benning Schools.

Although school lunches are more nutritious and lower in fat than in the past, participation is down by about 3 or 4 percent over this time last year, while at the same time, labor costs have increased, mainly because of health and life insurance increases of almost 100 percent for cafeteria workers, Skinner said. The current school lunch fund stands at $117,835, which includes a loss of $11,688 for the month of October.

Current food stocks are high and these excess commodities should impact the budget in future months. "We are going to see an improvement," Skinner said.

Members of the board discussed the feasibility of asking parent volunteers to help in the cafeteria during meals; due to stringent health standards and certifications required for cafeteria workers, that option is possible but not likely, members decided.

However, the board members agreed to examine the possibility of further automation for cafeterias to help cut costs and Skinner agreed to investigate the current Army food services computer system, which is used on Fort Benning.

Further automation could streamline the process and alleviate the demand for some cashiers, Skinner noted. If an automated computer system could cut labor costs by reducing the number of workers, positions would be eliminated as employees left their jobs; many employees are family members who move frequently as spouses are transferred, she said.

In other action, members of the board also heard a report on ways Wilson School is "maximizing students' success experiences," according to Frank Calvano, assistant superintendent for curriculum.

Phyllis Parker, principal at Wilson, discussed educational programs in place including "Project Atmosphere," a computer-driven science enrichment offering cross- curricular activities related to weather.

Parker said the new SEE, or Safe Environment for Everyone patrol, encouraged students to take responsibility and pride in the appearance of their school. She also discussed the Parents as Partners program that encourages parental involvement in school as well as programs focusing on self esteem such as the Citizen of the Month award and the Wildcat Wall.

In other business, Karr welcomed Shirley Paige as director of child nutrition for the Fort Benning Schools. She replaces Trudy Finley, who plans to retire this month.

School Board President Col. Gregory Camp, U.S. Army Infantry Center chief of staff, noted the next meeting will be the last Monday in January; the board will not meet in December.

Board members attending the meeting include Camp, Karr, Maj. Robert Thompson, chaplain; Garrison Commander Col. Richard Rutledge, schools officer; Lt. Col. Andrew Stewart, attorney adviser; and school representatives Sharon Marchant, Dexter; Lt. Col Michael Bingham, Faith; Lisa Grover, Loyd; Staff Sgt. Leroy Coronado, Wilson; and Mary Renn, Stowers.

Holiday safety may save lives

By Marc G. Turchin
Bayonet staff writer

Rainbow-colored lights blink off and on. Round-shaped ornaments, candy canes and gingerbread men cookies dangle from the green branches. Silver strings of glitter drape the tree from the gold star at the top to the white needle-ridden carpet below.

You stand a few steps back from your tree and smile. You're proud. The tree shines with color and everything seems in place.

But, without warning, this tree, this sign of joy and tradition, can turn your holiday season into a tragic season.

The Infantry Branch Safety Office wants you to remember safety while decorating and celebrating the holidays.

This time of year, there is a rise in fire occurrences nationwide, said Regis P. Beighley, post safety manager.

Beighley said last year in Columbus there was an increase in fires due to small space heaters and over-heated electrical cords.

The Safety Office offers these tips to help keep everyone safe:

• If you use an evergreen Christmas tree, select a fresh one. Cut two inches off the bottom of the trunk and place it in a stable tree holder filled with water.

• If you buy an artificial tree, choose one that's been tested for safety by a recognized testing lab (Underwriters Laboratories).

• Advent candles, a cinder from a fireplace or a spark from a frayed electrical wire can set a tinder-dry tree alight. Place a cut tree in a stand that holds water and don't let the base dry out. Otherwise, a seal will form and a new cut will be necessary.

• A tree may absorb a gallon of water in the first 24 hours, so check the water level often. Don't place the tree near any sources of flame, such as a wall heater or fireplace.

• Exterior and interior lighting is authorized in all housing areas. Col. Richard L. Rutledge, garrison commander, said that electric lighting should be kept at a modest level and that all lighting should be turned off by 11 p.m. every night as a courtesy to other residents in the neighborhood.

• Check labels on lights to be used outdoors to see they are suitable for outdoor use.

• Never use electric lights on a metallic tree. Use colored spotlights above or beside the tree to illuminate it.

• Check old holiday lights each year for cracks, frayed sections or broken wires before putting them up. If you can't get a string of lights safely repaired, replace it. Besides checking for broken wires or broken sockets (even on new lights) use lights rated for "indoors" or "outdoors" only in their appropriate areas.

• Turn off all decorative lights before you go out or go to bed.

• Don't run cords under rugs or furniture legs and make sure you don't exceed the power capacity of each outlet and circuit in your home.

• Try to avoid extension cords. If you can't, observe any power limitations they may have. Using a cord with too narrow a gauge for the circuit can cause it to get dangerously hot or short the circuit.

• If you have infants or toddlers, avoid placing colorful bulbs or ornaments within their reach. Decorated, edible cookies make safer ornaments at child level.

• Make sure candles cannot be easily knocked over. Anchor them securely in solid holders or candlesticks placed away from foot traffic and out of reach of children. This also goes for matches and lighters.

• Have your fireplace and chimney checked and cleaned at least once a year. Make sure the flue is open before lighting a fire and always place a metal screen or glass door across the fireplace opening. Never leave the house or go to bed unless the fire is completely out and there are no glowing embers.

• Some gift containers, wrapping papers and ribbons are made of plastic or other synthetics that can cause toxic fumes if burned. Don't throw such things in the fireplace, but don't let rubbish pile up more than a week either.

Women's artifacts needed for memorial

Army News Service

WASHINGTON — The Women in Military Service for America Memorial Foundation Inc., is looking for artifacts to display as exhibits within the Women's Memorial to be built at Arlington National Cemetery, Va.

The foundation seeks military uniforms, medals, insignia, photographs, military-issue personal items, diaries and other items from both war and peacetime periods in U.S. history.

Artifacts that depict the type of work women performed in the military and prisoner of war experiences are also desired, WIMSA officials said.

For more information on donations to the Women's Memorial, call the memorial curator at (800) 222-2294.

Separating soldiers are required to receive counseling

Reserve Component

If you are a soldier separating from the Army, you are required to receive counseling from the Reserve Component's Transition Program.

The program is designed to assist eligible soldiers who are within 120 days of separation from the Army and want to find out more about the benefits of enlisting or transferring into the Reserve Components.

Some of these benefits include:

- Post Exchange and Commissary privileges
- Use of post facilities
- Continental United States Space "A" flights (also Puerto Rico, Guam, Hawaii and the Virgin Islands),
- Soldiers Group Life Insurance continuation
- Up to $5,000 in bonuses
- Up to $6,120 for continuing education
- Up to $10,000 of a student loan repayment
- Up to 100 percent tuition waived in some states.

All soldiers receive four days pay for one weekend's work.

The average Reserve Component soldier will serve 38 days annually with his or her unit, but will receive almost double the money they received on active duty for that same time period.

Contact a Reserve Component career counselor for more information. Soldiers in the 3rd Brigade, 24th Infantry Division, can call 544-3131; everyone else can call 545-6759.

HERITAGE MONTH

Post honors Native Americans

By Pat Myres
USAIC Public Affairs Office

The Native American Heritage Luncheon Nov. 18 at the Fort Benning Officers' Club featured post archeologist Dean Wood as the guest speaker and the Buffalo Family dancers from the Mesquaki Tribe of Iowa.

Col. Joseph Windle, the Infantry School's chief of staff, introduced Wood. Windle said there are more than 10,000 Native Americans in uniform, plus another 8,000 working for the government.

Windle said he believed it was important for people to learn about and understand this great cultural diversity.

Wood, who holds bachelor's and master's degrees in anthropology, is active in supporting archaeological research on Southeastern Indian culture.

He spoke about the Native American archaeological sites at Fort Benning. He said they range from as early as 12,000 years ago to the 1830s.

He also said there were permanent villages established in this area as early as 1,000 A.D. and that the Chattahoochee River acted as a form of interstate highway for the Native Americans.

One of these sites is Lawson Airfield, which now sits on what was once the peace capital of the Creek Confederation.

Perhaps the most well known of the archaeological sites in this area is Yuchi Town, located along the Chattahoochee River.

Established in 1715, the site has been a favorite target of modern day grave robbers for the last 30 years, Wood said.

In some areas, more than 1,000 holes have been dug at Indian gravesites; but, Wood said, this is about to change.

"The Army is dead serious about prosecuting looters, and steps have been taken to identify the people involved in this type of discretion," he said.

The Buffalo Family dancers, in full Mesquaki attire, performed two Native American dances.

In the second dance, they were joined by members of the audience in celebration of Native American Heritage Month.

Also joining the Buffalo Family was Tisha Martinez from Klagetoh, Ariz. She modeled a traditional Navajo dress decorated with various items, which Native Americans use for symbolism. Buffalo explained for the audience what each item symbolized.

Women learn basics of handgun handling from AMU instructor

By Ruth J. Spaller
Bayonet staff writer

It was no "powder puff" course, and they did a lot more than just talk about shooting, said participants in a "females only" handgun course at English Range Nov. 19.

Their reasons for being there were as varied as their levels of shooting experience; but, by the end of the day, the dozen women who participated in the course carried away with them the benefits of what an assistant teacher called "good, honest instruction."

"It's a basic class, and the theme is safety," said U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit instructor Sgt. 1st Class Dewey Hardison.

Throughout the day, the emphasis was on doing things the right — and safe — way. One of Hardison's sayings, for example, is "Practice doesn't make perfect; perfect practice makes perfect."

Hardison was assisted in teaching the class by AMU reload ballistics specialist Sgt. Robert Finch, as well as former national service rifle champion John Mann and four-time national pistol champion Bobbie Harmon — both formerly affiliated with AMU.

At AMU, Hardison said, "We shoot more than any person in the world on a daily basis. And each discipline, each day, each minute, each hour we train, safety is always paramount in the things we do, because we are professionals."

That approach was evident in how seriously each instructor took his job.

"It's like spreading the gospel," Finch said. "Anyone who owns a handgun should have the knowledge to use it."

Course participants gleaned that knowledge through a morning spent "talking safety," Hardison said, during which they covered everything from handling weapons to storing them safely and "childproofing" weapons in their homes.

They also covered basics of firing such as sight alignment, trigger control and stance; then took to the range four at a time, one instructor per shooter, to put what they learned into practice.

Several of the students had never held a gun before the course; but, according to Finch, that actually put them at an advantage.

"A beginner doesn't have any bad habits to break," he said, "so they can develop good ones."

Women are also less likely to get toy guns at Christmas and play war as children, which is where some of those bad habits are picked up, he said.

One of these absolute beginners, Arlene Starley, is studying to be a police officer. She took the course "to get a jump start," she said, because she won't get practice shooting until she finishes school and attends the police academy.

She had never held a gun before, and "It's quite a feeling," she said. "When I first picked it up, it gave me kind of a rush."

While for Starley, the thought of having to defend herself or defend someone else's life is a possible future reality; for Cherry Kersey, the focus of the course was to become a better target shooter.

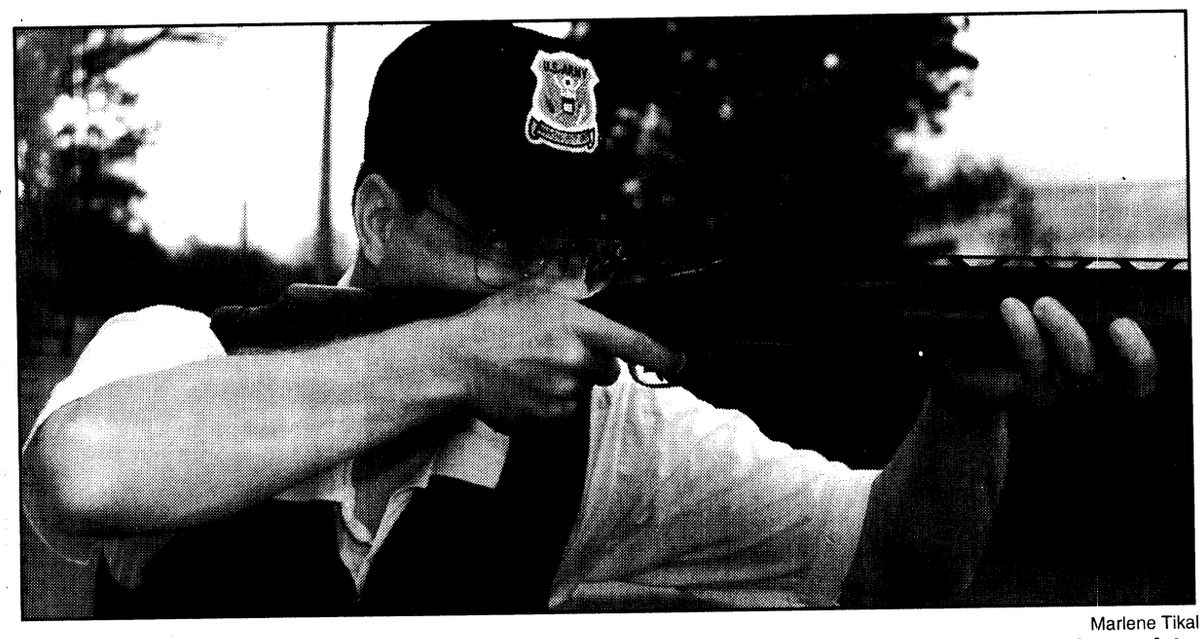
Kersey has been shooting with her husband and wanted to get more comfortable with the weapon, she said.

"Even though my husband has told me a lot of this before, hearing it from someone other than your husband makes it more yours and not theirs.

"Before, I did not feel comfortable with a gun," she said. "I would be thinking, 'what did he tell me?' "

Valerie Long also got involved in shooting because of her husband, who won the last night tactical pistol match . She took the class to help her prepare to compete in her first match, which will be Sunday.

Though much of the course was a review, "It never hurts to hear over and over again about safety and how to handle a weapon," she said.



Becky Giddens lives alone in a trailer park in Columbus and took the course because she is planning to buy a gun for self-protection.

"I want to know how to protect myself," she said, "but I also want to know how to take care of a gun ... I don't want one lying there and I don't know how to shoot it, don't know how to clean it."

Another who had never picked up a gun before, Giddens said she was surprised they spent so much time during the course actually shooting.

"I didn't expect it to be so much hands on," she said. "I figured they'd hand you a lot of manuals and then you read them and they'd hold out a gun and tell you 'this is what it is ...'

"It's not as intimidating as I thought a gun would be ... now that I know how to control it," she said.

crime watch

Military Police Activity

TAKE A BITE OUT OF CRIME

This week's hot topic is the holiday season. With that comes numerous holiday parties.

During the holiday season of 1993 from Thanksgiving to New Year's, there were 57 arrests relating to driving under the influence of alcohol. The post accident rate also increased resulting in injuries to soldiers and family members.

Annually, approximately 57 people involved in DUI-related traffic accidents die on the nation's highways.

During the 1994 holiday season, Operation "Loaded 45" is conducted for 45 days with the Military Police designating specialized patrols for DUI detection and apprehension. Penalties range from fines, license suspension to imprisonment. You can't afford to lose your family, friends and dignity, so don't drink and drive. Play it safe, for all our lives.

The following entries were taken from the Fort Benning Military Police blotters from Nov. 9 to 15. Such entries may be incomplete and do not determine the guilt or innocence of any person.

• Two juveniles were charged with shoplifting, conspiracy to commit a crime and truancy. The two individuals skipped school and drove to the Main Exchange. Once inside, they filled a shopping cart with various electronic items and then proceeded to the garden center where they began to throw the merchandise over the fence. They then exited the store without rendering proper payment and attempted to retrieve the items.

The juveniles were approached by Army and Air Force Exchange Service security; one individual fled the scene and the other was detained until the MPs arrival. The one individual detained was processed and issued post ejection orders and released to his sponsor. The other individual was later apprehended, processed, issued identification card confiscation orders, had post exchange privileges suspended and was released to his sponsor.

• A sergeant was charged by Columbus Police Department for violation of controlled act schedule 11 (cocaine) and theft of services. The sergeant drove up to a local gas station and acquired $16.25 worth of gas along with various food items. The sergeant was in possession of a crack smoking device and a razor blade with cocaine residue present. He was arrested and taken to the Muscogee County Jail pending Recorders Court.

Other activities include five cases of driving under the influence of alcohol, 18 traffic accidents, 15 larcenies and three cases of shoplifting reported at the Main Exchange.

community care

By Ken Franklin
Martin Army Community Hospital

Carol Burnett described labor pain by saying, "Take your bottom lip and pull it over your head."

Martin Army Community Hospital officials are now saying, "It doesn't have to be that way."

The hospital's medical professionals are offering a new way to reduce labor pain without the grogginess and numbness of previous methods.

The new technique, called labor intrathecal analgesia, allows a laboring mother to remain awake and mobile. She can stay active in the birthing process with much less pain from contractions.

In the technique, a small dose of narcotic medicine is injected into the fluid around the spinal cord. The medicines usually used are fentanyl and morphine.

Before this type of procedure, patients had two options. In one, narcotics were given through an intravenous line. The other, called an epidural, involved injecting numbing medicine into the space just outside the spinal cord. The new technique has several advantages over both these techniques:

• The mother gets pain relief in 10 minutes or less. Pain relief usually lasts 12 hours or until the pushing phase of labor.

• Doses of medicine are much smaller. This means there is no danger of toxic effects to the baby.

• There is no paralysis or sensory loss. The mother can move and participate fully in labor.

• Epidurals can sometimes prolong labor. There is no evidence that the new technique lengthens labor, so it can be given in earlier stages.

• The technique does not cause the grogginess or sleepiness often seen with IV narcotics.

Labor intrathecal analgesia is not right for every delivery. In patients with active infection, clotting system problems, spinal problems or nerve disease, the doctor may not be able to offer labor intrathecal analgesia. A patient allergic to fentanyl or morphine should not have labor intrathecal analgesia.

Risks associated with labor intrathecal analgesia include allergic reactions, headache, depressed breathing, infection, bleeding and nerve damage. The Martin Army Community Hospital staff has developed a monitoring system to minimize and treat these risks.

About four in 10 patients who get the analgesic complain of itching, which is easily treatable. Some patients have trouble emptying their bladder during labor and may require a catheter for a short period.

Finally, one in seven patients will need medication to control nausea and vomiting from labor intrathecal analgesia. Overall, the side effects from labor intrathecal analgesia are less than with other forms of labor pain control.

Labor intrathecal analgesia is available for all mothers delivering at Martin Army Community Hospital. Interested patients should discuss it with the doctor managing their pregnancy.

ask the judge

By Michael H. Lane
Office of the Staff Judge Advocate

Q: We bought our first home recently.

The agent told us that our house payment would be "about" $500 per month on our 30-year mortgage. When we got the coupon book from the mortgage company, our monthly payments were more than $650.

The agent says that the $650 reflects $495 for payments on the mortgage itself, and that $155 is for the escrow account. What is this escrow account, and must I pay the higher amount?

A: An escrow account is a fund that lending institutions establish in order to pay charges assessed against property on which they hold a mortgage or loan. The account is authorized in your contract with the lender, and it provides for the payment of property taxes, insurance and other charges against the property. This allows the lender to protect its investment in your home.

For example, if you did not pay insurance premiums on the home, and it burned, the lender would lose its security for the repayment of the loan. If your property taxes went unpaid, the property could be foreclosed, and sold to pay the taxes, again affecting the security for the loan. Most mortgage loans require escrow, whether VA, FHA or a commercial loan.

The escrow account operates on a 12- or 14-month average of all bills paid by the particular account. Assume that your annual property tax is $1,200 on the property, payable in January and July and that your homeowner's insurance is $300 per year. The bank totals the bills ($1,500), divides by 12 ($125), and adds that amount to each month's payment. If the taxes go up during the year to $1,500, the escrow will be adjusted up to $150 per month. An escrow account may hold up to two extra payments per year, called a "cushion," to cover unexpected increases in the bills in the account.

This is only an example of the workings of the account, not the only way the account may operate. Your escrow agent has a customer service department that will respond to written, specific questions about your account. If you do not understand the explanation, a real estate agent or mortgage agent may be able to help.

For general advice, the Legal Assistance Office, Building 5, is available to assist you in these and other matters by appointment. Office hours are 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. The telephone number is 545-3282.

dr. fit

Q: With the holiday season approaching, many social events revolve around eating and drinking. How can I avoid gaining weight during the next few weeks?

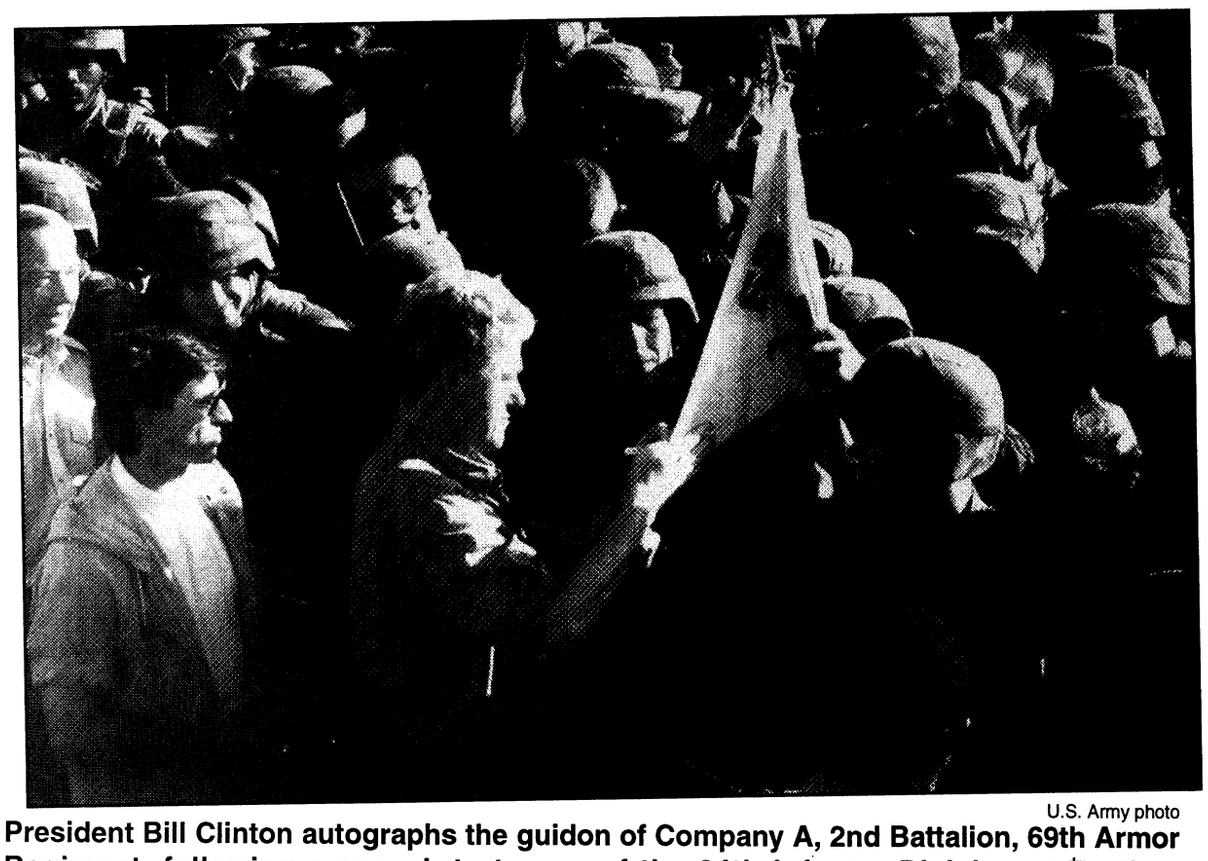
A: First, sound lifestyles include both diet and fitness programs. Healthy habits developed during the year will help you at dinner parties.



One method to avoid gaining weight is to be diligent about your exercise program; continue to exercise regularly. Also, before attending parties, eat a piece of fruit or other light food. While at the festivity, make your friends the focus of attention, not the fodder.

Holiday time means free flowing alcohol. Remember it has seven calories per gram, and that is almost as dense as fat! Even worse, alcohol encourages the appetite. So choose juices, seltzer or club soda with lime, or water down your alcohol choice.

When preparing the food, select low-fat food. For example, choose pretzels, fruits, finger-tip vegetables and yogurt-based and low-fat based dips.

Even the best-laid plans are derailed. When you overindulge, feel guilty, then move on. Return to your fitness strategy and continue to exercise. You will look and feel great. Enjoy the holidays and eat intelligently.

President Bill Clinton autographs the guidon of Company A, 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor Regiment, following a speech to troops of the 24th Infantry Division at Tactical Assembly Area Liberty in Kuwait.

President praises soldiers while visiting Persian Gulf

American Forces Information Service

Members of the 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor Regiment, were among those present in Kuwait when President Bill Clinton thanked soldiers of the 24th Infantry Division for their part in deterring Iraqi aggression and said all American service members are making a real difference in the world.

Clinton also told the troops gathered at Tactical Assembly Area Liberty he had signed an executive order giving them back their subsistence pay.

U.S. policy in the Persian Gulf is clear, Clinton said. "We will not permit Iraq to enhance its capabilities below the 32nd parallel," he said. "We won't permit Baghdad to intimidate United Nations teams making sure that Iraq never again possesses weapons of mass destruction."

Iraq has only to abide by the United nations resolutions and international law, and the sanctions against the country will be rescinded, he said.

Clinton told the soldiers the United States appreciates their efforts. "If you ever wonder sometimes out here in the desert whether what you do makes a real difference, just consider what happened in the last few weeks," he said.

"I'm honored ... that America was able to play a role in ending 47 years of conflict between Israel and Jordan; in restoring President (Jean-Bertrand) Aristide and democracy in Haiti; in helping to make real progress toward an end to violent conflict in Northern Ireland; in helping South Africa's democracy to succeed; in building a new partnership with Russia that enables us to say for the first time since the dawn of the nuclear age that there are no nuclear missiles pointed at the children of the United States," the president said.

"And I am also proud of what you have done to stand up to aggression here in the (Persian) Gulf."

Clinton said many in the United States questioned the preparedness of military forces when crisis in the area surfaced. The quick American arrival in the region guaranteed that Iraq "got the message in a very big hurry," he said.

Clinton explained the mission of service members in the post-Cold War era. "What you are doing is assuming America's burdens in this new and challenging time, to maintain our national security, to maintain our national commitments, to help the world move toward peace and freedom," he said.

"I hope you will always take the pride in your contributions that I see in your faces today, that I hear in your voices today."

3/24 soldiers clean up before coming home

Editor's note: The following story about the operations of the 3rd Brigade, 24th Infantry Division (Mechanized), while still in Southwest Asia is reprinted from the Nov. 17 edition of the Fort Stewart Patriot. Most of the 3rd Brigade have already returned to Fort Benning.

KUWAIT — Cool winds whip sands wildly over the desert dunes. Sandstorms create dark clouds that conceal the sun. Heavy rains pour from the heavens causing flooding throughout the land.

These weather changes are all signals — signals of the end of the Gulf's summer and a shift of focus for 24th Infantry Division soldiers involved in Operation Vigilant Warrior.

The soldiers of 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor Regiment, quickly deployed to the Gulf Region to help head off Iraqi troops; now they're preparing the equipment they downloaded from ships at the port for the return trip to the states.

"Now that we've completed all our patrols and live fires, we are bringing the vehicles back to southern Kuwait," said Capt. Jerry White, commander of Company C, 1st Battalion, 18th Infantry Regiment.

"We're combat configuring them, making sure all the necessary equipment is on the vehicle in the proper places, and putting equipment together so that next time we come here, instead of two days it will take hours to roll out," he said.

The vehicles go through a tedious maintenance process before actually being loaded back on ships.

The vehicles are lubed and serviced and defective, old or lost parts are replaced.

"We are ordering parts and trying to get everything ready for the Army Materiel Command inspection. After the inspections are done by the mechanics, they come here and look up the parts; then the clerk tries to put everything back together in the proper format," said Sgt. 1st Class Arthur Heckerman of Company B, 1st Bn, 18th Inf. Regt.

After maintenance is completed on the vehicle, they are thoroughly cleaned.

"At the wash rack we clean all parts of the vehicles," said Sgt. Brian Young of Company A, 2nd Bn., 69th Armor Regt. "We clean underneath the vehicles and even take the engines out of some for a more thorough cleaning."

The vehicles are then made combat ready by loading them back on the ships pre-equipped with all the items needed in times of war such as camouflage nets and medical supplies.

The final step for the vehicles before being put back on ships is the customs inspection. This is the point where the soldiers' work is put to the test, because any sign of soil or sand could send them back to the wash rack to repeat the cleaning process.

"It takes about four hours per vehicle to get through customs. We have to make sure everything is free of sand and dirt," said Staff Sgt. Victor Turner of Company A, 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor.

The inspections are ruthless in terms of cleanliness because officials don't want foreign insects returned to the United States.

The task of preparing hundreds of pieces of equipment for return to the United States or back on ships intended for stockpile becomes even more of a challenge with the sandstorms that blow often in the Kuwaiti desert.

"Lately, we have been having a lot of sandstorms that have posed a problem. But we just work around it," Young said.

Movie lets soldiers play soldiers

Civil War prison camp brought to life in TV film 'Andersonville'

By Marc G. Turchin
Bayonet staff writer

"Lights, camera, action!" That was the scene for Fort Benning soldiers who volunteered to take part in a movie about a Civil War prison camp in Georgia.

"Andersonville," a Turner Network Television movie, tells the story of the camp, which at one time housed 30,000 Union soldiers during the Civil War, through the eyes of two Union soldiers who were captured by the Confederacy and sent to Andersonville.

Soldiers from Fort Benning, who have been going to the movie set on weekends for more than a month, were used in the movie as "extras." The soldiers played Union soldiers captured by the Confederacy.

Each person from post who went was paid $50 a day and was dressed in clothes from that era including blue wool Civil War jackets, long-sleeve shirts and gray and blue pants with suspenders. Some soldiers pretended to have leg injuries and were told to hobble as they walked.

In addition to the costumes, black make-up was applied to the soldiers' faces, necks and hands to give the impression of gun powder and dirt.

First Sgt. Douglas R. Hathaway, senior instructor at the Drill Sergeant School, said he had been to the real Andersonville compound and after being in the movie, had a better understanding of what happened inside the fort.

Hathaway and more than 180 soldiers spent the majority of their weekend Nov. 19 and 20 on the set, a replica of the actual fort that covers 9 1/2 acres. The carbon-copy compound was built just for the movie outside of Atlanta.

Inside the fort are thousands of tents made with sheets of canvas and covered with blankets to make it seem like winter. Small fires were kept burning throughout the days of shooting for two reasons — to give the set a more seasonal atmosphere and to keep the extras warm during the morning hours of shooting.

With days of shooting and retake after retake, John Frankenheimer, the director, said he was glad to have real soldiers on the set.

"There's a certain way military people move; there's a certain way military people conduct themselves and we're thrilled that these guys are here," Frankenheimer said.

He said trying to turn a civilian into a soldier in about six hours is close to impossible.

"Why go through basic training if you can do it in six hours?" he said.

Tom Williams, a military historian for the movie, said one of the benefits of having the soldiers in the movie is their discipline.

> "There's a certain way military people conduct themselves and we're thrilled that these guys are here."
> — John Frankenheimer
> Director

Williams said when the extras are told to "go back to one," which means to go back to where the scene being filmed started, the soldiers were able to go back to one quickly.

They same thing was said about being quiet.

When the scenes were filmed, the director or one of the assistant directors requested quiet. That meant more than 2,000 people had to be quiet. Very quiet. No one was allowed to talk. One of the actors claimed it was that time when the soldiers' discipline proved important.

During two days of shooting, only one scene in the movie was filmed.

In the scene, a Confederate colonel offers the Union prisoners a chance to join the Confederate army. To entice the prisoners even more, a "cash bounty" is offered along with food, clothes and a piece of land for each soldier who joins.

Out of the mass of prisoners, one soldier steps forward to answer. Sgt. McSpadden, played by Frederic Forrest ("Apocalypse Now"), answers the colonel by calling his detachment to attention and marching away. The other prisoners give McSpadden "three cheers" for turning down the colonel's offer, form their respective detachments and march away, leaving the Confederate colonel and his lieutenant standing there. The Fort Benning soldiers played members of detachments in this scene.

Forrest, who was in the Army during the 1960s, said this film has been one of the best working experiences he has ever had.

"This is the best part I've played since Apocalypse Now," he said.

"Andersonville" is scheduled to be aired sometime next fall on TNT. Soldiers will be able to earn "extra" money again Saturday and Sunday. For more information about being in the movie, contact Sgt. 1st Class Barbara Ray at 545-4901.

After getting into costume and getting makeup, soldiers from Fort Benning line up to get their initial briefing from the staff on the set.

Medical group helps support post

The auxiliary, which is open to spouses of active duty and retired officers as well as government service employees in the medical and dental communities, is a social organization that focuses on community service

By Jerrie Macintire
Special to The Bayonet ©

A toddler enters the pediatric clinic squirming and pulling at his ear, but seems to relax when he sees the classic Disney video playing in the waiting area.

Meanwhile at a post elementary school, a student carefully copies her homework from the blackboard; it's much clearer now that she has new glasses.

Across post, dental patients peruse the reading selections on a magazine stand that displays various titles at a glance.

These vignettes may not seem to have anything in common, but they all show ways the Medical and Dental Activities Auxiliary has donated to the Fort Benning Community.

Last year, the MEDDAC-DENTAC auxiliary dispersed more than $3,700 in community grants to individuals and organizations, according to Laurie Bruins, president of the group.

Through fund-raisers like staffing concession stands, sales of coupon books, coffee mug sales and bake sales, the auxiliary strives "to support the Fort Benning community and raise the quality of life for soldiers and family members," Bruins said.

"The auxiliary is indispensible to the running of our organization," said Col. Michael Kussman, Martin Army Community Hospital commander.

The auxiliary, which is open to spouses of active duty and retired officers as well as government service employees in the medical and dental communities, is a social organization that focuses on community service.

"We try to bring together spouses so they feel the camaraderie of the military family while we also support projects and services of the MEDDAC and DENTAC," said Bruins.

Each quarter, the auxiliary's board of directors solicits requests from the medical and dental communities, said Kristine Davidson, treasurer.

Board members vote on requests; Davidson said last fiscal year a total of $3,745.17 in grants was dispersed for such items as eyeglasses for needy children, video cassette players and movies for waiting rooms, television remote controls for bedridden patients, magazine stands for waiting areas, educational videos on health-care issues, and infant car seat carriers, among other items.

In addition to monetary donations, the auxiliary supports Fort Benning in other ways, according to Kussman and DENTAC Commander Col. Richard Nurnberg.

"They do a terrific job of supporting the dentists who are deployed as well as their families," Nurnberg said.

"They do so much good that it's difficult to quantify," said Kussman about those individuals who paint waiting rooms, sew drapes and pillows for patient areas, bake snacks, volunteer time for medical symposiums, and emotionally support one another.

"They keep spouses in touch with one another and welcome newcomers. The group is extremely valuable to the morale and welfare of our entire organization," Nurnberg said.

From volunteering time to funding community service projects to lending emotional support to one another, "They are truly worth their weight in gold," Kussman said.

Interest rates to go up on credit plan at PX

Army News Service

WASHINGTON — Army and Air Force Exchange Service customers will now be paying more for credit on Deferred Payment Plan accounts because of a recent increase in Federal Reserve Board short-term interest rates, according to AAFES officials.

The DPP interest rate increased to 13.25 percent Wednesday and will be reflected on December DPP statements.

"The change was necessary due to the rise in the prime lending rate," said AAFES Commander Maj. Gen. Robert F. Swarts.

"Although AAFES was previously able to fund the program (internally) its success meant AAFES had to borrow money from commercial sources to fund the increases.

"Now as the prime interest rate rises," Swarts said, "our costs will rise. Our customers must understand this increase does not add 'profit' for AAFES. It only offsets increased costs to finance the customers' DPP accounts."

world war II

50 years ago this week ...

• Civil war broke out in Greece as members of the EAM, a communist-oriented liberation movement, and government troops engaged in heavy fighting. Twenty-one people were killed and 140 wounded when the EAM staged a demonstration in Athens as British tanks and Greek mountain troops worked to disperse the bands of armed EAM members. Martial Law was declared Dec. 4. The fighting went on for nearly a month but the guerrillas were no match for the British troops in the open battle. The British suppressed the communist insurrection by Jan. 15, 1945, but the civil war reignited in early 1946.

• In the Pacific, the American forces turned back a Japanese tank-supported attack on the roadblock outside Limon on the island of Leyte. Elsewhere on Leyte, U.S. forces split the Japanese on the west coast of Leyte with an amphibious landing three miles south of Ormoc.

• On the Eastern Front, the Red Army, after reaching the southern shore of Lake Balaton in Hungary, drove to within 44 miles of the Austrian border.

• On the Western Front around Saar, the Americans entered Forback. The Saarbrucken and Saarlautern bridgeheads were merged as other units moved into the Pachtener-Buchwald woods.

• In the United States, Leslie Horvath of Ohio State won the Heisman Trophy as the outstanding college football player of 1944. In Washington, D.C., the War Department disclosed a plan that allowed 18-year-olds to enter combat zones.

• At Fort Benning, during the first month of the Sixth War Loan Fort Benning invested a total of $529,363.11. Certificates were also developed for the "Buy a Bond For Baby" campaign which had the famous Walt Disney "Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs" printed on the certificate.

Camping association chooses Uchee Creek

By Brian Smith
Directorate of Community Activities

Retired service members recently spent a week at the Uchee Creek Army Campground and Marina.

Gerri and Bill Day, of the "The Rebel Yell" chapter of the Special Military Active-Retired Travel Club, were the chosen hosts for this outing, which they refer to as a "Muster."

The SMART camping Association is composed of retired and active military service members of all ranks and all branches of the armed services. The organization has 29 chapters and has 2,677 members. Its motto is "seeing the country we defended."

The Rebel Yell Chapter represents South Carolina, North Carolina and Georgia. The owners of the 32 recreational vehicles and campers attending the Uchee Creek gathering represented more than 722 years of military service.

Members of the group toured the National Infantry Museum and were scheduled to visit Callaway Gardens "Fantasy in Lights," the Little White House, the Andersonville Prisoner of War site and National Cemetery. The group also had a catered meal prepared by the Fort Benning Officers' Club served at the Uchee Creek Lodge.

The Rebel Yell Chapter chose Uchee Creek Campground and Marina as a site for one of its six yearly musters because of praise from a member of the SMART organization who had recently stayed there, according to the Days. They added that the cleanliness and spaciousness of the campground, as well as the friendliness of the staff, led them to rank the Uchee Creek Campground and Marina as "one of the nicest camps they had ever been to."

Some members of the group visited Martin Army Community Hospital to have physicals performed. Carol Baney, a member of teh Rebel Yell chapter for more than five years, referred to her experience as one of "not being treated as just another number."

Baney also called uchee Creek "the nicest military campground we have ever seen."

Anyone interested in this organization can contact SMART by calling (904) 478-1986.

Reservations for camping, log cabins or other outdoor rentals at the Uchee Creek Marina and Campground may be made by calling 545-7238.

'Singing chaplain' presides over ITB's Thanksgiving Day service

By Jacqueline Feagin
USAIC Chaplains' Office

Basic trainees filled the pews Thanksgiving Day at Regimental Chapel on Sand Hill. They gave a big "hooah" to Chaplain (Col.) Herbert E. Kitchens, the guest speaker for the service.

Kitchens, a native of Arkansas, took over earlier this month as the U.S. Army Infantry Center chaplain.

He is known as the "Singing Chaplain," a name he received while he served with the 1st Cavalry Division and made famous among the soldiers of the 101st Airborne Division in the Persian Gulf.

True to his nickname, Kitchens entertained the trainees with his singing and guitar playing along with Capt. Steve Russell on the banjo. He went on to deliver his Thanksgiving message to the troops.

"Gratitude comes from a great attitude," he said. "The attitude we have grows out of our view of the world."

Before his assignment to Fort Benning, Kitchens served as the deputy staff chaplain, 2nd U.S. Army, Fort Gillem, Ga.; division chaplain, 101st Airborne Division, Fort Campbell, Ky.; deputy division chaplain, 2nd Infantry Division, Camp Casey, Korea; U.S. Army Chaplain Center and School, Fort Monmouth, N.J.; 1st Cavalry Division, Fort Hood, Texas; 8th Infantry Division, West Germany; 2nd Armored Division, Fort Hood, Texas.

He has been awarded the Bronze Star Medal, Meritorious Service Medal with three oak leaf clusters, Army Commendation Medal with two oak leaf clusters, Army Achievement Medal with oak leaf cluster, National Defense Service Ribbon, Southwest Asia Service Ribbon with two stars, Army Service Ribbon, Overseas Ribbon with two device, Kuwait Liberation Medal and the Air Assault Badge.

Kitchens said he "enjoys being around soldiers and appreciates their commitment." This is one of the reasons he enjoys being in the Army, he said. His wife, Donna, will join him here shortly. They have three adult children.

The Infantry Training Brigade Soldiers' Choir, directed by Bobby Owens, also provided special music for the service along with sign language by Pvt. Charles Faver of Company A, 2nd Battalion, 54th Infantry Division.

Great tasks

Immaculate reception, conception compared

By Robert R. Davidson
USAIC Chaplains' Office

All sport fans and enthusiasts know about the "Immaculate Reception" of Franco Harris in 1976 while playing for the Pittsburgh Steelers. When Terry Bradshaw threw that pass, he did not know what happened until he was completely off the playing field. He thought he had made the connection.

When Franco Harris played his position as running back, he never dreamed he would be key to winning the game and putting the Pittsburgh Steelers into the Super Bowl. That historical event has captured the imaginations and dreams of all sport fans.

Christian enthusiasts have likewise felt the same in honoring Mary, the mother of Jesus Christ, and her awesome privilege and responsibility in giving birth and raising the Christ child. Mary never expected to be the mother of God, just like Franco Harris never expected to make the winning reception or touchdown.

The Immaculate Conception is a Roman Catholic doctrine asserting that Mary was preserved from the effects of original sin from the moment of her conception. The doctrine was defined as a dogma binding for Catholics by Pope Pious IX in 1854. The doctrine as defined was debated by theologians on the biblical idea of Mary's holiness (Luke 1:28), early church teachings on Mary as the "new Eve," and the belief that Mary is the mother of God. The feast of the Immaculate Conception will be observed Thursday.

Most Protestant denominations do not place much emphasis on Mary's call and importance on birthing and parenting the son of God. We honestly do not place enough emphasis on her blessedness.

In Luke 1:39-45, we can see the paradox of the call to be the mother of the son of God. Can you imagine how she felt? Her emotions of wonderment, joy and happiness at such great a privilege. Her emotions of excitement, challenge and spiritual richness, calmness, fear and rejection.

Yet that very call was a sword to pierce her heart. She was to see her son hanging on the cross, unjustly condemned, rejected and murdered.

The piercing truth is that God does not choose a person for ease, comfort and selfish joy. He chooses for a great task — to touch others — through living that call. God's call is to share love, to give, to live for others with all our head, heart and hands. It is the paradox of God's call — that it confers on a person at one and the same time — the greatest joy in all the world and the greatest task in all the world. Mary did just that.

Modine is 'Jacob' in TNT biblical story

By Jay Bobbin
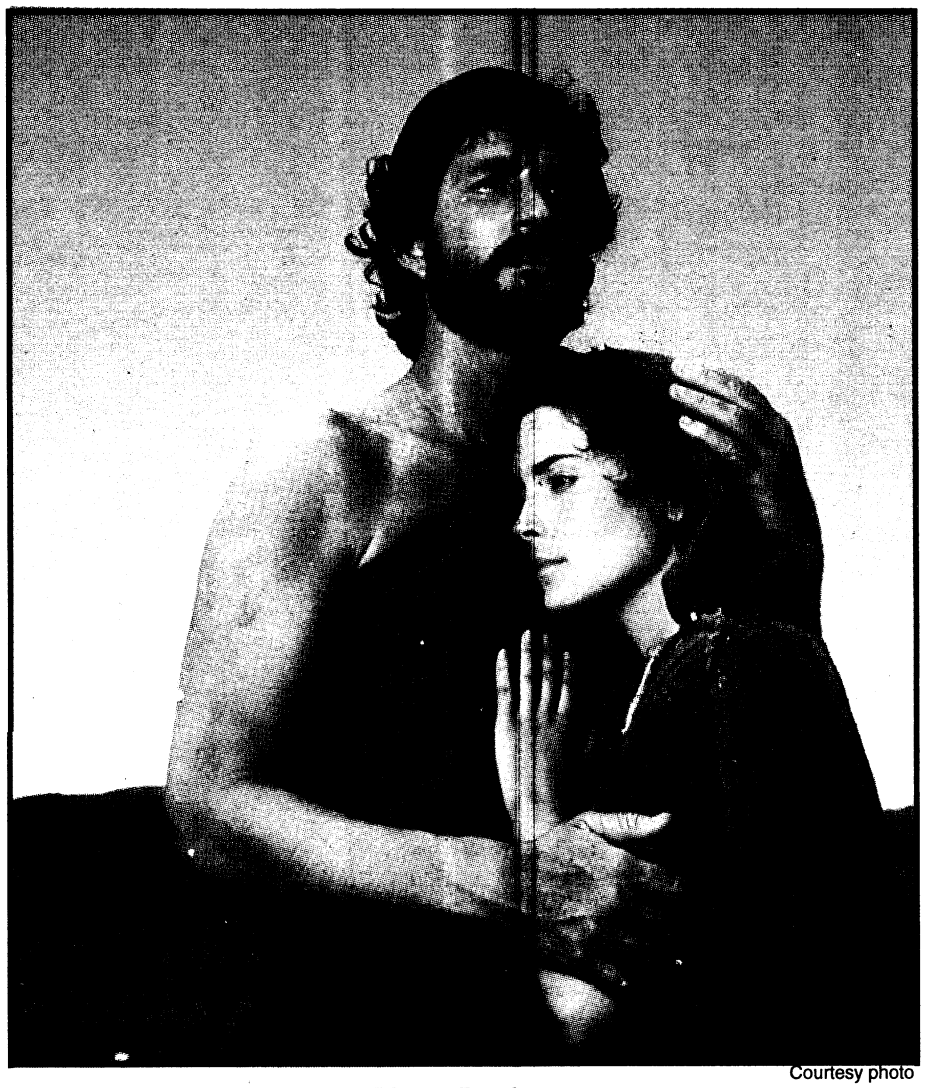
Tribune Media Services



While the holiday season generates thoughts of festive meals and gift-giving, it also lends itself to religious matters.

SPOTLIGHT

In line with that, cable's TNT is presenting the second in its series of internationally filmed and cast "Bible Stories" that began last spring with the Richard Harris-Barbara Hershey miniseries "Abraham."

Having its first showing Sunday, "Jacob" casts Matthew Modine ("And the Band Played On," "Married to the Mob") as the second son of Isaac (played by Joss Ackland) and Rebekah (Irene Papas). His scheme to rob his brother Esau (Sean Bean) of his birthright, plotted with his mother's help, ultimately prompted him to flee from his family ... and more backfire awaited him when he went to work for his Uncle Laban (Giancarlo Giannini), whose daughter Rachel (Lara Flynn Boyle, of "Twin Peaks" and "Wayne's World") was coveted by Jacob.

Instead, Jacob found himself the victim of machinations not that different from his own, since the uncle married him to Rachel's sister Leah (Juliet Aubrey, of PBS' "Masterpiece Theatre" presentation of "Middlemarch") to secure celestially sanctioned fortune in business.

Matthew Modine and Lara Flynn Boyle

Directed by Sir Peter Hall, the esteemed veteran of Britain's Royal Shakespeare Company and Royal National Theatre, the film — written by Lionel Chetwynd ("To Heal a Nation," "The Hanoi Hilton") — was shot in the Atlas Mountains of Morocco.

"It's a really, really rough place," Modine says of that location, "out on the edge of the Sahara, and it's still very much a Biblical time there. The people still live and die by the soil, and everything they have comes as a result of their labor in the earth, then their bodies go back into it in the end. I really appreciated and loved that. So often, people go to places like that and think (the residents) are very deprived, since they don't have what we measure to be the standard of living. In fact, those people are living much more harmoniously with nature and the world than we are. If there's any hope for the future, it's in returning to those basics."

From a professional standpoint, Modine reasons that making "Jacob" in such authentic surroundings was "a tremendous help, to be in a place that was so primitive that when you returned to your hotel room at night, all you had (to concentrate on) was the job at hand. It would have been much different to be filming something like this in Hollywood."

As with "Abraham," experts on various faiths were present during the production of "Jacob." According to Modine, representatives were on hand from the Greek Orthodox faith, Christianity, Catholicism and Judaism.

What: "Jacob"
When: Sunday on TNT

FORT BENNING HAVE A SAFE WEEKEND

Westville
to host yuletide season

Westville Historic Handicrafts Inc.

A tradition-filled yuletide season will be observed at Westville, the 1850 museum village near Lumpkin, Ga.

Through Dec. 31, the Westville buildings, decorated with fruit, native greens and berries in the 1850 manner, will bustle with many activities including doll-making, candle-dipping and holiday baking.

Each weekend will feature Christmas music: Dec. 10, the yule log ceremony will be followed by a candlelight tour of the Bedingfield Inn. Dec. 17 and 24, German custom of the Christmas tree will be featured. Dec. 31 will bring the season to a close with the Burning of the Greens.

The yule log was a tradition that originated in England and was brought over by early settlers. Out of this came the hunt for the yule log, which Westville now holds as an annual event. The yule log hunt is open to anyone in the fifth grade or under. Once the log is found, the finder is presented a cup of wassail and the log burning ceremony is done.

After the yule log ceremony, there will be a candlelight tour of the Bedingfield Inn, located one half mile away in Lumpkin. The yule log ceremony begins at 3 p.m. at Westville's camp meeting tabernacle.

Dec. 17 and 24, the Singer House features the Christmas tree and traditional activities. In 1850, the Christmas tree was still mainly a German tradition and in this way, Westville commemorates the customs of a German pioneer family.

At 2 p.m. on these days, along with the lighting of the Christmas tree, there will be the reading of the Christmas story and "The Night Before Christmas" and singing of Christmas carols.

The end of the Christmas season is marked by a ceremony called the Burning of the Greens, which takes place at 2 p.m. Dec. 31. All of the greenery used to decorate the houses is taken down and carried to the town square, where it is burned to symbolize the passing of the year. Then as the wreaths, garlands, and other decorations go up in flames, the bells in the village are rung to welcome in the year.

The village will be open everyday of the holidays except Christmas Day and New Year's Day and Jan. 2 to 6.

Located one-half mile from Lumpkin in Southwest Georgia, Westville is open 10 a.m. to 5 p.m., Tuesday through Saturday, and 1 to 5 p.m. Sunday.

For more information, contact the Westville office, at P.O. Box 1850, Lumpkin, Ga. 31815 or call (912) 838-6310.

CG reflects on career, Fort Benning, future

Post's leader focused on values, people

By Ruth J. Spaller
Bayonet staff writer

Maj. Gen. John W. Hendrix is Fort Benning's commanding general.

He has the steady, authoritative voice of a man who has been in command for almost 30 years, but he speaks like a man who still sees himself as the hardworking son of a farmer.

As Fort Benning's commanding general, Maj. Gen. John W. Hendrix stands at the end of a long line of powerful military figures who have served here, including Gen. George C. Marshall and Gen. Omar N. Bradley, but he refers to himself as "just another guy out here trying to do my job."

Humble beginnings, it seems, have instilled in him the combination of values that have kept him modest and kept him committed to "treating people fairly."

It was during his childhood, spent moving with his family, led by his farmer-turned-minister father, from "little town to little town" in southern Georgia, that these values were established, he said.

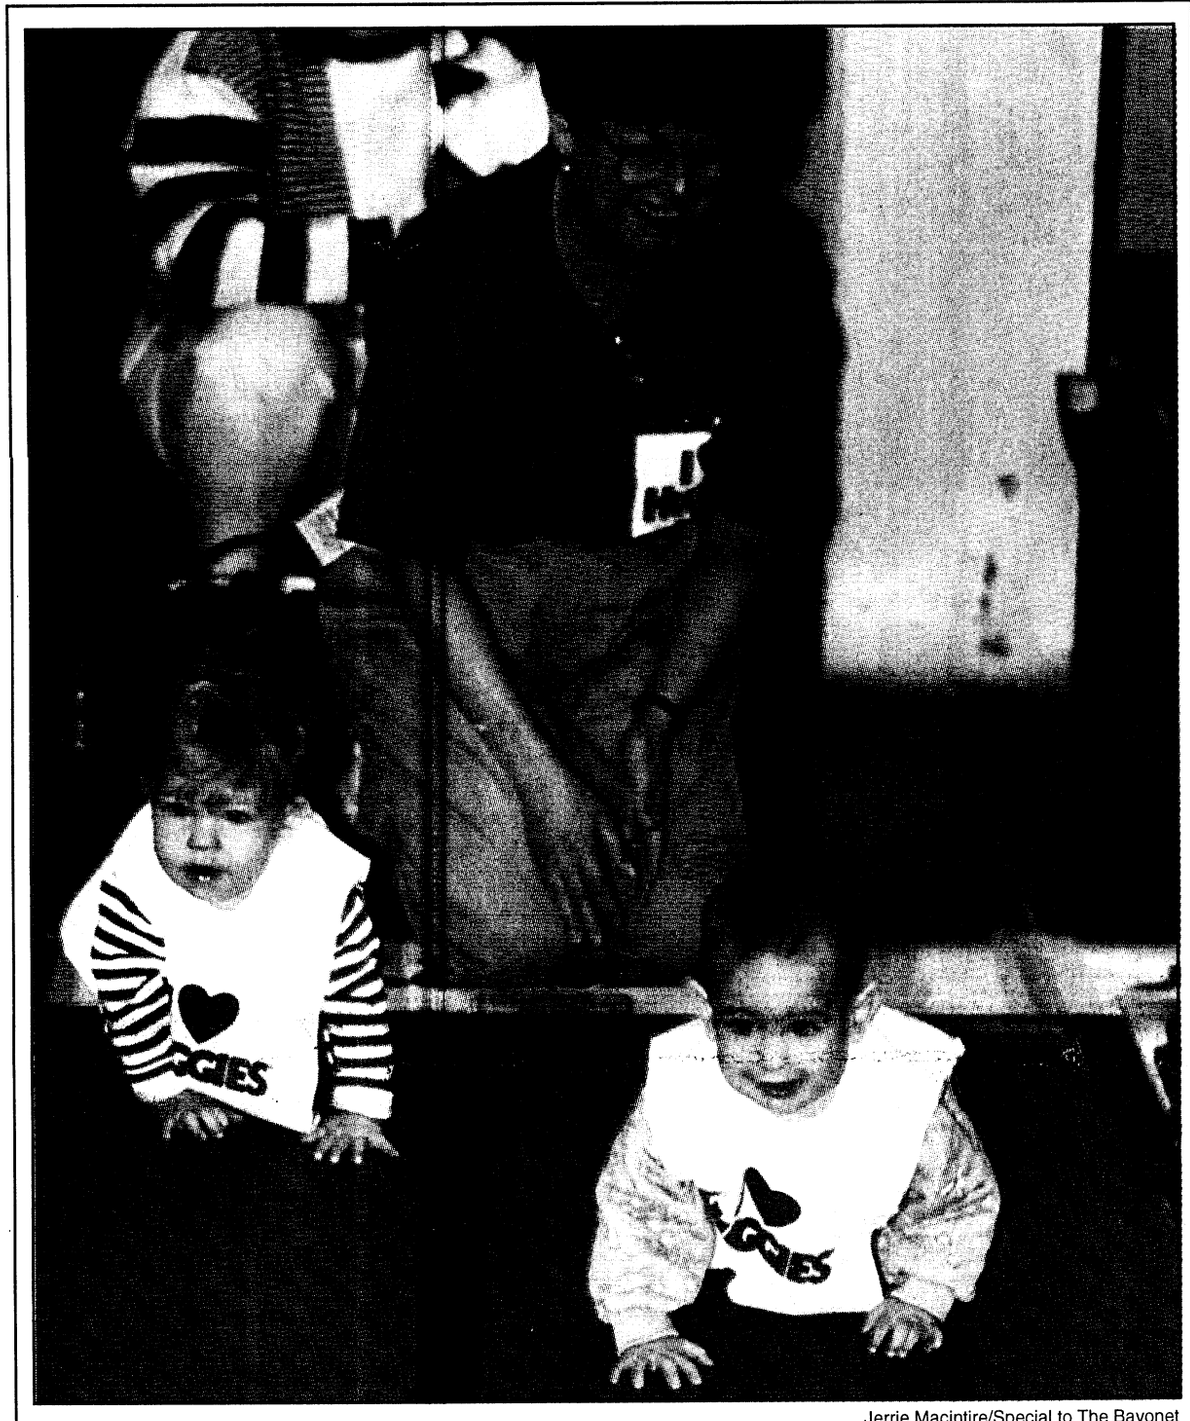
"I was one of six kids, and I have always been thankful for that," Hendrix said. "It was like you had your own little town that moved around with you."

Though his parents did not have much money to lavish on their children, he said, "What they did give us was a very good sense of values, a good work ethic, a clear belief in what's right and wrong and a desire to get educated."

That desire led him to the Georgia Institute of Technology, where he earned a bachelor's degree in electrical engineering and an ROTC commission as a signal officer in 1965.

"I always wanted to come into the infantry," he said with a smile. "My preferences were infantry, armor and artillery, in that order."

He went to the Signal Basic Course at Fort Gordon, Ga., but not without putting in requests for Airborne School, Ranger School and Special Forces, as well as an infantry branch transfer, he said.



Now, with many of those badges sewed onto an impeccable uniform finished with a general's belt, it's hard to imagine him as anything but the chief of infantry.

Hendrix had not intended to stay in the Army, though. He was going to pursue a career in engineering, but, he said, he was lured by the "adventure" of Vietnam.

"It's not that you want to go and participate in a war as such," he said. "Strange as it may sound, I thought, 'Well, this may be the only war I have the opportunity to go and participate in.' So I went."

While there, Hendrix served two assignments as a rifle company commander. In Vietnam, he said,

Ranger dies during airborne opn

USAIC Public Affairs Office

A Fort Benning ranger died, and two others were recovered during an airborne operation incident Sunday afternoon near Lawson Army Airfield.

Dead is 1st Sgt. Glenn Lowell Harris, 35, of Company B, 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment. His body was recovered from the Chattahoochee River around 12:40 p.m. Monday. Columbus rescue teams assisted Fort Benning in the search.

Harris, of El Paso, Texas, and two other rangers, who wished not to be identified, were participating in a routine airborne operation near Lawson Army Airfield at 4 p.m. Sunday. During the jump, all three rangers landed in the water near Engineer Landing.

The airborne operation, which was part of a week-long joint exercise involving the Air Force and Army, included approximately 20 rangers, who jumped from a C-130 aircraft at approximately 800 feet above ground level. The rangers were wearing their field equipment including weapons.

Harris is survived by his wife, Sandy, and two daughters; all of Columbus. A memorial service was conducted Thursday at 9:30 a.m. in Marshall Auditorium in Infantry Hall, Building 4.

The incident remains under investigation.

Cities prepare for annual Christmas parade Sat

Commanding general will be grand marshal; Infantry Band, color guard will participate

By Jan Wesner Childs
Special to The Bayonet©

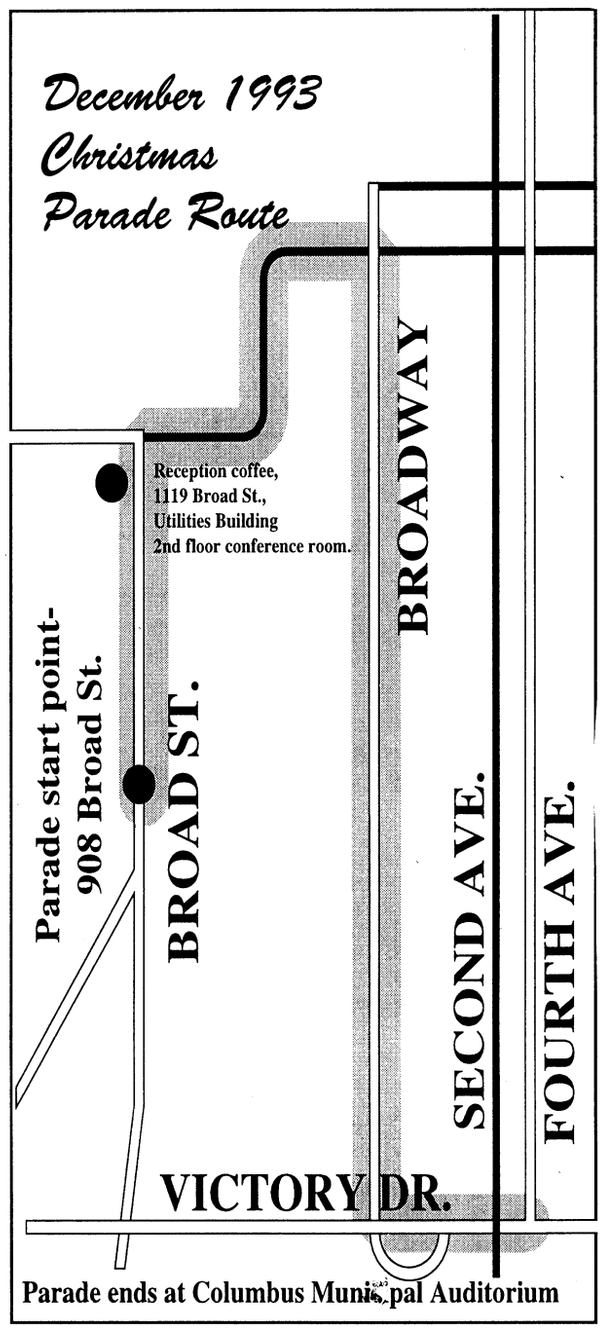
More than 140 entries will wind their way through downtown Phenix City and Columbus Saturday in the annual Bi-City Christmas Parade.

"There are going to be floats, bands and beauty queens," said Lucy Burkette, administrative assistant for the Phenix City Department of Parks and Recreation.

Fort Benning Commanding General Maj. Gen. John W. Hendrix is parade grand marshal. The Infantry Band and a color guard from the post are also participating. The event is sponsored by the Phenix City and Columbus Parks and Recreation departments.

"The parade is for the citizens of Phenix City and Columbus and the surrounding areas," parade co-coordinator and Columbus Parks employee Joe Slade said Monday. "It's going to be fun."

The parade starts at 10 a.m. Saturday at 908 Broad St. in Phenix City and makes its way across the 14th Street Bridge to Broadway. It ends at the Columbus Municipal Auditorium.



Roads affected by the parade will be closed starting at 9 a.m., Slade said. He recommends spectators park along side streets off the main parade route or public parking lots. About 3,500 showed up for the parade last year, he said.

This year's parade is expected to be bigger, Slade said. There will be 64 floats built by community groups, and they will be judged for first, second and third place, he said.

"That's more than we've had in the past," Slade said. "It should be something fun and new to see."

Eleven marching bands and various local dignitaries will also take part. The bi-cities have co-sponsored the parade for 16 years.

Of course, Slade said, the highlight will be Santa Claus himself, who makes his official arrival on the last float of the parade.

Last group of troops come home

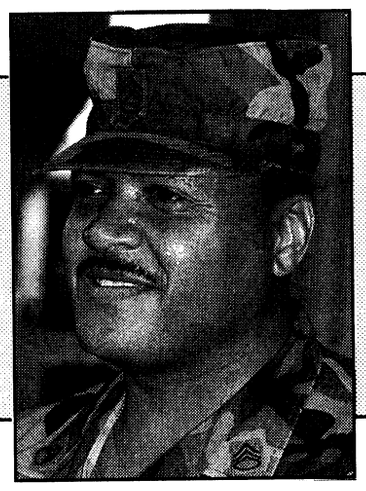
USAIC Public Affairs Office

The last group of Fort Benning troops deployed in Southwest Asia returned to post at 4:40 p.m Wednesday.

A flight brought 124 soldiers of the 3rd Brigade, 24th Infantry Division (Mechanized), back to their awaiting families at Lawson Army Airfield.

More than 2,000 soldiers of the 3rd Brigade served in Southwest Asia. Elements of the brigade deployed on several occasions over the past six weeks and were involved in Operation Vigilant Warrior, displaying U.S. resolve and deterring Iraqi Aggression in the region, according to Brigade Commander Col. Michael Deegan.



The units of the 3rd Brigade that participated in the U.S. deterrence mission included the 1st Battalion, 18th Infantry Regiment; 2nd Battalion, 18th Infantry Regiment; 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor Regiment; 4th Battalion, 41st Field Artillery Regiment; 324th Forward Support Battalion; 317th Engineer Battalion; and Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 3rd Brigade.

Get out, explore Georgia

By Judith Ginder
School of the Americas

commentary

I was going to Dahlonega — or more specifically, to the top of Mount Yonah — to cover the Commando Course for the School of the Americas.

Not especially looking forward to the drive ahead of me, I asked my roommate if she wanted to tag along.

It was a Sunday — a typically beautiful autumn morning. The air had a certain crispness to it.

Once we had reached the North Georgia mountains, my roommate began to speak very loudly about how beautiful the countryside was.

There were rustic-looking old barns off in the distance with green pastures full of cows grazing. The leaves on the trees were turning shades of red, yellow and orange and glistened as the sun and wind hit them. The breeze that was blowing into the car from outside was a welcome change from the seemingly endless autumn heat.

It was beautiful, actually quite gorgeous, but it wasn't anything new to me. I had seen it before.

Having lived in Atlanta for several years after college, I had become somewhat familiar with the different areas of Georgia.

But my roommate is from Puerto Rico and had not yet had the pleasure of viewing the rural South "up close and personal." Her enthusiasm was somewhat refreshing so I turned down the stereo. I listened to her talk about the mountains and the changing of the leaves.

My roommate talked about how she would love to someday drive across the country and see the different regions of the United States.

I told her about the communities in the surrounding area and told her there would probably be a lot of people and a lot of antique shops in Dahlonega. There were both.

While we talked, I realized why I had wanted her to come with me. One, because she had never been before and two, because sometimes I believe soldiers in the barracks, myself included, get trapped into a little, meaningless existence. It's a good feeling to get out, to go off post and experience this part of the country. The part of the country which you are now, to a certain extent, calling home.

Sometimes it's hard to get away, I realize, but when we were driving down the road talking, laughing and sharing memories with one another, I felt so alive. It wasn't the typical weekend of going to the Post Exchange, the mall or to some club at night. It was more, and I encourage everyone, not just those who live in the barracks, to go out and explore Georgia — and have fun.

"I believe soldiers in the barracks, myself included, get trapped into a little, meaningless existence. It's a good feeling to get out, to go off post and experience this part of the country."

Soldier's career positive but could have been better

By Shelby Carr
Special to The Bayonet

commentary

As I prepared to exit the service, I reflected back on my time in the Army and wondered whether I was making the right choice in leaving.

In July 1992, I showed up at Fort Benning to begin training as an infantryman. I believed that a two-year enlistment would give me enough time to see if I wanted a career in the Army, or decide what to do if I got out.

Now more than two years later, I know an Army career is not for me, but I have no clue what I would like to do now.

The Army did not help me decide what I wanted to do with my life; however, it has taught me many things I did not expect.

In two years in the Army I have matured much more than I did the previous two years I spent in college. I have learned a lot about people and how to deal with them, how to manage my time and how to plan activities.

The Army has taught me much about self-discipline, patience and how to keep my sense of humor when things go wrong. I believe I will never again have a problem getting through a day if I only get four hours of sleep a night for several weeks.

I have seen many leadership styles and have taken notes on the ones I like and will try to put the successful styles together when I become a leader.

The people I met and worked with have varied from those who would let nothing get in the way of finishing the job on time to those who would never let the job get in the way of doing nothing.

I had the pleasure of working with soldiers, such as Sgt. 1st Class Rory Malloy, Fort Benning's drill sergeant of the year for 1993, who was always there to help me and who set the example by his actions, not just his words.

I worked with civilians who stayed late to get the job done and who would help me out when I was having trouble, and I worked with civilians who were not on time to work more than once a month.

Despite all of the wonderful things the Army has taught me, I became disillusioned with those in charge.

In my job, I worked with several officers and noncommissioned officers who constantly spoke of taking care of soldiers. This led me to believe they cared about what happened to me and my fellow enlisted soldiers.

Unfortunately I discovered that not everyone walked the talk. In fact, one NCO to whom I took a problem not only refused to help me but kept me off the promotion board and denied me a chance to test for the Expert Infantryman Badge.

After having put my trust in the NCOs over me and to have the one problem I had dismissed because it was not immediately apparent to them, I began to have doubts about the sincerity of my senior leaders.

While I saw many NCOs I could emulate, I also saw others who winked at regulations and disgraced the corps in off-duty time — public drunkenness, family abuse, adultery.

As a soldier, I know when I have done something wrong and have more respect for those who hold me to the standards than those who wish to "take care of soldiers" and let me get by on less than what I should.

Taking care of soldiers means holding them to the standards, giving them a nice place to work and allowing them to have their off-duty time to themselves in barracks that are clean and comfortable.

My time in the Army was a positive experience and prepared me well for my future. But it could have been better had all leaders followed the example set by Drill Sgt. Mallory.

Editor's note: Shelby Carr recently got out of the military to attend college.

Secretary of Defense sends holiday greetings to soldiers

I'm very pleased at this most joyous of seasons to have this opportunity to say a few words to America's soldiers, sailors, airmen and Marines.

In this year especially, your service has brought new hopes that people throughout the world will receive the promise of peace this season.

As we look back over this year, your list of humanitarian contributions is long. You have brought food and water to starving people in Europe and Africa. You have lent a helping hand to those in the Caribbean seeking freedom, provided comfort for the Kurds in Northern Iraq, accomplished successful missions over Bosnia, and all the while you have stood guard over the security of our homeland.

These many and varied missions have taken some of you far away. Many of you will observe this holiday season away from your families, friends and home.

But you should know that you are in the thoughts of Americans everywhere at this season. They know of your contributions to securing the way of life all of us hold so dear.

I'd like to say a special word to the families of our military. Your contributions are no less than the contributions of those who wear the country's uniform.

While your sons and daughters, husbands and wives are about the nation's business far from home, your support is vital to their success.

I'm pleased to relay the nation's thanks to you.

May God grant you every blessing in the new year. Happy holidays to all of you.

HENDRIX: Post's CG talks about his values

"I realized that there was a match, in some sense, between the needs that the Army had and some of the things that I could contribute. It wasn't that I thought that I was good at it, necessarily; but it was something that I found worthy, that you could commit to."

So he did commit to the Army, and in his 29 years of service, he's come a lot farther than he ever expected.

"I remember when I decided to stay in the Army; I thought that I could probably retire as a major — with a little bit of luck as a lieutenant colonel," he said.

With two stars and almost 30 years of service, retirement is not yet in his plans. "I'll keep going as long as they have a job for me," he said.

Those stars carry a heavy responsibility that Hendrix seems acutely aware of, but he still laughs and smiles easily.

"I can truthfully say that almost every day I've been in the Army, I've learned," he said. "I've always worked hard, I've always loved people, and I've always tried to treat people fairly ... and that has been returned to me many, many fold.

"People are everything; people are what it's all about," he said.

He's been in five divisions over the years — the 101st Airborne Division, the 24th Infantry Div. (Mechanized), the 5th Inf. Div. (Mech.), the 8th Inf. Div. (Mech.) and the 1st Armored Division — and he has served in many different capacities.

Ask him what the best assignments have been, though, and he'll answer without hesitation — troop assignments.

"Those assignments have been great because there's something about soldiers that is good and admirable, and," he said, chuckling softly, "challenging."

In a unit that stands ready to deploy to fight the nation's wars, Hendrix said, there is a "sense of service that you have there like probably nowhere else."

That sense of service, he admits, may be one of the factors that has led him to devote himself to the Army, and it has seen him through two wars.

Hendrix served as assistant division commander of the 1st Armored Division during Operation Desert Storm, which, as a senior leader, was rewarding on two fronts, he said.

"No. 1, you had a real international villain, and it was great to kick his tail; and No. 2, you had a great Army on parade that you had a chance to help build over the years, at great expense, with a lot of hours of work and some very tough, tough times."

Between the two wars, he said, his voice suddenly low and somber, "I learned that leadership of soldiers in combat is a very, very serious business.

"I felt in both cases, as I do now, that we had a great Army; we had great soldiers," he said.

That belief in soldiers is still evident in the way he faces today's challenge of a declining budget and a declining force.

The Army has been on "a track of drawdown and budget contraction that was planned and calculated," and though he now senses a bit of a swing in the other direction, "the drawdown certainly has hurt us," he said.

"The challenges that we have at Fort Benning, in my mind, are basically to make sure that we don't go below an acceptable level in terms of the budget that's given to us, or," he emphasized, "the personnel strength that we're authorized to do our job.

"What I am anxious about is to make sure that I get every dollar I can get my hands on, to funnel into quality of life initiatives for soldiers and families — right now, in that priority," Hendrix said.

Quality of life at Fort Benning is truly important to Hendrix, who calls Fort Benning his "professional home."

Since both he and his wife, Cheri, are native Georgians, an affinity for Fort Benning may come naturally. But Hendrix began his career as an instructor in the mountain phase of Ranger School, and has spent a large part of his career training and serving here — he was deputy commanding general from August 1992 to July 1993 before he left to become the deputy chief of staff for Operations, U.S. Army Europe.

"Fort Benning is my professional home in the sense that everything I have done in the Army, in terms of the skills and knowledge that were important, even the aspirations — the pictures on the walls here of the people that I would like to have been able to be like professionally — all were at Fort Benning," Hendrix said.

"Everything I've learned that really matters that I didn't learn from my family, I learned at Fort Benning, or it came from Fort Benning," he said.

Based on his experience in the Army and at Fort Benning, Hendrix said, "I am confident ... that we will, in fact, transition the Army of today into the future with the outcome assured. We've got a history of excellence now, and the people that we have in the Army are all superb people, so I think we've got the people who are going to demand that we remain an outstanding Army."

PRIMUS moving to post

By John S. Wynn
Martin Army Community Hospital

The Primary Care for the Uniformed Services Family Practice Clinic is moving to Martin Army Community Hospital effective Monday.

The clinic will be called the Victory Clinic and will be located on the ground floor of the clinic wing of the hospital.

Laboratory, pharmacy, specialty consultations and X-ray services will be available at the hospital.. Medical records will be maintained in the hospital, allowing access to them 24 hours a day.

PRIMUS pediatric patients (age 15 and below) will use the hospital's Pediatric Clinic located on the third floor of the main hospital.

The same clerical and medical staff will be at the new clinic, so patients will not have to learn new faces.

The new appointment number is 544-4487. Clinic hours are: 7:30 a.m. to 9 p.m. Monday to Friday and 9 a.m. to 1 p.m. Saturdays, except federal holidays.

The pediatric appointment number is 544-1086 or 544-1087 and the hours are 8 a.m. to 4 p.m. Monday to Friday.

Patients who have questions about this move can call the hospital's health care finders at 544-3006, 544-3009 or 544-3113.

All refills available at Refill Pharmacy

Martin Army Community Hospital

Patients needing refills on their prescriptions will get improved service at a one-stop, newly enlarged Refill Pharmacy located at the Main Mall.

Effective Monday, all prescriptions will be refilled at the Refill Pharmacy, and patients will see improved service, according to Col. Errol Moran, chief of Pharmacy Service at Martin Army Community Hospital.

The pharmacy, which is located next to the Information, Ticketing and Registration and SatoTravel offices at the mall, will open its doors at 9 a.m. Monday. Hours of operation will be 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. Monday through Friday and 8 a.m. to 4 p.m. on Saturdays. The Pharmacy will be closed on Sundays and holidays.

Patients will now have several ways to get their prescriptions refilled. They can phone them in, mail them in or drop them by in a drop box.

The preferred method for obtain refills is by calling 544-1352, Moran said, and those using this service will have priority in picking up their refills.

The mail-in refill service will allow patients to mail in their refill requests, then pick up their refills at the Refill Pharmacy. Mail-in request forms are available at the pharmacy upon request.

The refill drop box is located outside the Refill Pharmacy for those patients who prefer to drop off their refill requests for pickup the next day or at a later date.

Effective Dec. 17, the Main Pharmacy at the hospital will no longer be open on Saturdays. All prescriptions on Saturdays will be filled at the Refill Pharmacy. The Refill Pharmacy will fill new prescriptions and provide refills on Saturdays, but only refills Mondays through Fridays, Moran said.

"These changes are needed because of the expected increase in business as a result of the PRIMUS (Primary Care for the Uniformed Services) Clinic moving to the hospital," Moran said. "By shifting all refill prescriptions to the Refill Pharmacy, we hope to minimize the increase in waiting time."

Moran said those patients using the phone-in, mail-in or drop box service will have a much shorter wait than those patients who walk in with their refill requests.

TRADOC fires, losses show 3-year decrease

TRADOC News Service

The numbers of fires of most types on Training and Doctrine Command installations, as well as fire-related deaths, injuries and dollar losses, dropped significantly from calendar year 1991 through Nov. 15.

The most significant drop in incidents occurred in family housing, from 95 in 1991 to 45 in 1994. There were also fewer deaths and injuries from fires. One person has died and eight injured so far this year, compared to three deaths and 18 injuries in 1991.

Fires in family quarters continue to be the leading category of fire incidents in TRADOC, according to George Wilder, chief of TRADOC fire protection. The same is true for all Department of Defense agencies, he said.

"The downward trend (of fires) in family quarters is credited to installation fire departments' fire prevention programs stressing occupational awareness, the installation of smoke and heat detectors and limited installation of kitchen range fire extinguishing systems," Wilder said.

Family housing residents, as well as all members of TRADOC, have to keep fire safety in mind through the coming Christmas and New Year holidays, Wilder cautioned.

He urged people to test smoke detectors now and to keep matches and cigarette lighters away from children.

Army's top NCO shares views with post soldiers

By Marc G. Turchin
Bayonet staff writer

Editor's note: Sgt. Maj. of the Army Richard A. Kidd visited Fort Benning Wednesday to view training, talk with students in the noncommissioned officer courses and participate in airborne operations. The Bayonet was given an opportunity to interview Kidd and the following are excerpts from that interview.

"The Army still offers exactly what it offered before — adventure, challenge, discipline, direction, education, travel, training and family tradition."

— Sgt. Maj. of the Army Richard A. Kidd

Q: What is your opinion concerning the change in career maps for enlisted soldiers? How would you stress the differences among requirements, standards and goals for career maps?

A: The very first thing we're going to do is change the term career maps to career models. Soldiers looked at it as a ticket punching kind of thing and said, "If I've got my two years by this date and I've done those other things, I should be promoted." What we have told soldiers is "You have to be the most qualified, not just qualified"; that gives you a general guideline to use.

When you find a soldier who has a copy of his career model, normally the only thing circled is the civilian education. I know it's important; I've stressed that it's important. That's the reason we've pushed for tuition assistance, but it is not the most important thing. The most important thing soldiers can do to enhance their careers is job performance.

Q: NCOs are now required to pass a physical fitness test before enrolling in an Army school. What effect will this have on soldiers and do you foresee commanders being apprehensive about letting soldiers go to these schools?

A: It should not affect anyone who meets the criteria for going to the noncommissioned officer education system because they are being prepared for promotion. None of the people who fit in that category should have any problem passing a physical training test, any time. If they cannot pass it, in my estimation, they should have not been there.

Will commanders possibly look closer? Great. There's only very few who have that problem anyway. However, we do have a physical fitness problem, I think, in the United States Army when 15 percent of the people tested on an operation readiness exercise cannot pass a PT test, in an Army like ours.

Q: What advice do you have for someone who may be contemplating an Army career? Will the Army of the future have security in the workplace and what can it offer someone that a civilian job cannot?

A: The Army still offers exactly what it offered before— adventure, challenge, discipline, direction, education, travel, training and family tradition. All of those things are still there. There's a chance to have a career. A very full career.

What you need to understand, though, is that you're coming into a force of highly qualified young men and women, who are dedicated to the profession of arms, and that's the reason the United States military has for the past three years been voted the most trusted profession. That's because of the quality of people and because it requires teamwork.

If you are a person who wants to become a part of a winning team, and you're willing to apply yourself, it's a great place to come.

Q: Can you explain the role of the Council of Command Sergeants Major and will the council have any effect on the decision making process that includes all enlisted?

A: The council grew out of the NCOES process action team. We felt that when it comes to NCO professional development, there ought to be a council of sergeants major that has input in the leadership, development decision-making network. That was immediately approved by the Training and Doctrine commander.

Topics will be given to me through feedback from the sergeants major in the field. We'll determine an agenda; then we'll go take a look at them.

Q: Now that it will be mandatory for those who fail an NCO course to be taken off promotion lists, what effect will that have on soldiers and do you see a drop in promotions from now on?

A: We conceivably could have an increase in promotions. Because when that person goes out, that opens up a slot for someone else. I do not see any great increase, though, because we have had that in place now for a while and we haven't had too many people that has really happened to. I think it sent a great message to an awful lot of people.

Normally what happens, particularly in the Basic Noncommissioned Officer Course and Advanced Noncommissioned Officer Course, when somebody doesn't pass, if they have 20 years, they go ahead and retire.

It would be very difficult, at best, to come back from that with the quality of people out there placed ahead of you because you come off the promotion list and you start all over again.

By the way, promotions are really going pretty well. You have some military occupational specialities that because of structure changes have been at high cut-off scores, but overall, generally speaking, promotions have improved.

Soldiers to get better barracks

By Marc G. Turchin
Bayonet staff writer

Some buildings will be completely gutted, while others will be renovated. Construction on Main Post began Aug. 12 and is scheduled for completion Aug. 11, 1996. A start date has not been determined for the other buildings because of legal problems with the construction contract

For those who complain about living in the barracks, relief is on the way — at least for some.

Four barracks on Main Post, four on Kelley Hill and one on Sand Hill were funded for renovation in fiscal 1994, according to Ken Holloway, chief, Real Property Master Planning Branch, Directorate of Public Works. Four more buildings on Kelley Hill are budgeted for replacement in fiscal 1996.

The Main Post buildings include Buildings No. 2811, 2812, 2813 and 2814, and renovations started Aug. 12, he said. The scheduled completion date is Aug. 11, 1996. These buildings were originally built in 1954.

The other project, which includes Buildings No. 9006, 9007, 9012 and 9013 on Kelley Hill plus Building 3210 on Sand Hill, is having legal difficulties concerning the contract and has no start date at this time, Holloway said. Some of these buildings have been standing since 1955.

Different types of renovations are planned for each building.

Some buildings will be entirely gutted, which means everything will be taken out of the building; others will be demolished.

According to some of the soldiers who live and work in these buildings, the renovations are needed in the worst way.

At Kelley Hill's Building No. 9006, soldiers said there are many problems within the building.

"There are power outages all the time," said Pfc. Sean T. Coburn, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion 29th Infantry Regiment,

Other reported deficiencies in the building include:

- Leaky roofs
- Broken air conditioners
- Stopped up sinks and toilets
- Defective shower heads
- Corroded stairwells
- Inoperable windows
- Obtrusive electrical cords and plumbing pipes
- Leaky and broken pipes

Soldiers walked from floor to floor pointing out problems.

"I think everyday someone comes to me complaining about something leaking or something busted," said 1st Sgt. Salvador Martinez, first sergeant for HHC, 1st Bn., 29th Inf. Regt.

Barracks problems can become big morale problems, Martinez said, and it's hard to tell soldiers to keep their rooms clean when the building they live in is falling apart.

"At one point, these guys are going to look at it as, 'If they don't care to fix this building, why should I get my stuff squared away?' " he said.

Because of the number of problems in the building, Martinez and 1st Sgt. James R. Baker, first sergeant for Company A, 1st Bn., 29th Inf. Regt., have formed repair teams to fix small problems in the building as they come up.

These soldiers help out by repairing things just well enough to keep whatever it is running, Martinez said.

Martinez said he's anxious for work to start.

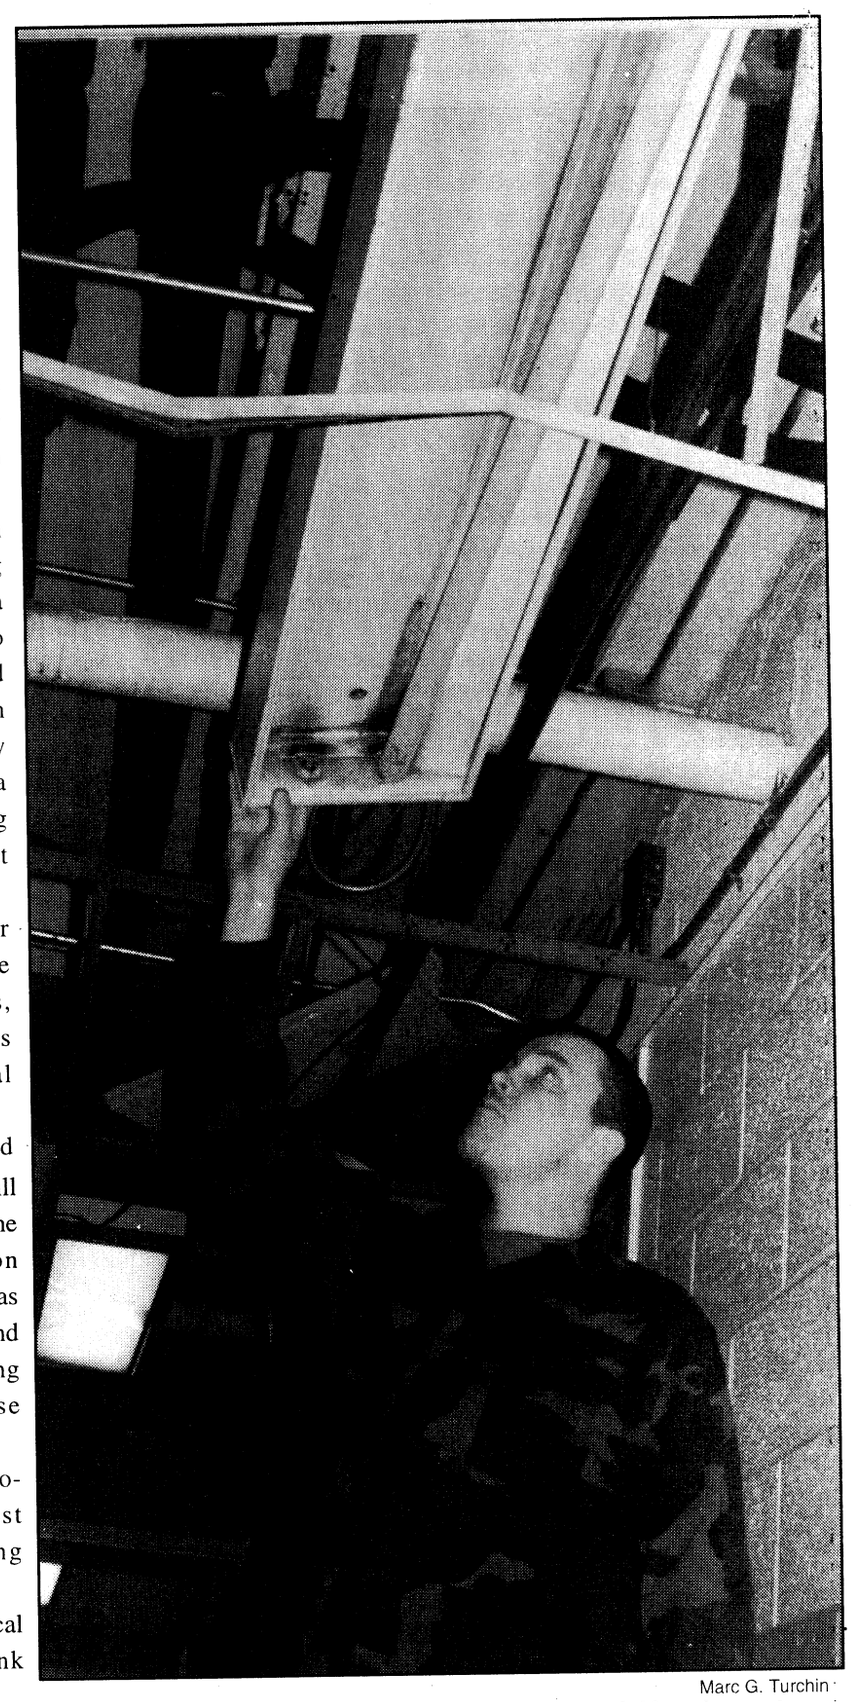
"If the building is scheduled for renovation and it needs to come down ... move the troops out of here and do what they (have) to do to the building," he said.

Both projects are getting new standard designs, said Ted Lipham of Army Housing in Washington, D.C.

Lipham said these designs will give the single soldiers a "home" by providing more space and privacy, thereby giving the soldiers some of what they want and providing a positive step for force readiness and retention.

"(The renovations) are long overdue," said Maj. Chuck Walls, garrison executive officer. "There is something about living in a new room. That is a morale boost in itself," he said.

The new standard design plan includes private living and sleeping rooms and a service area that has a sink, counter space and outlets to accommodate a refrigerator and microwave oven. The bath, which will be shared, will include a vanity separate from the toilet and a bathtub with shower. All sleeping rooms will have a 22 square-foot walk-in closet.



Holloway said the soldier community building will include space for a laundry, dayrooms, common use kitchen, mailboxes and bulk storage for personal property.

No administrative, command and control, or supply facilities will be located within or attached to the barracks. Company operation facilities, which will include areas for equipment storage, showers and equipment cleaning and servicing areas, will be built for these functions close to the barracks.

Holloway said barracks renovation is one of the highest priorities for future funding renovations.

On the list of priorities for fiscal 1998, barracks renovations rank No. 3 and 5, he said.

Theses projects are part of the commander's commitment to the quality of life on post, Walls said.

29th Inf Regt receives post retention award

By Brett Chamberlain
29th Infantry Regiment

The 29th Infantry Regiment's retention team received the post re-enlistment trophy in the large unit category in a ceremony that preceded the regimental run Dec. 2. Maj. Gen. John W. Hendrix, commanding general, presented the award. The Infantry Training Brigade took home the honors in the small unit category.

The 29th beat out the 11th Infantry Regiment by exceeding its combined re-enlistment goals by 14 percent. Everybody involved emphasized teamwork.

"We all did our part; it wasn't just one guy," said Sgt. 1st. Class Edward F. Connelly, regiment retention noncommissioned officer. "It was a team effort all the way."

The unit's commander, Col. Robert F. Jordan Jr, supports the re-enlistment program, according to Connelly.

"He takes a hands-on approach and is always there when we need him," Connelly said.

"Throughout the chain, the commanders are active in the re-enlistment program," said Sgt. 1st Class Terry J. Hutchinson. "It's their program, and they play their roles to the fullest."

The mission of retaining quality soldiers has its challenges and rewards, according to Sgt. 1st. Class Ray Woodard, re-enlistment NCO for 2nd Bn., 29th Inf. Regt.

"Decreasing re-enlistment options can be tough, but there's nothing more satisfying than to have a soldier come back thanking you after you got him the job or assignment he really wanted," Woodard said.

Operation Holiday to provide places to go, things to see, do

By Richard Brill
Special to The Bayonet©

Operation Holiday is a program that provides activities for soldiers who have to spend the Christmas season alone on post.

Sponsored by the Association of the United States Army, Operation Holiday offers soldiers a variety of free activities, including musical entertainment, tours of local attractions and tickets to college and professional sporting events.

Jim Gallagher, executive vice president, AUSA, Chattahoochee Valley-Fort Benning Chapter, said this year is no exception.

"Operation Holiday continues to promote meaningful activities for soldiers who can't be with their families during the holiday season," he said.

This year's events include a number of college and professional basketball and football games, an appearance by Miss Georgia, Andrea Krahn, and the Miss Georgia Superstars at the Kelley Hill Recreation Center.

According to Gallagher, transportation to and from various events will be provided as well as the cost of admission. However, any additional items, such as refreshments at sporting events, must be paid for by the soldier, he said.

Soldiers can register through their units; space for many events is limited, so soldiers should sign up early, Gallagher said.

Gallagher also reminded soldiers that Operation Holiday is intended primarily for those who cannot go home for the holidays, who are separated from their families or who have no transportation.

Operation Holiday will begin Dec. 16 with a kick-off ceremony at the Government Center in Columbus at 8:30 a.m. Fort Benning commanders, including Commanding General Maj. Gen. John W. Hendrix, and Columbus and Phenix City officials, including Columbus Mayor-Elect Bobby Peters, will be present.

Sirens sound weather warnings

By Richard Brill
Special to The Bayonet©

If a wailing weather siren leaves you wondering whether to run for cover or simply go about your business, then an understanding of the post's weather warning system will clear up any misunderstanding, said Capt. Jeffrey L. Peters, commander of 17th Air Support Operations Squadron, C Flight, U.S. Air Force.

Approximately 12 sirens, located throughout the populated areas of the post, will sound only if a code black warning has been issued by the Air Force Weather station at Lawson Army Airfield, which means a tornado has been detected and safety precautions should be taken immediately.

The sirens will emit a constant, high-pitched sound for five minutes to warn of a tornado. To indicate the tornado has cleared post, a two minute siren will sound, followed by one minute of silence, two minutes of siren and one minute of silence.

"Residents should bear in mind that this is a very large post and the tornado may not necessarily pass through their area, even though the sirens are sounding," Peters said. "Tornadoes can change direction without warning so the entire post must be warned at once."

It may also seem like a long time before the all-clear signal has sounded because the tornado must leave the post boundaries before the all clear signal is given.

According to Peters, when a tornado threatens, observe the following safety precautions:

- Stay away from windows, doors and outside walls. Protect your head.
- In schools, hospitals or public places, move to predesignated safety areas. If at home, move to the basement if there is one or the smallest interior room, such as a closet or bathroom.
- If in a car or mobile home, leave it for more substantial shelter.
- If outdoors with no shelter available, lie flat in a nearby ditch or depression and shield your head with your arms.

Master Sgt. James J. Reid, noncommissioned officer in charge, said residents should take the weather siren seriously.

"The siren does not mean a tornado is possible. That falls under a Code Green watch, for which a siren is not sounded," Reid said. "The siren means a tornado has in fact been sighted and is on its way toward the post. We mean it if we sound it. Residents need to take action if they hear the sirens sound."

Reid encouraged parents to discuss tornado safety with their children and to predesignate a room in their homes to go to in case a tornado strikes.

Peters added that the Fort Benning system issues warnings only for the post.

"Sometimes the National Weather Service will issue a tornado watch for the area but we will not," he said. "This is because the NWS watch covers a much larger area and the weather conditions for which it warns might not even affect Fort Benning."

The 16th annual Faith Holiday Race saw records set in the one- and two-mile runs and the five-mile wheelchair race Saturday. More than 1,000 runners ranging in age from 2 to 74 participated in the longest running race in the Columbus-Fort Benning area.

Fourteen-year-old Carey Dowdy broke the old record of five minutes and 12 seconds for the one-mile 9 to 14 age group with a sizzling time of 5:05. Smiths Station's Anthony Lane broke his old record of 9:58 in the two-mile run with a time of 9:53 and James Boyett wheeled his way to a record in the five-mile race beating James Chapman's old mark of 26:00 by almost two full minutes at 24:04.

"We were extremely satisfied with the overall turnout for the race," said coordinator Sue Emerson. "The race was sponsored this year by the Enlisted Wives' and Officers' Wives' clubs of Fort Benning; and, without their support and dedication, we would have had a hard time putting on this race."

On a damp, drizzly morning 50 shooters turned out for the Sunday tactical pistol match at English Range hosted by the Fort Benning Rifle and Pistol Club.

"Some days you have perfect weather; other days you don't," match coordinator Jim Graham said. "You have to learn to be able to shoot in all conditions, so this is something we couldn't have planned but it worked out for the best."

For Peter Zakrajsek, an international student from Slovenia, the match was something different.

"We have shooting compe-titions in my country, but not quite like this," Zakrajsek said. "This style of competition is very good."

Eric Woodson captured the competitor class with a score of 3.235, while Charles Rolling Jr. finished second at 2.752 and Darryl Powell rounded out the third position with score of 2.451.

In the standard class, Dennis Cavender scored a hit factor of 2.829 for the top spot fending off Marvin Smith who finished second with a score of 2.828. Charles Van Housen took third at 2.471.

Daniel Reid held off David Hart and David Wamer to win the military class with a hit factor of 2.542. Hart finished at 2.426 and Wamer claimed third with a score of 2.289.

Valerie Long won the High Female award with a round of 1.275. High law enforcement went to Dennis Knapp with a hit factor of 1.446.

Other winners were; Carlton Craps, high revolver, Charles Rolling, high rifle (iron sights), Robert Lewis, high bolt action rifle and Dennis Cavender, high rifle (scope).

PET OWNERS
must be responsible for animals

By Richard Brill
Special to The Bayonet©

Pets can be a source of great joy and companionship; and, with some 6,000 pets registered on post, it seems Fort Benning residents enjoy the company of animals.

However, according to Sgt. Donna Wiedeburg of Veterinary Services and Acting Community Life Officer Jennifer Morgan, some post residents are not willing or prepared for the responsibility that comes with pet ownership.

From outright abuse and neglect resulting in the death of pets to allowing pets to become a neighborhood nuisance, violations of the post's pet regulations are occurring all too frequently, both said.

U.S. Army Infantry Center Regulations 40-905 and 210-5 clearly outline the responsibilities of pet owners, Wiedeburg said. These include:

• Registering dogs and cats within 14 days of arrival on post or upon becoming 90 days of age. When registering, valid proof of rabies vaccination must be presented and the pet owner will be issued a metal rabies tag that must be attached to the collar of the pet as a means for identification.

"There is no excuse for not registering a pet, " Wiedeburg said. "It does not require an appointment if the animal already has a rabies vaccination and you can come in anytime during our operating hours."

• Pets must be kept indoors or secured outdoors on the owners' premises and must not be allowed to roam outside the confines of the yard or become a nuisance to neighbors. Shelter, such as a portable dog house, is required and pets should not be tied to trees or shrubs.

"A tree or the eaves of a house does not constitute shelter," Wiedeburg said. "I also encourage personnel to keep their animals from roaming free and becoming a nuisance to other residents." Also, cat owners should refrain from letting their cats roam freely to prevent unwanted pregnancies, the spread of disease and injury that may occur from other animals, she said.

• Animals outside of their yards must be on a leash or kept within voice command. "Voice command means that the animal responds immediately to the owner and returns directly to the owner the first time the animal is called,"said Wiedeburg. Wiedeburg added that in reality, very few dogs possess the training and discipline to be considered truly under voice command and that she has never seen a cat respond to voice command.

• In addition to providing shelter and fresh food and water, pet owners are responsible for controlling parasites such as fleas, ticks and worms and for treating animals with contagious diseases.

• If an animal bites someone, the owner must take it to the post veterinarian for examination and quarantine. The person bitten must report to the emergency room and fill out a bite report.

• Only three pets per family are permitted in the housing areas. Wild animals, such as squirrels, rabbits (domestic rabbits are permitted), skunks, foxes, monkeys and snakes are not permitted.

Morgan said pet owners are also responsible for any damage to government or private property that their pets cause.

In addition, pet owners are responsible for removing their pet's excrement from their quarters.

Furthermore, failure to provide adequate living space and appropriate shelter, food and water daily, abandoning any animal on the reservation or committing any other act, either intentional or from disregard, that causes physical pain, suffering, fright or death to an animal (except for legal hunting) may result in pet exclusion, loss of pet privileges or loss of post housing privileges.

Martin Army Community Hospital

Q: What about fitness for retirees and senior citizens?

A: As you grow older, you are not strong and agile as during your youth.

Many day-to-day things you already do may help increase your fitness when you increase intensity. With slight modification, these activities will assist even more.

Regular walking is the backbone to any workout. Progressively lifting and carrying weights, stair climbing, and doing chair pushups and situps or curlups are a few exercises that will augment fitness.

Flexibility exercises are a good technique to avoid joint tightness and maintain suitable range of motion.

Q: I am a medic with a unit that is in the field constantly. One of the most common injuries is the ankle sprain. Tell me about the ankle injury treatment.

A: Ankle injuries vary greatly from mild to severe to fractures. A systematic approach to the acute care is critical.

Roughly 85 percent of ankle injuries involve a twisting of the foot inward, or ankle inversion. They injuries age graded as mild, moderate and severe.

A mild sprain entails stretching of the ligament with minor swelling and a slight limp.

A moderate sprain involves partial tearing of the ligament with pain, swelling and a significant limp or inability to totally bear weight.

A severe sprain includes complete rupture or almost complete rupture of the ligament. There is significant swelling, pain, and the person is unable to bear weight on the affected leg.

The treatment for all these injuries is ice, compression, elevation and rest. Dr. Fit recommends the injured soldier keep the boot on as it renders compression to retard acute swelling.

Q: I am a serious athlete and recently read about passive restoration following a hard workout. Will you address this issue?

A: Passive restoration is mending following a hard workout. Perhaps one of the most widely used methods for recovery is massage.

Suitable massage accelerates recovery from workouts and increases your total work capacity. The elevated blood flow to the muscles during massage promotes lactic acid (lactate) removal and nourishment of the muscle tissue. European massage of gentle kneading, jostling and slowly caressing the "worked" muscle following exercise is beneficial. Massage can be used several hours after the workout as well.

Professionally administered massage is an excellent method for passive restoration for the avid athlete.

Q: What is the status of the law that was passed to allow military pay to be garnished?

A: You may recall that in 1993, Congress passed the Hatch Act Reform Amendments, which will allow creditors to garnish military pay in cases where the creditor has successfully sued the servicemember and obtained a judgment against him or her.

In the year that has gone by since passage of the new law, the Defense Finance and Accounting Service has been formulating regulations to control how the garnishments will occur. We now fully expect those regulations to be in place by Jan. 1 and garnishments to start shortly thereafter.

The draft regulations will require a creditor to satisfy certain conditions in order to successfully garnish military pay. For example, the creditor must have followed the Soldiers and Sailors Civil Relief Act in obtaining the judgment. Under the draft regulations, DFAS will mail a notice of impending garnishment to the servicemember and to the servicemember's immediate commander.

The commander will serve the member with a copy of the notice, and advise the servicemember of his or her rights. The servicemember may contest the garnishment or consent to it, and additionally, the commander is to give the servicemember the opportunity to seek legal assistance before making a decision.

Based on the conditions, the creditor must satisfy, there are a number of potential defenses a servicemember can raise. At this time, we are not sure of the time limits that will be imposed as far as contesting these garnishments. As a rule of thumb, however, one should not wait until the last minute to seek legal advice.

The importance of handling debt and lawsuit situations should be underlined by the now imminent possibility of facing garnishment of wages.

If you are in a situation in which you may owe a debt and are facing lawsuit, or if you receive a notice of garnishment of your pay, you can call the Legal Assistance Division's at 545-3281 or 545-3282.

2nd MASH conducts full-scale field exercise

By Richard Brill
Special to The Bayonet©

About 225 members of the 2nd Mobile Army Surgical Hospital, 690th Medical Company and the 926th Medical Detachment took to the field Nov. 15 to 20 for a battalion-sized field training exercise.

In a clearing near the McKenna Military Operations on Urbanized Terrain site, the units constructed a working field hospital to conduct various training exercises and at the same time carry out their normal post missions.

First Lt. John Miller, operations officer of the 690th Medical Company, said the exercise was the first of its size in about four years.

"We normally conduct platoon-level exercises, so the chance to conduct an exercise of this scale with the other units is outstanding training for everyone involved and contributes to the cohesion of the units," he said. "In addition to common tasks training, we were able to conduct various exercises involving the evacuation of casualties."

The 2nd MASH set up a full-scale, generator-powered field hospital that included an operations section, emergency treatment area, a delayed ward for patients not requiring immediate treatment, a laboratory, pharmacy, x-ray room, recovery ward and an operating room.

A hospital of this type, which can expand to contain 60 beds, would support a division, said chief wardmaster Sgt. 1st Class James Johnson, and would not be located in the immediate combat zone. Patients would either be returned to their units for duty or transferred within 72 to 96 hours to a larger, permanent hospital.

The exercise also gave the units a chance to practice a new concept — the forward surgical team. The team would be located as close to the action as possible in order to attempt to save severely wounded soldiers who might not survive to the larger battalion facility, said Staff Sgt. Michael Guthrie, assistant chief wardmaster.

The equipment for the forward surgical team can be packed on five High Mobility, Multi-purpose, Wheeled Vehicles, which can be driven or dropped by parachute to the combat zone. It requires only one hour for the FST to be ready for operation and it can sustain itself for 72 hours before it needs to be resupplied, Guthrie said.

The forward surgical team is staffed by emergency medical technicians, surgeons and nurses and contains two operating tables and an eight- cot post operations ward. Sensitive equipment is coated in Kevlar to protect it from shrapnel damage.

"The forward surgical team is cost-effective, extremely mobile and represents the latest Army surgical concept," Guthrie said. "The idea is to save as many lives as possible."

Assisting the 2nd MASH and the 698th was the 926th Medical Detachment, which provided preventive medicine support to the participating units by conducting sanitary inspection of the dining facility, water treatment, waste disposal and field sanitation.

"We also provide pesticide sprays, insect traps, water kits for testing and treatment and environmental health risk assessments," said Maj. Thomas Little, detachment commander.

Lt. Col Edward Crosbie, 2nd MASH commander, said the exercise was an outstanding opportunity to prepare for rotation to the Joint Readiness Training Center, Fort Polk, La., at which the unit will train in January.

"Anytime we go out to the field it is outstanding training for our soldiers," he said. "To get out here and get our hands on the actual equipment is superb and by doing so we can ensure that the equipment is fully functional and ready for use in a real-life situation."

world war II

50 years ago this week ...

- The Soviet threat to Budapest increased as Red Army tank units drove down the east bank of the Danube River to within 7 1/2 miles of the city. The Red Army also captured Goedoelloe nine miles north of the city, the last major fort guarding the Hungarian capital.
- In the Pacific, U.S. forces destroyed all Japanese resistance around Ormoc and captured the city. Meanwhile, U.S. aircraft struck at Japanese convoys seeking to land reinforcements on Leyte Island and attacked Japanese installations in the northern Philippines, destroying nearly 100 aircraft.
- On the Western Front, the greatest single fleet of bombers in the war, 1,600 B-17 Fortresses and B-24J Liberators, attacked German military targets. Elsewhere, the Germans evacuated several defensive positions on the west bank of the Roer River. Near the southern Franco-German border American forces reached the towns of Scheibenhard and Eberbach.
- France and Russia signed a treaty of alliance after French Gen. Charles DeGaulle returned from Moscow. The treaty stated that both sides would continue the war until full victory, that neither side would conclude a separate peace with Germany, and for both to join the United Nations. The treaty would last for 20 years.
- On the homefront, the New York Giants won the eastern title of the NFL by defeating Washington, 31-0, and went on to play Green Bay for the championship.
- At Fort Benning, the Medical Detachment, 4th Infantry, of the Infantry School, has a new friend, "Morphine," a female dog that was hit by a car and brought to the detachment. After examining the dog, James H. Wilson and John K. Means immobilized her by putting a cast on that covered her whole shoulder and leg area.

Former commander donates unit's colors

11th Infantry Regt. receives one of unit's earliest flags

By Ruth J. Spaller
Bayonet staff writer

The 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, received a little piece of history Dec. 2 when a former commander donated one of the unit's original sets of colors.

Retired Maj. Gen. Claude Ivey, who commanded the unit from February 1975 to May 1976, presented the flag he was given when he left the unit to current Commander Col. Florian K. Rothbrust. Ivey said he wanted the flag to hang where "the rest of the world" would see it.

The flag has a spread-winged American eagle embroidered on a field of deep blue. The eagle holds arrows in one claw, an olive branch in the other, and a streamer emblazoned "Semper Fidelis" (always faithful) in its beak. A shield carrying the castle, arrow and crossed swords of the 11th Infantry's crest covers its chest. A label on the flag sets the date of its manufacture as 1967.

"This is probably the second or third set (of colors) that was ever made; but, as far as we know, they are the only regimental colors of the 11th Infantry Regiment available when the unit folded up and went to Vietnam," Ivey said.

"These may not be the original colors, but they are the most recent colors that are available," he said.

According to Ivey, when the 11th Infantry left Fort Carson, Colo., in the '60s for Vietnam, everything associated with the unit was taken to the Pueblo Army Depot in Pueblo, Colo.

Years later, 10 crates of unit memorabilia were found at the depot by a friend of Ivey's looking for memorabilia from another unit.

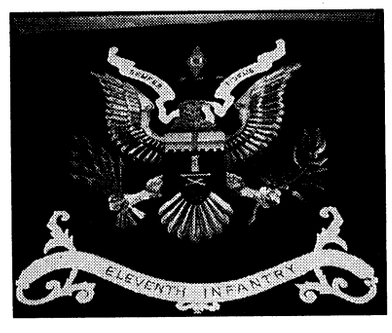
One of the things they found in those crates, Ivey said, was this set of colors.

His soldiers presented him with the colors when he left the unit to go to the Army War College, and the colors have followed him around the world ever since then, he said.

"It is a pleasure to me to present them to one of the great fighting units in the history of modern warfare," he said.

In return, Rothbrust presented a miniature of the unit's colors to Ivey for his contributions to the 11th Infantry Regiment "both past and present."

"Although we don't know exactly what period of unit history (the colors) span, we do know that when the battalion served in Vietnam, those colors almost certainly served as a guiding star," Rothbrust said.



"For the officers, cadre and soldiers (who attended the presentation), it's got to be one of the absolute highlights to bring something of such significant historical value back to the battalion," he said.

535th: Unit changes name not mission

By Jerrie Macintire

Soldiers of the 535th dig trenches for electrical lines in Somalia during Operation Restore Hope.

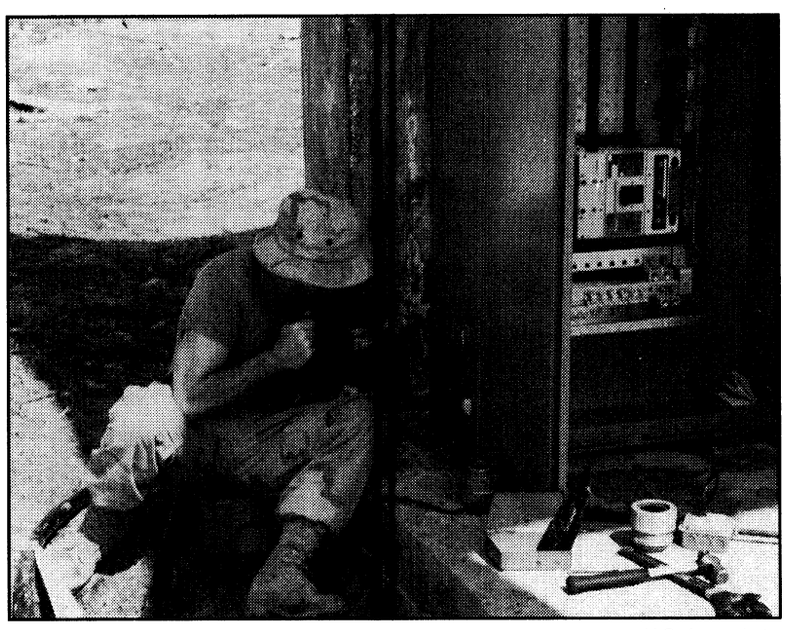
Although the mission of generating power during military operations, peacetime and for natural disaster relief remains the same, the 535th Engineer Detachment, a tenant unit on Fort Benning, has a new name.

Effective Nov. 18, the detachment, a company-sized organization housed in a remote section of Harmony Church, became the 249th Engineer Battalion, which can become a table of organization and equipment unit, according to Chief Warrant Officer 3 Jerry Hanchett, team chief for 3rd Platoon, Company B.

Although the name of the organization has changed, members of the group won't see much change in the mission as they continue to produce electricity via portable generators in support of various military missions around the globe as well as peacetime assignments, Hanchett said.

There are eight platoons in two companies scattered around the United States and abroad. "Each platoon has stand alone power plants that can provide electricity any place in the world," Hanchett said.

The power specialists who work on Fort Benning are part of Company B at Fort Bragg, N.C., and they receive orders through their Fort Belvoir, Va., Headquarters. Members of the Fort Benning 13-person platoon spend about six months of each year deployed to various sites around the world supporting missions such as Operation Restore Hope in Somalia and Operation Uphold Democracy in Haiti. Recent combat missions include Operation Desert Shield and Desert Storm in the Persian Gulf.



When the military needs electrical power for combat or for peacekeeping or public service missions overseas, members of the "Prime Power" Battalion can fully deploy their modular power plant within 72 hours. The power plant, consisting of four diesel generators, usually travels via ship but can also be flown to a location on a C5A airplane, Hanchett said.

In addition to combat missions, the power specialists participate in peacetime missions, one of which is supplementing Fort Benning's supply of electricity during peak summer months when demand for air conditioning is high.

Other peacetime missions include providing electricity during natural disasters such as Hurricanes Hugo and Andrew. Some overseas peacetime missions include maintaining a power plant in Honduras, which provides electricity to help raise the quality of life for rural individuals that the troops say "personally rewarding," according to Hanchett.

Troops also expressed pride in their mission in Haiti and appreciation toward the people of that island country who "danced and sang in the streets" as military convoys arrived in town to restore electricity that had been lacking for three years, said Sgt. Maj. Dennis Calamita of Fort Bragg.

In addition to overseas missions, the 249th Engineer Battalion also regularly supports the Directorate of Public Works at various posts by helping with transformer inspections, maintenance and repair of power plants and substations, maintaining circuit breakers and protective relay maintenance, and training personnel to operate and maintain the portable power plant.

A Fort Benning soldier erects a portable generator in Somalia.

The 535th Engineer Detachment, now the 249th Battalion, has a long history of providing electricity for military missions. It was originally activated in 1944 in London as the 2892nd Engineer Technical Intelligence Team. After participating in World War II, the group was inactivated and redesignated the 535th Engineer Technical Intelligence Team. After reorganization in 1953, it was designated a detachment.

The detachment spearheaded the Army's Prime Power Program in the 1960s and 1970s, and operated and maintained the nuclear power barge, "Sturgis."

During the 1980s, the power specialists responded to more than 40 requests for electricity via portable generators including augmenting the commercial power system for the 1980 Winter Olympics at Lake Placid, N.Y.

Soldiers serving the 249th Battalion attend a year-long training course at Fort Belvoir. With military occupational specialty 52E, soldiers completing the course take classes in advanced mathematics, physics, electrical and mechanical engineering in addition to courses on power plant operations and maintenance.

By Marc G. Turchin
Bayonet staff writer

Soldiers and civilians from on and off post were honored for outstanding work in their respective field in a new monthly retreat ceremony sponsored by the post commanding general. The first of these ceremonies was Dec. 1 at 4 p.m. on York Field.

Maj. Gen. John W. Hendrix, Fort Benning's commanding general, said all the people honored represent excellence.

"I am very, very proud of the accomplishments of all those people we recognize today," he said.

While performing routine tower maintenance, Casey noticed a soldier had just climbed to the top of the tower. The soldier was extremely depressed and contemplating suicide. Casey and McQuire got involved and persuaded the soldier to let the chaplain talk to him.

Moran climbed to the top of the tower and talked to the soldier. After several minutes, the soldier agreed to come down. Ensuring the soldier made it safely, Casey hooked himself to the soldier with a safety line so he could stop the soldier from jumping.

Civilians recognized were:

• Cynthia L. Wynn, secretary for the Training Management Division, Directorate of Training and Doctrine, School of the Americas — October's Employee of the Year

• Kathy S. Dykes, a volunteer with Santa's Castle — Volunteer of the Month

• Jerry Pike accepted a certificate of excellence for customer service on behalf of the Operations Branch, Current Operations Division, Directorate of Operations and Training

• Frank Martin, outgoing mayor of Columbus, was given an Iron Mike trophy and a certificate of appreciation for his outstanding support of Fort Benning during his tenure in office.

FAITH MIDDLE SCHOOL

Pupils find niche through variety

By Jerrie Macintire
Special to The Bayonet©

Editor's note: This is the final article in a series on middle schools.

Adolescents and their parents carefully inserted clear drinking straws into tri-colored cupcakes and removed a plug, or cross section, while they recorded their findings on a multi colored graph.

It wasn't a taste test or a recipe analysis; these pupils were studying the concepts of rock layering and using the cupcakes to practice core sampling the way geologists do, according to educator Judy Hanley, who taught the class.

The tasty study in geology was part of In Touch with Math and Science, a Saturday enrichment program at Faith Middle School. While Hanley discussed rock formations, teacher Kris Keske across the hall led another group through a math logic puzzle filled with hidden patterns that required creative thinking to master.

The cupcakes, math problems and hot air balloon launches on Super Saturday were hands-on lessons designed to let pupils apply knowledge in creative ways to new problems, according to Faith Principal Beth Middlemiss. Super Saturdays are just one of a variety of activities Faith offers after the bell rings to signal the official end of school.

Joe Schroeder, of the 1st Battalion (Airborne), 507th Infantry, 11th Infantry Regiment, take core samples from tri-colored cupcakes to get a better understanding of rock layering in the Super Saturday program, one of several enrichments offered after school hours at Faith Middle School.

SERIES: Middle School part III: Enrichment

After school

Teachers say they remember when the possibility of having to "stay after school" sent shivers down the spines of nervous pupils; nowadays, the phrase has a whole new meaning as Faith middle schoolers ask, "Do we get to stay after today?"

Enrichment activities like the ones at Faith support the middle school philosophy as defined by author and Principal Samuel Campbell in the Education Digest. In his article, Campbell encourages personalizing education through small group lessons, exposing pupils to both concrete and abstract ideas, allowing the adolescents to dabble in a variety of disciplines just for fun and letting pupils apply knowledge in hands-on, problem-solving activities.

Helping pupils find a niche for themselves by offering a variety of enrichments is one way educators help pupils transition through middle school and prepare for high school, said teacher Anne Shaw. "My philosophy is to teach self-worth and tolerance through the classes," she said.

By embracing the child-centered philosophy that is part of middle school, "After school activities provide some interesting interaction with some talented people," said Ken Stettes, assistant principal at Faith.

Child-centered education

As part of this focus on individual pupils, Faith school offers eight academic electives that encourage participation in a variety of disciplines while allowing pupils to "sample" different fields.

These short units, part of the middle school philosophy, allows pupils to experiment and find areas in which they excel, said Lorri Blanchard, choral music teacher who is involved with the after school enrichment.

Sixth-graders study all eight different electives during school and may also attend after school activities related to the electives, said Shaw, who teaches industrial arts as an elective and also as an after-school activity. Seventh-graders may choose four electives of the eight offered.

Eighth-graders have decided upon fields of interest and may choose two electives, said home living teacher Ruby Rumley, who "loves seeing the change" as pupils mature through middle school.

The electives are: home living, industrial arts, art, computech (computers), mindboggle, Spanish, choral music and instrumental music.

Interdisciplinary units

While teaching electives, educators also implement the philosophy of interdisciplinary units of study; they tie lessons together in a coordinated effort to focus on a single theme, said art teacher Gloria Loar who teaches art history of various periods to coincide with lessons in history and social studies.

As part of an interdisciplinary enrichment, pupils are preparing to offer the first ever dinner theater at the school in February. In preparation, industrial arts, home living, art and music teachers are all working together to design and build sets, sew napkins, plan and print dinner menus, and rehearse the drama, a selection from the Wizard of Oz.

"These extracurricular activities are designed to showcase the pupils' skills," Blanchard said.

Competitions

Other enrichments designed to build confidence and showcase skills while teaching team-building skills and problem solving include activities such as Mathcounts, Odyssey of the Mind, the History Club and Head to Head.

Faith's Odyssey of the Mind team has done well over the years in national competition, but the main focus of the group is not winning but to "help pupils learn to think divergently and problem solve creatively," said Michelle Reasoner, Odyssey of the Mind coach.

Likewise, the National History Day competition provides a contest for pupils in the history club, but the focus is on teaching research skills on a year-round basis, said Lee Strickland, history club co-coach. "The history club is heavily researched, but we still take a creative approach," said Libby Kurinec, co-coach. "We are switching back to performance (from written and video media) for the first time in five years."

Mathcounts, a nationwide program designed to stimulate interest in math, enables pupils to compete individually and as a team with other middle schools, said Dianne Hilt, coordinator.

"The Mathcounts program can also help pupils prepare for the Georgia math league," a program open to all pupils at Faith, Hilt said.

"Our Head to Head program is strictly academic," said Patti Jones, who goes through countless drills of facts, dates and places in preparation for the "Jeopardy-like" contest each fall. "The children learn so much from this activity. They have to be a trivia expert, they have to know current events, and they learn to work as a team and help each other," she said.

Although pupils participating in various competitions enjoy winning, "They are as well prepared to be the winners as the losers," Kurinec said. "We talk about how to graciously accept a win and a loss," she said.

"Taking part in enrichment programs helps the student to appreciate that the reward is in the striving and not solely the outcome," Stettes said.

"The opportunity to explore an area of special interest, to work as a team member, and be part of a creative process enhances the academic and social skills of the middle school child while nurturing positive self-esteem," he said.

324th FSB cooks looking for win

By Jan Wesner Childs
Special to The Bayonet©

The food service team of the 324th Forward Support Battalion hopes it can stir up a win in the Department of the Army's Phillip A. Connelly field cooking competition.

Ten cooks from the battalion, which supports the 3rd Brigade, 24th Infantry Division, at Kelley Hill, were judged on their abilities Nov. 30 by a team of evaluators from Fort Bragg, N.C. The cooks have been named best in their division and are now competing against other units from the 18th Airborne Corps. The winner will be announced any day and will go on to compete at the DA level.

"This is by far the most exciting thing we do as cooks," said Master Sgt. Claskel Freeman, brigade food service noncommissioned officer. "It's a very prestigious competition."

Although the food service team won the division level in August, it almost didn't get the chance to go on in competition. Duty called and the team deployed to Southwest Asia.

"The significant thing is a lot of these soldiers were deployed to Kuwait and Saudi Arabia and just rushed back," Freeman said. "Normally it takes about a month to prepare."

Most of the cooks returned to Fort Benning the day before Thanksgiving, less than a week before competition day. Sgt. 1st Class Lulu Blair, who supervises the team, said the cooks didn't get a four-day weekend like almost everyone else on post. They were hard at work that Friday.

"We had a practice run on Saturday; then we had another practice run on Monday," Blair said. "A lot of work is put into this. It was kind of stressful; but, we got it done, and I'm proud of them."

Blair said the rest of the battalion helped by setting up tents and latrines, pulling guard duty and other things.

"We had great support to make it all happen," she said.

The team was judged on all its field procedures, from cooking in a mobile kitchen trailer to sanitation to camouflage. Evaluators sampled the food, checked the water temperature in dishwashing basins and looked at how food is stored.

The team served two meals to soldiers and evaluators. Breakfast included french toast, creamed beef and coffee cake. Lunch featured Hawaiian ham, baked chicken, salad, soup and pineapple upside down cake.

Members of the 324th Forward Support Battalion food service team Spc. Cheryl Noel (left) and Pfc. Corinne Skipper work with the unit's M-2 burners, which are used for cooking in the field.

The cooks routinely serve up to 1,200 meals a day in the field and are often deployed. In garrison, they work in their battalion's dining facility.

The menu for the competition was a little more complex than what is usually served in the field because the team was hoping to impress the judges, Blair said.

Besides just returning from Saudi Arabia and Kuwait, the soldiers of the 324th Forward Support Battalion food service team are unique in another way — by coincidence, all 10 of the cooks are women.

Blair said the fact that the team is made up of women can make it more difficult to accomplish certain tasks, like lifting heavy equipment. But she said the team gets the job done no matter what.

Staff Sgt. Shirley Warner, first cook and next in charge to Blair, thought the competition experience was a positive one despite all the hard work. "Actually, it's been fun," Warner said. "It's been a good learning experience."

Other members of the team are: Spc. Felicia Allen, in charge of salads and soups; Sgt. Sherri Green, supervising the mobile kitchen trailer; Spc. Tracy Jenkins, cooking in the mobile kitchen trailer; Spc. Elmira Blackmon, pastry cook; Sgt. Karen Alexander, in charge of the ration storage area; Sgt. Angie Echoles, in charge of the outside area; Spc. Cheryl Noel and Pfc. Corinne Skipper, who take care of the M-2 burners.

'Tis the season to practice safety with toys

By Alfreta Gibson
Preventive Medicine Service

Unsafe use of toys can turn the most joyous time of the year into a time of tragedy and pain; but, with good judgment and proper supervision, this pain and tragedy can be prevented.

Yet, undoubtedly, some families will experience the injury or death of a child who unsafely played with toys.

In 1991, more than 163,000 emergency room visits were made by children who were injured in toy-related accidents, according to the Injury Reduction Institute. This nonprofit institute, founded by trial lawyers to help reduce death and injuries from products, further states that between 1986 and 1990, 700,000 children died.

But this year the holiday season doesn't have to be that bleak if parents and other adults use good judgment while purchasing toys for children.

Fortunately, there are helpful hints and steps one can take to keep children's toys safe:

• Know your child. A toy that may be completely safe for an older child may be very dangerous for a younger child.

For example, a young child could swallow a marble from a board game or choke on an uninflated balloon. Therefore, you should always look for age appropriate toys, and always keep an older child's toys away from a younger child. Pay attention to those age and cautionary labels.

• Think like an infant or child when shopping. Always assume a child will use a toy in ways not recommended by the manufacturer.

For instance, do not buy 2-year-olds a dart gun. They may point it at their eye and shoot. Always remember, a child does not have the same judgment capabilities or life experiences as an adult; therefore an adult needs to let children know when danger is imminent. Parents should think like a child when purchasing toys and see them from a child's perspective. Make sure a toy will be safe no matter how a child uses it.

• Don't buy toys with instructions written in a foreign language.

• Don't trust labels. If you believe there may be something in a box that could be swallowed or otherwise misused by your child, don't buy it.

• Always test toys to make sure they are not choking hazards to children. A natural inclination for young children is to put things in their mouths; don't give them the opportunity. To determine a toy's "choke potential," insert the toy into a toilet tissue tube; if the toy fits inside, it's too small for the child and has a very high choke potential.

• Don't always assume a toy manufacturer tested the toy. Test it yourself by looking for loose parts, sharp points and edges, heating defects or exposed electrical parts, loud sound effects or propelled objects such as darts.

• Inspect toys regularly to make sure they still meet safety standards. Look especially close for sharp splinters on the edges of wooden toys, rust on outdoor toys, rips or exposed wires in stuffed animals, and loose eyes or other small parts on dolls or stuffed animals. Once you've inspected, repair the damaged toys or throw them away immediately.

•Supervise your child, not just at Christmas, but year round.

• Toys and toy safety should go hand in hand. If you buy your children a bike, give them a helmet, too, and explain they must always wear the helmet for their own safety.

• Store toys in a safe place and insist that your children do so. If your children are too young to put the toy away, store it on a shelf or out of reach so that they can't pull it over on themselves.

A Christmas toy safety program will be Wednesday and Dec. 16 from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. at the Post Exchange at the Main Mall.

Sponsored by the Community Health Nursing branch of Preventive Medicine, the program will focus on education and guidance in selecting appropriate toys, child-proofing your home, storing toys safely, keeping older children's toys out of reach, supervising play, teaching safety to children and heeding safety warnings.

Emphasis will be placed on the bright, colorful plants available at Christmastime because many of these plants are poisonous.

Troy State University

Troy State University will conduct its fall graduation exercise today at 7:30 p.m. in Marshall Auditorium in Infantry Hall, Building 4.

Approximately 158 candidates for both undergraduate and graduate degrees are expected to participate.

Jack Hawkins Jr., chancellor of the Troy State University System, will confer degrees. State Sen. Ed Harbison of Georgia will be the speaker.

Also, the university will recognize the 250,000th participant in the Service Members' Opportunities College Program. Sgt. 1st Class Alan Buford, a Rome, Ga., native, who is assigned to Fort Bragg, N.C., will receive his associate's degree in criminal justice.

Buford will be recognized for his achievement by Clinton L. Anderson of the SOC staff, J. Willard Williams, senior adviser for the Army Continuing Education System from Headquarters, Department of the Army, and Hawkins.

Buford earned his associate's degree through a combination of classes taken at Troy State at Fort Benning in conjunction with credits awarded based on education he received through Army service schools and his military experience.

DIAPER DERBY

Babies crawl for prizes

By Jerrie Macintire
Special to The Bayonet©

"And they're off," blared the announcer as race observers surveyed the field and cheered for their favorite.

No, it wasn't the Kentucky Derby's run for the roses, it was Fort Benning's run for the diapers.

The second "Diaper Derby" at the Commissary Dec. 2 featured two dozen babies who demonstrated their skills on hands and knees as they crept their way down a padded track and into the hearts of the Commissary patrons.

Sponsored by Kimberly-Clark, the derby is a fun way to showcase new baby products and offer free gifts like bibs, hats and diapers, said company representative Nora Taft.

"We really have a good time at these diaper derbies," said company representative Luann Carroll as parents hovered in the background with cameras and video equipment to record what is probably the first competition for most of the crawlers.

Family member Melinda Estep brought 9-month-old Dylan to the race in order to record the event for her husband, Spc. John Estep, who was recently transferred to Korea.

"I know he will really enjoy this. My husband just left for Korea, and I'm videotaping this for him," she said.

The race went smoothly, said Kimberly-Clark representative Beal Williams, although some parents got a little too close to the race track "railing" and the fence of diaper packages had to be restacked.

Despite some slight mishaps such as babies pausing during the race to get acquainted and going after one another's juice bottles at the end of the raceway, "This was a big success," said Harold Ivey, company representative.

The grand prize winner was 9-month-old Taylor Shulz, 9-month-old Bryce Gressley was second and 11-month-old Bryan Hudson was third. They all received free supreme Huggies diapers.

Each classroom at Dexter represents a country participating in the Olympics, and activities related to each country will be woven into the curriculum throughout the year.

Students at Dexter will celebrate the Olympic connection theme by learning the native language of their representative country, participating in cultural festivals such as Thailand's "Festival of Lights," making quilts as an official Georgia gift to the Olympics and soliciting Fort Benning's liaison officers as guest teachers.

Other classroom activities include cooking, tasting, writing to pen pals and celebrating the holidays of the adopted country. The year-long study culminates with an Olympic Week celebration in May.

This year, priceless gifts may mean most

By Ted W. Nichols
USAIC Chaplains' Office

reflections

During the approaching season of goodwill and cheer, many of our thoughts and actions coalesce around the things most of us share. Yet, in our culture, the act of sharing is undergoing enormous erosion.

This sharing most often focuses on the family — an incredible living laboratory. Today, we face a serious crisis where the high incidence of fractured families and the shattered lives that result have lessened the importance of what we share.

The idea of family is fundamental to God's design for mankind. When artificially altered, both society and individuals suffer and fall prey to a host of psychological and social ills. The family unit is essential to individual security and identity. It is the vehicle through which values and a sense of purpose are experienced.

No other institution effectively replaces the family. To a great extent, children reflect the values and priorities of their parents. Modeling is the primary way values and personal identity are transmitted in the family.

During this holiday season and in the coming year, I challenge you to take the initiative and make your spouse and children a No. 1 priority in your life. In fact, why not begin today to invest in some priceless gifts for those you love? You'll be surprised at their affordability.

First, consider the gift of your personal time. By choosing to spend constructive time together as a family, you will guarantee a happier marriage relationship and healthier development in your children.

While with your family, give them the gift of a good example. Call to mind some of your favorite people, or perhaps a hero. Did you learn more from what they said or from what they did?

One of the most important discoveries in my life was learning that my children take more from what I do than from what I say. Give your children a good role model worthy of their aspiration.

The next gift you could give is that of acceptance. Give up the notion that acceptance is tied to the idea of approval. Replace it instead with the belief that we are each created with unique qualities and that change in someone often happens when they discover they're accepted for who they are.

Psychologist Dan Sugarman echoes what many of us have discovered over the years, "... You only see in others what you expect to see."

Whether our hurried lives take us from the family room to the classroom or to the war room, the people around us respond best when treated as significant and important. In so doing, you have bestowed the special gift of self-esteem.

How about the gift of fun? We know the old adage that humor is the best medicine. Too often, we feel the only remedy for the blues is to make those around us feel miserable.

The priceless gift of a smile or the warm laughter of someone who cares goes a long way to lifting the spirits of those around you and even helps to cure what's ailing you.

Encourage family unity through activities and enjoyable hobbies in which every family member can participate. Haul out the family photo album for review. Reminisce about family outings and warm memories. Worship together as a family. The bonds of love are strengthened by a mutual faith in God.

The family is our greatest asset. When we make the effort to guard and nurture it, the rewards last a lifetime.

A father who lived long ago struggled with some of these same issues and wrote in retrospect, "Unless the Lord builds the house, its builders labor in vain ..." (Psalms 127:1 NIV).

FORT BENNING'S DIAMOND JUBILEE

1918 - 1993

History of Fort Benning

Fort Benning celebrated its 75th Anniversary last year, and The Bayonet published a special edition to coincide with the celebration. Soon after the special edition of the paper was published, we began looking at the information about Fort Benning that we had collected and decided that it was simply too good to leave it just in newspaper form.

We knew the book would be interesting and informative. The next step was to make it as attractive as possible. An experienced layout and design firm was hired, and they have done an absolutely superb job. You will enjoy thumbing through its pages for years to come. You will also be proud to put in a prominent place at home for friends to enjoy, or at work for your customers to see. And, if you're looking for gift for a retiree or a friend who may have served at Fort Benning and is no longer here, there's no better way to remind them of your friendship through the years.

The hardcover book has 168-pages and is filled with more than 200 photos. The book includes detailed timelines of significant events that have shaped Fort Benning, an overview of the post's involvement in World War II, Korea, Viet Nam, and Desert Shield/Storm, detailed information on the current major units, and a variety of stories and information that round out the post's colorful history.

It is a 'must have' for anyone who is part of Fort Benning's colorful history. It's a book that will be a lasting memento of the winner of the 1994 Commander In Chief's Award signifying it as. . .

Thomas has emotional 'Reunion' in drama

By Jay Bobbin
Tribune Media Services

Comedy was her original TV mainstay, but drama has been much more prominent in Marlo Thomas' career for some time now.

That course continues Sunday, as the actress serves as both star and co-executive producer of the emotional new CBS film "Reunion," directed by Lee Grant (who previously guided Thomas to an Emmy win in "Nobody's Child").

Based on the Linda Gray Sexton novel "Points of Light," the script by Ronald Bass ("Rain Man") and playwright John Pielmeier ("Agnes of God") centers on a New England painter and family woman whose happy and fulfilling lifestyle is thrown into upheaval by the unexpected death of someone very close to her.

The tragedy challenges her entire belief system and propels her into a major crisis of faith, with her husband (played by Peter Strauss) and others around her eventually fearing that she may not be able to cope with the deep depression in which she finds herself.

Indeed, she ultimately is confronted with a very clear choice of whether or not to move forward with her suddenly stagnated life; filmed in Montreal, the tale also features Frances Sternhagen ("The Road Home," "Cheers") as Thomas' mother-in-law.

"We are a wonderful team, I must say," Thomas said about reuniting professionally with Grant, who also directed Ann-Margret in "Following Her Heart," the recent NBC movie. "I love working with her, because she guides you beautifully without pushing you or hurting your own impulses in any way. That's why all the performances in 'Reunion' are wonderful, I think, even the children. I don't think anyone could have given us that but Lee."

What: "Reunion"
When: Sunday on CBS

Thomas is cautious about discussing who dies in the piece, thereby precipitating her own character's trauma.

"You want people to experience the picture, and I think what makes the film exciting and scary is the randomness," she said. "There's no reason for anybody to die in this movie. When I read the book, I was very much enjoying it ... and all of a sudden, this thing happened and ripped this family apart. You don't expect it, and that's the way life is. I hate that people will go into this knowing that someone dies, because then, you don't have the experience that I had and this family had. Out of nowhere, this happens.

"We make assumptions about life," Thomas continued, "that it will go day by day, and what we have today, we'll pretty much have tomorrow. You don't live with doom in your mind, and we assume that we will live longer than our parents and — most likely — that we will not live longer than our children. Those are just basic things."

Zoo Atlanta

to feature Santa Claus but where's Rudolph?

Atlanta Zoo

ATLANTA — Zoo Atlanta will be one of Santa's many stops Dec. 16 from 6 to 8 p.m.

Children can make a list of gifts, but parents need to call for reservations for this two-hour program designed for children ages 3 to 6.

"There are no reindeer at Zoo Atlanta," said Angela Tolbert, education coordinator. "But, there is Santa."

Children will hear one of Santa's elves telling stories, meet and touch various small animals, make tree ornaments to take home, have pictures taken with Santa and the animals, and enjoy cookies and milk for a snack.

The cost is $7.50 per person for zoo members and $10 per person for non-members. For more information or reservations, call (404) 624-5822.

Zoo Atlanta is located in Grant Park at 800 Cherokee Ave. S.E., Atlanta.

The zoo is open weekdays from 10 a.m. to 5:30 p.m. and weekends 10 a.m. to 6:30 p.m. Admission booths close one hour before zoo grounds.

By Richard Brill

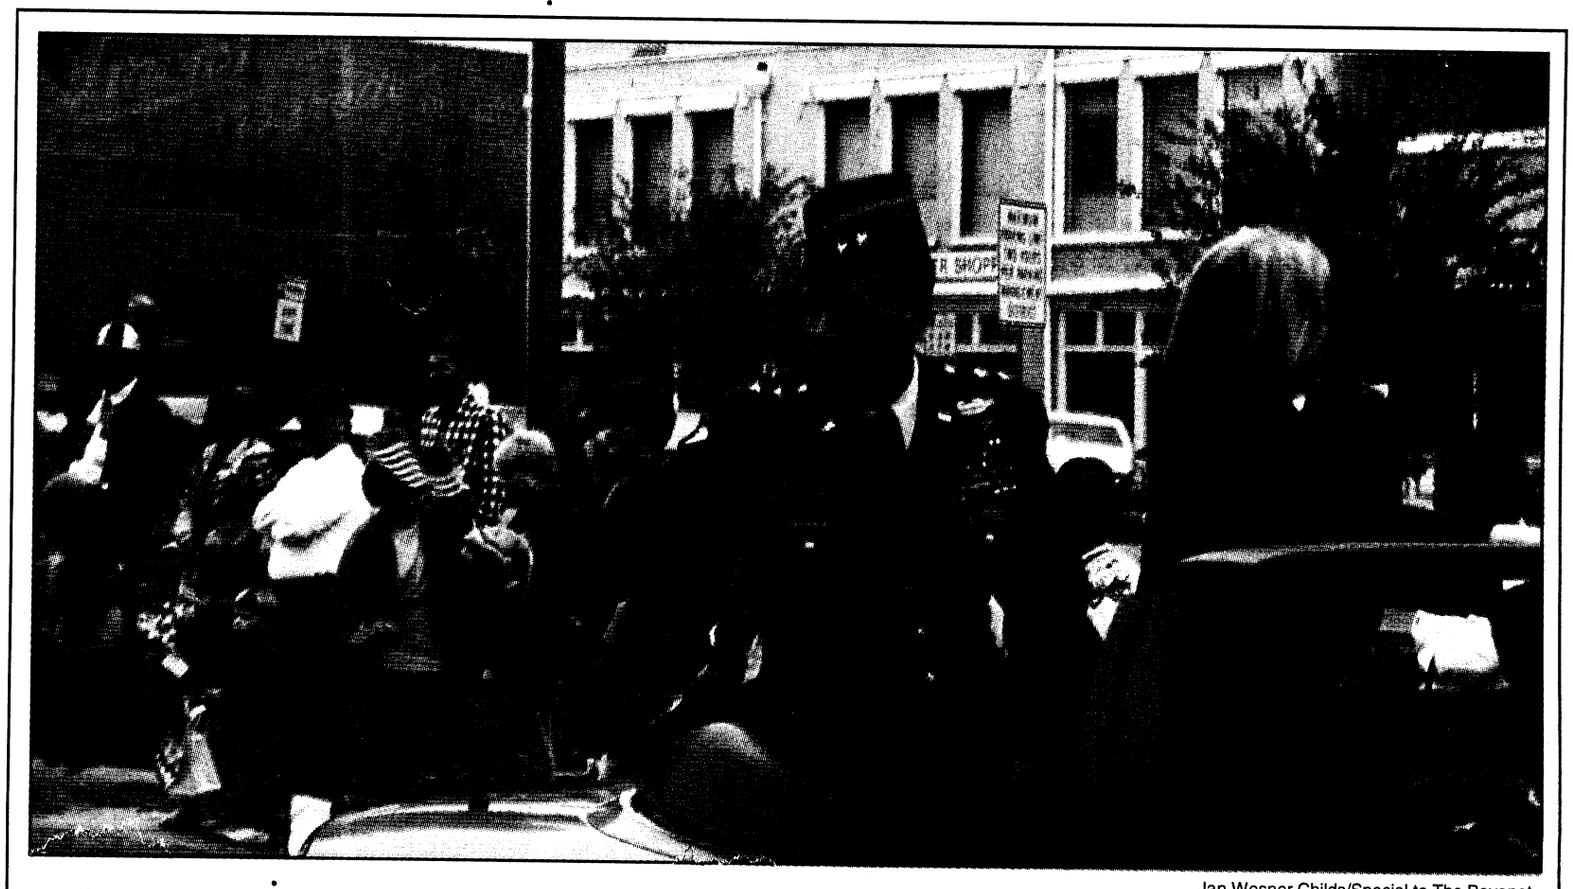
Joe R. Reeder is the principal assistant to the secretary of the Army.

Undersecretary of the Army Joe R. Reeder visited post Dec. 9 to visit with post soldiers and deliver the keynote address at a Ranger School graduation on Malvesti Field.

Reeder, a graduate of the U.S. Military Academy at West Point, N.Y., and the Airborne and Ranger schools, told the newly christened rangers that they had just undergone the toughest training they will probably encounter in their lives.



"Having been through what you have just done, I know what it takes, both mentally and physically, but it doesn't stop here," he said. "The road to success is always a challenge."

As undersecretary, Reeder is the principal assistant to the secretary of the Army and has responsibility for long-range planning and materiel requirements and military support to local, state and federal agencies related to civilian law enforcement, civil disturbance, disaster relief and emergency planning.

Reeder said he believed the recent decision to drop the desert phase of ranger training would not deter from the effectiveness of ranger units.

"The desert phase was not part of ranger training when I went through," he said. "I can assure you that what is left of ranger school is adequately grueling."

Reeder also said that as the home of the infantry, Fort Benning will always play an integral role in the future of the Army.

Rangers' desert phase to end

USAIC Public Affairs Office

The Department of Army has directed that the desert phase of Ranger School be discontinued during fiscal 1995, as a result of the declining defense budget.

The 7th Ranger Training Battalion, Ranger Training Brigade, U.S. Army Infantry School, has conducted the desert phase of Ranger School at Camp McGregor, Fort Bliss, Texas, since 1991. From 1986 to 1991, the training was conducted at Dugway Proving Ground, Utah, but was moved to Fort Bliss to reduce operating costs, increase training support and avoid Utah's extreme winter weather conditions.

The desert phase of the ranger training program included a parachute assault conducted with full combat equipment and concentrated on desert survival and operational considerations. It also focused on helping ranger students from squad- to platoon-level combat operations.

The ranger course will be reduced from 68 to 61 days. Course content will have comparable training objectives in the remaining three phases of training at Fort Benning, Dahlonega, Ga., and Eglin Air Force Base, Fla., according to ranger officials.

Current planning anticipates more than 50 soldiers will be reassigned to the three phases of ranger training. These assignments will maximize the experience and continuity of training established during the desert phase. Other soldiers will be reassigned based on the needs of the Army.

Col. Galen Jackman, Ranger Training Brigade commander, said he anticipates a smooth and effective transition from a four-phase to a three-phase program of instruction.

The experience and resources gained in the desert phase will be transferred to the three remaining phases of the ranger course essentially training the same course content in three locations vs. the previous four locations, he said.

Emphasis on holiday safety

Officials warn drinking, driving can be deadly mix

By Richard Brill
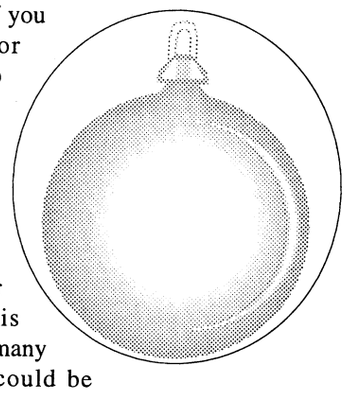
Special to The Bayonet©

The winter holiday season can be a time of joy, but it can also be a time of danger, especially when driving, according to Regis Beighley, post safety officer.

Many people make long trips by automobile in a season that has the increased perils of higher incidences of driving under the influence and higher incidences of traffic accidents because of heavy traffic and bad weather conditions.

Beighley offers the following driving tips to keep the holiday season safe:

• Make sure your tires are properly inflated. Proper tire pressure is essential to maintaining traction, especially on wet or icy winter roads.



• Leave early so that you have plenty of time to arrive at your destination without rushing.

• To prevent drowsiness when driving, get ample sleep before you leave, avoid heavy meals, which cause sleepiness, and keep fresh air circulating through the car by keeping a window cracked.

If you are too tired, stop for coffee, tea or cola and stretch your muscles or take a small catnap to refresh yourself.

Remember that mental and physical activity can help prevent sleep.

• Signal your intentions to other drivers in plenty of time. If you are slowing or stopping, pump your brakes as a warning signal and use your turn signals in plenty of time before you turn.

• Wear your seat belt. It is estimated that as many as 15,000 lives could be saved each year if all occupants of automobiles wore their safety belts.

• Avoid excessive speed when taking a curve. Remember that holiday driving conditions are often different than normal. Driving in snow is not the same as driving in rain.

• Maintain the proper following distance with the car ahead of you by keeping one car length for every 10 mph of speed on dry pavement and three car lengths for every 10 mph in bad conditions.

"Crashing into a car from behind at 60 mph is the same as driving your car off of a 10-story building and crashing into the pavement below," Beighley said.

Beighley said surprise caused by unusual or unexpected conditions results in more accidents than anything else.

"Be constantly alert to everything that is going on," he said. "Be always alert for unusual conditions of weather, light, road and traffic so that you won't be caught by surprise."

Safety Cab ready to take you home

By Richard Brill
Special to The Bayonet©

For the 12th year in a row, Safety Cab will give a free ride home to persons who have had too much to drink.

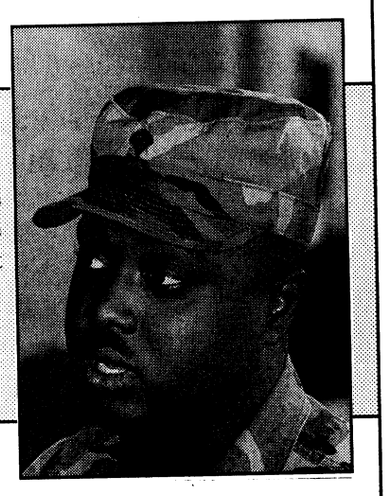
Through Jan. 1, call 323-0110 for a free, safe ride home between 7 p.m. and 3 a.m. in Columbus, Phenix City or Fort Benning.

Appointing a designated driver is another good way to ensure a safe ride back home, said Regis Beighley, post safety manager. Some bars and restaurants will offer free nonalcoholic beverages to designated drivers, he said.

In 1993, Safety Cab received 1,217 calls, 96 of which were to addresses at Fort Benning, Beighley said. There were also 13 driving under the influence arrests on post in 1993, he said.

Beighley warned drivers to protect themselves by being especially alert to signs from other drivers that may indicate that the driver is under the influence.

These include such signs as driving too fast, varying speed from fast to slow excessively, slow driving in the left lane, running over the curb, weaving in and out of lanes, straddling lanes, no signal or wrong signal, driver slumping in the seat and objects being thrown from the car.



"Give yourself extra room or stay away from cars that are being driven in such a manner," Beighley said.

Christmas dreams vs. realities

By Mary Ann Cary
The Wheel, Fort Eustis, Va.

commentary

Assuming you haven't been in a coma or taken up in a spaceship by extraterrestrials lately, you're painfully aware that Christmas is coming.

Christmas, with all its hype and ballyhoo, is all around us, whether we want it or not. Every store and mall is decked out with plastic greenery and little white lights. Every sound system plays the same assortment of carols. The newspaper spews advertising inserts promoting toys, appliances, jewelry and whatever else retailers hope will get us to open our wallets. There's more than enough activity, noise and visual stimulation to wear out the most stalwart Christmas fan by Dec. 25.

If all of this isn't enough, those of us who celebrate Christmas are being encouraged to create the perfect family holiday. By definition, each Christmas is supposed to be bigger and better than the one before it. Magazines invite us over and over to create "the best Christmas ever."

And, what is the best Christmas ever? For that matter, what's the best Christmas? Well, if one believes the media, it consists of having a designer Christmas tree, a gourmet meal served on heirloom china, children dressed in velvet and lace, thousands of spouses preferring diamonds and specialty treats that look too good to eat.

Reality check! How many of us can afford all this? How many of us really want it, anyway? The designer Christmas tree looks great on the printed page. But there's no room on it for the pipe cleaner reindeers made in preschool, the paper angels made at scouts or the first ornaments bought early in a marriage.

How many of us can cook a gourmet feast? How many members of our families would eat one? How can children try out their new in-line skates when they're dressed up like heirs to the throne? (It also pays to remember that those children, posed so prim and proper, were paid to do it. For many parents, no amount of coaxing is going to get a child, whose idea of fashion is a Chicago Bulls' sweatshirt, into a velvet jacket.)

What's a family to do about Christmas? How do we sort out the really important features of Christmas from all the hype? Let's take the time to be thoughtful and decisive about Christmas.

First, decide why Christmas is important to your family. Is Christmas primarily a religious holiday, a time for family closeness, a time to celebrate with food and fun, or a time to reward each other with gifts? The answers will be as varied as there are types and varieties of families. Whatever the answer is for your family, it will help give you a focus for your Christmas celebration.

Second, make a budget that includes gifts, packages, food, beverages, cards postage and entertainment. Be realistic. Even Santa Claus can get the January blues if there are too many bills. Gently let children know the parameters for their Christmas wish lists.

Third, plan some holiday fun. Sometimes you have to go out and seek the holiday spirit instead of waiting for it to knock on your door. Look around for choral presentations, church activities, craft shows, community holiday events, plays, ballets, anything that will help catch the spirit of the season.

Share the responsibility for getting tickets, reserving seats, etc. Consider some of the free activities that are available, too. Drive around and look at other people's decorations.

Fourth, as you plan your Christmas, remember to keep track of your children's excitement levels. Holiday pressures get to children, too. Consider allowing children to open one present on Christmas Eve to lessen the tension. Take a break from Christmas. After the presents are opened, take a family walk. Play a game together.

Fifth, take it easy. Don't overindulge in alcohol. It's hard to enjoy the holiday with a hangover. If you're concerned about your weight, let your menu reflect that concern. Don't go overboard with treats and then berate yourself later. For many people, Christmas is a time of love, warmth and caring. Be kind to yourself, too.

Christmas comes but once a year. By taking charge of the holiday season and deciding what we, as parents, want for ourselves and our families, Christmas can be an incredibly joyful and fulfilling time. And after the holidays are spent, the ornaments packed away, and the children are back in school, we can start looking forward to Christmas 1995.

dial 545-boss

Dial 545-BOSS is the commander's action line for soldiers, family members and civilians to call when they have problems or complaints that can't be resolved elsewhere. While it is not a substitute for the chain of command or for agencies established to provide assistance, the line offers another means of communication between Fort Benning's community and commanders.

The Bayonet features some of the calls that may benefit other members of the Fort Benning community.

☎ Call: I am concerned about the post police call detail on Custer Road.

When I came through there, the vehicle was stopped at the top of the hill, no lights blinking and the soldiers had traffic blocked up.

When I stopped to inquire as to their procedures, I was told that it was not my concern.

Response from Sgt. Maj. Harvey L. Milner, garrison sergeant major:

There have been numerous complaints on unsafe practices of police call vehicles stopping in high-traffic areas on and around Fort Benning.

Major subordinate commands must ensure their vehicles are properly equipped with the necessary safety equipment, such as road guard vests, signs, lights and reflective materials.

In addition, commanders need to check their vehicles and brief all drivers and detailed personnel to exercise caution when conducting police call. Drivers must obey the rules of the road and are responsible, by regulation, for the safe operation of their vehicles.

I have asked the Military Police Activity to spot check police call vehicles for safety violations, and if necessary, make corrections or citings on the spot. Together we can make "safety first."

☎ Call: I am concerned about the cost of items in the dining facility.

I would like to know why only the military and civilians assigned to U.S. Army Medical Department Activity are allowed to dine in the MEDDAC dining facility.

Nutrition Care Division response:

The prices of items are set by the Department of Defense. Surcharge prices are 380 percent of food cost. There is an ongoing study to evaluate surcharge and possibly lower it.

The facility has to limit the number of servings prepared and has received numerous complaints from its staff in reference to long lines and running out of food.

The Martin Army Community Hospital dining facility closed its doors to everyone except MEDDAC and Dental Activities personnel and patients effective Nov. 10. This was done for the following reasons:

• Nutrition Care Division's table of distribution and allowances is based on its workload of feeding the MEDDAC and DENTAC staff and inpatients

• NCD's nonfood supply budget is based on this workload

• NCD's projected census for food preparation should be based on this census

This dining facility was continuously feeding more and more post soldiers. Therefore, the staffing was no longer accurate for its workload, and many of its supply dollars were being used to support non-MEDDAC personnel.

However, the most difficult situation was in determining the number of rations to prepare each day. Some days, the facility served more than 1,000 meals a day and then its census would drop drastically the next day. The facility was never informed of field training exercises, dining facility closures or other situations that would greatly affect its headcount. The facility was always in the situation of either running out of food or having a large number of leftovers.

Additionally, MEDDAC and DENTAC personnel complained often of long lines and the lack of food. After surveying the dining facility patrons, the facility determined that on its busy days more than 50 percent of its customers were post soldiers. Consequently, it was determined that it was time to restrict entrance to the facility to MEDDAC and DENTAC personnel and patients.

President sends holiday greetings

Each year during the holiday season, Americans celebrate the promise of renewal and the possibilities of peace. The dedicated efforts of our armed forces enable us to enjoy these rich blessings, and I am honored to salute all those who wear our country's uniform.

The hundreds of thousands of American soldiers, sailors, airmen, Marines and Coast Guardsmen who are stationed around the world are a beacon of hope to those striving to overcome hardship and oppression. Your actions have helped ease the suffering of millions both at home and abroad — from Rwanda to Bosnia to Haiti.

As we celebrate this holy time of year, I offer special thanks to those of you who cannot be with your loved ones. Your friends, families and fellow Americans are proud of your devotion to your country and to the defense of liberty.

I extend my deepest gratitude to the thousands of American service members who work to preserve our country's security while keeping the peace around the world. You are truly a testament to America's greatness.

Hillary and I wish you all the best for the coming year.

Battle Park offering housing

2- and 3-bedroom units available

By Ruth J. Spaller
Bayonet staff writer

Soldiers looking for a place to live have an option right here on post.

Battle Park Homes, a civilian-owned, government-regulated apartment complex built on land leased from Fort Benning, currently has 31 vacancies and about 20 more will be coming available within the next few weeks, according to manager Lynn Sample.

The complex, located off Arrowhead Road at the corner of Benning and Custer roads, houses 200 sets of quarters, with two- and three-bedroom units that rent for $295 and $318 a month.

Residents pay their own gas and electric bills, but water and pest control are included in the rent.

Battle Park is "basically an extension of family housing," Sample said. In the past, when quarters were filled, soldiers in the rank of private to specialist were referred to Battle Park.

Normally there is a three- to six-month waiting period for housing at Battle Park. But because of a slowdown in the number of soldiers arriving at Fort Benning and the opening of some newly renovated quarters on post, this is the first time there has not been a waiting list, Sample said.

Because of the openings available, some of the policies regulating occupancy have been altered.

Battle Park is now open to:

- Soldiers in all ranks with families, not just privates through specialists
- Geographical bachelors in the rank of sergeant first class and above
- Single soldiers in the rank of private first class through staff sergeant with statements of nonavailability for rooms in barracks.

"Soldiers need to know when they rent here, that if they have school-age children, they go to post schools," Sample said.

Off post, children must attend school in the county where they live.

"Also, we allow pets, where many apartment complexes do not," he said.

Like soldiers who rent off post, Battle Park residents are paid Basic Allowance for Quarters and Variable Housing Allowance, Sample said.

For more information, call the Community Housing Referral Office at 545-6610 or Battle Park Homes at 689-1282.

Disabled vets' benefits to increase

Department of Veterans Affairs

The Department of Veterans Affairs has announced that service disabled veterans now will receive a 2.8 percent increase in their compensation payments.

The cost-of-living allowance was included in legislation recently signed by President Bill Clinton. Veterans will begin receiving the higher payments in their January checks.

More than 2.2 million veterans are affected by the increase. Their monthly compensation payments will now range from $89 for a single veteran with a 10-percent disability rating to $1,823 for a single veteran with a 100-percent disability rating.

Also affected are almost 340,000 survivors of veterans or service members who died from service-connected causes.

Veterans whose service-connected disabilities are rated 30 percent or higher may receive additional allowances for dependents.

Museum to exhibit WW II-vintage buildings

1940s-era 'company street' to be on display

By Joe G. Saffron
USAIC Public Affairs Office

A black pot-bellied stove, perfectly centered in the oversized rectangular room, equally distributes the heat. Alongside the stove is a bucket brimming with coal and a shovel. On the stovetop, a coffeepot brews a morning batch of joe that, along with the heat, will help ward off the chilly draft that creeps through the tiny cracks in the bare wooden walls and floor.

The room would be spacious if not occupied by a dozen steel cots, perfectly arranged with their thin cotton mattresses and accompanying green wooden footlockers. The toes of pairs of brown boots are tucked under the cots' edge, forming a single rank of their own. Numerous Betty Grable posters hang on as many wall lockers.

This scene of a 1940s-era barracks room will be depicted in a future World War II exhibit at the National Infantry Museum. Seven World War II-vintage buildings from Sand Hill and Harmony Church are being salvaged and moved to a site behind the museum near the golf course, where they will be permanently arranged to replicate a "company street." A "company street" is the predecessor of the commonly known "company area" of today.

Karen S. Morarie

A World War II barracks awaits movement to the National Infantry Museum, where it will become part of a "company street" exhibit.

A mess hall, supply room, chapel, two barracks, Gen. George S. Patton's former 2nd Armored Division headquarters, Patton's two-room "afternoon sleeping quarters," and an orderly room comprise the seven wooden structures that will form the company street. Museum director Dick Grube said the exhibit will provide a "new dimension to the museum" and is part of the museum's effort to observe the 50th anniversary of World War II.

Grube said that the most critical step in creating the exhibit was to obtain funding to physically move the buildings. Appropriated funds were earmarked to task the Directorate of Public Works with relocating the structures. Three of the seven buildings have already been moved to the new site.

Once the relocation is complete, additional funds will have to be allocated to restore and refurbish the buildings to World War II appearance, which means bare wood interiors, metal cots and cotton mattresses in the barracks, wooden office furniture, and cast-iron field ranges in the mess hall.

Grube said that while the exhibit's actual opening date may be years in the future because of anticipated budget constraints and the painstaking restoration process, it will offer a very accurate portrayal of what life in an Army unit was like 50 years ago.

The National Infantry Museum relies in part on contributions and donations from numerous benefactors. One of the museum's greatest challenges concerning the company street exhibit is obtaining military artifacts from the 1940s.

To donate an artifact or to make any kind of contribution to the museum, contact Grube at 545-2958.

Roof problem to move Loyd classes to hill

School to be taught in Sand Hill due to water leaks in ceiling

USAIC Public Affairs Office

When students assigned to Loyd School return to class Jan. 5, after the Christmas break, they will find themselves in a new environment.

Because of a leaking roof that needs to be replaced, the students will attend school in a "Starship," on Sand Hill where thousands of civilians are turned into soldiers each year.

Post and school officials will spend the Christmas break moving classroom furniture and equipment from Loyd School to Kinsman Barracks, configuring classrooms and offices and turning an athletic field into a playground.

School officials said the move is being made because of worsening conditions with the roof that are allowing water into the classrooms each time it rains.

They noted that some of the classrooms were getting so damp that mold was actually growing in some of the damper locations.

Hospital officials who examined the school said the mold did not pose a health threat; but, if left unchecked, it could possibly cause irritation to those exposed to it over a period of time.

A private industrial health inspector who studied the mold said it needed to be cleaned up so as not to pose a health threat.

Officials noted this would be nearly impossible to do until the roof was repaired; and, since repairing the roof and drying out affected classrooms would prove disruptive to a good learning environment, the decision to move the students was made by school and post officials.

Classes will not resume until Jan. 5 to give teachers time to get their rooms in order prior to the return of the students. School officials said this will not result in lengthening the school year.

Can't make it home for holidays? You can with a VTC

By Richard Brill
Special to The Bayonet©

Fort Benning military personnel, their family members and Department of Defense civilians can schedule a holiday video teleconference with their faraway family members

If you can't make it home for the holidays, why not sign up for a free, 30-minute telephone call in which you can not only hear but see whomever you are calling?

For the fifth year in a row, Fort Benning military personnel, their family members and Department of Defense civilians are being offered the opportunity to schedule a holiday video teleconference with their faraway family members.

A video teleconference is a live video conversation from one video teleconference center to another. The Fort Benning VTC is located in Infantry Hall, Room 207, and can be reached at 545-5552.

Conferences can be scheduled between 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. through Dec. 28 except for Dec. 23 and weekends.

Hugh Cooper, post VTC manager, said this is an excellent opportunity for those who cannot make it home for the holidays to see and hear their friends and family face to face and encouraged those who wish to sign up to do so as soon as possible since reservations are limited.

During the conference, it is possible to display artwork or a drawing that one family member might want to show another, or even play a videotape, Cooper said.

If you plan to schedule a video teleconference, it is up to you to explain to whomever you will be calling where the nearest VTC is and what time they need to be there.

So far, only four major communities of interest are participating in the VTC through Dec. 30 — Air Force Materiel Command, Army Materiel Command, Forces Command and Headquarters, Department of the Army (which includes Training and Doctrine Command).

Here are some other guidelines to keep in mind when scheduling a video teleconference.

• You must be present 15 minutes prior to the starting time of the conference. Holiday teleconferences can be pre-empted by mission-essential calls. You will be notified in the event of any schedule changes.

• The conference can be taped if you provide a videotape.

• The VTC must be informed of a cancellation at least 24 hours in advance.

• All calls are limited to 30 minutes.

The locations of installations with VTC facilities are as follows:

Alabama: Fort McClellan, Fort Rucker, Gunter Air Force Base and Redstone Arsenal

Sledgehammer soldiers get zero DUIs

By Richard Brill
Special to The Bayonet©

Two Kelley Hill units have the distinction of having no incidences of driving under the influence in more than a year.

Both Company A, 1st Battalion, 18th Infantry Regiment, and Company A, 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor Regiment, have had no soldiers arrested for DUIs or incidents of soldiers testing positive on a urinalysis test in more than one year.

"We've done something that a lot of Army units have never done," said Capt. Denton Knapp, commander of Company A, 1st Battalion, 18th Infantry Regiment. "It's something I've never seen before."

Safety briefings and a supportive chain of command are responsible for the unit's good record, Knapp added.

"Our battalion commander (Col. Ted Cook) has a personal policy where he has told any unit soldier to call him at home before he gets behind the wheel to drive if he's been drinking and can't find another ride," Knapp said. "Every commander and noncommissioned officer down the chain of command has adopted the colonel's policy as their own."

Knapp's soldiers are required to carry cards with the phone numbers of the members of their chains of command. If soldiers have had too much too drink and don't have the money for cab fare, they have a statement promising the cab driver will be paid by the staff duty personnel. Money for these fares has been donated by the Association of the United States Army.

Staff Sgt. Gary Ramsey, noncommissioned officer in charge of the company's drug and alcohol program, said the soldiers are exceptionally well disciplined.

"They encourage each other not to drink and drive and they fully understand the seriousness of the consequences of drinking and driving. They are well motivated soldiers with a great sense of self-pride and unit pride," he said.

"Education is the key," he added. "Our NCOs constantly enforce the standard. Our soldiers know the laws and the consequences and they know what will happen if they get caught."

First Sgt. Manuel Reyes of Company A, 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor Regiment, said weekly safety briefings yielded good results.

"I tell my soldiers that I don't need replacements if they get killed or kicked out of the Army because of a DUI. I need them, because they know their jobs and what's going on in the unit and they would be hard to replace," he said.

"The time to decide what to do is before you begin drinking," he added. "I encourage the soldiers to have a plan, such as a designated driver; and, if all else fails, they can feel free to call the members of their chains of command."

Reyes said he is glad to see soldiers who are well disciplined and responsible when they drink.

"In a stressful job such as this, some soldiers turn to alcohol to relieve their problems," Reyes said. "The soldiers of this unit drink responsibly, and they know that driving under the influence not only affects themselves but has the potential of affecting others as well. It's not just for their safety, but for the safety of others that it is important not to drink and drive."

Former heavyweight champ shares skills, knowledge with young boxers

Floyd Patterson talks to Army athletes about what it takes to be a champion

By Terry K. Ray
Special to The Bayonet©

Terry K. Ray/Special to The Bayonet
Former heavyweight champion Floyd Patterson instructs Yamar Resto and Rick Thompson at the Kelley Hill Fitness Center.

In 1956, at the tender age of 21, Floyd Patterson became the youngest heavyweight boxing champion of the world when he knocked out light heavyweight champion Archie Moore at Madison Square Garden in New York City.

Four years later on June 20, 1960, Patterson made history. He reclaimed the title to become the first man to regain the heavyweight title by knocking out Ingemar Johansson who one year earlier had taken the belt away from him in a bout at Yankee Stadium.

"I still keep in touch with him," Patterson said. "He lives in Florida. I call him or go see him every time I'm down there."

Patterson, 59, demonstrated some of the skills and parted with some of the knowledge that kept him at the top of his profession for so long Dec. 6 at the Kelley Hill Fitness Center on Fort Benning while on a promotional tour for the 1995 Army Boxing Training Camp at Fort Huachuca, Ariz.

Joining forces with the Army is Patterson's employer, imported Canadian Mist whisky, which for the fourth consecutive year will be sponsoring the Army training camp.

"I'm very grateful to the Canadian Mist people for sponsoring this program and making a world of difference for these athletes," Patterson said.

For the young fighters, Patterson's visit gave them some insight into what it takes to become a champion.

"From the moment that I heard he would be coming, I started to get excited," Rick Thompson of Company B, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, said. "This was a chance to get in the ring with the best and take pointers from one of the all-time greats. It's not every day that you get a chance to step into the ring with a two-time world champion."

For Patterson, the one thing he hopes that these young soldier-boxers will take with them from this visit is the power of determination.

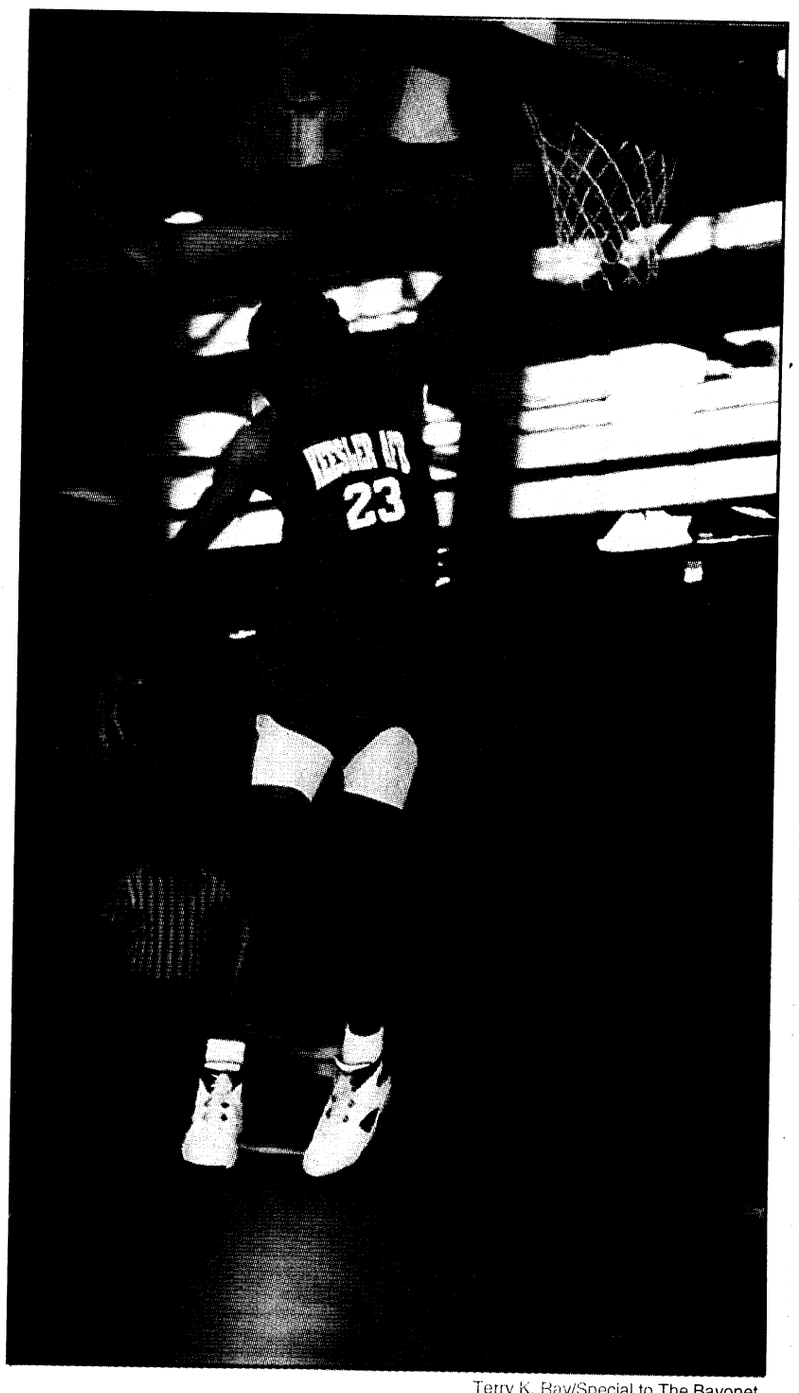
"Determination is a powerful weapon," Patterson said. "It makes dreams come true in all facets of life. That's mainly what I teach in my gymnasium. By these soldiers training and fighting, they're getting their bodies adjusted to being unlike any other. Let me give you an example. When I get up in the morning and go out and run or go to the gym, I get a high all day. It's almost like an upper, so when they experience that, they're not going to abuse their bodies with drugs and things like that."

Fort Benning's boxing coach Charles Kirkland, who retired from the Army last year and still coaches the team on a volunteer basis, hopes that the visit by Patterson will not only inspire his boxers to first make the All-Army Boxing Team and then the U.S. Olympic Boxing Team, but also make the unit commanders aware of the need for support for their boxers.

"I've got three Olympic hopefuls here," Kirkland said. "By the time the Olympic games roll around, I hope to have six."

Kirkland's aspiring boxers — Pfc. Yamar Resto of Battery B, 4th Battalion, 41st Field Artillery Regiment, 3rd Brigade, 24th Infantry Division; Spc. Alex Colon of 1st Bn., 18th Inf. Regt., 3rd Bde., 24th Inf. Div.; and Spc. Rene Gomez of the 104th Transportation Company — have submitted their paperwork to attend the Army Boxing Training Camp at Fort Huachuca in January and are awaiting a reply from the Department of the Army.

Kirkland, in his boxing career, fought the likes of Evander Holyfield, Leon Spinks and Virgil Hill as amateurs (all have been or are world champions). He said he hopes his fighters learn "desire, conditioning and surviving in the ring," from his past experiences.



Colon, a 21-year-old native of Puerto Rico said that by training with Kirkland, "I've learned a lot, and what I learned before I've learned better." Before joining the Army, Colon had won 42 of his 53 fights while boxing in California.

"He's got all the experience," Resto said. "He has told us about the mistakes that he's made and told us not to make them, so when we come into the ring, we don't make the same mistakes that he has already made."

Colon and Gomez believe the support they receive from their unit will help to make them better boxers. Gomez, a native of San Antonio, Texas, said he is thankful for the support he receives from his unit. Gomez missed the Army Boxing Training Camp last year when he was deployed with his unit in Somalia.

"I have support from my company and they let me come work out," Gomez said. "I appreciate that because I know other soldiers don't get that same type of support."

Kirkland concurs with Gomez's statement and said he hopes that with the visit from Patterson, more support will come his way for his boxers and the Fort Benning boxing program.

Tyndall AFB Tigers take military B-ball tourney

By Terry K. Ray
Special to The Bayonet©

The 1994 Southeast Military Association basketball Christmas tournament, which was Dec. 9 through Sunday at Briant Wells Field House, went to the Tyndall Air Force Base, Fla., Tigers.

The Tigers swept through the tournament undefeated at 4-0 when they downed the Keesler Air Force Base, Miss., Tarpons (3-1) 83-71.

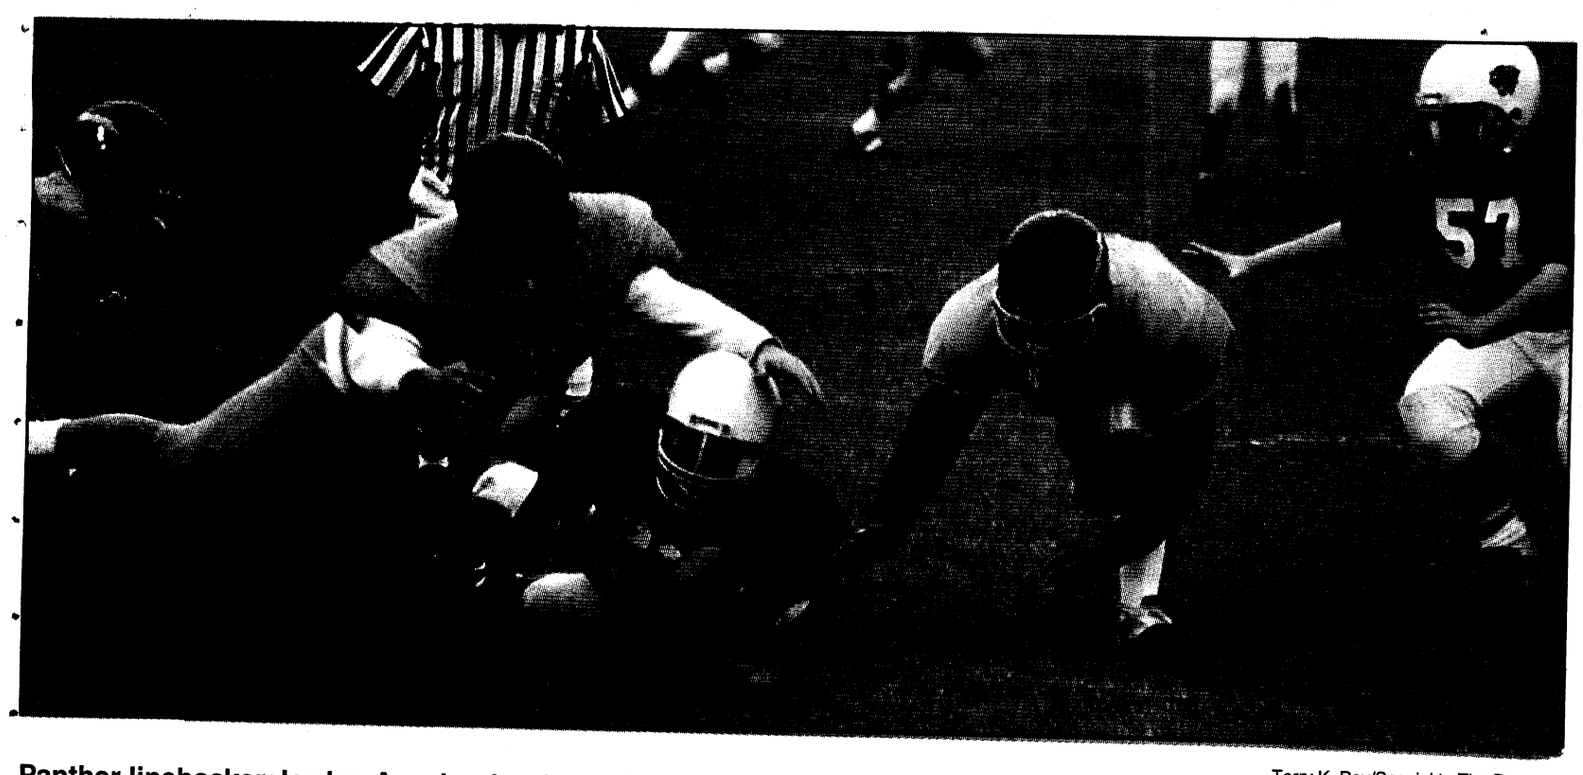
The Tigers, led by forward Charles Caldwell's 24 points, built a 20-point lead late in the first half, then simply wore out the Tarpons in the second half.

"The key to the game for us was depth," head coach William Sharpe said. "Any time one of our guys got tired, I was able to go to the bench and pull up a fresh body. We play a hard scrapping defense, the most points scored on us in the tournament was 72 by Fort Benning."

Getting balanced scoring from his front line players helped too. Michael Quinn had 10 points, Frank Parker kicked in 15 and Vernon Bryant added 8 for good measure.

The Tarpons, led by Charles Robinson's (he is the younger brother of San Antonio Spurs center David "the Admiral" Robinson ) 21 points could not overcome the lack of height and weight against the taller and stronger Tigers.

"We lost two of our inside guys to injuries," J.L. Bryant said. "Our tallest guy on the court was Robinson at 6 foot 6 inches forward. We just couldn't stay with their front line of big men."



In the consolation game, the Warriors of Maxwell Air Force Base, Ala., beat the Fort Benning consolidated team, Rebels 84-80.

The Warriors were led by the hot shooting of Chris Conley, who ripped the nets for 25 points. Backing up Conley were Joe McDowell with 21 and Joe Harrish with 15.

The Rebels were led by the 25 points of Leonard Haith, Kenny Mack's 21 and Rodney Mitchell's 10 points.

Down 42-39 at the break, the Rebels were able to stay close until the Warriors built a 12-point lead late in the game.

Haith worked the outside for two three-pointers and Mitchell laid in a couple of baskets underneath to cut the lead down to four points before the Warriors went to the delay game effectively running out the clock on the Rebels.

Youth football: Panthers drop final game 8-0

By Terry K. Ray
Special to The Bayonet©

The Fort Benning Panthers football team in the 13- to 14-year-old division dropped its final game of the season to the Carver Park Chargers 8-0 at Blue Field Saturday.

The Panthers (5-2) went into the game having beaten the Chargers (6-1) earlier in the season.

"Earlier in the season they caught us on a bad day," Charger head coach Larry Downs said. "Today we played a lot better game despite three first-half turnovers. In the second half, we came out and put a lot of defensive pressure on them and forced them to turn the ball over."

The Panthers were unable to convert the three first-half turnovers by the Chargers into any points. The most crucial came when Panther linebacker David Nurnberg recovered a fumble by Charger punter Yeson Davis at the Charger 25-yard line.

The Panthers moved the ball down to the Charger 12, and with a fresh set of downs it looked as if the Panthers would draw first blood. A second down pass play to Sean Nelson in the end zone drew an offensive pass interference call moving the ball back 15 yards and losing the down. One play later, the half ended with no points on the board by either team.

"That penalty hurt us," Panther coach Tony Coffee said. "If we got into the end zone before the half ended, I truly believe we would have won the game."

In the second half, the Panthers lost starting quarterback Sven Coffee with a broken collarbone on their second possession of the half. From there the Chargers took control of the game.

On the Chargers next possession, quarterback Juan Randall pitched the ball to tailback Tony Moses on sweep play to the left. The Panther defense stuffed the run and Moses using his head and feet reversed the play back to the right and went 49 yards for the only score of the game. The 2-point conversion was also good giving the Chargers an 8-0 advantage late in the third quarter.

The Charger defense stopped the Panthers in the fourth quarter and avenged their only loss of the season.

"When we lost Sven, it seemed like we lost our focus," Coffee said. "The offensive line stopped blocking, and we couldn't move the ball. Our defense kept us in the ball game; and, except for one busted play, we were right there with them."

Keep safety in mind when cooking for holidays

American Forces Information Service

Most of us have fond memories of holiday meals past, with family and friends gathered around a table full of good food. To make sure this year's memories are pleasant, here are some food safety tips from experts at the U.S. Department of Agriculture.

In addition to being safe, these tips to poultry cooks should ensure the turkey is nicely browned and succulent, instead of underdone or overdone.

Wash anything that touches raw poultry with soapy water before it's used again to prevent the spread of any bacteria. This includes hands, utensils and kitchen counters and sink.

If you buy fresh turkey, refrigerate it at 40 degrees Fahrenheit for no more than one to two days before cooking. A frozen bird should stay in the freezer at zero degrees until time to cook it. Cook as soon as it's thawed, officials say.

Thawing a frozen bird in the refrigerator can take from one to five days depending on size. Thawing in cold water can take from four to 12 hours. Microwave oven instruction manuals provide thawing time and power information.

After thawing the bird, remove the neck and giblet package from inside it, and wash the bird inside and out with cold water. Allow the bird to drain well.

Stuff the turkey loosely just before cooking, allowing three quarters of a cup per pound of dressing. Dry ingredients can be prepared ahead, but perishable ones (onions, celery and especially oysters if you use them) should be added only immediately before cooking. Remove stuffing right after cooking or cook stuffing separately in an oven-proof container or in aluminum foil for extra food safety.

The turkey's inside temperature should reach 180 degrees. Directions for cooking times and temperatures are available in basic cookbooks or on the bird's wrapper.

Roasting times vary, depending on size and whether the turkey is stuffed. Stuffed birds take longer to cook. For example, a 16-pound turkey takes 3 1/2 to 4 1/2 hours, unstuffed; 4 1/2 to 5 1/2 hours, stuffed.

Refrigerate leftover turkey within two hours after cooking. The best way to store the turkey is to divide it into small containers. Turkey stored in the refrigerator will keep three or four days, but stuffing will keep for only two days.

The Department of Agriculture has a toll-free, year-round meat and poultry hot line: (800) 535-4555 or (202) 720-3333 in the Washington, D.C., area. The hot line is open Monday through Thursdays from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m.

People with touch-tone phones can access recorded answers to the most commonly asked questions by calling the hot line anytime. The hot line also includes information on what to do following a power outage and updates on bacteria outbreaks.

Ask the judge

Fort Stewart Staff Judge Advocate

Q: My buddy told me that I could get in trouble for dating my 15-year-old girlfriend. Is that true? Besides, she told me she was 18 years old, and I didn't force her to do anything she didn't want to do. Under those circumstances it is legal, right?

A: It depends upon what you mean by "dating."

All soldiers on active duty are subject to the Uniform Code of Military Justice. Committing an act of sexual intercourse with a female who is not your wife and is under the age of 16 is a violation of Article 120 (Carnal Knowledge) of the UCMJ.

Likewise, any other sexual act with a person who is not your spouse and is under the age of 16 may be a violation of Article 134 (indecent acts of liberties with a child) of the UCMJ.

These acts are made criminal because of our society's strong interest in protecting the welfare of our children. Violations of these provisions of the UCMJ carry severe penalties, to include dishonorable discharge and confinement for up to 15 years.

The fact the underage person consented to the sexual act is of no consequence. Similarly, your mistaken belief that the person was 18 years or older is not a defense to this crime. Even if your partner consents and tells you she is 18 years old, you can still be found guilty of these crimes.

Society protects minor children who cannot protect themselves. It is your responsibility as an adult to make sure you know with whom you are having sex and how old he or she is. Otherwise, you may find out more about the military justice system that you ever wanted to know.

These are not just crimes in the military. Most, if not all, states have similar laws regarding sexual acts with minors. However, each state's laws differ with respect to the "age of consent."

For example, under Georgia law a person commits statutory rape (another term for carnal knowledge) when he engages in sexual intercourse with a female who is not his wife and is under the age of 14 years. The punishment for this crime is imprisonment for not less than one nor more than 20 years.

However, despite Georgia law, as an active duty soldier subject to the UCMJ, the age of consent for your partner is 16 years of age or older, no matter where you are located throughout the world.

TOYS

may need a second look

Egleston Children's Hospital

With holiday shopping now in full swing, the child safety experts at Egleston Children's Hospital and the U.S. Consumer Product Safety Commission encourage all parents to take extra time this holiday season to thoroughly examine any gifts purchased for children.

Sadly enough, the CPSC received reports of 37 toy-related deaths between Jan. 1 and Sept. 30 and an estimated 143,000 children under age 15 were treated in U.S. hospital emergency rooms in 1992 for toy-related injuries. Seemingly innocent toys such as tricycles, riding toys, balloons and marbles are responsible for chokings, strangulations and other incidents of injuries each year.

The CPSC and Egleston recommend the following guidelines for parents:

Selection

• Select toys to suit the age, skills, interests and abilities of the individual child. Toys too advanced may pose safety hazards to younger children.

• For infants, toddlers and all children who still mouth objects, avoid toys with small parts that may pose a choking hazard. Also avoid strings or cords that are seven inches or longer as they may cause strangulation.

• For all children under 8 years, avoid toys that have sharp points or edges and electric toys with heating elements.

• Be a label reader. Look for labels that give age recommendations and use that information as a guide.

• If you choose to buy arrows or darts for children over the age of 5 years, make sure they have soft tips, rubber suction cups or other protective tips. Check to be sure tips are secure.

• If you are going to buy a toy gun, be sure the barrel or the entire gun is brightly colored to avoid being mistaken as a real gun.

• Tie plastic wrappings on toys in a knot and dispose of immediately so your child doesn't play with them and accidentally smother himself.

Supervision

• Set "ground rules" for play and supervise young children closely.

• Instruct older children to keep their toys separate from little ones, and, if possible, encourage the child not to play with the toy in front of the smaller sibling. Chemistry and cooking sets, hobby items and games with small parts can be extremely dangerous if used by young children.

• Insist that children wear helmets when using bicycles, skateboards or in-line skates, and keep children who are playing with riding toys away from stairs, hills, traffic and swimming pools.

Maintenance

• Inspect old and new toys regularly for jagged, sharp edges or broken parts that might constitute a choking hazard.

• Avoid hand-me-down toys with small parts for children under 3 years.

Storage

• Teach children to put their toys safely away after playing to prevent trips and falls.

• If containers other than toy chests are used for storage purposes, they should be fitted with spring-loaded support devices if they have a hinged lid to avoid entrapment and suffocation.

To receive a free holiday safety brochure, send a self-addressed envelope to Egleston Children's Hospital at Emory University, Child Safety Department, 1405 Clifton Road, NE., Atlanta, Ga. 30322-1101.

To report an unsafe toy or toy-related injury, call the U.S. Consumer Product Safety Commission's hotline at (800) 638-2772.

ATM cards have hazards also

BBB advises to keep a good record of all your transactions

Better Business Bureau

As the holidays approach, many of us will be heading out to discount and department stores, shopping malls and specialty outlets searching for the perfect gifts for family and friends.

Not so long ago, this required a wallet full of cash, an assortment of credit cards and a checkbook. Today, however, many people just carry one card — an automatic teller machine cash card.

ATM cards are issued by your bank to permit automatic withdrawal of funds from your account. Some ATM cards may have a major credit card symbol on them, in which case they may be used to purchase goods at participating businesses where those credit cards are accepted.

You can easily use your ATM card at many outlets, such as department stores, supermarkets and gas stations. When the register rings up your total, you slide the card through the electronic reader and enter your personal identification number. You or the cashier then enters the dollar amount for approval. After the machine electronically confirms your request with your bank, the funds are automatically deducted from your checking or savings account.

The Better Business Bureau reminds consumers to fully understand what fees and restrictions your bank places on ATM card use. Merchants also may charge additional fees for ATM card purchases.

Any transaction made with your ATM card turns up on your monthly bank statement, providing you with a complete record of your purchases and spending habits. But it is still very important to record all ATM transactions in your account register to avoid overdrawing your account. Also, remember to keep all sales receipts for your records, and in case you need to return unwanted holiday gifts.

During the holiday rush, be sure to keep careful track of your ATM card. Make certain you don't leave it behind at a store and keep it in a safe place. Federal law protects you against unauthorized use and limits your financial responsibility to $50 if you report the loss or theft of your ATM card within two days.

For more information on ATM cards, write for a free copy of "Shopping With Your ATM Card," by sending your name and address to the Consumer Information Center, Department 628A, Pueblo, Colo. 81009.

Safety needed when stuffing your stockings

Egleston Children's Hospital

Stocking stuffers, by nature, are small and inexpensive and can be dangerous for young children.

The child safety experts at Egleston Children's Hospital remind parents who observe the tradition of hanging stockings "by the chimney with care" to remember these holiday safety tips:

• Avoid toys with small, removable parts until children are at least 4 years old

• Toys with sharp points, glass or metal edges should not be given to children under age 8

• Avoid toys with long strings or cords, such as necklaces, which could cause a young child to strangle

• Look for safety labels, including "flame retardant or flame resistant" on any fabric products and "washable, hygienic materials" on stuffed toys and dolls

• Follow age recommendations

• Avoid giving preschoolers nonfood stocking stuffers designed to look like foods. For example, items such as pens that look like lollipops, erasers shaped like peanuts or a pencil sharpener that resembles an ice cream cone, most 3-year-olds and many 5-year-olds can't tell the difference between the look-alike and the real thing. They might try to eat them.

• Some ideas for safe stocking stuffers include oranges and apples, a small book, a coloring book, a safe stuffed toy or doll, a car too large to fit in the mouth that has no removable parts or a rubber bath toy

Of course, these tips apply not only to stocking stuffers, but also to all children's gifts.

MONSTER TRUCKS

324th FSB gets new vehicles

Heavy Equipment Transport Trucks now larger, better

By Ruth J. Spaller
Bayonet staff writer

When the soldiers of the 324th Forward Support Battalion talk monster trucks, they're not talking about the ones at East Alabama Motor Speedway — they're talking about the unit's new Heavy Equipment Transport Trucks.

The battalion recently exchanged six old trucks for six pristine, sand-colored new ones through the 724th Main Support Battalion, part of the 24th Infantry Division (Mechanized) at Fort Stewart, Ga.

Familiarly known as "HETTs" the trucks are basically a cab (tractor) and trailer designed to carry tanks and tracked vehicles long distances to save fuel and prevent wear and tear.

They also serve as recovery vehicles for broken tanks, with hydraulic winches that can load and unload vehicles like the M-1 Abrams tank, which weighs about 66 tons.

The new trucks are designed to carry up to 70 tons, 10 tons more than the ones they replace, according to Sgt. Gary Axsom of Company A. The old trucks, which were originally made in 1972 or '73, had been through several refurbishings, Axsom said.

The new HETTs are wider and longer than the old ones — 70 feet long, 12 feet wide and 13 feet 6 inches high.

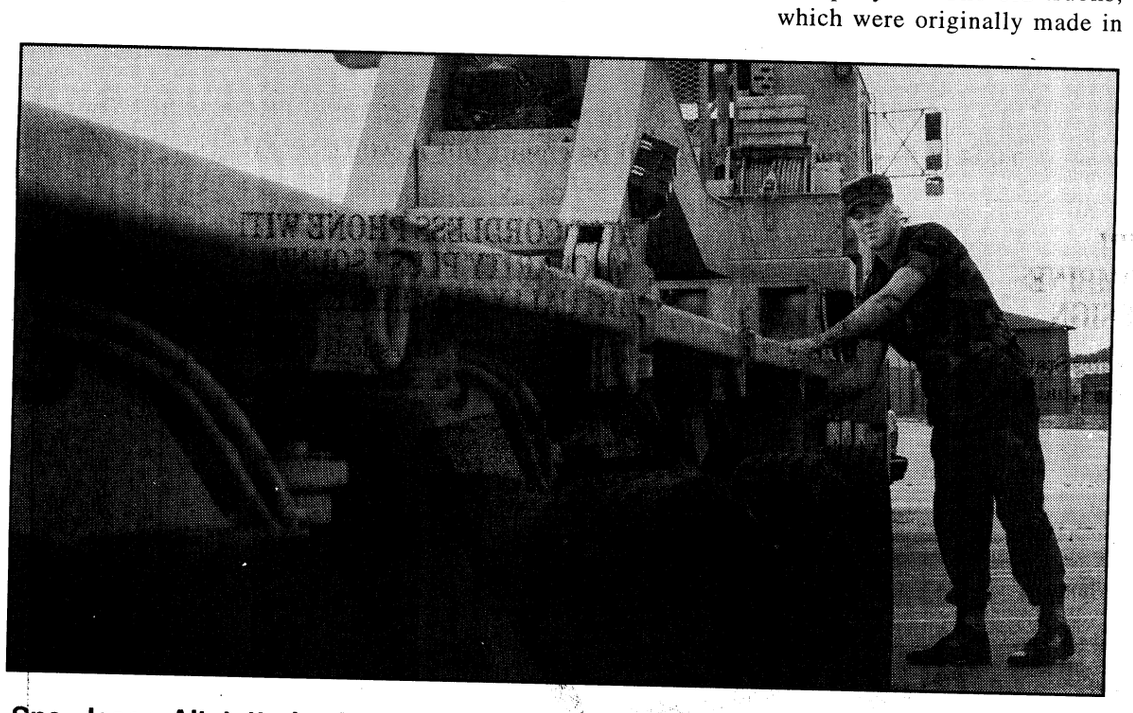
Because of its larger dimensions, driving the new truck "takes some getting used to," said mechanic Spc. Jason Altstatt, one of the first soldiers trained to drive the new vehicle.

Also, because the trailer's 40 wheels all pivot with the tractor, "the trailer swings with you," he said. "Instead of turning wide, which you would do with a regular truck, you've got to hug the corner."

Despite their size, however, the new trucks provide a smoother ride.

"In the old ones — everything shook," Axsom said.

But driving the new truck, "It's like floating over bumps," Altstatt said.



With comfort comes convenience, too, in the form of several new electronic systems.

One of these, a central tire inflation system, cycles air through all the tires, constantly monitoring tire pressure and automatically inflating any that might spring a leak.

This is helpful if you get a flat, Altstatt said, because a spare tire for the tractor stands about 5 feet tall and weighs 540 pounds, and with the inflation system you can wait to change it until you get back home.

One of the best things about the new vehicle though, is the larger, refurbished cab, which has room behind the driver and navigator seats that can either be made into bunk beds or seats to carry the crew of the vehicle being hauled, Axsom said.

"Whereas before you needed another vehicle, now you can haul the crew with you." he said. "When you get to your destination, they can get on their tank, you can drop the ramp and they can drive off. It's a real time-saver — it eliminates a lot

WORLD WAR II:

Hitler gambles in Battle of the Bulge

TRADOC News Service

Adolf Hitler's last big gamble to save Germany from defeat in World War II began in the early morning darkness of Dec. 16, 1944. A crashing artillery barrage shattered the quiet cold of the Ardennes Forest through Belgium, Luxembourg and Germany.

Totally surprised, dazed and frightened, GIs stumbled around, trying to find their weapons and regain their bearings. Many panicked and fled.

This was not supposed to be happening. At this stage of World War II, the Germans were thought to be unable to mount a serious attack. Since D-Day, the Allies had pulverized Nazi forces in France and chased the remnants back into Germany.

Things had been so peaceful that almost half of the men had been given passes to Paris, Luxembourg and resort centers in the area.

American units were stretched pitifully thin along a front that paralleled the Siegfried Line, Germany's "Western Wall" of defense. Only one intelligence officer suspected something big was about to happen. He was dismissed as a "worry wart."

Don't bother Ike

Hitler had worked on the offensive in great secrecy since August. German units would smash through thin American lines during bad weather and quickly retake Antwerp before the Allies could regroup and skies cleared for their air-power.

A meddler himself, Hitler assumed Roosevelt and Churchill would waste time arguing about what to do. The Allied forces under Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower would not react in time. German troops would be solidly entrenched. Roosevelt and Churchill would then ask for peace on his terms, and Hitler could move units to the east and destroy the Russian offensive.

However, Army Chief of Staff Gen. George C. Marshall told leaders in London and Washington, "We can't help Eisenhower in any other way than not bothering him."

Hitler had created 26 divisions with clerks and other rear echelon soldiers, ground-bound airmen and sailors and able-bodied men from war plants. He supplied the new divisions with material marked for other areas.

Battle-tested soldiers and commanders anchored the units. Over several weeks, they were sneaked to the front at night. Americans who heard the movement marked it up to soldiers being rotated.

The line beds

Six American divisions faced the onslaught. Even veterans were unnerved by the din of the barrage and ghostly "artificial moonlight," created by reflecting spotlights off low clouds.

Not all the Americans ran. In fact, small units and ragtag groups were key to victory. Cooks, clerks and drivers grabbed weapons and joined the fight. They sacrificed themselves to delay the enemy until stronger forces could enter the battle.

3/32 sees last troops graduate, furls colors

3-in-one ceremony bids farewell to graduates, commander, ITB unit

By Richard Brill
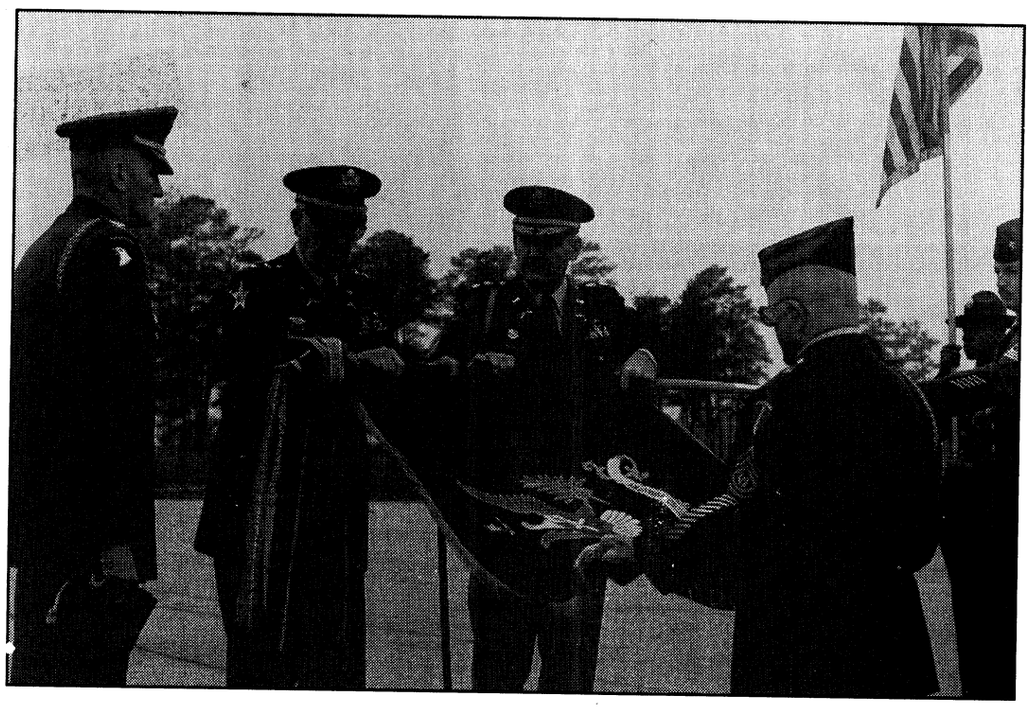
Special to The Bayonet©



A unique three-in-one ceremony at Sand Hill's Kanell Field Dec. 9 saw three companies of One Station Unit Training soldiers graduate, a battalion commander leave for a new assignment, and the inactivation of one of the Infantry Training Brigade's units.

The ITB's 3rd Battalion, 32nd Infantry Regiment, inactivated after the graduation of 240 soldiers of Companies C, D and E.

Companies C and D are the last two companies to graduate from the regiment, which formerly trained more than 3,500 OSUT soldiers each year.

The inactivation ceremony was attended by former unit members, including veterans of World War II and Korea. Assisting in the casing of the unit colors, which will be stored in the National Infantry Museum, were honorary regimental commander retired Maj. Gen. John M. Hightower and honorary regimental command sergeant major retired 1st Sgt. Robert R. Rogers.

Third battalion's commander, Lt. Col. Kenneth Obermeyer, is being assigned to Maxwell Air Force Base, Ala., as an instructor with the Air Command Staff.

Richard Brill/Special to The Bayonet

Col. Theodore R. Severn (left), commander of the Infantry Training Brigade, watches as retired Maj. Gen. John M. Hightower, Lt. Col. Kenneth M. Obermeyer and retired 1st Sgt. Robert R. Rogers furl the colors of the 3rd Battalion, 32nd Infantry Regiment.

Col. Theodore R. Severn, brigade commander, said the inactivation of a unit with as proud a history as the 32nd is an emotional occasion.

"This is the second time I've seen a regimental flag come down. That's a sad day," he said. "It's a sad day because those colors do in fact represent hours of struggle and strife and proud heritage.

"It's a sad day and yet it must be done. I feel confident that the 3/32 infantry's colors will one day be uncased again and continue in the history of our nation," he added.

BULGE: Hitler gets more than he bargained for in battle

Even untested troops rallied to make valiant stands, then retreated to fight again. The American line bent westward, or bulged, which gave the action its popular name.

Atrocities

Hitler chose his favorite 1st SS Panzer Division to lead the offensive, and the 1st SS Panzer Regiment was in front. The troopers zealously obeyed Hitler's orders to create chaos and terror.

They killed Americans even after they surrendered. The most notorious incident occurred Dec. 17 near Malmedy, where about 120 Americans were captured. The Germans stripped the GIs of watches and warm clothing and then mowed them down with truck-mounted machine guns.

Several wounded soldiers played dead and later escaped to spread the story. Instead of frightening Americans, such cruelty solidified them. Many soldiers vowed not to take SS prisoners.

Two days later, the 82nd Airborne and 30th Infantry divisions wreaked revenge on the 1st SS Panzer Regiment. They surrounded the Nazis near La Gleize, and pounded them for four days. On Dec. 23, out of gas and low on ammunition and food, 800 survivors of the original 5,000 Germans fled east on foot.

They left behind a murder toll of 353 Americans and 111 Belgian civilians. SS troopers had shot children simply for crying.

Thirty German commando teams also helped spread hysteria and confusion in the American rear. Dressed in American uniforms with forged papers and driving jeeps, these English-speaking commandos seized road junctions and misdirected traffic.

Commandos were rumored to be everywhere. Nervous Military Police grilled those who passed by at road blocks with questions that could be answered by only "real Americans." Many soldiers, including one who didn't know sports and movie trivia, were detained. When commandos were captured, they were executed on the spot.

Ike reacts

Dec. 16 was a good news-bad news day for Eisenhower; he learned that he had received his fifth star and was told about the German offensive in the Ardennes.

Eisenhower suspected the attack was only a feint to draw Gen. George S. Patton's troops from the South. Still he ordered the 10th Armored Division, Patton's reserve, to the fighting. He also told the First Army, north of the Ardennes, to speed its 7th Armored Division south.

While Ike was plotting moves, soldiers of the 4th and 28th Infantry divisions were in a desperate fight with the German Seventh Army. At half-strength, they covered an 18-mile front south of the main point of attack.

One company of the 4th's 12th Regiment, set up in Echternach, Belgium, blocked the road to Luxembourg. Another 60 men fortified a hotel in Berdorf. For four days, these soldiers halted the Germans. When they were forced to fall back, they hooked up with the newly-arrived 10th Armored and the 5th Infantry divisions.

Refugees pass through Bastogne after the 4th Armored Division broke the siege of the town.

The Germans planned to augment their scarce fuel supplies with American stores, but they took just one small dump. Other gas was siphoned from abandoned American vehicles.

The bloody 1st SS Panzer Regiment came the closest to capturing a huge fuel cache, but they were thwarted by a U.S. Army engineer officer.

Maj. Paul Solis and his squad of engineers battled Panzers in Stavelot throughout Dec. 17. The next day the Americans were driven out. A mile from Stavelot, the retreating soldiers came upon an amazing sight. Stacks of American gasoline cans lined the road for several miles. Only a few GIs guarded the nearly 2 million gallons of gas.

Solis had his men stack cans of fuel across the road between the dump and Stavelot. They piled cans until they heard German tanks approaching. When the lead tank rounded a curve in front of them, Solis lit the gas. The roaring wall of flame and heavy woods on both sides road blocked the tanks. The Panzers turned around.

Patton joins fight

Eisenhower met with his top generals in Verdun Dec. 19, and he decided more of the Third Army would head north to protect Bastogne. He asked Patton how soon he could attack. Patton, who had anticipated the decision, astonished the others with, "On Dec. 22, with three divisions."

He called his chief of staff to get the divisions rolling. If Bastogne fell, the Germans would control the roads to Antwerp. It would be very hard to stop them.

The 101st Airborne Division, recuperating in France after hard action in Holland, was also ordered to the town. On Dec. 18, men of the "Screaming Eagles" arrived in Bastogne as defenders.

Acting commander Brig. Gen. Anthony C. McAuliffe assigned units to bolster defensive positions in villages around Bastogne. But by Dec. 21, the perimeter had shrunk to a rough circle about five miles across.

During a lull Dec. 22, four Germans carried a typewritten demand for Bastogne s surrender. When McAuliffe read the ultimatum, his dismayed reaction was, "Aw, nuts." After thinking over the situation, he said he didn't know how to answer the demand. Lt. Col. Harry W.O. Kinnard, 101st operations officer, said, "That first crack you made would be hard to beat, general."

The officer who delivered the reply had to explain to the puzzled Germans what "nuts" meant.

Weather cleared Dec. 23 and badly-needed supplies were dropped into Bastogne. American fighter planes also hit German armor forces around the village.

That night the Germans assaulted Bastogne in earnest. Until Dec. 26, the town was under almost constant attack.

Late that day, the leading element of Patton' s 4th Armored Division roared into Bastogne, having fought through Germans to the south. The group was led by Lt. Col. Creighton W. Abrams, who later became U.S. Army chief of staff. The siege was lifted.

The Bulge stops

The 2nd Panzer Division penetrated farthest of all German units. It bypassed Bastogne and other occupied towns in its haste to reach the Meuse River. Less than 10 miles from its goal, it was wiped out in a four-day battle with the U.S. 2nd Armored Division. Other German divisions trying to rescue the Panzers were chewed up.

The bulge in the American lines would bend no more, but it would remain another month. The bulge cost the Germans 100,000 men killed, wounded and captured. American casualties totaled 80,987 with 10,276 killed.

The war would go on for eight more months, but Hitler had lost much of his critical forces in one vast, desperate effort.

ITB earns award for donating blood

Martin Army Community Hospital

Fort Benning's Commanding General Maj. Gen. John W. Hendrix and Martin Army Community Hospital Commander Col. Michael J. Kussman honored the Infantry Training Brigade with an award at Sand Hill's Santiago Gym Saturday for its contribution to the quarterly blood collection program.

Hendrix and Kussman presented a specially designed plaque to ITB Commander Col. Theodore R. Severn for more than 3,500 units of blood collected from the unit during the blood drives this year.

Severn received the plaque on behalf of his soldiers and cadre.

The collections represent a $400,000 contribution to the hospital and its patients, based on the cost of buying blood.

The hospital's Department of Pathology restructured the blood collection from monthly to quarterly in 1993, following Desert Storm, when the number of donations dropped substantially due to constant disruptions to the training schedules of post units, according to a hospital spokesperson.

The spokesperson says ITB's support played an important role in going to quarterly collections.

With more than 10,000 trainees a year, ITB offers an excellent pool of qualified blood donors.

Following the ceremony, Hendrix, Kussman and Severn joined more than 600 soldiers from ITB in donating blood to support the blood collection program.

SANTA'S CASTLE

OCS students volunteer time

Cindy Chung

Candidates contribute with Christmas community project

By James Brownlee
11th Infantry Regiment

The soldiers and families of the 3rd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment (Officer Candidate School), intend to brighten a child's Christmas morning by volunteering at Santa's Castle.

Santa's Castle, located in Soldiers' Plaza, Building 2639, is an all-volunteer, private, nonprofit organization providing free toys to military families in need.

Santa's Castle originated in 1986 and is open 11 months of the year. Santa's Castle is funded by donations only (fund-raisers, donations from individuals, units and private organizations) and donations of new and used toys are accepted. In 1993, 1,087 children (447 families) received more than 6,905 toys.

This year, members of OCS Class 1-95 volunteered more than 350 hours cleaning and repairing everything from Barbie dolls to bicycles to ensure the Santa's Castle mission is fulfilled.

"I feel good in knowing that this is a service provided exclusively for Army families here on Fort Benning and that we as a company have contributed significantly in boosting the morale of the community during this holiday season," said Brian Brown, intermediate officer candidate.

"Furthermore, I also think that we as soldiers not only have a responsibility to our families but to help provide for the community as well."

"At the present time, this is the best real-world experience for this class," said Battalion Commander Lt. Col. Donald B. Chung.

"This is another training opportunity. This training teaches them that there is another side to responsibility and provides the opportunity for the cadre, students and families to demonstrate the saying, 'The Army takes care of its own.'

"This means every soldier has a responsibility to the Army as a whole. And at this time of the year a program of this nature is a great way for us to capture the spirit of the season as well as helping others at the same time."

"As officer candidates, they are always happy to contribute to the military family whenever they can," said Capt. Donald E. Brown, company commander.

"As officers they will be actively involved with various charities, service organizations, volunteer groups and other worthwhile community activities. Santa's Castle is just one way of expressing their humanitarian interests."

Olympic mascot visits Fort Benning school

Former Gold Medalist, future hopefuls also make appearances

By Jerrie Macintire
Special to The Bayonet©

Some children at Dexter Elementary School say it's too bad there isn't an Olympic competition for the Hokey Pokey; they seem to think Izzy, the official mascot of the 1996 Olympic Games, would surely be a contender for the Gold with his enthusiastic rendition of the traditional child's dance.

As Izzy put in a puffy gloved white hand to "shake it all about," students clapped in time and chanted, "You do the hokey pokey and turn yourself around; that's what it's all about."

Izzy, that unique blue creature with the big feet and even bigger smile, visited Dexter Dec. 9 to kick off a year long "Olympic Connection" educational theme which focuses on multi-cultural activities.

Under the Olympic theme, classrooms will adopt a particular country and study the language and customs of that country, said Vicki Rogers, principal.

In addition, students will weave cross-curricular activities relating to their country into subjects such as math, social studies and language arts, Rogers said.

In the Olympic Games tradition, classes are designing patchwork quilts to present to adopted country; other activities include writing to pen pals, celebrating traditional festivals, learning native dances and making flags of various countries around the world.

The year-long "Olympic Connection" education program will culminate in May with a celebration designed to showcase skills and knowledge the students acquired while studying their countries, Rogers said.

Rogers said Izzy's visit helped kick off Dexter's Olympic Connection theme while also "generating excitement" for the upcoming 1996 games; while many events will be based in Atlanta, the women's softball competition will be in Columbus.

"I never had the idea I would be a Gold Medalist, but I won all five Olympic fights."

— Eddie Crook
1960 Gold Medalist

In addition to watching Izzy shake various parts of his anatomy to the Hokey Pokey, Dexter students also met several Olympic athletes who won medals in previous competitions.

On hand in patriotic red, white and blue official Olympic team jackets were Sgt. Brett Erickson and Capt. Kristin Frazer, members of the Army Marksmanship Unit who are preparing to compete in the 1996 Olympics.

Eddie Crook, a 1960 Gold Medalist in boxing, displayed his medal and reminisced about the lighting of the torch in Rome when athletes heard the famous words preceding each Olympics, "Let the games begin."

"I never had the idea I would be a Gold Medalist, but I won all five Olympic fights," he said, encouraging the students to believe in themselves."

Singer Celeste Lee also encouraged students to have faith in themselves and to always give their best in a song entitled "One Moment in Time."

Master of ceremonies retired Maj. Marcus Alexander said he hoped to inspire children to "capture the spirit of Olympic participation," as they take part in various multi-cultural events and programs that are part of the six-month unit of study.

Ceremony honors World War II vets

By Jan Wesner Childs
Special to The Bayonet©

World War II veterans in Columbus were honored Dec. 7 during three ceremonies that marked the 53rd anniversary of the bombing of Pearl Harbor.

"Democracy, our precious freedoms, our land, the world itself were in great danger," U.S. Department of Veterans' Affairs Assistant Secretary for Congressional Affairs Edward Scott told one group of vets. "You literally saved the world."

Scott was one of several speakers who addressed veterans during a 1 p.m. ceremony in Marshall Auditorium in Infantry Hall. The event, which was meant to honor all veterans, was sponsored by the 2nd Congressional District of Georgia and organized by U.S. Rep. Sanford Bishop.

Bishop presented certificates to 12 veterans' organizations. Medal of Honor recipient retired Col. Robert Nett was recognized as a "real war hero." Nett admitted to altering his birth certificate so he could enter the Army at 17 and recounted a few funny war stories for his comrades.

"While we were fighting on Guam, I got a letter saying that if I didn't report to the draft board within 10 days I'd be in big trouble," he said. "I wrote back and said that if they could arrange it with my company commander, I'd be more than happy to report - any time of day or night."

Retired Col. Robert Nett is a World War II Medal of Honor recipient.

Maj. Freeman Horner, another Medal of Honor recipient, was also honored during the ceremony.

But Nett also took a serious moment to reflect back on World War II.

"We had a tremendous group of people called 'a generation' when Pearl Harbor was invaded. This generation is so unusual," he said.

Besides the soldiers, sailors and pilots who fought the battles, Nett said, were the "women who put their children in daycare centers, retirees who returned to industry. Americans realized what freedom was and the price we had to pay to get it done."

Another Medal of Honor winner, retired Maj. Freeman Horner was recognized at the ceremony but was not present.

Fort Benning Garrison Commander Col. Richard Rutledge, another speaker at the ceremony, lauded World War II veterans for setting a standard for others to follow. Rutledge pointed out that Fort Benning is "the gateway" for many young soldiers just entering the Army.

"You are an example to those in uniform," he told the vets.

The day of commemoration started at 8 a.m. when members of the Chattahoochee Valley Veterans Council, Inc., laid a wreath at the veteran's memorial downtown. A ceremony followed at 10 a.m. at the Veteran's Center on Victory Drive that included a 21-bell salute and the playing of taps. Members of the 1st Battalion (Airborne), 507th Infantry, 11th Infantry Regiment, served as the color guard.

Harmon "Okay" Parker, commander of the Department of Georgia Ex-POWs, was the keynote speaker at that ceremony.

"We cannot afford to forget Pearl Harbor and we can less afford to allow America to forget," Parker said. "That is why we are here. Freedom is a precious commodity. The price that was paid and is still being paid makes it all that more valuable."

Remember WW II

Dick Grube (right), National Infantry Museum director, and curator Frank Hanner look over their newest addition to the museum collection — a vintage World War II landing craft, which was donated to the museum by the Center of Military History. The craft was used during World War II in numerous amphibious landings, such as D-Day, the invasion of France June 6, 1944, and many others throughout the European theater and in the Pacific. The craft is located at the corners of Gaudette and Gillespie streets, and according to Grube, may be moved to the museum grounds in the spring before the post's 50th anniversary celebration of World War II.

Difficult music inspires singer

By Robert Thompson
USAIC Chaplains' Office

reflections

Me sing in Handel's "Messiah?" How could something both excite and terrify me at the same time?

The invitation was open to anyone — no audition required. Each year, in fact, volunteers meet on Sunday afternoons before the December performance. About 60 people from the local area practice and then perform half of this two-hour classic work.

"I'm not good enough," I heard myself think. Sure, I took some singing lessons in college, but that was 18 years ago. This music stuff is a perishable skill, like M-16A1 rifle training. Forming the right notes and making them sound like more than a tired trombone is hard work.

I remember singing "The Hallelujah Chorus" in high school. Those high notes came around much too often for my untrained windpipe. I could give myself a sore throat simply by trying to sing that one number. Plus, I read music like a fifth-grader. I get my eyes glued to the words and forget about those little black spots with sticks hanging on them.

Some of those sounds that I need to learn well are strange! They don't seem to belong. They are "minor chords," groups of notes whose job is to put us on edge for a while, to make us feel some tension. The minor chords make us want to hear better sounds.

Gratefully, things in "Messiah" do get better. But minor chords are still strange, so I have trouble finding the note that I am supposed to sound. They demand more than minor effort.

What about the speed of the sounds? Furious. How else to describe it?

Many of them quite simply race along the page (and therefore in my throat) at a furious clip. Up and down, back and forth, jumping fences, dodging trees and trying to get away. Many do. I can't hang on to them all — at all.

Me sing in the "Messiah?" I'm not good enough. But something attracts me to it; the music and the words are so grand and so sublime that they drew me out of myself.

While out of myself, I notice more easily (and painfully!) my self-centered deeds, and I resolve to respond to other persons more than I have in the past. While out of myself, I notice that other persons are important — important because they are my partners in this sometimes grand and sublime adventure called life. We are to share in more than singing. We are to work and play and rest and worship and serve as companions through life's journey.

I've thought about this before. I've read it in books, heard it in speeches, seen it in movies, studied it in the Scriptures. Yet singing it makes its truth vivid and alive for me.

Is this a sugar-coated view of life and music? I think not. It's a way for me to snatch encouragement from the jaws of despair.

Am I a bit daft for hearing this much in the "Messiah?" I don't believe so. Not any more than when I'm hearing rock 'n' roll, country and western, the blues and easy listening. Each kind of music carries its own basic message.

Me sing in the "Messiah?" Yes! I'm not good enough, but I want to get out of myself and be inspired to live a better life. Its message lasts through this season and beyond — on into all the seasons of our journey.

Me join the Messiah? Yes — Handel's music helps me join him.

Kathie Lee Gifford to host holiday special

By Jay Bobbin
Tribune Media Services

Most everyone has a particular way of marking the holidays, and in her newest prime-time special, Kathie Lee Gifford demonstrates hers.

The popular co-host of the syndicated weekday show "Live! With Regis & Kathie Lee" presented a Mother's Day salute last year, and she puts her own spin on the current season with Wednesday's new CBS offering "Kathie Lee ... Looking for Christmas," a largely music-oriented hour.

That's indicated not only by Gifford's own talent as a singer, but also by many of the guests she's gathered for the program; they include Vanessa Williams (the former Miss America who's won acclaim lately in Broadway's "Kiss of the Spider Woman"), country music's Collin Raye and the group Take Six.

Also featured on the show are Heather Whitestone — the present Miss America, who was introduced as such in part by Gifford, who helped start her reign as a host of last September's pageant — and Tony Randall.

While the segments were recorded largely at locations around New York City, another portion is set in Gifford's own home. She's joined there by her sportscaster husband, Frank, and their children, along with (surprise, surprise) her daytime cohort Regis Philbin and Billy Graham, who makes a very rare appearance in an entertainment-driven vehicle. Two veterans of award-show telecasts, executive producer Pierre Cossette and producer-director Walter C. Miller, collaborated with Gifford in devising the venture.

What: "Kathy Lee ... Looking for Christmas"
When: Wednesday on CBS

Though she ultimately enjoyed making her Christmas special, the friendly and ever-candid Gifford said, "I don't think I could live through another week like that. We worked on this for eight solid days, and I thought I was going to lose my mind. I wanted to call this 'The Nightmare Before Christmas,' but I found out that had already been taken.

"The final product is something I'm very, very pleased with, but the logistics of it were really tough," she continued. "When you're working with children and working in the elements and working late and you still have to do a TV show every morning, it makes for a wild schedule. It was 'sweeps' (a crucial ratings period) while we were taping this, so I couldn't take any time off.

"When I did the Mother's Day special, I was able to take two days off, and that extra sleeping-in and getting your head on straight made a big difference. I really think we accomplished what I wanted to do, though."

'Drop Zone' offers 'high'-speed action

By Marc G. Turchin
Bayonet staff writer

If you are looking for an action-packed, stunt-filled movie with little or no storyline, then "Drop Zone" is a movie to see.

movie review

Wesley Snipes plays U.S. marshal Pete Nessip who, along with his U.S. marshal brother (Malcom-Jamal Warner), is assigned to escort a genius-prisoner from Miami to Atlanta so that the prisoner can testify against his former boss, a drug dealer.

During the flight to Atlanta, an apparent terrorist attack results in an on-board explosion, the death of Snipes' brother and the disappearance of their prisoner.

Snipes and his brother are blamed for the explosion and subsequently Snipes gets suspended.

Snipes is sure the explosion was not a terrorist attack, but a mid-air prison break. But he has no proof and no one believes him.

Convinced that those responsible must be expert skydivers, the suspended marshal looks into the skydiving community to locate the prisoner.

The terrorists, who are led by Ty Moncrief (Gary Busey), are out to steal the identities of undercover Drug Enforcement Agency agents.

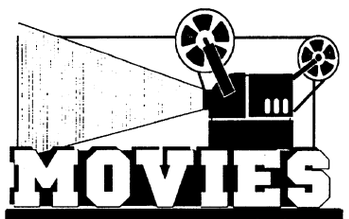
Snipes figures he needs to take up skydiving to solve the case, so he finds professional skydiver Jessie Crossman (Yancy Butler) to give him lessons. Snipes has a bit of difficulty at first.

Although the story lacks meat, the aerial-stunts are fantastic.

The stunts make you feel as if you are up in the air with the actors. People nose diving, doing flips and pulling other people by their parachutes make for some intense in-the-clouds filming. During some of the skydiving scenes, the people next to me blurted out "hooahs" in reaction to the footage. I assumed they were airborne qualified ... or at least want to be.

Back on the ground, the acting is good enough to get the job done, but definitely not convincing.

Butler's performance as the skydiving pro is not always persuasive. At times, she is hesitant of what to say and the experience she said she has in the movie seems less than there. I have trouble believing she can do things in the air other people can't.



On the other hand, Snipes plays his role quite well. His wisecracks and mannerisms complement the character. He hasn't lost a step in the fight scenes either.

For a good time in the air while you are on the ground, see "Drop Zone." But don't look for it when this year's Academy Awards are handed out.

Bruce W. Talamon/Paramount Pictures

Yancy Butler (left) and Wesley Snipes star in "Drop Zone." Butler plays skydiving pro Jessie Crossman and Snipes plays U.S. marshal Pete Nessip. The two team up to stop a group from stealing files from the Drug Enforcement Agency.

"Drop Zone" (R)

"Starring Wesley Snipes, Gary Busey and Yancy Butler. Directed by John Badham.

Review

Snipes carries the movie although the skydiving footage and stunts are excellent. Busey plays a pretty good outlaw but the rest of the actors in the movie are a bit less convincing

THE NEXT TIME YOU DRIVE TO ATLANTA TO CATCH A FLIGHT. . . ATTACH THIS TO YOUR WINDOW!

Some folks think that to get the cheapest airfare or the best airline connection, it's necessary to drive to Atlanta. Leaving Columbus two hours early to make the 100 mile drive, parking their car in a suburb of Harris County, fighting the crowds, catching a train and finding any one of hundreds of departure gates, and then being faced with the same grim process on their return, doesn't seem to deter the cost-conscious traveller in his quest to find the absolute lowest fare.

Columbus Now Has "THE HOMEFIELD ADVANTAGE"

There are now five air carriers serving Columbus, providing a total of 40 arrivals and departures daily, with more flights expected to be added as the traffic increases. More carriers and more flights also mean more destinations, improved service and more competitive fares.

Post competing again for 'Best in World'

USAIC Public Affairs Office

For the third straight year, Fort Benning will be competing for the Commander-in-Chief's Award as the best Army installation in the world.

The post recently won first-place honors as the best extra-large installation in the Training and Doctrine Command and was just selected as a finalist in the Department of the Army competition.

In 1993, Fort Benning won the Chief of Staff of the Army, Army Community of Excellence award as the best large installation in the continental United States. In 1994, the post won the Commander-in-Chief's award and was recognized as the Army's best.

Fort Benning will again be competing in the large installation for the continental United States category against Fort Sill, Okla.

However, to win the best overall title, Fort Benning must defeat 11 other installations, which, in addition to Sill, include Fort Leavenworth, Kan., and Redstone Arsenal, Ala., in the medium category; and Fort McCoy, Wis., and Tobyhanna Army Depot, Pa., in the small category.

The overseas installations include, in the large category, Schofield Barracks, Hawaii, and Youngsan, Korea; in the medium category, Forts Shafter, Hawaii; and Wainwright, Alaska; and in the small category, Camp Zama, Japan and Kwajalein, an atoll in the Marshall Islands in the west Pacific.

Fort Benning will be the first post to be visited by the Army Community of Excellence team in this year's competition.

The team is scheduled to arrive the evening of Jan. 8 and will conduct post evaluations Jan. 9 through 11.

"The support and cooperation demonstrated by the people in Phenix City and Columbus carried us over the top last year, just as I know it will this year," said Maj. Gen. John W. Hendrix, Fort Benning commanding general.

Post officials, who are expecting the closest competition ever, are looking for more of this support, which they say can be the difference between being the best post in the Army or an also-ran.

Camp Frank D. Merrill, located near Dahlonega, Ga., and home to the mountain phase of Ranger School, entered the ACOE competition in the special category and was awarded an honorable mention and $25,000 for its efforts.

The winner of the Commander-in-Chief's Award will receive $1 million. The winners in each category will receive $500,000 while runners-up get $110,000.

Army Communities of Excellence awards are given yearly to Army installations for their efforts to provide support to soldiers, civilian workers, retirees and their families.

The program has several categories: large, medium and small continental United States installations and large, medium and small outside of continental United States installations.

Each category has two subdivisions: most improved for those installations that have made significant improvements in facilities and services and a special category for those Army agencies not located on a traditional post.

Also, there are also categories for selecting winners in the Army National Guard and the U.S. Army Reserve.

Toys high on safety list

Nurses advise parents how to keep children safe

By Jan Wesner Childs
Special to The Bayonet®

Fort Benning's community health nurses want to make sure the toys in Santa's bag don't end up causing a trip to the emergency room.

"Parents need to be aware of toy safety," Capt. Kareece Larry warns.

Larry and other community health nurses manned a booth in front of the Post Exchange Dec. 14 and Friday to help parents become more informed about toy safety. The message: Choose what's appropriate for each child's age and maturity level, and be aware that small parts and sharp pieces can be dangerous.

Health screening center supervisor Alfreta Gibson, who coordinated the toy safety program, said choking and eye injuries are among the most common toy injuries. Gibson said more than 163,000 children nationwide were treated for toy injuries in 1991, the most recent year for which statistics are available.

Nurses at the toy safety booth handed out pamphlets to interested parents and answered questions. Although various toys were on display, including a Power Ranger doll that caught the eye of nearly every little boy who approached the table, none were singled out as more dangerous than others.

"We're not here to knock any toys in particular, but to promote safety," Larry said. "We're talking about not only toy safety, but safety in general."

Larry pointed out that parents may not realize when toys are dangerous. A model truck, for example, can become a hazard when the thin antennae breaks off.

Jill Burnette, a mother of three, wondered about a particular doll and it's tiny pieces. Her 4-year-old daughter has one of the dolls and she worried that her 1-year-old could get hold of the pieces.

Community health nurse Patrice Cathright said Burnette should be concerned.

"You have to make the older ones aware of safety as well," Cathright said.

She added that older children should be taught not to leave toys or parts of toys lying around where younger siblings can find them.

Information on toys for disabled children and special safety tips for households with exceptional family members were also offered. Mark Mills, recreation specialist for the Exceptional Family Member Program, demonstrated toys to help coordination and improve learning skills.

Other holiday safety tips offered by the nurses include:

- Make sure a helmet is worn when riding bicycles.
- Be aware of children using toys for other than their intended purposes. A rubber dart gun, for example, can become dangerous when it's used to shoot a pencil or nail instead of a dart.
- Parents should test and inspect all toys purchased for children, and should not depend on the manufacturer's safety claims. Special attention should be paid to loose or sharp pieces and wires.
- Children can choke on popcorn, peanuts or candy. One pamphlet points out that "What a child can reach, he can choke on."
- Alcoholic beverages should be kept out of children's' reach.
- Decorate carefully.

2 ski-masked robbers at PX take personal, govt property

Criminal Investigation Division offering $1,000 reward for info

By Agatha Hudson Debrow
Bayonet editor

Two robbers wearing ski masks and carrying shotguns entered the employee entrance at the rear of the Post Exchange at the Main Mall Saturday around 7 p.m.

According to Military Police officials, Exchange employees in the Cashier's Cage in the rear of the store dropped to the floor behind the counter and the robbers panicked and fled the scene.

Officials described the individuals as a white male and a white female.

While no one was injured, no shots were fired and no money was taken, Criminal Investigation Division officials said some personal and government property was taken during the incident.

Business at the Exchange, however, was not interrupted by the incident.

Military Police conducted a two-hour search following the incident, combing the area surrounding the Exchange.

No arrests have been made and the Military Police and Criminal Investigation Division are continuing to investigate the incident.

Special Agent in Charge Randy Upton of the Criminal Investigation Division said a $1,000 reward is being offered for information that leads to the identification, arrest and conviction of the robbers.

Upton said photographs of the the robbers were captured on videotape through internal security cameras, and wanted posters will be disseminated once the crime lab makes photographic copies of the suspects.

Upton said anyone with information should call CID at 545-2414.

The real story of Christmas

By Agatha Hudson Debrow
Bayonet editor

The real story of Christmas — what really happened almost 2,000 years ago and what it really means — may actually surprise you.

Christmas is not about three wise men giving gifts of gold, frankincense and myrrh to a baby. (Actually the story about three wise men and a baby is a misconception because the Scriptures describe Jesus as a "young child" when the three wise men made their visit. It was actually the shepherds abiding in the field who found the babe wrapped in swaddling clothes, lying in a manger.)

Because of commercialization, misinterpretations and a general lack of knowledge, Christmas has different meanings to different people. Here is a list of what Christmas is not about along with what the holiday really signifies.

• Christmas is not about getting presents; it's about giving presents.

• Christmas is not about Santa Claus or jolly old St. Nick who comes once a year bearing gifts; it's about Jehovah God who provides gifts for us year-round.

• Christmas is not about getting all dressed up, going to parties or wearing our holiday finery; it's about donning the love of God in our hearts at all times.

• Christmas is not about holiday ornaments, tinsel and garland hanging on a tree; it's about God's Son hanging on a tree.

• Christmas is not about red or white poinsettias gracing your doorway; it's about the "Rose of Sharon."

commentary

• Christmas is not about a "wonderful life" as seen through the eyes of Jimmy Stewart; it's about a wonderful life that is the result of getting to know Jesus Christ as your personal savior.

• Christmas is not about Bing Crosby dreamin' of a "White Christmas"; it's about a silent night when Christ was born.

• Christmas is not about "Jingle Bells"; it's about "joy to the world because the Lord is come."

• Christmas is not about a "Miracle on 34th Street"; it's about the miracle of the virgin birth.

• Christmas is not about chestnuts roasting on an open fire; it's about the love of God, which feels like fire in our bones.

• Christmas is not about gathering around the holiday dinner table for turkey with oyster dressing; it's about one day gathering around the great throne of God.

Agatha Hudson Debrow is celebrating the real meaning of Christmas.

• Christmas is not about candy canes, fudge and divinity; it's about the sweetness of a wonderful counselor, the almighty God, the everlasting father, the prince of peace.

• Christmas is not about fruitcake and nuts; it's about the fruit of the spirit, which is love, joy, peace, longsuffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness and temperance.

• Christmas is not about parades with marching bands, floats, and beauty queens; it's about a multitude of the heavenly hosts parading and praising God, saying, "Glory to God in the highest and on earth peace, good will toward men." (Luke 2:13 and 14)

• Christmas is not about pretty wreaths with tiny pine cones and red bows hanging on doors; it's about Jesus Christ's willingness to die for you and me by hanging on a cross. (I bet you thought that's what Easter was all about. It is, but the real significance of Easter is his death, burial and resurrection.)

The real story of Christmas is about God's Son leaving his heavenly home when the "fullness of time was come" to be born of a woman. (Galatians 4:4)

The real story of Christmas has much more meaning than commercialization, materialism or economic hardship; Christmas means more than spending a lot of money. In fact, once you take the time to search for the real meaning, you'll discover Christmas wasn't meant to cost you anything; it was meant to give you something.

Once you take the time to find out what really happened in that little town of Bethlehem, you will discover why Christmas is a joyous time. Once you take the time to find out the real story of Christ's birth and what it actually means, Christmas will have more meaning for you than merely a time to exchange gifts.

Christmas has nothing to do with a man dressed up in a red and white Santa Claus outfit; it has nothing to do with reindeer, Christmas trees or ornaments. Christmas is about the greatest gift of all times — God's gift to us in the form of Jesus Christ, his only begotten son.

Bah humbug ... complainers

By Clyde Snively
Bayonet columnist

Spc. Clyde Snively still believes in Santa Claus.

Peace is the goal for humankind. And it gets special emphasis this time of year.

I know I certainly want peace; but since world peace is beyond my purview, peace of mind will do.

To obtain peace of mind, I'd like to be able to give a piece of my mind to some of the Scrooges and "bah humbuggers" out there.

It blows my mind to learn every day about people who are so self-centered that they can only think of themselves, who are so focused on their own problems and predicaments, they don't realize how good they really have it. Because they think someone else might have it a little better, they whine and complain and generally make a nuisance of themselves.

Well, in the true tradition of this column, I'm going to sniffle and snivel about things that get my goat.

Since it's the season, we'll start with Christmas shoppers. They complain about not being able to find parking places, about long lines, about spending too much money, about not being able to find what they want.

I think parking out in the boondocks is not only a good way to get some healthy exercise, a brisk walk in the fresh air, but also helps you get away from the mall traffic faster.

If this answer's not good enough for you — shop before the Christmas rush (like pre-Halloween, or pre-eight o'clock in the morning).

This holds true for lines. I don't like them either, especially since I always pick the slowest one and my competitive nature being what it is, I hate to see people in adjoining lines get ahead of me.

But if lines get us down, don't shop during the peak season. This is true of selection. Wait until the last minute and what do you expect? Things will be picked over.

Me, I do wait until the last minute, but I always have a list of alternatives.

As for spending too much, I have yet to see a shop owner holding a gun to someone's head, demanding a person spend more in a particular store.

If you're like me, you can't spend what you ain't got, so don't worry.

I really like walking, or maybe I should say dancing, through the mall parking lots. Hey, with all those cruisers looking for close-in parking places as they blast away with their sonic boomers, how can you not dance?

OK, maybe you embarrass the others in your party, but then again, maybe you'll let the boom-blasters know how much you appreciate their adding to the holiday mood.

I notice drivers are especially witty this time of year. They think it's cute to cut you off, but if you so much as change lanes within a quarter of a mile in front of them, even with a blinker working, they quickly demonstrate the clarion qualities of their horn for you.

These are, of course, the very same people who would never dream to signal their intentions, even if it means your one chance in the next 20 minutes of being able to pull out into the flow of traffic.

An exchange of Latin phrases of course makes it all better.

Here on the home front, I'd like to offer a piece of mind to the whiners who think the Army owes them everything.

The on-post residents have practically everything at their beck an call, but want more.

For instance, there were a few spouses who thought their soldiers should be returned home earlier than others, so they called a Congressman.

Then there's the mothers who think little Johnny being bussed out to Sand Hill for school while his school is being repaired is too long of a bus ride.

Hey spouses, the nature of the Army is separations. Hey lady, do you realize there are some parents living downtown who put their kids on a bus as early as 6:30 a.m.?

OK, I'm in the mood for peace for mankind now. I think I'll go see if the Boy Scouts have any trees left, and Saturday I'll hit the Post Exchange to see what they've got left.

Peace, y'all.

CG extends greetings for season

The holidays of Hanukkah and Christmas should be joyous times of worship services, festivities and celebrations. For Jews and Christians, it is a time to reaffirm our faith in God and our dedication to peace.

Hanukkah, or the Festival of Lights, commemorates a hard-fought Jewish victory over oppression and tyranny.

We remember those who have gone before us and give thanks for the sacrifices they made and the inspiration their lives give. It is a time of celebration.

The Christmas season celebrates the birth of the Christ child at Bethlehem. The first Christmas message of "peace on earth, good will toward men" remains a goal that people throughout the world can identify with, but none more closely than those of us who serve in the armed forces.

May the spirit of Christmas inspire us to work harder than ever toward that noble goal.

I extend to each of you best wishes for a happy and safe holiday season and ask God's richest blessings for you and your loved ones during the new year.

Operation Holiday begins for soldiers

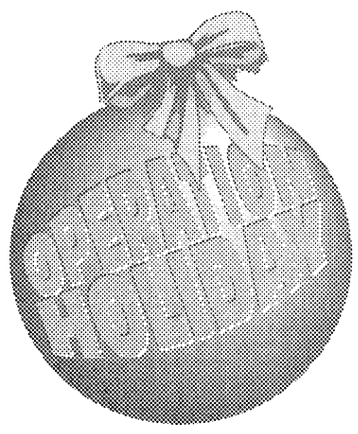
By Richard Brill
Special to The Bayonet©

For the enjoyment of Fort Benning soldiers who can't make it home for the Christmas season, Operation Holiday kicked off Friday at the Columbus Government Center.

Each year, Operation Holiday provides soldiers with a variety of free sporting and entertainment events both on and off post, including college and professional basketball and football games.



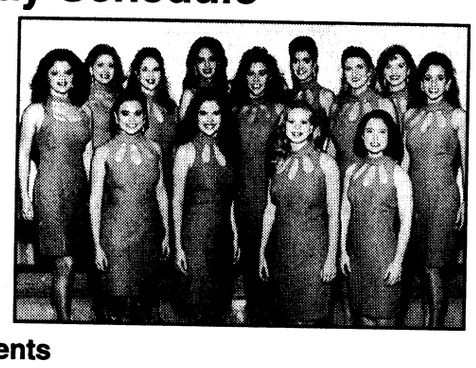
The kick-off ceremony included remarks by Frank Brown, president of the Chattahoochee Valley-Fort Benning Chapter of the Association of the United States Army, Columbus Councilman Jack Rogers, Phenix City Mayor Sonny Coulter and Commanding General Maj. Gen. John W. Hendrix.

Also featured was the annual presentation of the tickets to the Blue-Gray game by U.S. Air Force Maj. Joseph Connell.

Hendrix said Operation Holiday is one of the post's most important events and he thanked the AUSA and the Columbus and Phenix City communities for their support.

"I believe the spirit of Christmas is essentially the joy of giving, and that is what Operation Holiday is all about," he said. "Military service is challenging in a lot of ways but it is more challenging to those soldiers who have to be here away from friends and family at Christmastime.

"Your gift to them is a gift of love and friendship and understanding, which is the most precious gift that we can give," he added.



Hendrix encouraged post soldiers, including members of the 3rd Brigade, 24th Infantry Division, and the Infantry Training Brigade who attended the ceremony, to take advantage of what Operation Holiday has to offer.

"All of those who work to make Operation Holiday a success believe the service of our men and women in uniform to their country is important, and I can tell you as a soldier myself that that is a great gift," he said.

Mayors plan to improve housing areas on post

By Jerrie Macintire
Special to The Bayonet©

Improving playgrounds, ensuring the safety of children, and providing activities for adolescents tops the "wish list" newly elected housing area mayors have for the coming year.

Mayors and vice mayors from the six designated housing areas on post, who were elected Oct. 27, say they plan to work on quality of life issues such as upgraded playgrounds for children, better community facilities for adolescents, and better enforcement of the speed limits in housing areas.

Motorists speeding through housing areas are a danger to residents, especially children, said Peggy Alexander, vice-mayor of East Main Post.

"We need to provide safe streets for our youngsters," said Alexander, who noted that Military Police often patrol the area but their presence does not discourage some speeders.

Mayor Shawna O'Neil said the 15 mile per hour speed limit in housing areas is clearly posted, but is sometimes ignored as some motorists drive up to 40 mph through East Main Post while dozens of children play in yards and on sidewalks.

O'Neil said, "My biggest goal is to open the lines of communication between the housing residents and the different post agencies."

Mayor Susan Gilmore also said maintaining communications with those in a position to make changes is important for residents.

Gilmore plans to work through the mayors' committee to continue improvements in the playground facilities of McGraw Manor.

"Younger children really rely on the playground for an outlet. It's a focal point for a lot of families who have smaller children," Gilmore said.

Gilmore said the Directorate of Public Works has already improved some soil erosion problems on one playground and has planted grass and re-routed water drainage to maintain a smooth, safe play area.

Dale Handley, mayor of the Indianhead Terrace Community, said providing a focal point for community activities is important, and he will continue his work in helping with renovations in his community's local youth center.

Handley said he believes facilities such as a youth center help "develop a sense of unity within our community."

Handley said he endorses child centered programs, and will continue to support and enhance activities such as Boy Scouts, Girl Scouts, and after school activities through better facilities and more community involvement.

Community involvement is necessary before changes and improvements can be made, according to Mayor Gwendolyn Gibbs, who said she would like to see a youth center in her community, the Custer Terrace area.

Gibbs said she often sees teenagers catching buses to youth centers in other areas, and believes a local youth center would better meet the needs of neighborhood youngsters by providing them a safe place for after-school activities.

Custer Terrace, one of the largest housing areas on post, does not have a youth center, but renovations were approved by the DPW to use some of the existing Chapel area as a youth facility, said Jennifer Morgan, Community Life officer. Soldiers and other residents had approval from the DPW and were planning to use materials provided by the Army while relying on donated labor through the self-help program; however, many of the soldiers involved have been deployed and the project is temporarily suspended, she said.

Rebecca Castellon said she, too, is interested in providing play areas for children, and she hopes to upgrade playground equipment in her neighborhood of Bouton Heights and Davis Hill area.

Vicky Jones, vice mayor of the West Main Post community, said she will continue to work as a point of contact between families and post commanders and managers who set policy for housing. Recent questions from residents involved issues such as danger from lead paint in homes and questions about renovations in the area.

Mayors, who meet monthly with commanders, housing officials, and representatives from such areas as military police and DPW officials, have regular access to those in a position to enhance the quality of life on post, Morgan said.

Though mayors work to improve their communities, involvement from residents is key, she said.

Gibbs agreed, saying, "It's not easy, but you can accomplish a lot if you can give one or two hours a week to your community." Gibbs, who works full time and attends college part time, has led recent clean up drives in her community.

The residents borrowed tools from the self-help store, and removed shrubs and soil debris that prevented residents from using a sidewalk located on a blind corner. Walking around the debris into the street was dangerous, she said, and residents working together fixed the problem.

Mayors meet with a panel of post commanders and managers the third Tuesday of each month. They also hold community meetings regularly designed to offer residents a chance to voice concerns or suggestions on housing issues. For more information on when meetings are conducted, visit the local Community Life office for a schedule, or call Morgan at 545-5931 or 5246.

Soldier, wife die in wreck

Accident remains under investigation

By Agatha Hudson Debrow
Bayonet Editor

A Fort Benning soldier and his wife died Friday night in a one-car accident.

Spc. Keith Kindell Allen of Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 2nd Battalion, 18th Infantry Regiment, and his wife, Benita, were traveling south on Custer Road in the Sand Hill area, when he lost control of the car. Official said the car slid down an embankment and struck a tree.

The soldier was pronounced dead on arrival at Martin Army Community Hospital around 9:30 p.m., and his wife died about 30 minutes later.

The car, a 1978 maroon Oldsmobile Cutlass, was traveling an estimated 65 mph in a 30-mph zone, according to Military Police officials.

Allen, 23, who entered the military Oct. 17, 1990, was a native of Midwest City, Okla. His wife, 30, was from Columbus.

Officials said both passengers were wearing their seatbelts, and an autopsy will be performed. The accident remains under investigation.

How To Recycle

Post housing residents may place recyclable materials in brown plastic bins for weekly curbside pickup.

Here is a list of the items that can and cannot be placed in the bin for recycling.

• Glass: Only the following can be recycled: soft drink, beer, juice, ketchup, wine, liquor and food containers. All caps and lids are to be removed and containers are to be rinsed out. Special care should be taken to avoid breaking glass when placing it in the recycling bin. Glass will be separated by color at the curb for processing at the Materials Recovery facility.

• Cans: Only aluminum and steel cans are accepted at this time. Cans must be rinsed out. Labels may remain on the cans.

• Plastic: All plastic materials containing the Recycling Triangle (Three Chasing Arrows) may be recycled. This includes soft drink bottles and milk jugs. Caps must be removed and may be placed in the recycling bin. All containers must be rinsed out.

• Paper: All paper products except used personal type materials may be recycled. These items should be placed in brown paper bags or bundled together and tied then placed beside the recycling bin.

NOTE: incidents whereby used personal items are placed for recycling is cause for rejection.

• Cardboard: Pick-up of cardboard from moving will be coordinated directly with the Materials Recovery Facility, at 544-6142. Ask for the manager or leave a message containing your address, housing area, name and phone number.

• Inert Waste: Tree limbs, grass clippings and leaves will be picked up on Mondays only. Clippings and leaves should be placed in a garbage bag and tied or in a trash can with a lid.

Social worker wins award for service to children

By Jan Wesner Childs
Special to The Bayonet©

She is a social worker who considers herself a mother to hundreds of Fort Benning children.

She teaches programs to prevent child abuse, and she has dedicated herself to children.

And for all of her work, she was recently honored with the Judge Aaron Cohn Humanitarian Award.

Becky Welch, manager of the post's Family Advocacy Program, received the award Dec. 5 at the annual meeting of the Columbus Regional Chartered Council on Child Abuse.

Welch, 34, said working with children is special because children are a blessing.

"Those who do have children, it's a gift; it's a blessing," she said recently at her office in Soldiers' Plaza. "They're our future."

The Cohn award is presented each year by the council and is named after a well known judge in the Columbus juvenile court system.

"It's given to a person who's made a significant difference for children in the community," said Joanne Cavis, a member of the council's executive community.

Welch said she didn't expect the recognition.

"Being selected out of all the people in the Columbus area is a real honor," she said. "It really surprised me because I really love what I do.

"When I came to work out here in 1988, I really knew that I had my work cut out for me."

Welch said her goal when she started her job was to form a partnership between Fort Benning family advocacy groups and off-post organizations that deal with family and child abuse.

"I knew that all of our professionals needed to be on the same wavelength" she said. "I know that the way to prevention is to ensure that all our professionals are well trained."

Welch was instrumental in setting up a "memorandum of agreement" between her office and off-post agencies. She also organized seminars to help both military and civilian professionals, such as teachers and military police, recognize and deal with abuse.

"We got a lot of key people in the community involved," Welch said. "What I was trying to do was expose what child and family abuse are all about and how it takes an entire community to work on this problem."

Cavis called Welch's work a model for others.

"Becky's program is such an outstanding example of everything a child abuse program should be," Cavis said.

Becky Welch is the recipient of the Judge Aaron Cohn Humanitarian Award.

Welch also works with individual families and units.

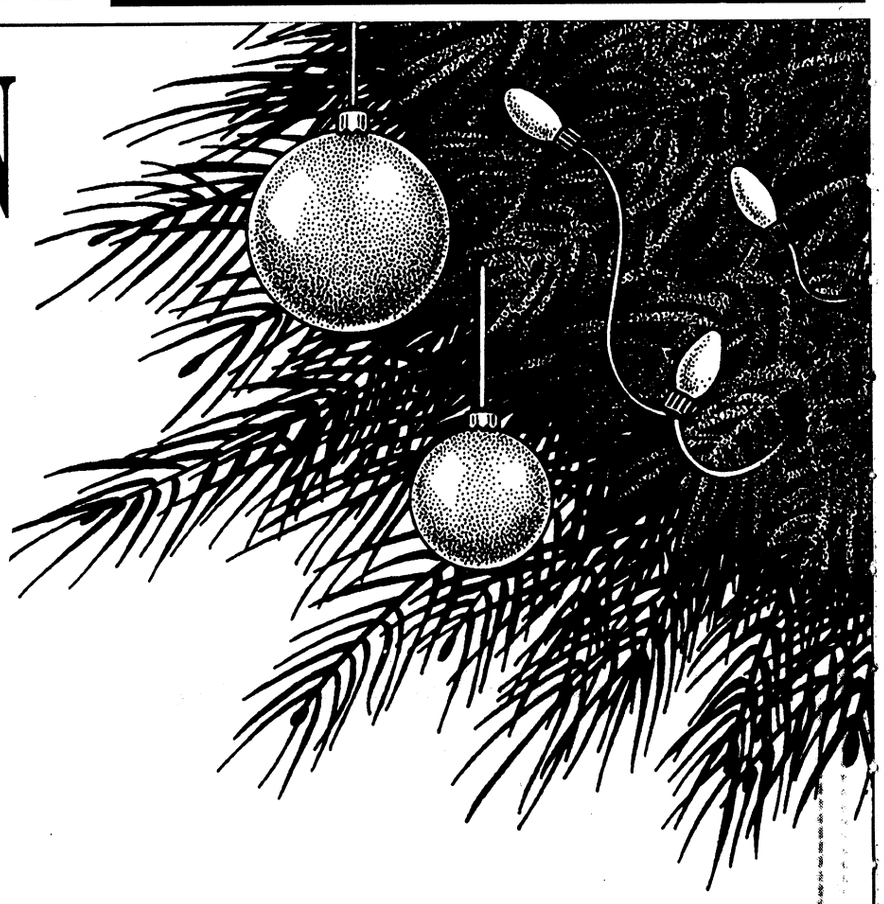
Welch said dealing with child abuse in military families is especially challenging. Deployments, moving and other uncertainties add to the stress that all families feel.

"One good thing about it is that the military does recognize these problems and has programs set up to deal with them."

Welch got involved with helping others at a young age.

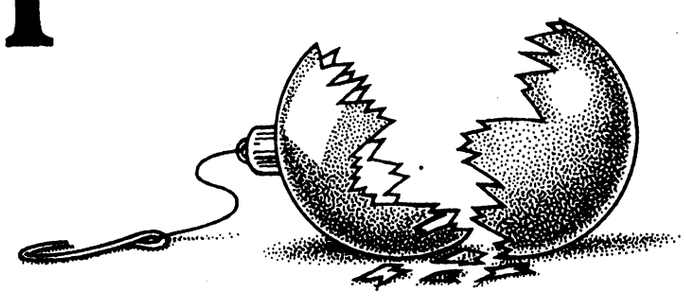
"It goes back to my upbringing," she said. "My father was a minister. I grew up always visiting the nursing homes and the hospitals with my dad.

"Working with children is really special because children cannot help themselves," she continued. "They're defenseless."



Welch doesn't have any children of her own. She lost two babies because of complications during pregnancy, so she thinks of the children she helps as her own.

The key to a good life for those children, according to Welch, is making sure they have a healthy upbringing.



"What it's going to take is getting the morals and values back into our families," she said.

Money cashes in Charlie Rock to win 29th tourney

By Terry K. Ray
Special to The Bayonet©

The 29th Infantry Regiment's first basketball tournament classic played Dec. 14 through 20 brought 16 teams to the hardcourt at Harmony Church Field House.

The five-day tournament concluded with the championship Tueday evening between Company C, 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment (Charlie Rock) and the Bradley Fighting Vehicle New Equipment Training Company, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment (Money) with Money cashing in Charlie Rock for the 69-58 win.

Charlie Rock opened the game with a 7-0 run before Money could find the basket. After the early jitters went away, Money trimmed the lead to 12-11 behind the inside work of forwards Michael Lovely, who had nine points in the first half, and Jerald Russell with eight.

Charlie Rock pushed the lead up to 25-13 with less than six minutes to play. Center James Taylor led the Charlie Rock attack with 14 first-half points.

Late in the half, the Money defense stepped up the pressure and trimmed the Charlie Rock lead from 12 to one at 31-30. Money took their first lead of the night with one second left in the first half at 32-31 on two free throws by Lovely to erase the deficit.

"I knew if we stayed within ourselves we could win," said most valuable player Artis Johnson. "We as a team are a lot older than they are, and our experience was the key to us winning. We didn't let the little things bother us."

Johnson sparked the offense with three first-half three-pointers when he came off the bench late in the first half. Johnson finished the game with 17 points.

In the second half, Money came out and looked to establish an outside game, both Johnson and guard Joffre Dannielly started to connect from long distance. Dannielly ripped the nets for 15 second-half points for a game high 18. Once the outside game got going, the inside game with Dempson Allen (10 points), Russell (10 points) and Lovely (11 points) opened up for easy layups and rebounds.

With seven minutes left in the game, and up 50-45, the Money offense broke the bank with a 12-4 run going up 62-49. Charlie Rock guards Kevin Anderson and Milton Ruffin keyed the second half offense with 11 and 10 points each.

"We simply ran out of gas," said Charlie Rock coach Willie Upshaw. "We played hard in the first half but couldn't maintain the up tempo game in the second half. We missed a lot of easy inside baskets that would have kept us in the game."

"This has been a great tournament," said Regimental Commander Col. Robert L. Jordan. "This is what it's all about. Everyone put forth a great effort to put this tournament together; and if we're fortunate, we can make this into an annual event. Now it's time to take a break and enjoy the holidays with our families."

Wrestling team fares well in Europe, Colo.

Soldiers place among top in tournaments

By Terry K. Ray
Special to The Bayonet©

Fresh off their European tour, the All Army wrestling team returned to Fort Benning long enough to repack before heading to Colorado Springs, Colo., for the Greco-Roman Winter Classic Dec. 17.

The first stop on the European tour was the "Nordvest Cupen" international wrestling tournament in Kristiansund, Norway.

The Army team did well, placing third overall and placing 11 wrestlers in the top six.

At 125 pounds, Keith Idleburg finished fourth and Matthew Dickey finished sixth.

Anthony Amado took second place at 136.5 pounds.

Shon Lewis won the 149.5-pound class with Miguel Spencer taking fourth.

In the 163.5-pound division, Keith Sieracki finished third and Brandon Dennington placed fifth.

At 180.5 pounds, Kenneth Owens took fourth and Rodney Smith was disqualified while wrestling for third.

Derrick Waldroup was disqualified for unsportsmanlike conduct while wrestling for first place at 198 pounds, along with his competitor.

Alexander Porcelli took third at 220 pounds.

Jeffrey Green took first and teammate Edward Mitchell finished second in the 286-pound weight class.

The next stop took the team to the Haparanda International Cup in Haparanda, Sweden, where the team finished fifth overall and had six wrestlers finish in the top six.

Spencer finished fifth at 149.5 pounds. Sieracki took third at 163.5 pounds and Dennington finished sixth. Waldroup finished third at 198 pounds while Green took third at 286 pounds and Mitchell sixth.

"We didn't fare as well in this tournament as we did in Norway," said All Army Wrestling coach Tony Thomas. "I think the time away from home training under adverse conditions strengthened the team and showed them what it takes to wrestle at the international level.

"Finishing as a team in the top four or five in an international tournament against teams from Russia or Poland and the like says a lot about this team. I believe the team as a whole gained valuable experience in international style competition."

The team returned to Fort Benning Dec. 7 and flew out to Colorado Springs, Colo., Dec. 9 for the their final competition at the Greco-Roman Winter Classic before the holidays and a well deserved rest.

Idleburg finished in the fourth spot at the 114.5 pound division.

Lewis won the 136.5-pound class with teammate Robert Allen taking third.

Smith won the 149.5-pound division with Spencer finishing fifth.

Dennington beat teammate Sieracki for fifth in the 163-pound division.

Waldroup took the 198-pound class with an 8-2 decision against Randy Couture of Corvallis, Or.

Jerry Jackson finished fourth in the 220-pound division.

In the 286-pound class Mitchell took third on an injury default by teammate Green who finished fourth.

The team will break until the start of the All Army wrestling trials, which will take place here beginning on Jan. 9.

Pros to share fishing techniques

Educational Outreach Inc.

Six of America's top pros will be sharing their skills with participants in the Bass Fishing Techniques Institute hosted by Auburn University Jan. 14 and 15. The Institute will be at the Lakepoint Resort State Park Lodge in Eufaula, Ala.

Instructors include two-time BASS Angler of the Year Jimmy Houston. Houston is a 13-time BASS Masters Classic finalist and hosts the television series "Jimmy Houston Outdoors."

Also instructing will be three BASS Masters Classic champions — Ken Cook, Robert Hamilton and George Cochran. Cook won the classic in 1991 and Hamilton won it in 1992. Cook is also a 10-time BASS Masters Classic finalist. Cochran won the title in 1987 and is 12-time BASS Masters Classic finalist.

One of America's leading authorities on using electronic equipment to locate bass, Danny Joe Humphrey, BASS Chapter Federation National Bass Fishing Champion BASS Masters Classic finalist, will also be instructing, along with former professional bass guide and author Larry Colombo.

A multitude of topics will be covered in the institute. Each session is tailored to the strengths of the particular instructor. In-depth instruction on plastic worms, spinnerbaits, crankbaits, topwater, ultra-light, flippin', pitchin, shakin' and all the other new techniques will be taught.

Each instructor will add his own special touches that give him the edge. Advanced sessions on bass behavior, using electronics, understanding color, pH, scent, theories of establishing multiple patterns within patterns and locating bass in seasonal situations will be offered. This is also an opportunity to see many of the new tackle products for 1995.

In 1994, Bass Fishing Techniques was inducted into the National Freshwater Fishing Hall of Fame for contributions to education and conservation. All in all, Bass Fishing Techniques gives you the opportunity to get into a classroom environment with North America's top pro anglers.

Saturday's activities begin at 8 a.m. with on-site registration. After an orientation session, participants will attend six different workshop sessions with Saturday instructors Cook, Colombo and Humphrey. Activities recess at 4 p.m., but participants are invited to attend informal "think tank" sessions with individual instructors until 4:45 p.m.

Sunday's activities begin at 9 a.m. as instructors Houston, Hamilton and Cochran conduct an additional six sessions followed by Sunday's "think tank."

Look for baitfish to lead you to bass

By Earl Bentz and Steve Price
Outboard Marine Corporation

This time of year, tournament pro Ron Shuffield lets little fish lead him to big fish.

Specifically, he looks for baitfish like shad because they show him where largemouth bass can be found.

"As waters start to cool, shad move to the surface and begin migrating into the creeks," explains the Johnson Outboards Pro Staff angler, "and when they make that migration, the bass follow them.

"The bass are hungry and active feeders, too, so lures that resemble baitfish work the best. Topwater lures like poppers, chuggers, buzz baits, and even floating worms all work very well because bass will come to the surface to feed this time of year."

The first place Shuffield looks for baitfish are in the tributary creeks. He concentrates on areas from midway to the very back reaches of the creek, and he keys in on very shallow water.

"I believe what you see happening this time of year in the tributaries is an influx of food for the baitfish," he explains. "There are algae blooms and also autumn rains, so the baitfish have plenty to eat.

"I actually look for the shad to swim ahead of my boat," the Johnson pro continues, "and when I do see them I know the bass are also nearby."

Favorite places to look for the bass include shallow sandbar flats, small points, and shorelines with stumps, fallen timber, or other cover. He frequently casts into three or four inches of water.

"You may catch several bass from one spot," he acknowledges, "but at this time of year isolated cover standing alone often produces the largest bass. When you see a single stump by itself in the water, it's a prime place to cast a buzz bait or chugger."

Vegetation is also a good place to find bass now. Baitfish are attracted to milfoil, hydrilla, and other types of greenery, so spinnerbaits, jigs, and plastic worms or lizards worked over and along the edges of the grass often bring good action.

"I've won several national tournaments and caught some huge bass fishing the outside edge of a grassline this time of year. In each one, too, I found the bass by finding the baitfish first."

Decoration safety may curb mishaps

By Stephen Barrett
American Forces Information Service

How many decorations are too many? Many who decorate their homes for the holiday season ask that question.

Some stick to decorating a tree and some windows. They'll place family heirlooms in visible places and keep their entertaining to close friends.

Others like showing their Christmas spirit Las Vegas-style, with hundreds of lights flashing around every door, window, gable and garage. These folks fiercely compete against other homes for prizes and find satisfaction lighting up entire neighborhoods.

It doesn't matter how little or how much people decorate. What does matter is that they check their decorations before they place them on trees, doors and balconies. Nothing can ruin the holiday season faster than an accident or fire. A few simple safety rules can keep your holiday season happy.

According to the National Fire Safety Association, Christmas trees cause almost 500 home fires every year at a cost of more than 20 lives and $9 million in damage. The Consumer Product Safety Commission said more than 5,000 people are hurt every year by Christmas ornaments.

A common misconception is last year's decorations will work this year. Not always true, said consumer officials. Light strings and electric cords can fray, and bulbs break, they said.

This is especially critical for outdoor decorations. Whipping winds, snow and rain can break bulbs and sockets, fray wires and electrical cords, causing short circuits. Make sure all outdoor electrical decorations work properly. If there is any question about safety, don't use them.

Consumers must also watch the type of tree they decorate. Many like the aroma of a freshly cut tree while others like the convenience of artificial trees. Whichever you decide, take proper steps to prevent fires.

For those getting a real tree, buy the freshest one possible. Find one that has a strong scent of pine or spruce, is deep green in color and has needles that don't fall off at the touch. Cut about two inches off the bottom of the tree, at an angle if the tree stand will allow it. Fill the stand with water, check it daily and keep it filled.

Before buying an artificial tree, check it for flammability. Follow all safety instructions that come with the tree. Don't use electric lights or candles on an artificial metal tree; fire safety experts recommend using colored spotlights instead.

Always set a Christmas tree away from radiators, fireplaces and heaters. Keep it away from doorways and the room's traffic pattern. Place breakable ornaments and anything looking like food or candy on higher branches, out of reach of children and pets. Don't let unsupervised young children or pets play around the tree.

Fire prevention also includes checking smoke detectors and keeping a fire extinguisher readily available. It might be a good time to run through the family's fire evacuation plan, added fire association officials.

Holiday wrapping paper might be pretty, but it quickly ignites and can cause a flash fire. After the presents are opened, quickly remove gift wrap from the tree area. Don't burn it or other wrapping materials in the fireplace.

Wrapping materials may also be a health hazard, said consumer experts. For example, ribbons, strings and other items could choke or strangle children or pets. Some wrapping paper inks contain lead and other toxic materials.

More holiday safety tips for the house:

• Don't use lighted candles as decorations.

• Don't place extension cords under rugs or carpets.

• Don't plug more than three sets of lights into an extension cord.

• Make sure all electric lights are certified by either the Underwriters Laboratory or Factory Mutual. Consumer labels are usually marked "UL" or "FM."

• Don't use indoor electrical decorations outdoors—they aren't weatherproofed.

• Don't leave a fire unattended.

• Turn off all tree lights and other electrical decorations when going to bed or leaving the house.

ask the judge

Staff Judge Advocate's Office

Q. I am thinking about buying a used car from a soldier I know. The car seems to be in good shape, and he assures me it is in good condition.

He said he's already paid off his loan on the car, and we have agreed on a cash price, which I will pay in one lump sum.

We were ready to finish the deal, but he presented me with a bill of sale that said he was selling the car to me "as is."

I'm a little concerned about completing the deal this way. What should I be looking out for here?

A. Based on what you have described, it looks like you have two important issues to deal with.

First, there is the issue of the condition of the car and his "as is" bill of sale. Generally, an "as is" sale means that there are no warranties or guarantees at all about the condition of the property being sold. Thus, any oral statements about the condition of the car are basically meaningless.

The best action to take would be to insist on some type of written warranty from the seller — either an agreement to repair any defect that arise in a given period of time or an agreement for return of the car and refund of the money. Either way, it should be in writing.

Second, there is the issue of the use of a bill of sale to transfer ownership of the vehicle to you. Unless this is an older car, there ought to be a certificate of title, which can be used to transfer ownership from the seller to the buyer. The lack of a title could indicate that the seller has not paid off his loan, since most banks and finance companies hold on to the title until the loan is paid.

However, it is possible that there is no title to this car. To be safe, if the seller does not have a title, insist that the bill of sale contain a warranty by the seller that he has good title to the car and that there are no liens against it.

Giving, receiving is a holiday tradition

Lessons learned during special time can last a lifetime

Egleston Children's Hospital

Whatever holiday traditions are observed in your home, chances are they include the giving and receiving of gifts.

The gift giving aspect of the holidays raises many questions for parents, who wonder how they can provide joyous, meaningful holiday experiences in today's commercialized world.

Susan Bryant of the Child Advocacy Center at Egleston Children's Hospital offers these suggestions to help you turn gift giving and receiving into positive holiday experiences for your children:

• Have reasonable expectations. Don't be disappointed if your young children seem self-centered where gifts are concerned. Feelings of generosity and appreciation take time to develop.

• Let your children participate in the excitement of planning out gifts they'd like to receive — even if you're surprised at the length of their list. But if there are items high on their list you know they will not receive, prepare them ahead of time.

• Even if you wanted to give your children everything they want (and could afford to) saying no to some gift requests is good for them. It helps them learn about limits.

• Too many toys and gifts can overwhelm children. If they have more than they can handle once all the gifts are unwrapped, put some items away and reintroduce them later.

• Children can get great pleasure from giving. Try shifting some of the focus away from what your children want to receive to what they can give to others. Help them make or buy small gifts for others. Their gift selections might mean more to them if they earn the money to pay for them.

• To instill characteristics like generosity and empathy in your children, model them yourself. Share with them the thought process you go through to imagine what another person might like to receive.

• Even the youngest children can be involved in the family giving. Ask them to help wrap or decorate packages or to present gifts from the family to others.

• Consider participating in a community service activity that your children can be part of, such as donating old toys or buying a gift for a needy child. Discuss family values in relation to the holidays.

• Family traditions and religious rituals are important to children. And shared family time, such as time spent decorating the house, baking or singing songs of the season, creates life-long memories and is the best gift you can give your children.

New age criminals turn to computers

Better Business Bureau

Con artists, always up on the latest way to take advantage of unsuspecting consumers, have ventured into cyberspace, the fast-growing world of commercial computer bulletin board services and the informal web of public computer networks that make up the Internet.

According to the North American Securities Administrators Association, 4 million consumers who have home computers equipped with modems subscribe to the leading commercial on-line bulletin board services. These commercial services allow subscribers to post and receive messages in electronic bulletin boards devoted to specific interest areas. While some services attempt to screen certain messages, others impose few restrictions on communications, which allows scammers the access they need to sell their fraudulent products and services.

The Council of Better Business Bureaus has identified some "cyberfrauds" that consumers should be aware of, including chain letter cons, misleading expert advice and stock manipulations. In chain letter scams, a bulletin board message may promise substantial earnings to computer users who send one dollar to each of 10 individuals appearing on the on-line screen. However, victims not only lose their money, they also are required to list their name and addresses, which further exposes them to potential fraudulent activity.

Consumers should also be wary of messages on bulletin boards from supposed "experts" offering advice on financial matters and investment opportunities. These come-ons often are misrep-resented and the advice often may be misleading.

Some consumers have been duped by messages from fraudulent promoters hyping thinly-traded, low-priced penny stocks as good investments with high earnings potential. In fact, the messages are false, but individuals begin to buy the stock causing it to increase in value. The fraudulent promoter then "dumps" the stock he or she purchased at a low-price, and makes a large profit before the stock price plummets.

Consumers should carefully scrutinize investments that are being touted via on-line services and not assume that the service polices its bulletin boards for frauds.

The command of the Infantry Training Brigade was turned over to a new commander Friday in a ceremony at Weatherby Field.

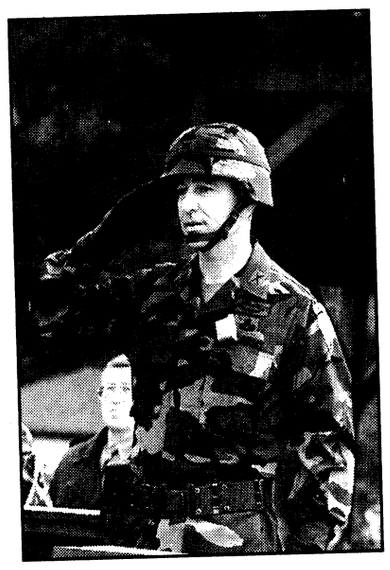
Col. Johnny W. Brooks took over command of ITB from outgoing commander Col. Theodore R. Severn.

Severn and his family are headed to Vicenza, Italy, where he will be the chief of staff of the U.S. Army Southern European Task Force and 5th Theater Army Area Command.

Brooks comes to Fort Benning after being assigned to the Office of the Chief of Staff, Army's Louisiana Maneuvers Task Force, Fort Monroe, Va.

Brooks recalled some earlier days he had spent on post during his acceptance speech.

"What remains here today is the spirit of soldiers — of soldiers past and of soldiering present," Brooks said.



"This spirit permeates everything. (The) structures may have changed, but the people are basically the same — young, enthusiastic, highly dedicated Americans looking for a way to correctly start life and desiring to make a commitment to the nation."

Some of Brook's other assignments include company commander, Company C, 4th Battalion, 54th Infantry Regiment, 194th Armor Brigade, Fort Knox, Ky.; commander, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion (Airborne) 505th Infantry Regiment, Fort Bragg, N.C.; exchange officer, 82nd Airborne Division to the British Parachute Regiment, England; senior infantry instructor and infantry branch representative, Department of Military Instruction, West Point, N.Y.; and commander of 4th Battalion, 17th Infantry Division, Fort Ord, Calif.

He is a graduate of the Advanced Operational Studies Fellowship, the U.S. Marine Corps Command and Staff College and the U.S. Army Ranger School.

Brooks has been awarded the Combat Infantryman Badge, Expert Infantryman Badge, Ranger Tab, British Armed Forces Parachutist Badge and the Master Parachutist Badge.

Brooks and his wife, Chris, have two children, Heather and Matt.

Col. Johnny W. Brooks salutes his troops as the new Infantry training brigade commander.

In attendance at the ceremony was Maj. Gen. John W. Hendrix, Fort Benning's commanding general. Hendrix spoke about what it means when command of a unit is changed.

"The flag is passed and the authority and responsibility that goes with it moves from one commander to another — authority over the unit, its soldiers, its equipment, its facilities (and) responsibility for the mission, " Hendrix said.

After he spoke, Severn stepped to the lectern and talked about the two years he and his family spent on post.

"I thank you all for undoubtedly the best two years of my life," Severn said to his family, the crowd gathered for the ceremony and the soldiers of ITB, who stood before him in formation.

world war II

50 years ago this week ...

• The American forces in Bastogne, completely surrounded by strong German forces, rejected a German demand that they surrender. Patton rapidly pulled his Third Army out of battle and wheeled them 90 degrees to relieve Bastogne.

• Late on Christmas Eve, the German offensive in the Ardennes was brought to a halt by the heroic sacrifices of U.S. soldiers. The much weakened Germans, hurt by the die-hard American defense, were now opposed by the main forces of the U.S. First and Third Armies, the British XXX Corps, and the Bastogne defenders.

• Christmas Day, the Allied counter-offensive began. On the 26th the U.S. Army's 4th Armored Division managed to relieve the 101st in Bastogne. The next day the 2nd Panzer Division was driven out of Celles by the British XXX corps. The German lines were beginning to crumble.

• The Red Army completed the encirclement of Budapest and broke into the city streets in intense fighting. Nazi troops were ordered to fight to the last man in house-to-house combat.

• On the home front, New York film critics selected "Going My Way" as the year's best picture and Motion Picture Herald announced that Bing Crosby was the top 1944 box office attraction.

• At Fort Benning, area residents were reminded of the growing concern over tire shortages. American forces fighting in Germany faced a tire shortage so severe that it threatened to tie up more than 10 percent of all Army vehicles.

Technology: Computers to enhance soldiers' learning

To take advantage of CD-ROM technology and its application to develop, produce and distribute training, the Army must concentrate all aspects of information technology

By Carlton Hardy
U.S. Army Training Support Center

FORT EUSTIS, Va. — Whether it's called downsizing or right-sizing, the bottom line is that the Army has fewer people to accomplish the training mission.

The Army must use limited resources and new technologies to train active and reserve component soldiers to meet the new global demands of a post-Cold War environment.

In the training arena, the future is now. Compact disc-read only memory is a cost-effective distribution medium for training and doctrine information.

As technology improves, CD-ROMs will store greater amounts of digital information in less space, cost less money and be retrieved in less time.

Currently, a CD-ROM stores approximately 270,000 pages of text, weighs less than an ounce and can be mailed, in a protective package, for 58 cents.

A single CD costs $3.18, but when ordered in large quantities the cost drops to $2.68.

To take advantage of CD-ROM technology and its application to develop, produce and distribute training, the Army must concentrate all aspects of information technology.

A CD-ROM's storage capacity allows programs to be developed so the CD can be used not only as a self-paced learning source, but as a reference tool.

The Army Training Support Center's Army Extension Training has developed a CD-ROM training package for Field Manual 100-5, "Operations," the Army's keystone manual.

AET is expanding that package by adding 13 capstone manuals and TRADOC Pam 525-5, "Force XXI Operations."

The training package will be completed in about 18 months, as the last four capstone manuals are published.

The teaching component will identify central topics in FM 100-5 and guide the user through the capstone library.

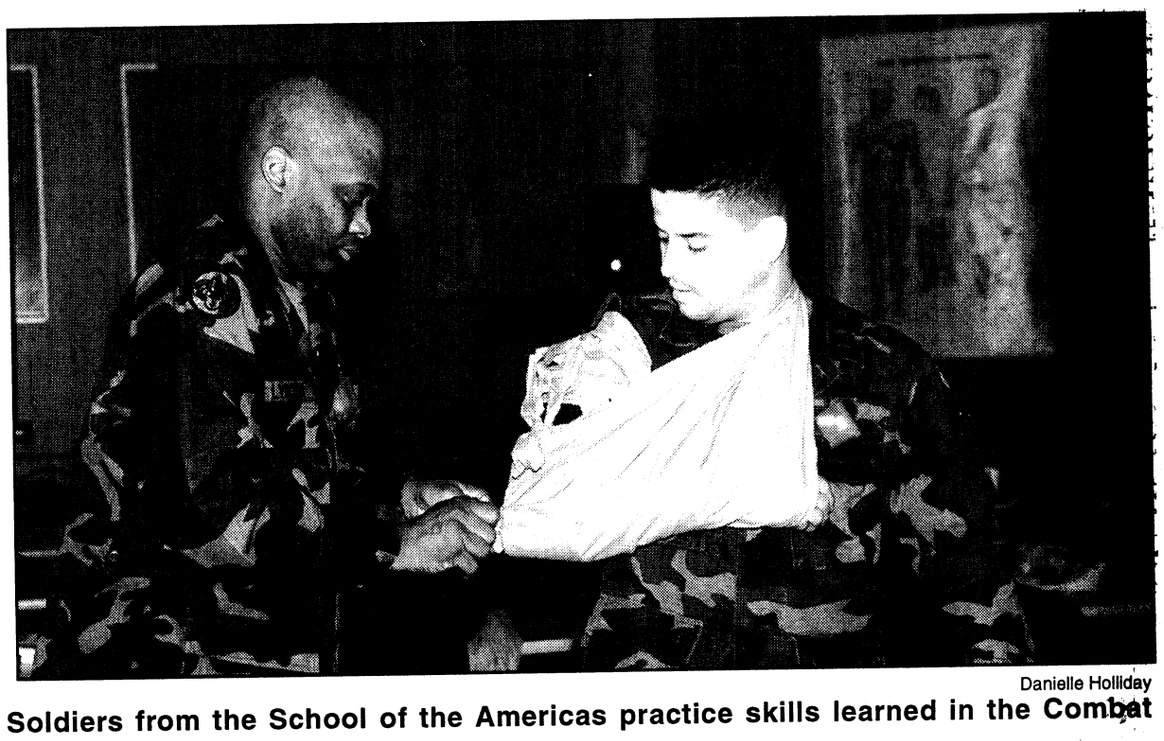
The CD-ROM capstone manual project is targeted at field grade officers, unit commanders and students at the War College, the Command and General Staff College and the Combined Arms and Service Staff School.

The library of FMs incorporates a teaching component that uses a variety of media — photographs, graphics, animation, video and audio. Instructors may print selected material from the CD-ROM for group presentations.

Current software contains hyper-linked components so a user can move seamlessly about in the FM library.

Word search and "hot words" instantly take the user to specific locations.

Color charts accentuate and bring out pertinent points, and merely touching an acronym on a graphic will reveal its meaning.



A separate CD-ROM course is being developed for CAS3 for the home-study phase.

It will contain all course learning objectives, assignments, advance sheets and other requirements.

Complete references will be hyper-linked to the assignments and practical exercises.

The design provides for note-taking and printing, as well as support programs and tools for other types of problems.

The interactivity will not only enhance student learning at CGSC, but in future assignments, as well.

SOA students learn medical skills

By Judith Ginder
School of the Americas

Would you trust one of your buddies to give you an intravenous line? How could you be sure they would know what they were doing? Soldiers at the School of the Americas learned to administer an IV and much more by taking the Combat Lifesaver Course given Dec. 5 through 7 at the School of the Americas.

Medic instructors who usually teach this course to the Latin American students at SOA took time out during the week to give the class to interested soldiers. The course, which is given once a year, is taught by Sgt. 1st Class Jose De Latorre, Staff Sgt. Robert Saenz and Staff Sgt. Alex Figueroa.

Soldiers learn how to check a patient's blood pressure, perform mouth to mouth resuscitation and buddy aid and how to apply a tourniquet and splint a fracture.

"The class teaches things that are really important to all of us in the Army," said Pvt. 2 Vondexia Ross, food service specialist. She and her two partners, Staff Sgt. Angel Marrero, tactics instructor, and Spc. Charlotte Brown, food service specialist, said what they liked most about the class was the relaxed atmosphere in which it was taught.

"For every task, the instructor first gave an informal verbal lesson and then a video was viewed. After the video, we were able to perform the task hands on," said Marrero. At the end of each task, soldiers did a written review of the task.

Most of the students taking the course said that they were somewhat apprehensive about administering the IV, but knew that if they didn't pay attention to the instruction it may make the difference between life or death.

Figueroa said before the students actually administer an IV to one of their partners in the class, they are familiarized with all of the equipment and the most common reasons for administering an IV.

Those reasons include severe loss of blood, third degree burns, heat stroke, vomiting or diarrhea.

"Basically you are trying to prevent hypovolemic shock, which is the sudden decrease in the bodily fluids of the circulatory system," Figueroa said.

Although there were no prerequisites to take the course, soldiers were given a preview test to let the instructors know soldier's basic skill level.

Approximately 30 soldiers took part in the Combat Lifesaver Course.

Special Operations authorizes military free-fall jump wings

By Carol Jones
U.S. Army Special Operations Command

FORT BRAGG, N.C. — Special Operations Forces service members qualified in military free-fall operations are now authorized to wear new, distinctive badges for one of the military's most demanding and hazardous skills.

Policy

A U.S. Army Special Operations Command policy outlining applications procedures and wear of the military free-fall, or MFF, parachutist and jumpmaster badges for Army SOF was approved by Lt. Gen. J.T. Scott, USASOC commanding general, Dec. 9. Gen. Wayne A. Downing, U.S. Special Operations Command commander in chief, approved jump wings for MFF parachutists and jumpmasters Oct. 1.

Active duty and reserve Special Operations Forces personnel assigned or attached to USASOC headquarters or one of its subordinate commands or units may wear the MFF wings only while assigned to these units, said Capt. Gary L. Forbes, plans officer for the Deputy Chief of Staff for Personnel, USASOC.

Personnel may also wear the badges when assigned or attached to SOCOM headquarters or one of its other component commands. When service members leave a USASOC or SOCOM unit, wearing the wings is no longer authorized. The wings may not be worn for official photographs.

Parachutists may wear the wings once they have completed an approved MFF course or made an MFF combat jump. The jumpmaster badge is worn by those who've completed an approved MFF jumpmaster course. The U.S. Army John F. Kennedy Special Warfare Center and School, the Department of Defense proponent for military freefall parachuting, determines approved instruction in the insertion technique. MFF operations include high-altitude, low opening, or HALO, and high-altitude, high-opening, or HAHO jumps.

Authorization

According to Forbes, soldiers must get authorization to wear the cloth replica before wearing the badges on military uniforms. The JFKSWCS commanding general approves the badges for students graduating form the MFF basic parachutist and jumpmaster courses after Oct. 1. USSOCOM CINC is the approving authority for all other applicants.

Forbes said all USASOC major subordinate commands are conducting an ad hoc query to identify soldiers who have earned skill identifiers for MFF qualified (9/8), MFF and scuba qualified (9/9) and officers with the 4X skill identifier.

Commanders at the battalion level will confirm that soldiers assigned to their units meet the requirements for the badge and will forward the applications directly to SOCOM operations office for processing of awards and issuance of orders. Forbes added that this measure is effective now through May 1, 1995. After May 1, individual applications will be submitted directly to the JFKSWCS operations office for validations.

Army SOF personnel who qualified in MFF operations before Oct. 1 must make a written application for authorization to wear the wings. Copies of official jump records and graduation or qualification certificates along with basic personal information are required to verify an applicant's eligibility. Once qualification verification is confirmed through JFKSWCS, applications are then sent to SOCOM J1 and, finally, to Downing for approval.

Numerous applications have been received at USASOC and SOCOM. Forbes explained that those applications will not be processed and will be returned since SOCOM will follow USASOC's policy.

Placement

Placement of the MFF badge on uniforms is prescribed in Army Regulation 760-1, Wear and Appearance of Army Uniforms and Insignia, which was recently revised to allow five combat and special skill badges to be worn on Army uniforms.

"An important fact we must emphasize to everyone is that the MFF badge is not to be worn in lieu of the parachutist badge but in conjunction with it.," Forbes said. "The MFF badge is considered to be a group 4 badge, such as the parachutist and air assault badges. Recent changes to AR 760-1 allow only five badges to be worn at any one time. Three of the five may be from group 4, meaning that a soldier may wear the MFF, parachutist and air assault badges at the same time."

Description

A winged dagger pointing skyward beneath a deployed square parachute canopy gives the badge design and historical significance as well as recognizing SOF MFF capabilities. The MFF jumpmaster Badge is set apart from the other badge with a five-point star surrounded by a wreath centered above the parachute.

"The badges use the ram-air parachute canopy depicting the method of deployment of the wearer," said Air Force Maj. Fran Hendricks, chief of the Military Personnel Division for SOCOM.

"The dagger is the Fairburn-Sykes knife used by the rangers and Office of Strategies Services personnel in World War II. The use of the FS dagger in the MFF badge depicts a historical lineage that all SOF personnel can trace as their roots.

"Prototypes of the heavy-cast metal MFF parachutist and jumpmaster badges were approved by Downing last month (November)," he said. "We will start issuing the badges upon receipt of the first shipment."

The silver metal wings for MFF parachutists who qualified before October are being purchased and issued by SOCOM. Basic MFF and jumpmaster parachutist course students graduating since Sept. 30 will automatically be issued the wings by SOCOM. Only one set per person will be issued.

Military free fall

Considered to be one of the military's most demanding and hazardous advanced skills, MFF parachute operations are used to infiltrate enemy areas under the cover of darkness to avoid detection.

Infiltration of operational elements, pilot teams and personnel replacements is conducted under the cover of darkness and varying weather conditions and terrain, according to MFF instructors with Company B, 2nd Battalion, 1st Special Warfare Training Group.

MFF techniques taught by Company B train Special Forces MFF team members to conduct operational HALO missions by exiting an aircraft at high altitudes and deploying their canopies at low altitudes. During HAHO missions jumpers exit at high altitudes and deploy their canopies at high altitudes using highly-maneuverable, gliding parachute systems to silently travel distances of 40 to 45 kilometers. MFF parachutists jump at 8,000 to 24,000 feet above ground level and land at their objective as a combat-ready, tactical unit.

42 finish staff course

By Judith Grinder
School of the Americas

The School of the Americas' Command and General Staff Course finished Nov.15 with a graduation ceremony at Ridgway Hall.

The course, which is 47 weeks long, is the equivalent of the U.S. Army Command and General Staff College at Fort Leavenworth, Kansas.

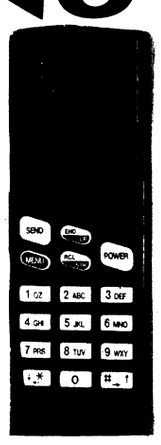
The course mission is to educate and train officers of all services for duty as field grade commanders and as principle staff officers at brigade and division level.

Fort Benning's Commanding General Maj. General John W. Hendrix spoke to the graduates and guests about the importance of "leaders who can lead from the front."

Future leaders must be able to act decisively in all operations including humanitarian, counter-intelligence and counter-narcotics operations, Hendrix said.

The experiences that the students shared while at the School of the Americas should be remembered and taken back to the students homes, he said.

"It is through these experiences and contacts," Hendrix said, "that our capability to work together during conflict will be strengthened."



The course's 42 graduates were from Argentina, Bolivia, Columbia, Dominican Republic, Mexico, Honduras, Peru, Venezuela and the United States.

Special education students joined forces with their third- and fourth-grade "buddies" in presenting a holiday play that centered around the spirit of the season

Santa Claus, fiddles, and grouchy elves may not seem to have much in common, but these elements were woven together in a country style jamboree of a Christmas play at Stowers School Dec. 14.

Students from Stowers School's special education classes joined forces with their third- and fourth-grade "buddies" in presenting a holiday play that centered around accepting the joyful spirit of the season.

The collaborative play not only offered a venue to showcase talents of the young actors, but has also provided a month-long focus for the "buddy" classes, a program that pairs students from different grades for educational, social and enrichment activities, said Evelyn Montgomery, special education teacher and author of "A Country Christmas Miracle."

Montgomery said she knew her students were up to the challenge of presenting the holiday musical which featured an enthusiastic elf trying to interest a grumpy co-worker in the spirit Christmas.

As the young performers sang, clapped, played musical instruments and danced their way through several classic holiday numbers, the happy elf tried to convince her grumpy peer of the satisfaction of seeing others embrace the holiday spirit.

Even the appearance of Rudolf the red nosed reindeer and his young red suited helper didn't brighten the grouchy elf's outlook. As the elf complained of the noise and hectic pace of the holidays, Santa's helpers continued to trim the tree, shake jingle bells, and celebrate the season with a hoe-down country number complete with a square dance, cowboy hats and fiddles.

All Santa's helpers seem excited by a telegram announcing the arrival of the jolly gift-giver, and students led the audience in an interactive song complete with giant cue cards.

A telegram arrived that Santa was coming, and as this bearded, red frocked man entered with Mrs. Claus, the children cheered and launched into their final "country" number complete with banjos, foot stomping and hand clapping.

The final act showed how the grouchy elf is finally filled with the spirit of the holidays after accepting a new heart gift-wrapped in bright paper from a joyous well wisher.

The play went off without a hitch, and as students saw they could learn their lines and perform for parents and peers, "Their self-concept soared," said Montgomery.

"It all fell right into place; my heart is so full," she said.

Principal Glenn Hughes agreed, saying parents were touched by the youngsters who learned their lines so well and showed enthusiasm as they performed for their peers.

"The whole production was a collaborative effort between parents, teachers and students," said Hughes, who noted several parents were involved with the rehearsal and presentation of the twenty minute production.

The production highlighted Hughes' philosophy that "All children can achieve," and offered youngsters a chance to showcase talents and to shine like stars, he said.

To set the mood for the original Christmas play, the Stowers Singers from third, fourth and fifth grades presented a medley of holiday favorites including "Rock that Baby," "Joy for all to Share," "Festive Madrigal," "Good Night," and "A Christmas Toast."

Hughes also sang a solo, "Let There be Peace on Earth."

Pupils explore world through books

By Jerrie Macintire
Special to The Bayonet©

First-graders recently got the chance to be world travelers, brave explorers and private detectives; they weren't dreaming, but were reading books which cast them as main characters in adventurous winter settings.

The youngsters from Dexter were heroes in books written by their older "buddies" who attend Faith Middle School across the street. The buddy program pairs students of different grade levels for various educational and enrichment activities.

The middle schoolers, who have been interviewing, writing, and illustrating the colorful "Big Books," over the past three weeks, presented the volumes at a holiday celebration and then read the stories aloud as their younger buddies snacked on cookies and punch.

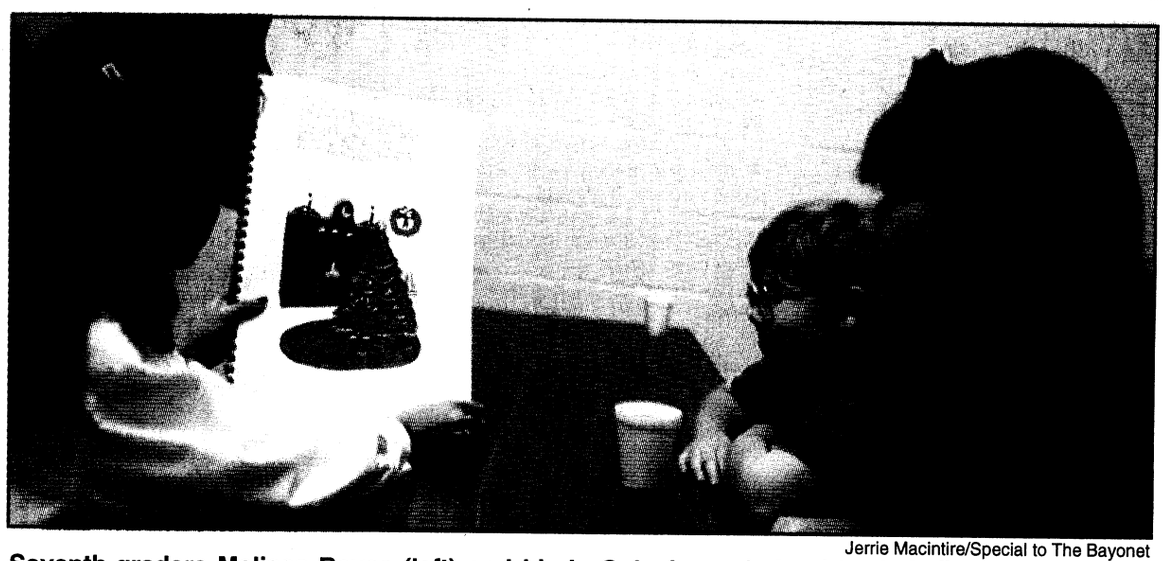
One youngster grinned broadly when he saw he was the hero in a story which blended his favorite movie with his heritage, "Home Alone 3: Lost in Puerto Rico."

"This is really a terrific project," said Anne Trawick, who began the language arts activity seven years ago.

"I wanted the students to write something they had emotional involvement with, something they know will be read," she said.

"These students know their work will mean something (to the younger buddies)," she said.

The first-graders have such an interest in a book where they are the hero that they read them over and over, sharpening their own language arts skills, teachers say.



This year all three seventh-grade teaching teams at Faith participated with their younger buddies as part of the middle school's literature based education program, said Michelle Reasoner, language arts teacher.

Approximately 400 students from both school were involved in the joint venture.

The middle schoolers wove a story from the information gleaned and established a plot and incorporated traditional components such as conflict and resolution. Once the adolescents agreed upon the wording, they edited their work and checked spelling and grammar.

"This is a wonderful project. The students learn so much about writing and editing, story plots and deadlines," Reasoner said. "This project gives the students a better appreciation for the work required in producing a book," she said.

The full color volumes, laminated and bound, also helped the adolescents sharpen computer skills and provided a creative outlet for a variety of illustrations, Reasoner said.

Post concert kicks off holidays

Festive music, surprises keep the crowd involved

By Marc G. Turchin
Bayonet staff writer

Spc. Rich Hill, behind the typewriter, plays the unique instrument as the Infantry Band backs him up.

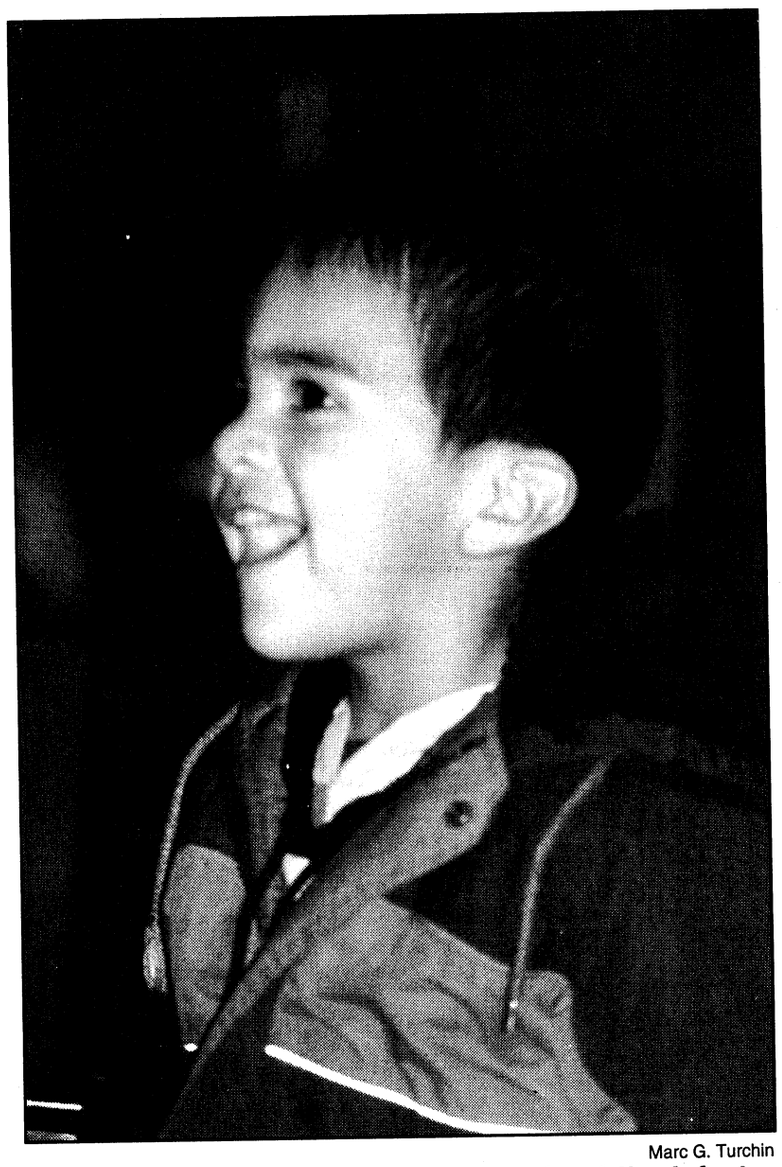
A holiday concert was conducted the evening of Dec. 14 at Marshall Auditorium. Children of all ages attended the event.

The Infantry Band played holiday and other upbeat music.

Right from the first piece, "Sleigh Ride," smiles dawned on the faces of some children, while expressions of amazement were seen from the infants in attendance.

Throughout the evening, soldiers in the band would step to the front of the stage and give information about their instrument. They would explain what it is made from, give dimensions of the instrument and play something to show everyone what it sounded like.



One instrument on stage not normally found at a concert was a typewriter. This piece of equipment was used in the song, "The typewriter."

A drum was used to make the sound of the keys and a soldier sat behind the unusual instrument and acted as if he were playing it.

After that song and as the night grew older, the kid in the older attendees began to show.

Some danced in their seats, some played 'horsee' with a child on each knee, while others let their children stand straight up on their thighs and do a simulated version of the twist. One child even decided he needed more room to dance and made the aisle his dance floor.

Some of the other songs played were "Tuba Tiger Rag," "Buglers Holiday," songs from "The Lion King" and "Jingle Bells Forever," which is a take-off of "Stars and Stripes Forever" and was written by the conductor Chief Warrant Officer Ronald Bucher.

Volunteers

are needed to help the School of the Americas

By Judith Ginder
School of the Americas

The School of the Americas' Host of Latin Americans program is looking for interested volunteers to sponsor a guest instructor or students at the School of the Americas. HOLA is a non-profit organization which places volunteers with guest instructors and students at SOA. Each year Latin American guest instructors and students come to Fort Benning for military training. Many are here for a period of more than six months and they sometimes bring their families with them. For most, this is their first and may be their only visit to the United States.

According to Cecilia Alexander, HOLA coordinator, this is why HOLA is so important. Sometimes the guest instructors and students will have preconceived ideas about the United States and by having civilian sponsors for them, they can get a more accurate view of our country and citizens, she said. Alexander said that sponsors do not have to speak Spanish, but knowing the language is very helpful.

Once a sponsor is matched with an individual officer or an entire family, Alexander said that it is a good idea for the sponsor to learn as much as possible about the guests' home country. She said by doing this, the sponsor shows the guest that they have a genuine interest in getting to know them.

After meeting one another, they can plan activities to do together. Some activities recommended by HOLA are picnics or barbecues, sporting events, school events or even shopping trips. Also recommended is including your guests in community events that take place throughout the year.

The biggest tip that HOLA gives its new sponsors is to treat your guests the way you would want to be treated in a foreign land.

Although becoming a sponsor is voluntary, the rewards of sponsorship are vast. They come in the form of friendships and knowledge of another country and its customs.

For information about becoming a HOLA sponsor, call 545-1285.

Soldiers go scuba diving while deployed in Southwest Asia

3rd Brigade, 24th Infantry Division

Some 3rd Brigade, 24th Infantry Division (Mechanized), soldiers had an opportunity to experience the sport of scuba diving while on deployment to Saudi Arabia as part of Operation Vigilant Warrior

A short, three-day discover scuba course, sponsored by Eric Knight Diving Experience, the Oasis Club Scuba Center, and the 3rd Brigade, 24th Infantry Division, Kelley Hill Dive Club, was offered to introduce nonscuba certified soldiers to the underwater world. Participating soldiers received a short academic class, a controlled pool session and an actual open water dive in the Persian Gulf.

The class started with students learning the basics of scuba equipment and the effects of pressure on the body at depth. This portion of the course was given by Mike Beck, a member of the Professional Association of Diving Instructors. From there, students moved on to the pool where they received practical hands-on experience with the scuba gear and discovered first hand the effects of pressure at the deep end of the pool.

This portion of the course was presented by Eric Knight, a PADI master instructor. He was assisted by Staff Sgt. Brad Sitton, a National Academy of Scuba Educators specialty scuba instructor, Gudi Knight and Janet Card, both PADI scuba instructors, and Billy Marr, a PADI divemaster.

The following day, soldiers boarded a bus and headed for Half Moon Bay on the Persian Gulf. Once assembled, the students were broken down into groups of eight and suited up.

Numerous certified divers also were invited and assisted in the multitude of tasks needed to prepare the new divers for their first underwater experience.

The groups were led into the water by two-person instructor teams. After a final check, all submerged and the students were led on a 25 to 30-minute dive over a young artificial reef with depths reaching 25 feet. After close interaction with a variety of fish, the only complaint when the divers arrived back on shore was that there wasn't enough hours in the day to do it all over again.

The Discover Scuba Course did not certify the soldiers to dive. The soldiers were briefed on requirements to be certified and many expressed desire to become certified.

For more information about scuba diving or about the Kelley Hill Scuba Club, call Sitton at 544-2864.

va q & a

Department of Veterans Affairs

Q: I heard recently that the maximum you can borrow with a VA-guaranteed loan had been increased. What does this mean?

A: In October, the president signed legislation increasing the maximum loan guaranty entitlement from $46,000 to $50,750. The increase effectively raises to $203,000 the loan amount a veteran can obtain without a downpayment since most lenders will lend up to four times the amount of a veteran's entitlement without requiring a downpayment.

Q: May I use my VA home loan guaranty to purchase a motor home?

A: No. Motor homes are not included in the VA loan guaranty program. However, you can get a manufactured home, with or without a lot, with a VA-guaranteed loan.

Q: My husband was killed in the Vietnam Conflict. Am I eligible for a VA-guaranteed home loan to buy a house?

A: Unremarried spouses of veterans who died on active duty after September 1940 or as a result of service-connected injuries are eligible for VA-guaranteed loans to buy a home. To apply, you should fill out VA Form 26-1817, "Request for Determination of Loan Guaranty Eligibility - Unremarried Surviving Spouse." A copy of the form and additional information can be obtained from the nearest VA regional office, which you can call at (800) 827-1000.

Q: Is there a time limit in which a veteran must use his or her Certificate of Eligibility for a VA-guaranteed loan?

A: There is no expiration on a VA home loan Certificate of Eligibility. Once issued, the veteran may use the certificate at any time. Although the maximum loan guaranty entitlement amounts may increase, it is not necessary to have the certificate updated to reflect the increased amounts. This will be done automatically at the time of loan processing.

Q: Who is eligible for the work-study allowance program which is included in educational benefits provided by the Department of Veterans Affairs?

A: To receive work-study benefits, a participant must train at the three-quarter or full-time rate.

The program is available under Chapter 30 (Montgomery GI Bill), Chapter 31 (Vocational Rehabilitation), Chapter 32 (VEAP), Chapter 35 (Survivors and Dependents Educational Assistance), and Chapter 106 (Selected Reserve Program).

To apply, you need to complete VA Form 20-8691, Application for Work Study Allowance.

You can get one from the closest VA regional office, which you can call at (800) 827-1000.

Q: I am eligible to receive VA educational benefits. Can I qualify for the work study allowance program at a National Guard Armory?

A: Yes. As long as you receive Chapter 106 benefits for training at a three-quarter or full-time rate and the work you perform is related to the VA work-study program, you can work at a National Guard or Department of Defense facility.

Editor's note: If you have a question about your veterans benefits, call the Department of Veterans Affairs at (800) 827-1000.

Slovak ministers visit Benning, learn about Army chaplaincy

By Jacqueline Feagin
USAIC Chaplains' Office

Members of the Ministry of Defense of the Slovak Republic visited with the Fort Benning Unit Ministry Team Dec. 8 to familiarize themselves with the U.S. Army Chaplaincy Corps.

Col. Peter Bartak, the Director of Human and Social Services of the Slovak Ministry of Defense, said they are here to learn how to provide care for all human beings no matter what their faith.

"(The Army Chaplaincy) functions here for all faiths, and we want to take that back with us," he said.

The ministers spent some time at Camp Darby speaking with soldiers and asking them if their pastoral and spiritual needs were being fulfilled.

The Slovakian Army consists of 46,666 soldiers. They are predominantly Catholic, 18 percent are atheist, some are Protestant with a large majority of Lutherans, and there is a small Jewish population.

They plan to bring 40 chaplains on active duty Jan. 1 representing all 18 faith groups that exist in the republic.

Constant change: Simply a part of life

By George W. Holston
USAIC Chaplains ' Office

reflections

Be present, O merciful God and protect us through the hours of this night, so that we who are wearied by the changes and chances of this life may rest in your eternal changelessness, through Christ our Lord. Amen. (From the book of Common Prayer, 1979).

I am amazed at the continuity of life — the fact that life is always constant and changing at the same time, the stable foundation that seems to provide for the days to come. Each present moment is the harbinger of things to come.

This lesson was pointed out to me during the early winter of my seminary experience. Being a Southerner, I wasn't used to the short days and the piercing, bitter cold of Wisconsin. Homesick, I called my parents. My father had been a forester before he decided to enter the ministry.

He suggested that I go outside and look at the tips of the now barren branches of the maple trees on the campus. I bundled up and went outside into a numbing cold rain. The branches were bare and as I examined several limbs, I noticed that the buds for the next spring were already present. Here, in the midst of the approaching winter was the promise of spring and new life.

So it is for us. The only constant in our lives is change. Friends come and go. Sooner or later there is another permanent change of station move. Life picks up and continues as before.

Advent is about change — a change of seasons, anticipation of a holiday season, a new year. Advent is also about consistency — the timeless circle of birth and death, and the return of light in the midst of darkness, a time of preparation for a birth that is also a harbinger of a return.

Christians celebrate Christ's birth by waiting for his return. The two are intimately linked together, so that it is impossible to speak of one without, at the same time, acknowledging the other.

When we speak of change, at the same time, we acknowledge a consistency. With eternal change, God provides a consistent foundation for our lives. The turmoil of the present is somehow calmed by an even greater presence. In this calm presence, we are able to relax and accept the events of our lives as a part of a process where everything is working as it should. In other words, by resting in God's eternal change we are trusting in his providence in the midst of life's changes and chances.

Change is simply a part of life. To grow is to change. Any change will naturally bring disruption in our lives. If we are able to catch a glimpse of God's presence in the process of our lives, then we are in a position to allow our faith to sustain us.

Then, and only then, are we able to say with Simeon. "Lord, let your servant be at peace, because I have seen your salvation with my own eyes." (Luke 2:29-32)

Remember to watch, listen this Christmas

By Robert Thompson
USAIC Chaplains' Office

reflections

A flock of birds flew over my head. They were small black ones, maybe about 40 of them, although I didn't try to count. I was crossing the street in my neighborhood when I noticed them. They were coming my way. If I would have climbed up on my roof, I think I could have touched them. They were so low that I could hear the wind whistling quietly through their beating wings.

Because I was still crossing the street, I checked it again: all clear. Three junior high boys were shooting baskets in the driveway next door. The metal backboard clanged out to the neighborhood their every attempt to be Larry Bird of Michael Jordan. My own memories of basketball excitement from the days of Wilt Chamberlain started to file past my mind's eye.

But the birds! They were directly overhead, and the sound of their wings beating the air had wrestled my attention from the basketball game next door. I reached the curb a gazed up at those little creatures. The backboard next door called to me, so I turned my head in answer. Something in my mind said, "Bird wings! When have you ever heard the beating of bird wings?" A hurried scan of my recall turned up nothing. "Well, there they go!"

They were past me but still close enough to hear. I turned up my ears as loud as they would go. I wanted to absorb and capture that sound. It was a kind of whirring hum, but not a noisy kind. It was soft, yet strong. And because the birds seemed to be flapping in unison, the hum had a steady pulsing rhythm to it, like the loping of a cold engine that needs to be throttled up a bit.

With the birds still fairly close, the hum faded, but I could still see those wings, moving up and down in quiet rhythm. I wished I could join them, to savor this special music. Scarcely 10 seconds had elapsed since I first saw them. I was glad I had ignored my basketball fantasies long enough to enjoy this spontaneous treat.

Only the night before, Mary, Joseph, and the baby looked down from their mantle in Bethlehem on my family and me. We lit an Advent candle and read ancient words of promise and hope.

Across the room, our Christmas tree stood, sporting its festive garb that our son had proudly arranged. Candles, bells, stockings, and evergreen trimmed the hearth and end tables. The setting was exciting. It stirred our holiday memories.

As we savored this visual feast, my wife suggested that we ponder the ceramic manger family for a moment. In the background we could hear "Silent Night" on the stereo. We gazed upon the threesome with the soft beating of music in our ears. All else had faded into the background.

I am glad we ignored our Christmas fantasies long enough to enjoy this spiritual treat. We were experiencing the season's center — the manger scene, the birds, a Christmas song, a whirring hum. Some things in life are rare; some are common. Some things are here and then gone; others are around us all season. What do we see and hear?

Sometimes I have as much trouble seeing and hearing the message of Christmas as I do noticing the gift of birds in flight. I can be distracted by basketballs and Christmas bells. Yet the bounty of both the rare and the common offers itself. The reward of paying attention — of watching and listening — is the quiet, strong joy of discovering all that we have been given.

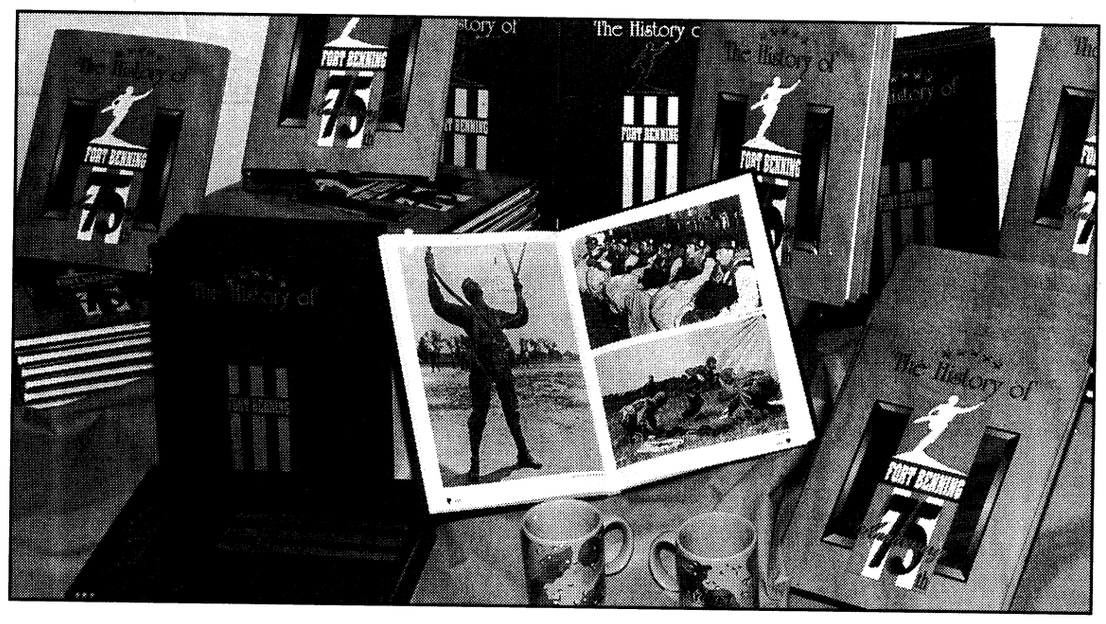
FORT BENNING HISTORY BOOK

published to commemorate

FORT BENNING'S DIAMOND JUBILEE

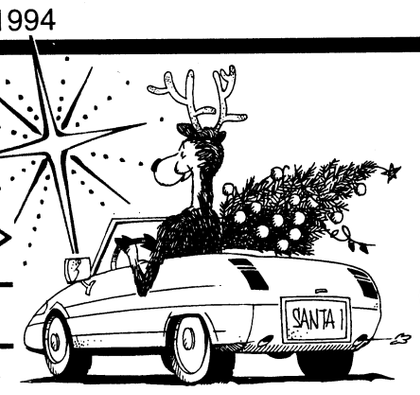
1918 - 1993



Fort Benning celebrated its 75th Anniversary last year, and The Bayonet published a special edition to coincide with the celebration. Soon after the special edition of the paper was published, we began looking at the information about Fort Benning that we had collected and decided that it was too good to leave it just in newspaper form.

The hardcover book has 168-pages and is filled with more than 200 photos. The book includes detailed timelines of significant events that have shaped Fort Benning, an overview of the post's involvement in World War II, Korea, Vietnam, and Desert Shield/Storm, detailed information on the current major units, and a variety of stories and information that round out the post's colorful history.

It is a 'must have' for anyone who is part of Fort Benning's colorful history. It's a book that will be a lasting memento of the winner of the 1994 Commander In Chief's Award signifying it as. . .



"The Best Army Installation in the World!"

Joan Lunden to spend Christmas at Disney World

By Jay Bobbin
Tribune Media Services

For more than a decade, it's been no mystery how Joan Lunden spends her Christmas Day.

SPOTLIGHT

As she is on weekday mornings — as co-host of ABC's "Good Morning America" — she's on millions of television screens, presiding over coverage of the Very Merry Christmas Parade at one of the most popular theme parks in existence, Florida's Walt Disney World. Holding to tradition, she'll be back there Sunday for ABC's 12th annual telecast of the colorful event, joined for the fourth consecutive year by fellow daytime-TV staple Regis Philbin. Prior to being in the seat next to Lunden, Philbin was the program's "roving reporter," talking to observers along the parade route; this time, that role belongs to Margaret Cho, star of the ABC comedy "All-American Girl." (She'll mark the other big end-of-year holiday for the network by returning as a co-host of "Dick Clark's New Year's Rockin' Eve '95" on Saturday, Dec. 31.)

As with last spring's broadcast of the Disney organization's Happy Easter Parade, Olympic-medalist skater Nancy Kerrigan will perform during the show; additionally, new Disney World attractions will be highlighted, including the Epcot '95 Christmas Showcase (highlighting different kinds of celebrations around the globe), the "Lion King" Parade, the latest Planet Hollywood restaurant (with owners Arnold Schwarzenegger, Sylvester Stallone and Bruce Willis expected to be present), and the "Alien Encounter" and "Honey, I Shrunk the Audience" thrill shows. Also covered will be plans for the 40th anniversary of Southern California's Disneyland, which will be celebrated throughout 1995.

Lunden made an advance trip to Disney World last weekend, to work on the Planet Hollywood story and also to accompany her daughter Lindsay, who again will be one of the dancers among the more than 200 performers in the parade. "It's very different this year,"

Regis Philbin, Joan Lunden and Mickey Mouse

Lunden says, "because Lindsay went down there last year not knowing anything (about the dance routines for the parade or the rehearsal schedule). I really hand it to (the staff of Disney World for allowing her to participate), because for all they knew, I could have shown up with a kid who had two left feet. Fortunately, that wasn't the case. Since then, Disney has started a program that is very much the sort of thing Disney does, by having young people come there and start their careers there ... and boy, did they light a candle under MY kid! She's taken up dancing in a big way, and she belongs to professional dance troupes that entertain all over the place."

Allowing that "the challenge is to always make this parade different," Lunden acknowledges that this year's edition is able to incorporate something that last year's couldn't: the enormous success of the animated Disney feature "The Lion King," one of the past summer's box-office titans (which also has proved very potent in its holiday-season re-release, prior to its scheduled home-video debut in March). "Home Improvement" co-star Jonathan Taylor Thomas — who provided the voice of the young Simba for the film — will appear in the "Lion King" Parade portion of Sunday's program, and Lunden marvels, "I don't think there's been a time we've gone down there that something new hasn't opened, and to me, that's a mind-blower. That means (Disney World is) constantly under construction, a never-ending project, which is what Walt Disney's whole idea was for Epcot Center. His goal was for it never to be finished, and I would say they're pretty much holding up his dream."

What: "Very Merry Christmas Parade"
When: Sunday on ABC

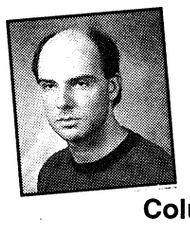
With her typically packed schedule, the Disney Christmas Parade comes in the midst of another flurry of activity for Lunden. Not only does that involve preparations for her next "Behind Closed Doors" prime-time specials for ABC (she's working on two simultaneously), but also the release of her new exercise video, "Joan Lunden: Workout America." She reflects of the latter, "During the time I was doing it, I kept thinking, 'Why did I do this? Why did I get myself into this?' I'm so happy with the way it came out, though, and I'm really hoping it will serve a purpose. I got asked to do (a tape like) that a bunch of times by different companies, and it was a pretty obvious thing, because I lost so much weight in front of America. I'd always said 'No,' but this was just a case of the right people asking me at the right time. Even my kids said to me, 'Everybody's always asking how you lost the weight, so why don't you just do the tape already?' I'm really glad I did."



However, Lunden maintains, "I wouldn't have done it if I hadn't known I had a fitness trainer in whom I had confidence, and who would help come up with a real good workout. I wasn't about to put myself on tape and have somebody get hurt (from it), and I wouldn't have done it if I was going to get criticized for it in any way. A lot of other people have. Many times, (the respective exercise-video manufacturer) buys the celebrity, and the celebrity shows up without knowing much about what's going on. It's basically a package deal: They pay a trainer to come up with a routine, the celebrity comes in a learns it real quick, and boom! They've got a tape. I really fought hard to keep certain things in my tape, even though that made it run longer than they wanted. I've got this little hangup with credibility, and if I had to do interviews and say, 'This is the program that got me where I am and keeps me where I am,' it had to be the exact workout. That was the only way I was willing to do it."

Westville hosting traditional yuletide season

Westville Historic Handicrafts Inc.

A tradition-filled yuletide season will be observed at Westville, the 1850 museum village near Lumpkin, Ga.

Through Dec. 31, the Westville buildings, decorated with fruit, native greens and berries in the 1850 manner, will bustle with many activities including doll-making, candle-dipping and holiday baking.

Each weekend will feature Christmas music Dec. 10, the yule log ceremony will be followed by a candlelight tour of the Bedingfield Inn. Dec. 17 and 24, German custom of the Christmas tree will be featured. Dec. 31 will bring the season to a close with the Burning of the Greens.

The yule log was a tradition that originated in England and was brought over by early settlers. Out of this came the hunt for the yule log, which Westville now holds as an annual event. The yule log hunt is open to anyone in the fifth grade or under. Once the log is found, the finder is presented a cup of wassail and the log burning ceremony is done.

After the yule log ceremony, there will be a candlelight tour of the Bedingfield Inn, located one half mile away in Lumpkin. The yule log ceremony begins at 3 p.m. at Westville's camp meeting tabernacle.

Dec. 17 and 24, the Singer House features the Christmas tree and traditional activities. In 1850, the Christmas tree was still mainly a German tradition and in this way, Westville commemorates the customs of a German pioneer family.

At 2 p.m. on these days, along with the lighting of the Christmas tree, there will be the reading of the Christmas story and "The Night Before Christmas" and singing of Christmas carols.

The end of the Christmas season is marked by a ceremony called the Burning of the Greens, which takes place at 2 p.m. Dec. 31. All of the greenery used to decorate the houses is taken down and carried to the town square, where it is burned to symbolize the passing of the year. Then as the wreaths, garlands, and other decorations go up in flames, the bells in the village are rung to welcome in the year.

The village will be open everyday of the holidays except Christmas Day and New Year's Day and Jan. 2 to 6.

Located one-half mile from Lumpkin in Southwest Georgia, Westville is open 10 a.m. to 5 p.m., Tuesday through Saturday, and 1 to 5 p.m. Sunday.

For more information, call the Westville office at (912) 838-6310.
